

When one considers the whole of this Woman's Evidence together, — the several Advertisements, — the Conference with this pretended Conjurer, — her wandering Thoughts, — the putting up Bills in the Church, and the Meeting-houses of Presbyterians and Methodists, to pray for her Daughter's safe Return, (by which the pious Congregations were predisposed to Charity) — the nightly repeated Prayers to the same Purpose with the Apprentice at Home, — particularly the praying with him on the 29th of January for the Daughter's Apparition, (never mentioned till that very Evening) — that Prayer answered in the same Moment by the Daughter's suddenly rushing into the Room, — her Mother's pretended Surprize at seeing her, "Feel her, feel her, 'tis an Apparition!" and then fainting away; — all these Things put together, together too with the Account the Daughter gave before Mr. Alderman Chitty about Bishopsgate-Street, though they do not directly prove, yet surely they create something more than a Suspicion, that the whole was a Contrivance.

To support the Defendant's Evidence, as to the Manner of her Escape out of Window, Mrs. Canning the Mother, James Lord the Apprentice, and Mrs. Myers, have sworn, that her Ear (which the Defendant said was scratched in breaking out of the Window) was bloody, when she returned Home. The Mother says, the "Ear was then bleeding." James Lord says, "it was all over bloody, and the Handkerchief bloody." And Mrs. Myers says, "the Blood then dropt from her Ear upon her Shoulder."

This was six Hours after the Time of her leaving Enfield-Wash; and, according to the Defendant's own Evidence, she wrapped a white Linen Handkerchief round her Head, which she found in Wells's Room, and wore it, instead of a Cap, all the Way to her Mother's: Now, if her Ear bled at the Rate those Witnesses would have you believe, the Handkerchief must have been extremely bloody in one particular Place. That Handkerchief has been produced to shew to the Witnesses under another Head of Evidence, and is now before you. Does it not give the Lye to these three Witnesses? It has indeed the Marks of little Spots of Blood upon it, but in different Places, all over the Handkerchief, and not at all corresponding with their Testimony, but rather like Dots made by a Finger on Purpose.

But it being a good while since Mrs. Canning had the Possession of this Handkerchief, I do not wonder at her forgetting in what Manner she had dressed it up, seeing her Want of Memory has betrayed her into a flat Contradiction to the Evidence she herself gave upon the Trial of Squires. For she now swears her Daughter came Home with two Handkerchiefs on her Head, and that "she had no Cap on;" but upon that Trial, she said nothing of the Handkerchief, but swore, that, upon her Return, "she had a Cap on."

Gentlemen, it is an Objection to the Credit of the Apprentice, that he has been hid, till he is brought here as a Witness, lest he should make Discoveries; for when Mr. Biddulph went to the House in order to ask him a few Questions, another Person was imposed upon him in his Stead.

It will be material to another Part of the Evidence afterwards, to recollect Lord's Description of the Defendant upon the 29th of January, that "she was black and blue as if beaten," and that "her Arms and Face were as black as his Hat." He also tells you, what is contradictory to all the rest of the Evidence, that on her first coming Home, before Mr. Scarrat or any body came in, she said she had been confined at Enfield-Wash. If you consider the whole Tenor of the Evidence for the Defendant, you must be convinced that this Lad has sworn falsely, and that he was hid for a very iniquitous Purpose.

The Name of Mr. Scarrat, the next Witness, I have had Occasion to mention once or twice already, in Terms not much to his Advantage.

He came to the Defendant, before she was asked any Questions; — one of the Witnesses says, it was before she answered any Questions.

What brought him there, a total Stranger both to the Mother and Daughter? for, if you can believe him, he had never spoke to either of them in his Life.

He says, he was prompted merely by Curiosity, upon hearing, in the Neighbourhood, that Betty Canning was returned Home: And the Moment he came in he asked her, "where she had been confined!"

Ready to satisfy this Stranger at once, she told him she had been confined somewhere on the Hertfordshire Road, for she remembered the Coachman's going by.

The next Question was, "How far from London?" She answered, "Near nine or ten Miles."

Without further Inquiry, SCARRAT instantly replied, "I'll lay a Guinea to a Farthing she has been at Mother Wells's:" She immediately said, "I think I did hear the Name of Wills or Wells:" And he then helped her to a perfect Description of Wells's House, and the Places about it.

Mr. Scarrat proceeds to ask her various Questions, in order (as he says) to be satisfied, whether she really had been there. He asked her about the Prospect from the Window, — the plough'd Land, — the Brook, — the Tanner's, — and every remarkable Thing he could recollect; and to every Question she answered in the Affirmative.

If Scarrat really meant to be satisfied whether she had been at Wells's, seeing she answered affirmatively to every Question, why did he not put one Question at least, to which her answering Yes would have convinced him, she had not been there? The Reason of that Omission may be easily collected from the rest of his Behaviour.

Being asked, whether he knew Mrs. Wells's, he would have you think he only knew her House by passing and repassing. Was you never there? Why, "he believes" — he is not sure — "he has been there once or twice." No oftener? — Upon your Oath, have not you been there more than twice? "I believe I have been there two or three Times." — Four Times, Sir? "He might have been there three or four Times." At last it came up to ten. "He could not say but he had been there ten Times!" But, says he, I had never been in the Hay-loft. In this I believe him, because the Defendant appears to have been helped to no Description of it. — If he had been there, he might have asked some Questions about that too, which she would also have answered in the Affirmative: But though he might have never been in this Hay-loft, yet he had been all round the House, and must have known by the Outside, that XLIV. The TRIAL of MARY BLANDY, Spinster, for the Murder of her Father, FRANCIS BLANDY, Gent. at the Assizes held at Oxford for the County of Oxford, on Saturday the 29th of February, 1752. Before the Honourable Heneage Legge, Esq; and Sir Sydney Stafford Smythe, Knt. two of the Barons of his Majesty's Court of Exchequer.

[Published by Permission of the Judges.]

ON Monday, the 2d of March 1752, a Bill of Indictment was found by the Grand Inquest for the County of Oxford, against Mary Blandy, Spinster, for the Murder of Francis Blandy, late of the Parish of Henley upon Thames, in the said County, Gentleman.

