Mr. Davy. When was the first Time you was in the Hay-loft?

R. Scarrat. I never was in it, till the Time I went down with the Girl and them.

Mr. Davy. What Rooms in the House had you been in before?

R. Scarrat. The Kitchen and Parlour, and no other.

Mr. Davy. Was you never above Stairs?

R. Scarrat. No, never before in my Life, till I went down with them, and they were taken in Custody. I never knowed there was such a Room, as the Place where the Prisoner was, till then.

Mr. Davy. Were there a good many People in the Room, when the Girl told you this?

R. Scarrat. Yes.

Mr. Davy. How came you to pitch upon the House of Mother Wells.

R. Scarrat. I judged it might be that House, because I did not know any other House on that Road so likely.

Mr. Davy. Did you make that Reply before you asked any Questions?

R. Scarrat. I said that, when she said she had been on the Hertfordshire Road.

Mr. Davy. And would you then have laid so much Odds?

R. Scarrat. Though I said it, I don't know that I should have laid it.

Mr. Davy. What Name did she say she heard mentioned?

R. Scarrat. She said, she heard the Mistress of the House called Wills or Wells.

Mr. Davy. Was the Apprentice by, when she mentioned this?

R. Scarrat. I don't know that he was. Mr. Wintlebury was the first Person that she spoke to, as I heard. I was in the Room some Time, and some People spoke to her; but she spoke to none, before she did to him.

Mr. Davy. Had you any Acquaintance with Mrs. Canning, or her Daughter?

R. Scarrat. No, I had not.

Mr. Davy. What led you to go to Canning's House, having no Acquaintance?

R. Scarrat. A Maid-servant came into the House where I bedded and boarded, and said, Betty Canning is come Home, Betty Canning is come Home; which was the Cause of my going there.

Mr. Davy. Then you mentioned several Things to her very familiarly?

R. Scarrat. I did.

Mr. Davy. What were her Answers to them?

R. Scarrat. Her Answers were, Yes, — she believed, — or, she was sure, — or to that Effect.

Mr. Davy. Did you, in the Examination of this Girl, recollect as many Particulars of the House and about it, as possibly you could?

R. Scarrat. I did.

Mr. Davy. Was you able to describe the House, the Road, the Pond, &c.?

R. Scarrat. I did not mention the Pond, nor nothing in the House. I mentioned the Tanner's House, and a little Bridge that crosses the Brook; and asked her about the Road, and the Field, whether it was ploughed up.

Mr. Davy. Did you mention one single Particular, to which she answered in the Negative?

R. Scarrat. That Question is answered; she said the Road was so, and the Fields so.

Mr. Davy. Did it never occur to you, to ask her about any thing that you knew was not there, in order to be better satisfied, whether she had been there?

R. Scarrat. I don't know I thought of such a Thing.

Mr. Davy. How soon after she was taken out of the Chaise was it, that you saw her at Enfield-Wash?

R. Scarrat. It was in the Room where the Prisoners were.

Mr. Davy. When she came into the Kitchen, did she immediately fix upon that Door, and say, This is the Door of the Room, wherein I was confined?

R. Scarrat. She said that herself; no body spoke a Word to her.

Mr. Davy. Suppose she had been in the Kitchen, and the Door open, might she not be more positive, than if it was shut?

R. Scarrat. More positive, to be sure, she must be.

Mr. Davy. If you had been with her in the Kitchen before, and the Door had been open, and she had not fixed upon the Room, and after that had been carried to all the other Rooms in the House, should you not have doubted of her Veracity?

R. Scarrat. I don't doubt, but she would have fixed upon that Room at first.

Mr. Davy. Attend to the Question. Supposing it had happened, as I have put it, whether that would have led you to doubt her Sincerity?

R. Scarrat. I should.

Mr. Davy. Did you hear what she said before Mr. Alderman Chitty?

R. Scarrat. I did.

Mr. Davy. Did she give the same Account on the Trial of Squires, she did there?

R. Scarrat. She did, to the best of my Knowledge; but I cannot remember in particular.

Mr. Davy. Did she, before the Alderman, mention any thing of passing thro' Bishopsgate-Street?

R. Scarrat. No, not to my Remembrance.

Mr. Davy. Do you remember, she told him of four, five, or six Pieces of Bread, or twenty-four?

R. Scarrat. I don't remember any particular Pieces of Bread.

Mr. Davy. Do you remember any Question of an old Stool?

R. Scarrat. Not to my Knowledge.

Mr. Davy. Nor an old Table?

R. Scarrat. No.

Mr. Davy. Nor old Pictures over the Chimney?

R. Scarrat. No.

Mr. Davy. Nor Hay?

R. Scarrat. No, not to my Knowledge.

Mr. Davy. Can you remember all the Particulars of her making her Escape?

R. Scarrat. No, I cannot.

Mr. Davy. Was you examined as a Witness on the Trial of Mary Squires?

R. Scarrat. I was.

Mr. Davy. In the Evidence you gave, did you not swear, that you had heard her examined before the Sitting Alderman, and that before him she had given the same Account as on that Trial?

R. Scarrat. It corroborated, to the best of my Knowledge. I swore to the best of my Knowledge, she did.

Mr. Davy. Did you do that, in order to make her whole Story the better to be believed?

R. Scarrat. I spoke to the best of my Knowledge, and so I do now.

Mr. Davy. Did you soften your Evidence, by saying you believed?

R. Scarrat. I don't remember that I spoke generally to it. I cannot keep such Things in my Head now.

Mr. Davy. Did you ever hear her mention any Hay in your Life?

R. Scarrat. I never did.

Mr. Davy. Did you not hear her say upon the Trial, there was Hay in the Room?

R. Scarrat. I don't remember she did.

Mr. Davy. Was you in Court the whole Time of the Trial?

R. Scarrat. I was.

Mr. Davy. Have you read the Sessions-Paper since?

R. Scarrat. No, I have not.

Mr. Davy. Did you hear her say before the Alderman, how she made her Escape?

R. Scarrat. I did; in getting out through a Window.

Mr. Davy. As you was in Court all the Time, you must hear what she said of the Manner of making her Escape?

R. Scarrat. She gave the same Account then, as before the Alderman, to the best of my Knowledge. Then I remembered her Evidence before the Alderman a great deal better than I can now.

Mr. Davy. Do you think you could then have repeated every Particular?

R. Scarrat. I cannot say I could; it corroborated, to the best of my Knowledge.

Mr. Davy. Was not the Evidence she gave on the Trial contradictory to what she gave before the Sitting Alderman?

R. Scarrat. I cannot exactly remember it.

Mr. Davy. Did you, or did you not, tell Mr. Alderman Chitty, the Person she described could not be Mother Wells?

R. Scarrat. I did not mention such a Thing to him.

Mr. Davy. Did she take the Person that cut her Stays off to be the Mistress of the House?

R. Scarrat. She did.

Mr. Davy. Did she know who was the Mistress of the House?

R. Scarrat. No, she did not.

Mr. Davy. Did you know there was a Warrant granted?

R. Scarrat. I did.

Mr. Davy. Against whom was it granted?

R. Scarrat. Against Mrs. Wells in particular, for cutting off her Stays.

Mr. Davy. Was you not sure it could not be Mother Wells, according to Canning's Description?

R. Scarrat. No, I was not. I said, it might not be her.

Mr. Davy. How came you to remember every Particular of what was said at the House of Canning, and forget what passed before the Alderman?

R. Scarrat. We were a great while before the Alderman, and I could not contain it in my Head.

Mr. Davy. Did you know the Outside of Wells's House?

R. Scarrat. I did.

Mr. Davy. Did you not know whether there was a Pent-house, before you went down?

R. Scarrat. I did not.

Mr. Davy. Did you, or did you not, before Mr. Alderman Chitty, hear her say she lay on bare Boards?

R. Scarrat. She said, she had no Bed to lie upon: I don't remember hearing her say she did lie down.

Mr. Davy. Do you remember you heard her say there was a Grate in the Room?

R. Scarrat. I do not remember that.

Mr. Davy. Did you hear her mention a Saddle?

R. Scarrat. To the best of my Knowledge, she described a Saddle and an old Cask; but I cannot say.

Mr. Davy. How did she describe the Room, when you went down with her?

R. Scarrat. To the best of my Knowledge, she said it was a long, darkish Room, but I am not positive; but I am positive she said it was a long, darkish Room, before she went down.

Mr. Davy. Where did she say that?

R. Scarrat. I believe, before Alderman Chitty; if she did not there, it was in her Mother's House.

Mr. Davy. Are you positive to all the Questions you asked her at her Mother's, and her Answers?

R. Scarrat. I am.

Mr. Davy. Did you write any of it down?

R. Scarrat. No, I never did.

Mr. Davy. Did she describe the Jug before the Alderman?

R. Scarrat. I believe she did.

Mr. Davy. And the Bread?

R. Scarrat. I believe she did.

Mr. Davy. How many Pieces of Bread?

R. Scarrat. I do not remember how many Pieces; but it was about a Quartern Loaf.

Mr. Davy. Are you still in the Service of Mr. Snee?

R. Scarrat. No; I have left it three Years this Month, Old Stile.

Mr. Davy. In what Employment are you now?

R. Scarrat. I work for Mrs. Waller in the Old-Change. I am a Hartshorn-rasper, and live at Mr. Carlton's, a Potter, in Aldermanbury-Postern.

Mr. Davy. How long have you lived there?

R. Scarrat. I have boarded in that House about a Year and half: I boarded there before I lodged there.

Mr. Davy. Have you boarded or lodged at any other House, since this Affair at Enfield-Wash?

R. Scarrat. No, I have not.

Mr. Davy. How far is Mr. Carlton's from Mr. Lyon's House?

R. Scarrat. Mr. Lyon lives in Aldermanbury, and the other is in Aldermanbury-Postern; they are about seven or eight hundred Yards Distance.

Mr. Davy. How far is Mr. Carlton's from Mrs. Canning's House?

R. Scarrat. It is next Door but one.

Mr. Davy. Whose Servant came and told you Elizabeth Canning was come Home?

R. Scarrat. It was the Apothecary's Maid.

Mr. Davy. Did you lodge there then?

R. Scarrat. I did; and believe I had bedded and boarded there a Year before.

Mr. Davy. Did you lodge there the whole Month of January?

R. Scarrat. I did, and did not lie out of the House one Night.

Mr. Davy. And work'd for Mrs. Waller then?

R. Scarrat. I did.

Mr. Davy. Did you work every Day?

R. Scarrat. No, I did not; but I did that Month from the 5th to the 27th, to the best of my Knowledge.

Mr. Davy. Where was you from the 1st to the 5th of January 1753?

R. Scarrat. I was backwards and forwards at Mr. Carlton's; I eat and drank there.

Mr. Davy. Are you certain you dined at Home from the 1st to the 5th?

R. Scarrat. No, I am not, it being Holiday-Time.

Mr. Davy. Where did you dine the 1st?

R. Scarrat. At Mr. Carlton's.

Mr. Davy. What did you do after Dinner?

R. Scarrat. I went to see a Play in Covent-Garden House; but being too late, the House was full, we returned Home between Nine and Ten at Night.

Mr. Davy. Who were with you?

R. Scarrat. Mr. Knowles, a Coal-merchant, and his Wife. We tried to get in at Covent-Garden, then at Drury-Lane. When we found we could not, we made the best of our Way to Mr. Knowles's House, and there I stayed.

Mr. Davy. How long did you stay there?

R. Scarrat. I might stay there till almost Nine o'Clock; and then I went Home with Mr. Carlton's Daughter, who is since my Wife.

Mr. Davy. How long have you been married to her?

R. Scarrat. Better than eleven Months.

Mr. Davy. I hope you had your Health at that Time?

R. Scarrat. I had, to the best of my Knowledge.

Mr. Davy. Was you not under the Care of any Surgeon, or Quack?

R. Scarrat. No, I was not.

Mr. Davy. Was you perfectly well at that Time?

R. Scarrat. I cannot give an Answer for a Cold, or the like.

Mr. Davy. At what Time of the Day did you go out on the 1st of January after Dinner?

R. Scarrat. I went out about Three o'Clock.

Mr. Davy. At what Time was you at Mrs. Carlton's at Night?

R. Scarrat. I was there before Ten o'Clock.

Mr. Davy. How did you dispose of yourself on the 2d of January?

R. Scarrat. I don't know whether I was at Work, or not.

Mr. Davy. I thought you said you did not go to Work till the 5th.

R. Scarrat. I carried Work Home on the 5th; on the 2d in the Evening I was at a Club in the Old-Bailey, and I can bring the Club-Book to satisfy you of that.

Mr. Davy. How came you to be so extremely particular at this Distance of Time, where you was on the 1st and 2d of January?

R. Scarrat.

R. Scarrat. By looking over Mrs. Waller's Book.

Mr. Davy. What led you to be so particular in all these Circumstances?

R. Scarrat. I don't know any thing in particular.

Mr. Davy. Did you expect to have been asked any thing about it in this Cause?

R. Scarrat. I have heard that it should be alledged against me, that I took the Girl away.

Mr. Davy. When was it at first suggested?

R. Scarrat. I cannot remember that; it is since the Time of finding the Bills against the Abbotsbury People; but I cannot say the Time I did first hear it.

Mr. Davy. How long have you been acquainted with Mother Wells?

R. Scarrat. It is four or five Years ago.

Mr. Davy. Have you been in her House, since you left Mr. Snee's Service?

R. Scarrat. No, not in her House, nor near her House since; that is three Years ago.

Mr. Davy. Had you never a Quarrel with Mother Wells?

R. Scarrat. No.

Mr. Davy. Upon your Oath, did you never threaten that you would be revenged on her?

R. Scarrat. No; upon my Oath, I never expressed any such Words.

Mr. Davy. Where does Mr. Snee live?

R. Scarrat. He has a Country-House at Edmonton.

Mr. Davy. How often have you been in the House of Mother Wells?

R. Scarrat. I have once or twice.

Mr. Davy. Will you venture to swear, that you have not been there oftener than twice?

R. Scarrat. I may have been there two or three Times.

Mr. Davy. Have you been there no more than three Times, upon your Oath?

R. Scarrat. I cannot say, whether I have or have not: I have called, may-be, three or four Times, I don't know.

Mr. Davy. Upon your Oath, have you not been there five Times?

R. Scarrat. I don't know; I cannot say how many Times.

Mr. Davy. Will you take upon you to say, you have not been there six Times?

R. Scarrat. No.

Mr. Davy. Upon your Oath, will you take upon you to say, you never was there ten Times in your Life?

R. Scarrat. No, I never was.

Mr. Davy. Will you swear you have not been there eight Times?

R. Scarrat. I believe, I have not.

Mr. Davy. Are you positive of that?

R. Scarrat. I believe, I could swear I never was there eight Times in my Life.

Mr. Davy. Was you at Edmonton before the 1st of January was Twelve-month?

R. Scarrat. Yes; I was, in the Christmas Week.

Mr. Davy. What was your Business there then?

R. Scarrat. I went to see some Acquaintance and Friends for my Pleasure, and, I believe, I lay at Mr. Hubbard's, a Shoe-maker, two Nights.

Mr. Davy. Had you any Women there?

R. Scarrat. No.

Mr. Davy. How did you divert yourself, while you was there?

R. Scarrat. I did not divert myself there.

Mr. Davy. When did you dance there last?

R. Scarrat. I don't know how long it is ago: I was dancing at the farther Bell at Edmonton, last Edmonton Statute.

Mr. Davy. Who was your Partner?

R. Scarrat. She that now is my Wife.

Mr. Davy. When you came into Mrs. Canning's House, what made you be so particular in asking Questions?

R. Scarrat. There were others asked a great many Questions, besides me.

Mr. Davy. Where had you used to ride your Master's Horse to Water, when you lived at Edmonton?

R. Scarrat. Sometimes to one Place, and sometimes to another.

Mr. Davy. Did you never water your Horse near Mrs. Wells's?

R. Scarrat. I have at the Brook on this Side her House.

Mr. Davy. Did you ever put your Horse up there?

R. Scarrat. I once did; I believe he was hung at the Door; I don't remember any of my Master's Horses being put in the Stable.

Mr. Moreton. Did you ever ride your Horse in at the Window, where the Girl jumped out at?

R. Scarrat. No, Sir.

Mr. Moreton. Are you sure, that between the Hours of Nine and Ten on the 1st of January you did not go to see Bedlam?

R. Scarrat. No, Sir; I am positive of that.

Mr. Moreton. Tell me the Truth, or perhaps half Bedlam will be called to contradict you.

R. Scarrat. No, I did not, Sir.

Mr. Moreton. Was you in Moorfields that Night?

R. Scarrat. No, I was not.

Mr. Moreton. Did you take away Betty Canning that Night up to Houndsditch?

R. Scarrat. No, Sir.

Mr. Moreton. Did you see that Door to the Room open, where Betty Canning was confined, when you was there with her?

R. Scarrat. No, I did not, Sir.

Mr. Moreton. If the Door had been open, and she had looked in, and she had not fixed upon the Room, should you have believed her Story?

R. Scarrat. I verily believe I should not.

Mr. Moreton. Was your Situation such, that it was expected of you to be more particular than other People?

R. Scarrat. No; there were a great Number of People there. I did not regard any more than any body else.

Mr. Moreton. Had you any thing to do, to direct Mr. Alderman Chitty against whom he should make out a Warrant?

R. Scarrat. No, Sir.

Recorder. Was there any Lock upon that Door leading to the Hay-loft?

R. Scarrat. I believe there was none at all; but I did not take Notice of that.

Mary Myers sworn.

M. Myers. I live in the Neighbourhood, and know the Mother and Daughter.

Mr. Nares. How long have you known the Daughter?

M. Myers. About eleven Years. She is a very sober honest Girl, as any in England; she always behaved very handsome to every body.

Mr.

Mr. Nares. Do you remember her being missing on the 1st of January?

M. Myers. I do.

Mr. Nares. When was the first Time you saw her after?

M. Myers. On the 29th at Night, at her Mother's House. There were her Mother, Mrs. Woodward, and Mary Lyon there. Elizabeth Canning was sitting by the Fire-side in a very black, dirty, bad Condition; her Face, Arms, and Hands were black; I took it to be a Cold, or Numbness occasioned by Cold; her Nails were as black as my Bonnet, and her Fingers stood crooked.

Mr. Nares. How was she dressed?

M. Myers. She had a black quilted Petticoat on, all torn about the Knees; she had a Bed-gown on, and a Rag about her Head, I believe it was a muslin Half-handkerchief; she was very low in her Spirits. I kneeled down on my Knees, to ask her what was the Cause of her being in that Condition? She told me, she went on the 1st of January to see an Aunt and Uncle, and stayed with them till Night, and they saw her into Houndsditch; and how she was robbed and stripped in Moorfields by two Men, and they gave her a Blow on her Head, and deprived her of her Senses, and was carried into a House by these two Men; and when she came in, there were an elderly Woman and two young ones; the old Woman took hold of her Arm, and asked her if she would go their Way, and she said, No; that then she went and took a Knife out of a Drawer, and cut the Lacing of her Stays, and took them off, and gave her a great Slap on the Face, and told her she should suffer in the Flesh; and opened a Door, and shoved her up a Pair of Stairs into a Room; and after she was in, she d—d her, and said, if she moved or stirred, or made any Resistance, she would come and cut her Throat.

Mr. Nares. What Time did she say she was carried in there?

M. Myers. About Four in the Morning, as she reckoned.

Mr. Nares. Were there any other People in the Room, besides what you have mentioned?

M. Myers. There were several others.

Mr. Nares. Did you see Scarrat there?

M. Myers. I did not know he was there, till I got off my Knees from talking to her.

Mr. Nares. What did she tell you was in the Room?

M. Myers. She told me there was Hay there, and a Pitcher with Water in it, she believed about a Gallon of it; and that there was a Fire-place in it, and about the Value of a Quartern Loaf of Bread in Pieces.

Mr. Nares. Did she say there was a Grate in the Room?

M. Myers. She did; and that she took the Bed-gown and Rag out of the Grate in the Room.

Mr. Nares. Did she give any Description of the Size of the Room, whether long, round, or square?

M. Myers. No; I cannot say she did. She said she got out at the Window at the End, by pulling down two Boards, and put her Head and Shoulders out, and took out some Part of the Window, and pulled out her Legs, and so dropped down; and that she tore her Ear in coming out. I looked at her Ear, and it appeared to be a great Scratch; there was a great deal of Blood appeared to be fresh, and dropped of Blood (while I was there) upon her Shoulder. She was asked, how far the House was off? She said; about ten Miles out of Town. She said, while she was in the Room, there was a Stair-case lay close to the Room, and she heard People run up and down in the Nights, and she heard the Name of Mother Wills, or Mother Wells, mentioned. I was close by her, and heard every Word she said; she spoke very low.

Mr. Nares. Had Scarrat spoke to her before she said Mother Wills, or Wells?

M. Myers. I don't know that he had.

Mr. Nares. If he had spoke to her, should you have known it?

M. Myers. I should: I did not hear him speak to her at all then.

Mr. Nares. Tell the Court what she said farther.

M. Myers. She said, she escaped about Four in the Afternoon, and asked her Way to London. She was so low, that I could scarce hear what she said.

Mr. Nares. Did you go before Mr. Alderman Chitty?

M. Myers. No, I did not.

Mr. Nares. Did you go down to Enfield-Wash afterwards?

M. Myers. I did on the Thursday after her Return. There were in the Chaise with me, the Mother and Daughter, and Mrs. Garrat; and several other People went down, some on Horseback. Mr. Adamson was one on Horseback. We met him, as we were going. He had been there. He spoke to the Coachman, and asked him what made him so long in coming; and said they were out of Patience in waiting.

Mr. Nares. Did he say any thing to the Girl?

M. Myers. He said to her, Bet, what Sort of a Room was you in? She said, Sir, it is an odd Sort of a Room; there is Hay, and a Fire-place in it. He said again, What do you say? Is there Hay in it, Bet? That is all he said, and went away directly.

Mr. Nares. When he spoke to the Girl in this Manner, did he tell her there was Hay?

M. Myers. He did not. We then proceeded on, and came to the House at Enfield-Wash; and Bet was carried into the Kitchen, and from thence into the Parlour. The Gentlemen desired her there to be very cautious and careful what she said, and take Time; and after that up Stairs. After she had looked about, she pointed to Mary Squires, and said, That is the old Woman that cut my Stays off.

Mr. Nares. Was she sitting or standing then?

M. Myers. I cannot say; there were a great Crowd of People; I could not get to the Sight of her.

Mr. Nares. Did the Description she had given of the old Woman she told you of on the 29th at Night, tally with the old Woman, when you saw her?

M. Myers. Indeed, it did. She then said, These two young Women were in the Room, (that was Virtue Hall, and the Gypsey's Daughter.) The old Gypsey Woman said, she never saw her in her Life before, and hoped she was not come to take her Life away, or something to that Purpose.

Mr. Nares. Was the Day mentioned, when Elizabeth Canning said she was robbed?

M. Myers. I don't know that.

Mr. Nares. Did you hear the old Woman say she had been any Distance from Enfield-Wash?

M. Myers. No, I did not; but I heard the old Woman say she had lain there but three Nights; and George said so too. After that they carried Elizabeth Canning up one Pair of Stairs; and into two Rooms; one of them was lock'd, and the Key sent for; she said, none of them were the Room in which she was confined: Then she was carried through the Kitchen and up into another Room; then she said, Gentlemen, this is the Room that I was in; but here is more Hay in it, than there was when I was here.

Mr. Nares. Was you in the Room then?

M. Myers. I was: She took her Foot, and put the Hay away, and shewed the Gentlemen two Holes; and said, they were in the Floor, when she was in it before.

Mr. Nares. Had you heard her mention them two Holes before?

M. Myers. No, I never did. Mr. Adamson set his Back against a Window, and asked her what she had ever observed out of that Window? She said, Hills at a Distance.

Mr. Nares. Which Window was this?

M. Myers. That next to the Fire-place. She had told us there was a Pewter Bason there, and a Saddle; but when we came there, there were two Saddles.

Mr. Nares. Did you look out at the Window?

M. Myers. I cannot say I did.

Mr. Nares. When he put his Back to the Window, could she have seen what was to be seen there?

M. Myers. No, she was not so high up to it.

Mr. Nares. Did you find the Pewter Bason there?

M. Myers. We did.

Mr. Nares. Did she mention what Colour the Pitcher was of, at her first mentioning it?

M. Myers. I cannot say she did; but said it would hold a Gallon of Water.

Mr. Nares. Where did you first see the Pitcher?

M. Myers. In the Kitchen.

Mr. Nares. Did you go to Justice Tashmaker's?

M. Myers. No, I did not. The other Woman and I were a-cold, so we went over to a Public House.

Cross-examined.

Mr. Willes. Was her Linen dirty when you was with her on the 29th of January?

M. Myers. I looked all about the Neck and Shoulders; it was not very dirty, but it was dirty, it was soiled from her Body.

Mr. Willes. Was you by when she was undressed?

M. Myers. No, I was not.

Mr. Willes. Do you know what Number of Petticoats she had on?

M. Myers. No, I do not.

Mr. Willes. Pray, did any of you know Mr. Scarrat?

M. Myers. I knew him.

Mr. Willes. Do you believe old Mrs. Canning had any Knowledge of him?

M. Myers. I believe she might.

Mr. Willes. Did you hear her call him by his Name?

M. Myers. No, I did not.

Mr. Willes. Why do you think she might know him?

M. Myers. Because he lived in the Neighbourhood, next Door to her but one.

Mr. Nares. Who was there when you was there?

M. Myers. There was Mrs. Woodward, Mrs. Lyon, and Elizabeth Canning's Mother.

Mr. Nares. Did you hear Scarrat examine Elizabeth Canning where she had been?

M. Myers. No, I did not.

Mr. Nares. Did you observe the Blood to drop very fast from her Ear?

M. Myers. No; it had dropped upon her Shoulder, and another Drop was then at her Ear.

Mr. Nares. Was the Handkerchief then on her Head?

M. Myers. It was.

Mr. Nares. Was there much Blood on the Handkerchief?

M. Myers. There was a pretty deal upon it.

Mr. Nares. Was you at Enfield-Wash, when Canning was carried into the Kitchen?

M. Myers. I was.

Mr. Nares. Do you remember the Door to be open that leads up into the Hay-loft, when she was there?

M. Myers. I don't remember it was.

Mr. Nares. Upon her being carried into the Kitchen, did she say, she had been there before?

M. Myers. No, I did not hear any thing of that.

Mr. Nares. When Mr. Adamson asked, what Prospect there was out of the Window, did not she say, there were Trees near it?

M. Myers. Not as I heard.

Mr. Nares. I think you say, she described the elderly Woman?

M. Myers. I heard her describe the two Girls that were by; one was a black Girl, the other a fair one, and the old Woman, a tall, black, swarthy Woman.

Mary Woodward sworn.

M. Woodward. Elizabeth Canning's Mother sent for me the Night she came Home. I went there about half an Hour after Ten, and stayed till about One. There came Mr. Scarrat, Mr. Wintlebury, and others, after I was there. Mrs. Canning asked me, who she should send for? I said, Send for her best Friends. I mentioned Mr. Lyon and his Wife, and others. She sent the Apprentice; he returned, and said, he was gone to Bed. There came Mrs. Myers and Polly Lyon; the latter lives Servant with Mr. Roberts.

Mr. Williams. Had you any Conversation with Elizabeth Canning?

M. Woodward. I had: The first Word she said to me was, Mrs. Woodward, I am almost starved to Death. (She was sitting in the Chimney-corner, and lifted up her Head, and put her Hands together.) I have had nothing, said she, but Bread and Water since New-year's Day at Night, and I have had no Bread ever since Friday. I asked her, where she had been? She said, she had been confined in a Room in a House on the Hertfordshire Road.

Mr. Williams. Was this before any body came in?

M. Woodward. Upon my Oath, this she said before any body came in. I knowing nothing of of the Hertford Road, asked her no more of it.

Mr. Williams. Do you remember her mentioning any body's Name?

M. Woodward. I did not observe, through the whole Time I was there, that she mentioned any body's Name. I mulled her a little Wine, but was never out of the Room. I asked her; what was become of her Cloaths?

Mr. Williams. Go on; you need not give a particular Account of the first Robbery in Moorfields.

M. Woodward. She said, about half an Hour after she came to her Senses, she came to a House where she was confined; there were three Women took hold of her; the old Woman asked her, if she would go their Way? She answered, No. Upon that she went to a Dresser or Dresser-drawer, and took a Knife, and ripped the Lacing of her Stays, and after that took up her Petticoats, and looked at them, and took her a Slap on the Face, and said, D—n you, you Bitch, I'll give you that; and turned her up a Pair of Stairs into this Place, where she was confined, with threatening Oaths to cut her Throat; if she heard her cry out. I asked her, what Sort of an old Woman this was? She said, she was a tall, black, swarthy Woman; and the young Women did nothing but laugh at her. I was there with her best Part of half an Hour before the others came in.

Mr. Williams. Was there any thing from your Examination, that could possibly lead her to give her Answer?

M. Woodward. No; nor her Mother never spoke to her, during the whole Time I was talking to her.

Mr. Williams. Did she tell you this of her own Accord?

M. Woodward. She began and went on, after I asked her where she had been confined.

Mr. Williams. Did she say, during her whole Confinement, that she saw any body?

M. Woodward. Not as I remember. She was in a most deplorable Condition; she had an old ragged Bed-gown on, and a Bit of an Handkerchief.

Mr. Williams. Look at this Bed-gown; is this the same?

M. Woodward. I do really believe this to be it; but I will not take upon me to swear it.

Mr. Williams. Had you ever seen it before that Night?

M. Woodward. No; never.

Mr. Williams. Upon your Oath, do you know whether that is her Mother's?

M. Woodward. Her Mother never had such a Thing on her Back in her Life.

Mr. Williams. Look upon this Half-handkerchief.

M. Woodward. This I know is the same she came Home in.

Mr. Williams. You say you mulled her some Wine; did she drink much?

M. Woodward. I gave her about half a Tea-cup full, and about the Value of a Nutmeg in Quantity of Bread soaked in Wine; she rolled it about in her Mouth, and said, Mrs. Woodward, I cannot swallow it, and spit it out. She spoke very faint and low.

Mr. Williams. Do you believe she was really in that bad State of Health, in which she appeared to be?

M. Woodward. I believe she was as bad as she appeared to be; I am sensible of that. She supped about a Spoonful of the Wine; whether she swallowed it all or not, I don't know. She gave an Account of having no Stools in that Time, and the Apothecary did all he could to assist her in that Case.

Mr. Williams. When was she able to go abroad?

M. Woodward. On the Tuesday Se'nnight after she came Home (which was on a Monday) she came to my House, and was there almost three Weeks; she was ill all the Time, and the Doctor and Apothecary came to her; during Part of the Time she was at my House, she was dangerously ill. She was brought in a Man's Arms, and put in a Chair to go to Mr. Fielding's, the Day after she came to my House.

Cross-examined.

Mr. Gascoyne. Did you observe her Ear at all?

M. Woodward. I did not that Night she came Home, but the Apothecary's Man did; the Handkerchief was all bloody; it bled so, that it shocked me, I could not look at it; it was very cold Weather, and the Blood had congealed and was thick upon her Ear; and sitting by the Fire; I fancy, that made her bleed afresh.

Mr. Gascoyne. Do you remember Mrs. Mayle inquiring for the Shift that she came Home in?

M. Woodward. Yes; she saw it, her Mother shewed it her.

Mr. Gascoyne. Do you know it was the Shift she came Home in?

M. Woodward. I do.

Mr. Gascoyne. Do you remember Mrs. Mayle's Observation?

M. Woodward. I do; that was, that she would take her Oath that no Man ever lay with her, for if there had, there would have been Nature on one Side or other.

Mr. Gascoyne. Do you remember whether she observed whether it was clean or dirty?

M. Woodward. Upon my Oath, she did not observe any thing else in my hearing.

Mr. Gascoyne. Was the Shift dirty?

M. Woodward. It was; but not so dirty, as if she had been at hard Work in it.

Mr. Gascoyne. What did you think of it?

M. Woodward. It was dirty.

Mr. Gascoyne. Was it as dirty as if it had been worn by a Person that was dragged from London to Enfield-Wash, and lay upon Hay so long afterwards?

M. Woodward. Yes, it was.

Mr. Gascoyne. Did you ever express yourself to the contrary to any body?

M. Woodward. No, I never did.

Mr. Gascoyne. Whether you ever expressed you were surprized that the Shift was no more dirty, upon being worn so long?

M. Woodward. No, I never said such a Thing.

Mr. Gascoyne. Did you observe any Splashes of Dirt on it?

M. Woodward. I did not; if there had been any, I must have seen them.

Mr. Gascoyne. Were there no Spots on it at all?

M. Woodward. There were no Spots of any kind in the World.

Mr. Gascoyne. Take care, you are upon your Oath.

M. Woodward. I am so.

Mr.

Mr. Gascoyne. Did you think the Shift was not so dirty as it might have been, if she had worked in it all the Time?

M. Woodward. I think it might have been as dirty in a Week, if she had worked in it all the Time.

Recorder. Did you see Mrs. Mayle there?

M. Woodward. I did.

Recorder. Did not she say, it could not have been worn above a Week?

M. Woodward. No, I never heard her.

Recorder. Whether Mrs. Mayle and Mrs. Canning did not quarrel?

M. Woodward. No, not in my hearing.

Recorder. Was she there above once?

M. Woodward. I never knew she was.

John Wintlebury sworn.

I have known Elizabeth Canning the Mother about fourteen or fifteen Years; she lives in Aldermanbury-Postern, and bears as good a Character as any in the Parish. I have known the Daughter, I believe, twelve Years; she is a very sober Girl as any I know; and I believe the whole Neighbourhood will say so. She lived with me about eighteen Months, about three or four Months before this happened. She always behaved herself in a very sober Manner. I keep a Public House. I have a back Room, where she would commonly be. She very seldom came forward.

Mr. Moreton. Did she shew a Disposition to be forward, or gay?

J. Wintlebury. Quite different. I don't believe she went out once in a quarter of a Year. When she went away from me, many of the Neighbours would have had her.

Mr. Moreton. Do you remember her being missing on the 1st of January?

J. Wintlebury. I do; and her coming Home on the 29th. I saw her that Night at her Mother's House, sitting by the Fire.

Mr. Moreton. How came you to go there?

J. Wintlebury. A Neighbour came and told me, she was come Home.

Mr. Moreton. Do you know who that Neighbour was?

J. Wintlebury. I do not.

Mr. Moreton. Was it Mr. Scarrat?

J. Wintlebury. No, it was not. I went; and when I came into the Room, I met with ten or a dozen People: There was the Girl, in a very bad Condition, with a Handkerchief wrapped about her Head, and, I think, it was bloody on one Side. She was very weak. I took hold of her Hand, and said, Bet. She said, O Lord, Sir, you don't know what I have gone through, or something to that Effect. Said I, You are at Home now; and, it is to be hoped, you have Friends to assist you if you have been used ill. I asked her, where she had been? She said, On the Hertfordshire Road. I said, How do you know that? She said, she remembered seeing (through some Cracks, when she was in the Room) the Coachman that used to carry Things for me.

Mr. Moreton. What Coachman had you used to send Things by?

J. Wintlebury. By the Royston or Hertford Coach. I asked her, how far she was from London? She said, about ten or eleven Miles. Then I said, Pray, can you tell whose House you were at? She said, I cannot; but I heard the Name Wills, or Wells, by People below Stairs.

Mr. Moreton. Do you know Robert Scarrat?

J. Wintlebury. I do.

Mr. Moreton. Was he in the Room, when she mentioned the Name Wills or Wells?

J. Wintlebury. He might be; I did not see him then.

Mr. Moreton. Do you recollect that Scarrat mentioned Wills or Wells to her?

J. Wintlebury. To the best of my Knowledge, he did not.

Mr. Moreton. Did you see Mary Myers there?

J. Wintlebury. I can't remember.

Mr. Moreton. Did you see a Woman kneeling by the Side of her?

J. Wintlebury. I don't know, indeed. I stayed there but about three or four Minutes, and there were a great many People in the Room.

Mr. Moreton. Was you before Mr. Alderman Obitty?

J. Wintlebury. I was; but that is quite out of my Memory. I don't know the Particulars that passed.

Mr. Moreton. Was you at Enfield-Wash?

J. Wintlebury. I was, with Mr. Colley, Mr. Sparham, Mr. Adamson, Mr. Lyon, and Mr. Hague. I got down before the Chaise came down, and went to the Sun. The Headborough went with a Warrant to Wells's before me some Time: After that I went into the House, the Parlour, and Kitchen, and up Stairs, and into another Room out of the Kitchen; it is a long Room, it goes up about four or five Steps: I observed there was a great deal of Hay there; it seemed as if it had been tossed up afresh, it laid very light.

Mr. Moreton. Did Mr. Nash go in with you?

J. Wintlebury. I was in before him an Hour. He, and Mr. Lyon, Mr. Hague, and Mr. Aldridge, came all down together: We were there an Hour before them.

Mr. Moreton. Who went down with you?

J. Wintlebury. Mr. Adamson and Mr. Scarrat did. We put up at the Sun; and another or two went down on Foot.

Mr. Moreton. Who was in the Room with you?

J. Wintlebury. Mr. Adamson was, and them.

Mr. Moreton. What did you observe in the Room?

J. Wintlebury. There was an old Chest of Drawers, a Saddle, and a Place where somebody had laid on, and a Rug upon them: I did not disturb it much: I can't tell what was under the Rug; it seemed to be a Parcel of old Sacks. I observed a broken Pitcher.

Mr. Moreton. Did she tell you, the Night of her coming Home, of a Pitcher?

J. Wintlebury. She did, of a broken one. She described it by being a broken one, and which would hold about a Gallon, or something like that: And when I saw it in this Room, I thought it was the same she described.

Mr. Moreton. Look at this Pitcher; do you think this is it?

J. Wintlebury. I believe it may be it.

Mr. Moreton. Whether or no you know of any of your Friends carrying that Pitcher up into the Workshop?

J. Wintlebury. I believe I was the first Person of us that went into the Room.

Mr. Moreton. Are you sure there was a broken Pitcher in the Room, when you went in first?

J. Wintlebury. I am sure there was.

Mr. Moreton.

Mr. Moreton. How long did you stay in the Room then?

J. Wintlebury. I stayed but a little Time, and then came down again.

Mr. Moreton. Did you see any thing of a Man that obstructed any body from going into this Hay-loft?

J. Wintlebury. No. This was about half an Hour before Elizabeth Canning was come. Mr. Nash, Mr. Aldridge, Mr. Hague, and Mr. Lyon, were not come then. When they came, they desired me to go and desire them to make haste; then I took my Horse, and went and met the Coach. After this, Canning came down, and was brought into the Kitchen, and set upon the Dresser, and after that into the Parlour; there she was desired to fix upon the Person that cut her Stays off: She fixed upon Mary Squires.

Mr. Moreton. Was you near Elizabeth Canning then?

J. Wintlebury. I was; and so were a great many more.

Mr. Moreton. Did she see Squires's Face before she fixed upon her?

J. Wintlebury. She saw a little of her Face, I suppose. There were about eight or nine People round the Fire. The old Gypsy had a little Pipe in her Hand, sitting crouching, with her Head and her Knees together; and as Canning looked round, she said, That is the Woman that cut my Stays off.

Mr. Moreton. Had Elizabeth Canning given you any Description of the Person, that cut off her Stays, before?

J. Wintlebury. I can't say she had.

Mr. Moreton. What was done after Canning had charged her?

J. Wintlebury. Squires got up, and said, What I, Madam! did I cut your Stays off? Canning said, Yes; you cut my Stays off in such a Place in the Kitchen. Then she went and sat down again.

Mr. Moreton. Did Mary Squires say where she was at the Time those Stays were cut off?

J. Wintlebury. No; she did not mention any thing, as I heard.

Mr. Moreton. Did she mention how long she had been at Wells's House?

J. Wintlebury. No, not at that Time.

Mr. Moreton. What do you mean by saying, at that Time? Did she at any other Time?

J. Wintlebury. She did not at any other Time, to my Knowledge.

Mr. Moreton. Did she desire Canning not to swear her Life away?

J. Wintlebury. Indeed, I don't know that she did.

Mr. Moreton. What was done after this?

J. Wintlebury. Then Canning was carried up Stairs, and did not fix upon any of the Rooms: I think there are three of them: They were going to carry her farther, and she said, I was not carried so high; I did not go up above four, five, or six Steps at the most.

Mr. Moreton. Who did she say so to?

J. Wintlebury. She said so to me. Upon this she was brought into the Kitchen again, and the Hay-loft Door was open, and she went up there and looked about her, and said; This is the Room in which I was confined.

Mr. Moreton. Where was she, when she said this?

J. Wintlebury. This she said as she was going up Stairs. I believe I then had hold of her Hand. When she was in the Room, Mr. Adamson put his Back against a Window, and asked her, if she could mention any thing that she could see out at that Window.

Mr. Moreton. Could she at that Time see any thing out at it?

J. Wintlebury. Then, I know, she could not.

Mr. Moreton. But could she before he had put his Back to it?

J. Wintlebury. He was up Stairs before her.

Mr. Moreton. Was Mr. Nash in the Room then?

J. Wintlebury. Very likely he was; but I don't know that.

Mr. Moreton. What was her Answer to Mr. Adamson?

J. Wintlebury. She said there were some Hills a pretty Way off; and one, two, or three Houses on the left-hand Side.

Mr. Moreton. Did she give a true Description of the Prospect?

J. Wintlebury. She did.

Mr. Moreton. Which Window was this?

J. Wintlebury. This was the Window nearest the Fire-place, in the East. After this Mr. Adamson opened the Window: The Girl said, That Window was nailed up, when I was here. I looked at the North Window, where she got out at. That was a little Casement, about 9 by 18, or 10 by 20: There were Boards nailed over this North Window: It seemed to be fresh done, and in a very cobbling Way: The Nails were not drove home, but bent double; it did not seem to be done by a Man; and, I think, Mr. Adamson made the same Observation.

Mr. Moreton. Did you make that Observation to any body then?

J. Wintlebury. No, I did not. We all went away to Justice Tasemaker.

Mr. Moreton. Did Elizabeth Canning see George Squires, when she was first brought in?

J. Wintlebury. No.

Mr. Moreton. When did she first see him?

J. Wintlebury. I believe she first saw him when she went into the Parlour, when we went in first; then George was in a very great hurry, and seemed much perplexed; and ran up Stairs, and was going to go away; he was bundling up some Stockings: Some People, two or three, went in, and said, Where are you going? you must not go away. And they would not let him go; and brought him into the Parlour again. Then he had a large Great Coat on.

Mr. Moreton. Who were there, two or three People?

J. Wintlebury. There was one Ball; he is since dead. George Squires grew obstreperous, and wanted to get out at the Window, and Ball called out for more Help; and then, I think, another Person went in.

Mr. Moreton. Was you then in the Room?

J. Wintlebury. I was not. When Canning was brought in, she was asked, if she knew that Person? meaning George. She said, she could not say it was the Man, but it looked very much like him. He had before this pulled his Great Coat off; then they made him put the Great Coat on. She said, He looks very much like the Man, but I will not positively swear to him.

Mr. Moreton. Where was this?

J. Wintlebury.

J. Wintlebury. In the Parlour. She said also, there were two Girls in the Room when her Stays were cut off. We had her out into the Kitchen, and brought them in one by one, and she pitched upon Virtue Hall and Lucy Squires. Then we went before Justice Tasbmaker; there Canning was examined.

Mr. Moreton. Did she give the same Account there, as she gave to you?

J. Wintlebury. I don't know that she varied in her Account at all.

Mr. Moreton. Was it the same she gave before Mr. Alderman Chitty?

J. Wintlebury. I will not be positive to what she gave before the Alderman; I can remember but a little of that, about how she was robbed.

Mr. Moreton. Was you present at the Trial of Mary Squires?

J. Wintlebury. I was.

Mr. Moreton. Did you hear her give her Evidence in this Court?

J. Wintlebury. I did.

Mr. Moreton. Could you observe any material Difference between that and what she did before Justice Tasbmaker?

J. Wintlebury. No, I could not.

Mr. Moreton. Had you any Reason at all to doubt her Story?

J. Wintlebury. No, I had none at all.

Mr. Moreton. Did Mr. Nash say, as he was going Home, he was not satisfied with Canning's Account?

J. Wintlebury. He did not appear to be dissatisfied.

Mr. Moreton. Nor Mr. Hague?

J. Wintlebury. No.

Mr. Moreton. Nor Mr. Aldridge neither?

J. Wintlebury. No, Sir.

Mr. Moreton. Did you dine at Newington?

J. Wintlebury. No, I did not.

Cross-examined.

Mr. Willes. Don't you subscribe towards the Support of Canning?

J. Wintlebury. No, Sir.

Mr. Willes. Is yours a Tavern or Ale-house?

J. Wintlebury. An Ale-house.

Mr. Willes. At the Time Canning lived with you, was she at all fond of Men?

J. Wintlebury. No, she was not.

Mr. Willes. How old was she, when she came first?

J. Wintlebury. She might be about seventeen Years of Age.

Mr. Willes. What was the Reason she left your Service?

J. Wintlebury. Because she got a better Place; that was the only Reason.

Mr. Willes. Was she employed in your House in serving Customers?

J. Wintlebury. Sometimes; very seldom. She very seldom came into our outward Room amongst the Customers.

Mr. Willes. How came you, on the Trial of Mary Squires, to say she had a Bed-gown and a Cap on?

J. Wintlebury. I say now, I did not know whether it was a Cap.

Mr. Willes. Did you call it a Cap or Handkerchief upon that Trial?

J. Wintlebury. I don't know which I then said.

Mr. Willes. Do you know Robert Scarrat?

J. Wintlebury. I do.

Mr. Willes. How long have you known him?

J. Wintlebury. May-be a Year and a half, or two Years. He is a Hartshorn-rasper.

Mr. Willes. Has he used to use your House?

J. Wintlebury. Yes, he has as a Customer.

Mr. Willes. Did he use to use your House when Canning was your Servant?

J. Wintlebury. No; he may once or so, but I don't believe he did.

Mr. Willes. Did you know him before this Accident happened?

J. Wintlebury. I hardly did.

Mr. Willes. How came you, on Squires's Trial, to give no Account of what passed at Enfield?

J. Wintlebury. I believe I did not.

Mr. Willes. How came you to omit so many material Circumstances?

J. Wintlebury. I believe the Gentlemen did ask me no more then.

Mr. Willes. Was White in, when you first came down?

J. Wintlebury. No, he was not.

Mr. Willes. When she was carried into the Kitchen, and set upon the Dresser, did she say she had been in that Room before?

J. Wintlebury. No, I never heard her say so.

Mr. Willes. Did she say there were Trees grew against that Window, when Mr. Adamson had his Back against it?

J. Wintlebury. No, I don't remember it. I remember Mr. Adamson turned about and opened the Window, and looked out: She said then, that Casement was nailed up when she was there.

Mr. Willes. Did you make any Remarks, whether there had been Nails to fasten it?

J. Wintlebury. No, I did not inspect into it.

Mr. Willes. Can't you recollect what she said before Alderman Chitty?

J. Wintlebury. I remember but little of what passed there.

Mr. Willes to T. Gurney. Turn to your Notes of what this Evidence said on the Trial of Squires, concerning what passed before Mr. Alderman Chitty. Can you swear to them?

T. Gurney. To the Substance of the Evidence I can; though not always to the exact Words.

Mr. Willes. Do you ever put down any thing you don't hear?

T. Gurney. No, never.

Mr. Willes. Give the Court an Account what you have there put down.

T. Gurney. On that Trial this Evidence was asked, if he had heard the Evidence Canning had then given? To which he answered, he had; and that she gave the same Account the Night she came Home; but not quite so fully that Night, as she did before the Sitting Alderman on the Wednesday after.

Mr. Willes. What did he say passed the Night she came Home.

T. Gurney. He said, he saw her the Night she came Home at her Mother's House; she appeared in a very bad Condition, and had a dirty Bed-gown and Cap on. He asked her how she did? she answered, very bad; and that she had been somewhere on the Hertfordshire Road, which she knew by seeing the Hertfordshire Coach go backwards and forwards. After which he was asked, if he had heard Canning's Evidence then giv'er, as mentioned before?

Mr. Willes to Wintlebury. How long was she before Alderman Chitty?

J. Wintlebury. I don't know.

Mr. Willes. How did she get there?

J. Wintlebury. I believe, she went in a Coach.

Mr. Willes. What Day did she go to Enfield?

J. Wintlebury. On the Thursday after she came Home.

Mr. Willes. How did she go down?

J. Wintlebury. I believe, in a Chaise and Pair. The Chaise would hold four People, and four People were in it.

Mr. Willes. How far is it there?

J. Wintlebury. It is about eleven Miles.

Mr. Willes. Did you see her set out?

J. Wintlebury. No, I did not.

Mr. Willes. What Time did she get down there?

J. Wintlebury. At about Ten or Eleven o'Clock in the Morning.

Mr. Willes. Had she any Refreshment there?

J. Wintlebury. There was a little Wine brought her there. I believe she did not drink a Spoonful of it.

Mr. Willes. Did she go over to Cantril's?

J. Wintlebury. I don't know whether she did or not.

Mr. Willes. How far is Justice Tashmaker's from Enfield-Wash?

J. Wintlebury. It may be three Miles.

Mr. Willes. How far is it out of the Way to London from Enfield-Wash?

J. Wintlebury. It may be an hundred and fifty Yards.

Mr. Willes. When did she return to Town?

J. Wintlebury. She returned the same Night.

Mr. Willes. Was Scarrat your Customer when Canning lived with you?

J. Wintlebury. He was not, as I know of. I did not know him then.

Mr. Willes. Was there any Intrigue betwixt Scarrat and her?

J. Wintlebury. No; she would hardly go to the Door to speak to any body. I believe her quite different from an intriguing Person.

Mr. Willes. How long have you known Scarrat?

J. Wintlebury. I have known him about a Year and a half.

Mr. Willes. Did you hear any Part of what passed before Mr. Alderman Chitty?

J. Wintlebury. I heard a little, but did not take much Observation of it; and she talked so low. I heard her say two Men met her and robbed her in Moorfields.

Mr. Willes. Did what you heard vary from what you heard on Squires's Trial?

J. Wintlebury. No, it did not.

Recorder. You have heard the Note-taker say, you said she was more full before the Sitting Alderman than in the Account she had given before; and here you say you took little Notice of it.

J. Wintlebury. I may forget Things. If I said so then, I might forget since.

Joseph Adamson sworn.

J. Adamson. I have known E. Canning eleven or twelve Years, ever since she was big enough to play about her Mother's Door. I am one of the Persons that went down to Enfield-Wash. I had not seen her for three Months before that Day. Mr. Wintlebury and one Scarrat went down with me; the last was a Stranger to me: We were the only Men that had Horses. We had been there an Hour and half. They told me, I must go back and prevent the Chaise from stopping. I said, I took the Horse without Leave, and I would not go back. I took the Horse, and went back.

Mr. Moreton. Did you tell Canning there was Hay in the Room?

J. Adamson. I did not, either directly or indirectly, from first to last; nor have I asked her a Question since, only when we were in the Room. After I had spoke to the Coachman to make what Haste he could, they asked me, if we had taken any People up? I said, we had; and some of the People were uneasy to be gone. Then I asked, what Sort of a Place she was confined in? She said, an odd, or a wild Sort of a Place; some Hay, and something else which I can't remember: I think it was a Chimney in the Corner.

Mr. Moreton. Did you mention Hay to her?

J. Adamson. I never did, to my Knowledge. I then rode on; and as her Master Mr. Lyon and others were going from the Ale-house to Mother Wells's, I hallooed to them, and told them what the Girl had told me, that is, that there was some Hay in the Room, and a Fire-place, or a Chimney, I can't tell which. When she came down, I took her out of the Chaise, and set her on a Dresser; she sat there six, seven, or eight Minutes.

Mr. Moreton. Did she make any Observations there?

J. Adamson. She did not. Then we took her into the Room where they all were; (there was a Room full of People;) she turned herself round by the Door, till she came to where Mary Squires sat, and said, That is the Woman that cut my Stays off.

Mr. Moreton. Did any body give her any Intelligence which was Mrs. Wells's?

J. Adamson. I dare say no body did; because her Master gave her a very strict Charge to take Care who she charged.

Mr. Moreton. Do you remember Mrs. Wells's saying any thing?

J. Adamson. I do not. After this, she was carried up the great Stairs, and at the Bottom, she said, I believe this is the Stair-case. (This was just as we came out of the Room.) We went up Stairs into every Room, (I believe there are four of them.) She said, None of them is the Room. Then she was brought down again, and we took her through the Kitchen and up the Stairs into the Hay-loft. She paused a little before she spoke; and the first Word that I remember she said, was, There is more Hay than there was (as I remember) in the Room. Then I cautioned her to be careful, and let go her Arm, and went up towards the Hay, and felt it; and it was quite light; as though it had not lain there a long Time. Some People said, they thought there had been some put lately in. I said, I thought there was not; for I went round the House to make Observation, and did not think there had been any brought in; because, if there had, there must have been some scattered. Then they had got the Jug and Basin, and some other Things that she knew; but I can't say how she came to pitch upon them, because I was making Observations on the Hay. I walked then directly between her and the Casement, and turned round, and set my Back against the Casement, and said, If you you have been confined in this Room so long, you will be able to give a very good Account of it, and I expect you will. She said, That was nailed up when I was here. What, boarded up? said I. No, said she, but I tried to open it, and could not. She described Fields, and a Hill at a Distance, and some Trees; but the most remarkable Thing was, some Houses to be seen on the left-hand Side the Lane.

Mr. Moreton. Are you sure she said so?

J. Adamson. I am.

Mr. Moreton. Are you sure she could not see them when she spoke?

J. Adamson. I stood so, that I am sure she could not, I stood so betwixt them and her. After the Gentlemen had all looked out to see how the Description answered, I asked her, where she had looked out to see the Hertfordshire Coach? She pointed to the Window which was boarded up, and said, That is the Window; and that also is the Window that I made my Escape out at.

Mr. Moreton. Did you look to see whether there was any Reason to think any body had got out?

J. Adamson. I helped Colley, her Uncle, to pull the Boards down. I called all the Gentlemen to see that it was not in the same Condition with the rest of the Things in the Room, with Cobwebs as other Places had. The Wood was fresh split with driving a great Nail through it, and appeared as fresh as it could be; that is, the Crack seemed quite fresh.

Mr. Moreton. Was the Crack before you pulled them down, or done by pulling them down?

J. Adamson. That was before we attempted to pull them down.

Q. from a Jurymen. Was it boarded all over the Window?

J. Adamson. It was boarded like a little Shutter. It was one Piece of Wainscot that went clear across, and covered it all pretty near to the Top. There was a Casement on the right-hand Side; and the other Side had nothing in it.

Mr. Moreton. Did you make any Observations on the Outside of this Window, whether there was the least Appearance of any thing, as though any body had got out there?

J. Adamson. Colley and I went out; there we saw the Surface of the Plaster was scratched off, and we shewed it to several People.

Mr. Moreton. What were their Names?

J. Adamson. I don't know them; but there were a great many People looked at it, and the fresh Pieces of the Mortar on the Ground, then below the Window. Just on the Edge, between the Plastering and Brick-work, it was broke.

Mr. Moreton. Do you remember seeing Mr. Hague and Mr. Aldridge there?

J. Adamson. I do. Mr. Aldridge and I both made Observations on the Girl's pausing a little.

Mr. Moreton. Did Mr. Aldridge seem to shew any Dissatisfaction upon that then?

J. Adamson. No. I observed a large Pitcher in the Parlour, when we first went in. There were six or eight of us went in, two and two; and when there was no Resistance, I and Mr. Colley went behind the House.

Mr. Moreton. Did you see a Pitcher in the Hay-loft or Workshop?

J. Adamson. I did.

Mr. Moreton. Look at this Pitcher; do you know it?

J. Adamson. I suppose that is it, it is like it; I saw it since at the Mansion-House before my Lord-Mayor; it was broken as this is.

Mr. Moreton. Did you carry the Pitcher there?

J. Adamson. No, Sir.

Mr. Moreton. Do you know any body that did?

J. Adamson. No, I do not.

Mr. Moreton. Did Canning make any Observation on the Pitcher, — whether it was, or was not the Pitcher, that was in the Room when she was there?

J. Adamson. I did not hear that; I was making Observations on the Hay then.

Cross-examined.

Mr. Davy. Was the Door that leads up into the Workshop, open or shut, when she went into the Kitchen the first Time?

J. Adamson. I really cannot tell.

Mr. Davy. When she was gone from the Kitchen to the Stair-case of the House, what did she say there?

J. Adamson. She said at the Bottom of it, she believed that was it.

Mr. Davy. How many Stairs were there?

J. Adamson. I cannot tell; there is a Hatch or Door on the top Stair.

Mr. Davy. Upon your Oath, could she not see the whole Flight of Stairs up from the Bottom, where she then stood?

J. Adamson. Upon my Oath, I cannot tell whether she could or not.

Mr. Davy. Was that Stair-case any thing like the few little Steps that lead up into the Hay-loft?

J. Adamson. There is a very great deal of Difference.

Mr. Davy. Did you ask her, how she could make that Mistake?

J. Adamson. I did; and said, You see you was once mistaken in the Stair-case.

Mr. Davy. What was this in Answer to?

J. Adamson. She had said, That was the Corner where the Girl stood and laughed at me, when my Stays were cut off; which she said afterwards was Virtue Hall.

Mr. Davy. When you stand at the Bottom of the Stairs leading up into the Workshop, don't you see there are but few Steps?

J. Adamson. I cannot tell whether the Steps are without the Door, or after the Door is open?

Mr. Davy. How long was she in the Kitchen the second Time, before she fixed upon the Room she was confined in?

J. Adamson. I believe she was led up into the Room directly.

Mr. Davy. Was the Door open then, when she came from the other Stairs?

J. Adamson. I believe it was, and some People going up.

Mr. Davy. Did she say, when she was in the Kitchen, (pointing to the Door) That is the Door that leads to the Room I was confined in?

J. Adamson. I do not remember that.

Mr. Davy. Who shook up the Hay?

J. Adamson. I do not know.

Mr. Davy. Upon your Oath, did not you, when you was up there, put your Hand into the Hay?

J. Adamson. Yes; I did, to shew it was light; I set my Foot upon it first.

Mr. Davy. Were Mr. Nash, Mr. Aldridge, and Mr. Hague, in the Room then?

J. Adamson.

J. Adamson. I cannot tell whether they were or not; I believe they were not. They might be all there, or none of them, for ought I know.

Mr. Davy. How much Hay was there in the Room?

J. Adamson. I think, there might be about half a Load, or more; I cannot tell Hay by the Bulk of it.

Mr. Davy. How came Scarrat and you to toss up, which should go back to Canning?

J. Adamson. It was an indifferent Person said, To end Dispute, you had better toss up. We had some Words after that; and I went, but at last, against my Will.

Mr. Davy. How came you to have Words, after it was decided by Lot?

J. Adamson. After Scarrat had won, I said, he was to go.

Mr. Davy. Had any body observed at that Time, that she had not mentioned any Hay being in the Room?

J. Adamson. I had not heard any body mention any thing about it; but when I went, she told me there was some.

Mr. Davy. What did you mean, when you came back, in saying, We are all right, shaking your Hat?

J. Adamson. Going through the Wash, my Horse got away from me. (I believe I had my Hat in my Hand.)

Mr. Davy. Was you rejoiced, when she said there was Hay?

J. Adamson. No, Sir.

Mr. Davy. Was you surprized?

J. Adamson. No, Sir.

Mr. Davy. Why did you tell them there was Hay in it?

J. Adamson. Because she said so.

Mr. Davy. Why should you come back to tell them she said there was Hay in it, if she had never observed there was Hay?

J. Adamson. I don't remember any body observed she had not mentioned Hay.

Mr. Davy. Had you heard she had described the Particulars of the Room?

J. Adamson. I had never heard she had given a Description of the Room.

Mr. Davy. Then why did you go to Enfield-Wash?

J. Adamson. I went with Mr. Wintlebury for Company; he desired I would go with him. The Warrant was gone down before, and we went with an Intent to meet them.

Mr. Davy. Had you been before the Sitting Alderman?

J. Adamson. No, I had not.

Mr. Davy. Did you go down to assist in taking the People up?

J. Adamson. I did not know any body would be taken up.

Mr. Davy. Did you go down to see whether the Room answered the Description?

J. Adamson. I had not heard her describe any.

Mr. Davy. Do you remember your saying these Words, What, Hay, Bet?

J. Adamson. I don't remember that I ever mentioned the Word, Hay. I remember, she said, Hay, and something else; and I said, And what? then she told me, a Fire-place.

Mr. Davy. Whether, before you put your Back to the Window, had you not heard, she had given an Account of some Particulars in the Room?

J. Adamson. No, I had not. I did it to see, whether she could give an Account of the Prospect or no.

Mr. Davy. Should not you think it more advisable, for the People to be satisfied with the Account she could give of the Things in the Room, first?

J. Adamson. She was in the Room.

Mr. Davy. Upon your Oath, did she tell you there were Trees to be seen out of the Window?

J. Adamson. Yes, she did, upon my Oath.

Mr. Davy. Where did she stand then?

J. Adamson. She was just by the Casement.

Mr. Davy. Did you fill the Window, so that she could not possibly see Trees?

J. Adamson. I stood so near her, that I believe she could not see out at the Window.

Mr. Davy. Are you sure she could not see Trees?

J. Adamson. I believe she could not.

Mr. Davy. Was you close to the Window?

J. Adamson. No, not close to that, but close before her; which I think would answer the End, to prevent her looking out, better.

Mr. Davy. How far was she from the Window?

J. Adamson. She might be two Yards from it, and I a Yard and a half.

Mr. Davy. Was the Window boarded?

J. Adamson. It was not. I asked her the Question; she said, it had not been boarded up.

Mr. Davy. Did you ever see a Window in the Country, where there have been no Hills to be seen out of it?

J. Adamson. Yes, I have, upon the Sea-coasts.

Mr. Davy. How long had she been in the Room before you tried this Experiment?

J. Adamson. About five or six Minutes.

Mr. Davy. Had she not Time enough to look out there?

J. Adamson. I don't think she had.

Mr. Moreton. When did you hear she was come Home?

J. Adamson. I never heard she was, till the Night before we went down.

Mr. Moreton. Did you go down voluntarily, as a Friend of the Girl, or upon Request?

J. Adamson. No; it was upon the Request of Mr. Wintlebury, and others. I was just come off a Journey, and took a Friend's Horse without Leave.

Mr. Moreton. Did you tell Mr. Lyon there was a Fire-place or Chimney, as well as Hay?

J. Adamson. Yes, I mentioned both to him.

Mr. Moreton. Did Mr. Lyon hear your Observations on the Hay?

J. Adamson. No; he then was engaged in the right-hand Corner of the Room; there they had got the Jug, a Bason, and Tobacco-mould.

Mr. Moreton. Supposing she could see the Trees, could she see the Houses on the left-hand Side the Way?

J. Adamson. No; them she could not see, till we looked.

Mr. Moreton. What is the Character of Elizabeth Canning?

J. Adamson. I never heard a bad Character of her before this in my Life. I always looked upon her to be a Girl of a good Character.

Baron Legge. At the Time you stood there, and asked what could be seen out at the Window, and she said Trees, and Hills at a Distance, did she tell you what was betwixt the Trees and the Window?

J. Adamson. I don't remember any thing she said besides.

Baron Legge. Did she mention any Foot-way near there?

J. Adamson. No, not as I remember.

Baron Legge. Were the Boards pulled down from the Window before the Girl came there, or after?

J. Adamson. They were not pulled down till after she came. I asked her, which was the Window from whence she had seen the Hertsfordshire Coach? She said, That; and pointed to it. Then I said, Let's see whether we can see the Road out at it or not: Then I went to pull the Board down, and the Man who said he was her Uncle helped: We wrenched it off.

Baron Legge. Could you have seen the Hertsfordshire Coach go by, as the Board was then up?

J. Adamson. I might, as it was light over the Board, had I looked over it.

Baron Legge. Were there any Cracks big enough in the Board to look through?

J. Adamson. I cannot say there were.

Sutherton Bakler sworn.

I live at Aldermanbury-Postern. I was applied to on the 30th of January, the Day after Elizabeth Canning's coming Home, to come to her. I attended her, and found her in a very low and weak Condition. She was so extremely low, that I could scarcely hear her speak. She was in Bed, with cold clammy Sweats upon her. She complained of being very faint and sick at Times, with a Pain in her Bowels; and complained of having been coftive all the Time of her Confinement. I ordered her a purging Medicine; but her Stomach was too weak, and could not bear the Medicine she took. Finding that, I ordered a Glyster to be administered on the 30th in the Evening.

Mr. Nares. Did they give it her?

S. Bakler. They did, I think. I also ordered opening Medicines the same Day. She had no more Medicine till the 3d of February: Then I ordered another Glyster, that had some little Effect, and brought away some small Quantity, but did not answer the End. I ordered her another on the 5th, that had no Effect at all. She continued still bad. Doctor Eaton was sent for upon the 6th. He wrote proper Prescriptions for her for fourteen Days.

Mr. Nares. How long was she before she had her Health tolerably?

S. Bakler. He prescribed diuretic Medicines and gentle Cathartics; and after a Fortnight he did not come past three or four Days, and she was tolerably well in about a Month. Her Face appeared very wan. Her Face used to be of a remarkable red Complexion; but her Colour was quite gone, and her Arms of a livid Colour, spotted. I had known her some Years.

Mr. Nares. Had you ever attended her with Medicines before this?

S. Bakler. No, never.

Mr. Nares. How came she to go to Enfield, when the Glysters had not had the Effect?

S. Bakler. I thought she was very unable to bear it, and wondered that she did: I thought it extremely improper. I thought she could not bear the Fatigue.

Mr. Nares. What may you imagine those Symptoms you saw upon her to be owing to?

S. Bakler. I don't know that: She was very much emaciated and wasted, from what she was when I saw her before.

Mr. Nares. Do you think the Confinement you have heard of would not occasion it?

S. Bakler. To be sure, by living upon what she says, she must be very much wasted. Dr. Eaton was called in, because they thought her in a very dangerous Way.

Mr. Nares. From the Appearance of her at the Time that you saw her, was there any Appearance of her having been in a Salivation?

S. Bakler. She was very much emaciated and wasted, to be sure; but I never did see a Person as soon as they came out of a Salivation in my Life, or attended one in it.

Mr. Nares. Had she any Appearance of a Woman that had been brought to-bed?

S. Bakler. She looked like a Person half-starved; in a weak, wasting, decaying Way: But what was the Cause of it, I do not know.

Cross-examined.

Mr. Willes. When she complained she had no Stool, what did she say about making Water?

S. Bakler. I believe she did not make Water till the Doctor had attended her, which was not till the sixth Day, by giving her Diuretics.

Mr. Willes. How long did she say she had been without a Stool?

S. Bakler. She said, she had not had any during the Time of her Confinement; but did not say she had not made Water.

Mr. Willes. Did she say she had made Water?

S. Bakler. I do not remember she said she had made Water.

Mr. Moreton. Do you believe, that a Person that is half-starved is not so fat as a Person that is full-fed?

S. Bakler. No, to be sure, Sir; he cannot.

Mr. Willes. What Colour were her Nails?

S. Bakler. Her Arms were black and livid, and her Nails looked of a Sort of a blueish Cast.

Dr. Eaton sworn.

Dr. Eaton. I am a Physician. The first of my attending Elizabeth Canning was at her Mother's Request, on the 6th of February: Hearing it was a compassionate Case, I attended her. I found her in a very weak Condition, and was very apprehensive she would die: She appeared to me to be in very great Danger for a few Days. She complained of Cholics and Pains in her Bowels, and could scarce keep any thing upon her Stomach. I cannot say she entirely kept her Bed. She took a little Chicken Broth.

Mr. Williams. Did you see any Signs of an Imposture?

Dr. Eaton. No, I saw none at all.

Mr. Williams. Had you heard she had been away from her Friends?

Dr. Eaton. I had. I was very full of Business: I only attended to her: I did not ask Questions about her Confinement. I found she was coftive to a very great Degree. She had had one Stool before I came. I happened to see the Apothecary, and he was relating this Case to me: He was saying what he intended to give her. I said, mild Things, after so long fasting, would be better; and he gave it her, and it had had some Effect. It was seven or eight Days before the Danger began to be over.

Mr.

Mr. Williams. How long did you attend her?

Dr. Eaton. I attended her from the 6th to the 20th of February, the 20th included, every Day; and after that every other Day, for a few Days; the last Time was on the 4th of March: Then she was well enough to go abroad in the Neighbourhood; and I believe she had been abroad a Day or two before that.

Mr. Williams. Have you not had Objects under your Care in Salivations?

Dr. Eaton. I have.

Mr. Williams. Whether that does not leave very remarkable Symptoms in the Mouth, Throat, and Breath?

Dr. Eaton. Yes; it does for some Time after.

Mr. Williams. Was there the least Symptom of this?

Dr. Eaton. Oh! nothing like it, nothing like it; I'll assure you, nothing like it in the World: It was nothing like coming out of a Salivation.

Mr. Williams. Did you observe her Arms or Legs?

Dr. Eaton. I did not take so much Notice of them.

Mr. Williams. If you had not been told the real Case, what should you have imagined it to have been?

Dr. Eaton. I can't but say, the Case corresponded with a Person that had suffered Hunger, Thirst, and Cold, and great Hardship.

Cross-examined.

Mr. Davy. Did you observe her Hands and Legs?

Dr. Eaton. No body desired me to take Notice of her Hands and Legs.

Mr. Davy. When had she her first Evacuation?

Dr. Eaton. She had the first the Day before I came, which was the 6th; then I heard that she had had one the Day before; and I believe she had the next the Day after.

Mr. Davy. Was there any Difficulty after that?

Dr. Eaton. There was; and Medicines ordered pretty commonly, to the 20th. I gave her Diuretics a pretty deal.

Mr. Davy. Had you any Conversation with her?

Dr. Eaton. I had none at all. I was very full of Business at that Time, and I did my Business as well as I could.

Mr. Davy. Did you examine any outward Appearance?

Dr. Eaton. No, I did not. They complained she had too little Evacuation by Urine.

Mr. Davy. How was her Pulse?

Dr. Eaton. She had a singular Pulse: I was afraid of her falling into a Fever, and I ordered that which was material for a Fever.

Mr. Davy. Had you never a Patient in this Condition before?

Dr. Eaton. Many.

Mr. Davy. Did all their Disorders proceed from Hunger, Thirst, and Cold?

Dr. Eaton. No. She was weak and emaciated, and her Stomach weak. When we prescribe for a Person, we attend to all the Circumstances, and ask all the Questions necessary to let us into the concomitant Symptoms. I formed my Opinion from what I found, a low, flashing Pulse, and fluttering. Every Thing corresponded to what they said; and therefore I had no Reason to disbelieve the Story.

Mr. Davy. Whether all the Symptoms you observed in the Defendant, might not arise from another Cause than that which is now assigned?

Dr. Eaton. I'll give you the best Account of that I can. It might possibly in Part arise from other Causes, and it might not.

Mr. Davy. May not a Person be reduced to a low State by a Fever?

Dr. Eaton. To be sure they may: If I am sent for to a Patient, and they tell me they have suffered with Hunger or Thirst, I never doubt it.

Mr. Davy. That is not the Question: Is it not possible a Person may be reduced to the Condition she was, by some other Ailment?

Dr. Eaton. I think it is possible.

Mr. Davy. Might not she be in the Condition you saw her, and yet her whole Story a great Lye?

Dr. Eaton. All I can say, it might proceed from another Cause; but I must beg leave to mention one Thing, and that is, it may proceed from another Cause, as when in a Fever a Person's Stomach is taken away, then that Cause of Hunger comes not by Force, but because they can't eat; but the Consequence was such, it must proceed from her having lost her Appetite some Way or other. A Person may lose their Appetite by a Fever, or by Force. It is plain she had not eat for some Time.

Mr. Davy. If they had not told you that this Girl had been half-starved, and kept from Meat, Drink, and exposed to Cold, should you have concluded, upon your own Observations, that she had been so used?

Dr. Eaton. I should have concluded she had either by Distemper lost her Appetite, or by some other Accident.

Mr. Nares. Is it possible for one to live twenty-eight Days without any more Subsistence than she mentions?

Dr. Eaton. There is no Doubt of the Possibility of a Person's subsisting twenty-eight Days, as in this Case.

Mr. Nares. Did you observe the Defendant's Ear?

Dr. Eaton. There was a Disorder behind her Ear. After I had attended her seven or eight Days, the Surgeon was taken ill, and they had not mentioned that to me till then; upon which I looked upon it: It had inflamed her Face, and threatened it, something like a St. Anthony's Fire, and I ordered a Fomentation for it.

Mr. Nares. What might cause it to be so bad?

Dr. Eaton. I take it, her bad Habit of Body, concurring with this Sore upon her Ear, occasioned that like a St. Anthony's Fire upon her Face.

Mr. Moreton. We are now coming to Enfield-Wash.

Robert Beals sworn.

R. Beals. I was ill last Christmas was Twelvemonth. I attend Stamford-Hill Turnpike in Tottenham Road, towards Enfield, betwixt Tottenham and London: About the Middle of February I heard of this Story, about a Girl being forced away from her Friends near Moorfields, to a bad House at Enfield-Wash, and had been kept there a Month on a Pitcher of Water and some mouldy Crusts.

Mr. Moreton. How did you hear of it?

R. Beals. My little Children, about eight or nine Years old, brought the Account from School. I said,

I said, upon hearing this, I believed I was at the Gate when the poor Girl came by.

Mr. Moreton. Give an Account of what you saw.

R. Beals. About the Fore-end of January, I was standing at the Gate between Ten and Eleven, or near Eleven at Night; it was a very calm still Night; I heard something of a sobbing, crying Voice; it came from towards Newington, going towards Tottenham; at first I saw no body; I stood still; it came nearer me.

Mr. Moreton. How far off do you imagine it to be, when you heard the Sobbing at first?

R. Beals. It may be two or three hundred Yards. At last I perceived there were more than one. As they came near, I saw there were two Men, and a young Person, seemingly by her Voice. I had a large Candle burning; (the Stile is at the End of the Turnpike over the Way.) As soon as they got up to the Light, I saw them more plain. One Man was taller than the other. They went towards the Stile; one, the foremost, began to say, Come along, you Bitch, you are drunk; that was said when the Candle began to shine upon them. I put myself a little farther out without-side the Posts, that they might see me. The Woman seemed not willing to go along with them, by her crying and sobbing, but never spoke a Word. The Man behind made a Sort of a Laugh, and said, D—n the Bitch, how drunk she is! When they came up to the Stile, the tall one got over first, and the hindmost lifted her over by either one Leg or both Legs; she came down upright on the other Side; then she hung back, and fell on her Breech upon the Step, and cried bitterly. I thought she would go no farther. As I thought they could see me, I expected she would have said something to me, but she did not speak a Word. He before, plucked her up by the Hands at full Length, and said, D—n you, you Bitch, come along, you are drunk; the other came on the other Side of her, and they went away together; he laughed, and said, D—n the Bitch, how drunk she is! He that came over last jostled her along. I could see them some Way after they got over the Stile. One of them never let go her Hand all the Time I saw them.

Mr. Moreton. From what you heard, did you think that she was a Person in Distress?

R. Beals. I did; she burst out afresh with sobbing, going off. They were out of my Sight presently.

Mr. Moreton. Did you see her Face?

R. Beals. I can't say I did: I might see one Side of her Face.

Mr. Moreton. How was she dressed?

R. Beals. She had something of light-coloured Cloaths on.

Mr. Moreton. About what Size?

R. Beals. She did not seem to be tall; they both of them stood above her.

Mr. Moreton. Had the two Men Great Coats on?

R. Beals. I can't tell whether they had or not.

Mr. Moreton. What Reason have you to believe this was the Beginning of January?

R. Beals. I think it was, to the best of my Knowledge. I was not well then: I attended some Nights for my Partner, and fell ill about three Weeks after; and from that, when I came to recollect it, I thought it was about the Beginning of January.

Mr. Moreton. Do you know Moses Holloway?

R. Beals. I do.

Mr. Moreton. Was he well or ill then?

R. Beals. I don't know whether he was well or not. Sometimes I have done Duty for him, and he for me.

Recorder. Are you sure it was the Beginning of January?

R. Beals. I really believe it was.

Mr. Moreton. Why did you not attempt to give her your Assistance?

R. Beals. There were two Men with her, and we are fearful in our Business; except they ask us any Questions, we never meddle with such; and I was then alone.

Mr. Moreton. When did you give Information of what you heard and saw?

R. Beals. I never did till about six Weeks after. At first I thought it might have been one of the Men's Wives, or Sister, or some drunken Girl.

Mr. Moreton. Is it a common Thing to see a drunken Woman along with two Men?

R. Beals. I never saw one so particular as this.

Cross-examined.

Mr. Willes. When was you first taken ill?

R. Beals. It was in the Beginning of February. I was much troubled with the Rheumatism.

Mr. Willes. Do you always attend your Duty?

R. Beals. Sometimes I do, and sometimes I do not.

Mr. Willes. How far is your Turnpike from Moorfields?

R. Beals. It is about three Miles.

Mr. Willes. How far is it from Stamford-Hill Turnpike to Enfield-Wash?

R. Beals. It is seven Miles.

Mr. Willes. Is it possible for a Woman to walk to, or be carried by two Men from your Turnpike to Enfield-Wash in a quarter of an Hour?

R. Beals. No, Sir, it is not possible.

Mr. Willes. Was she walking on her Feet?

R. Beals. She was, and went pretty fast.

Mr. Willes. Did you imagine she was in a Fit of Convulsions?

R. Beals. No, Sir, I took her to be in Liquor.

Mr. Willes. Was you near enough for her to have seen you?

R. Beals. I was.

Mr. Willes. What did the Men say?

R. Beals. One said, Come along, you Bitch, you are drunk; and the other said, How drunk the Bitch is!

Mr. Willes. What was the Colour of her Gown?

R. Beals. It was a lightish one, it looked so.

Mr. Willes. Had she a Gown on?

R. Beals. I think she had, I durst to say she had, or else I should have taken more Notice of it.

Mr. Willes. Did she keep crying all the Time?

R. Beals. She did.

Mr. Willes. Was it Crying or Screaming?

R. Beals. It was only Sobbing and Crying.

Mr. Willes. Was she near enough that she might have cried out to you for Help?

R. Beals. Yes, that she was.

Mr. Willes. How came you not to tell this to any of your Neighbours before?

R. Beals. I did not, till I mentioned it to my Children innocently, not thinking to hear any thing more of it.

Mr.

Mr. Willes. Was it a dark or light Night?

R. Beals. It was a dark Night.

Mr. Willes. Could you distinguish whether she had a Hat or Bonnet on?

R. Beals. I can't say what, she had something on her Head.

Mr. Willes. Had she a Cap on her Head?

R. Beals. I can't say whether she had or not; I believe she had; she appeared to be a young Person, with light-coloured Cloaths on.

Mr. Willes. Had she an Apron on?

R. Beals. I don't remember whether she had or not; I rather believe she had.

Mr. Willes. Don't you keep Chriftnas?

R. Beals. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Willes. Don't you know New-year's Day?

R. Beals. We don't keep that.

Mr. Willes. Was you garnished out on this Day with Rosemary, or an Orange on a Skewer?

R. Beals. We don't do no such thing.

Mr. Willes. Is it not a Custom in your Parish, on New-year's Day, to wish one another a happy New-year?

R. Beals. Yes, Sir, it is.

Mr. Willes. Do you remember this Morning you had wished any of your Neighbours such?

R. Beals. No, I do not: Indeed I don't remember what Day it was.

Mr. Willes. Don't you remember any thing to distinguish this to be New-year's Day?

R. Beals. No, I do not; I made no Remark at all, being very ill at the Time.

Mr. Moreton. Do you remember at what Time you begun to attend the Turnpike?

R. Beals. Mine began on the Sunday in the Evening, when we come in our Turns; but we often come out of Turn.

Mr. Moreton. Was there any Moon?

R. Beals. I am sure there was no Moon, and a very still Night, and it rained a little.

Mr. Willes. How far may your Road be over?

R. Beals. It is about eight or ten Yards over.

Mr. Moreton. Did you see her go any Part of the Way without a Man holding her by the Hand?

R. Beals. No, I did not.

Mr. Moreton. My Lord, I only mention this as circumstantial: Grant me the Woman was at this Turnpike, I'll not call another Witness. We are now going to call a Person that saw a Person in the Situation that Canning returned in on the 29th.

Thomas Bennet sworn.

T. Bennet. I live at Enfield, at the ten-mile Stone: I was coming Home from my Shop near Mrs. Wells's House, on the 29th of January 53; between her House and the ten-mile Stone, between Four and Five in the Afternoon, there was a miserable poor Wretch to look to, in the Gravel-pit Gate-way, a five-acre Field near the ten-mile Stone; betwixt two little Houses, Richard Wright's and Widow Jenge's.

Mr. Nares. Describe her Drefs.

T. Bennet. She had neither Gown, nor Stays, nor Cap, nor Hat on, only a ragged dirty Thing, a Half-handkerchief like, and a Bit of something that reached down below her Waste, and no Apron on, and her Hands lay before her: She was coming in at that five-acre Field Gate-way.

Mr. Nares. How far is this beyond the ten-mile Stone?

T. Bennet. It is but the Breadth of the five-acre Field, and twenty or thirty Pole on the other Side, and about a quarter of a Mile on this Side Mrs. Wells's. She asked me the Way to London; I told her; she said she was affrighted by the Tanner's Dog. I bid her turn on the right Hand, and then on the left, and that would bring her to London. She was going to turn out of the great Road into the Foot-way.

Mr. Nares. Whereabouts is the Tanner's House?

T. Bennet. That is a little farther nearer London.

Mr. Nares. Which Way did she come?

T. Bennet. I can't tell which Way she came; I saw her first coming in there; but she went for London: If she had not spoke to me, she would have gone the wrong Way for London.

Mr. Nares. How far was she from the Tanner's House?

T. Bennet. She was about half a quarter of a Mile from it.

Mr. Nares. How came you to know this was the 29th of January?

T. Bennet. On the 30th of January, (which was the Day after I met her) a Man came to me about taking my Son Apprentice: I met him according to Appointment on the next Day, which was on a Wednesday, at Waltham-Cross, in order to put my Son out Apprentice, but we did not agree; and the Day after, which was on a Thursday, I came to London; and on the Friday, which was next Day, I met Mrs. Kimpston near the ten-mile Stone, coming by this very Gate-way; she told me what had happened at Mrs. Wells's; then I said, I will be hanged if I did not meet the young Woman near this Place, and told her the Way to London.

Cross-examined.

Mr. Gascoyne. Which Way was she going?

T. Bennet. Out of the high Road into the Fields.

Mr. Gascoyne. Where did you gather up the Word Half-handkerchief, upon your Oath?

T. Bennet. I never gathered it up at all; it is what I said at first, and always took it so.

Mr. Gascoyne. How do you know she had no Stays on?

T. Bennet. I saw her Shift Sleeves, and she had no Gown on.

Mr. Gascoyne. Which Way was she coming from?

T. Bennet. I can't tell that; she met me just coming in at the Gate-way.

Mr. Gascoyne. Which is nearest London, that Gate-way or the Tanner's House?

T. Bennet. The Tanner's House is.

Mr. Gascoyne. Which Way did you direct her?

T. Bennet. I directed her in the Foot-way by the Road-side.

Mr. Gascoyne. Where was you the Day the People were taken up?

T. Bennet. That very Day I was at Hodsdon, at Mr. Peirce's, to put my Son Apprentice to a Butcher.

David Dyer sworn.

D. Dyer. I live at Enfield-Wash, about a quarter of a Mile on this Side Mother Wells's, right against the ten-mile Stone. I was at my Door three Evenings before Mrs. Wells and her Family were taken up; I was chopping some rotten Bushes; about Four in the Evening I saw a poor distressed Creature come by me out of the common Field, from Mrs. Wells's-ward, for London.

Mr. Nares. Describe how she was dressed.

D. Dyer. Upon my Word I can't give any Account of her Cloathing; she had a Thing tied over her Head like a white Handkerchief, with her Hands before her; she walked very weakly. She was a shortish Sort of a Woman, and had a shortish Sort of a Thing about her, it did not come very low about her. I looked at her Face as she came by me: I said, Sweetheart, do you want a Husband? She did not speak to me.

Mr. Nares. How soon after this did you see her again?

D. Dyer. It was a considerable Time after that; when I saw her, I took her to be the same; when I saw her, I believed her to be the same.

Mr. Nares. Stand up, Elizabeth Canning. Look upon her, is that the same Person?

D. Dyer. I have seen her betwixt that Time and this; this is the young Woman, I think, that passed by me at the Gate-way; I do believe this is she.

Mr. Nares. Have you seen the Place she got out at, at Mrs. Wells's?

D. Dyer. I have many a Time:

Mr. Nares. Might she come that Way from her House, where you met with her?

D. Dyer. Yes, she might, from either the back or fore Part of her House, that Way.

Cross-Examination.

Mr. Davy. Was she a likely Girl in the Face?

D. Dyer. The Girl was a likely Girl enough to look at, but her Cloaths were not; she looked as if she wanted some Victuals.

Mr. Davy. You did not mistake her for a Blackmoor?

D. Dyer. No, I did not.

Mr. Davy. Was she not black in the Face?

D. Dyer. No, she was not.

Mr. Davy. Was she fresh-coloured?

D. Dyer. No, I did not see any red in her Face; she looked thin and weakly; she had not much Colour.

Mr. Davy. Did she look pale in the Face?

D. Dyer. She looked whitely.

Mr. Davy. Then she was not red?

D. Dyer. No.

Mr. Davy. Nor yet black?

D. Dyer. No.

Mr. Davy. Then she was white?

D. Dyer. Yes.

Mr. Davy. Was it pretty late at this Time?

D. Dyer. It was not dark; I saw her Face very plain.

Mr. Davy. Did you take particular Notice of her Face?

D. Dyer. I did, I took particular Notice of her, I looked at her very wishfully.

Mr. Davy. If she had had black Eyes, should you have seen them?

D. Dyer. Yes, I should.

Mr. Davy. If she had had a bruised Face, should you have seen it?

D. Dyer. I can't say whether she was, or was not bruised.

Mr. Davy. How low did that shortish Thing come down?

D. Dyer. I can't say.

Mr. Davy. Did she walk fast or slow?

D. Dyer. She walked very slowly.

Mr. Davy. Of what Colour were her Cloaths?

D. Dyer. I can't say as to that.

Mr. Davy. What was the Colour of that short Thing you mention?

D. Dyer. I can't say.

Mr. Davy. What the Colour of her Petticoat?

D. Dyer. I can't say.

Mr. Davy. Was it a red one?

D. Dyer. Indeed, I can't tell.

Mr. Davy. Did you see a coloured Handkerchief, tied over the white Handkerchief on her Head?

D. Dyer. I did not.

Mr. Davy. Are you sure the Prisoner is she?

D. Dyer. I am pretty sure; I am partly positive; I will not be punctual.

Mr. Davy. You say, she had her Hands before her?

D. Dyer. She had.

Mr. Davy. Had she a pretty Hand?

D. Dyer. I did not handle them; they were as other People's are.

Mr. Davy. A white Hand?

D. Dyer. Yes.

Mr. Davy. How soon after this did you see her again?

D. Dyer. I can't tell; it was after I heard there had been People taken up at Mother Wells's, for confining such a Girl; then I spoke of this.

Recorder. How do you live?

D. Dyer. I get my Living by my daily Labour.

Mary Cobb sworn.

M. Cobb. I live in Silver-Street, at Edmonton; I was going Home from Tanners-End; I was in Ducks-Fields, just at the setting-in of Day-light (as much as I can remember) on the 29th of January. On a Monday Night, I met a Person; she had a Handkerchief pinned over her Head, it almost hid her Face; she had a black Petticoat, and an old Bed-gown on; it was either a quilted Thing, or it was a printed or flowered Thing; the Flowers seemed to be faded. She wrapped her Arms in it. The first Sight I had of her, she was getting over a Stile, and looked at me, and made a Slip, but did not fall: She came up directly towards me, and looked at me, and I at her: I was afraid, and moved slowly. I turned about, as she came up to me, and looked at her: I thought she would have asked me Charity; I put my Hand in my Pocket, and had no Half-pence. I had a Mind to have spoke to her; but having nothing to give her, I did not. I perceived her to have a young Face. She appeared to be in a very wretched, miserable Condition, as ever I saw a Person in all my Life. She walked creeping along. I could not tell what to make of it, whether she was afraid of me, or what.

Mr. Williams. You say, you had a Mind to have spoke to her; what would you have said?

M. Cobb. I wanted to ask her, why she walked so?

Mr. Williams. How do you recollect it was the 29th of January?

M. Cobb. When I heard the Affair, it came into my Head, that this was the Person that came down to Justice Tasbmaker's; then I heard it was on a Thursday Night she got away, and I thought from that, it was impossible; but when it came to be published in the Papers, I found it to be on the same Day of the Month, by looking back.

Mr. Williams.

Mr. Williams. What Size did she appear to be?

M. Cobb. Much about a Head shorter than myself.

Mr. Williams. Have you ever seen her since?

M. Cobb. No, I have not.

Mr. Williams. Look at Elizabeth Canning now, there she stands.

M. Cobb. The Size answers: I firmly believe this to be the same Person, by the Tip of her Nose; that bears some Resemblance to the Person I saw.

Mr. Williams. Have you any Reason to believe this is not she?

M. Cobb. No, I have not.

Cross-examined.

Mr. Willes. How many Fields are there, called Ducks-Fields?

M. Cobb. There are three of them.

Mr. Willes. How far is that Part of the Foot-way, where you met this strange Creature, from the great Road?

M. Cobb. There is nothing but a Ditch parts it.

Mr. Willes. What Time does the Day shut in on the 29th of January?

M. Cobb. I can't say I have made Remarks on that.

Mr. Willes. Where was you going to?

M. Cobb. To my own House.

Mr. Willes. What Time was it when you came Home?

M. Cobb. Then the Children had lighted a Candle.

Mr. Willes. Where had you been?

M. Cobb. I had been at Tanners-End to Mrs. Carter's House, to carry Home a Child's Vest that I had made.

Mr. Willes. What Time did you set out from Home?

M. Cobb. About Three in the Evening.

Mr. Willes. How far is your House from Mrs. Carter's?

M. Cobb. About a Mile.

Mr. Willes. How long did you stay at Mrs. Carter's?

M. Cobb. There was no body at Home there, and I left my Errand, and I never stopped or stayed, but came away.

Mr. Willes. Did you call any where coming back?

M. Cobb. No. I had another Place to go to, and I was afraid of being too late; so did not go, but returned Home. I met several People, and stopped a little on the Return.

Mr. Willes. How long in all might you be detained, after you went from Mrs. Carter's?

M. Cobb. It might be a quarter of an Hour.

Mr. Willes. How many Times might you stop?

M. Cobb. I am in a public Way of Business, and met several People; I think I stopped three or four Times.

Mr. Willes. From the Time you left Mrs. Carter's House, to the Time you met this Girl, how long might that be?

M. Cobb. It might be about a quarter of an Hour.

Mr. Willes. Then you met this Woman at three quarters after Three o'Clock?

M. Cobb. It was later than that.

Mr. Willes. How long might you be in going from your own House to Mrs. Carter's?

M. Cobb. I do think, by the Length of the Way, I might be about a quarter of an Hour in going.

Mr. Willes. Was you stopped in going?

M. Cobb. I don't remember I was.

Mr. Willes. Was you above an Hour from your own House, before you met this Girl?

M. Cobb. Yes, Sir, to be sure, I was about two Hours.

Mr. Willes. How far from your own House did you meet her?

M. Cobb. It was about a quarter of a Mile from it.

Mr. Willes. Tell me how you account for having spent two Hours in only going a Mile and three Quarters.

M. Cobb. I proposed to be at Home in two Hours, and I exceeded it about a quarter of an Hour. I really think it was about Five o'Clock.

Mr. Willes. Where is your House?

M. Cobb. In Church-Street, Edmonton; but I met her between the five and six-mile Stones from London. The six-mile Stone stands near the Nether Bell; but the House I lived at then, was beyond the seven-mile Stone.

Mr. Willes. Was her Face brown or white?

M. Cobb. I observed the Tip of her Nose; it was a young Face; she looked very dismal and black, in a dirty Way.

Mr. Willes. Did you see her Hands?

M. Cobb. I did not; they were wrapped up.

Mr. Willes. Did no Words pass?

M. Cobb. I did not speak a Word to her, or she to me. I thought she wanted Charity by her deplorable Condition.

Mr. Willes. What are you?

M. Cobb. I am a Widow.

Mr. Willes. Any Family?

M. Cobb. The eldest of my Children is at Home with me; she is in the twelfth Year of her Age.

Mr. Willes. When did you first mention meeting such a Creature?

M. Cobb. That very Night I heard of the Affair of Elizabeth Canning's Confinement; which was the Friday Night following.

Mr. Willes. Who told you of it?

M. Cobb. I can't tell who; but several of my Neighbours did.

Mr. Willes. Who first spoke to you to come here to be an Evidence?

M. Cobb. Justice Tasbmaker did; that was after the Trial of Squires.

Mr. Willes. How long after that?

M. Cobb. I can't tell; it was the Week after; but what Day of the Week, I know not.

Mr. Willes. In what Manner did he apply to you?

M. Cobb. He came to my House, and asked me, if I met such a Person? I told him, as I have told you before.

Mr. Willes. Did he describe any Person to you?

M. Cobb. No, none at all, any more than it was talked on. I told him, I could not take an Oath to swear to her.

Mr. Willes. When was you subpoena'd?

M. Cobb. On Monday was a Fortnight.

Mr. Willes. Who served you with it?

M. Cobb. I don't know the Gentleman; he is pretty much pitted with the Small-pox.

Mr. Willes. Was you ever examined on your Oath before?

M. Cobb. No, I never was.

Mr. Willes.

Mr. Willes. How long have you been in Town?

M. Cobb. Ever since Monday Morning.

Mr. Nares. Can you recollect what Time it was when you met this Girl?

M. Cobb. I know it was pretty near dusk.

Mr. Nares. What is your Business?

M. Cobb. I am a Mantua-maker.

Mr. Nares. How many Children have you?

M. Cobb. I have but two at Home with me; I maintain them with my own Labour.

Mr. Nares. My Lord, we have closed the Account of a Person's being seen going and coming. We shall next begin our Defence to the alibi of Mary Squires.

MONDAY the 6th of May.

(Here Mary Squires, George her Son, and Lucy and Mary her two Daughters, were brought into Court, to be seen by the Witnesses as they were called.)

William Howard sworn.

Mr. Nares. Do you know Mr. Edward Aldridge?

W. Howard. I do.

Mr. Nares. Do you remember any thing about his coming down to you about Elizabeth Canning?

W. Howard. The two Edward Aldridges came both together twice; the first Time of their coming, I can't say positively to the Day, it was about three or four Days after the People were taken up at Mrs. Wells's, as near as I can remember.

Mr. Nares. What are these two Edward Aldridges?

W. Howard. One of them is a Silversmith in Foster-Lane; the other is my Neighbour.

Q. from a Juryman. What is your Employment?

W. Howard. I live upon a small Fortune, and a little Employment under the Government.

Mr. Nares. What Account did they come upon?

W. Howard. They brought me a printed Case of Elizabeth Canning, and recommended a Contribution on her Behalf.

Mr. Nares. Whether this was Edward Aldridge of Foster-Lane?

W. Howard. Yes; it was, and the other with him. The second Time of coming was about six or seven Days after the first.

Mr. Nares. Did he say, he was dissatisfied with the Story, or that he believed it?

W. Howard. There was not a Syllable of his Disbelief; but I understood him, as though it was a Thing he believed. The printed Case they brought each Time of coming; there were two initial Letters at the Bottom of it, and an Account that Virtue Hall had impeached. We were talking about the Girl's being confined: I said, What do you think of it? He said, There was one Thing, I think, the Girl is not clear in, and that is the Description of the Room.

Recorder. What did he say upon the whole?

W. Howard. He said, he thought the Girl had been used ill, and he did believe she was there; but he was not quite clear in her Description of the Room.

Mr. Nares. In both the Times, did he express any Dissatisfaction, or could you understand him, that he thought the Girl was an Impostor?

W. Howard. He said nothing at all in Contradiction to the Girl.

Cross-examined.

Mr. Willes. Where do you live?

W. Howard. I live right against Wells's House.

Mr. Willes. Tell us what particular Words the Silversmith made use of to recommend a Contribution to you.

W. Howard. I don't remember any more than what I said.

Mr. Willes. Then the only Means was, by bringing a printed Case?

W. Howard. And the little Conversation we had about it.

Mr. Willes. The first Time you saw him, did he mention any Disbelief of her Story?

W. Howard. No, Sir.

Mr. Willes. Could you collect, he either believed or disbelieved her Story?

W. Howard. Every thing that passed the first Time was in Favour of the Girl.

Mr. Willes. But it was not so the second?

W. Howard. There was that single Objection made.

Mr. Willes. How far is your House from Mother Wells's?

W. Howard. About fifty or sixty Yards.

Mr. Willes. Did you live at Enfield during the Month of January that Year?

W. Howard. I did; and have seen all Wells's Family pass and repass about their private Affairs.

Mr. Willes. What Time in the Month of January did you first see Squires's Family about the House?

W. Howard. Really, I used to take but very little Regard of any thing in Mrs. Wells's House. I can't recollect the Time positively; if I mention a Time, I must guess at it.

Mr. Willes. Look at this black Pitcher; do you know it?

W. Howard. I know nothing of it. I can't swear particularly to a broken Pitcher.

Mr. Willes. Have you seen them carry such a black Jug as that to your Pump?

W. Howard. I can't recollect any such Thing; I give all my Neighbours Privilege to come for Water.

Mr. Nares. What Character does Mrs. Wells's House bear?

W. Howard. As bad as can be.

Recorder. Do you remember your first Time of seeing the Gypsies?

W. Howard. I never used to take Notice of them.

Mr. Just. Clive. Did you ever know there were Gypsies there, before the Time you saw them?

W. Howard. I never did. I know there used to be bad People.

Mrs. Howard sworn.

Mrs. Howard. The last Evidence is my Husband. I know the two Aldridges; one lives in London, the other by us.

Mr. Nares. When did you see them both at your House?

Mrs. Howard. The first Time that I call to Mind was, I believe, on the Saturday or Monday after Wells and the People were taken up. I remember, I came down Stairs, and they were both in the Parlour. The Country Aldridge said, they were come to us; the London Aldridge said, it was with a Desire that I and my Husband would contribute. I asked him, whether or no he was of Opinion, Opinion, the Girl had been used as she had said? He asked the Country Aldridge, whether he had any of the Cases? and said, he would shew me one; then I might judge better: He took it out of his Pocket, and the Country Aldridge gave it to me.

Mr. Nares. Did he say any thing to you, from which you could conclude, that he believed or disbelieved her Story?

Mrs. Howard. When he gave it me in my Hand, I asked Mr. Aldridge, what he thought of it? The Answer he made, was, as sure as he was alive, he was assured the Girl had been used as she had said in the Case; and that Mr. Say printed them gratis for the Use of the Girl, and he should have more to give away.

Mr. Nares. Which Aldridge was this?

Mrs. Howard. This was the London Aldridge.

Mr. Nares. Was this all the Conversation?

Mrs. Howard. He was with me almost half an Hour; and he recommended it to me and my Husband to subscribe, and desired me to get my Friends to do the same: I said, my Acquaintance were chiefly in London.

Mr. Nares. When did he come again?

Mrs. Howard. Within eight or ten Days after he came again, and brought me another printed Case; and there was wrote at Bottom, that Virtue Hall had made an Information. He said, it was to raise Money for the Girl; and if we did not assist; the Gentlemen in London would not think we wanted to get rid of the bad Company we had about us.

Mr. Nares. What did he say about the Girl's being in the Room?

Mrs. Howard. Upon my Word, I don't remember he mentioned any thing to me about it then. I never sent for him, or spoke to him, till he came to me in my own Parlour.

Mr. Nares. Look at the Woman there, (meaning Mary Squires;) do you know her?

Mrs. Howard. That is the Woman, I think, I have seen pass and repass; but never was nigh her; to speak to her.

Mr. Nares. When was the first Time you saw her, can you recollect?

Mrs. Howard. The first Time, to be positive, was the Sunday was Se'nnight before she was taken up. I saw her, the Son, and two Daughters, at Mrs. Wells's Door: I do think they are the same. It is a great while since; there may be an Alteration; her Daughter Mary used to come to our Pump for Water: The first Time I took Notice of them, my Servants told me they were Gypsies; then I bid them not to unbolt the Door.

Recorder. The Sunday was Se'nnight before they were taken up was the 21st of January.

Mr. Just. Clive. How do you know it was the Sunday was Se'nnight before?

Mrs. Howard. I'll tell your Lordship why I know it was that Day; because on the Friday my Servant told me she was there; and she called me out, when the Girl was taking some Linen off the Hedges at Wells's; she was in a brown stuff Gown and a speckled Hat; and when she came up to the Frame of my Pump on the Saturday, she turned about and made me a Curtsey, and I bowed to her as she went out at the Gate: This was the Saturday before the Sunday of my first seeing the old Woman, and Son, and two Daughters.

Recorder. What Time of the Sunday was it you saw them?

VOL. X.

Mrs. Howard. It was in the Afternoon: I was told they were her Son and two Daughters, and I looked wishfully at them.

Mr. Nares. Did you see the old Woman after this?

Mrs. Howard. I did; I saw her put into the Cart after she was taken up.

Mr. Nares. When you saw her put into the Cart, so soon after you saw them at the Door, did you believe it to be the same Person you saw at the Door?

Mrs. Howard. Yes, I did believe it then.

Mr. Nares. You say, you was told there were Gypsies there before; did you ever see Gypsies there before that Time?

Mrs. Howard. No, not to my Knowledge. That was the Reason I cautioned my Servants to have nothing to say to them; but let them come, as the rest of the Neighbours, for Water; for we refuse none, unless they give Offence: But I cautioned my Servants not to let her into the House.

Cross-examined.

Mr. Willes. How far might they be off at the Time you saw them first?

Mrs. Howard. As nigh as I can guess, not above fifty or sixty Yards: I was within my own Gate; which faces it exactly.

Mr. Willes. Are you short-sighted?

Mrs. Howard. Yes, I am.

Mr. Willes. When did you first see one of the Gypsey's Girls come for Water to your Pump?

Mrs. Howard. It was that Saturday Morning.

Mr. Willes. Which Daughter was it?

Mrs. Howard. I do think it was Mary.

Mr. Willes. Which Parish-Church did you go to on the Sunday Morning?

Mrs. Howard. We go to Enfield Church.

Mr. Willes. Have you Service all Days of the Week?

Mrs. Howard. I believe we have; but I am not able to walk so far.

Mr. Willes. Do you keep King Charles's Martyrdom?

Mrs. Howard. No; but I keep my Son's Birthday; as the Stile is altered, that comes to be the 29th of January.

Mr. Willes. Was that the Monday immediately after the Sunday you saw her; or not?

Mrs. Howard. No; it was the Monday was Se'nnight:

Mr. Willes. What did the Daughter fetch the Water in?

Mrs. Howard. I have seen her several Times at the Pump in that Time; and I have seen them come with a Pail and a large Pitcher: One Time in particular she was met by another, and they took it and carried it for her: One Morning I saw her with a very little black Pitcher.

Mr. Willes. Can you speak of its being broke about the Neck?

Mrs. Howard. I don't know.

Mr. Willes. Are you a Church-woman or a Dissenter?

Mrs. Howard. I am a Church-woman.

Mr. Nares. How near was you to the Girl when you observed her?

Mrs. Howard. As near as I am to that Gentleman, (pointing to a Person about three or four Yards off.)

Mr. Nares. Then you was near enough to distinguish the Girl?

Mrs. Howard. I was. She made me a Curtsey, and looked me full in the Face, and I her: I think she looked fatter in the Face than she does now.

Mr. Nares. Did you think it was a Gypsey's Face?

Mrs. Howard. I thought as other People did.

Mr. Nares. Was you near enough to know Mary Squires as she passed and repassed?

Mrs. Howard. Yes, I was. She was in the Foot-way, and I within my Gate.

Mr. Nares. From what you observed of her then, do you think her to be the same Person?

Mrs. Howard. I do; but can't be positive.

Recorder. Are you positive?

Mrs. Howard. No, I am not: I never conversed with her, or she with me.

Recorder. Was your Husband with you that Sunday?

Mrs. Howard. No, he was not; he was gone to Church.

Recorder. Did you tell him, when he came from Church?

Mrs. Howard. I think I did.

Recorder. Can you be positive to your Sight forty or fifty Yards off.

Mrs. Howard. I was more positive when I saw her pass and repass, than I was on that Sunday.

Recorder. Can you be particular to the Days you saw her pass and repass?

Mrs. Howard. No; I can't, my Lord.

William Headland sworn.

Mr. Nares. Where did you live last Christmas was Twelve-month?

W. Headland. I can't really say where I was then: I believe I was at Enfield, because my Father lives there.

Mr. Nares. How old are you?

W. Headland. I was twenty Years of Age the 30th of last Month.

Mr. Nares. Do you remember being at your Father's about a Year and a half ago?

W. Headland. I know I was there when I came out of Place: I had not been in Place these two Years till last Christmas: I did live at Henbam-Hall, with Henry Headland, my Cousin; that is thirty-eight Miles from London.

Mr. Nares. During the Time you was there, was there any Talk about Canning and the Gypsey?

W. Headland. Yes; that was in last January was Twelve-month: I remember Wells being taken up; I was at Home then.

Mr. Nares. How far is your Father's from Mrs. Wells's House?

W. Headland. There is only a Lane and two Fields part us.

Mr. Nares. Do you know the Window where it is supposed the Girl got out at? What does that Window front?

W. Headland. It is by the Corner of the Lane; you may see into the Road.

Mr. Nares. Where does the other Side look to?

W. Headland. There is only a little Window, which looks into the Field.

Mr. Nares. Did you find any Thing, and when, near that Place?

W. Headland. One Day I was going to the Shop, and there were a Parcel of People come about Wells's House: I went there, and found a Piece of Lead, just at the Corner of the Window that joins to the House; it looked as if it came out of some Window.

Mr. Nares. How near to the House did you take it up?

W. Headland. Within a Yard, or thereabouts, under the Window that fronts the Road: I doubled it up as soon as I found it, because I thought I would carry it Home.

Mr. Nares. What made you take such Notice of it?

W. Headland. Because it was bloody; and I heard Bet Canning had torn her Ear.

Mr. Nares. For God's sake tell me the true Reason, upon Oath, why you took Notice of that Lead.

W. Headland. Because I heard the young Woman had torn her Ear against the Casement, or something.

Mr. Nares. Was it bloody when you picked it up?

W. Headland. It was all bloody; I believe it was Blood. I carried it Home, and gave it to my Mother.

Mr. Nares. Did you tell your Mother why you brought it Home?

W. Headland. I did.

Recorder. When did you hear Elizabeth Canning had torn her Ear?

W. Headland. I do not know.

Recorder. What Day did you pick up this Lead?

W. Headland. I cannot tell.

Mr. Nares. Whether ever you saw Mary Squires the Gypsey?

W. Headland. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Nares. Look about the Court:

W. Headland. That is the Woman, (pointing to her;) I know her from a thousand.

Mr. Nares. Did you see that Gypsey Woman at any Time before you took up the Lead?

W. Headland. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Nares. How long before?

W. Headland. Indeed I cannot say how long before; but I saw her on the 9th of January, I know.

Mr. Nares. Why do you think it was the 9th of January?

W. Headland. Because it was on a Tuesday, Waltham Market-day.

Mr. Nares. Had you ever seen her before?

W. Headland. That was the first Day.

Mr. Nares. Where did you see her?

W. Headland. I saw her under Mr. Loomworth Dane's back Wall, telling a young Man his Fortune.

Mr. Nares. Where does Mr. Dane live?

W. Headland. At the Sign of the Bell, at Enfield Highway. A young Man came from a Coachman; he was in a silver-laced Hat; I stood looking at her; she said, Go along, Boy, left your Master should want you. I stood leaning against a Tree, and then went a little farther; and could not hear what they said.

Mr. Nares. How could you tell she was telling his Fortune?

W. Headland. Because I saw her lay hold of his Hand.

Mr. Nares. Are you sure it was so early in January as the 9th?

W. Headland. I am.

Mr. Nares. Did you see her any Day after?

W. Headland. Yes, I saw her on the 12th, in Mrs. Wells's House: I went there to carry two Pails

Pails of Water; there were the Gypsey's two Daughters; one of them had a Pair of Pumps on, and was buckling them up.

Mr. Nares. Look about the Court, and see if you see her.

W. Headland. That is the Girl, (pointing to Mary Squires;) I am sure it is one: If you were in your brown camblet Gown, I should know you better; I then could swear to it.

Mr. Nares. Do you believe this is her?

W. Headland. I do really believe it is.

Mr. Nares. What did you carry that Water for?

W. Headland. It was two Pails of Wash for a Sow that was big with Pigs.

Mr. Nares. Where did you carry it from?

W. Headland. From my Mother's.

Mr. Nares. How do you know it to be the 12th?

W. Headland. Because it is Epping Market-day.

Mr. Nares. What Day of the Week is that on?

W. Headland. It is on a Friday.

Mr. Nares. Did you see her any Time after this?

W. Headland. Yes; I was in Madam Johnson's Walk, and saw her coming down a Field. I spoke to her, and said, You are ganging Home, it is very cold. She said, So it is.

Mr. Nares. Did you see her after that?

W. Headland. Yes; I saw her getting into the Cart, when she was taken up.

Mr. Nares. Was she the first or last that got into the Cart?

W. Headland. She was the first, I believe, but I am not sure.

Mr. Nares. Was you in Court when Mrs. Howard was examined?

W. Headland. No, Sir.

Mr. Nares. From what you observed of her before, and from what you observed since, are you sure this is the same Person?

W. Headland. I am sure it is the same.

Cross-examined.

Mr. Willes. What Business is your Father?

W. Headland. He is a Gardener.

Mr. Willes. Where had you lived, before you came Home to your Father, before January was a Twelve-month?

W. Headland. I worked at several Farm-houses.

Mr. Just. Clive. Had you been a hired Servant, or worked by the Day?

W. Headland. I worked with one Man a matter of two Years.

Mr. Just. Clive. Before you came Home to your Father, who did you work with then?

W. Headland. I cannot tell indeed; I might be out of Place, for what I know.

Mr. Willes. What Time of the Year is Christmas in? — What Month is it in?

W. Headland. I do not know what Month in particular?

Mr. Just. Clive. There are twelve Months; pick out which Christmas is in.

W. Headland. Indeed, I cannot rightly say what Month it is in?

Mr. Willes. How many Days are there in a Week?

W. Headland. There are seven, if you put Sunday in.

Mr. Willes. What, is not Sunday one of your Days?

W. Headland. Yes; but some People make but six Days in the Week.

Mr. Willes. Who are they?

W. Headland. The Jews do not.

Mr. Nares. You say you worked with one Man two Years, before you came Home to your Father; how long did you live in one Place together?

W. Headland. I have lived half a Year, and three quarters of a Year together.

Mr. Nares. Tell who you lived with three quarters of a Year.

W. Headland. I cannot rightly tell.

Mr. Nares. Can you tell any Master you lived with two Years?

W. Headland. I worked for one Mr. Long for half a Year together; he lives at Freezy-Water. I worked for Farmer Allen, at Enfield Highway, right against the Black Horse; I have worked many Times for him.

Mr. Just. Clive. How long together?

W. Headland. It might be a quarter of a Year together, or less.

Mr. Nares. Who did you work with first?

W. Headland. Mr. Allen.

Mr. Nares. Did you ever live as a hired Servant in a Family with any body?

W. Headland. Yes; I lived in Featherstone-Street, at Squire Feast's Brew-house, with one Mr. King, ten or eleven Weeks.

Mr. Nares. Did this Master you lived with keep Christmas?

W. Headland. I reckon he does.

Mr. Nares. Cannot you tell what Month Christmas is in?

W. Headland. I can hardly tell.

Mr. Nares. Tell as well as you can.

W. Headland. I cannot tell.

Mr. Nares. Is it in Winter or Summer?

W. Headland. It is in Winter.

Mr. Nares. Is it before or after January?

W. Headland. I cannot tell.

Q. from a Juryman. Can you read and write?

W. Headland. I can read and write too, a little.

Mr. Just. Clive. Where did you find this Lead?

W. Headland. I found it at the End of the Wall, by the Window fronting the Road.

Mr. Just. Clive. What Sort of a Bit of Lead was it?

W. Headland. It was a Piece of Window Lead.

Lord-Mayor. Explain what you mean by Window Lead.

W. Headland. It was such as they put the Glass into.

Mr. Just. Clive. Was it one single Piece?

W. Headland. No; there were two or three Pieces of it, all joined together; so I bent it together, and put it into my Pocket, and gave it my Mother.

Mr. Just. Clive. What did you say to her, at the Time you gave it her?

W. Headland. I bid her take it, because, they say, Bet Canning had tore her Ear at the Window; but it is lost since.

Mr. Willes. How long before Squires was taken up, and put into the Cart, was it that you first saw her?

W. Headland. She was taken up on a Thursday, and if she had stayed till Friday, it would have been three Weeks.

Q. from a Juryman. Whether you shewed this Piece of Lead to any body after you picked it up, besides your Mother?

W. Headland. No, I shewed it to no body.

Elizabeth

Elizabeth Headland sworn.

Mr. Nares. Did your Son, at any Time, bring any thing Home to you, which he said he found?

E. Headland. Yes, Sir, it was a Piece of Window Lead; there was a Piece of Solder on it. It was a small Time after the People were taken up.

Mr. Nares. What Account did he give you of it?

E. Headland. I looked at it; there was some Blood upon it; he said, he picked it up a little Way off from Mrs. Wells's Window, where it was supposed the Girl got out at; I wrapped it up in a Piece of Paper, and laid it on a Shelf.

Mr. Nares. How came it not to be here?

E. Headland. I brought it to London with me at Michaelmas Time, and carried it down again before Christmas; I laid it in a Table-drawer; and when I went to look for it last Friday was a Week, I could not find it, but I found the Piece of Paper it was wrapped in. This is really Truth.

Cross-examined.

Mr. Willes. Was it two or three Days after they were taken up?

E. Headland. Indeed, I cannot tell.

Mr. Willes. Was it the Day they were taken up?

E. Headland. No, it was not; it was some Time after.

Mr. Willes. Was the Blood wet or dry upon the Lead?

E. Headland. It was dry.

Mr. Willes. This Son of yours, how has he spent his Time, where has he lived? He says, he is twenty-one Years of Age.

E. Headland. He is. He has lived in Service some Part of his Time, and sometimes he has lived at Home; he has gone to drive Plough, and to Day-labouring Work.

Mr. Willes. Has he been a dutiful Sort of a Boy, or one that you can say much in his Favour?

E. Headland. I have no Occasion to give the Boy an ill Word.

Mr. Just. Clive. When did he come Home from Service?

E. Headland. He has not been out these three Years, till within this half-year; he has been at Home a Year and half, I believe; but used to be out at Hay-making, and Harvest-work.

Mr. Just. Clive. How long had he lived at Home with you, before the People were taken up at Wells's?

E. Headland. He had been at Home all the Winter long, and, I believe, from the Michaelmas before.

Mr. Just. Clive. Where was the last hired Service he was in, before January was Twelve-month?

E. Headland. Upon my Word, I can't tell; he was two Years ago with a Gentleman at Hackney; but he did not live there above two Months.

Samuel Story sworn.

Mr. Nares. Are you of any Business?

S. Story. I live upon my Fortune, at Waltham-Abbey, in Essex.

Mr. Nares. Look at that old Woman, (meaning Mary Squires;) Did you ever see her before?

S. Story. I have divers Times: That is the Gypsey. I do not know her by Name.

Mr. Nares. Tell us, when you think you first saw her?

S. Story. I have seen her several Times at a House in White-Webbs-Lane, that is since pulled down, going to the Chace; that used to be my constant Road to ride out, two or three Times a Week. Then I lived in Turkey-Street, Enfield-Wash. I have been moved from thence about a Year and half. I have seen her both before and since I removed. The last Time I saw her was on the 23d of December 1752, except the Time I saw her in Newgate.

Mr. Nares. Where did you see her?

S. Story. She was standing within the Door of Mrs. Wells's House.

Mr. Nares. What Reason have you to think it was on that Day?

S. Story. It was the Saturday before Christmas Day; a very fine frosty Morning; which induced me to take a Walk to see Mr. Howard, who lives directly over-against Mrs. Wells's. I walked the Horse-pad, because it was better beaten; and my Feet are a little tender. When I came over-against Mrs. Wells's House; I saw the Gypsey at the Door. Curiosity led me a little out of the Path, to see if it was the same Gypsey I had seen in the House in White-Webbs-Lane.

Mr. Nares. Did you go close to her?

S. Story. Not very close; I might go, perhaps, within ten Yards of her.

Mr. Nares. Was you so near her, as to form any Judgment whether it was the same Person?

S. Story. I was; I was certain it was the same Person.

Mr. Nares. Did you see her after that?

S. Story. No; I never saw her afterwards, till I saw her in Newgate, about the 14th or 15th of March.

Recorder. Upon the Oath you have taken, is this the same Person?

S. Story. Upon my Oath, it is. When I came to see her in Newgate, it was on a Friday. I was denied Admittance then, but I went to Alderman Glynn, and begged the Favour of an Order; and then I saw her.

Mr. Nares. Who denied you?

S. Story. The Keeper did.

Mr. Nares. Was you then satisfied it was the same Woman?

S. Story. I was then, and am now, well satisfied, that this is the same Woman.

Mr. Nares. Have you any other Reason, so as to be certain it was the 23d of December you saw her?

S. Story. I have. I observed it was a hard Frost in the Morning; and the Weather altered about Noon to Sleet and Rain, by which it was very wet, and the Wind and Weather drove on my right Side, as I was going Home; and I being subject to the Rheumatism, was taken with it; and the St. Anthony's Fire seized me about the Monday or Tuesday following; then I sent for an Apothecary, and he attended me afterwards. So I am very positive as to the Day, for I never went out after that Saturday, when I came Home, for near two Months after.

Cross-examined.

Mr. Willes. Did you find Mr. Howard at Home?

S. Story. I did.

Mr. Willes. How long did you stay there?

S. Story. I believe I might stay best Part of an Hour there.

Mr. Willes. While you was there, did you hear there were any Gypsies at that Time there?

S. Story.

S. Story. No; we had no Talk about them, as I remember.

Mr. Willes. Was it in your going there, or Return, that you saw her?

S. Story. It was in my going there.

Mr. Willes. Was she standing without the Door, or within?

S. Story. She was just within, at the Threshold of the Door.

Mr. Willes. Did you look fronting or side-ways?

S. Story. The Door is opposite to Mr. Howard's. I went a little farther out of my Way, to see whether it was the same Gypsey that I had seen in White-Webbs-Lane.

Mr. Willes. How long was it before this, that you had seen her before?

S. Story. I saw her when I lived in Turkey-Street, and I moved from thence on the Michaelmas before. I had seen her at Times for three Years together.

Mr. Willes. Can you name any particular Time before this?

S. Story. I remember I had seen her in the Spring of the Year.

Mr. Willes. Did you ever converse with her?

S. Story. No, I never did, Sir.

Mr. Willes. Was you ever in the same Room with her?

S. Story. No.

Mr. Willes. At this Time you went a little out of your Way, did you say any thing to her, or she to you?

S. Story. I did not.

Mr. Willes. What did she appear to be doing?

S. Story. Nothing at all.

Mr. Willes. Had she a Pipe in her Mouth?

S. Story. No, she had not. She had a dirty Clout or Handkerchief over her Head.

Mr. Willes. Who used to be with her in White-Webbs-Lane?

S. Story. There used to be two younger Women with her at Times, which, I have heard since, are her Daughters.

Mr. Willes. Was there a Man?

S. Story. Yes, there was.

Mr. Willes. At this Time, at Wells's, did you see any of these young People with her?

S. Story. I did see a young Girl with her.

Mr. Willes. Look at these two young People, and see whether either of these are them.

S. Story. I cannot swear to their Faces. The Girl's Back was towards me then, talking to the old Woman; she stood without the House. I cannot swear to the Girl.

Mr. Willes. When was it you first recollected these Circumstances of having seen her there?

S. Story. In my Illness the Apothecary told me what had happened at Mrs. Wells's House.

Mr. Willes. Can you tell what Day it was?

S. Story. That I cannot, to two or three Days; it was after they were taken up.

Mr. Nares. It comes out now, which I did not know before, that you had seen this Woman two or three Years before that.

S. Story. I had, and took Notice of them as a Parcel of Gypsies. They used to have two Asses and a little Horse; I have seen the Horse grazing in White-Webbs-Lane, as I have rode through there; and the two Asses, I have met with them on the Road, and the two young Women and a Man; but their Dress is so altered now, that I could not know them. They used to have a perfect Gypsey's Dress, with Blankets over their Shoulders, and Handkerchiefs over their Heads, (you might see their black Locks through them,) following the two Asses. The last Time I met them, I believe, might be at the Beginning of December, just against Durant's House.

Mr. Nares. I believe, you was rather too ill to go out, to be a Witness when the Trial of Squires came on?

S. Story. I was; I thought I should have died.

Recorder. Was you ever of any Business?

S. Story. I was a Finisher of Clock Dial-plates.

Recorder. Was you acquainted with Mr. Lyon before?

S. Story. I have seen him before at Newington-Green; I rented a House that he built.

William Smith sworn.

Mr. Nares. Where do you live?

W. Smith. I live in Ranton-Row, at Enfield; I am a Farmer.

Mr. Nares. What do you rent per Year?

W. Smith. An hundred and five Pounds per Year, and have these twenty Years; it belongs to the Duke of Portland.

Mr. Nares. Look, if you see Mary Squires in Court.

W. Smith. Yes, Sir; I see her.

Mr. Nares. Did you ever see her before?

W. Smith. Yes, I have.

Mr. Nares. Tell us where you remember to have seen her about a Year and a half ago.

W. Smith. I saw her in my Cow-house on the 15th of December 1752.

Mr. Nares. Had she been about the Country some Time?

W. Smith. She had a pretty while; I saw her several Times.

Mr. Nares. Have you seen her before that Time?

W. Smith. I have.

Mr. Nares. How came she in your Cow-house?

W. Smith. They came to ask for Lodgings; I was not at Home.

Mr. Nares. Who do you mean by They?

W. Smith. The Company that was with her.

Mr. Nares. Who did they ask?

W. Smith. My Housekeeper; her Name is Swain.

Mr. Nares. When did you first see them about your House?

W. Smith. The next Day in the Morning, which was the 15th of December.

Mr. Nares. Had you any Conversation with them?

W. Smith. I had none at all.

Mr. Nares. Are you sure this is the Woman?

W. Smith. I am, that was in my Cow-house; there were two Men and two Women with her; she called them her Sons and Daughters.

Mr. Nares. Do you see any Man in Court that is like her Son?

W. Smith. I did not take so much Notice of them, as I did of her; because I have seen her often.

Mr. Nares. What Reason have you to think it was the 15th of December?

W. Smith. I was out the Day before at Dr. Crow's, stamping of Apples; and when I came Home, my People told me, the People that had laid there before, came to ask for Lodging again. They had lodged in our Cow-house and Barn before that.

Mr. Nares. Are you sure of that?

W. Smith. They have asked me before this; and used commonly to come about once a Year, for a pretty many Years together.

Mr. Nares. Has this Woman herself asked you for Lodging?

W. Smith. She has. I have known her a pretty many Years, and have seen them about the Country; they lost their Horse the while they were at my House; I think, they said it was a little black one; the Son asked my People, in my Hearing, whether they saw him, or no.

Mr. Nares. How long did you see them afterwards?

W. Smith. They lay at my House till the Sunday after. They were there three Nights and two Days, and lay in my Cow-house; they came on the 14th, but then I was not at Home.

Mr. Nares. How long, from that Time, was it before you saw them again?

W. Smith. I was at Home once when the Son came, as they called him, to ask for the Horse.

Mr. Nares. Was you examined on the Trial of Mary Squires?

W. Smith. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Nares. Did you then swear she was the same Woman?

W. Smith. Yes.

Mr. Nares. Do you now believe she is the same?

W. Smith. I do.

Cross-examined.

Mr. Willes. Was you examined when Mary Squires and Susannah Wells were tried?

W. Smith. I was.

Mr. Willes. How long after Wells was taken up?

W. Smith. It was soon after.

Mr. Willes. How soon?

W. Smith. Within a Fortnight or three Weeks after.

Mr. Willes. Was you examined in this Place, where you are now?

W. Smith. I don't know.

Mr. Willes. Where was it?

W. Smith. I don't know where; but I am sure I was examined.

Mr. Willes. Had you any Conversation with the Gypsey on the 15th of December, in the Morning?

W. Smith. No, I only went and looked at them; she did not speak to me.

Mr. Willes. Then you cannot say you know the Faces of the two Men, and two young Women?

W. Smith. No, I do not.

Mr. Willes. How long before that December might it be, when they were there before?

W. Smith. May-be it was a Twelve-month before.

Mr. Willes. Did you ever see them at Mrs. Wells's House in your Life?

W. Smith. No, Sir.

Mr. Willes. How far is your House from Mrs. Wells's?

W. Smith. It is near two Miles Distance.

Mr. Willes. What had you been doing the Day they came to your House?

W. Smith. I had been stamping Apples to make Cyder with, at Dr. Crow's.

Mr. Willes. Were the Apples your own Apples?

W. Smith. They were. I went there for the Use of his Press; he gave me Leave.

Mr. Willes. How long had these Apples been gathered?

W. Smith. I believe, about two Months.

Mr. Willes. Do you keep your Apples so long before you grind them?

W. Smith. Yes, and longer too.

Mr. Willes. When did they go away?

W. Smith. On the Sunday Morning, the third Day.

Mr. Willes. Did you know where they were going?

W. Smith. No, I did not.

Mr. Willes. Did you see her, after that Time, till you saw her in Newgate?

W. Smith. No, Sir.

Mr. Willes. Was you any Time in January at Mrs. Wells's?

W. Smith. No, Sir; I seldom go by there.

Mr. Willes. Had they any thing to sell?

W. Smith. No, not as I saw.

Mr. Willes. Did you ask Dr. Crow Leave to use his Press?

W. Smith. He was then dead, I believe; I asked his Gardener; the Family were not in the Country then.

Mr. Willes. Why do you fix upon that Day, you stamped your Apples on, to be the 14th of December? Did you make any Minute of the Day?

W. Smith. I know it was that Day; I did make a Minute; I sold some Corn that Week, and delivered it the same Week, and I set it down in my Book.

Mr. Willes. Don't you sell Corn almost every Week?

W. Smith. I do.

Mr. Willes. What Day of that Week did you sell your Corn?

W. Smith. It was on the Saturday.

Mr. Willes. Where is that Book?

W. Smith. It is at Home.

Mr. Willes. Why is it not here?

W. Smith. I did not know I should have Occasion for that here.

Mr. Willes. Is your House farther from London than Mrs. Wells's?

W. Smith. Much about alike for that.

Mr. Willes. Is it in the Way to Mrs. Wells's?

W. Smith. No, it is out of the Way, on the left Hand.

Mr. Willes. Is it in the Road to Basingstoke?

W. Smith. I know nothing of the Place.

Mr. Nares. You say you was not examined in the Place you are now in, at the other Trial; do you know whether it was in this Court or no, you was examined?

W. Smith. I was examined.

Mr. Nares. Was it when Squires and Wells were tried, or at any other Time?

W. Smith. I think it was then.

Mr. Just. Clive. Was you ever examined in this Court?

W. Smith. I never was, but once.

Mr. Just. Clive. Was you ever examined in a Court of Justice, at any Time, but when you was examined about the Gypsey and Wells?

W. Smith. No.

Mr. Just. Clive. Where was you examined?

W. Smith. Some Gentlemen examined me about it.

Mr. Just. Clive. Was it in this Court, or at Hicks's-Hall?

W. Smith. I don't know Hicks's-Hall.

Mr.

Mr. Nares. Was the old Gypsey in Court at the Time?

W. Smith. No, she was then in Newgate.

Court. This must be before the Grand Jury at Hicks's-Hall, when the Bill was found.

Loomworth Dane sworn.

L. Dane. I keep the Bell at Enfield-Wash; I have lived there two Years and a half; but I have lived near there about twelve Years and a half.

Mr. Nares. Do you remember ever seeing Mary Squires there? Look, and see if you see her in Court.

L. Dane. That is the Woman, I am sure, (pointing to her.) I cannot say I ever saw her before Winter was Twelve-month.

Mr. Nares. What Part of the Winter did you see her?

L. Dane. I cannot remember the first Time; but I am sure I saw her on Old Christmas-Day, and, I believe, I saw her before.

Mr. Nares. What Reason have you to remember the Day?

L. Dane. My Man came to me, and I promised him a Holiday on the Old Christmas-Day.

Mr. Nares. When did you promise him that?

L. Dane. I promised it him on New Christmas-Day.

Mr. Nares. Had he one on the New?

L. Dane. Yes, Sir. On the Old Christmas-Day I went up to my Shop, (I keep a Collar-maker's Shop;) while I was there, Farmer Norton came and asked me, if I had ever a Collar that would fit his Horse; I measured his Horse, and put it down in my Book; he said, he would come and settle with me on the Sunday following. I fitted it, and carried it Home, and left it that very Day, as I went to Dinner.

Mr. Nares. What Book did you set it down in?

L. Dane. In my Day-book; it is a Piece of Paper sewed together.

Mr. Nares. Could you have remembered it without that Circumstance?

L. Dane. I cannot say I could.

Mr. Nares. Where is that Book?

L. Dane. I believe I can produce it; it is not here; but I am sure it was Old Christmas-Day.

Mr. Nares. Did you take particular Notice of her that Day?

L. Dane. Yes, Sir, I did. I was filling a Barrow of Gravel, from a Heap at my Door, to lay down in the Yard; I stood resting myself; she came by me, and I looked very wishfully at her. As she went by me, the Wind blew up her Gown, and there was a great Hole in the Heel of her Stocking. I saw her till she got into the Field.

Mr. Nares. Did you see her when she was in Confinement?

L. Dane. I did, and when she was taken up, and saw her go into the Cart.

Mr. Nares. From what you observed on her going by, did you believe it was the same Person?

L. Dane. Yes, Sir, I am sure of it.

Mr. Nares. Are you sure now this is the same Person?

L. Dane. Yes, Sir, I am. I saw her in Newgate, and was sure of it then.

Cross-examined.

Mr. Willes. Did you ever converse with her?

L. Dane. No, never at all.

Mr. Willes. How near was she to you when she walked by?

L. Dane. I believe it might be two or three Yards off.

Mr. Willes. Have you a Coach Road goes by your House?

L. Dane. Yes, Sir, the York Road.

Mr. Willes. Do you know William Headland, that has been examined?

L. Dane. I do.

Mr. Willes. Did you see any body with her?

L. Dane. No, I saw no body with her.

Mr. Willes. Was that the only Time?

L. Dane. I believe I saw her several Times, but cannot fix upon the Days.

Mr. Willes. Did you see any young People with her?

L. Dane. I saw her Son several Times.

Mr. Willes. How long after?

L. Dane. I cannot say how long.

Mr. Willes. Did you ever see her Daughters with her?

L. Dane. No, only when they were taken up.

Mr. Willes. Was it a very high Wind that Day?

L. Dane. It was.

Mr. Willes. What had she on her Head?

L. Dane. I cannot tell.

Mr. Willes. Was her Face covered over?

L. Dane. No, it was not.

Mr. Willes. How did she walk?

L. Dane. She went crouching and cringing.

Mr. Willes. Which Way was her Face?

L. Dane. It was then towards the Town; I looked at her very wishfully.

Mr. Willes. Then you cannot say you saw her before?

L. Dane. I believe I did.

Mr. Willes. Do you know Elizabeth Headland? What is her Character, a good or bad one, in the Neighbourhood?

L. Dane. I never heard she robbed any body.

Mr. Willes. Is it as good as the rest of her Neighbours?

L. Dane. I cannot say that; hers is not so clear as some People's are; but I never heard she was a Thief.

Mr. Willes. What is her Son's Character?

L. Dane. I know no Ill of him.

Mr. Willes. Do you know David Dyer?

L. Dane. Yes, Sir, I do.

Mr. Willes. What is his Character?

L. Dane. He is a very honest Man.

Mr. Nares. I own the Boy has given a strange Account; but did you ever hear any Harm by him?

L. Dane. No, never in my Life.

Mr. Nares. In what Particular is the Mother's Character supposed to be bad?

L. Dane. I do not know, not I.

Mr. Nares. How far does David Dyer live from you?

L. Dane. He lives opposite me.

Mr. Nares. What is his Business?

L. Dane. He is a Shepherd.

Mr. Nares. Did you ever hear any Harm of him?

L. Dane. No, never in my Life: He has a good Character.

Samuel Arnot sworn.

S. Arnot. I live at White-Webbs, on Enfield Chace; and have lived there these fourteen Years.

Mr.

Mr. Nares. What are you?

S. Arnot. I am a labouring Man.

Mr. Nares. Do you know such a Person as Mary Squires?

S. Arnot. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Nares. Look, and see if you see her.

S. Arnot. That is the Woman, (pointing to her.)

Mr. Nares. How long have you known her?

S. Arnot. The first of my seeing her was on a Friday Morning: She asked me, if I saw a little brown Horse? This was, as near as I can guess, about nine or ten Days before New Christmas-Day.

Mr. Nares. How came you to fix upon that Time?

S. Arnot. I had been at a Place called Clay-Hill, and met her in the Bushes: She asked me if I saw this Horse, and said his Legs were tied, and he had a Clog upon him: Then I turned back again, and asked, what Sort of a Clog? She said, her Name was Squires.

Mr. Nares. For what Reason did she tell you that?

S. Arnot. Because I might give her an Account of the Horse, if I light of him.

Mr. Nares. Upon your Oath, are you sure this is the Woman?

S. Arnot. Upon my Oath, I am, Sir.

Mr. Nares. Did you ever see her any Time but that?

S. Arnot. I never saw her after that Time till I saw her in Newgate; but do not know the particular Day I saw her there.

Mr. Nares. How long was it after you had seen her before?

S. Arnot. It was, I believe, a quarter or half a Year after.

Mr. Nares. Was you certain then it was the same Person?

S. Arnot. I was, Sir; and, to the best of my Knowledge, I believe now it is the same.

Cross-examined.

Mr. Willes. What is your Employ?

S. Arnot. I follow labouring Work: I work sometimes at Chebbunt, and sometimes at other Places.

Mr. Willes. Have you any Family?

S. Arnot. I have a Wife and three Children.

Mr. Willes. Why are you positive as to the Time?

S. Arnot. Because it was on a Friday Morning that I saw her; and on the Sunday following I met her again, and asked her if she had found her Horse; and she said, No.

Mr. Willes. Why do you apprehend it was nine or ten Days before New-Christmas you had this Conversation with the Gypsies?

S. Arnot. I think New-Christmas was the Sunday Se'nnight following.

Mr. Willes. Are you sure Christmas-Day was on a Sunday that Year?

S. Arnot. No; it was on a Monday. I say, it was the Sunday was Se'nnight before New-Christmas that I saw her.

Mr. Willes. Was there any body with her at that Time?

S. Arnot. There were a Man, two Women, and two Children with her, this second Time; there was no body with her the first Time.

Mr. Willes. Had she either of the Times a Horse or Ass with her?

S. Arnot. No; neither.

Mr. Just. Clive. Who carried the Children?

S. Arnot. They walked on Foot.

Mr. Willes. How old might they be?

S. Arnot. Four, or five, or six, or seven Years old.

Mr. Willes. What was the Colour of the Horse she inquired after?

S. Arnot. A little brown one, with his Legs tied together.

Mr. Willes. Do you know Farmer Smith?

S. Arnot. I do; his House stands about two or three Pole from mine.

Mr. Willes. Did these two Children seem to be Gypsies Children?

S. Arnot. I did not observe their Colour; they seemed to belong to that Gang.

Mr. Willes. Do you know of their lying in Farmer Smith's Cow-house?

S. Arnot. I do; they did, to the best of my Knowledge.

Mr. Willes. If those People had lain there, do you think he would not have remembered there being two Children with them?

S. Arnot. His Remembrance is nothing to me.

Mr. Nares. Did you see them at Farmer Smith's?

S. Arnot. I never saw them in the Cow-house: I know no otherwise, than as I met them on the Chace, and heard they lay there; and it being so near my House, I could hear them talk in the Cow-house. On the Sunday Morning I met her betwixt Clay-Hill and White-Webbs: I asked her, whether she had found the Horse or not? She said, she had not.

Mr. Just. Clive. Was it then that the Man, two Women, and two Children, were with her?

S. Arnot. It was.

Mr. Just. Clive. Look about the Court, and see if you see the two Women that were with her.

S. Arnot. I cannot swear to any Person besides her, really: I did not take Notice of the two Women; I did not converse with them.

Mr. Nares. Did the Notice you took of her, the first Time you saw her, give you such an Idea of her Person, as to ask her, of your own Accord, whether she had found her Horse?

S. Arnot. It did.

Recorder. What particular Reason have you to imagine that these two Children were with them at Farmer Smith's?

S. Arnot. I don't know that: I heard a Noise of the Voices of small People; I cannot say they were Children, young or old.

Recorder. Could you distinguish the Voice of Children?

S. Arnot. I could, to be sure; but I did not see the old Woman.

Baron Legge. You say, you first of all saw the old Woman on a Friday; when was it you saw her next?

S. Arnot. On the Sunday after the Friday.

Baron Legge. Did you see her the next Sunday after that Sunday again?

S. Arnot. No.

Elizabeth Arnot sworn.

E. Arnot. I am Wife to Samuel Arnot: We have lived where we do fourteen Years.

Mr. Nares. Do you know Mary Squires?

E. Arnot. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Nares. Look about the Court, and see if you can see her.

E. Arnot.

E. Arnot. There she is; I am sure it is her.

Mr. Nares. When was the first Time you remember to have seen her?

E. Arnot. It was about a Week before New Christmas.

Mr. Nares. How came you to fix upon that Time?

E. Arnot. To the best of my Knowledge, it was: I know it was about a Week before the first New Christmas.

Mr. Nares. Where did you see her?

E. Arnot. I saw her lying in Farmer Smith's Cow-house, close to my House: I saw her come out of the Cow-house into the Lane on the Chace. She asked me, if I saw a little Horse of hers? I said, I had not. This is the Truth.

Mr. Nares. Was your Husband with you at that Time?

E. Arnot. He was not.

Mr. Nares. Did you see any others in Company with her?

E. Arnot. I saw several more, but I did not take Notice of them: I saw her Son on the Chace, whistling for his Horse.

Mr. Nares. Did you see her after that?

E. Arnot. No, never, only in Newgate, till now.

Mr. Nares. What Time was that you saw her in Newgate?

E. Arnot. I don't know the Time; I never kept the Account of that.

Mr. Nares. Was it before or after her Trial?

E. Arnot. It was after her Trial.

Mr. Just. Clive. Should you know the Son, if you was to see him?

E. Arnot. I took so little Account of him, I can't say whether I should know him or not.

Mr. Nares. Did you ever see a Woman like the old Woman in your Life?

E. Arnot. No, never before I saw her.

Mr. Nares. Did you think the Woman you saw in Newgate, was the same Person you saw inquiring for her Horse?

E. Arnot. The very same Person.

Mr. Nares. Do you think this is the same Person here, you saw there and in Newgate?

E. Arnot. The very same.

Cross-examined.

Mr. Willes. How long was she with you inquiring for her Horse?

E. Arnot. It might be some Minutes, before she turned her Back, and went to look for him.

Mr. Willes. Did you see her in the Cow-house?

E. Arnot. No, I did not: I saw her coming out of it.

Mr. Willes. Did she mention the Colour of the Horse?

E. Arnot. She did not.

Mr. Willes. What did you say to her?

E. Arnot. I told her I had not seen him.

Mr. Willes. Was this the only Space of Time you had to see her Face, till you saw her in Newgate?

E. Arnot. It was.

Mr. Willes. How long were you talking together?

E. Arnot. It might be two or three Minutes.

Mr. Willes. Do you swear absolutely that was the Person?

E. Arnot. I do, Sir.

Mr. Nares. Did you change a Word with the Son?

Vol. X.

E. Arnot. I did not.

Mr. Nares. Was you near the Cow-house?

E. Arnot. My House joins almost to it: She came out of the Farmer's Yard, and said, Good Woman, did you see a little Horse of mine?

Mr. Nares. Did she come towards you before she spoke to you?

E. Arnot. No; I was going for a Pail of Water, and she came out to go to look for her Horse.

Mr. Just. Clive. How came you to say that Man was her Son?

E. Arnot. She said, it was her Son that was calling her Horse.

Sarah Star sworn.

Mr. Nares. Do you know Mary Squires?

S. Star. I do; that is the Gypsie, (pointing to her.) I live next Door to Mrs. Wells's House at Enfield-Wash: My Husband rents a Farm there.

Mr. Nares. How long have you lived there?

S. Star. I have lived there three Years this May.

Mr. Nares. When was the first Time you saw the Gypsie?

S. Star. She was at my House on the 18th or 19th of January was Twelve-month.

Mr. Nares. By what do you recollect the Day?

S. Star. My Husband was gone to Hertford for a Load of Pease for a Gentleman in Town: The Note is in Court, as far as I know, with the Date on it: Mr. Miles, the former Attorney, had it of me.

Mr. Nares. Did you ever see her at any other Time?

S. Star. I never saw her before or after, till she was taken up.

Mr. Just. Clive. How near do you live to Mrs. Wells's House?

S. Star. My House is as near to her House, as it is across the Sessions-house Yard.

Mr. Nares. What Conversation passed between you?

S. Star. At first she came and asked at the Door, if I had any Delft to mend, or China? My Man and Boy were at Dinner: I bid them give her an Answer, because I was busy. Then she came into the Kitchen to me, and asked to buy some Pork of me, and brown Bread: I said, I had but that Piece of Bread in the House, and more need to buy than to sell. Then she asked me to sell her some Chitterlings, I having some, and black Puddings, lying on the Table: I gave her a good Piece of Chitterling to get rid of her.

Mr. Nares. How long might this Conversation take up?

S. Star. I had rather set a lesser Time than it was. I do believe she was three quarters of an Hour with my Men and me, that is, in my Sight and Hearing. She offered to tell my Servants their Fortunes, and to tell me mine. She was some Time in the Porch with my Servant; but I believe she was in my Sight three quarters of an Hour.

Mr. Nares. Did she tell any of them their Fortunes?

S. Star. After she found she could not tell me mine, she said, Don't be scared at me; for I have been before Dukes, Lords, and Earls, and I hurt no body, Madam; I will not hurt you. She did not tell any of my Servants their Fortunes, in my Hearing. I wanted to get rid of her, for I was terribly scared, seeing such a strange Gypsie Woman; though I have seen hundreds of Gypsies at one Time or other: The Man took her into the Porch, then the Boy bolted the Door, so we got her out. I saw her when she was taken up and put into the Cart; and I saw her in Newgate after that.

Mr. Nares. Are you sure this is the same Person?

S. Star. Yes, Sir.

Cross-examined.

Mr. Willes. How are you certain as to Time, so as to fix it to be the 18th or 19th of January?

S. Star. Upon this Account; my Husband was gone for a Load of Pease, and the Note was dated the 18th or 19th of January.

Mr. Willes. Where is that Note?

S. Star. It was delivered into Mr. Miles the Attorney's Hands, and I have not seen it since.

Mr. Willes. How long is it ago since you delivered it to him?

S. Star. I believe it may be above a Twelve-month ago.

Mr. Willes. What did you look upon him to be at that Time?

S. Star. I took him to be a Lawyer, concerned for Elizabeth Canning.

Mr. Willes. Where was your Husband when you gave him that Note?

S. Star. I can't tell.

Mr. Just. Clive. When did you deliver this Note to Mr. Miles?

S. Star. Indeed I can't tell. I know my Husband took the Pease up one Day, and delivered them the next; that is the Reason I say the 18th or 19th of January.

Mr. Nares. We have not got the Paper to produce.

Baron Legge. Did you deliver that before or after the Trial of Mary Squires?

S. Star. After, a great while.

Mr. Willes. How came you not to appear here on Squires's Trial?

S. Star. They did not require it.

Daniel Vass sworn.

D. Vass. I am a Day-labouring Man; and live in Turkey-Street in Enfield Parish, and have lived there almost fourteen Years.

Mr. Nares. How near is that to Mother Wells's?

D. Vass. About a quarter of a Mile, as near as I can guess.

Mr. Nares. Have you ever seen Mary Squires?

D. Vass. I have seen that Woman that was in Newgate; I don't know her Name.

Mr. Nares. Look about you, and see if you can see her.

D. Vass. There she is, (pointing to her :) She is remarkable enough: She has now a red Cloak on.

Mr. Nares. Where did you see her first?

D. Vass. The first Time I saw her going along the Causeway behind my House; it was on Old Christmas-Day, by the New Stile the 5th of January 53. I was then in my own Yard.

Mr. Nares. How near was you to her?

D. Vass. Perhaps I might be four or five Yards from her.

Mr. Nares. Had you any Conversation with her?

D. Vass. I never said any thing to her, or she to me.

Mr. Nares. How came you to take such Notice of her?

D. Vass. By reason she stopped; and I thought she would have come into the Yard, but she did not; if she had, I should have told her there was no body in the House.

Mr. Nares. Was there any body in the House then?

D. Vass. No, Sir.

Mr. Nares. Had you a full Sight of her Face at that Time?

D. Vass. I had, certainly.

Mr. Nares. Was she alone?

D. Vass. She was, without she had got any body under her Cloak: I saw no body with her.

Mr. Nares. Did you see her any Time else?

D. Vass. Only in Newgate.

Mr. Nares. Did these Observations you made of her, furnish you with a sufficient Remembrance of her Person, to recollect she was the same?

D. Vass. I am sure she is the same; now I am sure of it, Sir. It is the same Person, but not the same Cloaths.

Mr. Just. Clive. What coloured Cloaths had she on then?

D. Vass. She had a brick-coloured Gown on, an old red Cloak, and a whitish-coloured one over that, and an old black Beaver Hat; it was not a black Hat as Women commonly wear.

Mr. Nares. What Reason have you to fix upon Old Christmas-Day?

D. Vass. By reason I went to work with a Master I have worked for almost eleven Years, and he did not chuse I should work on that Day.

Mr. Nares. Why did he not chuse you should work?

D. Vass. By reason he thought it was Christmas-Day, and ought to be kept.

Mr. Nares. Are you certain that was the same Day you saw this Woman?

D. Vass. I am, Sir; that was the same Day; my Door was locked when I came Home, and I did not know where my Wife was gone with the Key, and at that Time the Woman came by.

Cross-examined.

Mr. Willes. Did you ever see her before?

D. Vass. No, Sir; nor never saw her again, till I saw her in Newgate.

Mr. Willes. How long did she stop there?

D. Vass. Perhaps a Minute, or half a Minute.

Mr. Willes. When you went into Newgate, did you go by yourself, or with other Persons?

D. Vass. I did not go by myself; if I had, I should not have found her; but we went but one at a Time up to her.

Mr. Willes. Was she brought out among a Number of other Persons, or was she singled out?

D. Vass. She sat upon the Bed, but I knew her long before I came at her.

Mr. Willes. Were there any other Prisoners there?

D. Vass. I did not know who were the Prisoners.

Mr. Willes. Was she sitting by herself?

D. Vass. She sat by herself on one Side the Bed.

Mr. Willes. Were there any other People shewed to you in that Corner of the Room, besides the Gypsy herself?

D. Vass. There was no other Person sitting on the Bed, nigh her, as I know of.

Mr.

Mr. Willes. Were there any other People in the Room?

D. Vafs. There were a great many; but I knew the Woman when I saw her, and should from a thousand.

Mr. Just. Clive. Who desired you to go into the Room?

D. Vafs. I don't know who it was; it was by the Gentlemen.

Mr. Just. Clive. Did any body come up from the Country with you?

D. Vafs. Yes, there were nine or ten of us came up in a Coach together.

Mr. Willes. Did you all go into Newgate together?

D. Vafs. I don't know how many did when I did, or how many went in together.

Mr. Willes. Was not the Purpose of your going up, to see if you could find out the Gypsey?

D. Vafs. No, no; I was carried up to see if I could find out the same Woman that I had seen before.—A blind Man can't see her; but a Man, if he has but half an Eye, might know that Woman if he sees her again.

Mr. Nares. Upon your Oath, did any body point out to you that this was the Gypsey?

D. Vafs. No, no, I did not want them to do that.

Mr. Nares. Did any body tell you how she was dressed?

D. Vafs. No, certainly.

Mr. Nares. Was there any other Woman there?

D. Vafs. There were in the Room.

Mr. Nares. Did you, of your own Accord, say which was the Woman?

D. Vafs. Certainly.

Mr. Just. Clive. How near do you live to Mother Wells's?

D. Vafs. As near as I can guess, about a quarter of a Mile off.

Mr. Just. Clive. Have you ever been in her House?

D. Vafs. I have several Times.

Mr. Just. Clive. Was you there the Beginning of January?

D. Vafs. No, nor I had not been in the House above two Years, till they were taken up.

Mr. Willes. Had you used to go there at any Time?

D. Vafs. I have been in the House divers Times formerly; then she sold Beer; then a poor Man might take a Pint of Beer there, as well as at another House.

Recorder. Who was the first Person that applied to you to go to Newgate?

D. Vafs. I am sure I don't know the Gentlemen's Names one from another.

Recorder. Have you heard their Names?

D. Vafs. I have heard a good many of the Gentlemen's Names that are on the Girl's Behalf; if I were to hear their Names, perhaps I might know them.

Mr. Just. Clive. Do you know Farmer Smith?

D. Vafs. I do, very well.

Mr. Just. Clive. Do you know his Cow-house?

D. Vafs. I never was in his Yard.

Jane Dadwell sworn.

J. Dadwell. I live in Turkey-Street at Enfield-Wash.

Mr. Nares. How long have you lived there?

J. Dadwell. I have lived there two Years?

Mr. Nares. What is your Business?

J. Dadwell. I keep a Shop; I sell Butter, Cheese, Coffee, and Tea; and those Sort of Things.

Mr. Nares. Do you know Mary Squires?

J. Dadwell. I do; this is the Woman, (pointing to her.)

Mr. Nares. When did you first see her?

J. Dadwell. The first Time was at our Shop; the Time I can't tell; but I can tell one Day in particular, that was the Thursday in Christmas Week.

Mr. Nares. Which Christmas?

J. Dadwell. The New Christmas Week.

Mr. Nares. Upon what Account did she come to your Shop?

J. Dadwell. She came for Coffee, Tea, and Butter; but I can't tell what particular Weight she had any one Day.

Mr. Nares. Had she been at your Shop before that?

J. Dadwell. She had several Times before that.

Mr. Nares. Why do you fix upon that Day?

J. Dadwell. We dressed a Piece of Meat for our Customers, as I usually do at Christmas: This was dressed on Christmas-Day; the Customers came on Tuesday Night and Wednesday Night; and this of her coming was after my Customers had been there.

Mr. Nares. What Reason have you to think it was after they had been there?

J. Dadwell. I was in my back House washing my Dishes (that had been used when my Customers were there) when she came in.

Mr. Nares. Did you see her any Time after that?

J. Dadwell. I can't say particularly whether she was or not at my House after that.

Mr. Nares. From her coming so often to your Shop, can you be certain of her Face?

J. Dadwell. I know it very well.

Mr. Nares. Did you see her in Newgate?

J. Dadwell. I did.

Mr. Nares. Was she shewn you there, or did you know her of yourself?

J. Dadwell. I knew her immediately, and then she owned she had been at my Shop.

Recorder. Did she own she had been at your Shop that Thursday?

J. Dadwell. No: She knew me, and owned she had been at my Shop, but did not fix upon any Time.

Mr. Nares. I need not ask you any more as to your Certainty of the Person then: Are you sure now this is the Person?

J. Dadwell. Yes, Sir, I am.

Cross-examined.

Mr. Willes. Was you ever examined before?

J. Dadwell. I was.

Mr. Willes. By what Person was you examined?

J. Dadwell. I don't know the Gentleman.

Mr. Willes. How long is it ago?

J. Dadwell. It is a Twelve-month ago last Christmas.

Mr. Willes. How long is it since you was examined before the Grand Jury?

J. Dadwell. I don't know.

Mr. Willes. Was you ever examined upon Oath?

J. Dadwell. I was, but not upon such Things as these.

Mr. Willes.

Mr. Willes. Was it upon the Abbotsbury Men for Perjury?

J. Dadwell. I don't know what it was about; it was about this Affair.

Mr. Willes. When did you recollect any of these Circumstances, about your washing your Dishes?

J. Dadwell. I gave this Account to the Grand Jury, and told the same as I have now.

Mr. Nares. Is the Account you tell now true?

J. Dadwell. I am sure it is.

Mr. Willes. When was it you first recollected it to tell those Circumstances of her being there?

J. Dadwell. I can't recollect the Day of the Month; after they were taken up, the Lawyer came to me, and I told it him.

Mr. Willes. Don't you wash your Dishes every Day?

J. Dadwell. No, I do not; but I know in particular it was that Day: One of my Neighbours came in, and asked me, what strange Woman that was?

Mr. Willes. Did she stay any Time in your Shop?

J. Dadwell. She sat down and smoked a Pipe there.

Mr. Willes. At the Time you saw her in Newgate, what Day did Squires say it was that she was at your Shop?

J. Dadwell. She did not say what Day, but she said she knew me: I asked her whether she knew me.

Mr. Nares. Then this Affair had made a great deal of Noise in the Country.

J. Dadwell. Yes, it had.

Mr. Nares. And the Lawyer desired you to recollect the Time, did he not?

J. Dadwell. Yes, he did.

Mr. Nares. You say she smoked a Pipe; where did she sit?

J. Dadwell. She sat down by the Fire.

Mr. Nares. Who is that Neighbour that came in, and asked about the strange Woman?

J. Dadwell. She was one of the Witnesses, but is since dead.

Mr. Nares. Was she examined when you was before?

J. Dadwell. She was; her Name was Anne Parsley.

Mr. Willes. Was you by when she was examined?

J. Dadwell. No, I was not; there was but one examined at a Time.

Recorder. How old are you?

J. Dadwell. I am threescore Years of Age.

Recorder. Are you no more?

J. Dadwell. I am not.

Recorder. Have you seen Gypsies at Enfield-Wash before this?

J. Dadwell. I have, such as are called Gypsies.

Recorder. Had any of them used to come to your Shop?

J. Dadwell. No, none of them.

Mr. Willes. Were they and this Woman alike that you had seen before?

J. Dadwell. No.

Recorder. What was her Errand the first Time she came to your Shop?

J. Dadwell. She came and asked if we had any China to mend.

Recorder. Had she any body with her?

J. Dadwell. I never saw any body with her.

Recorder. Did she tell you where she lived?

J. Dadwell. She said she lived up yonder, and said no more.

Tobias Kellog sworn.

T. Kellog. I am a Husbandman, and live at Enfield in a little House of my own.

Mr. Nares. How long have you lived there?

T. Kellog. Twenty-six Years, come Michaelmas.

Mr. Nares. Do you know Mary Squires?

T. Kellog. I have seen her.

Mr. Nares. Look about, and see if you see her now.

T. Kellog. I see her, Sir.

Mr. Nares. When was the first Time you saw her?

T. Kellog. The first Time was in January, something better than three Weeks in January was Twelve-month.

Mr. Nares. What Day in January?

T. Kellog. I cannot say to the Day.

Mr. Nares. Have you any Reason to say you saw her before?

T. Kellog. I have not.

Mr. Nares. Where did you see her?

T. Kellog. She was on the other Side the Way, where I was at Work in Mr. Fletcher's Barn, at Bulls-Cross; she was walking up Turkey-Street Green, in the Foot-path.

Mr. Nares. What have you to charge your Memory with, as to the Day?

T. Kellog. I can't say but it may be a Day or two before Old Christmas-Day?

Mr. Nares. Was it before Old Christmas, or after?

T. Kellog. It was rather before Old Christmas.

Mr. Nares. Are you certain of it?

T. Kellog. Yes, I am.

Mr. Nares. What Day of the Month was Old Christmas-Day on?

T. Kellog. It was on a Friday, and I believe I saw her on the Thursday; but I can't say to the Day of the Month.

Mr. Nares. Are you sure it was three Weeks in January?

T. Kellog. I mean so, and better.

Baron Legge. From what Period, or Time, do you reckon your three Weeks in January?

T. Kellog. I say, near a Month.

Baron Legge. Was it the Beginning of January?

T. Kellog. No, there were two or three Days past the Beginning.

Mr. Nares. What do you mean by three Weeks in January?

T. Kellog. I said three Weeks, very near a Month in January.

Baron Legge. How long was it before Squires was taken up?

T. Kellog. I reckon it about a Month before the Time she was taken up.

Mr. Nares. When you say, better than three Weeks, or near a Month, do you mean before Squires was taken up?

T. Kellog. I mean so.

Mr. Nares. Are you sure you saw her then?

T. Kellog. I am sure.

Mr. Nares. How far is Mr. Fletcher's Barn from Mother Wells's?

T. Kellog. His House is very near a Mile from it; but the Barn is about a quarter of a Mile.

Mr. Nares. Did you see her Face then?

T. Kellog. I did.

Mr. Nares.

Mr. Nares. Did you see her after that ?

T. Kellog. I did, twice, walk by my Barn-door. She asked me for a Bit of Tobacco ; I said, I used none, and away she went : I saw her four Times in all, with the Time she was taken up. She was at my Barn-door the Day before she was taken up, about One o'Clock, and asked the Man that was in the Barn with me, (whose Name is John Rowley) for a Bit of Tobacco : Then she came into the Barn, and said to him, Young Man, I'll tell you your Fortune ; and told him, there is one young Man has a very great Enmity to him, and asked him to cross her Hand with four Half-pence to tell him his Fortune : He said, If I do, I must go on the Highway for it : Then she turned her Leg over the Board, and away she went.

Mr. Nares. Is John Rowley here ?

T. Kellog. No, he is not.

Mr. Nares. Where does he live ?

T. Kellog. At Enfield Highway.

Mr. Nares. Are you sure this is the Woman that asked you for Tobacco, and that afterwards offered to tell Rowley his Fortune ?

T. Kellog. It is the same.

Mr. Nares. Have you seen her since that Time ?

T. Kellog. No, I have not till now ; but she is a very remarkable Woman.

Mr. Nares. What makes you fix it to be the Day before Old Christmas-Day ?

T. Kellog. I have no particular Reason.

Cross-examined.

Mr. Willes. Had you any Conversation with her the first Time ?

T. Kellog. No, I had none at all.

Mr. Willes. Had you ever in your Life seen her before ?

T. Kellog. No, Sir.

Mr. Willes. Did she continue walking when you saw her ?

T. Kellog. She was walking along.

Mr. Willes. Did you see any Gang of Gypsies about the Town, besides her ?

T. Kellog. No, I did not see any.

Mr. Willes. How long was the second Time after the first ?

T. Kellog. It was about a Week after.

Mr. Willes. Had you seen any Gypsies with her at any Time ?

T. Kellog. No, Sir.

Mr. Willes. Should you have recollected the Person of that Gypsey, if it had not been for that of coming into the Barn, and asking for Tobacco ?

T. Kellog. Yes, if I had not seen her a second Time, I should have remembered her Face.

Recorder. Was you in Newgate to see her ?

T. Kellog. I was not.

Mr. Willes. How long is New Christmas-Day before the Old ?

T. Kellog. Eleven Days.

John Frame sworn.

J. Frame. I lived with 'Squire Parsons, and have a Year and half ; but I am out of Place at present.

Mr. Nares. Where does he live ?

J. Frame. He lives in James's-Street, Grosvenor-Square ; but he lived in Turkey-Street, Enfield, in the Country ; and I lived with him there as a Footman and Gardener.

Mr. Nares. During the Time you was there, did you see Mary Squires there ?

J. Frame. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Nares. Do you think you should know her now ?

J. Frame. There she is, I am sure, (pointing to her.)

Mr. Nares. When did you first see her ?

J. Frame. On the 11th of January was Twelve-month.

Mr. Nares. Where did you see her ?

J. Frame. I was at Work in Master's Garden, and she came and talked with me through the Palisadoes, pretending to tell me my Fortune.

Mr. Nares. How came you to think it was the 11th of January ?

J. Frame. Because my Master and Mistress went to Town on the 9th of January, and this was after they went.

Mr. Nares. Tell us the Conversation as well as you can.

J. Frame. She said a great many Things to me. She told me, I little thought of coming into that Country once ; and she wanted me to give her three Pence : I gave her three Half-pence ; but she did not tell me what she would have told me if I had given her more. When I gave her the three Half-pence, she bid me put it in my Hand, and put it through the Pales. She took it out and went away.

Mr. Nares. How long might you converse with her at this Time ?

J. Frame. It might be four or five Minutes.

Mr. Nares. Was your Fortune good or bad ?

J. Frame. She told me it would be good Fortune.

Mr. Nares. Are you sure this is the Woman ?

J. Frame. I am sure it is.

Mr. Nares. Did you ever see her before ?

J. Frame. I had seen her about a Year before : I lived then at one Mr. Woodcock's at Enfield Clay-Hill ; he is since dead : I had then but very little Talk with her ; Master was at Dinner, and I could not stay.

Mr. Nares. Did you ever see her at any other Time ?

J. Frame. Not to take much Notice of her : I saw her two or three Times between that and seeing her in Newgate.

Mr. Nares. Are you sure the Woman you saw at Mr. Woodcock's, is the same Woman that told you your Fortune at Mr. Parsons's ?

J. Frame. I am very sure of it.

Mr. Nares. And are you sure this is the same Woman, that is here ?

J. Frame. I am very sure of it : I saw her several Times after the Time I mentioned, but not to take Notice of her, any farther than seeing her walking in the Street : I knew she was in that Part of the Country from that Time, to the Time she was taken up.

Mr. Nares. You say you saw her in Newgate ?

J. Frame. I did.

Mr. Nares. Was you certain of her then ?

J. Frame. I was very certain, and I am sure this is the same now.

Mr. Nares. Was you before the Grand Jury ?

J. Frame. I was.

Mr. Nares. How long is that ago ?

J. Frame. I can't tell ; it was about this Time Twelve-month, I think.

Mr. Nares. Did you give the same Account before the Grand Jury, as you have now ?

J. Frame.

J. Frame. I did.

Mr. Nares. Was that true?

J. Frame. It was, and so is this.

Cross-examined.

Mr. Willes. Were there any other Gypsies with her?

J. Frame. No, Sir.

Mr. Willes. When you saw her about a Twelve-month before, were there any others with her?

J. Frame. No, none as I saw; she then only just opened the Gate.

Mr. Willes. Was she in Company with any others in Newgate, or shewed by herself?

J. Frame. By herself.

Mr. Willes. How long had your Master and Mistress been down at that Time?

J. Frame. I cannot tell; they were up and down very often.

Mr. Willes. If they have been up and down very often, how can you fix upon their going up this Time, more than any other?

J. Frame. By reason my Master and Mistress gave me and my Fellow-Servant leave to go out on the 1st of January.

Mr. Willes. Had not your Master and Mistress been in Town between the 1st of January and the 9th?

J. Frame. Yes, they had.

Mr. Nares. Have you Reason to believe it, because your Master and Mistress were down at Christmas?

J. Frame. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Nares. How long had they been there at that Time?

J. Frame. I believe, a Month; and I am sure they gave me leave to go out on the 1st of January.

Recorder. How was the Gypsey dressed?

J. Frame. She had a reddish Sort of a Gown on, I think, to the best of my Remembrance.

Mr. Just. Clive. What other Cloaths?

J. Frame. A lightish-coloured Cloak.

Mr. Just. Clive. Do you know Mary Jewel?

J. Frame. She saw her something before me the same Day; her Fortune was told her; she gave her some boiled Beef: She is gone away from thence.

Joseph Gould sworn.

Mr. Nares. Where do you live?

J. Gould. I live in Turkey-Street, in the Parish of Enfield: I am a Day-labouring Man.

Mr. Nares. How long have you lived there?

J. Gould. Thirty-seven Years.

Mr. Nares. Tell me whether you know Mary Squires?

J. Gould. That is the Woman that sits there.

Mr. Nares. Are you sure of it?

J. Gould. I am.

Mr. Nares. When did you first see her?

J. Gould. To the best of my Knowledge, it was the 8th or 9th of January 1753, that is, a Year ago last January.

Mr. Nares. Where did you see her?

J. Gould. I saw her in a Walk we call Trotts-Walk, leading up to Bulls-Cross, about a quarter of a Mile from Mrs. Wells's House, or something better.

Mr. Nares. Had you any Conversation with her?

J. Gould. No: I took Notice of her; I thought I never saw such a Woman in my Life before for Features.

Mr. Nares. Had you heard Mother Wells had Gypsies lodged at her House?

J. Gould. I had.

Mr. Nares. Did you see her after that?

J. Gould. Yes, I saw her twice afterwards.

Mr. Nares. About what Time?

J. Gould. As nigh as I can guess, about eight or nine Days before she was taken up; and another Time, about four or five Days before she was taken up.

Mr. Nares. Are you sure the Prisoner is the same Person you saw on the 8th or 9th of January, and the other Times after that?

J. Gould. I am, Sir.

Mr. Nares. By what do you remember the Time?

J. Gould. Mr. Parsons and his Lady went to Town on the 9th, (I live next Door to him) and my Wife was at Work there on the Monday.

Mr. Nares. What Day of the Week was the 9th?

J. Gould. It was on a Tuesday; I knew of their going.

Mr. Nares. By what did you know of that?

J. Gould. It was the Time they went away after Christmas.

Mr. Nares. Did you see the old Woman in Newgate after this?

J. Gould. I did.

Mr. Nares. Was she shewed you, or did you find her out?

J. Gould. She was shewed me: There were a great many People in the Room; she was by the Fire-side.

Mr. Nares. Do you mean any body pointed at her, and said, that was the Woman?

J. Gould. No, Sir, on the first Sight, at coming into the Room, I knew her again, without being told.

Mr. Nares. Are you sure the Woman you saw in Newgate, is the same you see now?

J. Gould. Yes, Sir.

Cross-examined.

Mr. Willes. How far was you off from her when you saw her on the 8th or 9th of January?

J. Gould. Close by her.

Mr. Willes. Was it the same Day that Mr. and Mrs. Parsons went to Town?

J. Gould. I cannot tell whether it was the same Day or no.

Mr. Willes. Was any body with her at that Time?

J. Gould. No, Sir.

Mr. Willes. Had you any Conversation with her?

J. Gould. No, Sir.

Mr. Willes. When was you told that Mother Wells had got Gypsies lodged at her House?

J. Gould. That was before I saw her the first Time.

Mr. Willes. Who told you so?

J. Gould. To the best of my Remembrance, Virtue Hall did: I heard her tell other People so.

Mr. Willes. What Day was this?

J. Gould. I cannot tell the very Day.

Mr. Willes. When did you first recollect this of Mr. Parsons's going to Town, in order to assist your Memory?

J. Gould. After I had seen the old Gypsey in Newgate.

Mr. Willes. When you saw her there, were there there no other People in that Part of the Room but her?

J. Gould. Upon my Word, I don't remember there were any, besides the People that went with me.

Mr. Willes. When you saw her, four or five Days before she was taken up, were there any body with her then?

J. Gould. She came into a Public House where I was.

Mr. Just. Clive. Where did you see Virtue Hall, when she was relating this?

J. Gould. At a Place called the Two Bridges; there were several People there then.

Mr. Just. Clive. Can you tell any of their Names?

J. Gould. I cannot: Then they told me that Person was Virtue Hall, and they called her by her Name: I did not know her before.

Mr. Willes. How long was this before the People were taken up?

J. Gould. It was some Time before.

Mr. Just. Clive. Did you use the House of Mother Wells?

J. Gould. I never did use it; I have kept a Farm fifteen Years next Door to it.

Mr. Nares. What is the Two Bridges? A House of that Name, or what?

J. Gould. No, it is in the Street.

Recorder. How was the Gypsey dressed?

J. Gould. Upon my Word I cannot certainly tell: She had a Cloak, and a Hat tied over her Head, and smoaking a Pipe.

Mr. Just. Clive. Was she brisk and nimble, or was she feeble?

J. Gould. No, not brisk.

Mr. Just. Clive. Was your Wife with you when you saw Virtue Hall?

J. Gould. No.

Mary Gould sworn.

Mary Gould. I am Wife to the last Evidence, and live in Turkey-Street.

Mr. Nares. Do you know Mary Squires?

M. Gould. I know the Gypsey Woman. I did not know her Name when I saw her.

Mr. Nares. Look about, and see if you see her.

M. Gould. Yes, Sir, there she sits; I am sure that is the Woman.

Mr. Nares. When did you see her at Enfield?

M. Gould. I saw her on the 11th or 12th of January 1753, at my Door in Turkey-Street: I am not certain which Day of the two; it was either on a Thursday or Friday, I am sure.

Mr. Nares. In what Manner did she come?

M. Gould. My Door was bolted: She called at it, and I opened it: She asked me, if I had any China to mend? I said, No. She said directly, You will not live long. I said, Mistress, I shall not give any thing, for I don't want to hear my Fortune told. I shut the Door, and watched her out at the Window, and saw her go into Mr. Harrington's Yard and out again. I was a little surprized at her, because I thought she was a very ordinary Woman. I saw her another Time before she was taken up, and that was as I sat at Work at my own Window; that was the Week before she was taken up: She asked me, if I had any China to mend then? and I told her, No.

Mr. Nares. Are you sure it was the same Person that spoke to you those two Times?

M. Gould. I am very sure.

Mr. Nares. What Reason have you to think the first was the 11th or 12th of January?

M. Gould. By reason 'Squire Parsons went to Town on the Tuesday that Week. I used to be there almost every Day: I was there on the Monday, the Day before they went, which was the 9th.

Mr. Nares. Upon your Oath, was it in that Week Mr. Parsons went to Town?

M. Gould. I am sure it was, and I am sure this here is the same Woman.

Mr. Nares. Did you ever see her before that Time?

M. Gould. I don't particularly know that I have.

Cross-examined.

Mr. Willes. How do you know Mr. Parsons went to Town on the 9th?

M. Gould. Because I was much there: I was there on New-year's Day; they were to have gone on that Day, but Madam was not very well, so it was put off till Tuesday.

Recorder. Did you know Virtue Hall?

M. Gould. I had seen her, but I had but little Knowledge of her.

Mr. Willes. Was you ever in Mother Wells's House?

M. Gould. I have.

Mr. Willes. Did you ever see the old Gypsey there?

M. Gould. No, I never did.

Mr. Just. Clive. Do you remember when your Husband saw Virtue Hall near the Two Bridges?

M. Gould. I told him, I had been affrighted by a Gypsey; and he made answer and said, Virtue Hall told him, there were Gypsies at Mother Wells's House.

Mr. Just. Clive. How was she dressed when you saw her?

M. Gould. She was dressed in the very same Dress as she was when I saw her in Newgate, with a Clout about her Head, and a plain Cap under it; a brown Sort of a Gown, I cannot tell the Colour of it, but it was not a Snuff-Colour; it was a yellowish Sort of a Gown; she was in a very tight Sort of a Dress, considering her Trade.

Humbry Holding sworn.

Mr. Nares. Where do you live?

H. Holding. I live in Turkey-Street, and have these eighteen Years: I am a Gardener.

Mr. Nares. Do you know Mary Squires, the Gypsey?

H. Holding. I do.

Mr. Nares. Look about, and see if you can see her.

H. Holding. There she is.

Mr. Nares. When was the first Time you saw her?

H. Holding. It was on the 8th of January 1753.

Mr. Nares. Why do you think it was on that Day?

H. Holding. Because a Gentleman, whom I work for, came Home on the 9th.

Mr. Nares. What Gentleman is that?

H. Holding. That is Mr. Parsons: The Gypsey came and asked me, if the Family was at Home? I said, Aye.

Mr. Nares. Had you any other Conversation with her?

H. Holding. No, I had not.

Mr.

Mr. Nares. Did you see her any other Time after this?

H. Holding. I saw her on the 11th of January, that was on a Thursday, in the same Week; then I was nailing up Vines for Dr. Harrington.

Mr. Nares. What Conversation passed?

H. Holding. She asked me, if there was any China to mend? I told her to ask at the Door. She asked at the Door, and somebody said, No; I cannot say who, but I heard the Words very plain; I was then at the End of the House.

Mr. Nares. By what do you remember this to be the Day?

H. Holding. I remember it, because I was not paid for that Work, and it was set down in my Book.

Mr. Nares. Did you see her after this?

H. Holding. I saw her again, when she was carried away to Justice Tasemaker's.

Mr. Nares. Are you sure this is the same Woman you saw before?

H. Holding. It is the very same Woman, I am certain of it; I could pick her out of a thousand.

Cross-examined.

Mr. Willes. What did you set that Work down in?

H. Holding. In my Pocket-book.

Mr. Willes. How came you not to bring your Book here?

H. Holding. I had not Presence of Mind to bring it with me.

Mr. Willes. Did you work for 'Squire Parsons then?

H. Holding. No, I did not, because he had hired a Person in the House.

Mr. Willes. Are you sure Mr. Parsons went away on the 9th?

H. Holding. I live, as it were, on the Spot; I know he went away on the Morrow after I saw her.

Mr. Willes. How long might the Gypsie be in asking those Questions?

H. Holding. She was not long with me.

Mr. Willes. How near might you be to her, when you was nailing up the Vines, on the 11th?

H. Holding. About half the Length of this Court.

Mr. Willes. Was there any Fence parted you?

H. Holding. No, none but the Gate, and I believe that was open.

Mr. Willes. Before that Time had you heard of any other Gypsies being at Mother Wells's?

H. Holding. As to that, I cannot say, for I never was at Mother Wells's in my Life.

Mr. Willes. Were there any body with her then?

H. Holding. No, there were not.

Mr. Willes. How long had 'Squire Parsons been in the Country that Christmas?

H. Holding. I don't know; but I know when he came out of the Country.

Mr. Willes. How come you to remember the Day of going out of the Country, better than when they went down?

H. Holding. By reason they are very good to the poor People when they are in the Country.

Mr. Willes. Are you used to work for Dr. Harrington? What is his Method of paying?

H. Holding. He pays sometimes in a quarter of a Year, and sometimes in half a Year.

Mr. Willes. Don't he pay you the Day you do his Work?

H. Holding. He very seldom does; and if I am not, I book it.

Mr. Willes. How came you to remember this particular Minute of the 11th, more than any other Minute? Was this any uncommon Thing?

H. Holding. No, it is what I did always, when I was not paid.

Mr. Willes. Was you ever examined upon Oath before?

H. Holding. Yes; but I could not fully give an Account, because then I could not resolve myself of the Time.

Mr. Willes. How long after this Time did you work for Dr. Harrington?

H. Holding. Not for a considerable Time.

Mr. Willes. Did you work there the next Day, or the Day before?

H. Holding. No, I did not.

Mr. Willes. How many Months after this Time was it that you was examined, and could not recollect yourself?

H. Holding. I cannot justly say how long it was after.

Mr. Willes. Cannot you tell the Day of the Month you was examined at the Mansion-House?

H. Holding. I cannot tell the Month, if I was to die.

Mr. Willes. Was you ever examined upon Oath any where else?

H. Holding. I was at the Fleece in Edmonton, by the Justices.

Mr. Willes. Can you remember the Day you was examined there?

H. Holding. I cannot.

Mr. Willes. Had you any Friend with you, when you was at the Mansion-House?

H. Holding. I had a Scrub Lawyer with me, and, I believe, there are a great many of them in Town.

Mr. Willes. What was his Name?

H. Holding. The Man is dead.

Mr. Willes. In what Way do you make your Minutes in your Book?

H. Holding. I write so much per Day.

Mr. Willes. Tell us the little Line you made on the 11th of January?

H. Holding. I put down the Day of the Month, so much per Day; that is, my Wife puts it down, as soon as I come Home: I can read, but I cannot write.

Mr. Willes. Were there any other Persons with you when you was examined at the Mansion-House?

H. Holding. There were, may-be, half a Dozen.

Mr. Nares. Upon your Oath, was it the 11th of January you worked for Dr. Harrington?

H. Holding. Upon my Oath, it was put down that very Night.

Mr. Nares. Does your Wife always set down your Work in the Book?

H. Holding. She always does.

Mr. Nares. When you was examined before my Lord-Mayor at the Mansion-House, had you seen your Book to refresh your Memory?

H. Holding. I told them there, I could not recollect it till I saw my Book.

Mr. Nares. Was you desired to recollect, the Day you was examined before my Lord-Mayor?

H. Holding. No.

Mr. Nares. Nor before the Commissioners neither?

H. Holding. No, Sir.

Baron Legge. When you could not recollect that, for Want of your Book, at that Time, how came you not to bring it now?

H. Holding. Upon my Oath, I had no Presence of Mind to bring it: I did not know it would be looked into.

Baron Legge. Do you remember how this Woman was dressed, when you saw her?

H. Holding. I cannot say as to Particulars; she was dressed very poorly.

Baron Legge. Give the best Account you can.

H. Holding. She had a Hat on her Head, and a Sort of a darkish yellowish Gown; but, as to her Face, I know it from five thousand.

Baron Legge. What Sort of a Hat?

H. Holding. A straw Hat.

Mr. Just. Clive. Was it a straw Hat, or a Bonnet?

H. Holding. I cannot say which.

Baron Legge. Was it a black, or white one?

H. Holding. Blackish it looked to be.

Baron Legge. How near was you to her?

H. Holding. As near as I am to your Honour.

Baron Legge. Had she a Cloak on?

H. Holding. She had a short one, but I cannot tell the Colour.

Baron Legge. What Sort of Health did she appear to be in? Did she appear to be a strong or weak Woman?

H. Holding. She did not appear to be very strong.

Baron Legge. Did you see her in Newgate afterwards?

H. Holding. I did, and knew her again: She was sitting on the Feet of the Bed.

Baron Legge. Were there any other Women with her?

H. Holding. I saw none, but us that went from Enfield, as I remember. — We were admitted in by Order of Sir Richard Glyn.

Sarah Vass sworn.

Sarah Vass. I am Wife to Daniel Vass: I live at Enfield, in Turkey-Street.

Mr. Nares. How long have you lived there?

S. Vass. Either thirteen or fourteen Years, come Michaelmas.

Mr. Nares. Do you know Mary Squires?

S. Vass. I do; that is the Woman, (pointing to her.)

Mr. Nares. When did you see her?

S. Vass. I saw her on the 11th of January was Twelve-month.

Mr. Nares. Where did you see her?

S. Vass. At my own House.

Mr. Nares. What was her Business there?

S. Vass. She came to tell me my Fortune at the Door.

Mr. Nares. Did she tell you your Fortune?

S. Vass. No, I would not let her.

Mr. Nares. Did you see her at any other Time?

S. Vass. Yes, several Times.

Mr. Nares. How came you to think this was the 11th of January?

S. Vass. I can give you a good Reason for it: I chare at 'Squire Parsons's, in washing and ironing: They took Coach and went to London on Tuesday the 9th of January, and I returned Home directly when they took Coach, and I saw the Gypsey two Days after that.

Mr. Nares. Are you sure of it?

S. Vass. I am certainly sure I did: After that I saw her several Times.

VOL. X.

Mr. Nares. Did she ever ask you to tell you your Fortune after this?

S. Vass. Yes, she did the Day before she was taken up: Then she came into my House; I was drinking a Dish of Tea; she came in and sat down by me, and asked me for a Pipe of Tobacco; I went to my Husband's Mug in which he keeps his Tobacco; she took hold of my Hand, and asked me to tell me my Fortune, but I refused her: Then she asked me for a Dish of Tea, and I gave her two Dishes of Tea.

Mr. Nares. How long did she stay?

S. Vass. I believe she might stay about a quarter of an Hour. She asked me, what Gentleman's House that was over the Way? I said, Madam Gibson's. She asked me, whether they would admit her? I told her, I thought they would not.

Mr. Nares. Are you very certain that is the same Woman you saw before, on the 11th of January?

S. Vass. I am sure she is the same.

Mr. Nares. Did you see her when she was taken up?

S. Vass. I did not, but I saw her in Newgate.

Mr. Nares. Are you certain this Woman, that sits here, is that Woman?

S. Vass. I am certain that is the same Woman, I am positive of it.

Cross-examined.

Mr. Davy. Did you ever see any Gypsey at Enfield-Wash like her?

S. Vass. No.

Mr. Davy. Do you think it possible for any Person, that has good Eyes in his Head, to mistake her for another Woman?

S. Vass. No, indeed, I should think not.

Mr. Davy. How often have you seen her?

S. Vass. Twice at my House, and several other Times; I saw her twice sitting in a Chandler's Shop.

Mr. Davy. By what Name was she called?

S. Vass. She went by the Name of the Gypsey Woman.

Mr. Davy. Where did they say she lodged?

S. Vass. At Mother Wells's.

Mr. Davy. Did you hear she lodged there on the 11th of January?

S. Vass. No, not till afterwards.

Mr. Davy. How long afterwards?

S. Vass. As nigh as I can guess, it was three or four Days after.

Mr. Davy. Was you at Home when they were taken up? Before that Time did you hear she lodged at Mother Wells's?

S. Vass. Yes, before that.

Mr. Davy. Who told you where she lodged?

S. Vass. I went to a Shop, and inquired of the Woman (her Name is Mrs. Dadwell) who she was, and where she lodged; they said, at Mother Wells's.

Mr. Davy. When did you hear this?

S. Vass. As nigh as I can guess, it was three or four Days, or a Week, after the first Time I ever saw her.

Mr. Davy. What is 'Squire Parsons?

S. Vass. He is a Gentleman that took a Country-House, and he was there all the Summer to and fro; now he lives in Town; he had Lodgings in Town, and used to be backwards and forwards pretty often in the Summer; in the Winter he was at London pretty much.

Mr. Davy. How long does he usually stay in the Country?

S. Vass. He very seldom comes down in Winter; sometimes, may-be, he'd stay a Month or six Weeks.

Mr. Davy. Who does your Husband work for?

S. Vass. He works for Farmer Yarrow, and has a good many Years.

Mr. Davy. Does he work for him every Day of the Week?

S. Vass. He does, except it happens to be a Holiday.

Mr. Davy. Did you ever see the Gypsey go in or out of Wells's House?

S. Vass. No, I never did.

Mr. Davy. Did you ever see any body with her?

S. Vass. No, Sir.

Mr. Davy. Did you ever see that young Man or Woman? (meaning George and Lucy Squires.)

S. Vass. I saw them once since this.

Mr. Davy. Do you know Fortune Natus?

S. Vass. Yes.

Mr. Davy. Do you know Virtue Hall?

S. Vass. I do.

Mr. Davy. Did you ever see them going into Wells's House?

S. Vass. No, never.

Mr. Davy. Nor coming out?

S. Vass. No, Sir.

Mr. Davy. Did Natus and his Wife lodge at Mother Wells's?

S. Vass. I heard afterwards they did, but not before.

Mr. Davy. Did you see Natus and his Wife in January?

S. Vass. I don't know that I did.

Mr. Davy. Nor in the December before?

S. Vass. No, Sir.

Mr. Davy. Then, when did you see them?

S. Vass. Since the great Hurliburly.

Mr. Davy. Did you not say, you saw them often?

S. Vass. Yes, but never before that Time.

Mr. Davy. Did you ever see Virtue Hall, before she was taken up?

S. Vass. No, I never did.

Mr. Nares. Did your Husband work on Old Christmas-Day?

S. Vass. No, Sir; he went to work, and his Master refused him, and would not let him work.

Baron Legge. How long have you known Natus and his Wife?

S. Vass. Now I know them, but I did not before this Thing happened.

Baron Legge. How was Mary Squires dressed?

S. Vass. She was in a light-coloured Cloak, a beaver Hat, and a brick-coloured Gown.

Anne Johnson sworn.

A. Johnson. I live at Enfield.

Mr. Nares. How long have you lived there?

A. Johnson. Going on to twenty-seven Years.

Mr. Nares. What do you do for your Living?

A. Johnson. I spin for my Living, since my Husband died.

Mr. Nares. What was his Business?

A. Johnson. He used to sell Fish.

Mr. Nares. Do you know Mary Squires?

A. Johnson. I do; I saw her at my Door.

Mr. Nares. Look about, and see if you see her.

A. Johnson. There she sits, (pointing to her;) I am sure that is she.

Mr. Nares. When did you first see her?

A. Johnson. It was at my Door, January was a Twelve-month.

Mr. Nares. How came you to think it that Time, more than any other Time?

A. Johnson. I am sure of it; it was the 18th of January.

Mr. Nares. How do you know it?

A. Johnson. By carrying Home my Work; I carried it Home two Days before, which was the 16th.

Mr. Nares. Who do you work for?

A. Johnson. Mr. Smitberam; I have worked for him many Pounds.

Mr. Nares. How do you know by carrying Home that Work in particular?

A. Johnson. That was the first I carried Home in the New Year, which is the Reason I remember when it was.

Mr. Nares. Where did you see Mary Squires on the 18th of January?

A. Johnson. She came to my Door, and asked me, if I had any China to mend? I told her, I had not. Then she asked me, if I had any blue and white Ware to mend? I said, I had none but what I could mend myself. Then she asked me for some Victuals.

Mr. Nares. Was she alone?

A. Johnson. Yes, I saw no body with her.

Mr. Nares. Did you give her any Victuals?

A. Johnson. No, I did not.

Mr. Nares. Did you see her any Time after this?

A. Johnson. I saw her twice after; she was four Times at my Door in all.

Mr. Nares. Did you see her all the four Times?

A. Johnson. I saw her three of them; the next Time she begged for some Victuals, and to light her Pipe; I gave her no Victuals.

Mr. Nares. What, the next Time?

A. Johnson. She asked me the next Time to let her light her Pipe.

Mr. Nares. Are you sure this is the same Person?

A. Johnson. I am sure it is.

Mr. Nares. How soon was it you saw her after?

A. Johnson. This was all in ten or eleven Days, I think, the last Time I saw her was two Days before she was taken up to be brought away.

Mr. Nares. Did you see her when she was taken up?

A. Johnson. No, I did not.

Mr. Nares. Did you see her in her Confinement in Newgate?

A. Johnson. I did.

Mr. Nares. Did you know her then?

A. Johnson. I did, and I am sure she is the same Woman.

Cross-examined.

Mr. Willes. How many Years have you spun for Mr. Smitberam?

A. Johnson. Two Years and a half.

Mr. Willes. How often in a Year did you use to carry Home your Work?

A. Johnson. I don't know; I spin for another Man; sometimes him, and sometimes the other.

Mr. Willes. Do you always set it down?

A. Johnson. No, but they set us down.

Mr. Willes. Is Mr. Smitberam here?

A. Johnson.

A. Johnson. I don't know.

Mr. Willes. Did you ever see his Book?

A. Johnson. Yes, I have: That Day I am sure to be the 16th of January; and he set it down.

Mr. Willes. What Day of the Week do you carry Home your Work?

A. Johnson. I don't know that; sometimes one Day, and sometimes another.

Mr. Willes. Can you tell what Day of the Week this 16th of January was?

A. Johnson. I can't say whether it was Tuesday or Wednesday, but it was a snowy Day.

Mr. Willes. Have you ever heard there were Gypsies at Mother Wells's?

A. Johnson. I have several Times.

Mr. Willes. What Sort of a Dress was she in?

A. Johnson. She had a light-coloured Cloak on, and a red one over that, and an old black Hat, and a Thing pinned close to her Face, (it was a Clout or Handkerchief) and an old brown Gown.

Mr. Nares. Had you heard of Gypsies being at Enfield, before she came to your House?

A. Johnson. I had; I had been asked if she had been at my House, and told my Fortune.

Grace Kirby sworn.

Grace Kirby. I live at Enfield.

Mr. Nares. How long have you lived there?

G. Kirby. I have lived a Twelve-month last Christmas, or a little after, about a Week or a Fortnight.

Mr. Nares. Do you know Mary Squires?

G. Kirby. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Nares. Look about the Court, and see if you see her.

G. Kirby. That is she, Sir, (pointing to her.)

Mr. Nares. Do you remember seeing her there?

G. Kirby. Yes, she came to my Door about a Fortnight before she was taken up at Mrs. Wells's.

Mr. Nares. Are you sure it is so long as a Fortnight?

G. Kirby. Thereabouts, it may be a Day over or under; I believe it was no more than that either Way.

Mr. Nares. What did she come to your Door for?

G. Kirby. She asked me, if I sold Potatoes? I told her, I had none, nor did not know where they were sold.

Mr. Nares. Did you take much Notice of her?

G. Kirby. I did; so much, that I knew her again when I saw her.

Mr. Nares. Where did you see her again?

G. Kirby. The next Time I saw her was in Newgate.

Mr. Nares. Did you know her then?

G. Kirby. Then I was certain sure she was the same Person.

Mr. Nares. And are you certain sure this is the same Person here?

G. Kirby. I am, Sir.

Mr. Nares. What Reason have you to think it was about the Time you have mentioned?

G. Kirby. Because I had been but a very little Time in my House: I had lived in the same Parish, about half a Mile further.

Mr. Nares. What Time did you come to that House?

G. Kirby. It was some Time after Christmas.

Mr. Nares. Were there any body with her?

G. Kirby. No, there were none.

Mr. Nares. How was she dressed?

G. Kirby. I don't know that.

Cross-examined.

Mr. Davy. How soon after your coming to that House did you see her?

G. Kirby. I can't say to any Time.

Mr. Davy. How soon after Christmas did you come to live there?

G. Kirby. I cannot say; it might be a Week; or it might be a Fortnight.

Mr. Davy. Why do you believe this?

G. Kirby. Because I have recollected my Memory.

Mr. Davy. How soon after did you recollect your Memory?

G. Kirby. The next Day.

Mr. Davy. Was you desired so to do?

G. Kirby. I was considering with myself, when it was that I saw that Woman.

Mr. Davy. When did you consider?

G. Kirby. I don't know: I did consider it.

Mr. Davy. How far do you live from Mrs. Wells's House?

G. Kirby. About half a Mile.

Mr. Davy. Are you sure it was eight Days before they were taken up, that you saw her?

G. Kirby. I cannot tell.

Mr. Nares. Tell as near as you can.

G. Kirby. As nigh as I can guess, it was a Fortnight, within a Day over or under.

Mr. Nares. How many Days is a Fortnight?

G. Kirby. There are fourteen.

Mr. Nares. Do you believe what you have said, that about a Fortnight was the Time?

G. Kirby. Yes, Sir.

Wife Basset sworn.

Mr. Nares. What is your Husband's Name?

W. Basset. It is John: We live in Green-Street at Enfield, and have lived there twenty-one Years.

Mr. Nares. Do you know Mary Squires?

W. Basset. I do; I have seen her twice.

Mr. Nares. Look about the Court, and see if you see her.

W. Basset. That is she.

Mr. Nares. When did you see her before?

W. Basset. She came to my House, and asked me to let her light a Pipe, and I gave her a Breakfast.

Mr. Nares. When was this?

W. Basset. It was either the 21st or 22d of January was Twelve-month.

Mr. Nares. What do you recollect the Day by?

W. Basset. Because I killed a Hog on the Thursday before New Christmas, and that Day a young Woman that lived with me went to Service; and that Day Month I saw the Gypsy.

Mr. Nares. What do you compute your Time from?

W. Basset. I take the Account Day by Day from the killing the Hog.

Mr. Nares. What Day of the Week do you reckon it was?

W. Basset. It was of a Monday, to be sure; that I am very certain of.

Mr. Nares. Had you any Conversation with Mary Squires?

W. Basset. She came and opened the Door, then came in, and asked me to let her light her Pipe:

Pipe: I gave her a Penny for telling me my Fortune.

Mr. Nares. Did she offer to tell you your Fortune?

W. Basset. She began to tell me.

Recorder. Are you a married Woman?

W. Basset. I am; it was a little Foolishness that belongs to Woman-kind.

Mr. Nares. Then she offered to tell you; you did not offer it.

W. Basset. I did not: She said, if I would cross her Hand with a Penny, she would tell me my Fortune.

Mr. Nares. Upon my Word, that is cheaper than she has done to any body else as we have heard of: Did she tell you your Fortune?

W. Basset. I had a little of her Nonsense.

Mr. Nares. Was it good or bad?

W. Basset. I don't know; I cannot say for that.

Mr. Nares. How long was she about telling your Fortune, and lighting her Pipe?

W. Basset. I can't tell the exact Time: I gave her some Tea, and let her sit down and warm herself.

Mr. Nares. Did you take so much Notice of her as to know her again?

W. Basset. I did; and this is the Woman.

Mr. Nares. Did you see her after this?

W. Basset. I saw her in Newgate, and told her the same that I do now; and she said, What signifies that, did I wrong you of any thing?

Mr. Nares. Did you say to her, what Time you saw her at your House?

W. Basset. Yes, I did; and she said it was not the right Time: But I said it was, and I stood to that Time.

Mr. Nares. Are you sure it was that Day?

W. Basset. It was that Day indeed.

Cross-examined.

Mr. Willes. Is that the only Reason you have to remember it, because you killed a Hog on the Day you mention?

W. Basset. That is the only Reason.

Mr. Willes. In what Manner was you introduced into her Presence in Newgate, and how was she sitting?

W. Basset. She was sitting smocking her Pipe by the Fire-side.

Recorder. Was it a Month before you saw her at your House, that you killed a Hog, or not?

W. Basset. I killed my Hog on the Thursday before New Christmas, and that Day my Servant went to her Place; and I saw the Gypsey, a Month after I killed my Hog, at my House.

Mr. Willes. Was she alone, or in Company, when you saw her in Newgate?

W. Basset. There were a great many People with her, her two Daughters, and several People that were carried up to see if they knew her or not.

Recorder. Are you sure she told you it was not right, when you mentioned the Day?

W. Basset. I am.

James Pratt sworn.

J. Pratt. I live at Chefbunt, about two Miles from Enfield; but I did live at Enfield.

Mr. Nares. What are you?

J. Pratt. I am a Day-labouring Man.

Mr. Nares. Have you seen Mary Squires?

J. Pratt. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Nares. Look about, and see if you can see her.

J. Pratt. Yes, that is she, (pointing to her.)

Mr. Nares. When was the first Time you saw her?

J. Pratt. The first Time I saw her was in William Smith's Cow-house, on a Thursday. When she came there, she asked me Leave to lie there, (I work there as a Day-man;) I told her to go to the House, and ask Leave there; she went up to the Door.

Mr. Nares. Did you hear her ask Leave?

J. Pratt. No, I did not hear her, but she lay there.

Mr. Nares. How long did she continue there?

J. Pratt. Three Days; she went away on the Sunday.

Mr. Nares. Did you see her in the Time?

J. Pratt. I did several Times.

Mr. Nares. What Day of the Month did she come there?

J. Pratt. To the best of my Remembrance, (I cannot be positive no longer than as to the House I lived in; I went out of it three Days before New Christmas) it was before I went out of the House to go to Chefbunt, where I now live; but I cannot recollect any Day of the Month.

Mr. Nares. Are you sure it was before you went to your new House?

J. Pratt. I am sensible it was.

Mr. Nares. Had you ever any Conversation with her?

J. Pratt. I can't say but I had.

Mr. Nares. Were there any other Persons with her?

J. Pratt. There were a Man and two Woman-kind, one a young Girl like, and the other may-be thirty and better.

Recorder. Were there any Children?

J. Pratt. I can't tell.

Mr. Nares. Can you tell the Time of the Day you had this Conversation?

J. Pratt. It was on a Friday, some Time of the Day, but can't tell the Hour: She complained that she lost a Horse, a little Poney, and asked me, whether I saw it? but I had not seen him.

Mr. Nares. Did she any otherwise describe the Horse but by a little one?

J. Pratt. Yes, she did; but I have forgot: I remember she said, he had a Clog on, and that her Name was on the Clog.

Mr. Nares. Did she tell you, upon your Oath, what her Name was?

J. Pratt. Yes, she did; but I did not take much Notice of it.

Mr. Nares. Should you know it when you hear it?

J. Pratt. I believe I should; I think she said her Name was Mary Squires, and that that Name was on the Clog.

Mr. Nares. Had you any other Conversation with her?

J. Pratt. Yes; on the same Day she told me it was her Belief, I was the Man that had the Horse.

Mr. Nares. Why did she say so?

J. Pratt. Because I worked in the Yard, and the Horse was missing, and I happened to speak a Word to the Man that was with her: I asked him, what he would give me to help him to his Horse again? so he went and told her directly.

Mr.

Mr. Nares. Do you think you should know that Man?

J. Pratt. I can't be positive.

Mr. Nares. Look about, and see if you see any body like him.

(He looks round; and as his Eye passed over George Squires backwards and forwards, George held down his Head.)

A Juryman. I see George hold his Face down, as the Witness looks towards him.

Mr. Davy. George, when Witnesses are ordered to look for you, hold up your Head; I myself saw you this Time; it does not look well.

J. Pratt. It is hard saying, I will not swear in that.

Mr. Nares. Had you any other Talk with her?

J. Pratt. Yes, Sir: After she told me about having the Horse, she said, she had got a very good Friend not far off, and she would go to him, and if she wanted a Guinea or two, she could have it; and she would go to the Cunning Man, and would have the Horse, if he was above Ground.

Mr. Nares. How came she to talk of going to a Cunning Man, when she would be looked upon to be a Cunning Woman herself?

J. Pratt. I don't know that.

Mr. Nares. Did she ever undertake to tell you your Fortune?

J. Pratt. No, she did not.

Mr. Nares. Upon your Oath, is this the Woman you saw at that Time?

J. Pratt. Upon my Oath, that is the Woman, that is the Woman.

Mr. Nares. Did you ever see her after that, before you saw her in Newgate?

J. Pratt. No: When I saw her in Newgate, I was turned up Stairs; the Door was opened; there were several People at the Door; they bade me look in; I knew her immediately, the very same Moment; I said, That is the Woman that I came after.

Cross-examined.

Mr. Davy. Was there any other Woman in Newgate but her?

J. Pratt. Not that I saw: I said, That is the Woman, and so it was, certainly.

Mr. Davy. Were there other People at Enfield with her, when you saw her there?

J. Pratt. There were.

Mr. Davy. Were any of them like her in the Face?

J. Pratt. No, none of them.

Mr. Davy. Something like her?

J. Pratt. No.

Mr. Davy. Was you ever in a Court of Justice before?

J. Pratt. No.

Mr. Davy. Was you ever upon your Oath before?

J. Pratt. No, Sir.

Mr. Davy. Will you venture to say, as you are upon your Oath, that this is the Woman, and no other, and you are not mistaken?

J. Pratt. Upon my Oath, this is the Woman, I am positive in my Conscience, and I am sure that was no other Woman; this is the Woman I saw at that blessed Time.

Mr. Davy. Did you ever see a Woman like her in your Life?

Vol. X.

J. Pratt. No, never in my Days:

Mr. Davy. How came she to tell you her Name was upon the Clog?

J. Pratt. Because she had lost the Horse; and she desired me, if I should see the Horse, or find the Clog, to let her know; and told me, her Name was Mary Squires, and that it was upon the Clog.

Mr. Davy. Do you know how large the Clog was?

J. Pratt. No, I never saw it.

Mr. Davy. Do you remember she told you the Name was Mary Squires?

J. Pratt. I am certain of it.

Mr. Davy. Was it not Sarah?

J. Pratt. I am sure it was Mary Squires.

Lydia Farroway sworn.

Mr. Nares. Where do you live?

L. Farroway. I live at Enfield-Wash with Mr. Howard.

Mr. Nares. How long have you lived there?

L. Farroway. I came there on the 1st of August was Twelve-month, and lived with them a Year and a quarter, and upwards.

Mr. Nares. Was you there on Christmas was Twelve-month?

L. Farroway. I was.

Mr. Nares. Tell us, as near as you can, when you first saw the Gypsey.

L. Farroway. I saw her more than once or twice.

Mr. Nares. Tell us the first Time.

L. Farroway. I will, as near as I can; but I must begin with another Time, not the first: As I was going with my young Master to School about the latter Part of January was Twelve-month, I saw her at a Gentleman's House, talking to the Maid; to say to the Day of the Month, I cannot.

Mr. Nares. Do you know when the Gypsey Woman was taken up?

L. Farroway. That was on a Thursday, to the best of my Remembrance; and the Tuesday was Se'nnight before I saw her.

Mr. Nares. Name the Gentleman's Name that belongs to that House?

L. Farroway. It was Mr. Mackhouse's, a Quaker, just on this Side the Bell.

Mr. Nares. Did you see her before that?

L. Farroway. I saw her once or twice before; but how long before, I can't say.

Mr. Nares. Are you positive you saw her once or twice before?

L. Farroway. Upon my Oath, I am positive I saw her once or twice before.

Mr. Nares. Look about the Court, and tell me if you see her any where here.

L. Farroway. That is the Woman, I am positive to her, (pointing to her.)

Mr. Nares. Did you see her after that?

L. Farroway. I did; I saw her get into the Cart when she was carried away, and I saw her after that in Newgate.

Mr. Nares. Did you think that was the same Woman, when you saw her get into the Cart?

L. Farroway. I did; she was the first Woman that got into the Cart.

Mr. Nares. Are you sure the Time you mention you saw her talking to a Maid-servant, was in January?

L. Farroway. It was, I am sure.

Mr. Nares. Are you sure that Woman is the same which you saw in the Cart?

L. Farroway. I am sure of it.

Mr. Nares. Was that the same Person which you saw in Newgate?

L. Farroway. It was; and this is the Woman sitting here.

Mr. Nares. How came you to fix upon the Tuesday was Se'nnight before she was taken up?

L. Farroway. Because I had been making some Pyes against my young Master's Birth-day, which was the 29th of January; and we made them before the Time, that they might be cold, to be heated again.

Mr. Nares. Did they come to your Master's Pump at all?

L. Farroway. One of the Daughters did; I saw her there two or three Times.

Mr. Nares. About what Time?

L. Farroway. About the Time I saw her Mother.

Mr. Nares. Are you the Person that went and told your Mistress that the Gypsy Girl was in the Yard?

L. Farroway. I am, Sir; and my Mistress went to the Parlour Window to see her.

Mr. Nares. What Day of the Month was this?

L. Farroway. I can't tell that, nor I can't tell the Week.

Cross-examined.

Mr. Willes. Are you sure your young Master's Birth-day is on the 29th of January?

L. Farroway. I am sure it is.

Mr. Willes. What Pyes were you making?

L. Farroway. Mince-pyes.

Mr. Willes. Why did you make them so long before-hand?

L. Farroway. I made them so long before-hand, that we might warm them by the Fire on his Birth-day.

Mr. Nares. Had you ever seen Mary Squires in any body's Shop at any Time?

L. Farroway. I can't say I had.

Mr. Willes. When was the first Time you saw her?

L. Farroway. To say the first Time, I can't; but the Time I can be positive of, was the 23d of January.

Mr. Willes. Is the Birth-day the 29th by Old Stile or New?

L. Farroway. It was on a Monday, and by the New Stile.

Mr. Willes. Did you see the Gypsy first, or her Daughter come for Water first?

L. Farroway. To the best of my Memory, I saw the Gypsy first.

Mr. Willes. Which of her Daughters was it that came to the Pump?

L. Farroway. I can't say which.

Mr. Nares. You say you saw the Gypsy before you saw the Daughter, but can't fix upon that Time?

L. Farroway. No, I can't indeed.

Margaret Richardson sworn.

Mr. Nares. Where do you live?

M. Richardson. I live in Green-Street now, but did live in Turkey-Street, Enfield.

Mr. Nares. How long have you lived in Green-Street?

M. Richardson. Ever since last Michaelmas; I lived in the other thirteen Years.

Mr. Nares. Do you know Mary Squires?

M. Richardson. I know this Woman, (pointing to Mary Squires.)

Mr. Nares. Where did you see her?

M. Richardson. I saw her at Mrs. Waterhouse's in Turkey-Street, in the New Christmas Week, as near as I can guess.

Mr. Nares. What is her Business?

M. Richardson. She sells Butter, Cheese, Flour, and all manner of Things for poor Folks.

Mr. Nares. What did she go to buy there?

M. Richardson. I can't say nothing to what she came to buy; she was smoking a Pipe when I went in there.

Mr. Nares. Are you sure this is the same Woman?

M. Richardson. I am sensible and certain sure this is the same Woman.

Mr. Nares. Was you long in that Shop?

M. Richardson. I sat down there, I believe, a quarter of an Hour; and I took particular Notice of her, because I never saw the like before, and I was surprized.

Mr. Nares. Was you in the same Room with her?

M. Richardson. The Shop and House is all one Room; the Fire-place is there; I left her there when I went away.

Mr. Nares. Did you ever see her at any other Time?

M. Richardson. I saw her come by my Door in Turkey-Street on Old Christmas-Day: My Dog had like to have fell upon her; but my Husband was in the Yard, and he prevented him.

Mr. Nares. Are you sure that was the same Woman you saw in the Shop?

M. Richardson. I am positive it was.

Mr. Nares. Are you sure this was on Old Christmas-Day?

M. Richardson. I am.

Mr. Nares. Did your Husband work on Old Christmas-Day?

M. Richardson. No; as he played the New Christmas-Day, he was resolved to make Holiday on that; so he was at Home.

Mr. Nares. Did you ever see her after?

M. Richardson. Not till she was out of Wells's House, and put into the Cart; then I shook Hands with Mother Wells, and told her she had done for herself: My Husband was the Man that drove the Cart: The Gypsy was the first that got into it, and Wells the next, and Virtue Hall the next. I saw them all go off.

Mr. Nares. Did you ever see her in Custody?

M. Richardson. No, I did not.

Cross-examined.

Mr. Willes. So you told Mother Wells she had done for herself; what was her Reply?

M. Richardson. She said, she should return again.

Mr. Willes. Then she and you are very good Friends?

M. Richardson. No.

Mr. Willes. How came you to insult her?

M. Richardson. I never had a Quarrel with her, upon my Oath.

Mr. Willes. Then how came you to say so?

M. Richardson. Because she had been in a great many many Broils and Troubles, and no body thought she would have got out of them.

Mr. Willes. Do you know which is Old Christmas-Day, and which is New Christmas-Day?

M. Richardson. You must tell me, my Memory cannot be so good.

Mr. Willes. Which comes first?

M. Richardson. Why, the New Christmas-Day.

Mr. Willes. How many Days Difference?

M. Richardson. Some call it nine, but there may be more.

Mr. Willes. How old are you, good Woman?

M. Richardson. I don't know justly.

Mr. Willes. What Day of the Week was Old Christmas-Day?

M. Richardson. It was of a Tuesday or Wednesday, I can't remember which.

Mr. Willes. Is Christmas-Day, Holy Thursday or Good Friday?

M. Richardson. I can't resolve no such Thing; I am no Scholar; I can't pretend to know such Things.

Mr. Willes. What Month is Christmas-Day in?

M. Richardson. I can't say that neither, because you put me to a Stop.

Mr. Willes. Is it the 25th of February?

M. Richardson. I don't know justly, indeed.

Mr. Nares. You put the poor old Woman in a Hurry.

Recorder. Don't be affrighted: Can you tell what Month Christmas is in?

M. Richardson. I cannot.

Recorder. In what Season of the Year is it?

M. Richardson. To be sure I can tell that, it is in Winter.

Recorder. Don't be terrified; you are come here to tell the whole Truth, and nothing but the Truth, and not to tell a particular Story, but to answer all such Questions that the Court shall think proper to ask you.

Mr. Willes. Pray, why do you keep Christmas Holidays?

No Answer.

George Clements sworn.

Mr. Nares. Where do you live?

George Clements. I live at Enfield Highway with Mr. Hamilton; I entered Yesterday after I went Home.

Mr. Nares. Did you live with Mr. Star any Time?

G. Clements. Yes, Sir; I came away last Michaelmas; he lives down the Marsh-Lane by Mrs. Wells's.

Mr. Nares. How long did you live with him?

G. Clements. About a Year and a quarter.

Mr. Nares. Do you know Mary Squires?

G. Clements. I do; that is the Woman that sits there in a red Cloak.

Mr. Nares. Are you very sure of it?

G. Clements. I am sure.

Mr. Nares. Do you know Mrs. Wells?

G. Clements. I do; my Master lives but about a hundred Yards from her House.

Mr. Nares. Do you remember the Time she was taken up?

G. Clements. I do.

Mr. Nares. How long had you seen Mary Squires, before Mrs. Wells was taken up?

G. Clements. I had seen her about a Fortnight before that.

Mr. Nares. Where did you see her?

G. Clements. She came into my Master's House, and wanted to tell my Mistress her Fortune.

Mr. Nares. Did she come in of her own Accord?

G. Clements. She opened the Door, and came in, as I was sitting at Dinner. My Mistress would not let her tell her Fortune; she was afraid of her, and gave her a Bit of black Pudding to get rid of her. She asked my Mistress to let her have a Pound of pickled Pork.

Mr. Nares. Did she want any thing else?

G. Clements. I don't remember any thing else.

Mr. Nares. How long did she stay in the Kitchen?

G. Clements. I can't tell how long.

Mr. Nares. Did you see her after this?

G. Clements. I did, about two or three Days after, as she was going up into the Walk to Turkey-Street; it was a very cold Day.

Mr. Nares. Was any body with her?

G. Clements. No, no body.

Mr. Nares. What do you call that Walk?

G. Clements. There is no Name to it, as I know of. I said to her, It is a very cold Day. I remembered that was the Woman I had seen at my Mistress's.

Mr. Nares. Did you ever see her afterwards?

G. Clements. No, only when I saw her in Newgate, and then she knowed me.

Mr. Nares. How do you know that?

G. Clements. I asked her, whether she knew me? She said, she did.

Mr. Nares. Did you ask her that of your own Accord?

G. Clements. I did; and she said to me, I asked your Mistress to let me have a Pound of pickled Pork, and what Harm did I do you if I was there?

Mr. Nares. Was you before the Grand Jury?

G. Clements. No, I was not.

Cross-examined.

Mr. Willes. Why do you know it was a Fortnight before they were taken up?

G. Clements. She came to our House on a Thursday: My Master was gone to Hertford to fetch a Load of Pease, and he carried them to London on the Friday.

Mr. Willes. What Day of the Month?

G. Clements. I can't tell the Day of the Month. This Thursday Fortnight before she was taken up, then I was spreading Dung in the Marsh.

Mr. Willes. Do you ever slide on the Ice?

G. Clements. No, I never could slide in my Life.

Mr. Willes. Have you seen Boys slide on the Ice?

G. Clements. I have.

Mr. Willes. Do you remember a Pond near Mrs. Wells's House?

G. Clements. Yes, I used to water my Horses there.

Mr. Willes. Morning and Night?

G. Clements. Yes.

Mr. Willes. Do you know the Window that they suppose Canning made her Escape from?

G. Clements. I do.

Mr. Willes. Could you, by looking out of that Window, see that Pond?

G. Clements. I could very plainly.

Mr. Willes. How many Yards might it be from the Window?

G. Clements. It may be about eight Yards:

Mr. Willes.

Mr. Willes. Do you recollect whether there was frosty Weather that January?

G. Clements. Yes, there was.

Mr. Willes. Was that Pond froze over then?

G. Clements. It was; we were forced to break the Ice for the Horses to drink.

Mr. Willes. Have you ever seen the Boys slide on the Ice on that Pond?

G. Clements. I have.

Mr. Willes. How many have you seen there sliding together?

G. Clements. Two or three at a Time.

Mr. Willes. What Day of the Year is New Christmas-Day of?

G. Clements. I can't say that.

Mr. Willes. What Month is it in.

G. Clements. December.

Mr. Willes. The Beginning or latter End?

G. Clements. The 25th.

Mr. Willes. What Day is Old Christmas-Day of?

G. Clements. It is eleven Days after.

Mr. Nares. Are you sure it was on the Thursday Fortnight before Wells was taken up, that you saw Mary Squires?

G. Clements. I am sure it was; and that same Day my Master went to Hertford.

Mr. Willes. Do you know William Headland?

G. Clements. I do.

Mr. Willes. Is he a sober Youth, or not?

G. Clements. I know no Harm of the Boy.

Mr. Willes. Whether, amongst the Boys of the same Age, is his Character a good or bad one? If he has a good Character, upon your Oath say so; if not, upon your Oath say it.

G. Clements. I am sure I never heard any body give him a bad Character.

Hannab Fensham sworn.

Mr. Williams. Where do you live?

H. Fensham. I live at Enfield.

Mr. Williams. Are you a married Woman?

H. Fensham. I am; my Husband's Name is John Fensham; he is a Gardener.

Mr. Williams. How long have you lived at Enfield?

H. Fensham. Fifteen or sixteen Years.

Mr. Williams. Look at that old Woman, take a full View of her.

H. Fensham. I know her; I have seen her before.

Mr. Williams. When?

H. Fensham. On the 16th of January 1753, I mean after New Christmas-Day, I saw her in Trotts-Walk, on the Side of Madam Crow's Garden, in Enfield, pretty near the Highway.

Mr. Williams. What was she doing?

H. Fensham. I met her in the Walk.

Mr. Williams. What Time of the Day?

H. Fensham. In the fore Part of the Day.

Mr. Williams. What Day of the Week?

H. Fensham. I can't recollect what Day of the Week.

Mr. Williams. Have you ever seen her since the 16th?

H. Fensham. I have several Times seen her pass and repass?

Mr. Williams. What was her Business?

H. Fensham. I don't know that, except it was going to the Chandler's Shop.

Mr. Williams. Do you know the Time she was taken up?

H. Fensham. I was not there then.

Mr. Williams. Did you see her often between the 16th of January and 1st of February?

H. Fensham. I did divers Times.

Mr. Williams. Did you see her after she was taken up?

H. Fensham. I did in Newgate, and I recollected her then.

Mr. Williams. Look at her again; are you certain this is the same Person?

H. Fensham. Yes, Sir, I am certain of that.

Mr. Williams. What may be your Reason for recollecting the 16th of January?

H. Fensham. There was a Snow on the 15th at Night, and the 16th it was wet; and walking along, I had like to have fell, as my Pattens were on: She stopped and looked at me, and I at her: When I came Home, my Neighbour said, This Snow is come in the right Season, Yesterday was the 15th; then I said, This must be the 16th; and not only that, but I went to the Almanack, and looked that very Day.

Mr. Williams. Did she speak to you?

H. Fensham. No, nor I to her; but her Person is so particular, that I can swear she is the same.

Mr. Williams. What did she appear to be?

H. Fensham. A Gypsey, which I had heard of before: I was asked, if I had seen the Gypsey, because she went up and down telling Fortunes.

Mr. Williams. Was you asked before or after this?

H. Fensham. It was two or three Days after, and then I knew her.

Cross-examined.

Mr. Willes. What is the Reason you know it to be the 16th?

H. Fensham. Because it was a great Snow on the 15th at Night.

Recorder. Did you see any Company with her at any Time?

H. Fensham. No, I did not.

Mr. Willes. Did you look directly to the Almanack?

H. Fensham. No, Sir, not till the 16th at Night.

Mr. Willes. Are you very well skilled in Almanacks?

H. Fensham. Why not? I can read and write a little.

Mr. Willes. Do you know what Day of the Week it is by the Almanack?

H. Fensham. I can, I think so; my Head is good enough for that.

Mr. Willes. Look in this Almanack, and tell me what Day of the Week it is?

H. Fensham. (She takes it in her Hand, which was a common Sheet Almanack, folded up into a Book.) I can't see by this, it is so small.

Mr. Willes. Look at it again, and take your Time.

H. Fensham. I cannot see without my Spectacles, (she puts them on) you shall not fool me so.

Mr. Willes. Tell me by this the Day of the Week for the 14th of December.

H. Fensham. This is not such an Almanack as I look in; I look in a Sheet Almanack; I cannot tell by this.

Mr. Willes. Give it me again, if you cannot tell. All the Reason you have to fix it is, that the Snow fell on that Day upon which you referred to your Almanack; and now you have shewn your Skill in Almanacks.

Mr.

Mr. Williams. How long was it after New Christmas? Was it a Fortnight, or three Weeks, or a Month?

H. Fenham. It was not much above a Fortnight after.

Mr. Williams. Do you know which is Sunday in the Almanack? (She takes it again.)

Mr. Williams. Look in the Month of January. (She tells down from the 1st to the 7th Day, and said that was Sunday, which happened to be Tuesday.)

Elizabeth Sherrard sworn.

Mr. Williams. Where do you live?

E. Sherrard. At Ponder's-End; that is about a Mile and half from Enfield. I keep a Room, and pay my Rent myself.

Mr. Williams. Do you remember seeing the Gypsey about Enfield?

E. Sherrard. I do; I saw her three Days running before New Christmas, Thursday, Friday, and Saturday.

Mr. Williams. Look about, and see if you see her here. (She could not see her; she went down and looked about, and up again twice; the last Time she pointed to her.)

E. Sherrard. Why, this is the Woman.

Mr. Williams. What Thursday, Friday, and Saturday do you mean?

E. Sherrard. I mean immediately before New Christmas.

Mr. Williams. Where did you see her?

E. Sherrard. In Mother Wells's House. I went there, and went into her Parlour, and when I came out again, I saw the Gypsey stand at the Kitchen Door. I turned back again, and asked Mrs. Wells, who she had got in her House? She said, Lodgers. On the Friday I went into the Marsh-Lane, and saw her standing at the Window; and on Saturday I went down to Chestnut, and she was standing then at the Door.

Mr. Williams. How did you come to go to Mrs. Wells's?

E. Sherrard. She asked me to come in, that is, my Neighbour Wells did; she wanted to see me; because I had not been well.

Mr. Williams. Had you any Acquaintance with her?

E. Sherrard. No, nor never went near her House.

Mr. Williams. Have you ever seen the Gypsey since that Time, before To-day?

E. Sherrard. No, Sir, I never saw her but them Times, and this Time.

Mr. Williams. Did you see any body there that belonged to her?

E. Sherrard. There were two young Wenches in the Parlour, and a young Man in the Kitchen; but whether they were her Son and two Daughters, I cannot tell.

Mr. Williams. Had you any Conversation with her?

E. Sherrard. No, I never changed a Word with her; I don't like to have to do with them, I don't like them so well.

Cross-examined.

Mr. Davy. Look at that Man, (meaning George Squires;) Is that the Man?

E. Sherrard. I did not see his Face.

Mr. Davy. Did you see the two young Women's Faces?

E. Sherrard. I did; but whether I know them or not, I don't know; for they have changed their Habits to be sure; that is one of them, (pointing to Mary the Daughter.)

Mr. Davy. Lucy, shew your Face.

E. Sherrard. Yes, this is the other: I think I can swear to them.

Mr. Davy. Do you swear they are the same?

E. Sherrard. They are very much like them.

Mr. Davy. You went down twice to look at the old Woman; did you see her Face the first Time?

E. Sherrard. Yes, I did, but did not mind her till afterwards.

Mr. Davy. I hope you mind what you say; you know the Consequence of Perjury: You are before God, and a Court of Justice; therefore attend to me: Did you see that old Woman upon your going down the first Time from off the Place you now stand?

E. Sherrard. I did not know her, because she is clean; she is not so nasty and dirty as she was before.

Mr. Davy. Then the second Time you did recollect her: You say she is the same Woman?

E. Sherrard. Yes; I do.

Mr. Davy. Did you see her Face the first Time going down?

E. Sherrard. No, I did not see her Face, because I did not take so much Notice.

Mr. Davy. Did not you see her Face, or did not you know her Face?

E. Sherrard. I did see her Face; but being clean, she is quite altered.

Mr. Davy. The Man that swore you said, you were to swear to the whole Truth, and nothing but the Truth: You have one Foot in the Grave, and the other out, be careful what you say: Was she cleaner the first Time than she was the second?

E. Sherrard. She is all the same, but I did not take so much Notice; and being cleaner, she is altered.

Mr. Davy. Do you swear to her by her Complexion, or Features?

E. Sherrard. By her Complexion and Features both.

Mr. Davy. Did you ever see such another Woman in your Life?

E. Sherrard. No, I never did.

Mr. Davy. What Day of the Month is New Christmas-Day?

E. Sherrard. I cannot tell indeed; because I can neither write nor read.

Mr. Davy. What Month is it in?

E. Sherrard. I cannot tell.

Mr. Davy. Was it in June, or July?

E. Sherrard. I cannot tell.

Mr. Davy. Was it in June?

E. Sherrard. I cannot tell.

Mr. Davy. Was it in April?

E. Sherrard. No, no; it was not in April.

Mr. Davy. What Month then?

E. Sherrard. It might be in June, for whatever I know: I know that is the Woman to be sure.

Alderman Scott. Was it in Winter, or in Summer?

E. Sherrard. It was in Winter.

Mr. Davy. Is New Christmas before Old Christmas, or after?

E. Sherrard. Nay, New Christmas is before Old Christmas, I am sure.

Mr. Davy. Did you keep New Christmas? Where you live, do you go to Church?

E. Sherrard. Yes, I know it by going to Church, and every thing.

Mr. Davy. Did you go to Church on Old Christmas-Day?

E. Sherrard. Yes.

Recorder. What Day of the Week was New Christmas-Day?

E. Sherrard. It was on the Tuesday, was it not? It was Monday or Tuesday howsoever.

Mr. Davy. Do you go to Church every Sunday?

E. Sherrard. I very seldom miss when it is fair Weather.

Mr. Davy. Did you go to Church the Sunday before New Christmas-Day?

E. Sherrard. I did on Christmas-Day, and the Sunday before.

Mr. Davy. How many Days were there between?

E. Sherrard. You can make it but two Days, be it how it will.

Mr. Davy. Are you sure?

E. Sherrard. It was about three Days; it was no more, nor could be any more.

Mr. Davy. How came you to know it was before New Christmas?

E. Sherrard. Why, I'll tell you how I came to know: Mrs. Wells bid me come, and said she would give me something for a Christmas-Box: When I came there, she asked me to come in; I did, but did not stay but a very little Time: When I came to the Parlour Door, I saw the old Gentlewoman standing at the Kitchen Door.

Mr. Davy. What did she give you for a Christmas-Box?

E. Sherrard. She did not give me no great Matter.

Mr. Davy. There is no Harm in saying what it was.

E. Sherrard. It was a small Matter; I had but a Penny.

Mr. Davy. Then she gave you a Penny for your Christmas-Box?

E. Sherrard. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Davy. Had you ever a Christmas-Box of her before?

E. Sherrard. No.

Mr. Davy. Did she give it you before or after Christmas-Day?

E. Sherrard. It was three Days before.

Mr. Davy. Did any body else give you a Christmas-Box?

E. Sherrard. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Davy. Had you ever a Farthing given you before Christmas-Day?

E. Sherrard. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Davy. From whom? tell me that.

E. Sherrard. At Mr. Pickel's, and all the People that are able; they always give me something at Christmas, and to all their poor Neighbours.

Mr. Davy. What Business are you?

E. Sherrard. I work for my Living, as other People do.

Mr. Davy. Is it usual to give before Christmas or after?

E. Sherrard. We always go before Christmas.

Mr. Davy. Do all give before Christmas?

E. Sherrard. No, some give after Christmas.

Mr. Davy. Who are they?

E. Sherrard. The Gentlemen at Bushy-Hill do.

Mr. Davy. Where do the People live that give before Christmas?

E. Sherrard. All the People at Enfield do.

Mr. Williams. Then you have Christmas-Boxes given you before Christmas? Then, I believe, you know pretty well when Christmas comes.

E. Sherrard. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Williams. What, you are a poor Woman? Those People give it you before Christmas, in order to spend at Christmas?

E. Sherrard. Yes, Sir; only the Quakers, at Bushy-Hill, give it after Christmas.

Mr. Williams. When Christmas comes, you know it, don't you?

E. Sherrard. Yes, I do, Sir.

Recorder. Do you know New-year's Day?

E. Sherrard. I do.

Recorder. When does that happen?

E. Sherrard. That is the Week after Christmas-Day.

Recorder. How many Days are there after New Christmas-Day to New-year's Day?

E. Sherrard. A Week.

Recorder. Was you ever in the Workshop at Mrs. Wells's?

E. Sherrard. No, never in my Life; I never heard of it before.

Mr. Williams. Did you never hear there was such a Place as the Workshop at Mrs. Wells's?

E. Sherrard. No, indeed I did not.

Mr. Nares. On Saturday Night Mr. Moreton received a Letter in Court, giving an Account that there was one Mrs. Edwards, who could give some Light into this Affair: Upon that he desired she might be subpoena'd. She was not in our original Briefs, and, I declare, I have stuck to that very strictly, not to admit any Witnesses that are not in the Brief. We are totally in the Judgment of the Court, whether she shall be called or not. The Letter is anonymous.

Mr. Davy. The Gentlemen have been so candid as to shew me this Letter: I have not, to this Moment, attempted to oppose any thing, or the asking any Questions. What has been done in this Case, I have not done it. I have been in the Search of Truth: But after your Lordship has tied us down very strictly, without any Possibility of Release, I hope the Rule extends general without Exception. I submit it as an Objection, with regard to the general Rule of Practice; but, I imagine, the Court will not think it proper, considering what has been done.

Mr. Nares. Mr. Davy mentions he has not objected to any Evidence; I don't know any Evidence that has been called he could object to, on our Side. We have not objected, or stopped them, in any Instance: But here is a poor Girl on her Trial; I would submit it, how far the Court thinks this Agreement binds.

Baron Legge. I will tell you my Opinion as to this Matter: I thought it a right Proposal, when made, on both Sides, that you should go on, according to your Briefs, stated at that Time, in regard to the Trial; and as it has come to an unusual Length, there was an absolute Necessity for such an Agreement, and to depart from it is an unprecedented Thing; therefore we must ward against all the Mischiefs that can arise from it; the worst that can arise is a growing Evidence upon an anonymous Letter; there is no Foundation on either Side for it, and we are not to admit of it.

Mr. Just. Clive. I am entirely of the same Opinion with my Brother: Upon this Evidence it it will be left with the Jury, upon which Side the Evidence is most conclusive.

Mr. Nares. It was my Duty to mention it, as Mr. Moreton desired she might be subpoena'd; therefore I hope the Court will excuse me. We will call Mr. Salt to prove the Examination of Elizabeth Canning before Justice Fielding.

Mr. Davy. Mr. Salt cannot explain away a written Evidence taken before a Magistrate: I object to his Evidence.

Mr. Nares. Then we will call to the Confession of Mother Wells.

Mr. Davy. My Lord, I object to that: She is a very proper Evidence herself, she has been branded in the Hand; if they will produce her, she is within a few Yards of the Court.

Mr. Nares. This Girl is indicted for what she gave in Evidence against Susannah Wells and Mary Squires; she is now called upon for a Perjury in swearing upon that particular Trial. Now these two Persons were convicted; therefore, I take it for granted, we are at Liberty to give in a Circumstance to prove what she said, in Evidence on the Indictment. All that Wells had said at that Time was Evidence against Wells, and all that Squires had said was Evidence against herself. We are now come to establish her Evidence, standing at the Time she was examined; and, if we can prove from their own Declarations, that Canning and Squires were there, we have a proper Right to call in such Evidence, in order to corroborate that Girl's Testimony; for it is that Testimony that she gave upon the Trial that is to be admitted.

Mr. Davy. I will beg leave, in order to give Light to this Objection, to put the Case more familiarly: Suppose a Person had sworn on a particular Day that I was at York, and that I said I was at York; now my saying I was at York, is no Reason at all for their swearing I was there. I can only give them Authority to say, I said I was at York; but I am the proper Person to be examined to the real Fact. Mrs. Wells is here to swear whether she was or was not in her House, and she is a competent Witness to that Fact.

Mr. Just. Clive. This is an Indictment for Perjury, for a Testimony she gave at a Trial betwixt the Crown and the two Prisoners Squires and Wells; and in Strictness the Testimony, to wit, Susannah Wells's, would not in the Course of the Trial have affected Squires, or Squires's have affected Susannah Wells; but this is an Indictment for Perjury, in the Testimony that this Girl, Canning, gave of them both; therefore, I think, either are proper Witnesses of what she said.

Baron Legge. To be sure, what they said is Evidence against the Person that did say it: When you have made use of those which were not produced in Evidence at the Time, that could not have been Evidence against the Accessary and not the Principal; how will you produce that?

Mr. Nares. In the first Place, their not being called as Witnesses can be no Objection in not calling them now, because it has been done several Times: I do not call every Witness in my Brief; if I have fifty in my Brief, and fifty swear to the Fact, I would call them: When that Person which is a Witness is called upon, should not she have the Benefit of every Circumstance that will confirm the Testimony? Or, will the Court exclude her, because the Persons concerned in the Prosecution did not think proper to call the other Witnesses that they might have called?

Baron Legge. The Indictment was laid jointly against Mary Squires and Susannah Wells; was it not, Mr. Ford?

Mr. Ford, Clerk of the Arraignment. They were both tried together, and the Indictment on the same Piece of Parchment.

Mr. Davy. This only sets forth the Indictment of Mary Squires, not a Word of Susannah Wells; she is not mentioned in it.

Baron Legge. Would you produce that which originally had been Evidence against Squires?

Mr. Nares. The same Witnesses were examined on the whole Trial all through, and they were found both guilty at the same Time, and the Jury were charged with both at the same Time; the Assignment of the Perjury is, that she was in Susannah Wells's House, and robbed in her House.

Baron Legge. Then the Evidence of Susannah Wells is Evidence to that Account.

Mr. Just. Clive. This is an Indictment against Principal and Accessary, whereby they are complicated in the same Indictment; it is against Squires as Principal, and Wells as Accessary after the Fact: So far is extremely clear, that she never could have been convicted as Accessary, unless there had been a Robbery; and she knowing of that Robbery, therefore she was interested at this Trial, as it was one and the same Indictment, and their Case submitted to the Consideration of the same Jury. I think, that if Susannah Wells has given in any Testimony, that there was a Robbery, considering the Nature of the Trial, as it comes before the Jury, it is the same as if Squires had declared it herself.

John Ward sworn.

J. Ward. I have known Susannah Wells, I believe, twenty Years.

Mr. Williams. When did you see her lately?

J. Ward. I seeing in a News-paper an Account of her being taken up, and put into Clerkenwell Bridewell, and living in Southwark, the first Time I came cross the Water, I thought I would go and see her. (I had had a Notion that she was dead, for I had not seen her for above twelve Years.) I went to see her in Bridewell. The first Word she said to me was, Who thought of seeing you here? My Reply was, By seeing your Name in the News-papers.

Mr. Williams. How long was this after she was taken up?

J. Ward. It was just after she was taken up; I cannot say to the Day of the Month; it was before the Trial of Squires and her. I asked her, how she came to keep the Girl there a Fortnight?

Mr. Williams. What did you mean by there?

J. Ward. I understood by the Paper, the Girl was kept at her House.

Mr. Williams. What was her Answer?

J. Ward. She said, she was there twenty-eight Days. I asked her, what Room she kept her in? She said, You know the Room very well.

Alderman Dickinson. Had you been acquainted with her, and did you know the Rooms in her House?

J. Ward. I had been acquainted there twelve or thirteen Years ago, (but not since I have been in Business for myself,) and have been all over the House.

Mr.

Mr. Williams. Did you understand what Room she meant?

J. Ward. No, Sir.

Mr. Williams. Did you see her after this?

J. Ward. I did, on the Sunday following; then I met her in the Bridewell-Yard. We never drank together the first or second Time. I asked her, how she thought to get off of this Affair? She said, she must take her Trial.

Baron Legge. How came you to go a second Time?

J. Ward. Because my Wife had a mind to see her: We both lived at Waltham-Abbey before I married. Mr. Jones went with me the first Time.

Mr. Williams. Where do you live now?

J. Ward. I live in Maid-Lane, St. Mary Overy's Parish, Surrey. I am a Breeches-maker.

Mr. Williams. Are you a House-keeper?

J. Ward. Yes, Sir; I have lived there near the Spot thirteen Years, and have carried on Business fourteen Years.

Baron Legge. So you asked her, how she kept the Girl a Fortnight there, without knowing in what Room?

J. Ward. Yes, my Lord.

Baron Legge. Did she form her Answer out of the News-paper?

J. Ward. Not as I know of.

Cross-examined.

Mr. Davy. What Business carried you there?

J. Ward. By seeing her Name in the Paper, I went to see if it was the same Woman, out of Curiosity, not having seen her above twelve Years.

Mr. Davy. How far did you live from Enfield-Wash?

J. Ward. I lived at Waltham-Abbey.

Mr. Davy. Had you had a great Desire to know whether she had been dead or alive, you might have gone to Enfield-Wash, and have known that.

J. Ward. I wish I had never gone to have seen her.

Mr. Davy. Had you any other Business there?

J. Ward. No, none at all; only I had some at Saffron-Hill, with a Man that works with me; and I had also some Business in Shoe-Lane, and Mr. Jones went with me.

Mr. Davy. What Business had he there?

J. Ward. He went with me as a Friend and Acquaintance; he had never seen her in his Life before.

Mr. Davy. Did not you ask her, what she was there for?

J. Ward. No, I did not.

Mr. Davy. Did not you ask her more Questions than that you just mentioned?

J. Ward. No.

Mr. Davy. Do not you, upon your Oath, believe she meant to let you know, she was charged for keeping the Girl in her House twenty-eight Days?

J. Ward. No, I did not understand her so.

Mr. Davy. Did not she tell you she was innocent of the Charge?

J. Ward. No, Sir.

Mr. Davy. Did not she, before the Trial, say she was innocent of it?

J. Ward. No, Sir; what I told you is all Truth.

Mr. Davy. How long did you take the Confinement to be, when you read the News-paper?

J. Ward. I took it to be a Fortnight.

Mr. Davy. What are the Words you made use of?

J. Ward. I said, How came you to keep the Girl there a Fortnight?

Mr. Davy. Where did you mean?

J. Ward. I meant in her own House; and she said, twenty-eight Days.

Mr. Davy. How came you not to give Evidence of this when she was tried?

J. Ward. I did not know I should be wanted: The Reason I came now was, I was with my Friend drinking a Tankard of Beer, and he threw his Skits, and said, Mother Wells had been an old Procurer of mine; and the People in the House heard this Affair talked over, and they went and brought some People from Aldermanbury, who came to me, to whom I related it again.

Mr. Davy. I insist upon Mrs. Wells's being produced to know if he knows her.

Mr. Nares. That you never intend.

Baron Legge. You say you saw it in the News-paper, and you asked her, how she came to keep the Girl a Fortnight? She said, Why, she was there twenty-eight Days. Suppose it was to be said, I saw in the News-papers you sat five Days in the Old-Bailey: The Answer would be, We sat ten, if the News-papers were ten.

Mr. Nares. Did you ask this with any Apprehension of becoming a Witness against her?

J. Ward. No, not in the least.

Mr. Davy. Did you ever make Affidavit of this before?

J. Ward. It was just when they were going to file a Bill against the Abbotsbury Men.

Mr. Davy. How long is it ago?

J. Ward. Before the Trial of the Abbotsbury Men; the Gentlemen asked me to make it, which I did before Sir Robert Ladbroke.

Mr. Davy. Was you examined then before the Grand Jury?

J. Ward. I was.

Richard Jones sworn.

Mr. Nares. Did you go with John Ward to Clerkenwell Bridewell?

R. Jones. Yes, Sir, he asked me to go with him to see Mother Wells, and said, he knew her in the Country.

Mr. Nares. When did you go with him?

R. Jones. I think it was about the Beginning of February was Twelve-month.

Mr. Nares. What Conversation passed between Ward and Mother Wells there?

R. Jones. He asked her, how she came to be so vile as to shut up the Girl a Fortnight? A Fortnight, said she, she was there eight and twenty Days.

Mr. Nares. What did he say to her upon that?

R. Jones. I cannot tell.

Mr. Nares. Did he ask her any thing more?

R. Jones. No, nothing more, as I know of.

Cross-examined.

Mr. Davy. Was any thing said about a News-paper?

R. Jones. No, he told me, he had read it in a News-paper of Mother Wells's being in Bridewell.

Mr. Davy. How came you to go with him?

R. Jones.

R. Jones. I went with him to keep him Company.

Mr. Davy. Did he say any thing to her about seeing it before in the News-paper?

R. Jones. Not as I know of.

Mr. Davy. Not a Word?

R. Jones. No, not as I know of.

Mr. Davy. Did not she say she was innocent?

R. Jones. No, nothing at all about it.

Mr. Davy. Did not she say she had never seen the Girl in her Life?

R. Jones. No, she did not say she had, or had not.

Mr. Nares. Where do you live?

R. Jones. I live in Shoe-Lane; I am a Brafs-founder; I have a Wife and Family there.

Mr. Nares. How long have you lived there?

R. Jones. About ten Years.

Mr. Nares. Are you a House-keeper?

R. Jones. I keep a House of 20 l. per Year.

Mr. Nares. I have in my Brief some Witnesses of Credit and Character that were near the Gypsey when she was tried, and heard some Confessions which she made at that Time. How far your Lordship thinks these Witnesses are proper, I leave to your Lordship.

Mr. Davy. I wave that, I have no Objection to that.

Baron Legge. Whether any thing said in Court is any Evidence, unless said to the Court. There is here a manifest Difference between what is said in Court, and to the Court; for what is not said to the Court, is the same as said any where else.

Mr. Nares. It is no Part of the Evidence given, but Observations she made upon the Evidence given against her.

Mr. Just. Clive. That is giving Evidence of that which is no Evidence.

Mr. Nares. We are now going, my Lord, to impeach the Credit of some of the Witnesses: We begin with Judith Natus.

Nathaniel Crumphorne sworn.

N. Crumphorne. I live at Waltham-Cross in Hertfordshire; I have been a House-keeper there above seven Years.

Mr. Williams. What is your Business?

N. Crumphorne. I am a Cordwainer.

Mr. Williams. Do you know Judith Natus?

N. Crumphorne. I do, she is Wife to Fortune Natus; they live at Waltham-Cross.

Mr. Williams. Did you know them when they lived at Enfield-Wash?

N. Crumphorne. No, I did not.

Mr. Williams. When did you see Judith Natus?

N. Crumphorne. I saw her at my House on the 21st of April last. She came to know if one Thomas Pain wanted a Person to pick up Stones. I said to her, Mrs. Natus, how can you have the Conscience, knowing this innocent Creature Betty Canning was at Mrs. Wells's House, that you should go and be an Evidence against her? The Answer she made me was, Indeed, Mr. Crumphorne, I cannot say but she really was there, when we lodged there.

Mr. Williams. Did she come to your House accidentally?

N. Crumphorne. She came to ask if Mr. Pain wanted a Person to pick up Stones.

Mr. Williams. Who was by at the Time?

Vol. X.

N. Crumphorne. My Neighbour and my Wife were.

Cross-examined.

Mr. Davy. Then they did lodge at Wells's, did they?

N. Crumphorne. She said so.

Mr. Davy. When did you understand by her that she and her Husband lodged there?

N. Crumphorne. She told me so on the 21st of April; but I cannot tell when they lodged there.

Mr. Davy. Did she tell you they all three lodged in one Room?

N. Crumphorne. I can say nothing at all about that.

Mr. Davy. There is the little Word but, are you sure that was mentioned? I will read it without that Word,—Mr. Crumphorne, I cannot say she really was there, when we lodged there.

N. Crumphorne. She said the Word but.

Mr. Davy. Are you sure she said that Word?

N. Crumphorne. She said it indeed.

Mr. Davy. What did you understand by it?

N. Crumphorne. What I understood by it was, that she really was there, when she lodged there.

Baron Legge. When was it you had this Conversation?

N. Crumphorne. It was on the 21st of April last.

Mr. Nares. Then what you charged her with was, how could she in her Conscience swear so, knowing the Innocency of Canning?

N. Crumphorne. Yes, and the Words she said were, Indeed, Mr. Crumphorne, I cannot say but she really was there, when we lodged there.

Baron Legge. How many Days before this Trial began was it that she said so?

N. Crumphorne. It was a Fortnight ago Yesterday.

Elizabeth Crumphorne sworn.

E. Crumphorne. Nathaniel Crumphorne is my Husband. Judith Natus came to our House on the 21st of April last.

Mr. Nares. Did you send for her?

E. Crumphorne. No, I did not, nor I did not want to see her. She came to ask for a Person about picking up Stones. My Husband said to her, How could you be so cruel, knowing Elizabeth Canning was confined when you was there, to go to swear as you did? Her Answer was, Indeed, Mr. Crumphorne, really she was there, when we lodged there.

Mr. Nares. Tell the Words as near as you can.

E. Crumphorne. She said, Indeed, Mr. Crumphorne, she actually was there, when we lodged there.

Mr. Nares. Did she say she was confined there?

E. Crumphorne. No, Sir.

John Jackson sworn.

J. Jackson. I have lived at Edmonton fourteen or fifteen Years. I saw Fortune Natus lay a Wager, at the Four Swans at Waltham-Cross, that he was at Wells's House all the Time of January 1753, and it was proved he lay at another House one Night.

Paul Stevens sworn:

P. Stevens. I live in New-Prison-Walk, Clerkenwell: I am a Publican, and have lived there between twelve and thirteen Years.

Mr. Nares. Do you know Susannah Wells?

P. Stevens. I do; I have seen her in Bridewell, and at her own House.

Mr. Nares. Do you know Mary Squires?

P. Stevens. I do.

Mr. Nares. See if you see her here.

P. Stevens. That is the Woman, (pointing to her.) I saw her in New-Prison, about three or four Days after she was taken up and carried there. There was a Gentleman or two and I went down to see the People on the Common Side in the Prison. She was sitting by the Fire-side in the Kitchen, in the Master's Side. We had a Bottle of Wine there. She began to speak and resolve some Questions. She acknowledged she was at Mrs. Wells's House, but said, For what I am here for, I am innocent of, that is, Cutting off her Stays; but to be sure the Person was there, I believe. She said, she never was guilty of robbing the Girl.

Mr. Nares. How long did she say she had been there herself?

P. Stevens. She said, she had been there a Fortnight and three Days, I think.

Mr. Nares. What Girl do you mean?

P. Stevens. I mean Elizabeth Canning.

Cross-examined.

Mr. Davy. Then she said, she did not cut her Stays off?

P. Stevens. She put her Hands up and said, As God is my Saviour, what I am sent here for, I am innocent of; but she said, she believed the Person was there.

Mr. Davy. Did she say she saw the Person there?

P. Stevens. No, she did not. She said, she herself was there a Fortnight and three Days, and the Girl was there in the Time.

Mr. Davy. Answer my Question, Did she say she ever saw Elizabeth Canning at Wells's in her Life?

P. Stevens. No, she did not.

Mr. Davy. Did she make use of the Word believe?

P. Stevens. She said, she was sure she was there.

Mr. Davy. Did she acknowledge she was there?

P. Stevens. She did; she came into a free Way of speaking at last, more than at first.

Mr. Davy. Did she say, she was there not above a Fortnight and three Days in the whole?

P. Stevens. She did not say she was there more.

Mr. Nares. Did she acknowledge she was there a Fortnight and three Days?

P. Stevens. She did.

Mr. Just. Clive. Did she say she saw her there?

P. Stevens. She said, she was in the House sure enough; she believed she was, and positively, almost, sure of it.

Mr. Just. Clive. What did you go to the Gaol for? Was it to get this Confession from her?

P. Stevens. No.

Mr. Just. Clive. Who were those Gentlemen that you went with?

P. Stevens. Mr. Martin and Mr. Dudley.

Mr. Just. Clive. Did you give Evidence here upon the Trial?

P. Stevens. No.

Joseph Haines sworn.

Mr. Williams. Are you a House-keeper?

J. Haines. I live at Ware in Hertfordshire. I have been a House-keeper above forty Years there.

Mr. Williams. Do you know Fortune Natus?

J. Haines. I do. I have known him six or seven Years, or more.

Mr. Williams. Do you know his Wife?

J. Haines. I do, she was bred and born in the Town.

Mr. Williams. What kind of a Character does he bear? Do you look upon him to be an honest Man?

J. Haines. No.

Mr. Williams. Do you believe his Oath is to be taken?

J. Haines. I believe it is not. I know it is not fit to be taken. He is a very dishonest Man.

Cross-examined.

Mr. Davy. What is your Business?

J. Haines. I am a Barge-master. I am an Owner of Part of two Barges.

Mr. Davy. Did you ever hear any body speak well of him in your Life?

J. Haines. No, not lately. When he came to our Town, he turned a bad Man; when he worked at Fatham's-Hall, he went on better; but when he came to our Town, he deceived a great many People.

Mr. Davy. How long is that ago?

J. Haines. That is ten or twelve Years ago.

Mr. Davy. How long is it since you heard a good Character of him?

J. Haines. I have not heard a good one of him for almost three Years.

Mr. Davy. Do you think, if he was to come into a Court of Justice, and not to get a Farthing by it, that he would perjure himself?

J. Haines. I think he would say any thing to get a Shilling.

Mr. Davy. Suppose he could not get a Shilling by it?

J. Haines. He would try for it.

Mr. Davy. Do you think he would rather swear false than Truth, tho' he did not get a Shilling by it?

J. Haines. I think he would, he hates Truth.

Mr. Davy. You say, you believe he hates Truth. I do not know what you mean. Is he a bad Rogue?

J. Haines. No body will give him a good Character about us.

Mr. Davy. Do you know his Wife? Is she a bad Wretch too?

J. Haines. She is a bad Body.

Mr. Davy. A drunken Beast?

J. Haines. You have guessed right as any Man in England. You give a very good Guess.

Mr. Davy. What, have you not made it up with him?

J. Haines. He once brought me a forged Note.

Mr. Davy. Are you at Law?

J. Haines. No, Sir.

Paul Chapman sworn.

P. Chapman. I live at Ware, and have done these twenty Years.

Mr. Williams. What are you?

P. Chapman. I am a Bricklayer.

Mr. Williams. Do you know Fortune Natus?

P. Chapman. I do.

Mr. Williams. What is his Character?

P. Chapman. He has a very bad Character.

Mr. Williams.

Mr. Williams. Do you think he is to be credited upon Oath?

P. Chapman. I believe he is not to be believed upon Oath.

Cross-examined.

Mr. Willes. How long has he left Ware?

P. Chapman. I believe he has left Ware three or four Years.

Mr. Willes. Have you seen him since he left Ware?

P. Chapman. No; I have not till now; he behaved very ill there.

Thomas Green sworn.

T. Green. I live at Ware in Hertfordshire. I am a Farmer. I have lived there thirty Years, and have been a House-keeper almost as long.

Mr. Nares. What do you rent per Year?

T. Green. I rent 600*l.* per Year.

Mr. Williams. Do you know Fortune Natus?

T. Green. I do.

Mr. Williams. What is his general Character?

T. Green. Really, in my Conscience, he has a very indifferent one.

Mr. Williams. Is he to be believed upon Oath?

T. Green. I make a Query whether he is—I believe not.

Mr. Just. Clive. Did you ever hear him swear himself?

T. Green. No, I never did.

Cross-examined.

Mr. Davy. One Question, Yes, or No? Do you believe, that in a Case where he was not interested a single Shilling, he would perjure himself?

T. Green. I have Reason to think he would say any thing for Hire.

Recorder. Give a Reason why he would say any thing for Hire.

T. Green. He has never injured me, nor robbed me; but he was a Parishoner of Ware, and he eloped, and left a Child to the Work-house.

Baron Legge. Is his Character so bad, he would wantonly perjure himself?

T. Green. That I cannot answer for.

Mr. Nares. My Lord, I will now call Justice Tashmaker to shew, that Virtue Hall's Confession was taken, not in the hearing of Canning. Mr. White says, they were taken in the hearing of one another.

Mr. Davy. This is applying to the Jury Matter foreign to the Case. With your Lordship's Leave, I will say, the Jury are not to know that such a Person ever existed as Virtue Hall.

Mr. Moreton. The Jury are not to take Notice there is such a Person as Virtue Hall in being; but we have a Right to call what Evidence she gave in the Court here. You have heard Canning's Evidence, and called the Minuter here to prove it. If your Lordship thinks I have no Right to call the Justice of the Peace to prove she gave her Testimony when the Parties accused were not by, that is, when Wells and Squires were not by; I would call Justice Tashmaker to prove what she said, who was in the Room when she was examined.

Mr. Willes. I think it would have been extremely right, if Canning's Evidence was not taken down in Writing.

Baron Legge. The Perjury is assigned upon the Evidence she gave at the Old-Bailey. The Question is not, Who was by when the Deposition was made before a Justice of Peace? That is no Way in Issue in the Case.

Mr. Just. Clive. We are of Opinion it can be no Evidence to call Justice Tashmaker.

Mr. Nares. My Lord, Ezra Whiffin swears, that on the 18th of January he was in the Room where Canning was confined, to buy some Sign-Irons. We will call the Man who painted the Sign, to shew that he was not there at the Time.

William Metcalf sworn.

W. Metcalf. I am a Glazier, Painter, and Plumber, and live at Enfield Highway.

Mr. Nares. Do you know Ezra Whiffin?

W. Metcalf. I do. I remember I carried a Sign Home to his House, on the 8th of January 1753, Old Stile, and set it down directly in my Book.

Mr. Nares. Where is that Book?

W. Metcalf. It is at Home. I could easily have brought it, had I had an Order so to have done. But I can satisfy you another Way. I have a Pocket-book in my Pocket, and I took it from this Pocket-book, and put it in my Day-book. (He produces the Pocket-book.)

Mr. Nares. Tell me, by looking into that Book, the Day you brought the Sign Home?

W. Metcalf. It was on the 8th of January, O. S. I wrote this myself in his own House, with his Pen and Ink.

Mr. Nares. Upon your Oath, is it your own Hand-writing?

W. Metcalf. Upon my Oath, it is.

Mr. Nares. What Day was it, New Stile?

W. Metcalf. It was on the 19th, N. S. He told me he had spoke to one Mr. John Garret, a Blacksmith, to make the Irons to hang it upon. I went directly to the Blacksmith, and asked him, whether he had done them? He told me, he would not do them at all, till such Time as Whiffin had paid what was due already.

Mr. Nares. Did you go back again then to Whiffin?

W. Metcalf. No. About ten or fourteen Days after I saw Whiffin, and asked him, if he had got the Irons? He said, he had got none. Then I said, You are very much to blame you did not go down to Mother Wells's, to see for her Hooks, because they were the same that the Sign hung upon; and I thought they might be in the same Piece of Wood, which was sawed off when the Sign was taken down.

Mr. Nares. Did he say he had been for them?

W. Metcalf. No, he did not, but he said he would go.

Mr. Nares. Had he the Hooks when you spoke to him?

W. Metcalf. That I do not know. He did not say he had been at Mother Wells's, or that he had got them.

Mr. Nares. When was it hung up?

W. Metcalf. I do not know.

Cross-examined.

Mr. Willes. The 1753, which is in black Figures, when was it wrote in this Book? I observe it to be in a different Ink.

W. Metcalf.

W. Metcalf. That was wrote on Saturday was Se'nnight, I believe; that was taken from the other Book. I took that Date out of my other Book; for I set it down in my Pocket-book without the Date at first.

Mr. Moreton. I observe in this, here is October 17, do you mean Old Stile or New Stile?

W. Metcalf. I mean Old Stile. All that is set down, is set down by my Clock.

Mr. Moreton. When you made that Entry, did you mean it according to Old Stile or New?

W. Metcalf. To the Old.

Recorder. Why did not you bring your Book here?

W. Metcalf. I did not know it would be wanted.

To her Character.

Mr. Marshall sworn.

Mr. Marshall. I have known Elizabeth Canning the younger almost ever since she could go alone; since she has grown up, she has come to my Shop almost every Day. She bears a very good Character. I never knew a Girl behave more modestly in my Life. I am one of her Bail; and if I had not believed her to have been entirely honest, I would not have been Bail for her.

Cross-examined.

Mr. Davy. Look at this Paper; it has your Name to it; was it done with your Consent?

Mr. Marshall. It was not; but when it was done, I did not contradict it.

Mr. Davy. Here is an Attestation of all the Facts she had sworn, why did you suffer it to be printed?

Mr. Marshall. I did not contradict it.

Mr. Davy. Did you ever declare that you was ignorant of the Things that you here attest?

Mr. Marshall. As to the Facts, they put my Name in to attest her being a harmless Girl; the Contents I never saw, till I saw them in Print.

Mr. Davy. You have said here, The Truth of the above-mentioned Facts, we, whose Names are under-written, being also ready to attest—Did you ever take any Pains to satisfy the World that you were not able to attest these Facts?

Mr. Marshall. I had nothing to do with the printing the Papers. My Attestation was only to tell of the Girl's Absence.

Mr. Davy. Did you give any of these Papers away?

Mr. Marshall. I believe I did.

Mr. Davy. Do you know of their being scattered about at the Time of the Trial of Wells and Squires?

Mr. Marshall. I have heard they were delivered about, but I did not do it. I said, it was a bad Thing to distribute them about then.

Mr. Davy. Upon your Oath, did you consent to the Publication of it?

Mr. Marshall. Upon my Oath, I did not.

Mr. Davy. Was your Name put to it without your Consent?

Mr. Marshall. It was.

Recorder. Did you see your Name to them, before you distributed them about?

Mr. Marshall. Yes, I did.

Mr. Davy. Whether the Intent of publishing these Papers was not to inflame the World against the Gypsey?

Mr. Marshall. No, I believe not.

Mr. Nares. Did you believe the Truth of these Papers that you distributed?

Mr. Marshall. My Belief was, that the Girl had been so long missing from her Friends.

Mr. Davy. I am to tell the Jury from the Prosecutor, I have nothing against the Girl's Character, exclusive of this Fact.

Mr. Nares. Then we need call no more to her Character.

Mr. Davy. I have only to call Witnesses to the Support of Natus's and Whiffin's Characters.

TUESDAY the] 7th of May.

Mr. Moreton. We last Night finished this long Trial in Behalf of the Defendant. I am very sensible, that, perhaps, there never was a Case came before a Court of Justice, in which it was more proper, I hope I need not say more necessary; for some of the Counsel concerned to have made Observations from the material Part of the Evidence given on both Sides.

That is what is the Province of a Counsel, to observe how far our Evidence answered the Evidence given on the Behalf of the Prosecution.

It has been among the many Misfortunes of the Defendant, that it has been impossible for any one of her Counsel to have attended thro' this whole Trial. Mr. Williams, whose proper Province it was to have replied, has necessarily been absent, during great Part of the Evidence; therefore it is impossible for him to discharge his Duty in that.

It has likewise been my Misfortune to be absent, and it has also been Mr. Nares's Misfortune to be absent, so that we could not attend upon that Part of the Evidence. I mention this, that I may lay in my Claim with your Lordship, who has been so very acute and attentive, that whatever Observations are proper to be made, the Jury may carry the Facts along with them, as well as the Prosecutor's Charge; and that your Lordship will be so kind to supply what we have been obliged to omit. I make no Doubt but you will do so, because no greater Accuracy, and no greater Attention can be shewn, than has appeared in your Lordship through the Course of this Trial; therefore my Client will not suffer thro' this Absence.

Recorder. You may assure yourselves I shall, and I hope you will be present, when I sum up to the Jury; and I shall not take it in the least amiss to be instructed, if I make any Mistake whatsoever.

Mr. Moreton. When once the Case is in your Hands, I am very sure it is in safe Hands.

Mr. Davy. I desire it may be proved to the Jury, that the Days of the Arrival of the Letters from Basingstoke, are Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays.

Thomas Ravenbill again.

Mr. Willes. As you are an Officer in the Post-Office, you can tell what Days of the Week the Post comes into Town from Basingstoke in Hampshire.

T. Ravenbill. It comes in on Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays, and no other Days.

Cross-examined.

Mr. Moreton. What Post-road does it lie in?

T. Ravenbill. It comes in the Portsmouth Mail; it is in the Western Road.

Mr. Moreton. Does the Portsmouth Bag come thro' Basingstoke?

T. Ravenbill.

T. Ravenbill. I cannot tell that.

Mr. Davy. Whether the Portsmouth Bag does not come thro' Basingstoke? Or, whether there is not some every Day's Post comes thro' Basingstoke?

T. Ravenbill. Upon my Word I cannot tell. Basingstoke Bag comes in three Days a Week.

Mr. Moreton. That Letter is not proved ever to have been in Basingstoke Post-Office; it remains still to be proved, that there is an every Day's Post comes thro' Basingstoke.

Mr. Davy. Do the Basingstoke Letters ever come in on any other Days besides Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays?

T. Ravenbill. No, they come in only on those three Days.

Mr. Davy. When does the Salisbury Post come in?

T. Ravenbill. That comes in the same Days.

(Mr. Davy produced the Almanacks back to 1749, which proved the 19th of January was never on a Monday, Wednesday, or Friday, since January 1749, till the Year 1753.)

Mr. Willes. There is one Anne Johnson, who swears she saw Mary Squires at Enfield-Wash on the 18th of January; and she has sworn, that she works for Mr. Smitheram; and that she carried Home her first Work for that Year on the 16th of January; and that her Master constantly put the Work carried Home down in a Book; and we have that Book to prove it was carried Home on the 23d of January.

Thomas Smitheram sworn.

Mr. Willes. What is your Business?

T. Smitheram. I keep a Boarding-School at Enfield Highway, and I keep a Shop likewise.

Mr. Willes. Did you employ one Anne Johnson to spin Yarn for you?

T. Smitheram. I did.

Mr. Willes. Have you a Book in which you set down the Work as it is brought Home?

T. Smitheram. I have; but it is seldom under my Management; I leave it to my Family.

Mr. Willes. Do you, or some of your Family, put down the Time when you deliver out Work to be done?

T. Smitheram. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Willes. Do you always put down the Time when you have it brought Home?

T. Smitheram. Yes, Sir; one Column is to put down the Delivery, and the other when brought Home spun.

Mr. Willes. Look in it to the Year 1753, and tell whose Hand-writing that first Article is.

T. Smitheram. It is my Daughter's Hand-writing; her Name is Anne Hudgel.

Mr. Willes. I see in it, here is January 16, one Pound S. fine, delivered.

T. Smitheram. That is the Work delivered out.

Mr. Willes. Is there a Mark upon the first Column that signifies it was the Time of the Delivery of it to be spun?

T. Smitheram. Yes, here is Anne Johnson's Name on the Top.

Mr. Willes. Here is January 23, one P. S. fine, returned.

T. Smitheram. That is my Hand-writing, the delivering out, but the receiving is not mine.

Mr. Willes. Was that the same Yarn that is returned?

VOL. X.

T. Smitheram. I take it so to be. I did not receive it myself.

Cross-examined.

Mr. Moreton. In this last Entry, is the Word returned your Writing?

T. Smitheram. It is.

Mr. Moreton. When was that Word wrote?

T. Smitheram. The very same Day. The Reason of it is this, I had heard she had sworn what she did, and I looked in my Book, and I said, You are mistaken; and the old Woman was so angry, she brought Home my Work, and would spin no more for me; then I clapped that Mark upon it, Returned. She returned it unfinished.

Recorder. When you heard what she swore — Where did she swear?

T. Smitheram. Before the Grand Jury. She came to our House, and I looked in the Book after she had sworn. I said, You brought your Work Home on the 23d, and you are mistaken, or to that Effect.

Recorder. Was that Yarn you delivered to her on the 16th, the same she returned on the 23d?

T. Smitheram. I cannot tell that; it is possible sometimes they may change it.

Alderman Dickinson. Did she return the same Weight?

T. Smitheram. She did, for ought I know; I did not take it in.

Anne Hudgel sworn.

Mr. Willes. What are you?

A. Hudgel. I am Daughter to Mr. Smitheram. I generally keep this Book; it is a Day-book; I make Marks when delivered out, and when brought Home.

Mr. Willes. Look for Anne Johnson's Account.

A. Hudgel. The first Entrance is my Father's, and that of being brought Home spun is mine, on the 23d of January. After we heard she was concerned in this Affair, and had sworn to the 18th Day of the Month, we told her it was the 23d.

Mr. Willes. Can you recollect what Time it was that you told her she was mistaken?

A. Hudgel. I cannot tell.

Mr. Willes. Did you ever tell her she was wrong?

A. Hudgel. No, Sir; but I heard my Father tell her so, though I was not in the same Room.

Mr. Willes. Had you no Conversation with her about it?

A. Hudgel. No, Sir.

Cross-examined.

Mr. Moreton. Did not this Woman apply to you to see the Book?

A. Hudgel. When she brought the Work Home undone, she would see the Book to see me cross it out, though she could not read.

Mr. Moreton. Did she ever apply to you to see the Time when she brought the Work Home?

A. Hudgel. I do not remember she ever did.

Mr. Moreton. She has sworn she did.

A. Hudgel. Very likely she might, but I do not remember it, nor that she did till after the Time she swore before the Grand Jury.

Mr. Moreton. Do you think she would forswear herself?

A. Hudgel. I do not know that she would.

Mr. Willes. Did not your Father tell her the Wool was not brought Home till the 23d?

A. Hudgel. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Davy. My Lord, we now call Witnesses to the Support of the Characters of these two People which they have impeached; that is, Ezra Whiffin and Fortune Natus.

Thomas Smitheram again.

T. Smitheram. I have known Ezra Whiffin a Year and a half.

Mr. Willes. What is his general Character?

T. Smitheram. I never heard but he was a very honest Man.

Cross-examined.

Mr. Moreton. Have you not known many honest Men mistaken in point of Time, at a Year's Distance?

T. Smitheram. I do not know but I have.

John Barnes sworn.

J. Barnes. I am High Constable of Edmonton Hundred. I know Ezra Whiffin very well, and have these three Years and a half; he was two Years a Neighbour of mine. I believe him a very honest Man.

John Smart sworn.

J. Smart. I am an Attorney. I knew Ezra Whiffin all the Time I lived at the Coffee-house at Enfield.

Mr. Willes. How long is that?

J. Smart. I have known him about three Years. I never heard any Harm of his Character.

Thomas Bell sworn.

T. Bell. I live at Waltham-Cross at the Four Swans.

Mr. Willes. How long have you known Fortune Natus?

T. Bell. I have known him about fifteen Months; he has been a Servant to me about thirteen Months.

Mr. Willes. Did you ever know him before that?

T. Bell. No, Sir.

Mr. Willes. How has he behaved since he worked for you?

T. Bell. Very honestly, very civilly, and very industriously.

Mr. Willes. Do you look upon him to be an honest Man?

T. Bell. Indeed I do. He assists to brew, and goes out with a Load of Hay. He always behaved very honestly. When I go out, if I bid him do such Things, I am sure to have them done.

Mr. Davy. Do you think he would forswear himself?

T. Bell. I do not think he would.

Mr. Willes. During the thirteen Months he has been with you, has he been faithful and honest?

T. Bell. During the whole Time I do not know he has told me a Lye. I have eight Servants about my House, and I should be glad to find the Fellow of him.

Mr. Moreton. The Gentlemen have called some fresh Evidence in. I do not think to give it any Answer; therefore it must rest upon these People's given Testimony.

Here the material Things are, to support the Letter supposed to be wrote at Basingstoke, and to contradict Anne Johnson.

They endeavour to support the Letter by producing the Man again from the Post-Office, who tells you, the Post comes in only on Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays, from Basingstoke. Then they have produced some old Almanacks to shew the 19th of January was never on a Monday, Wednesday, or Friday, since January 1749, to the Date 1753. But they have not proved the Letter was put in at Basingstoke yet: That remains to the Jury; and the Post-mark, I own, my Eyes are not good enough to distinguish. This might have been made clear, if the Man that received it had been called; and if he had shewed he had received that Letter at the Time mentioned, that would have carried up this Evidence, that I could have had nothing to say against it; but whether it was ever put into the Office at Basingstoke or not, that must be left to the Jury; it is a very easy Thing to have a Letter dated, and it might be the 9th, or the 29th, still there is no Conclusion.

Now, as to contradicting Anne Johnson, a poor old Woman. What does she swear? She swears she did apply to these People to be set right, and she was informed by their Book; therefore she would never have referred to that Piece of Evidence, if she had not been mistaken in what she swore; it is only a Mistake.

Now, after we are done, I do think it is a great Misfortune for my Client, that the other Gentleman, who should have made a proper Reply, was obliged to attend elsewhere; and was I to do it, I must do it very imperfectly; and so I rest it in your Hands.

MR. DAVY.

May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury;

After so unusual a Time taken up in this Trial, I wish I could dispense with giving you any farther Trouble.

But, Gentlemen, it is my Duty to recall your Attention to the Evidence, which was produced to maintain this Indictment—to reply to what has been urged by way of Defence—and to make such Observations upon the whole, as may convince you, that the Evidence for the Prosecution stands unanswered, and is the most indubitable Proof of the Defendant's Guilt.

Before I enter upon this Undertaking, which, I am afraid, will engage more of your Time than would be found necessary, if the Conduct of this Prosecution was in abler Hands than mine, I cannot avoid taking Notice of the great Indulgence with which this Cause has been already favoured. For, although five long Days have been employed in this Inquiry, yet hath not the least Hint of Impatience dropped, either from the Court, or the Jury.

To the Honour of this Country be it remembered, its Judges always administer impartial Justice upon the most deliberate and careful Examination; and never think any Time mispent, which may conduce to the Discovery of Truth. There was indeed a particular Necessity for a very solemn Examination in the present Case, because this was become an Affair, not only of great Importance and public Expectation, but also of no less less Intricacy and Difficulty, — arising, not so much from the Nature of the Question, as from the Clouds of Darkness, in which it was enveloped by those, who, merely in Opposition to the Prosecutor, adopted the Crime of Perjury, and formed a Faction to support it.

But such is the Force of Truth, and so strongly does it shine forth in this Prosecution, that its Opposers must now hide their Faces, and reflect with Shame, that they have contaminated themselves with the Guilt which they are no longer able to conceal.

Gentlemen, as in the Outset of this Cause I desired you to divest yourselves of all Prejudices, which you might have received in the Defendant's Favour; so now, out of Humanity, I would caution you against falling into the like Error on the other Side, on Account of some Accidents which have happened during the Course of this Trial.

The Insolence of Mobs about this Court, attempting to over-awe and intimidate Justice, you all have observed, and some of you have felt. Although the Design of these Outrages was easily discovered, yet it would be very hard that such Misbehaviour, however occasioned, should affect the unhappy Person at the Bar. She has enough to deprecis her, without the additional Load of others Guilt; and God forbid we should attempt to call in the Aid of Prejudice against her! We desire this Cause may be tried singly upon its own Merits, and that there may be no Ingredient in your Consideration, but what fairly results from the Evidence on both Sides.

You will take Care, for your own Sakes, to discharge your Duty, as Jurymen, considering the Obligation upon your Conscience, the Notoriety of this Cause, and the Freedom with which Men will hereafter deliver their Sentiments concerning it. You will consider, the Eyes of the World are now upon you; and the Circumstances of this Cause are so peculiar, and have been so much the Subject of Controversy, that the History of this Transaction hath travelled wherever the English Language is understood. And, I doubt not, your serious and solemn Determination, upon this important Occasion, will answer the Ends of Justice, will gratify the universal Curiosity, and will prove a lasting Honour to yourselves.

Gentlemen, when you reflect upon the Nature and Circumstances of the Offence this Woman stands accused of, — together with the Purposes it was intended to serve, — the Fulness of the Evidence produced to prove it, — and the weak, if not the wicked, Defence attempted in Answer to it; you will be fully satisfied, how much it concerns the Public to bring this Delinquent to Justice.

Of all the Crimes the human Heart can conceive, PERJURY is the most impious and detestable. But the Guilt of this Person is so transcendent, that it seems even to defy Aggravation.

To call upon the GOD OF TRUTH in the most solemn Manner, and upon the most awful Occasion, to attest a FALSHOOD — to imprecate the Vengeance of Heaven upon her guilty Head — to prostitute the Law of the Land to the vilest Purpose — to triumph in the Ruin of an innocent Fellow-Creature — to commit a MURDER WITH THE SWORD OF JUSTICE; — and then, having stripped her own Heart of Humanity, by all the Arts of Hypocrisy, to insinuate herself into the Compassion of others, is the peculiar SIN of this Person, not yet twenty Years of Age!

One would wonder, indeed, at the FOLLY of an Attempt to impose so gross, so absurd a Falshood upon the World, if we did not live in an Age wherein nothing is too incredible and fantastical to be well received. — Let it be but a Novelty, and a Subject of Admiration, and it cannot fail to make its Way with the Bulk, the most ignorant Part, of Mankind.

How this strange Story obtained Credit so far, as to prevail with a Jury to convict two innocent Women, you have seen in the Course of this Trial. For that there was false Evidence given in that Cause by one Witness at least, appears now confessed even by his own Testimony. SCARRAT (of whom I shall have Occasion to speak more hereafter) swore upon the Trial of Squires, that Canning's Information before Alderman Chitty thoroughly corresponded with her then Evidence: But he now owns, he does not know what Account she gave before the Alderman; and, upon his best Recollection, he admits, in Effect, that her Information to Mr. Chitty was, in many Respects, different from her Evidence upon the Trial. And yet this was one of the most material Questions in the whole Cause.

It is no Wonder, therefore, that this Story, with all its Absurdities, so supported by Prejudice and Perjury, obtained Belief. And, that it was not fatal to the poor Wretch destined for a Sacrifice, was entirely owing to the Interposition of a MAGISTRATE, whose only Motive to it was Compassion, whose only Reward the bitterest Invectives.

Gentlemen, in this Indictment there are as many Assignments of Perjury, as there are Circumstances in the Defendant's Evidence, from the Time of the pretended Robbery in Moorfields; so that, if any Part of her Relation is false, she is guilty of Perjury within this Indictment. However, we do not mean to cavil, and catch at little Circumstances; for the Proofs we have offered are sufficient to satisfy all Mankind, that the whole of this Story is a Fiction from the Beginning to the End.

Gentlemen, as this was a Case of universal Inquiry, the Prosecutor was desirous of giving all the Satisfaction in his Power: For though the indubitable Evidence of the GYPSEY's Innocence, without any farther Proof, would have been sufficient to justify his own Conduct, and to convict the Defendant, yet his Regard for the Public called upon him to detect the whole Imposture; and, if possible, to put an End to all the Disputes and Troubles, to which this mysterious Transaction hath given Rise.

To answer these Purposes effectually, there hath been a great Variety of Proof laid before you, under several Heads of Evidence; of which I will beg leave to remind you, in the Order they were given.

Our first Head of Proof was to the ALIBI of Mary Squires.

With regard to this, and the Answer attempted to be given to it by the Defendant's Witnesses, you will be pleased to recollect the Certainty or Incertainty

Incertainty of the Evidence on both Sides, as to the Identity of the Persons sworn to, and the Exactness of the Times in which the Witnesses swear to have seen them. For a Mistake in either of these Matters will account for a Variance in the Testimony, without impeaching the Credit of the Witnesses, which I am always willing, as far as I can, to avoid.

In the first Place, as to the Identity of MARY SQUIRES.

She is not only so extremely remarkable, that it is almost impossible to mistake her for another, but several of the Witnesses for the Prosecution have known her a considerable Time, from two to thirty Years past, and have often seen her: It is impossible, therefore, for these People to mistake with regard to this Person; and if they did not see this very Woman, they are certainly guilty of Perjury.—Besides, the Witnesses for the Crown swear not only to the old Woman, but likewise to her Son and Daughter, for they were seen all together through the whole Journey; by which Means they are less liable to Mistake, than the Witnesses for the Defendant.

Are all the Witnesses to this Head of Proof, forty-one in Number, wilfully and corruptly sworn?

Through the whole of this Cause hath the least Reflection been thrown upon the Character of any one of them?

Has it been even suggested, that they have any Interest to serve, or any Passion to gratify, which could lead them to so much Wickedness and Danger?

Are they not Strangers to the Defendant, and most of them to one another, living at remote Distances?

They have all been separately examined; and I refer to your own Observation, whether effectual Care has not been taken to prevent any Communication between them, so as that no one Witness could possibly know another's Testimony.

And yet what an amazing Congruity is there in the whole of their Evidence!—Not a material Circumstance varied from!—But the Testimony of each Witness corresponds so exactly with what went before it, that it demands Credit, and authenticates the Evidence of the former.

Consider too the Variety and Weight of the Circumstances sworn to, and the Correspondency of Events happening in Consequence of them.—The Dancing at Abbotsbury,—the Fidler there,—who and who were Partners,—the wet Night at Portersham,—the heavy Rains that fell the next Day,—and the Waters being out at Dorchester, two Days after.—

How notorious are these Facts, and how easily disproved, if false!

Was it ever known, that any Number of false Witnesses pre-concerted Circumstances, which ten thousand People were capable of contradicting?

Is it conceivable, that there should be a perfect Harmony in the Evidence of such a Number of perjured Witnesses, concurring in Circumstances of public Notoriety?

Then the parting with Clarke at Ridgway,—the Piece of Nankeen pawned with the Landlord for a Reckoning, and produced in Evidence with the Man's Name upon it,—the skinning the dead Horse, mentioned by several Witnesses, — the Letter from Lucy Squires at Basingstoke, alluding to the Particulars of the Journey with Clarke, and to the Weather, “hoping he received no Illness from it.”—

Were these Circumstances all pre-concerted, or did they really happen at some other Time, than that to which they have been applied by the Witnesses?

Examine then into the Certainty of the Evidence with regard to Time.

Besides the Impossibility, that all the Witnesses, speaking with such absolute Certainty, and referring to collateral Matters incapable of misleading them, should mistake in this Respect; there are two Facts before you, which prove the Times of the Gypsies being at Abbotsbury and Basingstoke to Demonstration.

The Time, referred to by the Abbotsbury Witnesses, is ascertained by the Books belonging to the EXCISE-OFFICE. Every one knows with what Preciseness these Books are kept,—that not only the Days, but the very Hours of each Officer's Visits, are regularly entered in his Accounts;—that all his Acts and Entries are scrutinized and chequed by a Supervisor,—and the Books transmitted to the General Excise-Office in LONDON.

Now the Book of January 1753, belonging to the Excise at ABBOTSBURY, has been produced in Evidence from the General Excise-Office; by which it appears, that Andrew Wake was placed at Abbotsbury in the room of Ward,—the Officer stationed there, who was ill and incapable of Duty; and that Wake began to officiate in the Excise-Office at Abbotsbury on the 1st of January, and continued to the 14th.

Wake swears, and is confirmed in it by all the Witnesses from Abbotsbury, that he came to Gibbons's House, to officiate as Exciseman in the room of Ward, on the very Day the GYPSIES came there.

Here then is no Possibility of Mistake; and if the Abbotsbury Witnesses are perjured, all the rest of the Witnesses must be so too; for the whole Evidence refers to the Journey from South-Parrôt to Abbotsbury, and from Abbotsbury to Enfield-Wash; and all the Facts sworn to are like so many Links of a Chain, depending one upon another.

It is also remarkable, that this very John Gibbons, who has now given Evidence of this Fact, was produced as a Witness upon the Trial of Mary Squires in February 53; and he then gave the same Evidence he has given now, and with the same Circumstance relating to the Exciseman. For, being asked, on that Trial, by what Circumstance he recollected the Day of the GYPSIES coming to Abbotsbury, this was his Answer, “There came an Exciseman, one Andrew Wicks or Weeks, to officiate there for one John Ward, who was sick, and I put the Day of the Month down, when he came there; for the Excise-Office is kept at my House.”

It is also observable, that Gibbons was indicted for Perjury in that Evidence. What but the Consciousness of Truth could now encourage him to repeat the same Evidence, and run the Hazard of a second Prosecution?

Another Circumstance equally demonstrates the Time of the Gypsies being at Basingstoke.

The Letter wrote there by the Witness, Mrs. Morris, for Lucy Squires to Clarke, bears Date the 18th of January, and she swears that was the Day on which it was written.

On the Outside there appears the Mark of the General Post-Office in LONDON; and if this Letter went from Basingstoke on the 18th, it must come to London on the 19th, for there is no Post-Road from Basingstoke to Abbotsbury, but by way of London. But the Post-Mark not being very legible, the Clerk of the Western Mail, belonging to the General Post-Office, is called to clear up this Matter.

He tells you, that the Post comes in from Basingstoke on no other Days, but Monday, Wednesday, and Friday;—that by the nicest Observation he is able to make (and he produces some Stamps belonging to the Post-Office to verify his Observation) this Letter came into London on the 19th or 29th of January, and he gives you his Reasons for saying so.—The only remaining Doubt then is, as to the Year; for the last Figure being torn off, there being only three Figures 175-, the Council for the Defendant have thought fit to rely upon it as a capital Objection, insinuating as if it had been torn off on Purpose to mislead you; but at the same Time they admit, that if the whole Date had appeared perfectly, the Fact intended to be proved by it would have concluded irresistibly upon them.

Now it happens very fortunately, that this Defect can be supplied by another Evidence, which proves itself; and that is the Almanack.

I have all the Almanacks, since 1749, now in my Hand, which I desire you will examine yourselves; and by them it appears, that no 19th of January, since January 49, has happened upon a Monday, Wednesday, or Friday, except in 1753, when it happened on a Friday; and by the three Figures, which remain in this Letter, the Year's Date must be either 1750, 51, 52, 53, or 54.

To this Circumstance you will be pleased to add another,—that all the Witnesses mention the Days of the Week, as well as the Days of the Month; and if you trace them in all their Testimony, from Friday the 29th of December, at South-Parrot, to Wednesday the 24th of January, at Enfield-Wash, you will find the whole Evidence refers to the Gypsies being at Basingstoke on Thursday the 18th of January.

This Observation will entirely remove the only Doubt of the Post-Officer, whether the Post-Mark is the 19th or 29th of January. For the Days of the Week, sworn to by all the Witnesses, correspond exactly to their being at Basingstoke on a Thursday; and the Almanacks will inform you, that the 29th of January has not happened on a FRIDAY for several Years past.

From all which it appears, that the Witnesses are as little liable to Mistake in point of Time, as in respect of the Person of Mary Squires. And therefore, upon the whole of this Evidence, I will venture to say, no Man living can doubt that these Gypsies were at Abbotsbury on the first of January.

For, through the whole Chain of Evidence to prove it, I appeal to your own Observation, whether all the Circumstances have not been supported by the best Testimony and the clearest Proofs, in their Nature they are capable of receiving? And whether it would not be as unreasonable for one to doubt the Fact they conduce to prove, as it would be to believe the Story they are intended to contradict?

Surely there never was such a Variety of Circumstances so clearly and completely proved in any Case,—surely there never was a Case standing so little in need of it!

But, sufficient as it may be thought for the Defendant's Conviction, this is far from being the best Part of the Case. For though this fully proves the Defendant was not robbed by Mary Squires, yet it goes no farther. But the rest of the Evidence for the Crown entirely overthrows the Defendant's whole Story, and evinces, to the utmost Degree of Certainty, that she is an Impostress.

To the Evidence of Mr. Alderman Chitty, Mr. Nash, Mr. Aldridge, and Mr. Hague, you'll be pleased to apply an Observation, I took the Liberty to mention in the opening, and which I apprehend to be very reasonable, That, if the Defendant was really confined in this Room at Wells's twenty-eight Days, there being Light enough to see every Part of it, she could not possibly fail of giving an exact Description of it; much less could she mention Things that were not there.

Now the Account she gave, before she was carried down to Enfield on the 1st of February, is liable to Objection both in respect to its Defectiveness, and its Falsity.

To try the Truth of any Relation, when its Authenticity must depend upon the Credit of the Relator, we should inquire, whether at all Times, in all Places, and upon all Occasions, he tells the same Story, with all its Circumstances, in the same uniform, invariable Manner.

The Gentlemen of Council for the Defendant, aware of the Force of this Observation, have, with great Judgment, endeavoured to apply it in their Client's Favour, in respect to some few Particulars pretended (but far from being sufficiently proved) to have been described by her, upon the 29th of January at her Mother's, and upon the 1st of February, with regard to the Prospect from the Window.

In the first Place, her Description is extremely defective.

When she was asked by Mr. Alderman Chitty to enumerate all the Particulars in the Room, by which her Veracity was to be tried, and when it so much concerned her to recollect the whole, she omitted several material Things, which could not possibly escape her Observation for a whole Month together.—The Jack-line and Pulley, and the broken Casement over the Chimney, entirely forgot.—The three Saddles are not one of them mentioned,—nor the Chest of Drawers. And, instead of mentioning half a Load of Hay, she in Effect denied there was any; for Part of her Complaint, which melted the Hearts of her Friends, as they themselves have sworn, was the Want of any thing, but the cold, bare Floor, to lie upon.

Can it be pretended, that any Alteration had been made, between the Time of her pretended Escape, and her going there again in three Days after? On the contrary, is it not fully proved, that all these Things had been there, unmolested, for a very long Time? Had they not Marks of Antiquity,—Marks which could not be made, but by PROVIDENCE ITSELF, or by the Creatures he formed for the Purpose? When the Chest of Drawers was removed, in order to see if it had been newly put there, it rended from the Wall a thousand Cobwebs, covered with Dust.

The same Observation occurred, upon removing the broken Casement from off the Chimney Ledge; — that also appeared to have been fixed there by many Generations of Spiders.

And it is remarkable, that the Defendant herself was so struck with the Force of these Objections, and found herself so much in Danger of immediate Detection, that she then pretended to recollect some of the Things, — particularly one of the Saddles, which you are to suppose she had forgot.

This proves, at least, that the Things had not been put there to deceive her. And to satisfy you that her not having mentioned them in her Information, did not proceed from Hurry or Surprise, Mr. Alderman Chitty swears, she was under Examination above an Hour, with all her Friends, and none else, about her; — and that, after recounting all the Particulars she thought fit to mention, she, apprized of the Danger of omitting any thing, was again asked, “ whether there was any thing “ else in the Room?” To which she coolly and deliberately answered, — “ NOTHING BUT THE “ THINGS IN THE PAPER.”

But, what Excuse soever may be invented for the Defectiveness of her Description, who can account for its Falsity? How came she to swear to an old Stool or two, an old Table, old Pictures over the Chimney, and a Grate in the Chimney?

Is it not most certain, none of these Things were, or had been, in the Room? The Proofs, that some of them had not, are so strong, and of such a Nature, that one is tempted to say, The Finger of God points out the Discovery of this Imposture.

Had this Woman been once in this Room, even five Minutes together, could she possibly have mistaken it for a little, square, dark Room? She might as well have called it an Amphitheatre, or a Ship; for no Description could be more unlike. And yet, you must either think she was actually there, with her Eyes open, Light shining through two Windows and a thousand Holes, and a Month's Leisure for Observation, or else that she is guilty of Perjury. For no Charity can impute all this to Mistake.

Gentlemen, the pretended Manner of her Escape is another Proof of her Guilt.

At first she swore she escaped, “ by making a “ Hole, and removing a Pane of Glass, and so “ sliding down over a Pent-house.” But when she afterwards went down to make Observations, seeing the Wall perpendicular from both Windows, and that there was no Pent-house or Shed near it, she cut the Knot she could not untie, and boldly swore, “ SHE JUMPED OUT OF THE WINDOW.”

Was there no other Evidence in the Cause, this alone would be sufficient to falsify her whole Story.

But she was so unlucky, as to give still further Proofs of her own Guilt; and not only contradicted herself, but aided the Detection of her Mother's Evidence.

Her Account of being carried between two Men, one at each Arm, through Bishopsgate-Street, is totally irreconcilable with her being stunned by a Blow in MOORFIELDS, which “ threw her into a “ Fit, wherein she remained insensible for four Hours “ after.”

The Mother had advertised her being heard to scream in Bishopsgate-Street.

Is it not marvellous that Bishopsgate-Street should be mentioned by both Mother and Daughter upon the same Occasion, when they had not seen each other, and this too merely by the Force of Imagination! For the Daughter, you see, had no Foundation for saying it; and what led the Mother to it, I shall speak of, when I come to observe upon her Evidence.

The multiplying four, five, or six Pieces of Bread into four and twenty, will not be thought a trifling Mistake, when we are tracing the several Marks of Falshood, to detect so strange a Tale.

When she applied for a Warrant against the Woman who had taken her Stays, did she give any Description of Mary Squires, who, you see, is marked so, as to distinguish her from all the rest of the Creation? The Defendant had told her whole Story in the hearing of honest Mr. SCARRAT, who had been acquainted with Mrs. Wells, but did not discover, by any Description of the Defendant's, that Wells was not the Woman who had robbed her. For Scarrat was present, when a Warrant was granted against Wells for the Felony.

By what Name will you call him, if he knew this to be a Mistake, without attempting to rectify it?

One of her own Witnesses proves, that when she was going up the great Stair-case, she said, “ THESE ARE THE STAIRS, UP WHICH I WAS “ CARRIED.”

This was after she had been in the Kitchen; for they all agree she was first carried into the Kitchen, but took no Notice there, that it was the Place wherein she had been robbed of her Stays, or that it was contiguous to the Room in which she had been confined. — They all agree likewise, that she went up the great Stair-case, into all the Rooms of the House, to which it led, without the least Intimation, that the Room sought for was upon a lower Floor, and but six or seven Steps from the Ground.

Her Behaviour upon this Occasion staggered the Faith of her Friend ADAMSON. Even He thought it a strange Mistake.

Gentlemen, the next Evidence we troubled you with, was out of her own Mouth. That Witness, though unfit to be believed in any thing else, may fairly enough be admitted to give Testimony against herself; for the best Kind of Evidence is Confession.

Before Mr. Alderman Chitty she swore, she had not drank up all the Water, even at her coming away, but left some of it behind her.

Before Mr. Fielding she swore, she drank it all up on the Friday.

In this Court she swore, that she drank up the last Drop about half an Hour before her Escape.

Let Faction, in the Mask of Charity, suggest Mistake and Inadvertency, to palliate these Self-contradictions as much as the Defendant can wish; yet what Regard is due to her Oath, who can be drawn in to swear so rashly?

Shall one, detected of so gross Prevarication, be believed, upon her single Testimony, in the most marvellous Tale which was ever heard!

Shall that Tale, patched up with irrelative Circumstances, stand a Moment in Competition with the indubitable Proof of its Falsity?

Our next Evidence was the positive Testimony of eleven Witnesses, in absolute Contradiction to the whole Story of the Defendant's Confinement.
of

It was proved by most of those Witnesses, each Witness referring to several Circumstances, and each Circumstance supported by other Testimony, that Natus and his Wife lay in this very Room every Night of the Month of January 53.

Is it even attempted in the Defence to deny this? No other Answer is given to it than by attacking the Characters of Natus and Whiffin, which I shall observe upon hereafter, though it does not depend merely upon their Credit.

White, the Officer, swears he saw Natus's Wife coming out of this Room, as if just out of Bed, in the Morning, when he went down with Mr. Alderman Chitty's Warrant to apprehend the People of the House. The Bed of Straw, with a Sack of Wool for the Bolster, was particularly described by him, and many others.

Is there any Answer given, or even attempted, to any Part of the Evidence, which relates to the cutting the Trees? and yet that Evidence is totally incompatible with the Truth of the Defendant's Story. So is the Evidence with regard to the Sign-Irons bought by Whiffin, and taken out of this very Room, while Natus's Wife lay in the Hay-Bed; which also stands clear of Contradiction.

Permit me now, Gentlemen, to make a general Observation, which goes to all the Witnesses for the Crown;—that their Behaviour, and the Manner of their giving Testimony, from first to last, carries with it the Air of Sincerity and Candour.

Was there a single Witness produced, who seemed in the least inclined to suppress the Truth, or who hesitated, prevaricated, or was pinched at any Question? Did they not, every one of them, speak out fully, clearly, and openly, so as even to force your Assent to the Evidence? But to how few of the Defendant's Witnesses may the like Observation be applied? I appeal to your Senses, whether Truth is not visibly marked in this Prosecution.

This, Gentlemen, I think, is in general the Substance of the Evidence for the Crown.

I have recollected it as well as I could, without troubling you with every minute Circumstance, which might possibly lose its Force by a tedious Repetition. And when I reflect that all this Weight of Evidence is to prove that false, which in itself is impossible to be true, I have more Need to apologize for having already taken up so much of your Time.

But, Gentlemen, how well supported soever this Charge against the Prisoner is, she had yet a Right to give the best Answer to it in her Power; to which you have attended with unwearied Patience. And this Defence, if what has been attempted deserves to be so called, I must now beg Leave to consider and reply to.

In order to bespeak your Approbation of what was to follow, the Gentlemen, who are of Council for the Defendant, were pleased to make their first Address to your Passions; they hope, that if this Case should appear doubtful, if you can impute the Defendant's Evidence to a Mistake with regard to the Person of Mary Squires, your Compassion will incline you to acquit her.

In this I agree with them most heartily; and so far as your Humanity, under the Regulation of Reason, can afford her any Assistance, I wish her the full Enjoyment of it. If it should lead you to acquit her, I shall, for my own Part, and I hope every body else will, cheerfully acquiesce under your Verdict.

But you will remember, that when Men suffer their Compassion to silence the Calls of Reason and Justice, they prostitute the brightest Ornament of human Nature;—that the most deserving Object of our tenderest Concern is the Commonwealth;—and that whenever we extend Compassion to any one, at the Expence of the PUBLIC, we are guilty of the highest Injustice, and answerable for it to Society.

I could wish indeed, for her own Sake, that the Defendant's Title to Humanity from others, had received no Interruption from the Want of it in herself.

When a poor, friendless Wretch, the Object of no one's Pity, stood at this Bar, upon Trial for her Life; the least Remains of Humanity would have suggested to this Defendant to relax a little of her Severity towards her.—If there was a Possibility of Mistake, Compassion would have inclined her to doubt at least; but if there was no Possibility of it at that Time, why should it be suggested now?

Surely, the Defendant can have no Pretence to this Plea, having disowned it herself, upon the most solemn Occasion.—She swore positively to take away an innocent Woman's Life; and being now called upon to answer for it in a criminal Prosecution, 'tis too late to pretend she was mistaken.

It is objected, with an Air of great Seriousness, that the Evidence for the Prosecution is insufficient, because there is no Proof where the Defendant really was during the Month of January.—An Objection which has been founded in the Ears of the Multitude, who have been fooled into a Conclusion, that if the Prosecutor could not prove this, she must have been confined at Wells's.

I am sorry the Defendant's Council have no better Opinion of this Jury, than to imagine that they are to be captivated by such an Objection.

It was incumbent on the Prosecution to prove she was not at Wells's; and if she was not there, it is of no Consequence where she was.

However, if it could be fully proved, tho' it be merely a Question of Curiosity, I should be glad of it, for the Sake of silencing every Clamour. But her Friends, to do them Justice, have been so faithful to her, that this Secret is yet impenetrable.

I am strongly inclined to include Mr. Scarrat in this Compliment; though I cannot conceive so highly of him, as to suppose he would retain this Secret at the Expence of his Interest; and therefore, when he finds the divulging it consistent with his own Safety, he may, perhaps, chuse to oblige the Public with this Discovery, rather than satisfy Justice in a Way that may be more inconvenient to him.

This Man's Behaviour, throughout the whole of this Affair, according to his own Account of it, will save me from the Imputation of a rash Suggestion. He, who thought fit, at first, to help her to a Description, by which her Evidence was afterwards to be authenticated, and to perjure himself in order to corroborate that Evidence, may fairly be presumed a principal Agent in the whole Contrivance.

Where was she? is a Question we are not concerned to resolve: But if you desire to be further satisfied in it, ask Scarrat: If he refuses to inform you—ask the Mother: If she too refuses it—I would refer you to her Conjurer: And if he would reveal so much of his Art, as to inform you what led him to tell Mrs. Canning, that her Daughter was in the Hands of an old Woman, and would soon return, you would not be far from unravelling this Mystery.

But, in all likelihood, the Time is not far off for an ample Discovery.

The Defendant has been hitherto very well supported by her Managers, (that being the Name by which her Friends have thought fit to call themselves in their late Advertisement.) But when she shall be delivered up to Justice, and find that those People can no longer protect her; when she shall seriously reflect upon the Distress to which her Guilt has reduced her; Conscience, perhaps, may prompt her to atone in some Measure for the Mischiefs she has occasioned, and she may, at the same Time, hope to obtain some Remission of Punishment, by the Gratification of an universal Curiosity.

But, say the Gentlemen, why not call Lucy Squires to confirm her Brother's Evidence? She was a Fellow-Traveller with him and her Mother through the whole Journey; and therefore they insist, that our not producing her, which they call a Concealment, is the strongest Proof in the World that the Evidence of her Brother was false.

Was she concealed? You saw her every Day during the whole Trial; she is yet in Court; and if you think it would be material, in a Case of so much Consequence, you have a Right even now to her Evidence.

But the true and only Reason of our not calling her, is her gross Stupidity: Before her Brother was examined, I confess it was our Intention to have called her to the same Facts; but finding that, in the Course of his very long Cross-examination, he had fallen into many Blunders, and being told that Lucy was, if possible, still more stupid than him, we did not think it prudent to risque the Credit of any Part of our Case upon the Evidence of such a silly Creature.

The Objection to the Brother's Evidence, from his being so much more exact in the Particulars of his Journey from South-Parrot towards London, than from London downwards, will have no Weight, when you consider that his Memory, as to the former, has been refreshed by his having since travelled that Road with Mr. Willis, and others, five Times, in order to ascertain the Places particularly; and that his not having re-travelled any Part of the Road through which he had gone before he reached South-Parrot, is the probable and natural Reason of his Incapacity to describe the other Part of his Journey.

You may easily conceive, in what an irregular Manner Gypsies dealing in smuggled Goods traverse the Country. They avoid Market-Towns as much as possible; for, being Vagabonds, they are aware of the Danger of falling into the Hands of the Civil Magistrate.

But why not call Virtue Hall, in order to support her Recantation from her Evidence against Squires? The learned Gentleman, who made that Objection, supposes the Omission to arise from our Apprehension she would have relapsed. If that be really his Opinion, I should be glad to know, why she was not called for the Defendant? For, they know, she has attended the Trial every Day.

There are two Reasons why we did not produce her as a Witness. One of which has been mentioned by the learned Recorder; that by Law she was not admissible as a Witness to retract her own Evidence on the Trial of Squires.

Upon the Trial of Titus Oates in the first Year of King James the Second, (I mean his first Trial, Vide Vol. iv. p. 47.) the Council for the Crown would have produced one William Smith, in order to prove, that what he had sworn at a former Trial was false, and that he was persuaded to it by Oates the Defendant. My Lord Chief-Justice Jefferys (who would have been glad to have hanged Titus Oates, and who of all Men living could least be suspected of Partiality towards him) rejected the Evidence; and being told by Sir Robert Sawyer, the then Attorney-General, that the like Evidence had been admitted in former Trials, the Chief-Justice (who, with all his Faults, has been ever esteemed a great Lawyer, and, I am sure, in this Instance did no Dishonour to his moral Character) said, “he hated such Precedents in all Times,—that he could not believe a Villain in one Word he said, when he owned that he forswore himself; and that he ought never to be received as a Witness.” And in his Opinion all the Judges of the King's Bench concurred.

But I had another Reason for not calling Virtue Hall.—As an honest Man, I dared not; nor could I reconcile it to the Hopes of supporting my own Character an Hour longer. For how immoral and treacherous would it have been to produce a Witness, to prove she had been perjured in a former Trial; when by that very Evidence she would have exposed herself to Punishment!

Besides, what Degree of Credit could be given to a Witness offering such Testimony?

Gentlemen, there is a Reflection thrown upon Mr. Nash, Mr. Hague, and Mr. Aldridge, for their not appearing on the Trial of Mary Squires; as their Testimony would have been extremely material upon that Occasion, and, in all Probability, would have prevented her Conviction.

I must confess, that their Conduct, in this Respect, is not strictly justifiable; nor are the Reasons assigned for their Absence sufficient. This seems to be their own Judgment afterwards, when, sensible of their Neglect, they made the best Atonement in their Power. Mr. Nash was so affected when he found the Woman was convicted, contrary to his Expectation, that he declares he was very uneasy, and should never have forgiven himself, if she had been executed.

Finding she was convicted, what was the Behaviour of these Gentlemen? They readily assisted in an Application to the Throne for Mercy; and, in all likelihood, the Facts disclosed in their Affidavits materially contributed to the saving the Convict's Life.

The Council for the Defendant have thrown another Reflection on Mr. Nash, on account of the Letter which he wrote on the 10th of February to Mr. Lyon. These are the Words of that Letter:—“Mr. Lyon, I am informed by Mr. Aldridge, “who has been at Enfield, that if a Person be appointed there to receive Contributions, some “Money

“ Money may be raised in that Place for the unhappy poor Girl. I wish you Success, and am yours.”

The Gentlemen, by Mistake, (for I dare say they would not misrepresent it knowingly) have taken Notice of this, as proposing Contributions to carry on a Prosecution. But you see there is not a Word about a Prosecution, for it is only to raise Money for the unhappy poor Girl.—What does this prove, besides Mr. Nash's Compassion and Friendship to the Defendant, in distressed Circumstances, whether her Story were true or false? She was poor, and under Affliction; and whether that Affliction was the Consequence of Guilt or Innocence, his Humanity felt for her.

But there is a wide Difference between assisting the Girl, and assisting to carry on a Prosecution. This Letter shews, at least, that Mr. Nash did not then bear the least Ill-will either to her, or her Mother: And seeing there is no Evidence, that he has since had any Reason to alter his Sentiments; What, but his Duty to the Public, brings him here? What should induce him to appear in a Court of Justice, and perjure himself, to ruin a poor, unhappy, innocent Creature, who never offended him?

It is not pretended, that he can propose any Sort of Interest to himself, or the Gratification of any Passion whatever, by so foul a Villainy. And I defy Malice itself to suggest any thing to the Prejudice of his Character. He, as well as Mr. Hague, and Mr. Aldridge, being Citizens of extensive Acquaintance, it is very likely their Characters are not unknown to you—and if so, their Credit must remain unshaken.

Gentlemen, having now gone through the several Objections which were made by the Defendant's Council, I must intreat your Patience while I observe upon the Evidence which hath been offered on her Behalf.

Through the whole Defence, they have not attempted to prove a single Fact in express Contradiction to any Part of our Evidence, except to the Alibi of the Gypsy.

Neither have they attempted to impeach the Character of any one of our Witnesses, except Natus and his Wife, and also Ezra Whiffin, by a little Side-reflection, which is now wiped away.—All the other Witnesses for the Crown stand clear of Imputation.

It is also observable, upon considering every Part of the Defence, that the Defendant may be guilty of the Perjury charged in this Indictment, if all her own Witnesses speak Truth; but that she cannot be innocent, unless fifty of ours are perjured.

For, is there one Circumstance in the whole Defence, which necessarily infers a Belief of her Story? Or, is there one in the Charge, which does not clearly infer the contrary? So that, if you convict this Woman, you find a Perjury upon the fullest Proof that ever came before a Court of Justice; but if you acquit her, you must disbelieve Facts uncontradicted, yet sworn to by Witnesses of irreproachable Characters.

If these general Observations are not justified by the Evidence you have heard on both Sides, I shall be very ready to retract them; for nothing is more remote from my Intention, than to mislead you.

All the Evidence for the Defendant tends to prove,—That she was missing from the 1st to the 29th of January:—That she was in good Health on the 1st, and very ill on the 29th:—That she was seen upon the Road between London and Enfield-Wash, on the 1st of January at Night, between two Men:—That she was seen in the same Road upon her Return Home:—That on the Night of her Return, and three Days afterwards, when she went down to Enfield with her Friends, she told her Story with such Clearness and Consistency, as ought to induce a Belief of it:—That Mary Squires was really at Enfield-Wash on the 1st of January:—That Squires and Wells have confessed both the Robbery and Confinement:—That Natus and his Wife, and Ezra Whiffin, are a Set of Wretches not fit to be believed:—And lastly, That the Defendant herself bears an exceeding good Character.

What of all this is material, namely, the Defendant's being met upon the Enfield Road,—the Contra-alibi (if I may be allowed the Expression) of Mary Squires,—the Confession of Squires and Wells,—and the Defendant's Account of herself, I shall take Notice of, when I apply myself to the Witnesses produced to prove these several Matters. And you will find, upon Consideration, that it was not the Defendant, but other Persons, who were met upon the Road the 1st and 29th of January, supposing their own Witnesses swear truly;—that the Evidence to encounter our Proof of the Alibi is extremely weak, uncertain, and improbable;—that the pretended Confession of Squires and Wells was neither more nor less than a Declaration of their Innocence;—and that the Defendant's Behaviour upon her supposed Return, and afterwards at Enfield, is a further Confirmation of the Charge against her.

As to the rest of the Evidence; Whether the Defendant was missing from the 1st to the 29th of January, concludes nothing to the Purpose, unless it be proved she was at Wells's. Nor is it material to this Cause, that the Defendant was in an ill State of Health on the 29th of January and afterwards, unless it were also shewn, that her Disorder was the Effect of such ill Usage, as she pretends to have endured.—But you observe, by the very Witness, the Physician, produced for that Purpose, that her Illness might proceed from other Causes.

The Characters of Natus and Whiffin I shall take Notice of, when I come to that Part of the Case.

The only remaining Evidence for the Defendant, was to her own good Character, to which several Witnesses appeared;—but, thinking it immaterial, and for the saving Time and Trouble, I was ready to admit it. And because such Admission should be taken in the strongest Terms against us, I am willing this young Woman at the Bar should be considered (exclusive of the present Charge) as a modest, virtuous, honest, creditable Girl, fit to be believed in any thing, as far as any body should be believed upon the like Occasion.

But there is a Time, Gentlemen, wherein People begin to be wicked: With some it happens early, with others late: Some are misled by ill Example and bad Education, and others by various Accidents.