On Tuesday, the 3d of March 1752, the Court being met, the Prisoner Mary Blandy was set to the Bar, when the Court proceeded thus :

Clerk of the Arraigns. Mary Blandy, hold up thy Hand; (which she did.) You stand indicted by the Name of Mary Blandy, late of the Parish of Henley upon Thames, in the County of Oxford, Spinster; Daughter of Francis Blandy, late of the same Place, Gentleman, deceased; for that you, not having the Fear of God before your Eyes, but being moved and seduced by the Instigation of the Devil, and of your Malice aforethought, contriving and intending, him the said Francis Blandy, your said late Father, in his Life-time to deprive of his Life; and him feloniously to kill, and murder, on the 10th Day of November, in the 23d Year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord George the Second, now King of Great Britain; and on divers Days and Times, between the said 10th Day of November, and the 5th Day of August, in the 25th Year of the Reign of his said Majesty, with Force and Arms, at the Parish of Henley upon Thames aforesaid, in the County aforesaid, did knowingly, wilfully, and feloniously, and of your Malice aforethought, mix and mingle certain deadly Poison, to wit, white Arsenick, in certain Tea, which had been at divers Times, during the Time above specified, prepared for the Use of the said Francis Blandy, to be drank by him: You the said Mary, then and there well knowing that the said Tea, with which you did so mix and mingle the said deadly Poison as aforesaid, was then and there prepared for the Use of the said Francis Blandy, with Intent to be then and there administered to him, for his drinking the same; and the said Tea with which the said Poison was so mixed as aforesaid, afterwards, to wit, on the said 10th Day of November, and on the divers Days and Times aforesaid, at Henley upon Thames aforesaid, was delivered to the said Francis, to be then and there drank by him; and the said Francis Blandy, not knowing the said Poison to have been mixed with the said Tea, did afterwards, to wit, on the said 10th Day of November, and on the said divers Days and Times aforesaid, there drink and swallow several Quantities of the said Poison, so mixed as aforesaid with the said Tea; and that you the said Mary Blandy might more speedily kill and murder the said Francis Blandy, you the said Mary Blandy, on the said 5th Day of August, and at divers other Days and Times between the said 5th Day of August and the 14th Day of August, in the 25th Year of the Reign of our said Sovereign Lord George the Second, now King of Great Britain, &c. with Force and Arms, at the Parish of Henley upon Thames aforesaid, in the County aforesaid, did knowingly, wilfully, feloniously, and of your Malice aforesaid, mix and mingle certain deadly Poison, to wit, white Arsenick, with certain Water-Gruel, which had been made and prepared for the Use of your said then Father, the said Francis Blandy, to be drank by him, you the said Mary then and there well knowing that the said Water-Gruel, with which you did so mix and mingle the said deadly Poison as aforesaid, was then and there made for the Use of the said Francis Blandy, with Intent to be then and there administered to him for his drinking the same; and the same Water-Gruel, with which the said Poison was so mixt as aforesaid, afterwards, to wit, on the same Day and Year, at Henley upon Thames aforesaid, was delivered to the said Francis, to be then and there drank by him; and the said Francis Blandy, not knowing the said Poison to have been mixed with the said Water-Gruel, did afterwards, to wit, on the said 5th Day of August, and on the Day next following, and on divers other Days and Times afterwards, and before the said 14th Day of August, there drink and swallow several Quantities of the said Poison, so mixed as aforesaid with the said Water-Gruel; and the said Francis Blandy, of the Poison aforesaid, and by the Operation thereof, became sick, and greatly disordered in his Body, and from the several Times aforesaid until the 14th Day of the same Month of August, in the 25th Year aforesaid, at the Parish aforesaid in the County aforesaid, did languish; on which said 14th Day of August, in the 25th Year aforesaid, the said Francis Blandy, at the Parish aforesaid, in the County aforesaid, of that Poison died: And so you, the said Mary Blandy, him the aforesaid Francis Blandy, at Henley upon Thames aforesaid, in Manner and Form aforesaid, feloniously, wilfully, and of your Malice aforesaid, did poison, kill and murder, against the Peace of our said Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity.

Clerk of the Arraigns. How sayest thou, Mary Blandy, art thou guilty of the Felony and Murder whereof thou standest indicted, or not guilty?

Prisoner. Not guilty.

Cl. of Arr. Culprit, how wilt thou be tried?

Prif. By God and my Country.

Cl. of Arr. God send thee a good Deliverance.

Cl. of Arr. Anthony Woodward.

Cryer. Anthony Woodward, look upon the Prisoner; You shall well and truly try, and true Deliverance make, between our Sovereign Lord the King and the Prisoner at the Bar, whom you shall have in Charge, and a true Verdict give, according to the Evidence: So help you God.

Cryer. Gentlemen, are ye all sworn?

Cl. of Arr. Cryer, make Proclamation.

Cryer. Oyez, Oyez, Oyez; If any one can inform My Lords the King's Justices, the King's Serjeant, the King's Attorney-General, or this Inquest now to be taken, of any Treasons, Murders, Felonies, or Misdemeanours, committed or done by the Prisoner at the Bar, let him come forth, and he shall be heard, for the Prisoner stands now at the Bar upon her Deliverance; and all Persons that are bound by Recognizance to give Evidence against the Prisoner at the Bar, let them come forth and give their Evidence, or they will forfeit their Recognizances.

Cl. of Arr. Mary Blandy, hold up thy Hand; Gentlemen of the Jury, look upon the Prisoner, and hearken to her Charge; she stands indicted by the Name of Mary Blandy, of the Parish of Henley upon Thames, in the County of Oxford, Spinster, Daughter of Francis Blandy, late of the same Place, Gentleman, deceased, for that she not having (as in the Indictment before set forth.) Upon this Indictment she has been arraigned, and upon her Arraignment has pleaded Not guilty; and for her Trial has put herself upon God and her Country, which Country you are: Your Charge therefore is, to inquire whether she be guilty of the Felony and Murder whereof she stands stands indicted, or not guilty. If you find her guilty, you shall inquire what Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements she had; at the Time of the Felony committed, or at any Time since: If you find her not guilty, you shall inquire whether she fled for the same: If you find that she did fly for the same, you shall inquire of her Goods and Chattels, as if you had found her guilty: If you find her not guilty, and that she did not fly for the same, say so, and no more; and hear your Evidence.

The Hon. Mr. Barrington then opened the Indictment. After which, the Hon. Mr. Batburst spoke as follows:

May it please your Lordships, and you Gentlemen of the Jury; I am Council in this Case for the King, in whose Name, and at whose Expence, this Prosecution is carried on against the Prisoner at the Bar; in order to bring her to Justice, for a Crime of so black a Dye, that I am not at all surpris'd at this vast Concourse of People, collected together to hear, and to see, the Trial and Catastrophe of so execrable an Offender, as she is supposed to be.

For, Gentlemen, the Prisoner at the Bar, Miss Mary Blandy, a Gentlewoman by Birth and Education, stands indicted for no less a Crime than that of Murder. And not only for Murder, but for the Murder of her own Father; And for the Murder of a Father passionately fond of her, undertaken with the utmost Deliberation; carried on with an unvaried Continuation of Intention; and at last accomplished by a frequent Repetition of the baneful Dose, administred with her own Hands. A Crime so shocking in its own Nature, and so aggravated in all its Circumstances, as will (if she is proved to be guilty of it) justly render her infamous to the latest Posterity; and make our Children's Children, when they read the horrid Tale of this Day, blush to think that such an inhuman Creature ever had an Existence.

I need not, Gentlemen, paint to you the Heinousness of the Crime of Murder. You have but to consult your own Breasts, and you will know it.

Has a Murder been committed? Who ever beheld the ghastly Corpse of the murdered Innocent weltering in its Blood, and did not feel his own Blood run slow and cold through all his Veins?—Has the Murderer escaped? With what Eagerness do we pursue? With what Zeal do we apprehend? With what Joy do we bring to Justice? And when the dreadful Sentence of Death is pronounced upon him, every Body hears it with Satisfaction, and acknowledges the Justice of the divine Denunciation, that, By whom Man's Blood is shed, by Man shall his Blood be shed.