What was the Cause of this unfortunate young Creature's deviating from the Path of Virtue so far, as at last to plunge herself into all this Guilt and Misery, does not clearly appear: She was meanly, though not wickedly brought up, and had lately, you see, been a Servant in an Ale-house, where we may suppose, at least, that she was not much strengthened in Virtue. I do not pretend to say, there is any direct Proof of her Want of Chastity; but I think it may fairly enough be conjectured as the Incentive of her present Guilt; but whatever has been the Cause of it, she has been proved guilty of Perjury, and as she once bore a fair Character, it is probable that she did not fall into this Sin at once. Which, I think, is all that can be inferred from her good Character.

I have no Objection to the Evidence of Mr. and Mrs. Colley, the Uncle and Aunt: For the Defendant might have parted with them at Houndsditch in good Health on the 1st of January, and they not see her again till the 29th.

But Mrs. Canning, the Defendant's Mother, who is called to prove several Circumstances, has said enough to create a Jealousy, at least, that neither her Daughter's Perjury, nor the Motives to it, are unknown to her.

First, with regard to the Papers that were sent to the Office, in order to be printed in Advertisements; in one of which it was said, that the Defendant had in her Pocket Twelve Shillings and Nine-pence Half-penny. She tells you, that in the Morning her Daughter had half a Guinea, three Shillings, and a Farthing:— That she lent her a Box to put the half Guinea in, and that the Girl took her Money out, and shewed it her. Why then did the Mother propose to advertise, as if her Daughter had just twelve Shillings and Nine-pence Half-penny? Why not insert half a Guinea, three Shillings, and a Farthing? Because the little Brother had told her, she had changed some Money, and had given to each of the Children a Penny; and so computing what remained of the thirteen Shillings and Six-pence Farthing, she reckoned that the Girl must have twelve Shillings and Nine-pence Half-penny in her Pocket when she parted with her Uncle at Houndsditch. Now, if this be true, the Defendant's Account of the Money is false: She swore, that the Men robbed her of half a Guinea and three Shillings. The Farthing, you observe, was not taken from her; for she brought it Home, and gave it, the same Night, to one of her Brothers. The Mother, being pinched at this obvious Objection, endeavoured to remove it by lessening the Force of the Evidence she had given before; and by way of Recollection says, she is not positive whether the thirteen Shillings and Six-pence Farthing were not shewn to her after the Half-pence had been given to the Children. And if it was after, then the Mother is in Hope she has entirely removed the Objection, and left the whole Sum of thirteen Shillings and Six-pence in the Daughter's Pocket, which was the Sum she swore to have been robbed of. But with all the Mother's Cunning and sudden Recollection, Truth is too hard for her; for by forgetting a little Circumstance, (Mr. Fielding's "pretty Incident of the "Penny Mince-pye,") she is in the same Dilemma as before. For, supposing the Half-pence had been given to the Children before she had shewn the half Guinea, three Shillings, and a Farthing, yet the Mince-pye was bought after she parted with her Uncle, as was sworn by the Defendant:

Now, out of what Money was the Pye paid for? And if she had no Half-pence, and only half a Guinea, three Shillings, and a Farthing, before she bought the Pye, then how could she be robbed of half a Guinea and three Shillings in Moorfields afterwards? Thus that pretty Incident, "which her learned Advocate, in his Pamphlet, says, "possibly saved this poor Girl's Life," leads to a Detection of her Guilt upon the Evidence of her own Mother.

The Mother mentions another strange Circumstance. "She thought the Girl had been murdered by the Jews, and thrown into Houndsditch." Why then did she advertise her lost, strayed, or missing by her Friends? Why no searching for the Body? Was there a human Creature sent to inquire about it? Besides too, the very next Witness, the Apprentice, swears; what stands in flat Contradiction to the Mistress, "That Mrs. Canning told him, she thought her Daughter had been snapped up by some rakish young Gentleman."

The screaming out of a Coach, in Bishopsgate-Street, seems to be one of the wandering Thoughts she speaks of; for, though it is pretended she received Information of that Matter by the Woman of the Oil-shop, yet they have not thought fit to produce this Person; which, in a Case where every Circumstance is material, is an Omission one cannot account for to the Credit of the Defence.

But it seems, as if the Thoughts of both Mother and Daughter wandered towards the same Objects; for the Daughter dreamt of Bishopsgate-Street, while she was in a convulsive Fit.

Then as to the CONJURER; to whom, by the bye, there was not a Word mentioned about being murdered by the Jews.

She was introduced to this illustrious Personage with great Solemnity: The Lights, the Skeleton, the Magic Instruments, the Wand, the Circle, and all the Apparatus proper to inspire a poor ignorant Woman with Awe, and engage her to a Discovery of what she wanted to know, were all before her.

She was so terrified, that, you find, she hardly remembers one Word she said to him; and yet she must have said something very material, instructing him to give her so good an Account of her Daughter.

At last she recollects, that she did tell him something about BISHOPSGATE-STREET, though she does not remember the Particulars. But she must have gone much further, before the Doctor could have found out, that her Daughter was in the Hands of an old Woman; that she should advertise her once more, and she would come again. Whether she really had this Intelligence from the Conjuror, or, in order to carry on the Plot, thought fit to invent it for the Amusement of her credulous Friends, who had lent her Money for his Fee, is not easy to say: But either Way the Inference is, that she knew more of her Daughter, than is consistent with the Defendant's Innocence.

For, if what the Daughter swore had been true, how could the Mother, at one Time believing her murdered by the Jews at Houndsditch, and at another that she was snapped up by some rakish young Gentleman, be so suddenly undeceived, and discover she was in the Hands of an old Woman, and would return?

When one considers the whole of this Woman's Evidence together, — the several Advertisements, — the Conference with this pretended Conjuror, — her wandering Thoughts, — the putting up Bills in the Church, and the Meeting-houses of Presbyterians and Methodists, to pray for her Daughter's safe Return, (by which the pious Congregations were predisposed to Charity) — the nightly repeated Prayers to the same Purpose with the Apprentice at Home, — particularly the praying with him on the 29th of January for the Daughter's Apparition, (never mentioned till that very Evening) — that Prayer answered in the same Moment by the Daughter's suddenly rushing into the Room, — her Mother's pretended Surprize at seeing her, "Feel her, feel her, 'tis an Apparition!" and then fainting away; — all these Things put together, together too with the Account the Daughter gave before Mr. Alderman Chitty about Bishopsgate-Street, though they do not directly prove, yet surely they create something more than a Suspicion, that the whole was a Contrivance.

To support the Defendant's Evidence, as to the Manner of her Escape out of Window, Mrs. Canning the Mother, James Lord the Apprentice, and Mrs. Myers, have sworn, that her Ear (which the Defendant said was scratched in breaking out of the Window) was bloody, when she returned Home. The Mother says, the "Ear was then bleeding." James Lord says, "it was all over bloody, and the Handkerchief bloody." And Mrs. Myers says, "the Blood then dropt from her Ear upon her Shoulder."

This was six Hours after the Time of her leaving Enfield-Wash; and, according to the Defendant's own Evidence, she wrapped a white Linen Handkerchief round her Head, which she found in Wells's Room, and wore it, instead of a Cap, all the Way to her Mother's: Now, if her Ear bled at the Rate those Witnesses would have you believe, the Handkerchief must have been extremely bloody in one particular Place. That Handkerchief has been produced to shew to the Witnesses under another Head of Evidence, and is now before you. Does it not give the Lye to these three Witnesses? It has indeed the Marks of little Spots of Blood upon it, but in different Places, all over the Handkerchief, and not at all corresponding with their Testimony, but rather like Dots made by a Finger on Purpose.

But it being a good while since Mrs. Canning had the Possession of this Handkerchief, I do not wonder at her forgetting in what Manner she had dressed it up, seeing her Want of Memory has betrayed her into a flat Contradiction to the Evidence she herself gave upon the Trial of Squires. For she now swears her Daughter came Home with two Handkerchiefs on her Head, and that "she had no Cap on;" but upon that Trial, she said nothing of the Handkerchief, but swore, that, upon her Return, "she had a Cap on."

Gentlemen, it is an Objection to the Credit of the Apprentice, that he has been hid, till he is brought here as a Witness, lest he should make Discoveries; for when Mr. Biddulph went to the House in order to ask him a few Questions, another Person was imposed upon him in his Stead.

It will be material to another Part of the Evidence afterwards, to recollect Lord's Description of the Defendant upon the 29th of January, that "she was black and blue as if beaten," and that "her Arms and Face were as black as his Hat." He also tells you, what is contradictory to all the rest of the Evidence, that on her first coming Home, before Mr. Scarrat or any body came in, she said she had been confined at Enfield-Wash. If you consider the whole Tenor of the Evidence for the Defendant, you must be convinced that this Lad has sworn falsely, and that he was hid for a very iniquitous Purpose.

The Name of Mr. Scarrat, the next Witness, I have had Occasion to mention once or twice already, in Terms not much to his Advantage.

He came to the Defendant, before she was asked any Questions; — one of the Witnesses says, it was before she answered any Questions.

What brought him there, a total Stranger both to the Mother and Daughter? for, if you can believe him, he had never spoke to either of them in his Life.

He says, he was prompted merely by Curiosity, upon hearing, in the Neighbourhood, that Betty Canning was returned Home: And the Moment he came in he asked her, "where she had been confined!"

Ready to satisfy this Stranger at once, she told him she had been confined somewhere on the Hertfordshire Road, for she remembered the Coachman's going by.

The next Question was, "How far from London?" She answered, "Near nine or ten Miles."

Without further Inquiry, SCARRAT instantly replied, "I'll lay a Guinea to a Farthing she has been at Mother Wells's:" She immediately said, "I think I did hear the Name of Wills or Wells:" And he then helped her to a perfect Description of Wells's House, and the Places about it.

Mr. Scarrat proceeds to ask her various Questions, in order (as he says) to be satisfied, whether she really had been there. He asked her about the Prospect from the Window, — the plough'd Land, — the Brook, — the Tanner's, — and every remarkable Thing he could recollect; and to every Question she answered in the Affirmative.

If Scarrat really meant to be satisfied whether she had been at Wells's, seeing she answered affirmatively to every Question, why did he not put one Question at least, to which her answering Yes would have convinced him, she had not been there? The Reason of that Omission may be easily collected from the rest of his Behaviour.

Being asked, whether he knew Mrs. Wells's, he would have you think he only knew her House by passing and repassing. Was you never there? Why, "he believes" — he is not sure — "he has been there once or twice." No oftener? — Upon your Oath, have not you been there more than twice? "I believe I have been there two or three Times." — Four Times, Sir? "He might have been there three or four Times." At last it came up to ten. "He could not say but he had been there ten Times!" But, says he, I had never been in the Hay-loft. In this I believe him, because the Defendant appears to have been helped to no Description of it. — If he had been there, he might have asked some Questions about that too, which she would also have answered in the Affirmative: But though he might have never been in this Hay-loft, yet he had been all round the House, and must have known by the Outside, that that there was such a Room, and where the Windows were.

He swears further, that as soon as the Defendant went into the Kitchen at Wells's, she pointed to the Door leading to the Workshop, though it was shut, and said, "This is the Door leading to the Room in which I was confined." But Scarrat, not knowing what the other Witnesses had sworn, after having outrun them all, was reduced to the Necessity of giving Evidence against the Defendant, by answering this Question, viz. If she had ever been before in the Kitchen with the Door of the Workshop open, and yet had taken no Notice of it, and had never pretended to recollect the Place till after she was in the Workshop, and this too after she had been in every other Room of the House, supposing all this, what he would have thought of her? Little dreaming of what had been proved; he answered; it would have led him to disbelieve her whole Story.

This is the Man, who was present at Mr. Alderman Chitty's granting a Warrant against Mrs. Wells for a capital Felony; who knew by the Description she could not be the Person meant, and yet he never dropt the least Hint to prevent it: And now he denies bearing any Ill-will to Mrs. Wells, his old Acquaintance, or that he ever vowed Revenge against her.

This is the Man, who, though an entire Stranger to Canning, first helped her to a perfect Description of the Places about Wells's House, which gave Credit to her Story; and afterwards, in order to give her Credit with a Jury to convict two innocent Women, by way of Corroboration, as he terms it, committed Perjury.

Mary Myers and Mrs Woodward say, the Defendant's Shift was neither draggled, nor dirty. Yet this was the Shift, you are to suppose she had on, when two Men had dragged her twelve Miles, for six Hours together, through dirty Roads, in January — which Shift she wore for a Month in a filthy Room, and upon her Return through the same dirty Road.

Had this been true, not only the Shift would have been draggled and dirty, but her Petticoat, Shoes, and Stockings must have been extremely so — Why were they never produced?

Mr. Lyon, Mr. Wintlebury, and Mr. Adamson are next called to prove what passed at Enfield-Wash.

The first of these Witnesses, being an exceeding honest Man, and cautious of what he swears, has done the Defendant so little Service by his Evidence, that he might very well have been spared. He tells you, that he himself has no other Reason for believing what the Defendant said, than because she said it; for that he never made the least Inquiry about it, but swallowed the whole Story at once upon the Credit of this Servant of his, without supposing it possible she should tell him a Lye. Had his Head been as good as his Heart, he would certainly have required some Reason for assenting to the most wonderful Story he ever heard in his Life.

But as much as I admire his Goodness, I cannot help being sorry for his Credulity; because I am apprehensive, his being so easily to be imposed on, might have encouraged the Defendant at first to invent this ridiculous Excuse for absenting so long from his Service.

Mr. Wintlebury endeavours to account for the Defendant's saying there was more Hay in the Room, than when she had been confined there, by swearing that it appeared to have been tossed up, and hollow towards the North Window. But this stands contradicted by almost every Witness.

He says also, That George Squires endeavoured to go away in a Hurry, and that he would have avoided an Examination. Though this is not much to the Purpose, yet it is a very suspicious Evidence; for Squires was so well guarded, it was hardly possible for him to escape; and, there being no Charge against him, nor the Defendant so much as pretending to have ever seen him before, what had he to apprehend, which should make him attempt it? Besides, you find, he voluntarily and readily gave a full Account of himself and his Mother, the Moment his Mother was charged with the Robbery, by declaring that they were at Abbotsbury on the 1st of January, and for several Days after.

Mr. Adamson owns the Defendant made no Observation in the Kitchen: And yet you find, even by her own Witnesses, that she could have seen near two Thirds of it from the Room in which she is supposed to have been confined. None of them deny this; and some admit, that the Hole between the Hay-loft and the Kitchen was so large, that she might have looked through the Kitchen into the Road. Now, if she had been in this Hay-loft for a whole Month together, was it possible, when she was brought to the Kitchen again, she should forget, that it was contiguous to the Hay-loft, and leading to it by only five or six Steps? Whereas you find by this Witness, that when she was first brought into the House, seeing the Stair-case which faces the Street-door, she immediately said, she believed, "that was the Stair-case she was carried up."

It appears incontestably, that this Stair-case is at a considerable Distance from the Hay-loft, and has no sort of Communication with it. And Adamson himself allows, it is not at all like the little Flight of Steps leading from the Kitchen; — that it struck him, for he thought it strange she should make such a Mistake. How contradictory to each other are the Testimonies of this Man and Scarrat! Observe here the good Effects of a separate Examination.

When she was carried into the Hay-loft, did she immediately say, (what she must have known before she got up three of the Steps, if she had ever been there before) This is the Place? No. — But when she was in the Room, and after a Pause, she recollected, (having seen every other Room of the House) "This is the Room, but there is more Hay in it." Adamson tells you, it occurred to him to search about the House, whether there had been any Hay lately carried there; but that there was no Appearance of any, — not a single Blade could be found.

Not recovered from the Amazement into which her owning the Stair-case had thrown him, and having yet received no Proof of her Sincerity, he devised a most ingenious Trial, to satisfy himself that the Defendant had been really confined in the Hay-loft. And this was by asking her concerning the Prospect from the Window. But this sagacious Gentleman had not thought of the Experiment, until she had been in the Room for the Space of five or six Minutes, to furnish herself with Observations.

And, after all, what was her Answer? "Hills and Trees at a Distance." The Chances were so so many in her Favour, that Hills and Trees might be seen from any Country Window, that she might have ventured this, before she was carried there. But if Mr. Adamson had not been overfond of removing Doubts, he would certainly have required a more ample Description of a Prospect she pretended to have had for a Month together. The Trees were almost peeping in at the Window, and must have been seen by her, as well as the Hills, as soon as she entered the Room. — But besides these, there were many other Things (as you find by the Witnesses) observable from the Room. A Hedge, and a Ditch broad enough for a Foot-way, just under the same Window, — several Fields, both plowed and in Grass, and a Variety of other Things proper to be mentioned in Answer to such a Question, of such a Tendency. And yet, you observe, the Answer of “ Hills and Trees at a Distance,” was sufficient with Mr. Adamson to destroy the glaring Proof she had just before given him of her Insincerity.

He also swears, he helped to pull down the Boards from the Window, and that Mr. Colley assisted in it. This was a Fact so very material, tending to destroy one of the capital Objections to the Defendant's Credit, that one should have expected the fullest Evidence to prove it. Colley had been before called to Facts infinitely less material, but he has not mentioned a Word of this. From whence one might fairly conclude, that Colley's Account of this Matter would have done the Defendant or Mr. Adamson no Service.

The Willingness of Adamson to reconcile all Difficulties, and regain for the Defendant a forfeited Credit, appears by his riding back to ask her about the Hay. To obviate this Objection to himself, he has ventured to deny even his saying to her, “ What! Hay, Bet!” But he dares not disown his riding back to inform himself about it; and another of the Defendant's Witnesses, who was then with her, swears to the very Words. That other Witness was material to several Facts, as well as Mr. Adamson; and as one of them must be forsworn (unless the Doctrine of Mistake is to prevail universally) it will be of equal Advantage to the Prosecution, give up which you please.

Beals, the Turnpike-Man, was the next Witness to prove his seeing the Defendant on the 1st of January carried by two Men in the Road towards Enfield. But what does he prove? Most clearly, that he never saw her there; which appears past all Doubt, even by the Defendant's own Testimony. She swore, she was stripped of her Gown and Apron in Moorfields, and had neither of them on when she arrived at Wells's; but Beals swears, the Woman he saw had a light-coloured Gown and an Apron on: So that, of all the Women in the World, whoever it was, certainly it was not Elizabeth Canning.

There is another Reason, why she could not be the Person. Canning was insensible, in a convulsive Fit, and therefore unable to walk a Yard; but the Woman Beals saw, so far from being borne by two Men, was walking very fast, “ nimbly going along the Road, sobbing and crying;” whilst one of the Men was pulling her on, saying, “ Come along, you are drunk;” the other following, “ Lord, how drunk she is!” — Could this be Elizabeth Canning? Were the Cries he heard, like the Screams of a Woman in a convulsive Fit?

Could Elizabeth Canning, in her then Condition, without either Gown or Apron, be the Person this Witness describes? How many Impossibilities must be swallowed to suppose this Woman guiltless!

But even these are not the only Proofs it was not the Defendant, whom Beals is supposed to have seen on the Road. For, if you consider the Place and Time of the Night, you'll find another Impossibility to contend with.

What Beals has given an Account of, was at Stamford-Hill Turnpike, about four Miles from Moorfields. According to the Defendant's Evidence, she was robbed in Moorfields between Nine and Ten, and she arrived at Wells's about Four in the Morning: So that this Journey of Eleven Miles (the Distance between Moorfields and Wells's) must have taken up above six Hours; at which Rate of travelling, she could not have reached this Turnpike till almost Twelve o'Clock. But what Beals saw was betwixt Ten and Eleven, which was but an Hour after the Defendant was first attacked in Moorfields. Is it possible that two Men could have carried her, in such a Condition, four Miles in one Hour?

Besides, the Witness is uncertain as to the Day of the Month. He swears only to the “ Fore-end of January,” but is not able, by any Circumstance whatever, to fix it to the first Day of the Month. Whereas New-year's Day being a very remarkable Time, it is probable he would have been able to recollect it particularly, had that been the Day.

Such was the Evidence of the Defendant's being seen upon the Road, between London and Enfield-Wash, on the 1st of January. Let us now examine the Proof of her being seen in her Return Home upon the 29th.

Thomas Bennet, the first Witness called to this Fact, says, that about a quarter of a Mile from Mrs. Wells's, and twenty Poles below the ten-mile Stone, he met a Woman, “ miserably poor, without either Gown, Stays, or Hat, yet with something about her, not a Gown:” — That she appeared to be a Stranger to the Road, for she inquired the Way to London, and told him, “ She had been frightened by a Tanner's Dog.”

Had he omitted this last Circumstance, there had been nothing to detect him of Falshood by; and the Fact would then have depended merely upon his Credit, which, probably by Appearance, could not have weighed much, unsupported by other Proofs. But the Incident of the Tanner's Dog has quite defeated his Evidence; for it was impossible she could tell him of this, in her Way from Enfield-Wash to London, before she was come so far as the Tanner's. She might, indeed, have met a Dog, and been frightened by him; but how could she, a perfect Stranger, know he belonged to a Tanner? This Witness tells you, the Tanner's is an hundred Yards on this Side of the ten-mile Stone, but he met the Woman twenty Poles below the ten-mile Stone: — And it was not the Witness, but the Defendant, who called it a Tanner's Dog.

This will not be thought too nice an Objection to the Credit of one deposing a Fact not very credible in itself, and which you will find to be false, when coupled with the Evidence of the subsequent Witnesses. And in a Case of this extraordinary Nature, — where the Defendant's

Attorney (not the present Attorney, to give him his Due) had advertised for Evidence, it became necessary narrowly to watch every Circumstance coming from the Mouth of a Witness in so low a Station of Life.

The next Witness was David Dyer. He says, he saw a "poor distressed Creature" pass very slowly by him on the 29th of January;—that he said to her, "Sweetheart, do you want a Huf-band?" Being asked to give an Account of her Cloathing, he says, She had a white Handkerchief on her Head. In this he goes too far; for, according to her Mother's Account, the white Handkerchief was covered by a coloured one, which she had taken out of her Pocket, and which, from the Smallness of the white one, must have totally concealed it.

Willing to fix every Circumstance, he swears to something that may answer to the Bed-gown,—"A shortish Thing about her, that did not come very low;" and that he saw the Woman soon afterwards, and took her to be the same Person with the Prisoner at the Bar. But being called upon to describe her, as she appeared to him upon the Road, this Witness, unacquainted with what the rest had sworn, (another good Effect of a separate Examination) proves most clearly, that the Person he saw, if any one he saw, was not Elizabeth Canning. Her Face, says he, was very pale,—not black, but whitish.—He looked earnestly at her, and particularly observed her, and did not only admire her Face, but her Hands too—they were delicately white.

Refer yourselves to the Description given of her at her Return Home, particularly by the Apprentice: "She was black and blue, as if beat, her Arms and Face as black as his Hat." Could this be pale Woman with a white Hand, whom Dyer met upon the Road?

Mary Cobb, the only remaining Witness to the Defendant's being on the Enfield Road on the 29th of January, swears she met her creeping along, in the Middle of the three Ducks-Fields, between the five and six-mile Stones. This is said to be a Mistake, and that it is between the six and seven-mile Stones. Take it either Way: If she met her between the five and six-mile Stones, it was near five Miles from Wells's;—if between the six and seven-mile Stones, it was near four Miles from thence; for Wells's House is about the Midway between the ten and eleven-mile Stones.

Now, by comparing this Woman's Evidence with what the Defendant has sworn, you will find it impossible to be true.

The Defendant swore she set out from Mother Wells's at Four o'Clock, and that the Clock struck Ten, as she was going over Moorfields: So she was six Hours travelling eleven Miles, (the Distance between Wells's and Moorfields) which is less than at the Rate of two Miles an Hour.

Reckoning from the Time the Defendant herself has fixed for her setting out, it must have been past Six before she had crept to the Middle of the three Ducks-Fields, supposing it to be but four Miles from Wells's, and if five Miles, then it must have been half an Hour later. Now, at what Time did this Witness see her? She says it was duskish. The 29th of January was the Day after a New Moon, so there could be no Moon-light; and if it was duskish, it could not be so late as Five o'Clock. A great deal of Pains was taken, in the Cross-examination of this Witness, to fix the

Time of her being at the Place, where she is supposed to have met the Defendant. At Three o'Clock she left her own House,—she had a Mile to go to one Mrs. Carter's,—she had been there, but I think stayed not a Minute,—she called no where on the Road,—she might indeed be detained a little by Acquaintances, who met her, but made no considerable Stop any where,—and met Canning within a quarter of a Mile of her own House, on her Return Home;—so then she must have walked a Mile and three quarters, and no more, from Three o'Clock, and make very little Stay. How late could it possibly be then? Let this Woman creep as slow as she pleases, let her be as slow in Walking as she appears in Invention, she could not eke out the Time so as to meet the Defendant. Even Five o'Clock will not do—duskish will not answer—It must have been past Six before Canning could possibly come to that Place, by her own Calculation. But this Mrs. Cobb has even ventured to swear to a perfect, an absolute Remembrance of the Defendant's Face, by the Tip of her Nose! By what Light could she make so nice an Observation, after Six in the Evening, on the 29th of January?

Upon the Testimony of these three last Witnesses I shall only make this further Observation, that, if it were possible to admit they saw any Person in the Manner they have sworn, it appears, by every Circumstance, they all saw one and the same Person, and the Evidence of Dyer fully proves, that Woman was not the Defendant.

These, Gentlemen, are the Objections which have occurred to me on that Part of the Case, relating to the Defendant's having been seen on the Enfield Road on the 1st and 29th of January: By which it appears, that her Friends have reaped no great Benefit from their advertising for Evidence.

The next Attempt was to answer the Proofs we gave of the Gypsies being at Abbotsbury on the 1st of January; in my Observations upon which, I shall not take up much of your Time. Indeed I cannot take upon myself to enter minutely into the Evidence, because I was unavoidably absent Yesterday, when most of the Witnesses to it were examined. But from the Notes of my learned Friend, the Gentleman whom I have the Honour to assist, I am authorized to say, the Defendant has had no better Success in this Part of her Case, than in the rest.

Are the Witnesses to prove the Gypsy's being at Enfield before the 24th of January so very certain, both as to the Person of Mary Squires, and the exact Times of seeing her there, as to leave no Possibility of Mistake? If so, this will rest merely upon the Credit of the Witnesses; otherwise it will not admit of Dispute. For it is most certain, that the Witnesses for the Crown cannot possibly be mistaken in either of these Respects.

It is observable, that none of the Defendant's Witnesses pretend to have ever seen Mary Squires with either of her two Children; whereas every one of our Witnesses swears directly to all their Persons.

With what Uncertainty do the Defendant's Witnesses speak also to Point of Time! Some of them do not know one Day, and some not one Month from another, and some are ignorant whether Christmas is in June or January.—One keeps the Day of the Month by his Clock,—another thér refers herself to the Almanack, without being able to distinguish by it what Day of the Week such a particular Day of the Month was. The Experiment was made upon her Cross-examination, and an Almanack was put into her Hand, —she understood nothing by it. But, says she, I swear from the Assistance of a Sheet Almanack; yet what had been shewn her, was the same cut into Leaves, and bound up.

Gentlemen, those who pretend to be positive as to Time, either refer to Circumstances inconclusive, or to Papers and Books, not one of which has been produced. It was material for them to be exact, and they saw the Necessity of being so. Why then did they produce no written Evidence to ascertain Facts of such Consequence, since by their own Account this was to be had? —Is it not apparent, no Diligence has been wanting in this Defence to lay before you every Circumstance that could be construed in their Favour? To what Cause can such Omission be ascribed? Persons speaking merely upon Memory are very liable to mistake; and in a Cause of so much Spirit, the Zeal of Witnesses may urge them to strain the Truth at least, even where they would not venture at direct Perjury. Falshood is glossed with Doubtfulness, and Doubts are raised to Certainty.

An Instance of this was exemplified in the Evidence of Anne Johnson, who swears she saw Mary Squires at Enfield on the 18th of January. Was it possible for any Witness to be more positive than this Woman? She remembers the Time perfectly; it was just two Days after she carried her Work Home to Mr. Smitheram her Master, who entered in his Book the Time of its being both delivered out and returned.

Here was a Reference to a written Memorandum, and the producing it would have fixed the Time past Doubt. Yet this, like all the rest, was thought proper, by those concerned for the Defendant, to be left merely upon the Credit of Memory. But, by Accident, We got Access to Mr. Smitheram's Book of Accounts; and he and his Daughter, in whose Hand-writing the Entries were, have been so kind this Morning, as to produce the very Book which Anne Johnson referred to; by which it appears, that the Work was carried Home on the 23d of January. So that the Time of her having seen Mary Squires, two Days after, must have been on the 25th, which was the Day after Squires's coming to Enfield, according to the Account of all our Witnesses.

I do not mean by this to impute any thing more than Mistake to this Anne Johnson. But it shews how uncertain Memory is, how positively Witnesses, warmed into a Contention for Victory, will depose Facts, which they should relate with some Degree of Doubtfulness; and shews indeed the Reason, why no Books or Papers are produced.

Sarah Star swears to the 18th or 19th of January, and refers to a Note of Hand of the same Date, which she delivered to Mr. Miles, the Defendant's then Attorney. But neither the Note itself, nor Mr. Miles, nor the Person, who, Star says, brought the Note to her, is produced.

In short, for 'tis Time to make an End; nothing conclusive appears.

Grace Kirby, another Witness, ready as the rest to fix an early Time of seeing Squires, upon her Cross-examination is not certain of having seen her, till within eight Days before Squires's being apprehended, which was on the 1st of February.

Wife Basset is sure of the Time, because she killed a Hog on the Thursday before New Christmas-Day; and she has no other Reason for fixing the Time, but because it was the Monday was a Month after; which brings it to the 22d of January.

How vague and uncertain is all this Evidence, compared with the clear, determinate, positive, absolute Testimony, that Mary Squires was at Abbotsbury on the 1st of January! I should be ashamed to take up more of your Time in Observations upon this Part of the Defence.

They next call Ward and Jones to prove, that Susannah Wells confessed the Defendant's Confinement.

Ward, having just read the News-paper relating the Particulars of the Defendant's Story, went to see Mother Wells in Clerkenwell Bridewell, and Jones went with him as his Friend. One of them (Ward, as I recollect) asked Wells, "How came you to keep the Girl a Fortnight?" To which Wells answered, "It was twenty-eight Days." The next Question was, "In what Room was she?" The Answer was, "You know the Room very well." This was the whole Conversation tending to a Confession: But such a Confession, I may venture to say, was never before given in Proof.

Wells, at every other Time, both before and after this pretended Confession, stoutly denied every Article of the Charge. It is therefore most likely she did not mean, at this Time, to admit it. And if you consider the Occasion of Ward and Jones going there, and the very Words of the Conversation, you will find that Wells really confessed nothing, but only corrected Ward's Mistake by the Charge against her. The News-paper had mentioned, that Wells had confined the Girl twenty-eight Days, Ward had mistaken it for a Fortnight, and Wells set him right. The whole of which, taken together, amounts to just as much as if Wells had more fully answered, viz. You are mistaken as to Time, for I am charged with having confined her twenty-eight Days.

Her Answer to the other Question naturally bears the same Construction, — "You know the Room very well." What Room did he know? That which he had read an Account of, and in which the Girl had said she was confined.

This is the natural and the only sensible Exposition of the Words. If Wells intended to confess the Crime she was accused of, something more would have been said, explaining the Motives and Design of such an extraordinary Transaction. The same Curiosity; which carried these two Witnesses to Bridewell, would certainly have urged them to further Questions; and the same Candour, which this pretended Confession supposes at this Time in Wells, would as certainly had led her to explicit Answers.

If, on the contrary, Wells did not intend a Confession, how infamous was it in these Men, by a pretended Mistake of a Fortnight instead of twenty-eight Days, to ensnare her into an Answer, which by an equivocal Interpretation should amount to a Confession, and leave it unexplained, in order to be furnished with Evidence?

If this was the only scandalous Part of the Defence, it would require more Observation than I shall trouble you to make.

To as little Purpose was the Attempt by Paul Stevens, a Publican, to prove the Confession of Mary Squires in Clerkenwell Prison. This Witness went went there with two or three Gentlemen to see her, about three or four Days after her Commitment. But who these Gentlemen are, or why they do not appear to support this Man's Evidence, we know not. The whole Confession amounts to no more than this, namely, "What I am here for, I am innocent of;" and afterwards speaking of being at Wells's House, "I believe, whilst I was there, Elizabeth Canning was there." This, and this alone, they call a Confession; to procure which, they treated her with a Bottle of Wine. Severities had been tried before to no manner of Purpose: She had been complaining, that they had buffeted her about, because she was not willing to answer Questions. But good Words and a Bottle of Wine opened the old Woman's Heart, and she frankly confessed to these civil Gentlemen,—What?—that she was innocent of the Charge against her. But she believed, whilst she was there, Elizabeth Canning was there. She never said she knew, but she believed. It is plain she never saw her; for if she had ever seen her, it could not rest upon her Belief. And the Witness himself is so doubtful of the Words spoken, that nothing, besides the Innocence of Squires, and the Perjury of Canning, can be collected from it. At first, Stevens was positive, that the Words were, "I believe, while I was there, Canning was there." Then the Witness believes these were the Words—and then the Words were, "To be sure Canning was there, as I believe." And several Times afterwards the Witness varied the Expression, and could never fix it.

What a Confession is here proved! A steadfast Declaration of her own Innocence, coupled with a Belief, touching a Transaction, which, if innocent, she must be ignorant of.

This poor Woman was a Stranger to Wells, having never seen her till the 24th of January, when she came to lodge in her House. Eight Days after, she (with all the People of the House) was apprehended on the Accusation of Canning, that she had been robbed and confined there.—Wells bore an infamous Character universally; — Canning's Complaint was favoured by several Persons of Credit and Reputation; and therefore Squires was inclined to believe the Girl had been robbed by somebody, and that her Story might be partly true. But her own Innocence she persisted in;—so there's an End of all Pretence of Confession.

They next call Witnesses to impeach the Evidence of Natus and his Wife.

Nathaniel Crumphorne says, that so lately as last Friday Fortnight, the 21st of April, he asked Judith Natus, "How came you to have the Conscience, knowing this poor, innocent Creature was at Mother Wells's, to go and be against her?" And that Judith Natus answered, "Indeed, Mr. Crumphorne, I cannot say but she really was there, when we lodged there."

Considering these Words as an Excuse, in answer to Crumphorne's Reproach for giving Evidence against Canning, you will have no Difficulty in believing the very reverse of what that Witness intends; and considering the Time of this Conversation, it looks as if this Crumphorne was tampering with the Witness to swear what in Truth she could not. Crumphorne is certain to every Word spoken, and indeed it was very material he should be so; for by striking out the single Word but, the Sense would be intirely altered, and then the Answer would be proper to the Question. And that Crumphorne goes too far in swearing to the very Expression, appears by the next Witness, his Wife, who gives Evidence of these Words only, "Indeed, Mr. Crumphorne, she really was there, when we lodged there." The former Part of the Words, "I cannot say but," is intirely left out. So that it remains doubtful, what were all, and the particular, though few, Words made use of upon this Occasion. You will therefore apply your Attention to the Substance of this Conversation, that Judith Natus was reproached with giving false Evidence, and that she was justifying herself.

That Natus and his Wife lay at Wells's during the Month of January, is supposed even by this very Witness. Now I should be glad to know in what Part of the House they lay. It appears, that every other Room in the House, except the Hay-loft, was wholly occupied by the rest of the Family. And if they lay in the Hay-loft, it could not be while the Defendant was there, because she swore, "she did not see a human Creature during all the Time of her Confinement, but once through a Crack of the Door."

Further to discredit Fortune Natus's Evidence, one Jackson is called to prove the Proposal of a Wager by Natus, at the Four Swans, whether he had not lain out of Wells's House a single Night during the Month of January. This was intended to contradict Natus, as having, in his Evidence, denied proposing any such Wager. But in reality Natus was so far from denying it, that he himself gave an Account of his having lain out of the House one Night, and no more. And his Wife, you may remember, gave the same Account. This Circumstance, so confirmed by the Defendant's Witness, would add Credit to Natus, if he stood in need of it.

The next Evidence is to the Impeachment of Natus's Character, by three Persons swearing with such Rancour and Malice, as is sufficient to overthrow all Pretence of Credit in themselves.

One of them, in effect, says, he believes Fortune Natus is so infamous a Fellow, that without the Temptation of Interest, or any Passion to indulge, but merely for the sake of giving false Testimony, and from his Propensity to Lying, he would perjure himself in a Court of Justice.

But let not human Nature bear the Reproach of such a Character. There cannot be a Man on this Side Hell so abandoned by his Maker, as that rash Witness would have you to think. The Earth has never bore such a Monster, as to fall in Love with naked Falshood. What Devil incarnate was ever heard of, who did not incline to Truth, till he was warped by some particular Temptation to leave her? For has not the Author of Nature created her lovely in the Eyes of all Mankind? Let any Man breathing ask his own Heart, whether he was ever persuaded to embrace a Falshood, till she was robed in the Garb of Truth to deceive him? It would be a Contradiction in Terms to say otherwise. The Witness, who is capable of representing Natus in such Colours, must be conscious of the Truth of this Observation, and feel himself impelled to such a horrid Misrepresentation either by Avarice or Revenge, or some Passion which he dares not avow.

But see the real Character of this Natus, by one who who knows him better. — Mr. Bell, his Master, says, he has known him very well for fifteen Months past, and that he is his Servant; — that he is a very honest, civil, and industrious Man; — that he never once caught him in a Lye in his Life; — that he has now eight Servants, and would be glad to have his Fellow.

The same Man may indeed have several Characters, as different People are differently affected to him. And perhaps it would be a good general Rule, to take the Medium betwixt the two Extremes of any Character whatever. But surely there never were two such Extremes as these concerning the same Character before; and considering the Nature of the Evidence, and who are the Witnesses, I may very safely rest upon the Credit of Natus's Testimony, especially as it has been so well supported by many other Witnesses, attesting such a Number of Circumstances to confirm it.

Another Witness, Mr. Metcalf, was called to contradict Mr. Whiffin, as to the Time of his receiving the Sign-iron. But Metcalf's Evidence is so very uncertain and indeterminate; that it proves nothing. He swears to a Transaction upon the 8th of January; but when he is called upon to assign his Reason for being particular to the Day of the Month; all he can say is, that he keeps his Reckoning by his Clock, and is ignorant whether his Account is according to the Old Stile; or New.

But Mr. Whiffin's Evidence is sufficiently supported by several Circumstances, the Time is fixed beyond all Doubt, and there now remains no Stain upon his Character.

Gentlemen; I think I have taken Notice of all the material Circumstances on both Sides, two only excepted; which I did not sooner recollect.

One is, the Defendant's claiming the Bed-gown, before sworn by her to have been found at Wells's, in the Grate in the Chimney. This then lay, together with the Pitcher, on a Table at the Mansion-House; and she would have taken them both away; but that was objected to, because they did not belong to her, and that they might be deposited in some public Place, for the sake of further Discoveries: Upon this (relinquishing the Pitcher) she insisted on taking away the Bed-gown, for "That was her Mother's." — It has been proved; that there was no Grate in the Chimney at Wells's.

And I should have added to the Observations upon the Evidence of the Mother, who proved the Defendant's Hand-writing to some Papers now before you, that the Innocence of the Defendant having been most cogently inferred from her supposed Simplicity, and she having been represented as a poor, silly, illiterate Creature, incapable of inventing such a Story, to furnish her Advocates with so excellent an Argument, she set her Mark to her Information before Mr. Fielding, as if unable to write her Name; which Information is also before you. I dare say, it was not then imagined that this Marks-Woman had received so good an Education. Who would have thought, upon reading the Pamphlet, which that good Magistrate was pleased to oblige the World with, containing the Information at large, with such ingenious Remarks upon her Stupidity; — who would have dreamt, that this "Child in Years, more so in Understanding," was able to write a very fair, legible Hand?

And this may serve as a Specimen to shew what mean Artifices have been made use of to deceive Mankind.

Gentlemen, you have now before you the whole Merits of this Cause; the Subject of universal Controversy, which it is hoped your Verdict will put an End to.

Permit me; therefore; to remind you briefly of what you must necessarily believe, in order to acquit the Defendant of the Charge against her.

In the first Place, you must believe a most astonishing Story of several Incidents, every one of which is to the highest Degree improbable. You must also believe; that above forty Witnesses to the Alibi of the Gypsey are all guilty of Perjury; although there is a greater Combination of Circumstances to add Credit to their Evidence; than was ever before required to satisfy a human Inquiry. To this End, you must also believe, that all these Witnesses conspired to this Perjury, and preconcerted every Circumstance with so much Art and Contrivance, as to defeat the Possibility of Detection upon a separate Examination; and all this you are to suppose, although the Evidence to contradict them is infinitely less clear, less certain, and less conclusive.

But if, notwithstanding, you can prevail upon yourselves to suppose Mary Squires to have been at Enfield, when we proved her elsewhere, or (which is as hard to suppose) that the Defendant mistook her for another, you have yet more Difficulties to reconcile. For you must further suppose, either that Mr. Alderman Chitty; Mr. Nash; Hague; Aldridge, together with many of the Defendant's own Witnesses to several Circumstances; are absolutely perjured; or else you must yield your Assent to a new Train of Events, as many and as wonderful; as those in the Defendant's Story.

You must, moreover, believe all the ten Witnesses, confirming Natus's Evidence, likewise guilty of Perjury; although no Attempt has been made to disprove their Testimony, except only (what I hope is sufficiently answered) with respect to Natus himself, and also as to the Time of Whiffin's buying the Sign-iron.

And upon what Foundation are you to suppose all this? — Upon the Credit of Elizabeth Canning; proved to be self-contradicted in no less than three Instances, relative to a single Fact; or, upon the Evidence of her Witnesses, who have given no Answer to the Charge. For it is observable, that not one of the Witnesses for the Crown, except to the Alibi of Squires, is contradicted by those for the Defendant; and yet; if their Evidence be true, she must be guilty.

These; Gentlemen, are the Remarks occurring to me upon the various Circumstances in this very long Trial. Many of them may, perhaps, have been unnecessary or improper, whilst some, which I may have omitted, should have been enforced; but whatever Errors are imputable to me in the Course of this Prosecution, I solemnly protest, that the mis-stating or misapplying any Facts has been intirely foreign to my Intention throughout the Cause; in the Merits of which I have at no Time been engaged, otherwise than, as I conceived, the Duty of my Profession directed me: And this Duty I have discharged to the best of my Abilities.

Mr. Nares. I only beg leave to mention one Thing. There has been one Reason attempted to be given, why a very material Witness is not produced, the Want of which Witness is attended with the utmost Inconveniency to the Prisoner at the Bar; that is, Virtue Hall: By her not being called we can give no Evidence relative to her; that is, as to what she has said, and the Means used in her Recantation. Mr. Davy has given this as a Reason, because she is not in Law a Witness; but I beg leave to say, that according to all the Cases, and common Practice every Day, she is a Witness; it only goes to her Credit, and that goes to the Jury. You know the Case of Cartwright at Hertford; he confessed he had perjured himself in four or five different Courts. I should be glad if the Court would deliver their Opinions on it.

Mr. Baron Legge. I believe Witnesses have very often been called, that have declared they have been perjured in other Instances; but I will never admit or suffer a Person, that will say they have been perjured in another Affair, and I knew it before they were sent for. When she swears true, I cannot tell; but that she has sworn false once, I must know.

Mr. Nares. In the Case of Subornation of Perjury they are admitted every Day.

Mr. Baron Legge. They are admitted; but it goes so much to their Credit.

Mr. Recorder. I remember, that in the Trial of Titus Oates, Lord Chief-Justice Jefferys would have been glad to have hanged him, but would not suffer a perjured Person to be examined against him. What must such Set of Witnesses swear? Why, they must set out in saying they have been perjured before. Then what is the Consequence, but that they must destroy their own Credit?

Mr. Baron Legge. When a Witness stands up and tells us she has once sworn false, what Credit can be given to her Testimony?

Mr. Davy. I have known such Witnesses examined more than once: The Jury have a Right to call and examine her, but I have no Right to call her, neither has the Defendant.

Mr. Recorder.

Gentlemen of the Jury, Elizabeth Canning, the Prisoner at the Bar, stands indicted for Perjury, in swearing that Mary Squires, — [See the Indictment, the Perjury assigned, and the Averment mentioned before in this Trial.] — But as this is a Trial of unusual Length, and of great Expectation, I shall state the Evidence in the clearest Manner I have been able to collect it; and if, in the stating the several Facts which have been laid before you, during the Course of this long Proceeding, I should accidentally disclose my own Opinion, I must desire that it may have no Weight, or make the least Impression on you, in determining your Verdict, otherwise than as the Weight of the Evidence justifies it. As this Indictment is founded upon the Evidence given by Elizabeth Canning against Mary Squires, on whose Testimony she was capitally convicted, Thomas Gurney, the Short-hand Writer, is called, who says, that upon the 22d Day of February; Mary Squires was tried in this Court; and upon that Trial, Elizabeth Canning swore, That on the first Day of January, in the Year 1753, she had been at Saltpetre-Bank to see her Uncle and Aunt, and stayed there till about Nine at Night; — that her Uncle and

Aunt came with her to Aldgate; when they parted; — that she was then alone, and so came down Houndsditch, and over Moorfields by Bedlam Wall, where two lusty Men, both in Great Coats, laid hold of her, and took half a Guinea in a little Box out of her Pocket, and three Shillings that were loose; — that they afterwards tied her Hands behind her, and dragged her to Wells's House at Enfield-Wash, where they arrived about Four o'Clock in the Morning; — that she saw there the said Gypsy Woman Squires sitting in a Chair, who took her by the Hand, and asked her if she chose to go their Way, saying, that if she did, she should have fine Cloaths; but she refusing, Mary Squires then took a Knife out of a Dresser-Drawer, and cut the Lace of her Stays, and took them from her; — that Mary Squires gave her a Slap on the Face, and pushed her up Stairs out of the Kitchen into a Room called the Hay-loft, and shut the Door, and threatened her, if she stirred or moved, to cut her Throat; — that when Day-light appeared, she could see in the Room a black Pitcher, not quite full of Water, about twenty-four Pieces of Bread, a Fire-place, and a Grate; — that she continued there a Month by the Weeks, all but a few Hours; — that she broke down a Board that was nailed up at the Inside of the Window, and got out on Monday the 29th of January, about Four o'Clock in the Afternoon; — that she took out of the Grate in the Chimney an old Sort of a Bed-gown and Handkerchief, which she tied over her Head instead of a Cap; and got to her Mother's House in Aldermanbury, about a quarter after Ten o'Clock at Night.

In order, therefore, to prove that the Evidence she then gave was false, a great Number of Witnesses have been called to prove Mary Squires at a different Place, at the Time on which Elizabeth Canning has sworn to her robbing her at Wells's at Enfield-Wash.

The first of these Witnesses is Esther Hopkins, who says, that she keeps a Public House at South-Parrot, which is some Miles beyond Abbotsbury in Dorsetshire; is positive she saw Mary Squires, her Son and Daughter, at her House, on the 29th of December 1752; that they lodged at her House that Night; the Reason of her remembering it, that two Gentlemen that Day had been there, who left their Reckoning unpaid; that Mary Squires, her Son and Daughter, went away next Morning; is particularly positive to Mary Squires, having never seen such another remarkable Woman; that she is more positive to the Son than to the Daughter, for he had a Bag which he carried under his Arm. They all travelled on Foot.

The next Witness was Alice Farnham, who lives at Winyard's Gap, ten Miles beyond Abbotsbury. She says, that she saw Mary Squires at Winyard's Gap, about Eight or Nine o'Clock, on the Saturday Morning next after New Christmas, with her Son and Daughter; the Reason of her being so positive to Mary Squires is, that having seen the Picture of Mother Shipton, she thought she resembled that Picture. They all stayed about an Hour at her House, and had a Quart of Beer, and some Bread and Cheese, and when they parted with her, said, that they would come and see her again at Old Christmas; that they all went towards Abbotsbury, which is ten or eleven Miles from Winyard's Gap; that she had seen them come into South-Parrot the Day before, and seeing they were Gypsies, her Mother asked, if she was not frightened. This she remembers was on a Saturday, because she had a Mind a Mind to have gone that Day to Crookborne Market to buy some Things against Old Christmas, but her Mother would not let her go. She saw a Bag under the Son's Arm, and the Daughter dressed very neat in a white Holland Gown. Has never seen them since; but is very positive to them. That they had a Mug of Beer, and paid for it.

The next Witness, who undertakes to prove the whole Journey to Enfield-Wash, is George Squires, who is Son to Mary Squires, who says, he was at South-Parrot on Friday next after New Christmas-Day; and they put up at the Red Lion there, and stayed one Night only: That (they set out from Newington near Southwark about seven or eight Weeks before Michaelmas preceding) from South-Parrot they all went to Winyard's Gap, and then to Litton: That they lay there upon Saturday, and he left his Mother and Sister there, and went to Abbotsbury on Sunday, to see some Friends he had there, and particularly to see William Clarke: That he and Clarke went to Litton for his Mother and Sister the Monday following, and at Litton the Sister, Clarke, and he, dined together; his Mother being gone towards Abbotsbury to see for Clarke and him; but upon her Return dined with them. After Dinner they all set out for Abbotsbury, and arrived there upon the Monday Night, being the 1st of January, and lay there, at the Sign of the Ship, at one Gibbons's; they danced till Twelve o'Clock at Night, and several People were with them. His Partner was Gibbons's Sister, and having been at Abbotsbury before, he knew several there. Clarke danced with his Sister; and that his Mother, his Sister, and himself, stayed at Abbotsbury from the 1st to the 9th of January. That the 1st of January being a wet Day, one Andrew Wake, who was then an Excise-man at Abbotsbury, borrowed his Great Coat of him, in order to make his Survey. That on Tuesday the 9th of January, his Mother and Sister and himself left Abbotsbury: Clarke went with them to a Place called Portersham, about a Mile and a half from Abbotsbury. The next Day they went to Ridgway, about five or six Miles from Abbotsbury. Clarke and he lay together, and lay there at the Sign of the Ship, at one Bewley's, where there happened to be a Horse which had just died; and his Money being short, he left a Piece of Nankeen for his Reckoning, his Mother and Sister being then with him. From thence, on Thursday the 11th, they all went to Dorchester, and there they had an Account of his Sister Mary's Illness, and then they determined to hasten to her; and the Waters being very much out, he carried his Mother upon his Back, and a Miller took his Sister on a Horse behind him through the Water. They travelled on Foot almost the whole Night, and arrived at a Village called Chettle, which is four Miles beyond Blandford, and on the Saturday following they all lay at Martin in a Barn belonging to Farmer Thane. On the Sunday after they all went to Coombe, and lay there at one Greville's, the Sign of the Lamb, who is since dead. On the Monday following he does not recollect where they lay, neither can he recollect where they all lay till his Arrival at Basingstoke, and when they got there, they put up at the Spread-Eagle, where the Woman of the House, at his Sister's Request, wrote a Letter to Clarke at Abbotsbury. They lay that Night at a Place called Old Basing, (their usual Way of travelling being about ten Miles a Day). From thence they went to Bagshot, and lay at the Sign of the Greyhound there; and from thence to Brentford, where they all arrived and lay there upon the Saturday; and on the Sunday he went to London to see his Sister Mary, and on the Monday he brought her to Brentford to one Mrs. Edwards's, where they all stayed till Tuesday, and on Tuesday they all went to the Sign of the Seven Sisters at a Green near Tottenham, and on Wednesday they all arrived at Mrs. Wells's at Enfield, whom he never saw before, but was recommended there. That before they went to Mrs. Wells's, they called at another House, where they were recommended to a House at Chefbunt; but that being too far, they went to Wells's, where he left his Mother and Sisters. That in two or three Days after he went to London to receive some Money, and returned next Day, and found his Mother and Sisters at Wells's. His Mother and Sisters lay in the Room over the Parlour, and he lay in a little Room fronting the Stairs, and Wells, her Daughter, and Virtue Hall lay in a Room on the left Hand, and one Fortune Natus and his Wife lay in a Room some few Steps out of the Kitchen. That, during the Time they were at Wells's, they bought their Chandlery Ware of one Larney, and it being Herring Time, they lived very much upon Herrings, which they bought of an old Man who carried them about to sell. That, during the whole Time he was at Wells's, he never saw the Prisoner Canning, neither had he ever seen her before his Mother was arrested, which was on Thursday the 1st of February. Upon his Cross-examination he says, that he cannot recollect where he was the Christmas before he set out towards Dorsetshire, neither can he recollect the several particular Places through which he travelled, except Lewes and Salisbury, and some other principal Towns in the West of England. He gives an Account of the whole Journey from South-Parrot to Enfield, except four Days, which is from their Arrival at Coombe till they got to Basingstoke.

Then, to confirm the Account which George Squires has given, they call a great many Witnesses. The first is John Fry, who is a Tiler and Plaisterer, and lives at Litton in Dorsetshire. He says, that he saw a Gypsey the 30th of December at one James Hawkins's, a Public House; that it was on a Saturday. He remembers it, because it was New Christmas Time, and the Monday following was New-year's Day. Is very positive both to Mary Squires, her Son, and her Daughter. The Part of the House he saw them in was the Kitchen, and has known Mary Squires for thirty Years.

Francis Gladman is called next. He is sure that he saw Mary Squires, her Son and Daughter, at Litton, in the Morning of the 1st of January, for he shaved George Squires the Sunday before. He remembers the Day particularly, because he was one of the Ringers who rung in the New Year. That Mary Squires was asked whether she could tell Fortunes, and she said, No. Then he asked her, whether she could speak Spanish or French? who answered, she could not. The next Witness is

James Angel, who says, that he saw Mary Squires and her Daughter at Hawkins's at Litton on the 31st Day of December: But he did not see George Squires, because he was gone to Abbotsbury. He remembers it, because the Monday following he was called to ring-in the New Year. He did not see Mary Squires in the Evening, because she was gone to Abbotsbury, which was three Miles from Litton. The next Witnesses is

James Hawkins, who remembers that Mary Squires, her Son and Daughter, came to his House at Litton on Saturday the 30th of December, and they stayed there all Sunday, except George, who went to Abbotsbury on the Sunday; and that George Squires and William Clarke returned from Abbotsbury about Ten or Eleven o'Clock on Monday Morning; and after they had dined, they all set out for Abbotsbury about Two o'Clock the same Day.

William Clarke is called next, who lives at Abbotsbury, and is very well acquainted with Mary Squires, her Son and Daughter. He says, that George Squires came to him at Abbotsbury on Sunday the 31st of December; he stayed with him there till Monday Morning. That he asked George after his Sister Lucy, who told him, that his Mother and she were at Litton. That they both together went to Litton next Morning, where they arrived about Three o'Clock. Mary Squires was not there upon their first Arrival, because she went towards Abbotsbury to meet her Son George. That upon her coming back to Litton, they all dined together upon a boiled Fowl, and after Dinner he went with them to Abbotsbury, and it being the 1st of January, they had a Dance at Gibbons's, the Sign of the Ship there. That Lucy Squires was his Partner, and one Arnold played on the Music. Is very sure, that both Mary Squires, her Son and Daughter, were at Abbotsbury upon that Day, and is as sure that they all continued there till Tuesday the 9th of January, for he saw them there every Day; and upon that Tuesday he set out with them on their Journey, and went with them to Portersham, and then to Ridgway, where he left them at one Bewley's House there. That they had Beef-steaks for their Supper, and when he parted with them, George borrowed six Shillings of him. That he, the Witness, desired Lucy to write to him, and told her how to direct to him. That he has known Mary Squires, her Son and Daughter, four Years.

The next is John Gibbons, who keeps the Sign of the Old Ship at Abbotsbury. He says, he knows Mary Squires, her Son and Daughter. Has known Mary Squires for three Years. Is very positive they were all at his House the 1st of January, 1753, in the Evening, dancing. That George danced with his Sister, Lucy with Clarke. That they all stayed at his House from that Time till Tuesday the 9th of January; and remembers, that while they were there, the Exciseman borrowed George's Great Coat to go his Rounds. That they and Clarke went away together on Tuesday the 9th of January. He was a Witness at the Trial of Mary Squires, but doth not remember he was asked about the Dancing on the 1st of January.

George Clements is called next, who confirms what the other Witnesses have sworn about the Dancing at Gibbons's, in every Circumstance. That he saw Mary Squires, her Son and Daughter, at Abbotsbury, the 2d and 3d of January. The Sunday following he dined with them at Gibbons's. That Clarke and they set out together the Tuesday following. That he knows them all very well, remembers Mary Squires many Years. The next is nuary, at the Old Ship there. Remembers the Dancing that Night, and played on the Fiddle. That Clarke was Lucy's Partner, and George was Mary Gibbons's Partner. That he saw them all several Times during the Week they were there, and remembers all the several Circumstances mentioned by the other Witnesses.

John Ford is called next, who is a Carpenter, and lives at Abbotsbury; is Uncle to Gibbons, who keeps the Old Ship, which is the Excise-Office; saw Mary Squires, her Son and Daughter, there every Day during their Stay there, which was from the 1st of January to the 9th; knows Mary Squires as well as his own Mother; that he sells Bread, and they bought their Bread of him during the whole Time they stayed. The next is

Daniel Wallace, who is a Mercer at Abbotsbury: He is very positive that he saw Mary Squires, her Son and Daughter, at Abbotsbury on Sunday the 7th of January, and that George Squires bought Sugar of him; that seeing Mary Squires, on the Day of his having bought a new Jack, she asked him to dine with her that Day. Then they call

Hugh Bond, who is a Schoolmaster at Abbotsbury; who says, that on the 31st of December; being Holiday-time, he went to see his Wife, who was ill in Devonshire, and he returned to Abbotsbury on Monday the 8th of January. That he lodged at the Old Ship. Is very positive that he saw Mary Squires, her Son and Daughter, there that Night, and saw them there next Morning, the 9th of January. That he had some Conversation with George Squires, along with one Wake an Exciseman, who officiated for one Ward an Exciseman, who was then sick; and Wake lay at the Ship in the same Bed where Ward used to lie, and that George Squires lay in another Bed in the same Room. Then

John Bailey is called, who is a Carpenter at Abbotsbury. He says, he has known Mary Squires ten or fifteen Years, and has known George and Lucy three Years. Is very positive that he saw them all at the Old Ship there on Monday the 1st of January; that they continued there from that Time till Tuesday the 9th; and that he shaved George twice within that Time, and remembers it particularly by his Brother's setting out on the 1st of January for Bristol, in order to go to Sea. The next is

Thomas Anson, who lives at Abbotsbury. He has known Mary Squires, her Son and Daughter, about four Years, and is very sure he saw them at the Old Ship there on Friday the 5th of January, and is sure they are the same Persons he had seen four Years before; that Clarke was with them, and it was reported that Clarke and Lucy were Sweet-hearts. Then they call

John Hawkins, who is a Weaver at Abbotsbury, who remembers seeing Mary Squires, her Son and Daughter, at Abbotsbury the 1st of January at Gibbons's; is certain that they all continued there from the 1st to the 9th of January, having seen them every Day; and he particularly remembers the Dancing, and Arnold's playing on the Fiddle. Then

Andrew Wake the Exciseman is called, (who is mentioned by some of the former Witnesses.) He says, that he was ordered to officiate as Exciseman at Abbotsbury during the Illness of one Ward, who was taken sick there. That he went to Abbotsbury on Sunday the 31st of December, to Gibbons's, the Sign of the Ship, which is the Excise-

Excise-Office; was in Company with George and Lucy Squires, and Clarke, at that House, and on that Day; and that George and he lay in the same Room; and that he saw Mary Squires, was in Company with her and Lucy, and in the same House, on the Wednesday following. He also remembers the Dancing at Gibbons's on the 1st of January, and that George and Lucy and Clarke danced there on that Evening, and particularly remembers that Arnold played on the Fiddle; and he being a Dealer in Cyder, he surveyed him; and this Witness being at that Time out of Order, he borrowed a Great Coat of George; and that Mary Squires ordered something for him to take; and says, that he left the Excise-Books with Ward, when he went away from Abbotsbury, which was on the 14th of January. He then refers to those Books, and swears to the Entries and the Journal. Says, that when he went to Bed at Abbotsbury, he always went to his own Room through that where Mary Squires and Lucy lay, and that he generally saw them every Night during his Stay there. He afterwards went to Dorchester, where he saw in the News an Account of Elizabeth Canning's being robbed by Mary Squires on the 1st of January, and that she was found guilty; and that he then immediately said, she could not be the Woman, because he saw her on that Day at Abbotsbury. He then went to Lewes, and there he received the Commissioners of Excise Orders to attend the then Lord-Mayor in London; and upon his Arrival there he went to Mary Squires, then in Newgate, who immediately knew him, and seemed rejoiced to see him, and put him in mind of all the several Circumstances before-mentioned; and concludes with saying, that she is the same Person that he saw at Abbotsbury at the Time he has sworn to. The next is

Francis Aldborough, (who is produced to confirm the Evidence of the last Witness, with respect to the Entries in the Books returned to the Excise-Office by the Excise-Officers out of the Country,) and he produces the Books, by which it appears that the last Witness Andrew Wake officiated for John Ward (who was ill) during that Time of which Wake has given you an Account. The next Witnesses are

William Haines, and John Haines his Son, who both prove, that Mary Squires, her Son and Daughter, were all at Portersham (which is a few Miles off Abbotsbury) on the 9th of January, and that William Clarke was with them, and that they lodged at the Sign of the Chequer there: That he invited them to his House, which they refusing, he and one Chipman, who was with him, went to them at the Chequer: That the Reason of the Father's being so certain of the Day of the Month is, because he went to Abbotsbury the Day before, which was the 8th. He is very positive to Mary Squires, and has known her for thirty Years. — The Son confirms the Testimony of his Father, in remembering them at Portersham, and remembers also his seeing Mary Squires at Abbotsbury on the 6th of January, and that it was wet Weather. From Portersham they went to Ridgway, which is four or five Miles from Portersham. To prove their Arrival at Ridgway,

Francis Bewley is called, who keeps a Public House there, who swears, that he saw this Family at Ridgway on Wednesday the 10th of January, about Ten or Eleven o'Clock in the Morning; that they had Beef-steaks there; that he remembers a Woman whose Horse died there, that he supplied her with another in its Place, and remembers this particular Circumstance of the Horse being drawn out of the Stable to be skinned, and that at that Time Mary Squires came into the Yard, and it was a remarkable wet Day; that Clarke bargained with a Turnip-man for an Horse to carry him back to Abbotsbury. Remembers that Mary Squires and her Family being short of Money, desired he would take a Waistcoat they had for the Reckoning, which he did, and which Witness produced it, and has kept it ever since; and that he remembers them both by those Circumstances, as well as by the dead Horse, the Wetness of the Weather, and by its being Blandford Sessions, which is always held on the 10th of January. Then they call

Thomas Mockeridge, who is the Man that sold Turnips, and whose Horse Clarke hired to return to Abbotsbury; and he remembers all or most of the above-mentioned Evidence, as to Mary Squires, her Son and Daughter, being at Ridgway on the 10th of January; that they were at one Bewley's, the Sign of the Ship there; that he remembers Mary Squires above three Years before that Time, and is very positive as to the Circumstance about skinning the Horse. The next is

John Taylor, who lives at Fordington near Dorchester, who swears, that he saw Mary Squires, her Son and Daughter, there on Thursday the 11th of January. Remembers that the Rains had been so great on the 10th, that they could not go along the high Road, but were obliged to go through his Yard; that a Miller's Boy carried the Daughter through the Water on his Horse, and that Mary Squires walked through great Part of the Water, and there were three little Rivers to cross. They all told him they lay at Ridgway the Night before, and asked him their Way to Chettle. The next Witness is

Thomas Hunt, who was threshing in a Barn at Chettle on the 12th of January, and says, that he knows, and saw Mary Squires, her Son and Daughter, there on that Day; that there being no Public House there, he, at their Request, got them Lodgings in an Out-house belonging to Mr. Watts, where they lay on Straw, and stayed there till between Nine and Ten o'Clock next Morning; it was very wet Weather, and it was on or about Old New-year's Day. From Chettle they went to Martin; to prove which

John Elderton is called, who says, that he is Servant to one Farmer Thane, who lives at Martin, and is positive that Mary Squires, her Son and Daughter, by Consent of his Master, lay in an Out-house belonging to his Master; that he saw them all there at Four in the Afternoon on the Saturday Se'nnight after Old Christmas-Day, and he saw them about Eight o'Clock next Morning; and that his Master saw them at the same Time, of which he would have given Evidence, but was prevented by his being taken ill at Salisbury. This last Witness is confirmed by William Hort in the Circumstances and Facts before-mentioned, with this further, that Lucy was next Morning mending some China. The next is

John Blandford, who is a Blacksmith, works for Farmer Thane, and is positive that he saw Mary Squires at Farmer Thane's Barn at the Time the other Witnesses swear to. Then

Joseph Hayter is called, who is a Maltster at Coombe, who says, that he met them all upon the Road between Martin and Coombe on the 14th of January, being the Sunday next after Old Christmas; is positive to Mary and George Squires, having seen them before; he met them about Eleven o'Clock in the Forenoon, and upon his Return to Coombe the same Day, he saw them all at one Mrs. Greville's, the Sign of the Lamb there. This last Witness is confirmed by Mary Greville, who was Sister to Thomas Greville, who was prosecuted for Perjury, for what he swore at the Trial of Mary Squires, but is now dead; and she swears, that she saw them all at Coombe on the 14th of January at her Mother's, Mrs. Greville's, the Sign of the Lamb there, and that they lay there that Night, and went away the next Morning. They are also proved to be at Coombe on the 14th of January by four other Witnesses, the first of whom is George Towil, who saw them there on the 14th of January at Mrs. Greville's, the Sign of the Lamb.

Richard Aimer, who saw them at Mrs. Greville's the Morning they went away, which was the 15th of January: And by

Robert Merchant, who saw them there the 14th of January: And by Martba Waters, who saw them there the same Day, and that she asked them to tell her Fortune. From thence they went to Basingstoke, which was about forty Miles; and they were four Days in travelling thither; but there is no Evidence laid before you of the several Places through which they went in getting there: But this Chasm will not be very material, if you give Credit to the several Witnesses whose Evidence I have already laid before you; for if you believe that Mary Squires was at Abbotsbury on the 1st of January, which is the Day on which the Perjury is assigned, it is impossible that she could have been at Enfield on the same 1st of January, which the Defendant swore she was.

Mary Morris is called next, who says, that she lives at Basingstoke, and is positive that she saw Mary Squires, her Son and Daughter, at her own House there, the Sign of the Spread-Eagle, on the 18th of January, and has this particular Reason for remembering it, which is, that Lucy Squires desired she would write a Letter for her to one Clarke at Abbotsbury. The Letter was produced, and she swears it was the same she wrote, and which she sent by her little Boy to the Post-Office. She says, that they stayed at her House about four or five Hours, and from thence they set out for Old Basing, which is about two Miles from Basingstoke. She is very certain as to their Persons, and says that Mary Squires had lain once at her House. From thence they went to Brentford, and to prove them there,

Elizabeth Edwards is called, who says, that she lives at Brentford; that Mary Squires, her Son and Daughter, came to her House there on Saturday the 20th of January; is sure they came on that Day; recollects the Time, because one of her Neighbour's Children was christened on that Day; and on the next Day, being Sunday, George Squires went to London to fetch his other Sister, and brought her on Monday, and on Tuesday they all went away; is positive to Mary Squires, because some Time after she saw her in Newgate. The next is Susannah Burwill, who is Daughter to the last Witness, and confirms her Mother's Evidence in every Particular. From thence they went to a Place called Page-Green; to prove which, they call

William Tredget, who keeps the Seven Sisters, a Public House at Tottenham, four Miles from London; is very sure that he saw Mary Squires, her Son and Daughter, at Page-Green on the 23d of January, who told him they wanted Lodgings; that his Wife and he were together; she recommended them to lodge at a Farm-house in that Neighbourhood; and says, that he is certain as to the Person of Mary Squires, having seen her three Years before, and had taken Notice of her as the most uncommon Face he had ever seen, and went to see her when in Newgate. They then call

Mary Tredget his Wife, who agrees with her Husband in every Circumstance of his Evidence. And the next Day, as appears by the Evidence of George Squires, they all arrived at Enfield.

The next Piece of Evidence is to prove the Letter sent by the Post, which Mary Morris says in her Evidence she wrote to Clarke at the Request of Lucy Squires; and to prove this, they call

Thomas Ravenhill, who is Clerk of the Western Road, and he proves the Letter to be sent from Basingstoke to London by the Mark of the Post-Office in London; it was sent to Dorchester, which is the Post-Town to which Abbotsbury is nearest; and that the whole Postage through London from Basingstoke to Abbotsbury amounted to Sevenpence.

The Evidence next proper to be laid before you is that of Mr. Alderman Chitty, who was the Sitting Alderman at Guildhall upon the 31st of January 1753; which was the Day on which Elizabeth Canning laid her Information before him of the Treatment she had met with at Wells's. The Account she then gave, appears by the Notes he took, which he produced, and which have been already read in Evidence; so that by comparing the Information she laid before him, and the Evidence she gave at the Trial of Mary Squires, you will find they differ in many remarkable Circumstances, both as to the Size of the Room she was confined in, the Furniture of it, as well as the Bread and the Water she swears she found and left there. As to the Size of the Room, she swore before him, that it was a square, dark, or darkish Room, furnished in the Manner you have heard; that there was some Water left in the Pitcher when she made her Escape; and that she found in the Room no more than four or five Pieces of Bread, amounting to the Quantity of about a Quartern Loaf: So that, by comparing the Information she then gave, with the Evidence she gave at the Trial of Mary Squires, you will find that there is a manifest Contrariety in those two Accounts in many Particulars. The next Witness is

Mr. Garven Nash, who says, that upon seeing a very extraordinary Paragraph in the News-paper relating to Elizabeth Canning, and being an Acquaintance of Mr. Lyon, (who was her Master) he went to Mr. Lyon on the 31st of January 1753, and hearing that Elizabeth Canning was to be examined before Alderman Chitty that Day, he went with Mr. Lyon to hear the Account she gave; and remembers that being asked by the Alderman, what Sort of a Room she was confined in, her

Answer was, That it was a little, square, dark; or darkish Room, and that there were some Boards nailed before the Windows, through which she saw the Hertford Stage-Coachman, who used to carry her Mistress; that there was in the Room a broken Stool, and an Iron Grate in the Chimney, and a few old Pictures over it. She said, that she lay on bare Boards, and that there were several Pieces of Bread which were blue and mouldy, and amounted to about the Quantity of a Quarter Loaf. The Account she gave of her Escape was by pulling down a Board nailed on the Window, and that she hurt her Ear by a Nail in getting out. She said, she heard the Name of Mother Wells during her Confinement, and therefore concluded she had been at her House; but she never mentioned the Name of Virtue Hall before Alderman Chitty. Upon this, the Alderman granted his Warrant, which being backed by a Middlesex Justice, Alaridge, Lyon, Hague, and himself, went to Enfield, to see it executed. That when they went to Wells's, they saw several People in the Parlour there, and having taken a View of several Rooms in the House, they saw a labouring Man there, and asking him if there were not some other Rooms in the House, he pulled a Button off a Door, and opened it, which led up seven or eight Steps into the Hay-loft or Workshop. He is very confident that there was no Lock on the Door, or even the Marks of one, when he went into the Room: It appeared a very long one, and not resembling the Description which Canning had given of it, he wondered where the Room was in which she was confined; and upon acquainting his Companions with the Variety of Things he had observed there, (and of which she had not made the least Mention) particularly of the Quantity of Hay, the Nest of Drawers, the Tub or Pollard, the three old Saddles, the Bed made of Hay, where some poor People seemed to have lain, together with the Jack-line and Pullies, the little Chimney, where there did not appear to have been either Hearth or Grate, nor any Pictures over the Chimney, nor the Appearance of any; though he says there was a Window which commanded the great Hertford Road, through which might be seen a great Watering-Pond, which was within nine or ten Feet of the Window; and that this Window was in the East Part of the Room, but had not (as he could observe) the least Appearance of ever having been boarded up, and was large enough for him to get out of, and was so near the Ground, that he shook Hands with his Wife out of it when she stood on the Ground, the Casement of which opened and shut very easy, and the Room was light; and if he had hung his Body out of that Window, his Feet could have been at most not above three Feet from the Ground. The East Window looks over a Lane, and Trees grow within Reach of it; and then observing that there was a good deal of Hay, which Elizabeth Canning had not mentioned, he told the Company with him, that he was sure that could not be the Room. Afterwards they had an Account brought them, that Wells, and Mary Squires, and the rest, were secured; upon which, they went to Wells's, and being impatient for the Arrival of Elizabeth Canning, who was then on the Road, Adamson went to meet her, and asked her upon the Road, whether there was any Hay in the Room? who answered, there was a little Hay there; at which he seemed very much pleased. And a very little Time after this, Elizabeth Canning was brought to Wells's; and being brought into the Parlour, where the Prisoners then were, she was desired to fix on the Person who robbed her, and she instantly fixed on Mary Squires, (but at this Time Mary Squires was in such a Situation in the Room, that neither Canning nor he could see her Face.) Upon which, Lucy Squires said to her Mother, The young Woman (meaning Elizabeth Canning) charges you with robbing her. Mary Squires, upon that, came across the Room to her, and said, Madam, do you say I robbed you? Pray, look at this Face; for if you had seen it before, you must have remembered it; for God Almighty never made such another. And upon Canning's saying that she robbed her on New-year's Day, Mary Squires said, Lord! Madam, I was on that Day an hundred and twenty Miles off. Upon which the Witness asked, Where? Her Answer was, That she was at Abbotsbury in Dorsetshire; and that she could bring a hundred People to prove it, who had known her for twenty, thirty, and forty Years. There was one Judith Natus then in the Room, who said, that she, Judith Natus, had been in the House ten or eleven Weeks, and that Mary Squires had been in the House but a very little Time; and that Judith Natus then said, that she had never seen Canning before. When she was taken into the Room called the Hay-loft, she said, she remembered a little Hay there, the Pitcher, and a Tobacco-roll; but being asked about the Chest of Drawers, the Tub wherein the Pollard was, and several other Things in the Room, she made no Answer. And being asked, why she did not endeavour to escape out of the East Window, she said, she thought it was fastened. And upon the whole, this Witness tells you, that upon comparing what he had observed at Wells's, with the Account which Canning gave before Alderman Chitty, he was of Opinion, that her Evidence was designedly false, or at least that she was grossly mistaken. On his being asked, why he did not give this Evidence at the Trial of Mary Squires? his Answer was, That he was that Day obliged to leave the Old-Bailey, to attend the Goldsmiths Company, (having an Employment under them); and being fully satisfied of the Innocence of Mary Squires, concluded that she could not be found guilty; and that he declared the Substance of what he has now sworn to several People before that Trial; and being extremely uneasy after her Conviction at his not giving Evidence upon her Trial, he went to Sir Crisp Gascoyne, then Lord-Mayor, to whom he disclosed the Whole or the Substance of the Evidence he has now given. The next Witness is

John Hague, who went with the last Witness to Enfield, and having told him what passed before Alderman Chitty, agreed to go with him, Aldridge, and Lyon, to Enfield. He confirms the Account which Nash has given in every Particular; but with this Addition, that during the Time that Elizabeth Canning was in the House, till she was carried into the Parlour, (where Mary Squires, Wells, and the rest were) she never mentioned her being robbed. He says, indeed, that Elizabeth Canning, on being asked whether she saw the Person who robbed her, pointed to Mary Squires; but he was surprized at her doing so, because, in the Situation Mary Squires then was, he thought it impossible she should see her Face. Says, he heard heard Mary Squires express herself (when she was charged with the Robbery) in the Manner Nash has mentioned. He describes the Room in the same Manner Nash has done; that there was not the least Appearance of a Grate ever having been there, or Pictures over the Chimney. Agrees with Nash as to the Windows, Trees, Hay, and Bed there, and likewise the Chest of Drawers, &c. which appeared to have been above a Year there, and that there was only a Button on the Door, and no Lock, no Pent-house under either of the Windows; and then finding that what he saw did not correspond with the Account which Canning had given, said to her with some Warmth, Zounds, Child, I cannot think you have been here at all. Upon which Nash, Aldridge, and he told Lyon, that they thought her whole Story was false, which he thinks to be the Reason they were not subpoena'd to give Evidence at the Trial of Mary Squires, though he owns he was in Court during the whole Trial. He says, that Elizabeth Canning charged Virtue Hall and Lucy Squires, as being present when her Stays were cut off; but they both very solemnly affirmed at that Time, that they never saw her in their Lives, before she so charged them. He says, he was so greatly affected by the Evidence which Elizabeth Canning had given, that he had not Spirits to desire to be called to contradict her. And says farther, that upon Mary Squires's being convicted, he could not rest till he applied to the late Lord-Mayor, to acquaint him with the Account he has now given; and that his only Motive in so doing, was that of rescuing the Innocent from Oppression.

The next is Edward Aldridge, who is a Silver-smith in Foster-Lane, who went with Nash, Lyon, and Hague, the 1st of February 1753, and who agrees with the two former Witnesses in every Particular as to the Description of the Room, and is of Opinion, that when Elizabeth Canning was first carried there on that Day, that she did not seem to know where she was; and that when she was first taken into the Parlour, Wells asked her, if she knew her? Her Answer was, that she did not. And that George Squires asked her the same Question as to her knowing him; to which she gave the same Answer: But says, that she charged the old Woman in the Corner of the Chimney (meaning Mary Squires) as the Person who cut off her Stays; but is of Opinion, that Elizabeth Canning could not at that Time see her Face; and is positive in remembering what Mary Squires said as to her being very remarkable in her Person, and of her being at Abbotsbury at the Time when Elizabeth Canning swore she was robbed. He then made his Observations on the Room called the Hay-loft, and recollects seeing all the Particulars there which Nash and Hague have mentioned in their Evidence; and says, that from all the Observations he could make, he is convinced that it was not a Place of Confinement. He says, that he went to Wells's as a Friend of Canning's, at his own Expence; and after laying all the Circumstances attending this extraordinary Case together, he saw one Mr. Hall, of Theobalds, and told him, that he thought Elizabeth Canning was mistaken; for he was sure she never had been at Wells's. He says, he was at the Old-Bailey Part of the Time of the Trial of Mary Squires, but went away to dine with the Goldsmiths Company, concluding that she must have been acquitted, as being quite innocent of the Robbery with which she was charged. The next Witness is

William White, one of the Marshal's Men, who is one of those who went to Wells's, in order to execute the Warrant, and took Wells, Mary Squires, and the rest into Custody. When they were secured, they desired they might look over their Goods, which they did in his Presence: But he saw no Stays amongst them. He then went into the Hay-loft, where he observed about twelve or fifteen Trusses of Hay, which seemed to have been there a considerable Time; and he also observed all the other Things in the Room, which the other Witnesses have mentioned, and concluded as they did, (for the Reasons you have heard from them) that Elizabeth Canning was mistaken. He went under the North Window, out of which she says she escaped; but there were not the least Marks or Footsteps to be seen of any body's getting out of that Window, neither was there the Appearance of any Shed or Pent-house. Was present when Elizabeth Canning fixed on Mary Squires, and heard both Mary Squires, her Son, and her Daughter say, that they were at that Time in Dorsetshire; and the other Daughter said, that she was at that Time at her Uncle's in the Borough. The next Witness is

Fortune Natus, who is a poor labouring Man, (and is mentioned by some of the other Witnesses.) He says, that he came to lodge at Mrs. Wells's about a Fortnight after Sir Crisp Gascoyne was sworn Lord-Mayor, and that he and his Wife lay in the Room called the Workshop or Hay-loft; that his Bed was made of Hay and Straw, and his Bolster a Sack of Wool; and describes the Situation of both Windows in the Room, and that one of them looked into the great Road. He says, that he and his Wife continued in that Room from the 27th of November to the 2d of February following, except one Night, during which Time he had a very good Opportunity of observing every thing in it; and says, that there was no Grate in the Chimney, but remembers the Nest of Drawers, the Side-saddles, the Tub with Pollard, and many other Things, which he specifies particularly in his Evidence. He mentions the Sign of the Crown, which was at the Feet of his Bed, which he says was bought by Whiffin; but is positive that there were no Pictures over the Chimney; and says, that he is sure that he lodged there the whole Month of January, and continued there till the Warrant was executed on the 2d of February, and after; and that he never saw Elizabeth Canning there, or any where else, before that Day. He says, that during that Month of January, Wells's Son and Daughters used frequently to go into this Hay-loft, where he and his Wife lay, for Hay and Pollard, as they wanted; and says, that during his Stay there, Virtue Hall was a Lodger in the House; and says, that Mary Squires, her Son, and Daughters, had been there no longer than a Week and a Day before they were taken up; and when he is asked why he is so particular, his Answer is, that Mary Squires's Person was so remarkable, that it struck a Sort of Terror in him. He remembers the Pitcher, and says, that his Wife, and all Wells's Family, used to bring Water in it from Mrs. Howard's, which was opposite to Wells's; but says, that he never saw a Bed-gown at Wells's. He

He was subpoena'd to give Evidence at the Trial of Mary Squires and Wells, and attended in the Yard at the Old-Bailey; but was assaulted there, and was (with some other Witnesses, who attended there on the same Occasion) turned out of the Yard three or four different Times. Then

Judith Natus (who is Wife to the last Witness) is called in, who agrees with the Evidence her Husband has given in every Particular; that they lodged at Wells's ten Weeks all but three Days, and continued there till they were all taken up, which was on the 2d of February. She is rather more exact than he is as to the Signs; for she says there were two Signs, one the Sign of the Fountain, and the other was the Sign of the Crown; and that Whiffin bought the Sign of the Crown some Time (as she believes) before Old Christmas, and afterwards bought the Irons of both the Signs, which were not taken away till about a Week before Mary Squires and the rest were taken up. When she is shewn the Bed-gown and Handkerchief, she swears that she never (to her Knowledge) saw them before. She remembers all the several Things in the Room, of which her Husband has already given a very exact Account; and says, that she gave the same Account she does now before Mr. Fielding; but was so insulted by the Mob at the Time when she attended at the Old-Bailey upon the Trial of Mary Squires and Wells, that she was not able to give Evidence. The next is Mary Larney, who keeps a Chandler's Shop at Enfield-Wash, who says, that she remembers the two last Witnesses lodging at Wells's about the Time they have told you. She says, that the first Time she saw Mary Squires was on Wednesday the 24th of January, and she did not see her after till the Thursday Se'nnight following; and that during the Time that Mary Squires was at Wells's, Lucy Squires used to buy Chandlery Ware of her.

Sarah Howit is the next, who is Wells's Daughter, and swears, that she lived with her Mother that same Month of January which Elizabeth Canning has fixed on to be the Time of her Confinement; and says, that Mary Squires and her Family came to her Mother's on Wednesday the 24th of January, and remained there till they were taken up. She is positive that Fortune Natus and his Wife lodged at her Mother's, in the Hay-loft, both before and after they were all taken up; and that they had been there considerably above two Months in the whole; mentions the Hay and Pollard there, and the Use they were put there for. She is very certain that she lay at her Mother's the whole Months of December and January, during which Time Virtue Hall and she went very frequently into the Hay-loft. Remembers a particular Circumstance of Trees growing against the East Window of that Room, and that upon the 8th of January, Edward Allen, Giles Knight, and John Larney lopped them, and at that Time Virtue Hall and she both looked out of the Window, the Casement of which, she, the Witness, opened, and that the Trees belonged to one Richard Allen. She was present when Elizabeth Canning fixed on Mary Squires as the Person who robbed her; but says, that at that Time Mary Squires was in such a Situation, that it was impossible for her to see her Face. The next Witness is the last Witness) who says, that he very well remembers that he, Allen, and Knight, went together on the 8th of January 1753, for that Purpose; and that Knight lopped them, and told him, that he should have the Lops; and that at the same Time Sarah Howit and Virtue Hall were looking out of the Window of the Workshop, and that Allen flung Dirt at them, which they desired he would not do. He says, he had the Arms of the Trees, and Wells had the Spray. He says, that he plaitered up two of the four Windows in the Workshop, and there remained only two, viz. one on the East, and the other on the North; that the Window on the East was not above seven or eight Feet from the Ground, and that the Wall was so very thin, being only Lath and Plaster, that any one might have pushed it down. He is very positive to the 8th of January being the Day on which the Trees were lopped, because his Child was christened, and he set his Chimney on Fire with the Lops which he burnt on that Occasion. He lives opposite to Wells's, and gave this Account before the Trial of Mary Squires.

John Larney, (who is produced to give an Account of the lopping the Trees mentioned by

Giles Knight is called next, who says, that he lopped the Trees mentioned by the former Witnesses, and is very positive that he lopped them on the 8th of January. Remembers that Circumstance of Virtue Hall and Sarah Howit looking out of the Window of the Workshop at the same Time, and of Dirt being flung at them, and that Larney had the Lops, and Wells the Spray, for which she gave them some Beer. Remembers an Accident of one Mrs. Picket's Cart breaking down that Day; and says, that the Window out of which the Women looked at that Time was large enough for him to get out of. The next Witness is Edward Allen, who (as the two former Witnesses swear) was with them at the Time of the lopping the Trees which were near the Workshop, and is very positive to the 8th of January; as the other Witnesses have sworn; and particularly remembers that Virtue Hall and Sarah Howit looked out of the Window of the Workshop or Hay-loft at the same Time; and confirms what they have said in every Circumstance.

John Cantril is called next, who keeps a Public House a little Distance from Wells's, and says, that upon this 8th of January Knight and Allen came to his House, and said they had been at Play, throwing Clods at Sarah Howit and Virtue Hall, who were looking out of a Casement that Day at Wells's: He is very particular to that Day, because it happened on a Monday, and the Tuesday following he had a Piece of Beef, which he intended to roast for his Customers, being Christmas Time; and says, that he remembers that Fortune Natus and his Wife lodged at Wells's between two and three Months. The End of producing this remarkable Piece of Evidence, as to that Circumstance of lopping the Trees on the 8th of January, is, that (if these Witnesses swear true) it is impossible that Canning could have been alone, or even at all in the Workshop or Hay-loft at Wells's, upon the 8th of January 1753, which she swore she was, upon the Trial of Mary Squires and Wells. The next Witness is Ezra Whiffin, who is referred to by some of the former Witnesses, as being the Person who bought Wells's Sign-irons. He lives at Enfield-Wash,

Wash, and having Occasion for some Sign-irons, and hearing that Wells had some to dispose of, he went to her on the 18th of January 1753, who told him they were in the Room called the Hay-loft; he went with her there, and looking about for the Irons, Wells said, Now I recollect, the Irons are under the Feet of this poor Creature's Bed, (pointing to the Bed where Natus's Wife then lay.) She then took up from under the Bed a Piece of Wood, to which the Irons were then fixed. He agreed to buy the Irons, which his Son took out of the Wood, and brought the Wood back to her. He gives you a Reason for his remembering the Day so particularly, because he was on that 18th of January going to a Place called Wormleigh, to borrow five Guineas of a Man who kept a Public House there, in order to make up a Sum he then owed his Brewer, (for which he had given a Note, in which one Livingstone joined with him) who had arrested him for it. Then Livingstone is called, who confirms Whiffin in that Circumstance of the Note.

John Whiffin, the Son of Exra Whiffin, is called next, who swears that he went with his Father to Wells's on the 18th of January; and is positive to his taking the Sign-irons out of the Wood by his Father's Orders, and returned the Wood to Wells in about three or four Days after. The next Witness is

Elizabeth Long, who is one of Wells's Daughters, and lives only three Doors from her Mother, and used to go there every Day. She is very certain that her Sister, and Virtue Hall, and Fortune Natus and his Wife, lived at her Mother's the whole Month of January 1753. She says, she has known the Room called the Workshop above twenty-two Years, and believes she went into it almost every Day during that whole Month. She is very positive to the Hay-bed, the Chimney, (in which there was no Grate) the Pollard, and the rest of the Things mentioned by the other Witnesses. Swears to the Pitcher being her Mother's; but as to the Bed-gown and Handkerchief, she never saw them till she saw them at the Lord-Mayor's. She was in the Parlour at her Mother's when Canning was brought in, in order to fix on the Person who robbed her, and gives the same Account of her Behaviour there which you have heard from the other Witnesses. She says, she was in the Old-Bailey Yard, together with Larney and Knight, when her Mother and Mary Squires were tried; but they were not suffered to continue there, or give their Evidence. The next is John Howit, who married Wells's Daughter, and is very positive that he was in the Workshop on the 19th, 20th, and 21st of January 1753, having some Tools there which he had Occasion to make use of; remembers Fortune Natus and his Wife lodging there at that Time, but never saw Canning till the Trial of Mary Squires. He was at the Old-Bailey at the Time of that Trial, but was very near being killed there by the Mob.

Robert White is called, who very well remembers Fortune Natus and his Wife lodging at Wells's about the Time you have heard.

The next Piece of Evidence laid before you, is the Model of this Hay-loft, or Workshop, (to shew you that it is not a little, square Room, as Canning described it before Alderman Chitty) which is produced by John Donoval, who is a Surveyor; and it appears to be thirty-five Feet three Inches long, and nine Feet eight Inches over.

Elizabeth Mayle, a Midwife, is called next, who says, that in the Beginning of February (being a few Days after Elizabeth Canning came Home) she went to make her Mother a Visit, and seeing Elizabeth Canning lying on her Bed there, and to all Appearance very ill, and inquiring into the Cause of her Illness, her Mother told her the Condition her Daughter came Home in. Elizabeth Canning then told her the whole which had happened to her; and on the Witness's asking her, whether she had been debauched? she answered, that she had lost her Senses, or was in Fits, and could not tell. Upon which she inquired for the Shift she came Home in, and upon its being produced, she asked, if that was the Shift she went away in? and upon being told it was, she immediately said, that she supposed it had been washed since it came Home; but the Mother saying it had not, she said, she thought it appeared a good deal too clean to have been worn so long; for it was uncommonly clean for so long wearing: That upon looking on the Shift, she assured the Mother, that her Daughter had not been debauched, if she had worn no other Shift: But she says, that, in her Opinion, the Shift could not have been worn three Weeks; nay, thinks that a Week's Wear would have made it as dirty as it then appeared; for it was not the least draggled. That there were only three little Spots upon it, which appeared to be Excrement. She said, she made her a few Visits after, and ordered her a Glyster; and on the last Visit she made her, she mentioned the three Spots on her Shift as having the Appearance of Excrement; at which her Mother was very angry, and told her, that she came to set her Friends against her. On being asked the Character of Elizabeth Canning, she gave her a very good one. The next Witness is George Brogden, Clerk to Mr. Fielding, and he is produced only to prove the Information, which she swore to before Mr. Fielding, and to which she set her Mark; and by that Information it appears, that the Water in the Pitcher was consumed on the Friday; but in her Evidence she swears it was consumed the same Day she escaped.

Deputy Molineux is called next, who swears, that being with Sir Crisp Gascoyne, then Lord-Mayor, at the Mansion-House, some Time after Mary Squires was convicted, that Elizabeth Canning and Virtue Hall were there together; and after Sir Crisp Gascoyne had examined Virtue Hall, he asked Elizabeth Canning, if she had any thing to say? who answered, No. And the Bed-gown and Pitcher being then upon the Table, Elizabeth Canning was rolling up the Bed-gown, in order to take it away. My Lord-Mayor then said, she must not take it: Upon which, Elizabeth Canning said, It is my Mother's. This surpris'd the Witness very much, because he had heard, that, upon the Trial of Mary Squires, she swore, that she had found it in the Chimney at Wells's. The next and last Witness is

Mr. Reed, who swears, that he was present at the Mansion-House at the same Time which the last Witness mentions, and remembers the several Circumstances mentioned by him, as aforesaid.

Here concludes the Evidence given in Support of this Indictment.

The Council for the Defendant have made many Observations upon the Evidence you have heard, which it is unnecessary for me to repeat; but, upon the whole, insist upon it, that as this Matter has undergone a very strict Examination by a solemn Trial, that therefore any future Inquiry is unprecedented, and consequently improper: However, in order to oppose or contradict a good deal of the Evidence you have already heard, they have called several Witnesses; the first of whom is

Edward Lyon, who says, that Elizabeth Canning was his Servant, and continued in his Service till the 1st of January 1753; that he has known Elizabeth Canning above sixteen Years, and that she always behaved well; that the first Time he missed her was on the 1st of January 1753, and that she never had been absent before; upon which he went to her Mother's, but could hear nothing of her. The first Time he saw her after that was upon the 31st of the same Month, when she was under Examination before Alderman Chitty; but being thick of hearing, did not know what had passed. He says, that a Warrant being granted, he went to Enfield-Wash, with Hague, Nash, and Aldridge. When they arrived there, he was told, that several Persons were secured at Wells's; and when he came to Wells's, he saw several Women in the Parlour there. That some Time afterwards Elizabeth Canning arrived there, and was set upon the Dresser in the Kitchen. He says, he cautioned her very particularly not to charge any one but those she was very sure of. She promised him she would not. She was soon afterwards carried into the Parlour, where they all were. She saw Mrs. Wells first, and said, she had nothing to charge her with; but upon seeing Mary Squires, she said, she was the Woman who cut her Stays off. He believes she saw her Face before she charged her, (because otherwise he thinks she hardly would have charged her.) Upon this, Mary Squires came up to her, and said, she hoped she would not swear her Life away, for she never saw her before: But says, that Elizabeth Canning did not at that Time mention the Day upon which she was robbed. She said, that Lucy Squires and Virtue Hall were in the Room at the same Time she was robbed; and that when she saw George Squires, she said, he looked very like the Man who robbed her in Moorfields; but she would not swear to him. At this Time he had no Great Coat on; but when he was with his Great Coat on at Mr. Tasbmaker's, she was more positive to him, saying, that was the Great Coat, under which he put her Gown when he robbed her in Moorfields. He said, for his Part, he never had any Doubt of the Truth of what Canning had sworn at the Trial of Mary Squires; and says, that he several Times, and with the utmost Seriousness, desired Elizabeth Canning would tell the Truth, and not deceive him; and owns that this Affair has been the Means of his breaking off his Acquaintance with Nash, Hague, and Aldridge. He denies his contributing any thing towards the Prosecution of Mary Squires. The next Witness is

Thomas Colley, who married Elizabeth Canning's Aunt; and says, that upon the 1st of January 1753, Elizabeth Canning dined at his House upon Mutton, and drank Tea in the Afternoon, eat Toast and Butter, and supped upon cold roast Beef. She lived at that Time with Mr. Lyon, and that he and his Wife went with her at Nine o'Clock that Night, and left her at the End of Houndsditch; and about Twelve o'Clock at Night her Mother's Apprentice came to his House, to inquire for Elizabeth Canning, which made him conclude she did not get Home.

His Wife, Mrs. Colley, is called next, who gives the same Account that her Husband has, with this Addition, that she did not see her from the 1st of January till the 30th, when Elizabeth Canning was at her Mother's, and complained she was very ill. The next Witness is

Elizabeth Canning, the Mother of the Defendant, who says, that her Daughter had been some Time in Mr. Lyon's Service, and that upon the 1st of January 1753, she called upon her in her Way to her Uncle Colley's; and that pretty late that Evening Mr. Lyon called upon her, to inquire for her Daughter. This surprised her a good deal; upon which she sent to Colley's, who sent her Word, that they had parted with her at Houndsditch at Nine that Night; and says, that she never heard of, or saw her from that Time till the Night before the 30th of January, when she came to her House about a quarter after Ten that Night, (though she advertised her three several Times.) She says, that when she came into her House, she was in a most deplorable Condition, her Hands black and blue, and her Face bloated, had on the Bed-gown now produced, and two ragged Handkerchiefs on her Head, neither of which she had ever seen before; her Ear was bloody; that she sent for Mrs. Woodward, and some other Neighbours, who came to her; and on her Daughter's being asked, where she had been? she answered, she could not tell, but had seen the Hertford Coach from the Place where she was. She said, that she remembered an old Woman and two young Women. She gave an Account of her being robbed, and carried away, and her Confinement; and said, she had nothing at all to support her from the Friday before she made her Escape. She gives an Account of her Daughter's Illness, and that she sent for a Physician and an Apothecary. She remembers that her Daughter, on the Night she came Home, mentioned the Name of Wells or Wills. She mentions the Money her Daughter had in her Pocket at the Time of her going to Colley, which I think was between twelve and thirteen Shillings. She says farther, that during her Daughter's Absence, she was advised to go to a Conjuror, who bid her be easy, for she would certainly come Home again, and believes he told her she was in the Hands of an old Woman; but says, that her own Apprehensions were, that she was murdered by the Jews, and thrown into Houndsditch. She says, that she told her she lay in Hay during her Confinement; that she has only a very moderate Stomach, and has known her frequently to be fourteen Days without going to Stool. Upon this Witness's being asked, whether she did not swear, at the Trial of Mary Squires, that her Daughter had a Cap on her Head when she came Home? she answered, she did not; but upon the Short-hand Writer's being asked that Question, his Answer was, that she did, at that Trial, swear, that her Daughter had a Cap on her Head at that Time. At this Time some Notices were produced, and proved to be signed by the Defendant, signifying her Intention to take her Trial at some of the Times mentioned in some or one of those Notices, and her Name wrote in a very legible Hand; though in the Information before Mr. Fielding, nothing more appears but her Mark. After this, a Witness is called, who speaks only to the several Advertisements in the News-papers. The next Witness is

James Lord, (who is Apprentice to Elizabeth Canning's Mother) who agrees as to the Time of her being missing, and was sent to several Places to inquire for her; but he did not see her from the 1st to the 29th of January 1753; and on that very Night his Mistress went upon her Knees, to pray that she might see even the Apparition of her Daughter; and very soon afterwards the Latch of the Door was lifted up, and Elizabeth Canning came in. When he first saw her, he did not know her, she was in such a miserable Condition, much the same as her Mother has mentioned, and particularly her Ear bleeding fresh, (though she had then walked ten Miles) and was almost spent. He went for Mrs. Woodward, and others of the Neighbours; and she then told them, that she had been at Mrs. Wells's at Enfield-Wash, and said, that she had heard People go to and fro in the House, and mention the Name of Wells or Wills. Then

Robert Scarrat is called, who says, that hearing, on the 29th of January 1753, that Elizabeth Canning was come Home late that Night, he went to her Mother's, late as it was, to see her. She had a Bed-gown on her; and having heard her asked where she had been, and hearing her Answer, that she had been at a Place from whence she had seen the Hertford Coachman, and about nine or ten Miles from London, he immediately said, he would lay a Guinea to a Farthing that he guessed where she had been, and then said, he was sure she had been at Mother Wells's; upon which she said, she was sure she had heard that Name mentioned in the House where she was confined. She then described the Room to be a longish and darkish Room, (which does not agree with her Description of it before the Alderman.) She then described the Fields through which she passed in her Return Home, a little Brook, and a Tanner's Yard; said that she met a Man, who directed her in her Road to London; and described the Woman who cut her Stays to be a tall, swarthy, black Woman, and two young Women in the Room at the same Time. He says, that he went to Enfield-Wash the 1st of February, and was present when Elizabeth Canning was brought into the Parlour, and saw her point to Mary Squires, saying, That is the Woman who cut my Stays off; upon which Mary Squires said, Dear Madam, take care how you swear my precious Life away; to which Elizabeth Canning said, I know you too well to my Sorrow. And on being asked whether she knew any other in the Parlour, she said, that she did not know George Squires; but that Lucy Squires and Virtue Hall were in the Room when her Stays were cut off. He says, that she mentioned some of the Things which were in the Room she was confined in, and pointed to the Window out of which she escaped. Upon his Cross-examination, he says, he never was in the Workshop at Wells's, till this 1st of February; but owns (with some Difficulty) that he might have been in the House near ten Times, and that he has known Wells for about three or four Years. He says, that he heard Canning give her Information before Alderman Chitty, and heard her give Evidence at the Trial of Mary Squires, and thinks that her Evidence on the Trial did not vary from her Information before the Alderman; but will not take upon him to give an Account of the Particulars of her Evidence before the Alderman. He owns, that when he was in Service at Edmonton, that he rode his Master's Horses to Wells's; but disowns his having any Quarrel with her, or saying that he would be revenged on her. And says, that he believes there was no Lock on the Door of the Room called the Workshop. The next is

Mary Myers, who says, that she has known Mrs. Canning and her Daughter some Time, and that the Daughter is a very sober Girl. She gives an Account of the Time when Elizabeth Canning was missing, and of her Return to her Mother's between Ten and Eleven o'Clock at Night on the 29th of January. She tells you the Company she saw there, and the Condition she was in, which was very bad. She says, that she gave the same Account of her being robbed in Moorfields, and her being carried to Wells's, and of her Treatment there, which you have already heard, and is much the same Account which she gave at the Trial of Mary Squires: That she then gave a particular Account of her Escape, which you have also heard; and that she tore her Ear, and the Blood dropped upon her Shoulder after she returned to her Mother's. This Witness says, that she went with Canning to Wells's on the 1st of February, and gives you an Account of her fixing on Mary Squires as the Person who robbed her, and what Mary Squires then said, as is before mentioned by the other Witnesses then present; that she fixed on the Workshop as the Place of her Confinement; but said, there was at that Time more Hay in it; and that Adamson put his Back against one of the Windows there, to try if she could give an Account of the Prospect, which she did, by describing Hills at a Distance. She says, that she looked at Canning's Shift, and that it was dirty. Cannot tell the Reason of Scarrat's being at Mrs. Canning's the Night her Daughter came Home; but says, he lived in that Neighbourhood. The next Witness is

Mrs. Woodward, who says, that she was at Mrs. Canning's the Night that Elizabeth Canning came Home, and was the first Person that came there. She came Home about half an Hour past Ten, the 29th of January, on Monday at Night, and saw Scarrat and Wintlebury there; and at Elizabeth Canning's Request, she sent for her Master and Mistress Lyon, and that Elizabeth Canning said to the Witness, Oh! Mrs. Woodward, I have been almost starved; I have had only Bread and Water, and have not had even Water since last Friday. She was asked where she had been, and said she had been confined in a Room on the Hertford Road. She then gave a very particular Account of her being robbed, and of the Treatment she met with from Mary Squires at Wells's, and of her being confined there. She agrees with the other Witnesses in the Account they gave of the deplorable Condition she was in, and believes her to be as ill as she then appeared to be. That she went with Elizabeth Canning to Enfield-Wash on Thursday the 1st of February; and upon Tuesday after that, she was so ill, they were forced to put her in a Chair, to carry her to Mr. Fielding's. The next Witness is

John Wintlebury, who has known Elizabeth Canning's

Canning's Mother about fourteen or fifteen Years. He says, she is a very honest Woman, and that her Daughter Elizabeth lived with him as a Servant about eighteen Months; that he saw her the Night she came Home, when she was in a very bad Condition, and had nothing on but a Bed-gown, and a Piece of a Handkerchief upon her Head; that her Ear was bloody; that upon taking her by the Hand, she said, Lord! Sir, you do not know what I have undergone; that then she gave an Account where she had been, by seeing the Hertford Stage Coachman: That he was with her when she gave her Information before Alderman Chitty, but cannot be particular as to what passed there: That he went on the 1st of February to Wells's at Enfield-Wash, and went into the Room called the Workshop, and observed a good deal of Hay there, which appeared to be fresh tossed up; and says, he arrived there at least an Hour before Aldridge, Hague, or Nash: That upon Elizabeth Canning's being carried into the Parlour, she fixed upon, and charged Mary Squires, as the Person who cut her Stays off; to which Mary Squires made no Answer; but, on the contrary, denies that Mary Squires even desired her not to swear her Life away, (which is a Circumstance the other Witnesses have very particularly sworn to): That when Elizabeth Canning saw the Door of the Workshop opened, she said, This is the Room I was confined in. He was present when Adamson set his Back to one of the Windows of the Room, and examined her about the Prospect; and says, that the North Window seemed to be fresh boarded up. That when he observed George Squires in the Parlour, Elizabeth Canning thought he was very like one of the Men who robbed her in Moorfields; and among eight or nine Women then in the Parlour, she fixed upon Virtue Hall and Lucy Squires, as being present when her Stays were cut off. He says, he cannot be so particular as to the Account she gave before Alderman Chitty, as to that which she gave before Mr. Tasemaker; and thinks that the Account she gave before Mr. Tasemaker corresponded exactly with the Evidence she gave at the Trial of Mary Squires. Upon his Cross-examination, he owns, he did not give so particular an Account at the Trial of Mary Squires as he does now; and says, he took little Observation of the Evidence given by her before Alderman Chitty. The Witnesses called next is

Joseph Adamson, who has known Elizabeth Canning for eleven Years; but had not seen her for three Months, till he went to meet her going to Enfield-Wash. He denies his giving her any Information of there being any Hay in the Room; but that she of her own Accord said there was. That when she was taken into the Parlour, she fixed upon Mary Squires as the Person who cut off her Stays; and when she was carried into the Workshop, she said, the East Window was fastened up, and she could not open it; and that he made the Experiment by setting his Back to the Window, to know whether she could give any Account of the Prospect; and he observed that the Wood which covered the North Window seemed to be fresh cracked. The next Witness is

Sutherland Bakler, Apothecary, who says, that he saw Elizabeth Canning on the 30th of January; that she was in Bed, and in a very low Condition; that he administered some Medicines to her, being Glysters; and then Dr. Eaton, a Physician, was sent for; but before the Medicines which the Doctor prescribed had any Effect, she went to Enfield-Wash, which was on the 1st of February. He says, she appeared to be half-starved, and she did not make Water till after the 6th of February. And then they call

Dr. Eaton, who says, that he attended Elizabeth Canning on the 6th of February; that he found her very weak, and that she complained of a Cholic in her Stomach and Bowels; that he thought her in Danger seven or eight Days, but upon the 4th of March she was quite recovered; and thought the Symptoms of her Illness proceeded from Hunger, Thirst, Cold, and great Hardships; though he says, that her Disorder might have proceeded from other Causes, and thinks she had a bad Habit of Body. The next Witness is

Robert Beals, who, upon the 1st of January 1753, kept the Turnpike on Stamford-Hill, which leads from Moorfields to Enfield; who says, that he was very ill the Christmas before; and that the February following, his two Children, which are very young, (not above eight or nine Years old) told him, that a Woman had been forced away from Moorfields to Enfield-Wash, and had been confined there above a Month; upon which he said, Lord! I was at the Gate when she was carried through; and says, that about Ten or Eleven o'Clock at Night, the Beginning of January, he heard a sobbing Sort of a Cry about three hundred Yards distant from him; that there appeared to him to be two Men and a Woman; that they did not come through the Gate, but as they were going over the Stile, heard one of the Men say, Come along, you Bitch, you are drunk; and the Woman seeming very unwilling to go over the Stile, one of the Men attempting to lift her over, she fell down, and cried bitterly, but never spoke; one of them held her, and the other pushed her along. She appeared to be a Woman in great Distress, and sobbed and cried bitterly; but, notwithstanding this Distress, he never mentioned it for above six Weeks; and he says, he durst not venture to stop the two Men, because he was alone. He cannot take upon him particularly to say that this was upon New-year's Day; but says, the Gown the Woman then wore was white, though he says there was no Moon that Night. The next Witness is Thomas Bennet, who lives at Enfield, opposite to the ten-mile Stone; and he says, that upon the 29th of January, coming towards London, between Four and Five o'Clock in the Afternoon, he met a Woman, who appeared miserably poor, at a Gate-way between Wright's and Jenge's, about a quarter of a Mile on this Side Mrs. Wells's; that she had neither Gown, Stays, Cap, or Hat on; that she inquired the Way to London, which he directed her: He remembers it by a Circumstance of binding an Apprentice that Day; but says, that he never mentioned this till the March following.

David Dyer is called next, who says, that about the same Time he met a poor distressed Creature, and asked her, if she wanted a Husband? and looking upon the Defendant, believes her to be the same Person; that he saw her about Four of the Clock in the Afternoon. She did not appear black in the Face, or at all bruised; but, on the contrary, very pale and thin. Then they call

Mary Cobb, who says, that about three Miles on this Side Wells's, in a Field called Ducks-Field, just at the shutting in of Day-light on the 29th of January, she met a Woman in a miserable Condition, dressed in a poor dirty Bed-gown, a black Petticoat, and a Bit of an Handkerchief on her Head, who was near falling as she was getting over a Stile; that some Time afterwards, hearing of this Affair, and recollecting the Person she had so met, she concluded that she must be Elizabeth Canning; and now, upon looking at her more minutely, believes it was her; for she then observed something particular about the Tip of her Nose, by which she is more certain of her now; that Justice Tasemaker asked her about this Affair, to whom she gave the same Account she now does. The next Witness is

William Howard, who is produced in order to shew, that the Witness Aldridge had once a different Opinion of Elizabeth Canning to that which he has now disclosed in his Evidence. He says, that Aldridge and his Brother, a little Time after Mary Squires was taken up, brought him the Case of Elizabeth Canning, and recommended her as an Object of Compassion, and proposed a Subscription to support her; and that he came to him a second Time on the same Subject; but when he came the second Time, he said, that the Girl (meaning Elizabeth Canning) was not so clear in her Description of the Room where she said she was confined. Then

Mrs. Howard, his Wife, is called, and confirms what her Husband has said as to Aldridge's desiring him to subscribe. She lives opposite to Wells's, and believes that she saw Mary Squires pass and repass several Times in the Month of January; and thinks, that she saw Mary Squires and her Family at Wells's Door the Sunday Se'n-night before they were taken up, and believes her to be the same Woman now in Court. She owns that she is short-sighted, and that Mary Squires and her Family might be fifty Yards Distance from her, when she first saw them; but she thinks that she has seen them pass by her House within the Distance of thirty Yards. The next Witness is William Headland, who says, that, to the best of his Memory, he was with his Father (who lives at Enfield-Wash) some Time before January was Twelve-month, and was there when Wells and the rest were taken up; and says, that he took a Piece of Lead up, which lay under the Window from whence Elizabeth Canning escaped: It was bloody, and he heard that it was the Lead which tore her Ear when she escaped. He cannot tell the exact Day he took it up, but he gave it to his Mother. He says, that he saw Mary Squires the 9th of January at Enfield-Wash, telling Fortunes; and also saw her there on the 12th, doing of the same; and her two Daughters were with her at Wells's; remembers it by its being Market-day. He saw her get into the Cart when she was taken away, and saw her in Court, and believes her to be the same Woman he saw there. He says, that he is twenty-one Years old; but though he is so particular in his Account of Mary Squires, &c. he gives but a very uncertain Account of himself: For he can scarce (if at all) give an Account with whom he has lived for several Months past before he returned to his Father; neither can he tell us in what Month Christmas is; he says indeed, that he lived with one Allen, as an hired Servant, ten or eleven Weeks.

Elizabeth Headland, the last Witness's Mother, is called, who only proves, that her Son gave her the Piece of Lead at or a little after the Time that Mary Squires and the rest were taken up, and the Blood on it was dry; but she has now lost or mislaid it. The next Witness is

Samuel Story, who (upon looking at Mary Squires) says, that he knows her very well, and has seen her several Times, and particularly at an House in White-Webbs-Lane, near Enfield Chace; and that he saw her on the 23d of December 1752, at Wells's Door; and says, that his Curiosity led him to see if she was the same Woman he had seen before, and therefore he went within ten Yards of her, and thinks her the same; and afterwards went to see her in Newgate, and is still of the same Opinion; and says, that he has occasionally seen her for three Years together, but never spoke to her. He says, that he has seen two young Women with her, and that they all used to wear Blankets, and travel with two Asses and a little Horse. Then

William Smith is called, who lives at Enfield, and is a considerable Farmer there. He says, that he saw Mary Squires in his Cow-house on the 15th of December 1752, and has seen her and her Family about the Country several Times. They came at that Time to inquire for a Lodging. He saw Mary Squires next Morning, and there were two young Men and two young Women with her, whom he cannot remember. They lay in his Barn, and were there three Nights and two Days, and had a little black Horse with them, which they lost. He afterwards saw her in Newgate, and is positive to her. He is positive that he saw her the 15th of December, because he sold some Corn on the 16th. The Witness called next is Loomworth Dane, who keeps the Bell at Enfield-Wash, and says, that he never saw Mary Squires till Winter was Twelve-month; and that upon Old Christmas-Day, which was the 5th of January, as he was standing on an Heap of Gravel, he is sure he saw her at Enfield-Wash; for his Servant having an Holiday that Day, he kept Shop; and one Norion bought a Collar of him for his Horse, which he entered in his Book, (which Book is not produced) and that is the Reason which he gives of his remembering the Time. He saw her when taken up and put into the Cart, and also in Newgate, and is sure she is the same Woman. He is asked about Mrs. Headland's Character, (whose Evidence you have heard) which, he says, is not a very good one. The next Witness is

Samuel Arnot, who is a Labourer, and lives on Enfield Chace, and says, that upon a Friday, about nine or ten Days before New Christmas, Mary Squires asked him (telling him her Name) for a little brown Horse, which she had lost; and says, that he saw her the Sunday after, and that a Man, two Women, and two Children were with her, which Children were not above four or five Years old, and he believes they all lay at William Smith's; that he afterwards saw Mary Squires in Newgate, and is of Opinion that she is the same he then saw. Then they call

Elizabeth Arnot, Wife to the last Witness, who says, that she saw Mary Squires in Farmer Smith's Cow-house at Enfield, about a Week before New Christmas, and that she then inquired about her Horse, which she had lost, and that she saw her afterwards in Newgate. The next is Sarah Star, who lives next Door to Wells's, and says, that she saw Mary Squires at her own House on the 18th of January was Twelve-month; but had never seen her before: That she then offered to mend China, and stayed at her House three quarters of an Hour, and wanted to tell her and her Servants their Fortunes, and terrified her very much. She afterwards saw her in the Cart when taken up, and in Newgate, and believes her the same Person. She believes she saw her on the 18th of January, because she thinks her Husband sold a Load of Pease that Day, and that there was a Note given on that Account; but that Note has not been produced. Then

Daniel Vass is called, who says, that he saw Mary Squires go by his House near Enfield on Old Christmas-Day; she went the Foot-way, and he was then in his own Yard; he looked pretty much at her, and she seemed surpris'd at his doing so. He did not look at her above a Minute, and never saw her before; but he went to her when in Newgate, though in a different Dress; yet is sure she is the same Person he saw go by his Yard. The next is

Jane Dadwell, who keeps a Shop at Enfield, who says, that she saw Mary Squires at her House on Thursday the 28th of December; knew her very well, for she had been there several Times before; is particular to that Day, because she dressed Meat on Christmas-Day for her Customers, and she was then in her Back-house washing her Dishes. She went to see her in Newgate, when she owned that she had been at her Shop. The next called is

Tobias Kellog, who lives at Enfield, and says, that he saw Mary Squires at Enfield some Time before Old Christmas, (though he is so ignorant, that he cannot tell on what Day of the Month Old Christmas-Day was;) but says, he believes he saw her there a Month before she was taken up; he thinks that he saw her three or four Times; that she asked him for Tobacco, and would have told him his Fortune; and that she told one John Rowley his Fortune. Then one

John Frame is called, who, in January was Twelve-month, lived as a Servant with Mr. Parsons in James's-Street, Grosvenor-Square, who had a Country-House at Enfield; and being at Work in the Gardens there on the 11th or 12th of January was Twelve-month, Mary Squires spoke to him through the Palisadoes, and wanted to tell him his Fortune, which she told him: He is positive to the Time, because his Master and Mistress went to London on the 9th of that Month; and says, that he saw her about a Twelve-month before at Enfield, and saw her in Newgate, and thinks her the same Person. The next is

Joseph Gould, who lives at Enfield, and says, that he saw Mary Squires on the 8th or 9th of January 1753, about a quarter of a Mile from Wells's; and hearing from Virtue Hall that there were Gypsies at Wells's, he took particular Notice of her; and he saw her afterwards in Newgate. Then

Mary Gould, his Wife, is called, who says, that she saw Mary Squires the 11th or 12th of January was Twelve-month, who asked her, if she had any China to mend, and told her she would not live long. She says, she saw her about a Week before she was taken up, and saw her when she (the Witness) was at Work at Mr. Parsons's; and also saw her in Newgate, and believes her the same. The next Witness is Humphry Holding, who says, that the first Time he saw Mary Squires was on the 8th of January 1753; that he is a Gardener, and was at Work at Mr. Parsons's, and that the Family went to London on the 9th of January; and that he saw Mary Squires the Day before, who asking him if the Family were at Home, he answered; that they were; and says, that he saw her afterwards on the 11th, when he was pruning Dr. Harrington's Vines, and he set down his Day's Work in a Book, because he was not paid for it. She also inquired if the Family had any China to mend. He is desired to produce his Book, which he had not about him; and says, that he was examined two or three Times, but could not possibly recollect the Time of seeing her, because he had not his Book wherein he sets down his Work. He says, that he saw her at Mr. Tasbmaker's, and in Newgate. Then

Sarah Vass, Wife of Daniel Vass, a former Witness, is called, who was a Charewoman at Mr. Parsons's, and saw Mary Squires on Thursday the 11th of January 1753: She fixes on that Day, because Mr. Parsons went to London on the 9th, which was on Tuesday; and that she would have told her her Fortune. She also saw her passing by the Day before she was taken up; she then asked her for a Pipe of Tobacco, and had then some Conversation with her; and afterwards saw her in Newgate, and is certain she is the same Person. The next Witness (whose Evidence is something particular) is

Anne Johnson, who has lived at Enfield some Years, and gets her Living principally by Spinning. She says, that she saw Mary Squires on the 18th of January 1753, at her Door. The Reason of her fixing upon that Day is, because she spins for one Mr. Smitheram, and swears that she carried her Work to him two Days before she saw her, (which was the 16th.) She says, that she saw Mary Squires three several Times before that, and in the Compass of ten or eleven Days; and afterwards saw her in Newgate. This Witness has also told you, that when her Work was given her to do by Mr. Smitheram, and also when she carried it to him after it was done, that it was entered into a Book kept by Mr. Smitheram, or by some of his Family, for that Purpose. It was therefore thought proper to call Mr. Smitheram, and to inquire whether a Book was kept for that Purpose; and he tells you, that he did employ the Witness Anne Johnson in the Business she has mentioned; and he produces a Book, in which are two Columns, in one of which is entered the Yarn which he delivers out, and in the other, that which he receives after it is spun; and upon producing that Book, it is observable, that it is entered, that on January the 16th one Pound of Yarn is delivered to Anne Johnson to be spun; and in the second Column in the same Book, one Pound of Yarn is entered to be returned on January the 23d, by the same Person, Anne Johnson, who spun it; so that it is impossible (if Credit is to be given to this Book, to which she herself refers) that she could have seen Mary Squires on the 18th of January; because she did not carry Home her Work (as appears by the Book) till the 23d of that Month; which is an Observation you will think worthy your Notice, and especially as this is the only written Evidence, referred to by the Defendant's Witnesses which has been produced. They then call

Wife,

Wife, the Wife of John Bassett, who says, that she saw Mary Squires at Enfield-Wash on the 21st or 22d of January 1753, and remembers it by a Circumstance of killing an Hog, and of a Servant's leaving her Service at that Time; that she saw her in her own House, and gave her a Penny to tell her Fortune. She saw her afterwards in Newgate; and upon a Conversation with Mary Squires there, about seeing her, Mary Squires told her, she wronged her. The next is

James Pratt, who says, that he saw Mary Squires, a Man, two Women, and some Children in Farmer Smith's Cow-house, about three Days before New Christmas, as near as he can remember, where they continued about three Days; and that Mary Squires then complained of the Loss of her Horse. Then they call

Lydia Farroway, who was a Servant to Mr. Howard at Enfield-Wash, and says, that she saw Mary Squires there upon the Tuesday Se'nnight before she was taken up, and remembers it by this Circumstance, that she was on that Day making Pies for her young Master's Birth-day; and saw her afterwards in Newgate, and thinks she can be certain to her. The next is

Margaret Richardson, who says, that she saw Mary Squires at Enfield last January was Twelve-month, in a Chandler's Shop there, and stayed with her a quarter of an Hour, and left her in the Shop; and she also saw her on Old Christmas-Day; remembers it, because her Dog was going to lay hold on her, which her Husband prevented. She appears to be very ignorant; for, being asked in what Month Christmas is, she says, she does not know. Then

George Clements is called, who is Servant to Mr. Star at Enfield, and says, that he saw Mary Squires there a Fortnight before she was taken up, and that she wanted to tell his Mistress her Fortune, which frightened her; and says, that he saw her two or three Days after, but no body was with her either of the Times. He afterwards saw her and knew her in Newgate, and she asked, what Harm had she done him? The next is Hannab Fensham, who says, that she saw Mary Squires alone at a Place near Enfield on the 16th of January 1753, and saw her several Times afterwards passing and repassing; and saw her afterwards in Newgate.

Elizabeth Sherrard is the next, and she says, that she saw Mary Squires at Wells's on Wednesday, Thursday, Friday, and Saturday next before New Christmas; and says, that she saw a young Man and two Women with her, which she believes to be her Son and Daughters. She appears very ignorant, and can scarce give an Account at what Season of the Year Christmas is. The next Witnesses is

John Ward, (who is produced in order to prove a Confession made by Susannah Wells, at the Time of her Confinement in Bridewell, before she and Mary Squires were tried) who says, that he went to see her in Bridewell; upon her shewing some Surprize at seeing him, he told her, that he saw her Name in the News, and then asked her, how she came to keep the Girl a Fortnight? She, upon that, said, she was there twenty-eight Days. He then asked her, what Room she was in? Her Answer was, that he knew the Room very well, (though he says, that he had not seen it for twelve Years before.) You will consider in what Light this Evidence appears; for, as it is laid before you by the Defendant to prove Wells's Confession of the Fact charged upon her, the Question is, whether it can have that Effect? And in order to determine that, you will observe, he tells her, that the Reason of his Visit was, because he saw her Name in the News-papers, and then asked her, how she came to keep the Girl a Fortnight? Upon which she said, it was twenty-eight Days. Now it is very notorious, that the Account which the Defendant herself gave of her Confinement, as well as the Account given of it in the News-papers, was twenty-eight Days; so that you will take it into your Consideration, whether you will believe this to be a Confession, or whether she spoke from the News-papers, in order to rectify the Witness's Mistake in charging her with confining the Girl (as he then called the Defendant) a Fortnight, when it appeared by the News-papers to be twenty-eight Days. Then

Richard Jones is called, who was with the last Witness to see Wells in Bridewell, and agrees with him as to the Conversation which passed relating to the Defendant's Confinement in the Terms you have heard. The next Witnesses they call, are

Nathaniel Crumborne, and Elizabeth his Wife; and they are produced to prove a Conversation between those Witnesses and Judith the Wife of Fortune Natus, relating to the present Defendant, which seems very extraordinary; for they tell you, that upon the 21st of April last, Judith Natus was at their House, and that Nathaniel Crumborne said to her, that as she knew that Elizabeth Canning was at Wells's, how could she go against her? And that the Answer she made was, Indeed, Mr. Crumborne, I cannot say but she really was there when we lodged there. I mention this as a very extraordinary Piece of Evidence; because, if what is sworn by this Evidence is true, the Consequence must necessarily be, that not only this Judith Natus and her Husband, but many Witnesses, whose Evidence I have already stated to you relating to that Fact of her being there, must be absolutely and wilfully perjured. The next is

Paul Stevens, who is called to prove a Confession which he says Mary Squires made in New-Prison, and there he says, that Mary Squires owned she had been at Wells's; but at the same Time said, that she neither cut the Defendant's Stays off, or robbed her; but said, that Betty Canning was at Wells's about a Fortnight and three Days, and that she was there at the same Time. Now this, as well as all other Confessions, must be taken intire; and if so, it is certain that Mary Squires disowns the Robbery, though she owns (if she made this Confession) that Betty Canning was at Wells's at the Time she was there. This Confession also (if she made it) must appear something wonderful, when you consider the former Evidence.

Then, in order to discredit Fortune Natus, they call three Witnesses, viz. Joseph Haines, Paul Chapman, and Thomas Green: The first of them says, that he has in general a bad Character: The second says, that both he and his Wife have but very indifferent Characters, and ought not to be believed upon Oath; but it seems that there has been some Difference between Chapman and him about a Note: And the last Witness says, that he believes Fortune Natus would swear any thing for Hire. Then, to discredit Ezra Whiffin, they have called

William Metcalf, who is a Glazier and Painter, and and he says, that upon the 8th of January, Old Stile, which is the 19th, New Stile, Whiffin having employed him to paint his Sign, it was brought Home that Day, and then the Witness told Whiffin, that Mrs. Wells had got her Sign-irons to sell; and therefore concludes, that if Whiffin had bought her Sign-irons on the 18th, which he swore he did, (which was the Day before) he would naturally have told him so. Upon his Cross-examination, he tells you, that he remembers this Circumstance by an Entry in a Book, a Copy of which he produced; but he owns, that the Figures 1753 in that Copy were wrote so late as last Saturday. Now to establish the Characters of Whiffin and Fortune Natus, the Council for the King have called some Witnesses. The first is

Mr. Smitheram (who has been called before) who says, that he has known Whiffin a Year and an half, and that his general Character is a very good one, and that he does not believe he would forswear himself. Then

Mr. Barnes and Mr. Smart are called, who both have known him between three and four Years, and agree in giving him the Character of a very honest Man. As to Fortune Natus's Character,

Thomas Bell, is called, who says, that he has worked for him about fifteen Months, and that he has always behaved honestly and well, and does not believe he would be guilty of Perjury; and says further, that he has eight Servants, and does not think he has so good a Servant, or one he values so much as he does Fortune Natus.

I have now laid before you the Evidence given both on one Side and the other, with all the Exactness I have been able: And as the Verdict you are to give is attended with great Expectation, you will weigh and consider the Evidence you have heard with the utmost Care and Impartiality, and not suffer yourselves to be influenced either by popular Clamour, or by any Apprehensions of the Consequence of doing the Public and yourselves that Justice which is expected from you. 'Tis certain that this Trial has been carried on by different Sets of People, who have interested themselves in it with uncommon Zeal, and whose Passions have led them into the greatest Extremities, as well as the highest Extravagancies, according to the Part they have supported, which has drawn it into an unusual Length, and has given it the Appearance of greater Intricacy and Difficulty than otherwise it could have met with. As you have heard all the Witnesses examined with the utmost Accuracy, and carefully attended to their Evidence; your Verdict will, at least it ought, to give a general Satisfaction in clearing up those Doubts, which this extraordinary Affair has occasioned.

I believe there never happened a greater Contrariety of Evidence (not to give it a worse Name) during the Course of any Trial, than there has in this: However, it is generally so ordered by Providence, that Truth is attended with so strong a Connection and such an invincible Uniformity, that it seldom, if ever, fails in having its due Weight.

It may not be amiss just shortly to recapitulate, and take a View of the Evidence as it has been given, and how it has been applied.

The first Fact they, who are concerned for the Prosecution, undertake to prove, is, that Mary Squires, her Son and Daughter, were, upon the 29th of December, at a Place called South-Parrot in Dorsetshire; and that she and they travelled from thence through Abbotsbury, (where they stayed from Monday the 1st of January to the Tuesday Se'night following) then arrived at Wells's on Wednesday the 24th of that Month; and their whole Journey through the several Counties they passed, proved by thirty-eight different Witnesses, confirmed by many Circumstances, who don't appear to have the least Correspondence together, or to act in Concert on this Occasion; but, on the contrary, most of them utter Strangers to each other.

You will then compare Elizabeth Canning's Information before Alderman Chitty, with the Evidence she gave at the Trial of Mary Squires, as to her Description of the Room, as well as the Account she gave of what was in it, and consider how, and in what Particulars, she differed. Then the Principles upon which Nash, Aldridge, and Hague went upon; first in giving her Credit, and then in disbelieving her whole Story after they had taken a View of the Room, and considered the different Accounts she gave, as well as their Opinion how easily she might have escaped, if she had been there. There is another very remarkable Circumstance, which you must remember is proved by four Witnesses, I mean that of lopping the Trees which grew at the Window of the Room she swears herself confined in, which was done on Monday the 8th of January, at which Time she swore herself in that Room. There is also something very particular as to the Shift she had on, in which she swore she was, at that Season of the Year, dragged to Wells's, and worn twenty-nine Days. Besides this, her setting her Mark only to the Information she gave before Mr. Fielding, and writing her Name in a fair legible Hand to the Notices she gave of taking her Trial. And added to all this, her attempting to take away the Bed-gown at the Time of her being at the then Lord-Mayor's, insisting upon its being her Mother's. When you have laid this Evidence together, and weighed it with proper Attention, you will then take her Defence into your Consideration, and determine whether she has answered the Crime with which she is charged to your Satisfaction. In the first Place, you will consider, whether the Evidence she gave against Mary Squires can possibly be true; and in the next Place, whether you think it probable. As to the first, there is no Sort of Evidence even to assist you in determining whether it is possible for human Nature to subsist for twenty-nine Days together upon no more than a Quartern Loaf, and a Pitcher of Water of the Size you have seen. If you should think this possible, you will then take the Probability of her Defence into Consideration. Her Master Lyon tells you, that he differed from the rest of his Companions who went with him to Enfield, and that, for his Part, he had no Doubt of the Truth of what she had sworn; and many other Witnesses she has called are of the same Opinion, for the Reasons you have heard them give. Then her Mother, and the Neighbours whom she sent for upon her Daughter's Return, have described her Dress, and have given you an Account of the miserable wretched Condition she was then in, as well as the Account she then gave of her Confinement, and the Place where she was. The Evidence of Beals, who kept the Turnpike at Stamford-Hill, is very observable, who says, that he believes Elizabeth Canning was dragged through the Turnpike on the 11th of January; yet says, that he never spoke of it till six Weeks after; and then closes this Part of her Defence with the Evidence of three Witnesses, who swear that they met her on the Road (as they believe) on her Return from Enfield-Wash. And then, to induce you to believe that she was not mistaken in the Person of Mary Squires, from whom she swore she met with this severe and cruel Treatment, she has called twenty-seven Witnesses, who all swear, that they saw Mary Squires in and about Enfield in the Months of December and January; which, if true, thirty-eight Witnesses, who positively swear to her being in other Places, must be wilfully perjured; but you must remember, that some few of those twenty-seven Witnesses have appealed to written Evidence, such as Entries in Books, none of which (as I recollect) have been produced, except that of Smithcrum, which was referred to by Anne Johnson, by which it manifestly appears how greatly she was mistaken in her Evidence; and it is very remarkable, that there are not two of these twenty-seven Witnesses who can swear they saw her at the same Time. And, last of all, you will consider the Confessions of Wells and Mary Squires after they were in Custody; and what Judith Natus said a few Days ago relating to this Affair, on which I made such Observations as have occurred to me.

And now, Gentlemen, the whole rests for your Determination; and as it is very observable that you have attended to the Evidence with the greatest Application, and your Characters being such as will not suffer you to deviate from the Paths of Truth and Justice, I can make no Doubt but that you will acquit yourselves as honest Men. If therefore you are of Opinion that the Defendant is guilty of this Perjury, you will find her so; if innocent, you will acquit her.

The Jury withdrew at twenty Minutes after Twelve o'Clock in the Morning, to consider of their Verdict, and returned at fifteen Minutes after Two, and brought in their Verdict, Guilty of Perjury, but not Wilful and Corrupt.

Upon which the Recorder told them, "That he could not receive their Verdict, because it was partial; and they must either find her guilty of the whole Indictment, or else acquit her."

Upon which they were sent out again at twenty-five Minutes after Two, and returned at forty-one Minutes after Two; and brought in their Verdict, Guilty of Wilful and Corrupt Perjury.

Upon which she was committed by the Court to the Custody of the Keeper of Newgate.

On the Monday following, the 13th of May, she was called to the Bar, in order to receive Sentence; when her Council delivered into Court Affidavits of two of the Jurymen, Mr. Frome and Mr. Russell, setting forth that the Verdict given was not according to their Consciences, which were read.

Upon which Mr. Manning, the Foreman of the Jury, was sent for by the Court, and asked how this Matter was? who gave the following Account, how they were divided.

"The Foreman then acquainted the Court, "That all of them, but those two, were of Opinion she was guilty of the whole Indictment, "but the said two did not think she was wilfully guilty, yet nevertheless, thought she was guilty; "but believing somebody had seduced the Girl, "and forged the Story, for her to tell and stand "by, (in short, they all believed so:) And upon "such Belief they found, and gave their Verdict, "Guilty, but not Wilful: But were informed "by the Recorder, that he could not take that "Verdict, for they must either acquit her, or "else find her guilty of the whole Indictment.

"That when they withdrew to consider again "of the Charge, the said two Men declared they "could not come in to find her guilty of the "whole Indictment; but upon arguing the Case "with them, and telling them, they might as "well find her guilty of the whole Indictment, "they said, they could not agree to it, unless the "rest of the Jury would consent to recommend "her to the Court for Mercy. That then they "all agreed to find her guilty of the whole "Indictment; which they all agreed she was "guilty of before, except the said two; and "accordingly gave in their Verdict, Guilty of "Wilful and Corrupt Perjury."

Upon which the Prisoner's Council insisted upon a new Trial, which the Court would not agree to. — The Court were divided, and the Recorder read the Act of Parliament concerning the Crime of Perjury, wherein it empowers the Court to sentence the Parties found guilty of the said Crime. — Her Council still insisted it was Law, and that they had a Right to a new Trial, and quoted the Case of Ashley and Simons the Jew; where the Jurymen made Affidavits, that the Verdict recorded was by Mistake, and was not what they meant or intended to bring in, and thereupon a new Trial was granted; and farther, that they had something to offer in Arrest of Judgment.

Then the Recorder said, — "As this Case is "so much become a Party Affair, (which I am "sorry to see) I had rather put it off till next "Sessions, that it may be argued before the "same Judges that tried her, who may come "down next Sessions on Purpose." Then the Court agreed to put it off till the first Day of next Sessions, which began May 30, 1754.*

At the Session of Oyer and Terminer holden for the City of London at Justice-Hall aforesaid, on Thursday the 30th Day of May, 1754, before the Right Hon. Thomas Rawlinson, Esq; Lord-Mayor

* After the Court had deferred giving Sentence till the following Sessions, the Friends of Elizabeth Canning drew up the following Queries, and laid them before Council.

QUERIES proposed to SOLLOM EMLYN, Esq; Counsellor at Law, (Editor of Hale's Pleas of the Crown, Folio, and of State Trials, 6 Vols. Folio, 1742; and who wrote that admirable Preface prefixed to the last.)

Query 1. Is not E. C. surrendering herself voluntarily, when she had nothing to lose by going away, an Argument of her Innocence?

Answer. As a Person's flying from Justice is a Presumption of Guilt, so a voluntary Surrender is, by Parity of Reason, a Presumption of Innocence; but then it is but a Presumption, which may be overthrown by direct positive Evidence.

Q. 2. Is it agreeable to Law, that a Jury, once charged with the Evidence, may be permitted to go at large, before they have delivered in their Verdict?

Mayor of the same City; Sir John Willes, Knt. Chief Justice of his Majesty's Court of Common-Pleas; Sir Thomas Dennison, Knt. one of his Majesty's Justices of the Court of King's-Bench; Edward Clive, Esq; one of the Justices of his Majesty's Court of Common-Pleas; Henry Legge, Esq; one of the Barons of his Majesty's Court of Exchequer; Sir Sidney Stafford Smythe, Knt. one other of the Barons of his Majesty's Court of Exchequer; Sir John Barnard, Knt. William Benn, Esq; Sir Robert Ladbroke, Knt. Francis Cokayne, Esq; Robert Alsop, Esq; Aldermen of the said City of London; William Moreton, Esq; Recorder of the same City; Stephen Theodore Janssen, Esq; Marshe Dickinson, Esq; Robert Scott, Esq; Sir Richard Glyn, Knt. and William Alexander, Esq; other the Aldermen of the same City; the Defendant was brought to the Bar, to receive Judgment.

Her Council argued for a new Trial, and to support their Arguments, again quoted the Case of Ashley and Simons the Jew, and insisted, That was a Precedent in their Favour. — Judge Willes acquainted the Court, “ A new Trial could not be granted, for in the Case of Ashley and Simons the Judge there took a wrong Verdict, which was not the Meaning of the Jury; — but in this Case the Verdict was General, and they all abide by it but two, who are but weak Men, first to consent and give in their Verdict according to their Oath, and then to recant.” — On which the Motion was over-ruled. — Then the Court were proceeding to Sentence, when Sir John Barnard stood up, and recommended her for Mercy, and that her Sentence might only be six Months Imprisonment, for he believed she was not guilty alone; in which seven other Aldermen joined.

Then Judge Willes told them, he had observed that Collections had been made for her amounting to considerable Sums of Money; and if her Sentence was only to remain in Newgate, there would be such Sums collected, and such Assemblies of an Evening, as would render her Sentence rather a Diversion than a Punishment. — Nor the Pillory he no ways judged safe, fearing much Mischief might be done. — And concluding, that he thought her notoriously guilty. In which Opinion all the other Judges joined, with my Lord Mayor, the Recorder, and two Aldermen, viz.

Then

A. I am of Opinion, that though a Jury once charged, may, by Consent of Parties, be discharged wholly from trying the Cause; yet I do not apprehend that the Law will allow them to go at large, in a criminal Case, while the Trial is depending: For though in a long Trial such a Confinement may be inconvenient, yet I cannot find that the Law has provided any Remedy for it; it being in the Eye of the Law a less Inconvenience, than exposing the Jury to be tampered with before they have brought in their Verdict; yet I see not but that they may take Refreshment, and retire to Rest in a Place provided for them, provided that they be guarded by a sworn Officer, that no body be admitted to speak to them.

Q. 3. Is it not necessary upon an Indictment for Perjury, not only to prove that the Fact sworn to is false, but also that the Defendant knew it to be so at the Time of swearing?

A. I think it to be very clear, that a mere mistaken false Oath, without wilful and corrupt Design, is not Perjury, within the Meaning of the Indictment; for the Indictment charges it to be done falsely, wilfully and corruptly. Nor did I ever know, hear or read of any one convicted of Perjury, without Evidence to prove a corrupt Design, Plot or Confederacy, or else that the Party must needs know it to be false; as in this Case, if it were proved that E. C. was elsewhere at the Time she pretended to be at Enfield; for in this she could not swear false through Mistake, as she might with respect to the Person of the Gypsey. Nor is it sufficient that even this Evidence be but of equal Weight with the Defendant's Oath; for that would be but Oath against Oath, which determines nothing, unless it be of superior Weight and Credit; for else, by turning the Tables, the Witnesses might equally be convicted on the Defendant's Oath.

Q. 4. Does the Law require that a Jury charged upon such Indictment, must necessarily bring in their Verdict Guilty or Not Guilty generally?

A. Certainly the Law requires no such Thing; for the Jury may, if they please, bring in their Verdict Special, or Guilty as to Part, and Not Guilty as to other Part. Indeed, if it be only verbosely worded, and amounts in Substance to a General Verdict, it may be right in the Court to tell them, it would be more proper to find it General; but then Care should be taken so to explain it to them, that they may not by a General Verdict find the Defendant guilty of more than they believe or intended to find him.

Q. 5. Does not a finding the Defendant Not Guilty of wilful Perjury, amount to an Acquittal, although they should also find the Party Guilty of swearing falsely, not wilfully?

A. If the Jury really believed the Party innocent of wilful forswearing, this is in Effect a General Verdict of an Acquittal, for this is the only criminal Part of the Indictment; and the swearing falsely, if not with Design and knowingly, is, as I conceive, not criminal in Law: And after this, to find a General Verdict of Guilty, is quite the contrary to their first finding.

Q. 6. Suppose the Jury, through Surprise, Inadvertency, or Mistake, find such a Verdict, is there any Remedy to prevent Judgment in such Case?

A. This is extremely difficult, unless some Error can be shewn upon the Face of the Record, which may be Cause for arresting Judgment. Perhaps the suffering the Jury to go at large in the midst of the Trial may be such a Cause, as being a Mis-trial.

In the Case of Simons, the Polish Jew, upon Affidavits of the Jury, that they did not mean to give such Verdict as was entered (as here, that they did not mean to find the Defendant guilty of that Part of the Indictment, which charges her with wilful and corrupt Perjury, but only that she had in some Part sworn falsely, though not wilfully) the Court did set aside the Trial. — If this be really the Case, the Jury ought however, for disburthening their own Consciences, to make such Representations to the Court, and leave the Effect to them.

When Elizabeth Canning addressed the Court with the following speech, with a low Voice, — “that she hoped they would be favourable to her; that she had no Intent of swearing the Gypsy’s Life away; and that what had been done, was only defending herself; and desired to be considered as unfortunate.” Then the Recorder spoke thus:

MR. RECORDER:

Elizabeth Canning, you now stand convicted (upon the clearest Proof) of Wilful and Corrupt Perjury; a Crime attended with the most fatal and dangerous Consequences to the Community, though (as yet) it is not punished with Death. Your Trial has taken up a great deal of Time, and the several Witnesses have undergone the strictest Examination; and I think I may venture to affirm, that there is not one unprejudiced Person, of the great Numbers who have attended it, but must be convinced of the Justice and Impartiality of the Jury in the Verdict they have given.

It is with Horror I look back, and think of the Evidence you gave at the Trial of Mary Squires, whom you knew to be destitute and friendless, and therefore fixed upon her as a proper Object to make a Sacrifice of, at the dreadful Expence of a false Oath; this you preferred to the making a plain Discovery to those who had a Right to know where you really were those twenty-eight Days of your pretended Confinement at Wells’s; and in this you were encouraged to persist, as well by that misapplied Charity, which was bountifully given you in Compassion to your supposed Sufferings, as by the Advice of your mistaken Friends, whom you had deluded and deceived into a Belief of the Truth of what you had falsely sworn.

This audacious Attempt, and that calm and deliberate Assurance with which you formed a Scheme to take away the Life of one (though the most abject) of the human Species, together with your Youth, and the Character you then had, as well as your seeming Inexperience, imposed upon many, and gained you a Credit which must have exceeded your highest Expectations; and being thus abandoned, and thus encouraged, you not only wickedly persevered, but even triumphed over those who would not suffer their Judgments to be misled by so gross an Imposition.

But when at last People had a little recovered their Surprise, and this almost miraculous Tale of yours came to be temperately canvassed and tried, by comparing your own original Information with the Evidence you had given at the Trial, and found to vary in so many material and significant Circumstances; then that Resentment you had raised began to subside, and give way to that most necessary Inquiry (which the worthy Magistrate who then presided in this Court so charitably undertook, and) which in its Consequence not only saved that Life, which by your false Testimony was intended to be taken away, but gave rise to this Prosecution, which must both expose the Guilty, and convince the Doubtful. And as evil Actions have sometimes been productive of unforeseen, nay, even good Effects; so this Iniquity of yours will, I hope, instruct Mankind not to suffer their Credulity to get the better of their Reason, by giving way to those very early Impressions, which the Artifice of Falshood too often makes.

I shall add but very little more; for I would avoid aggravating your Guilt, which is sufficiently manifest by your Trial, or saying any thing which may increase the Affliction of one whom I must call unfortunate: But as I attended both your Trial, as well as that of Mary Squires, it may be expected that I should declare my Thoughts as well of one as the other; I therefore, in the most solemn Manner, affirm, that I always thought your Evidence false, and that the Witnesses produced in your Defence were most grossly mistaken.

The Policy of foreign Countries punishes Offences of this Magnitude with Death, and upon this most rational Principle, that when a Life is attacked by a false Oath, maliciously and deliberately taken, the Punishment to which such a supposed Criminal is thereby exposed, falls upon the Person guilty of so horrid an Attempt: But it is your particular Happiness that you are in a Country, where severe and sanguinary Laws are not so familiar; and though many may expect, and the Court surely could, in this Case, justify the most severe and exemplary Punishment which the Law can inflict; yet you will soon be convinced, that your Sentence is in no Degree adequate to the Greatness of your Offence. The Judgment therefore of this Court is,

That you shall be imprisoned in the Gaol of Newgate for one Month; and after the Expiration of your Imprisonment, you shall be transported to some of his Majesty’s Colonies or Plantations in America for the Term of Seven Years; and if within that Term you return, and are found at large in any of his Majesty’s Dominions of Great-Britain or Ireland, you shall suffer Death as a Felon, without Benefit of Clergy.

The following Affidavits were soon after made and published by two of the Jurymen †.

“Joseph Russell and Richard Frome, two of the Jury for trying the Issue between our Sovereign Lord the King and Elizabeth Canning, Spinster, upon an Indictment for Perjury, at, &c. each speaking for himself, and not one for the other, jointly and severally make Oath and say, That these Deponents, and the rest of the Jurors sworn to try the said Issue, agreed in their Verdict first delivered to the Court, and which said Verdict was unanimously agreed to be reduced into, and was accordingly reduced into Writing; and was, that the said E. Canning was guilty of Perjury, but not wilful and corrupt; as these Deponents, or either of them, did not apprehend or believe, that she the said E. Canning knew or believed the Facts by her sworn in her Evidence against M. Squires, upon the Trial of the said M. Squires, were not true when she so swore the same. But these Deponents say, they were induced to join in and agree to the Verdict that is recorded, believing that the Words wilful and corrupt were mere Matter of Form, and understanding it to be the Opinion of the Court that the “ said Jury could not bring in their Verdict in “ the Manner they did at first, and not from an “ Opinion or Belief that the said E. Canning had “ any Intent to charge the said M. Squires falsely,

 “ or maliciously and deliberately to cause or “ procure the said M. Squires to be untruly “ convicted. And these Deponents further say,
 “ that they are very uneasy in their Minds, and “ dissatisfied in their Consciences, by finding “ that the Verdict delivered by them, and recorded
 “ as aforesaid, is understood and imports a Con“ viction of the said E. Canning of deliberate
 “ wilful and intended Perjury, in swearing Facts
 “ which she knew to be false.

JOSEPH RUSSELL.

“ Joseph Russell, one of the Jurors sworn to “ try the Issue between our Sovereign Lord the “ King and E. Canning, Spinster, upon an Indict“ ment for Perjury, at the Sessions of Oyer and “ Terminer holden for the City of London, the “ 24th Day of April last and the following Days,
 “ at Justice-Hall in the Old-Bailey, in the Suburbs
 “ of the said City, maketh Oath, and saith,
 “ That when the said Jurors went out of Court
 “ to consider of their Verdict, they began to “ examine, from the Notes taken by them in “ Court, the Evidence on Behalf of the Prose“ cution; and that when they had proceeded
 “ therein so far as the Testimony of about twelve
 “ or fourteen Witnesses, (to the best of this “ Deponent’s Remembrance as to the Number
 “ of such Witnesses) making their Observations
 “ on those whose Testimony either appeared to “ deserve Credit, or to be exceptionable, an “ Officer (whose Name this Deponent doth not “ know) came (as he said) from the Court, to “ know whether the Jury were agreed in their “ Verdict: Whereupon William Parsons, one of “ the Jury, said, How can they think we can “ agree on a Verdict in so short a Time? Others
 “ of the Jury said, You find the Court is im“ patient, there is a Perjury in the two In“ formations that lie on the Table: Others “ declared that was not the Thing they were “ come to yet: And one (the Foreman, to the “ best of this Deponent’s Remembrance and “ Belief) said, If you can make those two Ex“ aminations one Thing, there is no Perjury;
 “ but as one mentions all the Water to be drunk
 “ up-on one Day, and the other mentions its being “ made an end of on a different Day, there is a “ Perjury: Whereupon it was urged by several “ of the Jury, that that was not a wilful and “ corrupt Perjury: And it was then (without “ further Examination of the Evidence in Behalf “ of the Prosecution, or any Examination of the “ Evidence in Behalf of the Defendant, or once
 “ reading of the Indictment, or any Mention
 “ being made of the criminal Import thereof)
 “ unanimously agreed to bring in the Defendant
 “ Guilty of Perjury, but not wilful and corrupt.
 “ And he this Deponent then speaking to the “ Foreman said, Mr. Foreman, as we have agreed
 “ of a Perjury, but not wilful and corrupt, write
 “ it down, for fear you should make a Mistake
 “ in giving of it in; which the Foreman did “ accordingly. And he this Deponent took the “ same out of his Hand to read it, and finding it
 “ to be as aforesaid, returned it again. And this “ Deponent farther saith, that such Verdict as “ aforesaid was delivered by the Foreman to

 “ the Court; who being dissatisfied therewith,
 “ directed the Jury to go out a second Time.
 “ And this Deponent further saith, that he cannot “ remember particularly what passed or was said
 “ in Court between the Jury’s delivering in their “ first Verdict, and going out a second Time to “ re-consider it: But saith, that he this Depo-
 “ nent did not see, nor does he believe, that “ there was any Copy of the Indictment against “ the Defendant E. Canning before the Jury; nor “ did he hear the Meaning or Purport of such “ Indictment once mentioned by a single Person
 “ on the Jury whilst they were considering of “ their Verdicts, or either of them: Nor did he
 “ this Deponent at that Time, nor doth he now
 “ believe, that the Defendant E. Canning is guilty
 “ of wilful and corrupt Perjury, in swearing
 “ falsely against Mary Squires; but saith, that
 “ on comparing and considering the Evidence,
 “ as well on the Part of the Prosecution, as in “ Behalf of the said Defendant E. Canning, he “ then did, and doth now believe, that Mary “ Squires was at the House of Mother Wells, at “ Enfield-Wash, and that she the said Defendant “ E. Canning was wronged at Enfield-Wash. And “ this Deponent further saith, that whilst the said “ Jury were out a second Time considering of “ their Verdict, several of them were for bringing “ in the Defendant E. Canning Not Guilty, al“ ledging that they did not believe her guilty of “ wilful and corrupt Perjury, or of any other “ Perjury or Crime, than that of her Variations
 “ in her several Examinations in regard to the “ Time of her having drank up her Water as “ aforesaid: But the Foreman of the Jury de“ claring they could not bring in the said E.
 “ Canning Not Guilty, because they had already “ found her Guilty of Perjury; it was upon that “ Account, and for that Reason and no other,
 “ as this Deponent believes, agreed by the said “ Jury, by their said second Verdict, to bring in “ the Defendant E. Canning Guilty of a Perjury
 “ (no other Reason, Argument or Motive what“ soever being mentioned, to the best of this “ Deponent’s Knowledge, Remembrance or Be“ lief, by any one of the said Jury.) And this “ Deponent further saith, that he should not have “ been induced to join in and agree to such “ Verdict, had he known or considered that it is
 “ the Act of the Mind, and not an undesigned “ Mistake (to which every one from the Imper-
 “ fection of human Nature is liable) that con“ stitutes the Offence whereof the said E. Canning
 “ was indicted; or if he had then considered (as “ he ought) that whether the last or Remainder
 “ of the Water was drank on the Friday preced“ ing the Day the said E. Canning escaped from “ Enfield-Wash, or but a few Hours before she “ made her Escape, it could have no Tendency
 “ to prove the said M. Squires guilty; or if she “ was guilty, could not aggravate or lessen her “ Guilt. And this Deponent further saith, that “ when the Jury agreed to such second Verdict,
 “ they agreed earnestly to recommend E. Canning
 “ to the Mercy of the Court (which Recommen“ dation was unanimously agreed to by all the “ Jury, and not objected to by any one, to this “ Deponent’s Knowledge or Belief.) And this “ Deponent further saith, that whilst the Jury
 “ were considering of their said Verdicts, he doth
 “ not remember to have heard, nor doth he “ believe,

“ believe, any one of the said Jury declared his “ Belief that the said Defendant E. Canning was “ guilty of wilful and corrupt Perjury, the Crime
 “ whereof she stood indicted: And that he this “ Deponent would not, nor hath he any Reason
 “ to apprehend or believe, that any one of the “ said Jury would have agreed to their said first “ Verdict; or upon bringing in of the second,
 “ would (in Pursuance of what was previously
 “ and unanimously agreed to as aforesaid) have “ recommended the said E. Canning to the Mercy “ of the Court, had they believed her guilty of “ a Crime so heinous in its Nature, and so dan“ gerous in its Consequences, as wilful and “ corrupt Perjury, with an Intent to take away
 “ the Life of an innocent Person, which, in the “ Opinion of this Deponent, deserves a more “ severe Sentence than that passed on the said
 “ E. Canning, rather than a Mitigation thereof.
 “ And this Deponent further saith, that after the “ said Jury had delivered in their said second or “ last Verdict, and before they came out of “ Court, Thomas Ford, Clerk of the Arraignment, “ asked him this Deponent, what he thought of
 “ it now? to whom this Deponent immediately “ declared, that he this Deponent believed the “ Girl (the said E. Canning) was wronged at “ Enfield-Wash more than ever he did before:
 “ Which Circumstance he this Deponent repeated
 “ in Court on the 13th Day of May last, when “ he made his first Affidavit relating to the “ Verdict of the said Jury, in the Hearing of “ the said Thomas Ford, who in no wise contra“ dicted the same. And this Deponent further “ saith, that the said William Parsons, on the 12th “ Day of May, declared, in the Hearing of “ Richard Frome, one of the said Jury, Thomas
 “ Hunt, and him this Deponent, that the Sentiments
 “ of him the said William Parsons, respect-
 “ ing the said E. Canning and the said Verdicts, “ were the same as those of this Deponent as “ above stated; but that the said William Parsons
 “ had consulted a Friend, who had advised him
 “ not to make any Affidavit, for which Reason
 “ he declined it, or to that Effect. And this “ Deponent further saith, that he this Deponent
 “ is an utter Stranger to all the Persons who have “ had, or now have, the Direction and Manage“ ment of the Defence of E. Canning, (the said
 “ Thomas Hunt only excepted, whom this Depo-
 “ nent knew during his Clerkship, being then
 “ his Neighbour, but had not spoken to the said “ Thomas Hunt during E. Canning’s Trial, or for “ twelve Months before:) But he had been with “ the Mother of the said E. Canning, and had “ declared to her, and in public, his Dissatis“ faction and Concern at the said Verdict of the “ said Jury, and his utter Ignorance of the “ Import and Consequence thereof at the Time
 “ he joined in the same: After which the said
 “ Thomas Hunt came to him this Deponent, in “ order to draw up and settle the Affidavit made
 “ by this Deponent and Richard Frome, another
 “ of the Jury, on the said 13th Day of May last:
 “ And saith, his making the present Affidavit
 “ proceeds from his own Motion and Free-will;
 “ and that it is made with a strict Regard to “ Truth, as well as a sincere Desire to prevent,
 “ as far as in him lies, the said E. Canning’s “ suffering that Infamy and Punishment which “ he is fully satisfied she has in no wise merited.

ROBERT SCOTT.

There were several Pamphlets published at that Time pro and con, and several Advertisements and Paragraphs published in the public News-papers, relating to this mysterious Affair; the Substance of which in general were,—Some asserting not only the Improbability, but the Impossibility of her Story:—Others, That she was with Child, and concealed herself whilst she lay in:—Some, that she was an Enthusiast, and inflamed with wine, whilst in Newgate:—Others, that she would have discovered the whole Secret, if she had not been tutor’d and buoy’d up by the Methodists, &c.—And some, that it was a Scheme laid and contrived by some artful Person, to raise Money.—However, no one put their Names to these Publications against her, yet it drew the two following Advertisements; one from the Clergyman that attended her in Newgate, and the other from herself*.

The Case of ASHLEY and SIMONS the Jew, quoted in the foregoing Trial*.

HENRY SIMONS, a Native of Ostrog
 in Volbinia, near the Ukraine in Poland, landed at Harwich in Essex, August 8, 1751, from Holland, with one Hyam Levi and another Jew;
 but before they were permitted to go on Shore, were examined by the proper Officer, and on a Belt round Simons’s Body, with a Purse fastened to it, were found a large Quantity of Ducats, with which he was permitted to pass to London;
 and after staying some Days in that City, in order to buy Goods, he set out in his Polish Dress, on the 28th, for Bristol, to traffick there. The first Night he reached Cranford Bridge, (beyond Hounslow) in Middlesex, and put up at the White-
Hart Inn, kept by one Goddard; where Simons ordered some Bread, Butter, and Beer for Supper, and then told the People of the House in the best Manner he could (for he spoke very bad, if any, English) that he wanted a Lodging, and would pay for it; and shewed them his Arms and Bosom, that he was clean, and pulled out Money, to shew they need not fear their Reckoning;
 whereupon a Bed was ordered for him; and,
 being fatigued, he went early to Bed, and the Maid locked his Chamber Door; but very early in the Morning he was robbed of five hundred and fifty-four Ducats, by two Men, who held a Knife to his Throat, and threatened to kill him if he made a Noise. On coming down Stairs that Morning, he complained heavily of his being robbed and ruined, but was only laughed at and ridiculed by the Servants of the House; on which he returned penniless to London; and acquainting some Friends of it, they got a Warrant to apprehend Goddard for robbing him; but on going down to take Goddard, found he was gone out of the way to avoid being apprehended;

 but he surrendered against the Sessions; and at the Old Bailey, in 1751, in Alderman Cokayne’s
 Mayoralty, Goddard was indicted, for “ that he,
 “ in his own Dwelling-house, on Henry Simons
 “ did make an Assault, putting him in corporal
 “ Fear, &c. and stealing from him one leather
 “ Girdle, Value one Penny, and five hundred “ and fifty-four Pieces of foreign Coin, called “ Ducats, Value two hundred and fifty Pounds.”
Simons swore, that Goddard was one of the two Men that came into his Chamber, took hold of him in Bed, and assisted in the robbing of him;
 but on the Evidence of Goddard’s Niece, his Servants in the House, one Thomas Ashley a Gardener†, and several neighbouring Gentlemen and Innkeepers appearing, and giving him a good
 Character, he was acquitted.

Upon Goddard’s Acquittal, he (that September Sessions) preferred a Bill of Indictment at Hicks’s
Hall against Simons for Perjury, in swearing an Information before Justice Chamberlayne, for a Robbery against the said Goddard; which Bill was found by the Grand Jury of Middlesex.
 Whereupon a Warrant was obtained from Sir
Crisp Gascoyne, Alderman of London, for apprehending him in London, which Warrant lay dormant till October 7 following; though he was publicly seen about London, asking Alms in his Polish Dress, and had Charity collected for him.

* The Case of Ashley and Simons, being a very extraordinary one, quoted in the last Trial, and probably may again, on some future Occasion, we shall give the Indictment, and the Affidavits of the Jurymen, to shew how a new Trial came to be granted in a criminal Case; but previous thereto, we shall insert the Case of Simons and Goddard, as an Introduction to it, to render the whole Affair compleat.

† This Thomas Ashley, the Gardener, a Witness for Goddard on his Trial, was himself tried in April 1752, in Alderman Winterbottom’s Mayoralty, for Perjury, for the Evidence he gave at that Trial; and was found Guilty, and sentenced to stand once in the Pillory at the Sessions-House Gate for One Hour, to be imprisoned for Twelve Months, after which to be transported for Seven Years.

On October 6, Simons set out for Harwich in order to get over to Holland, with a meer Trifle in his Pocket, (poor Jews paying nothing for their Passage) in his Way Home to Poland; how he was apprehended and brought to Trial by Mr. James Ashley for a Misdemeanour, will appear afterwards. — In the mean time, it may be sufficient to mention, that some Friends of Simons removed the Indictment against him for Perjury, by Certiorari, into the Court of King's-Bench, at Westminster; where, on the 10th of December, 1751, he was tried for Perjury by a Special Jury of Gentlemen of the County of Middlesex, and acquitted.

The Warrant for apprehending Simons on this Charge of Perjury, lay dormant (as before-mentioned) in Goddard's Sollicitor's Hands, till October 7, when it was called for by Mr. James Ashley, an Acquaintance of Goddard's, who saw Simons on the Road near Ilford in Essex, on the 6th. — This Warrant, on the Perusal of it, being found for London only, the Words Essex and were added to it, to make it of Force both in Essex and London; and with this Warrant Mr. Ashley set out, with Mr. Newman, and apprehended Simons near Witham in Essex, and brought him to Chelmsford, where it was discovered that Sir Crisp Gascoyne was no Justice of the Peace for Essex; and therefore the apprehending Simons on that Warrant in Essex illegal: However, the Warrant (after erasing Essex and) was backed by the Rev. Mr. Tindall, a Justice of the Peace for the County of Essex, (on Alderman Gascoyne's Hand being proved) though Mr. Tindall declined committing him, but advised Ashley to carry him to the original Jurisdiction: Whereupon Simons was carried to London, and committed to New-Prison, on the Charge against him of Perjury; and whilst there, Mr. Ashley lodged a Detainer against him for putting into his Pocket at the Saracen's Head Inn in Chelmsford three Pieces of foreign Gold, called Ducats, with an Intent to charge the said Ashley with a Robbery. However, after Simons's Acquittal of the Perjury, he was bailed out on Ashley's Detainer; and at the Lent Affizes at Chelmsford in Essex, March 12, 1752, the Trial of Simons came on before Mr. Justice Foster, on the following Indictment.

The Indictment sets forth,

ESSEX. } “ That Henry Simons, on the 5th of } “ September, in the twenty-fifth Year
 “ of his Majesty's Reign, did, in Form of Law, “ before Richard Chamberlayne, Esq; one of his “ Majesty's Justices of the Peace for the County
 “ of Middlesex, make his Information in Writing,
 “ by which he did, amongst other Things,
 “ charge and accuse one Joseph Goddard, and one
 “ other Person, by the Description of another “ Person unknown, of the Crime of Felony and “ Robbery, to wit, That the said Joseph Goddard,
 “ and the same Person unknown, had lately
 “ before feloniously stolen and carried away
 “ from the said Henry Simons, in the Dwelling-“ House of the said Joseph Goddard, five hundred “ fifty-four Ducats.

“ Count I. That the said Henry Simons, wickedly “ devising to vex and aggrieve one James Ashley,
 “ of London, Merchant, on the 8th of October,
 “ in the same Year, with Force and Arms, at “ Chelmsford in the County of Essex aforesaid, “ did, secretly and subtilly, put and convey into

“ the right-hand Pocket of the Coat which the “ said James Ashley had on and wore, three Pieces
 “ of foreign Coin of Gold, called Ducats; and
 “ the said Henry Simons did afterwards, in the “ Presence of divers of his Majesty's Subjects, “ falsely charge and accuse the said James Ashley,
 “ that he was the same Person who, with the “ above-named Joseph Goddard, was so, as afore-
 “ said, supposed to have committed the Felony
 “ and Robbery above specified, and to have “ stolen and carried away the said five hundred
 “ and fifty-four Ducats from the said Henry Simons,
 “ with Intention unjustly to cause the said James
 “ Ashley to be apprehended, and to have it “ believed, that he was the same Person who,
 “ with the said Joseph Goddard, was so, as afore-
 “ said, supposed to have committed the Felony
 “ and Robbery aforesaid.

“ II. That the said Henry Simons, on the said
 “ 8th of October, at Chelmsford aforesaid, further “ wickedly intending to aggrieve the said James
 “ Ashley, did, privily and subtilly, put and con“ vey into the right-hand Pocket of the Coat
 “ which he then wore, three other Pieces of “ foreign Gold Coin, called Ducats; and the “ said Henry Simons did afterwards falsely charge
 “ and accuse the said James Ashley, that he had “ feloniously taken from him the said Henry
 “ Simons the same three Ducats last-mentioned,
 “ and divers other Ducats, with Intention to “ cause it to be believed and suspected, that the “ said James Ashley had been guilty of Felony;
 “ and to cause him to be apprehended and arrested
 “ for the same.

“ III. That the said Henry Simons, on the same “ Day and Year last aforesaid, at Chelmsford
 “ aforesaid, with Force and Arms, did make an “ Assault upon the said James Ashley, and into “ the right-hand Pocket of the Coat which he “ then had on and wore, three other Pieces of “ foreign Gold Coin, called Ducats, he the said “ Henry Simons did then and there privily, and “ without the Knowledge of him the said James
 “ Ashley, unlawfully put and convey, and cause
 “ to be put and conveyed, with a most malicious,
 “ wicked, and cruel Intention, then and there “ falsely to charge and accuse, and to cause it to “ be thought and believed, that the said James “ Ashley had robbed him the said Henry Simons of
 “ the same.

“ IV. That the said Henry Simons, on the same “ Day and Year last above-mentioned, with “ Force and Arms, at Chelmsford aforesaid, upon
 “ the said James Ashley did make an Assault, and “ into the right-hand Pocket of the Coat which
 “ the said James Ashley then and there had on
 “ and wore, three other Pieces of foreign Gold “ Coin, called Ducats, did privily, and without
 “ the Knowledge of him the said James Ashley, “ unlawfully put and convey, and cause to be “ put and conveyed; and that he the said Henry “ Simons did afterwards, then and there, most “ falsely and maliciously charge and accuse the “ said James Ashley with having robbed him the “ said Henry Simons of the said three Ducats,
 “ with Intent unjustly and wrongfully to subject
 “ the said James Ashley to the Pains and Penalties “ inflicted by the Laws of this Kingdom for “ such-like Offences.”

To this Indictment Henry Simons pleaded Not Guilty.

Simons had before moved the Court of King's-Bench for a Special Jury, which were as follows:

The Special Jury.

John Morley, of Halsted, Esq;
 John Godsalve, of Great Baddow, Esq;
 Robert Clarke, of Little Baddow, Esq;
 Daniel Stratton, of Bromfield, Esq;
 John Olmius, of Boreham, Esq;
 George Dodson, of Shenfield, Esq;
 Thomas Brograve, of Great Baddow, Esq;
 John Hornby, of Ingatestone, Esq;
 Samuel Ruggles, of Bocking, Esq;
 Peter Godfrey, of Woodford, Esq;
 Pculton Allen, of Barking, Esq;
 Henry Hall, of Hutton-Hall, Esq;

And on the Evidence of Mr. Ashley, Mr. Newman, Isaac Hubbard the Constable, Richard Taylor, and others, he was convicted after a Trial of twelve Hours; the Jury going out about Nine at Night, and not returning till Two in the Morning.

Henry Simons, thus found guilty, and being upon Bail, his Friends, instead of bringing him into Court within the four first Days of the next Easter Term, which began the 15th of April, according to the Condition of the Recognizance, moved the Court of King's-Bench, that Judgment might be respited; and prayed for a Rule, That the Prosecutor might shew Cause, why a new Trial should not be granted: Which the Court did not then come into, there not being then sufficient Reason shewn. Whereupon the following Affidavits were made soon after:

The Jurymen's Affidavits at large.

1. John Merley, of Halsted, in the County of Essex, Esq; saith, he served on the Jury at the Trial of this Cause, at the last Assizes, held, &c. as Foreman of the said Jury; and this Deponent, on the Evidence given on the said Trial, was of Opinion, that the Defendant did put three Ducats into the Prosecutor's Pocket; but did not find the same was done with any Intent whatsoever. — The Deponent saith, the Jury did agree to give their Verdict, That the Deponent was guilty of putting the said three Ducats into the Prosecutor's Pocket, by reason it was sworn to that Effect; and such was the Verdict intended to be given: But the Deponent hath lately been informed, That the Verdict of the Jury recorded finds the Defendant guilty upon the third Count in the Indictment, which, the Deponent is also informed, is finding the Defendant guilty of putting the said three Ducats into the Prosecutor's Pocket, with a most malicious, wicked, and cruel Intention, falsely to charge, and cause it to be believed, that the Prosecutor had robbed the Defendant of the said three Ducats: Whereas this Deponent, and the rest of the Jury, did not find the same was done with any such Intent, or any Intent whatsoever. — The Deponent saith, That the said Verdict, as it now stands, is contrary to the Intent of the Deponent; and therefore the Deponent hath made this Affidavit.

2. John Godsalve, of Great Baddow, in the County of Essex, Esq; saith, he served on the Jury at the Trial of this Cause, &c. That the Deponent, on the Evidence given to him on the said Trial, was of Opinion, That the Defendant did put three Ducats into the Prosecutor's Pocket; but the same was not done with Intent to charge the Prosecutor with Felony, or Robbery, or other Offence, with any evil Intent. — The Deponent saith, That the Jury did agree to give a Verdict, that the Defendant was guilty of putting the said three Ducats into the Prosecutor's Pocket, by reason it was sworn to that Effect; and such Verdict was intended to be given: The Deponent apprehended, That he and the rest of the Jury had given such Verdict: But the Deponent hath since been informed, that the Verdict recorded finds the Defendant guilty on the third Count in the Indictment, which, the Deponent is also informed, is finding the Defendant guilty of putting the said three Ducats into the Prosecutor's Pocket, with a most malicious, wicked, and cruel Intention, falsely to charge, and cause it to be believed, that the Prosecutor had robbed the said Defendant of the said three Ducats: Whereas the Deponent and the rest of the Jury did not find, that the same was done with such Intent, or any Intent whatsoever. — The Deponent saith, That the said Verdict, as it now stands, is contrary to the Verdict then given in Court. — Saith, he could not rest satisfied with such Verdict, and therefore the Deponent made this Affidavit.

3. Robert Clarke, of Little Baddow, in the County of Essex, Esq; saith, That he served on the Jury at the Trial of this Cause last Assizes, held at Chelmsford, in the County of Essex; and that he was of Opinion, that the Defendant put three Ducats into the Pocket of the Prosecutor; but that the same was not done with Intent to charge the Prosecutor with Robbery, or Felony, or any other Offence, or with any evil Intent. The Deponent saith, That the Jury did agree to give their Verdict, that the Defendant was guilty of putting the said three Ducats into the Prosecutor's Pocket, by reason it was sworn to that Effect; and such was the Verdict intended to be given: This the Deponent apprehended he and the rest of the Jury had given such Verdict: But the Deponent hath been informed, that the Verdict, as taken down and recorded, finds the Defendant guilty upon the third Count in the Indictment, which, the Deponent is informed, is finding the Defendant guilty of putting the said three Ducats into the Prosecutor's Pocket, with a most malicious, wicked, and cruel Intention, falsely to charge, and accuse, and cause it to be thought and believed, that the Prosecutor had robbed the said Defendant of the said three Ducats: Whereas the Deponent and the rest of the Jury did not find, that the same was done with such Intent, or any Intent whatsoever. — The Deponent saith, That the Verdict, as it stands, is contrary to the Intent of the Deponent. — The Deponent saith, he could not in his Conscience rest satisfied with such Verdict: Therefore the Deponent made this Affidavit to explain what Verdict he did intend to find.

4. Daniel Stratton, of Bromfield, in the County of Essex, Esq; saith, he served on the Jury at the Trial of this Cause, at the last Assizes, held, &c. That this Deponent, on the Evidence given to him on the said Trial, was of Opinion, that the Defendant put three Ducats in the Prosecutor's Pocket; but that the same was not done with Intent to charge the Prosecutor with Robbery, or Felony, or any other Offence, with any evil Intent.

Intent. — The Deponent saith, That the Jury did agree, that the Defendant was guilty of putting the said three Ducats into the Prosecutor's Pocket, by reason it was sworn to that Effect; and such was the Verdict intended to be given. The Deponent apprehended he and the rest of the Jury had given such Verdict: But the Deponent hath lately been informed, that the Verdict recorded finds the Defendant guilty on the third Count in the Indictment, which, the Deponent is also informed, is finding the Defendant guilty of putting the said three Ducats into the Prosecutor's Pocket, with a most malicious, wicked, and cruel Intention, falsely to charge, and cause to be believed, that the Prosecutor had robbed the Defendant of the said three Ducats: Whereas the Deponent, and the rest of the Jury, did not find the same was done with such Intent, or any Intent whatsoever. — The Deponent saith, The Verdict, as it now stands, is contrary to the Intent of the Deponent. — Saith, he could not rest satisfied with such Verdict; and therefore the Deponent made this Affidavit.

5. John Olmius, of Boreham, in the County of Essex, Esq; saith, he served on the Jury at the Trial of this Cause, &c. — That this Deponent, on the Evidence given on the said Trial, was of Opinion, That the Defendant did put three Ducats into the Prosecutor's Pocket; but the same was not done with Intent to charge the Prosecutor with Robbery, or Felony, or any other Offence. — Saith, That the Jury did agree, that the Defendant was guilty of putting the said three Ducats in the Prosecutor's Pocket, by reason it was sworn to that Effect; and such only was the Verdict intended to be given. The Deponent apprehends such Verdict was given: But the Deponent hath been informed, that the Verdict, as recorded, finds the Defendant guilty upon the third Count in the Indictment, which, the Deponent is also informed, is finding the Defendant guilty of putting the said three Ducats into the Prosecutor's Pocket, with a most malicious and cruel Intention, falsely to charge, and cause it to be thought and believed, that the Prosecutor had robbed the said Defendant of the said three Ducats: Whereas the Deponent and the rest of the Jury did not find the same was done with any ill Intent whatsoever. — The Deponent saith, when the Jury came into Court, there was such a Croud and Noise within and without the Court, that the Deponent could not hear distinctly what the Judge, who tried the Cause, said or explained to them. — Saith, that he did not understand the Nature of the third Count of the said Indictment. — Saith, that the Verdict, as it stands, is contrary to the Intent of this Deponent. — The Deponent saith, he could not in his Conscience rest satisfied with such Verdict; and therefore did, together with Peter Godfrey and Poulton Allen, Esquires, two others of the Jury, lately wait on the Judge, who tried the Cause, and explained to him what Verdict they intended to find: And also acquainted him, that, by reason of the Noise in the Court, the Deponent could not understand the Judge's Explanation of the said third Count of the said Indictment, or the Nature thereof.

6. George Dodson, of Shenfield, in the County of Essex, Esq; saith, he served on the Jury at the Trial of this Cause, at the last Assizes, held, &c. That this Deponent, on the Evidence given him on the said Trial, was of Opinion, That the Defendant put three Ducats into the Prosecutor's Pocket; but the same was not done with Intent to charge the Prosecutor with Robbery, or Felony, or any other Offence, with any evil Intent. — The Deponent saith, the Jury did agree to give their Verdict, That the Defendant was guilty of putting three Ducats into the Prosecutor's Pocket, by reason it was sworn to that Effect; and such was the Verdict intended to be given: The Deponent apprehended he, and the rest of the Jury, had given such Verdict: But the Deponent hath lately been informed, that the Verdict recorded finds the Defendant guilty on the third Count in the Indictment, which, the Deponent is also informed, is finding the Defendant guilty of putting the said three Ducats into the Prosecutor's Pocket, with a most malicious, wicked, and cruel Intention, falsely to charge, and cause it to be believed, that the Prosecutor had robbed the said Defendant of the said three Ducats: Whereas the Deponent, and the rest of the Jury, did not find the same was done with such Intent, or any Intent whatsoever. — And the Deponent saith, that when the Judge, who tried the Cause, did explain to the Deponent, and the rest of the Jury, the Nature of the Indictment, the Deponent did reply, We find guilty of No Intent: But cannot say, whether the Judge heard him. — The Deponent saith, that the Verdict, as it now stands, is contrary to the Intent of this Deponent. — Saith, he could not rest satisfied with such Verdict; and therefore made this Affidavit.

7. Thomas Brograve, of Great Baddow, in the County of Essex, Esq; saith, that he served on the Jury at the Trial of this Cause, at the last Assizes, held at Chelmsford, for the County of Essex; and this Deponent, on the Evidence given to him and them on the said Trial, was of Opinion, That the Defendant did put three Ducats into the Pocket of the Prosecutor; but that the same was not done with an Intent to prosecute the said James Ashley for Felony or Robbery: The Deponent apprehended he and the rest of the Jury had given such Verdict: But the Deponent hath lately been informed, that the Verdict of the Jury, as taken down and recorded, finds the Defendant guilty upon the third Count in the Indictment, which, this Deponent is also informed, is finding the Defendant guilty of putting the said three Ducats into the Prosecutor's Pocket, with a most malicious, wicked, and cruel Intention, falsely to charge and accuse, and cause it to be thought and believed, that the Prosecutor had robbed the said Henry Simons the Defendant of the said three Ducats: Whereas the Deponent and the rest of the Jury did not find, that the same was done with Intent as aforesaid. — The Deponent saith, that the said Verdict, as it now stands, is contrary to the true Intent of this Deponent: Therefore the Deponent maketh this Affidavit to explain what Verdict they did intend to find.

8. Joseph Hornby, of Ingatestone, in the County of Essex, Esq; saith, he served on the Jury at the Trial of this Cause, &c. And that it appeared to the Deponent, on the Evidence given on the said Trial, That the Defendant did put three Ducats into the Prosecutor's Pocket; but on the Evidence given to the Deponent by Crisp Gascoyne, Esq; Alderman of London, it appeared to the Deponent, That the same same was not done with a malicious, wicked, and cruel Intention, falsely to charge, and cause it to be believed, that the Prosecutor had robbed the Defendant of the said three Ducats, or with any evil Intent. — The Deponent saith, that the Jury agreed to give their Verdict, That the Defendant was guilty of putting the said three Ducats into the Prosecutor's Pocket, by reason it was sworn to that Effect; and such was the Verdict intended to be given: And the Deponent apprehended, that such Verdict was given.—The Deponent saith, that, when the Jury came into the Court to bring in their Verdict, there was such a Croud and Noise in the Court, that the Deponent could not hear what the Judge, who tried the Cause, said or explained to them. — Saith, he did not understand the Nature of the third Count of the Indictment, for the Reasons aforesaid.

9, 10. Peter Godfrey, of Woodford, and Samuel Ruggles, of Bocking, in the County of Essex, Esquires, severally make Oath, that they severally served on the Jury, at the Trial of this Cause, the last Assizes, &c. and say, that these Deponents, on the Evidence given them on the said Trial, were of Opinion, That the Defendant did put three Ducats into the Prosecutor's Pocket, but the same was not done with Intent to charge the Prosecutor with Robbery, or Felony, or any other Offence, or any evil Intent. — The Deponents say, the Jury did agree to give their Verdict; that the Defendant was guilty of putting the said three Ducats into the Prosecutor's Pocket, by reason it was sworn to that Effect.—The Deponents apprehended, that they, and the rest of the Jury, had given such Verdict: But the Deponents have been informed, that the Verdict of the Jury, as is recorded, finds the Defendant guilty on the third Count in the Indictment, which, the Deponents are also informed, is finding the Defendant guilty of putting the said three Ducats into the Prosecutor's Pocket, with a most malicious, wicked, and cruel Intention, falsely to charge, and cause it to be believed, that the Prosecutor had robbed the Defendant of the said three Ducats: Whereas, when these Deponents, and the rest of the Jury, came into Court, there was such a Croud and Noise, that the Deponents could not hear distinctly what the Judge, who tried the Cause, said or explained to them. — Say, that they did not understand the Nature of the third Count of the said Indictment, for the Reasons aforesaid; the Deponents say, that the Verdict, as it now stands, is contrary to the Intent and Meaning of these Deponents. — This Deponent, Peter Godfrey, for himself, saith, he could not rest satisfied with such Verdict; therefore this Deponent did, together with John Olmius and Poulton Allen, Esquires, two others of the Jurors, wait on the Judge, who tried the Cause, and explained to him what Verdict they intended to find; and also acquaint him, that, by reason of the Noise in the Court, this Deponent could not understand the Judge's Explanation of the said third Count of the said Indictment, or the Nature thereof.

11. Poulton Allen, of Barking, in the County of Essex, Esq; saith, that the Deponent served on the Jury at the Trial of this Cause, &c. That the Deponent, on the Evidence given to him on the said Trial, was of Opinion, That the Defendant did put three Ducats into the Prosecutor's Pocket; but the same was not done with Intent to charge with Robbery, or Felony, or any other Offence. The Deponent saith, that the Jury did agree to give a Verdict, that the Defendant was guilty of putting the said three Ducats into the Prosecutor's Pocket, by reason it was sworn to that Effect.—The Deponent apprehended, he and the rest of the Jury had given such a Verdict: But the Deponent hath lately been informed, that the Verdict, as is recorded, finds the Defendant guilty on the third Count in the Indictment, which, the Deponent is also informed, is finding the Defendant guilty of putting the said three Ducats into the Prosecutor's Pocket, with a most malicious, wicked, and cruel Intention, falsely to charge and accuse, and cause to be believed, that the Prosecutor had robbed the said Defendant of the said three Ducats: Whereas the Deponent, and the rest of the Jury, did not find the same was done with such Intent, or any ill Intent whatsoever.—The Deponent saith, when the Jury came into Court to give their Verdict, there was such a Croud and Noise, that the Deponent could not hear distinctly what the Judge, who tried the Cause, said to them. — The Deponent saith, he did not understand the Nature of the third Count of the said Indictment, which the Deponent could not, for the Reason aforesaid, hear the Judge explain. —The Deponent saith, that the said Verdict, as it stands, is contrary to the Meaning of this Deponent.—The Deponent saith, that he could not be satisfied with such Verdict: Therefore the Deponent did, together with Peter Godfrey and John Olmius, Esquires, two other of the Jurors, wait on the Judge, who tried the Cause, and explain to him what Verdict they intended to find; and also acquaint him, that, by reason of the Noise in the Court, the Deponent could not understand the Judge's Explanation of the said third Count of the said Indictment.

12. Henry Hall, of Hutton-Hall, in the County of Essex, Esq; saith, he served on the Jury at the Trial of this Cause, the last Assizes, &c. That the Deponent, on the Evidence to him given on the said Trial, was of Opinion, That the Defendant did put three Ducats into the Prosecutor's Pocket, but the same was not done with Intent to charge the Prosecutor with Robbery, or Felony, or any other Offence, with any evil Intent. — The Deponent saith, that the Jury did agree, that the Defendant was guilty of putting the said three Ducats into the Prosecutor's Pocket, as sworn to that Effect; which was the Verdict intended to be given. The Deponent apprehended, he and the rest of the Jury had given such Verdict: But the Deponent hath been informed, that the Verdict recorded finds the Defendant guilty on the third Count in the Indictment, which, the Deponent is also informed, is finding the Defendant guilty of putting the said three Ducats into the Prosecutor's Pocket, with a most malicious, wicked, and cruel Intention, falsely to charge, accuse, and cause it to be believed, that the Prosecutor had robbed the Defendant of the said three Ducats: Whereas the Deponent, and the rest of the Jury, did not find the same was done with any such Intent, or with any Intent whatsoever. — The Deponent saith, that the said Verdict is contrary to the Intent of this Deponent. —The Deponent saith, he could not rest satisfied with with such Verdict; and therefore he made this Affidavit.

An Affidavit tending to prove the Jury's due recording Henry Simons's Conviction in public Court.

Cornelius Norton, of Red-Lion-Street, Clerkenwell, in the County of Middlesex, Solicitor for the Prosecutor in this Cause, maketh Oath, and saith, He was present in Court when the Jury, who tried this Cause, publicly delivered their Verdict: The Deponent saith, The Account thereof, and the whole Transaction relating thereto, is hereafter impartially set forth, according to the best of the Deponent's Knowledge and Belief.—First, the Deponent saith, That about One of the Clock of the next Day, after this Cause was tried, the Jury, who tried the same, having assembled together, came into open Court, and, having been called over, respectively answered to their Names: They were asked by the Associate, Whether they did abide by the Verdict they gave his Lordship in private? To which the Foreman of the Jury, or one of them, answered, They did. Upon which the Associate replied, Then this is the Verdict, You find the Defendant guilty. By which this Deponent understood, they found the Defendant guilty generally on the Indictment. For immediately thereon, the Honourable Mr. Justice Foster, who tried the Cause, got up, and told the Jury, That he apprehended they could not find the Defendant guilty of the whole Indictment; for that the Prosecutor had not given Evidence to support the first and second Count laid in the Indictment: But he thought there was Evidence to support the third Count: And then the said Mr. Justice Foster took great Care and Pains to explain the Difference between the several Counts, and declared it, as his Opinion, That, if they found the Defendant guilty of the said third Count, they should acquit him of the rest.—Whereupon George Dodson, Esq; who was one of the Jury, declared himself to the Court, That they found the Defendant guilty of No Intent, or to that Effect.—To which the Honourable Judge replied, Then you must acquit him; for it is the Intent constitutes the Offence, or to that Purpose: And recommended it to the Jury to go out, and reconsider of their Verdict.—In Answer whereto one of the Jury replied, My Lord, we have considered it as much as we could consider it.—The Deponent saith, He believes that thereupon the Judge read, or ordered to be read, the said third Count; and asked the Jury, If they believed the Witnesses? and some one or more of them answering, They did; the Judge said, Gentlemen, you must connect the whole Evidence together. Whereupon the Jury appeared to the Deponent to consider of what the Judge said to them; and in a short Time, as the Deponent apprehends, brought the Defendant in guilty of the third Count in the Indictment, and acquitted him as to the rest: And the Verdict recorded in that Manner.—The Deponent saith, That, after the Verdict so recorded, they were desired to hearken to it: The Associate said, Gentlemen of the Jury, you find the Defendant guilty of the third Count in the Indictment, and acquit him of all the rest.—In Answer to which, they some one or more of them answered, Yes; and withdrew from the Bar seemingly well satisfied.—Saith, He stood very near to the Jury, when they delivered their Verdict, and heard distinctly the whole that passed on that Occasion: And the Deponent does not remember, in his Conscience, that there was a great Croud or Noise in the Court at that Time.—Saith, That the whole Transaction above related is impartially set forth, as the Deponent believes: And that, if the Deponent hath made any Mistake therein, positively saith, it is not by Design: And humbly submits the Truth thereof to the honourable Judge who tried the said Cause.

Sworn before
Judge FOSTER.

C. NORTON.

These Affidavits of the Jury being obtained, another Application was made to the Court of King's-Bench; whereupon the Court was pleased to make a Rule for Mr. Ashley to shew Cause, why a new Trial should not be granted? which being spoke to by Nine several Counsel, who took up the Court several Days in the Hearing, the Court was pleased to adjudge a New Trial.*

Accordingly a second Trial came on for the same Fact, at Chelmsford Assizes, July 12, 1752, before Mr. Justice Dennison, by a Special Jury, on the same Indictment.

* "Which (says J. Ashley) is the first Precedent of the Kind to any Person who had been convicted of a criminal Offence." See Ashley's Case and Appeal, page 23. In the same Page he adds, "In the mean time, Actions having been brought (by Simons) against me (J. A.) as the Prosecutor, Isaac Hubbard the Constable, Richard Taylor and John Newman, on account of altering the Warrant, and thereby ignorantly detaining the said Henry Simons in Custody, till the Warrant was properly backed (by a Justice of Peace for the County of Essex;) this Cause was tried before the Lord Chief Justice Lee, at Guildhall, London, July 9, 1752; when the Jury gave a Verdict for Two Hundred Pounds against me, (J. A.) Richard Taylor, and John Newman; and the Costs were taxed at 70l.

The Evidence for the Prosecution was much the same as in the former Trial. And the Defendant called no Witnesses to invalidate what the Prosecutor's Witnesses had proved; but set up for a Defence, that Ashley was seen in Duke's-Place, shewing some Ducats, and desiring to know the Value of them. On which Mr. Ashley was called, and swore he had not been in Duke's-Place for seven Years, had never seen a Ducat (till those produced at Chelmsford) and contradicted what Simons's Witnesses had sworn. Then several Jews were called to his Character; who said, he was a very honest, religious Man; very poor, and obliged to pawn his Veil through Necessity. Upon the whole, on this second Trial, the Jury acquitted Simons.

There were at this Time several Pamphlets and Paragraphs in the News-papers published on both Sides about this mysterious Affair, which has never yet been cleared up: However, it is certain, Simons found great Friends, who assisted him in six Trials, in less than a Twelvemonth, viz.

1. Simons against Goddard, for a Robbery, Sept. 1751.
2. Goddard against Simons, for Perjury, Dec. 10, 1751.
3. James Ashley against Simons, for a Misdemeanor, March 12, 1752.
4. Simons against Thomas Ashley, for Perjury, April 1752.
5. Simons against James Ashley, &c. for false Imprisonment, July 9, 1752.
6. James Ashley against Simons, (a second Trial) for a Misdemeanor, July 12, 1752.

The Expence of these Trials cost Simons's Friends about 1300*l.*

Four of these Trials were common ones, not worth inserting here. The only two proper for this Work, would have been the Second for Perjury, and the Fifth for false Imprisonment; but we cannot find they were ever published, or even taken down in Short-hand.

LI. The TRIAL of Stephen M'Daniel, John Berry, James Egan, (otherwise Gahagan) and James Salmon, at Justice-Hall in the Old-Bailey, on Saturday the 1st of March, 1755, before the Right Honourable Stephen Theodore Janssen, Esq; Lord-Mayor of the City of London; the Honourable Sir Richard Adams, Knt. the Honourable Mr. Justice Wilmott, William Moreton, Esq; Recorder, and others of His Majesty's Justices of Oyer and Terminer, for the said City and County, for being Accessaries before a Felony committed by Peter Kelly and John Ellis, in the County of Kent; for which they were tried and convicted at the Assizes held at Maidstone, August 13, 1754.

London Jury.

Richard Heavysides,	Randolph Baileys,
Gamaliel Gardner,	John Keen,
Nathaniel Norton,	Henry Knight,
Samuel Nesbit,	William Basson,
Ebenezer Gardner,	John Brewin,
John Poperton,	John Pricklow.

STEPHEN M'Daniel, John Berry, James Egan (otherwise Gahagan) and James Salmon, were indicted, for that, at the Gaol-Delivery for our Sovereign Lord the King at the County Gaol at Maidstone for the County of Kent, on Tuesday the 13th of August, in the twenty-eighth Year of our said Sovereign Lord the King, Peter Kelly and John Ellis were, in due Form of Law, indicted for a Robbery on the King's Highway on James Salmon, by putting him in corporal Fear and Danger of his Life, in the Parish of St. Paul Deptford, in the County of Kent, and taking from him one Linen Handkerchief, Value 4*d.* two Pair of Leather Breeches, one Clasp-knife, one Iron Tobacco-box, one Silver Pocket-piece, one Guinea, and one Half-crown; and that the said Peter Kelly and John Ellis were tried and convicted for that Robbery; and that the said M'Daniel, Berry, Egan, and Salmon, on the 23d of July, 1755, in the City of London, were Accessaries before this Felony was committed; and feloniously and maliciously did aid, abet, assist, counsel, hire, and command the said Ellis and Kelly to commit this Robbery, against the Peace of his Majesty, his Crown and Dignity.

There was a second Count in the Indictment, as an Offence at Common Law.

At the Desire of Berry, the Witnesses were examined apart.

Joseph Cox sworn.

(He produced the Copy of the Record of the Conviction of Peter Kelly and John Ellis)

Q. Where had you this?

Cox. I had it of Mr. Knap's Clerk.

Q. Is it a true Copy?

Cox. It is; the Clerk and I examined it with the Record; I looked over the Record on the File, while the Clerk read this; after that the Clerk read the Record, while I looked over this. (It is read in Court, the Purport of which is)
 " That Peter Kelly and John Ellis were tried on
 " the 13th of August, 1754, at Maidstone Affizes,
 " before Sir Dudley Ryder, Knt. and Sir Michael
 " Foster, Knt. for the said Robbery on the De-
 " fendant Salmon, and found guilty."

Thomas Blee sworn.

Thomas Blee. I have known the Prisoner Berry eight or nine Years, and M'Daniel twelve Months last November. I never had any great Acquaintance with Salmon, till through Berry in the Month of June last. I have known Egan four or five Years, by his coming backwards and forwards to Berry's.

Q. Did you know Peter Kelly and John Ellis?

Blee. I did; I believe they are now in Maidstone Gaol; they were when I came away last Monday.

Court. Tell the Court the first Time you had any Conversation with them.

Blee. I lodged at Berry's House, and worked for him; Berry said to me, in the Beginning of July, Go to Mr. M'Daniel, (he lived then in Scrub's-Court, Holborn) and tell him I want to speak with him. I went, and he and I came back together to Berry's House. They both said, Tom, Money grows scarce, you must give a sharp Look-out for a Couple to go upon the Scamp now, and if you cannot get two, you must get one.

Q. What did they mean by going upon the Scamp?

Blee. That is to go upon the Highway. I told them, as Kidden's was so bad an Affair, I did not chuse to be concerned more. He was convicted last January was Twelve-month; and executed at Tyburn. M'Daniel said, D—n your Eyes, if you don't, it shall be the worse for you. Then Berry said, I might go about my Business; so I went away. The next Morning Berry called me into his Room.

Q. Where did he live?

Blee. At a Place called the George-Yard, at the upper End of Hatton-Garden. He then said, Go up to Mr. M'Daniel's House, and desire him to meet me in the Fields about Eleven o'Clock. I did, and we went into the Spaw-Fields; and Berry came to us. They both said to me, Go and look about the Fields, and we will sit down on the Grass, and see if you can pick up a Couple of idle Fellows, that will do for the Purpose, and introduce yourself into their Company.

Q. What did they mean by that Purpose?

Blee. To go upon the Scamp were the Words they said: Accordingly we three went into the Fields several Days, but could not meet with any body fit for the Purpose. I remember one Day in particular, it was Monday the 15th of July, that Day they ordered me to go into the Fields, and said they would come, and I sat there two Hours before they came nigh me; then M'Daniel came to the Top of the Hill, and bid me come to the Sign of Sir John Oldcastle, a Public House, and said, my Master was there; he and I went there, and down to the Bottom of the Yard; and, in the farthest Arbour but one, on the left-hand Side, there sat Berry and Salmon the Breechemaker. Berry bid me sit down, which I did; there we all discoursed together about doing this Robbery: M'Daniel said, We'll do the Thing somewhere towards Blackbeath; then he and Berry had a sort of a Wrangle whether they should not have it done between New-cross Turnpike and Deptford, just facing the four-mile Stone.

Q. Was there any particular Reason to have it done in that Place?

Blee. Yes, they said; there is a Reward of twenty Pounds that is given by the Inhabitants of East-Greenwich for apprehending Highwaymen and Footpads: Berry said, Suppose we have Egan concerned with us; then they talked about his being the Fence, as they call it.

Q. What did they mean by that Word?

Blee. That is, to buy the Goods after Salmon had been robbed of them: M'Daniel made an Objection to Egan's being in, because he thought five would be too many to be concerned in the Reward: Berry said, We cannot cleverly do without him, and if there are five of us concerned, it will be pretty nigh twenty Pounds each, if a Constable should come in: And they all three, that is, Berry, M'Daniel, and Salmon, concluded that Egan should be concerned as a Fence in the Robbery: And Berry said, he would go and let Egan know of it that Night; and said to me, Now, Tom, you may go home about your Business, we will not be seen to walk along the Streets together; so I went away and left them. The next Morning I went out again, to see if I could find any body for the Purpose, but I could not that Day; the next after, which was on a Wednesday, Mr. Berry called me into his Room, and ordered me to go and tell M'Daniel to come to him to the Bell Inn in Holborn; I went, and M'Daniel and I went to the Bell together; there were James Egan, James Salmon, and Berry; we were all five together; they bid me come and sit down, which I did, and drank Part of a Pot of Beer; then we all concluded that the Thing should be done.

Q. Where is the Bell Inn?

Blee. It is in the City of London, just beyond Bartlet's-Buildings, on the right-hand Side.

Q. What Thing was to be done?

Blee. That if I could get a Couple to go on the Highway, that Salmon should be the Person to be robbed; and Berry and Salmon talked about making two Pair of Breeches that Salmon was to be robbed of, and to mark them under the Pocket or Waistband with some particular Mark; to the best of my Knowledge it was to be J. S. Then Berry and M'Daniel said, they must have a particular Handkerchief too: Then M'Daniel put his Hand into his Pocket, and pulled out this Handkerchief that I have now in my Hand: James Salmon said, he had got a Handkerchief at Home, that he would mark so as to swear to it; which he was to mark with four Oilet-holes, one at each Corner. Berry said, they should want a Tobacco-box; M'Daniel said, he had got a very remarkable one, that any body might swear to, which I have fetched fetched forty Halfpenny-worths of Tobacco in for M^r Daniel, and I know it to be the same now; (taking it in his Hand) M^r Daniel said, he would give it to Salmon to be robbed of: Then they said, they wanted a Halfpenny, and would have it marked; M^r Daniel said, he had got a Pocket-piece; which Piece I saw his Wife buy for Three-pence and a Halfpenny-worth of Gin some Time before: He said, that would do; and it should be marked with a Shoemaker's Tool, and he gave it to Egan to mark it: Egan said, he had got a Tool that he used to stamp the Shoes with, that he would mark the Piece with: Then they bid me go Home about my Business, which I did. The next Morning Berry called me up into his Room again, he gave me Three-pence, and ordered me to go down to the Fleet-Market, to see if I could pick up two Men or Lads there.

Q. Did he say any thing more at that Time?

Blee. He said, to do the Thing. I knew what he meant; accordingly I went down to the Market, and met with Peter Kelly and John Ellis.

Q. Did you know them before?

Blee. I did; I knew them to be very bad Lads, that is, Pick-pockets. I gave them some Gin, but had no Discourse with them that Day about the Thing: The next Morning Berry called me into his Room again, and gave me Three-pence more, and bid me go down to the Fleet-Market to them, and be sure to have a little Talk with them, and told me what to say; and that was, to tell them, I knew where to get a brave Parcel of Lullies.

Q. What is the Meaning of that?

Blee. He meant, to get a Parcel of Linen, if they would go with me to Deptford. I went and met them there, and told them as Berry ordered me; that is, I told them I knew where to get a brave Parcel of Lullies, if they would go to Deptford with me.

Q. Did you tell them Berry told you so?

Blee. No, I did not; if I had, they would not have agreed to go; they both agreed to go with me any Time I thought proper; then I left them for that Day, and bid them a good Night.

Q. You say you knew Kelly and Ellis before; What are they?

Blee. Ellis is a Chimney-sweeper, about twenty Years of Age; and the other about twenty-one, by their Looks. The next Morning Berry called me into his Room again; I came Home pretty late over Night, so I had not seen him then: He ordered me to go and tell M^r Daniel to come to him to the Sign of the Plumb-Tree, in Plumb-Tree-Court, Shoe-Lane, at the Bottom of Holborn-Hill; accordingly M^r Daniel and I went there, there were Berry and Salmon. Berry told Salmon I had got two Men, Ellis and Kelly, and they had agreed to go along with me any where, where I thought proper; as I had told him before, that Morning. Berry bid me drink once, and go about my Business.

Q. Did Salmon say any thing to it then?

Blee. No, he did not; the Reason they chose I should go by myself was, because People should not take Notice of me. I went away, and left them three all together.

Q. Did they say so?

Blee. They did.

Q. When did they say that?

Blee. When Berry and he gave me this Great Coat I have now on, to disguise myself.

Q. When was this?

Blee. It was on a Friday; I remember it was Market-day at Smithfield, and I had been there to Kelly and Ellis. I saw them in the Fleet-Market on a Pea-cart, betwixt Five and Six o'Clock: I asked them, if they would have a Glass of Gin; and gave them each a Glass, and bid them Good-bye: About two Hours after I met them again in the Market, and asked them, if they would go to Deptford or not? they said, Yes. Kelly asked me, if I had got ever a Bag to put the Linen in? I said, we did not want a Bag, I would tell them more of that another Time; and left them then. At Night, it being Saturday, Berry called me into his Room, and asked me, if I had seen them and talked with them? I said, I had: He said, that was very well. He said, When you get up in the Morning, come into my Room before you go out, which was the Sunday Morning: I got up, and went in; he then gave me Six-pence to treat them with. I went out into the Brick-Fields, and found them, and treated them with some Gin and Beer; and we agreed to go to Deptford to steal some Linen, and I bid them a Good-bye for that Time; and said to them, I would meet them on the Morrow Morning. I left them in the Sparw-Fields, and went to M^r Daniel's House and dined there: I told M^r Daniel I had got two Lads that I believed would suit for the Thing, and told him who they were; and said, I would let him know more of it on the Morrow, for I should see them again To-night or To-morrow; he said, that was very well. At Night I saw Berry, and told him what had passed between the Lads and I; he said, it was very well, he should see Egan To-morrow Morning; then I went to Bed. The next Morning, which was Monday the 22d of July, about Five o'Clock, Berry called me into his Room again, and bid me go and tell M^r Daniel not to be out of the Way, and he also gave me Three-pence to go down to the Fleet-Market to treat Ellis and Kelly with some Gin. I went down, and there I met with them, and gave them each a Halfpenny-worth; and told them I would fix a Day when we should go down to Deptford: Then I left them, and went to M^r Daniel's House. About Nine that Morning there came Berry and Egan up into his Room; Berry said, G—d d—n you, Mack, you and my Lord mind nothing but that G—d-d—d Tea-kettle; you don't mind to look after Business.

Q. What did he mean by my Lord?

Blee. He meant me; it was a Nick-name they gave me. M^r Daniel answered, He is just come from the two Lads, as he tells me. I said, If Egan has a Mind to go, he shall go and see them; he and I went down into the Fleet-Market, there were the two Lads sitting on a Pea-cart; I put my Hand into my Pocket, and gave them a Halfpenny each to go and get some Gin. Egan stood not above three or four Yards from them at the same Time, leaning against a Post; then he went one Way, and I another; I went through Plumb-Tree-Court, and met Egan in Shoe-Lane; then he went to M^r Daniel's House again. Egan said there to M^r Daniel and Berry, By G—d they'll do very well, they are two pretty Lads.

Q. from Berry. Where was this?

Blee. You know well enough, it was at M^r Daniel's House: Then Berry, Egan, and I came came down Stairs; we parted with Egan at the End of the Court. Berry and I went over to the Plumb-Tree; and, as we went by Salmon's Door in Shoe-Lane, Berry beckoned him out, and he went with us. I stayed and drank Part of one Pint of Beer, and then went away by Berry's Order, and left them together. On the Tuesday Morning Berry and I went to the Plumb-Tree Alehouse again; he bid me go over, and tell M^cDaniel he wanted to speak with him; I went and told him, and he came: Then I went out of the House, to see if I could find the two Lads again; I found them in the Fleet-Market, and discoursed with them; they said, they were going to work (as they called it) in the Artillery-Ground.

Q. What Work?

Blee. It was picking of Pockets. I came back and acquainted Berry and M^cDaniel with it. Berry gave me Three-pence in Halfpence, and they bid me go out directly to them, and keep them Company: Berry always found the Money. They both said, they would come into the Artillery-Ground about Two o'Clock to see the Lads: The White Regiment marched that Day: I went and walked up and down with them. About half an Hour after Two I saw Berry in the Artillery-Ground, (I was to take no Notice to Berry and M^cDaniel, or they to me) and presently after, walking round by the Artillery-House, I saw M^cDaniel; after that I left the Lads, and went to Berry, as he stood at the Artillery-Gate, and said to him, Mr. Berry, do you think they will do?

Q. from Berry. What Time of the Day was this?

Blee. It was about Three o'Clock.

Q. What was Berry's Answer to that?

Blee. He said, Do! d—n me, I have done less than they over; for March and Newman were less: He put his Hand in his Pocket, and gave me Six-pence; and bid me be sure not to leave them.

Berry. Here is a Man in Court will contradict that, (pointing to one that stood near him.)

Court. Don't you know, at your Request, all the Evidences for the Prosecution were put out of Court, to be called in one at a Time; at which Time yours were put out also? How came this Witness in again? He must go out, and come in when he is called. (*He went out, but did not come in again to give Evidence on Berry's Defence.*)

Blee. I went with the Six-pence round the Artillery-Ground, and met with M^cDaniel; he said he was going to Berry. I asked him if he thought the two Lads would do? he said, D—n your Eyes, I have done less than they over at Kingston.

Q. Had he had a Sight of them?

Blee. He had, as we passed him before; he and Berry went into the Ground, on Purpose to see them. Then I left M^cDaniel, and went and gave the Boys Part of a full Pot of Beer; then I bid them Good-bye, and told them I would see them again the next Morning, which was the 24th. I went Home, and got up in the Morning, and told Berry I was going to them; he gave me Three-pence. Then I went down into the Fleet-Market, and told them, I believed the Thing would be done on the Friday; this was on the Wednesday: If not, I would let them know farther. Then I left them, and at Night I went Home, and told Berry I had been again along with Ellis and Kelly. He said, D—n you, don't go to deceive us; do you come up to the Bell in Holborn by-and-by, and tell M^cDaniel I want him. I went to M^cDaniel's House, and left word what Berry ordered me; for M^cDaniel was not at Home. Then I went to the Bell, and Berry met me just at the Door: Just as I was going into the House, he said, Here is Three-pence; go away to the Artillery-Ground, be sure to be there about Two o'Clock: This was on Thursday the 25th, in the Morning. He said, Don't come in, for Mr. Bagley is there; I don't desire he should see you.

Q. Who was that Mr. Bagley?

Blee. He was a Neighbour of Berry's. I went away to the Artillery-Ground at the Time; and walked about an Hour and a half before I saw either Berry or M^cDaniel; but walking by the Artillery-Ground, I saw M^cDaniel; he told me he had been at Dinner along with somebody in the Artillery-House, and said, Where the D—l is Berry? I said, I never saw any thing of him. About half an Hour after that, there was Hue-and-Cry after a Pickpocket. M^cDaniel came to me, and said, G—d d—n me, the chief Person is a ducking in the Pyed-Horse Yard; follow him, and give him some Gin, for they have almost killed him. I followed him (it was Ellis the Chimney-sweeper, the biggest of the two Lads) cross Moorfields; I saw the People go from him, and there were but two or three People behind him; I gave him a Penny or Three-half-pence, I don't know which. Then I went back to M^cDaniel, and told him he was very safe; then he and I came out of the Artillery-Ground together: As we were coming out of the Ground, we met one they call Plump (his Name Brebrook) and another Fellow they call Doctor, that was Turnkey at Clerkenwell Bridewell. Plump seeing M^cDaniel and I together, said to me, G—d d—n you, you Rascal, you deserve to be hanged for that Affair of Kidden. M^cDaniel said to me, Come along, don't be afraid of any body. We went over Moorfields together. He ordered me to go to his Wife, which I did; and after that I went down the Fleet-Market, to see if Ellis was safe; I found them both, and told them I would meet them the next Morning: They said, they had no Money to pay for their Lodging; I said, Here is Three-halfpence for you, go and lie in the Brick-Field To-night. Then I went Home to Mr. Berry's; he told me he had been at the other End of the Town about some Business, and he could not come into the Artillery-Ground. If this Affair of Ellis's being ducked had not happened, the Robbery of Salmon was to have been committed on the Friday.

Q. When was it fixed to be on the Friday?

Blee. That was determined to be on the Wednesday.

Q. By who?

Blee. Berry and I pitched upon the Thing in the Morning, and he was to go and let the rest know.

Q. Where did you consult this?

Blee. We did it in his Room, before we went out to go to the Bell.

Q. What did he say to you about it then?

Blee. He bade me tell the Lads we should go to Deptford to steal the Linen on the Friday.

Q. Who did he mean by the rest, which he said he would let know it?

Blee.

Blee. He meant Egan, Salmon, and M^r Daniel. On the Thursday Night I told Berry of Ellis's being ducked; he said, M^r Daniel, Egan, Salmon, and he had agreed, that it should not be done on the Friday, lest the Lads should be apprehended on the Saturday, and kept all Day on Sunday in the Watch-house; and somebody might come to them, to whom they might tell something about my being concerned with them, and so by impeaching me I might be apprehended; so he said they had fixed it to be on the Monday. On which Morning I got up by Mr. Berry's Orders; he gave me Two-pence or Three-pence (I cannot be positive which) to go to the Fleet-Market to meet them, and bid them stay till Nine o'Clock, and say I would come to them again; which I did, and returned, as Berry ordered me, to him at the Plumb-Tree Alehouse: There was Salmon and he; he sent me out for M^r Daniel; I went to him, and he bid me tell Berry he was shaving himself, and he would come when he had done. I went, and told Berry; he changed a Guinea, and gave me five Shillings, and bid me not to be extravagant: He gave me that, as he said, to flash to the Boys; to shew it to them, and say, I made that last Night: I was to pull it out all at once. He gave Salmon Half a Crown to be robbed of.

Q. Was it in one Piece?

Blee. No; it was two Shillings and Six-pence.

Q. Who were present at this Time?

Blee. There were Berry, M^r Daniel, and Salmon. Then Berry said to me, Now go away as fast as you can; and I said, At what Place shall I stop for you to see you are going, that we may be both sure? I said, I will stop at the Bell in the Borough, and call for a Glass of Gin; then you may know and be sure that we are going to Deptford. I left them, and went to the two Boys.

Q. About what Time was this?

Blee. It was about half an Hour after Nine in the Morning. I went with the Boys to a House in Little-Britain; there I called for some Beer, and Bread and Cheese; and pulled off my Coat, and said, I must go to the Fence to get some Money, for the Woman has not paid me all. Then I left my Great Coat, and went to Berry; and told him to hasten away, for the Boys wanted to go. Berry bid me return to them directly, and said, he would be over the Water Time enough for us. I went to the Boys again, and called for another Pot of Beer, to delay the Time. After we had drank that, we went out, to go to Deptford. When we came to the Bell in the Borough, we went in; and in the right-hand Box there sat Berry and Salmon; there I gave the Boys each of them a Halfpenny-worth of Gin; I was not to take Notice of Berry or Salmon. After we came out, Kelly said, D—n your Eyes, there is that old thief-catching Son of a B—h, your old Master. Said I, Never mind it, I don't belong to him now. Then we went down the Borough Market; they bought a Breast of Lamb for their Dinners, and we went to the Black Spread-Eagle in Kent-Street (which was the House the Prisoners and I had appointed for them to come to the next Day.) We had the Lamb fried for our Dinners; from thence we went to Deptford.

Q. What Time did you set out from Kent-Street?

Blee. We set out from thence about half an Hour after Twelve o'Clock: I had made them almost drunk. After we went from thence, it was too soon in the Day; we could do nothing till it was dark, I told them, so we would go over into the Fields, and go to Sleep: So, to prolong the Time, we went into the Fields, and all three of us went to Sleep: They slept pretty heartily. When I thought it proper Time to awake them, I did; and away we went for Deptford.

Q. What Time did you set out after this Sleep?

Blee. I cannot tell the Time.

Q. Was it dark?

Blee. No, it was not. We were in Deptford an Hour before Dark. I went with them to the Sign of the Ship, the House that Berry and Salmon had appointed to come to. I called for a Pint of Beer at the Door, and bid them stay there; and said, I had a Relation in the Town, near the Water-Gate, which I wanted to see: I left them, and went to see for Berry and Salmon. I found Berry; he and I went into a Public House, I think it is the Duke William's Head; he called for a Pint of Beer, and bid me return to the two Boys, and Salmon should come to the House. I went to them, (they were still at the Door;) I said, Come, let us go into the House; I expect my Cousin to come to me.

Q. Had you let the Boys into any Knowledge of this Affair, before you came to this Place?

Blee. No, I did not: Only I had told them it was to steal some Linen; they went for no other Intent. Then I went in, and called for a Pot of Beer, and Bread and Cheese; we eat the Bread and Cheese, and drank the Beer; and called for another Pot of Beer: In the mean time in came Salmon. He first went and leaned against a Dresser for about half a Minute, and then came and sat down in the Box near us, and began to discourse about going to London, (it was then dusk.) I saw Berry go by the Window; he beckoned his Finger, and I went out to him. He said, Be sure follow Salmon, when he comes out. I went in again, and Salmon presently went out. I changed Half a Crown, and asked the Lads if they would have any Gin. When Salmon first came in, Kelly said, There is that old Blood of a B—h, the Breeches-maker in Shoe-Lane; his Son and I have been picking of Pockets together many a Time. I said, Never mind that; what is that to us? I knew the Place where he was to stop at; it was just by the four-mile Stone: This was agreed upon before. The two Boys and I went on; and by the four-mile Stone, by a Gate, Salmon stood making believe he was making Water. D—n me, said Kelly, there is the old Breeches-maker, he is suckey, let's scamp him.

Q. What Reason did you give Kelly and Ellis for your going after Salmon?

Blee. I said, We will take a Walk, till it is Time to steal the Linen.

Q. Was it light or dark?

Blee. The Moon shone. Kelly said, when he came up to Salmon, G—d d—n you, what have you got there? Salmon said, Gentlemen, take what I have got, don't use me ill. He had the Breeches under his Arm, and he gave them to me; they were in a blue and white Handkerchief, and I gave them to Kelly. I said to Kelly, What Money have you got? Salmon said, Here, Gentlemen, what Money I have got is in my left-hand Waistcoat Pocket, in a Tobacco-Box. (He had told me before what Money he had got would be there.) Kelly put his Hand into his Pocket, and took the Tobacco-Box out, and a Clasp-Knife and Fork; then away we walked on for London, and came into Kent-Street as fast as we could, and lodged there all Night, at a House where I paid the Lodging-money at going down, by Berry's Order, to induce the Lads to come there again.

Q. What Time did you get to Kent-Street after the Robbery?

Blee. I believe we got there about Eleven o'Clock; the People had no Clock in the House.

Q. What Money did you take from Salmon?

Blee. We looked at that coming along; I knew what was in it before: There were two Shillings and Six-pence, and a Pocket-piece with Skilion on it, or some such Name, and a punch'd Mark in the middle of it. (Mr. Cox produced the Things mentioned.)

Court. Look at this Tobacco-box.

Blee. This is the very same, it is riveted within-side; I have had this Box a hundred Times in my Hand before.

N. B. The Box was an oval Iron Box, with a Rose, and Garter round that; and a Lion and Unicorn (as on the King's-Arms) in Basso-Relievo on the Lid.

Court. Look at this Pocket-piece.

Blee. This is the same Piece which I mentioned before.

Court. Look at the two Pair of Breeches and Handkerchief.

Blee. These are the same Breeches and Handkerchief.

Court. Look at this Knife.

Blee. It is the same Knife.

N. B. The Clasp-Knife and Fork were made to fasten together in the Handles.

Q. What was done the next Morning, when you lay in Kent-Street?

Blee. We got up the next Morning about Seven o'Clock, and went over the Way to the Sign of the Black Spread-Eagle (the House that Berry ordered me to go to.) I called for some Beer, and said to Kelly and Ellis, Sit down, and I will go get you something for Breakfast. I went out with that Pretence, and went to the White Bear in the same Street, where Berry ordered me to come to let him know. There sat Berry, Egan, and Salmon at the Door on the Bench. Berry said, That Son of a Whore M'Daniel is not come yet; now we must wait for him: Go you back, and Egan shall come after you directly. Egan and I walked up the Street a little Way together. I said, Stop there a Bit, while I go over to that Shop to buy a Lamb's Liver for Breakfast; he said, he would go on. He went on before, and called for a Pint of Beer; I came after with the Liver. I said to Ellis and Kelly, as I was going to cut the Liver, That Man deals in Rag-Fair, (meaning Egan;) at the same Time I knew he did not: But I was to say so when he came in. I said, May-be he will buy the Breeches; shall I ask him? Yes, said they, with all our Hearts. I said to him, Master, will you buy some Leather Breeches? He said, Let me look at them; if you and I can agree, I will buy them. After he had looked at them, he said, What will you have for them? I said, Six Shillings. He said, I will give you Five. He put his Hand into his Pocket, and gave Kelly a Shilling Earnest; and said, he had not so much Money about him, but he would come in an Hour or two, and pay the rest of the Money; and he would leave the Breeches in our Care till he came back. I said, My Friend, will you eat a Bit of Liver and Bacon before you go? He said, I don't care if I do. He sat down by the Fire-side, and said, Landlord, let us have a Halfpenny-worth of Tobacco; and said, God bless me, I don't know what I shall do; I have lost my Tobacco-box. (This he was to say, to get the Tobacco-box of them.) I said to Kelly, Let us sell him the Box, may-be he will buy it. Kelly said, No, let us ding it; it is such a remarkable one, may-be it may be known.

Q. What did he mean by dinging it?

Blee. He meant to sling it away; I said, No, let us sell it: Then Kelly said, Master, I will sell you a Tobacco-box, if you will buy it: Said he, Let me look at it; he looked at it, and asked, What he would have for it? Kelly asked Six-pence for it; he said, No, he would not give it. I said, We will not have dry Money, we will have some Beer: Then Egan said, He would give a full Pot of Twopenny for it; then Kelly said, he should have it: After he had eat his Breakfast, he went out, and goes to Berry and Salmon. I went backwards with the two Boys to play at Skittles to detain them, but the Ground was so wet we could not play; so we found another Pastime, called the Devil and Taylors. I kept them there an Hour and half; then I said, If the Man does not come, let us sell the Breeches. I said, I will go and be shaved; and I left my Great Coat, and went to the White Bear; but when they came there, they did not like the People of the House, because when M'Daniel came they did not like him. I went out of the House, and saw Berry come out of the Elephant and Castle; they beckoned me over, I went and called for a Pint of Beer; Berry said to me, You may drink with us; and said, D—n you, where is your Great Coat? (which is the same I have now) he bid me turn back and fetch it, and said, M'Daniel and Egan shall go.

Q. Who were there?

Blee. There were all the four Prisoners there, sitting in the Box going in on the left-hand Side, drinking: I went back again to Ellis and Kelly, and said, The Barber is busy, and cannot shave me, I must come again in five or six Minutes: I said, The Weather is cold, I must put my Great Coat on; I put it on, and went to the Elephant and Castle to them again. Berry bid me go to the Bell in the Borough, and stay there till he came, and to get shaved. I went away; and, as I was going, Egan and M'Daniel went out: I got shaved, and went to the Bell in the Borough; and called for a Pint of Beer, and drank it. About an Hour after Berry came in, and we had another Pint; then he and I went Homewards together: We went as far as Ludgate-Hill, there we saw one Mr. Rogers coming along; so he said, Leave me, don't be seen with me, and I left him. At Night when Berry came Home, I said to him, Master, be so good as to lend me some Money to go to the Fair To-morrow? He said, That is right, Uxbridge Fair is To-morrow the 31st; he lent me Eighteen-pence, saying, it was to go to Billinggate to buy Shrimps with: I went to the Fair,

Fair, and came back again on the 1st of August. Berry bid me not be afraid; saying, he would always keep a good Look-out: And they always said, if I was taken up, Salmon should never appear against me.

Q. You say you went to the White Bear in Expectation of seeing the Prisoners, and after that to the Elephant and Castle; when you came in there, what did you see?

Blee. I saw Mr. Berry, Salmon, and Egan; M'Daniel was down in the Yard at my first going in, but he came in before I went away.

Q. Recollect yourself, whether you saw them eat or drink?

Blee. I drank Part with them, but I had breakfasted before I got there; I know Berry told me they had a Rasher of Bacon; and he said I had had a better Breakfast than they.

Q. Where did he tell you this?

Blee. He told me so at the Bell in the Borough.

Q. Was you at the Trial of Kelly and Ellis in Kent?

Blee. No, I was not.

Q. Where was you at the Time of the Trial?

Blee. I was taken up on the Friday before, being the 8th Day of the Month.

Q. What Day was the Robbery committed?

Blee. It was on the 29th of July.

Cross-Examination.

Q. You have given an Account of several Meetings and Conversations you had with Kelly and Ellis before the Robbery was committed; was not the Conversation about stealing Linen?

Blee. It was.

Q. Was there any Mention made about a Robbery on the Highway?

Blee. No, none; I said what Berry ordered me to tell them.

Q. for Berry. You say Kelly and Ellis went with you under a Notion of stealing of Linen, and Kelly accidentally pitched on Salmon, and proposed to you to commit a Robbery on him.

Blee. No, he did not till we just got up to him; then he said, There is the old Breeches-maker, let us scamp him.

Q. Before that, had you proposed to him to commit a Robbery upon Salmon?

Blee. No, Sir.

Q. Whether Mr. Berry had any Conversation with Kelly or Ellis?

Blee. No, none at all; he did not chuse to be seen in it.

Q. Nor none of the other Prisoners?

Blee. No, they had not.

M'Daniel. He mentioned that he had been four or five Times up in Holborn; I never was there with him in my Life.

Blee. He was several Times.

M'Daniel. He mentions he was at the Plumb-Tree in Shoe-Lane; I never was there with him in my Life.

Blee. Yes, he was several Times.

Q. from Berry. What Lodging did you lie in at my House?

Blee. Sometimes in Berry's Hay-loft, and sometimes in the Room adjoining to his: I lay in that Room till all the Money was gone of Kidden's Reward; then I was forced to lie in the Hay-loft.

Q. from Berry. He says I lent him one Shilling and Six-pence to go to Uxbridge Fair; what Time was that?

Blee. It was on the Tuesday Night, the Day after the Robbery; Uxbridge Fair is on the 31st.

Berry. Uxbridge Fair is always the 20th Day of the Month.

Blee. That is Old Stile.

Q. from M'Daniel. Ask him, if he has not had a Quarrel with me, and swore he would be revenged on me.

Blee to the Question. No, never; M'Daniel once got a long Knife, and threatened to cut my Throat.

Berry. Because I took his Brother, that was transported, he always swore he would be revenged of me.

Blee. I never swore so; he did not take him.

Salmon. I have never been at the Bell in Holborn these five Years.

Blee. He was there as I have mentioned.

Q. from Egan. I want to know, if it can appear by any Man or Woman that I have been in a House with Blee.

Blee. There are several will prove that.

George Holewright sworn.

George Holewright. I live in Scroop's-Court, facing St. Andrew's Church, Holborn.

Q. Do you know either of the four Prisoners at the Bar?

Holewright. I know three of them.

Q. Which are they?

Holewright. M'Daniel, Salmon, and Berry. I do not take upon me to know Egan.

Q. Do you know Blee the Evidence?

Holewright. I do.

Q. How came you to know M'Daniel?

Holewright. I have known him and Berry some Years; M'Daniel kept the Sign of the Angel in Scroop's-Court.

Q. Where did he lodge about July last?

Holewright. He and his Wife, as he calls her, came into my House on Asb-Wednesday was Twelve-month. He gave me a Crown Earnest, and they continued there about four Months; he lodged there till he was taken up at Maidstone.

Q. Did you ever see the Evidence Blee coming to him amongst the rest?

Holewright. Yes, many Times; he was a very handy Man amongst them, and a very willing Fellow.

Q. Have you seen him often with M'Daniel?

Holewright. I have seen them together many Times. Blee used to come there to wash the House, and clean the Dishes; and he used to come often to ask for his Master Berry. They used to be generally together.

Q. He has said, in July last he was at M'Daniel's Lodgings in Scroop's-Court; do you recollect yourself that he was there in that Time?

Holewright. The last Time I saw M'Daniel was on the Friday Night; and on the Saturday, the Day after, he was gone down to Maidstone; but then I thought he was gone down to Coventry: And I saw Blee at my House much about that Time. They were very busy together; but I never did expect to be called upon in Court about these Things, and have made no Account of this; I cannot be exact as to the last Time Blee was there.

Q. Was you ever in the Artillery-Ground?

Holewright. I was, and saw Blee there, running backwards and forwards; that was, I remember, on a Tuesday: I don't know in what Month; but it was when the White Regiment marched.

Q. In what Manner did Blee appear there?

Holewright. I think he had a Great Coat on; running backwards and forwards, I said, Tom, what are you at? He said, Hold your Tongue, hold your Tongue; I saw him cross several Times.

Q. Did you see either of the Prisoners there?

Holewright. I did not see any of them, as I remember.

Q. You say M^cDaniel went down to Maidstone Assizes; did he tell you he was going there?

Holewright. No, he never mentioned a Word to me of that; he said he had taken a Man in Smithfield for a Murder, and he expected to have the Reward; and said, he should go to Coventry one Day or another.

Q. Did you know the Prisoners at the Bar were acquainted together?

Holewright. I have seen M^cDaniel and Berry together especially, Salmon the least: I have seen them all together, except Egan; him I never saw to my Knowledge.

Q. Have you seen Blee with them?

Holewright. I have seen him with all three of them; he was a sort of a Runner to them, as I thought.

Q. Did they appear as of one Company when you have seen them together?

Holewright. Very often; and if any thing was to be done, Blee used to run backwards and forwards; and there was whispering together, but it was nothing to me.

Q. Had you ever an Opportunity of hearing their Discourse?

Holewright. No, I never had.

Q. from Berry. Where have you seen us drinking together?

Holewright. At M^cDaniel's, when he kept the Angel in Scroop's-Court.

Q. How long is that ago?

Holewright. It is about five Years ago.

Q. from Berry. Have you seen me lately?

Holewright. I have seen you lately at the Union-Arms in Union-Court. I have seen them all three there.

Q. from Berry. How long is that ago?

Holewright. That may be about seven or eight Months ago.

Berry. We have been in Gaol seven Months.

Q. from Berry. Did you ever see me up at your House where M^cDaniel lived?

Holewright. No, I never saw you within my Door; I have seen you about the Door in the Court, once, twice, or three Times.

Anne Pattey sworn.

Anne Pattey. I know Egan and Salmon. I live Servant at the Plumb-Tree in Plumb-Tree-Court.

Court. Look about the Court; do you see them?

A. Pattey. I don't see them.

Court. Go down, and look about till you find them out.

A. Pattey. Egan is lame on his right Leg. (She goes down and looks at Egan, but said she did not know that to be him.)

N. B. He is a lame Person.

Q. Do you know Blee?

A. Pattey. I think I do; he was once at our House; he came and had two half Pints of Beer, my Master drew him one and I another; he stood with his Back towards me.

Q. Did you ever see Blee and Salmon together?

A. Pattey. No, I cannot say I have.

James Kirby sworn.

James Kirby. I live in Cross-Street, Hatton-Garden.

Q. Do you know any of the Prisoners at the Bar?

Kirby. I know three of them, Berry, M^cDaniel, and Salmon.

Q. Where have you seen them?

Kirby. I have seen Berry and M^cDaniel at the Two Brewers on Saffron-Hill; on the 8th of July they were drinking at the Door.

Q. Did you see any of the others in Company together?

Kirby. I have seen M^cDaniel and Salmon at the Union-Arms in Union-Court drinking together; I believe it was in the same Week, may-be a Day or two after the other; they were busy together in Discourse.

Q. Did you ever see Blee in Company with them?

Kirby. Blee came in that Evening at the Union-Arms just as Salmon went out, and stayed there some small Time; M^cDaniel's Wife came in, and they settled something that Blee had sold for her.

Q. Did you ever see them together after that Time?

Kirby. I saw M^cDaniel, Berry, and Blee smoaking at the Union-Arms in a Trifle of Time after; may-be the next Week after the 8th Day of July last.

Q. From any thing that you saw pass, do you think they were acquainted together?

Kirby. They were very well acquainted; Blee appeared to me to be M^cDaniel's Man.

Q. By what do you think he was M^cDaniel's Man?

Kirby. I have seen him come several Times to the Union-Arms to fetch Beer for his Master.

Q. Did he use to appear as if he shaved often?

Kirby. No, his Beard was very long most of the Time I knew him.

Q. How was his Beard at that Time you saw him last at the Union-Arms?

Kirby. It was very long at that Time.

Q. Did you ever see them three together any other Time?

Kirby. No, never but once; but I have seen two of them together, by Turns, several Times.

Q. Did you hear of Salmon's being robbed?

Kirby. No, not a Word of it, till I was told of it by the Constable.

Q. from Salmon. How many Times have you seen me at the Union-Arms?

Kirby. I saw Salmon once in the Kitchen with M^cDaniel, and another Time sitting at the Door, and Blee came while he was with M^cDaniel drinking, and fetched both away in a great Hurry: Before Blee came, they had got three Dogs, and were talking about them; this was a little after the 8th of July.

Q. from Berry. What Month was this in?

Kirby. It was in the Month of July.

Q. from Berry. Was it in the Middle or the Beginning of the Month?

Kirby. I cannot say within a Fortnight.

Q. What Apparel was Blee in, when you saw him there?

Kirby. In his usual Apparel.

James Price sworn.

James Price. I know John Berry; he lived in George-Yard, where I now live. I have seen M^cDaniel frequently with him there. I have also seen Egan with him there.

Q. Do you know any thing of Salmon?

Price. Salmon came into the Yard in August last, and asked me if I had seen Berry; I directed him to the Hat and Tun, where I had seen him go.

Q. Do you know Blee?

Price. I had a Warrant against him and young Berry. Berry kept Blee from me in his House.

Q. At what Time was that?

Price. I believe it was about a Year ago; I believe I had the Warrant in the latter Part of February. I remember about the Beginning of August I saw Berry, M^cDaniel, and Egan, at the Two Brewers, at the Bottom of Saffron-Hill.

Q. Have you often seen them together?

Price. I have often seen M^cDaniel and Berry together.

Q. Did they seem to be acquainted?

Price. They appeared to me to be very well acquainted, for they were almost always together.

Q. from Berry. How many Times may you have seen M^cDaniel and I together?

Price. I believe a hundred Times and more, I dare swear; they were seldom ever apart; you would seldom see one without the other.

Q. How long had you a Warrant in your Hands to search after Blee?

Price. I believe I had it six Months; I could not get at him: This was about the Time that Kidden was taken up, and they were afraid of bringing the Affair out.

John Samms sworn.

John Samms. I know Berry, M^cDaniel, Egan, and Salmon.

Q. Do you know any body at your left Hand?

Samms. Yes, that is Tom Blee.

Q. Do you know whether any of them were acquainted together, and who?

Samms. I have seen Berry, M^cDaniel and Egan together, at the George on Saffron-Hill.

Q. At what Time?

Samms. For these two Years past.

Q. When was the last Time?

Samms. I cannot say in particular; I saw them, I believe, in February or April.

Q. Did they appear to be tolerably intimate?

Samms. Egan has come and asked me many a Time, whether Berry was at Home.

Q. Did you ever drink with them?

Samms. I have two or three Times; M^cDaniel has come and asked me many a Time, whether I had seen Berry, (my Stable was opposite to Berry's) I have directed M^cDaniel where to find him.

Q. Have you any Reason to think they were acquainted with Blee?

Samms. I have; Blee lodged in Berry's House; they all seemed to know Blee. I have seen Blee with them all together, except Salmon.

Q. Where have you seen them?

Samms. In George-Yard.

Q. When have you seen them there?

Samms. I cannot say the Times when; I have seen them divers Times together.

VOL. X.

Q. What were they doing?

Samms. They were talking together.

Q. from Berry. Was you ever up Stairs in my House to see what Beds I had?

Samms. I know my Lord (that is, Blee) always went up Stairs; and when Berry turned his Wife out, Blee used to lie there.

Q. from Berry. When he had neither Shoe or Stocking to his Foot, was he fit to lie with me?

Samms. I know, when Berry has turned his Wife out, he has took Blee in, and locked the Door.

Q. to Kirby. Look at this Tobacco-box; did you ever see this before?

Kirby. Yes, I have, I am pretty sure of it.

Q. Whose Property is it?

Kirby. I think it belongs to M^cDaniel; I remember the Time when Salmon and he were drinking at the Union-Arms together; when Salmon was gone, there was some Tobacco left upon the Table; this Box was taken out by M^cDaniel to put the Tobacco in; it is a very remarkable one, I am pretty positive it is the same.

Q. When did you see it?

Kirby. I believe it was the same Week the 8th of July was in.

John Brayder sworn.

Q. Look at this Pocket-piece; do you know it?

John Brayder. (He takes it in his Hand.) I sold a Piece once pretty much like this; there was on one Side of it wrote Skilling; but there was not this Mark on it when I sold it, (meaning the Mark which Blee said Salmon made in the middle.)

Q. Do you take it to be of the same Specie of that you sold?

Brayder. Yes, it was; there was the same Writing on one Side of it.

Q. Who did you sell it to?

Brayder. I sold it to a Woman.

Q. Was any body with that Woman when she bought it?

Brayder. Yes, one Blee was.

Q. Should you know him if you was to see him again?

Brayder. I should.

Court. Turn about, and see if you can find him.

Brayder. This is the Man, (pointing to him.)

Q. to Blee. Was you by when this Man sold such a Pocket-piece as this?

Blee. I was; he sold it to M^cDaniel's Wife, or Company-keeper; she gave him Three-pence and a Halfpenny-worth of Gin for it.

Q. Where was she when she bought it?

Blee. It was by the Two Blue-Posts in Holborn, in the Beginning of July.

Q. to Brayder. What Time was it you sold that Piece you mention?

Brayder. I don't know the Time, but I believe it was in the Cherry Season.

Q. What did you sell it for?

Brayder. The Woman gave me Three-pence and a Half-penny Dram for it.

Joseph Cox again.

Joseph Cox. I have known M^cDaniel two or three Years; I never saw the other till I saw them all together at M^aidstone Assizes; I went down on the 14th of August.

Q. What was your Business there?

Cox. I am chief Constable of the lower Half-hundred of Black-Heath; and I had an Information about the 3d or the Beginning of August, that a Breeches-maker had been robbed in the Parish of Deptford, where I live, by three Foot-pads, and that two of them were taken by M'Daniel and others, and sent to Maidstone Gaol; and the third Person, whose Name was Thomas Blee, I was informed kept Company with M'Daniel; and after two or three Days searching; I very fortunately took that third Person, with the Help of a Constable of Greenwich, on Friday the 9th of August, in Newgate-Street, very early in the Morning I took him directly to the Water-side, in order to carry him to Greenwich. When we got him into the Boat, he said he would discover all he could concerning the Robbery on the Breeches-maker. I bid him not do it then, because of the Watermen in the Boat, till we came to a Magistrate. We took him before a Justice of Peace; there he made an Information: This is it. (Produced one.)

Q. Do you know whose Writing it is?

Cox. The Name is Thomas Blee's Writing, I saw him write it; the other is Justice Bell's Writing.

Q. Was it read over to him before he signed it?

Cox. He read it over, and I myself read it over to him before he signed it.

Q. When was it taken?

Cox. It was taken on the 9th of August, but not sworn to till the 13th; it was read over to him before the Justice; and the Justice and Blee signed it in my Presence.

It is read to this Purport:

Kent, } The Information of Thomas Blee, of the to wit. } Parish of St. Andrew, Holborn, Breeches- maker, taken upon Oath, &c.

“ This Informant saith, that about four Weeks
“ or upwards ago, Stephen M'Daniel and John “ Berry desired him to look out, and they gave “ him Money to that Intent, to get into Com“ pany with two Lads, or Men, which he should “ afterwards betray, by getting them into a “ Robbery, and they share the Reward given “ upon their Conviction; and in order thereto,
“ they did go frequently with the Informant into
“ the adjacent Fields, but could not meet with “ any. And this Deponent saith, that he has “ met Stephen M'Daniel, John Berry, James “ Salmon, Breeches-maker, and James Egan, of “ Drury-Lane, Cordwainer, in order to concert
“ and put this their said Scheme into Execution;
“ and that he the said Deponent met with John “ Ellis and Peter Kelly (now Prisoners in the “ County Gaol at Maidstone) in the Fleet-Market,
“ and as he knew them to be Persons of bad
“ Life and Conversation, introduced himself into “ their Company; after treating them, he asked “ them to go with him to Deptford to steal some “ Linen, which they agreed to do on the Thursday “ following; but after that put them off till the “ Monday following, by the Direction of the “ said M'Daniel, Berry, Salmon, and Egan, who “ had all at different Times seen the said Ellis
“ and Kelly, and approved of them for that “ Purpose; and judged it most fit to have the “ Robbery committed on the Monday Morning, “ lest they should be detained near London on the “ Sunday, and some Circumstances might render “ their Schemes abortive; and that they met at “ the Bell in Surry as they went.

“ And this Deponent saith, that it had been “ concerted between them, that the intended
“ Robbery should be between New-cross Turn“ pike and Deptford, to intitle them to the “ Reward offered by the said Parish: That he “ took the said Ellis and Kelly to a Public House, “ known by the Sign of the Ship, where they “ had promised to come to him: And after “ staying there some Time, he left Ellis and “ Kelly at the Ship, and went out to look for “ Berry and Salmon; he found Berry, who coun“ selled this Deponent to return to Ellis and “ Kelly, and said, that Salmon should follow him
“ immediately; that he returned, and Salmon did “ come into the House at the Sign of the Ship,
“ and stayed there near an Hour. During which “ Time, he, this Deponent, treated them with “ Bread, Cheese, Beer and Gin; and Salmon
“ going away in the Evening, they followed,
“ and agreed to rob him in the first Place that “ Salmon stopt at, which was the four-mile Stone,
“ under a Pretence to urine, but it was in order
“ that they might overtake him, that being “ thought the most convenient Place; that they “ came up with the said Salmon there: And “ this Informant, without his, or either of the “ said Ellis and Kelly, producing any Weapon, “ took from under the said Salmon's Arm two “ Pair of Leather Breeches, which had been “ purposely marked, particularly on the Waist“ band or Pocket; and that he took out of “ his Pocket a Clasp-Knife, and a Tobacco-box,
“ which Tobacco-box was, he says, M'Daniel's;
“ but as it was a particular and very remarkable
“ one, he lent it to the said Salmon on this “ Occasion, which had in it two Shillings and “ Six-pence in Silver, and a Silver Pocket-piece, “ which he had submitted himself tamely to be “ robbed of; and after they had left this said
“ Salmon, they went and lodged in Kent-Street,
“ and in the Morning he took them to the “ Spread-Eagle, where he had agreed with the “ said M'Daniel, Berry, Salmon, and Egan, to “ take them; that about Seven in the Morn“ ing, the said Egan came in accordingly; and “ that this Deponent told the said Ellis and Kelly,
“ Egan dealt at Rag-Fair, and he asked the said
“ Egan if he would buy the said Leather
“ Breeches, and he agreed to pay five Shillings
“ for them; that he gave them a Shilling in “ Part; after that he called for a Pipe of To“ bacco, and said that he had lost his Box,
“ with Intent to buy that which they had taken
“ from Salmon; that he bought it of them for “ a Pot of Twopenny; then he went out to “ get the Remainder of the Money for the “ said Breeches, and went to another Ale-house
“ in Kent-Street to M'Daniel, who immediately “ went with Egan, and secured the said Ellis
“ and Kelly with all the Things, except the said

Cox. As soon as this was taken, the same Night I obtained a Warrant against M^cDaniel, another against Berry, another against Salmon, and another against Egan. I was advised to attend the Trial of Ellis and Kelly, and not to discover that I had Blee in Custody till after the Trial; and in order that he did not make his Escape, Thomas Warren went down to assist me. When I came to Maidstone, I informed myself as soon as I could, who was on the Back of the Bill of Indictment of Ellis and Kelly. Their Trial came on the 15th of August at Night: I came into Court very soon after the Trial began; Blee was then in my Custody, but nobody knew it then at Maidstone; he was brought down in the Night, and stopped short of the Town. When I came in, I heard Salmon giving Evidence against Ellis and Kelly; he said, that he went in at the Ship at Deptford, and had a Pint of Beer; that he saw three Men drinking in a Box, and Ellis and Kelly, the then two Prisoners at the Bar, were two of the three Persons, and the other was a carrot-bearded Fellow; that after he had drank his Pint of Beer, in the Dusk of the Evening he went out, in order to go Home to London; and having got as far as the four-mile Stone, opposite to which at a Gate he stopped to make Water, in the mean time the three Men came up, and one of them d—d him, and asked, where he was going? He said, he desired him not to swear, and said he was going to London; upon that, one of them, the carrot-bearded Fellow, snatched the Bundle from under his Arm, and punched him on the Breast. The Judge was pleased to ask him, if it was light enough to see their Faces, and whether he was sure the Prisoners were two of the Men? Yes, he said, it was light enough to see their Faces, and he was sure they were two of the People that robbed him. Then he went on, and said, that Kelly, one of the Prisoners at the Bar, drew a Knife, and said, D—n him, let us search him; and took out of his Pocket an Iron Tobacco-box, in which was a Guinea in Gold, two Shillings and Six-pence in Silver, and a Silver Pocket-piece, and likewise a Clasp-Knife and Fork out of his Pocket: He said, the Bundle contained two Pair of Leather Breeches marked with J. S. and a Figure of 4 under the right Pocket; and that the Handkerchief had an Oilet-hole at each Corner; and all those Goods were produced in Court, and he looked at them, and said, they were the Goods he was robbed of, and that they were his Property.

Q. Are these produced here the same?

Cox. These are the same Goods; they were delivered into my Care, and have been ever since. The Judge was pleased to ask him, how he knew the Pocket-piece? He said, by a particular Mark it had in the middle. His Lordship was pleased to ask to see it, and it was delivered to him by the Constable of Greenwich.

Court. Look at that Pocket-piece and Tobacco-box.

Cox. I am sure they are the very same Things he swore he was robbed of. I asked the Judge what he was pleased to have done with the Things? His Lordship bid me take care of them till the Persons were tried. He was pleased to ask the Prisoners, if they would ask Salmon any Questions? Kelly desired Salmon might be asked, whether he saw him draw a Knife? Salmon said, Yes, you did draw a Knife; but I suppose you will deny all the rest presently. Kelly said, that cannot be, because he had never a Knife. There was one Circumstance which I had forgot; When the Judge had asked him, if it was light enough to see their Faces, he also asked him, if he could know the carrot-bearded Man, and if he had ever seen him before? He said, No, he had not to his Knowledge.

Q. Did you see either of the other Prisoners there?

Cox. I saw M^cDaniel, Salmon, and Egan.

Q. Did they all give Evidence?

Cox. They did.

Q. from Berry. Did you see me in Court?

Cox. I did not; I saw him at Maidstone in the Time of the Assizes. After Salmon had done, Egan was the next Evidence: He said, he dealt in old Cloaths; that on the 30th of July he went into Kent-Street to the Lock-Hospital, to see if they had any old Cloaths to sell; but they not being up, he went into the Black Spread-Eagle to get him a Pint of Beer; that he observed three Men sitting in a Box drinking, and as he was telling the Landlady his Business, one of them, a carrot-bearded Fellow, not taken, (for they did not know he was taken then) asked him, if he would buy two Pair of Breeches? He said, Yes, if they could agree for the Price; and that they did agree for five Shillings; and that he gave Kelly one Shilling Earnest to bind the Bargain, till his Wife should come with more Money, or something of that Sort; and he was asking the Landlady for a Halfpenny-worth of Tobacco; and as he was saying he had lost his Tobacco-box, one of the Men offered to sell him one; (I have forgot which of the Prisoners he said that was.) He said, he bought it of him for a Pot of Twopenny, (indeed they sell no other Liquor at that House:) He said, as he was looking at the Breeches, he knew them to be Salmon's Property, having heard that Salmon was robbed over-night; and after some Time he went out, under Pretence to get the rest of the Money, but meeting with Mr. M^cDaniel, an Acquaintance of his, and knowing him to be an Officer, he told him the Story, and M^cDaniel said, he need not give himself the Trouble to look for an Officer, for he could do as well as a Constable; and so he returned back with him, and took Ellis and Kelly at the Black Spread-Eagle; and upon searching them took out of Kelly's Pocket a Silver Pocket-piece, the same that was then produced, and a Shilling, and a Clasp-Knife. The Judge was pleased to ask him, how he knew the Breeches belonged to Salmon? He said, by a particular Mark they had. He was asked, how he knew the Mark? He said, he had bought Breeches of him for himself, and, I think, his Son, twelve Years, and knew his Mark particularly well. The Judge asked the Prisoners, if they would ask that Witness any Questions? And Kelly desired he might be asked, if the carrot-bearded Man and he did not wink at each other before he offered to sell him the Breeches? And Egan also said, what gave him the greatest Suspicion that the Breeches were stolen was, because he had seen one of the two Prisoners ducked for picking of Pockets in the Artillery-Ground. M'Daniel was the next Witness; he said, he met Egan, an Acquaintance of his, and Egan knowing him to be an Officer, told him the Story; and he went with him and took Ellis and Kelly; and upon searching Kelly, he found upon him a Silver Pocket-piece, the same that is now produced in Court, a Shilling, and a Clasp-Knife, (I suppose the Fork was then lost) He said, that was all he had to say, only there was a Drummer in the Room when he was taken, whom he ordered to assist him, which he did.

Q. Did he say any thing about the Tobacco-box?

Cox. I don't remember that he did. The Moment the People were called into Court to give Evidence, I had fixed my Eye pretty steadily on Mr. Berry, whom I asked to go with me to drink a Glass of Wine, (he was in the other Court) which he did, and I secured him at the Bell; then I went to secure the others according to my Warrants. As soon as they had given their Evidence, the Cryer ordered them to go out. We secured them; upon searching M'Daniel, I found this Knife upon him, (produced in Court a singular long sheath'd Knife of the Dutch Sort;) I was told of it before. As soon as they were secured, I was forced to get Leave to put them in the Mayor's Gaol. I asked Salmon in particular, if he knew one Thomas Blee? He did, as he had done before in Court, say he knew no such Man. I said to him, I am sure you must know him; he as positively denied it again: The next Day when he was carried before the Justices, (I believe there were twenty or thirty of them) Blee was brought Face to Face to him; he looked at him, and then declared he never saw that Man in his Life before. I asked M'Daniel that Night, if he knew Tom Blee? He denied he knew any such Person. I asked Egan the same, and he as positively denied it as the rest, at the Time Berry was in Custody at the Bell. I remember, as we were going along to the Bell to drink a Glass of Wine, he asked me what I thought would be the Fate of Ellis and Kelly, and who was to pay the Expence of the Prosecution, for it was very considerable; upon that I could not help observing, that if they were convicted, there would be sufficient to pay the Expence very handsomely; and if they were acquitted, the Prosecutors, I said, I believed must bear the Expence themselves; he said he knew that, and for that Reason if this Affair was well over he never would be concerned again; by that Time we had got to the Bell the Discourse dropped, and I took him in Custody. When I had secured the others in the Mayor's Gaol, I went and fetched Berry from the Bell; after I had got him into that Gaol, I asked him, if he knew Tom Blee? He said, he did not know any such Person. I put them in separate Rooms that Night, and set a Man in each Room with them. The next Day when Berry had been carried before the Justice and was committed, he and I walked together from the Bell to the Gaol; in going along he said, he hoped the Gentlemen would not admit M'Daniel an Evidence, (for at that Time it was thought he would get to be an Evidence) because he had saved himself once before by the same Means; but, said he, If the Gentlemen will admit me an Evidence, I can do for M'Daniel and another Man, (whom he named) that is not in Custody; whom I know not whether I should name.

Court. Name that Person.

Cox. It is Ralph Mitchel. I asked him, if he would tell me any Particular that he would alledge against him? He said, he could write to me in a few Days; but he never did. As to M'Daniel, the next Morning after he was apprehended, he desired to speak with me in the Room where he was confined; I took Mr. Warren, one of the Constables of Greenwich, with me, and went to him. He said, he had rather speak to me by myself; with that Mr. Warren withdrew: He there cried a good deal, and begged of me to be his Friend, and get him committed for farther Examination; for he said he could make a very great Discovery relating to the Public, and could put five hundred Pounds into my Pocket. I told him I would acquaint the Gentlemen with what he said. Accordingly I did, and used my Endeavour to prevent his being committed for farther Examination; he was afterwards committed upon the Warrant.

Q. from Berry. Did you see me any way busy about the Affair?

Cox. Berry kept M'Daniel, Salmon, and Egan Company; and because it was to be my Place to take them, I kept Company with them all four for two Hours.

Q. from Berry. Was I busy in preferring the Bill?

Cox. I don't know that he was.

Q. from Berry. Was I not sitting in Nisi Prius Court to see the Trials there?

Cox. Yes, he was. When I talked with Berry afterwards, he denied knowing Blee, and pretended to be a Stranger to them all; and said, he came down into that Country about Horses. As for Egan, he denied he knew Blee, or ever saw Berry. Some Time after, I had some Talk with him again; then he declared he never saw Berry in his Life till he saw him in the Gravesend Boat.

Q. Can you recollect whether there were any Inquiry made by the Judge, whether they knew one another upon their Oaths?

Cox. There was nothing said of that Sort, that I remember.

Q. from M'Daniel. Whether or no I did not go to 'Squire Bell, to charge Blee with a Robbery after he was taken?

Cox. I know but little of that; but here will be an Evidence that can give a very good Account of that.

Elizabeth Pragnell sworn.

Elizabeth Pragnell. I live at the Ship in the Broad-Way, Westminster. I remember seeing Blee at our House on the 29th of July in the Evening, in Company with two Lads, each of them dressed in blue-and-white striped Waistcoats very dirty; and I saw those two Lads at our House the next Day, being the 30th; I have heard since one was named Kelly, the other Ellis. On the 29th, in the Evening, they came and sat down at the Door, and called for a Pint of Beer; I believe they were there the best Part of an Hour. The Evidence Blee inquired for somebody, I don't know who it was. He went out, and came in again in a little more than half an Hour. Then the two Lads said to him, Will you pay for this Pint of Beer? He said, Yes, come in, and we will have a Pot of Beer; then they came in, and called for a Pot of Beer; one of them went over the Way to a Shop for some Bread and Cheese; he he brought some in, and they eat it; they stayed, I believe, about an Hour and half, and went away when it was dark. Salmon also came in, with a Bundle under his Arm in a Handkerchief, when they were there; he called for a Pint of Beer, and pitched himself against the Dresser, facing them, and looked at them, then went and sat down in a Box with his Back toward them: He went out a little before them; I remember Blee went out two or three Times.

Q. What Liquor had Blee and the Lads?

E. Pragnell. They had two Pots and a Dram; I cannot say whether it was a Quartern or not: Blee changed Half a Crown, and paid for the Liquor. On the Forenoon the next Day, the two Lads that were with Blee were brought in again by a Constable, and a Drummer, named Cornack, to assist him. The Man that I took to be the Constable, which was M^cDaniel, called for a Pint of Beer; he asked me, whether I knew them two Boys to have been there over-night? I said, Yes. Then he asked me, if I knew that Man at the Door? I said, Yes; he had a Pint of Beer at my House the last Night, (that was Salmon.)

Q. Did he mention Salmon's Name, or say he knew him?

E. Pragnell. No, he did not.

James Cornack sworn.

James Cornack. I am a Drummer; I was quartered at the Black Spread-Eagle in Kent-Street. On the 30th of July last, I came down Stairs between Eight and Nine in the Morning; I observed three Men sitting together in a Box; one of them had a carroty Beard, which was Blee; they had had some Victuals, and there was some Drink before them.

Court. Look about, and see if you see Blee here.

Cornack. There he stands, (pointing to him;) his Beard is now much about the Length it was then, (it might be six Weeks Growth,) the other two were the two Prisoners that were cast at Maidstone. Blee said, I think I will go out, and get shaved; he went out. In about eight or ten Minutes after that, in came M^cDaniel, with a darkish-coloured Coat on; he laid hold of Kelly, and said, Come out, you Blackguard Dog. I said, What makes you abuse the Lad in this Manner? He said, D—n him, I have got a Warrant against him, I am an Officer; they have robbed a Man just against the four-mile Stone near Deptford; I desire you would aid and assist me. I said, If that is the Case, I will. He took a Piece of Rope out of his Pocket, and tied them together. Now, said he, I will take care of them; do you step down to the Elephant and Castle, you will see two Men, one in a light Surtout Coat, and his own curled Hair; I will pay you for your Trouble. I went there; there sat Berry the Prisoner, and Salmon was coming in from making water. I said to Salmon, I believe you are the Gentleman that I want; there is a Gentleman at my Quarters that wants to speak with you: Berry said, Go along with him. Salmon went with me; coming along the Street, I said, What is the Matter? What has happened? Said he, I happened to be at Deptford-Yard last Night, and had taken some Money, and had some Breeches with me; there were three Chaps stooped me, and robbed me of a Guinea in Gold, Half a Crown in Silver, a Tobacco-box, and two Pair of Leather

VOL. X.

Breeches tied up in a Handkerchief; and if the Breeches are mine, they are marked with J. S. and a Figure of 4 on the right Pocket; and the Handkerchief has an Oilet-hole at each Corner. We went in; there stood the Bundle on the Table, and Egan sitting in a Box opposite the Lads. M^cDaniel asked Egan, what he had in that Handkerchief? He answered, it was no Business of his, for the Handkerchief and the Things in it were his; for he had bought them of the Lads. I made him open the Handkerchief, we found it marked at each Corner as Salmon had said, and the Breeches J. S. 4: M^cDaniel searched Kelly, and I saw him take a Clasp-Knife out of his Pocket, a Shilling, and a Silver Pocket-piece; he gave him the Shilling back again, and said the Pocket-piece was marked in the middle, and shewed it me, and desired me not to be mealy-mouthed when I came before the Justice; this he said once or twice. They tied the Things all up in a Handkerchief, and we set out with them to a Justice of the Peace at Greenwich.

Q. Did you see ever a Tobacco-box?

Cornack. No, I did not.

Court. Look at this Pocket-piece.

Cornack. I think this is the same; it has much the same Mark; it is hard for me to swear it; but I believe it is the same. Going along, M^cDaniel said to the Lads, You have made a good Hand of it, if you have spent the Guinea already; the Lads said, they never took a Guinea from him. M^cDaniel said to me, One of them has got Money in his Stocking, but let them keep it, poor Things, they'll want it; he wanted them sadly to confess the Robbery, and told them, if they would not, they would certainly be hanged.

Q. What were his Words, as near as you can recollect?

Cornack. He said, You Dogs, I would have you confess when you come before the Justice; it will be the better for you; and tell me where the other Fellow is gone to: They said, they could not tell any thing about it, and would give him no Answer; they said to him they wanted to go to some Bridewell, which I do not know. He said to them, if they would confess, he would do all in his Power for them, and he would untie them when they came into Deptford, and they should go by Water. We came to the Five Bells at the End of Deptford Road, there M^cDaniel called for a Pint of Beer; the People brought the Beer out. M^cDaniel asked the Lads, if that was the House they had been drinking at the Night before? They said, No, but they had been drinking at the Sign of the Ship; we drank the Beer, and then set out again: Egan and Salmon followed at a Distance. When we came to Deptford, M^cDaniel took the Lads in, and desired Egan and Salmon to stay at the Door; he called for a Pint of Beer.

Q. How came Egan to follow you?

Cornack. I don't know; he came from my Quarters.

Q. Did M^cDaniel charge him to assist?

Cornack. Not a Word as I heard. When he and Salmon were at the Door, M^cDaniel asked the Landlady if she saw them Lads there the Night before? She said, Yes, they were there the Night before, and had some Bread and Cheese; then he said to her, Did you see that Man that is now at the Door? (meaning Salmon.) She said,

Yes, he was here at the same Time, and they went out about ten or twelve Minutes Distance one of another. Said M^cDaniel to me, Take Notice of what this Landlady says, and don't be mealy-mouthed when you come before the Justice. Then we set out and went to Greenwich; and in the Clerk's Office they wanted M^cDaniel to be bound over to prosecute; M^cDaniel said he could not, for he had a Bit of an Estate left him in the Country, and he could not be there at the Time of the Assizes; then the Justice's Clerk was pleased to bind me over. We stayed at Greenwich and had some Beer, and were pretty merry till almost Nine at Night; coming Home all together, they let me and Egan go before. Egan swore by the Great G—d and the Sweet Jesus, he would not appear against them at the Assizes. Said I, You are bound over as well as I, and I cannot see you can be off from going down. He said, O! by J—s it is only changing my Parish; it has cost me three Shillings To-day, and the Breeches may go to the D—l, for I will never appear against them. We parted about Ten that Night; I went to my Quarters; M^cDaniel told me to come to his House in Union-Court. I went in about a Week after, but could not hear of such a Person; I went to the Union-Arms, and found the Landlord knew something of him, and I found he lived in Scroop's-Court; I went and asked there for him, but never could find him at Home, although I went there three or four Times; his Woman always told me he was gone into the Country. I saw him once, but that was by mere Chance; he was then dodging me, or somebody else, at the End of Parliament-Street.

Q. Was you at the Assizes at Maidstone?

Cornack. I was; when I came there, I could not find any of them; they kept out of my Sight, I imagined, for fear I should come in for Part of the Reward. At last I happened to meet Egan in the Street: I said, What, have you done the Thing? (I meant, found the Bill :) He said, No, we shall not do it this Day or two; thinks I, I'll watch you: I did, and by-and-by came Salmon and M^cDaniel, and, I think, Egan, and one Sergant, a Constable; they and I went into the Clerk's Office to get the Bill of Indictment drawn, Berry did not go in, I followed them. When they came in, the Clerk said, Are you all here? Yes, said M^cDaniel, we are all here. Said the Clerk, There are six of you. There are but five of us, said M^cDaniel. Said the Clerk, Is there not a Drummer? Oh! said M^cDaniel, I had forgot him. After we had prepared the Bill of Indictment, I went to the Cock at Maidstone, there sat Berry; I did not recollect him at that Time; said he, How do you do, Drummer? I said, You have the Advantage of me, I cannot say I know you. No, said he, don't you know that Morning when you went to the Elephant and Castle in Kent-Street for Salmon? Then I said, I believe you are the Gentleman that sat there in the Box. Yes, said he, I am: Then he asked me, what I thought of those Lads, will they be convicted? I said, it appears very plain against them. Then he said, If they are not, I must either beg my Bread, or go upon the Highway myself.

Q. from Berry. Were there any Company by at this Time?

Cornack. No, there were not; Berry was sitting by himself; he generally was by himself, except he was with his Companions.

Q. Are you certain he said these Words to you at that Time?

Cornack. I am positive of it he did.

Mary Huffy sworn.

Mary Huffy. I live at the Elephant and Castle in Kent-Street, I am Servant there; my Mistress's Name is Jane Smith. There came three Men into our House, and after that came in M^cDaniel; they had a Rasber of Bacon for Breakfast. I don't know the others Faces.

Q. When was this?

M. Huffy. It was in the last Summer-time.

Thomas Sergant sworn.

Thomas Sergant. (He is shewn the Tobacco-box.) I have seen such a one; I made a Remark that the Unicorn's Horn was broke off the Box, when M^cDaniel shewed it me above a Year ago; this I see is broke as that was. His Box has been sent to my House many a Time, to be filled with Tobacco; it is near a Year ago since I saw it; this is like it, but I cannot tell this is it.

Q. How came M^cDaniel to shew it you?

Sergant. He shewed it me as a Piece of Curiosity; saying, Here is an old Thing, a curious Thing. I said, It is not perfect now, here wants the Horn to the Unicorn.

Henry Sergant sworn.

Henry Sergant. I know all the Prisoners very well; I was at the taking them all at Maidstone Assizes last.

Court. Give an Account what you know of them.

Sergant. M^cDaniel said I was a young Constable, and I should have my Share of the Reward; he should take the Money, and he would see me paid.

Q. What Reward did he mean?

Sergant. The Subscription-Money of our Parish, for the two Lads that were tried, John Ellis and Peter Kelly; I carried them down.

Q. Did you produce these Goods there?

Sergant. I did.

Q. Where had you them?

Sergant. I had them of Justice Bell, who sent for me, I being a Constable.

Q. What passed when he said, You are a young Constable?

Sergant. The Prisoner Berry said, We shall have a good Supper if the Prisoners are convicted; and if they were not, he thought he must beg his Way home. As I was going along the Road with Ellis and Kelly to Maidstone, they told me there was one Tom Blee concerned with them in the Robbery; and also where he lived, and what Sort of Cloaths he wore. I took it down in Writing; the Justice desired me to go and take him; I said, I would give Directions to a Thief-catcher, which I did to Ralph Mitchel; but he refused to act in it.

Q. Was you upon the Trial?

Sergant. I was.

Q. Was Salmon a Witness?

Sergant. He was; he swore he lost these Things. Also Egan and M^cDaniel were both examined upon it.

Q. from

Q. from Berry. Did you see me concern myself at all in the Affair, or was I upon the Back of the Bill?

Sergant. No, he was not on the Back of the Bill; he had no Business there, if he could have trusted his Friends with the Money. I heard M^r Daniel and him both say they would share the Reward.

Q. from Berry. Did not you see me sitting at the Cock all the while?

Sergant. No, he walked about with us.

Q. to Blee. You say Berry gave you a Crown, what Money was it?

Blee. He gave me a Half-Crown and two Shillings and Six-pence that Day I went with the Lads to Deptford.

Berry's Defence.

On the 25th of July I was out of Town all Day, and returned the Sunday following; and stayed at Home all Day the Sunday Blee tells you he was with me, and I gave him a Crown. If your Lordship will indulge me to put it off till next Sessions, then I can bring Witnesses to prove he falsely accuses me. I went out on the 5th of August to Bromley Fair; I saw Blee with a Saddle on his Back; he is a pilfering Sort of a Fellow. I went and took him by the Collar, and said, I would chastise him; he said, Mr. Berry, I can tell you a great deal if you will not hurt me. I said, If you can tell me a great deal, tell me where my Goods are. I heard on the 12th of August that he was taken up at Greenwich; I went there, and took M^r Daniel over there, to see if he was taken, on purpose to have charged him with my Goods. My Son is gone, he has pushed him away, and I have never seen him since, and they would never give me any Answer that they had got him. I asked Mr. Sergant, if he had got him? He would not tell me. They never took him to give any Evidence before the Justice. People may go a thieving for ever, if they may get off in this Fashion.

M^r Daniel's Defence.

I was called out about the 30th of July to go over to the King's-Bench; I met this Man Egan, he desired me to go and take a couple of Thieves in Kent-Street; I said, What have they done? He said, I believe they have broke open some House, and stole these Things. I went with him to the Elephant and Castle in Kent-Street, and stayed there some Time, till we sent for Mr. Salmon; and when he came, Egan came with him to me. I said, Is the Man come? He said, Yes; then I went with Egan to the Black Spread-Eagle, there were these two Men sitting; one of them said, I believe I have done now. I turned him about, and searched him, and took these Breeches from under their A—s, and also from one I took this Pocket-piece. After this I said to Salmon, The only Way to save Expence is to examine them before Colonel Bell. In carrying of them down, the least of the two said, I wish I could be admitted an Evidence, I would be glad; I said, You Dog, where is the rest of you, where is the other Fellow, what is his Name? This Lord Blee lived along with me six or seven Months, I never knew his Name; when he told me my Lord, I guessed directly; one of them wanted to be admitted an Evidence before Justice Bell, and he would not admit either of them. After that I heard my Lord was taken, I goes down to Greenwich, and went to Mitchel at Deptford; and said, Here, Cox has taken the other Fellow, Ralph, will you come up, and see if he has got him? He was afraid of being taken upon some Warrants, and would not go; so I went to the Colonel myself, the Clerk was there, and he was very ill; he said to me, Mr. M^r Daniel, he is not taken, if he was he would be brought to me. After that I stopped a Man that had murdered another at Coventry; I brought him to Hicks's-Hall, the Justices committed him to New-Prison. The Gentlemen told me, I must go down to Coventry along with him. I went down to Mardstone; there I said I could say nothing to the Robbery: The Drummer could say as much as I could as to the Pocket-piece and Tobacco-box. As God Almighty is in Heaven, I know no more of them than your Lordship there; I have taken a great many Thieves, and have ventured my Life, and been shot at by them. I never had my Name brought in Question; I have been offered Money to let Prisoners go, but I never would do it: I could have had three-score Pounds to have done it.

Salmon's Defence.

That Fellow that swore I had been at the Bell in Company with him has sworn false; I never was in Company with him in the whole Course of my Life, nor I have not been in that Alehouse these five Years.

Egan's Defence.

Please to ask where the Bell is? I do not know where it is; I have no Knowledge of that Man in the World, (locking towards Blee.)

Q. to Berry. Have you any Evidences to call to your Character?

Berry. Call Henry Warrington. (He was called, but did not appear.)

Berry. I lived seventeen Years in the Yard where this Man lives, that is, James Price; will you please to call him?

James Price again. I have known Berry, I believe, five Years.

Court. He calls upon you for a Character; what Character can you give him?

Price. A very bad one, my Lord.

Berry. Please to ask him, what he can say as a Stain upon my Character?

Price. It will hurt you if you insist upon it.

Q. to M^r Daniel. Will you call any Witnesses?

M^r Daniel. There is a Man that has known me these nine or ten Years, and that I have the best of Characters; that is Mr. Holewright.

Court. Do you chuse he should be examined to your Character?

M^r Daniel. Yes.

G. Holewright again. I believe I have known M^r Daniel eight or nine Years, or longer; he never did me any Injury in his Life-time; but as for the rest of it, I believe he is bad enough.

Q. to Salmon. Have you any Witnesses to call?

Salmon. No, my Lord; I have not had Time to fend for any.

Q. to Egan. Have you any Witnesses to call?

Egan. No, my Lord; none of my Acquaintance know that I am in Trouble.

The Jury found them all four guilty of all the Facts charged against them in the Indictment; but whether the Facts charged were within the Statutes of the 4th and 5th of Philip and Mary, and the 3d and 4th of William and Mary, they knew not*; and therefore prayed the Assistance of the Court. Whereupon the following Special Verdict was found:

“ We find the Record of the Conviction of Peter Kelly and John Ellis prout.

“ We find, that before the committing the said Robbery, the Defendants, M'Daniel, Berry, Egan, (alias Gabagan) and Salmon, and Thomas Blee, did maliciously and feloniously, and with Intention to procure to themselves the Rewards allowed by the Statute for the apprehending of Robbers on the Highway, and some further Rewards offered by the Inhabitants of the Parish of Greenwich, and other adjoining Parishes, all meet at the Bell Inn in Holborn, in London; and that they all agreed Blee should procure two Persons to commit a Robbery on the Highway upon the Defendant James Salmon, in the Parish of St. Paul Deptford in Kent, which is an adjoining Parish to the said Parish of Greenwich; and for that Purpose did maliciously and feloniously contrive and agree, that the said Blee should inform such Persons, that the said Blee would assist them to steal some Linen in the said Parish of St. Paul Deptford.

“ That the said Blee, in Pursuance of the said Agreement, and with the Privity of the said Defendants, did engage and procure the said Peter Kelly and John Ellis, in the said Indictment named, to go with him to Deptford to steal Linen, but did not at that Time tell the said Kelly and Ellis, or either of them, of the said intended Robbery on Salmon, nor at any other Time before the said Robbery was committed; and in consequence of such Agreement, and with the Privity of all the said Defendants, the said Ellis and Kelly did go with the said Blee to Deptford.

“ And that the said Blee, Ellis, and Kelly, being at Deptford aforesaid, and the said Salmon being then and there waiting in the King's Highway, in pursuance of the Agreement aforesaid; they, the said Blee, Ellis, and Kelly, did all feloniously assault the said Salmon, and did take from his Person the said Goods mentioned in the Indictment, on which the said Ellis and Kelly were so convicted as aforesaid.

“ And we find, that none of the said Defendants ever had any Conversation with the said Kelly and Ellis, or either of them, before the said Robbery was committed: But we find, that before the said Robbery was committed, the said M'Daniel, Egan, and Berry, saw the said Kelly and Ellis, and told the said Blee that they would do very well for the Purpose of robbing the said Salmon as aforesaid: But “ whether the Defendants, or any of them, are guilty of feloniously and maliciously committing, aiding, abetting, assisting, counselling, hiring or commanding the said Kelly and Ellis, or either of them, to commit the Felony and Robbery above-mentioned, or whether the said Defendants, or any of them, are guilty of feloniously and maliciously moving, procuring, abetting or counselling the said Kelly and Ellis, or either of them, to commit the said Felony and Robbery, in Manner and Form as in the second Count of the said Indictment is charged against them, we know not, and pray the Advice of the Court. And if the Court is of Opinion they are Guilty, we are of Opinion they are Guilty; but if the Court are of Opinion that they are Not Guilty, then we are of Opinion they are Not Guilty.

TRINITY VACATION, 28 Geo. II.

June 19, 1755.

At Serjeant's-Inn Hall in Chancery-Lane, before all the Judges.

The Special Verdict argued †.

The King against M'Daniel, Berry, Egan and Salmon.

C A S E.

PETER Kelly and John Ellis were indicted for a Robbery on the Highway, committed near Deptford in Kent, on James Salmon; on which Indictment they were tried, and were capitally convicted.

The Defendants were indicted as Accessaries before the Fact, to the Robbery committed by Kelly and Ellis.

The Judges at the Old-Bailey directed a Special Verdict to be found on the last-mentioned Indictment.

Which Verdict first finds the Record of the Conviction of Kelly and Ellis prout.

It also finds, “ That the Defendants, M'Daniel, Berry, Egan, and Salmon, together with one Blee, with an Intention to procure to themselves the common Reward given by Act of Parliament, and an additional Reward offered by the Parishes of Greenwich and Deptford, for apprehending Highwaymen, met together at the Bell in Holborn; and there they agreed, that Blee should procure two Persons to rob, and that he should inform them that he would assist them in stealing some Linen in the Parish of Deptford.

It finds also, “ That Blee did procure and engage, with the Privity of the Defendants, the said Kelly and Ellis to steal the said Linen; but that he did not acquaint them of any Intentions to rob Salmon.

* 4 and 5 Phil. and Mar. c. 4. which says, Every Person that shall maliciously command, hire, or counsel any Person or Persons to commit or do any Robbery in or near any Highway in this Realm of England, and be thereof convicted, shall not have the Benefit of Clergy.

3 and 4 Will. and Mar. c. 9. That all and every Person or Persons that shall comfort, aid, abet, assist, counsel, hire or command any Person to rob another, shall be excluded from the Benefit of the Clergy.

† These Notes were communicated by a Gentleman of the Temple.

It finds also, "That the Defendants never had any Conversation with Ellis and Kelly before the Commitment of the Robbery; but that the Defendants saw them, and said they would do: And if, upon this Case, the Judges shall be of Opinion they are so, then the Jury find them so, &c."

Mr. HUME CAMPBELL.

I have the Honour to attend your Lordships on this very solemn Occasion, as Council on the Part of the Crown, against the Defendants, Mr Daniel, Berry, Egan, and Salmon; and as this is a Case which concerns the Lives of four unhappy Subjects, and the public Safety in general, I hope I shall be excused, if I observe a Minuteness somewhat singular before this Assembly.

That I may observe some Degree of Method, I shall consider the Charge against the Defendants under two Heads:

I. Whether all or any of them are Accessaries before the Fact in the Felony for which Ellis and Kelly have been convicted?

II. If they are, whether they are deprived of their Clergy?

The first of these includes three Propositions:

1. That a Robbery was committed, in which Kelly and Ellis were Principals.
2. That the Principals, which is sufficient to draw the Accessaries to Trial, have been convicted.
3. That such Things have been done by the Defendants, as will make them Aiders, Commanders, and Abettors in the Robbery.

The first of these is sufficiently established by the finding the Record of the Conviction: For wherever a Deed operates by way of Estoppel, and the Jury find it prout, your Lordships must consider it as an Estoppel. In the present Case the Jury have found the Record prout; and by that it appears, that a Robbery was committed by them on Salmon, one of the Prisoners. The Verdict finds likewise, that Salmon agreed at the Bell that Blee should procure Persons to rob him. It finds too, that Ellis, Kelly, and Blee did feloniously assault, and in the Highway take from the Person of Salmon, the Goods mentioned in the Indictment. Upon this Point, nothing in the Verdict appears contrary to the Record of Conviction; and you cannot construe the latter Words of the Verdict, so as to destroy the first*. This appears from the Case of Monson v. West, Moore's Reports 431. (N. B. S. C. in Popham 110.) The Case was this: In Assize, the Tenant pleaded no Tenant to the Freehold, and so no Disseizin, nisi les parols entiel volunt, gives the Tenant Title; upon which Verdict there was Judgment for the Demandant, and Error brought and assigned, that the Jury did not find the Demandant seized, and that the Tenant disseized him, as the Custom is, as appears from the Book of Entries, which says, that the Assize shall find Seizin and Disseizin; also that the Verdict was imperfect, by reason of the Nisi, &c. After divers Arguments, the Judgment was affirmed; for finding the Disseizin implies Seizin also; and the Nisi

the Court looked upon as nugatory, because the Verdict is complete before upon the Point on which the Jury were charged, viz. the Seizin and Disseizin. Vaughan 77. Rowe v. Huntington.

If a Jury, by their Verdict, shall take upon them to collect the Contents of a Deed, and yet by the same Verdict find that Deed in hæc Verba, the Court is not to regard the Collection they have made of the Substance of the Deed; but the Deed itself †.

2 Bulstrode 56. James v. Harris. Action for Words. The Jury found, that the Defendant spoke these Words of the Plaintiff, viz. Thou art a Thief, and I will prove thee so; but that they were spoke in the Absence of the Plaintiff. Sed per tot Cur. The latter Part of the Verdict shall not stand, for the Issue is the Words, and that they have found. Brooke Tit. Verdict, pl. 96. abridged from 11 H. 6. 42. N. H. brought a Writ of Error against A, and assigned for Error, that the Wife of the said A, who had obtained a Judgment against him upon a Writ of Maintenance, died such a Day at C, pending the Writ and before the Judgment. The Defendant pleaded, that his Wife is still alive at W, &c. The Inquest was taken at Bar, and the Wife appeared in Evidence, declaring herself to be the same Woman who was said to be dead, and was known by others in the Court. The Jury found, that the Wife was dead, as the Plaintiff had assigned for Error: And all the Court were astonished at this Verdict, which found the Woman dead, when she appeared at the Bar alive; and the Record of the Writ of Maintenance was viewed; and by that it appeared, that at the Day of Nisi Prius in the said Writ of Maintenance, the Wife appeared in her proper Person, which Day was four Days after the Day the Verdict finds she died. Cheine.

It is proved by this Record, that the Wife was alive four Days after the Verdict says she was dead: It seemed to him, that this Verdict is nothing to the Purpose, but is a Jeofail to try a Thing which is contrary to the Record.

Afterwards Cheine assembled all the Judges; and their Opinion was, that the Verdict was nothing to the Purpose, and is a Jeofail: For a Matter of Record before the Justices shall not be put in Averment, but shall be tried by the Record itself; and though the Verdict has found contrary to that which is proved by the Record, it is nothing to the Purpose; for the Verdict cannot defeat the Record, nor is it of so great Force as the Record: And if the Court had been apprized of the Record before Inquest taken, the Inquest ought not to have been taken, because of the Record; and she was proved to be alive four Days after she was alledged to be dead: But if the Record had not proved her alive, then the Plaintiff would have been intitled to Judgment.

But in the present Case, no Contradiction is here found, not even by Implication: For, though it may be said, that here was no Robbery, because Salmon was consenting, yet in all Robberies there is some Degree of Assent, and that is to avoid the Injury which is threatened the Person robbed.

* When an Act inflicts a Penalty for a second Offence, the Indictment for the second Offence must recite the Record of the first Conviction; and upon the Evidence, the Record of the first Conviction must be proved: But the Matter of the first Conviction shall never be re-examined, but must stand for granted. 1 H. H. 686. Burn's Justice, in Introduction, p. 27.

† For that Collection derives its Authority from the Deed; and therefore must of itself fail and come to nothing, when it is opposite to the Deed of which it is a Collection. Gilbert's Law of Evidence, p. 98.

If a Man is feloniously assaulted, and made to swear to bring Money to such a Place, and he does it; this is determined to be a Robbery, though done with the Assent of the Person robbed. And your Lordships cannot, without shaking the Principles of Law, say there is no Robbery committed, when it is found by the Jury that there is.

I apprehend, my Lords, it is a Rule in Law, that Accessaries shall not be tried till the Guilt of the Principals is established, and the Reason is, to avoid contradictory Verdicts upon the same Fact. [Vide Brooke Coron. 117. 40 Aff. p. 8. Fitz. Coron. 33.] There would be a Subversion of all Law, if Accessaries, who cannot be tried till the Guilt of the Principals is established, should upon their Trial be allowed to controvert whether there has been a Robbery or no. I hope, therefore, it is plain that there was a Robbery committed upon Salmon; for as to the putting in Fear, the Common Law did not require it, only required a taking by Violence. It is found, that Salmon was assaulted, and he might be put in Fear.

I come now, my Lords, to the second Part of the first general Question, viz. That the Principals have been convicted. This is found by the Verdict; it is also found, that Blee was one of the Robbers. It may be said, perhaps, that the Defendants were only Accessaries to Blee, and he to Kelly and Ellis; whereas they are indicted for being Accessaries to Kelly and Ellis. But I apprehend that by the Law, a Man may be Accessary to one or more. 'Tis found, that the Agreement was, that Kelly and Ellis should commit the Fact, and Blee procure them: Therefore it does not follow, that the Defendants were Accessaries to Blee. I admit, that, if the Defendants had been indicted as Accessaries to Blee, not to Kelly and Ellis, there might have been some Doubt, but now there can be none: For when the Principals are convicted, the Defendants cannot say, We were Accessaries to Three; but the Question is, Were you not Accessaries to Two?

'Tis found, that the original Fact was committed by Kelly and Ellis; and, as to the Pretence of stealing Linen, that was the Artifice by which these poor Lads were to be entrapped; it was not the Fact intended to be committed, nor was it the Fact which was committed: For the Agreement at the Bell was, that Blee should procure two Persons to rob Salmon, and that he should inform them, he would assist them in stealing some Linen in the Parish of Deptford.

* This Joshua Cornwell was Footman to Nicholas Fenwick, Esq; and in October Sessions, in Sir Richard Brocas's Mayoralty, 1730, "He, and Thomas Rivers, of St. Botolph Aldgate, were indicted at the Old-Bailey, for burglariously breaking the House of the said Nicholas Fenwick, and stealing divers Pieces of Plate, to the Value of 85*l.* and Holland Shirts to the Value of 20*l.* and other Goods, on the 8th of September. The Loss of the Goods was proved by Mr. Fenwick and others, though no breaking open the House appeared; but he found Part of his Plate by the Direction of John Girst, an Accomplice, who swore, That after divers Consultations with Cornwell, one Sunday Evening, about robbing Mr. Fenwick's House, it was agreed, that he and Rivers should do it on the Tuesday following. Accordingly, Girst and Rivers came to Mr. Fenwick's House about Two o'Clock in the Morning, and found Cornwell standing in his Shirt, with the Door open, peeping out for them; that they went in, and Cornwell opened the Door of the Beaufet, and there was a Candle burning in a Silver Candlestick, and Cornwell took out the Plate, and set it on the Carpet on a Table, and then went and fetched the Napkins and Linen out of a Bureau, and the Lady's laced Head, the Tea-Equipage, and two Silver Casters; Rivers bundled them up. He and Rivers carried all to Rivers's Lodgings, and Rivers afterwards pawned them to one Grub, who swore he took in fifty-six Ounces of the Plate of Rivers." The Fact being plainly proved, the Jury found Rivers Guilty, Death: But as to Cornwell, it being a new Point, the Court directed the Jury to find a Special Verdict.

In December Sessions following, the Court ordered Joshua Cornwell to the Bar, and told him, That the opening the Door of his Master's House in the Night-time, and letting in two Persons to rob him (on which the Jury brought in a Special Verdict last Sessions) was referred to the Twelve Judges, who adjudged his Case to be Burglary, and he received Sentence of Death.

Rivers was executed at Tyburn, Monday, Nov. 16, 1730; and Joshua Cornwell was hanged at Tyburn, Wednesday, Dec. 23 following. He owned, "That by the Persuasion of Rivers and Girst, while in Mr. Fenwick's Service, he conspired with them to rob his Master; which accordingly he did, by opening the Back-door, and letting them in, and then suffering them to take away the Goods mentioned in the Indictment, with many others: But said, he did not hand out the Goods, as Girst swore, but only shewed them where they were; and then Rivers bundled them up, and they carried them off to his Lodgings."

There are many Cases in Keyling where these Pretences have been rejected, particularly p. 44. where some Rogues influenced a Constable to break open the Door of a House, and thereupon they entered and rifled it; this was adjudged Burglary; and it was re-determined in 1730, in the Case of the King and Cornwell.*

I come now to the third and last Part of the first general Question: Whether all the Defendants, or any of them, have committed such Things as will make them Aiders, Commanders, and Abettors of the Robbery?

Under this Head I intended to inquire,

1. Into the Nature of Accessaries before the Fact: And,

2. Whether there is any material Difference in the Case of Salmon from any of the rest.

But as I have already taken up so much of your Lordships Time, I shall leave that which relates to Salmon, to the learned Gentleman who is to speak next.

As to the first, the Nature of Accessaries:

By the Common Law, the Person alone who committed the Fact was deemed the Principal, and those who procured it to be done qualicumque Modo, who contrived it, plotted it, counselled, and assisted, were Accessaries before the Fact; and the Trial was posterior in respect of the Commission, because the Existence of the Crime was to be first examined into; for before then it could not be known, whether they had been guilty of a Crime or no. But when the Fact was established, they proceeded inverso Ordine, and he that first counselled was last tried, as appears from Bracton, B. 3. cap. 19. p. 138. sect. 4, 5. and p. 139. sect. 10, 11. where he makes use of the Words,

Fortia, } Which three Sorts include all Sorts
Præceptum, } of Persons who contribute to, or Auxilium, } in any wise assist to the Commission of the Fact.

In sect. 5. he has the particular Form of an Appeal. Staunford, in his Pleas of the Crown, B. 1. c. 45. p. 40, 41. which is an Abridgement of Bracton, says, that in an Appeal of Felony all the Principals and Accessaries must be joined, and there he describes Accessaries thus: "Qui venit, vel tenuit, vel vinxit eum, vel fuit in Auxilio vel Consilio qualicumque modo, vel Præcepto vel Mandato, quo magis ipse C. interfectus fuit." [This is verbatim from Bracton.]

These Words are general, but prove what the Law at that Time was; he was Accessary, of whom it might be said, qui fuit in Consilio; and he alone was not an Accessary, whom the Jury found to be nullo modo in Consilio, which is only the Negative. So Fleta, B. 1. c. 23. p. 33, 34. These Days had not arrived at that critical Skill; they thought it was the Participation of Guilt which constituted the Crime.

The Story of * Tarquin in Livy is a similar Case; and no one can doubt, but that he was Accessary before the Fact, though he spoke not, though he saw not his Son Sextus. There is a like Story of Thrasibulus and Periander of Corinth, related in Herodotus and Aristotle.

The Mirror, cap. 1. sect. 13. page 42. is more particular, and recites nine Kinds of Accessaries:

1. Those who command.
2. Those who conceal.
3. Those who allow or consent.
4. Those who ———
5. Those who aid.
6. Those who are Partners in the Gain.
7. Those who knew it, and did not disturb it by Defence or Excuse.
8. Those who received them knowingly.
9. Those who are in the Force.

Thus Coke's Instit. 182. in the Comment on the Statute of Westminster, c. 14. Accessaries before the Fact are divided into three Branches, Commandment, Force, and Aid.

Præceptum. Under this are understood all those that incite, procure, set on, or stir up any other to do the Fact, and are not present when the Fact is done.

Fortia is a Word of Art, and properly signifies the furnishing a Weapon of Force to do the Fact, by Force of which the Fact is committed, and he that furnisheth is not present when the Fact is done; and cites Brañon, B. 3. page 139. "Ubi Factum nullum, ibi Fortia nulla, nec Præceptum nocere debet;" and again, "Vulnus, Fortia, et Præceptum generant unicum Factum; non esset Vulnus forte, si non adfuisset Fortia; nec Vulnus, nec Fortia, nisi Præceptum præcessisset." And sometimes, in a large Sense, for any that is Accessary before the Fact.

Auxilium. Under this Word are to be comprehended all Persons counselling, abetting, plotting, assenting, consenting, and encouraging to do the Fact, and are not present when the Act is done; for, if present, they are Principals. Before the Time of Henry the Fourth, there was no Distinction between present and not, but only he who struck the Stroke was Principal; the others, who were present, were Accessaries, Plowden 98 and 100. Fitz. Coron. 33. Brooke Coron. 118. The Word Procure is often used by Brooke Coron. 19, 104, 188. Fitz. Coron. 33.

The View of the Common Law was to prevent, if not prevent to punish, all those who should stir up any one to commit a Felony: And the Law respects the Intention.

The Law of England is not a Cobweb, which Offenders may slip through by being greater Villains than are allowed of by the Laws of other Nations; and I hope this kind of calm and deliberate Villainy shall not escape by a Criticism.

But it may be said, that the Verdict has not found any Communication by express Words. But this will make no Difference, whether they did it by Blec, or by Letter, or by any Sign; for, by whatever Method it is done, they did it: And, though there were no Words, they shall be Accessaries.

Suppose a Person should plot High Treason, and employ another to kill the King: Here he is not Principal; but is he not Accessary? Certainly he is. It would be very singular, after all the Encomiums that have been given to the Common Law of England, if this should not be the Law of the Land, when it is the Law of all the Nations in the World. Julius Clarus, in his Præctica Criminalis, B. 5. Q. 89. puts this Case: If a Messenger is employed by A, to convey a Letter to B, which Letter advises B to commit a Felony, and the Felony is committed, they are all three to be punished with the same Punishment. But there is, my Lords, a Case of the highest Authority, that is, that of Abab and Naboth, 1 Kings, c. 24. (and very artfully recited it before he mentioned the Authority.) Can any one say, that Abab was not an Accessary, though he spoke not at all? I need not cite Cases from Histories of other Nations, when Sir Thomas Overbury's Case, 1 State Trials, page 331. is so applicable to the present Case. There was only one Principal convicted, though there were six Accessaries; and five convicted, though the Poison passed through three or four Hands; and Franklin was executed.

Where then is the Reason of the Law, that says, this Consent must be in express Words? The Consent is the Crime, and that the Jury have found; and that that is sufficient, appears from Plowden 473, 4. Saunders and Archer's Case. Where Archer counselled Saunders, who wanted to get rid of his Wife, to give her Poison in a roasted Apple, which he accordingly did; and the Wife was going to give some of it to their Child, whom Saunders was very fond of: Whereupon he endeavoured to dissuade her from giving it, saying, It is not good for Children; but the Wife answered, It is better for it than for me, and gave the Child some: But the Wife lived, and the Child died. Here Saunders was guilty of Murder, though he intended none to the Child; because his Intention was to murder. But as to Archer, the Question was, whether he was Accessary? And though the Judges in this Case were of Opinion that he was not, yet they thought it more proper that he should be delivered by a Pardon than otherwise, and accordingly they kept him in Prison from one Sessions to another, till he procured a Pardon: And Plowden, the Reporter, says, it was his Opinion, that whoever counsels or commands an evil Thing, should be judged accessary to all which follows from that evil Action, but not from any distinct Thing. If I command one to strike or rob another, and he kills him; I am Accessary to the Murder, because it is done in Consequence of my Command. The same; if I command one to burn a particular House, and he does it pursuant to my Command; but if he burns another House, this is not in Consequence of my Command.

* The Gabii, who had met with some Success against the Romans, unanimously chose Sextus Tarquinius for their Governor: Itaque postquam satis virium collectum ad omnes conatus videbat, (sc. Sextus Tarquinius) tum è suis unum seiscitarum Romam ad patrem mittit, quidnam se facere vellet? quandoquidem ut omnia unus Gabii possit ei Dii dedissent. Huic nuncio, quia credo dubiæ fidei videbatur, nihil voce responsum est. Rex, velut deliberabundus, in hortum ædium transit, sequente nuncio filii, ubi inambulans tacitus, summa papaverum capita dicitur baculo decussisse. Interrogando expectandoque responsum nuncius fessus, ut re imperfecta, redit Gabios: quæ dixerit ipse, quæque viderit, refert; seu ira, seu odio, seu superbia insita ingenio, nullam eum vocem emisisse. Sexto ubi, quid vellet parens, quidve præciperet tantis ambagibus, patuit; primores civitatis, criminando alios apud populum, alios sua ipsos invidia opportunos interemit; multi palam; quidam, in quibus minus speciosa criminatio erat futura, clam interfecti. Liv. lib. 1. cap. 54.

I come now, my Lords, to the second general Question; which is, Whether the Defendants are deprived of their Clergy? And if the first Proposition is established, I apprehend they are. This Question depends on the Construction of the Acts of the 4th and 5th of Philip and Mary, cap. 4. and the 3d and 4th of William and Mary, cap. 9.

The 4th and 5th of Philip and Mary is for the due Punishment of such as command, counsel, or hire any Person to commit any Felony, and deprives them of their Clergy.

The 3d and 4th of William and Mary deprives those of Clergy, who shall comfort, aid, abet, assist, counsel, hire, or command any Person to commit Felony.

These Acts constitute no new Offence; they follow the Common Law, and are suppletory, and speak of an Offence known at Common Law; and I submit it, that if your Lordships determine these Men to be Accessaries before the Fact, unless the King interposes his Mercy, they must be executed. If a Statute speaks of Matters known at Common Law, it must, as to that Matter, be construed and extended according to the Common Law. Hobart 98. Coke Lit. 381. 6 Modern 143.

This is no new Case; for in a similar Case it is determined, that if a Statute is made suppletory to the Common Law, and taking away the Clergy, it must be construed liberally, Jenkins 2. Cent. 97. The Statutes 23 H. 8. and 27 Edw. 3. which take away Clergy, are pro bono publico; therefore to be taken by Equity.

But it may be said, that the Words excite, procure, &c. are not in the Acts of Philip and Mary, and William and Mary: But this will make no Difference; for, 1 Anderson 194. the Words of the Indictment were excitavit, movit, et procuravit: Resolved, that the Indictment was good, though the Word counsel was out; for it is not possible to excite, move, and procure, without counselling.

Mr. MADAN, on the same Side.

States the Question as Mr. Hume did.

I shall take Notice of the Word Aid; and I apprehend, my Lords, that the Defendants will certainly fall within the Sense of Aiding. In Hale's Pleas of the Crown, page 616. there is a Definition of Accessaries, viz. That which makes an Accessary before the Fact, is Command, Counsel, Abetment, or Procurement, by one to another, to commit a Felony, when the Commander or Counsellor is absent at the Time of the Felony committed; for if he be present, he is Principal. But in the Case of Poisoning, a Man may be Principal, though absent, as in Vaux's Case, 4 Coke 44, 6. Hale's P. C. If a Man is indicted as Principal, and acquitted, he shall not be indicted as Accessary before the Fact, Stamford 105. and 2 Edw. 3. 150, 282. Fitz. Coron. So that Salmon, it may be said, is no Accessary before the Fact (and if he is to be looked upon as a Principal, he will not come under this Indictment) because he was present when the Fact was done. This is absurd; for the Fact could not have been done, if he had not been present. Because he was at Deptsford when the Fact was committed, therefore not at the Bell when contrived; this is a plain non sequitur.

I shall now consider,

1. Whether your Lordships can consider it to be a Robbery on Salmon, as the Indictment is for putting in Fear, which could not have happened, if he purposely put himself in the Way?
2. Whether the Prisoners, as they never spoke to Kelly and Ellis, are guilty of being Accessaries?
3. Whether, as the Prisoners agreed that Blee should tell Kelly and Ellis that he could assist them to steal Linen, this will alter the Case, as Blee enticed them to commit one Felony, and they committed another?

1. The Jury have found the Record of the Conviction of Kelly and Ellis prout, and your Lordships and the whole World are estopped to say the contrary, viz. That a Robbery has not been committed: For to say that Salmon was not robbed, is to say against that Record, which the Jury have found to be true. The Record lies before your Lordships, as Part of the Special Verdict, and Records cannot be contradicted, Coke Lit. 117. b. Id. 260.

In Lord Lovat's Case, the Crown called Mr. Murray as Evidence against him: Lord Lovat objected to him, as he stood attainted of High Treason: It was there said, he had been proceeded against in the King's-Bench for not surrendering within the Time limited. Mr. Murray pleaded, he did surrender himself within the Time limited by the Act of Attainder; and the Attorney-General confessed his Plea to be true: How did he prove this? By the Record of the Admission of his Plea to be true. And if your Lordships determine this to be no Robbery, it is not only overturning the original Conviction of Kelly and Ellis, but also the Finding of the present Jury.

The Matter now to be considered is not, whether a Robbery was committed by Kelly and Ellis, but whether the Prisoners are guilty of counselling them to do it. The Parts of the finding of the Jury, subsequent to the finding of the Record, are now to be looked upon, as upon private Knowledge, Plowden 83. b. The Jury cannot find the Record in one Part, and contradict it in another.

Whoever counsels a Felony or Robbery to be done, is Accessary before the Fact: The Defendants counselled, &c. ergo Accessaries before the Fact. That they did counsel, is found in the Special Verdict; and the third Proposition follows from the Premises.

But it is said, that the Defendants counselled Blee to counsel Kelly and Ellis.

1. What is Counselling, within the Meaning of the Statutes? Procuring, Moving, are only Species of Counselling, and shall be good in an Indictment, though the Word Counselling is left out, 1 Anderson 194. And I insist, that by the Word Counsel, is not meant Counselling by Word of Mouth only, though the second Count of the Indictment does not conclude with a Contra Formam Statuti; but having the Word Counsel in it, it will be sufficient, 1 H. P. C. 525. A Man may be acquitted acquitted upon an Indictment which concludes contra Formam Statuti, and found guilty of simple Felony at Common Law.

Kelly and Ellis were seen and approved of by all the Prisoners. As far as I can find, this Indictment is the same as all Indictments for Accessaries. The Gilt of the Indictment is the Counselling.

A General Malice is transferable to any one a Man meets with; as Particular Malice to one Person may be transferable to another: As in Saunders's Case, Plowden 473. The Indictment is, Ea intentione felonice præbuit, and reached to one not intended; so ea intentione felonice percussit, will reach one who did not strike at all; for the Stroke of one extends to all that were present and abetting, Plowden 98.

2. If the Defendants had never seen Ellis and Kelly, the general Command to Blee, to procure two Persons to rob, would, by Operation of Law, operate against the Defendants, as soon as Ellis and Kelly were procured.

Counsel even against one not in rerum natura, if when the Person is in being, the Counsel is followed, it will make the Counsellor accessory, Dyer 186. a. Blee did nothing, said nothing, without the Advice and Consent of all the Prisoners.

3. Blee was directed to tell Kelly and Ellis, that he could help them to steal some Linen at Deptford, which he did; but told them nothing of the robbing Salmon.

I admit, if I counsel one to commit one Species of Felony, and he commits another, I am not accessory, H. P. C. 616. So in H. P. C. 618. If a Man, after having counselled another to commit Murder, and, before the Fact is done, he repents, and forbids and countermands it, he is not accessory if the Murder is committed. So in the present Case, if the Defendants intended that Kelly and Ellis should only steal Linen, and they met with Salmon by Chance and robbed him, the Defendants would not be accessory to that Robbery: But it appears by the Record to the contrary; their Intention was to get the Rewards offered by Act of Parliament and the Inhabitants of Deptford; and, from the Nature of the Action, Blee could not tell them the Design, for it would have been absurd to have told them; for how could Blee know Salmon would be there? This must have struck them upon his first mentioning it.

A Robbery was counselled, a Robbery was committed, and a Robbery was committed as counselled.

But if all these Arguments should fail, the Argument ab inconvenienti is often allowed to be of great Weight, and it would deserve in no Case more than the present. Had I been asked my Opinion upon such a Case as this, I should not have hesitated in my Opinion: But if, after your Lordships Determination to the contrary, I should have the same Case put to me; I should tell my Client, That provided he saw not, nor spoke not to him that committed the Murder, he might ride in his Coach, and laugh at his Friends, while they went to be hanged. The Defendants cannot be said to be accessory to an Accessary; for that is, by Construction of Law, one who receives another before the Fact, knowing him to be an Accessary.

But it may be said, after all, that I have produced no Case in Point; I must confess, after a long and diligent Search, I cannot find one: But there will be one; there will be a Report of this Case, and the King and M^r Daniel and others will be a Case in Point hereafter.

TRINITY VACATION, 28 Geo. II.

July 28, 1755.

The King against M^r Daniel and others.

The Judges met again at Serjeant's-Inn Hall, to hear the Arguments in Favour of the Defendants.

MR. Hume begged Leave to mention a Case which he had met with since his Argument, which seemed to be applicable to the present: That was the Case of William Belchier, who was tried at the Old-Bailey, in the Mayoralty of Robert Alfop, Esq; in June Sessions 1752. N^o 345. page 209. and recited the Case at large from the Sessions-Paper, viz.

" William Belchier was indicted, for that he, " on the King's Highway, on William Norton " did make an Assault, putting him in corporal " Fear, and Danger of his Life, and taking from " his Person five Shillings, June 3.

" William Norton. The Chaise to the Devizes " having been robbed two or three Times, as I " was informed, I was desired to go in it, to see " if I could take the Thief, which I did on the " 3d of June, about half an Hour after One in " the Morning. I got into the Post-Chaise: " The Post-Boy told me, the Place where he had " been stopped was near the Half-way House, " between Knightsbridge and Kensington. As we " came near the House, the Prisoner came to us " on Foot, and said, Driver, stop: He held a " Pistol Tinder-box to the Chaise, and said, " Your Money directly, you must not stay, this " Minute your Money. (He produced the Tinder- " box.) I said, Don't frighten us; I have but " a Trifle, you shall have it. Then I said to " the Gentlemen, (there were three in the Chaise) " Give your Money, &c. I took out a Pistol " from my Coat Pocket, and from my Breeches " Pocket a five-shilling Piece, and a Dollar, " and held the Pistol concealed in one Hand, " and the Money in the other. I held the " Money pretty hard: He said, Put it in my " Hat. I let him take the five-shilling Piece " out of my Hand: As soon as he had taken it, " I snapped my Pistol at him; it did not go off: " He staggered back, and held up his Hands, " and said, O Lord! O Lord! I jumped out of " the Chaise; he ran away, and I after him, " about six or seven hundred Yards; and there " took him. I hit him a Blow on his Back; " he begged for Mercy on his Knees. I took " his Neck-cloth off, and tied his Hands with " it, and brought him back to the Chaise: Then " I told the Gentlemen in the Chaise, That was " the Errand I came upon, and wished them a " good Journey; and brought the Prisoner to " London.

" Q. Did you lose Sight of him in the Pursuit?

" Norton. No, I did not, my Lord; it was a very clear Morning.

" Q. from the Prisoner. Ask him how he lives?

" Norton to the Q. I keep a Shop in Wyche-Street, and sometimes I take a Thief.

“ William Messenger. I drove the Post-Chaise. I took Mr. Norton in the Chaise at Hyde-Park Corner; and told him, if we did not meet the Highwayman between Knightsbridge and Kensington, we should not meet him at all. I saw him coming, and said, He is coming, get the Pistol ready. He came up to the Chaise, and said, Your Money, make Haste, your Money. I heard the Pistol snap. The Prisoner said, O Lord! and ran away, and Norton after him, and took him.

“ Q. Did you ever lose Sight of him in the Pursuit?

“ Messenger. I did, for a little Time: The Pursuit was not above three Minutes. I heard the Prisoner cry, O Lord! the Moment he was taken.

“ Prisoner's Defence.

“ I leave it to your Lordship and the honourable Court. Guilty, Death.”

Mr. Serjeant DAVY.

I have the Honour of attending your Lordships as Council for the Prisoners; and I must own, that I could not have been prevailed upon to have been Council for such a Set of Rogues, had I not been appointed by your Lordships.

I shall consider the Question under two general Propositions:

I. Whether, upon the State of the Verdict, it does appear, that any Robbery was committed by Ellis and Kelly?

II. If there was a Robbery committed by them, Whether they are Accessaries in such a Manner as to be liable to any Judgment against them?

I shall first take Notice of the Objections which have been raised against the Defendants. And I find it is chiefly insisted on, That the Jury having found the Record prout, is sufficient Proof that there was a Robbery; and that the Defendants are thereby estopped to say the contrary.

I admit, that the Rules laid down relating to Estoppels shall prevail at Law. But it is as to the Extent of those Rules which I contend for; and I insist that they do not extend to Parties that are not Privies to the Record. The Reason of the Rules of Law in this Case, is, that there may be an End of Strife; for the Witnesses to the Record might be dead; and therefore Records shall bind Parties and Privies, but shall not bind Strangers. There is another Reason: Parties to the Record may have an Attaint for a false Verdict, or the modern Method of moving for a new Trial, but Strangers cannot.

And this appears from Lock and Norbonne, 3 Modern 141. Trial at Bar in Ejectment for Lands in Wiltshire. The Case was this:

“ Mary Philpot, in 1678, made a Settlement, by Lease and Release, to herself for Life, then to Trustees to support the contingent Remainders; then to her first, second, and third Sons in Tail Male, &c. then to Thomas Arundel in Tail Male, &c. It was objected at the Trial, that she had no Power to make such a Settlement; because, in the Year 1676, her Husband had settled the Lands in Question upon her for Life, and upon the Issue of his Body, &c. and for want of such Issue, then upon George Philpot in Tail Male, with several Remainders over, Remainder to Mary Philpot

“ in Fee; proviso that, upon a Tender of a Guinea to George Philpot by the said Mary, the Limitations as to him should be void. George Philpot having afterwards made a Lease of this Land to try the Title, the Trustees brought an Ejectment; but because the Tender of a Guinea could not be proved, there was a Verdict for the Defendant.”

And now Mr. Philpot would have given this Verdict in Evidence at this Trial, but was not suffered by the Court; for if one Man hath a Title to several Lands, and if he should bring Ejectments against several Defendants, and recover against one, he shall not give that Verdict in Evidence against the rest; because the Party, against whom the Verdict was had, may be relieved against it if it is not good, but the rest cannot, though they claim under the same Title, and all make the same Defence.

So if two Tenants will defend a Title in Ejectment, and a Verdict be had against one, it shall not be read against the other, unless by Rule of Court.

But if an Ancestor hath a Verdict, the Heir may give it in Evidence, because he is privy to it; for he who produceth a Verdict must be either Party or Privy to it; and it shall never be received against different Persons, if it doth not appear that they are united in Interest.

Therefore a Verdict against A shall never be read against B; for it may happen that one did not make a good Defence, which the other may do.

If upon the Writ of contra formam collationis a Recovery is had against the Abbot, and a scire facias issue against the Terre-Tenant, he is not concluded by any Trial had against the Abbot, 2 Inst. 488. [N. B. I have looked into the Authorities quoted, but cannot find any thing in Point.]

If this Doctrine which the Gentlemen have laid down relating to Estoppels, and that Accessaries upon their Trial cannot controvert the Robbery, should be admitted,

It would,

1. Encounter the known Principles of natural Justice.
2. Be contrary to the Principles of Law, and the Practice in Trials.
3. Contrary to Authorities.

Suppose A is indicted and convicted of the Murder of B, and C is afterwards tried as Accessary to A, and upon the Trial the Prosecutor brings the Record of the Conviction of A, to prove the Murder: C admits that he did give such Counsel, but that it was never executed, for B is still alive, and offers to bring Proof of it: No, say the Gentlemen, here is a Record, which says he was murdered, and Records cannot be contradicted; therefore C must be hanged. If this is the Law of England, it is contrary to the Law of God. But it may be said, that in such a Case the Crown would pardon: But that is a Favour. Mercy is the King's Privilege, and the brightest Diadem he wears; Justice is the peculiar Attribute of the Law.