If this then is the Case of every common Murderer; what will be thought of one, who has murdered her own Father? Who has designedly done the greatest of all human Injuries to him, from whom she received the first and greatest of all human Benefits? Who has wickedly taken away his Life, to whom she stands indebted for Life? Who has deliberately destroyed, in his old Age, him, by whose Care and Tendernefs she was protected in her helpless Infancy? Who has impiously shut her Ears against the loud Voice of Nature and of God, which bid her honour her Father, and instead of honouring him has murdered him?

It becomes us, Gentlemen, Who appear here as Council for the Crown, shortly to open the History of this whole Affair; that you may be better able to attend to and understand the Evidence we have to lay before you. And though, in doing this, I will endeavour rather to extenuate than to aggravate: Yet I trust I have such an History to open as will shock the Ears of all who hear me.

Mr. Francis Blandy, the unfortunate Deceased, was an Attorney at Law, who lived at Henley in this County. A Man of Character and Reputation; he had one only Child,—a Daughter,—the Darling of his Soul, the Comfort of his Age. He took the utmost Care of her Education, and had the Satisfaction to see his Care was not ill-bestowed; for she was genteel, agreeable, sprightly, sensible. His whole Thoughts were bent to settle her advantageously in the World. In order to do that, he made use of a pious Fraud, (if I may be allowed the Expression,) pretending he could give her 10,000 l. for her Fortune. This he did in hopes that some of the neighbouring Gentlemen would pay their Addresses to her: For out of Regard to him, she was from her earliest Youth received into the best Company; and her own Behaviour made her afterwards acceptable to them. But how short-sighted is human Prudence! What was intended for her Promotion proved his Death and her Destruction.

For, Gentlemen, About six Years ago, one Captain William Henry Cranstoun, a Gentleman then in the Army, happened to come to Henley to recruit. He soon got acquainted with the Prisoner, and hearing she was to have 10,000 l. fell in love,—not with her, but with her Fortune. Children he had before; married he was at that Time, yet concealing it from her, he insinuated himself into her good Graces, and obtained her Consent for Marriage.

The Father, who had heard a bad Character of him, and who had Reason to believe what was afterwards confirmed, that he was at that very Time married, you will easily imagine was averse to the Proposal. Upon this Captain Cranstoun and the Prisoner determined to remove that Obstacle out of their Way, and resolved to get as soon as possible into Possession of the 10,000 l. that the poor Man had unfortunately said he was worth.

In order for this, the Captain being at Mr. Blandy's House in August 1750, they both agreed upon this horrid Deed. And that People might be less surpris'd at Mr. Blandy's Death, they began by giving out that they heard Music in the House.—A certain Sign (as Mr. Cranstoun had learned from a wise Woman, one Mrs. Morgan, in Scotland) that the Father would die in less than twelve Months.—The Captain too pretended he was indowed with the Gift of second Sight, and affirmed that he had seen Mr. Blandy's Apparition. This was another certain Sign of his Death, as she told the Servants; to whom she frequently said her Father would not live long. Nay, she went farther, and told them he would not live till the October following.

When it was she first began to mix Poison with his Victuals, it is impossible for us to ascertain; but probably it was not long after November 1750, when Mr. Cranstoun left Henley. The Effects of the Poison were soon perceived. You will hear Dr. Addington his Physician tell you, Mr. Blandy had for many Months felt the dreadful Effects of it.

it. One of the Effects was the Teeth dropping out of his Head, whole from their Sockets. Yet what do you think, Gentlemen, the Daughter did when she perceived it? She d—n'd him for a toothless old Rogue, and wish'd him at Hell. The poor Man frequently complained of Pains in his Bowels; had frequent Reachings and Sicknes: Yet instead of desisting, she wanted more Poison to effect her Purpose. And Mr. Cranstoun did accordingly in the April following send her a fresh Supply; under the Pretence of a Present of Scotch Pebbles, he inclosed a Paper of white Arsenic. This she frequently administred in his Tea; and we shall prove to you that in June having put some of it into a Dish of Tea, Mr. Blandy disliking the Taste left half in the Cup. Unfortunately! a poor old Chair-woman (by Name Ann Emmet) glad to get a Breakfast, drank the Remainder, together with a Dish or two more out of the Pot, and eat what Bread and Butter had been left. The Consequence was, that she was taken violently ill with purging and vomiting, and was in imminent Danger of her Life. The poor Woman's Daughter came and told Miss Blandy how ill her Mother was; she, sorry that the Poison was misapplied, said, Do not let your Mother be uneasy, I will send her what is proper for her. And accordingly sent her great Quantities of Sack Whey and thin Mutton Broth, than which no Physician could have prescribed better. And thus drenched the poor Woman for ten Days together; till she grew tired of her Medicines, and sent her Daughter again to Miss Blandy to beg a little small Beer. No, no small Beer, the Prisoner said, that was not proper for her. Most plainly then she knew what it was the Woman had taken in her Father's Tea. She knew its Effect. She knew the proper Antidotes.—Having now experienced the Strength of the Poison, she grew more open and undaunted; was heard to say, Who would grudge to send an old Father to Hell for 10,000 l.? I will make no Remark upon such an horrid Expression,—it needs none. After this she continued to mix the Poison with her Father's Tea as often as she had an Opportunity. Soon afterwards, Susan Gunnell, another Witness we shall call, happened to drink some which her Master had left; she was taken ill upon it, and continued so for three Weeks. This second Accident alarmed the Prisoner. She was afraid of being discovered. She found it would not mix well with Tea. Accordingly she wrote to Mr. Cranstoun for further Instructions. In answer to it, he bids her put it into some Liquid of a more thickish Substance.

The Father being ill, frequently took Water-gruel. This was a proper Vehicle for the Powder. Therefore from this Time you will find her always busy about her Father's Gruel. But lest Susan Gunnell, who had been ill, should eat any of it, she cautioned her particularly against it; saying, Susan, As you have been so ill, you had better not eat any of your Master's Water-gruel; I have been told Water-gruel has done me harm, and perhaps it may have the same Effect upon you. And lest this Caution should not be sufficient, she spoke to Betty Binfield, the other Maid-Servant, and asked her whether Susan ever eat any of her Father's Gruel, adding, She had better not; for if she does, it may do for her, You may tell her. Evidently then she knew what were the Effects of the Powder she put into her Father's Gruel; for if it would do for the Servant, it would do for her Father.

But the Time approached beyond which she had foretold her Father would not live.—It was the Middle of July, and the Father still living.—At this Mr. Cranstoun grows impatient. Upon the 18th of July he writes to her, and expressing himself in an allegorical Manner, which however you will easily understand, he says, I am sorry there are such Occasions to clean your Pebbles, you must make use of the Powder to them, by putting it in any thing of Substance, wherein it will not swim a-top of the Water, of which I wrote to you of in one of my last. I am afraid it will be too weak to take off their Rust, or at least it will take too long a Time. Here he is encouraging her to double the Dose; says, he is afraid it will be too weak, and will take up too much Time. And, as a farther Incitement to her to make haste, describes the Beauties of Scotland, and tells her that his Mother, Lady Cranstoun, had employ'd Workmen to fit up an Apartment for her at Lennel-House.

Soon after the Receipt of this Letter she follow'd the Advice. And you will accordingly find the Dose doubled. Her Father grew worse, and, as she herself told the Servants, complained of a Fireball in his Stomach, saying, he never will be well till he has got rid of it. And yet you will find she herself, fearful lest he should get rid of it, was continually adding Fuel to the Fire, till it had consumed her Father's Entrails.

Gentlemen, I will not detain you by going through every Particular, but bring you to the fatal Period. Upon the 3d of August, being Saturday, Susan Gunnell made a large Pan of Water-gruel for her Master. Upon Monday the 5th the Prisoner will be proved to go into the Pantry where it was kept, and after having, according to Mr. Cranstoun's Advice, put in a double Dose of the Powder, she stirr'd it about for a considerable Time, in order to make it mix the better. When fearing she should have been observed, she went immediately into the Laundry, to the Maids, and told them, that she had been in the Pantry, and after stirring her Papa's Water-gruel, had eat the Oatmeal at the Bottom, saying, that, if she was ever to take to the eating anything in particular, it would be Oatmeal. Strange Inconsistence! She who had caution'd the Maid against it not above a Fortnight before, who had declared that it had been prejudicial to her own Health, “is on a sudden grown mighty fond of it.”—But the Pretence is easily to be seen through. That Afternoon some of the Water-gruel was taken out of the Pan, and prepared for her Father's Supper. She again in the Kitchen takes care to stir it sufficiently; Looks at the Spoon; Rubs some between her Fingers; And then sends it up to the poor old Man, her Father. He scarce had swallow'd it, when he was taken violently ill, and continued so all the next Day, with a Gripping, Purging, and Vomiting. Yet she herself orders a second Mess, of the same Gruel, for her Father's Supper on the Tuesday, and was herself the Person who carried it up to her Father, and administred it to him as Nourishment. The poor old Man, grown weak with the frequent Repetition, had not drank half the Mess before he was seiz'd, from Head to Foot, with the most violent pricking Pains, continual Reaching and Vomiting;—and was obliged to go to Bed without finishing it. The next Morning the poor Chairwoman coming again to the House, unfortunately eat the Remainder of the Gruel, and was instantly affected in so violent a Manner, that for two Hours together it was thought she would have died in Mr. Blandy's House. The Prisoner at this Time was in Bed, but the Maid going up to her Room told her how ill Dame Emmet had been, at the same Time saying, she had eat nothing but the Remainder of her Father's Water-gruel. The Prisoner's Answer was, Poor Woman! I am glad I was not up, I should have been shock'd to have seen her. Should have been shock'd to have seen the poor Chair-woman eat what was prepared for her Father; but was never shock'd at her Father's eating it, or at his Sufferings!

Gentlemen, in the Afternoon of the Wednesday, notwithstanding the poor Man, her Father, had suffer'd so much for two Days together, yet she again endeavours to give him more of the same Gruel. No! says the Maid, it has an odd Taste; it is grown stale; I will make fresh. - It is not worth while to make fresh now, it will take you from your Ironing; this will do, was the Prisoner's Answer. However, Susan made fresh, after which wanting the Pan to put it in, she went to throw away what was before in it. Upon tilting the Pan, she perceived a white Powder at the Bottom; which she knew could not be Oatmeal. She shew'd it her Fellow-Servant, when feeling it they found it gritty. They then too plainly perceived what it was had made their poor old Master so ill. What was to be done? Susan immediately carried the Pan, with the Gruel and Powder in it, to Mrs. Mounteney, a Neighbour and Friend of the deceased. Mrs. Mounteney kept it till it was deliver'd to the Apothecary, the Apothecary deliver'd it to the Physician, and he will tell you, that upon trying it, he found it to be white Arsenic. Mr. Blandy continued from Day to Day to grow worse. At last, upon the Saturday Morning, Susan Gunnell, an old honest Maid-Servant, uneasy to see how her poor Master had been treated, went to his Bed-side, and, in the most prudent and gentlest Manner, broke to him what had been the Cause of his Illness, and the strong Ground there was to suspect that his Daughter was the Occasion of it. The Father, with a Fondness greater than ever a Father felt before, cried out, Poor love-sick Girl! What will not a Woman do for the Man she loves! But who do you think gave her the Powder? She answer'd, She could not tell, unless it was sent by Mr. Cranstoun. I believe so too, says the Master, for I remember he has talked learnedly of Poisons. I always thought there was Mischief in those cursed Scotch Pebbles.

Soon afterwards he got up and came to Breakfast in his Parlour, where his Daughter and Mr. Littleton, his Clerk, then were. A Dish of Tea, in the usual Manner, was ready pour'd out for him. He just tasted it, and said, This Tea has a bad Taste; looked at the Cup; then looked hard at his Daughter. She was, for the first Time, shock'd; burst into Tears, and ran out of the Room. The poor Father, more shock'd than the Daughter, poured the Tea into the Cat's Bason, and went to the Window to recover himself. She soon came again into the Room. Mr. Littleton said, Madam! I fear your Father is very ill, for he has flung away his Tea. Upon this News she trembled, and the Tears again stood in her Eyes. She again withdrew. Soon afterwards the Father came into the Kitchen, and addressing himself to her said, Molly! I had like to have been poison'd twenty Years ago, and now I find I shall die by Poison at last. This was Warning sufficient. She immediately went up Stairs, brought down Mr. Cranstoun's Letters, together with the Remainder of the Poison, and threw them (as she thought unobserv'd) into the Fire. Thinking she had now clear'd herself from the suspicious Appearances of Poison, her Spirits mend, she thank'd God, that she was much better, and said, her Mind was more at ease than it had been. Alas! how often does that, which we fondly imagine will save us, become our Destruction? So it was in the present Instance. For providentially, though the Letters were destroy'd, the Paper with the Poison in it was not burnt. One of the Maids having immediately flung some fresh Coals upon the Fire, Miss Blandy went well satisfied out of the Room. Upon her going out, Susan Gunnell said to her Fellow-Servant, I saw Miss Blandy throw some Papers in the Fire, let us see whether we can discover what they were. They removed the Coals, and found a Paper with white Powder in it, wrote upon, in Mr. Cranstoun's Hand, "Powder to clean the Pebbles." This Powder they preserved, and the Doctor will tell you, that it was white Arsenic, the same which had been found in the Pan of Gruel.

Having now (as she imagined) concealed her own being concern'd, you will find her the next Day endeavouring to prevent her Lover from being discover'd. Mr. Blandy of Kingston having come the Night before to see her Father, on Sunday Morning she sent Mr. Littleton with him to Church; while they were there, she sat down and wrote this Letter to her beloved Cranstoun:

Dear Willy,

MY Father is so bad, that I have only Time to tell you, that if you do not hear from me soon again, don't be frighten'd. I am better myself. Lest any Accident should happen to your Letters, take care what you write. My sincere Compliments. I am ever

Yours.