The same Doctrine with that I have laid down holds with those who are to bring a Writ of Error; for none can bring a Writ of Error, but, 1. Parties; 2. Privies; 3. Those who may receive any Advantage from the Reversal of the Judgment: But it is contrary to the Rules of Law, to assign Error contrary to what appears upon upon the Face of the Record, 1 Rolle's Abridgement, 747. 1, 2, 3, 4. Dyer 90. 5 Coke 39. b. Godbolt 377. 1 Leon. 261.

The great Object of the Law is to protect the Innocent; the Punishment of the Guilty is only so far observed, as it tends to protect the Innocent; every thing therefore, which tends to destroy the Innocent, is against Law. So Records are often the Effects of Perjury; and those who are guilty of Perjury may be tried, notwithstanding the Record is not reversed. As for Instance, A is indicted for assaulting B. To prove the Assault, J. S. is called as a Witness, and he swears he saw it: Afterwards B indicts J. S. for Perjury, which Indictment sets forth, that there was such an Indictment found against A, &c. and that he was found guilty upon it, &c. Upon this Trial the first Thing produced is the Record of A's Indictment, which sets forth, that A was indicted and found guilty. It would be impossible therefore, according to the Doctrine the Gentlemen have laid down, that J. S. could be tried; for here is a Record which says, that A was convicted. — So in Canning's Case, (p. 223.) a Case which has lately happened, and has made a great deal of Noise; I was concerned in it; and upon her Trial, the Record of the Conviction of Mary Squires was produced, and it remains still, and Squires is subject to all the Disadvantages attending it.

'Tis said, that Records cannot be contradicted; but they often are, as in the Case put. A Record is no Evidence in some Cases; as suppose the above Case, and afterwards B brings an Action for the same Assault against A, who has been already indicted and convicted, the Record is no Evidence. I speak this with great Deference to your Lordships: I think it is not Evidence, but I am sure it is not conclusive.

The Reason why Accessaries cannot be tried till the Principal is convicted, is this: The Principal best knows, whether he is guilty or no; and therefore is best able to make his Defence.

I must own, the Case cited from Brooke, Tit. Verdict, pl. 96. by Mr. Hume, has an ugly Aspect; but upon looking into the Year-Book from whence it is abridged, I find it will answer no Purpose at all; and as it is a Case somewhat curious, I beg Leave to mention it; (and then recited the Case, quod vide.) —

It was insisted, That it was sufficient to say that the Principal was convicted, not that the Principal Felony was committed: The Reason is, because, upon the Face of the Record, the Conviction is a presumptive Proof of it, and the Accessary may endeavour to acquit himself, either by denying the Counsel or the Principal Felony.

I apprehend it is a Maxim, That in all Special Verdicts, the Judges will only judge of what the Jury find in their Verdict, and so it was resolved in 2 Siderfin 8. Street v. Roberts.

The Jury finding the Record, is no Proof that it is true. Their finding is of the Fact of the Existence of the Record: And your Lordships can only from thence judge that the Principals were convicted, sufficient to bring the Accessaries to their Trial. The Question then is, Whether this Special Verdict finds, that any Felony was committed by Kelly and Ellis?

There are some Words in the Verdict which I consider as only descriptive, and chuse to lay out of it: Feloniously robbed. — The Office of the Jury is to find the Fact, and leave the Law to the Judgment of the Court. In 9 Co. 69. Mackally's Case, Exception was taken, because it was not found by the Verdict that the said Mackally felonice percussit, but percussit only; sed non allocatur, for the Reason above. If then the omitting the Word felonice will not hinder the Fact from being a Felony, the putting it in will not make it a Felony. Having stripped the Verdict of these unnecessary Words, which the Jury had no Right to put in, I shall consider the Nature of a Robbery; and here, in order to constitute a Robbery, two Things are necessary:

1. Violence, and putting in Fear.
2. A taking against the Will.

If either of these are wanting; there is no Robbery. 3 Inst. 68. Fear constitutes the Difference between a Robber and a Cut-purse.

2. The taking against the Will; for, Volenti non fit injuria. So Bracton, b. 3. fol. 150. b. Furtum est contrectatio rei alienæ fraudulenta, cum animo furandi, invito illo domino, cujus res illa fuerit.*

Let a Man, when he parts with his Money to a Robber, be asked, if he gives it willingly? No; he chuses the lesser Evil to avoid the greater, and had rather suffer the Loss of his Money than Death.

As to the Case of swearing to put Money, &c. the Answer to that is given in the Book. 'Tis the Fear and the Oath continuing, which make it a Robbery: Suppose a Man did not think the Oath obligatory, and had no Fear upon him, then I apprehend, my Lords, it would be no Robbery.

But suppose that Salmon was put in Fear, the Defendants must be acquitted. As to Salmon, the Jury are silent as to his being afraid: They have in Fact found that he was not afraid, because they have found the Fact was done according to his Agreement. But the putting in Fear ought to be found positively, or to appear from the Words of the Verdict.

'Tis insisted by the Gentlemen on the other Side, that this was a Felony to which Salmon was Accessary before the Fact; they might have gone a little further, and made him Principal, as aiding that Counsel which he had given. If Principal, he might have been indicted as Principal: Where there are many Principals, each is a separate Offence, and each may be separately indicted: If so, Salmon might be indicted alone, (and then recited Part of the Indictment as it would stand against him, to shew the Absurdity of it.)

Whether Salmon consented or not to Blee, he certainly did not to Kelly and Ellis; their Intent was to rob a Man against his Will, and if Salmon did consent to be robbed, it could be no Robbery.

Mr. Hume insisted, that nothing appeared in the Verdict, contrary to the Record of Conviction. But there certainly is, for it first finds a Robbery, and afterwards finds such Circumstances as make it impossible there should be a Robbery. And Hobart 53. Foster and Jackson, Wherever a Jury begin with a Direct and end with a Special Matter, which is either contrary to their Verdict or to Law, the Special Matter shall overrule the General.

* Bracton adds, Cum animo dico, quia sine animo furandi non committitur, sc. furtum. 2. Whether the Animus furandi, which is agreed on all Sides to have been in Kelly and Ellis, will not constitute this Furtum?

1 Inst. 227. a. and 4 Co. 53. Rawlin's Case. The Court held, that the Jury being sworn ad veritatem dicendam, must leave the Matter of Law to the Court; and if the Jury find an Estoppel, the Court will not regard it, but will judge upon the Special Matter.

Every Fact found by the Jury ought to be attended to, your Lordships see, even in Disputes relating to Property; God forbid, that in Favour of Life any should be neglected.

If the Conviction of Ellis and Kelly be any Proof of a Robbery, then the Jury have found the Record one Way, and the Fact another.

I come now to the second Question; which is, Whether, supposing a Robbery to have been committed, the Defendants are Accessaries in such a Manner as to be liable to any Judgment against them?

If Blee was no Accessary, the Defendants cannot. In Reality this was a Felony committed by Ellis and Kelly spontaneously, and without any Accessary at all. In order to make this a Robbery by Procurement, these three Things are necessary to be proved:

1. That this was the very Robbery which Blee undertook to procure Kelly and Ellis to commit.

3. Whether the Defendants are within the Statutes of Pbilip and Mary.

The Question is, whether Blee procured Kelly and Ellis to commit this Robbery. And here I must observe, that the Word Procure is the most general of all those applied to Accessaries: But it is plain, he did not procure them to commit this Robbery, but to steal Linen; and whatever was intended by Blee, cannot fall under Consideration.

There is a Distinction between procuring an Act to be done, and procuring the Persons to commit it. As for Instance; If I am walking in the Street, and designedly let my Handkerchief hang out of my Pocket, in order that it may induce somebody to pick it; here I could not be said to procure the Persons to commit this Felony, but the Felony to be committed. The Act intended to be committed must be communicated to the Parties who are to commit it. And whether the Defendants intended that Kelly and Ellis should steal Linen or no, they were originally acted by such a Disposition, and this Robbery was committed without any previous Intention of Kelly and Ellis, and therefore there can be no Accessaries; as in Manslaughter there are no Accessaries before, because the Nature of it implies that it was done without Premeditation or Design: Therefore if, upon an Indictment for Murder, the Principal is convicted of Manslaughter, the Accessary is ipso facto discharged, Moore 461. Goose's Case. 4 Co. 44. 1 Hale's P. C. 437.

But let us consider, whether the Defendants are within the Statutes of Pbilip and Mary.

The Word Procure is put into the second Count; and if the Defendants are at all guilty, they are guilty of all.

The Word Procure, which is not in the Statutes, is added to some Words which are in the Statutes; and if the Defendants merely procured, no Judgment can be given against them upon this Indictment: For, if they procured without counselling, they will not come within the Statute.

[Judge Foster observed, That the Word Procure was in all the Precedents of Indictments.]

Mr. Serj. Davy. I admit the Case which was laid down relating to the Construction of Statutes, which being made for the public Good, should be construed for the public Good.

But Statutes, now shall have a very particular Construction.

It is going a great Way to extend penal Statutes to operate capitally.

Greville's Case, 1 Anderson 194. is different from this; the Words there were Excited, Moved, and Procured; and the Judgment was, that it included Counsel. Suppose Excited and Moved had been out, the Court would not have given the same Opinion on the Word Procure. Counselling is but one Species of Procuring, which is the Genus; and therefore, by this Way of reasoning, he that is guilty of the Species is guilty of the Genus.

There are many Ways of Counselling without Procuring; Blee's Procuring cannot be extended to mean the Defendant's Procuring.

It will be proper to review the facts as they stand to each Count.

The general Question is, Who moved? The Defendants did not; for they had no Communication with either Kelly or Ellis, by any Way whatsoever. If Kelly and Ellis had been asked, By whose Advice are you doing this Felony? the Answer would have been, By Blee, not by the Defendants. Blee advises them to steal Linen, and the Defendants advised Blee to be an Accessary.

I admit all Mr. Hume's Doctrine relating to Signs, Messages, &c. The Meaning of the Counsellor must be conveyed to the Perpetrator of the Fact, and the Consent must be in Consequence of the Advice, in order to make him a Commander, Adviser, and Counsellor: So that Tarquin's Case does not come up to this Case. The Slave was the passive Instrument to convey Tarquin's Mind; but here Blee gave Blee's Advice. Who did procure? The Answer is, Blee. If a Stranger had advised Tarquin, would he have been Accessary to Sextus? There is a Difference between advising a Thing to be done, and procuring it to be done. The Words of the Statute are applied to advising any Person to commit a Felony, not any Felony to be committed. The Defendants counselled, before any Persons were fixed upon.

The Act of Forgery is; Whoever shall forge, or procure to be forged, or assist [in procuring] to be forged; if procured the Forgery, he is a Principal; if procured a Person to commit the Forgery, an Accessary.

Jenkins only means the Receiver.

If all the intermediate Persons are to be considered as Accessaries, then it will be proper to consider, whether the Defendants did advise any Felony to be committed. The Agreement was, that they should rob Salmon, who agreed that it should be done. Salmon could not be robbed by his own Consent. This does not refer to the Record: But if there was a Robbery, the Felony exceeds the Agreement, for no Felony was agreed to be done; only the Appearance of a Felony, which those who did it should apprehend was a Felony; and that they might avail themselves of that that Appearance, either the Goods taken from Salmon were taken against his Will, or not.

If against his Will, it was different from the Agreement, which was, that he should part with them willingly: If not against his Will, there could be no Felony. I admit that Salmon might be in Fear, if they had taken more than he agreed to part with; but eo instante that his Will departed from him, there was a Departure from the Agreement; this extends to all the Defendants.

As to the Case of Ahab and Jezabel, which my learned Friend cited, however guilty they may have been deemed, they are certainly not Accessaries according to the Law of England; according to which Law the Defendants are to be tried.

Mr. Aston, on the same Side.

I also have the Honour of being appointed by your Lordships as Council for the Defendants; and here I cannot but observe, how tender the Law is in Favour of the worst of Men, that it allows them to make use of Subtilties before such an august Assembly.

Before I consider the Argument made use of by the Gentlemen on the other Side, I shall just mention an Objection upon the Face of the Indictment. — By the Common Law, an Accessary in one County could not be tried in another: But by 2 Edw. 6. c. 24. Accessaries may be tried in that County where the Offence of Accessary was committed, 9 Co. 118. a. It is not set forth in the Indictment, that the Fact was committed in Kent, only that the Party was indicted there; and the Defendants are to be tried by this Jury, not by the Jury of Ellis and Kelly.

I shall consider three Things:

First, it is said, That the Defendants must be Accessaries to the Offence which was committed. In Answer to which,

1. This Verdict does not find any Felony or Robbery, which can make the Defendants Accessaries to any Felony or Robbery charged in the Indictment.
2. The Defendants were not estopped from controverting the Fact of the Robbery.
3. Supposing the Felony and Robbery sufficiently found, it is not sufficiently found to make the Defendants Accessaries.

The Aiding and Abetting is a Matter of Fact, which this Jury ought to find, which they do not here find.

I admit that the Jury have properly found the Record prout. The Jury must proceed to state the Facts, which make the Defendants Accessaries, and the Finding must be of the actual Felony laid in the Indictment. There is no Time found when Kelly and Ellis committed the Robbery on Salmon; it may be after the Robbery on which they were convicted. Pulton, de Pace 128. defines a Robbery to be the felonious taking away any Thing from the Person of another against his Will. Fitz. Coron. 115.

The Case of the King and Belchier, which Mr. Hume mentioned, was put out of Doubt by the Jury finding him Guilty; therefore he was put in Fear, which is essential to constitute it a Robbery, as appears 1 Hawkins 96, 97. Hale P. C. 534. Dyer 224. Keyling 70. 3 Inst. 68. Pulton 128. By the Omission the Nature of the Offence is varied; it must be expressly found that he was put in Fear, otherwise it will be no Robbery.

As to the Case of swearing to put Money, Pulton 128. sect. 28. gives the Reason why it is deemed a Robbery; because (says he) it is against his Will.

The Verdict cannot be helped by any Intendment, 2 Hawkins 47, 9. King and Plummer. Keyling 111. But it is said, that the Jury having found the Record, it operates by way of Estoppel. But the Record found, and the Fact found, may stand consistent with the subtle Doctrine of Estoppels. Therefore I will lay all that out of the Question; for nothing can be implied in this Case. The Jury have found Facts which must speak for themselves: The Jury have only found the Record. The Record of Conviction is not falsified; but the Charge upon the Fact is not sufficiently proved, and the Accessary has a Right to controvert the Robbery; and there are Instances where Accessaries have been executed before the Conviction of the Principal, and upon the Principal's coming Home, found innocent, 9 Co. 119. b. Pulton 140, 1. gives the Reason, because the Party has waived that Privilege the Law gives him. Accessaries may be indicted with the Principal and in the same Indictment; and then the Jury is first asked, Whether the Principal is guilty or no? But they may be indicted separate; and Plowden 100. says, might have separate Venires.

The Conviction of the Principal is only to substantiate and warrant the Court to proceed to the Trial of the Accessary: In the present Case, this Indictment stating this Conviction is no more than a Mode necessary to found this Trial: It proves no Guilt, only is intended to try Guilt. There must be Proof of the Procurement of the Act, and of the doing the Act in consequence of that Procurement.

The Defendants, in general, may give every thing in Evidence which will shew them to be not guilty of the Charge: What then is so proper as to shew there was no Felony committed, and therefore not guilty of being Accessaries?

Wherever a Plaintiff brings an Action to defeat a Record, he is not estopped by the Record. Whenever a Record is made use of to found a Charge, the Defendant may make use of, and give Evidence against it. 6 Mod. 216. Cro. Car. 531.

Verdicts may be defeated in their Operation.

Supposing this Felony is sufficiently found, yet it is not found so as to make the Defendants Accessaries. This will depend on the Nature of Accessaries, and what Privity there must be between the Principal and Accessary, and how far it is necessary the Act agreed to be done should be done. In order to make an Accessary before the Fact, the Assent must be express and shewn, Cro. Eliz. 540. pl. 4.

All the Cases of Tarquin carry the Communication home to the Principal. And so in Saunders and Archer's Case, Plowden 475. the Judges said, that Archer was not guilty of being accessory to the Death of the Child, as there was no Communication by Words between him and Saunders concerning the Child, only concerning the Wife.

And that the Felony intended must be communicated, appears further from Popbam 143.

Suppose a Man sends a Letter to A, counselling him to kill B; but A does it before he receives the Letter; here there is no Communication, and so he is not guilty of being Accessary.

2. The Act committed must be the same as was agreed to be done, or in Consequence of that Agreement, as in Saunders's Case, Plowden 475. There was no Persuasion to induce Ellis and Kelly to commit the Robbery on Salmon; for the Verdict says, they were never told of that being the Robbery intended.

The Procurement then was only to commit Larceny; and it was contingent, whether Grand or Petit Larceny; for it depended on the Value of the Goods they took. As to what Mr. Hume said, that stealing Linen was the Artifice by which Ellis and Kelly were to be entrapped; it is not found, that it was the Artifice.

But lastly, there is a Case founded on very great Authority, 2 Lord Raymond 1574, 1586. the King against Huggins, (Vide State Trials, vol. 9.) where it is said, that the Aiding and Abetting is a Matter of Fact, and must be found by the Jury, and not left to the Court: Same Case, 2 Strange 885, 6. The Court there said, We are to determine upon Facts, not upon the Evidence of Facts. It must be expressly found that they have aided and abetted.

When a Person is ousted of Clergy by Act of Parliament, two Things are necessary:

1. That the Indictment precisely brings the Party within the Statute; otherwise, though possibly the Fact itself may be within the Statute, and it may so appear upon the Evidence; yet, if it be not alledged in the Indictment, the Party, the Convict, shall have his Clergy.

2. If the Fact laid in the Indictment does come within the Statute, yet, if upon the Evidence, though it is a Felony, it appears not to be so qualified as laid in the Indictment, the Jury ought to find him guilty of the Felony only, but not in the Manner laid in the Indictment; as for Instance, Guilty of the Felony, but not of the Robbery; and thereupon the Prisoner shall have his Clergy, 2 Hale P. C. 236.

Mr. Hume's Reply.

'Tis now, my Lords, incumbent upon me, in this Case, of so great Importance to the Defendants, the Law, and the Public, to offer something to your Lordships by way of Reply. I shall beg Leave, therefore, first of all, to lay two Objections, which were started by Mr. Aston, out of the Case:

1. To the Form of the Indictment, because the Question now is not in Arrest of Judgment.
2. The last Objections from the Case of the King and Plummer, and the King and Huggins.

I admit that the Jury are to find Facts. The Jury find that they Aided; this is finding that they were Accessaries, and so there was no Need of a Special Verdict. The Special Verdict is only, that the Judges may determine whether what they have found, will make them Accessaries or no.

I shall first consider what is to be the Effect of the Record of Conviction. It may have two:

1. It may be decisive and conclusive, in respect to all the Defendants, of the principal Felony existing, and said to be committed.
2. It may be Evidence, on the Part of the Crown, of the Fact, sufficient to prove the Fact, &c. thereby rendering it necessary for the Defendants to prove the contrary.

I lay out of the Case all that was said of the Cases where Records are no Evidence at all; for here the Record is Evidence legal and necessary:

Mr. Aston seemed to contend; that the Record might be Evidence, but such as to throw the onus probandi on the Defendants.

1. As to the Principal's being convicted first; all the Indictments are in the present Form.

The Defendants must give that in Evidence, according to the Nature of Evidence, and such as the Law will admit. If the Record of the Conviction is sufficient to support the Charge, the Defendants cannot give parol Evidence against it.

2. Whether it does not operate on the Part of the Crown, unless any Evidence be given against it.

If the Defendants had given any Evidence, and the Jury had been of Opinion, that it appeared that there was no Robbery, the Judges would have directed a General Verdict. The Defendants ought to shew, that there was no Robbery committed in this Verdict. Let us see then, whether or no there is a Robbery found. It is found, that the Goods were taken by Assault, and feloniously: 'Tis not found, that he consented to deliver the Goods. How can Salmon's Agreement at the Bell be taken to go to an After-time in the High Road, that he did assent to be robbed? This would be contradictory to the Verdict.

Your Lordships are to take the Robbery at the Time of the Commitment of it in the Highway, and to consider whether it is found, that Salmon was robbed voluntarily, supposing there was a Robbery committed by them. All the Defendants saw Kelly and Ellis, but Salmon did not. If Salmon was put in Fear, says the learned Serjeant, it was not what he agreed to; for the Agreement was that he should be robbed voluntarily. Now the Fact was, that not knowing the Persons who were to rob him, upon being used a little roughly by them, he trembled, and said, Take what I have got, Gentlemen, don't use me ill. Vide Trial, p. 421.

The Cases cited by the Serjeant and Mr. Aston prove, that Salmon could not be a Principal to a Robbery upon himself; yet he may be an Accessary to that Robbery which was plotted at the Bell.

If Kelly and Ellis had stolen the Linen, the Defendants would not have been Accessaries, because that was not the Felony plotted.

There may be Accessaries without Communication by Privity, Assent, and Consent: Are these Defendants Accessaries, Auxilio, vel Præcepto, vel Mandato? And though Delegatus non potest delegare, yet, qui facit per alium, facit per se. And so all the Links of this Chain are found: The whole Chain hangs together, and your Lordships cannot separate it. If Plotting makes a Man Accessary, did they not plot? If Consenting is necessary, did they not consent?

In December 1755, at the Old-Bailey Sessions, Justice Foster pronounced the Judgment of the Court in the Case between the King and M^r Daniel and others, to the Effect following:

THE Indictment chargeth, that at the General Gaol-Delivery held at Maidstone in the County of Kent, on the 13th of August, in the twenty-eighth Year of the King, Peter Kelly and John Ellis were by

by due Course of Law convicted of a Felony and Robbery committed by them in the King's Highway in the Parish of St. Paul Deptford, in the County of Kent, upon the Person of James Salmon, one of the Prisoners at the Bar; and that the Prisoners Stephen M^d Daniel, John Berry, James Egan, and James Salmon, before the said Robbery, did, in the Parish of St. Andrew Holbourn in this City, feloniously and maliciously Comfort, Aid, Assist, Abet, Counsel, Hire, and Command the said Peter Kelly and John Ellis to commit the said Felony and Robbery.

On this Indictment the Prisoners have been tried, and the Jury have found a Special Verdict to this Effect:

“ That Kelly and Ellis were by due Course of Law convicted of the said Felony and Robbery.

“ That before the Robbery, all the Prisoners and one Thomas Blee, in order to procure to themselves the Rewards given by Act of Parliament for apprehending Robbers on the Highway, did maliciously and feloniously meet at the Bell Inn in Holborn in this City; and did then and there agree, that the said Thomas Blee should procure two Persons to commit a Robbery on the Highway in the Parish of St. Paul Deptford, upon the Person of the Prisoner Salmon.

“ That for that Purpose they did all maliciously and feloniously contrive and agree, that the said Blee should inform the Persons so to be procured, that he would assist them in stealing Linen in the Parish of St. Paul Deptford.

“ That in pursuance of this Agreement, and with the Privity of all the Prisoners, the said Blee did engage and procure the said Ellis and Kelly to go with him to Deptford in order to steal Linen; but did not at any Time before the Robbery inform them, or either of them, of the intended Robbery.

“ That in consequence of the said Agreement at the Bell, and with the Privity of all the Prisoners, the said Ellis and Kelly went with the said Blee to Deptford.

“ That the said Blee, Ellis, and Kelly being there, and the Prisoner Salmon being likewise there waiting in the Highway in pursuance of the said Agreement, the said Blee, Ellis, and Kelly feloniously assaulted him, and took from his Person the Money and Goods mentioned in the Indictment.

“ They further find, that none of the Prisoners had any Conversation with the said Ellis and Kelly, or either of them, previous to the Robbery. But they find that, before the Robbery, the Prisoners M^d Daniel, Egan, and Berry saw the said Ellis and Kelly, and approved of them as Persons proper for the Purpose of robbing the said Salmon.”

But whether the Prisoners are guilty in manner as charged in the Indictment, they pray the Advice of the Court.

This Special Verdict hath been argued before all the Judges of England, and two Questions have been made.

First, Whether it appeareth from the Facts stated in the Special Verdict, that any Robbery was committed by Ellis and Kelly on the Person of James Salmon.

Second, Supposing that Ellis and Kelly were guilty as Principals in the Robbery, whether the Facts found will warrant the Court in passing Judgment upon the Prisoners, or any of them, upon this Indictment.

The second Point seemeth to have been the Doubt on which the Jury pray the Advice of the Court; and I have Reason to believe, that when it first came to be considered, it was Matter of great Doubt with some Gentlemen of the Profession, whose Abilities were never yet called in Question.

For which Reason, and because the Law touching Accessaries before the Fact is a Matter of great and very extensive Consequence to the Justice of the Kingdom, and ought to be well understood, I will deliver my Thoughts upon the second Question, before I come to that which will finally govern the present Case.

As to the Prisoner Salmon, the Judges, upon Consideration of this Special Verdict, are unanimously of Opinion, that he cannot be guilty within this Indictment: For unless he was Party to the Agreement at the Bell, there can be no Colour to involve him in the Guilt of Ellis and Kelly.

And on the other hand, if he did part with his Money and Goods in consequence of that Agreement, it cannot be said that in legal Construction he was robbed at all; since it is of the Essence of Robbery and Larceny, that the Goods be taken against the Will of the Owner.

There was a late Case (Belchier and Norton's) cited in the Argument on the Part of the Crown, which I shall consider by and by, and distinguish from the present.

It hath been held, (Cromp. Just. 41. b. pl. 4, 5.) and I think rightly, that a Man may make himself an Accessary after the Fact to a Larceny of his own Goods, or to a Robbery on himself, by harbouring or concealing the Thief, or assisting in his Escape.

And under some Circumstances a Man may be guilty of Larceny in stealing his own Goods, or of Robbery, in taking his own Property from the Person of another. A delivereth Goods to B, to keep for him, (1 Hale 513.) and then stealeth them, with Intent to charge B with the Value of them, (Stanf. 26. A. 3 Inst. 110.) this would be Felony in A. Or, A having delivered Money to his Servant to carry to some distant Place, disguiseth himself and robbeth the Servant on the Road, with Intent to charge the Hundred, this, I doubt not, would be Robbery in A.

For in these Cases the Money and Goods were taken from those who had a special temporary Property in them, with a wicked fraudulent Intention; which is the antient known Definition of Larceny, Fraudulenta Obtrahatio Rei alienæ invito Domino. But I never did hear, before this Time, of any Attempt to charge a Man as Accessary before the Fact to a Robbery committed on his own Person.

As to the Prisoners M^d Daniel, Berry, and Egan, the Judges are unanimously of Opinion, That supposing a Robbery was committed on Salmon, the Facts found by the Special Verdict are sufficient to charge them as Accessaries in the Manner they are charged in this Indictment.

For the Verdict findeth, that every Circumstance attending the Fact, the Place where, and the Person on whom it was to be committed, the Means

Means by which it was to be effected, and the Persons by whom it was to be done; all these Circumstances were settled and agreed upon by the Prisoners previous to the Fact: And in consequence of this Consult and Agreement the Fact was committed.

It is indeed found, that none of the Prisoners had any Conversation with Ellis and Kelly previous to the Robbery; and that Blee did not acquaint Ellis and Kelly with his Intention to commit any Robbery, but drew them to Deptsford under Pretence of stealing Linen.

These Circumstances seem to have been the Foundation of the Jury's Doubt; and the Prisoners Council have laid great Strefs on them.

As to that Circumstance, that Blee's true Design was not made known to Ellis and Kelly, it appeareth manifestly by the Facts found, that it was Part of the original Agreement at the Bell, that the true Design should be concealed from them; and that they were to be drawn to the Place of Action under another Pretence. This Circumstance therefore being Part of the original Agreement, the Prisoners cannot avail themselves of it, if the Agreement upon the whole, and what was done in consequence of it, be sufficient to make them Accessaries.

As to the other Circumstance, that the Prisoners had no Conversation with Ellis and Kelly before the Assault upon Salmon, their Council relied chiefly on the Words of the Statutes on which this Indictment is founded.

The Statutes are the 4th and 5th of Phil. and Mar. c. 4. and the 3d and 4th of W. and Mar. c. 9. The Words of the former which are descriptive of the Offence are, "If any Person shall maliciously Counsel, Hire, or Command." The latter retaineth the Words Counsel, Hire, or Command, and addeth others, "shall Comfort, Aid, Abet, or Assist." From these Words, which it must be admitted are descriptive of the Offence, the Prisoners Council concluded, That without a personal immediate Communication of Counsels, Intentions, and Views, from the supposed Accessaries to the Principals, there can be no Accessary before the Fact.

But the Judges are all of Opinion, That whoever procureth a Felony to be committed, though it be by the Intervention of a third Person, is an Accessary before the Fact, and within these Statutes. For what is there in the Notion of Commanding, Hiring, Counselling, Aiding, or Abetting, which may not be effected by the Intervention of a third Person, without any direct immediate Connection between the first Mover and the Actor?

A biddeth his Servant hire somebody, no Matter whom, to murder B, and furnisheth him with Money for that Purpose; the Servant procureth C, a Person whom A never saw or heard of, to do it. Is not A, who is manifestly the first Mover or Contriver of the Murder, an Accessary before the Fact? It would be a Reproach to the Justice of the Kingdom to suppose he is not.

It is a Principle in Law which can never be controverted, That he who procureth a Felony to be done is a Felon. If present, he is a Principal; if absent, an Accessary before the Fact.

In the Case of the Earl of Somerset, (1 St. Trial.) who was indicted upon the Statute of Phil. and Mar. as an Accessary before the Fact to the Murder of Sir Thomas Overbury, the Lord Chancellor Ellesmere, High Steward, in the Outset of the Cause and before any Evidence given, directed the Peers Triers, and all the Judges present concurred with his Lordship, that the only Point in Issue was, Whether the Earl caused or procured the Murder or not. And accordingly the Earl was found guilty upon Evidence which satisfied his Peers, that he had contributed to the Murder by the Intervention of his Lady, and of Sir Jarvis Elways, and Franklin, who were themselves no more than Accessaries; without any Sort of Proof that he had ever conversed with Weston, the only Principal in the Murder, or had corresponded with him directly by Letter or Message.

The best Writers on the Crown Law agree, that Persons Procuring, or even Consenting beforehand, are Accessaries before the Fact.

Lord Coke, in his Comment on West. 1. c. 14. in explaining the Words Commandment and Aid as applied to Accessaries before the Fact, saith, "Under this Word Command are comprehended all those who Incite, Procure, Set on, or Stir up any to do the Fact. And under the Word Aid are comprehended all Persons Counselling, Abetting, Plotting, Assenting, Consenting, and Encouraging to do the Fact, and not present when it is committed."

Lord Hale saith, (1 Hale 374.) "Misprision of Felony is Concealing a Felony which a Man knoweth, but never consented to; for if he consented, he is either Principal or Accessary. (Id. 615, 616.) Again, Accessary before, is he that, being absent at the Time of the Felony committed, doth yet Procure, Counsel, or Abet another to commit the Felony."

Many Authorities to this Purpose may be cited, which for Brevity sake I will barely refer to*.

It was objected by the Prisoners Council, that Penal Statutes are to be construed with great Strictness; and that the Words Procure or Consent are not to be found in either of the Statutes upon which this Indictment is formed.

The Principle is true, that in Prosecutions on Penal Statutes the Words of the Statute are to be pursued. But it is equally true, that we are not to be governed by the Sound, but by the well-known, true, legal Import of the Words.

Some of the Words made use of in the present Indictment, and in one or other of the Statutes upon which it is founded, are, Command, Aid, and Abet. The Passage I have just cited from Lord Coke sheweth, that Persons Procuring, Contriving, or Consenting, come within the Words Aid and Command. And that Persons Procuring are, in the Language of the Law, Abettors, may be proved by many Authorities, which it is not necessary to cite at large †.

This being so, the Prisoners M'Daniel, Egan, and Berry, who were the Contrivers of this Scene of Iniquity, agreed upon the Place and Manner of Execution, and conducted the whole by the Intervention of their Instrument Blee, are Accessaries before to this Robbery, supposing a Robbery was committed. For in Construction, and indeed in the Language of the Law, they did command Ellis and Kelly to commit the Fact, and did aid and abet them in it.

I come now to the other Question, Whether, upon the State of the Case in the Special Verdict, any Robbery, in the legal Notion of that Offence, was committed on Salmon or no?

And the Judges are of Opinion, that it doth not appear, from the Facts stated in the Verdict, that the taking the Money and Goods from Salmon, by Ellis and Kelly, doth amount to a Robbery, in the legal Notion of that Offence.

Something was said in arguing of this Case upon the Question, how far a Person charged as an Accessary, and brought to his Trial after the Conviction of the Principal, can controvert the Truth of the Fact found by the Verdict against the Principal; or how far the supposed Accessary can be let in to shew, either that no Felony was committed, or that the Person convicted as Principal was not guilty of it.

This General Question is of great Extent and of mighty Importance in Prosecutions of this Kind; and some Diversity of Opinion there is among the Judges upon it.

But it will not be necessary at present to enter at all into it; because the Court in the present Case must found its Judgment upon the Facts found by the Verdict, and upon them alone. Now it is expressly found; that Salmon was Party to the original Agreement at the Bell; that he consented to part with his Money and Goods under Colour and Pretence of a Robbery; and that for that Purpose, and in pursuance of this Consent and Agreement, he went to Deptford, and waited there till this colourable Robbery was effected.

This being the State of the Case with regard to Salmon, the Judges are of Opinion, that in Consideration of Law, no Robbery was committed on him. His Property was not taken from him against his Will.

It was said by the Prisoner's Council, that the Verdict doth not find, that Salmon was put in Fear; and, say they, there can be no Robbery without the Circumstance of putting in Fear.

I think the Want of that Circumstance alone ought not to be regarded. I am not clear that that Circumstance is of Necessity to be laid in the Indictment, so as the Fact be charged to be done violenter et contra Voluntatem. I know there are Opinions in the Books which seem to make the Circumstance of Fear necessary; but I have seen a good MS. Note of an Opinion of Lord Holt to the contrary. And I am very clear that the Circumstance of actual Fear at the Time of the Robbery need not be strictly proved. Suppose the True Man is knocked down without any previous Warning to awaken his Fears, and lieth totally insensible while the Thief rifeth his Pockets, Is not this a Robbery? And yet where is the Circumstance of Actual Fear? Or suppose the True Man maketh a manful Resistance, but is overpowered and his Property taken from him by the meer Dint of superior Strength, this doubtless is a Robbery. And in Cases where the True Man delivereth his Purse without Resistance, if the Fact be attended with those Circumstances of Violence or Terror which in common Experience are likely to induce a Man to part with his Property for the Safety of his Person, that will amount to a Robbery. And if Fear be a necessary Ingredient, the Law, in Odium Spoliatoris, will presume Fear, where there appeareth to be so just a Ground for it.

I come now to the Case I promised at the Beginning to consider and to distinguish from the present Case. One Norton having been informed that one of the early Stage-Coaches had been frequently robbed near the Town by a single Highwayman, resolved to use his Endeavours to apprehend the Robber. For this Purpose he put a little Money and a Pistol into his Pocket, and attended the Coach in a Post-Chaise, 'till the Highwayman came up to the Company in the Coach and to him, and presenting a Weapon demanded their Money. Norton gave him the little Money he had about him, and then jumped out of the Chaise with his Pistol in his Hand; and with the Assistance of some others took the Highwayman.

The Robber (Belchier) was indicted about a Year ago in this Court for a Robbery on Norton, and convicted. And very properly, in my Opinion, was he convicted.

But that Case differeth widely from the present. In that Case, Norton set out with a laudable Intention to use his Endeavours for apprehending the Highwayman, in case he should that Morning come to rob the Coach, which at that Time was totally uncertain; and it was equally uncertain whether he would come alone or no. In the Case now under Consideration, there was a most detestable Conspiracy between Salmon and the rest of the Prisoners, that his Property should be taken from him under the Pretence and Shew of a Robbery; and Time, Place, and every other Circumstance, were known to Salmon before-hand, and agreed to by him.

In Norton's Case, there was no Concert, no Sort of Connexion between him and the Highwayman; nothing to remove or lessen the Difficulty or Danger Norton might be exposed to in the Adventure. In the present Case, there was a Combination between Salmon and one at least of the supposed Robbers, I mean Blee. And though Salmon might not know the Persons of Ellis and Kelly; yet he well knew that they were brought to the Place by his Friend Blee, and were wholly under his Direction.

So widely do these Cases differ.

To conclude, All the Prisoners have been guilty of a most wicked and detestable Conspiracy to render a very salutary Law subservient to their vile corrupt Views. But great as their Offence is, it doth not amount to Felony*. And therefore the Judgment of the Court is, That they be all discharged of this Indictment.

(Foster's Reports, p. 121—130.)

* Judge Foster, in his Reports, says further, p. 364. "At a Conference among the Judges upon the Case of M. Daniel and others above reported, a general Question was moved, How far and in what Cases the Accessary may avail himself of the Insufficiency of the Evidence in point of Fact, or of the Incompetency of Witnesses in point of Law, produced against the Principal; and in what Cases he may be let in to shew, that the Facts charged and proved against the Principal, do not, in Judgment of Law, amount to Felony? There was in that Case no Occasion to enter far into these Questions; since the Facts, upon which the Point of Law then under Consideration must necessarily turn, were all found by the Special Verdict.

Afterwards, at the February Sessions, 1756, in Alderman Bethell's Mayoralty; they were prosecuted at the Expence of the Crown, upon the Representation of the Judges, for a Conspiracy, on the following Indictment:

“ Stephen M'Daniel, John Berry, James Egan,
 “ (otherwise Gabagan,) and James Salmon, were “ indicted; for that they, being Persons of wicked
 “ and corrupt Minds and Conversations; and “ not having the Fear of God before their Eyes,
 “ but being moved and seduced by the Instigation
 “ of the Devil, not regarding the Laws of this “ Realm, or the Pains and Penalties that should “ befall thereon, did wickedly, unlawfully, and “ maliciously combine, conspire, and agree to“ gether, that one Thomas Blee should procure
 “ two Persons, to wit, Peter Kelly and John Ellis;
 “ to go to Deptford in Kent; and to take divers
 “ Goods and Money from the Person of the said “ Salmon on the King's Highway, who should “ be waiting there for that Purpose; with Intent
 “ that they should cause the said two Persons to “ be apprehended and convicted for robbing him
 “ the said Salmon on the King's Highway, and
 “ so unjustly and wickedly procure to themselves
 “ the Rewards mentioned in the Act of Parlia“ ment, Proclamation, and other Parochial Re“ wards for the apprehending of Highwaymen;
 “ to the great Displeasure of Almighty God,
 “ and the great Dishonour and Scandal of the “ Laws of this Kingdom, and the evil Example
 “ of all others, against his Majesty's Peace, his “ Crown and Dignity, July 22, 1754.”

Upon the Evidence of Blee, and others that confirmed him in every thing, the Court declined calling more Witnesses, though several were in Court; and the Prisoners making but a trifling Defence, they were all found Guilty. Their Sentence:

Stephen M'Daniel, John Berry, James Egan, (otherwise Gabagan,) and James Salmon, to be imprisoned in Newgate for the Term of seven Years; and in that Time to be each of them set in the Pillory twice, in the Manner following; M'Daniel and Berry in Holborn, near Hatton-Garden; Egan and Salmon in the Middle of Smithfield. Afterwards M'Daniel and Berry at the End of King-Street, Cheapside; and Egan and Salmon again in Fleet-Street, near Fetter-Lane End: And at the Expiration of that Time to find Sureties for their good Behaviour for three Years, and to pay a Fine of one Mark each.

Stephen M'Daniel, John Berry, James Egan, (otherwise Gabagan,) and James Salmon, have each once stood on the Pillory, viz. M'Daniel and Berry near Hatton-Garden, on Friday the 5th of March, 1756; and were so severely handled by the Populace, that it was with the utmost Difficulty, that one of the Sheriffs and the Keeper of Newgate; who stood in a Balcony just by, prevented their being utterly destroyed; and so great was the Mob, that the Peace-Officers found it impossible to protect the Prisoners from their Fury; and Egan and Salmon stood in Smithfield on Monday the 8th. They were instantly assaulted with Showers of Oyster-shells, Stones, &c. and had not stood above half an Hour, before Egan was struck dead; and Salmon so dangerously wounded in the Head, that it was thought impossible he could recover. — Whatever Punishment they might deserve from the Law, it is certain they ought not to be killed, through the Rage of the Populace. And we find, that April 11, 1732; Edward Dalton and Richard Griffiths were tried at the Old-Bailey, for the Murder of John Waller in the Pillory, by pelting him with Colliflower-Stalks, &c. and found Guilty; and both executed at Tyburn.

In June Sessions, in Alderman Bethell's Mayoralty, 1756, two of the before-mentioned Miscreants, M'Daniel and Berry, together with one Mary Jones, were tried for Murder, upon a Conspiracy of the like Nature against one Kidden, (who was convicted and executed for a Robbery on the Highway, and at the Gallows, in the most solemn Manner, declared his Innocence) on the following Indictment: Stephen M'Daniel, John Berry, and Mary Jones, were indicted “ for the “ wilful Murder of Joshua Kidden, in maliciously “ causing him to be unjustly apprehended, falsely
 “ accused, tried, convicted, and executed, well
 “ knowing him to be innocent of the Fact laid
 “ to his Charge, with an Intent to share to them“ selves the Reward, &c. Feb. 4, 1754.”

The Fact was plainly proved against them upon this Indictment; and “ the * Special Matter being “ set forth in the Indictment, the Court suffered
 “ them to be convicted, (Death,) but immediately “ respited Judgment; in order that the Point of “ Law might be more fully considered upon “ Motion in Arrest of Judgment †. But the “ Attorney-General declining to argue the Point
 “ of Law, the Prisoners were at a subsequent “ Session discharged of that Indictment.

“ This Prosecution, I am satisfied, arose from “ a laudable Zeal for keeping the Fountains
 “ of Justice pure and unpolluted, and a just “ Indignation against an Offence of this signal “ Enormity.

“ It must be confessed, that there are strong “ Passages in our antient Writers which greatly “ countenance a Prosecution of this kind. But “ those Writers must always be read with great “ Caution upon the Subject of Homicide.

“ The general Question was therefore waived.” — And then goes (p. 365.) to treat on Accessaries; and adds, “ Therefore, if it shall come out in Evidence upon the Trial of the Accessary, as it sometimes hath and frequently may, that the Offence of which the Principal was convicted did not amount to Felony in him, or not to that Species of Felony with which he was charged, the Accessary may avail himself of this, and ought to be acquitted. This was the Case of M'Daniel and others above cited. The Youths who were convicted of the Robbery, being totally ignorant of the Conspiracy mentioned in the Report of that Case, took no Advantage of it, and were convicted upon full and legal Evidence. But when the whole Scene of Villainy came to be disclosed upon the Trial of those Miscreants, they were discharged from that Indictment upon this single Objection, that the Offence of the Principal did not, in the Eye of the Law, amount to a Robbery.

“ If this Opinion was well founded in Point of Law, and shall stand the Test of future Times, as I think it will, every other Person in the like Circumstances may upon his Trial avail himself of it, and will be entitled to a Verdict of Acquittal.” — If any one wants to see more on this Head relating to Accessaries, he may consult Judge Foster's Reports, p. 130, 131, 366, and following Pages.

* Foster's Reports, p. 131, 132.

† “ There being a Doubt, whether the Facts proved against them amounted in Law to Murder, which was to have been argued before the Judges, if the Attorney-General had not declined it, — It is a Doubt which could not have arisen in any other Country, where the Roman Law is allowed to have any Weight; for by that Law it is expressly declared, That Witnesses, who by a false and malicious Testimony procure an innocent Man to be capitally condemned, shall be deemed Guilty of Murder. Quis falsum testimonium dolo malo dixerit, quo quis publico judicio rei capitalis damnaretur. Digest. lib. 48. Tit. 8. s. 2.”

“ Braeton, whom the Writers of that Age for “ the most Part follow, was a Doctor of both “ Laws before he came to the Bench. It is no “ Wonder therefore, that having before him no
 “ tolerable System of the English Law, then in its “ Infant State, he should adopt what he found in “ the Books of the Civil and Canon Law, which “ he had read, and seemeth to have well under“ stood †.
 “ Succeeding Writers of that Age refined
 “ upon him, and in their loose Way wrote upon
 “ the Subject rather as Divines and Casuists than
 “ as Lawyers; and seem to have considered the “ Offence meerly in the Light in which it might “ be supposed to be considered in Foro Casti.
 “ But the Practice of many Ages backwards
 “ doth by no means countenance their Opinion.
 “ And during all the Violence and Rage of the “ Prosecution against Dr. Oates, it seemeth not

“ to have entered into the Imagination of those “ concerned in it, or of the Court, who would “ not have spared him if they could have taken
 “ their full Blow at him, that the Offences of “ which he was convicted could have been so “ charged as to have reached his Life. Though
 “ the Judgment they passed on him, the most “ cruel, I believe, that ever was given in West- “ minster-Hall in Case of a Misdemeanor, might “ probably have ended in his Death §.”

Egan was killed in the Pillory, but M^r Daniel and Berry continued in Newgate under their former Sentence till Feb. 26, 1762, when John Berry died in Newgate; and the Year following M^r Daniel procured himself to be sent abroad for Life to the Indies, as a Soldier. — Salmon, I take it, died in Newgate before.

After

After Mr. Moore had opened the Indictment, Mr. Serjeant Davy spoke as follows:

May it please your Lordships, and you Gentlemen of the Jury;

I am Council in this Cause for the Prosecution against the Prisoner at the Bar, who stands indicted on an Act of Parliament made in the ninth Year of his late Majesty, very well known by the Name of the Black Act. That Act of Parliament, reciting the several Mischiefs, and constituting several Felonies, amongst other Things, enacts, that if any Person shall knowingly send any Letter, without any Name subscribed thereto, or signed with a fictitious Name, demanding Money, Venison, or other valuable Thing; every Person so offending, being thereof lawfully convicted, shall be adjudged guilty of Felony, and shall suffer Death as in Cases of Felony, without Benefit of Clergy.

It is on that Act that this Indictment now comes before you, that you have heard read. You see it is for sending a Letter; for it is on the first of these Letters that the present Indictment is founded; the others are sent in Consequence of the first, and explanatory of his Intentions.

I will open to you, as concisely as I can, the several Circumstances we have in Evidence, in order to affect the Prisoner at the Bar: They are Circumstances of that Nature, corresponding so exactly with the Prisoner's Case, affecting him so very minutely, that the several Circumstances do infer, I had almost said, an Impossibility of his Innocence: You will find they all tally so exactly, they are so particularly relative to him, that it will be offering Violence to every Rule of Reason, not to find him guilty.

Gentlemen, on the 29th of November, a Letter was found under the Door of the Ordnance-Office, directed to his Grace the Duke of Marlborough: Upon opening this Letter, which was wrote in Imitation of Print-Hand, bearing Date that Day the 29th of November, it will be necessary, for the sake of the following Circumstances, to desire your Attention to the several Parts. These are the Words:

To his Grace the Duke of Marlborough.

xxviii November.

“ My Lord,

“ As Ceremony is an idle Thing upon most Occasions, more especially to Persons in my State of Mind, I shall proceed immediately to acquaint you with the Motive and End of addressing this Epistle to you, which is equally interesting to us both. You are to know, then, that my present Situation in Life is such, that I should prefer Annihilation to a Continuance in it: Desperate Diseases require desperate Remedies; and you are the Man I have pitched upon, either to make me, or to unmake myself. As I never had the Honour to live among the Great, the Tenour of my Proposals will not be very courtly; but let that be an Argument to enforce the Belief of what I am now going to write. It has employed my Invention, for some Time, to find out a Method to destroy another, without exposing my own Life; that I have accomplished, and defy the Law. Now for the Application of it. I am desperate, and must be provided for: You have it in your Power, it is my Business

“ to make it your Inclination; to serve me; which you must determine to comply with, by procuring me a genteel Support for my Life; or your own will be at a Period before this Sessions of Parliament is over. I have more Motives than one for singling you out first, upon this Occasion; and I give you this fair Warning, because the Means I shall make use of are too fatal to be eluded by the Power of Physic. If you think this of any Consequence, you will not fail to meet the Author, on Sunday next, at Ten in the Morning, or on Monday, (if the Weather should be rainy on Sunday) near the first Tree beyond the Stile in Hyde-Park, in the Foot-walk to Kensington: Secrefy and Compliance may preserve you from a double Danger of this Sort; as there is a certain Part of the World, where your Death has more than been wished for, upon other Motives. I know the World too well, to trust this Secret in any Breast but my own. A few Days determine me your Friend or Enemy.

“ FELTON.

“ You will apprehend that I mean you should be alone; and depend upon it, that a Discovery of any Artifice in this Affair will be fatal to you: My Safety is insured by my Silence; for Confession only can condemn me.”

This Letter containing every Thing that is dreadful, that might raise Apprehensions of Terror, subscribed by a Name which is painful to almost every Ear—the Name Felton! That was the Name of the Assassin that stabbed the Duke of Buckingham at Portsmouth.

My Lord Duke, not intimidated by the Letter, though greatly surprized at it, and willing to find out the Author, was not afraid to endeavour to apprehend him; he went alone to the Spot, and at the Time appointed; however, there was some Attendant on his Grace at a Distance, in order to observe what passed on the Occasion. My Lord Duke had been there some Time on Horseback, and as much undressed as a Man of his Quality is. He had Pistols before him; he had been there some Time, and saw nobody at all at that particular Place. After waiting some considerable Time, he was returning, and observed a Person come to the particular Spot just by the Tree beyond the Stile in Hyde-Park, by the Foot-walk to Kensington: That Person held a Handkerchief to his Mouth in a seeming disconsolate Manner, looking into the Water, and stood still a very considerable while. Upon his Grace seeing this, that the Man was not pursuing any Way, the Duke had no Doubt in his own Mind, but that this Man (be he who he would) must be the Person who had sent him this Letter. The Man fauntering just at the Place, the Duke rode up to the Spot, expecting the Person would speak to him: His Grace asked the Man, Whether he wanted to speak to him? He said, *No.—Sir, said the Duke, do you know me? I am the Duke of Marlborough; telling you that, perhaps you have something to say to me.—No, my Lord.—*No Notice being taken, the Duke came away.

Gentlemen, you see, this was an Appointment on a Sunday to meet at a Place where several People might be supposed to be walking: What was the View of that Person may be seen by and by. The Author of this Letter speaks of his his being exceedingly guarded against the Possibility of a Detection; he boasts of the Care and Caution he had used for that Purpose, — He defies the Law, — nothing but Confession could condemn him, — his Safety was insured by his Silence, — he knew the World too well, to trust this Secret in any Breast but his own.

A few Days after, in the same Week, the Duke received a second Letter. This also was put under the Door of the Office of Ordnance, and was also wrote in Imitation of a Print-Hand: But the Directions of both the Letters are not; there will be Occasion to take Notice of that Circumstance by and by. The second Letter is in these Words:

To his Grace the Duke of Marlborough.

“ My Lord,

“ You receive this as an Acknowledgment of your Punctuality as to the Time and Place of Meeting on Sunday last, though it was owing to you that it answered no Purpose. The Pageantry of being armed, and the Ensign of your Order, were useless, and too conspicuous: You needed no Attendant; the Place was not calculated for Mischief, nor was any intended. If you walk in the West Isle of Westminster-Abbey, towards Eleven o’Clock on Sunday next, your Sagacity will point out the Person, whom you will address by asking his Company to take a Turn or two with you. You will not fail, on Inquiry, to be acquainted with the Name and Place of Abode, according to which Directions you will please to send two or three hundred Pound Bank-Notes the next Day by the Penny-Post. Exert not your Curiosity too early: It is in your Power to make me grateful on certain Terms. I have Friends who are faithful; but they do not bark before they bite.

“ I am, &c.

F.”

Gentlemen, you see, the Writer of the second Letter speaks of being himself in the Park, or at least of knowing that the Duke was there, at the Time and Place appointed: And therefore this was a farther Circumstance to convince the Duke, that the Person, whom he had seen the Sunday before in Hyde-Park and spoke to, was the Writer of the second Letter. You see it speaks of the Duke’s Punctuality as to the Time and Place of Meeting, the particular Dress his Grace was in, and assigns that as the Reason of not speaking to him the Sunday before: So you see, Gentlemen, that Circumstance, which was a little unaccountable of itself, of the Duke’s not being owned by the Person whom he had seen the Sunday before, is by this second Letter accounted for; — the Pageantry of being armed, and the Ensign of his Order. He had then only a Star on, and that perhaps an old one, so as not to be conspicuous: So that this accounts for the Person’s not speaking to the Duke in Hyde-Park. There can be no Doubt at all, but that the Writer of the second was the Writer of the first Letter.

The Consequence then of this second Appointment to meet the Writer of the Letters in the West Isle of Westminster-Abbey, you will observe. Public Places were appointed, and at public Times; the first in Hyde-Park, the second in Prayer-Time at Westminster-Abbey, where the Duke was by his Sagacity to point out the Person — the Writer of this Letter. The Duke accordingly went to Westminster-Abbey, to the West Isle, (though indeed, properly speaking, we don’t know which to call the West Isle, the Church standing East and West.) His Grace went to the Westernmost Part of the Abbey, and observed no body lurking or standing in Circumstances suspicious: After a little Time, his Grace was surprized to see that the same Person, whom he had seen the Sunday before exactly at the Spot in Hyde-Park, appeared just in this Place at the West End of Westminster-Abbey; but he was surprized the more, that this Person did not speak to him. Perhaps his Grace had not then considered the Tenour of this Letter; for it was not to be expected, that the Writer would address the Duke, but rather refers to the Duke’s Sagacity: — Your Sagacity will point out the Person, it then directs, whom you will address by asking his Company to take a Turn or two with you. His Grace perhaps did not consider this exactly; but waiting some Time for the Person to speak to him, and finding he did not, his Grace asked him, Sir, have you any thing to say to me? No, my Lord. — Have you nothing at all to say to me? No. — Have you nothing at all to say to me? No. he had nothing to say to him. Now I should have mentioned to you, when this Person came into the Abbey, another Person came in with him, who seemed by his Appearance to be a substantial Tradesman, a good Sort of Man. These two Persons, after stopping and looking about at the Monuments near the West Gate of the Abbey, the Duke being sure one of them was the same Man he had seen before in Hyde-Park, his Grace thought proper to go and stand by them, to see if that Person would speak to him: Seeing the Duke took no Notice of him, they both went towards the Choir: The Stranger went into the Choir, and the Man that his Grace had seen in the Park, came back again (leaving his Friend there) to the Spot where the Duke was. The Duke then asked him, Whether he had any thing to say to him? No, he had nothing at all to say to him. No, he had nothing at all to say. Then the Duke walked a little on the other Side of the Isle, to see whether the Man would follow him, or had a Mind to speak to him at another Spot. He observed the Man looked eagerly at him: May-be it may be understood, he expected the Duke’s Sagacity would point out the Man: However, the Duke did not do what the Letter required, that is, Ask him to take a Turn with him.

At this second Time there was somebody that was with the Duke (when I say with him, I don’t mean close to him, but) near enough, so as to take Notice what passed, in order to apprehend the Person, so as to put it beyond all Doubt that he was the Author of those Letters. The Duke, and this Attendant of his, went out at the West Door of the Abbey, in order to go to his Coach. Now you will find by and by, in the next Letter, that the Writer of these Letters took Notice of this Attendant, but was under no Apprehension of being watched by any body else; and that will account for those Circumstances I am going to mention: As soon as the Duke went out of the Abbey, that Man, whom the Duke had seen at both these Places, watched the Duke out of the Abbey, and as soon as his Grace had passed the Door of the Abbey, he went up, hid himself in a Corner, concealed from a Possibility of being seen by his Grace in case he had looked back, and so watched him into his Coach. It may be asked, Why his Grace, upon having such clear Conviction in his own Mind, that that Person must be the Writer of both the Letters, did not apprehend him? His Grace will tell you, he did not think himself justified in so doing; he could not reconcile it to his own Mind to take up a Man, where there was a Possibility of his Innocence.

Gentlemen, a few Days after this, came a third Letter to the Duke, wrapped up in a very small Compass, and directed to his Grace the Duke of Marlborough at his House. You will see, by comparing the Directions, that this third Letter was wrote by the Writer of the first Letter: It begins, My Lord, I am fully convinced you had a Companion on Sunday. So far it is proved, that the Writer of these Letters was in the Park on the first Sunday, and saw the Duke there; and was in the Abbey on the second Sunday, and saw the Duke there; and that it was the same Man that the Duke saw at both these Times. I interpret it as owing to the Weakness of Human Nature; but such Proceeding is far from being ingenuous, and may produce bad Effects, whilst it is impossible to answer the End proposed. — Guarded through all. — You will see me again soon, as it were by Accident, and may easily find where I go to; in Consequence of which, by being sent to, I shall wait on your Grace, but expect to be quite alone, and converse in Whispers. You will likewise give your Honour, upon meeting, that no Part of the Conversation shall transpire. — So that you see, as he was guarded before, he was determined to make it impossible to be discovered: If they were to converse in Whispers, and to be quite alone, it was impossible for other Evidence to rise up against him. — These and the former Terms complied with, insure your Safety; my Revenge, in case of Non-compliance, (or any Scheme to expose me,) will be slower, but not less sure, and strong Suspicion the utmost that can possibly ensue upon it. You see, how artful he had contrived it: He was determined that nothing more than strong Suspicion should ever be in Evidence against him. — While the Chances will be tenfold against you, you will possibly be in Doubt after the Meeting, but it is quite necessary the Outside should be a Mask of the In. The Family of the BLOODS is not extinct, though they are not in my Scheme. The Word BLOODS is in Capital Letters. That is a dreadful Name! As Felton was the Villain who assassinated the Duke of Buckingham, so this is the Name of the Fellow who seized the Duke of Ormond, and was going to carry him to Tyburn to execute him, and also who stole the Crown out of the Tower of London.

You see, Gentlemen, by this third Letter, that the Duke was to expect to hear something farther from the Writer of these Letters. It contains no Appointment, but leads the Duke to expect he shall see the Writer again as by Accident, and was to observe where he should go to, that the Duke might know where to send for him; and that he would come in Consequence of being sent for; but when he came to the Duke, the Terms were, to be a secret Conversation, not in the Presence of a third Person, and that too by Whispers, and the Duke promising, upon his Honour, that no Part of it should transpire, without which he was not led to think the Writer should disclose any thing at all. The first Letter was dated and received the 29th of November, the second received the next Week, the third in the second Week of December, and the last was some Time in April.

The Duke waited, expecting to hear farther; but heard nothing more until the Middle of April. About the 14th there came a Letter to his Grace, wrote in a mean Hand, but not in Imitation of a Print-Hand, as the others were. These are the Words of the fourth Letter:

To his Grace the Duke of Marlborough.

“ May it please your Grace,

“ I have Reason to believe, that the Son of
“ one Barnard, a Surveyor in Abingdon-Buildings,
“ Westminster, is acquainted with some Secrets
“ that nearly concern your Safety; his Father is “ now out of Town, which will give you an “ Opportunity of questioning him more privately.
“ It would be useless to your Grace, as well as “ dangerous to me, to appear more publicly in “ this Affair.

“ Your sincere Friend,

“ ANONYMOUS.

“ He frequently goes

“ to Storey's-Gate

“ Coffee-house.”

Gentlemen, the Duke sent for Mr. Barnard, the Son of Mr. Barnard, according to the Directions in that Letter. This Letter, you will see, bears no Date at all; no Memorandum, or any thing which could possibly indicate when the Letter was sent, or when the Duke received it. The Duke, when Mr. Barnard came, was sitting in his Room; and though upon opening the Door of the outer Room (which was at threescore Yards Distance from where the Duke was) yet, the Moment Mr. Barnard entered the Room, he was sure that was the Man he had seen both in the Park and in the Abbey. Though the Duke had no Doubt in his own Mind on the former Circumstances, that the Person whom he had seen before was the Writer of the first Letter, now he was fully convinced that he was the Writer of all the Letters. The Duke was determined the Scheme should not so far take Effect, as to engage himself upon his Honour, that no Part of the Conversation should transpire; if so, nothing could have prevailed upon him to prosecute: Therefore you are not to expect he complied with a Conversation in Whispers, and a Promise on the Duke's Part, that no Part of the Conversation should transpire. The third Letter will tell you, that the Person that entered the Room was the Writer of all these Letters. As soon as he came into the Room, the Duke took him to the Window, and asked him, Whether he wanted to speak with him? No, my Lord. — No, Sir! I have received a Letter, which tells me, that you are acquainted with some Circumstances that nearly concern my Safety. — Not I, my Lord. This is very surprizing, Sir! This is the Letter; and shewed him the last Letter. Still the Duke had not given him any Promise at all of not exposing the Conversation. Sir, it is very odd that you should be pointed out to me, to acquaint me with some Circumstances relating to my Safety, because it mentions some Circumstances as to the Time, the Place where where you are to be found, your Father's being out of Town, and the like. The Prisoner incautiously said immediately, My Lord, my Father was out of Town at that Time. — At what Time, Sir? The Letter bears no Date, nor have I mentioned to you a Syllable when I received it: How came you to know when I received this Letter, that you should tell me, your Father was not in Town at that Time? You speak clearly, as knowing when I received this Letter; therefore give me Leave on this Occasion to tell you, that I do not only suspect you know of this Letter, but that you have sent to me some other Letters that I have received before: Then acquainting him with the other three Letters, his Grace observing upon them, that it was very odd and strange, that the Letters corresponded so certainly and decisively on him, he being always at the Places at the Times appointed, and that he being the Person named in the fourth Letter too, and that he knew the Time of the Duke's receiving that Letter, the Duke put it upon him, Sir, I am surprized at the Writer of this Letter; one should suppose from the Style, and its being grammatically wrote, that the Person who wrote it had had some Share of Education; at least I am surprized, that a Man that has had any Education at all, can descend to such a Means of getting Money. My Lord, your Grace need not be surprized at that; a Man may be learned, and very poor. Very fond was he of softening Things. My Lord, you need not be affrighted; I dare say the Writer of these Letters is a very Madman. Why! You are very much concerned to apologize for the Writer hereof, said the Duke; picking out this Circumstance, the Man does not know me, he expresses his very great Surprize at my appearing in the Park with the Ensign of my Order, and my being armed. As incautious as he had been before, he is incautious upon that too, and said, Indeed I was surprized to see your Grace armed. Was you so? said the Duke; was you surprized to see me armed? Can any Man doubt a Moment who wrote these Letters? But however, Mr. Barnard, as you insist upon it, and declare so solemnly your Innocence, I will not so far invade the Laws of Hospitality, whatever Crime you have done. (He would not for the World apprehend a Man in his own House whom he had sent for; he let him go safe Home again; it was for that Reason he would not give his Promise not to reveal the Conversation; but in regard to the Public he was determined to prosecute.) The Duke said to him, Sir, if you are not the Writer of these Papers, it much becomes you to find out who is; for your Name is particularly mentioned in this last Letter; either you are the Writer, or allow me to say, somebody else owes you very Ill-will that was the Writer of them. I am relying merely on the Terms of the last Letter, wherein he was to inform his Grace of some Secrets that nearly concern his Safety: What was the Answer that the Prisoner made? First, what would have been the Answer? Must not a Man be struck with Astonishment, to hear he was one that was to inform his Grace of Things that nearly concerned his Safety, so much to the Hazard of his own Life? What became him, as having a Regard to his own Reputation and Safety? To determine, as far as in his Power, to find out the Writer; nay, to have given the Duke Assurance that he would do it: Instead of that, What was his Behaviour? A Smile of Contempt — an unmannerly Laugh in the Duke's Face, as if it did not concern him at all.

Gentlemen, I should think that to this there can hardly be a Circumstance added more clearly to convince any Man alive of the Circumstances of this Man's being the Author of these Letters; but you will find afterwards the Prisoner (for what Reason let him tell if he can) told his Grace, he had desired his Companion that was with him in Westminster-Abbey to leave him: Why? Because he thought the Duke wanted to tell him of some Place he had for him. Good God! How could he imagine he wanted to tell him of a Place? A Person whom he had never seen before he saw him in the Park, how could he expect that? This was his awkward Reason for desiring his Companion to leave him.

I beg Pardon, if I have omitted any Thing; these are the Circumstances that have occurred to me on this Occasion; they are so strong and necessary in the Proof of the Prisoner's Guilt, that I will venture to say, it is much more satisfactory to an indifferent Person, than positive Testimony, — the positive Testimony of any Man, as Men are liable to Mistakes, as a Mistake in Time, a Mistake in Persons, will exceedingly vary the Case; but Variety of Circumstances which tally in their own Nature, cannot lye or deceive.

This Prosecution is commenced merely for the sake of Justice; I am instructed to say from his Grace, it is perfectly indifferent to him what will be the Issue of this Trial: He thought it his Duty to come here, and leaves it to his Country to determine as they shall think proper.

The Duke of Marlborough sworn.

I received this Letter from an unknown Hand, dated the 29th of November, and directed to me, appointing me to meet the Writer on a certain Spot in Hyde-Park.

(The first Letter read.)

To his Grace the Duke of Marlborough.

[With Care and Speed.]

xxviii November.

“ My Lord,

“ As Ceremony is an idle Thing upon most “ Occasions, more especially to Persons in my “ State of Mind, I shall proceed immediately to “ acquaint you with the Motive and End of “ addressing this Epistle to you, which is equally “ interesting to us both. You are to know, then,
 “ that my present Situation in Life is such, that I “ should prefer Annihilation to a Continuance in
 “ it: Desperate Diseases require desperate Remedies;
 “ and you are the Man I have pitched upon,
 “ either to make me, or to unmake yourself. As I “ never had the Honour to live among the Great,
 “ the Tenour of my Proposals will not be very “ courtly; but let that be an Argument to enforce
 “ the Belief of what I am now going to write.
 “ It has employed my Invention, for some Time,
 “ to find out a Method to destroy another, without “ exposing my own Life; that I have accomplished,
 “ and defy the Law. Now for the Application of it. I am desperate, and must “ be provided for: You have it in your Power,
 “ it

“ it is my Business to make it your Inclination,
 “ to serve me; which you must determine to “ comply with, by procuring me a genteel Sup“ port for my Life; or your own will be at a “ Period before this Sessions of Parliament is “ over. I have more Motives than one for “ singling you out first, upon this Occasion; and “ I give you this fair Warning, because the “ Means I shall make use of are too fatal to be “ eluded by the Power of Physic. If you think
 “ this of any Consequence, you will not fail to “ meet the Author, on Sunday next, at Ten in “ the Morning, or on Monday, (if the Weather
 “ should be rainy on Sunday) near the first Tree
 “ beyond the Stile in Hyde-Park, in the Foot-
 “ walk to Kensington: Secresy and Compliance
 “ may preserve you from a double Danger of this “ Sort; as there is a certain Part of the World,
 “ where your Death has more than been wished
 “ for, upon other Motives. I know the World “ too well, to trust this Secret in any Breast but “ my own. A few Days determine me your “ Friend or Enemy.

“ FELTON.

“ You will apprehend that I mean you should “ be alone; and depend upon it, that a Discovery
 “ of any Artifice in this Affair will be fatal to “ you: My Safety is infured by my Silence; for “ Confession only can condemn me.”

Q. What did your Grace do upon the Receipt of this Letter?

D. of Marlb. I went to the Place at the Time appointed. It was at the first Tree near the Stile in Hyde-Park, in the Way to Kensington, at the End of the Serpentine Water, betwixt that Water and a little Pond. I was there some Time, and saw no body stop that I could suspect to be the Person; upon which I was going away: But as I came to Hyde-Park Corner, I turned my Horse, and saw a Person stand loitering, and looking at the Water over the Bridge. This was,
 I believe, within twenty Yards of the Tree, and this induced me to go back again. I rode up to the Person very gently, and passed by him once or twice, expecting him to speak to me; he did not. I made him a Bow, and asked him, if he had something to say to me? He said, No, I don't know you. I said, I am the Duke of Marlborough, now you know me, I imagine you have something to say to me: He said, No, I have not. Then I rode away.

Q. Was your Grace armed?

D. of Marlb. I had Pistols before me.

Q. Had your Grace any Great Coat on?

D. of Marlb. No, I had not. My Star might easily be seen.

Q. Does your Grace see any body here that you saw there?

D. of Marlb. It was the Prisoner at the Bar.

Q. Had your Grace any Servant or Attendant with you?

D. of Marlb. I had no Servant with me; there was a Person, a Friend of mine, at a good Distance in the Park. A Day or two after, I cannot be sure whether it was the next Day, or the Day after that, I received a second Letter.

Council for Prisoner. I am under a great Difficulty, whether I shall object against this Letter being read or not. Your Lordship sees the first is a Letter sent to the Duke of Marlborough, demanding a very valuable Thing, viz. a genteel Employment for Life. This is to the same noble Duke, not demanding that valuable Thing;

 but demanding two or three hundred Pounds in Bank-Notes. These Demands are very different and distinct from one another: So different and distinct, that they seem to me to be different Felonies. My Lord, I apprehend one Felony, whoever it may affect, cannot be Evidence of another Felony; nor can this Letter, supposing there is any thing in it amounting to a Felony, be Evidence to another Felony—

but there were some Acknowledgment in that directly affecting the Prisoner at the Bar; but I am inclined that the whole of this Matter shall come before the Court, from my Opinion of the Defendant's Innocence, and the substantial Merits of his Defence; and I think myself very happy that I have the Assistance of such a Court, who are always Council for the Prisoner, where the Life, Property, and Character of a Man is at Stake; and who, under these Circumstances, will do that which is right, admit or not admit what is not proper Evidence. I don't firmly object to it; I don't think it for the Interest of my Client to suppress it, who is called upon to answer in this Matter; therefore I leave the Court to do as they think proper.

Council for Crown. I desire, if you have any Objections, to make them now.

Court. The Use made of this Letter is to support the Evidence of the first Letter, let the Contents be what they will. The Use they make of it is to shew, that the Prisoner at the Bar was the Writer or Sender of the first Letter.

(The second Letter read.)

To his Grace the Duke of Marlborough.

“ My Lord,

“ You receive this as an Acknowledgment of “ your Punctuality as to the Time and Place of “ Meeting on Sunday last, though it was owing “ to you that it answered no Purpose. The “ Pageantry of being armed, and the Ensign of “ your Order, were useless, and too conspicuous:
 “ You needed no Attendant; the Place was not “ calculated for Mischief, nor was any intended.
 “ If you walk in the West Isle of *Westminster-
 “ Abbey*, towards Eleven o'Clock on Sunday next,
 “ your Sagacity will point out the Person, whom “ you will address by asking his Company to “ take a Turn or two with you. You will not “ fail, on Inquiry, to be acquainted with the “ Name and Place of Abode, according to which “ Directions you will please to send two or three “ hundred Pound Bank-Notes the next Day by
 “ the Penny-Post. Exert not your Curiosity too
 “ early: It is in your Power to make me grateful
 “ on certain Terms. I have Friends who are “ faithful; but they do not bark before they “ bite.

“ I am, &c.

“ &c.

“ F.”

Q. What did your Grace do upon the Receipt of this second Letter?

D. of

D. of Marlb. I went to Westminster-Abbey at the Time the Letter appointed. I had been walking there about five or six Minutes before I saw any body that I suspected; then I saw the Person I had seen before in Hyde-Park, and another Person who seemed to be a good looking Man, a substantial Tradesman: They came in and looked on the Monuments. I knowing the Person again, went and stood by them; but the Prisoner said nothing to me: Soon after they both of them went towards the Choir; the Stranger, I may call him, went into the Choir, and the Prisoner turned back and came towards me, but did not speak to me. Then I asked him, if he had any thing to say to me, or any Commands for me? He said, No, my Lord, I have not. I said, Sure you have? He said, No, my Lord. He walked up and down one Side the Isle, and I the other to give him a little more Time; but he did not speak: Then I went away out at the great Door, and left him in the Abbey. I looked back to see if he watched me going out, but I did not see him.

Q. Had your Grace any body with you in the Abbey?

D. of Marlb. There were two or three People placed in Disguise, ready, if I had given them the Signal, to have him taken up. Though I was certain it was the same Person whom I had seen and spoke to in the Park, I thought not proper to give the Signal, but to run a little longer Risque rather than to take up an innocent Man. Very soon after this I received another Letter, this is it.

(The third Letter read.)

To his Grace the Duke of Marlborough.

“ My Lord,

“ I am fully convinced you had a Companion
“ on Sunday. I interpret it as owing to the Weak-
“ nefs of human Nature; but such Proceeding
“ is far from being ingenuous, and may produce
“ bad Effects; whilst it is impossible to answer
“ the End proposed. You will see me again
“ soon, as it were by Accident, and may easily “ find where I go to; in Consequence of which,
“ by being sent to, I shall wait on your Grace,
“ but expect to be quite alone, and to converse
“ in Whispers. You will likewise give your “ Honour, upon meeting, that no Part of the “ Conversation shall transpire. These and the “ former Terms complied with, insure your “ Safety: My Revenge, in case of Non-com“ pliance, (or any Scheme to expose me) will be “ slower, but not less sure; and strong Suspicion
“ the utmost that can possibly ensue upon it;
“ while the Chances would be ten-fold against “ you. You will possibly be in Doubt after the “ Meeting, but it is quite necessary the Outside “ should be a Mask to the In. The Family of “ the BLOODS is not extinct, though they are “ not in my Scheme.”

D. of Marlb. At about two Months after the Receipt of this, I received another Letter, this is it.

(The fourth Letter read.)

To his Grace the Duke of Marlborough.

“ May it please your Grace,

“ I have Reason to believe, that the Son of
“ one Barnard, a Surveyor in Abingdon-Buildings,

“ Westminster, is acquainted with some Secrets
“ that nearly concern your Safety; his Father is “ now out of Town, which will give you an “ Opportunity of questioning him more pri“ vately. It would be useless to your Grace, as “ well as dangerous to me, to appear more “ publicly in this Affair.

“ Your sincere Friend,

“ ANONYMOUS.

“ He frequently goes
“ to Storey's-Gate
“ Coffee-House.”

D. of Marlb. There is no Date to this Letter. About a Week or ten Days after I received this Letter, I sent a Message to the Coffee-House, by Mr. Merrick, who returned and told me he found Mr. Barnard there, and that he said, What could the Duke of Marlborough want with him? He had spoke with him once in Hyde-Park, and another Time in Westminster-Abbey. The Messenger told me, he said he would wait on me, which he did at Marlborough-House, about half an Hour after Ten o'Clock, I think, on the Friday following.

Prisoner. It was Thursday, my Lord.

D. of Marlb. I cannot be sure as to the Day. When he came in, I knew, at first Sight, it was the same Person that I had seen in the Park and in the Abbey. I desired him to walk with me into a Room, and immediately shut the Door when we were in. I asked him as before; he said, he had nothing to say to me; then I told him of the last Letter I received, that it mentioned his Name, and that he knew something concerning my Safety; he said, he knew nothing of it. Then I recapitulated all the Letters, beginning with the first, and remarked to him, that it was strange to me, that a Man that wrote so very correct, without false English in any Shape, should be guilty of so low an Action; he said, A Man may be very learned and very poor. I then took Notice of the second Letter, and said, there must be something very odd in the Man; he said, I imagine the Man must be mad; I said, he seems surprized that I should have Pistols; said he, I was surprized to see your Grace with Pistols, and your Star on. I said, Why was you surprized at that? His Answer was, after stopping a Moment, It was so cold a Day; I wondered you had not a Great Coat on: Then I afterwards shew'd him the Letter again where his Name was mentioned, and walked with him to the Window; and as I read it, when I came to that Part where it said his Father was out of Town, he said, It is very odd, my Father was then out of Town. I said nothing to him of that, though it struck me a good deal, as there was no Date to the Letter. I said, if you are innocent, it behoves you much more than me to find out the Author of those Letters, particularly the last; for it was an Attempt to blast his Character behind his Back; he seemed to give me a Smile, and away he went. I did not apprehend him then.

Council for the Prisoner. In what Manner did your Grace receive this first Letter?

D. of Marlb. I am Master of the Ordnance. Somebody or other had put it in under the Door of the Office in the Night-time, and the Keeper of the Door sent it to me the next Day.

Q. As to the second Letter, which Way did your Grace receive that?

D. of Marl. That was sent the same Way, by being put under the Door as the other.

Council. In Consequence of the first Letter, your Grace went into the Park on Horse-back, and was there some Time without seeing any body you suspected, Were there not People there?

D. of Marl. I saw several People on Horse-back, and some few walking in a Hurry on Foot.

Q. Pray, my Lord Duke, after you had seen this Person loitering, was there any thing going forward, such as hunting a Duck, or the like?

D. of Marl. No, nothing in the World as I saw; it was a very cold Day.

Q. Your Lordship said there was another Person at a Distance, an Attendant on your Grace; How far might that Person be off when you was speaking to the Prisoner?

D. of Marl. I cannot tell exactly. I had spoke to him to keep a great Way off.

Q. Was he in View of your Grace?

D. of Marl. I dare say he was.

Q. Might not any Person equally see that Person as well your Grace?

D. of Marl. I suppose he might.

Q. Was your Grace there at the Time?

D. of Marl. I was there rather before the Time, I believe.

Q. Did he in the least offer to follow your Grace?

D. of Marl. No, he seemed to go the other Way.

Q. With respect to the second Letter, your Grace went according to Appointment to Westminster-Abbey, and saw the Prisoner and another Person come into the Abbey; Before that other Person had left him, had your Grace been near him?

D. of Marl. I had; I stood by him in Hopes he would speak to me, if he was the Person that wrote the Letters.

Q. Whether the Circumstance was not such, that that other Person might very well believe your Grace wanted to speak to the Prisoner?

D. of Marl. That I cannot tell. I stood very near the Prisoner, wanting him to speak to me. It is possible he might think so.

Q. Whether there were not at that Time several Persons attending on your Grace?

D. of Marl. There were two or three.

Q. Did your Grace speak to either of them in the Abbey?

D. of Marl. No, I did not.

Q. Whether if there was any other Person in Westminster-Abbey at that Time, whether that third Person might not have taken Mr. Barnard for your Grace's Companion, as your Grace spoke to him?

D. of Marl. Upon my Word I cannot tell that.

Q. Could there be a Person to whom that Expression, in the third Letter, might be applied, referring to your Grace's Companion, besides Mr. Barnard?

D. of Marl. Yes, it might be applied to a Gentleman that went away with me in the Coach from the Abbey.

Q. Whether your Grace did not bow several Times to the Prisoner before you spoke?

D. of Marl. No, I don't think I did.

Council. With respect to the third Letter, your Grace heard no more of that till the fourth came?

D. of Marl. I did not; and when the fourth came I sent to Mr. Barnard.

Q. Did your Grace know Mr. Barnard before you received these Letters?

D. of Marl. No, I did not at all.

Q. Does your Grace now know whether he was a Person in such Situation in Life, as answered to the Description in the Letters?

D. of Marl. I don't know the least Thing of him, either Character or Circumstances.

Council. Then, abstracted from these Circumstances, should your Grace have entertained any Suspicion of him more than of any other Person?

D. of Marl. I did not know there was such a Man in the World.

Q. When he came to your Grace's House, did he come in very readily?

D. of Marl. He did.

Q. Whether his Answer was, I was surprized to see you armed too, or I was surprized to see you armed?

D. of Marl. I cannot take upon me to say whether he laid such an Emphasis on it or not.

Council. Then he made no Secret of seeing your Grace in the Park?

D. of Marl. No.

Council. Nor in the Abbey?

D. of Marl. No.

Q. Your Grace mention'd, he said, It is very odd, my Father was out of Town then! Could your Grace apply that, in the Manner it was spoke, that his Father was out of Town when the Message came to him?

D. of Marl. I really understood him, that he knew his Father was out of Town at the Time of his writing the Letter.

Q. Did your Grace mention the Time you received it?

D. of Marl. No, I did not mention any Time.

Q. Did he come punctually to his Time?

D. of Marl. He did; I think the Messenger said he would wait on me about half an Hour after Ten.

Q. In what Manner was he apprehended?

D. of Marl. I do not know; I understood he was summoned.

Q. It has been said, he went away with a Smile; Pray, my Lord Duke, might not that Smile express the Consciousness of his Innocence as well as any thing else?

D. of Marl. I shall leave that to the Great Judge.

Q. He said, A Man might be very learned, and very poor; Does your Grace know whether this Person at the Bar is either learned or poor?

D. of Marl. I do not know indeed.

Q. May not that Expression fall from any Man whatever?

D. of Marl. I cannot say as to that.

James Merrick. I was directed from his Grace to carry a Message to Storey's-Gate Coffee-house; I went, and there was the Prisoner at the Bar: I told him, the Duke of Marlborough wanted to speak with him; he expressed some Surprize at what the Duke should want with him, but no Fear.

Q. When was this?

Merrick. This was on Tuesday the 25th of April, in the Evening; and he said, he would wait on the Duke on the Thursday following, between Ten and Eleven o'Clock.

Cross-Examination.

Q. What Reason did he give for not waiting on his Grace sooner?

Merrick. His Excuse was, he was going out of Town.

Q. Did he say any thing to you of his having seen the Duke before?

Merrick. He did. He said, he had seen his Grace three Times in his Life, once in Hyde-Park, and once in Westminster-Abbey, and once at the Camp at Byfleet; he said, he did not know the Duke when he saw him in Hyde-Park, till the Duke himself told him who he was.

Q. Did he tell you what had passed either in the Park or in the Abbey?

Merrick. He told me, that in the Park the Duke rode up to him, and asked him, Sir, do you want any thing with me? His Answer was, No. Then the Duke asked him, If he knew who he was? He answered, No, again. Then the Duke told him, he was the Duke of Marlborough; then he made his Bow: And in Westminster-Abbey he told me he thought the Duke had spoke to him; but on turning about he said, he did not; and he turned and went away.

Q. Where had you this Conversation?

Merrick. This was in a Room in the Coffee-house by ourselves.

Q. Did he tell you this voluntarily?

Merrick. He did. At first he seemed surprized, and then said, he recollected these Circumstances.

Q. Did he express any Signs of Fear?

Merrick. No; but he seemed much surprized.

William Marsden. I was appointed by his Grace the Duke and Justice Fielding to watch the Duke in Westminster-Abbey, and had two Constables there in order to apprehend the Person, if his Grace had thought proper to give the Signal.

Q. Were you all together?

Marsden. No, but so dispersed that our Intention might not be known; I was within the Choir hearing the Prayers for some Time; there was a Gentleman near the Duke with a Sword, whom I thought the Person at first, but I learned afterwards, he was an Acquaintance of his Grace's; I was not apprized that any such Person would attend him: I saw Mr. Barnard and another Person come in, and his Eye was fixed on his Grace as he walked in the Isle; they walked down the middle Isle, not directly to his Grace; in a little Time I observed his Grace to meet them, and as I thought by the Behaviour of Mr. Barnard, that he spoke first to the Duke, presently after that Mr. Barnard's Partner went off from him; then Mr. Barnard went and stood looking at the Duke; then I thought Mr. Barnard was the Person; so I did not mind the other: I saw his Grace speak to him again, but was not near enough to hear what they said: After that, his Grace walked backwards and forwards once or twice, and went out at the Door he came in at; the other Gentleman immediately followed the Duke; I followed to see what passed; the Gentleman, the Duke's Acquaintance, walked opposite to the Duke; Mr. Barnard was got looking behind a Post; any body that was on that Side he was on could see him, but a Person on that Side his Grace was on could not; I believe it was impossible for his Grace to see him at that Time; he looked after his Grace a considerable Time, then walked back: I followed his Grace, and told him what Observations I had made; his Grace immediately told me, the Man in black was the Man that he had seen in Hyde-Park: Then I said, I wonder your Grace did not give the Signal to have him apprehended; his Grace said the same as repeated here, He would rather let it be a little longer, than to take up an innocent Man; he should hear of him again he apprehended, for he seemed to be afraid to speak to him at that Time.

Q. Was he apprehended after this?

Marsden. He was. I procured him to come before Justice Fielding, by a sham Summons, in which he was accused with Assault and Battery: He was not taken up till he came there, then he seemed surprized.

Q. Did he tell you about any thing that happened in Westminster-Abbey?

Marsden. I was with him in the Dining-Room at Mr. Fielding's, in order to take his Examination; I went as it were out of Complaisance to him not to leave him alone; he talked a great deal, but I did not make such Observations of it as I should have done if I had thought of his coming here: I remember he said he ordered his Friend to walk off, that he might see what the Duke wanted with him; and said, he thought the Duke must come there by Appointment: He mentioned something about the Duke's giving him a Place or Post; I think he said he ordered his Friend to walk off, to see if the Duke would give him some Place; or, perhaps, the Duke wants to give me a Place.

Q. Are you sure he said the Duke wanted to give him a Place? Or, that his Friend said, Go towards him, perhaps the Duke wants to give you some Place?

Marsden. I cannot be sure which; I know the Word Place was mentioned.

Cross-Examination.

Q. Where is the Summons?

Marsden. This is the Summons, (producing one;) I did not serve it on the Day it bears Date; it was made out on Saturday the 29th of April. I was to have given him it that Afternoon, but I was told he was gone to Brentford; so I went early on Monday Morning following, and gave it him: This was only made out as a Decoy; the Name in it is one of the Constables that was fixed in Westminster-Abbey, named Roger Boucher.

Q. Did he shew any Unwillingness to come?

Marsden. No, none at all; he looked at it, and said, It is a Summons from Mr. Fielding; he read it over, and said, Roger Boucher! I know nothing of him; give my Compliments, tell him I will wait on him.

Q. As to this Place that he looked through, which Door is it at?

Marsden. It is the West Gate near the Gate-house; just at the Corner there is another Gate, and next to the Wall is a Sort of a Post, which is what he looked through, or by.

Q. Is not that Gate, as you call it, a close waincoted Door?

Marsden. It is a Door, but the Place where I mean is a Post; he peeped between the Post and the Wall. I have never been since to look at it;

if

if there is not a Hole between that and the Wall, he must look by the other Side of it.

Q. Which Way was his Head?

Marsden. That was towards the Gentleman who was close to the Wall, opposite him; he must have turned his Head farther from the Wall to have seen his Grace, as his Grace was going to take Coach.

Prisoner's Defence.

I am intirely innocent of this Affair with which I am charged. I leave it to the Court and the Jury, with the Evidence that will be produced.

For the Prisoner.

John Barnard. I am Father to the Prisoner at the Bar.

Q. What is his Employ?

John Barnard. He is employed in my Business as a Builder and Surveyor principally; in not only that, and drawing Plans, but also in receiving great Sums of Money.

Q. Have his Accounts always stood right and clear?

John Barnard. They always have.

Q. Do you look upon him to be a sober Man?

John Barnard. I have had great Reason to believe him such, more particularly lately.

Q. Has he been possessed of large Sums of Money?

John Barnard. He has, of considerable Sums; I have oftener asked him for Money than he me.

Q. Had you any Occasion to send him to Kensington on Sunday the 4th of December?

John Barnard. I had nothing, but Circumstances brought the Day to my Mind since: I gave him an Order on that Sunday Morning, when we were at Breakfast, to go to Kensington, to know whether there was some Money paid by the Treasurer of the Turnpikes for Gravel: I have a Brother there, named Joseph; he went there and did his Business, and dined with my Brother.

Q. How do you know that?

John Barnard. Because he told me so; and the Solicitor of the Turnpike told me he had been with him, and in consequence of which I had my Money afterwards.

Q. Have you ever heard your Son take any Notice of his meeting with the Duke of Marlborough that Day?

John Barnard. When he came Home, he told me, he had met the Duke of Marlborough, and these Circumstances of his Grace's taking Notice of him; he mentioned it as an extraordinary Thing. I asked him, if he had not looked a little impudently (as he has a near Sight) at him, or pulled his Glafs out? He said, he saw another Gentleman at a Distance, and the Duke was armed; and he imagined there might be a Duel going forwards; he has from that Time to this mentioned it as a very strange Event several Times in my House, without any Reserve at all.

Cross-Examination.

Q. At the Time you sent your Son to Kensington on the 4th of December, suppose you had not given him an Order to go there, whether he was not at Liberty to go where he pleased?

John Barnard. Yes; I never restrain him.

Q. Did he say he was surprized to see the Duke without a Great Coat?

John Barnard. I cannot remember that Particular.

Q. Did you hear him mention his seeing the Duke of Marlborough in Westminster-Abbey?

John Barnard. I have very often, and very publicly, and with some Surprize; as he has that in Hyde-Park. I said to him, I would not have you be public in speaking of Things of this Kind, lest a Use be made of it to your Disadvantage.

Thomas Barnard. I am First Cousin to the Prisoner at the Bar. On Saturday the 3d of December I was at Kensington, and lay at my Uncle's House there, and dined there. On the Sunday the Prisoner came there before Dinner, he said he had been to do some Business that Way. He dined with us, there were my Uncle, Aunt, he and I; he related that Circumstance to us of meeting with the Duke of Marlborough in Hyde-Park; he said he rode up to him, and asked if he knew who he was; he answered, No; he replied, I am the Duke of Marlborough. He related it with some Chearfulness, though as Matter of Surprize.

Q. How long have you known the Prisoner?

T. Barnard. From his Birth: He is in Business with his Father; I always understood he would succeed his Father; I never knew him to behave any otherwise than well in my Life. I never thought him extravagant, nor never heard so; I had always looked upon him to be an honest Man; his Father is in very great Business.

Q. Should you look upon it, that a small Place would be equal to the Chance of succeeding his Father in his Business?

T. Barnard. I should never have thought of such a Thing; I look upon his Situation in Life to be a very extraordinary Thing: I thought he would give the Preference to that above any thing else.

Cross-Examination.

Q. Do you think he would refuse a good Place?

T. Barnard. No Man would refuse a Place that is to his Advantage.

Joseph Barnard. I am Uncle to the Prisoner at the Bar; I live at Kensington; my Nephew, Thomas Barnard, lay at my House on the Saturday Night, and dined with the Prisoner at the Bar on the Sunday. I remember he then mentioned having met with the Duke of Marlborough in Hyde-Park, while we were sitting at Dinner. I said, I was surprized he should meet with him that Day; he said, he saw but one Gentleman at a Distance, and the Duke was armed; and his Grace looked him full in the Face, very earnestly, (which he seemed to speak with a great deal of Pleasure to me;) he is very near-sighted, he can see nothing at a Distance without the Use of a Glafs. I have heard him since speak four or five Times of seeing the Duke in Westminster-Abbey.

Q. How long ago?

Joseph Barnard. About a Month ago. He is brought up under his Father in very considerable Business, and a Man of some Property besides, and was employed as his Clerk or Book-keeper.

Q. Is he a sober Man?

Joseph

Joseph Barnard. Very sober; I never heard to the contrary; neither did I ever hear his Father speak of him as idle or dilatory.

Thomas Calcut. I live at Kensington: I remember the Prisoner coming there on a Sunday Morning; a very cold foggy Morning; with some Message from his Father to me, to know whether the Solicitor had paid some Money or not. He was under his Father, as I am under mine; he desired me to go with him; I said, Stay and dine with me; he said, he could not promise, because he had promised to dine with his Uncle Joseph: He went into the Parlour, and said, It is vastly cold: There has been the oddest Accident happened as I came over the Park! The Duke of Marlborough came up to me, and asked me, if I knew him? I said, No. He asked me, if I wanted any thing with him? I told him, No. He said, I am the Duke of Marlborough, if you want any thing with me; then the Duke went away, and he came there. He expressed a great Surprize at it, and I thought it a very odd Affair.

Henry Clive, Esq; I have known the Prisoner two Years; I remember dining with him on the 8th of December, at his Father's House, with a great deal of Company; I heard him then say at Dinner, that some few Days before, he had met the Duke of Marlborough in Hyde-Park; that the Duke asked him, if he had any Business with him? He said, No; he then told him, who he was, and asked him the same again; he said, No. That the Duke seemed in some Confusion, and was armed; and he thought he was about a Duel; and indeed I thought it was a very great Lye. I have gone very frequently to his Father's in relation to Brentford Bridge. I have no other Acquaintance with him, only going to his Father's, so cannot say any thing to his Character, either frugal or extravagant.

Q. Can you name any body that dined there that Day?

Mr. Clive. Yes, there was Mr. Wilson and his Lady, Mr. Tunstall and his Lady, another Gentleman and his Wife, and the Prisoner's younger Brother that is at Westminster School.

Mrs. Mary Wilson. I dined at Mr. Barnard's on Thursday the 8th of December; the Prisoner I remember said he had been in Hyde-Park some Days before, and there he saw a Gentleman on Horseback come up to him, and asked him, if he had any thing to say to him? He said, No; then he said, I am the Duke of Marlborough, now you know me, have you any thing to say to me? He said, No. He talked of this very freely to us all.

James Greenwood. I live at Deptford, with a Relation in the Brewing Way; I came from Deptford on Saturday to the Prisoner's Father's; and on the Sunday following I was there at Breakfast; I solicited the Prisoner to get himself dressed to go with me into the Park, being to meet a Person at Twelve o'Clock; I with a good deal of Difficulty got him to dress himself; I put my Shirt on in the Parlour, and after that he put on his; I fancy we breakfasted about Nine o'Clock; when we got to the End of Henry the VIIth's Chapel, the Prisoner would have gone the other Way into the Park without going through the Abbey; I took hold of his Sleeve, and said,

Barnard, you shall go through the Abbey; this was a little after Eleven; this was no unusual Thing; we have several Times walked in the Park, and sometimes parted.

Q. Which is the nearest Way to the Park?

Greenwood. I do not know which is the nearest Way; through the Abbey, or by the Side of it; this was the first Time I believe that I ever saw the Monument of General Hargrave. After that we walked down to the Monument, erected at the public Expence for Captain Cornwall; the Preacher was in the Pulpit; when we were standing at Captain Cornwall's Monument, the Prisoner made some Observation on the Execution of it in his own Way. After we had stayed there some Time, I saw his Grace the Duke of Marlborough, who was got pretty near us: Upon seeing the Duke, I jogged him by the Elbow, and said, Step this Way; he seemed to look at him.

Q. Had you heard what happened in Hyde-Park, previous to this?

Greenwood. I had; I believe it was told to me by the Prisoner at the Bar; on my jogging him we walked up the middle Isle towards the Choir. I said, Did you see that Gentleman in the blue Coat, or do you know him? No, said he, not I. No, said I, it is the Duke of Marlborough; we will walk to the Monument again. The Duke came, and placed himself pretty near me a second Time; after this we walked away. I believe we walked some considerable Time in that Isle, in which is the Monument of Sir Godfrey Kneller, there I believe we passed and repassed again.

Q. Why did you jog him?

Greenwood. Because he is very near-sighted. At last I think it so happened, we passed the Duke between two of the Pillars; and as I had hold of his Arm walking together, there was barely Room for three People to pass a-breast; the Duke rather gave way, and made, as I thought, a kind of a Bow. Upon this I said, The Duke of Marlborough's Behaviour is extremely particular; he certainly has something to say to you; I suppose he does not chuse to say it while I am with you, I will go into the Choir, and do you walk up and down here, and he will possibly speak to you. While I was there, I looked; the first Thing I saw was the Duke of Marlborough and the Prisoner at the Bar, with their Heads bowing together, as if it was the first Salutation.

Q. Had the Prisoner the least Inclination to go into the Abbey before you proposed it to him?

Greenwood. No; he did not discover any.

Q. Did he discover any Inclination to be left alone, when you proposed to go into the Choir?

Greenwood. No, he did not in the least; in some few Minutes after, the Prisoner and I met together, he told me the Duke of Marlborough was gone out of the Abbey, he had seen him go out. I said, What passed? to which he replied, The Duke said, did you speak to me, or who spoke first I cannot tell.

Q. In this Transaction did the Prisoner appear openly, or as if he had some secret Transaction to do with the Duke?

Greenwood. No, it was open and clear.

Q. Did you see the Duke come in?

Greenwood. No, I did not; we were employed at looking at the Monuments; we looked at several.

Q. What did you do when you first came in?

Greenwood. We walked along, and looked on the Monuments.

Q. Did you see the Prisoner's Eye fixed on any Person?

Greenwood. No, I did not.

Q. Is Mr. Barnard very near-sighted?

Greenwood. He is; I question whether he can be able to see a Person across this Room.

Q. Where did you go, when you went out of the Abbey?

Greenwood. We went immediately into the Park; and after walking there, we met with two Ladies whom I knew, and to whom Mr. Barnard was not unknown, to whom we related this Affair; he always repeated these Things, that is, this and that in Hyde-Park, as matter of great Curiosity.

Q. How long have you been acquainted with him?

Greenwood. I have been acquainted with him seven Years.

Q. What is his Character?

Greenwood. I know nothing to the contrary but that he is an industrious, sober young Man.

Q. Did you ever hear that he was a profligate, expensive Man?

Greenwood. No, never.

Q. His Father is in great Business, is he not?

Greenwood. His Father's Business is a very considerable Thing.

William Ball. I am the Master of Storey's-Gate Coffee-house; I remember Mr. Merrick coming to my House, to inquire for Mr. Barnard; he asked me, if Mr. Barnard was at my House? I said, Leave any Message, I will deliver it to him; he said, he wanted to see him that Evening; he left his Message, I delivered it to him, and he came rather before Eight o'Clock to him. He has used my House some Years, always a well-behaved Man; I never perceived any Extravagancy in him, always a sober, regular Man. I have heard him speak of having met the Duke of Marlborough, but not till after this; he said he had been to his Grace at his Grace's House; this was as he called at my House, after he had been there.

Q. Did he mention what had passed?

William Ball. No, he did not; only that he had seen his Grace.

Cross-Examination.

Q. Did he not tell you any thing that passed?

William Ball. He did not tell me a Syllable of it.

Q. What did you say to him?

William Ball. I told him, may-be he was going to have a Commission; he said, he would not thank his Grace, except it was a very good one.

Q. How did he appear as to Chearfulness, or Dullness, or the like?

William Ball. He seemed to be very chearful, not in the least concerned; the same as usual, composed, rather more chearful.

Council. We will now shew his Behaviour after he was apprehended.

Mr. Ford. While he was in Custody, Mr. Fielding did me the Honour of sending for me; he told me it was upon some Business which concerned the Duke of Marlborough's Life; he asked me to go along with him and Mr. Box to New-

Prison, which I consented to; we went together in a Coach; this was about Twelve at Night, and Mr. Barnard was then in Bed; I have really forgot what Day it was: Mr. Fielding told him, he had omitted examining his Pockets at the Time he was before him; he then searched his Pockets, in order to see whether he had any Letters or any Writings that might give Light into the Affair; he very readily let me look into his Pocket-book and Papers. Mr. Fielding with great Candour told him, he was in the Hands of a very honourable Prosecutor, and one that would be as glad to discover his Innocence as his Guilt. Mr. Fielding asked him for his Keys, and he gave him the Keys of his Scrutore and Compting-house with great Readiness; and I remember that I then told him, that, if he was guilty, some Copies might be found to correspond with the original Letters; and if nothing of that Sort did appear, it would be a Circumstance in his Favour.

Q. Did you or Mr. Fielding tell him he was not obliged to part with his Keys, and did he do it as matter of Choice?

Mr. Ford. I do not recollect that; I know he parted with them very readily.

The Rev. Dr. Markham. I have known the Prisoner some Years; I have always considered him as a young Man of remarkable Sobriety and Attention to Business: I have had some Experience of him; I entrusted him with the Execution of some Matters of Importance relating to myself, in regard to surveying and valuing Estates, in which he acquitted himself ably and honestly; that is the Character he always had: He lives in my Neighbourhood, his Father is a Man of considerable Property, and carries on a large Business.

Council. Then you don't suppose the Prisoner to be in distressed Circumstances?

Dr. Markham. I never supposed it, I have no Reason to imagine it; if he had come to me, wanting Money, he might easily have imposed on me, he might have had any thing of me; he is one of the chief Persons I trusted, and I don't know a Man on whom I would have had a greater Reliance; I thought him remarkably able in his Business, and very likely to be a considerable Man; and I never was more astonished in my Life than when I heard this strange Story.

Samuel Cox, Esq. I have known Mr. Barnard about the Space of three Years last past. The Beginning of my Acquaintance was on the Account of his surveying of Houses in the New Square, Dean's-Yard; the Surveys were generally made by him; he did his Business with such Accuracy, that I have always thought him a Man very attentive to his Business, and very unlikely of being charged with this Fact; and upon his being employed upon public Schemes, I employed him in my own Affairs; I employed his Father to finish some Houses for me at Hammer-smith, the Son was constantly employed till the 6th of April last; I have at different Times paid to Mr. Barnard about seven hundred Pounds, all paid into the Hands of the Prisoner, except fifty or seventy Pounds of it. He has appeared as the Person that managed his Father's Business: If he had come to me, and mentioned any Want of Money, upon his Father's being out of Town, or the like, he might have had two or three hundred Pounds at any Time. When I first was acquainted with him, I observed he had a remarkable short Sight; when he has looked full at me, I have thought he sneered at me; he has such a Fall with his Eye-lids on the account of his Short-sightedness; I have found his Eye so fix'd upon me, that I have been going to speak to him, which, by my long Acquaintance with him, I since found was only an Accident.

Robert Vansittart, Esq; I have known Mr. Barnard about five or six Years; my Acquaintance with him was by being acquainted with his Father, who was employed in carrying on a large Building for Mr. Lee, an Acquaintance of mine in Oxfordshire; and these five Years I have been acquainted with the Son, and frequently in Company with him. In the Beginning of April he was in my Chamber, putting up some Book-cases; I remember one Morning at Breakfast he told me the Circumstance of meeting the Duke of Marlborough in Hyde-Park and in Westminster-Abbey, in the same Way as the Court has been told from his Grace and the rest of the Witnesses: It appeared to me to be a very strange Story, and he seem'd to tell it as such, as I or any body else would have told it. I suspended my Judgment upon it, and never related it to any body, only to my Father and another Gentleman, and they look'd upon it as a great Lye that Barnard had invented; I, knowing his Character, did not take it as such, but thought he must have known it to be as he said.

Q. What is your Opinion of him as to his Business?

Mr. Vansittart. From my own personal Acquaintance with him, and from the many Surveys I have seen of his, he certainly is very capable and Master of his Business. I never heard any thing ill as to his private Character.

Q. Did you ever see him write?

Mr. Vansittart. No; he draws very well; I have seen him draw.

John Smith, Esq; I have known him eight or ten Years, and his Father's Family twenty-five. He always appear'd an industrious, sober, diligent Man; particularly within these four or five Years, since he has come into Business with his Father. I consider'd him as a very promising Genius, in his Way, and one capable of conducting his Business with Reputation and Character.

Q. Did you look upon him likely to be driven to Distress, or in want of a Place?

Mr. Smith. No, I did not. I can with great Truth say, most of the Payments in my Compting-House, on his Father's Account, have most of them been paid by the Hands of this young Man; except the last five hundred Pounds: Then Mr. Barnard and his Wife came over and dined with me, and paid it; and then I blamed him for not bringing his Son.

Q. What are you?

Mr. Smith. I am a Timber-Merchant.

Joshua Smith, Esq; I am in Partnership with my Father, the last Evidence. I have known the Prisoner several Years; I always thought him a very honest, sober Man, capable in his Profession: The Money that has been paid to us lately, except that five hundred Pounds, has been by him; they never paid less than a hundred Pounds at a Time, except once.

Q. Have you any Reason to imagine him in desperate Circumstances?

Mr. Joshua Smith. There is no Reason as I know of to imagine so.

Robert Tunstall, Esq; I have known him two Years.

Q. What is his general Character?

Mr. Tunstall. He is industrious, and very capable of his Business. His Behaviour has been prudent; he is the principal Man in his Father's Business in drawing and scheming*.

Mr. Peter Brusbel. I have known him from a Child.

Q. What is his Character?

Mr. Brusbel. I always took him to be a very sober, honest Man. His Father has done a great deal of Business for me, and is now at Work for me.

Q. Who did you generally pay the Money to?

Mr. Brusbel. I generally paid the Father; if the Prisoner had apply'd to me, I would have let him have a hundred Pounds at any Time.

Q. Is he capable of his Business?

Mr. Brusbel. He is very capable. He drew a Plan for me last Saturday was Se'nnight.

Q. Do you look upon him to be in desperate or distressed Circumstance?

Mr. Brusbel. No, I do not.

Q. Has he been always a visible Man?

Mr. Brusbel. Always.

Mr. Felse. I am the King's Mason. I have known the Prisoner seven Years and more.

Q. Do you look upon him to be capable of his Business?

Mr. Felse. I believe he is a very capable Man in his Business.

Q. What is his general Character?

Mr. Felse. Always a very worthy, honest Man.

Q. Did you ever see him guilty of any Extravagancy?

Mr. Felse. No, never.

Q. Do you live near him?

Mr. Felse. I am a very near Neighbour to him, and keep him Company on Evenings, within this Year or two more particular.

William Robinson, Esq; I have known him about six or seven Years.

Q. Is he a Person capable of his Profession?

Mr. Robinson. I believe he is.

Q. What has been his Behaviour?

Mr. Robinson. I always look'd upon him to be a very sober, diligent, frugal Man.

Q. Did you look upon him to be in desperate Circumstances?

Mr. Robinson. No, not at all.

Thomas Kynaston, Esq; I have known him six or seven Years.

Q. What are you?

Mr. Kynaston. I belong to the Board of Works.

* Mr. John Barnard, the Father of the Prisoner, built Kew Bridge for this Mr. Tunstall.

Q. What is your Opinion of the Prisoner's Situation?

Mr. Kynaston. I think he is in a good one.

Q. What has been his Behaviour?

Mr. Kynaston. That has been always good.

Mr. Keynton Cowse. I have known him seven Years, and been in his Company many Times.

Q. What is his Character?

Mr. Cowse. He is a very worthy young Man, sober and industrious, always attending his Father's Business.

Mr. Uffort. I have known him about six or seven Years; he is a sober, sedate young Man as ever I met with. I have done Business for him several Times.

Mr. Brent. I have known him upwards of three Years.

Q. What is his Character?

Mr. Brent. He has a good Character; he is a very industrious Man. I have frequently paid him Money.

Mr. Jones. I have known him several Years.

Q. What is his general Character?

Mr. Jones. He is very honest; no Ways extravagant, that could lead him into a desperate State; he is as moral a Man as any I know, and has as good a Character.

Mr. Wilson. I have known him about seven Years.

Q. What has been his Behaviour during that Time?

Mr. Wilson. It has been always very well. I always looked upon him as an honest Man.

Q. Did you ever look upon him to be in a desperate Way in his Fortune?

Mr. Wilson. No, never.

Q. to Mr. Barnard the Elder. Where was you when your Son was sent for to the Duke of Marlborough's?

Mr. Barnard. I was then out of Town. I have not been in Town above one Week this five or six Weeks.

Mr. Serjeant Davy's Reply.

My Lord, and Gentlemen of the Jury,

I am sorry to take up any more of your Time; but the Defence consisting of various Parts, I would beg Leave to trespass a little longer on your Patience, and make a very few Observations on the Case, as it now stands before you. I do not claim any Merit at all, for their not opposing any Evidence, as was attempted on the other Side; I am sure I shall be justified in your Opinion. Nothing has passed in the Course of this Prosecution, but what clearly manifests that the Duke is totally indifferent about the Issue of it: In this Matter he is only a Friend to Justice, and would wish for the Prisoner not to be disturbed in any Method he should take in the Course of his Examination; Be that as it may, I have done what I have thought right, and am very glad they have done every thing they could for the Prisoner.

I shall now consider two general Questions: The first is, Whether the several Circumstances that have been given in Evidence, on the Part of the Prosecution, independently, are in themselves sufficient to convince a reasonable Understanding of the Prisoner's Guilt; I mean, your Understandings as Jurymen. The second Question is, Whether the Defence that has been set up, those Circumstances are sufficient to repel the Weight of the Evidence; I mean, whether the Defence is reconcileable to the Suspicions of the Prisoner's Guilt; for if they are irreconcilable with the Prisoner's Guilt, (as I do not intend to impeach the Credit of any one Witness) I am content upon that Supposition, he may be acquitted: I don't mean, that any Witness has laid a single Circumstance before you that is not strictly true, but that they may be reconcileable with the Suspicion of his Guilt.

I do not mean to draw your Attention back to the several Circumstances of the Prosecution; they are all before you, and they are too strong and striking to be easily forgot; they would be diminished considerably by attempting to recapitulate them, and therefore I shall not attempt it: And, as I said at the Opening, they are irreconcilable with any Supposition of the Prisoner's Innocence, independently of the Defence set up for him, if they are so strong in themselves, as it would be offering Violence to one's Understanding, not to consider them as Circumstances necessarily inducing his Guilt.

It will remain for your Consideration, it is now the capital Question, Whether these Circumstances laid before you, consisting of five or six Parts on the Part of the Prisoner, may be reconciled with the Suspicion of his Guilt? Because, if they may, it is no Defence at all.

Gentlemen, the first is, the Prisoner being sent by his Father to Kensington on this Sunday on which he met the Duke in Hyde-Park. I did not chuse by any means to ask the Father any Question; I should have disoblged my Noble Client, if I had done it. As, Why he was sent to Kensington? What Conversation might have led to that Matter? What happened at Breakfast with his Father was the sole Occasion of his going there. The Son, you see, is principally concerned in conducting his Father's Business; he might, or he might not propose the Expediency of such a Journey. It is a little extraordinary, this Business (not being urgent in its own Nature) should be appointed by the Father to be transacted on the Sunday, when the Father might as well have employed his Time in going elsewhere: Going to ask whether a Sum of Money had been paid on the account of Gravel, to make it necessary to be sent just at Church-time. His Father talked of his going; he did go—What does that prove? Does it prove he was not to go to Hyde-Park any other Way? Whoever was the Writer of these Letters, certainly intended to have a Meeting on both the Sundays, in the Park and in the Abbey, in a very public Manner; and that agreeable to the Tenour of the Letter, he did provide himself with a Defence in case of Need. Now, be the Author of these Letters who it may, the Author did contrive a Subterfuge for himself afterwards, in order to reply to a Charge of that Nature.

Gentlemen, the next Part of the Defence is, that he at several Times and to several People related the Meetings he had had with the Duke, and the extraordinary Occurrences. This indeed corresponds corresponds with the Observations I made: The Writer of these Letters proposed to meet the Duke at a Time that People were walking out on a Sunday, and in the Abbey, the most public Places, and at the most public Times: Is that irreconcilable with the Suspicion that the Prisoner (if he was the Author of these Letters) might have been contriving with other Persons telling People of the several Meetings he had had with the Duke, and the Substance of those Meetings? But one Observation will arise, perhaps not much to his Service; and that is, when he told those People of his seeing the Duke, he spoke to his seeing an Attendant, which corresponds with the second Letter: What does he say about it to the Persons to whom he relates the Meeting? He saw he was armed—He saw one likewise at a Distance, and he thought there was a Duel going forwards. Now, when he spoke to the Duke of the Surprise he had entertained on seeing the Duke armed, does he assign that as a Reason of apprehending a Duel? No; it was because it was cold Weather, and he wondered to see him without a Great Coat: So that the same Man that speaks of it to his Friends as a Circumstance that might induce a Surprise, speaks of it at another Time as being surprized, without giving that as a Reason for it.

The next Circumstance is, Mr. Greenwood's Evidence of going with him to Westminster-Abbey. There are two or three Things a little particular: After Breakfast, about Nine o'Clock, he solicits the Prisoner to dress himself in order to go to the Park. The Prisoner seemed unwilling to go there. He said, it was not an unusual Thing, when they were to go together, for them to differ, and upon that Occasion to part. Supposing the Prisoner wanted to get rid of this Companion of his, who had laid there and was not easily to be got rid of, why might not that account for his being unwilling to dress himself at Nine in the Morning, in order to get rid of him? For he had Time enough to dress himself an Hour after that, and to meet the Duke in the Abbey at Eleven. It is a little odd, that the Prisoner wanted to go another Way, and expressed a Reluctancy in going through the Abbey. It is clear he did not mean to be seen by Mr. Greenwood in the Abbey: But when he could not get rid of that, and he plucked him by the Coat for that Purpose, did they prosecute their Design in going to the Park, and yet saunter a good while in the Abbey? (No Reason why they did so.) First they went to General Hargrave's Monument, then to Captain Cornwall's Monument; there they stayed some Time, the Duke's Behaviour being in Mr. Greenwood's Evidence particular; from the Duke's bowing, he thought that the Duke wanted to speak to him in private. How is this reconcilable? There is not a Circumstance in all that Part of the Story of Mr. Greenwood's Evidence, which suits so well as this of his Guilt: First he wanted to get rid of Mr. Greenwood, and when he could not do that, then making no Secret of having seen the Duke, and make that tally with his telling him he had met him.

The next Circumstance is Mr. Ball's; and if that Circumstance of his Evidence strikes you as it did me, I wonder he was produced as a Witness; for, you see, he was very forward: He was blamed for it by one of his Witnesses; he thought he talked too much of having met the Duke; that was so singular, that it demanded Animadversions: Yet notwithstanding, when he had had a third Interview with the Duke, and there appeared so very material a Circumstance of the Duke's having charged him with a very extraordinary and wicked Proceeding against him; when he had told him of all these Letters, and one of them set forth his Name, as a Person that could inform his Grace of something which nearly related to his Safety, and hinted to him the Strangeness of these Letters, and charged them upon him; and after having pretended a total Ignorance of this Matter, he afterwards conceals all this from Mr. Ball: And what is another Circumstance, Mr. Ball says, he was rather more chearful in relating what he did than usual. God knows, he had no Reason to be chearful! For the Duke had charged him home with a capital Offence; the Duke had admonished him, and told him, either he was the Author of the Letters, or he was used exceeding ill by the Person that did write them. Yet, you see, in mentioning these Things to his Friend Mr. Ball, Ball considers it as a Fruit of the Duke's Benevolence to him, and says, he will give you a post in the Army. The Prisoner replied, It must be a very good one, if I accept it.

These are all the Circumstances that they have insisted upon as Proofs of his Innocence, except one, that is his Character. They have called to that many Witnesses; they say he is very expert in his Business, a very diligent, sober Man; nothing about him as Marks of Distress; no Vices to which they find him inclined, which give him an Occasion for a Demand of this Kind; and that, upon the whole, he has passed as a very honest Man.

Gentlemen, when you come to consider that, Character goes but a very little, and indeed no Way at all, towards proving his Innocence.

In the first Place, Character can only be of Service to a Man, where his Case hangs as it were in equal Scales, and it is doubtful whether innocent or guilty; there it is that a good Character stands in some Stead, and will balance the Scale in his Favour. But this is that sort of a Case, that this particular Character they have given of him will have no Weight to repel those several suspicious Circumstances that tally so exactly as to his Guilt. Might it not happen, that a Man betwixt twenty and thirty Years of Age, dependent in some Measure on his Father, might have a secret Call for Money, which he would wish his Father, and those Friends that are fond of lending him Money, not to be acquainted with? We know very well, there are certain Circumstances, some in this Capital City of London, where a Man might be very hard driven for the Want of Money, which he would chuse to hide from his Friends.

I know nothing of the Prisoner's particular Character; but it is enough for this Purpose, that it possibly may be his Case: If so, What then has the present Character to do with it? If the Circumstances of the Out-lines are such, can any doubt about believing he is Guilty or not? Then all those other Circumstances will have no Weight at all to counterpoise the Weight of the former.

As I said at first, if upon any Circumstances offered on the Part of the Prisoner, if the Weight of Evidence on the Part of the Prosecution is sufficient to charge him, there is nothing in the Defence that will lessen it at all.

Gentlemen, he is safe in your Hands. I doubt not but that you will do your Duty: If you think him guilty, you will find him so; if not, you will acquit him. With regard to the Duke, his Grace has discharged his Duty which he owed to the Public, which he will at all Times do, and is perfectly indifferent about the Issue of it.

The Jury acquitted the Prisoner.

He was a second Time indicted by the Name of William Barnard, for feloniously sending another Letter to the Most Noble Charles Duke of Marlborough, signed F. demanding two or three hundred Pounds; but no Evidence appearing against him, he was acquitted.

LIII. The Trial of John Stevenson, late of Bickerton, in the County of Chester, Cheesefactor, at Chester Assizes, upon Friday the 27th Day of April, 1759, before Mr. Justice Swinnerton, and Mr. Justice White, for the Murder of Mr. Francis Elcock, late of Nantwich, in the said County, Attorney at Law.

ABOUT Nine o'Clock in the Morning, the Court being sat, the Prisoner was brought to the Bar.

Council for the Crown,

Mr. Hall, Attorney-General for Cheeshire.
Mr. Falconer.
Mr. Hayward.

Council for the Prisoner,

Mr. Townsend, Recorder of Chester.
Mr. Perryn.
Mr. Maddocks.

Prothonotary. Prisoner, hold up your Hand.

Prisoner arraigned.

You stand indicted by the Name of John Stevenson, late of Bickerton, in the County of Chester, Yeoman, for that you, not having the Fear of God before your Eyes, but being moved and seduced by the Instigation of the Devil, on the 21st Day of March, in the thirty-second Year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord George the Second, now King of Great-Britain, &c. with Force and Arms, at Bickerton aforesaid, in the County aforesaid, in and upon one Francis Elcock, in the Peace of God, and our said Lord the King, then and there being, then and there feloniously, wilfully, and of your Malice aforethought, did make an Assault; and that you the said John Stevenson a certain Gun, of the Value of ten Shillings, then and there charged with Gunpowder and one Leaden Bullet; which Gun you the said John Stevenson in both your Hands then and there had and held, to, against, and upon the said Francis Elcock, then and there, feloniously, wilfully, and of your Malice aforethought, did shoot and discharge; and that you the said John Stevenson, with the Leaden Bullet aforesaid, out of the Gun aforesaid, then and there, by Force of the Gunpowder shot, discharged, and sent forth as aforesaid, the aforesaid Francis Elcock, in and upon the left Side of the Belly of him the said Francis Elcock, then and there, with the Leaden Bullet aforesaid, out of the Gun aforesaid, by you the said John Stevenson, so as aforesaid shot, discharged, and sent forth, feloniously, wilfully, and of your Malice aforethought, did strike, penetrate, and wound; giving to the said Francis Elcock, then and there, with the Leaden Bullet aforesaid, so as aforesaid shot, discharged, and sent forth out of the Gun aforesaid, by you the said John Stevenson, in and upon the left Side of the Belly of him the said Francis Elcock, one mortal Wound, of the Depth of five Inches, and of the Breadth of one Inch; of which said mortal Wound the said Francis Elcock, on the aforesaid 21st Day of March, in the Year aforesaid, for the Space of ten Hours, at Bickerton aforesaid, in the County aforesaid, did languish, and languishing did live; on which said 21st Day of March, in the Year aforesaid, the said Francis Elcock, at Bickerton aforesaid, in the County aforesaid, of the mortal Wound aforesaid died: And so the Jurors aforesaid, upon their Oath aforesaid, do say, that you the said John Stevenson, the said Francis Elcock, in Manner and Form aforesaid, feloniously, wilfully, and of your Malice aforethought, did kill and murder, against the Peace of our said Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity.

Prothonotary. How say you, John Stevenson, are you Guilty of the Murder and Felony whereof you stand indicted, or Not Guilty?

Prisoner. Not Guilty.

Prothonotary. Culprit, how will you be tried?

Prisoner. By God and my Country.

Prothonotary. God send you a good Deliverance!

Prisoner. Amen. God send me a good Deliverance.

Then the Jurors were called and sworn.

Names of the Jurors.

William Brown, of Stockport-Etubels, Foreman.

John Bennet, of Marple.

John Hodson, of Raby.

Henry Price, of Ditto.

John Lee, of Tranmore.

Samuel Jones, of Over-Bebbington.

Joseph Wright, of Ditto.

Richard Jackson, of Ditto.

Thomas Robinson, of Newball.

George Woodhouse, of Buerton.

John Cliffe, of Audlem.

Samuel Lea, of Badailey.

N. B. The Prisoner challenged Abraham Darlington of Brindley, as he came to be sworn; but no Cause was assigned for such Challenge.

Mr. Attorney-General challenged Edward Hamnett of Newball, as he came to be sworn; as Mr. Hamnett owned he was related to the Prisoner.

Prothonotary then read the Indictment.

Mr. Attorney-General, Council for the Crown, opened the Case to the following Effect:

Gentlemen of the Jury,

The Prisoner, John Stevenson, stands indicted before you, for the Murder of Mr. Francis Elcock, late of Nantwich in this County, an Attorney at Law; which Crime he (the Prisoner) perpetrated and committed upon the 21st Day of March last: And it is now my Duty, as Council on Behalf of the Crown, to use my Endeavours for the obtaining that Justice and Restitution, which the Law requires for Crimes of this horrid Nature. To which End, it may be necessary, that I point out some Facts and Circumstances, antecedent to the Commission of the Murder, which I doubt not we shall be able to prove, and hope you will be satisfied in your Consciences, that the Prisoner did kill and murder Mr. Elcock, as laid in the Indictment; and if so, that you will find him Guilty.

Gentlemen, at the Time this Murder was committed, Mr. Elcock was doing a legal and a commendable Act: He was endeavouring to subdue the Prisoner, and to bring him to a just Sense of, and an Obedience to the Laws, which he had but a little while before violated, by an outrageous Contempt of, and Rebellion to those Laws, which have been wisely (and happily for us) made, for the Preservation of the Lives, and Security of the Properties of the Subject. The Prisoner, Gentlemen, has been for many Years a Cheefefactor in this County; but failing in his Credit some Years ago, has since then taken Sanctuary in his House at Bickerton, and there kept himself confined, to prevent the Effect of a Civil Process, and to evade the Payment of his just Debts. Common Attempts for Justice to the Creditors were vain: The Sheriff's Officers too well known, and indeed Persons in general (except a few Confidants) too hardly suspected, to gain Admittance: Art and Policy became necessary. The unfortunate young Gentleman, whose Death you are now to inquire into, was employed as an Attorney, for one of the Prisoner's Creditors, to sue out a Writ against him, which he accordingly did, and obtained the Sheriff's Warrant thereon, and delivered it to one of the Officers named therein, with Directions to arrest the Prisoner. But the Officer apprehending he should be denied Admittance to the Prisoner, had Recourse to a Stratagem, not unlikely to prevail. He wrote a Letter to the Prisoner, signifying, that the Gentleman who sent it wanted to buy some young Trees from the Prisoner, and desiring that the Bearer of the Letter might be permitted to view the Trees, or to that Purpose. The Officer went to the Prisoner's House with this Letter; and knocking at the Door, a Person came to the Window, to whom it was delivered; and as soon as the Prisoner had read the Letter, the Officer was admitted to him. After some Discourse relating to the Trees, the Bailiff acquainted the Prisoner Stevenson with the real Errand he came upon, namely, to arrest him; and accordingly the Bailiff did then and there actually arrest the Prisoner, by laying his Hand upon him, and telling him that he had the Sheriff's Warrant against him, which he produced. What was the Prisoner now to do in this Situation? Must he tamely submit to the legal Authority of the Bailiff, and quit his Asylum, till he had given Security, or rendered to the Plaintiff Satisfaction for his Debt? No.—After a short Pause, and taking a Turn or two in his House, he suddenly presented a Pistol at the Breast of the Officer, and swore, if he did not immediately leave the House, he would blow his Brains out; and without waiting for an Answer, actually snapped the Pistol at him, which missed Fire. But he could not rest here; his Temper was too hot to put up with the Affront of being lawfully arrested for a just Debt: He snapped the Pistol three Times at the Officer's Breast, which providentially did not go off.—It was high Time for the Bailiff now to retire; the Preservation of his Life required it: He had no Chance, unarmed and alone, to maintain his Arrest against a loaded Pistol, and there was no Time for Words, to sooth a Man of so desperate and outrageous a Disposition, into a peaceable Compliance; and therefore the Officer thought fit (and I think very prudently too) to leave his Prisoner. But after his miraculous Escape, he went to Mr. Elcock, who was in the Neighbourhood, and told him that he had arrested the Prisoner, who rescued himself by snapping a Pistol at him three different Times, and desired Mr. Elcock to get him Assistance, for the re-taking the Prisoner; whereupon Mr. Elcock, and the Plaintiff in the Action, with one or two other Persons, returned with the Officer to the Prisoner's House, which they found locked; and Mr. Elcock going to one of the Doors, demanded Entrance, and desired the Prisoner to yield to the Arrest. But the Prisoner's Resentment could not relish a Capitulation of this Sort; he was determined still to oppose the Authority of the Law, and to refuse any Obedience to it. Resolved upon the Death of somebody or other, no matter whom, he took up a Gun loaded with Gunpowder and Ball, and discharged it through the Door against which Mr. Elcock stood, and unfortunately killed him. It seems unnecessary for me, Gentlemen, to make any Observations with respect to the Intention of the Prisoner to commit Murder: His keeping of Fire-arms loaded in his House; his snapping a loaded Pistol three different Times at the Bailiff, in the Execution of his Duty, after he had arrested the Prisoner; and his discharging the Gun, whereby the Deceased was killed, too fatally evince, beyond the least Shadow of Doubt, that the Prisoner did intend and design an unlawful Killing: And although the Prisoner might not have seen Mr. Elcock, when he discharged the Gun which killed him, yet his shooting at Random was an unlawful shooting, for the Purpose, and with an Intent to kill somebody then at the Door; and therefore that shooting at Random can be no Justification or Excuse to the Prisoner. — We, who are of Council for the Crown, shall now proceed to examine the Witnesses in Support of the Indictment; and doubt not but we shall be able to make out the Case, as I have stated it; and if so, you will then find the Prisoner Guilty, that he may receive the Punishment justly inflicted by Law upon those who shall be guilty of the horrid Crime of Murder.

Mr. FALCONER, Council for the Crown.

Gentlemen, Mr. Attorney has represented the Case so fully, that it is quite unnecessary for me to enlarge upon it; and therefore shall not take up the Time of the Court, but proceed to the Examination of the Witnesses.

Cryer calls John James, the Bailiff, who arrested the Prisoner.

John James sworn.

Council for the Crown. Do you know the Prisoner at the Bar?

James. Yes.

Q. Did you know the deceased Mr. Francis Elcock?

James. Yes.

Q. Were you, at any Time, employed to arrest the Prisoner for Debt; and what happened in consequence of it? Speak up, that the Gentlemen of the Jury may hear you.

James. Yes, I was employed to arrest the Prisoner for a Debt due to John Atkin.

Q. By whom were you so employed?

James. By Mr. Elcock, an Attorney.

Q. You mean, I suppose, the deceased Mr. Elcock,—him that was shot?

James. Yes.

Q. Go on.

James. Being so employed to arrest Mr. Stevenson, I went to his House, and knocked at the Door. Somebody came to the Window, and asked me, what I wanted? I told the Person who came to the Window, that I had a Letter for the Master of the House, which she took through the Window; and I suppose it was delivered to Mr. Stevenson.

Q. Why do you suppose so?

James. Because, in a little Time after, Mr. Stevenson opened the Door.

Q. The Prisoner opened the Door, you say?

James. Yes, and he asked me, whether I lived with the Gentleman who sent the Letter, or from whom the Letter came? I told him I did; and Mr. Stevenson invited me in.

Q. Well; What happened afterwards?

James. I went into the House with Mr. Stevenson, and we then went together towards the Back Door; and at the Back Door Mr. Stevenson stood still, to call his Servant.

Q. Whereabouts at the Back Door did the Prisoner stand still, to call his Servant? Was it within-side of the Door, or at the out-side of the Door?

James. He stood still upon a Step, at the Back Door, the out-side of the Door; and I was within-side of the Door.—I then took the Warrant I had against Mr. Stevenson out of my Pocket, and I laid my Hand upon his Shoulder, and said, Sir, I hope you will excuse me. —

Q. Was the Prisoner then out of the Door?

James. Yes. I said, Sir, I hope you will excuse me; for the Letter I gave you was to decoy you. I am a Bailiff; this is a Warrant against you; and you are my Prisoner in the King's Name.

Q. What did the Prisoner say then?

James. He screamed out, and said, I had used him ill.

Q. What did you do afterwards?

James. Mr. Stevenson and I returned into the House; and when we got into the Kitchen, he called to Betty, who I believe was his House-keeper, and said to her, We have done ill in letting this Man into the House; for he has arrested me.

Q. He told her, you had arrested him, you say?

James. Yes.

Q. Well; What happened then?

James. The Prisoner went then towards the Fire, and turned to the Screen on the right Hand, and stood at the further End of the Screen.

Q. What did he do then?

James. He turned all of a sudden upon me, with a Pistol in his Hand, and said, he would blow my Brains out, if I did not get immediately out of the House.

Q. Did he present the Pistol at you?

James. He did.

Q. What did you say then?

James. I told him, that was not the Way to do Business.—Mr. Stevenson then snapped the Pistol at me, but it missed Fire.

Q. Are you sure he snapped the Pistol at you?

James. Yes, very sure.

Q. Well; What did you then?

James. I went backwards through the Kitchen, and Mr. Stevenson followed me; and in a narrow Passage leading from the Kitchen towards the Door, he snapped the Pistol at me again; and he snapped the Pistol at me a third Time, but I was then out of the House.

Q. When you got out of the House, where did you go then?

James. I went to the next House, I think Mr. Nevill's, where Mr. Elcock promised to be. Mr. Elcock saw me, and met me, and asked me, if I had arrested Stevenson? I told Mr. Elcock, that I had arrested him, and that he had snapped a Pistol at me three different Times, which obliged me to come away.

Q. What did Mr. Elcock say to that?

James. Mr. Elcock said, I had done enough.

Q. How did you proceed afterwards?

James. I told Mr. Elcock, if I had a Pistol, I could bring him away; and he said, I should not want that.—Then Mr. Elcock sent a Man to the Plaintiff John Atkin's, and to bring Arms from his Father's.

Q. Where did Atkin live?

James:

James. At Chelmondley, not very far from Bickerton.

Q. Did the Messenger return with Arms?

James. Yes.

Q. What did you then?

James. After the Arms and Assistance were brought, we went again to Mr. Stevenson's House.

Q. Who went to the Prisoner's House?

James. I went, and the Plaintiff John Atkin, and a Servant of his, I think. Four or five Persons, I believe, came with me.

Q. Was there another Sheriff's Officer with you?

James. Yes, a Man tolerated by the Sheriff, one John Jones.

Q. Did Mr. Elcock go to the Prisoner's House with you?

James. Yes.

Q. What happened, when you all returned to the Prisoner's House?

James. As we were all running towards the Prisoner's House, I saw the Prisoner and another Man out of Doors; I called to Mr. Stevenson, and said, You may as well stay, for we are coming for you.

Q. Did the Prisoner hear you say this?

James. I believe he did.

Q. Did the Prisoner stay for you?

James. No; he, and the other Man with him, ran into the House.

Q. Well; when you came up to the House, pray, what followed?

James. When we came up to the House, I said to Mr. Elcock, I know the Way to that Door; go you to the other.

Q. How many Doors were there to the House?

James. Three.

Q. Did you know all the three Doors?

James. Yes, I knew them all.

Q. You bid Mr. Elcock go to one of the Doors, I think, you say?

James. I bid Mr. Elcock and the others to take care of two of the Doors, and I would go to the other.

Q. How far was the Door that you said you would go to, from the Door you desired Mr. Elcock to take care of?

James. It was a good Way distant, in going round about.

Q. You said, you would go to the third Door; Did you know the Way to it?

James. Yes, very well.

Q. Did Mr. Elcock say any thing to the People in the House, when he came up to the Door?

James. I cannot tell whether he did or not, because I was not present, for I ran to the other Side of the House.

Q. Pray, was the Door you went to locked, or made fast?

James. It was fast.

Q. When you all came up to the Doors, as you have been mentioning,—pray, what followed?

James. In a very little Time, almost immediately after I came up to the Door, I heard a Noise—I heard a Gun go off.

Q. Which Way did the Noise come? Where did you apprehend the Gun went off? In what Situation were you from the Noise, or Report of it?

James. The Noise came as betwixt me and them; betwixt me and the People who came with me.

VOL. X.

Q. How far distant might you be from the Door where the Gun was fired?

James. Nine or ten Yards, it might be, from Mr. Elcock?

Q. When you heard the Noise, and the Gun go off, what did you do then? It must have alarmed you?

James. When I heard them crying out on the other Side, I went backwards to an Hedge, and looking over it, I saw Mr. Elcock held by two Men, sitting on a Block.

Q. You saw Mr. Elcock sitting on a Block, supported by two Men; How did he look?

James. Very piteously indeed.

Q. Did you hear him say any thing?

James. Yes, I heard him say, Oh! I am shot, I am shot.

Q. Was Mr. Elcock at a great Distance from the Gun at the Time he received the Wound, or was he near it?

James. I cannot tell whether he was at a great or a small Distance from it.

Q. What did you do, after you had seen Mr. Elcock sitting on the Block?

James. I returned again to my own Door, to prevent the Prisoner's getting out.

Q. Did you see Mr. Elcock afterwards?

James. In about ten Minutes afterwards, I saw two Men carrying him down the Lane.

Q. Were you with Mr. Elcock at the House he was carried to?

James. No.

Q. Did you see him afterwards?

James. No, I did not see him, after the two Men carried him down the Lane.

Q. Have you the Warrant whereby you arrested the Prisoner?

James. I have.

Q. Pray produce it.—Is this the very Warrant, under the Authority whereof you arrested the Prisoner?

James. It is.

Q. Pray, who delivered to you this Warrant to execute?

James. Mr. Elcock himself.

Q. Were there any Holes in the Door that the Ball came through which killed Mr. Elcock, besides the Shot-hole?

James. Yes, there were two Holes in the Door, besides the Shot-hole.

Q. Was there ever a Slit in the Door?

James. That I do not know.

Q. Were the two Holes in the Door higher than the Shot-hole, or lower, or how?

James. The two Holes were higher than the Hole which the Ball had made.

Q. Could you see through the two Holes? Were they large enough to see, and know a Person through?

James. Yes, I could see through them; I did look through, and saw into the Kitchen plainly. I, and several others, did so.

Q. Pray, what Business did Mr. Elcock go about, when he went with you to the Prisoner's House?

James. To assist me in re-taking Mr. Stevenson.

Q. Do you know the Sheriff's Hand-writing?

James. Yes, very well.

Q. Is the Warrant whereby you arrested the Prisoner, all of the Sheriff's Hand-writing?

6 C

James,

James. All is of his Hand-writing, except two Names.

Q. Are you positive to the Sheriff's Hand-writing?

James. Yes, to Mr. Baxter's Hand-writing, who acted as Sheriff, and made out the Warrant, and delivered it.

Q. Pray, what are the two Names, that were not written by Mr. Baxter?

James. My own Name, and the Name of John Jones, another Bailiff.

Q. Who wrote your Name, and the Name of John Jones, in the Warrant?

James. Mr. Elcock.

Q. Are you sure of that?

James. Yes; for I saw him write them.

Q. Are you usually employed as a Bailiff for the executing of the Sheriff's Warrants?

James. Yes, I get my Bread by it; and am often sent for, fifteen or twenty Miles round the Country.

Q. Was your Name inserted in the Warrant, as the Sheriff's own Bailiff, or as a Special Bailiff?

James. I was a Special Bailiff, for that Time, appointed by the Sheriff.

Q. How do you know that?

James. I have been informed so: I think it is so expressed in the Warrant.

Q. Had you executed any Warrants from the Sheriff of the County of Chester, the Year before?

James. Yes, many; twenty, or more.

Q. Had you executed any Warrants from the present Sheriff, under his Authority?

James. Yes, I executed Attachments under that Authority,—under Mr. Baxter. I had four or five Warrants, upon Process, out of the Exchequer, at the Time I arrested Mr. Stevenson, and have executed several Warrants, since Mr. Harrison became Sheriff.

Q. How long had Mr. Harrison been Sheriff, before you arrested the Prisoner?

James. A Week or a Fortnight, it might be.

Court. Read the Warrant, whereon the Prisoner was arrested by the Witnesses.

(The Warrant was then read, and it appeared, that the Words, "Bailiffs for this Time only," after the Names of John James and John Jones, the Special Bailiffs, were written by Mr. Baxter. The Warrant was dated the 1st of March, and there was an Indorsement thereon, "Take good Bail for eighteen Pounds eight Shillings and Ten-pence Half-penny, by Affidavit filed." And under-written, "Elcock by Lowe, by the said Sheriff.")

Q. Did John Evans, the Sheriff's Bailiff named in the Warrant, go with you, when you attempted to re-take the Prisoner?

James. No; he did not.

Q. When did the Plaintiff John Atkin come to you? Was he with you before, or at the Time you attempted to re-take the Prisoner?

James. John Atkin came when Assistance was sent for, but not before. He came with us, when we went to re-take Mr. Stevenson.

Cross-examined.

Council for the Prisoner. I think you say, you took the Warrant out of your Pocket, and put your Hand upon the Prisoner's Shoulder, and arrested him?

James. I did.

Q. Pray, where did you first see that Warrant, whereon you arrested the Prisoner?

James. I saw it first at Nantwich.

Q. Who shewed it you?

James. The deceased Mr. Elcock.

Q. When you first saw the Warrant, was your Name in it?

James. No.

Q. Was the Warrant, when you first saw it, under the Seal of the Sheriff?

James. I believe it was.

Q. Was the Name John Jones (the other Special Bailiff) in the Warrant, when you first saw it?

James. I believe it was not.

Q. Was the Name of John Evans, the Sheriff's Officer, in the Warrant then?

James. Yes, it was.

Q. Who wrote Evans's Name in the Warrant?

James. The Sheriff put it in.

Q. Of whose Hand-writing is the Warrant?

James. It is all of Mr. Baxter's Writing; except my Name, and the Name of John Jones.

Q. Are you sure of that?

James. Yes.

Q. Who is Mr. Baxter?

James. Mr. Baxter acts for the Under-Sheriff.

Q. Of whose Hand-writing are the Names, John James and John Jones, now appearing in the Warrant?

James. My Name and John Jones's were written in the Warrant by Mr. Elcock.

Q. Are you sure that the Names John James and John Jones were written in the Warrant by Mr. Elcock?

James. I am very sure of it; for I saw him write them.

Q. Were they written by Mr. Elcock, after you first saw the Warrant at Nantwich?

James. Yes.

Q. Is the Warrant in the same Situation, in every Part of it, as it was when you first saw it at Nantwich?

James. It is, except the Addition of the Names made since.

Q. Where does Mr. Baxter live?

James. In this City, (Chester.)

Q. Do you know Mr. Hollins?

James. Yes.

Q. Who is he?

James. The Under-Sheriff.

Q. Do the Sheriffs always keep their Office in the City?

James. They keep their Office in the City, where they please to appoint; I believe so.

Q. And is that the Place where the Sheriff's Warrants are always made out?

James. That is the Place where they apply for Warrants.

Q. How far does the Under-Sheriff live from this City?

James. Twenty Miles, I believe.

Q. Was Mr. Elcock appointed by the Sheriff to make out Warrants?

James. I do not know that he was.

Q. Had Mr. Baxter Authority to make out Warrants?

James. I don't know.

Q. You say, the Under-Sheriff always keeps an Office in the City of Chester?

James.

James. Yes; where the Sheriffs, when they come in, are pleased to fix it.

Q. You say, you went to Mr. Elcock after you had arrested the Prisoner?

James. Mr. Elcock met me, as I was going to him.

Q. And you then told Mr. Elcock you were forced to retreat?

James. I told him so, and so it was.

Q. Is it the Practice, for the Names of the Sheriff's own Bailiffs, or those bound to the Sheriff, to be put into Warrants in the Office; and Blanks to be left in the same Warrants, for the Names of other Bailiffs, to be put in by Attornies, after the Warrants come from the Office?

James. It is the Practice.

Q. Did you give Security to the Sheriff, for being his Bailiff?

James. No, not at that Time.

Q. Where did you stay, after you had arrested the Prisoner, till Assistance came to you?

James. I and Mr. Elcock stayed at a Gentleman's House, the next House to Mr. Stevenson's, Mr. Robert Nevill's House, till Assistance came.

Q. Who went for the Assistance?

James. John Jones, the other Bailiff named with me, I believe.

Q. What Number of People came to your Assistance?

James. I don't well recollect the Number; but I remember the Plaintiff John Atkin, and his Servant, (whose Name I know not,) Richard Bowker, John Jones, and myself made five.

Q. Did you desire Mr. Elcock to stay where he was, at Mr. Nevill's House, and not go to the Prisoner's House?

James. I did not.

Q. Pray, had not you an Iron Crow with you, when you all went to the Prisoner's House?

James. Yes.

Q. Where had you that Crow?

James. I told Mr. Elcock I wanted a Crow, and he borrowed one from the Woman of the House, Mrs. Nevill.

Q. You say, you went to different Doors, when you came to the House; pray, were these Doors on one Side of the House,—at the Corners of the House; or how were they situated?

James. I said, I went to a Door on one Side of the House, and desired Mr. Elcock would stay at a Door on the other Side of the House.

Q. Did you yourself speak to the Prisoner when you came to the House, and demand Entrance from him?

James. I did not.

Q. Did John Jones demand Entrance?

James. I don't know: John Jones was not on the same Side of the House with me.

Q. Did you desire Mr. Elcock to demand Entrance, as you were going to the House, or before you came to the House?

James. No, I did not.—But when we were going to Mr. Stevenson's, I saw Mr. Stevenson out of Doors, and called to him to stay, and told him, we were coming for him.

Q. How far might you be from the Prisoner at that Time?

James. It might be threescore Yards.

Q. Were Mr. Elcock and John Jones at one Door of the House?

James. I don't know.

Q. Did you, from the other Side of the House, desire Mr. Elcock to demand Entrance?

James. I could not see Mr. Elcock from the other Side of the House.

Prisoner. Is the Warrant you have shewn to the Court, the same Warrant you produced to me?

James. Yes, the very same.

(Prisoner desires to see the Warrant. He looks at it, and says, — It is not the Warrant.)

Court to the Prisoner. Leave the Questions to be asked by your Council; they know best how to act for your Defence. Consider, you stand upon Trial for your Life. Your Condition is a most melancholy one, and very perilous; therefore refer yourself to the Judgment of your Council in Matters of so great Importance to you.

James. It is the very Warrant upon which I arrested the Prisoner.

Then the Witnesses withdrew.

Cryer, call John Atkin.

John Atkin sworn.

Council for the Crown. Do you know the Prisoner at the Bar?

Atkin. Yes, very well.

Q. Did you know Mr. Francis Elcock, deceased?

Atkin. Yes.

Q. When were you last in Company with the Deceased?

Atkin. I was in Company with him upon the 21st Day of March last, at the House of John Stevenson in Bickerton.

Q. Did you go with the Deceased to the Prisoner's House on that Day?

Atkin. Yes.

Q. What was the Occasion of your going thither with Mr. Elcock?

Atkin. John James sent for me, to come to assist the Bailiffs.

Q. To do what?

Atkin. To re-take John Stevenson.

Q. And did you go accordingly for that Purpose?

Atkin. Yes.

Q. Who went with you?

Atkin. Mr. Elcock, and John James and John Jones. We all went to take the Prisoner by Force, John James having sent for me to assist him, after the Prisoner had snapped a Pistol at him.—We all went, because John Stevenson had drove the Bailiff from the House, by snapping a Pistol at him.

Q. Who told you, that the Prisoner had snapped a Pistol at the Bailiff?

Atkin. John James, the Bailiff, told me so.

Q. Did you see the Prisoner in the House, when you came there?

Atkin. I did not.

Q. Did you go with Mr. Elcock?

Atkin. Yes.

Q. How far were you from Mr. Elcock, when you came to the House?

Atkin. Within three or four Yards of him.

Q. Then you did not see the Prisoner?

Atkin. No.

Q. Did you see any People in the House, when you came there?

Atkin. No; but I imagine People were in the House, when Mr. Elcock and I came to it.

Q. Did you hear any People in the House?

Atkin.

Atkin. Yes, we heard People, but saw no body.

Q. Were the Doors locked, or made fast?

Atkin. Yes; the Doors were made fast.

Q. When you came up to the House, did John James give Mr. Elcock and you any Directions, about the Business you were to do there?

Atkin. Yes; when we came up to the Door, John James ordered Mr. Elcock and me to attend that Door.

Q. Which Door was it?

Atkin. It was the Back Kitchen Door.

Q. When you came to the Door, did Mr. Elcock say any thing to the People in the House?

Atkin. As soon as we came to the Door, Mr. Elcock said, Open the Door,—open the Door, or we will break it down.—I thought they were making the Door fast.

Q. Was the Door opened?

Atkin. No.

Q. What was done afterwards, when the People within would not open the Door?

Atkin. As soon as Mr. Elcock said so, he bid me strike an Iron Crow under the Door, in order to lift it off the Hinges; and I accordingly put the Crow under the Door.

Q. Was it Mr. Elcock, who ordered you to put the Crow under the Door?

Atkin. Yes.

Q. When you put the Crow under the Door, pray, what happened?

Atkin. As soon as I had put the Crow or Ringer under the Door, Mr. Elcock said to me, John, run to the other Door, for fear Stevenson gets out of it; whereupon I left the Crow sticking under the Door upon the Sill, and went away towards the other Door, and had not gone above three or four Yards from the Door, before I heard a Gun go off.

Q. Did you see Mr. Elcock when the Gun went off?

Atkin. Yes.

Q. Did he say any thing then?

Atkin. Yes.—I heard him say, I am shot, I am shot: And he fell on one Side of his Back down two Steps.—Richard Bowker and I took him up:—Then Mr. Elcock took up his Shirt, and shewed us the Wound.

Q. Who was this Bowker?

Atkin. He was an Assistant, who came with me to re-take John Stevenson.

Q. What did you do with Mr. Elcock, after you and Bowker took him up?

Atkin. He hung about our Shoulders, and we carried him to a wooden Block, where he desired to rest.

Q. You say, he pulled up his Shirt, and shewed you his Wound; pray, on what Part of his Body was he wounded?

Atkin. He was wounded on the Side of the Belly, above his Groin.

Q. Were there any Holes in the Door where the Ball came through, besides that which the Ball made?—Did you see the Hole which the Bullet made?

Atkin. I saw the Hole which the Bullet came through; and there was also a Slit in the Door, which seemed big enough for a Person to see through; and there were two Holes besides in the Door.

Q. How large were the two Holes that were in the Door, besides that which the Bullet made?

Atkin. One of the Holes was an Inch-and-half Hole; the other bigger. But the Slit was afterwards lathed on the inner Side of the Door.

Q. Could you have seen the Prisoner through those Holes?

Atkin. No Doubt of it, if he had been opposite to me when I looked through; but he was not, and therefore I could not see him.

Q. Were you present when the Prisoner surrendered himself?

Atkin. I was.

Q. Had he any Fire-arms in the House, when he surrendered?

Atkin. He had Fire-arms at that Time. I fired off one of the Pistols the Day after the Prisoner killed Mr. Elcock.

Q. What Day of the Month was that?

Atkin. The 22d of March. Mr. Elcock received his mortal Wound upon the 21st, about Three o'Clock.

Q. What other Fire-arms had the Prisoner when he surrendered, besides the Pistol you fired?

Atkin. There were two Pistols;—one besides that which I fired; and a Gun.

Q. Were they loaded?

Atkin. Yes.

Q. How do you know they were loaded?

Atkin. That Pistol which I fired off, was very heavy loaded: The other Pistol was discharged against an Ash-Tree, and I saw the Hole which the Bullet had made in the Tree; and the Gun was fired into the Air.

Q. When the Prisoner surrendered himself, did he acknowledge that he had Fire-arms in the House?

Atkin. He said, he had but one Pistol.—But the Woman in the House being asked, whether there were any more Fire-arms; she told them, there was another Pistol and a Gun.

Q. You say, you discharged one of the Pistols yourself; Did you?

Atkin. I did, and fired it into the Air.

Q. Did you see the Pistol discharged against the Ash-Tree?

Atkin. I did; and looked at the Hole which the Ball had made.—The Gun was fired into the Air.

Cross-examined.

Council for the Prisoner. When you came to re-take the Prisoner with Mr. Elcock, what Orders did John James give you?

Atkin. He ordered Mr. Elcock and me to stay at the Door; and he ran to the other.

Q. What Orders had John Jones received?—Was he to have no Hand in re-taking the Prisoner?

Atkin. John Jones was ordered by John James to attend a Woman, Stevenson's House-keeper, I believe, and not let her come near him.

Q. Was neither John James, nor John Jones, with you and Mr. Elcock, at the Door where you were stationed, in order to re-take the Prisoner?

Atkin. Neither of them.

Q. Was John Jones within Sight of you?

Atkin. I think he was.

Q. Did you all act as Assistants to the Bailiff?

Atkin. Yes.

Q. And by his Orders?

Atkin. Yes.

Then the Witnesses withdrew.

Cryer, call William Griffith.

William Griffith sworn.

Council for the Crown. Do you know the Prisoner at the Bar?

Griffith. Yes, very well.

Q. Do you remember any thing about the Prisoner's discharging or firing a Gun at any Time? Pray, speak up, that the Jury may hear you, and acquaint them, with what you know of the Matter.

Griffith. Yes, Sir; I was in Mr. Stevenson's Houfe at Bickerton, when Mr. Elcock was shot.

Q. What Part of the Houfe were you in at that Time?

Griffith. I was in the Houfe-place, and Mr. Stevenson was in the Back Kitchen.

Q. Was any body in the Houfe, besides the Prisoner and yourself?

Griffith. Yes; a Woman was in the Houfe,— a Servant-Woman.

Q. Did you see the Prisoner fire the Gun?

Griffith. The Prisoner did fire the Gun at the Back Door, and brought it in afterwards, and took it into the Parlour.

Q. After the Gun was fired, did you hear no Noise out of Doors?—Was there no Alarm made about it?

Griffith. Yes; the People without shouted, Murder!

Q. From what Place did the Prisoner take the Gun which he fired?

Griffith. He took it from the Mantle-piece in the Kitchen.

Q. Was the Prisoner accustomed to keep Fire-arms in the Houfe with him?

Griffith. I cannot tell.

Q. How long was it after the Gun was fired, that you heard the People shout, Murder?

Griffith. In about a Minute or two after the Gun was fired.

Q. I suppose you were curious enough after the Gun was fired, and you heard the Cry of Murder, to know, whether any body was hurt; or not; Were not you?

Griffith. I went to a Window, and looked out; and saw a Man in blue Cloaths supported or held up between two Men.

Q. Did you say nothing to the Prisoner upon this Occasion?

Griffith. Yes; I told Mr. Stevenson, that I believed there was never a Man killed, but there was one hurt, and they called him Mr. Elcock.

Q. And pray, when you told the Prisoner there was never a Man killed, but a Man hurt, and his Name was Mr. Elcock; What did he say to you?

Griffith. He said, I don't know what Business a Man of his Coat had among such Men as those. I am glad of it.

Q. What do you apprehend he meant by the Words, "A Man of his Coat?"

Griffith. I don't know.

Council for the Prisoner. You will please to observe, The Witness told the Prisoner, there was a Man hurt, but no body killed; and that was immediately before the Prisoner said, he was glad of it.—Glad, that no body was killed.

Then the Witness withdrew.

Cryer, call Mr. Cooper.

Mr. Cooper sworn:

Council for the Crown. I think you are a Surgeon?

VOL. X.

Mr. Cooper. Yes, Sir.

Q. Where do you live?

Mr. Cooper. At Nantwich.

Q. Did you know the deceased Mr. Francis Elcock?

Mr. Cooper. Yes, very well.

Q. Were you sent for at any Time, and when, to attend Mr. Elcock, upon account of his having received a Wound, by the firing of a Gun, or otherwise?—Pray, acquaint the Court and Jury with what you know of this Matter.

Mr. Cooper. Upon Wednesday the 21st Day of March last, a Messenger came to me about Three o'Clock in the Afternoon, desiring me to go to Bickerton, to Mr. Francis Elcock, who, the Messenger told me, was shot.—I went accordingly with the Man, and got to Bickerton about Five o'Clock in the Evening. When I came there, I found, that Mr. Rowe, a Surgeon from Malpas, had been sent for likewise, and had been there for some Time before. Mr. Rowe and I went up Stairs together, to the Room where Mr. Elcock was, and we found him ill in Bed. Almost so soon as he saw me, he pulled up his Shirt, and shewed me where the Ball was lodged, and seemed impatient to have it taken out: Upon seeing the Wound, I took the Ball between my Finger and Thumb, and perceived I could easily dislodge it. I then examined the Wound, where the Ball had entered, and found it cut about two Inches from the Hip on the left Side of his Belly: It passed through his Belly, by his Bowels no doubt, and lodged five or six Inches below the right Hip, almost through the Skin. As soon as I saw this, I took Mr. Rowe into another Room, to consult what was fittest to be done; and I told him, it was my Opinion, that Mr. Elcock was a dying Man, and that I did not know whether it would be of any Use to take the Ball away, although it could be so easily effected.—But, considering that it would give him some Satisfaction, and perhaps Ease too, by taking the Ball from the Place where it did lie, Mr. Rowe and I went into the Room again, and I took out the Ball.—After I had taken the Ball out, and dressed the Wound, and put a Bandage about it, I asked Mr. Elcock, how he did? He said, he was easier. Doctor Hayes came in afterwards, and when I had told him the Nature of the Wound, he looked upon the Case to be extremely dangerous. The Doctor stayed with him two or three Hours, and then went away; but Mr. Elcock desired me and Mrs. Nevill to sit with him, which we did, and his Father did so too, till ten Minutes past Three the next Morning, and he then expired.—(The Witness produces the Ball.)

Q. Do you believe, that the Wound which Mr. Elcock received was the Occasion of his Death?

Mr. Cooper. I firmly believe, that the Wound which he received was the Occasion of his Death.

Q. Did Mr. Elcock say any thing to you in his Agonies, upon the melancholy Occasion, and what?

Mr. Cooper. Mr. Elcock told me, that he was shot, as he was stooping down, with a Crow in his Hand, striving to open the Prisoner's Door.

Q. Did he tell you from what Part of the Houfe he was shot?

Mr. Cooper. He said, he received the Wound at the Door of the Prisoner's Houfe.

6 D

Q. Pray,

Q. Pray, how came the Ball to be made so flat, in that uncommon Form?

Mr. Cooper. I believe its going through the Door was the Occasion of its being in that Form.
Then the Witness withdrew.

Cryer, call Mr. Baxter.

Mr. Robert Baxter sworn.

Council for the Crown. Pray, Mr. Baxter, are you concerned in any, and what Manner, for Mr. Harrison, the present Sheriff of the County of Chester?

Mr. Baxter. Yes, Sir, I am concerned for the Sheriff, and keep his Office.

Q. Do you make out Warrants for the Sheriff?

Mr. Baxter. I do.

Q. Did you receive at any Time, and when, a Writ against the Prisoner, at the Suit of John Atkin?

Mr. Baxter. I received a Writ against him upon the 1st of March last. (Which he produces.)

Q. Look upon that Warrant.—Did you make out that Warrant upon the Writ, in order to arrest the Prisoner?

Mr. Baxter. I did.

Q. And are you sure that is the same Warrant you did make out?

Mr. Baxter. Yes; I am sure it is.

(The Writ was read, and upon the Back of it was written, "Take Bail for eighteen Pounds " eight Shillings and Ten-pence Half-penny, by Affidavit filed." — And another Indorsement, viz. "I promise to indemnify " the Sheriff in the Execution of the Writ, " as to the Special Bailiffs. John Atkin.")

Q. Is it usual for the Sheriff to appoint a Gentleman in this Town to execute the Office, and to act for him?

Mr. Baxter. It is usual. — I have been several Times appointed myself.

Q. Do you receive all the Writs that are sued out, directed to the Sheriff of this County?

Mr. Baxter. I do.

Q. And do you make out the Warrants upon such Writs?

Mr. Baxter. I do.

Q. And return the Writs?

Mr. Baxter. Yes.

Q. Do you execute all other Acts, that the Sheriff would do, if he resided here himself?

Mr. Baxter. Yes; except attending the Assizes and Sessions.

Q. And has this been the constant Practice in this County?

Mr. Baxter. Yes, during all my Time.

Q. Has it been usual, when Plaintiffs would have Special Bailiffs appointed, to leave Blanks in the Warrants for their Names to be inserted?

Mr. Baxter. Yes, upon the Sheriff being indemnified.

Q. Have you done this yourself?

Mr. Baxter. Yes.

Q. Have you known others to do it?

Mr. Baxter. Yes, several others to my Knowledge.

Q. Did you ever know it to be refused?

Mr. Baxter. No, never, upon the Sheriff being indemnified, and the Attorney is known to be a fair Practiser.—I have known it refused, where the Practiser was not liked, or where the Sheriff run any Risque or Hazard, and the Indemnity was not approved; but when the Attorney, or Practiser, and the Indemnity are liked, it is usually done.

Q. Pray, what is the Nature of the Indemnity given to the Sheriff upon this Occasion?

Mr. Baxter. It is, that he should not suffer by Escapes or Rescues.

Q. And has this been the constant Practice used by the Persons who have acted in the Sheriff's Office in the Capacity you now act?

Mr. Baxter. It has been so all the Time I have known the Office.

Q. How long, pray, is that?

Mr. Baxter. Seven or eight and twenty Years.

Q. To leave Blanks in the Warrants, for the Names of the Special Bailiffs to be inserted?

Mr. Baxter. Yes.

Q. Pray, whether is such Practice convenient to the Plaintiffs and Suitors in the Court, or inconvenient to them?

Mr. Baxter. It is looked upon to be very convenient for the Plaintiffs.

Q. Do you think so yourself?

Mr. Baxter. I look upon it in that Light.

Q. Had Mr. Lowe, or Mr. Elcock, or both of them, a Right to insert the Names of the Special Bailiffs in the Blank left in the Warrant, whereon the Prisoner was arrested?

Mr. Baxter. I apprehend, either Mr. Lowe or Mr. Elcock had a Right to do so?

Q. Is it usual for Attornies in the Country to send their Directions to their Agents in Chester to take out Writs?

Mr. Baxter. Yes.

Q. And is the Agent's Name generally put to the Writ, or the Name of the Attorney in the Country only?

Mr. Baxter. The Agent's Name is generally added to the Name of the Country Attorney, in the Writ, since the late Act of Parliament for that Purpose; but before that, the Name of the Attorney was only put to the Writ.

Q. And you say that either Mr. Lowe or Mr. Elcock had a Right to insert the Names of the Special Bailiffs?

Mr. Baxter. Yes, I apprehend so.

Cross-examined.

Council for the Prisoner. Do not the Attornies, and other Persons, usually send the Names of the Special Bailiffs to be inserted in the Warrants by the Sheriff, or by those who act for him?

Mr. Baxter. Sometimes People do send the Names of the Special Bailiffs to be inserted.

Q. Has it not been the most usual Way, in your Time, to do so?

Mr. Baxter. It was when I first knew the Office the most usual Way, in 1732 and 1733. — But Warrants went out with Blanks then.

Q. Did John Evans, the Bailiff named in the Warrant, indemnify the Sheriff?

Mr. Baxter. He has given Security to the Sheriff, I believe. — But the Indemnity was for the Special Bailiffs.

Q. In the Year 1732, or 1733, were Blank Warrants sent out, and not the Names of the Special Bailiffs inserted?

Mr. Baxter. When I was concerned for Mr. Page, who was Sheriff in 1732 or 1733, several Blank Warrants were sent out, and not the Special Bailiffs inserted.

Q. How

Q. How many Warrants were sent out, with Blanks for the Names of the Special Bailiffs, in Mr. Page's Time?

Mr. Baxter. I cannot tell.

Q. Were not Warrants oftener delivered, with the Names of the Special Bailiffs inserted in the Office, before they were sent out, than Warrants with Blanks, for the Names of the Special Bailiffs to be afterwards inserted by the Attornies?

Mr. Baxter. I believe, Warrants were oftener sent out with the Names of the Special Bailiffs inserted, than with Blanks.

Q. Is that the Warrant you made out on the Writ the 1st of March against the Prisoner?

Mr. Baxter. (Looks at the Warrant.) It is the same Warrant.

Q. Is it in the same Situation it was, when you delivered it out of your Hands?

Mr. Baxter. No.

Q. How has it been altered? How does it differ?

Mr. Baxter. The Names John James and John Jones have been since inserted.

Q. Pray, was the Seal to the Warrant before you delivered it out of your Hands?

Mr. Baxter. Yes.

Q. Are you sure of that?

Mr. Baxter. Yes, for I put the Seal to it myself.

Court. Do you remember, that any Arrest was ever set aside, or disputed, on account of a Blank Warrant having been sent out?

Mr. Baxter. No, never.

Council for the Prisoner. Through all the Course of your Practice, has it not been most usual to make out Warrants after you received the Names of the Special Bailiffs, than without them;—than making out Blank Warrants?

Mr. Baxter. Yes, it has been most usual, I think.

Q. When the Names of the Special Bailiffs are sent, do you always insert them in the Warrants?

Mr. Baxter. Yes, I do.

Q. Pray, how is the Under-Sheriff of Cheshire appointed?

Mr. Baxter. He is appointed by the Sheriff, by Deed.

Q. Have you any written Authority from the Sheriff?

Mr. Baxter. No further than by Letters sent me sometimes about the Business of the Office.

Q. How were you appointed?

Mr. Baxter. The Night before the Sheriff was sworn, I supped with him, and it was agreed, I should act for him.

Q. Who were present, when you were appointed to act for the Sheriff?

Mr. Baxter. The Sheriff and Under-Sheriff were both present, and appointed me.

Q. Were you appointed by any Instrument in Writing, or not?

Mr. Baxter. I was not.

Q. Is it usual for the Sheriff and Under-Sheriff both to appoint an Agent to act for the Sheriff?

Mr. Baxter. I believe, the usual Way is by the Under-Sheriff only.

Q. Is there no other Method of appointing a Person to act for the Sheriff, but by Parol?

Mr. Baxter. I don't know of any other Way.

Q. Is the Seal to the Writ the Seal of Office?

Mr. Baxter. It is.

Q. Have the Persons concerned for the Sheriff of this County usually that Sort of Seal?

Mr. Baxter. Yes.

Q. Where had you this Seal?

Mr. Baxter. I had this from Mr. Griffith, having lost my own.

Then the Witness withdrew.

Mr. Gastrell, Clerk to Mr. Lowe, an Attorney in Chester, was then called, to prove that John Atkin signed the Indemnity given to the Sheriff, when the Blank Warrant against the Prisoner was sent out. But the Court thought it unnecessary to examine him.

Mr. Cross, an Attorney in Chester, sworn:

Council for the Crown. Are you acquainted with the Method of suing out Process in the Court of Session for this County?

Mr. Cross. Yes.

Q. Is it usual to send out Warrants from the Sheriff's Office, with Blanks for the Names of the Special Bailiffs to be inserted.

Mr. Cross. When Special Bailiffs are desired; Warrants frequently issue with Blanks, for their Names to be inserted.

Q. Do you know this to be frequently done?

Mr. Cross. Yes.

Council for the Prisoner. But is it not more usual for the Names of the Special Bailiffs to be put into the Warrants in the Office, before they are sent out; than for Warrants to issue with Blanks; for Bailiffs to be inserted afterwards?

Mr. Cross. Sometimes the Names of the Special Bailiffs are inserted in the Office.

Q. I say, is it not oftener done? more frequently?

Mr. Cross. I don't know but it may.

Council for the Crown. Don't you think it prudent, sometimes, not to send the Names of the Special Bailiffs to the Office?—to conceal the Names till they are inserted by the Attorney?

Mr. Cross. I do.

Mr. Fluit, an Attorney in Chester, sworn.

Council for the Crown. Did your Father ever act as Agent for the Sheriff of this County?

Mr. Fluit. He did.

Q. Was it customary for your Father to send out Warrants with Blanks, for the Names of the Special Bailiffs to be inserted afterwards?

Mr. Fluit. He did leave Blanks often in the Warrants.

Q. I suppose you understood that your Father had Authority so to do?

Mr. Fluit. I always understood that he had Authority to do it.

Council for the Prisoner. But did your Father never refuse to send out Blank Warrants, to your Knowledge?

Mr. Fluit. Yes; he sometimes did, when he suspected the Attorney; but never, when he knew the Attorney to be a fair Practiser.

Here ends the Evidence on Behalf of the Crown.

Court to the Prisoner. Have you any Witnesses to examine?—This is the Time for making your Defence.

The Prisoner called no Witnesses, nor said any thing in his Defence.

Mr.

Mr. Recorder TOWNSEND, of Council for the Prisoner.

The Prisoner, I believe, has no Witnesses to call to his Defence, except one Woman, and I do not know yet, that it will be necessary to examine her.

The Occasion, my Lord, of my appearing this Day, as Council for the Prisoner at the Bar, is, on all Sides, a very lamentable Occasion indeed, which must unavoidably affect every body; who has the least Degree of Tendernefs and Humanity; and glad I should have been, if the Prisoner had submitted to the Arrest, how illegal soever, rather than to have taken the desperate Methods he did for delivering himself from it; and I could wish, that it was now in his Power to satisfy the Gentlemen of the Jury, upon the present Trial for his Life, that he did not discharge the Gun, nor kill the unfortunate young Gentleman Mr. Elcock, rather than to have Recourse to the Sanction of the Law for a Justification of his Rashness: Yet, as the unhappy Condition of the Prisoner at the Bar does require all the Aid and Assistance which the Law can allow him, for the saving of his Life, I hope, I shall incur to myself no Imputation in the Discharge of my Duty, by endeavouring to satisfy your Lordship, under the Authority of the Law, that, although the Prisoner did discharge the Gun whereby Mr. Elcock was killed, yet, that he is, by Law, acquitted from the Crime of Murder; and that, under the Circumstances of his Case, such Killing will not amount to more than Manslaughter. — My Lord, I humbly conceive, that no Warrant or Process from the Sheriff can be executed by any Persons, but by those whom the Sheriff appoints to execute them. The High-Sheriff undoubtedly may appoint his Deputy to act for him; and the Appointment of the Under-Sheriff of this County was by Deed, and not a Parol Appointment. Under that Appointment, the Under-Sheriff is armed with a Power of doing the lawful Duty and Business of the Sheriff himself. — But, my Lord, in the present Case, Mr. Baxter, who made out the Warrant against the Prisoner, was a Person acting under the Under-Sheriff: He was not appointed by any Deed, or Instrument in Writing; but he was appointed by Parol, by Word of Mouth only: And Mr. Baxter, as Assistant to the Under-Sheriff, under this defective Appointment, made out a Warrant against the Prisoner, and sent it out, after it was sealed, with a Blank left therein for the Names of the Special Bailiffs to be inserted in it. — The Names John James and John Jones were not in the Warrant, when Mr. Baxter delivered it out, under the Seal. It was taken twenty Miles, to Nantwich, to have the Names afterwards inserted in it. This is proved by John James himself, who swears, that he saw Mr. Elcock write his Name, and the Name of John Jones, in the Warrant at Nantwich. — My Lord, I humbly apprehend, that no Warrant whatsoever from the Sheriff, can or ought to receive the least Addition, Diminution, or Alteration, after it passes the Seal of Office; and that if any Person, in the Execution of a Warrant, which shall receive any Addition or Diminution, or any Alteration whatsoever, after it has passed the Seal, shall be killed, such Killing cannot be Murder. — And if a Person not lawfully authorized shall attempt to deprive a Man of his Liberty, although by a legal Warrant, and is killed in such Attempt, the Killing, in that Case also, is not Murder. My Lord, I have the Authority of as great a Man, as eminent a Lawyer, as ever lived, which, I humbly apprehend, is directly in Point; Hale's Pleas of the Crown, p. 457. where my Lord Hale lays down the Law in these Words: “If a Sheriff's Bailiff comes to execute a Process, but has not a legal Authority; as if the Name of the Bailiff, Plaintiff, or Defendant, be interlined, or inserted, after the Sealing thereof, by the Bailiff himself, or any other; if such Bailiff be killed, it is but Manslaughter, and not Murder.” And, my Lord, notwithstanding the Evidence given by Mr. Baxter, and Mr. Fluit, that Warrants have been generally sent out with Blanks, for the Names of the Special Officers to be afterwards inserted, I humbly contend, that the Warrant, whereon the Prisoner was arrested by James, the Special Officer, at the Suit of John Atkin, was an illegal Warrant, inasmuch as the Names of the Bailiffs were added to, or inserted in the Warrant, after it had passed the Seal; and it was at the Peril of the Party executing that Warrant, whether Death, or any other Mischief, ensued upon it: And, notwithstanding Warrants have sometimes been sent out by the Person acting for the Sheriff, with Blanks left in them for inserting the Names of the Bailiffs, after the Warrants have been sealed, yet that Usage or Practice cannot be considered to extend to overrule or set aside the known Law, set down by my Lord Hale. — My Lord, this is a Point of Law, which I hope your Lordship will look upon to be worthy of Consideration, and not be left to the Determination of the Jury. — It has likewise appeared in Evidence, that when John Atkin and John Jones came to the Assistance of John James the Bailiff, all that James ordered Mr. Elcock to do, was to stay at the Door: He gave him no Authority, nor Orders to break open the Prisoner's House; all he was to do, was to guard the Door. — But, it appears in Evidence, that Mr. Elcock, in a very extraordinary Degree, exceeded the Limits of the Orders which the Bailiff had given him: For, a Crow or Ringer was thrust under the Door, (that very Door which he was ordered to stay at only,) poisoning it open; and Mr. Elcock himself, in his Agonies, declared to Mr. Cooper the Surgeon, who attended him, that he was striving to break open the Door with the Crow, when the Gun was fired: And therefore I submit it to your Lordship, Whether Mr. Elcock did not exceed the Orders and Authority given him by James, supposing that James had, in himself, any Power at all, (which I humbly conceive he had not,) and could have transferred any Power or Authority to Mr. Elcock. These are two Questions, my Lord, which appear to me to be in Favour of the Prisoner, and to deserve Consideration; and if the Court shall be of the same Opinion, I humbly hope, you will not suffer a General Verdict to go against the Prisoner, but reserve those Points for the Consideration of the Court.

Then Mr. PERRY, also of Council for the Prisoner.

The only Question, my Lord, is, Whether the Killing Mr. Elcock, in Manner given in Evidence, ought to be considered as Murder, or Manslaughter:

Manſlaughter. It appears clearly, that the Names of the two Bailiffs were not inſerted in the Warrant, when it iſſued under the Seal of the Sheriff; and therefore it was an illegal Warrant, under which James could not derive any lawful Authority to arreſt the Priſoner: For, according to Lord Hale, the Warrant ſhould have been a full and compleat Warrant, when it paſſed the Seal, and ought not to have been a Blank Warrant, Hale's Pleas of the Crown, 457. (quoted by Mr. Recorder.) And the preſent Fact proved by James and Mr. Baxter, that the two Special Bailiffs were inſerted after the Warrant was ſealed, comes under the Words of this great Authority. My Lord, you will obſerve, that the Sheriff's own Bailiff, named in the Warrant, was not called upon, nor employed to execute it, nor did he attend the Execution of it: But, the Arreſting of the Priſoner was intirely left to the Special Bailiffs, who, I humbly apprehend, had not the leaſt Power or Authority to execute it. — My Lord, I ſhall quote other Authorities, which, I humbly apprehend, will make in Favour of the Priſoner, and thoſe are, Hawkins's P. C. 80. Cro. Car. 372. 1 Jones 346, 372. 1 Leo. 91. 12 Coke 49. And I mention thoſe Authorities, to ſhew, that if a Warrant be in the leaſt defective, the Arreſt cannot be juſtified. — With regard to the Power derived to Mr. Elcock from James the Bailiff, I hope it will appear to your Lordſhip's Satisfaction, that James had not the leaſt Power or Authority whatſoever in himſelf, and therefore could not transfer any to Mr. Elcock. But ſuppoſing the Bailiff had any Power to call Aſſiſtance, and to have given his Orders to Mr. Elcock, yet Mr. Elcock ſhould have ſtrictly obſerved the Orders, which had been given to him—he ſhould have purſued the Directions, namely, to ſtay at the Door; and not have exceeded the Limits of his Authority, in the Manner he did, in attempting to break down that Door, which he was only directed to guard, or ſtay at, and had not any Orders or Authority to break down. There are other Authorities, which I humbly conceive will be of Uſe to the Priſoner, when they come to be conſidered, 2 Lev. 144. 2 Inſt. 105, 143. and 3 Lev. 146. They treat of Arreſts, and the Authority of the Bailiffs, and their Aſſiſtants. No Requeſt was made from the Bailiff to Mr. Elcock, to break down the Door, which ſhould have been previously done, before Mr. Elcock could have had the leaſt Colour or Pretence for attempting to break open the Door of the Priſoner's Houſe. Bretton and Cole. Salk. 409. 1 Ray. 305. — Upon the whole, I hope, your Lordſhip will think that thoſe Points deſerve the Conſideration of the Court, and that they ought not to be left to the Determination of the Jury.

Then Mr. MADDOCKS, likewiſe of Council for the Priſoner.

I am alſo of Council with Mr. Recorder Townſend, and Mr. Perryn, for the unhappy Priſoner at the Bar, and hope your Lordſhip will be of Opinion, that a good deal of Nicety attends this Caſe, not proper for a Jury to determine upon; and that ſeveral Points of Law have ariſen, well worth the Conſideration of the Court. The Law, my Lord, ariſes out of the Fact. This appears to be an Indiſtment againſt the Priſoner, for the Murder of Mr. Francis Elcock, who, when he was murdered, was aſſiſting to re-take a Perſon making his Eſcape from an Arreſt: And I ſhall conſider the Caſe according to its Nature. Firſt, if Mr. Elcock was a Trefpaſſer, then the Priſoner's killing him could be only Manſlaughter, not Murder. — Secondly, Whether upon the Writ, the Special Bailiff and Mr. Elcock derived an Authority for what they did. And here I ſhall mention one Authority, Hawkins's P. C. 86. which ſhews, (although the Caſe is not exactly the ſame with this,) that the General Rule is, if a Party, under Colour of Authority, not having legal Authority, ſhall attempt to take away a Man's Liberty, and is killed in the Attempt, the Killing of that Party is not Murder, but Manſlaughter: And whether Mr. Elcock was a Trefpaſſer or not, will depend upon the Authority he derived under the Writ. — The Writ itſelf does not appear to be void, and therefore I won't ſpeak upon it; but ſhall confine myſelf to the Warrant made out for arreſting the Priſoner, in Obedience to the Writ. As to the Facts given in Evidence, it appears, That the Warrant was iſſued by Mr. Baxter: That Mr. Baxter then acted for the Sheriff, as an Aſſiſtant, by Parol Agreement, and delivered the Warrant under the Seal of the Sheriff's Office: That the Name of John Evans, a Bailiff, was then in it, and none others, and that it was carried ſo to Nantwich: That Mr. Elcock was at Nantwich, and there inſerted the Names of John James and John Jones. Now the General Queſtion is, Whether this Warrant was good in Point of Law? In the firſt Place, the Perſon granting the Warrant muſt have lawful Authority for ſo doing. Mr. Baxter, on his Examination, has ſaid, That the Night before the Sheriff was ſworn, he ſupped with him, and it was then agreed, he ſhould act for the Sheriff: That the Sheriff and Under-Sheriff were both preſent, and appointed him, but that it was by Word of Mouth only. And it fully appears, that Mr. Baxter had no Authority from the High Sheriff in Writing.—An Under-Sheriff, my Lord, may be admitted into his Office by Parol; he is to execute the whole Office: But Mr. Baxter is only to execute a particular Part of it. The Under-Sheriff was appointed by Deed: But Mr. Baxter, who did ſome Things for the Sheriff, but did not execute others, ſuch as attending the Aſſizes and Sefſions, was appointed by Parol. I apprehend, if a Perſon is to act for the Sheriff under a limited Authority, that Authority ought to be in Writing; and where the Sheriff delegates a Part only of his Authority to another, it ſhould be by Writing; and therefore, I humbly conceive, that the Appointment of Mr. Baxter to act for the Sheriff, was not a good Appointment, and that his Authority to make out the Warrant upon the Writ for arreſting the Priſoner, was a very defective Authority.—Now, whether the Warrant was a legal Warrant, or not, is in the next Place to be conſidered. And that will depend upon a Variety of Circumſtances;—upon the Nature of the Inſtrument itſelf, and Matters attending it. A Warrant is always under Seal, and therefore is a Deed:—I ſay, this Warrant was a Deed under Seal: And nothing binds the Parties, but what is contained in a Deed, when executed: No Interlineation, or Addition afterwards made, can affect the Parties who had executed it, unleſs the Deed be re-executed; and there has been no Evidence given, that this Deed, this Warrant, was re-executed. Then, if this be the Case in general, at the Time the Sheriff sealed this Warrant, the Names of the two Bailiffs, James and Jones, were not in it. No Authority was given to any Person, but to Evans the Bailiff, who was then named in the Warrant. — Cites Hale's P. C. 457. (quoted before by the other Council.) Every Iota of this Case is parallel, and is agreeable to Law and Common Sense. How can this Case be distinguished from the General Law? Can it be by Custom? by Lex Loci? It may. What is then incumbent to be done, to establish this Distinction? Why, — the Custom must be immemorial, must be uniform, must be certain; and there is no Evidence here of such a Custom. Mr. Baxter says, he sometimes leaves Blanks in the Warrants, and sometimes he inserts the Names of the Special Bailiffs, and that he has known it so done for seven or eight and twenty Years. This Custom is not a Custom immemorial, it is not proved to have been an immemorial Custom; neither is it uniform, nor proved to be certain. — On the contrary, it has been proved, that the inserting the Names of Special Bailiffs in the Warrants at the Office, is more usual than sending out Blank Warrants. And therefore, supposing the Instances of Custom to be of any Consequence, upon the Determination of this Point, the Custom must make for the Prisoner at the Bar, because the putting in the Names of the Bailiffs at the Office has been more usual. The General Law therefore is supported; the Custom, or Lex Loci, not being immemorial, nor uniform, but uncertain. We are now to stand on the General Law of the Land; and if the Warrant fails, neither the Bailiff, nor Mr. Elcock, nor any of their Assistants, acted under any legal Authority; and therefore the Killing of Mr. Elcock cannot amount to more than Manslaughter. The Authority, my Lord, which Mr. Elcock had, was given him by James; John Evans, the proper Bailiff, was not there, but James was the acting Bailiff. If James had a Mind that Mr. Elcock should have attempted the breaking open the Door, surely he would have desired him to have done so, and not bid him stay at the Door only. The Bailiff acts under a limited Authority, Can he then do what he is not authorized? — James acted under a limited Authority; and whether he had Power to call Assistance, without an Application to the Sheriff, seems to me a great Doubt; but I humbly apprehend, that a Person, to whom a limited Power is delegated, cannot depute another to execute any Part of that limited Power. — In Cases of Rescous, a Writ of Rescous may be had. — Upon Complaint made, that the Party is rescued, a Writ of Rescous issues. — In Criminal Cases, I allow, an Officer can call another to his Assistance: But this was a Civil Case; the Prisoner was out of Sight; it was not a Criminal Matter, nor an Escape from an Execution. If James the Bailiff had an Authority to break open the Prisoner's House, it has not been proved that he gave Mr. Elcock this Authority, but the Reverse. James bid him only stay at the Door: Mr. Elcock himself sent for, or borrowed the Crow, the Plaintiff Atkin put it under the Door, and Mr. Elcock poised it with an Intent to take it off the Hinges. No particular Authority was given by James; but Mr. Elcock took the Management upon himself. It was his Business only to watch the Door. — Atkin put the Crow under the Door, and Mr. Elcock poised it; neither of them had any Order or Directions to break open the House; and Mr. Elcock, having exceeded the Limits of the Authority given him, became a Trespasser; and the unfortunate Killing of him, in the Commission of that Trespass, can only be Manslaughter, and not Murder. — My Lord, I apprehend, that upon an Escape, or Rescous from an Arrest upon Mesne Process, an outward Door cannot be broke open. This was an outward Door: The Rescous was at an End for two Hours, and there ought to have been a Request to assist on the Rescous; and a Request to assist on a Rescous, is traversable.

Court. It must be left to the Jury; Whether there was a Request, or not.

Mr. Maddocks. In short, if Mr. Elcock was a Trespasser, the Killing of him can be only Manslaughter. I humbly apprehend, that John James had no Authority under the Warrant for the arresting the Prisoner: His Name was not inserted in the Warrant, till after it had passed the Seal of Office. He delegated only a particular Authority to Mr. Elcock. — Mr. Elcock exceeded that Authority. Mr. Elcock was a Trespasser. The Prisoner fired a Gun, which killed Mr. Elcock in the Commission of the Trespass, when he was breaking open the Prisoner's Door: And therefore I hope your Lordship will be of Opinion, that these are Points so essentially in Favour of the Prisoner, that you will not prevent him from having the Benefit of the Law which may result from a judicial Determination of them; nor suffer the Prisoner's Life to be left at the Hazard of a General Verdict.

Mr. Justice Swinnerton. Can you shew any Case to the Court, where an Arrest under a Blank Warrant has been superseded?

Mr. Maddocks. No, my Lord, I know of no Case at present. — But the Thing speaks for itself: It is not likely there should be many Cases of this Kind.

Mr. Justice Swinnerton. Is the Doctrine of my Lord Hale laid down in any Part of Hawkins's Pleas of the Crown?

Mr. Maddocks. I have not looked over Mr. Hawkins for it; but if it is omitted to be inserted in his Pleas of the Crown, I hope, that Omission cannot be considered to repeal or invalidate my Lord Hale's Authority.

Mr. Justice White. This Case does not seem to me to come under the Doctrine of Lord Hale. For here a Bailiff was named, and inserted in the Warrant, before it was sealed; and I think it was a good Warrant.

(Court distinguishes the Warrant from a Deed; for a Deed must be delivered, and the Sealing and Delivering make a Deed.)

Mr. Maddocks. The Warrant was directed to the Bailiffs, jointly and severally. The Name of John Evans was then, only, in the Warrant; John Evans never acted in the Execution of it; and therefore the Warrant must be illegal, quoad James.

Mr. HALL, of Council for the Crown.

I should have almost thought it unnecessary for me to have troubled the Court further on so plain a Case, but that the Objections made to the Authority of Mr. Baxter seem to require, that something should be said, to prevent a Notion from from prevailing, that he had not a Right to make out the Warrant. — By the Common Law, an Under-Sheriff may be appointed by Parol, or Deed; and several Under-Sheriffs for different Purposes.

Court. Shew your Cases.

Mr. Hall proceeds:

One Sheriff in London has two Under-Sheriffs, two Compters, two Prisons: The Business is carried on by different Persons. — And there is a Sheriff's Office in Furnival's-Inn, the Business of which is executed by a Clerk; and those Persons are appointed by Parol. Mr. Baxter has been appointed in the same Manner, and it has been usual to make out Blank Warrants for a great Number of Years. Prescription for thirty Years is good, unless the contrary appears; and here nothing does appear to the contrary. Mr. Baxter swears, it has been the Custom all his Time, which he limits to seven or eight and twenty Years, to make out Blank Warrants, for the Names of the Special Bailiffs to be inserted. Mr. Baxter did make out this Warrant against the Prisoner, and directed it to John Evans, a Bailiff, and left a Blank for the Attorney to insert two other Names; Mr. Elcock did put in those two Names, and must be considered as Clerk or Agent to the Sheriff; and if so, John James was lawfully authorized to arrest the Prisoner upon that Warrant, and did actually arrest the Prisoner; who afterwards by Violence rescued himself from the Custody of the Bailiff. The Law, upon a Rescous, gives Authority, for the Purpose of taking a Defendant, to break open Doors; and justifies all Persons aiding and assisting the Officer, whether they be requested, or not. — If a Bailiff takes a Man by the Hand out of a Window, it is an Arrest, and he may justify the breaking open of Doors after the Defendant, if he should attempt to escape; and I humbly apprehend, the Reason for breaking open the Door was stronger in this Case. — Cites Peer Williams, The Corporation of Bewdley, relating to Venires. — Though upon Complaint of a Rescous, a Writ of Rescous may be sued out; yet I apprehend, that does not prevent taking other Remedies, such as breaking open Doors. The Sheriff may return a Rescous upon a Mesne Process, but cannot upon an Execution: He must raise a Posse Comitatus; but that does not hinder him from raising the Posse Comitatus for a Rescous from an Arrest upon a Mesne Process, if he thinks fit. — It was the Duty of every Man to aid and assist John James the Bailiff, to re-take the Prisoner, after he had rescued himself from the Hands of Justice, by the Force and Violence given in Evidence by James; and Mr. Elcock did what was right, in endeavouring to suppress the Arrogance and Outrage of the Prisoner, and to bring him under a Subjection to those Laws, which are too authoritative to be trampled upon, and treated with Contempt and Disobedience. The Authority in Lord Hale, cited by the Prisoner's Council, is a very old Authority. My Lord Hale, I admit, was a great Man, and I pay the highest Regard to his Reports; but I don't find this Authority named in Serjeant Hawkins's Pleas of the Crown, and therefore I apprehend the Serjeant doubted it.

Then Mr. FALCONER, also of Council for the Crown.

The Practice of the Officer, acting for the Under-Sheriff, in granting Blank Warrants, has never been complained of as an irregular or unlawful Practice, nor has any Arrest made upon those Sort of Warrants been ever superseded or set aside: Such Blank Warrants have always been held good, and the acting under them legal; and it would be of most dangerous Consequence to attempt to vitiate Proceedings, under which Justice has, for Time immemorial, been administered to the Suitors of the Court. Cites Hale's H. C. 459.

Prisoner's Council. That is upon an Execution.

Then Mr. HAYWARD, likewise of Council for the Crown.

My Lord, I humbly conceive, that the Arguments made use of by the Prisoner's Council, for invalidating the Practice of issuing Blank Warrants, will have little Weight with your Lordship, it having been the Usage for Time immemorial, for Persons acting under the Sheriff of this County, as Mr. Baxter now does, to send out such Warrants, and that Practice was never known to be controverted: And if your Lordship is satisfied, that such has been the allowed Practice, then I humbly contend, that the Special Bailiff John James had a legal Authority to arrest the Prisoner, by Virtue of the Warrant which he received from Mr. Elcock; and that upon his rescuing himself, as has been given in Evidence, the Officer had a Right to call Assistance, and to break open Doors for the Purpose of re-taking him. — Cites McCulloch's Case, 9 Coke. — If a Capias instead of a Distingas be executed by an Officer, and the Officer is killed, it is Murder; surely then, it can be no less a Crime than Murder, to kill an Officer after he has executed a Capias: If then the Authority under which James acted was a good Authority, Mr. Elcock did what was legal, though I heartily wish he had acted with better Caution. Cites Palmer 52. White's Case. And the killing Mr. Elcock, or any of the Persons who assisted in re-taking the Prisoner, after he had rescued himself, was Murder. If a Sheriff can appoint a Deputy generally by Parol, I humbly apprehend he may appoint a Person to act in any particular Part of the Office by Parol: I see no Reason why he may not do it in one Case, as well as in the other. — As to a Warrant being the same Thing in Effect as a Deed, with regard to the Execution of it, as the Council for the Prisoner contend, surely there is not the least Foundation for the Comparison: A Warrant is only sealed, but Signing, Sealing, and Delivering are necessary to make a Deed. It has been argued by the Council for the Prisoner in his Defence, That James, the Bailiff, had no Right to call Assistance for the re-taking the Prisoner, because, as they say, it was a Civil Case; it was not a Criminal Matter, nor an Escape from an Execution: But, my Lord, I humbly insist, that from the Moment the Prisoner had refused to submit to the Arrest, and had rescued himself from the Officer, by snapping a Pistol at him, it ceased to be a Civil Case; it became a Criminal Matter: The Prisoner was a Transgressor and Violator of the Laws of his Country; he broke his Majesty's Peace, and became a Criminal Offender; and therefore the Bailiff had a Right to call, and every Person ought to give him, Assistance for apprehending him: His House remained no longer an Asylum, or Sanctuary for him: He forfeited the Safety which the Law had given given him in the close Retirements of his House before he was arrested: His Doors could be afterwards no Security to him from the Hands of Justice; and therefore his killing Mr. Elcock in the Pursuit of him, for the Purpose of bringing him to a due Submission and Obedience, was (I humbly conceive) Murder, and not Manslaughter. The Life of a Man (says my Lord Coke) is to be favoured, but the Life of the Law more so. The Law was established for the Security, Defence, and Protection of every Individual, and is the Life, Strength, and Support of the Community. Upon the whole, I humbly apprehend, your Lordship will be of Opinion, that the Points insisted upon by the Council for the Prisoner cannot intitle him to any Indulgence from the Court; but on the contrary, that you will think them too weak and insufficient to induce you to direct a Special Verdict to be found; and that therefore your Lordship will now sum up the Evidence to the Jury, that they may consider it, and find a General Verdict.

Mr. Attorney produces a Case, Harris against Ashley, determined by Lord Mansfield, the Sittings after Michaelmas Term 1756, in the King's Bench, where a Sheriff's Clerk filled up the Assignment of a Bail Bond, and it was held good.

Mr. TOWNSEND, for the Prisoner.

I humbly contend, That the Warrant, by reason of the inserting the Bailiffs after the Sealing of it, is not a legal Warrant*; and if so, my Lord Hale's Doctrine is to the Point, and clearly for the Prisoner. The King's Council themselves admit Lord Hale's Reports to be an Authority, and therefore I hope, the Prisoner is well intitled to the Benefit of this Authority. Though the Sheriff may appoint a Deputy by Parol, and that Deputy depute his Authority to a third Person, yet, if that third Person had not a Right of deputing, Mr. Elcock could not act as Agent or Clerk to the Sheriff; and I humbly insist, Mr. Elcock had not a Right to do so, unless the Sheriff himself gave an Authority appointing him. Mr. Serjeant Hawkins omitting to insert my Lord Hale's Case in his Pleas of the Crown, is no Reason for its not being a Resolution, of as great Authority as any extant; and it would be a Pity, as well as cruel, that the Prisoner's Life should be forfeited for that Omission. It was an Omission not probably intended; he might have overlooked it, or it might have been left out by some other Accident: No Authority contradicts it; and therefore I contend, that it is still an Authority, in full Force and Effect, and available to the Prisoner, and not abolished or affected by the Custom, which the Council for the Crown have set up in Opposition to it. Custom, my Lord, must be supported by Usage for Time immemorial; Custom must be uniform and certain, before it becomes a Law: This Custom carries with it none of those Qualifications. What Mr. Baxter has said, therefore, cannot overset the Rules of the Common Law. I never knew, during all the Time of my own Clerkship, a Blank Warrant sent out, without an Indemnity by Deed; and the Attornies always sent, with the Names of the Special Bailiffs, Indemnities, either by Deed, or Assumpsit, on the Back of the Writ: And I humbly insist, that the inserting of the Names of the two Bailiffs in the Warrant, which James had to arrest the Prisoner, is directly within the Words and Sense of my Lord Hale's Case, as to those two Bailiffs.

Court. Persons coming to the Assistance of the Constable the Law gives the same Sanction to, as to those called by Name. — One Point occurs, not yet spoken to, Whether the Warrant may not be considered as an Escrow. — Suppose a Person gives a Bond to another, sealed and delivered, with a Blank in it for the Sum, and desires him to insert Two Hundred Pounds or any Sum in it, and he to whom the Bond is given, fills up the Blank accordingly, it is good. I should be glad, you could produce one Instance, where a Person, who has been arrested upon a Blank Warrant, has been discharged.

Mr. Justice White. No other Person was concerned in the Transaction, but the Party giving the Warrant, and the Party executing it. No Instrument or Writing is a Deed, until it is delivered; but a Warrant is a Warrant as soon as it is sealed.

If a Court see a Blank Indorsement on a Note, they will afterwards suffer it to be filled up. What a dangerous Confusion would be created in the Country, were the Proceedings upon Arrests made by Blank Warrants to be now set aside? To what a precarious Situation would the Property of the Subject be exposed? And how unsettled the Distribution of Justice, heretofore administered upon the Foundation of such Arrests? As to the Question, Whether the Bailiff's Authority to Mr. Elcock was for a particular Purpose, or general — By the Bailiff's calling out after Stevenfon to stay; they were coming for him — I should think, that Mr. Elcock was with the Bailiff to give him general Assistance. — This is Matter of Fact, not Law.

Mr. TOWNSEND again, for the Prisoner:

I hope, the Points of Law that have arisen in the Course of this Trial, will induce your Lordship to direct the Jury to find a Special Verdict, that the Prisoner may have the Benefit of the

* “ In the Case of Arrests upon Procefs, whether by Writ or Warrant, if the Officer named in the Procefs give Notice of his Authority, and Resistance is made, and the Officer killed, it will be Murder; if in Fact such Notification was true, and the Procefs legal: For, after such Notice, the Parties opposing the Arrest acted at their own Peril.

“ I said above, by way of Caution, if the Procefs be legal: But I would not be understood to mean any thing more than, Provided the Procefs, be it by Writ or Warrant, be not defective in the Frame of it, and issue in the ordinary Course of Justice from a Court or Magistrate having Jurisdiction in the Case. There may have been Error or Irregularity in the Proceeding, previous to the issuing of the Procefs; and if the Sheriff, or other Minister of Justice, be killed in the Execution of it, this will be Murder: For the Officer to whom it is directed, must at his Peril pay Obedience to it; and therefore, if a Capias ad Satisfaciendum, Fieri facias, Writ of Assistance, or any other Writ of the like Kind, issue, directed to the Sheriff, and he or any of his Officers be killed in the Execution of it, it is sufficient, upon an Indictment for this Murder, to produce the Writ and Warrant.

“ But, if the Procefs be defective in the Frame of it; as if there be a Mistake in the Name or Addition of the Person on whom it is to be executed; or if the Name of such Person, or of the Officer, be inserted without Authority, and after the issuing of the Procefs, or the Officer exceedeth the Limits of his Authority, and is killed, this will amount to no more than Manslaughter in the Person whose Liberty is so invaded.” Foster's Reports, p. 311, 312.

Law, and that you will not suffer a Matter, which so nearly endangers the Prisoner's Life, to be determined by a Jury: The Authority of Lord Hale furnishes me with an Expectation, that you will grant this Indulgence to the Prisoner.

Mr. Justice Swinerton. I must, in Justice to you, Mr. Recorder, and the other Council for the Prisoner, say, that you have discharged yourselves, through the Course of this Trial, with great Decency and Judgment, and have done every thing for the unhappy Man, that could possibly be expected from Gentlemen at the Bar. As for my own Part, I have the greatest Inclination to Mercy, and no Person would more readily extend Compassion to a proper Object, than I would: But, I could wish that it had not been my Province to hear, and be a Judge of so shocking and melancholy an Event; for this being an Inquisition for Blood, to delay the Execution of Justice, may tend to overset and destroy Justice. However, if you, Gentlemen at the Bar, of Council for the Prisoner, will give this Court your Honour, that you verily believe the Points of Law, which seem to have arisen upon this Trial, will in the End avail the Prisoner, and that you think Judgment of Murder may be averted from him upon the Decision of those Points; and that you do not ask Indulgence for the sake of Delay, but from reasonable Hopes that the Prisoner may be acquitted of Murder, when the Facts come to be argued; I will most readily consent to direct the Jury to find a Special Verdict; but if, on the other hand, you think that the Prisoner may not be availed by the Determination of the Court upon those Points, I rely upon your Honour, and hope you will not request it.

Mr. Townsend. With great Submission to the Court, we humbly apprehend, that the Prisoner will receive the utmost Advantage upon the Determination of the Facts to be stated: We have the Authority of Lord Hale on our Side, and shall have Time to consult other Authorities, which may probably give us further Assurances, that the Prisoner's Life in the End will be saved by the Decision of those Points. But if we should fail, I have no Doubt upon me, but the Conduct of myself, and of the other Council for the Prisoner, will be clear from every Imputation, inasmuch as we request this Indulgence under the Patronage of my Lord Hale, and not to delay or protract Justice, but that the Prisoner may receive that Benefit from the Law, which we humbly conceive he is intitled unto; and for these Reasons only we desire, that the Court will give the Prisoner an Opportunity of having those Points argued.

The Court consented.

Then the Facts were stated, and found by the Jury as follows:

The Jurors find the Capias with the Indorsement of Indemnity.

That the said John Atkin, Plaintiff in the said Capias, signed the Indorsement of Indemnity.

That the Sheriffs of the County of Chester have always appointed a Person, residing in the City of Chester, to receive Writs, make Warrants thereon, and to return them.

That Mr. Robert Baxter, the Night before Samuel Harrison, Esquire, Sheriff of the said County of Chester, was sworn into Office, but after he had received his Appointment as Sheriff, was in Company with the said Samuel Harrison, then and now Sheriff of the said County, and John Hollins, Gentleman, Under-Sheriff of the said County; and the said Robert Baxter was then appointed for the Purposes aforesaid; under which Appointment the said Robert Baxter has acted ever since. That the said Sheriff was sworn into Office the Day following such Appointment: That the said Robert Baxter after that Time, and in pursuance of such Appointment, did make out a Warrant upon the said Capias, under Seal of the said Sheriff, in the Words following, that is to say, [Here the Warrant is to be set forth in the Record of the Special Verdict.] But Note, — In setting forth the Warrant in the Special Verdict, the Words, "John James" and "John Jones," are to be omitted.

That the said Robert Baxter delivered the said Warrant, so under Seal as aforesaid, to Mr. Lowe, then Agent to Francis Elcock since deceased, which said Francis Elcock was Attorney for the Plaintiff John Atkin.

That the same Warrant so sealed, was sent to the said Francis Elcock, to Nantwich in the said County, (a Blank being left in the said Warrant.)

That it has been the Practice, in the Sheriff's Office of the said County of Chester, to grant Warrants with the Names of the Sheriff's Bailiffs inserted, and that Blanks have been left therein, for the Purpose of inserting the Names of special Bailiffs, to be added to such Sheriff's own Bailiffs, to act jointly or severally; and that it has also been the Practice for the Sheriff's Agent to insert the Names of all the special Bailiffs therein, before the same hath been delivered out to the Bailiffs, when such Names have been sent to the Sheriff's Office; and that the said Francis Elcock afterwards, at Nantwich aforesaid, by the Permission of the said Robert Baxter, inserted in the said Warrant, in the Blank left for that Purpose, the Words and Names following, to wit, "John James and John Jones." That the said Warrant was delivered to John James, by virtue whereof he the said John James alone arrested the said John Stevenson. That the said John Stevenson, after he was so arrested, rescued himself, went into his House, and shut the Doors. That the said John James applied to the said Francis Elcock for Arms and Assistance to retake the said John Stevenson, (the said Francis Elcock then being at an House in the Neighbourhood.) That the said John James, the said Francis Elcock, and several other Persons, as Assistants to the said John James, made fresh Pursuit, and went to the House of the said John Stevenson, as soon as they could, in order to retake him the said John Stevenson; but that John Evans, named in the said Warrant, never was there, and that all the Doors of the said House were shut. That the said John James, upon his going to retake the said John Stevenson, and before he the said John James got to the said John Stevenson's House, saw the said John Stevenson out of Doors, but going towards the said House; and before he the said John Stevenson got into the faid House, he the faid John James called out to the faid John Stevenson in these Words, "You may as well stay, for we are coming for you." That when the faid John James, the faid Francis Elcock, and others, as Assistants to the faid John James, came up to the faid House, the faid John James told the faid Francis Elcock to take care of two of the Doors of the faid House, and the faid John James went to a Door on the other Side of the same House, out of the Sight of the faid Francis Elcock. That the faid Francis Elcock demanded Entrance, while the faid John James was at another Door, out of Sight of him the the faid Francis Elcock. That the faid John Atkin, the faid Plaintiff, was at the same Door with the faid Francis Elcock, with an Iron Crow in his Hand. That the faid Crow was brought there, together with other Arms, by the Direction of the faid John James. That the faid Francis Elcock bid the faid John Atkin to put the faid Iron Crow under the same Door, to break it open; whereupon the faid John Atkin put the faid Crow under the same Door for that Purpose, and endeavoured to lift the same Door off the Hinges; but failing, he the faid John Atkin then left the faid Crow sticking under the same Door, and went towards another Door of the same House, to prevent the faid John Stevenson escaping, and left the faid Francis Elcock at the same Door, where the faid Iron Crow was. That there were two Holes in the same Door, through which the faid John Stevenson might see who was on the Out-side of the same Door.

That the faid John Stevenson took a Gun from the Mantle-piece in his faid House, loaded with Gun-powder and a Bullet, and shot and discharged it, and shot the faid Francis Elcock, through the same Door, in the Part mentioned in the Indictment, of which he the faid Francis Elcock died, as in the faid Indictment is mentioned.

And if, upon the whole Matter, the Court shall be of Opinion, that the faid John Stevenson is Guilty of Murder, the Jury say, that the faid John Stevenson is Guilty of Murder.

And if the Court shall be of Opinion, that the faid John Stevenson is Guilty of Manslaughter, the Jury say, that the faid John Stevenson is Guilty of Manslaughter, and not Guilty of Murder.

"Thursday, August 6, following, the Special Verdict was argued at the Assizes at Chester, before the Hon. Mr. Justice Noel, Chief Justice of Chester, and Taylor White, Esq; the other Justice, when the Court took Time till the next Morning for delivering their Opinions; and accordingly on Friday Morning, Mr. Justice Noel, in an ingenious and pathetic Speech, supported by adjudged Cases, and the Doctrine of the wisest Sages of the Law, and also by Arguments of Reason and Conscience, declared, That the Prisoner's Crime, found by the Special Verdict, could amount at most to Manslaughter only. Whereupon the Prisoner was burnt in the Hand, and discharged from the Indictment of Murder." London Magazine, for August 1759.

☞ Here should come in the Trial of Laurence Earl Ferrers, for the Murder of Mr. John Johnson, April 16, 1760; and Lord Byron's Trial, April 16, 1765, for the Murder of William Chaworth, Esq;

But the Proprietor of the Copy of those Trials would not consent to the reprinting of them in this Collection, for the Reasons given in Vol. 9. p. 588.

Therefore such Persons as have those Trials, may bind them in this Place, which is in Order of Time; if they have them not, may purchase them separately, viz.

Laurence Earl Ferrers, found guilty of Murder, and executed.

William Lord Byron, found guilty of Manslaughter.

Then follows N^o. LIV. The Trial of Katharine Nairn and Patrick Ogilvie, for Incest and Murder.

IN PARLIAMENT ASSEMBLED, the Lords of the House of PEERS, of the High Court of Parliament, do hereby do appoint James their printer to print and publish the Tracts that shall be presented for the Murther of John; And do forbid any other
Printer to print or publish the same.

 WESTMINSTER-HALL, in Full PARLIAMENT.

Wednesday, April the 16th, 1760.

In the Court erected in WESTMINSTER-HALL, for the TRIAL of LAWRENCE
 Earl FERRERS, for the Murder of John Johnson.

A BOUT Eleven of the Clock the Lords came from their own House into the Court erected in Westminster-Hall, for the Trial of Lawrence Earl Ferrers, in the Manner following:

- The Lord High Steward's Gentlemen Attendants, Two and Two.
- The Clerks Assistant to the House of Lords, and the Clerk of the Parliament.
- Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, bearing the King's Commission to the Lord High Steward and the Clerk of the Crown in the King's Bench.
- The Masters in Chancery, Two and Two.
- The Judges, Two and Two.
- The Peers eldest Sons, Two and Two.
- Peers Minors, Two and Two.
- York and Windsor* Heralds.
- Four Serjeants at Arms with their Maces, Two and Two.
- The Yeoman Usher of the House.
- Then the Peers, Two and Two, beginning with the youngest Baron.
- Then Four Serjeants at Arms with their Maces, Two and Two.
- The Serjeant at Arms attending the Great Seal, and Purse-Bearer.
- Then Garter King at Arms, and the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, carrying the White Staff before the Lord High Steward.
- Robert Lord Henley*, Lord Keeper of the Great Seal of Great Britain, Lord High Steward, alone; his Train borne.

When the Lords were placed in their proper Seats, and the Lord High Steward upon the Woolpack ;

The Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, having his Majesty's Commission to the Lord High Steward in his Hand, and the Clerk of the Crown in the King's Bench, standing before the Clerk's Table with their Faces towards the State, made Three Reverences ; the First at the Table, the Second in the Midway, and the Third near the Woolpack ; then kneeled down ; and the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, on his Knee, presented the Commission to the Lord High Steward, who delivered the same to the Clerk of the Crown in the King's Bench to read : Then rising, they made Three Reverences, and returned to the Table. And then Proclamation was made for Silence, in this Manner :

Serjeant at Arms. Oyez, Oyez, Oyez ! Our Sovereign Lord the King strictly charges and commands all manner of Persons to keep Silence, upon Pain of Imprisonment.

Then the Lord High Steward stood up, and spoke to the Peers.

Lord High Steward. His Majesty's Commission is about to be read : Your Lordships are desired to attend to it in the usual Manner ; and all others are likewise to stand up, uncovered, while the Commission is reading.

All the Peers uncovered themselves ; and they, and all others, stood up uncovered, while the Commission was read.

GEORGE R.

GEORGE the Second, by the Grace of God, of Great Britain, France, and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, and so forth. To our Right Trusty and Wellbeloved Councillor Robert Lord Henley, Baron of Grainge, in Our County of Southampton, Keeper of our Great Seal of Great Britain, Greeting, Know ye, That whereas Lawrence Earl Ferrers, Viscount Tamworth, late of the Parish of Breedon, in Our County of Leicester (before Our Justices, assigned by Our Letters Patent under Our Great Seal of Great Britain, to enquire more fully the Truth, by the Oath of good and lawful Men of Our said County of Leicester, and by other Ways, Means, and Methods, by which they should and might better know (as well within Liberties as without), by whom the Truth of the Matter may be the better known and enquired into, of all Treasons, Misprisions of Treasons, Insurrections, Rebellions, Counterfeitings, Clippings, Washings, false Coinings, and other Falsties of the Money of Great Britain, and of other Kingdoms or Dominions whatsoever, and of all Murders, Felonies, Manslaughters, Killings, Burglaries, Rapes of Women, unlawful Meetings and Conventicles, unlawful Uttering of Words, Assemblies, Misprisions, Confederacies, false Allegations, Trespasies, Riots, Routs, Retentions, Escapes, Contempts, Falsties, Negligences, Concealments, Maintenances, Oppressions, Champarties, Deceits, and all other evil Doings, Offences, and Injuries whatsoever, and also of the Accessaries of them, within the County of Leicester aforesaid (as well within Liberties as without), by whomsoever and in what manner soever done, committed, or perpetrated, and by whom, or to whom, when, how, and after what manner ; and of all other Articles and Circumstances concerning the Premises, and every or any of them, in any manner whatsoever ; and the said Treasons, and other the Premises, according to the Laws and Customs of England, to hear and determine), stands indicted, by the Oath of good and lawful Men of Our said County of Leicester, of Felony and Murder, by him the said Lawrence Earl Ferrers Viscount Tamworth done and committed ; We, considering that Justice is an excellent Virtue, and pleasing to the Most High ; and being willing that the said Lawrence Earl Ferrers Viscount Tamworth, of and for the Felony and Murder whereof he is indicted as aforesaid before Us, in Our present Parliament, according to the Law and Custom of Our Kingdom of Great Britain, may be heard, examined, sentenced, and adjudged ; and that all other Things which are necessary on this Occasion may be duly exercised and executed ; and for that the Office of High Steward of Great Britain (whose Presence, upon this Occasion, is required), is now vacant (as We are informed) ; We, very much confiding in your Fidelity, Prudence, provident Circumspection, and Industry, have, for this Cause, ordained and constituted you Steward of Great Britain, to bear, execute, and exercise (for this Time), the said Office, with all Things due and belonging to the same Office in this Behalf : And therefore We command you, that you diligently set about the Premises, and (for this Time) do exercise, and execute with Effect, all those Things which belong to the Office of Steward of Great Britain, and which are required in this Behalf. In Witness whereof, We have caused these our Letters to be made Patent. Witness Ourself at Westminster, the Sixteenth Day of April, in the Thirty-third Year of Our Reign.

By the King Himself, signed with his own Hand.

Yorke and Yorke.

Serjeant at Arms. God save the King.

Then Garter, and the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, after Three Reverences, kneeling, jointly presented the White Staff to his Grace the Lord High Steward: And then his Grace, attended by Garter, Black Rod, and the Purse-Bearer (making his proper Reverences towards the Throne), removed from the Woolpack to an armed Chair, which was placed on the uppermost Step but one of the Throne, as it was prepared for that Purpose; and then seated himself in the Chair, and delivered the Staff to the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod on his Right Hand, the Purse-Bearer holding the Purse on the Left.

Clerk of the Crown. Serjeant at Arms, make Proclamation.

Serjeant at Arms. Oyez, Oyez, Oyez! Our Sovereign Lord the King strictly charges and commands all manner of Persons to keep Silence, upon Pain of Imprisonment.

Then the Clerk of the Crown, by Direction of the Lord High Steward, read the Certiorari, and the Return thereof, together with the Caption of the Indictment, and the Indictment certified thereupon, against Lawrence Earl Ferrers; in hæc verba:

The Certiorari } and Return. } GEOERGE the Second, by the Grace of God, of Great Britain, France, and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith; and so forth, To Our Justices, assigned by Our Letters Patent under Our Great Seal of Great Britain to enquire more fully the Truth, by the Oath of good and lawful Men of Our County of Leicester, and by other Ways, Means, and Methods, by which they should and might better know (as well within Liberties as without), by whom the Truth of the Matter may be the better known and enquired into, of all Treasons, Misprisions of Treasons, Insurrections, Rebellions, Counterfeitings, Clippings, Washings, false Coinings, and other Falsties of the Money of Great Britain, and of other Kingdoms or Dominions whatsoever, and of all Murders, Felonies, Manlaughters, Killings, Burglaries, Rapes of Women, unlawful Meetings and Conventicles; unlawful Uttering of Words, Assemblies, Misprisions, Confederacies, false Allegations, Trespasses, Riots, Routs, Retentions, Escapes, Contempts, Falsties, Negligences, Concealments, Maintenances, Oppressions, Champarties, Deceits, and all other evil Doings, Offences, and Injuries whatsoever; and also of the Accessaries of them, within the County aforesaid (as well within Liberties as without), by whomsoever and in what manner soever done, committed, or perpetrated, and by whom, or to whom, when, how, and after what manner; and of all other Articles and Circumstances concerning the Premises, and every or any of them, in any manner whatsoever, and the said Treasons, and other the Premises, according to the Laws and Customs of England, to hear and determine, and to every of them, Greeting; We, being willing, for certain Reasons, that all and singular Indictments and Inquisitions of whatsoever Felonies and Murders whereof Lawrence Earl Ferrers Viscount Tamworth, late of the Parish of Breedon, in the County of Leicester, is indicted before you (as is said), be determined before Us, and not elsewhere, do command you, and every of you; that you, or One of you, do send, under your Seals, or the Seal of One of you, before Us, in our present Parliament, immediately after the Receipt of this Our Writ, all and singular the Indictments and Inquisitions aforesaid, with all Things touching the same, by whatsoever Name the said Lawrence Earl Ferrers Viscount Tamworth is called in the same, together with this Writ, that We may further cause to be done thereon what of Right, and according to the Law and Custom of England, We shall see fit to be done. A true Bill.

Lord High Steward. Is it your Lordships Pleasure, that the Judges have Leave to be covered?

Lords. Ay, ay.

Clerk of the Crown. Serjeant at Arms, Make Proclamation for the Lieutenant of the Tower to bring his Prisoner to the Bar.

Serjeant at Arms. Oyez, Oyez, Oyez! Lieutenant of the Tower of London, Bring forth Lawrence Earl Ferrers, your Prisoner, to the Bar, pursuant to the Order of the House of Lords.

Then Lawrence Earl Ferrers was brought to the Bar by the Deputy Governor of the Tower, having the Ax carried before him by the Gentleman-Gaoler, who stood with it on the Left Hand of the Prisoner, with the Edge turned from him. The Prisoner, when he approached the Bar, made Three Reverences, and then fell upon his Knees at the Bar.

Lord High Steward. Your Lordship may rise.

Then the Prisoner rose up, and bowed to his Grace the Lord High Steward, and to the House of Peers; which Compliment was returned him by his Grace, and the Lords.

Then, Proclamation having been again made for Silence, the Lord High Steward spake to the Prisoner, as follows.

Lord High Steward.

Lawrence Earl Ferrers,

YOU are brought to this Bar to receive your Trial, upon a Charge of the Murder of John Johnson; an Accusation, with respect to the Crime, and the Persons who make it (the Grand Jury of the County of Leicester, the Place of your Lordship's Residence), of the most solemn and serious Nature.

Yet, my Lord, you may consider it, but as an Accusation; for the greatest or meanest Subject of this Kingdom (such is the Tenderness of our Law) cannot be convicted capitally, but by a Charge made by Twelve good and lawful Men, and a Verdict found by the same Number of his Equals at the least.

My Lord, in this Period of the Proceedings, while your Lordship stands only as accused, I touch but gently on the Offence charged upon your Lordship; yet, for your own Sake, it behoves me, strongly to mark the Nature of the Judicature before which you now appear.

It is a Happiness resulting from your Lordship's Birth and the Constitution of this Country, That your Lordship is now to be tried by your Peers in full Parliament. What greater Consolation can be suggested to a Person in your unhappy Circumstances, than to be reminded, that you are to be tried by a Set of Judges, whose Sagacity and Penetration no material Circumstances in Evidence can escape, and whose Justice nothing can influence or pervert?

This Consideration, if your Lordship is conscious of Innocence, must free your Mind from any Perturbations that the Solemnity of such a Trial might excite; It will render the Charge, heavy as it is, unembarrassing, and leave your Lordship firm and composed, to avail yourself of every Mode of Defence, that the most equal and humane Laws admit of.

Your Lordship, pursuant to the Course of this Judicature, hath been furnished with a Copy of the Indictment, and hath had your own Counsel assigned; you are therefore enabled to make such Defence as is most for your Benefit and Advantage; if your Lordship shall put yourself on Trial, you must be assured to meet with nothing but Justice, Candour, and Impartiality.

Before I conclude, I am, by Command of the House, to acquaint your Lordship, and all other Persons who have Occasion to speak to the Court, during the Trial, that they are to address themselves to the Lords in general, and not to any Lord in particular.

Lord High Steward. Lawrence Earl Ferrers, Your Lordship will do well to give Attention, while you are arraigned on your Indictment.

Here Earl Ferrers was arraigned, in the Form of the said Indictment against him, by the Clerk of the Crown in the King's-Bench.

Clerk of the Crown. How say you, Lawrence Earl Ferrers, Ate you guilty of the Felony and Murder whereof you stand indicted, or not guilty?

Earl Ferrers. Not guilty, my Lords.

Clerk of the Crown. Cul' : prit,
How will your Lordship be tried ?

Earl Ferrers. By God and my Peers.

Clerk of the Crown. God send your Lordship a good Deliverance.

Clerk of the Crown. Serjeant at Arms, make Proclamation.

Serjeant at Arms. Oyez, Oyez, Oyez ! All manner of Persons that will give Evidence, on behalf of our Sovereign Lord the King, against Lawrence Earl Ferrers, the Prisoner at the Bar, let them come forth, and they shall be heard ; for now he stands at the Bar upon his Deliverance.

Lord High Steward. My Lords, the Distance of this Place from the Bar is so great, that I must desire your Lordships Leave to go down to the Table for the Convenience of hearing.

Lords. Ay, Ay.

Then his Grace removed to the Woolpack, and delivered the White Staff to be held by the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod ; who, during the whole Trial, always received and delivered back the White Staff upon his Knee.

Mr. Perrott.

May it please your Lordships,

THIS Noble Lord Lawrence Earl Ferrers, the Prisoner at the Bar, stands indicted for the felonious Killing and Murder of one John Johnson, and the Indictment sets forth, That the Right Honourable Lawrence Earl Ferrers, Viscount Tamworth, on the Eighteenth Day of January, in the Thirty-third Year of his present Majesty's Reign, with Force and Arms, at the Parish of Breedon, in the County of Leicester, in and upon one John Johnson, feloniously, wilfully, and of his Malice aforethought, did make an Assault ; and that a certain Pistol then and there being charged with Gunpowder and a leaden Bullet, which Pistol he the said Lawrence Earl Ferrers then and there held in his Hand, at, against, and upon him the said John Johnson, then and there feloniously, wilfully, and of his Malice aforethought, did discharge and shoot off ; and with the leaden Bullet aforesaid, by Force of the Gunpowder aforesaid, out of the said Pistol by him so discharged and shot off, the said John Johnson in and upon the Left Side of the said John Johnson, a little under his lowest Rib, then and there feloniously, wilfully, and of his Malice aforethought, did strike and wound, giving to the said John Johnson then and there, with the leaden Bullet aforesaid, out of the said Pistol so as aforesaid discharged and shot off, in and upon the said Left Side, a little under the lowest Rib of the said John Johnson, One mortal Wound, of the Breadth of One Inch and Depth of Four Inches ; of which said mortal Wound the said John Johnson did languish, and languishing did live, until the Nineteenth Day of the same Month of January, in the Thirty-third Year aforesaid ; on which Day, about the Hour of Nine of the Clock in the Morning, he the said John Johnson, of the mortal Wound aforesaid, died ; and so the Jurors, upon their Oath, do find, That the said Lawrence Earl Ferrers, the said John Johnson, in manner aforesaid, feloniously, wilfully, and of his Malice aforethought, did kill and murder, against the Peace of our Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity.

To this Indictment the Noble Lord, the Prisoner at the Bar, hath pleaded Not guilty, and for his Trial hath put himself upon your Lordships his Peers here present.

We, who have the Honour to serve the Crown in this Prosecution, shall call our Evidence ; and, if we prove the Fact charged by this Indictment, we doubt not but your Lordships will find him guilty, and give such Judgment for the same as shall be just.

Mr. Attorney-General.

May it please your Lordships,

IAM likewise of Council for the Crown ; and it is become my Duty in consequence of that, to open to your Lordships the Facts and Circumstances of this Case, out of which your Lordships are to collect and find the Crime that is charged in this Indictment.

The noble Prisoner stands here arraigned before your Lordships for that odious Offence, malicious and deliberate Murder. There cannot be a Crime in human Society that deserves more to be punished, or more strictly to be inquired after ; and therefore it is that his Majesty, the great executive Hand of Justice in this Kingdom, has promoted this Inquiry, whereby all Men may see, that in the Case of Murder his Majesty makes no Difference between the greatest and meanest of his Subjects.

The Prisoner has a Right from his Quality, to the Privilege of being tried before this noble Tribunal ; if he is innocent, he has the greatest Reason to be comforted, that your Lordships are his Judges ; for that Nobleness and Humanity, which prompt you naturally to incline towards Mercy, will strongly exert themselves in the Protection of Innocence. But, on the other Hand, if the Prisoner is really guilty of the Charge, his Case is truly deplorable ; because your Minds cannot be deceived, by the false Colouring of Rhetorick, nor your Zeal for Justice perverted, by any unmanly Compassion.

This impartial Disposition in your Lordships calls upon the Prosecutors to observe a Conduct worthy of this noble Assembly; not to enlarge or aggravate any Part, or advance a Step beyond their Instructions; but barely to state the naked Facts, in order that, by that means, your Lordships may be enabled the better to attend to the Witnesses when they are called, to examine and cross-examine, and sift out the Truth with more Accuracy.

My Lords, as I never thought it my Duty in any Case to attempt at Eloquence, where a Prisoner stood upon Trial for his Life, much less shall I think myself justified in doing it before your Lordships; give me Leave therefore to proceed to a Narration of the Facts.

My Lords, the deceased Person Mr. Johnson, I find to have been employed by the Ferrers Family almost during the whole Course of his Life: He was taken into their Service in his Youth, and continued in it unfortunately to the Time of his Death.

At the time a Bill was passed by your Lordships about Two Years ago, to separate Lord Ferrers from his Lady, Mr. Johnson was appointed Receiver of his Lordship's Estates. At that time his Lordship seems to have entertained a good Opinion of him, because I am told he was appointed Receiver at his Lordship's own Nomination; but, very soon after he became invested with this Trust, when the Noble Lord found there was no possible Method, by any Temptation whatever, to prevail on Mr. Johnson to break that Trust, his Lordship's Mind grew to be alienated towards him, and his former Friendship was converted into Hatred.

The First Instance of his Lordship's Malice, that will be produced, will be his giving him Notice to quit a beneficial Farm that Mr. Johnson had obtained a Promise of from the Earl, or his Relations, before he was appointed Receiver; but when it appeared that the Trustees had made good the Promise, and had granted him a Lease, my Lord was obliged to desist from that Attempt.

When he found it was impossible to remove him from the Farm, his Resentment against Mr. Johnson increased, and he took at last a determined Resolution within himself to commit the horrid Fact for which he now stands arraigned.

My Lords, I find several Causes assigned by the Prisoner for this Indignation expressed against the deceased; he charged him with having colluded secretly with his Adversaries, with being in the Interest of those he was pleased to call his Enemies, and instrumental in procuring the Act of Parliament: Whether these Charges were justly founded or not, is totally immaterial; such as they were, he had conceived them. His Lordship, who best knew the Malice of his own Heart, has confessed that he harboured these Suspicions.

Another thing he suspected was, that, in Confederacy with Mr. Burslem and Mr. Curson, he agreed to disappoint his Lordship, in regard to a certain Contract for Coal Mines. These Notions, tho' void of Truth, had so poisoned his Lordship's Mind, that he was determined at last to gratify his Revenge by Murder.

This Determination being once settled and fixed in his Mind, your Lordships will see, with what Art and Deliberation it was pursued: Notwithstanding these seeming Causes of Disgust, he dissimulated all Appearance of Ill-will or Resentment; his Countenance towards the Deceased for some Months seemed greatly to be changed, and his Behaviour was affable and good-humoured.

The poor Man, deluded with these Appearances, was brought to believe he was in no Danger, and that he might safely trust himself alone with his Lordship.

Matters being thus prepared, on Sunday the 13th of January, the Prisoner made an Appointment for Mr. Johnson to come to him on the Friday following.

His Lordship, though the Appointment was Five or Six Days before, remembered it perfectly; nay, he remembered the very Hour he was to come, and took his Measures accordingly; for your Lordships will find, that, in order to clear the House, Mrs. Clifford, a Woman who lives with his Lordship, and Four Children, were directed by him, at Three o'Clock precisely, to absent themselves; they were ordered to walk out to Mrs. Clifford's Father, about Two Miles from my Lord's House, and not to return till Five, or Half an Hour after Five.

The Two Men Servants likewise, the only Servants of that Sex then residing with him, were contrived to be sent out of the Way; so that when Mr. Johnson repaired to Stanton, my Lord's House, at Three o'clock, there was no Person in the House, except his Lordship, and Three Maid Servants.

Mr. Johnson, when he came to the House, rapt at the Door, and was received by his Lordship, and directed to wait some Time in the Still Room; then his Lordship ordered him into the Parlour, where they both entered together, and the Door was immediately locked on the Inside.

What passed in that Interval, between the Time of Mr. Johnson's first going in, and the Time of his being shot, can only be now known to your Lordships by the Noble Earl's Confession, which has been very ample indeed upon the present Occasion.

After Mr. Johnson had been there the best Part of an Hour, one of the Maids in the Kitchen, hearing some high Words in the Parlour, went to the Door to see if she could discover what was doing; she listened, and heard my Lord, as she was at the Kitchen Door, say, Down upon your Knees; Your Time is come; You must die; and presently after heard a Pistol go off: Upon that that, she removed from the Kitchen, and retired to another Part of the House; for she did not care to venture into his Lordship's Presence.

Though it appeared, afterwards, that Mr. Johnson had then received that Wound of which he died, he did not then immediately drop; he arose, and was able to walk.

Just then, my Lord Ferrers, as he confessed afterwards, felt a few momentary Touches of Compassion: He permitted Mr. Johnson to be led up Stairs to Bed, till better Assistance could be called; he suffered a Surgeon to be sent for, nay, the very Surgeon that Mr. Johnson himself had desired; and Mr. Johnson's Children, by his Lordship's Order, were acquainted with the Accident, and sent for to see him.

Mr. Johnson's Daughter was the first Person that came; she met the noble Lord, and the first Greeting she had from him was, that he had shot her Father; and that he had done it on Purpose, and deliberately. Mrs. Clifford, who had been apprized of this Accident by the Servants, came not long after; and, in an Hour and an Half, or Two Hours, Mr. Kirkland, the Surgeon, who was from Home when the Servant was dispatched, and at a neighbouring Village, hastened with the best Expedition he could make, to Stanton. When he came to Stanton he met my Lord in the Passage.

Here your Lordships will observe, that the Noble Lord's Conduct and Behaviour, from this Time to the Time that Mr. Johnson was removed to his own House, seemed all along calculated for his Escape; and that the only Anxiety he expressed was the Dread of being seized, and brought to Punishment in case Mr. Johnson should die.

Upon Mr. Kirkland's first Appearance, my Lord had told him, that he had shot Mr. Johnson, and that he had done it coolly; he desired he might not be seized till it was known with Certainty, whether Mr. Johnson would die or not; and threatened, that if any Person attempted to seize him, he would shoot them. Mr. Kirkland told him, he would take Care that nobody should meddle with him.

Mr. Kirkland was then brought up to Mr. Johnson, who was upon the Bed; the Surgeon examined the Wound, and found that the Ball had penetrated a little below the Ribs on the Left Side; he took an Instrument in his Hand, called a Director, in order to probe the Wound: Here my Lord interrupted him, and said, You need not be at that Trouble; pass your Instrument downwards; I, when I shot off the Pistol, directed it that Way; and Mr. Kirkland found this, upon Examination, to be true; the Ball had not passed through the Body, but remained lodged in the Cavities of the Abdomen.

When my Lord found that the Ball was in the Body, he grew uneasy; for he was apprehensive that the Ball, if it remained there, might prove fatal: He asked Mr. Kirkland if it could be extracted; Mr. Kirkland told him, from what he observed, it would be impracticable to extract the Ball: but, to give him better Hopes, he told him, that many Persons had lived a long while after they had been shot, though the Ball had remained within them.

Presently after this, the Surgeon went down Stairs to prepare a Fomentation, and soon after returned: When he came back into the Room, Mr. Johnson complained of the Strangury, and found a considerable Difficulty in making Water; this alarmed his Lordship again: He then asked Mr. Kirkland, What would be the Consequence, if the Bladder or Kidneys were hurt? Mr. Kirkland having laid down his Rule of Conduct, wherein his Prudence deserves to be commended, answered, that, though the Bladder should be wounded, or the Kidneys hurt, there had been many Cures performed upon such like Wounds.

This made his Lordship tolerably easy: He then began to be in better Spirits, which, I am sorry to say, at that Time were somewhat heightened with Liquor; for, although he was cool and fresh when he did the Fact, yet the Moment it was done, he began to drink, and continued drinking, at Times, till Twelve o'Clock at Night: This Liquor, however, only contributed to raise his Spirits, without disordering his Understanding; for he appeared to be compleat Master of himself the whole Day.

After Mr. Kirkland had given him so much Encouragement, they together went down to the Still Room; and now, his Lordship verily believing that Mr. Johnson would recover, he grew less cautious in avowing the Deliberation with which he did the Fact, and declaring all the Circumstances that attended it.

And here, because I will not wrong the Noble Lord, by adding a single Letter to my Brief, your Lordships shall hear his Confession, from thence, in his own Words.

Kirkland, says he, I believe Johnson is more frightened than hurt; my Intention was to have shot him dead; but, finding that he did not fall at the first Shot, I intended to have shot him again, but the Pain he complained of made me forbear; there Nature did take place, in Opposition to the Resolution I had formed. I desire you will take Care of him; for it would be cruel not to give him Ease, now I have spared his Life.

When you speak of this afterwards, do not say (though I desire he may be eased of his Pain) that I repented of what I have done: I am not sorry for it; it was not done without Consideration; I own it was premeditated; I had, some Time before, charged a Pistol for the Purpose, being

‘ being determined to kill him, for he is a Villain, and deserves Death ; but, as he is not dead, I desire you will not suffer my being seized ; for, if he dies, I will go and surrender myself to the Houle of Lords ; I have enough to justify the Action ; They may not excuse me, but it will satisfy my own Conscience : but be sure you don’t go in the Morning without letting me see you, that I may know if he is likely to recover or not ; I will get up at any Time ; at Four o’Clock in the Morning.

‘ To this very strange and horrid Declaration Mr. Kirkland answered, by promising his Lordship, that he would certainly give him the first Intelligence touching Mr. Johnson’s Condition ; and, as it was proper, for very prudent Reasons, as well with respect to himself as Mr. Johnson, to dissemble with his Lordship, he proceeded further, and told him, that he would give a favourable Account of this Matter. The Noble Lord then asked him, what he would say if he was called upon ; he told him he would say, that though Johnson was shot, that he was in a fair Way of Recovery. His Lordship asked Mr. Kirkland, if he would make Oath of that ? He said, yes.

‘ Mr. Kirkland then went to see Mr. Johnson again, and found him better ; they then went to Supper, and, during the Time they were at Supper, his Lordship mentioned several other Particulars : He said he was astonished that the Bullet should remain in his Body ; for, says he, I have made a Tryal with this Pistol, and it pierced through a Board an Inch and an Half thick ; I am astonished it did not pass through his Body ; I took good Aim, and I held the Pistol in this Manner ; and then he shewed Mr. Kirkland the Manner of his holding his Pistol.’

He also declared the Grounds and Motives for his killing Johnson ; that he had been a Villain ; that he was in the Interest of his Enemies ; that he had joined with those who had injured him, and taken away his Estate, by an Act of Parliament ; that he had colluded with Mr. Curzon and Mr. Burlem, with respect to the Coal Contract.

Another Thing he mentioned with respect to the Farm ; says he, I have long wanted to drive Johnson out of the Farm ; if he recovers, he will go back to Cheeshire, where he came from. Mr. Kirkland said, no doubt but this Accident would drive him Home again.

After they had supped, Mrs. Clifford came into the Room, and she proposed, that Mr. Johnson should be removed to the Lount, which is the Name of Mr. Johnson’s House, and lies about a Mile from Stanton ; his Lordship refused to consent to that, not because he thought Mr. Johnson might be hurt by the Removal, but, to use his own Words, because he would have him under his own Roof, to plague the Villain.

When Supper was over, they returned back to Mr. Johnson, who was then under the greatest Uneasiness ; he was restless, and the Complaint of the Strangury increased : Then my Lord was alarmed again ; he enquired of the Surgeon what would be the Consequence, in case the Guts were shot through ? Mr. Kirkland gave him a favourable Answer that revived his Spirits ; he went out of the Room, and invited Mr. Kirkland to take a Bottle of Port ; they then drank together, and during that Time, the same, or the like Expressions were repeated. I will not trouble your Lordships with them again ; but he all along declared, he did not do it hastily, but coolly and deliberately ; that his Intention was to have killed him : And that the Reason why he did it at that Time was, because he would not sign a Paper of Recantation, acknowledging all the Injuries he had done his Lordship.

They then again returned to Mr. Johnson, after they had drank out the Bottle : Whether the Liquor was prevalent or not, I don’t know ; your Lordships will observe what followed : His Behaviour to the poor Man, though he lay there under the Surgeon’s Hands, was totally changed, and his Resentment grew outrageous ; my Lord again attacked him upon the same Charge as before, compelled him to acknowledge before all the Company (of which his Daughter was one) that he was a Villain ; nay, he was about to drag him out of Bed upon the Floor, which would hardly have been prevented, if Mr. Johnson, who was tutored by a Wink from Mr. Kirkland, had not said, I do confess I am a Villain : My Lord at last went to Bed ; but, before he departed, he said, with great Earnestness to Mr. Kirkland, May I rely upon you ? Are you sure there is no Danger ? May I go to Bed in Safety ? Mr. Kirkland said, Yes, your Lordship may. When his Lordship was gone, poor Johnson begged to be removed to his own House. Mr. Kirkland wished it as much ; for, besides that he could not have that free Access to his Patient that was necessary, if he was to remain there, he thought himself in the utmost Peril. My Lord had confessed too much, and Kirkland too little ; so that if Mr. Johnson had died there, no Man in Mr. Kirkland’s Situation would have wished to have been alone with his Lordship, considering the dangerous Conversation that had passed between them.

Mr. Kirkland, therefore, immediately went to the Lount, procured Six or Seven armed Men, and came back by Two o’Clock in the Morning. They removed Mr. Johnson, put him into a great Chair, and wrapped him up in Blankets, and so conveyed him home. Towards Morning the poor Man’s Symptoms grew worse, and Mr. Kirkland then went away.

Mr. Johnson lay languishing till Seven or Eight in the Morning, and then died.

In the mean time Mr. Kirkland had procured a Number of armed Men to go down to Stanton, and to seize his Lordship. When they came there, my Lord was just out of Bed ; he had his Garters in his Hand, and was seen passing towards the Stable. The Horses were all saddled, and every thing got in Readiness for his Escape.

Mr. Springthorpe advanced towards him; and when his Lordship found he was really to be attacked, he fled back to his House, and there stood a Siege of Four or Five Hours. While he was thus beset, he appeared at the Garret Windows, and, thinking himself secure in that Place, he began to parley, and asked, what they wanted with him? They told him, Mr. Johnson was dead, and that they were come to secure him. He said, he knew that was false; for Mr. Johnson was not dead: That he wished it might be true: That he would not believe it, unless Mr. Kirkland would declare it: That he would pay no Regard to any body else. He did not think fit to surrender; but continued in the House, till he thought he had an Opportunity of escaping through the Garden. He was there discovered by one Cutler, a Collier, who was a bold Man, and determined to take him: He marched up to him; and though his Lordship was armed with a Blunderbuss, Two or Three Pistols, and a Dagger, he submitted to the Collier's taking him, without making the least Resistance: And the Moment he was in Custody, he declared he gloried in the Fact; and again declared, that he intended to kill Johnson. He was then carried to Mr. Kinsley's House, and remained there till after the Coroner sat upon the Body.

I must mention to your Lordships, that upon Mr. Hall, a Clergyman's being introduced to him, he told him, he knew his Duty as well as he or any other Clergyman: That the Fact he had committed was coolly and deliberately done. So that your Lordships see his Declarations were consistent and uniform, from the Beginning to the End.

I shall neither aggravate nor observe.

These are the Circumstances which attended this horrid Murder. I have opened them faithfully from my Instructions. The Case is rather stronger than I have made it.

The Witnesses are to acquaint your Lordships, whether I have opened the Case truly. If the Evidence comes out as I have represented it to your Lordships, then your Lordships Sentence must be agreeable to Law. The noble Earl at the Bar must be found guilty.

If he has any Defence, God forbid that he should not have a fair Opportunity of making it. Let him be heard with Patience. The Prosecutors will be as glad as your Lordships to find him innocent.

The Evidence is to determine; and upon that Evidence we shall leave it.

Mr. Sollicitor General,
The Hon. Charles Yorke, Esq; } MY Lords, we will now proceed to call our Witnesses.
Call Elizabeth Burgeland.

Who came to the Bar, and one of the Clerks held the Book to her, upon which she laid her Hand.

Clerk of the Crown. Harken to your Oath.

The Evidence that you shall give on Behalf of our Sovereign Lord the King's Majesty, against Lawrence Earl Ferrers the Prisoner at the Bar, shall be the Truth, the whole Truth, and nothing but the Truth.

So help you G O D.

Then she kissed the Book.

Mr. Sollicitor General. My Lords, This Witness was in the House at the Time when the Fact is charged to have been committed.

Lord High Steward. If your Lordships please, the Clerk may go down to the Bar and repeat to your Lordships what is said by Lord Ferrers or the Witnesses.

Lords. Ay, Ay.

Earl Ferrers. My Lords, There was something said by the Gentleman, Council for the Crown, that is a little false, relating to a Lease said to be given by Sir William Meredith to Mr. Johnson; I did not know of that Lease previous to this Fact; there were other Matters mentioned that are not right; I will not take up your Lordships Time to answer them now, but leave that Matter till I come to my Defence.

Mr. Sollicitor General. My Lords, Whatever his Lordship thinks material in his Defence, he will have many Opportunities to offer.

Mr. Sollicitor General. You was a Maid Servant in Lord Ferrers's House the 11th of January last?

Burgeland. Yes.

Mr. Sollicitor General. Did you know one Mr. Johnson?

Burgeland. Yes.

Mr. Sollicitor General. Do you know any Thing of Mr. Johnson's being employed by Lord Ferrers? did he use to attend him?

Burgeland. He sometimes attended my Lord Ferrers.

Mr.

Mr. Solicitor General. Did you know any Thing of his being expected to wait on Lord Ferrers at any Time in January last?

Burgeland. Yes.

Mr. Solicitor General. What do you know of it?

Burgeland. I know he came to the House.

Mr. Solicitor General. Do you know what Day in January?

Burgeland. I don't know what Day.

Mr. Solicitor General. About what Time of the Day was it?

Burgeland. About Three o'Clock in the Afternoon.

Mr. Solicitor General. On what Day of the Week was it?

Burgeland. On Friday.

Mr. Solicitor General. When Mr. Johnson came, who let him in?

Burgeland. I let him in.

Mr. Solicitor General. What did he say?

Burgeland. He asked whether his Lordship was within; I told him he was in his Room.

Mr. Solicitor General. What happened after that? Did my Lord expect him?

Burgeland. I believe he did.

Mr. Solicitor General. When he was let in, did you go with him?

Burgeland. No; he walked up to the Room Door, and knocked at it himself.

Mr. Solicitor General. At the Door of the Room where Lord Ferrers was sitting?

Burgeland. Yes.

Mr. Solicitor General. Did he go in then?

Burgeland. No; he did not go in then.

Mr. Solicitor General. Did Lord Ferrers speak to him?

Burgeland. Yes; and told him to walk into the other Room.

Mr. Solicitor General. Do you know any Thing of what passed between them?

Burgeland. I cannot say any Thing about it.

Mr. Solicitor General. You said Lord Ferrers expected Mr. Johnson, how do you know he expected him?

Burgeland. Mrs. Clifford told me in the Morning, that Mr. Johnson was to come to his Lordship that Day.

Mr. Solicitor General. Did you hear, or do you know, any Thing of what passed between Lord Ferrers and Mr. Johnson, when Mr. Johnson went into my Lord's Room?

Burgeland. No.

Mr. Solicitor General. Was the Door locked or open, after he went into the Room?

Burgeland. Locked.

Mr. Solicitor General. How came you to observe that?

Burgeland. I heard it locked.

Mr. Solicitor General. Where did you go after Mr. Johnson was in the Room with Lord Ferrers?

Burgeland. Into the Kitchen.

Mr. Solicitor General. Who was with you there?

Burgeland. The other Maid Servant.

Mr. Solicitor General. What was her Name?

Burgeland. Elizabeth Saxon—There was another Maid Servant in the Kitchen when he went in.

Mr. Solicitor General. Who was she?

Burgeland. Elizabeth Doleman.

Mr. Solicitor General. After that, did you hear any Thing?

Burgeland. I did not hear any Thing myself.

Mr. Solicitor General. Did you afterwards hear any Thing of what happened?—Do you know whether Mr. Johnson came out of the Room?

Burgeland. I cannot tell any Thing of it.

Mr. Solicitor General. Did you go into the Room?

Burgeland. I did not go into the Room; I was not out of the Kitchen.

Mr. Solicitor General. Did you hear any Noise?

Burgeland. No; I heard no Noise at all.

Mr. Solicitor General. Did you hear any Pistol go off, or any Noise?

Burgeland. I heard a Pistol go off.

Mr. Solicitor General. What did you do then?

Burgeland. When I heard the Pistol go, I run into the Yard, and the other Maid Servant with me.

Mr. Solicitor General. What happened afterwards?

Burgeland. We staid in the Yard a while, a few Minutes, and came back to the Wash-house.

Mr.

Mr. Solicitor General. Was the Room Door open after you heard that Noise ?

Burgeland. I did not stay till it was open.

Mr. Solicitor General. Did you stay till Lord Ferrers came ?

Burgeland. My Lord came when we were in the Wash-house, and called.

Mr. Solicitor General. What did he say ?

Burgeland. He hooped and hollood, Where are you all ?

Mr. Solicitor General. What did he say then ?

Burgeland. I went out, and said, We are here, my Lord ; he asked me, Where we had been. I said, in the Bleaching Yard.

Mr. Solicitor General. Did he give you any Order ?

Burgeland. He ordered that we should walk down to the House.

Mr. Solicitor General. Did he give any other Order ?

Burgeland. He sent up a Maid Servant into the Yard to fetch the Man in.

Mr. Solicitor General. Did he say any Thing of Mr. Johnson ?

Burgeland. Not till I got into the Room.

Mr. Solicitor General. What did he say then ?

Burgeland. He went up to Mr. Johnson and asked, how he did ?

Mr. Solicitor General. What did Mr. Johnson say ?

Burgeland. That he was a dying Man, and desired he would send for his Children.

Mr. Solicitor General. Did any Thing else pass ?

Burgeland. That is all I know.

Mr. Solicitor General. Who else was in the House besides the Servants you have named and yourself ?

Burgeland. There was nobody in the House but us Three when Mr. Johnson came ; and but Two in the Kitchen when it was done.

Mr. Solicitor General. What other Servants did my Lord use to keep ?

Burgeland. One Man Servant ; an old Man ; I don't know whether he was a Servant.

Mr. Solicitor General. Did any other Person live with him ?

Burgeland. Mrs. Clifford, and the four young Ladies.

Mr. Solicitor General. Were they all out at the Time when this happened ?

Burgeland. Yes ; they were all out but the Two Maids.

Mr. Solicitor General. Were they out by Accident, or by Order ?

Burgeland. I do not know any Thing of any Order.

Mr. Solicitor General. Did you give Mr. Johnson any Assistance to carry him up to his Room ?

Burgeland. Yes ; I took him up to Bed by the Arm, by his Lordship's Order Earl Ferrers. Was not the Door locked before Mr. Johnson came ?

Burgeland. Yes.

Earl Ferrers. Has it been locked before ?

Burgeland. It has several times, when my Lord has been upon Business.

Earl Ferrers. Was not Mr. Johnson at my House on the Monday ?

Burgeland. Yes, he was there on the Monday.

Earl Ferrers. Did you hear any Dispute or Words between Mr. Johnson and me on the Monday ?

Burgeland. No, I did not hear any at all.

Earl Ferrers. Had not I packed up my Trunks, intending to go to London the Week following ?

Burgeland. Yes.

Earl Ferrers. On the Monday while he was there, and sent to the Carriages ?

Burgeland. Yes.

Mr. Gould. Our next Witness is Elizabeth Saxon (who was sworn in like manner).

Mr. Gould. Did you live with Lord Ferrers in January last ?

Saxon. Yes.

Mr. Gould. Did you know John Johnson ?

Saxon. Yes.

Mr. Gould. Do you remember Mr. Johnson's coming to Lord Ferrers in January ?

Saxon. Yes.

Mr. Gould. Upon what Day ?

Saxon. The Eighteenth.

Mr. Gould. What Day of the Week was it ?

Saxon. On Friday.

Mr. Gould. Who was in the House when he came ?

Saxon. Nobody, only Three Maids and my Lord.

Mr. Gould. What Time of the Day did he come?

Saxon. About Three o'Clock.

Mr. Gould. What was become of the rest of my Lord's Family?

Saxon. I don't know: Mrs. Clifford and the Misses were gone out.

Mr. Gould. How long were they gone out before Mr. Johnson came?

Saxon. About Half an Hour.

Mr. Gould. Do you know the Reason of their going away?

Saxon. No; my Lord came into the Still-house, and said, they might go and fetch a Walk.

Mr. Gould. How long was it before they did go upon the Walk?

Saxon. They went directly.

Mr. Gould. What Time of Day did my Lord give this Leave?

Saxon. It was about Three o'Clock.

Mr. Gould. Was any thing mentioned where they were to go?

Saxon. Mrs. Clifford asked him, whether they might go to her Father's? And my Lord said, Yes.

Mr. Gould. Was any thing mentioned how long they might stay?

Saxon. He said, they might stay till Five, or Half an Hour after.

Mr. Gould. What Men Servants belonged to the House?

Saxon. There is but One Boy and an old Man.

Mr. Gould. Where were they?

Saxon. I cannot tell.

Mr. Gould. Were they in the House?

Saxon. No.

Mr. Gould. When Mr. Johnson came in, in what Room was my Lord Ferrers?

Saxon. In his own Room.

Mr. Gould. Where did Mr. Johnson go when he came into the House?

Saxon. He went up to my Lord's Room.

Mr. Gould. Did my Lord appear?

Saxon. My Lord came to the Door.

Mr. Gould. Did you hear any thing said by my Lord to Mr. Johnson?

Saxon. No.

Mr. Gould. Where did Mr. Johnson go when my Lord came out?

Saxon. My Lord came out, and ordered him to go into the Still-house.

Mr. Gould. What became of my Lord then?

Saxon. He went into his Room.

Mr. Gould. How long did he stay there before he came out again?

Saxon. I don't know: May be a few Minutes; Not long; Ten Minutes, or such a Matter.

Mr. Gould. When he came out, did he speak to Mr. Johnson?

Saxon. I don't know that he did: I did not hear him.

Mr. Gould. Did you see Mr. Johnson when my Lord came out a second Time?

Saxon. No.

Mr. Gould. What became of Mr. Johnson? Did he go into any Room with my Lord Ferrers?

Saxon. I know he went into my Lord's Room.

Mr. Gould. Was the Door locked or not?

Saxon. He locked to the Door after Mr. Johnson was in.

Mr. Gould. Did you hear the Door locked?

Saxon. Yes; I heard it locked.

Mr. Gould. What did you hear pass in that Room?

Saxon. Nothing at all; I did not hear any Thing.

Mr. Gould. Did you hear any Expression, any Words used by my Lord to Mr. Johnson?

Saxon. No.

Mr. Gould. Did you hear any Noise?

Saxon. Yes; I heard them very loud; I heard my Lord say, Down on your other Knee, and declare what you have acted against Lord Ferrers; and then the Pistol went off; and I and the other Maid were frightned, and run away.

Mr. Gould. Did you hear my Lord, or Mr. Johnson, say any Thing more in the Room, than what you have mentioned?

Saxon. No.

Earl Ferrers. Was it not customary for Mrs. Clifford to speak to me before she went out?

Saxon. She said, My Lord, where must we go to?

Earl Ferrers. Was it customary to speak to me?

Saxon. Yes.

Earl Ferrers. How came you to be at my Door at that Time?

Saxon. I was not at my Lord's Door.

Lord Mansfield. Who was the other Maid that was with you when you over-heard what passed in my Lord's Room?

Saxon. The other Witnefs that was here?

Lord Mansfield. Had that other Servant the same Opportunity to hear as you had? Was she as near the Door, listening in the same Way you was?

Saxon. No, she was not.

Earl Ferrers. Do you know what Time Mrs. Clifford was to return?

Saxon. About Five o'Clock, or Half an Hour after Five.

Earl Ferrers. Did not Mrs. Clifford very often go out about that Time after Dinner, about Three or Four o'Clock?

Saxon. Yes.

Earl of Morton. You said in the First Part of your Evidence, that you heard my Lord say to Mr. Johnson, Down on your other Knee. My Lord Ferrers asked you, how you came to be near the Door. You said, that you was not. Where did you hear it?

Saxon. I was at the Kitchen Door: I was no nearer than the Kitchen.

Earl of Morton. You say, that Lord Ferrers locked his Door?

Saxon. Yes.

Earl of Morton. Was it customary for him to lock it when People were with him, or when he was alone?

Saxon. I don't know.

Earl of Morton. Did you ever know Lord Ferrers lock his Door when Mr. Johnson was with him?

Saxon. No.

Earl Ferrers. Did you never know that I locked the Door when I had Company with me?

Saxon. No; I don't know that his Lordship did it ever since I came.

Earl of Hardwicke. You have said, that Lord Ferrers told Mr. Johnson to kneel on the other Knee; and that you heard it, though you was no nearer than the Kitchen Door: What Distance was there between the Kitchen Door and the Door of the Room where Lord Ferrers was?

Saxon. Not a great Way.

Earl of Hardwicke. What Distance was it?

Saxon. It might be Ten or a Dozen Yards, may be.

Earl Ferrers. Was there not a thick Wall between that Room and the Kitchen, and a Chimney.

Saxon. Yes.

Elizabeth Dolman sworn in like manner.

Mr. Norton. Was you Servant to Lord Ferrers in January last?

Dolman. Yes.

Mr. Norton. Did you know Mr. Johnson the Deceased?

Dolman. Yes.

Mr. Norton. Do you remember his coming there in January last?

Dolman. Yes.

Mr. Norton. What Day of the Month was it?

Dolman. The Eighteenth.

Mr. Norton. What Time of the Day?

Dolman. About Three o'Clock.

Mr. Norton. Who was in the House of Lord Ferrers at that Time?

Dolman. Three Maids.

Mr. Norton. Nobody else?

Dolman. No.

Mr. Norton. Was not his Lordship there?

Dolman. Yes.

Mr. Norton. Do you know where the rest of the Family was at that Time?

Dolman. I know nothing of that: I believe Mrs. Clifford and the Children were gone out.

Mr. Norton. Do you know whether Mr. Johnson was expected at Lord Ferrers's that Day?

Dolman. I don't know.

Mr. Norton. Was you in the House when Mr. Johnson came in?

Dolman. I was in the Kitchen.

Mr.

- Mr. Norton.* Who let him in?
- Dolman.* Elizabeth Burgeland.
- Mr. Norton.* Who did he ask for?
- Dolman.* Lord Ferrers.
- Mr. Norton.* Did you or Elizabeth Burgeland shew him to Lord Ferrers?
- Dolman.* Elizabeth Burgeland.
- Mr. Norton.* You was there?
- Dolman.* I was in the Kitchen.
- Mr. Norton.* Did you hear any thing that passed between Lord Ferrers and Mr. Johnson?
- Dolman.* No.
- Mr. Norton.* Did you hear a Pistol go off?
- Dolman.* Yes.
- Mr. Norton.* At that Time where were Lord Ferrers and Mr. Johnson?
- Dolman.* In my Lord's Room.
- Mr. Norton.* How long had Mr. Johnson been in my Lord's Room before you heard the Report of the Pistol?
- Dolman.* May be about Half an Hour.
- Mr. Norton.* Was you there when Mr. Johnson went into the Room?
- Dolman.* I was in the Kitchen.
- Mr. Norton.* Did you hear the Door locked?
- Dolman.* Yes.
- Mr. Norton.* How did you hear it? Was there a Spring, or was the Key turned?
- Dolman.* It was turned with the Key.
- Mr. Norton.* Did you hear the Key turned, and the Door locked?
- Dolman.* Yes.
- Mr. Norton.* How soon did you see Mr. Johnson after the Pistol went off?
- Dolman.* I did not see Mr. Johnson till after he was laid upon the Bed.
- Mr. Norton.* Did you see Lord Ferrers after Mr. Johnson was laid upon the Bed?
- Dolman.* Yes.
- Mr. Norton.* Did you hear any Conversation between my Lord and Mr. Johnson at the Time Mr. Johnson was upon the Bed?
- Dolman.* Lord Ferrers ordered me to go up and see what Mr. Johnson would have done.
- Mr. Norton.* Then his Lordship was not in the Room at that Time?
- Dolman.* Not then; he came in after.
- Mr. Norton.* What passed then? What did you hear between them?
- Dolman.* I went up Stairs, and asked Mr. Johnson how he did. He said, he was very poorly.
- Mr. Norton.* Was Lord Ferrers there then?
- Dolman.* No.
- Mr. Norton.* How soon did he come in?
- Dolman.* He did not come in till after I had fetched a Bed out of the Garret, and laid it on the Bedstead.
- Mr. Norton.* Did you hear his Lordship say any thing to Mr. Johnson?
- Dolman.* Yes; his Lordship told him, that he would shoot him through the Head.
- Mr. Norton.* Did Mr. Johnson make any Reply to that?
- Dolman.* He said, No Matter how soon, my Lord.
- Mr. Norton.* What Time of the Night was this?
- Dolman.* It might be between Four and Five o'Clock.
- Earl Ferrers.* Did not I send you for the Bed, and order it to be well aired?
- Dolman.* Yes.
- Lord Ravensworth.* How long did you live with my Lord Ferrers before this supposed Accident?
- Dolman.* It might be Two Months.
- Lord Ravensworth.* Did Mr. Johnson ever, during the Time you lived with my Lord Ferrers, before the 18th of January, to your Knowledge, come to Lord Ferrers?
- Dolman.* Yes; I have seen him there.
- Lord Ravensworth.* I should be glad to know, whether from your own Knowledge, or from any Conversation with others, you had any Reason to suspect or believe that Lord Ferrers bore Mr. Johnson any Ill-will; or did his Lordship ever make any Complaint, to your Knowledge, in regard to Mr. Johnson?
- Dolman.* No; I never had.
- Lord Ravensworth.* At what Time did Mr. Johnson come to Lord Ferrers?
- Dolman.* About Three o'Clock.

Lord Ravensworth. When Lord Ferrers and Mr. Johnson went into the Room, did Lord Ferrers appear to be in Liquor?

Dolman. No, not at all.

Lord Ravensworth. When you was in the Room, and Mr. Johnson said he was but poorly, did you imagine he was shot?

Dolman. No.

Lord Ravensworth. Did Lord Ferrers take Mr. Johnson by the Wig, before he said he would shoot him through the Head?

Dolman. Yes.

Lord Ravensworth. Did you hear the Pistol go off, and where?

Dolman. I was in the Yard; and I heard the Pistol go off.

Lord Mansfield. Did you hear any Part of the Conversation between Lord Ferrers and the Deceased before the Pistol went off?

Dolman. I did not.

Lord Mansfield. Was you near enough to have heard it, if any such Conversation had passed?

Dolman. I was not.

Lord Mansfield. Had Elizabeth Saxon, from the Place where she was, a better Opportunity of hearing what passed?

Dolman. I cannot say.

Lord Mansfield. Where was you at that Time?

Dolman. I was in the Yard.

Lord Mansfield. Where was Elizabeth Saxon?

Dolman. She was in the Kitchen, I believe.

Lord Mansfield. What was the Distance between the Kitchen Door and the Room where Lord Ferrers and the Deceased were?

Dolman. I cannot justly tell.

Lord Mansfield. Might a Person that was at the Kitchen Door hear any Conversation or Words which passed between Two People in that Room?

Dolman. Yes.

Lord Mansfield. Was it as far off as to that Bench?

Dolman. Yes.

Earl Ferrers. Did you ever hear any Conversation that passed in my Room, at any Time when I had Company and you was in the Kitchen?

Dolman. I have heard Talking.

Earl Ferrers. Could you distinguish what was said?

Dolman. I never took Notice.

A Lord. Was you at the Kitchen Door when my Lord Ferrers and Mr. Johnson were in his Room?

Dolman. I was in the Kitchen.

A Lord. Did you hear Lord Ferrers tell Mr. Johnson to kneel on the other Knee?

Dolman. No; I heard no such Thing.

A Lord. Was you with the other Witness at the Time she says she heard these Words?

Dolman. I was not.

Lord Mansfield. I desire to know of this Witness, whether at the Time that the Pistol went off, she was not in the Yard; and the Maid, that heard the Conversation, at the Kitchen Door?

Dolman. I was in the Yard then.

Lord Mansfield. Where was you when you heard the Key lock the Door?

Dolman. I was in the Kitchen.

Lord Ravensworth. You say you was in the Room when Lord Ferrers went up to Mr. Johnson, and he pulled Mr. Johnson by the Wig, and said, he would shoot him; how long was that from the Time that you heard the Pistol go off?

Dolman. I cannot justly say.

Lord Ravensworth. What Space of Time was there, from the Time that you saw Mr. Johnson in the Room, to the Time that Lord Ferrers came and pulled him by the Wig, and said, he would shoot him through the Head?

Dolman. I cannot say, he had lain upon the Bed some Time.

Sarah Johnson sworn.

Mr. Perrott. You are the Daughter of John Johnson, to whom this Accident happened?

Johnson. Yes.

Mr. Perrott. Was your Father concerned in Lord Ferrers's Estate?

Johnson. Not that I know of.

Mr. Perrott. Was he his Steward?

Johnson.

Johnson. He did live with him, but not within these Two Years.

Mr. Perrott. Did he receive any Rents?

Johnson. For nobody but Lord Ferrers.

Mr. Perrott. Did he rent any Farm that was Part of the Estate of Lord Ferrers?

Johnson. Not that I know of.

Mr. Perrott. Do you remember his going to Lord Ferrers, at any Time in January last?

Johnson. On the 18th of January.

Mr. Perrott. Do you know whether Lord Ferrers had been with your Father any short Time before that 18th of January?

Johnson. Lord Ferrers was at our House on the Sunday before.

Mr. Perrott. Did you hear any Conversation that passed between Lord Ferrers and your Father, on that Sunday?

Johnson. I did not; I came home before he was gone.

Mr. Perrott. Did you hear Lord Ferrers say any Thing to Mr. Johnson?

Johnson. No; I was not in the Room.

Mr. Perrott. Did not you know before the 18th of January, that your Father was to go on that Day to Lord Ferrers's?

Johnson. I heard my Father say, that he was to go to Lord Ferrers's on the Friday.

Mr. Perrott. Do you know upon what Occasion he was to go?

Johnson. No.

Mr. Perrott. Upon whose Appointment?

Johnson. No.

Mr. Perrott. Was you sent for to Lord Ferrers's on the 18th of January?

Johnson. Yes.

Mr. Perrott. At what Time?

Johnson. I think it was between Four and Five o'Clock.

Mr. Perrott. Who sent for you?

Johnson. I believe it was Lord Ferrers.

Mr. Perrott. Who was it that came for you?

Johnson. A Man that was at Work there.

Mr. Perrott. What Message was brought to you?

Johnson. That I must come down to the Hall to Lord Ferrers.

Mr. Perrott. Then was any Thing said about your Father?

Johnson. I asked, what he wanted me for? and he said, my Father was taken very ill.

Mr. Perrott. When you got there, did you see my Lord Ferrers?

Johnson. Yes.

Mr. Perrott. What did he say to you?

Johnson. I cannot say: I asked him how my Father was; he ordered one of the Maids to go up Stairs, and shew me where my Father was.

Mr. Perrott. Was Lord Ferrers in the Room when you was with your Father?

Johnson. He followed me up directly.

Mr. Perrott. In what Condition did you find your Father?

Johnson. He was in Bed; but he did not say any Thing to me.

Mr. Perrott. Did Lord Ferrers say any Thing?

Johnson. When Lord Ferrers came up, he said, he thought he had not shot him.

Mr. Perrott. Was any Thing done upon that?

Johnson. Some Time after that, Lord Ferrers came up again; and I, or he, turned the Cloaths down; and he said, he saw he had shot him; and threwed something out of a Bottle; I don't know what it was; he poured something upon it, out of a Bottle.

Mr. Perrott. Who poured that out of the Bottle?

Johnson. Lord Ferrers.

Mr. Perrott. Did he tell you how the Accident happened?

Johnson. He did not then say any Thing about that.

Mr. Perrott. Did he at any Time?

Johnson. He said, he did not know what he had done; he had shot him; he said, it was what he designed.

Mr. Perrott. Was that the same Day or afterwards?

Johnson. The same Day.

Mr. Perrott. Did Lord Ferrers say any Thing about your Father's Family?

Johnson. He said he would take Care of his Family, if my Father died.

Mr. Perrott. Was that all; was there no If?

Johnson. He said he was in hopes, I would not let any body come to take him; that he would take Care of the Family; that he would not go out of the House till my Father was buried, if he should die.

Mr. Perrott. Do you know of any Thing more that passed between Lord Ferrers and you, about your Father?

Johnson. My Lord, when Mr. Kirkland was searching the Wound, shewed him which Way he held the Pistol when he let it off.

Mr. Perrott. Did Lord Ferrers say at that Time it was an Accident?

Johnson. No; he said he designed it.

Mr. Perrott. Did he give any Reason for it?

Johnson. I did not hear him give any Reason for it.

Mr. Perrott. Do you know whether your Father was ever served with any Notice to quit a Farm?

Johnson. Yes.

Mr. Perrott. What Farm was that?

Johnson. The Farm he lived in.

Mr. Perrott. Whose Estate was it?

Johnson. Lord Ferrers's.

Mr. Perrott. Who gave him that Notice?

Johnson. Either Lord Ferrers or Mr. Clifford; Mr. Clifford gave it me; they were both together.

Paper produced.

Mr. Perrott. Is that the Paper?

Johnson. Yes.

Paper read.

“ I Do hereby give you Notice to quit your Farm at Lady-Day next ensuing, or Six Months after the Date hereof, November the 7th, 1758, agreeable to your Lease granted to me,

“ Richard Clifford.”

Mr. Perrott. Was Lord Ferrers by when that was given to you?

Johnson. Yes.

Mr. Perrott. Did you hear any Thing said about that Farm?

Johnson. No.

Mr. Perrott. Shewing her the Body of the Paper, Whose Hand-writing is that?

Johnson. This is Lord Ferrers's, I believe.

Mr. Perrott. Did you ever see Lord Ferrers write?

Johnson. No.

Mr. Perrott. When you was up in the Room with Mr. Johnson, do you remember any body attempting to pull the Cloaths off?

Johnson. Lord Ferrers attempted to pull them off.

Mr. Perrott. What Time was that?

Johnson. I cannot say; about Ten or Eleven o'Clock.

Mr. Perrott. Do you know of any Occasion that was given for my Lord's attempting to pull the Cloaths off your Father?

Johnson. I cannot say what was the Reason of it,

Mr. Perrott. What had passed before that?

Johnson. I cannot tell: Lord Ferrers seemed to be very angry before; but I cannot tell what about.

Mr. Perrott. Did my Lord Ferrers pull off the Cloaths?

Johnson. He did not pull them off.

Mr. Perrott. How did that happen?

Johnson. I caught hold of them.

Mr. Perrott. Do you remember any thing That Lord Ferrers said at the Time that he attempted to pull off the Cloaths?

Johnson. He said, he knew him to be a Villain, and that he had acted Things against him, that were not right.

Mr. Perrott. Did your Father say any Thing to you about Lord Ferrers's having shot him?

Johnson. I don't remember he did.

Mr. Perrott. Did not your Father tell you, that Lord Ferrers had shot him? And that he believed he should die?

Johnson. I heard him say he believed he should die; but I did not hear him say, that Lord Ferrers had shot him. I do not remember it. My Lord said, he knew the Pistol to be a good one, he had shot through a Board with it.

Mr.

Mr. Perrott. Was any body by when Lord Ferrers said that he had shot him, and that it was what he designed?

Johnson. Mr. Kirkland was by.

Earl Ferrers. Do you think that I was sober when I came into the Room where your Father was?

Johnson. At the time I came in, I think his Lordship was.

Mr. Perrott. At the Time of this Confession?

Johnson. I cannot tell: I think he was not quite sober when he said that.

Lord Talbot. I believe the Confusion of this unhappy Witness has occasioned an apparent, though not an intentional, Variation in her Evidence; therefore I desire she may be asked again about the Farm.

Mr. Perrott. Did you know of your Father's renting a Farm of Lord Ferrers?

Johnson. He rented no Farm but what he had of Lord Ferrers.

Mr. Perrott. And did he rent one of him?

Johnson. Yes.

Mr. Perrott. You was asked at first about the Lease; he might have the Farm, and not the Lease.

Johnson. He had a Lease; but I believe he had it but the last Year.

Lord Ravensworth. I agree with the Noble Lord, that there is a particular Tenderness in the Situation of this Witness; but imagine your Lordships are desirous of knowing as many Particulars as may be relating to this unhappy Affair; therefore I desire this Witness may be asked, whether she, at any Time near the Time of the Decease of her Father, did hear her Father express any Degree of Uneasiness, or Apprehension, from his being to wait upon Lord Ferrers?

Johnson. No, I never heard him say, that he was afraid of going to Lord Ferrers's.

Mr. Attorney General. My Lords, we will now call Mr. Curzon to prove the Body of the Notice that has been read, to be all of Lord Ferrers's Hand-writing.

Earl Ferrers. I do not deny it. I hope the Witnesses may be detained by your Lordships, in case I should think proper to call them again.

Mr. Attorney General. My Lord, we will take Care that they shall be forth-coming.

Thomas Kirkland sworn.

Mr. Attorney General. What is your Profession, or Occupation?

Kirkland. A Surgeon.

Mr. Attorney General. Where do you chiefly practise?

Kirkland. At Ashby De la Zouch.

Mr. Attorney General. How far is that from Lord Ferrers's House at Stanton?

Kirkland. Two computed Miles.

Mr. Attorney General. Do you know the Noble Earl at the Bar?

Kirkland. Yes.

Mr. Attorney General. How long have you known him?

Kirkland. I have known him many Years. I have been employed for his Lordship about Nine Years.

Mr. Attorney General. Did you know Mr. Johnson the deceased.

Kirkland. Yes.

Mr. Attorney General. How long did you know him?

Kirkland. I have known him a great many Years. I have been intimately acquainted with him Ten or Eleven.

Mr. Attorney General. Had he any Employ under my Lord Ferrers, or any Part of his Family?

Kirkland. I believe so.

Mr. Attorney General. What was his Employ?

Kirkland. Steward.

Mr. Attorney General. Did you, in the Month of January last, see Mr. Johnson or my Lord Ferrers?

Kirkland. I saw them together.

Mr. Attorney General. At what time in that Month in particular?

Kirkland. The Eighteenth of January.

Mr. Attorney General. What Day of the Week?

Kirkland. On Friday.

Mr. Attorney General. Upon what Occasion did you see the one or the other?

Kirkland. I saw Mr. Johnson to take Care of a Wound he had received in his Left Side.

Mr. Attorney General. Who sent for you?

Kirkland. They told me that Lord Ferrers had sent for me.

Mr.

Mr. Attorney General. Who was sent for you? What was his Name?

Kirkland. I have since found that his Name is Henry Wales.

Mr. Attorney General. At what time did you receive that Message?

Kirkland. About Five o'Clock in the Afternoon.

Mr. Attorney General. Where was you at that time?

Kirkland. At Caleorton.

Mr. Attorney General. How far is that from Stanton?

Kirkland. A Mile and a Half, or a Mile.

Mr. Attorney General. Did you go directly to Stanton?

Kirkland. I went first to the Lount.

Mr. Attorney General. What Place was that?

Kirkland. The Place where Mr. Johnson lived.

Mr. Attorney General. How far is that from Stanton?

Kirkland. I think Half a Mile, or it may be a little more.

Mr. Attorney General. Did you hear any thing there?

Kirkland. I first heard at the Lount, that Mr. Johnson was shot; the Boy that came for me, told me that he was sent to me from my Lord.

Mr. Attorney General. Did you, when you came to the Lount, and had had this Intelligence, proceed to Stanton?

Kirkland. Yes.

Mr. Attorney General. When you came there, who did you see?

Kirkland. I met one of the Servant Girls in the Clofe next to the Yard.

Mr. Attorney General. What was the Girl's Name?

Kirkland. I cannot tell; it was dark.

Mr. Attorney General. Did any Thing pass there?

Kirkland. She said my Lord had been charging Guns and Pistols.

Mr. Attorney General. What happened next?

Kirkland. I heard my Lord calling out in the Yard, who is there? I immediately spoke to his Lordship; he ordered me to come along. I went to him; he told me, he had shot Johnson, and desired I would go and take Care of him: As we went along, his Lordship desired I would not suffer him to be seized, because Johnson was not dead; and if any body offered to seize him, he would shoot them.

Mr. Attorney General. What Answer did you make to that?

Kirkland. I told his Lordship, that nobody should meddle with him. I then went up Stairs; and upon seeing Mr. Johnson, and that he had lost no Blood, I bled him.

Mr. Attorney General. Did Mr. Johnson make any Complaint?

Kirkland. He complained of a violent Pain in his Bowels.

Mr. Attorney General. Did he at that time say that he had received any Wound, and where was it?

Kirkland. I looked, and found the Wound below the lowest Rib, on his Left Side.

Mr. Attorney General. How large was that Wound?

Kirkland. I put my little Finger into it. I then took a Director to search the Wound. My Lord told me, Mr. Kirkland, you must pass your Instrument slanting downwards, I held the Pistol in this manner when I shot him. After that my Lord asked me, whether I could find the Ball? I said no, it was lodged in the Abdomen; and after this he again asked me, if I could not extract it? I told his Lordship I believed it would be better to remain where it was (indeed I looked upon it impracticable to extract it). My Lord asked me then, what would be the Consequence of the Ball's lying in the Abdomen? I told him that Balls often lay there many Years, without giving any Disturbance: With this my Lord seemed satisfied, and said he knew they would.

Mr. Attorney General. Was there any Surprise expressed by any body at the Ball's being lodged, or any thing said?

Kirkland. I cannot say there was.

Mr. Attorney General. Was any thing said concerning the Goodness of the Pistol?

Kirkland. My Lord asked me, if the Ball had not gone through? I told him no. He said he wondered it had not; for this Pistol had carried a Ball thro' a Board, and broke the Bricks, or Wall, I don't know which.

Mr. Attorney General. Was Mr. Johnson by, and did he hear what passed?

Kirkland. Yes he did.

Mr. Attorney General. Did this provoke him to utter any thing?

Kirkland. He did. My Lord went out of the Room at that time, and Mr. Johnson said, What a Villain this is!

Mr. Attorney General. Did you order any thing to be prepared for the Dressing of the Wound?

Kirkland.

Kirkland. I dressed the Wound ; it had already been dressed. There was a Dressing upon it. I ordered a Fomentation, and what other Things I thought proper. I then went down Stairs. My Lord told me, he thought Johnson was more frightened than hurt.

Mr. Attorney General. Did you both go down Stairs ?

Kirkland. No, we did not.

Mr. Attorney General. You said it had been dressed before, What was that Dressing ?

Kirkland. I believe, tho' I am not certain, it was Arquebusade.

Mr. Attorney General. Was there any Plaster found upon it ?

Kirkland. To the best of my Remembrance there was not.

Mr. Attorney General. Was there a Rag upon it ?

Kirkland. I believe there was ; a Rag that had been dipt in Arquebusade. After my Lord's telling me that Johnson was more frightened than hurt, he said, he intended to have shot him dead, and that, seeing he did not fall at first, he intended to shoot him again ; but the Pain he complained of made him forbear. Says he, There Nature did take Place, in Opposition to the Resolution I had formed. And, says he, it is cruel not to give him Ease, now I have spared his Life ; therefore I desire you would do all you can for him. One Thing I omitted to mention, while I was up Stairs. My Lord desired I would take all the Care imaginable of Mr. Johnson ; that he would send one of his Servants for any Thing I wanted.—I forgot to relate to your Lordships, that my Lord was in Liquor when I saw him. He desired, when I spoke of this Affair, that I would not say, tho' he desired me to ease him of his Pain, that he repented of what he had done. He was not sorry for it ; for he owned it was premeditated ; that he intended to shoot him, for he said he was a Villain and deserved Death. But, says he, as he is not dead, I desire you will not suffer my being seized ; for, if he dies, I will go and surrender myself to the House of Lords ; I have enough to justify the Action : Perhaps they may not excuse me, but it will satisfy my own Conscience.

Mr. Attorney General. Did he say any Thing about his going away, or not going away, the next Morning ?

Kirkland. He told me thus : Kirkland, be sure you don't go away in the Morning before I have seen you. I will get up at Four o'Clock, or at any time that you call. I told his Lordship I would let him know before I went.

Mr. Attorney General. What particular Complaint did Mr. Johnson labour under when you went ?

Kirkland. A Pain in his Bowels.

Mr. Attorney General. What other Complaints had he ?

Kirkland. A Strangury. A Difficulty of making Water.

Mr. Attorney General. What did my Lord Ferrers say upon that ?

Kirkland. He asked me : “ Kirkland, don't you think that the Bladder or Kidneys are “ wounded ? ” And what would be the Consequence ? I set it in such a Light as to make him believe that they might, and no bad Consequence ensue.

Mr. Attorney General. Was that, or was it not, your Rule, upon which you represented Things in this Light ?

Kirkland. I, immediately from the Time of my seeing Mr. Johnson, thought he would be dead ; but I thought it prudent to deceive my Lord for our Safety.

Mr. Attorney General. Was my Lord satisfied with this flattering Account that you gave ?

Kirkland. Yes, he seemed satisfied.

Mr. Attorney General. Were any Orders given to get Things in Readiness ; any Orders for the Horses ?

Kirkland. I don't know any Thing but what the Servants told me.

Mr. Attorney General. Did any Discourse pass between you relating to their Seizure of my Lord's Person ?

Kirkland. My Lord did desire that I would take Care he was not seized, and I promised him I would.

Mr. Attorney General. Did you tell him how you meant to represent it ?

Kirkland. My Lord asked me, what I should say upon the Occasion, if I was called upon ? I told his Lordship that I should say, that, tho' Mr. Johnson was shot, yet there was a great Probability of his recovering ; and that I thought there was no Necessity of seizing his Lordship. His Lordship then asked me, If I would make Oath of that before a Justice of the Peace if I was called upon ? I said, Yes.

Mr. Attorney General. Where was this ? and about what Part of the Night did the last Conversation pass ?

Kirkland. It was in the Parlour.

Mr. Attorney General. What time was it ? Was it an Hour before Supper ?

Kirkland. I think this was before Supper ; but it was repeated before and after Supper.

Mr. Attorney General. Did my Lord, in this Discourse, say any Thing relating to Mr. Johnson ?

Kirkland. He told me, that Mr. Johnson had long been a Villain to him. He said, he began his Villany in 1753; that he assisted in procuring the Act of Parliament; that he was in the Interest of his Enemies; that, on Mr. Johnson's first coming there in the Afternoon, he ordered him to settle an Account. He then told him, Johnson, you have been a Villain to me; if you don't sign a Paper, confessing all your Villainy, I'll shoot you. My Lord told me Johnson would not sign one. Therefore, says he, I bid him kneel down on his Knees to ask my Pardon. I said, Johnson, if you have any thing to say, speak quickly. Then, says he, I fired at him. I know he did not think I would have shot him; but I was determined to do it. I was quite cool. I took Aim; for I always aim with a Pistol in this manner.

Mr. Attorney General. Did any Thing pass in reference to the Farm?

Kirkland. My Lord told me he had long wanted to drive Johnson out of his Farm; and that he imagined, after he recovered, he would go into Cheshire from whence he came, and give him no more Disturbance. He said he had long intended to shoot him: That the chief Reason he did it at this time was, an Affair between Mr. Curzon, Mr. Burslem, and his Lordship. But the greatest Part of this Discourse was at the time that my Lord was full of Liquor.

Mr. Attorney General. Was he so full of Liquor as to be deprived of his Understanding?

Kirkland. I think not; he seemed to understand very well what he did?

Mr. Attorney General. Was he in Liquor when you first saw him?

Kirkland. Yes; not much.

Mr. Attorney General. Did he continue drinking during the Time you saw him?

Kirkland. He was drinking Porter; they said it was Porter.

Mr. Attorney General. Did you go to Mr. Johnson again?

Kirkland. Yes; after Supper I went up Stairs to Mr. Johnson; nothing material passed; but my Lord inquired what I thought of Mr. Johnson; and upon my setting Things in the Light I thought I should, my Lord seemed very well satisfied.

Mr. Attorney General. Was any Thing said about the Bowels or Guts?

Kirkland. My Lord asked, if the Bowels were wounded, what would be the Consequence? I said, some had had Wounds in their Bowels and recovered.

Mr. Attorney General. There was an Expression used, that the Bullet was lodged in the Abdomen; Was that yours or my Lord's Expression?

Kirkland. It was my Expression.

Mr. Attorney General. Did you and my Lord sit together in the Evening?

Kirkland. Yes.

Mr. Attorney General. Was any Wine brought?

Kirkland. Yes; Mrs. Clifford brought a Bottle of Wine, and then his Lordship again repeated, that he had shot Johnson, and that he intended it.

Mr. Attorney General. Was there any Thing passed between you relative to my Lord's Circumstances?

Kirkland. A little before he went to Bed, before I went to Mr. Johnson the last Time, my Lord said, Kirkland, I know you can set this Affair in such a Light, that I shall not be seized if you will; I owe you a Bill, you may have some of your Money now, and the rest when you want it; I told his Lordship I did not want Money, I should be glad to receive it, when it was most convenient to him.

Mr. Attorney General. Did you afterwards see my Lord and Mr. Johnson together?

Kirkland. Yes.

Mr. Attorney General. What passed?

Kirkland. My Lord went up to the Bedside, and spoke it temperately; Johnson, you know you have been a Villain to me; Mr. Johnson made no Answer, but desired my Lord to let him alone at that Time: My Lord kept calling of him Villain; his Passion rose, and he began to pull the Bed Cloaths, and said, have not you been a Villain? Mr. Johnson said, my Lord, I may have been wrong as well as others: Upon this, my Lord run up in a violent Passion to the Bedside, I thought he would have struck him; but upon Mr. Johnson's declaring, he might have been a Villain to his Lordship, my Lord went to the Fire-side.

Mr. Attorney General. How came Mr. Johnson to make that Answer?

Kirkland. I winked at him, and he made the Answer.

Mr. Attorney General. Was Miss Johnson in the Room?

Kirkland. Yes; my Lord went to her, after he had abused her Father, and said, Though he has been a Villain to me, I promise you before Kirkland, who I desire to be a Witness, that I will take Care of your Family, if you do not prosecute.

Mr. Attorney General. Did my Lord go out of the Room?

Kirkland. Yes; he went down Stairs; he sent for me, and told me, he was afraid he had made Miss Johnson uneasy; he desired I would tell her, he would be her Friend: We came up Stairs together; his Lordship asked at the Top of the Stairs, whether I thought Mr. Johnson would would recover ; I replied, Yes ; he said, then I may go to Bed in Safety ; he went to Bed directly.

Mr. Attorney General. What passed after ?

Kirkland. The first Thing I did I went to Mr. Johnson, who desired, for God's Sake, that I would remove him ; while we were talking, I heard my Lord open the Door, and call up his Pointer : Mr. Johnson was a good deal alarmed at it, fearing my Lord should come again ; but my Lord shut the Door ; then he again intreated me to remove him.

Mr. Attorney General. Was any Proposal made to remove him before that ?

Kirkland. Yes ; Mrs. Clifford came down before that into the Still Room, and said, cannot Johnson be removed ? My Lord replied, No, he shall not be removed, till he be either better or dead : And some time after that he said, he was glad he had him in the House, that he could plague the Rascal ; or some such Words.

Mr. Attorney General. Why did you propose to remove him ?

Kirkland. I thought it prudent for many Reasons to remove him ; I imagined, Mr. Johnson would die ; and if my Lord came and found him dying, his Resentment would rise against me ; besides, Mr. Johnson was in a good deal of Apprehension of being again shot ; I really apprehended he might die through Fear, for he was a Man of a very weak Constitution ; upon this, I went to the Lount, and got a Parcel of Fellows, and placed Mr. Johnson in an easy Chair, and carried him upon Poles to the Lount, where he got without being much fatigued.

Mr. Attorney General. Did you apprehend that the moving would be prejudicial to him, considering the Condition he was in ?

Kirkland. It is impossible to say it might not ; but there was much more Danger in leaving him at Stanton ; and he expressed Satisfaction on my removing him : When he came there, he desired he might be removed from one Room where he was, into another ; for he said, my Lord might come and shoot him there, the Window was facing the Bed ; I told him, he might make himself easy, I would place a Centry at each Door.

Mr. Attorney General. At what Time was Mr. Johnson removed ?

Kirkland. I believe about Two o'Clock in the Morning ; I am not quite certain of the Hour.

Mr. Attorney General. How long did he live after that ?

Kirkland. He lived, as I was informed, till about Nine ; I did not leave him till Seven o'Clock.

Mr. Attorney General. In what Condition was he when you left him ?

Kirkland. Weak and low, and cold in the Extremities.

Mr. Attorney General. What was your Judgment about him ?

Kirkland. That he would be dead ; he thought so himself.

Mr. Attorney General. What happened after he was dead ?

Kirkland. Nothing more than my examining the Body.

Mr. Attorney General. What did you do upon that ?

Kirkland. I examined it the next Day, when the Coroner's Inquest was taken.

Mr. Attorney General. Did you give an Account of the Wound ?

Kirkland. The Ball had passed just under the lowest Rib, on the Left Side, through One of the Guts, and through a Bone we call the Os Inominatum, and lodg'd in the Bone called the Os Sacrum.

Mr. Attorney General. Do you apprehend that Mr. Johnson died of that Wound ?

Kirkland. I do ; I am clear in it.

Mr. Attorney General. Was you there when the Earl was seized ?

Kirkland. I was not ; I went to ask Advice what was to be done.

Earl Ferrers. You said that when I asked you to extract the Ball, that it was lodged in the Abdomen, and that I wondered at it.

Kirkland. That Question was asked before I told your Lordship it was lodged ; I remember the Question was asked.

Earl Ferrers. When I told you I had shot it through a Deal, was it not mentioned with Surprise ?

Kirkland. The Surprise seemed to be, that it had not also gone through the Man.

Earl Ferrers. At the Time that we were talking this over a Bottle of Wine, did you talk with me as a Friend ; or did you intend to betray me ?

Kirkland. I do own, my Lord, that I intended to deceive you ; and I thought it absolutely necessary.

Earl Ferrers. Did you intend to give this in Evidence ?

Kirkland. I knew I should be called upon on this Occasion.

Earl Ferrers. Did you not take Advantage of my being in Liquor ?

Kirkland. No, I could not, my Lord ; what you said was quite voluntary.

Earl

Earl Ferrers. Did I say I had come to a Resolution to do it deliberately?

Kirkland. I do not remember.

Earl Ferrers. Did you never hear me say, that I did not intend to kill him?

Kirkland. Your Lordship did.

A Lord. Did you, at any Time, hear Mr. Johnson say, that Lord Ferrers had shot him?

Kirkland. As soon as Mr. Johnson had got home, I said to him, Was my Lord in Liquor when he shot you? He was, when I first saw him. Mr. Johnson said, No, he was not: I imagined he got what Liquor he had afterwards. I did not think he would have shot me. I thought he only wanted me to sign a Paper. I asked him, Was you down on your Knee when my Lord shot you? He said, I think when my Lord shot me I was rising; though I cannot be sure whether I was or not, being hurried.

Mr. Attorney General. At the Time of this Relation of Mr. Johnson's, was any other Person present?

Kirkland. No, there was none; we were by ourselves in the Room.

Mr. Attorney General. Did you hear my Lord say to Miss Johnson, that he would take Care of them?

Kirkland. Yes, I heard my Lord say so to Miss Johnson.

Mr. Attorney General. He said to you, I owe you a Bill?

Kirkland. My Lord said, You can set this Matter right: If you do, I owe you a Bill; you may have some Money now, and the rest when you want it.

Mr. Attorney General. Did you ever hear Mr. Johnson express any Apprehension of my Lord Ferrers?

Kirkland. Mr. Johnson, in Conversation at different Times, has said to me, he did not think my Lord Ferrers would do him any Harm.

Lord Talbot. My Lords, this Witness has told you, that in One of his Conversations with Lord Ferrers his Lordship declared, that he did not intend to kill Mr. Johnson; and also that Lord Ferrers shewed him the Position in which he held the Pistol, when his Lordship thought the Instrument went wrong, as Mr. Kirkland was probing the Wound; I would ask, whether the Conversation was previous or subsequent to the probing the Wound?

Kirkland. He told me, before I entered the Director into the Wound, You must pass it in that Manner. The other Conversation was subsequent to this.

Lord Talbot. Do you believe that his Lordship's shewing the Position of the Pistol, in order to acquaint you with the Direction of the Ball, was with an Intention to facilitate your Operation?

Kirkland. I believe it was.

Mr. Attorney General. Did he appear in Liquor?

Kirkland. He was in Liquor at first; but it got more upon him.

Mr. Attorney General. As that unhappy Fury rose, the more Liquor he had, the more he seemed to persist in the Action?

Kirkland. Yes.

Mr. Attorney General. But when he was calmer, in his better Senses, he said, he did not wish to kill him?

Kirkland. No; he said at first, that he intended to kill him.

A Lord. When he told you the Direction of the Ball, did he not mean that tenderly, to assist the unfortunate Man?

Kirkland. I took it, that he was directing me to enquire into the Nature of the Wound.

A Lord. Could he direct you with any other View than to assist?

Kirkland. I remember when I told my Lord the Ball could not be extracted, he said, I do not intend to direct you; pursue your own Method, and do the best you can for him.

A Lord. You mentioned that he sent to you?

Kirkland. Yes.

Lord Mansfield. You have said, that, from the first to the last, Lord Ferrers told you that he designed to kill the Deceased; now, in Answer to a Question lately asked, you say, he said, he did not intend to kill him; upon what Occasion did he say that?

Kirkland. I think we sat by the Fire in the Still-Room, but I am not quite certain, and his Lordship said, that he did not intend to shoot him dead; I intended only to make him smart, and shoot him into the Hip, or Side.

Lord Mansfield. Could such a Wound as this be given to a Man without a certain Hazard of his Life?

Kirkland. It was certain Death to such a Constitution as Mr. Johnson's.

Lord Mansfield. How long after this Time was it, that he told you that you could set that Matter right?

Kirkland. He mentioned it at the very Beginning, and several Times after, till the End of the Evening.

Lord Mansfield. Did your Fear of Lord Ferrers, arise from his being in Liquor?

Kirkland. I should not have been afraid of Lord Ferrers if he had not been in Liquor; I thought, if he had found Mr. Johnson had died, that, as I had deceived him, I should have had his Resentment.

Lord Mansfield. Did you see Lord Ferrers in the Morning?

Kirkland. No. I did not.

Mr. Springthorpe, sworn.

Mr. Gould. My Lords, we call this Witness to give an Account of the Manner of seizing Lord Ferrers, and what passed upon that Occasion.

Mr. Gould. Was you present at the Time of taking Lord Ferrers?

Springthorpe. I was.

Mr. Gould. What Day was it?

Springthorpe. On Saturday Morning.

Mr. Gould. What Time in the Morning?

Springthorpe. I believe it was between Ten and Eleven o'Clock.

Mr. Gould. Had you a Multitude of People with you?

Springthorpe. The first Part of the Time I had not; but before he was taken there were a great many.

Mr. Gould. Was you armed?

Springthorpe. I had a Pistol I took from Mr. Burslem's.

Mr. Gould. Where did you go first?

Springthorpe. I went to see Mr. Johnson; he was my Friend, and I found he was dead. Mr. Burslem desired I would go and help to take Lord Ferrers: I condescended to do it. When I came to the Hall Yard, my Lord, in a few Minutes, came; he seemed to be going to the Stable, with his Stockings down, and his Garters in his Hands; his Lordship seeing me, demanded to know what I wanted. I presented my Pistol to his Lordship, and I said it was he I wanted, and I would have him; he put his Hand, whether he was going to put his Garters in his Pocket, or to pull out a Pistol, I cannot say; but he suddenly run into the House: I never saw more of him for two Hours; in about two Hours he came to the Garret Window; I went under the Window; he called, I asked what he wanted; he said, How is Johnson? I said he was dead; he said, you are a lying Scoundrel, G——d d——n you. I told him he was dead; he said, I will not believe it till Kirkland tells me so. I said he was dead; he said, then disperse the People and I will go and surrender: Let the People in, and let them have some Victuals and Drink. I told him I did not come for Victuals, but for him, and I would have him. He went away from the Window, swearing he would not be taken. Two Hours after that, there was a Report that he was upon the Bowling-green; I was at this Part of the House; I run there, and, by the Time I got there; I saw two Colliers had hold of his Lordship. I said, I would take Care no-body should hurt him. I took from a Man that had hold of him, a Pistol and a Powder-Horn; I shot the Pistol off, and it made a great Impression against the Stones. I heard my Lord say, he had shot a Villain and a Scoundrel, and, clapping his Hand upon his Bosom, he said, I glory in his Death. That is all I know of the Matter.

Francis Kinsley sworn.

Mr. Norton. You keep a Public-House at Ashby De la Zouch?

Kinsley. Yes.

Mr. Norton. Was Lord Ferrers brought to your House when he was apprehended?

Kinsley. Yes.

Mr. Norton. Did you hear him say any Thing about killing of Johnson?

Kinsley. I heard very little of it.

Mr. Norton. Do you remember one Mr. Hall, a Clergyman, coming to your House at that Time?

Kinsley. Yes.

Mr. Norton. Did he desire to be admitted to Lord Ferrers?

Kinsley. Yes.

Mr. Norton. Did you hear what passed between Mr. Hall and my Lord Ferrers?

Kinsley. A great many Words passed.

Mr. Norton. What passed?

Kinsley. I heard Mr. Hall intimate to his Lordship, as a Clergyman, that his Lordship seemed to be pretty much in Liquor at that Time, and desired he would not make Use of those Expressions. He told Mr. Hall he was extremely obliged to him for his good Advice; he apprehended what it was; however, he told Mr. Hall that he knew his Duty, perhaps as well as a Justice of Peace.

Mr. Norton. Was Mr. Hall a Justice of Peace?

Kinsley. Yes. I did not hear much more said between Mr. Hall and my Lord Ferrers. Mr. Hall staid with his Lordship some Time in the same Room; then he came down Stairs, and I never saw him afterwards.

Mr. Norton. Did he say any Thing about killing of Mr. Johnson?

Kinsley. He asked, a great many Times, if I had heard that Johnson was dead; I told him, a good many Times, that I heard he was dead: He said, I will not be convinced till I hear it from the Coroner.

Mr. Norton. Did he say any Thing else?

Kinsley. His Lordship behaved very well with me, and decently, from the Saturday, to the Monday at Ten o'Clock.

Mr. Attorney General. My Lords, we rest it here for the Crown.

Lord High Steward. My Lord Ferrers, the Council for the Crown have done; now is the Time for your Lordship to make your Defence; and if you have any Witnesses to examine, now is your Time to call them.

Earl Ferrers. My Lords, there have been a great Variety of Circumstances that have appeared through the Course of this Evidence. I really do not recollect any Thing that happened since the Time relative to the Affair; and I should hope your Lordships would give me a farther Day to make my Defence.

Lord High Steward. Your Lordship hath had a great deal of Time, and you have had Council assigned you, and Orders for summing your Witnesses. It is now the Time to proceed to your Defence.

Earl Ferrers. I hope your Lordships will be so good as to give me till To-morrow, as there are some Circumstances that I could wish to consult my Council about.

Lord Mansfield. My Lords, as your Lordships cannot debate here upon the Application that has been made by the Noble Lord at the Bar, to adjourn the Trial till To-morrow, I could wish he would open to your Lordships the Nature of his Defence, or some Reason why he is not prepared to go on now; otherwise, when your Lordships adjourn, you will have nothing to debate upon, but barely whether there shall be this Delay because it is asked; and it may be a dangerous Precedent to establish, that a Trial shall be adjourned, as of course, if desired, just when the Evidence in Support of the Prosecution is closed. If he should give your Lordships a Reason for it, then it will be in your Lordships Discretion, whether that Reason is sufficient to induce your Lordships to adjourn 'till To-morrow. I think he should open the Nature of his Defence, and state some Ground for the Delay he asks.

Elizabeth Burgeland called in again.

A Lord. Do you know of any particular Quantity of strong Liquor, of any Kind, that Lord Ferrers had drank that Day?

Burgeland. No. I cannot tell any Thing of it: He drank some Brandy in his Tea in the Morning.

A Lord. Who is the Person that kept the Key of the strong Liquor?

Burgeland. Mrs. Clifford.

A Lord. Do you know of any that he had that Day?

Burgeland. I cannot tell any Thing about it.

A Lord. Was it usual for my Lord to drink Brandy in his Tea?

Burgeland. He did not drink Tea every Morning; but, when he drank Tea, I believe he did put Brandy in it.

A Lord. Was Mrs. Clifford returned to the Hall before the Surgeon, Mr. Kirkland?

Burgeland. Yes.

A Lord. How long?

Burgeland. I cannot justly say; it may be near, or near upon two Hours.

A Lord. Had you, or any Person, carried any strong Liquor to my Lord before Mr. Kirkland came?

Burgeland. I cannot tell any Thing about it.

A Lord. At what Time did Lord Ferrers dine that Day?

Burgeland. At Two o'Clock.

A Lord. When you saw Lord Ferrers, after the Fact, was he drunk, or sober?

Burgeland.

Burgeland. I did not observe he was much in Liquor then ; but, soon after, he was quite fuddled.

A Lord. The first Time you saw him after the Pistol went off, how was he then?

Burgeland. I did not observe that he was much in Liquor at the Time when it was done.

A Lord. Did you see him any Part of that Day, before you heard the Pistol go off, or before Mr. Kirkland came to the House, appear intoxicated with Liquor?

Burgeland. I saw him at Dinner ; I never saw him after till it was done.

A Lord. How was he at Dinner?

Burgeland. My Lord was sober at Dinner.

Earl Ferrers. My Lords, by the Kind of Defence recommended to me it will be impossible to go on at present ; there are several Witnesses to be examined, and, really, my Lords, I am quite unprepared.

Earl of Hardwicke. I believe it is expected by your Lordships, that the Noble Lord at the Bar should now open to you the Nature of his Defence.

Lord High Steward. My Lord Ferrers, it is required that you should open the Nature of your Defence ; my Lords will be able to judge, from that, whether it will be proper to give your Lordship Time to make your Defence, agreeable to your Request.

Earl Ferrers. My Lords, I can hardly express myself, the very Circumstance shocks me so much ; but I am informed, from several Circumstances, of an Indisposition of Mind.

Then the Lord High Steward returned back to the Chair.

Lord Ravensworth. My Lords, I move your Lordships to adjourn to the Chamber of Parliament.

Lord High Steward. Is it your Lordships Pleasure to adjourn to the Chamber of Parliament?

Lords. Ay, ay.

Lord High Steward. This House is adjourned to the Chamber of Parliament.

The Lords, and others, returned to the Chamber of Parliament, in the same Order they came down ; and, after some Time, the House was adjourned again into Westminster Hall, and the Peers being there seated, and the Lord High Steward in his Chair, and the House resumed, the Serjeant at Arms made Proclamation for Silence, as usual.

Lord High Steward. My Lord Ferrers, you are to proceed to your Defence.

Earl Ferrers. My Lords, the Kind of Defence I mentioned to your Lordships before, I really don't know how myself to enter upon ; it is what my Family have considered for me, and they have engaged all the Evidence that are to be examined upon this unhappy Occasion, who I really have not seen ; I do not well know what they have to say : I should, therefore, hope your Lordships will give me all the Assistance that is possible in their Examination.

My Lords, I believe that what I have already mentioned to your Lordships, as the Ground of this Defence, has been a Family Complaint ; and I have heard that my own Family have, of late, endeavoured to prove me such. The Defence I mean is occasional Insanity of Mind ; and I am convinced, from recollecting within myself, that, at the Time of this Action, I could not know what I was about. I say, my Lords, upon reflecting within myself, I am convinced, that at that Time I could not know what I was about.

It has been too plainly proved, that, at the Time this Accident happened, I was very sober, that I was not disordered with Liquor : Your Lordships will observe, from the Evidence both of Mr. Kirkland and Miss Johnson, that it plainly appeared that this Man never suspected there was any Malice, or that I had any.

Mr. John Bennefold sworn.

Earl Ferrers. How long have you known me?

Bennefold. Above these Twenty Years.

Earl Ferrers. Was you ever employed by me in any Shape?

Bennefold. Yes.

Earl Ferrers. In what Shape?

Bennefold. In receiving his Lordship's Rents, when they were sent him out of the Country.

Earl Ferrers. Did you know any of the Family besides me?

Bennefold. Yes.

Earl Ferrers. Do you remember my Uncle, or any other of the Family?

Bennefold. Yes, the late Lord Ferrers, Henry.

Earl Ferrers. What Disorder had he?

Bennefold. Lunacy.

Earl Ferrers. How many Years before he died?

Bennefold. Several Years before he died, at Kensington Gore.

Earl

Earl Ferrers. Did you know Lady Barbara Shirley?

Bennefold. No.

Earl Ferrers. Did you never hear that she was disordered?

Bennefold. Yes, I have.

Earl Ferrers. Please to observe what you know of my Conduct, as to the State of my Mind, without having any particular Questions asked you?

Bennefold. His Lordship has always behaved in a very strange manner, very flighty, very much like a Man out of his Mind, more particularly so within these Two Years past, such as being in Liquor, and swearing and cursing, and the like, and talking to himself, very much like a Man disordered in his Senses; and then he has behaved himself as well as any other Gentleman at times.

Earl Ferrers. Do you know of any particular Time, or of any particular Action?

Bennefold. Nothing in particular, more than the particular Circumstances of my Lady, and expressing great Hardships, and Dissatisfaction with the Act of Parliament.

Earl Ferrers. Have you observed irrational Behaviour when I have not been in Liquor?

Bennefold. Yes, I have.

Earl Ferrers. Was it frequent or seldom?

Bennefold. It was often.

Earl Ferrers. Can you recollect any particular irrational Behaviour in me when I have not been in Liquor?

Bennefold. I cannot say that I can recollect any particular Passage.

Earl Ferrers. Did you ever see me walking about the Room, talking to myself; making Motions with my Head, and talking to myself?

Bennefold. Yes, a great many times.

Earl Ferrers. Did you think that I was disturbed in my Mind?

Bennefold. Yes.

Mr. Attorney General. My Lords, I should be glad to know what is this Witness's Trade and Occupation?

Bennefold. I am now Clerk of St. James's Parish; I was a Peruke-maker by Trade.

Mr. Attorney General. Was you acquainted with my Lord Ferrers in the Country or in Town?

Bennefold. In Town.

Mr. Attorney General. Was you admitted to my Lord's Friendship or Familiarity?

Bennefold. To both.

Mr. Attorney General. In Conversation at any time, have you observed my Lord to give you irrational or insensible Answers?

Bennefold. I cannot say he has given me any insensible Answers.

Mr. Attorney General. I should be glad to know whether you have any Reason to believe, from his Behaviour, that he did not understand enough to distinguish Right from Wrong?

Bennefold. That is a Question I am in some Doubt of answering.

Mr. Attorney General. I have asked as to your Opinion; if you will recollect what Discourse has passed between you, you will be able to give an Answer; now, from your Discourse and Conversation, do you think or believe he was in that State of Mind as not to know Right from Wrong at any time?

Bennefold. That is a Question I cannot answer to.

Mr. Attorney General. You will be pleased to recollect, that you told me, when I asked you, that my Lord never gave you an irrational Answer; why cannot you give your Opinion as to his Sanity?

Bennefold. My Lord's Behaviour appeared in general in such manner as I have mentioned.

Mr. Attorney General. My Lords, This Witness did not mention any particular Act, only talking to himself, and Motions with his Head; I am questioning him upon those kind of Acts that proceed from Words or Speeches: Did you ever, from his Words or Speeches, conceive that he was not himself?

Bennefold. No further than by being displeas'd, often talking to himself, like a Man that was out of his Mind.

Mr. Attorney General. Did my Lord manage his Affairs by himself?

Bennefold. He managed them himself; he gave me Directions.

Mr. Attorney General. Were those Directions reasonable and sensible?

Bennefold. Sometimes they were, though thought unreasonable and insensible by the Persons he wrote to.

Mr. Attorney General. Can you recollect any Instances, and the Persons that thought them so?

Bennefold. I cannot recollect any Circumstance relating to Family Matters; his Mother, when I have carried such Messages, has thought him to be in a wrong Mind, in writing to her in the manner he did.

Mr. Attorney General. Did Mrs. Shirley ever treat him as an insane Person, or talk of sending for a Physician to him?

Bennefold. Not that I know of.

Mr. Attorney General. Did any other Person think my Lord so insane as to want that?

Bennefold. I cannot recollect any Person in particular.

Mr. Attorney General. Was it easy to impose upon his Lordship in his Affairs, or difficult?

Bennefold. It was not easy to impose upon his Lordship, that I know of.

Mr. Attorney General. As you have known him so long, and have been admitted to his Familiarity, I wish you would recollect One single irrational Expression that you have ever heard him make use of.

Bennefold. I cannot recollect any in particular.

Mr. Attorney General. You say that he seemed displeas'd with his Lady, and with the Act of Parliament; please to recollect, whether, upon that Occasion, his Behaviour was such as betray'd his Infanity, or any thing that was irrational?

Bennefold. My Lord express'd a good deal of Dissatisfaction at the Act of Parliament.

Mr. Attorney General. What was the Dissatisfaction? and was it general as well as particular?

Bennefold. In relation to the Estate's being taken away, and Receivers being put upon it.

Mr. Attorney General. Do you apprehend that that Sort of Expression denoted Infanity or Sanity?

Bennefold. That I cannot take upon me to determine.

Mr. Attorney General. Please to recollect yourself, and give me an Answer to the Question: You said that he express'd a Dissatisfaction, because his Estate was taken from him, and a Receiver put upon it; I desire to know whether those Expressions bespeak a Man in his Senses or out of his Senses?

Bennefold. I cannot say whether that denoted him to be in his Senses or out of his Senses.

Mr. Attorney General. Are those Expressions the Expressions of a Fool, or of a Man of Understanding upon the Subject?

Bennefold. I should think, of a Man of Understanding.

Mr. Attorney General. You have not been able to answer as to any particular Speeches that denoted him to be insane; now do you remember any Act of his, of any kind, that denoted a disordered Mind?

Bennefold. I cannot say I can; I was not so often with him, though I have known him long.

Mr. Attorney General. Then I desire to know, whether Lord Ferrers, from the Conversation you had with him, appear'd to be rather of better Parts than an ordinary kind of Man?

Bennefold. Yes, to be sure.

Mr. Thomas Goostrey sworn.

Earl Ferrers. How long have you known Lord Ferrers?

Goostrey. About Ten Years.

Earl Ferrers. How long have you been concern'd for him?

Goostrey. About that time.