My Father is so bad.—Who had made him so? Yet does she say she was sorry for it? No. She knew her Father was then dying by that Powder that he had sent her, yet could acquaint him she was herself better. Under those Circumstances could caution him to take care what he wrote, lest his Letters should be discovered. What can speak more strongly their mutual Guilt? This Letter she sealed with no less than five Wafers. When Mr. Littleton came from Church, she privately gave it to him, desiring it might be directed as usual, and put into the Post. Mr. Littleton was at that Time too well apprised of this black Transaction to obey her Commands. He opened the Letter. Took a Copy of it. Upon further Recollection, carry'd the Original to the Father, who bid him open and read it. He did so. What do you think, Gentlemen! was all the poor old Man said upon this Discovery?

He only again dropp'd these Words, Poor love-sick Girl! What will not a Woman do for the Man she loves?

Upon the Monday Morning, after having been kept for two Days without seeing her Father, by the Order of the Physicians, her Conscience, or rather Fear, began to trouble her; she told the Maid she should go distracted if she did not see her Father, and sent a Message to beg to see him. Accordingly she was admitted. The Conversation between them was this, "Papa, how do “ you do ?” My Dear, I am very ill. She immediately fell upon her Knees, and said, “ Dear Sir, “ Banish me where you will, Do with me what you “ please, so you do but pardon and forgive me. “ And, as to Mr. Cranstoun, I never will see, “ write, or speak to him again.” He answer’d, I do forgive you, but you should, my Dear; have consider’d that I was your own Father. Upon this the Prisoner said, “ Sir, as to your Illness I am innocent.” Susan Gunnell, who was present, interrupted her at this Expression, and told her she was astonish’d to hear her say she was innocent, when they had the Poison to produce against her, that she had put into her Father’s Water-gruel, and had preserved the Paper she had thrown into the Fire. The Father, whose Love and Tenderness for his Daughter exceeded Expression, could not bear to hear her thus accused; therefore turning himself in his Bed cried out, Oh that Villain! that hath eat of the best, and drank of the best my House could afford, to take away my Life, and ruin my Daughter. Upon hearing this the Daughter run to the other Side of the Bed to him, upon which he added, My Dear, you must hate that Man, you must hate the very Ground he treads on. Struck with this, the Prisoner said, “ Dear Sir! your “ Kindness towards me is worse than Swords to “ my Heart. I must down upon my Knees, and “ beg you not to curse me.” Hear the Father’s Answer, a Father then dying by Poison given by her Hand, I curse thee, my Dear! no, I bless you, and will pray to God to bless you, and to amend your Life; then added, So do, my Dear, go out of the Room, lest you should say any thing to accuse yourself. Was ever such Tenderness from a Parent to a Child! She was prudent enough to follow his Advice, and went out of the Room without speaking.

His Kindness was Swords to her Heart, for near half an Hour. Going down Stairs she met Betty Binfield, and whilst she was thus affected, owned to her, she had put some Powder into her Father’s Gruel, and that Susan and she for their Honesty to their Master deserved half her Fortune.

Gentlemen, not to tire you with the Particulars of every Day; upon Wednesday, in the Afternoon, the Father died. Upon his Death, the Prisoner finding herself discovered, endeavour’d to persuade the Man-Servant to go off with her; but he was too honest to be tempted by a Reward to assist her in going off, tho’ she told him it would be 500*l.* in his way. That Night she refused to go to Bed. Not out of Grief for her Father’s Death; for you will be told by the Maid, who sat up with her, that she never, during the whole Night, shewed the least Sorrow, Compassion, or Remorse upon his Account. But in the Middle of the Night she propos’d to get a Post-Chaise in order to go to London, and offer’d the Maid twenty-five Guineas to go with her. A Post-Chaise! and go to London! God forbid, Madam! I should do such a Thing. The Prisoner finding the Maid not proper for her Purpose, immediately put a Smile upon her Face, “ I was “ only joking.” Only joking! good God! would she now have it thought she was only joking?

Her Father just dead by Poison: She suspected of having poison’d him; accus’d of being a Parricide; and would she have it thought she was capable of joking?

When I see the Assistance she now has, (and I am glad to see she has the Assistance of three able Gentlemen, as any in the Profession) I am sure she will not be now advis’d to say she was then joking. But it will appear very plainly to you, Gentlemen, that she was not joking; for the next Morning she dress’d herself in a proper Habit for a Journey, and, while the People put to take care of her, were absent, stole out of the House, and went over Henley-Bridge. But the Mob, who had heard of what she had done, follow’d her so close, that she was forced to take shelter in a little Alehouse, the Angel. Mr. Fisher, a Gentleman, who was afterwards one of the Jury upon the Coroner’s Inquisition, came there and prevail’d with her (or in other Words forced her) to return home. Upon her Return, the Inquest sitting, she sends for Mr. Fisher into another Room, and said, Dear Mr. Fisher! what do you think they will do with me? Will they send me to Oxford Gaol? Madam! said he, I am afraid it will go hard with you. But if you have any of Mr. Cranstoun’s Letters, and produce them, they may be of some Service to you. Upon hearing this, she cried out, Dear Mr. Fisher! What have I done? I had Letters that would have hang’d that Villain, but I have burnt them. My Honour to that Villain has brought me to my Destruction. And she spoke the Truth.

This, Gentlemen, is, in Substance, the History of this black Affair. But, My Lords! though this is the History in Order of Time; yet it is not the Order in which we shall lay the Evidence before your Lordships and the Jury. It will be proper for us to begin by establishing the Fact, that Mr. Francis Blandy did die of Poison. When the Physicians have proved that, we will then proceed to shew that he died of the Poison put into the Water-gruel on the 5th of August. After this we will call Witnesses, who from a Number of Circumstances, as well as from her own Confession, will prove she put it into her Father’s Water-gruel, knowing it was for her Father, and knowing it to be Poison.

Having done this, we will conclude with a Piece of Evidence which I forgot to mention before, and that is the Conversation between her and Mr. Lane at the Angel. Mr. Lane and his Wife happening to be walking at that time, finding a Mob about the Door, step’d into the Alehouse to see the Prisoner. The Moment she saw a Gentleman, though it was one she did not know, she accosted him, “ Sir! you appear to be a Gentleman; for Heaven’s sake, what will become “ of me?” Madam! said he, you will be sent to Oxford Gaol, you will there be tried for your Life; if you are innocent, you will be acquitted; if you are guilty, you will suffer Death.

The Prisoner, upon hearing this, stamped with her Foot, and said, Oh! that damn’d Villain! then pausing, But why do I blame him? I am most to blame myself, for I gave it, and I knew the Consequence. If she knew the Consequence, I am sure there are none of you, Gentlemen, but who will think she deserves to suffer the Consequence.

And let me here observe, how evidently the Hand of Providence has interposed to bring her to this Day’s Trial, that she may suffer the Consequence. For what, but the Hand of Providence, could have preserved the Paper thrown, by her, into the Fire, and have snatch’d it unburnt from the devouring Flame? Good God! how wonderful are all thy Ways! and how miraculously hast thou preserved this Paper, to be this Day produced in Evidence against the Prisoner, in order that she may suffer the Punishment due due to her Crime; and be a dreadful Example to all others, who may be tempted in like Manner to offend thy Divine Majesty!

Let me add, that next to Providence the Public are obliged to the two Noble Lords, whose indefatigable Diligence in inquiring into this hidden Work of Darkneſs has enabled us to lay before you upon this Occaſion, the cleareſt and ſtrongeſt Proof that ſuch a dark Tranſaction will admit of. For Poiſoning is done in ſecret and alone; it is not like other Murders, neither can it be proved with equal Perſpicuity. However, the Evidence we have in this Caſe is as clear and direct as poſſible; and if it comes up to what I have opened to you, I make no doubt but you will do that Juſtice to your Country, which the Oath you have taken requires of you.

Mr. Serjeant Hayward.

May it pleaſe your Lordſhips, and you Gentlemen of the Jury; I likewise am appointed to aſſiſt the Crown on this Occaſion; but his Maſteſty's learned Council having laid before you ſo faithful a Narrative of this diſmal Tranſaction, it ſeems almoſt unneceſſary for me to take up any more of your Time, in repeating any Thing that has been before ſaid; and indeed my own Inclinations would lead me to caſt a Veil over the guilty Scene: A Scene, ſo black, and ſo horrid, that if my Duty did not call me to it, I could rather wiſh it might be for ever concealed from human Eyes. But as we are now making Inquiſition for Blood, it is abſolutely neceſſary for me to make ſome Obſervations upon that Chain of Circumſtances, that attended this bloody Contrivance and deteſted Murder.

Experience has taught us, that in many Caſes a ſingle Faſt may be ſupported by falſe Teſtimony, but where it is attended with a Train of Circumſtances that cannot be invented (had they never happened) ſuch a Faſt will always be made out to the Satisfaction of a Jury, by the concurring Aſſiſtance of circumſtantial Evidence. Becauſe Circumſtances that tally one with another are above human Contrivance. And eſpecially, ſuch as naturally ariſe in their Order, from the firſt Contrivance of a Scheme to the fatal Execution of it.

Having ſuggeſted thus much, I ſhall now proceed to lay before you thoſe ſort of Circumſtances that ſeem to me to ariſe through this whole Affair, and leave it to your Judgment, whether they do not amount to too convincing a Proof that the Priſoner at the Bar has knowingly been the Cauſe of her own Father's Death; for upon the Priſoner's Knowledge of what ſhe did, will depend her Fate.

Of all kinds of Murders, that by Poiſon is the moſt dreadful, as it takes a Man unguarded, and gives him no Opportunity to defend himſelf; much more ſo when adminiſtered by the Hand of a Child, whom one could leaſt ſuſpect, and from whom one might naturally look for Aſſiſtance and Comfort. Could a Father entertain any Suſpicion of a Child, to whom under God he had been the ſecond Cauſe of Life? No ſure, and yet this is the Caſe now before you. The unfortunate Deceas'd has received his Death by Poiſon, and that undoubtedly adminiſtered by the Hand of his own,—his only,—his beloved Child. Spare me, Gentlemen, to pay the Tribute of one Tear to the Memory of a Perſon, with whom I was moſt intimately acquainted, and to the Excellency of whoſe Diſpoſition and Integrity of Heart, I can ſafely bear faithful Teſtimony; O! were he now living, and to ſee his Daughter there, the ſevereſt Tortures that Poiſon could give, would be nothing to what he would ſuffer from ſuch a Sight.

And ſince the bittereſt Agonies muſt at this Time ſurround the Heart of the Priſoner, if ſhe does but think of what a Father ſhe has loſt; I can readily join with her in her ſevereſt Afflictions upon this Occaſion, and ſhall never blame myſelf, for weeping with thoſe that weep; nor can I make the leaſt Queſtion, but my learned Aſſiſtants in in this Proſecution will with me rejoice likewiſe, if the Priſoner, by making her Innocence appear, ſhall upon the Concluſion of this Inquiry find Occaſion to rejoice. But alas! too ſtrong I fear will the Charge againſt her be proved, too convincing are the Circumſtances that attend it: What thoſe are, and what may be collected from them, is my next Buſineſs to offer to your Conſideration.

But before I enter thereupon, I muſt beg leave to addreſs myſelf to this numerous and crowded Aſſembly, whom Curioſity hath led hither to hear the Event of this ſolemn Trial; hoping that whatever may be the Conſequence of it to the Priſoner, her preſent melancholy Situation may turn to our Advantage, and reduce our Minds to Seriousneſs and Attention. Solemn indeed I may well call it, as being a Tribunal truly awful: For this Method of Trial, before two of his Maſteſty's learned Judges, has ſcarce ever been known upon a Circuit; Judges of undoubted Virtue, Integrity, and Learning, who undergo this laborious and important Work, not only for the ſake of bringing Guilt to Punishment, but to guard and protect Innocence whenever it appears.

But You, young Gentlemen of this Univerſity, I particularly beg your Attention, earneſtly beſeeching you to guard againſt the firſt Approaches of and Temptations to Vice. See here the dreadful Conſequence of Diſobedience to a Parent. Who could have thought that Miſs Blandy, a young Lady virtuoſly brought up, diſtinguiſhed for her good Behaviour and prudent Conduct in Life, till her unfortunate Acquaintance with the wicked Cranſtoun, ſhould ever be brought to a Trial for her Life; and that for the moſt deſperate and bloodieſt kind of Murder, committed by her own Hand, upon her own Father? Had ſhe liſtened to his Admonitions, this Calamity never had befallen her. Learn hence the dreadful Conſequences of Diſobedience to Parents: and know alſo, that the ſame Miſchief in all Probability may happen to ſuch who obſtinately diſregard, neglect, and deſpiſe the Advice of thoſe Perſons who have the Charge and Care of their Education; of Governors likewiſe, and of Magiſtrates, and of all others who are put in Authority over them. Let this fix in your Mind the excellent Maxim of the good Phyſician, Venienti occurrere Morbo. Let us defend ourſelves againſt the firſt Temptations to Sin, and guard our Innocency as we would our Lives; for if once we yield, though but a little, in whoſe Power is it to ſay, Hitherto will I go, and no further?

And now, Gentlemen of the Jury, thoſe Obſervations I had before mentioned, I ſhall attempt to lay before you, in order to aſſiſt you in making a true Judgment of the Matter committed to your Charge. The Author and Contriver of this bloody Affair is not at preſent here, I ſincerely wiſh wish that he was; because we should be able to convince him, that such Crimes as his cannot escape unpunished. The unhappy Prisoner, ruin'd and undone, by the treacherous Flattery and pernicious Advice of that abandon'd, insidious and execrable Wretch, who had found means of introducing himself into her Father's Family, and, whilst there, by false Pretences of Love, gain'd the Affection of his only Daughter and Child. Love! did I call it? It deserves not the Name; if it was Love of any thing, it was of the Ten thousand Pounds, supposed to be the young Lady's Fortune. Could a Man that had a Wife of his own, and Children, be really in Love with another Woman? Such a Thing cannot be supposed, and therefore I beg leave to call it Avarice and Lust only; but be it what it will, the Life of the Father becomes an Obstacle to the criminal Proceedings that were intended and designed to be carried on between them, and therefore he must be remov'd, before that imaginary State of Felicity could be obtain'd, according to their projected Scheme. Mark how the Destruction of this poor Man is usher'd into the World: Apparitions, Noises, Voices, Musick, reported to be heard from time to time in the deceased's House. Even his Days are number'd out, and his own Child limits the Space of his Life but till the following Month of October. What could be the Meaning of this, but to prepare the World for a Death that was predetermin'd? Who could limit the Days of a Man's Life, but a Person that knew what was intended to be done towards the shortening of it?