Earl Ferrers. Have you seen any Instances of any thing like Infanity in me?

Goostrey. I think I have.

Earl Ferrers. Please to mention the Instances.

Goostrey. I have been call'd upon very unexpectedly; I should have recollected myself, if I had had any Apprehension of being call'd upon.

Earl Ferrers. Then mention the Instances.

Goostrey. I know nothing within this Twelve Months past: Lord Ferrers always appear'd to me to be of a very remarkable Disposition; and though Lord Ferrers was extremely sensible, and thoroughly acquainted with his Affairs, yet I have frequently had Directions from him to do Things that in my Opinion were either fruitless, or opposite to his Interest, and upon those Occasions I have always found it in vain to endeavour to dissuade his Lordship from it; and as I always found that Lord Ferrers was extremely sensible, and thorough Master of his Affairs, I have never been capable of accounting for his Behaviour, otherwise than by apprehending that he has been at times out of his Mind.

Earl Ferrers. Do you remember any Instance where I appear'd to be out of my Mind, and what?

Goostrey. I remember that all of a sudden he took it into his Head that he should be capable of impeaching a Family Settlement that he had long acquiesc'd under, and by which he was only Tenant for Life of his Estate; and though he had advis'd with many Lawyers upon the Occasion, and they were all of Opinion that it was impossible he could succeed, yet he per-sifted in his Resolution of bringing a Suit to destroy that Settlement; and upon those Occasions I have always found Lord Ferrers extremely strange; and when he has touched upon that Subject, his Conversation has been very wild, and inconsistent with what I have looked upon a Man of Sense and Understanding to be; and I remember One Instance, which was, when Lord Ferrers returned from my Lord Westmorland's, my Lord Ferrers followed me upon that Occasion into the City, and he came into the Room where I was with a great deal of Company. I perceived, by his Appearance, that something disturbed him, and therefore hastily came up to him, and got him out of the Room. When I came up to him, I asked him what was the Matter; and did at first apprehend he had been in Liquor, but I soon perceived that he was perfectly sober. He then told me a strange inconsistent Story of his having been down at my Lord Westmorland's, and of his having been ill treated by Sir Thomas Stapleton, and the Intent of his coming to me was, to draw an Advertisement to be inserted in all the Papers, tending to challenge Sir Thomas Stapleton, and to post him for a Coward if he did not give him Satisfaction. I was extremely uneasy; and with Difficulty did dissuade him from it, upon a Promise to wait upon him the next Day; but then looking upon him to be out of his Senses, I did not call upon him the next Day. From thence I declined being concerned for him, as looking upon him to be a Person out of his Senses: That is all; I have never seen his Lordship from that time to this, except when I had the Honour to wait upon his Lordship in the Tower.

Earl Ferrers. Did you know Mr. Johnson?

Goostrey. Very well.

Earl Ferrers. Was I in Friendship with Mr. Johnson?

Goostrey. I have often seen Lord Ferrers and Mr. Johnson together, and have likewise had Occasion to talk of Mr. Johnson with my Lord: I always observed that his Lordship had the greatest Regard and Esteem for Mr. Johnson; and I have, in the Course of my Business that I have done for Lord Ferrers, always found that Mr. Johnson was very exact and regular in his Accounts.

Earl Ferrers. Did you ever hear me at any time find Fault with Mr. Johnson, or express any Dissatisfaction at him?

Goostrey. Never, but always the reverse.

Earl Ferrers. Do you know if Mr. Johnson would have consented to have been Receiver under the Act of Parliament, without consulting me?

Goostrey. I heard Mr. Johnson declare, that when it was proposed to him to be Receiver, that he refused to be so, without first consulting his Lordship; and afterwards I saw Mr. Johnson, and he told me that it was at his Lordship's particular Request that he consented to be a Receiver.

Mr. Solicitor General. My Lords, I must beg Leave to ask this Witness a Question or Two.

Mr. Solicitor General. Mr. Goostrey gave your Lordships as a Reason for his Opinion that Lord Ferrers was insane, that his Lordship would very frequently send Directions in the Course of his Affairs, which Mr. Goostrey thought fruitless, or opposite to his Interest; in particular, he mentioned an Instance relative to his impeaching or setting aside a Family Settlement;

Now, I should be glad to ask Mr. Goostrey, Whether he thinks that the Manner of Lord Ferrers's receiving his Advice to dissuade him from endeavouring to set aside that Settlement, proceeded from a Tenaciousness of his Opinion, or from the Insanity of his Mind?

Goostrey. To say that it might be owing to Insanity of Mind might be going too far; but it was from his remarkable Disposition, his obstinate and improper Behaviour, his remarkable Tenaciousness of his Opinion, which was not consistent with the good Sense I have known him Master of.

Goostrey. If I may explain what I said before, I should rather think it tended to Insanity than any thing else, as it was so inconsistent with the good Sense and Understanding that I have always met with from his Lordship.

Mr. Solicitor General. Was it from any particular Circumstance which passed between you and Lord Ferrers, that you thought the Manner of receiving your Advice was owing to a Tendency in Lord Ferrers to Insanity?

Goostrey. My Reason is, that his Lordship had been advised by many Lawyers, that, by his long Acquiescence under that Settlement, and the many Acts he had done confirming it, that there was no Possibility of succeeding in it.

Mr. Solicitor General. Mr. Goostrey, You have had a great deal of Business, and been employed by many Clients, as well as Lord Ferrers; have not you, in the Course of your Experience and Transactions, met with several Clients of a Temper to proceed against the Advice of Council and Friends?

Goostrey. I never did in my small Experience meet with any Person that did so, that was possessed of the good Sense and Understanding that I have at other times found in my Lord Ferrers.

Mr. Solicitor General. Have you never met with Persons unsuspected of Lunacy, who acted in the Manner Lord Ferrers did upon that Occasion?

Goostrey. I do not know I ever had any other Client that was under such Circumstances; I do not know that I ever met with any Client that would commence a Suit after Council advised the contrary.

Mr. Solicitor General. How did the Suit end?

Goostrey. It never proceeded so far as to have an Answer; for, in the mean time, the unhappy Dispute between Lord and Lady Ferrers broke out, and that diverted his Thoughts from it.

Mr. Solicitor General. You mentioned an Instance of attending Lord Ferrers, with regard to the ill Treatment he had received from Sir Thomas Stapylton; upon that Occasion do you think that my Lord's insinuating to have a Challenge inserted in the Papers, by way of Advertisement, proceeded from Insanity, or from mere Violence of Temper?

Goostrey. I did then think it Insanity; he being perfectly sober, I could impute it to nothing else, and from thenceforth I declined being concerned for him.

Mr. Solicitor General. Might it not be from Violence of Temper?

Goostrey. It was many Hours after the Accident happened that he came to me.

Mr. Solicitor General. Did you ever observe any thing frantick in my Lord's Behaviour?

Goostrey. Many times.

Mr. Solicitor General. Upon what Occasion?

Goostrey. Upon Occasion of his going from the Business we have been talking upon, I have often found him in Conversation lose himself intirely.

Mr. Solicitor General. Did he lose himself from Passion, or for want of Understanding?

Goostrey. He had nothing to ruffle his Temper but that particular Thing; it was from his talking to himself; I made it a Rule never to contradict him; and, during the Ten Years I was concerned for him, I never had a Word with him.

Mr. Solicitor General. You endeavoured to dissuade him from this Suit which he was going to prosecute as to the Settlement; How did he reason upon the Occasion?

Goostrey. Quite wild and inconsistent, and, upon this Occasion, in my Opinion, shewed Want of Reason.

Mr. Solicitor General. Do you recollect what he said, and how he argued? Mention the Particulars.

Goostrey. He treated it as if he had been imposed upon, and drawn in improperly to do it.

Mr. Solicitor General. Do you think that such a way of arguing shewed his Insanity and Want of Sense?

Goostrey. I thought it did, because it appeared to me to be inconsistent with the Facts.

Mr. Solicitor General. Might it not arise from a Difference in Opinion between you and him?

Goostrey. I should think not, because I always looked upon his Lordship to be a much more sensible Man.

Mr. Solicitor General. How long have you known him?

Goostrey. I said Ten Years; but I believe it may be Eleven.

Mr. Solicitor General. Do you know of any Instance in which his Friends or Family ever entertained the same Opinion of him as you do?

Goostrey. Never, as to taking out a Commission of Lunacy.

Mr. Solicitor General. As from the Conversation you had with him you think he was insane, did not you represent it to the Family?

Goostrey. Never; his Family knew it as well as I.

Mr. Solicitor General. As you was of that Opinion, did you advise a Commission of Lunacy?

Goostrey. Never.

Mr. Solicitor General. In the Time of your being concerned for him in his Affairs, did you prepare any Deed, Conveyance, or Lease for him?

Goostrey. In some Things I have.

Mr. Solicitor General. Did you ever prepare any Mortgage upon his Estate?

Goostrey. Never, that I remember.

Mr. Solicitor General. Did you ever attend the Execution of any such Deeds?

Goostrey. I was concerned in suffering a Recovery, and cutting off the Entails in the Settlement.

Mr. Solicitor General. In case of a Client's being insane, would you have suffered such Acts to be done?

Goostrey. There was no such thing happened in my Time; I never knew of any Act that my Lord did to his Prejudice in the Execution of any Deed in my Time.

Mr.

Mr. Solicitor General. I ask you, if you had been desired to be a Party, or present at the Execution of any such Deed, whether you would have suffered it under such Circumstances?

Goostrey. Most certainly I should not.

Mr. Solicitor General. Was you ever a Witness to the Execution of any Deed by Lord Ferrers?

Goostrey. I have.

Mr. Solicitor General. Did you ever transact any Mortgage for him?

Goostrey. I do not recollect.

Mr. Solicitor General. Did you never get any Loan of Money for him?

Goostrey. Never. If the Gentlemen will find it out, I will not disown it.

Mr. Solicitor General. Has my Lord lately raised a considerable Sum of Money upon his Estate?

Goostrey. No, I never negotiated any such, nor was I privy to it.

Mr. Solicitor General. Was you employed to procure any Money?

Goostrey. Never to my Memory.

Mr. Solicitor General. Did you never converse with his Lordship upon the Subject?

Goostrey. Never.

Mr. Solicitor General. Did you, or did you not, in your Conscience and Opinion, upon the whole Matter, think my Lord Ferrers insane, or a proper Object to be under the Care of a Physician, or of the Court of Chancery?

Goostrey. I am in great doubt whether my Lord was so insane as that a Commission of Lunacy could be taken out; I should think a Commission of Lunacy could not be taken out against him.

Mr. Solicitor General. Why? because he was not insane?

Goostrey. I look upon it that he was insane only at particular Times, and in particular Instances.

Mr. Solicitor General. If he was insane only at times, would he not have been a proper Object of a Commission of Lunacy?

Goostrey. I cannot say at the times I have seen. If a Jury had been to inquire touching his Sanity, I am sure they would have found him a Lunatic.

Mr. Solicitor General. Mention the Times of which you speak.

Goostrey. I meant that particular Time when his Lordship came to me in the City, as I have mentioned.

My Lord Ferrers did propose to dispose of his Northamptonshire Estate. I do recollect there once was a Negotiation of a Loan of Ten thousand Pounds from Sir Thomas Clarges. I was no otherwise concerned in it, than only to see that the Deed which Lord Ferrers executed was a proper One. Mr. Howell of Lincoln's Inn was the Person concerned.

Mr. Solicitor General. You recollect the Negotiation of a Loan, and your being advised with?

Goostrey. I do recollect I was advised with, and I believe my Lord was then in Leicestershire.

Mr. Solicitor General. What Advice did you give?

Goostrey. The Money to be borrowed by my Lord was not to be put into his Pocket, but to pay off another Mortgage.

Mr. Solicitor General. What Advice did you give?

Goostrey. I do not recollect any particular Advice; I remember there was a Draught of a Deed; I believe it was laid before me.

Mr. Solicitor General. Did you, or did you not, advise the Execution of it?

Goostrey. I neither advised one way nor the other; I was no otherwise concerned than to see that the Draught was proper.

Mr. Solicitor General. You say my Lord asked your Advice; did you give him your Opinion with respect to the Propriety of the Deed?

Goostrey. I dare say if my Lord asked it, I did; I don't remember he did; 'tis most likely he did.

Lord Hillsborough. Why did you make it a Rule never to contradict my Lord Ferrers?

Goostrey. Because if I had contradicted him, I should have led his Lordship into a strange wild Way of Reasoning, that I had often experienced, by his Reasoning with himself only.

Earl Ferrers. Was you ever concerned for any of the Family but me?

Goostrey. For Lady Anna Eleonora Shirley I was concerned.

Earl Ferrers. Do you know of any thing else?

Goostrey. Not that I recollect.

Lord Ravensworth. Do you know Lord Ferrers's Mother, or any of his Relations?

Goostrey. I know them all.

Lord Ravensworth. Do you mean that you know them as one that has transacted Business with them, and that you can speak your Opinion touching them?

Goostrey. Yes; I have had Business with them frequently.

Lord Ravensworth. Did you at any time, or at different times, speak to Lord Ferrers's Mother, or any of his Relations, to give them your Opinion of the Management of Lord Ferrers?

Goostrey. I never did; I should have thought it very unnecessary, because I was thoroughly satisfied that the Family knew it as well as myself.

Lord Ravensworth. My Lords, I have attended to Mr. Goostrey's Evidence, and am desirous of getting every Thing from him that I can; and therefore desire he will tell your Lordships, whether, during the time he did Business for Lord Ferrers, he ever signified to any of his Lordship's Family his own Sentiments touching his Lordship?

Goostrey. If I had been concerned for the Family, I should not have hesitated a Moment to have done it. I believe Mr. Shirley in particular knew that the Reason I declined being longer concerned in Lord Ferrers's Affairs was from an Apprehension that he was not in his Senses.

Lord Ravensworth. You declined being concerned for him upon his Behaviour about the Settlement?

Goostrey. No, upon his returning from Lord Westmorland's.

Lord Ravensworth. Should you have thought that alone sufficient, if, previous to that, you had not seen Marks that induced you to have a Suspicion of his Sanity, and to take the Resolution you did?

Goostrey. I don't know whether, if that had been the only Instance in which I had found my Lord behave in that odd Manner, I should then have given up his Affairs; but he had several times before acted so inconsistent, as to induce me to think it was out of my Power to be of any Service to him.

Lord Ravensworth. How long is it since he was at Lord Westmorland's?

Goostrey. About a Year and an half.

Lord Ravensworth. You say that you have known him between Ten and Eleven Years; during the whole time was you concerned in his Affairs?

Goostrey. There was something or other moving in his Affairs all the while; it was with the greatest Difficulty that I kept him within the Bounds I did.

Lord Ravensworth. Do you mean that, from the first time of your being concerned in his Affairs, you looked upon him in that Light, or only in that Instance?

Goostrey. Soon after I was concerned in his Affairs, I wished I had not engaged; but as I had got into them, it was difficult to recede, and for that Purpose I went on.

Lord Ravensworth. In your Opinion, and from your best Recollection, did you observe these Symptoms in Lord Ferrers the whole Time you attended him, the major Part of the Time, or more particularly at the latter Part?

Goostrey. Most certainly his Lordship was greatly affected with the Separation of Lady Ferrers; and at that Time I observed it.

Lord Ravensworth. Do you think it proceeded from Liquor?

Goostrey. I very seldom saw him in Liquor.

Lord Ravensworth. At the Times you recollect, was he sober?

Goostrey. Perfectly sober, at the Times I speak of.

Earl of Morton. Did you ever see him in such a Condition, that he was incapable of judging between a moral and an immoral Act?

Goostrey. I cannot say I ever did.

Then the Lord High Steward returned back to his Chair.

Lord Privy Seal. My Lords, I move your Lordships to adjourn to the Chamber of Parliament.

Lord High Steward. Is it your Lordships Pleasure to adjourn to the Chamber of Parliament?

Lords. Ay, ay.

Lord High Steward. This House is adjourned to the Chamber of Parliament.

The Lords, and others, returned to the Chamber of Parliament in the same Order they came down; and, after some Time, the House being there resumed, resolved to proceed further in the Trial of Lawrence Earl Ferrers, in Westminster-Hall, To-morrow, at Ten of the Clock in the Morning; and ordered that the said Lawrence Earl Ferrers should be remanded Prisoner to his Majesty's Tower of London, there to be kept in safe Custody; and that he be brought again to the Bar of this House in Westminster-Hall, To-morrow, at Ten of the Clock in the Morning.

Thursday April 17, 1760. The Second Day.

THE Lords, and others, came from the Chamber of Parliament into Westminster-Hall, in the same Order as on Wednesday last; and the Peers were there seated, and the Lord High Steward in his Chair.

Lord High Steward. My Lords, The House is resumed. Is it your Lordships Pleasure, that the Judges may be covered?

Lords. Ay, Ay.

Then the Serjeant at Arms made Proclamation for Silence, as usual; and afterwards the following Proclamation.

Serjeant at Arms. Oyez, Oyez, Oyez! Lieutenant of the Tower, bring forth your Prisoner, Lawrence Earl Ferrers, to the Bar, pursuant to the Order of the House of Lords.

The Deputy Governor of the Tower brought the Prisoner to the Bar, in the like Form as before; and then he kneeled down.

Lord High Steward. Your Lordship may rise.

Lord High Steward. Earl Ferrers, your Lordship will proceed in your Defence.

Thomas Huxley sworn.

Earl Ferrers. DID you know the late Earl Ferrers?

Huxley. I did.

Earl Ferrers. How long did you know him?

Huxley. About Fourteen Years.

Earl Ferrers. What was the Matter with him?

Huxley. He was a Lunatic.

Earl Ferrers. Was he under Confinement?

Huxley. He was under Confinement.

Earl Ferrers. Was he a Lunatic all that Time.

Huxley. He had Intervals.

Earl Ferrers. Was he not recovered of his Understanding sometimes, so as to return to his Seat in Parliament?

Huxley. Not in that Time that I was with his Lordship.

Earl Ferrers. Was he a Lunatic home to the Time of his Death?

Huxley. He was.

Earl Ferrers. Did you know Lady Barbara Shirley?

Huxley. I did not.

Earl Ferrers. Or Lady Betty Shirley?

Huxley. I did know Lady Betty Shirley.

Earl Ferrers. Is she living?

Huxley. She is dead.

Earl Ferrers. How long has she been dead?

Huxley. To the best of my Knowledge about Seventeen or Eighteen Years.

Earl Ferrers. Had she any Disorders that you know of?

Huxley. As I have been told, by her Servants, she frequently appeared to be very much disordered.

Mr. Attorney General. My Lords, I should be sorry to stop the Course of the Noble Earl's Evidence, but this is Hearsay.

Earl Ferrers. Did you know any other of the Family that were disordered in their Senses?

Huxley. Nothing more than by Hearsay.

Earl Ferrers. How long have you known the present Earl Ferrers?

Huxley. But a very few Years.

Earl Ferrers. What Relation was the late Earl Ferrers to the present Lord?

Huxley. His Uncle.

Mr. Attorney General. My Lords, we will not trouble your Lordships to cross-examine this Witness.

Mrs. Wilhelmina Deborah Cotes sworn.

Earl Ferrers. Did you know Lady Barbara Shirley?

Cotes. Perfectly well.

Earl Ferrers. What Relation was she to the present Earl Ferrers?

Cotes. His Aunt.

Earl Ferrers. How long did you know Lady Barbara before her Death?

Cotes. She is now living.

Earl Ferrers. Was she afflicted with any, and what, Distemper?

Cotes. Lunacy.

Earl Ferrers. Is she confined as a Lunatic at this Time?

Cotes. She was always looked upon as a Lunatic, and proper Care has been taken of her.

Earl Ferrers. Do you know any other of the Family that has been afflicted with Lunacy?

Cotes. Only by Hearsay.

The Honourable and Reverend Mr. Walter Shirley sworn.

Earl Ferrers. What Relation are you to me?

Shirley. Brother.

Earl Ferrers. Do you know any, and which, of the Family, that have been afflicted with Lunacy; if you do, please to mention their Names?

Shirley. I believe the Prisoner at the Bar has that Misfortune.

Earl Ferrers. What is your Reason for such Belief?

Shirley. I have many Reasons for it. The First is, that I have seen him several Times talking to himself, clenching his Fists, grinning, and having several Gestures of a Madman, without any seeming Cause leading thereto—I have likewise very frequently known him extremely suspicious of Plots and Contrivances against him from his own Family; and, when he was desired to give some Account what the Plots were that he meant, he could not make any direct Answer.—Another Reason I have for thinking him so is, his falling into violent Passion, without any adequate Cause.

Earl Ferrers. Do you believe that, at some Times, I have been hurried into violent Fits, so as not to know the Distinction between a moral and immoral Act?

Shirley. I believe, at those Times when my Lord has been transported by this Disease of Lunacy, that he has not been able to distinguish properly between moral Good and Evil.

Earl Ferrers. Has any other of the Family, besides myself, been afflicted with Lunacy?

Shirley. I have heard———(stopt)

Earl Ferrers. Please to inform their Lordships, whether, at the Time I have been transported with such violent Fits, they have been the Effects of Drink, and whether they have happened when I was sober?

Shirley. Frequently when my Lord has been sober, much more so when he has been a little inflamed with Liquor.

Earl Ferrers. Do you know of any Intention in the Family to take out a Commission of Lunacy against me?

Shirley. I heard it talked of.

Earl Ferrers. How long ago?

Shirley. I think I can recollect it was at the Time of his Lordship's committing the Outrage at Lord Westmorland's House that it was proposed to be done; but afterwards they were afraid to go through with it; and the Reason given was, lest, if the Court of Judicature should not be thoroughly satisfied of my Lord's Lunacy upon Inspection, that the Damage would be very great to those that should attempt it.

Earl Ferrers. Why was the Family afraid that I should appear in the Courts of Judicature to be in my Senses?

Shirley. Because my Lord had frequently such long Intervals of Reason, that, we imagined, if he, on the Inspection, appeared reasonable, the Court would not grant the Commission against him.

Earl Ferrers. What Damage do you mean that the Family was apprehensive of, in case the Court should refuse a Commission?

Shirley. We apprehended my Lord would sue us for Scandalum Magnatum.

Earl Ferrers. Was the Family apprehensive of any other Kind of Damage?

Shirley. I know of none.

Mr. Attorney General. My Lords, I did not intend to have troubled this Gentleman; but from what he has said, your Lordships will permit me to ask him Two or Three Questions; I shall do it very tenderly, and with as much Propriety as I can.—In giving his Account of the Noble Lord's State of Mind, as far as I could collect it, said, That he had more Reasons than One why he deemed him to be insane.

Mr. Attorney General. Mr. Shirley, You said that the First Ground was, that his Lordship would, at Times, talk to himself, grin, and use certain Gestures, proper only to Madmen—Now, as to this First Mark of Insanity, Was this frequently the Case with his Lordship?

Shirley. Very frequently.

Mr. Attorney General. Did he, at those Times, speak loud, or use any intelligible Language to himself?

Shirley. He did not.

Mr. Attorney General. Did he, at such Times, offer to commit any Mischief, or betray any Marks of Disorder, while in that Situation?

Shirley. I do not recollect any.

Mr. Attorney General. Then, as far as I can understand you, at those Times, his Behaviour in those Intervals was perfectly innocent.

Shirley. Yes.

Mr. Attorney General. At such Times have you ever entered into Discourse with him?

Shirley. No, I do not remember.

Mr. Attorney General. Did you never ask him a single Question when you have seen him walking backwards and forwards in the Way you mention?

Shirley. I don't remember I have.

Mr. Attorney General. Did you never hear him speak at such Times to other Persons?

Shirley. Not whilst he continued in those Attitudes?

Mr. Attorney General. I don't ask you whether he conversed the Time that he was mute, but within a Quarter or Half an Hour?

Shirley. I am not certain.

Mr. Attorney General. Your next Ground for supposing him to be insane was, That he was accustomed to be transported into Passions without any adequate Cause, were those the Words?

Shirley. Without any seeming Cause.

Mr. Attorney General. Was not adequate the Expression you used?

Shirley. Yes.

Mr. Attorney General. I should be glad to know whether you deem every Man that is transported with Anger, without an adequate Cause, to be a Madman?

Shirley. I deemed it as a Sign of Madness in him; but there were other Causes.

Mr. Attorney General. I ask you a general Question, and I do not expect a particular Answer. Whether you deem a Person that is transported with Fury without Reason, to be a Madman?

Shirley. I think a Person may be transported to Fury without an adequate Cause, that is no Madman.

Mr. Attorney General. Then please to recollect some particular Instance of this frantic Passion, and state it.

Shirley. I really cannot command my Memory so far.—I have not seen my Lord these Two Years, till the Time of this unhappy Confinement.

Mr. Attorney General. Then I am to understand you, that you cannot recollect one particular Instance.—Am I, or not?

Shirley. I cannot recollect any at this Time.

Mr. Attorney General. Then as to the Suspicion of Plots without any Foundation—Will you please to enumerate any of those?

Shirley. He never himself would give any particular Account of what he suspected, only that he did suspect that the Family was in some Combination against him; and when I have asked him, What it was that he meant? he would never give me a direct Answer to that Question.

Mr. Attorney General. Does that Kind of Behaviour, as you describe it, denote a Man out of his Senses?

Shirley. I thought so.—I was so fully possessed of that Opinion, that I declared to other People long ago, that I thought him a Madman.

Mr. Attorney General. Please to inform their Lordships, whether the unfortunate Earl lived well or ill with his Family?

Shirley. Indeed, he did not live in Friendship with his Family.

Mr. Attorney General. Were there not Disputes on both Sides?

Shirley.

Shirley. Yes there were, his younger Brothers and Sisters were under the unhappy Constraint of suing for their Fortunes.

Mr. Attorney General. Then please to inform their Lordships, whether, in Truth, there was not a Combination in the Family against him?—I do not mean a Criminal one?

Shirley. I am very certain that was not what my Lord alluded to.

Mr. Attorney General. If you are certain of that, you can inform their Lordships what it was that he alluded to?

Shirley. I will give a Reason why I am certain it was not that; because it appeared to be some secret Combination: That was a Thing publicly known.

Mr. Attorney General. How did you collect that the Combination was secret?

Shirley. By my Lord's manner of expressing himself.

Mr. Attorney General. Can you recollect the Phrase or the Words he used?

Shirley. I cannot.

Mr. Attorney General. In another Part of your Examination you was asked, whether the Earl could distinguish between Good and Evil; you said he could not distinguish them properly.—Was he at that Time less able to distinguish properly between Good and Evil than any other Man that is transported into a violent Passion?

Shirley. I never saw any Man so transported.

Mr. Attorney General. Did he express himself in insensible Words, so as that you could discover the State of his Mind; and that it was that of a Madman, and not a Man in Passion?

Shirley. I considered it as Madness.

Mr. Attorney General. Can you recollect any Expression, in any Fit of Passion that my Lord was in, that might not as well have come from the Mouth of any other passionate Man?

Shirley. Indeed I cannot.

Mr. Attorney General. You recollect an old Adage, Ira furor brevis est: Do you believe that his was such Madness as is there poetically described?

Shirley. I believe that it really proceeded from Madness.

Mr. Attorney General. Have you ever seen him so transported upon any other Occasion than that of Anger? Have you seen any Appearance of that Kind when he was cool and calm?

Shirley. I have seen him break into Passions without any seeming Cause.

Mr. Attorney General. You said you could not remember any Instance, when the Question was asked you; can you now?

Shirley. I remember once being at a hunting Seat at Quarendon in Leicestershire, as I chose to avoid the Bottle, I went up Stairs to the Ladies; Lady Ferrers, at that Time, lived with him; and, without any previous Quarrel, my Lord came up Stairs into the Room; and, after standing for some Time with his Back to the Fire, he broke out into the grossest Abuse of me, insulting me, and swearing at me; and I cannot to this Day or Hour conceive any Reason for it.

Mr. Attorney General. Had you never any Dispute or Quarrel with your Brother?

Shirley. Not at that Time.

Mr. Attorney General. Might not you have had some Quarrel a few Days before?

Shirley. No.

Mr. Attorney General. Are you confident of that?

Shirley. I am confident.

Mr. Attorney General. Had he no Suspicion at that Time of your interesting yourself with respect to my Lady Shirley?

Shirley. There was then no Quarrel existing.

Mr. Attorney General. Had there never been a Quarrel between my Lord and my Lady?

Shirley. I think not; it was soon after his Marriage.

Richard Phillips sworn.

Earl Ferrers. How long have you known me?

Phillips. About Eighteen Years.

Earl Ferrers. Are you a Tenant, or what Relation do you stand in to me?

Phillips. I am a Tenant to your Lordship.

Earl Ferrers. Did you ever see me mad?

Phillips. Your Lordship asked me one Day, whether I ever saw you mad? I said, I hoped not.

Earl Ferrers. How long ago is that?

Phillips. It may be Nine or Ten Years.

Earl Ferrers. Upon what Occasion was it that I asked you that Question; and what did I say further?

Phillips. Your Lordship said that you was a Madman, but could not help it; and when it was off you, you was sorry for it.

Earl Ferrers. Did I, at any Time, lament the Misfortune of my Family, in respect of Mad-ness?

Phillips. Your Lordship told me that it was in your Family.

Earl Ferrers. At the Time that you speak of, Ten or Eleven Years ago, was I upon a Visit at any Place that might make it necessary for me to caution People against my own Mad-ness, that they might not be affronted at my Behaviour?

Phillips. Your Lordship came then to live in the House where I live. I thought you spoke those Words in a Way to caution me, that I should not be surprized, in case you had such Fits.

Earl Ferrers. Did you hear Johnson the Deceased say that he thought me mad?

Phillips. I have.

Earl Ferrers. When was it?

Phillips. Some time ago.

Mr. Attorney General. My Lords, That is not Evidence, to speak of what he heard Mr. Johnson say.

Earl Ferrers. I thought, as the Evidence of Declarations of the Deceased was admitted against me, it would have been admitted for me.

Mr. Attorney General. My Lords, though the Declarations of the Deceased; whilst a dying Man, and after the Stroke is given, are to be admitted as legal Evidence; yet a Deposition of what he or any other Person said before the Accident, is clearly Hearsay Evidence, upon the same Foundation with all other Hearsay Evidence; and, with Submission to your Lordships, ought not to be admitted.

Mr. Attorney General. The Question is objected to by me; if my Noble Lord or his Council insist upon it, the next Step is to hear his Council upon the Objection; then we are to answer it, and they are to reply; and then it is for your Lordships Judgment.

Earl Ferrers. I waive the Question.

Gold Clarges, Esq; sworn.

Earl Ferrers. How long have you known me?

Clarges. From the Time of your Birth.

Earl Ferrers. Did you look upon me to be afflicted with any and what Distemper?

Clarges. Indeed I have looked upon your Lordship as a Lunatick for many Years.

Earl Ferrers. Has that Distemper increas'd of late Years, and how long?

Clarges. I think it has.

Earl Ferrers. How long?

Clarges. For these Two Years or more, ever since the unhappy Difference between my Lady and my Lord.

Earl Ferrers. Have you seen me in violent Fits of Lunacy?

Clarges. I cannot say I have; and the Reason that I have seen few extravagant Actions of his Lordship was this, as I look'd upon him to be disordered in his Mind, I avoided being in Company or having any Conversation with him as much as possible.

Earl Ferrers. Have you particularly remark'd that I am of a very jealous or suspicious Nature?

Clarges. That I have often.

Earl Ferrers. Has it been remarkably so in me more than in any other People?

Clarges. Much more so.

Earl Ferrers. Did you know any of my Relations being so afflicted?

Clarges. I remember Henry Earl Ferrers was.

Earl Ferrers. Had he a Commission taken out against him?

Clarges. He had.

Earl Ferrers. Was he after that restor'd to his Senses for any Time, so as to return to Parliament?

Clarges. He was; he return'd to Parliament about a Year and an Half, I believe, or thereabouts.

Earl Ferrers. What Relation was he to me?

Clarges. Uncle?

Earl Ferrers. Was his Return to Parliament after he had been confin'd for Lunacy?

Clarges. Yes.

Earl Ferrers. Had he, after that Year and an Half's being in Parliament, any Relapse?

Clarges. Yes.

Earl Ferrers. What became of him then?

Clarges.

Clarges. Another Commission was taken out, and he was confined to the Time of his Death?

Earl Ferrers. His being in Parliament a Year and a Half was after the first Commission issued against him?

Clarges. Yes.

Earl Ferrers. Do you know of any other of the Family being afflicted with that Distemper?

Clarges. I have heard, but do not know it?

Lord Ravensworth. Have you avoided being in Company with Lord Ferrers, or having any Thing to do with him, for some Time past?

Clarges. I did, as much as I could.

Lord Ravensworth. Please to inform their Lordships, whether you, at any Time previous to that, lived in any Degree of constant Correspondence and Intimacy with Lord Ferrers?

Clarges. Not much since he arrived to Manhood.

Lord Ravensworth. Whether, previous to his Arrival at Manhood, did you see a great deal of Lord Ferrers?

Clarges. A great deal, almost from his Cradle; for I being a Relation of his Family, was constantly with his Father and with him in the Country, and most Part of my Time I spent with them.

Lord Ravensworth. Whether in that Time, previous to his Manhood, did you observe any Thing in Lord Ferrers from his Behaviour, or any of his Department, that was particularly remarkable?

Clarges. I have.

Lord Ravensworth. You have known him during his Infancy and before his Manhood; Did you observe any thing remarkable constitutionally (if I may call it so), and singular in his Behaviour, during the Time you knew him?

Clarges. I have seen great Oddities in him beyond what I have seen in any other Man.

Lord Ravensworth. What Age was this present unfortunate Earl at the Time of the Death of his Father?

Clarges. I believe about Twenty-two or Twenty-three.

Lord Ravensworth. You say you was intimate with his Father; Had you at any Time any Conversation with the Father of the present Earl, relative to that which appeared to you to be singular in his Son?

Clarges. I cannot say I ever had.

Lord Ravensworth. Please to recollect, as far as possible, any Symptoms, be they of what Kind soever, that made you think Lord Ferrers so very singular in his Nature?

Clarges. I cannot specify any particular Thing.

Lord Ravensworth. You say that you have several Times seen that in my Lord, which made you think my Lord to be very singular?

Clarges. Yes.

Lord Ravensworth. Do you recollect any Thing?

Clarges. It is a great while ago; I cannot particularly specify any Thing.

Earl of Morton. This Witness has told your Lordships, that he has known the Noble Lord at the Bar from his Cradle—I desire he may be asked, if he ever observed any Defect of Understanding in the Noble Lord at the Bar?

Clarges. Not to my Knowledge; not whilst he was with me.

Earl of Morton. Upon no Occasion when you saw him?

Clarges. No, I cannot say I have.

Earl of Morton. Did you ever perceive the Noble Lord at the Bar so far deprived of his Senses, as not to know that Robbery or Murder was an Offence against the Law of God and Man?

Clarges. No, to be sure, my Lords; I cannot say that I ever did.

Peter Williams sworn.

Earl Ferrers. How long have you known me?

Williams. I have known your Lordship these Sixteen or Seventeen Years.

Earl Ferrers. Do you know of any Distemper that I am afflicted with?

Williams. Of late I have.

Earl Ferrers. What Distemper is that?

Williams. I have often observed your Lordship, when I have been in your Company, to be spitting in the Glass, and biting your Lips, and Stamping about the Room, which induced me to believe your Lordship was not in your right Senses; and further to convince me it was so, there was a Mare that your Lordship sent to me on the 17th January 1749, and remained with me to the the first of April following : One Day, being Sunday, your Lordship came to my House, about Four or Five in the Afternoon, with Two Servants; your Lordship arm'd with a Tuck stuck upon a Stick, the Two Servants with Guns and other offensive Weapons : Upon entering into the Yard, your Lordship jump'd off the Horse, and bid one of your Servants, you call'd Tom, knock the Padlock off the Stable Door.—He did so. My Wife hearing a Noise in the Yard, she came to know the Reason; and without any Ceremony your Lordship fell'd her to the Ground with your Fist : Upon my seeing this, I went into the Yard, and ask'd your Lordship what you meant by this Behaviour ?

Earl Ferrers. My Lords, I desire to stop this Witness; I only meant to ask him a general Question.

Earl Ferrers. Have you observed, that That which you call a Distemper in me has increased lately ?

Williams. Yes, in my Opinion I think it did : When your Lordship came to me, you, without any further Ceremony — — — (Stopp'd by Lord Ferrers).

Lord Ravensworth. My Lords, in Justice to myself and to your Lordships, I hope that the Witness may go on, tho' the Prisoner desires he may be stopp'd ?

Lord Mansfield. If any of your Lordships have any Questions to ask the Witness, you will do it : The Prisoner will ask him such as he thinks proper.

Earl Ferrers. Do you know of any Design in the Family to take out a Commission of Lunacy against me ?

Williams. I cannot say I do.

Earl Ferrers. Did you ever tell me that the Family wanted to prove me mad ?

Williams. I don't remember I did.

Earl Ferrers. Did you yourself consider me as a Madman ?

Williams. I considered your Lordship so at this Juncture, and many Times before.

Earl Ferrers. What Time did you mean by this Juncture ?

Williams. I mean the Juncture of his Lordships coming on Horseback with Guns and other offensive Weapons to take away the Mare.

Earl Ferrers. What Time was that ?

Williams. Sunday the 1st of April 1759; I mistook when I said 1749.

Earl Ferrers. Was it the general Reputation of the Country that I was mad ?

Williams. It was; I have heard several People say, where is the mad Lord that us'd to be at your House ?

Earl Ferrers. How long before this Accident, in regard to Mr. Johnson, was it, that my Lord came to your House arm'd in this manner ?

Williams. I believe it was about a Twelvemonth.

Earl Ferrers. You said it was 1749 before.

Williams. I meant 1759.

Elizabeth Williams sworn.

Earl Ferrers. How long have you known Lord Ferrers ?

Williams. A great many Years.

Earl Ferrers. Do you know of any Distemper that Lord Ferrers is afflicted with, and what is it ?

Williams. He never appeared like any other Gentleman.

Earl Ferrers. Wherein did he differ from other People in general ?

Williams. He always was amusing and talking to himself.—He spit in the Looking-glass, tore the Pictures, swearing he would break my Bureau open, and would break all the Glasses in my House, and would throttle me if I would not let him do it.

Earl Ferrers. Had he any particular Reason for this Conduct ?

Williams. None that I ever saw, but like a delirious Man.

Earl Ferrers. Did you keep a Public House ?

Williams. Yes.

Earl Ferrers. How near did you live to my Lord ?

Williams. My Lord was at my House, and boarded with me.

Earl Ferrers. Are you the Wife of the last Witness ?

Williams. Yes.

Earl Ferrers. Where did Lord Ferrers live, at the Time he behav'd in that odd manner you speak of ?

Williams. He had Lodgings at Muswell Hill.

Earl Ferrers. How far did you live from him.

Williams. Two Miles to the best of my Knowledge, he frequently us'd to come, I have made him Coffee and sent up a Dish, he always drank it out of the Spout, which surprized me, that I thought him delirious.

Earl Ferrers. How long ago is that?

Williams. I believe it is about Twelve Months ago to the best of my Knowledge.

Earl Ferrers. Have you often seen Lord Ferrers behave in that Manner?

Williams. I never saw him behave like any other Gentleman in my Life.

Earl Ferrers. Was the Coffee hot when he drank it out of the Spout?

Williams. Hot.—He always went about the Town like a Madman, throttled me and threw me down in the Yard, one Day when he took the Horse away.

Earl Ferrers. Did you think Lord Ferrers a Madman?

Williams. I know he was by all his Appearance.

Earl Ferrers. Was he generally thought so by other People?

Williams. By all the whole Town.

A Lord. When he threatened to break open your Bureau, and to use you ill if you did not let him do it, was he in Liquor?

Williams. Sober as I am now.

A Lord. Did you ever, upon any Occasion when he committed these Outrages, observe that he had been drinking?

Williams. Never; he never drank in a Morning but a little Tea or Coffee, or some Broth.

Earl Ferrers. Have you ever seen me commit any other Acts of Outrage besides those you have mentioned?

Williams. A great many more that are worse.

Earl Ferrers. Name them?

Williams. Swearing, cursing, and damning us; and wishing us all at Hell, and himself at Hell; and threatened to break the Glasses; and talk'd to himself for Hours together in Bed.

Earl Ferrers. Was he drunk or sober at those Times?

Williams. Very rarely; but he seem'd more to be disturb'd in his Mind.

Earl Ferrers. Mention the Circumstance about my coming for the Mare?

Williams. My Lord came for the Mare, it was at Church Time, and brought his Servants, and a Hammer in his Hand, and Guns, with a Tuck in his Hand, and broke the Stable Door open by Violence of Arms, and knock'd me down with his Arm, and run the Tuck into my Husband, fetch'd the Blood, I was obliged to have a Surgeon to attend him; and took the Mare away by Force of Arms, and if any-body came to hinder him, he said he would blow their Brains out. He always had Pistols, nobody knew of. I never saw any Gentleman that came to my House before, that had those Things about them. I us'd to like to take them out of the Bed-chamber, but was afraid to touch them, for fear of what he should do to me himself, by seeing his Mind so disturb'd.

Earl Ferrers. Were those Outrages committed when he was drunk or sober?

Williams. Sober for the general; and when he took the Mare away, as sober as he is now.

Earl of Hardwicke. Inform their Lordships, whether, before my Lord came in this Manner to get the Mare out of the Stable, he had before sent any Servant to demand the Mare, and had been refus'd?

Williams. Yes he had, the Boy was gone to Church. We always kept it under Lock, because there was more of his Lordship's Horses; and nobody was to go into the Stable but his Lordship's Ostler.

The Honourable Mr. Robert Shirley sworn.

Earl Ferrers. What Relation are you to me?

Shirley. Brother.

Earl Ferrers. When was the last Time that you and I had any Conversation together?

Shirley. Almost Four Years ago, between Three and Four Years.

Earl Ferrers. At that Time in what Light did you look upon me?

Shirley. Rather turn'd in your Head.

Earl Ferrers. Was there any Disorder in the Family? and what was that?

Shirley. Lord Henry Ferrers had Madness.

Earl Ferrers. Do you know Lady Barbara Shirley?

Shirley. I do not.

Earl Ferrers. Do you know of your own Knowledge any other besides Earl Henry that was a Lunatic?

Shirley. No.

Earl Ferrers. Have you any Reason to believe that I have been afflicted with the like Disorder?

Shirley. I have.

Earl Ferrers. Please to Name your Reasons?

Shirley. My Reasons are, that when I liv'd at Burton-upon-Trent, your Lordship came to my House with conceal'd Pistols in your Pockets, Pockets that were made on Purpose for that Use I apprehend; and that you likewise had a Snick-or-snee Knife, as it is call'd; and I apprehended myself and all the Family in great Danger at that Time; and I was obliged to shut the Doors against you; upon that I wrote to my Brother Captain Washington Shirley, that I apprehended you to be a Lunatic, and would join with him in taking out a Commission against you.

Earl Ferrers. Have you any other Reasons to believe me a Lunatic than my carrying Pistols?

Shirley. Yes.

Earl Ferrers. Name all your Reasons?

Shirley. Your Lordship has frequently ask'd my Opinion in relation to your Affairs, which I have told you to the best of my Capacity; but you was always so unsteady and jealous of me and your Friends, when we were endeavouring to serve you, that you would never venture to trust us in any Thing in which we could be of Service to you. I have likewise seen you in several strange Postures, walking about with great Confusion of Mind, and very often was absent for a considerable Time, when I have been asking you a Question I could hardly get an Answer from you.

Earl Ferrers. Was it usual for me to go arm'd?

Shirley. I believe for Four Years past, or very near, you have hardly ever gone without conceal'd Pistols about you.

Earl Ferrers. Did I use to go arm'd formerly when you knew me?

Shirley. I never knew that his Lordship went arm'd, till he came to my House at Burton-upon-Trent, which was the last Time I saw him.

Earl Ferrers. Do you know any Thing more?

Shirley. I have further to say, that my Father made a Settlement in 1741, which you subjected yourself to and acquiesced under for near Twenty Years; and then prefer'd a Bill, in order to set that Settlement aside; and, contrary to the Opinion of your Solicitor and Council, you still would insist upon doing it, and obliged me to put in an Answer for myself and my Son.

Earl Ferrers. Do you know of my being subject to Fits of violent Rage?

Shirley. I cannot say but I have.

Earl Ferrers. Did you ever see me so outrageous as not to know the Difference between Good and Evil?

Shirley. I really cannot particularize any Thing, 'tis so long ago; but upon Occasions I have seen you extremely passionate and warm, and so much so, that I believe you did not know what you did sometimes.

Earl Ferrers. Do you think that these violent Passions you speak of arose from constitutional Defects?

Shirley. I really believe so.

Earl Ferrers. If you have any Thing more to offer, mention it yourself; I have no more Questions to ask you.

Shirley. I have nothing more to offer.

Lord Cadogan. How long was it before this Accident, that you wrote to Captain Washington Shirley about taking out a Commission of Lunacy against my Lord?

Shirley. It is upwards of Two Years ago since I wrote to him.

Doctor John Monroe sworn.

Earl Ferrers. Did you know the late Earl Ferrers?

Monroe. I did.

Earl Ferrers. Did you know him in any and what Distemper?

Monroe. I attended him as a Physician when he was under the unhappy Influence of Lunacy.

Earl Ferrers. Have you heard all the Evidence that has been given in this Cause, on the Charge against Earl Ferrers, on both Sides?

Monroe. I have.

Earl Ferrers. You are desired to mention what are the usual Symptoms of Lunacy?

Monroe. Uncommon Fury, not caused by Liquor, but very frequently raised by it; many others there are which tend to Violence against other Persons or against themselves: I do not know a stronger,

stronger, a more constant, or a more unerring Symptom of Lunacy than Jealousy, or Suspicion without Cause or Grounds: There are many others too long to enumerate.

Earl Ferrers. Has the carrying of Arms been generally a Circumstance of Lunacy?

Monroe. I have known it to be so, but not generally.

Earl Ferrers. Please to inform their Lordships whether any and which of the Circumstances which have been proved by the Witnesses are Symptoms of Lunacy?

Mr. Attorney General. My Lords, if the Noble Lord means to insist upon that Question, I object to it.

Lord High Steward. Lord Ferrers, do you desire your Council to be heard upon that?

Earl Ferrers. I do.

Earl of Hardwicke. My Lords, this Question is too general, tending to ask the Doctor's Opinion upon the Result of the Evidence, and is very rightly objected to by the Council for the Crown: If the Noble Lord at the Bar will divide the Question, and ask whether this or that particular Fact is a Symptom of Lunacy, I dare say they will not object to it?

Mr. Attorney General. My Lords, I shall not.

Earl Ferrers. My Lords, I submit to have it go on in the Way recommended by Lord Hardwicke.

Earl Ferrers. Please to inform their Lordships, whether quarrelling with Friends without Cause is a Symptom of Lunacy?

Monroe. Very frequently one.

Earl Ferrers. Whether being naturally suspicious is a Symptom of Lunacy?

Monroe. Yes it is without Cause a constant one.

Earl Ferrers. Whether going arm'd where there is no Danger is a Symptom of Lunacy?

Monroe. That must be according to the Circumstances.

Earl Ferrers. Whether going generally arm'd where there is no apparent Danger is a Symptom of Lunacy?

Monroe. I should think it was.

Earl Ferrers. Whether spitting in the Looking-glass, clenching the Fist, and making Mouths is a Symptom of Lunacy?

Monroe. I have frequently seen such in Lunatic Persons.

Earl Ferrers. Whether walking in the Room, talking to himself, and making odd Gestures, are Symptoms of Lunacy?

Monroe. Very common ones.

Earl Ferrers. Is quarrelling without Cause a Symptom of Lunacy?

Monroe. It is a very frequent Attendant upon such unhappy Complaints, and they are generally malicious.

Earl Ferrers. Whether drinking Coffee hot out of the Spout of the Pot is a Symptom of Lunacy?

Monroe. I should think it one in the present Case; it is not a general one.

Earl Ferrers. Whether Lunatics, when they are angered with or without Cause, know what they are doing?

Monroe. Sometimes, as well as I do now.

Earl Ferrers. Is it common to have such a Disorder in Families in the Blood?

Monroe. Unfortunately too common?

Earl Ferrers. Whether Lunatics in their Intervals are conscious of their being Lunatics?

Monroe. They are conscious of it; many, both in and out of their Intervals; very few that are not.

Earl Ferrers. Whether Lunatics are apt to be seized with Fits of Rage on a sudden?

Monroe. Very often.

Earl Ferrers. Without any apparent Cause?

Monroe. Without any apparent Cause.

Earl Ferrers. Is there any other Way of discovering whether a Man is a Lunatic or not, but by the Irregularity of his Behaviour or his Pulse?

Monroe. By the Irregularity of his Behaviour; I know of no other Method; the Pulse discovers nothing in general.

A Lord. Please to inform their Lordships, whether a Person under an immediate Visitation from God of Madness, has not commonly a Fever?

Monroe. Seldom or never, unless it may be at the first Attack of the Distemper, or in some very violent Fit.

Roger Griffith sworn.

Earl Ferrers. How long have you known me?

Griffith. About Twelve Months.

Earl Ferrers. Did you know me when I lived at Muswell Hill?

Griffith. Yes, very well.

Earl Ferrers. When was that?

Griffith. It was about Twelve Months ago.

Earl Ferrers. At that Time was I generally reputed a Madman, or a Man in his Senses?

Griffith. Generally reputed a Lunatic; some said, crack'd in his Head.

Earl Ferrers. My Lords, I desire Leave to call Mr. Goostrey, to ask him a Question I forgot Yesterday.

Mr. Goostrey sworn again.

Earl Ferrers. Have you observ'd me remarkably jealous and suspicious, and for what?

Goostrey. Very remarkably so all the while I had the Honour to be concerned for him, and much more than any other Person. In the course of Time that I was concern'd for his Lordship, he has been at different Times——

Lord High Steward. You are not to go into a Detail.

Earl Ferrers. My Lords, I have done with my Evidence; but it is impossible for me to sum up, and what I have to offer to your Lordships I have reduced into Writing, and desire the Clerk may read it.

Lord High Steward. Is it of your Lordship's own Writing?

Earl Ferrers. My Lords, the Attorney got it copied.

Clerk reads.

My Lords,

IT is my Misfortune to be accused of a Crime of the most horrid Nature.

My Defence is, in general, that I am Not Guilty: The Fact of Homicide is proved against me by Witnesses, who, for ought I can say to the contrary, speak truly.

But if I know myself at this Time, I can truly affirm, I was ever incapable of it, knowingly; If I have done and said what has been alledg'd, I must have been depriv'd of my Senses.

I have been driven to the miserable Necessity of proving my own Want of Understanding; and am told, the Law will not allow me the Assistance of Council in this Case, in which, of all others, I should think it most wanted.

The more I stand in need of Assistance, the greater Reason I have to hope for it from your Lordships.

Witnesses have been call'd to prove my Insanity,—To prove an unhappy Disorder of Mind, and which I am griev'd to be under the Necessity of exposing.

If they have not directly prov'd me so Insane as not to know the Difference between a moral and an immoral Action, they have at least prov'd that I was liable to be driven and hurried into that unhappy Condition upon very slight Occasions.

Your Lordships will consider whether my Passion, Rage, Madness (or whatever it may be called), was the Effect of a weak or distemper'd Mind, or whether it arose from my own Wick- edness, or Inattention to my Duty.

If I could have controul'd my Rage, I am answerable for the Consequences of it.—But if I could not, and if it was the mere Effect of a distempered Brain, I am not answerable for the Consequences.

My Lords, I mention these Things as Hints—I need not, indeed I cannot, enlarge upon this Subject: Your Lordships will consider all Circumstances, and I am sure you will do me Justice.

If it be but a Matter of Doubt, your Lordships will run the Hazard of doing me Injustice if you find me Guilty.

My Lords, If my Insanity had been of my own seeking, as the sudden Effect of Drunkennes, I should be without Excuse. But it is proved, by the Witnesses for the Crown, that I was not in Laquer.

Mr. Kirkland, who drank and conversed with me, in order to betray me, (Mr. Attorney may commend his Caution, but not his Honesty) represents me as the most irrational of all Madmen, at the Time of my doing a Deed, which I reflect upon with the utmost Abhorrence.

The Council for the Crown will put your Lordships in Mind of every Circumstance against me, I must require of your Lordships' Justice, to recollect every Circumstance on the other Side.

My Life is in your Hands, and I have every Thing to hope, as my Conscience does not condemn me of the Crime I stand accused of; for I had no preconceived Malice; and was hurried into the Perpetration of this fatal Deed, by the Fury of a disordered Imagination.

To think of this, my Lords, is an Affliction, which can be aggravated only by the Necessity of making it my Defence.

May God Almighty direct your Judgments, and correct my own.

Earl Ferrers. My Lords, I will mention One Circumstance, which I did speak of Yesterday; it was said, that I knew of a Lease Johnson had, but it has never been proved; therefore, I imagine, that what I asserted, that I did not know of it, must be admitted as Truth.

Lord High Steward. Earl Ferrers, Hath your Lordship any thing further to offer?

Earl Ferrers. No.

Mr. Solicitor General.

My Lords,

IT is now my Duty, to lay before your Lordships some Observations, upon the Evidence offered both for the King and the Prisoner, in Reply to the Defence made against the Charge.

The Fact of killing Mr. Johnson (the Person named in the Indictment), is admitted as well as proved. The Noble Lord at the Bar only denies the Consequence; that the Fact is Murder. For, he tells your Lordships, that, upon considering all the Circumstances, he is satisfied, that he was incapable, knowingly, of doing what he did; and therefore insists upon an Incapacity and Infanity of Mind in his Defence.

My Lords, It is certainly true, that the Fact is not Murder without Malice; so natural Justice says; so the Law says, on which the Indictment is framed: And Malice must depend, in every Case, upon the Will and Understanding of the Party. If the Defence is founded in Truth; as the Noble Prisoner at the Bar has seen the Anxiety of your Lordships, to give it all due Weight, through the whole Course of his Trial; so now, in the Conclusion, he will receive from you, as his Judges, the full Benefit of that Defence in his Acquittal. If it is not founded in Truth, I am persuaded, that no other Consideration, respecting the Rank and Quality of the Noble Prisoner, and his Relation to your Lordships, will turn your Attention from the Evidence, nor make the least Impression upon the Firmness of your Justice.

Before I observe upon the Evidence, I will presume, with your Lordships Indulgence, to state to you the Legal Notion of that Defence, which has been urged and attempted in Proof.

My Lords, The Law of England, which is wisely adapted to punish Crimes with Severity, for the Protection of Mankind, and for the Honour of Government, provides, at the same Time, with the greatest Equity, for the Imbecillity and Imperfections of human Nature. Therefore, my Lord Chief Justice Hale (the Weight and Authority of whose Writings are known to your Lordships and to the whole Kingdom), explains the Law upon this Subject, at large, with his usual Clearness and Accuracy. It is, in his First Volume of the History of the Pleas of the Crown, (fol. 30), where he traces all the Distinctions, which the Nature of this Question admits, as it concerns the Trial of Criminals for Capital Offences. I will collect the Substance of what he says, and submit it to your Lordships, as founded not only in Law and Practice, but in the most unerring Rules of Reason and Justice.

My Lords, He begins with observing, that "There is 1st, A Partial Infanity of Mind, and " there is 2dly, A Total Infanity. 1st. Partial Infanity is, either in respect to Things, when " they, who are competent as to some Matters, are not so as to others; or else it is Partial, in " respect to the Degree. This is the Condition of many, especially of Melancholy Persons. As to " such, a Partial Infanity will not excuse them; for (he says) that Persons who are Felons of " themselves, and other Felons, are under a Degree of it, when they offend." It is difficult to draw the Line, which divides Perfect from Partial Infanity; and he refers it to the Discretion of the Judge and Jury, who must duly weigh and consider the Whole; "Lest on one Side, there be a Kind of Inhumanity towards the Defects of Human Nature; or, on the other Side, too much Indulgence " given to great Crimes." Then, my Lords, he speaks of the general Rule, which he would chuse to lay down, as the best Measure of his own Judgment; and it is, "That a Person, who has " ordinarily as great a Share of Understanding, as a Child of Fourteen Years of Age, is such a " Person, as may be guilty of Treason or Felony. 2dly, As to Total Infanity or Alienation of " Mind,

“ Mind, which is perfect Madness, this (Lord Hale agrees) will plainly excuse from the Guilt of Felony and Treason.”

But he distinguishes under the Head of Total Insanity, between “ that Species, which is fixed and permanent ; and Lunacy, which comes by Periods or Fits.”

Of this latter Kind he expresses himself thus : “ Crimes committed by Lunatics, in such their Distempers, are under the same Judgment, as those committed by Men partially insane. The Person, who is absolutely mad for a Day, killing a Man in that Distemper, is equally not Guilty, as if he were mad without Intermision. But such Persons, as have their lucid Intervals, have usually, in those Intervals at least, a competent Use of Reason ; and Crimes committed by them are of the same Nature, and punishable in the same Manner, as if they had no such Defect.”

My Lords, Afterwards, he treats of that Insanity, which arises from Drunkenness, and lays it down, that “ By the Law of England, such a Person shall have no Privilege from this voluntary contracted Madness, but shall have the same Judgment, as if he were in his right Senses ;” (unless it be occasioned by Medicine unskilfully administered, or Poison accidentally taken). Indeed, if, by such Practices, an habitual fixed Frenzy be caused, it puts the Man in the like Condition, with respect to Crimes, as if that Frenzy were at first involuntarily contracted.

My Lords, The Result of the whole Reasoning of this wise Judge and great Lawyer (so far as it is immediately relative to the present Purpose) stands thus. If there be a total permanent Want of Reason, it will acquit the Prisoner. If there be a total temporary Want of it, when the Offence was committed, it will acquit the Prisoner. But if there be only a partial Degree of Insanity, mixed with a partial Degree of Reason ; not a full and complete Use of Reason, but (as Lord Hale carefully and emphatically expresses himself) a competent Use of it, sufficient to have restrained those Passions, which produced the Crime ; if there be Thought and Design ; a Faculty to distinguish the Nature of Actions ; to discern the Difference between moral Good and Evil ; then, upon the Fact of the Offence proved, the Judgment of the Law must take place.

My Lords, The Question therefore must be asked ; Is the Noble Prisoner at the Bar to be acquitted from the Guilt of Murder, on account of Insanity ? It is not pretended to be a constant general Insanity. Was he under the Power of it, at the Time of the Offence committed ? Could he, did he, at that Time, distinguish between Good and Evil ?

The same Evidence, which establishes the Fact, proves, at the same Time, the Capacity and Intention of the Noble Prisoner. Did he weigh the Motives ? Did he proceed with Deliberation ? Did he know the Consequences ?

My Lords, He weighed the Motives. The Two Witnesses, who speak most strongly and materially to this Part of the Cause, as well as to every other, are, Sarah Johnson the Daughter of the Deceased, and Mr. Kirkland the Surgeon.

The Circumstances proved by their Evidence shew, that the Malice conceived, on this unfortunate Occasion, was steady, cool, and premeditated. Mr. Johnson had acted, for many Years, as Steward to collect the Rents of such Lands as Lord Ferrers had in Possession ; and he was himself Tenant of One of the Farms. At the Time of passing the Act of Parliament, Two Years ago, relative to the Noble Lord's Estate and Affairs, Mr. Johnson stood so well in his Opinion and Favour, as to be recommended by his Lordship to be Receiver, for the various Trusts and Purposes in the Act. Something passed on that Occasion, which disgusted the Noble Lord, and made him jealous, that Johnson had taken part against him. From that Moment, he entertained Resentment and Hatred in his Heart. More lately still, he took Offence against Johnson, as to a Contract for the Sale of Coals upon Part of the Estate, in which his Lordship thought (as he seems to be knowing and attentive in his private Business) that there had been some Collusion, to impose upon him.

My Lords, The first Instance of his Resentment appeared to you from the Evidence of Sarah Johnson, the Daughter : That, in the November preceding the killing of her Father, Lord Ferrers, accompanied by Mr. Clifford, delivered a Paper to Johnson, the Body of which was voluntarily admitted by my Lord to be of his own Hand-writing. It was a Notice to Johnson to quit the Farm which he rented, and Clifford was the intended Successor. This Step proceeded from Resentment, and it was so explained afterwards by himself to Kirkland, when he said, that he had long wanted to drive Johnson out of the Farm, and make him return to Cheshire, from whence he came. My Lords, It is very plain, that the Noble Lord took his Resolution—

Earl Ferrers. Mr. Solicitor, you mistake; the Notice was given a Twelvemonth ago last November ; it was not given in the last November.

Mr.

Mr. Solicitor General. My Lords, I am extremely obliged to the Noble Lord at the Bar, for setting me right in the least Circumstance; and hope that he will always do it, whenever I mistake. I mean to be as exact as I am able. My Lords, The View with which I mention the Notice to turn Johnson out of the Farm, is this. Lord Ferrers, in order to shew the Improbability of his conceiving Malice against Johnson, has relied upon it, that he was always known to entertain the greatest Regard and Friendship for that unfortunate Man. My Lords, I admit the Friendship and Kindness down to the Time of passing the Act of Parliament: And I said, that his Lordship had recommended Johnson to be Receiver. But soon after the passing of that Act, he certainly changed his Opinion. It is sufficient, therefore, that the Notice to quit the Farm (which was the first strong Mark of his Repentment proved in Evidence) was given, subsequent to the Proceedings of the Legislature. Whether the Notice was given last November, or in the Year preceding, the Observation, as applied to this Purpose, remains in its full Force.

My Lords, I was saying, that, it was plain, his Lordship gradually wrought himself up to a Resolution of destroying Mr. Johnson. The Daughter, Sarah Johnson, proves, that his Lordship declared, in her Hearing, when she went to Stanton, in the Evening of the 18th of January, to see her dying Father, that he designed it. He declared to Kirkland, that since the Year 1753, Johnson had been a Villain; that he had done Things not right; that his Lordship fully intended to shoot Johnson dead, as a Villain who deserved Death; and that it was premeditated. He complained farther to Kirkland, that Johnson had colluded with his Enemies to obtain the Act of Parliament; but added, that the chief Reason, which had just then provoked him, was, the Contract with Mr. Curzon, in relation to the Profits of his Coals. He upbraided Johnson that Evening, upon his Death-bed, in like Terms of Reproach. And though the Witnesses said, that his Lordship might then be raised with Liquor in some Degree, yet he did not lose his Understanding; and the Manner, in which he spoke, was temperate.

My Lords, Can there be a clearer Proof, that the Noble Prisoner weighed the Motives of this Action? Neither these, nor any other Motives, will justify it; but the Evidence shews, that his Conduct was not absurd, but rational and consistent. The same Crime has been committed in all Ages, upon Grounds as slight, by Men who never thought of setting up the Defence of Lunacy. Motives like those suggested, might easily and naturally work upon one, the Course of whose Life (as explained by the Witnesses), betrays so many Marks of ungoverned Passion; though the same Motives would not have inflamed Tempers, less susceptible of Violence than his own.

My Lords, He proceeded with equal Deliberation to commit the Fact. The Attention, Thought, and Care, with which he acted, are remarkable.

It appears, that he had appointed a particular Day for Mr. Johnson to wait upon him. Friday the 18th of January was fixed, by the Order of Lord Ferrers; and the Appointment was made some Days beforehand. Elizabeth Burgeland has told your Lordships, that Mr. Johnson was expected at Stanton in the Forenoon of that very Day. Sarah Johnson tells your Lordships, that she heard her Father declare, on the Sunday preceding, that he was to attend Lord Ferrers on Friday. Kirkland proves, that the Noble Prisoner himself said to the Witnesses at Stanton, that, upon Johnson's coming into the Room, they had a Conversation together; after the Door was locked, by way of warm and violent Expostulation on the Part of my Lord; and that he tendered a Paper to be signed by Johnson, acknowledging his Villainy. Elizabeth Saxon overheard Part of what was said. That Paper must have been the Result of Thought and Consideration, probably prepared before Johnson came. Your Lordships observed, with some Emotion, the Account given of the Impatience, with which Confessions of Villainy were expected, and almost extorted afterwards, from the dying Man.

My Lords, when the Wound was given, the Noble Lord at the Bar told Mr. Kirkland, that he was cool at the Time he did it: That he took Aim; but not having killed Johnson, he intended to shoot again: That, however, Nature got the better of Resolution, when he observed the Pain under which Johnson languished. It is proved, that in the Evening, whilst Kirkland and Lord Ferrers sat together in the Still Room, his Lordship declared, that he did not intend to shoot Johnson dead, but only to make him smart in the Hip and Side. This was taken Notice of by the Noble Prisoner, as a Variation in Kirkland's Account of the Intention with which Johnson was shot, inconsistent with what the Witness had said before. But, the Variation probably arose from my Lord's own Manner of discoursing during that Evening. The Observation, therefore, cannot affect the Credit of the Witness; and the Intention declared, of killing or wounding, will not vary the Construction of Law upon the Fact committed. Your Lordships heard too, what Lord Ferrers said in the Hearing of Sarah Johnson; that he had tried the Pistol through a Deal Board, and knew it to be good. He said the same Thing to Kirkland; expressing some Surprize (as the Witness understood it), that the Ball did not go through Johnson.

All these Circumstances shew, the Deliberation with which the Noble Prisoner proceeded.

My

My Lords, let me now ask, when the Motives had been weighed, and the Fact deliberately committed, Did he know the Consequences?

His first Thought was, instantly to send for the Assistance of a Surgeon, and to enquire, whether Johnson would live or die. The Daughter came early in the Afternoon. He said to her, that he was afraid of being prosecuted; adding, that if she would not prosecute him, he would maintain her, and her Family. Does not this Circumstance prove, that he readily understood the Consequences? that he knew himself bound to answer to the Law for his Offence? When Kirkland came, his Lordship tempted him with fair Promises, to prevent the Neighbours from seizing him. He told Kirkland, that a large Bill was owing to him; and my Lord said, that he would pay Part of it then, and the rest in a reasonable Time. In talking over the Circumstances (which he recollected clearly and calmly), he added, that he could justify himself; though, upon his Surrender to your Lordships, he was doubtful whether his Justification would be approved. From what Consciousness in his own Mind did that Doubt arise? He expressed his Fears, during the whole Evening, that he should be seized. He was quieted, in this respect, only by the Conversation of Kirkland, and the Manner of his Behaviour. Upon Kirkland's coming to Stanton, my Lord enquired much into the Probability of Johnson's dying. In the first Visit which my Lord and the Surgeon made to Johnson that Evening, his Lordship gave material Instructions; asked sensible and pertinent Questions, particularly as to the Place of the Wound, and the Effect of the Ball lying in the Abdomen. The Witnesses thought that Mr. Johnson would die, from the very Moment of his first Visit; but he told your Lordships, that he judged it right to deceive Lord Ferrers. The noble Prisoner was pleased to say, that the Caution of the Witnesses might be commended, but not his Honesty. My Lords, the Caution proceeded from Honesty: He was unwilling that his Lordship should escape. This was due to Civil Government, to Justice, and Humanity. To prevent Lord Ferrers from taking Alarm, and attempting to escape, Kirkland flattered him with Hopes of Johnson's Recovery, during the whole Evening; and his Lordship was told, that if the People should endeavour to seize him, the Witnesses would persuade them, that there was no Occasion for it. About Eleven o'Clock at Night, Mr. Kirkland went up again to Johnson: He still continued to amuse Lord Ferrers with Hopes of Johnson's Recovery; and, at taking Leave, when Kirkland gave him Assurances on that Subject, my Lord said, then he might go to Bed in Safety; and retired to his own Chamber. What do all these Circumstances speak, but a correct Knowledge of the Fact, and Apprehension of all its Consequences, either as they concerned Johnson, or himself? When he was seized, did he shew Marks of Insanity? He resisted, for some Time; but appeared, in every Respect, in the Judgment of the Witnesses, to be of sound Mind. Afterwards, when he was led into Kinsley's House, his Behaviour was decent; and he made Answer to a worthy Clergyman in the Commission of the Peace, who visited and admonished him, that he knew his Duty as well any Justice of the Peace.

This is the Substance of the Evidence, which has been offered for the King; and it not only proves the Fact, but proves it to be Murder.

My Lords, What is the Evidence produced by the Noble Lord to weaken the Force of it? In the First Place, there is none, which applies to the Time of committing the Fact. His Sobriety is admitted, and Drunkenness would not excuse; and even supposing it had appeared to your Lordships, that the Noble Prisoner was sometimes, by Fits and Starts, under a degree of Lunacy or temporary Insanity; yet, if he was of sound Mind at that Hour, he is a Person within all the Rules and Distinctions, which Lord Hale explains. But, my Lords, in the next Place, I must observe, that no general Evidence has been offered, which proves his Lunacy or Insanity at any time; for his own Witnesses fail in their Endeavours to shew it. This appears from their manner of expressing themselves in their original Examination; but still more in the Answers, which they gave to the Questions asked upon the Cross-Examination.

The Two first Witnesses called, were, Mr. Bennefold, and Mr. Goostrey. They describe the Insanity of the Noble Lord at the Bar to consist of Flights. They say, that he would swear; would talk to himself; that he would use strange Gestures; that he had Friends, and suspected them; that he was of a positive Temper, and difficult to be dissuaded from any Opinion or Resolution which he had once formed. But Mr. Bennefold, upon the Cross-Examination, admitted, that he never knew of any Act of Wildness done by his Lordship, nor of any Physician sent for, to take Care of him in that respect. He said, upon the whole, that he thought Lord Ferrers had better Parts and Understanding than ordinary Men. Mr. Goostrey told your Lordships, upon the Cross-Examination, that he had done Business several Years for Lord Ferrers; that he had advised and prepared Deeds for his Lordship to execute; that he had assisted in suffering a Recovery to bar the Entail of the Estate; and admitted his Sense and Capacity in general, but inferred Insanity from Positiveness of Temper and Opinion. However, in Answer to a Question proposed by one of your Lordships, he said, that he thought Lord Ferrers capable of distinguishing between moral and immoral Actions.

Several

Several other Witnesses have been called To-day. I will first mention Mr. Clarges. He describes similar Circumstances with Mr. Bennet and Mr. Goostrey, from which he collects the Insanity of the Noble Prisoner. He said, that he had observed great Oddities in my Lord, during his Minority, but no Defect of Understanding. He could not specify particular Instances; and added, that his Lordship was jealous and suspicious: But the Witness never saw him in such a Situation, as not to be capable of distinguishing between Good and Evil, and not to know, that Murder was a great Crime.

My Lords, This Account of the State of the Noble Prisoner's Mind is consistent, not only with a considerable Degree of Understanding, but with the highest Degree of it. If the Law were to receive such Excuses, it would put a Sword into the Hand of every savage and licentious Man, to disturb private Life, and public Order.

My Lords, There was another Witness of a different and a much lower Sort than those whom I have named; I mean Elizabeth Williams. She was the only Person who said, that the Noble Earl was always mad. When she came to explain the Instances from which she drew that Conclusion, the principal one insisted upon was ridiculous; the Anger which he shewed against a Servant, who had neglected to take Care of a favourite Mare, intrusted to his Management. This was a Vivacity so natural, that, if it be deemed a Symptom of Madness, few are free from it; and I doubt the Inference will go far in Cases of common Life.

The Two next Witnesses, whom I will mention, are the Brothers of the Noble Earl. My Lords, I own I felt for them. It gave me Pain to see them, in a Cause which touches a Brother's Life, brought to the Bar as Witnesses, to mitigate the Consequences of One Misfortune, by endeavouring to prove another of the most tender and affecting Nature; and if they had spoke stronger to Matters of Conjecture, Opinion, and Belief, for my Part, I could easily have excused them.

My Lords, They both spoke with Caution, and as Men of Honour; but One of them was the only Witness of Weight, who expressed a Belief, that, at particular Times, the Noble Lord might not be able to distinguish between moral Good and Evil. I did not observe, that he spoke of any Instance within his own Recollection. The Circumstances, from which these Gentlemen inferred Insanity, were for the most part of the same Kind with those which came from the Mouths of the other Witnesses. They did not carry the Marks of it in the least Degree beyond that Evidence. And Mr. Walter Shirley admitted, That the Noble Lord at the Bar had long Intervals of Reason. I endeavour to repeat the Expression, and I think it was so. Mr. Robert Shirley told your Lordships, That he had not seen the Noble Prisoner for Four Years past; that the last Time of seeing Lord Ferrers was, at Burton upon Trent. He mentioned the carrying of Pistols, and Arms, and a large Case Knife, at that time. I understood him to say, that the Noble Lord generally did so; the Witness had seen it only once; but from that Circumstance he argued Insanity. Your Lordships will judge, whether this Practice might not be owing to Jealousy and Violence of Temper, as well as to Lunacy and Madness. The Witness added, That he had written formerly to his Brother Captain Washington Shirley, about taking out a Commission of Lunacy against Lord Ferrers; but I could not find, that any Measures were taken in Consequence of that Opinion given by the Witness, nor did he himself ever take any Steps towards it, nor any Branch of his Family.

The last Witness called, on Behalf of the Noble Prisoner, was Doctor Monro. He was brought here to describe, what Symptoms he considers as Marks of Lunacy or Insanity. He said, that there were many; and on being asked particularly, as to the several Symptoms suggested in this Cause, Doctor Monro was led to speak principally of Three Marks of Lunacy. The First was uncommon Fury, not caused by Liquor, but raised by it. Surely this Circumstance will not infer Insanity. The Next was, Jealousy and Suspicion, with causeless Quarrelling. Do not many, who are not Lunatics, suspect or quarrel without Cause, and become dangerous to their Neighbours? The Third was, carrying Arms; which (he said) though less usual, might be a Mark of Lunacy. And it is equally true, that such Behaviour may prove, in many Cases, a bad Heart and a vicious Mind, as well as Lunacy. My Lords, the general Observation, which occurs upon Doctor Monro's Evidence, is this; that he did not describe any of these Things, as absolute Marks of Lunacy, so as to denote every Man a Lunatick, who was subject to them. Indeed he could not have said it, consistently with Common Sense and Experience.

This was the Import of the Evidence for the Noble Prisoner. No Witnesses were offered, on the Part of the King, in Reply to that Evidence. And, my Lords, the Reason, why they were not offered, was, because the Council who attend your Lordships for the King, chuse to submit it to your Opinions, whether the Evidence produced for the Prisoner does not tend to strengthen, rather than weaken, that Proof of Capacity, which arises out of all the Circumstances urged, in Support of the Charge? From those Circumstances, I have already shewn, that the Noble Prisoner was conscious of what he did, at the Time of the Offence committed; that he weighed the Motives; that he acted with Deliberation; that he knew the Consequences.

I will only take Notice of one Thing more. Your Lordships have attended with great Patience, and the most impartial Regard to Justice, to all the Evidence, and every Observation, which has been laid before you. You have seen the Noble Prisoner, for Two Days at your Bar, (though labouring under the Weight of this Charge), Cross-examining the Witnesses for the King, and Examining his own, in a Manner so pertinent, as cannot be imputed merely to the Hints and Advice of those Agents and Council, with which you have indulged him. I am persuaded, from the Appearance and Conduct of the Noble Prisoner, that if the Fact itself would have admitted Doubts, and probable Arguments, to repel the Force of any One material Circumstance, your Lordships would have heard him press those Arguments, with Sense and Sagacity.

But, my Lords, The Truth is, That the Fact tried this Day stands, without Alleviation. There is not a Colour for the Defence, unless it arises from the Enormity of the Crime, aggravated by the Manner of committing it; an old, faithful Servant of himself and his Family, murdered in cold Blood, whilst he was performing, by express Orders, an Act of dutiful Attendance upon his Master; murdered, in the most deliberate and wilful Manner, destructive of all Confidence in human Society. My Lords, in some Sense, every Crime proceeds from Insanity. All Cruelty, all Brutality, all Revenge, all Injustice, is Insanity. There were Philosophers, in antient Times, who held this Opinion, as a strict Maxim of their Sect; and, my Lords, the Opinion is right in Philosophy, but dangerous in Judicature. It may have a useful and a noble Influence, to regulate the Conduct of Men; to controul their impotent Passions; to teach them, that Virtue is the Perfection of Reason, as Reason itself is the Perfection of human Nature; but not to extenuate Crimes, nor to excuse those Punishments, which the Law adjudges to be their Due.

My Lords, The Necessity of his Majesty's Justice; the Necessity of public Example, called for this Prosecution; and the Effect of the whole Evidence, is submitted to the Weight and Wisdom of your Judgment.

Then the Lord High Steward returned back to his Chair.

Lord High Steward. Lieutenant of the Tower, Take my Lord Ferrers from the Bar.

Which was done accordingly.

Lord Privy Seal. My Lords, I move your Lordships to adjourn to the Chamber of Parliament.

Lords. Ay, Ay.

Lord High Steward. This House is adjourned to the Chamber of Parliament.

The Lords, and others, returned to the Chamber of Parliament, in the same Order they came down: And, after some Time, the House was adjourned again into Westminster-Hall; and the Peers being there seated, and the Lord High Steward in his Chair, and the House resumed, the Serjeant at Arms made Proclamation for Silence, as usual.

Lord High Steward. Your Lordships have heard the Evidence, and every thing that has been alledged on both Sides; and the Solemnity of your Proceedings requires, that your Lordships Opinions on the Question, Of Guilty or Not guilty, should be delivered severally, in the Absence of the Prisoner, beginning with the junior Baron; and that the Prisoner should afterwards be acquainted with the Result of those Opinions by me. Is it your Lordships Pleasure to proceed now to give your Opinions on the Question, Of Guilty or Not guilty?

Lords. Ay, Ay.

Then the Lord High Steward stood up uncovered; and, beginning with the youngest Peer, said,

George Lord Lyttelton, What says your Lordship? Is Lawrence Earl Ferrers Guilty of the Felony and Murder whereof he stands indicted, or Not guilty?

Whereupon George Lord Lyttelton, standing up in his Place, uncovered, and laying his Right Hand upon his Breast, answered, Guilty, upon my Honour.

In like manner, the several Lords after-mentioned, being all that were present, answered as followeth;

Richard Earl Temple, Lord Privy Seal. Guilty, upon my Honour.

Then the Lord High Steward, standing uncovered at the Chair, laying his Hand upon his Breast, said;

Lord High Steward. My Lords, I am of Opinion, that Lawrence Earl Ferrers is Guilty of the Felony and Murder whereof he stands indicted, upon my Honour.

Lord High Steward. Your Lordships have unanimously found, that Lawrence Earl Ferrers is Guilty of the Felony and Murder whereof he stands indicted: Is it your Lordships Pleasure that he should be called in, and acquainted therewith?

Lords. Ay, Ay.

Proclamation was then made for the Lieutenant of the Tower to bring the Prisoner to the Bar, which was done in the same Order as before; and afterwards Proclamation was made for Silence, as usual.

Lord High Steward. Lawrence Earl Ferrers, The Lords have considered of the Charge of Felony and Murder which has been brought against you; they have likewise considered the Evidence, and every thing which your Lordship has alledged in your Defence; and, upon the whole Matter, their Lordships have unanimously found, that you are Guilty of the Felony and Murder whereof you stand indicted.

Lord High Steward. Lieutenant of the Tower, take the Prisoner from the Bar.

Lord Privy Seal. My Lords, I move your Lordships to adjourn to the Chamber of Parliament.

Lord High Steward. Is it your Lordships Pleasure to adjourn to the Chamber of Parliament?

Lords. Ay, Ay.

Lord High Steward. This House is adjourned to the Chamber of Parliament.

Then the Lords returned, in the Order beforementioned, to the Chamber of Parliament; and, the House being there resumed, Resolved to proceed further, in order to the giving Judgment against the said Earl Ferrers To-morrow; and that the said Earl be brought to the Bar of the House in Westminster-Hall, for that Purpose, To-morrow at Eleven of the Clock in the Forenoon.

Friday, April 18th, 1760. The Third Day.

THE Lords, and others, came from the Chamber of Parliament into Westminster-Hall, in the same Order as on Wednesday last; and the Peers were there seated, and the Lord High Steward in his Chair.

Lord High Steward. My Lords, The House is resumed. Is it your Lordships Pleasure, that the Judges may be covered?

Lords. Ay, Ay.

Then the Serjeant at Arms made Proclamation for Silence, as usual; and afterwards the following Proclamation.

Serjeant at Arms. Oyez, Oyez, Oyez! Lieutenant of the Tower, bring forth your Prisoner, Lawrence Earl Ferrers to the Bar, pursuant to the Order of the House of Lords.

The Deputy Governor of the Tower brought the Prisoner to the Bar in the like Form as before; and then he kneeled down.

Lord High Steward. Your Lordship may rise.

The Serjeant at Arms made Proclamation for Silence as usual.

Lord High Steward. Lawrence Earl Ferrers, when you was last at this Bar, I acquainted your Lordship, That, upon your Trial, my Lords your Peers had unanimously found you Guilty of the Felony and Murder whereof you stand indicted: What has your Lordship to say, Why Judgment of Death should not pass upon you according to Law?

Earl Ferrers. I desire that the Clerk may repeat what I say—Which he did.

My Lords,

I Must acknowlege myself infinitely obliged for the fair and candid Trial your Lordships have indulged me with.

I am extremely sorry that I have troubled your Lordships with a Defence that I was always much averse to, and has given me the greatest Uneasiness; but was prevailed on by my Family to attempt it, as it was what they themselves were persuaded of the Truth of; and had proposed to prove me under the unhappy Circumstances that have been ineffectually represented to your Lordships.

This Defence has put me off from what I proposed, and what perhaps might have taken off the Malignity of the Accusation; but, as there has been no Proof made to your Lordships, can only be deemed at this Time my own Assertion: But that I must leave to your Lordships.

My Lords, I have been informed of this Intention of the Family before ; and your Lordships I hope, will be so good to consider, the Agony of Mind a Man must be under, when his Liberty and Property are both attacked: My Lords, under these unhappy Circumstances, though the Plea I have attempted was not sufficient to acquit me to your Lordships, according to the Laws of this Country ; yet I hope your Lordships will think, that Malice, represented by the Council for the Crown, could not subsist ; as I was so unhappy as to have no Person present at the Time of the fatal Accident, it was impossible for me to shew your Lordships, that I was not at that Instant possessed of my Reason.

As the Circumstances of my Case are fresh in your Lordships Memories, I hope your Lordships will, in Compassion to my Infirmities, be kind enough to recommend me to his Majesty's Clemency.

My Lords, As I am uncertain whether my unhappy Case is within the late Act of Parliament, if your Lordships should be of Opinion that it is, I humbly hope the Power of respiting the Execution will be extended in my Favour, that I may have an Opportunity of preparing myself for the great Event, and that my Friends may be permitted to have Access to me.

If any Thing I have offered should be thought improper, I hope your Lordships will impute it to the great Distress I am under at this Juncture.

Lord High Steward. Has your Lordship any Thing else to offer ?

Earl Ferrers. No.

Lord High Steward. Make Proclamation for Silence whilst Judgment is giving.

Serjeant at Arms. Oyez, Oyez, Oyez! Our Sovereign Lord the King doth strictly charge and command all manner of Persons to keep Silence, whilst Judgment is giving, upon Pain of Imprisonment.

Lord High Steward.

Lawrence Earl Ferrers,

HIS Majesty, from his Royal and Equal Regard to Justice, and his steady Attention to our Constitution, (which hath endeared him in a wonderful Manner to the universal Duty and Affection of his Subjects) hath commanded this Inquiry to be made, upon the Blood of a very ordinary Subject, against your Lordship, a Peer of this Realm: Your Lordship hath been arraigned; hath pleaded, and put yourself on your Peers; and they (whose Judicature is founded and subsists in Wisdom, Honour, and Justice) have found your Lordship unanimously Guilty of the Felony and Murder charged in the Indictment.

It is usual, my Lord, for Courts of Justice, before they pronounce the dreadful Sentence ordained by the Law, to open to the Prisoner the Nature of the Crime of which he is convicted; not in order to aggravate or afflict, but to awaken the Mind to a due Attention to, and Consideration of, the unhappy Situation into which he hath brought himself.

My Lord, The Crime of which your Lordship is found Guilty, Murder, is incapable of Aggravation; and it is impossible, but that, during your Lordship's long Confinement, you must have reflected upon it, represented to your Mind in its deepest Shades, and with all its Train of dismal and detestable Consequences.

As your Lordship hath received no Benefit, so you can derive no Consolation from that Refuge you seemed almost ashamed to take, under a pretended Insanity; since it hath appeared to us all, from your Cross-examination of the King's Witnesses, that you recollected the minutest Circumstances of Facts and Conversations, to which you and the Witnesses only could be privy, with the Exactness of a Memory more than ordinarily found; It is therefore as unnecessary as it would be painful to me, to dwell longer on a Subject so black and dreadful.

It is with much more Satisfaction, that I can remind your Lordship, that though, from the present Tribunal, before which you now stand, you can receive nothing but strict and equal Justice; yet you are soon to appear before an Almighty Judge, whose unfathomable Wisdom is able, by Means incomprehensible to our narrow Capacities, to reconcile Justice with Mercy; but your Lordship's Education must have informed you, and you are now to remember, such Beneficence is only to be obtained by deep Contrition, sound, unfeigned, and substantial Repentance.

Confined strictly, as your Lordship must be, for the very short Remainder of your Life; according to the Provision of the late Act; yet, from the Wisdom of the Legislature, which, to prevent as much as possible this heinous and horrid Offence of Murder, hath added Infamy to Death: You will be still, if you please, intitled to converse and communicate with the ablest Divines of the Protestant Church, to whose pious Care and Consolation, in fervent Prayer and Devotion, I most cordially recommend your Lordship.

Nothing

Nothing remains for me, but to pronounce the dreadful Sentence of the Law ; and the Judgment of the Law is, and this High Court doth award ;

“ That You, Lawrence Earl Ferrers, return to the Prison of the Tower, from whence you came ; from thence you must be led to the Place of Execution, on Monday next, being the 21st Day of this Instant April ; and when you come there, you must be hanged by the Neck till you are dead, and your Body must be dissected and anatomized.”

“ And God Almighty be merciful to your Soul.”

Lord High Steward. Lieutenant of the Tower, Take the Prisoner from the Bar. Which being done, Proclamation was made for Silence, as usual.

Lord High Steward. My Lords, This Trial being at an End, nothing remains to be done here, but to determine the Commission.

Lords. Ay, Ay.

Lord High Steward. Let Proclamation be made for dissolving the Commission of High Steward.

Serjeant at Arms. Oyez, Oyez, Oyez ! Our Sovereign Lord the King does strictly charge and command all manner of Persons here present, and that have here attended, to depart hence in the Peace of God, and of our said Sovereign Lord the King ; for his Grace my Lord High Steward of Great-Britain intends now to dissolve his Commission.

Then the White Staff being delivered to the Lord High Steward, by the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, upon his Knee, his Grace stood up uncovered ; and, holding the Staff in both his Hands, broke it in two, and declared the Commission to be dissolved ; and then leaving the Chair, came down to the Woolpack, and said, Is it your Lordships Pleasure to adjourn to the Chamber of Parliament ?

Lords. Ay, Ay.

Lord High Steward. This House is adjourned to the Chamber of Parliament.

Then the Lords and others returned in the same Order they came down.

And the Prisoner was carried back to the Tower of London.

WESTMINSTER-HALL, in Full PARLIAMENT.

Tuesday, April the 16th, 1765.

In the Court erected in WESTMINSTER-HALL, for the TRIAL of WILLIAM Lord BYRON, for the Murder of WILLIAM CHAWORTH, Esquire.

A BOUT Eleven of the Clock the Lords came from their own House into the Court erected in Westminster-Hall, for the Trial of William Lord Byron, in the Manner following :

- The Lord High Steward's Gentlemen Attendants, Two and Two.
- The Clerks Assitant to the House of Lords, and the Clerk of the Parliament.
- Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, bearing the King's Commission to the Lord High Steward, and the Clerk of the Crown in the King's Bench.
- The Masters in Chancery, Two and Two.
- The Judges, Two and Two.
- The Peers eldest Sons, Two and Two.
- Peers Minors, Two and Two.
- Chester* and Somerset Heralds.
- Four Serjeants at Arms with their Maces, Two and Two.

The Yeoman Usher of the House.
 The Barons, Two and Two, beginning with the youngest Baron.
 The Bishops, Two and Two.
 The Viscounts and other Peers, Two and Two.
 The Lord Privy Seal and Lord President.
 The Archbishop of York and the Archbishop of Canterbury.
 Four Serjeants at Arms with their Maces, Two and Two.
 The Serjeant at Arms attending the Great Seal, and Purse-Bearer.
 Then Garter King at Arms, and the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod carrying the White Staff before the Lord High Steward.
Robert Earl of Northington, Chancellor of Great-Britain, Lord High Steward, alone, his Train borne.
 His Royal Highness the Duke of Glocester, his Train borne.
 His Royal Highness the Duke of York, his Train borne.
 The Lords being placed in their proper Seats, and the Lord High Steward upon the Woolpack, the House was resumed.

The Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, having his Majesty's Commission to the Lord High Steward in his Hand, and the Clerk of the Crown in the King's Bench, standing before the Clerk's Table with their Faces towards the State, made Three Reverences; the First at the Table, the Second in the Midway, and the Third near the Woolpack; then kneeled down; and the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, on his Knee, presented the Commission to the Lord High Steward, who delivered the same to the Clerk of the Crown in the King's Bench to read: Then rising, they made Three Reverences, and returned to the Table. And then Proclamation was made for Silence, in this Manner:

Serjeant at Arms. Oyez, Oyez, Oyez! Our Sovereign Lord the King strictly charges and commands all Manner of Persons to keep Silence, upon Pain of Imprisonment.

Then the Lord High Steward stood up, and spoke to the Peers.

Lord High Steward. His Majesty's Commission is about to be read: Your Lordships are desired to attend to it in the usual Manner; and all others are likewise to stand up uncovered, while the Commission is reading.

All the Peers uncovered themselves; and they, and all others, stood up uncovered, while the Commission was read.

GEORGE R.

GEOERGE the Third, by the Grace of God, of Great Britain, France, and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, and so forth, To Our Right Trusty and Right Well-beloved Cousin and Counsellor Robert Earl of Northington, Our Chancellor of Great Britain, Greeting; Know ye, That whereas William Byron, Baron Byron of Rochdale, late of the Parish of Saint James, within the Liberty of Westminster, in Our County of Middlesex, in Our Court at Westminster, in the said County of Middlesex, before Our Justices assigned to hold Pleas before Us, stands indicted upon the Oath of Twelve Jurors, good and lawful Men of the said County of Middlesex, then and there sworn and charged to enquire for Us for the Body of the said County, of Felony and Murder, by him the said William Byron, Baron Byron of Rochdale, done and committed; We, considering that Justice is an excellent Virtue, and pleasing to the Most High; and being willing that the said William Byron, Baron Byron of Rochdale, of and for the Felony and Murder whereof he is indicted as aforesaid before Us, in Our present Parliament, according to the Law and Custom of Our Kingdom of Great Britain, may be heard, examined, sentenced, and adjudged; and that all other Things which are necessary on this Occasion may be duly exercised and executed; and for that the Office of High Steward of Great Britain (whose Presence upon this Occasion is required) is now vacant (as We are informed); We, very much confiding in your Fidelity, Prudence, provident Circumspection, and Industry, have, for this Cause, ordained and constituted you Steward of Great Britain, to bear, execute, and exercise, for this Time, the said Office, with all Things due and belonging to the same Office in this Behalf: And therefore We command you, that you diligently set about the Premises, and, for this Time, do exercise and execute, with Effect, all those Things which belong to the Office of Steward of Great Britain, and which are required in this Behalf. In Witness whereof, We have caused these our Letters to be made Patent. Witness Ourselves at Westminster, the Fifteenth Day of April, in the Fifth Year of Our Reign.

By the KING Himself, signed with his own Hand.

Yorke and Yorke.
 Serjeants

Serjeant at Arms. God save the King.

Then Garter, and the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, after Three Reverences, kneeling, jointly presented the White Staff to his Grace the Lord High Steward: And then his Grace, attended by Garter, Black Rod, and the Purse Bearer (making his proper Reverences towards the Throne) removed from the Woolpack to an armed Chair, which was placed on the uppermost Step but one of the Throne, as it was prepared for that Purpose; and then seated himself in the Chair, and delivered the Staff to the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod on his Right Hand, the Purse-Bearer holding the Purse on his Left.

Clerk of the Crown. Serjeant at Arms, make Proclamation.

Serjeant at Arms. Oyez, Oyez, Oyez! Our Sovereign Lord the King strictly charges and commands all Manner of Persons to keep Silence, upon Pain of Imprisonment.

Then the Clerk of the Crown, by Direction of the Lord High Steward, read the Certiorari, and the Return thereof, together with the Caption of the Indictment, and the Indictment certified thereupon, against William Lord Byron; in hæc verba:

GEORGE the Third, by the Grace of God, of Great Britain, France, and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, and so forth, To Our Right Trusty and Wellbeloved William Lord Mansfield, Our Chief Justice appointed to hold Pleas before Us, Greeting; We being willing, for certain Reasons, that all and singular Indictments of whatsoever Felonies and Murders whereof William Byron, Baron Byron of Rochdale, late of the Parish of Saint James, within the Liberty of Westminster, in Our County of Middlesex, is indicted before you (as is said) be determined before Us, and not elsewhere; do command you, that you do send under your Seal before Us, in Our Parliament, immediately after the Receipt of this Our Writ, all and singular the Indictments aforesaid, with all Things touching the same, by whatsoever Name the said William Byron, Baron Byron of Rochdale, is called in the same; together with this Writ, that We may cause further to be done thereon, what of Right and according to the Law and Custom of England We shall see fit to be done. Witness Ourselves at Westminster, the Twenty-eighth Day of February, in the Fifth Year of Our Reign.

Yorke and Yorke.

Label. To the Right Honourable William Lord Mansfield, Chief Justice appointed to hold Pleas before the King himself, a Writ of Certiorari, to certify into the Upper House of Parliament the Indictment found against William Byron, Baron Byron of Rochdale, for Murder, returnable immediately before the King in Parliament.

Yorke and Yorke.

Indorsed. } BY Order of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, in Parliament assembled, by virtue of the within Writ to me directed, I send to our Sovereign Lord the King, in this present Parliament, under my Seal, the Indictment within mentioned, with all Things touching the same, in certain Schedules hereunto annexed, as I am within commanded.

BURROW.

Middlesex. } THE Jurors for our Lord the King, upon their Oath, present, That the Right Honourable William Byron, Baron Byron of Rochdale, late of the Parish of Saint James, within the Liberty of Westminster, in the County of Middlesex, not having the Fear of God before his Eyes, but being moved and seduced by the Instigation of the Devil, on the Twenty-sixth Day of January, in the Fifth Year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord George the Third, by the Grace of God, of Great Britain, France, and Ire- land, King, Defender of the Faith, and so forth, with Force and Arms, at the Parish aforesaid, in the County afore said, in and upon one William Chaworth, Esquire, in the Peace of God, and our said Lord the King, then and there being, feloniously, wilfully, and of his Malice aforethought, did make an Assault, and that the said William Lord Byron, with a certain Sword drawn, made of Iron and Steel, of the Value of Five Shillings, which he the said
William Lord Byron, in his Right Hand, then and there had and held, him the said William Chaworth, in and upon the Left Side of the Belly of the said William Chaworth, near the Navel of the said William Chaworth, then and there feloniously, wilfully, and of his Malice aforethought, did strike, thrust, stab, and penetrate, giving to the said William Chaworth, with the Sword drawn as afore said, in and upon the said Left Side of the Belly of the said William Chaworth, near the Navel of the said William Chaworth, One mortal Wound, of the Depth of Six Inches and of the Breadth of Half an Inch; of which said mortal Wound the said Wil- liam Chaworth, at the said Parish of Saint James, within the Liberty of Westminster, in the said County of Middlesex, and also at the Parish of Saint George, Hanover Square, within the Liberty of Westminster afore said, in the same County, from the said Twenty-sixth Day of January, in the Year afore said, until the Twenty-seventh Day of the same Month, in the same Year, did languish, and languishing did live; on which said Twenty-seventh Day of January, in the Year afore said, the said William Chaworth, at the said Parish of Saint George, Hanover Square, in the Liberty of Westminster afore said, in the said County of Middlesex, of the said mortal Wound did die: And so the Jurors afore said, upon their Oath afore said, do say, That the said William Lord Byron, him the said William Chaworth, in Manner and Form afore said, feloniously, wilfully, and of his Malice aforethought, did kill and murder, against the Peace of our said Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity.

Sworn in Court.

A true Bill.

Lord High Steward. Is it your Lordships Pleasure, that the Judges have Leave to be covered?

Lords. Ay, ay.

Clerk of the Crown. Serjeant at Arms, make Proclamation for the Lieutenant of the Tower to bring his Prisoner to the Bar.

Serjeant at Arms. Oyez, Oyez, Oyez! Lieutenant of the Tower of London, bring forth William Lord Byron, your Prisoner, to the Bar, pursuant to the Order of the House of Lords.

Then William Lord Byron was brought to the Bar by the Deputy Governor of the Tower, having the Ax carried before him by the Gentleman-Gaoler, who stood with it on the Left Hand of the Prisoner, with the Edge turned from him. The Prisoner, when he approached the Bar, made Three Reverences, and then fell upon his Knees at the Bar.

Lord High Steward. Your Lordship may rise.

Then

Then the Prisoner rose up, and bowed to his Grace the Lord High Steward, and to the House of Peers; which Compliment was returned him by his Grace, and the Lords.

Then, Proclamation having been again made for Silence, the Lord High Steward spake to the Prisoner, as follows.

Lord High Steward.

William Lord Byron,

YOUR Lordship is unhappily brought to this Bar to answer a heavy and dreadful Accusation, for you are charged with the Murder of a Fellow Subject.

The Solemnity and awful Appearance of this Judicature, must naturally embarrass and discompose your Lordship's Spirits, whatever internal Resource you may have in Conscience to support you in your Defence.

It may be therefore not improper for me to remind your Lordship, that you are to be tried by the fixed and settled Laws of a free Country, framed only to protect the Innocent, to distinguish the Degrees of Offence, and vindictive only against Malice and premeditated Mischiefs.

Homicide, or the Killing of a Fellow Creature, is by the Wisdom of the Law distinguished into Classes; if it by Accident ariseth from Necessity, or is without Malice, it is not Murder, and of these Distinctions, warranted by Evidence, every Person, though accused by a Grand Jury, standing indifferent, is at full Liberty to avail himself.

As an additional Consolation your Lordship will reflect that you have the Happiness to be tried by the supreme Judicature of this Nation; that you can receive nothing from your Peers but Justice, distributed with Candor; delivered too under the strongest Obligation upon noble Minds, Honor. These Considerations will, I hope, compose your Lordship's Mind, fortify your Spirits, and leave you free for your Defence.

Before I conclude, I am, by Command of the House, to inform your Lordship, and all others that shall have Occasion to speak to the Court during the Trial, that they are to address themselves to the Lords in general, and not to any Lord in particular.

Lord High Steward. William Lord Byron, your Lordship will do well to give Attention, while you are arraigned on your Indictment.

Then Proclamation was made for Silence.

After which, William Lord Byron was arraigned, in the Form of the said Indictment against him, by the Clerk of the Crown in the King's Bench.

Clerk of the Crown. How say you, William Lord Byron, Are you guilty of the Felony and Murder whereof you stand indicted, or not guilty?

William Lord Byron. Not guilty, my Lords.

Clerk of the Crown. Cul' puit,
How will your Lordship be tried?

William Lord Byron. By God and my Peers.

Clerk of the Crown. God send your Lordship a good Deliverance.

Clerk of the Crown. Serjeant at Arms, make Proclamation.

Serjeant at Arms. Oyez, Oyez, Oyez! All manner of Persons that will give Evidence, on Behalf of our Sovereign Lord the King, against William Lord Byron, the Prisoner at the Bar, let them come forth, and they shall be heard; for now he stands at the Bar upon his Deliverance.

Lord High Steward. My Lords, the Distance of this Place from the Bar is so great, that I must desire your Lordships Leave to go down to the Table for the Convenience of hearing.

Lords. Ay, ay.

Then his Grace removed to the Table.

Mr. Cornwall.

May it please your Lordships,

WILLIAM Lord BYRON stands indicted by the Grand Jury of the County of Middlesex for Murder; and the Indictment sets forth, That William Lord Byron, on the Twenty-sixth Day of January, in the Fifth Year of his present Majesty's Reign, with Force and Arms, at the Parish of Saint James, in the County of Middlesex, feloniously, wilfully, and of his Malice aforethought, did make an Assault in and upon one William Chaworth, Esquire, and with a Sword drawn, then in his Right Hand, in and upon the Left Side of the Belly of the said William Chaworth, did strike and stab, giving to the said William Chaworth a mortal Wound, of the Depth of Six Inches and of the Breadth of Half an Inch; of which Wound the said William Chaworth, at the Parish of Saint James aforesaid, and also at the Parish of Saint George, Hanover Square, languished from the Twenty-sixth Day of January aforesaid, till the Twenty-seventh Day of the same Month, in the Year aforesaid, and then and there of the said mortal Wound died; and the Jurors aforesaid, upon their Oath, say, That the said William Lord Byron, the said William Chaworth, in Manner aforesaid, feloniously, wilfully, and of his Malice aforethought, did kill and murder.

To this Indictment the Noble Prisoner at the Bar, has pleaded Not guilty, and hath put himself upon your Lordships his Peers for Trial.

It is our Duty to produce to your Lordships the Evidence we have to offer in Support of this Charge; your Lordships will determine upon that Evidence, and give such Judgment as your Lordships shall think the Justice of the Case requires.

Mr. Attorney-General, Sir Fletcher Norton, Knight.

May it please your Lordships,

I Am likewise of Council for this Prosecution; and by the Indictment which has been opened, your Lordships have heard that the noble Prisoner at the Bar is charged with one of the highest Offences that human Nature is capable of committing, nothing less than shedding the Blood of a Fellow Creature.

My Lords, I need not enlarge upon this Subject, the Crime itself is incapable of Aggravation; it is my Province to lay before your Lordships the State of the Evidence which will be produced in Support of the Charge; and as it is not my Duty, so neither is it my Inclination, to exaggerate any Thing upon this Occasion; but publick Justice requires, that the whole Proof should be brought fully and fairly before your Lordships.

I hope it will neither be thought impertinent or improper for me to make some general Observations upon the Law, which may respect the Offence now under Consideration; the Utility and Application of which your Lordships will see in the Course of the Evidence.

My Lords, as it will be proved beyond a Doubt, in the Course of these Proceedings, that the Deceased fell by the Hands of the noble Prisoner at the Bar, I shall therefore take that Fact for granted; and if so, every Presumption in Law arises against him; and it will be incumbent upon the Prisoner to exculpate himself in the best Manner he is able; for though every Homicide is not Murder, yet every Homicide, prima facie, is so, and it is required of the Prisoner to make out, that the Fact of Killing in this Case was not committed under Circumstances which will make it Murder: And I admit the Law will allow the Prisoner to shew the Homicide justifiable, excusable, or done under such Circumstances of Extenuation, as to induce your Lordships to think it was not done with Malice aforethought, and then it will be Manslaughter, and not Murder.

It is clear in Point of Law, if there be a Quarrel, and the Parties afterwards have Time to cool, and after that they fight, and one falls, he who survives has been guilty of Murder; or if the Manner in which the Fact was done bespeaks a Depravity of Mind, and a Wickedness of Intention, that will make it Murder.

My Lords, as this Case must depend upon a very nice and strict Enquiry into all the Circumstances that accompanied the Fact, in order to mark the Offence with One or other of these Denominations (for an Offence Manslaughter is in the Eye of the Law) so I am persuaded your Lordships will attend carefully to the Evidence which may be produced; and I am convinced we shall hear such a Judgment from your Lordships, as, under all the Circumstances of the Case, Justice shall require: And this must afford Matter of the greatest Consolation to the noble Prisoner at the Bar (if he is innocent) because your Lordships Understanding cannot be deceived, nor your Judgment biased: But, on the other Hand, if his Lordship is guilty of the Offence laid to his Charge, he must know, that no Art, no Subterfuge, no Management, will avail him; Innocence, and Innocence alone can be his Support and Defence.

Having said this, give me Leave to observe to your Lordships, the Happiness of this Constitution under so gracious a Prince, as his present Majesty, who aims at no other Rule of Government than that which the Law prescribes, and has no other Wish than that in all Cases, and over all Persons indiscriminately, the Law should be impartially administered; and when the Laws are thus administered, and allowed their due Force, such is the Excellency of the English Constitution, that the meanest Subject is not beneath their Protection, nor the highest beyond their Reach; thus to be governed is the full Perfection of Civil Liberty.

On the 26th of January last, the noble Prisoner at the Bar, the Deceased, and many more Gentlemen of Rank and Fortune of the County of Nottingham, met, as they usually did once a Week, to dine together at the Star and Garter Tavern, in Pall-Mall: In the Course of the Dinner

Dinner there was nothing but Good-humour; about Seven at Night the Conversation turned upon the Subject of Game: Upon this Occasion Mr. Chaworth had something of a Dispute with the Gentleman who sat next him, about the best Method of preserving the Game: The Prisoner at the Bar interfered upon that Subject, and said, in his Opinion, the Way to have Game was to take no Care of it; Mr. Chaworth happened to be of a different Opinion, and thought the best Way was, to be strict with Poachers, and thereby preserve the Game: This drew on some Altercation; Mr. Chaworth added, that he believed there was not a Hare in that Part of the Country, but what was preserved by himself or Sir Charles Sedley; upon which Lord Byron offered a Wager of an Hundred Pounds that he had more Game in a Manor or Manors of his than Mr. Chaworth had upon any that belonged to him. Your Lordships will find a little Difference in the Account given by the Witnesses, touching the Terms of the Wager; but you will have them from the Witnesses themselves, who are all Gentlemen of Character, and as they have most of them been already examined before the Coroner, and again before the Grand Jury, they did not choose to be examined by those concerned in the Prosecution; but said, when they were called and examined before your Lordships, they should speak the Truth, as doubtless they will; and I only mention this Circumstance as an Excuse for myself, if I should not happen to open the Evidence exactly as it may come out from the Witnesses.

My Lords, Mr. Chaworth having said he was willing to accept the Wager, said it would be proper to make a Memorandum of it, and called for Pen, Ink, and Paper; after that, it happened that Sir Charles Sedley's Manors were mentioned; upon which the noble Prisoner at the Bar said, with some Degree of Heat, Sir Charles Sedley's Manors! where are his Manors? to which Mr. Chaworth replied, Why Hucknel and Nuttall: His Lordship then said, I know no Manors of Sir Charles Sedley's; to which Mr. Chaworth replied, Sir Charles Sedley has a Manor, the Manor of Nuttall is his, and one of his Ancestors bought it out of my Family; and if your Lordship wants any further Information about his Manors, Sir Charles Sedley lives in Dean-Street, and your Lordship knows where to find me in Berkeley-Row.

My Lords, whether this was a real Dispute between Lord Byron and Mr. Chaworth, about Sir Charles Sedley's Manors, or whether it was used only as a Means of affronting and quarrelling with each other, it is impossible for me to say; however, after this Quarrel, the Parties staid in Company together for a considerable Time, I believe near an Hour, during which Time, both the noble Prisoner at the Bar and Mr. Chaworth entered into Conversation with the Company that sat next to them upon indifferent Subjects, and particularly Lord Byron was observed to be in good Humour.

The Company thought there was an End of the Quarrel, and that no more would be heard of it: About Eight, an Hour after the first Quarrel, Mr. Chaworth went first out of the Room, and it happened a Gentleman went after him to the Door, and he asked the Gentleman, whether he had observed the Dispute between him and Lord Byron? he said, he had in Part; upon which Mr. Chaworth asked him, if he thought he had gone far enough? to which Mr. Donston (for that was the Gentleman's Name) said, he thought he had gone too far; it was a silly Business, and neither of them should think of it again.

Mr. Chaworth going down Stairs, Mr. Donston returned into the Room, and, as he opened the Door, he met Lord Byron coming out. I must now state to your Lordships the Evidence as it arose from the Declarations of the Deceased, as well as the Facts which will be proved; for, both being legal Evidence, they just stand under the same Predicament, and the Evidence being thus put, will come in proper Order in Point of Time; the Prisoner at the Bar saw the Deceased upon the Stairs, and said to him, Sir, I want to speak with you; they then went down one Pair of Stairs, and one or other of them called out, Waiter; which of them it was I am not instructed to say; upon the Waiter's coming, the noble Prisoner at the Bar asked him, whether either of these two Rooms (pointing to them) were empty? the Waiter opened one of the Doors, and went in, with a poor little Tallow Candle, which was all the Light, except a dull Fire, that was in the Room; the Waiter set the Candle upon the Table, and Lord Byron and Mr. Chaworth went into the Room; when they were there the Prisoner asked Mr. Chaworth, whether he was to have Recourse to Sir Charles Sedley to account for the Business of the Game, or to him? The Deceased said, To me, my Lord; and if you have any Thing to say, it would be best to shut the Door, lest we should be overheard: Mr. Chaworth went to shut the Door, and turning from the Door, he saw the noble Prisoner just behind him, with his Sword half drawn, or nigh drawn, and at that Instant Lord Byron called out—Draw! The Business was soon done; Mr. Chaworth finding his Lordship in such a Situation, had nothing left for it but to draw as quickly as he could: By his own Account he has told he gave the noble Prisoner the first Thrust, and intangled his Sword in his Waistcoat, and thought he had wounded him; after that, Lord Byron shortened his Sword, and stabbed Mr. Chaworth.

There

There was another Circumstance, the Bell rung ; but by whom it was rung I know not ; the Waiter came up, and seeing the Situation of the Two Gentlemen, was not a little frightened, he run out again, and sent up the Master of the Tavern, who will tell your Lordships how he found them. I think they were grasped in each other's Arms, and Mr. Chaworth had his Sword in his Left-hand, and the noble Prisoner at the Bar had his in his Right-hand ; the Deceased delivered his readily, but Lord Byron quitted his with Reluctance. One of them, I believe Lord Byron, ordered him to send for Relief : Upon this Mr. Hawkins the Surgeon was soon sent for, and as soon came ; but before this, an Alarm was given in the Room above Stairs, the Company came down, they saw the terrible Situation of the unfortunate Gentleman ; he told them, and your Lordships will hear, the Manner in which it happened, pretty nearly as I have stated it, at least I hope substantially so. When Mr. Hawkins came, it did not require a Person of his Skill and Penetration to find out that the Wound was mortal, for the Sword had gone in at one Side, and out at the other ; Mr. Hawkins ordered, no doubt, what was proper, and had him conveyed Home. Mr. Chaworth had sent Messengers for the worthy Gentleman, who is the Prosecutor upon this Occasion ; when he came, seeing so near a Friend and Relation in the Condition the Deceased then appeared, he immediately inquired what had brought him into that terrible Situation. His Evidence will be material ; for Mr. Chaworth told Mr. Levinz the whole Transaction : And when the Deceased related to him the Circumstance that Lord Byron had drawn, or nigh drawn, his Sword, when the Deceased was shutting the Door, Mr. Levinz asked him, Was that fair, Billy ? The Deceased, who was one of the most benevolent, as well as one of the bravest of Men, gave no Answer to that Question : Mr. Levinz followed him with some other Questions, and the Answers (which he will give you an Account of) will amount in Substance to this, that Mr. Chaworth did not think when Lord Byron carried him into the Room, that he had any Design of fighting him ; but afterwards he thought he had got him to an Advantage, and that was the Reason of his fighting him.

My Lords, besides this ; the Deceased having made his Will, the Person who attended him upon that Occasion, thought it proper that some Questions should be asked him, even though the Deceased was then in great Agonies (for he died soon afterwards) ; and the same Person wished, that the Answers might be reduced into Writing, which was accordingly done ; and the Paper will be produced to your Lordships, and will speak for itself ; and it will need no Comment.

It states, that Mr. Chaworth said, the noble Prisoner's Sword was half-drawn when he turned from the Door, that, knowing his Man, he immediately whipped out his own, and had the first Lunge at his Lordship, when Lord Byron shortened his Sword, and run him through ; and then said, with an Oath, I have as much Courage as any Man in England. This is the Nature of the Case in general ; and I believe I have stated the Evidence substantially, if not correctly true.

I cannot sit down without mentioning another Circumstance, which further evinces his Majesty's Love of Justice, and his inflexible Resolution to do Right, according to Law, without Favour or Affection, however high and respectable the noble Personage may be, who is concerned in this important Cause. Your Lordships all remember, upon another very solemn and melancholy Occasion, as the Event proved, the then noble Prisoner had killed a Person of very inferior Rank, who left neither a Fortune nor Relations equal to the Expence of a Prosecution of this Sort, his Majesty, from his Love of Justice, sustained the whole Charge, and committed the Care of that Prosecution to his own Servants ; but in the present Instance, the Deceased having a large Fortune, and the Inheritor of it being both able and willing to carry on this Prosecution, his Majesty, from the same Love of Justice, and that there might not be the Appearance of Partiality to the noble Prisoner at the Bar, has left the Prosecution, and the intire Management of it, in the Hands of the private Prosecutor, who, actuated with no Motive of Revenge, only hopes, that there will be a fair, but a strict and full Enquiry for the Blood of his deceased Relation ; being thoroughly satisfied, that your Lordships will hear with Patience, deliberate with Caution, and determine with Wisdom, Justice, and Truth.

Mr. Solicitor General, } MY Lords, we will now proceed to call our Witnesses.
William de Grey, Esq; } Call John Hewett, Esquire.

Who came to the Bar, and one of the Clerks held the Book to him, upon which he laid his Hand.

Clerk of the Crown. Harken to your Oath.

The Evidence that you shall give on Behalf of our Sovereign Lord the King's Majesty, against William Lord Byron, the Prisoner at the Bar, shall be the Truth, the whole Truth, and nothing but the Truth.

So help you G O D.

Then he kissed the Book.

Mr. Solicitor General. My Lords, I would ask Mr. Hewett if he was present at the Star and Garter in Pall-mall on the Twenty-sixth of January last?

Mr. Hewett. I was: I dined there, my Lords, the Twenty-sixth of January.

Lord High Steward. I cannot at this Distance hear One Word of what is said by the Witnesses.

Then one of the Clerks was sent down to the Bar to repeat the Questions put to the Witnesses, and their Answers.

Mr. Solicitor General. I desire that Mr. Hewett will tell your Lordships if he was present at the Star and Garter Tavern on the Twenty-sixth of January last?

Mr. Hewett. I was: I dined at the Star and Garter on the Twenty-sixth of January last.

Mr. Solicitor General. Was it any particular Meeting?

Mr. Hewett. It was: It was a County Club.

Mr. Solicitor General. Of what County?

Mr. Hewett. The Gentlemen of Nottinghamshire.

Mr. Solicitor General. I desire you will name the Gentlemen then present.

Mr. Hewett. Lord Byron, Francis Molineux, Esquire, John Sherwin, Esquire, the Honourable Thomas Willoughby, Frederick Mountagu, Esquire, William Chaworth, Esquire, George Donston, Esquire, Charles Mellish junior, Esquire, Sir Robert Burdett, and myself.

Mr. Solicitor General. At what Time did the Company dine?

Mr. Hewett. The Dinner was upon the Table precisely at a Quarter after Four o'Clock.

Mr. Solicitor General. Do you recollect any Conversation relative to the Game?

Mr. Hewett. I do; it was some Time after Dinner before any such Conversation arose.

Mr. Solicitor General. You will please to recollect the Time.

Mr. Hewett. At or about the Time the Drawer brought in the First Reckoning.

Mr. Solicitor General. About what o'Clock might that be?

Mr. Hewett. It was about or after Seven o'Clock. The Rule of the Club was to have the Bill and a Bottle brought at Seven o'Clock.

Mr. Solicitor General. Do you recollect whether it was about Seven, or long after Seven o'Clock?

Mr. Hewett. I believe it could not be long after Seven o'Clock.

Mr. Solicitor General. Had the Company at that Time drank much?

Mr. Hewett. I think the Company were all very sober when we parted.

Mr. Solicitor General. Do you mean that all the Company were very sober when they parted at Seven o'Clock?

Mr. Hewett. I think so, my Lords.

Mr. Solicitor General. I wish Mr. Hewett would recollect the Conversation that passed about the Game?

Mr. Hewett. What I heard relating to it was a Dispute in whose Manor, or in what Manor, there was the most Game.

Mr. Solicitor General. Do you recollect by whom the Conversation was begun?

Mr. Hewett. The Conversation about the Game began from myself.

Mr. Solicitor General. In what Manner?

Mr. Hewett. By starting a Proposition for preserving the Game, besides the present System of the Game Laws, which has very often, where I have been, produced agreeable Conversation.

Mr. Solicitor General. Who were the Persons in particular who entered into that Conversation?

Mr. Hewett. I believe all the Company, more or less.

Mr. Solicitor General. Do you recollect what Mr. Chaworth said on that Occasion?

Mr. Hewett. I recollect hearing a Bet proposed of One Hundred Pounds.

Mr. Solicitor General. Was that the First Time Mr. Chaworth had said any Thing upon the Subject?

Mr. Hewett. I cannot take upon me to say that: I can describe the Order in which we sat, and the Persons I was in Conversation with at the Time the Bet was proposed; Mr. Mountagu sat next me on my Right-hand, I sat at the Head of the Table, Mr. Willoughby sat next Mr. Mountagu, Mr. Sberwin next him, Mr. Molineux next to him, Lord Byron was the last Person on the same Side the Table, and farthest from me on my Right-hand, and on my Left-hand Mr. Chaworth sat next me, Mr. Donston next, Mr. Mellish next, Sir Robert Burdet next on that Side.—I was engaged in some Subject with Mr. Sberwin, and the Gentlemen on my Right-hand, at the Time when the Conversation passed between Lord Byron and Mr. Chaworth.

Lord High Steward. Recollect yourself again.

Mr. Hewett. I was conversing with Mr. Sberwin, and the Gentleman on my Right-hand, when I heard the Conversation about the Bet between Lord Byron and Mr. Chaworth.

Mr. Solicitor General. Please to repeat exactly the Conversation between Lord Byron and Mr. Chaworth, in the Order in which it passed.

Mr. Hewett. I cannot recollect any Thing farther of the Conversation than I have done.

Mr. Solicitor General. Be so good as to repeat again what that Conversation was?

Mr. Hewett. It was a Dispute in whose Manor or Manors there was the most Game.

Mr. Solicitor General. Whose Manors were understood?

Mr. Hewett. I heard none mentioned at all; I imagined as Lord Byron and Mr. Chaworth were Neighbours in the Country, it was their Manors they were speaking of.

Lord Mansfield. Mr. Hewitt won't speak as to Imagination; they can only ask him as to Facts.

Mr. Solicitor General. After this Bet was proposed, what passed?

Mr. Hewett. I did not perceive any other Conversation between Mr. Chaworth and Lord Byron, but what I have mentioned, during the whole Day.

Mr. Solicitor General. At what Time did the Conversation close upon that Subject?

Mr. Hewett. Very soon, my Lords.

Mr. Solicitor General. What Conversation followed upon that?

Mr. Hewett. A great Variety, I think.

Mr. Solicitor General. Did Mr. Chaworth join in that Conversation?

Mr. Hewett. He did, my Lords.

Mr. Solicitor General. Did Lord Byron join in any Conversation afterwards?

Mr. Hewett. Lord Byron being the farthest from me of any of the Company, I did not hear any Conversation of his afterwards; but I observed he was conversing with Mr. Molineux afterwards.

Mr. Solicitor General. Did you observe whether Lord Byron seemed to be in or out of Humour after the Conversation about the Game?

Mr. Hewett. He seemed to be conversing with Mr. Molineux in good Humour.

Mr. Solicitor General. How long did this Conversation last before Mr. Chaworth went out of the Room?

Mr. Hewett. It must be after Eight o'Clock before Mr. Chaworth went out of the Room.

Mr. Solicitor General. Did Mr. Chaworth, when he left the Room, take any Body with him?

Mr. Hewett. Mr. Donston was out of the Room at the same Time; but whether he went with him, or followed him, I do not know.

Mr. Solicitor General. How long did Mr. Donston stay out of the Room?

Mr. Hewett. A very short Time, I think.

Mr. Solicitor General. Did Lord Byron leave the Room?

Mr. Hewett. Lord Byron left the Room at the very Instant Mr. Donston came in.

Mr. Solicitor General. Mr. Hewett says that Mr. Donston stayed out of the Room but a very short Time; I should be glad to know what he reckons a short Time?

Mr. Hewett. I am not able to judge of the Time; but from the Hour of paying the Reckoning, and the Time I went into the Room where Mr. Chaworth was wounded.

Mr. Solicitor General. What was the First Account you had of any Thing that passed after they quitted the Room?

Mr. Hewett. Almost at the Instant of Mr. Donston's sitting down, a Drawer came into the Room, and told us that Lord Byron and Mr. Chaworth were fighting.

Mr. Solicitor General. What was the Drawer's Name?

Mr. Hewett. I don't know.

Mr. Solicitor General. Did the Company go down?

Mr. Hewett. They went down as fast as they could.

Mr. Solicitor General. Did you go into the Room where Mr. Chaworth and Lord Byron were?

Mr. Hewett. I did.

Mr. Solicitor General. Where was the Room?

Mr. Hewett. It was a Back Room, up One Pair of Stairs.

Mr. Solicitor General. What did you observe in that Room?

Mr. Hewett. I was lame at that Time; when I got into the Room Mr. Chaworth was sitting in an armed Chair, with his Left Leg on another Chair, and leaning his Head against Mr. Dorston.

Mr. Solicitor General. Did you observe the Condition in which Mr. Chaworth was?

Mr. Hewett. I did. He was wounded in the Belly, and had his Hand upon it, and there was a good deal of Blood under the Chair.

Mr. Solicitor General. Did Mr. Chaworth say any Thing to you?

Mr. Hewett. He did.

Mr. Solicitor General. What was that?

Mr. Hewett. He said he was a dying Man, and gave me an Account of the Transaction, and of what had passed between my Lord Byron and him: He said Lord Byron told him he wanted to speak to him; upon which they went into that Room together; that he told Lord Byron it was better to shut the Door that they might not be heard; that while he was doing it, Lord Byron bid him draw; that he saw his Lordship's Sword half-drawn, upon which he whipp'd out his own as quick as possibly he could to give him the Point; and he asked how Lord Byron was, whether he was mortally wounded, as he thought he was about his Breast; when his Lordship shortened his Sword, and stabbed him in the Belly.

Mr. Solicitor General. Was you in the Room when Mr. Hawkins the Surgeon was sent for?

Mr. Hewett. I was not in the Room when Mr. Hawkins was sent for; Mr. Hawkins was in the Room when I was there.

Mr. Solicitor General. Was Lord Byron in the Room at that Time?

Mr. Hewett. Lord Byron came into the Room, and went up to Mr. Chaworth, and asked him how he was?

Mr. Solicitor General. What Answer was given by Mr. Chaworth?

Mr. Hewett. I don't recollect any.

Mr. Solicitor General. Was you afterwards at Mr. Chaworth's House that Night?

Mr. Hewett. I was.

Mr. Solicitor General. At what Time was it you went, and what passed there?

Mr. Hewett. I do not remember exactly. I was one of the subscribing Witnesses to Mr. Chaworth's Will. It might be about or after Three o'Clock in the Morning.

Mr. Solicitor General. How was your Time employed, when you left the Star and Garter, till you went to Mr. Chaworth's House?

Mr. Hewett. Mr. Chaworth at different Times expressed himself as a dying Man: He asked me twice after Lord Byron and his Wound. When I went from the Star and Garter, I went with Mr. Willoughby, in my own Coach, to fetch Mr. Levinz, for whose Coming Mr. Chaworth was extremely impatient.

Mr. Solicitor General. What Relation was Mr. Levinz to Mr. Chaworth?

Mr. Hewett. His Uncle.

Mr. Solicitor General. Where did Mr. Levinz live?

Mr. Hewett. At Kensington Gore.

Duke of Newcastle. Did not Mr. Chaworth tell you he had mortally wounded Lord Byron; for I think you said, when you came into the Room Mr. Chaworth asked how Lord Byron did, for he thought he was wounded about his Breast?

Mr. Hewett. Mr. Chaworth asked me how Lord Byron was, whether mortally wounded or not, for he thought he was about his Breast, when Lord Byron stabbed him into the Belly.

Earl Morton. Did Mr. Chaworth mention that he had given Lord Byron a Wound? Or did you imagine it was his own Wound he was speaking of?

Mr. Hewett. He inquired after a Wound he supposed he had given Lord Byron.

Lord Mansfield. My Lords, I believe it would be much better if your Lordships would forbear asking any Questions of the Witness till the Counsel for the Crown shall have done with the Witness; then Lord Byron will ask such Questions as he may think proper, and afterwards your Lordships will have an Opportunity of asking any Questions you please; otherwise I am afraid it will very much interrupt the Regularity of your Proceedings.

Mr. Solicitor General. I was endeavouring to fix the Time when Mr. Hewett came to Mr. Chaworth's House, by asking him, how he was employed after he left the Star and Garter? Mr. Hewett said, in seeking Mr. Levinz, who lived at Kensington Gore.

Mr. Hewett. I sent my Coach for Mr. Levinz some Time before, and it returned without finding him; upon that I sent to the Duke of Leeds's House, to know if they knew any Thing of him there; they returned for Answer, that he dined there, and was gone Home.

Mr. Solicitor General. I would ask you, if there was any Conversation between Mr. Chaworth and you after the making his Will in the Presence of Mr. Willoughby?

Mr. Hewett. There was.

Mr. Solicitor General. Did Mr. Chaworth make any Declarations of what had passed at that Time?

Mr. Hewett. He did.

Mr. Solicitor General. Were those Declarations reduced into Writing?

Mr. Hewett. They were.

Mr. Solicitor General. How long was it after they were made before they were reduced into Writing?

Mr. Hewett. We went down from the Bed-chamber into the Parlour.

Mr. Solicitor General. There Mr. Partington delivered the Will into Mr. Levinz's Hands?

Mr. Hewett. No, I gave the Will into Mr. Levinz's Hands in the Parlour; then Minutes were made, and some Alterations made in them, till we were all agreed it was exactly what Mr. Chaworth had said.

Mr. Solicitor General. Were the Minutes transcribed again after those Alterations were made.

Mr. Hewett. I believe they were.

Mr. Solicitor General. Should you know the Paper Writing again if you saw it?

Mr. Hewett. I should not; but I remember that the Contents appeared to me exactly the same with the Account I have given your Lordships, except the Omission of the particular Term of Mr. Chaworth's whipping out his own Sword, and Lord Byron's shortening his.

Mr. Solicitor General. Who wrote the Paper?

Mr. Hewett. Mr. Partington, an Attorney.

Mr. Solicitor General. What became of it after it was written?

Mr. Hewett. I do not know.

Mr. Solicitor General. Did you see Mr. Chaworth after that Paper was wrote?

Mr. Hewett. I did not.

Mr. Solicitor General. Did Mr. Chaworth continue in his perfect Understanding till the last Time you saw him?

Mr. Hewett. He did. I understood many of the Questions put to him to be with a View of knowing that.

Mr. Solicitor General. My Lords, I shall ask this Witness no farther Questions.

Lord High Steward. Lord Byron, would you ask this Witness any Questions?

Lord Byron. Might not a great deal pass in Company that you did not hear?

Mr. Hewett. Certainly there might.

Lord Byron. Was not you Toast Master?

Mr. Hewett. I was.

Lord Byron. Might not your Attention to that Office be the Reason that you did not hear several Things that passed?

Mr. Hewett. It might; but my Ears are not the best at any Time.

Lord Byron. My Lords, I have done with this Witness.

Lord Mansfield. I would ask One single Question of this Witness, if he can answer it precisely.

Mr. Chaworth, as I took it, told him that Lord Byron asked to speak to him; and when they went into the Room, Mr. Chaworth said they had better shut the Door. Now I would ask, whether it was, Shut the Door, or Bolt the Door?

Mr. Hewett. I believe the Word was, Shut the Door.

Earl of Denbigh. I desire to know whether the Paper Writing was shewn to Mr. Chaworth after it was copied?

Mr. Hewett. Mr. Chaworth was in his Bed-chamber above Stairs, the Paper was drawn up in the Parlour below Stairs; and I went away very soon after.

Earl Poulet. Were the Alterations in the Paper you mentioned material ones or not?

Mr. Hewett. I thought it my Duty to the Publick to make an exact Minute of the Circumstances of the Day, which Minute I have now in my Hand, and it corresponds exactly with that Paper, except in the Circumstance I mentioned to your Lordships.

Earl of Buckinghamshire. I desire Mr. Hewett may be asked, if he expected Mr. Chaworth would have come back again?

Mr. Hewett. I did imagine he would have come back.

Earl of Buckinghamshire. I desire to know, whether, when Mr. Chaworth went out of the Room, he took his Hat with him or not?

Mr. Hewett. I don't know; I did imagine he would come back immediately.

Lord High Steward. I do not remember any precise Answer to the Question, who it was that offered the Bet?

Mr. Hewett. Lord Byron proposed the Bet.

Lord High Steward. Are you sure it was Lord Byron?

Mr. Hewett. I think I am sure it was; and Mr. Chaworth took it up, as I thought, in a Joke, and called for a Pen and Ink.

Lord High Steward. Do you recollect how the Conversation about the Game finished?

Mr. Hewett. I cannot.

Earl of Dartmouth. Do you remember the particular Discourse on the Game between Lord Byron and Mr. Chaworth?

Mr. Hewett. There were various Discourses upon the Subject by different People in Company; I was talking about the best Method for preserving Game, and the Discourse turned upon the Proposition, that it might be a sensible Way of preserving Game to make it the Property of the Owner of the Soil.

Earl of Dartmouth. Was there any general Debate on the Subject of the Game?

Mr. Hewett. It might be as to the probable Ways of preserving the Game.

Earl of Dartmouth. I think you said Lord Byron left the Room at the Instant Mr. Donston returned.

Mr. Hewett. I did.

Earl of Dartmouth. I desire to know whether Lord Byron sat so as to hear what passed between Mr. Chaworth and Mr. Donston on the Stairs?

Mr. Hewett. It was a mighty odd-shaped Room that we were in; the Door opened very inconveniently; Mr. Donston was scarcely set down, when the Waiter came into the Room and told us Lord Byron and Mr. Chaworth were fighting.

Duke of Richmond. Where did Mr. Chaworth sit?

Mr. Hewett. Mr. Chaworth sat next to me on my Left-hand.

Duke of Richmond. Could any Thing remarkable pass at the Table without your hearing it?

Mr. Hewett. My Ears are but indifferent at best; and at that Instant of Time I was talking to a Gentleman that sat on my Right-hand.

Duke of Richmond. When my Lord Byron asked Mr. Chaworth, where is Sir Charles Sedley's Manor, did you understand it was in a friendly Manner, or what other Kind of Style?

Mr. Hewett. I have given that Part of my Evidence precisely in Mr. Chaworth's Words, and your Lordships will interpret them as you think proper.

Duke of Richmond. If I understood you right, when you went into the Room Mr. Chaworth was then with One Leg upon a Chair, and he inquired how Lord Byron did?

Mr. Hewett. He did, my Lords, twice, and once at another Time.

Lord Le Despencer. I should be glad to know, whether there was any considerable Distance of Time between Lord Byron and Mr. Chaworth's going out of the Room.

Mr. Hewett. I cannot resolve that Question precisely.

Lord Ravensworth. You said the Bill was called for about Seven o'Clock?

Mr. Hewett. It is the Order of the Club to the Master of the House to bring a Bill at Seven o'Clock.

Lord Ravensworth. You said you had no fixed Guide to judge as to Point of Time, but by the Bills being brought at Seven o'Clock; I desire to know by what Circumstances you guided yourself as to the Time in general?

Mr. Hewett. In Things of this Kind, one cannot be precise in every Thing; but I made a Minute, and I will tell you the Time as near as I can; my Watch was rather too fast; when I came into the Room to Mr. Chaworth, the Minute Hand of my Watch was between Eight and Nine, and the Hour Hand approaching Nine: This was at the First Time I saw Mr. Chaworth in that Condition; the Time of my being a Witness to Mr. Chaworth's Will, was a little after Three in the Morning.

Lord High Steward. So you said before.

Lord High Steward. Who do you call next, Mr. Solicitor General?
Solicitor General. We desire to call Frederick Mountagu, Esquire.

Frederick Mountagu, Esquire, (Who was sworn in like Manner.)

Mr. Serjeant Glynn. I desire to ask Mr. Mountagu, if he was not present at the Star and Garter on the Twenty-sixth of January last?

Mr. Mountagu. I was.

Mr. Serjeant Glynn. I desire to know what Company was there?

Mr. Mountagu. There were Lord Byron, Mr. Chaworth, Mr. Willoughby, Mr. Hewett, Mr. Molyneux, Mr. Donston, Mr. Sberwin, Mr. Mellish, and Sir Robert Burdet.

Mr. Serjeant Glynn. Upon what Occasion were they met?

Mr. Mountagu. At a County Club.

Mr. Serjeant Glynn. At what Time might the Company dine?

Mr. Mountagu. A little after Four.

Mr. Serjeant Glynn. Do you remember any Dispute in the Company?

Mr. Mountagu. There arose a Dispute some time after Dinner.

Mr. Serjeant Glynn. At what Hour?

Mr. Mountagu. As near as I can recollect, at Seven o'Clock.

Mr. Serjeant Glynn. Do you remember the Subject of the Dispute?

Mr. Mountagu. The Dispute was upon Game.

Mr. Serjeant Glynn. Who were the Persons that disputed?

Mr. Mountagu. The Persons that principally disputed were Lord Byron and Mr. Chaworth.

Mr. Serjeant Glynn. Can you recollect the Conversation upon that Subject?

Mr. Mountagu. The Dispute was, whether it was better for the Preservation of Game to be remiss, or to be severe.

Mr. Serjeant Glynn. Do you recollect particularly what Mr. Chaworth and Lord Byron said?

Mr. Mountagu. Mr. Chaworth was of Opinion that Severity was best, and Lord Byron that it was better to be remiss.

Mr. Serjeant Glynn. I should be glad if Mr. Mountagu would repeat the whole Conversation that followed upon this.

Mr. Mountagu. The Dispute was upon the respective Manors of Lord Byron and Mr. Chaworth, and upon Sir Charles Sedley's Manor; the Conversation ended upon that Point, with Mr. Chaworth's saying, and to the best of my Recollection repeating, If you have any Thing more to say, you will find Sir Charles Sedley in Dean-street, and me in Berkley-Row.

Mr. Serjeant Glynn. Repeat what Conversation passed before Mr. Chaworth said those Words?

Mr. Mountagu. In general, the Conversation was upon Game.

Mr. Serjeant Glynn. Do you recollect any Particulars of the Conversation?

Mr. Mountagu. No more than what I have repeated.

Mr. Serjeant Glynn. Was this the Whole? Recollect.

Mr. Mountagu. I can, upon my own Recollection, speak to nothing more.

Mr. Serjeant Glynn. Mr. Mountagu will recollect if he can, whether there was any Dispute at all about the Ownership of any Manor or Manors?

Mr. Mountagu. There was some mention made of a particular Manor, of Hucknell Manor.

Mr. Serjeant Glynn. By whom?

Mr. Mountagu. By Mr. Chaworth, -I think.

Mr. Serjeant Glynn. Do you remember what was said about that Manor?

Mr. Mountagu. I think Lord Byron mentioned that Manor being his.

Mr. Serjeant Glynn. Do you remember any Answer Mr. Chaworth made to that?

Mr. Mountagu. No.

Mr. Serjeant Glynn. My Question to Mr. Mountagu was, whether he recollects any Conversation between Lord Byron and Mr. Chaworth about Manors?

Mr. Mountagu. Yes, there was a great deal of Conversation upon that Point.

Mr. Serjeant Glynn. Whether Sir Charles Sedley was mentioned or not?

Mr. Mountagu. His Name was mentioned.

Mr. Serjeant Glynn. How was Sir Charles Sedley's Name introduced?

Mr. Mountagu. I forget how it was first introduced.

Mr. Serjeant Glynn. Recollect what was said about Sir Charles Sedley, when his Name was mentioned?

Mr.

Mr. Mountagu. It was mentioned that he was severe upon his Manors.

Mr. Serjeant Glynn. By whom was that said?

Mr. Mountagu. Either by Lord Byron or Mr. Chaworth, I forget which.

Mr. Serjeant Glynn. How long did the Conversation about Game continue?

Mr. Mountagu. About Twenty Minutes, I should guess; but I cannot speak positively.

Mr. Serjeant Glynn. Did the Company then break up?

Mr. Mountagu. No.

Mr. Serjeant Glynn. How long might they continue afterwards together?

Mr. Mountagu. An Hour.

Mr. Serjeant Glynn. Were the Company after this Conversation in good Humour or not?

Mr. Mountagu. They appeared to be in good Humour.

Mr. Serjeant Glynn. Did Mr. Chaworth join in the Conversation?

Mr. Mountagu. He did.

Mr. Serjeant Glynn. Did Lord Byron join in Conversation?

Mr. Mountagu. He did, each with those who sat near.

Mr. Serjeant Glynn. Did Lord Byron appear to be in good Humour?

Mr. Mountagu. I saw nothing to the contrary.

Mr. Serjeant Glynn. At what Time did Mr. Chaworth leave the Company?

Mr. Mountagu. About Eight.

Mr. Serjeant Glynn. Whether he left the Company alone, or did any Person go out with him?

Mr. Mountagu. I think Mr. Donston followed him.

Mr. Serjeant Glynn. Did Mr. Donston return to the Company or not?

Mr. Mountagu. He did.

Mr. Serjeant Glynn. How soon after his going out with Mr. Chaworth?

Mr. Mountagu. A few Minutes; I cannot speak exactly to the Number.

Mr. Serjeant Glynn. Did Lord Byron go out of the Room at that Time?

Mr. Mountagu. He did afterwards.

Mr. Serjeant Glynn. Did Lord Byron go out of the Room before or after the Return of Mr. Donston?

Mr. Mountagu. About that Time.

Mr. Serjeant Glynn. At what Time of the Night might that be?

Mr. Mountagu. A very little after Eight.

Mr. Serjeant Glynn. Had the Company drank moderately, or otherwise?

Mr. Mountagu. Moderately.

Mr. Serjeant Glynn. When did you first hear of Mr. Chaworth after this?

Mr. Mountagu. I went down Stairs about that Time myself, and as I was going out of the Door of the Tavern, the Master of the Tavern called me back, and told me that Mischief had happened; and that Mr. Hawkins was sent for; I ran up Stairs with one of the Drawers.

Mr. Serjeant Glynn. Who was that Drawer?

Mr. Mountagu. I do not recollect him in particular; I ordered him to fetch the Company from above Stairs, and went into the Room immediately myself, where I found Mr. Chaworth in a Chair bleeding, and Lord Byron standing by him.

Mr. Serjeant Glynn. Was there any Person in the Room when you came in, except Lord Byron and Mr. Chaworth?

Mr. Mountagu. No, I think not; the Company above Stairs came in soon after.

Mr. Serjeant Glynn. Give an Account of what passed between Mr. Chaworth and the Company, when they came in?

Mr. Mountagu. Mr. Chaworth first told me that he could not live Five Minutes; that he forgave Lord Byron, and hoped the World would forgive him too; that he had rather be in his own Situation than Lord Byron's; he said the Affair passed in the Dark: Upon my desiring an Explanation, he pointed to a very small Tallow Candle, which stood upon the Table in the Room we were then in. Mr. Chaworth told me, that when Lord Byron and he came into the Room where they then were, Lord Byron asked Mr. Chaworth, if he meant the Conversation upon Game to Sir Charles Sedley or to him? Mr. Chaworth said, If you have any Thing to say, we had better shut the Door; after he had shut the Door, he turned, and saw Lord Byron drawing his Sword; he drew his, and made the First Pass, and in his Pass he entangled his Sword in the Left Side of Lord Byron's Waistcoat; upon which Lord Byron shortened his Sword, and run him through the Body.

Mr. Serjeant Glynn. Was this the Whole of what Mr. Chaworth said?

Mr. Mountagu. I recollect nothing material besides.

Mr.

Mr. Serjeant Glynn. Did Mr. Chaworth, from the Manner of relating this Affair, appear to be sensible or not?

Mr. Mountagu. Perfectly so.

Lord High Steward. Lord Byron, would your Lordship ask this Witness any Questions?

Lord Byron declined asking him any Questions.

Lord High Steward. How soon might you leave the Room after Mr. Donston returned?

Mr. Mountagu. About a Minute.

Lord High Steward. You passed the Room upon the First Floor as you went down?

Mr. Mountagu. I did, my Lords.

Lord High Steward. You heard no Fighting?

Mr. Mountagu. None in the World.

Lord High Steward. When you went down, did you stop?

Mr. Mountagu. A few Minutes in calling a Chair.

Lord High Steward. Were you got into the Chair?

Mr. Mountagu. I was not got into the Chair; I was not out of the Door.

Lord Berkeley. Was any Provocation given by Lord Byron, that might induce Mr. Chaworth to say to my Lord, If you have any Thing more to say to me or Sir Charles Sedley, you will find Sir Charles Sedley in Dean-street, and I live in Berkley Row?

Mr. Mountagu. I do not recollect any particular Provocation.

Lord Berkeley. Do you recollect any Thing more than the general Account you have given?

Mr. Mountagu. Nothing further, my Lords.

Duke of Richmond. Did you sit next Lord Byron?

Mr. Mountagu. No, my Lords, I did not sit next Lord Byron.

Duke of Richmond. From the Discourse that you heard, and what passed, did you expect a Duel?

Mr. Mountagu. No, my Lords, I did not.

Earl Temple. Did Mr. Chaworth say any Thing expressing his Imagination of his having wounded Lord Byron about the Breast?

Mr. Mountagu. I do not recollect any Thing that Mr. Chaworth said as to that.

Earl Temple. From Mr. Chaworth's Expressions, did any Thing induce you to think he had wounded Lord Byron?

Mr. Mountagu. No.

Earl Talbot. After Lord Byron and Mr. Chaworth went out of the Room, and were in the Room where they fought, Mr. Chaworth said, he saw Lord Byron's Sword half-drawn when he turned from fastening the Door, and the Gentleman who spoke before said Lord Byron called to Mr. Chaworth, and bid him draw; do you recollect whether Mr. Chaworth said Lord Byron bid him draw?

Mr. Mountagu. In the Conversation that passed I do not recollect that Circumstance of Lord Byron's bidding him draw.

Earl Poulet. Was you nearer seated to the Door than Lord Byron was?

Mr. Mountagu. No, I was not; I was at the upper End of the Table.

Earl Poulet. Was the Door at the upper or lower End of the Room?

Mr. Mountagu. It was a very odd-shaped Room.

Earl Poulet. Did Lord Byron sit near the Door?

Mr. Mountagu. No, he did not.

Earl Poulet. Do you think it was possible to hear what Words passed between Mr. Donston and Mr. Chaworth upon the Stairs?

Mr. Mountagu. I should think it impossible; there was a great Skreen before the Door.

Earl of Morton. Did not Mr. Chaworth say, the best Method of preserving Game was by Severity, and Lord Byron by Remissness?

Mr. Mountagu. Yes, my Lords, it was so.

Mr. Stowe. My Lords, I would call George Donston, Esquire.

George Donston, Esquire. (Who was sworn in like Manner.)

Mr. Stowe. Was you, on the Twenty-sixth of January, at Dinner with Lord Byron and other Gentlemen at the Star and Garter?

Mr. Donston. I was.

Mr. Stowe. Name the Gentlemen that composed the Company.

Mr. Donston. Lord Byron, Mr. Hewett, Mr. Willoughby, Mr. Chaworth, Mr. Sherwin, Mr. Mountagu, Sir Robert Burdet, Mr. Charles Mellish, and myself.

Mr. Stowe. Was there any Discourse between Lord Byron and Mr. Chaworth?

Mr. Donston. There was.

Mr. Stowe. What was the Subject of that Discourse?

Mr. Donston. It was about their respective Manors in the Country, and the Quantity of Game upon them.

Mr. Stowe. Do you recollect the Manner of the Conversation that passed between Lord Byron and Mr. Chaworth?

Mr. Donston. In general it was upon the best Method of preserving Game.

Mr. Stowe. What did Lord Byron give as his Opinion upon that Discourse?

Mr. Donston. Lord Byron thought it was best not to be too strict.

Mr. Stowe. What was Mr. Chaworth's Opinion?

Mr. Donston. Mr. Chaworth was for being strict, and for putting the Game Laws in Execution.

Mr. Stowe. Did any Thing pass relating any other Gentlemen, or the Estates of any other Gentlemen?

Mr. Donston. Yes, Sir Charles Sedley's Manor was mentioned.

Mr. Stowe. By whom was it mentioned?

Mr. Donston. By Mr. Chaworth.

Mr. Stowe. What did Mr. Chaworth say upon the mentioning Sir Charles Sedley's Manor?

Mr. Donston. He was speaking of the Quantity of Game upon Sir Charles Sedley's Manor.

Mr. Stowe. Was there any Bet mentioned relative to this Discourse concerning the Game?

Mr. Donston. Yes, there was a Bet proposed.

Mr. Stowe. By whom proposed?

Mr. Donston. I am not very sure by whom it was proposed.

Mr. Stowe. Was it proposed either by Lord Byron or Mr. Chaworth?

Mr. Donston. Yes, by one of them.

Mr. Stowe. Was any Bet made or not?

Mr. Donston. There was no Bet made.

Mr. Stowe. At what Time did this Conversation pass?

Mr. Donston. I believe about Seven o'Clock.

Mr. Stowe. Did Lord Byron or Mr. Chaworth continue in that Company any Time after this Discourse was over?

Mr. Donston. Yes, for some Time after.

Mr. Stowe. Whether after the Bet proposed, there was any other Conversation that passed between Lord Byron and Mr. Chaworth?

Mr. Donston. Yes; I remember, upon Sir Charles Sedley's Manor being mentioned, Lord Byron asked which was Sir Charles Sedley's Manor.

Mr. Stowe. Of whom did Lord Byron ask that?

Mr. Donston. Of Mr. Chaworth.

Mr. Stowe. Did Mr. Chaworth make any Answer?

Mr. Donston. He answered Nuttall.

Mr. Stowe. Did Mr. Chaworth mention any Thing more upon that Subject to Lord Byron; and what?

Mr. Donston. He did, after Lord Byron had repeated the same Question.

Mr. Stowe. What was further mentioned by Mr. Chaworth?

Mr. Donston. Mr. Chaworth said, upon his Lordship's asking him over again which was Sir Charles Sedley's Manor; Surely, my Lord, you will allow Nuttall to be Sir Charles Sedley's.

Mr. Stowe. Was any Thing more said respecting Sir Charles Sedley, or his Manors, or where he lived?

Mr. Donston. Yes, Mr. Chaworth went on to say, Sir Charles Sedley lives in such a Place, and can best inform you relating to his Manors; your Lordship knows where to find me in Berkley-Row.

Mr. Stowe. Did this conclude the Conversation on this Subject, or was any Thing more said at that Time?

Mr. Donston. The Conversation ended with the Words I have last said.

Mr

Mr. Stowe. Did you stay in the Room till the Time Lord Byron and Mr. Chaworth went out?

Mr. Donston. I staid till Mr. Chaworth went out.

Mr. Stowe. What Distance of Time might that be from the End of the Conversation to Mr. Chaworth's going out of the Room?

Mr. Donston. I think it might be about an Hour.

Mr. Stowe. Did Lord Byron and Mr. Chaworth, during that Hour, enter into Conversation with one another, or with the rest of the Company?

Mr. Donston. I am not sure whether they did converse with each other; they did with the rest of the Company.

Mr. Stowe. At what Distance from one another did they sit?

Mr. Donston. At a pretty considerable Distance.

Mr. Stowe. Do you recollect any subsequent Conversation that Lord Byron entered into, except what you have mentioned?

Mr. Donston. I do not; I was at a Distance from Lord Byron.

Mr. Stowe. At what Time was it that Mr. Chaworth went out of the Room?

Mr. Donston. About Eight o'Clock; I am not quite sure as to the Time.

Mr. Stowe. Do you know the Purpose of his going out of the Room?

Mr. Donston. He was going down Stairs; I believe into the Yard.

Mr. Stowe. Did he take his Hat with him when he went out of the Room?

Mr. Donston. I think he did not.

Mr. Stowe. Did any body go along with Mr. Chaworth, or immediately follow him?

Mr. Donston. I went out with him.

Mr. Stowe. How far did Mr. Chaworth and you go?

Mr. Donston. A little Way without the Room.

Mr. Stowe. Was there any Conversation between Mr. Chaworth and you, when you were out of the Room?

Mr. Donston. There was.

Mr. Stowe. Was there any other Person besides Mr. Chaworth and you?

Mr. Donston. There was none.

Mr. Stowe. Repeat what that Conversation was that passed between Mr. Chaworth and you.

Mr. Donston. Mr. Chaworth asked me, If I attended to the Discourse between him and Lord Byron? I told him I did in Part: He then asked me, If he had been short in what he last said upon that Subject. I told him, No; I thought he said rather more than what was necessary upon so trifling an Occasion, and that I did not believe that either Lord Byron or the rest of the Company would think any more about it.

Mr. Stowe. Was there any other Conversation between Mr. Chaworth and you at that Time?

Mr. Donston. Yes; he asked me how long I stayed in Town, and hoped we should meet often.

Mr. Stowe. Was there any other Conversation between Mr. Chaworth and you relative to the Subject of the Discourse that had passed between my Lord Byron and Mr. Chaworth?

Mr. Donston. No.

Mr. Stowe. What became of Mr. Chaworth after this?

Mr. Donston. He turned to go down Stairs.

Mr. Stowe. Where did you go to?

Mr. Donston. Into the Room again.

Mr. Stowe. When you went into the Room, did you see Lord Byron, and where?

Mr. Donston. I stood with my Back to the Door, and upon turning round to go into the Room I saw Lord Byron.

Mr. Stowe. What was he doing at that Time?

Mr. Donston. He was coming out as I was going in.

Mr. Stowe. What Length of Time might it be from your going out to Mr. Chaworth, to the Time of your coming in again?

Mr. Donston. I cannot exactly tell, but I believe a very short Time.

Mr. Stowe. Can you form any Judgment how long it might be?

Mr. Donston. I think it could not be Five Minutes.

Mr. Stowe. When you met Lord Byron going out of the Door, was any Thing said?

Mr. Donston. No.

Mr. Stowe. Do you remember any Thing more that passed in the House that gave you any Alarm in Regard to Lord Byron and Mr. Chaworth?

Mr.

Mr. Donston. Yes, when I was in the Room, and saw that Lord Byron was not there, I began to reflect that they possibly might meet and resume their Discourse; by that Time the Bell was rung by some of the Company, and the Waiter came into the Room. I met the Waiter, and asked him if he saw Mr. Chaworth? and he said he believed he was be'ow Stairs; I desired he would go and see for him immediately, and tell him I must speak to him. I was then preparing to go down myself, and the Waiter immediately came up with an Account of Mr. Chaworth's being run through the Body.

Mr. Stowe. What did you and the rest of the Company upon that?

Mr. Donston. We all hastened down to the Room where Mr. Chaworth was.

Mr. Stowe. Did you see Mr. Chaworth in the Room, and who was there, and in what Situation? describe the Particulars.

Mr. Donston. I saw him in a great Chair in the Corner of the Room. Mr. Fynmore, the Master of the Tavern, was in the Room.

Mr. Stowe. How did Mr. Chaworth appear?

Mr. Donston. He sat in the Chair, leaning his Head back; I went to him, and asked him how he did? he said he was run through the Body, and had not Five Minutes to live. Upon my asking how it happened? he said he and Lord Byron went into the Room and fought. I then told him, I hoped his Wound was not so bad as he apprehended; he said he was sure he was run through the Body, for that my Lord was very near him, and had shortened his Sword.

Mr. Stowe. Did you enquire any Thing of Mr. Chaworth, how they came to go into that Room and fight?

Mr. Donston. No, I did not particularly.

Mr. Stowe. Did Mr. Chaworth relate any Thing to you about his going into the Room?

Mr. Donston. He did; and said, when he turned round from shutting the Door, he saw Lord Byron with his Sword half-drawn, and calling upon him to defend himself.

Mr. Stowe. What did Mr. Chaworth do when Lord Byron so called upon him?

Mr. Donston. He drew, and they immediately engaged.

Mr. Stowe. Who said so?

Mr. Donston. Mr. Chaworth himself said so.

Mr. Stowe. Was any Thing more said by Mr. Chaworth to you at that Time concerning this Matter?

Mr. Donston. No, I do not recollect any Thing else material.

Lord High Steward. Recollect yourself, whether any Thing else material happened; or did Mr. Chaworth say upon what Occasion they fought?

Mr. Donston. No, he did not to me; for I then got up, and he talked to other People who flocked about him.

Mr. Stowe. Did you hear Mr. Chaworth make any Enquiry concerning Lord Byron?

Mr. Donston. I heard him say he thought he had wounded Lord Byron.

Mr. Stowe. Did Mr. Chaworth say to you any Thing of the Manner in which he apprehended he had wounded Lord Byron?

Mr. Donston. No, he did not to me.

Mr. Stowe. At the Time you left the Room at the Star and Garter, were all the Company sober or not?

Mr. Donston. I think, perfectly so.

Mr. Stowe. My Lords, this is all I shall examine Mr. Donston to.

Lord High Steward. Lord Byron, would your Lordship ask this Witness any Questions?

Lord Byron. What Reason had you to imagine that if I and Mr. Chaworth should meet we should resume the Discourse?

Mr. Donston. It was very likely that they should come together, as I met my Lord so soon after I had parted with Mr. Chaworth.

Lord Byron. Was it not on account of the Words which you heard repeated in the Room, and what passed after Mr. Chaworth and you went out of the Room together?

Mr. Donston. It was partly from the Words I heard in the Room, and partly from Mr. Chaworth's having questioned me about them.

Lord Montfort. Why did you follow Mr. Chaworth out of the Room?

Mr. Donston. Mr. Chaworth took hold of my Arm, and asked me to speak with him.

Lord Montfort. How came you not to follow Lord Byron down Stairs?

Mr. Donston. I was returning into the Room, and was not sure it was Lord Byron till I came into the Room and saw that he was not there.

Earl of Buckinghamshire. Do you imagine Lord Byron could overhear any Part of the Conversation you had with Mr. Chaworth upon the Stairs?

Mr.

Mr. Donston. I do not imagine Lord Byron could overhear it at that Distance.

Lord Berkeley. Do you know of any Words spoken by Lord Byron that could induce Mr. Chaworth to say, that if he wanted any Thing with Sir Charles Sedley he lived in such a Place, and that he, Mr. Chaworth, lived in Berkley-Row?

Mr. Donston. It arose from Lord Byron's asking the Question a Second Time about Sir Charles Sedley's Manor.

Lord Berkeley. When Mr. Chaworth said to you, Do you think I have been short in what I said to Lord Byron? do not you apprehend, that that referred to the Words that Mr. Chaworth had said in the Room?

Mr. Donston. I believe it did.

Lord Berkeley. Did Mr. Chaworth leave his Sword in the Room as well as his Hat?

Mr. Donston. I do not believe he did; I think he never took his Sword off.

Lord Mansfield. Whether Lord Byron took his Hat with him when he went out?

Mr. Donston. I do not know at all.

Earl Talbot. When you reproved Mr. Chaworth for having gone too far in what he had said to Lord Byron, by saying, I think he said rather more than was necessary on so trifling an Occasion, did not you think the Words he had said were of Force enough to a Man of strict Honour, and nice Sensibility, to require an Explanation?

Mr. Donston. I did at first; but as they were spoke without much Heat or Passion, and no apparent Notice taken either by Lord Byron, or the rest of the Company, I thought they might admit of a different Construction.

Lord Cathcart. Did any Thing pass between you further than what you have acquainted the Lords with?

Mr. Donston. Nothing more.

Lord Viscount Weymouth. Did Mr. Chaworth say any Thing that led you to imagine that Lord Byron would take Notice of it?

Mr. Donston. Nothing more than his asking me that Question.

Earl Poulet. Do you apprehend that at the Time those Words were spoke about Sir Charles Sedley's Manors, they were said in a Manner reflecting upon Sir Charles Sedley, or Mr. Chaworth?

Mr. Donston. No, I do not; it seemed to me to be rather questioning the Bounds of their Manors, as I understood it.

Mr. Cornwall. My Lords, we desire Mr. Molyneux may be sworn.

Francis Molyneux, Esquire (Who was sworn in like Manner).

Mr. Cornwall. Mr. Molyneux will inform your Lordships if he dined at the Star and Garter on the Twenty-sixth of January last.

Lord Mansfield. I should think it unnecessary to ask this Question of every Witness.

Mr. Cornwall. Was you in Company with Lord Byron and Mr. Chaworth on the Twenty-sixth of January last?

Mr. Molyneux. I was.

Mr. Cornwall. Do you recollect any Discourse upon the Subject of Game?

Mr. Molyneux. I do.

Mr. Cornwall. Was Lord Byron and Mr. Chaworth engaged in that Discourse?

Mr. Molyneux. They were.

Mr. Cornwall. At what Time of the Day might that Discourse begin?

Mr. Molyneux. About Seven of the Clock, I think.

Mr. Cornwall. Was there any Difference of Opinion between Lord Byron and Mr. Chaworth upon that Subject?

Mr. Molyneux. There was.

Mr. Cornwall. Please to tell their Lordships how that was expressed?

Mr. Molyneux. Mr. Chaworth said he had always been strict in preserving his Game, and that that was the best Method of preserving them; Lord Byron said he had never been strict, and that he had more Game about Newstead than any body else.

Mr. Cornwall. Was any Bet proposed by any of the Company?

Mr. Molyneux. There was.

Mr. Cornwall. By whom?

Mr. Molyneux. By Lord Byron.

Mr. Cornwall. What were the Terms of the Bet?

Mr. Molyneux. He offered to lay One hundred Pounds that he had more Game about Newstead than Sir Charles Sedley or Mr. Chaworth.
Mr.

- Mr. Cornwall.* Did Mr. Chaworth take the Bet?
- Mr. Molyneux.* Mr. Chaworth said, if he would call for Pen, Ink, and Paper, he would lay him the Wager.
- Mr. Cornwall.* Was nothing more said upon that Subject?
- Mr. Molyneux.* Lord Byron said he should be glad to know where Sir Charles Sedley's Manor was.
- Mr. Cornwall.* What Answer was made to that Question?
- Mr. Molyneux.* Mr. Chaworth said Nuttall; but if your Lordship should have any Thing to say to Sir Charles Sedley, he lives at one Mr. Cooper's in Dean-street.
- Mr. Cornwall.* Was any Thing further said by any Person, or was that the Whole?
- Mr. Molyneux.* Lord Byron asked again where Sir Charles Sedley's Manor laid.
- Mr. Cornwall.* And what Answer was given to Lord Byron?
- Mr. Molyneux.* Mr. Chaworth said he had already informed Lord Byron where Sir Charles Sedley lived; and his Lordship knew where he lived, if he had any Thing to say to him.
- Mr. Cornwall.* Was there any more Conversation?
- Mr. Molyneux.* No more upon that Subject.
- Mr. Cornwall.* How long did Lord Byron continue in Company after this Conversation ceased?
- Mr. Molyneux.* I believe he continued in Company about an Hour.
- Mr. Cornwall.* Did he join in any Part of that Time in any future Conversation?
- Mr. Molyneux.* He conversed with me.
- Mr. Cornwall.* Was you near him?
- Mr. Molyneux.* I sat next to him.
- Mr. Cornwall.* On what Subject did Lord Byron converse with you?
- Mr. Molyneux.* About the Duke of York's House.
- Mr. Cornwall.* Upon any other Subject?
- Mr. Molyneux.* Upon no other.
- Mr. Cornwall.* Did he appear to be in good Humour?
- Mr. Molyneux.* I thought he did; I did not see any Thing to the contrary.
- Mr. Cornwall.* Do you recollect at what Time Mr. Chaworth quitted the Room?
- Mr. Molyneux.* I think it was about Eight of the Clock.
- Mr. Cornwall.* Did any Body go out with Mr. Chaworth, and who?
- Mr. Molyneux.* Mr. Donston, I think, went out with him. I do not know whether he went out with him, or followed him.
- Mr. Cornwall.* Do you recollect Lord Byron's quitting the Room?
- Mr. Molyneux.* I do.
- Mr. Cornwall.* At what Time?
- Mr. Molyneux.* About Seven or Eight Minutes after Mr. Chaworth.
- Mr. Cornwall.* Where did you next see Mr. Chaworth?
- Mr. Molyneux.* In a Room up One Pair of Stairs.
- Mr. Cornwall.* How soon after Lord Byron quitted the Room?
- Mr. Molyneux.* I cannot justly say; but I think it might be about Five or Six Minutes.
- Mr. Cornwall.* In what Condition did you find Mr. Chaworth?
- Mr. Molyneux.* He was sitting in a great Chair, and Lord Byron standing by him.
- Mr. Cornwall.* Did you hear Mr. Chaworth declare any Thing, and what?
- Mr. Molyneux.* Mr. Chaworth said he had very few Hours to live; that Lord Byron had shortened his Sword and stabbed him into the Belly; that he should be glad to say something to a particular Friend before he died; I left the Room soon afterwards.
- Mr. Cornwall.* Did you hear Mr. Chaworth declare any Thing, and what after that?
- Mr. Molyneux.* I heard him say again, that he had but a very few Hours to live.
- Mr. Cornwall.* Did you hear Mr. Chaworth declare any Thing else at that Time?
- Mr. Molyneux.* I did not.
- Mr. Cornwall.* My Lords, we have done with this Witness.
- Lord High Steward.* Lord Byron, will your Lordship ask any Questions of this Witness?
- Lord Byron.* Was not the Conversation between you and me very short?
- Mr. Molyneux.* It was not of long Duration.
- Lord Byron.* My Lords, I shall ask this Witness no more Questions.
- Earl of Morton.* I understood that Lord Byron said he had more Game upon his Manor than any Body, and that he would lay One hundred Pounds of that; was that what you said?

Mr. Molyneux. It was.

Mr. Attorney General. I understand Mr. Hawkins and Mr. Adair, the Two Surgeons that are attending here, in all Probability may be wanted, and therefore if your Lordships please, we will call them.

Lord High Steward. Yes, certainly, the Surgeons may be called, as they may be wanted elsewhere.

Lords. Ay, ay.

Cæsar Hawkins, Esquire (Who was sworn in like Manner).

Mr. Attorney General. Mr. Hawkins, was you sent for to Mr. Chaworth, on the Twenty-sixth of January last?

Mr. Hawkins. I was.

Mr. Attorney General. Did you go to him?

Mr. Hawkins. I did, immediately upon receiving the Message.

Mr. Attorney General. What Time of the Night might that be?

Mr. Hawkins. A little after Eight, as near as I can recollect.

Mr. Attorney General. In what Condition did you find Mr. Chaworth?

Mr. Hawkins. I found him sitting by the Fire Side, in the Back Room, up One Pair of Stairs, with the lower Part of his Waistcoat open, his Shirt bloody, and his Hand holding his Belly.

Mr. Attorney General. Had you any Conversation with him there, how that Misfortune had befallen him?

Mr. Hawkins. He said to me, that he believed he had received a mortal Wound, that he felt within himself a peculiar Kind of Faintness and Sinking; and that he had a Sensation of Stretching and Swelling of his Belly, that made him believe he bled internally.

Mr. Attorney General. Did he say any Thing more how this unfortunate Affair happened?

Mr. Hawkins. After I had made my proper Enquiries and Examination, he pressed me earnestly to tell him what his real Situation was, and, as he expressed it, not to flatter him, but to inform him truly, if I thought him in any immediate Danger, for if he was, that he had private Affairs which he wished extremely to settle. I told him, I was afraid his Wound was dangerous; he then desired that Mr. Levinz might be immediately sent for to him, and desiring the other Gentlemen, who were in the Room, to step out for a few Minutes, he gave me some Directions relative to his private Affairs, which he desired I would mention to Mr. Levinz, in case he died before Mr. Levinz could be brought to him. This Conversation being ended, I think before the other Gentlemen returned into the Room, I asked him in what Position his Body was when he received the Wound? To which Question, as I apprehend to make his Answer more explicit, he gave me the following Detail, That Lord Byron and he came into that Room together, Lord Byron leading the Way, and walking on towards the further End of the Room, said something very rough to him, upon which he said, then my Lord it is right I should fasten the Door (I am not sure whether he said fasten the Door, or bolt the Door) that he turned to the Door and did fasten it; that as he turned round again towards Lord Byron, he saw his Lordship with his Sword either drawn, or nearly drawn, upon which he immediately drew his own, and at the same Time that he presented the Point of his Sword to his Lordship, that he made a Thrust at him, which he thought had hit him, and dangerously wounded or killed him; that immediately afterwards he perceived his Lordship shortening his Arm to make a Thrust at him, which he thought to have parried with his Left-hand, with which he endeavoured to catch the Point of the Sword; and he looked at his Hand once or twice, thinking that he had either scratched or wounded his Hand in the Attempt; that he perceived the Sword enter his Body, and imagined it had gone in deep, for that he had felt a Pain quite through to his Back; that immediately after he laid hold of the Gripe of Lord Byron's Sword, and struggling with him for it, and being the stronger Man, he disarmed his Lordship, saying to him, he hoped he was not dangerously wounded; that Lord Byron replied something to the same Purpose to him; and, I think, added, that Lord Byron said, That he hoped now he would allow or acknowledge (it was either allow, or acknowledge, I am not sure which of the Two Words) that he (his Lordship) was as brave a Man as any other in the Kingdom; and some considerable Time passed afterwards at the Tavern, before Mr. Chaworth was carried to his own House, partly on Account of Mr. Chaworth's being of Opinion that he still felt himself bleeding inwardly, and as he wished extremely to see Mr. Levinz, he desired to avoid moving, for fear the Bleeding should be increased by it, and so accelerate his Death; a Part of the Time was likewise taken up in our endeavouring to get proper Conveniencies for his Removal; during this Time he recollected some other little Circumstances relative to his private Affairs, on which Account he desired the Gentlemen, who were then in the Room, to retire again; when he had mentioned what he had to say upon that Subject, he repeated to me again with great Earnestness, what I had heard him declare before, Two or Three Times in different Expressions, equally strong, that pained and distressed as he then was, and in immediate Danger of Death, he had rather be in his present Situation, than live under the Misfortune of having killed another Person. This strong Expression of Humanity led me to ask him, if there had been any serious Cause of Offence between them, meaning between Lord Byron and himself, that should have occasioned the Quarrel? He paused for a Moment or Two, as One recollecting himself, and then answered, No, nothing that might not have been explained and made up; I think his Expression was easily made up. After a little Time more he grew stronger, and he was removed to his own House, without any great Uneasiness or Difficulty. I had desired the Assistance of another Surgeon; and then Mr. Adair, and soon after Dr. Addington, his Physician, met me. We all joined in our best Endeavours to give him some Relief, but without any Hopes of doing him Good, and the next Morning, about Nine o'Clock, he expired. On the Monday Evening, by the Coroner's Directions, we examined the dead Body: The Sword had entered about an Inch on the Left Side of the Navel, and, passing obliquely upwards, had made its Exit about Five or Six Inches higher, on the left Side of the Back: In its Passage the Sword went through One of the small Intestines, and had made a very large Opening at the back Part of the Bottom of the Stomach; so that all the Contents of the Stomach, a Part from the Intestine, and a Quantity of Blood, were mixed together in the Cavity of the Belly. The Sword had likewise passed through the lower Part of the Diaphragm, and there was a small Quantity of Blood in the Cavity of the Left Breast. Upon the whole, there was not the least Doubt but that the Wound we examined was the immediate Cause of Mr. Chaworth's Death.

Mr. Attorney General. My Lords, we have done with this Witness.

Lord High Steward. My Lord Byron, would your Lordship chuse to ask this Witness any Questions?

Lord Byron. No, my Lords.

Mr. Solicitor General. The next Witness, if your Lordships please, is Mr. Adair, the other Surgeon.

Robert Adair, Esquire (Who was sworn in like Manner).

Mr. Solicitor General. Do you remember being sent for to Mr. Chaworth on the Twenty-sixth of January last?

Mr. Adair. I was.

Mr. Solicitor General. At what Time were you sent for?

Mr. Adair. About Nine o' Clock.

Mr. Solicitor General. In what Condition did you find Mr. Chaworth?

Mr. Adair. I found him with a Wound upon the Left Side of his Belly near the Navel, which passed upwards, and went through between Five and Six Inches higher than at its Entrance.

Mr. Solicitor General. Did Mr. Chaworth say any Thing upon the Subject of the Wound?

Mr. Adair. Nothing to me.

Mr. Solicitor General. Nor in your Hearing?

Mr. Adair. Nor in my Hearing.

Mr. Solicitor General. Was you present when the Body was opened?

Mr. Adair. I was present.

Mr. Solicitor General. Do you think this Wound occasioned his Death?

Mr. Adair. Most certainly.

Lord High Steward. My Lord Byron, does your Lordship chuse to ask this Witness any Questions?

Lord Byron. No, my Lords.

Mr. Serjeant Glynn. If your Lordships please, we will now call John Sherwin, Esquire.

John

John Sherwin, Esquire (Who was sworn in like Manner).

Mr. Serjeant Glynn. Were you at the Star and Garter, at the Nottinghamshire Club, on the Twenty-sixth of January last?

Mr. Sherwin. I was.

Mr. Serjeant Glynn. Do you remember whether Lord Byron and Mr. Chaworth were there?

Mr. Sherwin. They were.

Mr. Serjeant Glynn. Do you remember any Conversation about Game?

Mr. Sherwin. There had been some Conversation by the Company in general about Game.

Mr. Serjeant Glynn. Do you remember what Part Lord Byron, and what Part Mr. Chaworth, took in that Conversation?

Mr. Sherwin. Lord Byron spoke upon that Subject.

Mr. Serjeant Glynn. What did Lord Byron say?

Mr. Sherwin. He thought that being too severe hurt the Game, and that they were preferred more by the other Method.

Mr. Serjeant Glynn. Did Mr. Chaworth express himself of a different Opinion?

Mr. Sherwin. Mr. Chaworth did.

Mr. Serjeant Glynn. What did Mr. Chaworth say?

Mr. Sherwin. He said nothing could be so clear as that the Poachers were idle Fellows, and did a great deal of Mischief in the Country.

Mr. Serjeant Glynn. Did Mr. Chaworth say any Thing about Game in his own Manors?

Mr. Sherwin. After this Conversation, Lord Byron offered a Bet of One hundred Pounds, that he had more Game upon an Acre on his Manor than Mr. Chaworth had.

Mr. Serjeant Glynn. Did Mr. Chaworth accept the Bet?

Mr. Sherwin. Mr. Chaworth said he would.

Mr. Serjeant Glynn. What did he say upon that?

Mr. Sherwin. He offered to take the Bet, and I believe desired that Pen, Ink, and Paper might be sent for.

Mr. Serjeant Glynn. Was there any Bet laid?

Mr. Sherwin. I said it was a Bet that could never be determined.

Mr. Serjeant Glynn. Was any Thing said about Sir Charles Sedley's Manor?

Mr. Sherwin. After this there arose a Dispute about their Manors.

Mr. Serjeant Glynn. Repeat what passed upon that Occasion?

Mr. Sherwin. Nuttall Manor was mentioned, and another or Two that I do not remember.

Mr. Serjeant Glynn. By whom was Nuttall mentioned?

Mr. Sherwin. I remember its being mentioned by Mr. Chaworth; he said, your Lordship has nothing to do there, it is Sir Charles Sedley's Manor, it was bought out of my Family.

Mr. Serjeant Glynn. Was there any Thing more said upon this Subject?

Mr. Sherwin. There was more Conversation, which I do not remember.

Mr. Serjeant Glynn. How long did the Conversation continue upon this Subject?

Mr. Sherwin. It might continue a Quarter of an Hour, or Twenty Minutes.

Mr. Serjeant Glynn. Did the Company then enter upon any other Subject of Conversation?

Mr. Sherwin. During the Dispute between Lord Byron and Mr. Chaworth, I remember Mr. Chaworth's saying, as to Sir Charles Sedley, my Lord, he will give you an Answer; as to myself, your Lordship knows where I live.

Mr. Serjeant Glynn. Did Lord Byron take any Part in the future Conversation of the Company?

Mr. Sherwin. Not that I remember; in general, I believe, he talked with Mr. Molyneux, who sat next him.

Mr. Serjeant Glynn. Did he appear to be in good Humour or not?

Mr. Sherwin. I did not observe that at all, either One Way or the other; there was no further Conversation between Lord Byron and Mr. Chaworth.

Mr. Serjeant Glynn. When did Mr. Chaworth leave the Room?

Mr. Sherwin. It might be Twenty Minutes after Mr. Chaworth had said, You know where I live, my Lord.

Mr.

Mr. Serjeant Glynn. Did Mr. Chaworth go out alone, or did any Person go with him?

Mr. Sherwin. He asked Mr. Donston, who sat next him, to go out with him, he wanted to speak to him.

Mr. Serjeant Glynn. Did Mr. Donston return again to the Company, and how soon?

Mr. Sherwin. He came into the Room again very soon, almost in Two Minutes.

Mr. Serjeant Glynn. Did you observe when Lord Byron left the Room?

Mr. Sherwin. I remember his getting up out of his Chair.

Mr. Serjeant Glynn. Before or after the Return of Mr. Donston?

Mr. Sherwin. I think it was before.

Mr. Serjeant Glynn. Where did you see Mr. Chaworth again that Evening?

Mr. Sherwin. Soon after Mr. Donston came into the Room again, a Drawer, or somebody, came in, and said there had been a Quarrel; the Company above Stairs went down Stairs into that Room where Mr. Chaworth was; I went with them.

Mr. Serjeant Glynn. In what Condition did you find Mr. Chaworth?

Mr. Sherwin. He was sitting in a Chair, holding his Belly with his Right Hand, his Waistcoat was open, and his Shirt bloody.

Mr. Serjeant Glynn. Had you any Conversation with Mr. Chaworth?

Mr. Sherwin. I do not remember I had.

Mr. Serjeant Glynn. Did you hear any Conversation between Mr. Chaworth, and any other of the Company?

Mr. Sherwin. Somebody asked him how he did; he said he had not Five Minutes, or Five Hours, to live, I forget which; Mr. Hawkins came in, who had been sent for, and in a little Time the Company left Mr. Hawkins and Mr. Chaworth together, and went up Stairs, where they had dined.

Mr. Serjeant Glynn. Did you hear any Declarations from Mr. Chaworth, respecting the Accident that had happened to him?

Mr. Sherwin. I did not.

Lord High Steward. Would Lord Byron ask the Witness any Questions?

Lord Byron. How was Mr. Chaworth employed during the Twenty Minutes that he was in the Room, after the Conversation that passed?

Mr. Sherwin. I do not remember in particular, but I imagine he was talking to the Gentlemen on his Right-hand, or on his Left.

Lord Byron. Was he not employed in settling the Reckoning?

Mr. Sherwin. I believe he was.

Lord Byron. Did you observe any Thing particular in his Manner at the Time?

Mr. Sherwin. I cannot say I did.

Lord High Steward. The Witness may withdraw.

Mr. Stowe. If your Lordships please, the next Witness we will call is Thomas Willoughby, Esquire.

The Honourable Thomas Willoughby (Who was sworn in like Manner).

Mr. Stowe. Was you at the Star and Garter on the Twenty-sixth of January last?

Mr. Willoughby. I was.

Mr. Stowe. Was you there between Four o'Clock and Seven in the Afternoon?

Mr. Willoughby. I dined there a little after Four, and was there at Seven in the Afternoon.

Mr. Stowe. Do you remember any Dispute between Lord Byron and Mr. Chaworth, concerning the Preservation of Game?

Mr. Willoughby. They were of different Opinions about their preserving of Game.

Mr. Stowe. What passed between Lord Byron and Mr. Chaworth upon that Subject?

Mr. Willoughby. Mr. Chaworth's Argument was, that there was no such Thing as having Game, unless Gentlemen were severe with the Poachers.

Mr. Stowe. Did Lord Byron differ with Mr. Chaworth upon that Head?

Mr. Willoughby. He did.

Mr. Stowe. Did any Words of Anger pass between them?

Mr. Willoughby. I did not perceive any.

Mr. Stowe. Do you remember any Inquiry made concerning the Manors of Sir Charles Sedley?

Mr. Willoughby. Nuttall, a Manor of Sir Charles Sedley's, was mentioned.

Mr. Stowe. By whom?

Mr. Willoughby. I do not know whether it was mentioned by Lord Byron first, or Mr. Chaworth, but Mr. Chaworth said Nuttall belonged to Sir Charles Sedley; he knew it, for it was bought of his Family.

Mr. Stowe. Did any Thing more pass, and what, about that?

Mr. Willoughby. No, not that I recollect.

Mr. Stowe. Do you remember any Bet on either Side?

Mr. Willoughby. Lord Byron offered to bet Mr. Chaworth One hundred Pounds that he had more Game upon his Manor or Manors, than Mr. Chaworth had.

Mr. Stowe. What followed upon that Offer?

Mr. Willoughby. Mr. Sherwin said it would be very difficult to decide that Bet.

Mr. Stowe. Do you know if any Bet was made?

Mr. Willoughby. I do not.

Mr. Stowe. Were there any Words passed afterwards between Lord Byron and Mr. Chaworth, respecting Sir Charles Sedley, his Manor, or his Estate?

Mr. Willoughby. Not that I heard.

Mr. Stowe. Do you remember Mr. Chaworth afterwards going out of the Room?

Mr. Willoughby. I do.

Mr. Stowe. At what Distance of Time might that be from the finishing the Conversation?

Mr. Willoughby. Perhaps Three Quarters of an Hour, or thereabouts, I cannot say exactly.

Mr. Stowe. Did Lord Byron during that Three Quarters of an Hour, discourse with Mr. Chaworth, or any other Gentleman of the Company?

Mr. Willoughby. I did not hear him.

Mr. Stowe. Do you recollect when Mr. Chaworth went out of the Room if any body went with him or followed him?

Mr. Willoughby. Mr. Donston went out at the same Time.

Mr. Stowe. Did Mr. Chaworth, when he went out of the Room, take his Hat with him or not.

Mr. Willoughby. I did not take Notice of that.

Mr. Stowe. How long was Mr. Chaworth out of the Room, and did he return again?

Mr. Willoughby. He never returned again.

Mr. Stowe. Did Mr. Donston return again?

Mr. Willoughby. He did.

Mr. Stowe. In what Space of Time?

Mr. Willoughby. In a very short Time.

Mr. Stowe. Can you form any Judgment of the Time?

Mr. Willoughby. I cannot speak exactly, perhaps Five Minutes.

Mr. Stowe. Where was Lord Byron when Mr. Donston came into the Room?

Mr. Willoughby. He was got up and gone towards the Door, or out of the Door, I do not know which.

Mr. Stowe. Did Lord Byron take his Hat?

Mr. Willoughby. I do not know.

Mr. Stowe. How long might Lord Byron be gone out of the Room before you heard any Thing more relative to Lord Byron or Mr. Chaworth?

Mr. Willoughby. A very few Minutes.

Mr. Stowe. Who mentioned any Thing to you concerning Lord Byron or Mr. Chaworth?

Mr. Willoughby. The Waiter came up and told us what had happened.

Mr. Stowe. Did you go to the Place and see Lord Byron and Mr. Chaworth, or either of them there?

Mr. Willoughby. I did.

Mr. Stowe. Did you see Mr. Chaworth?

Mr. Willoughby. I did.

Mr. Stowe. In what Condition and Situation was Mr. Chaworth?

Mr. Willoughby. He was sitting in a Chair, with his Hand on his Belly, and his Shirt was bloody.

Mr. Stowe. Did Mr. Chaworth say any Thing how he came by that Wound?

Mr. Willoughby. He did not; only he said he was a dying Man, and that Lord Byron had run him through.

Mr. Stowe. Did he say any Thing more that you recollect?

Mr. Willoughby. He said several Times over that he was a dying Man, and had but a few Minutes to live.

Mr. Stowe. My Lords, we have done with this Witness!

Lord High Steward. Lord Byron, would you ask this Witness any Questions?

Lord Byron. Was not you conversing with Mr. Hewett, during the latter Part of the Conversation between Mr. Chaworth and me, so as you might not hear it?

Mr. Willoughby. The last Word I heard, was that Nuttall belonged to Sir Charles Sedley, that it was bought of his Family, and he knew it.

Lord Byron. Was not you conversing with Mr. Hewett so as to prevent you from hearing any more?

Mr. Willoughby. That was the last I heard.

Lord High Steward. Has Lord Byron any Thing more to ask this Witness?

Lord Byron. No, my Lord.

Lord High Steward. The Witness may withdraw.

Mr. Cornwall. If your Lordships please, the next Witness we shall call is John Edwards.

John Edwards (Who was sworn in like Manner).

Mr. Cornwall. Was not you a Waiter at the Star and Garter, on the Twenty-sixth of Janugry last?

John Edwards. I was.

Mr. Cornwall. Did you attend the Gentlemen of the Nottinghamshire Club who met there that Day between Eight and Nine in the Evening?

John Edwards. I did.

Mr. Cornwall. What was the Purpose of your Attendance between Eight and Nine?

John Edwards. To answer the Bell, and to carry any Thing into the Room.

Mr. Cornwall. What Commands had the Company laid upon you at that Time?

John Edwards. To bring up a Bottle of Claret.

Mr. Cornwall. Did you go down?

John Edwards. I did, to the Bar, but not into the Cellar.

Mr. Cornwall. What did you do then?

John Edwards. I called to my Master to get some Wine, who, when I called him first, I thought he was in the Kitchen, and I called him twice or thrice, and then I found him in the Larder. I told him the Gentlemen wanted a single Bottle of Claret at the Nottinghamshire Club.

Mr. Cornwall. Whilst you were standing at the Bar waiting for the Bottle of Claret, did you hear the Bell ring?

John Edwards. I did not.

Mr. Cornwall. Did you hear any Body call?

John Edwards. I heard somebody call Waiter up Stairs.

Mr. Cornwall. Did you know the Voice?

John Edwards. I did not.

Mr. Cornwall. Did you obey?

John Edwards. I did not the First Time, I thought to have taken the Wine up Stairs with me.

Mr. Cornwall. Was it repeated?

John Edwards. It was once or twice.

Mr. Cornwall. Did you go up?

John Edwards. I did.

Mr. Cornwall. Who did you meet?

John Edwards. When I came up the first Pair of Stairs, I saw Lord Byron and Mr. Chaworth coming down, or rather waiting upon the Stairs for somebody to come up. Lord Byron asked me if either of these Rooms were empty (there being Two Rooms in his View) I answered in the Affirmative, and said, This; being the Door which was on the Right-hand.

Mr. Cornwall. What then did you do?

John Edwards. I had a Candle in my Right Hand; I opened a green Bays Door, with a Brass Lock, with my Left Hand, and shewed Lord Byron and Mr. Chaworth into the Room; I set the Candle upon the Table in the Room; I quitted the Room, and pulled the inner Door after me; the outer Door shuts with a Pully. I went down Stairs immediately for the Bottle of Wine, which I had desired my Master to get; I met him by the Bar or the Cellar Door (which are together) with the Wine in his Hand. I took it from him and went up Stairs to the Nottinghamshire Club up Two Pair of Stairs. I drew the Cork, and heard the Bell

Bell ring in the Room into which I had shewed Lord Byron and Mr. Chaworth, twice, whilst I was decanting the Wine. When I had decanted the Wine, I came down Stairs, and found I was too late to answer the Bell, as is common for a Waiter that shews the Room. I heard somebody had been in. When I came to the Ground Floor, the first Person I spoke to (to the best of my Knowledge) was my Master. He clapp'd his Hands together, and said Mr. Chaworth is wounded, or Lord Byron has wounded Mr. Chaworth; the Expression I cannot exactly tell.

Mr. Cornwall. Did you go into the Room?

John Edwards. Not till after I had been in the Nottinghamshire Club Room, and had informed the Gentlemen that Mr. Chaworth was wounded.

Mr. Cornwall. Did you stay long?

John Edwards. I did not stay long.

Mr. Cornwall. Did you hear Mr. Chaworth say any Thing?

John Edwards. He seemed extremely desirous of seeing Two or Three Friends, particularly Mr. Levinz.

Mr. Cornwall. What was the Size of the Room you shewed Lord Byron and Mr. Chaworth into?

John Edwards. In some Parts of the Room, I have measured it, it is Sixteen Feet long and Sixteen Feet broad in some Parts; the Chimney is taken out of the Corner of the Room.

Mr. Cornwall. What kind of a Candle did you leave in the Room?

John Edwards. A common Tallow Candle about Eight in the Pound.

Mr. Cornwall. Was there any other Candle in the Room?

John Edwards. There was no other Candle in the Room, nor no other Light to my Knowledge.

Mr. Cornwall. Was there a Fire in the Room?

John Edwards. There was a Fire in the Room, but it was rather down.

Mr. Cornwall. We have done with this Witness.

Lord High Steward. Lord Byron, would your Lordship ask this Witness any Questions?

Lord Byron. Was there any Table in the Room?

John Edwards. There was a Table in the Room.

Lord Byron. Did you set the Candle upon it?

John Edwards. I did.

Lord Byron. How large a Space might the Chairs and Furniture of the Room take up from the Length of it?

John Edwards. I cannot tell indeed.

Lord Byron. In what Part of the Room did you leave Mr. Chaworth and me standing?

John Edwards. Both walked towards the Fire Place.

Lord Mansfield. I would ask this Witness whether he is sure that he shut the inner Door, on Mr. Chaworth and Lord Byron's going into the Room?

John Edwards. I pulled it after me, but cannot tell certainly whether it shut or not.

Lord Mansfield. Was there any Bolt to the inner Door?

John Edwards. There is, it is a Brass Lock, and there is a little Bolt at the Bottom.

Mr. Attorney General. If your Lordships please, we will call Mr. Fynmore.

Mr. James Fynmore (Who was sworn in like Manner).

Mr. Attorney General. My Lords, this is the Master of the Tavern.

Do you remember going up Stairs on the Twenty-sixth of January last, into the Room where Lord Byron and Mr. Chaworth were?

Mr. Fynmore. I do.

Mr. Attorney General. What induced you to go thither?

Mr. Fynmore. A Waiter came to me, and told me that Two Gentlemen were come out of the Nottinghamshire Club, into the Room Number Seven, and desired to speak to me.

Mr. Attorney General. What is the Waiter's Name?

Mr. Fynmore. John Gotborp.

Mr. Attorney General. In what Situation did you find Lord Byron and Mr. Chaworth?

Mr. Fynmore. I found them standing close together, Mr. Chaworth had his Sword in his Left-hand, and Lord Byron had his in his Right-hand. Mr. Chaworth said, Here, James, take my Sword, for I am disarmed, or I have disarmed him, I do not know which. I turned to Lord Byron, and said, Pray, my Lord, give me your Sword; on which, Lord Byron gave me his Sword, and I took it and went down Stairs with it. As I was going out of the Room, either One or both called after me, and desired me to get Help immediately; I went down the Stairs

Stairs with the two Swords, and laid them upon the Table, in a Room at the Bottom of the Stairs, and then called Mr. Hawkins.

Mr. Attorney General. Did you hear Mr. Chaworth say any Thing how this Accident had befallen him?

Mr. Fynmore. No.

Mr. Attorney General. My Lords, we have done with this Witness.

Lord High Steward. Lord Byron, will you ask this Witness any Questions.

Lord Byron. Did not you carry up the Club-Book into the Room where we dined?

Mr. Fynmore. I went up at Seven o'Clock, as is the Custom, with the Book and a Bill.

Lord Byron. Did you wait the settling of the Bill?

Mr. Fynmore. I did.

Lord Byron. Did not Mr. Chaworth settle it?

Mr. Fynmore. Mr. Chaworth settled the Book that Day.

Lord Byron. What Time might it take up in settling it?

Mr. Fynmore. It was done in Five or Six Minutes.

Lord Byron. Did you make any Observation upon Mr. Chaworth's Manner of settling it, or observe any Thing particular?

Mr. Fynmore. No, I think not any Thing particular.

Lord Byron. Did you observe him to be ruffled or confused?

Mr. Fynmore. In One Particular only; the Book is marked with Lines ruled in Checks, each Gentleman's Name is upon a Line, and against each Name, if the Gentleman be present, there is put a o; if absent 5 s. The only Remark I made of any Flurry in Mr. Chaworth, was, he put 5 s. against Lord Byron's Name instead of a o; upon which I said, Sir, my Lord is present; upon which he altered it, and made a o.

Lord Byron. What was the Size of the Room where we were?

Mr. Fynmore. It was sixteen Feet in the clear both Ways, except that the Chimney was taken out of one of the Corners.

Lord Byron. What Space might the Chairs take up from the Dimensions?

Mr. Fynmore. The Chairs are pretty large, they might take two Feet each Chair into the Room.

Lord Byron. Is there any inner Fastening, and what, to the Door?

Mr. Fynmore. The Door has a Brass Lock, and there is a little Catch underneath, as there usually are to these Doors.

Lord Byron. Is it not a Bolt?

Mr. Fynmore. It is a little Sliding Bolt.

Lord Byron. When you went into the Room, in what Part did you find me and Mr. Chaworth standing?

Mr. Fynmore. I saw Lord Byron and Mr. Chaworth standing Shoulder to Shoulder, close by the Fire.

A Lord. Was the Door bolted when you first came to the Room?

Mr. Fynmore. No, it was not.

Lord Viscount Folkstone. Did Lord Byron deliver up his Sword readily?

Mr. Fynmore. When Mr. Chaworth gave me his Sword, I turned to Lord Byron for his.

Lord Viscount Folkstone. Did he give you his Sword directly?

Mr. Fynmore. I took hold of it, and his Lordship made no Objection.

Lord Viscount Folkstone. The Reason I mentioned this is, because the Council, in opening, said, that Lord Byron delivered up his Sword with Reluctance. Was not Lord Byron at this Time employed in supporting Mr. Chaworth?

Mr. Fynmore. Lord Byron's Left Hand was round Mr. Chaworth, as Mr. Chaworth's Right Hand was round Lord Byron's Neck and over his Shoulder.

Lord Viscount Folkstone. Did not Lord Byron desire you to call Assistance?

Mr. Fynmore. I had the Swords in my Hand, and my Back was towards them, when one of them said (I do not know which) Get some Help immediately.

Mr. Solicitor General. If your Lordships please, we will call John Gothrop, another of the Waiters.

John Gothrop, (Who was sworn in like Manner).

Mr. Solicitor General. You are a Waiter at the Star and Garter?

John Gothrop. Yes, my Lords.

Mr. Solicitor General. Was you on the Twenty-sixth of January last?

John Gothrop. I was.

Mr. Solicitor General. Do you remember the Bell ringing in Number Seven ?
John Gotbrop. I do.
Mr. Solicitor General. About what Time ?
John Gotbrop. About a Quarter past Eight.
Mr. Solicitor General. Did you go up into the Room ?
John Gotbrop. I did.
Mr. Solicitor General. Was the Door fastened ?
John Gotbrop. It was not.
Mr. Solicitor General. Where did you see Lord Byron and Mr. Chaworth ?
John Gotbrop. Standing with their Backs to the Fire.
Mr. Solicitor General. How near the Door ?
John Gotbrop. About Ten Feet, as near as I can recollect.
Mr. Solicitor General. In what Situation did you see Lord Byron and Mr. Chaworth ?
John Gotbrop. They were both standing together ; Lord Byron had his Left Arm round Mr. Chaworth's Waist, with his Sword in his Right-hand, with the Point to the Ground ; Mr. Chaworth was standing, with his Right Arm resting upon Lord Byron's Shoulder, with his Sword in his Left-hand extended up.
Mr. Solicitor General. Did they say any Thing ?
John Gotbrop. Lord Byron bid me take this Sword (meaning which I cannot say) and call up Fynmore immediately.
Mr. Solicitor General. What did you do ?
John Gotbrop. I immediately left the Room, without taking any Sword, to call my Master up.
Lord High Steward. Lord Byron, will your Lordship ask this Witness any Questions ?
Lord Byron. No, my Lords.
Lord Mansfield. Was the Door open when you came to it, or was it fastened with a Bolt ?
John Gotbrop. It was fastened, but not with the Bolt.
Mr. Serjeant Glynn. If your Lordships please, the next Witness we will call is Mr. William Man.

Mr. William Man, (Who was sworn in like Manner.)

Mr. Serjeant Glynn. Did you attend Mr. Chaworth, as an Apothecary, on the Twenty-sixth of January last ?
Mr. Man. I did.
Mr. Serjeant Glynn. Who did you find in the Room with Mr. Chaworth ?
Mr. Man. His Servant.
Mr. Serjeant Glynn. Was there any other Person besides his Servant ?
Mr. Man. Not in the Room where he was.
Mr. Serjeant Glynn. Did any other Person come in during the Time you were there ?
Mr. Man. Mr. Hawkins and Mr. Levinz did.
Mr. Serjeant Glynn. Was there any Conversation between Mr. Chaworth and Mr. Levinz concerning the Accident that had happened ?
Mr. Man. There was.
Mr. Serjeant Glynn. Relate that Conversation.
Mr. Man. Mr. Chaworth said some few Words arose at Dinner concerning who had the most Game upon their Estates: About two Hours after Mr. Chaworth had Occasion to go down Stairs: Upon his returning back, he was met by Lord Byron, who said, Chaworth, I want to speak to you ; a Waiter passing by at the same Time, Lord Byron said, Waiter, shew us a Room. They went into the Room, and first Mr. Chaworth said, My Lord, we will shut the Door, or else some Person will hear what we say. Mr. Chaworth, when he turned round from shutting the Door, saw Lord Byron with his Sword half drawn, who said, Chaworth, Draw ! Mr. Chaworth drew immediately, and made the first Pass, and intangled his Sword in my Lord's Waistcoat ; he then endeavoured to disarm Lord Byron, and my Lord gave him a Push or Blow, and then run him through.
Mr. Serjeant Glynn. Was this the Whole of what Mr. Chaworth declared at that Time ?
Mr. Man. No.
Mr. Serjeant Glynn. Relate the Whole ?
Mr. Man. Mr. Chaworth said, when he was first desired to walk into the Room by Lord Byron, he did not in the least imagine that he was going to be offered a Challenge.
Mr. Serjeant Glynn. Was that the Whole ?
Mr. Man. No.

Mr.

Mr. Serjeant Glynn. Go on?

Mr. Man. Some Time after Mr. Chaworth said, This will not in the least be to my Lord Byron's Credit.

Mr. Serjeant Glynn. Is that the Whole of what was said?

Mr. Man. Yes, my Lords.

Mr. Serjeant Glynn. My Lords, we will ask no more of this Witness.

Lord High Steward. My Lord Byron, would your Lordship ask this Witness any Questions?

Lord Byron. Was any body present besides Mr. Levinz?

Mr. Man. Mr. Chaworth's Servant.

Lord Byron. What is his Name?

Mr. Man. Michael Cullum.

Lord Byron. At what Time was this Declaration made?

Mr. Man. I cannot positively say, but I think it was between the Hours of Two and Four.

Lord Byron. Was it before he signed his Will?

Mr. Man. I think it was, but I am not certain.

Mr. Cornwall. If your Lordships please, we will call Michael Cullum.

Michael Cullum was called, but did not appear.

Mr. Attorney General. My Lords, I find that this Witness is not here. If your Lordships please, we will call Mr. Levinz.

Lord High Steward. How many more Witnesses do you intend to call?

Mr. Attorney General. We will only call Mr. Levinz and one more.

Lord Mansfield. From the Opening of the Prosecutor's Case, it seems to me, they are very near the End of their Evidence, and there is nothing else left but the Paper; it is now past Five o'Clock, and, I should think, it would be more for the Ease of the Prisoner and your Lordships, to adjourn to the Chamber of Parliament.

Then the Lord High Steward returned back to the Chair.

Lord President of the Council. My Lords, I move your Lordships to adjourn to the Chamber of Parliament.

Lords. Ay, Ay.

Lord High Steward. This House is adjourned to the Chamber of Parliament.

The Lords and others returned to the Chamber of Parliament in the same Order they came down, except the Lord High Steward, who walked after his Royal Highness the Duke of York; and, The House being there resumed, Resolved to proceed further in the Trial of William Lord Byron, in Westminster-Hall, Tomorrow at Ten of the Clock in the Morning; and ordered, that the said William Lord Byron should be remanded Prisoner to his Majesty's Tower of London, there to be kept in safe Custody; and that he be brought again to the Bar of this House in Westminster-Hall, To-morrow, at Ten of the Clock in the Morning.

Wednesday

Wednesday April 17, 1765. The Second Day.

THE Lords and others came from the Chamber of Parliament in the same Order as on Tuesday last, except the Lord High Steward, who walked after His Royal Highness the Duke of York; and the Peers were there seated, and the Lord High Steward in his Chair.

Lord High Steward. My Lords, the House is resumed. Is it your Lordships Pleasure that the Judges may be covered?

Lords. Ay, Ay.

Then the Serjeant at Arms made Proclamation for Silence as usual; and afterwards the following Proclamation.

Serjeant at Arms. Oyez, Oyez, Oyez! Lieutenant of the Tower, bring forth your Prisoner, William Lord Byron, to the Bar, pursuant to the Order of the House of Lords.

The Deputy Governor of the Tower brought the Prisoner to the Bar, in the like Form as before; and then he kneeled down.

Lord High Steward. Your Lordship may rise.

The Lord High Steward, by Leave of the Lords, went down to the Table for the Convenience of hearing.

Lord High Steward. Mr. Attorney General, you will proceed in your Evidence.

Mr. Attorney General. My Lords, the first Witness we call is Mr. Levinz.

William Levinz, Esquire, (Who was sworn in like Manner).

Mr. Attorney General. MR. Levinz is Uncle to the deceased Mr. Chaworth. Did you see Mr. Chaworth on the Twenty-sixth of January last?

Mr. Levinz. I did, about Ten at Night, or thereabouts.

Mr. Attorney General. Where did you first see him?

Mr. Levinz. I first saw him at his own House.

Mr. Attorney General. That was after the Misfortune?

Mr. Levinz. It was after the Misfortune.

Mr. Attorney General. Did he give you any Account how that Misfortune had happened?

Mr. Levinz. He did.

Mr. Attorney General. What was that Account?

Mr. Levinz. As soon as I got into the House I went into his Bedchamber; he took me by the Hand, and told me Lord Byron had given him a mortal Wound, desired I would send for a Lawyer as soon as possible to make a new Will, saying he believed he should be dead before Morning; upon which I came out into the outward Room; there were Mr. Serjeant Hawkins, Mr. Adair, Mr. Willoughby, and Mr. Hewett: I told them that Mr. Chaworth had desired me to send for a Lawyer, but I was so totally deprived of Recollection, I could not remember where any one lived; upon which Mr. Hawkins told me, there was one Mr. Partington who lived in that Neighbourhood, that was a Man of Character, and that, if I pleased, he would send for him; Mr. Partington came, I believe, in a Quarter of an Hour; as soon as he came I introduced him to Mr. Chaworth, and I left him in the Room to take his Instructions: When the Gentlemen were gone down Stairs, and Mr. Partington had begun making the Will in the next Room, I went to Mr. Chaworth, and asked him how this unfortunate Affair had happened? He told me, that Lord Byron took him into a Room; upon which Mr. Chaworth said, If we are to talk I had better shut the Door, or else they may overhear what we say: Upon his shutting the Door, the first Thing he saw when he turned his Head about, was Lord Byron's Sword halfdrawn; upon which he drew his as quick as possible, and got the first Pass at him, and finding his Sword engaged in something, he thought it was my Lord's Body, and therefore wished to disarm him, and in endeavouring to close in for that Purpose, my Lord shortened his Sword, or Arm, I am not positive which, and gave him that mortal Wound; from that Time till the Time the Will was executed, which was about Three in the Morning, Mr. Chaworth's Head was so full of his private Affairs, that I cannot say I heard him mention the unfortunate Affair till after the Will was executed, when I asked him, Has this been fair? But he made no Answer that I could hear, but said he saw my Lord's Sword half out, and, knowing his Man, he drew his Sword as quick as he could; that he had the first Pass at him, and then my Lord wounded him; and after that, he disarmed his Lordship, when my Lord swore he was as brave a Man as any in England. He said twice to me, Good God! that I should be such a Fool as to fight in the Dark; for indeed there was very little Light. He said he did not believe Lord Byron intended fighting when they went into the Room; but seeing him up by the Door, he believed he thought he had him him at an Advantage; and the first Thing he saw, upon turning his Head, was his Lordship's Sword half drawn; he said he died as a Man of Honor, but he thought Lord Byron had done himself no Good by it; I asked him several Times in the Night, how this Affair begun above Stairs? he always answered, it is a long Story, and it is troublesome to me to talk. They will tell you; Mr. Donston will tell you. That is all I know of this unfortunate Affair.

Mr. Attorney General. I shall ask Mr. Levinz no more Questions.

Lord High Steward. Lord Byron, will your Lordship ask this Witness any Questions?

Lord Byron. My Lords, I shall ask no Questions of this Witness.

A Lord. Did you understand that Mr. Chaworth went to shut the Door, that they might not be overheard, or to bolt the Door?

Mr. Levinz. He expressly said, that he went to shut the Door that they might not overhear what they said.

A Lord. Was it before or after the making the Will that Mr. Chaworth gave that Account to you?

Mr. Levinz. The first Account was about Eleven at Night, I believe, when the Will was first begun: The last Time he spoke to me about this unfortunate Affair was, I believe, within the Hour after the Will was executed.

Earl of Morton. Before the Will was made, when he gave the Account to the Gentlemen in the Room, did he seem to have most Attention to the making of his Will?

Mr. Levinz. To the making of the Will, he seemed to have it prodigiously at Heart.

Earl of Morton. Did he seem to you in bodily Pain?

Mr. Levinz. He was more or less so the whole Night; for about an Hour after the Will was executed, he was amazingly compos'd; about Four he fell into vast Tortures; I sent for Mr. Adair, who came to him, and by applying warm Fomentations relieved him very much; but from that Time I cannot say he talked about the unfortunate Affair; he sent for me up to desire that something might be done as soon as ever he was dead.

Earl of Morton. The last Time he spoke to you was he seemingly in Pain?

Mr. Levinz. My Lords, he never was free from Pain.

Earl of Denbigh. Did Mr. Chaworth tell you what pass'd upon the Stairs, previous to his going into the Room?

Mr. Levinz. He never said any Thing to me about what pass'd upon the Stairs; I wish'd to know it, but never could learn it.

Lord High Steward. The Witness may withdraw.

Mr. Solicitor General. The next Witness, my Lords, is Mr. Partington.

Thomas Walley Partington, Esquire, (Who was sworn in like Manner.)

Mr. Solicitor General. Did you attend Mr. Chaworth on the Twenty-sixth of January last?

Mr. Partington. I did.

Mr. Solicitor General. At what Time did you attend him?

Mr. Partington. A little after Ten o'Clock.

Mr. Solicitor General. Who did you find with Mr. Chaworth?

Mr. Partington. When I first came into the House, I was taken into a Parlour, where there were Mr. Levinz, Mr. Hawkins, Mr. Adair, Mr. Hewett, and Mr. Willoughby. I staid there a very few Minutes. I first asked what I was sent for? I was told to make Mr. Chaworth's Will; and by the Conversation that pass'd between the Gentlemen there, I understood that Lord Byron and Mr. Chaworth had fought in a Room by themselves, and according to an Expression of one of the Gentlemen, by a Farthing Candle. After the Will was executed, Mr. Chaworth begun to talk of his Situation as of a dying Man; he expressed a Satisfaction that he was in that Situation rather than to have lived and to have had the Life of any Man to answer for: After such Conversation, Mr. Levinz, in seeming great Distress said to him, Dear Billy, for God's Sake, how was this? was it fair? Mr. Chaworth's Head was turned towards the Gentlemen on his Left Hand, Mr. Levinz stood on his Right. Upon that Question being asked, he turned his Head to Mr. Levinz, sinking upon the Pillow; he said something which I could not distinguish, for I stood at the Bottom of the Bed, and immediately went round to where Mr. Levinz stood, and as I opened the Curtain, I heard him say something of Lord Byron's Sword being drawn; upon which, and from what I understood had pass'd, I was led to ask him this Question, Mr. Chaworth, was my Lord Byron's Sword drawn when you came into the Room? he then answered what I afterwards wrote down.

Mr. Solicitor General. How soon after did you write it down?

Mr. Partington. Upon coming down into the Parlour, after I had sealed up and delivered the Will to Mr. Levinz, as I had advised some Question might be asked when the Will was executed, so I thought it prudent whilst we were together, that we should set down the Answer that Mr. Chaworth gave: The Gentlemen assented; I took a Pen and Ink and wrote, "When he came into the Room, Mr. Chaworth said," and went on a little further: When I read what I had wrote, and I think Mr. Hewett in particular excepted to those Words "when he came into the Room," I tore the Paper, and threw it into the Fire, and wrote the Words which I now have in my Hands.

Mr. Solicitor General. How long after the finishing the Will were the Declarations contained in this Paper made?

Mr. Partington. It must be but a very few Minutes.

Mr. Solicitor General. We desire the Paper may be read.

The Witnesses produced the Paper, and read it as follows:

"Sunday Morning, the Twenty-seventh of January, about Three of the Clock, Mr. Chaworth said, that my Lord's Sword was half-drawn, and that he, knowing the Man, immediately, or as quick as he could, whipt out his Sword, and had the first Thrust; that then my Lord wounded him, and he disarmed my Lord, who then said, By God, I have as much Courage as any Man in England."

Lord High Steward. Lord Byron, will your Lordship ask this Witness any Questions?

Lord Byron. Did not you understand this Declaration of the Facts to be an Answer to the Question, whether it was fair or not?

Mr. Partington. I understood the Declaration to be an Answer to Mr. Levinz and myself, and to the Inquiry in general, which was making by the Gentlemen.

Lord Byron. Did not you understand from those Declarations that what had passed was fair?

Lord Mansfield. They will not ask the Witness as to his Understanding, but to the Facts only. Your Lordships will draw the Conclusion.

Lord High Steward. You had this Paper to refresh your own Memory?

Mr. Partington. I had, my Lords.

Lord Ravensworth. I desire to know whether this Paper in Mr. Partington's Hand was not read and allowed to be what Mr. Chaworth said before every one in the Room. I do not look upon it as a Paper to refresh his Memory, but as a Paper taken from the Mouth of Mr. Chaworth as a Declaration from him; and therefore desire to know, if it was read to the Gentlemen in the Room, and who those Gentlemen were?

Lord High Steward. Your Lordships will observe, that the Witness has been examined upon Oath with respect to the Declaration he has in his Hand, which was reduced into Writing; you may therefore ask this Witness, whether he took that Paper in order to refresh his Memory, or for what other Purpose?

Mr. Partington. I took it for our general Recollection of the Words that Mr. Chaworth said.

Lord High Steward. Were those Declarations made to you?

Mr. Partington. To all of us. They are the very Words I heard.

Lord High Steward. Then you may refresh your Memory from the Paper.

Lord Ravensworth. Was this Paper read to the Gentlemen who were below Stairs? and who were in the Room when Mr. Chaworth made the Declaration?

Mr. Partington. Mr. Levinz, Mr. Hewett, Mr. Hawkins, Mr. Willoughby, and Mr. Adair, I think no other Gentleman was present, except myself, in the Room; after I had wrote this, I read it over, and they agreed it was the Substance of what Mr. Chaworth said.

Lord Ravensworth. Were they the Persons present in the Bed-chamber when the Declaration was made?

Mr. Partington. They were the Persons present in the Bed-chamber when the Words were spoke; they were the Persons present in the Parlour when I read it over; and it was agreed by all, that they were the Words Mr. Chaworth said.

Lords. Read the Paper over again?

Which was done by the Witness.

Earl of Denbigh. Did you ever hear Mr. Chaworth say any Thing of any Conversation which passed previous to Lord Byron's drawing his Sword in the Room?

Mr.

Mr. Partington. I was with Mr. Chaworth, backwards and forwards, from Half an Hour past Ten till Three, and he said nothing more to me than what I have repeated to your Lordships, concerning what had passed between him and my Lord Byron.

Duke of Manchester. Did you ever shew this Paper, of which you now speak, to Mr. Chaworth before his Death?

Mr. Partington. No, my Lords; I never saw Mr. Chaworth after I came down from him after he had executed his Will.

Lord Viscount Townshend. Was it ever read by any of the Gentlemen to Mr. Chaworth?

Mr. Partington. Not to my Knowledge; it has never been in my Custody since.

Lord Viscount Townshend. Where was it?

Mr. Partington. I delivered it to Mr. Levinz that Night; and I never saw it since, but once in Mr. Foyne's, Mr. Levinz Solicitor's, Hands.

Duke of Manchester. The Paper that you first began to write, I think, you said was thrown into the Fire?

Mr. Partington. It was, my Lords.

Duke of Manchester. Was it not completed when thrown into the Fire?

Mr. Partington. I had wrote as far of the Paper as where the Expression half-drawn is mentioned.

Lord Cathcart. Did the Paper you burnt, and the other Paper you now have, differ?

Mr. Partington. No.

Earl Gower. I desire to know whether you threw the Paper into the Fire, because it differed from the Account Mr. Chaworth gave, or because it differed from your own Account?

Mr. Partington. The Reason it was thrown into the Fire was, I thought it was better to write it over again, than to have it appear with an Alteration in it. I had struck out some Words Mr. Hewett objected to, and for that Reason I wrote it over again fair.

Lord High Steward. The Witnesses may withdraw.

Earl of Denbigh. I desire Mr. Levinz may be called in again?

Mr. Attorney General. I think it my Duty to inform your Lordships, that from a Misapprehension on our Part, that the Witnesses might differ in some little Matters, we were extremely tender of examining any of them to what was contained in the Writing, conceiving the legal Evidence to be the Paper Writing itself; and if your Lordships think that the Paper cannot be admitted, I am in your Lordships Breasts, if it is not proper for us to call the Witnesses to speak to these Declarations. We were extremely tender in examining to any Thing that should lead to the Conversation contained in this Paper.

Lord Mansfield. By my Notes it appears, that Mr. Hewett spoke precisely to the Declarations of Mr. Chaworth; for after he had been examined to the Writing, he said, there was an Exception taken to some Words in it, and it was destroyed, and a new one was wrote.

Duke of Richmond. My Lords, a Question was some Time since asked by the Prisoner of Mr. Partington, the Answer to which I did not at this Distance hear.

Lord High Steward. That Question was objected to by a noble Lord as improper, and therefore it was not answered.

Earl of Denbigh. I desire that Mr. Levinz may be called to the Bar again to be further examined.

Lord Harwich. Your Lordships cannot enter into any Debate here: If there be any Difference of Opinion, it will be necessary to go back to the Chamber of Parliament.

The Lords were then moved to adjourn to the Chamber of Parliament.

Lords. Ay, Ay.

Lord High Steward. This House is adjourned to the Chamber of Parliament.

The Lords and others returned to the Chamber of Parliament in the same Order as they went from thence this Morning, and the House was there Resumed; and, after some Time, again adjourned to Westminster-Hall; and the Peers and others went down in the same Order as before; and the Peers being there seated, and the Lord High Steward in his Chair,

Lord High Steward. My Lords, the House is Resumed: Is it your Lordships Pleasure that the Judges may be covered?

Lords.

Lords. Ay, Ay.

Then the Serjeant at Arms made Proclamation for Silence as usual, and afterwards the following Proclamation.

Serjeant at Arms. Oyez, Oyez, Oyez! Lieutenant of the Tower, bring forth your Prisoner, William Lord Byron, to the Bar, pursuant to the Order of the House of Lords.

The Deputy Governor of the Tower brought the Prisoner to the Bar in the like Form as before, and then he kneeled down.

Lord High Steward. Your Lordship may rise.

Then the Lord High Steward, by Leave of the Lords, went down to the Table,

Lord High Steward. Mr. Attorney General, you will proceed in your Evidence?

Mr. Attorney General. My Lords, if I could have conceived that there remained a Doubt in the Minds of any one of your Lordships, that the Contents of this Paper were not true, I should have thought it my Duty to have called all the Witnesses to have substantiated the Contents: But as I cannot now trespass upon your Lordships Patience, the Evidence on Behalf of the Crown is closed; and we leave it here.

Earl of Denbigh. I desire that Mr. Levinz may be called to the Bar.

Mr. Levinz was called again.

Earl of Denbigh. There was a Conversation passed between Mr. Chaworth and the noble Prisoner at the Bar, previous to Mr. Chaworth's shutting the Door; now I should be glad to know whether Mr. Chaworth said any Thing to you, relative to the Conversation which passed between him and Lord Byron upon the Stairs, previous to their going into the Room where they fought?

Mr. Levinz. No, my Lords; what he told me was, that Lord Byron asked him into the Room; that when he came into the Room, he said, My Lord, if we are to talk we had better shut the Door, or else they may overhear what we say: And I never heard Mr. Chaworth say any Thing else about it.

Duke of Newcastle. When you asked Mr. Chaworth whether it was fair, you were on one Side of the Bed, and Mr. Chaworth turned his Head, and said something which Mr. Partington did not hear; I desire to know whether, upon that Occasion, you heard any Answer to that Question?

Mr. Levinz. At that Time I did not: I asked him the same Question once afterwards, and he gave me no Answer; but seemed to me to shrink his Head into the Pillow.

Lord Viscount Folkestone. When Mr. Chaworth told you what passed in the Room where they fought, did he say that Lord Byron bid him defend himself, or any Thing to that Purpose?

Mr. Levinz. Mr. Chaworth told me, that, on his turning his Head from the Door, he saw Lord Byron's Sword half-drawn. My Lord said, Draw, Draw! I am sure Mr. Chaworth said the Word, Draw, twice.

Lord Viscount Folkestone. Did Mr. Chaworth explain to you in what Manner he received the Wound?

Mr. Levinz. He told me he felt the Point of his Sword engaged in something, and that he took it to be my Lord's Body; that, therefore, he wished to disarm him; and in endeavouring to close in for that Purpose, my Lord shortened his Sword, or his Arm (I am not certain which Word he made use of) and gave him that Wound. This was all that he said to me on that Subject.

Lord High Steward. The Witnesses may withdraw.

Mr. Attorney General. My Lords, as the Witnesses have fully proved the Evidence and Facts which I stated to your Lordships in the Opening, I will not trouble your Lordships to call any more Witnesses, but will rest our Evidence, in Support of the Prosecution, here.

Mr. Solicitor General.

My Lords,

THE Evidence on the Part of the Prosecution being closed, it remains for me, according to the usual Course of Proceeding, to collect, as far as it may be necessary, into one View, the Proofs that have been made, and to apply them to the present Charge: A very painful Task! but yet Justice to the publick Peace, to the Memory of the Deceased, and to the Sollicitude of his surviving Friends, authorizes and requires it. I should wish to discharge this Part of my Duty with that Benevolence and Humanity which possessed the Mind of the Deceased in the last Hours of his Life.

The noble Prisoner at the Bar is charged with having killed Mr. Chaworth deliberately and maliciously; or, in the Terms of the Indictment, with Malice aforethought. That he killed him, is a Truth beyond Dispute; and he who takes away the Life of another, is presumed to have taken it away deliberately and maliciously, till it shall appear to have been the Effect of Necessity, of Accident, or of sudden Passion; for as Necessity will justify, and Accident excuse the Fact, an ungovernable Transport of Passion will so far alleviate the Crime, as to make that, which would otherwise have been Murder and a capital Offence, Manslaughter only, which saves the Life of the Offender.

This is a Condescension the Law shews to the Frailties of the human Mind, which upon great and sudden Provocations cannot command itself, nor maintain its Reason; but whilst the Law shews this Condescension, it guards the Life of the Subject, with all possible Caution and Reserve, against the Excess and Abuse of the Benignity. It shelters no Man whose Mind is not free, perfectly free, from the Guilt of Malice, expressed in Words, or implied in Action; to be free from Malice, he must have acted from the Impulse of a present Passion, without Deliberation or meditated Mischief. If it should so have happened that the Provocation did not irritate, or irritating did not overcome the Reason, or overcoming the Reason, the Mind cooled and deliberated, or had Time to cool and deliberate, and then he fought and killed, he has incurred the Guilt of malicious Murder; he did not act from the Impulse of a present Passion; and whatever Motive actuated him, whether some secret Grudge, or an imaginary Necessity of vindicating his Honour, or of satisfying the World of his Courage, or any other latent Cause, he is no Object of this Benignity of the Law.

The Law Books do not make it Murder, only where the Passion has actually cooled, but where, in the Time that has passed, it ought in Reason to have cooled. And in Major Oneby's Case, no more than an Hour had passed, and the Judges thought that sufficient for the Purpose.

There is no specific Evidence required to shew that the Mind has cooled, it must depend upon the particular Circumstances of the Case; but all the Books, from the Time of Lord Morley's Case, in the Reign of Charles II. down to the Treatise of a late learned Judge, agree, that the Party engaging in indifferent Conversation, or in Amusements, affords a convincing Proof that he labours under no Transport of Passion, but has cooled and recovered his Reason.

I will not abuse your Lordships Patience with going through the Detail of the Evidence. Your Lordships serious and unwearied Attention, during the Course of this Trial, have made it unnecessary. I shall only point out some Observations arising from what passed at the Three most material Periods of Time, that is, during the Conversation in the Room where the Company dined; upon the Stairs; and in the Room below.

Nothing could be more innocent than the Conversation of the Company about the best Method of preserving of the Game; there could be no Offence in Mr. Chaworth's saying, that he had more Game upon his Estate, than Lord Byron had upon his; nor was there any in Lord Byron's saying, that he had the most. The first Offence, that seems to have been taken, was my Lord Byron's repeating the Question relative to Sir Charles Sedley's Manors; Mr. Donston understood it to be so. But it does not precisely appear, whether the Offence was given by the bare Repetition of the Question, or that it imported a Reflection upon an absent Friend; or that it contained too flat a Contradiction of what he had asserted; or that there was any Thing particularly affronting in the Tone of Voice, or in the Countenance, or in the Gesture; but it is very plain, Mr. Chaworth thought himself offended, and Mr. Chaworth's Expressions upon the Stairs, in asking Mr. Donston if he had been wanting in "his Reply", imports it. It is clear too, from the Questions Lord Byron asked Mr. Chaworth, that Lord Byron saw Mr. Chaworth had taken Offence. But whatever Effect Lord Byron's Behaviour had upon Mr. Chaworth, Mr. Chaworth's had no visible Effect upon Lord Byron; no Action or Expression of Anger escaped him ; there was no Change of Countenance ; the Matter ended there. Other Conversation engaged the Company ; Lord Byron appeared to Mr. Hewett to be conversing in good Humour with Mr. Molyneux ; and Mr. Molyneux confirms the Reality of it. A full Hour passed in general Conversation. Mr. Chaworth does not seem to have been much discomposed, though Fynmore says he was a little ruffled ; which he collects from a Mistake he made in settling the Book ; a trifling Circumstance ! from which no just Inference can be drawn. But the Question is not, whether Mr. Chaworth was ruffled, but whether Lord Byron was agitated with any Violence of Passion ? It is for your Lordships to determine whether this Period affords any Proof of a sudden Quarrel, or of a heated Temper ; without Time to cool, or Leisure to deliberate ; and whether any Thing can be collected from hence, that will intitle the noble Prisoner to this Benignity of the Law, which is extended only to the Impetuosity of a sudden Passion.

In this Situation Lord Byron left the Room, in Appearance cool and deliberate ; if he had then a Purpose to fight, I am afraid it must have been deliberate ; if he had not, it imports Lord Byron to prove some new Occasion of Quarrel. What passed upon the Stairs affords only one Observation, Lord Byron told Mr. Chaworth he wanted to speak to him ; if the Purpose for which he wanted to speak to him is to be explained by what passed below, that Purpose was deliberate and without Provocation ; if he had not such Purpose in his Mind at that Time, will it not warrant Mr. Chaworth's Suspicions ? Your Lordships will recollect what Mr. Chaworth said, and what he thought was the Reason for calling him to an Account in that Place and in that Manner. Your Lordships will recollect likewise what Disadvantages the Place gave to Mr. Chaworth. If Mr. Chaworth understood the Sword, he understood it as the Accomplishment of a Gentleman. It never hurt his Innocence, he abhorred to shed the Blood of any Man. The Darkness of the Room, and Confinement of the Place probably prevented him from giving a signal Proof of it in disarming his Adversary. There is reason to believe it. How conspicuous in his last Hours was his Benevolence to all Mankind, his Humanity to the Author of his Death, his serious and earnest Attention to the Discharge of the remaining Duties of his Life, and the Magnanimity with which he beheld the approaching Minute of his Death !

I shall lay no Weight upon the Manner in which the Wound was given, till Mr. Partington was examined, an Inference arose to the Disadvantage of Lord Byron from the supposed Silence of Mr. Chaworth, when he was asked, Whether the Wound was fairly given ? Mr. Partington's Evidence may have left it now in some Doubt, what Opinion Mr. Chaworth had of that Circumstance. I will not allow myself to observe upon it ; nor will I repeat that unguarded Expression your Lordships have heard, that my Lord Byron used after the Wound was given, and after Mr. Chaworth had closed in and was endeavouring to prevent further Mischief. It must give Pain to the noble Prisoner to hear it repeated ; it must have made its Impression on your Lordships Minds ; it is fitter to remain there than to be the Subject of publick Discussion. It is for your Lordships to determine whether this Mischief has happened from the Impulse of a sudden Passion, or resulted from a deliberate and premeditated Purpose.

Lord High Steward. My Lord Byron, the Council for the Crown have done : Now is the Time for your Lordship to make your Defence ; and if you have any Witnesses to examine, now is your Time to call them.

Lord Byron. My Lords, I shall not call any Witnesses. I have reduced into Writing what I have to offer to your Lordships ; which, as my Voice is very low, I am apprehensive of my not being heard by your Lordships, and therefore desire it may be read by the Clerk.

Lords. Read, Read ?

Clerk reads.

My Lords,

YOUR Lordships are now in full Possession of the Evidence against me, and, I am convinced, will weigh it with the Wisdom and Impartiality which have ever distinguished the Court of the Peers of Great-Britain.

This Consideration, my Lords, affords me Comfort and Support, though oppressed under the heavy Load of an Accusation of Murder, against which I am now required to speak in my own Defence.

My Inexperience in the nice Distinctions of Law, and in Proceedings of this Nature, but ill qualify me for this Task; and will furnish very ample Occasion for the Goodness and Indulgence of your Lordships.

The Witnesses, (as far as their Knowledge and Observation could lead them) have already sufficiently proved the accidental Manner in which the greatest Part of the Transaction happened; and the Innocence of my own Intentions, through the Whole of it, makes it difficult for me to select any particular Passages which may more immediately demand your Lordships Attention.

Let me presume, however, to lay before you my own Narrative of the Fact, according to the best of my Recollection. It agrees in Substance with great Part of what has fallen from the Witnesses, but it supplies some Particulars which may possibly deserve Weight and Credit. In doing this, the Respect which I owe to your Lordships, as well as a tender Concern for my own Honour, will not suffer me to prevaricate, neither will I conceal or deny what is true.

After we had dined at the Club, about Seven o'Clock, a Discourse began concerning Game, and Mr. Chaworth insisted that Strictness and Severity were the only effectual Methods with the Country People.

I must confess that I was of a different Opinion; being for gentler Measures, and therefore observed, that such Severity might only prompt them to do more Mischief; and added such Circumstances as I thought supported what I said.

This Discourse lasted some Time; and, during the Whole of it, I was concerned to observe that the deceased Gentleman, without any Cause, treated me in a slighting and contemptuous Manner.

Towards the Conclusion of it, he, with some Heat, said, there would be no Game in the Country; and that I should not have a single Hare on my Estate, if it was not for the Care taken by himself and Sir Charles Sedley, to preserve the Game on their Manors; and added, that he had more Game on five Acres than I had in all my Manors. The Proposal of a Bet followed, but some of the Gentlemen interfered, and no Bet was made.

Mr. Chaworth again mentioned Sir Charles Sedley's Manors, and his Care of the Game; upon which I happened to ask what Manors of Sir Charles Sedley he meant, when he answered, Nuthall and Bulwell; to which I replied, I did not understand how that could be, for though I knew Nuthall was Sir Charles Sedley's, yet Bulwell Park was mine.

Mr. Chaworth answered, that besides Bulwell Park, there was the Lordship of Bulwell Town (a Point, which I believe may formerly have been in Dispute between Mr. Wentworth's Family and mine, but has long lain dormant) and that Sir Charles Sedley had a Deputation for that Lordship.

Upon which I made some insignificant Observation on the Uncertainty of Deputations, as they are liable to be recalled at any Time, or something to that Purpose.

Whereupon, to the best of my Recollection, Mr. Chaworth replied in the following Words, "Sir Charles Sedley, my Lord, lives at Mr. Cooper's, in such a Place, and I doubt not, will be ready to give your Lordship Satisfaction about his Manors, if you have any Thing to say concerning them; and as to myself, you know where I live, and I shall be ready to answer your Lordship whenever you will call upon me, if you have any Thing to say to me."

These Words, so unexpected, of such an Import, uttered, and repeated in the Manner they were, would not admit of any Reply, but put an End to the Discourse, so that nothing further passed between the deceased Gentleman and myself, at that Time; but during the short Stay I made afterwards, I might possibly have some very short Conversation, on indifferent Matters, with Mr. Molyneux, who was next me.

And here, I must observe, that as I sat at the lower Corner on the one Side, and Mr. Chaworth at the upper Corner on the other Side of a long Table, at which Ten People had dined, no private Intimations for a future Meeting, or other Signs, could be given by either of us, without being perceived by all the rest of the Company, to whose Evidence I must refer, observing only that no such Thing is pretended, or even suspected by any of the Gentlemen who have been called upon.

Soon after this Discourse was finished in the abrupt Manner I have mentioned, the Club Book was brought to Mr. Chaworth, who usually settled it, and did so on this Occasion, though with some Hurry and Confusion, as Fynmore, the Master of the Tavern, has told your Lordships.

The Book being settled, and the Reckoning paid by Mr. Chaworth, and several of the Company, I saw him go behind a Screen in the Room which intirely conceals the Door, and I had every Reason to conclude that he was gone.

I staid

I staid some Time to settle and discharge my Reckoning, which might detain me near Ten Minutes, and then I took my Hat and left the Company.

As I was going out of the Room, I remember that somebody passed me behind the Screen near the Door, and believe it might be Mr. Donston, who (I think) says, he met me, but being in the Shade, I could not well distinguish him, so as to take particular Notice or say any Thing to him.

When I opened the Door, I saw Mr. Chaworth, on the Landing Place, near the upper Step of the Stairs, with his Face towards the Door, and his Back to the Stairs, not moving (as he appeared to me) but rather as if he waited for somebody coming out.

The Landing Place is so narrow, that to go without the Door of the Room was unavoidably to pass near Mr. Chaworth, who immediately said, "Has your Lordship any Commands for me?" which he spake in a very particular and significant Manner, and not (to my Apprehension) as a Question either of Civility or Respect.

I only answered, "I should be glad of an Opportunity of speaking a few Words to him;" Mr. Chaworth replied, "That the Stairs were not a proper Place, and, if I pleased, we would go into a Room."

We then went down together to the Landing Place of the One Pair of Stairs (for we dined up Two Pair of Stairs) and there the Waiter was called, and as it was repeated Three or Four Times, it is most probable we both called him.

The Waiter soon came with a Candle, and being asked (I am sorry I cannot recollect who put the Question) which of those Rooms (meaning the Two Rooms on that Floor) was empty, he threw open the Door of One of them, and going in first, set his Candle upon the Table, which stood towards the Middle of the Room, whilst we went to the Fire.

He retired immediately, and shut the Door after him.

I then said to Mr. Chaworth, as we still continued standing by the Fire, "How am I to take those Words you used above, as an intended Affront from Sir Charles Sedley, or yourself?" Mr. Chaworth replied, "Your Lordship may take them as you please, either as an Affront or not, and I imagine this Room is as fit a Place as any other to decide the Affair in."

Then turning round, he said, he would bolt the Door to prevent any Interruption, or any Body interfering, or Words to that Effect. Accordingly, he went to the Door and fastened it. In the mean time, his Intention being but too manifest, by this Action and his last Expression, I went round on the further Side of the Table, towards the most open Part of the Room, which your Lordships have been informed by Fynmore is about Sixteen Feet Square, and the Furniture did not leave a vacant Space of more than Twelve Feet in Length, and, as I believe, Five Feet in Breadth, where it was my unhappy Lot to be obliged to engage.

Mr. Chaworth was now turned round from bolting the Door, and as I could not any longer continue in Doubt of his Intention, it was impossible for me in such a Situation to avoid putting my Hand to my Sword, and I believe I might at the same Time bid him Draw, or use some other Words of the like Import, though I cannot now be certain of the Expression.

Mr. Chaworth immediately drew his Sword, and made a Thrust at me, which I parried; he made a second, which also missed of its Effect: And then finding myself with my Back against the Table, with great Disadvantage of the Light, I endeavoured to shift a little more to the Right-hand, which unavoidably brought us nearer to each other, and gave me an Opportunity to perceive that the deceased Gentleman was making a third Pass at me. We both thrust at the same Time, when I found Mr. Chaworth's Sword against my Ribs, having cut my Waistcoat and Shirt for upwards of eight Inches; and I suppose it was then, that he received the unlucky Wound, which I shall ever reflect upon with the utmost Regret.

Mr. Chaworth paused, and said, "I am afraid I have killed you;" at the same Time putting his Left-hand to his Belly, which, on withdrawing it again, I could perceive was bloody.

I expressed the like Apprehension on his Account; and, Mr. Chaworth telling me that he was wounded, I said that I was sorry for it, and went to the Bell, near the Fire, to ring it, in order to call for Assistance, whilst the unfortunate Gentleman, being still near the Door, unbolted it.

I then returned to him; and as I was supporting him to an Elbow-chair which stood near the Fire, I could not help observing, that, He might thank himself for what had happened, as he had been the Aggressor; that I supposed he took me for a Coward, but I hoped I had as much Courage as another Man: Mr. Chaworth replied, My Lord, all I have to say is, you have behaved like a Gentleman.

During

During this Discourse Fytmore came into the Room, took our Swords, whilst I was employed, to the best of my Power, in supporting Mr. Chaworth, and at my Request went for the Surgeon. The rest of the Gentlemen also, who were above Stairs, being now alarmed, came down into the Room; where I continued for some Time, being desirous to give every Kind of Assistance to the Deceased, and afterwards I waited in a Room below, till he was removed to his own House.

My Lords, this is my melancholy Story. I cannot pretend to call any Witnesses in Support of those Parts of it, which relate to what passed during the few Minutes whilst we were in private; But as the Declarations of the Deceased are admitted as Evidence, your Lordships will compare the broken Accounts collected by those Gentlemen who discoursed with him, with such Circumstances as my Memory and Knowledge tell me are exactly true.

There are several Persons now attending, and ready to attest various Instances of friendly Intercourse and Civility from me to the Deceased; but as nothing has been offered to induce your Lordships to believe the contrary, I will not enter into that Evidence, nor offer any other on my Part, relying upon your Lordships Justice, and my own Innocence; not only as that Innocence may be presumed from the Insufficiency of Proof on the Part of the Prosecutors, to shew either Malice or Premeditation in me, but as most of the Witnesses unanimously agree in declaring the Provocation, Challenge, and Insult offered me; and your Lordships will not imagine that I felt them with less Emotion, because my Manner and my Words were decent.

My Lords, as the Provocation was great, so the Time was very short, between the Conversation and my meeting with Mr. Chaworth upon the Stairs, which was quite unexpected to me.

After that accidental Meeting, the Time of our continuing together (which was scarce Four Minutes) the Light, the Unfitness of the Place, and every other Circumstance prove, in the strongest Manner, that nothing could be more sudden and unpremeditated than the Conflict that ended so unfortunately, and in which I received the First Thrust, at the Peril of my own Life.

Our Fighting could not be very regular, circumstanced as it was; but notwithstanding some Insinuations, my own Mind does not charge me with the least Unfairness. The Facts declared by Mr. Chaworth, import the contrary; and Mr. Partington has acquainted your Lordships, that the last Declarations, reduced into Writing, were understood by him, and by the other Gentlemen present, as an Answer to every Question which had been asked.

My Lords, it is very plain from the Evidence, that Mr. Chaworth had not cooled; and if the Infirmary of his Temper was such, as not to have recovered itself in so short an Interval, though he had done the Injury; your Lordships, I hope, will at least make that Allowance (which the Law permits) to the like Infirmary of Nature in him who had been injured.

Grieved and affected as I am on this Occasion, and willing to spare any Reflection on the dead, the Necessity of my Defence obliges me to take Notice, that according to the Evidence of Mr. Donston, whom he desired to speak with on the Stairs, he but too clearly explained the Sense in which his Words were intended by asking that Gentleman, Whether he had observed what passed between himself and me, and whether he had left the Matter short?

Such a Behaviour, my Lords, needs no Comment, especially if considered with the Sequel of it; after we came into the Room below, where he declined giving me any reasonable Explanation, though such an one might easily have been given as would have been consistent with my Honour and Character.

In such a Case your Lordships will, no Doubt, have some Consideration for human Weakness and Passion, always influenced and inflamed in some Degree by the Customs of the World.

And though I am persuaded that Compassion can never obstruct your impartial Justice, yet I trust that you will incline to mitigate the Rigour of it, and administer it, according to Law, in Mercy.

I am told, my Lords, that it has been held by the greatest Authorities in the Law, that if contumelious Words (and still more, I presume, if contemptuous Words of Challenge) have been given by one Man to another, and, before they are cooled, either bids the other draw his Sword, and Death ensues, after mutual Passes, the Fact of that Case will not amount to Murder.

Therefore I am willing to hope that your Lordships, in weighing these Circumstances, may find sufficient Cause to acquit me of all Malice, and to consider me as an unhappy Man, innocent in Intention, conscious only of Misfortune.

My Lords, I will detain you no longer. I am in your Lordships Judgment, and shall expect your Sentence, whether for Life or Death, with all the Submission that is due to the noblest and most equitable Court of Judicature in the World.

Then the Lord High Steward returned back to his Chair.

Lord High Steward. Lieutenant of the Tower, take William Lord Byron from the Bar?

Which was done accordingly.

Lord President. My Lords, I move your Lordships to adjourn to the Chamber of Parliament.

Lords. Ay, Ay.

Lord High Steward. This House is adjourned to the Chamber of Parliament.

The Lords and others returned to the Chamber of Parliament in the same Order they came down: And, after some Time, the House was adjourned again into Westminster-Hall; and the Peers being there seated, and the Lord High Steward in his Chair, and the House resumed, the Serjeant at Arms made Proclamation for Silence as usual.

Lord High Steward. Your Lordships have heard the Evidence, and every Thing that has been alledged on both Sides; and the Solemnity of your Proceedings requires that your Lordships Opinions on the Question of Guilty, or Not Guilty, should be delivered severally in the Absence of the Prisoner, beginning with the junior Baron; and that the Prisoner should afterwards be acquainted with the Result of those Opinions by me. Is it your Lordships Pleasure to proceed now to give your Opinions on the Question of Guilty, or Not Guilty?

Lords. Ay, Ay.

Then the Lord High Steward stood up uncovered; and, beginning with the youngest Peer, said,

George Lord Vernon, What says your Lordship? Is William Lord Byron Guilty of the Felony and Murder whereof he stands indicted, or Not Guilty?

Whereupon George Lord Vernon, standing up in his Place, uncovered, and laying his Right Hand upon his Breast, answered,

Not Guilty of Murder, but Guilty of Manslaughter, upon my Honour.

In like manner the several Lords after-mentioned, being all that were present, answered as followeth:

His Royal Highness Edward Duke of York and Albany. Not Guilty of Murder, but Guilty of Manslaughter, upon my Honour.

Then the Lord High Steward, standing uncovered at the Chair, laying his Hand upon his Breast, said ;

Lord High Steward. My Lords, I am of Opinion that William Lord Byron is not Guilty of Murder, but Guilty of Manslaughter, upon my Honour.

Lord High Steward. Your Lordships have found that William Lord Byron is not Guilty of the Felony and Murder whereof he stands indicted ; but have found him Guilty of Manslaughter. One Hundred and Nineteen of your Lordships having voted him Guilty of Manslaughter, and the remaining Four having declared him to be Not Guilty generally : Is it your Lordships Pleasure that he should be called in, and acquainted therewith ?

Lords. Ay, Ay.

Proclamation was then made for the Lieutenant of the Tower to bring the Prisoner to the Bar, which was done in the same Order as before ; and afterwards Proclamation was made for Silence as usual.

Lord High Steward. William Lord Byron, The Lords have considered of the Charge and Evidence brought against you, and have likewise considered of every Thing which you have alledged in your Defence, and upon the whole Matter, their Lordships have found you not Guilty of the Murder whereof you stand indicted, but Guilty of Manslaughter. What has your Lordship to alledge against Judgment being pronounced upon you ?

Upon which, his Lordship claimed the Benefit of the Statute of Edward the Sixth.

Whereupon the Lord High Steward acquainted him that he was allowed the Benefit of that Statute, and was discharged, paying his Fees.

Proclamation was then made for Silence in the usual Manner.

Lord High Steward. My Lords, this Trial being at an End, nothing remains to be done here, but to determine the Commission.

Lords. Ay, ay.

Lord High Steward. Let Proclamation be made for dissolving the Commission of High Steward.

Serjeant at Arms. Oyez, Oyez, Oyez! Our Sovereign Lord the King does strictly charge and command all manner of Persons here present, and that have here attended, to depart hence in the Peace of God, and of our said Sovereign Lord the King, for his Grace my Lord High Steward of Great-Britain, intends now to dissolve his Commission.

Then the White Staff being delivered to the Lord High Steward by the Gentleman-Usher of the Black Rod upon his Knee, his Grace stood up uncovered, and holding the Staff in both his Hands, broke it in Two, and declared the Commission to be dissolved; and then leaving the Chair, came down to the Woolpack and said, Is it your Lordships Pleasure to adjourn to the Chamber of Parliament?

Lords. Ay, ay.

Lord High Steward. This House is adjourned to the Chamber of Parliament.

Then the Peers and others returned back to the Chamber of Parliament, in the same Order they came down, except that their Royal Highnesses the Duke of Gloucester and Duke of York walked after the Lord Chancellor.

D. N. Regis.

Curia legitime affirmata.

Intran.

KATHARINE NAIRN, Widow of the deceased Thomas Ogilvie of Eastmiln in the County of Forfar;

AND

PATRICK OGILVIE, Lieutenant of the eighty-ninth Regiment of Foot, Brother-German of the said deceased Thomas Ogilvie;

Both now Prisoners in the Tolbooth of Edinburgh;

PANELS.

Indicted and accused at the Instance of Thomas Miller of Barskimming, Esq; his Majesty's Advocate, for his Majesty's Interest, for the Crimes of Incest and Murder, in Manner mentioned in the Criminal Indictment raised thereanent, Bearing, THAT WHEREAS, by the Law of God, and the Laws of this and all other well-governed Realms, the Crime of Incest, committed betwixt a Man and the Wife of his Brother-German, especially when such Crime is committed within the Dwelling-house of the injured Husband, where the Offenders were cherished and entertained by him with Confidence and Trust, is a heinous Crime and most severely punishable; and particularly by an Act passed in the Parliament of Scotland, in the Year one thousand five hundred and sixty-seven, being the first Parliament of King James the Sixth, chap. 14. intituled, "Anent them that commit Incest," it is statuted and ordained, "That quhatsumever Person or Persons that committes the said abominable Cryme of Incest, that is to say, quhatsumever Person or Persones they be that abuses their Bodie with sik Persones in Degrie, as God in his Word has expreslie forbidden, in ony Time cumming, as is contained in the xviii. Chapter of Leviticus, shall be punished to the Death:" And also whereas, by the same holy Law of God, and by the Laws of this and every other well-governed Realm, all wilful Homicide or Murder, especially when perpetrated by Poison, and above all, when such Murder is committed under Trust, or upon a Person to whom Fidelity and Affection are due by the most sacred Ties, is also a Crime of most heinous and atrocious Nature, and severely punishable: Yet true it is, and of Verity, that the said Katharine Nairn and Patrick Ogilvie, shaking off all Fear of God and Regard to the Laws, have presumed to commit, and are guilty, Actors, Art and Part of both, or one or other of the said heinous Crimes of Incest and Murder, aggravated as aforesaid: In so far as, the said Katharine Nairn having been married to the said deceased Thomas Ogilvie in the Month of January last, in this present Year one thousand seven hundred and sixty-five, and the said Patrick Ogilvie having about that Time returned from abroad, and taken up his Residence at the House of Eastmiln, belonging to the said deceased Thomas Ogilvie his Brother, in the Parish of Glenylla and County of Forfar, the said Katharine Nairn did, soon after her said Marriage, alienate her Affections from her said Husband, and fall into a Course of indecent Familiarities with the said Patrick Ogilvie, which soon became the Subject of Observation and Regret to her unhappy Husband, and to her Friends and Family; and notwithstanding repeated Admonitions given to the said Katharine Nairn, and to the said Patrick Ogilvie, by the said Thomas Ogilvie and their other Relations, to abstain from such indecent Familiarities, they obstinately persisted therein, frequently retired together, and continued in private for a considerable Time, as well in the Fields as within the House of Eastmiln, and in other Houses and Places of that Neighbourhood; and the said Katharine Nairn and Patrick Ogilvie, yielding to their inordinate Desires, did, after the said Marriage, viz. in the Months of January, February, March, April, May, and June, all last past, and before the twelfth Day of that last Month, at different Times, and in one or other of the Rooms of the House of Eastmiln, and in the Out-houses adjacent thereto, lie together, and abuse their Bodies with one another, and thereby they, and each of them, committed the abominable Crime of Incest; and their indecent Conduct having at last become the Subject of Observation and just Censure, not only to the said deceased Thomas Ogilvie and his Family, but to the Neighbourhood, the said Patrick Ogilvie was, on that Account, dismissed by the said Thomas Ogilvie from his House, on or about the twenty-third Day of May last; and the said Katharine Nairn did, upon that Occasion, and thereafter, express her Resentment against her Husband, and by the most outrageous Behaviour; and before the said Patrick Ogilvie left the said House, or soon after, he

he and the said Katharine Nairn did treacherously and wickedly conspire to murder the said Thomas Ogilvie by Poison; and, upon different Occasions, the said Katharine Nairn signified this her wicked Purpose to Anne Clark, Daughter of the deceased Allan Clark, Officer of Excise, who then lived in Family with her, and informed her, that the said Patrick Ogilvie had undertaken to provide the Poison, which she did not then believe either of them capable of, and endeavoured to divert the said Katharine Nairn from such wicked Thoughts; but, instigated by the Temptations of the Devil and of their own wicked Hearts, the said Katharine Nairn and Patrick Ogilvie persisted in their wicked Conspiracy; and from the Time the said Patrick Ogilvie was dismissed from his Brother's House, he and the said Katharine Nairn carried on a secret Correspondence by Letters, and had private Meetings together for the Purpose of concerting the Perpetration of their wicked Design; one of which Letters, without a Date, and unsigned, but of the Hand-writing of the said Katharine Nairn, will be produced in Evidence against them, and will be lodged in the Hands of the Clerk of the High Court of Justiciary, before which they are to be tried, that they may see the same: And, for accomplishing the Murder so concerted betwixt them as aforesaid, the said Patrick Ogilvie did, about the latter End of May last, repair to the Burgh of Brechin, in the County aforesaid, and there bought and received from James Carnegie, Surgeon in that Burgh, a small Phial Glass of Laudanum, which he pretended was for his own Health, and about half an Ounce or more of Arsenick pulverized, and put up in three or four different Dozes, in separate Paper Covers, pretending that he had Occasion for that Poison, in order to kill some Dogs, which destroyed the Game in that Part of the Country where he resided. And the said Patrick Ogilvie brought the said Poison to Alyth, within a few Miles of Eastmiln, where he arrived upon or about Monday the third Day of June last, at the House of Andrew Stewart, Merchant there, his Brother-in-law; and, upon the Day following, he did there receive a Letter from the said Katharine Nairn, which, by her Orders, was delivered to him in private, by Elizabeth Sturrock her Servant, to which he returned an Answer that same Day, with the said Elizabeth Sturrock, by a Letter, with Injunctions to deliver it privately to the said Katharine Nairn; which was done accordingly: And, upon the Day following, being the fifth Day of June, the said Andrew Stewart having had Occasion to go to the House of Eastmiln, he, the said Patrick Ogilvie, did send with him two small Phial Glasses, one of which he said contained Laudanum, and a Paper with Directions about the Manner of using it; and also a Packet which he said contained Salts, and a Letter closed with a Wafer, and likewise sealed with Wax, addressed to the said Katharine Nairn at Eastmiln; and he informed the said Andrew Stewart, that these were Medicines for the Use of the said Katharine Nairn herself, and desired him to deliver them and the Letter privately into her own Hands: And the said Katharine Nairn, having been previously advised by the said Patrick Ogilvie, that he was to send the Poison by the said Andrew Stewart, watched his Arrival at the House of Eastmiln, and, upon his coming there, conducted him into a private Room, and received from him the above

Particulars, which she presently locked up in a Drawer alongst with the Letter, without reading the same; and, in this Manner, or by some other Conveyance to the Prosecutor unknown, the Arsenick bought by the said Patrick Ogilvie as aforesaid, was conveyed by him to, and received by the said Katharine Nairn at the House of Eastmiln: And the said Andrew Stewart having, some Time after his Arrival there, discovered to the said Anne Clark, that he had brought some Medicines from the said Patrick Ogilvie, which he had delivered to the said Katharine Nairn, Anne Clark did thereupon disclose to the said Andrew Stewart, and to Isobel M'Kenzie the Mother of the said Thomas Ogilvie, her Apprehensions of Danger to the said Thomas Ogilvie's Life; and all these Persons, or some of them, did that Night advise and caution the said Thomas Ogilvie, to take no Meat or Drink from his Wife, except what he saw others taking; and some Time that same Night, the said Katharine Nairn said to the said Andrew Stewart, she wisshed her Husband was dead; and the said Thomas Ogilvie did that same Night sup with the said Katharine Nairn his Wife, and the other Persons above named, in his ordinary State of Health, and went to Bed at the usual Time of Night, having been abroad the preceding Day: That next Morning, the sixth Day of June, or one or other of the Days in the Beginning of that Month, Breakfast was set in the Parlour earlier than usual, and the said Thomas Ogilvie not having then got out of Bed, the said Katharine Nairn filled out the first of the Tea in a Bowl, which she said she was going to carry up to the Laird, meaning her Husband; and accordingly left the Parlour with the said Bowl in her Hand; but instead of carrying it straight to her Husband, she went into a Closet adjoining to his Bed-room, where she remained for some Time, and there wickedly and feloniously mixed the Arsenick which she had received as aforesaid, or some other deadly Poison, into the said Bowl of Tea, which she afterwards carried to her Husband, and pressed him to drink the same, which he accordingly did: And soon after he rose from Bed, went abroad, conversed with some of his Tenants and Servants, and then appeared to be in his ordinary State of Health; but before he got back to the House, and within the Space of an Hour or thereby after he had drunk the said Bowl of Tea, he was seized with a violent Reaching and Vomiting, and having got into the Kitchen, he continued there for some Time in great Distress, upon which he was helped up to his own Room, and laid in Bed, where he remained reaching, vomiting, and purging with such Violence, that he sometimes appeared convulsed; and, in the Intervals of his Distress, he did say to his Friends, and others about him, that he had been poisoned by the said Bowl of Tea which he had got from his Wife; and he having called for Water to drink, which was brought up to the Room by Anne Sampson his Servant-maid, in the same Bowl, or one like to that out of which he had drunk the Tea, he said, "Damn that Bowl, for I have got my Death out of it already," and ordered her to bring up the Water in the Tea-kettle, for he would drink out of nothing else; and having continued in the Situation above described for several Hours, his Tongue swelled, and his Mouth became so parched and dry, that he could scarcely speak; and,

and, during his Illness, though from the Beginning very alarming, the said Katharine Nairn not only endeavoured to hinder his Friends and Neighbours to have Access to him; but when she was pressed, by the said Andrew Stewart, to send for a Surgeon, she obstinately resisted that Proposal till near Sun-set, when, the said Thomas Ogilvie her Husband appearing to be then very low and near his End, she sent a Servant on Horseback to bring Peter Meik, Surgeon at Alyth, who accordingly came with all Dispatch; but, before his Arrival, her Husband was dead, having died in the Night betwixt the sixth and seventh Days of June last, or upon one or other of the Days or Nights in the Beginning of that Month: And from the Symptoms of his Disorder, and whole Circumstances of the Case above-recited, it evidently appears that he died of the Poison which was mixed and given to him, by the said Katharine Nairn, in the Bowl of Tea as above mentioned. And some Days thereafter, when it was proposed to inspect the dead Body, she, Katharine Nairn, appeared like one distracted, and cried out, What will I do! And the said Patrick Ogilvie being advised of the Death of the said Thomas Ogilvie his Brother, to whom he is Heir, in case the said Katharine Nairn be not with Child, he immediately came to Eastmiln, took up his Residence there, and gave the necessary Orders for the Interment. And the said Katharine Nairn and Patrick Ogilvie, having been apprehended there and committed to the Prison of Forfar, by George Campbell, Esq; Sheriff-Substitute of that County, as guilty of the Murder of the said Thomas Ogilvie, and examined by the said Sheriff-Substitute upon the fourteenth and fifteenth Days of June last, did each emit two several Declarations, which were subscribed by each of them, and by the said Sheriff-Substitute; which Declarations are to be used in Evidence against them upon their Trial, and shall be lodged in the Hands of the Clerk of the said Court of Justiciary, that they may have Access to see the same: And another Examination of the said Patrick Ogilvie, taken before James Balfour, Esq; Sheriff-Substitute of the County of Edinburgh, upon the twenty-second Day of the said Month of June last, and subscribed by him and the said James Balfour; and also an Examination of the said Katharine Nairn, taken before the said James Balfour, upon the twenty-fourth Day of the said Month of June last, and subscribed by him, will likewise be produced in Evidence against them in the Course of their Trial, and will in like Manner be lodged in the Hands of the Clerk of the said Court of Justiciary, that they may have Access to see the same. At least, at the Time and Place aforesaid, the said Thomas Ogilvie was murdered or died by Poison, wilfully administered to him; and of which Murder or Poisoning the said Katharine Nairn and Patrick Ogilvie, and each of them, or one or other of them, are guilty, Actors, or Art and Part. All which, or Part thereof, or that they were guilty of the Crime of Incest above charged against them, being found proven by the Verdict of an Assize before the Lords Justice-General, Justice-Clerk, and Commissioners of Justiciary, they, and each of them, ought to be punished with the Pains of Law, to the Terror of others from committing the like in Time coming.

DUNDAS, for Katharine Nairn the Pannel, repeated the signed Defences; and represented, That, in 1764, the now deceased Thomas Ogilvie of Eastmiln, a Gentleman rather advanced in Years, of a tender Constitution, and possessed of a very small Fortune, made his Addresses to this unfortunate Pannel, (then scarce nineteen Years of Age) in Proposals of Marriage: Which, contrary to the Opinion of her Friends, by reason of the Smallness of his Fortune, she accepted of from Principles of pure Love and Affection: And the Marriage being accordingly celebrated in the Beginning of January last, 1765, was dissolved, by Mr. Ogilvie's Death, upon the 6th of June last; when the Affections she had conceived for her Husband can scarce be supposed to have had Time to cool or subside.

Notwithstanding of which, it is her now very singular Misfortune to be indicted and accused, at the Instance of his Majesty's Advocate, upon the Information of Alexander Ogilvie, her Husband's youngest Brother, as guilty of two of the most enormous Crimes known in the Law: 1st, The Crime of Incest, which she is charged to have committed with Lieutenant Patrick Ogilvie, her Husband's immediate younger Brother; 2^{dly}, The Crime of Murder, committed upon the Person of her said Husband, by Poison administered to him.

Her Parentage, Education, Age, Sex, Character, and Behaviour, in that Stage of Life previous to her Marriage, when Female Passions are most powerful and predominant, which she flatters flatters herself will be attested by Persons of the greatest Honour and Probity, render it highly incredible, that any Person, not hardened and inured to every Species of Wickedness, lost and abandoned to every Principle of Virtue, should at once plunge into Crimes of so deep a Dye.

Conscious of her Innocence, she wishes for nothing more ardently than a fair and impartial Trial, as the only Means of Reparation that can be made to her injured Character, so much traduced; and which, in the Event, she is hopeful, will appear to be the Result of the most inveterate Rancour, Hatred, and deadly Malice, conceived against her by one of her own Sex, a Person of most flagitious Life, and abandoned Character; and who, she is now told, is the principal Evidence meant to be used against her.

Since her Imprisonment, no Endeavours have been spared to impress the Public with Sentiments of her Guilt, by Publication of many false, malicious, and wicked Reports, industriously propagated to the Prejudice of her general Character.

But she rejoices in the Appeal she will soon be able to make to the World, to her Judges and Jury, to vindicate her from the Charge of those horrid Crimes with which she stands now arraigned. At the same Time, she cannot know what false Evidence may be produced against her, Self-preservation requires, that she should not pass over any material Objection to the Form of this Indictment.

And, in that View, she objects to that Article of the Indictment which charges the Crime of Incest, said to have been committed in one or other of the Rooms of the House of Eastmiln, and Out-houses adjacent thereto, at different Times, in January, February, March, April, May and June, all last past, and before the 12th Day of that last Month; that is, in other Words, from the Day of her Marriage till the sixth Day after her Husband's Death.

She takes no Exception to the Generality of the Places charged where this Crime should have been committed, viz. "in one or other of the Rooms of the House of Eastmiln, and Out-houses adjacent thereto;" though she is advised, that after so full a Precognition as she is told has been taken, by Examination upon Oath of every Person that could be supposed to have the least Knowledge in these Matters, at which none were allowed to be present upon her Part, the Places where this supposed Crime is said to have been so frequently repeated, should have been specially condescended upon, and described. But she is advised, and humbly submits it to the Consideration of her honourable Judges, and the impartial World, that a most unbecoming and improper Latitude has been taken, in charging the Time of the Commission of this supposed Offence, comprehending the whole Space, every Hour, Day, Week, and Month, from the Period of her Marriage, to her Husband's Death, and even while he was lying a Corpse, before his Interment on the 12th of June.

The Disadvantages to which she must necessarily be exposed, in making her Defences against so general a Charge, are too obvious to need Illustration; and therefore she does humbly insist, that this Branch of the Indictment cannot be sustained, or admitted to Proof.

But if, contrary to Expectation, the same shall be sustained, she proposes, by undeniable Evidence, to traverse and redargue every material Circumstance charged in the Indictment, as well with regard to this as the other Crime with which she is accused; and, without departing from any other Defences which may occur to her Council, the great Lines of those Facts which she proposes to prove will be these following.

1st, That she accepted of Mr. Ogilvie for her Husband, contrary to the Opinion of her Friends, out of pure Love and Affection: That Mr. Ogilvie, before his Marriage, was, and continued thereafter, so long as he lived, to be of a tender Constitution: That he had repeated and violent Attacks of internal Disorders, Cholic Pains, Convulsions in his Bowels, &c. in so much that he was not only looked upon to be in a dangerous Way, but having had some violent Attacks recently before his actual Death, gave himself up for lost; and both the Day and the Night before he actually died, had such violent Returns of these Disorders, that he thought himself dying, and resolved to have sent for a Physician at many Miles Distance.

2^d, That the Pannel herself, soon after her Marriage, did likewise fall into a bad State of Health, costive in her Body, and restless in the Night, which obliged her frequently to take small Doses of Salts and Laudanum.

3^d, That Lieutenant Patrick Ogilvie, her Husband's younger Brother, the supposed Associate in the Crimes charged, having returned from the East-Indies, broken and shattered in his Constitution, much about the Time of the Pannel's Marriage, came to pay his first Visit to his Brother, and for some Time had his principal Residence in his Brother's House; whereby, and by Means of his near Relation, he distinguished a becoming Friendship and Intimacy with the Pannel, his Sister-in-law.

4th, That the Pannel having inadvertently allowed herself to run short of the Salts and Laudanum she used to take, and having occasionally mentioned this in the hearing of Lieutenant Ogilvie, he told her, that as these were Medicines which he himself had been advised to use, he had brought Home, in his Chest, a small Quantity of Laudanum, and a Parcel of Salts, of the very best Quality; and that if she pleased, he would send her a small Phial of the Laudanum, and a few Doses of the Salts, how soon his Chest, in which they were, should arrive from Dundee. She accepted of the Offer; and did accordingly some Time after receive from him, by the Hands of Andrew Stewart, Brother-in-law to Eastmiln, who came to Eastmiln on an occasional Visit, a small Phial of Laudanum, and two Doses of Salts; and which are supposed to be the Particulars alluded to in this Indictment, as the Doses of Poison said to be secretly conveyed to the Pannel.

5th, That Alexander Ogilvie, the younger Brother of her Husband, had, about the Beginning of this Year 1765, intermarried with a Woman of the lowest Rank, the Daughter of a common Porter in Edinburgh, which gave great Offence to his two Brothers; and the Pannel does not doubt, but she might, upon Occasion thereof, have expressed her Sense and Feeling of the Reproach thereby brought upon their Family.

Of

Of which the said Alexander Ogilvie. having got Intelligence, this, joined with the Disappointment in the Expectation he had conceived of the Succession to his Brother's Estate, he from thenceforward entertained a most groundless Resentment against the Pannel, the innocent Cause of that Disappointment; and took every Occasion to publish the most scandalous Falsehoods, calculated to create a Misunderstanding between her and her Husband.

6th, That for some Time before the said Alexander Ogilvie's Marriage, he had cohabited, in a most unbecoming Manner, with Anne Clark, a Cousin-german of the Family; a Woman of the most infamous Character, and who, for a Course of Years, had lived as a common Servant-maid, in one of the most notorious Stews or lewd Houses in Edinburgh, and other Houses of bad Fame, till at length she took up her Residence with the said Alexander Ogilvie.

7th, Anne Clark's Relation to Mr. Ogilvie's Family furnished Alexander Ogilvie with a Pretence of sending her over to Eastmeln, to pass some Weeks there, and to endeavour, by every possible Means, to bring about a Reconcilement between Mr. Ogilvie and his Brother Alexander. In this View, she attached herself at first to the Pannel, thinking by her Means to have some Influence with Mr. Ogilvie himself; till at length, finding they were both equally averse to have any further Correspondence, either with Alexander or his Wife, she fell to work in another Way; quarrelled with the Pannel; made her Court to Mr. Ogilvie; and, first by dark Insinuations, thereafter more explicitly, endeavoured to instil into Mr. Ogilvie's Mind Suspicions of the Pannel's Virtue, and of a criminal Intimacy between his Brother the Lieutenant and her; and that they had even gone the Length to form a Scheme to deprive him of his Life, by Poison or otherwise; and these her pretended Suspicions she communicated to the good old Lady Mr. Ogilvie's Mother: the Tendency of all which was, to operate a Misunderstanding and Separation betwixt Mr. Ogilvie and the Pannel.

8th, This diabolical Contrivance happened unluckily, in point of Time, to coincide with some Differences that had arisen between Mr. Ogilvie and his Brother the Lieutenant, in settling Accounts about Money-matters; which having at length produced high Words, and put both Brothers in a Passion, Lieutenant Ogilvie declared he would stay no longer in a House where he had been so used; and was preparing to leave it directly, when Mr. Ogilvie, giving way to his Passion, gave the parting Blow, by acquainting the Lieutenant of the Information he had received of his Familiarity with the Pannel, his Sister-in-law; by which Lieutenant Ogilvie justly enraged, having peremptorily insisted to know his Author, Anne Clark came at last to be suspected as the Author and Propagator of this wicked and malicious Story; and what afterwards happened, too fully justified the Suspicion.

9th, Lieutenant Ogilvie immediately left the House. Mr. Ogilvie soon cooled, and became sensible of the Folly of his Proceedings, and of the Injury he had done, both to his Wife and Brother; as so abrupt a Separation could not fail to put them in the Mouth of the World. He therefore wrote to his Brother the Lieutenant, pressing him most anxiously to return to the Family: The Pannel, as far as Decency would permit, joined in the same Request.

10th, At this unlucky Period was Mr. Ogilvie seized with a Return of one of those violent Disorders in his Bowels and Stomach. He had been almost dead the Day before; he relapsed at Night, complained much, thought himself a dying, continued ill all Night; finding himself easier, arose in the Morning as usual; again turning bad, returned to Bed, where he took a Bowl of warm Tea and Biscuit; after which he made another Effort, got up, put on his Cloaths, went abroad to take the Air, relapsed, fell a vomiting, threw up a deal of Bile, and expired about Twelve that Night.

11th, The Pannel's Behaviour upon that melancholy Occasion was decent and becoming, expressive of the real Sorrow and Grief she felt. The Tale that is told of her having administered the Poison in a Bowl of Tea that Morning, will be disproved in the strongest Manner. She had none to administer; and every Circumstance, as it is expected to come out on Proof, will shew, that she had it not in her Power so to have done, had she intended it; and that de facto none was administered.

12th, Mr. Ogilvie's Corpse remained uninterred until the 11th. It was viewed by Physicians and Surgeons of Character and Skill: The Appearances were nothing but what is usual in natural Distempers proceeding from various internal Causes. A Dissection of the Body would easily have shown whether there had been Poison in the Case or not; and it was the Duty of Alexander Ogilvie the Informer, who had come to the House, and stopped Interment for one Day upon this very Suspicion, to have caused the Body to be laid open. This was not done; whereby the infallible Means were lost of detecting the Crime, if any was committed, and this unhappy Pannel was deprived of the only infallible Means of proving her Innocence.

These are the great Lines of principal Facts which the Pannel proposes to prove: Many others to the same Tendency, will, it is expected, come out in leading the Proof; and she flatters herself, that these, with an intelligent Jury, will be effectual to detect the Falsehood of this Accusation, and to vindicate the Character and Innocence of an unfortunate young Woman, whose present State, several Months gone with Child, renders her a very improper Object to undergo a Trial of this Nature; which, from the Accumulation of two Capital Crimes in one Indictment, and the great Number of Witnesses given out in List, besides those to be adduced for her Exculpation, must draw out to an immoderate Length.

CROSBIE, for Lieutenant Patrick Ogilvie, Pannel, repeated his signed Defences; and represented, That the said Lieutenant Patrick Ogilvie having obtained a Commission in the Regiment, he behaved in the Execution thereof in a proper and inoffensive Manner; and being ordered along with his Regiment to the East-Indies, he remained there till his Health obliged him to return Home; when he came to the House of Eastmeln, where his Brother resided, who was then about to be married to Katharine Nairn, the other Pannel, and where he continued for some Time with an inoffensive inoffensive Character; suitable to that which he had maintained in the Regiment in which he had served, of which there are many Officers ready to attest the Character he held.

About the Time that the Pannel Patrick Ogilvie returned Home, and about the same Time that the defunct Thomas Ogilvie of Eastmiln was married to Katharine Nairn, Alexander Ogilvie, the third and youngest Brother of the Family, married the Daughter of one Ratray a Porter, a Person greatly inferior in Rank to himself; and his Relations, and immediate Connections, highly disapproved of the Match, and alienated themselves from him on that Account. This Marriage happened near about the Time that the deceased Thomas Ogilvie was married to the Pannel Katharine Nairn.

There was one Anne Clark, who was related to the Family of Eastmiln by the Mother's Side. This Woman had for several Years resided as a Servant in a House of dissolute Reputation in Edinburgh, and which, as a House of bad Fame, had regularly been visited by the Constables. Some Months, at least Weeks, however, before the Marriage of Alexander Ogilvie, she had cohabited with him in the same Room, and the same House; and after his Marriage she had lived in his Father-in-law's House. In consequence of all which it may be presumed a very particular Intimacy had arisen between her and the said Alexander Ogilvie.

The Friends of the Family of Eastmiln had taken Umbrage at the Marriage of Alexander Ogilvie with the Daughter of a common Porter; he thought it necessary, therefore, to send some Person to interpose as a Mediator with that Family; and the Person he made choice of was Anne Clark.

Anne Clark was accordingly dispatched to the House of Eastmiln. She was received, without Suspicion, as a Relation of the Family; and, in that Character, without Inquiry into her former Life and Conversation, she was treated as an Equal, and a Gentlewoman.

Such was the Pretext of sending Anne Clark to the House of Eastmiln: Something deeper, however, seems to have been intended. The deceased Thomas Ogilvie of Eastmiln had for many Years been subject to consumptive Symptoms; he had been afflicted with Ulcers in his Bowels, which had been discovered at the Distance of about five Years before his Death; ever after he had been in a valetudinary State; and there was Reason to apprehend he would not be long-lived. The Relations of Mrs. Ogilvie, in particular, had shewn some Apprehensions, that by his premature Death the Provisions in her Favour might be rendered ineffectual. The Pannel Patrick Ogilvie was also in a bad State of Health: He had been obliged to return from the East-Indies, where he had been in Service with his Regiment, on account of his valetudinary Habit: And from the Situation which the two elder Brothers were then in, there is the greatest Reason to believe, that Alexander Ogilvie had entertained the most sanguine Hopes of Succession to the Estate; which, by the Marriage of Thomas, and the Return of Patrick for the Recovery of his Health, seemed likely to be disappointed.

That Issue should not be procreated between Thomas Ogilvie and Katharine Nairn his Wife, and that Patrick Ogilvie should be obliged to betake himself to those inhospitable Climates which he had left, and whose Inclemencies had well nigh already put an End to his Life, seemed desirable Objects in the Eyes of Alexander Ogilvie. To promote Diffension, therefore, between Thomas Ogilvie and his Wife, and to alienate the Mind of Patrick Ogilvie the Pannel, from this Country, seemed to have been the Purpose for which Anne Clark was dispatched from Edinburgh. As a Relation of the Family, she was received with implicit Confidence at Eastmiln, particularly by the Pannels, who were little aware what a Snare was prepared for their unguarded Confidence.

Miss Clark had but a short Time resided at the House of Eastmiln, when she made it her Business to sow Diffension and Animosity among all the Members of the Family. She endeavoured to inspire Mr. Ogilvie with Jealousy towards his Wife, and Distrust towards his Brother: And she was but too successful in her Endeavours; Mr. Ogilvie, a sickly Man, and too susceptible of such Impressions, was soon misled by the artful Miss Clark into a Belief of what, if he had trusted his own Judgment, he could never have supposed.

The Period which was chosen to insinuate these Jealousies was remarkable. The Pannel Lieutenant Patrick Ogilvie had some Differences with his elder Brother, concerning his Patrimony; for a Dispute had occurred about the Balance of a Bond of Provision resting owing to Patrick Ogilvie. Miss Clark laid hold of that Opportunity to propagate her malicious Alledgences; and in the Heat of a Conversation which arose concerning the Balance of this Bond of Provision, and what Thomas had done with it after he took it up from the Custodier, the Deceased first insinuated his Apprehension of an improper Intercourse between the two Pannels.

To Minds already heated by a Dispute concerning Money-matters, this Incident served to add greater Warmth. The two Brothers parted with some Animosity, the Pannel Patrick declaring his Intention never to return to the House of Eastmiln.

The Intention of the Pannel was, after visiting his Friends in the Country, as he had now tolerably recovered his Health, to return to his military Service in the East-Indies; hoping, by means of this, to avoid both the Jealousy of his Brother, and the Envy of his other Relations. Though often solicited, therefore, to return to his Brother's House, he kept always at a Distance, from that Day when he discovered the first Symptom of Jealousy.

Mrs. Ogilvie, the other Pannel, had for some Time before this complained of bad Health; and particularly she complained of Want of Sleep: On account of her Complaints she had been in use to take Salts and Laudanum as Medicines. In the hearing of the Pannel she had expressed her Desire to have some of these Medicines; and as he, while at Sea, had been in use to take both on account of his bad State of Health, and in a short Time expected one of his Sea-chests would arrive, in which he had a Quantity of both, he proffered to her to send her some Laudanum and Salts, as soon as the Trunk or Chest they were in should be brought to the Country: And she told him she would be obliged to him for them, as they were so ill to be had of a proper Kind in that remote Part of the Country.

After the Pannel had left the House of Eastmilk in the Manner above-mentioned, his Trunk or Chest came to hand; it was brought from Dundee by Andrew Stewart, Merchant in Alyth, to his House; and was, in his Presence, in the public Shop, opened by the Pannel; who has Reason to believe, that the said Andrew Stewart observed both the Salts and Laudanum that were therein. But the Quantity of Laudanum proving very small, as a great Part of it had been used during the Voyage, the Pannel found himself under the Necessity of purchasing a small Quantity of Laudanum, in order to send as much as was requisite to Mrs. Ogilvie. He did accordingly buy a small Quantity of Laudanum for this Purpose; which, together with what he already had, he put into a Phial, and with two Doses of Salts, which, in the Presence of Andrew Stewart, he took out of the Chest or Trunk aforesaid, put up, and sent by the said Andrew Stewart, who was going on an occasional Visit to see Eastmilk and Mrs. Ogilvie.

What Symptoms attended the deceased Mr. Ogilvie's last Illness, the Pannel, not having been at the House of Eastmilk, cannot, from his personal Knowledge, pretend to say. As far as he has been able to inform himself, however, he cannot discover, that there is the least Evidence that he died by Poison. Nor did the Pannel, on any Occasion, pretend to hinder a Dissection of the Body, or any other Mean of Discovery, whether the Defunct had died of Poison or not. On the contrary, he urged and insisted, that such Trial should be made. And he having sent for a Surgeon to inspect and open the Body, the Person whom he had dispatched Express for that Purpose, was privately stopped by Alexander Ogilvie, the younger Brother, who is the Person on whose signed Information he was originally committed to Prison.

Such are the material Facts which the Pannel apprehends he is called on to explain, in Vindication of his good Fame: And to these Facts he subjoins the following Defence, in Terms of the Statute.

1st, That the Libel contains a Cumulatio actionum in criminalibus, which is reprobated in Law.

2^{dly}, That so far as relates to the Incest, the Libel is utterly vague and inconclusive, being destitute of all Circumstances of Time or Place, or other Requisites that can enable the Pannel to make a pointed Defence; and therefore ought not to pass to the Knowledge of an Assize.

3^{dly}, The Libel, as far as respects the Crime of Poisoning, is utterly irrelevant quoad this Pannel.

LOCKHART, for Katharine Nairn, } Adhering to RAE, for Patrick Ogilvie, } the Defences severally proponed for them, represented, That the Indictment charges the Pannels with Incest committed betwixt them, in the Months of January and June, and intervening Months, and before the 12th Day of the said Month of June: That the said Katharine Nairn and the deceased Thomas Ogilvie were not married till the 30th Day of the said Month of January; and to instruct that, produces and opposes their Contract of Marriage, dated the 29th of January, and they were married the subsequent Day. And therefore contended, That as to the Month of January, the Indictment could not go to Proof, farther than as to the last Day of that Month.

2^{dly}, As the deceased Thomas Ogilvie died on the 5th of June, the Time intervening betwixt that and the 12th, were equally irrelevant, as Incest could not be committed with the Widow after the Death of the Husband, at least to infer the Pains of Law, by which, in our Practice, are generally meant the Pains of Death.

Sir DAVID DALRYMPLE, for the Prosecutor, answered, That cumulatio actionum criminalium, is established in the Practice of the Justiciary Court; and in this Case is particularly necessary and proper. That it is established in the Practice of the Justiciary Court, is evident by the following Examples, selected from many of the same Nature which occur in the Books of Adjournal.

16th February, 1580. Andrew Glencorse indicted for poisoning his Wife, and for Incest with his Wife's Mother.

6th September, 1610. William Douglas of Lindcluden, Slaughter and treasonable Theft, being a landed Man.

30th March, 1638. Isobel Kailtie, notour Adultery, and murdering two Children born of the adulterous Intercourse.

30th March, 1638. Andrew Harvie, Art and Part of the Murder of Isobel Dalgleish, and of Adultery with Helen Stevenson.

27th July, 1642. Margaret Cunningham, Adultery, and Murder of the Child born in the Adultery.

12th March, 1645. John Gordon, Bigamy, Adultery, and Theft.

28th March, 1646. Margaret Thomson, Adultery and Forgery.

20th December, 1649. James Wilson, Incest with his Wife's Daughter, and Adultery with another Woman.

21st April, 1664. John Swinton and Janet Brown, notour Adultery and Murder of Swinton's Wife.

27th May, 1665. Margaret Hamilton, Adultery and Murder of her Husband.

9th April, 1670. Major Thomas Weir, Fornication, Adultery, Incest, and Bestiality.

12th September, 1678. Isobel Hay, Adultery, and Murder of her adulterous Child.

15th January, 1694. Doctor John Elliot, Daniel Nicolson, and Marion Maxwell, Murder, Falsehood, Forgery, and notour Adultery.

9th November, 1702. Margaret and David Myles, Incest and Child-Murder.

9th November, 1703. Mary Graham, Incest with her Father, and Child-Murder.

21st February, 1706. Elizabeth Hunter, Incest and Adultery.

As this Cumulatio actionum criminalium is fully established by Practice, so in this Case it is particularly proper and necessary: The two Crimes charged, Incest and Murder, are, from the Circumstances of the Charge, intimately connected; and it is proposed in general to prove both by the same Witnesses. To make separate Trials for each Crime would be oppressive to the Witnesses, the Jury, and the Parties. It is true that Accusations for different Crimes may be thrown thrown into one Libel, in such Manner as to prove oppressive. Whenever this is attempted, the Court will interpose; but not in order to prevent the Trial of different Crimes in one Libel where nothing oppressive is meant, and where the Expediency of the Cumulatio actionum is obvious. As to what is said, that the Charge for Incest is unintelligible or vague, it is answered, That it is laid in Terms the most unexceptionable, in the express Words of an Act of Parliament; and surely the Legislature must be presumed capable of conveying by Words, a just Idea of the Crime which it meant to punish. — As to what is said, that the Libel for Incest is vague, charging the Crime as committed in January and June 1765, and the intervening Months, it is answered, That in all Criminal Indictments a Latitude of this Kind is allowed in Practice; for Witnesses may be distinct as to the Circumstances of the Crime charged, and yet may not be certain as to a Day, or even as to a Month. Indictments do generally comprehend the Term of three Months. In the Case, the King's Advocate against Olipphant, 4th February 1736, a Libel for a single Act of Sodomy, bearing two Months in one Year, and two in another, was held sufficiently articulated; and in that Form was remitted to the Knowledge of an Assize. When an Indictment contains the Charge of a Crime, which in its own Nature is capable of frequent Repetition, as Incest is, a still greater Latitude is allowed. Thus in the Case of Forbes 1758, tried for corrupting young Girls, an Indictment was remitted to the Knowledge of an Assize, although it bore that the Crime was committed in some one or other of the Months from May 1757, to April 1758, inclusive. — If the Pannel Mrs. Ogilvie was not married till the 30th of January, 1765, the Charge of Incest preceding that Date will cease of course. If it shall be proved that she and Lieutenant Ogilvie defiled their Bodies after the Death of Eastmiln, it may not perhaps be Capital Incest by the Act 1567, which refers to the xviiiith Chapter of Leviticus; but it will nevertheless be Incest punishable in Law: And if no Incest but what was committed after the Death of Eastmiln should be proved, then the Jury will find accordingly, and the Court will adapt the Punishment to the Offence. As to what is said, that the Murder by Poisoning is not properly laid against Lieutenant Ogilvie, it is answered, That the contrary appears from the Tenor of the Indictment. But although this were not the Case, yet he is charged as guilty Art and Part of that Crime, which is in Law a relevant Indictment, and as such must be remitted to the Knowledge of an Assize.

The which Day, there was a Petition presented to the said Lords in the Names of Katharine Nairn, Relict of the deceased Thomas Ogilvie of Eastmiln, and Lieutenant Patrick Ogilvie, Brother to the said Thomas Ogilvie; humbly shewing,

That the Petitioners stood indicted before their Lordships, at the Instance of his Majesty's Advocate, for the alledged Crimes of Incest and Accession to the supposed Murder of the said Thomas Ogilvie.

That the Petitioners had pleaded Not Guilty to this grievous Accusation; and were confident, that in the Course of the Trial their Innocence would be fully vindicated to the Satisfaction of the Court and Jury.

That as the Petitioners did assert, and had good Reason to believe, that that Prosecution took its Rise from Malice, and most false and injurious Calumnies raised and propagated by Persons, who, from most unjust Views, have been desirous of ruining the Petitioners; it was therefore highly necessary and just, that the Petitioners, who were then to undergo that solemn Trial for their Lives, should be secured as far as possible against every Kind of Influence and undue Practice, that might, or could be used, upon Witnesses to be adduced in that Cause.

That, among other Misfortunes under which the Petitioners laboured, they had been accused, by Report, of Endeavours to secrete material Witnesses in that Matter; and though conscious of their Innocence in that, as well as in other Respects, yet several of the Witnesses have, on that or some other Account, been secured as Prisoners in the Castle of Edinburgh.

That, among these Witnesses, was Anne Clark, designed Daughter of the deceased Allan Clark, Officer of Excise, who is now confined in the same Room with two or more Maid-Servants, who were in the House of Eastmiln at the Time of Thomas Ogilvie's Death, and who would be most material Witnesses for the Petitioners in that Cause.

That the Petitioners would make it appear, by uncontestable Evidence, that the said Anne Clark was not only a Person of the worst Character and Disposition, such as rendered her improper and inhabile to be received as a Witness; but also, that she had entertained and expressed deadly Malice and Hatred against both the Petitioners; and that, in pursuance thereof, she had been the Author and Propagator of the false and malicious Stories which had given Rise to the present Prosecution. And, in fine, that she was in a Combination to ruin the Pannels, and, as far as she could, to deprive them of their Lives, as well as their Reputation.

That it would occur to their Lordships, that the Petitioners were exposed to imminent Danger by the said Anne Clark's being constantly confined in the same Room with other material Witnesses, whose Sex, Station, and Inexperience, though otherwise honest and well inclined, might expose them to be influenced and prejudiced by the malicious Endeavours of that artful Woman. For these Reasons, the Petitioners were confident, that their Lordships would forthwith give Orders for separating the said Anne Clark from the said other Witnesses. Therefore praying, That it might please their Lordships forthwith to grant Warrant to the Deputy-Governor of the Castle of Edinburgh, or any other proper Officer, to remove the Person of the said Anne Clark from the Room in which she was presently confined; or otherwise to separate her from the said Maid-Servants, and to keep her separate from them, or any other Witnesses to be adduced against the Petitioners in that present Prosecution. According to Justice, &c.

(Signed) HENRY DUNDAS. DAV. RAE.

Edinburgh, 6th August, 1765.

I THOMAS MILLER, Esq; his Majesty's Advocate, consent, That the Prayer of the within Petition be granted; but upon this express Condition, that no Person whatever be admitted or have Access to any of the said three Witnesses, except in Presence of one or other of the Officers of the Court of Justiciary, which their Lordships shall think proper to appoint.

“ foregoing Petition, with the Consent of his “ mend to the Depute-Governor of the Castle of “ where she and the other two Women before-“ named are presently staying, into some other “ Room in the said Castle, until Monday next

“ the twelfth Day of August current; and also “ recommend as above, that Care be taken that

Intran.

KATHARINE NAIRN, Widow of the deceased Thomas Ogilvie of Eastmiln,

AND

PATRICK OGILVIE, Lieutenant of the eighty-ninth Regiment of Foot, Brother-German of the said deceased Thomas Ogilvie;

Both present Prisoners in the Tolbooth of Edinburgh;

PANELS.

Indicted and accused as in the former Sederunt.

The Interlocutor on the Relevancy being read over to the Pannels in open Court,

The Lords proceeded to make choice of the following Persons to pass upon the Assize of the said Pannels :

Sir James Clark of Pennycaik.

John Howieson of Braehead.

John Christie of Baberton.

Adam Cuninghame of Bonnytown.

Alexander Sheriff of Craigleith.

David Dundas younger, of Newballs.

Sir George Suttie of Balgonie.

Charles Hay of Hopes.

William Ramsay of Preston.

John Forrest senior, Merchant in Edinburgh.

George Chalmers, Merchant in Edinburgh.

Gavin Hamilton, Bookseller in Edinburgh.

Archibald Wallace, Merchant in Edinburgh.

John Borthwick of Cruikston.

Thomas Brown of Braid.

The above Assize being all lawfully sworn, and no Objection to the contrary,

His Majesty's Advocate proceeded to call the following Witnesses :

DAVID RATRAY younger, in Cammock in the Parish of Glenylla, aged forty-two, married, purged of Malice and partial Counsel, sworn, and interrogate, depones, That he lives in the Neighbourhood of Eastmiln, and did hear it talked in the Country, that Mrs. Ogilvie the Pannel, and Lieutenant Ogilvie the other Pannel, lived in too familiar a Way, and walked out together without others in their Company: That the Deponent himself once saw them at their Walk, when there was no body with them, when they were leading other Arm in Arm, and at that Time he saw the Pannel Lieutenant Ogilvie kiss Mrs. Ogilvie the other Pannel once: That this happened after the late Thomas Ogilvie of Eastmiln's Marriage with the Pannel, and before his Death; cannot remember the precise Time, but there was a Storm on the Ground then: That at the above-mentioned mentioned Time the Pannels were walking near the House of Eastmiln, crossing the King's Highway, when the Witnesses saw as above, when he was no farther from them than the fourth Part of a quarter of a Mile; and that the Pannels were in a hollow Way when he saw Lieutenant Ogilvie give the other Pannel one Kiss as above. Causa scientie patet. And this is Truth, as he shall answer to God.

(Signed) DAVID RATTRAY. GILB. ELLIOT.

JOHN LAMAR in Craigendeach in the Parish of Glenylla, aged forty-seven, married, purged of Malice and partial Counsel, sworn and interrogate, depones, That he lives very near Eastmiln, and has heard the clashing People of the Country commonly report, that the Pannel Mr. Ogilvie liked Mrs. Ogilvie the other Pannel too well; and that a Dispute in the Family of Eastmiln about that Time arose, which took its Rise, as was said, from a Suspicion, that the two Pannels liked other too well: That upon this Mr. Ogilvie the Pannel left the House of Eastmiln, as was reported, upon the above Suspicion; and it was even said in the Country, that the two Pannels loved one another too well: That the Deponent himself knows, that Mr. Ogilvie the Pannel went away from the House of Eastmiln, about a Fortnight, as he thinks, before Eastmiln's Death, and the Deponent saw him return to the House of Eastmiln the Morning after Eastmiln's Death: That before Mr. Ogilvie the Pannel left Eastmiln's House, the Deponent has often seen the two Pannels walking Arm in Arm, and their Arms about each other's Neck: That he has seen them in that Posture at their Walk, even when Miss Clark and the Laird of Eastmiln himself were in Company, as well as when there was no body else with them. Depones, That the Report of the Love between the two Pannels he did not hear in the Country till after Lieutenant Ogilvie had left the House of Eastmiln as above; and that he never saw the Pannel Mrs. Ogilvie till after her Marriage: That since the Marriage he has seen Dr. Alexander Ogilvie, a Brother of Eastmiln's, at the House of Eastmiln; and that Anne Clark, a Witness cited in this Trial, was there before him and at the same Time: That the Deponent's House lies at about a quarter of a Mile's Distance from Eastmiln's House on the other Side of the River, from whence it is easy to see any Person who comes out or goes into the House of Eastmiln. Causa scientie patet. And this is Truth, as he shall answer to God. And depones he cannot write.

(Signed) GILB. ELLIOT.

JAMES BARNET, Son to Alexander Barnet in Cammock in the Parish of Glenylla, aged fifteen Years, unmarried, purged of Malice and partial Counsel, sworn, and interrogate. Dismissed.

JOHN GILLOCH, Wright in Dalnakebock, aged twenty-six Years, married, purged of Malice and partial Counsel, sworn, and interrogate, depones, That, about a Fortnight after Eastmiln's Marriage, the Deponent was sent for to the House of Eastmiln to put on some Locks and Brags-Work upon a Drawer: That accordingly the Deponent went to the Room where the Drawers stood, in which Room he saw the Pannel Mr. Ogilvie lying in Bed: That when he was so employed, Mrs. Ogilvie the Pannel came to the Room-Door where the Deponent was at Work, she having heard him, as he supposed, at Work. Upon Mr. Ogilvie the Pannel observing her, he desired her to come in: That after having said to the Deponent, John, are you begun? she went in and asked Mr. Ogilvie the Pannel, What! are not you up yet? and then she went towards the Bed-side, where stood a little Chest, upon which she sat down, and then they eat some sweet Bread together, which had been got at a Market. Depones, That he observed her Hand about the Bed-cloaths, just upon Lieutenant Ogilvie's Breast; at which Time she said to him, You are not poor, but pretty fat; but did not observe whether her Hand was below the Bed-cloaths, or above. Depones, That when Mrs. Ogilvie the Pannel was going out of the Room, Lieutenant Ogilvie kicked up the Bed-cloaths with his Feet, and threw them up upon his Body; upon which Mrs. Ogilvie said, Ab! you daft Dog! and the Deponent at that Time saw so much of the said Lieutenant Ogilvie's Body, that he the Deponent could judge whether he was a Man or a Woman: That after Breakfast, Mrs. Ogilvie came to where the Deponent was at Work, and gave him a Dram; and Lieutenant Ogilvie being present, she gave him also a Dram, for he was by that Time dress'd. Depones, That the Week before Eastmiln's Death, the Deponent went to Eastmiln to do some Work: That when he was sawing, Elizabeth Sturrock, then a Servant in that Family, came to the Deponent, and asked him, If he knew which Way the Laird had gone? he said, he could not tell. Upon asking her why she put such a Question, she answered, That as Lieutenant Ogilvie was expected at Eastmiln that Day, she could wish the Laird and he might not meet. And depones, That he the Deponent saw Eastmiln walk away from the House some Time before. Depones, That on the Evening of the Day last-mentioned, as the Deponent was returning from his Work, he saw Mrs. Ogilvie the Pannel returning to Eastmiln, upon the Road that leads from the Kirkton to that Place, and observed Mrs. Ogilvie and Anne Clark meet upon that Road; and that same Night he saw Mr. Ogilvie the Pannel standing at the Kirkton, which is not a quarter of a Mile from Eastmiln: That, at the Time above-mentioned, when Lieutenant Ogilvie kicked up the Cloaths, and the Lady said to him, Ab! you daft Dog! the Deponent does not think she saw the Condition the Lieutenant's Body was in, as she was then going out of the Room. Depones, That while Mrs. Ogilvie was sitting upon the Chest by Lieutenant Ogilvie's Bed, as above deponed to, the Deponent could see Mr. Ogilvie's Breast from the Posture he was then in. Being interrogate for the Pannel, depones, That when he saw Mrs. Ogilvie the Pannel upon the Road from the Kirkton returning to Eastmiln, as above deponed on, and Anne Clark upon the same Road, that they were both walking towards Eastmiln, and Anne Clark foremost. Causa scientie patet. And this is Truth, as he shall answer to God.

(Signed) JOHN GILLOCH. GILB. ELLIOT.

KATHARINE CAMPBELL, late Servant to the deceased Thomas Ogilvie of Eastmiln, being called; against adducing of whom it was objected, That she ought not to be received as a Witness, no Execution being returned against her twenty-four Hours before the Diet of Compearance, conform to the Forms of Court established. 2do, That she bears Ill-will and Malice against the Pannel Mrs. Ogilvie, having been dismissed her Service for Theft; on which Occasion she expressed Resentment in strong Terms, and swore Revenge, which is offered to be proved instante.

Sir DAVID DALRYMPLE answered, on the Part of his Majesty's Advocate, That the first Objection ought to be repelled. The Fact is, that this Witness was given out in List with others; but as she had gone into a distant Part of Scotland, could not be cited by the Messenger so soon as the other Witnesses were. She was cited on the Saturday before the first Diet of Compearance; but the Execution did not come up to Edinburgh till after that Diet. Upon its being received, it was on Wednesday last in the Forenoon given out to the Agents for the Pannels. The Act 1672 ordains, That the List of Witnesses be given out with the Indictment, and this was done here; but no Law requires that the Executions should be returned into Court twenty-four Hours before the first Diet of Compearance: In the present Case it was impossible that the Execution could be sooner produced, and the Pannels can suffer nothing by this; for they saw the Name of the Witness in List, and they have had more Time for this Purpose than they would have had, if the Execution had been given out twenty-four Hours before the first Diet of Court, and then the Relevancy had been determined and the Proof taken at the same Diet.

As to the second Objection, it ought also to be repelled. No particular Condescendence has been made of Malice or Cause of Malice at this Time, and the Witness will be purged of Malice in the Initials of her Oath in common Form; and therefore the Objections ought to be repelled, agreeable to the universal Practice of the Court.

“ The Lord Justice-Clerk and Commissioners of Justiciary, having considered the foregoing Objections and Answers thereto, repel the Objections, and allow the Witness to be received; reserving to this Consideration of the Court, whether or not any special Expressions of Malice and the Cause thereof, that may be condescended on by the Pannels in their Exculpation, shall be admitted or not.

(Signed) GILB. ELLIOT, I. P. D.”

On pronouncing of which Interlocutor, Mr. Alexander Lockhart Advocate, Procurator for the Pannels, protested for Remeid of Law; and that any Interrogatories he shall put afterwards to this or other Witnesses, during the Trial, shall not be deemed a passing from this Protestation.

It being represented to the Court, That Katharine Campbell, the Witness before-named, could speak the English Language but very ill; and that an Interpreter or Interpreters would be necessary to interpret what she said in the Irish or Erse Language into the English; and Robert Gray, Writer in Edinburgh, and James Frazer, Writer to the Signet, having appeared, they were appointed to be Interpreters, and gave their Oaths as such de fide.

And the said KATHARINE CAMPBELL, aged twenty-seven Years, unmarried, solemnly sworn, purged of Malice and partial Counsel, and examined, depones, That twenty Days after the deceased Mr. Ogilvie of Eastmiln's Marriage with Katharine Nairn one of the Pannels, she was sent by the Lady Glenkilrie, her Sister, to serve as Washer-woman at Eastmiln: That the Deponent staid in that Service for ten Weeks: That about fourteen Days, to the best of her Remembrance, after she went there, the said deceased Mr. Ogilvie went from Home, and as she heard, to Dunfinnan: That before Mr. Ogilvie went to Dunfinnan, she observed Lieutenant Ogilvie the Pannel frequently kissing Mrs. Ogilvie the Pannel, and shewing a great Fondness for her: That the Deponent having said to Lieutenant Ogilvie the Pannel, that she thought he shewed too great Fondness for his Sister-in-law, and that it would not be worse if he shewed less, the Lieutenant answered, that his Brother desired him to be fond of her, to keep her chearful in the Beginning. Depones, That she saw the Lieutenant frequently holding the Pannel Mrs. Ogilvie in his Arms when he was kissing her. Depones, That when the deceased Mr. Ogilvie went to Dunfinnan, the two Pannels continued at Eastmiln: That the Deponent made up Beds for them in two separate Rooms: That the Room she made up for Mrs. Ogilvie was immediately above the Kitchen, where the Deponent slept: That before the Deponent went to Bed, her Mistress called down to her, if she was not yet to Bed; and that she thought, she saw the Deponent have a Light; the Deponent answered, she was not yet gone to Bed, but was going soon: That after the Deponent had gone to Bed, she heard the Pannel Mrs. Ogilvie utter these Words, O fy, fy; and that she heard the Bed moving as if somebody had been stirring in it: That the Deponent upon this became under great Terror, but thereafter fell asleep. That next Morning when she went up Stairs, she found the Lieutenant's Bed in the same State that she had made it up the Night before, and the Bed no Way discomposed as if one had lain into it. Depones, That some Time before she went to Bed, she went up to Mrs. Ogilvie's Room, where she saw the Lieutenant sitting with her: That the Deponent proposed to mend the Fire in the Lady's Room, and to make a Shake-down there, for the Deponent's lying there all Night by her: That Mrs. Ogilvie desired the Deponent to go to her own Bed, for that she had no Difficulty to sleep in a House by herself. Depones, That the Cause of her being under the Terror as above, was, that she thought the two Pannels were then in Bed together. Depones, That she made up Mrs. Ogilvie's Bed next Morning, which was much tossed and tumbled; but as Mrs. Ogilvie might have done this herself, the Deponent did not, from the Appearance of that Bed, form her Conjecture. Depones, That the Kitchen where the Deponent slept had no plastered Ceiling, so that the smallest Noise in the Room above could be heard there. Depones, That there were two other Servant-maids at Eastmiln at that Time, to wit, Anne Sampson and Elizabeth Sturrock. Depones, That she never heard, while she continued in Eastmiln, any Circumstances happening between the two Pannels, such as has been above described, except one Night as before mentioned; and remembers particularly that the other Nights that Eastmiln was at Dunfinnan, the Lieutenant's Bed in the Morning had the Appearance as if it had had been slept in; and so had Mrs. Ogilvie's. Depones, That she never spoke of what she heard the Night above-mentioned, to the best of her Remembrance, till after she had left the House of Eastmiln, when she communicated the same to Lady Glenkilrie, the Pannel Mrs. Ogilvie's Sister. Depones, That the Deponent constantly slept in the Kitchen alone, while Eastmiln was at Dunfinnan, and all the Time she was in the Service. Depones, That, while the Deponent was in the Service at Eastmiln, there was a Sister of the Laird's married in his House; after which the whole Family went to Dunfinnan, and when they returned, all of them, except Eastmiln and his Mother, expressed Dissatisfaction with the Deponent, but upon what Occasion they never explained to her. And being further interrogate, depones, That the Motion she heard in the Room above her, deponed to above, she then thought was the Motion of a Man and Woman in Bed together, and such as a Husband and Wife have together; and that she would have been of this Opinion, though she had not seen the Lieutenant's Bed unruffled next Morning. And being interrogate by one of the Jury, depones, That she always considered that it was Anne Clark who stirred up her Mistress against her the Deponent. And being specially interrogate, depones, That the Night aforesaid, when she heard the Noise in the Bed above described, she slept none till towards the Morning; then fell asleep, awakened again in a Fright, and told the old Lady Eastmiln that she was under Terror, but did not explain the Cause. Depones, That Anne Clark was not come to the Family at the Time the Laird went to Dunfinnan, and she heard the Noise as above in the Bed. And being interrogate for the Pannels, depones, That Anne Clark came to Eastmiln about a Fortnight, to the best of the Deponent's Remembrance, after the Deponent came there. And further depones, upon the Pannels Interrogatory, That she did not hear the Motion above-mentioned, but at the Time above deponed to, and did not hear these Motions repeated at any other Period that Night. Further depones, That while she staid in the House, she made all the Beds without the Assistance of any of the other Servants. And, upon Recollection, depones, That she slept in the Kitchen by herself ever till Anne Clark came to the House; but after she came, Elizabeth Sturrock slept in the Kitchen with her the Deponent. Depones, That Anne Clark met the Laird as he was going to Dunfinnan, and came to Eastmiln two Nights before he returned. Further depones, That when she found Lieutenant Ogilvie's Bed in the State above described in the Morning, as if no Person had lain in it, it was about Sun-rising: That she saw the Lieutenant come down Stairs, and Mrs. Ogilvie the Pannel was still in Bed: That she made up Mrs. Ogilvie the Pannel's Bed that same Day, but after Dinner: That when Eastmiln went to Dunfinnan, to the best of her Remembrance, he staid away three Nights, and came home the fourth. And upon the Oath being read over to her, desired that it might be marked, That what is said of her having made up Mrs. Ogilvie's Bed in the Morning, is a Mistake, and improperly taken down, for that it was after Dinner she made it up. Depones, That she never got any Wages but a Pair of Shoes from Eastmiln; and that when she asked her Wages, she was told by Mrs. Ogilvie the Pannel, in Presence of Anne Clark, Lieutenant Ogilvie, and the deceased Eastmiln, that she was well off that she got Leave to go without Wages; and that the deceased Eastmiln followed her, and desired her to return, which she did, and staid for a Day; but that Mrs. Ogilvie next Morning turned her off. Causa scientie patet. And this is Truth, as she shall answer to God. And depones she cannot write.

JAMES FRASER.

ANNE CLARK, Daughter to the deceased Allan Clark, Officer of Excise, being called,

Mr. HENRY DUNDAS, for the Pannels, made the following Objections to her being received:

1^{mo}, That she is a Person of an infamous Character, being held and reputed to be a notorious Liar and Dissembler, a Disturber of the Peace of Families and Sower of Dissension, and also a common Whore and Prostitute.

2^{do}, That she has not only been held and reputed such as above described, but it will be clearly proved, that she lived and resided for no less than three Years and a half in a noted Bawdy-house within the City of Edinburgh, as a common Prostitute, notwithstanding that at the same Time the said House was frequently visited by the Constables as a House of bad Fame, and that frequent Disturbances happened therein, to the great Offence and Scandal of the Neighbourhood.

3^{tio}, The said Anne Clark did, in Confederacy with Alexander Ogilvie, Brother to the deceased Thomas Ogilvie last of Eastmiln, publish and propagate false, scandalous, and malicious Aspersions upon the Characters of the Pannels, relative to the Matters libelled, and did endeavour to make Dissension and Differences between the Pannel Mrs. Ogilvie and her deceased Husband. And,

4^{to}, The said Anne Clark does, and has entertained and expressed, on fundry Occasions before and since the Decease of the said Thomas Ogilvie, deadly Malice and inveterate Ill-will against both the Pannels, and has threatened repeatedly to do all she could to bereave them of their Lives.

Sir DAVID DALRYMPLE, on the Part of his Majesty's Advocate, answered, That all and every one of the Objections ought to be repelled; and that for the Reasons following:

With respect to the first, it is obviously irrelevant. No such Thing is ever allowed in the Practice of the Justiciary Court, as a general Proof of Character; and indeed, were it allowed, criminal Trials in Scotland would become inextricable; were the Character of each Witness to be thus inquired into, there would be as many separate Trials as there are Witnesses produced. Besides, were this new Form to be introduced, Witnesses would be deterred from appearing upon Citation given. Instead of being called to give Evidence, they would in Effect be called to stand an Inquiry upon the whole Conduct of their Lives. If they were to appear and undergo such a Scrutiny, they would come much worse prepared for their Defence than the Parties themselves when tried for the greatest Crimes. For the Parties know what is charged against them, and by what Evidence it is proposed to prove such Charge;

Charge; they are therefore enabled to prepare for their Defence. But Witnesses neither know what may be charged against them, nor by what Evidence it is proposed to prove such Charge; they are therefore incapable of preparing for their Defence. Indeed, by the Forms established in Scotland, the public Prosecutor himself has no Means of confuting such a Charge brought against a Witness. He may be possessed, as he is actually in the present Case, of Certificates from credible Persons to prove the Character of the Witness to be unblemished; but he is not at Liberty to produce them, because he must confine himself to the Examination of the Witnesses whose Names are given out with the Libel, and to the Evidence therein mentioned.

With respect to the second Objection; That the Witness is a common Prostitute, &c. it cannot be received in this Case; for the Crimes charged are occult Crimes, said to have been committed infra Familiam, and they can only be proved by Witnesses who resided in the Family, be their Character what it will. The Witness against whom the Objection is moved, did reside in the Family at the Period when the Crimes charged are said to have been committed. She was a near Relation of the Family of Eastmiln, was received and entertained as such, and had Occasion to have daily Intercourse with the Pannels. If such necessary Witnesses were to be rejected, it follows, that the Crimes charged could not be proved at all. Against the last Witness, Katharine Campbell, it was objected, That she had been turned out of the Family for some small Thefts; had vowed Revenge, and entertained Malice against Mrs. Ogilvie the Pannel. Against this Witness it is objected, That she is of an abandoned Character and a common Prostitute. Like Objections might be moved against every other Person of the Family called as Witnesses; and thus it would follow, that in the House of Eastmiln, the greatest Crimes might be committed with certain Impunity, because there were in the Family no Witnesses of irreproachable Characters, who might give Evidence of such Crimes.

With respect to the third Objection, it is no less irrelevant. If the Witness did spread such Reports as are mentioned in the Objection, from her proper Knowledge or just Suspicion of the Truth of the Matters libelled, she did nothing unlawful; and until the closing of the Evidence, it cannot be known whether the Reports, if spread by her, were true or false. It is therefore premature in the Pannels to offer to prove the Falseness of Reports while the Inquiry subsists, whether the Facts reported were true.

With respect to the fourth Objection of deadly Malice, it is a Charge in itself most improbable, That a Witness would deliberately resolve to perjure herself out of Malice. The Pannels ought to condescend, not only on the particular Expressions used, but also on the Cause of such deadly Malice. Were a general Proof of Malice expressed in Words to be permitted, then it would be in the Power of every Witness favouring the Pannel, to incapacitate himself from bearing Evidence to Facts which might be hurtful to the Pannel; and hence it is, that the Practice of the Court requires, that not only the Expressions importing Malice be proved, but that the probable Cause of such deadly Malice be also proved.

“ of Justiciary, having considered the foregoing
“ Objections and Answers thereto, repell the “ Objections; and allow the said Anne Clark to “ be examined, reserving the Consideration of
“ the Alledgeance, as to the said Anne Clark's
“ being the Author of the Report of the Pannels “ Guilt, till their Exculpation; and also reserving
“ to the Consideration of the Court, whether or “ not any special Expressions of Malice, that “ may be condescended on by the Pannels in “ their Exculpation, shall be admitted or not.

On pronouncing of which Interlocutor, Mr. Alexander Lockhart Advocate, Procurator for the Pannels, protested for Remedy of Law.