In order to bring this about, Cranstoun sends Presents of Pebbles, as also a Powder to clean them; and this Powder, Gentlemen, you will find is the dreadful Poison that accomplished this abominable Scheme.

From time to time Mention is made of the Pebbles; but not a Syllable of the Powder. Why not of the one as well as of the other, if there had not been a Mystery concealed in it? Preparation is made for an Experiment of its Power before Cranstoun's Departure; he mixes the deadly Draught; but the Prisoner's Conscience, not yet harden'd, forc'd her to turn away her Eyes, and she durst not venture to behold the Cup prepared, that was to send the Father into another World.

Soon after this Cranstoun quits the Family, (having, no question, left Instructions how to proceed farther in compleating the Scheme he had laid for taking off the old Man) and this you'll find by Letters under his own Hand, that the Powder, whatever it was, must not be mix'd in too thin a Liquid, because it might be discover'd; and therefore Water-gruel is thought fitter for the Purpose. By the frequent Mixtures that were made upon these Occasions, the unfortunate Servant and Chairwoman accidentally drank Part of the deadly Composition. When Complaint is made of their Sicknefs, how does the Prisoner behave? Does she not administer to them with as much Art and Skill as a Physician could? Does she not prescribe proper Liquids and Draughts to absorb and take off the Edge of the corroding Poison? If she knew not what it was, how could she administer so successfully to prevent the fatal Consequences of it both in the Maid and the Chairwoman? During this Transaction, the unhappy Father finds himself afflicted with torturing Pains, immediately after receiving the Composition from his Daughter. Is there any Care taken of him? Any Physician sent for to attend him? Any healing Draughts prepar'd to quiet the Racks and Tortures that he inwardly felt? None at all, that I can find. He is left to take care of himself, and undergo those Miseries that his own Child had brought upon him, and yet had not the Heart to give him any Assistance. What could this proceed from, but Guilt only? Would not an innocent Child have made the strictest Inquiry how her own Father came to be out of order? Would she not have sought the World over for Advice and Assistance? But instead of that, you hear the bitterest Expressions proceed from her, Expressions sufficient to shock human Nature. They have been all mentioned already by my learned Leader, and I will not again repeat them.

Observe, as Things come nearer the Crisis, whether her Behaviour towards her Father carries any better Appearance. When it began to be suspected that Mr. Blandy's Disorder was owing to Poison, and strongly, from Circumstances, that the Prisoner was privy to it, the poor Man, now too far gone, being inform'd that there was great Reason to suspect his own Child, what Expressions does he make use of? No harsher, than in the gentlest Method saying, Poor Love-sick Girl! I always thought there was Mischief in those Scotch Pebbles. O! that damned Villain Cranstoun, that has eat of the best and drank of the best my House afforded, to serve me thus, and ruin my poor Love-sick Girl. An incontestable Proof that he knew the Cause of his Disorder, and the Authors of it.

The Report spread about the House of the Father's Suspicions, soon alarm'd the Prisoner: What does she do upon this Occasion? Can any other Interpretation be put upon her Actions, than that they proceeded from a manifest Intention to conceal her Guilt? Why is the Paper of Powder thrown into the Fire? From whence, as my learned Leader most elegantly observes, it is miraculously preserved. What Occasion for Concealment, had she not been conscious of something that was wrong? If she had not known what had been in the Paper, for what Purpose was it committed to the Flames? And what really was contained in that Paper, will appear to you to be deadly Poison.

The long wished for and fatal Hour at last arrives; and but a little before, a Letter is sent by the Prisoner to Cranstoun, that her Father was extremely ill. Begging him to be cautious what he writes, lest any Accident should happen to his Letters. Do the Circumstances, the Language, or the Time of writing this Letter, leave any room to suppose the Prisoner could be innocent? They seem to me rather to be the fullest Proof of her knowing what she had done. What Accidents could befall Cranstoun's Letters? Why is he to take care what he writes, if nothing but the Effects of Innocency were to be contained in those Letters? In a very short Time after this, the Strength of the Poison carries the Father out of the World. Do but hear how the Prisoner behaved thereupon. The Father's Corpse was not yet cold, when she makes Application to the Footman, with a Temptation of large Sums of Money, as a Reward, if he would go off with her; but the Fidelity and Virtue of the Servant was Proof against the Temptation even of Four or Five hundred Pounds. The next Proposal is to the Maid, to procure a Chaise, with the Offer of a Reward for so doing, and to go along with her to London; but this Project likewise failed, through the Honesty of the Servant: The next Morning, in the Absence of Edward Herne, (the Guard that was set over her) she makes her Escape from her Father's House, and dressed as if going to take a Journey, walked down the Street; but the Mob was soon aware of her, and forc'd her to take Shelter in a Public-House over the Bridge. Do these Proceedings look as if they were the Effects of Innocence? Far otherwise, I am afraid: Would an innocent Person have quitted a deceased Parent's House, at a Time when she was most wanting to make proper and decent Preparations for his Funeral? Would an innocent Person, at such a Time as this, offer Money for Assistance to make an Escape? I think not: And I wish she may find a satisfactory Cause to assign for such amazing Behaviour.

Let us put Innocence and Guilt in the Scale together, and observe to which Side the Prisoner's Actions are most applicable. Innocence, Celestial Virgin, always has her Guard about her; she dares look the Frowns, the Resentments, and the Persecutions of the World in the Face; is able to stand the Test of the strictest Inquiry; and the more we behold her, still the more shall we be in Love with her Charms. But it is not so with Guilt: The baneful Fiend makes use of unjustifiable Means to conceal her wicked Designs, and prevent Discovery. Artifice and Cunning are her Supporters, Bribery and Corruption the Defenders of her Cause; she flies before the Face of Law and Justice, and shuns the Probation of a candid and impartial Inquiry. Upon the whole Matter, you, Gentlemen, are to judge; and judge as favourably as you can for the Prisoner.

If this were not sufficient to convince us of the Prisoner's Guilt, I think the last Transaction of all will leave not the least Room to doubt. When in Discourse with Persons that came to her at the House where she had taken Shelter, what but a Self-conviction could have drawn such Expressions from her? In her Discourse with Mr. Fisher about Cranstoun, you will find she declared she had Letters and Papers that would have hanged that Villain: And again, says, My Honour, Mr. Fisher, to that Villain has brought me to Destruction: And again, in her Inquiry of Mr. Lane, What they would do with her, she bursts out into this bitter Exclamation, O! that damned Villain! then after a short Pause, But why should I blame him? I am more to blame than he is, for I gave it him. How could she be to blame for giving it, if she knew not what it was? And, as it is said, went yet farther, and declared, that she knew the Consequence. If she did know it, she must expect to suffer the Consequence of it too.