The said ANNE CLARK, Daughter to the deceased Allan Clark, Officer of Excise, aged thirty and upwards, unmarried, purged of Malice and partial Counsel, sworn, and interrogate, depones; That she was Cousin-german to the deceased Mr. Ogilvie of Eastmiln, and went to Eastmiln upon the first Day of March last: That her Reasons for going there were, not only to see Eastmiln and Mrs. Ogilvie who were then recently married, and Lieutenant Ogilvie who was then come from abroad, but also to endeavour to make up the Peace betwixt that Family and their Brother Alexander, who had entered into a very mean Marriage below the Rank of his Family: That after the Deponent had been some little Time at Eastmiln; she came to be informed, that Mrs. Ogilvie the Pannel was censured for being too familiar with the other Pannel, Lieutenant Ogilvie: That the Deponent informed Mrs. Ogilvie the Pannel of what she had thus heard; and desired Mrs. Ogilvie to be upon her Guard as to her Conduct, and to abstain from the Lieutenant's Company: That notwithstanding this, Mrs. Ogilvie was frequently in a Room by herself with the Lieutenant. Depones, That upon Sunday the nineteenth Day of May last, all the Family went to Church, excepting the two Pannels and the Deponent; and that they three staid together conversing in the lower Part of the House; but thereafter the two Pannels left the Deponent in the low Room, and went up Stairs together to the East Room above Stairs, which was the Lieutenant's Room, and immediately over Head of the Room where the Deponent was left: That she heard, by the Motion of the Feet, that both of them had entered the Room above, and, as she judged, they went towards the Bed; and thereafter the Noise of the Feet ceased: That upon this the Deponent, in order to discover what was passing, went up the Stair; and as the Bed in the Lieutenant's Room was an Alcove Bed, the Back of which came to the Side of the Stair, and there was nothing betwixt the Bed and the Stair, but a Piece of Plaster and the Timber of the Bed, so that a Person standing in the Stair could hear distinctly what passed in the Bed, she stood and listened; and from the Motions that she heard, is positive that they were in Bed together, and abusing their Bodies together; by which she means, they were lying carnally together. Depones, That immediately after this she came up to the Room where the Pannels were, and walked to the End of the Room, without looking into the Bed: That she then turned and saw the Lieutenant, one of the Pannels, standing close by the Side of the Bed buttoning his Breeches; and she observed his Shirt at first out: That at this Time she observed Mrs. Ogilvie was in the same Bed; and that she saw her Cloaths which she had then on, which were a red and white Callico Bed-gown and Skirt. Depones, That the same Evening she told Mrs. Ogilvie the Pannel what she had seen and heard: That Mrs. Ogilvie made no Answer. Depones, That upon the Monday the Pannels repeated the same Thing, which the Deponent is positive of, because she saw them go out of the low Room, and heard them enter the Lieutenant's Room, move towards the Bed; and then the Deponent listened at the Stair, and heard the same Motions repeated: That, upon the Tuesday and the Wednesday, she heard them again retire together to that Room, and move towards the Bed; but she did not any of these two Days go to the Stair. Depones, That she told the deceased Mr. Ogilvie of Eastmiln's Mother, the Deponent's Aunt, what she had heard and seen; this she told her Sunday Night, Monday, and Tuesday. Depones, That she heard afterwards from the deceased Eastmiln, that his Mother had said to him, that the Pannel Mrs. Ogilvie, was troublesome to the other Pannel the Lieutenant: That, on Occasion of this Information, there was ill Blood and high Words between the two Brothers; and at length Eastmiln deceased, ordered the Lieutenant out of his House; and that this happened upon the Thursday immediately subsequent to the Sunday aforesaid. And further depones, That upon the Sunday, Eastmiln, as she believes, was at Glenkilrie: That the other Days he was at Home; but as he went to visit his Workmen every Morning, when the Pannels went together to the Lieutenant's Room as aforesaid, it was at the Times that Eastmiln was out with his Workmen. Depones, That Lieutenant Ogilvie left the House of Eastmiln about Three o'Clock Afternoon of the Thursday aforesaid: That, upon his leaving it, the other Pannel, Mrs. Ogilvie, went up to the Room which had been his, and threw herself down upon a Bed in that Room, different from the Alcove Bed above-mentioned, and there fell a-tearing and crying; and that, when her Husband came to the Room, she ordered him to go out of it: That Eastmiln, upon that Occasion, told his Wife, that her Conduct was improper, and that she would ruin her Reputation, by intermeddling in the Differences betwixt him and his Brother. And being further interrogate, depones, That, before the Sunday above-mentioned, the Deponent has frequently seen improper Familiarities between the two Pannels; particularly, she has seen them kissing one another, and him having his Hand down her Breast. Depones, That when the Lieutenant went off, as above-mentioned, and Mrs. Ogilvie was in the above Disposition, Eastmiln, as he had frequently upon former Occasions, when he and his Wife differed about the Lieutenant, expressed his Desire to go and leave his own House; and the Deponent, who at that Time saw little Prospect of Harmony between them, proposed to Mrs. Ogilvie, that she should agree to this Scheme, which she seemed very well pleased with; but that next Day both seemed to have changed their Mind. And being further interrogate, depones, That about a Fortnight or three Weeks after the Deponent went to East- miln, the two Pannels and the deceased Mr. Ogilvie of Eastmiln having gone to pay a Visit at Glenkilrie, they all of them returned, as the Deponent thought, in very bad Humour; and, in particular, Mrs. Ogilvie the Pannel was so, and expressed her Dissatisfaction with her Husband, and said, If she had a Dose, she would give it him; but the Deponent at that Time did not think Mrs. Ogilvie serious in what she said: That thereafter, but she cannot precisely specify the Times, Mrs. Ogilvie did frequently signify to the Deponent, that she was resolved to poison her Husband; and told the Deponent, she intended to get Poison either from Mr. Robertson a Merchant in Perth, or Mrs. Eagle who keeps a Seedshop in Edinburgh, upon Pretence of poisoning Rats: That the Deponent, seeing Mrs. Ogilvie intent at that Time upon that Project, endeavoured to divert her from it by gaining Time, and signified, that if she applied to these People for the Poison, she would be brought to an untimely End; but that she the Deponent would go to Edinburgh, and get a Brother of the Deponent's who lived there to buy the Poison: That Mrs. Ogilvie approved of the Deponent's Proposal; but complained, that the Deponent was long in putting it in Execution, and therefore proposed to the Deponent to speak of it to Lieutenant Ogilvie the Pannel, as he could get it more expeditiously; and this the Deponent declined to do. Depones, That upon the Day that the Lieutenant was put from the House, she, Mrs. Ogilvie, told the Deponent, that, with much Difficulty, she had prevailed upon Lieutenant Ogilvie the Pannel to undertake to furnish her with Poison. Depones, That upon a Wednesday, which was the Day immediately before Eastmiln's Death, Mrs. Ogilvie the Pannel told the Deponent, that she had received a Letter the Day before from the Lieutenant, which was brought to her Hand by Elizabeth Sturrock; and in this Letter he had acquainted her, that he had got the Poison the Length of Alyth, but did not chuse to trust Elizabeth Sturrock with it; and that he would send it by Andrew Stewart his Brother-in-law, whom he was to send with it next Day; so that she expected it there that Night. Depones, That, upon this Occasion, she told Mrs. Ogilvie, she never believed it would come to that Pitch, and exhorted her most earnestly against the Proposal, saying, It would not only bring her to Misery, both in this World and the next, but would be bringing a Disgrace upon the Family she was come of, and upon that into which she was married: That upon this Occasion, Mrs. Ogilvie said to the Deponent, to let her alone; for the Conversation was disagreeable to her, as the Deponent knew, and she was determined to put her Resolution in Execution, whatever might be the Event. Depones, That the Reasons given by Mrs. Ogilvie for coming to this strange Resolution, and for rejecting all the Proposals the Deponent made for her living in Friendship with her Husband, were, that she did not love her Husband, and never could love him; and that he had used Lieutenant Ogilvie ill upon her Account; and said, How happy could they live at Eastmiln, if there were none there but the Lieutenant, she, and the Deponent! That, upon one Occasion the Deponent, in remonstrating against these wicked Proposals, told Mrs. Ogilvie, that, although her Husband were dead, she and the the Lieutenant could not enjoy one another; Mrs. Ogilvie answered, That they could go and live in some of the Countries where he had been. And being further interrogate, depones, That when she was remonstrating to Mrs. Ogilvie against poisoning her Husband, she specially mentioned to her, that as she had been guilty of Adultery and Incest, it was a dreadful Thing to crown all with Murder. Depones, That upon the Wednesday's Night aforesaid, immediately preceding Eastmiln's Death, Mrs. Ogilvie the Pannel, and the Deponent went out together, Mrs. Ogilvie having expressed her Impatience for Andrew Stewart's Arrival: That they did not meet with Andrew Stewart; but when they returned to the House, found him sitting with the old Lady Eastmiln, he having come in another Way: That Mrs. Ogilvie the Pannel immediately carried Andrew Stewart up Stairs with her, who staid with her about half an Hour, and then came down Stairs by himself: That the Deponent asked him, if he had brought any thing with him? He answered nothing at first; but, upon her pressing, and saying, She was sure he had brought something with him, he then said he had brought some Drugs for Mrs. Ogilvie, which, at that Time, he described as being in two Phial Glasses: That the Deponent, on this Occasion, said, they were black Drugs: That Mrs. Ogilvie the Pannel having come down Stairs very soon after, the Deponent did not get an Opportunity at that Time to explain to Andrew Stewart what she meant by calling them black Drugs: But Mrs. Ogilvie and Andrew Stewart having gone out towards the Kirkton, and left the Deponent and her Aunt Lady Eastmiln by themselves, the Deponent told her Aunt, that she believed what Andrew Stewart had brought was Poison; for that Mrs. Ogilvie the Pannel had told her the Deponent, that Andrew Stewart was to bring the Poison. Depones, That the old Lady Eastmiln was present when the Deponent said to Andrew Stewart, they were black Drugs, as above-mentioned: That the Deponent, after acquainting the old Lady as above, asked her, If she should inform the deceased Mr. Ogilvie of Eastmiln of the Particulars? That the old Lady said it would be improper; for that Mrs. Ogilvie would persuade her Husband, that it was but Laudanum for her own Use, and would resent it against the Deponent; and that the only Method that occurred to her proper was, that both she and the Deponent should caution Eastmiln against taking any thing from his Wife in private. Depones, That after this, she went to the Kirkton with a View of being advised by the Minister, what was fit to be done in such a Case; but had the Misfortune to miss him, he not being at Home, the Door locked, but the Key in it: That Eastmiln, and his Wife the Pannel, and Andrew Stewart, were all in the Kirkton at that Time, in the House of Fergus Ferguson, a Tenant of Eastmiln's, who keeps a Public House: That they having come away from the Kirkton, Mrs. Ogilvie and Andrew Stewart walked on like a pistol-shot before Eastmiln; and the Deponent joined Eastmiln, and signified to him, that it would be very proper and necessary for him to leave his own House, for that she believed his Life was in Danger; but did not tell him, that she suspected the Danger was from his own Wife: That Eastmiln said, he could not leave Home at that Time, because of his Labourers; she having signified, that there was Danger in a Delay, Eastmiln answered, He understood what she meant; but that he was determined he would take nothing she gave him, and so would put it out of her Power. Depones, That her Aunt, that same Night, both before and after Supper, told her, that she likewise had cautioned Eastmiln to take nothing from his Wife. Depones, That the same Evening she informed Andrew Stewart, that she believed it was Poison he had brought, and told him her Reasons for believing so; that Andrew Stewart appeared to give Credit to what the Deponent said. After Eastmiln and his Wife had gone up Stairs to Bed, Andrew Stewart, the old Lady the Deponent's Aunt, and the Deponent, had a long Conversation how to disappoint Mrs. Ogilvie's Design; and particularly, she remembers, that Andrew Stewart proposed, that as he knew the Drawer wherein she had put the Things that he had brought her, Means should be used in the Night-time to get Mrs. Ogilvie's Keys to open the Drawer, and take out the Things; or, if that would not answer, that they might get a Tradesman next Day, or as soon as they could get an Opportunity, to open the Back of the Chest of Drawers, and so get into the particular Drawer to get out the Things. Depones, That Mrs. Ogilvie, as Andrew Stewart told that Night, received a Letter from Lieutenant Ogilvie, which he Andrew Stewart brought along with him; and that the Lieutenant had desired him to deliver that Letter with the Drugs privately to Mrs. Ogilvie the Pannel. Depones, That she never insinuated to Eastmiln any Suspicions she had of his Life being in Danger, till that Night above-mentioned, which was the one immediately preceding his Death; but that she frequently told the old Lady his Mother of the Danger she apprehended Eastmiln was in, from the Disposition his Wife appeared to be in; and the old Lady said, that she likewise was suspicious, because she thought her Daughter-in-law would stick at nothing: But that the Deponent did not explain to the old Lady the Affair of the Poison, till after the Lieutenant was turned away from Eastmiln, when she advised her to warn her Son of his Danger. And being further interrogate, depones, That from the Time that the Deponent went to his House in March last, Eastmiln appeared to be under great Distress of Mind on account of the Difference between him and his Wife; but she did not hear him complain of any bodily Indisposition, excepting sometimes of a Pain in his Breast, which she thinks happened twice; but he never kept his Bed one Day, nor even an Hour extraordinary: That the Day immediately before his Death, there had been a Quarrel between him and his Wife; and the Quarrel was, that Mrs. Ogilvie had given the Deponent some Cambrick to make into Ruffles for the Lieutenant, who, she said, had sent the Cambrick to her Mrs. Ogilvie; whereas Eastmiln said, a Chapman had come that Day to the House and craved him for the Price of it, and that he had refused to pay it: That upon this Quarrel Eastmiln had gone out in bad Humour, and, as the Deponent thinks, without his Breakfast; and the Deponent heard, that he spent the Day among his Tenants over the Hill: That he returned in the Evening, and said he was not well, and went to Bed without Supper. Depones, That Eastmiln never never had at this Time, or at any Time, so far as she knows, any violent Vomiting, Purging, or Convulsions; and, so far as she knows, no body else ever heard of any such Thing. Depones, That next Morning Mrs. Ogilvie the Pannel made the Tea for Breakfast somewhat earlier than usual: That the Deponent having come into the Breakfasting Room, heard Mrs. Ogilvie the Pannel say, that the Laird and Elizabeth Sturrock were well off that Morning, for they had got the first of the Tea: That the Deponent before this had been sitting with her Face to the Window, and her Back to the Table, but did not take any Notice what Mrs. Ogilvie had been doing; but upon Mrs. Ogilvie's expressing herself as above, turned about and asked, What! has the Laird got Tea? And Mrs. Ogilvie answered, he had; upon which the Deponent said nothing. Depones, That she does not know the Reason why Mr. Ogilvie had not come down to Breakfast that Morning. Depones, That she said to the old Lady, as she thinks, that she was frightened about the Tea the Laird had got; but said nothing to Andrew Stewart of it, and this she means of the Time before the Laird was taken ill. Depones, That Mrs. Ogilvie the Pannel, during the Time of Breakfast, went out of the Room twice or thrice, and at length came in and told the Laird was taken very ill: That the Deponent overheard a Report among the Servants, that he was troubled with a Purging and a Vomiting: That the old Lady desired the Deponent to go up and see Eastmiln, which she did in about half an Hour after Breakfast: That she continued very short while in the Room, she looked to him, and he appeared to her to be in a dying Condition: That she came off very soon crying; Mrs. Ogilvie the Pannel met her, and asked her if she was daft? That the Deponent answered, in way of Surprize or Derision, O! ay! and Mr. Ogilvie is dying. Depones, That after she had come down Stairs, and staid half an Hour or so, the old Lady desired her to go up Stairs to her Son Eastmiln, to keep him from these two Women; by which the Deponent understood she meant Mrs. Ogilvie and Elizabeth Sturrock, who were then sitting with him: That the Deponent accordingly went up Stairs before Mid-day, as she thinks, and continued with him till his Death, which happened betwixt Eleven and Twelve o'Clock that Night: That Eastmiln, as the Deponent has above expressed, was seized, as she heard, with a Purging and Vomiting: That after she went up Stairs to him, he had for some Time some Purging, but not near so violent as she had been informed it was before: That he had a most severe Vomiting, and called always to give him a cold Drink: That he drank great Quantities of cold Water: That the Deponent having mixed it with Milk, he complained of that, and insisted to have cold Water by itself, and then drank some small Ale; but upon his Brother-in-law Glenkilrie's coming there, which was in the Evening when it was almost dark, he dissuaded him from taking more Ale: That the Deponent tried him once with a Glas of Wine and a Piece of Sugar in it, which he drunk, and for about an Hour after taking it vomited none: That the Deponent got the Glas of Wine from Mrs. Ogilvie the Pannel: That Eastmiln immediately after taking the Water or the Ale threw it up again; but after he had drunk the Glas of Wine, as afore said, there was an Intermission of the Vomiting for about an Hour; and though he drank both Water and Ale after that, he kept it longer than before. Depones, That Eastmiln complained of a Burning at his Heart, as he called it; and complained bitterly of Pains in the Brawns of his Legs, and said they would rent, and desired the Deponent to bind them up for him, which the Deponent according did: That there was a severe Heaving at his Breast, and a strong Caw, and he cried to keep open the Windows to give him Breath: That he was constantly in Motion, moving his Head, his Legs, and his Arms: That she observed in the Afternoon he did not speak plain, which she supposed was owing to his Tongue having swelled; but she did not see his Tongue: That about an Hour, or an Hour and a half before his Death, he had an Intermission of the Vomiting; but that at length he was again attacked with a most severe Press of Vomiting, after which he fell back upon the Deponent, who was sitting behind him in the Bed supporting him, and expired. Depones, That she heard Eastmiln during his Distress say to James Millam his Tenant in the Mill, who was attending him, that it was either strong Poison, or rank Poison, that was killing him. Depones, That before One o'Clock she heard the old Lady Eastmiln say to Eastmiln, that he had broke his Promise to her in taking any thing from his Wife: That he answered, It is too late now, Mother; but she forced it on me: That at this Conversation there were none present, but the old Lady and the Deponent. Depones, That she knows nothing about sending for any Surgeon to attend upon Eastmiln, further than that she herself sent Annie Robertson, one of the Servants of the House, to tell Andrew Stewart, who she understood had then gone off for Alyth, to desire Mr. Meik the Surgeon at that Place to come to Eastmiln; and that this happened the Forenoon of the Day on which Eastmiln died: That she thinks, before she sent off Annie Robertson herself, she heard some Conversation about sending for a Surgeon; and thinks that it was Andrew Stewart and the old Lady who were talking of it. Depones, That after Eastmiln's Death, she was told by James Millam, that he had got Orders from Mrs. Ogilvie the Pannel, to take a Horse and go and acquaint Lieutenant Ogilvie of his Brother's Death; but that thereafter it was concerted, that as Glenkilrie, in whose House the Lieutenant then staid, was going Home from Eastmiln, that he should acquaint the Lieutenant: That next Morning the Lieutenant arrived about Six o'Clock, as she thinks. Depones, That the Day on which Eastmiln died, Mrs. Ogilvie the Pannel came in for a very little to him in the Forenoon: That thereafter she frequently proposed to come back to him, if the Deponent were dismissed; but Eastmiln would not agree to this, and she came no more near him. And being further interrogate, depones, That the Morning after Eastmiln's Death, she told the Lieutenant the Pannel, that she knew the whole Affair of the Poison, and asked him how he could send it to Mrs. Ogilvie? That the Lieutenant appeared to be under great Concern and Confusion, and told, That suppose he had sent it to her, he did not think she had so barbarous a Heart as to give it. And three missive Letters, marked by the Deponent and the Lord Examiner's Subscription, being shewn to her, depones, That the Letter which begins Dr Captain, and is not subscribed, and has no Date, and another Letter which begins Dr Sr, and is dated Glenkilry, Weensday, and signed Ketty Nairn, are both very like Mrs. Ogilvie the Pannel's Writing, but the first she is sure is her Writing; and the third Letter, which bears Date at Glenkilry, and addressed To Thomas Ogilvie, Esq; of Eastmiln, depones, That she does not know whose Hand-writing it is. Depones, That she did not, either the Day of Eastmiln's Death, or the Day after, acquaint any body, by Letters or otherwise, of her Suspicions and Belief that Eastmiln died by Poison. And being interrogate for the Pannels, depones, That upon the Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday above-mentioned, when she has deponed, That the two Pannels were together, in Manner above described, the old Lady and the Deponent were in the House, and some Servants, who were at the other End of the House. And being interrogate, From what Place the Pannels went when they went to the Room above Stairs for the said three Days? depones, They went from the low Room in which the Deponent was all these Days: That she is positive the old Lady Eastmiln was in the low Room with them upon the Monday; but has been informed from her, that she observed nothing: That she desired the old Lady, on the Wednesday, to observe the Motion of their Feet in the Room above; but the old Lady said she did not hear it, which the Deponent imputed to her being dull of hearing: That when the Deponent heard as above, these last three Days, it was after Breakfast, and, as she thinks, about Eleven o'Clock before Noon. Depones, That when she went into the Room where the two Pannels were upon the Sunday, the Door of the Room was open. Depones, That she did not meet Eastmiln upon the Road that Day she came to his House; but she saw him the Day before at the Boat of Bermeny, but did not speak to him, he having passed before she knew it was him: That when she came to Eastmiln, she found none in the Room that she came into but Eastmiln and his Mother: That after she came to Eastmiln, she slept with her Aunt the old Lady. Depones, That she does not know where the Servants lay; but has a Notion, that Katharine Campbell and Elizabeth Sturrock lay in the Kitchen. Depones, That she has seen Elizabeth Sturrock several Times in her Bed in the Kitchen; and that she does not remember to have seen Katharine Campbell in her Bed, though she slept in the Kitchen: That the Servant-maids had no Place to sleep in, in the House, but the Kitchen; but the third Maid slept out of the House. Depones, That Lieutenant Ogilvie slept in the Room she has formerly mentioned; but she never knew him sleep in any of the Beds, but the Alcove Bed, except when his Brother was lying a Corpse. Depones, That she had once a Conversation with one Mr. Dougal a Surgeon, upon the Nature of Laudanum, which Mr. Dougal had been speaking of the Day that Lieutenant Ogilvie was put from Eastmiln: That Mr. Dougal had been telling that he took it for the Gout; and she asked, If it was not dangerous? He told her, that there had been Instances of fatal Effects that it had; but said, if it was cautiously taken, there was no Danger: That she asked, how much one might take with Safety? which he told her; but that she did not ask, how much of it would do a Man's Business? Depones, That from her own Knowledge she cannot say whether Eastmiln was abroad on the Morning of that Day on which he died; but that she heard it reported by others, particularly by Anne Sampson, that he had been out that Morning; and heard it reported, that it was after he had got the Bowl of Tea; and that he was seized with a Vomiting before he got in again. Depones, That she knows there was once a Dose of Salts sent from Edinburgh to Eastmiln for Mrs. Ogilvie's Use; but never heard of any more Salts coming into the Family. Depones, There was no body present when the old Lady desired her to go up Stairs and attend Eastmiln, and keep these two Women from him. Depones, That Alexander Ogilvie, one of Eastmiln's Brothers, came to Eastmiln upon the Tuesday Forenoon after his Death. Depones, That when the Deponent once asked Eastmiln, when he was dying, If he did not chuse that his Wife should be with him? his Answer was, Miss Clark, I chuse a Drink; and that either Glenkilrie, or James Millam, or both, was present at this Time: That what Eastmiln vomited was much of the Colour of squeezed Eggs, or greenish-yellow: That Alexander Ogilvie aforesaid came to Eastmiln upon the Monday eight Days after she came there; and that she came on a Friday; and that he staid there till his Sister was married: That she never heard of any Report of the indecent Familiarities between the Pannels before she came to Eastmiln: That she never knew Mrs. Ogilvie the Pannel, till the Deponent went to Eastmiln as aforesaid. Depones, That she never had any Difference with any of the Family of Eastmiln while she staid there: That she never heard that Eastmiln had employed James Millam to turn her away from Eastmiln, or borrow Money from him to give her to go away from the House: That after Eastmiln's Death, she got a Message from Mrs. Ogilvie the Pannel, by Martha Ogilvie, Eastmiln's Sister, to dismiss from the House. Depones, That the Conversation she had with Lieutenant Ogilvie the Pannel, about his sending the Poison to the other Pannel, was at the Burnside, upon the East Side of Eastmiln. And, upon the Prosecutors's Interrogatory, depones, That she does not know that Mrs. Ogilvie the Pannel took any Salts after her Husband's Death. Depones, That when she saw Eastmiln, in coming to his House, at the Boat mentioned above, she was informed he was then returning from Dunfinnan. And being further interrogate, upon the Part of the Pannels, depones, That she was informed, the Drawers into which the Things were put that Andrew Stewart brought, stood in the Lieutenant's Room. Depones, That after the Pannels were committed to Prison at Forfar, she the Deponent went back to Eastmiln, and staid for a few Nights: That at this Time Alexander Ogilvie, Eastmiln's Brother, had a Roup of the Cattle at Eastmiln. Causa scientie patet. And this is Truth, as she shall answer to God. And being further interrogate, upon the Part of the Prosecutor, depones, That when Mrs. Ogilvie the Pannel was carried Prisoner from Eastmiln, Alexander Ogilvie took up some small Keys of hers, and asked her, If he should take care of them? And that she answered, She did not care who took care of them. Depones, upon Recollection, That Alexander Ogilvie had the Keys in his Hands when he asked the above Question: That Alexander Ogilvie locked all the Rooms in the House, except the laigh Room; and and put the Keys in a Drawer of that laigh Room, which he locked, and took the Key with him. And this is also Truth, as she shall answer to God.

(Signed) ANNE CLARK. ALEX. BOSWELL.

ELIZABETH STURROCK, late Servant to the deceased Thomas Ogilvie of Eastmiln, aged twenty-three Years, unmarried, purged of Malice and partial Counsel, and interrogate, depones, being solemnly sworn, That about the End of last Harvest, she entered as a Servant to the deceased Thomas Ogilvie of Eastmiln, and continued in that Service till the said Thomas Ogilvie's Death: That about Candlemas last, the said Thomas Ogilvie was married to Mrs. Ogilvie, at which Time the said Mrs. Ogilvie came home to Eastmiln: That much about the same Time Lieutenant Ogilvie the Pannel came likewise to reside at Eastmiln, where he continued till about a Fortnight before the said Thomas Ogilvie's Death: That during Lieutenant Ogilvie's Residence at Eastmiln, she had Occasion to observe too great a Fondness betwixt the said Lieutenant and Mrs. Ogilvie the Pannels, which proceeded even to Indecencies, she having frequently seen them kissing and hugging each other in and about the House of Eastmiln: That the late Thomas Ogilvie used frequently to be from Home, particularly about his Workmen: That during his Absence, she has frequently observed the two Pannels retire by themselves to the upper Rooms of the House, both the Easter and Wester Room, when she believed there was no body in these Rooms but themselves. Depones, That one Night about Sun-set, during the Time aforesaid, the Deponent having Occasion to speak to Mrs. Ogilvie the Pannel, about what Ale the Deponent should bring from Kirkton, the Deponent went up Stairs to the East Room, where the Lieutenant used to lie, to see for her Mistress: That she found the Door of the Room open; and upon looking into the Room, she observed the two Pannels lying in the Bed in which Lieutenant Ogilvie usually lay: That she suspected them to be there, by hearing them breathing: That upon discovering them, she immediately turned back without speaking to them, and run down to the first Flat of the Stair, where she stopt, and called up to her Mistress to see if she was in the foresaid Room; upon which her Mistress answered her from that Room, as she apprehended it, that she was there: That Lieutenant Ogilvie the Pannel likewise spoke to her from the same Place at that Time. Depones, That at another Time, and before the Time above-mentioned, and soon after Mrs. Ogilvie the Pannel's Marriage with the late Eastmiln, and while the late Eastmiln was at Dunfinnan, she was told pretty early in a Morning by Anne Sampson, a Neighbour-servant, that she, Anne, believed Lieutenant Ogilvie the Pannel was gone into her Mistress's Room: That upon this the Deponent went up to her Mistress's Room to see into the Truth of it; and when she went into the Room, she observed Lieutenant Ogilvie the Pannel going from the Bed-side towards the Window, in his Night-gown: That she is sure her Mistress was then in Bed in that Room, as she was not got up by that Time in the Morning, nor had she come down Stairs, nor was she in the only other Room above Stairs, which the Deponent immediately went and looked into. Depones, That at several other Times, when the Deponent had Occasion to be sitting at her Wheel in the Kitchen, which is immediately under Mrs. Ogilvie the Pannel's Room; and where one can easily hear any Noise, even to a laigh Word, that is made in Mrs. Ogilvie's Room, the Deponent heard the Feet of the two Pannels in the Room, and shuffling at the Side of the Bed: That the Reason why she believed it to be the Feet of the Pannels which she heard there, was, that she saw them go up together to that Room just before she heard the Noise as aforesaid. Depones, That she believes Lieutenant Ogilvie the Pannel was put away by the late Eastmiln from the House, upon Eastmiln's Suspicion, that the Lieutenant was too great with Mrs. Ogilvie the Pannel: That her Reason for believing so is; that about the Time Lieutenant Ogilvie went away, the Deponent, as she was going to her Bed in the Kitchen, overheard the late Eastmiln, when he was going to Bed with his Wife in the Room above, say to his Wife, That she was too great with Lieutenant Ogilvie the Pannel; and that they were as frequent together as the Bell was to ring on Sunday. Depones, That Anne Sampson was in the Kitchen at the same Time; and the Deponent believes she heard what passed betwixt Eastmiln and his Wife, as aforesaid, and the Deponent challenged her for listening. Depones, That after Lieutenant Ogilvie the Pannel had left the House of Eastmiln, the Deponent observed the other Pannel Mrs. Ogilvie in Tears and crying; upon which Occasion Mrs. Ogilvie said to the Deponent, That she was sorry; or grieved, Lieutenant Ogilvie had left the House. Depones, That upon the Night of the Day that Lieutenant Ogilvie left the House, as aforesaid; Mrs. Ogilvie the Pannel gave the Deponent a Letter to be carried to Lieutenant Ogilvie at Little Forther, about three Miles from Eastmiln: That Mrs. Ogilvie desired the Deponent to let no body know she had got such Letter: That the Deponent did not know what were the Contents of the Letter: That Mrs. Ogilvie desired the Deponent to tell Lieutenant Ogilvie, that she had been bad since he went away; and that her Husband was not owning her: That she delivered the Letter accordingly to Lieutenant Ogilvie at the Water-side near Little Forther: That the Lieutenant, in Answer, bid the Deponent tell Mrs. Ogilvie, that he was very well, and that she should keep up a good Heart; and that he was to go to Baron Reid's. Depones, That afterwards Mrs. Ogilvie the Pannel gave her another Letter to carry to Lieutenant Ogilvie at Glenkilrie, and to deliver it privately, which the Deponent carried accordingly; and she received an Answer in Writing from the Lieutenant to Mrs. Ogilvie, which the Lieutenant likewise desired her to deliver privately; and she did so. Depones, That upon another Time, being the Tuesday immediately before the late Eastmiln's Death, Mrs. Ogilvie the Pannel sent the Deponent with another Letter to Lieutenant Ogilvie at Alyth, likewise with Orders to deliver it privately. Depones, That she delivered the Letter to Lieutenant Ogilvie accordingly, and then went and did some other Business in the Town of Alyth, and returned and received an Answer from Lieutenant Ogilvie to the last-mentioned Letter, which he desired her to take care of and deliver privately; when he likewise told her, that he had a Packet of Linens lying at a House near by, and a Letter with them, which the Lieutenant desired the Deponent to call for, and take to Eastmiln with her: That the Deponent returned straight to Eastmiln with the Lieutenant's Answer; and Mrs. Ogilvie not being then at home, the Deponent went and fetched a Bundle of Linens, and the other Letter, all which she delivered to Mrs. Ogilvie at the same Time. Depones, That the Answer she received last from the Lieutenant, as aforesaid, was a large thick Letter, bigger than a Sheet of Paper; but she did not think there was any thing in it but Paper. Depones, That Eastmiln appeared to be in his ordinary Health upon the Tuesday before he died, and that he usually had very good Health, the Deponent having never known him to be in bad Health while she was in his Service: That upon the Wednesday before his Death, he was likewise in good Health: That upon the Thursday Morning upon which he died, the Deponent knew little about Eastmiln, as she herself was confined to Bed by Sickness, except that she heard that Eastmiln had been taken ill: That Mrs. Ogilvie the Pannel came into the Kitchen where the Deponent was lying, and told the Deponent in a low Voice, or a Whisper, that she, Mrs. Ogilvie, had given the Laird his Breakfast that Morning, and she desired the Deponent to say, that she had likewise got her Breakfast, although the Deponent had then got none: That some Time thereafter Mrs. Ogilvie sent Anne Sampson with some Tea to the Deponent in a Bowl, which the Deponent drunk: That the Deponent commonly got Tea in the Morning when she was indisposed. Depones, That after the Deponent had got out of Bed on the said Thursday Morning, and before she got the Tea as aforesaid, she observed the late Eastmiln come in at the outer Door, and come forward to the Kitchen where the Deponent was: That he was then very ill, and vomited much: That, at this Time, she believes the rest of the Family were at their Breakfast, Mrs. Ogilvie the Pannel having come into the Kitchen for some Cream to the Tea. Depones, That Mrs. Ogilvie, seeing Eastmiln so ill, desired him to go up to his Bed, which he did, and the Deponent helped him to go up Stairs, and to throw off his Cloaths: That after he had been a little while in Bed, he said, he thought himself some easier. But depones, That in a short Time he turned very ill again, fell a vomiting and purging, and complained of every Part of his Body; said, his Heart was broken or riven, and he tossed very much. Depones, That Eastmiln, during his Illness, called frequently for cold Water, and drank often of it. Depones, That about Ten or Eleven o'Clock that Forenoon, when old Lady Eastmiln, Andrew Stewart, and the Deponent, were in the Room together attending the late Eastmiln, Eastmiln said, in the Deponent's hearing, That he was poisoned, and that Woman had done it. Depones, That, by that Woman, the Deponent understood Eastmiln meant his Wife: That the old Lady seemed to understand it in the same Way, and reproved her Son Eastmiln for saying so. To which Eastmiln answered, That it was very true, and his Death lay at her Door. Depones, That upon the Day Eastmiln was ill, as aforesaid, Mrs. Ogilvie the Pannel came pretty often up to his Room to see him in the Forenoon; but she did not come near him at all in the Afternoon; and that, in the Afternoon, Mrs. Anne Clark, who sat close by Eastmiln, desired the Deponent to go down and tell Mrs. Ogilvie the Pannel to come up and see her Husband: Upon which Eastmiln himself said, No! no! I do not want her: That Anne Clark told the Deponent, she might go down and bid her come up for all that: That the Deponent accordingly went and told Mrs. Ogilvie; but Mrs. Ogilvie refused to come up, saying, She did not like to see dying People. Depones, That, during her Husband's Illness, Mrs. Ogilvie did not chuse that the People in the Neighbourhood that came to see him, should get Access to his Room, for fear of disturbing him: That the Deponent went and brought the Precentor in the Afternoon, or rather about Dinner-time, when the Precentor went and prayed by Eastmiln; Mrs. Ogilvie, who had sent the Deponent for the Precentor, went up Stairs with him to Eastmiln's Room. Depones, That Mrs. Ogilvie was not very dull, or shewed great Marks of Grief upon her Husband's Death, till Alexander Ogilvie, Eastmiln's Brother, the Doctor, came to the House upon the Tuesday thereafter; when Mrs. Ogilvie having ordered the Deponent to desire Alexander Ogilvie to speak with her, and he having refused to do so, Mrs. Ogilvie fell a crying, and wringing her Hands, throwing herself back upon the Bed, and saying, What could be the Meaning of this? Depones, That Alexander Ogilvie stopped the Burial, and sent for Doctor Ogilvie of Forfar, and Doctor Ramsay, and Doctor Meik of Alyth, to inspect the dead Body of his Brother: That, at this Time, Mrs. Ogilvie behaved very ill, weeping and crying, and wringing her Hands, and tearing herself; but the Deponent does not know the Cause of this Behaviour. Depones, That Lieutenant Ogilvie, at the Time of his Brother Eastmiln's Death, lived at Glenkilrie's House; and Glenkilrie having been at Eastmiln when Thomas Ogilvie died, he went home and desired Lieutenant Ogilvie to go to Eastmiln upon that Event: That Lieutenant Ogilvie came to Eastmiln next Morning, and the Deponent seeing him approach the House, told Mrs. Ogilvie that he was coming: Upon which Mrs. Ogilvie went out, and desired the Deponent to tell Lieutenant Ogilvie to speak to her in the Stable: That the Deponent went accordingly and delivered the Message to Lieutenant Ogilvie, who was then walking with Doctor Meik, and the Lieutenant went to Mrs. Ogilvie in the Stable, as desired. Depones, That after the late Eastmiln's Death, and after Mrs. Ogilvie heard the Sheriff of Forfar was coming to examine them at Eastmiln, Mrs. Ogilvie desired the Deponent to say to the Sheriff, That the Deponent had seen Mrs. Ogilvie mix up the Bowl of Tea, which she, Mrs. Ogilvie, had given her Husband the Morning of the Day on which he died; and that the Deponent had drunk some of it before Eastmiln tasted it; and that she likewise drank off what Eastmiln left of it; she likewise particularly desired the Deponent to say, That the Deponent was in the Closet with her, Mrs. Ogilvie, when she mixed up the Bowl of Tea; and that she, Mrs. Ogilvie, gave her Husband some short Bread with it: That Mrs. Ogilvie told the Deponent, that if the Deponent would say as thus directed, she would stand by the Deponent, that no Harm should happen to her; that the Deponent should go with her where-ever she went; and while she, Mrs. Ogilvie, had a Halfpenny, she should have the Half of it. Depones, That Mrs. Ogilvie spoke to the Deponent in this Manner several Times: That Lieutenant Ogilvie was present upon these Occasions, heard what Mrs. Ogilvie desired the Deponent to say, and he himself desired the Deponent to say as Mrs. Ogilvie directed her. Depones, That some Time before Eastmiln's Death, the Deponent knows Mrs. Ogilvie took a Dose of Salts, the Deponent having got a Part of them: That she never knew Mrs. Ogilvie taking Salts but that Time. Depones, That before Eastmiln's Marriage, she lay in the laigh Room with old Mrs. Ogilvie and her Daughter: That after the Marriage, she continued to lie with the old Lady, till Anne Clark came to Eastmiln: That after that, Anne Clark lay with the old Lady, and the Deponent lay in the Kitchen with Katharine Campbell: That at this Time, Anne Sampson lay in an Out-house till Katharine Campbell went away. Depones, being interrogate for the Pannels, That what she has above deponed concerning the Pannels kissing and hugging one another, happened at different Times, sometimes when they were by themselves, and at other Times when they were in Company with others. Depones, That when she saw the Captain in Mrs. Ogilvie's Room in his Night-gown as above, the Door was in Part open, so that she could see into it; and that she did not go into the Room. And being interrogate for the Pannels, What Number of Persons, not of the Family, got Access to the Room in which Eastmiln was, after his being taken ill as above? depones, That, to the best of her Remembrance, the Persons who got Access, were, Mr. Spalding of Glenkilrie, William Froster, Anne Froster, James Millam, and David Watson: That James Millam, William Froster, and Anne Froster, were brought in by the Deponent, without the Knowledge of Mrs. Ogilvie. Depones, That she did not hear Alexander Ogilvie give Orders to the Persons who were sent for the Doctors, to inspect Eastmiln's Body; but she afterwards heard of it from the Persons who had been sent, and who on that Account had come to get Meat in the Family; but that she the Deponent was forbid by Mrs. Ogilvie to give them Meat. Depones, That when the Deponent was first brought to Town, she was lodged, for about the Space of twenty Days, in the House of one Mr. Gardiner at the Head of the Cowgate, by Mr. Murison the Macer: That from thence she was carried to the Castle of Edinburgh, where she has remained since that Time: That the Deponent, Anne Clark, Anne Sampson, and Katharine Campbell, were lodged in the same Room till Thursday or Friday last, when Anne Clark was put into another Room in the Castle, where she remained a Day and a Night, and was thereafter put into the Room with the Deponent, and the other Persons above-mentioned. Depones, That while the Deponent, and the other Persons above-mentioned, were at the House of one Gardiner and in the Castle, they had some, though not much, Conversation upon the Subject of this Trial; but that, in these Conversations, all of them declared, that they considered it as their Duty to tell nothing but the Truth. Depones, That upon the Morning of the Day after Eastmiln's Death, Anne Sampson told Mrs. Stewart, Eastmiln's Sister, in Presence of the Deponent, that the Bowl out of which Eastmiln was said to have drunk the Poison the Day before, was below in a Press in the Kitchen: That the Deponent having taken out the Bowl, observed something greasy in the Bottom of it; and intending to try if there was any Thing poisonous in the Grease, she put some Broth into the Bowl, and gave it to a Dog, who eat it up; but was nothing the worse of it: That the Deponent made this Experiment of her own accord, and not on the Suggestion or Desire of any other Person whatsoever. And depones, That Anne Sampson has often told the Deponent, that she had filled the said Bowl with Water and offered it to Eastmiln, that Day on which he died; but that he had refused to drink out of it, damning the Bowl, and saying, he had already got his Death out of it. Causa scientie patet. And this is Truth, as she shall answer to God. And being further interrogate, depones, That while the Deponent was in Eastmiln's Service, she never heard of his being troubled with Vomitings, Purgings, or Cholicks, before that Day on which he died; and that she never knew of his being indisposed, except by slight Colds. Depones, That when Lieutenant Ogilvie went into the Stable where Mrs. Ogilvie was, as has been above deponed, he did not remain there above four or five Minutes. And this is also Truth, as she shall answer to God: And depones she cannot write.

(Signed) AND. PRINGLE.

ANNE SAMPSON, late Servant to the deceased Thomas Ogilvie of Eastmiln, aged nineteen Years, unmarried, purged of Malice and partial Counsel, sworn and interrogate, depones, That she entered Servant to the Family of Eastmiln Whitfunday was a Year: That after being some Time absent, she returned a few Days before Miss Clark came to the House: That after her Return, she had more than once Occasion to observe Mrs. Ogilvie and Lieutenant Ogilvie kissing one another; particularly once in the Kitchen before the Deponent and another Servant-maid: That she has seen them embrace and hug one another: That when the Laird was out of the House, she has known them retire to a Room by themselves, but not staying above an Hour at a Time. Depones, That one Morning when the Laird was at Dunfman, she heard the two Pannels speaking together in Bed in the Room above: That she was in the Kitchen, the Ceiling of which is not plastered, and where she could hear the lowest Voice in the Room above: That upon this she desired her Fellow-servant Elizabeth Sturrock to go up Stairs and see what was going on; and that Elizabeth, upon her Return, told the Deponent that the Lieutenant had got out of the Bed before she was got to the Door; and that she saw him going from the Bed towards the Window in his Night-gown. Depones, That this was about Sun-rising. Depones, That the Lieutenant left the House a Fortnight before his Brother's Death; and before that Time, the Deponent being in the Kitchen with her Fellow-servants, Elizabeth Sturrock and Annie Robertson, they all heard the Laird and Lady talking together in Bed in the Room above: That the Talking begun with the Lady's scolding her Husband; upon which the Laird bade her hold her Tongue, for that she and the Lieutenant were as common as the Bell that rings on Sabbath. Depones, That the Morning the Lieutenant left the House, she saw Mrs. Ogilvie weeping: That this was before he went away; and that she saw her also weep after he went away. Depones, That Eastmiln was a healthy Man; and that, before the Day he died, she never heard him complain, if it was not sometimes of an Headach; and that the Night before he died, he was in Health, so far as she knows. Depones, That the Night before her Master died, she saw Andrew Stewart in the House of Eastmiln; and that she was told by Elizabeth Sturrock and Miss Clark, the Night thereafter, that the said Andrew Stewart had retired with Mrs. Ogilvie into a private Room. Depones, That the Morning of the Day her Master died, Breakfast was ready betwixt Eight and Nine, a little sooner than ordinary: That she saw her Mistress make up the Bowl of Tea in Presence of her Mother-in-law and Miss Clark, for Andrew Stewart was not then up: That she followed her Mistress up Stairs, wanting some Beef out of the Beef-stand, and saw her go into a Closet adjoining her Master's Room: That the Deponent followed her into the Closet, demanding the Beef; but that her Mistress bade her go down Stairs, as she was not ready yet; and that she was always wanting something; and that Mrs. Ogilvie appeared to be in a Passion at her: That her Master was at that Time in Bed; and that, when the Deponent was in the Closet, she saw Mrs. Ogilvie stirring about the Tea, with her Face to the Door; and that, upon what her Mistress said to her above, she went out of the Closet down to the Kitchen; but that she did not see her Mistress, when in the Closet, put any thing into the Tea. Depones, That at this Time she saw Alexander Lindsay, a Servant-lad in the House, standing upon the Stair-head, near the Closet-door, at the Time her Mistress was in the Closet. Depones, That her Master got up between Nine and Ten, and first went to the Stables to see his Horses fed, and then to the Skilling-Hill, where he conversed with some of his Tenants: That, in his returning towards the House, she saw him vomiting, and still more when he came into the Kitchen; and that, when he was there, Mrs. Ogilvie came into the Kitchen, and ordered Elizabeth Sturrock to help him up Stairs, and followed him herself. Depones, That some Time thereafter she was ordered to carry up some clean Water for her Master for drinking, which she did in the same Bowl that he got his Tea in from Mrs. Ogilvie; but that she first synded the Bowl with some Water: That she went up Stairs with the Bowl into her Master's Room, and found him in Bed; but that, upon seeing the Bowl, he cried, Damn that Bowl, for I have got my Death in it already; and bid her, at the same Time, carry it down Stairs out of his Sight; and that she carried up Water to him in the Tea-kettle, which he drunk of. Depones, That the Reason for her synding the Bowl was, that it appeared to be greasy and white; and that she knew the Bowl to be the same as above, because Mrs. Ogilvie, after giving her Master his Tea, came down Stairs with it, and set it down in the Kitchen on the Fore-side of the Press. Depones, That, after synding the Bowl, as aforesaid, the Grease did not come wholly out of it. Depones, That the Day her Master died, about Mid-day, she was sent by Mrs. Ogilvie two Miles to clip some Sheep. Depones, That Mrs. Ogilvie frequently went to see how her Husband was in the Forenoon, but not once in the Afternoon; and that, when the Deponent was going up Stairs to see him between Twelve and One o'Clock, she was turned back by Mrs. Ogilvie. Being interrogate on Behalf of the Pannels, depones, That when Mrs. Ogilvie made up the Bowl of Tea in the Breakfasting Room as aforesaid, the Deponent saw her put in Milk and Sugar; but whether she put in any Honey, the Deponent does not perfectly remember, nor whether she saw any Honey upon the Table. Depones, That the Family seldom breakfasted without Honey; but that the Day deponed upon, she rather thinks there was none; because, she believes, at that Time the House was out of Honey. And being further interrogate in Behalf of the Pannels, depones, That, at the Time deponed upon, when she carried up the fresh Water to her Master to drink, she synded the Bowl with Water, and not with Broth out of the Pot. Depones, That the next Day thereafter, the Bowl was synded with Broth out of the Pot, and given to a Dog; and that it was the Deponent that did so by the Direction of Elizabeth Sturrock; and that Elizabeth Sturrock gave her no Reason for doing so. Further depones, That she took the Bowl for carrying Water to her Master, because it was at Hand; and that she had no Notion at that Time of her Master being poisoned, nor till after his Death. Being interrogate in Behalf of the Pannels, When she returned from the Sheep-clipping? depones, That it was about Nine at Night. Upon which, being again interrogate, How she came to depone as above, That Mrs. Ogilvie did not once visit her Husband in the Afternoon? answers, That was because she was told so by the other Servants, who added, That her Master did not want Mrs. Ogilvie up for fear of doing her Harm. Depones, That after she saw her Mistress make up the Bowl of Tea in the Breakfasting Parlour, as aforesaid, she went into the Kitchen and made up the Fire, before she followed her Mistress to the Closet, as above deponed to. Causa scientiæ patet. And this is Truth, as she shall answer to God.

before

ANDREW STEWART, Merchant in Alyth, aged thirty, married, purged of Malice and partial Counsel, sworn and interrogate, depones, That upon the Evening before Mr. Ogilvie of Eastmiln died, being a Wednesday, the Deponent was at the House of Eastmiln, when, upon his coming into the House, Mr. Ogilvie told him, that he had forbid his Brother the Captain the House, on account of Suspicions he had, that his Wife was too much taken up in doing Things for his Brother the Captain, and not for himself; and that, at the same Time, he mentioned some Differences he had with his Brother concerning Money-matters. Depones, That on the Monday before Eastmiln, the Deponent's Brother-in-law, died, Lieutenant Ogilvie (who is above designed Captain) came to the Deponent's House in Alyth on Horseback; and that the Horse he rode belonged to Mr. Ogilvie of Eastmiln. Depones, That, on the Day thereafter, being the Tuesday, Elizabeth Sturrock, a former Witness, came to the Deponent's House, and bought some Things for the Family of Eastmiln: That he does not know that she brought with her any Letter for Lieutenant Ogilvie; nor does he know if Lieutenant Ogilvie gave her any Letter for Mrs. Ogilvie the Pannel. But depones, That he did that Day inform Lieutenant Ogilvie, that he the Deponent was to be at Eastmiln next Day. Depones, That upon the Day thereafter, he accordingly went to Eastmiln,

Eastmiln, and before he went off, Lieutenant Ogilvie delivered to the Deponent a small Phial Glass containing something liquid, which he said was Laudanum; and also a small Paper Packet, which he said contained Salts; and that the Morning of the Day preceding, the Deponent saw the Lieutenant working among some Salts, at least, which appeared to the Deponent to be Salts, which were in a Chest belonging to the Lieutenant: That the Phial Glass was round, and knows that there was another Phial Glass in his own House which was square: That he is positive, as he has already deponed, that one Phial Glass was delivered to him by the Lieutenant; and cannot say, with Certainty, that two might not have been delivered to him by the Lieutenant; but rather thinks he got only one; and that at the Time when the above Particulars were delivered to the Deponent, the Lieutenant desired him to deliver them privately into Mrs. Ogilvie's own Hand: That he did not see the Packet made up, nor did he open it to see what it contained. Depones, That on the aforesaid Packet, there was a Letter directed for Mrs. Ogilvie of Eastmiln, which Letter was sealed both with Wax and a Wafer; and that round the Packet there was a loose Paper of Directions, in what Manner the Laudanum was to be used. Depones, That when he came to Eastmiln in the Wednesday Afternoon, he was carried into a Room where old Lady Eastmiln was; and that, within a short Time thereafter, Mrs. Ogilvie the Pannel and Miss Clark came into the Room: That, at the Desire of Mrs. Ogilvie, he followed her up to the Easter Room, where Mrs. Ogilvie having asked him, If he had brought any Word to her from the Lieutenant? he delivered to her the several Particulars above-mentioned, which the Deponent saw her immediately put into a Drawer in the Room: That he did not see her read the Letter at that Time; but that she put the whole together into the Drawer: That soon thereafter Miss Clark asked the Deponent, What he had brought with him from the Lieutenant to Mrs. Ogilvie? or if he had brought any thing with him? He at first said he had brought nothing; but, upon Miss Clark's pressing him with great Earnestness, he at last informed her of the Particulars he had brought: That, upon this, Miss Clark said, that she was afraid Mrs. Ogilvie might poison her Husband. Depones That soon thereafter Miss Clark, in Presence of the Deponent and the old Lady, desired Eastmiln not to take any thing out of his Wife's Hand, except at the Table; to which he answered, that he would not: That the old Lady joined with Miss Clark in desiring Eastmiln to take nothing out of his Wife's Hand; but that the Deponent was at that Time very much displeas'd with both, as he then had no Suspicion that Mrs. Ogilvie had any Design against the Life of her Husband. Depones, That that same Night he heard Mrs. Ogilvie say, that she lived a most unhappy Life with her Husband: That she wished him dead; or, if that could not be, she wished herself dead. Depones, That the Deponent supped with Eastmiln and the rest of the Family that Night: That he then appeared to be in his ordinary State of Health; but that some times before, that same Night, he told the Deponent and the rest of the Company then at the Kirkton, that he had swarfed or fainted on the Hill; that, for that Reason, he could drink no

Ale: That, upon this, they called for a Dram; which he took, and thereafter seemed hearty, and in good Spirits; and Eastmiln then said, that the Swarf had happened to him on the Hill that same Day. Depones, That that Night the Deponent told, that he intended to go off from Eastmiln early next Day, which occasioned their getting Breakfast more early than usual: That Eastmiln did not breakfast along with the Family, the only Persons present at Breakfast being Mrs. Ogilvie's elder and younger, Miss Clark and the Deponent being then only present: That the Deponent saw Mrs. Ogilvie making a Bowl of Tea, by filling it out of the Tea-pot, and putting Sugar and Milk in it; and that she said, in Presence of the Company, that she was to give it to her Husband, who was then in Bed; and that the Deponent saw her go out of the Room with the Bowl in her Hand: That, about an Hour and a half after they had begun to breakfast, they were told that Eastmiln had been suddenly taken ill; upon which Miss Clark immediately run up to the Room in which he was, and soon thereafter returned weeping, and told them, that Eastmiln had got a bad Breakfast. Depones, That the Deponent immediately run up Stairs, where he found Eastmiln vomiting and purging violently: That he heard him say that he was all wrong within; and that he had got what would do his Turn: That Eastmiln called very much for Drink: That they offered him Milk; but that he would drink nothing but Water: That he complained much that he was burning within. Depones, That he proposed to Mrs. Ogilvie that a Surgeon should be called to his Assistance, to which she would not agree, saying, that he would be better: And upon the Deponent's renewing this Proposal, she said, She would not for any Money that a Surgeon should be called, as the Consequence of this would be, to give her a bad Name, from what Miss Clark had said of her: That, upon this, the Deponent told Mrs. Ogilvie, That Mr. Meik, Surgeon in Alyth, whom the Deponent had recommended, was a discreet Person: That he would come; and that he would tell none but her what he thought of him: That, upon this, the Deponent left her, she having previously agreed that Mr. Meik should come: That the Deponent thereafter set out on his Journey; but, before he had got far from the House, one of the Girls, whose Name he thinks was Robertson, came up to him, and desired that Mr. Meik might be sent with all Haste: That after Supper, the Deponent had a Conversation with Miss Clark concerning the Suspicions she had of Mrs. Ogilvie's Intentions against her Husband, in which the Deponent proposed, that they should either take Mrs. Ogilvie's Keys out of her Pocket, or break open her Drawers at the Back, in order that they might satisfy themselves, if the Particulars brought by the Deponent were Poison or not; and that this was the only Method by which Mischief would be prevented: That Miss Clark did not seem to agree to either of these Proposals, and the Deponent himself had at that Time no Suspicion, that there was any Foundation for Miss Clark's Fears; and the Deponent was confirmed in this Opinion from his having been told, by the old Lady, that she had gone up to the Room-door, after her Son and Daughter-in-law were in Bed; and that there was then more Kindness between them than usual. Depones, That his Wife had frequently told him, before the Death of Eastmiln, that he was a tender Man; but that he never heard of his having been troubled with violent Vomitings, or Purgings, before the Day on which he died: That he had the Appearance of a tender Man; and that the Deponent has heard his Wife say, that he would not be a Long-liver. Depones, That at the Conversation above-mentioned at Kirkton, he heard Eastmiln say, that he had been ill of a Cough and sore Breast; and that for some Time past, he had been thinking of writing to Doctor Ogilvie at Forfar, to send him some Things: That the Deponent laughed at him for talking in that Manner, and bid him take a Dram. Depones, That the Drawer into which Mrs. Ogilvie put the Particulars delivered to her by the Deponent, stood in that Room in which the Deponent slept that Night. Depones, That at the Time when Alexander Ogilvie the Deponent's Brother-in-law arrested the Corpse, the Deponent advised Lieutenant Ogilvie to make his Escape, if guilty; to which he answered, That God and his own Conscience knew that he was innocent. Depones, That the two Pannels lived at the House of Eastmiln, from the Time of Eastmiln's Burial to the Time that Mrs. Ogilvie was apprehended; and that for some Time after the Pannels continued to live there; but how long he cannot say. Depones, That Mrs. Ogilvie had been blooded the Day before Eastmiln's Death, or the Day before that; and that she had been ill, and taking Drugs for some Time before, as the Deponent had heard. Causa scientiæ patet. And this is Truth, as he shall answer to God. And at reading over the Oath, depones, That at the Time when Lieutenant Ogilvie delivered the Particulars above-mentioned to the Deponent, he desired him to put them into Mrs. Ogilvie's own Hand: But did not mention the Words privately, or by herself; and that his Reason for denying at first to Anne Clark, that he had brought any Parcel from Lieutenant Ogilvie, was, because he considered Miss Clark as a Person given to raise Dissension in Families; and because that he had been desired by the Lieutenant to put the Particulars into Mrs. Ogilvie's own Hand. And this is also Truth.

(Signed) AND. STEWART. GEO. BROWN.

JAMES CARNEGIE, Surgeon in Brechin, married, aged about forty and upwards, being solemnly sworn, purged of Malice and partial Counsel, depones, That in the End of May last, he got a Message from Lieutenant Ogilvie the Pannel, with whom he is acquainted, desiring him to meet him at Colin Smith's, Vintner in Brechin: That the Deponent having gone there, found him in Company with one Lieutenant Campbell of the same Regiment, and one Mr. Dickson: That Lieutenant Ogilvie took the Deponent aside, and told him, that he was troubled with Gripes, and wanted to buy some Laudanum from him, and at the same Time told him he wanted to buy some Arsenick, in order to destroy some Dogs that spoiled the Game: That the Deponent told him, that he was uncertain whether he could furnish him with these Things or not; but that he should look when he went Home: That the Deponent, when he went Home, found he had some of both, and put up a small Phial Glas of Laudanum, and betwixt half an Ounce and an Ounce of Arse-nick, both which he delivered next Day to the Lieutenant, after the Deponent had dined with him and Lieutenant Campbell next Day in Smith's: That Lieutenant Ogilvie took the Deponent into another Room, away from Lieutenant Campbell, when he was to receive the Laudanum and the Arsenick, and there the Deponent delivered them to him: That the Price of both was a Shilling: That the Arsenick was pulverized; and Lieutenant Ogilvie having asked how to prepare it, the Deponent gave him Directions. Depones, That he had sold of the same Arsenick formerly to People for poisoning of Rats, and heard that it had the desired Effect. Depones, That he has been accustomed, when he sold Arsenick, to take Receipts from low People who bought it, but never from Gentlemen; and as the Deponent knew Lieutenant Ogilvie, and had a good Opinion of him, the Deponent did not ask a Receipt from him, although, when the Lieutenant spoke about it first, the Deponent said to him, We use to take a Receipt for Arsenick: That the Lieutenant answered, See first if you have it, adding at the same Time, Very good. Depones, That he got his Arsenick from a Druggist in Dundee; but how long ago he cannot say, there being a small Demand for Arsenick at any Time. Causa scientiæ patet. And all this is Truth, as he shall answer to God. Depones, That he wrapped it up in the Form of a Pennyworth of Snuff under three Paper Covers. Depones, That the Arsenick which he sold as above was white Arsenick. Depones, That he cannot take upon him to say, from looking at Arsenick, whether it be Arsenick or not; nor can he say from the Taste, for he never tasted it; but that he bought this as Arsenick, had the Name marked upon it upon the Package, and heard from those he sold it to that it had killed Rags, as above-mentioned. Depones, upon a further Interrogatory, That he heard of Mr. Ogilvie of Eastmiln's Death after the Time that he sold the Arsenick to the Lieutenant. Causa scientiæ patet. And this is also Truth, as he shall answer to God.

Lieutenant GEORGE CAMPBELL, of the late eighty-ninth Regiment, unmarried, aged about twenty-two, being solemnly sworn, purged of Malice, partial Counsel, and interrogate, depones, That he has known Lieutenant Ogilvie the Pannel these five Years past: That in the Beginning of June last, as he thinks, the Pannel called for the Deponent at Phinhaven, and desired him to go along with him to Brechin, because he wanted to see his old Landlord William Finlay, Vintner there: That they accordingly went to Brechin, and put up at Colin Smith's, Vintner, and the Pannel called for James Carnegie, Surgeon there, but had no Conversation at that Time apart from the Deponent; the Pannel invited Mr. Carnegie to Dinner, after he and the Deponent should return from the Fishing, which they were going to next Day. And accordingly he came to Dinner, and the Pannel and Mr. Carnegie went out after Dinner to another Room, and had some private Conversation for some few Minutes, and then returned back to the Deponent; and the Deponent and the Pannel went to Phinhaven that Night, it being Friday's Night, and he staid with the Deponent Saturday and Sunday Nights, and left him on Monday; and on the Saturday after the Deponent ment heard of Mr. Ogilvie of Eastmiln's Death. Causa scientiæ patet. And this is Truth, as he shall answer to God.

JAMES FERGUSON.

PATRICK DICKSON, Merchant in Breckin, married, aged sixty and upwards, being solemnly sworn, purged of Malice and partial Counsel, examined, and interrogate, depones, That when the Pannel Mr. Ogilvie was in Prison at Forfar, the Deponent went to visit him; and he desired the Deponent to go to James Carnegie, Surgeon in Breckin, and talk to him, that he might not be imposed on by any body; and the Deponent accordingly went and conversed with Mr. Carnegie, who informed him, that he had sold the Pannel some Laudanum and some Arsenick, for both which he received a Shilling; and the Deponent returned to Forfar, and communicated to the Pannel what Mr. Carnegie had said; upon which the Pannel seemed to be under some Concern, and seemed desirous to speak with Mr. Carnegie, without either confessing or denying to the Deponent that he had bought the Arsenick, for he had only acknowledged buying the Laudanum on the Saturday before, when the Deponent had been with him in Prison; and the Deponent told him that he had some Business on hand which hindered him to send Mr. Carnegie to him; and the Pannel desired the Deponent to tell the Sheriff that he wanted to see him, to amend something in his Declaration with regard to the Laudanum which the Pannel received from Mr. Carnegie. Causa scientiæ patet. And all this is Truth, as he shall answer to God.

(Signed) PAT. DICKSON. AND. PRINGLE.

PETER MEIK, Surgeon in Alyth, unmarried, aged about twenty-seven, being solemnly sworn, purged of Malice and partial Counsel, examined, and interrogate, depones, That upon the Day that Mr. Ogilvie of Eastmiln died, the Deponent was sent for as a Surgeon to him: That he was dead before he came, as the Deponent was informed, about two Hours: That immediately upon the Deponent's Arrival, he was carried up by a Servant to Mrs. Ogilvie the Pannel's Room, where she was sitting, and she appeared to be in great Grief and Concern for her Husband's Death, and desired the Deponent, that whatever he might think he discovered to be the Cause of her Husband's Death, that he would conceal it from the World. And depones, There was no body else present with the Deponent and the Pannel at that Time: That, upon going to the Room where the Corpse lay, and afterwards going out of the House, he met with Mr. Ogilvie the Pannel, who went up with him to the Room where the Corpse lay, and appeared to be in great Grief and Concern for his Brother: That five or six Days after, he was called upon to inspect the Body of Eastmiln; and, upon inspecting it, he observed the Nails and a Part of the Breast discoloured, and his Tongue swelled beyond its natural Size, and cleaving to the Roof of his Mouth, and no Part of his Tongue was beyond his Lips, though it did come out beyond his Teeth: That he has observed the Symptoms of the Nails and the Breast to occur after a natural Death, but never that of the Tongue at the same Time, though he has observed the Tongue swelled without the other Symptoms. And being interrogate, Whether he understood these Symptoms to be the Effect of Poison? depones, That he is not so much acquainted with the Effects of Poison as to have formed a Judgment whether that was the Cause in this Case; but he was led to make that Conjecture from the Notice given him by Andrew Stewart, who had told him that the Defunct was thought to be poisoned, and from the Caution given him by Mrs. Ogilvie the Pannel, to conceal any thing that might discover the Manner of her Husband's Death. Depones, That Alexander Ogilvie, the Defunct's youngest Brother, told the Deponent that he was sent for to open his Brother's Body; and Gilbert Ramsay, Surgeon in Coupar, being also there, the Deponent and he agreed to open the Body; but Alexander would not agree to it, unless Doctor Ogilvie at Forfar was there; and as the Deponent and Mr. Ramsay could not stay till he came, it was laid aside. Depones, That neither of the Pannels made any Objection to it; and that Alexander desired them to take a superficial View of the Body, which they did, and discovered the Symptoms aforesaid. Causa scientiæ patet. And all this is Truth, as he shall answer to God.

(Signed) PETER MEIK. AND. PRINGLE.

GILBERT RAMSAY, Surgeon in Coupar of Angus, married, aged about thirty-eight Years, being solemnly sworn, purged of Malice and partial Counsel, and interrogate, depones, That he was sent for to Eastmiln about five or six Days after the Laird's Death, and was desired by Alexander Ogilvie, his youngest Brother, to inspect his Body along with the preceding Witness; and, upon looking at it, they observed the Nails and Part of the Breast discoloured, and his Tongue swelled: That he has observed the first two Symptoms to happen in a natural Death, in consequence of Putrefaction; but has not observed the last Symptom: That these Symptoms are owing to something very acrid, and made the Deponent suspect that he died of Poison: That his Lips were very little swelled, but more discoloured than by a natural Death: That the Deponent had heard Suspicions of Poison before he came there. And being interrogate for the Pannels, depones, That he had observed the Tongue swelled even in a natural Death, but not to that Degree it was in this Case. And depones, That, if he saw a dead Body with these Symptoms, though he had got no Notice of any Suspicion of Poison, he would suspect it from these Appearances. And being interrogate, Whether all these Symptoms might not happen in a bilious Cholick? depones, That the great Swelling in the Tongue, and Discolouring in the Lips, would not happen. And being interrogate for the Pannels, Whether all the usual Symptoms of Poison happened in this Case? depones, That he cannot answer that Question with any Certainty, never having seen the Body of any other Person who died of Poison. And being further interrogate, depones, That the usual Symptoms that occur in Poison by Arsenick, are Vomiting, and Evacuating downwards, and a great Swelling in the Tongue, and the Blackness in the Breast. And being further interrogate, depones, That there was no Appearance of Ulcers, in this Case, either in the Tongue or the Lips. Depones, That the Deponent proposed to open the Body; but but he was opposed by Alexander Ogilvie, on account that Doctor Ogilvie from Forfar was not there; but, as far as the Deponent knows, it was not opposed by either of the Pannels. And further depones, That he believes every Thing in the Body would, after being so long dead, be in a State of Putrefaction; so that he doubts if the Poison would have been certainly discovered though the Body had been opened. Causa scientiæ patet. And this is Truth, as he shall answer to God.

JAMES FERGUSON.

Doctor JOHN OGILVIE, Physician in Forfar, aged forty-eight Years, married, being solemnly sworn, purged of Malice and partial Counsel, and interrogate, depones, That he heard, that the late Eastmiln died upon the sixth of June last; and that a few Days after that, the Deponent was desired by the Sheriff-substitute of Forfarshire, to go to Eastmiln to inspect the Corpse of the Defunct: That the Deponent forthwith obeyed their Order, and arrived at Eastmiln upon the twelfth of June last, about Noon: That upon his Arrival, Alexander Ogilvie, the Defunct's Brother, desired the Deponent to go and inspect the Corpse, which were then lying in an Out-house: That he found the Corpse in its Grave-cloaths, and in a Coffin; and having inspected the Body, he observed, that the Face, the Arms, and several other Parts of the Body, were black and livid, and that the Nails were remarkably black; and as to the Tongue, it was locked fast by the Jaws, so that he could only observe a small Part of it, which projected beyond the Teeth, which Part being the Tip of the Tongue, he observed to be white and rough, and of a very unusual Appearance: That the Breast was white, and the Lips pretty much of a natural Colour: That from the Appearances above described, he could draw no Conclusion as to the Cause of the Defunct's Death; as almost all these Appearances might have arisen from the putrid State the Body was then in; and that the only Thing that appeared extraordinary to him, was the Appearance of the Tongue above described: That the Deponent had some Inclination to have opened the Body, and if the two Surgeons, who he heard had left Eastmiln that Morning, had been there, he believes he might have done so; but as they were gone, and as the Deponent, in his own Opinion, thought the Body too much putrefied, to be opened with Safety to the Operator; and as he was likewise of Opinion, that in such a State of Putrefaction, no certain Signs could have been discovered of the Cause of the Death by opening the Body, the Deponent declined to do it. Depones, That the Appearance of the Tongue before described, was not such as happens in common Deaths, but such as occurs from Convulsions, or other strong Causes. Depones, That Lieutenant Ogilvie the Pannel neither desired nor forbid the Deponent to inspect the Corpse; but he was present with the Deponent when he inspected them as aforesaid. Causa scientiæ patet. And this is the Truth, as he shall answer to God.

ROBERT SMITH, Surgeon in Edinburgh, aged fifty Years and upwards, a Widower, who being solemnly sworn, purged of Malice and partial Counsel, and examined, depones, That he had once Occasion to attend a Patient, being a Woman, near Ormisson, who had got Arsenick and died of it, as the Deponent verily believes: That the Deponent went and saw the Woman about two Hours after she had taken the Arsenick in some Pottage, as she told him: That the Deponent, when he came, found her seized with a violent Vomiting and a Purging: That she complained of a burning Heat in her Stomach and Bowels, and had a great Thirst, and drank frequently of Milk and Water: That the Deponent, after staying some Time with her, went away, and after a few Hours, returned to her again, when he was informed, the before-mentioned Symptoms had continued upon her, that is to say, the Vomiting, Purging, Pain, and Drought: That she soon thereafter died, having lived, as the Deponent thinks, about nine Hours after she took the Arsenick. Depones, That the Deponent next Day inspected the dead Body of the foresaid Woman, and could discover nothing externally upon the Body different from the Appearances after a natural Death; but that, upon opening the Body, he discovered the Stomach and Guts to be red and inflamed, and the Stomach appeared to be gangrened, and in Parts of the Stomach he discovered some Arsenick. Depones, That at the Time the Woman had received the Arsenick, as above deponed, a Child had likewise taken a Spoonful or two of the Pottage, which occasioned the Child to vomit, and thereby throw up the Arsenick, as he believes, so that the Child recovered. Being interrogate for the Pannels, depones, That a Person may be seized with a Vomiting, internal Pain, and Drought, without having received Arsenick; as these Symptoms may occur in a bilious Cholick and other Cases. Causa scientiæ patet. And this is the Truth, as he shall answer to God.

(Signed) ROBERT SMITH. AND. PRINGLE.

GEORGE CAMPBELL, Sheriff-substitute of Forfar, aged seventy and upwards, solutus, who being solemnly sworn, purged of Malice and partial Counsel, and examined, depones, That upon looking at the two Declarations now exhibited to him, emitted before him by Mrs. Ogilvie the Pannel, and other two by Patrick Ogilvie Pannel, that all these were emitted freely before him, and faithfully taken down from their own Mouths, and subscribed by them before the Deponent. And also, that the Deponent's Name adjected thereto, is his Subscription. Depones, That he, as Sheriff-substitute of the County of Forfar, went to Eastmiln upon the first of July last, in order to search for Papers or Letters belonging to any of the Pannels: He the Deponent did find in a Trunk, or Drawer, he cannot say which, the Letter now exhibited to him, marked by his Hand, and that of John Ure his Clerk, on the Day aforesaid. And another Letter being exhibited to him, without Date or Subscription by the Writer thereof, and with a Docquet on the Back, signed George Spalding, and another Docquet below, signed Anne Clark and Alexander Boswell, depones, That to the best of his Memory, he thinks he received the said Letter inclosed in one wrote by Alexander Ogilvie the Pannel's Brother, addressed to the Deponent. And a third Letter being exhibit to him, signed Ketty Nairn, with a Docquet on the Back, signed Anne Clark, Alexander Boswell, Beswell, depones, That he found the said Letter in one of the Repositories at Eastmiln, when he made the Search above-mentioned. Causa scientie patet. And this is Truth, as he shall answer to God.

(Signed) GEO. CAMPBELL. GILB. ELLIOT.

JOHN URE, Sheriff-Clerk of Forfar, aged forty Years, married, being solemnly sworn, purged of Malice and partial Counsel, and interrogate, depones, That the four Declarations now exhibited to him, two by Mrs. Ogilvie Pannel, and two by Patrick Ogilvie Pannel, were all freely emitted before the preceding Witness, and in Presence of the Deponent, and all signed by him the Deponent, by the Sheriff-substitute George Campbell, and the Pannels. Causa scientie patet. And this is the Truth, as he shall answer to God.

(Signed) JOHN URE. GILB. ELLIOT.

The three Letters and four Declarations before deponed to were read to the Court and Jury, and of which the Tenor follows :

Addressed on the Back, To Thomas Ogilvy Esq; of Eastmiln.

FIRST DECLARATION by KATHARINE NAIRN.

Forfar, 14 June, 1765. In Presence of George Campbell, Esq; Sheriff-substitute,

Compeared KATHARINE NAIRN, lawful Daughter of the deceased Sir Thomas Nairn of Dunfinnan, Baronet, and Relict of the deceased Thomas Ogilvie of Eastmiln, who being examined, declares, That Lieutenant Patrick Ogilvie was at Eastmiln when she was married to his Brother, and continued there as his proper Residence till within these three or four Weeks, when he left same, as his Brother and he did not agree. That the Evening Patrick Ogilvie left Eastmiln, the Declarant wrote him a Letter, which she sent by Elizabeth Sturrock, one of the Maid-servants; to Little Forther, as she was going there, at least about a Gun-shot from Little Forther, for some Whisky from one Robert Easson. Declares, That she did not write any Letter to said Patrick Ogilvie when at Glenkilrie, nor to be sent him to one John Spalding's, nor to Glenkilrie. Declares, That on Tuesday before her Husband's Death she was sending said Elizabeth Sturrock to Alyth with some Yarn, when she wrote a Letter by her to deliver to said Patrick Ogilvie relative to some of his Shirts she had been mending to him, and the Letter was directed to the Care of Andrew Stewart, and that she got no Return by Elizabeth Sturrock; but that next Day she got a Return to her Letter by said Andrew Stewart, a Merchant in Alyth, who was coming to Eastmiln however, and that it was the Afternoon of the Day before her Husband died. That Andrew Stewart, beside the Letter, brought her two Doses of Salts and a small Phial Glas with a little Laudanum; and that the Letter was but a Quarter of a Sheet of Paper, containing mostly Directions about the Salts, and how much of the Laudanum to take; but whether the Letter was open or sealed she does not remember. That before Patrick Ogilvie left his Brother's House, she asked him, any Time he was at Alyth, to buy for her and send to Eastmiln two Doses of Salt and a little Laudanum as she slept very ill: That when Andrew Stewart delivered the Letter, she read same, being only a Direction as above, and after laid the Salts and Laudanum into a Drawer, till she should use same; and that she took one of the Doses of Salts on the Friday after her Husband's Death, and the other on the Saturday; and on the Sunday and the Monday Nights she took Laudanum each Night, and as she did not use the whole Laudanum, she delivered back the Glas, and the Remainder of Laudanum, to the said Patrick Ogilvie on his Return to Eastmiln, after his Brother's Death. That on Thursday Morning the sixth of June, her Husband being distressed the Night before, and many Days preceding; and that Morning he complained of a Shortness of Breath, and that through the Night he had been distressed with it, she therefore gave him his Tea in his Bed; and that when the rest of the Family were at their Tea, she filled up a Bowlful for her Husband, which, with a Bit of hard Bisket from Dundee, she carried straight from the low Room, where they were at Breakfast, up Stairs to her Husband's Room, and gave him; and that she took the Bisket out of a Basket standing on a By-table in the Room, aside the Family then sitting at Breakfast; but that she did not go into any Closet with the Tea, before giving it to her Husband: That she never heard from her Husband, nor any Person else, that he blamed the Tea for his Illness. Declares, That Elizabeth Sturrock got so much of the Tea Mr. Ogilvie left, as he did not drink it out, and also got another Bowl of Tea after, both which she gave her out of her own Hands. And this she declares to be Truth.

SECOND DECLARATION by
KATHARINE NAIRN.

Forfar, 15 June, 1765. In Presence of the said George Campbell, Esq; Sheriff-substitute,

Compeared the said KATHARINE NAIRN, alias OGILVIE, who being re-examined, declares, That before the Lieutenant left Eastmiln, she heard him say that he had both Salts and Laudanum in a Chest that he brought from the East-Indies, and that she said she would be obliged to him for a little of the Salts and Laudanum, as she had much need thereof.

FIRST DECLARATION by
PATRICK OGILVIE.

Forfar, 14 June, 1765. By George Campbell, Esq; Sheriff-substitute of Forfarshire.

Compeared Lieutenant PATRICK OGILVIE, of the eighty-ninth Regiment of Foot, who being examined, declares, That so far as he remembers, he came to this Country from Abroad in January last, and that his principal Residence was at the Eastmiln of Glenylla, his Brother Thomas Ogilvie's House, and that he left that Place about three Weeks ago. That the Reason he left it, was on account of some Dryness betwixt his Brother and him, occasioned by some Surmises or Reports in the Country; but though these had not happened, he was determined not to stay longer about his Brother's. That since leaving same he has had no fixed Residence, but has been going about seeing his Friends and old Acquaintances. Declares, That Evening he left his Brother's House, he went to Mr. Shaw's House at Little Forther, and when walking by the Water-side there with George Shaw, Elizabeth Sturrock, a Servant of his Brother Thomas Ogilvie's, brought him a Letter from Mrs. Ogilvie his Brother's Lady, the Contents of which were desiring him to return to his Brother's House; and that he sent a verbal Message, he was not to return at that Time, as he then intended going the Length of Baron Reid's on a Visit. Declares, That the next Day, when at Little Forther, he received another Letter from his Brother by James Millam, the Contents of which were to the same Purpose as Mrs. Ogilvie's, which James Millam knew. That some Days after, when at Glenkilrie, he received another Letter from said Mrs. Ogilvie; but who was the Bearer of it he does not remember, nor does he remember if he wrote any Answer to that Letter. Declares, That he was in Alyth the Tuesday before his Brother's Death, when he received a third Letter from Mrs. Ogilvie by the aforesaid Elizabeth Sturrock, but to which he returned no Answer in Writing. That the said Evening of Tuesday, he gave to Andrew Stewart, Merchant in Alyth, his Brother-in-law, a small open Note, by way of Wrapper or Direction round a small Phial Glass in which were some Drops of Laudanum, and in the Wrapper two Doses of Salts folded close by the Glass; and that the Write in the Note or Wrapper properly contained Directions for Mrs. Ogilvie how to use the Laudanum, and, so far as he remembers, was to take fourteen or fifteen Drops at a Time. That all this he told to Andrew Stewart, and that it was for Mrs. Ogilvie's own proper Use, and to deliver it to no body else; but did not desire him to do it privately, or to let no body see him deliver it, only desired him to be sure to deliver it to herself. Neither did he deliver a sealed Letter to Andrew Stewart at the Time for Mrs. Ogilvie. That the said Laudanum and Salts he brought from the East-Indies with him, as a Remainder of what he used when his Health was bad there, and on his Passage home, having done the same by his Surgeons Directions both at Land and Sea. And this he declares to be Truth.

SECOND DECLARATION by
PATRICK OGILVIE.

Forfar, 15th June, 1765. By George Campbell, Esq; Sheriff-substitute.

Compeared the said Lieutenant PATRICK OGILVIE, who being re-examined, declares, That it consists with his Knowledge, that of the Laudanum he sent as mentioned in his last Declaration, there was not above thirty Drops or Gutts of it used, so far as he can recollect, from the Quantity he sent, and what remained in the Phial Glass the Day after his Brother's Death. That the Declarant came to Eastmiln, when Mrs. Ogilvie returned him the Glass, and the Remainder of Laudanum therein, and which he instantly produces, and is immediately sealed up with the Declarant's own Seal, and lodged in the Sheriff-Clerk's Office. And that when the Declarant delivered the Glass to Andrew Stewart, he shook the same to him, and shewed him betwixt him and the Light the Quantity of Laudanum therein, who, upon looking at the same just now, must be sensible that there is no more out thereof than about the Quantity of thirty Gutts as above; and that Mrs. Ogilvie told him she had used about that Quantity, and also made use of the Salts. Declares, That within these two Weeks he was at the Town of Breckin, and in Company with James Carnegie, Surgeon of that Place, but that he received from him no Laudanum or any other Medicine whatever. That when he was at Eastmiln, in the Course of Conversation versation with Mrs. Ogilvie, he happened to say that he had some Salts and Laudanum, that he used when at the East-Indies, in his Chest at Dundee, which would be very soon at Ayrb; when Mrs. Ogilvie desired to have some of both Salts and Laudanum, as it might give her Rest when uneasy and could not procure Sleep. And this he declares to be Truth.

Mr. JAMES BALFOUR of Pilrig, Sheriff-substitute of the Shire of Edinburgh, aged fifty and upwards, married, who being solemnly sworn, purged of Malice and partial Counsel, examined, and interrogate; and two Declarations or Examinations being now exhibited to the Deponent, depones, That, at the Desire of the Lord Advocate, the Deponent, upon the twenty-second of June last, went to the Laigh Council-house of Edinburgh, where Patrick Ogilvie Pannel being brought before him for Examination, depones, That the Declaration now exhibited to him, signed by the Deponent and the said Patrick Ogilvie Pannel, is what was emitted by the Pannel before the Deponent at that Time: That, on the Monday thereafter, the Deponent, at my Lord Advocate's Desire, went to the Tolbooth of Edinburgh, in order to examine Katharine Ogilvie the other Pannel. The Paper now exhibited to him, and signed by him before William Dunbar and John Stewart, both Writers in Edinburgh, Witnesses subscribing thereto, contains a faithful Narrative of what passed on that Occasion. Causa scientia patet. And this is Truth, as he shall answer to God.

WILLIAM DUNBAR, Writer in Edinburgh, aged twenty-four, unmarried, who being solemnly sworn, purged of Malice, partial Counsel, examined, and interrogate, depones, That the Examination of Patrick Ogilvie Pannel, mentioned in the Deposition of the preceding Witness, was emitted in the Deponent's Presence, and he saw the said Pannel and the Sheriff-substitute subscribe the same. Another Paper being exhibited to him, containing what passed on the Examination of Mrs. Ogilvie Pannel, by Mr. James Balfour, Sheriff-substitute of the Shire of Edinburgh, in the Tolbooth thereof, depones, That the said Paper contains a faithful Account of what passed on that Occasion; and that the Deponent is a signing Witness to the said James Balfour's Subscription thereto annexed. Causa scientia patet. And this is Truth, as he shall answer to God.

Being interrogated, Whether he is acquainted with one Mr. Carnegie, a Surgeon in Brechin? or whether he ever bought any Medicines or Poison from the said Mr. Carnegie? He refuses to answer this Question.

Being

Being interrogate, Whether he recollects what Time his deceased Brother was married? Answers, He does not recollect just now.

Being interrogated, Whether he the Declarant was present at the Marriage? Answers, That he was.

Being interrogated, Whether he was acquainted with the said Mrs. Ogilvie before her Marriage with his Brother? Answers, That he was not.

Being interrogated, Whether he absolutely refuses to answer the above Questions, which it is said above he refuses, or declines to answer? or whether he declines at present to answer them? He now answers, That he absolutely refuses to answer them To-night; but he does not know, whether he may hereafter answer some of them or not.

And being interrogated, Whether he inclines to give any Reason for this Refusal? Answers, That he does not think it necessary to give any Reasons.

This Declaration and Answers were emitted in Presence of William Dunbar and William Campbell, Writers in Edinburgh.

PAT. OGILVIE. JA. BALFOUR.

At Edinburgh, the twenty-fourth Day of June, One thousand seven hundred and sixty-five Years.

In Presence of Mr. James Balfour of Pilrig, Advocate, Sheriff-substitute of this Sheriffdom of Edinburgh, Compeared Mrs. KATHARINE NAIRN, Widow of the deceased Thomas Ogilvie of Eastmiln; and a Copy of two several Declarations emitted by her, upon the fourteenth of June instant, before George Campbell, Esq; Sheriff-substitute of Forfar, and subscribed of this Date by the said Mr. James Balfour, being read over to her, she was asked, If there was any thing in the said Declarations which she now desired to correct or alter? She refused to answer this or any other Question put to her, having been so advised by her Friends and Council: And the following Questions were separately put to her.

In what Drawer and in what Room in the House did she put the Medicines and Letter which were delivered to her by Andrew Stewart, the Day before her Husband's Death?

Did she read the Letter? What were the Contents? Has she the Letter? or how has she disposed of it?

By whose Advice did she order the above Medicines to be sent to her?

What was her Ailment? Did she mention such Ailment to any in the Family? Did she mention her Ailment to Lieutenant Ogilvie? If she did, how came she to take his Advice about her Health?

Did she sleep with her Husband the Night before his Death? When did she first see and speak to him next Morning, the sixth of June?

Was she in use to give him Tea in his Bed? Did he desire Tea that Morning? Did any body see her make the Tea and fill the Bowl for her Husband? Did she carry up the Tea from the Place where it was made straight to his Room? Did he refuse or shew any Unwillingness to take it? Did she give any of the Tea which her Husband had drank to any other Person?

Did any body propose sending for a Surgeon when her Husband was taken ill? Did she oppose the Surgeon being sent for? And what was the Reason for so doing?

Where did she sleep from the Time of her Husband's Death, till the Time of her Commitment to the Prison of Forfar?

Where did Lieutenant Ogilvie sleep during that Time?

How many Letters did she write to Lieutenant Ogilvie from the Time he was dismissed from her Husband's Family? If she sent any Letters, mention how many, by whom sent, and to what Places sent, and what were the Contents, and what Answers she received. Does she know what is become of these Letters and Answers?

To all and each of which Questions, put separately to her, she refused to give any Answer. And further refuses to adhibite her Subscription hereto.

In Witness whereof, the said Mr. James Balfour, William Dunbar, Writer in Edinburgh, and John Stewart, Writer there and hereof, have adhibited their Subscriptions, Time and Place foresaid.

(Signed) JA. BALFOUR.

WILLIAM DUNBAR, Witness.

JOHN STEWART, Witness.

JAMES M'KENZIE, Session-Clerk of Glenylla, aged forty Years, married, who being solemnly sworn, purged of Malice and partial Counsel, examined, and interrogate, depones, That some Time after the late Eastmiln's Death, the Deponent was in the House of Eastmiln, where Alexander Ogilvie, Brother of the late Eastmiln, likewise was: That he saw the said Alexander Ogilvie have several Papers in his Hand, one of which, he said, he was to send to Forfar, as it might be Evidence against Mrs. Ogilvie the Pannel; and that the Deponent looked at that Paper, and saw that it was in the Form of a Letter without a Subscription; but the Deponent did not read it, nor hear it read: And a Letter libelled upon, beginning D' Captain, and indorsed on the Back by the Names of George Spalding and George Campbell, being now exhibited to the Deponent, he depones, That he cannot now say positively whether or not that is the Letter shewn to him by Alexander Ogilvie as aforesaid; but thinks it is like it. Causa scientiæ patet. And this is Truth, as he shall answer to God.

(Signed) JA. M'KENZIE. AND. PRINGLE.

JAMES MILLAM, Tacksman of the Eastmiln of Glenylla, aged thirty-six Years, married, and being solemnly sworn, purged of Malice and partial Counsel, examined, and interrogate, depones, That, during the late Eastmiln's Illness, upon that Day on which he died, the Deponent was sometimes in the Room with him, particularly about Two o'Clock in the Afternoon, when the Deponent asked the late Eastmiln, How he was? To which Eastmiln answered, That he was very ill: And the Deponent further asked him, What he thought was the Matter with him? To which Eastmiln answered, I am gone, James, with no less than rank Poison! Causa scientiæ patet. And this is the Truth, as he shall answer to God.

(Signed) JAMES MILLAM. AND. PRINGLE.

GEORGE SPALDING of Glenkilrie, aged thirty and upwards, who being solemnly sworn, purged of Malice and partial Counsel, examined, and interrogate, depones, That he is married to a Sifter

Sister of Mrs. Ogilvie the Pannel, and has had frequent Occasion of seeing Mrs. Ogilvie's Hand-writing; and a Letter, without a Subscription, beginning D' Captain, and indorsed on the Back by the Subscriptions of George Spalding and George Campbell, being exhibited to the Deponent, he depones, That he thinks that Letter is of the Hand-writing of Mrs. Ogilvie the Pannel; but cannot be quite positive, as he has seen her write sometimes better, and sometimes worse, according as her Pen was. Causa scientiæ patet. And this is Truth, as he shall answer to God.

(Signed) GEO. SPALDING. AND. PRINGLE.

ALEXANDER LINDSAY, late Servant to the deceased Thomas Ogilvie of Eastmiln, aged twenty-one, unmarried, who being solemnly sworn, purged of Malice and partial Counsel, examined, and interrogate, depones, That he came to be a Servant at Eastmiln about Six o'Clock of the Morning of that Day on which Eastmiln died: That, about Nine o'Clock that Morning, he saw Mrs. Ogilvie the Pannel standing in a Closet up Stairs between the two Bed-rooms: That the Deponent was going up to the Garret to take down a Wheel: That the Door of the Closet was open; but the Deponent did not go into the Closet; and that he did not then observe any thing that Mrs. Ogilvie was doing, nor that she had any thing in her Hand; and that, when the Deponent went up to the Garret, Mrs. Ogilvie called up to him not to walk over the Closet, for fear of shaking down something. Depones, That, when he was in the Garret, he saw Anne Sampson standing at the Stair-head, near the Closet where Mrs. Ogilvie was. Causa scientiæ patet. And this is Truth, as he shall answer to God.

(Signed) ALEX. LINDSAY. AND. PRINGLE.

The List of Witnesses summoned for Lieutenant Patrick Ogilvie is the same as the above, with the Omission of the 108th.

N. B. The List of Witnesses summoned for the Prosecutor, the List of Assize given out in the Indictment, and the List of Witnesses summoned for the Pannels, are not inserted in the Record.

GEORGE SPALDING of Glenkilrie, aged thirty and upwards, married, who being solemnly sworn, purged of Malice and partial Counsel, examined, and interrogate, depones, That in February last, he wrote a Letter to the Lady Nairn, pressing her Ladyship, that Intestment should be taken in Favour of Mrs. Ogilvie of Eastmiln, upon her Contract of Marriage, because her Husband Eastmiln appeared to be in a bad State of Health. Depones, That, for some Years past, Eastmiln appeared to him to be in an indifferent State of Health, complaining often of a Heart-Cholick, or a Pain in his Stomach, attended with a short Cough, which was not continual, but which seldom left him. Depones, That he wore a plaiden Jacket and a Belt round his Middle, much broader than ever he saw another wear, with Lappets of Leather hanging down his Haunches: That, upon his Marriage, he took off these Happings. Depones, That before he got the said broad Belt, he wore a striped woollen Night-Cape upon his Breast, the lower End of which reached near his Breeches; but never observed him wear it after he got the Belt. Depones, That about six Years ago, the Deponent was told, that Mr. Ogilvie of Eastmiln had an ulcerous Fever; after which the Deponent saw him frequently, but never saw him look so well as formerly. Depones, That the old Lady Eastmiln told the Deponent, that her Son Eastmiln was about forty Years of Age when he died. Depones, That Eastmiln was married the thirtieth Day of January last. Depones, That when Eastmiln was complaining of the said Pain of his Stomach, in the Deponent's House, he the Deponent has frequently given him a Dram to comfort him; and particularly, a little before Eastmiln's Marriage, Eastmiln being ill of the said Disease in the Deponent's House, he got hot Ale and Whisky, with a Scrape of Nutmeg in it, and was put to Bed without any Supper. Depones, That he does not certainly know how old Mrs. Ogilvie the Pannel is, but believes her to be about twenty-one. Causa scientiæ patet. And this is Truth, as he shall answer to God.

(Signed) GEORGE SPALDING. HENRY HOME.

JAMES MILLAM, Tacksman of the Eastmiln of Glenylla, formerly sworn this Day on the Part of the Prosecutor, and now examined on his said Oath on the Part of the Pannels, depones, That the very next Day after Lieutenant Ogilvie had left the House of Eastmiln, Eastmiln employed the Deponent to carry a Letter to his Brother, and he read this Letter to the Deponent, the Contents of which the Deponent has forgot, further than that it contained a Request to the Lieutenant to return to Eastmiln: That upon this Occasion the Deponent was informed by Eastmiln of indecent Familiarities which his Mother told him had passed betwixt the Lieutenant and his Wife Mrs. Ogilvie; but that for his Part he did not believe them: That the Deponent delivered the Letter according to his Instructions, and received an Answer from the Lieutenant, which was also read to him by the Lieutenant, importing the Lieutenant's declining to return to the House of Eastmiln, because of the Reports that were raised against him. Depones, That Reports were in the Country of indecent Familiarities betwixt the two Pannels: That he knows not what gave Rise to these Reports; but that for his Part he never saw saw any Indecencies betwixt them. Depones, That his Dwelling-house is within a Penny-stone Cast of the House of Eastmiln, and that he has been frequently in that House. Depones, That he was very well with Eastmiln; and that if any thing concerned Eastmiln, he would have imparted it to the Deponent as soon as to any other. Depones, That Eastmiln, four Days before his Death, complained to the Deponent of a Gravel, and a Cholick; and that he could not live, if he got not the better of it: That on the Evening of the Tuesday before his Death, he went into the Deponent's House, saying he was cold, and ordered some Shilling-feeds to be set on Fire for warming him: That he complained of his being ill, refusing to eat, and saying he would have no other Supper but the Fire; and that he was fading as fast as Dew goes off the Grass. Depones, That the same Night was not cold. Depones, That Eastmiln, the Night before he died, was again in the Deponent's House, and said he was no better. Depones, That the Day after Eastmiln died, he saw the Lieutenant sitting on a Bed-side of the House of Eastmiln, with his Mother on the one Hand, and Dr. Meik on the other; and that he could not be pacified: That Mrs. Ogilvie was in another Room, and did not see her: That the Lieutenant, in the Situation above described, was gushing out of Tears. Depones, That he does not know whether there was any Quarrel betwixt Mrs. Ogilvie and Anne Clark before Eastmiln's Death; but that Eastmiln complained to him, that he could not get peaceable Possession of his own House for Anne Clark: That he wished her away; and that he got from the Deponent a ten-shilling Note for the Expence of her Journey. Depones, That upon the Monday after Eastmiln's Death, Anne Clark left the House of Eastmiln; and that the Deponent saw her get Money from Mrs. Ogilvie the Pannel immediately before her Departure. Depones, That when the Mournings came Home upon Occasion of Eastmiln's Death, Anne Clark complained to the Deponent for Want of a mourning Apron, adding that she should make it as dear to them as if it was a Gown, meaning the Pannels, as he understood; and his Reason for understanding so, was, that it was the Lieutenant who sent for the Mournings. Depones, That the Day Eastmiln died, he was sent for to see him; and that he came about Twelve o'Clock, at which Time there was no Person with him but Anne Clark: That upon that Occasion he staid but a very short Time: That he returned about an Hour thereafter, and several other Times, till Glenkilrie came: That he saw several Persons in the Room besides Glenkilrie, who came to see Eastmiln; but that he does not remember their Names. And being interrogate for the Prosecutor, depones, with respect to the Letter which he got from Eastmiln to deliver to his Brother the Lieutenant, That he now recollects a Passage in it, importing, that Eastmiln was to go to Edinburgb, to stay there a Fortnight, perhaps a Month, or six Weeks. Depones, That the said Letter, which the Deponent carried from Eastmiln to his Brother the Lieutenant, was inclosed by the Lieutenant in the said Letter which the Lieutenant wrote in Return, and which Letter the Deponent put in his Pocket without looking at the Direction: That he offered the said Letter to Eastmiln, which Eastmiln, without opening it, bade the Deponent give to his Wife — because it was directed to her; and which he did accordingly. And being further interrogate for the Prosecutor, How it came, that when the Lieutenant's Letter was read over to him, that he did not know it was addressed to a Woman? depones, That he took no Notice of this, but only of the Lieutenant's refusing to return to the House, because of the Reports raised against him. Depones, That before the Day on which Eastmiln died, the Deponent never heard that he was ever troubled with any violent Vomitings or Purgings. Being interrogate, Whether, to the Deponent's Knowledge, Eastmiln did not continue in the same State of Health after his Marriage that he was for a Year before? depones, That he never heard him complain before his Marriage; but has heard him often complain after it, though he was as intimate with Eastmiln before his Marriage as after it. Causa scientiæ patet. And this is Truth, as he shall answer to God. And being further interrogate, depones, That the Monday after the Pannels were put in Forfar Gaol, Alexander Ogilvie, youngest Brother to Eastmiln, roused the Stocking upon the Farm of Eastmiln that belonged to his deceased Brother: That he gave it out, that he did this by Authority of a Letter from his Brother the Lieutenant: That he received the ready Money got at the Roup; and that the Bills were taken payable to him at Martinmas next: And this is also Truth, as he shall answer to God.

(Signed) JAMES MILLAM.
HENRY HOME.

JEAN WALLACE, Servant to George Spalding of Glenkilrie, unmarried, aged thirty and upwards, being solemnly sworn, purged of Malice and partial Counsel, examined, and interrogate, depones, That she was Servant in the deceased Eastmiln's Family for three Years, and left it, as she thinks, about six Years ago: That the last Year she was in his Service, as she thinks, Eastmiln had an Ulcer, and was attended by Dr. Ogilvie: That since that Time the Deponent had little Occasion to see Eastmiln, and did not hear him make any Complaints of his Health; but that the Deponent from his Looks did not think he was in good Health. Depones, That while he was bad of the Ulcer, he was confined, as she thinks, for six Weeks, and she herself sat up frequently with him. Causa scientiæ patet. And all this is Truth, as she shall answer to God. And depones, she cannot write.

(Signed) ALEX. BOSWELL.

ISOBEL DOUGLAS at Wardhead, dismissed of Consent of the Pannels.

THOMAS JACK in Kirkton of Glenylla, married, aged forty and upwards, being solemnly sworn, purged of Malice and partial Counsel, examined, and interrogate, depones, That about Ten o'Clock of the Day upon which Eastmiln died, the deceased Eastmiln told him, that he had been out the Day before visiting some of his Tenants Biggings; and that he was very bad that Day, and had been obliged to rest himself three Times; but told the Deponent, that he was better that Morning; and that he told the Deponent, that he had been a Mile. or a Mile and a half, from Home

Home the Day before. Causa scientiæ patet. And all is Truth, as he shall answer to God.

(Signed) THOMAS JACK.
ALEX. BOSWELL.

ELIZABETH FERGUSON, Spouse to John Bre-sack, Portioner of Invercarity, aged thirty-five, or thereby, being solemnly sworn, purged of Malice, examined, and interrogate, depones, That the Day before Thomas Ogilvie of Eastmiln died, the Deponent saw him in her own House, which is, as she thinks, about three Miles from Eastmiln: That he was on Foot: That he told her he was not very well; and that he had been taken ill, as he said, when he was going Home some Time before that, and had not got the better of it, or was not much better yet. Causa scientiæ patet. And all is Truth, as she shall answer to God. And depones she cannot write.

(Signed) ALEX. BOSWELL.

JOHN PATERSON, Son of James Paterson in Clocknocator of Glenylla, married, aged twenty-two Years and upwards, being solemnly sworn and interrogate, depones, That he saw Eastmiln the Day before he died about a Mile from his own House: That he was going West to see some of his Tenants Biggings: That Eastmiln complained to the Deponent that he was sick: That he said his Bowels were all sore; and that he had not been so ill for six Years: That he lay down and took a Sleep upon the Ground: That the Deponent's Sister Margaret Paterson was with the Deponent at this Time, and none other. Causa scientiæ patet. And all is Truth, as he shall answer to God.

(Signed) JOHN PATERSON.
ALEX. BOSWELL.

MARGARET PATERSON, Daughter of James Paterson in Clocknocator of Glenylla; unmarried, aged thirty or upwards, being solemnly sworn, purged, and interrogate, ut antea, depones and concurs with her Brother the preceding Witness in all Things; with this Addition, That Eastmiln likewise complained of sore Bones. Causa scientiæ patet. And being further interrogate, depones, That Eastmiln after this went further West, and did not return Home that she saw. And depones, All this is Truth, as she shall answer to God.

(Signed) ALEX. BOSWELL.

MARGARET RAIT, Spouse to Fergus Fergusson in Kirkton of Glenylla, aged about threescore Years, being solemnly sworn, purged, and interrogate, depones, That she saw the deceased Eastmiln in her own House, which is about a quarter of a Mile distant from his, the Day before he died: That Eastmiln told her that he was not well, and he behoved to get Dr. Ogilvie to give him something to do him good: That Eastmiln was then walking, and had come from the Hill. Causa scientiæ patet. And all is Truth, as she shall answer to God. And depones she cannot write.

(Signed) ALEX. BOSWELL.

Doctor JAMES SCOTT, Physician in Edinburgh, married, aged about forty, being solemnly sworn, purged of Malice and partial Counsel, examined, and interrogate; depones, That he has made sundry Experiments upon Arsenick: That he knows it will not dissolve in warm Water; and that the common Arsenick that is to be met with in the Shops, although pretty fine pounded, falls to the Bottom of a Vessel with Water almost instantaneously: That it never puts on a greasy Appearance. But being further interrogate upon the Part of the Prosecutor, depones, That if Arsenick be put into a Bowl of Tea with Milk and Sugar, that, if it was stirred round, the Arsenick would be suspended so long, that it would kill a Person that had drunk it; and if there was Honey in the Bowl, the Arsenick would be still more suspended thereby. Causa scientiæ patet. And all this is Truth, as he shall answer to God.

(Signed) JAMES SCOTT.
ALEX. BOSWELL.

GEORGE CAMPBELL of Carsegowrie, Sheriff-substitute of Forfarshire, a Witness formerly solemnly sworn, and examined on the Part of the Prosecutor, depones, That some Time after the late Eastmiln's Death, the Deponent went to the House of Eastmiln to make a Search for any thing that might appear there to clear up the Cause of Eastmiln's Death: That the Deponent not having the Keys of the Drawers in the House, broke up several of them, and particularly the Drawers of what was said to be the late Eastmiln's Cabinet: That, in one of these Drawers, he found some brownish white Powder wrapped up in two or three small Parcels: That the Deponent not knowing what that Powder was, carried it away with him, and afterwards shewed it to James Carnegie, Surgeon in Brechin, and asked him, What Kind of Powder he took it to be? and particularly, Whether or not he thought it was Arsenick? That James Carnegie, after looking attentively upon the Powder, declared, That he did not know Arsenick but by the Effects of it; and could not say, upon Sight, whether that Powder was, or was not Arsenick. Depones, That Alexander Ogilvie, Brother to the late Eastmiln, was not present with the Deponent either at the foresaid Search at the House of Eastmiln, or when he shewed the Powder to James Carnegie as aforesaid. Depones and produces some of the Powder foresaid which he found at Eastmiln; which Powder, upon the Opinion of Dr. Cullen, Physician in Edinburgh, and Mr. James Russel, Surgeon there, who tried it before the Court and the Jury, he believes to be Saltpetre. Causa scientiæ patet. And this is the Truth, as he shall answer to God.

Immediately upon the reading of the above Verdict, his Majesty’s Advocate judicially appeared in Court, and craved that the Lords might proceed to pronounce a Sentence Condemnator upon the said Verdict.

Mr. ALEXANDER LOCKHART, as Procurator for both Pannels, represented, That, during the short Space of Time that he and the other Council for the Pannels have had to recollect the Proceedings in the Course of this Trial, and upon hearing the Verdict itself, as now read in Court, sundry

Particulars have occurred to the Council for the Pannels, which they are humbly to insist upon as jointly and severally relevant why no Judgment can pass against them upon this Verdict; and as, in Support of some of these, there will be Occasion to refer to the Records of the Proceedings themselves, which till now have been in the Hands of the Jury; and as it is their earnest Desire to state these in the most proper and becoming Manner, he therefore moved the Court, in Behalf of both Pannels, That they be allowed a reasonable Time to prepare, state, and support the Particulars, of the Heads of which they shall furnish a Note to his Majesty’s Advocate this very Night.

ADVOCATUS answered, That the Record of the Trial has been open, and subject to the Consideration of the Council for the Pannels, during the whole Course of the Trial: That, if any Objection is to be taken against the Course of Procedure during the Trial, it is necessary that such Objection should be taken and tried before the Jury is discharged: But as the Council for the Pannels have moved no Objection or Plea in Arrest of Judgment, and have only moved for a Delay, in order that they may have further Time to find out and move such Plea, he insisted, That this is no Plea; and therefore craved Judgment upon the Verdict, unless the Council for the Prisoners shall state a special and legal Plea, why such Judgment should not pass.

“ The Lord Justice-Clerk and Commissioners
“ of Justiciary, having considered the foregoing
“ Debate, declare, That they will proceed to “ give Judgment upon the Verdict, unless the “ Procurators for the Pannels will forthwith
“ state special Reasons in Arrest of Judgment.
“ (Signed) GILB. ELLIOT, I. P. D.”

“ The Lord Justice-Clerk and Commissioners
“ of Justiciary, having heard the Procurators
“ for both Parties, upon the Reasons for Arrest
“ of Judgment, they appoint a Minute of Debate
“ to be made up and ingrossed in the Record of “ Court; and supersede advising the said Verdict
“ and Debate till To-morrow at Eleven o’Clock
“ before Noon; and continue the Diet till that “ Time; and ordain the Pannels to be carried “ back to Prison.”

KATHARINE NAIRN,
AND
PATRICK OGILVIE,
Present Prisoners in the Tolbooth of Edinburgh;
PANNELS:

Indicted and accused as in the preceding Sederunts.

LOCKHART, RAE, CROSBIE, and DUNDAS, for the Pannels, by this Minute, represented, That no Judgment ought to pass on this Verdict, in respect that, so far as any Thing is found against the Pannels, the same is void and null; the Proceedings in the Course of this Trial having been most informal and irregular. Particularly, between the Hours of Three and Four of the Afternoon of Monday the 12th Instant, the Jury arose from their Seats, and dispersed into different Corners of the House; some of them, on that Occasion, even going out of the Room where the Court sat; and continued so dispersed, eating and drinking, and conversing in private with different Persons, and particularly, with the Council for the Prosecutor, for the Space of half an Hour and better, a Witness being then under Examination, and a Part of her Deposition reduced into Writing before they had so dispersed; till at last the Clerk, at the Desire of one of the Judges, called over the List of Assize, when they again assembled and took their Seats, one or more Persons having conversed in private with the Witness then under Examination, during the Time the Jury had been dispersed; the said Witness being Anne Clark, against whom Objections had been proponed by the Pannels, but over-ruled, and a Protest for Remeid of Law taken thereon. This, it is apprehended, was an actual Adjournment of the Trial; at least, it had all the bad Effects of an Adjournment, an Opportunity being given to converse with the Jurymen in private, to sollicite them, and to offer Evidence, which the Pannels and their Council had no Opportunity to see or hear; an Event which the Law of this Country has been particularly careful to avoid; and has considered the preventing such Things, and giving absolute Security against them, to be a fundamental Point in a Trial by Jury, as appears by the Act 1587, chap. 91. whereby, "Our Sovereine Lord, considering the Wranges alledged sustained by diverse Noblemen and others, Lieges of this Realme, being accused of Treason, be solleliting, boasting, and menacing of the Assize, after they were inclosed, the Accusers and others Persones, their Favourers, having Liberty to pass to the said Assize, and to produce to them sick Writs and Witnessès, and uther Probation, as they pleased, to verify the Crime outwith the Presence of the Partys accused; quhairby the just Defence of their Lives, Lands, and Honours, was taken away; therefore our said Sovereign Lord, with Advice and Consent of the Estates of this present Parliament, has statuted, declared, and ordained, That, in all Times coming, the hail Accusation, Reasoning, Writes, Witnessès, and uther Probation, and Instruction whatsoever of the Crime, shall be alledged, reasoned, and deduced to the Assize in Presence of the Party accused, in Face of Judgement, and no otherways."

From which Statute it is plain, the Legislature meant effectually to guard against every Opportunity of making any Impression upon the Minds of Jurymen, excepting by what was said and done in open Court, and in Presence of the Pannels; and all the salutary Effects of this Statute must be eluded, if Opportunity is given for the Council for the Prosecutors, or others, to sollicite, practise upon, or argue with the Jurymen, during the Course of the Trial, in private, by permitting them to leave their Seats, disperse through the House, and converse privately with whatever Person they think proper: That, in like Manner, about Four of the Clock in the Morning of Tuesday the 13th of August, at least, between the Hours of Three and Five of the Morning of that Day, the Jury dispersed again in the same Manner; and, in their Absence, Part of the Deposition of Elizabeth Sturrock, one of the Witnessès, was taken down: That, about that Time, the Court likewise broke up, no Quorum of the Judges continuing on the Bench, the Lord Kaims only remaining there, the rest retiring and conversing in private with sundry of the Jury and others; and, upon that Occasion likewise, the Jury eat, drank, and conversed in private with different Persons, and in particular, with the Council for the Prosecutor; whereby the Trial was again interrupted: That no Roll was called; nor was it any ways ascertained that they re-assembled, the Lord Kaims only calling out, Gentlemen of the Jury, Are you all there? and the Depute-Clerk of Justiciary answering, I see fifteen; but no Answer was returned by the Jurymen themselves. That, in this Case, the Court was most unquestionably adjourned, as no Quorum of the Judges remained sitting on the Bench; and, though no Act of Adjournment appears in the Record, yet, it is humbly apprehended, That that, instead of mending Matters, renders them worse; for an Adjournment via facti, is, unquestionably, as much an Adjournment as one made by an Order of Court, having all the bad Consequences of it, and many more. That it is an adjudged Point, that, after a Jury is charged with a Pannel, the Court cannot be adjourned till the Jury is inclosed. This was solemnly determined in the Case of Janet Ronald, who was tried, in May 1763, at the Circuit-Court of Perth, for the Crime of giving Poison to her Sister; in which Case, after the Proof was concluded, and while his Majesty's Advocate was addressing the Jury, one of the Jurymen happened suddenly to be taken ill, and appeared incapable of doing his Duty at that Time; for which Reason the Court was adjourned till next Morning, when that Jurymen being recovered, the Jury again re-assembled, were inclosed, and returned a Verdict against the Prisoner, finding her guilty Art and Part of the Crime libelled. It was moved in Arrest of Judgment, That the Court having been adjourned before inclosing the Jury, and the Jurymen dispersed, and an Opportunity given to sollicite and practise on them in private, the Verdict was void and null, and no Sentence could follow in Consequence thereof. The Matter, on Account of its Importance, was referred to the Court of Justiciary at Edinburgh, where it was solemnly debated in Presence of the whole Judges; and, after Informations had been given in on this Point, and recorded in the Books of Adjournal, the Court being of Opinion, that this Adjournment vitiated the whole Proceedings, did not pronounce any Sentence on this Verdict, but assilzied the Pannel, and dismissed her from the Bar: That the Adjournment of the Court in the present Case ought to have the same Effect to vitiate all the subsequent Proceedings, and to procure an Absolutor to the Pannels; since every bad Consequence that can be figured or imagined to result from an Adjournment by Act of the Court, must result also from an Adjournment via facti. That about Three o'Clock of the Afternoon of Tuesday the 13th of August, at least, some Time between the Hours of Two and Four of the Afternoon of that Day, the Jury again dispersed, and conversed in private private with sundry Persons in different Parts of the Houſe, and continued diſperſed for the Space of half an Hour or upwards; after which they again returned to their Seats: That all theſe various Adjournments and Diſperſing of the Jury, it was out of the Power of the Pannels, or their Council, to prevent; the Jury being actually diſperſed, on all theſe ſeveral Occaſions, before they were aware, no Motion having been made publickly for Leave of the Court to diſperſe, and the Pannels and their Council being intent upon the Buſineſs that was going on, and that Attention firſt interrupted by the Noiſe the Jurymen made when actually diſperſing: That it is in vain, in the preſent Caſe, for his Maſteſty's Advocate to plead the Neceſſity of the Jury being reſreſhed in ſuch a Caſe; for they were reſreſhed on ſeveral other Occaſions beſides thoſe above-mentioned, at which Times the Reſreſhments were always given them in their Seats; and it is apprehended that ought always to be the Caſe, as it is a material Point, that the Quality and Quantity of the Reſreſhments they take, particularly the Wine, and other ſtrong Liquors, ſhould be regulate by the Court, under whoſe immediate Inſpection every Thing of that Nature ſhould be given them; but by Jurymen diſperſing, and drinking Liquors, in what Quantity and of what Quality they pleaſe, in private, and while removed from the Inſpection of the Court, there is a Hazard of their becoming intoxicated with the Liquors they drink, which may be of the moſt dangerous Conſequences to the Security of thoſe who are tried, and conſequently to the Lives and Liberties of the Subjects in this Country in general. That the bad Effects of all theſe ſeveral Adjournments were ſeverely felt by the Pannels in this Caſe; they ſerved to protract the Trial, and what Impreſſions were communicated to the Jurymen, when diſperſed, or what Quantities of Liquors they ſwallowed, are Circumſtances which cannot be known to the Pannels or their Council: But after the laſt Time the Jurymen were diſperſed, and when the Evidence on the Part of the Pannels began to be adduced, ſeveral of the Jury ſhewed a very great Impatience, and inſiſted, that that Evidence which the Pannels thought material for them ſhould be cut ſhort. And ſome of them particularly diſputed the Relevancy and Propriety of the Questions put by the Council for the Pannels with great Heat, inſomuch that ſome of the Judges, and other Jurymen, were obliged to interpoſe, in order that the exculpatory Proof might go on; and the Council for the Pannels were obliged to paſs from many Witneſſes, in order to procure Attention from thoſe Aſſizers. Hence, though thirty-three Hours were ſpent in hearing calmly the Proof adduced for the Proſecutors; yet the Proof for the Pannels, after being heard by thoſe Jurymen with great Impatience, was put an End to in about three Hours. By this means the whole Proof relative to the Conduct of Alexander Ogilvie, which the Pannels had inſiſted much upon in their Defences, was prevented; ſome of the Jurymen ſaying, that they had nothing to do with Alexander. That at one Period of the Trial, one of the Jury retired from his Place, and continued abſent a conſiderable Time; yet the Proof went on in the mean Time, the Witneſſes were examined, and their Depoſitions taken down in Writing in the mean Time, he paying no Attention thereto, nor was he capable of doing ſo at the Time; ſo that he could no more judge of what was ſaid or done at that Time, than if he had been twenty Miles abſent: That on ſundry Occaſions Jurymen did retire without Leave aſked or given, and went out of the Room where the Court was ſitting: That it is in vain for his Maſteſty's Advocate to plead the Neceſſities of Nature as an Excuse in ſuch Caſes; for there is a Remedy known and commonly practiſed; when thoſe Neceſſities oblige the Jurymen to withdraw, viz. Leave is aſked of the Court, which orders a Macer to attend the Jurymen, that no Perſon may have any private Intercourſe with him during the Time he withdraws, and the Trial is ſtopt till he returns.

That, by the Act concerning the Regulation of the Judicatories, paſſed in the third Seſſion of the ſecond Parliament of King Charles the Second, in the 10th Article concerning the Juſtice-Court, it is enacted, "That, in all Criminal Purſuits, "the Defender, or his Advocates, be always "the laſt Speaker, except in Caſe of Treafon "and Rebellion againſt the King." Which Act, though altered as to Proſecutions not extending to the Loſs of Life, or to Demembration, before the Court of Juſticiary, or in Circuit-Courts, and where the Evidence is not taken down in Writing, by the Act 21mo Geo. II. chap. 19. §. 18. yet remains in full Force as to all other Criminal Courts, and as to all Trials brought in this Court which may extend to the Loſs of Life or Limb, and when the Evidence is taken down in Writing. That this Statute notwithstanding, after the Advocates for the Pannels had concluded their Speeches to the Jury, and nothing remained, by the Forms of Court, but to incloſe that Jury for the Purpose of returning their Verdict, one of the Judges did addreſs himſelf to the Jury, in a Speech concerning this Trial, and the Credibility of particular Witneſſes, whereby the Pannels were deprived of a legal and moſt material Privilege, viz. the Impreſſion that muſt be left by the laſt Pleader upon the Minds of the Jury in their Behalf.

That, beſides all theſe Informalities committed during the Courſe of Procedure, the Record is very defective, though the Defects cannot at preſent be ſo particularly pointed out, as the Council for the Pannels have not yet had an Opportunity of inſpecting it. However, they do condeſcend on the following Defects: That ſundry Admiſſions made by his Maſteſty's Advocate, in Point of Evidence, favourable for the Pannels, are not taken down; ſo that the Record paſſed to the Knowledge of the Aſſize, without bearing theſe Admiſſions. One of theſe Admiſſions was, paſſing from the Crime of Inceſt during a Part of the Time libelled; another was relative to the Conduct of Alexander Ogilvie: That the Proteſts for Remeid of Law taken for the Pannels at different Parts of the Trial, are not ingroſſed in the Record, though that was ſpecially inſiſted for at the Time they were taken, and Precedents pleaded on and produced; neither is the Condeſcendence relative to the Malice of Anne Clark, which was made for the Pannels, but found not relevant by the Court, mentioned in the Record; and this is the more material, that the Omiſſion of this Condeſcendence was uſed as an Argument with the Jury for the Credit of Anne Clark's Teſtimony, by the Judge who was the laſt Speaker on this Trial; though, it will will be remembered, that when the Council for the Prosecutor had concluded the rest of his Proof, he gave Notice to the Court, That as the Council for the Pannels had charged Malice against Anne Clark, one of the most material Witnesses for the Prosecutor, and meant to adduce Witnesses for proving that Malice, he judged it necessary, on his Part, to adduce some Witnesses in order to obviate that Objection, and to shew that this Witness was so far from bearing Malice against the Pannels; that, after she had been once precognosced, she had withdrawn and secreted her Person, when a Warrant by this Court was out against her; in order to avoid her being brought as a Witness in this Cause.

That the Verdict appears to be informal; and the Council for the Pannels apprehend it will be found a special one, when applied to the Interlocutor of Relevancy: That it does not bear that the Jury considered the Writs produced, but only the Depositions of the Witnesses, though Writings were produced both by Prosecutor and Pannel; particularly, the Declarations of the Pannels when examined; the Questions put to them by the Sheriff of Edinburgh, which they are said to have refused to answer; Anne Clark's Letter to the Lord Advocate; the alledged Letters from one of the Pannels; a Letter from Lord George Beauclerk; a Letter from Colonel Morris, in whose Regiment the Pannel Patrick Ogilvie served, attesting his good Character. Therefore the Verdict has proceeded on a partial Consideration of the Evidence. And the Inattention of the Jury to the whole Evidence, appears from another Particular, viz. in their finding the Pannels guilty of the Incest as libelled, which includes the whole Month of January; though it is in Proof, that the late Thomas Ogilvie was not married till the 30th Day of that Month. That if Time were allowed to the Council for the Pannels, to consider the Verdict, and inspect the Records, and prepare Arguments in Support of the Positions they have now laid down, they apprehend there is good Cause why Judgment should not pass on this Verdict. They have set forth these Objections in Obedience to the Court's desiring them to condescend, and craved, that more Time may be allowed them to state these Objections more fully, or any other which may occur, and Liberty given them to inspect the Record; and have Copies of the Verdict; which has been refused them by the Clerk. And this Demand, they apprehend, is the more reasonable, that they have only had a Recess of fourteen Hours, from the Time that the Jury were inclosed, after enduring the Fatigues of a Trial which lasted for forty-three Hours; so that they are not in a Condition at present to argue their Objections so properly, as they will be when more Time is allowed them. All and each of the Facts set forth they offer to prove, and they crave that a Proof may be allowed accordingly.

HIS MAJESTY'S ADVOCATE and SOLICITOR GENERAL answered, That the Conduct of the Defence for the Pannels in this Trial has been extraordinary from first to last, as appears from the Defences compared with the Proof in Exculpation. That after a Trial of forty-three Hours Continuance; before a Jury of the most respectable Character, and after a Verdict returned finding the Pannels guilty, an Attempt is now made to disappoint publick Justice, by a Plea in Arrest of Judgment, unknown in the Law, unsupported by any Precedent, and in itself irrelevant and frivolous. That this Plea has been introduced with a Declamation upon the Liberty of the Subject, and of the Importance of preserving a Jury Trial; and yet the Plea itself tends, if it has any Meaning, to prove, that no Trial of a Capital Crime in this Country can be taken by a Jury; because the Length of such Trials must, in most Cases, make it necessary for Jurymen to refresh themselves, and to retire for answering the Necessities of Nature; and if these Things cannot be permitted by the Court, the necessary Consequence is, that no such Trial can proceed by Jury; and in order to bring such Criminals to Justice, a new Form of Trial must be invented. That when a Plea so groundless and frivolous is, for the first Time, taken up in Behalf of two Pannels, whose Rank and Situation in Life enable them to bring many learned Council to argue and give Countenance to such a Plea; in Behalf of two Pannels convicted by their Country of the most atrocious and dangerous Crimes; it becomes the Dignity of the Court to hear fully, and then to give such a Judgment as will shew that the Law knows no Distinction of Persons; and that the Criminal Law in this Country, upon which the Security of the Government and the Safety of the People depends, must have its Course with equal Effect against the greatest as well as the meanest of the Subjects. That this Trial has been conducted with more Attention and Favour for the Defence of the Pannels, than any Trial that has occurred in the Memory of any of the Members of the Court. That the strictest Orders were given that no Jurymen should retire, even for relieving the Necessities of Nature, without Leave of the Court, and being attended by a Macer of the Court; which was accordingly punctually executed throughout the whole Course of the Trial. That when it became necessary for the Jury to refresh themselves from Time to Time, for greater Dispatch, and to prevent Confusion, they left their Bench, and were refreshed at a Table immediately below, at, and under the Eye of the Court; and the Insinuation, that some of the Jury may have taken too much Liquor, is false and injurious to the Knowledge of the Court, and was not so much as insinuated in the Debate when the Jury was present, and is now, for the first Time, thrown into this Minute. One of the Jurymen being indisposed, rose from his Seat and walked for some Time behind the Seat, but heard the whole Evidence. That no Criminal Trial, where such Refreshment of the Jury has been necessary, was ever carried on in a Manner so little exceptionable as the present; and the Tendency of the Pannels Plea is to shew, that no Criminal has been legally condemned in Scotland, in any Case, where the Trial has continued for such a Time as to require Refreshment to the Jury, or the Retiring of any Jurymen, or the Relieving the Necessities of Nature. That during the Time the Jury were refreshing themselves the first Day, Anne Clark was under Examination, which lasted eight Hours, and remained in her Place, under the immediate Eye of the Court, till her Examination was resumed upon the Return of the Jury to their Places; and no Person spoke to her, except the Macer of Court, when he gave her some Bread and Wine. And during the

the whole Course of the Trial, upon Notice given, that any of the Jury had retired to ease Nature, the Proceedings stopped till his Return; so that, though from the Necessity of the Thing the Court did, for some short Intervals, stop Proceeding in the Proof, yet there was no Adjournment of the Court; and this appears from the Record of the Court, which the Pannels cannot disprove; and the Court remained full, without one Moment's Interval, during the whole Course of the Trial; and as all the Facts stated in the Plea offered for the Pannels passed in Presence of the Court, and as it is not pretended that any Wrong was done, or any Exception taken, in Behalf of the Pannels, to any Part of the Procedure during the whole Trial, far less after the Jury was inclosed, no Proof can be allowed of the Facts upon which the Plea is founded, and the Court must take them upon their own Knowledge. The late Case of Janet Ronald has no Relation to the present Case; for there the Court was adjourned, and the Jury dismissed after they were charged with the Pannel, which was found to be contrary to Law: That the Insinuation thrown out against the Jury, That they were impatient to hear the Evidence for the Pannels, is likewise false and injurious to the Knowledge of the Court: That after the Profecutor concluded his Evidence, which he abridged as much as possible, the Council for the Pannels proceeded to open their Defence by a Proof, That, after the Pannels were committed to Prison, the Cattle at the House of Eastmilk were sold by Alexander Ogilvie; and it appearing clearly from their own Evidence, that this Roup proceeded from an Order of the Pannel Patrick Ogilvie, it was observed by one of the Jury, that this Fact did not appear to be material to the Issue; and as they found themselves much exhausted by Fatigue and Want of Rest, they would not be able to attend to such Evidence as might be material for the Pannels Defence; which was submitted to the Consideration of the Pannels own Council: And they did accordingly declare, That they gave up that Article of their Proof.

The Protest taken by the Pannels for Remeid in Law, is extant in Process, and makes a Part of the Record of this Trial. The Objection to the Evidence of Anne Clark, founded upon Malice, was clearly disproved before the Jury by Evidence: That she was so far from harbouring Malice against the Pannels, that, on the contrary, after she was precognosced before the Sheriff, she withdrew herself from the Place of her Abode, and concealed herself in different Places about this City under a false Name, in order to prevent her being adduced as an Evidence in this Trial; and although his Majesty's Advocate, perceiving the Danger of protracting this Trial to an unnecessary Length, did not insist to have this Part of the Evidence taken down; yet it appeared so strong to the Pannels own Council, that, when they came to state the Grounds of their Allegation of Malice, and to adduce their Witnesses in Support thereof, the Judge Examiner gave his Opinion, that the Condescendence, as stated by them, was not relevant; and they did not insist for the Opinion of the Court; which was plainly giving up and passing from this Objection of Malice, or any Proof thereof.

That the Verdict is accurate and formal in all Respects. — There is no Necessity that the Verdict should mention the Evidence upon which the Jury proceeded: That all the written Evidence adduced before the Jury was in Behalf of the Profecutor, and no written Evidence whatever was proved or adduced before the Jury in Behalf of the Pannels; and if it can be supposed, that the Jury did not take under their Consideration this Part of the Profecutor's Evidence, it was so far favourable for the Pannels; and he appeals to their Lordships Knowledge, that, in most Trials before this Court, the Declarations of the Pannels, and other written Evidence, are referred to in the Libel, and produced before the Jury; and many Verdicts have been returned, upon which Execution passed, wherein no Mention is made of their having considered such written Evidence; for it is in their Power to take that Evidence under their Consideration, as a Ground of their Verdict or not, as they please.

That it is the undoubted Right of the Council for the Pannel, to be the last Speaker upon the Import of the Evidence, and the Profecutor has no Reply; but it is the inherent Right of the Court, and essential to public Justice, to correct Mistakes in Law or in Fact, by which false Impressions upon the Jury may be made by the Council on either Side: That the Verdict, with respect to the Incest, is unexceptionable, and properly applies to the Charge in the Libel.

That no Admission was made by his Majesty's Advocate, that is not properly entered upon Record: That he passed from the Incest charged to have been committed after the sixth of June, in Presence of the Court and Jury, and the Verdict properly applies to the Libel as so restricted: That the Council for the Prisoners had Access to the Record during the whole Course of the Trial, and since that Time; and it is improper to move the Court for an Arrest of Judgment till they have further Time to consider the Record, in order to discover what Objections they can there find in Support of their Plea. In respect of all which, Judgment ought to be pronounced.

After reading over the foregoing Minutes judicially, in Presence of the Pannels and Court, the Lords proceeded to advise the same, and pronounced the following Interlocutor:

“ The Lord Justice-Clerk and Commissioners
“ of Justiciary, having considered the foregoing
“ Debate, and knowing that the whole of this “ Trial, from first to last, was carried on under “ the Eye, and in Presence of the Court; and “ that the whole of it was conducted with as “ much Regularity and Accuracy as ever was “ done in any Trial before the Court, they find
“ the Reasons pleaded in Arrest of Judgment not “ relevant, and repell the same; and they also “ repell the Objections made to the Form or “ Substance of the Verdict.

(Signed) GILB. ELLIOT, I. P. D.”

On pronouncing of which Interlocutor, Mr. ALEXANDER LOCKHART, Advocate, Procurator for the Pannels, protested for Remeid of Law; and thereupon took Instruments in the Hands of the Clerk of Court.

Then there was a Petition given in and presented to the Court by the said Katharine Nairn Pannel, signed by Mr. Alexander Lockhart, and Mr. Henry Dundas, her Lawyers, bearing, That the Petitioner has the Misfortune, in the criminal Prosecution now depending against her in this Court at the Instance of his Majesty's Advocate, to have a Verdict returned against her by a Plurality of Voices, finding her guilty of the Crimes of which she was charged: Whereupon his Majesty's Advocate having moved for Judgment, sundry Objections were stated upon her Part, why no Judgment can pass against her upon that Verdict: That, abstracting from these, she now begs to represent to the Court, That she is pregnant; and though she cannot take upon her, from her Inexperience in these Matters, positively to say how far she is advanced in her Pregnancy, according to her best Opinion, she judges she may be about three Months gone with Child.

Therefore praying, it might please their Lordships, to direct the proper Inquiry to be made into her present State and Condition as to her alledged Pregnancy; and upon the same being properly certified, to supersede Judgment against her, if any Judgment can pass upon the Verdict, till after Delivery.

Which Petition being read in Court, and judicially adhered to by her,

“ The Lord Justice-Clerk and Commissioners of Justiciary, having heard this Petition, they grant Warrant for Letters of Diligence, at the Instance of his Majesty's Advocate, for citing three or more skilful Midwives to compare before their Lordships against To-morrow, being Friday the sixteenth Day of August current, at Nine o'Clock in the Forenoon, to inspect the Petitioner Katharine Nairn Pannel, and make Trial whether or not she the Petitioner be pregnant or with Child; and accordingly to give their Opinion or Judgment to the Court therein; and continue the Diet against the Petitioner until the said Time; and appoint her in the mean time to be carried back to Prison; and, for the Purpose aforesaid, the said Lords appoint the Persons following, to wit, Mrs. Johnston, Mrs. Hamilton, Mrs.

“ Duncan, and Mrs. Hill, known Midwives, to be cited as above.

(Signed) GILB. ELLIOT, I. P. D.”

“ The Lord Justice-Clerk and Commissioners of Justiciary having considered the foregoing Verdict of Assize, dated and returned the fourteenth Day of August current, against Katharine Nairn, Widow of the deceased Thomas Ogilvie of Eastmilm in the County of Forfar, and Patrick Ogilvie, Lieutenant of the eighty-ninth Regiment of Foot, Brother-german to the said deceased Thomas Ogilvie; whereby, by a great Plurality of Voices, the said Katharine Nairn and Patrick Ogilvie are found guilty of Incest as libelled, during the Life of the now deceased Thomas Ogilvie of Eastmilm; and the said Katharine Nairn, guilty of Murder, by poisoning the said Thomas Ogilvie her Husband; and the said Lieutenant Patrick Ogilvie Pannel, guilty Art and Part thereof: In respect of the said Verdict, they, by the Mouth of Isaac Gibbs, Dempster of Court, decern and adjudge the said Patrick Ogilvie Pannel, to be carried from the Bar back to the Tolbooth of Edinburgh, therein to remain, to be fed upon Bread and Water only, in Terms of the Act of Parliament in the twenty-fifth Year of the Reign of his late Majesty King George the Second, intituled, An Act for preventing the horrid Crime of Murder, until Wednesday the twenty-fifth Day of September next to come; and upon that Day to be taken forth of the said Tolbooth, and carried to the common Place of Execution in the Grass-market of Edinburgh, and then and there, betwixt the Hours of Two and Four of the Clock after Noon of the said Day, to be hanged by the Neck by the Hands of the common Hangman, upon a Gibbet, until he be dead; and his Body thereafter to be delivered to Dr. Alexander Munro, Professor of Anatomy in Edinburgh, to be by him publicly dissected and anatomized, in Terms of the said Act; and ordain all his moveable Goods and Gear to be escheat and inbrought to his Majesty's Use; which is pronounced for Doom.*

* The Proceedings in this Trial being transmitted to London, for the Consideration of his Majesty and his Privy-Council, the following signed Opinion of Mr. McCarty, an eminent English Counsellor, was presented with them:

“ I have read a great deal of the Proceedings in the Affair of the unhappy Prisoners, Katharine Nairn and Lieutenant Patrick Ogilvie, under Sentence of Death, for the heinous Crimes of Incest and Murder. Crimes of so black a Dye, charged on Persons who, until that Time, had preserved unblemished Characters, should be attended with the most evident Proofs to gain Credit in the Opinion of Mankind, at least of the most judicious Part of it. Among the Vulgar, it is much to be lamented, every Calumny, however ill-supported, finds an easy Admittance.

“ It seems to me extremely hard on the Prisoners, that they should be tried at the same Time for Crimes of very different Natures. The Indictment charges, That they have presumed to commit, and are guilty Art and Part of both, or one or other of the said Crimes of Incest and Murder, &c. Adding the two Crimes in one Indictment, makes the Prisoners be exposed to a greater Odium, and creates a stronger Prejudice against them. I think, in the Law of England, a Charge, that the Prisoner at the Bar was guilty of one or other of two Crimes, would have vitiated the Indictment. It is laid down as a Rule in Co. Entr. 278. that the Fact is never laid in the disjunctive. And in 5 Mod. 137. Rex against Stocher, it was ruled, that an Indictment, setting forth, that the Defendant murderavit, vel murderari causavit, is not good; for these are different Crimes.

“ In the present Case there is a further Disadvantage; for, as I am informed, the Trial for Incest, and the Trial for Murder, are to be had in a quite different Manner. In the first, the Trial is Januis clausis; and in the other it is Januis apertis; the last Method being more public, is less exceptionable. In the Case of these unfortunate Prisoners, the whole was carried on Januis clausis; every Allegation and Deposition in Support of one Branch of the Indictment, had an Effect on both; but this, I think, was rather Prejudice than real Conviction.

“ I am of Opinion, that, if the Crimes charged are considered severally, and the Evidence produced to support one Crime is taken singly, without the Assistance of the other, no Jury in England would have found the Prisoners guilty.

“ If the Facts alledged as a Proof of the Incest were given as a Proof of the carnal Knowledge on an Indictment for a Rape, it is impossible a Jury could find the Defendant guilty. I think they would not be admitted as a Proof of criminal Conversation, to intitle a Husband to Damage on an Action of Trespafs. There is not one Fact attempted to be proved, that

The

“ that may not be literally true; and yet the Defendants be innocent of the Crime of carnal Knowledge. The Conjectures of Women of very indifferent Characters, and of very malicious Dispositions, may naturally lead to the worst Things; but these Conjectures are not Evidence, when there is a Possibility that the Parties may be innocent. I do not know that, in our Law, any Presumption of a criminal Conversation operates in any Circumstance, but that of being solus cum sola, et nudus cum nuda; in all other Circumstances a positive Proof is required. It often happens, that a Man is indicted for a Rape, and acquitted; and yet the Court directs a Prosecution for an Assault with an Intent to commit a Rape. In Cases of that Nature, I doubt not but the Witnesses in the present Case would have boldly asserted, that a Rape had been actually committed. The Mind of the principal Witness was strangely prepossessed; she could hear distinctly what the good Lady Eastmiln could neither hear nor see.

“ If they were to be tried on the Murder singly, the Proof there will appear as defective. There is not one positive Proof, that Thomas Ogilvie died of Poison. The Surgeons who attended, declare, that the Symptoms might arise from natural Causes, a violent bilious Cholick. It was proved, that Thomas Ogilvie, the Day before his Death, and some Days before that, had complained of Pains in his Bowels, and had called for, and taken Drums in several Places, to procure Ease. These most certainly were not the Effects of Poison taken on the Morning of the Day on which he died. Why might not these Pains have increased the Day on which he died, without the Interposition of any Poison? The Matter might have been cleared up by opening the Body. Surgeons were present, and ready to perform the Operation, but were prevented by the Person who has spirited up the Prosecution, and who is to be the only Gainer by the Death of the Prisoners.

“ The great Rule of Evidence is, to have the best Proof the Nature of the Case can admit. That certainly has not been produced in this Case: It was not opposed by the Prisoners, but it was opposed by the Man who wishes their Destruction. The Incest is supposed to be certain, because the Husband is supposed to have been poisoned; and, on the other hand, the Man is believed to be poisoned, because there is a supposed Proof of Incest.

“ Under these Circumstances, it is difficult to find any Means to prove the Innocence of the Prisoners, after a Verdict and Judgment. The 19th Article of the Union confirms the Jurisdiction of the Court of Session; and in the same Terms it confirms the Jurisdiction of the Court of Justiciary. It mentions nothing of an Appeal from the Court of Session to the House of Lords, yet those Appeals are frequent. It mentions nothing for or against Appeals from the Courts of Justiciary: It certainly does not exclude them. There lies an Appeal from the Court of Exchequer in Scotland to the House of Lords. To admit an Appeal from the two supreme Courts in Scotland, where Property only is concerned, and not to admit an Appeal from the third supreme Court, where Life, Honour, Property, and Posterity are concerned, appears somewhat extraordinary. By the same Article of the Union, it is enacted, that no Causes in Scotland be cognoscible, or any Judgment from thence be recognised, received, or altered, by the Court of Chancery, Queen's-Bench, or Common-Pleas, or any other Court in Westminster-Hall. This negative Clause as to Westminster-Hall, and the Courts there, seems to imply a Power of recognoscing and altering Causes and Judgments in the House of Lords. I think it is the common Rule of Construction.

“ I believe there are few Instances of Appeals from the Court of Justiciary; but that is not a Proof that such Appeals cannot lie. I remember a Petition of Appeal was sent from Scotland in the Affair of Barrisdale: There was some Difficulty made about presenting the Appeal. Lord Bath was applied to; but he said, it was a Branch of Business he never meddled in, nor was he disposed to meddle for the future in any public Affair, unless it was such as was of the highest Importance to the Nation; however, he would go to the House, and mention it to the Chancellor: and, in some Days after, being called upon, he said, he mentioned the Affair to the Chancellor, but that it was unnecessary to struggle as to the Petition, as the King, out of his gracious Disposition, would give the same Relief that was aimed at by the Petition.

“ If there is no Way open from the Court of Justiciary to the House of Lords, it is the only Court in Great-Britain which is not subject to that Jurisdiction; for Writs of Error go from the King's-Bench to the House of Lords, even in Cases of High-Treason. — It is not a common Practice, I confess; but yet it has been done. I see neither Reason nor Law why the Proceedings of the Court of Justiciary might not fall under the Review of the supreme Court, as well as those of the Court of Session.

In consequence of this, Lieutenant Ogilvie was respited from time to time till the 13th of November, 1765, when (his Majesty's fourth Reprieve being expired) he was carried from the Tolbooth in Edinburgh, and was executed in the Grass-Market, amidst an innumerable Concourse of People. The Day before his Execution he signed and delivered a Paper, in order to be made public, of which the following is an authentic Copy:

“ I Lieutenant Patrick Ogilvie, Brother-german to the deceased Thomas Ogilvie of Eastmiln, considering myself upon the Brink of this mortal Life into Eternity; and as I have but few Hours to live, would chuse to employ them in the Way that would most conduce to my eternal Happiness: And though my Years be few, and my Sins many, yet I hope, through

To the Right Honourable Lord Advocate.

LETTER from Lord George Beauclerk, Commander in Chief of his Majesty’s Forces in North Britain, to Lord Justice-Clerk.

MY LORD,

By a Letter I have just received from the Lord
Advocate, I find Notice has been taken in Court,
That, notwithstanding of the Order of the Court for confining of Anne Clark in a separate Room in the Castle; yet, after being separated, she was again remanded back to the same Confinement:
It is very true; and I have the Honour to acquaint your Lordship, that it was done by my Orders; as it was represented to me, that the Room in the Gunner’s House she was by Desire put into, was by no means a Place to keep a Prisoner in Safety; and I am determind, that all Prisoners intrusted to the Care of the Military under my Command, shall always be put in Places of Security. I have the Honour to be, my Lord,

Your Lordship’s

Holyrood-house,

Most obedient humble Servant,

G. BEAUCLEBK.

To the Right Honourable the Lord Justice-Clerk.

LETTER from Staats Long Morris, Esq; to
Mr. James Smith, Writer to the Signet.

SIR,

Huntley-lodge, Aug. 3, 1765.

This Day I received your Letter of the 31st of July, requesting an Attestation of Lieutenant Ogilvie’s Behaviour while he was under my Command. — His Conduct, as an Officer, was unexceptionable; and he was always thought by myself, and the other Officers of the Regiment, to be an inoffensive harmless Man. I am, Sir,

Your most obedient, and very humble Servant,

STAATS L. MORRIS.

To Mr. James Smith, Writer
to the Signet, Edinburgh.

“ God’s Grace, and the Interposition of my blessed Redeemer, that the Gates of Heaven will not be shut upon me, in what“ ever View I, as a Criminal, may be looked on by the Generality of Mankind; and, I hope, those who best knew me,
“ will do me Justice when I am gone. As to the Crimes I am accused of, the Trial itself will shew the Propensity of the “ Witnesses, where Civility, and possibly Folly, are explained into actual Guilt; and which possibly had the greater Effect
“ in making them believed; and of both Crimes for which I am now doomed to suffer, I declare my Innocence; and that “ no Persuasion could ever have made me condescend to them.

“ I freely forgive every Person concerned in this melancholy Affair; and wherein any of them have been faulty to me, I “ pray God to forgive them.

“ My Council and Doers have done their Duty for me, for which I thank them sincerely, considering the Care they have “ taken of me, and am forry it is not in my Power to give them a better Reward.

“ The Ministers of this City have been at great Trouble about my eternal State, which I have always gratefully acknow“ ledged, and will do to my last Breath, for the Care they have been pleased to take of me: I am forry, Time being so “ precious now, I have it not in my Power to express my Gratitude more so, for their Goodness and Attendance towards me;
“ and, I hope, their Labours in my Behalf will not be in vain.

“ Captain James Robb, and the other Keepers of the Prison under him, have also shewn me great Kindness since my Con“ finement, for which I thank them, and thought it my Duty to declare the same.

“ I desire to die in Peace with all Men, even my greatest Enemies, begging Forgiveness to them, as I hope for it from that “ God in whose Presence I am soon to appear; hoping for the Pardon of my Sins, and Entrance into eternal Bliss, through

“ P. S. Mean time I beg Leave to clear Mr. John Fenton of an Affair laid to his Charge; such as, his being guilty of “ keeping me from making a Confession to the World before I died; this, I hope, will be a Warning for the future from “ such-like Mistakes to the World, and hope they will be forry for their false Suspicion now.

† On the 18th of November, 1765, the High Court of Justiciary met, agreeable to their Adjournment of the 16th of August;
when the Consideration of the Case of Mrs. Ogilvie was resumed, and the Midwives appointed by the Court to visit her, having emitted their Declaration upon Oath, That they adjudged her to be in the sixth Month of her Pregnancy, the Court,

The Case of Robert, Earl of Essex, and the Lady Frances Howard.

Some MEMORIALS touching the Nullity between the Earl of Essex and his Lady, pronounced September 25, 1613, at Lambeth, (and the Difficulties endured in the same,) by George, Archbishop of Canterbury*.

BEING at the Court at White-Hall, on the 12th of May, 1613, or thereabouts, his Majesty moved me, that I would be a Commissioner in a Controversy to be begun between the Earl of Essex and his Lady, for the separating of them; and when his Majesty had ended those few Words with me, my Lord Chamberlain, who was then in the Gallery; spake also unto me to that Purpose. It was unto me a Matter very strange, having heard before of some Discontentments between that Noble Couple; but never imagining that Matters were come to that Head. My Answer was alike to both, That I did not know the Ground whereupon they intended to move; but that, if I were to be a Judge in any such Question, I would pray, that other Bishops, being near the Town and Court, might be joined with me. The Persons that were named then, were, my Lord of London, my Lord of Ely, and my Lord of Litchfield, (for at that Time was my Lord of Bath with the Queen's Majesty at Bath.) Besides, I prayed both the King's Majesty, and my Lord Chamberlain, That before any such Thing were entered into, I might speak privately with my Lord of Essex, for the satisfying of mine own Mind; which by both was permitted unto me. The Day after, I sent for the Earl; and having private Speech with him, only about the Ability of his Body, and nothing else, I found him generally much reserved in Talk, but only avowing the Ability of himself for Generation; and that he was resolved never to lay any Blemish upon himself that Way. I knew not well what to make of this; for I did not then understand, that some Lords had met before at White-Hall on both Parts, (the Lord Privy-Seal, the Lord Chamberlain, the Earl of Southampton, and the Lord Knowles, as afterwards I heard) to settle an Order by Consent, how this Prosecution should be; that is to say, That a Separation should be made, and my Lord's Honour every Way preserved.

Within a Day or two; coming to White-Hall, I had Speech with the Lord Chamberlain; in the Gallery going towards St. James's Park. I might not reveal all Particulars of that which passed in private; but yet I told his Lordship, That I had spoken with the Earl of Essex; and I perceived it was like to be a Matter of great Difficulty, and therefore wished his Lordship to be well advised; before any thing was brought into Publick. I told him, That he must proceed either upon Confession or Proof: That it was probable, the Earl would not confess his own Impotency, for then he blemished himself: That my Lady's Oath in that Case was not sufficient; and how other Proofs might be had; I could not conceive: That the Earl in open Estimation was to be thought an able Man: That his Father was not thought in that Kind insufficient. The Lord Chamberlain replied, That, perhaps; the Father's Sin was punished upon the Son: That it was Truth; that the Earl had no Ink in his Pen: That himself had confessed, that he could not know a Woman, and that; before divers Noblemen, and some of them his own Friends, naming, as I remember, the Earls of Northampton and Worcester, and the Lord Knowles. All this while I never dreamed of Impotentia versus hanc, but conceived, that they would charge the Earl simply with Disability. The Lord Chamberlain then seemed unto me fully resolved to proceed, and told me whom he would have in the Commission, the Bishops of London, Ely, and Litchfield, the two Chancellors of the Exchequer and Dutchy, my Judges; (for so he called them) Sir Daniel Dun, Sir John Bennet, Dr. James; and Dr. Edwards. I told his Lordship, That I liked the Persons very well. The next News I heard was about a Day or two after, That the Commission was out under the Great Seal; which I wondered at, by reason that I thought, that my Words to the Lord Chamberlain being well weighed, would have moved some longer Consideration. Well: The Commission is brought; it is accepted, and Proceeding decreed; the Earl of Essex is called; the Libel is put in. When we saw it, and that it contained Impotentia versus hanc, most of us, who were not acquainted with the Project before, were much amazed at it. I told the Council for my Lady, That they had laid a very narrow Bridge for themselves to go over: So said my Lord of London, and divers of the rest; only my Lord of Ely was still silent. My Lord of Litchfield, two several Times, uttered Speeches, as much grieving and repining at this Controversy: That he was Ordinary to the Earl of Essex, and had been in his House at Chartley, which he saw to be well governed; and the Earl did bear himself most religiously therein, to his great Comfort: That his Wife had the Honour to be Cousin-German to the Countess of Suffolk; and therefore he had no Reason but to wish well to the Earl of Essex and his Lady both. Yet, if he had been worthy to be consulted withal, he should have thought that seven Years had been little enough to have deliberated, whether it were fit to bring such a Business into Question before the World. Another Time he told us, That it was very good, that we should proceed with great Wariness in this Cause; for, saith he, the World looketh on us what we do; and there were not more Eyes upon the Earl's Father losing his Head, than there be upon the Earl now losing his Wife. He told me afterwards, That he had Ill-will for those Speeches, and complained that some among us did tell Tales of all that was said and done. (And so it appeared afterwards, that Sir J. Caesar and Sir Daniel Dun did.) Sir Thomas Parry, in all his Speeches, privately murmured against this Nullity, till he came to Windsor; where, the Day that the King heard us, the Lord Chamberlain, in my Presence, spake privately with him and Sir Julius Caesar about this Matter; and from that Time forward, Mr. Chancellor of the Dutchy was altered. My Lord of Ely, also, for a great while, was in Dislike of the Separation, (as I have credibly heard he opened himself to Sir Henry Savile) until such Time as the King spake with him, and then his Judgment was reformed. But Truth it is, that among us he said nothing.

* The Proceedings between the Earl of Essex and Lady Frances Howard, in State Trials, Vol. 1. p. 317, being but short, and very imperfect, wanting the Arguments of the Civilians, &c. this Account, wrote by Dr. George Abbot, Archbishop of Canterbury, with the Speech he intended to have made, and King James's Letter to him, will give great Light into that Affair, and help greatly to explain it; and should be read with those Proceedings in Vol. 1.

Now the Earl's Answer is taken, which appeareth. In it there were divers Things very observable. He used no ill Speech of his Lady, for which we all much commended him. I gave him so strict a Charge to speak the Truth, requiring him, as he would answer me before God at the last Day, to deliver nothing for Favour or Affection, but to inform us in the Verity, that it wrung from him something which I supposed he intended not to speak so plainly. He gave the Reason of his having no Motions to know his Lady carnally, and of his thinking that he never should. When I came out of France, I loved her; I do not so now, neither ever shall I. When he was to answer to the Article, that she was Virgo incorrupta; he smiled, and said, She saith so, and she is so for me. Sir Daniel Dun caught these Words, and bid the Register set down then, Credit articulum esse verum. These Things gave me no great Encouragement to the Business; but yet being at very little Leisure, I let Matters go on, and in mine own Part resolved nothing. Then the Witnesses were deposed, but not published. The Inspectresses were chosen, who came most unwillingly unto it; and howsoever Sir Julius Caesar and Sir Daniel Dun (whom we never suspected to be as Parties in the Cause, as afterwards they appeared to be) made all clear and fair Weather; yet my Lord of London told us openly, That he being with them, found that the Ladies knew not well what to make of it; that they had no Skill, nor knew not what was the Truth; but what they said, was upon the Credit of the Midwives, which were but two, and I knew not how tampered with. Then came the Lady Frances to take her Oath, with the seven Compurgators. I noted therein some Things. A Paper was brought, containing, Verbis præcis, what her Ladyship would swear. We saw it, and considered it, and found it too bare and slight to enforce any thing. The Commissioners advised, that it should be more full. Dr. Steward accordingly drew it; but he must go forth to the Lady, to know whether she would swear it. At last it was agreed unto. When she came to subscribe it, after the Oath taken, one or two of her Brothers standing at her Back, put her in Mind that she must not write her Name Frances Essex, which she most willingly remembered, and subscribed Frances Howard. We saw my Lord of Litchfield's Wife to be one of the seven. We were afterwards informed very credibly, That the Lady Knevet had declared her Sorrow, that she was used in such an Action, and said, That she wept all the Day about it. These Things pleased me little; that no body took Comfort in the Business.

Things go on in a Course till Midsummer-Day. Then did the King deal with me privately, as if he had received divers Complaints against me. The first was, That we delayed the Proceeding, inasmuch as the Meeting was put off, from the 18th of June, till the 2d or 3d of July. My Answer was, We had rather gone too fast: We had sat Forenoon and Afternoon: The Term now grew to an End, and we had many Businesses to dispatch of the King's: That the Commission-Day for Causes Ecclesiastical was put off for a Week, by reason of Midsummer-Day falling on a Thursday; and consequently, that our Proceeding in this Cause, which commonly attended the other Commission, was of Necessity to be deferred. But my principal Answer was, That we could not shorten it; for the Council on both Parts had agreed upon that Day in July, and so it was upon the Acts: Howsoever, therefore, the Council for my Lady moved openly in Court to abbreviate the Time, yet the Council for my Lord would not renounce nor alter their Term probatory, but kept them close unto it. Another Objection was, That I acquainted not the King, from Time to Time, how Matters did go. I answered, That I knew not myself; for as yet there was no Publication of Witnesses; when any thing came to my Knowledge, his Majesty should understand it. It was added, That divers Persons repaired unto me, who wished not well to the Business. Belike, said I, they mean the Earl of Southampton, who came in the other Day, when we were all sitting together: But his Coming was about John Cotton's Cause; and I never had a Word with him in all my Life, touching this Business. No, said the King, and smiled, it is Sir Henry Nevile. Indeed, quoth I, he was with me the other Day, and this very Morning: But your Majesty well knows what was the Reason. It was touching that Cause, which your Majesty commanded me to send for him about. I delivered him your Mind the one Day, and he gave me an Answer the other. At this Time, his Majesty cast out some Words, as if he wished well to the Nullity; but it was so obscurely, that I did not conceive that earnestly he desired it. After this Day, the Complaints were many which were made to the King against me, and many Threats were used, and divers Tricks Tricks were played, to urge me to yield to the Nullity. One was, That I should suffer the Earl of Essex to go out of Town. I answered, He had made his Answer, and had his Proctor, and it was our Custom then not to stay Men. His Majesty commanded me to inquire, if his Presence were not necessary; and if it were, then I should stay him. I sent to Sir Daniel Dun, to Sir John Bennet, and to Dr. Steward; and they all agreed, that there was no Need of his Lordship's being in Town. And of this I sent Word to the Lord Chamberlain, and my Lord of Essex was permitted to depart. One while it was given out, that I was moved by the Queen to cross them; when, in Truth, I had not spoke with her thereabout: Another while, that I had spoke with the Earl of Essex at first, and hence his Lordship grew less pliable; when they knew about what it was, and were told of it before. And it was not forgotten, that when I gave Charge to the Earl of Essex, to answer truly to the Positions in the Libel, I named the Case of my Lord of Devonshire and the Lady Rich, as if I had compared this Cause unto theirs. When afterwards the Earl's Council took Exception to the Libel, it was given out, that they were animated by me to oppose; whereas I never spake with them, nor knew any thing of their Purpose. And ever that was one, that there were Delays used. Yea, it was to my Face delivered as a Threat, that Archbishop Grindal had been overthrown for not giving Consent to the Divorce of Dr. Julio, as implying, that the same would be my Case.

About this Time, the Lords; and the rest of the Feoffees, were to meet at Mr. Sutton's Hospital, about the settling of it. The Day that we were to come thither, my Lord Chamberlain, in the Privy Gallery at Whitehall, shewed his Anger towards me, that we had not sent for the Keys to his Lordship, and that he might deliver over the Cause. But when I came to the Charter-House, there was delivered me a Letter, written all with my Lord's own Hand, and directed to the Lord Archbishop, the Lord Chancellor, and the Lord Privy-Seal; wherein he did twice take Exception to me by Name, and, in a sort, braved me, that so he might pick a Quarrel to me; whereunto I replied not, but bore it with Patience.

A little before Whitsuntide, his Lordship was very kind to me, and of his own Accord proffered me a Chamber at Greenwich, which my Lord, my Predecessor, had; but after twice proffering of it, and my accepting of the same, his Lordship fell off strangely, and I never spake of it more. These Complaints and Threats made me to suspect all was not well; for what needed these Things to me, in a Matter of Justice?

The Time now grew on, that his Majesty was to go abroad in Progress on a Sunday, which was the Day before the Council for my Lord were to put in their Answers and Exceptions to the Libel. The Lord Privy-Seal shewed me a Letter of the King's to his Lordship, wherein he was to expostulate with me for delaying the Business. I gave his Lordship Answer what was done, and his Lordship professed that he was satisfied, and that no Man could do more than I did. On the Monday, the Council for my Lord put in their Answer, which was round and picquant. The Lord Chamberlain had Notice of it, and complained thereof to the King. I sent his Majesty the Copy thereof, and received from the King a Letter, written all with his Majesty's own Hand; shewing Dislike thereof. At that Time, Sir William Button threatened Sir Daniel's Servant hard for that Answer, as the said Sir Daniel divers Weeks after told me. The Commissioners considered of the Answer, and disallowed it, giving Order, that no Record should remain of it, but that it should be utterly defaced. This was very well accepted, and now my Lord of Canterbury was a very honest Man. But till this was done; their Followers gave out, that the King had in two Letters so schooled the Archbishop, as he was never schooled in all his Life.

Things now being quiet, I called Sir William Button one Commission-Day unto me, and spake thus to him: Sir William Button, you have followed this Business from the first, and have been present at the acting of all Things. Have you ever seen me, in Word or Deed, do any Matter that doth not become me? (for indeed hitherto I had no Way declared myself, because we were not come to consider of the Proofs.) What is then the Cause that I am thus complained upon, that I cannot one Day be quiet? His Answer unto me was, That the Lord Chamberlain was every Way a kind Father to his Children; but in this of his Daughter, he was so passionate till it had an End, that he lay as on a Grid-iron, broiling till the Matter were accomplished. Quoth I, It shall not be delayed by me. Now, the Council on both Sides drew on to inform us; wherein I noted, that whereas the Libel was laid in Nature of Maleficium versus hanc, my Lady's Council; upon the shutting up of the Cause, would not apply themselves thereunto, neither would they willingly hear of it; which seemed strange, since all the Books which they brought, particularly to the Cause, did mention that; and Doctor Steward had publickly and expressively said, That it was that which they did mean. This troubled me somewhat, because I perceived that they themselves could not tell what to make of it. But afterwards fell out another Matter, which very much alienated my Judgment from the Cause: It appeared, that Sentence could not be given, till the Time that the King entering his Progress, was gone as far as Windsor, and then his Majesty was soon to depart to Farnham. Sir Daniel Dun told us, That he was to attend the King in Progress; that he must be at Farnham; that he was old and lame; that it would be too great a Trouble for him to come back again at the Day of Sentence. He therefore prayed, That we would hear him deliver his Judgment of the whole Matter. This Proffer seemed wondrous strange to most of us; and putting it by handsomely, we resolved not to trouble him therewith: And in this Opinion we arose. But afterwards, my Lord of Litchfield cometh to my Study Door, where I and my Lord of London were about another Business, and telleth us, That my Lord of Ely, and Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer, were very desirous to hear Sir Daniel speak; and that he, for his Part, was of the Mind that it would do very well, and therefore he importuned us both to give Consent unto it; we imagining no great Harm could come thereby, assented, and the next Day is appointed for that Purpose. There Sir Daniel cometh with a formal Declaration, divided into six Parts, to every one of which he spake so largely, that with a little replying of ours, it spent a whole Afternoon. Matters which I most observed therein, were these: He told us, That by our Commission we might hear this Cause summarily. He brought a Book, That he who hath Power to hear a Matter summarily, is in Nature of an Arbitrator chosen by both Parties, and therefore may judge in Discretion, as he shall think fit; and more to that Purpose. I thought with myself, that this was strange Doctrine in a Matter of Marriage; that as Arbitrators, we might adjudge a Wife to her Husband, or not adjudge her, according to our Discretion. In his discoursing of my Lord's Impotency, versus banc, he beat upon the Matter of Maleficium, and yet by no Means he would have it to be that apparently. He insisted much, That the Sentence was to be given in general Terms, not naming any particular Impotency. I told him, In such a Sentence, the World look that we should yield a Reason of that which we did. He replied, That it was fit to give no Reason. And here, said Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer, a Judge is not to give a Reason of his Sentence, but only to God. I would give no Reason to any Prince in the World. I was once called before Queen Elizabeth, about a Sentence which I gave, and she demanded of me the Reason thereof; I told her, A Judge was bound to give no Reason of that which he pronounced, but only to God. I marvelled much at these Things, and at last replied, Well, let it be, we acquaint not the World with the Reason of that which we do; yet is it not fit, that I who am the Judge, and must pronounce the Sentence, know the Ground of that which I am to pronounce? Here, after a little pausing, one of them said, Yes, for you may see that in the Books and Depositions. Quoth I, But I cannot see that there which may satisfy me. But Mr. Chancellor, said I, and Sir Daniel Dun, Commissioners, you perhaps be not driven to it, yet I shall be forced of Necessity to tell Men the Reason of the Sentence: For as soon as this Cause is sentenced, every Man who is discontented with his Wife, and every Woman discontented with her Husband, which can have any reasonable Pretence, will repair to me for such Nullities. If I yield unto them, here will be strange Violations of Marriages; if I do not, I must not tell them, that it was fit for my Lord of Essex, but it is not so for you; for the Law knoweth no Persons, but is indifferent to all. If I then repel them, I must shew a Reason: Your Case is not like that of my Lord of Essex; for his Case was thus, yours is thus. And so must I deliver the Reason, or Men will not be answered. In this Time of debating, I asked Sir Daniel Dun, I pray you, Master of the Requests, what Examples have we of any Nullity in England, pronounced in this Kind? Might a Man see any Precedent of it? For I would be loath to do a Thing that never was done before. Yes, saith he, there be Precedents thereof. In Anne of Cleve's Case we have an Example, and another in one Bury, which I have here in my Book; and thereupon out of a Note-Book of his own, he read now a Line or two, and then two or three other Lines in another Place, and so forward. My Answer was, I did not think that King Henry's Separation from Anne of Cleve, was for any such Matter, but upon a Precontract. I said, King Henry the VIIIth was a strange Prince in that Kind: He put himself into many Marriages; and when he began that with Anne of Cleve, he feared lest the Emperor, and King of France, should combine with the Pope against him, and therefore he was desirous to strengthen himself with the Protestant Princes in Germany; and for that he thought this Marriage was much becomeful. But afterwards growing into Peace with one or both of those Princes, he grew soon weary of the Marriage, because he liked not the Woman. But then I promised to consider further of these two Cases. This was the End of that Day's Labour, which when at Night I had recounted with myself, I thought it was an audacious Part, for such a one as Sir Daniel was, to teach us out of such poor Grounds, both what to do, and how to do. I found by my Observation, that it was a set Match, that thus he should be heard; that he was prepared for the Purpose; for no Man upon the sudden, or one Day's Warning, could deliver so much, and so digested. And now I began to assure myself, that he did not shew himself a Judge, but was a Stickler for the Nullity. I much suspected the Conscience of the Man, knowing him reasonably well before, both out of mine own Estimation of him, and out of the Judgment of my two Predecessors, the Lords Whitgift and Bancroft, who held him for a Man most corrupt. Yet the next Day I sent unto him for his Note-Book, and I caused the Record of Anne of Cleve to be brought unto me. Reading over all the latter, I found not one Word tending to the present Case. Good Lord! thought I; how doth this Man deceive me! Perusing his own Book for that of Bury, I found it to be nothing but the Pleadings of Advocates on both Sides, when about the 40th of Eliz. there was some Question in the Common Law Courts about Bury's Land; Bury himself being dead many Years before. But I saw more in this Book against the Cause now in Hand, than for it; and by some other Writings in my House, I discovered that Bury's Divorce, Anno 1561, was for want of his S—s; which Dr. Steward also, being now of Council for my Lady, and who formerly stood for Bury's Brother against the supposed Son, publicly acknowledged. These Things made me in my Heart much dislike the Cause, and procured in me a hard Opinion touching Sir Daniel Dun, who should not have wronged me, being my Officer, as Dean of the Arches.

Within few Days after, the Message cometh to us, that we were all to attend the King at Windsor. This accordingly was done. The Morning before the Hearing, the Lord Chamberlain in my Presence spoke first earnestly with the Chancellor of the Exchequer, and afterward with the Chancellor of the Dutchy, who that Day fell from us, as appeared by the few Words that he had before the King. Some few Days before that, had Sir John Bennet, by Sir William Button and Dr. Edwards, been otherwise dealt withal, earnestly to give Consent to the Nullity; but that Day we dealt in it more than three Hours. His Majesty propounding the Matter, asked, How Things did stand? Sir Julius Caesar said, That Sir Daniel Dun was best able to speak unto it. And then, ex composito, Sir Daniel begins, and tells a great Tale, and especially insisteth upon Non potuit. When he had done, I answered him, and shewed the Want of Ground for that Conclusion, out of other the Earl's evident Answers, That the Non potuit was for Lack of Love, and not for Want of Ability. I challenged Sir Daniel for abusing the King with a false Report, and especially for his two Precedents of Bury's Case, and that of Anne of Cleve. Amongst us, was divers Ways shewed the Insufficiency of the Proofs;

Proofs; that the Libel was laid short to the Cause, and the Proofs were short of the Libel; that we had very many Times called upon the Council for my Lady, that they should look that they rightly laid their Matter, and made their Proof strong; that in the End, they complained not of the Judges, when the Fault was in themselves: (Where my Lord of Litchfield added, That himself fearing the worst, had gone to Doctors-Commons, and warned the Council for my Lady, that they should look to it.) Among other Things there uttered, Sir Daniel Dun said, What a Disgrace will this be to my Lord Chamberlain and his Daughter, if it should not now go forward! My Answer was, They should have looked to that before they did begin it: We were not the Men that set the Matter on Foot, if it were a Disgrace, they put it on themselves. But, quoth I, must I, to save any Man from Disgrace, send my Soul unto Hell, to give a Sentence whercof I saw no Ground? I will never do it. My Lord of London, Sir John Bennet, and Dr. Edwards, did carry themselves well that Day, although Sir John Bennet had much Opposition from the King himself. When we saw the King earnest, I fell down on my Knee, and with Tears in mine Eyes; I said, I beseech your Majesty, if ever I have done you any Service, whom I do serve with a faithful Heart; or may do you any Service, rid me of this Business. I had said before, That I was the unfittest Man that might be, to judge of such a Cause; I was no married Man, I was no Lawyer, and I had not had the Time, by reason of my infinite Businesses, to read so much of that Matter, as other Men had. I observed that Day many Things in his Majesty's Carriage of the Matter: He was earnest, but gracious and moderate. He found Fault with the Libel, and said, That Complaints were made that we went too slow, but he perceived we went too fast. He marvelled that my Lord of Worcester, and the Lord Knowles, were not examined as Witnesses. He constantly professed, That he believed that my Lord of Essex was impotent for a Woman. He told us, That some of the Earl's Friends had put a Woman to him, and he would not touch her. His Majesty said, That the Earl was once purposed to have gone to Poland, to have tried whether he might be unwitched. To which Things my Reply was, I would to God we might see these Things legally proved. That his Majesty much disliked that Course, and therefore he set the Course now in Prosecution; and therefore if there were any Error in it, he had done the Lord Chamberlain Wrong, and he must take it upon him. In Sum, I found his Majesty much troubled what to do, as I gathered, especially by these Words, If my Lord of Canterbury, and my Lord of London, had a Negative Voice, we must either begin all again, and have a new Libel; or we must have a new Commission, and put other Adjuncts. The Conclusion from his Majesty was, That we should all meet at Lambeth on the Morrow, and if we could unanimously consent, then go to the Sentence; if not, we should put it off unto another Day, and certify him of it, and so farther understand his Pleasure. When the King was risen from his Chair, he fell to inveighing against these Marryings of young Couples, before they be acquainted one with another. He told us the Inconvenience of it, how he knew in Scotland a Father who married his only Child to a Man against her Will: That she withstood it; yet her Father forced her to marry him: That being gone Home with her Husband, after a very few Days she run away from him: That her Father jerked her, and sent her Home again: That not long after, she poisoned her Husband, and was burnt for it, while the King was in Scotland. After his Majesty's going out, I followed him, and told him, I evidently perceived, that it was in the Earl of Essex, Vitium Animi non Corporis. His Majesty swore he thought so. There passed some other Speech from the King to me, touching his own lying with the Queen the first Night that he married her. But at the last, I kissed his Hand and departed. After I was gone, the Lord Chamberlain speaking somewhat against me, the King replied, The Archbishop hath so adjured me to be rid of this Matter, that I cannot tell what to say to him. This did Sir Julius Caesar tell me that Day at Dinner, at Eaton College, letting me know, that the King found no Fault with me: But afterward, the King coming to Dinner, after his Meat had stayed for him on the Table more than a Quarter of an Hour, he fate him down in his Chair, and casting his Leg over one Side of it, he eat no Meat for a great Space of Time; neither said he any Word, but fate musing to himself; which every Man observed. And it was given out by some in the Court, that I was gone away in the King's Displeasure. Within some few Days after, it was also more Ways than one brought credibly to my Ears, That the Archbishop and my Lord of London should be hereafter kept to their Spiritualities, and should meddle no more in Temporal Matters: And within a while it came so far, as that they should have their Temporalities taken from them. Sir John Bennet was at Windsor moved by Sir Thomas Lake in the Lord Fenton's Name, and afterwards by the Lord Fenton himself, That he should alter his Opinion, and make his Peace with the King, for his Majesty was not well pleased with him.

As I came Homeward from Windsor in my Coach, and all that same Night, two Things did run much in my Mind; the one of them was, What a strange and fearful Thing it was, that his Majesty should be so far engaged in that Business: That he should profess, that himself had set the Matter in that Course of Judgment: That the Judges should be dealt withal beforehand, and, in a sort, directed what they should determine: That the like Example had not been seen: That his Majesty did win himself much Honour in the Case of Sutton's Hospital; that notwithstanding all Importunity, he had suffered the Judges to do their Conscience. This strange Moving to the contrary, did make me marvellously suspect, that it was no direct Matter; and, as a dutiful Servant to my most gracious Master, I wished in my Heart, that his Majesty's Hand might be taken off the Business. The other Point was, that we had all this while, in our Debatings, never, or very little, meddled with Points of Divinity. And I thought with myself, that much might be said therein against Maleficium, and the Nullity to be pronounced there-upon versus hanc; for out of this we could never get in all our Talking, though they would never cleave fast to it. I therefore, having formerly revolved some such Things in my Mind, rose early on the Day that we were to debate Things at large, and set down my Mind in Writing out of something in Divinity. The Copy of this appeareth.

The Day after we came from Windsor, (being Tuesday) we met, and all the Forenoon we insisted on that which I had briefly written: But to deliver my Conscience freely before God, I received no Kind or Shew of Satisfaction. My Lord of Ely sat little less than dumb, as if he had never dreamed of any such Matter. Divers of the Commissioners wondered at him; that he, who had spent so much Time in reading of the Canonists touching this Question, should not think upon Divinity. Briefly up and down by others somewhat was said, but nothing to Contentment. After Dinner, Sir John Bennet propounded Reasons out of the Law, but without any Satisfaction. I observed two special Points that Afternoon: The one was, that we all thought my Lord of Essex his Answer to the Libel, was neither plain nor sufficient. And now it was remembered; that my Lord of Litchfield had put to him certain Questions, that four Things were necessary to Generation; Membrum virile, Ereption, Penetration, and Ejaculatio Seminis; which, although they were then smiled at, and since that Time much Sport had been made at the Court and in London about them; yet now our married Men on all Hands wished that punctually his Lordship might have been held to give his Answer unto them. This instructed me, that the Proofs were not full. A second Thing was, that when towards the Evening, I wished that a Reconciliation might be laboured between my Lord and my Lady, that it should best become us, my Lord of Ely, who from the first Beginning of the Process had been always very silent, spake home about that, much disliking that any such thing should now be fought; that it was too late; that it might be the Cause of poisoning and destroying one of another, to bring them together again. Well, when we could not agree upon our Conclusion; we were enforced to put all off unto a longer Day; and as the King commanded, I was to certify his Majesty of it. I wrote a Letter to the King, praying humbly that I might be freed from the Trouble of this Cause, or, at least, give no Sentence in it till I were a married Man, and so might better understand the Business. I inclosed also six Reasons of Sir John Bennet's, taking Exceptions in Law against the Nullity. And withal I joined mine own Reasons in Divinity, of which I said in my Letter, that I knew not where to seek an Answer to them; meaning, that the Commissioners had given me none. These Reasons afterwards cost me a great deal of Trouble.

The next Progress in this Controversy was, that I was advertised, that it was his Majesty's Pleasure that the Cause should be put off until the 18th of September; and withal there was brought a new Commission of Adjuncts, whereinto my Lords of Winchester and Rochester were put. The Day that I perceived this, acquainting the two Chancellors of the Exchequer and Dutchy therewith, in the Gallery at Lambeth, I told them, That I hoped now, that for my Part, I should be freed from any Trouble therein farther, for I did desire to be rid of it. They both answered me, That they desired in like Sort to be quit of the Matter. A good Business, thought I, that no body taketh Comfort of it, unless it be Sir Daniel Dun; of whom I forgot before to note, that on the Day of meeting, next after our coming from Windsor, he, with a great deal of Insolency, challenged me for my Speech before his Majesty the Day before. Do not abuse the King, Sir Daniel Dun. I remembered it was in mine own House, and if I had rattled him according to his Deserts, my Lord Chamberlain would have said it had been done for his Sake; and in the Progress, Sir Daniel having the King's Ear, would have made Things worse than they were; and I therefore forbore him with such Patience, that some of the Commissioners told me afterwards, that they wondered how I could endure those Behaviours, at the Hands of a Man of his Quality: But yet they commended me for it. Now grew I to consider what were the Reasons why these two Commissioners were joined to us; and therein I had many Advertisements from divers Friends, divers Ways. We resolved for my Lord of Winton, That it was supposed, that there was no great Amity between him and me: That when I was Dean there, there was some Disagreement between us, which they supposed yet continued: That he had an old Grudge to me, for having the Archbishoprick, which his Lordship so much desired. Besides, it was some Tickling unto him, that his Gravity and Learning should either win in the Archbishop, or lay some Blemish upon him, if he stood out. Certain it is, that Sir William Button was with him; and, doubtless, would tell him how acceptable this Service would be to his Majesty. I heard of good Credit, and secretly; That he was put in Hope to be made a Privy Counsellor; and the Fame was general, That for the Father's Labour the Son should be made a Knight. It seemeth, at the first, that he had no great Fancy unto it; but being wrought upon; he consented; so that he might be required by his Majesty to be present. This was done by a Letter from Salisbury, which, at his being at Lambeth, he shewed me; that I should take Notice, that he had not come, unless he had been commanded. I leave him for the Time, only signifying, that in the Vacation, he sent for divers Books from London, and had Dr. Steward much with him, to inform him in all Particulars. Yet I may not forget, that while he held off his Consent, some hard Opinions were raised of him at Court; as I found by a Letter from my Lord of Litchfield to me. For there he was found Fault with, that he attended not the King at Farnham, or at Andover. And there Blame was laid, that Mr. Love, who was so great with my Lord of Winton, was like to get the Warden's Place at Winchester, Dr. Harmar being reported to be dead. Concerning the Bishop of Rochester, it was well known that he had opened himself before the King's going in Progress, that he liked well of the Nullity. Coming once or twice while we were about it, he, with some in my House, disputed earnestly for it. He was a great Dependant of my Lord of Litchfield. This was a Way to make him well esteemed, and to arise high in Preferment. But, in Truth, he should not have verified the Report which Archbishop Bancroft on his Death-bed gave of him, together with Butler and Carrier, to the King by a Message, unless he did some such Thing. When he was put into the Commission, he in divers Places seemed to be much offended, that he was made one. His Grief was, that he was set in Opposition against me: He would never give his Voice to it, unless I consented. These, and the like Things he spake, as elsewhere, so to some of my Servants in my House at Croydon: For, under another Colour, he came three Times in the Vacation to me; but I never spake a Word with him about that Matter, as knowing it would be an Argument against me, that I laboured to draw away the King's Commissioners; and the End shewed, that I had no great Reason to trust him. Besides these two Adjuncts, the new Commission itself seemed very strange unto me. There were eight made of the Quorum; and it was so laid, that if three of them, with two other, consented, the Sentence might be given; so that, by the Words thereof, if seven had denied, five might have pronounced and prevailed. A Matter so uncouth, that, as I credibly heard, my Lord of Winton himself found much Fault therewith. Again, there was a Clause, Legibus, Statutis, Ordinationibus, Constitutionibus quibuscunque non obstantibus; so resolved they were to have it dispatched. Every thing now stood at a Pause; and my Lord of Ely (who, at first, delivered his Judgment against it to Sir Henry Savile, as I heard it avowed upon good Credit; but afterwards said, he was better instructed by the King) began to hearken what Men said of the Matter, as appeared by Speech which he had with Sir John Peyton; to whom, notwithstanding, he told some Things of the Insufficiency of my Lord of Essex. The Weather grew fair; he hoped the overflowing of the Isle of Ely would cease; he would go down in his Visitation; he came and took his Leave of me, but not one Word of the Nullity.

under

Now was his Majesty abroad, and I had more Leisure to consider of this Question. I read what I could; I conferred with many Men about divers Circumstances, so to inform myself the better. I prayed frequently to God to direct me aright. I often perused the Depositions, but I found little Satisfaction. I perceived most of the Lords had a great Dislike of this Proceeding; that the better Sort of Men had generally a Detestation of it; that the Judges and Lawyers much condemned it. I heard many strange Stories of the Lady's Carriage. Something was freely spoken of a Woman arraigned at Bury; and how to shut that up, and so to free the Earl, this Course was consented upon.

These Things, though out of Charity I entertained not as absolutely true, yet the Concurrence of them from so many, made me that I could not condemn them. Besides, now grew the Rumour strong, that a new Husband was readily provided for her: Whereof I called to Mind the Opinion of Sir Henry Nevile, delivered to me at Windfor; and I did not forget a Speech of Overbury's, once to me in that Kind. I understood, that at Christmas last, there was a Reconciliation wrought between the Earl and his Lady, howsoever it fell out. Yea, that when the Lords met at Whitehall about the Manner of Separation, there was three Times that Day a Likelihood to make them Friends; which we thought implied no Disability of my Lord of Essex, even in their own Opinion. I farther understood, that whereas it was whispered among us, the Commissioners, That at Christmas last, my Lord of Essex being in Bed with his Lady, should labour a Quarter of an Hour carnally to know her, and in the End should say, Frankey, it will not be, and so kissed her, and bid her good Night: That this was not true; but that the Earl, the Night before his going from London, at the End of Trinity Term, said, with Tears in his Eyes, That when he went to Bed to her at Christmas last, he had forgiven all Things as clearly as he wished that God should forgive him his Sins; but when they were alone, she reviled him, and miscalled him, terming him Cow, and Coward, and Beast: And he added, That she was as bitter a Woman as any was in the World: Which Things so cooled his Courage, that he was far from knowing, or endeavouring to know her. These Matters, together with the small Joy which the Commissioners had to deal in the Business, made me have no great Fancy unto it. On the other Side, I heard that my Lord Chamberlain, or his Followers, gave out, that what was done, was performed by the King's Direction, otherwise it had not been begun; and therefore, they expected that his Majesty should see it effected; that they rested themselves on him. I was much grieved that they had this Advantage on my Master, who being so engaged, as I thought, could not well go backward or forward: And, to increase my Sorrow, I was privately advertised from Court, that his Majesty did mean himself to give an Answer to my Reasons above-mentioned. I heard another Way, that his Majesty in the Progress wrote much with his own Hands. From another Friend I was told, That the King, with his Answer to the Reasons, had written to me a sharp Letter. Yea, by another I learned the Contents of the Letter, which was full of Sharpness.

These Things in the Summer kept me full of Expectation of some great Discontentment. Yet my Heart still assured me, that I was guilty of no Wickedness. I found all Persons with whom I spake, of my Mind, for the Dislike of the Nullity. In many Businesses to and from the King by Letters, I found nothing but well. His Majesty sent me Warrants for three Bucks; as formerly he had done, and with some Kindness joined.

Thus I was tossed in my Thoughts; and in all my Troubles, I had Recourse to God in Prayer.

By this Time, the 18th of September draweth nigh, and I am informed, That my Lord of Winchester, the Tuesday before, was come to Town; and that besides my Lady's Council, Sir Julius Caesar, and Sir Daniel Dun, did, at St. Mary Overy's House, daily attend his Lordship. I expected no great Good of this; only from the King I heard nothing but well. For some few Days before, his Majesty had been at Whitehall, where I kissed his Hand, and he did not only look merrily upon me, but he gave me Promise of the Bishoprick of Lincoln, for my Brother, as I understood it. Some other Matters also passed quietly in Speech, and I found no Disturbance. But on the 17th of September, the Day before our new Meeting at Lambeth, my Lord of Litchfield being sent from the King, bringeth divers Papers unto me sealed up. I opened them, and found there my Reasons first; secondly, an Answer to them*; and, thirdly, a Letter, all written with the King's Hand unto me. I read them all presently, without any Abatement, whereunto I was helped by my Fore-knowledge, that such Things would come. I said little unto it; only I asked my Lord of Litchfield, Whether he knew what those Papers contained? He told me; That the King had read unto him the Answers to the Reasons, and had given him the Letter to seal up in a Paper; but in Reverence to his Majesty, he held it not his Duty to look into it. Growing afterward in some Speech of our next Day's Business, I told him plainly, That having spent much Time in this Vacation, in perusing the Books, I could not find any where, but especially in the Answer of my Lord of Essex, that which would give me Contentment. I read the Places, and my Lord confessed with me, That there was not enough. He told me also, That unless I gave my Consent to the Separation, that he would never give his: So much Reverence in him did I find both then, and divers Times before, against this Divorcement. At last he mentioned one Thing which pleased me wondrous well, and that was, That we should call for my Lord of Essex again, and new examine him, upon some Points to be farther declared, ad informandum animum Judicis. For hence, either we should know so much as might persuade us to decree a Separation, or the World might be satisfied that we had no Reason for it. These Things thus settled, his Lordship separateth. Then I withdrew myself to my Study, and read over again and again the Papers from the King. I found them very sharp, and perceived by the Time that they arrived unto me, that they were detained till that Day, that I might be overwhelmed with them on the sudden, and have no Time to deliberate, before we were to come the second Time to sit in Judgment. These Things did much trouble me, so that I did sleep but a little that Night. I revolved many Things, and much tumbling I had in my Mind. It grieved me infinitely, that the King should make himself a Party therein; that some Unthankfulness, and other Matters, were little less than Reproaches unto me: Methought, my faithful Heart to my Master deserved no such Sharpness. I devised how I might give the King Contentment, and it was some Comfort to me, that we thought upon a Course of new examining my Lord of Essex. But as Things stood, I could not force my Conscience, which cried upon me, That it was an odious Thing to GOD and Men, to give such a Sentence, without better Warrant. I here cast what might befall to the Church in my Disgrace; how Papists would scorn at it; how it might be my own Ruin, and that divers Ways; a Hazard to my Friends, and to the Commissioners which were of my Mind; how my Lord of London had a Wife and Children, which might all be overthrown at one Blow. But after Midnight sleeping, towards the Morning, I considered on the other Side, That my Conscience was more unto me than all the World; that it was a fearful Thing, in Place of Judgment, to give a Sentence against mine own Heart; that Olivarius, the Chancellor of France, upon such an Occasion, grew mad, and died in it; that the Manner of our Sentence must be, Solum Deum præ oculis habentes, à rei veritate inspecta: All which, and the like Meditations, did much preponderate with me. Then I slept again, and now rising, I found my Heart much settled, to persist in that which I held to be Truth. I poured out earnestly my Prayers to God, and was now strongly resolved to leave all to God, remembering, That he had preserved me from my Mother's Womb; that he had from Time to Time rid me out of all my Troubles; that his Power was the same still; that he would never forsake me, if I turned not from him. I forgot not, That the Hearts of Kings were in the Hand of the Lord; that I had Experience of the Graciffulness, both of GOD and the King, the Year before; when standing earnestly in a good Cause, that Prince Henry should not marry a Papist, I received some sharp Words from the King for my Labour; but the next Day his Majesty used me very kindly again. To this I added, That Poverty, Imprisonment, Death itself, were Things contemptible to a resolved Mind: That some of my Predecessors, as Archbishop Cranmer, and my Lord Grindal, had given good Examples of these Sufferings, and they were recorded in the Catalogue of the Righteous. These Thoughts thus revolved, I read again the Letter from the King, and drawing out into a Paper all the sharp Words, I considered them again and again, and methought they were not altogether so bitter as I apprehended them; that they were wrung from his Majesty by my Lord Chamberlain's Importunity; that my Master had deserved at my Hands, that I should bear patiently twenty times more; and that all was nothing, so the Clearness of my Conscience might be preserved. With these Resolutions on the Saturday I came to Lambeth, where I met with the News of Overbury's Death, and the Sound of some fearful Apprehensions thereupon bruited about the City. I made Trial of my Lord of London's Constancy, telling him, aut cedendum, aut cadendum. I found him most resolved, avowing unto me, That if he should pronounce for the Dissolution of the Marriage, he thought the Devil would that Night fetch away his Soul. Yea, he was earnest on me to persist where I began, telling me, That the Eyes of the whole Church of England were upon me, and expected of me, that I should shew myself a worthy Man. At last we came to sit, where my Lords of Winchester and Rochester took their Places. The Commission was read, the Fact, and Manner of the Process was opened, and nothing notable done, saving that my Lord of London proposing, that it was fit that my Lord of Essex should be called to explain himself farther, for the fishing out of the Truth, all the Commissioners most willingly assented thereunto, (yea, my Lords of Winchester and Rochester expressly,) saving Sir Julius Caesar, who softly declared his Dislike thereof, in my Hearing. When the Court was risen, I spake with my Lord of Litchfield, and not thinking fit to return any thing to the King in Writing, I prayed him to acquaint his Majesty how Things stood; and to tell him, that upon this Course of new calling my Lord of Essex, I hoped in the End, we should give his Majesty Satisfaction. The Sunday I spent at Croydon, and preached on that Text of Christ's raising the Widow's Son of Naim, to the great Comfort of mine own Heart. That Day I conferred with a Friend, and settled some Courses, if any Trouble should befall unto me. I was also by a good Friend informed, that my Lord of Essex, on that Sunday Morning, having five or six Captains and Gentlemen of Worth in his Chamber, and Speech being made of his Inability, rose out of his Bed, and taking up his Shirt, Shirt, did shew to them all so able and extraordinarily sufficient Matter, that they all cried out Shame of his Lady, and said, That if the Ladies of the Court knew as much as they knew, they would tread her to Death.

* See State Trials, Vol. 1. p. 319, 321. for the Archbishop's Reasons, and the King's Answer to them: But the King's Letter to the Archbishop is there omitted; but here inserted, after the Archbishop's intended Speech, at the End of this Case.

On the Monday we met at Lambeth again, and Information was given on the Part of my Lady. These Things passed quietly. When the Court was risen, my Lord of Litchfield told me, That he had made his Majesty acquainted with our Proposition on Saturday; but that his Majesty was strongly against it, my Lord of Essex should any more be called, and that by no means he would endure it, for that peradventure the said Earl, either being provoked by the late Challenge between him and Mr. Henry Howard, or otherwise instigated by the Earl of Southampton, might speak somewhat which might marr the Business. This made me still suspect that all was not right, and I replied to my Lord, If that be denied us, and we have no farther Proof, I shall never give Sentence for the Nullity: As good declare my Mind at first, as at last, and I pray you so acquaint his Majesty. When I went homeward, I much revolved this in my Heart, thinking, Good Lord! What a Case is this? Shall any Truth be kept from us? Are they afraid to have all out? Do they only look to attain their own Ends, and care not how our Consciences be intangled and ensnared? On the Wednesday we met again, and now Dr. James is come to us, and by and by cometh in my Lord of Ely, who, as it seemed, had meant to have kept him away, but the King sent an express Messenger for him, requiring him, by a Letter, to be there on the Tuesday Night. Now are we plena Curia. Before we sat down, Sir Thomas Lake delivereth a Message unto me from the King, That his Majesty desired a speedy End of this Business; that it had hung long, and the World was in Expectation of it; that the Term grew on, which would be full of Businesses: That his Majesty on Monday was to go to Windsor to meet the Queen, and my Lord Chamberlain with him; that therefore he would have us to fall close to our Work, not to trouble ourselves on the Morrow to come see the King, who would come late to Whitehall, because some Ceremonies were to be performed, as upon the last Day of hunting; that we should not attend his Majesty till Friday, but that the Sentence must be given on Saturday. My Answer was publicly, That there should be no Stay in me, and that therefore on the Morrow we would sit Forenoon and Afternoon, if the Commissioners so pleased; and if they thought good, I would not refuse to sit until Midnight. But in mine own Heart I perceived, that all the Care was, that the Matter might be dispatched before the Queen spake with the King, whom they supposed not to wish well to the Business. We go to our Court, and Sir Thomas Lake stayed to hear the Information on my Lord's Part. It was strange, to see how my Lord of Winchester carried himself that Day, partly to play his Prizes before Sir Thomas Lake, who might make Report of it to his Fame, and partly to shew his Ludimagisterial Disposition. He snapped up my Lord's Council, that they could not speak a Word, but he caught it before it was out. I know what you will say, when indeed he knew not, neither was it any such Matter as he imagined. God Almighty will tell you a Tale for that; I tell you, Doctor Bennet, I have as much Law as you, I am as good a Lawyer as you are. He fell divers Times on my Lord of London personally, and would needs know of him openly, How many Times in a Year a Man was bound carnally to know his Wife. In a Word, with Scoffs, and imperious Behaviour, he played the Advocate all that Day, to the great Offence of the Standers by, so that it was publicly spoke of in London, which, I think, came to his Ears; so that ever afterward he carried himself more tractable. I was forced to bear it, because of avoiding new Complaints.

The Point most observable that Day, was, that both my Lord of Winchester, and my Lord of Ely, did deny Maleficiation, so that by no means they would have this Question to proceed in that Nature, which I openly did thank them for, and bound it upon them, before all the Commissioners and Standers by, telling them, That the same was my Opinion. But I asked my Lord of Winchester, who sat by me, What he then held it to be? He told me privately, That he held it to be a natural Impotency, which was before the Marriage. I asked him, What that might be, and whence he gathered it? He answered, I have heard divers Particulars, which are enough to persuade me if they be true. Yea, my Lord, said I, if they be true, I have heard as many to the contrary. I wish that we might examine whether they be true or no; that were fair Proceeding. It is my Grief, that it is not permitted unto us, to try whether all these Matters be so or not. This might satisfy a Man's Conscience. So we parted that Night.

On the Thursday, at Ten of the Clock, we met in Lambeth-Hall, where my Lady's Council took on them to answer some Scruples objected by Dr. Ferrand. But Dr. Martin, when no body spake of it, fell to wipe away that Objection, that my Lord had not sworn, cum septima manu. Upon his Speech, the Commissioners took hold of it, and it then being urged strongly, my Lady's Council stood at first, as if they had been blasted with Lightning. Afterward they grew extreme angry with Dr. Martin, that he had proposed it; but the Issue was, there could no Answer be given unto it; but in the Sight of all the Standers by, this was broke off with Shame and Confusion of Faces. We dined not that Day, but about One or Two of the Clock we withdrew ourselves privately into the Parlour. I had thought there to have had Dr. Edwards, and the rest who liked not of the Nullity, to propound their Doubts, and so in Order; and last of all, I would have spoken. But there I found a contrary Course resolved, which my Lord of Winchester seemed much to dislike. But my Lord of Litchfield, Sir Julius Caesar, and Sir Daniel Dun, had set the Clock, and they must have their Will. The six Reasons are produced, which Sir John Bennet had delivered the Day after we came from Windsor, and the Copy whereof was by me sent to the King. All these must in their Order be debated. One was about the Unperfectness of the Libel, in which we all received Satisfaction, that the Libel was well to so much Purpose as now they declared they would have it. The other five, my Lord of London, Sir John Bennet, Dr. James, and Dr. Edwards, maintained: I allowed of three of them absolutely; and the other two, that was Inspection of my Lord's Body, and a Time to be assigned by the Judge, to try whether they might carnally know one another, I held to be fit, when those Reasons were proposed; but now such Flames and Quarrels Quarrels were arisen, I thought not amiss now to be forborne. My Lord of Litchfield, with a Pen, did note what every Man resolved, but principally my Words, with a Purpose to shew them to the King, as I conceived, and afterwards I found it to be so. I was desirous therefore, that his Majesty might see I was not obstinate, but settled to yield to Reason. And again, I supposed that this Candor of mine would make some of them yield to us, where they saw there was unevitable Truth. But I found it far otherwise; for our Afternoon's Work was, that they gave shuffling and shifting Answers to the Objections, such as themselves had studied all the Vacation; but no Care was, whether they were true and satisfactory, or not. And to what Sir Daniel proposed, all seven of them consented, without Sticking or Scruple, so that I might imagine it was a set Play. Upon the first Scruple debating, Sir Julius Caesar finding the Difference of Opinions, and that our Lawyers stuck strongly unto it, Let us, saith he, put it to the Question, and let the major Part of Voices determine it. When I saw this to be the Proceeding, the Lord, thought I, deliver me from such Judges! But yet observing their Manner, I possessed my Soul in Patience. When it grew to be dark, that the King might understand that I was willing to allow Time to all that might be said, I remembered Sir John Bennet to read the Sentence of the Rota Romana, where, in the Pope's own Consistory, about the Year 1585, a Judgment was reversed, which an Archbishop in Spain had given for a Nullity, in a Case being ours altogether, because, after the triennial Cohabitation, he had not assigned a Time for the married Couple to make Trial again, and to use Fasting and Prayer. This Repeal was read at large, and so was another of the Rota, in the same Kind. But both these were slighted, as Matters of nothing, and so I think had St. Paul been, if he had been there. I urged that of Alexander III. That even in France itself, no Nullity had been allowed; but that it was Consuetudo generalis Ecclesie Gallicanæ; and that Ecclesia Romana did know or practise no such Thing. This was slighted like the former, and I perceived it was but in vain to speak to them, for they were resolved, and be it good, or be it bad, the Matter should be done.

On the Friday Morning I went to Whitehall, and looking somewhat heavily, the King cometh to me, and to my Lord Chancellor, and offereth us both his Hand to kiss. He might perceive by my Countenance that I was not a little troubled, and that was perceived by divers of the Lords, who privately let me know their Minds, that we had a foul and strange Matter in Hand at Lambeth. At last, the King takes me aside, and after propounding three or four Businesses, walking, he took me to the Window, and asked me, How that great Cause did go forward? I told his Majesty, That I had no Liking of it; that I had received a Letter and Writing from him which very much troubled me, for I knew myself to be his dutiful Servant, and had not deserved ill of him; that it was nothing to me whether she remained Wife to the Earl of Essex, or were married to another Man; but that I might not give Sentence where I saw no Proof; that I had lived fifty-one Years, almost, and had my Conscience uncorrupted in Judgment; that I knew not how soon I was to be called before God, and I was loath, against that

*Time, to give a Wound to mine own Soul; that all my Grief was, that his Majesty's Hand was in it; that for other Men I cared not; that I chose rather to die an honest Man than a wise Man; that he must never afterward expect true Service of me, for how could I be true to him, who was false unto God? That if he marked it well, this was no Time to disgrace his good Servants: I told him, That if his Majesty pleased to let the Matter alone, as he did all other Causes, I would make good my Part against all England, on the Peril of my Head. The King answered, That I would have no Lawyers. I replied, Yes, enough, there is not an honest Lawyer in England that would not be on my Side. His Majesty asked me, Whether the rest of the Commissioners, Yesterday, did not persuade me. I told him, No; but their Dealing rather drove me the contrary Way. For (said I) I came thither ingeniously to yield to any Truth that should be shewed me; but they, on the contrary Part, in a factious Course went wholly together, and what one said, another said, be it well, or be it ill, without any Scruple. To my Speech, That it was an Example that never had been in England; the King said, Yes, Bury's Case. I beseeched his Majesty, That he would not believe that Cause to be any such Matter; for if he would pardon me, it should not be long before that I would shew, that his Separation was for lack of his S—s. In this debating, the King was very desirous to know, what should be the Reasons whereupon I stood, that I might have Satisfaction. My Answer was, That when I was in Place of Judgment, I would not conceal the Reasons of my Sentence, but it was to no Purpose to speak them now; it would but put his Majesty to a new Trouble to hear them, and then some Man must answer them, who looked to his own End, and to make a plausible Answer, which would not content me, without Ground of Truth. A great Part of the Time, that I had this Speech with the King, my Eyes were full of Tears, which I saw much moved my gracious Master, and especially my earnest Desire, That I might do my Conscience. I perceived the King was much overcome by this my honest Dealing: And then, whilst his Majesty went to speak with my Lord Privy-Seal, and my Lord Chamberlain, who stood all this while at the farther End of the Gallery; and to whom, I conceived, the King told much of that which I had spoken; I went my ways to Lambeth, to Dinner. Now grew I confident to do my Conscience right, whatsoever came of it. That Day I dined privately; but yet my Lord Bishop of Bath was with me, whom when I had acquainted with so much of the Cause as I thought fit, I received no Discouragement from him. My Heart was much ealed, and now I thought I should no more be troubled. Yet between Three and Four o'Clock, after Dinner, my Lord of Litchfield cometh to me from the King, and bringeth a written Treatise upon the present Argument, which was the Work of a Scotchman, I know not who. I received it, and promised that Night to read it; as indeed I did, riding in my Coach to Croydon; for thither I thought fit to withdraw myself, though it were late, for avoiding of more Perturbation. This Treatise no way pleased me, but I thought it the Work of some hungry Fellow, who lacked twenty Shillings to buy Food to his Belly. Here, finding it the Day of the End of my Quarter, I settled much of my domestick Business. I forgot not to commend myself, and the whole Cause, to God*

God by Prayer. I meditated many Things in my Bed: In the Morning I rose early, and before Day, in my Study, I set down some Heads, what I would speak unto. Then went I early to Lambeth, and there supplied my brief Notes, digesting my Matter of Sentence into Order; being resolved to speak large, and Home to the Cause, without Touch of any Person more than I must needs. By this Time most of the Commissioners were come. I sent for my Lord of London, Sir John Bennet, Dr. James, and Dr. Edwards, singly and severally into my Study: I required them, before God, not to speak any thing for Respect to me, but to do that, which in their Learning and Conscience they thought to be just, and to speak that intrepid, without Blemish to any Man, but soundly to the Matter. I found them all avowing, That in their Souls, they found no Warrant for the Nullity. I then wished severally, Dr. James, and Dr. Edwards, to deliver their Sentence, with some Reasons adjoined, not many, but of the strongest. I told Sir John Bennet, that this Day I expected he should shew himself a worthy Man, that he should deliver his Judgment per extensum; that they had laboured to blemish his Skill, and to slight his Learning especially; therefore, both for his Conscience and his Credit, he should shew what was in him, to maintain an honest Cause. If Sir Daniel Dun, and Sir Julius Caesar, who came after him, should bespatter him in their Choler, or lay any Imputation upon him, he should find that some of us would take it off him. To my Lord of London, I said, We have three that speak first, who, I trust, will lay such a Foundation in the Hearts of the Hearers, as shall not be removed. But the other Side have this Advantage over us, they are seven of them, Lawyers and Bishops, to answer what our three have said; and perhaps with weak Men, such a Stream of such Persons may much prevail: But let not that dismay you, my Lord, only take this Course: Deliver, first, your own Meditations; and then, having taken with your Pen some of the Absurdities, which, in the Sentence, some of them will deliver, blast those; and let the Auditors see, that by you the Stream is turned. Then leave it to me, and I doubt not, in Almighty God; but to batter their Nullity to Dust: That though they have it by the major Part of Voices, yet, the World shall see what the Cause is, and they shall have little Comfort by it. I am very well provided; I am no way afraid; and you shall see, I will not be Tonguetied. So confident was I in the Honesty of the Cause, and in the Helps of Almighty God, that I was not now afraid of ten thousands of People; but did long to be at the Business, as the Lord truly knoweth.

When now I was alone, revolving my Meditations, Sir Julius Caesar cometh into my Study to me, telleth me, That he wondered that my Lord of Winchester was not come; that it was even Ten o'Clock; that therefore it was fit, that the Hour should be continued from Ten to Twelve. I assented thereto; and by some of the Commissioners the Time was prorogued. Then cometh in Sir Thomas Lake, with a Message from the King, which he must not deliver till all the Commissioners were come together. So he was forced to stay. Between Ten and Eleven cometh in my Lord of Winchester; who, as afterwards found, had been all the Morning at the Court. I told him, We had stayed for him two Hours and a half. His Lordship slightly excused it. Then, in the Gallery, Sir Thomas Lake told us, That his Majesty had sent him unto us, to deliver two Things. The one was, That in our Sentence we should take heed of gauling of any Person. My Answer was, That from the Beginning of this Process, we had ever been wary not to offend in that Kind; and that he should be much to blame, who, in the Conclusion, would transgress that Way. And so said the rest. The other was, That we should not in any long Manner, but compendiously, deliver what we had to say. I prayed Sir Thomas Lake to explain that farther, whether we were only to say Yea or No; and no more: For I would obey the King's Commandment.

Tu Regina jube, mihi jussa capessere fas est.

He answered, *That he could not say so, but that we were to speak briefly. Yea, but said Sir Julius Caesar, I know the King's Mind; for I was Yesterday with him, and he told me, that he expected that we should go no farther than Yea, or Nay, for of Reasons there would be no End. Yea, saith he, the King told me he was promised so much. By whom? said I. I think, quoth he, by your Grace. Not so, said I: But I said, indeed, Let every Man deliver his own Conscience, I will not perturb the Sentence. No more indeed will I. Then he replieth, I know the King expecteth we should say no more, than I do like this Sentence, or, I do not like it. And that you know, Sir Daniel Dun, is the Manner of the Delegates, and not to go farther. It is so, saith Sir Daniel. Upon this, the Bishops all said, We were best to proceed in that Fashion. To which I replied, I will not be wilful, but if it be agreed upon, and it be the King's Pleasure, I will obey. But look you to it; for if any Man give a Reason, I am no more bound than he, but that I will return the Reason of my Opinion and Judgment. They all said, they would be observant of it: Thus Sir Thomas Lake was dismissed. Then we called for the Sentences on both Sides, which the Council had ready. They disliked that which was Absolutory of the Earl of Essex; and we approved it. We found Fault with the other Sentence; AnnulATORY, both for the whole; and because some Parts in it, in our Judgment, were apparently false. But they persisted in their Intention: So we went into the Hall, where myself, my Lord of London, Sir John Bennet, Dr. James, and Dr. Edwards, freed my Lord of Essex. The Bishops of Winton, Ely, Litchfield, and Rochester, together with the two Chancellors, and Sir Daniel Dun, pronounced for the Nullity, and subscribed the Sentence, my Lord of Winton pronouncing it. We perceived that they were afraid we should at large speak our Reasons openly, being the last who were to speak.*

The three Bishops of Winton, Ely, and Litchfield, went immediately to the Court, hoping to receive great Thanks for their Service, but they waited a full Hour, e'er they could speak with the King; however they sped afterward. And we were glad that we were freed of the Trouble. And now, I, who would not have given the Sentence for all the Gold in India, do expect God's Pleasure, what will become of this Business hereafter, and submit myself to God's Providence; who ever preserveth those that trust in him.

THIS Narration is wholly written with mine own Hand, and was finished the second of October, 1613, being the eighth Day after the giving of the Sentence. And I protest before Almighty God,

God, that I have not willingly written any Untruth therein: But have delivered all Things fairly, to the best of my Understanding; helping myself with such Memorials and Notes as I took from Time to Time, that if there were Occasion, I might thus at large set down the Truth to Posterity, when this Case shall be rung from Rome Gates, or the Fact hereafter be questioned.

GEORGE Canterbury.

Some observable Things, since September 25, 1613, when the Sentence was given in the Cause of the Earl of ESSEX, continued unto the Day of the Marriage, December 26, 1613.

THE Sentence being given for the Nullity, the Minds of Men in their several Places were wonderfully distracted, and every one spake according to their Fancies. But for the most Part there was a Detestation of the Thing, and a great Dislike of those that gave the Sentence, which was expressed by all Courses that Men durst adventure upon. On the other Side; there was a strange Applauding and Commending of those who withstood the Separation; and from all Parts a Testimony came unto them, that they had done like honest Men, albeit the only Scope which they aimed at, was the Discharge of their Conscience, and not vain popular Applause. The Archbishop, the Day after the Sentence, went to the Court, to Whitehall, and waited on the King to Chapel, standing also by him in the Closet, where he was strangely looked on by the King, as he was also by some of the Lords; but nothing being said unto him, he took no Notice of it, but bore all patiently. This Strangeness of the King held on at Hampton-Court, and elsewhere; and it came to the Archbishop's Ear, that the King spake divers Times hardly of him, but much magnified them of the Affirmative Part, and especially my Lord of Winchester, as the worthiest Man in the Kingdom. Some Things were done also in Recompence to divers of them; as Sir Julius Caesar's Son was made a Knight, my Lord of Winton's Son also had the same Reward, which some merry Fellow blighted with the Name of Sir Nullity Bilson; and the Bishop of Litchfield must remove to Lincoln; and as for Litchfield, it must be bestowed on Mr. Dean of St. Paul's, that so Doctor Cary might be preferred to the Deanery of Paul's, for which it was generally supposed he should pay well. But now it run current, that the Archbishop must no more have to do with naming any to Church-Livings, but some Lords in Court should dispose of all; and principally it must be provided, that Dr. Abbot must never be preferred, no, not so much as to Litchfield, so far was he from Lincoln, which was formerly promised unto him. These Things grew detestable to the People, who feared that even Religion would smart for it; but the Parties most maligned were silent and patient, expecting God's Leisure, and Malice enough from some other Men. The first Thing of Bitterness that appeared, was a Letter from Royson, under the King's Hand and Signet, directed to the Commissioners in the former Sentence, but brought to the Archbishop about three Weeks after the Sentence. This was a most sharp Letter, complaining that they of the Negative Part, for so they were stiled, had hindered the Act to be made upon the Sentence; had solemnly protested against that which was done; had given unto themselves other Titles than were in the King's Commission; had glorified themselves in that which was done; by which they laid an Imputation upon the King's Conscience, who had declared himself for the Divorce; and other Things of the like Nature. This Letter being read to the Commissioners, the Archbishop said; That he knew not what it meant; for he understood of no Man that protested; nor knew nothing of any Man's arrogating of Titles to him; or glorifying himself: And as for the Act, he supposed it to be made up in common Form, and never heard ought to the contrary, neither meddled with any thing therein, but left it to the Register, and what he had done with it, he could not tell. Furthermore, he asked all the Commissioners particularly; if they knew what this meant; or if any of them were able to charge those of the Negative; with the Points quarrelled at; who all, with one Consent, denied that they could; and expressly averred, that there was no such Thing done at the Time of the Sentence, as had been complained upon. When standing thus in Admiration, Sir Daniel Dun took upon him to understand the Matter, and said, that if the Register were called, it would appear there was something in it. Barker, the Register, is sent for, and being demanded whether he had made up the Act, he said, that he had drawn it up in a Form that he liked; but some other of the Commissioners did dislike it. And thereupon he shewed two Forms, the one more large, the other more brief; but both of them having in it, that the Archbishop, and the rest of the Negative Party, protested against the Sentence. Here every Man wondered at him, out of what Ground he should do this; and all the Commissioners, with one Consent, very much rebuked him, professing that there was no such Protestation used. For the rest of the Charge in the King's Letter, Barker freed all in all Things, save only Dr. Edwards, who was absent by reason of his sore Eyes. The Archbishop, upon this, desired the Commissioners to suspend their Judgment touching Dr. Edwards, till he might answer for himself; saying, that Honour, Justice, and Charity, required so much in his Behalf; and adding withal, that he doubted not but it would prove some mistaking of the Register's Part, to whom it was apparent that small Credit was to be given, since he had so grossly set down of them, that they protested, when all the Commissioners could witness the contrary. Moreover, he desired Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer, and Sir Daniel Dun, to certify the Lord Chamberlain, how free and innocent from those Aspersions the rest were found, and that from Top to Toe it was nothing but Misprision. Before this Truth was discovered, it was known that a Gentleman of the Earl of Northampton's had said to Sir John Levison, and that, as from his Lordship, That there was something descried, which would break the Archbishop's Back: Such Account was made of this Business.

Thus Things passed silently until the next Week, when upon the Thursday, being High Commission Day, Dr. Edwards being amended, repaired to Lambeth. His Coming was watched; and then was delivered to the Archbishop a second Letter from the King, commending the Con-rence

rence of all to the Act, to be made up in common Form; but requiring the Commissioners to convene Dr. Edwards and the Register before them, and to charge them with all the fore-remembered Matters, and to learn where the Fault did lie. It was also commanded, that they should require the said Doctor and Register, to set down in Writing what had passed between them; and if it were found that Dr. Edwards were to blame, he should be suspended till the King's Pleasure were farther known.

These Things are fallen upon; and Dr. Edwards shewed that the Register had wronged him, and that no Part of the Accusation was true, in modo et forma, appealing to the Commissioners, what Faith might be given to Barker contesting against him; when it had been manifestly proved, that he had forged the Matter of Protestation against my Lord of Canterbury, my Lord of London, and the rest. Time is assigned to them to deliver in their Writings; and accordingly, about two Days after, Dr. Edwards bringeth to the Archbishop his Answer, denying the Points whereon he was accused. But Barker brought nothing till a Fortnight after; and then, by Candle-light, when the High Commission was risen, and the Commissioners were departed, he delivereth a long Writing to the Archbishop, who could not read it that Night; but reproved him for detaining it so long.

On the Morrow, my Lord of Canterbury perused this Declaration; and as he found it to be uncertainly and diffidently set down for some other Circumstances, so he discovered there one Thing much to be observed, and that was, that Barker delivered; That some few Days after the Sentence, the Lord Chamberlain sent for him, finding Fault that the Act was not made up. And there Speech was; That some desired to have their Titles put in, as well as the Titles of others; and for that, Barker named Sir John Bennet. Whereunto the Lord Chamberlain said, I know no Title that he hath: Yes, said Barker, he is Judge of the Prerogative Court of Canterbury. But Barker concludeth the Narration; That himself finding that he had named Sir John Bennet unjustly, therefore was in Mind to excuse him; and was about to say, that he had done him Wrong; but the Lord Chamberlain was so angry, that he could not bring it forth; but went his Way, leaving the Lord in that Opinion.

By this it was descried, that in the first Letter Sir John Bennet was aimed at, as well as Dr. Edwards, to put some Disgrace upon him; which made Men wondrously marvel at the vindicative Mind of some Men, who sought for an Occasion to do other Men Disgrace. The End of the Matter was, That no Man could be touched; and therefore the Archbishop, taking Sir Julius Caesar with him, acquainted the King (who was now returned from Royston) with the State of the whole Matter; informing his Majesty, that Fault fell on no Man save the Register; and therefore, if his Highness were pleased to have him punished, it might be so: But for the Thing itself, since the Report was more than there was Cause, Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer said, It was better to let it die, and stir in it no farther. To this the King assented, being not willing that any Punishment should be laid on the Register; whereby it appeared, that the Intendment was, in the stirring of these Coals, to have burnt some greater Persons than Barker, the Register.

All this while it was confidently given out, That because the Sentence had been opposed; there should a Book be written in the Defence of it; and one while it should be by a Divine, and that sometimes was my Lord of Winton, and sometimes my Lord of Ely; and it was said; they were earnestly about it: Another while, it should be by a Civilian, and then Sir Daniel Dun must do it: But at other Times it must be by a Scotchman, who had written somewhat of that Argument before the Sentence; and other while two Scotchmen must join together about it: And to make the Thing the more probable, the Lord Felton sent to the Archbishop for the Copy of the Scotchman's Writing, which was sent unto him; and after copying of it out, it was returned to my Lord of Canterbury again. This Speech of a Book continued about nine Weeks in all; but at last Dr. Stuart, and Dr. Bird, were sent for to the Lord Chamberlain, and their Judgment was asked concerning that Point. Their Advice was; That it should by no means be meddled withal; but that Things should die of themselves: But no Questioning by Writing; for so it might go on to the World's End: For one Book might breed another; and so, they whom it concerned should never be in rest. This was resolved on; and afterwards there was no more Speech of Writing, saving only faintly and whisperingly; but nothing to the Purpose. It seemed that the Commissioners who were for the Nullity had enough of it, and desired no more to bring themselves on the Stage, being so by all Men exclaimed upon for that which they had done.

The Bishop of Winton, after the Sentence; went down with great Jollity, full of Hope and Glory; but within a while after, he grew much daunted, as some about him, and namely his own Daughter, reported; for he heard many Ways of the strange Detestation which the World had of the Deed; and the Nick-naming of his Son much affected him: But his Advertisements from Sir Richard Norton, his Son-in-Law; did much trouble him: For Sir Richard wrote divers Times from London to his Wife; That he could come in no Place; but his Father-in-Law was railed upon: That Men told him, that he thought he had a Wife, but it was no longer than my Lord of Winton pleased; for whensoever he offended him, he could make a Nullity between them. Besides, the said Sir Richard told Mr. John More of Lincoln's-Inn, divers Times, That it was such a Disgrace unto him to hear how the World talked of that Sentence, that although my Lord of Winton promised to give him, his Wife, and Family, their Diet and Entertainment so long as he lived, yet he would get him to his own House, and live there, where he had Means sufficient, and not be subject to that perpetual Scorn, which would follow him so long as he remained in his Father-in-Law's Company.

By these, and the like Passages, it was guessed; that the rest of the Commissioners, who were for the Sentence, had little Comfort in themselves of that which they had done. On the other Part, the Archbishop, and those who stood with him, had their Honesty and Justice sounded out every Day more and more; and many Messages were brought them, and divers Letters written written unto them, or shewed them by some Friends, from sundry of the Bishops in the Land, from the Universities, from many godly Preachers out of all Parts, which was an exceeding Consolation unto them, among the many Frowns which they did bear, That there was an universal Concurrence of all honest Men to approve that which which they had done. And the Archbishop had privately, from many great ones in Court, and Nobles, and worthy Personages elsewhere, such Significations of their good Acceptance which he did, that it cheered him much inwardly, and he was nothing dismayed.

Now, about the middle of November, the Wheel was turned about: For since nothing could be gained by speaking hardly of the Negative Part, they thought they would make Use of them another Way, and that should be by making the World believe, that they had now given Approbation of the Fact. And thereupon it was, in Court and London, assseverantly given out, and the Fame of it went far and near, That the Archbishop, and the rest, after more mature Deliberation, had testified their Concurrence with the rest of the Commissioners, and all now were of one Mind. Men did not hastily believe this; but yet divers of good Rank came and sent to the Archbishop and the rest, to know whether those Things were so or no. And when it was found to be but a Jargon, it gave a great deal of Contentment, and removed away much Scandal which formerly was taken. Yet again afterward it was bruited, the second Time, That my Lord of Canterbury had given the King Satisfaction in the Matter; and my Lord of London, on such a Sunday, had come and submitted himself to my Lord Chamberlain, and the rest had relented. Nay, it went so far, that Yelverton, the King's Solicitor, and a great Dependent upon the House of Suffolk, told Mr. Pye, the Counsellor, and Mr. Cholmeley, the Earl of Essex's Solicitor, coming unto him about Books to be drawn up, for passing back the Jointure of the Lady Frances's Part, and the Portion of the Earl of Essex's Part, That the gainsaying Commissioners were now consenting, and the great Man beyond the Water was come over; which he knew so assuredly, that he had seen it ratified by the Subscription of the Archbishop and the rest. Yea, farther, he added, that there was great Reason, at the first, wherefore my Lord of Canterbury, and the others, should stand against the Separation; for they had just Cause, at the first, to fear that this Fact might be drawn into Example, and so Marriages ordinarily be violated; but now it was resolved that no more such should be permitted, and thereupon they assented. These Things were enforced to be endured with Silence, for the avoiding of Clamour, and making of Trouble.

But now behold an admirable Device of the Bishop of Litchfield, which sheweth what his own Opinion was of the Validity of the Sentence. I will set it down as it came to be acted.

On the 26th of November, Searle the Proctor cometh to my Lord of Canterbury at Lambeth, and bringeth with him a Writ of Certiorari out of the Chancery, directed to the Commissioners in the Cause between the Lady Frances and the Earl of Essex. The Archbishop was prayed to open it, and so he did, and there found that four of them, sub sigillis vestris, were required to certify Recordum Sententie into the Chancery. The Archbishop asked Searle, If this were an usual Thing? Who answered, No, he had not known any such Thing before: It is replied, What then should be the Reason thereof? Answer was made, That since the Matter was controverted in the Sentence, lest there should be Question of the Marriage afterwards, the Earl of Somerset would have the Sentence lying by him under the Great Seal of England ratified. The Archbishop thought that to be but a weak Hold, yet charged Searle to see such an Instrument drawn, and a Certificate should accordingly be made. On the Wednesday after, Barker, the Register, cometh to Lambeth, and sheweth a Form of a Draught in Paper, how the Certificate should be returned in the Names of all the Commissioners specially put down. The Archbishop, in the reading of it, found five or six Lines having a black Line drawn under them; and thereupon, the more marking the Words contained in them, found that which he liked not. Thereupon he asked Barker, Who lined those Words? Barker said, He himself did. The other asked, What was the Reason of it? And it was answered, Because Sir John Bennet, and some other of the Doctors with him, had disliked that Sentence. Quoth the Archbishop, And they had Reason for it: Who put them first in? Barker said, None but himself. Quoth the Archbishop then, May not the Certificate stand as well without those Words as with them? To which Barker answered, Yes. Then said the Archbishop, Let them be stricken out. Here the Register, with somewhat ado, faintly made Answer, That the Commissioners on the other Side would by no means have them out. The Archbishop said, Then I perceive it is a Device to entangle us: I am ready to certify the Sentence as the Writ requireth, but I will none of this. Barker, I am first in the Commission, and for my Place sake, I would have looked, that I should have been conferred withal, what had been fit to return, and not to have had this Trick put upon me, that either I must certify that which crosseth my Judgment at the Time of giving the Sentence, or I must be forced not to certify at all. So Barker departed, and all was quiet until the Monday after; at which Time the Archbishop was early at Whitehall, the Council sitting that Morning. There, in the Waiting Chamber, at the End of the Privy-Gallery, the Bishop of Litchfield cometh to him, and saith, My Lord, we have received a Writ of Certiorari out of the Chancery, to certify the Sentence for the Nullity. Yea, saith the Archbishop, and I am ready to certify it. But, saith the Bishop, he who framed the Writ hath made it, sub sigillis vestris, and doth not know that there is a Seal of Office for the Delegates; it should have been sub sigillo communi. Before the Archbishop could reply, in cometh the Lord Chancellor, and to him cometh out of the next Chamber the Lord Chamberlain; and then those two Lords, together with the Bishop of Litchfield, drew themselves to a Window, and there had they secret Communication about the altering of the Form of the Writ, as the Effect declared; for that Afternoon, a Cause being to be heard touching Alimony, from Sir Pexal Brocas to his Lady; and the Committees in it being the Bishop of Litchfield, and Mr. Chancellor of the Dutchy, and my Lord of Canterbury being Umpire; before Mr. Chancellor was come, Bembo, Deputy to the Clerk of the Crown, came into the Parlour at Lambeth, and had private Speech with the Bishop of of Litchfield. The Archbishop going out into the Garden, Litchfield followed him, and told him, That Mr. Bembo had brought another Form of a Writ; and thereupon shewed him the Words sub communi sigillo. The Archbishop bid him do as he thought good, and withdrew himself into the low Stone Gallery, whither Litchfield followed him, and used these Words: My Lord, here is a Form of a Certificate, which hath been thought fit to use in the Business of my Lord Chamberlain; and I hear your Grace taketh Exception to some Things in it. Then he pulled out the very Paper which Barker formerly had shewed. The Archbishop answered, My Lord, have I not Reason to take Exception to these Words, that post omnimodam veritatis disquisitionem, post probationes idoneas et de jure requisitas, we gave such a Sentence? For to subscribe this, were to proclaim myself a dishonest Man upon Record: For if these Things be true, why did I deny to join in the Sentence? Quoth Litchfield, This here is true; for it cannot be denied, but some probationes idoneæ et de jure requisitæ were used; and we do not say that all were. The Archbishop answered, You shall do well, therefore, to certify post probationes aliquas, and I will join with you; but as it standeth now indefinitely, it will be taken as if all had been used; I pray you therefore to alter the Certificate, and make Things plain. My Lord, quoth Litchfield, I will deal plainly with you: Because the Words were in, and Doubt was made, whether they should pass or no; the King's Majesty hath been acquainted with the Business; and he, by a Letter from Sir Thomas Lake, hath sent Word expressly, that he will have them in. The Archbishop said, Let them then certify who will avow those Words, for I cannot condescend unto them. And hath not that Person done a good Office, who hath informed the King hereof; that Distraction may still be among the Commissioners, and there may never be an End of Difference? The Bishop said, My Lord, I could wish that you would yield unto the King, and so give him Satisfaction. The Archbishop answered, What would you have me do? I gave the Sentence as I was persuaded in Conscience, and since that Time I have been silent, and meddle no Way in the Matter: I did what I did upon long Deliberation; and I may not in Private, upon no Ground since appearing to me, cross that which I have done in Publick. It was farther added, That there was Reason to suspect, that they did ill Offices, who held those Things still on Foot: That there never was any Man, who sought to grace himself by disgracing others, but it met him at the Lane's End, at one Time or another. These Things passed then; and after the Cause heard between Sir Pexal Brocas and his Wife, the Bishop of Litchfield said to the Archbishop at his Parting, My Lord, you will give us Leave to certify then as we purpose? To which the Archbishop answered, Yea, with all my Heart.

The next Morning, the Archbishop remembered, that by the Carriage of Things in such Fashion as was pretended, he might be tricked: For if the Names of all the Commissioners were put into the Certificate, and four of them might certify under a common Seal, it should not be known hereafter, but that he and his Fellows concurred therein, and that, with the Words which were excepted against: He therefore sent for Barker, and in the Presence of Sir John Bennet, and two Servants, being Publick Notaries, he expostulated with Barker, as serving Mens Turns, rather than caring for Peace; and then punctually he delivered these Things.

First, The Writ requireth me to certify the Sentence; and I am ready to do it.

Secondly, If the whole Procefs be desired, I am willing to certify that also.

Thirdly, For the Words in Question, because they were put in without my Privity, and they may as well be left out as put in, by your own Saying, I pray to be forborn for returning of them.

Fourthly, I require you to conceal these Things as much as you may, that the World take no new Alarm of any Difference between the Commissioners.

The Archbishop spake of returning the whole Procefs, because he had heard, that at the first, it was meant it should be so; but Dr. Stuart, and, perhaps, some other of the Civilians, dissuaded that by all Means; lest, if the whole were on Record in the Chancery, every Man that list, hereafter, might censure that Sentence, and sift the Grounds whereon the Commissioners proceeded; it was good, therefore, to take away that Occasion.

When Matters were thus resolved, the Bishop of Litchfield, who meant to play his Prizes in this Service, speaketh to Bembo, to draw some Preface or Conclusion, to add to the Certificate; that it might not only be signed with the Great Seal, as after the Form of an Inspeximus; but that his Majesty might add a Confirmation to it: And when Mr. Bembo, as unacquainted with this Fashion, did not fit the Bishop's Humour, his Lordship took on him to do it himself. He drew up, therefore, a strange Writing, as was informed by a credible Person that saw it, containing barbarous Latin, and no good Congruity of Sense. But the Matter of it was, that his Majesty having the Authority of the Pope now in himself, and in scrinio pectoris, having Power to ratify, did, ex plenitudine potestatis, confirm that Divorce to all Intents and Purposes. In an Evening Dr. Martin was sent for to the Lord Chamberlain, and there was the Bishop with his Papers. The Doctor, as it hath been credibly delivered, being shewed that Writing, and his Opinion thereupon being asked, did utterly dislike it, and said, That the King claimed nothing of the Pope's Power; but took that as his own; which the Pope had usurped: That the King had spoke before by his Judges Delegate, and had nothing more to do: That if the Sentence were not good already, no Confirmation could make it good. And when the Bishop was earnest in Defence of his Device, there was a little Heat stricken between the Doctor and him, so that these Words passed from the said Doctor: You do, as much as in you lieth, spit in the Face of the King our Master, by laying on him all the Matter; whereas the Scandal that hath already been, is this, that his Majesty is said to deal so much in the Matter. My Lord, you are to blame to enter into these Things without Advice of Men skilful in the Law: Hath Dr. Stuart or Dr. Bird been acquainted herewithal? The Bishop said, No; but for this Matter, I know as much Law as the best of you all. Dr. Martin replied, No: Your Lordship thinketh, that because you have read two or three Chapters of the Canon Law about this late Business, you know as much as we do, who have spent all our Lives in that Profession: I tell your Lordship, I have studied the Law these two and thirty Years; and therefore, you shall give me Leave to believe believe that I know more therein than you can. I am the King's Advocate, and therefore may suffer nothing with my Consent to pass dishonourable to my Master.

Upon these Contestations, the Lord Chamberlain was much troubled, saying, What a Matter is this, that Men should be of such contrary Opinions! What shall we do? When the Bishop murmured much that his Counsel was not followed, Dr. Martin said thus: My Lord, in a Business of this Importance, I will not wish your Lordship to follow my single Advice, but let this be done; To-morrow let Sir William Button, in your Lordship's Name, come to Doctors-Commons; and let him get together Sir Daniel Dun, Dr. Stuart, and Dr. Bird, and I will attend them; and then we will consult jointly what is fit to be done.

This Advice was much liked; and on the Morrow, being Friday, they all assembled, and, for two Hours, all Points were debated; but the Conclusion was, That there should be no farther Confirmation: For this was to proclaim, that the Sentence was defective in itself, which would make a great Buzz in the World: And therefore, the Counsel was in general, That too much had been done, and for the Time to come the Care must be, how to lay it asleep fairly.

This Resolution being taken, the next Knack was, that so many of the Commissioners as were for the Sentence, should be called together; and they should be made acquainted with this, that the Bishop might be fairly put off. On the Saturday Night, therefore, in the Dark, at Sir Julius Caesar's House in the Strand, met the Bishops of Ely, Litchfield, Rochester, the two Chancellors of the Exchequer and Dutchy, and Sir Daniel Dun, and well near for an Hour, they privately debated what they thought fit, but, as it seemeth, resolved as before, and so departed.

A Friend being the next Day with the Lady Caesar, and knowing of the Meeting, asked her, What about it was? She answered, It is something about the late Nullity; but what it is, I do not know. It seemeth, that they who were the Doers in it, think somewhat is amiss. They suppose all is not well about it, and I for my Part think so also.

A Man would have supposed, that all these Things should have contented the Bishop of Litchfield; but he was so far in Love with his own Invention, that yet he would not be beat off; and therefore, to merit the more, he once again moveth the Lord Chamberlain to send to Sir Francis Bacon, and to Mr. Felvorton, being of the King's learned Council, to know their Opinion: Which being done; and they two, for the Reasons above-named, concurring with the Civilians; the Bishop, as it hath been credibly related, said of them, together with the rest, They are all Fools. And so ended this Stratagem; but the Worker thereof was not yet for an End.

From the Beginning of this whole Question of the Nullity, the Bishop of Litchfield had carried himself variously, sometimes being vehement in Words, publickly against the Separation, and other Times in Deed; giving Furtherance to it. Many Speeches he had privately with the Archbishop, making Shew of much Honesty and Respect to him, which the Archbishop ever warily observed; thinking, notwithstanding, that these had been Testimonies of the working of his Conscience, conflicting in itself, but not resolved what to do. In the mean time, from the Court, from London, and out of the Country, the Archbishop was still called upon by divers worthy Friends, That he should take heed of that Bishop: That he was ever, and in all Things naught: That he did all the worst Offices that possibly he could, and was still stirring the Coals, to procure to himself a Reputation; that he was zealous of the House of Suffolk. The Archbishop forgot not those many Warnings, but carried himself very warily towards him: Yet out of Charity, it still came in his Mind, He is a Bishop, I know no Evil of him; I ought not to condemn a Man upon a Generality; I have no particular Proof of his Misbehaviour in this Behalf: Although he dealt ill with the late Lord Treasurer, and most falsely with the Archbishop Bancroft in his Life-time, and after his Death; and for that Cause was detested by both of them; yet an honest Man may think, that Experience hath reformed him, and now he is amended. Yet it much affected the Archbishop, that all Men spake so ill of him; and one Speech of an old Courtier, a very honest Knight, entered far with him. For about a Fortnight before the Marriage, the said Courtier speaking privately with the Archbishop, among other Words, he used this: I know not what the Bishop of Litchfield doth among you; but he hath made a shift to be taken for a Knave generally with us in the Court. Now, whether the next Prank will verify so much or no, let the Reader judge. Eight Days before the Marriage, on a Saturday Morning, that Bishop cometh to Lambeth, and in private Conference with the Archbishop, he telleth him, That out of his Love and Respect to his Grace, he was come voluntarily, as of himself, to know his Mind about one Matter, and it was this. On St. Stephen's Day, said he, the Lord Chamberlain meaneth to have this great Marriage go forward: Now it may, perhaps, be desired, that a Licence should be given by you, that the Banes may not be asked; which if you like not to grant, I may be the Means to free you from being moved to it. The Archbishop said, What have I to do with granting of a Licence? It belongeth not to me: But wherefore should there be any Need of a Licence? The Marriage is intended to be publick; Masques and Shews are made for the same; all England taketh Notice of it, and therefore it were good, that the Banes were openly asked, as the Manner is of such Marriages as are made in the King's Chapel. Yea, the Lady Elizabeth herself had her Banes asked. My Lord, saith Litchfield, there is some Cause why it should be done without publishing the Banes: For peradventure somebody may step up, and make a Disturbance. You know what a mad, naked Fellow came into St. James's, after the Death of the Prince; if such a one should come in now, what a Work would it make? The Archbishop wondered within himself, to hear such a Reply, and thought surely, that it was no mad Body that they should need to stand in fear of, but they suspected somewhat else. But his Answer was, My Lord, there come no such into the King's Chapel; there be Doors and Officers to keep such out. But if it should be suspected, that any would oppose, it is best the Banes be asked, for then there will be some Warning of the Gain-saying; whereas, otherwise, if at the Time of the Marriage one should suddenly start up, it would make a greater Trouble. Notwithstanding the Bishop went on, That a Licence would cut off all the Doubt. The Archbishop answered, But what have I to do with granting a Licence in the King's Chapel? It belongeth to the Ordinary of the Place, and that is my Lord of Bath, as Dean of the Chapel. Litchfield replied, He

He never granted any, and he hath no Seal for that Office. It was answered, He never granted any, because no body ever desired it; but the Manner was, that the Banes were published. But as for the Seal of the Office; who doth not know that any Seal will serve? And none better than his Bishop's Seal, it being said, Datum sub sigillo nostro Episcopali, quo in hoc casu, or hoc tempore utimur. King James, at the first, did use the Seal of Queen Elizabeth, till a new one was made. The Bishop proceedeth, Yet it would be fit that you granted the Licence, if it be requested. To this the Archbishop said, I shall do that which never any of my Predecessors did. Yes, quoth Litchfield, if you would seek your Records, you should find some so granted. The Archbishop answered, I have inquired of my Officers, and they tell me, That no such Thing was heard of, in omni Hominum Memoria. But, my Lord, I know that my Lord of Bath hath it under the Great Seal of England exclusively to the Archbishop; so that in direct Words there is a Restraint, that he may not meddle there. Yea, but, quoth Litchfield, you have an Act of Parliament, enabling you to grant Dispensations to the King and his Children; and therefore it belongeth to you. Said the Archbishop, Do not you think that I understand the Act of Parliament as well as you? My Lord, Do you think that that Statute was made for these ordinary Graces and Dispensations? Why, is not your Lordship able, within your Diocese, to grant a Licence, that a Marriage may be solemnized, and not the Banes asked? Yes, saith he, I may: Nay, every Archdeacon may do it within his Jurisdiction. Then, my Lord, quoth the Archbishop, must an Act of Parliament be made to grant the Archbishop Power to do that which every Archdeacon may do within his Precinct? There is surely some other Matter in it. But I marvel, my Lord, that you are now so earnest for the Archbishop's Licences, when, as I have heard, in the Days of my Predecessor, when you were Bishop of Rochester, you would not suffer the Archbishop's Licences to pass within your Diocese: No, saith he, it was for Westminster that I did strive, not for the Diocese of Rochester. And it is true, that there be Records in that Church, that the Monks did contend with the King about divers Questions. I had Reason, therefore, to stand for the Privileges of my Church. It was answered, So hath my Lord of Bath to stand for the Right of the King's Chapel. The Archbishop seeing how earnest the Man was, in so unreasonable a Thing, said farther, My Lord, you have mine Answer, but let me now tell you one Thing. It is six Weeks ago, that I heard from the Court, and many Times since I have had it reiterated, that such a Trick should be put upon me: That although it needed not, yet I should be moved for granting this Licence, because thereby I should be constrained, either to grant it, and so cross my former Sentence, and involv'dly give my Consent to the Nullity, or I should deny it, and so grate once again upon the King's Displeasure. You see now I have given you a fair Answer, which may free me from both. But, my Lord, I pray God you do good Offices in this Business. I fear you put yourself into many Things, which may be better forborn. But let me tell you, there was never any Man, who sought to raise himself by wronging another, but at one Time or other he had enough of it. It is now almost three Months since this Sentence was given, and since that Time, I have not meddled with the Matter, for offending the King. I am silent; and no way oppose, and Men have their End; yet cannot

I be quiet. I would have you know, that God beholdeth these Things, and remembreth them. And for my Part, I am not blind, I see well what is done; and I shall not always be silent. The Time will come, that I must speak; and it shall appear I am not Tongue-tied. This made the Bishop not so forward as before; but Occasion or a farther Speech being offered, the Archbishop went on, and said, The Sentence which I gave, was in the Fear of God, and according to my Conscience: And if that had been done, which was convenient, and we called for, there needed not to have been any Division in Judgment. For, my Lord, you may remember when you came to me at Croydon, and brought these Papers from the King, after the reading whereof I slept little that Night; how desirous I was to give his Majesty Satisfaction; and therefore pray'd you, fetching out the Process unto you, to tell me whereupon I should ground my Sentence. You shewed me one Article, That he had not known her, nor he thought that he never should. I told you then, Yea, that was for want of Love, for he said, When I came out of France, I loved her; I do not so now, neither ever shall I. It is want of Love. To this the Bishop said, Yea, and the Earl added, That he had done his best oftentimes, carnally to know her, but he found an Imperfection in himself. The Archbishop replied to this, Ob, my Lord! Never say so; for his Lordship's Answers, upon his Oath, are to the contrary: He found no Defect, or Impediment in himself. And if I shall speak my private Opinion, although I would not have you believe it, I think the Earl as able a Man for a Woman, as any is in England. And I think to the contrary, quoth Litchfield. The Archbishop went on: But, my Lord, when your Lordship and I had these Difficulties in our Mind at Croydon, you told me of one Thing, which I embraced as an Oracle from Heaven. And that was, that to rid ourselves of these Distractions, we had no other Way but to call the Earl of Essex again upon his Oath, that so giving us a fuller Answer, we might either have good Ground to pronounce for the Nullity, or Matter to give Reason why we might not condescend unto it. I approved this, and you know how the next Day, in publick Court, it was moved, and my Lords of Winchester, Ely, Rochester, and yourself, gave very good Liking to it; and no Man said any thing against it, except Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer, who softly spake; I know not whether that will be permitted. But you may remember, you were intreated to deliver this to the King at Theobalds, from whom you brought Word, That it should not be granted, because the Earl of Essex, being partly provoked by his falling out with Mr. Henry Howard, and partly being counselled by the Earl of Southampton, would speak all Things to hinder the Nullity. My Answer then was, That he was to speak upon his Oath, and we would most strictly examine him. When that was denied, which should have led us to the Truth, I must confess I had never any Mind to pronounce for the Separation. The Bishop seemed to take no great Pleasure to hear these Things thus repeated, but fared, as if he could have wished, that they all had been forgotten. The Conclusion of all was, that the Bishop seemed to be well satisfied that no Licence was given, and promised the Archbishop to take care that he should no farther be troubled with it, assuring him, That he did ever good Offices to him, whereof the King could give Witness, and would; and he would ever make best of Things. To which the Archbishop said, If he did, he would take it for a Kindness at his Hands; and so he departed.

Accordingly, the next Day the Banes were asked in the Chapel, and there was nothing but fair Weather, the Archbishop attended the King in the Closet. On the Monday the King went to Hampton-Court; and that Day the Bishop of Bath and Wells came to Lambeth: He told the Archbishop; that he had a direct Message unto him from the King, and that was, That his Majesty did much marvel, that he spake not with him about the Sentence: That the King expected Satisfaction and Submission. His Lordship added, That he perceived that the King had some Scruple in his Mind, which he wished should be removed before his going to the Communion on Christmas-Day. The Archbishop knew not that the Bishop of Litchfield had dealt any Way treacherously with him, and therefore was constrained to answer, in general, That he knew not what to say to his Highness. He persuaded himself, that in giving of the Sentence he had done his Duty, and therefore could not tell how to make a Submission where he conceived no Fault. If in any Circumstance he had erred, he was ready to testify his Sorrow for it; but he knew no such Thing; yet if his Majesty was displeas'd at him, to signify his Obedience to his King and Sovereign, to whom he was so much bound, he would not refuse, if the King were pleas'd to restrain him of his Liberty, and lay him in the Tower all the Days of his Life, to submit himself unto it patiently, without murmuring.

Furthermore, he prayed the Bishop of Bath, (who, on the Morrow, was to go to Hampton-Court) to signify humbly to his Majesty, That he had nothing in this World more precious than his Life; and that he wished, that he had given that Life as a Redemption, that the King's Hand had never been in that Business. And withal he said, that at the coming of the King, he would attend his Majesty.

On Wednesday Night, the King came to White-hall; and on the Thursday, after Dinner, my Lord of Canterbury went to the Court, where they were all busy about Plate and Jewels against the Marriage. Notwithstanding, he had hastily Speech of divers Matters with the King; and in the End, he said privately unto his Highness, May it please your Majesty, I understand by my Lord of Bath and Wells, That your Majesty expects that I should give you an Account about the Matter of the Lord of Essex and the Lady Frances: I can say nothing more than this, That I was put into the Commission as a Judge, and at the Time of Sentence I did my Conscience; and since I have not meddled with the Matter. Yes, saith the King, I hear you denied a Licence to be granted, for not asking of the Banes; which I wonder you would do, since the Sentence was passed. No, said the Archbishop, I denied no Licence; but I advised, that the best Course was, that the Banes should be asked, according to the Custom used in the Chapel.

Secondly, I said, That if any Licence should be granted, it belonged not to me to give it, but to the Ordinary of the Place, the Dean of the Chapel, who hath it under your Majesty's Great Seal, exclusive to the Archbishoprick. Yea, said the King, My Lord of Bath said so; but I am told it is otherwise. The Archbishop replied, Nay, it is so indeed.

And Thirdly, said he, My Answer was, That never any of my Predecessors granted a Licence for any thing done in the King's Chapel: I have received Information so, from my Officers. It had then been Presumption in me to attempt that which belonged not unto me. This is another Matter, saith the King, Were these your Answers? I was told otherwise. But I will take some other Time to speak with you. The Archbishop, after this, attended half an Hour, and nothing being said, he departed.

The same Night, a Friend coming to Lambeth, told my Lord, That he had been that Day with the Lord Knowles, where he found, that the Bishop of Litchfield had exceedingly wronged my Lord of Canterbury: For he had reported all the Speech about the Licence, in a spiteful Manner; said, it was absolutely denied: That the Archbishop gave out, That the Earl of Essex was very potent for a Woman; and that he intended to question this new Marriage, at one Time or other, that it should never take Effect.

This, said the Gentleman, made a great Stir among them; and the Archbishop was much blamed, that he would never make an End: But they were much troubled at it, as fearing themselves, that all was not sure. But, quoth he, when I had told them, that this was some ill Office of the Bishop of Litchfield, who had every Day new Inventions to puzzle them, that he might so much the more indear himself unto them, by signifying his Zeal for them; and that I knew how fairly my Lord of Canterbury had answered him, (for so indeed he did) and that he was so far from disturbing the Marriage, that he intended to be present at it; they were not only appeas'd, but seem'd much content, that his Grace would be there: And this I assure you to be true.

When the Archbishop heard this, he was now satisfied, that the Man who had done him all the Wrong, was the Bishop of Litchfield; from whom he resolv'd afterward to be very wary how he trusted him. Yet, professing that he forgave him with all his Heart, on the Christmas-Day he attended the King, and received the Communion with his Majesty; and so, coming Home to Dinner, Sir Charles Cornwallis came along with him. This Gentleman is one, to whom, for his Love, the Archbishop was much beholden; and after Dinner they grew privately into Speech of all these fore-remembered Stirs; where the Knight found much Fault that so many Tricks were put upon the Archbishop; blamed infinitely the Bishop of Litchfield; promised to acquaint some of his great Friends with his Qualities, and assur'd to make Things be rightly understood; and took away with him that Report, wherein he seem'd much to joy, that the Archbishop would be at the Marriage.

On the Morrow, being St. Stephen's Day, the Archbishop went to the Court, attended the King to Chapel, went down to the Marriage, (where, not the King, but the Lord Chamberlain, gave the Bride) had a Pair of Wedding-Gloves, and so came Home to Dinner; where he sat with much Comfort, as being glad, that since Things must be so; they were come to an End: And so prayed God to bless his Church, the King, and Kingdom; and himself; that he might be free from so many Vexations, as for a long Space undeservedly had followed him.

The SPEECH intended to be spoken at Lambeth, September 25, 1613, by George, Archbishop of Canterbury, when it came to his Turn to declare his Mind concerning the Nullity of Marriage between the Earl of Essex and the Lady Frances Howard.

[Seven of the Commissioners having before declared themselves that they would give Sentence for a Nullity, and great Reason being to think, that the Bishop of London, Sir John Bennet, Dr. James, and Dr. Edwards, would give Voices against the Nullity.]

MY Lords, and you the rest of the Commissioners, I have had a great Contention and Deliberation within myself, in what Manner I should utter my Judgment in this present Cause, since, after the Speech of those three who first began, so great a Stream and Concurrence together of the rest, (my Lord excepted, who spoke last) have given their Opinions for the annulling of the Marriage. But yet I hold not myself concluded thereby, but that I may declare my Judgment, having learned that Suffragia among wise Men are as well appendenda and ponderanda, as numeranda: And it was no Shame for Phocion in Athens, upon good Ground, to contradict the whole City; neither was Paphnufius in the Council of Nice the less respected, when he stood against the whole Synod; nay, it was his Honour, that by delivering of his Sentence, he altered the Resolution which that whole Assembly had intended to take, which I freely acknowledge I have no Hope to effect at this Time. And yet, though I have not that Hope, but might very well spare this Labour, yet my Conscience telleth me, that it becometh me to speak in a Matter of this Importance, because, not only, Deum timeo, I fear God, which I doubt not but all of this Company doth; but I am afraid of God, lest he should be angry with me, if in this Case I be silent. And I think it is expected of me, since I am here present, that I should not sit as an Idol, and only fill a Room; for that were to lay an Imputation on myself, that I had undertaken a Cause, which in publick I durst not offer to maintain.

I must acknowledge, that in delivering of my Mind in this Business of so great Weight, I do find two Defects, that I cannot so pertinently speak unto the Purpose as divers of the Judges here: The one is, That I am no Lawyer; and the other is, That I am no married Man; by both which I am disabled, that I cannot speak with that Confidence concerning some Particulars, as most of you, the Commissioners, are able to do; but in lieu thereof, I have endeavoured to furnish myself some other Way concurrent to this Purpose: As by reading, by conferring with some whom I do trust, with pondering thereupon, so that it hath lost me much Sleep at several Times, with frequent Prayer unto God, that he would direct me aright; which I have more begged of God in this Cause, than ever in any that was before me in Judgment. And besides, I bring with me animum candidum, a Mind devoid of Passion, or any Perturbation, which inclineth to no Part for Fear or for Favour, for Spleen or for Hatred: From which, I thank God, in pronouncing of Sentence, I ever have been free, remembering that Judges are in the Place of God; and as Jehosaphat said, 2 Chron. 19. Non hominis judicia exercetis sed Domini, et quicquid judicaveritis in vos redundabit. He then who sitteth in the Place of God, and in pronouncing of Sentence will vary from Justice, he leaveth God, and sheweth himself worthy to lie in the Flames of Hell, for abusing of the Trust which is committed unto him, which I hope I shall not do. And cui bono? To what End should I transgress in Judgment for either Side, when I have no Reason to be partial for either, since it is indifferent to me in any Particular, whether this Question receive one or other Determination.

Where, lest I should be mistaken, I think it not amiss, as publickly I have done divers Times before, to let the World know what my Judgment is concerning the Impotency of a Husband towards his Wife: That since Marriage in young Couples is for carnal Copulation and Procreation thereupon, and that it is the Intendment of those which contract Matrimony to receive Satisfaction in that Kind, that if this Nobleman be not able to perform those marital Rights unto his Lady, he doth unto her a very great Injustice to retain her as his Wife; and we shall perform a great Part of Injury and Cruelty towards her, if we do not free her from this Burthen and Yoke. We are bound in Conscience to do it, since it is in Truth no Marriage, but a pretended Matrimony, that Consummation being wanting, which was one of the first Things in Intention when they two came together: For impossibilitas officii, by a received Maxim, solvit vinculum Conjugii. But the Point is, that before the Separation be pronounced, it must appear unto the Church, that there is good Cause for the same; which must not be upon light Surmises, or questionable Suggestions, but upon evident Declarations and Proofs, which may give full Contentment to the Conscience of the Judge. The Marriage was overt and in the Face of the Church, whereby they were joined into one; let the Reason of Separation be as clear as that was, if it possibly may be; or let it be so apparent, that the Church may well know, that there is Ground to stand upon for pronouncing of a Nullity. Now this is it which I doubt will not fall out in this Case of my Lord of Essex; there is not Proof sufficient to inform the Minds of the Judges that this Knot should be dissolved, and themselves set at Liberty the one from the other. And then you understand what the general Rule is, Quod dubitas, ne feceris. And in this Controversy there seem in my Judgment many Reasons of doubting, that the Separation desired ought not to be granted: You shall hear some few of them.

1. The first Scruple which ariseth in my Mind, is from the Uncertainty of that Proceeding, which we have had in this Business. For in the handling of it formerly, we had it propounded, that there must be a Nullity propter maleficium versus hanc. That was it which we debated, and for the which we turned our Books; that the Council for my Lady did still insist upon, not naming the Words indeed, but by a Periphrasis, or Circumlocution, describing the same. And it cannot be forgotten, how Dr. Stuard, being told by one or more of the Commissioners sitting then in Court, that his whole Speech did still point out maleficium, he answered, it is true, that is it which we intend. The Authorities always brought out of the Canonists were in direct Terms upon maleficium, the Proofs intended nothing else. And we all understand, that to have an Impotency unto a Man's own Wife, and an Ability unto other, and that incurably, and that for some latent Reason; which cannot be known, is the Case of maleficium; and that is the Matter alledged in the Libel, and whereupon my Lord is examined. And yet, now since we sit upon the second Commission, maleficium is disclaimed. One of my Lords (my Lord of Winchester) hath avowed it, that he dislikes that maleficium; that he hath read Del-Rio, the Jesuit, writing upon that Argument, and doth hold him an idle and fabulous Fellow; that he rather supposeth it to be God's own handy Work, than any thing from the Devil. Another of my Lords (my Lord of Ely) hath assented thereunto, and maleficium must be gone. Now I for my Part will not absolutely deny, that Witches by God's Permission may have a Power over Men, to hurt all, or Part in them, as by God they shall be limited; but how shall it appear that this is such a Thing in the Person of a Man? The Question is, An factum sit, and how it shall be discovered? But to make it a Thing ordinary, as the Romish Writers do beyond the Seas, I take it to be a Fable, acknowledging that for Truth, which a Bishop well versed in that Argument did lately write, that Maleficia is the very Garbage of Popery; a Thing so base, that we who have learned Christ aright, should despise and contemn, allowing it no Place amongst us. Which Course it were a Shame if we should not observe, since the Papists themselves grow very weary of it; and that even in France, where there hath been more ado with this Maleficia than in any other Country; for there the common Sort, at the Time of their Marriages, were wont to be afraid to have the Words of Conjunction in Matrimony to be spoken aloud, Quos Deus conjunxit, nemo separet, or the Benediction to be publickly given, lest some Witch or Sorcerer in the same Instant should tie a Knot upon a Point, or play some other forcing Trick, whereby the new Bridegroom, so long as that Knot lasted, should be disabled from actual Copulation with her whom he had married. And for avoiding of that Hazard, they had therefore their Matrimonies celebrated in the Night-time, and in some private Place, where none came but such Friends as they dared to trust. This Superstition grew so common, and Men were so abused by the Fright that came thereof, that the Prelates of France, about thirty Years since, in a Council at Rheims, made this Decree against it. * Peccare graviter admonemus eos, qui noctu vel clanculum benedictionem nuptialem sibi dari procurant propter metum maleficii: Maleficium enim se vitare posse, credere debent, si eo pietatis affectu ad conjugium accedant, qui præscribitur in sacris literis, videlicet ut cum timore Domini, et amore filiorum, magis quam libidine impulsu copulentur, devotè susceptis penitentiæ et Eucharistiæ Sacramentis. And the Year after that, another Council in that Kingdom doth speak yet more plainly. † Et quia Christiano nomine indignus error nostro seculo inolevit, ut signationibus, consignationibus, vinculis et nexibus Matrimonia impediuntur: Hæc Synodus communionem Ecclesiæ interdicat omnes eos, qui hujusmodi superstitionibus utuntur:

monetque fideles, ne hujusmodi commentis fidem habeant; sed in Deo fiduciam certam constituent, nec idcirco matrimonia noctu fiant, sed in luce et frequentia hominum. If it be rotten ripe in France; if it be Error indignus Christiano nomine; if Men must not fidem habere hujusmodi commentis; What do we with it here in England? Let it be cast away as a rotten Rag of Popery. And yet I do now find, that in the very Sentence which is this Day to be given, it falleth directly upon the Description of Maleficium versus hanc. So that what should I think of this Case of my Lord's, which is built on such a Foundation as no Man will stand to? We are on it, and off it, and avow it we dare not, yet fly from it we will not. This moveth Scruple in me, how I should assent to that whereof I can learn no Certainty from the Council of my Lady, nor from you that be the Judges, who speak for this Nullity: I dare not rest my Building on such a sandy Foundation.

2. Another Matter which troubleth my Mind, is the Novelty of that which is now set on Foot; a Thing unheard of in our Church, and unknown in our Kingdom. We have many Stories, old and new, of Things done in this Land; we have Registers extant in every Diocese; we have Acts and Records which specify those Accidents which have fallen out in the Days of our Forefathers. I have caused Search in many Places to be made, and so I know have some of you, the Commissioners; and I have called upon you for the same, but I can have no Precedent of any such Example that hath passed in our Kingdom. No Memory of Man can express unto me the Name of that Person, whose Marriage was annulled for Impotency towards his Wife, when he found an Ability of carnal Copulation with any other Woman. It is this Year, 1613, that hath set abroad this present Imagination, for the former Ages knew it not. It is safe walking in the Ways which are treaded out unto us. We have great Reason for our Doings in these human Actions, when we do those Deeds which formerly were done by our Predecessors. I have had many worthy Men, which have gone before me in the Place which I now hold, Men learned, Men judicious, great Discoverers of Impostures; Men that have done great Services for the Nation where we live; but of them never any had such a Case before them, they never gave Sentence for a Nullity of Marriage upon such an Inability. I know not whether it be a Happiness or Unhappiness, that I must be the first to sit in a Commission for determining such a Controversy.

I know, to meet with this Objection, it is whispered sometimes, that there is an Example, and that is Bury's Case, which is urged as a Precedent unto this now in Question. But indeed, that is no Pattern of this; the Dissimilitude is great between the one Case and the other; for Bury had his S—s stricken off with an Horse, that nothing but a little of one of them remained. I will read you the very Case, which if any Man doubt of, shall be avowed unto him. Thus then it doth follow.

John Bury, Esquire, was lawfully seized in his Demesnes as of Fee, of, and in divers Manors, Lands and Tenements, within the County of Devon. The said John Bury did, the 20th Day of November, in the first Year of Queen Mary, marry one Willimot Gifford, and they lived together three Years; and the said Bury could not carnaliter cognoscere dictam Willimotam.

* Bochellus in Decret. Eccles. Gallic. lib. 3. tit. 5. cap. 176. anno 1583.

Afterwards, viz. the 17th of May, 1561, the said Willimot called the said Bury before the Ecclesiastical Judge, and charged him to be impotentem ad coëundum cum dicta Willimota, propter vitium perpetuum, et incurabile impedimentum ad generationem, et ejus inhabilitatem, &c. and thereupon desired to be divorced. In the Proceeding before the Judge, it was proved by divers Witnesses, of which two were Physicians, that the said Bury had but one little S—e, and that no bigger than a Bean. It was also deposed by divers Matrons; that the said Willimot Gifford remained a Virgin; and incorrupt; and the said Bury confessed no less: Upon which Proof, and Confession of John Bury, the Ecclesiastical Judge pronounced Sentence of Divorce, and did thereby separate them.

Afterward the said John Bury took to Wife one Philippa Monjoy, his first Wife, Willimot Gifford, being then alive; and the said Philippa had a Son in the Time of their continuing together, John Bury's first Wife being alive.

Afterwards, the said Willimot being still living, the said Monjoy, of her own Accord, without any Sentence of Divorce, forsook the said John Bury, and married one Langeden, with whom she continued. The said John Bury, and his first Wife Willimot, died; the said Monjoy and Langeden then living, married together.

The Question is, Whether, John Bury being divorced from Willimot Gifford for Impotency; the second Marriage, solemnized between the said John Bury and Monjoy, during which Time the Issue Male was born, be in Law a Marriage or not.

It appeareth by the Proceſs made in the Cause; and the Words of the Sentence grounded upon the same Proceſs, that the first Marriage was pronounced to be void, propter defectum et vitium testicularum, which made the said John Bury impotentem et ineptum ad actum generandi, et coitum conjugalem. And so in all Respects this second Marriage with Monjoy is void, and of no Effect: For either this Cause of the Dissolution of the first Matrimony is true, which is always to be presumed, until the contrary do appear, and then the same Cause doth make the second Marriage void also; or else, if it any ways appear, this Cause of the Dissolution of the first Marriage to be false; Et Ecclesia erat decepta, quia satis potens ad generandum, et quod in ipsa generavit. And in that Case the first Marriage is good in Law, et debet redire ad priora connubia: And so the second Marriage is utterly void.

We are of the Opinion above laid down.

John Loyde,	Edward Crompton,
Henry Jones,	Robert Fourth,
John Hone,	William Farrand.*
Nicholas Stuard,

Whether this be true or no, I appeal to Dr. Stuard, who is here in Presence, and of Council for my Lady, who, I know, will affirm it, because, not long since, being asked by me of it, he confessed the same. And here is Dr. Farrand, now of Council for my Lord, who was used for his Advice in this Case of Bury; and Dr. Hone is yet living, who can testify the same. For I will suppose, that a Man cannot forget such a famous Case as that was wherein himself was employed: But if all these were dead, I know where Records be, which still will continue. If this then were the Matter in Question touching Bury, defectus testicularum, what is this to the great Controversy now depending before us? And if this be the only Precedent, that should be the Inducement, that the Sentence to be given in this Cause is not new, but the like hath been heard of before; I am where I was: We are now to act a Novelty, a Thing strange, and unheard of in the Church of England, whereof let other Men be the Managers, I may have no Hand in it.

But perhaps it will be said, that in some other Countries, and especially in France, these Things are well known; and the Examples of one Kingdom, especially being so near unto us, may be an Inducement for us to do the like, since the Reason is the same. My Answer thereunto is, That I that live in England, am to frame myself to those Things, which I find in the Church of England, whereof I see no Reason but there should be as great Esteem, as of any Church in the World. In the Days of our Forefathers, as our Nation was held a very noble Nation, so was

* In the short Case of Mrs. Catherine Weld, (Daughter to Lord Aston) and Edward Weld, Esq; her Husband, printed in 1733, the Cases of Bury and Essex are thus quoted in p. 42, 43: "The famous Case of John Bury, Esq; of the County of Devon, in the Reign of Queen Elizabeth, is a proper Caution in respect to such Demands for annulling Contracts of Marriage, since such Nullities often occasion much Noise and Confusion; and instead of hurting none, as has been asserted on the other Side, almost always have stirred up implacable Malice in the Party declared incapable, and the Consequences have not seldom brought a Disreputation on the Court who pronounce it.

"In order to which, let us return a little to the History of Bury's Case. His first Wife Willimot libelled him for Insufficiency as to carnal Encounters, and upon Inspection it appeared he had but one little Testicle, of the Size of a small Bean. The Ecclesiastical Court, on this and other corroborating Evidence, gave Sentence with the Libel, and, so far as they were able, annulled the Marriage.

"Willimot quickly took the Advantage of this Sentence, and married again. Bury was, it seems, not at all satisfied with this juridical Sentiment of his Incapacity, but married also a second Wife, Philippa, by whom he had a Son. This afterwards drew the Succession to Bury's Estate into Question, on the Legitimacy of this Son. The Common Lawyers were unanimously of Opinion, that the Church Authority exerted in pronouncing the Nullity being plainly deceived in the very Ground upon which it went, that Sentence was in itself void, and the first Marriage between Bury and Willimot remained notwithstanding it good.

"It is with some Reluctance I mention the Case of the Earl of Essex and Lady Frances Howard, the most famous Instance in our Kingdom of a Sentence of this Kind, which was given by the Majority of a Court of Delegates, composed of the greatest Bishops and Men who were skilled in the Civil Law; yet, notwithstanding the Solemnity of Interrogatories, the Earl of Essex's direct Answer that she was a Virgin for him, the Verdict of Inspectresses, the Pomp of Compurgators, and all the other Colours which could be invented to gloss their Proceeding; yet so scandalous was this Decision in the Eyes of the World, that it lost the Characters of all those Judges who concurred in pronouncing Sentence, and fastened the Nick-name of Sir Nullity on one of the Sons of a Bishop concerned in it, when he was soon after knighted."

And Page 47. "Bury's Case was indeed an odd one, but it had no Effect when quoted to the Bishops and Doctors in my Lady Essex's Case; and though so many hard Censures have fallen on those who decided it against the Validity of the Marriage, yet the Event did in some Measure justify their Opinions; since the Lord Essex, though he ventured on a second Marriage, yet had not Issue by the Lady."

the Church of England held a very famous Church. Ecclesia Anglicana, as might easily be shewed out of Matthew Paris, and by divers Things in some later general Councils, did carry a greater Sway. And why should we at this Time, in any thing, yield unto any Church in the World, since it is a Thing well known, that the Knowledge of Divinity doth abound here beyond all other Nations? And Men of this Land have beat down the Power of the Pope, and made evident divers Questions in Matters of Theology, beyond all the Parts of Christendom: But beyond this, I do know, that the Customs of Churches, even by the Determination of the Pope himself, ought to be the Rule of Judgment in this Nature. We have a famous Place interserted into the Body of the Law, written by Pope Alexander the III^d unto the Bishop of Amiens in France. It is worth your hearing; * Quod sedem Apostolicam consulisti super his, quæ tibi dubia existunt, gratum gerimus et acceptum, et tua exinde fraternitas non parum commendanda videtur. Ex tua siquidem parte nobis est intimatum, quod quædam mulier tui Episcopatus cuidam viro nupsit, asserens quod ob utriusque inguinis rapturam, genitalia ejus abscissa fuissent, necdum ab eo cognita fuisset, qui utique factus leprosus, se pariter et sua domui reddidit infirmorum. Mulier vero ad domum patris reversa sicut asseris invenis, alio viro nubere desiderat, et conjugali affectu conjungi. Unde licet Romana Ecclesia non consueverit propter talem infirmitatem, vel propter alia maleficia, legitimè conjunctos dividere, si tamen consuetudo generalis Gallicanæ Ecclesiæ habet, ut hujusmodi matrimonium dissolvatur; nos patienter tolerabimus, si secundum eandem consuetudinem, eidem mulieri cui voluerit nubendi in Domino concesseris facultatem. By this we do find, that the Church of Rome itself doth grant no Separations in Matters of Matrimony, where the Church of France doth; and if the Pope permit in France itself, that a Divorce should be made, it is but a Toleration, and not this neither, but where it is consuetudo generalis Ecclesiæ Gallicanæ; which if you will apply unto this Cause in Question, you must shew me, that in England it hath been a general Custom, that a Nullity in Marriage may be pronounced propter impotentiam versus hanc; which if you cannot shew, as indeed you cannot, nor give any true Example that ever hath been of any such Separation within this Church; I may both in Law and Conscience conclude, that I dare not introduce any Novelty, and so consequently pronounce for the Nullity of this Marriage. Many Things are done in France, whereof if we in England had the Examination, we should peradventure find the Fact different from that which they conceived; or if we agree in the Fact, we should give another Sentence. It is not unknown how, within the Space of one Year, there hath been much ado in France about two Women, Magdalen and Louyse, pretended to be possessed with a great many Devils, and how Verrine, a principal Spirit in one of them, hath avowed and maintained the Mass, Invocation of Saints, Adoration of Images, and a great many other Points of the Grossness of Popery; and a Book hereof hath been printed and reprinted in Paris, with the Approbation of the State, and Allowance of learned Men; in which the Church of England would certainly dissent, and proclaim the whole Business to be but an Imposture; as the very like was in the Days of Queen Elizabeth, when the Devils of Denbam were said to possess Sarah Williams and her Sister, and some other Persons; and much ado was made of it, and divers fond People believing those Knacks, turned Papists thereupon; yet the Issue of all was, that it proved no better than a shameful Delusion, and a great abusing of credulous and light-believing Persons.

3. But now to proceed farther: If it shall be said, It is not the Novelty, nor the Want of Custom here in England, which should prejudice the Truth; valeat veritas, wherefoever or whensoever it appears: The Proofs are evident whereupon we do stand, and that will enforce the Sentence. My Answer thereunto is, Let that be made manifest and clear and perspicuous unto the Conscience of an understanding Man, and I shall concur with you: But how shall I find this in a Matter of this Quality? Because it is nothing else but Truth which we do aim at, it were fit that all Probations, if not which are possibly, yet at the least which reasonably may be had, should be got together to enforce a Conclusion of this Consequence. My Books tell me, In valore matrimonii investigando quæcunque probationes possibiles adhibendæ sunt, et potius debent esse superflua quàm diminutæ. It is Solomon's Saying, Prov. 25. It is the Honour of a King to find out a Thing. And wherein can Judges bestow their Time better in a Point of Difficulty, than to search and search again, by all honest and good Means, to know what is the Bottom of that which lieth secret, that they may satisfy their own Conscience, and the Conscience of others, in the Sentence which they give, and leave no Kind of Scruple, which may trouble their own Thoughts? Whether these Things have been done in this present Case, I appeal to your own Consciences; whether the Writers do not mention divers Things; whether the Council for my Lord have not spoke of fundry Matters; whether we that be the Judges, have not thought of divers Courses convenient to be held; of all which no Piece or Parcel hath been permitted unto us. The Proofs then which we have had, do arise only out of the Depositions, and if there be not Proof sufficient, where shall we seek for it? Let us then consider them. I will tell you my Opinion of them. I find nothing in them all, which is not in Substance contained in the Answers of my Lord of Essex: A Noble Personage saith, that in the hearing of divers Things, the Earl hath said, that he was not able to know his Lady carnally; the Earl thinking this to be true. But this is but a Relation of Wonder spoken extrajudicially; and therefore for the understanding of the Truth therein, we are to have Recourse unto that, which by the said Earl is judicially deposed. Divers Witnesses do speak, that the Earl and the Lady have lived and lain together for divers Years; my Lord doth acknowledge it in his Answer; the Matrons and Midwives do declare, that in their Judgment, my Lady is a Virgin, and therefore, that she was never known carnally by the Earl; himself confesseth that he did never know her. So that now, all in Substance depending upon his Lordship's Answer, it ought to be our Labour to scan that exactly, and to judge of it circumspectly. Doth not he then say, in responsione ad quartum, That though divers Times, in the first Year of their Cohabitation, he did attempt to know her, (which divers Times may be twice or thrice, and no more) yet in the two latter Years he did never attempt it? But doth he not say plainly, responsione ad tertium, That since the Time of his Marriage, he had not, nor hath any Sickness or Impediment, to hinder him, but that he might have had, and may have carnal Knowledge with a Woman? This is for the general, that he hath no Impediment: But, in responsione ad quintum, doth he not descend more particularly unto his own Lady; that it is true that he did never carnally know the said Lady Frances? Mark now what followeth; but that to the Act of carnal Copulation he did not find any Defect in himself. Indeed he was not able to penetrate into her Body; but he layeth the Fault of that upon her, as may be seen in his Answer unto the 7th Article. And it may not be forgotten, that in the End of the Answer to the 4th Article, he saith, that sometimes she refused him. These Things are evident, and cannot be denied. The only Matter which maketh Shew against this, is, that he acknowledgeth that he hath lain by her, and hath had no Motion to have carnal Knowledge of her; but especially, that in the End of his Answer unto the 6th Article, And believeth he never shall. These Words are the Shield and Buckler of the contrary Part; but how easily do they vanish away, or fall to the Ground! For I appeal unto you all, who were present at the Examinations, (and those were ten of us in Number, who now sit here present) whether the Earl did not openly subjoin that to his Answer; When I came out of France, I did love her; but I do not so now, neither ever shall I. I appeal unto the Conscience of you all, except my Lord of Winton, and my Lord of Rochester, who were not then Commissioners, whether this be so or no: Here then is the Matter, it is the Want of Love, which restraineth all Motions of carnal Concupiscence, and not any Impotency; it is defectus voluntatis, and not defectus potestatis. Let Discontentment be removed, and there will be an End of all the Inability: Married Men best know these Things; but out of common Reason, there can be no great Longing, where there is no great Liking; many Things they say fall out between Man and Wife, that for some good Space of Time there is no carnal Conjunction, and yet no Impotency concluded thereby may be. The Case is famous of Pulcheria, Sister unto the Emperor Theodosius the younger, who having vowed Virginitie, was notwithstanding afterward, for great Reason of State, thought fit to be married unto Martianus, who thereupon was chosen Emperor; she would not condescend thereunto, till she had Promise from him, that her Virginitie should be preserved, and with such a Promise he did marry her, so that they lived together in shew as Man and Wife, but indeed as a Brother and a Sister. Our Stories do make mention, that he who was called Saint Edward in England, I mean King Edward the Confessor, did marry a Lady, the Knowledge of whose Body he never had, neither did this wedded Couple ever endeavour to break their Virginitie. The Writers do declare no other Reason hereof, but that they had an Opinion, that to live in Virginitie, was the more meritorious, according to the Superstition of those Times. Now were it not a strange Argument, to conclude in this Manner, that because Martianus had not conjugal Copulation with Pulcheria, therefore he was a Man impotent; or, because King Edward had not carnal Knowledge of his Wife, therefore he could not know her? I know the Circumstances of this present Question do differ from those, but the Ground of the Argument is the same. Want of Act upon private Reason, will never enforce a Want of Power. And this is our Case, as I understand it, which maketh me unwilling to consent to this Nullity.

* De frigidis et maleficiatis, cap. 2. in Supplemento.

4. There followeth now another Argument, which I shall deliver briefly. We have always agreed, that the Chapter in the Law, which containeth our Case, is the Chapter Litera de frigidis et maleficiatis; for if it be not there, it is no where to be found. When we have delivered many Things appertaining to this Cause out of the best Writers of the former Ages, or of our own Time; as that my Lord should be inspected, or that Physicians should use their Art to discern and remove Impotency, if any were to be found, or that Fasting, Prayer, and Alms should be exercised to overcome this Evil, and divers other Points of like Nature; it hath still been answered to us, so say the Interpreters, but it is not in the Law; or it is in the Decrees which bind not, but it is not in the Decretals; or it is a Counsel and Exhortation, but it is no Mandate or Injunction. I now therefore mention something, which is in the Law, and in the very Body of this Law, and it is the Pope's Mandate; and that is, that my Lord should have given his juramentum cum septima manu, as well as my Lady; for Want whereof, the whole Proceeding is annulled. This is the Pope's Commandment, Quocirca mandamus, and it requireth the Oath of both, ipsis cum septima propinquorum manu firmantibus juramento, se commisceri carnaliter nequivisse, then proferatis divortii sententiam inter eos. This is a Thing so clear, that when on Thursday last, by chance, there fell mention of it; the Council for my Lady (Dr. Stuard and Dr. Bird) were so far from giving Answer to it, that, to speak plainly, they stood as Men blasted or blighted with Lightning, and knew not which Way to turn them; as was manifest not only unto us, but to all the Standers by; which I do not utter to do them any Wrong, for they are worthy Men, both learned and faithful to the Cause which they undertake; but the Note is, that this Objection can receive no true Answer. I know, that since that Time there hath been Labour made, to give a Salve to this Sore, but no Man's Wit can do it. I said, and say still, that no Man's Loquence, neither any Man's Eloquence, can persuade me, that ipsis firmantibus juramento is of the singular Number. I know there hath been tumbling and turning of Books, to find some Shew to meet with this Objection, but nothing can be found, which will hold out this Water. The Proceeding therefore doth appear to be unperfect and defective in that, which is mainly required by the Law, which makes me to conclude in this Fashion against some unperfect Speech touching my Lord of Essex his affirming or denying of his own Inability towards my Lady; that either he doth confess it, or deny it: If he do acknowledge it, where is then his Oath cum septima manu, which the Law imposeth? If he do deny it, where is then your Proof of his Inability, since you ground the whole Substance of the Nullity upon his Lordship's Answer, that he could not know her carnally?

I must yet crave Patience to go a little farther. One other Exception which I take unto this Nullity, is the Manner of the Sentence, which by us is to be given, which hath ever been resolved should be in general, not expressing any Reason particular wherefore we do give it. To say that my Lord is impotens in genere versus hanc, and not to tell wherein, is to propound a Riddle to the World, which no Man understandeth. It were a strange Thing in Learning, to say, that such a Creature is Animal, and not to tell whether it be a Man, or a Horse, or a Fish, or a Bird. And although it hath been said, and strongly maintained, (by Sir Julius Cæsar and Sir Daniel Dun,) That it is enough in a Sentence to pronounce a Thing in general, and that the Judge is bound to give no Reason of it; yet I would be glad to know whether, howsoever I will conceal the particular Reason from the Hearers or Standers by, yet were it not fit, that I who am the Judge, and must give the Sentence, or at least consent unto it, should know the Ground whereupon I do give it? Give me Leave to speak my Conscience; I think a Sentence, propter latens aliquod impedimentum, which is perpetuum et incurabile versus hanc, is nothing but a Device to serve a present Turn, which we must deliver in such obscure Words, to blind Posterity that comes after, and to amuse those which will inquire into it, as if we had known something which we held not fit to utter, when in Truth we know nothing. I find the Texts of the Law do still set down the Reason, and give a Case particular, as Frigidity, or Section, or Unfitness of the generative Part, or some such other Matter; but for an Inability, propter latens impedimentum, my Dulness is such, that in the whole Book I cannot discover: And it is a Mystery that cannot enter into me, how a Man should be potent unto other Women, and impotent to his Wife, if it be not in Case of Phrensy, which is not latens impedimentum, and which also findeth lucida intervalla. It was the Assertion of him in the Law, (Cap. Literæ.) That he did not know his Wife, but that he had a Power to know other Women. But what wise Man doth believe him? Or what is there in the Text which doth declare it to be true? I will end this Point with that of our Saviour in the 29th of St. Matthew, That there are three Sorts of Eunuchs, or Men unfit to marry; the one is of God's making, the second is of Men's making, and the third is of their own making. The first are they that are past from their Mother's Belly, who either are frigidi, or such as have not Members fit for Generation, or some apparent Debility. The second are those who are castrated by Men, or by some Violence have that hindred in them, whereunto by Nature they are fit in respect of Procreation. I will not here dispute that idle Maleficium, because yourselves are flown from it. The third hath no Coherence with this Nobleman. Let me know then, in which of the former two you do place it. Is he past from his Mother's Womb? Why then do you give him Leave to marry again? that he who hath deluded and frustrated one, may also delude another. If he be in the second Rank, why do you not tell us what the Violence is which he hath sustained from Men, or from any other Creature? Let us have, I pray you, some kind of Satisfaction, and let not this Ænigma in general blind us; lest the World should say, that wilfully we shut our Eyes against the Truth.

6. One Reason I have more, why I yield not to this Nullity, and then I have done. It is drawn from the Inconveniencies which will follow thereupon, if we dissolve the Matrimony in such Case as is now desired. I look first on the Detriment and Harm which will follow, if the Marriage do continue in Force and in Vigour, and I do find, that all the Inconvenience doth redound but to one Person. Between a Lady and her Husband there is some Discontentment, which Time and God's Grace may easily remove: There is then an End of that Controversy. Or, if the Disagreement shall never be appeased, it is no more but one Lady doth want that Solace which marital Conjunction would afford unto her; which many a good Woman is enforced to endure, and yet commits no Sin, neither labours to violate the Laws of the Church: For suppose the Husband be sick of some long Disease, or languishing Weakness, must not the Wife sustain it with Patience and Quietness? Suppose the Husband be Captive in some foreign Nation, or Prisoner in his own Country, whereby Occasion of marital Complexion is taken from the Wife, no Divine will pronounce, that a Separation is in this Case to be sought. Let a Woman do that in Modesty, which others are enforced to do out of Necessity; and let her expect God's Leisure, in Fasting and in Prayer, and in other Humiliation. This is all the Inconvenience which ariseth to one Person, if she have not the Performance of conjugal Duty.

But look on the other Side, what are the Incongruities, or rather Absurdities, which will easily follow, if such Dissolutions of Marriages be permitted. I will name only two. The first is the Hazard of violating and annulling of Marriage by an ordinary Practice; for if the Gap be open, who will not run in? And the Judge must dispense the Law indifferently to all, if the Proofs be accordingly; for we may not say, that it is for noble Personages, and great Peers in the State, and not for others of inferior Rank. Whatsoever Couple therefore have no Children, and live discontented, come presently to take Part of this general Jubilee: And, albeit they know in their Consciences, that it which they attempt is unlawful; yet, to satisfy their Fancy, they will collude the one with the other, and enter a Prosecution secretly agreed upon, howsoever in open Shew they seem to differ the one from the other: And who can doubt, but for Money or Favour, they may procure Witnesses, and others who are to be used by the Formality of the Law, to testify and depose so much as serves the Turn? By which means we are at a fair Pass, when not only the Marriage-Bed shall be defiled, and Adulteries made frequent, which is against the second Table of the Law, but Perjury shall be committed, and God's Name taken in vain, which is repugnant unto the first Table.

A second Inconvenience is the Danger, lest both Parties which are freed from their Matrimony, should divers Years after be returned to it again, when perhaps the Husband by a second Wife hath Children, and the Wife by a second Husband hath Store of Issue also; for there is no Doubt in the Law, but if a Man supposed to be frigidus, and therefore divorced, shall afterwards marry, and by begetting of Children shew himself not to be impotent, but apt for Generation, this Man is to be taken from his second Woman, and returned to his first Wife; and the Woman for whose Marriage a Nullity was pronounced in respect of the Insufficiency of her Mate, must be now taken from her second Companion, and returned to the first. Of this the Reason is apparent, quia decepta est Ecclesia; they adjudged him to be impotent upon wrong Information, whom Experience and Truth hath declared to be potent. And what Man can foretel, how Variety of Times may produce other Judgments? There may be Question of Land or Inheritance, of Legitimation or Illegitimation; and a wife Man would be unwilling to bring it on the Stage when he is dead and gone, and to make it the Fable of the World, whether his Children be born lawfully, or to be reputed in the Rank of Bastards. The World is subject to much Mutability, and Judges of future Times may peradventure be led with the Power of some great Persons, and perhaps may think upon other Considerations, that it is but a Conceit, that a Man should be potent unto another Woman, and impotent to his Wife; or that the Common Law doth not know any Maleficium; or that they do not believe, that there may be latens impedimentum, perpetuum et incurabile versus hanc, when they see that the Husband is, in Shew of the World, a lusty, able Man, and hath well proved his Potency, by begetting three, or five, or seven, or ten Children upon another Woman. These are pretty Things, if a Man do well consider them, and will serve to make Distraction between Kinsman and Kinsman, and make Work for the Lawyers, and keep the Courts at Westminster that they shall not be idle; which if we could not learn otherwise, yet Bury's Case before remembered doth teach us, who was divorced from his Wife in the third or fourth Year of Queen Elizabeth, and when his Brother had enjoyed his Land until the fortieth Year of the said Queen, then was he thrust out of it, and the questioned Son, or his Heir, was put into Possession of it by Trial of Law; a great deal of Money being spent in that Contention, and both Civilians and Common Lawyers in great Numbers were entertained of both Sides; and yet the Controversy was not so appeased, but that of my certain Knowledge, within these three Years it had been raised again, and a strong Device was laid how to bring this about again; only myself withstood it, and would not give way unto it, when I was divers Times consulted thereabout; conceiving very well, that it would not be long before some Prohibition would come out of some of the King's Courts, because the Common Law disliked, that Men's Inheritance, especially after Judgments, should be disturbed, when the Parties whom most of all it concerned, are dead long before, and cannot answer for themselves; whereas, peradventure, if themselves had been living, they could have answered that for themselves which other Men know not. And there ought to be a settled Course in all Things appertaining to Inheritance.

By this Time, I hope you see, that it is not out of Willfulness, or prejudicate Conceit, that I have impugned this Nullity, but out of Ground of Reason, and out of Scruple of Conscience, which is it that must accuse me, or excuse me, before the ever-living God. I know you have heard what other Men have said, and they have answered for themselves. Upon all which Grounds I make this Conclusion, That howsoever this Matter of Separation with great Earnestness hath been pursued, yet it is the surer and the safer Way to leave it as we find it, and in no Case to dissolve it. I oft remember that Saying, which is frequent among the Canonists, Tolerabilius est aliquos contra statuta hominum dimittere copulatos, quam conjunctos legitimè contra statuta Domini separare. That concerneth us who be the Judges; and for the Parties themselves, who perhaps can be content to be severed, and to marry elsewhere, let them know this from me, that they may best expect a Blessing from God when they live in that State where fewest Scruples shall arise in their Mind: From which, whether they shall be free in leaving their old Conjunction, and betaking themselves unto a new, I refer to their wiser Thoughts, when in all Probability, if any Cross or Thwart shall arise in their new-intended Matrimony, this Perplexity and Anguish will still follow their Souls, that they have done that, whereof in their truest Meditations they have no Ground of Conscience, and therefore that it is the Hand of God upon them, who giveth not a Blessing unto that which was unduly sought.

You have thus at large heard my Opinion against the Annulment of this Marriage. Now, if you ask me, What would you then have done concerning this Couple of Noble Personages? my Answer is, that I would have a Reconciliation by all means to be laboured; and although that be difficult to bring about, yet it is the more Honour when it is effected. Charity will forgive, and forget the highest Offences. It is St. Augustine's Judgment, That in the greatest Breaches between Man and Wife, Reconciliation is the best; and the worthiest Pains that can be bestowed, is to bring that about. There wanteth only one or more good Mediators, and then great Things will be compassed. The Disagreement was inconceivable between God and Man, yet Christ, that great Mediator, did take it away. The Breach was very bitter between England and Spain, yet our most blessed Sovereign, as a gracious Intercessor, did give an End unto it. Let Divines be used now, as much as Lawyers have been used heretofore. Take the godly Counsel of the one, which will be given freely, as you have taken the Advice of the other with much Expence of Money. This I wish for, this I pray for; and if my Counsel had been used, before Things grew to this Height, I would have used my best Means to have wrought an Atonement. But because there is no Hope thereof, and this doth expect a legal Decision, proceed you that please unto this Separation. Give your Sentence in scriptis, as you have declared your Opinion in verbis. Five might have served the Turn by the Words of the Commission, if seven had dissented; but you have seven Suffrages, and therefore proceed; only this I crave of the Register, that he do make his Act, that this Sentence is given,

This is the Substance of that Matter which the Archbishop of Canterbury, out of certain Notes which he had drawn up, was ready to have uttered; and no one material Point is added thereunto, as appeareth unto me; the Writer hereof, comparing it with the Notes at such Time as I ended the writing of this; which was on the 28th of September, 1613, three Days after the Time when it should have been spoken.

The KING's Letter to the Archbishop of Canterbury.

My Lord,

AFTER I had received, and read your Papers, which the Bishop of Litchfield brought me; I found it very necessary that I should make Answer thereunto at my first Leisure: For whereas, before, at my last Meeting with you, ye seemed to me to be only as yet unresolved what Sentence to give in this Business, till you had heard it thoroughly disputed; that by that Means ye might be fully informed of the State of the Cause; it appears now by these Papers; that you have, after your last Day's Consultation, put on a negative Resolution, grounded upon Fundaments of Divinity and Conscience, as you think, which hath moved me to send you herewith my Judgment upon your Arguments, in regard that I did ever hold it necessary, that in a Matter of this Weight all my Commissioners should be as near of one Mind, as might be; and therefore I would be sorry that your private Conceits should so blind your Judgment, as to make you and your Followers draw the Catharrows (perplex or torment) against your Yoke-fellows; for, that I may now open plainly my Heart unto you, at my first reading of your Papers from the Bishop, I chance to cast mine Eye first upon the Paper of your Arguments, before I had looked upon your Letter, and lighting upon your first Words, Inasmuch as we do firmly believe, &c. I protest I thought it had been some strange Confession of Faith, that you had intercepted amongst some of the Sectaries; but when I had read out the rest of that first Article, God is my Judge, I thought that Paper had been some Pasquil made against this Divorce, which coming to your Hands ye had sent me, and therefore without reading any farther therein, I looked upon your Letter, which resolved me of all these Doubts; but after that I had fully perused, and rightly considered of all your Papers, I found your Principles so strange, and your Doubts so far sought, that I thought it necessary, as I have already said, to set down unto you my Observations upon them. But to conclude my Letter with that Plainness that becometh one of my Quality, I must freely confess, that I find the Grounds of your Opposition so weak, as I have Reason to apprehend, that the Prejudice you have of the Persons, is the greatest Motive of breeding these Doubts into you; which Prejudice is the most dangerous Thing that can fall in a Judge for misleading of his Mind. And the Reason moving me to this Apprehension, is partly grounded upon your last Words to me at your parting from Windsor, and partly upon a Line scraped out in your Paper of Doubts; for I am sure you think me not so blunt a Secretary, but that I can read a Line so scraped out. In your last Speeches with me, you remember you told me what Assurance you had of the Earl's Ability out of his own Mouth, which you said you could not but trust, because he was so religious a Nobleman. But when I told you of the other Party's contrary Affirmation, you remember how you used the Word of Iniquity; and how far your interlined Line seems to have a Harmony with this Word, yourself can best judge. Now then, if I would ask you what Proof you have of the one's Religion more than the other's, you must answer me, by judging upon the Exterior; and how deceivable that Guess is, daily Experience teaches us. — But with a holy Protestation that I never knew any thing but good in the young Earl. Was not this the Ground of Master Robert Bruse's Incredulity, because he knew the Earl of Gowery to be truly religious; and did not beg a Register. See Botwell in his Preface of his Book De viris illustribus. And as for your Judgment of the other Party, Christ's Precept is the best Answer unto you, Nolite judicare. But if the Question were to judge of the Earl's Inclination, whether is it likely that you or I could best judge of it; I, he having been bred with my late Son, and served him so long; or you, that never spoke with him but once or twice in your Life, and never knew either Good or Evil of him but out of his own Mouth? I will conclude, therefore, with inverting the Argument; that if a Judge should have a Prejudice in respect of Persons, it should become you rather to have a kind of Faith implicit in my Judgment, as well in respect of some Skill I have in Divinity, as also that I hope no honest Man doubts of the Uprightness of my Conscience; and the best Thankfulness that you that are so far my Creature, can use towards me, is, to reverence and follow my Judgment, and not to contradict it, except where you may demonstrate unto me that I am mistaken, or wrong informed, and so farewell.

*The Case of a Murder in Hertfordshire, found amongst the Papers of that eminent Lawyer, Sir John Maynard, Serjeant at Law, and some Time one of the Lords Commissioners of the Great Seal of England, viz.

The Case, or rather History of a Case, that happened in the County of Hertford, I thought good to report here, though it happened in the fourth Year of King Charles the First; that the Memory of it may not be lost by the Miscarriage of my Papers or otherwise. I wrote the Evidence that was given, which I and many others did hear; and I wrote it exactly according to what was deposed at the Trial at the Bar of the King's Bench.

Jane Norkott, the Wife of Arthur Norkott, being murdered, the Question was, How she came by her Death?

THE Coroner's Inquest, on View of the Body, and Depositions of Mary Norkott, John Okeman, and Agnes his Wife, were inclined to find Jane Norkott a Felo de se; for they informed the Coroner and the Jury, that she was found dead in her Bed; the Knife sticking in the Floor, and her Throat cut.—That the Night before she went to Bed with her Child (Plaintiff in this Appeal) her Husband being absent, and that no other Person, after such Time as she was gone to Bed, came into the House, the Examinants lying in the outer Room, and they must needs have seen or known if any Stranger had come in: Whereupon the Jury gave up to the Coroner a Verdict that she was Felo de se. But afterwards upon Rumour amongst the Neighbourhood, and their Observation of divers Circumstances, which manifested that she did not nor could possibly (according to those Circumstances) murder herself; thereupon the Jury, whose Verdict was not yet drawn into Form by the Coroner, assented, and desired the Coroner, that the Body which was buried might be taken up out of the Grave, which the Coroner assented unto; and thirty Days after her Death she was taken up, in the Presence of the Jury and a great Number of People: Whereupon the Jury changed their Verdict; and the Persons being tried at Hertford Assizes, were acquitted; but so much against the Evidence, that Judge Harvey let fall his Opinion, that it were better an Appeal were brought, than so foul a Murder escape unpunished. And, Paschæ quarto Caroli, they were tried on the Appeal,

* Communicated (many Years ago) to the Editor, by Dr. Rawlinson, F. R. S.

This Account being from the MS. Notes of so great a Man, we here insert, though rather a Narrative than a Trial. We have received several Narratives and Historical Accounts of Murder, which are not proper for this Work; however, one of the most remarkable of them we shall give an Account of.

The Case of JOAN PERRY, and her two Sons, JOHN and RICHARD PERRY, for the supposed Murder of WILLIAM HARRISON, Gent.

William Harrison, Steward to Lady Campden, at Campden in Gloucestershire, about seventy Years of Age, went August 16, 1660, to receive my Lady's Rents, which he did; and not returning Home that Night, gave Cause to suspect he was murdered. After some Time, John Perry, his Servant, gave Information before a Justice of Peace, That his Brother Richard had robbed and murdered him, and his Mother stood by whilst it was done; and that Richard had once before broke open his Master's House, and robbed him.—At the following Assizes, Joan, John and Richard Perry had two Indictments preferred against them, one for breaking open the House of Mr. Harrison, and robbing him of 140*l.* in the Year 1659; and the other for robbing and murdering him, Aug. 16, 1660. Upon the last Indictment, the then Judge of Assize, Sir Christopher Turner, Knt. would not try them, because the Body was not found: On the former Indictment for the Robbery, they pleaded Not Guilty; but on People's persuading them, they retracted their Plea, and pleaded Guilty; begging the Benefit of his Majesty's most gracious Pardon and Act of Oblivion, which was granted them: And though they pleaded Guilty to this Indictment, being prompted thereto, yet they all at their Deaths denied it. Yet at this Assize, John Perry persisted in his Story, That his Mother and Brother had murdered his Master, and that they had attempted to poison him in Gaol for discovering it, so that he durst not eat or drink with them. And

At the next Assizes following, Joan, John and Richard Perry, were, by the Judge of Assize, Sir Robert Hyde, Knt. tried upon the Indictment of Murder, and pleaded Not Guilty; when John's Confession before the Justice was proved viva voce, by several Witnesses who heard the same. He then told the Court, He was mad, and did not know what he had said. The other two, Richard and Joan Perry, declared they were wholly innocent of what they were accused; that they knew nothing of Mr. Harrison's Death, nor what was become of him; and Richard said, his Brother had accused others as well as him, to have murdered his Master; which the Judge bidding him prove, he said, That most of them that had given Evidence against him, knew it; but naming no body, nor any body speaking to it, the Jury found them all Guilty.

Some Days after, being brought to the Place of Execution, which was on Broad-way-Hill within Sight of Campden, the Mother (being reputed a Witch, and to have so bewitched her Sons, they could confess nothing while she lived) was first executed:

Appeal, which was brought by the young Child against his Father, Grandmother; and Aunt, and her Husband Okeman; and because the Evidence was so strange, I took exact and particular Notice. And it was as follows:

After the Matters above-mentioned related; an ancient and grave Person, Minister to the Parish where the Fact was committed, being sworn to give Evidence, according to Custom, deposed, That the Body being taken up out of the Grave, thirty Days after the Party's Death, and lying on the Grass; and the four Defendants being present, were required each of them to touch the dead Body. Okeman's Wife fell upon her Knees, and prayed God to shew Tokens of her Innocency. The Appellant did touch the dead Body; whereupon the Brow of the Dead, which before was of a livid and carrion Colour, (in Terminis, the verbal Expression of the Witnesses) began to have a Dew, or gentle Sweat, arise on it, which increased by Degrees till the Sweat ran down in Drops on the Face; the Brow turned to a lively and fresh Colour, and the Deceased opened one of her Eyes, and shut it again; and this opening the Eye was done three several Times; she likewise thrust out the Ring or Marriage Finger three Times, and pulled it in again; and the Finger dropped Blood from it on the Grass. Sir Nicholas Hyde, Chief Justice, seeming to doubt the Evidence, asked the Witnesses, Who saw this besides you?

Witness. I cannot swear what others saw: But, my Lord, (said he) I do believe the whole Company saw it; and if it had been thought a Doubt, Proof would have been made of it, and many would have attested with me. Then the Witness, observing some Admiration in the Auditors, spake farther: "My Lord, I am Minister of the Parish, and have long known all the Parties, but never had Occasion of Displeasure against any of them, nor had to do with them, or they with me; but, as I was Minister, the Thing was wonderful to me: But I have no Interest in the Matter, but as called upon to testify the Truth, and that I have done." (This Witness was a very reverend Person, as I guessed, of about seventy Years of Age; his Testimony was delivered gravely and temperately, but to the great Admiration of the Auditory.) Whereupon, applying himself to the Chief Justice, he said, "My Lord, my Brother here present is Minister of the next Parish adjacent, and I am sure saw all done that I have affirmed:"

Therefore that Person was also sworn to give Evidence; and did depose in every Point — the sweating of the Brow — the Change of the Colour — thrice opening the Eye — and the thrice Motion of the Finger, and drawing it in again; only the first Witness added, that he himself dipped his Finger in the Blood which came from the dead Body to examine it; and he swore he believed it was Blood.

I conferred afterwards with Sir Edward Powell, Barrister at Law, and others, who all concurred in the Observation: And for myself, if I were upon Oath, can depose, that these Depositions (especially the first Witness) are truly reported in Substance.

The other Evidence given against the Prisoners, viz. the Grandmother of the Plaintiff, and against Okeman and his Wife, That they confessed they lay in the next Room to the dead Body that Night; and that none came into the House till they found her dead the next Morning; therefore if she did not murder herself, they must be the Murderers. To that End further Proof was made,

First, That she lay in a composed Manner in her Bed, the Bedcloaths not at all disturbed, and her Child by her in Bed.

Secondly, Her Throat cut from Ear to Ear, and her Neck broke. So that if she first cut her Throat, she could not possibly break her Neck in the Bed. Non Contra.

Thirdly, There was no Blood in the Bed, saving a Tincture of Blood on the Bolster whereon her Head lay, but no Substance of Blood at all.

Fourthly, From the Bed's Head there was a Stream of Blood on the Floor, which ran along until it ponded in the Bendings of the Floor to a very great Quantity; and there was also another Stream of Blood on the Floor at the Bed's Foot, which ponded also on the Floor to a very great Quantity; but no Continuance or Communication of Blood of either of those two Places, from one to the other, neither upon the Bed, so that she bled in two several Places; and it was deposed, turning up the Matt of the Bed, that there were Clots of congealed Blood in the Straw of the Matt underneath.

Fifthly, The bloody Knife was found in the Morning sticking in the Floor, a good Distance from the Bed; but the Point of the Knife, as it stuck, was towards the Bed, and the Haft from the Bed.

Lastly, There was the Print of a Thumb and four Fingers of a Left Hand.

Sir

executed: (Strange Ignorance and Superstition!) After which, Richard, being on the Ladder, professed, as he had done all along, That he was wholly innocent of the Fact for which he was to die, and that he knew nothing of Mr. Harrison's Death, nor what was become of him; and did, with great Earnestness, beg and beseech his Brother (for the Satisfaction of the whole World and his own Conscience) to declare what he knew concerning it. But he, with a dogged and furly Carriage, told the People, he was not obliged to confess to them; yet, immediately before his Death, said, He knew nothing of his Master's Death, nor what was become of him, but they might hereafter possibly hear. — It is strange that a Judge would order the Execution of three Persons, for the supposed Murder of a Man whose Body was not found, or heard of at the Time of Trial, upon the Confession of a Madman or an Enthusiast! — However, Mr. Harrison, some Years after, appeared alive; and in a Letter to Sir Thomas Overbury, of Burton in Gloucestershire, gave an Account, how that very Night, August 16, returning Home, after receiving the Rents, he was set upon, and forced by several Stages to the Sea-Side, put on board a Ship, and carried into Turkey, where he was sold for a Slave to a Physician, and continued with him for about a Year and three Quarters, when his Master died; then he made the best of his Way to a Sea-Port, and with great Difficulty got on board a Hamburgh Ship bound for Portugal, and arrived safe at Lisbon; from whence, by the Means of an English Merchant, he got on board an English Vessel, and arrived safe at Dover, and from thence to his own Home, to the Surprise of all the Country. This Account was sent with the following Letter from Sir Thomas Overbury to Dr. Shirley, who published it:

"SIR,

"I herewith send you a short Narrative of that no less strange than unhappy Business, which some Years since happened in my Neighbourhood; the Truth of every Particular whereof I am able to attest: And I think it may very well be reckoned among the most remarkable Occurrences of this Age. You may dispose of it as you please; and in whatever I can serve you, you may freely command me, as Burton, Aug. 2, 1676.

"Your most affectionate Kinsman and humble Servant,

"THOMAS OVERBURY."

Sir Nicholas Hyde, Chief Justice. How can you know the Print of a Left Hand from the Print of a Right Hand in such a Case?

Witness. My Lord, it is hard to describe; but if it please that Honourable Judge to put his Left Hand upon your Left Hand, you cannot possibly place your Right Hand in the same Posture; which being done, and appearing so, the Defendants had Time to make their Defence, but gave no Evidence to any Purpose.—The Jury departed from the Bar; and returning, acquitted Okeman, and found the other three Guilty; who being severally demanded why Judgment should not be pronounced, said nothing but severally, I did not do it, I did not do it.— Judgment was given, and the Grandmother and Husband executed; but the Aunt had the Privilege to be spared Execution, being with Child. I inquired if they confessed any thing at their Execution, but they did not, as I was told.

The Proceedings against Mr. Benjamin Leech, Bricklayer, at the Old-Bailey, October 14, 1682, for a Contempt, in offering a frivolous Plea to the Court.

THE Poll for Election of Mayor for the Year ensuing being continued by Adjournments from Michaelmas-Day to the 2d of October, one Benjamin Leech, Bricklayer, being a Freeman and Liveryman of the City of London, came to Guildhall to poll, wherein in Discourse he was charged to have said to this Effect, That Sir William Prichard should never be Lord-Mayor, unless he came in by Stealth, as North and Rich were Sheriffs; for which he was, without any Constable or other legal Officer, carried before

Sir John Moor, Lord-Mayor, before whom he owned the Words, or Words to that Effect; whereupon he was, by the Lord-Mayor, committed immediately to the Compter, from whence he was bailed next Day, giving his Recognizance, with Sureties, to appear at the next Sessions at Guildhall; which Sessions of the Peace being adjourned to the 13th of October to the Old-Bailey, there was a Bill of Indictment preferred and found against the said Mr. Leech, the Tenor of which followeth, viz.

THE Jurors for our Lord the King, upon their Oaths do present, that Benjamin Leech, late of London, Bricklayer, being a Person of an evil and perverse Disposition, the second Day of October, in the thirty-fourth Year of the Reign of our Lord Charles the Second, by the Grace of God of England, Scotland, France, and Ireland King, Defender of the Faith, &c. devising, and falsely and maliciously intending the Peace of our said Lord the King within the City of London to disquiet and disturb, and divers Differences and Dissentions amongst the Citizens of the City aforesaid, and other the Liege People and Subjects of our said Lord the King within this Kingdom of England, of and concerning the Election of a Mayor and Sheriffs of the City aforesaid, and County of Middlesex, to stir up, move and procure; and one Sir William Prichard, Knight, then, and yet one of the Aldermen of the City aforesaid, then in Election of Mayor of the City aforesaid, being for one Year then and yet to come; and also one Dudley North, Esquire, and one Peter Rich, Esquire, which Dudley North and Peter Rich lately before that Time, in a due and lawful Manner, according to the ancient Privileges and Customs of the City aforesaid, were elected and sworn Sheriffs of the City of London and County of Middlesex; and the Election of the aforesaid Sheriffs by the Citizens of the City aforesaid made, into the greatest Hatred, Contempt, and Scandal to bring, the aforesaid Benjamin Leech afterwards, that is to say, the said second Day of October, in the Year above-said, at London, viz. in the Parish of St. Michael Bassishaw, Bassishaw, in Warda de Bassishaw, London. predicti. in Guildhall civitatis predictae, ibidem ad predicti. machinationes et intentiones suas melius perficiend. habens colloquium cum quodam Thoma Smyth in Guildhall predicta, adtunc et ibidem falso, illicite, injuste et maliciose dixit, retulit, et in auditu diversorum liegeorum et subditorum dicti Domini Regis, civium civitatis predictae, publicavit, Quod Prichard (presatum Willielmum Prichard Militem, innuendo) non foret Dominus Maior, (Dominus Maior civitatis predictae innuendo) nisi foret Dominus Maior illicite, et per furtum, Anglice by Stealth, prout vicecomites (presatum Dudley North et Petrum Rich, vicecomites civitatis predictae et comitatus predicti, innuendo) fuerunt vicecomites civitatis et comitatus predictae: Ad magnam disturbance pacis dicti Domini Regis, ad magnum opprobrium gubernatorum et gubernationis civitatis predictae; necnon ad scandalum, opprobrium, et defamationem presati Willielmi Prichard Militis, et presati Dudley North et Petri Rich debito modo electi vicecomitum civitatis et comitatus predictae, in malum exemplum omnium aliorum consimili casu delinquentium, ac contra pacem dicti Domini Regis nunc, coronam et dignitatem suam, &c.

Whereunto the Defendant offered the Plea following.

Leech ad s' } ET predictus Benjaminus Leech, in propria persona sua venit et defendit Domini } vim et injuriam quando, &c. et omnem Regis. } contemptum et quicquid, &c. et petit iudicium de indictamento predicto, quia dicit quod juratores pro Domino Rege predicto, qui indictamentum illud fecerunt et presentaverunt, adinde retornati et impannellati fuerunt per quosdam Dudley North Armigerum, et Petrum Rich Armigerum, tanquam vicecomites civitatis London, qui quidem Dudley et Petrus tempore pannelli et retornatus illius per eos sic facti, non fuerunt nec eorum alter fuit vicecomites dictae civitatis London, per quod idem indictamentum sic factum et presentatum per huiusmodi juratores sic ut presertur impannellatos et retornatos per personas tunc non existentes vicecomites civitatis predictae, vigore statuti in huiusmodi casu editi et provisi, vacuum in lege existit et nullius effectus, et hoc paratus est verificare; unde petit iudicium de indictamento illo, et quod indictamentum illud cassetur, &c.

W. Thompson.

Which said Plea being ingrossed in Parchment, and signed by William Thompson, of the Middle Temple, Counsellor at Law, was on Saturday Morning delivered into Court by the Defendant, who pressed that the Plea might be received, and he and his Bail dismissed from further Attendance for that Time: Whereunto it was answered, that the Court would consider thereof till the Afternoon. In the Afternoon, the Defendant attended with Mr. Thompson his Council, and Mr. Osborn, of the Inner Temple, Counsellor at Law, attended for the King: The Court being sat, the Plea was read, and then Mr. Osborn moved, that the Plea ought not to be received, for that it was a new Plea without a Precedent, and that it could not Bassishaw, in the Ward of Bassishaw, London, aforesaid, in the Guildhall of the City aforesaid, there his aforesaid Contrivances and Intentions the better to perform, having Discourse with one Thomas Smyth in Guildhall aforesaid, then and there falsely, unlawfully, unjustly and maliciously did say; relate, and in the hearing of divers the Liege People and Subjects of our said Lord the King, Citizens of the City aforesaid, publish, That Prichard, (the aforesaid Sir William Prichard Knight, meaning) should not be Lord Mayor, (Lord-Mayor of the City aforesaid meaning) unless he would be Lord-Mayor unlawfully, and by Stealth, as the Sheriffs (the aforesaid Dudley North and Peter Rich, Sheriffs of the City and County aforesaid, meaning) were Sheriffs of the City and County aforesaid: To the great Disturbance of the Peace of our said Lord the King, to the great Disparagement of the Governors and Government of the City aforesaid, and also the Scandal, Disparagement and Defamation of the aforesaid Sir William Prichard, and the aforesaid Dudley North and Peter Rich, in due Manner elected Sheriffs of the City and County aforesaid, to the evil Example of all others in the like Case offending, and against the Peace of our said Lord the King that now is, his Crown and Dignity, &c.

Whereunto the Defendant offered the Plea following.

Leech at } AND the aforesaid Benjamin Leech, the Suit of } in his proper Person, doth come our Lord } and defend the Force and Injury, the King. } when, &c. and all Contempt and whatsoever, &c. and prays Judgment of the Indictment aforesaid, because he saith the Jurors for our Lord the King aforesaid, who that Indictment made and presented, were thereunto returned and impannelled by one Dudley North Esquire, and one Peter Rich Esquire, as Sheriffs of the City of London, which Dudley and Peter at that Time of the Pannel, and the Return thereof by them so made, were not, nor either of them was Sheriffs of the said City of London, by which the said Indictment so made and presented by such Jurors so as aforesaid impannelled, and returned by Persons then not being Sheriffs of the City aforesaid, by Force of the Statute in the like Case made and provided, is void in Law and of none Effect, and this he is ready to verify; whereupon he prays Judgment of that Indictment, and that that Indictment might be quashed, &c.

W. Thompson.

be tried or determined there; that it was a frivolous Plea, and ought not to be received, and so left it to the Judgment of the Bench. Upon which Mr. Thompson allowed, that such a Plea had rarely been made use of, because the like Case had rarely or never happened, but the Reason thereof did justify its Legality, and therefore pressed that the Plea might be accepted; that it never was hitherto denied to any Man to plead to an Indictment of this Nature, what he thought fit in his own Defence, especially when he offers the same under Council's Hand; that this was a ready Way to determine who were legally Sheriffs; if the Plea was not good in Law, the Attorney-General or the King's Council might demur demur to it; that if the Matter alledged in the Plea was false, Issue might be taken thereon, which might soon be tried by a Jury; but if the Matter should appear to be true, there was not so much as any Colour in Law for those worthy Gentlemen, Mr. North and Mr. Rieb, to take upon them to return Juries; and therefore, in the Behalf of his Client, demanded again that the Plea might be received; the Truth or Validity thereof being not to be determined, till some Answer should be made thereunto by Replication or Demurring in Writing.

In Answer thereunto Mr. Justice Levinz (being the only Judge then present) was pleased to express himself to this Effect: That he desired to see the Statute mentioned in the Plea, whereupon it was read, viz. the 11 H. 4. c. 9. Then Mr. Justice Levinz spake to this Effect: That this Statute was made to prevent the Nomination of Juries to the Sheriffs; and though it be thereby provided that Pannels should be returned by the Sheriffs without Denomination of any, yet he was of Opinion that it could not extend to the Case in Hand, seeing the worthy Persons that attended there, were owned as Sheriffs by Lord-Mayor, Mr. Recorder, and several Aldermen there present, and that he made no Difference between Sheriffs de facto and de jure; and that these Persons being there so allowed, he must look upon them as Sheriffs de jure: That a Gaol-delivery had been held, wherein above forty Prisoners had been tried; and that if this Plea should be allowed, all the Proceedings against them would come in Question: And then asked Mr. Thompson, What if all the Felons at an Assizes should insist upon the like Plea, must all further Proceedings stop, till the Sheriff goes Home and fetch his Letters Patents?

Whereupon Mr. Thompson said, That he thought in that Case such Stop could not be prevented, the Law being plain.

Then Mr. Justice Levinz said further to this Effect, That he had considered of this Matter; and that in his Judgment the Plea was a frivolous Plea, and ought not to be received; but yet he being the only Judge then present, he should advise my Lord-Mayor and the rest of the Bench to take Advice of all the Judges, before an absolute Determination whether the Plea ought to be refused or not.

Upon this Sir John Peak said, We will not receive the Plea; with whom agreed Sir James Edwards, Sir James Smith, Sir Thomas Beckford, and Sir Robert Jefferies, and the Lord-Mayor also.

Sir George Treby the Recorder said, That he was of Opinion with Mr. Justice Levinz.

Upon this Leech was pressed to plead Not Guilty: Which he refused, saying several Times, He would plead no other Plea than what he had offered. Then the Court gave him half an Hour's Time to advise with his Council, who withdrew and advised accordingly, and returned with the same Resolution not to alter his Plea, and tendered his Plea again to the Court, who again rejected it: And because he would plead no other Plea, he (being first asked, whether he would submit to the Court and ask Pardon; and refusing so to do, having as he apprehended done no Wrong) was fined Twenty Marks, and committed to Newgate till he should pay the same; which was done that Night, and Leech thereby discharged.

NUMBER IV.

The Trial of Robert Frances, Gent. for the Murder of Thomas Dangerfield, at Justice-Hall in the Old-Bailey, the 16th Day of July, 1685, in the first Year of his Majesty's Reign, before the Right Hon. Sir James Smith, Knt. Lord-Mayor of London, Sir Thomas Jenner, Knt. Recorder of the said City, and one of his Majesty's Serjeants at Law, and others his Majesty's Justices.*

London Jury.

Thomas Anger,	Stephen Coleman,
Philip Perry,	Henry Cremer,
Philip Stockes;	Stephen Gibons,
Luke Poe,	Simon Chapman,
John Warfield,	Joseph Speed,
Christopher Johnson,	Richard Shaw.

ROBERT FRANCES, Gent. was indicted for assaulting Thomas Dangerfield, in the Parish of St. Andrew's, Holborn, London, with a Bamboo Cane, to the Value of 6d. striking it into his Left Eye, of which Wound the said Thomas Dangerfield is since dead †.

The Witnesses against the Prisoner were many; and most of them very positive; deposing, That they saw the said Robert Frances coming to the Side of the Coach, in which Mr. Dangerfield was; and that there he thrust his said Cane into his Eye; after which, running into St. Thavie's-Inn, in Holborn, he was presently seized, and sent to Newgate; where when he went in; one of the Retinue of the Prison telling him that Dangerfield would die, he the said Frances replied, That if he should die, it would save the Hangman

* Though we have not been able to procure Dangerfield's Trial for a Libel; yet shall insert the Trial of Mr. Frances for killing him, from the Sessions-Paper of that Time, with his Speech at Tyburn, as it will give some Light to the History of that Time.

† Bishop Burnet, in his History of his own Times, Vol. 1. p. 537, says, "Dangerfield, another of the Witnesses in the Popish Plot, was also found Guilty of Perjury, and had the same Punishment (as Oates,) but it had a more terrible Conclusion; for a brutal Student of the Law, who had no private Quarrel with him, but was only transported with the Zeal of that Time, struck him over the Head with his Cane, as he got his last Lash: This hit him so fatally, that he died of it immediately. The Person was apprehended, and the King left him to the Law; and though great Intercession was made for him, the King would not interpose, so he was hanged for it." — The Bishop here seems mistaken; for I do not find Dangerfield was convicted of Perjury; or that he got his Death on the last Lash. — Rapin, Vol. 2. 744, says thus, "The next Victim to the Catholics, not long after Oates, was Thomas Dangerfield, who discovered the pretended Meal-Tub Plot, which he had laid to the Charge of the Protestants. But afterwards not being able to maintain before the Council what he had deposed, he confessed, he was persuaded to invent it by the Countess of Porwis, and the Popish Lords in the Tower. Moreover, he had published a Narrative of all the secret Practices used as well to corrupt him, as to render the Plot probable. As he owned he had received Money from the late King and the Duke of York, the last would never suffer such an Offence to go unpunished, when he came to be King. Dangerfield therefore was committed to Prison, and indicted for publishing a scandalous LIBEL. He was tried, and brought in Guilty by the Jury; after which he received judgment at the King's-Bench Bar, That he should stand twice in the Pillory; that he should be whipt from Aldgate to Newgate on one Day, and from Newgate to Tyburn on another; and should pay a Fine of five hundred Pounds. The Scourging was executed with Rigour, though with less Cruelty than on Oates. The second Day, Dangerfield, after the whipping was over, being in a Coach against Hatton-Garden, Robert Frances, a Barrister of Gray's-Inn, came to the Coach-side; and using some insulting Expressions, Dangerfield returned a reproachful Answer, [Frances said, How now, Friend, have you had your Heat this Morning? Upon which the other, with two or three Curses, called him Son of a Whore.] Frances, having a small Cane in his Hand, thrust it into his Eye, with all his Force, which in two Hours put an End to his Life. Frances was condemned to be hanged, and was executed accordingly; the King, though strongly solicited for a Pardon, not thinking proper to leave such a Crime unpunished."

"Sir William Williams, who had been Speaker of the House of Commons, for publishing an infamous Libel, (as Speaker, by Order of the House of Commons) called Dangerfield's Narrative, was fined by the Court of King's-Bench 10,000*l.* but, upon paying 8000*l.* of it, Satisfaction was acknowledged upon Record, Easter Term, 1 Jac. 2. K. B. 2 Shower 471.

"Upon an Information against the Defendant, (Sir William Williams) for publishing a Libel called Dangerfield's Narrative, he pleaded that he was at the Time of Publication Speaker of the House of Commons; and, as such, had a Right to publish the Votes and Acts of the House; and that the Narrative was printed and published as Parcel of the Proceedings. The Court would not debate the Formalty of such an idle insignificant Plea (as they were pleased to call it) but gave judgment for the King, Easter Term, 2 Jac. 2. 1686, K. B. Shower Rep. 471. pl. 436. Comb. 18. See Atkins's Power of Parliaments, &c. The King against Williams. — It is observable, that Sir William Williams was not Speaker of the House of Commons at the Time this Case was adjudged, though he was when the Offence, of which he was accused, was committed. — The Lord Chief Justice Wright asked the Defendant's Council, Whether an Order of the House of Commons could justify a scandalous, infamous and flagitious Libel? 2 Shower 471." A Digest of the Laws concerning Libels, 410. p. 75.

"As the Proceedings against Sir William Williams were very extraordinary, so was the Punishment: The Fine was the heaviest that ever was imposed in any Court for the like Crime. Sir Bartholomew Shower, one of the Reporters of this Case, says, Sir William Williams, being fined 10,000*l.* paid 8000*l.* of the Money, and thereupon Satisfaction was acknowledged on Record. I own, when I find Sir William Williams in this same Reign most violently persecuting the Seven Bishops for a Libel, in the Character of Solicitor-General, I am apt to think, that the Fine was imposed in Terror to others; and that the only Purpose of suing Sir William Williams, was to make a Precedent of an Insult upon the Commons, whose Privileges, if the Designs then on Foot had prevailed, must soon have fallen to nothing." Digest of the Laws concerning Libels, p. 118, 119.

a Labour. Mr. Dangerfield, after he was carried to the Gaol, cried out very much of the Anguish of his Eye, saying, Oh, my Eye! Oh, my Eye! Forbear to make a Noise. A Physician being brought to give his Advice, whether it was requisite to bleed him, he found him desperately ill, and vomiting extremely. The Chirurgeon being likewise sent for, probing the Wound, found it to be mortal; and he, with others, did verily believe, that it occasioned his Death. Mr. Frances, in his own Defence, alledged, That coming to the Coach, he asked Dangerfield, If he had not been beaten? Upon which Mr. Dangerfield calling him Son of a Whore, he, in his Passion, gave him a slight Blow with his Cane; which he verily believed could not kill him; and that he did it out of no Malice or Hatred. He called several Witnesses, who gave him a very good Character, but spoke very little to the Fact; whereupon he was found Guilty. — The Reverend Mr. Samuel Smith, the Ordinary of Newgate, gives this Account of him:

“ I went to Mr. Robert Frances his Chamber, because he desired me to take a particular Care of him; and found him in a serious, good Frame and Composure of Mind; willing to resign himself to the all-wise Ducture of God’s Spirit, and his Determination for Life or Death. First I prayed with him, and then entered upon an Inquiry into his Life and Conversation, precedent to the Crime of killing Mr. Dangerfield. He was very free to give an Account of himself. He said; that he was born of Protestant Parents, and bred up in good Literature; that twenty Years since he was a Student in Christ-Church College in Oxford; that afterward he went over Sea with Sir Joseph Williamson, his late Majesty’s Ambassador, as an Attendant on him; that for fourteen Years last past he hath been of the Society of Gray’s-Inn, and practised in the Law; that he did not lead any extravagant Life till this unhappy Crime. He acknowledged that he saw Dangerfield in the Pillory at Westminster; and that on the Day in which he was whipped to Tyburn, Mr. Frances was with a Friend at a Coffee-house near to St. Andrew’s Church in Holborn; and thought not to have stayed there, because he was to dine that Day with his Friend, and was, in the Afternoon, to have managed a Cause for a Client at Guildhall, so that he was going Home from the said Coffee-house: But a Report coming thither that Dangerfield was in his Return from Tyburn, and very near, he left his Wife in his Friend’s Hand, and went to meet the Coach in which Dangerfield was, only out of Curiosity (as he saith) to observe how he looked after his being whipped. He said, that the Coach did not stop, but he went to the Side of it, and said, Have you had your Heat To-day? How is it now with you? Dangerfield, upon those Words, (he says) called him Son of a Whore, and said, What have you to do with me? Mr. Frances being asked by the Ordinary, what moved him to kill Dangerfield, he replied, that his Passion was stirred up at Dangerfield’s reviling Language, and said, that he only intended to beat him with a Bamboo Cane, which was furzed and worn out at the End of it: But the Coach moving onward, the Cane “ wounded Dangerfield in the Eye; but he intended only to have thrust it at his Breast. He also said, that he had a short Sword, and yet used it not, because he did not design to kill Dangerfield.

“ Mr. Frances being told by the Ordinary, that the very Thrust proved fatal, and was a very inhuman Act toward a Person in his Distress; to this Mr. Frances replied, that he never bore any Malice nor Grudge to Mr. Dangerfield, nor was he moved to that Act by any Person whatsoever; only God left him to himself, for the Punishment of his former Sins, to run into this sudden Effort of Passion. Mr. Frances was much affected with my Discourse, and wept in praying with him: He was very attentive to the Sermons and Prayers on the Lord’s Day, more than the other Criminals; so he seemed very penitent, and I hope that this Sentence of Death on him did awaken him to a serious recalling to Mind whatsoever former Sins he might be guilty of, in order to make his Peace with God, who is the Searcher of all Hearts, and only knows who are truly penitent.”

The Dying Speech of ROBERT FRANCES, of Gray’s-Inn, Esq; July 24, 1685. Delivered by his own Hand to the Ordinary, at the Place of Execution, desiring the same might be published.

I Am here by the Divine Permission and Providence of God become a Spectacle to God; Angels and Men; for a rash, extravagant and imprudent Act, wherein I do confess; I have not only offended against the Government and Courts of Justice, but against Christianity, and even the Rules of Morality itself: Nevertheless, (I hope) not only the Court, but all unbiassed Men, from the several Circumstances of the Fact, are satisfied that I had no malicious Intent of doing what fell out, nor had any Grudge or personal Prejudice to him upon any Account whatsoever; more than what all honest and good Men could not but have, that love the King and the Government. The solemn Truth of all which I have declared, not only upon the Holy Sacrament I received from Mr. Master, but also that I never knew nor saw him before that unhappy Moment, save once at a Distance in the Pillory at Westminster; and do now, as a dying Man, solemnly avow and protest the same: And therefore I hope I may boldly say I am not conscious of any Guilt before God as to the Malice: However, God in his great Wisdom has been pleased to suffer this great Calamity to fall upon me: And I hope this his severe Chastisement is in order to bring me to himself, when softer Means had not sufficiently done it. All them that know me (I am sure) will do me that Justice, as to believe I am far from having done it either wilfully or mercenarily, (as most untruly is reported.) And that these Honourable Persons are above the Thoughts of such unworthy Things, for which they have been as maliciously as falsely traduced upon my Score; I beg their Pardon for the Scandal I have unhappily been the Occasion of, and desire this Acknowledgment may be by them accepted as a Reparation, since to disown it at this Time of my Death, is all the Satisfaction I am able to make them.

As to my Religion, (however I have been represented) there are People that knew me at the University, and since that can be my Witnesses, how obedient and zealous a Son of the Church of England (by Law established) I have been.

And these worthy Divines that did me the Favour to visit me in Affliction, will give the World an Account (as Occasion serves) of my Integrity therein: And if I had been as zealous in the Service of God, as my Prince, he would not have left me so much to myself, as to have permitted me to have fallen into this unexpected Extremity.

And as for my Morals, the Honourable Society of Gray's-Inn will answer for me, that in above these twelve Years Time, I have had the Honour of being admitted a Member of that Society, I never had any Quarrel or Controversy with any Member thereof; and all Persons with whom I have had Conversation, I question not, will give a good Character of my innocent and peaceable Behaviour.

I pray God Almighty preserve and bless his most Sacred Majesty, his Royal Consort Queen Mary, Catherine the Queen Dowager, their Royal Highnesses, and all the Royal Family; and grant that there may never want one of that Royal Line to sway the Scepters of these Kingdoms as long as Sun and Moon endure. In the Union and Love of his Subjects, strengthen him that he may vanquish and overcome all his Enemies, which I am glad to have seen so much Prospect of, and am only sorry I am cut off from seeing my so much desired Satisfaction of those happy Days all his good Subjects will enjoy under his auspicious Government. I pray God forgive me my Sins, that have made me unworthy of that Blessing.

Blessed be the Lord, that I have lived so as not to be ashamed to live, or afraid to die; though I cannot but regret my being made a Sacrifice to the Faction, who I am satisfied are the only People that will rejoice in my Ruin; for there is no Man that loves his Prince, but will lament that nothing less than the Blood of an inoffensive Man (save in this single Extravagance) can satisfy them for the sudden intemperate Transport of Zeal and Passion against one so notoriously wicked and infamous; for I do protest before Almighty God, (before whom I shall immediately appear) that when I went to the Coach-side, I did not intend so much as to speak to him, or believe I could have had Opportunity of so doing, much less of doing him any Harm. Neither is it probable I should with a small Bamboo Cane, no bigger than a Man's little Finger, without any Iron upon it, much less a Dart in it, as it was most industriously spread abroad to prejudice me in the Opinion of the World: For, if I had had such a wicked Design intentionally, I had a little short Sword by my Side much more proper for such a Purpose. And further, if I had believed or known that I had done any Harm to him, I had Opportunity enough of escaping afterwards; which I never endeavoured. Now all these Things being duly weighed, with their several Circumstances, I leave my sad Case to the Consideration of all sober and charitable Men. However, I would not have this to be interpreted as a Reflection upon the Court, who I doubt not are by this Time satisfied, (and Mr. Recorder did in open Court declare) that in their Consciences they did not believe I maliciously designed him the Mischief that happened, but that it was purely accidental. But in the strict Construction of Law I was found guilty of Murder.

But that which most sensibly afflicts me, and is worse to me than Death, that I cannot suffer alone, but that they have not only raised Scandals upon me in particular preparatory to it, but upon my poor innocent Wite, as if my Jealousy of her had been the Reason of my Animosity to Dangerfield; when I am morally certain she never saw him in her whole Life, save that fatal Moment; and no Couple (as hundreds can witness) have lived in better Correspondence. And besides that, she is as virtuous a Woman as lives, and born of so good and loyal a Family, that if she had been so inclined, she would have scorned to have prostituted herself to such a profligate Person: But, on the contrary, (God is my Witness) I never had any such Thoughts of her, and do as verily believe, as there is a God in Heaven, I never had any Reason; she having always been the most indulgent, kind and loving Wife that ever Man had; and in my Conscience one of the best of Women; nay, I am so far from suspecting her Virtue, that she is the only Loss I regret on Earth, and can freely part with every Thing else here below without repining, which in all my Trouble I have owned before all People, and particularly Mr. Mester, Mr. Ordinary, and Mr. Smithies of Cripplegate, who can all testify those Tears and endeared Expressions that have passed between us, when any of them did me the Kindness to visit me in my Distress.

And I do from the Bottom of my Heart freely forgive the Witnesses that swore against me those Words I never spoke; for, as I shall answer at the great Tribunal, I said no other or more Words than these; How now, Friend, have you had your Heat this Morning? For all the Ill they have done me, give them Repentance, Good God! Even for these that have contributed to the shedding of my Blood, I pray thee shed thy Bowels of Mercy.

I do heartily thank those Noble and Honourable Persons, and all other my Friends, that have so charitably interposed with his Majesty on my Behalf (though it hath proved unsuccessful). I pray God nevertheless to return their kind Endeavours a thousand fold into their own Bosoms: Lord, return it to them and theirs.

Lord Jesus, receive my Soul: Thy Will be done on Earth as it is in Heaven. Amen, Amen, Amen.

ON the 28th of February, -1684-5, Mr. Baxter was committed to the King's-Bench Prison by the Lord Chief Justice Jeffreys's Warrant, for his Paraphrase on the New Testament, printed a little before, which was called a scandalous and seditious Book against the Government. On the 6th of May, which was the first Day of Term, he appeared in Westminster-Hall, and an Information was ordered to be drawn up against him. May 14th, he pleaded Not Guilty to the Information. May 15th, he being much indisposed, moved by his Council, That he might have farther Time given him for his Trial; but it was denied him; and Jeffreys cries out in a Passion, "I will not give him a Minute's Time more to save his Life. We have had (says he) to do with other Sort of Persons, but now we have a Saint to deal with; and I know how to deal with Saints as well as Sinners. Yonder (says he) stands Oates in the Pillory, (as he actually did at that very Time in the New Palace-Yard,) and he says he suffers for the Truth, and so says Baxter; but if Baxter did but stand on the other Side of the Pillory with him, I would say, two of the greatest Rogues and Rascals in the Kingdom stood there." On May 30th, in the Afternoon, he was brought to his Trial before the Lord Chief Justice Jeffreys at Guildhall. Sir Henry Ashburst, who could not forsake his own and his Father's Friends, stood by him all the while. Mr. Baxter came first into Court, and with all the Marks of Serenity and Composure, waited for the Coming of the Lord Chief Justice, who appeared quickly after with great Indignation in his Face. He no sooner sat down than a short Cause was called and tried; after which the Clerk began to read the Title of another Cause: You Blockhead you, (says Jeffreys) the next Cause is between Richard Baxter and the King; upon which Mr. Baxter's Cause was called. The Passages mentioned in the Information, were his Paraphrase on Matth. v. 19. Mark ix. 39. Mark xi. 31. Mark xii. 38, 39, 40. Luke x. 2. John xi. 57. and Acts xv. 2. These Passages were picked out by Sir Roger L'Esstrange, and some of his Companions: And a certain noted Clergyman (who shall be nameless) put into the Hands of his Enemies some Accusations out of Rom. xiii. &c. as against the King, to touch his Life, but no Use was made of them. The great Charge was, "That in these several Passages he reflected on the Prelates of the Church of England, and so was guilty of Sedition, &c." The King's Council opened the Information at large with its Aggravations. Mr. Wallop, Mr. Williams, Mr. Rotheram, Mr. Atwood, and Mr. Phipps were Mr. Baxter's Council, and had been see'd by Sir Henry Ashburst.

* Mr. Wallop said, "That he conceived, the Matter depending being a Point of Doctrine, it ought to be referred to the Bishop his

* We could never find (though great Inquiry has been made among the Dissenters) that this Trial was ever taken in Short-Hand, which is a great Pity, because it must have been very curious; so have inserted this short Account, which shews the Temper of the Chief Justice, and the cruel Usage of the Prisoner, taken from Calamy's Life of Baxter.

“ Ordinary; but if not, he humbly conceived
 “ the Doctrine was innocent and justifiable, “ setting aside the Innuendos, for which there was “ no Colour; there being no Antecedent to refer “ them to, (that is, no Bishop or Clergy of the “ Church of England named.) He said the Book
 “ accused, i. e. the Comment on the New Testament, “ contained many eternal Truths: But they who “ drew the Information, were the Libellers, in “ applying to the Prelates of the Church of “ England those severe Things which were written “ concerning some Prelates, who deserved the “ Character he gave. My Lord, (says he) I “ humbly conceive the Bishops Mr. Baxter speaks
 “ of, as your Lordship if you have read Church-“ History must confess, were the Plagues of the “ Church and the World.”—“ Mr. Wallop, (says
 “ the Lord Chief Justice) I observe you are in
 “ all these dirty Causes; and were it not for you “ Gentlemen of the Long Robe, who should have “ more Wit and Honesty than to support and “ hold up these factious Knaves by the Chin,
 “ we should not be at the Pass we are at.”—“ My “ Lord, (says Mr. Wallop) I humbly conceive,
 “ that the Passages accused are natural Deductions
 “ from the Text.”—“ You humbly conceive,
 “ (says Jeffreys) and I humbly conceive; swear “ him, swear him.”—“ My Lord, (saith he)
 “ under Favour, I am Council for the Defendant;
 “ and if I understand either Latin or English,
 “ the Information now brought against Mr.
 “ Baxter upon so slight a Ground, is a greater “ Reflection upon the Church of England, than “ any thing contained in the Book he is accused
 “ for.” Says Jeffreys to him, “ Sometimes you “ humbly conceive, and sometimes you are very “ positive: You talk of your Skill in Church-“ History, and of your understanding Latin
 “ and English; I think I understand something
 “ of them as well as you; but in short must “ tell you, that if you do not understand your “ Duty better, I shall teach it you.” Upon “ which Mr. Wallop sat down.

Mr. Rotheram urged, “ That if Mr. Baxter’s “ Book had sharp Reflections upon the Church of “ Rome by Name, but spake well of the Prelates of “ the Church of England, it was to be presumed,
 “ that the sharp Reflections were intended only
 “ against the Prelates of the Church of Rome.”
 The Lord Chief Justice said, “ Baxter was an “ Enemy to the Name and Thing, the Office
 “ and Persons of Bishops.”—“ Rotheram added,
 “ That Mr. Baxter frequently attended Divine “ Service, went to the Sacrament, and persuaded “ others to do so too, as was certainly and “ publickly known; and had, in the very Book
 “ so charged, spoken very moderately and “ honourably of the Bishops of the Church of “ England.”—“ Mr. Baxter added, “ My Lord,
 “ I have been so moderate with respect to the “ Church of England, that I have incurred
 “ the Censure of many of the Dissenters upon
 “ that Account.”—“ Baxter for Bishops!
 “ (saith Jeffreys) that’s a merry Conceit indeed!
 “ turn to it, turn to it.”—Upon this Rotheram
 “ turned to a Place, where ’tis said, That great “ Respect is due to those truly called to be Bishops among “ us; or to that Purpose.—“ Ay, (says Jeffreys)
 “ this is your Presbyterian Cant, Truly called to “ be Bishops; that is himself, and such Rascals “ called to be Bishops of Kidderminster, and other “ such like Places; Bishops set apart by such “ factious, snivelling Presbyterians as himself; a “ Kidderminster Bishop he means, according to “ the Saying of a late learned Author; And every “ Parish shall maintain a Tythe-Pig Metropolitan.”

 Mr. Baxter beginning to speak again, saith Jeffreys
 “ to him, “ Richard, Richard, dost thou think we’ll “ hear thee poison the Court? Richard, thou art
 “ an old Fellow, an old Knave; thou hast “ written Books enough to load a Cart; every “ one is as full of Seditious (I might say Treason)
 “ as an Egg is full of Meat: Had’st thou been “ whipt out of thy writing Trade forty Years ago,
 “ it had been happy. Thou pretendest to be a “ Preacher of the Gospel of Peace, and thou hast
 “ one Foot in the Grave; ’tis Time for thee to “ begin to think what Account thou intendest to “ give: But leave thee to thyself, and I see thou
 “ wilt go on as thou hast began; but by the Grace
 “ of God I’ll look after thee. I know thou hast
 “ a mighty Party, and I see a great many of the “ Brotherhood in Corners, waiting to see what “ will become of their mighty Don; and a Doctor
 “ of the Party (looking to Doctor Bates) at your “ Elbow; but by the Grace of Almighty God,
 “ I will crush you all.”

Mr. Rotheram sitting down, Mr. Atwood began
 “ to shew, That not one of the Passages mentioned
 “ in the Information ought to be strained to that “ Sense, which was put upon them by the Innuendos,
 “ they being more natural when taken in a milder “ Sense; nor could any one of them be applied to
 “ the Prelates of the Church of England, without a “ very forced Construction: To evidence this, he “ would have read some of the Text; but Jeffreys
 “ cried out, “ You sha’n’t draw me into a Con-
 “ venticle with your Annotations, nor your sni-
 “ velling Parson neither.”—

“ My Lord, (says Mr. Atwood) I conceive
 “ this to be expressly within Roswell’s Case, lately
 “ before your Lordship.” (Vide Vol. 3. p. 1053.)
 —“ You conceive, (saith Jeffreys) you con“ ceive amiss; it is not.”—“ My Lord,
 “ (saith Atwood) that I may use the best Au“ thority, permit me to repeat your Lordship’s “ own Words in that Case.”—“ No, you
 “ sha’n’t, (says he) you need not speak, for you
 “ are an Author already, though you speak and “ write impertinently.”—“ Says Atwood, “ I “ cannot help that, my Lord, if my Talent be “ no better; but it is my Duty to do my best
 “ for my Client.”—Jeffreys thereupon went on,
 “ inveighing against what Atwood had published;
 “ and Atwood justified it to be in Defence of the “ English Constitution, declaring that he never “ disowned any thing he had written. Jeffreys
 “ several Times ordered him to sit down, but he “ still went on. “ My Lord, (says he) I have “ Matters of Law to offer for my Client;”
 “ and he proceeded to cite several Cases, wherein “ it had been adjudged, that Words ought to be “ taken in the milder Sense, and not in the strained,
 “ by Innuendos. “ Well, (says Jeffreys when he “ had done) you have had your Say.”

Mr. Williams and Mr. Phipps said nothing;
 “ for they saw it was to no Purpose. At length
 “ says Mr. Baxter himself, “ My Lord, I think I
 “ can clearly answer all that is laid to my Charge,
 “ and I shall do it briefly; the Sum is contained
 “ in these few Papers, to which I shall add a “ little by Testimony.”—“ But he would not “ hear a Word: At length the Chief Justice summed
 “ up the Matter in a long and fulsome Harangue.

“ ’Tis notoriously known (says he) there has “ been a Design to ruin the King and Nation;
 “ the old Game has been renewed, and this has “ been the main Incendiary: He is as modest
 “ now as can be; but Time was, when no Man
 “ was so ready at; Bind your Kings in Chains, and “ your Nobles in Fetters of Iron; and, To your “ Tents, O Israel! Gentlemen, for God’s sake,
 “ don’t let us be gulled twice in an Age, &c.” —
 And when he concluded; he told the Jury,
 “ That if they in their Conscience believed he “ meant the Bishops and Clergy of the Church
 “ of England, in the Passages which the Infor“ mation referred to, they must find him Guilty;
 “ and he could mean no Men else; if not, they “ must find him Not Guilty.” —

When he had done; says Mr. Baxter to him;
 “ Does your Lordship think any Jury will pré-
 “ tend to pass a Verdict upon me upon such a “ Trial?” — “ I’ll warrant you, Mr. Baxter, “ (says he) don’t you trouble yourself about
 “ that.”

The Jury immediately laid their Heads together at the Bar, and found him Guilty.

As Mr. Baxter was going from the Bar, he told the Lord Chief Justice, who had so loaded him with Reproaches, and yet continued them,
 That a Predecessor of his (meaning Sir Matthew Hale) had other Thoughts of him. Upon which the Judge replied, “ That there was not an honest “ Man in England, but what took him for a great “ Knave.”

He had subpoena’d several Clergymen, who had appeared in Court, but were of no Use to him, through the Violence of the Chief Justice.

The Trial being over; Sir Henry Ashurst led Mr. Baxter through the Crowd, (I mention it to his Honour, says Bishop Kennet) and conveyed him away in his Coach. On June 29 following, he had Judgment given against him; he was fined five hundred Marks; to lie in Prison till he paid it, and be bound to his good Behaviour for seven Years.

Mr. Baxter afterwards obtained the King’s
 Pardon, by the Mediation of the Lord Powis:
 His Fine was remitted; and on Wednesday, No- venber 24, Sir Samuel Astry sent his Warrant to the Keeper of the King’s-Bench Prison to discharge him; but he gave Sureties for his good Behaviour; his Majesty declaring (for his Satisfaction) that it should not in him be interpreted a Breach of the good Behaviour for him to reside in London, which was not allowable according to the Oxford Act: And this was entered upon his Bail-Bond. Notwithstanding this, he continued some Time after in the Rules; and on February 28 following, removed to a House he took in Charter-House-Yard, where he preached to a separate Congregation without Interruption as long as he lived; his Death happening after the Revolution, viz. December 8, 1691.

The Defendant was found Guilty on this Information, and after Exceptions taken in Arrest of Judgment and over-ruled, the Court gave Judgment, and fined him 500 l. and ordered him to give Security for his good Behaviour for Seven Years. — The Case is reported,
3 Mod. 68. — Tremaine, p. 47.

Proceedings against Mr. CRONE, May 19, 1690.

[This Case of Crone is taken from Lord Clarendon’s Diary 16⁸⁹/₉₀ and 1690, printed at the End of his Letters, published 1763.]

“ MARCH 6, 16⁸⁹/₉₀. Thursday. One Mrs.
 “ Clifford’s House was searched last Night,
 “ about Midnight, for one Crone; who, they “ say, came lately out of France. He was “ betrayed by one Fowler, who came over with “ him. But Crone not being found, the Mes“ senger seized Mrs. Clifford, and carried her “ away this Morning to his House. About “ Noon, Crone was taken upon the Exchange,
 “ and brought before my Lord Shrewsbury,
 “ who committed him close Prisoner to the “ Tower for High Treason, in levying War “ against their Majesties.

“ May 19, 1690. Monday. Crone’s Trial, which “ had been put off once before; and it being “ alledged, that one of the Witnesses was not to “ be found, it was put off till Friday Fortnight.

“ June 6. Friday. Crone was brought to “ his Trial; in which were many remarkable

“ Passages. The Judges were very severe, espe“ cially the Chief Baron. The Jury sat up all “ Night.

“ June 7. Saturday. About Noon the Jury “ brought in their Verdict, that Crone was “ Guilty; though one of them declared, he was “ not satisfied that the Evidence spoke Truth;
 “ and he urged Sir Robert Atkins’s Book in De“ fence of Lord Russel’s Innocency; (See Vol. 3.
 “ p. 537.) but it signified nothing. The Pri“ soner being then asked, why Sentence should “ not be awarded against him, he said, There “ was an Error in the Indictment before the “ Grand Jury; that the Bill was indorsed Billa
 “ Verra instead of Vera. The King’s Council
 “ not being there, it was put off till Five in “ the Afternoon; and then the Prisoner insisted
 “ to be heard; the Court appointed to hear it “ argued on Thursday next, and assigned Council

“ to

“ to the Prifoner: In the mean time Sentence
“ was refpited.

“ June 8. Whitfunday. In the Morning Mrs.
“ Clifford was with me. She told me, ſhe had “ been to fee Crone; that he was in a Rage to “ think of Death; that he ſaid, he was too young
“ to be a Martyr; and that ſhe did believe,
“ rather than die, he would tell all he knew.

“ June 9. Monday. Mrs. Clifford told me, “ ſhe had been again with Crone; that he was in “ a better Humour, and talked courageouſly.

“ June 12. Thursday. In the Morning Crone’s
“ Plea was argued and over-ruled. The three “ Chief Judges and Eyres were in Court.

“ June 19. Thursday. In the Morning Lord
“ Nottingham went to Crone in Newgate, upon a “ Letter (as was ſaid) he had from him laſt “ Night. My Lord (as it is given out) urged “ him much to confeſs, that he might deſerve
“ his Life; but the Fellow ſaid, he had told all
“ at his Trial, and that he knew nothing more.
“ Upon which his Lordſhip ſaid, he doubted he “ ſhould ſee him no more, for he would certainly “ die To-morrow, if he did not confeſs; but he “ would acquaint the Queen with what he had “ ſaid. In the Evening, Lord Monmouth and “ Lord Lincoln were at Newgate, preſſing Crone
“ to make a full Confefſion, making him many “ fair Promiſes, in caſe he would be ingenuous:
“ But he ſtill ſaid, he could ſay nothing. At “ Ten at Night Mr. Finch brought him a “ Reprieve till Wednesday next.

“ June 25. Wednesday. Crone was this Day
“ to have been executed; the Sledge was at “ Newgate, and all the People thronged together,
“ as uſual upon thoſe Occaſions; but he was “ again reprieved, in Hopes he would deſerve
“ his Life by the Confefſion he might make.”

[Thus far from Lord Clarendon.]

The next Day, June 26, he was ſent for, as appears by the following Warrant*:

“ Theſe are, in his Maſteſty’s Name, to require
“ you to bring Mr. Matthew Crone, a “ Prifoner in your Cuſtody, attainted of “ High Treafon, to my Office in Whitehall
“ this Afternoon; for which this ſhall be “ your Warrant. Given at the Court at “ Whitehall, the 26th Day of June, 1690.

To Major Richardſon,
Keeper of Newgate.

“ Sickness. I was able to come to the Old-Bailey, where Mr. Crone was tried and condemned for High Treason. He had several Reprieves from Time to Time, on his Promise of making a full Confession; but as he was lingering it out, about six Months after his Conviction, I received a Letter from the Earl of Melford, King James’s Secretary, in which I was promised King James’s Pardon, and all the Favour I could desire from him and the Court of France, and 500*l.* if I would return to France, and recant what I had done. I carried this Letter to King William, who sent me to Lord Chief Justice Holt for his Advice; but his Lordship was of Opinion, it was all a Trick to invalidate my Evidence, they being apprehensive of Mr. Crone’s Confessions; which they must know would be so agreeable to my Informations, that the Heads of King James’s Party had been entirely at King William’s Mercy: And this Matter highly concerned the French Court; for, had Crone been just to him that gave him his Life, there might have been

“ but small Encouragement from England to the French, and consequently no Plotting now. They of King James’s Party made it their Interest to have Crone hanged, and stop his Mouth; and that, as I am well informed, occasioned his making almost a full Discovery: Though he went for France, as soon as he was let out of Newgate, being invited back with great Promises. I must thank him for his Justice to me in his last and most authentic Confession: He affirms on Oath, That all my Information was true. For the Confirmation of this, I appeal to any Member of Parliament that heard Mr. Crone’s or Lord Preston’s Confessions read before that honourable House. After this, it may seem strange to some, how the House came to be so angry with me. I beg Leave to inform them, That the Jacobites, by Mr. Crone’s going off, knew they had partly secured themselves from the just Power of the Law.”

CROSBY'S Case.

Rex versus Crosby, alias Philips. B. R.*

CROSBY was indicted for High Treason; and at the Trial at Bar he excepted against the Evidence of Mr. Aaron Smith, because he had been set in the Pillory upon a Judgment given against him in this Court, upon an Information, 34 Car. 2. the Record of which he produced. Mr. Solicitor-General Trevor and Mr. Cowper, on Behalf of Aaron Smith, agreed, That the Infamy was always a Consequence of the Guilt, and not of the Punishment; and therefore (by them) if an innocent Man hath an infamous Judgment given against him, for a Crime that does not deserve such Judgment, this will not render the Party infamous. Then for Application, they said, that the Crime of which Mr. Aaron Smith was accused, did not deserve such Judgment; and therefore shall not take away his Testimony. And Sir Samuel Eyre, Justice, seemed to be of that Opinion.

But Holt, Chief Justice, gave no Opinion as to this Point, saying, that he could not impeach the Record; but he was of Opinion, that the general Act of Pardon, 2 Wil. and Mar. gave Mr. Smith a new Credit, but did not work by way of Restoration, to restore him to his old Credit: As, if a Person be attainted of Felony, he is now incapable of making a Purchase to hold, or to give Evidence; but if the King pardons him, he is now become a new Creature, and may do both; but he is not restored to inherit to those Persons, to whom he was inheritable before: And the Difference is, between a Civil Disability, which the Pardon cannot cure, (Co. Lit. 234. Sir Ar. Ingram’s Case) and a Criminal Disability, which the Pardon may take away. And for these Reasons the Testimony of Mr. Aaron Smith was admitted.

But the principal Point of Treason charged upon Mr. Crosby being the writing of certain treasonable Papers, which the King’s Council endeavoured to prove by Comparison of Hands, having no other Evidence; the Prisoner, Crosby, produced the Copy of the Act of Parliament for the Reversal of the Attainder of Algernon Sidney, Esq; (Vide Vol. 8. p. 472.) in which it is declared, that the Comparison of Hands is not legal Evidence. Upon which the Jury found the Prisoner Not Guilty. — Mr. J. Foster, in his Reports of Crown Cases, p. 198. says, “ In Mr. Sidney’s Case, it was said, Scribere est agere. This is undoubtedly true under proper Limitations, but it was not applicable to his Case. Writing being a deliberate Act, and capable of satisfactory Proof, certainly may, under some Circumstances with Publication, be an Overt-Act of Treason. And I freely admit, that had the Papers found in Mr. Sidney’s Closet been plainly relative to the other treasonable Practices charged in the Indictment, they might have been read in Evidence against him, though not published. — But Papers not capable of such Connection, whilst they remain in the Hands of the Author unpublished, as Mr. Sidney’s did, will not make a Man a Traitor.”

* It is great Pity this Trial (if taken at large) could not be procured, for the Arguments of the Court and Council must have been curious; so have inserted this short Account from Lord Raymond’s Reports, Vol. 1. p. 39. See also Salkeld 689.

The Proceedings against the three Nonjuring Clergymen, Mr. Collier, Mr. Cook, and Mr. Snatt, for publickly absolving Sir William Perkins and Sir John Friend at Tyburn, April 3, 1696.

THE Editor of the State Trials, in Vol. 4. p. 660, says no more than this:

This Affair made a great Noise at that Time. Bishop Burnet, Vol. 2. p. 174, says, “A very unusual Instance of the Boldness of the Jacobites appeared upon that Occasion: These two had not changed their Religion, but still called themselves Protestants; so three of the Nonjuring Clergymen waited on them to Tyburn; two of them had been off with Friend, and one of them with Perkins; and all three, at the Place of Execution, joined to give them public Absolution, with an Imposition of Hands, in the View of all the People: A Strain of Impudence, that was as new as it was wicked! since these Persons died; owning the ill Designs they had been engaged in, and expressing no Sort of Repentance for them. So these Clergymen, in this solemn Absolution, made an open Declaration of their allowing and justifying these Persons in all they had been concerned in: Two of them were taken up, and censured for this in the King’s-Bench, the third made his Escape.” The Account published at that Time by Permission of the Sheriffs, is as follows:

An Account of what passed at the Execution of Sir William Perkins, and Sir John Friend, at Tyburn, on Friday, April 3, 1696.

THE Prisoners being drawn in a Sledge from Newgate to the Place of Execution, were permitted to have the Assistance of three Nonjuring Ministers of their own chusing, viz. Mr. Collier, Mr. Cook, and Mr. Snatt.

Sir William Perkins came first up into the Cart, and had some private Discourse with one of the Ministers.

Sir William Perkins. When must I deliver my Paper?

Minister. When all is over.

Then the Executioner went to put the Rope about Sir William Perkins’s Neck.

Sir William Perkins. May not I pray before it be put on?

Executioner. Yes, Sir, if you please.

Then Sir John Friend came into the Cart; and the three Ministers and Prisoners all kneeling down, Mr. Cook read some Prayers out of the Morning-Prayer, and the Office for Visitation of the Sick: And then the Ministers standing up, asked them, whether they were in Charity with all the World? And if they had offended any, whether they did ask them Forgiveness? And whether they did desire the Absolution of the Church? Upon their Answer, That they did; they all laid their Hands upon their Heads, and Mr. Cook pronounced the Absolution, which ended in these Words: And by his Authority committed to me, I absolve thee from all thy Sins, in the Name of the Father, &c.

Sir William Perkins. When are we to deliver our Papers?

Minister. Now, if you please.

Mr. Sheriff. Take what Time you please, Sir, for your Devotions, we will wait your Leisure.

Then the two Prisoners continued in their private Prayers, Sir William Perkins making use of the Prayers in the Whole Duty of Man, and Sir John Friend read some Prayer out of a written Paper; and afterwards, Sir William Perkins delivered to the Sheriffs a Paper.

Mr. Sheriff. If you require any more Time, you shall have it. You say this is your Paper?

Sir William Perkins. Yes, Sir; and I desire you to dispose of it as you think fit.

Mr. Sheriff. Have you any thing to say, by way of Confession or Denial, of the Fact for which ye come hither to suffer?

Sir William Perkins. What I think fit to say, is contained in that Paper.

Mr. Sheriff. If you desire any more Time, you may have it; you shall have your Liberty:

Then Sir John Friend held a Paper up.

Mr. Sheriff. What do you say, Sir John?

Sir John Friend. Sir, here is a Paper, I desire it may be printed; for I came here to die, and not to make a Speech; but to die, and to resign myself to God; and I desire it may be printed, for all People to see it. (For both their Speeches, see Vol. 4. p. 659, 660.) And I have no more to say, but to beg of God to receive my Soul; I resign my Soul to him.

Mr. Sheriff. The Lord have Mercy upon you.

Sir John Friend. I hope the Lord will have Mercy on me.

Mr. Sheriff. Sir John, if you desire any more Time, you shall have it; we will wait on you with great Willingness.

Sir John Friend. I thank you, Sir. Mr. Sheriff, I desire the Cart may not be too hasty to go away, ’till we give a Sign.

Mr. Sheriff. You shall have your own Time; take your Time, communicate your own Sign, and the Cart shall not go before.

Then the Ropes were tied about them.

Sir

Sir John Friend. I have no Animosity against any Man; I freely forgive all, and I hope God, for Christ's sake, will forgive me.

Then their Caps were put on.

Sir John Friend. My Saviour had a Crown of Thorns for me; the Lord receive my Soul; the Lord have Mercy upon me.

Then the Executioner asked them both Forgiveness; and they answered, We freely forgive you.

Sir John Friend. Will not the Things lie in my Way?

Executioner. I will remove them. If you please, tell me when I may pull your Caps over your Eyes.

Prisoners. When you will.

Sir William Perkins. The Lord receive my Spirit. Executioner, had I best hold up my Legs, or stand in the Cart when it goes away?

Executioner. It is best to stand, Sir, I think.

Sir William Perkins. But then my Feet will hang in the Cart.

Executioner. If you please, give me Notice when you will have the Cart go away.

Sir John Friend. Stretch forth thy Arms, O Lord, and receive my Soul, and carry it into Heaven, I beseech thee. Executioner; when we knock, go away.

And after a few Ejaculations, they gave the Sign, and the Cart drew away.

They both of them gave Money to the Executioner; and having hung above half an Hour; being a considerable Time after they were dead, they were cut down and quartered, according to the Sentence.

For this Act of theirs, Mr. Cook and Mr. Snatt were committed to Newgate, and ordered to be prosecuted by the Attorney-General; but Mr. Collier kept out of the Way, and was not taken. — On this Occasion, Mr. Collier published the following Defence of himself:

A Defence of the Absolution given to Sir William Perkins at the Place of Execution, April the 3d.

MY being present, and in some measure officiating, at the Place of Execution on Friday last, has been extremely misunderstood. The Weekly Intelligence, together with the Remarker, have censured this Action with a great deal of Liberty and Heat. I thank God I am not easily disturbed with intemperate Language, especially when it is given without Occasion. So that if Matters had gone no farther, I could have passed over the ill Usage, and said nothing. I confess, having received Notice that some Persons of Figure threatened me with Imprisonment, I took a little Care of myself; and as it happened, not without Reason: For on Monday about Twelve at Night, six or eight Persons rushed into my Lodgings, broke open a Trunk, and seized some Papers of Value, though perfectly inoffensive and foreign to their Purpose. And since, I understand there is a Bill found against me for High Misdemeanors. And now one would think I had done something very extraordinary.

I shall therefore make a brief Report of Matters of Fact, and leave the World to judge, whether all these Censures and Severities are deserved or not.

Sir William Perkins (whom I had not seen for four or five Years last past) after his Trial, desired me to come to him, in order to his Preparation for another World. I accordingly visited him in Newgate, as I thought myself obliged by my Character. I was put in the List of those who had Leave to see him by public Order, and had the first two Days the Liberty of conversing with him in private. Afterwards I was not permitted to speak or pray with him alone; a Keeper being always present. At last even this Permission was recalled, insomuch that I could never see him from Wednesday Morning, April the 1st; till Friday at the Place of Execution. Sir William, being under an Expectation of Death from the Time of his Sentence, had given me the State of his Conscience, and therefore desired the solemn Absolution of the Church might be pronounced to him by me the last Day. And understanding I was refused Admittance on Friday Morning, he sent me Word that he would gladly see me at the Place of Execution. I went thither, and gave him the Absolution he requested, it being impracticable for me to do it elsewhere. This Office I performed Word for Word in Form, as it stands in the Visitation of the Sick. And now where lies the great Crime of all this? When a Man has declared his Sorrow for all the Faults and Miscarriages of his Life, and qualified himself for the Privilege of Absolution, with what Justice could it be denied him? Ought not dying Persons to be supported in their last Agonies, and pass into the other World with all the Advantage the Church can give them? I am surprized, so regular a Proceeding as this should give so much Offence, and make so much Noise as I perceive it has done. Some People, I understand, are displeas'd at the Office being performed with Imposition of Hands. Now this is not only an innocent, but an ancient Ceremony of Absolution. It was the general Practice of the Primitive Church in such Cases, long before there were any Exceptions to the Roman Communion. It is, in the Opinion of several Fathers and good modern Expositors, referred to by the Apostle, 1 Tim. 5. 22. It is likewise prescribed the Assisting Presbyters in our own Ordination Form. But I suppose I need say no more in Defence of this Circumstance. To proceed: Others seem very much shocked at the Thing itself; and think it a strange Presumption to admit a Person charged with so high a Crime, to the Benefit of Absolution. With Submission, this is concluding a great deal too fast. Are all People damned that are cast in a Capital Indictment? If so, to what Purpose are they visited by Divines, why are they exhorted to Repentance, and have Time allowed them to fit them for Death? But if they may be acquitted hereafter, notwithstanding their Condemnation here; if they may be recovered by Recollection, by Repentance, and Resignation, why should the Church refuse them her Pardon on Earth, when she believes it is passed in Heaven? The Power of the Keys was given for this Purpose, that the Ministers of God might bind or loose, as the Disposition of the Person required. The latter I sincerely believed to be Sir William's Case: I judged him to have a full Right to all the Privileges of Communion: And therefore had I denied him Absolution upon his Request, I had failed in my Duty, and gone against the Authority both of the Ancient and English Church. If it is said that the Nature of this Gentleman's Charge required his being absolved in private; to this I answer, answer, So he had been, had I been permitted to visit him the last Morning: But this Liberty was refused me more than once; and I hope I shall not be blamed for Impossibilities of other Men's making. In short, he seemed very desirous of Absolution at my Hands, as being the only Person acquainted with his Condition. Privately it was not in my Power to give it him; so that he must either receive it publickly from me, or not at all. But Sir William confessed himself acquainted with the intended Assassination. Pray, did he confess it to me, and have I revealed any Part of his Confession? Then I had been guilty of High Misdemeanor indeed: I had broke the 113th Canon, and been pronounced Irregular by the Church; and he that falls under Irregularity, is for ever after incapable of executing the Office of a Priest. (Dr. Heylin's Introduction to Cyprian, Angl. p. 6.) I confess there is an Exception in the Canon, but that does not reach the Case in Hand, even upon the largest Supposition. Well! But Sir William owned this Charge before the Committee. How could I know that? I neither saw Sir William after his Examination, till Friday Noon, nor the Votes which mentioned it till after that Time. But he confessed it in his Paper. What then? Which Way does the Paper concern me? It is well known Sir William Perkins was a Man of Sense, and bred to Law and Letters, and needed no Help to assist him in writing a few Lines. Besides, I was not permitted to come near him for more than two Days before he suffered: Neither was he allowed so much as Pen and Ink till the last Morning. Then it was that he penned his Speech, as I am told by those who were present; and having read it before the Keeper, delivered a Copy of it to a Friend, which was not shewed to me till after the Execution. Indeed, I did believe he would leave some Paper behind him, both because it is customary upon such sad Occasions, and because on Tuesday Night, when he expected Death on Wednesday, he desired Pen, Ink and Paper, for that Purpose.

And now, after all, I desire to know in what single Circumstance I have misbehaved myself, or done any thing unbecoming my Profession? It is very hard a Man must be persecuted for performing the Obligations of his Office, and the Duties of common Friendship and Humanity. As for any Methods of Murder, I dislike them no less than those who rail loudest; and nothing but a mercenary Malice could suggest the contrary: But if the Functions of the Priesthood, and the Assistances of Religion, and the reading the Public Liturgy, are grown a Crime, I am not concerned at the Imputation. I hope the complying Clergy will take some Care to check the Disorders, and inform the Ignorance of their People a little better. If they are unreprieved for these slanderous Excesses, their Pastors must one Day expect to account for it.

As for those in Power, it is possible they may have been governed by Mis-reports, and sudden Repentment: If so, second Thoughts, and the Reason of the Case, will put a Stop to their Severities. And that this may be the Issue of the Business, I think myself obliged to wish, as well for their sakes as my own.

April 9th, 1696.

JER. COLLIER.

On this Occasion the following Declaration of the Archbishops, &c. appeared:

A Declaration of the Sense of the Archbishops and Bishops, now in and about London, upon the Occasion of their Attendance in Parliament, concerning the irregular and scandalous Proceedings of certain Clergymen, at the Execution of Sir John Friend and Sir William Perkins.

WE the Archbishops and Bishops, now in and about London, upon Occasion of our Attendance in Parliament, having seen a printed Paper, intituled, A true Copy of the Papers delivered by Sir John Friend and Sir William Perkins to the Sheriffs of London and Middlesex, at Tyburn, the Place of Execution, April 3, 1696: And being also certainly informed of the most irregular Behaviour of Mr. Cook, Mr. *Collier, and Mr. Snatt, in pretending to absolve the said Criminals at their Execution, to the great Scandal of the Church, and of our holy Religion, have therefore thought ourselves obliged to declare our Sense of the same, as here followeth:

1. As to the Paper before mentioned, we cannot but observe, that in that Part to which Sir John Friend is intituled, among many other Things there delivered as his private Opinion, (for which we must leave him to God) there are mingled some Things concerning the Church of England, to the great Dishonour and Reproach of it. That venerable Name is, by the Author of that Paper, appropriated to that Part of our Church which hath separated itself from the Body; and more particularly, to a Faction of them who are so furiously bent upon the restoring of the late King, that they seem not to regard by what Means it is to be effected. We have a sad Instance of it in this very Person, who (as was deposed at his Trial) was privy to the horrid Design of Assassination, and yet neither discovered it, nor shewed any Dislike of it, but as he was afraid it might ruin King James and his Affairs; and was ready also, together with others of the same Christian Principle (as the Author of his Paper is bold to call it,) to act in Conjunction with an Army of French Papists, for the Ruin of their Country, and the Extirpation of that Religion which they themselves do profess.

2. As for Sir William Perkins, who also professed to die in the Communion of the Church of England, we cannot think he meant any thing else by it, than that he adhered to the same violent Faction: Being assured (as we are by very good Information,) that both he and Sir John Friend had withdrawn themselves from our public Assemblies some Time before their Death; which makes us the less wonder to find in both their Papers so light, and even favourable, a Mention of that most inhuman Design of assassinating his Sacred Majesty: And especially in that of Sir William Perkins, who, though he was publickly convicted of his having engaged so many in that horrible Sin, yet, after all, could think to clear himself of it with this wretched Excuse: 'Tis true I was privy to the Design upon the Prince, but was not to act in it. Blessed be God, there never was any of our Church, that in any Change of Times could have this laid to his Charge, that he was so much as privy to a Design of Assassination.

Lastly, For those Clergymen that took upon them to absolve these Criminals at the Place of Execution, by laying all three together their Hands upon their Heads, and publicly pronouncing a Form of Absolution; as their Manner of doing this was extremely insolent, and without Precedent, either in our Church, or any other that we know of; so the Thing itself was altogether irregular.

The Rubrick in our Office of the Visitation of the Sick, from whence they took the Words they then used, and upon which, if upon any thing in our Liturgy, they must ground this their Proceeding, gave them no Authority nor no Pretence for the absolving these Persons; nay, as they managed the Affair, they acted in this Absolution far otherwise than is there directed.

That Rubrick is concerning sick Persons, and it is there required, First, That the sick Person shall be moved to make a special Confession of his Sins, if he feel his Conscience troubled with any weighty Matter; and then, after such Confession, the Priest shall absolve him, if he humbly and heartily desire it. But here they absolved, and that publicly, Persons condemned by Law for execrable Crimes, without so much as once moving them at that Time to make a special Confession of their Sins, at least for those Sins for which they were condemned. And on the other Side, here were Persons absolved that did not humbly desire Absolution, as feeling any such weighty Matter to trouble their Conscience; but on the contrary, in Sir John Friend's Paper it is declared, that he had a great deal of Satisfaction in suffering for that Cause, which he firmly believed to be the Cause of God, and true Religion.

If these Ministers knew not the State of these Men's Souls, before they gave them Absolution, as it is manifest two of them, Mr. Snatt and Mr. Cook, did not as to Sir William Perkins, (they having since declared that they had not spoke with Sir William till they were at the Place of Execution,) how could they, without manifest Transgression of the Church's Order, as well as the prophane Abuse of the Power Christ hath left with his Ministers, absolve them from all their Sins?

If they were acquainted with these Men's Sentiments declared in their Papers, then they must look upon them, either as hardened Impenitents, or as Martyrs.

We are so charitable to believe that they would not absolve them under the former Notion, for that had been, in Effect, sealing them to Damnation: But if they held these Men to be Martyrs, then their absolving them in that Manner was a Justification of those grievous Crimes for which these Men suffered, and an open Affront to the Laws both of Church and State.

Upon the Consideration of these Things, and for the doing of Right to our Church, which may otherwise suffer, among such as are Strangers to our Constitution, by the evil Principles and Practices both of the aforesaid Criminals and the three Clergymen that assisted them, who all pretended to be Members of the Church of England; we do declare, That we disown and detest all such Principles and Practices, looking upon them as highly schismatical and seditious, dangerous both to the Church and State, and contrary to the true Doctrine and Spirit of the Christian Religion. And we also take this Occasion to warn and exhort all the People committed to our Charge, to beware of such Seducers, and to avoid them; lest (as the Apostle St. Peter speaks) they be led away with the Error of the Wicked, and fall from their stedfast Adherence to the Principles of the true Church of England, as it was established at the blessed Reformation of Religion, and as by God's especial Providence it continues to this Day. A farther Defence of the Absolution given to Sir William Perkins, occasioned by a Paper, intituled, A Declaration of the Archbishops and Bishops, &c.

ABOUT a Fortnight since I published the foregoing Defence of the Absolution given to Sir William Perkins. 'Tis true, the Vindication was not drawn out into any great Length, neither did I imagine it necessary. That which was said, was in my Opinion sufficient to satisfy any candid and impartial Reader. If the Argument was any where over-contracted, it was in that Part which mentions Imposition of Hands. Here I confess the Proofs were but generally named, and the Force and Improvement of them left in some measure to Collection. My Desire to undeceive the People, and to silence their Clamours as soon as might be, the Disadvantage of my Retirement, and the Plainness of the Case, were the Reasons why I was no fuller upon that Head: But now I have a fresh Opportunity to treat the Point more at large, the late Declaration, &c. of the Bishops having given me a just Occasion to resume the Argument. I must own the Perusal of this Declaration surprized me very much. I could not imagine these Reverend Prelates would have published so unsupported a Censure; nor engaged their Character so far in this Affair. I am almost amazed an innocent Conduct should be thus misconstrued, and the Charge run so high without Proof, or Provocation to defend it.

The Declaration begins with some Remarks upon the Papers of Sir William Perkins and Sir John Friend: These Exceptions I shall pass over, as being unconcerned in their Defence. Indeed, my Resolution upon the whole is, to engage no farther than the Justification of my own Conduct; as being unwilling to have any unnecessary Disputes with these Reverend Prelates.

The pretended Irregularity objected against Mr. Snatt, Mr. Cook, and myself, relates wholly to the Absolution given to those two Gentlemen at the Place of Execution. The Performance of this Office, the Bishops are pleased to say, was extremely insolent and without Precedent in the Manner, and altogether irregular in the Thing.

I shall endeavour to justify my Practice against every Point of the Accusation, and prove the Absolution defensible, both with respect to Manner and and Form, to Persons and Occasion. And 1st, with respect to the Manner. And here I shall make good three Things.

1st, That giving Absolution with Imposition of Hands was the general Practice of the ancient Church.

2^{dly}, That the Performance of this Ceremony was allowed to Priests, and sometimes to Deacons, as well as Bishops.

3^{dly}, That Imposition of Hands is enjoined the Assisting Presbyters by our own Church in the Office of Ordination, and by Parity of Reason is fairly applicable to the present Case.

First, That giving of Absolution with Imposition of Hands, was the general Practice of the ancient Church.

To begin with Tertullian, who lived in the Beginning of the third Century. This Father understands that Place of the Apostle, Lay Hands suddenly on no Man, (1 Tim. 5. 22.) of the Offices of Penance and Absolution. (L. de Pudic. cap. 18.) And (cap. 22.) he alludes to the same Custom in these Words, Carnem laniatam prosterrens, as Albaspineus observes, (Albasp. Obser. l. 2. p. 97. Not. in Tertull. p. 181.) Indeed the Design of his Book, De Pudicitia, plainly determines the Author to this Sense. Here he treats professedly of those who were to be finally excluded from Church Communion, and denied the Discipline of Penance. He disputes nothing about Confirmation, or Orders; so that it is evident the Imposition of Hands, mentioned by him, must relate to Penitential Absolution.

St. Cyprian's Council of Carthage is express to the same Purpose. Here Nemesianus, Crescens, Secundinus, and Vincentius, Bishops of Thubuni, Cirta, Carpi, and Tiberis, all of them agree, that the Church's Peace, and the Expedients of Reconciliation, were to pass through this Form of Imposition of Hands.

The 80th Canon of the fourth Council of Carthage enjoins, That during the whole Time of Abstinence, (I suppose either stated or occasional) the Priests (Sacerdotes) should lay their Hands upon the Penitents.

The 11th Canon of the third Council of Toledo, in the Directions for the Methods of Penance, is positive for the frequent Use of this Ceremony; which made Albaspineus conclude, That Absolution-Prayers and Imposition of Hands were repeated and customary in such Cases. (Albasp. Obser. l. 2. p. 86.)

To conclude this Point. The learned Dr. Hammond, in his Annotations on the Text above-mentioned, (1 Tim. 5. 22.) refers the laying on of Hands to Absolution. "The Apostle (says he) exhorts Timothy that he should not make too much Haste to receive those who were under Censures, to Absolution. For that was the Thing which would most probably make him Partaker, or guilty of their Sins, which the Censures were designed to reform in them, but would not do so, if, before they had approved their Repentance and Reformation, they were received to the Peace of the Church." This learned Divine cites a great many Authorities in Defence of his Opinion, which the Reader may consult at his Leisure.

Secondly, The pronouncing the Absolution with Imposition of Hands, is no Encroachment upon the Episcopal Authority, but plainly allowed to the Order of Presbyters.

This Point I shall make good from several plain Testimonies of St. Cyprian, whose Authority must be granted to be unexceptionable, both with respect to the Antiquity and Character of the Person. Indeed it is to this Father that we are principally obliged for the Remains we have of the Discipline and Government of the Primitive Church.

Now St. Cyprian is categorical in the Case, and affirms roundly, that in lesser Crimes than those of the Lapsed, the Penitent could not be admitted to full Communion, unless the Bishops and Clergy had laid their Hands upon him. Nisi prius illi ab Episcopo et Clero manus fuerit imposita. (Ep. 17. p. 39. Ed. Oxon.) Now where the Bishops and Clergy are thus contradistinguished, the Order of Priests must be comprehended in the latter, in the most restrained Construction. I might produce his 15th and 16th Ep. (p. 34, 37.) for the same Purpose; but because these Testimonies run much in the Words of the former, I shall wave the Recital.

This Father, in his 18th Ep. tells his Priests and Deacons; That they need not expect his coming Home, to reconcile the Lapsed; but if any of the Laity were in Danger of Death, a Priest, and if a Priest could not be had; and the Necessity was extreme; a Deacon, was a sufficient Authority to hear their Confession, to lay Hands upon them, and consign them to the Peace of the Church. The same Advice, upon the same Occasion, is repeated, (Ep. 19. p. 41.) From whence it is evident, that Imposition of Hands was no reserved incommunicable Privilege of the Bishops, but delegated as low as the Deacons, upon emergent Necessity, and visible Approaches of Death. These Authorities of St. Cyprian are all double charged, and prove two Points at once. They prove, that Imposition of Hands was a general Appendix to Absolution, and that it was within the Commission of the Priest to officiate in the Ceremony. To proceed:

In the 13th Canon of the first Council of Nice, the Viaticum is ordered to be given to those who are at the Point of Death. And by the Viaticum, Albaspineus proves, that Absolution with Imposition of Hands was meant, and not the Eucharist: And that such an Absolution might be given by those who were no more than Priests. (Albasp. Not. in quosdam Can. p. 131.) I could amass a great many more Testimonies, were it necessary; but I conceive, what has been said already, may be sufficient to vindicate my Practice from the Charge of Encroachment and Singularity.

Thirdly, Imposition of Hands is enjoined the Assisting Presbyters by our own Church in the Office of Ordination, and by Parity of Reason is fairly applicable to the present Case.

If our Church had thought the Imposition of Hands too much for the Character of Priests, she would not have prescribed them a Share in it at her Ordinations. But since she has allowed them this Liberty in the most solemn Exercises of Authority, why should she deny it in inferior Cases? To assist in the Conveyance of an Authority seems a greater Mark of Power, than the executing any Branch of the Authority conveyed. If the Presbyters are permitted to lay their Hands upon the Clergy, why not, à fortiori, upon the Laity? St. Hierom affirms plainly (Ep. ad Evagr.) that the Powers of a Priest comprehend those of a Bishop, excepting in the Point of Ordination.

Our Church has never condemned this Father's Assertion; why then may not the first absolve with Imposition of Hands; no less than the other?

But there is no Appointment of this Ceremony in the Absolution-Rubrick. True: Neither is there any Prohibition. The Rubrick is perfectly silent both as to Posture and Gesture, and yet some Circumstances of this Nature must of Necessity be used.

Now since our Church allows the Priest Imposition of Hands in another Case, and does not forbid it in this; Is it any Harm if our Liberty moves upward, and determines itself by general Usage and primitive Practice? Our Church has always professed a Regard for the Patterns of Antiquity: We cannot do her a greater Honour, than by conforming to the Solemnities of the purest Ages, than by making the Discipline of Fathers and Councils the Rule of our Behaviour*: Especially when we are not bound up by National Law, and particular Constitution. Thus much for the Manner.

I come now to justify the Thing and the Occasion.

It is objected by these Reverend Prelates, that the three assisting Clergymen pronounced a Form of Absolution, &c. With Submission, I hope a Form is better than no Form; especially when it was a Form Rubrically appointed; a Form drawn up by the public Authority of the Church, confirmed by Canon, and Act of Parliament; a Form the most pertinent and proper to the Occasion of any in the Liturgy. I am sorry to see the solemn Offices of Religion mentioned with such seeming Coldness, and Abatements of Expression. Were it not that I am unwilling to give these Reverend Prelates the Trouble of a Question, I would gladly understand, what Form they could have fixed on more suitable to so sad an Occasion? I am sure that Form of Absolution is the most solemn and authoritative of any in the Service-Book. Now if ever the Church exerts herself, ought it not to be in Cases of the greatest Necessity? Can her most comfortable Administrations, and the highest Acts of her Authority, be better employed than for the Relief of dying Persons, who are combating the King of Terrors, and stand just upon the Brink of Eternity? Upon the whole, I am surprized they should say the Rubrick gave us no Pretence of Authority to absolve those Persons. Does not the Rubrick give the Priest a Power to pronounce the Absolution, and to judge of the Condition of the Penitent? This cannot be denied. And why then had we no Pretence of Authority? Because the Rubrick relates to the Sick. To this I answer; Had the Church left us a stated Office for Persons Condemned, and we had refused to make Use of it, there had been some Force in the Objection; but as the Matter stands, I humbly conceive there is none at all. The Church, without Question, would have Condemned Persons taken care of, as well as others, and their Spiritual Necessities supplied. And if so, is it not more Respect to the Church to officiate in Forms of her own setting forth, than in private and unauthorized Compositions? And if the Function was to be performed in the public Devotions, I desire to know what Part of them could have been more proper than the Office of Visitation of the Sick? If we consider the Design of the Church, and especially the Rubrick before the Absolution, we shall find that she intended this Office to prepare People for the other World, and considered them rather as dying, than likely to recover. This appears evidently from the Questions and Advices ordered to be asked and given; so that wherever Death is in View, the Office cannot be unseasonable, nor misapplied. And can any Persons be more certain of Death than those who are publickly condemned, who lie under fatal Sentence, and irresistible Power; who have the Force of the County to dispatch them, and are just ready to receive the Stroke? As to the previous Questions, they were put and answered, the Absolution was desired, and the Confession received in Prison; and in short, the Church's Directions were observed in every Particular. But we did not move them to make a special Confession of their Sins at that Time. With Submission, Where lies the Necessity, or even the Expediency of such a Practice? Does our Church oblige dying Persons to public Confession? Does she require them to throw open the Retirements of Conscience, and the Secrets of private Life, to the View of the World? I am at a Loss to understand why we should be charged with Omissions on such Accounts as these.

The Declaration, &c. proceeds with great Vehemence, and charges us with manifest Transgression of the Church's Order, and prophane Abuse of the Authority of Christ. These are hard Words, but I hope altogether undeserved. It is true, they instance only in Mr. Snatt, and Mr. Cock, but I must own the Objection lies equally against myself; for I never saw Sir John Friend during his whole Imprisonment. But in assisting at his Absolution, so far as laying on my Hand amounts to, I did no more than what is easily defensible. I grant I had no immediate and particular Knowledge of his Condition, neither was it necessary. Our Church, in Conformity to Antiquity, has made the Priest the proper Judge of the Qualifications of the Penitent, and supposes him fit to be trusted, and believed in that Affair. Now Mr. Snatt and Mr. Cook, (upon whose Judgment and Integrity I can very well depend) had given me a general Account of Sir John's pious Disposition, and that he was well prepared for all the Assistance the Church could give him. The having so good Information from first Hands, from proper and authorized Judges, is sufficient to warrant my Part in Sir John's Absolution. This, besides what has been said, I shall make good from two parallel Instances.

First, It is well known that Bishops of the ancient Church used to give a Sort of Certificates to those that travelled; by virtue of which, they were not only entertained and accommodated, but admitted to full Communion all over Christendom. (Albasp. Not. in Can. p. 115.) From whence we may observe, that personal Acquaintance, and particular Examination, are not necessary to give a Right to the Privileges of Christianity. Where the Credentials are good, the Church is to inquire no farther; she is to presume upon the Probity of the Person recommended, and to treat him accordingly.

* Bishop Sanderfon, that eminent Casuist, about a Day before his Death, desired his Chaplain, Mr. Pullen, to give him Absolution; and at his performing that Office, he pulled off his Cap, that Mr. Pullen might lay his Hand upon his bare Head. Walton's Life of Bishop Sanderfon, p. 49. Folio Edit.

Secondly, Our own Church, in some of the highest Administrations, acts upon Principles of Trust and Confidence. She conveys her Privileges, and exercises her Authority, without always insisting on personal Inquiry and immediate Proof. At the giving of Holy Orders, neither the Bishops, nor the assisting Presbyters, are always personally acquainted with those they Ordain. The Prudence of our Church does not tie us up to such unreasonable Rigours. Both Practice, and the Ordination Form, suppose the contrary. And why then may not the Priest assist in Absolution as well as Orders, without any previous Experiment of the State of the Person? Why may not he in the first, as well as the latter Branch of his Authority, act upon the Warrant of unexceptionable Testimony? By all Parity of Reason and Force of Consequence, the Practice is no less defensible in one Case, than in the other.

If it is objected, That the joining of all the three Clergymen in the Imposition of Hands is unprecedented, and exceptionable; to this I answer, That if the Action was lawful, singly performed, I cannot imagine how a Concurrence of more authorized Persons should make it otherwise? Is there any Harm in Union and Solemnity? Or can Religion be treated with too many Circumstances of Advantage? What Canon is there that stints the Assistance to One, and forbids a Plurality of Persons? Timothy had the Hands of the Presbytery laid upon him, (1 Tim. 4. 14.) which, without Doubt, exceeded the Number now objected. Our Church, at her Ordination, allows this Ceremony to all the Presbyters present. And in the very Case of Absolution, the Penitent was to receive Imposition of Hands from the Bishop and Clergy; as appears from the Testimony of St. Cyprian above-mentioned. Farther,

These Reverend Prelates argue, that we must either look on the Persons absolved as Impenitents, or Martyrs; and they make their Advantage of each Branch of the Supposition. But, with Submission, I see no Necessity of granting the Disjunction. For there may be a third Way of considering the Matter. To speak to my own Case: I absolved Sir William Perkins as a Penitent; and I suppose every body must be absolved under that Consideration: For Absolution supposes both Sin, and Repentance, in the Notion of it. But as for the Matter of Sir William's Repentance, that is never likely to be known from me. Neither am I in the least affected with the Bishops Inference. For supposing I received a defective Confession, am I accountable for that? However, I neither do nor am obliged to declare my Opinion in this Matter. But thus far I am positive, that there was nothing confessed to me, which the Canon obliges me to reveal: And what the Canon does not enjoin me to discover, it enjoins me not to discover. (Can. 113. Vid. first Defence.) And so there is an End of this Dispute.

I hope by this Time it may appear, that I am neither unfurnished with Reason, or Precedent, to justify what I have done. However, I shall give one late Instance for the whole Case, and so conclude.

At the Execution of Mr. Ashton, Jan. 1690, Absolution was given him in the same Form, with Imposition of Hands, at the same Place, and upon the same Occasion; and a justifying Paper left by the Person that suffered. Now at that Time there were no Exceptions made either to Manner, or Thing. The Performance was so far from displeasing, that the Sheriff gave his Thanks for the Solemnity of the Office. There were no Complaints either at Lambeth, or Whitehall, no public Invectives, no seizing of Body and Goods; in short, no Signs of the least Dissatisfaction. And who could imagine; that the bare repeating of an Action should raise such a Storm upon us now, which was so perfectly inoffensive before? To punish in this Manner, without Warning or Precedent, without Canon or Law, is (with Submission) somewhat unintelligible.

And now having defended myself, I shall reply nothing to all the unkind Reflections, and tragical Language of the Declaration. It is probably within my Power, to turn some of these Reverend Prelates Artillery upon them. But my Regard to their Character, and Inclination not to displease, makes me wave the Advantage.

However, their extraordinary Usage has done me the Honour of an Opportunity to forgive them, which I thank God I heartily do.

P. S. I have just now received a Sheet, called, An Answer to my Defence, &c. As for that little which is material in this Paper, it is already satisfied, and I do not love needless Repetitions. And therefore to begin and end in a Word with this Answerer; If he has any thing remarkable, it is, in my Opinion, his Ill Language; and that I can both pity and despise. April 25.

There were several Pamphlets published on this Occasion, against and in Defence of this Proceeding, but these are sufficient to shew the Nature of the Controversy.

In July following, Mr. Cook and Mr. Snatt were brought to the Court of King's-Bench, and the Proceedings against them are thus briefly related in Comberbach's Reports, p. 382.

Sitting in Middlesex, coram Holt, Chief Justice,

Rex versus Shadrach Cook & Will. Snatt, Clericos.
Indictment for absolving Traitors.

“ UPON an Indictment setting forth, that “ Sir John Friend and Sir William Perkins
“ being attainted, and about to be executed at “ Tyburn, for High Treason, &c. the Defendants conspiring and intending (as much as in “ them lay) to justify, or at least to extenuate
“ and lessen their Crimes, and to induce his “ Majesty's Subjects to believe that they died “ rather as Martyrs than as Traitors, and to “ incite the King's Subjects to commit the like “ Treasons, they did take upon them to absolve,
“ and did pronounce a Form of Absolution of “ them the said Sir William Perkins and Sir John “ Friend, without any Repentance, or any Signs
“ of Repentance, by them given.

“ It was proved, that the Defendants asked
“ the Criminals the several Questions directed by “ the Rubrick in the Office of Visitation of the “ Sick, and Mr. Cook pronounced the Words of “ Absolution of one of the Traitors; Mr. Snatt,
“ and one Mr. Collier, (who is not now indicted)
“ laying their Hands upon his Head, and after

“ the Words pronounced, saying; Amen; and “ Mr. Collier pronounced the Words as to the “ other Traitor, they all three laying on their “ Hands, &c. It was proved; that the Defen“ dants were earnestly requested by Sir William “ Perkins and Sir John Friend, to assist them at “ the Place of Execution; and therefore the “ Jury were directed to acquit them of Con“ spiracy, (though the Attorney-General said the “ Indictment was not for Conspiracy, and Con- “ spirantes was put adjectively only to introduce
 “ the other Matter; and therefore was not “ material:) And Holt directed the Jury; that “ this Proceeding of the Defendants was certainly “ scandalous and irregular; for if the Criminals
 “ had before made a private Confession, the “ Absolution should have been private likewise;
 “ but if they would give a public Absolution;
 “ they ought to have required as public Con“ fession, and particularly with respect to those “ Crimes for which they were attainted, being “ so notorious, &c. However, if the Jury were
 “ of Opinion they did it only ignorantly, and by “ Mistake, (in which Case it is properly conu“ sible in the Spiritual Court) then to acquit
 “ them; but if they did it with a Design to “ affront the Government, and to vilify the “ Justice of the Nation, then to find them “ Guilty: But at the Instance of the Defendants “ Council, it was directed to be found Specially,
 “ that Snatt laid his Hand on the Head, and was “ assistant, while the other pronounced the Words
 “ of Absolution, and afterwards Snatt said, Amen,
 “ (it being laid quod pronuntiaverunt). And “ accordingly the Jury acquitted them of the “ Conspiracy, and found Cook guilty of the rest,
 “ and as to Snatt, ut supra *.

When this Special Verdict was argued, or how this Matter ended, does not appear: But at the Sale of the late Earl of Clarendon's Manuscripts, in Covent-Garden, April 1763, the following Argument was purchased in Manuscript.

The King against Cook and Snatt.

IT is an Indictment for a Misdemeanor on which a Special Verdict is found. I am, by your Lordship's Appointment, Council for the Defendants.

The Indictment sets forth, That whereas Sir John Friend and Sir William Perkins were severally convicted and attainted of High Treason, in conspiring the Death of the King, and adhering to his Enemies, and according to due Course of Law; and Judgment thereon severally given, were drawn to Tyburn, to be there put to Death; Jeremy Collier, and these two Defendants, well knowing the Premises, but intending to withdraw the King's Subjects from their Allegiance, and to incite them to commit the like Treasons, at the Gallows, being in the Cart with Sir John Friend and Sir William Perkins, and immediately before their Execution, conspiring, designing, and intending that execrable, horrible, and detestable High Treason, for which Sir John Friend and Sir William Perkins were attainted and then instantly to die according to due Course of Law, to justify, or at least to extenuate, diminish, or set at nought; and to insinuate into the King's Subjects, and persuade them, that Sir John Friend and Sir William Perkins were about to die innocent and undeservedly, and rather as Martyrs than Traitors; and to incite the King's Subjects to commit the like Treasons, unlawfully and contumaciously, as Priests of the Church of England, in the Presence and Sight of a great Concourse of People, and in the Hearing of a great many of them, laying their Hands on the Heads of Sir John Friend and Sir William Perkins in the said Cart, then and there took upon themselves to absolve them, and did pronounce them to be absolved, from all their Sins, without any Repentance by the said Sir John Friend and Sir William Perkins, or either of them, for the High Treason aforesaid first declared.

To this Indictment these two Defendants pleaded Not Guilty: And the Issue being tried before your Lordship, the Jury find this Special Verdict, That Cook, Snatt, and Collier laid their Hands on Sir John Friend, and Cook pronounced the Absolution, and Collier and Snatt said, Amen: That Collier and these two Defendants laid their Hands on Sir William Perkins, and Collier pronounced the Absolution, and Cook and Snatt said, Amen: And that Cook and Snatt assisted, and assented to the said Absolution.

As to the Conspiracy, they find the Defendants Not Guilty; and as to all the rest of the Indictment, they find the Defendants Guilty: But whether, on the whole Matter, the Defendants, or either of them, be guilty of the Matters and Things charged on them in the Indictment (besides the Conspiracy) or no, the Jury pray the Advice of the Court. And thereupon it now comes before your Lordship. And

I hope, with Submission to your Lordship, as this Indictment is, these Defendants shall be discharged. And to that End I shall crave Leave humbly to lay before your Lordship some Considerations on these three Points:

First, Whether what is laid in this Indictment will amount to an Offence?

Secondly, If it be an Offence, I shall humbly submit it to your Lordship, Whether the Examination of it doth not belong to another Jurisdiction? And,

* 5 Modern, p. 363. reports the Case thus:

Term Mich. 9 W. 3. B. R. 1697. Rex versus Cook, Snatt & Collier.

“ They were found Guilty upon an Indictment for the following Crime, ff. Sir John Friend and Sir William Perkins were convicted for High Treason, in conspiring the Death of the King; and the Defendants, being present with them at the Place of Execution, did, all of them, lay their Hands on Sir John Friend, who shewed no Repentance for the Crime for which he was about to die; and Cook pronounced the Absolution, and Snatt and Collier said, Amen.

“ That they all three likewise laid their Hands on Sir William Perkins, who was likewise impenitent of this Crime; and Collier pronounced the Absolution, and Cook and Snatt said, Amen; and that they all assisted and assented to the said Absolution.

“ The Jury made a Special Conclusion in their Verdict, Whether the laying on the Hands of three, and but one at a Time pronouncing the Absolution, makes them all guilty of the whole Matter? Adjourn.

Thirdly, If it should be an Offence, and punishable in this Court, yet there can be no Judgment given against them on this Indictment.

But before I come to these Points, I must crave Leave to explain what I take to be the Meaning of one Expression in the Indictment, and that is, Absque aliqua penitentia per eos pro alta prodicione prædicta prius declarata. By penitentia, though it usually amongst the Canonists signifies Penance, and sometimes Repentance, Absolution and Penance, yet in this Place I take it for Repentance only. And by the Words pro alta prodicione prædicta prius declarata, is meant, publickly declared for that particular Offence. For on the Evidence it appeared, there was a general Repentance of all their Sins; and there might have been a private, particular Repentance of this very Treason to the Priests, whilst they were in the Prison, according to the Rule of the Canonists, Posse in una die confessionem audiri, et in altera injungi penitentiam: As I find it cited by the greatest Casuist and best Author I have met with on this Occasion, Valerius Reginaldus de Requisitis in Confessione, l. 8. n. 11. fol. 230. But when this was objected at the Trial, the King's Council answered, The Repentance ought to be as public as the Absolution. Therefore, to reduce it all to a Case on this Indictment, I take it, these Gentlemen (especially Mr. Cook, for Mr. Snatt's Case doth somewhat differ) did publickly absolve Sir John Friend and Sir William Perkins, as they were about to be executed for High Treason, without their particular Repentance publickly declared for the Crimes for which they suffered. And I shall humbly submit it to your Lordship, whether this be any Offence in these Gentlemen, or in either of them. They were Persons, that by Order, at least by Leave of the Court when Sir John Friend and Sir William Perkins were attainted, were permitted and appointed to officiate with the condemned Criminals to prepare them for another World, when they were about to leave this by the Judgment of our Law. Accordingly they officiated, and were several Times with the condemned Criminals in the Prison; where we may very well presume, that they brought their Penitents to a particular Confession and Repentance, though we could not prove it at the Trial; because the Penitent was dead, and the Absolver the Person indicted.

And besides, the Absolver was not obliged to discover the Confession; nay, it is expressly forbidden by the 113th Canon of our Church, made by the Convocation in the Year 1603; which was called by the King's Writ, and confirmed under the Great Seal, according to the Form of the Statute 25 H. 8. c. 19. as my Lord Vaughan tells us in his Reports, fol. 329. And the King or Convocation, but certainly both of them with their joint Power, may make Orders and Ordinances, which shall bind all the King's Subjects, but more especially the Clergy, as may plainly be inferred from the Statute 25 H. 8. c. 19. And so are our Books, 21 E. 4. 45. Bro. Abr. Ordinary, pl. 1. Moor 755, 783. 2 Cro. 37. Noy 100. and 2 Ventr. 44. And so hath been the Practice, in the first Volume of the Histcry of the Reformation, fol. 225. and the second Volume, fol. 60, 69, and 70. In a Case of this Nature, I must beg Leave of your Lordship to make use of the Writings of Divines and other Authors, and not strictly confine myself to our Books of Common Law: For our Law Books are silent in this Case; and indeed I do not find any other Authors speaking directly to the Point. Therefore, I must be forced to look into the Nature of Absolution, the Power of the Clergy, the Practice of Divines, and other collateral Matters, for some Light herein; which makes me dread growing tedious, and becoming very tiresome to your Lordship's Patience.

And, my Lord, as to this particular Case, these Canons are in some Manner confirmed by Act of Parliament: For the Statute 13 Car. 2. c. 12. sect. the last, which seems to set aside the Canons of 1640, doth establish the Church as it was in the Year 1639; and then these Canons were in Force and practised. For the King who then reigned, at his Coronation, (the first that was after the making of these Canons) did not only swear to maintain to the Church the Laws of St. Edward, but likewise to preserve to the Bishops, and Churches committed to their Charge, all Canonical Privileges, 1 Rushworth's Collection, fol. 201. And the Power of Secrecy seems to me a Privilege; and these Canons are now received and observed as Laws amongst the Clergy. And, my Lord, neither the Indictment nor Evidence did deny that there was a private Repentance. Now, that a private Confession and Repentance had been sufficient, appears from the Rule of the Canonists, Non tenetur penitens tertio audiente confiteri, quia confessio cum sacerdote fit in persona Dei omnia exploratissime cognoscentis, excludit omnem testem, Val. Reg. lib. 6. n. 78. fol. 182. De Sacramentali Confessione. Nay, the Confession to God Almighty only is held sufficient: Exaudi, Domine, preces nostras, et consentiam tibi. Parce peccatis, ut quos conscientie reatus accusat, indulgentia tuæ miserationis absolvat, &c. as is set down in the Ordo Romanus de Officiis Divinis, in the tenth Tome of the Bibliotheca Patrum, fol. 30. and is verbatim rendered into English in our Liturgy, in the Commination, and in the Form of Prayer appointed to be used on the 30th of January, and in that appointed for our last general Fast. And I shall presume to offer to your Lordship's Consideration some Reasons, why such a private Confession to God Almighty, or to his Minister here on Earth, is sufficient for Absolution. One is drawn from the Nature of the Thing itself. No Man is obliged by Law to do any Act to any other Person, from whom he can receive no Benefit by so doing. And the People cannot absolve, it is only the Priest can do it; and therefore to him alone must be made the Confession and Repentance. And so is Linwood, the last Impression, fol. 337. on the Words, Debito caret fructu, says he, Fructus igitur sive utilitas penitentiae est absolutio à peccatis, quam quis non consequitur ab eo qui non est suus iudex, nec habet potestatem eum ligandi vel solvendi. And the same Author, speaking concerning Confession; fol. 327. Verbo confessionis, hath these Words, Confessio tripliciter fit, aut in foro animæ interius coram Deo, aut in foro penitentiae exterius coram Dei vicario, aut in foro contentioso coram iudice. And then he adds, Confessio est legitima coram sacerdote peccatorum declaratio. And there is not, as I can find, the least Hint of making any Confession or Repentance to the People, but only to the Priest, and that may be in private. But in this Case there was likewise a public Repentance declared, which the Priests might well take for a Repentance of that Offence as well as for any other. That Repentance indeed was general: For Traitors being by no Decree foreclosed Absolution, and no particular Form being prescribed; these Gentlemen followed the Rubrick in the Form there set down for the Visitation of the Sick, which may very well be taken to have been designed for all that are in Danger of Death; and so our greatest Divines have taken it. The learned Dr. Duport, in his Greek Version of our Liturgy, renders this Office by a Word that signifies as well to be in Peril or imminent Danger, or the like, as to be visited with Sickness; which likewise answers the Canonists Description or Denomination of this Sort of Absolution; to distinguish it from the common and sacramental Absolution, they call it Absolutio in articulo mortis, without distinguishing between a natural and violent Death, or between the Innocent and Malefactors. And if our Law had designed to have excluded Malefactors from the Benefit of this Office, it would have used the same Caution as it doth against others in the Office for Burial of the Dead, where it says, it shall not be used to those that die unbaptized, excommunicated, or are Felo de se. And I do not find Malefactors that suffer by the Hand of Justice excluded that Office, and I think it is often performed for them; why then must this of Visitation of the Sick be denied them? There is no other Office or Form appointed for these Sort of Persons. And then, where there is no Law there is no Transgression, they are left to their own Method and Form, and therefore may use that set down in the Common-Prayer as well as any other. And here the Priests asked Sir John Friend and Sir William Perkins, if they repented truly of all their Sins, and were in Charity with all the World? The Penitents answering in the Affirmative, the Absolvers advising Forgiveness, did, at the Request of the Penitents, in the Form set down in the Liturgy, pronounce the Absolution, neither of the Criminals signifying that he felt his Conscience troubled with any weighty Matter. And, with Submission to your Lordship, such Signification ought to be previous to the Motion for a Special Confession, for the Words are, If he feel his Conscience troubled; which I think is fully explained by the second Homily of Repentance, which condemns Auricular Confession, and then adds, “ I do not say but that, if any do find themselves troubled in Conscience, they may repair to their learned Curate or Pastor, or to some other godly learned Man, and shew their Trouble and Doubt of their Consciences to them, that they may receive at their Hands the comfortable Salve of God’s Word.” But it no where enjoins such Confession and Repentance, much less doth it command the Priest to exact them from the Penitent. There is no Order for the Priest to examine whether he doth find his Conscience troubled, if the Penitent doth not intimate it to the Priest. There is no Direction for the Priest to ask him any Question about it. And Val. Reg. l. 2. c. 2. n. 13. out of Sotus, gives us this Definition or Description of the Office and Duty of a Confessor in these Words, Officium quidem Confessarii de se non est interrogare penitentem, sed audire confitentem: And going on, he gives this Reason, Cum in foro penitentiali non procedatur sicut in criminali per vim coactivam ad extorquendam à reo confessionem, sed per spontaneam voluntatem confitentis. I acknowledge, that in the Church of Rome, to make Absolution a compleat Sacrament, a special Confession is required; as is directed by our Church, when the Penitent signifies that he feels a Burthen on his Conscience: But neither in these, nor in any other Cases, wherein special Confession is required, is it any where ordered to be public. It is sufficient that it is made to the Priest alone; and the common Practice in these and all other Cases is to have it private: All other Persons are excluded the sick Man’s Chamber. But supposing, my Lord, that the Meaning of the Rubrick should be taken to be, that the Priest should move him to make such a special Confession, this is only directory; it is not compulsory, any more than the preceding Paragraphs, where the Priest is to admonish the sick Person to make his Will, and declare his Debts, and, if he be of Ability, to give charitably to the Poor. And it would be difficult to maintain an Indictment on any of these Paragraphs against a Priest, for absolving a sick Man without admonishing him to make his Will, declare his Debts, or be liberal to the Poor, who perhaps starved for want of such Relief. Certainly in those Cases the Rubrick would be looked on to be only directory: And why not so in this? The like Exposition hath been made on other Acts of Parliament. The Statute 21 Jac. 1. c. 4. against vexatious Informers, enacts, That no Information shall be received, filed, or entered of Record, before the Informer hath made Oath that the Offence was committed within the County where it was laid, and, as he believes, within a Year before exhibiting the Information; and this Oath to be entered of Record. Yet I believe, it cannot be shewn that any such Oath hath at any Time been made, nor Informer nor Officer indicted for preferring, filing, entering, or receiving any Information without such Oath; for that Statute hath (as to that Part) been always held to be directory, that the Judge or Officer might require it, if they thought fit; but they are not thereby obliged in any Case to exact it from the Informer, any otherwise than as their own Discretions guide them, 1 Cro. 316. But taking the Clause in the Case now before your Lordship to be compulsory, yet it is not to be universally observed to all Penitents; it is only in some Cases, where the Persons are not qualified without such special Confession, and the Priest is to consider and determine of the Qualifications: For Absolution is purely spiritual, and so left to the Priest, that he is the only Judge thereof. And if it might not be thought improper, I should crave Leave briefly to mention the Opinions of some of the Fathers of the Church on this Occasion.

St. Chrysostom says, The Father judges no Man, but hath committed all Judgment to the Son; and the Son, till his second Coming, hath left all Judgment to his Ministers. And St. Jerom, speaking of the Priests, hath these Words, Qui claves regni caelorum habentes quodammodo ante diem judicii judicant. And St. Gregory the Great says of them, Principatum superni judicii sortuntur, ut vice Dei quibusdam peccata retineant, et quibusdam relaxent; and therefore Tertullian calls Excommunication Præjudicium futuri seculi. And the learned Prelate Usher, in his Answer to Malone the Jesuit, saith, “ We acknowledge most willingly, that the principal Part of the Priest’s

“ Ministry is exercised in Matter of Forgiveness
 “ of Sins.” And it farther appears by what I before cited out of Linwood, and likewise by another Expression in the same Book, fol. 335.
 on the Words Competentis literaturæ, where he says, Episcopus est iudex tam animarum quam cor- porum; Presbyter vero non est iudex nisi animarum.
 And fol. 337. the Word Sacerdotum is thus explained, Qui deputati sunt ad audiendas confessiones:
 And in the next Paragraph he hath these Words,
Verbum Dei dimittit peccata, sacerdos autem est iudex.
 And, my Lord, what I would infer from these Divines and Linwood, is, that the Priest being the Judge of the State of the Soul of the Penitent, he must at his Peril, as he will answer it to God
 Almighty, take care of the Confession and Absolution; and if he errs, he may perhaps be punished for it in another World, but not in this.
 We usually esteem it a hard Case to punish a Man for erring in his Judgment, for not being so wise as he ought to be, or so understanding as another.
 No Judge is in any Case, at Common Law, to be punished for an erroneous Judgment, either by Action or Indictment, 9 E. 4. 3. a. Pl. 10.
1 Len. 324. Hut. 120. And our Divines tell us, that God Almighty will judge us by our Wills, not by our Understandings. And therefore, if these Gentlemen were mistaken in what they did, it being only an Error of their Judgments,
 though it may be deemed an imprudent Action,
 yet I hope it will not be adjudged criminal.
 And, my Lord, there may be this farther Reason given, why it should be left to the Priest to judge of the Repentance, and give the Absolution when he sees Occasion. Suppose, my Lord, an innocent Man should be condemned for Treason or Felony, as it happened in the Case of the Uncle condemned and executed for the Murder of his Niece, mentioned in my Lord Coke's third In- stitutes, 232. And the like Case happened in Gloucestershire between thirty and forty Years since, when Joan Perry and her two Sons (See p. 29, 30.) were executed for the Murder of one Har- rison; and after they were executed, the Person supposed to be murdered came into the Country, and vivâ voce proved the Innocency of those Persons that were condemned and executed for that fancied Murder. Now supposing, in such a Case, the Person to be executed obstinately and resolutely denies the Fact, shall the Priest refuse him Absolution? And because the innocent Person will not accuse himself of what he was not so much as in Thought guilty, must he therefore die the second Death for his other Sins, for which he does repent? For they are still retained by the Priest, who refuses to give him Absolution.
 Because such Persons cannot condemn themselves for what their Consciences do not accuse them, can there be no Forgiveness, no Absolution for them? Will not Charity allow they may be saved, and consequently entitled to Absolution? Nay, will not Charity extend to those that suffer in an ill Cause, through a Fault in their Understanding?
 And I hope that the Errors of our Judgments, as well as the Weakness of our Memories, may be pardoned amongst our secret Sins; and therefore such Persons may not always be denied the Benefit of Absolution. It is no where denied to Traitors; nay, the Canonists say, In articulo mortis, omnes sacerdotes quolibet penitentes à quibus-vis peccatis et censuris absolvere possunt, Val. Reg.
l. 1. n. 58. fol. 9. And he there cites a Council for it, where it was so determined. Nor is there any particular Form or Method prescribed for their Repentance or Absolution; therefore, methinks, a general Repentance may deserve a general Absolution; and perhaps, in some of these Cases, the Priest had been to blame, if he had denied Absolution.

And now, with your Lordship's Patience, I will look into the Practice of Divines in such-like Cases; though it cannot be expected that I should bring many Precedents to warrant this, because it is seldom that Absolution is given at the Place of Execution; the Ordinary, or some other Divine performing that Office, usually doing that in private, when they have free Access to the Prisoner: And if it were not so done here, it was because, after these Divines were appointed to be with the Criminals, and to prepare them for another World, and had been with them, and, as we say, received their Confession and Repentance for the Crimes for which they were condemned, and perhaps had thereupon given them
 Absolution; yet after this, for two or three Days immediately preceding the Execution, they were kept from them, and not permitted to come to them till they were in the Cart at the Place of Execution: And it may be intended, that the Absolution that was then given them, was for the Sins which they had committed since they saw them last. Therefore, unless the King's Council can shew me a Case with such Circumstances, they cannot expect from me a direct Precedent to justify our Proceedings. But I shall crave Leave to mention a few that I think will bear some Proportion to the Case now before your Lordship.
 I shall begin with that of John Twyn, who was tried, convicted, and attainted at the Old-Bailey, the 20th of February, 1663, the Narrative of which was then printed by Authority. He was convicted for printing and publishing a treasonable Libel; and my Lord Chief Justice Hyde, before whom the Trial was, saith, (State Trials, Vol. 2.
p. 538.) “ I shall not spend my Time in Discourse
 “ to you to prepare you for Death: I see a grave “ Person, whose Office it is, and I leave it to “ him. Do not think of any Time here: Make “ your Peace with God, which must be done by “ Confession, and by the Discovery of those that “ are guilty of the same Crime with you. God
 “ have Mercy upon you; and if you do so, he “ will have Mercy upon you.” Afterwards, and before he came to be executed, the Ordinary pressed him to a Confession of those others concerned with him, which he refused; and yet the Ordinary offered to administer the Sacrament to him. From whence I would infer, that it is the Office of the Ordinary to prepare condemned Criminals for another World, and consequently he must be the Judge when they are prepared.
 And next, though the Chief Justice was of Opinion, that God Almighty would not pardon him but on the Confession of his own Fault and the Discovery of his Accomplices, yet the Ordinary tendered him the Sacrament, which comprehends the Absolution, when he obstinately refused to make any such Discovery; (See Twyn's Speech and Behaviour in State Trials, Vol. 8.
p. 386, 387.) and yet no Indictment against him for it. My Lord Strafford, when he was going to be beheaded, being denied to speak with Archbishop Laud; as he passed by his Grace's Lodgings, seeing the Archbishop at his Window, the Earl of Strafford bowing himself to the Ground, said, My Lord, your Prayers and your Blessing. The Archbishop lifted up his Hand, and bestowed both. There was not Time or Opportunity for his Grace to pronounce the Absolution at large, nor to lay his Hands on the Head of the Penitent, as these Defendants did, but he came as near it as he could; he lifted up his Hands, and bestowed both his Prayers and Benediction, and that without any particular Confession or Repentance. And though his Grace was afterwards proceeded against, and, as they then called it, tried for High Treason, and all the Dirt thrown on him that Prynne and several others could rake up against him, and his whole Life searched into, and every particular Action narrowly traced, and even his Reputation, when he was a Scholar at the University, produced as Evidence against him; yet this Blessing, this Absolution was never so much as mentioned, though they had often Opportunity so to do, when it was urged (as frequently it was) that his Grace and the Earl of Strafford were very intimate Friends and Acquaintance, and went hand in hand to destroy the Government both in Church and State: And yet this Action was publicly taken Notice of, as we find by the Historians of those Times, Rusworth in the Earl of Strafford's Trial, fol. 782. Franklyn's Annals, 901.

Now, my Lord, Blessing and Absolution in such Circumstances amount to the same. No Man blesses the Impenitent. The Form that the Archbishop then used is not set down, nor is it, with Submission to your Lordship, any ways material. There are several Forms of Absolution, which in Sense and Virtue are the same, as Archbishop Sparrow has it in his Rationale on the Common-Prayer; where he shews us, that there are three several Forms of Absolution in the Liturgy; as first, in the Morning and Evening Prayer, He pardoneth and absolveth, &c. The second is used in the Visitation of the Sick, By his Authority committed to me, I absolve thee, &c. The third is at the Sacrament, Almighty God, &c. have Mercy upon you, &c. pardon and forgive you, &c. The like Form is appointed to be used in Case of imminent Danger at Sea, and stiled an Absolution. And, saith that Reverend and Learned Prelate, "All these several Forms in Sense and Virtue are the same; for it is all one as to the Remission of Sins in the Penitent, whether the Priest absolve him after this Form, Almighty God, who hath given me and all Priests Power to pronounce Pardon to the Penitent; he pardons you— Or thus, By Virtue of a Commission granted to me from God, I absolve you— Or lastly, God pardon you."

I must now, my Lord, in my Way, crave Leave to observe, that Criminals, be their Offences never so heinous, though they do not confess them, or shew any Repentance for them, yet they are not kept from the public Service of the Church; nor are they denied or refused to be admitted to the blessed Sacrament, where they have the Benefit of this third Absolution, and that in public. What Reason then can there be to deny them this Absolution, for the giving which these Gentlemen stand now indicted, which hath not, I believe, been at any Time denied to any Malefactors, either in this or any other Part of the whole Christian World? The Emperor of Germany, in his Manifesto against those Persons that killed his Officers and Ministers at Prague, as a great Aggravation of their Offence, says, they did it without giving them a Moment of Time to repent, or make Confession, or receive the Sacrament, which is never denied to the worst Offenders, 1 Rusworth 7. — Without giving them a Moment of Time to repent, or make Confession, or receive the Sacrament — It is in the Disjunctive, my Lord; and there by Confession and Repentance cannot be meant of that particular Fact for which they were then put to Death, for that was the Service of the Emperor their Master, and the Manifesto stiles the Authors of their Deaths, barbarous, cruel, and inhuman Murderers. But I shall proceed to give your Lordship another Instance, where there hath been a public Absolution to a Criminal condemned, and that even at the Place of Execution, without any special Repentance for the Crime for which he was about to suffer. And that was in the Case of Sir Thomas Armstrong, who, by Judgment of this Court upon an Outlawry for High Treason, for conspiring against the King's Life and Government, was executed at Tyburn in June 1684. In the Court he insisted on his Innocency, and so he did in a Speech which he likewise left with the Sheriff at the Place of Execution; yet, notwithstanding that, the Reverend Divine that then assisted to prepare him for another World, did in Effect the same with these Gentlemen that are now Defendants, (which I humbly submit to your Lordship's Consideration): For, after a long recommendatory Prayer, he useth this Benediction; The Grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, and the Love of God the Father, and the Fellowship of the Holy Ghost, be with us, and in a particular Manner with this thy Servant, now in the Minute of Death, and Day of Judgment. And then speaking to Sir Thomas Armstrong, says, Now, Sir, commend yourself to God by your Devotions, make yourself ready, and then let that be the last Thing you do. Sir Thomas Armstrong says, Sir, I hope in God my Sins are pardoned, and I do pray for it heartily. I forgive the World all their Offences they have committed against me. Then the Doctor says, I pray God shew Mercy to you, as you express Charity to them; and then immediately followed the Execution. I have dwelt the longer, my Lord, on this Particular, because it must needs be of very great Authority, the Reverend Divine that then assisted being (Dr. Tennison) now Archbishop of Canterbury. (See State Trials, Vol. 3. p. 985.) And the Circumstances of that Case are much the same with ours: In the Indictment the same Offence was laid as against Sir John Friend and Sir William Perkins, he suffered at the same Place, and that Reverend Divine was likewise with him in the Cart. There was also a Paper delivered by the Criminal to the Sheriff, declaring his Innocency; yet Absolution was publicly given at the Time and Place of Execution. Not indeed in the same Words as these Defendants used, but in those that are as effectual. I think it is apparent, that no particular Form of Words is requisite to an Absolution. Whether we think the Power of the Church authoritative, or only declarative, whatsoever is an Execution of that Power that is given by our Saviour in St. John, and denotes the Priest's absolving, or the Priest's declaring that God doth absolve them, or the Priest's recommending them to God for Mercy or a Pardon for their Sins, that, with Submission to your Lordship, is as much an Absolution, as when the Priest doth in his own Person absolve them. So it is in our Morning and Evening Service, and in the Communion, and the Service at Sea, as I have before mentioned; and yet the Rubrick stiles them Absolutions. The whole Christian Church, for the first ten Ages, used that Form of Recommending, and no other; and the Greek Church doth still retain the same. St. Cyprian De lapsis, fol. 136. the Oxford Edition, on the Words, Pro vobis Deum rogare possumus, the Learned Oxford Annotators say thus — And I may well stile them the Learned Annotators, since that great Master and Judge of all Learning, the present Bishop of Worcester (Dr. Stillingfleet,) in his Vindication of the Trinity, fol. 155, 164. stiles them so. Their Annotations are in these Words, Quantumvis nunc temporis formula judiciaria et potestativa (Ego te absolvo) quasi tradita à Christo per Apostolos feratur, ex adverso compertissimum habetur per decem priora secula in usu minime receptam, imo nec adhuc in Ecclesia Orientali invaluisse. And that Absolutions, Ordinations, and Consecrations were in a deprecatory Form, plainly appears from Morinus, l. 8. De administratione penitentiae, c. 12. sect. 7. fol. 397. Ipse Domine remitte, dimitte, condona peccata hujus N. &c. And this, he says, was the common and vulgar Absolution in the Greek Church. So Theodorus, who wrote his Penitentials towards the latter End of the sixth Century, (it was published per Jacobum Pettit, in Quarto, Anno 1677, at Paris) in the first Book, and the first Chapter, page 26, is this Absolution, Deus omnipotens sit adjutor et protector tuus, et præstet indulgentiam de peccatis tuis; and many others of the like Nature are sparsim through both the Volumes. In the Roman Pontifical there is this Absolution, Misereatur vestrum omnipotens Deus, et dimissis peccatis vestris perducatur vos ad vitam æternam. And likewise in the Ordo Romanus I before cited, fol. 61. is this, which is stiled Absolutio singularis: Frater N. absolutionem et remissionem peccatorum tuorum, per invocationem sacri nominis Dei, et per ministerium nostrum, percipere merearis hic et in æternum. And in the same Page are several other Absolutions plural and singular, penned after the same Manner, in such a deprecatory Form, and all stiled Absolutions. And in none of these Absolutions do I see any Enumeration of particular Offences, nor have I found in any of these Penitentials, that Malefactors are excluded from this Absolution. Mr. Newland, who was about two or three Years since condemned and executed for the Murder of Mr. Thomas, did positively deny that he was guilty of that Fact, or of aiding, assisting, or abetting thereunto. Yet Mr. Stevens not only gave him the Sacrament, and that three Times, with other Company; but likewise gave him Absolution, as Mr. Stevens himself hath since in Print published to the World. And what is lawful and justifiable at Newgate before three or four Persons, cannot become a Crime at Tyburn, though it be done in the Presence of five hundred People; for the Place or Number of People cannot alter the Nature of the Fact; and make an innocent Action an horrid Crime. I am credibly informed, that in the Case of Anderton the Printer; who was executed for High Treason about four or five Years since, there was the same Form of Prayer used for him by the Divine that then assisted; (State Trials, Vol. 8. p. 71.) and that at this very Place of Execution. In the Case of

Mr. Astton, who was likewise executed for High Treason, though he expressed no Sorrow for his Crime, and left a Paper behind him justifying the Fact for which he died, (Vol. 8. p. 482.) yet the same Form of Prayer, the very same Absolution, and at the same Place of Execution, with all the Circumstances of the present Case, were used and performed for him; and instead of any Reprimand for so doing, the Sheriff of Middlesex said thus to the Absolvers, as I had it from one that was then present, and set it down in Writing; Gentlemen, I thank you for performing the last Offices so decently. And, my Lord, my Clients do insist on it, that on these Precedents and this Encouragement, they were induced to act as they did at the Execution of Sir John Friend and Sir William Perkins. I have, my Lord, looked into the Treatises of some Divines upon this Occasion; and though I find a mighty Stir about Auricular Confession, whether the Church doth require that or no, yet I cannot perceive that it is by any insisted on, that there must be in any Case a public Confession or Repentance, no, not even in those Cases where public Penance is enjoined, unless in some few, where the Ecclesiastical Court hath made it Part of the Penance. Mr. Prynne, in his Canterbury's Doom, fol. 192, 3. tells us, that one Mr. Adams preached at St. Mary's Church in Cambridge, Anno Domini 1637, and maintained special Confession to the Priest to be necessary; for which being summoned before the Vice-Chancellor, he and several other Doctors ordered Mr. Adams to make a Recantation of that Doctrine, and declare it was only requisite in those Cases where People could not quiet their own Consciences; and likewise to declare, that it is against true Christian Liberty, that a Man should be bound to the enumerating of his Sins, as hath been used heretofore in the Times of Ignorance and Popery. There were indeed some Doctors that did oppose this Recantation, and justified Mr. Adams, insisting it was needful to make such Confession to the Priest; but none pretended it was in any Case requisite to be made to the People. But, as I said before, the Vice-Chancellor, and the major Part of the Doctors, ordered the aforesaid Recantation, and well they might; for it is verbatim taken out of the second Homily of Repentance, which Book of Homilies was composed by many eminent Prelates of our Church, and the Reading of it enjoined by the Rubrick, which is Part of the Act of Uniformity. And that Homily doth further say, that it is most evident and plain that Auricular Confession hath not its Warrant from God's Word; and it cites St. Austin, who says, What have I to do with Men, as though they were able to heal my Diseases? And if a Penitent be not compelled by the Laws of God or holy Church to make a particular Confession of his Sins to the Priest, who gives that Absolution, much less is he any ways obliged to satisfy the Curiosity of the People by enumerating of his Offences, or publicly declaring a Repentance for his Sins. Nor do they any where distinguish the Case of condemned Criminals from others: But the Rules concerning it are general, Et generaliter dictum generaliter intelligendum est. Whatever I find spoken concerning Absolution is expressed indefinitely, which falls under another Maxim, Indefinitum æquipollet universali. And, my Lord, one Reason why I take it to be lawful to pronounce nounce Absolution to condemned Malefactors; is, that be their Crimes never so great, the Sword of Justice doth not strike deeper than the Grave, and there is still Room for a Deus misericors anime ejus, a Lord have Mercy on his Soul.

Thus I have, with all Humility, submitted to your Lordship's Consideration what I have to say, why the Fact; of which these Gentlemen stand accused, should in itself be no Offence. Neither can it be made a Crime, with Submission to your Lordship, by any ill Intention that can be suggested to be adherent to it: For the Actions of Men shew their Hearts; and if their Works are not evil, you cannot from them in foro humano prove their Minds corrupt. Omitting the Reason given by my Lord Chief Justice North, on the Reversal of the Judgment in the Case of Barnardiston and Soame, (State Trials, Vol. 7. p. 441, 442, &c.) I shall trouble your Lordship but with two Cases, and the Reasons of them, to prove the Truth of this Assertion. The one is Elliot's Case, in the last Impression of Croke's Charles, fol. 608. where my Lord Chief Justice Vaughan says, it is clear and undoubted Law; that whatsoever is in itself lawful cannot have an unlawful Intent annexed to it; for then the most innocent Act of a Man's Life would be liable to severe Censures. And he instances in this, that a Man might then be indicted for High Treason; for drinking Water with a Design to lessen and destroy the Customs and Revenue, thereby intending to dethrone the King. The other Case that I would mention is in Dyer, f. 296. pl. 19. in these Words: "A Subject of this Realm, being a Merchant of London, departed out of this Realm without Licence of the Queen, only to the Intent that he might live there free from the Laws of this Realm, and out of his due Obedience to the Queen, and not upon any Account of Merchandizing; Whether such a Departure were any Offence or Contempt to the Queen, or not? And by the Opinion of almost all the Justices, such a Departure, before an express Prohibition or Restraint by Proclamation, or Writ of Ne exeat regnum awarded by the King or Prince, is not any Offence or Contempt; for it is a Thing indifferent to depart the Realm, and the Purpose and Cause, which is secret in the Heart, is not examinable." That is the Reason given in the Book: And Jenkins, a Man much for Prerogative, in his second Century, cap. 70. fol. 88. agrees this Case to be Law, and says, that the Common Law doth not allow an Intent to be issuable or triable, and gives this Reason for it, Cor hominis est inscrutabile. Now, my Lord, those that will not allow Absolution to be a very good Act, must grant that it is at least indifferent. And then the Cause, Purpose, End or Intent of it being secret in the Heart, is not examinable, and therefore cannot be justly said to be done for raising a Rebellion, or causing a Disturbance in the Kingdom. And I do not know that in any Case a Man is punishable for an ill Intent, except in one Species of Treason, the Compassing the King's Death; and in that Case the Intention must be proved by some Overt-Act directly tending to the Fact designed.

2. But I come now to the second Point, That if this shall be deemed an Offence, yet it is not enquirable nor punishable in this Court. I must humbly submit it to your Lordship's Judgment, whether the Power of Absolution, which is given to the Apostles and their Successors by the Author and Establisher of all lawful Power, both Ecclesiastical and Civil, in these Words; in the twentieth Chapter of St. John, v. 23. Whose soever Sins ye remit, they are remitted; and whose soever Sins ye retain, they are retained, be not an Authority far above all sublunary Jurisdictions; and these Gentlemen, the Successors of the Apostles, not to be called to an Account for what they did in the Execution of that Authority, but by him alone who delegated that Power to them. But supposing it should be examinable here on Earth, with Submission to your Lordship, it is only in that Court, by those Persons or that Sort of Men; who conveyed to these Gentlemen that Power given by our Saviour. And this I shall endeavour to prove, First, From the Nature of the Thing itself. Their Commission for it is their Ordination, which Laymen cannot give. Nor is it to be tried by the Common Law; for Profession in Religion, or infra sacros ordines, is only triable by the Ordinary, Co. Lit. 132. b. 2 Inst. 492.

That very learned Prelate, the present Bishop of Worcester, in his Charge to his Clergy, fol. 43. tells us out of Cajetan, Officium curæ animarum est præcipuum ac spiritualissimum Dei donum. And the Bishop is substituted by our Saviour to give the Ordination, which he doth in these Words, Receive the Holy Ghost now committed unto thee by the Imposition of our Hands. Whose Sins thou dost forgive, they are forgiven; and whose Sins thou dost retain, they are retained. Now, methinks, a Man must naturally infer from hence, that since this Authority is derived from our Saviour by the Bishops; if any Persons on Earth can visit and reform the Errors or Abuses in the Execution of this Power, it must be those who are intrusted to give the Ordination: And of Things of this Nature their Courts have usually had the Conuance. Nay, the Privileges of the Clergy in old Times went much further; for our pious and devout Ancestors, following the Directions of the Son of Syrach, Ecclesiasticus 7. 29, 31. Fear the Lord, and reverence his Priests, thought they could not pay sufficient Respect and Honour to the Clergy, unless they exempted them from all Temporal Jurisdiction. So that even in Temporal Offences, and those of almost the highest Nature, Murder, and Felony of course, and even in Sacrilege, if the Ordinary would demand the Prisoner for his Clerk, he was immediately taken from the Temporal Court, and subjected to the Ordinary's Jurisdiction, Stanford's Pleas of the Crown, 123. and 3d Institut. 114. And Horn, in his Mirror of Justice, c. 3. sect. 4. asserts, that if, in a Temporal Court, a Clerk accused of any Case criminal or mortal, pleads that he is a Clerk, the Judge hath no farther Conuance of the Cause; for the Church is so enfranchised, that no Lay Judge can have Jurisdiction over a Clerk. And the Abridgment of the Book of Assizes, Tit. Corona, fol. 74. says, that if a Clerk will not pray the Benefit of his Clergy, yet if the Judge knows him to be so, he will not give Judgment of Death against him, as against a Layman. And these Privileges would have remained to this Day, if Acts of Parliament had not altered them. And if the Clergy were exempted from the Temporal Jurisdiction for Offences of so high a Nature, if the Argument à majori ad minus holds good, they must certainly have been exempted from being punished in Temporal Courts for all their lesser Crimes; and must still be so, where no Statute Law interposes, and that will lie on the other Side to shew.

And so far of late Years have the Clergy been thought and esteemed to be exempt from the Secular Power, that on the Treaty of the Spanish Match, it was agreed, that the Infanta, who was then designed to be our Queen, should have her Popish Clergy, and a Superior over them. And the 14th Article runs thus, "That if any Secular Judge shall apprehend any Ecclesiastical Person for any Offence, he shall forthwith cause him to be delivered to the aforesaid Superior Ecclesiastick, who shall proceed against him according to the Canon Law." These Articles were then sworn to by the King, Prince, and Privy-Council; and therefore we must believe it to be done on very good Advice. This is taken Notice of by Mr. Rushworth, in his first Volume; fol. 87. And although how far and in what Cases Spiritual Persons were formerly out of the Reach of the Secular Power, may admit of some Debate; yet nothing is more plain than that Spiritual Causes cannot be determined by the Civil Power. Judex secularis de rebus spiritualibus cognoscere non debet, says Fleta, l. 6. c. 37. f. 429. There is (as the incomparably learned Bishop of Worcester has it, in his Charge to his Clergy, fol. 35.) a Common Law Ecclesiastical, which, although in many Things it may be the same with the Canon Law that is read in Books; yet hath it not its Force from any Papal or Legatine Constitutions, but from the Acceptance and Practice of it in our Churches: And such a Law, my Lord; is coeval with the very Government itself. The learned Selden, in his Notes on the 17th Chapter of Fortescue, says, that in Time of Paganism the Druids were the Lawyers, and determined Controversies; the same Persons were their Priests and Judges. And Sir Henry Spelman, in his Discourse of Law-Terms, tells us, that in the Infancy of Christianity the Bishops and Clergymen did hear and determine all Causes amongst the Christians. And how those Matters were settled, when Christianity came to be established amongst us, Sir Thomas Smith will acquaint your Lordship, in his Treatise De Republica et Administratione Anglorum; a Book I have often heard cited in this Court, not only at the Bar, but by very learned Judges on the Bench. In his third Book, the 11th Chapter, are these Words: In quatuor potissimum causarum generibus Archiepiscopi Episcopique peculiarem jurisdictionem sortiuntur, in testamentis et legatis, in decimis et mortuariis, in nuptiis, adulterio aut fornicatione, et in iis demum omnibus quæ ad ordinem et decus Ecclesiasticum conservandum et religionem constabiliendam pertinent; nam majores nostri rempublicam primo ordinarunt, postea fidei Christianæ nomen dederunt, et potestatem sic constitutam, cum ea quam Apostoli, doctores, theologique religionem invexerunt, semper retinuerunt; quicquid ad conscientie forum pertinebat, illis utpote peritioribus, et ob vitæ sanctimoniam mcrumque probitatem laudatissimis, quibusque confidebant, maxime delegabant. I shall not take up your Lordship's Time to prove, out of Magna Charta, and other old Laws, that the Clergy have Rights, Liberties, Privileges and Immunities; but taking that for granted, shall proceed to examine, whether this Case doth any way, and how, concern their Rights and Privileges. It cannot be denied, but that to be exempt from the ordinary and common Jurisdiction is an Immunity, and to have Conusance of Causes is a Liberty and Privilege: But the Question still is, if the Clergy are in Cases of this Nature exempt from the common Jurisdiction of the King's Temporal Courts, and the Ecclesiastical Judges have Conusance of the Offence (if an Offence it be) of which these Gentlemen stand accused? My Lord Coke, in his 5th Report, in the Cause of the King's Ecclesiastical Law, fol. 9. says, "As in Temporal Causes the King, by the Mouth of his Judges of Justice, doth judge and determine the same by the Temporal Laws of England; so in Causes Ecclesiastical and Spiritual, as namely, Blasphemy, Apostacy from Christianity, Schisms, Ordering, (that is, Ordination) Admissions, Institutions of Clerks, Celebration of Divine Service, and others, the Conusance whereof belongs not to the Common Law of England, the same are to be determined and decided by Ecclesiastical Judges; according to the King's Ecclesiastical Laws of this Realm." In the Case of Holt and Dighton, in the twelfth of King James the First, (it is reported 1 Rolle's Rep. 410.) who were brought up into this Court by Habeas Corpus, the Return whereof was, that they were committed by the High Commission Court, and the Cause of their Commitment was, that they were demanded by the High Commission Court if they would conform themselves to the Custom of the Church of England, and receive the Sacrament kneeling; and for that they would not give a direct Answer to it, they were committed; and though it was moved by Serjeant Harvey to have them discharged, yet Coke and Doderidge said, that the High Commission Court had Jurisdiction of Schisms and Heresies, and in that Case they were accused of a Schism, and therefore they had Jurisdiction of the Cause; and so the Court remanded them.

Now, my Lord, within all and every one of these Descriptions of Spiritual Causes comes this that is now before your Lordship; for, according to that of Sir Thomas Smith, this concerns Orders or Ordination, for it was by Virtue of their Ordination that they did it. It relates to the Decorum of the Church, and concerns the Establishment of Religion; for the Indictment says, it was done to the Scandal of the Protestant Religion now by Law established. And that it is Matter of Conscience, is in itself apparent. The Case comes likewise within my Lord Coke's Description of Spiritual Causes; for it concerns Ordering and the Celebration of Divine Service; for the Question is, Whether they performed it as they ought to do? And the Indictment itself shews it, which not only stiles the Defendants Clerks, but says they did it ut Presbyteri Ecclesiæ Anglicanæ; which intimates it was done in celebrating Divine Service. And if kneeling at the Sacrament be a Matter of Ecclesiastical Conusance, and out of the Reach of the Temporal Courts; though the Rubrick is much more plain and express in that than in our Case; yet if that Nonconformity be called a Schism, it is only examinable in the Spiritual Courts, whether ours be so or no. And the rather, my Lord, shall the Bishop's Court, or the Bishop himself, judge this Matter, for that, by the Common Law Ecclesiastical, the Bishop is appointed the Visitor of all that enter into holy Orders, and he is to see if they live and act according to their Ordination, and to punish them that do amiss. And Absolution is one of the great Ends of Ordination; and for this Purpose doth the Bishop make his frequent Visitations. Now, my Lord, where the Law doth appoint a particular Visitor, he alone is to look to that Charge; and no one else to interfere: And that is the Reason why a Mandamus did not formerly go out of this Court to restore a Monk or Friar, nor at this Time for a Fellow of a College, a Proctor of Doctors-Commons; or the like: And, I think, on that Point the Cause of Exeter College was adjudged against Dr. Berry in the House of Lords. To this I must crave Leave to add, that where the Ecclesiastical Court hath Conusance of any Cause, all other Things that are incident or relating to it are likewise within their Jurisdiction: Cognitio principalis trahit ad se accessorium. And the Books are so full of Instances thereof, that I need not mention any. And if any inferior Officer transgresses, in acting or doing that which belongs to Ecclesiastical Conusance, the Archbishops and Bishops are to punish it, and the Temporal Judge is not to interfere. Exactions and Extortions look more like Temporal Offences, than what these Defendants stand now convicted of; for those in their own Nature tend to stir up the People to Sedition and Rebellion; yet these Offences, when committed by Spiritual Men or in Ecclesiastical Affairs, by the Common Law our Courts could not meddle with them. Mr. Prynne, in his Animadversions on my Lord Coke's fourth Institutes, fol. 233. cites this Record out of the Petitions in Parliament, Anno 18 E. 1. Homines de London' conqueruntur de officialibus et ministris Ecclesie de multimodis vexationibus et exacti-onibus nimis onerosis, per quas plus extorquent de populo quam omnes curie laicales; et petunt quod Rex opponat remedium festinanter, ne destruat populus in occulto. The Beginning of the King's Answer is somewhat doubtfully penned. Mr. Prynne gives it in a distinguishing Character: Si curia Regis possit emendari, faciat. But the rest of the Answer is direct; Cancellarius emendet in temporalibus, Archiepiscopus faciat in spiritualibus. But these Oppressions and Extortions, it seems, continued; and some Attempts there were to punish them by Indictments at Common Law; but such Indictments were thought illegal: For in the Close Roll of * 16 E. 3. par. 2. mem. 12. dorso, I find a special Supersedeas processibus omnibus et singulis coram justiciariis nostris inchoatis seu factis contra viros Ecclesiasticos, cujuscunque conditionis aut status fuerint, super extorsionibus et excessibus per ipsos in nostri ac jurium coronæ nostræ prejudicium in exercitio jurisdictionis Ecclesiasticæ factis: And that there should be no more new Indictments against them before the next Parliament. And in the Close Roll 17 E. 3. par. 1. m. 24. dorso, is the like Writ to the Justices of Oyer and Terminer for the County of Hereford, in which there is a Supersedeas to stay the Proceedings at Common Law against some particular Persons for those Offences. And in the Close Roll of 18 E. 3. m. 14. dorso, (Sir William Dugdale is mistaken in the Year, when he calls it the 17th) is the Summons to Parliament, the next Parliament after the aforesaid Writs; and the Summons runs thus: Quia pro quibusdam arduis et urgentibus negotiis, honorem Dei, et decus et defensionem ecclesie Anglicanæ, et salubre regimen populi et regni nostri Angliæ summe contingentibus, ordinavimus parliamentum nostrum, &c. At which Parliament there was an Act made, which is in the printed Statutes 18 E. 3. c. 6. in these Words: "Whereas Commissions be newly made to divers Justices to make Inquiry upon Judges of Holy Church, whether they made just Process or excessive in Causes Testamentary, and other, which notoriously pertaineth to the Conusance of Holy Church; the said Justices have inquired, and caused to be indicted Judges of Holy Church, in blemishing the Franchise of Holy Church, that such Commissions be repealed and from henceforth defended." And so the Officers of the Ecclesiastical Courts went on with their Oppressions and Extortions, and the Temporal Courts could not lay hold of them for those Offences, as appears by several Petitions and Answers in the Parliament Rolls, 21 E. 3. n. 51. 1 H. 5. n. 23. till the Statute 21 H. 8. c. 5. brought them within the Conusance of the Courts of Common Law. And if the Archbishops and Bishops can alone, (the Statute being out of the Case) exclusive of all Secular Power, look after and punish the Irregularities of their Commissaries, though they tended to the Prejudice of the King and his royal Prerogative, their Power must be full as great over all Ecclesiasticks, and in an eminent Manner over the Clergy, in all Matters relating to their Function, and especially in all Things which concern the Discipline of the Church, of which the Bishops are Judges, as well as of the Doctrine. Braeton, in his fifth Book, De exceptionibus, c. 2. fol. 401. a. treating concerning the Jurisdiction of Courts, hath this Expression: Clericus in nullo conveniendus est coram judice seculari, quod pertinet ad forum Ecclesiasticum, sicut in causis spiritualibus, vel spiritualitati annexis, ut si pro peccato vel transgressione fuerit penitentia injungenda, et quo casu judex Ecclesiasticus habet cognitionem; quia non pertinet ad Regem injungere penitentias, nec ad judicem secularem, nec etiam ad eos pertinet cognoscere de iis quæ sunt spiritualibus annexa. And if the Temporal Courts cannot hold Plea de penitentia injungenda, certainly they cannot punish pro penitentia non declarata. Besides, I think it cannot be denied, that Absolution is Spiritual, vel saltem spiritualitati annexa. More Instances I could produce, if I thought it necessary, to prove that where the Ecclesiastical Court hath Conusance of the Celebration of Divine Service or other Spiritual Matters, it must hold Plea of what is incident or belonging to it; and therefore of the Mind, Intention, and Design with which any Spiritual Office is performed, if such Mind can be fathomed, and Intention punished. And I presume, my Lord, there will be no Occasion to prove that all the Rights, Liberties, Privileges and Immunities, that the Clergy lawfully enjoyed in the Time of Popery, do still belong to the present Church of England, unless they are taken away or altered by Act of Parliament; for though the Errors were corrected, and Abuses reformed in Matters of Doctrine and of foreign Jurisdiction, yet the legal Rights of the Church, and Power of the Clergy, were not shaken or invaded by the Reformation.

* Rot. Claus. 16 Ed. 3. par. 2. mem. 12. dorso, in Turri London. *Rex dilectis et fidelibus suis Hugoni de Courtney, Comiti Devon', et Sociis suis, Justiciariis nostris ad diversa transgressiones, oppressiones et extorsiones, damna, gravamina et excessus nobis et populo nostro illata in Com' Devon' audiend' et terminand' assignat' salutem. Per Concilium.

Eodem modo mandatum est Thomæ de Berkele, et Sociis suis, Justic' ad diversa transgressiones, &c. in com. Som. (T. ut supra.)

And there is a Space in the Roll, supposed to be left for entering of other Writs of the like Nature, that were then issued forth.

3. And now, my Lord, I come to the third and last Point I propose to speak to; and that is, supposing what these Gentlemen stand accused of is an Offence, and that this Court hath Conusance of it; yet, with Submission to your Lordship, there is no Judgment to be given against us on this Indictment. I believe the King's Council cannot shew me any Rule at Common Law concerning Absolution. So that, if we are guilty of any Offence, it is for not observing the Rubrick. If we have acted according to the Letter and Intent of that; no Indictment will lie against us for the Fact we are now accused of: And if we have deviated from the Rubrick, then the Indictment ought to have been framed on the Act of Uniformity. It is a Rule laid down in our Books, That where a Statute makes that an Offence which was not so before, an Indictment for that Offence must conclude contra formam statuti. So is 1 Saunders 249. 2 Rolle's Abr. 82. 1 Croke 449. and Jones 379. And I could instance in many Precedents that are drawn accordingly. I shall mention some few on this very Act of Parliament: They are all in the same Term, Mich. 15 & 16 Q. El. in this Court, and against the same Person, Robert Johnson, of St. Clements-Danes, Clerk. One of the Indictments is for speaking against the Book of Common-Prayer, contra formam Statuti: Another against him, for omitting the Litany, Epistle and Gospel, in saying the Divine Service: Another against him, for christening a Child, and not signing him with the Sign of the Cross: Another against him, for marrying a Couple without a Wedding-Ring: Another against the same Person, for saying Morning and Evening Service without a Surplice. And though the Preamble and Inducement to every one of these Indictments make an heavy Complaint against the Person that is so indicted, as if he intended to destroy the Protestant Religion by Law established, and overthrow the Government, yet they all conclude contra formam statuti. Now, my Lord, according to the Rule and Precedents I have cited, this Indictment that is now before your Lordship should have set forth, that the Defendants did not move Sir John Friend and Sir William Perkins to a special Confession of their Sins, but without it gave them Absolution, contra formam statuti. But supposing, my Lord; it should be answered, that the Indictment is rather for the ill Intention of the Defendants, than for not observing the Rubrick; with humble Submission to your Lordship, if such an Indictment may be brought, yet this before your Lordship is not rightly framed, but is insufficient and uncertain in relation to that very Intent: For the Indictment says, These Defendants conspiring, intending, and designing the execrable, horrible, and detestable Treason, for which Sir John Friend and Sir William Perkins were then just going to be executed, to justify, or at least to extenuate, diminish, and undervalue, &c. did absolve them. Now, my Lord, non constat which they aimed at, Justifying or Undervaluing; and they cannot be found guilty of all: For though the Verdict be general as to this, yet it is according to the Indictment, which is in the Disjunctive, Et in disjunctivis sufficit unum verificari. Therefore our Common Law doth always require Certainty, but especially in Indictments; they ought to be certain to every Intent, that a certain Judgment may be given on them. Where a Man in pleading sets forth his Title by a Conveyance, in which are the Words give, grant, release, confirm, bargain, sell, &c. he must shew which of them he makes Use of, and which he applies to his Purpose, or else his Plea is naught, 1 Ventr. 109. The Return of a Habeas Corpus sets forth the Commitment, Et hæc est causa captionis seu detentionis, adjudged an ill Return, 1 Ventr. 324. In Trinity Term last, in this Court, there were several Indictments against Baker and others for exercising the Trade of a Rope-maker, existens misterium infra regnum Angliæ vel Walliæ; and there, altho' the Offence was the same whether it were a Trade in England or Wales, yet for the Incertainty which the Disjunctive made, the Indictment was quashed. And in the last Term (H. 9 W. 3. B. R.) Sanky and another Quaker were brought tip by Habeas Corpus, and the Return set forth a Commitment by two Justices, by Virtue of the Statute 27 H. 8. c. 20. reciting a Certificate from the Commissary, that a Cause of Subtraction of Tythes or other Ecclesiastical Duty was depending in the Ecclesiastical Court, to which the Defendants refused to answer. In that Cause, though the Words of the Act of Parliament are strictly pursued, which gives the same Remedy where the Fact is for other Ecclesiastical Dues as it does for Tythes, yet because the Certificate on which the Return was grounded, did not set forth in particular for what the Suit was commenced in the Ecclesiastical Court, but only in the Disjunctive, for that Reason the Commitment was held insufficient, and the Parties discharged. In Mr. Rowe's Case, Bendlow, fol. 60. in Replevin, the Plaintiff claims Common appurtenant to a Manor or a Messuage called Cursall Grange, by Prescription, and they were at Issue on the Prescription; but in Arrest of taking the Inquest, it was shewn to the Court, that the Prescription was uncertain for the Common, to wit, To the Manor or Messuage; where he ought to have claimed it to one only. And the Court adjudged them to re-plead, though the Place itself was expressly and certainly named and called Cursall Grange. In the same Book, fol. 177. pl. 39. an Ejectment de una acra terræ sive prati adjudged ill; and so is the same Case reported, Dyer 264. pl. 39. and 1 And. 31. pl. 73. An Inquisition on a diem

a diem clausit extremum finds, that a Man was seized de uno messuagio sive tenemento, was held void and insufficient, Ley. 9. 13 Rep. 48. So an Ejectment de uno messuagio sive tenemento is ill, even after a Verdict, 1 Rolle's Rep. 7, 334. 2 Rolle's Abr. 80. 3 Leonard 228. Ley. 43. 2 Cro. 621. 1 Siderfin 295. 1 Cro. 188. and many other Books. And in Noy's Reports, on the like Occasion, it is said, that a Writ in the Disjunctive is void. And in Popham, fol. 203. it is held, that an Ejectment de burgagio sive tenemento is naught. Though indeed in Serjeant Hardresse's Reports, fol. 173. in the Case of Danvers versus Willington, it was held, that an Ejectment pro uno messuagio sive burgagio in Hay infra Muros was good enough; but the Reason given was, because messuagium et burgagium signify the same Thing in a Borough. There was a Cause (Pasch. or Tr. 8 W. 3.) about two Years since in this Court, it was an Indictment against Stocker, for that he fabricavit, seu fabricari causavit, a certain Bill. Exception was taken to it, because it was in the Disjunctive, whereas it ought to have been positive and particular. And I think the Council for the Prosecutor could never get over that Exception; and, to the best of my Remembrance, there was but one Answer that was aimed at, and that was, that the Offence and Fact were the same; for he that caused it to be counterfeited, might be truly said to counterfeit it: But I think that was not held a good Answer to that Exception. But in our Case that cannot be pretended: Justificare and Vilipendere are of a very different Signification. The very Indictment doth insinuate as much; Justificare, vel saltem extenuare, diminuerere, et vilipendere. The vel saltem doth shew, that the subsequent Words are not of so great Force as those precedent. And indeed almost opposite they are; for he that justifies, denies that it was an Offence; whilst he that diminishes or undervalues it, says truly, it was an Offence, but not so great as is pretended. And, my Lord, by reason of this Uncertainty, the Court must be in Doubt what Judgment to give; for it is evident, he that would justify Sir John Friend's Offence would deserve a greater Punishment, than he that should only lessen it, and say it was not so great an Offence as Charnock's. Such an Invasion is not so horrid and villainous, nor of so deep a Dye, as that barbarous Assassination that was intended. After such a Manner, methinks, a Man might lawfully extenuate an Offence, when it would be highly criminal to maintain and justify the Fact. Besides, Vilipendere may be taken to vilify, contemn, and condemn the Fact; and must that be thought a Crime? And the non afterwards, with those other Aggravations that are there added, cannot mend the Matter: For all that Harangue of persuading Persons that Sir John Friend and Sir William Perkins were innocent, and the inciting the People to Treason and Rebellion, depend purely on the Justification or Extenuation of the Crime; for, if the Fact were justified, People would be sooner induced to follow their Example, than if it were acknowledged to be an Offence, but the Heinousness of it lessened, diminished, or vilified. And which of these Defendants aimed at, was doubtful to him that drew the Indictment, doubtful to the Jury, and therefore I hope the Court will give no Judgment on it. Besides this, my Lord, there is, I presume, another Exception that may prove fatal to this Indictment; and that is, the insufficient setting forth the Attainers of Sir John Friend and Sir William Perkins, in not shewing when, where, or before what Judges they were attainted, which, with Submission to your Lordship, ought of Necessity to have been done. I acknowledge that a bare Inducement requires not much Certainty: But when it is such a Matter, on which the whole doth so depend that you can make nothing without it, and when it is traversable, then it is Substance, and must of Necessity be certainly expressed. For Instance, if J. S. be accused, either civilly or criminally, of an Offence, which is not so but with relation to a Fact of J. D. there the Fact of J. D. must be certainly expressed. As in Hely 73. 3 Cro. 752. Plowman, a Constable, was indicted for suffering one, who was arrested pro quadam feloniam antea factam, to escape; and because it was not shewn what Felony it was, and when done, he was discharged. So in this Case, if it be an Offence to absolve Traitors, whether they are attainted or no, then the Treason ought to be specially and particularly set forth, and when and where it was committed: But if it be not an Offence to absolve Traitors, unless they are attainted, then that Attainder ought to be as fully and plainly expressed as the Time and Place where those Traitors were executed, which in this Indictment is carefully set forth. And that this Indictment is faulty in this Particular, I shall endeavour to prove, as well by Precedents, as by the Opinions and Judgments in our Books of Law. But inasmuch as this Indictment is primæ impressionis, I must trespass on your Lordship's Patience, whilst I refer to other Precedents in which Records are mentioned and recited, and from a Parity of Reason reduce them to the present Case. I shall begin with Precedents of Declarations. If an Action of Debt be brought against a Sheriff for the Escape of one in Execution, the Time and Place, and the Court in which the Judgment was obtained, is always mentioned, Hern. 74. Robinson 311. Brown's Entries, 1 par. 18. 2 par. 15. Brownlow's Lat. Rediviv. 33. Thompson 122. and Vidian 193, 197. and several other Books.

So against a Sheriff for not taking one in Execution that was in his Presence, sets forth the Judgment, and out of what Court, when and where the Execution issued. Upper Bench Precedents 79. Ashton 57. 2 Brownlow 35, 36.

An Action for maliciously indicting the Plaintiff for Felony sets forth, when, where, and before whom the Indictment was. Vidian 145. Hansard 24, 25, and 53.

An Information against one for taking and carrying away the Goods of a Felo de se, sets forth the Inquisition, and before whom it was taken. Old Book of Entries, 225. b.

An Information for intruding into Lands which came to the King's Hands by Attainder, sets forth the Record of Attainder, where, when, and before whom. Rastall's Entries 387, 412. Plowden's Commentaries 547. Ashton 181.

And so, my Lord, in all good Precedents, where Records of Attainder are mentioned, the Time, Place, and Court are always set forth. So is Wiat's Attainder, Co. Entries 79. Rastall 413. b. Plowden's Com. 449.

So is Littleton's Attainder, Co. Entries 422. b. And Trussell's Attainder, Co. Entries, 246. b. the Duke

Duke of Somerset's Attainder, Co. Entries 481. and the Attainder of John Bary, in the same Book, fol. 699.

So if the Master of the Crown-Office takes an Inquisition concerning the Escape of any Prisoners of this Court, according to the 39th of H. 6. c. 33. the Record on which they were committed is fully taken Notice of, as I have seen a Precedent, Mich. 4 & 5 El. rot. 7. In the Case of Mr. Braddon and Mr. Speake, the Indictment doth not only say that my Lord Essex did murder himself at such a Time and Place, but adds further, as by Inquisition taken at the Tower of London aforesaid, upon View of the Body of the said Arthur Earl of Essex, and now in this Court remaining of Record, does more plainly appear, (State Trials, Vol. 3. p. 855.) So the Indictment against Tasborough and Price, for suborning Dugdale to retract his Evidence that he had given against the Popish Recusants, &c. (Vol. 2. p. 1017.) sets forth the Record, where and before whom such Convictions were. So in the Case of Thompson, Pain and Farewel, for printing and publishing a scandalous Pamphlet relating to Sir Edmundbury Godfrey's Death, (Vol. 3. p. 505.) the Information doth not begin like this Indictment, Whereas Green, Bury, and Hill were attainted of Murder; but sets forth, that it was in such a Court, in such a Year and Term, with the Indictment and Attainder at large, and where the Record is to be found.

I could instance in many more Precedents of the like Nature; but I fear I have tired your Lordship's Patience too much already, and therefore shall conclude with one that will lead me to the Opinions and Judgments in our Books of Law, which I hope will be of Use to fortify the Precedents I have cited to prove this Indictment vicious. It is in Keilway 193. An Inquisition that finds the Attainder of one Bays: The Record is large, and therefore I shall not recite it, nor make any other Observations on it than what are in the very Report; which are in these Words: "Memo-
"randum. This Inquisition was drawn by good "Advice, that is to say, by the Council of King
"Henry the 7th; yet the Inquisition which entitled
"the King to the Land, by reason of the At"tainder of the said Bays, doth not make any "Mention of the Indicters, nor of the Names
"of the Justices of Peace who took the Indict-
"ment, but only the Day of the Indictment
"taken, and the Day of his Attainder, without
"expresly mentioning what kind of Felony, but "pro quadam felonia, and the Names of the "Justices before whom he was attainted." These are the Words of the Reporter: And, my Lord, that this Case is of general Concern, appears by the next Case in that Book, Keilway 194. An Indictment was found on the Escape of certain Persons convict, without shewing before what Justices the Conviction was; and after the Matter was considered at the Bar and the Bench, the Indictment was held insufficient: But says that Case, "The Names of the Justices of Peace
"before whom the original Indictment was taken
"is not material, nor the specifying of the "Felony, prout patet supra in the Case of Bays;
"for where the Court is instructed to whom to write
"to certify the Record, all the Special Matter
"shall come in by the Certificate: And although
"the Justices of Gaol-Delivery, or other Justices,
"before whom the Conviction or Attainder is,
"do not certify the Original, it is not material,
VOL. X.

" so that they certify the Body of the Record of "the Attainder or Conviction." These are the Words of that Book: And, my Lord, it must be on the same Reason, that where a Man pleads a Conviction of Recusancy, he must shew before whom it was, Noy 89, 97. And so are the Precedents in Winche's Entries 522, 523, 524.
2 Brownl. 15. Hern. 503. So in an Action for maliciously indicting a Man for Treason, it is not sufficient to say he did indict the Plaintiff; nay, if he adds coram such Persons, Justices of the Peace, and omits ad gaolam deliberand' assignat', it is ill, 2 Cro. 357. And in an Action for maliciously indicting a Man of Perjury, he must set forth the Indictment, and shew that it was preferred before one that had Conusance of such Matters. And that is not all; he must likewise shew, that the Cause in which he swore was coram iudice, 3 Cro.
725. He that pleads a Presentment in a Court
Leet, must set forth the Day when the Court was holden, 2 Saunders 290. 1 Ventris 107. And therefore to plead that at quandam curiam he was amerced, is ill, Modern Rep. 75.

An Indictment of Maintenance in quodam placito coram Domino Rege pendente, not mentioning where the King's-Bench sat, was held fatal in Arrest of Judgment, 1 Ventr. 302.

An Indictment for a second Offence, where the Punishment is greater than for the first, ought to recite the former Conviction, 1 Lennard 295.
So it was done in Roger Booth's Case, Mo. 666.
pl. 913. In 3 Keble 737, an Indictment for a second Offence of Printing did set forth the first, but did not say where it was; therefore Twisden held the Indictment naught. And if there be a Necessity of setting forth so precisely the first Conviction, to make the second Offence the greater, methinks, in Reason, it must as certainly be set forth, where it gives the very esse to the Offence. And if such a general Way of referring to Records should be allowed in Indictments, it would not only overthrow all the Precedents and other Authorities I have cited, but the Defendants must needs lie under several Inconveniencies.
They would then be cut off from the Privilege of pleading Nul tiel Record, or traversing it, as was done in Bays's Case before-mentioned: For, although such a Traverse might amount almost to the General Issue, yet comprehending Matter of Law, the Defendants may plead it specially,
Hobart 127. And if the Defendants plead the General Issue, how shall they know where to go to find out the Record, to see whether a true Copy be produced against them? And it cannot be a sufficient Answer to say, that the Indictment sets forth that debite et legitime they were convicted and attainted; it must be shewn after what Manner they were attainted, that the Court may judge whether it was legally done or no. In Patrick Harding's Case, in the first Year of this King and the late Queen (it is reported in 2 Ventr.
316.) the Indictment against him was for High
Treason, and did set forth that he adhered to the King's Enemies. The Jury found, that he listed and sent Soldiers to the French King, then an Enemy to our King and Queen: But the Court held the Indictment too short there, because it mentioned hostibus et inimicis generally; whereas it should have set forth who those Enemies were, that the Court might take Notice whether they were Enemies, as the Law intended.

In the Case of Woodly and Bezly, 2 Cro. 291. Wolverton 213. 1 Brownlow 114. In Debt for Rent upon a Lease for Years, the Plaintiff derives his Title by the Grant of the Reversion by way of Bargain and Sale in Fee from the first Lessor; and declares, that by Indenture of such a Date, one grants, bargains and sells for Money to him the Reversion in Fee, which Indenture was inrolled such a Day secundum formam statuti; and on nil debet pleaded, there was a Verdict for the Plaintiff: Yet Judgment was arrested; because the Plaintiff had not shewn in what Court the Indenture was inrolled; though it might have been, and undoubtedly it was alledged, that it was but a Conveyance to the Title, and an Inducement to the Action, and secundum formam statuti shews it was debite et legitime: So in Allen 19. King against Somerland. In Debt for Rent, the Plaintiff declares on a Lease for Years made by a Stranger, who bargained and sold the Reversion per indenturam debito modo inrotulat' in Curia Cancellaria. After a Verdict for the Plaintiff, on nil debet pleaded; it was moved in Arrest of Judgment, that he had not alledged the Inrollment to be within six Months, nor secundum formam statuti; and though it were said to be debito modo, yet that would not mend the Matter, nor aid the Incertainty, and therefore Judgment was arrested. So in the same Book and Folio, Colman against Painter. In an Action by the Lessee against his Lessor, on a Covenant for peaceable Enjoyment, he assigns for Breach a former Lease to J. S. The Defendant pleads, that the Lease to J. S. was with Condition of Re-entry for Non-payment of Rent, and that before the Lease made to the Plaintiff, the Rent was behind, and legitime demandat' secundum formam indenturæ, and upon Non-payment he re-entered, and made the Lease to the Plaintiff: And upon Demurrer it was resolved, that the Demand was insufficiently alledged; for, says the Book, he ought to set forth certainly, when and where it was made, that it might appear to the Court to be legal.

I shall trouble your Lordship but with one Case more to this Point; it is in 3 Lennard 72. A Quo Warranto was brought by the Queen against Sir John Constable, who claimed certain Wreck in the County of York. The Defendant pleaded, that Edward Duke of Buckingham was seized of such a Manor, to which he had Wreck appendant, and that he was de alta proditione debito modo attinetus, and that found before the Escheator; and shewed further, that that Manor descended to Q. Mary, who granted the same to the Earl of Westmoreland, who granted the same to the Defendant: Upon which it was demurred; and Exception was taken to the Plea, because the Attainder is not fully and certainly pleaded. It was argued by Plowden, Council for the Defendant, that the Attainder was certainly pleaded, scilicet, debito modo attinetus: For, says he, it is shewn that the Wreck is appendant to the Manor, and then if he hath the Manor, he hath the Wreck also: And if he had the Manor, it is not material to the Queen how he hath it; for the Queen doth not claim the same, but impeacheth the Defendant for using there such a Liberty. But he there grants, that if the Heir of the Duke had demanded the Manor there against him, the Attainder ought to have been pleaded certainly. And if so much Certainty be required in pleading an Attainder that makes a Title to an Estate, that Attainder must needs be as fully, as clearly, and as certainly set forth, that is the Ground-work and Foundation of an Indictment for that which is called a very great Offence; which is not for absolving two Persons in the Parish of Paddington, nor for absolving two impenitent Traitors, but for absolving two Persons attainted of High Treason, who did not repent of that Treason of which they were attainted.

There are; my Lord, I think; some other Faults in the Indictment. It mentions, That Sir John Friend and Sir William Perkins were attainted for High Treason, in compassing the King's Death, and adhering to his Enemies; which were two Treasons in each of them, and consequently four in all. Yet afterwards the Indictment says; That these Defendants intending to justify the horrid Treason aforesaid, (in the Singular Number.) So in the Conclusion; that the Absolution was given absque aliqua penitentia pro alta proditione prædicta prius declarata, without shewing which Treason in particular was unrepented of; and each of them was not obliged to repent of all the Treasons, for they were not all his own. And is like the Case this very Term in this Court, where a Rescous was returned against two Persons; that they had rescued J. S. prædict', without shewing which, and there was J. S. senior, and J. S. junior before-mentioned; and for this Incertainty that Return was quashed. And it seems to me to bear some Resemblance to the Case of Tindall and Cobbs, 3 Lennard, fol. 9, 10. In an Action of Waste, the Declaration shews the Demise of the Manor of Wolverton and other Lands, and assigns the Waste in quodam bosco vocal' Wolverton Wood, parcel' præmissor'; and it was held insufficient, for that it could not be Parcel of the Manor and other Lands also.

I must likewise humbly submit it to your Lordship, whether the Fact itself be sufficiently set forth, et eos absolvi pronuntiaverunt, pronounced them to be absolved: Whether it does not refer to somewhat to be done hereafter, and ought not rather to have been, eos absolutos pronuntiaverunt.

The Proclamation for Evidence before the Jury is sworn, which ought to be after, and several other Informalities in the Indictment and Proceedings, I should have spoken to; and have justified and maintained the Imposition of Hands, from the Doctrine and Practice of our Church; and likewise have said somewhat to the Matter that is specially found, to prove that these Defendants are thereby acquitted of the whole: But these Things will (I doubt not) be much better done by such other Council as your Lordship shall please to hear for the Defendants. I am sensible I have already been too tedious, for which I humbly beg Pardon of your Lordship, and pray your Judgment for the Defendants.

N U M B E R X.

The Case, with the Proceedings against Major John Bernardi, Mr. Counter, Mr. Blackburn, Mr. Cassels, Mr. Chambers, and Mr. Meldrum, on Account of the Assassination-Plot, in King William's Reign.

*Wrote by Major John Bernardi, in Newgate, after he had been there near thirty-three Years a Prisoner, (though in the Historical Part abridged) without any Allowance from the Government, and who could never be admitted to Bail, or take his Trial.

MAJOR John Bernardi was the Son of Francis Bernardi, descended of an ancient Noble Family, Counts of the Holy Empire, &c. This Francis was sent to England by the Serene Republic of Genoa, with Credentials from the Duke and Governors of that State, in the Character of Agent, and afterwards of that of Resident, from 1651, until after the happy Restoration of King Charles II. We find, that on Tuesday, Sept. 16, 1651, on a Report from the Speaker,

It was resolved by the Parliament to receive Francis Bernardi, Agent from the Commonwealth of Genoa, according to the Rule for receiving Agents.

Henry Scobell, Cler^r Parliament^r.

And on the 22d of June, 1660, Signior Francis Bernardi was appointed Resident from the said Commonwealth to England, to congratulate his Majesty on his happy Return to his Kingdoms. But about two Years afterwards the Republic sent over another Person to succeed the said Signior Francis Bernardi; and as he was born in England, at the Time when his Father Count Philip de Bernardi was here also in Embassy, and loving the Country as the Place of his Nativity, he lived and died in this Kingdom, having spent near thirty thousand Pounds in Hospitality, and indulging a particular Taste in Gardening, being the most famous Gentleman in the Kingdom of his Time for fine Gardens. He lived some Time near Windsor, when first out of his Ministry; but removed afterwards into Worcestershire, to be more remote and unknown. Here his Son John began to entertain Thoughts of getting from under his Father's Discipline, who used him with great Severity; sometimes confining him like a Criminal in a little dark Room for Trifles, allowing him only Bread and Small Beer; and whilst so confined, no body durst relieve him, or let him out. Thus this John Bernardi was unhappily destined to Confinement in his Youth by an unkind Father, and in his Old Age to undergo the like rigid Fate by unprecedented Acts of Parliament, without ever being heard, or proved criminal by any Court in the Kingdom.

Accordingly John Bernardi escaped from his Father in the Year 1670, leaving him asleep in his Bed; and going out of his Gate, he kneeled down on the Ground, protesting and praying that he might never return, whilst his Father lived. He began his Journey towards Coventry, and though pursued, had the good Luck to escape, and got to Sir Clement Fisher's Seat at Packington near that City, whose Lady was the heroick Mrs. Jane Lane, who protected and conducted King Charles II. after the Battle of Worcester, (so often mentioned in the History of those Times) and who was very intimate with young Bernardi's Father: But Sir Clement and his Lady were gone to London two Days before, whither young Bernardi followed them. On hearing his Case, they did not persuade him to return; but recommended him by Letter to Captain Littleton Clent, a Relation of her Ladyship's then in Garrison at Portsmouth, and equipped him with Necessaries and Money for his Journey. On his Arrival at Portsmouth the Captain received him very obligingly, and entered him in his own Company, and taught him all the Duty and Exercise of a Soldier. This Life young Bernardi was very fond of, and passed through various Posts (in Holland) in the Army; for he had seven Commissions in all, five of which were conferred on him by his Highness the Prince of Orange, the sixth by the States-General and the Prince of Orange, and the seventh by King James II. before the Revolution. He attained the Rank of a Captain at twenty-seven Years of Age. At the Siege of Maestricht he lost an Eye, and was shot through one of his Arms, the Bones of which were dashed to Splinters; after wrapping his Arm in the Flap of his Coat, he crowded back to the Breach, and fell down to the Bottom amongst the Dead, (the Ground being covered with them;) when a Soldier under

* As many People are unacquainted with the Reasons why those Persons, suspected of being concerned in the Assassination-Plot, lay so long in Newgate, without being either bailed, tried, or discharged; this Account, wrote by Major Bernardi, (one of those taken up and confined) will explain the Cause of it.

his Command seeing him fall, jumped after him, took him up in his Arms, and ran to the Trenches with him, where Surgeons are always waiting on those Occasions; and thus saved his Ensign from bleeding to Death. The Prince of Orange hearing of it, immediately promoted Bernardi, and ordered him, with the other wounded Officers, to be conducted to Bois-le-duc: But Bernardi not being able to endure the jolting of the Carriage, was laid on the Ground, till his Servant went to get Men to carry him back to the Hospital. When he was pretty well recovered, he went with his Arm in a Sling to Utrecht: But not being able to do Duty for some Time in his Regiment, he made his Address to a Maiden Lady, well born and bred, but near twice as old as himself, he being then about twenty; but her Fortune being considerable for one in so low a Post, he married her in April 1677, and lived with her eleven Years. In 1687, when King James II. demanded the six Regiments he had lent the Dutch, and they refused to return them, about sixty Officers quitted that Service; amongst whom was Captain Bernardi, who thinking it his Duty to obey the Commands of his Prince, came to England. In 1688, when the Prince of Orange landed in England, and succeeding in his Enterprize, King James II. after many Difficulties and Dangers risked by him, got privately away from Rockester over into France; when Major-General Kirk was sent by the Prince of Orange to all the Regiments then in England, with an Association to be signed by all the Officers, the Contents of which were to bind them under their Hands to stand by and defend the Prince against all Persons whatsoever, and all the Officers that refused to sign it, were ordered to quit their Commands. Captain Bernardi refused to sign such Association, and quitted his Employ, went to London, and solicited for the Prince of Orange's Pass for himself and Family, being six in Number, to go out of the Kingdom, the only Favour he desired, which was granted him; those Persons that went without a Pass being in Danger of their Lives, or being plundered by the Mob. Captain Bernardi got safe to Calais, and found many English Gentlemen arrived there before him, some of whom were his Acquaintance, and in great Distress for Want of Money to bear their Charges to Paris, having been stripped of all they had by the Tumults in England. Bernardi having got to the Value of above one hundred Pounds in Cloaths, Linen, Tent and Field-Equipage, pawned them all to a Broker for less than half their Value, to assist some of those Gentlemen; whereby he lost his Goods, not having an Opportunity of redeeming them in Time. Captain Bernardi arriving at St. Germain's, King James II. told him, that he was just going to Ireland, and had then about twenty-three hundred of his Subjects arrived at St. Germain's. The French King granted Orders for them to march to Brest, where the late Earl of Dover was ordered to meet and receive them: In the mean time King James went to Brest, where the French King had ordered a large Fleet, of about thirty-five Sail, to receive him and his Soldiers, and land them in Ireland; and in getting thither was the famous Battle with Admiral Herbert in Bantry-

Bay. But King James's Affairs growing bad in Ireland, he sent Major Bernardi (made a Major in Ireland) to Scotland, to accompany the Earl of Seaforth, then going to raise Men for King James: But receiving the News of King James's being defeated at the Battle of the Boyne, the Earl of Seaforth dismissed his Forces, and sent them to their Places of Abode, without consulting his Uncle, his Officers, &c. who were greatly exasperated: Whereupon Major Bernardi desired to go to England, which Major-General Bouchan approved of, and sent for the Laird of * Glencoe to come with forty of his Vassals to receive Bernardi at Invergary, and to conduct him to the Braes of Monteth, which was performed in the Night-time, for Fear of the Garrisons that lay in the Way.

Bernardi proceeded on his Journey from the Braes of Monteth, under the Conduct of a Guide appointed him by Colonel Graham, and arrived at Edinburgh in the Month of November, 1691. The Rulers of that City having heard that some Gentlemen were come from the Highlands, ordered their Gates to be shut, and a general Search to be made for them. Bernardi's Landlord getting Notice of it, conducted him out of Town, but half an Hour before that Order was put in Execution; otherwise his Journey at that Time had terminated in the Tolbooth, or some other Prison in Edinburgh; but escaping that and other Dangers, he travelled on from thence to London, meeting with no more Difficulties at that Time, than those of a long Winter Journey. But Misfortunes may be compared with evil Habits, it being no easy Task to get out of either, when once unhappily fallen into the Road of them. And this proved to be Bernardi's Case; for, having finished his Affairs in London, by disposing of some Effects he had left with a Friend when he went out of England, and by selling his Scotch Horses, he purposed to go over into Flanders, and meeting with two Gentlemen of his Acquaintance ready to go out of Town, in order to make the same Voyage, he went with them to Colchester, where they were recommended to a Master of a Ship, who was in a short Time to carry over a Lady of great Quality to Ostend; but the Wind happening to be fixed in the East, the Lady ordered her Trunks to be put on Shipboard, and then went to a Gentleman's House about five Miles off, charging the Master to send for her as soon as the Wind came fair. Bernardi and his two Friends met with two other Gentlemen, who were Strangers to them, and also unknown in the Town, who were come thither to get a Passage over in the same Ship. They joined Company, and lodged all together for some Nights at Mr. Cook's, then Post-master in Colchester; but having Notice of some busy People's Inquisitiveness about them, Bernardi and his two Friends went to a Gentleman's House, about a Mile out of the Town, and the other two Gentlemen went to the Master of the Ship's House. The second Night after Bernardi and his two Friends went into the Country, intimation was given to them, that Sir Isaac Rebow, a Justice of the Peace, had issued out his Warrant to apprehend them, and bring them before him;

* This Laird of Glencoe was a little while afterwards, with his Lady and Vassals, barbarously murdered. See Bishop Burnet's History of his own Times, Vol. 2. p. 88, 89. for an Account of this cruel Affair. See also a Quarto Pamphlet, intituled, Murder will out. The English Parliament voted this a barbarous Massacre.

and the Wind coming fair the same Night, they went directly to the Master of the Ship's House, in order to go on board. The Master of the Ship told them, that he had sent a Messenger for the Lady two Hours before, and expected her in an Hour more; and sent one of his Men to conduct them on Ship-board, and said he would follow them, with the other two Gentlemen at his House, as soon as the Lady came. A Message came from the Lady, that she could not possibly come before the next Day in the Afternoon. Bernardi and his two Friends continued on Ship-board to avoid the Justice's Warrant. The next Day towards the Evening, came a Company of Train-Bands, with five hundred Mob, to the Key, where the Ship lay dry, at Low Water, about two Miles from the Town. This Captain of the Train-Bands commanded his Men to go on board, and to bring all the Persons they found in the Ship to him. These Orders were obeyed; and Bernardi, and the two Gentlemen with him, were seized and carried directly to Colchester Gaol, where the other two Gentlemen and the Master of the Ship had before been made Prisoners. The Lady had set out in order to go on board, but being told what had happened, she returned back, and never appeared; upon which six Justices assembled to break open and search her Trunks, exposing even her foul Linen to the View of hundreds of People; but their Worships could not discover who she was, neither had Bernardi or any of the other four Gentlemen the least Knowledge of her, but by Name and Title, which was the Countess of Erroll; having never seen her. When the six wise Men had finished their Search of the Lady's Goods, they strictly examined and searched their five Prisoners separately, and charged them with having treasonable Papers and Pamphlets, though no such were found about them, neither had they any; but some such Things were found amongst the Lady's Goods. These Justices sent an Account of their Proceedings to the Earl of Nottingham, then Secretary of State, and thereby represented Major Bernardi and the other four Gentlemen to be Accomplices with the said Lady, and committed them to the County Gaol at Chelmsford; from hence they writ to their Friends, and got themselves removed by Habeas Corpus to London, and gave Bail before a Judge, to appear in the Court of King's-Bench the then next Term. Before the Term Two of the Five went off, either by Composition or Bilking their Bail; but Bernardi and his two Friends appeared, in Hopes and Expectation of being discharged by the Court: But the Attorney-General opposed their being discharged, having Instructions from the Secretary of State so to do, alledging that they were guilty of Treason. The Court ordered them into Custody of a Messenger, where they remained confined near seven Months. Bernardi having for many Years been well known to my Lord Romney, who was the other Principal Secretary of State, writ a Letter to his Lordship; and, by his Favour, they all three were admitted to Bail again upon the first Day of Michaelmas Term, to appear on the last Day of the same Term. They appeared accordingly; but the Attorney-General still went on with his Charge against them, and affirmed to the Court, that the treasonable Papers found in the Lady's Trunk, together with such other Evidence as would be produced in Essex; was sufficient to bring them to their Trial; and therefore he moved the Court to bind them over to Chelmsford Assizes, and they were bound over accordingly, twelve of their Friends giving five hundred Pounds Security each for their Appearance; and in order to their Defence, they applied themselves to four eminent Council in London, and gave them Breviates and large Fees to plead their Cause; and provided Coaches to carry them down, and to attend and bring them back again. The Day before the Assizes began, they went down with their Council, Sir Creswell Levinz, Sir Bartholomew Shower, Counsellor Dolben, and another whose Name the Author hath forgot. The six prosecuting Justices were got there before them, with their subpœna'd Witnessess, who were all heard by the Grand Jury the next Day, upon an Indictment preferred against them; but for want of sufficient Evidence to find the Bill, the Grand Jury rejected it, and gave in their Verdict Ignoramus; whereupon they were discharged in Court by Proclamation; and the six Justices galloped Home to Colchester in all Haste, as soon as they heard that the Grand Jury had thrown out the Bill of Indictment. This Prosecution, under close Confinement sometimes, and under Bail at other times, continued about a Year and a half, which put Major Bernardi to the Expence of some hundreds of Pounds, and his two Fellow-Sufferers to as much.

Major Bernardi, soon after he was discharged, went over to Holland with the Earl of Nottingham's Pass, and returned again within the Time limited by the Pass, and appeared at the Secretary's Office as he was enjoined, that my Lord might know he had not exceeded the Time prescribed him to return in; and by so doing he obtained some Favours from his Lordship afterwards. Not long after his Return from Flanders, he judged it to suit best with his Circumstances at that Time to retire into the Country, to be out of Harm's Way, and less liable to Company and Expence; for his five hundred Miles Journey from the Highlands of Scotland to London, with the undeserved Imprisonment and Prosecution which he suffered by the officious Justices, had very much impaired his Substance. And although nothing less than his Life was aimed at by the Essex Justices, yet his Sufferings then were but Fleabites, in comparison to the unprecedented Hardships laid upon him soon after. He returned from a pleasant Country-House near Brentford, where he had resided about a Year and a half, and where he employed much of his Time, and some Expence, in improving and beautifying the Gardens there; but the Premises being made over to Doctor Ward, Prebend of Salisbury, in Part of his Lady's Portion, Bernardi was obliged to quit the House on that Account, and came to London at Christmas 1695: A fatal Remove from a quiet Country-Abode to a Sea of Troubles, which in great Measure is to be imputed to his Misfortune in meeting with one Captain Rookwood by Accident at a Tavern! Captain Rookwood was then lately come from France, and had been an Acquaintance of Bernardi's of about seven Years standing, though they had not seen each other for some Years then last past. Rookwood frankly told Bernardi, that he was quite tired out in foreign Service; that his Brother had a good Estate, and Interest

Interest enough to obtain Leave for him to come Home; and that he was come over to that End, but kept himself a little private, until his Brother had gained him a Licence to appear; it being then made criminal by a Law, for any Subject to come from France without Leave from the Government. Within two Months, or thereabouts, after Bernardi's Arrival in Town, a horrid Conspiracy to assassinate and murder his late Majesty King William, was discovered, and many Proclamations came forth, offering a thousand Pounds Reward for securing each Man inserted in those Proclamations. Several were taken upon the first, and more were apprehended daily upon the repeated Proclamations. Captain Rookwood came to Bernardi on a Saturday, soon after the horrid Plot broke out, and his Countenance and Behaviour seemed to discover him to be under some Disturbance of Mind. Bernardi thereupon asked him, if any Evil had happened to him? To which he answered, No; but said, that if any body should be so malicious as to give Information of his being come over at that Time; he should certainly be taken up. But it seems his Name was in a Proclamation, which came out upon that very Day, to seize him as one of those who were concerned in the said Assassination-Plot, though Bernardi had not then heard any thing of the Matter, and Rookwood concealed it from him, intending, as appeared by his Behaviour afterwards, to spend that Evening with Bernardi; but Bernardi told him, that he was under a Promise and Engagement to sup that Night at a Tavern on Tower-Hill. Captain Rookwood thereupon earnestly replied, that if the Meeting there was not upon private Business, he desired he might be one of the Company; with which Bernardi readily complied, and he and Rookwood, with other Company, supped there accordingly; and making it too late to go Home to their Lodgings, Rookwood and Bernardi stayed all Night at the Tavern, and went to Bed together there. The next Morning, being Sunday, some Constables and other armed Men came into the House, and entered the Room where Bernardi and Rookwood were in Bed, and producing their Warrant to search for and seize them, they demanded Submission thereto. Bernardi and Rookwood readily yielded to their Authority, not making the least Resistance, and got up and dressed themselves as soon as possibly they could; but the Constables Orders being to carry them, and all the People belonging to the Tavern, before the Recorder of London, who was then gone to Church, they were obliged to remain in the Tavern until Noon, guarded by twenty Men. This Delay gave Bernardi Time and Opportunity to make some Inquiry into the Cause of all that Hurly-Burly. The senior Constable told him, that a Neighbour's Servant-Maid came to the Tavern the Night before, and seeing some Gentlemen at Supper, she asked a Drawer who they were? And he making her a surly Answer, she went with her Brother, a Journeyman Shoemaker, directly to the Recorder, and gave Information, that some evil-minded Men were at the Tavern, and that the People of the House refused to discover who they were; and therefore it was reasonable to believe, that they might be such Persons as the Government then sought for, by divers Proclamations. It was then near the latter

End of February, and the before-mentioned horrid Conspiracy was discovered about the Middle of the same Month. The Constables having Notice of the Recorder's being at Home, they carried Bernardi and Rookwood with all the Tavern Family before him, who examined them very strictly and separately, and told them that he could do no less than commit them at that disturbed Time, though he found no other Cause than Suspicion for so doing; and therefore, as a Favour, would send them to the two Compters, and not to Newgate, that they might with less Difficulty and Expence obtain their Liberty, when the Storm was blown over. He ordered the Tavern Family to give Bail the next Day. Bernardi and Rookwood remained quiet under their respective and different Confinements near a Month, without any Communication with each other, either by Letter or Message, in all that Time. Captain Charnock, King and Keys, were taken upon the first Proclamation, which came forth on or about the 22d Day of February; and were tried and convicted of High Treason March 11, 1695-6, and were all three executed on the 18th of the same Month.

Upon the 23d of March came forth another Proclamation, in which Bernardi's Name was inserted, and a Reward of a thousand Pounds was thereby offered to apprehend him. Captain Rookwood reposing an entire Confidence in the Friendship of one Mr. George Harris, intrusted him with the Knowledge of his and Bernardi's being Prisoners in the Compters, as before related. And here it is to be observed, that although Captain Rookwood was in a Proclamation, which came forth but the Day before he and Bernardi went together to the Tavern on Tower-Hill, and of which, without Doubt, he had been apprised at the Time of his first coming to Bernardi, who then knew nothing of the Matter; yet Captain Rookwood thought fit to conceal the same from the Knowledge of Bernardi as long as he could, and judging it conducive to his Safety, he changed his Name, and prevailed on Bernardi, by earnest Intreaty, to do the like, but without acquainting him with the Proclamation, as a Reason for his so doing. Captain Rookwood was often visited in the Compter by his Minion the said Mr. Harris, to whom he had communicated these Particulars: And as soon as the Proclamation of the 23d of March came forth, which was the last that was published to apprehend Conspirators, and was published at some Weeks Distance from the rest, Harris went and discovered Captain Rookwood and Bernardi for the Reward, and they were taken out of the Compters, by a Detachment of the Guards, in the Night of the 24th of the same Month of March, and were carried to the Tilt-Yard Guard, and examined by the Lords of the Council the next Day, and committed March 25, 1696, close Prisoners to Newgate, loaded with heavy Irons, and put into separate, dismal, dark and stinking Apartments, not being allowed to speak to each other from the Time of their being taken out of the two Compters. Bernardi did never see Rookwood afterwards, who was soon after tried and condemned, and was executed at Tyburn, with Cranburne and Lowick, on the 29th Day of April following.

It may be here demanded, How came Bernardi not to undergo the like Fate with Rookwood? To which he answers, That it was not by Favour, but but for want of Evidence to hang Bernardi; though to have taken away his Life at that Time without Proof, had been tender Mercy, compared to the Cruelty of the severe and long Confinement he has since endured. None of the Discoverers of the said horrid Plot, who were about ten or twelve in Number, ever so much as mentioned Bernardi's Name, unless Harris might make some Mention of him*, who had no other Knowledge of him, but by seeing him and his Friend Rookwood sometimes together; in which Case he might speak Truth with respect to Bernardi, but no farther. Harris's View was the two thousand Pounds Reward, which he received, and which must, no doubt, with him have been a Consideration highly preferable to Captain Rookwood's Friendship, though the Captain had been a true Friend to Harris for many Years, and, according to all Accounts, as kind to him as a good Father could possibly be to a beloved Son. Captain Rookwood was proved, by one of the chief Discoverers of the Conspiracy, to have been one Night in their Assembly and Councils, and then unhappily to have given his Consent to the designed bloody Act against King William, which cost him his Life. Had or could Bernardi at that Time have been drawn into their vile and pernicious Councils, with respect to that horrid and most dishonourable Design, his Rank and long Service must necessarily have rendered him a welcome Guest amongst the Conspirators, and consequently he must have shared Captain Rookwood's Fate, without any possible Means of escaping it. Those who suffered Death upon the Account of the Assassination-Conspiracy, were eight in Number, namely, Captain Charnock, King and Keys, Major Lowick, Captain Rookwood and Cranburne, and Sir William Perkins and Sir John Friend. Sir John Fenwick suffered for another Species of Treason, as shall herein after be particularly related and explained. The nine before-mentioned being executed, there still remained many close Prisoners in Newgate upon that Account; but Evidence being wanted to convict any more of them, the Habeas Corpus Act was suspended for nine Months, to prevent them from gaining their Liberty by Law; and this was done with a View of finding out Evidence against them within that Time. The Suspension of the Act expiring, several of them entered their Prayer at the then next Sessions and Term, to be tried or admitted to Bail. The first who entered such their Prayer were three Gentlemen who were Brothers, and related to the Earl of Bath, Captain Stow, Captain Walbank, and Mr. Blackburn, and some others, and they were all bailed out and discharged, though they were taken by Proclamation, and a thousand Pounds Reward was paid for each of the first five Persons. The remaining Number in Confinement then, were only Bernardi, Captain Counter, Mr. Cassels, Mr. Meldrum, and Chambers; and they being locked up close in separate dismal Parts of the Gaol, and most of them unknown to each other, could neither communicate or do any Thing for themselves in order to their Liberty, nor could know what had been done for others: But the good Success of those before-mentioned caused their Friends abroad officiously to enter Prayers for them at the second Sessions after the Habeas Corpus Act came in Force; whereupon they were all of them taken out of their close Holes, and were carried to the Old-Bailey, in order to be tried or bailed. Mr. Constantine Phipps (who was afterwards Lord Chancellor of Ireland) was appointed their Council to move for them, and asked Bernardi, If any Application had been made to the Solicitor of the Treasury? Bernardi answered, No; alledging, that as there was no Law to keep them any longer confined, their Friends judged it needless to apply to any body for Favour; little dreaming that an Act of Parliament would be obtained to secure and continue their further Confinement, a Practice never known or heard of before. As soon as they were produced in Court in order to be tried or bailed, the Solicitor of the Treasury stood up and whispered the Judges upon the Bench: And though that Sessions, being a Sessions of Gaol-Delivery, could not lawfully be determined without either trying or bailing these State-Prisoners, the Judges being obliged by Law to deliver the Gaol; yet, upon the whispering Motion of the Solicitor of the Treasury, the Judges adjourned the Court for a Fortnight, and immediately after a Bill was brought into Parliament, and an Act passed within that Time to confine them for a Twelvemonth, on a supposed Probability still of finding out some Evidence against them in that Time†. But how came it, that the same prudent Precaution for the Safety of the State, and to bring vile Conspirators to condign Punishment, was not made Use of against those that prayed their Trial at the Sessions before, and thereby obtained their Discharge, and some of whom were committed upon the Oath of one Witness? It will not sure be difficult to solve this Question. Mr. Solicitor of the Treasury neither spoke aloud nor softly against them; and why he was so good-natured may be easily understood, having, no doubt, been properly talked with by them; which was a very unfortunate Omission in the Conduct of Bernardi and his Fellow-Sufferers, in not properly bespeaking Mr. Solicitor's Favour for them. And here a very singular and deplorable Passage happened, relating to Mr. Blackburn, who being bailed out and discharged, with those who had

* Captain Harris, in his Evidence at Rookwood's Trial, Vol. 4. p. 686. says, He met Rookwood, Blackburn, Bernardi, Counter, and others; and with two or three of them talked of going to Turnham-Green, and attacking the Prince of Orange.

† By an Act 8 W. 3. "to attain such of the Persons concerned in the late horrid Conspiracy to assassinate his Majesty's Royal Person who are fled from Justice, unless they render themselves to Justice, and for continuing several others of the said Conspirators in Custody;" in the last Clause of which are these Words:

"And whereas the Persons hereafter named, viz. — Counter, John Bernardi, Robert Cassels, Robert Meldrum, James Chambers and Robert Blackburn, have been committed, and are still in Custody in Newgate, for the said Conspiracy and Treason: Be it enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That the said — Counter, John Bernardi, Robert Cassels, Robert Meldrum, James Chambers, and Robert Blackburn, and such other Persons who shall hereafter render themselves, or shall be apprehended, and against whom there shall be Evidence upon Oath of their being concerned in the said barbarous and bloody Conspiracy of assassinating the Person of his Sacred Majesty, shall be detained and kept in Custody, without Bail or Mainprize, until the first Day of January 1697, unless they shall be sooner bailed by Order of Council, signed by six of his Majesty's most honourable Privy-Council."

first entered their Prayers to be tried, was taken up again upon the same Account, and, without any fresh Charge or Information against him, put into the Custody of a Messenger, at the Time when the House of Commons were passing the Bill for continuing the Confinement of the five last-mentioned State-Prisoners; and the Bill being carried up to the House of Lords for their Concurrence thereto, Mr. Blackburn was added to the said fatal Number in the Lords House by way of Amendment to the Bill, and sent again to Newgate. Mr. Chambers, another of the last-mentioned State-Prisoners, who had also entered his Prayer at the Term with the first to be tried or bailed, was brought up to the Court of King's-Bench by Habeas Corpus, in order to be bailed; but one of his Bail refusing to swear himself worth five hundred Pounds, Chambers was remanded back to Newgate, where he remained, with the rest, under the Parliament's Confinement, till released by Death. The first Act expiring, a second (9 W. 3. c. 4.) was soon passed to continue them in Prison another Year; unless, as in the former Act, they should sooner be bailed or discharged by Order of Council, signed by six Privy-Counsellors. And at the End thereof, all Prospect of finding out any Evidence against them seeming to be entirely vanished, a third Act (10 & 11 W. 3. c. 13.) was passed, confining them during the Pleasure of his late Majesty King William. And even some of the Members of that Parliament afterwards told Bernardi, and others of the Number so miserably confined, that the very Intention of that Act was purely to lay them under dutiful Obligations to King William for their Liberty, and thereby also at the same Time to pay his Majesty a Compliment; and that the Members did not in the least doubt of his Majesty's Clemency to them, but that in a little Time he would set them free. King William was afterwards accordingly applied to in their Favour, not long before his Death, by the late Earl of Burlington; and his Majesty was graciously pleased to promise his Lordship, that he would deliver them in a short Time. But the King's Illness and Death following soon afterwards, and before any Order was given for their Discharge, the good and gracious Design of his Majesty for the Deliverance of these unhappy Men (if he really intended it) was most unfortunately frustrated and prevented. The Act for their Confinement, by the Demise of King William, being determined, (as they were advised) they entered their Prayer at the next Sessions to be tried or bailed, but were opposed by the Attorney-General, and neither was granted. Afterwards another Act of Parliament (1 Ann. st. 1. c. 29.) was procured to be passed, confining them during the Pleasure of Queen Anne. Her Majesty was graciously pleased to release Captain Counter, the first named in the said Acts of Confinement. Major Bernardi thereupon petitioned the Queen for his Liberty, and prevailed upon his Grace the late Duke of Buckingham, then Lord President of the Council, to deliver his Petition to her Majesty; which was so done at the Intercession of her Grace the Duchess of Buckingham his Consort, and her Lady Mother the late Countess of Dorchester, both of them being so very good as strenuously to move his Grace to undertake it, urging that such Acts of Compassion and Charity were generous and excellent in Persons of Quality, and well becoming a good and great Man in high Station. The Queen was graciously pleased, upon the Duke's Motion, to consent to Bernardi's Liberty; but his Grace afterwards cautiously laying the Petition before the Privy-Council, it was by them referred to Sir Edward Northey, the then Attorney-General, which might give him an Opportunity to obstruct the Queen's intended Clemency, for politic or other Reasons. Upon this Reference, it took up some Time and Expence to attend and solicit the Dispatch of Mr. Attorney's Report, which, when made, nevertheless appeared to be in Bernardi's Favour. The Lord President called for the Report, in order to have the Sentiments of all the Lords in Council, how and in what Manner Bernardi should be delivered and discharged; but the late Earl of Oxford, then Lord Treasurer, at the same Time took the Opportunity to move that Mr. Blackburn might have his Liberty as well as Bernardi; and thereupon his Grace the President and his Lordship the Treasurer differed in Council about the respective Discharges of Bernardi and Blackburn, whereby both their Pretensions to their Liberty, though so near succeeding (to all Appearance) dropped, and never could be revived again to the Queen's Death. How far those two great Statesmen were sincere in attempting the Liberty of Bernardi and Blackburn, or either of them, or played booty, God alone knows; the Windings, Turnings and Labyrinths of Politicians not being easily traced and found out by a well-meaning honest Man. The Earl of Oxford afterwards was often applied to in their Behalf, and sometimes by Persons of greater Honour and Quality than himself; and his Lordship made more Promises than he had Buttons upon his Coat, Waistcoat and Cloak, and some of them upon his Honour, that these Prisoners should soon be set at Liberty, if they would but have a little more Patience; but all his Lordship's Promises were by him either forgot, or thro' his most refined Policy, neglected to be performed.

By the Demise of the Queen they had again Liberty, by Virtue of the Habeas Corpus Act, to pray for their Trial or to be bailed; and in order thereunto they entered their Prayer accordingly, at the first Old-Bailey Sessions, and were by that Court referred to Michaelmas Term following. They retained three or four eminent Council at Law, and fee'd them to move and plead for them. Seven or eight Motions were made that Term, at different Times, in their Behalf, and several Rules of Court were obtained at great Expence, before they could bring the then Attorney-General, Sir Edward Northey, to appear and defend their Motions. At last the then Lord Chief Justice Parker told Serjeant Webb, (one of the Council for the Prisoners) that the Court consented to their being brought to the Bar by Habeas Corpus on the Monday following, being the last Day of the Term, in order to admit them to Bail, bidding the Serjeant in the mean time to direct his Clients to give in the Names of such substantial Men as they intended to bring into Court to bail them. This glimmering Favour proved only as a little enlightening before Death, as will appear by the Sequel. The Prisoners were accordingly brought up by their Keepers from Newgate to the Court of King's-Bench, the last Day of the Term, when the Chief Justice before-named, having Notice of their being there, was pleased to ask Serjeant Webb, their Council, if they had Bail ready in Court? And being answered in the Affirmative, his Lordship was pleased to reply, That Wonders were to be done presently, Wonders indeed, and such as were never heard of before! The Prisoners were called and brought into Court, and thereupon the same Gentleman made an Harangue against them of above an Hour long; and although, towards the End of his very bitter and invective Speech against those helpless Wretches, who were obliged to receive all his Fire and Huffs, he was so ingenuous as to declare, that he had never heard of any Evidence charging them with the Crime they were committed for, yet he was pleased also to declare, that he was very well satisfied of their Guilt, by the Proceeding of the first Parliament against them, and would therefore remand them back to Newgate, which accordingly he did. At the Meeting of the next Parliament Matters were so ordered, that another Act (1 Geo. 1. st. 2. c. 7.) was prepared and procured to pass both Houses very expeditiously, to continue them in Prison during his late Majesty King George's Pleasure. If it was intended still to debar these unhappy Men from the Benefit of the Law, it would have been Charity to have told them so, when they entered their Prayer to take their Trial or be bailed at the Demise of Queen Anne, and not to have drilled them on with Hopes of Relief all that long Term, when none was intended them; impoverishing them at the same time by great Expence of Council's Fees, and otherwise, in attempting it, to the reducing and bringing them into a starving Condition in Gaol. Several Petitions were afterwards delivered to his late Majesty King George in the Name and Behalf of these Wretches, imploring his Sovereign Compassion, and setting forth, as an Instance of his great Mercy upon another Occasion, his pardoning many condemned for actual Treason against his Majesty's Person; whereas these had been long miserably confined as Prisoners of State, purely upon bare Suspicion only of being concerned in a Conspiracy against a deceased Monarch, of which the least Proof could never be made out against them; yet their Petitions were not minded. The Court of England hath the least Regard to Petitions of any Court in Europe, and so it hath been for many Reigns past; which Neglect is chiefly to be imputed to the Prime Ministers and other Great Men: His Majesty having a Petition put into his Hand, generally gives it to one of the Lords near him, where it is too often thrown aside, and never heard of more. In most other Courts particular Days are appointed to read Petitions, inserting in the Margin of each Petition, to the Effect following, viz. consented to, or not consented to; and an Office is settled wherein to lodge Petitions, where the Deliverers take them out, and by that Means all Petitioners soon know how far they are, or are not, to prevail upon such their submissive and most humble Application.

By the Demise of his late Majesty King George the First, which happened at Hanover, on or about the 11th Day of June, 1727, Bernardi and his two Fellow-Sufferers, being all the Survivors of the said miserable State-Monuments, had again Liberty by Law to pray for a Trial or to be admitted to Bail; whereupon Bernardi, on the 16th Day of June, 1727, moved the Court of King's-Bench by his Council for an Habeas Corpus to bring him up, in order to be tried, bailed or discharged, according to Law; such Council at the same Time apprising the Court, that Bernardi had, so long ago as the 25th Day of March, 1696, been committed to Newgate by the late Duke of Shrewsbury, then Secretary of State, on Suspicion of being concerned in a horrid Conspiracy to assassinate his late Majesty King William III. but without any Proof, there not being so much as the Oath of one single Witness made against him, nor was it specified in his Commitment that he was charged upon Oath; and no Proof at any Time afterwards ever appearing against him, to induce the bringing him to a Trial, several Acts of Parliament had been made to keep him in Prison, and by the last of them he was confined during the Pleasure of his said late Majesty King George I. by whose Decease Bernardi was become intitled to his Liberty, there being no Law then in Force to detain him in Prison; and the Court then made a Rule for such Habeas Corpus accordingly; though the Motion was strongly opposed by the Attorney-General Sir Philip Yorke, who, though a young Man, had sprung up quickly to that great Post in the Law, through the early Favour and Countenance of the before-mentioned Chief Justice, and his own shining Merit, built upon so nursing and advantageous a Foundation. Mr. Attorney-General (but sure he was only in Jest) objected in particular to the Motion as not proper or regular, without producing the original Commitment, which, for want of due Care in keeping and preserving the Records of Newgate, after upwards of one and thirty Years, and the Change of the several Keepers within that Time, was not then to be had; but that weighty Objection was over-ruled by the Court. Afterwards Sir John Fortescue Aland, then one of the Judges of the Court of King's-Bench, and now one of the Judges of his Majesty's Court of Common-Pleas, declared in Court, that the same Matter had been moved upon the Demise of Queen Anne, when the Chief Justice Parker before-mentioned declared his Opinion, that the Court had a discretionary Power either to bail or discharge the Prisoners, then brought up to the Court of King's-Bench by Habeas Corpus in the like Case; yet nevertheless, at the same Time, he remanded them back to Newgate. Bernardi's Council thereupon waved the Habeas Corpus, and desired to take nothing by his Motion, as conceiving the Expence only certain, (which Bernardi was ill able to bear) and the Success doubtful; and besides the Judges Commissions were not then renewed, who of themselves could not subsist longer than six Months from his present Majesty's Accession to the Crown. It was therefore thought expedient and more adviseable for Bernardi to seek Relief by petitioning the King for his Royal Favour and Clemency, than to make any farther Trial to be discharged or bailed by the Court of King's-Bench. A Bill was soon after brought into Parliament, and speedily passed into an Act (1 Geo. 2. st. 1. c. 4.) to continue his Imprisonment, with his other two Fellow-Sufferers Blackburn and Cassels, during his present Majesty's Pleasure. A printed Case was delivered to all the Lords and Commons against the Bill, while the same was under the Consideration ration of the Two Houses, as is herein after set forth. And Bernardi preferred several Petitions to the King and Queen, both before and after the said last-mentioned Act passed; the Tenor or Purport of which Case and Petitions are as followeth, viz.

The most sad and deplorable Case of Robert Blackburn, John Bernardi, and Robert Cassels, humbly offered against the Bill now depending in Parliament for continuing their Imprisonment, after a Confinement worse than Death by them already undergone, of upwards of one and thirty Years in Newgate.

IN March and April 1696, they were committed: The Crime they were charged with in their respective Commitments was High Treason, in conspiring the Murder and Assassination of his late Majesty King William III. but without Proof, there being not so much as the Oath of one single Witness made against any of them, nor is it specified in their Commitments, that they were charged upon Oath: That no Proof appearing against them whereby to bring them to a Trial, several Acts of Parliament had been made to keep them in Prison, the last of which left them to his late Majesty's Pleasure, and then by the Demise of the King they were become intituled to their Liberty: That the Persons charged with this most horrid and detestable Crime were originally Six, namely, James Counter, Robert Meldrum, James Chambers, Robert Blackburn, John Bernardi and Robert Cassels: Counter was set at Liberty by Queen Anne, and Meldrum and Chambers died in Prison; so that there were then remaining only the last Three of these miserable, wretched and most unfortunate Prisoners, who solemnly disclaim, and from their Hearts ever did and do abhor and detest, the said villainous Crime so laid to their Charge as aforesaid: And although their Number was then reduced to Three as before-mentioned, yet nevertheless by that Bill they were intended to be further confined: That they were reduced to extreme Miseries by their said tedious Confinement of one and thirty Years and upwards, in a melancholy, dismal and loathsome Gaol, and by their great Age, Infirmary and Poverty; and though they had been confined close Prisoners of State in Newgate for upwards of one and thirty Years as aforesaid, yet they had never had one Penny Allowance from the Government.

Wherefore, and in regard to the unprecedented and unparalleled Hardships of their Case, it was humbly hoped the said Bill should not pass. Subscribed,

Newgate,
July 5, 1727.

Robert Blackburn.
John Bernardi.
Robert Cassels.

Copies of Commitments follow, whereby it plainly appears that none of the said three Prisoners were committed upon Oath.

THES E are, in his Majesty's Name, to authorise and require you to receive into your Custody the Body of ——— Bernardi, herewith sent you for High Treason, in conspiring the Assassination and Murder of the King; and you are to keep him safe until he shall be delivered by due Course of Law, and for so doing this shall be your Warrant. Given at the Court at Whitehall, the 25th of March, 1696.

To the Keeper of Newgate, or his Deputy.

SHREWSBURY.

(Vera Copia, examinat. per James Fell.)

N. B. The Commitments of Mr. Blackburn and Cassels are to the same Effect with Bernardi's.

None of the said six Prisoners were committed upon any Oath, except Counter, who was charged upon the Oath of one Witness, as may appear by the following true Copy of his Commitment:

Middlesex.

RECEIVE into your Custody the Body of John, alias James Gunter, alias Counter, alias Rumsey, herewith sent you, charged before me, upon the Oath of George Harris, Gent. for High Treason, in conspiring to assassinate his Majesty, and to procure an Invasion of this Kingdom by the French, being the Person mentioned in his Majesty's Proclamation, and there called Counter, alias Rumsey; and in order to a further Examination, you are him safely to keep, until he shall be discharged by due Course of Law; and for so doing this shall be your Warrant. Given under my Hand and Seal, this 29th Day of May, 1696.

S. LOVELL, Recorder.

(Vera Copia, examinat. per James Fell.)

A Copy of the Keeper's Certificate, setting forth that none of the said three Prisoners were committed upon Oath; which Certificate was annexed to one of Bernardi's Petitions to the King.

WHEREAS James Gunter, alias Counter, alias Rumsey, James Chambers, Robert Meldrum, Robert Blackburn, Robert Cassels, and John Bernardi, were committed to Newgate in 1696, for conspiring to assassinate his late Majesty King William the Third, as appears by Copies of their several Commitments, signed by James Fell the Keeper of Newgate, and by his Head Turnkey Bodenham Rouse, which I have seen and examined:

I hereby certify, that none of the before-named Persons are charged upon any Oath specified in the said Copies of their respective Commitments; except the aforesaid Counter, who stands charged in his Commitment for the said Crime, upon the Oath of one George Harris, Gent. Given under my Hand this 15th Day of August, 1727.

THOMAS ALLEN.

True Copies of Petitions to the King and Queen, and of an Affidavit of two eminent Surgeons, are herein after set forth as followeth:

To the KING'S Most Excellent Majesty.

The most humble Petition of Major John Bernardi,
Sheweth,

THAT your Petitioner now is, and for upwards of one and thirty Years last past has been a State-Prisoner in Newgate, committed the 25th of March, 1696, by the then Earl of Shrewsbury's Warrant, as Secretary of State, and therein therein charged with High Treason, in conspiring the Murder and Assassination of his late Majesty King William; but without any Proof, or so much as any Information upon the Oath of one single Witness, that your Petitioner could ever hear of: Neither hath, in all the said Time of thirty-one Years and upwards, any Prosecution been had against your Petitioner, for the said horrid supposed Crime, which your Petitioner doth disclaim, and from his Heart ever did and doth abhor and detest.

That by two Acts of Indemnity, the one in the third, and the other in the seventh Year of the Reign of his late Majesty your most gracious Father King George the First, the Crime alledged against your Petitioner in his Commitment is pardoned; but by the said Acts the Imprisonment of your Petitioner was continued during his late Majesty's Pleasure.

That your Petitioner is advised, that by the Demise of his said late Majesty, your Petitioner became intituled to his Liberty, and ought not to be detained in Prison by any Law now in Being; and has very lately applied to your Majesty's Judges of the Court of King's-Bench to be discharged from his Confinement, but without Success.

That your Petitioner, by his so long Imprisonment, is reduced to great Straits and Want, and great Infirmity of Body; and his Life is in Danger by his close Confinement in Newgate, as by Affidavit of two eminent Surgeons, herewith produced, and sworn before one of your Majesty's Judges of the King's-Bench, and filed in the said Court, may appear. And your Petitioner is now upwards of seventy Years of Age, great and the best Part of which Time has been very uncomfortably worn out by your Petitioner, in a melancholy, dismal and loathsome Gaol, where it has cost your Petitioner above seven hundred Pounds for his Lodging.

That in regard to all such your Petitioner's sad and deplorable Circumstances, and advanced Old Age, your Petitioner most humbly hopes he may be deemed a fit Object of your Majesty's Charity and Clemency, and more especially at this Juncture of your Majesty's Accession to the Throne.

Wherefore your Petitioner doth most humbly beseech your Majesty, that he may, for the present, for the Benefit of his Health, and to save Expence, be removed from Newgate to the King's-Bench Prison, till such Time as your Majesty shall graciously see Cause to order your Petitioner's absolute Discharge.

And your Petitioner shall ever pray, &c.

JOHN WHEELER the Elder, and John Wheeler the Younger, his Son, both of the City of London, Surgeons, jointly and severally make Oath, That Major John Bernardi, who now is, and for upwards of one and thirty Years last past, as these Deponents have been informed, and verily believe, hath been a State-Prisoner in Newgate, hath frequently had very ill Fits, occasioned by a miserable Lameness and Swelling in his Arm, by Humours flowing to an old Wound. And these Deponents further say, That they have attended him many Times in such Illness, for about twelve Years last past, as his Surgeons, laying his Arm often open to the Bone by large Incisions, which have continued open and running Wounds for several Months after every such Operation; and his Torments occasioned thereby have frequently brought Fevers upon him, to the endangering his Life. And these Deponents further say, That in these Deponents Judgment, the Cause of contracting such sharp and gross Humours hath proceeded, and doth proceed from the Length and Closeness of his Confinement; which, if continued, will still endanger his Life, in these Deponents Judgment; and the rather by reason of his advanced Old Age, he being now, as these Deponents have been informed, and do believe, upwards of seventy Years of Age.

JA. REYNOLDS.

To the KING's Most Excellent Majesty.

The humble Petition of Major John Bernardi,

Sheweth,

THAT your Petitioner, by an Act of Parliament lately made, being intirely left to your Majesty's most gracious Pleasure, after having suffered near thirty-two Years close Imprisonment in Newgate, on Suspicion of being concerned in a most horrid Conspiracy against his late Majesty King William.

That your Petitioner hath always prayed and petitioned to be tried, as often as he could do it by Law, to be acquitted or condemned; yet he never could be heard or brought before any Court, to have his Guilt or Innocence proved.

That your Petitioner was not charged upon any Oath, of his being a Conspirator in that horrid Plot, which is evident by his Commitment: No Man ever being taken up for High Treason, and so charged, but the same was always specified and expressed in his Commitment, (as your Petitioner is advised.) For Instance, Mr. Counter is only charged upon the Oath of one Evidence; the Distinction sufficiently appeareth by the Copy of his Commitment, and that of your Petitioner, hereunto annexed.

That your Petitioner hath humbly set forth his great Age, Infirmity and Poverty, by a former Petition delivered into your Majesty's most gracious Hand; your Petitioner being above seventy Years old, suffering insupportable Miseries by frequent Ulcerations in his Limbs, occasioned by his long and close Confinement, attested upon the Oath of two eminent Surgeons, and annexed to his former Petition to your Majesty.

Your Petitioner therefore most humbly implores and supplicates your Majesty, in your Sovereign Compassion and great Goodness, to grant that your Petitioner may be removed from Newgate to your Majesty's Bench Prison for the present, for the Benefit of more Air, and less Expence, until your Majesty may be graciously pleased to grant your Petitioner entire Liberty.

And your Petitioner shall ever pray, &c.

To the QUEEN's Most Excellent Majesty.
The humble Petition of Major John Bernardi,
Sheweth,

THAT your Petitioner hath been a close Prisoner of State in Newgate near thirty-two Years, and is now destined to a longer Confinement, by an Act of Parliament lately made to that End, leaving your Petitioner to his Majesty's most gracious Pleasure.

That your Petitioner was not committed upon the Oath of any Evidence, as appeareth by the Copy of his Commitment annexed to his Petition, delivered also to his Majesty's most gracious Hand this Day.

That your Petitioner and the rest had their Case delivered to the Members of both Houses of Parliament, whilst the Act for their longer Imprisonment was under their Consideration; a Copy of which is hereunto annexed.

That your Petitioner is one of the oldest Commission-Officers in the Kingdom, having served the States of Holland fifteen Years by the King of England's Consent and Approbation; your Petitioner bearing five of his then Highness the Prince of Orange's Commissions in several Stations of Honour, the first of which bears Date above fifty-four Years ago; and your Petitioner hath been much wounded in the said Service.

That your Petitioner's Grandfather and Father were both Counts of the Empire, &c. though his said Father and your Petitioner were both born Subjects of this Kingdom.

That your Petitioner hath his before-mentioned Commissions, and the Imperial Patent, to produce in Testimony of the Truth thereof.

That your Petitioner hath already suffered a Punishment a thousand-fold worse than a present or violent Death, and never could obtain the Favour to be brought before any Court of Justice, to have his Guilt or Innocence proved; kept in Prison near thirty-two Years, by Methods never heard of before; and is now nigh worn out with Old Age, Decrepidness, and Poverty.

* To Blackburn's Petition, to the same Effect, was added the following Certificate :

Middlesex, J. THESE are to certify, That upon Search made amongst the Records of the Sessions of Gaol-Delivery of Newgate, held for the County of Middlesex, it appears by the said Records, that on the 2d Day of April, 1696, Robert Blackburn was committed to the said Gaol of Newgate, by the Right Honourable the Duke of Shrewsbury, Principal Secretary of State, for High Treason, in conspiring the Assassination of the late King. And I do further certify, That at the Sessions of Gaol-Delivery of Newgate, held for the said County, at Justice-Hall in the Old-Bailey, in the Suburbs of the City of London, on the 9th Day of September, 1696, the said Robert Blackburn was delivered to Bail by the Court, for his personal Appearance at the next Sessions of Gaol-Delivery, to be held for the said County, to answer to all such Matters, as on his said late Majesty's Behalf should be objected against him; and not to depart the Court without Licence; and in the mean time, to be of his good Behaviour; that then, &c. At which said next Sessions of Gaol-Delivery, to wit, at the Sessions of Gaol-Delivery of Newgate, held for the said County, at Justice-Hall aforesaid, on the 14th Day of October, 1696, the said Robert Blackburn personally appeared in open Court; and was by the said Court discharged of his Recognizance. And I do hereby further certify, That it appears by the said Records, That on the 7th Day of January, 1696-7, the said Robert Blackburn was committed to the said Gaol of Newgate, by Sir William Trumball, Knight, one of his late Majesty's Most Honourable Privy-Council, Principal Secretary of State, for High Treason, in conspiring the Murder and Assassination of the said King. Dated this 10th Day of August, 1708, in the seventh Year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lady Anne, by the Grace of God Queen of Great-Britain, &c.

S. HARCOURT, Clerk of the Peace, and Gaol-Delivery of Newgate, for the County of Middlesex.

IT appears, by the foregoing Certificate, that Robert Blackburn was committed the 2d of April, 1696.

That on the 9th of September following, he was admitted to Bail.

The 14th of October, 1696, he was discharged.

The 7th of January committed again for the same Fact; though taken up at the Buoy and Nere, by one Captain Nash, for attempting to go to Flanders without a Pass. By Captain Nash left in Custody of a Messenger nine Weeks. Then committed, by Sir William Trumball, Knight, to Newgate, and never examined, or any Oath against him, that ever he heard of; and then detained till an Act passed to imprison Counter, Meldrum, Chambers, Bernardi and Cassels, who were all Strangers to, and never seen by Blackburn till in Newgate; and then he was inserted in the amended Bill, which came down from the Lords to the Commons.

He has been now almost thirty-three Years in Prison, and no Allowance from the Government, though a State-Prisoner. He was not one of those, for whom the thousand Pounds was offered.

These several Allegations have been reported true, by Sir Edward Northey, and Sir Robert Raymond; therefore he hopes to have his Majesty's Relief.

Your Petitioner therefore most humbly implores and beseeches your Majesty, in your Sovereign Compassion and Pity, to move the King to grant the Prayer of your most miserable Petitioner, which is but one Prison for another, until the King of Kings in his Divine Providence shall deliver your Petitioner out of this changeable World, or that his Majesty may be graciously pleased to grant him more Liberty in it.

And your Petitioner shall ever pray, &c.*

To the QUEEN's Most Excellent Majesty.

The humble Petition of Abigail Bernardi, Wife to the most unfortunate Major John Bernardi, who hath for upwards of one and thirty Years last past been confined a State-Prisoner in Newgate,

Sheweth,

THAT your Petitioner, on the 25th of June last, did deliver to the King's Most Excellent Majesty an humble Petition on the Behalf of the said unfortunate Prisoner, thereby praying, for the Reasons therein contained, that he might for the present, for the Benefit of his Health and to save Expence, be removed from Newgate to the King's-Bench Prison, till such Time as his Majesty should graciously see Cause to order his absolute Discharge, as by the said Petition, Reference being thereunto had, more fully may appear.

That in the Reign of his late Majesty, in the Time of the Preston Rebellion, many Prisoners under Condemnation and Sentence of Death for High Treason, (but reprieved) for the sake of their Health obtained an Indulgence of a Removal from one Prison to another, where the Closeness of their Confinement endangered their Lives, as is now the Case of the said unfortunate Bernardi, who, although he hath already undergone a Confinement worse than Death, was committed only upon Suspicion of a very horrid and most detestable Crime, in conspiring the Murder and Assassination of his late Majesty King William, but without any Proof, or as much as the Oath of one single Witness against him; neither hath any Proof been found against him, or he brought to any Trial, in upwards of one and thirty Years Time; and as he hath been always ready and desirous to take his Trial, he hath, from time to time, regularly entered his Prayer to be tried.

Your Petitioner therefore doth most humbly beseech and supplicate your Majesty, in your Sovereign Compassion and great Goodness, to intercede with the King's Most Excellent Majesty for the Removal of your Petitioner's unfortunate Husband, the said Major John Bernardi, from Newgate to the King's-Bench Prison.

And your Petitioner shall ever pray, &c.

To conclude this Point, it is manifest by the before-recited Copies of Petitions, Cases and Certificates, and distinct Allegations of the said Major John Bernardi, that he was not guilty even of as much as Misprision of Treason, having never had, directly or indirectly, any Knowledge of the said horrid Conspiracy.

Here are two Passages to be curiously inquired into; the first of which is, How Bernardi came to be put into a Proclamation? The Answer to this is not at all difficult. Undoubtedly it was by reason of George Harris's Information of his being then in the Compter with Captain Rookwood; which Rookwood was accused upon Oath, though Bernardi never was. And this seems to be more unquestionably evident, in regard the Proclamation, wherein Bernardi is named, did not come out until the very Morning before Bernardi and Rookwood were taken out of the Compter by the Guards at Midnight, upon Harris's Information, which was five Weeks after the Discovery of the Plot, and Bernardi's Name was never inserted in any former Proclamation.

The next and second Question is, On what Grounds he was first confined by Act of Parliament? To which Bernardi answers, That the Duke of Shrewsbury having inserted in his Commitment the following positive Words, viz. for being concerned in the horrid Conspiracy, &c. though not a Syllable of any Charge upon Oath, his Grace's Word under his Hand was not to be called in Question by the Parliament, in Favour of a poor inferior supposed Enemy to the Government: And how Bernardi, or any other Man, could have the Confidence to set forth so positively, by Petitions to the King, and a Case to the Parliament, that he was never charged upon Oath; if he had ever known or heard of any Evidence against him, and in which (if the contrary had been Fact) he might easily have been contradicted, is not to be accounted for. He affirms, and with great Truth, that he never lay under the Odium of being guilty of any base or dishonourable Act in the whole Course of his Life, until the Commencement of his present deplorable Sufferings; which may gain some Credit from his several Promotions in Commission from time to time, both Abroad and at Home: And laying aside all true Notions of Honour, no Man in his Senses, having Capacity or Common Sense enough to judge of his own Interest, could sure be so infatuated as to engage in so horrid an Action; because no Prince upon Earth, being a Christian, could or would ever countenance such a Man afterwards, though what he did might turn to such Prince's Service. We have an Instance of it at Home, of one Sir Paul Whitford, who murdered Doristlaus, Oliver Cromwell's Ambassador at the Hague. This base and wicked Act might tend to the Service of King Charles II. when in Exile; however the King, after the Restoration, never suffered Whitford to appear in his Presence, though he had been a Favourite before; and if his Majesty allowed him any thing, it was done so privately, that no body knew it, and he lived and died in a remote Part of the Kingdom.

Bernardi quitted to the Amount of about five hundred Pounds a Year, which he had coming in by Employs, and by his Wife's Fortune, upon King James's demanding his Subjects Home from the Dutch Service; and it may be therefore reasonable to believe, that Bernardi was in some Esteem with the King as long as his Majesty lived; and nothing but a Fool or a Madman could be so stupid as to forfeit such an Advantage, by engaging in a vile, wicked, and most dishonourable Action, which neither King nor Subject could justify.

It may not be improper here, for manifesting and clearing up Bernardi's Innocence beyond all Contradiction, to give a particular Relation of what passed before the Lord Chief Justice Holt, upon the Evidence given before his Lordship, upon Bernardi's being suspected to be concerned in the said horrid and detestable Conspiracy, the Witnesses and Discoverers of which were Captain *George Porter, Mr. Le Rue, Captain Blair, Captain Fisher, Mr. Ubank or Hewbank, Mr. Bartram, Captain Boyce, and some others, whose Names have

* This George Porter, the principal Evidence in the Assassination-Plot, and against Sir John Fenwick and the rest, was tried for the Murder of Sir James Hacket; and his Trial is here inserted.

The Trial of George Porter, Esq; for the Murder of Sir James Hacket, of Scotland, Knt. at the Sessions of the Peace, Oyer and Terminer, held at Justice-Hall in the Old-Bailey, London, on Wednesday, Thursday, Friday, and Saturday, the 10th, 11th, 12th, and 13th Day of December, 1684, before the Honourable Sir James Smith, Lord-Mayor of the City of London, Sir Thomas Jenner, Knt. one of his Majesty's Serjeants at Law, and Recorder of the aforesaid City; together with other Justices of London and Middlesex.

GEORGE PORTER, of London, Esq; was indicted for killing Sir James Hacket, in the Parish of St. Bride's, London, on the 11th of October, 1684, in the thirty-sixth Year of his Majesty's Reign. The Case and Circumstances appearing on the Trial were, That the Deceased and the Prisoner, being at the Duke's Theatre in Salisbury-Court, after the Play ended, a great Croud happening upon their coming out, and Sir James endeavouring to make way for his Children with his Cane, gently moving it, happened to push Mr. Porter on the Back; who asked, What the Meaning of it was? But Sir James, as he designed him no Affront, took no Notice of what he said; and still pressing for more Room, accidentally hit Mr. Porter on the Nose or Mouth, and made it bleed; upon which the Prisoner supposing himself to be affronted, and jostled or brushed by the have escaped the Author's Memory: They were all ordered to assemble at the said Lord Chief Justice's Chambers in Serjeants-Inn in Chancery-Lane, which they did, and were there examined upon Oath by his Lordship, in order to the Trials of Major Lowick, Major Bernardi, Captain Knightly, and Captain Rookwood, which Four were designed to be tried next after the Condemnation and Execution of Captain Charnock, Mr. King, Mr. Keys, Sir William Perkins and Sir John Friend, for being concerned in the said vile and villainous Plot. Captain Boyce deposed upon his Examination, that he had known Major Bernardi a Captain in the Dutch Service, where he bore a very good Character, but that he had not seen him in five Years then last past. Mr. Le Rue deposed, that he also knew Major Bernardi, but could lay nothing to his Charge; and that the last Time he was in his Company, to the best of his Remembrance, was at least two Years before the Assassination-Plot was discovered. Captain Porter and the rest declared, that they never had any Knowledge of Major Bernardi. Thereupon Major Bernardi was struck out of the Number or List of the Four designed for Trial, and Mr. Cranburne was appointed to be tried in his room, to make up Number-Four. They were all Four tried accordingly, and condemned. Three of them, viz. Major Lowick, Captain Rookwood, and Mr. Cranburne, were executed soon after. Captain Knightly, who pleaded guilty, was by great Intercession reprieved, and some Time after pardoned upon the Terms of Banishment. Now followeth a Remark upon a mistaken Notion frequently broached and argued abroad, to the great Prejudice and Wrong of Major Bernardi and his two remaining Fellow-Sufferers, Blackburn and Cassels, viz. That there was one Evidence against them, and only one to be come at, they having artfully spirited away and decoyed out of the Kingdom one other Evidence, who could have proved them concerned in the Fact, which was the Ground and Foundation of the Parliament's passing the first Act for their Confinement. Major Bernardi takes upon him positively to deny that Fact, and to affirm that nothing can be more false and untrue; for no one Evidence or Discoverer of that abominable Conspiracy was ever prevailed on to abscond or quit the Land, or ever absented himself, while the Government had any Use or Occasion for him. Mr. Goodman indeed, the Stage-Player, had been a Copartner Evidence with Captain George Porter against Sir John Fenwick, who was charged by them with being concerned in a different Species of Treason, with other Persons of Quality, by endeavouring to procure an Invasion from France, two Years before the Assassination-Plot broke out, though Sir John Fenwick was not accused by Goodman and Porter till that Time. True it is, that the said Goodman was soon after influenced by a Bribe and fair Promises (as is supposed) to quit the Kingdom, thereby to prevent Sir John Fenwick's being convicted of High Treason by the Common Law; which occasioned the Parliament's passing a Bill of Attainder against him, which took away his Life. But that was not the Case, in any respect, of Bernardi, Counter, Meldrum, Chambers, Blackburn and Cassels, or any of them: Neither was Goodman ever so much as mentioned or charged with the Knowledge of, or of being in any Manner concerned in, the Assassination-Plot; so that he neither was, nor could be an Evidence against any one upon that Account.

Providence was so gracious, merciful and indulgent to Major Bernardi, in the midst of his Miseries and Afflictions in Newgate, as to provide him a second virtuous, kind and loving Wife, in the Year of our Lord 1712, who hath proved to him a true Helpmeet, having by her good Management and Industry, and great and kind Care of him, contributed much to his Support and Comfort, and to the keeping of his Heart from breaking, under the worst of his Hardships, Difficulties and Distress. And by her he hath had, during his Confinement in Newgate, Ten Children, who, in respect of Charge and Expence under his strait and narrow Circumstances, and under his Immurement, or being buried alive, have been no small Burthen to him; yet he esteems them great Blessings bestowed upon him by Almighty God, at whose Tribunal, after this miserable and wretched Life ended, he knows he shall appear innocent of the heinous and monstrous Crime laid to his Charge, and for the bare mistaken Suspicion of which, he hath in three Reigns (and for near a Year and three Quarters in a fourth) been so severely treated: And then the Deceased, (who had the Cane still in his Hand,) drew his Sword, and, without further Consideration, run the Deceased into the Thigh, so that the Weapon appeared both Ways, cutting likewise his Fingers, whilst he struggled to draw it forth; whereupon the Prisoner recovered his Sword, (the Deceased at that Time sinking down) but had no further Opportunity to push at Sir James, e'er it was seized by a Gentleman present; whereat the Prisoner expressed much Indignation, and getting it once more at Liberty, stood upon his Guard, saying, He had served one already as he had deserved, or to that Effect; yet the Deceased, after the Wound received, went Home in a Coach, and lived till the 26th following, and then died in the Parish of St. Martin's in the Fields. — The Defence the Prisoner made, was, That he had received a Push in the Mouth, as he verily believed, from the Deceased, and by that Means became so rashly unfortunate, as to run him through the Thigh; adding, That he knew not the Person that fell through this Occasion, and therefore could have no premeditated Malice against him, &c. whereupon the Jury returning their Verdict, found him Guilty of Manslaughter only; by which Means he was not found guilty upon the Statute of Stabbing; upon which Statute he was charged with a second Indictment: But the next Heir brought an Appeal. At the next Sessions, held the 16th and 17th of January, 1684, Mr. Porter prayed the Court, that he might be admitted to his Clergy; but was answered, that an Appeal being already brought and allowed, it could not be granted. Then he desired he might have his Prayer recorded; but that not being practicable in such Cases, he was only admitted to Bail, himself entering into a Recognizance of 1000*l.* and his Sureties 500*l.* each; and ordered to move it by his Council the succeeding Term, at the King's-Bench Bar. Though at the next Sessions held at the Old-Bailey, the 25th of February following, Mr. Porter pleaded his Majesty's most gracious Pardon, for killing Sir James Hacket, which was read and allowed, and he discharged †.

This Captain Porter, as a Reward for giving Evidence against Charnock, King, and Keys (his Servant,) Sir John Friend, Sir William Perkins, Brigadier Rookwood, Mr. Cranburne, Sir John Fenwick, &c. had a Pension settled on him of 250*l.* per Annum, which he enjoyed till about June 1728: For the Probate of the Will of this George Porter, late of the Parish of St. James's, Westminster, Esq; was granted in the Prerogative-Court of Canterbury, July 4, 1728, unto Elizabeth Porter, his Widow and Executrix; so entered in the Pension-Office Books, and in Auditor Harley's and Auditor Foley's Office, July 1728. Captain Fisher had likewise a Pension of 250*l.* per Annum, for being an Evidence in that Plot, as had others, but lesser Sums.

† Captain Porter, in Rookwood's Trial, Vol. 4. p. 681. was excepted against by the Prisoner's Council, as incapable of being a Witness, standing convicted of Felony, for killing Sir James Hacket, Knt. 36 Car. 2. But having got the King's Pardon, was allowed a legal Witness, though not burnt in the Hand. See Vol. 4. p. 681, for Dangerfield's and other Cases quoted there.

he shall, if not sooner delivered by any King upon Earth, God Almighty's Vicegerent here below, be delivered from the English Bastile (vulgarly called Newgate) by the great and merciful God himself above, the King of Kings and only Ruler of Princes. It may not be improper here to distinguish our said English Bastile from that in France, and to shew in what Circumstances they materially differ. To which End know, candid Reader, that a State-Prisoner in the Bastile in France pays not, nor is squeezed out of any thing for his Lodging, Meat, Drink or Ease, nor is loaded with Irons, nor put in Dungeons, or otherwise ill used in Prison; but he is always handsomely provided for, and allowed a liberal Subsistence by the Government, according to his Rank and Degree: But in our said English Bastile no State-Prisoner has any Allowance made him from the Government, and in case he hath not of his own, he must live upon Charity, if he can be so happy as to meet with it, or starve: And in case he hath any known Substance, he must expect to be squeezed out of a great Part of it, or he shall have much worse Lodging than many a tolerable Dog-Kennel of a kind good-natured Country 'Squire would make, be loaded with Irons, and used worse than a Dog. And all this is permitted or connived at, under a Government, the Voice of whose People is almost perpetually boasting of Liberty and Property, the Words Liberty and Property being ever uppermost, and at their Tongues End, and they constantly exclaiming against Arbitrary Power: But God alone knows the Sincerity and Soundness, or the Hollowness and Deceitfulness of Men's Hearts. Can it be accounted for, that so much Oppression should be suffered to be practised in a free and Christian Nation, (as England is); and, on the contrary, that so much Humanity and Relief should be shewn and used to State-Prisoners in Distress in France, under an absolute and arbitrary Government? Sure it cannot proceed from the French being more honest, more polite, more humane, less malicious and revengeful, or of a more generous and Christian Temper, than the English. For my Part, I am so far from asserting it, that I will not so much as think it. But this I will affirm, that what I have before observed with respect to the different Usage of Prisoners, in the two several Bastiles of the different Nations, is not more strange than true. And now I have nothing more to add hereunto, but my Hope and earnest Desire, that such as, out of Curiosity or otherwise, shall give themselves the Trouble to read this small Tract, will be pleased to judge favourably of me; to which Intent I was chiefly moved and induced to the Pains of writing it in my Old Age, and to prevent an infamous and odious Character of me from being wrongfully and injuriously handed down and transmitted to Posterity; the very Thoughts of which have been more grievous to my Mind, and more piercing and wounding to my Spirit, than all the rest of my Hardships and Sufferings, which will ever be the Case of a Man well born, having an honest Heart, a Soldier, and a Man of Honour. Such a Man can ill bear Reproach and Disgrace, not having deserved it, and to whom his good Name and Fame must be ever dearer, and by him held in much greater Esteem, than any other Thing in Life, nay, even than Life itself. And the Author being old, as before-mentioned, and (as he doth hereby frankly own) unlearned, and not skilled in Letters, having chiefly been trained up in War, and not much in Scholarship, he humbly hopes the same may in some measure plead his Excuse for such defective Words as may be found in this his short Narrative, and for the Plainness and Uncorrectness of its Style. Untruths or Misrepresentations there are none in it, to the best of his Knowledge and Memory; nor hath he intentionally, or at all, to the best of his Judgment, herein reflected upon any Person whomsoever in any wise, or upon the Power, Justice, or Wisdom of the several Parliaments, by whose renewed Acts, from time to time, his Confinement in Prison hath been spun out to so great a Length; nor upon the Courts of Justice, and learned Judges presiding therein, who have had the several Opportunities before-mentioned of discharging or bailing him according to Law, further or otherwise than as any Reflection upon any of them, from the particular Facts by him herein plainly, truly and impartially stated, may naturally and unavoidably arise and result.

One very great Misfortune it hath been to the Author, and the last that he will trouble his Reader withal; and which would scarce, in the Case of another, be deemed a Misfortune, but rather on the contrary be esteemed a very great Blessing, viz. That he hath lived to so great an advanced Old Age, which most People would naturally desire to do, Life, generally speaking, being sweet, and the very Thoughts of Death abhorrent and shocking to Nature; though Death, when all other Friends fail, is most certainly a kind and sure Friend and Deliverer in Time of Need, from Chains and Gaols, an Hell upon Earth: But to explain and make out, that the Author's having lived so long hath been a Misfortune to him, the same is verified in this, that he hath thereby survived almost all his Contemporaries, Friends and Acquaintance, who have contributed to his Support. And it is now too late in the Day, and under Confinement, for him to hope or expect to make any new Acquaintance or Friends, whereby he may reap any Advantage or Assistance under his present difficult Circumstances, unless this his little Tract may perchance make him some Friends among the good-natured, generous and charitable Part of Mankind, who shall not be void of all Sense, Notion and Fellow-Feeling of another's Suffering; nor be perfect Strangers to all Humanity, Pity, Commiseration and Compassion; nor profane that sacred Petition in the Lord's Prayer, viz. Forgive us our Trespases, as we forgive them that trespass against us, as it is to be feared many do, by having it in their Mouths, when they themselves, with hardened Hearts, cannot forgive even the Innocent and Guiltless, who have not trespassed against them. And so the Author concludes with bidding his Reader heartily farewell; and in Attestation of the Truth of what he has writ, he takes the Freedom to subscribe his Name.

Newgate,

He died at his Chambers in the Press-Yard in Newgate, the latter End of September 1736, in the 82d Year of his Age, having been a State-Prisoner about forty Years in that Gaol, without Trial or any Allowance from the Government.

Proceedings against William Gregg, at the Old-Bailey, 19th January, 1707-8, for High Treason, before Lord Chief Justice Holt, and other Judges.*

THE Post-master of Brussels discovered a Correspondence between Mr. Secretary Harley's Office and the French, and communicated his Knowledge to the Government here; whereupon Mr. William Gregg, a Clerk in that Office, was taken into Custody of a Messenger, and, after several Examinations before the Council, was committed to Newgate; and on the 19th of January was indicted of High Treason for compassing the Death of the Queen, and also for adhering to her Enemies. The Indictment imported, "That he had sent Letters to Monsieur Chamillard, one of the French King's Prime Ministers, particularly one dated the 28th of November last, and others, wherein were inclosed the Proceedings of both Houses of Parliament, in relation to the Augmentation of our Forces; also a Copy of a Letter from the Queen to the Emperor, and Copies of private Business sent to the Duke of Savoy, &c." To which Indictment Gregg pleaded Guilty; and the Recorder pronounced Sentence of Death upon him †. Whereupon the House of Lords took into Consideration this Affair, and appointed the following Committee to examine him:

The Duke of Somerset ,	Lord Visc. Townshend ,
The Duke of Devonshire ,	Lord Halifax ,
The Duke of Bolton ,	Lord Somers .
Earl of Wharton ,

Die Jovis 18 Martii, 1707.

WE Your Majesty's most dutiful and obedient Subjects, the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament assembled, having been informed, That William Gregg, a Clerk in the Office of the late Secretary Mr. Harley, had been indicted for High Treason, in holding Correspondence with Your Majesty's Enemies, and

* This Affair of Gregg's having made a great Noise in the World at that Time, and many People at this Time quite unacquainted with it, and being quoted by Mr. Justice Foster and others, we shall give an Account of it, from the best Authorities.

† Bishop Burnet, in his History of his own Times, Vol. 2. p. 494—497. says, "At this Time Discoveries were made very unlucky for Mr. Harley: One Gregg, a Clerk, whom Mr. Harley had taken into a particular Confidence without Inquiry into the former Part of his Life, for he was a vicious and a necessitous Person, who had been Secretary to the Queen's Envoy in Denmark, but dismissed for his ill Qualities. The Lords, who were appointed to examine Gregg, could not find much out by him: He had but newly begun his Designs of betraying Secrets; and he had no Associates with him in it. He told them, that all the Papers of State lay so carelessly about the Office, that every one belonging to it, even the Door-keepers, might have read them all. Harley's Custom was to come to the Office late on Post-Nights, and after he had given his Orders, and wrote his Letters, he usually went away, and left all to be copied out when he was gone. By that means he came to see every thing, in particular the Queen's Letter to the Emperor. The Lords ordered the Report and Examinations to be laid before the Queen in an Address, in which they represented to her the Necessity of making Gregg a public Example: Upon which he was executed. He continued to clear all other Persons of any Accession to his Crimes, of which he seemed very sensible, and died much better than he had lived."

Judge Foster, in his Reports, p. 198. takes Notice, "That the Papers found in Lord Preston's Custody, those found where Mr. Layer had lodged them, the intercepted Letters of Doctor Henzey, were all read in Evidence as Overt-Acts of the Treason respectively charged on them. And William Gregg's intercepted Letters might in like manner have been read in Evidence, if he had put himself upon his Trial. For those Papers and Letters were written in Prosecution of certain determinate Purposes, which were all treasonable and then in Contemplation of the Offenders, and were plainly connected with them. But Papers not capable of such Connection, while they remain in the Hands of the Author unpublished, as Mr. Sidney's did, will not make a Man a Traitor. Lord Hale (1 Hale, p. 119—123;) mentioneth two Circumstances as concurring to make Words reduced to Writing Overt-Acts of Compassing the King's Death, That they be published, and that they import such Compassing.

"Sending Intelligence to Rebels or Enemies, which in most Cases is the most effectual Aid that can be given them, will make a Man a Traitor, (except what is done in case of superior Force) though the Intelligence should happen to be intercepted; for the Party in sending did all he could, Treason was complete on his Part, though it had not the Effect he intended. So ruled by the Judges assembled in the Case of William Gregg, Mess. Tracy, Dod, Price, and Denton; and by the Court of B. R. Trin. 31 of the late King, in the Case of Dr. Henzey." Foster, p. 217. And p. 218. adds,

"For Gregg was indicted for Compassing the Death of the Queen, and also for Adhering to her Enemies; and Henzey's Indictment was in the same Form; and so was Lord Preston's. And the Writing and Sending the Letters of Intelligence, which in the Case of Gregg and Henzey were stopped at the Post-Office, was laid as an Overt-Act of both the Species of Treason. So that, admitting for Argument's sake, which is by no means admitted, that it was not an Overt-Act of Adhering, since the Letters never came to the Enemy's Hands, and consequently no Aid or Comfort was actually given; yet the bare Writing and Sending them to the Post-Office, in order to be delivered to the Enemy, was undoubtedly an Overt-Act of the other Species of Treason. In Gregg's Case the Judges did resolve, that it was an Overt-Act of both the Species of Treason charged on him. And in Henzey's, the Court adopted that Opinion, and cited it with Approbation.

"Though the Cases of these Men were in Substance the same, the Charge against them varied in one Particular. Gregg's Indictment chargeth, that the Letters were sent from the Place where the Venue is laid, into Parts beyond the Seas (in Partes transmarinas) to be delivered to the Enemy. Henzey's, with much greater Propriety, and agreeable to the Truth of the Case, chargeth, that the Letters were sent from the Place where the Venue is laid, to be delivered in Parts beyond the Seas to the Enemy. As the Letters never went abroad, this was undoubtedly the safer Way of laying the Charge."

betraying to them Secrets of the highest Importance; and that upon his Trial he had confessed the Indictment, and by that means had prevented the Examinations, whereby the Public might have been truly informed of the particular Nature and Circumstances of his Crime; we thought ourselves indispensably obliged, in Duty to Your Majesty, and for the future Safety of the Kingdom, to do all that was in our Power to find out the Rise and Progress of this dangerous Correspondence.

In order thereto we made our humble Address to Your Majesty for all Papers relating to the Charge against William Gregg; and Your Majesty having been graciously pleased to give Orders, that the Papers should be laid before us; we referred those Papers to a Committee, and directed them to examine Gregg, and to report the said Examination to the House, as also what they observed upon the Papers, together with such other Matters as they should think proper, upon their Inquiry into the said Affair: And the Report having been made, and taken into Consideration by the House, we humbly conceive it to be very highly for Your Service to lay the same before Your Majesty*.

REPORT CONCERNING GREGG.

The House having appointed a Committee to examine William Gregg, who is a Prisoner in Newgate, convicted for High Treason, and having also been pleased to refer to the same Committee several Papers, which, upon the humble Address of the House, had been laid before your Lordships by Her Majesty's Command, do humbly take Leave to inform the House, That the Effect of the several Papers referred to the Committee, is as follows.

I. A Copy of Gregg's Letter, which was intercepted, dated the 28th of November, 1707, O. S. sent to Mr. Chamillard, inclosed in a Pacquet from Marechal Tallard, directed to Mr. Robineau, his Steward, at Paris.

In this Gregg sends to Mr. Chamillard a Copy of the Queen's Letter, written with her own Hand to the Emperor.

In the same Letter, Gregg takes Notice of two Letters sent by him to Mr. Chamillard, the one dated the 24th, the other the 28th of October last, which he understood Robineau had put into his Hands.

That perceiving by Robineau's Letter to his Master, that Mr. Chamillard desired to know the Marechal's Sentiments of Gregg, Gregg had himself written to him.

In Expectation of his Answer, Gregg flattered himself that the Paper then sent was of that Importance, that there could be no longer Doubt of the Devotedness of a Scottishman for France; not to speak of his Zeal for the Service of his Prince, who had found Refuge there.

That the Lines under which he had drawn a Stroke, were the Thoughts of the Lord Treasurer, which he had added with his own Hand to the first Draught of the Letter.

The same Letter contained some other News.

II. There was a Copy of a Letter, dated the 25th of November, O. S. in the same Pacquet, subscribed William Gregg; in which Notice is taken of what Robineau writes to Mr. Tallard concerning him, and that he himself had written to the Marechal, and desired Robineau to deliver the inclosed according to the Address, as being of great Consequence.

III. The Copy of a Letter from Marechal Tallard to Robineau, dated the 10th of December, N. S. in which Mr. Tallard says, That as to the Letters of which Robineau made mention in his of the 25th and 28th of November, that he had delivered them according to the Address. Mr. Tallard knew nothing of their Contents, but by the same Post which brought his Letters.

That he was obliged for the Offers, but could make no Use of them while he was a Prisoner: When the Peace was made, he would give Proof of his Acknowledgment to him who made the Offers, and would endeavour to engage the Person to whom the Letters were addressed to do the same. In the interim Robineau was to tell the Person to whom he delivered the Letters, for whom the Marechal had the utmost Consideration, That he was much obliged to him for desiring to know his Thoughts, before he would determine what to do; that the Offers made did not suit with the present Time, at least as to him, &c.

IV. An original Letter of the 2d December, 1707, to Mr. Robineau, from Gregg, to felicitate him for being delivered from an importunate Man, as would appear by Marechal Tallard's Letter, unless his last to Mr. Chamillard had not made him determine otherwise.

V. Copy of another Letter of Gregg to Mr. Chamillard, dated the 23d of December, O. S. which was also taken in Marechal Tallard's Pacquet, in which he pretends to give Mr. Chamillard an Account of what passed in Parliament, with the Queen's Answer to the Address of the Two Houses, and his Excuse for not sending the Address itself.

VI. A Letter of Robineau to Mr. Tallard, 26th December, N. S. from Paris, (transcribed by Gregg in his own Hand) in which he says, he was going to Verfailles to deliver the Answer with which he was charged; that he received every Post Letters from the same Person, and that he took care to deliver them, according to the Address.

VII. Another of the 30th December, 1707, N. S. that he had been to deliver, as Mr. Tallard had charged him, the Answer which was desired of Mr. Tallard.

VIII. Another Letter in Gregg's Hand, dated the 30th December, 1707, found in Gregg's Closet, written to Mr. Chamillard, giving an Account of the Intention to send Mr. Palmes to Savoy, and to take several other German Courts in his Way.

IX. A Confession of Gregg, delivered to the Lords of the Committee, and signed by him.

On Thursday the 12th of this Instant February, the Committee appointed by your Lordships went to Newgate, in order to examine William Gregg.

They acquainted him with your Lordships Order, and told him, That as the Crime of which he stood attainted was of the most heinous Nature, so there were some Circumstances so extraordinary, which attended his Case, that the House of Lords thought it might be of Service to her Majesty and the Kingdom, to have all the Beginning and Progress of his treasonable Correspondence fully laid open; that her Majesty, upon the Application of the House, had ordered all former Examinations and Papers concerning him to be laid before them.

* Die Martis, 23 Martii, 1707. It is ordered by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament assembled, That the Address of this House, and the Reports therein contained, with the several Examinations annexed, presented to Her Majesty Yesterday, and Her Majesty's most gracious Answer thereunto, shall be forthwith printed and published.

They told him farther, That if he, by a true, ingenuous and full Confession, would deserve it, he might have Ground to hope the House of Lords might intercede in his Behalf for Mercy from her Majesty, which otherwise he had no Reason to look for.

He was also told, That being a Man of Understanding, he was not to expect to be asked Questions, but was to give an Account of himself, when, and how he became first employed, when and by what Instigation he was drawn in to correspond with the Queen's Enemies, and how far it proceeded.

He said, That one Mr. Gregg, the late King's Resident at Copenhagen, was his Kinsman, and sent for him thither, and he continued with him about three Years, till his Death, which happened about two Months before the late King died.

That Mr. Vernon was sent Envoy to Denmark, and took him, whom he found there, into his Service, in which he continued about two Years and an half, and then he was discharged from his Service by Mr. Vernon.

Mr. Vernon coming for England about his private Affairs, while Gregg was in his Service, and staying here some Time, in that Interval Gregg received some Letters from Mr. Secretary Harley, which gave him Occasion after to apply to him.

The 9th of December, 1704, Gregg came to England, and soon made Application to Mr. Secretary Harley for Employment, but was not recommended to him by any body.

The 3d of January he saw him first at his Office, where he attended often.

The 5th of February, 1705, Mr. Jones, the Secretary's First Clerk, came to him, and told him, the Secretary would speak with him. He attended on the Secretary the same Day, who asked him, If he would be willing to be employed in his own Country? Gregg said, He was willing to be sent upon any good Errand. Mr. Secretary told him, It was to give an Account of the Proceedings of the ensuing Parliament, which was to be held under the Duke of Argyle.

The 6th of February he went to the Office, and Mr. Secretary told him, he should be dispatched in a few Days.

To make some Trial of him (as he supposed) Mr. Secretary asked him, If he could give an Account of the Court of Denmark? Gregg said, He was willing to do it as well as he could; and accordingly in some Time he drew up a State of that Court, and it was not disapproved.

He attended daily, and on the 20th of April Mr. Secretary Harley gave him a Note of 20*l.* to be paid by his Steward in Scotland-Yard.

On the 23d of May, 1705, he was ordered to go for Scotland, and about a Week after set forwards on his Journey. When he was dispatched, a Note of 30*l.* was given to him.

Mr. Secretary always amused him, with telling him, he should have Instructions for his Directions in Scotland; but at last ordered him to draw up some Queries himself about the State of Affairs in Scotland, which he did, and they were approved.

Some of the Queries were, What were the Designs of the several Parties? What Correspondence between the Highlands and St. Germain's? How affected to the House of Hanover? &c.

He was also ordered to form a Cypher of Letters, whereby to design the Great Men there.

The 2d of June, 1705, he arrived at Edinburgh, and wrote to Mr. Secretary the Thursday following; being ordered to direct all his Letters to Thomas Bateman in Scotland-Yard.

Mr. Secretary promised the Receipt of his Letters should be acknowledged, and he pressed often for it, to know they came to Hand, fearing his Letters were intercepted, because he was suspected as a Spy in that Country; but though he wrote thrice a Week, he never heard one Word from Mr. Secretary, or by his Order, during his whole Stay in that Country.

Being asked by the Lords, If he was recommended to any body in Scotland? he answered, No.

The 15th of October he arrived at London, and the next Day waited on Mr. Secretary, who thanked him for his Letters, and told him, he had named him to the Queen, upon Occasion of a Paper he had sent: But Gregg said, he believed the Queen had never heard of his Name, till this last unhappy Accident.

On the 29th of October Mr. Secretary ordered him 25*l.*

He attended daily, and pressed much to be sent abroad, particularly to go with Mr. Metbuen when he was sent to Savoy, but it was declined.

On New-Year's-Day Mr. Secretary dropped a Word which startled him much: He told him, he would fix him; which Gregg understood was bringing him into his Office.

Upon this he presented a Petition, that he might not be in the Office, because the Salary was small; and being in Debt, he could not live on it.

He attended every Day. The Secretary inquired of him, What he knew of Languages? He said, he knew some French and German, but knew Latin better than either.

The 16th of April, 1706, he was admitted into the Office, and a Note was given upon Mr. Jones, as for one of the Clerks; and Mr. Secretary told him, it was only to keep his Hand in Use, and that he would provide better for him.

The 16th of May, copying a Letter sent to Mr. Vernon, That he was to consider of somebody fit to be left behind, Gregg thought it to be intended in his Favour, and wrote to Mr. Vernon on that Occasion, desiring his Countenance.

But the 28th of May, Mr. Secretary writing Word to Mr. Vernon, That he had Leave to come at his own Time, but must leave somebody behind, and this being wrote before any Answer could come from thence, Gregg saw nothing was meant for him in the former Letter.

Gregg made Offers of Service to Mr. Pulteney when he was to go; but he said, he was provided.

Then he told Mr. Secretary, his Mind was depressed by his Debts, and desired to be thrown abroad; and to go with Sir Philip Meadows; but that was refused, and Strahan was sent.

Then

Then Mr. Secretary asked; What would make him easy? And he gave in a List of his Debts, amounting to about 35*l*.

Since that, Mr. Secretary has ordered him at several Times about 20 or 25*l*. in the whole; the last Sum was 7*l*. in October last, Part of a Bill of 14*l*. for which Debt he was pressed at that Time.

Being asked by the Lords, If his Debts only made him so desirous to be gone? he said, At the Rate the Business was managed in the Office, it was a perfect Drudgery.

Their Business seldom began till about Eleven or Twelve at Night, and they stayed till Two or Three, or later; though sometimes not above two Letters to dispatch, and he thought himself happiest who could get away soonest.

The Method was, First, the Letters were taken in Short-hand, afterwards wrote fair, then sent to Mr. Secretary's House to be signed, and after returned to the Office to be entered; so that they were obliged sometimes to stay till Four o'Clock in the Morning.

He said, That in April last, when Hill the Messenger was sent to Turin, the Pacquet was left to him, though the youngest Clerk, to be made up, and delivered to the Messenger.

In that Pacquet there was a Letter to Sir John Norris, and another to Mr. Chetwind, most of the last Letter was in Cypher; Gregg entered both those Letters. There was also another Letter to Sir Cloudfly Shovell, and Letters from the Lord Treasurer. He put them all up in the Pacquet, and after gave them to Hill.

Being asked, If he knew by the Letters what the Design was? Gregg said, he understood Thoulon was to be besieged: He could not read the whole, but knew enough to find out that. He said, it was wrote in the Cypher of the other Office by Mr. Harley, the Earl of Sunderland being sick at that Time.

The Queen's Letters de Cachet are made up before they are brought to the Office, but the Clerks are trusted to make up other Letters.

The Lords Committees required him to give the whole Relation of his Correspondence, when it began, and how long it had been carried on.

Gregg said, the first Motive of his writing to France was in order to get Money, by obtaining a Pass, and that his first Letter was the 24th of October last.

From his first entering into the Office, he had always a great Hand in perusing the French Prisoners Letters: That convenient Opportunity, and his Poverty, gave him the Temptation.

The French Prisoners Letters came under a general Cover, directed to Mr. Lewis. Marechal Tallard's Letters are under a flying Seal, the rest of them come always sealed, but are opened at the Office.

Generally Mr. Lewis threw them down on the Table, and left the perusing them to the Clerks, to Mr. Mann and Gregg; and since Mr. Mann left the Office, they have been trusted wholly to Gregg.

If Gregg observed any thing that he thought material, he made an Extract of it, and shewed it to the Secretary or Under-Secretary. He mentioned a particular Extract he had made out of a Letter of Mr. Chamillard's to Marechal Tallard.

Letters came from Nottingham every Post; sometimes twenty Letters came to them in a Day from France: Those came always sealed. From the Time he came into the Office, these Letters were never perused either by the Secretary or Under-Secretary, which he is sure of, because they were sealed when he looked on them. He cannot for that Reason say, but Mr. Lewis might sometimes look in Marechal Tallard's Letter, because that had a flying Seal; but the rest were left sealed, as they came by Mr. Lewis, to the Clerks Perusal.

Gregg said, he had a Dispute with Mr. Lewis upon the account of these Letters; Gregg declaring, he thought it not to be a Business fit for the Under-Clerks to be trusted with.

Mr. Secretary Harley wrote a Letter in Answer to one from Mr. Pontchartrain, thanking him for his Civility to one Middleton.

In transcribing it, Gregg found it so ill-turned, and the French so bad, that he acquainted the Secretary with it at Eleven o'Clock at Night, in October last. This Letter was stopped, and lay a Month in the Office; but after Mr. Lewis sent it away as it was wrote at first.

The rough Draught of the Queen's Letter to the Emperor, as it was altered by the Lord-Treasurer, was left in the Public Book of the Office, to be entered, the same Night it was to be sent away: There, Gregg said, he found it and transcribed it, and any other Clerk of the Office might have done it as well as he.

All the Books in the Office lie in a Press, the Key is always in the Door, and not only the Clerks, but the Chamber-keepers may have Access.

All Letters, except those wrote to the Duke of Marlborough, are entered in the Books, but those are only copied in loose Sheets. Gregg said, he had copied many of those.

The Draught of the Queen's Letter to the Emperor was prepared by Mr. Lewis; it was then written in the Hand of Mr. Thomas, Mr. Harley's Domestic Clerk; the Addition was in the Lord Treasurer's own Hand. Mr. Mann saw it as well as Gregg. Mann said to Gregg, that what was added by the Lord Treasurer, was much the brightest Part of the Letter.

Gregg said, he sent all his Letters to France under the Cover to Mr. Robineau: He owned he sent the Copy of the Queen's Letter to Mr. Chamillard the same Night the Queen's Letter was dispatched to the Emperor.

Gregg said farther, That the Letter in the Queen's own Hand was given to Gregg by Mr. Secretary himself about One o'Clock at Night, and he was solely intrusted to put it up in Sir Philip Meadows's Pacquet, after every body had left the Office.

Robineau, in his Letter to Gregg, took Notice, That he had delivered his Letters to Mr. Chamillard, and that Mr. Chamillard sent to advise with Marechal Tallard upon Gregg's Proposal.

Upon this, Gregg wrote a Letter to Marechal Tallard, of which he said he had no Copy, but pretended to repeat the Words of the Letter to the Lords Committees.

The Lords Committees told Gregg, it would be expected by the House, that he should be very clear and particular in declaring by what Advice or Encouragement he first began such a Correspondence.

a Correspondence. He said, By none at all: He was tempted to it by the Devil, and the Hopes of getting Money.

He said, That upon hearing a French Perriwig-maker was committed to Newgate for High Treason, he had desired to be admitted again to the Lords of the Cabinet-Council.

But he would not own that he knew the Man, but said, he had since heard his Name was Valiere or Clarke; he was told so by a Gentlewoman who came to see him since his Condemnation.

He said, he held no Correspondence in England, but only in sending the Common Letter of the Office, with other printed News-papers, to some Gentlemen.

Gregg said, he had been long acquainted with one Crookshanks, who promised him, that if he would procure a French Pass, he should have two hundred Guineas; and Gregg undertook to procure the Pass.

The first Time he wrote to Mr. Chamillard was the 24th of October last.

Brown a Merchant, Father-in-law to Crookshanks, and one Bollinger a Merchant, were acquainted with this Agreement about the Pass, and they dined together at Brown's House, and Brown undertook for the Money, if the Pass could be procured.

Gregg said, he acquainted Bollinger of his having sent a Copy of the Queen's Letter to Mr. Chamillard, at the Cross-Keys Tavern in Covent-Garden, and shewed him Extracts of Marechal Tallard's and Robineau's Letters. He said also, That he read the Extracts of their Letters at another Time in English to Brown and Crookshanks.

The Lords Committees asked him, To what End he told Bollinger of what he had done, in sending the Queen's Letter to Mr. Chamillard? He only said, It was downright Madness.

The Lords Committees asked him, If any body came to him? He said, one Mr. Arbutnot came to him, and no body else, and his Business was to bring him Charity.

The Lords Committees asked Mr. Gregg, If he had no more to acquaint their Lordships with? He said, No: And being told by them that it concerned him very much to consider of it; that the Lords observed, he had told them nothing but what he knew they had Means in their Hands to be fully informed of, without his saying any thing, and how hard it would be for the House of Lords to believe that he would venture upon such a Correspondence, without some Support or Encouragement; he persisted in it, that he had no more to say.

As the Lords Committees were risen up, and had called for the Keeper to take Mr. Gregg away, he took a brown Paper out of his Pocket, which was sealed up, and took out of it a Paper, which he said he had prepared against the Queen's Birth-day, and desired the Lords to read it. It purported to be a Petition to the House of Commons. He pretended he knew not how to get it delivered, because he concluded all the Papers sent by him would be delivered to Mr. Secretary Harley.

The Lords finding the Paper to be addressed to the House of Commons, told him, It was not proper for them to receive it, and delivered it immediately back to him again.

VOL. X.

The Lords Committees, as they went away, told Gregg, That if he would recollect himself, and set down in Writing any thing that he thought might be for his own Service, or of Use to the Queen and her Government, he might send it to them, and the Keeper should have Directions to convey it safely.

The next Morning Gregg sent a Letter to the Lords Committees, which as soon as they had perused, they returned to him again by a Gentleman, with the following Message:

“ The Lords of the Committee have ordered me to return this Paper to you, they being of Opinion that it is not material to the Examination for which they were sent to you by the House.”

The Lords Committees think themselves obliged to acquaint the House, That they did not observe Gregg to be under any Disorder or Terror from the Apprehension or Sense of his Danger.

The Indictment of Gregg for his treasonable Correspondence with her Majesty's Enemies, was brought before the Lords Committees, which Indictment he confessed upon his Trial, and Judgment was thereupon given against him.

The Lords Committees do think it their Duty to acquaint the House, That they having been informed by means of the Keeper of Newgate, that one William Gregg had been formerly in Newgate, and indicted for counterfeiting the Coin of the Kingdom, and that it was talked amongst the Turnkeys in the Prison, that this was the same Man; they sent to search the Books in Newgate, and found there, That in May 1697, William Gregg and Elizabeth Gregg were indicted for counterfeiting the Coin. Thereupon they sent for Mr. Tanner, who has the Custody of those Records; he brought the Indictment before them, and it appeared, that Elizabeth Gregg was found guilty and executed, but that William Gregg was acquitted; and that Thomas Holloway and Simon Newport were the Witnesses at the Trial, who, as was said, are both dead since that Time.

But one Thomas Kinslerley and James Biddle declaring, That they both knew that Gregg, who was then indicted, very well, and believed they should know him again if they saw him; the Lords Committees sent them severally to see William Gregg now in Newgate, and they both of them did declare, That they believed and were confident, that the same Person now in Newgate was the same William Gregg who was then indicted, and whose supposed Wife was then found guilty, and burnt; and they did both of them voluntarily make Oath to this Effect, and James Biddle swore, That after the Trial, the Discourse in the Neighbourhood was, that Elizabeth Gregg took the whole Matter upon herself at the Trial.

Their two Affidavits are laid before your Lordships.

After one of these Persons had been to see William Gregg, William Gregg wrote a Letter, directed to the Lords of the Committee, in which he did very positively deny that he was the Person who had been tried for Coining in May 1697.

May it please Your Most Excellent Majesty,

WE Your Majesty's most dutiful Subjects, the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament assembled, having entered into a serious Consideration

Consideration of the said Report, have unanimously come to the following Resolution thereupon:

That it is our Opinion, that the Crime of which William Gregg stands attainted, is of so heinous a Nature, and attended with such extraordinary Circumstances, that it may prove of very pernicious Consequence, if he should not be made an Example.

May it please Your Majesty,

It is Your Majesty's Glory, and the Happiness of Europe, that You are at the Head of one of the greatest Confederacies that ever was known in History; and it is the common Concern of the whole Alliance, that Your Councils should be kept with the strictest Secrecy: But in the Papers now laid before You, Your Majesty will be pleased to observe, That some of Your Resolutions of the greatest Moment, and that required the utmost Secrecy, have been sent to Your Enemies by the same Post they were dispatched to the Allies; That all the Papers in Mr. Secretary Harley's Office have, for a considerable Time, been exposed to the View even of the meanest Clerks in that Office; and that the Perusal of all the Letters to and from the French Prisoners was chiefly trusted to Gregg, a Person of a very suspicious Character, and known to be extremely indigent. It is not easily to be known what ill Consequences may have attended such Negligence, but we depend upon it, that these Matters being thus plainly laid open to Your Majesty, we shall be secured against any Dangers of this Nature for the future.

Her MAJESTY'S Most Gracious Answer.

My Lords,

I Am sorry that any who have been employed by those in My Service should have proved false to their Trust, and injurious to the Public.

The Examples you lay before Me, will, I do not doubt, be a sufficient Warning to keep all Matters of Importance as secret as may be, and to employ such only as there shall be good Grounds to believe will be faithful.

Gregg lay one hundred Days under Sentence before he was executed: But a few Years after Mr. Francis Hoffman (a Person of some Note) wrote thus in a Pamphlet to the Public*.

I Was abroad at the Time of Mr. Gregg's Trial, which has made so much Noise; and the great Esteem People had of the Duke of Marlborough on account of his glorious Successes, occasioned them to think very hardly of the Honourable Mr. Robert Harley, then one of the Secretaries of State, when they heard his Grace would have laid down, unless the other was removed; and Mr. Harley having been reflected on, ever since he was made a Peer and Lord Treasurer, on Gregg's Account, I thought myself obliged by Truth and Justice, to give the following Account, as I received it from Mr. Lorrain, a Man of Character; and “ Mr. Lorrain did, in a most solemn Manner, declare to me, not only his being fully convinced of Mr. Harley's Innocence, but told me of so many Endeavours to corrupt Gregg's Conscience, not only with repeated Offers of Life, but of great Preferments and Advantages. It is apparent from hence, that some Persons stabbed as directly and villainously at Mr. Harley's Life then, as Guiscard did since. I have printed, and caused to be published, a true Copy of a Letter written to me by Mr. Lorrain himself, of what relates to Mr. Gregg, while he was under Mr. Lorrain's Care, with Gregg's dying Speech, and am, &c.

FRANCIS HOFFMAN.”

A true Copy of the Ordinary of Newgate, the Reverend Mr. Paul Lorrain's Letter to Francis Hoffman.

My good Friend,

“ WHEN you were with me Yesterday, you know I was in Haste to go to St. Andrew's; and could not, for that Reason, give you the Account you then desired; but promised it you against this Morning.

“ That I may be as good as my Word, I have (being now engaged in Business from Home) left this to refresh your Memory, in what I once, and more than once, told you about Mr. William Gregg.

“ When that unfortunate Person was under Sentence of Death for High Treason, I (according to the Duty of my Place) constantly visited him, prayed with him, examined him, and applied such Directions and Exhortations to him, as I thought most suitable for the well disposing him, and preparing him for another World.

“ I found him to be a Man of Parts, and very sensible of his heinous Crime, which he readily confessed, and for which he expressed great Horror, Sorrow and Repentance.

“ I often pressed him to discover who (if any) were concerned with him in that Treasonable Fact.

“ And pressed him also, (in an especial Manner, upon his eternal Salvation, and as he should answer it at the great Tribunal of God) freely to tell me, whether Mr. Harley did know any thing of it, or was any ways concerned, or to be concerned in it.

“ To which he answered me, with the greatest and solemnest Asseseration and Protestation imaginable, (he being all the while upon his Knees, and calling the great God to Witness) that that Honourable Gentleman, Mr. Robert Harley, knew nothing of it, neither was to know, nor to be concerned in it.

“ Which he having said, and often repeated to me, I then grew jealous of those People that frequently came to him, who (as he told me) were so far from offering him any thing to quiet his Conscience, that on the contrary, they gave a great Disturbance to it.

“ It seems, that among the rest, some Friends of that Honourable Gentleman's coming to see this Prisoner, I then expressed some Dislike of

* See Secret Transactions during the hundred Days Mr. William Gregg lay in Newgate, under Sentence of Death for High Treason.

“ his being so much disturbed, by Persons that “ resorted to him, even at those Hours when “ myself was to be at Prayer with him; but I “ knew not who those Persons were that thus “ came to him, and my endeavouring to keep “ them from him, was with no other Design
 “ than for the Good of that poor Man’s Soul,
 “ who did all along express to me his great “ Desire of being in the Chapel, and privately in “ his Room with me, as much as possible.

“ And as he also told me, that he was proffered
 “ his Life, and a great Reward, if he would “ accuse his Master; so I must own to you, I
 “ was very uneasy at his frequent Visitors,
 “ especially when I considered how they disturbed
 “ his Mind, and how much they took up of his “ precious Moments, and hindered him from his “ Devotions, and my Assurances to him therein.

“ I urged him many and many Times and “ Ways to clear his Conscience, and not violate
 “ it for the whole World, telling him, that it
 “ was infinitely better to die with a good Con“ science, than make Shipwreck of it, and “ save his Life here; yea, and gain all the World,
 “ by laying a false Accusation on that Honourable “ Person, or any other he knew to be innocent,
 “ for that would certainly make him miserable
 “ both here and ever, &c.

“ With such like Expressions and Admonitions “ (God’s Grace intervening) I fixed his (then “ unsettled) Conscience, weaned him from the “ vain Hopes and Desires of this Life, and “ directed his Thoughts and Affections to far “ better Things, which I told him it was possible
 “ for him to obtain, if he earnestly and entirely “ laboured after them.

“ He thanked me for my good Advice, and
 “ the great Concern I shewed for his eternal “ Welfare, and said, he would now give the “ deaf Ear to the World, and so hoped God’s “ Ear would be open to his Prayers, &c.

“ At the Place of Execution, he thanked me “ publickly for all my Pains with him, which “ had proved so happy to his Soul, praying God
 “ to bless me and my Family.

“ Then he delivered a Paper into my Hand,
 “ for me to publish; in which Paper, he (among “ other Things) acknowledges God’s Mercy to “ him, in preventing him from prostituting his “ Conscience to save his Life.

“ Now the Reason why I did not presently “ publish that Paper, was this:

“ That it was commanded and kept from me
 “ by the then present Sheriffs, Sir Benjamin Green
 “ (to whom I was then Chaplain) and Sir Charles “ Piers, even from the Time of its Delivery,
 “ which was the 28th of April, 1708, to the 6th
 “ of May, then next ensuing; at which Time, “ having received it again, I waited with it on
 “ the Right Honourable the Earl of Sunderland,
 “ then one of her Majesty’s Principal Secretaries
 “ of State, who immediately gave me Leave to “ publish it.

“ Telling me withal, that I was the properest “ Person to authorize such Papers, as were thus “ delivered to me.

“ Upon this, I forthwith sent it to the Press,
 “ and it then appeared under my Name, as you
 “ may see by the printed Copy here inclosed.

I am, Dear Sir,

Your very humble, and affectionate Servant,

PAUL LORRAIN.

Christ’s-Hospital,
Tuesday Morning,
June 13, 1711.

A Copy of William Gregg’s Paper, delivered by him to the Sheriffs of London and Middlesex, Sir Benjamin Green and Sir Charles Piers, and Paul Lorrain, Ordinary of Newgate, at Tyburn, the Place where he was executed for High Treason, on Wednesday the 28th of April, 1708. Printed from the Original, and published by Authority.

“ THE Crime I am now justly to suffer for,
 “ having made a great Noise in the World,
 “ a Paper of more than ordinary Length will be “ expected from the Criminal; who therefore “ takes this last Opportunity to profess his utter “ Abhorrence, and sincere Repentance of all his “ Sins against God, and of the heinous Crime
 “ committed against the Queen, whose Forgive-
 “ ness I most humbly implore, as I shall heartily
 “ pray for her Majesty’s long Life and happy
 “ Reign over her united People, and Success
 “ against her Enemies, with my parting Breath;
 “ this being all the Satisfaction I can make “ injured Majesty.

“ I declare, in the next Place, the Reparation
 “ I would make (were it in my Power) to those “ of her Majesty’s Subjects I have wronged in “ any kind.

“ And particularly the Right Honourable
 “ Robert Harley, Esq; whose Pardon I heartily “ beg for basely betraying my Trust. Which “ Declaration, though of itself sufficient to clear
 “ the said Gentleman, yet for the sake of those “ whom it was my Misfortune not to be able “ to satisfy in my Life-time, I do sacredly “ protest, that as I shall answer it before the “ Judgment-Seat of Christ, the Gentleman afore-
 “ said was not privy to my writing to France, “ directly nor indirectly.

“ Neither I, his unworthy Clerk, any ways
 “ necessary to the Miscarriage before Tboulon,
 “ nor the Losses by Sea; all which happened
 “ before the first of my Letters, which was “ written the 24th of October, 1707.

“ As for my Creditors, as I am in no Con“ dition to satisfy them; so I earnestly beg they “ would forgive me, and I pray God to make “ up their Losses to them seven-fold.

“ For my own Part, I do freely forgive all “ Men, and die in perfect Charity with them,
 “ not without humble Hopes of finding For“ giveness, through the Merits of Jesus Christ,
 “ with God, who in Mercy touched my Con“ science so powerfully from the Beginning, as
 “ to prevent my prostituting the same to save
 “ my Life; for which Instance of his Love, (to “ be preferred before Life itself) I bless and “ magnify his holy Name, with unspeakable
 “ Joy and Comfort, at my Death, nothing near “ so ignominious, as would have been such a “ Life.

“ After this Confession, the Duty of a dying “ Man leads me to profess the Religion in which “ I was brought up, and do now die, which is
 “ the Protestant:

“ The Scandal given whereunto, by my “ enormous Practices, cannot be better taken “ away, than by my publishing to the World
 “ my hearty Sorrow for those sensual Pleasures
 “ which have proved my Bane.

“ Wherefore let all that shall read this poor
 “ Paper, take Warning by me to shun the like “ youthful Lusts, to which whoever gives up “ himself, cannot tell how far they may (when “ indulged) carry him, even to the committing
 “ of

“ of such Crimes, as he thought himself incapable of some Time a Day.

“ Of which sad Truth, I (to my woeful Experience) am a melancholy Instance; but at the same Time, I appeal to the great God, before whom I am now going to appear, that notwithstanding all the Pains taken to make me out an old Offender, by fastening on me the Crime of counterfeiting the Coin, this is the first Fault that ever I ventured upon, which was not out of Zeal for the Pretender, whom I not only disown at my Death, but solemnly declare, that in all my Life I never thought he had any Right to these Realms, how foolishly soever I may have rendered myself obnoxious in this Particular.

“ But the only Motive of my mad Undertaking was Money, of which I never received any, on account of the Ship Pass, though I have met with the more just Reward of such secret Services, intended by

W. GREGG.”

After which Mr. Hoffman adds thus: “ Here it is evident, that he lay in Newgate after Sentence of Death passed on him for High Treason, in corresponding with her Majesty’s Enemies, from the 19th Day of January, 1707, to April the 28th, 1708, which was the Day of his Execution, as a Traitor, at Tyburn.

“ So that, in the whole, he lay under Sentence of Death, from the Time of his Sentence to the Day of his Execution, one hundred Days.

“ All which Time Mr. Lorrain laboured very diligently and devoutly with him, by good Admonitions, and frequent Prayers to God for him and with him, that he might not violate his Conscience, nor betray his Master.

“ While, on the other Side, Gregg often declared to Mr. Lorrain, no Manner of Solicitations, or Offers of Life, Preferment, and great Advantages were wanting, to induce him to bring Mr. Harley’s innocent Blood on his Head.

“ So long a Respite from Death, as one “ hundred Days, was enough to make any Man so unwilling to die, as to make him to do any thing to save his Life, right or wrong; and Mr. Lorrain said, Gregg so often wavered in his Mind about it, being put so much, and so often, in Hopes of living with Splendor by certain Persons, that he almost resolved to say and do any thing Mr. Harley’s Enemies would have him.

“ Against which, Mr. Lorrain fortified his Mind, with all Manner of upright Industry, and at length with final Success. So that Gregg gave a deaf Ear to all their farther Attempts.

“ Here was one hundred Days hard Struggle between Life and Death, Innocence and Party-Malice.

“ Who those Persons were that offered Gregg his Life, with great Preferments and Advantages (if he would but accuse his Master) may not uneasily be guessed at; for most of the Time he was locked up, none but People of Note were permitted to come near him, who made him strange Promises, and often repeated them.

“ And here it would be worth while to examine how, and why, a certain Person got out of Newgate, who was justly confined there for Life, by Act of Parliament.

“ Submitting to stop Gregg’s dying Speech for eight Days only.

“ And then, when it was published by another Hand, for the two Sheriffs of London to send Mr. Lorrain to the Earl of Sunderland, to ask Leave to print a dying Speech they had commanded, and kept from him, till to keep it any longer, or indeed so long, was a burning Shame to them, but of no Manner of farther Service.

“ From hence you may conclude, how generous it was to say to Mr. Lorrain, “ You are the proper Person to give Authority to this Paper, and I will give you my Word, you shall come to no Trouble for the printing and publishing it.”

NUMBER XII.

IN State Trials, Vol. 6. p. 17. after the Execution of the Earl of Derwentwater, read as followeth:*

“ The Lord Kenmure made no Speech, nor delivered any Paper; but the following Letter of his to a Nobleman, was printed soon after his Death.

A true Copy of a Letter written by the Lord Viscount Kenmure to a certain Nobleman, the Day before his Execution.

My very good Lord,

“ YOUR Lordship has interested yourself so far in mine and the Lords my Fellow-Prisoners Behalf, that I should be the greatest “ Criminal now breathing, should I, whether the Result of your generous Intercession is Life or Death, be neglectful of paying my Acknowledgments for that Act of Compassion.

“ We have already discoursed of the Motives that induced me to take Arms against the Prince now in Possession of the Throne, when you did me the Honour of a Visit, three Days since, in my Prison here: I shall therefore wave that Point, and lament my Unhappiness, for joining with the rest of the Lords in pleading Guilty, in Hopes of that Mercy, which the Generals Wills and Carpenter will do us the Justice to say was promised us by both of them.

“ Mr. Piggot and Mr. Eyres, the two Lawyers employed by us, advised us to this Plea; the “ avoiding of which might have given us farther

 “ Time for looking after the Concerns of another
 “ Life, though it had ended in the same Sentence
 “ of losing this, which we now lie under.
 “ Thanks be to the Divine Majesty, to whose “ infinite Mercy, as King of Kings, I recom“ mend myself, in Hopes of Forgiveness, tho’ it “ shall be my Fate to fail of it here on Earth.

“ Had the House of Commons thought fit
 “ to have received our Petition with the same
 “ Candour as yours has done, and recommended
 “ us to the Compassion of the Prince now “ reigning, we might then have entertained some “ Hopes of Life; but the Answer from St.
 “ James’s is such, as to make us have little or “ no Thoughts of it.

“ Under these dismal Apprehensions then of “ approaching Dissolution, which I thank my “ good God for his holy Guidance I have made “ due Preparation for, give me Leave to tell “ you, that howsoever I have been censured on “ account of the Family of the Gordons, which “ I am an unhappy Branch of, that I have ever “ lived and will die in the Profession of the “ Protestant Religion, practised in the Church, “ governed by Bishops; and that I abhor all “ King-killing Doctrines, that are taught by the “ Church of Rome, as dangerous and absurd:
 “ And that though I have joined with some that “ have taken Arms, of that Persuasion, no other “ Motive, but that of exercising my Loyalty to “ the Person called the Pretender, whom I firmly “ believe to be the true Son of the late King “ James the Second, and in Defence of whose “ Title I am now going to be a Sacrifice, has “ induced me to it.

“ Your Lordship will remember the Papers I
 “ have left with you, and deliver them to my “ Son. They may be of Use to his future “ Conduct in Life, when these Eyes of mine are “ closed by Death, which I could have wished “ might have stolen upon me by the ordinary “ Course of Nature, and not by the Hands of “ an Executioner.

“ But as my blessed Saviour and Redeemer “ suffered an ignominious and cruel Death, and
 “ the Son of God made Flesh did not disdain
 “ to have his Hands and Feet nailed to the “ Cross, for the Sins of the World; so may I,
 “ poor miserable Sinner, as far as human Nature
 “ will allow, patiently bear with the Hands of “ Violence, that I expect suddenly to be stretched “ out against me.

“ Your Lordship will also, provided there is “ no Hopes of a Reprieve this Night, make me “ acquainted with it, as soon as possible, that I “ may meet that Fate with Readiness, which in “ a State of Uncertainty I expect with Uneasiness.
 “ I must also be pressing with your Lordship,
 “ that if, in case of Death, any Paper under my “ Name should come out, as pretended to be “ written by me, in the Manner or Form of a “ Speech, you will not believe it to be genuine;

 “ for I that am heartily sorry for disowning my “ Principles, in one spoken before your Lord“ ship, and the rest of my Peers, will never add
 “ to that Act of Indiscretion, by saying any thing
 “ on the Scaffold, but my Prayers, for the “ Forgiveness of my poor self, and those that “ have brought me to be a Spectacle to Men
 “ and Angels, especially since I must speak in “ my last Moments according to the Dictates of “ my Conscience, and not prevaricate, as I did “ before the Lords, for which I take Shame to “ myself; and such a Method of Proceeding
 “ might do Injury to my Brother Cornwall,
 “ who, I am told, is in a much fairer Way
 “ than I am, of being not excluded from “ Grace.

“ I have nothing farther, than to implore your “ Lordship to charge your Memory with the “ Recommendations I gave you to my Wife,
 “ and the rest of my Children; beseeching God,
 “ that he will so sanctify their Afflictions, that “ after the Pains and Terrors of this mortal “ Life, they may with me be translated to the “ Regions of everlasting Joy and Happiness:
 “ To which blessed State of Immortality, your “ Lordship shall also, while I am living, be “ recommended in the Prayers of,

My very good Lord,

From my Prison in the Tower of London,
 Feb, 23, 1715.

Your most affectionate Kinsman, &c.
 KENMURE.

“ When the Lord Kenmure was brought on
 “ the Scaffold, he was attended by two Divines,
 “ Mr. H—s, and Mr. Cockburn, the latter “ being not sent for till the Night before, and “ told by him, He had so little Thoughts of dying
 “ then, that he had not provided a black Suit, that “ he might have died with more Decency; for which “ he was sorry. As soon as he came on the “ Scaffold he kneeled down, leaning one of his “ Hands on the Rail, and the Divines prayed
 “ with him. He seemed to be very sincere and “ fervent in his Devotions, often lifting up his “ Hands and Eyes to Heaven: He had the “ Undertaker, Mr. Roome, with him, to take “ Care of his Body, and a Surgeon, who was
 “ to direct the Executioner in doing his Office, “ which he did, by drawing his Finger over that “ Part of his Neck where the Blow was to be “ given. The Viscount kissed the Officers and “ Gentlemen on the Scaffold all round, and
 “ some of them twice or thrice; and being asked, “ Whether he had any thing to say, or any “ Speech to deliver, he said, No. He prayed
 “ for the Pretender, and repented of his having “ pleaded guilty, and died after a very courageous “ Manner.”

N U M B E R XIII.

The Trial of the Reverend Mr. William Hendley, for preaching a Charity Sermon at Chislehurst, in Kent, for the Charity Children of St. Ann's, Aldersgate, London; and of George Campman, Robert Hicks, Filiar Harding, and Walter Prat, the Schoolmaster, and Trustees for the Charity Children, for collecting Money for the same; at Rochester Assizes in Kent, before Sir Littleton Powis, Knt. one of his Majesty's Justices of the Court of King's-Bench, July 15, 1719.

*The C A S E.

ON Saturday, August 23, 1718, upon Leave obtained, first, from the Bishop of Rochester, (Atterbury, then Bishop of the Diocese) and secondly, from the Reverend Mr. Wilson, Rector of Chislehurst, to preach two Charity Sermons for the Children of St. Ann's, Aldersgate; the Schoolmaster with four or five more carried down some of the Children to Chislehurst.

Immediately after they arrived, they were taken up, and carried before Sir Edward Bettison, Bart. Thomas Farrington, Esq; Justices of the Peace, and Major Stephens, High Sheriff of the County; by whom they were asked, how they dared to come strolling and begging about the Country, without Licence or Authority first obtained? To which they answered, That if Archbishops and Bishops thought it a good Work to preach for such Children, they imagined it to be a good Work to collect for them: To which the Justices replied, They cared not for Archbishops or Bishops, and were resolved the Thing should not be pursued.

On Sunday, August 24, a Sermon was preached by the Reverend Mr. Hendley, suitable to the Occasion: The Sermon being ended, the Reverend Mr. Wilson (whose Curate read Prayers) put on a Surplice, and repaired to the Altar to read the Offertory Sentences before the Prayer for the Church Militant; when Mr. Wilson made his Offering in one of the Communion Patens, and then gave them to Mr. Campman and Mr. Prat, two of the Trustees for the Children, to collect for them from Pew to Pew.

The People gave liberally, till they came to Mr. Farrington, who not only refused giving, but seized the Collector, asserting it was illegal, and no Collection should be made; that the Children were Vagrants, and sent about begging for the Pretender. Mr. Hendley called out from the Pulpit, and commanded them to proceed; Mr. Wilson (from the Altar) did the like; but the Collector's answered, they could not. Mr. Wilson came down, and said he would collect in Person, and Mr. Hendley called for a Common-Prayer Book, and read the several Rubricks which authorized these Proceedings, and told the Justices, they could not answer disturbing Divine Service, and must expect a Complaint to the Bishop of Rochester. The Justices said, they cared not for the Bishop, or them either, and were charged by Sir Edward Bettison and Captain Farrington to desist from collecting.

In the mean time, the Rector had good Success in collecting, many People crowding up to give before their Turn; and others, kept back by meer Force, threw their Money into the Plate. Mr. Farrington made a Snatch at the Plate to take the Money; when Mr. Wilson ordering the Money to be brought to the Altar, Mr. Wilson took one Paten and Mr. Hendley the other, and decently placed them thereon. Mr. Farrington pressed to come within the Rails; Mr. Hendley held the Door, and told him, his Place was not there, and forbid him touching the Money. Then Sir Edward Bettison came up to Captain Farrington, who called for a Constable, who came up with a long Staff; upon this they were ordered to disperse, upon Pain of being guilty of a Riot, being seconded by Sir Edward Bettison; when Mr. Wilson and Mr. Hendley told them, that the Service of the Church was not finished, for the Prayer for the Church Militant was not read, nor the Blessing given; and if any Riot, it was occasioned by the two Justices. Sir Edward answered, that the Service was finished, and forbid them to proceed; and that all concerned in bringing down the Charity Children should suffer for what was done. Mr. Wilson then called the Churchwarden to tell the Money with him, and agree to the Disposal of it according to the Rubrick. The Justices countermanded the same, whom Mr. Churchwarden rather chose to obey.

Upon this Mr. Wilson and Mr. Hendley told the Money on the Lord's Table, and committed it that Afternoon into the Custody of the Bishop of Rochester. In the Evening, the Rector, the Preacher, and three Persons who brought the Children down, were taken into Custody, and bound over to the Quarter-Sessions at Maidstone, as Rioters and Vagrants.

These Gentlemen appeared at Maidstone upon their Recognizance, but no Bill being found against them, they moved to be discharged; but the Justices obliged them to put in fresh Bail for their Appearance at the next Assizes, when they appeared, and the following Indictment was found against them.

MITCHELL.

The Sum of which Indictment in English runs thus:

THE Jury for our Lord the King present, That William Hendley, late of the Parish of Chislehurst, in the County of Kent, Clerk, George Campman, lately of the same, Painter, Robert Hicks, lately of the same, Labourer, Filiar Harding, lately of the same, Packer, and Walter Prat, lately of the same, Upholsterer, being evilly and seditiously disposed to the Government of this Kingdom, under our most excellent Lord George, King of, &c. and averse to the happy Establishment thereof, and wickedly desirous of Gain; and most horribly and unjustly intending to procure to themselves unlawful Gains, under Pretence of collecting Charities, Alms, and Gifts for the Sustenance and Maintenance of Boys and Girls, viz. twenty Boys, and thirty Girls; on the 24th Day of August, in the fifth Year of our said King, did, in the aforesaid Parish of Chislehurst, with several other ill-disposed Persons (to the Jury unknown) conspire and confederate with the said Boys and Girls, to wander up and down in Kent; and divers other Parts or Counties in England, in order to collect great Sums for the aforesaid Purposes. And, that the said William Hendley, George Campman, &c. in order to put their said wicked Intentions in Execution, did, on the 24th Day as above-mentioned; at the aforesaid Parish, with the said Boys and Girls (none of them being Natives of that Parish) wander, itinerate, and stroll to the said Church; and there did assemble in the said Parish-Church at the Time of Divine Service; and there, at the Time of Divine Service, the said William Hendley (to prosecute his Conspiracy, without any Licence from the King, or legal Authority) did incite and ask of the the Parishioners, Charities, Alms, and Gifts; though neither George Campman nor Walter Prat were Churchwardens, or otherwise Officers of that Parish, yet they did there, in Divine Service, unlawfully extort these Charities, amounting to the Sum of three Pounds, from Rowland Tryon, and other Inhabitants, to the great Disturbance of Divine Service, at that Time celebrating by George Wilson, Rector of that Church; to the great Defrauding and Cheating of Rowland Tryon, and the other Parishioners; for a wicked and evil Example of all offending hereafter in the same Manner against the Laws; and in Contempt of our said King and his Laws, and against the Peace of the said King, his Crown and Dignity.

To which they pleaded Not Guilty.

The Jury were,

Sir Thomas Roberts, of Cranbrook, Bart.
William Honeywood, of Cberiton, Esq;
Edward Gulston, of West Farley, Esq;
Richard Lewin, of Lee, Esq;
John Smith, of the same, Esq;

The Council were,

For the Plaintiffs,	For the Defendants,
Serjeant Darnell ,	Serjeant Comyns ,
Mr. Baynes ,	Sir Constantine Phipps ,
Mr. Marsh .	Mr. Blondell .

Mr. Marsh, with a Warmth, alledged, That in Time Charity Schools might raise such Sums of Money; as to enable them to make head against the Government; their Drums beat to Arms, and their Trumpets sound a most dreadful Alarm; the Protestant Religion had its Quarters beaten up at Chislehurst, and the Terror had struck the Head Quarters in Town; the Sum of three Pounds was raised even in that little Parish, and suppose ten thousand Parishes in England, from each of which if that Sum was raised, it would be enough to bear the Chevalier's Charges into Italy, and help him to consummate the Marriage with the Princess Sobieski, upon whom he might get new Pretenders; to the great Disquiet of the Protestant Interest; and that if a Stop were not put to these Proceedings, in Time the Clergy would grow up into Friars Mendicant; and then quoted several Acts of Parliament against Vagrants, to prove the Defendants were within the Meaning of them; and shewed the Illegality of collecting Money without Letters Patents or Briefs†; and then called the Justices, Constable, and others, to prove the bringing down the Charity Children to Chislehurst, the Preaching, and collecting Charity for them after they were forbid, &c.

The Defendants proved that they had the Bishop's and Incumbent's Consent, by the Oaths of John Reeves, William Moor, Richard Neeves, and Thomas Shackleton.

William Tryon, Esq; and George Jefferies proved that the Justices were the Authors of the Disturbance.

To prove the Archbishop of Canterbury preached at St. Dionis Back-Church, for the Charity Children of Shadwell, the Reverend Mr. Hume, Mr. Tryon, Captain Thomas Shackleton, and Richard Payne were called; who proved the same. And

That the Archbishop of York did the same, was proved by Captain Thomas Shackleton.

Mr. Archdeacon Spratt offered in Evidence, that he had seen the House of Lords present at a Sermon at Westminster, when a Collection was made for poor Children not thereunto belonging; and offered the three Rubricks for the Defendants Vindication, viz. the last after the Nicene Creed, the first after the Offertory, and the last after the Communion Service; but the Judge overruled them, by urging, That the Collection was restrained to a fixed Time.

Serjeant Darnell spoke chiefly relating to the Acts of Parliament made in the Reigns of Queen Elizabeth, King Charles II. and Queen Anne, made against Vagrants and Wanderers from their Parishes, and insisted these Collections were illegal; as did Mr. Baynes.

Sir Constantine Phipps insisted it was legal, as they had the Bishop's and Rector's Licence; and that if what they had done was illegal, it was cognizable only in the Ecclesiastical Courts; and that if the House of Lords were present at such a Collection, as Mr. Archdeacon Spratt had deposed, and that he had seen the late Lord Chancellor Cowper and the late Lord Keeper Wright encourage such Collections, sure there could be no Illegality in it; and then proceeded to shew the Defendants were not within the several Acts of Parliament quoted; as did Mr. Comyns and Mr. Blondell, who insisted, That such Proceedings would discourage Charity-Schools, and put an End to that noble Institution, &c. and that there was no Precedent for this Proceeding.

The Judge summed up the Evidence, and observed what dangerous Consequences might happen from these Collections; and was a little suspicious, that Mr. Hendley had Cardinal Alberoni's Leave, as well as the Bishop of Rocheſter's, to make this Collection, to carry on worse Designs under the specious Colour of advancing Charity; and seemed confirmed in his Suspicion, because the Manner of collecting had some Resemblance with that of the Cardinal's in Spain; for he laid a Tax upon the People, which they were forced to pay, and gave it the specious Name of a Free Gift, alias Charity. If this Stratagem was to spread in England, by the subtle Artifices of this political Cardinal, the Nation is in Danger of paying double Taxes. Upon the whole, the Judge wished, that he had his eleven Brethren to consult with, upon the Bench; but as that was not possible, he directed the Jury to bring in their Verdict for the Plaintiffs; when the Jury went out, and returned in a few Minutes with a Verdict, Guilty; upon which the Judge fined them 6s. 8d. each, and told them, if they did not like the Verdict, they might bring a Writ of Error.

* The Publisher of The Account of this Trial says, p. 43. "N. B. The Jury for the County was industriously set aside, and the above-mentioned were impanelled out of the Grand Jury."

† It is great Pity this Trial was never taken down in Short-Hand; it would have been very entertaining, as well as useful.

The Council for the Justices urged for a larger Fine, for that the Defendants had become Plaintiffs in the Bishop's Court; and therefore prayed, that such a Fine might be laid upon Mr. Hendley, &c. as might either satisfy the Charges they should be at in the Bishop's Court, or make the Opponents desist. But the Judge refused their Request, and told them, That should serve for the present; but if they came before him again, they should have their Deserts.

We shall here conclude (the Account of) this Trial, with an original Letter wrote by Sir Littleton Powys, to the Lord Parker, Lord Chancellor, upon the Occasion.

Henley, near Ludlow, Aug. 4, 1719.

My Lord,

Taking London in my Way between Lewes and Kingston, came to your Lordship's House the Morning before I went to Kingston, but your Lordship was then sitting. I did then intend to have informed your Lordship of what occurred in the Circuit thitherto, relating to the Public, especially in Kent: And after I came from Kingston, I found your Lordship was gone out of Town; and before your Return, I set out for my Country Concerns here in Shropshire, till near next Term; so that what Account I give your Lordship must be by Letter.

Though your Lordship has heard how the Verdict went in the Trial at *Rocheſter, yet perhaps it may not be unacceptable to your Lordship, to have some Abstract of the Matter arising in it. It began at Six in the Morning, by my Appointment, and held till Twelve. The Court was very full of Clergymen, and a great Auditory; and I gave both Sides Liberty to expatiate as they pleased, especially the Defendants, that they might not say but that they had a full and fair Trial. Most of the Witnesses for the Prosecution were unwilling, and did prove the Facts but meanly; but afterwards the Witnesses for the Defendants did, upon questioning, prove all the Facts very fully upon all the Defendants, viz. Hendley the Preacher, the Schoolmaster, and the two Collectors, being all who were served with Process. Serjeant Comyns, Sir Constantine Phipps, and Mr. Blondell, were Council for the Defendants. After an Harangue upon the Virtue of Charity, and how essential to Christianity (though I thought the Texts they cited proved another Sort of Charity, viz. Good-Nature and Good-Neighbourhood, but I thought it not proper then to take Notice of the Distinction) they insisted chiefly,

1. That it would discourage all Charity, and Charity Schools, which would thus be in Danger of Subversion.

2. That every Parson might order Collections in his own Parish, for what Charities he pleased, especially if approved of by the Bishop.

3. That the Rubrick in the Communion-Service, a Common-Prayer Book being produced in Court, does imply that the Parson and the Bishop are intrusted in Collections of Charity in the Church; for it says, that if the Parson and Churchwardens disagree in the Distribution, the Bishop shall determine.

4. That the Parson of the Parish, and also the Bishop of Rocheſter, did give Hendley Leave to preach this Sermon, for this Purpose.

5. That though the Sermon was done, yet the Prayer for the Holy Catholic Church at the Communion-Table was not quite finished, as were not also the Sentences for exciting Charity, when Mr. Farrington, the Justice of the Peace, interrupted the Collection.

6. That the two present Archbishops have preached Charity Sermons, in London, for the Children of other Parishes there.

7. That there is no Precedent of such an Indictment ever before.

Too much Time was spent on both Sides, relating to what Power the Bishops had antiently in the Distribution even of Tythes and Profits relating to the Church, and their Rights to licence Preaching, and to direct what is to be done in Churches, and that Laymen are not to intermeddle there.

Serjeant Darnell, Mr. Baynes, and Mr. Marſh, were pro Rego. The Substance of what they all said is herein mentioned, intermixed with my own Thoughts in my summing up to the Jury.

I first said, That there were three Things much insisted on by the Defendants Council, and answered by the Council on the other Side, which I thought ought to be pared off, and put out of the Case, viz.

1. All Jealousy of discouraging all Charity, and Charity Schools; for that they remained just as they were before, as long as they kept within the Bounds of their proper Parishes. But this Case was quite of a different Nature, relating to arbitrary Collections, and that in other Parishes, and the coming of fifty Boys and Girls together begging for that Purpose; and if this was practised, it might do more Harm to Charity Schools, by making them odious to their Parishes, whose Poor would be injured, by lessening the Charity to them.

2. It ought to be put out of the Case, whether Mr. Hendley was authorized to preach there, or not; for that I thought it the same Case if the Parson of the Parish himself had then preached, [It was at my Tongue's End, if the Bishop himself had preached, as indeed it was the same; but I thought it better not to heat the Question by a Supposal of the Bishop's Preaching] for that the Preaching was not the Point, being used only to excite Giving; but the true Point was, Whether the Collection was without lawful Authority; and therefore the Collecting of it in the Church is not a jot better, in Point of Law, than if the fifty Boys and Girls had stood at the Market-Place, and the Collectors had there received the Charity of all whom they could assemble about them.

3. Another Matter I thought proper to be pared off (though so much debated on both Sides) whether it was a Crime (I suppose the Crime suggested in the Bishop of Rocheſter's Court) to interrupt the Collection before the Prayer for the Holy Catholic Church, and the Sentences for Charity, were fully read; since they thought, that if such Collecting is an unlawful Act, the proper Time to stop it is just when it begins, or soon after, as was done here by Mr. Farrington; for otherwise Common-Prayer, or a Sermon, might be used to justify and give a Sanction to any unlawful Act, and this Stop might as well have been in the Middle of the Common-Prayer, or of the Sermon, in case the unlawful Collection had then begun: So that the true Point is, Whether the Collection was unlawful; and upon that all the Case depends.

* Occasioned by a Charity-Sermon preached at Chislehurst by one Hendley of Islington. He died not long after.

As for the Assertion, That every Parson of a Parish may order Collections in his Parish for Charities, when and for what he pleases; I declared my Opinion, that he could not; it not being any Part of his Function, like reading Prayers, Preaching, Christening, Burying, &c. and I knew not how he was made Judge of the Times and Objects of all Charities within his Parish, though he might preach as much as he pleased upon the general Duty of Charity.

As to the Rubrick in the Communion-Service, I said, I thought that was to be taken secundum subjectam materiam, viz. the ordinary Collection at the Communion, which is ever then used to be made for the Poor of that Parish, but should not extend to every Collection the Parson should appoint for any foreign Charity, and that I did not till now hear that the Clergy did claim such a Power. And farther, I said, that I thought those Words of the Rubrick did not imply such a Power in the Parson: For the Words being, "the Money given at the Offering shall be disposed of to such pious and charitable Uses as the Parson and the Churchwardens shall think fit, wherein if they disagree, it shall be disposed of as the Ordinary shall appoint;" such a Power of appointing a Collection at Pleasure, is as much implied in the Churchwardens as in the Parson, for they have as much Liberty to disagree from the Parson in the Distribution, as the Parson has to disagree from them; and so the Churchwardens might also appoint Collections for what Charities they pleased: But that I thought that the Parson and Churchwardens, either jointly or severally, could not appoint any Collection for Charity otherwise than in common Form for the Poor of their own Parish, and that those are the charitable Uses intended by the Rubrick, and particularly at the Communion, to the Service of which those Words of the Rubrick are subjoined. I hope your Lordship, on reading that Part of the Rubrick at the End of the Communion-Service, will be of my Opinion, which I then suddenly declared, as to the Implication, and do not since alter, unless otherwise convinced.

As to what was mentioned of the two present Archbishops, it was for the Poor of the same Town, though of a different Parish*; and all the Circumstances of those Cases do not now appear, nor were they litigated, as this Case is.

As to the Objection, That there is no Precedent of such an Indictment ever before: There never was such an Attempt before, that fifty Boys and Girls should go into another Parish, in another County, and make a kind of Migration in such a Body, really begging, though with great Formality. And though much might be said (as the Council for the King insisted) to bring them within the Statute of Vagrants, especially seeing the Statute of 39 Eliz. c. 4. paragr. 2. says, That all Persons calling themselves Scholars, going about begging, shall be accounted Vagrants; yet I judged it not proper to put the Case upon that Point, when I thought it so clear otherwise, and fit so to be mentioned.

I also told the Jury, that this Case did consist of two Parts; the first but particular, and the other very general.

As to the particular, it is relating to the Maintenance of the Poor, which is not of a Spiritual Nature, but a mere Lay Concern, and relating to the Civil Government; and the several Acts of Parliament do plainly esteem it as such, by ordering the Rates and Collections for the Poor, and putting the whole Management into the Lay Hands of the Justices of the Peace, and the Overseers of the Poor, who are to be nominated by the Justices of the Peace, and accountable to them, and by their Directions to set the Poor at Work, if they thought proper; and therefore a Justice of Peace, being then in the Church, might well take it to be a Matter within his Jurisdiction, and that he might stop such a new and extraordinary Proceeding, newly begun among the Clergy, relating to the Maintenance of the Poor, and a Collection made by Strangers, without the Consent or Assistance of the Churchwardens or Overseers of the Poor of that Parish.

But this Case, if under a general Consideration, is of a vast Extent, and mighty Consequence to the King and the People, and at which the very Legislature may take great Umbrage. The levying of Money is the tenderest Part of our Constitution, and if it may be done arbitrarily, under the Shew and Form of Charity, (which may comprize all good Works and all good Intentions) it cannot be said whither it may go; any more than it can be said whither these fifty Boys and Girls may go: For as, by the same Reason, they may go into all the Parishes in England, so Collections, as for Charities, may be set up in all the Churches in England by the Clergy, as often as they please: And though it be said, it is all but voluntary Giving, yet it is a Sort of Compulsion, by the Solemnity in the Church, and vying with others, and being marked out, if refusing, or giving meanly.

In the Time of Charles I. the Parliament took great Offence at some Attempts for Free Gifts to the Crown; and we hear that Cardinal Alberoni is now setting up the like all over Spain.

But besides, here in England no Collection †, even for Charity (unless for the Poor of the same Parish) is, by Law, to be made, but by the Leave and

* Charity Sermons are preached in London frequently in the Parish Churches there, for the Charity Children of different Parishes. The British Charity School on Clerkenwell-Green have an annual Charity Sermon, preached before the Stewards and Gentry of the Welch Feast, on the 1st of March, for their Benefit, and generally at a different Church each Year, and are never molested.

† In the Year 1745, when the Rebellion was on Foot, at the several County Meetings then held for subscribing Sums of Money to raise Men, &c. for the Defence of his Majesty's Person and Government, several Gentlemen, in different Counties, objected to it, as against Law; and that no Money could be raised but by Authority of Parliament, or the King's Licence, &c. But my Lord Chancellor Hardwicke, in his Speech (when Lord High Steward) at passing Sentence on the Rebel Lords, p. 38. has these Words, "Men of Property, of all Ranks and Orders, crowded in with liberal Subscriptions, of their own Motion, beyond the Examples of former Times, and un-compelled by any Law; and yet in the most legal and warrantable Manner, notwithstanding what has been ignorantly and presumptuously suggested to the contrary."

Permission of the King, gathering of Money being so nice a Matter, that it must not be done, even for Charity, without his Leave, in the most compassionate Cases; and thence the antient Method of Briefs under the Great Seal, has been used, even upon extreme great Losses by Fire. And the Statutes of 4 and 5 of Anne have put the whole Management of Briefs under the Regulation of the Court of Chancery, and impower the laying great Fines upon the Offenders. But this Method were giving a Go-by to all Royal Licences, and putting it in the Power of the Clergy to do all Acts of Charity of themselves, at the Expence of the People, and to be sole Judges of the Occasions, and to make what Application and Account they please.

I told the Jury, that I was very clearly of Opinion, in Point of Law, this was a Case of dangerous Consequence, and was an Invasion not only on the King's Prerogative, but also upon the Legislature, and that I thought the Defendants guilty.

The Jury stayed out but a little while, and brought them in all Guilty. I then told the Defendants Council, that if they did not like my Opinion, in Point of Law, they might bring their Writ of Error; and the Indictment being so special, it did equal a special Verdict, and they might have the Opinion of a special Court if they pleased.

I then set a Fine of a Noble upon each Defendant, saying, it was so small only because it was made a Question; but now that a Verdict had settled it, there would be very heavy Fines upon those who should presume to offend in like Manner hereafter. Yet I heard that some Gentlemen in the Town had thereupon said, that I had been too favourable to them by so small Fines: But it was far from my Intention of any Favour to them, but of Service to the King; whereas, if great, it might have been said, that, while they were prosecuted for levying Money on the People, the Prosecution was only to levy Money upon them, when it was really to settle the Point: And great Fines might have raised Compassion, and perhaps a Collection for them. It would be great Satisfaction to me, if your Lordship be of the same Opinion with me, as to the Smallness of the Fines; I am sure I intended it for the best.

I gave Mr. Woodford a News-Paper, wherein was an Advertisement, which I thought very fit to be shewed to Superiors: That the Bishop of London had issued a Circular Letter to all his Clergy, to collect Charities in their Parishes for the poor Vicarages in England, which I thought much a-kin to the late Collection in Kent, or rather more dangerous, not only by raising a vast Sum of Money, (if the like in all Dioceses) but also by marking out People how far affected to the Church throughout England, and casting some Reflection upon Queen Anne's Bounty, and upon a beneficial Explanation after by his present Majesty, yet as if to be supported by begging: And this done in a Time of Taxes, which must appear the more heavy after such Collections; and the Clergy would thus gain a Power of raising Money as they please, and applying it as they please. How this Project goes on, I know not; but sure it ought to be stopped: And for that Purpose, a Thing very apposite was mentioned in the Debate of the late Trial in Kent; That commonly about Christmas, when it is hard with the Poor for want of Work, in great Frost and Snow, then the Bishop of London does send a Circular Letter, to the Parishes within the Bills of Mortality, to make Collections for the Poor, to be put into the Hands of the Lord-Mayor. But it was also alledged in the same Trial, that precedent to such Circular Letter of that Bishop, the King sends a Letter, under his Sign Manual, to that Bishop, authorizing and requiring him so to do. This deserves to be inquired into, and, if true, it is a Case in Point against this new Letter of the Bishop of London, if without the King's Licence.

A Man of Rochester, worth nothing, was convicted before me of drinking the Pretender's Health. I ordered him to be whipped, in open Market, twice, till his Back was bloody, with a Month between the first and second Whipping.

And at Lewes, a Man of Rye was convicted before me for drinking the Health of King James the Third, and saying, he knew no such Person as King George. He had run out a good Estate by Looseness, and had nothing left but an Annuity of thirty Pounds per Annum for his Life. I fined him a hundred Pounds, and committed him till paid, and that he would find good Sureties for his good Behaviour for three Years next after the Payment of the Fine. I told him, that by his paying a hundred Pounds to King George, he would certainly know there is such a Person.

Your Lordship's Notion, against setting a State Offender in the Pillory, was certainly very right, and did so convince me, that I have ever since ordered corporal or pecuniary Punishments upon them, as having a better Effect upon shameless People, and without giving the Mob an Opportunity to be troublesome.

I declared in all my Charges in this Circuit, as I did the two last Terms at Westminster, that the Number of base Libels, and seditious Papers, is intolerable, and that now a quicker Course will be taken about them; for that now the Government will not be so much troubling itself to find out the Authors of them, but as often as any such Papers are found on the Tables of Coffee-houses, or other News-houses, the Master of the House shall be answerable for such Papers, and shall be prosecuted as the Publisher of them, and let him find out the Author, Letter-writer, or Printer, and take Care, at his Peril, what Papers he takes in.

This last was a Maiden Circuit, which had not been known before, and is to be attributed to the late good Law of Transportation, which is well put in Execution in the Counties near London, whence Transporting is easy, but not so well in other Parts of England. The Treasury would save much Money, partly by paying fewer Rewards of forty Pounds, and partly by not long maintaining Fellows in Gaol, if some Rates were agreed to be given to Merchants to carry them off speedily.

Your Lordship's Order of Notification, to the Justices of Peace, had a very good Effect, for they appeared much better this Circuit than formerly, especially in Surrey; where I told them, that I would request your Lordship, that you would please to acquaint his Majesty, at his Return, how very well, in particular, his Justices of Peace in Surrey had appeared, upon his Pleasure being notified to them for that Purpose.

I did, in all my Charges, inform the Audience of the Occasion and Necessity of that Notification, for that there was grown a Sort of general Neglect, all over England, of the Appearance of the Justices of Peace at the Assizes, when the Judges had often Matters to inform them of, by Command of his Majesty; and Trials of Felons were often imperfect, by the Non-attendance of the committing Justice of Peace; and that their Attendance was a Respect due to the King and his Government, upon those solemn Occasions: And that it is no Hardship upon them; there being three Excuses, which will be readily admitted, if upon the Call mentioned to the Court, barely upon the Word of some other Justice, or Proof upon Oath by some other Person, viz.

1. If not fit to travel, by Age or Want of Health.
2. If living out of the County.
3. If then actually out of the County.

But if Justices of Peace shall remain at Home, about their private Affairs, or to avoid the Trouble of a Journey to the Assizes, it ought to be looked on as a Neglect of the Duty of their Office: For they are not called only to notify to the People, that they are in Commission, but to answer to their Names in Person.

Many of those in Commission do not act, and have not taken the Oath of Office: Whereupon I ordered, in open Court, each Clerk of the Peace, against next Term, to transmit to your Lordship a List of such as reside in the County, and refuse to act; yet that he does, in the mean time, know of them, if they persist in such Refusal; that so it may be their own doing, if they are put out of the Commission, after his Majesty's Favour to them in being put in.

I fear I have tired your Lordship with this long, though abridged, Account: But your Lordship's Pardon will be an Addition to all your former Favours to,

My Lord,

Your Lordship's most faithful and most humble Servant,

LITTLETON POWYS.

CURL's Case.

Mich. Term. 1 Geo. II.

Dominus Rex vers. Edmund Curl.

*An obscene Book is punishable as a Libel.

Information exhibited by the Attorney-General against the Defendant Edmund Curl, for that he existens homo iniquus et sceleratus, ac nequiter machinans et intendens bonos mores subditorum hujus regni corrumpere, et eos ad nequitiam inducere, quendam turpem, iniquum et obscænum libellum, intitulat' Venus in a Cloyster, or, The Nun in her Smock, impie et nequiter impressit et publicavit, ac imprimi et publicari causavit, (setting forth the several lewd Passages) in malum exemplum, &c. and of this the Defendant was found guilty. And in Trinity Term last, it was moved in Arrest of Judgment by Mr. Marsh, that however the Defendant may be punishable for this in the Spiritual Court as an Offence contra bonos mores, yet it cannot be a Libel for which he is punishable in the Temporal Court. Libellus is a Diminutive of the Word Liber, and it is Libellus from its being a Book, and not from the Matter of its Contents. In the Case De Libellis famosis, my Lord Coke says, That it must be against the Public, or some private Person, to be a Libel: and I do not remember ever to have heard this Opinion contradicted. Whatever tends to corrupt the Morals of the People, ought to be censured in the Spiritual Court, to which properly all such Causes belong.

“ What their Proceedings are I am a Stranger to: But for me it is sufficient to say, I do not find any Case, wherein they were ever prohibited in such a Cause. In the Reign of King Charles II. there was a filthy Run of obscene Writings, for which we meet with no Prosecution in the Temporal Courts; and since these were Things not fit to go unpunished, it is to be supposed that my Lords the Bishops animadverted upon them in their Courts. In the Case of the Queen versus Read, 6 Ann. B. R. there was an Information for a Libel in writing an obscene Book, called, The fifteen Plagues of a Maidenhead; and after Conviction, it was moved in Arrest of Judgment, that this was not punishable in the Temporal Courts; and the Opinion of Chief Justice Holt was so strong with the Objection, that the Prosecutor never thought fit to stir it again.

“ Mr. Attorney-General contra. I do not observe it is pretended there is any other Way of punishing the Defendant; for if the Spiritual Court had done it, Instances might be given; and it is no Argument to say, we meet with no Prohibitions; such a way of Argument would construe them into all Sorts of Jurisdictions. What I insist upon is, that this is an Offence at Common Law, as it tends to corrupt the Morals of the King's Subjects, and is against the Peace of the King. Peace includes good Order and Government, and that Peace may be broken in many Instances without an

 “ or the like: But if it is destructive of Mo“ rality in general; if it does, or may, affect “ all the King's Subjects, it then is an Offence
 “ of a public Nature. And upon this Distinction
 “ it is, that particular Acts of Fornication are “ not punishable in the Temporal Courts, and “ Bawdy-Houses are. In Sir Charles Sedley's
 “ Case it was said, that this Court is the Custos
 “ Morum of the King's Subjects, 1 Sid. 168.
 “ and upon this Foundation there have been “ many Prosecutions against the Players for “ obscene Plays, though they have had Interest
 “ enough to get the Proceedings stayed before
 “ Judgment, Tremayne's Entries, 209, 213, 214, “ 215. State Trials, Vol. 3. Lord Grey's Case.
 “ — Mich. 10 Wil. 3. Rex vers. Hill, the Defen“ dant was indicted for printing some obscene
 “ Poems of my Lord Rocheſter's, tending to the “ Corruption of Youth; upon which he went “ abroad, and was outlawed; which he would “ not have done, if his Council had thought it
 “ no Libel. The Spiritual Courts punish only “ personal Spiritual Defamation by Words; if it
 “ is reduced to Writing, it is a Temporal Offence,
 “ Salk. 552. Mo. 627. and it is punishable as a “ Libel. My Lord Coke, in the Case De Libellis
 “ famosis, had nothing in View but scandalous “ defamatory Libels. Libellus is not always to “ be taken as a technical Word; in this Case it “ may stand as an obscene little Book. And as “ to the Case of Read, there was no Judgment,
 “ but it went off upon the Chief Justice's saying,
 “ Why don't you go to the Spiritual Court? Which “ was giving a false Reason for that sudden “ Opinion: Now it appears there is no Instance
 “ of the Spiritual Court's intermeddling, where “ it is reduced to Writing, or in Print.

VOL. X.

“ Chief Justice Raymond. I think this is a “ Case of very great Consequence; though, if “ it was not for the Case of the Queen versus “ Read, I should make no great Difficulty in it.
 “ Certainly the Spiritual Court has nothing to “ do with it, if in Writing: And if it reflects on “ Religion, Virtue, or Morality; if it tends to “ disturb the Civil Order of Society, I think it “ is a Temporal Offence. I do not think Libellus
 “ is always to be taken as a technical Word.
 “ Would not Trover lie de quodam libello intitulat'
 “ the New Testament, and does not the Spiritual “ Court proceed upon a Libel?

“ Fortescue J. I own this is a great Offence;
 “ but I know of no Law by which we can punish
 “ it. Common Law is common Usage, and “ where there is no Law there can be no Trans“ gression. At Common Law, Drunkenness,
 “ or Cursing and Swearing, were not punishable;
 “ and yet I do not find the Spiritual Court took “ Notice of them. This is but a general Soli“ citation of Chastity, and not indictable. Lady “ Purbeck's Case was for procuring Men and “ Women to meet at her House, and held not “ indictable, unless there had been particular “ Facts to make it a Bawdy-House. To make it “ indictable, there should be a Breach of the “ Peace, or something tending to it, of which “ there is nothing in this Case. A Libel is a “ technical Word at Common Law; and I must “ own the Case of the Queen versus Read sticks
 “ with me, for there was a Rule to arrest the “ Judgment nisi. And in Sir Charles Sedley's
 “ Case there was a Force, of throwing out Bottles
 “ upon the People's Heads.

“ Reynolds J. It is much to be lamented, if “ this is not punishable: I agree there may be “ many Instances, where Acts of Immorality
 “ are of Spiritual Cognisance only; but then “ those are particular Acts, where the Prosecution
 “ is pro salute animæ of the Offender, and not “ where they are of a general immoral Tendency;
 “ which I take to be a reasonable Distinction.
 “ Read's Case is indeed a Case in Point: But I “ confess I should not have been of that Opinion.
 “ Libellus does not ex vi terminis import Defa“ mation, but is to be governed by the Epithet,
 “ which is added to it. This is surely worse
 “ than Sir Charles Sedley's Case, who only exposed “ himself to the People then present [naked,]
 “ who might chuse whether they would look “ upon him or not; whereas this Book goes all “ over the Kingdom. Drunkenness and Swearing
 “ were punishable in the Spiritual Court, before
 “ the Acts which made them Temporal Offences,
 “ and in which the Jurisdiction of the Spiritual “ Court is saved.

“ Probyn J. inclined this to be punishable
 “ at Common Law, as an Offence against the “ Peace, intending to weaken the Bonds of Civil “ Society, Virtue, and Morality. But it being “ a Case of great Consequence, it was ordered to “ stand over for a further Argument.

“ And this Term Page J. came into the King's- “ Bench in the room of Justice Fortescue; it was “ to have been spoke to by Mr. Solicitor-“ General and myself. But Curl not having “ attended me in Time, I acquainted the Court
 “ I was not prepared; and as my Want of being “ ready proceeded from his own Neglect, they “ refused to indulge him to the next Term.

[2 A]

“ And

“ And in two or three Days; they gave it as “ their unanimous Opinion; That this was a “ Temporal Offence. They said, it was plain
 “ the Force used in Sedley's Case was but a small “ Ingredient in the Judgment of the Court, who “ fined him 2000*l.* (2 Marks,*) and if the “ Force was all they went upon, there was no “ Occasion to talk of the Court's being Censor “ Morum of the King's Subjects. They said, if “ Read's Case was to be adjudged, they should “ rule it otherwise: And therefore in this Case,
 “ they gave Judgment for the King. And the “ Defendant was afterwards set in the Pillory,

“ as he well deserved.” ——— This Edmund
Curl stood in the Pillory at Charing-Cross, but was not pelted, or used ill; for, being an artful, cunning (though wicked) Fellow, he had contrived to have printed Papers dispersed all about Charing-Cross, telling the People, He stood there for vindicating the Memory of Queen Anne;
 which had such an Effect on the illiterate Mob, that it would have been dangerous even to have spoken against him: And when he was taken down out of the Pillory, the Mob carried him off, as it were in Triumph, to a neighbouring Tavern.

* Sir Charles Sedley was indicted at Common Law for several Misdemeanors against the King's Peace, and which were to the great Scandal of Christianity; and the Cause was, for that He shewed his naked Body in a Balcony in Covent-Garden to a great Multitude of People, and there did such Things, and spoke such Words, &c. mentioning some Particulars of his Misbehaviour, as throwing down Bottles (pissed in) vi et armis among the People, Keble's Reports, Vol. 1. p. 620. Fortescue's Reports, 99, 100. And this Indictment was openly read to him in Court; and the Justices told him, That notwithstanding there was not then any Star-Chamber, yet they would have him know, that the Court of King's-Bench was the Custos Morum of all the King's Subjects; and that it was then high Time to punish such profane Actions, committed against all Modesty, which were as frequent, as if not only Christianity, but Morality also had been neglected. After he had been kept in Court by Recognizance from Trinity Term to the End of Michaelmas Term, the Court required him to take his Trial at Bar: But being advised, he submitted himself to the Court, and confessed the Indictment, 15 Car. 2. 1663. The Michaelmas Term following; the Court considered what Judgment to give; and inasmuch as he was a Gentleman of a very antient Family (in Kent) and his Estate incumbered, (not intending his Ruin, but his Reformation) they fined him only 2000 Marks, and to be imprisoned a Week without Bail, and to be of good Behaviour for three Years, Sid. 168. pl. 29. Digest of the Law, p. 60 and 116.

*The Trial of William Hales, for forging a Promissory Note for 6400*l.* in the Name of Thomas Gibson, Esq; and Partners†, and for publishing the same as a true one, knowing it to be false and counterfeit, at the Session of the Peace, and Oyer and Terminer, for the City of London, held at the Old-Bailey, on Monday the 9th Day of December, 1728, before Mr. Justice Page and Mr. Baron Carter.*

Cryer. O Y E Z, Oyez, Oyez: All Manner of Persons, that have any thing to do at this Sessions of Oyer and Terminer, holden for the City of London, and Gaol-Delivery of Newgate, holden for the City of London and County of Middlesex, draw near and give your Attendance. ——— Oyez; You good Men of the City of London, summoned to appear here this Day upon the Trial between our Sovereign Lord the King and William Hales, answer to your Names, on Pain and Peril that shall come thereon.

James Seymour, Samuel Cranmer, &c. called.

Clerk of the Arraigns. William Hales, look to your Challenges.

Samuel Cranmer ———

Mr. Serj. Baynes. My Lord, I have a Paper delivered to me. There are three worthy Persons on this Pannel, we desire may be set aside.

Mr. Justice Page. You know what the Law is; If Mr. Attorney consent they should be withdrawn, very well.

Mr. Serj. Baynes. We know there are enough, my Lord.

Cl. of Arr. Richard Knollys.

Mr. Serj. Baynes. He is related to Mr. Gibson.

Mr. Serj. Whitaker. Prove it.

Mr. Baron Carter. Pray, how is Mr. Gibson concerned?

Mr. Serj. Darnell. It is for a Note of Mr. Gibson's.

Mr. Justice Page. I would recommend it to Mr. Attorney. I would have this Trial without any Colour of Unfairness whatsoever; and as Mr. Gibson is concerned, if he be really a-kin, I would advise Mr. Attorney to waive him.

Mr. Attorney-General, (Sir Philip Yorke.) My Lord, I am sure it is our Desire that this Trial should proceed with all the Fairness imaginable,

† This Trial (taken in Short-hand by Order of Mr. Gibson) should have come in Vol. 9. p. 67. being the first of Hales's Trials; but not procuring it Time enough to insert in its proper Place, have given it here; as it completes all the Trials at large, relating to the Forgeries of Mr. Hales and Kinnerley: Though a short Account of this Trial, from the Sessions-Paper of that Time, is printed in Vol. 9. p. 68—71.

therefore, without entering into the Question how far Mr. Gibson is concerned, or, if he is, what Consequence that may have, I waive this Gentleman.

Then the twelve Jurors, who were sworn, were counted, and their Names were as follows, viz.

Samuel Cranmer,	John Pott,
William Howard,	Richard Chauncy,
Thomas Swayne,	James Coulter,
Thomas Port,	Harvey Spragge,
Ralph Knox,	Joseph Jackson,
Cornelius Mason,	Robert Knaplock.

Cl. of Arr. Cryer, make Proclamation.

Cryer. If any one can inform, &c.

Clerk of the Arraignment opened the Indictment, which is as follows, viz.

N. B. This Indictment was found under the Commission of Oyer and Terminer, and not upon the Gaol-Delivery.

Cl. of Arr. Upon this Indictment the Defendant hath been arraigned, and pleaded Not Guilty; and for his Trial he puts himself upon God and his Country, which Country you are.

Your Charge is to inquire, &c.

Mr.

Mr. Strange. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury; This is an Indictment against William Hales, of London. The Indictment sets forth, That he being a Person of ill Fame and Reputation, and intending to deceive and defraud Thomas Gibson, John Jacob, Robert Jacomb, and divers others, did, on the 7th of September, forge and counterfeit, and caused to be forged and counterfeited, a certain Note, viz. "August 27, 1728. I promise to pay, &c." This is laid to be to the great Damage of the said Thomas Gibson, &c. and to the evil Example of others in like Case offending, against his Majesty's Peace, &c. It sets forth, That, from the same evil Intentions, he did produce and publish, and caused to be produced and published, a certain Note following, viz. "August 27, 1728. I promise to pay, &c." That he published this as a true and lawful Writing, knowing the same to be false, forged, and counterfeit. It sets forth, That he forged and counterfeited, and caused to be forged and counterfeited, a certain Writing, dated August 27, 1728, purporting that the aforesaid Thomas Gibson, for himself and Partners, promised to pay George Watson, or Bearer, 6400*l.* Gentlemen, the Indictment sets forth, That on the same 7th of September, in this City, the said William Hales did produce, and caused to be produced, a Writing, which purported that the said Thomas Gibson had promised to pay George Watson, or Bearer, 6400*l.* and published this, knowing it to be forged at the same Time. And this is laid to be to the great Damage of the said Thomas Gibson, &c. and to the evil Example of all others in like Case offending. To this Indictment he hath pleaded Not Guilty. But if we prove the Fact, it becomes your Duty to convict him thereof.

Mr. Attorney-General. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury; I am of Council in this Case for the King. The Charge against the Defendant Mr. William Hales is for forging a Note in the Name of Mr. Gibson, payable to George Watson, Esq; or Bearer, for no less a Sum than 6400*l.* and publishing this Note as a true one, knowing it to be false and counterfeit: For, though the Fact is laid different Ways in the Indictment, yet it is upon one and the same Note, and the Difference consists only in the Form of alledging it.

This, Gentlemen, is the first Case of the most extraordinary Scene of Forgery that hath come under Examination in this Place, committed in such a Manner, and attended with such Circumstances, as make it necessary to be prosecuted with the greatest Weight and Solemnity, for an Example and Terror to others. All Kinds of Forgery are Crimes of a most pernicious Nature, as they tend to weaken and destroy that Faith and Commerce which ought to be maintained amongst Men: But Forgery in the Case of negotiable Notes, which have a particular Currency given to them by Act of Parliament, whereby private Credit is greatly assisted and Trade carried on, is one of the most dangerous, and, if it should prevail, the Consequences, tho' not easy to be foreseen, would certainly be extensive and destructive. Such is the Nature of the Offence whereof the Prisoner stands accused: But howsoever heinous that may be, his Guilt will depend entirely upon the Evidence of the Fact.

Gentlemen, the Advantage taken to commit this Forgery was from an Act of Kindness and Civility done to the Defendant. He some Time ago prevailed with one Mr. Booth, Book-keeper to Mr. Gibson, to accommodate him with two Covers for Letters franked by Mr. Gibson, in order (as he pretended) to send News into the Country: A Practice, which I fear is too common, but I hope this Instance will have some Effect to make it less frequent. It will appear to you, from several Circumstances, That the Note in Question was made on one of these Covers: For, Gentlemen, it is a Promissory Note, subscribed, For myself and Partners, Thomas Gibson. The Body of the Note is all of one Hand-writing, not pretended to be Mr. Gibson's. When we come to the Subscription, there is a Rasure at the End of the Word For, which, upon holding the Paper against the Light, is plainly to be seen. The Manner of Mr. Gibson's Writing being pretty wide and loose, the Letter o in the Word For appears to have been crouded between the other two Letters F and r, and is remarkably of a different Character and fresher Ink than the others. From hence the Manner of making the Forgery seems to have been, by rasing out the two e's at the End of the Word Free, or at least the greatest Part of them, and inserting an o in the manner I have mentioned, and then adding in the same Line, after this Word thus made to be For, these other Words, Myself and Partners; which standing a little above the Name Tho. Gibson, serve as a proper Subscription to this Note. It will appear likewise, that the Stroke at the Beginning of the m in the Word my is of the older kind of Ink, and probably was at first Part of one of the e's in the Word Free. There is something observable in the Figure and Appearance of the Paper itself: The old Folding, which is most worn, answers to that which probably might have been the Fold of a Cover of a Letter, and the Paper is torn off at one Side and at the Top.

This, Gentlemen, being the Nature of the Writing, and the Manner in which it was transformed from the Direction of a Letter to a Note of this Value, we shall, in the next Place, lay before you the Use which was made of it. And, Gentlemen, the Time pitched upon for this Purpose, will be material for your Consideration. Mr. Gibson was gone to Bath, and it was thought proper to date the Note the Day before he went. No Use was made of it till some Time after he was gone, that there might be no Room for applying to the Person himself. The Day, and Time of the Day, which were chosen to put it off, were Saturday at Night; when probably there would be no Opportunity of making Inquiries till the Monday Morning following, and consequently a whole Day might be gained. This being the Opportunity resolved upon, it will appear, that on Saturday the 7th of September Mr. Hales made Use of an Instrument, that hath confessed himself to have been drawn in by him, one Thomas Rumsey, a young Fellow bred to the Sea, who was absolutely under his Influence; told him he must go with him into the City, bid him put on a particular Suit of Cloaths, and observing that he had a laced Hat upon his Head, advised him to leave that behind him, and gave him a plain one. To make him appear still more like a Man of Business, Mr. Hales, as they they went along the Strand, bought him a Pocket-Book or Letter-Cafe. Thence he carried him to Middle-Row, and bought him a dark Periwig, bid him put it on, and said, it became him very well. Thus equipped, he took him to John's Coffee-house in Sheer-Lane; and when they were there, Rumsey not knowing about what he was to be employed, a Porter came in with a Letter. Without the Porter's saying one Word, Hales asked, if he did not want Rumsey? The Porter answered, Yes; and produced a Letter directed to Rumsey, which Mr. Hales took, and readily found inclosed in it this Note for 6400*l.* payable to George Watson, or Bearer. In the Letter were two Names written with Sums against them thus, Lady Harriot Elliott 4300*l.* Sir John Hynde Cotton 2100*l.* and underneath, payable to them or Bearer. These Names only being in the Letter, Mr. Hales took upon him to order Rumsey to write under them, James Moreton, Esq; or Bearer; and when this was done, that Part of the Letter with the Names was torn off, and put into the Pocket-Book (which had been bought for the Purpose) together with the Note for 6400*l.* and a Bank-Note of 20*l.* and two of 25*l.* each. Then the Prisoner gave it to Mr. Rumsey, with Directions to carry these Notes to the Shop of Mr. Snow and Poltock without Temple-Bar, and there take their Cash-Note, payable to James Moreton, Esq; or Bearer, for 70*l.* the Produce of the Bank-Notes; and in Exchange for this forged Note, to take one of their Notes, payable to the Lady Harriot Elliott or Bearer, for 4300*l.* and another to Sir John Hynde Cotton or Bearer, for 2100*l.* The Prisoner gave strict Instructions to Rumsey, that, if at Mr. Snow's he should be asked where he lived, he should answer, at the upper End of Bond-Street; if he should be asked his Name, he should say, Thomas Fowler, or any other Name besides his true Name; that it was indifferent what, so it was not the right Name. Rumsey, thus instructed, went immediately to the House of Mr. Snow and Poltock, which Hales took care to shew him. Mr. Poltock took the small Bank-Notes, and gave his Note for them; but observing the Appearance of the Note for 6400*l.* that it was written on a dirty Scrap of Paper, and the Difference of Hand-writings in it, would have nothing to do with that. During this Time Hales kept at a little Distance; and Rumsey returning without Success, he directed him to go to Mr. Hoare's, and (as he had concerted in the former Instance) to pay in a small Sum of Money not exceeding 70*l.* and take their Note for it, and to exchange the Note of 6400*l.* for their Notes. The Names of the Persons to whom the Notes were to be made payable were then to be changed; for the Stratagem was, to make Use of the Names of Persons that dealt at the several Shops, in order to gain Credit to the Transaction. Therefore the Names of two Honourable Persons, well known at Mr. Hoare's, were pitched upon; and the new Direction which the Prisoner gave to Rumsey was, to take one of Mr. Hoare's Notes for 4300*l.* payable to Sir Richard Grosvenor or Bearer; and another for 2100*l.* payable to Sir John Hynde Cotton or Bearer; and there also if he was asked to give in his Name, Thomas Fowler. When it was near dark, Rumsey went to Mr. Hoare's, and exactly pursued his Orders. They made him out a small Note for the Cash, and gave such Credit to Mr. Gibson's Name, as to give him the Notes he desired, in lieu of the 6400*l.* Note; all which Mr. Rumsey delivered immediately to Mr. Hales, who waited for him at a Fruit-stall not far from the Shop.

Gentlemen, Mr. Hales being now possessed of three Notes of Mr. Hoare's, one for 70*l.* another for 2100*l.* and a third for 4300*l.* the next Part of his Scheme was to negotiate and exchange them for other Notes from Hand to Hand, in order to entangle the Affair, and make it difficult to trace out the Cheat: Therefore his next Orders to Rumsey were, to carry the Note for 4300*l.* payable to Sir Richard Grosvenor or Bearer, to Mr. Brassey's, and exchange it for smaller Notes. Rumsey went thither that Night, and took four smaller Notes of Mr. Brassey's in lieu of Mr. Hoare's, viz. two of 1000*l.* each, one of 1200*l.* and another of 1100*l.* But though these Notes of Mr. Brassey's were given out on Saturday Sept. 7th at Night, they were made to bear Date on Monday the 9th; because, it being late in the Evening, the Cash-Book was made up for that Day. These four new Notes Mr. Rumsey delivered to Mr. Hales, who waited for him again at a very small Distance from Mr. Brassey's Shop.

The next Part of the Scheme was to change these Notes into negotiable Securities equal to Cash, in which there was probably a double View; partly to intricate the Affair still further, and partly for the greater Convenience of carrying off the Fruits of their Iniquity, when that should become necessary: Therefore the Prisoner sent Rumsey to Mr. John Hals, a Broker in Exchange-Alley, and directed him to acquaint him, that he came from Mr. Samuel Palmer, in Mansel-Street, Goodman's-Fields, with Orders to buy South-Sea and India Bonds to the Value of 3400*l.* against Monday Morning following.

Thus the Matter rested till Monday the 9th of September: But on the Sunday the Prisoner was not wanting in making his Preparations. He then appointed one Robert Hall, his Taylor, to meet him at Lloyd's Coffee-house in Lombard-Street, at Eight of the Clock the next Morning, without letting him into the Secret of what he was to do. Hall went accordingly, and there found one Samuel Lee waiting for Mr. Hales; an Instrument made use of by the Prisoner in another Transaction, which will one Day appear as rank a Forgery as this. About Nine Hales came, and gave to Hall Mr. Brassey's Note for 1200*l.* directing him at the same Time to go and receive 650*l.* in Guineas, and have it indorsed off. He told Hall, that if he was asked, he should tell them he lived in the Hay-Market, or any where else except the real Place of his Dwelling, and that his Name was John Roberts. So here is another sham Name and Place of Abode. He obeyed these Orders, received the Money, not in Gold, but in three Bank-Notes; and when the Persons in Mr. Brassey's Shop inquired his Name, he told them John Roberts. Whilst Hall was in the Shop, he observed that Mr. Hales walked by; so jealous was he of his Agents, or at least so vigilant to see how Things succeeded. Hall delivered the Bank-Notes, together with Mr. Brassey's Note, on which the 650*l.* was indorsed off, at Lloyd's Coffee-house; and afterwards met him again at Janeway's Coffee-house in Cornhill. There Hales returned these Bank-Notes to Hall, and ordered him to go to the Bank, and there receive the Money upon them in Gold. Mr.

Hales was still so jealous or impatient, that whilst Hall was at the Bank receiving the Money, he took Occasion to come in there upon Pretence of changing a Guinea, and taking no Notice of Hall, went away; after which Hall went with him to a Tavern, and paid him the 650*l.* which he received at the Bank.

Gentlemen, thus far the Design succeeded well. Here are several good Notes obtained, and some Cash got, without Discovery: But the Occasion of that will arise out of the Part which Rumsey was to act on the Monday Morning.

Gentlemen, you observe there are two Notes of Mr. Hoare's behind, whereof no Account hath been yet given, viz. that of 70*l.* and that of 2100*l.* payable to Sir John Hynde Cotton, to put off which Mr. Rumsey was employed. It will appear, that Mr. Hales kept Rumsey continually with him, and lodged him in his House on Saturday and Sunday; and on Monday Morning, when he went into the City, brought Rumsey with him, took Care to shew him Mr. Alderman Hankey's Shop, and directed him to exchange these two Notes for 70*l.* and 2100*l.* for Mr. Hankey's Notes. Rumsey went to the Shop, and they having no Difficulty about exchanging Mr. Hoare's Notes, accepted them, and gave him two of their own, one for 1100*l.* and another for 1050*l.* both payable to Samuel Palmer or Bearer; and the remaining 20*l.* was paid in Money. As to the Note for 1100*l.* the whole was received upon that at Mr. Alderman Hankey's the same Day, by a Person who called himself Samuel Lane.

Gentlemen, the next Part of the Transaction relates to the South-Sea and India Bonds for 3400*l.* which had been ordered to be procured by Hals the Broker. On Monday Morning Rumsey received the Money of Mr. Hales, with Directions to carry it to Hals, and pay for these Bonds. Whilst Rumsey was gone to transact this, it appears that Mr. Hales was upon this Occasion also uneasy and impatient, thought Rumsey stayed too long, and sent a Porter for him to Hals's Office, by the Name of Thomas Fowler; and that Rumsey answered to that Name, and went along with the Porter.

Gentlemen, we shall next produce to you the Account made up by Mr. Hals, or Mr. Cole his Partner, which will appear to have been made out in these feigned Names, Samuel Palmer, Esq; per Thomas Fowler; whereas no such Persons had any thing to do in the Transaction, but the whole was negotiated by Hales and Rumsey. And it will be proved, that whenever the Prisoner sent Rumsey upon any of these Errands, he considered the Questions which were likely to be asked, and gave him Instructions how to make proper Answers, and some of them in Writing.

While these Things were transacting, the Accident happened that led to the Discovery. About Eleven o'Clock on Monday Morning, Mr. Humphreys, a Servant of Mr. Hoare and his Partners, who carries out Notes and receives Money abroad, carried the Note for 6400*l.* to Mr. Gibson's, and, Mr. Phillips the Cash-keeper being abroad, left it with Mr. Cramlington, another of the Servants, with Directions to pay the Money upon it to Mr. Bromfield at the Bank, who was to place it to Mr. Hoare's Account. When Mr. Phillips came Home, he was surprized to find such a Note with Mr. Gibson's Hand to it; the Note not of his own Writing, though it is always his Practice to write the Body of his Notes as well as the Subscription. And no Notice having been given of it by Mr. Gibson, upon this he conceived a Suspicion, and resolved not to pay it till he had first spoke to Mr. Jacomb. The Note was shewn to Mr. Jacomb, who, upon finding out the Rasure, and observing the other Circumstances which I at first mentioned to you, immediately suspected it to be a Forgery, and took Methods for the Discovery. He found out, that one of Mr. Hoare's Notes had been exchanged for Bank-Notes, and traced out the Numbers; upon which Notice was immediately given at the Bank, that if any of those Notes were brought for Payment, they should be stopped, and the Person secured. It happened soon after this, that Mr. Hales, designing to get the Remainder of the Effects into his Pocket, carried Rumsey within Sight of the Bank, (who was so ignorant a Person, that he asked him whether it was a Church) and directed Rumsey to receive Money there on two Bank-Notes, each for 200*l.* Part of the Bank-Notes given out by Mr. Brassey; and thereupon the Officers of the Bank stopped Rumsey, and inquired into the Matter. Mr. Rumsey was first interrogated how he came by these Notes; and after much Hesitation and Difficulty, at last said, he had them from a Gentleman that stayed for him at Robin's Coffee-house in the Old-Jewry. Upon this they sent a Constable, and found Mr. Hales there, having in his Hand Mr. Brassey's Note for 1100*l.* This Note he endeavoured to conceal, but was prevented. They brought him to the Bank, and upon Search found about him the very Effects which were the whole Produce of Mr. Hoare's three Notes, except about the Sum of _____ which was wanting. He was asked, how he came by them, and by the Note signed with Mr. Gibson's Name, payable to Watson, with which he procured them. The Account he gave was, that he had them from one Mr. Samuel Palmer: But he there declared, that all the Effects that he had about him were the Produce of this Note, and wrote down in a Paper how he had disposed of the rest.

Gentlemen, this will appear to you to be the Nature of the Case; and upon this Mr. Hales was committed, and Rumsey secured. And, Gentlemen, I apprehend, that, though this be a long Series of Facts, yet it will amount to a clear Evidence against the Prisoner. No reasonable Man can expect Proof to be made of the very Act of Forgery. Such Iniquities are Deeds of Darkness, and those who commit them do not call Witnesses to attest the Performance: But next to that we have the strongest Evidence. What arises out of the Note itself is of great Weight: The Circumstance of the Rasure and Alterations, which I will not repeat: The Body of the Note not of Mr. Gibson's Writing, whereas it is his constant Practice to write the whole Note with his own Hand, and that too in a different Form of Expression from the present Note: There is no Person of the Name of George Watson, with whom he hath any Dealings. Another Circumstance material to be taken into Consideration is the immediate exchanging all these Effects, without any apparent Occasion. One Banker's Note exchanged for another, Mr. Hoare's, Mr. Alderman Hankey's, Mr. Brassey's — All of them Persons of great Credit — What Account can be given, without any Reason appearing, why one one of these Gentlemen's Notes should be exchanged for another, but to darken and intricate the Affair?

Add to this the Consideration of the Persons concerned: Mr. Hales, a Bankrupt not discharged, employing such Agents as I have described to you; himself lurking about in a concealed Manner; all these Circumstances shew the Man was doing a wicked Thing, which would not bear the Light, nor his appearing in it. But what amounts to a Demonstration, is his directing these Agents to take upon them feigned Names and Places, to dress themselves in Masquerade, and to take Notes in the Names of other Persons, who were absolute Strangers to the Transaction.

As this is Evidence of the Prisoner's publishing a forged Note knowingly, it is Evidence likewise that he forged it: For, if a Person hath a forged Note in his Custody, and taketh such Methods to put it off and give it a Currency, it is a strong Proof against him of the Forgery itself; and properly turns it upon the Defendant to give a clear Account how he received it, upon what Consideration, and in what Way of Business; more especially in this Case, where the Note is for so great a Sum of Money, that no body can pretend to be at a Loss or under any Difficulty to shew how they came by it.

Gentlemen, when the Witnessess shall have given you an Account of these Things upon their Oaths, I apprehend there can remain no Doubt but the Charge of Forgery against the Prisoner is just, and this Prosecution necessary.

Call Philip Booth, who was sworn.

Mr. Solicitor-General, (Hon. Mr. Talbot.) Mr. Booth, do you know the Prisoner at the Bar, Mr. Hales?

Mr. Booth. Yes, Sir, I do know him.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How long have you been acquainted with him?

Mr. Booth. Ever since the Year 1703.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Can you remember the Time — how was he brought up at that Time?

Mr. Booth. I remember him at the Shop of Sir Stephen Evance several Years before their Failure.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you remember any thing of a franked Letter?

Mr. Booth. About a Year and a half ago he came to me, desiring me (Mr. Gibson being a Member of Parliament, and his other Friends out of Town) that I would do him the Favour to give him two Franks. He brought two Sheets of Paper; I desired Mr. Gibson to frank them, who wrote on them, To Robert Booth, Esq; Bristol. Free Tho. Gibson.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How did he write his Name?

Mr. Booth. Tho. Gibson.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What did you do with them?

Mr. Booth. I gave them to Mr. William Hales.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Sir, look on that Note. Are you acquainted with the Hand of Mr. Gibson? See whether you take any Part of the Note to be of his Hand-writing?

Mr. Booth. The Name is his.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Is there any other Part of the Note, which you take to be his Hand-writing?

Mr. Booth. The FI take to be Part of the Word Free — the F I take to be Mr. Gibson's Hand-writing.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What is the r? Look carefully upon it.

Mr. Booth. The r may be Mr. Gibson's; but the o seemeth to be crouded in between the F and the r.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do they seem to be of the same Hand, or of a different one?

Mr. Booth. Crouded in irregularly.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Are they of the same Ink?

Mr. Booth. I take them to be of a different Ink. The r is his Letter; but I take it there is some Alteration: Here is a plain Rasure, where the Letters my are written.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What Distance from the r?

Mr. Booth. The Rasure is probably where the two e's stood.

Mr. Sol. Gen. The my, and the Word following, do you take them to be Mr. Gibson's Writing?

Mr. Booth. No, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Take Notice of the Fold.

Mr. Booth. This seems to be the Fold of a Letter.

Mr. Sol. Gen. If you take that to be the Fold of a Letter; Is that the usual Place for the folding of a Letter?

Mr. Booth. There must be some Alteration on the left-hand Corner.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Make your own Observations. Look on the Top of it; Doth that seem the Fold of the Paper as at first, or cut or torn off from any other Paper?

Mr. Booth. I believe it is not the original Fold of the Paper as it is now.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Look on that Side next me; Doth it seem cut or torn off?

Mr. Booth. Yes, it is not the original Selvedge of the Paper.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Is the original Selvedge of the Paper in any other Part? Is it cut off, or the original Selvedge?

Mr. Booth. The original Selvedge is not there.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Is it cut off?

Mr. Booth. I cannot tell; I query, whether cut or torn off.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Have you lived with Mr. Gibson long?

Mr. Booth. Eight Years.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Have you seen any Notes of his giving?

Mr. Booth. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What is his common Manner of signing Notes?

Mr. Booth. For myself and Co.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Read that Note, and give an Account to the Jury, wherein you think it agrees with his ordinary Way of writing Notes, and wherein it differs.

Mr. Booth. Mr. Gibson generally begins with I promise to pay, and concludes his Notes For Self and Co. but never mentions Value received.

Mr. Just. Page. Consider of what Avail this is to prove that it is not written by Mr. Gibson, because it is different from the Manner of his Stile. It is certainly allowed by all not to be a Note written by Mr. Gibson.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, this is a Forgery, the Proof whereof depends upon a vast Variety of Circumstances, and every one of them is corroborating.

Mr. Just. Page. I submit it, whether it be of any Avail or not; the Cause will be long enough.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, this is one Circumstance. We know not what Reply they will make, make, and this is our Time to give in our Evidence — We hope therefore your Lordship will bear with us, and permit us to take our own Method.

Mr. Just. Page. Go on then your own Way.

Mr. Sol. Gen. We shall ask but one Question more; Those Notes that are signed by Mr. Gibson, of whose Hand-writing are they?

Mr. Booth. All his own.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you ever see any Promissory Note signed by Mr. Gibson, where the Body of it was wrote by any other Hand?

Mr. Booth. Never, to the best of my Knowledge.

Mr. Sol. Gen. As to Self and Partners, do you ever remember his writing in his Notes these Words, or always Self and Company?

Mr. Booth. Self and Company always.

Mr. Sol. Gen. In what Part of the Note? In a straight Line, or under?

Mr. Booth. In a straight Line.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know that he ever signed a Promissory Note written by any other?

Mr. Booth. Never, to my Knowledge.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How long have you been with him?

Mr. Booth. Eight Years.

Mr. Sol. Gen. In what Place?

Mr. Booth. Book-keeper.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you see the Note when first brought to Mr. Gibson's? Had it the same Creases in it?

Mr. Booth. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. One Question more I would ask; Are the Letter o, and the Words following, of the same Ink?

Mr. Booth. Here seems to be an accidental Dash of the Pen, as if the Hand shook.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I apprehend the Gentleman mistakes my Question: Sir, I ask, whether you take the Letter o to be of the same Ink with the Word my and the following Words? Sir, I desire you will look once more distinctly on it, and tell us whether you apprehend the Letter o to be of the same Ink with the Word my and the following Words?

Mr. Booth. There seem to be some Fragments of a Letter?

Mr. Sol. Gen. Might there be the Fragments of the Letter e?

Mr. Booth. There are the Remains of the Letter e.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then I ask you, whether these Remains of the Letter e, appear of the same Ink with the Word my and following Words?

Mr. Booth. No, nothing like it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You have observed (I suppose) his Manner of Franking — Pray, Is it Free or Frank?

Mr. Booth. Free always.

Mr. Sol. Gen. One Question more; Have you observed, in his general Way, that the Space between the F and the r is so great? Suppose the o was out, would there be more Room between the F and the r than Mr. Gibson usually makes? You seem to be a very sensible Person, Sir; Is it further between the F and the r, than the Distance that Mr. Gibson usually makes?

Mr. Booth. I believe that he might make that Distance of Space, but cannot say that he always doth so; he often writes close.

Mr. Sol. Gen. This Frank (I think you say) was directed To Mr. Robert Booth, Bristol; I ask you, Whether that Direction was not written over the Words Free Thomas Gibson?

Mr. Booth. Yes, it was.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What Distance was there?

Mr. Booth. It was on a large Sheet of Paper: The Direction was very small, being only To Mr. Robert Booth, Bristol; and could not fill up a large Space.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What Distance do you think between the Top of the Word Free, and the Bottom of these Words of Supercription immediately over it?

Mr. Booth. I believe there might be an Inch.

Mr. Sol. Gen. The Question that I ask is, Whether, after this Direction To Mr. Robert Booth, Bristol, Free Thomas Gibson was not perpendicularly?

Mr. Booth. I cannot say on what Part of the Letter.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was Free Thomas Gibson wrote so much on the Side, that it was possible that any other Words should be wrote above it?

Mr. Booth. I believe that it might be so.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Here is a Direction To Mr. Robert Booth, Bristol; Where was the Word Bristol? Was it towards the left Hand, or was it towards the Bottom of the Supercription?

Mr. Booth. I cannot say how much to the Bottom; but I know that Mr. Gibson generally wrote loose.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Whereabout was the Word Free wrote?

Mr. Booth. Towards the left-hand Corner, and Bristol towards the right-hand Corner.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I ask one Question more; Did Mr. Gibson ever give Franks, without writing himself the Supercription?

Mr. Booth. I know not but that sometimes he may.

Mr. Strange. I desire he may fold it thus, (producing a Sheet of Paper which he had folded) This half Sheet as large as you can: — Suppose you see where the Name Thomas Gibson is wrote, I inquire whether, when the Direction was over it, there was Room to tear off such a Paper as this, (shewing the Note) and have none of the Direction? You see the Distance from Free Thomas Gibson to the Top of the Paper; Was the Folding so large, that there might be the Direction torn off, and yet this (the Note) remain?

Mr. Booth. As I remember, it was a very large Sheet of Paper, and very largely folded. This I remember the more particularly, because Mr. Hales hath endeavoured the same Thing since, and I have some of them by me. I believe the Paper was large enough that there might be the Direction torn off.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, will you look where Mr. Gibson's Name is wrote, and tell me whether you apprehend that End is torn or cut?

Mr. Booth. This was the torn End, and the other answers exactly.

Mr. Robert Booth called and sworn.

Mr. At. Gen. Sir, have you ever had any Letter by the Post from Mr. William Hales?

Mr. R. Booth. No, Sir; I never had any Letter from him by the General Post.

Mr.

Mr. At. Gen. Can you recollect that you ever had a Letter from any body, franked with the Name of Thomas Gibson?

Mr. R. Booth. I never had, I am positively sure of that.

Mr. At. Gen. Do you live at Bristol?

Mr. R. Booth. Yes, Sir.

Mr. At. Gen. Do you know of any other Person there of your Name?

Mr. R. Booth. None at all.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, had you ever any Letter from Mr. Hales, either franked or otherwise?

Mr. R. Booth. No, nor ever any Correspondence with him.

Thomas Rumsfey called and sworn.

The Note proposed to be read, and read accordingly.

August 27, 1728.

I promise to pay to George Watson, Esq; or Bearer, the Sum of six thousand four hundred Pounds, at Demand, the like Value received. For myself and Partners, £. 6400.

THO. GIBSON.

Then the Note was handed about amongst the Jury.

Mr. At. Gen. Now, Gentlemen, it is proper for you to take Notice of the Observations that have been made by the Witnesses upon the Appearance and View of the Note, the Size and Folding of the Paper, the Rasure, the Difference of the Ink, the Letter o in the Word For, and the other Letters. I desire that you will look on it, and judge whether the Side of the Paper next to the Name hath been torn off from something else, or is as it was originally. We shall, in the next Place, shew the Use that was made of this Note.—Mr. Rumsfey, do you know the Defendant, William Hales?

Rumsfey. Yes, Sir.

Mr. At. Gen. How long have you known him?

Rumsfey. I knew him above a Twelve-month ago.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you see him at all in September last?

Rumsfey. Yes, Sir.

Mr. At. Gen. What Trade or Business are you of yourself?

Rumsfey. I have been at Sea ever since six Years of Age, except when in Harbour.

Mr. At. Gen. Well, Sir; What Time was it in September that you saw Mr. Hales, and what Business did he employ you in?

Rumsfey. I saw him every Day.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you see him September the 7th?

Rumsfey. Yes, Sir.

Mr. At. Gen. What Day of the Week was it?

Rumsfey. Saturday.

Mr. At. Gen. What did he say to you?

Rumsfey. He bid me go into the City, and to dress me in these Cloaths.

Mr. At. Gen. What Cloaths had you on before?

Rumsfey. A lightish-coloured Coat, with a red Waistcoat and Breeches.

Mr. At. Gen. Did he say any thing about your Hat?

VOL. X.

Rumsfey. When he spoke to me to go into the City with him, I had then a laced Hat on, a new Hat, with a broad open Lace.

Mr. At. Gen. What did he say to you about it?

Rumsfey. He told me, he had rather I should wear a plain one, and asked if I had one; I told him, No; he then desired me to take his own.

Mr. At. Gen. What Time of the Day was this?

Rumsfey. About Four or Five in the Afternoon, as near as I can guess.

Mr. At. Gen. Did he tell you on what Business you were to go into the City?

Rumsfey. No, Sir.

Mr. At. Gen. Whence did you set out?

Rumsfey. From his own House in Duke-Street, Westminster.

Mr. At. Gen. When you came into the Strand, did you do any thing there?

Rumsfey. He went into a Shop, and bought me a Pocket-Book. (Produces the Pocket-Book.)

Mr. At. Gen. Let us see it. — When you had bought that, where did you go afterwards?

Rumsfey. To Holborn, to a Place where they sell Perukes.

Mr. At. Gen. Was it Middle-Row?

Rumsfey. I believe it might be; but I never was there before.

Mr. At. Gen. Did he tell you he would present you with one?

Rumsfey. Yes, Sir.

Mr. At. Gen. What Sort of one was it?

Rumsfey. I have it in my Pocket. (Pulls out a dark-coloured Peruke.)

Mr. At. Gen. Put it on; I do not observe that you wear now a dark Peruke; Did you use to wear one?

Rumsfey. No, Sir.

Mr. At. Gen. What Peruke had you on before, when he made you change it?

Rumsfey. This, Sir, that I have here, (a light-coloured Peruke.)

Mr. At. Gen. After he had fitted you with a Peruke, whither did he carry you?

Rumsfey. To John's Coffee-house in Sheer-Lane. He did not tell me whither we were going, nor for what.

Mr. At. Gen. What happened there?

Rumsfey. We went into a back Room, and had Pen and Ink brought us. Immediately a Porter came in.

Mr. At. Gen. Did the Porter speak to you?

Rumsfey. No; he asked the Porter, if he wanted me? He said, Yes. The Porter produced a Letter directed to me, and he bid me open it.

Mr. At. Gen. What did you find in it?

Rumsfey. I found a Note for 6400*l.* payable to George Watson, Esq; or Bearer.

Mr. At. Gen. Look on that; tell us whether you believe that to be the Note?

Rumsfey. Yes, Sir; I take that to be the same Note, to the best of my Knowledge.

Mr. At. Gen. What else did you find in the Letter?

Rumsfey. I found written *Lady Harriot Elliott 4300*l.* Sir John Hynde Cotton 2100*l.* payable to them or Bearer.*

Mr. At. Gen. Where was it written?

Rumsfey. In the Body of the Letter.

Mr. At. Gen. Was there any thing wrote to you in the Letter?

Rumsey. No, Sir; I remember only these two Names and Sums.

Mr. At. Gen. What did he order you to write under these Names?

Rumsey. James Moreton or Bearer.

Mr. At. Gen. After he had bid you write this Name, what did he do with the Paper?

Rumsey. Tore these Names off.

Mr. At. Gen. What did he do with the rest of the Letter?

Rumsey. I know not.

Mr. At. Gen. When he had torn off these Names, together with what you had added, what did he do with that Part?

Rumsey. He put it in the Pocket-Book, with the Note of 6400*l.* and a 40*l.* Note and two other Notes. He then ordered me to go to Mr. Snow and Poltock's Shop, to give them the 40*l.* Note and the two other Notes, and to take their Note, payable to James Moreton or Bearer.

Mr. At. Gen. For what Sum?

Rumsey. I cannot tell exactly the Sum, but suppose it about 70*l.* If I was asked, what Moreton, I was to tell them that he lived at the upper End of Bond-Street; but I never knew him. He ordered me to desire for the 6400*l.* Note, their Notes for 4300*l.* payable to Lady Harriot Elliott, and 2100*l.* payable to Sir John Hynde Cotton, or Bearer.

Mr. At. Gen. What further Directions did he give you?

Rumsey. If my Name was asked, he bid me say that it was Thomas Fowler, or any other; it was an indifferent Thing, and I might make use of any Name but my own. He had been so very kind to me, and I had so good an Opinion that he designed no Ill, that I readily did as he ordered me.

Mr. At. Gen. After he had given you this Pocket-Book with these Notes and Instructions, whither did you go?

Rumsey. To Mr. Snow and Poltock's.

Mr. At. Gen. Whither did Mr. Hales go?

Rumsey. A little Way to shew me the House.

Mr. At. Gen. What happened at this Shop?

Rumsey. I asked for their Note for the small Notes, which they readily gave me. I then produced the other Note, and desired their Notes; the Gentleman said, he did not care to accept it, because it was not all of Mr. Gibson's own Hand-writing.

Mr. At. Gen. Did he mention any other Reason?

Rumsey. I remember not.

Mr. At. Gen. Did he ask your Name?

Rumsey. I think he did, and I told him Thomas Fowler.

Mr. At. Gen. Did any thing further happen there?

Rumsey. No, Sir.

Mr. At. Gen. What did you do then?

Rumsey. I went back; Mr. Hales met me a little Way off, on that Side of Temple-Bar next the Shop.

Mr. At. Gen. Had he appointed to meet you there?

Rumsey. No, Sir.

Mr. At. Gen. Was it within View of the Shop?

Rumsey. Yes, Sir.

Mr. At. Gen. What did you say to him, when you came back?

Rumsey. He asked me what I had got, and I told him; then we went back to John's Coffee-house, where I gave him the Note; he then bid me write, instead of Lady Harriot Elliott, Sir Richard Grosvenor.

Mr. At. Gen. On the same Paper, or another?

Rumsey. I cannot say.

Mr. At. Gen. Did he bid you strike out the Name Lady Harriot Elliott?

Rumsey. No; but write on a plain Paper, *To Sir Richard Grosvenor 4300*l.* to Sir John Hynde Cotton 2100*l.* payable to them or Bearer.*

Mr. At. Gen. After this, what further Directions did he give you?

Rumsey. He ordered me to go to Mr. Hoare's in Fleet-Street; he went opposite to the Shop, and shewed me the Shop.

Mr. At. Gen. What Time of the Afternoon was it?

Rumsey. A little before it was dark.

Mr. At. Gen. What o'Clock?

Rumsey. Half an Hour or three Quarters before it was dark.

Mr. At. Gen. What Instructions did he give you to observe at that Shop?

Rumsey. To receive for this Note their Notes for 4300*l.* to Sir Richard Grosvenor, and 2100*l.* to Sir John Hynde Cotton, payable to them or to the Bearers.

Mr. At. Gen. Did he give you Directions about taking any other Note?

Rumsey. I have a Notion of some other Note, but I cannot say positively what it was, but it did not exceed 70*l.*

Mr. At. Gen. Did he give you any thing in Notes or Cash?

Rumsey. Much the same as before.

Mr. At. Gen. You say you had a Note from Mr. Poltock; Did Mr. Hales return that to you?

Rumsey. I cannot say positively; but it was that, or some other Notes, not exceeding 70*l.*

Mr. At. Gen. Did he give you any Directions as to your own Name?

Rumsey. The same as before, Thomas Fowler.

Mr. At. Gen. When you went to this Shop, what Peruke had you on?

Rumsey. The dark one, and the other in my Pocket.

Mr. At. Gen. What passed at Mr. Hoare's Shop?

Rumsey. I received their Notes, one for 4300*l.* payable to Sir Richard Grosvenor or Bearer, the other for 2100*l.* payable to Sir John Hynde Cotton or Bearer.

Mr. At. Gen. What did you give for them?

Rumsey. The Note of 6400*l.*

Mr. At. Gen. What for the smaller Note?

Rumsey. I cannot tell.

Mr. At. Gen. For what Sum was that?

Rumsey. I remember not, but it did not exceed 70*l.*

Mr. At. Gen. Where did you find Mr. Hales?

Rumsey. He told me he would wait for me at a Fruit-stall at the End of a Court about six Doors further. I went thither, and delivered the Notes.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you deliver him the Notes at the Fruit-stall?

Rumsey.

Rumsey. I cannot be positive whether there, or at the Coffee-house.

Mr. At. Gen. Do you know the Court where the Fruit-stall was? Was it Mitre-Court?

Rumsey. I know not, not being acquainted with the Town.

Mr. At. Gen. How far from Mr. Hoare's?

Rumsey. About six Doors.

Mr. At. Gen. When you gave him the Notes, did you deliver them with the Pocket-Book, or without?

Rumsey. Pocket-Book and all.

Mr. At. Gen. Where did you go afterwards?

Rumsey. He took a Coach, and bid the Coachman drive to the Royal-Exchange.

Mr. At. Gen. Whither did he go when he came there?

Rumsey. He went out of the Coach, went a little Way with me to Janeway's Coffee-house, called for Pen, Ink and Paper, and bid me write 1200*l.* 1100*l.* 1000*l.* 1000*l.* to Samuel Palmer or Bearer.

Mr. At. Gen. What Instructions did he give you about Samuel Palmer?

Rumsey. To say that he lived in Mansel-Street, in Goodman's-Fields.

Mr. At. Gen. After you had done this, whither did you go next?

Rumsey. Next he carried me to Mr. Woodward's, a Banker in Exchange-Alley. It was then dark. He bid me desire their Notes for these Sums, payable to Samuel Palmer or Bearer, in Lieu of the 4300*l.* Note of Mr. Hoare's.

Mr. At. Gen. What happened there?

Rumsey. They said they could not do it.

Mr. At. Gen. Where did you go next?

Rumsey. I went to him, who was close by the Door. He took me to Mr. Brassey's, bade me desire their Notes for the same Sum, in lieu of Mr. Hoare's Note payable to Sir Richard Grosvenor. They gave me the Notes; they asked me, what Mr. Palmer it was? I said, that he lived in Mansel-Street, Goodman's-Fields.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you say any thing further of him?

Rumsey. I think not; if I did, it was what Mr. Hales directed me.

Mr. At. Gen. Did they ask your Name?

Rumsey. I am not positive; if they did, I told them as elsewhere, Thomas Fowler.

Mr. At. Gen. Whither did you carry the Notes?

Rumsey. I carried them to Mr. Hales.

Mr. At. Gen. Where was he?

Rumsey. He was by a Shop at the Corner of a Court; he was in the Court, and came to me there. This was a little beyond Mr. Hals's Door. He bid me ask the Price of South-Sea Bonds, and ask them, whether they could get 1000*l.* worth by Monday Morning? They said, they believed they could. We then went to Janeway's Coffee-house.

Mr. At. Gen. What did he then?

Rumsey. He called for something, paid for it, went to Stocks-Market, thence took Coach, and went Home.

Mr. At. Gen. Where did you go? Did you leave him there?

Rumsey. No, I supped with him.

Mr. At. Gen. Did he make any further Appointment with you?

Rumsey. He bid me be ready on Monday Morning in the same Cloaths.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Where was you?

Rumsey. I was at his House; he lodged me there.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did any thing else happen on Saturday?

Rumsey. No, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was you to put on the same Hat and Peruke?

Rumsey. Yes, Sir; and he ordered the Man to comb and powder it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. On Monday Morning did you do as directed?

Rumsey. Yes, and he then told out twenty Broad Pieces and ten Guineas.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Those Notes that you received at Mr. Brassey's, do you know the Date of them?

Rumsey. Yes, Sir; Monday Morning, September the 9th.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What did you with them?

Rumsey. I delivered them to Mr. Hales.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What did you do on Monday Morning?

Rumsey. He then walked to Janeway's Coffee-house; he did not tell me whither he was going, nor what I was to do.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What happened there?

Rumsey. He read the News, bid me call for what I wanted, he would pay for it; I drank two Dishes of Chocolate.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What did you there?

Rumsey. He told me, that it was too soon to go to Mr. Hals's for the Bonds, it being then between Eight and Nine o'Clock; so he told me, that he would send me with some Notes to Mr. Alderman Hankey's.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What Directions did he give you?

Rumsey. He went opposite to Mr. Alderman Hankey's.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What Notes did he give you?

Rumsey. One Note of 2100*l.* another of Mr. Hoare's for 70*l.* payable to Samuel Palmer or Bearer.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What did you do after you received these Directions?

Rumsey. I went to Janeway's Coffee-house, and there delivered the Notes to him.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But first did you not carry them to Alderman Hankey's?

Rumsey. I got them changed there, delivered them to Mr. Hales at Janeway's Coffee-house, one of 1050*l.* and another of 1100*l.* both payable to Samuel Palmer or Bearer, and 20*l.* in Money. He gave me these again, and the 20*l.* in Money.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What did you do with the Money?

Rumsey. He bid me keep it in my Pocket, with the rest of the Money that I had received of him. He then sent to Mr. Hals's for the Bonds.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What Quantity?

Rumsey. A thousand Pounds worth.

Mr. Sol. Gen. In whose Name did you buy them?

Rumsey. In Mr. Samuel Palmer's.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Who directed you to buy them?

Rumsey. Mr. Hales.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What Name did you take?

Rumsey. Thomas Fowler, as before.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What did you do with the Bonds?

Rumsey.

Rumsey. I delivered them to Mr. Hales; he sent me to see for 2400*l.* worth more; I came back and told him, that I could get no more than 400*l.* worth more.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What then?

Rumsey. He sent me for 2000*l.* of India Bonds, and gave me Notes to pay for them all.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know what the Notes were that he gave you?

Rumsey. I cannot tell; but I believe that they were some of the Notes that I had received before.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What did you do with them?

Rumsey. I went and bought the Bonds. The Notes coming to more, they gave me the Balance in Money; and I desired them to give me a Bag, which they did.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was there any Account made up by Mr. Hals?

Rumsey. His Clerk cast it up on a Paper, and gave me a Note what they came to.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Have you that Note by you?

Rumsey. No; I gave it with the Bonds to him.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What was you directed next?

Rumsey. I told him, that I was to go to Mr. Edward Jasper to receive my Pay. He bid me put it off. I told him that I could not. He bid me, when I had received it, to return to him. I went and received it, 35*l.* odd Money. I then came to him, and desired him to take the remaining Money. He said, that he had not Time to reckon it, but bid me come to him at Janeway's. He bid me not go through Fenchurch-Street.

Mr. Sol. Gen. For what Reason?

Rumsey. He did not tell me the Reason.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was any Shop that you was at there?

Rumsey. Yes, Mr. Alderman Hankey's.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you observe his Directions?

Rumsey. Yes, I came back to Janeway's Coffee-house through Leadenball-Street.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was he there?

Rumsey. Not at first, but I stayed for him.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What Time of the Day was it?

Rumsey. About Two o'Clock, Monday Noon.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What Directions did he give you then?

Rumsey. He bid me dine with him. I thought he was going Home directly; but he turned aside to the Bank, which I asked him if it was a Church. He told me, it was the Bank. He gave me two Notes of 200*l.* each, bidding me, when I had received the Money, to come to him at Robin's Coffee-house in the Old-Jewry. He peeped through the Sash-Door, and directed me to a Gentleman at the left-hand Side. I went to him, who directed me to the other Side. They bid me stay a little. One of them went out and called a Constable, and stopt me.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What did they ask you?

Rumsey. I was so confused and surprized, that I could not give a sensible Answer.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Had you any Name given you to go by at the Bank, if asked your Name there?

Rumsey. Yes, Sir; at every Place I was to say Thomas Fowler.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I would have you recollect yourself, whether, when you was receiving the Money, Mr. Hales came in to do any thing?

Rumsey. No, not at all.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Afterwards was you present when Mr. Hales was brought in?

Rumsey. I saw him carried up Stairs, but spake not to him.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was you present at his Examination?

Rumsey. No, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you receive any more Money than what you have mentioned?

Rumsey. No, Sir, nor knew nothing till he gave me Directions.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You say, that they seized you at the Bank; Did you acquaint them where the Person was that gave you the Notes?

Rumsey. I told them at Robin's Coffee-house in the Alley near the Bank.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did they go to find him according to your Directions?

Rumsey. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you see them bring any body back in Custody?

Rumsey. They brought him secured, and carried him up Stairs.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you see him?

Rumsey. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was that Person, that you saw in the Room, the same that gave you the Bills (that you brought to the Bank) at the Coffee-house?

Rumsey. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, will you look on that Note? Is that the Note that you received of Mr. Hales?

Rumsey. Yes, I take it to be the same Note; that was for 6400*l.* and the Name was Gibson; it was payable to George Watson, Esq; or Bearer.

Mr. Serj. Darnell. Mr. Rumsey, pray was not you engaged to go a Journey somewhere with Mr. Hales?

Rumsey. He told me on Monday Morning, that he was about going into the Country.

Mr. Serj. Darnell. Where was you to go?

Rumsey. He told me not where; but asked me to ride out with him, and directed me where to get a Pair of Boots.

Mr. Serj. Darnell. On your Oath, was not the Peruke bought for riding in?

Rumsey. No, Sir.

Mr. Serj. Darnell. What was your Apprehension of these Things?

Rumsey. He having been so kind to me, I had a good Opinion of him.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What of this Transaction?

Rumsey. I thought that there was nothing wrong in it.

Mr. Serj. Darnell. When was it that he told you first of his going into the Country?

Rumsey. On Monday.

Mr. Serj. Darnell. Did he not mention it on Saturday?

Rumsey. No, Sir.

Mr. Serj. Darnell. Did not he mention Harlow?

Rumsey. No, Sir.

Mr. Serj. Darnell. You say, that this Note was sent inclosed to you when at John's Coffee-house; Were there no Names in the Letter but those two you mentioned, nor no Directions what to do with it?

Rumsey. No, Sir.

Mr. Serj. Darnell. You say, that you have been acquainted with Mr. Hales ever since the 8th of June; between that and September did you transact Affairs for him?

Rumsey. No; he desired me once before to write a Promissory Note, but no Name to it.

Mr. Serj. Darnell. You say, that you lay at Mr. Hales's House on Saturday Night September the 7th; Did not you lie there the Month before?

Rumsey. I lay there from the 8th of June, or thereabouts.

Mr. Serj. Darnell. Sir, you say, that you went in Disguise; Did any then know you? What Occasion was there for this Disguise?

Mr. Just. Page. A Person in this Town every body may know; therefore it was proper to go in a Disguise that no one might know him in. I find that they would have it thought that these Cloaths (the red Waistcoat and Breeches and Peruke) were for riding out: When you went first, did you go with them?

Rumsey. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Serj. Darnell. When did he talk of riding out?

Rumsey. On Monday Morning he said, he had Business to ride out on Tuesday or Wednesday.

Mr. Serj. Darnell. When you lay at his House on Saturday or Sunday Night, did he bid you be ready on Monday Morning, and have on the same Cloaths?

Rumsey. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Whitaker. Give me leave to propose to the Court a Question, to ask the Witness, whether he had ever been concerned in negotiating Bills, or doing such Business for any body?

Mr. Just. Page. He saith, he never did do any thing for Mr. Hales, but this Job of these Bills, except once writing a Promissory Note.

Mr. Serj. Whitaker. My Lord, that Question was confined to Mr. Hales: But I would desire, that he may be asked the same Question in general.

Mr. Just. Page. No, but he shall not indeed.

Mr. Serj. Whitaker. My Lord, we will now call other Witnesses to confirm the several Steps that were afterwards taken.

Mr. Poltock called and sworn.

Mr. Serj. Whitaker. Sir, look on that Paper; Have you ever seen that before? Tell us who brought it to you?

Mr. Poltock. A young Man on a Saturday came to my Shop; he said that he had Money to pay; he pulled out a Bank-Note for 50*l.* I apprehended that it might be for some Customer. I asked him where the Person lived; he told me about Bond-Street. I looked on the Note, and saw it was signed For Wanly and Company. Afterwards he produced this Note; said he, I have another Note. I looked upon it wistfully, and told him thereupon, that I would not take it. Why not? (said he.) Because (said I) not wrote by Mr. Gibson. It is (said he) signed by him. I told him that I would not meddle with it. He said, it was late, and he should have a good deal of Trouble with it; and was going to shew me some Paper to confirm its being Mr. Gibson's Hand. I told him, that as I would not receive the Note, I would not regard it. He laid before me a Paper with two Names and Sums, Lady Elliott's and another Name.

VOL. X.

Mr. Serj. Whitaker. Pray, Sir, mind the Folds, and see whether or no it is the very same Paper.

Mr. Poltock. Yes; I told the young Man, when he shewed it me, that Mr. Gibson on such a Paper as this would not write a Note for such a Sum; therefore I would not meddle with it.

Mr. Serj. Whitaker. You saw the Witness that was last examined; Is he the same Person that brought you the Note, or not?

Mr. Poltock. If he had the same Wig on, I believe I might know him.

Mr. Serj. Whitaker. Let him put the Wig on. (Rumsey puts on the dark Wig.)

Mr. Poltock. Yes, I verily believe that that is the same Person, though I never saw him before nor since. He was a good genteel young Man, with a dark Wig.

Mr. Serj. Whitaker. What Cloaths had he on?

Mr. Poltock. I cannot directly say, not knowing.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Now we are going to Mr. Hoare's Shop.

Mr. Turner called and sworn.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mr. Turner, look on that Paper; When did you see it first?

Mr. Turner. On Saturday Evening, September the 7th last.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, can you recollect with yourself, who it was that brought it you?

Mr. Turner. Sir, I did not see Mr. Rumsey when he came into the Shop first.

Mr. Richard Hoare called and sworn.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mr. Richard Hoare, pray tell us when you saw that Bill first?

Mr. Hoare. On the 7th of September last, about Seven o'Clock in the Evening. That Gentleman (as I take it) produced Mr. Snow's Note, and a Bank-Note of 25*l.* for which I gave him our Note for 70*l.* After which he produced this Note of Mr. Gibson's Hand, and another Paper, desiring our Notes for that Sum. I had not been long in the Business, and not knowing Mr. Gibson's Hand-writing, called Mr. Turner to transact that Affair, after I had given the 70*l.* Note.

(The Note read.)

Sir John Hynde Cotton 2100*l.*

Mr. Sol. Gen. Whose Hand-writing is this?

Rumsey. It is mine, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you remember what you did with that Note, or where you delivered it?

Rumsey. At Mr. Hoare's.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mr. Turner, will you give us an Account what was done upon the producing that Bill?

Mr. Turner. Mr. Hoare sent for me. I think there lay upon the Counter both the Note Mr. Rumsey brought for 6400*l.* and this little Direction. I made these Notes payable accordingly, knowing that Sir John Hynde Cotton did Business at Mr. Hoare's Shop.

[2 D]

Mr.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Doth he?

Mr. Turner. Yes, Sir, he frequently doth.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Produce the three Notes given at Mr. Hoare's Shop.

Mr. Turner. These are the Notes (producing the Notes) which I gave in Exchange for Mr. Gibson's Note, and the 70*l.* Note Mr. Hoare wrote, and I signed them, and gave them to Mr. Rumsley.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You say, these are the Notes that you gave in Exchange for that Note; Do you know what became of that Bill afterwards?

Mr. Turner. After that I had delivered these Notes, I had this Note (*Mr. Gibson's 6400*l.* Note*) in Exchange, brought into Mr. Hoare's Cash, in lieu of the other.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you send it out?

Mr. Turner. Yes, upon Monday Morning.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Will you give us an Account what was done upon this?

Turner. I know nothing further.

Mr. Sol. Gen. These Notes which you have produced, can you give an Account what became of them, or when they were brought back to Mr. Hoare's?

Mr. Turner. I did nothing further about them.

(The Notes read.)

I promise to pay Sir John Hynde Cotton, or Bearer, two thousand one hundred Pounds, on Demand, for Mess. Benjamin and Henry Hoare and Partner.

WILLIAM TURNER.

Sept. 7th, 1728.

I promise to pay to Sir Richard Grosvenor, or Bearer, four thousand three hundred Pounds, on Demand, for Mess. Benjamin and Henry Hoare and Partner.

WILLIAM TURNER.

I promise to pay James Moreton, Esq; or Bearer, seventy Pounds, on Demand, for Mess. Benjamin and Henry Hoare and Partner.

Sept. 7th, 1728.

WILLIAM TURNER.

Mr. George Lee called and sworn.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Where is it that you live?

Mr. Lee. At Mr. Brassley's in Lombard-Street.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you ever see that Note before? (*Mr. Hoare's Note for 4300*l.)

Mr. Lee. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Upon what Occasion, or when was it?

Mr. Lee. It was on Saturday Sept. 7th brought by Mr. Rumsley to Mr. Brassley's in Lombard-Street, near Seven o'Clock in the Evening.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What passed upon it?

Mr. Lee. Being brought there by him, he pulled a Paper out of his Pocket, desiring four Notes payable to Samuel Palmer. I have three of them by me, and an Account of the other. One was for 1200*l.* two for 1000*l.* each, the other for 1100*l.*

Mr. Sol. Gen. What did you give him them in Exchange for?

Mr. Lee. Mr. Hoare's Note for 4300*l.*

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you ask who Palmer was?

Mr. Lee. He told me that he lived in Mansel-Street, in Goodman's-Fields. I asked him, whether he was a Merchant? He said, that he could not tell. We had a Person dealt with us before of that Name. I asked, whether it was he? He said, that he could not tell. I inquired at Woodward's, where Mr. Hoare doth Business; they said, that there had been a Person there of the same Name. I began to suspect something. I then went to Mr. Hoare's, to inquire whether it was their Note; they acquainted me that it was, and shewed me Mr. Gibson's. I said; that I believed the Name was Mr. Gibson's Hand, but not the Body of the Note.

Mr. Sol. Gen. This Transaction was on the Saturday, Sept. 7th; How came the Bills to be dated the 9th?

Mr. Lee. Our Accounts were balanced for that Day, it being late in the Evening; therefore they were dated the 9th.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What became of them afterwards?

Mr. Lee. They came back again: Two of them came the same Day, the other the next Morning.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Who brought them?

Mr. Lee. The most of the Money was paid to Mr. Hals the Broker; there was 650*l.* paid to a Person who brought one of the Notes in the Morning; I believe that it was about Ten o'Clock. We asked him his Name; he said, it was John Roberts. He wanted to have 650*l.* to be wrote off from one of the Notes, and wanted the Money for it. As I had some Reason to suspect on the Saturday Night, and he coming so soon on the Monday Morning, I asked him, whom he came from? He said, Mr. Mansel. I hesitating, he said, the Gentleman that it was to; I said, Palmer; he said, Palmer in Mansel-Street. I did not know but that there might be some Demur on Mr. Hoare's Note; therefore to protract Time, I told him that he might receive the Money at the Bank. I gave him Bank-Notes:

No. 11, payable to Mr. Hankey, 100*l.*

131, payable to Mr. Charles Shales, 500*l.*

Which together made up 650*l.*

Mr. Sol. Gen. You wrote off 650*l.* Did you deliver the Note, when indorsed, to the Person that brought it?

Mr. Lee. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. This was a 1200*l.* Note; How was the other 500*l.* paid?

Mr. Lee. The other Part was paid off at several Payments to Mr. Hals.

Mr. Sol. Gen. As you have given an Account of that Note, can you give an Account of the other?

Mr. Lee. Two to Mr. Hals, Sir, at several Payments.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How much was each for?

Mr. Lee. A thousand Pounds.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Well then, of these Notes two for a thousand Pounds each have been paid; Hath the 1100*l.* Note been paid?

Mr. Lee. Four hundred and twenty Pounds have been paid as Part of the 1100*l.* and the rest is out-standing still.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you remember the Form of the Person that came to you by the Name of Roberts?

Roberts? Is that Man the Person? (Pointing to Robert Hall.)

Mr. Lee. Yes, Sir, I believe that is the Person.

Robert Hall called and sworn.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mr. Hall, pray what Trade are you of?

Hall. A Taylor, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you ever work for Mr. Hales?

Hall. Yes, Sir, several Years.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know him?

Hall. Yes, very well, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Had you any Conversation with him in September last?

Hall. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did he send for you?

Hall. He sent his Footman for me, September 8th, Sunday Night.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What Message did the Footman bring you?

Hall. He came and knocked at the Door; my Wife opened the Door. He desired to speak with me; she said that I was in Bed. He came up, opened the Curtain, told me he had a Message for me, I must be with his Master at Nine o'Clock on Monday Morning at Lloyd's Coffee-house in Lombard-Street; I said, that I must be with Mr. Rumsey at that Time to take Orders for Cloaths; he told me, that I should meet Rumsey there. I went to Lloyd's, and walked in the Coffee-Room. Whilst I was there, there came up one Leigh, who asked me what Business I came about? I said, that I could not tell, but waited for 'Squire Hales. I asked him what his Business was? He said, that he had a Letter to meet him there. I drank something there before Mr. Hales came, which was the best Part of an Hour. He first mentioned something to Leigh; he then asked me to stay one half Hour more. Accordingly I sat down. He talked a-while with Leigh. When Leigh was dismissed (whither I cannot tell) he took me up. In the Passage he gave me a Note, and desired me to go to Mr. Brassley's, and receive 650*l.* upon that Note.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What Note was it?

Mr. Sol. Gen. What Directions did he give you?

Hall. He told me to go to Mr. Brassley's the Banker, at the Acorn; he told me to receive 650*l.* on this Note; he told me to mind that there was no Mistake. If (said he) they offer to pay you Silver, give them half a Crown to pay it you in Gold. He told me that six hundred and nineteen Guineas and one Shilling would make just 650*l.* I took these Notes, (the Bank-Notes he received at Mr. Brassley's;) He looked them over, and said that it was all very right.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Look on that Paper; Did you ever see that Paper before? Is that the Note that you delivered to Mr. Brassley?

Hall. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You say, that you had Instructions to receive it in Gold; Did they pay it in Gold?

Hall. No, Sir, three Bank-Notes.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What was the Amount of them?

Hall. Six hundred and fifty Pounds.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What did you do with them?

Hall. I gave them to Mr. Hales.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did they write upon the Note?

Hall. Yes, they discounted this 650*l.*

Mr. Sol. Gen. When sent by Mr. Hales, had you Instructions what Name you should go by?

Hall. Yes, John Roberts.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Of what Place?

Hall. The Hay-market, or any Place where I pleased that Way?

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you see him while you were in the Shop?

Hall. Yes, I saw him pass by, and turn again.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Where was he when you gave him the Bank-Notes?

Hall. In the Passage in Lloyd's Coffee-house.

Mr. Sol. Gen. These Bank-Notes for 650*l.* which you delivered to Mr. Hales, did you ever see them again afterwards?

Hall. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Upon what Occasion?

Hall. He told me, that if I would take a Walk under the Piazza by the Royal Exchange, he would come to me. Accordingly he came to me, and at the Coffee-house (Janeway's Coffee-house) gave me them again. He asked me, whether I was ever at the Bank? I told him, that I had been within it, but never received any Money there for myself or any body else. He bid me go and receive this in Gold, or if I should be offered Silver, to do as directed before.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What was you to do with it?

Hall. To bring it to him at this Coffee-house, (Janeway's.)

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you go to the Bank?

Hall. I went to one there; he bid me go to another Gentleman, and he would sign my Bills. I went to him, he signed them; I then went again to the same Person, who paid me the Money for them.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Were they the same Bills which you had received at Mr. Brassley's?

Hall. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you receive it in Gold or Silver?

Hall. In Gold.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you see him when you was at the Bank?

Hall. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Whereabouts?

Hall. Within one or two of the Tellers whom I received my Money of.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did he take any Notice of you?

Hall. No, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Nor you of him?

Hall. No, being busy receiving the Money.

Mr. Sol. Gen. He saw you, did not he?

Hall. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What did you do with it?

Hall. I took it at the Bank. — As I was going down Grocers-Alley, Mr. William Hales was standing by the Alley, we turned into a Tavern, (the Globe and Sceptre Tavern;) he rang for the Drawer, and called for an half half Pint of Wine. I gave him the Money, he counted it over, and we had done.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did he give you any Reason why he came into the Bank?

Hall. No; but said, You was a long Time at the Bank.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did he offer you any thing for your Pains?

Hall. Yes; but I said, that I would have nothing from a Gentleman that I had served so long. He said, if I would call on him the next Day, he would lend me ten Pounds, and I should work it out.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Why did you go by the Name of Roberts?

Hall. I thought I might do any thing for Mr. Hales.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did he give you any Reason for it?

Hall. No, Sir.

Mr. Hankey called and sworn.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mr. Hankey, will you give an Account whether any Bills were brought to you, what they were, and by whom brought?

Mr. Hankey. Mr. Rumsfy (this Gentleman here) came to me on Monday Morning, September the 9th, with two Notes, for which I gave him my Notes, payable to Samuel Palmer or Bearer, one for 1100*l.* the other for 1050*l.* which with 20*l.* amounted to Mr. Hoare's Notes of 2100*l.* and 70*l.*

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you ask him his Name?

Mr. Hankey. No; but I asked him who Samuel Palmer was, because we had a Gentleman of that Name that had a Drawing Account with us, and I thought that this was to be put to his Account: But he told me, that it was a Gentleman in Mansel-Street in Goodman's-Fields. When he had done his Business, he went out of the Shop. He brought a little Bit of Paper, wherein was written to go to Alderman Hankey's, and get the two Notes figured down 1100*l.* 1050*l.* and 20*l.* in Money.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You have looked on Rumsfy; Is that the very Man?

Mr. Hankey. Yes, Sir; I was with him, when, having been apprehended at the Bank, he was examined.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you remember any thing of one Lane's fetching any Money?

Mr. Hankey. If you will favour me with the Notes, I can tell the better. The 1100*l.* Note was hardly dry, when he sent a Porter-like Fellow, who came to a Servant of ours, and desired that he would indorse 550*l.* and give it him in Guineas; he did it; he had it, and went out of the Shop. I believe that it was not an Hour before the same Person came again, and said that Mr. Palmer begged Pardon for giving us such Trouble, he did not know he should so soon have Occasion for it, desired that we would give him the Remainder in Bank. I said, that we had not just the Sum in Bank, but I would give it him in Money; he said, then he must go and fetch a Bag. He went accordingly, and fetched a Bag. We asked his Name; he said, that it was Samuel Lane, and that he lived in Marine-Square. I gave him 523 Guineas and an half, and 6*s.* 6*d.* which compleated that Note.

As to the other Note, it had not been written long, but a Servant to Mr. Hals, or he himself, came and desired that I would give him a Note for 853*l.* 14*s.* 5*d.* payable to him. I indorsed it, and gave him a Note for the Sum that he would have.

Mr. Sol. Gen. There are three Notes that compleat the Sum of 1050*l.* Do you remember any Bank-Bills?

Mr. Hankey. I paid none at all.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know any thing of the Residue being paid? Give an Account what you know of it.

Mr. Hankey. The Remainder was thus paid: 1100*l.* was paid to Samuel Lane; 1050*l.* by Indorsement for Samuel Palmer, for which the Person had a Note payable to Mr. John Hals for the same Sum; for the Remainder of that Note, two Notes were given payable to James Hickman.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was you present at the Bank, Sir, when Mr. Hales and Mr. Rumsfy were seized?

Mr. Hankey. No; but I was there, Sir, when he was examined.

Mr. Benjamin Cole called and sworn.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mr. Cole, do you know Mr. Hals?

Mr. Cole. I live with him, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Are you his Servant, or Partner?

Mr. Cole. His Servant.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know any thing of Mr. Rumsfy?

Mr. Cole. On Saturday September 7th, he came about Seven o'Clock to me, and inquired the Price of South-Sea Bonds. He said, that he should want a large Parcel. I promised to get him them as cheap as I could.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What Name did he use?

Mr. Cole. None till Monday the 9th of September. I then bought ten South-Sea Bonds of 100*l.* each; I asked him what Name they should be entered in? He said, Samuel Palmer in Mansel-Street, in Goodman's-Fields. The Amount was 1058*l.* 14*s.* 4*d.* for which he gave me Mr. Brassey's Note for 1000*l.* and the rest in Money.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you observe the Date of that Note?

Mr. Cole. I did not observe the Note.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Were there any other Bonds?

Mr. Cole. He said that he should want more. This happening when there were but few came to Market, I told him I could not procure him so many as he mentioned. Then he desired as many South-Sea Bonds as I could get, and the rest India. I procured four more South-Sea Bonds, and twenty India Bonds. He paid me a Note of Mr. Brassey's for 1000*l.* and another Note of Mr. Brassey's upon which there remained 550*l.* and one Note of Mr. Hankey's for 1050*l.* which made 2600*l.* upon which Mr. Hals paid him 41*l.* 2*s.* 3*d.* which made the Balance.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What Name did he take?

Mr. Cole. He said that his Name was Thomas Fowler, and that he lived with Mr. Palmer.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was there an Account drawn up?

Mr. Cole. Yes, Sir, this is the Abstract of the Account.

For Mr. John Hals,
Benjamin Cole, jun.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How came you to make it up in this Manner, since he told you that it was for Samuel Palmer?

Mr. Cole. Yes, Sir, he did so; but we always mention also the Name of the Person that comes to us. This was the Particular of the Account.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, Mr. Cole, do you remember that any body came to inquire for Mr. Rumsey?

Mr. Cole. There was a Person came and asked for him by the Name of Fowler; to the best of my Memory, it was the Prisoner at the Bar. He came and asked Mr. Hals, if he had any thing to do in South-Sea Bonds.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was this Mr. Hales that asked him this Question?

Mr. Cole. Yes, Sir.

Then Mr. Lightfoot, a Porter, was called and sworn.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you remember, Sir, any Time in September last, that you were sent to Mr. Hals's Office to inquire for Mr. Thomas Fowler?

Lightfoot. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. When?

Lightfoot. September the 9th.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What Day of the Week was it?

Lightfoot. Monday.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Who sent you?

Lightfoot. Mr. William Hales.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Is that the Gentleman?

Lightfoot. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What was the Message that he sent you on?

Lightfoot. He sent me to inquire for Mr. Thomas Fowler, and to tell him, that the Gentleman wanted him as soon as he could dispatch his Business, to come immediately away with me to him.

VOL. X.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you see any body at Hals's that answered the Name? Shew him Mr. Rumsey: Was that the Person?

Lightfoot. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did he come with you?

Lightfoot. Yes, Sir, he came with me directly to the Piazza under the Royal-Exchange.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Whom did he meet there?

Lightfoot. Mr. Hales.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You had known Mr. Hales before, had you not?

Lightfoot. Yes, Sir, for twenty Years: I knew him when he was Partner with Sir Stephen Evance.

Mr. Sol. Gen. And are you sure that that was the young Man that answered to the Name of Fowler?

Lightfoot. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Humphreys called and sworn.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Let him see the Note. Mr. Humphreys, look upon that Note; have you seen that Note before?

Mr. Humphreys. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Upon what Occasion?

Mr. Humphreys. By Direction from Mr. Hoare, I went to receive it September the 9th.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Whither did you carry it?

Mr. Humphreys. To Mr. Gibson's House. His Cashier not being at Home, I left it there, desired that the Money should be left with Mr. Bromfield, one of the Tellers at the Bank, to be placed there to Mr. Hoare's Account. I went about One o'Clock to see if the Money was left there; finding that it was not, I went to Mr. Gibson's. The Cashier was at Dinner. I got one to go for him, and left word that I should be back in a quarter of an Hour. I went to the Royal-Exchange, where Mr. Hoare met me. We went to Mr. Brassey's afterwards. We stopped the Payment of the two Bank-Notes, which we found there had been delivered out. I had been returned not above ten Minutes, before we had an Account that a Person was stopped with the two Notes.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What is your Business?

Mr. Humphreys. It is my Business to go with Mr. Hoare's Notes into the City.

Mr. Sol. Gen. When you came the second Time to Mr. Gibson's, what Answer had you?

Mr. Humphreys. None, but that the Cashier was gone to Dinner.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Who was the Person that you left the Note with?

Mr. Humphreys. I do not know the Gentleman's Name; there were three of them there, who were Servants to Mr. Gibson. One of them asked, where it should be left? I thereupon named Mr. Bromfield, one of the Tellers of the Bank.

Mr. Cramlington called and sworn.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you remember that you ever saw that Note before?

Mr. Cramlington. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. When, and upon what Occasion?

Mr. Cramlington. This Note was brought to Mr. Gibson's Office Sept. 9th by Mr. Humphreys, an Agent or Out-teller to Mr. Hoare. He desired, that when Mr. Phillips (Mr. Gibson's Cashier) came in, he would leave a Note or Money for the same with Mr. Bromfield at the Bank.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What became of it?

Mr. Cramlington. I put it into Mr. Phillips's Seat between the Banisters, for him to see when he came in.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Are you concerned or employed for Mr. Gibson about Book-keeping?

Mr. Cramlington. No, Sir.

Mr. Phillips called and sworn.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Look on that Note, Sir: Have you ever seen it before?

Mr. Phillips. Yes, Sir, on Monday the 9th of September last. I happened to be at the Bank; and on my Return from thence, which was about Twelve o'Clock, Mr. Harwood, one of the Clerks in our Office, told me, that Mr. Humphreys (Mr. Hoare's Servant) had been there with a Note for 6400*l.* and that I not being at Home, he had left it with Mr. Cramlington, desiring that when I returned I would leave a Money-Ticket for it with Mr. Bromfield, one of the Tellers at the Bank, for Humphreys. I asked him, where was the Note? He said, that it was left with Mr. Cramlington. I opened my Seat Door, and saw the Note there. I was very much surprized, it being wrote by a strange Hand, and knowing, by many Years Experience, that Mr. Gibson never signed any Promissory Notes without writing the whole Notes. I observed a Difference in the Note, that the last Words, For myself and Partners, were wrote with a nearer Resemblance to his Hand than the other Part of the Note. I observed that this Note was dated the 27th of August, and that he went to the Bath on the 28th: I had the Honour to attend him several Days. He concluded his Business relating to the Office on the 26th: On the 27th he did nothing of that Business, but prepared for his Journey. I endeavoured to recollect, whether he had any Transactions then with any George Watson, to whom it was made payable. I could not remember that he had, nor did I remember that I had ever before heard of the Name, nor had I any Directions from any of my Masters, that there was any such Note stood out. I observed also that there was a Difference between the Stile of this Note and Mr. Gibson's: He always writeth, in a straight Line, For myself and Co. Tho. Gibson, never Partners. And then as to the Value received, he never useth these Words. I carried it to Mr. Harwood, whom Mr. Humphreys spoke to. I told him, that I did not like it, it being written in a strange Hand; I would not therefore take Notice of it. We observed that there was the F and r, in For myself and Partners, wrote in a different Hand. I thought that there might be some Wickedness at the Bottom; I went therefore myself into Mr. Booth's Office; and he and Mr. Phippes being there, I desired Mr. Phippes to look into the Books, and see whether one Mr. Watson had Credit for such a Sum. Not finding any such Thing, I then desired them to look into the Kalendars of the Ledgers. They looked, and saw that there was no such Name there. I said then to Mr. Booth, I have a Note for 6400*l.* which I do not like, and will not pay, without inquiring into it, and acquainting Mr. Jacomb, (Mr. Jacomb was then above Stairs, which I knew not.) I told Mr. Booth the Circumstances which made me suspect a Forgery. Foh! (said he) this is a Villainy, a Forgery; this looks like one of Hales's Tricks. I waited for Mr. Jacomb's coming down; I said to him, Sir, here is a Note for 6400*l.* which I believe to be forged. It is (said Mr. Jacomb) very plain; here is a Rasure on a Frank. (Mr. Booth having recollected that Mr. Hales some time before had two Franks from him, one of which he now suspected to be thus abused, acquainted Mr. Jacomb therewith.) He inquired where we had it? We told him, of Mr. Humphreys; Mr. Hoare's Servant. He hereupon took me out with him. We went to the Bank. I stayed in the outer Office, whilst he went in and acquainted the Directors, that such a Thing had happened. Mr. Bromfield was sent for, and examined, what the Reason was of this Direction, that it should be left with him? He said, he could give no Reason, but that Mr. Hoare's Man used to transact Affairs with him: Mr. Jacomb took the Note to Mr. Hoare's, and I went to Dinner.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Is it not usual for Mr. Gibson to enter Notes in the Book when he makes them out, and give you Notice of them?

Mr. Phillips. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Sir, look on the F and r, and tell us what you think of them?

Mr.

Mr. Phillips. This is certainly Mr. Gibson's F, the o seems thrust in irregularly, two e's erased, and then follows Myself and Partners.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You have seen his Franks; Doth he make such a Distance between the F and the r? Cast your Eye again on it, and see whether the Distance between the F and r be such as is usual in his Franking.

Mr. Phillips. Much as usual, for I have compared it with some Franks, and they are there at the same Distance: But I observe the o is not of the same Letter, but crouded in irregularly: And the o is of a blacker Ink.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Please, Sir, to look on the Beginning of the m: What Observations do you make on that?

Mr. Phillips. There is the Stroke before the the first Minim of the m that seems of lighter Ink.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What do you make of that?

Mr. Phillips. It seems to me to be the Tail or Bottom of the e.

Mr. Maddox called and sworn.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I think, Mr. Maddox, you belong to the Bank.

Mr. Maddox. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, Sir, will you give us an Account, whether any Notice was given you to stop any Bank-Bills?

Mr. Maddox. Mr. Brassey, with Mr. Humphreys, (Mr. Hoare's Man) came to the Bank to desire me to stop five Notes, with the Numbers, Dates and Names. I looked and saw that three of them of 350*l.* were already paid. I took the Numbers of those not paid, and gave Directions to all the Tellers, that the Minute any brought any of them, they should give me Notice. In a little Time after I was gone up, I was called down again. Pewtreffs (one of them) came to me, and told me that two hundred-pound Notes were brought and demanded. I asked him, who brought them? He told me, that Person, (Rumsfey.) I bid him bring a Constable, and not come back again till he had brought one. When he had brought one, I charged him with him. I asked him, Where he had those Notes? He would not tell me where he had them, nor who he was, but was very obstinate. One of the Officers of the Bank said, that he knew him, that his Name was Rumsfey, that he belonged to the Eagle Galley. He asked me to let him write a Letter; I let him, but would myself appoint the Messenger. He wrote a Letter, signed it Thomas Fowler, and directed it to Mr.

at Robin's Coffee-house. I called some Officers of the Bank, and directed them to go there with the Constable, and see what suspicious Person was there. They went into the Coffee-house, and inquired of the Master of the House what Company was there. He said, there was only three Neighbours, and a fourth Person whom he did not know. Whereupon one of the Officers of the Bank said, I know that Person, that is Mr. Hales. They went and seized him. As they brought him into the Bank, Rumsfey said, That is the Person that I had the Notes of, and would fain have spoke with him. I kept them apart, carried the one up Stairs, kept the other below. They searched Rumsfey, found about him 60*l.* and 25*l.* in different Bags, and two Notes were stopped below, before they went up to Mr. Hales. They found upon him above Stairs thirty-six South-Sea and India Bonds, a Bill of Parcels for some of them from Mr. Hals, five hundred and odd Pounds in Money, a Note of Mr. Brassey's, and Mr. Shales's Note.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What Account did Rumsfey give of the Money found upon him?

Mr. Maddox. Thirty-five Pounds and odd Money he said was his own Wages. There was about 60*l.* besides, which he said was Mr. Hales's.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What Notes had Mr. Hales about him?

Mr. Maddox. He had a Note of Mr. Brassey's of 680*l.* the Remainder of the 1100*l.* Note; a Note of Mr. Shales's of 120*l.* A Note of Mr. Thrupp's he had received, and had procured the Money for it, as he owned when he came upon his Examination.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was his Examination in Writing or not?

Mr. Maddox. It was taken before Sir Edward Bellamy. I cannot say whether it was in Writing or not.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Go on, and give us an Account what Mr. Hales said when examined at the Bank, upon making up the Account of what was taken from him.

Mr. Maddox. It wanted about four or five hundred Pounds of the 6400*l.* Mr. Hales having that Day (as he said) redeemed two East-India Bonds, which he had pawned with Mr. Brassey; and had also taken up a Note of Mr. Thrupp's for 400*l.* which he had discounted with Mr. Shales. Among the Papers that were found upon Mr. Hales, there was an Account of the particular Produce of the Note.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What did Mr. Hales say?

Mr. Maddox. He owned that he employed Rumsfey; but said, that he himself was employed by one Samuel Palmer, a Person whom he had been acquainted with for some Months, and that this Note was left by him with him to invest in something that would turn to Account.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was there any Notice then taken of Rumsfey's going by a sham Name?

Mr. Maddox. I remember not that.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was there any one that told Mr. Hales, that he was a Man of Figures, and desired him therefore to give a more particular Account?

Mr. Maddox. Yes, Mr. Moses Raper.

Mr. Just. Page. Is it not enough that Mr. Hales himself owned that what he had was the Produce of the 6400*l.* Note? Did not Rumsfey manage all this? And came he not from him to the Bank? Hath he not owned it?

Mr. Maddox. That was one of the Notes found upon Mr. Hales.

Mr. Just. Page. Had you any Discourse with him about the Import of it?

Mr. Maddox. No, my Lord. ——— This Paper, one of those found in the Pocket of Mr. Hales, contains a particular Account of the the Produce of the 6400*l.* Note, and a little more.

(The Paper read.)

One of Mr. Henry Hoare's for 2100*l.* payable to Sir John Hynde Cotton.

23*l.* received in Gold.

Mr. At. Gen. In Case of Forgery, every Circumstance is corroborating of the Fact, and therefore this was proper to be laid before the Jury.

Mr. Just. Page. Whose Writing is that Paper?

Mr. Maddox. I believe it to be his: I knew him when a Goldsmith.

Mr. Serj. Darnell. Mr. Maddox, I desire to ask you one Question. We have a very good Opinion of you: Pray, do you not know one Samuel Palmer? Had you never any Transactions in your Books between Mr. Hales and Samuel Palmer, with relation to a ten thousand Pound Note payable to one Dymer?

Mr. Maddox. No, Sir.

Mr. Serj. Darnell. Nor have you never heard of him?

Mr. Maddox. No, only by the Paper found on Mr. Hales.

Mr. Serj. Darnell. Did not the Defendant Mr. Hales bring you a Draught from Mr. Jacomb upon a particular Occasion, payable to Dymer?

Mr. Maddox. I cannot remember this. We never had any Account, that I know of, with Palmer.

Moses Raper, Esq; called and sworn.

Mr. At. Gen. Mr. Raper, will you look on that Paper? Have you seen it before? Do you know upon what Occasion it was wrote, and by whom?

Mr. Raper. I was at the Bank the 9th of September last. Alderman Bellamy was then examining Mr. William Hales: He was then giving an Account of the Produce of that Note of 6400*l.* of Mr. Gibson's. He was a long Time before he could cast it up. He seemed not much concerned. I said to him, I wonder that you, who are a Man of Figures, should be so much at a Loss: You want about 400*l.* He at length mentioned a Note of one Thrupp's. They asked him, where he had that Note? He said, of one Palmer of Mansel-Street.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you see him write that Note?

Mr. Raper. I saw him sum up that, as the Produce of the 6400*l.* Note.

Mr. At. Gen. Do you remember that the Question was asked him, why Rumsey went by the Name of Fowler?

Mr. Raper. I know no Reason that he gave. He was asked the Question several Times, but gave no Answer.

Mr. At. Gen. The Evidence, my Lord, hath been so extreme long, and every Part so well connected, that I shall not trouble your Lordship with any Observations thereupon. If there be Occasion given by the Reply, your Lordship will then give us Leave.

Mr. Serj. Darnell. My Lord, and Gentlemen of the Jury; I am Council in this Case for Mr. Hales. And indeed, according to the Misrepresentation that they have laid him under, he is a very unfortunate Person. And really they have given a great deal to lead into a Suspicion of the Truth of what he is charged with; but we think a good deal of it is owing to the Misfortune he lay under. Having been a Bankrupt many Years, and not having obtained a Certificate, it was therefore impossible for him to carry on any thing in his own Name; therefore, in the whole Course of his Traffick for many Years, he hath been forced to use fictitious Names, and thereby conceal all Receipts and Payments. And the Consequence of his doing otherwise is very obvious. Till he hath obtained a Certificate, whatsoever he received in his own Name would be subject to the Commissioners. Therefore (according to my Instructions) Mr. Hales hath concealed his Dealings. I am instructed, that he had considerable Dealings with one Samuel Palmer, and that he was indebted to Mr. Hales in the Sum mentioned; and having had great Transactions for many thousands of Pounds, they came to a Balance of the Account, and Mr. Palmer gave him this Note in Payment. It is difficult for us to clear Things in such Affairs as require Privacy: But it appears, that he hath transacted great Affairs. He hath Books, whereby it appeareth that he hath traded for upwards of 300,000*l.* and that he hath traded with this Samuel Palmer for upwards of 10,000*l.* To prove that this is not a forged Note, will be extremely difficult; and I think that it matters not any thing to Mr. Hales, whether it be so or not. If it be so, if this Note came from Mr. Palmer to Mr. Hales, the Forgery falls not upon Mr. Hales. The only Thing for us to establish, is, that it came from Mr. Palmer to Mr. Hales. They own, that he said, when the Thing was recent, that he had it from Palmer. It happens (I suppose from a Certainty that the Note was a forged Note) that Mr. Palmer is gone out of the Kingdom. It is impossible therefore to produce him; and if he was here, he could not be a Witness. And, if my Instructions are true, that Palmer is gone, it leaves Mr. Hales without the Assistance of Palmer. Taking it for granted that he hath forged the Note, we submit it that Mr. Hales cannot be guilty of the the Forgery. — Another Part of the Indictment is, That he hath published this Note, knowing it to be forged. If he received it in Satisfaction of a Debt or Demand that he had upon Palmer, that excuseth him. Mr. Palmer being gone, it is only possible for us, first, to establish Mr. Hales's Character, then shew that he is a great Dealer, and produce his Books, in which these Things are entered. There are several Transactions therein, some many Years ago, some later, that will be verified by Witnesses. If there be such Transactions which we can verify, we leave it to the Court, how far that will avail. Under these Circumstances we beg Leave to submit it to your Lordship.

Mr. Serj. Baynes. My Lord, and Gentlemen of the Jury; I am Council on the same Side. The first Thing that lies under Consideration is, Whether this Note was forged by Mr. Hales? That it was a Forgery, they have given strong Evidence; but the only Question is, first, Whether Mr. Hales did forge it? In the next Place, Whether he published it, knowing it to be forged? These are the two Charges laid against him in the Indictment. We hope that, upon the Evidence that we shall give, you will think him clear of what is charged. It is well known, that he hath dealt for as great Sums as most in Lombard-Street: He had the Misfortune afterwards to fail; therefore he was obliged to act in a different Way from others. We shall shew that Mr. Gibson himself gave him such Credit, that he trusted him with great Sums of Money, and with receiving Rents in Kent. For us to prove a Negative, that he did not forge this Note, cannot be but by Circumstances. In order to charge us, they have gone a great Way with Circumstances; and the Question is, What Validity these Circumstances will have with you? They lay a Stress upon this, that he gave Directions to Rumsley to transact these Affairs, to change his Cloaths, his Wig, and to put on another Hat. As to that, that will depend a great deal upon the Credit of Rumsley's Evidence which he gives. Mr. Rumsley appears to be Particeps Criminis: Therefore, though I cannot say but this Evidence is legal, yet it affects his Character and Credit; it is not such as if he was an indifferent Person. As to the Wig, they made a great Noise, as if it was bought with a Design to impose on Persons in that Disguise. We shall shew that it was not, but with another Design. Mr. Hales and Rumsley had an Intention, before Monday, to go into the Country. He himself saith, that he only had the fine light Wig which he had upon his Head. It was very proper, at that Time of the Year, that he should have another Wig to travel in. Therefore it seems probable, that it was bought with that View, and not to impose upon Persons; since that could not make an Alteration in his Countenance. As to his acting under a different Name, that seems upon this Account; Mr. Hales had the Misfortune to have a Commission of Bankruptcy awarded against him; and after long soliciting for a Certificate, could not get it: Therefore, although he transacted great Affairs, all the Sums which he negotiated were forced to be under feigned and borrowed Names; because, if his Creditors knew that he had such Credit, and negotiated such Affairs, they would be the harder upon him. Therefore there was such a Direction given, that Mr. Hales might not be known to be concerned in such an Affair. — It is incumbent upon us, first, to give an Account how we came by that Note: There was one Samuel Palmer indebted to Mr. Hales between six and seven thousand Pounds; he came to him, offered this Note as a Security, that he might pay himself upon receiving this Money; thereupon Mr. Hales very innocently took the Note, not questioning its Goodness. Mr. Gibson being a Man very well known, Mr. Hales knew that the Signing was his Hand, though the Body of the Note was not written by him; and he might be easily imposed upon, and take this as a good Note. No Wonder that it should be thought so. Though Mr. Poltock suspected this Note, because it was not written by Mr. Gibson's own Hand; yet it is plain that, at Mr. Hoare's Shop, Mr. Turner made no Scruple at all to exchange this Note, and give other Notes for it. Therefore, though they saw that this Note was written on a different Piece of Paper from what a Note of such a Value used to be, it is plain that Mr. Turner did not think this of so much Weight. No Wonder, therefore, that Mr. Hales should be so imposed on. — The next Part of the Consideration is, Whether he published this Note knowing it to be forged? For otherwise it is not criminal. Therefore the Indictment runs, Knowing it to be forged. Now, in case that we prove this first Part which is in my Brief, and I hope that the Witnesses will come up to, the other Part will fall to the Ground. If he came fairly by it; he cannot be said, knowing it to be forged, to publish it. We shall call our Witnesses, and submit it to your Lordship.

The Indictment, my Lord, runs, that he Vi et Armis, viz. Verbis et Figuris sequentibus, forged this Note. Now, my Lord, it is not pretended that he forged the Name of Mr. Gibson; and therefore, though I do not controvert that he that writes over my Name is guilty of forging the whole Note, yet not Verbis et Figuris sequentibus; that is, forging the whole Note. Therefore being charged herewith, and they admitting that he did write the Name Thomas Gibson —

Mr. Just. Page. Is the Name in the Indictment?

Mr. Serj. Baynes. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Just. Page. Now Thomas Gibson is agreed

[2 F]

to

to be the Hand of Mr. Gibson, but not to that Note.

Mr. Serj. Baynes. No, my Lord, I admitted that in stating the Objection. I said, that he that writes over my Name is guilty of forging such a Note, but not in Verbis et Figuris sequentibus; he is not guilty of forging the Name of Thomas Gibson. They have taken upon them to fix that this Note was Verbis et Figuris sequentibus; then after the Body of the Note followeth Thomas Gibson. Now, my Lord, we apprehend this is not forged. Though the Substance of the Note is not Mr. Gibson's Hand-writing, yet they own, on the other hand, that the Name is the Hand-writing of Mr. Gibson. If so, it appears very plainly that we have not forged this Note Verbis et Figuris sequentibus.

Mr. Just. Page. Brother, do you rely upon this Objection? If you do, I will give you my Opinion of it when the whole is finished.

Mr. Grainger called and sworn.

Mr. Serj. Darnell. Sir, are you acquainted with Mr. William Hales?

Mr. Grainger. I am not personally acquainted with him, though I have known him by Sight many Years. I know nothing at all of his Dealings.

Mr. Serj. Darnell. Do you know Mr. Samuel Palmer? Do you know his Dealings?

Mr. Grainger. Yes, Sir, as to Mr. Palmer, I knew him from a Child. I married his Mother. He was brought up at the East-India House, was sent by the East-India Company into Persia, and lived there many Years. Not having the Encouragement that he expected, he returned thence, but stayed in Turkey.

Mr. Just. Page. Was you there with him? After he came Home, what did you know of him?

Mr. Grainger. As he came Home through Turkey —

Mr. Just. Page. You cannot say that upon Oath, since you was not there with him. Did you know him here at London after his Return? What did he deal in?

Mr. Grainger. I know not of any Dealings he had in England.

Mr. Just. Page. Do you know of any Transaction between him and Mr. Hales?

Mr. Grainger. He told me —

Mr. Just. Page. That is nothing. What Substance was he of?

Mr. Grainger. He had no Substance at all, for he was an insolvent Man.

Mr. Just. Page. How long since he was in London?

Mr. Grainger. Within a Twelve-month.

Thomas Ayles, Esq; called and sworn.

Mr. Serj. Baynes. You are desired, Sir, to give an Account, whether you know the Defendant Mr. Hales, how many Years you have known him, and what is your Opinion of him?

Mr. Ayles. I have known him twenty-three Years and upwards, when Partner with Sir Stephen Evance, with whom I kept a considerable Cash all that Time: I received a great many Civilities from Mr. Hales upon several Occasions, for which I have always had a good Opinion of him.

Mr. Serj. Baynes. What Opinion had you of his Character?

Mr. Ayles. I took him to be of as good a Character as any.

Mr. Serj. Baynes. Do you know of any considerable Sums passing through his Hands, during these Years that you have known him?

Mr. Ayles. Not any since his Failure.

Mr. Lacy. I beg a Word of the same Side with the other Gentlemen. As to the Exception they have made, it will not be contended (I believe) but that they might have laid it otherwise. They might have made it a Forgery of the Note, though they had set it forth otherwise. Our Objection is, whether Verbis et Figuris sequentibus doth not tie it down to the second Part of the Note as well as the rest? Another Thing is this; they have given an Account of the Publication at London in Mr. Hoare's Shop; whether should not the Forgery be fixed in London too?

Mr. Just. Page. If a forged Note be published in two Counties, may not the Prosecutors lay it in which they will? And the Indictment too is in London, if that were any Objection.

Mr. Lacy. Should not the Forgery be local as well as the Publication?

Mr. Just. Page. Yes. If that very Act of Forgery had been in Middlesex, it ought to have been tried there: But where there is no positive and direct Proof of the Forgery, but the whole arises from Circumstances, some in London, and some in Middlesex, it may be laid in either; or it would be impossible that any artful Person should be convicted of Forgery; it is but being alone when he commits the Fact, and he is safe. And the Objection will be as strong in one County as another; and then, if your Doctrine be true, he can be tried no where; which sure is not so. You know, a Felony may be tried in any County where the Goods are found on the Prisoner. As to your other Objection, That the Indictment is for forging the whole Note, whereas Tho. Gibson is Mr. Gibson's own Hand-writing; that is extraordinary. Did Mr. Gibson put his Name to that Bill? No. Suppose, in a less Degree, Mr. Gibson had given his Note for a less Sum, and Mr. Hales had only made it for a greater, would not that have been a Forgery of the whole Bill? You know it is so of a Bond, Bank, or other Bill, in every Day's common Experience.

Mr.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, this was the same Case with Mr. Ward's. There it was adjudged, that Mr. Ward forged a Note of the Duke of Buckingham's in that Form. There was no Pretence but that it was (as originally) the Duke of Buckingham's Note. This Objection was then made, but it was over-ruled, That the altering a material Part was making it entirely another Bill.

Mr. Serj. Darnell. My Lord, we have done with our Defence.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, as their Defence hath given us no further Occasion, we shall not take up your Lordship's Time with any Reply.

Mr. Just. Page. Gentlemen of the Jury; The Prisoner at the Bar is indicted for forging a Note of Mr. Gibson's of 6400*l.* and also for publishing this Note, knowing it to be forged; upon which two Things are proper for your Consideration: First, Gentlemen, by whom this Note was forged, (for it is agreed to be a forged Note,) Whether by the Prisoner, or if he was privy to or concerned in it? And secondly, Whether he is guilty of the Publication of it knowing it to be forged? There have been a great Number of Witnesses examined; and I should have gone over the whole Evidence as it was given, but the Council for the Prisoner have eased me of that Trouble. Forgery is what concerns every Englishman: As Paper-Credit is come to that Height it is now in, the utmost Care ought to be taken to preserve that Credit; but still the Innocent must not suffer. As to this Note's being forged, which hath taken up the most Part of the very long Time this Cause hath been trying, the Council for the Prisoner all agree that it is a forged Note; and then it will be to no Purpose to sum up that Part of the Evidence to you. I shall therefore take Notice only of such Parts, as go to prove Mr. Hales himself guilty of this Forgery, or of his Publication of it knowing it to be forged.

The two first Witnesses were Philip and Robert Booth, which may be proper to be taken Notice of by and by.

The third Witness was Rumsey, who hath gone through this whole Matter, and whose Credit hath been supported by others of unquestionable Reputation in every material Circumstance. He tells you, he was no Dealer in this Kind of Business, but a perfect Stranger to it, bred up to the Sea: That he hath been acquainted with the Prisoner for about a Year, and from June, till the Time this Fact was committed, was very much with him. This Note, which was read and shewn to you, bears Date the 7th of September last; and the whole Management was carried on till the 9th. He saith, that on the 7th of September, which was Saturday, he was at Mr. Hales's, not then knowing that he was to dip his Finger for him in so vile a Thing. He says, Mr. Hales only then told him, that he must go into the City with him on some Business; and that his Dress, which was a red Waistcoat and Breeches, were not proper to appear in, in the Affair he had to employ him in; and that he had provided him another, (the same which Rumsey has now on.) That he was not thought disguised enough, but was in this new Dress carried to Holborn, and there had a black Peruke bought for him, and a Letter-Case with Papers put in, as a Man of Business; from whence, after he was equipped in this Disguise, he and the Prisoner went together to John's Coffee-house in Sheer-Lane.

You will observe, Gentlemen, Mr. Hales, as Rumsey swears, did not then discover to him what he was to do; but it was to come out as by Accident, which was thus: Soon after they came to the Coffee-house, a Porter, with a Letter directed to Rumsey, came there, which Mr. Hales immediately took from the Porter and opened; which then appeared to be a Cover with this Note in it, and nothing writ on the Cover but, Lady Harriot Elliott 4300*l.* Sir John Hynde Cotton 2100*l.* This, Rumsey says, he did not understand; nor did the Prisoner give him Leave to open the Letter, knowing (as Rumsey says) he was unacquainted with the Contents of it. But when Mr. Hales had opened the Letter, he explained to him what the two Names and Figures meant, and then told him, he would have him go to Mess. Snow and Poltock's with this Note, and get of them two Bills, one for Lady Harriot Elliott for 4300*l.* the other for Sir John Hynde Cotton for 2100*l.* and told him, that Mr. Snow's Shop was a little without Temple-Bar, and did not so much as trust Rumsey out of his Sight, but went with him over-against the Door. Rumsey goes in, where was Mr. Poltock. The first Thing Mr. Rumsey does is to produce a Bank-Note of 40*l.* and 10*l.* in Money, and to take his Note for 50*l.* And then produces the Note for 6400*l.* but Mr. Poltock being a very careful Man, and being now called, says, he made much the same Observations that I believe you have all made on View of it. He says, it was an odd Sort of a Bill; that he never had any of Mr. Gibson's Bills but of his own Hand-writing; and that this was writ on so scanty a Piece of Paper, that he would not meddle with it.

When Rumsey came out of the Shop, he says he found Mr. Hales over-against the Door, where he left him, and tells him what ill Success he had had, and gives him back the Note: Whereupon the Prisoner and Rumsey go back to the Coffee-house, and there the Prisoner said, he must try elsewhere, and named Mr. Hoare's. And to give Rumsey Credit there, he was first to pay in at Hoare's 70*l.* that is, Mr. Poltock's Note for 50*l.* and 20*l.* in Money, and to take Hoare's Bill for 70*l.* which was done: That it was then scarce light; and every one one knowing Mr. Gibson's very great Credit, Mr. Turner, who was then in the Shop, without observing much this Note, takes it, and gives Rumsey two others. But Mr. Hales had then directed Rumsey not to take the 4300*l.* Note to Lady Harriot Elliott, but to Sir Richard Grosvenor or Bearer, and the 2100*l.* Note to Sir John Hynde Cotton or Bearer; and that Turner confirms. And Rumsey swears, that the Prisoner also shewed him Mr. Hoare's Shop, and went with him almost to the Door.

When Rumsey had succeeded at Mr. Hoare's, he says, he found the Prisoner waiting at a Fruit-stall, a small Distance from the Shop; and there he gave the Prisoner the 70*l.* Note, and the Notes he had received in Exchange for Mr. Gibson's. Rumsey swears, he was to get nothing, and that the Prisoner had the whole Profit. But this would not do the Prisoner's Business, nor did he rest here. The next Thing therefore is to make the best of these Notes, and to manage Matters so as not to be traced or found out; in which, Gentlemen, it was certainly right that the Notes should be shifted and changed, divided and subdivided, as much as possible, that no Tract of them might be seen: And for this, Rumsey says, that he accordingly did go with these Notes, by the Prisoner's Direction, from one Goldsmith to another; first with the 4300*l.* Note to Mr. Woodward's, who would not meddle with it; thence to Mr. Brassley's, where he changed it for four Bills, which he gave to Mr. Hales, who waited for him at a Coffee-house.

The Notes Rumsey received at Mr. Brassley's the Goldsmith's, in Exchange for Mr. Hoare's Note of 4300*l.* were four, viz. one for 1200*l.* one for 1100*l.* and two for 1000*l.* each, all made payable to one Samuel Palmer, in whose Name Rumsey was instructed by Hales to take these Notes, and was himself directed by the Prisoner to go by the Name of Fowler, which he did; and the Prisoner was so watchful, that he waited about Mr. Brassley's Shop during all the Time Rumsey was there.

Rumsey says, that he went and lay at Mr. Hales's that and the next Night, and Mr. Hales bid him be ready on Monday Morning in that Dress he had then put on: And accordingly on Monday Morning he went with him to Janeway's Coffee-house, where it was fixed how he should dispose of these Notes, and was directed by the Prisoner to go to Mr. Alderman Hankey's to make other Alterations, and then to the Broker's for the Bonds he had bespoke, who told him he had only got one thousand Pounds worth, which Rumsey says he had, and afterwards, on his going again, had more.

Gentlemen, I have laid before you, not for your Consideration whether Mr. Gibson's Note was forged, for that is admitted; but how far Mr. Hales has been concerned an Actor in this Affair; and to put you in Mind (if Rumsey swears true) that he was only the Cat's-Claw, and a meer Tool for Hales, and that Hales contrived and ordered every thing.

When all this was so successfully carried through, the Prisoner sends Rumsey to the Bank for Money, where the Matter comes to be discovered in this Manner.

Mr. Humphreys swears, that he being Mr. Hoare's out-going Clerk to carry Bills abroad and receive Money, on Monday Morning he went to Mr. Gibson's with this Note for 6400*l.* Mr. Gibson, he says, was gone to Bath; and it is remarkable that the Note is dated on a Day when he transacted no Business, and it was not published till he was gone to Bath. Mr. Humphreys says, that he not meeting with Mr. Gibson's Cashier, desired the Money should be paid into the Bank, and left the Note for that Purpose. When Mr. Gibson's Cashier, Mr. Phillips, came Home, he says he had the Bill, and looking upon it, saw great Reason to suspect it, and thought it not probable Mr. Gibson should draw a Bill as that was. He saith, that in all his Time he never knew Mr. Gibson sign such a Note, nor any Note for Money, but of his own Hand-writing. The Size of the Paper also, he says, confirmed his Suspicion. And sure, Gentlemen, Paper must be very dear, that a Note for such a Sum should be wrote on so scanty a Piece as you have produced. But the Cashier further says, that looking on the Note, he found there was a manifest Alteration in the Writing; Thomas Gibson was Mr. Gibson's Hand, but a Rasure appeared above it, and the Letter o in the Word For to be intruded in it, and wrote with another Ink. You have all seen the Note, and to me it seems very plain, that the Letter o was not originally written in that Place. And to give you at least a very probable Account, that this Word was at first Free and not For, and done by Mr. Hales himself, the first Witness (Mr. Phillips) you will remember, swears, that the Prisoner some Time ago prevailed on him to get of Mr. Gibson two Franks on two Letters of Mr. Hales, directed to Robert Booth, Esq; at Bristol; and says, that the Foldings of those Letters were large enough to tear off the Piece produced. And Robert Booth, Esq; of Bristol, says, there is no other of that Name there, and that he never received any Letter franked by Mr. Gibson. And as Things of this Kind are generally made out by Circumstances, it seems no very hard Thing to erase the two e's, and put the o between the F and r, in such a Manner as this has been shewn to you. Gentlemen, Mr. Humphreys goes further, and says, that going to the Bank about Noon that Day, he found that Mr. Gibson's People had not paid in this Sum; at which he says he was pretty much surprized, knowing Mr. Gibson's Credit and the Carefulness of his People; and went again to Mr. Gibson's, to know what the Reason was; where he was informed of the Discovery, which came out thus: Mr. Hoare's two Notes having been shifted and changed about as you have heard, some Part of the Money was at last in Bank-Bills, and there Rumsey that Monday Morning receives 650*l.* on Account of those Bills, before the Fraud was discovered.

But

But from what appeared at Mr. Gibson's, and the Bank-Numbers of the Bills delivered being entered, Care was taken to examine the Receipt-Book; to see who came for any more Money on those Bills. And Mr. Maddox tells you, that he having Notice given him, ordered the Clerk that paid, when any body came with those Bills, to seem ready to pay the Money, but to delay it till a Constable could be fetched: That soon after Rumsey came again, when a Constable was fetched, and charged with Rumsey. He at first declined to give any Account of his Name, or where he had the Note; at length he told Mr. Maddox, that if they would let him write a Letter, he would send it to the Person he had the Note from; and accordingly writes a Letter to Mr. ——— (with a Blank) at Robin's Coffee-house, with which the Constable, with some of the Clerks of the Bank, went immediately to see who was there, and found three Persons besides Mr. Hales. The three were Neighbours whom the Coffee-Man knew: Mr. Hales was a Stranger to him, but known to the Officers of the Bank. When he was seized, Mr. Rumsey was examined again, and owned that that was the very Person who sent him with the Bill. Upon this Hales was carried up Stairs, examined and searched; and not only one of those Bills that had been received found upon him, but also an Account under Mr. Hales's own Hand, that exactly tallied with the Account Rumsey gave. And Mr. Maddox says, the Prisoner owned the Account to be his, and the Notes, Bonds, Broker's Account of the Bonds bought, and Effects found upon him, to be the very Produce of the 6400 l. So that, Gentlemen, you will now take it into your Consideration, that the Evidence against the Prisoner doth not depend singly on the Credit of Rumsey, but that he is supported by the Number of Witnesses you have had, and in particular by Mr. Maddox, and (which cannot err) the Account and Produce of the Money taken upon him.

Thus, Gentlemen, the Forgery being admitted, I have laid before you that Part of the Evidence that principally affects Mr. Hales, and that goes to prove him either guilty of the Forgery, or of the Publishing of this Note knowing it to be forged. As to the Forgery, Gentlemen, of this Note by Mr. Hales, I must leave it to you upon the Strength of this Evidence, which has been very long, and (I doubt not) fully observed by you; and that you will give it its just Weight. But as to his publishing it knowing it to be forged, he hath not given you the least Colour of Evidence to the contrary; and I must tell you, wherever a forged Note, or other Thing of that Nature, is found in any one's Hands, it is in Law a strong Evidence that he is the Forger, unless he can give some Account of it. But here you are only told, that he had it from Palmer; but not one Word of Proof. Mr. Hales's Council have indeed offered to you in his Defence, first, that he is a Gentleman, and shall not be presumed to be guilty of such an Offence; nor, Gentlemen, shall any other on a bare Presumption. But here, Gentlemen, is great Strength of Evidence that affects him; I do not know that I have met with a stronger Proof of the very Fact; it is not to be expected. They have also told you, that he was a Bankrupt, and could not get a Certificate; that the Commission of Bankruptcy against him was about twenty Years ago. They say, that upon that Account he was forced to make use of others Names in his Dealings, and sometimes fictitious ones: That he hath traded for upwards of 300,000 l. in that Time: That Palmer was much employed by him, and entrusted in the carrying on that Trade, and being thereby indebted to Mr. Hales in above 7000 l. gave him this Note in Part of Payment; which, as to his trading in that Manner, I think, is so far from justifying his Character, that it is of itself a Crime not much less than that with which he stands charged. A Man that is a Bankrupt, if he afterwards becomes able, ought in Honour and Conscience to pay his just Debts. It is not the first Time I have known that done: General Wood was a Draper, failed and paid very little; he went into the Army for Bread, and proved so gallant a Man, that he raised himself to be a General. He, like a good Christian, and a Man that did as he would be done by, paid his Debts to the full; which if the Prisoner had done, it would have given him a much better Character. Gentlemen, his Council have told you he carried on a vast Trade for twenty Years; but do they tell you that his Creditors were the better for it, or were ever paid one Penny? No, Gentlemen, they did not; and therefore I must leave it to you, whether this was not one continued Act of Fraud to cheat his Creditors; if so, it will affect the Prisoner quite another Way than his Council intended it. And though two or three Witnesses were called to give Evidence of the Dealings between Mr. Hales and Mr. Palmer, there was not one Thing proved: So that, Gentlemen, there seems very little for you to consider. You have a Number of concurrent Witnesses, that have given you a full and clear Account of this whole Transaction; that this was contrived, managed, and carried on by the Prisoner in a very extraordinary Manner, and which there was not, nor could be any Reason for, but to avoid being detected of the vile Crime he is now charged with; nor can there be any Doubt but the whole Produce of this Note was for his Benefit, the Account, Bonds, and Bills having been found in his Pocket.

I must leave it to you, Gentlemen: But never was stronger Evidence than here is, that Mr. Hales is the Author of this. So that I think, Gentlemen, if you believe the Evidence, the Charge, one Way or other, is fully brought to the Prisoner's Door. If you believe him guilty of the Forgery, you will then find him guilty generally of the whole Indictment: But if you are not satisfied of that, you will only find him guilty of the other Part of the Indictment; or, if you can upon this Evidence, you may acquit him.

The Jury being withdrawn, after a few Minutes Stay, brought the Prisoner in Guilty of forging the Note, and of publishing the same knowing it to be forged.

The Prisoner was a second Time indicted upon the Statute of 33 H. 8. c. 1. for obtaining Money by false Tokens. To which Indictment the Defendant pleaded Not Guilty; and the same Evidence, in Substance, being offered as upon the former Indictment, the Jury brought him in Guilty.

N U M B E R X V I.

The KING against JOHN GIBBON,

Upon an Information, in the Nature of a Quo Warranto, by the King's Coroner and Attorney, against the Defendant, to shew by what Authority he claims to be a Freeman of the Town and Port of New-Romney, at the Relation of William Jarvis. Tried at Kent Assizes, held at Maidstone, the 6th of August, 1734, before the Right Hon. the Lord Chief Justice Eyre.

Mr. Smith.

MAY it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury; This is an Information, in the Nature of a Quo Warranto, against the Defendant Gibbon, to shew by what Authority he claims to be a Freeman of the Town and Port of New-Romney, in this County: And the Information sets forth, That the Town and Port of New-Romney is an ancient Town and Port; and that the Mayor, Jurats, and Commonalty of the said Town and Port, are, and for ten Years last past, and long before, were, one Body Corporate and Politic, by the Name of Mayor, Jurats, and Commonalty of the Town and Port of New-Romney in Kent; and that the Office of Freeman of the said Town and Port is a public Office, and an Office of great Trust and Preheminence, within the same Town and Port, concerning the good Rule and Government of the same, and the Administration of public Justice: And that the Defendant Gibbon, of the said Town and Port, Innholder, on the 25th of March, in the same Year of his present Majesty, and from thence continually, hitherto, at the Town and Port aforesaid, hath used and exercised, without any lawful Warrant, the said Office, and claims to be one of the Freemen of the same Town and Port, and to have all the Privileges, Liberties, and Franchises thereof: Of which Office the said Defendant Gibbon, for all the Time aforesaid, upon his Majesty hath usurped, in Contempt of his Majesty, and to the great Damage and Prejudice of his Royal Prerogative, and against his Crown and Dignity: Whereupon he prays Process, &c.

To this the Defendant has pleaded, That the said Town and Port is an ancient Town and Port, and the Office of Freeman thereof a public Office.

And says, That the late Queen Elizabeth, by her Letters Patent, dated at Northaw, the 4th of August, in the fifth Year of her Reign, did will and grant, that the Barons and Inhabitants of the said Town and Port (who before that Time had been incorporated, by the Name of Jurats and Commonalty) should for ever after be one Body

Incorporate, by the Name of Mayor, Jurats, and Commonalty of the Town and Port of New-Romney.

And that they, and their Successors, and all other the Barons and Inhabitants of the said Town and Port, their Heirs and Successors, should for ever after be, in all Matters whatever, as free as the Mayor, Jurats, and Commonalty of the Town and Port of Sandwich, or any other Town and Port of her said Cinque Ports.

And the Defendant by his Plea further sets forth a Custom in Sandwich, one of the said Cinque Ports, That if a Man marries the Daughter of any Freeman of that Town, such Daughter being born after the Swearing and Admission of her Father into the Office of Freeman, and being resident and inhabiting within the Town, has a Right to be sworn and admitted a Freeman of Sandwich.

And alledges the like Custom in Dover, another of the Cinque Ports.

And that the sole Right of swearing and admitting Freemen of New-Romney is, and at the Time of swearing and admitting of him the said John Gibbon was, in the Mayor and Jurats, or in the Mayor and any two Jurats.

That the Defendant Gibbon, on the 1st of May, 1727, married Elizabeth Smith, Daughter of William Smith, a Freeman of the said Town and Port; and thereby, and by virtue of the said Letters Patent, became intitled to be sworn and admitted a Freeman of the said Town and Port; and having such Right, and being so intitled, was, on the 25th of March last, sworn and admitted by John Coates, the then Mayor, and Humphry Wightwick and Edward Batchelor, then two of the Jurats of the said Town and Port, being there assembled in due Manner for that Purpose; by reason of which, he says, he is a Freeman.

The King replies, That Gibbon, by marrying the said Elizabeth Smith, did not become intitled to be sworn and admitted a Freeman.

To which there is a Demurrer, for the Opinion of the Court upon the Words of the Charter.

So that, Gentlemen, the first Issue you are to try is, Whether the sole Right of swearing and admitting admitting Freemen of the Town and Port of New-Romney be in the Mayor and Jurats, or in the Mayor and any two Jurats: And if we prove to you, that the Commonalty have always had and exercis'd a concurrent Right with the Mayor and Jurats, you will please, Gentlemen, to find for the King.

Mr. Marsh. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury; I am Council for the Defendant Gibbon. You observe, by the Opening, that this is an Information, in the Nature of a Quo Warranto, against him, to shew by what Authority he claims to be a Freeman of New-Romney: And the only Points that come before you now to be tried, are, First, Whether the Right of swearing and admitting Freemen of this Corporation be in the Mayor and Jurats, or in the Mayor and two Jurats? And, Secondly, Whether the Defendant Gibbon has been duly sworn and admitted a Freeman? There being a Demurrer as to the Right, that is to be determined by the Judges of the Court of King's-Bench: And in order to make out this Right, we shall produce to you the Books of the Corporation, as well as living Witnesses; whereby it will appear, that the Right of swearing and admitting Freemen of this Corporation is in the Mayor and Jurats, or in the Mayor and two Jurats; and that every one of the present Members of the Corporation was sworn and admitted by the Mayor and Jurats, or the Mayor and two Jurats: And by an Entry in the same Books it will likewise appear, the Defendant was duly sworn and admitted a Freeman; and when this appears, Gentlemen, you will find a Verdict for the Defendant.

Mr. Lacy. Mr. Wellard, please to produce the Corporation-Books; (which were produced accordingly.)

Mr. Serj. Darnell. My Lord, we insist, the sole Right of admitting and swearing Freemen of this Corporation is not in the Mayor and Jurats, but in the Mayor, Jurats, and Commonalty.

C. J. Eyre. 'Tis Swearing and Admitting.

Mr. Serj. Darnell. Gibbon being called on by the Court of King's-Bench, to shew by what Authority he claimed to be a Freeman of the Town and Port of New-Romney, has demurred, and thereby waived the Foundation of his Claim.

C. J. Eyre. What! Is that waiving it? What concerned his Right comes not now in Issue, and was left undetermined by the Court. If he had a Right, the Question is, Whether he be duly admitted? And in order to that, he must be elected: And then the Question is, Whether he be admitted according to the Constitutions of the Town and Port of New-Romney?

Mr. Serj. Darnell. My Lord, a Right is here claimed by the Defendant; I have a Right by marrying a Freeman's Daughter; and if I have a Right, the Question is, as to the Method of coming to this Right. The Defendant says, the sole Right of swearing is in the Mayor and Jurats: But we say, though they have a Right, the whole Body must admit, though the Swearing be by the Mayor and Jurats.

C. J. Eyre. Swearing and Admitting is the same Thing, Brother Darnell. Where a Man is chosen Mayor of a Corporation, the Swearing and Admitting him is the same Thing. All Persons are admitted by Swearing, and Taking the Oath is the Admission. A Man admitted is to be sworn; and there is no Corporation in the Kingdom, but where Swearing and Admitting is the same Thing; and yet you would make them two distinct Acts.

Mr. Lacy. We shall prove to your Lordship and the Jury, that the sole Right of Swearing and Admitting is in the Mayor and Jurats: And the first Instance we shall shew is in 1679, Peter Martin was admitted and sworn by the Mayor and Jurats.—Read the Entry of the 8th of March, 1679.

(Witness sworn to prove an Assembly-Book.)

C. J. Eyre. I think it proper to be read as a Court-Book.

Associate reads—

“ 8 March, 1679. Romney. At a Common Assembly of the Mayor, Jurats, and Commonalty of the Town and Port of New-Romney, in the Common Place held there, 32^o Car. 2^d. Present, John Hunt, Mayor; Thomas Durrant, John Mascall, John Cockman, William Green, and Mr. Isaac Rottin, Freemen of the said Town; Peter Martin, an Inhabitant of our Member of Orleston, in Old-Romney, was elected a Freeman; and this Assembly doth appoint him to be sworn a Freeman by the Mayor and any two Jurats of this Corporation.”

C. J. Eyre. Peter Martin elected and sworn 32 Car. 2, 1679.

Mr. Marsh. Now read his Admission and Swearing.

Associate reads—

“ At the Court holden before John Hunt, the Mayor, and Jurats of same Port, 15 March, 1679, Peter Martin testified his free Consent for observing the Orders, Charters, and Ordinances, &c. of the Cinque Ports, and of this Town in particular; and is hereby declared and admitted a Freeman of this Corporation; and took the Oaths appointed.”

Mr. Lacy. Read the Entry, fol. 738, of Stephen Brett's Admission.

Associate reads—

“ New-Romney. Whereas the Mayor, Jurats, and Commonalty of the Town and Port of New-Romney aforesaid, at their Common Assembly, holden in the Common Place of the said Town and Port, did elect and chuse Mr. Stephen Brett, being free-born; Thomas Short, born at Smeeth in the County of Kent; Robert Easton, born at Battle in the County of Suffex; and John Coates, Grazier; all free-born, to be Freemen of the said Town and Port, the 15th Day of May last: Now be it remembered, that at a Court of Record holden in the Guild-hall of the same Town and Port, this 3d Day of December, Anno Domini 1694, the said Stephen Brett, Thomas Short, Robert Easton, and John Coates, testifying their free Consents for the observing and maintaining the Charters, Franchises, Decrees, Privileges, Customs, and Usages of the Cinque Ports, two ancient Towns, and their Members, and particularly of this Town and Port of New-Romney, have severally taken the Oaths of Freemen of the same Town and Port, according to the Customal there, and are admitted into the Franchises of the Town and Port aforesaid; and did also, at the same

“ Time, here take the several Oaths appointed “ by an Act of Parliament, intituled, An Act for “ abrogating the Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy,
 “ and appointing other Oaths; &c.”

Mr. Marsh. Read the Entry, fol. 770.

“ New-Romney. At a Court of Record, holden
 “ in the Guildhall of the same Town and Port,
 “ the 16th of May, 1698. Whereas the Mayor, “ Jurats, and Commonalty, at a Common Assem“ bly, holden in the Common Place, on Thursday
 “ the 17th of March, 1697, did elect Robert “ Mascall, free-born, Thomas Lancaster, and “ Thomas Edwards, free-born; having testified
 “ their free Consents to observe the ancient “ Orders, Charters, Ordinances, &c. were then “ admitted into the Freedom of the said Town:
 “ Be it remembered, that the said Robert Mascall, “ Thomas Lancaster, and Thomas Edwards, having “ testified their free Consent to observe the “ Orders, &c. aforesaid, have taken the Oath,
 “ according to the Customal, and are admitted
 “ into the Franchises of the Town and Port

 “ pointed.”

C. J. Eyre. A Court of Record, and this Court held before the Mayor and Jurats.

Mr. Marsh. My Lord, there is not a single Member of the Corporation but is sworn in this Manner.

Mr. Serj. Darnell. We admit, my Lord, that no Man can be sworn but by the Mayor and Jurats; but none but Freemen can consent there shall be Freemen among them.

C. J. Eyre. If the Precedents are admitted by the other Side, there is no Occasion for proving them.

Mr. Marsh. My Lord, if they admit them according to the last Entry, there is no Occasion; but if not, it is necessary to call a living Witness.

C. J. Eyre. It is all one to me what you do. It is admitted on all Sides, there are many of these Entries since 1679.

Mr. Marsh. Read the Admission of Isaac Rutton and others, 7 February, 1708.

Associate reads —

“ New-Romney. At a Court of Record holden
 “ in the Guildhall of the same Town and Port,
 “ the 7th of February, 1708. Whereas the “ Mayor and Jurats, at a Common Assembly,
 “ elected the several Persons following: Be it
 “ remembered, the Persons under-written, testi“ fying their Consents to observe the ancient “ Orders, &c. have taken the Oaths of Freemen,
 “ and are admitted into the Freedoms.” —

C. J. Eyre. Who are the People admitted?

Associate reads —

“ Isaac Rutton, John Bassett, John Minnis, “ John Tooke.”

Mr. Lacy. Now turn to fol. 100. Read the Admission of Nicholas Durrant and others.

Associate reads —

“ 13 June, 1715. Whereas the Mayor and “ Jurats did elect Nicholas Durrant, Isaac Warren,
 “ Daniel Warquin, and John Cosby, to be Free“ men: Be it remembered, that they, testifying
 “ their Consent to observe the ancient Orders,
 “ &c. are admitted into the Freedoms of this “ Town and Port, and took the several Oaths “ appointed, and subscribed the Declaration “ following —

Mr. Knowler. Read the Admission of John Widcomb, and Richard Howard, fol. 116.

Associate reads —

“ 26 August, 1717. Whereas the Mayor and “ Jurats, at the last Common Assembly, did “ elect the several Persons, whose Names are “ hereunto subscribed, to be Freemen: Be it “ remembered, this 26th of August, 1717; the “ Persons under-written, testifying their Consent
 “ to observe the ancient Orders, &c. and taking
 “ the Oaths, are admitted into the Freedoms of “ this Town and Port.

“ John Widcomb,
 “ Richard Howard.”

Mr. Marsh. Turn to fol. 125. Read the Admission of Thomas Wilson.

Associate reads —

“ 18 November, 1727. Whereas the Mayor, “ Jurats, and Commonalty elected Thomas Wilson,
 “ within this Town, to be a Freeman: Be it
 “ remembered, that he, testifying his Consent
 “ to observe the ancient Orders, &c. and taking
 “ the Oath, is admitted into the Freedoms of “ this Town and Port.

“ Born at Lydd in Kent.”

Mr. Lacy. Now read the Admission of William Gray, the 7th of June, 1731.

“ 7 June, 1731. Whereas the Mayor and “ Jurats, at the last Election of Mayor, did “ admit William Gray a Freeman: Be it re“ membered, that he, testifying his Consent to “ observe the ancient Orders, &c. has taken the “ Oath, and is admitted into the Freedoms of
 “ this Town and Port.”

Mr. Marsh. My Lord, we submit our Case here.

Mr. Serj. Darnell. The Word admitted is used both at the Common Assembly —

C. J. Eyre. But only, there, in that Instance.

Mr. Serj. Darnell. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury; I am for the King against Gibbon: And this Issue is only a Part of a Question in relation to the Franchises and Privileges of the Town and Port of New-Romney, where of late there have been many illicit Practices in order to overthrow the Constitutions of the Town; and thereupon Application was made to the Court of King's-Bench, in two several Causes, against Gibbon and Darby, who were to shew by what Authority they claimed their Freedoms; and they insisted they had married the Daughters of Freemen, and therefore had a Right to their Freedoms; and also against one Wightwick, who was to shew by what Authority he claimed to be Mayor of New-Romney.

Gentlemen, the Election of the Mayor depending on the Right of Gibbon and Darby, the Court, by Rule, directed the Information against Gibbon first to be tried; and if he had no Right, Darby was to take the Fate of that Trial, and to disclaim.

Gentlemen, as the Election turned upon the Right of Gibbon and Darby, if this Issue be found for them, then Wightwick is the Mayor. But, instead instead of coming to the Question, Whether a Man has a Right to a Freedom by marrying a Freeman's Daughter? they have demurred: And now the Question is, Who is to admit the Freemen? And I humbly apprehend, my Lord, where a Number of Freemen have the Freedom of a Town, no body can be let in without their Consent; for, if the Mayor and Jurats are to admit solely, they may set up as many Freemen as they please.

My Lord, and Gentlemen of the Jury, the last Instances they have produced out of the Assembly-Books, are, I humbly apprehend, very strong in our Favour; for it appears from those Instances, that when the Body have agreed upon the Choice of a Freeman, the Mayor and Jurats swear him; and I take the Swearing to be a thing of course; but the Admission is in the whole Body, as appears by every Instance they have read. A Freeman is elected by the Mayor, Jurats, and Commonalty, and then he is ordered to be sworn in by the Mayor and Jurats: Sure there can be no Doubt in the Question. Swearing and Admitting I take to be the same thing; they are synonymous: Without Swearing no Man can be admitted; but the Swearing does not admit. Suppose twenty Freemen sworn in by the Mayor and Jurats, the Franchise of the Town is worth nothing—

C. J. Eyre. You take Admitting to be the Election; it is not so: But Admitting to the Exercise of the Right. Admitting is not conferring the Right. The Defendant has a Right by his Marriage: Admitting must be construed the receiving him into the Office, and admitting him to the Exercise of that Right, and therefore is synonymous. You go upon a wrong Issue: Who were the Persons intitled to administer the Oath of Office?

Mr. Serj. Darnell. Admission gives the Right.

C. J. Eyre. I think it would be proper to admit the Issue to be, Who ought to administer the Oath?—I don't understand the Customs of the Cinque Ports.

Mr. Serj. Darnell. If sworn, whether duly elected? or it signifies nothing.

C. J. Eyre. Suppose Gibbon to have a Right: An Oath administered to a Man that has no Right is of no avail: A Man must have a Right to an Office, and must be admitted into that Office by Swearing; and the Question now is, Who is to administer that Oath?

Mr. Serj. Darnell. We are to support the Right of the whole Body to elect and admit; or the Court of King's-Bench will think this Matter not tried.

C. J. Eyre. The Court of King's-Bench would think me a trifling Fellow to try the Right of the Election.

Mr. Serj. Darnell. The Rule is, that Gibbon's Issue should be tried first, and Darby abide the Fate of that; to which they have demurred.

Mr. Serj. Baynes. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury; I am also of Council in this Case for the King. The Sense of the Court of King's-Bench was, in relation to a Right set up by Gibbon and Darby; and the Question was, Whether a Person marrying a Freeman's Daughter was intitled to his Freedom? And the Court was of Opinion, That ought principally to be tried; and to make an End of the whole, if Gibbon and Darby had a Right, Wightwick was to be Mayor; if not, then Elles was to be Mayor. But they have evaded this Question; and when an Issue was tendered to try the Right, they demurred; and thereby the sole Reason of granting these Informations is entirely eluded: And now the Question is, Whether the sole Right of admitting Freemen belongs to the Corporation, or to the Mayor and Jurats, or to the Mayor and two Jurats? But, Gentlemen, we contend that the Right of Admission is in the Court of Assembly.

The Gentlemen of the other Side have produced some Instances, to shew the Right to be in the Mayor and Jurats, and that they have accordingly taken upon them to swear in some Persons, and Swearing is a Completion of the Person's Right to be admitted.

My Lord, the Admission of Freemen is to be made on Lady-Day: After the Election the Bell tolls; and Persons having a Right come before the General Assembly, and say, they claim to be admitted, for Servitude, or as free-born, &c. And they judge of these Facts, and thereupon admit; though the Freedom is not completed, till the Person be sworn.

Gentlemen, the Evidences the other Side have produced go no higher than 1679: whereas we have Instances, long before that Time, of Admissions by both; and a new Institution, lately practised, we humbly hope, shall not set aside an ancient Custom. Strange! that this Power of admitting should be in a Part of the Body! A Mayor and two Jurats cannot admit, contrary to the General Assembly; when they have approved a Claim, the Right is to be completed by Swearing before the Mayor and Jurats. They are two distinct Rights; and we shall produce to your Lordship and the Jury unquestionable Instances, that this is the constant Use, for the Persons claiming to be Freemen to make out their Right to the Assembly, and afterwards to be sworn by the Mayor and Jurats. A High Constable is named by the Justices in Sessions, and then is sent by them to a Justice of Peace to be sworn; as, in the present Case, a Freeman is elected by the Common Assembly, and then is sent to the Mayor and Jurats to be sworn: And therefore, Gentlemen, we hope you will find a Verdict for the King.

Mr. Wynne. My Lord, the single Question before the Court of King's-Bench was, Whether Gibbon and Darby had a Right to Freedoms by marrying Freemen's Daughters? By the Rules of Practice, it is impossible for any Part of this Question to come before this Court; the subsequent Proceedings in the Crown-Office must shew this; and nothing could be done by the Court of King's-Bench, the Pleadings being brought into the Crown-Office after the Term.

My Lord, it is endeavoured by the Gentlemen of the other Side to take away the Distinction between the Admission and Swearing; and it is true, they are by distinct Bodies.

Gentlemen, the Claim is first to be made to the General Assembly on Lady-Day, on tolling a Bell: When that has been considered, and allowed, and admitted by the general Body, then, by Delegacy, it has been sent to the Mayor and Jurats to swear the Person, and is merely a ministerial Act; and what they have done has been in Ease of themselves, in Delegacy to them. It will appear from the ancient Entries, (their highest Entry being 1679) and 'tis at an Assembly of Mayor and Jurats, Peter Martin was ordered to be sworn by the Mayor and two Jurats; but not to part with any Right they had, as will fully appear, when our Evidences are compared in Point of Time with the others.

You will please therefore, Gentlemen, to consider, that the Admission is the Act of the General Assembly, but the Swearing the Act of the Mayor and Jurats.

Mr. Serj. Darnell. My Lord, we humbly insist, the sole Right is not in the Mayor and Jurats.

C. J. Eyre. I am of Opinion, this is an Admission.

Mr. Serj. Darnell. In all the Instances, till 1679, they were admitted at the General Assembly; and in 1699 they have read one Instance. We insist, therefore, that our Evidence is equally strong.

Mr. Knowler. My Lord, we have a Rule to produce all the Corporation-Books at the Trial, and Mr. Wellard refuses us the Books.

Mr. Wellard. My Lord, we have brought the Books hither at a great Expence. Mr. Wightwick must be paid for them.

Mr. Knowler. Mr. Wellard has had four Guineas on that Account.

Mr. Wellard. The Mayor has been at more than four Guineas Expences already, and there are several other Charges to be paid.

C. J. Eyre. You should agree to pay what the Master of the Crown-Office shall think reasonable more than four Guineas, and enter into a Rule for that Purpose. (Which was done accordingly.)

Mr. Lacy. My Lord, we submit, whether this is proper Evidence on the Issue? The Plea is, that the sole Right of Swearing and Admitting is, and at the Time of Swearing and Admitting Gibbon was, in the Mayor and Jurats, or in the Mayor and two Jurats, of the Town and Port of New-Romney; and the Issue is taken upon that, Is, and at the Time was —

C. J. Eyre. I think it proper Evidence, to shew what has been the Usage by the Books. You must prove an ancient Right; for Gibbon's Right must be determined by the ancient Usage.

(Here a great Dispute arose about the Corporation-Books between Mr. Wellard and Mr. Knowler, &c. Mr. Wellard being in Fear he should lose them.)

C. J. Eyre. Give them all in, and call for them one by one. You have them, and make no Use of them.

Mr. Serj. Darnell. Fol. — Read the Election of Mayor and Jurats.

(Associate begins to read, but could not go on; when the Chief Justice took the Book out of his Hands.)

C. J. Eyre. Give me the Book; I can read it.

(Attempts to read, but does it very indistinctly and with great Difficulty; and then throws down the Book, not being able to go on.)

Mr. Wellard reads —

“ The Election of Mayor and Jurats of the Town and Port of New-Romney, 1571. According to Patent, appeared John Stevens and others, in Number fourteen; by their Consent, Mercer and others chosen Jurats.”

C. J. Eyre. Admission and Election are synonymous. Let it be shewn, that any Person was sworn at this Assembly from an Entry.

Mr. Wynne. Read the Admission and Swearing of John Amersham.

Mr. Wellard reads —

“ 25 March, 1571. John Amersham, natus apud admissus et juratus ad franchis’.

C. J. Eyre. Shew that he was elected before: This is very material Evidence.

Mr. Serj. Darnell. Read the Entry of Thomas Bastard's Admission in 1671.

Mr. Wellard reads —

“ Election of Mayor and Jurats of the Town and Port of New-Romney, 1671. According to Patent, appeared John Chessman, and Laurance Fanc, Thomas Wall, and others; Thomas Bastard, natus apud Talden, admissus ad franchis’, et sol’ feod’.

Mr. Serj. Baynes. Read the Admission of William Southland, the 9th August, 33 Elizæ.

Mr. Wellard reads —

“ Gulielmus Southland, natus apud 9 August, 33 Elizæ, admissus per Major’, Jur’, et Com’ ad franchis’, et sol’ inde feod’, et juratus.”

Mr. Wynne. Read the Admission and Swearing of Thomas Master, and five others, Lady-Day, 1579.

Mr. Wellard reads —

“ Lady-Day, 1579. Appeared William Hyett, John Chessman, Richard Hoppen, and others, Commoners and Freemen; were elected and chosen, Thomas Master, admissus et jurus et solus feodus’, Habbakuk Thomas, admissus et jurus’, Gul’ Taylor, admissus ad franchis’, et jurus, et solus feodus’, James Gardner, Thomas Wymond, } admissus et jurus et solus feodus’, Johannes Southern,

Now turn to the Admission and Swearing of John Smith, and others.

“ New-Romney. Election of Mayor and Jurats, 25th March, 22d James 1st, 1624. Appeared Bedell, Mayor; Lancaster, and others, Commoners and Freemen; John Smith, admissus ad franchis’ et sol’ pro jurus’, Geo. Labden, admissus ad franchis’, et sol’ 3s. 4d. et jurus’, Daniel Duke, admissus et jurus’.

Mr. Serj. Darnell. Read the Entry of the 25th March, 1627.

“ Election 25 March, 1627. Appeared Fell, Mayor; Lancaster, and others; John Plomer, free-born, admissus in franchis’.

N. B. It does not appear he was sworn.

Mr. Serj. Baynes. Read on the Entries in 1659, 1660, and 1666.

“ 25 March, 1659. John Wyvill admitted and sworn.

“ 15 October, 1660. Four Persons admitted and sworn.

“ 29 May,

“ 29 May, 18 Car. 2d, 1666. Mayor and Jurats, at a Common Place;
 “ Richard Strode admitted into the Franchises, “ subscribed the Declaration, and took the “ Oath of a Freeman, according to the “ Customal.”

Mr. Wynne. Turn to the Admission and Swearing of John Gray, the 2d of October, 1699.

Mr. Wellard reads —

“ 2d October, 11 Wil. 3, 1699. Mayor and Jurats, at a Common Place, Commoners and Freemen;
 “ John Gray, being free-born, was admitted “ and sworn according to the Customal.”

Mr. Knowler. Read on till you come to Mr. Furnese and Mr. Papillon's Admission and Swearing.

“ 4 July, 1683. Mayor, Jurats, and Commoners, at a Common Place;

“ John Walker, free-born, Thomas Edwards, “ Richard Kent, and William Pidd, were “ sworn according to the Customal, and “ admitted according to the Election, at a “ Common Assembly:

“ 4 November, 3 Q. Anne, 1704. Mayor, Jurats, and Commoners; “ Walter Whitfield admitted and sworn.

“ 10 October, 1710: Robert Coates, Mayor, Jurats, and Commoners;

“ Robert Furnese admitted and sworn according “ to the Customal.

“ 20 April, 1713. Mayor, Jurats, and Commoners; “ Edward Watson admitted and sworn.

“ 23 March, 1721. Mayor, Jurats, and Commoners;

“ David Papillon admitted and sworn according “ ing to the Customal.”

Mr. Serj. Darnell. We submit it to your Lordship, whether here is any Colour to say, that here is a Right in the Mayor and Jurats solely.

Mr. Knowler. My Lord, on the 28th of November, 1727, John Mascall being before chosen, the Court made an Order, that he should not be sworn.

C. J. Eyre. A very strong Evidence, that the Right is in the Mayor, Jurats, and Commonalty. They have shewn only from 1679: I desire to know, if they can shew any thing before the Restoration.

Mr. Wellard reads —

“ 18 March, 1668. The Corporation considering the small Number of Freemen, pursuant to a Decree of Brotherhood and Ghuestling, have chosen John Shoefmith and others to be Freemen, and ordered them to be summoned to take the Oath according to the Customal.”

Fol. 614. “ They were afterwards declared “ free, and sworn before the Mayor and Jurats.”

C. J. Eyre. The Mayor and Jurats have not the sole Power of Swearing and Admitting. Reading ten or twenty Instances will not prove the sole Right of Swearing to be in them.

Mr. Wellard reads —

“ 34 Car. 2, 1683. Mayor and Jurats; “ Mascall Mayor, no Commoner present; “ A Freeman sworn.”

C. J. Eyre. One or two Instances will not alter the Case.

Mr. Marsb. My Lord; the Issue now before your Lordship and the Jury is, Whether the sole Right of Swearing and Admitting Freemen be in the Mayor and Jurats, or not? And the Gentlemen of the other Side have produced Evidences to shew; that, notwithstanding what we contend for may in some Instances be true, the contrary Custom has likewise been practised, and will destroy our Right. They have begun early with Evidences, (I think as far back as 1571) and carried it down to the Restoration: And the Stile of that Assembly does appear to be; “ At the Election of the Mayor and Jurats,” though it was a general Assembly when the Persons were chosen Freemen. It expresses, that they were admitted and sworn: Admission may signify Election: If they are elected, the Entry goes on and says, they were sworn. But I submit it to your Lordship, Whether, though they, the Commons, joined in Electing, yet when the Swearing comes to be performed, that being a distinct Act, is not solely in the Mayor and Jurats?

My Lord; it is alledged by the Gentlemen of the other Side, that though the Name of the Assembly is often altered, yet the Persons were there who made up the whole Corporation. But the modern Instances given; and some ancient ones, say, the Election was according to the Customal: So that all from 1679 say so. These are ancient Entries; and therefore I submit it to your Lordship, when from these Entries it does appear plainly that they were admitted and sworn in general, whether it be necessary to make that more plain? and also, whether these modern Instances in 1668 and 1683 do not explain what was the Usage before? For, if the Right was in the Freemen with the Mayor and Jurats, they would never part with it; and yet we find, they did order this Swearing to be by the Mayor and Jurats; and they would not have parted with their Right, if they had not been conscious there was no Right in them. As to the Evidence given that refers to the Customal, when Sir Robert Furnese, Mr. Papillon, and Mr. Wellard, were admitted; if the Reference is to the Customal, that Customal we have, and it takes Notice particularly of their being to be sworn before the Mayor and Jurats, and that the Commoners should not be excluded before they had the setting of the Price. Your Lordship was pleased to say, you did not understand the Customs of the Cinque Ports; where we find many ancient Entries, that the Freemen should be sworn according to the Decrees of Brotherhood and Ghuestling; which is an Assembly or Parliament of the Cinque Ports, when they meet and make Orders and Rules; they extend to other Ports in point of Example, Influence, and Power, if not in point of Authority. We hope, my Lord, to produce and give in Evidence these Acts of Assembly; and if these are so, we doubt not but the Jury will find for us.

Mr.

Mr. Wellard reads —

The Old Customal.

“ New-Romney, Henry 7.

“ Item, it is used, that, if a Stranger of good “ Name and Conversation be dwelling within
 “ the Town, and desireth to be a Freeman of “ the Town, the Jurats may grant the Fran“ chises, paying to the Commons as they may “ accord; and when they be accorded, he shall “ be charged in a Book, for to maintain the “ Franchises with his Body and Cattel, and for
 “ to be true in all Points, and for to keep all
 “ the Commons Counsel, and to be obedient “ as another Freeman to the Commons, and to “ have a proper Place, of the Price of 40s.
 “ within the Town, within the next Year ensuing,
 “ by which he may be distreyned and justified,
 “ upon Pain of Forfeiture of his Franchise:
 “ And when he is thus sworn, the Common “ Clerk shall enter his Name in Paper of the “ Common, for to witness the said Grant, and
 “ all his Children, freely gotten after the same “ Day of Grant, may claim and enjoy the Fran“ chise by the same Grant: But, if he have any “ Children before the Day of Grant, or else
 “ that he get any Child otherwise than in Sponsal,
 “ he shall not have the same Franchise by the “ same Grant, but if he be of new Grant, and “ it is to wit, that the Jurats may not grant the “ Franchise to no Stranger-Man, if he be not “ resiant within the Franchise.

Mr. Lacy. My Lord, the Jurats shall grant the Franchises, and the Commons are to set the Price.

Mr. Smith. Grant the Franchises must be to put them in Possession, which cannot be till they are sworn; and the Commons are to set the Price.

Mr. Lacy. All the modern Entries mention, according to the Customal.

C. J. Eyre. It is taking the Oath according to the Customal. Is there the Oath of Office of a Freeman, according to the Customal? If there is, let it be read.

Associate reads the Freeman's Oath—

Mr. Marsh. Now read an Act of Ghueftling.

C. J. Eyre. We'll have no Brotherhood and Ghueftling: I know nothing of it. Let Mr. Town-Clerk explain it.

Mr. Wellard reads —

“ At a Brotherhood held at New-Romney, the “ 8th of July, 1603.

“ Whereas there are, in many of the Towns
 “ and Members of the Cinque Ports, Men of “ Wealth, stayed, and of good Government,
 “ dwelling within the same, who enjoy much “ Benefit of their so dwelling, viz. free from “ Payment of Fifteenths and Tenths, and from “ being returned to appear at Affizes or Sessions
 “ in the County where they inhabit; and receive
 “ many other Privileges and Benefits, by reason
 “ of their so inhabiting within the said Cinque
 “ Ports, ancient Towns, or Members, which “ otherwise they could not enjoy; and yet refuse
 “ to be Freemen of the same Town and Port

 “ Customs of the said Cinque Ports, Towns, and “ Members, bound to do: It is therefore at this “ Assembly fully consented and decreed, That,

 “ the more Part of them, in any of the said “ Cinque Ports, Towns, and their Members, (or “ Bailiff, Jurats, and Commonalty, where no “ Mayor is, or the most Part of them) shall “ Member, which such Mayor and Jurats, or “ Bailiff and Jurats, do govern, and shall by the “ more Voice of Mayor, Jurats, and Commons,

 “ (or Bailiff, Jurats, and Commons, where no “ Mayor is) chuse such their Inhabitant or In“ habitants to be Freeman or Freemen of the “ said Town where they so govern, and shall “ call the said Inhabitant and Inhabitants, so to “ be chosen a Freeman or Freemen of the said “ Town, to their Court-Hall, and there, in full
 “ and open Court, acquaint him and them, so “ chosen to be Freeman or Freemen, of their “ said Choice and Election, and do then and “ there require such Person or Persons, so chosen
 “ for a Freeman or Freemen, to take the usual “ Oath of a Freeman in that Place, and he or “ they, so chosen, shall not then and there,
 “ without further Delay, take the said Oath, and “ become a Freeman of the same Place, shall “ forfeit, to the Use of the said Town and Cor“ poration where such Default or Neglect shall “ happen, a Fine of 10*l.* of lawful Money of “ England. And so often as the Mayor and “ Jurats, (or Bailiff and Jurats, where no Mayor
 “ is) after such Election or Choice of a Freeman
 “ or Freemen, as aforesaid, shall in full Court,
 “ there to be holden, proffer the Oath of a
 “ Freeman there used to such Person or Persons
 “ so chosen as aforesaid, and he or they, to whom “ such Oath shall be proffered, do not take the “ same Oath, and become a Freeman as other “ Freemen of the said Place, shall forfeit for a “ Fine, to the Use of the said Corporation where “ such Neglect shall be, for every such Neglect,
 “ and not taking of his or their Oath, 10*l.* of “ lawful Money of England; to be levied upon “ such Person and Persons, so neglecting to take “ their Oaths, as Fines in the said Place are used
 “ to be levied.”

Mr. Lacy. My Lord, we humbly submit, we are intituled to the sole Right. Instances have been produced, to shew that the Commons have a Right with the Mayor and Jurats; for all the Entries they have produced refer to the Book of Brotherhood and Ghueftling, and all the Choices in that Book are by the Mayor and Jurats, who are to offer the Oath of a Freeman. Read the Act of Ghueftling of the 21st of July, 1668.

Mr. Wellard reads —

“ Brotherhood, or Ghueftling, held at the “ said Town and Port of New-Romney,
 “ 21st July, 1668.

“ Whereas by a Decree of Brotherhood, made
 “ in the Year of our Lord 1603, it is consented
 “ to and decreed, That if the Mayor, Jurats,
 “ and

“ and Commonalty, (or Bailiff, Jurats, and “ Commonalty, where no Mayor is) shall, by “ major Voice of such Mayor, Jurats, and “ Commons, (or Bailiff, Jurats, and Commons, “ where no Mayor is) elect and chuse any In“ habitant or Inhabitants, in their respective “ Corporations, to be Freeman or Freemen of
 “ the said Town, and shall call the said In“ habitant or Inhabitants, so chosen a Freeman
 “ or Freemen of the said Town, to their Court-
 “ Hall, and there, in full and open Court,
 “ acquaint him and them of such Election, and “ shall then and there require such Person or “ Persons, so chosen, to take the usual Oath of “ a Freeman in that Place, and he or they shall “ not then and there, without further Delay,
 “ take the said Oath, and become a Freeman
 “ of that Place, shall forfeit, to the Use of “ the Corporation where such Default or Neglect “ shall happen, for a Fine, the Sum of 10*l.*
 “ And that, so often as any Inhabitant or In“ habitants, so elected Freeman or Freemen in “ any of the said Towns, Ports, or Members, “ shall refuse or neglect, (the said Oath being “ tendered to him or them in Manner aforesaid)
 “ every such Inhabitant shall forfeit the like Sum
 “ of 10*l.* to be levied as in the said Decree is “ directed, and as by the said Decree may more “ fully appear. Now, for that this Assembly
 “ doth find that the said Decree is not so effectual
 “ to compel such Inhabitants to be made free in “ their respective Corporations where they do “ inhabit, but that several Persons do evade the “ same, and the Penalty therein contained, by “ refusing to appear in full and open Court,
 “ where the said Oath is to be required and ten“ dered, as aforesaid, and by divers other subtle “ Devices; Wherefore, for preventing such “ Evasions and Devices for Time to come,
 “ and for the better upholding of several Cor“ porations of the said Ports, Towns, and “ Members, which otherwise may cease and be “ annihilated, it is now by this Assembly fully “ decreed and ordered, That the said Penalty of “ Ten Pounds, mentioned in the said recited
 “ Decree, is, and shall be, by virtue hereof, “ imposed and levied upon every Inhabitant of “ any of the said Ports, Towns, or Members,
 “ who shall be elected a Freeman of such “ respective Corporation wherein he is Inha“ bitant, according to the said ancient Decree;
 “ in case such Inhabitant or Inhabitants, so
 “ elected, shall refuse or neglect to be and appear “ at the next Court of Record to be holden in “ such Corporation wherein he dwelleth, upon “ verbal or other Summons from the Mayor or “ Bailiff of such Corporation, to be made by “ himself, his Serjeant, or other Officer; or,
 “ upon Appearance at such Court, shall refuse
 “ or neglect to take the Oath of a Freeman in “ Manner aforesaid: And that, so often as such “ Inhabitant or Inhabitants, so elected free, shall “ refuse or neglect to appear at any Court to be “ holden in such Town, Port, or Member, where “ he or they inhabit, upon like Summons as is “ last above-mentioned, or appearing, shall not “ take the Oath as aforesaid, they and every of “ them shall forfeit, for every such Offence
 “ contrary to the Intent of this Decree, the like “ Sum of Ten Pounds; which several Fines “ shall be levied by Warrant under the Seal of “ Office of Mayoralty or Balliage of each Town

“ or Member where the same shall be forfeited,
 “ or in such other Manner as Fines in that Place
 “ are usually levied.”

C. J. Eyre. If the Mayor and Jurats call the Man, and he refuse, they may set a Fine upon him.

Mr. Lacy. My Lord, we humbly insist, the sole Right of Swearing and Admitting is in the Mayor and Jurats, or in the Mayor and two Jurats. Their Evidence is of admitting at a Common Assembly; and the Issue is not confined to the Mayor and Jurats only. The first Evidence we began with, was an Order of the Mayor, Jurats, and Commonalty, for the Mayor and Jurats to swear in a Freeman, and they did swear him in accordingly. The other Evidences given are of Instances, where the Mayor, Jurats, and Commonalty, all swore in. And we submit it to your Lordship, whether the Evidence of swearing in at the Common Assembly is not a concurrent Proof, that the sole Right is in the Mayor and Jurats; because the Mayor and Jurats must be Part of the Common Assembly: And if so, though the Commoners are not gone, yet the Swearing shall be construed to be before the Mayor and Jurats; Reddendo singulo singulis. Your Lordship sits Judge of Nisi prius, and takes a Fine; it is not as Judge of Nisi prius—

C. J. Eyre. The Common Assembly, as Mayor, Jurats, and Commonalty, cannot hold a Court of Record. An Assembly can act only, as that Assembly. If a select Number take upon them to do an Act of the Corporation, that will be a void Act.

Mr. Marsh. My Lord, the second Issue is, Whether Gibbon was sworn and admitted before the Mayor and two Jurats?

C. J. Eyre. Gibbon's Plea is, That he was intituled, as having married the Daughter of a Freeman; that the Mayor and Jurats had a Right to swear; and that he was sworn in accordingly.

Mr. Serj. Darnell. The Defendant was not sworn and admitted as by the Plea is alledged. Read the Plea.

(Associate reads Gibbon's Plea, as before opened.)

C. J. Eyre. The Question is, Whether this be the due Manner and Form alledged in the Plea?

Mr. Lacy. We have a Right, but not a sole Right.

Mr. Serj. Darnell. You have pleaded, you have a Right by marrying a Freeman's Daughter; and that the Mayor and Jurats have the sole Right of swearing and admitting you to that Right; and that you were sworn and admitted in due Form: Therefore you were admitted by the Mayor and Jurats, who had the sole Right.

Mr. Serj. Baynes. The Question is, Whether they were duly admitted and sworn by Coates and two Jurats? And if they were, the Right must be in the Mayor and two Jurats only. Read the Plea.

(Associate reads Gibbon's Plea, as before.)

C. J. Eyre. That he was admitted in due Manner and Form; so the Plea is.

Mr. Serj. Darnell. My Lord, by the Plea, he alleges the sole Right to be in the Mayor and Jurats, and that he was admitted in due Manner and Form; which must be by the Mayor and Jurats, who had the sole Right.

Mr. Wynne. My Lord, The second Issue is, Whether, having a Right, he was admitted in due Manner and Form? The Replication answers, That he was not admitted and sworn in Manner and Form as by the Plea is alledged; which would make this an absurd or immaterial Issue; and therefore, in Construction of Law, it is only one Issue.

Mr. Marfb. We submit it to your Lordship, Whether the second Issue involves any Matter of Right? The Matter is before the Jury; and if so, we are not at Liberty to go to the second Issue, and the Fact of Completing remains still; and it is necessary to prove that Issue. It may be thought immaterial by the Gentlemen of the other Side; but, if the first Issue is for us, the other will be absolutely necessary.

Mr. Lacy. My Lord, the first Issue is, Whether Gibbon was sworn and admitted in due Manner and Form before the Mayor and two Jurats?

C. J. Eyre. It was not in due Manner and Form, unless they had a Right.

Mr. Lacy. My Lord, we humbly hope we have given a sufficient Evidence, that there is a sufficient Right in the Mayor and two Jurats; and therefore have proved, that Gibbon was duly admitted.

Mr. Smith. If the first Issue should be found against us, Will it not be true, that there is a Right, if not a sole Right, in the Mayor and Jurats? And if so, the Defendant Gibbon was sworn in that Manner, and so he insists upon it.

Mr. Marfb. My Lord, it is plain there was a Right in the Mayor and two Jurats. The Plea saying it was a sole Right, we submit it to your Lordship, Whether that contradictory Evidence could destroy our Issue, which had tied it down? But this surely cannot in any sort affect the second Issue, Whether it was in due Manner and Form? And, if we prove he was sworn in any due Manner, we hope the Jury will find for us.

C. J. Eyre. It must be in the due Manner you have set forth by your Plea, which must be according to the Right asserted to be in the Issue. We must not suppose there are two Rights. It must be in the due Manner upon the Construction of the Plea; and I shall leave it upon my own Sense of the Matter; I shall not lump it.

Gentlemen of the Jury, This is an Information against Gibbon, in the Nature of a Quo Warranto, for exercising of the Office of a Freeman in New-Romney, to which he was not intituled; and for usurping the Exercise of that Office.

To this he pleads, he is intituled to hold the same, and to exercise this Office, because he had married the Daughter of a Freeman, and in her, by the Custom, is intituled; and that the Right of admitting and swearing is in the Mayor and two Jurats, and that by them he was duly admitted into this Office. To this Plea there has been a Replication, which ends in a Demurrer; so not brought to be tried.

The King replies, that the sole Right of Swearing and Admitting is not in the Mayor and Jurats; and therefore the Defendant is not duly admitted to the Right of a Freeman.

The Right Gibbon has is not now in any Issue; but, supposing he had such a Right, Whether he should be sworn by the Mayor and two Jurats, exclusive of any other People? And the other Issue is about the Defendant's being duly admitted. If the Mayor and Jurats have a sole Right to admit, then Gibbon is duly admitted; and if they have not that sole Right, then he is not duly admitted, in the Sense of this Plea.

To prove the sole Right to be in the Mayor and Jurats, the Defendant has produced several Books; by which it appears, several Freemen have been admitted by the Mayor and Jurats solely. He particularly instances,

8 March, 1679, at a Common Assembly of the Mayor and Jurats and Commonalty of the Town and Port of New-Romney, in the Common Place, Peter Martin is elected, and ordered to be sworn in by the Mayor and Jurats.

3 December, 1694, another Instance of a Freeman admitted and sworn by the Mayor and Jurats.

16 May, 1698, another.

Another the 7th of February, 1708.

Another the 13th of June, 1715.

6 August, 1717, one Widcomb and another.

18 November, 1727, Thomas Wilson.

7 June, 1731, William Gray.

And there are other Instances, the 18th of March, 1668, and the 22d of July, 1683.

So here are People sworn and admitted by the Mayor and Jurats, but the Election is at a Common Assembly; and People elected have been chosen at such an Assembly, and must be so elected, unless they have another Right. But the Common Assembly have not a Right to swear these People; but the sole Right, Gibbon says, (for Swearing and Admitting are synonymous) is in the Mayor and Jurats.

The other Side say, it should be by the Common Assembly, rather than by the Mayor and Jurats only; and to shew you this, they have called for several Books, and shewn more Instances of admitting by the Mayor, Jurats, and Common Assembly, than by the Mayor and Jurats alone; and many Instances of admitting by the Common Assembly.

And this Swearing is a prescriptive Right, no Directions being in the Charter about it.

And the Crown says, that, by ancient Usage, he ought to be admitted by the Common Assembly, and not by the Mayor and Jurats solely; 1679 is the only Admittance.

But they instance, at Lady-Day 1571, at a Common Assembly, at the Election of Mayor and Jurats, several People, John Amersham and others, were admitted; admissus et juratus.

Soon after, 1579, at another Common Assembly, Thomas Master admissus ad franchis', et juratus.

In Book N^o. 7, and in Book N^o. 4, is an Election on the 25th March, 22 Jac. 1. and there certain Men were admitted and sworn, one Smith, Labden, and one Duke paid his 3s. 4d.

Another Instance, in 1627, of a Person admitted and sworn at this Common Assembly.

By their Admittance I understand elected.

Another, in 1659, admitted to the Franchise, and sworn.

Another, the 15th of October, 1660; four Persons admitted to the Franchise then.

Another, 29 May, 1666, Richard Strode having taken the Oath of Freedom, according to the Customal.

2 October, 1699, John Gray, free-born, was admitted, and took the Oath: Though he was not intituled by their Election, but was free-born, yet the Common Assembly swore him.

4 July, 1683, at the Common Assembly, John Walker, free-born, and three others; they swore him and the others, and they were admitted.

4 November, 1704, Whitfield was admitted, and took the Oath.

10 October, 1710, Robert Furnese was admitted.

20 April, 1713, Mr. Watson admitted.

23 March, 1721, Mr. Papillon was admitted in the same Manner.

Which shews, the sole Right was not in the Mayor and Jurats; because the Common Assembly exercised this at the same Time, and did it before the Mayor and Jurats.

In 1679, a Person elected was ordered to be sworn by the Mayor and Jurats: But sure they have not the sole Right, there being more Precedents against the sole Right than for it.

The ancient Practice has been to swear them by the Common Assembly, and no modern Practice can take away that Right.

If you think the sole Right is in the Mayor and Jurats, then you must find for the Defendant.

But, if you think it to be a concurrent Right with the Common Assembly, then the Issue is against the Defendant; for the Mayor and Jurats have not the sole Right.

The second Issue is, Whether the Defendant was sworn by the Mayor and Jurats? But this depends on the former Issue; for, after the Mayor and Jurats Right is set forth to be the sole Right, and the Defendant says he was duly admitted, it is, he was admitted according to the Right insisted on by the Plea. And if the Mayor and Jurats have not the sole Right, we are not to suppose they have any other Right; for the Defendant has confined himself to the sole Right. He says, he was duly admitted; which must be by the Right set forth by the Plea, which is the Right of Swearing solely by the Mayor and Jurats.

The Question therefore is, Whether the Mayor and Jurats have the sole Right?

If you find for the King, or for the Defendant, in the first Issue, you must find the second Issue in the same Manner.

Verdict for the King in both Issues.

N U M B E R X V I I .

The KING against RICHARD ELLES,

Upon an Information, in the Nature of a Quo Warranto, by the King's Coroner and Attorney, against the Defendant, to shew by what Authority he claims to be Mayor of the Town and Port of New-Romney, at the Relation of Benjamin Man. Tried at Kent Assizes, held at Maidstone, the 6th of August, 1734, before the Right Hon. the Lord Chief Justice Eyre.

Mr. Knowler.

MAY it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury; This is an Information, in the Nature of a Quo Warranto, against the Defendant Elles, to shew by what Authority he claims to be Mayor of the Town and Port of New-Romney: And the Information sets forth, That the Town and Port of New-Romney is an ancient Town and Port, and one of the five ancient Ports of this Kingdom; and that the Barons and Inhabitants of the said Town and Port are, and for ten Years last past, and long before, were, and have been, one Body Corporate and Politic, in Deed and in Name, by the Name of the Mayor, Jurats, and Commonalty of the Town and Port of New-Romney, in the County of Kent; and that the Office of Mayor of the said Town and Port is, and for and during all the Time aforesaid hath been, a public Office, and an Office of great Trust and Preheminence, within the said Town and Port, touching the Rule and Government of the said Town and Port, and the Administration of public Justice within the same Town and Port; and that Richard Elles, of the Town and Port of New-Romney aforesaid, Yeoman, on the 19th of April, in the seventh Year of his present Majesty, at the Town and Port of New-Romney aforesaid, did use and exercise, and from thence continually, to the Time of filing the Information, hath used and exercised, and yet doth there use and exercise, without any legal Warrant, Royal Grant, or Right whatsoever, the Office of Mayor of the said Town and Port, and to have, use, and enjoy all the Liberties, Privileges, and Franchises thereof; which the said Richard Elles upon his Majesty hath usurped, in Contempt of his Majesty, and to the great Damage and Prejudice of his Royal Prerogative, and also against his Crown and Dignity: Whereupon he prays Process, &c.

To this the Defendant has pleaded, That the said Town and Port is an ancient Town and Port, and one of the Five ancient Ports of this Kingdom; and that the Barons and Inhabitants of the said Town and Port are, and for the Space of ten Years last past, and long before, were, and have been, one Body Corporate and Politic, by the Name of Mayor, Jurats, and Commonalty of the Town and Port of New-Romney, in the County of Kent; and the Office of Mayor to be a public Office, and an Office of great Trust and Preheminence, as by the Information is supposed.

And

And that the late Queen Elizabeth, by her Letters Patent, dated at Northaw, the 4th of August, in the fifth Year of her Reign, did will and grant, that the Barons and Inhabitants of the said Town and Port (who before were incorporated by the Name of Jurats and Commonalty, as she was informed) from thenceforth for ever should and might be one Body in itself Incorporated, in Deed and Name, by the Name of Mayor, Jurats, and Commonalty of the Town and Port of New-Romney, in the County of Kent.

And thereby made and ordained John Chessman, then one of the said Jurats, Mayor of the said Town and Port, to have and exercise that Office until Lady-Day then next ensuing, if he should so long live; and did thereby make, ordain, approve, and confirm John Percker, William Ipse, George Holton, Laurence Fanc, and Jeffery Tomkin, then Jurats of the said Town and Port; to have and exercise that Office during their respective Lives, in Manner and Form as the Jurats of the said Town before that Time exercised their said Offices.

And thereby willed and granted, that upon Lady-Day then next ensuing, in the Parish-Church of St. Nicholas, within the said Town and Port, one of the Jurats of the said Town and Port should and might be chosen Mayor, by the Jurats and Commonalty of the said Town and Port, for one whole Year then next ensuing; which said Jurat, so elected to be Mayor, if he should be present, should take his corporal Oath, for the due Execution of his Office, before his Predecessor, in like Manner and Form as the Mayor of the Town and Port of Sandwich used to take it; and if such Person, so elected, should not be present, then at the next Court to be holden within the said Town and Port: And so from Year to Year, and from Time to Time, the Mayor shall be chosen for ever.

And that every one of the Jurats, from Time to Time, from thenceforth for ever, should be chosen by the Commonalty, or the greater Part of them there present, out of themselves, in like Manner and Form as before that Time they had been used to be chosen there; yet so that the Jurats at one Time should not be, in the whole, above the Number of Twelve, besides the Mayor.

And the Defendant by his Plea further saith, that upon the 25th of March last, and long before, he was, and still is, one of the Jurats of the said Town and Port: And so being a Jurat as aforesaid, and John Coates, Esq; then being Mayor, and then one of the Jurats, the then Jurats and Commonalty assembled themselves together in the Parish-Church of St. Nicholas, within the said Town and Port, for the Year then next ensuing, according to the Tenor of the said Letters Patent; and being so assembled, then and there, at that Assembly, the major Part of the said Jurats and Commonalty then present there (of which said Jurats the said John Coates, the then Mayor, then was one, and present there) chose him the said Richard Elles, then being one of the Jurats as aforesaid, to be Mayor of the said Town and Port for the Year then next ensuing, according to the Form and Effect of the said Letters Patent: And the said Richard Elles being so chosen into the Place and Office of Mayor of the said Town and Port as aforesaid, after his said Election, to wit, then and there, at the same Assembly in the Parish-Church aforesaid, he the said Richard Elles was duly sworn into his said Office by Robert Loftie, then Town-Clerk of the said Town and Port, before the said John Coates, being the last Predecessor of the said Richard Elles in the Office of Mayor of the said Town and Port; and the said Richard Elles, then and there, at the said Assembly, took his corporal Oath, for the due Execution of his said Office of Mayor of the said Town and Port, before the said John Coates, his last Predecessor as aforesaid, the said Oath being administered by the said Town-Clerk as aforesaid, (the same being the like Manner and Form, in which the Mayor of the Town and Port of Sandwich, in the said Letters Patent named, at the Time of making the said Letters Patent, was, and ever since hath been, and been used and accustomed to be sworn into the said Office of Mayor of the said Town and Port of Sandwich) according to the Form and Effect of the Letters Patent aforesaid: And by virtue thereof, the said Richard Elles, after his Election and Swearing aforesaid, upon the said 25th of March last, and from thence continually afterwards, until the Time of exhibiting the Information, at the Town and Port aforesaid, was, and still is Mayor, and by that Warrant claims to be Mayor, of the said Town and Port; and traverses the Usurpation.

The King replies, That the said Richard Elles was not one of the Jurats of the said Town and Port, in Manner and Form as he hath alledged by Pleading; and prayeth that this may be inquired of by the Country; and the said Elles prayeth the like.

So that, Gentlemen, the first Issue you are to try is, Whether the said Richard Elles was one of the Jurats of the Town and Port of New-Romney, in Manner and Form as he hath alledged by his Plea?

And the second Issue is, Whether the major Part of the Jurats and Commonalty of the said Town and Port did chuse the said Richard Elles to be Mayor of the said Town and Port for the Year then next ensuing, according to the Form and Effect of the said Letters Patent, in Manner and Form as the said Elles hath also alledged by Pleading?

Gentlemen, the third Issue is, Whether the said Richard Elles was duly sworn into the Office of Mayor of the said Town and Port, in Manner and Form as he hath alledged by Pleading?

And the fourth Issue is, Whether the said Richard Elles did take his corporal Oath, for the due Execution of the said Office of Mayor of the said Town and Port, according to the Form and Effect of the Letters Patent aforesaid, in the Manner and Form as he hath alledged by Pleading?

And, Gentlemen, the fifth Issue you are to try is, Whether the Manner and Form, in which the said Richard Elles hath alledged himself in his Plea to have been sworn into the Office of Mayor of the said Town and Port of New-Romney, be the like Manner and Form, in which the Mayor of the Town and Port of Sandwich, in the said Letters Patent named, at the Time of making the said Letters Patent, was, and ever since hath been, and been used and accustomed to be sworn into the said Office of Mayor of Sandwich aforesaid, in Manner and Form as he hath alledged by Pleading?

If therefore, Gentlemen, Evidence is laid before you, to prove that the Defendant Elles, being one one of the Jurats of this Town and Port, was duly elected and sworn into the Office of Mayor, then, Gentlemen, you will find a Verdict for him.

Mr. Serj. Darnell. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury; I am Council for the Defendant Elles; and you will please to observe, that, by very great Art, these Issues are all turned upon the Defendant to prove. By his Plea he sets forth the Constitutions of the Town and Port of New-Romney; that he was duly chosen into the Office of Mayor, and had taken the Oaths. But the other Side turn every thing upon him by Proof: They say, he was not a Jurat; that the major Part of the Jurats and Commonalty did not chuse him; and then, merely to multiply Issues, and for Delay, say, You are not a Jurat; the major Part of the Jurats and Commonalty did not chuse you; you are not duly sworn: That he did not take his Oath of Office according to the Form of the Letters Patent; that the Manner and Form, in which the said Richard Elles is alledged by his Plea to be sworn into his Office, is not according to the Customs of Sandwich.

My Lord, and Gentlemen of the Jury, there has lately been a very great Contest in the Court of King's-Bench about the Officers of this Town; and there were two Candidates for this Office of Mayor, one Wightwick, and the Defendant Elles; and upon the Poll it appeared, that Elles had eleven Votes, and Wightwick ten; so that Elles was chosen Mayor by the Majority of one Voice: But the presiding Officer said, he had a Man who was appointed to take the Poll; by which Poll it appeared, that Gibbon and Darby, who had never been allowed to be Freemen, had polled; and then, upon that Poll, there were twelve Votes for Wightwick, and eleven for Elles: upon which the Oath of Office was administered, and both Candidates were sworn.

Gentlemen, on Application to the Court of King's-Bench, Elles by Affidavits made it appear, that Gibbon and Darby had no Right to Freedoms; on which the Court declared, the Point would turn on Gibbon's Right; and then the Question was, Whether Persons marrying Freemen's Daughters had a Right to Freedoms? and Darby's Right was to abide the Fate of that. But they have declined this, and turn all the Circumstances of proving upon us. We shall therefore, Gentlemen, fully prove every one of these Issues to you by Witnesses; in the Course of which Evidence, you will hear, Gentlemen, of very great Sums of Money offered to engage those Freemen, who were in Elles's Interest, to vote for Wightwick. We shall prove to you, Gentlemen, that one hundred Pounds was offered for one Vote, and even so large a Sum as one thousand Pounds for another, in order to procure Wightwick to be Mayor.

Under these Circumstances, Gentlemen, two Mandamus's issued from the Court of King's-Bench to admit these two Men; for they all agreed there was no Right by Marrying; and then these two Persons were sworn in by virtue of these Mandamus's.

If therefore, Gentlemen, we shew there was a Majority for Elles upon the Poll as taken by the Town-Clerk; notwithstanding the Pocket-Poll they have set up; we hope you'll take it upon the Foot of the Town-Clerk's Poll, and find a Verdict for the Defendant accordingly.

Mr. Serj. Baynes. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury; I am Council in this Case with the Defendant: And this is an Information granted by the Court of King's-Bench, in order to procure Peace in Romney, where there were two acting Mayors at one and the same Time; and the Court granted this Information, to try which of them was duly elected. Upon this five Issues are joined: And the first Issue you are to try, Gentlemen, is, Whether Elles was a Jurat? And we shall shew he was first elected a Freeman, and then, in due Manner and Form, a Jurat. The second Issue is, Whether the Mayor, Jurats, and Commonalty of the Town and Port of New-Romney, did chuse the Defendant Elles Mayor? Gentlemen, in this Town, we see, there are twenty-one Voters: Wightwick stood in opposition to Elles; the Town-Clerk took the Poll; and on casting it up, there appeared to be for Elles eleven Votes, and for Wightwick ten; so that Elles was duly chosen Mayor. But another Person pretended to take the Poll, and set down such Persons as he thought fit, and amongst them Gibbon and Darby, as Voters for Wightwick; and that cast the Majority of Voters on Wightwick: But Darby and Gibbon's Votes ought not to have been taken, their Right being by marrying Freemen's Daughters; whereas there is no such Custom, nor ever was, nor ever attempted till the Year 1728, when it was set up by this Gibbon: And thereupon the Corporation ordered it to be entered in their Books, that he was not to be admitted, for that there was no such Custom; which, we shall call our Witnesses, and fully prove to you.

The third Issue, Gentlemen, is, Whether the Defendant Elles was duly sworn into the Office of Mayor, in Manner and Form as by his Plea he hath alledged? And we shall shew you, that he was sworn by the Town-Clerk, before the Mayor.

The fourth Issue is, Whether Elles took his corporal Oath, for the due Execution of the Office of Mayor, according to the Form and Effect of the Letters Patent?

The fifth Issue is, Whether the Defendant Elles was sworn according to the Manner and Form as the Mayor of Sandwich is sworn?

Gentlemen, we shall call our Witnesses, and make it plainly appear, that these Issues are for the Defendant Elles; and then we hope you will find a Verdict for him accordingly.

Mr. Marsh. My Lord, in order to be a Jurat, he must be a Freeman.

C. J. Eyre. Was he a Jurat?

Mr. Knowler. He acted as a Jurat.

Mr. Serj. Darnell. His acting as a Jurat is Evidence, prima facie, that he was a Freeman.

C. J. Eyre. Will you admit he was a Jurat?

Mr. Marsh. They may go on; I shall make no Bargains.

Mr. Serj. Darnell. Swear Mr. Loftie; (which was done.)

Mr. Marsh. What do they call him to? We object to him.

Mr. Serj. Darnell. To prove an Assembly-Book. Mr. Loftie, is that the Entry of Elles's Election to be a Jurat?

Mr. Loftie. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Darnell. Read it.

Associate reads—

“John Took, Mayor. At a Common Assembly held the 23d December, 1730, Mayor, Jurats, and Commonalty duly elected Edward Batchelor and Richard Elles to be Jurats.”

Mr. Lacy. The Election-Day is the 25th of March.

C. J. Eyre. This proves an Election the 23d of December, 1730. Was he duly sworn?

Mr. Serj. Baynes. Yes, my Lord. Read his Swearing.

Associate reads —

“ 4 January, 1730, Batchelor and Elles took the Oath of Jurats.”

C. J. Eyre. Go on, Issue by Issue: First, Whether Elles was a Jurat? They insist, by Custom, the Jurats must be sworn every Year: Prove it.

Mr. Serj. Darnell. My Lord, they have given us Notice, that every Qualification of the Jurats and Freemen would be objected to.

Mr. Knowler. A Jurat (so MS. 2, Mayor) is said to be an annual Officer. We shall prove, my Lord, that Elles was chosen for the Year 1734.

C. J. Eyre. Mr. Wellard, you must not talk more than necessary.

Mr. Marsh. It is necessary to be a Freeman, in order to be a Jurat.

Mr. Serj. Darnell. A Man is a Jurat; Is it necessary he be a Freeman, in order to be qualified for a Jurat?

Mr. Marsh. If the Entry be sufficient, it is needless to go on.

C. J. Eyre. The Qualifications of a Jurat are, A Jurat he must be, to be a Mayor; for a Jurat, he must be a Freeman.

Mr. Marsh. These Points are often disputed.

C. J. Eyre. Dispute what you will; but he was owned a Freeman by the Corporation, when he was made a Jurat.

Mr. Marsh. He was sworn before the Mayor and Jurats only.

C. J. Eyre. The Entries are all so. Nothing has been read to shew they might not swear him. If he was sworn by the Mayor and Jurats, that must be proved: We had nothing of that in the last Cause.

Mr. Serj. Darnell. The Question is, Whether the major Part of the Mayor, Jurats, and Commonalty, did duly chuse him Mayor, according to the Form and Effect of the Letters Patent? And, in order to prove that he was duly chosen, we are to shew what were the Number of Jurats and Freemen that voted for Elles; for which Purpose I shall call Mr. Loftie.

Mr. Marsh. We object to Loftie: He was one of the Persons who voted for Elles, and therefore has given his Opinion already.

C. J. Eyre. I never knew it denied a Corporation-Man that voted; he is a legal Witness.

Mr. Serj. Darnell. Mr. Loftie, was you present at the last Election of a Mayor for Romney?

Mr. Loftie. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Darnell. Where was it made?

Mr. Loftie. At St. Nicholas.

Mr. Serj. Darnell. What Number of Freemen were present and voted?

Mr. Loftie. Twenty-one.

Mr. Lacy. Are you Town-Clerk of Romney? Do you keep a Book?

Mr. Loftie. Yes.

Mr. Lacy. Where is that Book?

Mr. Loftie. Mr. Wellard took it away.

Mr. Wellard. Here it is.

Mr. Loftie. Mr. Wellard and Mr. Wightwick took away the Books, and Mr. Wightwick has entered the Proceedings of that Day himself.

C. J. Eyre. Are there any Entries made by you of the Proceedings of that Day?

Mr. Loftie. I have a Copy of the Poll, my Lord.

C. J. Eyre. Why were they not entered?

Mr. Loftie. Because Coates insisted I should take the Poll according to the Minutes they had taken.

C. J. Eyre. And you did not think it right?

Mr. Loftie. No, my Lord; because they had taken Gibbon and Darby's Votes, who, I thought, had no Right to vote.

Mr. Serj. Darnell. You take an Oath; what is that Oath?

Mr. Loftie. To enter faithfully and right all the Proceedings of the Corporation.

C. J. Eyre. You did not make an Entry of the Poll, because every body did not agree to it; but you took a Copy of the Poll. Read the Oath of the Town-Clerk.

Associate reads —

Mr. Knowler. Read the Poll again.

Mr. Loftie. Wightwick and Elles — The Votes for Mayor —

For Wightwick:

John Coates , Esq;	Joshua Coates ,
Wightwick ,	Odibam Coates ,
Batchelor ,	Wilson ,
Rutton ,	Haffenden ,
Bassett ,	Dree .

These were all that voted for Wightwick, but Gibbon and Darby, who, I apprehended, had no Right to vote; and therefore I did not insert their Names.

For Elles:

Himself,	Weeden ,
Robert Mascall ,	Langdon ,
Norman ,	Loftie ,
Tookey ,	Benjamin Cobb ,
Smith ,	William Gray .
John Mascall ,

Mr. Marsh. Darby and Gibbon were there, but you did not take their Votes — Was no body else there? Did not Mr. Papillon and Wellard send, that they might be admitted to come to exercise their Franchise of voting?

Mr. Lacy. I desire to see the Poll-Paper, the very Paper you took in the Church, Mr. Loftie.

(Mr. Loftie produces the Poll-Paper, as before.)

Mr. Lacy. Did not you take another List or Poll?

(Mr. Loftie produces another.)

Mr. Lacy. He took one List, and then, by Elles's Direction, took another. Read it.

Mr. Loftie reads another Poll —

For Wightwick:

For Elles:

John Coates , Esq;	Elles ,
Wightwick ,	Robert Mascall ,
Batchelor ,	Norman ,
Rutton ,	Tookey ,
Bassett ,	Smith ,
Joshua Coates ,	John Mascall ,
Odibam Coates ,	Weeden ,
Wilson ,	Langdon ,

Dree ,	Benjamin Cobb ,
John Darby ,	William Gray .
John Gibbon ,
Papillon ,
Wellard .

Mr. Marsb. Where does this Assembly meet?

Mr. Loftie. In the South Chancel of St. Nicholas.

Mr. Serj. Darnell. Is the Door usually kept open, or shut?

Mr. Loftie. Shut, to prevent People coming in, who have no Business.

Mr. Smith. Which of the two Polls did you minute down first?

Mr. Loftie. The last-delivered.

Mr. Marsb. My Lord, this is the principal Issue; and we object to the Evidence of this Person who voted for this Mayor. He has given his Opinion already; and therefore I submit it to your Lordship, whether he is a legal Evidence? Or otherwise we insist, the Persons taken down as Pollers, that they are more in Number than he has given an Account of. According to his List, they are but ten; but there must be four Votes more added, two of which are Persons not numbered by him.

My Lord, Darby's and Gibbon's Rights to vote depend upon their being free of this Corporation; and if we shew they are free, and are admitted, it will be sufficient Reason for putting them on the Poll for Wightwick; and then Elles can't be Mayor. Besides, there is Mr. Papillon's Right, who was not in the Church, because the Door was shut within-side; and Mr. Wellard was also a Freeman, and he could not come in, the Door being shut. We shall shew you, Gentlemen, their Qualification, and that they could not get into the Church; that they went to the Door, but there was no Admission to be had; that they sent in a Letter to the Mayor, and demanded Admittance; and if they had been let in, they had voted for Mr. Wightwick; and they having a Right, and asserting that Right, these Votes ought to be allowed to them.

In the first of the late King, there was the Case of the Mayor of Hythe tried before my Lord Macclesfield at this Place. Two Persons offered their Votes at the Poll, and being refused by the presiding Officer, the Court was of Opinion, they were good Votes. And therefore we humbly hope your Lordship will allow these to be good Votes, and, in consequence, that the Jury will find for us.

Mr. Lacy. The Issue now before your Lordship is, Whether the major Part of the Jurats and Commonalty did, or did not, chuse the Defendant Elles Mayor? By Loftie's Poll it appears, there were eleven Votes for Elles, and ten for Wightwick: So that, if either of the four Votes disallowed by him shall appear to be good, then, Gentlemen of the Jury, they do not prove their Issue. As to Mr. Papillon, he is a Freeman, admitted and sworn; and though his Vote was refused, he tendered it, and sent in a Note in Writing, signifying to the Mayor that he voted for Wightwick, and is therefore a good Vote. And as to Darby and Gibbon, we submit, whether, being sworn, they are not in the Exercise of their Office, and ought to be allowed good Votes. We shall call our Witnesses, and shew the Entries of Gibbon and Darby.— Mr. Loftie, look upon the Book; Is it your Hand-writing?

Mr. Loftie. Yes. Reads—

“ J. Coates, Mayor. Be it remembered, at a Court of Record held the 25th of March, 1734, the Corporation having been served with a Writ of Mandamus, Gibbon and Darby,

“ demanding their Freedoms, were admitted and sworn.”

Mr. Marsb. Where is Mr. Papillon and Mr. Wellard's Entry?

C. J. Eyre. Gibbon and Darby were admitted before the Election?

Mr. Loftie. Yes, my Lord.

C. J. Eyre. How came you, then, to refuse their Votes?

Mr. Loftie. Because I thought there was an Order made, that they should not be admitted to vote.

C. J. Eyre. Were they elected by the Mayor and Jurats?

Mr. Loftie. Never, my Lord.

Mr. Wellard. Read my Election, and then read my Swearing.

Associate reads—

“ Nicholas Durrant, Mayor. At a Common Assembly of the Town and Port of New-Romney, in the Common Place, 20 October, 1720, Nicholas Durrant, Mayor, &c. elected Charles Wellard, an Inhabitant and Town-Clerk, to be a Freeman of this Town and Port; and he was ordered to be sworn, more solito, according to Brotherhood and Ghuestling.

“ 19 December, 1720, he was sworn and admitted.”

Mr. Serj. Darnell. Is that the Assembly-Book?

Mr. Wellard. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Darnell. My Lord, all the Entries of swearing these People are in the Assembly-Book, and therefore it is but a delegated Power.

Mr. Lacy. Read the Mandate for chusing two Barons to send to Parliament.

Associate reads—

“ Whereas a Mandate for chusing two Barons was read, the Mayor and Jurats—

Mr. Marsb. Read Mr. Papillon's Election and Swearing.

Associate reads—

“ New-Romney, ff. Mayor. At a Common Assembly of the said Town and Port of New-Romney, held in the Common Place there, the 23d of March, 1731, elected David Papillon a Freeman of this Town and Port; and he was sworn and admitted, more solito, according to Brotherhood and Ghuestling.”

Mr. Dodd called and sworn.

Mr. Marsb. Were you present at the last Election for Mayor?

Mr. Dodd. Yes.

Mr. Marsb. Was Mr. Papillon there?

Mr. Dodd. Yes; but he was not in the Church.

Mr. Marsb. And how came he not to get in?

Mr. Dodd. Because the Door was locked.

Mr. Marsb. Did he try to get in?—

“ Here the Chief Justice was told by a By-stander, that a Person was taking Notes; on which he asked,

“ C. J. Eyre. Who is it?— Who employed you? Give me the Paper.

“ On

- “ On which the Notes were delivered to him;
 “ and, after turning them over, he said, with “ some Warmth,
 “ C. J. Eyre. I observe my Name in it:
 “ Who was you employed by, to take those “ Notes?
 “ Short-hand Writer. My Lord, I was em“ ployed by a Gentleman concerned in the Event
 “ of these Issues.
 “ C. J. Eyre. Who?
 “ Short-hand Writer. Mr. Papillon desired me
 “ to attend and take Notes.
 “ Then the Chief Justice called cross the Court to “ Mr. Papillon:
 “ C. J. Eyre. Mr. Papillon, here is a Man
 “ taking Notes, that says you employed him.
 “ Mr. Papillon. Yes, my Lord, I desired him
 “ to attend, and take Notes.
 “ C. J. Eyre. Who is he? I observe my “ Name in several Places. I suppose, I shall “ next Week have my Name in Print.
 “ Mr. Papillon. My Lord, it is no common “ Short-hand Writer; it is Mr. I never “ knew it was a Crime to take Notes in a Court
 “ where your Lordship sat.
 “ C. J. Eyre. Well, I hope you are the better
 “ for them.
 “ Mr. Papillon. I think I am, my Lord; and
 “ on some Occasions they have been of great “ Use to me.
 “ C. J. Eyre. I am glad to hear that.
 “ Mr. Papillon. Your Lordship presides here;
 “ so do with the Papers what your Lordship “ pleases.
 “ C. J. Eyre. No, no. Now I know it is “ done by Authority, if I see any thing in Print,
 “ I shall know where to apply.
 “ Mr. Papillon. It is no Reason to suppose
 “ it should come from me, if your Lordship
 “ does; there are great Numbers now taking “ Notes, as well as Mr. and it may “ sure come as well from any of them. My “ Lord, I never was a Libeller, nor ever in my “ Life encouraged a Publication of this Sort.
 “ We are all liable to Accusations of this Sort:
 “ I have seen many Falshoods printed, but never “ thought them worth my Notice. My Lord,
 “ I am not answerable: Do with the Notes what “ you will.
 “ C. J. Eyre. No; since it is your Writer, “ let the Man have his Paper, and go on.
 (The Notes being out of the Short-hand Writer's Possession, he could not take down what was said.)
 “ C. J. Eyre. There, take down that, and print
 “ it too, if you will; I don't care; though I don't “ say it is Law, nor will justify it as such.
 “ Mr. Papillon. Here, give me the Notes:
 “ Let my Lord have them, since they give “ Offence.
 “ C. J. Eyre. No, I will not have them.
 “ Let the Man have his Paper again, since it is “ done by Authority.
 “ Mr. Papillon. My Lord, pray do what you “ please with them; cut them to Pieces, or put “ them in the Fire.
 “ C. J. Eyre. No, no. Let him go on, since
 “ he is your Writer.
 “ Mr. Papillon. Then pray let him go on,
 “ without Reflections.”
- Mr. Lacy. Pray, Mr. Dodd, where did they assemble?
 Mr. Dodd. They went from Mr. Coates's.
 Mr. Serj. Darnell. Did Mr. Papillon and Mr.
 Wellard go with the People to the Church?
 Mr. Dodd. No.
 Mr. Marsh. Was Mr. Papillon there?
 Mr. Dodd. Yes.
 Mr. Serj. Darnell. Why could not he go into the Church, as well as Coates and the rest?
 Mr. Dodd. I do not know.
 Mr. Serj. Darnell. Did you see the Mayor go from the House?
 Mr. Dodd. Yes.
 Mr. Serj. Darnell. What Time did they go?
 Mr. Dodd. At Two o'Clock.
 Mr. Marsh. Is that the usual Time?
 Mr. Dodd. Yes.
 Mr. Marsh. How long was the Door locked before Mr. Papillon and Mr. Wellard came?
 C. J. Eyre. Did the Mayor and Jurats see them coming?
 Mr. Dodd. I do not know.
 Mr. Serj. Darnell. Is it not usual to lock the Door on such Occasions?
 Mr. Dodd. Yes; and not to open it till the Election is over.
 Mr. Serj. Darnell. Did Coates or Wightwick give Orders to shut out Mr. Papillon or Wellard?
 Mr. Dodd. I do not know.
 Mr. Serj. Darnell. Was any body shut out
 besides?
 Mr. Dodd. Several.
 Mr. Knowler. How long was Mr. Wellard in Town before the Election?
 Mr. Dodd. About five Weeks.
 Mr. Knowler. Whose House was he at during that Time?
 Mr. Dodd. At Gibbon's.
 Mr. Knowler. How long was it after the Door was shut, that Mr. Papillon and Mr. Wellard came to apply to get in?
 Mr. Dodd. A Minute or two.
 Mr. Knowler. Why did they not apply to the Door-keeper to be let in?
 Mr. Dodd. I do not know.
 Mr. Marsh. Did you ever know a Freeman refused, that came and applied to be let in, a little after the Door was shut?
 Mr. Dodd. Yes.
 Mr. Serj. Baynes. Was any particular Message sent to the Mayor by Mr. Papillon or Mr. Wellard?
 Mr. Dodd. Not that I know of.
- Mr. Wellard sworn.
- Mr. Marsh. Mr. Wellard, you was with Mr.
 Papillon: Pray, give an Account of his going to Church, and his Demand to come in.
 Mr. Wellard. I went with him to the Church, where the Election was, in order to vote for Wightwick. As we were going, we saw the Witness last examined, and desired him to take Notice we went for that Purpose. We went up to the Doors, and found them fastened within.
 Mr. Marsh. Did you observe any body about the Doors?
 Mr. Wellard. Yes, the Mayor's Servant and others. I knocked and pushed at the Door, but no body came, or gave any Answer.
 Mr. Marsh. And by what Method did you acquaint the Assembly that you were there, and desired Admission, in order to give your Votes?
 Mr.

Mr. Wellard. We sent in Letters to the Mayor, to acquaint him we were at the Door. We gave the Letters to Mr. Wightwick, and desired him to deliver them to the Mayor. We expected to be denied, and therefore gave Letters to Wightwick, to deliver to the Mayor.

C. J. Eyre. Mr. Wellard, ——— If you will not hear, I cannot help it. They went to the Church; you came after, and tried to get in. You sent in a Letter to the Mayor by Wightwick; How could that be? because he was gone into the Church before.

Mr. Wellard. My Lord, I gave Mr. Wightwick my Letter to carry in with him, before he went.

C. J. Eyre. It was to acquaint him, you were ready to come in, and give your Vote? — Can you tell whether Wightwick delivered that Letter, or not?

Mr. Wellard. Yes, my Lord; he told me, after the Election was over, he had delivered it.

Mr. Marsh. Did you not, on the Day of the Election, dine with Coates? Did not the Mayor, and all the Jurats and Freemen, dine there, and go from thence? And if you had had a Mind, could you not have got in with them?

Mr. Wellard. No; the Mayor told us, if we had a Mind, we should not come in.

Mr. Knowler. Was you not in the Church before the Business was over? Did not you come into the Chancel?

Mr. Wellard. Not till after the Mayor was sworn, and had Possession of the Staff.

Mr. Knowler. Did you then tender yourself to vote?

Mr. Wellard. No; it was all over.

Mr. Serj. Darnell. You dined with Coates; Did you prognosticate there would be a Shutting of the Door, and a Refusal?

Mr. Wellard. Yes; because the Mayor had told us, we should not come in.

Mr. Serj. Darnell. Did you write Word Mr. Papillon was with you?

Mr. Wellard. I sent in the following Letter.

(Produces and reads it.)

“ Mr. Mayor,

“ I am at the Church, and demand to be admitted, to give my Vote, as others, for Mayor. “ If I am denied, pray take Notice, that I give “ my Vote for Mr. Humphry Wightwick to be “ Mayor for the Year ensuing, I being at this “ Time a Resident in this Town.

“ C. Wellard.”

Mr. Serj. Darnell. Whose Advice did you write that Letter by?

Mr. Wellard. I demur to that Question. In Point of Law I ought not to answer it.

C. J. Eyre. I think, Mr. Wellard, you should answer the Question, because it is an indifferent Question.

Mr. Wellard. Mr. Papillon and I concerted it, in order to preserve our Rights.

C. J. Eyre. You thought they would not let you in; therefore you wrote this Letter, and sent it?

Mr. Wellard. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Lacy. Did Mr. Papillon write this Letter?

Mr. Wellard. I know his Hand; I saw him write it, and deliver it to Wightwick.

VOL. X.

Associate reads —

“ Mr. Mayor,

“ I am at the Church, and demand to be admitted, to give my Vote, as others, for “ Mayor. If I am denied, pray take Notice, “ that I give my Vote for Mr. Humphry Wightwick to be Mayor for the Year ensuing, I being “ at this Time a Resident in this Town.

“ D. Papillon.”

Mr. Batchelor called and sworn.

Mr. Lacy. Look upon the two Papers signed Papillon and Wellard; Were they delivered by Mr. Wightwick to the Mayor?

Mr. Batchelor. I saw Wightwick deliver them to Coates, the Mayor.

Mr. Lacy. Was it before or after the Choice?

Mr. Batchelor. It was before; and the Mayor said, he would admit no Foreigners to come in. The Mayor shewed the Letters about, and gave them to me to read, and said, he would admit no Foreigners in.

Mr. Lacy. Had the Freemen given their Votes?

Mr. Batchelor. No; they were gone to the Chancel to vote, but had not voted.

Mr. Lacy. Did you see the Letters delivered to Wightwick?

Mr. Batchelor. No.

Mr. Lacy. How do you know them to be the same?

Mr. Batchelor. Because they were open. I saw Coates sign at the Bottom, “ This was “ brought me at the Time of the Election of “ Mayor, and We refused it.”

Mr. Knowler. Did Coates acquaint the Assembly he had received such Letters, and resolved not to admit them?

Mr. Batchelor. Yes.

Mr. Knowler. Did any other Person demand to be admitted?

Mr. Batchelor. No.

Mr. Knowler. Did you ever know any Foreigners vote for Mayor?

Mr. Batchelor. No.

Mr. Marsh. Was there Time for them to have given their Votes, if they had been let in as soon as the Letters were delivered?

Mr. Batchelor. Yes; they were just gone out, and hardly got into the Chancel, before Wightwick delivered them.

C. J. Eyre. Did you ever know any one let in, after the Door was shut?

Mr. Batchelor. No, my Lord.

Mr. Lacy. After they are let into the Church, and the Door shut, cannot a Freeman be let in?

Mr. Batchelor. I never knew or remember it in my Life, after the Church-Door shut?

C. J. Eyre. Did you ever know or hear, that Coates was to make the Election void, as their Friend, by refusing to let them in? Coates voted for Wightwick, and knew that on Refusal it would be a void Election. If People that had a Right were excluded, I think it a void Election.

Mr. Lacy. My Lord, they all joined to exclude Foreigners.

Mr. Papillon called; and, whilst swearing,

Mr. Serj. Darnell. So they were to serve, or swear for one another.

[2 L]

Mr.

Mr. Wellard. I don't know what you mean by that Insinuation: We regard an Oath as much as you do.

Mr. Serj. Darnell. My Lord, Mr. Wellard says, I insinuated Mr. Papillon would assert a Falsehood. I scorn it; I said no such Thing.

Mr. Marsh. Pray, Sir, give an Account what passed on or before the Day of Election.

Mr. Papillon. There was an Insinuation, that I designed to vote at the Election for Mayor; on which they applied to the Mayor, to know if he would admit me. He told them, No; and it was refused at the Instance of the Gentlemen of the other Side. I do not know that I thought of voting before; but then I asked the Mayor about it, and he refused me, because I was their Member, and therefore ought not to meddle. I did not chuse to make any Disturbance, and therefore wrote the Letter, and then followed myself, as soon as I could. I delivered the Letter to Wightwick, to give it to the Mayor. I desired him to take Notice, I insisted on my Vote. I waited all the Time of the Election at the Church-Door, but could not get in. Coates has put me to much Trouble, and was always my Enemy.

Mr. Serj. Darnell. Did not Coates vote for Wightwick?

Mr. Papillon. The Poll will tell you.

Mr. Serj. Darnell. He voted on your Side. Read the Letter.

Affociate reads --

“ Mr. Mayor, I am at the Church-Door,
“ &c.” verbatim as Mr. Wellard's Letter.

Mr. Serj. Baynes. Did you see the Men go to vote?

Mr. Papillon. I cannot be sure; but I thought the properest Time to be refused was when they were assembled. I did not design to make a Disturbance, and therefore delivered a Letter to Mr. Wightwick; and afterwards I knocked at the Door, which was shut. The Proclamation was ready to be read; for there was great Reason to think there would be a Disturbance created.

Mr. Serj. Baynes. Might you not, upon your Oath, have gone in with the other Gentlemen, if you had thought fit?

Mr. Papillon. I believe not, upon my Oath; because Coates told me, he would not admit me.

Mr. Knowler. Did you not stay in Coates's Parlour purposely, when he went out, that the Church-Door might be shut?

Mr. Papillon. I cannot tell.

Mr. Knowler. Pray, Sir, recollect yourself.

Mr. Papillon. Upon my Oath, I cannot recollect whether I was then in the House; I think not.

Mr. Knowler. Was there any Disturbance at the Election?

Mr. Papillon. No; they knew the Proclamation was ready.

Mr. Knowler. Were there not other Gentlemen resiant, as well as you, refused?

Mr. Papillon. I believe not.

Mr. Knowler. How long had you been a Resiant? Did not you come the Day before the Election?

Mr. Papillon. I cannot recollect as to the Day.

Mr. Serj. Darnell. You say in your Letter, you were resiant; Pray, Sir, how long had you been so?

Mr. Papillon. I cannot recollect. If you allow my Letter is a good Demand, I will explain it.

Mr. Smith. Would there not have been a Disturbance, if you had rushed into the Church?

Mr. Papillon. Upon my Oath, I believe there would.

Mr. Lacy. My Lord, we submit this Issue here.

Mr. Serj. Darnell. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury; This, my Lord, is the principal Issue; and the Gentlemen of the other Side, in order to prove that a Majority did not chuse the Defendant Elles Mayor, say, that this Poll was not a Majority of the whole, and have endeavoured to shew, that other People had a Right to vote, besides the Persons who appear upon the Poll; that Gibbon and Darby were admitted Freemen, and their Votes not taken; therefore, instead of the one Majority for Elles, if they had been admitted, there would have been a Majority of one for Wightwick. Now, my Lord, it appears from the Evidence, that Gibbon and Darby were admitted the very Morning of the Election, not by the Mayor, Jurats, and Commonalty, but by other Persons, at another Place, and upon producing Mandamus's. We shall shew you, Gentlemen, that when the Mandamus's were brought, though this Matter had been a great while kept private, it was unanimously resolved, at a Common Assembly, That no Freeman's Daughter should by Marrying intitle her Husband; and that they would contest any such Claim at Law. We shall shew you, Gentlemen, that, the Day before the Election came on, one hundred Guineas were offered to one Man, a thousand Guineas to another: But, when neither would do, being both absolutely refused, then the Mandamus was produced, and two Men sworn in the very Morning before the Election. I appeal to the common Sense of every Man; Is there any Pretence of Right for this? The Swearing and Admitting can give no Right; the Man must be legally chosen by the Body: But this was not at all the Case; instead of this, an Order was made by the Assembly, and entered in their Books, That the Mandamus should be controverted.

After this, they offered Mr. Papillon and Mr. Wellard as Voters; and their Proceeding in this is as extraordinary as the Mandamus. It is true, they were Freemen; but no Man, not resiant, can be admitted to vote; and therefore they were refused by the Body.

But, Gentlemen, they tell you, We have done all we could; we sent in Letters to the Mayor, and came to the Church-Door in order to get in, and were refused; and therefore their Votes ought not to be objected to, as they stand on the Poll.

Please, Gentlemen, to observe how this Affair has been cooked up between Mr. Papillon and Mr. Wellard. Wellard tells you, the Letters were written before Dinner on the Day of the Election; they are Word for Word the same, Letter for Letter. The Subscription is exactly in the same Words. “ We refused it, John Coates, “ Mayor.” Coates had proposed it to the Body, and they refused it. But Coates is in Mr. Papillon's Interest, and votes for him: Can he say this, We refused this? No; 'tis only to give a handle of Complaint, that Men have been unjustly refused, and that therefore the Election is void: Though I never yet heard, that a Man was to be admitted to vote by Letter, or that a Vote was to be put into a Pocket.

As to the Case of Hytbe, the Men were actually there at the Poll, and offered their Votes for the Candidates, and were actually refused by the presiding Officer; and if he refuses, the Person has his Remedy: But I never before heard of a Vote put into a Pocket. If this is to be admitted, there can be no Certainty in any Election. A Corporate Body assembled are not to be broke in upon, after the Doors are locked, and the Keys taken in, (as in the House of Commons) to prevent Confusion; and therefore all Right of Voting is excluded, when this Body is once assembled. Besides, they dined with Coates, and might have gone in with him, and the rest of the Freemen, if they would: But, instead of that, for particular Purposes, they say, No; we will not claim it in Person, we will demand it by Letter.

Upon the whole Circumstances of this Case, we hope, Gentlemen, it has been clearly made out to you, that Elles had the Majority; that the eleven that voted for him were legal Votes, and that but ten legal Votes voted for Wightwick; and therefore, Gentlemen, that you will find a Verdict for us.

Mr. Serj. Baynes. My Lord, the Gentlemen of the other Side have endeavoured to make out, that four legal Voters were excluded; and that, Gibbon and Darby being sworn in, though they were rejected by the Assembly, they are to be looked on as if they had given their Votes.

The Right of Voting is, to be elected by the Mayor, and Jurats, and Commonalty: But they were never elected, or duly sworn in, by the Mayor and Jurats; it was done by Mandamus: And though it was agreed and resolved, at a Common Assembly, to contest it, yet the Mayor and two Jurats swore them in; and therefore it was right to refuse them their Votes; and then there is plainly a Majority for Elles.

And, Gentlemen, as to Mr. Papillon and Wellard's Votes, if there be any Fraud or Collusion in that Matter, their Votes are to be set aside: And they came for their Right, after the Church-Door was shut. It is agreed, that, on the Election of a Mayor, the Keys of the Church are laid down on the Table, and the Doors are shut: This, Gentlemen, is the Constitution of the Town. The Evidences tell you, they were all met at Coates's, and went after Dinner to Church, to vote for Wightwick; but the Mayor would not admit them. How could this create a Disturbance? But he did not admit them for fear of a Disturbance, and they were kept out; and any Part of the Assembly are to be excluded, if they come too late, as in the House of Commons.

But the Gentlemen of the other Side say, their Offer to vote should be looked on in the same Manner as if they had voted. And this, Gentlemen, we admit, is Law in the House of Commons, but was never determined to be Law in any of the Courts in Westminster-Hall: It is the Practice there, but never at Common Law. So that, Gentlemen, there is a plain Majority of those assembled for the Defendant Elles; and therefore we hope you will find that he is duly elected.

Mr. Knowler. My Lord, there is an Entry upon the Assembly-Book, where Gibbon's and Darby's Right were taken into Consideration by the whole Body; and it was unanimously resolved, that they had no Right; and, to make it the more solemn, the Mayor, Jurats, and Commonalty subscribed it; and Coates, and the others, who admitted them, have also subscribed it. — Read the Entry of the 1st of March, 1728.

C. J. Eyre. It signifies nothing, an Act in 1728: They gave their Judgment, what signifies it?

Mr. Knowler. Read the Entry.

Affociate reads —

“ New-Romney, 1 March, 1733. Reciting that “ Gibbon and Darby had threatened to bring their “ Mandamus, to be admitted to the Freedom of “ this Town and Port; It was resolved to return
“ as Council shall advise, and the Suit to be “ defended at the Charge of this Corporation.”

Mr. Marsh. I hope, my Lord, we are proper to reply.

C. J. Eyre. You are not regular to reply. You laid down a Rule the Beginning of this Circuit, and now you do not keep to it: But I will hear you, regular or irregular.

Mr. Marsh. My Lord, we humbly insist, the last Entry is no Evidence.

C. J. Eyre. You are the Master of Order; I submit to you.

Mr. Marsh. My Lord, I had not objected, but that four People who voted for Wightwick, that had no Disqualification, are left out of their Poll. By their own Evidence it appears, that this was upon a Right, in having married a Freeman's Daughter; and I submit it to your Lordship, that a Resolution to contest that Right surely can never take it away, especially if afterwards it appears to be a Right not contested —

C. J. Eyre. It should be a Custom proved as a Foundation for this Right.

Mr. Marsh. My Lord, a Point of Law depending on the Demurrer, we submit, whether your Lordship will not save it, in case we lay proper Evidence before your Lordship to support it: For, if the Charter puts them on the same Freedom with Sandwich, and the Custom there is, that the Daughter of a Freeman, by Marrying, intitles the Man to a Freedom; then it will be a Point, Whether the Charter warrants that Custom? A Pretence of Right, however, they have; the Entry of Gibbon and Darby is by their own Officer, and they were sworn in by the Mayor and Jurats.

And, my Lord, it is admitted on all Sides, that Mr. Papillon and Wellard are Freemen; and if they did all they could to get into the Church and vote, then, my Lord, we humbly insist, they are as much Voters as if they had been at the Poll, and were actually in the Case of the Men of Hytbe mentioned before.

Therefore, Gentlemen, if the Mayor told Mr. Papillon and Mr. Wellard, that, if they came to the Church, they would not be admitted; and said to Mr. Papillon, You are our Member, do not insist upon it; and when they offered themselves to vote, refused them; we humbly insist, they are as good Voters, as if they had been at the Poll, and actually voted.

And, as to Gibbon and Darby, they had this Right by Marrying, and were warranted by the Charter —

C. J. Eyre. It is not regular.

Mr. Lacy. My Lord, the Gentlemen of the other Side object to the Fact laid by us in Point of Law, that we do not come up to what we contend for by our Plea, as to the sole Right: But, if Darby and Gibbon had a Right, other than by Election, where they are sworn in; I would submit it to your Lordship, Whether, till disqualified, they are not in the complete Exercise of that Franchise? There may be Rights that come not in by Election. Mr. Serjeant Darnell says, that the Majority of those present are to chuse the Mayor: But, my Lord, if we did all we could to get in, as has been fully proved to your Lordship and the Jury; we humbly insist, we are intitled to a Vote as much, as if we had been actually present at the Poll, and had given our Votes.
of

It has been said; that, when the Business is begun, no body is to interfere: But, my Lord, we were present by Letter before; and if they read it not, that was not our Fault.

Mr. Smith. My Lord, we admit, that all Persons are to be chosen by a Majority of Freemen present; and we humbly insist, Mr. Papillon and Mr. Wellard were present in Point of Law; and, in fact, in the House of Commons it never was otherwise.

My Lord, in the Case of Ashby and White, (Vol. 8.) the Question was, Whether an Action would lie for refusing a Vote? It was resolved that it would, because the common Remedy in the House of Commons would give no Relief. And the Authority of the Men of Hythe's Case was fully with us: Darby and Gibbon being admitted, we apprehend, when they voted, they were in the Exercise of their Franchise, and are therefore good Votes.

C. J. Eyre. Gentlemen of the Jury, The Question upon this Issue is, Whether the Defendant Elles was duly elected by a Majority of the Jurats and Commonalty of the Town and Port of New-Romney? And it appears from the Evidence, that twenty-one Freemen being assembled, Wightwick had ten Voices, Elles had eleven; and that two People were present, whose Votes were not taken, Darby and Gibbon. It was on the 25th of March; and these two People were admitted by the Mayor and Jurats, on producing a Mandamus; which is a Precept from a superior Court; but that confers no Right, nor mends the Thing, if there be no Evidence of a prior Right.

They tell you, on one Side, that Darby and Gibbon being sworn in by the Mayor and Jurats, they are put in Possession of their Office, and are to be regarded as People that have a Right in the Election of Mayor: But, unless some such Right be proved, such as Birth, Election, or some other Right, the Mandamus confers none.

But they tell you, this is a particular Right, supported by a particular Custom: and therefore the Question is, Whether this Admittance can give a Right?

Now, Admittance and Swearing can give no Right, without a previous Right. A Mandamus may be brought, when they were never elected; and such Admittance will do nothing of itself.

But no such Custom has been proved, and the Corporation has protested against it; and therefore Darby and Gibbon had no Right to vote.

But they say, Mr. Papillon and Wellard had a Right; and if one more Vote be added to the Poll, then Wightwick had it.

They were certainly Freemen; but yet they could not send in their Votes by Letter, or vote otherwise than personally; they must be corporaliter congregati.

Mr. Papillon was told, the Mayor would not admit him—What then? Should he not then have endeavoured to go in with the rest? I think he ought, if he will give his Vote; there can be no reasonable Excuse!

The Mayor having told him, they would not admit a Foreigner; they tell you, they sent in Letters, and did what they could to get in.

But they have not done what they could: For they should have attended the Mayor, and gone to the Church, and got in with him and the rest: But they do not come till after the Church-Door is shut; and the Evidences all say, that, after the Church-Door is shut, no body can be admitted; and that, when they go in, they lock the Door, take up the Keys, and then no body is ever admitted. If they do not come in Time, therefore, they exclude themselves. They must be there, and come at the usual Time; and if they did not, they excluded themselves: And is the Law, or the Method of Elections, to be changed for them?

Mr. Papillon's — (I would not insinuate —) sending the Letters is attended with odd Circumstances. The Letters are given to Wightwick, and he is to deliver them to Coates; then they are refused by the Assembly; and afterwards the Letters are returned into their Hands again, with a Note, “ We have received this Letter, and it “ has been refused.”

Gentlemen, I think the Letter will do nothing: They were wrong in their Judgment; and not coming in Time, they ought not to be let in, any more than any body else. A Man cannot send in his Vote by Letter; he must be present in the Assembly.

And therefore neither of these four Gentlemen had any Right to vote, in my Opinion; and then the Majority is for Elles, and he is duly elected.

Verdict for the Defendant.

Mr. Serj. Darnell. My Lord, the next Issue is, That he was not duly sworn.—Mr. Loftie, Do you know whether Mr. Elles was sworn in Mayor of Romney?

Mr. Loftie. Yes; he was sworn in by me in the Church, in the Manner as other Mayors are sworn.

Mr. Marsh. As to the Oath to be taken by the Mayor, you are only Ministerial: Did not the Mayor say to you, Wightwick was the Man that was to be sworn in Mayor? Did not Coates tell you, “ I administer the Oath to Wightwick,” and strike Elles's Hand off the Book?

Mr. Loftie. No, not that I heard.

Mr. Lacy. Did not he order you to swear Wightwick?

Mr. Loftie. He ordered me to swear the Mayor.

Mr. Lacy. Did not he order you not to swear Mr. Elles?

Mr. Loftie. Not to my Knowledge.

Mr. Smith. Did Coates say who he thought was Mayor?

Mr. Loftie. Yes; he said Wightwick had the Majority.

C. J. Eyre. Where two People are sworn in, the Right must be in the Man that had the Possession of the Staff.

Mr. Batchelor sworn.

Mr. Marsh. Was you present in the Church, the Day the Mayor was chosen?

Mr. Batchelor. Yes.

Mr. Marsh. What Declaration was made by Coates, as to the Person chosen Mayor?

Mr. Batchelor. He told the Town-Clerk, Wightwick was Mayor; and said, "I would have you set down Darby and Gibbon as Voters for Wightwick," and called them over: But Loftie would not set them down, because it was against his Inclination. Coates gave the Staff to Wightwick; and said, "I resign this to you; you shall be the Mayor; you had the most Votes."

Mr. Marsh. Who then called for the Oath?

Mr. Batchelor. The old Mayor.

Mr. Marsh. Did he call on any one to administer the Oath?

Mr. Batchelor. Yes; he bid Loftie administer the Oath to Wightwick; and then Wightwick and Elles laid their Hands on the Book, and Coates said, he would swear Wightwick only, and shoved Elles's Hand off the Book twice.

C. J. Eyre. Read the Clause in the Charter, that relates to the Chusing of a Mayor; the Question being, Whether the Mayor or Town-Clerk should administer the Oath?

Associate reads—

"The said late Queen by Letters Patent granted, that on Lady-Day, in the Chancel of St. Nicholas, one of the Jurats should be chosen into the Mayoralty for the Year ensuing, and should take his Oath, in Manner as the Mayor of Sandwich takes it."

C. J. Eyre. The Mayor must administer the Oath.

Mr. Serj. Darnell. My Lord, the Oath is always read by the Town-Clerk; and I humbly apprehend, it is taking the Oath, when it is read by him in Presence of the Mayor.

C. J. Eyre. The Mayor must consent to the Oath; he is the Judge, whether the proper Person be sworn, or not. The Oath is to be administered by the old Mayor; and it appears, it was against his Consent; he thought another elected, and struck Elles's Hand off the Book.

Mr. Serj. Darnell. Suppose a Man to take an Oath to qualify him for an Office; Shall a Justice of the Peace refuse it?

C. J. Eyre. Can a Man take an Oath that is not administered to him? The Town-Clerk has no more to do with it than you or I. A Man is guilty of Perjury, if a Clerk will administer an Oath, when a Court forbid him. Besides, the Mayor delivered the Ensigns of his Power to Wightwick.

Mr. Benjamin Cobb sworn.

Mr. Marsh. Was you present at the Election of the Mayor?

Mr. Cobb. Yes.

Mr. Marsh. Did you see the Oath administered?

Mr. Cobb. Yes.

Mr. Knowler. Was Elles sworn?

Mr. Cobb. No.

VOL. X.

C. J. Eyre. Did not the Mayor deliver his Staff into the Hands of Wightwick?

Mr. Cobb. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Langdon sworn.

Mr. Lacy. Was you present at the Election of the Mayor?

Mr. Langdon. Yes.

Mr. Lacy. Was the Oath administered to Wightwick?

Mr. Langdon. Yes.

Mr. Lacy. Did Coates make any Objection to the swearing Elles?

C. J. Eyre. Did Coates think Elles was chosen Mayor?

Mr. Langdon. I believe not.

C. J. Eyre. Who did Coates think was Mayor?

Mr. Langdon. My Lord, he said Wightwick was Mayor, on account of Darby and Gibbon.

Mr. Marsh. Did Wightwick take the Staff, or did Coates deliver it to Elles?

Mr. Langdon. Wightwick had the Staff, and went Home with the Staff.

Mr. Wynne. Did Elles walk as near the Staff as the other?

Mr. Langdon. I believe he did.

Mr. Gray sworn.

Mr. Serj. Baynes. Was you present at the Choice of Mayor? Did Coates say any thing, or strike Elles's Hand off the Book? Was you near?

Mr. Gray. I was present; he never touched his Hand.

Mr. Lacy. Did not Coates order Wightwick to be sworn?

Mr. Gray. I do not know he ordered any body to be sworn.

C. J. Eyre. Had Wightwick the Staff in his Hand, when he was sworn?

Mr. Gray. No.

C. J. Eyre. Where was it?

Mr. Gray. It lay down upon a Tomb-stone.

C. J. Eyre. I take it, he ordered the Mayor to be sworn.

Mr. Gray. I do not know his Thoughts.

Mr. Marsh. Is it usual for the Mayor to have the Staff in his Hand, when sworn?

Mr. Gray. I do not know.

Mr. Marsh. Whom did he name?

Mr. Gray. I heard him mention no body.

Mr. Lacy. Who was Wightwick declared Mayor by?

Mr. Gray. By Mr. Coates.

Mr. Lacy. When did the Mayor say this?

Mr. Gray. At the Time of the Election.

Mr. Lacy. Mr. Loftie, was you near Coates, when the Mayor was sworn? Did he strike Elles's Hand off the Book?

Mr. Loftie. Not that I saw.

Mr. Tooke sworn.

Mr. Lacy. Was you present at the Election of the Mayor?

Mr. Tooke. Yes; I was very close to Mr. Coates. I did not hear him declare Wightwick Mayor, or see him strike Elles's Hand off the Book. He mentioned Wightwick, and said, Wightwick should be sworn.

Mr. Marsh. Did he order him to be sworn, or deliver to him his Staff?

[2 M]

Mr.

Mr. Tooke. He said, he should be sworn; but I did not see him deliver his Staff to him.

Mr. Halfenden sworn.

Mr. Marsh. Was you present at the swearing Mr. Wightwick Mayor?

Mr. Halfenden. Yes, I was present, and saw Coates shove Elles's Hand from the Book. I heard him say, he would not swear Elles, and saw him, after Swearing, deliver the Staff to Wightwick; and I saw Elles's Hand struck off twice.

Mr. Marsh. Did Elles walk even with the Mayor?

Mr. Halfenden. I cannot tell.

Mr. Gibbon sworn.

Mr. Marsh. Was you present at the swearing in the Mayor by Coates?

Mr. Gibbon. Yes; he gave Orders to take the Poll, and after it was taken, he asked, Who was Mayor? Loftie told him, Elles; Wilson said, Wightwick. Then Coates said, that Wightwick was chosen Mayor, and should be sworn; and then Coates delivered the Staff to Wightwick. I saw it delivered, and saw Coates shove Elles's Hand off the Book, and heard him say, "Mind, " I swear Wightwick Mayor."

Mr. Marsh. We shall trouble your Lordship no more.

C. J. Eyre. Gentlemen of the Jury, The Question on this Issue is, Whether the Defendant Elles was sworn Mayor, or not?

It must be done by his Predecessor.

Loftie says, that Coates ordered him to swear the Mayor, and that he read the Oath: If this was done by Coates's Order, then he was well sworn.

But, if it was done contrary to his Order, and he declared another Man, and shoved Elles's Hand off the Book, and said, "Take Notice, " I swear Wightwick Mayor," and not the other, and delivered the Staff to him, and did all he could to oppose the swearing Elles; then Elles was not sworn Mayor.

The Town-Clerk cannot swear the Mayor; and the Evidence is strong, that Coates opposed swearing Elles. The Man that has the Right, he is the Man that must be sworn; but none but the former Mayor can swear him.

The Question therefore is, Whether he was sworn by a proper Authority?

If you think him sworn by a proper Authority, and that Coates meant that Elles should be the Mayor, then you must find for him.

But if you think he meant Wightwick should be sworn Mayor, then you must find for Wightwick.

Verdict for the King.

NUMBER XVIII.

HENRY MOORE, Plaintiff,

AGAINST

The Mayor, Jurats, and Commonalty of the Town and Port of Hastings, in the County of Suffex, Defendants.

Tried on Tuesday, July the 20th, at the Sittings after Trinity Term, 1736, before the Right Honourable Philip Lord Hardwicke, Lord Chief Justice of His Majesty's Court of King's-Bench, on a Mandamus for admitting the Plaintiff to be a Freeman of Hastings, in Pursuance of a Custom there; which Custom the Defendants by their Return deny, and thereupon Issue is joined.

Middlesex. SOME Time ago, that is to say, upon the 28th Day of November, in the ninth Year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord George the Second, by the Grace of God, of Great-Britain, France, and Ireland King, Defender of the Faith, before our said Lord the King at Westminster, the same Lord the King commanded, to the Mayor, Jurats, and Commonalty of his Town and Port of Hastings, in his County of Suffex, his Writ closed, in these Words; that is to say, " George the Second, by the Grace of God, of Great-Britain, France, and Ireland King, Defender of the Faith; To the Mayor, Jurats, and Commonalty of the Town and Port of Hastings, in our County of Suffex, greeting: Whereas the said Town and Port is an ancient Town and Port, and one of the Five ancient Ports of this Kingdom: And whereas there is, and Time out of Mind hath been, a certain ancient and laudable Custom, used and approved within the said Town and Port, That every Person, being the eldest Son of any Freeman of the said Town and Port, and

 “ Philip Lord Hardwicke, at Westminster, the “ 28th Day of November, in the ninth Year of “ our Reign.”

Upon which said Friday next after the Octave of St. Hilary, before our said Lord the King at Westminster, the said Mayor, Jurats, and Commonalty of the said Town and Port of Hastings, in the said County of Suffex, returned the said Writ as followeth; that is to say, “ The Answer

 “ of the Mayor, Jurats, and Commonalty of
 “ the Town and Port of Hastings, within men“ tioned, to this Writ, appears in a certain “ Schedule to this Writ annexed: We, the “ Mayor, Jurats, and Commonalty of the Town
 “ and Port of Hastings, mentioned in the Writ
 “ hereunto annexed, do, according to the Com“ mand of the said Writ, humbly certify to “ our Sovereign Lord the King, That there is “ not, nor Time out of Mind hath been, any “ such ancient and laudable Custom, used and “ approved within the said Town and Port,
 “ That every Person, being the eldest Son of “ any Freeman of the said Town and Port, and “ born within the said Town and Port, after the “ Admission and Swearing of his Father into the “ Place and Office of one of the Freemen of the “ said Town and Port, hath a Right, in Respect “ thereof, and also upon paying a reasonable
 “ Fine, to be admitted and sworn into the Place
 “ and Office of one of the Freemen of the said “ Town and Port, as in the said Writ is “ alledged: And, for this Cause, We, the said
 “ Mayor, Jurats, and Commonalty of the said “ Town and Port of Hastings, have not admitted, “ nor caused to be admitted, neither ought we
 “ to admit, or cause to be admitted, Henry
 “ Moore, in the said Writ named, into the Place
 “ and Office of one of the Freemen of the said
 “ Town and Port, together with all the Liberties, “ Privileges, Franchises, Emoluments, and Com“ modities to a Freeman of the said Town and “ Port belonging and appertaining; neither have
 “ we administered, nor caused to be administered, “ nor ought we to administer, or cause to be “ administered, to the said Henry Moore, the Oaths
 “ which are in that Case usually administered
 “ and taken, as by the said Writ we are “ commanded to do.”

And hereupon, upon the same Friday next after the said Octave of St. Hilary, before our said Lord the King at Westminster, came as well the said Henry Moore, in the said Writ and Return named, by Henry Masterman his Attorney, as the said Mayor, Jurats, and Commonalty of the said Town and Port of Hastings, in the said County of Suffex, in the same Writ and Return mentioned, by Henry Walrond their Attorney. And the said
Henry Moore, having had Oyer of the said Writ and Return, saith, That for any thing above alledged by them, the said Mayor, Jurats, and Commonalty, in their said Return to the said Writ of Mandamus, he the said Henry Moore ought not to be barred from having a peremptory Writ of Mandamus, in order to be admitted and sworn into the said Place and Office of one of the Freemen of the said Town and Port; because he saith, that there is, and Time out of Mind hath been, such ancient and laudable Custom, used and approved within the said Town and Port,
 That every Person, being the eldest Son of any Freeman of the said Town and Port, and born within the said Town and Port, after the Admission and Swearing of his Father into the Place
 and Office of one of the Freemen of the said
 Town and Port, hath a Right, in Respect thereof, and also upon paying a reasonable Fine, to be admitted and sworn into the Place and Office of one

one of the Freemen of the said Town and Port, in Manner and Form as in the said Writ of Mandamus is above alledged. And the said Henry Moore prayeth, that this may be inquired into by the Country; and the said Mayor, Jurats, and Commonalty pray the like.

Mr. Clarke. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury; Henry Moore is the Plaintiff; and the Mayor, Jurats, and Commonalty of the Town and Port of Hastings, are the Defendants. And, Gentlemen, this is a Mandamus, directed to the Defendants, the Mayor and Jurats of that Town and Port, to admit and swear in the Plaintiff Henry Moore into the Place and Office of one of the Freemen of this Town.

And, Gentlemen, the Mandamus sets forth, That the Town and Port of Hastings is an ancient Town and Port, and one of the Five ancient Ports of this Kingdom; and that there is, and for Time out of Mind has been, a certain ancient and laudable Custom, used and approved within that Town and Port, That every Person, being the eldest Son of any Freeman there, and born within the said Town, after the Admission and Swearing of his Father into the Place and Office of one of the Freemen of the said Town and Port, has a Right, in Respect thereof, and also upon paying a reasonable Fine, to be admitted and sworn into the Place and Office of one of the Freemen there, according to the Custom of that Town and Port.

Gentlemen, the Mandamus further sets forth, That the Plaintiff Henry Moore is the eldest Son of Samuel Moore, one of the Freemen of the said Town and Port, and was born within the Town, after the Admission and Swearing of his Father into the Place and Office of Freeman; and that the Plaintiff, by virtue thereof, and upon paying a reasonable Fine, according to the Custom, ought to have been admitted and sworn by the Defendants into the Place and Office of a Freeman; but that the Defendants, contrary to their Duty in this Case, have refused, and still refuse, to admit and swear him, although he has tendered to them a reasonable Fine on that Behalf.

And this, Gentlemen, the Defendants are laid to have done in Contempt of the King, to the great Damage and Grievance of the Plaintiff, and to the manifest Injury of his Estate.

And therefore the Writ proceeds to command the Defendants, immediately, upon the Plaintiff's paying a reasonable Fine, to admit and swear him into the Place of a Freeman, or to shew Cause why they do not.

To this Writ, Gentlemen, the Mayor, Jurats, and Commonalty have returned for Answer, That there neither is, nor for Time out of Mind has been, any such ancient and laudable Custom, used and approved within the Town and Port of Hastings, as is alledged in the Writ; and this, they say, is the Reason they have not admitted the Plaintiff.

Gentlemen, upon this Issue is joined; and the only Question you are now to try is, Whether there be such a Custom in the Town and Port of Hastings, as the Plaintiff has laid in the Mandamus? If therefore, Gentlemen, Evidence is laid before you, that there is, and Time out of Mind has been, such a Custom, you will please, Gentlemen, to find a Verdict for the Plaintiff.

Sir Thomas Abney. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury; I am also of Council of the same Side with the Plaintiff; and you will please, Gentlemen, to observe, that the single Issue you are to try is, Whether there now is, and Time out of Mind has been, an ancient and laudable Custom in the Town and Port of Hastings, in the County of Suffex, That every Person, being the eldest Son of a Freeman of the said Town and Port, and born within the said Town and Port, after the Admission and Swearing of his Father into the Place and Office of one of the Freemen of the said Town and Port, hath a Right, in Respect thereof, and also upon paying a reasonable Fine, to be admitted and sworn into the Place and Office of one of the Freemen of the said Town and Port?

This, Gentlemen, is the Issue you are now to try; and it will not, I believe, be necessary to trouble you with an Account of the Cinque Ports, and their Privileges and Customs.

But, Gentlemen, the Matters of Proof we shall lay before you will be of three Kinds.

And the first which offers itself to your Consideration, arises from a very ancient Record, called the Customal; which is a very ancient Deed, without any Date; it being an usual Thing for ancient Deeds and Evidences to be without any Date; and this Customal is the Rule and Law of all the Cinque Ports.

Gentlemen, this Customal is so old, and goes so far back as the Year 1573; it contains fifty-nine Articles. Our Right arises upon this Customal; and therefore I will beg Leave to read the Title, and some Passages out of it, to you.

“ Hic sequuntur Consuetudines Quinque Portuum, et eorum Membrorum, à tempore quo non extat memòr hom' usitat' et approbat'. ”

Gentlemen of the Jury, the Words we ground our Right upon are these:

Art. 34. “ Possunt Majores et Jurati, Ballivi et Jurati, et Jurati, in quolibet Portu et Membro ubi Major et Ballivus de communi electione non fuerit, in presentia Communitatis, recipere et facere liberes tribus modis: ”

“ Uno modo, per Nativitatem infra Libertatem suam, si pater suus, tempore natiuitatis suæ, fuit liber: ”

“ Alio modo, per Liberum Tenementum perquisit'. ”

“ Tertio, per Emptionem. ”

“ Et notand', quod nullus gaudebit libertatem alicujus Portus, sive Membri, quousque sacramentum suum præstitit, quod esse debet, à die illo, usque ad finem vitæ suæ, bonus et fidelis Domino nostro Regi Angliæ, et hæredibus suis; statutaque et libertates Quinque Portuum, et specialiter illius Portus sive Membri ubi commoratur, pro posse suo maintenebit; obediensque Majori et Juratis, Ballivo et Juratis, vel Juratis, semper erit; semper paratus tam ad scottand' et lottand', si quæ taxat' pro communi utilitate fuerint, quam in armis pro defensione inimicorum Domini Regis, cum per Governatores ipsius Portus sive Membri habuerit in mandatis; et quod non audiat aliquod ad deteriorationem libertat' prædict', sive ad reprobationem Majoris, Ballivi, et Juratorum, ubi commoratur, vel eorum alicujus, nisi ipse inde eis dabit notitiam. Sic se adjuvent sancta sanctor', &c. ”

“ Possunt Majores et Jurati, Ballivi et Jurati, et Jurati, in quolibet Portu, &c. recipere et facere liberes tribus modis: ”

“ Uno ”

“ Uno modo, per Nativitatem infra libertatem suam, si pater suus, tempore nativitatis suæ, fuit liber —

That, Gentlemen, is the Point we ground our Right upon; the first Right. If a Person be the eldest Son of a Freeman, and born within the said Town and Port, after the Admission and Swearing of his Father into the Office of one of the Freemen of the said Town and Port; we say, such eldest Son is intituled.

“ Alio modo, per Liberum Tenementum perquisit’.

“ Tertio, per Emptionem.”

So that, Gentlemen, by this 34th Article of this Customal you see what the ancient Law and Usage was; That the eldest Son of every Freeman, under these Circumstances, is intituled to his Freedom: And therefore we say, that the Plaintiff Henry Moore, as the eldest Son of Samuel Moore, has, and he is undoubtedly intituled, under this Right, to his Freedom.

And, Gentlemen, as this Customal mentions three distinct Methods of making free, viz. by Birth, by a Freehold Tenement, and by Purchase; so it has made a manifest Distinction between the Freedom acquired by Birth, and by either of the other two Ways.

For, Gentlemen, the Fine that is paid by the Son of a Freeman, upon his being admitted and sworn, is only 6s. 8d. That is the reasonable Fine, that is always paid, when a Man is intituled as the Plaintiff is: But all other Persons, whether they are made free by a Freehold or by Purchase, they always paid 13s. 4d. or, however, always more than the Person who was admitted as the eldest Son of a Freeman.

My Lord, and Gentlemen of the Jury, when you have heard this Customal (which we shall lay before you) read, we shall then read to you some hundreds of Entries out of the Corporation-Books; from whence it will appear, that the eldest Sons of Freemen, under the Circumstances of the present Case, have been always admitted; and from whence there will result so uniform and clear a Testimony in Support of the Plaintiff’s Right, that we defy the Gentlemen of the other Side to produce one Entry, in any of the Corporation-Books, to contradict, or at least to impeach, our Entries.

Gentlemen, these are old Entries, many of them in Queen Elizabeth’s Time; and therefore they are not so exact in the Stile as modern Entries usually are. Sometimes the Son is said to be admitted, “ Quia pater ejus liber erat, et ipse natus fuit infra libertatem.” Sometimes the Stile is, “ Quia maximus natu filius.” And sometimes, “ Quia filius liberi hominis.”

And, Gentlemen, by comparing the Times of their Fathers Admissions, and the Births or Baptisms of the Persons admitted, (which we shall prove to you by authentic Copies from the Parish Register-Books in Hastings) it will appear to you to be the most clear and strong Case that ever came before a Jury.

Gentlemen of the Jury, another Part of our Evidence will arise from living Witnesses; very ancient Men, who, by their own Knowledge and Observation for fifty or sixty Years together, and by conversing with their Ancestors, many of whom lived to be eighty and ninety Years old, will prove, that this has always been the Custom, That the eldest Son of a Freeman, born within the Liberties, and after his Father was made free, has always been intituled to his Freedom; till the other Day, when the Rights of the Town were to be played into a narrower Compass, and no Man was to be intituled to his Freedom, but at the Will and Pleasure of the Mayor and Jurats. And these Witnesses, Gentlemen, are not only ancient Men, but Persons free and disinterested; not a few Men disfranchised To-day, to serve a particular Purpose, and be made free again To-morrow: But our Witnesses are Men of great Age and Experience, not interested. We doubt not, therefore, Gentlemen, when you have heard our Evidence, that you will be of Opinion, that the Plaintiff has an undoubted Right, as the eldest Son of a Freeman, and find the Custom for the Plaintiff accordingly.

Mr. Strange. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury; I am also of Council for the Plaintiff: And, my Lord, this Case has been so fully and clearly opened by the Gentlemen who have gone before me, that I shall not take up any of your Lordship’s Time in stating any of the Circumstances in the Plaintiff’s Case; and I shall beg Leave, Gentlemen, only to observe, that the single Question now to be tried by you is, Whether the Custom in the Town and Port of Hastings be, That every Person, being the eldest Son of a Freeman of the said Town and Port, and born there, after the Admission and Swearing of his Father, has a Right, in Respect thereof, and also upon paying a reasonable Fine, to be admitted into the Office of one of the Freemen of the said Town and Port? For, Gentlemen, if this be the Custom there, the Plaintiff Moore is within every Part of this Custom.

In this Case, Gentlemen, three Things are to be proved:

First, That the Plaintiff be the Son of a Freeman, that was admitted and sworn into the Franchise of this Town.

Secondly, That he be born within the Liberties of the Town.

Thirdly, That he be born under this Circumstance, after the Time of his Father’s Swearing and Admission into this Freedom.

And we shall apply ourselves to lay before your Lordship and the Jury such an Evidence, as shall fully make out the Custom, That the eldest Son of a Freeman, born within the Borough, is, upon paying 6s. 8d. as a reasonable Fine, to be admitted and sworn into the Freedom of the Town.

My Lord, and Gentlemen of the Jury, the particular Evidence we shall lay before you, has been minutely opened to you; and I would beg Leave only to observe, that, as I humbly apprehend, the Custom now insisted on by the Plaintiff is a Sort of common Right of all the Subjects of England, there being no Corporation in the Kingdom, (I might say, upon the Face of the Earth) but where the Sons of Freemen, born after their Fathers Freedom, are intituled, according to the several Usages of the respective Boroughs where they claim their Freedom; so I do not know, I own, of one Instance, that I ever yet heard of, to the contrary.

But, my Lord, as we do not rely on that general Custom, but on the particular Evidence which has been opened; we shall begin with an old Record in 1573, as ancient as the old Customal of the Cinque Ports. We shall then, Gentlemen, read to you the Entries of Persons who have been admitted as Sons of Freemen, for near two hundred Years past; and then produce to you several ancient living Witnesfes, who will speak to the Usage and Custom, and will prove to you, that it has been so Time out of Mind: And then, Gentlemen, we hope that, upon hearing these Records, and the Opinion of the old Witnesfes, you will find a Verdict for the Plaintiff.

Mr. Marfb. My Lord, we had a Rule for inspecting the Corporation-Books; therefore they are not in our Hands: But we have taken authentic Copies of the old Customal and Entries on Stamps, which we are ready to prove. — Swear Mr. Cranfton.

Mr. Attorney-General, (Sir John Willes.) My Lord, we have the Original in our Hands; and if we produce the Original, they cannot read their Copy. But, my Lord, we say, with great Submission to your Lordship, that the Original itself is no Evidence.

Lord Hardwicke. Mr. Attorney, some Light should be given what it is, and then I shall be able to judge.

Mr. Strange. If your Lordship pleases, we may as well prove our Copy.

Lord Hardwicke. If the Original is here, I cannot read the Copy.

Mr. Cranfton sworn.

Mr. Strange. Where had you that Book?

Mr. Cranfton. From the Town-Clerk of Hastings.

Mr. Marfb. Where was it kept? among the Corporation-Books and Records?

Mr. Cranfton. Yes.

Mr. Marfb. Turn to the 34th Article.

Sir Tho. Abney. My Lord, it is an ancient Book, kept among the other Records of the Corporation; and I never knew a Trial of this Kind, but the ancient Books of the Corporation were always read.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, I humbly submit it to your Lordship, that, as they open it, such a Book ought not to be read in Evidence; besides that there are several other Objections to it.

My Lord, they open it as the Customal of all the Cinque Ports, but not as the Customal of this Borough in particular: And, my Lord, this Mandamus takes no Notice of any Privileges that belong to all the Cinque Ports; and therefore the Customal they ought to produce, should be the Customal of that particular Town: But, to shew that this will be Evidence, they should make it appear, that there is one concurring Custom throughout the whole Cinque Ports.

And, my Lord, though there are some general Customs, which do affect all the Cinque Ports; yet, with great Submission to your Lordship, I must beg Leave to insist, that this particular Customal, in case it could be read, no more affects this Corporation, than the Customs of a County affect every particular Borough or Hundred in that County. In order to make this Evidence, they should prove one concurring Custom throughout all the Cinque Ports.

But, my Lord, if that were so, I submit it to your Lordship, that this cannot be read as Evidence.

The Gentlemen of the other Side say, that it is an ancient Record, because it is without a Date; and therefore it is ancient. And this, my Lord, would have been proper, if they had had the old, ancient Customal itself to produce. And I submit it to your Lordship, that they must either produce that Customal, or shew that it cannot be come at, before this can be read. This is only an Entry in the Corporation-Books, in the Year 1573, of an ancient Customal.

This, my Lord, is what they would offer to your Lordship and the Jury, as Evidence: It is only a Copy; and if it be only a Copy, I humbly insist, they ought to produce the Original, or shew that they cannot come at it. But I believe they will be at a Loss to shew, it was ever entered at all by the Corporation's Order: For there is an Entry just before this, in the Year 1573, of a Mortgage; there are Abundance of Scraps put together, which nothing at all can be made of; some in 1609, some in 1592; a hundred Things got together, and entered at different Times, by no body knows who. Non constat, but this pretended Customal may be sewed into the Book; for there is nothing entered in this Book, that can be given in Evidence. If it was the Corporation-Book, there would have been other Entries, of the Manner of electing Freemen, Officers of the Corporation, and Members to serve in Parliament, and other Corporation-Affairs: But, because it is found among the Corporation-Papers, therefore it is to be given in Evidence; though found amongst a Medley of a hundred Sorts of trifling Things, in no wise relating to the Corporation, and that belong to God knows who. In the Book there are Copies of Mortgages, not one of them from Persons who stood indebted to the Corporation in one Farthing; an Account of a Rental of a Noble Lord's Estate; the Resolution of the Judges upon the Statute relating to the Poor; a hundred miscellaneous Things got together, no body knows how, or why: My Lord, I say, when it appears in this Light before your Lordship, I submit, that, as it does not at all appear what this Medley of a hundred Things are; because it is found amongst some Papers in the Custody of the Town-Clerk, and there is one Thing which relates to the Custom of all the Cinque Ports, and a hundred other Things not relating either to them or to this Borough, whether it be any Evidence at all. I submit it therefore to your Lordship, in the first Place, that as, upon the Face of it, it appears to be only a Copy of a Thing; and as it appears that Thing does not relate to this Borough in particular; and as it does not appear what Book this is, nor how it came amongst the Books of the Corporation; and as it is only a Collection of useless, miscellaneous Papers; I think it ought not to be read.

Lord Hardwicke. If I could get off from reading this Book lawfully, yet, from the Nature of this Cause, I must look upon the Book. In Cases of this Nature, I think it, prima facie, proper to be read in Evidence. There may be Objections to the reading it of different Kinds; some, from the Nature of the Custody in which it has been kept; some intrinsical, from the Book itself. Those from the Nature of the Custody, when, where, and how long it has been kept, are proper against reading it at all: But, when they arise from the Book itself, it is impossible to say it should not be read; because the Court cannot judge whether it be proper or no, till they have heard heard it. I think, therefore, it must be read. If, upon reading, there appear to be any material Objections to the Book, I will hint them to the Jury, when I come to sum up.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, we submit it to your Lordship, that it is torn and defaced, and in many Places not legible.

Mr. Strange. Why did not you keep it better? This Book has not been in our Custody. If you do not take proper Care of your Corporation-Books, are we to be prejudiced by your Neglect?

Mr. Marsh. Mr. Salkeld, please to read the Title: If they have put Chevy-Chase in it, what is that to our Customal?

Sir T. Abney. Now read the next, Nullus fiat liber per Emptionem.

Associate reads —

39. “ Et nullus fiat liber per Emptionem, quousque
“ in Portu vel Membro, ubi libertatem desiderat,
“ per unum annum et unam diem permansit, et si
“ bene et honeste habuerit, &c.”

Mr. Strange. My Lord, we shall read no more.

Lord Hardwicke. Are there any other Parts, Mr. Attorney, you would have read?

Mr. At. Gen. Let me see the Book. (Turns it over.) My Lord, here is an Entry in 1606, before the Entry of 1573. Here are Counter-parts of Leaves. We must, I believe, trouble your Lordship with reading one of them. — Read that Leaf.

Associate reads —

“ This Indenture made the 10th Day of August,
“ in the fifteenth Year of the Reign of our Sove“ reign Lady Elizabeth, &c. between Theophilus
“ Johnson, of Lamberhurst in the County of Kent,
“ Gent. of the one Part, and James Woodgate,
“ Yeoman, of the other Part —

Mr. At. Gen. Read the Judges Opinion about the Statute of Queen Elizabeth.

Mr. Strange. They would insinuate, that, because a few miscellaneous Papers are bound up with our Customal, therefore it is not authentic.

Lord Hardwicke. There is no Weight in that at all: The Town-Clerk may bind up what he pleases with the Corporation-Books. The Question is, Whether the general Declarations of the Cinque Ports are binding in the particular Ports, or no?

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, I submit it to your Lordship, that the Things bound up with it, appearing to be miscellaneous, usefess Papers, take off from the Authority of it.

Lord

Lord Hardwicke. There are Copies of Leafes bound up with it, Mr. Attorney; Will that take off from its Authority?

Mr. At. Gen. If you will admit what I state, we will read it:

Mr. Strange. You may state what you will, and read what you will out of it; it is your own Book.

Mr. At. Gen. Then here is the Rental of a certain Noble Lord's Estate.

Mr. Strange. That looks as if the Corporation were in hopes he would leave it them.

Mr. Marsh. Not at that Time of Day. There are some Addressees, that may be a Proof of their Loyalty.

Lord Hardwicke. Let me see the Book; (which was delivered.) There is an Entry of some Leafes, with a Rental of an Estate.

Mr. At. Gen. Let me see the Book.

Sir T. Abney. My Lord, we beg Leave first to read the Entries of eldest Sons, born within the Liberties, after their Fathers were admitted, and that were admitted on paying their Fines of 6s. 8d. — Read Jeremiah Brybam. He was admitted into the Freedom the 27th of April, 12 James 1, anno 1614, and paid his Fine of 6s. 8d. He was baptized, my Lord, the 9th of November, 1587, and admitted as the eldest Son of James Brybam, Jurat. (Produce the Copy on Stamps.)

Lord Hardwicke. What is that? Where had you it from? Is it a true Copy?

Mr. Cranston. My Lord, it is a true Copy. I had it from the Corporation-Books; I examined it with the Entry in the Book.

Associate reads —

“ Memorandum. 27^o Aprilis, 12^o Jacobi 1^{mi}, anno 1614. Hastings, ff. At the Court of our Sovereign Lord the King, came Jeremiah Brybam, and prayed to be admitted to the Freedom and Liberty of this Town; and by Mr. Mayor and his Brethren was admitted and sworn, and kissed the right Cheek of Mr. Mayor, more solito, pro fine 6s. 8d. duntaxat, quia filius sen' est liberi hominis et Jurat' hujus villæ, &c. viz. filius Jacobi Brybam, Jurat' defunct', &c. ”

Mr. Strange. That, my Lord, is the Custom: He kissed the Mayor's Cheek, “ more solito, pro fine 6s. 8d. duntaxat, quia filius sen' est liberi hominis et Jurat' hujus villæ, &c. viz. filius Jacobi Brybam, Jurat' defunct', &c. ”

Sir T. Abney. My Lord, we beg Leave now to shew, when he was born, and when his Father was admitted. He was born or baptized the 9th of November, 1587. — Read the Certificate. Did you compare it with the Parish Register-Book of Hastings? Is it a true Copy.

Mr. Cranston. Yes; it is a true Copy; I examined it with the Register.

Associate reads —

“ 1587, November 9th, — ”

Sir T. Abney. This is the Birth or Baptism of this Jeremiah Brybam.

“ Christened, Jeremiah, the Son of James Brybam. ”

Sir T. Abney. My Lord, to shew that his Father was a Freeman, we shall read to your Lordship and the Jury an Entry, whereby it will appear, that his Father acted as a Freeman January 4, 18 Eliz. 1576.

Lord Hardwicke. He is mentioned to be a Jurat in this Entry; therefore that is needless.

Mr. Strange. My Lord, the next Entry is the 20th of December, 1620, James, the Son of James Lasber. — Where is that? Did you examine that with the Entry in the Corporation-Book? Is it a true Copy?

Mr. Cranston. Yes; I examined it; it is a true Copy.

Associate reads —

“ Hastings, ff. Assembly holden the 20th December, anno regni Regis Jac. 18^o, 1620, secundum consuetudinem, &c. At which Court appeared Richard Waller, Mayor; James Lasber, Martin Lise, William Bysbop, Richard Withers, Jeremiah Brybam, Richard Boys, John Brett, Nathaniel Lasber, Thomas Bryan, John Barley, William Barker, Jurats; Robert Mills — ”

Mr. Strange. Pass over the Names:

“ At this Assembly, Samuel Moore and — are elected Barons of this Town: — ”

Sir T. Abney. My Lord, this Samuel Moore was the Plaintiff's Grandfather.

“ — And at this Court it is decreed, that James Lasber instantly requiring the same, was admitted to the Liberty and Freedom of this Town, by Consent of all; et fecit sacramentum, et osculatus est malam dextram Majoris, more solito, et solvit pro fine 6s. 8d. quia primogenitus filius Jacobi Lasber, Jurat'. ”

Sir T. Abney. Because he was the eldest Son of his Father. Now, my Lord, we shall shew he was born within the Borough, and after the Time of his Father's being admitted a Freeman. — Look out the Certificate of James Lasber's Baptism, the 27th April, 1579. Is that a true Copy, Sir? Did you examine it with the Register?

Mr. Cranston. It is; I examined it.

Associate reads —

“ 27 April, 1579. Christened, James, the Son of James Lasber, Jurat. ”

Mr. Strange. The Father is said to be a Jurat at the Time of registering the Son's Baptism.

Mr. Marsh. My Lord, the next Instance we go upon is Thomas Lovell, (Look out that) the eldest Son of William Lovell. The Father was admitted the 6th of September, 1636. Thomas the Son was born the 10th of February, 1640; he was admitted a Freeman on the 20th of April, 1667. — Read the Son's Admission. Did you examine it?

Lord Hardwicke. Is that a true Copy?

Mr. Cranston. It is, my Lord; I examined it.

Associate reads —

“ Hastings, ff. 20 April, 1667. In public Court came Thomas Lovell, jun. eldest Son of William Lovell, late Jurat, deceased, and prayed the Franchise of this Town; to which, for his Fine of 6s. 8d. he is admitted; took his Oath, and kissed the Mayor's right Cheek, more solito. ”

Mr. Marsh. To prove that his Father was a Freeman, shew the Entry of the 6th of September, 1636. Is it examined?

Mr.

Mr. Cranston. Yes.

Associate reads —

“ Hastings, ff. Memorand, quod 6th September, 1636, came William Lovell, and prayed to be admitted into the Freedoms of this Town and Port, and took the Oaths, more solito, and was admitted accordingly.”

Mr. Strange. My Lord, his Father had been four Years a Jurat, when the Son was baptized. — Read the Certificate of the 10th of February, 1640. Is it a true Copy? Did you examine it?

Mr. Cranston. I did.

Associate reads —

“ 1640, February 10th. Baptized, Thomas, the Son of William Lovell, Jurat.”

Mr. Filmer. My Lord, the next Instance is William Batchelor, eldest Son of James Batchelor. He was admitted the 2d of May, 1669. — Read that. Is it a true Copy? Did you examine it?

Mr. Cranston. It is; I examined it.

Associate reads —

“ Hastings, ff. 2 Maii, 22 Car. 2^{di}, 1669. At this Election and Assembly, William Batchelor, eldest Son of James Batchelor eldest, Freeman above-named, at his humble Request, is also made a Freeman, and admitted into the Franchise of this Township, for his Fine of a Demi-Mark, and thereunto sworn, and kissed the Mayor’s Cheek, more solito, &c.”

Mr. Filmer. My Lord, he was baptized the 17th of July, 1636. — Read that Certificate. Did you examine it? Is it a true Copy?

Mr. Cranston. It is.

Associate reads —

“ 17 July, 1636. Baptized, William, the Son of James Batchelor.”

Mr. Filmer. My Lord, his Father was admitted nineteen Years before, 17th September, 15 Jac. 1, 1617. — Read his Admission. Is it a true Copy? Did you examine it?

Mr. Cranston. I did; it is a true Copy.

Associate reads —

“ 15^o Regis Jacobi 1ⁿⁱ, Jacobus Batchelor admissus est ad libertatem hujus villæ, et osculavit malam dextram Majoris, more solito, pro fine suo 13 s. 4 d.”

This James was the Father, and he paid a Fine of 13 s. 4 d. because he was not admitted as the Son of a Freeman. He was admitted by a Freehold or by Purchase.

Mr. Clarke. My Lord, the next Instance we shall trouble your Lordship with, is William Parker, jun. He was admitted the 9th of May, 1670, for a Fine of 6 s. 8 d. — Read his Admission. Is that a true Copy? Did you examine it?

Mr. Cranston. Yes; I examined it.

“ Hastings, ff. 9^o die Maii, 22 Car. 2, 1670. “ Assemblat tent’ ibidem coram Majore villæ et portus Hastings prædiæ.”

“ William Parker, jun. eldest Son of William Parker, Jurat, came here in Court, praying his Freedom, &c. which is granted him for a Demi-Mark; took his Oath, and kissed the Mayor’s Cheek, more solito, &c.”

VOL. X.

Mr. Clarke. My Lord, we have a Certificate of the Son’s Baptism, the 14th of August, 1644. — Is it a true Copy?

Mr. Cranston. It is.

Associate reads —

“ 14 August, 1644. Baptized, William, the Son of William Parker.”

Mr. Clarke. We shall now shew your Lordship, that his Father acted as a Freeman six Years before the Birth of the Son, and as a Jurat two Years after. — Is that a true Copy? Did you examine it?

Mr. Cranston. It is.

Associate reads —

“ Hastings, ff. Elect Majoris villæ et portus de Hastings prædiæ, tent’ ibidem 15^o die Aprilis, anno regni Regis nostri Car’ Angl’, &c. 14^o, 1638. Ad hanc diem Johannes Barley electus est in offic’ Majoris hujus villæ pro hoc anno sequent’ — Lord Hardwicke. Who was present?

“ — per voces horum liberorum hominum villæ prædiæ, videlicet, Nic. Staplus, Ric. Staplus, Wil. Goldham, Wil. Chapman, Johannis Sargent, sen. Wil. Turpine, Ric. Wheeler, Johannis Harys, Wil. Dighton, Tho. Rainolds, Sam. Gawen, Geo. Fletcher, Ric. Wynter, Hen. Lasber, Humf. Blinkerne, Jo. Hitbe, Mich. Lasber, Phil. Girdler, Wil. Lunsford, Geo. Easton, Ric. Sargent, Sack. Franke, Jo. Sargent, jun. W. Parker, Jo. Wynter, Ro. Marshall, Tho. Stevenson, jun. Jo. Hollybone, Ro. Phillip, Dr. Ellis, Marci Pontes, Wil. Lovell, jun. et Jac. Batchelor: Qui quidem Major sic elect’ sacramentum suum præstitit corporale ad offic’ illud exercend’ prout decet, more solito, &c.”

Sir T. Abney. The next Person we shall trouble your Lordship with, is —

Mr. Serj. Eyre. Was any body else admitted at that Time?

Sir T. Abney. There were nine made free. — My Lord, the next is John Fantley. He was admitted the 5th of December, 1674. — Is it a true Copy? Did you examine it?

Mr. Cranston. I examined it; it is a true Copy.

Associate reads —

“ Hastings, ff. 5 Decembris, 1674, 26 Car. 2^{di}. “ Assemblat tent’ ibidem coram Majore, &c. villæ et portus Hastings prædiæ, in plena curia venit Johannes Salmon, et petit libertatem hujus villæ; Johannes Fantley, jun. et Willielmus Genner, jun. et admittuntur, scilicet, prædiæ Salmon pro 13 s. 4 d. et prædiæ Fantley 6 s. 8 d. et prædiæ Genner 6 s. 8 d. quia filii sen’ patr’ eor’ liber’; qui omnes fecerunt inde sacramentam, et malam dextram Majoris osculaverunt, more solito, &c.”

Sir T. Abney. My Lord, the Father of Fantley was admitted a Freeman the 8th of July, 1626. Fantley the Son was baptized the 13th of December, 1640; just thirty-four Years before he was admitted a Freeman, which was the 5th of December, 1674. — Read the Certificate of his Baptism. Is it a true Copy?

Mr. Cranston. It is.

Associate reads —

“ Hastings, ff. 13 December, 1640. Baptized, John Fantley, the Son of John and Margaret Fantley.”

Sir T. Abney. We shall now shew your Lordship, that his Father was admitted to his Freedom the 8th of July, 1626, thirteen Years before the Birth of his Son. — Read the Father's Admission. Is it a true Copy? Did you examine it?

Mr. Cranston. I did.

Associate reads —

“Hastings, ff. 8 Julii, 1626. Johannes Fantley
“admissus est ad libertatem hujus ville, pro fine
“13 s. 4 d.”

Mr. Serj. Eyre. There the Fine is 13 s. 4 d.

Sir T. Abney. This is the Father.

Mr. Serj. Eyre. That is a very material Difference. The Son's Fine is 6 s. 8 d. but every body that is admitted by any other Right, pays for his Fine 13 s. 4 d.

Mr. Strange. The Fine of 6 s. 8 d. is a particular Indulgence to the Sons of Freemen, and all others paid 13 s. 4 d. or more. — My Lord, the next Instance is Philip Bayley, the eldest Son of John Bayley. He was admitted the 10th of April, 1691; he was born the 14th of May, 1669. — Read his Admission. Did you examine it? Is it a true Copy?

Mr. Cranston. It is.

Associate reads —

“10 April, 1691, 3 W. and Mar. Hastings, ff.
“This Day, being Good-Friday, Philip Bayley, “eldest Son of John Bayley, deceased, formerly
“Mayor of Hastings, for his Fine of 6 s. 8 d.
“was admitted to the Freedom of this Town
“and Port, by Thomas Lovell, Mayor, Edward “Milward, Richard Watts, and John Medhurst, “Jurats; who took his Oath, and kissed the “Mayor's right Cheek, more solito, and also took
“the Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy.”

Mr. Strange. We shall now produce the Copy of the Registry of his Baptism, which was the 14th of May, 1669.

Mr. Cranston. It was the 19th of May, 1667.

Mr. Strange. Read the Certificate of the 19th of May, 1667, of Philip Bayley's Baptism. Did you examine it? Is it a true Copy?

Mr. Cranston. It is.

Associate reads —

“1667, May 19. Baptized, Philip, the Son
“of John Bayley and Anne his Wife.”

Mr. Strange. My Lord, we shall now read the Copy of the Entry of the 28th of April, 1656; whereby it will appear, John Bayley his Father was then a Freeman. — Is it a true Copy? Did you examine it?

Mr. Cranston. I examined it; it is a true Copy.

Associate reads —

“Hastings, ff. The Election of the Mayor of
“the Town and Port of Hastings, the 28th
“Day of April, 1656, in the Court-Hall
“of the same Town, according to the Use
“and Custom thereof, Time out of Mind “used, &c.

“At this Day was chosen Thomas Delves into
“the Office of Mayoralty of the same Town,
“for the Year ensuing, by the Voices of these “Freemen of the said Town following: —

Mr. Strange. Who was present?

“ — That is to say, of Richard Wheeler,
“William Dighton, Richard Sargent, sen. Philip

Girdler, John Lasber, William Barker, Mark
Pontes, James Batchelor, Daniel Downe, James
Lasber, Gent. Drew Richardson, Thomas Jarret,
John Spey, Samuel Smershall, John Fyffenden,
Richard Stevenson, James Redames, William
Geerey, Robert Bursley, Thomas Hyder, Daniel
Stevens, John Brunnel, John Bayley, jun. Thomas
Penbuckle, Edward Hildring, Simon Waters,
James Chowe, Ralph Barnicle, John Shoefsmith,
John Fantley, Peter Stanbynooth.”

Mr. Marsh. My Lord, the next Instance is Jeremiab Redames. He was admitted the 11th of January, 1691. — Look out that. Did you examine it? Is it a true Copy?

Mr. Cranston. It is.

Associate reads —

“Hastings, ff. Memorandum, The 11th Day
“of January, 1691, before Mr. Mayor, assisted “by Philip Lovell, John Stevens, and Dr. Peter “Fiat, Jurats, came Jeremiab Redames and Philip “Girdler, and craved to be admitted into the “Freedom of this Town and Port; and they “were accordingly admitted into the Freedom,
“and took the Oath of a Freeman, and also the “other Oaths, and kissed the Mayor's right
“Cheek, more solito; and for a Fine paid, viz.
“Philip Girdler, a Mark; and Jeremiab Redames, “being the eldest Son of a Freeman, half a
“Mark; which was extr' to the Chamberlain.”

Mr. Marsh. My Lord, the Time of his Baptism was the 2d of January, 1655. — Read that Certificate. Have you examined it? Is it a true Copy?

Mr. Cranston. It is.

Associate reads —

“Hastings, ff. 2 January, 1655, Jeremiab, the “Son of James Redames, was baptized.”

Mr. Marsh. My Lord, James Redames was a Freeman in April 1649.

Mr. Clarke. My Lord, the next Instance is Thomas Boyce. He was admitted as an eldest Son.

Lord Hardwicke. You must shew Jeremiab Redames was born after the Father's Admission, if you would apply this Instance.

Mr. Clarke. My Lord, we will shew that James Redames the Father acted as a Freeman the 28th of April, 1649, six Years before the Son was born. — Look out that Entry. Is it a true Copy?

Mr. Cranston. It is.

Associate reads —

“Hastings, ff. The Election of the Mayor of
“the Town and Port of Hastings, the 28th
“Day of April, 1656, in the Court-Hall
“of the same Town, according to the Use
“and Custom there Time out of Mind “used.

“This Day was chosen Thomas Delves into
“the Office of Mayoralty of the same Town,
“for the Year ensuing, by the Voices of these “Freemen of the said Town; that is to say, of “Richard Wheeler, &c. James Redames, &c.” ut supra.

Mr. Serj. Eyre. Read it again.

Lord Hardwicke. It is only mentioned as a Fact.

Mr. Clarke. My Lord, the next Instance is Thomas Boyce, admitted as an eldest Son the 26th of December, 1691. He was baptized the 3d of August, 1671. — Read his Admission. Is it a true Copy?

Mr. Cranston. It is.

Associate reads —

“ Hastings, ff. Memorandum, That the 26th Day of December, 1691, before Mr. Mayor, assisted by Thomas Lovell, Philip Lovell, John Stevens, and Dr. Peter Fiat, Jurats, came Thomas Boyce, jun. Richard Broadbridge, Benjamin Meadow, and Thomas Wheeler, and craved to be admitted into the Freedom of this Town and Port; and they were accordingly admitted into the Freedom, and took the Oaths of Freemen, and also the Oaths of Allegiance to their Majesties King William and Queen Mary, and kissed the Mayor’s right Cheek, more solito; and for a Fine paid, viz. Thomas Boyce, jun. and Richard Broadbridge, being Freemen’s eldest Sons, paid each 6s. 8d. and Benjamin Meadow and Thomas Wheeler, 13s. 4d. each; which was extraet to the Chamberlain. And forasmuch as the said Thomas Boyce, jun. Richard Broadbridge, and Benjamin Meadow, are not yet House-keepers, their Friends have undertaken and promised for them, that they shall pay what Scot and Lot shall be assessed upon them, also Watch, Ward, and Search, and do all Duties incumbent upon Freemen, viz. Thomas Boyce, for his Son Thomas Boyce, jun. and John Stevens, Son of Henry, for Richard Broadbridge and Benjamin Meadow.”

Mr. Clarke. My Lord, he was baptized the 3d of August, 1671. — Read the Certificate of his Baptism. Is it examined?

Mr. Cranston. Yes.

Associate reads —

“ Hastings, ff. 1671, August 3d, Baptized, Thomas, the Son of Thomas Boyce.”

Mr. Strange. Now read the Admission of Thomas Boyce the Father. Did you examine it? Is it a true Copy?

Mr. Cranston. It is.

“ Hastings, ff. Assemblat’ tent’ ibidem 20^o die Novembris, anno regni Regis nostri Caroli secundi, Angliæ, &c. 15^o, 1663.

“ Hastings, ff. Memorand’, quod 5^o die Decembris, hoc anno prædiēt’, venerunt Thomas Boyce et Willielmus Genner coram Majore et Juratis in plena curia, et per seipfos ad libertatem hujus villæ admitti; et admittuntur, et osculati sunt malam dextram Majoris, et sacramentum suum tunc ibidem præstiterunt, more solito, pro fine utriusque eorum 13s. 4d.”

Mr. Clarke. My Lord, the next Instance is Stephen Peregoe. He was admitted the 11th of August, 1716; baptized the 29th of January, 1690; and his Father was admitted the 12th of May, 1683. — Read the Son’s Admission. Is it a true Copy? Have you examined it?

Mr. Cranston. Yes.

Associate reads —

“ Hastings, ff. Cur’ tent’ ibidem undecimo die Augusti, anno regni Regis nostri Georgii 2^{di}, Magnæ Britanniæ, &c. tertio, anno 1716.

“ Memorandum. The 11th of August, Stephen Peregoe, jun. was sworn a Freeman of this Town, more solito, &c. at the Bell Inn in Hastings, before the Mayor and Jurats, and paid 6s. 8d.

“ Fine, as being the eldest Son of a Freeman; and the Reason of his being now sworn out of Court was, because it had been before unanimously agreed to, in full and open Court, by the Mayor and Jurats.”

Mr. Serj. Eyre. Who is that?

Sir T. Sibney. Stephen Peregoe.

Lord Hardwicke. What, is the Fine 6s. 8d.?

Mr. Clarke. Yes, my Lord; he paid 6s. 8d. as being the eldest Son of a Freeman. — Now read the Certificate of his Baptism. Is that a true Copy? Did you examine it?

Mr. Cranston. I did.

Associate reads —

“ January 29, 1690. Baptized, Stephen, the Son of Stephen and Margaret Peregoe.”

Mr. Clarke. The Time of his Father’s Admission was the 12th of May, 1683. — Read that. Did you examine it? Is it a true Copy?

Mr. Cranston. It is.

Associate reads —

“ Hastings, ff. 12 May, 1683. Before the Mayor and Jurats, came Stephen Peregoe, and prayed to be admitted into the Freedom of this Town and Port; whereupon he is admitted for his Fine.”

Mr. Filmer. My Lord, Benjamin Meadow, admitted the 6th of May, 1721, is the next. — Read his Admission. Did you examine that? Is it a true Copy?

Mr. Cranston. Yes.

Associate reads —

“ Hastings, ff. At the Court of Record held the 6th of May, 1721, Benjamin Meadow, jun. was, with the unanimous Consent and Approbation of the Mayor and Jurats, made a Freeman of this Town and Port, for his Fine of 6s. 8d. as the eldest Son of a Freeman.”

Mr. Serj. Eyre. By the unanimous Consent of the Mayor and Jurats, he was made free.

Mr. Filmer. My Lord, he was baptized the 25th of August, 1697. — Read the Certificate. Did you examine it? Is it a true Copy?

Mr. Cranston. It is.

Associate reads —

“ Hastings, ff. 25 August, 1697. Baptized, Benjamin, Son of Benjamin and Meadow.”

Mr. Filmer. My Lord, his Father’s Admission was the 26th of December, 1691, six Years before the Birth of the Son. — Read that. Did you examine it? Is it a true Copy?

Mr. Cranston. I did.

Associate reads —

“ Hastings, ff. Memorandum, 26 December, 1691, before Mr. Mayor, assisted by Thomas Lovell, Philip Lovell, John Stevens, and Dr. Peter Fiat, came Thomas Boyce, jun. Richard Broadbridge, Benjamin Meadow, and Thomas Wheeler, and craved to be admitted into the Freedoms of this Town and Port; and took the Oaths, and were admitted accordingly,” prout supra.

Lord Hardwicke. What do you read that for?

Mr. Strange. My Lord, to shew that Benjamin Meadow was a Freeman so many Years before the the Birth of Benjamin Meadow, the eldest Son: He came, and prayed to be admitted, and took the Oaths.—My Lord, our next Instance is John Barley. He is not mentioned in the Entry as the eldest Son, but as the Son of such a Man, who was free; and from thence we infer, that the Man had no other Sons.

Lord Hardwicke. Who is that?

Mr. Strange. John Barley, my Lord. He was admitted in May, 1608. We chuse to put them together, though we are now gone a hundred Years back.—Read his Admission. Did you examine it? Is it a true Copy?

Mr. Cranston. Yes.

Associate reads —

“ Hastings, ff. 6^o Jacobi 1^{mi}, 1608. Memorandum, That on the 7th of May, hoc anno, John Barley and Richard Kempfall were admitted to the Freedom and Liberty of this Town, and were sworn, and kissed Mr. Mayor’s right Cheek, more solito; whose Fines appear upon their Heads.”

Mr. Strange. See the Fine of 6s. 8d. paid by Barley.

Associate reads —

“ John Barley, Hastings, quia pater suus liber homo, ideo, secundum consuetudinem, finis ejus est 6s. 8d.

“ Kempfall, 13s. 4d.”

Mr. Strange. “ Quia pater suus liber homo, ideo, secundum consuetudinem, finis ejus est 6s. 8d.”

Lord Hardwicke. What was Kempfall’s Fine?

Mr. Strange. 13s. 4d. my Lord.—Now read his Certificate. Have you examined it? Is it a true Copy?

Mr. Cranston. It is.

Associate reads —

“ Hastings, ff. 19 May, 1588. Baptized, John, the Son of John Barley.”

Mr. Serj. Eyre. Mr. Cranston, you say you have examined the Register; Did not you find an elder Brother of this John Barley?

Mr. Cranston. No.

N. B. At this Day Richard Lyfe was chosen Mayor, and Melchior Rainolds Town-Clerk.

Sir T. Abney. My Lord, we shall next lay before your Lordship and the Jury other Instances of Persons admitted as eldest Sons of Freeman, and born within the Borough. The first of them was admitted in 1610.

Lord Hardwicke. That comes under the first Head.

Sir T. Abney. My Lord, we shall shew that they were the eldest Sons of Freeman. We begin with Thomas Streat.

Mr. Strange. And born within the Borough.

Sir T. Abney. Thomas Streat, my Lord, was admitted the 29th of April, 1610. He was born within the Borough the 31st of March, 1580. So that he was thirty Years of Age, when he was admitted. — Read the Entry of his Admission. Did you examine it? Is it a true Copy?

Mr. Cranston. Yes.

Associate reads —

“ Hastings, ff. 29 Aprilis, 1610, 8^o Jac. 1ⁿⁱ. Quinto die Maii, hoc anno 8^o Jacobi Regis, venit Thomas Streat, maximus natu filius Thomæ Streat defuncti, nuper unius liberorum hominum hujus villæ, et petit se admitti ad libertatem hujus villæ; et per Major' et Jurat' antedictos admittus est, et sacramentum præstitit corporale, et osculatus est malam dextram Majoris, more solito; et finis ejus pro admissione sua est 6s. 8d. quia pater, suus liber erat, secundum consuetudinem, &c.”

Sir T. Abney. Now read the Certificate of his Baptism, the 31st of March, 1580, to shew that he was born within the Borough. Is it a true Copy?

Mr. Cranston. It is.

Associate reads —

“ Hastings, ff. 31 March, 1580. The same Day baptized, Thomas, the Son of Thomas Streat.”

Lord Hardwicke. What Register is that a Copy of, now it comes to be more necessary to ask?

Mr. Cranston. My Lord, it is a true Copy of the Parish-Register of Hastings.

Mr. Strange. My Lord, the next is William Lovell. His Father was not only a Freeman, but a Jurat. He was admitted the 6th of September, 1636.

Mr. At. Gen. You go backwards and forwards in a very irregular Manner.

Mr. Strange. We'll go regularly on; you will not be able to follow us. — Read the Entry of the 6th of September, 1636, of the Admission of William Lovell, jun.

Mr. At. Gen. You must prove William Lovell the Father was a Freeman; you read him before as Father.

Lord Hardwicke. What is the Time of William Lovell's Admission?

Mr. Strange. My Lord, the 6th of September, 1636.

Sir T. Abney. My Lord, we read it before, to shew that he was born before Thomas Lovell. He is the third Instance we spoke to under the first Head.

Lord Hardwicke. The 20th of April, 1667, Thomas, the Son of William Lovell, was admitted.

Sir T. Abney. And now, my Lord, we read his Father's Admittance, the 6th of September, 1636.

Lord Hardwicke. You did not read it before?

Sir T. Abney. My Lord, we read him before, as a Jurat.

Mr. Strange. My Lord, it has been read, to shew that the Father was a Freeman at the Time of the Son's Birth. — Read it again. Did you examine it? Is it a true Copy?

Mr. Cranston. Yes.

Associate reads —

“ Hastings, ff. 6 September, 1636, William Lovell, jun. eldest Son of his Father, Jurat, who is now made free of this Corporation for 6s. 8d. Fine, took his Oath, and kissed the Mayor's right Cheek, more solito, &c.”

[2 P]

Mr.

Mr. Strange. Now produce the Register of the 31st December, 1639. Is it a true Copy?

Mr. Cranston. Yes.

Associate reads —

“ Hastings, ff. 31 December, 1639. Baptized, “ William, Son of William Lovell.”

Mr. Marsb. My Lord, the next Instance, under this Head, is Thomas Frank. He was admitted the 26th February, 1662. — Read his Admission. Did you examine it? Is it a true Copy?

Mr. Cranston. Yes.

Associate reads —

“ Sargent, eldest Son of Richard, and prayed his “ Freedom; which was granted him by the said “ Mayor and Jurats, for his Fine of 6s. 8d. and “ then and there took his Oath, and kissed the “ Mayor’s Cheek, more solito.”

Mr. Marsh. My Lord, he was born the 26th of December, 1624.

Lord Hardwicke. His Father is not said there to be a Freeman.

Mr. Strange. My Lord, it is only said, “ Richard Sargent, eldest Son of Richard.”

Mr. Marsh. My Lord, he was born the 26th of December, 1624.

Lord Hardwicke. Can you shew his Father to be a Freeman?

Mr. Marsh. It is only, “ eldest Son of Richard ;” if he be a Stranger, they mention the Father to be so; and the Fine is 6s. 8d.

Lord Hardwicke. If the Father be a Freeman, you should shew it.

Mr. Strange. Now and then a Town-Clerk stiches a few Things together —

Mr. Filmer. My Lord, the next Instance is Thomas Gawen, admitted the 21st of December, 1677. — Read it. Is it examined?

Sir T. Abney. My Lord, we have many more Entries, not distinguishing between Sons and eldest Sons: But we shall not trouble your Lordship with them, but go to our living Witnesses. — Call Robert Evernden.

Robert Evernden sworn.

Sir T. Abney. How old are you?

Evernden. Sixty-five Years old.

Mr. Lacy. Was your Father a Freeman of Hastings?

Evernden. No.

Sir T. Abney. Where was you born?

Evernden. At Robert’sbridge, fifteen Miles from Hastings; but I have lived fifty Years in Hastings.

Sir T. Abney. What do you know of the Custom in Hastings, as to what Right the eldest Sons of Freemen have to their Freedoms?

Evernden. I have heard Gentlemen say — I know no otherwise —

Sir T. Abney. Who have you heard say?

Evernden. I have heard Mr. Thomas Moore and John Moore, who were both Justices of Peace, and Jurats.

Mr. Serj. Eyre. My Lord, here is a Man prompts this Witness.

Lord Hardwicke. Let him go on the other Side.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, I apprehend this is not Evidence.

Mr. Strange. You say, you lived fifty Years in Hastings, and knew Thomas Moore and John Moore, Justices of the Peace, and Jurats; Give my Lord and the Jury an Account, what you have heard them say in relation to the Right of eldest Sons of Freemen to be free.

Evernden. I heard them say, that the eldest Son of a Freeman had a Right.

Mr. Strange. Where must they be born?

Evernden. Born in Town, to be sure.

Mr. Strange. Whether must they be born before their Fathers were made free, or after?

Evernden. They must be born in their Fathers Freedom.

Mr. Strange. What Fine do they usually pay?

Evernden. Six and eight Pence.

Mr. Strange. Did you ever know an eldest Son of a Freeman, during the fifty Years you have lived in Hastings, refused?

Evernden. Some did not require it.

Mr. Strange. Was any body denied, that ever demanded it?

Lord Hardwicke. He only tells you what he heard the Moore’s say. — You say, you had this Conversation with John Moore, and he was a Justice; What did he tell you?

Evernden. He told me, that the eldest Son of a Freeman had a Right.

Lord Hardwicke. Was John Moore a Jurat?

Evernden. Yes, my Lord.

Lord Hardwicke. And these two Men told you this?

Evernden. Yes, my Lord,

Mr. Strange. How long ago is it that they told you this?

Evernden. I cannot tell.

Mr. Strange. But, according to your Memory, how long do you think it may be?

Evernden. It was, I believe, in the last King's Reign, or Queen Anne's, that they spoke it; I cannot tell to a Year.

Mr. Strange. Have you seen them lately?

Evernden. No.

Mr. Strange. Within twenty or thirty Years?

Evernden. Yes.

Mr. Strange. Did both, or one of them, mention this? and how long is it since, according to the best of your Remembrance?

Evernden. About ten or a dozen Years ago.

Mr. Strange. Had you any Conversation with any other Freeman about this Right?

Evernden. Yes, with Robert Bartholomew.

Mr. Strange. Was he a Freeman?

Evernden. Yes; he had been Mayor.

Mr. Strange. What have you heard him say about this Right?

Evernden. I have heard him say, the eldest Son of a Freeman had a Right.

Mr. Marsh. Do you know Dr. Fiat? During so many Years as you lived in Hastings, do you remember him to say any thing about the Right of eldest Sons?

Evernden. He has been dead some Time.

Mr. Marsh. What was he?

Evernden. He was a Doctor, and Mayor of the Town.

Mr. Marsh. Did he ever say any thing to you about this Right?

Evernden. No, not that I remember.

Mr. Strange. During the fifty Years you lived in Hastings, what was the general Report there concerning the Right of eldest Sons, that what they informed you about it was true?

Evernden. I never heard any body say but that they had such a Right.

Mr. Clarke. How old were Robert Bartholomew and the two Moore's, when you heard them say this?

Evernden. They were very ancient Men.

Mr. At. Gen. You know nothing of your own Knowledge; it is only by Hear-say.

Evernden. No.

Mr. At. Gen. What did you hear them say, it was only in general?

Evernden. That the eldest Son of a Freeman had a Right.

Mr. At. Gen. Was it to the eldest Son of a Freeman generally, without confining it to being born within the Borough, or to any particular Case?

Evernden. They said, that the eldest Son of a Freeman had a Right.

Mr. At. Gen. Are you sure they confined it to the eldest Son of a Freeman? Did they say nothing, that all the Sons had a Right?

Mr. Strange. If all the Sons have a Right, then an eldest Son has.

Lord Hardwicke. Mr. Evernden, you said, they must be born in the Town during the Fathers Freedom; Did Thomas Moore or John Moore say whether they must be born in Hastings, or after their Fathers Freedom?

Mr. Evernden. No, my Lord.

Lord Hardwicke. Then why did you say that?

Evernden. They said, that the eldest Son of a Freeman had a Right, if any body had.

Several Council. Ay, if any body had.

Lord Hardwicke. What is the Right of Freedom?

Evernden. None at all, but by the Election of the Mayor and Jurats.

Sir T. Abney. They are glorious Fellows.

Mr. Lacy. Did Moore say any thing of Residence?

Evernden. No.

John Couzens sworn.

Mr. Strange. How old are you, Mr. Couzens?

Couzens. About sixty.

Mr. Strange. Where was you born?

Couzens. In Hastings, and have lived all my Time there.

Mr. At. Gen. Was your Father a Freeman?

Couzens. No.

Mr. Strange. During all that Time you have lived in Hastings, what have you heard any ancient People say concerning the Right of eldest Sons to be free?

Couzens. I have heard several ancient People say, the eldest Son of a Freeman had a Right by his Father's Charter.

Sir T. Abney. Did you hear them say any thing, where he was to be born?

Couzens. I cannot tell; but they said he had a Right by his Father's Charter.

Sir T. Abney. What is a Charter?

Couzens. I take it, his Father was to be free first.

Sir T. Abney. Can you recollect the Names of any ancient Inhabitants you have heard say this?

Couzens. Yes; I lived with Dr. Fiat when he was Mayor, and was to and fro with him; and I heard him say, the eldest Son of a Freeman had a Right by his Father's Charter.

Sir T. Abney. Did you hear any others say so?

Couzens. Yes; several others, both Thomas and John Moore, Jurats.

Sir T. Abney. Have you heard any others say so?

Couzens. I have heard it from several others; but I cannot recollect their Names.

Sir T. Abney. Did you ever know the eldest Son of a Freeman refused?

Couzens. No, not till I heard of the Plaintiff Moore's being refused.

Sir T. Abney. Not till you heard of the Plaintiff Moore: They are an ancient Family in Hastings, I think?

Couzens. Yes.

Mr. Marsh. My Lord, this Dr. Fiat was Mayor; he was Town-Clerk and Doctor, and had the Records of the Town in his Custody when Mayor, and must know the Custom. He was a Jurat in 1691.

Mr. Serj. Eyre. Mr. Evernden, suppose a Freeman has several Sons, are all these Sons intituled as well as the eldest?

Evernden. I cannot say.

Mr. Serj. Eyre. Did you ever know a younger Son refused?

Drew Shengleton sworn.

Lord Hardwicke. How old are you, Mr. Shengleton?

Shengleton. Sixty-nine Years of Age.

Mr. Strange. How long have you lived in Hastings?

Shengleton.

Shengleton. I have lived sixty Years in Hastings, in the Town.

Mr. Strange. What is the Usage and Right there of Freeman's eldest Sons?

Shengleton. I was not born there, though I was a Child when I went to live at Hastings.

Mr. Strange. Do not you know what the Custom and Usage is there?

Shengleton. I have heard say, the eldest Sons had a Right.

Mr. Strange. Who has told you?

Shengleton. I cannot nominate them, they were so many; but I can tell it is a Discourse among a great many People.

Mr. Strange. Was it the common Report, when you went to live in Hastings, and since, that the eldest Sons of Freeman had a Right?

Shengleton. So far as I have heard, it was.

Mr. Strange. Did you ever know an eldest Son refused?

Shengleton. I know nothing about it.

Mr. Strange. Have you heard any ancient People, that are dead, talk about it?

Shengleton. I cannot remember.

Mr. Strange. Have not you heard them say, that the eldest Son of a Freeman had a Right? Have not you heard your Mother say so?

Shengleton. She told me, my Father was a Freeman.

Mr. Strange. When was that?

Shengleton. When I was a Child.

Mr. Strange. What did she tell you else?

Shengleton. I have heard my Mother say, that the eldest Son of a Freeman was to be free, and that my elder Brother had a Right.

Mr. Strange. Was your elder Brother a Freeman?

Shengleton. No.

Mr. Strange. Why had he it not?

Shengleton. My Mother said, she had lost my Father's Franche or Charter, and that was the Reason; and she said, her Son should go into the Hall, and demand it.

Mr. Strange. How came she to say so?

Lord Hardwicke. How long is it since you heard this Discourse, that Freeman's eldest Sons had a Right?

Shengleton. It is many Years; I cannot tell exactly how many.

Lord Hardwicke. How many do you think? Is it ten, or twelve, or twenty Years back?

Shengleton. Yes, it is full twenty Years back.

Mr. Clarke. Did you never hear the Report, when you was a young Man, that the eldest Sons of Freeman had a Right?

Shengleton. Yes; but I cannot nominate them.

Mr. Clarke. You cannot name one Person that ever said so?

Shengleton. No.

John Boykett sworn.

Mr. Marsh. Mr. Boykett, how old are you?

Boykett. Turned of sixty.

Mr. Marsh. How long have you known Hastings?

Boykett. I was born there, and have lived almost all my Time in Hastings.

Mr. Marsh. I would ask you, Within your Time, what have you known to be the Custom with regard to the admitting of Freeman? Whether an eldest Son is intituled?

Boykett. I have heard it among the Freeman.

Lord Hardwicke. Who have you heard say so, do you remember?

Boykett. My Lord, I cannot speak positively to particular Persons.

Mr. Marsh. Did you know Dr. Fiat, the two Mr. Moore's, and Mr. Bartholomew?

Boykett. Yes.

Mr. Marsh. Did you ever speak with them about it?

Boykett. I asked to be made free myself, in Court.

Mr. Marsh. How came you to ask it?

Boykett. I asked it as a Favour, but it was not granted.

Mr. Marsh. When was it, and who did you ask it of?

Boykett. I asked it of Thomas Lowell, about forty Years ago: He was a Freeman, and Mayor.

Mr. Marsh. Did you go into the Court-Hall to ask it?

Boykett. Yes.

Mr. Marsh. Was any thing said to you in relation to your being admitted? — How long ago was it?

Boykett. Forty Years.

Mr. Marsh. What did they say to you, upon your asking to be admitted?

Boykett. I asked to be admitted to the Freedom, as a Favour; and that they would be so good as to admit me. Some were for my being made free, particularly Mr. Clifts, a Justice.

Mr. Marsh. Was your Father a Freeman?

Boykett. No. But the Mayor said, I should not be admitted, because I was a Dissenter: And then Waller, the Town-Clerk, asked the Mayor, whether I was the Son of a Freeman? and the Mayor answered, I was not: And then Waller said to the Mayor, Then do as you please; and the Mayor said, he would not admit a Dissenter for 40*l.*

Lord Hardwicke. What did Waller say upon that?

Boykett. My Lord, the Mayor said, they would not make a Dissenter free for 40*l.* And then the Town-Clerk asked the Mayor, whether he was the Son of a Freeman? To which the Mayor said, he was not; and then Waller, the Town-Clerk, said, Then, Mr. Mayor, you may do as you please.

Lord Hardwicke. What did you understand by those Words?

Boykett. I understood by them Words, that if my Father had been free, I should have had a Freedom.

Mr. At. Gen. How many Children had your Father?

Boykett. Several.

Mr. At. Gen. Was you the eldest?

Boykett. Yes, and served my Time in Hastings.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you know John Medhurst, any thing of his having a Son?

Boykett. Yes, he had a Son born in his Mayoralty.

Mr. At. Gen. Was it his first Son?

Boykett. Yes.

Mr. At. Gen. Did he desire to be made free?

Boykett. Yes; he asked for his Freedom in Court, when I was present.

Mr. At. Gen. Was he made free?

Boykett. Not at that Time; I heard them disputing about it.

Lord Hardwicke. How long ago was that?

Boykett.

Boykett. I cannot tell, my Lord.
Lord Hardwicke. Was it ten Years ago?
Boykett. I cannot say certainly; but I believe thereabouts.

Mr. Strange. You have set up this Exclusion for ten Years; Was it twenty Years ago, that his Father was made free?

Boykett. I cannot say.

Mr. Strange. How long has he been dead?

Boykett. About eight Years.

Mr. Strange. How many Years before he was dead was it, that the Son asked to be made free? Was it seven or eight Years?

Boykett. I cannot say.

Mr. Strange. Is the Son a Freeman now?

Boykett. He has not his Freedom.

Mr. Serj. Eyre. How long was it before Medburst's Death, according to your best Recollection, that he applied to have his Freedom? Was it four or five Years?

Boykett. Medburst the Father died about eight Years ago; I cannot say how long since the Son demanded his Freedom.

Lord Hardwicke. Can you recollect about what Time, according to the best of your Remembrance?

Boykett. Not a great while, my Lord, before the Father's Death.

Lord Hardwicke. Was it two, or three, or five Years?

Boykett. Not five Years, my Lord.

Mr. Clarke. You say, Mr. Boykett, Medburst was refused his Freedom; What was the Reason? Was he born within the Liberties, and after his Father was made free?

Boykett. Yes, during the Time he was Mayor.

Mr. Clarke. Was he his eldest Son?

Boykett. He was his only Son.

Mr. Clarke. Who was Mayor when he was refused?

Boykett. I cannot say.

Lord Hardwicke. He does not remember.

Joan White sworn.

Mr. Clarke. Do you know Hastings?

White. Yes.

Mr. Clarke. How long have you known it?

White. All my Years.

Mr. Clarke. What Age are you?

White. I am sixty-two Years old.

Mr. Clarke. Do you know what is the Custom of making free in Hastings, whether the eldest Son has a Right?

White. I heard my Father say, that the eldest Son had a Right.

Mr. Clarke. Was he a Freeman?

White. Yes.

Lord Hardwicke. Speak out; speak to that Gentleman.

Mr. Clarke. Is your Father living or dead?

White. Dead.

Mr. Clarke. Tell the Court what you have heard him say about the Right of Freeman's eldest Sons.

White. I heard him say, they had a Right.

Sir T. Abney. What, that Freeman's eldest Sons had a Right?

White. Yes.

Sir T. Abney. Have you ever heard any body else say any thing about it?

White. No.

Sir T. Abney. Did you never hear your Mother say any thing about it?

White. No.

Anne Sargent sworn.

Mr. Clarke. Do you know the Town of Hastings?

Sargent. Yes.

Mr. Clarke. How old are you?

Sargent. I am sixty-three Years old.

Mr. Clarke. How long have you lived in Hastings?

Sargent. I have lived there always, and was born there.

Mr. Clarke. Have you heard any Discourse concerning the Right of Freedom in that Town?

Sargent. I have heard Mr. John Stevens, who was several Times Mayor of Hastings, say —

Mr. Clarke. Is he living or dead?

Sargent. He is dead.

Mr. Clarke. What did he say concerning the Right of Freedom?

Sargent. That it belonged to the eldest Sons to be Freeman.

Mr. Clarke. Have you heard any body else say so?

Sargent. No.

Mr. Clarke. Have not you been married?

Sargent. Yes.

Mr. Clarke. Have not you heard your Husband say, that it belonged to the eldest Sons to be made free?

Sargent. Yes, he has said the same.

Mr. Clarke. Was the common Repute during your Time, that the eldest Sons had a Right?

Sargent. Yes.

Mr. Clarke. Was it ever disputed, that they had that Right?

Sargent. No.

Mr. Clarke. And you heard Stevens the Mayor say, that the eldest Sons had a Right, several times?

Sargent. Yes.

Sufannah Medhurst sworn.

Mr. Filmer. How old are you, Mrs. Medhurst?

Medhurst. I am fifty-six Years of Age.

Mr. Filmer. Have not you been Mrs. Mayorefs?

Medhurst. Yes.

Sir T. Abney. Who have the Right in Hastings to be Freeman?

Medhurst. All the Sons of Freeman.

Sir T. Abney. Has not the eldest Son a Right?

Medhurst. Yes; I have heard my Husband say, they could not deny him.

Sir T. Abney. Have you heard him say so more than once?

Medhurst. Yes; I have heard him say so often.

Sir T. Abney. Pray, Mrs. Medhurst, during your Time, was it the common Reputation, that the eldest Son of a Freeman had a Right?

Medhurst. Yes.

Sir T. Abney. Where were they to be born?

Medhurst. In the Town; it was not so much denied then; if it was required, they would do it.

Sir T. Abney. Have you ever known an eldest Son denied?

Medhurst. Yes.

Sir T. Abney. When? Was it within twenty Years?

Medhurst.

Medburst. I cannot say when.

Mr. At. Gen. How many Years is it since the first eldest Son was denied, that you know of? Was it twenty Years ago?

Medburst. I do not know.

Mr. At. Gen. Mention the Name of an eldest Son that you know has been denied.

Medburst. The eldest Son of Mr. Medburst.

Mr. At. Gen. How long ago is that?

Medburst. I cannot tell.

Lord Hardwicke. Is your Husband living, Mrs. Medburst?

Medburst. No, my Lord; my Husband has been dead a great many Years.

Lord Hardwicke. Did you ever know any body denied before? Was it in your Husband's Mayoralty, that this Person was denied?

Medburst. No.

Lord Hardwicke. Was it before or after your Husband's Death, that Mr. Medburst was denied?

Medburst. It was since my Husband's Death, my Lord.

Mr. Serj. Skinner. You have a Husband now, have you not?

Medburst. I hope so, and a good one too.

Mr. Serj. Skinner. You will be Lady Mayorefs again then.

Mr. Serj. Eyre. Mrs. Medburst, I would ask you, whether, when you first knew Hastings, they did not admit every body on Payment of a Fine of 6s 8d.?

Medburst. I do not know.

Mr. Strange. My Lord, we shall trouble your Lordship with but one Witness more. Call Thomas Colebrand.

Thomas Colebrand sworn.

Mr. Strange. You are not a Freeman of Hastings, are you?

Colebrand. No.

Mr. Strange. Have not you been Apprentice there? How old are you?

Colebrand. I am about eighty Years old, and was Apprentice there about sixty Years ago.

Mr. Strange. Have you been acquainted there ever since?

Colebrand. Yes; I live about sixteen Miles from Hastings, and go to and fro frequently there.

Mr. Strange. Do you know what is the Usage or Custom, as to the admitting of Freeman?

Colebrand. Yes; that Freeman's eldest Sons were intitled to Freedoms.

Mr. Strange. Were they to be born within the Town?

Colebrand. I never knew nor heard, that being born within the Town, or at a Distance, made any Difference.

Mr. Strange. Had you any Discourse with any ancient People about this Matter?

Colebrand. Yes.

Mr. Strange. What Account did you receive from them?

Colebrand. That the eldest Sons of Freeman, only, had a Right to Freedoms.

Lord Hardwicke. Who have you heard say so?

Colebrand. Old Waller, the Town-Clerk.

Lord Hardwicke. Who have you heard say so besides?

Colebrand. One Thomas Lovell, and Thomas Rainolds; he was a Mayor; and I have heard the Mayor and Jurats say so several Times. — I am not able to stand.

VOL. X.

Mr. Strange. My Lord will give you the Liberty to repose yourself upon that Stool.

Colebrand. I remember one Medburst demanded his Freedom.

Lord Hardwicke. How long ago was that?

Colebrand. About sixty Years.

Lord Hardwicke. What passed upon that?

Mr. Strange. Was he the Son of a Freeman?

Colebrand. Yes. I cannot recollect what the Dispute was; but they put him by at first.

Mr. Strange. What was the Reason given?

Colebrand. I do not know; I was not in Court. Mr. Clarke. You say, he demanded his Freedom; Do you know upon what Right he demanded it?

Lord Hardwicke. How came you to know that Medburst demanded his Freedom?

Colebrand. My Uncle Lovell was then Mayor, and he told me so.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, the Witness speaks to a particular Custom only; I submit it to your Lordship, whether this Evidence of a particular Fact —

Lord Hardwicke. I think it is Evidence to a general Right, and not to any particular Custom. — What did your Uncle Lovell say?

Colebrand. That it was an ancient Right, that Freeman's eldest Sons should be made free.

Lord Hardwicke. How came there to be a Dispute about this Matter? Did your Uncle Lovell tell you any thing about it?

Colebrand. He said, that Medburst came and demanded his Freedom.

Lord Hardwicke. How did you know afterwards that Medburst was made free?

Colebrand. Because I afterwards saw him among the Freeman, at the Election of one Muntz to be a Member of Parliament. He voted in the Election.

Mr. Strange. This Rainolds was old Rainolds the Town-Clerk, who was admitted the 27th of May, 1622. He is the 15th Man we spoke to.

Sir T. Abney. My Lord, the 13th of March, 1674, this John Medburst was admitted. — Read the Entry of his Admission. Is it a true Copy?

Mr. Cranston. Yes.

Associate reads —

“ Hastings, ff. 13 March, 22^o Car. 2^{di}, 1674.
“ In full Court then and there holden, before the “ said Mayor and Jurats, came John Medburst, “ eldest Son of Nicholas Medburst, late a Free“ man of Hastings aforesaid, and prayed to be “ made free of the Liberties of this Town;
“ whereunto he is admitted, took his Oath,
“ and kissed the Mayor's Cheek, more solito,
“ and paid 6s. 8d. to the Chamberlain for his “ Fine.”

Sir T. Abney. My Lord, we shall not trouble your Lordship to give any further Evidence.

Mr. Attorney-General. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury; I am Council in this Case with the Defendants: And, notwithstanding the long Evidence you have heard, we doubt not but the Defendants will make it appear, to your entire Satisfaction, that they have no other View in defending this Suit, but as by their Oaths they are obliged to support the ancient Rights of the Corporation, and prevent Innovations there; of which this pretended pretended Right of the Plaintiff will appear to be one. And, Gentlemen, the single Question you are now to try is, Whether there be such a Right in the Town and Port of Hastings, as the Plaintiff has set forth in the Mandamus, as the Foundation of his Claim to be free of this Town and Port, which he insists belongs to him? And, Gentlemen, as the whole depends upon this, Whether he has proved the Right in the Manner he has laid it in the Mandamus; it will be proper to state the Custom to you, and then to observe, how far the Evidence that has been given by the Plaintiff has supported his Right, as it is laid in the Mandamus.

And, Gentlemen, as the Plaintiff has laid it, four Things are necessary to give a Man a Right to a Freedom in Hastings:

1st, He must be an eldest Son. It is; every Person, being the eldest Son of a Freeman —

2dly, He must be born in the Town. And born within the said Town and Port.

3dly, It must be after the Admission and Swearing of his Father. For it is said in the Mandamus, that the Plaintiff has a Right in Respect thereof; and also,

4thly, Upon paying a reasonable Fine, to be admitted and sworn into the Place and Office of one of the Freemen of the said Town and Port.

So that, Gentlemen, these four Things are set forth in the Mandamus, and, as they alledge, must concur, and are necessary to give a Man a Right to a Freedom in Hastings: For it is, in Respect thereof, and also upon paying a reasonable Fine, that he is to be admitted and sworn into the Place and Office of one of the Freemen of the said Town and Port.

If therefore, Gentlemen, any of these four Things, which they have laid as necessary, or if one of these Things laid as necessary, they have failed in the Proof of; for the Right they lay is in Respect thereof; my Lord, I say, if every one of these Things are necessary — They are,

1st, That he be the eldest Son of a Freeman.

2dly, That he be born after his Father's Freedom.

3dly, That he be born within this Town.

And the next Qualification is, upon paying a reasonable Fine.

These, Gentlemen, are the four Things they have thought proper to lay as necessary, in order to be admitted a Freeman of this Town and Port.

And, my Lord, I humbly apprehend, they have given no Proof at all of three of them; of one of them they have given but a very slight Proof; and of one of the Facts every Evidence they have produced has given a direct Proof to the contrary.

And, my Lord, there is one Thing more, which is absolutely necessary in order to be free of this Borough, that they have not taken in at all; and that is, that he must be resident within this Town; and as they have not made that Part of their Custom, they must undoubtedly fail. I said before, that they had not made Residence a Part of their Custom; and we shall fully prove Residence and Inhabiting within the Town to be absolutely necessary, and shew, that they have laid a Foundation, by their own Evidence, that this is necessary.

My Lord, I would beg leave now to consider their Evidence which has been brought to support this Right of the Plaintiff.

And the first Thing they have offered to your Lordship and the Jury, is a Writing, which they are pleased to call the Customal; of which I admit it may be a Copy, as they have set it out. And, my Lord, your Lordship hinted, that Books of this Nature should be read in Evidence, because the Court could not see whether it was proper to be read or no, till they had heard it; which supposes (as I humbly apprehend) that we are at liberty to object to it.

And, my Lord, I would submit it to your Lordship, that, considering how it comes before the Court, and the Part they rely on; what bad Company it keeps, and what it is said to be, only an Entry of a Customal; that it is no Evidence at all, or, if it be any, not of the Thing they bring it to prove. They open it as only an Entry of some old Customal; and the ancients it is, the better, provided it had been the old Customal; but this is not the Thing itself, but only an Entry in the Books they produce; and it is very improper to have a Customal of the Cinque Ports entered amongst other Things. It would have had great Weight and Honour, had it been kept in some proper Place. It does not appear, but this may have been sewed in, by the Fraud of an Officer of the Corporation. It is not the ancient Instrument, but only a Copy; and it does not appear how it might come there. I would therefore submit it to your Lordship, whether, without they give an Account that they have made Search for the Original, this is any Evidence at all of what they bring it to prove.

But, Gentlemen, if it be Evidence at all, I submit it to your Consideration, that as it is but an Entry, and considering what Company it is found in, that it can have no Weight. If it had been found in an ancient Corporation-Book, amongst old Entries and authentic Records of the Corporation, it would have come before the Court and you with some Authority: But, as it is found amongst a hundred miscellaneous Things no way relating to the Corporation, Copies of Leafes, the Resolution of the Judges upon the Statute of Queen Elizabeth relating to the Poor, amongst many miscellaneous Things; and very probably this might be sewed in the Middle of the Book, for it begins in the 200th Page; I say, considering the Company it keeps, and the trifling Things it is found amongst, it can have no Weight; I submit, it is a Book that can have no Authority at all.

But, Gentlemen, if it be any Evidence at all; I submit it to you, that it can be no Evidence of the Matters in Dispute. It is not said to be the Customal of Hastings: That, Gentlemen, we shall read to you: And though there may be some concurring Customs which relate to all the Cinque Ports in general, yet, unless they can shew the same Custom to be in all the Ports, a Custom that relates to the Right of all can have no Weight in this particular Borough. To have made this Evidence, they should have proved by ancient Charters and Records, that there is a concurring Right in all the Cinque Ports to the Election of Freemen.

But, Gentlemen, we shall lay Evidence before you quite to the contrary. We shall shew you a Custom relating to eldest Sons in other Ports, quite different from this; whereby it will appear, there are distinct Rights in all the Ports, and that it was never pretended there was one uniform Right amongst them; though if this Customal be Evidence, there must be a general Right of all the Cinque Ports. But, Gentlemen, taking it as Evidence of the Matters in Dispute, even then it is far from proving most of the Things they have laid, and but a very slight Proof of what they rely on.

First, Here is a Negative implied: "Possunt Majores et Ballivi, &c." After having set forth the particular Persons having a Right, it goes on and says, the eldest Son of a Freeman may be admitted, and that there are three Ways of admitting him:

"Possunt Majores et Jurati, Ballivi et Jurati, &c. recipere et facere liberos tribus modis: Uno modo, per Nativitatem."

They are Qualifications rather than Rights: Possunt, &c. They may admit, and there is no Distinction made between the eldest Son and the other Sons.

"Alio modo, per Liberum Tenementum perquisit: Tertio, per Emptionem."

Such a Man has no Right; and yet the same Words are used to those who come in by a Freehold, or by Purchase, as to those who are to be made free as eldest Sons; and therefore it is no Evidence of the Right of an eldest Son. Does it say, the eldest Sons of Freemen, born after their Fathers Freedom, or within this Liberty, that they shall be free? —

Lord Hardwicke. "Uno modo, per Nativitatem infra libertatem suam, si pater suus, tempore nati- vitatis sue, fuit liber."

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, I ask Pardon; it turns the other Way; but I submit that it is no Evidence of the eldest Son. It does not say, per Nativitatem of the eldest Son; if he had any Son born after his being admitted into the Freedom, he had a like Right with the eldest Son.

Lord Hardwicke. "Per Nativitatem infra libertatem suam."

Mr. Strange. Within his Franchise.

Lord Hardwicke. I was thinking, whether it related to the Freedom of the Father.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, it is the Libertatem of the Five Towns, and not of this particular Town. Talking of the general Privileges of the Cinque Ports is an uncertain Evidence of what they contend for. My Lord, it goes on, and, so far as it is an Authority established in all the Ports, it says, He is to take an Oath to maintain the Liberties of the Five Ports, and especially of that Port ubi commoratur. It lays down, as the Foundation of being free, that Residence is absolutely necessary: He cannot be admitted, unless he be commorant. This, my Lord, is the Foundation we go upon, and I humbly apprehend we shall establish it by a very strong Evidence.

My Lord, I reckon that the 35th Article they have read entirely destroys the Credit of this Book. The Words are, "Et quilibet gaudere intendens libertatem Quinque Portuum per Emptionem, inveniet quatuor manucaptos resident' de omnibus et singulis præmiss' perimplend'." They have not shewn that this Article has ever been complied with: They have never produced a Time that such Manucaptos have been given, or that they were ever required of any Person: And therefore it appears, that this pretended Customal has been always considered as a Ballad, as I would consider it; for they would have observed it, if it had been the ancient Law: And as they begin with this Point, I submit it to your Lordship, that it should not be left out of the Case; besides, it is necessary that they be resident within the Borough.

My Lord, and Gentlemen of the Jury, as to the Evidence that has been given from the Entries read; in considering this Corporation, one general Observation may be made, That they are a very weak Argument, if any, of what they are brought to prove.

My Lord, the Mandamus admits a Prescription; and in making out a Custom in the Case of a Borough, they should give in Evidence more ancient Entries than any of these that have been read. They have gone no further back than 1608, although in the Books there are much older Entries. It may be said by the Gentlemen of the other Side, that going back a hundred Years is a great Way back; and if there are no Entries before, it is sufficient: But it happens unfortunately for them, that in this Corporation there are regular Entries, from the Year 1389, down to this Time where they have thought proper to begin; and there is no Instance or Footstep of one claiming, or any Entry taking Notice of the Right of an eldest Son; and we shall read Entries back for two hundred Years before they begin; which, I humbly apprehend, will be a strong Objection to every Entry they have read. A Proof from 1608 is but a slight Evidence of an ancient Custom: And as they have proved another different Custom, and there has been an Intermission for so many Years, this Application of the Plaintiff's can proceed from nothing else but the same litigious Spirit that now prevails in the Corporation. From 1691 to 1716, they have produced no Footsteps of this Right, for twenty-five Years together. Can it be believed there was any Right, when for twenty-five Years no eldest Son ever claimed a Right; I say, when it appears no body ever claimed it during that Time, or, if they did, that they were refused? And, my Lord, if they were refused, it is a stronger Evidence.

Mr. Strange. You are mistaken, Mr. Attorney; there was John Geery admitted the 25th of October, 1707, and John Hussy the 5th of January, 1694; and we have several others.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, they have divided their Evidence into three Parts. In the first Clause they have given no Evidence —

Lord Hardwicke. That this, Time out of Mind, has been the Custom.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, I would consider, how far their Evidence supports the Right the Plaintiff has laid in the Mandamus, and what they have proved.

And, with great Submission to your Lordship, I must insist, that they have proved no more, than that eldest Sons of Freemen have been admitted for a Fine of 6s. 8d. for the Entries all are, on their praying to be admitted. And, my Lord, it is no Wonder; for we shall shew your Lordship several hundred Instances of Persons who were admitted during the Time these Freemen were admitted, who were younger Sons, for their Fines of 6s. 8d. and they have produced but fourteen Instances of eldest Sons; they have shewn they were admitted, and proved the Fine paid by them to be 6s. 8d. We have other Instances of Sons who paid 13s. 4d. And therefore fore they might as well say, since there is Proof, that every body paying 13 s. 4 d. has as good a Right to be admitted as the eldest Son of a Freeman; for it is upon paying 13 s. 4 d. and the eldest Son's Admission is upon paying 6 s. 8 d. and if it be an Argument of a Right, it is a Right by paying 6 s. 8 d. and every body, from their own Account of the Matter, has the same Right for 13 s. 4 d.

My Lord, in any of the Entries, there is no Distinction made in the Admission between the Sons and others; they all come and pray to be admitted; sometimes it is upon making it their humble Request, sometimes upon their earnestly beseeching, that they are to be made free. They all ask in the same Manner, whether they are Sons or no, and are made free; and therefore, on their own Entries, it appears to be a Favour granted to eldest Sons as well as others, upon their asking that they might have it; and therefore they are indulged with a lesser Fine. They rely much on the Fine of 6 s. 8 d. but, if it proves any thing, it is (as I humbly apprehend) an Argument against them.

My Lord, in the next Place, they have laid the Custom to be, That this eldest Son be born within the Town, after the Admission and Swearing of his Father; then it is that the Son is to be admitted. But I do not remember that any one of their Witnesses has confined it to this, (I ask Pardon if I have forgot); but they said, some of them expressly, that the being born after the Father's Admission, or within the Town of Hastings, or out, made no Difference. But they have endeavoured to supply this from their Entries, by saying, that they are mentioned in the Entries as eldest Sons, and therefore they were admitted for 6 s. 8 d. But this infers nothing.

Gentlemen, we shall shew you, both by Entries and living Witnesses, that there has been no Distinction made between the eldest Sons and other Sons. It was no Indulgence therefore to them; but the same to the other Sons of Freeman as well as the eldest.

And, my Lord, we have many Entries in the Books, where only the Sons of Freeman are mentioned, without taking any Notice of the eldest; which fully proves, that, if the Point rested upon their being eldest Sons, and born within the Borough, after the Admission and Swearing of the Fathers, they would have been particularly entered so in the Books, and is a strong presumptive Evidence against this pretended Right of the Plaintiff.

My Lord, we have some Instances where they are called the youngest Sons, and were admitted for their Fines of 6 s. 8 d. upon their coming and humbly praying that they might be admitted into the Franchise of this Town. That therefore being added, strongly shews, that they had no Regard at all to what the Gentlemen of the other Side principally contend for, the Right of eldest Sons.

Besides this, Gentlemen, we shall produce to you many living Witnesses, very old ones, who will prove to you, that the Mayor and Jurats (the Charter being silent in this Matter) have Time out of Mind admitted Persons at their Pleasure, and this has been the ancient Custom.

And, Gentlemen, as their Entries go no further back than 1608, so their living Witnesses do not make it a jot the better. They do not say there is a Right in this Borough, in one Instance, of their own Knowledge; they do not say a Word of any Distinction, whether they are born after the Admission and Swearing of the Father, or within the Borough; and one of them expressly contradicts it. The Evidence they have given is nothing but a tittle-tattle Discourse of what they have heard, that the eldest Sons of Freeman had a Right.

Therefore, Gentlemen, as to the Point in Question, as they have entirely failed in their Entries, and as the living Witnesses they have brought to support it say little or nothing to the Purpose — One of them says, when he desired his Freedom himself, the Town-Clerk answered the Mayor, Sir, you may do as you please. He did not ask him, whether he was born within the Town, or after his Father became free, and mentions a Fact strong to the contrary. And, as some of their Evidence comes down so low as 1722, one of them tells you, that when one was made a Justice of Peace, the eldest Son of a Freeman came to the Court, and demanded his Freedom, and was absolutely refused; and that he did it nine Years ago, some of them say about twelve. So that, Gentlemen, their living Witnesses give but a slight Evidence of one Part of their Custom; and as to the other Part, they have given no Evidence at all. But we have many old Witnesses, who will give your Lordship and the Jury no wrong Views of the Manner of admitting Freeman.

My Lord, we shall begin with the Customal, which is said in the Title to be the Customal of this Town; where the fullest Directions are given as to the Manner of electing Freeman, and yet there is not a Word said of the Right of the eldest Son.

We shall then, by reading many Entries out of the Corporation-Books, shew, that no Notice at all has been taken of eldest Sons, in Distinction to other Sons; but that they have all been admitted promiscuously.

And then I shall trouble your Lordship to say no more; but call our living Witnesses, who will fully prove to your Lordship and the Jury, that the Mayor and Jurats have Time out of Mind admitted Freeman at their Pleasure; and that, besides being the eldest Son of a Freeman, and born within the Town after the Admission and Swearing of the Father, he has a Right in Respect thereof, but it must be on another Condition, as necessary as any of the former, upon paying a certain Fine. The Mandamus goes on and says, And also upon paying a reasonable Fine; and the Writ commands the Mayor and Jurats to admit him upon paying a reasonable Fine. So that, my Lord, I take it, by the Writ, that Fine is made to be as necessary in order to the Person's being admitted, as any of the other Qualifications mentioned in the Mandamus: And, my Lord, I humbly apprehend, they have proved it a certain Fine, instead of a reasonable Fine.

My Lord, a Copyholder lays a Custom, to be admitted to Copyhold Lands upon paying a reasonable Fine: If, upon the Proof, it comes out to be a certain Fine, he must undoubtedly fail; for in Copyholds there is a known Distinction between a reasonable Fine and a Fine certain.

And, my Lord, I humbly apprehend, that, in point of Law, Cases of Copyholders are parallel with the present.

There is as much a Distinction between a Fine certain and a reasonable Fine in the present Case, as in the Case of a Copyhold.

My Lord, they have fully proved 6*s.* 8*d.* to be constantly paid, which is a certain Fine, upon every Admission of an eldest Son. The Mayor cannot contend; if they offer that Fine, they have a Right to be admitted. They therefore have failed in this Point; it is not a reasonable, but a certain Fine.

My Lord, in the next Place, we shall call Evidence to prove, that, without Residence within the Borough, no one can ever be admitted a Freeman of this Town and Port: And I take this, my Lord, to be a general Rule in most Corporations; it being unreasonable that any Man, who does not reside in the Borough of which he is free, should have a Share in conducting the Affairs of that Borough. And although the Charter is silent in this Affair, yet, my Lord, besides the general Reason of the Thing, we shall shew your Lordship and the Jury a By-Law made above two hundred Years ago, by which it is declared, That, if any one who was a Freeman removed out of the Borough, and should dwell out of the Town, such Freeman lost all his Right. And we shall prove by several ancient living Witnesses, that Residence within the Borough was always necessary, and that this has been the constant Usage.

My Lord, upon the whole Circumstances of this Case, we beg Leave to insist, that they have not proved three Parts of the Custom, as they have laid it in the Mandamus; and that, as to the fourth Part, they have proved directly the contrary: And therefore, Gentlemen, we hope you will find a Verdict for the Defendants.

Mr. Serj. Skinner. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury; I am also of Council with the Defendants: And Mr. Attorney-General has been so very particular in answering the Evidence which has been offered to you by the Gentlemen of the other Side, as well as in stating the Evidence we are to lay before you, that I need say little. —

Lord Hardwicke. You are not going to stay, Mr. Strange, I hope: We are now coming to a material Part.

Mr. Serj. Skinner. My Lord, the Right the Plaintiff has laid in the Mandamus is, That every Person, being the eldest Son of a Freeman, born within the Town, after the Admission and Swearing of his Father into the Office of Freeman, has a Right, in Respect thereof, and also upon paying a reasonable Fine, to be made free: And they have endeavoured to prove this Right, First, by producing an old Book, called the Customal, as an Evidence of this Right: But it is a suspicious Authority; it has no Date; and that, they say, is an Evidence of its Antiquity, but without any Foundation from the Book: There are several Entries entered prior to it; it is not paged regularly; it is in the Middle of the Book, and yet it is marked fol. 1: And if we look into the Thing itself, it tells us there are three Ways of making free, viz. by Birth, if born within the Town, and after the Swearing and Admission of the Father; by the Purchase of a Freehold; and by Redemption.

My Lord, they have shewn some Instances of the first; but as to the second, they have shewn no Purchaser of a Freehold that ever was made free; and we shall prove many Persons living in the Town, that have Freeholds, that never were made free.

The next Evidence they have given is from the Entries of Sons, who have been made free as Sons of Freeman; and this they would have us take as a Proof of the Custom, of a Right in the eldest Son, born after the Freedom of the Father, to be made free: For they say, it is in Respect thereof; that he must be the Son of a Freeman, and born after his Father was made free. And all the Instances they have produced of this, amount to no more, than that such a one was admitted, being the eldest Son of a Freeman, not because he was an eldest Son, and born after his Father was made free.

My Lord, they have produced Copies taken out of the Register-Books in Hastings, by which it appears, when these Sons were baptized: But it is not given as a Reason in any of these Entries, that he was admitted into the Freedom, because he was born there; though, in Fact, it might be so, and that is the Right they contend for.

My Lord, I submit it to your Lordship, that, as to the Fine, nothing conclusive can be drawn from thence, that there is any Right in the eldest Son of a Freeman. The Fine paid by him is 6*s.* 8*d.* quia pater suus liber est; that is the Reason. No; he is not admitted into the Freedom because his Father was a Freeman; but he is admitted for 6*s.* 8*d.* not because his Father was a Freeman. This therefore does not shew that he had a better Right than any body else: And none but the second Instance they read, James Lasher, among all the Entries, was admitted upon any other Terms than his humble Petition and Prayer to be made free. He, indeed, instantly required the Freedom, and by the Consent of all he was admitted. In all the other Instances it is said, At his humble Request and Desire he is admitted: No body insisted on, or demanded this Right.

My Lord, as they have laid the Right, there is a further Qualification necessary, viz. on Payment of a reasonable Fine: And I submit it to your Lordship, that they have proved it a Fine certain; and that therefore nothing is left to the Mayor and Jurats in this Affair, but to admit the Person upon paying 6*s.* 8*d.* and claiming his Freedom.

But, my Lord, we say, a further Qualification is absolutely necessary, and that is Residence: And this appears from an Entry in this very Customal they have produced. And, my Lord, no body is ever admitted, but on taking an Oath to observe the Statutes, Orders, and By-Laws of the Borough ubi commoratur; and therefore the Person admitted into the Freedom must be commorant in the Place of which he is free. And, my Lord, by a By-Law of the 12th of April, the 15th of Queen Elizabeth, they were not only to be commorant, but to continue to live there; and if any one admitted went and lived out of the Town a Year and a Day, he was to be excluded from any Privilege or Freedom within that Borough: And this By-Law has been constantly observed; and yet, my Lord, the Plaintiff Moore, they do not so much as pretend that he is resident within this Borough. We contend not, whether the Sons of Freeman are intitled to Freedoms; but we say, that Freeman's Sons and Foreigners are in the same Right; they pray alike, if it seems fit, and so pleases the Mayor and Jurats: And the Mayor and Jurats have rejected the Sons of Freemen: And it is only a Compliment to the Sons of Freemen to pay 6s. 8d. and 13s. 4d. is paid if a Foreigner is admitted.

Gentlemen of the Jury, we shall lay our Evidence before you; and then we doubt not but you will be convinced, that the Right is the same to a Foreigner as to the Son of a Freeman, and therefore that you will find for the Defendants.

Lord Hardwicke. I own there are Difficulties upon the Point of a reasonable Fine, and that of Commorancy. I have taken Residence in all the Ports to be essential.

Sir T. Abney. My Lord, we apprehend 6s. 8d. to be a reasonable Fine, from the Reasonableness of the Sum.

Lord Hardwicke. The Notion of Law is, Sir Thomas Abney, that there is an essential Difference between a Fine certain and a reasonable Fine.

Sir T. Abney. My Lord, we can prove that different Sums have been paid upon the Admission of Sons.

Mr. Strange. We have one Instance of a Son who paid twenty Shillings for a Fine.

Lord Hardwicke. Then as to the Point of Commorancy.

Mr. Marsb. My Lord, the Ports in general preclude no Member for Non-residence. I have known them vote for Mayor, that have not been resident.

Lord Hardwicke. In some of the Ports a Distinction is made between voting for Mayor and Members of Parliament.

Mr. Serj. Eyre. My Lord, they cannot shew, within ten Years, an Instance of one Son's paying more than 6s. 8d.

Lord Hardwicke. Go first to that Point of the Fine.

Mr. At. Gen. We shall begin with our By-Law, where the Words ubi commoratur are.

Lord Hardwicke. One By-Law has been mentioned, that a Freeman of one of the Ports shall have a Right to be admitted in another; that is never used.

Henry Carlton sworn.

Sir T. Abney. Was not you a Freeman? Are you not disfranchised?

Carlton. Yes.

Sir T. Abney. Are you not promised to be restored?

Mr. At. Gen. What Book is that?

Carlton. One of the Corporation-Books of Hastings.

Mr. At. Gen. Where had you it?

Carlton. It came from the Town-Clerk's Office.

Mr. At. Gen. Read the By-Law of the 15th of Queen Elizabeth.

Associate reads—

“ Hastings, ff. Electio Ballivi tent' die Dominica
“ prox' post, &c. 12^o die mensis Aprilis, anno “ regni Reginae Elizæ 15^o, Elect' Major' pro
“ hoc anno.

“ It is decreed, That, if any Freeman, now or “ at any Time hereafter an Inhabitant of this “ Town, shall depart or dwell out of the Town
“ by one Year and one Day, he or they, so “ dwelling out of the Town, shall lose his or “ their Freedom.”

Mr. At. Gen. How old are you, Mr. Carlton?

Carlton. I am eighty Years old.

Mr. At. Gen. Where have you lived? Where was you born?

Carlton. I was born within a Mile of Hastings. My Father came to live at Hastings when I was about fifteen Years old; and since I have lived greatest Part of my Time in Hastings.

Mr. At. Gen. Do you know what the Custom is in Hastings, as to the Admission of Freemen?

Carlton. Yes; I was a Freeman myself, and have been at several Meetings of the Mayor and Jurats.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray now, during your whole Time, did you ever know any one made free that was not resident?

Carlton. No, never, except Honorary Freemen.

Mr. At. Gen. Have they any Right to vote in your Borough at Elections?

Carlton. No.

Mr. At. Gen. But as to those that are really free, did you ever know any, that were not Inhabitants, vote at Elections?

Carlton. No.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you ever know any, that were not Inhabitants, demand it?

Carlton. No, nor I never knew it demanded.

Mr. At. Gen. Is it not necessary, in order to be free, that they should inhabit within the Town?

Carlton. I always thought so.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you ever hear any thing to the contrary?

Carlton. No.

Mr. Serj. Skinner. You know no Instance, in your Time, of any Persons made free, who were not resident?

Carlton. No, none but Honorary Freemen, such as Members of Parliament and Captains of Ships.

Mr. At. Gen. Did they own that the eldest Sons had a Right?

Lord Hardwicke. Whether they had a Right to demand a Freedom, although they were not resident?

Mr. At. Gen. Have they a Right to demand it?

Carlton. No, no body that don't live there.

Mr. Lacy. Is there not a Roll of the Freemen, by which they call over their Names upon Elections?

Carlton. Yes.

Mr. Lacy. Are the Honorary Freemen called over with the others upon such Occasions?

Carlton. No.

Mr. Lacy. Does not a Freeman by Non-residence lose his Freedom?

Carlton. Yes.

Mr. Lacy. Do you know any Instance?

Carlton. Yes, Jonathan Stevens.

Mr. Lacy. Was he a Freeman?

Carlton. Yes.

Mr. Lacy. Was he out of the Freedom a Year and a Day?

Carlton. Yes, and lost his Freedom.

Mr. Lacy. Did you know one Milward?

Carlton. Yes, he was a Jurat.

Sir T. Abney. I would ask you, Sir, as to the eldest Son of a Freeman; has not he a Right?

Carlton. No, no Right, without the Favour of the Mayor and Jurats.

Lord Hardwicke. Examine him to the Point we are upon.

Mr. At. Gen. Can the Mayor and Jurats elect an eldest Son, if he is not resident?

Carlton. No.

Lord Hardwicke. You said, Mr. Carlton, you had known Persons not resident admitted.

Carlton. Yes, my Lord, Honorary Freemen.

Lord Hardwicke. Could not they as well admit the Son of a Freeman not resident?

Carlton. No, I never knew it in my Life.

Mr. At. Gen. Could not a Son of a Freeman be made free, though not resident, as well as another?

Lord Hardwicke. Mr. Attorney, to support the Qualification of Residence, some Right must be set up.

Mr. At. Gen. Honorary Freemen have no Right in point of Law. The Universities give Degrees to Persons who are not Members; it is a Compliment, and they do not vote.

Mr. Strange. It is not worth their while to come down to vote.

Lord Hardwicke. Honorary Freemen vote at Elections.

Mr. Serj. Eyre. I submit it to your Lordship, that we are upon the Right, and therefore ought to examine to that.—I would ask you, Mr. Carlton, has any body non-resident a Right to be elected a Freeman?

Carlton. No body has any Right.

Mr. Strange. Did you ever know the eldest Son of a Freeman refused, because he was not resident?

Carlton. I never knew it asked.

Mr. Serj. Eyre. A Man who is free forfeits his Freedom by being out of the Borough; and yet you would have it, that Persons non-resident have a Right.

Mr. Strange. That, Mr. Serjeant, is by your By-Law, not by a Custom.

Mr. Clarke. Do you know no Person, though non-resident, that voted?

Carlton. No.

Mr. Clarke. Do you know one Thomas Hatcher? Do not you remember his coming to vote, though he lived out of the Corporation?

Carlton. No.

Lord Hardwicke. That By-Law, will it take away a Right?

Mr. Serj. Eyre. We do not rely upon that, my Lord.

Robert Bartholomew sworn.

Mr. Serj. Skinner. How old are you, Mr. Bartholomew?

Bartholomew. I am eighty-two Years old.

Mr. Serj. Skinner. Where have you lived?

Bartholomew. In Hastings, almost all my Time.

Mr. Serj. Skinner. Have you been there at their Meetings?

Bartholomew. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Skinner. Did you ever know one admitted, not living in the Borough?

Bartholomew. No.

Mr. Serj. Skinner. Has any Person a Right to be admitted a Freeman, that does not live there?

Bartholomew. He that lives there, to be sure, has a Right.

Lord Hardwicke. Examine him to the Fact, what he has known.

Mr. Serj. Skinner. What Right has any body to be made free?

Bartholomew. They are made free by the Mayor and Jurats.

Mr. Serj. Skinner. Did they live in the Town, when they were made free?

Bartholomew. I never knew any body made free, that lived out of the Town, in my Life; except Honorary Freemen, and them we used to call Ablocates.

Mr. Serj. Skinner. Have you known no Persons non-resident, made free, to vote, or do a Corporate Act?

Bartholomew. No, none.

Sir T. Abney. Who has a Right to be made free of your Town?

Bartholomew. Any body the Mayor and Jurats please.

Mr. Strange. Have not you sometimes taken it into your Head to fancy the eldest Son of a Freeman has a Right?

Bartholomew. No, I never had such Thoughts.

Mr. Strange. Did not you say so?

Bartholomew. No.

Mr. Strange. Have not you said so to Robert Evernden?

Bartholomew. No.

Mr. Strange. Nor to Mr. Broadway?

Bartholomew. No.

Mr. Strange. Did you never say so in their hearing?

Bartholomew. No.

Mr. Strange. Nor to Mr. Dodson?

Bartholomew. No.

Mr. Strange. They are in Town.

Bartholomew. I know they are; I see them.

Mr. Strange. Have not you declared to them, that the eldest Son of a Freeman has a Right?

Bartholomew. Never since I was born.—I have heard my Father say, a Man could not be made free, that would not swear himself worth 100*l*.

Mr. Strange. Why do you take more Money of other People than of Freemen's Sons?

Lord Hardwicke. It is inconsistent to say there is no such thing as a Right, and yet Commorancy is necessary, and Honorary Freemen are admitted, though no Person of Right can demand his Freedom: But to say they are all at the Pleasure of the Mayor and Jurats, and yet Residence is necessary, is a Contradiction.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, they cannot be admitted if they have a Right, if they have not that of Residence.

Lord Hardwicke. If you put it in that Way, you must go into the Custom. Go on your own Way.

Mr. Serj. Eyre. The Gentlemen of the other Side, my Lord, are not able to shew a Freeman's eldest Son admitted for any other Fine than 6*s*. 8*d*.

Sir T. Abney. Yes, we can produce the Book; it will shew its Antiquity; it is scarce able to be read.—Read the Entry of John Hall, admitted for a Fine of twenty Shillings.

Lord Hardwicke. Don't go into the Reply, before they are gone through the Defence.

Mr. At. Gen. What Book is that?

Mr. Cranston. One of the Corporation-Books.

Mr. At. Gen. You had it from the Town-Clerk, from among the Records of the Town?

Mr. Cranston. Yes.

Mr. Marsh. What Book is that, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. At. Gen. It is the Customal of Hastings; that is a Translation.

Mr.

Mr. Marsh. What Language is it in?

Mr. At. Gen. It is in old French.

Mr. Strange. That bound up with ours is a Translation, and that you say is the Original.

Mr. At. Gen. I believe so.

Mr. Strange. (Looks upon it.) This Customal is false.

Mr. At. Gen. It is a Translation, and may be wrong translated.

Mr. Strange. We'll see that.

Mr. At. Gen. Read it.

Mr. Holmes reads— (The Copy in old French.)

“ The Usage of Hastings Time out of Mind —

“ Die Maii, anno 30^o Elizæ —

Mr. At. Gen. Read that relating to the making of a Freeman.

Mr. Holmes reads —

“ If a Foreigner resides in Hastings for a Year and a Day, he may come before the Bailiff and Jurats, and be admitted to the Freedom upon taking an Oath.”

Mr. At. Gen. In order to be admitted a Freeman, he is to stay a Year and a Day.

Mr. Serj. Eyre. Have you looked over that Book, Mr. Holmes?

Mr. Holmes. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Eyre. In order to be a Freeman, he is to come and reside a Year and a Day; and if he be of a good Conversation, then he is to be admitted.

Mr. Serj. Eyre. Is there any other Custom in that Book relating to making of Freeman?

Mr. Holmes. No.

Mr. Serj. Eyre. Read the Entry of the 36th Edw. 3.

Associate reads —

“ Memorandum, quod in pleno hundredo tent' apud Hastings, viz. die *Dominica prox' ante festum Annunt' beatæ Mariæ, anno regni Regis Edwardi 3^o à Conq' 36^o, coram Ball' et tot' Communitat', Willielmus de Bourn, et Johannes fil' ejus, recepi' sunt ad libertat' de Hastings, et dederunt communitat' unam pipam vini, de quo satisfec'.*

Lord Hardwicke. That is the Admission of particular Persons. Is there any Fine in that Admission?

Mr. Serj. Eyre. A Pipe of Wine, my Lord.

Mr. At. Gen. We shall shew, my Lord, a concurrent Proof of 6s. 8d. paid as a Fine certain.

Lord Hardwicke. Can you shew any Admissions of Persons who were eldest Sons, without paying any Fine at all?

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, it is improper to call such an one an eldest Son, if the Father had no other Son.

Lord Hardwicke. There two Persons were admitted; but in that Entry neither is mentioned to be the Son of a Freeman.

Mr. At. Gen. It is for a Pipe of Wine; that, my Lord, is one of the Rights they admit upon. — Read the Admission of Wilham Cobden, fol. 147. He was admitted the 7th of May, the 7th of James the First.

Associate reads —

“ Hastings, ff. Ad assemblat' tent' ibidem 7^o die Maii, 7^o Jacobi Regis primi, Gulielmus Cobden admittus est ad libertatem hujus villæ, et sacramentum suum more solito præstitit, et osculatus est

“ malam dextram Majoris secundum usum, pro fine suo; quia filius liberi hominis.”

Lord Hardwicke. The Customal of the Five Ports does not fix what the Fine shall be.

Mr. Strange. My Lord, proving that all the Sons are admitted; is proving that the eldest Son is admitted.

Lord Hardwicke. You have laid it in Respect thereof, which you need not have done. I cannot imagine why it was laid so, in Respect thereof.

Mr. Serj. Eyre. Turn to fol. 147. Read the Admission of John Sand, the 14th of July, the 8th of James the First.

Associate reads —

“ Hastings, ff. 14^o Julii, 8^o Jac. 1^{mi}, in plena curia venit Johannes Sand, et petit libertatem hujus villæ, et admittus est ad libertatem, quia pater suus liber erat, et sol' 6s. 8d. et fecit inde sacramentum, et osculavit malam dextram Majoris more solito.”

Mr. Strange. We may admit many of these Entries, Mr. Attorney, if you will tell us for what Purpose you read your Entries over again.

Mr. At. Gen. These were admitted as Sons of Freeman. We read them, to shew a different Custom from what you have laid. — Read Nathaniel Lasher the Son. He was admitted, quia filius liberi hominis. Turn to fol. 175.

Associate reads —

“ Hastings, ff. 1613, 11^o Jac. 1^{mi}, 26 Martii, hoc anno, came Nathaniel Lasher, Son of James Lasher, Jurat, before Mr. Mayor and his Brethren, and prayed to be admitted to the Liberty and Freedom of this Town; and was admitted, sworn, kissed the right Cheek of Mr. Mayor, more solito, pro fine 6s. 8d. quia filius liberi hominis, &c.”

Mr. At. Gen. Turn to fol. 179. Read John Isted.

Associate reads —

“ Hastings, ff. 1614. Decimo quarto die hoc anno, came John Isted, and craved to be admitted to the Liberty and Freedom of this Town; and by Mr. Mayor and his Brethren was admitted, and sworn, and kissed the right Cheek of Mr. Mayor, more solito, pro fine 6s. 8d. duntaxat; quia filius est liberi hominis hujus villæ.”

Lord Hardwicke. What Men do you admit there?

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, we admit Men as the Sons of Freeman, and that pay 6s. 8d. — Now read the Entry of the 31st of March, 1638, of the Admission of James Batcher, jun.

Mr. Serj. Eyre. James Batcher, jun. Son of his Father.

Mr. Strange. That is just the same as you read before.

Mr. Serj. Skinner. Read William Lovell.

Sir T. Abney. We read that.

Associate reads —

“ Hastings, ff. 31 March, 1638, 14 Car. 1^{mi}. At this Court, James Batcher, jun. Son of his Father, a Freeman, is now made also free, for his Fine of 6s. 8d. took his Oath, and kissed the Mayor's right Cheek, more solito, &c.”

Mr. Serj. Skinner. I believe we must trouble the Doctor once more.

Mr. At. Gen. Mr. Carlton, you told me you had lived all your Time in Hastings, except about fourteen Years; you say you have been at their Elections; Pray, who has the Right to be elected a Freeman of this Borough during your Time?

Carlton. Those whom the Mayor and Jurats please.

Mr. At. Gen. Has not the eldest Son of a Freeman a Right to be admitted?

Carlton. No; if there had been such a Custom, it would never have been denied.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you ever know any body, that was an eldest Son, insist on this Right?

Carlton. Yes; one Evernden insisted on it, and was refused.

Mr. At. Gen. How long is that ago?

Carlton. It was before I was a Freeman, about thirty-five Years ago.

Mr. At. Gen. So you say, Evernden demanded his Freedom, and was denied; Do you know this of your own Knowledge?

Carlton. I have heard it, but do not know it.

Mr. At. Gen. Who have you heard it spoke by? Are the Persons dead or living?

Carlton. I have heard it by some Persons living.

Mr. At. Gen. Was it the general Reputation in the Town, that this Evernden had no Right?

Carlton. Yes; he was looked on as an impudent Fellow, for coming and demanding it.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you ever know any body admitted upon this Right?

Carlton. No.

Mr. At. Gen. How long have you been a Jurat?

Carlton. Ever since the Year 1701.

Mr. At. Gen. That is thirty-five Years ago. Did ever any body before this Evernden come and demand to be admitted as an eldest Son?

Carlton. I do not know any one.

Mr. Serj. Parker. Suppose the eldest Son of a Freeman apply to the Mayor and Jurats to be admitted, and they think fit to admit him; How do the Corporation proceed on that Occasion?

Carlton. They apply to the Mayor and Jurats separately at their Houses, and ask that Favour of them; and if they consent, then they come to the Court-Hall, and ask it of them again.

Mr. Serj. Parker. What follows upon that?

Carlton. Then the Mayor asks the Gentlemen, if they consent, and are satisfied, and whether they are willing the Person should be made free; and then they put it to the Vote.

Mr. Serj. Parker. Do they make any Distinction between the eldest and youngest Sons?

Carlton. No; the Majority determines whether the Man shall be made free or no.

Mr. Serj. Eyre. If any other Person applies to be made free who is not a Son, what Steps do they take then?

Carlton. Just the same.

Mr. Serj. Eyre. You are the eldest Son of a Freeman, are you?

Carlton. Yes; but not born within the Town.

Sir T. Abney. Mr. Carlton, did you know John Geery?

Carlton. Yes.

Sir T. Abney. Was not he admitted to the Freedom in your Time?

Carlton. Yes.

Sir T. Abney. Was not he the eldest Son of a Freeman?

VOL. X.

Carlton. Yes.

Sir T. Abney. Did you know John Oliver, John Chambers, Benjamin Stevens, Philip Stevenson, William Shorter, and Jacob Fantley?

Carlton. Yes.

Sir T. Abney. Have not all these Persons been admitted in your Time, as eldest Sons?

Carlton. Not because they were eldest Sons, but because the Mayor and Jurats thought fit to admit them.

Sir T. Abney. You said, you did not know, but you believed Evernden was refused; Pray, do you believe or fancy any other Person, who was an eldest Son; was ever refused?

Mr. Strange. Do you remember Boykett the Dissenter, that applied to be admitted to his Freedom?

Carlton. No.

Mr. Strange. Do you know no Inquiry made by the Town-Clerk, whether he was the Son of a Freeman, or not?

Carlton. No.

Mr. Strange. And upon admitting Freemen, you say, that is the only Question put by the Mayor, Gentlemen, are you satisfied? and if any objects, he puts it to the Vote.

Carlton. Yes.

Mr. Marsh. Do you remember Thomas Lovell?

Carlton. Yes; he was Mayor several Times.

Mr. Marsh. Do you remember Mr. Waller, the Town-Clerk?

Carlton. Yes.

Mr. Marsh. How long is it since he was Town-Clerk?

Carlton. Since I was upon the Bench.

Mr. Clarke. Do you remember nothing of Boykett?

Carlton. No.

Mr. Clarke. Nothing of his being refused?

Carlton. No.

Mr. Clarke. Call Robert Bartholomew again. — (He not appearing,)

Mark Bayley sworn.

Mr. Marsh. Are you a Freeman?

Bayley. I was one, and am disfranchised.

Mr. Serj. Skinner. How long have you known Hastings?

Bayley. Ever since I was born.

Mr. Serj. Parker. How old are you?

Bayley. I am seventy-six Years old.

Mr. At. Gen. How long have you lived there?

Bayley. I have lived there all my Time.

Mr. Serj. Skinner. You have been a Jurat there, have not you?

Bayley. Yes, six or seven Years.

Mr. At. Gen. How do you make Freemen?

Bayley. You must apply to the Mayor and Jurats, and desire that they would please to let you be made free.

Mr. Serj. Skinner. Suppose I was the eldest Son of a Freeman, might I come and demand to be free?

Bayley. No; there is no such Thing as demanding it without the Consent of the Mayor and Jurats.

Mr. Serj. Parker. When you come before the Mayor and Jurats, does the Mayor put the Question, whether the Person shall be admitted or no?

Bayley. He says, that such a Man desires to be made free, if you think fit of it.

[2 T]

Mr.

Mr. Serj. Parker. The eldest Son can demand it if he thinks fit, cannot he?

Bayley. No, no; we have nothing at all of an eldest Son.

Sir T. Abney. Are not you the eldest Son of a Freeman?

Bayley. No.

Sir T. Abney. How long have you been a Jurat?

Bayley. Six or seven Years.

Sir T. Abney. How long have you been a Freeman?

Bayley. Forty-eight Years clear.

Sir T. Abney. What Profession are you of?

Bayley. I am a Seaman.

Sir T. Abney. Pray, Mr. Bayley, was you always resident in the Borough? Did you live there all your Life?

Bayley. Yes.

Sir T. Abney. What, when you was at Sea?

Bayley. No, but at all Times when I was not at Sea.

Thomas Caswell sworn.

Mr. Serj. Eyre. How long have you known Hastings?

Caswell. I was born there, and have lived there almost all my Time.

Mr. Serj. Eyre. Have not you been a Freeman and a Jurat?

Caswell. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Eyre. Are not you disfranchised?

Caswell. Yes, I am now disfranchised.

Mr. Serj. Eyre. When was you made a Freeman?

Caswell. In 1717.

Mr. Serj. Eyre. When a Jurat?

Caswell. In 1726.

Mr. Serj. Eyre. Pray, Mr. Caswell, how do they make free?

Caswell. When I was made free, I asked the Mayor and Jurats, although I was the eldest Son of a Freeman.

Mr. Serj. Eyre. Acquaint my Lord and the Jury, what happened on your applying to be made free.

Caswell. I applied in 1717 to the Mayor and Jurats for their Good-will to make me free.

Mr. Serj. Eyre. Is there any Difference between an eldest Son and another in making free?

Caswell. No Difference at all, but that one pays half the Fine, and the other the whole; but the Consent of the Mayor and Jurats is the same.

Mr. Serj. Eyre. As to Non-residence, do they ever make any Persons free, who are not resident within the Borough?

Caswell. They never make any free, but such as are resident.

Mr. Serj. Eyre. Has any Person a Right to be made free, or is it in the Pleasure of the Corporation?

Caswell. It is entirely in the Pleasure of the Mayor and Jurats.

Mr. Serj. Eyre. A Man, by purchasing a Freehold, has he any Right?

Caswell. No.

Mr. At. Gen. Is he free of the other four Cinque Ports?

Caswell. No.

Mr. Strange. Where was you born?

Caswell. At Hastings. My Father was a Freeman when I was born, and many Years before. That is my Father's Copy. (Producing it.)

Mr. Strange. Did you take up your Freedom by that Copy?

Caswell. I wish I could; I should have had it sooner.

Mr. Strange. How old was you when you was made free?

Caswell. I was twenty-six Years old.

Mr. Strange. Did you ever know an eldest Son of a Freeman denied?

Caswell. No; but it is in the Breasts of the Mayor and Jurats, whether he shall be free or no.

Mr. Strange. Was your Father the Son of a Freeman?

Caswell. I cannot tell.

Mr. Strange. How comes it upon your Father's Admission to be marked the Day he was born?

Caswell. It is the Time I was born.

Mr. Strange. How came it there?

Caswell. I wrote it from a Bible, where my Father had entered it.

Mr. Strange. For what Purpose?

Caswell. I wrote it down now, upon this Summons, to shew how old I was.

Mr. Clarke. What is the Difference between the Fine paid by Freeman's Sons, when you was admitted, and now?

Caswell. When I was admitted, it was 6s. 8d. and now it is 20s.

Mr. Clarke. How long has it been 20s.?

Caswell. Twelve or fourteen Years.

Mr. Strange. If the Mayor insists upon 10s. you pay it?

Caswell. The Usage is 6s. 8d.

Mr. Strange. But he might refuse it now?

Caswell. I do not know.

Mr. Strange. Suppose he had asked ten Guineas?

Caswell. You ask foolish Questions.

Mr. Strange. It is not your Business to tell me so.

Caswell. You do it to aggravate your Cause.

Mr. Strange. I ask you, Is it not a Custom for the eldest Son to be admitted, upon paying such reasonable Fine as the Mayor shall think fit?

Caswell. No; all the Custom is, that 6s. 8d. is paid by Sons, and 13s. 4d. by others; and now the Distinction is 20s.

Mr. Strange. Do you know any Instance of Persons admitted for a Fine of 20s.

Caswell. I know but of one Instance.

Mr. Strange. So you take it, no Person has a Right to be made free?

Caswell. Not without the Consent of the Mayor and Jurats.

William Bourne sworn.

Mr. Serj. Parker. Do you know Hastings?

Bourne. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Parker. How long have you known it?

Bourne. Fifty-eight Years.

Mr. Serj. Parker. What Method must a Man take to be admitted a Freeman of Hastings?

Bourne. The Way is to get the Good-will and Liberty of the Mayor and Jurats.

Mr. Serj. Parker. Supposing an eldest Son applies to be made free, does he apply to the Mayor and Jurats in the same Manner as another?

Bourne.

Bourne. Yes, he must make the same Application.

Mr. At. Gen. Has he any Right, without the Leave of the Mayor and Jurats?

Bourne. None that I know of.

Mr. At. Gen. Was you the eldest Son of a Freeman?

Bourne. Yes, I was.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you demand it as a Right?

Bourne. I demanded it as a Favour.

Mr. At. Gen. Had you any Right, in case the Mayor and Jurats had refused you?

Bourne. No.

Mr. Serj. Eyre. Are the Freeholders within the Borough made free?

Bourne. No.

Lord Hardwicke. Suppose a Man has an Estate, and lives in the Town.

Bourne. It is all one, my Lord.

Lord Hardwicke. Did you ever know one of them admitted?

Bourne. No.

Mr. At. Gen. Did they admit you immediately on your Application? or was there any Dispute, whether you should be admitted or no?

Bourne. Yes; it was two or three Court-Days before they admitted me; I believe, in all about six Weeks.

Lord Hardwicke. When was you admitted?

Bourne. In 1701, my Lord.

Mr. Serj. Skinner. So it was six Weeks you was asking this Favour?

Bourne. Thereabouts.

Mr. Serj. Skinner. You went to their Houses, to ask leave that you might be free?

Bourne. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Skinner. Is it the Custom for any Persons that are non-resident to be made free?

Bourne. No.

Mr. Serj. Skinner. Did you ever know the eldest Son of a Freeman refused?

Bourne. No.

Mr. Serj. Skinner. Nor any others?

Bourne. Yes, some.

Mr. Serj. Skinner. Did you ever know any demand it as eldest Sons?

Bourne. I cannot say.

Mr. Strange. Do not you expect to be made free again?

Mr. At. Gen. He expects to be a Freeman before your Client.

Lord Hardwicke. Was you ever a Jurat?

Bourne. No.

Lord Hardwicke. Or a Common-Council-Man?

Bourne. No.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, we rest it here.

Sir T. Abney. My Lord, I beg Leave to trouble your Lordship with a Word by way of Reply: And, notwithstanding what has been offered by the Gentlemen of the other Side, I agree, that, upon the Mandamus, we have laid down four Things as necessary Qualifications for claiming a Freedom in this Borough:

- 1st, That he must be an eldest Son.
- 2dly, That he be born within the Borough.
- 3dly, It must be after the Admission and Swearing of his Father. And,
- 4thly, It must be upon paying a reasonable Fine.

And, my Lord, I humbly apprehend, that if they have proved that any other of the Sons, or that all the Sons, are intituled as well as an eldest Son, it will not at all affect our Custom: Or, if we prove our Custom larger than we have laid it, that it will not at all impeach our Custom or Claim as an eldest Son.

My Lord, a Man lays a Custom, that he has a Right of Common for Sheep, and proves the Right to be for Horses, Cows, and Sheep too; this shall not impeach his Custom.

And therefore, if any Evidence has been given to your Lordship and the Jury, that all the Sons of a Freeman are intituled to their Freedoms, then, my Lord, à fortiori, the eldest Son is intituled.

Lord Hardwicke. It is laid in Respect thereof, Sir Thomas Abney.

Sir T. Abney. My Lord, I humbly apprehend, those Words relate to the Act of the Father. It is, "Every Person, being the eldest Son of a Freeman, and born within the said Town and Port, after the Admission and Swearing of his Father into the Place and Office of one of the Freemen of the said Town and Port, has a Right, in Respect thereof."

My Lord, that, in common Understanding, cannot be in Respect of his being born an eldest Son, but in Respect of his Father's being sworn and admitted a Freeman at the Time of his Birth.

Lord Hardwicke. Has a Right in Respect of his being born after his Father's Admission and Swearing.

Sir T. Abney. And, my Lord, the Customal, to make out that Fact, says, "Uno modo, per Nativitatem infra libertatem suam, si pater suus, tempore natiuitatis sue, fuit liber:" If the Father was a Freeman at the Time of the Son's Birth, then he is to be made free.

My Lord, we have supported this Custom in the strongest Manner, by forty Entries, by a great Number of living Witnesses, and by their own Witnesses, Customal, and Entries too; in-somuch that one Robert Evernden is the only Person they have been able to shew that was ever refused.

My Lord, we have gone so far back as the Year 1588 with our Entries, which, we humbly apprehend, is a very strong Proof of an ancient Custom; we have brought it down to within twenty Years of the present Time; and, in all that Space, they have not been able to shew one Instance of an eldest Son that was ever refused; and the Entries are equally full, and have shewn in the clearest Manner, that the eldest Son of a Freeman, born within the Borough, and after the Swearing and Admission of his Father, was always admitted.

My Lord, as to what Mr. Attorney says, that the Rules laid down in the Customal as to the making of Freemen, that these are Qualifications rather than Rights, and that we have not stated our Custom properly, and are gone on account of the Commorancy; my Lord, I do admit, that if the Witnesses had come up to that Point of Commorancy, we must have given it up.

But, my Lord, I must beg Leave to insist, that, although Mr. Attorney has bestowed so much Learning and Time upon the Words ubi commoratur, to shew that Residence arises from the Customal, and from this Article, which we have laid down as the Foundation of our Right; and that the Person admitted is to take an Oath to be true and faithful to the Borough where he dwells; yet, my Lord, the Words Possunt Majores et Jurati, &c. not only imply a Right, but they bespeak a Qualification: And, my Lord, we have fully shewn them to be Rights that were never contested.

My Lord, another Objection that has been made by the Gentlemen of the other Side, is, that, as we have laid it, it is necessary a reasonable Fine should be paid upon the Admission of every eldest Son; and that we have given Evidence only of a Fine of 6s. 8d. and that we should have given Evidence of different Fines paid, in order to take in the Custom as we have laid it. But, my Lord, I submit it to your Lordship and the Jury, whether the Sum required is unreasonable or no? Is this so? Can it be thought so? If on a Special Verdict it were to be found, that every Man had a Right upon paying 6s. 8d. I humbly apprehend, the Quantity of the Sum must shew that it is a reasonable Fine.

My Lord, as to the By-Law they have read, That, if any Freeman depart out of the Town for a Year and a Day, he loses his Freedom; with great Submission to your Lordship, I apprehend it is not at all applicable to the present Case. It does not say one Word of what is necessary in order to a Man's being elected a Freeman. We say, that in order to be admitted a Freeman, a Man must be an eldest Son, born within the Borough, after his Father's Freedom: But they do not read one Word out of this By-Law, that no Man shall be elected a Freeman, unless he be resident; but it says, that, if any Freeman go and dwell out of the Town for a Year and a Day, he shall for ever lose his Freedom.

And as to their living Witnesses, they, I humbly apprehend, will have little Weight with your Lordship and the Jury. They are not so free as ours; they are Men disfranchised to serve a particular Purpose. It is true, they are legal Witnesses; but it will go to their Credit, and the Jury will think they are under a Bias, and that they are to be made free again, and therefore are prejudiced, and are determined to keep the Borough in the same narrow Hands they now have it. They have all said, that none but the Mayor and Jurats can give a Right; and that, if I was to be let into the Freedom To-morrow, (as Mr. Attorney told you) there is no Right but at the Will and Pleasure of the Mayor and Jurats only. With respect to one of the Jurats, and his own Right, Robert Bartholomew, it will have Weight with the Jury, that he is disfranchised; but much greater, to prove him perjured, which we shall do by three Witnesses of undoubted Credit, whom we shall call to contradict all this Talk that he tells you, that there is no such Thing as a Right but at the Will and Pleasure of the Mayor and Jurats.

Gentlemen, we have no other Evidence to trouble you with, but to contradict Bartholomew; and then, Gentlemen, we shall leave it upon the Strength of the Case; and we make no Doubt, but you will be of Opinion, that the Plaintiff has an undoubted Right, and therefore will find a Verdict for him.

Mr. Broadway sworn.

Mr. Strange. Pray, Mr. Broadway, do you know Robert Bartholomew?

Mr. Broadway. Yes.

Mr. Strange. Had you any Discourse with him about the Right of Freeman's eldest Sons?

Mr. Broadway. Yes; I was in Company with him about two Years ago, at the Sign of the Blue Anchor in Hastings; he then told me, that the eldest Sons of Freeman had a Right to be admitted to their Freedoms.

Mr. Strange. Did he say any thing, that they must come cap-in-hand to the Mayor and Jurats, and beg the Favour that they would please to admit them?

Mr. Broadway. No, nothing at all of that.

Mr. Strange. Did he say any thing further about the Right of eldest Sons?

Mr. Broadway. He said, he could remember the Time particularly well, when they were admitted without any Dispute.

Mr. Serj. Parker. Mr. Bartholomew, is that true? Was you at the Blue Anchor in Hastings with Mr. Broadway?

Bartholomew. No, there is no such Sign in Hastings.

Sir T. Abney. You must call John Sargent.

Mr. At. Gen. Mr. Broadway says, you told him, that you remembered the Time particularly well, when the eldest Sons were admitted without any Dispute.

Bartholomew. I never told him so.

(Here a Person who was upon the Pannel whispered to one of the Jurymen.)

Mr. Serj. Skinner. You must not talk to the Jury: Are you a Hastings Man?

——— No.

Juryman. He is upon the Pannel.

Mr. Serj. Skinner. Did he say any thing to you about this Cause?

Juryman. No.

Mr. At. Gen. Mr. Bartholomew, do you remember that you said so, or no?

Bartholomew. Last Summer I was there with Dodson; but I never heard any such Thing mentioned.

Mr. Marsh. How came you to tell them, they wanted to pry into the Corporation-Secrets?

Sir T. Abney. Did not you tell him you was admitted upon that Right?

Bartholomew. No.

Sir T. Abney. Who is that Person?

Bartholomew. The Minister of the Parish.

Mr. Serj. Skinner. So he came to pump you?

Mr. Marsh. He knows he told them so.

Henry Dodson sworn.

Mr. Marsh. Mr. Dodson, was you at Sargent's with Robert Bartholomew?

Dodson. Yes, about two Years since.

Mr. Marsh. Was Mr. Broadway, the Minister of the Parish, there?

Dodson. Yes, he was in Company with Bartholomew and me.

Mr. Marsh. Pray, what was the Conversation in relation to the Right of Freeman?

Dodson. I met with Mr. Bartholomew and Mr. Broadway at Sargent's. I told him, the Reason of our Meeting was to inquire of him what was the Right of Freeman's Sons. He said, that the eldest Sons of Freeman had an undoubted Right to claim their Freedoms; and he said, that formerly he had been requested to take up his Freedom, but that he had refused it, because because in War-Time the Freemen were burthened with Taxes, watching and working Night and Day; but that afterwards he had thought proper to accept of it, and was admitted for a Bottle of Wine. He said, he applied to the Mayor and Jurats, and was admitted.

Mr. Marsh. Did you say any thing more to him?

Dodson. He told me this; but I said nothing to him, but took a Memorandum in Writing of it.

Mr. Marsh. Did he tell you any thing more of the Right?

Dodson. He said, he looked upon the Sons of Freemen to have a Right.

Lord Hardwicke. Was this at the Time Broadway was with you?

Dodson. Yes.

Mr. Marsh. Was Bartholomew sober?

Dodson. Yes; it was in the Morning; he had drank nothing but one Glass of Wine.

Mr. Serj. Skinner. Did the Parson go with you to find out Evidence? You was the Attorney; Did the Parson go as another Agent to find out more Evidence?

Mark Whales sworn.

Mr. Strange. Mr. Whales, do you know that old Gentleman?

Whales. Yes.

Mr. Strange. Have you heard him make any Declaration concerning the Right of an eldest Son to be free?

Whales. About nineteen Years ago he said that the Sons of Freemen had a Right.

Mr. Strange. Did you never hear him talk about an eldest Son?

Whales. I do not remember.

Lord Hardwicke. That Variance of the Fine, I wish you would apply yourself to that Point, Mr. Strange. The Admission seems to have been upon a certain Fine, 6s. 8d.

Mr. Strange. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury; you have heard a very long Evidence; and as the Gentlemen of the other Side have been pretty minute in their Objections, it will be proper for me as shortly as I can to reply to them.

And, my Lord, the chief Thing the Defendants contend for is, that there is no such Thing as a Right to a Freedom in this Borough; and that, though the electing Members to represent them in Parliament be one of the principal Privileges of every Freeman, yet that there is no Person whatsoever has a Right to come and claim the Consuetudo Regni; but the Mayor and Jurats may at their Pleasure chuse Members to represent this Borough in Parliament, and confine the Election in their own Hands, and may chuse them when, and in what Manner, and what Persons they please.

But, my Lord, to support this Right, they should have laid their Finger upon something that would have intituled them to this Right; and yet they have shewn no Circumstance upon the Face of the Earth that can possibly intitle them to it.

My Lord, there is no Corporation in England, but where if a Man serves an Apprenticeship, he has, by that Apprenticeship, a Right to his Freedom, and the Sons of Freemen have a Right to come and demand their Freedom. But here, my Lord, according to their Account of the Matter, in no Shape or Sort you can ever acquire a Right: A most extraordinary Privilege indeed! And, my Lord, I would beg leave to make this Observation, that, as they began with attacking what Sir Thomas Abney set out with, the ancient Customal; so it appears, they have treated it in a ludicrous Manner, and with no Regard at all. They tell us, it is bound up with a great many miscellaneous Papers of no Use, and therefore it can have no Authority. And, my Lord, this Observation would have been material, if it had come out of our Custody; for then we should have shewn why it kept no better Company. But, as it comes out of their own Custody, can we oblige them to keep their own Book better than they have thought fit to keep it? Besides, my Lord, it goes equally to their own Book which they have produced; it is made up in the same miscellaneous Manner as ours is; and therefore this Objection is as strong against the Authority of their Book as ours.

VOL. X.

But, my Lord, I submit it to your Lordship, that there is no Foundation at all to quarrel upon this Account.

Suppose it had been found loose, in no Company at all, and without any Cover; Is it the worse, if it had been loose, for being stitched? It rather argues it to be a Book of great Authority, and that this was done to preserve it; because, whilst it lay about loose, it was liable to Decay; and in order to preserve it, it was thought proper to bind it up.

My Lord, they say further, it would have been material, if it had been bound up with ancient Charters and Records of the Corporation: My Lord, I looked at it, and saw that the very Charters themselves are bound up with it.

My Lord, they tell us, this Customal, produced by them, has not at all left it clear, that the eldest Sons of Freemen have a Right; and they say, that whatever our Customal may prove, that our Entries, which have been read, are no Proof of any Right; they pray to be admitted, and therefore they have no Right.

But, my Lord, I beg leave to observe, that it is not a Phrase that runs through all the Entries: In some of them, they are admitted upon their instantly requiring it; in others, it is secundum Consuetudinem.

But, my Lord, suppose it was so in all the Entries, it is the common Form of them, and of the Admission of all the Copyholders in England—

Lord Hardwicke. You need not labour that, Mr. Strange.

Mr. Strange. My Lord, they say, there is a Circumstance of our Proof, which we have entirely failed in, and which they would prove for us, or that they shall help it out; and that is, that the Party is to be commorant within the Borough: And to prove this, they have read a By-Law, that says not one Word that he is to be commorant; but that, if a Man goes out of the Town for a Year and a Day, he shall lose his Freedom.

But, my Lord, I humbly apprehend, that a new By-Law, that appears before your Lordship and the Jury to have been made but a Year and half, and contradicts an old Custom, is the strongest Evidence in the World, that it was the Custom till the By-Law was made.

To what Purpose else was the By-Law made? They had better have rested it upon the general

[25]

Consent,

Consent, than have introduced a new By-Law, which, upon the Face of it, appears to contradict an old Custom.

My Lord, Mr. Attorney, I think, was pleased to admit, that there must be a Custom; and that, taking this for Evidence of the Matters in Dispute, and so far as it is an Authority, it says, that the Comers in per Emptionem must have been commorant within the Borough a Year and a Day; and he says, the Reason of this is, that they should have some Knowledge of the Affairs of the Borough before they are made free of it.

But, my Lord, this Commorancy is not confined to the Comers in per Emptionem. The Words of the 39th Article are, "Et nullus fiat liber per Emptionem, quousque in Portu vel Membro, ubi libertatem desiderat, per unum annum et unam diem permanfit, et si bene et honeste habuerit, &c." To what End should it be put, that a Man who comes into the Freedom per Emptionem should be resident a Year and a Day? —

Lord Hardwicke. It infers nothing one Way or other.

Mr. Strange. But one born out of the Town, and bred out of the Borough, it is not necessary for him to be resident, if the Mayor and Jurats please to admit him; and yet every one born in the Town, though he be the Son of a Freeman, must undergo the same Experiment by being resident.

My Lord, the 34th Article, as to the Words ubi commoratur, it is only a Part of the Oath every Freeman is to take upon his Admission, "That he will be good and faithful to the King of England and his Heirs, and that he will observe the Statutes of the Five Ports, and especially of that Port where he resides." And it is not to be inferred from thence, that at the Time of his Admission he must be commorant, but that he will observe the Statutes of the Borough, and consult the Good of it.

My Lord, I do not apprehend, that, by the 38th Article, a Man, by being free of one Port, is intituled to his Freedom in all the other Ports. The Words are, "Et ipsi qui sunt in omnibus et singulis fermis prædiis facti liberi in aliquo Portu sive Membro, habeant libertatem consuetam in omnibus aliis Portibus:" i. e. As a Member of one of the Ports, he shall have the general Liberty belonging to them, but not that he shall be a Member of all the Five Ports.

My Lord, as to the Words in Respect thereof, they insist, that as we have laid it, they exclude all Persons from being intituled to any Freedom, but the eldest Sons of Freeman.

But I submit it to your Lordship, that as in the Mandamus other Circumstances are afterwards mentioned, that those Words, in Respect thereof, are to be referred to the last antecedent Words, to the Freeman's being born within the Liberty, and after the Admission and Swearing of his Father: And unless something be brought to make it improper to refer it to them, I submit it to your Lordship, whether it would in a Right have the Consequence they contend for.

My Lord, the Mandamus says, that the eldest Son is intituled; but this is not an Exclusion of the other Sons: For, if all my Sons are intituled to their Freedoms, then my eldest Son most certainly is.

If it had been a Question, whether all the Sons of a Freeman were intituled? and upon the Face of the Thing, the Man sets out only that he was the eldest Son, he would not enlarge the Custom; because it would have required more Proof: But; if he had been the youngest Son, he must have said that all the Sons are intituled, and there must have been an Averment, to make it square with our Case. They have not read above one Entry of the youngest Sons of Freeman. If we had laid it more confined, we might have failed upon the Proof: But as the Proof has come out; it would have been enough to have said he was filius of a Freeman.

My Lord, I have but one Thing more to trouble your Lordship with: The Gentlemen of the other Side insist, that a previous Application to the Mayor and Jurats is necessary in order to a Man's being made free; and they infer from thence, that it is not Right, but mere Favour in the Mayor and Jurats. Even where a Man has the most indisputable Right in the World, by Servitude, he must produce and prove his Indentures, and his Master certifies that he has served an Apprenticeship faithfully; yet even in this Case, according to them, the Mayor says to the Jurats, Gentlemen, are you satisfied? and if they are, they admit him.

But, my Lord, it does not at all follow, that, because their Opinion is to be taken as to the Admission, that therefore they have a Right to refuse an Apprentice, who has by Servitude acquired a Right to his Freedom; but only whether they shall admit him as he states his Case.

My Lord, having troubled your Lordship so long, I will beg leave only to say one Word more as to the Fine of 6s. 8d.

They object to us, that we have laid it as Part of the Custom, that the eldest Son is to be admitted on paying a reasonable Fine, and that it comes out to be a Fine certain. But I submit it to your Lordship, that 6s. 8d. is a reasonable Fine; the Sum is reasonable; and that the constant Payment of it upon every Admission is an Evidence what is a reasonable Fine: And I rely on those Instances we have read, that that is the reasonable Fine; and they are brought only to warrant that there is a reasonable Fine to be taken; and that therefore we are not wrong in saying we have a Right upon paying a reasonable Fine. If we had laid it to have been upon a Fine certain, they would have objected it to us, and they would have shewn, that at one Time a Pipe of Wine was the Fine; and at another Time 20s. was the Fine; and therefore it would have been dangerous to have laid 6s. 8d. to be a certain Fine.

Lord Hardwicke. You have shewed no Evidence, Mr. Strange, that it has ever been varied.

Mr. Strange. They have taken 6s. 8d. always upon the Admission of Sons.

Lord Hardwicke. [One of the Witnessess says, now the Fine as a Freeman's Son is 20s.

Mr. Strange. That, my Lord, is a reasonable Fine, and no certain Sum. That in a Church-Lease was a reasonable Fine at one Time, which is not so now; and the Corporation think that 20s. now, is not more than 6s. 8d. was formerly.

My Lord, we therefore submit it to your Lordship, upon the Circumstances of this Case, that we have fully proved our Issue; especially as they have not shewn who is intituled to a Freedom within this Borough.

Lord Hardwicke. It will be proper to consider, how much of this ought to be left to the Jury. Thus much is Fact, and that they must inquire of:

First, Whether it appears from the Evidence, that there is any Custom within the Borough, that the eldest Son of a Freeman, born after the Admission and Swearing of his Father, has a Right? I think the Words in Respect thereof are answered; the confining it in Respect thereof must refer to the two Qualifications, that of being born within the Borough, and after the Father's Freedom. I think it is no Objection, that they have proved the Right for all the Sons: For, as Sir Thomas Abney insisted, if a Man has a Right of Common, and lays it for Sheep, and proves he has a Right for Sheep, Cows, and Horses too, he shall prevail; and that I think the same with the present Case; for the Custom's extending to other Persons does not prove this bad, because laid more confined. The Jury therefore must determine, whether there be any Custom within the Borough for an eldest Son to be free.

Secondly, Then they must inquire, whether being born within the Town, after his Father was made free, be necessary Qualifications of the Custom, or not? For you have laid the Right to rise from thence. That was not necessary, but that you have laid it so.

Thirdly, It will be necessary for the Jury next to consider, if they believe Resiance to be another necessary Qualification?

If the Jury be of Opinion, that either of these two Qualifications, of being born within the Town, or after the Father was made free, are necessary; or that that Point Commerancy is not necessary; then they must find a Verdict for the Plaintiff.

But, if they should be of Opinion that the two former are not essential Qualifications, and the last is necessary; then they must find for the Defendants; and in that Case that Point must be saved.

The Point of laying a reasonable Fine must be saved, if the Jury find a Verdict for the Plaintiff.

I own, I am not satisfied: What Mr. Attorney-General said, that there is great Difference between a reasonable Fine and a Fine certain, has Weight in it.

A reasonable Fine is such as the Law will judge to be so; the general Usage of the Kingdom is, that it shall not exceed two Years and a half's Rent. But what a reasonable Fine is, and who shall be the Judge of it, the Law has established no Rule: And if so, the Question will be, Whether the Jury should find that the Reasonableness is to be judged of by the Proportion of the Sum? And that Point to be reserved for the Determination of the Court, Whether there be a Variance from the Fine laid in the Issue?

If the Jury find for the Plaintiff, there must be a Rule for the Postea to stay; and that Point to be saved, for the Opinion of the Court.

Mr. Marsh. In laying the Evidence before the Court, my Lord, their own Witnesses said, that fourteen Years ago there was a Fine of 20*s.* paid.

Mr. At. Gen. There is but one Instance, and that was in 1730.

Mr. Strange. We take it, Mr. Attorney, upon your own Witnesses Evidence.

Lord Hardwicke. He did not say how many Instances.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, he said one Instance, and no more.

Lord Hardwicke. The Books ought to be looked over for this Purpose. I apprehended you would have shewn Instances where there had been a Variance of the Fine. Call that Witness again: It was Thomas Caswell. — Mr. Caswell, you mentioned the Fine now taken to be 20*s.*

Caswell. Yes, my Lord.

Lord Hardwicke. How many Instances do you know of 20*s.* taken for the Fine?

Caswell. But one, my Lord; it is Mr. Hall.

Mr. Strange. Why did you say, that for about fourteen Years 20*s.* had been taken?

Caswell. I said, for about nine or ten Years 20*s.* had been taken; but it was always 6*s.* 8*d.* besides.

Mr. Strange. You are disfranchised, are you not?

Caswell. Yes.

Mr. Strange. Was you not a little while ago?

Caswell. Yes.

Lord Hardwicke. I will not have another Examination of the Witnesses.

Mr. Strange. My Lord, I only asked him, what they asked me.

Mr. At. Gen. What was that?

Mr. Strange. Nothing at all.

Mr. Marsh. What do you know of the others who were admitted? What did they pay?

Lord Hardwicke. Gentlemen of the Jury, This is a Writ of Mandamus, brought by the Plaintiff Henry Moore, to require the Defendants, the Mayor, Jurats and Commonalty of the Town and Port of Hastings, to admit him into the Place and Office of one of the Freemen of that Town: And the Writ sets forth, that the Plaintiff is the eldest Son of a Freeman, born within the Town, after the Admission and Swearing of his Father; and has a Right, in Respect thereof, and also upon paying a reasonable Fine, to be admitted a Freeman of the Town.

And, Gentlemen, the Matter comes to this Issue, Whether Time out of Mind there has been a Custom, that every Person, being the eldest Son of a Freeman, born within the Town, after the Admission and Swearing of his Father into the Place and Office of one of the Freemen of the said Town and Port, has a Right, in Respect thereof, and also upon paying a reasonable Fine, to be admitted into the Place and Office of one of the Freemen of the said Town and Port?

That, Gentlemen, is the Issue you are to try; and you have, no Doubt, observed on what Points this Question turns.

It appears, that Hastings is one of the Cinque Ports, and it is besides a Corporation.

Gentlemen, the Point insisted on by the Plaintiff's Council, and the first Thing produced to be considered by you, is a Book consisting of various Parts: One of the Parts is a Customal of the Town of Hastings, translated out of Latin into English, — in an old Hand, — of what Authority is not certain.

At last it comes to this, that in the Book appears to be an ancient Entry of the Customal of the Five Ports and their Members, the Time whereof the Memory of Man is not to the contrary.

From what Authority it comes, is not certain; but it is an ancient Book of the Town, and kept among the Records of the Corporation; and the Entry is in this Book. There are several other Papers bound up with it; Leafes, the Rental of an Estate, a Copy of a Mortgage, and some other Things.

But that does not take off from the Credit of it, if it has any Credit in itself; for the Town-Clerk might bind up what he thought fit with it.

Gentlemen, the Entry relied on for the Plaintiff is this:

“ Concerning the making of Freemen in the Cinque Ports and their Members.

“ The Mayor and Jurats, the Bailiffs and Jurats, in every Town and Port where there is a Mayor and a Bailiff, may receive and make Freemen three Ways:

1st, “ Per Nativitatem infra libertatem suam, si pater suus, tempore natiuitatis sue, fuit liber.”

By Birth within their Liberty, if his Father, at the Time of his Birth, was a Freeman.

Another Way is by a Freehold Purchase.

And the third Way is by Buying a Freedom.

And it goes on and says, “ And it is to be observed, no Man shall enjoy the Freedom of any of the Ports, unless he take an Oath to be good and faithful, to the End of his Life, to the King of England and his Heirs; and to maintain the Liberties of the Cinque Ports, and especially of that Port where he is commorant; that he will be obedient to the Mayor and Jurats; that he will pay Scot and Lot, &c. that he will not do any thing to the Reproach of the Mayor, Bailiff, and Jurats where he is commorant, but give Notice to them.”

And there were other Clauses read; and one of them is, “ That they who are made free in this Form in one of the Ports, shall enjoy the accustomed Freedom in all the other Ports.”

And there is another Clause, “ That no Man to be made free by Redemption, shall be admitted into the Freedom, till he has dwelt in the Borough by the Space of one Year and a Day.”

These, Gentlemen, are the Entries relied on by the Plaintiff. After reading these Entries, the Council for the Defendants objected, that this was not a particular Customal of Hastings, and therefore not so conclusive. But Hastings in the Mandamus is suggested to be one of the Five Ports.

Gentlemen, they have given Evidence of three different Species of Persons admitted under this Right.

The first is, where Persons were admitted as eldest Sons of Freemen, born within the Borough, and after the Swearing and Admission of the Father.

The next is, where the Admission has been of eldest Sons, born within the Borough, but it does not appear whether before or after the Admission of the Father. And,

The third Species, of Persons who were admitted as the Sons of Freemen in general; but they have not shewn that they were born in the Town, or after the Father's Freedom.

As to the first Species of Persons, who were admitted as eldest Sons of Freemen, born within the Town, after the Admission and Swearing of the Father; I think they read in Number eleven Instances: I need not repeat them. The first is Jeremiah Bryham, admitted the 12th of James the First, anno 1614; the last was Benjamin Medhurst, the 6th of May, 1721.

The next Species is of eldest Sons admitted, and Mention is made in the Entries that they are eldest Sons: But it is not clear, whether they were born before or after the Father's Freedom; but it appears they were born in the Town. They are in Number fourteen. They begin the 7th of May, 1608; and the last Instance of them is the 21st of November, 1678.

The third Species is of Admissions of Persons, mentioning them generally as the Sons of Freemen, without distinguishing between the eldest and other Sons; but it does not appear, whether they were born in the Town, or after their Fathers became free. They are in Number twenty. So that the Entries they have read are in all forty-five, under the several Species I have mentioned to you.

Gentlemen, after reading these Entries, to shew that such Persons have been admitted, mentioning them as eldest Sons, or Sons, the Fine that has been taken upon their Admissions appears to be 6s. 8d. in all they have read; and at the same Time other Persons were admitted with them, but in the Entries Notice is not taken of them as Sons of Freemen; and as to them, the Fine is 13s. 4d.

Gentlemen, besides these Entries, they have called several living Witnesses.

The first is Robert Evernden. He says, he is sixty-six Years old, and has lived in Hastings fifty Years. He says, he has heard Thomas Moore, an old Jurat, say, that the eldest Sons of Freemen had a Right, and that the usual Fine paid upon the Admission of an eldest Son is 6s. 8d. and that he has also heard John Moore, another Jurat, say the same Thing. He says, they are both dead, and that John has been dead about ten or twelve Years. He says nothing about the Qualification of Residence, or being born in the Town after the Freedom of the Father.

The next Witness they called is John Couzens. He says, he is sixty Years old, and that he always understood, and has heard several ancient People say, that the eldest Son of a Freeman had a Right by his Father's Charter; and takes it, that the Father must be free before the Birth of the Son. He says, he heard both Thomas and John Moore say the eldest Son had a Right, and never heard of an eldest Son's being refused till the Plaintiff Moore; and says, he heard Dr. Fiat say the eldest Son had a Right by his Father's Charter.

Their next Witness is Drew Shengleton. He says, he is sixty-nine Years old, has lived fifty Years in Hastings, and speaks to the same Purpose with the two former Witnesses; and says, it has been the Discourse twenty Years back, that Freemen's eldest Sons had a Right.

John Boykett is the next: And he says, he is above sixty Years old; that he was born in Hastings, and has lived almost all his Time there; that about forty Years ago he went into the Court-Hall, and asked to be made free as a Favour; but the Mayor was against it; and then the Town-Clerk asked if his Father was a Freeman; the Mayor said, No; and Waller replied, Then you may do as you think fit; to which the Mayor answers, I will not give my Consent to make a Dissenter free for 40l. He says, one Medhurst, the only Son of a Freeman, demanded his Freedom about fifteen Years ago, and was refused.

Joan White says, she is sixty-two Years old; has heard her Father say, the eldest Son of a Freeman had a Right.

Anne Sargent says; she is sixty-three Years old; that she has heard John Stevens, who was several Times Mayor of Hastings, say, that it belonged to the eldest Sons of Freemen to be free.

Susannah Medhurst is the next Witness. She says, she is sixty-six Years old; that her former Husband was Mayor of Hastings, and is dead; and that she has heard him often say, the eldest Son had a Right, and that they could not deny him; and says, that at that Time it was generally granted to eldest Sons.

Gentlemen, the last Witness for the Plaintiff is Thomas Colebrand. He says, he is eighty Years old; that when he lived there sixty Years ago, it was the Usage; that eldest Sons of Freemen had a Right; that old Waller the Town-Clerk, Thomas Lovell, and Thomas Rainolds, told him so; and that he has heard the Mayor and Jurats say so several Times. He says, that about sixty Years ago, one Medhurst, who was the eldest Son of a Freeman, came and demanded his Freedom; and Lovell the Mayor told him, it was an ancient Right, that the eldest Son of a Freeman should be made free; and that afterwards he saw Medhurst among the Freemen at an Election, and vote for Members of Parliament. Gentlemen, it appears upon the Admission of this Medhurst, which they have also read to you, that he paid a Fine of 6*s.* 8*d.* And this, Gentlemen, is the whole of the Plaintiff's Evidence.

For the Defendants, the Gentlemen of the other Side insist, there is no Right at all to Freedoms in this Borough; but that all Admissions depend upon the Will and Pleasure of the Mayor and Jurats; that they may admit or refuse a Stranger or a Son, just as they please: And they insist, that, if there be such a Right, that it is restrained by these two Qualifications, of being born in the Town, and after the Swearing and Admission of the Father.

And another Qualification insisted on by the Defendants is, That he should be resiant within the Borough.

Gentlemen, the Matter of Law which will arise, if you are of Opinion that there is such a Custom, will be, Whether the Fine be a reasonable Fine, as the Plaintiff has laid it, or whether this is a certain Fine of 6*s.* 8*d.*

Gentlemen, the first Evidence that has been produced for the Defendants is an old Book, in which there are Entries of an old Customal, and a By-Law dated the 12th of April, the 15th of Queen Elizabeth; by which it is decreed, "That, if any Freeman, now or at any Time hereafter an Inhabitant of this Town, shall depart or dwell out of the Town by the Space of a Year and a Day, he or they, so dwelling out of the Town, shall lose his or their Freedom for ever."

I own, I do not know so extraordinary a Custom any where: For a Man to have a Right to be admitted a Freeman, who was not resident; and yet the Corporation could disfranchise a Man for Non-residence.

But this By-Law will not be of much Weight one Way or other. It only shews the Act of the Corporation to disfranchise any Person that goes out of the Borough.

They have also produced for the Defendants another Book, in which, they say, is contained the Usage of Hastings Time out of Mind; and they have read out of it an Entry in old French, the Purport of which is, "That if a Foreigner resides in Hastings for a Year and a Day, he may come before the Bailiff and Jurats, and be admitted to the Freedom upon taking an Oath."

The Witness, who read this, swore there was no other Evidence in the Book relating to the making of Freemen.

They read this, to shew that there is no Right of Freedom at all in this Borough, if a Stranger, who has lived in the Town a Year and a Day, may come before the Bailiff and Jurats, and they may admit him upon taking an Oath.

Gentlemen, the next Evidence the Defendants have produced is from Entries of the Admission of Sons of Freemen, without mentioning that they were either eldest or younger Sons; and the Plaintiff admits many of these Entries; and they only shew, that the Fact is, that other Sons, as well as eldest Sons, have been admitted for a Fine of 6*s.* 8*d.*

The next Evidence is from living Witnesses: And the first Witness they have called is Henry Carlton. He says, he is eighty Years of Age, was born within a Mile of Hastings, and from fifteen Years old has lived there. He has been at several Meetings of the Mayor and Jurats, and has known several Honorary Freemen made, (Members of Parliament, and Captains of Ships) who did not reside; and yet he says, he never heard of any who do not live there, that had a Right to demand their Freedoms; and Persons who have lived there, and been Sons of Freemen, have been refused, and has known Instances. He says, he never looked upon it that any Person had a Right, unless according to the Pleasure of the Mayor and Jurats. He says, one Evernden, who was an eldest Son, applied to the Mayor and Jurats to be made free, and was refused; and that this was about thirty-five Years ago. He says, he has been a Jurat from 1701; and tells you, that the common Way of making free is, for a Man, if he be an eldest Son, to apply to the Mayor and Jurats, and ask the Favour of them to be made free; and if they consent, he comes to the Court, and asks it again; and if any Difference arises, they put it to the Vote; and this, he says, is the Method of proceeding in the Case of admitting Freemen's eldest Sons. He says, he was the eldest Son of a Freeman, not born in the Town; that he was admitted, and paid but 6*s.* 8*d.* Therefore this is not to be applied only to the Right of eldest Sons born within the Borough. He says, that several such have been admitted, but not upon the Foot of Right.

Their next Witness is Robert Bartholomew, aged eighty-two. He says, he was made free by the Favour of the Mayor and Jurats; and that, in his Opinion, no body but those whom the Mayor and Jurats please have a Right. He was asked, whether he did not tell Mr. Broadway and Mr. Dodson, that he remembered the Time particularly well, when the eldest Sons of Freemen were admitted without any Dispute? And he says, he never told them so.

Mark Bayley is the next. He is seventy-six Years of Age, and has lived all his Time in Hastings, and has been a Jurat six or seven Years. He says, there is no such Thing as demanding a Freedom by Right, and that the eldest Son of a Freeman has no more Right than any body else.

Their next Witness is Thomas Caswell. He says, he has been a Freeman ever since the Year 1716; that he is the eldest Son of a Freeman, and applied to the Mayor and Jurats for their Good-will to make him free; and knows no Difference between the Admission of an eldest Son and another, but paying half the Fine. He says, he never knew any Persons made free but who were resident in Town, nor upon a Freehold; and that it is entirely in the Pleasure of the Mayor and Jurats to make free. He says, when he was admitted, the Fine was 6s. 8d. but since they have taken 20s. But being called on to name Instances, he says, he knows but of one Instance.

William Bourne is the next: And he says, he has been a Freeman, but never a Jurat; that he has known the Town fifty-eight Years; and that the Way to be admitted is to get the Good-will of the Mayor and Jurats. He says, he is the eldest Son of a Freeman, but knows of no Right, and that he requested it as a Favour; and before they admitted him, they considered of it two or three Court-Days: And he says, that no Non-residents can be admitted.

This, Gentlemen, is the whole of the Defendants Evidence.

By way of Reply, the Plaintiff has called two Witnesses to contradict what Robert Bartholomew has sworn.

Mr. Broadway is the first: And he says, that he was in Company with Bartholomew about two Years ago, at the Blue Anchor in Hastings; when he told him, that the eldest Sons of Freeman had an undoubted Right, and that he was admitted upon that Right, though he had before declined it, by reason of the Taxes.

Mr. Dodson was also present, and he says the same.

Upon this Bartholomew was confronted with Dodson and Broadway: And he said, that he was not with them at such a Place, and that there is no such Sign as the Blue Anchor at Hastings. He denied he said the eldest Son had a Right; but owns he said he thought they came to pry into the Secrets of the Corporation.

Upon this Evidence, Gentlemen, it will be proper for you to consider,

First, Whether you believe there is any positive Right in this Borough for an eldest Son to be free? As to the Right that has been set up for the Defendants, That all is at the Will and Pleasure of the Mayor and Jurats, and that there is no Right at all to be free; it is such an extraordinary Custom as I hardly ever heard of, and know no such Instance any where. Some Right there must be, although the Magistrates may have taken it into their own Hands. Therefore the Question will be, Whether you believe there is a Right in the eldest Sons to be free?

Gentlemen, you have heard the ancient Customal read. This, to be sure, is some Evidence, but not conclusive; and it is the Customal of the Five Ports in general, and there are separate Customs in each Port.

And here is one Method laid down of an Admission of Freeman in Right of a Purchase, and that, they shew you, has never been complied with.

But they have read many Instances of Persons who were admitted upon the first Right; thirty-five they have read who were admitted as eldest Sons; or Sons: Of the first Species, they read eleven in Number; and you must take it together with what the living Witnesses tell you, who all say; that they have taken the Custom to be so, that the eldest Son has a Right.

What Boykett swore is very material, that, when he applied to be admitted, Waller the Town-Clerk asked, if his Father was a Freeman? the Mayor said, No; to which Waller replied, Then do what you please.

Gentlemen, for the Defendants, the Witnesses have sworn, that they know of no Right to Freedom in this Borough, but at the Pleasure of the Mayor and Jurats; and that during their Time, and though particular Mention is made in the Entries that they are Sons, in Respect of the Difference of the Fine, and that they are admitted for paying 6s. 8d. they tell you it is not at all material being the Son of a Freeman.

Gentlemen, in the next Place you will consider, if you believe there is any Right for the eldest Sons of Freeman, then whether it be necessary that he be born in the Town, and after his Father was made free? because the Plaintiff has made it necessary for him to prove that he be born there after the Admission of his Father, by laying it in Respect thereof. And as to that, the ancient Customal says, "Uno modo, per Nativitatem infra libertatem suam, si pater suus, tempore natiuitatis sue, fuit liber:" That every body has a Right by Birth within their Liberty, if his Father at the Time of his Birth was a Freeman. This the ancient Customal mentions; but this is not conclusive. Therefore, Gentlemen, you will consider it with the Evidence of the living Witnesses, and none of them have made that a necessary Qualification. One of them said, that the Father must be free before the Birth of his Son; and another said, it made no Difference, whether born before or after: But none of them said positively, that he must be born within the Liberty, after the Admission and Swearing of his Father. Therefore you will consider, whether these two Qualifications are proved essential to the Right to be made free.

In the next Place, it will be proper to consider, that the Customal supposes that no Man has a Right, unless he be resident; and it tends to enlarge the Freedom of the Borough, to let in Persons not resident: But very little positive Evidence has been given of that.

The Defendants Witnesses have sworn positively, that the Mayor and Jurats can admit none but Residents; and yet, that they may admit Honorary Freeman who are non-resident: Though the ancient Customal has an express Clause in it, which supposes, that, in order to be free, a Man must be resident. They swear to pay Scot and Lot, and to maintain the Liberties of the Five Ports, and particularly of the Port where they are commorant. Which implies, that every Freeman should be commorant. And the Council for the Defendants have mentioned, that every Freeman is to take an Oath to maintain the Rights of the Five Ports, and especially of that Port where he is commorant.

You will consider therefore, Gentlemen, whether this imports as a necessary Qualification, that in order to be free, a Man must be resident?

The

The Council for the Plaintiff did not ask the Witnesses as to this Point of Residence.

The Witnesses for the Defendants all swore, they took it to be so; but yet that Honorary Freemen, who were not resident, might be made free.

It will be proper for you therefore, Gentlemen, to consider,

First, If you believe, on this Evidence, that there is no Right in the Son of any Freeman to demand his Freedom of the Mayor and Jurats, but that all depends on their Pleasure:

But, if you believe that there is a Right in the Son of a Freeman, and that the Mayor and Jurats cannot deny him his Freedom: Then

You will consider, whether the two Qualifications, of being born in the Borough, after the Freedom of the Father, are necessary, or no?

If you believe they are not necessary; but that whether he be born in or out of the Borough, or before or after he was made free, makes no Difference; in that Case you must find for the Defendants.

But if you believe a Right in the Sons of Freemen; and that being born in the Borough, and after the Father's Freedom, are essential:

Then you will consider the Matter of Resiance:

And if you believe Resiance not necessary, then you must find a Verdict for the Plaintiff.

But, on the other hand, if you believe being born in the Borough, and after the Father's Freedom, are not necessary; or, if necessary, that it is equally necessary that the Persons should be resident; then you must find a Verdict for the Defendants.

Verdict for the Plaintiff.

Foreman. We find, that the eldest Son of a Freeman, born within the Borough, after his Father's Freedom, has a Right.

Lord Hardwicke. What do you find as to the Commorancy?

Foreman. My Lord, we find Residence not necessary; and that the eldest Son, born within the Borough, after his Father's Freedom, has a Right upon paying a customary Fine.

Lord Hardwicke. What do you find the Fine?

Foreman. We find the Fine to be 6s. 8d. and that that is reasonable.

Lord Hardwicke. That Point of the reasonable Fine must be saved for the Opinion of the Court; and let the Postea stay.

N. B. The Special Verdict was afterwards solemnly argued, and determined by the Court in Favour of the Plaintiff Moore.

An Account of the Behaviour of the late Earl of Kilmarnock, after his Sentence, and on the Day of his Execution, August 18, 1746. By James Foster.

MR. Foster says, his first Access to Lord Kilmarnock was on Thursday, August 7, in the Evening; and after some serious Discourse with his Lordship on Religion, he proceeds thus:

“ He desired me to administer the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper to him, which at first I declined, without absolutely refusing it. And my Reason was this, that I chose not to do it till I had Authority from General Williamson to tell him, that there remained no Hope of his Life. Then I thought I should have clearer Evidence, if he still continued in the same ingenuous Temper, that his Confessions and Repentance were sincere; and I consented at last only upon this Condition, that he would allow Mr. Fowler, the Gentleman-Gaoler of the Tower, to be present, and renew his Acknowledgments before him. To this he made no Objection; and the Questions which I proposed to him, together with his Answers, were in Substance as follows.

“ Do you acknowledge, with deep Penitence and Contrition, the Guilt of the late unprovoked, unnatural and wicked Rebellion in which you engaged; the Share you had, by being involved in it, in the Oppressions and Murders

“ of your Fellow-Subjects, and the Desolation and Spoil of your native Country; your great Guilt in rebelling against your just and lawful King, and against a mild and gracious Government? I do.

“ Are you ready to declare, that it is your stedfast Resolution to persist in this humble Confession to the last, and to pray for the Prosperity of King George, the Establishment of his Royal House, and the Welfare and Peace of your Country, with your dying Breath? I readily declare this to be my steady Purpose.

“ Do you also, with Shame and Humiliation before God, acknowledge the Irregularities and Excesses of your private Life; and will you endeavour to form your Mind to a deeper and deeper Repentance for both your public and more personal Crimes? This is my Resolution, which I will adhere to by the Help of God.

“ Be pleased to declare, that you expect no Benefit at all from receiving the Sacrament, if your Remorse and Penitence be not sincere. I do not think, that it will be of any Service to me.

“ I desire, in the last Place, that you will also declare, what of your own Accord you “ have

“ have mentioned to me before — That you “ consider yourself, in this Act of receiving the “ Sacrament under your present critical and “ melancholy Circumstances, as making an im“ plicit Appeal to God, that you expect no
 “ Mercy from him, if your Confessions are feigned
 “ and hypocritical; and that you look upon the “ Death of Christ (which you are now solemnly
 “ to commemorate as a Ratification of God’s “ Covenant of Mercy to unfeigned humble
 “ Penitents, and to them alone) as both a strong “ Encouragement and Motive to you, to en“ deavour to strengthen and perfect your Repent“ ance. I consider the whole of this in the Light,
 “ in which it has now been represented.

“ I shall only add under this Head, that all the “ Confessions of this unfortunate Lord appeared
 “ to me to be free and ingenuous: He never “ scrupled the Questions that were asked him,
 “ nor took the least Time to meditate and “ prepare an Answer. His Confessions, likewise, “ were perfectly consistent and uniform, and “ never varied as to the general Substance; and “ in no other Circumstance than this, which will “ be thought perhaps to redound to his Honour,
 “ that he continued to the last recollecting and “ searching himself, and declaring particular In“ cidents as they occurred to him, which tended,
 “ upon the whole, not to the Extenuation, but “ to the Heightening of his Crime. And a few “ Days before his Death he said, That he thought
 “ he should rather prefer the speedy Execution
 “ of the Sentence, which was justly passed upon “ him, than a longer Continuance in Life, if “ he was sure that he should be again entangled by
 “ the Snares and Temptations to which he had “ formerly yielded: What would really be the “ Event, if he was let loose among the Gaieties
 “ and Pleasures of Life, he did not certainly “ know, and somewhat dreaded; but in the “ Declaration he had made, he thought he found “ himself clear.

“ Heavy Charges of Inhumanity and Cruelty, I “ told him, were spread among the People con“ cerning him; and by many believed. I desired “ him therefore to be honest and free in clearing
 “ his Conscience of such a Load of most unnatural “ Guilt, by answering to the following Interro“ gations, which included in them the Substance
 “ of these Charges. And I here subjoin, for the “ Perusal of the Publick, the Questions as I “ proposed, and have now transcribed them from
 “ a Paper written before I went to the Tower,
 “ and his distinct Reply to each.

“ Was your Lordship present in the Pretender’s
 “ Council at Inverness, or any other Place, before
 “ the Battle of Culloden, where it was proposed
 “ to destroy the Prisoners taken by the Rebels?

“ I can most sincerely and freely answer, No.

“ Was you ever present in Council where this “ was proposed? No.

“ Did you ever move for such an Order? No.

“ Did you ever sign such an Order? No.

“ Did you ever carry an Order of this Kind to “ the French General Stapleton? Did you ever,
 “ in his Presence, approve of such an Order?
 “ Did you at any Time, hearing it had been “ communicated to him, encourage and excite
 “ him to the Execution of it? To all which he “ answered in the same Manner, No.

“ Did you ever know, or hear, that such a “ Thing, or an Order to give no Quarter, was “ debated, or agreed to, or signed in the Rebel “ Army, till you was taken by the King’s Forces,

 “ and a Prisoner at Inverness? Or do you know “ yourself guilty of any Cruelties, by you au“ thorized or committed, against the King’s “ Soldiers or Subjects taken Prisoners by the “ Rebels? The Answer to both these Questions
 “ was the same as before.

“ As to what passed in the Church of St.
 “ Ninians, he told me, that he knew nothing at all
 “ of it, till, upon the Retreat of the Rebel Army,
 “ he was at some Distance from Stirling, where “ he had been confined to his Bed by a Fever;
 “ that the first Notice he had of it, was the Noise
 “ of blowing up the Church, of which he could “ never get any but an indistinct and confused
 “ Account; that it was represented by the Rebels
 “ as accidental; but concerning this he could “ certainly say nothing; only as to himself he “ solemnly declared, that he had no Knowledge
 “ before-hand of, nor any Concurrence in a design’d “ Act of Cruelty. I told him however, that he “ was charged with an Instance of Barbarity to
 “ the Prisoners confined in the Church at Inver- “ ness. And the Account which he gave of the “ Fact, is as follows — That there were Orders “ issued by the Pretender’s Son, to strip them
 “ of their Cloathing, for the Use of some of “ the Highland Rebels; that the Warrant for “ executing this Order was sent to him; that he “ did not enter the Church in Person, but “ committed the Execution of it to an inferior “ Officer; that the Prisoners, at first, refused to “ submit, upon which there was a second Order,
 “ and their Cloaths were taken from them; but “ that in the mean Time, the Person, stiled the “ French Ambassador, represented to him, that “ this was an Outrage, which he thought scarce “ justifiable by the Law of Nations, and the “ Rules of War; he therefore, while the Cloaths
 “ lay in Heaps, with proper Centinels over them,
 “ in the Streets of Inverness, went up to the “ Pretender’s Son, and represented the Matter
 “ in the Light in which the French Ambassador “ had stated it, and according to what were his “ own Sentiments likewise; upon which, as it was “ feared that such Usage might make an ill “ Impression upon the Minds of the People, the “ Cloaths were again restored; and this, he “ averred to me, was the whole of the Truth,
 “ as far as it ever fell under his Knowledge.

“ For myself, I must do this unhappy Criminal
 “ the Justice to own, that he never appeared,
 “ during the Course of my Attendance upon “ him, to be of any other than a soft bene“ volent Disposition. His Behaviour was always “ remarkably mild and temperate. I could “ discern no Resentment, no Disturbance or “ Agitation in him. This indeed I feared, (as “ Persons in his melancholy Circumstances are “ generally apt to think, that they ought to “ have the Preference in Cases of Reprieve or “ Pardon) when I was first informed of Lord
 “ Cromartie’s Reprieve; and therefore in the “ Morning before I waited on him, I prepared “ myself to quiet and mollify his Mind. But one “ of the first Things he said to me was, that he “ was extremely glad that the King’s Mercy
 “ had been shewn to Lord Cromartie. My Lord, “ says I, I hope you do not think you have any “ Injustice done to you? His Answer was, Not “ the least: I have pleaded guilty, I entirely ac- “ quiesce

“ quiesce in the Justice of my Sentence, and if Mercy
 “ be extended to another, I can have no Reason to “ complain, when nothing but Justice is done to me.
 “ I do not believe, that my not being reprieved is “ owing to any Defect of Clemency in the King,
 “ who, by all the Accounts I ever received, is a very “ merciful Prince; nor that it springs from any “ particular Resentment or Prejudice against me, “ either in his Majesty, or in the Duke; but from “ some Distinction that they thought there was in “ the Circumstances of Lord Cromartie’s Guilt and “ mine, or else from the public Demand for Justice,
 “ which made it unfit that two out of three should “ be reprieved. From this Way of thinking and “ discoursing, he never, to my Knowledge,
 “ varied to the last.

“ I must add here another, and I think, a great
 “ and unquestionable Instance of Lord Kilmarnock’s “ Ingenuity. He had been charged, and “ he imagined without a just Foundation, with “ having uttered a Falshood, when he said in his “ Speech at the Bar of the House of Lords, that “ it was very easy for him to have escaped. This
 “ he still thought was true upon the Rebel Army’s
 “ first giving Way, as the greatest Part of that “ Body actually did escape, with whom he was “ joined. But after he had separated himself
 “ from them, and was advanced any considerable “ Way towards the King’s Troops, he believed “ that his Escape was not practicable. But tho’
 “ he hoped that this would clear him from the “ Imputation of having wilfully prevaricated in
 “ the Instance already mentioned; yet he owned,
 “ that in another, induced by the Love and strong “ Desire of Life, he had grossly falsified. The “ Case, as he represented it to me, was thus—
 “ He had asserted in his Speech, That tho’ he “ could have escaped, he did not chuse it, because “ the Consequences, in an Instant, appeared to “ him more terrible, more shocking, than the “ most painful or ignominious Death: And “ therefore he chose to surrender and commit “ himself to the King’s Mercy, rather than to “ throw himself into the Hands of a foreign “ Power, the natural Enemy to his Country;
 “ with whom to have Merit, he must persist in “ continued Acts of Violence to his Principles,
 “ and of Treason and Rebellion against his King
 “ and Country: But the real Truth was, That “ he had no Intention at all to surrender, and that “ his only View was to facilitate his Escape; for “ that he thought the Body towards which he “ advanced, were not the King’s, but Fitz-James’s “ Horse; and that if he could reach them, by “ mounting behind one of the Dragoons, his “ Escape would have been more certain, than,
 “ as he was then on Foot, it appeared to him in “ his present Situation to be; tho’ he did not “ find his Strength or Spirits in any considerable “ Degree impaired. This, he thought, as it “ related to his inward Intention only, could not “ be discovered but by his own Confession, nor “ known to any but God and his own Conscience.
 “ But he was willing to unburden his Soul, and “ purge it of its most secret Guilt; and therefore “ pressed it upon me in a particular Manner,
 “ and especially on the very Day before he was “ executed, Not to forget to publish to the “ World this Circumstance; because, as he had “ solemnly uttered, before so august an Assembly
 “ as the House of Lords, a direct and known

“ Untruth, he thought, if he should die without “ a Retraction of it, and a public Acknowledg“ ment of his Offence, he must be considered “ as one, who presumed to appear before the “ Tribunal of God with a Lye in his Mouth.
 “ And here I cannot help thinking myself bound,
 “ in Justice to Lady Kilmarnock, to declare (and
 “ it is most proper to do it in this Place, because “ it will probably find more Credit, after such a “ striking Instance of the late Lord Kilmarnock’s “ conscientious Regard to Truth) that he said to “ me, tho’ she was bred in different Sentiments,
 “ that he thought her now more inclined to “ Whiggish than Jacobite Principles. And the “ Reverend and Honourable Mr. Home, and Mr.
 “ Ross his Lordship’s Solicitor, desired me to “ inform the World of another Thing, which “ he had expressly mentioned to them, viz. that “ instead of exciting him to, she had dissuaded “ him from entering into the late wicked and “ horrid Rebellion.

“ As the Public will, in all Probability, be “ curious to know what were Lord Kilmarnock’s “ Sentiments concerning Death, and the particular “ Kind of Death, which he expected, in Pursuance
 “ of his Sentence, would be inflicted on him; I “ shall relate the Substances of the Discourses, that “ passed between us, upon these great, and, to “ the Generality of the World, most terrifying “ Subjects.

“ On Monday August 11th, General Williamson
 “ desired me, in the gentlest Terms I could “ use, to let him know that he had received the “ Order for his and Lord Balmerino’s Execution.
 “ I at first declined this ungrateful Office, and “ told him, that I was so shocked at it, that I “ could not think of delivering the Message myself,
 “ but would endeavour to prepare the unfortunate
 “ Lord, by divesting him as far as I could of all “ Hope of Life, for his informing him of it when “ he came to discharge me from my Attendance.
 “ And indeed to suppress all Glimmerings of “ such Hope was the main Drift and Bent of “ my Discourse; and I intended to go no further:
 “ but finding him in a resigned and calm Temper,
 “ I told him, as the General was coming up,
 “ That he would see the vast Importance, nay
 “ the absolute Necessity, of attending seriously
 “ to what I had been saying about his diligent
 “ and constant Preparation for Death, by what,
 “ as I apprehended, he would soon hear. He “ immediately asked me, Whether the Warrant
 “ for his Execution was come down? I told him
 “ it was, and that the Day fixed was the Monday
 “ following. And as, upon this, the General
 “ immediately entered the Room, I acquainted
 “ him, that Lord Kilmarnock knew already what “ he intended to inform him of; that he was “ therefore at present under no Necessity of “ saying any Thing further about it; because
 “ the once relating such a melancholy Circum-
 “ stance was fully sufficient.

“ Lord Kilmarnock received this News with
 “ the outward Behaviour of a Man, that knew
 “ and felt the Importance of the Scene of Death,
 “ but without any Marks of Disorder, without “ any unbecoming Anxiousness or Terror. And “ to establish and support him in his present
 “ Quietude of Mind, I told him; That all “ Mankind were really under Sentence of Death,
 “ tho’ they knew not the Manner or precise Time,

“ when it would be executed ; it might be to any “ one, as soon or sooner than his own ; that they “ not expecting it, nor having such timely and “ certain Notice of it, might die wholly un-
 “ guarded and unprepared ; while he had Warning,
 “ and the most awakening Motives to fit himself,
 “ in the best Manner possible, for this grand
 “ and decisive Event. He said, That he had “ never been a Libertine in Principle, during all
 “ the Time that he was most inconsiderate and “ licentious in his Conduct ; that he had always “ firmly believed the great Truths of God’s Being,
 “ and Providence, and a future State of Rewards
 “ and Punishments for Virtue and Vice ; and “ that he had not been involved in the fashion“ able Scepticism of the Times with respect to “ Christianity ; that he was therefore naturally “ concerned, and chiefly concerned, about the “ Consequences of Death, in Comparison of “ which he thought the Thing itself a Trifle ;
 “ that as to the particular Manner of his Death,
 “ he thought he had no great Reason to be “ terrified, for that the Stroke appeared to be “ scarce so much as the Pain of drawing a Tooth,
 “ or the first Shock of the cold Bath upon a “ weak and fearful Temper. And when General “ Williamson, upon the Saturday preceding his “ Execution, gave him a minute Detail of all the “ Circumstances of Solemnity and outward Ter“ ror that would accompany it, he heard it with “ as much Shew of Composure, as a Man of a “ tender compassionate Spirit would read the “ Account of it, in an Instance where he was “ not personally concerned. He was told, That “ on Monday, about Ten in the Morning, the “ Sheriffs would come to demand the Prisoners,
 “ who would be delivered them at the Gate of
 “ the Tower ; that from thence, if their Lord“ ships thought proper, they should walk on “ Foot to the House appointed on Tower-Hill
 “ for their Reception, where the Rooms would “ be hung with black, to make the more decent
 “ and solemn Appearance, and that the Scaffold
 “ also would be covered with black Cloth ; that “ his Lordship might repose and prepare himself,
 “ in the Room fitted up for him, as long as he “ thought it convenient, remembering only, that “ the Warrant for the Execution was limited to,
 “ and consequently expired at One o’Clock ; that “ because of a Complaint made by the Lord
 “ Kenmure, that the Block was too low, it was “ ordered to be raised to the Heighth of two “ Foot ; that it might be the more firmly fixed,
 “ Props would be placed directly under it, that
 “ the Certainty or Decency of the Execution “ might not be obstructed by any Concussion, or “ sudden Jerk of the Body. All this Lord
 “ Kilmarnock, without the least visible Emotion, “ expressed his Satisfaction in : But when the “ General told him, that two mourning Hearses “ would be provided, and placed close by the “ Scaffold, that when the Head was struck off,
 “ the Coffins might soon be taken out to receive
 “ the Bodies ; he said, that he thought it would “ be better for the Coffin to be upon the Scaffold,
 “ for by that Means the Bodies would be still “ sooner removed out of Sight. And being “ further informed, that an Executioner was “ provided that would perform his Work dexte-
 “ rously, and that he was a very good Sort of Man ;
 “ my Lord answered, General, this is one of the “ worst Circumstances that you could have mentioned ;

 “ I can’t thoroughly like, for such Business, your good
 “ Sort of Men : For one of that Character, I appre- “ hend, must be a tender-hearted and compassionate “ Man, and a rougher and less sensible Temper might “ perhaps be fitter to be employed. After this, Lord “ Kilmarnock desired, That four Persons might be “ appointed to receive the Head, when it was “ severed from the Body, in a red Cloth, that “ it might not, as he had been informed was the “ Case in some former Executions, roll about the “ Scaffold, and be thereby mangled and dis-
 “ figured : For that though this was, in com“ parison, but a small Circumstance, he was not “ willing that his Body should appear with any “ unnecessary Indecency, after the just Sentence
 “ of the Law was satisfied. I could not perceive,
 “ but that he talked of all these Particulars with “ Ease and Freedom, though the Relation of “ them, I remember, made me tremble ; chiefly “ because I feared that they would produce in him
 “ some Perturbation and Distress of Mind. It is “ proper for me to add, that when he was told
 “ his Head would be held up to the Multitude,
 “ and public Proclamation made that this was the “ Head of a Traitor ; he replied, that this he knew
 “ to be usual on all such Occasions, and spake
 “ of it as a Thing that was of no Significancy
 “ in the Affair at all, and did not in the least “ affect him : And I never heard, either before “ or after he was delivered into the Custody of “ the Sheriffs, that he intimated the least Concern
 “ to have this Part of the dismal Ceremony
 “ dispensed with. All Lord Kilmarnock’s Friends,
 “ who attended him in his last Moments, are “ ready to concur with me in making the same “ Declaration, that we never expected it would “ have been, and wondered it was, omitted. —
 “ After the Conversation above-mentioned be“ tween Lord Kilmarnock and General Williamson,
 “ I thought it proper to advise him, to think “ frequently on the outward Apparatus and For- “ malities that would attend his Death ; that “ these Circumstances, striking to Sense, might “ impress his Mind with Horror, and disarm “ him of Part of his Resolution, if he was not by “ Reflection thoroughly prepared for the Scene ;
 “ but that if they were habituated to the Mind,
 “ they would in a great Measure lose their Influe“ ence, and be considered as no more than the “ Appendages of a Subject vastly more great, and “ worthy his Contemplation. And he declared,
 “ on the Morning of his Execution, That he “ had taken this Method with himself, and “ hoped that these Things would discompose him
 “ but little, nor create any Weakness or Indecency
 “ in his Behaviour. He allowed, with me, That “ they were nothing so terrible in themselves, as “ the dying after a dispiriting and lingering
 “ Distemper, in a silent, melancholy, darkened
 “ Room, with languid and exhausted Spirits,
 “ and his Friends standing round him, with “ lively Marks of Sorrow and Anguish in their “ Countenances, expecting and deploring his “ Fate.

“ I now come to the Conclusion of this dismal
 “ Scene, his Behaviour on the Day of his Execu“ tion. I attended him in the Morning about “ Eight o’Clock, and found him in a most calm
 “ and happy Temper, without any Disturbance
 “ or Confusion in his Mind, and with apparent

“ Marks of Ease and Serenity in his Aspect.
 “ And that the World may the better judge of
 “ the Propriety of his Behaviour from that Time
 “ to the Time of his Death, I shall first declare,
 “ what his professed Sentiments were concerning “ himself, and the Manner in which he chose to “ die; and then briefly point out what, in my “ Opinion, was the utmost Decency of Conduct
 “ in one in his Circumstances, under the Im“ pression of such Sentiments and Principles. I
 “ had observed to him, that to affect to brave
 “ Death, when he justly suffered for his Crimes,
 “ could have no Shew of a true Decorum in it;
 “ and that to manifest no Concern at all, where
 “ the Consequencē was so awful, and the Stake
 “ infinite, was, in some Degree, unbecoming
 “ even in the best of Men; that not to fear at “ all, where there was great Reason to fear, was “ altogether as absurd, as to be extremely deject-
 “ ed and pusillanimous where there was Ground
 “ of Hope; and that true Penitence was always “ humble and cautious, and not bold and arro“ gant. He assented to all this, and told me
 “ further, That for a Man who had led a dissolute “ Life, and yet believed the Consequences of “ Death, to put on such an Air of Daringness
 “ and absolute Intrepidity, must argue him either
 “ to be very stupid or very impious. He also “ told me, That, though he intirely acquiesced
 “ in the Justice of his Sentence, and thought it
 “ his Duty wholly to resign himself to the wise
 “ and equal Disposals of Providence, he had still “ this Clog upon his Mind, that he could not “ be sure his Repentance was sincere, because it
 “ had never been tried. I answered him, That,
 “ if he aimed at Certainty in this grand Point,
 “ he might unnecessarily perplex and distress
 “ his Mind; because, for the very Reason which “ he had assigned, i. e. for Want of proper Op“ portunities to try and prove the Truth of their “ Repentance, such a Certainty was not attainable
 “ by any Persons in his Condition: I advised him “ therefore to search seriously and strictly into “ himself, not suffering himself to be amused and “ imposed upon in an Affair of such infinite “ Importance; and if he found, after making
 “ this Inquiry, that he had more Ground to hope
 “ that his Repentance was sincere, than he had “ to fear that it was insincere, the Consequence “ would be, that he must, upon the whole, have “ more Reason to hope than fear: And this, in “ my Opinion, was the highest Pitch, to which I “ could attempt to raise him. Let us see now,
 “ what Kind of Behaviour was most just and “ decent in a Person, who, upon this Foundation, “ professed himself to have a Preponderance of “ Hope, but mixed with Diffidence and Fear.
 “ It must surely be resigned, but awful; free
 “ from an Extreme of Dejectedness, but not eager
 “ and rapid to meet Death. Such a considerate “ calm Humility, and Tenderness of Spirit,
 “ would be the only fit Behaviour, after having “ made the Professions above-mentioned, in one
 “ that was but personating a feigned Character:
 “ The contrary would be condemned in a mere “ fictitious Representation, and therefore cannot “ be approved in the real Scene, of Death.

“ And this, which I have shewn was the only “ decent, was, in Fact, the true Department of “ Lord Kilmarnock. He continued all the Mor“ ning of his Execution in the same uniform

“ Temper, unruffled, and without any sudden “ Vicissitudes and Starts of Passion. This re“ markably appeared, when soon after I had, at “ his own Desire, made a short Prayer with him, “ General Williamson came to inform him, that “ the Sheriffs waited for the Prisoners: For, at “ receiving this awful Summons to go to Death,
 “ he was not in the least startled, but said,
 “ (calmly and gracefully) General, I am ready;
 “ I'll follow you. At the Foot of the first Stairs
 “ he met and embraced Lord Balmerino, who “ greatly said to him, My Lord, I am heartily
 “ sorry to have your Company in this Expedition *.
 “ From thence he walked, with the usual For“ malities, to the Tower-Gate, and, after being “ delivered into the Custody of the Sheriffs, to “ the House provided on Tower-Hill, with a “ Serenity, Mildness, and Dignity, that greatly “ surprised and affected the Spectators. And as “ one of the Things that passed there, most “ worthy the public Notice, was the short “ Interview he had with Lord Balmerino; I shall “ relate the whole Substance of their Conver“ sation, to the best of my Remembrance,
 “ without Addition or Diminution; and, as far
 “ as I can possibly recollect, in the very Words “ themselves.

“ B. My Lord, I beg Leave to ask your “ Lordship one Question.

“ K. To any Question, my Lord, that you “ shall now think it proper to ask, I believe “ I shall see no Reason to decline giving an “ Answer.

“ B. Why then, my Lord, did you ever
 “ see or know of any Order, signed by the Prince,
 “ [meaning the Pretender's Son] to give no Quarter
 “ at the Battle of Culloden?

“ K. No, my Lord.

“ B. Nor I neither: And therefore it seems “ to be an Invention to justify their own Murder,
 “ or murderous Scheme, (one of the two Ex“ pressions, I am certain, was made use of.)

“ K. No, my Lord, I do not think that this “ Inference can be drawn from it; because,
 “ while I was a Prisoner at Inverness, I was “ informed by several Officers, that there was “ such an Order, signed George Murray; and that “ it was in the Duke's Custody.

“ Lord George Murray! replied Lord Balme- “ rino, why then, they should not charge it upon
 “ the Prince.— After this he took his Leave,
 “ embracing Lord Kilmarnock with the same Kind
 “ of noble and generous Compliment as he had “ used before, but in Words somewhat different:
 “ My dear Lord Kilmarnock, I am only sorry,
 “ that I cannot pay all this Reckoning alone; once
 “ more, farewell for ever. I have consulted Mr.
 “ Home, Mr. Ross, and Mr. Jameson, who were
 “ all present at this Conference; and are ready
 “ to attest, if required, that this is a true Account
 “ of it.

“ I then desired Lord Kilmarnock, that he would “ allow me to declare in his Name to the Sheriffs,
 “ and all Persons there present, the Substance of “ the Professions and Acknowledgments which he “ had so often repeated to me; and which were “ more largely contained in a Paper, that he had “ left to be published after his Death: And my “ Declaration was in Words to this Effect:
 “ Lord Kilmarnock acknowledges King George to “ be the only rightful and lawful King of these

* “ These particular Words I myself did not hear, but was informed of them by Mr. Jameson.”

“ Realms; that he engaged in the late wicked
 “ and unnatural Rebellion against his Conscience;
 “ he confesses the great Guilt of it with deep “ Shame and Contrition, and asks Pardon, for “ his Offence, of God, his King, and Country;
 “ and declares it to be his sincere Resolution to “ pray for the Prosperity of King George, the “ Establishment of his Royal House, and the “ Peace and Welfare of his Country, with his “ dying Breath. To this the unfortunate Lord
 “ gave his Assent, and signified to the Sheriffs,
 “ that the only genuine Paper, that he had left “ behind him, was lodged with me, and com“ mitted to my Care. The Time being now “ pretty far advanced (as I hinted to his Lordship
 “ by the Sheriffs Desire) I told him, that after “ having taken a few Minutes to compose him“ self, I thought it would be proper to allow me
 “ to pray with him, and then proceed to the “ Scaffold. After this I addressed myself to the “ Spectators of this mournful Scene, to join
 “ with me fervently in this last solemn Office,
 “ and in recommending the Soul of an unhappy “ Person, who gave so many lively Marks of his “ sincere Penitence for the Crime of his Rebellion,
 “ to the Mercy of God; with which Request
 “ they all readily complied. I need add nothing
 “ more, but that as Lord Kilmarnock had often “ protested, that he would, in his last Moments, “ pray for his King and Country, towards the “ Conclusion of my Prayer for him, I offered
 “ up the following Petitions to that Purpose;
 “ which he had before, in the Tower, expressed
 “ his intire Satisfaction in. — *And we now, from “ our Hearts, and at the particular Desire of thy “ Servant, upon whose Account especially we presume
 “ at this Time to address thy Throne, and offer up
 “ our united fervent Prayers, that thou wouldst
 “ preserve, bless, and honour our only rightful Sove“ reign Lord King George; that thou wouldst “ crown him with Glory and Renown; that in his “ Reign there may be Abundance of Peace; that his “ Royal Progeny may long sit, with Lustre and “ Dignity, upon the Throne of these Kingdoms, un“ disturbed by Rebellions, and the Tumults of seditious
 “ and violent Men; and that our holy Religion, and “ inestimable British Liberties, may be transmitted “ down secure and sacred to our Posterity, even to
 “ the latest Generations.* After Prayer was ended, “ Lord Kilmarnock took his last Farewel of the “ Gentlemen who attended him, in a very affec“ tionate Manner; and went out of the Room, “ preceded by the Sheriffs, and accompanied by “ his Friends. And I am informed of the “ following Particular by Mr. Home, that as he “ was stepping into the Scaffold, notwithstanding
 “ the great Pains he had taken to familiarise the “ outward Apparatus of Death to his Mind, “ Nature still recurred upon him: So that being “ struck with such a Variety of dreadful Objects
 “ at once, the Multitude, the Block, his Coffin,
 “ the Executioner, the Instrument of Death, he “ turned about, and said, Home, this is terrible.
 “ This Expression, so suitable to the awful Oc“ casion, must, to all who know the human “ Heart, appear to be nothing else than the “ Language of Nature, and was far from being a “ Mark of unmanly Fear; being pronounced with “ a steady Countenance, and Firmness of Voice,
 “ Indications of a Mind unbroken and not dis-
 “ concerted. His whole Behaviour was so hum“ ble and resigned, that not only his Friends,

“ but every Spectator was deeply moved; even
 “ the Executioner burst into Tears, and was “ obliged to use artificial Spirits to support and “ strengthen him. After having talked with his “ Lordship a considerable Time, to support him
 “ in his Penitence and Resignation, I embraced,
 “ and left him in the same calm Disposition,
 “ having quitted the Scaffold some Minutes
 “ before his Execution. And as to his Behaviour
 “ afterwards, I refer to the following Account,
 “ in which, I think, I may thoroughly confide,
 “ which was communicated to me by Mr. Jame“ son, who attended him to the last.

“ Spectators at a Distance, not knowing the “ true Cause why the Stroke was retarded for “ some Minutes longer than they expected,
 “ ascribed it to Pusillanimity: But, in Reality,
 “ that Delay was owing to a few trivial Circum“ stances which might have been omitted, had
 “ it not been necessary to mention them; in order
 “ to vindicate the Behaviour of that Noble
 “ Penitent, which was uniformly conducted by
 “ the Rules of just Decorum, from all Imputa-
 “ tion of unmanly Fear in the critical Moment.
 “ — My Lord’s Hair having been dressed in a “ Bag, it took some Time to undo it, and put it “ up in his Cap. The tucking his Shirt under the “ Waistcoat, that it might not obstruct the Blow,
 “ was the Occasion of some further small Delay.
 “ But as soon as these Preliminaries were adjust-
 “ ed, his Lordship gave the Executioner Notice
 “ what should be the Signal, took out a Paper “ containing the Heads of his Devotion, went “ forward to his last Stage, and decently kneeled “ down at the Block. Whether it was to support “ himself, or as a more convenient Posture for “ Devotion, he happened to lay his Hands with “ his Head upon the Block; which the Execu“ tioner observing, prayed his Lordship to let “ his Hands fall down, lest they should be man“ gled, or break the Blow. Then he was told,
 “ that the Neck of his Waistcoat was in the “ Way; upon which he rose up, and with the “ Help of one of his Friends, (Mr. Walkinshaw
 “ of Scotston) had it taken off. This done, and
 “ the Neck made bare to the Shoulder, he again “ kneeled down as before. And what sufficiently “ shews that he enjoyed full Presence of Mind
 “ to the last, Mr. Home’s Servant, who held the “ Cloth to receive the Head, heard him direct
 “ the Executioner, that in two Minutes he would “ give the Signal. That dreadful Interval, to “ his Friends, who were then upon the Rack,
 “ appeared much longer, but those who measured “ found it just about two Minutes. This Time
 “ he spent in most fervent Devotion, as appeared
 “ by the Motion of his Hands, and now and “ then of his Head; having then fixed his Neck
 “ on the Block, he gave the Signal, his Body “ remained without the least Motion, except “ what was given it by the Stroke of Death,
 “ which he received full, and was thereby hap-
 “ pily eased at once of all his Pain.

“ Thus deservedly fell, though humble and “ relenting, the late Lord Kilmarnock, a Sacrifice
 “ to the Justice of his Country. —

JAMES FOSTER.

“ P. S. I think myself obliged, in Justice to “ General Williamson, and at his Desire, to “ declare, that Lord Kilmarnock often testified
 “ to me, that he had behaved towards him in a “ very “ very civil and obliging Manner; that upon

 “ the General’s having desired, two Days before “ his Death, that when he took his Leave of “ him on Monday, he would do it in such a “ Manner, as would be an Evidence to all “ present, that he was satisfied with his Be“ haviour; his Lordship answered, That I will,
 “ General, you may depend upon it, and in such a “ Way too, as is becoming a Gentleman, and a Man
 “ of Honour; and that Mr. Williamson had, from “ the first, spoke of Lord Kilmarnock to me with “ great Esteem and Humanity.”

To the KING’s Most Sacred Majesty.

The humble Petition of William late Earl of Kilmarnock,

Sheweth,

“ THE Petitioner having met with the “ Condemnation justly due to his Crime,
 “ presumes, throwing himself at your Majesty’s “ Feet, to implore your Majesty’s Royal Cle“ mency, and, though very sensible that nothing “ can excuse or mitigate his Crime, hopes he “ may be considered, in your Majesty’s Eye, as “ an Object of Compassion and Pity.

“ His Family’s constant Attachment to the “ Revolution Interest and that of your illustrious “ House, his Father’s Zeal and Activity in “ Support of both, when attacked by your late
 “ Royal Father’s Enemies in 1715, his own
 “ appearing in Arms (though then but young) “ under his Father, the whole Tenor of his “ Conduct since that Time, and the Sentiments
 “ of Duty and Loyalty in which he has educated
 “ his eldest Son, who now has the Honour of “ bearing your Majesty’s Commission, though
 “ no Diminution of his Guilt, may yet let in a “ Presumption, that he has offended more from “ Rashness and the Designs of wicked and ill-“ disposed Persons, than from any Principle of “ Disaffection to your Majesty.

“ The Petitioner humbly begs Leave to “ acquaint your Majesty, that he influenced “ neither Tenant nor Follower of his to assist
 “ or abet the Rebellion; but, on the contrary,
 “ that between the Time of the Battle of Preston,
 “ and his unhappy Junction with the Rebels,
 “ he went to the Town of Kilmarnock, influenced “ its Inhabitants, as far as he could, and by “ their Means their neighbouring Boroughs, to “ rise in Arms for your Majesty’s Service; which “ had so good an Effect, that two hundred Men
 “ of Kilmarnock appeared very soon in Arms,
 “ and remained so all the Winter at Glasgow, or “ other Places as they were ordered. And even “ in the Midst of his greatest Delusion, when
 “ in Arms against your Sacred Majesty and your “ Authority, it was the Petitioner’s constant “ Care (as far as in his Power) to protect your “ faithful Subjects from Injury in their Persons “ or Estates. He extended his Care to such of “ your Majesty’s Troops as had the Misfortune
 “ of falling into the Hands of the Rebels, both “ Officers and private Men finding better Usage,
 “ and their Condition being rendered more “ supportable through his Means, than it would “ otherwise have been; as many of them can,
 “ and the Petitioner believes will, testify when “ called upon.

“ The Petitioner was not taken, but surren“ dered himself at the Battle of Culloden, having “ left those he was joined with, when they were “ got so far, that most (if not all) of them “ escaped, except himself, who from thence “ turned down to the Ground where the “ Dragoons were drawn up at a considerable “ Distance, and this at a Time when he might “ easily have made his Escape, being near no “ body, nor any in Pursuit of him. He chose “ Submission as far preferable to Obstinacy in “ Rebellion. His first Principles revived in his “ Breast. He determined rather to run the “ Risque of an ignominious Death, as the “ Atonement of his Treason, than to recur to,

 “ and become dependent upon a foreign Power,
 “ that Power especially being the natural Enemy
 “ of his Country, and your Majesty the Father
 “ of it.

“ Under these Circumstances, SIR, it is,
 “ that the unhappy Petitioner (more so from “ Remorse of having violated his Allegiance
 “ to your Majesty, than from the Sentence he “ lies under) dares to approach your Throne,
 “ and implore your Royal Mercy, and which he “ hopes for, as he cannot reproach himself with “ any Guilt precedent to this fatal Breach of his “ Duty.”

Petitions to the like Effect were presented to the Prince of Wales and the Duke of Cumberland.

Extract of the late Earl of Kilmarnock’s Letter to his Son Lord Boyd.

Dated, Tower 17th Aug. 1746.

“ Dear BOYD,

“ ——— I must take this Way to bid you
 “ farewell, and I pray God may for ever bless
 “ you and guide you in this World, and bring “ you to a happy Immortality in the World to “ come. I must likewise give you my last “ Advice. Seek God in your Youth, and when “ you are old he will not depart from you.
 “ Be at Pains to acquire good Habits now, that “ they may grow up and become strong in you.
 “ Love Mankind, and do Justice to all Men.
 “ Do Good to as many as you can, and neither “ shut your Ears nor your Purse to those in “ Distress whom it is in your Power to relieve.
 “ Believe me, you will find more Joy in one
 “ beneficent Action, and in your cool Mornings
 “ you will be more happy with the Reflection
 “ of having made any one Person so, who with-
 “ out your Assistance would have been miserable,
 “ than in the Enjoyments of all the Pleasures of “ Sense (which pall in the using), and of all the “ Poms and gaudy Show of the World. Live
 “ within your Circumstances, by which Means
 “ you will have it in your Power to do Good to “ others. Above all Things, continue in your “ Loyalty to his present Majesty, and the Suc“ cession to the Crown as by Law established.
 “ Look on that as the Basis of the civil and “ religious Liberty and Property of every Indi“ vidual in the Nation. Prefer the public “ Interest to your own, wherever they interfere.
 “ Love your Family and your Children, when “ you have any; but never let your Regard for “ them drive you on the Rock I split upon,
 “ when on that Account I departed from my “ Principles, and brought the Guilt of Rebellion
 “ and civil and particular Desolation on my “ Head, for which I am now under the Sentence

“ justly due to my Crime. Use all your Interest
 “ to get your Brother pardoned and brought “ Home as soon as possible, that his Circum“ stances, and bad Influence of those he is “ among, may not induce him to accept of “ foreign Service, and lose him both to his “ Country and his Family. If Money can be “ found to support him, I wish you would ad“ vise him to go to Geneva, where his Principles
 “ of Religion and Liberty will be confirmed,
 “ and where he may stay till you see if a Pardon
 “ can be procured him. As soon as Commodore
 “ Barnet comes Home, inquire for your Brother
 “ Billie, and take care of him on my Account.
 “ I must again recommend your unhappy Mother
 “ to you. Comfort her, and take all the Care
 “ you can of your Brothers: And may God of “ his infinite Mercy preserve, guide, and conduct
 “ you and them through all the Vicissitudes of “ this Life, and after it bring you to the Habi“ tations of the Just, and make you happy in
 “ the Enjoyment of himself to all Eternity.”

Paper delivered by the late Earl of Kilmarnock to Mr. Foster, Sunday 17th August, 1746.

“ AS it would be a vain Attempt in me to “ speak distinctly to that great Concourse
 “ of People, who will probably be present at “ my Execution, I chuse to leave this behind
 “ me, as my last solemn Declaration, appealing,
 “ for my Integrity, to God, who knows my “ Heart.

“ I bless God, I have little Fear of temporal “ Death, though attended with many outward “ Circumstances of Terror: The greatest Sting
 “ I feel in Death is, that I have deserved it.

“ Lord Balmerino, my Fellow-Sufferer, to do “ him Justice, dies in a professed Adherence to “ the mistaken Principles he had imbibed from “ his Cradle. But I engaged in the Rebellion
 “ in Opposition to my own Principles, and to “ those of my Family; in Contradiction to the “ whole Tenor of my Conduct, till within these “ few Months that I was wickedly induced to “ renounce my Allegiance, which ever before I “ had preserved and held inviolable. I am in “ little Pain for the Reflections which the incon“ siderate or prejudiced Part of my Countrymen
 “ (if there are any such, whom my suffering the “ just Sentence of the Law has not mollified)
 “ may cast upon me for this Confession. The “ wiser or more ingenuous will, I hope, approve

“ my Conduct, and allow with me, That, next
 “ to doing right, is, to have the Courage and “ Integrity to own, that I have done wrong.

“ Groundless Accusations of Cruelty have “ been raised and propagated concerning me,
 “ and Charges spread among the People, of
 “ my having solicited for, nay actually signed
 “ Orders of general savage Destruction, seldom “ issued among the most barbarous Nations, and “ which my Soul abhors. And, that the general “ Temper of my Mind was ever averse from;
 “ and shocked at gross Instances of Inhumanity;
 “ I appeal to all my Friends and Acquaintance
 “ who have known me most intimately, and “ even to those Prisoners of the King's Troops
 “ to whom I had Access, and whom I ever had
 “ it in my Power to relieve; I appeal in “ particular, for my Justification as to this justly “ detested and horrid Crime of Cruelty, to “ Captain Master of Rifs, Captain Lieutenant “ Rexon, and Lieutenant George Cuming of “ Alter.

“ These Gentlemen will, I am persuaded, as “ far as relates to themselves, and as far as has “ fallen within their Knowledge or credible
 “ Information, do me Justice; and then surely,
 “ my Countrymen will not load a Person,
 “ already too guilty and unfortunate, with un-
 “ deserved Infamy, which may not only fix “ itself on his own Character, but reflect Dis-
 “ honour on his Family.

“ I have no more to say, but that I am per“ suaded, if Reasons of State, and the Demands
 “ of public Justice, had permitted his Majesty to “ follow the Dictates of his own Royal Heart,
 “ my Sentence might have been mitigated.
 “ Had it pleased God to prolong my Life, the “ Remainder of it should have been faithfully
 “ employed in the Service of my justly offended “ Sovereign, and in constant Endeavours to “ wipe away the very Remembrance of my “ Crime.

“ I now with my dying Breath beseech Al“ mighty God, to bless my only rightful So“ vereign King George, and preserve him from “ the Attempts of public and private Enemies.
 “ May his Majesty, and his illustrious De“ scendants, be so guided by the Divine Pro“ vidence, as ever to govern with that Wisdom
 “ and that Care for the public Good, as will “ preserve to them the Love of their Subjects,
 “ and secure their Right to reign over a free
 “ and happy People to the latest Posterity.”

N U M B E R XX.

An Account of the Behaviour of William late Earl of Kilmarnock, and Arthur late Lord Balmerino, from the Time of their being delivered into the Custody of the Sheriffs of London, to the Time of their Execution. With every remarkable Incident that happened during that Time, and particularly the Conference between those two Lords. As taken down by a Gentleman then present. By Authority of the Sheriffs.*

Monday, August 18, 1746.

THE Sheriffs of London and Middlesex having received the usual Writs for the Execution of the Lords Kilmarnock and Balmerino this Day, between the Hours of Nine and One; they, accompanied with the two Under-Sheriffs, and attended by the other proper Officers, at Ten o'Clock went in Procession to the outward Gate of the Tower; and having there received of the Deputy-Lieutenant of the Tower the Bodies of those Lords, they then proceeded with them on Foot to the late Transport-Office near the Scaffold, Mr. Foster and the Rev. Mr. Hume accompanying my Lord Kilmarnock, and the Chaplain of the Tower, and another Minister accompanying my Lord Balmerino: Where, upon their Arrival, the two Lords were conducted into separate Apartments, and their Friends admitted to see them.

My Lord Kilmarnock spent his Retirement here in a Manner suitable to his unhappy Circumstances, Mr. Foster frequently comforting his Lordship with seasonable Exhortations; his Lordship seemed truly sensible of his Guilt, shewed the utmost Signs of a sincere Repentance, and all that were present admired the Composure of his Lordship's Mind. His Lordship, in particular, recommended it to the Sheriffs Observation, that he declared himself a Protestant, and thoroughly satisfied with the Legality of his Majesty King GEORGE's Title to the Throne of these Realms; that he himself was educated in these Principles, and had constantly adhered to them, till after the breaking out of the Rebellion, which he heartily repented he ever engaged in; and that he prayed for the Good of his Country, and for the Continuance of the Crown in his Majesty and his Descendants till the latest Posterity.

His Lordship then spent a few Moments in conversing with his Friends, and having refreshed himself with a Bit of Bread and a Glass of Wine, he declared to the Sheriffs, that he had within this Week taken the Sacrament twice in Evidence of the Truth of his Repentance.

His Lordship moreover recommended it to the Sheriffs Notice, that what Papers he intended should be communicated to the Public, he had left in the Hands of Mr. Foster only.

About Eleven o'Clock my Lord received a Message from my Lord Balmerino, desiring an Interview with his Lordship; which being consented to, my Lord Balmerino was introduced into my Lord Kilmarnock's Apartments; where my Lord Balmerino, after addressing himself to his Lordship, and thanking him for the Favour of this Conference, asked his Lordship, if he knew of any Order being made before the Battle of Culloden, for giving no Quarter to the Duke's Army; at the same Time declaring, that he himself knew nothing of any such Order. To which my Lord Kilmarnock replied, that he knew nothing of any such Order, but that since the Battle of Culloden he had been informed that there was some Order to that Effect, signed George Murray, and that it fell into the Hands of the Duke immediately after the Battle. My Lords Kilmarnock and Balmerino having then saluted each other, my Lord Balmerino bid my Lord Kilmarnock an eternal happy Adieu, and with a chearful Countenance added, My dear Lord, I wish I could alone pay the Reckoning, and suffer for us both; to which my Lord Kilmarnock replied, It was exceedingly kind and generous in his Lordship.

About Half an Hour after Eleven, my Lord Kilmarnock with the whole Company kneeled down to Prayers, Mr. Foster performing the Office;

* To the PUBLIC. As I officiated for one of the Under-Sheriffs the Day of the Execution of the Lords Kilmarnock and Balmerino, I had an Opportunity of minuting down every thing that passed, worthy of Observation, upon that melancholy Occasion. — This I did at that Time for my own Curiosity only, and the following is a faithful Relation as taken from those Minutes; and which, at the Importunities of many Gentlemen, I have consented to the Publication of, in order to silence the many erroneous Accounts that have been published, and to take off several cruel Aspersions that have been thrown out touching the Behaviour of those unhappy Lords. — I have made little or no Observations in the Narration, much less shall I do it here; being satisfied that those whom the one will not, the other cannot convince.

Office; after which my Lord having again sat down a few Moments to refresh himself with a Bit of Bread and a Glas of Wine, he about Twelve o'Clock rose, saluted his Friends, and proceeded to the Scaffold, his Friends still accompanying him there.

As soon as his Lordship ascended the Scaffold, it was easily to be observed what Impression his graceful Deportment made upon the Minds of the Spectators, to whom his Lordship made no Speech, but much better employed his Time with Mr. Foster in his Devotions; upon the Conclusion of which Mr. Foster told his Lordship, He wished he had a Voice loud enough to inform this large Assembly with what Sentiments his Lordship left the World.

My Lord then, with a Countenance perfectly serene and composed, embraced his Friends, and took his final Leave of them.

After that, the Executioner was introduced to his Lordship for his Forgiveness for the painful Office allotted to him; which his Lordship readily granted, and gave him a Purse of Gold, desired him to have Courage, and acquainted him that the Signal for the Stroke should be the dropping of a Handkerchief.

His Lordship then prepared himself for the Block, and having with the Assistance of his Servant taken off his Coat, and the Bag from his Hair, his Lordship then put his Cap on, and under it tucked up his Hair; but his Lordship afterwards perceiving the Cap was too large to bind up his Hair, and fearing lest by that Means the Blow might be intercepted, he requested a Gentleman, who was near him, to pin it closer; during which, that Gentleman having wished his Lordship the Continuance of his Resolution till he should meet with eternal Happiness, his Lordship thanked him, and with great Tranquillity added, that he found himself perfectly easy and resigned.

His Lordship then kneeled down at the Block, and having with great Fervency prayed for about six Minutes, submitted himself, and dropping the Signal, the Executioner at one Blow severed his Head from his Body; the Head was received into a Piece of scarlet Baize, and with the Body deposited in a Coffin, and delivered to his Lordship's Friends; on which Coffin was the following Inscription, Willielmus Dominus de Kilmarnock decollatus 18 die Augusti, 1746. Ætatis suæ 42.

After the Execution was over, it was remarked by several Persons, that the Head was not held up and exposed by the Executioner; it was my Lord's particular Request it might not be so, and the Law does not require it. — The only Reason that can be assigned for exposing the Head (as has been frequently but not always the Case) is to satisfy the People that the Execution has been done; but in order to give them a greater Satisfaction, the Sheriffs directed that every body upon the Scaffold should kneel down, that they might see the Execution itself performed, — a Ceremony never practised before.

During this Time the Scaffold was put in Order for the Execution of the Lord Balmerino. The Under-Sheriff that attended during the first Execution went to my Lord Balmerino's Apartments, as a Notice to his Lordship that his Time was come; upon whose Entrance his Lordship said, I suppose my Lord Kilmarnock is no more; and having asked how the Executioner had performed his Duty, his Lordship upon receiving the Account said, Then it was well done; and now, Gentlemen, (said his Lordship) I will detain you no longer, for I desire not to protract my Life: His Lordship then saluted the Company in a Manner so chearful, as drew Tears from every Eye but his own, and hastened to the Scaffold.

But before we view his Lordship upon the Scaffold, it is but just to the Memory of that great, but unhappy Man, to acquaint the Public what was his Deportment in his Retirement here: It was graceful without Affectation, chearful but not presumptuous; he conversed freely with his Friends, twice refreshed himself with a Bit of Bread and a Glas of Wine, and desired the Company to drink to him ain degrae ta haiwen; but, above all, he called frequently upon God, and seemed both willing and prepared to die.

When his Lordship mounted the Scaffold, he did it with so undaunted a Step as surprized every Spectator that was unacquainted with the Greatness of his Soul: His Lordship appeared there in the very same Regimentals he wore at the Battle of Culloden, and so far was he from having the least Concern himself at the Fear of Death, that he frequently reproved his Friends that were about him for shewing any: His Lordship walked round the Scaffold, bowed to the People, read the following Inscription upon his Coffin; Arthurus Dominus de Balmerino decollatus 18 die Augusti, 1746, Ætatis suæ 58; said it was right, and with seeming Pleasure looked at the Block, which he called his Pillow of Rest.

His Lordship then took a Paper out of his Pocket, which he read to the few about him, and delivered to the Sheriff to do with it as he should think proper.

Whatever may be offered in Excuse for his Lordship's making that Speech in his last Moments, nothing but the highest Authority can justify the publishing it.

His Lordship to the last professed his entire Ignorance as to the Order for giving no Quarter to the Duke's Army; and added, that he would not (knowingly) have acted under such Order, because he looked upon it as unmilitary, and beneath the Character of a Soldier.

Nor is it to be here omitted, that though his Lordship, from his unhappy political Principles, disowned any Allegiance to his Majesty; yet he, from his moral ones, acknowledged him to be a Prince of the greatest Magnanimity and Mercy.

His Lordship then called for the Executioner, who being introduced to him, was about to ask his Lordship's Forgiveness; but my Lord stopped him, and said, Friend, you need not ask me Forgiveness, the Execution of your Duty is commendable. His Lordship then presenting the Executioner with three Guineas, said, Friend, I never had much Money, this is all I have, I wish it was more for your Sake, and am sorry I can add nothing else to it, but my Coat and Waistcoat; which his Lordship instantly took off, and placed on his Coffin for the Executioner.

His Lordship then prepared himself for the Block by putting on a Flannel Waistcoat that had been made for the Occasion, and a Plaid Cap upon his Head; after which his Lordship went to the Block, in order to shew the Executioner the Signal for the Blow, which was the dropping down of his Arms.

His Lordship then returning to his Friends, took his last Farewel of them; and having once more taken a View of the great Number of Spectators, his Lordship said, I am afraid there are some who may think my Behaviour bold; and speaking to a Gentleman near him, added, Remember, Sir, what I tell you, it arises from a Confidence in God, and a clear Conscience.

His Lordship then observing the Executioner with the Axe in his Hand, took it from him, and having felt the Edge, returned it him again, at the same Time showing him where to strike the Blow, and animating him to do it with Resolution, For in that, Friend, (said his Lordship) will consist your Mercy.

His Lordship then, with the same surprizing Countenance, kneeled down at the Block, and having with his Arms extended said this short Prayer, O Lord, reward my Friends, forgive my Enemies,  and receive my Soul, submitted, and gave the Signal to the Executioner; and I wish I could conclude, that his Head had been taken off at one Blow: But the Executioner was so terrified at his Lordship's Intrepidity, and the Suddenness of the Signal, that notwithstanding he struck his Lordship in the Part directed, yet the Force of the Blow was not sufficient to sever the Head from the Body, though (happily) sufficient to deprive him of all Sensation. — After the first Blow, his Lordship's Head fell back upon his Shoulders, but being afterwards severed at two more gentle Blows, was then received into a Piece of red Baize, and with his Body deposited in his Coffin, and delivered to his Friends.

There were several Pamphlets published at this Time, relating to the different Behaviour of these two Lords, and some Advertisements against Mr. Ford's Account; but as there was no Name put to them, they did not gain much Credit. — But one of these Pamphlets, intituled, Seasonable Reflections on the dying Words and Deportment of that great but unhappy Man, Arthur Lord Balmerino, in a Letter to Mr. Ford, concludes thus in an Appendix: "There is a Gentleman of undoubted Veracity, who attended the Execution of Lord Balmerino, positively affirms, and is ready to corroborate his Affirmation by the most solemn Proof, that when his Lordship kneeled down at the Block, and submitted to the Stroke of Justice, he made no Prayer whatever; but this will be better expressed in the Gentleman's own Words in Writing, to the Original whereof (now in the Hands of the Publisher) his Name is subscribed, viz.

"I attended the Execution of the late Lord Balmerino, and was one of those who held the Cloth to receive Lord Balmerino's Head, and am ready to make Oath, if required, that I heard No Prayer made by Lord Balmerino, as is inserted in Mr. Ford's Account; and that if there had been any Prayer, I must have heard it, as well as any other Person present, &c.

"It is to be observed, this Gentleman avers that he himself kneeled down so near the Block, when he held the Cloth; that if any thing had been spoken by his Lordship, it was impossible but he must have heard it; that it was he who, after the second Blow, took the Lord by the Arm, and drew up his Body, to set the Head in a Position for the Executioner's completing his Work. He adds further, (in manifest Contradiction to Mr. Ford) that his Lordship came upon the Scaffold, in a Flannel Waistcoat and Skirt, and did not put either on after he was there; but pulled off the Waistcoat, and had only the Skirt on, when he laid his Head on the Block."

On these Publications, Mr. Ford advertised in the Public Papers, as followeth:

To the P U B L I C.

THE Account I published of the Behaviour of the Rebel Lords at their Execution, was for your Satisfaction only, beyond which I neither had or expected any Advantage; yet from that bare Relation with Truth and Impartiality, several nameless Pamphleteers and Advertisers have, through Faction, or worse Motives, presumed to draw several unwarrantable Inferences as to my political Principles.

The Authors being concealed, are unworthy of other Notice, since nothing is easier to an ingenuous and unprejudiced Mind, than to distinguish between the Subject and the Man: My Lord Kilmarnock was happily educated in RIGHT Principles, which he deviated from and repented; whereas the great, though unhappy, Lord Balmerino, was UNFORTUNATE in HIS; — but as he lived, — he died.

Aldermanbury.

T. F O R D.

Copy of the Paper which was read by Arthur Lord Balmerino, upon the Scaffold at Tower-Hill, and delivered by him to the Sheriffs of London, just before his Execution, on Monday, Aug. 18, 1746.*

I Was brought up in True, Loyal, and Anti-Revolution Principles, and I hope the World is convinced that they stick to me.

I must acknowledge I did a very inconsiderate Thing, for which I am heartily sorry, in accepting of a Company of Foot from the Princess Anne, who I know had no more Right to the Crown than her Predecessor, the Prince of Orange *****

To make Amends for what I had done, I joined the  (Pretender) when he was in Scotland in 1715; and when all was over, I made my Escape, and lived abroad till the Year 1734.

In the Beginning of that Year, I got a Letter from my Father, which very much surprized me. It was to let me know, he had a Promise of a Remission for me: I did not know what to do; I was then (I think) in the Canton of Berne, and had no body to advise with: But next Morning I wrote a Letter to the  (Pretender) who was then at Rome, to acquaint the  (Pretender) that this was done without my Asking or Knowledge, and that I would not accept of it without his Consent.

I had, in Answer to mine, a Letter written with  (the Pretender's) own

* We insert this Speech, without the treasonable Part; as there are some Anecdotes in it, not taken Notice of in Mr. Ford's Account, and which the Public (probably) are Strangers to.

Hand, allowing me to go Home; and he told me his Banker would give me Money for my travelling Charges, when I came to Paris, which accordingly I got.

When  (the Pretender's Son) came to Edinburgh, I joined him, though I might easily have excused myself from taking Arms on Account of my Age; but I never could have had Peace of Conscience if I had stayed at Home, *****

I am at a Loss when I come to speak of the  (Pretender's Son.) I am not a fit Hand to draw his Character, I shall leave that to others. ——— (Here he gives a fulsome Character of the Pretender's Son.)

Pardon me, if I say, wherever I had the Command, I never suffered any Disorders to be committed, as will appear by the Duke of Buccleugh's Servants at East-Park; by the Earl of Findlater's Minister Mr. Lato, and my Lord's Servants at Cullen; by Mr. Rose, Minister at Nairn, (who was pleased to favour me with a Visit when I was Prisoner at Inverness;) by Mr. Stewart, principal Servant to the Lord President, at the House of Culloden, and by several other People. All this gives me great Pleasure now that I am looking upon the Block, on which I am ready to lay down my Head: And though it had not been my own natural Inclination to protect every body, it would have been my Interest to have done it; for  (the Pretender's Son) abhorred all those who were capable of doing Injustice to any *****

I have heard, since I came to this Place, that there has been a most wicked Report, spread and mentioned in several of the News-Papers, that

 (the Pretender's Son;) before the Battle of Culloden, had given out Orders that no Quarter should be given to the Enemy. This is such an unchristian Thing, and so unlike  (the Pretender's Son;) that no body (the Jacobites) that knows him, will believe it. It is very strange, if there had been any such Orders, that neither the Earl of Kilmarnock, who was Colonel of the Regiment of Foot-Guards, nor I, who was Colonel of the second Troop of Life-Guards, should ever have heard any thing of it; especially, since we were both at the Head Quarters the Morning before the Battle. I am convinced, that it is a malicious Report industriously spread to *****

Ever since my Confinement in the Tower, when Major White or Mr. Fowler did me the Honour of a Visit, their Behaviour was always so kind and obliging to me, that I cannot find Words to express it; but I am sorry I cannot say the same Thing of General Williamson: He has treated me barbarously, but not quite so ill as he did the Bishop of Rocheſter; and had it not been for a worthy Clergyman's Advice, I should have prayed for him in the Words of David, Pſalm cix. from the 6th to the 15th Verse.

I forgive him, and all my Enemies.

I hope you will have the Charity to believe I die in Peace with all Men; for Yesterday I received the Holy Eucharist from the Hands of a Clergyman of the Church of England, in whose Communion I die, as in Union with the Episcopal Church of Scotland.

I shall conclude with a short Prayer. ——— (Here a Prayer is mentioned, much the same as in Mr. Ford's Account.)

N U M B E R XXI.

The Case of George Earl of Cromertie, as printed in 1746, and said to be presented to His Majesty.

THE Earl, from his Infancy, was educated and brought up in the Principles of the established Church of Scotland, to which he always adhered till his late Misfortune; infomuch that he has, upon several Occasions, received the Thanks of the General Assembly of that Church, for the substantial Proofs he gave, from Time to Time, of his sincere Attachment to their Interest.

The Earl intermarried in a Family, whose Zeal and Affection to the present Royal Family was warm and remarkable upon all Occasions; and particularly, during the Rebellion in the Year 1715, many of them used their utmost Efforts in Support of this happy Constitution; none of them were neutral, or joined in that Rebellion; and they acted the same Part in the present Rebellion, to the utmost of their Power.

The Earl has Issue of his Marriage nine Children, and his Wife is now with Child; and these have been brought up strictly in the same Principles: And as to his eldest Son, he imbibed those Principles from his Parents, and from three successive Preceptors, who are all now Ministers of the Church of Scotland, under the Eye of Mr. Dundas his Uncle, who had the Honour to serve his late Majesty as his Advocate for Scotland, and was appointed by his present Majesty one of the Judges of the supreme Court there.

Soon after the breaking out of this Rebellion, when his Majesty's Troops, under the Command of Sir John Cope, arrived at Inverness, in the End of August last, the Earl immediately waited upon him, and, agreeable to his Principles and Inclinations, as well as his Duty, made a Tender of all his Power and Influence in suppressing this Rebellion; but, to his great Misfortune at this Day, such Assistance was not then judged necessary.

After the Action at Preſton-Pans, when Commissions were issued for raising Independent Companies, Companies, under the Direction of Mr. Forbes, Prefident of the Court of Session in Scotland, Application was made for a Company for his Son the Lord M'Leod; and as he had Reason to hope for Success, he directed the Gentlemen, whom he intended to be Subalterns in the Company, to levy the Men; and the Levies went on accordingly; and the Earl's Zeal for the present Government continued unshaken until this Period: And for this he appeals to Sir John Cope, Mr. Forbes, and to the Attestations of eight Presbyterian Ministers, in the Hands of his Grace the Duke of Newcastle.

But when it was known that the Subalterns in Lord M'Leod's Company were to be named by the Lord Fortrose, and the Subalterns that the Earl had in View were disappointed, he was immediately beset by designing Men, and they used all their Art and Cunning upon the Earl, to seduce him from his Duty; but no Reason whatsoever could have had this Effect, if he had not been intoxicated with Liquor; and he no sooner recovered his Understanding, but he reflected with Horror upon what he had done; and for this he appeals to Mr. Brodie, Lord Lyon's Declaration, in the Hands of the Duke of Newcastle, and to the Knowledge of the other Members of both Houses of Parliament in the Earl's Neighbourhood.

This unhappy Lord, soon after engaging in this Rebellion, went to Perth, and continued there a Month, intirely in a private Capacity; for he assisted at none of the Reviews of the Rebels, mounted none of their Guards, bore no Arms, issued no Orders, but employed his Time chiefly in the Company of his Majesty's Officers, who were Prisoners there, and laboured Night and Day to procure them all Manner of Indulgences; and the only Use he made of his Credit in the Rebel Army, was to make their Captivity easy, in which he was fortunate enough to succeed in most Cases; and he appeals to those Gentlemen in this Respect.

He did, indeed, afterwards, accept of a Command to levy the Cess, Excise, and other Contributions in the Shires of Fife and Kinross, to the Amount of 13000*l.* but he preserved such Discipline among the Soldiers under his Command, that though he intimated his Orders, upon Pain of Military Execution, agreeable to the Terms in which they were delivered to him, yet he avoided all Methods of enforcing them, and returned without levying one Shilling, which, in a great Measure, saved his Majesty's faithful Subjects from those Exactions; and during his Stay in those Countries, the Inhabitants were uninjured in their Persons, and protected in their Properties; and he gave up that Command, that he might not be an Actor in, or a Witness to the Severities which he then thought to be unavoidable; and for this he appeals to Certificates from Peers and Commoners of Fife and Kinross, in the Duke of Newcastle's Hands.

Upon his Return from this Command, he went, attended only by his own Domestics, to a Gentleman's House, where he resided for some Time in a private Way, without Command or Commission, and without taking upon him any Concern, but the Continuance of all the good Offices he could exert for the Ease and Protection of his Majesty's Subjects.

The Action of Falkirk gave him a fresh, but melancholy Opportunity, of doing all the Acts of Humanity in his Power to his Majesty's Troops, that were either taken or wounded in that Conflict; and he extended his Cares even to many of the unfortunate Persons who lost their Lives in his Majesty's Service.

When the Name of his Royal Highness the Duke obliged the Rebel Army to march North, he continued without any Command.

When he arrived at Inverness, a Command was again imposed upon him, to repair to the Counties of Ross and Sutherland, and there to raise all the Men in that Country in Arms, levy large Sums of Money by Contribution, and large Quantities of Meal; and with strict Orders, that in case those Demands were not complied with, to use all Manner of Military Execution, by burning Houses, destroying Cattle, and other Severities: But so averse was he to these Methods of Violence, that he levied no Men in those Parts, and even his own Tenants in that Neighbourhood continued peaceable at Home; and he also granted Protections to all who asked them, and he supported his Protections by Parties, and he preserved the House of Sir Robert Munro, and of his Brother Cullcairn, which were particularly doomed for Destruction by the Rebels; nor would he trust this Protection to others, but went himself, and took the proper Measures for their Preservation; and he used the same Tenderness and Care towards the House and Family of the Earl of Sutherland, for which he appeals to that Noble Lord. And upon the whole of this Article, though the unfortunate Earl notified the Orders he had from the Pretender, with all the severe Injunctions they contained, yet he executed none of those Severities; and his Delays were in some Measure salutary, as they prevented the full Execution of them, by those who were sent in his Place.

At the same Time his House was a Sanctuary to the Effects of his Majesty's loyal Subjects, and particularly of those employed in his Majesty's Service under Lord Loudoun.

He received His Majesty's most gracious Pardon.

N U M B E R XXII.

Relating to Lord Lovat.

IN Lord Lovat's Trial, p. 71. after the Confession of the Attorney-General, read thus:

“ Mr. Murray being brought to the Bar of the Court of King's-Bench, by Habeas Corpus directed to the Lieutenant of the Tower, the foregoing Record (p. 66, &c.) was read to him by the Secondary on the Crown Side: And the Attorney-General prayed that Execution might be awarded. The Secondary then demanded of him, what he had to say why Execution should not be awarded?

“ The Prisoner Ore tenus pleaded, that he did surrender himself to the Lord Justice Clerk of Scotland (who is a Justice of the Peace) at Edinburgh, the 28th Day of June last; whereupon the Attorney-General declared, that he had Authority from his Majesty to confess the Truth of the Prisoner's Plea, and did accordingly confess it. And the Court ordered the Prisoner's Plea, and the Attorney-General's Confession, to be recorded; and that the Attorney take nothing by his Motion, and that the Prisoner be remanded.” Foster's Reports, p. 50.

And Page 84. in that Trial, after Mr. Murray's saying, “ I did not intend at that particular Time to surrender myself; and I presume it is not necessary for me to say now, whether I ever did intend it, or not: But at the Time that the Party of Dragoons came to the House where I then was, the Doors were shut, and I was in such a Position, as that I could have killed two of them myself; but I rather chose to submit myself, and throw down my Arms,” read as followeth:

The London Gazette, published by Authority, July 5, 1746, relates it thus:

“ Edinburgh, June 29. Upon Information that John Murray, of Broughton, late Secretary to the Pretender's Son, had on Friday Night dined at Kilbucco, and had that Night gone to the House of Mr. Hunter of Polmood, who married Mr. Murray's Sister; John Smith, Serjeant in St. George's Dragoons, with seven private Men then under his Command at Broughton, was ordered thither with a Guide; and Yesterday, at Three o'Clock in the Morning, he seized Mr. Murray at the House of Polmood, and the same Day he was brought before the Lord Justice Clerk, and was committed close Prisoner to the Castle of Edinburgh. Upon his Examination he declared, That the Pretender's Son, with Sullivan and O'Neal, both Irish, and no other Person in Company, did, about four Days after the Battle of Culloden, go off from Moidart in an open Boat, in order to get on board a Ship: But that he (Murray) being at that Time indisposed, was not able to go with him. The said Murray had been mostly with Lochiel, and

“ his Uncle Major Kennedy, and his Brother, in a starving Way, lying on the Sides of Hills all Day, and travelling or wandering all Night, with Scouts at a Mile or half a Mile's Distance, never daring to stay two Nights in a Place. Lochiel was very ill, wounded in the Heel, and obliged to use a Horse; and he (Murray) unable to bear Fatigue and Want any longer, crossed the Hill without a Servant, and came by Monteith to the Place where he was taken.”

Mr. Justice Foster, in his Crown Cases, p. 50. makes this Observation: “ Note, This Gentleman was made use of as an Evidence against Lord Lovat on his Impeachment. And it was suggested on that Occasion, that the Attorney-General's confessing the Truth of the Plea by Warrant from his Majesty, was a Strain of Prerogative, calculated to elude the Force of the Act of Attainder, and to serve the Turn of making Mr. Murray an Evidence. But whoever considereth that he was actually brought before the Lord Justice Clerk on the 28th Day of June, (fourteen Days before the Time limited by the Act for his surrendering was expired) and was the same Day by him committed to the Castle of Edinburgh, where he was kept close Prisoner till he was removed to the Tower; whoever considereth this, must admit, that, with whatever View he might be brought up at this Time, he had merely that Justice done him now by his Majesty's Order, which at one Time or other, whenever he should have been brought up, on the Foot of the Act of Attainder, could not be denied him.

“ The Intent of the Act was answered by his being made amesnable to Justice before the Time limited for his Surrender. And he being kept close Prisoner till the Day for Surrendering was past, it was put out of his Power to comply strictly with the Letter of it; and therefore his Non-compliance ought not to be fatal to him.” — See Roger Johnson's Case, Foster, p. 46. Strange, Vol. 2. p. 824.

The Judge says further, (in a Note) “ I have been informed that Mr. Murray was now brought up, to obviate an Objection that might have been made to his Evidence upon the Authority of Lord Duffus's Case, reported in Com. 440. but that Case differeth from this. Lord Duffus was not amesnable to Justice before the Expiration of the Time given by the Act; nor, merely through his own Default, could be: But I doubt Lord Duffus's Case favoured too much of the Summum Jus.

In Page 110. of Lord Lovat's Trial, Mention is made of the Lord President's Letter to Lord Lovat, and his Answer to it; we here insert the Letter, as it is an excellent one, and a Persuasive against his Lordship's ruining himself and Family by by running into the Rebellion, with Lord Lovat's Answer to it, from the Memoirs of the Life of Lord Lovat, p. 101.

Lord President's Letter to Lord Lovat, dated at Inverness, the 28th October, 1745.

“ My Lord,

“ AS I have now the Honour of being “ charged with the public Affairs in this “ Part of the Kingdom, I can no longer remain
 “ a Spectator of your Lordship's Conduct, and “ see the double Game you have played for some “ Time past, without betraying the Trust reposed
 “ in me, and at once risquing my Reputation,
 “ and the Fidelity that I owe to his Majesty as a “ good Subject. Your Lordship's Actions now
 “ discover evidently your Inclinations; and leave
 “ us no further in the Dark about what Side you
 “ are to choose in the present unhappy Insur“ rection: You have now so far pulled off the “ Mask, that we can see the Mark you aim at,
 “ though, on former Occasions, you have had
 “ the Skill and Address to disguise your In“ tentions in Matters of far less Importance.
 “ And indeed, methinks, a little more of your “ Lordship's wonted Artifice would not have “ been amiss, whatever had been your private “ Sentiments with respect to this unnatural Re“ bellion. You should, my Lord, have duly “ considered and estimated the Advantages that “ would arise to your Lordship from its Success,
 “ and balanced them with the Risques you run
 “ if it should happen to miscarry; and above
 “ all Things you ought to have considered your “ own Safety, and allowed that the chief Place
 “ in your System of Politics; which, I persuade “ myself, would have induced your Lordship
 “ to have played the Game after a quite differ“ ent Manner, and with a much greater Degree
 “ of Caution and Policy. But so far has your “ Lordship been from acting with your ordinary “ Finesse and Circumspection on this Occasion,
 “ that you sent away your Son and the best Part “ of your Clan to join the Pretender, with as “ little Concern as if no Danger had attended “ such a Step: I say, sent them away; for we “ are not to imagine they went of themselves, or “ would have ventured to take Arms without “ your Lordship's Concurrence and Approbation:
 “ This, however, you are pretty sure cannot be “ easily proved, which I believe indeed may be “ true: But I cannot think it will be a difficult “ Matter to make it appear, that the whole “ Strain of your Lordship's Conversation in “ every Company where you have appeared,
 “ since the Pretender's Arrival, has tended to “ pervert the Minds of his Majesty's Subjects,
 “ and seduce them from their Allegiance: And “ give me Leave to tell you, my Lord, even
 “ this falls under the Construction of Treason, and
 “ is no less liable to Punishment than open “ Rebellion; as I am afraid your Lordship will “ find when once this Insurrection is crushed,
 “ and the Government at Leisure to examine into
 “ the Affair. And I am sorry to tell you, my “ Lord, that I could sooner undertake to plead
 “ the Cause of any of those unhappy Gentlemen, “ who are just now actually in Arms against his “ Majesty, and I could say more in Defence of “ their Conduct, than I can in Defence of your “ Lordship's. The Duke of Pertb and Lord

VOL. X.

“ Ogilvy never qualified, nor did they ever receive
 “ the smallest Favour from the present Govern“ ment; but, on the contrary, were both stripped
 “ of their Titles and Honours, and from Men
 “ of the first Quality, reduced to the State of “ private Gentlemen, since the Revolution, and “ may both be supposed to act from a Principle
 “ of Resentment, and only take up Arms to “ recover what they thought themselves unjustly “ deprived of. Lord George Murray never had “ any Place or Pension from the Public, and
 “ was, no Doubt, drawn in by the Influence of “ the Marquis of Tullibardin, perhaps, touched
 “ with Pity and Commiseration for his eldest “ Brother, who has spent the best Part of his “ Life in Exile, and undoubtedly upon an “ Allowance much inferior to his Dignity.
 “ These and such-like Apologies may be offered
 “ in Defence of most of the leading Men in the “ present Rebellion: But what shall I say in “ Favour of you, my Lord? You, who have “ flourished under the present happy Establish“ ment; you, who, in the Beginning of your “ Days, forfeited both your Life and Fortune,
 “ and yet, by the Benignity of the Government,
 “ was not only indulged in the Liberty of living
 “ at Home, but even restored to all you could “ lay Claim to! Nay, his Majesty's Goodness “ went so far as to employ your Lordship in his “ Service, and was pleased to honour you with “ the Command of one of the Independent “ Companies that were raised some Years ago in “ the Highlands, which you enjoyed for a very “ long Time: So that both Duty and Gratitude
 “ ought to have influenced your Lordship's “ Conduct at this critical Juncture, and disposed “ you to have acted a Part quite different from “ what you have done. But there are some “ Men whom no Duty can bind, nor no Favour
 “ can oblige; and, I am afraid, if a timely “ Repentance do not prevent it, your Lordship
 “ will, not unjustly, be ranked among that “ Number. You now see, my Lord, how “ unanimous the People of England are against “ the Pretender; and what Forces they are “ mustering up to oppose him. The King has “ ordered Home his Troops; several Noblemen
 “ have raised Regiments at their own Expences;
 “ and every County and Corporation throughout
 “ the Kingdom are entering into Associations in “ Defence of the present Establishment: So that “ these few unhappy Gentlemen, who are engaged “ in this Rebellion, will have Armies after “ Armies to encounter, and if your Lordship
 “ entertains any Hopes of their Success, you “ will find your Mistake, when it is too late to “ amend it. What I would therefore propose to “ your Lordship, as the only Expedient left to “ rescue you from the Hazard of a rigorous “ Prosecution, is, to recall your Son and his “ Men immediately. This Step, I am persuaded,
 “ would produce several good Consequences;
 “ for, on the one Hand, it would prevent “ Numbers from joining the Rebels, who now
 “ hang in Suspence; and, on the other, occasion
 “ a great many of those already engaged to desert
 “ and retire to their respective Habitations, and,
 “ perhaps, may be the Means of crushing the “ Rebellion, without further Bloodshed; which “ would do your Lordship a great deal of “ Honour, and such a remarkable Piece of “ Service would be amply rewarded by the “ Government.

Government. If you shall judge it proper, my Lord, to follow this Advice, it will give me a great deal of Pleasure, as it will contribute to stop the Progress of an unhappy Civil War, that threatens us with endless Calamities; but if your Lordship continues obstinate, and will not order your Men to disband and return Home, I shall be obliged to take you into Custody, be the Event what it will: And then your Lordship will run the Risque of having your Family extirpate as well as others of the Highland Chiefs. Now, my Lord, I have told your Lordship my Sentiments pretty freely, and no less out of Friendship to your Lordship than Duty to the Public. I might have advanced many other Arguments, to induce your Lordship to follow my Advice; but, methinks, what I have already said is sufficient; and so, I shall only further add, that I am,

“ Yours, &c.”

Lord Lovat's Letter in Answer to the above, dated at Beaufort, 29th October, 1745.

“ My dear Lord,

“ I Received the Honour of your Lordship's Letter late last Night, of Yesterday's Date; and I own I never received one like it since I was born; and I give your Lordship ten thousand Thanks for the kind Freedom you make with me in it: For I see by it, that for my Misfortune, in having an obstinate stubborn Son, and an ungrateful Kindred, my Family must go to Destruction, and I must lose my Life in my old Age. Such Usage looks rather like a Turkish or Persian Government, than like a British. Am I, my Lord, the first Father that has had an undutiful and unnatural Son? Or am I the first Man that has made a good Estate, and saw it destroyed in his own Time, by the mad foolish Actions of an unnatural Son, who prefers his own extravagant Fancies to the solid Advice of an affectionate old Father? I have seen Instances of this in my own Time, but never heard till now, that the Foolishness of a Son would take away the Life and Liberty of a Father that lived peaceably, and was an honest Man, and well inclined to the rest of Mankind. But I find, the longer a Man lives, the more Wonders and extraordinary Things he sees. Now, my dear Lord, I beg Leave to tell you my Mind freely in my Turn. I thank God, I was born with very little Fear in the greatest Difficulties and Dangers by Sea and Land, and, by God's Assistance, I have often saved my Life by the Firmness and Steadiness of my Resolutions; and though I have now but a little Remains of a Life that is clogged with Infirmities and Pain, yet, by God's Assistance, I am resolved to preserve it as long as I can. And though my Son should give way with the young People of his Clan, yet I will have six hundred brave Frasers at Home, many of them about my own Age, that will lose the last Drop of their Blood to preserve my Person; and I do assure your Lordship, if I am attacked, that I will sell my Life as dear as I can. For since I am as peaceable a Subject as any in the Kingdom, and as ready to pay the King's Taxes, and to do every thing

“ that a faithful Subject ought to do, I know no Law or Reason that my Person should not be in Safety. I did use, and will use, the strongest Arguments that my Reason can suggest to me, by my Cousin Gortulegge, that he may repeat them to my Son; and if they should not prevail, is it any ways just or equitable that I should be punished for the Faults of my Son? Now, my dear Lord, as to the uncivil War that occasions my Misfortunes, and in which almost the whole Kingdom is involved, on one Side or the other, I humbly think, that Men should be moderate on both Sides, since it is morally impossible to know the Event; for thousands, ten thousands, on both Sides, are positive that their own Party will carry. And suppose that this venturous Prince should be utterly defeat, and that the Government should carry all in Triumph, no Man can think that any King upon the Throne would destroy so many ancient good Families, for engaging in a Cause that was always their Principle, and what they thought their Duty to support. King William was as great a King, as to his Knowledge of Government and Politics, as late for many hundred Years upon the Throne of England; and when his General, who was one of the best in Europe, was defeat, and forced to run to save his Life, and all his Army routed at Killicranky by a handful of Highlanders, not full two thousand in Number, King William was so far from desiring to extirpate them, that he sent the Earl of Breadalbane with twenty-five thousand Pounds Sterling, and sought no other Conditions from them, than that they should live peaceably at Home. So, my Lord, we cannot imagine, that though the Highlanders should be defeated at this Time, and most of them killed, and the Government full Masters of the Kingdom, that any Administration would be so cruel, as to endeavour to extirpate the whole Remains of the Highlanders. Besides, it would be a dangerous Enterprize, which we nor our Children would see at an End.

“ I pray God we may never see such a Scene in our Country, as Subjects killing and destroying their Fellow-Subjects. For my Part, my Lord, I am resolved to live a peaceable Subject in my own House, and do nothing against the King or Government. And if I am attacked by the King's Guards, and his Captain-General at their Head, I will defend myself as long as I have Breath in me: And if I am killed here, it is not far to my Burial-place; and I will have, after I am dead, what I always wished, the Coronach of all the Women in my Country, to convey my Body to my Grave; and that was my Ambition, when I was in my happiest Situation in the World.

I am, my Lord,

“ Your Lordship's, &c.”

An Account of the Behaviour of Simon Lord Lovat, from the Time his Death-Warrant was delivered, to the Day of his Execution. By a Gentleman who attended his Lordship in his last Moments.

THOUGH I was an Eye-witness of the extraordinary Behaviour of this Nobleman during his Trial, I little thought to find that uncommon uncommon Gaiety accompany him in his last Moments. I was indeed too well acquainted with his Lordship to imagine he would shudder much at the Sight of Death; but yet I expected, that it would abate somewhat of his natural Vivacity, and reduce him to a more serious Turn of Mind; however, neither the Apprehension of Pain and Agony, or the Thoughts of his speedy Dissolution, seemed to give him any Uneasiness.

On Friday the 3d of April, when the Warrant came down for his Execution, and the Gentleman told him he was sorry to be the Messenger of such bad News; his Lordship replied very cheerfully, God's Will be done, and then taking him by the Hand, drank his Health, thanked him kindly for the Favour, (as he called it) and assured him he was so well satisfied with his Doom, that he would not change Stations with any Prince in Europe. His Lordship then sat down with the Gentleman, drank Part of a Bottle of * Wine with Water, and seemed very composed.

In the Evening he smoked his Pipe, mentioned some Circumstances relating to his Trial, and was very cheerful. About Ten o'Clock he called for the Warders of the Tower to undress him, and while they were taking off his Shoes, told them, he should not give them that Trouble much longer, for that he was to take his Leave of this World the next Thursday.

The next Morning, his Lordship being informed of the Report that was raised, of an Engine to be erected to take off his Head, said, It was a fine Contrivance; for, as his Neck was very short, the Executioner would be puzzled to find it out with his Axe; and if such a Machine was made, they might call it Lord Lovat's Maiden.

He was very cheerful all this Day, talked a good deal of his own Affairs, and, among other Things, said, That he was concerned in all the Schemes that had been formed for restoring the Royal Family, since he was fifteen Years old; but that he never betrayed a private Man or a public Cause in his Life: That he never shed a Drop of Blood with his own Hand, nor ever struck a Man, except one young Nobleman, whom he caned publicly for his Impertinence and Impiety.

Sunday. This Morning he rose pretty early, and behaved as usual; talked for some Time about his Family, and shewed us the Copy of a Letter he had sent to his Son, which I shall here insert, because it contains his Lordship's Sentiments of Religion and a future State; and the Person who wrote it for him, assures me, it is an exact Copy of the Original.

A Copy of Lord Lovat's Letter to his Son Simon, now Prisoner in Edinburgh Castle.

“ My dear Simon,

“ Notwithstanding my great Distress and “ Affliction, you are always present with “ me, and I offer my Prayers to Heaven for “ you. — You see now by Experience, that this “ World is but Vanity of Vanities, and that “ there is no Trust to be put in the Arm of “ Flesh; you see that God's Providence rules

“ the World, and that no Man or Family but “ must yield to it, whether he will or not.
“ Happy is the Man, that, in all the cross “ Accidents of this Life, submits himself to the “ Will and Providence of God, with sincere “ Humility and Patience. It is the blessed “ Trinity, Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, that “ can deliver you and me from our present
“ melancholy Situation: We have provoked
“ God by our Sins, which most certainly have “ brought these Troubles upon us: I do sincerely “ thank God for these Troubles, because they “ have brought me from the Way of Sin that I “ lived many Years in, to a Way of Repentance
“ and Humiliation, and instructed me to follow
“ my dear Saviour the Lord Jesus Christ as I “ ought to do. I therefore, my dear Child,
“ earnestly beg of you, with the sincere Heart
“ of a tender and affectionate Father, to repent
“ of all your Sins and Transgressions, and to “ throw yourself at the Foot of the Cross of “ Christ, begging for his Sufferings Sake, which
“ you know were great, to give you true Re“ pentance, to forgive your Sins, and be recon“ ciled to you for the Sake of his Blood, that he “ shed upon the Cross for Sinners, and beg of “ him to preserve you from the Snares of the “ Devil, the World, and the Flesh; which will “ be too many for you without his divine Assist“ ance; and if you have a true Contrition for “ your Sins, and are reconciled with Zeal and “ Affection to your Saviour, you will find Com“ forts that cannot be expressed. If you put “ your sole Confidence in Jesus Christ, he will “ certainly bring you out of all your Troubles,
“ and make you the happiest Lord Lovat that “ ever was. So, my dear Child, I beg of you
“ for God's Sake, for your own Sake, for my “ Sake, and for the Sake of your Brothers and “ Sisters, to throw yourself upon God's Mercies, “ which have been ever of old; repent of your “ Sins, and live a sincere, Christian, and righ“ teous Life, and you will certainly bring God's “ Blessing upon yourself, your Family, and “ Kindred; and if you neglect this my paternal “ Advice, which by the Laws of God and “ Nature I am obliged to give you, you may “ assure yourself of being miserable in this World,
“ and eternally miserable in the next. I know
“ not yet what my Fate may be, but bless God,
“ I am prepared to go to the Scaffold and Block
“ To-morrow, if God in his divine Will and “ Providence hath ordered it so. So, my dear
“ Child, do not be in the least concerned for me;
“ for I bless God I have strong Reasons to hope,
“ that when it is God's Will to call me out of “ this World, it will be by his Mercy, and the “ Suffering of my Saviour Jesus Christ, to enjoy
“ everlasting Happiness in the other World. I “ wish this may be yours, and am,

“ My dear Child,

“ Your affectionate Father, &c.”

* As his Lordship has been often branded with the Name of a Drunkard in the public Papers, I must do so much Justice to his Memory, as to assure the Public, that he never drank more than two Pints of Wine a Day during his whole Confinement, and never any without Water; and I have often heard his Lordship say, he was never drunk in his Life. 'Tis true a considerable Quantity of Brandy and Rum was used every Night and Morning to bathe his Legs, which might probably give Birth to this Report; for he never drank a Dram himself, unless he was indisposed, and then he generally took a little burnt Brandy with Bitters.

Monday. His Lordship arose about Seven, and, according to his usual Custom, called for a Glass of Wine and Water: Upon which the Warder asked his Lordship, what Wine he would please to have? Not white Wine, says he, unless you would have me go with the Skitter to the Block. For it seems white Wine generally gave him the Flux. Some Time after this, the Major came to see him, and asked how he did. Do! says his Lordship; why, I am about doing very well, for I am preparing myself, Sir, for a Place, where hardly any Majors, and very few Lieutenant-Generals go.

A certain Nobleman came to see his Lordship this Day, and asked him some Questions concerning his Religion. To whom he answered, That he was a Roman Catholick, and would die in that Faith: That he adhered to the Rock upon which Christ built his Church; to Saint Peter, and the Succession of Pastors from him down to the present Time; and that he rejected and renounced all Sects and Communities, that were rejected by the Church. The Declaration of his being a Jansenist was occasioned by the same Nobleman's asking him, Of what particular Sort of Catholicks? Are you a Jesuit? A Jesuit! No, no, my Lord, answered he, I am a Jansenist. (The Jansenists are great Enemies to the Jesuits.) And then owned that he was acquainted with several in France that were Jansenists, and was more intimate with them, than any other learned and religious Men in that Kingdom; and upon this Occasion assured his Lordship, that, in his Sense of a Roman Catholick, he was as far from being one as his Lordship, or any other Lord in the House.

Having Occasion this Afternoon to speak of the late King George I. he gave his Majesty a great Character, and added, He was my Friend, and I dearly loved him. — But we do not think proper to insert the whole Conversation.

Tuesday. This Morning he rose as usual about Seven, and after drinking a Glass of Wine and Water, desired one of the Warders to lay a Pillow at the Feet of the Bed, that he might try whether he could kneel down properly, and fix his Head low enough for the Block; which being done, he made the Essay, and told the Warder, He believed, by this short Practice, he should be able to act his Part in the Tragedy well enough. He then asked the said Warder, if he thought the Executioner would be able to take off his Head without hacking him? For, says he, I have reserved ten Guineas in a Purse, which he shall have if he does his Business well.

My Lord, said a Gentleman that came to wait upon him, I am sorry you should have Occasion for him at all. To this his Lordship replied, So I believe are many of those who were the Cause of my coming hither, and for aught I know, all of them will by and by. The taking off my Head, I believe, will do them no Service; but if it will, God bless them with it; though I cannot but think myself hardly dealt by: In the first Place, I was stripped of every thing, and might have wanted even the common Necessaries of Life, had not my Cousin, Mr. William Frazer, advanced a considerable Sum of Money to General Williamson, and promised on certain Conditions to pay for my farther Subsistence. And then, to be convicted by my own Servants, by the Men that had been nurtured in my own Bosom, and I had been so kind to, is shocking to human Nature; but I believe each of them has a Sting of Conscience on this Account, that will bear him Company to the Grave; though I am very far from wishing either of them any Evil. 'Tis a sad Thing, Sir, for a Man's own Servants to take off the Head of their Master and Chief. His Lordship then asked the Gentleman, how he liked the Letter he had sent to his Son? He answered, I like it very well, it is a very good Letter. I think, says his Lordship, it is a Christian Letter.

After this the Gentleman informed his Lordship, that one Mr. Painter, of St. John's College, Oxon, had sent three Letters, viz. one to the King, one to the Earl of Chesterfield, and the other to Mr. Pelham, desiring that he might suffer in his Lordship's Stead: And that that to his Majesty concluded in the following Manner; In one Word, let Lovat live! Punish the vile Traitor with his Life, but let me die; let me bow down my Head to the Block, and receive, without Fear, that friendly Blow, which, I verily believe, will only separate the Soul from its Body and Miseries together. At which his Lordship expressed his Surprise. This, says he, is an extraordinary Man indeed! I should be glad to know what Countryman he is, and whether the Thing is Fact. Perhaps it may only be a Finesse in Politics, to cast an Odium on some particular Place or Person: But if there be such a Person, he is a Miracle in the present Age, and will be in the future, for he even exceeds that Text of Scripture, which says, Greater Love than this hath no Man, that a Man lay down his Life for his Friend. However, this Man offers to suffer for a Stranger, nay, for one that he stigmatizes with the Name of a vile Traitor. In short, Sir, I am afraid the poor Gentleman is weary of living in this wicked World, and, if that be the Case, the Obligation is altered, because a Part of the Benefit is intended for himself.

Wednesday. This Morning, about Two o'Clock, his Lordship prayed very devoutly for a considerable Time, and called upon the Lord for Mercy, which he often did before, with great Fervency. After this he fell asleep, and we heard no more of him till Six, about which Time he called for the Warder to dress him, and seemed as gay as usual. About Ten o'Clock he sang Part of a Song, at which the Warder expressed his Surprise, and asked his Lordship, How he could be so merry, when he was to die Tomorrow? To which my Lord replied, that he was as fit for an Entertainment as ever he was in his Life. He then sent for Mr. P——, the Barber, whose Father, they tell me, is a Muggletonian: While his Lordship was shaving, he talked a good deal about his Father's Principles; and when he was shaved, Well, says he, pray give my Service to your Father, and tell him I shall go to Heaven before him; for I find he does not expect to go till the Day of Resurrection, but I hope to be there in a few Hours.

After this, he talked to a Gentleman who came to see him about some private Affairs, and then calling for a Basin of Water to wash himself, Now, Gentlemen, I will shew you a Wonder, says he, you shall see a Man drown himself who was sentenced to be beheaded, and by that Means change the Law; and, Sir, I heartily wish it was in my Power to change all Things; if it was, I would make a thorough Change indeed.

About this Time another of his Lordship's Friends came to wait upon him, with whom he had some Talk concerning the Bill depending in Parliament with relation to the Scotch Affairs. His Lordship seemed very uneasy about it, and wished all those Gentlemen who voted for it had the S——r.

He then told them he would have his Body carried to Scotland, to be interred in his own Tomb in the Church of * Kirk-Hill; and said, that he had once made a Codicil to his Will, where all the Pipers from Johnie Great's House to Edinburgh were invited to play before his Corpse, for which they were to have a handsome Allowance; and though that might not be thought proper now, yet he was sure some of the good old Women in his Country would sing a CORONACH (a Ceremony used at Funerals, much like the Irish Howl) before him. And then, says he, there will be old crying and clapping of Hands, for I am one of the greatest Chiefs in the Highlands.

About this Time Sir H. M. and Sir L. G. came to take their Leaves of my Lord; he saluted them on their first coming in, but soon after told them, If he had his broad Sword by him, he should not scruple to chop off their Heads, if he thought they were in the least concerned in bringing in or voting for the Bill now depending, for destroying the ancient Jurisdiction and Privileges of the Highland Chiefs. And then added, For my Part, I die a Martyr for my Country.

After eating a hearty Dinner, he called one of the Warders to him: Now, Willy, says he, give me a Pipe of Tobacco, and that will be the last I shall ever smook, unless People smook Tobacco in the other World.

Soon after this, the Governor of the Tower came to pay him a Visit, when his Lordship arose, and offered him his easy Chair; which the Governor refusing, and saying he was sorry his Lordship should give himself the Trouble to rise out of his Seat on his Account, he answered, What, Sir, I hope you would not have me be unmannerly the last Day of my Life.

Upon the Governor's coming in, his Lordship deferred smoking his Pipe some Time longer, and talked about indifferent Matters. Mr. William Fraser, his Lordship's Agent, and Mr. James Fraser, came to wait on him at the same Time, with whom he talked a good while concerning his Family Affairs, and the Management of his Funeral.

After this he called again for his Pipe, and, while he was smoking, asked one of the Warders, if his Message was carried to my Lord Traquair, and what Answer he brought? His Lordship, replied the *Warder, bids you an eternal Adieu, wishes you happy, and is offering up his Prayers for you. 'Tis very kind of him, says my Lord, and I thank him for it. Come, Mr. Southbey, says he to the Warder, give me some Water, and put a little Wine upon it. And then taking up his Tobacco-stopper, My Pipe is almost out, says he, as well as my Glais. He then asked about General Williamson's Family, spoke very kindly of the General; and being informed; that Miss Williamson was so affected that she could not take her Leave of his Lordship, God bless the dear Child, says he, and make her eternally happy, for she is a kind-hearted good Lass. After this, his Lordship sent a Message to the Cook, desiring her to roast a Piece of Veal, that it might be ready to mince for his Breakfast in the Morning. He then desired the Warders to sit down and smook with him, which they did, and drank a Glass of Wine, and wished his Lordship a good Journey. Amen, quoth my Lord; and then knocking the Ashes out of his Pipe, Now, Gentlemen, says he, the End of all human Grandeur is like this Snuff of Tobacco. His Lordship seemed to have a great Regard for his two Warders. After his Pipe was out, he thanked them kindly for taking so much Care of him; And now, Gentlemen, says he, I have but one Favour more to ask of you; and that is, to go upon the Scaffold with me, and not leave me till you see this Head cut off this Body. They both promised his Lordship; and afterwards one of them told him, that if ever he lived to see his Son the Master of Lovat, he would let him know with what Tenderness his Lordship parted with him. Do, says my Lord, and he will take Notice of you: If he don't, he won't do well. But pray, says he, have you got any Wine for me in the Morning, and some Bitters, if I should want to carry any to the Scaffold? Upon Inquiry, there was no Bitters left in the Bottle, and therefore his Lordship gave the Warder a Shilling to send for a Bottle of Stoughton's Elixir. When the Man was gone, the Warder recollected that there was some burnt Brandy and Bitters left in a Bottle, which his Lordship had with him to Westminster-Hall, when on his Trial, and informed him of it. 'Tis very well, very well, Sir, says he, pray take it in your Pocket, and give me a Sup if I should want it. After this, a Circumstance happened which surprized me prodigiously. His Lordship, who was eighty Years of Age, took up a Book with a small Print, (I think it was the Size that the Printers call Long-Primer) and read by Candle-*

* In the Year 1736, Lord Lovat erected a stately Monument in the Church of Kirk-Hill, within a few Miles of Castle-Downey, with a pompous Inscription; the brave Sir Robert Munro, (who was killed at the Battle of Falkirk) being on a Visit to Lord Lovat, they went together to view the Monument. Sir Robert, upon reading the Inscription, in a free Manner, said, Simon, how the Devil came you to have the Assurance to put up such a boasting romantic Inscription? To which his Lordship answered, The Monument and Inscription are chiefly calculated for the Frasers, who must believe whatever I their Chief require of them, and their Posterity will think it as true as the Gospel. The Inscription is as followeth:

To the MEMORY of THOMAS Lord FRASER of LOVAT,

Who chose rather to undergo the greatest Hardships of Fortune; than to part with the ancient Honours of his House, and bore these Hardships with undaunted Fortitude of Mind:

This MONUMENT was erected by

SIMON Lord FRASER of LOVAT, his Son,

Who likewise having undergone many and great Vicissitudes of good and bad Fortune, through the Malice of his Enemies; He, in the End, at the Head of his Clan, forced his Way to his paternal Inheritance, with his Sword in his Hand, and relieved his Kindred and Followers from Oppression and Slavery:

And both at Home and in Foreign Countries, by his eminent Actions, in the War and the State, He has acquired great Honours, and Reputation.

*Hic tegit essa lapis SIMONIS fortis in armis,
Restituit pressum nam genus ille suum;
Hoc marmor posuit cari Genitoris honori,
In genus afflictum par erat ejus amor.*

light near two Hours without Spectacles. Upon Inquiry, I was informed that his Lordship never used any. I knew he did not in the Day-time, but I thought he could not be able to see without their Assistance by Candle-light. This, I suppose, might be owing to his Lordship's Manner of Living, as also was that Circumstance of his never having the Head-ach. I have observed already, that his Lordship was never drunk in his Life; and he has often declared, that he thought eating of Suppers was doing Violence to Nature, and committing a Sin against the Body. He seldom took any Breakfast; always made a very hearty Dinner, but never eat a Morsel for Supper. As his Lordship had a great Share of Learning, and spoke the Latin, French, and English fluently, and some other modern Languages indifferently, we asked his Lordship concerning his Education. He said, he studied some Years at Aberdeen, and disputed his Philosophy in Greek. From this Topic he went to Religion again, and assured us, that he was bred a Protestant; but going abroad, and having some Disputes with Father  , he found himself very much staggered in his Principles, and prayed to God to direct him in the right Way: That after this, he studied Divinity and Controversy three Years, and then turned Roman Catholick. This is my Faith, says he, but I have Charity for all Mankind, and I believe every sincere honest Man bids fair for Heaven, let his Persuasion be what it will; for the Mercies of the Almighty are great, and his Ways past finding out.

After this, he pulled out a Silver Crucifix, and either kissed it, or rubbed his Mouth with it, I do not know which. Then handing it about, Here's a Crucifix, says he, did you ever see a better? Observe how strong the Expression is, and how finely the Passions are delineated. We keep Pictures of our best Friends, of our Fathers, Mothers, &c. and pray why should not we keep a Picture of him who has done more than all the World for us?

His Lordship then asked some Question about Mr. Secretary Murray, which I cannot recollect, for indeed I did not very well understand it, and then said, We had a better Secretary when the Association was signed. After this, he mentioned Mr. Sollicitor Murray, and said, he was a great Man, and he believed would meet with some Promotion, if he was not too far North.

About Nine o'Clock he desired the Warders to undress him; and his Breeches, Shoes, and Stockings being pulled off, he stood before the Fire to warm him as usual. The Warder asked his Lordship, if he would please to go to Bed? Not yet, says he, I will warm my Feet a little more first. I think we have a very bad Fire, says the Warder.

That's not my Fault, quoth his Lordship, joking; you may e'en make a better an you like it. Which he did, and then standing up by his Lordship, told him, He was sorry that the Morrow was to be such a bad Day with him. Bad! for what, says my Lord, do you think I am afraid of an Axe? 'Tis a Debt we all owe, and what we must all pay; and do not you think it better to go off in this Manner, than to linger with a Consumption, Gout, Dropsy, Fever, &c. though I must needs own, my Constitution is so good, that I could have lived twenty Years longer I believe, if I had not been called hither. Here my Lord offered to put off his Coat and Waistcoat, and as it was his Custom to pull them off by the Bed-side, the Warder reminded him of it. Good now, says my Lord, I had forgot that I was so far from the Bed; but perhaps you might have forgot too, had your Head been to be cut off To-morrow.

Thursday. On this fatal Day his Lordship awaked about Three o'Clock in the Morning, and prayed most devoutly. At Five he got up, called for a Glass of Wine and Water, according to his usual Custom, and seemed still as chearful as ever; then, being placed in his Chair, sat and read till Seven, when he called for another Glass of Wine and Water. About Eight o'Clock he desired Mr. Sherrington, one of the Warders, to send his Wig, that the Barber might have Time to comb it out. He then called for a Purse to put his Money in for the Executioner, and desired it might be a good one, lest the Gentleman should refuse it. Mr. Southbey, one of his Lordship's Warders, I remember, brought him two Purfes, the one a green Silk knit, and the other a yellow Canvas, but which his Lordship made choice of I really forget; However, it was a Purse, as he observed, that no Man would dislike with Ten Guineas in it.

As his Lordship was now within a few Hours of Death, and had behaved with such surprizing Intrepidity during his whole Confinement, I was the more particular in observing every little Incident that happened. But though he had a great Share of Memory and Understanding, and an awful Idea of Religion and a future State, I could never observe, in his Gesture or Speech, the least Shadow of Fear, or indeed any Symptoms of Uneasiness. His Behaviour was all of a Piece, and he was the same facetious Companion now, as he was before Sentence was passed against him. About half an Hour after Eight the Barber brought his Lordship's Wig, which not being powdered so much as usual, on account of its being a rainy Day, he seemed angry, and said, That he went to the Block with Pleasure, and if he had a Suit of Velvet embroidered, he would wear it on that Occasion. After this, he spoke to the Barber again about his Principles, and told him his Notions were extremely singular: For the Soul, said he, is a spiritual Substance, and can no more be dissolved for a Time, or buried with the Body, than it can be annihilated entirely; and at the same Time smiled. My Lord, said the Barber, you will see that. Yes, answered his Lordship, I hope to be in Heaven by One o'Clock, or I should not be so merry now. His Lordship then saluted the Barber, and bid him Farewel; and the Barber returned the Compliment, and wished my Lord a good Passage, for these were his Words.

At half an Hour after Nine his Lordship called for a Plate of minced Veal, eat very heartily, and desired the other Gentlemen that were with him to drink some Coffee or Chocolate, or both, which were brought for them; he then called for some Wine and Water, and drank the Healths of several of his Friends.

At Ten a terrible Accident happened upon the Hill, by the Fall of a Scaffold, which put all the People in great Confusion; several Persons were killed, and Numbers maimed and bruised. At Eleven the Sheriffs of London sent a Message to demand his Body, which being communicated to his Lordship, he desired the Curtains might be drawn, and that the Gentlemen would retire for a few Minutes while he said a Prayer, which Request was immediately complied plied with; but in a little Time he called for them again, saying, I am ready.

When his Lordship had come down the first Pair of Stairs, General Williamson invited him into his Room to rest himself. On his first Entrance he paid his Respects to the Ladies with great Politeness, then to the Gentlemen, and talked very freely. He asked the General in the French Language, Whether he might have the Honour to see his Lady, to return her his last Thanks for the Favours and Civilities he had received? To which the General answered in the same Tongue, My Spouse is so greatly affected with your Lordship's Misfortunes, that she cannot bear the Shock of seeing you at this Time, and begs to be excused. He then made his Addresses to all the Company, and set out; but going down Stairs, he complained of them, (the Stairs) and said, they were very troublesome to him. When he came to the Door, he bowed to the People, and was then put into the Governor's Coach, and carried to the outer Gate, where he was taken out of the Governor's Coach, and delivered to the Sheriffs of the City of London and County of Middlesex, who conducted him in another Coach to a House near the Scaffold which had been lined with black Cloth for his Lordship's Reception: Here he was taken into their immediate Custody, and all his Friends and Relations denied Entrance; upon which his Lordship instantly applied to the Sheriffs for the Time being, and desired that his Friends and Relations, who accompanied him from the Tower, might be permitted to see him. Mr. Alderman Alsop came to the Bottom of the Steps himself, and desired his Lordship's Friends to walk up. After we entered, my Lord thanked the Sheriffs for this Favour, and said, It was a considerable Consolation to him, that his Body fell into the Hands of Gentlemen of so much Honour; and added, I will give you, Gentlemen, and the Government no farther Trouble, for I shall make no Speech; though I have a Paper to leave, with which you may do as you think proper. Here my Lord put his Hand in his Pocket, and delivered a Paper to one of the Sheriffs, and then told them, they might give the Word of Command when they pleased, and added, that he was accustomed to obey Command, for he had been an Officer in the Army many Years. After this a Gentleman present began to read a Prayer to his Lordship while he was sitting; but my Lord called one of the Warders who attended him to help him up, that he might kneel. He then said a Prayer by himself, which no body could hear; and turning about, was again set down in his Chair, and seemed very chearful. Mr. Sheriff then asked his Lordship, If he would refresh himself with a Glass of Wine? My Lord thanked him, but said, He could not drink any without warm Water with it; and that not being to be had in that Place, his Lordship took a little burnt Brandy and Bitters, which, as I observed before, he had ordered one of the Warders to take in his Pocket; and, turning to Mr. Sheriff, told him, he was ready to go whenever he pleased. My Lord, replied the Sheriff, I would not hurry your Lordship; and taking out his Watch, said, There is half an Hour good, if your Lordship don't tarry too long upon the Scaffold. My Lord then desired that his Cloaths might be delivered to his Friends with his Corpse, and not given to the Executioner, and said, For that Reason he should give him (the Executioner) ten Guineas.

He then asked, if he might have the Axe brought him to feel if it was sharp, and desired that his Head, when taken off, might be received in a Cloth, and put into the Coffin. At this Mr. Sheriff stepped aside, and observed to some Gentlemen present, That he had received a Warrant in the usual Form for the Execution of his Lordship, and as it had not been customary of late Years to expose the Head at the four Corners of the Scaffold, he really thought he might indulge his Lordship with a Promise as to that Point, for he did not think he could expose the Head (though it was desired, and indeed ordered by a Message) without being liable to Censure; adding withal, That he was truly sensible of the Duty he owed his Majesty, and should always pay a great Regard to the Orders he received from his Grace the Duke of Newcastle, or any of the Ministry. And then turning to his Lordship, told him, That what he had desired should be punctually observed. My Lord thanked Mr. Sheriff very kindly, and then saluted his Friends, and told them, He hoped his Blood would be the last spilled on that Occasion.

When his Lordship came into the Passage leading to the Scaffold, he called to a Gentleman, and asked his Name, who replied, it was North. Well, says he, let it be North and Grey. And added, with a Smile, Come, my Lord North and Grey, conduct me to the Block. When his Lordship was going up the Steps to the Scaffold, he looked round, and seeing so many People, God save us, says he, why should there be such a Bustle about taking off an old grey Head, that cannot get up three Steps without two Men to support it?

Here turning about, and observing one of his Friends very much dejected, his Lordship clapped him upon the Shoulder, and said, Cheer up thy Heart, Man; I am not afraid, why should you?

The first Person he fought when he came upon the Scaffold was the Executioner, who was immediately presented to him; and after he had made his Obeisance, my Lord put his Hand into his Pocket, and pulled out a Purse with ten Guineas, saying, Here, Sir, is ten Guineas for you, pray do your Work well; for if you should cut and hack my Shoulders, and I should be able to rise again, I shall be very angry with you. After this, he desired the Executioner to shew him the Axe, which he refused to do without Leave from the Sheriff; but upon Application, this Request was immediately granted; and when it was brought to him, he took hold of it, and feeling upon the Edge, said, he believed it would do. Then he rose from the Chair which was placed upon the Scaffold for him, and looked at his Coffin, on which was wrote, Simon Dominus Fraser de Lovat, decollat. April 9, 1747, Ætat. suæ 80.

He then sat down again, and repeated the following Line out of Horace:

Dulce et decorum est pro Patriâ mori.

In English,

'Tis a glorious and pleasant Thing to die for our Country.

And after that a Line out of Ovid:

*Nam genus et proceros, et quæ non fecimus ipsi,
Vix ea nostra voco.*

In English,

For those Things which were done either by our Fathers, or Ancestors, and in which we ourselves had no Share, I can scarcely call our own.

He then desired all the People to withdraw from him, except his two Warders, who supported his Lordship, while he said a Prayer. After this he called for Mr. William Frazer, his Lordship's Solicitor and Agent in Scotland; and holding up his Gold-headed Cane, said, I deliver you this Cane in token of my Sense of your faithful Services, and of my committing to you all the Power I have upon Earth. And then again embraced him. His Lordship now called for Mr. James Frazer, and embracing him also, said, My dear James, I am going to Heaven, but you must continue to crawl a little longer in this evil World. And taking his Leave of both, he delivered his Hat to Mr. William Frazer, and desired him to take care that the Executioner did not touch any of his Cloaths. He then took off his Wig, ordered his Cap to be put on, and putting off his Cloaths, delivered them with his Wig to Mr. Frazer; and having unloosed his Cravat and the Neck of his Shirt, he kneeled down to the Block, took hold of the Cloth which was placed to receive his Head, and pulled it close to him: But being placed too near the Block, the Executioner desired his Lordship would remove a little farther back, which he did; and having placed his Neck in a proper Manner, he told the Executioner he would say a short Prayer, and then drop his Handkerchief as a Signal. In this Posture he remained about half a Minute, and then threw his Handkerchief upon the Floor, when the Executioner at one Blow sever'd his Head from the Body, which being received in a scarlet Cloth, was wrapped up, and, together with his Body, put into the Coffin, and carried in a Hearse back to the Tower, where it remained till Four o'Clock, and was then taken away by an Undertaker.

A Copy of the Paper delivered to the Sheriffs by Lord Lovat.

AS it may be reasonably expected I should say something of myself in this Place, I declare that I die a true, but unworthy Member of the Holy, Catholick, Apostolick Church.

As to my Death, I cannot but look upon it as glorious, * * * * *

I sincerely pardon all my Enemies, Persecutors, and Slanderers, from the highest to the lowest; whom God forgive, as I heartily do, and die in perfect Charity with all Mankind.

I sincerely repent of all my Sins, and firmly hope to obtain Pardon and Forgiveness for them, through the Merits and Passion of my blessed Lord and Redeemer Jesus Christ, into whose Hands I recommend my Soul. Amen.

N U M B E R XXIII.

The Trial of William Owen, Bookseller, for Printing and Publishing a Libel, intituled, The Case of Alexander Murray, Esq; on an Information tried at Guildhall, London, Monday, July 6, 1752, before the Right Honourable the Lord Chief Justice Lee.

THE House of Commons, on Wednesday, November 20, 1751,

Resolved, That the Honourable Alexander Murray, Esquire, who on the 6th Day of February, in the last Session of Parliament, was, for dangerous and seditious Practices, in Violation and Contempt of the Authority and Privileges of this House, and of the Freedom of Elections, ordered by this House, to be committed close Prisoner to his Majesty's Gaol of Newgate, and was also at the same Time ordered by this House, to be brought to the Bar thereof, to receive his said Sentence there upon his Knees, and before the said Sentence was received by him, did, by a high and most dangerous Contempt in him of the Authority and Privilege of this House, and by persisting in the same, avoid the Execution of the said Sentence, during the Remainder of the said Session of Parliament, be now committed close Prisoner to his Majesty's Gaol of Newgate, for the said dangerous and seditious Practices, in Violation and Contempt of the Authority and Privileges of this House, and of the Freedom of Elections.

Ordered, That Mr. Speaker do issue his Warrants accordingly.

Resolved, That the said Alexander Murray do receive the said Sentence, for his now being committed close Prisoner to his Majesty's Gaol of Newgate, at the Bar of this House, upon his Knees.

Ordered, That the Serjeant at Arms attending this House, do take the said Alexander Murray into his Custody, in order to his being brought to the Bar of this House, to receive the said Sentence.

A Complaint being made to the House, of a printed Pamphlet, intituled, "The Case of the Hon. Alex. Murray, Esq; in an Appeal to the People of Great-Britain; more particularly the Inhabitants of the City and Liberty of Westminster;"

The said Pamphlet was brought up to the Table, and read.

Resolved,

Resolved, nemine contradicente, That the said Pamphlet is an impudent, malicious, scandalous, and seditious Libel, falsely and most injuriously reflecting upon, and aspersing, the Proceedings of this House, and tending to create Misapprehensions of the same in the Minds of the People, to the Dishonour of this House, and in Violation of the Privilege thereof.

Resolved, nemine contradicente, That an humble Address be presented to his Majesty, humbly to desire his Majesty, that he will be graciously pleased to give Directions to his Attorney-General to prosecute the Authors or Author, the Printers or Printer, and the Publishers or Publisher, of the said scandalous Libel, in order that they may be brought to condign Punishment for the same.

Ordered, That the said Address be presented to his Majesty, by such Members of this House, as are of his Majesty's most Honourable Privy Council.

The Day following, Mr. Comptroller reported to the House, that their Address of Yesterday had been presented to his Majesty, and that his Majesty had commanded him to acquaint the House, that he had given Directions accordingly.

Accordingly he was tried on the following Information, July 6, 1752.

Of Michaelmas Term in the twenty-fifth Year of King George the Second.

London. BE it remembered, that Sir Dudley Ryder, Knight, Attorney-General of our present Sovereign Lord the King, who for our said present Sovereign Lord the King in this Behalf prosecuteth, in his proper Person cometh here into the Court of our said present Sovereign Lord the King, before the King himself at Westminster, on Wednesday next after three Weeks from the Feast-Day of Saint Michael in this same Term, and for our said present Sovereign Lord the King, giveth the Court here to understand and be informed, that *John Owen, late of London, Bookseller, being a wicked, seditious, and ill-disposed Person, and having no Regard for the Laws of this Realm, nor for the public Peace and Tranquillity of this Kingdom, and well knowing that one Alexander Murray, late of the Parish of St. George Hanover-Square, in the County of Middlesex, Esquire, had been most justly and deservedly committed to his Majesty's Gaol of Newgate, in the City of London, by virtue of an Order of the Honourable House of Commons of this Kingdom then assembled in Parliament, for a most gross and flagrant Misbehaviour and Contempt committed by him the said Alexander Murray, against the said House, in refusing to submit to the Rules and Orders of the said House, and for acting in open Defiance of the Authority of the said House; but most unlawfully, wickedly, and maliciously, devising, contriving, and intending to asperse, scandalize and vilify the whole Body of the Commons of this Kingdom in Parliament assembled, and most wickedly and audaciously to represent their Proceedings in Parliament as cruel, arbitrary, and oppressive; and to make it be believed and thought, as if the Commons in Parliament assembled, were a most wicked, base, and degenerate Set of Persons, and had acted in their legislative Capacity in open Violation of the Constitution of this Kingdom, and had most daringly prostituted their Power, and acted in Defiance of those Laws which had been made and provided for the Security and Welfare of the Subjects of this Kingdom; and also most unlawfully, wickedly, and audaciously to represent the said House of Commons as a Court of Inquisition; and most impudently to insinuate as if the Commitment of the said Alexander Murray to his Majesty's said Gaol of Newgate was founded in Violence and Oppression, and by that Means to arraign the public Justice and Proceedings of the said House, and to bring all the Commons of this Kingdom in Parliament assembled into an ill and bad Opinion, and into the utmost Hatred and Contempt, with all the Subjects of this Kingdom; and to raise, excite, and create most groundless and unreasonable Fears and Apprehensions in the Minds of all the said Subjects, as if the Rights and Liberties of all the Subjects of this Kingdom, and the very Constitution of the Kingdom itself, were in the utmost Peril and Danger of being totally subverted and overturned from an excessive and wanton Exercise of Power claimed by the said Commons; and thereby to move, incite, and stir up all the Subjects of this Kingdom in a most unwarrantable Manner to vindicate, maintain, and assert their said Rights and Liberties, without the least Reason, Colour, or Pretence for the same; and also by that Means to molest and disturb the happy State and the public Peace and Tranquillity of this Kingdom, at present so firmly and well established under the mild and gentle Government and Administration of our said present Sovereign Lord the King; upon the 29th Day of June, in the twenty-fifth Year of the Reign of our said present Sovereign Lord George the Second, by the Grace of God, of Great-Britain, France and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, and so forth, with Force and Arms at London aforesaid, (that is to say) at the Parish of St. Dunstan in the West, within the Ward of Farringdon Without, in London aforesaid, a certain wicked, false, scandalous, seditious, and malicious Libel, intituled, "The Case of the Hon. Alex. Murray, Esq; (meaning the said Alexander Murray, Esq; herein above mentioned,) in an Appeal to the People of Great-Britain; more particularly, the Inhabitants of the City and Liberty of Westminster," did most unlawfully, wickedly, seditiously, and maliciously, print and publish, and did cause and procure to be printed and published: In which said Libel, of and concerning the House of Commons of this Kingdom in Parliament assembled, and also of and concerning the said Alexander Murray, are contained (amongst other Things) divers wicked, false, feigned, scandalous, seditious, and malicious Matters, (that is to say) in one Part thereof according to the Tenor following, (to wit,) "Whatever Air of Importance a Person may appear to assume by thinking his particular Hardships a proper Object of the public Attention; yet there are Instances, wherein the public and private

* Memorandum. He is called all the Way in the Information John Owen, whereas his Name is William Owen. His Council at the Trial took no Notice of the Misnomer, intending if he had been found guilty (as I am informed) to have moved this Misnomer in Arrest of Judgment.

“ Interests are so intimately connected, that to “ let the latter pass unnoticed, would imply a “ tacit Resignation of the former. Upon this “ Principle, the Case of Mr. Murray (meaning
 “ the said Alexander Murray) may, without any “ Imputation of Vanity, be deemed worthy the “ Consideration of his Fellow-Subjects, (meaning
 “ the Subjects of this Kingdom): For though he “ alone may, hitherto, have felt the Weight of “ the Punishment, it is not known how soon
 “ they may experience the fatal Effects of the “ Precedent, — A Precedent founded on the “ most open Violation of the Constitution, the “ most daring Prostitution of Power, and in “ Defiance of those Laws provided for the Secu“ rity and Welfare of a free People, (again “ meaning the Subjects of this Kingdom). But what “ renders this Appeal, from a Sentence of the “ Representatives, (*meaning the said Order * of this* “ Kingdom so assembled in Parliament as aforesaid,
 “ by virtue of which he the said Alexander Murray
 “ was so committed to his Majesty's said Gaol of “ Newgate as aforesaid, for the Reasons aforesaid)
 “ to the candid Judgment of their Constituents, “ (meaning the Subjects of this Kingdom having a “ Right to vote in the Election of Members to serve
 “ in the Parliament of this Kingdom) still more “ necessary, is, the peculiar Industry that has “ been practised, to impose upon the Public a “ false Representation of the Offence, (meaning
 “ the said Misbehaviour and Contempt for which he
 “ the said Alexander Murray was so committed as “ aforesaid) in order, if possible, to justify the “ unexampled Barbarity of the Prosecution:
 “ For whatever may have been the Pretence of “ vindicating the Honour and Dignity of a “ particular House, (meaning the House of Commons
 “ of this Kingdom so assembled in Parliament as “ aforesaid) it will too plainly appear, that greater “ Regard has been had to support the private “ Pique and personal Resentment of a certain “ turbulent Statesman; whose Ambition im-
 “ patient of Controul, and whose Avarice ab-
 “ horrent of Expence, determined him to offer
 “ up some exemplary Sacrifice to his devoted “ Thousands, and an impious Opposition to his
 “ all-sovereign Command.” And in another “ Part thereof, according to the Tenor following,
 “ (to wit,) “ The Inhabitants of Westminster,
 “ alarmed at the unconstitutional Proceedings “ carried on during the late Election, (meaning
 “ the late Election of a Member to serve in the “ present Parliament of this Kingdom for the City
 “ and Liberty of Westminster, in the said County
 “ of Middlesex) and exasperated to find a Repre“ sentative imposed on them by the dictatorial “ Authority of one Man in Opposition to a “ scrutinized Majority, had Recourse to the “ House of Commons, (meaning the House of “ Commons of this Kingdom then assembled in Par- “ liament) flattering themselves that august As“ sembly would vindicate their invaded Rights
 “ and Liberties, nor suffer the Invaders to escape
 “ with Impunity; accordingly a Petition (meaning
 “ a Petition of the Burgesses and Inhabitants of the “ said City and Liberty) was presented, complain“ ing of a false Return, (meaning the Return of
 “ the Member at the said Election to serve in the “ present Parliament of this Kingdom for the said
 “ City and Liberty). — The d—l Faction, con“ scious of their illegal Practices, and appre-

“ hending a Detection of them would inevitably “ be the Consequence of a free Inquiry into the “ Merits of the Election, (again meaning the
 “ said Election of a Member to serve in the present
 “ Parliament of this Kingdom for the said City and “ Liberty) determined at all Events to put a “ Stop to the Prosecution of it, (meaning the said
 “ Petition;) and, in order to strike the Peti“ tioners with Terror, prevailed on their trusty “ Friend the High-Bailiff (meaning one Peter
 “ Leigh, Esquire, the then High-Bailiff of the said
 “ City and Liberty, who was the proper Returning “ Officer at the said Election) to assume the laud“ able Character of Informer, and complain of “ some high Crimes and Misdemeanors com“ mitted against his sacred Person; but the more “ effectually to answer the Purpose, took especial “ Care that the Objects of this Complaint should “ be some principal Witnesses in Support of the “ Petition, (again meaning the said Petition of the “ said Burgesses and Inhabitants of the City and “ Liberty aforesaid, against the said Return so made as “ aforesaid). However, as the Accusation against “ the High-Bailiff (again meaning the said Peter
 “ Leigh, then High-Bailiff of the said City and “ Liberty) was antecedent to his Complaint, it
 “ was thought, in Point of Regularity and “ Justice, that the Consideration of the latter “ should be postponed till the Determination of “ the former; more particularly as the Offences “ alledged to have been committed against this “ Magistrate (again meaning the said Peter Leigh)
 “ must necessarily appear upon hearing the Me“ rits of the Petition. This having produced a “ Debate, and the S—r (meaning Speaker,
 “ that is to say, meaning the Right Honourable “ Arthur Onslow, Esq; then Speaker of the House
 “ of Commons of this Kingdom) being called upon
 “ to give his Opinion in Point of Form and “ Order, he (again meaning the said Speaker) “ declared, That, To begin by Inquiry into the “ Complaint of the High-Bailiff (again meaning
 “ the said Peter Leigh, then High-Bailiff of “ the said City and Liberty as aforesaid) was “ not only contrary to the Order and Method of “ Proceeding in that House, (again meaning the “ said House of Commons) but of every other
 “ Court of Justice, and inconsistent with Justice “ itself. Though these Reasons might have
 “ some Prevalence with Part of the House,
 “ (again meaning the said House of Commons so
 “ assembled in Parliament as aforesaid) neverthe-
 “ less a Majority determined, that the High-“ Bailiff's Complaint (again meaning the said
 “ Complaint of the said Peter Leigh, then High- “ Bailiff of the said City and Liberty as aforesaid)
 “ should be first heard, which if not sufficient to “ terrify the Petitioners (again meaning the said
 “ Burgesses and Inhabitants of the said City and “ Liberty) from their Pursuit of Justice, would
 “ at least produce the convenient Effect (to speak
 “ in the Phrase of an inferior Court) of sinking
 “ some material Evidence. Thus, by a Kind of “ Parliamentary Legerdemain, the Accused be“ came the Accuser, and the Witness had the “ Mortification to find himself conjured into
 “ the Place of the Culprit. This equitable “ Determination brought Mr. Murray (again “ meaning the said Alexander Murray) to the “ Bar, (meaning the Bar of the said House of “ Commons then assembled in Parliament as afore-

* Whether it should not be “ the said Order of the House of Commons of this Kingdom, &c.”

“ said;) where, in Support of the grievous Charge
 “ exhibited against him by the High-Bailiff,
 “ (again meaning the said Peter Leigh, then High-“ Bailiff of the said City and Liberty) the follow“ ing Witnesses were produced; and first, Mr.
 “ Baldwin (Deputy-Bailiff) and his Son appeared,
 “ who declared, That Mr. Murray (again mean“ ing the said Alexander Murray) came to their “ House, and said, that he was resolved that the “ High-Bailiff should not smuggle an Election; and “ that he and a thousand more had sworn, he (again
 “ meaning the said Peter Leigh, then High-Bailiff
 “ as aforesaid) should make the Declaration in
 “ the middle of Covent-Garden, (meaning Covent-
 “ Garden in the Parish of St. Paul Covent-Garden,
 “ in the said County of Middlesex, and within “ the City and Liberty aforesaid). The Truth
 “ of the former Part of this Accusation Mr.
 “ Murray (again meaning the said Alexander
 “ Murray) was ingenuous enough to confess;
 “ —and indeed, if this Species of Parliamentary “ Smuggling was found necessary to be en“ couraged for any private Reasons of State,
 “ no Wonder an actual Attempt to prevent it “ should be deemed culpable by those at the “ Helm: — But as in our Days this cannot even “ be supposed, surely the mere saying a Man “ should not do what he ought not to do, is
 “ a Crime of such a Nature, to which no Le“ gislators have even yet thought proper of “ annexing a Penalty. With respect to the “ other Part, Mr. Gascoigne, and Mr. Carne the “ High-Constable, Gentlemen entirely disin“ terested, testified, that they were present, and “ heard the former Words, yet they never heard
 “ the latter Expression; and what afforded the “ strongest presumptive Evidence against such a “ Declaration, was, that it evidently appeared
 “ no such Purpose was ever intended to be “ executed; or how easy would it have been
 “ for Mr. Murray (again meaning the said
 “ Alexander Murray) with his thousand Volun“ teers, to have secured the Person of this “ Magistrate, (again meaning the said Peter Leigh,
 “ then High-Bailiff as aforesaid) when he met
 “ him (again meaning the said Peter Leigh)
 “ going to the Hustings unsupported by a single “ Peace-Officer or any other Attendant? But in “ order to turn the Scale entirely in Favour of “ Mr. Murray’s Innocence, the High-Bailiff “ himself was candid enough to acknowledge at
 “ the Bar, (again meaning the Bar of the said
 “ House of Commons so assembled in Parliament
 “ as aforesaid) that meeting Mr. Murray (again “ meaning the said Alexander Murray) in his “ Way from Baldwin’s to the Hustings, upon “ being asked the Question, he (again meaning
 “ the said Peter Leigh) did then declare, That
 “ no Man could behave with more good Manners “ towards him (again meaning the said Peter
 “ Leigh) than Mr. Murray, (again meaning the “ said Alexander Murray). Behold the next
 “ Witness coming forth in the Character of a “ Journeyman Button-trimmer, and declaring,
 “ That he saw Mr. Murray (again meaning the “ said Alexander Murray) at the Head of a great “ Mob, who meeting a Chimney-Sweeper, asked him,
 “ Who he was for? — The Chimney-Sweeper an- “ swering, For Sir George, (meaning Sir George
 “ Vandeput, Baronet, then a Candidate at the said
 “ Election of a Member to serve in the present
 “ Parliament for the said City and Liberty)—

“ Mr. Murray (again meaning the said Alexander
 “ Murray) replied, Then you are an honest Fellow,
 “ but Lord Trentham (meaning the Honourable “ Granville Leveson Gower, Esquire, commonly “ called Lord Viscount Trentham, the other “ Candidate at the said Election) and the High- “ Bailiff (again meaning the said Peter Leigh,
 “ then High-Bailiff of the said City and Liberty
 “ as aforesaid) are two great Villains, or two great
 “ damn’d Villains and Rascals. What delectable “ Dialogue! — Evidence how suited to the So“ lemnity of a Senatorial Inquiry! — Must not
 “ the People (meaning the People of this Kingdom)
 “ entertain the highest Opinion of their legislative “ Deputies, (meaning the Commons of this Kingdom
 “ in this present Parliament assembled) when they “ see them seriously attending, Auribus erectis, to “ such important Discoveries? — But unluckily,
 “ had this heinous Article of Accusation the “ Sanction of Truth to enforce it, what Matter
 “ does it afford for the Cognizance of this Judi“ cature? (meaning the said House of Commons so “ assembled in Parliament as aforesaid.) Especially,
 “ as it is allowed to have passed long after the “ Declaration (meaning the Declaration of the said
 “ Peter Leigh, the said High-Bailiff, by which “ the said Granville Leveson Gower, Esquire, “ commonly called Lord Viscount Trentham, was “ declared duly elected a Member to serve in the “ present Parliament for the said City and Liberty)
 “ was made? Persuaded I am, had the Noble “ Lord himself (again meaning the said Granville
 “ Leveson Gower, Esquire, commonly called Lord
 “ Viscount Trentham) given the least Credit to
 “ it, his punctilious Delicacy in Point of Honour
 “ would have expected a personal Explication
 “ from the Author of so scandalous an Indignity;
 “ nor is it to be imagined, a Person (again
 “ meaning the said Granville Leveson Gower,
 “ Esquire, commonly called Lord Viscount Trentham)
 “ who so valiantly manifested his Heroism in a “ late French Affair, would meanly buckle on
 “ the Armour of Privilege, and adopt a public
 “ Persecution in the Place of a private Resent“ ment. The next Authority produced was that “ of a Tripe-man, who passing along Henrietta- “ Street, at the same Time the High-Bailiff was “ going to the Cross-Keys, heard somebody behind
 “ him say, Is there no body will knock the Dog’s
 “ (meaning the said Peter Leigh, then High-“ Bailiff as aforesaid, his) Brains out; when “ clapping the High-Bailiff’s Footman on the Shoul- “ der, he told him, That is he who uttered those “ terrible Words, and then the Footman informed “ him that Person’s Name was Murray, (meaning
 “ the said Alexander Murray). What a Janus-
 “ headed Witness is here! who from hearing “ Words uttered behind him in a Crowd, could “ identify the Person who spoke them? Did his “ Ears-furnish him with the Knowledge of the “ personal Figure of Mr. Murray, whom he does “ not pretend to know before the Footman’s “ Information? Or what kind of Inspiration “ enabled him to discover, that the particular “ Dog’s Brains meant by this Exclamation be“ longed to the High-Bailiff? But were it “ possible to pay any Regard to such incon“ sistent Evidence, still the Commission of this “ horrid Offence must have been at least two “ Hours after all Business relating to the Sanctum
 “ Sanctorum of St. Stephen’s Chapel was finished; “ consequently subject to the Notice of some “ less

“ less sacred Tribunal: — However ridiculous
 “ the Matter contained in these two last Articles
 “ of Impeachment may appear, it cannot be “ denied, but that it must have received a very “ notable Weight of Authority from the eminent “ Characters of the Witnesses, who, from their “ Situation in Life, must be concluded to have “ Understandings not to be imposed upon, and “ Principles of Honour not to be violated.
 “ What then will it avail the Cause of Mr.
 “ Murray with the Public, any more than with
 “ the Senate, (again meaning the said House of “ Commons so assembled in Parliament as aforesaid)
 “ to oppose the unquestionable Testimony of “ our Button-trimmer and Tripe-man with that “ of a Noble Lord, an Honourable Baronet,
 “ and a worthy Barrister? Nevertheless, as the “ same convincing Motives of Condemnation
 “ may not possibly influence the Verdict without “ Doors, I shall take the Liberty to produce the “ Authority of Lord Carpenter, who was pleased “ to declare at the Bar, (again meaning the said “ Bar of the said House of Commons so assembled in “ Parliament as aforesaid) that his Lordship and
 “ Mr. Murray (*again meaning the said Alexander
 “ Murray*) were together from the Time the “ Declaration (*again meaning the said Declaration
 “ of the said Peter Leigh, the said High-Bailiff,
 “ by which the said Granville Leveson Gower,
 “ Esquire, commonly called Lord Viscount Trentham,
 “ was declared duly elected as aforesaid*) was made
 “ till Dinner; that they were in Bedford-Street,
 “ where this great Mob was by the Button-
 “ trimmer said to be assembled, but never heard
 “ Mr. Murray (*again meaning the said Alexander
 “ Murray*) say any thing scurrilous of Lord “ Trentham (*again meaning the said Granville
 “ Leveson Gower, Esquire, commonly called Lord
 “ Viscount Trentham*) to a Chimney-sweeper or “ any other Person whatever. His Lordship “ farther said, that he was Arm-in-Arm with
 “ Mr. Murray (*again meaning the said Alexander
 “ Murray*) when the High-Bailiff passed close
 “ by them through the Church-Yard to the “ Cross-Keys, (meaning the said Tavern, commonly “ called or known by the Name of the Cross-Keys “ Tavern) which was near two Hours after the “ Declaration, (*again meaning the said Declaration
 “ so made by the said Peter Leigh, the said High-
 “ Bailiff as aforesaid*) but that he never heard
 “ Mr. Murray utter the Exclamation laid to his “ Charge by the Tripe-man; and that if he had “ made use of any such Expressions, apprehended
 “ they could not have passed unnoticed by him;
 “ that so far from inciting the People to knock
 “ the High-Bailiff’s (*again meaning the said Peter
 “ Leigh, then High-Bailiff of the said City and “ Liberty as aforesaid, his*) Brains out, his Lord“ ship declared, Mr. Murray (again meaning the “ said Alexander Murray) advised them, To “ leave him (again meaning the said Peter Leigh)
 “ to the Remorse of his own Conscience; assuring “ them, that would be a more severe Punishment than “ any they could inflict. Sir John Tyrrell and Mr.
 “ Gascoigne, who were likewise close by Lord “ Carpenter and Mr. Murray (again meaning the “ said Alexander Murray) when the High-Bailiff “ passed from the Church to the Tavern, were “ called to corroborate this Evidence; which, in “ an Assembly where most of its Members were
 “ so well acquainted with his Lordship’s Veracity
 “ and Honour, may seem an Act of Super-

“ rogation. In the Course of this Examination,
 “ Lord Carpenter having said, that he and Mr.
 “ Murray were together all the Time, from the “ Declaration till Dinner, and Sir John Tyrrell
 “ being asked, if his Lordship was with Mr.
 “ Murray when he first saw him, and answering
 “ he believed not, one of the Members (*meaning
 “ one of the Members of the said House of Commons
 “ so assembled in Parliament as aforesaid*) (remark“ able for his insuperable Modesty) exulted on
 “ his Sagacity, in having, as he imagined, a “ notorious Contradiction in the Evidence; but “ when it is considered, that Sir John Tyrrell “ never saw Lord Carpenter till that Day, it will “ require no great Stretch of Credulity, to believe “ that Sir John might talk a Minute or two with “ Mr. Murray in a Crowd, without particularly “ remarking a Person who was with him, and “ who at that Time was an absolute Stranger to “ him. Lo! from this Mountain of Contra“ diction, ridiculus mus nascitur; which however “ was scandalously urged as sufficient to in“ validate the Testimony of two such Honourable “ Persons! To what pitiful Shifts must this “ Faction be reduced, when obliged to have “ Recourse to a Quibble, the most contemptible
 “ legal Pettyfogger would blush to be guilty of?
 “ The Reason of Lord Carpenter’s and Mr.
 “ Murray’s staying so long was, to use their “ Endeavours to prevent any Insult being offered “ to the High-Bailiff; not perhaps out of any “ Regard to the extraordinary Merits of that “ worthy Gentleman, but being sensible that “ they should be made the Victims to expiate
 “ any unlucky Accident that might happen; and “ that this Apprehension was not ill grounded,
 “ evidently appears from the Fate of Mr. Murray,
 “ even when no Accident happened at all. Now “ appears the celebrated Mr. Pond, who is to “ give the Coup de Grace. — Hear him then alarm
 “ the House (again meaning the said House of “ Commons so assembled in Parliament as aforesaid)
 “ by declaring, *That he heard Mr. Murray say
 “ in the Mount Coffee-house some Days after the “ Declaration* (*again meaning the said Declaration
 “ so made by the said Peter Leigh, the said High-“ Bailiff as aforesaid*) was made, that if his “ Advice had been taken, and the Rails of the Portico “ cut down, the High-Bailiff (*again meaning the
 “ said Peter Leigh, then High-Bailiff of the said
 “ City and Liberty as aforesaid*) durst not have “ returned Lord Trentham. Heavy Charge!
 “ Nor can the Truth of it admit of any Dispute,
 “ when authenticated by the Declaration of so
 “ worthy a Person, honoured with the Confidence
 “ of the highest-born Gamblers, and constantly
 “ employed by them in the commendable Qua“ lity of Bet-Broker; nay, who during the Time
 “ of the Election (*meaning the said late Election
 “ of a Member to serve in the present Parliament
 “ of this Kingdom for the said City and Liberty*)
 “ is said to have very industriously exercised his “ Profession, by laying considerable Sums for
 “ the Noble Candidate himself on the Event of “ his Return, (meaning his Return as a Member to “ serve in the present Parliament of this Kingdom).
 “ But how atrocious the Matter contained in this “ Accusation, to suppose (so long after) that to “ have happened which did not happen, certainly “ justifies the Extremity of Punishment, as the “ Supposition of a Fact is doubtless more crimi“ nal than the Execution of it. Had the Iron “ Rails

“ Rails been cut down, what ought to have been “ the Consequence? Mr. Murray ought to have “ been punished. But the Iron Rails were not “ cut down; — what is the Consequence? Mr.
 “ Murray (again meaning the said Alexander
 “ Murray) is punished. Excellent Reasoning!
 “ righteous Determination! Could the bare In“ timation that he was the Adviser of such a “ curious Stratagem be sufficient to condemn
 “ him, (again meaning the said Alexander Murray)
 “ when it does not appear that he ever actually “ gave this Advice to any Person whatever, or “ that the least Attempt was made in conse“ quence of it? Who knows not that an Overt-“ Act is required to the Conviction of a Person
 “ for High Treason against the King himself?
 “ yet behold! no such legal Nicety is thought “ necessary to constitute a lesa Majestas against “ the Honourable House, (again meaning the said
 “ House of Commons so assembled in Parliament as “ asore said). It is observable throughout the “ whole Course of the Evidence, that not so “ much as any one Act whatever is pretended to “ have been committed by Mr. Murray, not even “ any oral Offence, (except that at Baldwin’s, “ with which the High-Bailiff (again meaning the
 “ said Peter Leigh, then High-Bailiff of the said
 “ City and Liberty as asore said) was not, till long “ after, acquainted) which was not subsequent “ to the Declaration. How then could the “ Returning Officer (again meaning the said Peter “ Leigh) produce it in Support of a Charge, “ founded on delaying the Election, (again
 “ meaning the said Election of a Member to serve “ in the present Parliament of this Kingdom for the “ said City and Liberty) by obstructing him in “ the Execution of his Office? (meaning the “ Office of the said Peter Leigh as High-Bailiff
 “ of the said City and Liberty). Did he (again
 “ meaning the said Peter Leigh) cunningly dis“ cover Obstructions after the Completion of his “ Duty, which he was not sensible of, during
 “ the Exercise of it? Or by what Kind of Logic
 “ does it follow, that the treasonable Words
 “ against the Noble Lord’s Honour, the terrify“ ing Exclamation against the High-Bailiff’s
 “ Brains, or the Coffee-house Supposition con“ cerning the Rails, could occasion this criminal “ Delay in the Election, (again meaning the said
 “ Election of a Member to serve in the present
 “ Parliament of this Kingdom for the said City and “ Liberty) when all must have happened long
 “ after the arbitrary Fiat had passed the hallowed “ Lips of one Member-making Magistrate?
 “ Such is the Charge, and such is the Proof
 “ of it, that induced the Protectors of British “ Liberty (again meaning the said House of Commons
 “ so assembled in Parliament as asore said) to con“ demn a British Subject (again meaning the said
 “ Alexander Murray) to close Confinement in a
 “ loathsome Prison, appropriated for the Re“ ception of Thieves and Murderers, with every “ other Species of the meanest and most profligate “ Offenders. But even this severe Exertion of “ Power was deemed too favourable, and must “ be embittered by the additional Cruelty of “ some still more mortifying Circumstances.
 “ Mr. Murray (again meaning the said Alexander
 “ Murray) must receive this hard Sentence “ (meaning the Order of the said House of Commons
 “ so assembled in Parliament as asore said, by virtue
 “ of which he the said Alexander Murray was so

“ committed and sent to his Majesty’s said Gaol of “ Newgate as asore said) upon his Knees. Though
 “ his Resolution might enable him to support
 “ the former Part of the Judgment, (again mean- “ ing the Order asore said) his Spirit would by no “ means suffer him to pay a slavish Submission
 “ to the latter; for had this reverential Token
 “ of Submission been made the Price of his “ Acquittal, he should have thought the Penalty
 “ at least equalled the Degree of his Guilt;
 “ much less could he think of making so humble
 “ an Acknowledgment of so extraordinary a “ Condemnation. However, this Refusal being “ held a high Insult on the Dignity of the House,
 “ (again meaning the said House of Commons so
 “ assembled in Parliament as asore said) a fresh
 “ Article of Pains and Penalties was invented,
 “ and the Use of Pen, Ink, and Paper prohi“ bited; which, though in Cases of Conspiracy
 “ and Treason, had been practised by way of “ Precaution, was seldom known to have been “ inflicted by way of Punishment. The d——l
 “ Faction, finding the Vengeance they had pro“ cured far from being justified by the Sense of “ the Public, industriously endeavoured to pro“ pagate an erroneous Belief, that the Severity “ proceeded merely from Mr. Murray’s Ob-
 “ stinacy, when on the Face of the Proceedings
 “ it appears, that every Part of this tremendous “ Sentence (again meaning the Order asore said)
 “ (except what relates to Pen, Ink, and Paper)
 “ was resolved two Hours before it could possibly “ be known, that Mr. Murray (again meaning the “ said Alexander Murray) would be guilty of so
 “ sacrilegious a Contumacy, as to refuse Knee-
 “ worship to the assumed Divinity of his Judges, “ (again meaning the Commons of this Kingdom so “ assembled in Parliament as asore said). While
 “ Mr. Murray (again meaning the said Alexander
 “ Murray) (in Custody of a Messenger) waited
 “ the Determination of the House, (again meaning
 “ the said House of Commons so assembled in Parlia- “ ment as asore said) some Friends came to him,
 “ and, with a generous Concern, acquainted
 “ him with the former Part of his Judgment
 “ (again meaning the Order asore said): And though
 “ he (again meaning the said Alexander Murray)
 “ might possibly entertain some Reliance on the “ Equity of those, (again meaning the Commons of
 “ this Kingdom so assembled in Parliament as asore-
 “ said) who were chosen by the People (meaning
 “ the People of this Kingdom, having a Right to “ vote in the Election of Members to serve in the “ Parliament of this Kingdom) to defend their “ Liberties and Properties; yet he was the less “ surprized, having been informed, that his “ Fate was determined some Weeks before at “ White’s; where very large Sums had been laid “ upon his Commitment, (meaning his the said
 “ Alexander Murray’s Commitment to his Majesty’s “ said Gaol of Newgate as asore said) and was “ advised to fly his Country, in order to evade
 “ the Fury of these sporting Legislators, who it
 “ was apprehended might not pay the most “ conscientious Regard to their public Trust,
 “ when placed in Competition with their private “ Advantage. With what Indignation must this “ Sentence inspire every Reader, who has im“ bibed the least Spark of public Spirit! And “ how much more will he be alarmed when “ acquainted with the rancorous Execution of it?
 “ Let us then attend this injured Gentleman

“ (again meaning the said Alexander Murray) to
 “ his Dungeon; at which arriving at about Four “ o’Clock in the Morning, the sixth Day of “ February, notwithstanding he had been ill for “ several Days before, he was conducted into a “ Room (meaning a Room in his said Majesty’s “ Gaol of Newgate) the Windows of which were “ shattered, and the Walls plentifully bedewed
 “ with Moisture, proceeding from the unwhole-
 “ some Situation of the Place, and not having “ had an unhappy Tenant in it during some “ Years. These unsalutary Circumstances soon
 “ encreased his Indisposition, and the third Day “ brought on a violent Fever. Mr. Murray
 “ (again meaning the said Alexander Murray) sent “ the Person who looks after the Convicts (and “ was likewise the only Attendant allowed) to “ procure him (again meaning the said Alexander “ Murray) the Assistance of an Apothecary or “ Surgeon; but this Benefit, which was never “ refused the most flagitious Offender, was not “ to be indulged him. Mr. Akerman (meaning
 “ one Richard Akerman, Keeper of his Majesty’s
 “ said Gaol of Newgate) pleaded the peremptory “ Orders he had received from the House (again “ meaning the said House of Commons so assembled in “ Parliament as aforesaid) in Excuse of his Re“ fusal.” And in another Part thereof according “ to the Tenor following, (to wit,) “ Ten Weeks
 “ did Mr. Murray (again meaning the said
 “ Alexander Murray) support this rigorous “ Treatment, debarred the Sight of any Face he “ had ever seen before, except that of his “ Doctor’s, while (though in this Condition)
 “ treble Doors were thought necessary to secure “ him, the numerous Locks and Bolts of which “ furnished a Sound, not much less entertaining
 “ than would have seemed that of his Passing-
 “ Bell. About the middle of April, Mr. Murray “ (again meaning the said Alexander Murray) was “ again seized in such a Manner that his Attend“ ant, or rather Guardian, who had been tried
 “ for his Life, and whose Employment consisted
 “ in locking up the Convicts in their Cells, “ (meaning the Cells in his Majesty’s said Gaol of “ Newgate); an Occupation not very apt to “ inspire the tenderest Sentiments: Yet, I say,
 “ even this very Fellow was so melted with Pity
 “ and Compassion, to behold Mr. Murray’s “ (meaning the said Alexander Murray his) “ Agonies, occasioned by an Inflammation in his “ Bowels, that he would not stir from him that “ Night. Lord Elibank calling next Morning
 “ to inquire after his Brother’s (meaning the said
 “ Alexander Murray his) Health, our Prefs-“ Yard Valet expressed his Apprehensions that
 “ he (again meaning the said Alexander Murray)
 “ could not live; but being informed the Doctor “ (meaning one Dr. Lamont, Physician to the said “ Alexander Murray) had been there as soon as
 “ the Prison Gates were opened, his Lordship “ immediately went to him, and requested he “ would acquaint the House (again meaning the
 “ said House of Commons so assembled in Parliament
 “ as aforesaid) with his Brother’s (meaning the “ said Alexander Murray his) imminent Danger.
 “ Upon Dr. Lamont’s Representation, Mr. Palmer, “ Deputy-Serjeant, attended by a Messenger,
 “ came to Newgate (meaning his Majesty’s said “ Gaol of Newgate) in the Evening, with an “ Order to move Mr. Murray (again meaning the “ said Alexander Murray) directly. At their “ Entrance they found him (again meaning the “ said Alexander Murray) upon the Bed, and

 “ the Sheets, which had been soaked through, “ reeking at the Fire. Mr. Murray (again
 “ meaning the said Alexander Murray) inquired
 “ of Mr. Palmer the Reason of so sudden a “ Resolution? who replied, it was owing to the “ Physician’s Information of his Danger, and “ that the House, (again meaning the said House of “ Commons so assembled in Parliament as aforesaid)
 “ from its wonted Humanity, had ordered him
 “ (again meaning the said Alexander Murray) to “ be carried to a Messenger’s. And surely,
 “ removing a Person from Newgate to Westminster,
 “ with an Inflammation in his Bowels, and in a “ high Fever, must be allowed a very extraordi“ nary Act of Humanity! However, the Force
 “ of Mr. Palmer’s Rhetoric was not sufficient to “ prevail on Mr. Murray (again meaning the said
 “ Alexander Murray) to be of that Opinion;
 “ who absolutely refused to accept of this un-
 “ merciful Mercy; though there is Reason to “ believe his Refusal would have availed him “ little, had not his Physician, (again meaning the “ said Dr. Lamont) who chanced to be present, “ declared his Opinion, that a Removal would “ be attended with certain Death. This Au“ thority justified Mr. Palmer for not putting his “ Warrant in Execution; and upon Mr. Murray’s “ (meaning the said Alexander Murray his) asking “ him what the House (again meaning the said
 “ House of Commons so assembled in Parliament as “ aforesaid) intended to do with him (again “ meaning the said Alexander Murray) at the “ Messenger’s, he answered, To confine him
 “ (again meaning the said Alexander Murray) there “ till his Recovery; but that no body was to be “ admitted to him, (again meaning the said
 “ Alexander Murray); and if he (again meaning
 “ the said Alexander Murray) did not then make “ his Submission upon his Knees, he (again “ meaning the said Alexander Murray) would “ be remanded back to Newgate, (again meaning
 “ his Majesty’s said Gaol of Newgate). As the “ ten Weeks severe Sufferings had not been able “ to convince Mr. Murray (again meaning the “ said Alexander Murray) of the Heinousness of “ his Offence, he replied, that he would not “ consent to it upon such Terms, and that he “ would rather die ten thousand Deaths than “ violate his Conscience by a Confession of “ Guilt; and, by a scandalous Submission, give
 “ a Sanction to Proceedings (meaning the said
 “ Proceedings of the said House of Commons against “ the said Alexander Murray) so manifestly
 “ founded in Oppression and Injustice.” And
 “ in another Part thereof according to the Tenor
 “ following, (to wit,) “ Let us next behold this “ Gentleman (again meaning the said Alexander “ Murray) appealing from the Violence of “ Power (meaning from the Order aforesaid) to
 “ the Protection of Law, and claiming the “ Benefit of that sacred Act, (meaning the Act of “ Parliament made in the thirty-first Year of the “ Reign of his late Majesty King Charles the Second, “ intituled, An Act for the better securing the “ Liberty of the Subject, and for Prevention of “ Imprisonment beyond the Seas,) which, how“ ever it may sometimes have been suspended for
 “ the public Safety, has scarce ever been violated
 “ on private Occasions. Mr. Murray (again “ meaning the said Alexander Murray) having “ determined

“ determined to apply for his Habeas Corpus, “ Council was first to be procured; but who “ would imagine, that amongst the Swarm of “ Legal Orators, not one of any Eminence was “ to be found, who had Resolution enough to “ engage in the Cause of so obnoxious a Client?
 “ The British In—n (meaning Inquisition, that “ is to say, meaning the said House of Commons so “ assembled in Parliament as aforesaid) had struck
 “ such a Panic throughout the Regions of Law
 “ and Justice, that even the all-powerful Fee
 “ was unable to subdue the Timidity of the “ mercenary Professors; but at the Request of “ Lord Elibank, an honourable Gentleman*, who “ had long abandoned the Business of the Bar, “ stood forth, and gloriously despising any “ Penalty he might incur for vindicating the “ invaded Laws and Constitution of his Country, “ moved the Court of King’s-Bench, that Mr.
 “ Murray (again meaning the said Alexander
 “ Murray) might be brought up and admitted
 “ to Bail.” And in another Part thereof ac“ cording to the Tenor following, (to wit,) “ Though by this Application Mr. Murray
 “ (again meaning the said Alexander Murray)
 “ was rescued for a few Hours from his Con“ finement, it was only to hear the pious Judges
 “ of that Court pronounce the mortifying Sen“ tence of his Return to his Dungeon; founded “ upon this Principle of Law, That the House of “ Commons (meaning the House of Commons of “ this Kingdom in Parliament assembled) was a “ superior Court of Judicature to the King’s- “ Bench. Had the Constitution (meaning the “ Constitution of this Kingdom) complimented that “ House (again meaning the House of Commons of “ this Kingdom in Parliament assembled) with such “ executive Authority, it would certainly have “ been empowered to examine upon Oath; a “ Circumstance absolutely necessary in the Ad“ ministration of Justice. What then is become “ of this boasted Barrier of British Liberty, the “ Habeas Corpus Act? (again meaning the Act of “ Parliament herein above-mentioned). What shall “ distinguish Britons from those who groan under
 “ the most arbitrary Governments, if subject to “ the like tyrannical Acts of Oppression? And “ what shall defend a free People (meaning the “ People of Great-Britain) from these, whenever “ their Representatives (again meaning the Com- “ mons of this Kingdom in Parliament assembled) “ shall think fit to constitute themselves their “ Judges, and wantonly inflict the severest Pains
 “ and Penalties by virtue of their mere Will and “ Pleasure? More especially, as from this awful “ Tribunal (again meaning the said House of Com- “ mons so assembled in Parliament as aforesaid) no
 “ Appeal is to be permitted, except to that only “ superior one of Heaven; and indeed who “ knows but even this might be tortured into a “ high Breach of Privilege, as arraigning the “ Omnipotence of their terrestrial Jurisdiction?
 “ (meaning the Jurisdiction of the said House of “ Commons so assembled in Parliament as aforesaid).”
 And in another Part thereof according to the Tenor following, (to wit,) “ If there lives
 “ any one so abandoned to a Love of Slavery,
 “ as to remain unmoved by this Narrative, I “ shall leave him in Possession of his Chains,
 “ and think them the most suitable Ornaments
 “ for so degenerate a Member of a free Country, “ (meaning Great-Britain). But satisfied I am,
 “ every uncorrupted Briton will be roused at a “ Scene much more becoming the Meridian of “ an Oriental Tyranny than the Region of British “ Liberty; and though the Injury done a private “ Subject of the Community (again meaning the “ said Alexander Murray) should make little “ Impression; yet, surely the Wound which the “ Constitution itself (again meaning the Constitution
 “ of this Kingdom) has received through him
 “ (again meaning the said Alexander Murray)
 “ must awake the most alarming Apprehensions.
 “ What has been the Fate of one (again meaning
 “ the said Alexander Murray) may prove that of “ Thousands; especially when it is considered,
 “ that the Statesman is no less apt to quote the “ Authority of Precedent than the Lawyer:
 “ Who then, at any future Election, (meaning an “ Election of a Member to serve in the Parliament
 “ of this Kingdom) shall be hardy enough to “ exercise the Rights of a free Elector, (meaning
 “ a Subject of this Kingdom having a Right to “ vote in the Election of a Member to serve in “ the Parliament of this Kingdom) when even an “ Approach to the Hustings, without a minist-“ terial Passport, has been deemed so criminal?
 “ Who, hereafter, but must tamely acquiesce in
 “ the authoritative Decision of a Returning “ Officer, (meaning an Officer having a Right to “ return Members to serve in the Parliament of this “ Kingdom) when a regular Impeachment of it is “ held to be such a Parliamentary Profanation?
 “ These Essentials in their Creation once removed,
 “ must not a House of Commons (again meaning
 “ the House of Commons of this Kingdom in Parlia“ ment assembled) become rather a Turkish Divan
 “ than a British Representative? And when this “ Constitutional Battery, (again meaning the House
 “ of Commons so assembled in Parliament as aforesaid)
 “ raised to defend the People (meaning the People
 “ of Great-Britain) from the Attacks of arbitrary “ Power, shall, by the Intrigues of a State-
 “ Engineer, be once turned upon them, (again
 “ meaning the People of this Kingdom) what remains
 “ but to surrender at Discretion? — When one “ Part of the Legislature (again meaning the said
 “ House of Commons so assembled in Parliament as “ aforesaid) assumes a Privilege peculiar to an-
 “ other, or wrests the Cognizance of Causes
 “ from those Courts erected for the Deter“ mination of them, what Confusion will not “ arise in the System of Government? And in“ deed what Security the People (again meaning
 “ the People of Great-Britain) are to expect in “ such an Anarchy of Administration, the Case
 “ of Mr. Murray (again meaning the said Alex“ ander Murray) too fatally evinces. Though
 “ the Law of the Land has provided, that every “ Subject shall be tried by his Jury, have we “ not seen a particular Power (again meaning the
 “ said House of Commons so assembled in Parliament
 “ as aforesaid) uniting the three inconsistent
 “ Capacities of Judge, Jury, and Prosecutor?
 “ And though an express Provision has been “ made against excessive Pains and Penalties,
 “ have not the most severe been inflicted (mean“ ing inflicted upon the said Alexander Murray)
 “ even for no Offence? But to conclude in the “ Words of a Noble Author: “ This could not “ happen if there was the least Spirit among us,
 “ (again meaning the People of Great-Britain);
 “ but there is none. The Moderation we (again “ meaning the People of Great-Britain) have seen “ practised,

* Sir John Phillips, Bart.

“ practised, is Pusillanimity: Hence it comes that Corruption has spread and prevails. Consider then you (again meaning the People of Great-Britain) owe to your Country, (again meaning Great-Britain) to your Honour, to your Security, to the present and future Ages, that no Endeavours of yours be wanting to repair the Breach that is made, and is encreasing daily, in the Constitution, (again meaning the Constitution of this Kingdom) and to shut up, with all the Bars and Bolts of Laws, the principal Entries through which these Torrents of Corruption (and Oppression) have been let in upon us,” (again meaning the People of Great-Britain). To the great Scandal and Dishonour of all the Commons of this Kingdom in Parliament assembled, and in high Contempt of their Authority, to the great Disturbance of the public Peace and Tranquillity of this Kingdom, in Contempt of our said present Sovereign Lord the King and his Laws, to the evil and pernicious Example of all others in the like Case offending, and also against the Peace of our said present Sovereign Lord the King, his Crown, and Dignity. Whereupon the said Attorney-General of our said present Sovereign Lord the King, for our said present Sovereign Lord the King, prayeth the Consideration of the Court here in the Premises, and that due Process of Law may be awarded against him the said John Owen in this Behalf, to make him answer to our said present Sovereign Lord the King, touching and concerning the Premises aforesaid.

After Mr. Yorke had opened, the Attorney-General began with a Detail of the Westminster Election, between Lord Trentbam and Sir George Vandeput, with the ill Usage of the High-Bailiff in the Return. He then mentioned the House of Commons calling the Rioters to Account, of whom Mr. Murray he said was the principal; the Sentence on Mr. Murray to be given at the Bar of the House; how merciful for so atrocious a Crime; his Commitment to Newgate; his impudent Refusal to ask Pardon, which was to be Part of his Sentence; his bad State of Health in Newgate, which the House being informed of by his Friends, ordered him into the Custody of a Messenger, which was more than he deserved; his Refusal to be removed till the End of the Session, when the Law discharges him. “ Then appeared the most scandalous and astonishing Libel that ever appeared in the World. The Case of the Honourable Alexander Murray, Esq; in an Appeal to the People of Great-Britain; more particularly the Inhabitants of the City and Liberty of Westminster. The Accused now becomes the Accuser. In it is stated and contained Accusations of Partiality, Injustice, Corruption, and Barbarity, of the House of Commons. It accuses the House of committing a great Breach in our Laws; that House which is the Guardian of our Liberties, and the Protector of our Properties. It accuses also the King's-Bench, with overturning that Bulwark of our Liberties, the Habeas Corpus Act. Every one must be shocked that reads this wicked, diabolically wicked, Pamphlet. The Parliament meet again, and vote the Pamphlet a Libel: They vote it to be a false, malicious, infamous, scandalous, and seditious Libel, tending to create Confusion and Rebellion; at least, to sow the Seeds of Rebellion. And to me it is astonishing, how it could enter into the Mind or Heart of Man to write such a Libel. Now, Gentlemen, I shall shew to you the Nature of this Libel, and begin in this Order. 1. The Title. 2. The Introduction. 3. The State of the Case, and the Evidence laid before the House of Commons. 4. How considered, and in what Light he has put the Sentence of the Commons. 5. How wickedly and maliciously he has insinuated the Thing. And, 6. His Treatment of the Court of King's-Bench. “ First. What! — shall a Person appeal from the Judgment of that Court, who are the only Judges of Things belonging to them, the House of Commons, I mean. An Appeal! To whom? to a Mob? Must Justice be appealed from? To whom? to Injustice? Appeal to the good People of England, particularly the Inhabitants of Westminster! The House of Commons are the good People of England, being the Representatives of the People. The rest are — what? — nothing — unless it be a Mob. And what can be in a Mob but Confusion? But the clear Meaning of this Libel was an Appeal to Violence, in Fact; and to stigmatize the House; but he durst not speak plain. Then the Pamphlet tells you, that his Case is worthy the Consideration of his Fellow-Subjects; here he shews his Virulence. He says his Commitment is a Precedent founded on unparalleled Barbarity, striking at our Laws in a most shocking Manner. Then he charges the House with sinking material Evidence; which in Fact is accusing the House of Injustice. This is a Charge the most shocking, the most severe, and the most unjust and virulent, against the good, the tender House of Commons; that Safeguard of our Liberty, and Guardian of our Welfare. The next Accusation the Libeller brings against the House,

“ is, on their granting Mr. Murray’s Removal,
 “ on the Application of his Physicians, — in “ saying — they had a mind to kill Mr. Murray,
 “ by removing him in the midst of a raging “ Fever; and on Mr. Murray’s refusing to go
 “ in that Condition, the House, when his Phy“ sician had mastered the Distemper, ordered
 “ that none should see him. Next accusing “ another Court that never injured any one; a “ Court the most dignified by the Worthiness of “ the Members; the Court of King’s-Bench.
 “ Gentlemen, this Libel, to whosoever reads
 “ it, will be found the most pungent Invective
 “ that the Skill of Man could invent: I will not “ say the Skill, but the Wit, Art, and false “ Contrivance of Man, instigated by Satan: An “ indirect Pamphlet — though not said plain,
 “ yet understood; as being understood, is a
 “ Libel: And to say that this is not a Libel,
 “ is to say that there is no Justice, Equity, or “ Right in the World. There can be no Court
 “ of Justice, if the House of Commons is not;
 “ and if the House of Commons is not to be “ defended, and have Protection and Relief at “ Common Law, yourselves, your Houses, can“ not have the Protection of the Law. The “ Thing you, Gentlemen of the Jury, are to go on,
 “ is, whether the Case doth not mean the House of “ Commons; for we shall prove to you the Publi- “ cation: Then you must find the House is charged by “ this Pamphlet to have been guilty of the most “ daring Prostitution of Power. Can there be a “ greater Charge?”

Witnesses called.

Peter Beck swore he bought the Pamphlet of William Owen, the 28th of June, 1751, at Homer’s Head, near Temple-Bar. Sent by Ibbot to buy it, gave 1s. 6d. for two. — John Ibbot, Messenger to the Press, sent Peter Beck the 28th of June, to buy the Pamphlet; and on the 29th he took Owen into Custody, and seized several Pamphlets in his Shop. — Mealin, the 27th of June, 1751, went to Owen’s, by Order of his Master Cook, to buy them: But Owen said he had none by him, but he should have them when ready; and in the Afternoon, William Owen let him have twelve. — Cook, Bookseller, on the 27th of June, the first Time he saw the Pamphlet advertised, sent his Servant to buy them. — Langford and Shorter also proved Owen’s selling the Pamphlet. — Frewin called to prove the Writ for the Election at Westminster. — Stanhope proved that there was an Election. — Barwell, Clerk of the House of Commons, proved the Proceedings of the House in this Affair. — The Pamphlet read in Court. — Then the Attorney-General asked Mr. Ford and Mr. Pratt, if he need trouble the Court with proving more and other Things; and should be glad to know what they intended for their Plea and Defence, in order to give the Court as little Trouble as possible. Mr. Ford answered, that in Justice to his Client, he could not tell him what they intended for their Defence; but would be so far candid with him, as to say, he would take Advantage of his Want of Proof, and therefore desired him to prove all he could.

Mr. Solicitor then got up and made a short Speech to the following Purport: * “ The “ Question is, Whether the Jury are satisfied that

 “ the Defendant Owen published the Pamphlet? the “ rest follows of Course. If the FACT is proved,
 “ the LIBEL proves itself, Sedition, Disturbance, &c.
 “ Therefore the Printer must be affected with “ every thing in the Pamphlet, if the Publication “ is proved, and that is what lies for your [the “ Jury’s] Determination; you being Judges of the “ FACT, the Judge determines the LAW. But “ suppose you Judges of the Law, your own
 “ Breasts may tell you this is a Libel: It accuses
 “ the House of Commons of Injustice; compares “ them to the Turkish Divan, meant by the “ Letters D—n; and the Inquisition, meant by
 “ the Letters In——n; and calls them a “ bribed Assembly. Suppose a Pamphlet were “ published after this Trial, that you [the Jury]
 “ were perjured and bribed, and this spread over
 “ the Kingdom, would it not gall you? — These “ Sort of Libels can tend to nothing but Se-
 “ dition; for how can the Mob or the People
 “ redress but by Tumult and Rebellion, and “ thereby subvert the Constitution? For this is “ a Part of the legislative Power; and if a third
 “ Part of the Legislature is destroyed or exposed,
 “ how can that be without rising in the Face of “ the Constitution? There have been several “ Papers, and Paragraphs in the Papers, printed
 “ on Purpose to poison the Minds of the People,
 “ and seemed calculated to influence the Minds
 “ of any Jury that should be on this Occasion:
 “ But I dare say you, Gentlemen, who are upon
 “ your Oaths here to try the Fact, and Case, “ wholly as it is, will have no Regard to such “ artful and false Insinuations †. And I know
 “ very well the Council on the other Side design
 “ to take no Advantage or Notice of these false
 “ and malicious Hints. But as you are upon
 “ your Oaths, you judge of the FACTS we have “ laid before you, now in Court, and ONLY them;
 “ and like honest Men bring in your Verdict
 “ accordingly.”

The next who spoke was Mr. Ford, for the Defendant, as follows: “ The Doctrine laid down by the Gentlemen for the King, that what a Court of Justice does, whether legal or not, is not to be called in Question, nor any Remonstrance to be made against it, is a Doctrine that may be full of the most fatal Consequences to all Sorts of Men; since every inferior Court may do the same with equal Justice; for there can be no Court but what is legally so: Therefore, if legal Courts do wrong, must our Mouths be shut, and not complain or petition for Redress? God forbid! — May you, Gentlemen, nor I, ever be sensible of such Injustice! — I say, if the Case can be so. — And here the Gentlemen for the King seem to endeavour to confine the Council for the Defendant, in their Argument, by saying such and such Arguments will not be used; which is, in Fact, hinting that they should not. Why? If they have Liberty to make use of any Argument, Thought, or Fact, for the King, surely the Defendant’s Council ought to have the same Liberty for their Client. I understand not the shutting of Men’s Mouths. Let every Man clap his

* From a Word Mr. Ford dropped in asking one of the Witnesses a Question, Mr. Solicitor guessed what would be the Scope of his Argument; and thereupon endeavoured to anticipate him; of which Mr. Ford afterwards seems to take Notice.

† This has Reference to a Letter in the London Evening-Post of Saturday, May 30, 1752.

“ Hand upon his Heart, and examine how he “ would like it, was it his own Case. Shall a “ Man be injured, — or suppose he fancies him“ self injured, which is the same, — shall his “ Mouth be eternally closed, and no Redress for
 “ the Injury ever be given; nor no Satisfaction
 “ to his own Mind, for a right understanding,
 “ and clearing up of what he looked upon even
 “ as an Injury? If Things should come to this “ Pass, which Heaven forbid! what would be
 “ the Case of us all? We may be scourged, “ afflicted, and wronged, and all for the Want
 “ of Liberty to complain, and put forth our “ Case: The very Hand that hurts us may still “ continue that Pressure, not knowing of the “ Grievances done to those who lie under it;
 “ and who, were this Doctrine to be allowed,
 “ must suffer without Hope of Redress; for,
 “ unless our Mouths are open to Complaints,
 “ there can be no Redress for poor suffering
 “ Mortals: For how can that be redressed which “ is not known? or that known, which is not “ allowed to be mentioned? — May never you,
 “ Gentlemen, nor I, be sensible of such a Maxim “ carried into Practice! Nay, the very Gentle“ men who put it, cannot from their Hearts “ consent to it. — We in this Case lie under “ Disadvantages enough; our Adversaries have “ great Power; nay, their Power is unknown,
 “ even to themselves, at all Times; few of them “ know the Limits of it: It may be almost what “ they have a mind. Though great, though
 “ wise this House may be, yet they are but a “ Body of Men, and therefore fallible; for it is “ not in Men, or Bodies of Men, to be in“ fallible. — By this great Power of the House
 “ of Commons, we, for our Client, are debarred
 “ from making use of all the Means of Defence
 “ we could against other People. Much might “ be said, but much we dare not say; I own I “ dare not. But let me suppose, only for Ar-
 “ gument's Sake, that a House of Commons
 “ may do wrong, it is not impossible for them
 “ to err; I do not say that they do in this Case:
 “ Former Houses of Commons certainly have “ erred, and those Errors have been redressed by “ a future House of Commons, and that on a “ Knowledge of the Case by Complaint: And if
 “ the House of Commons ever has erred, by the “ same Rule it may err again. Therefore allow “ me to suppose, only for Supposition and Ar-
 “ gument's Sake, that the House have done “ wrong in their Votes on this Affair, (not that “ I say they have); they have voted this Pam“ phlet a Libel, and have turned it over to
 “ the Common Law, for the Defendant thereby “ to be tried for it; then they have left the “ Common Law to be Judge of it. If so,
 “ should the Defendant's Council be debarred
 “ (if it was necessary, but which in my Opinion “ is not) from contradicting, and proving this
 “ to be no Libel; which would, in Fact, be “ contradicting and opposing the Opinion and “ Vote of the House of Commons? I only put
 “ this by way of Supposition; to shew, if these “ Arguments were necessary to be gone upon,
 “ the Disadvantage we lie under. Much might “ be said, even on this; but much I dare not “ say. I know not scarce what I dare say; but “ I shall not go on this Point, as I think it is “ not necessary to our present Purpose; and I “ hope we can and shall be able to succeed with-

“ out it. I only mentioned it, because the Gen“ tlemen on the other Side seemed desirous still “ further to shut the Mouths of the Defendant's “ Council, who are under Difficulties enough “ already. The House of Commons have voted “ this Pamphlet a Libel: Great is the Power of “ a Vote of that House; and where is the Man
 “ who dares find Fault with, or contradict, the “ Opinion of the House, especially when voted
 “ so? I dare not, and bold must be the Man
 “ who dares; he knows not the Risque he runs,
 “ by justifying or maintaining a Book not to be “ a Libel, when the House of Commons have “ voted it so. That Man may perhaps have a “ Vote against himself; for what cannot a House
 “ do, whose Power is so great? What therefore “ I shall insist upon is this:

“ The FACT charged in the Information is,
 “ That the Defendant, Owen, published this “ Pamphlet, maliciously, seditiously, scandalously,
 “ and falsely, to the Calumny of the House of “ Commons of Great-Britain, and in order to “ disturb the Peace of the Nation; and this he “ has done wittingly, wilfully, maliciously, scanda- “ lously, &c. This is the FACT laid to his “ Charge; which the Gentlemen have been very “ far from PROVING. Only proving the Sale of “ the Book, does not prove all those opprobrious
 “ and hard Terms laid in the Charge against “ him. If his selling and publishing this Book “ maliciously, with a seditious Intent, scandalously
 “ and falsely, with a Design to calumniate the “ House of Commons, and in order to disturb
 “ the Peace of the Nation, is not proved, then
 “ this great Charge in the Information fails.
 “ Let the Gentlemen prove those Words (the “ Intention) if they mean any thing by them; if “ they do not prove these Terms, this bad “ Intent, for in that lies the Crime, then it is “ no more than selling printed Paper, in which “ surely there can be no Fault. Then what are “ these Words? If the Gentlemen mean any “ thing by them, prove them; if they mean
 “ nothing, but Words of Course and Form,
 “ let the Gentlemen scratch them out, they are “ needless; which if they do, their Information
 “ will be very defective. But they will not “ consent to scratch them out, I am sure; why
 “ then they must mean something by them,
 “ which if they do, consequently they must “ prove them. These Words constitute the “ Charge, which if they do not make out,
 “ will you, Gentlemen, clap your Hands upon
 “ your Hearts, and say this Man is guilty?
 “ Guilty of what? Nothing; for nothing is “ proved, unless selling Paper is a Crime.
 “ Surely, Gentlemen, your own Breasts, your “ own Consciences, must tell you, when you “ consider of it, — and pray consider it as your “ own Case, fancy each of yourselves here under “ a rigorous Prosecution, like this poor Man, —
 “ there is no Crime proved, no malicious In“ tent, no seditious Design; therefore not proved “ guilty of the Crime laid against him. If a “ Man be even a bad Man, and you all know it,
 “ and is accused of a Crime he is innocent of,
 “ surely none will find him guilty of a Crime,
 “ when that Crime is not proved, because you “ know him to be guilty of other Faults. These “ Things are plain, even to a Demonstration,
 “ to every Man. But this Defendant, whose “ Cause you are now Judges of, will appear
 “ to

“ to be a Man of very fair Character; well
 “ affected to the Government and Constitution
 “ in his Principles; always was, and is a good “ Subject; a Member of the Church of England,
 “ and as well affected to both Church and State
 “ as any Man in England. Therefore can any “ Man believe, when we shall have made this “ appear by several Witnesses, Men of Worth,
 “ Substance, Honour and Credit, both Clergy
 “ and Laity, that he could be guilty of these “ Things; that he intended this Hurt laid to his “ Charge? We shall prove that he published
 “ more Papers for the Government, in the late “ Rebellion, in 1745, and containing the most “ Steadiness for Government, and the most home
 “ and inveterate Things against its Enemies,
 “ than any Printer of his Time; so that I believe,
 “ if the Rebels had gained the Day, his Zeal
 “ might have caused his Punishment. Will it “ then appear likely that he is guilty of these “ Charges laid against him?

“ I must observe one Thing, which is, the “ Danger of your finding a Verdict SPECIALLY.
 “ Suppose you find him guilty of publishing and “ selling this Book; Guilty includes Guilt, then “ guilty of what? Selling Paper. — Where is the “ Guilt? — Take care, Gentlemen, of being “ deceived, by finding him guilty any way; by “ bringing in your Verdict any way against him,
 “ you render him liable to the Consequences of the “ whole; that is, to the same Penalties that he “ would have been liable to, if he had committed
 “ the whole Crime laid to his Charge, and that “ Charge fully proved against him. After you “ have brought in your Verdict, it will be in “ vain for you to say, you did not intend he “ should be punished; you only found that he “ had published, but not committed the Crime;
 “ it will be in vain for you to petition for Mercy, “ Mercy will then be in other Hands; it will be “ out of your Reach; and he will be at the “ Mercy of others, who may not look with the “ same Eyes as you: When you have found him “ guilty, it will be in other Breasts to punish;
 “ it will then be too late for you to interfere.
 “ By finding him guilty, you do all that you
 “ can against him, and then it will be out of “ your Power to serve him. You must therefore “ consider him guilty of this great Crime, and “ consequently deserving of great Punishment,
 “ or not. But if you think he is not guilty, and “ not deserving of great Punishment, then he “ has not committed this great Crime; then
 “ consequently they have failed in their Infor“ mation, and he is innocent of it; if innocent, “ consequently not guilty. Mr. Attorney tells “ you, this Pamphlet means, and is writ with “ the Intent that is laid in the Information; he “ says, because the Pamphlet compares the Par“ liament to In—n, it must certainly mean “ Inquisition; and in my Opinion it may, and “ does as likely, mean Information; and I assure “ you, Gentlemen, I have very little Love for “ Information, as well as Mr. Attorney for
 “ In—n; it is certain that these Things,
 “ which will bear several Interpretations, must,
 “ nor can, have no Weight with you; who “ should either put a good Construction upon “ them, or none at all. You must consider too,
 “ that there is a great Difference between the “ Author and the Printer; the Author knew
 “ well what he intended, and the whole Sense

“ of the Pamphlet; therefore liable to have the “ Sense of the Pamphlet interpreted against him;
 “ but a Bookseller may sell a Book, and not “ have any Intent but Profit; and be quite ig“ norant of the Contents, at least the Spirit of “ them; therefore it is well worth considering “ how Intent makes a Crime, and how far not;
 “ every Man may err, and if unintentionally, he “ cannot be guilty of a Crime before God; and “ if so, it would be Presumption in Man, to “ make any Comparison of his own Justice;
 “ what is not criminal with God, cannot be
 “ with Man. The Gentlemen on the other Side
 “ have not proved the Intention.”

The Reverend Mr. Warner, Mr. Gosling, Mr. Hawkins, and several others were called, who proved Mr. Owen to be a good Subject, a true Man to the Church of England, zealous for the Establishment; that he had printed several Papers for the Government, and would not have published the Pamphlet, had he known or thought the Contents bad or any Hurt in them, and the farthest Man in England from doing such a Thing.

Mr. Pratt next rose up for the Defendant, and having for some Time gone upon different Parts of Mr. Ford's Argument, (which it cannot be necessary to repeat, as Mr. Ford's Speech has just been given at length, and as nearly verbatim as possible) he said, “ Then, Gentlemen, to shew
 “ you how necessary it is to prove the Intention;
 “ if there is an Indictment preferred against a “ Man for an Assault, with an Intention to “ ravish; the Intention must be proved, or else
 “ the Jury cannot find him guilty. The same
 “ of an Assault with an Intention to kill, if the “ Intention is not proved, he must be acquitted.
 “ If he kills, and the Intention is not proved,
 “ that is, if it is not proved that he killed pre-“ meditatedly and of Forethought, it is but “ Manslaughter. Therefore in the Case before “ us, if that Part of the Information is not “ proved, that he published maliciously, &c. you “ must acquit him. — The Privileges of Parlia“ ment are not known to the Common Law;
 “ perhaps they may judge and punish: I know
 “ not their Privileges, nor perhaps are they to “ be known; nay, not known to themselves
 “ wholly: They may be just what they please.
 “ But they have not punished this Man; they “ have turned him over to the Common Law,
 “ therefore he must be tried by the Common “ Law. Yet, as hath been justly observed, they “ may take the Thing again into Consideration,
 “ and punish him in the House; and if so, he “ may be punished twice for the same Fault, by “ two different Sentences; which by the Common “ Law a Man cannot. Mr. Attorney will not “ answer for the House of Commons, that it
 “ will not be so. Then, Gentlemen, consider
 “ what Injustice it would be to punish a Man “ here, who is at the same Time liable to be “ punished there, if the House thinks fit. —
 “ Much might be said, more than we dare say
 “ for our Client in this Case: Our Mouths are “ already half shut, and the Tenets the Gentlemen
 “ on the other Side lay down, are to shut them
 “ QUITE; but may you, this Nation, nor I, ever “ feel the Effects of such Tenets, or see them put in “ Practice. It is a Rule in Law, and a Principle
 “ in Equity, to hear both Sides; therefore we “ may

“ may justly complain in this Case. It is a “ common Proverb, (and a very wise Chancellor
 “ affirmed that Proverbs were the Wisdom of a “ People) Losers must have Leave to speak. In
 “ the Scripture Job complains of the Dispen“ sations of Providence, the Causes and Con“ sequences of which he did not comprehend ;
 “ one would imagine therefore, that as Com“ plaints are so natural to Sufferers, they may “ merit some Excuse where the Affliction exceeds “ proper Bounds. It may be said indeed, they “ are capable of raising a dangerous Compassion.
 “ But to prevent this, will it be right to tell a “ free People, happen what will, you shall never “ complain? Before this is said, it should be well “ considered.” [Mr. Pratt then went again upon different Parts of Mr. Ford’s excellent Speech, which he enforced in a very strong and fine
 Manner, and with which he concluded.]

The Attorney-General got up again and made a Reply, the principal Matter in which was,
 “ That in an Indictment for Murder were always “ these Words, which are Words of Course, and
 “ of mere Form, viz. not having the Fear of God
 “ before his Eyes, and being instigated by the Devil.
 “ Now according to the Rule laid down by the “ Gentlemen, this must be proved, which is “ impossible ; for the Man would say, he was not “ so instigated, and had the Fear of God before his “ Eyes; and who could prove that it was other- “ wife? Now this evidently shews all those “ Things to be merely Matter of Form.”

The Chief Justice next summed up the Evidence; and delivered it as his Opinion, that the Jury OUGHT to find the Defendant guilty; for he thought the FACT of Publication was fully proved;

and if so, they could not avoid bringing in the Defendant guilty.

The Jury went out and stayed about two Hours; when they came into the Court, the Foreman answered for the rest, and when the Question was put, he said, Guilty; NOT-GUILTY,
 NOT GUILTY, MY LORD. The first Word guilty being said by Mistake; upon which there was a loud Huzza; and the Jury went away.
 But, at the Desire of the Attorney-General, they were called into Court again, and asked this leading Question, viz. “ Gentlemen of the Jury, “ do you think the Evidence laid before you, of “ Owen’s publishing the Book by selling it, is not “ sufficient to convince you that the said Owen
 “ did sell this Book?” At which the Foreman appeared a good deal fluttered; and the Judge repeated the Question; upon which the Foreman, without answering the Question, said, “ NOT “ GUILTY, NOT GUILTY;” and several of the Jurymen said, “ That is our Verdict, my Lord,
 “ and we abide by it.” Upon which the Court broke up; and there was a prodigious Shout in the Hall. The Attorney-General desired more Questions might be asked, but the Judge would not, neither would the Noise permit it.

Note, The Jury could not say, to the Question, that the Evidence of publishing was not clear,
 without Perjury; and if the Jury had answered
Yes, and not found the Defendant guilty, one does not know what might have been done to the Jury, or before whom called. But they found Owen not guilty on the whole of the Case, taking in that which included Guilt or not, and judged as to Facts, Law, and Justice, of the whole; and therefore did not answer that leading Question, which was so artfully put to them.

N U M B E R XXIV.

In the Case of Earl Ferrers, April 17, 1760.*

THE House of Peers unanimously found
 Earl Ferrers Guilty of the Felony and Murder whereof he stood indicted; and the Earl being brought to the Bar, the High Steward acquainted him therewith; and the House immediately adjourned to the Chamber of Parliament. And having put the following Questions to the Judges, adjourned to the next Day.

First, “ Whether a Peer indicted of Felony
 “ and Murder, and tried and convicted thereof
 “ before the Lords in Parliament, ought to “ receive Judgment for the same, according to “ the Provisions of the Act of Parliament of the “ 25th Year of his Majesty’s Reign, intituled, “ An Act for better preventing the horrid Crime of “ Murder?”

Second, “ Supposing a Peer so indicted and “ convicted ought by Law to receive such Judg“ ment as aforesaid, and the Day appointed by

 “ the Judgment for Execution should lapse before
 “ such Execution done, whether a new Time
 “ may be appointed for the Execution, and by “ whom?”

On the 18th, the House then sitting in the Chamber of Parliament, the Lord Chief Baron, in the Absence of the Chief Justice of the Common Pleas, delivered in Writing the Opinion of the Judges, which they had agreed on, and reduced into Form that Morning.

His Lordship added many weighty Reasons in Support of the Opinion, which he urged with great Strength and Propriety, and delivered with a becoming Dignity.

To the first Question.

“ We are all of Opinion, that a Peer indicted
 “ of Felony and Murder, and tried and convicted

* From Judge Foster’s Reports, p. 138, &c.

“ thereof

“ thereof before the Lords in Parliament, ought “ to receive Judgment for the same, according “ to the Provisions of the Act of Parliament
 “ of the 25th Year of his Majesty’s Reign, inti“ tuled, An Act for better preventing the horrid
 “ Crime of Murder.”

To the second Question.

“ Supposing the Day appointed by the Judg“ ment for Execution should lapse before such “ Execution done, (which however the Law will “ not presume); We are all of Opinion, that a
 “ new Time may be appointed for the Execution,
 “ either by the High Court of Parliament before
 “ which such Peer shall have been attainted, or by “ the Court of King’s-Bench, the Parliament not “ then sitting; the Record of the Attainder being “ properly removed into that Court.”

The Reasons the Judges went upon, in their Answer to the first Question, are, I presume, too obvious to be mentioned at large. And the House resolved and ordered, that Judgment shall be pronounced in Westminster-Hall, pursuant to the late Act.

The Reasons upon which the Judges founded their Answer to the second, relating to the further Proceedings of the House after the High Steward’s Commission dissolved, which is usually done upon pronouncing Judgment, may possibly require some further Discussion. I will therefore, before I conclude, mention those which weighed with me, and I believe with many others of the Judges.

The House, before they adjourned to the Court-Room in Westminster-Hall for pronouncing Judgment, resolved and ordered, that Execution be respited to the 5th Day of May following. Upon which Day Execution was done at Tyburn pursuant to the Judgment, and the Body delivered at Surgeons-Hall to be dissected and anatomized.

[The Writ to the Sheriffs for Execution, see in the Account of his Execution.]

Reasons, &c.

Every Proceeding in the House of Peers, acting in its judicial Capacity, whether upon Writ of Error, Impeachment, or Indictment removed thither by Certiorari, is in Judgment of Law a Proceeding before the King in Parliament. And therefore the House, in all those Cases, may not improperly be stiled, The Court of our Lord the King in Parliament.

This Court is founded upon immemorial Usage, upon the Law and Custom of Parliament, and is Part of the original System of our Constitution.

It is open for all the Purposes of Judicature during the Continuance of the Parliament: It openeth at the Beginning, and shutteth at the End of every Session; just as the Court of King’s-Bench, which is likewise in Judgment of Law held before the King himself, openeth and shutteth with the Term.

The Authority of this Court, or, if I may use the Expression, its constant Activity for the Ends of public Justice, independent of any Special Powers derived from the Crown, is not doubted in the Case of Writs of Error from those Courts of Law whence Error lieth in Parliament, and of Impeachments for Misdemeanors.

It was formerly doubted, whether in the Case of an Impeachment for Treason, and in the Case of an Indictment against a Peer for any Capital Crime removed into Parliament by Certiorari, whether in these Cases the Court can proceed to Trial and Judgment without an High Steward appointed by special Commission from the Crown.

This Doubt seemeth to have arisen from the not distinguishing between a Proceeding in the Court of the High Steward, and that before the King in Parliament. The Name, Stile, and Title of Office, is the same in both Cases; but the Office, the Powers and Preheminences annexed to it, differ very widely; and so doth the Constitution of the Courts where the Offices are executed. The Identity of the Name may have confounded our Ideas, as equivocal Words often do if the Nature of Things is not attended to; but the Nature of the Offices properly stated will, I hope, remove every Doubt on these Points.

In the Court of the High Steward, he alone is Judge in all Points of Law and Practice; the Peers Triers are merely Judges of Fact, and are summoned by virtue of a Precept from the High Steward to appear before him on the Day appointed by him for the Trial, Ut rei veritas melius sciri poterit.

The High Steward’s Commission, after reciting that an Indictment hath been found against the Peer by the Grand Jury of the proper County, empowereth him to send for the Indictment, to convene the Prisoner before him at such Day and Place as he shall appoint; then and there to hear and determine the Matter of such Indictment; to cause the Peers Triers, tot et tales per quos rei veritas melius sciri poterit, at the same Day and Place to appear before him: Veritateque inde compertâ, to proceed to Judgment according to the Law and Custom of England, and thereupon to award Execution*.

By this it is plain, that the sole Right of Judicature is, in Cases of this Kind, vested in the High Steward; that it resideth solely in his Person; and consequently without this Commission, which is but in Nature of a Commission of Oyer and Terminer, no one Step can be taken in order to a Trial. And that when his Commission is dissolved, which he declareth by breaking his Staff, the Court no longer existeth.

But in a Trial of a Peer in full Parliament, or, to speak with Legal Precision, before the King in Parliament, for a Capital Offence, whether upon Impeachment or Indictment, the Case is quite otherwise. Every Peer present at the Trial, and every Temporal Peer hath a Right to be present in every Part of the Proceeding, voteth upon every Question of Law and Fact; and the Question is carried by the major Vote; the High Steward himself voting merely as a Peer and Member of that Court in common with the rest of the Peers, and in no other Right.

It hath indeed been usual, and very expedient it is in point of Order and Regularity and for the Solemnity of the Proceeding, to appoint an Officer for Presiding during the Time of the

* See Lord Clarendon’s Commission as High Steward, and the Writs and Precepts preparatory to the Trial in Lord Morley’s Case. 7 State Trials.

Trial and until Judgment, and to give him the Stile and Title of Steward of England. But this maketh no Sort of Alteration in the Constitution of the Court. It is the same Court founded in immemorial Usage, in the Law and Custom of Parliament, whether such Appointment be made or not.

It acteth in its judicial Capacity in every Order made touching the Time and Place of the Trial, the postponing the Trial from Time to Time upon Petition, according to the Nature and Circumstances of the Case, the Allowance or Non-allowance of Council to the Prisoner, and other Matters relative to the * Trial; and all this before an High Steward hath been appointed. And so little was it apprehended, in some Cases which I shall mention presently, that the Existence of the Court depended on the Appointment of an High Steward, that the Court itself directed in what Manner and by what Form of Words he should be appointed. It hath likewise received and recorded the Prisoner's Confession which amounteth to a Conviction, before the Appointment of an High Steward, and hath allowed to Prisoners the Benefit of Acts of General Pardon where they appeared intitled to it, as well without the Appointment of an High Steward, as after his Commission dissolved.

And when, in the Case of Impeachments, the Commons have sometimes, at Conferences between the Houses, attempted to interpose in Matters preparatory to the Trial, the general Answer hath been, "This is a Point of Judicature upon which the Lords will not confer, "they impose Silence upon themselves," or to that Effect. I need not here cite Instances; every Man who hath consulted the Journals of either House hath met with many of them.

I will now cite a few Cases applicable, in my Opinion, to the present Question. And I shall confine myself to such as have happened since the Restoration. Because in Questions of this Kind, modern Cases, settled with Deliberation and upon a View of former Precedents, give more Light and Satisfaction, than the deepest Search into Antiquity can afford. And also because the Prerogatives of the Crown, the Privileges of Parliament, and the Rights of the Subjects in general, appear to me to have been more studied and better understood at, and for some Years before that Period, than in former Ages.

In the Case of the Earl of Danby and the Popish Lords then under Impeachments, (Lords Journal) the Lords on the 6th of May, 1679, appointed Time and Place for hearing the Earl of Danby by his Council upon the Validity of his Plea of Pardon, and for the Trials of the other Lords; and voted an Address to his Majesty, praying that he would be pleased to appoint an High Steward for those Purposes.

These Votes were, on the next Day, communicated to the Commons by Message in the usual Manner.

On the 8th, at a Conference between the Houses upon the Subject-matter of that Message, the Commons expressed themselves to the following Effect, "They cannot apprehend what "should induce your Lordships to address his "Majesty for an High Steward for determining "the Validity of the Pardon which hath been "pleaded by the Earl of Danby, as also for the "Trial of the other five Lords, because they "conceive the constituting an High Steward is "not necessary, but that Judgment may be given "in Parliament upon Impeachment without an "High Steward." And concluded with a Proposition, that for avoiding any Interruption or Delay a Committee of both Houses might be nominated to consider of the most proper Ways and Methods of Proceeding.

This Proposition the House of Peers, after a long Debate, rejected.

Dissentientibus, Finch † Chancellor, and many other Lords.

However, on the 11th the Commons Proposition of the 8th was upon a second Debate agreed to, and the Lord Chancellor, Lord President, and ten other Lords were named of the Committee, to meet and confer with a Committee of the Commons.

The next Day the Lord President reported, that the Committees of both Houses met that Morning, and made an Entrance into the Business referred to them. That the Commons desired to see the Commissions that are prepared for an High Steward at these Trials, and also the Commissions in the Lord Pembroke's, and the Lord Morley's Cases.

That to this the Lords Committees said, "The High Steward is but Speaker pro Tempore, "and giveth his Vote as well as the other Lords. "This changeth not the Nature of the Court. "And the Lords declared they have Power "enough to proceed to Trial, though the King "should not name an High Steward ‡."

"That this seemed to be a Satisfaction to the "Commons, provided it was entered in the "Lords Journal, which are Records."

Accordingly on the same Day, "It is declared "and ordered by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament assembled, that the Office "of an High Steward upon Trials of Peers upon "Impeachments is not necessary to the House of "Peers; but that the Lords may proceed in "such Trials if an High Steward be not appointed according to their humble Desire §."

On the 13th the Lord President reported, that the Committees of both Houses had met that Morning, and discoursed in the first Place on the Matter of a Lord High Steward, and had perused former Commissions for the Office of High Steward. And then putting the House in mind of the Order and Resolution of the preceding Day, proposed from the Committees, that a new Commission might issue so as the Words in the Commission may be thus changed, viz. instead of, Ac pro eo quòd officium Seneschalli Angliæ

* See the Orders previous to the Trial in the Cases of Lord Kilmarnock, Lord Loval, and many other modern Cases.

† Afterwards Earl of Nottingham.

‡ In the Commons Journal of the 15th of May it standeth thus, Their Lordships further declared to the Committee, that a Lord High Steward was made hac Vice only. That notwithstanding the making of a Lord High Steward the Court remained the same and was not thereby altered, but still remained the Court of Peers in Parliament. That the Lord High Steward was but as a Speaker or Chairman, for the more orderly Proceeding at the Trials.

§ This Resolution my Lord Chief Baron referred to and cited in his Argument upon the second Question proposed to the Judges, which is before stated.

(cujus presentia in hac parte requiritur) ut accepimus jam vacat, may be inserted, Ac pro eo quod Proceres et Magnates in Parlamento nostro assembleti nobis humiliter supplicaverunt ut Seneschallum Angliæ pro hac vice constituere dignaremur; to which the House agreed*.

It must be admitted, that Precedents drawn from Times of Ferment and Jealousy, as these were, lose much of their Weight; since Passion and Party-Prejudice generally mingle in the Contest. Yet let it be remembered, that these are Resolutions in which both Houses concurred, and in which the Rights of both were thought to be very nearly concerned; the Commons Right of Impeaching with Effect, and the whole Judicature of the Lords in Capital Cases. For if the Appointment of an High Steward was admitted to be of absolute Necessity, (however necessary it may be for the Regularity and Solemnity of the Proceeding during the Trial and until Judgment, which I do not dispute) every Impeachment may, for a Reason too obvious to be mentioned, be rendered ineffectual. And the Judicature of the Lords in all Capital Cases, nugatory.

It was from a Jealousy of this Kind, not at that Juncture altogether groundless, and to guard against every Thing from whence the Necessity of an High Steward in the Case of an Impeachment might be inferred, that the Commons proposed and the Lords readily agreed to the Amendment in the Steward's Commission, which I have already stated. And it hath, I confess, great Weight with me, that this Amendment, which was at the same Time directed in the Cases of the five Popish Lords when Commissions should pass for their Trials, hath taken Place in every Commission upon Impeachments for Treason since that Time†. And I cannot help remarking, that in the Case of Lord Lovat, when neither the Heat of the Times, nor the Jealousy of Parties had any Share in the Proceeding, the House ordered, "That the Commission for appointing a Lord High Steward shall be in the like Form as that for the Trial of the Lord Viscount Stafford, as entered in the Journal of this House on the 30th of November, 1680, except that the same shall be in the English Language‡."

I will make a short Observation on this Matter.

The Order on the 13th of May, 1679, for varying the Form of the Commission, was, as appeareth by the Journal, plainly made in consequence of the Resolution of the 12th, and was founded on it; and consequently the constant unvarying Practice with regard to the new Form, goeth in my Opinion a great way towards shewing that in the Sense of all succeeding Times that Resolution was not the Result of Faction or a blameable Jealousy, but was founded in sound Reason and true Policy.

It may be objected, that the Resolution of the 12th of May, 1679, goeth no further than to a Proceeding upon Impeachment.

The Letter of the Resolution, it is admitted, goeth no further, but this is easily accounted for. A Proceeding by Impeachment was the Subject-matter of the Conference, and the Commons had no Pretence to interpose in any other. But what say the Lords? The High Steward is but as a Speaker or Chairman pro Tempore, for the more orderly Proceeding at the Trials; the Appointment of him doth not alter the Nature of the Court, which still remaineth the Court of the Peers in Parliament. From these Premises they draw the Conclusion I have mentioned. Are not these Premises equally true in the Case of a Proceeding upon Indictment? They undoubtedly are.

It must likewise be admitted, that in the Proceeding upon Indictment, the High Steward's Commission hath never varied from the antient Form in such Cases; the Words objected to by the Commons, Ac pro eo quod officium Seneschalli Angliæ (cujus presentia in hac parte requiritur) ut accepimus jam vacat, are still retained. But this proveth no more than that the Great Seal having no Authority to vary in Point of Form, hath from Time to Time very prudently followed antient Precedents.

I have already stated the Substance of the Commission in a Proceeding in the Court of the High Steward. I will now state the Substance of that in a Proceeding in the Court of the Peers in Parliament. And shall make use of that in the Case of the Earl of Kilmarnock and others, as being the latest, and in point of Form agreeing with the former Precedents.

The Commission, after reciting that William Earl of Kilmarnock, &c. stand indicted before Commissioners of Gaol-Delivery in the County of Surry, for High Treason, in levying War against the King; and that the King intendeth, that the said William Earl of Kilmarnock, &c. shall be heard, examined, sentenced, and adjudged before Himself in this present Parliament touching the said Treason; and for that the Office of Steward of Great-Britain (whose Presence is required upon this Occasion) is now vacant as We are informed, appointeth the then Lord Chancellor Steward of Great-Britain, to bear, execute, and exercise (for this Time) the said Office, with all Things due and belonging to the same Office in that Behalf.

What therefore are the Things due and belonging to the Office in a Case of this Kind? Not, as in the Court of the High Steward, a Right of Judicature. For the Commission itself supposeth that Right to reside in a Court then subsisting before the King in Parliament. The Parties are to be there heard, sentenced, and adjudged. What Share in the Proceeding doth the High Steward then take? By the Practice and Usage of the Court of the Peers in Parliament, he giveth his Vote as a Member thereof with the rest of the Peers; but for the sake of Regularity and Order he presideth during the Trial and until Judgment as Chairman, or Speaker pro Tempore. In that respect therefore it may be properly enough said that his Presence is required during the Trial and until Judgment, and in no other. Herein I see no Difference between the Case of an Impeachment and of an Indictment.

I say during the Time of the Trial and until

* This Amendment arose from an Exception taken to the Commission by the Committee for the Commons, which as it then stood did in their Opinion imply that the constituting a Lord High Steward was necessary. Whereupon it was agreed by the whole Committee of Lords and Commons, that the Commission should be recalled, and a new Commission according to the said Amendment issue, to bear Date after the Order and Resolution of the 12th. Commons Journal of the 15th of May.

Judgment, because the Court hath, as I observed before, from Time to Time done various Acts plainly judicial before the Appointment of an High Steward, and where no High Steward hath ever been appointed, and even after the Commission dissolved.

I will to this Purpose cite a few Cases.

I begin with the latest, because they are the latest, and were ruled with great Deliberation, and for the most Part upon a View of former Precedents.

In the Case of the Earl of Kilmarnock and others, the Lords, on the 24th of June, 1746, ordered that a Writ or Writs of Certiorari be issued for removing the Indictments before the House. And on the 26th the Writ, which is made returnable before the King in Parliament, with the Return and Indictments, was received and read. On the next Day upon the Report of the Lords Committees, that they had been attended by the two Chief Justices and Chief Baron, and had heard them touching the Construction of the Act of the 7th and 8th of King William, "for regulating Trials in Cases of High Treason and Misprision of Treason," the House, upon reading the Report, came to several Resolutions founded for the most Part on the Construction of that Act. What that Construction was, appeareth from the Lord High Steward's Address to the Prisoners just before their Arraignment. Having mentioned that Act as one happy Consequence of the Revolution, he addeth, "How ever injuriously that Revolution hath been traduced, whatever Attempts have been made to subvert this happy Establishment founded on it, your Lordships will now have the Benefit of that Law in its full Extent."

I need not after this mention any other judicial Acts done by the House in this Case before the Appointment of the High Steward, many there are. For the putting a Construction upon an Act relative to the Conduct of the Court, and the Right of the Subject at the Trial and in the Proceedings preparatory to it; and this in a Case entirely new, and upon a Point, to say no more in this Place, not extremely clear, was undoubtedly an Exercise of Authority proper only for a Court having full Cognizance of the Cause.

I will not minutely enumerate the several Orders made preparatory to the Trial of Lord Lovat, and in the several Cases I shall have Occasion to mention, touching the Time and Place of the Trial, the Allowance or Non-allowance of Council, and other Matters of the like Kind, all plainly judicial, because the like Orders occur in all the Cases where a Journal of the preparatory Steps hath been published by Order of the Peers. With regard to Lord Lovat's Case, I think the Order directing the Form of the High Steward's Commission, which I have already taken Notice of, is not very consistent with the Idea of a Court whose Powers can be supposed to depend at any Point of Time upon the Existence or Dissolution of that Commission.

In the Case of the Earl of Derwentwater and the other Lords impeached at the same Time, the House received and recorded the Confession of those of them who pleaded Guilty long before the Teste of the High Steward's Commission; which issued merely for the Solemnity of giving Judgment against them upon their Conviction.

This appeareth by the Commission itself, (See the Proceedings in Vol. 6.) It reciteth that the Earl of Derwentwater and others coram nobis in presenti parlamento had been impeached by the Commons for High Treason, and had coram nobis in presenti parlamento pleaded Guilty to that Impeachment; and that the King, intending that the said Earl of Derwentwater and others de et pro Proditione unde ipsi ut praesertur impetit accusat' et convicti' existunt coram nobis in presenti parlamento secundum legem et consuetudinem hujus regni nostri Magnae Britanniae, audientur, sententientur, et adjudicentur, constituteth the then Lord Chancellor High Steward (hac vice) to do and execute all Things which to the Office of High Steward in that Behalf do belong.

The receiving and recording the Confession of the Prisoners, which amounted to a Conviction, so that nothing remained but proceeding to Judgment, was certainly an Exercise of judicial Authority, which no Assembly how great soever, not having full Cognizance of the Cause, could exercise.

In the Case of Lord Salisbury, who had been impeached by the Commons for High Treason, the Lords upon his Petition allowed him the Benefit of the Act of General Pardon passed in the second Year of William and Mary, so far as to discharge him from his Imprisonment, upon a Construction they put upon that Act, no High Steward ever having been appointed in that Case.

On the 2d of October, 1690, upon reading the Earl's Petition, setting forth that he had been a Prisoner for a Year and nine Months in the Tower notwithstanding the late Act of Free and General Pardon, and praying to be discharged; the Lords ordered the Judges to attend on the Monday following to give their Opinions, whether the said Earl be pardoned by the Act. On the 6th the Judges delivered their Opinions, That if his Offence was committed before the 13th of February, 1688, and not in Ireland or beyond the Seas, he is pardoned. Whereupon it was ordered that he be admitted to Bail; and the next Day he and his Sureties entered into a Recognizance of Bail, himself in 10,000*l.* and two Sureties in 5000*l.* each; and on the 30th he and his Sureties were, after a long Debate, discharged from their Recognizance.

It will not be material to inquire, whether the House did right in discharging the Earl without giving the Commons an Opportunity of being heard. Since in Fact, they claimed and exercised a Right of Judicature without an High Steward, which is the only Use I make of this Case.

They did the same in the Case of the Earl of Carnwarth, the Lords Widdrington and Nairn, long after the High Steward's Commission dissolved.

These Lords had Judgment passed on them at the same Time that Judgment was given against the Lords Derwentwater, Nithsdale, and Kenmure, (State-Trials, Vol. 6.) and Judgment being given, the High Steward immediately broke his Staff, and declared the Commission dissolved. They continued Prisoners in the Tower under Reprieves till the passing the Act of General Pardon in the 3d of King George the First.

On the 21st of November, 1717, the House being informed that these Lords had severally entered into Recognizances before one of the Judges of the Court of King's-Bench for their Appearance

Appearance in the House in this Session of Parliament, and that the Lords Carnwarth and Widdrington were attending accordingly, and that the Lord Nairn was ill at Bath and could not then attend, the Lords Carnwarth and Widdrington were called in; and severally at the Bar prayed that their Appearance might be recorded, and likewise prayed the Benefit of the Act (3 Geo. 1. c. 19.) for his Majesty's General and Free Pardon.

Whereupon the House ordered that their Appearance be recorded; and that they attend again To-morrow in order to plead the Pardon. And the Recognizance of the Lord Nairn was respited till that Day Fortnight.

On the Morrow the Lords Carnwarth and Widdrington then attending were called in; and the Lord Chancellor acquainted them severally that it appeared by the Records of the House, that they severally stood attainted of High Treason, and asked them severally what they had to say why they should not be remanded to the Tower of London.

Thereupon they severally upon their Knees prayed the Benefit of the Act, and that they might have their Lives and Liberty pursuant thereunto.

And the Attorney-General, who then attended for that Purpose, declaring that he had no Objection on his Majesty's Behalf to what was prayed, conceiving that those Lords not having made any Escape since their Conviction were intitled to the Benefit of the Act, (see Sect. 45. of the 3d Geo. 1.) the House, after reading the Clause in the Act relating to that Matter, agreed that they should be allowed the Benefit of the Pardon as to their Lives and Liberties, and discharged their Recognizances; and gave them Leave to depart without further Day given for their Appearance.

On the 6th of December following the like Proceedings were had, and the like Orders made in the Case of Lord Nairn.

I observe that the Lord Chancellor did not ask these Lords, what they had to say, why Execution should not be awarded. There was it is probable some little Delicacy as to that Point. But since the Allowance of the Benefit of the Act as to Life and Liberty, which was all that was prayed, was an effectual Bar to any future Imprisonment on that Account, and also to Execution, and might have been pleaded as such in any Court whatsoever; the whole Proceeding must be admitted to have been in a Court having compleat Jurisdiction in the Case, notwithstanding the High Steward's Commission had been long dissolved. Which is all the Use I intended to make of this Case.

I will not recapitulate; The Cases I have cited, and the Conclusions drawn from them, are brought into a very narrow Compass. I will only add, that it would sound extremely harsh to say, that a Court of Criminal Jurisdiction founded in immemorial Usage, and held in Judgment of Law before the King himself, can in any Event whatever be under an utter Incapacity of proceeding to Trial and Judgment either of Condemnation or Acquittal, the ultimate Objects of every Criminal Proceeding, without certain supplemental Powers derived from the Crown.

These Cases, with the Observations I have made on them, I hope, sufficiently warrant the Opinion of the Judges upon that Part of the second Question in the Case of the late Earl Ferrers which I have already mentioned. And also what was advanced by the Lord Chief Baron in his Argument on that Question, "That though the Office of High Steward should happen to determine before Execution done according to the Judgment, yet the Court of the Peers in Parliament, where that Judgment was given, would subsist for all the Purposes of Justice during the Sitting of the Parliament." And consequently that in the Case supposed by the Question, that Court might appoint a new Day for the Execution.

An Account of the Execution of the late Laurence Earl Ferrers, Viscount Tamworth, and of his Lordship's Behaviour, from the Time of his being delivered into the Custody of the Sheriffs of London and Middlesex, until the Time of his Execution. By the Authority of the Sheriffs.

ON Friday the second Day of May, 1760, the Sheriffs of London and Middlesex received the following Writ under the Great Seal of Great-Britain, for the Execution of Laurence Earl Ferrers, Viscount Tamworth, on the Monday following.

"George the Second, by the Grace of God of Great-Britain, France and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, and so forth, To the Sheriffs of London and Sheriff of Middlesex, greeting. Whereas Laurence Earl Ferrers, Viscount Tamworth, hath been indicted of Felony and Murder by him done and committed; which said Indictment hath been certified before us in our present Parliament, and the said Laurence Earl Ferrers, Viscount Tamworth, hath been thereupon arraigned, and upon such Arraignment hath pleaded Not Guilty: And the said Laurence Earl Ferrers, Viscount Tamworth, hath before us in our said Parliament been tried, and in due Form of Law convicted thereof: And whereas Judgment hath been given in our said Parliament, That the said Laurence Earl Ferrers, Viscount Tamworth, shall be hanged by the Neck till he is dead, and that his Body be dissected and anatomized, the Execution of which Judgment yet remains to be done: We require, and by these Presents strictly command you, that upon Monday the fifth Day of May Instant, between the Hours of Nine in the Morning and One in the Afternoon of the same Day, him the said Laurence Earl Ferrers, Viscount Tamworth, without the Gate of our Tower of London, (to you then and there to be delivered, as by another Writ to the Lieutenant of our Tower of London, or to his Deputy directed, we have commanded) into your Custody you then and there receive; and him in your Custody so being, you forthwith convey to the accustomed Place of Execution at Tyburn, and that you do cause Execution be done upon the said Laurence Earl Ferrers, Viscount Tamworth, in your Custody so being, in all Things according to the said Judgment. And this you are by no Means to omit at your Peril. Witness ourself at Westminster the second Day of May, in the thirty-third Year of our Reign.

"YORKE and YORKE."

Upon the Receipt of this Writ, the Sheriffs immediately issued their Orders for making all the necessary Preparations for the Execution, and for the Performance of it in a Manner suitable to his Lordship's Rank.

When the foregoing Precept was delivered to the Sheriffs, they had Notice of the following Writ being sent to the Lieutenant of the Tower of London his Deputy, for the Delivery of his Lordship into their Custody.

“ George the Second, by the Grace of God of Great-Britain, France and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, and so forth, To the Lieutenant of our Tower of London or his Deputy, greeting. Whereas Laurence Earl Ferrers, Viscount Tamworth, hath been indicted of Felony and Murder by him done and committed, which said Indictment hath been certified before us in our present Parliament; and the said Laurence Earl Ferrers, Viscount Tamworth, hath been thereupon arraigned, and upon such Arraignment hath pleaded Not Guilty; and thereupon the said Laurence Earl Ferrers, Viscount Tamworth, hath before us in our said Parliament been tried, and in due Form of Law convicted thereof, and for the same is adjudged to suffer Death, the Execution of which Judgment yet remains to be done; We require, and by these Presents strictly command you, That upon Monday the fifth Day of May Instant, between the Hours of Nine in the Morning and One in the Afternoon of the same Day, him the said Laurence Earl Ferrers, Viscount Tamworth, unto the usual Place without the Gate of the said Tower you bring, and him to the Sheriffs of London and Middlesex then and there deliver; which said Sheriffs, by another Writ to them directed, we have commanded then and there to receive the said Laurence Earl Ferrers, Viscount Tamworth, that Execution of the aforesaid Judgment may be done in Manner and Form as to the said Sheriffs of London and Middlesex we by our said other Writ have commanded; and this you are by no Means to omit at your Peril. Witness ourself at Westminster the second Day of May, in the thirty-third Year of our Reign. ”

“ YORKE and YORKE.”

In Obedience to these Commands, the Sheriffs, on Monday the 5th Day of May, being attended by their Under-Sheriffs, and other proper Officers, went to the Outward Gate of the Tower of London, and at Nine o'Clock in the Morning sent Notice to the Lieutenant, that they were there, ready to receive the Body of Laurence Earl Ferrers, Viscount Tamworth, pursuant to the King's Writ in that Behalf.

His Lordship being informed of it, sent a Message to the Sheriffs, requesting their Permission that he might go in his own Landau, which was waiting for him within the Tower, instead of the Mourning-Coach which had been provided by his Friends; which Request being granted, his Lordship, attended by the Reverend Mr. Humphries, the Chaplain of the Tower, entered into his Landau, drawn by six Horses, and was conducted in it, by the Officers of the Tower, to the Outward Gate, and there delivered into the Custody of the Sheriffs, upon their giving the following Receipt:

Tower-Hill, 5th May, 1760.

“ Received then of Charles Rainsford, Esq; Deputy-Lieutenant of the Tower of London, the Body of the within-named Laurence Earl Ferrers, Viscount Tamworth, delivered to us in Obedience of the King's Writ, of which the within is a true Copy.

GEO. ERRINGTON, } Sheriffs of London, and PAUL VAILLANT, } Sheriff of Middlesex.

Mr. Sheriff Vaillant accompanied his Lordship in the Landau from the Tower-Gate to the Place of Execution; and, upon his Entrance into it, addressing himself to his Lordship, he told him, That it gave him the highest Concern to wait upon him upon so melancholy an Occasion, but that he would do every Thing in his Power to render his Situation as easy as possible; and hoped that, whatever he did, his Lordship would impute to the necessary Discharge of his Duty. — To which his Lordship answered, Sir, I am very much obliged to you, — I take it very kindly that you are pleased to accompany me. — His Lordship being dressed in a Suit of light Cloaths, embroidered with Silver, said, You may perhaps, Sir, think it strange to see me in this Dress, but I have my particular Reasons for it.

The Civil and Military Powers attended the Sheriffs from thence to the Place of Execution, and the Procession was as follows: —

First, a very large Body of the Constables for the County of Middlesex (the greatest probably that had ever been assembled together upon any Occasion), preceded by one of the High-Constables.

Then a Party of Horse-Grenadiers, and a Party of Foot;

Then Mr. Sheriff Errington in his Chariot, accompanied therein by his Under-Sheriff Mr. Jackson;

Then followed the Landau, escorted by two other Parties of Horse-Grenadiers and Foot;

Then Mr. Sheriff Vaillant's Chariot, in which was his Under-Sheriff Mr. Nicols;

Then a Mourning-Coach and Six;

And, lastly, a Hearse and Six, which was provided for the Conveyance of his Lordship's Corpse from the Place of Execution to Surgeons-Hall.

The Procession was conducted with the utmost Solemnity; but moved so very slow, that it did not reach the Place of Execution till a Quarter before Twelve, so that his Lordship was Two Hours and Three Quarters in the Landau; during the whole of which Time he appeared to be perfectly easy and composed, and his decent Deportment seemed greatly to affect the Minds of all that beheld him; insomuch that although his Lordship thus passed through many hundred thousand Spectators, yet so respectful was the Behaviour of all towards him, that not the least Affront or Indignity was offered to him by any one; but, on the contrary, many Persons saluted him with their Prayers for his Salvation.

His Lordship asked the Sheriff, If he had ever seen so great a Concourse of People before? and upon his answering that he had not; I suppose, said his Lordship, it is, because they never saw a Lord hanged before. He said, that he had wrote to the King, to beg that he might suffer where his Ancestor the Earl of Essex had suffered; and that he was in the greater Hopes of obtaining that Favour, as he had had the Honour of quartering Part of the same Arms, and of being allied to his Majesty; — and that he thought it was hard that he must die at the Place appointed for the Execution of common Felons. — But whatever his Lordship's Thoughts were upon that Account, those Considerations will for ever throw an additional Lustre on his Majesty's Impartiality and Justice.

Mr. Humphries the Chaplain, who, it seems, had not attended his Lordship till this Morning, took Occasion to observe, that the World would naturally be very inquisitive concerning the Religion his Lordship professed; and asked him, If he chose to say any thing upon that Subject? To which his Lordship answered, That he did not think himself at all accountable to the World for his Sentiments on Religion; but that he had always believed in and adored One God, the Maker of all Things; — that whatever his Notions were, he had never propagated them, or endeavoured to gain any Persons over to his Persuasion; — that all Countries and Nations had a Form of Religion by which the People were governed, and that whoever disturbed them in it, he looked upon him as an Enemy to Society; — but that, if he himself was wrong in his way of thinking, he was very sorry for it. — That he very much blamed my Lord Bolingbroke, for permitting his Sentiments on Religion to be published to the World. — That the many Sects and Disputes which happen about Religion, have almost turned Morality out of Doors. — That he could never believe what some Sectaries teach, that Faith alone will save Mankind; so that if a Man, just before he dies, should say only, I believe, that that alone will save him; — “Shew me thy Faith.” — Here his Lordship stopped; — but by which Quotation he plainly meant, according to the Holy Writer, (St. James, chap. ii. ver. 18.) whose Words they are, that Faith without Works is a dead Faith.

Concerning the unfortunate and much to be lamented Mr. Johnson, whose Death occasioned the Trouble of this Day, his Lordship declared, That he was under particular Circumstances; that he had met with so many Crosses and Vexations he scarce knew what he did; and most solemnly protested, that he had not the least Malice towards him.

The Slowness of the Procession made this Journey appear so very tedious to his Lordship, that he often expressed his Desire of being got to the End of it, saying, that the Apparatus of Death, and the passing through such Crowds of People, were ten times worse than Death itself; but upon the Sheriff's taking Notice to his Lordship, that he was glad to see that he supported himself so well, his Lordship replied, I thank you, Sir, I hope I shall continue so to the last.

When his Lordship had got to that Part of Holborn which is near Drury-Lane, he said, he was thirsty, and should be glad of a Glass of Wine and Water; — but upon the Sheriff's remonstrating to him, that a Stop for that Purpose would necessarily draw a greater Crowd about him, which might possibly disturb and incommode him, yet if his Lordship still desired it, it should be done; he most readily answered, — That's true, I say no more, let us by no means stop.

When they approached near the Place of Execution, his Lordship told the Sheriff, That there was a Person waiting in a Coach near there, for whom he had a very sincere Regard, and of whom he should be glad to take his Leave before he died; to which the Sheriff answered, that if his Lordship insisted upon it, it should be so; but that he wished his Lordship, for his own Sake, would decline it, lest the Sight of a Person, for whom he had such a Regard, should unman him, and disarm him of the Fortitude he possessed. — To which his Lordship, without the least Hesitation, replied, Sir, if you think I am wrong, I submit; and upon the Sheriff's telling his Lordship, that if he had any thing to deliver to that Person, or any one else, he would faithfully do it; his Lordship thereupon delivered to the Sheriff a Pocket-Book, in which was a Bank-Note, and a Ring, and a Purse with some Guineas, in order to be delivered to that Person, and which was done accordingly.

The Landau being now advanced to the Place of Execution, his Lordship alighted from it, and ascended upon the Scaffold, which was covered with black Baize, with the same Composure and Fortitude of Mind he had enjoyed from the Time he left the Tower; where, after a short Stay, Mr. Humphries asked his Lordship, if he chose to say Prayers? which he declined; but upon his asking him, If he did not choose to join with him in the Lord's Prayer? he readily answered, he would, for he always thought it a very fine Prayer; upon which they knelt down together upon two Cushions, covered with black Baize, and his Lordship with an audible Voice very devoutly repeated the Lord's Prayer, and afterwards, with great Energy, the following Ejaculation, O God, forgive me all my Errors, — pardon all my Sins.

His Lordship then rising, took his Leave of the Sheriffs and the Chaplain; and after thanking them for their many Civilities, he presented his Watch to Mr. Sheriff Vaillant, which he desired his Acceptance of; and signified his Desire, that his Body might be buried at Breden or Stanton, in Leicestershire.

His Lordship then called for the Executioner, who immediately came to him, and asked him Forgiveness; upon which his Lordship said, *I freely forgive you, as I do all Mankind, and hope myself to be forgiven. — He then intended to give the Executioner five Guineas, but, by Mistake, giving it into the Hands of the Executioner's Assistant, an unseasonable Dispute ensued between those unthinking Wretches, which Mr. Sheriff Vaillant instantly silenced.*

The Executioner then proceeded to do his Duty, to which his Lordship, with great Resignation, submitted. — His Neckcloth being taken off, a white Cap, which his Lordship had brought in his Pocket, being put upon his Head, his Arms secured by a black Sash from incommoding himself, and the Cord put round his Neck, he advanced by three Steps upon an Elevation in the middle of the Scaffold, where Part of the Floor had been raised about eighteen Inches higher than the rest; and standing under the Cross-Beam which went over it, covered with black Baize, he asked the Executioner, Am I right? — Then the Cap was drawn over his Face: — and, then! — upon a Signal given by the Sheriff (for his Lordship, upon being before asked, declined to give one himself) that Part, upon which he stood, instantly sunk down from beneath his Feet, and left him entirely suspended; but not having sunk down so low as was designed, it was immediately pressed down, and levelled with the rest of the Floor.

For a few Seconds his Lordship made some Struggles against the Attacks of Death, but was soon soon eased of all Pain by the Pressure of the Executioner.

From the Time of his Lordship's ascending upon the Scaffold, until his Execution, was about eight Minutes; during which his Countenance did not change, nor his Tongue falter: — The Prospect of Death did not at all shake the Composure of his Mind.

Whatever were his Lordship's Failings, his Behaviour in these his last Moments, which created a most awful and respectful Silence amidst the numberless Spectators, cannot but make a sensible Impression upon every humane Breast.

The accustomed Time of one Hour being past, the Coffin was raised up, with the greater Decency to receive the Body, and being deposited in the Hearse, was conveyed by the Sheriffs, with the same Procession, to *Surgeons-Hall, to undergo the Remainder of the Sentence, (viz. Dissection.) — Which being done, the Body was on Thursday Evening, the 8th of May, delivered to his Friends for Interment.

He was privately interred at St. Pancras near London, in a Grave dug twelve or fourteen Feet deep, under the Belfry.

* The Statute made in the 25th Year of his late Majesty's Reign for preventing the Crime of Murder, enacts, " That the Body of every Person convicted of Murder shall, if such Conviction and Execution shall be in the County of Middlesex, or within the City of London, or the Liberties thereof, be immediately conveyed by the Sheriff or Sheriffs, his or their Deputy or Deputies, and his or their Officers, to the Hall of the Surgeons Company, or such other Place as the said Company shall appoint for this Purpose, and be delivered to such Person as the said Company shall depute or appoint, who shall give to the Sheriff or Sheriffs, his or their Deputy or Deputies, a Receipt for the same; and the Body so delivered to the said Company of Surgeons, shall be dissected and anatomized by the said Surgeons, or such Persons as they shall appoint for that Purpose; and that in no Case the Body shall be suffered to be buried, unless after such Body shall have been dissected and anatomized."