Thus, Gentlemen, have I endeavoured to lay before you some Observations upon this Transaction, and I hope you will think them not unworthy of your Consideration. I trust I have said nothing that relates to the Fact, that is not in my Instructions; should it be otherwise, I assure you it was not with Design. And whatever is not supported by legal Evidence, you will totally disregard.

If any other Interpretation than what I have offered, can be put upon these several Transactions, and the Circumstances attending them, I doubt not but you will always incline on the merciful Side, where there is Room for so doing.

We shall now proceed to call our Evidence.

VOL. X.

The other Gentlemen of Council for the King, were Mr. Hayes, Mr. Nares, and Mr. Ambler.

The Council for the Prisoner, were Mr. Ford, Mr. Morton, and Mr. Aston.

Dr. Anthony Addington, and Dr. William Lewis, sworn.

Council. Did you, Dr. Addington, attend Mr. Blandy in his last Illness?

Dr. Addington. Yes, Sir.

Council. When was you called to him the first Time?

Dr. Addington. On Saturday Evening, August the 10th.

Council. In what Condition did you find him?

Dr. Addington. He was in Bed; and told me, that, after drinking some Gruel on Monday Night, August the 5th, he had perceived an extraordinary Grittiness in his Mouth, attended with a very painful Burning and Pricking in his Tongue, Throat, Stomach, and Bowels, and with Sickness and Gripings; which Symptoms had been relieved by Fits of Vomiting and Purging.

Council. Were those Fits owing to any Physic he had taken, or to the Gruel?

Dr. Addington. Not to any Physic; they came on very soon after drinking the Gruel.

Council. Had he taken no Physic that Day?

Dr. Addington. No.

Council. Did he make any farther Complaints?

Dr. Addington. He said, that, after drinking more Gruel on Tuesday Night, August the 6th, he had felt the Grittiness in his Mouth again; and that the Burning and Pricking in his Tongue, Throat, Stomach, and Bowels, had return'd with double Violence, and been aggravated by a prodigious Swelling of his Belly, and exquisite Pains and Prickings in every external as well as internal Part of his Body; which Prickings he compared to an infinite Number of Needles darting into him all at once.

Council. How soon after drinking the Gruel?

Dr. Addington. Almost immediately. He told me likewise, that, at the same time, he had had cold Sweats, Hiccup, extreme Restlessness and Anxiety; but that then, viz. on Saturday Night, August the 10th, having had a great many Stools, and some bloody ones, he was pretty easy every where, except in his Mouth, Lips, Nose, Eyes, and Fundament; and except some transient Gripings in his Bowels. I asked him, to what he imputed those uneasy Sensations in his Mouth, Lips, Nose, and Eyes? He said, to the Fumes of something that he had taken in his Gruel, on Monday Night, August the 5th, and Tuesday Night, August the 6th.

On Inspection, I found his Tongue swelled, and his Throat slightly inflamed, and excoriated. His Lips, especially the upper one, were dry and rough, and had angry Pimples on them. The Inside of his Nostrils was in the same Condition. His Eyes were a little blood-hot. Besides these Appearances, I observed that he had a low, trembling, intermitting Pulse; a difficult, unequal Respiration; a yellowish Complexion; a Difficulty in the Utterance of his Words; and an Inability of swallowing even a Tea-spoonful of the thinnest Liquor at a Time.

As I suspected that these Appearances and Symptoms were the Effect of Poison, I asked Miss Blandy, whether Mr. Blandy had lately given Offence to either of his Servants, or Clients, or any other Person? She answered, That he was at Peace with all the World, and that all the World was at Peace with him. I then asked her, whether he had ever been subject to Complaints of this Kind before? She said, that he had often been subject to the Cholic and Heart-burn; and that she supposed this was only a Fit of that Sort, and would soon go off, as usual. I told Mr. Blandy, that I asked these Questions, because I suspected that by some Means or other he had taken Poison. He replied, It might be so, or in Words to that Effect: But Miss Blandy said, It was impossible.

On Sunday Morning, August the 10th, he seemed much relieved; his Pulse, Breath, Complexion, and Power of swallowing, were greatly mended. He had had several Stools in the Night, without any Blood in them. The Complaints which he had made of his Mouth, Lips, Nose, and Eyes, were lessened; but he said the Pain in his Fundament continued, and that he still felt some Pinchings in his Bowels. On viewing his Fundament, I found it almost surrounded with gleety Excoriations and Ulcers.

About Eight o'Clock this Morning I took my Leave of him; but before I quitted his Room, Miss Blandy desired I would visit him again the next Day.

When I got down Stairs, one of the Maids put a Paper into my Hands, which she said Miss Blandy had thrown into the Kitchen Fire. Several Holes were burnt in the Paper, but not a Letter of the Superscription was effaced. The Superscription was, The Powder to clean the Pebbles with.

Council. What is the Maid's Name that gave you that Paper?

Dr. Addington. I cannot recollect which of the Maids it was that gave it me. I opened the Paper very carefully, and found in it a whitish Powder, like white Arsenic in Taste, but slightly discoloured by a little burnt Paper mixed with it. I cannot swear this Powder was Arsenic, or any other Poison, because the Quantity was too small to make any Experiment with, that could be depended on.

Council. What do you really suspect it to be?

Dr. Addington. I really suspect it to be white Arsenic.

Council. Please to proceed, Sir.

Dr. Addington. As soon as the Maid had left me, Mr. Norton the Apothecary produced a Powder, that he said had been found at the Bottom of that Mess of Gruel, which, as was supposed, had poisoned Mr. Blandy: He gave me some of this Powder, and I examined it at my Leisure, and believe it to be white Arsenic.

On Monday Morning, August the 12th, I found Mr. Blandy much worse than I had left him the Day before. His Complexion was very bad; his Pulse intermitted; and he breathed and swallowed with great Difficulty. He complained more of his Fundament than he had done before. His Bowels were still in Pain.

I now desired that another Physician might be called in, as I apprehended Mr. Blandy to be in the utmost Danger, and that this Affair might come before a Court of Judicature. Dr. Lewis was then sent for from Oxford. I staid with Mr. Blandy all this Day. I asked him more than once, whether he really thought he had taken Poison? He answered each Time, that he believed he had.

I asked him, whether he thought he had taken Poison often? He answered in the Affirmative. His Reasons for thinking so, were, because some of his Teeth had decayed much faster than was natural; and because he had frequently, for some Months past, especially after his Daughter had received a Present of Scotch Pebbles from Mr. Cranstoun, been affected with very violent and unaccountable Prickings and Heats in his Tongue and Throat, and with almost intolerable Burnings, and Pains in his Stomach and Bowels, which used to go off in Vomitings and Purgings. I asked him, whom he suspected to be the Giver of the Poison? The Tears stood in his Eyes; yet he forced a Smile, and said,—A poor Love-sick Girl—I forgive her—I always thought there was Mischief in those cursed Scotch Pebbles.

Dr. Lewis came about Eight o'Clock in the Evening. Before he came, Mr. Blandy's Complexion, Pulse, Breath, and Faculty of swallowing, were got much better again; but he complained more of Pain in his Fundament.

This Evening Miss Blandy was confined to her Chamber; a Guard was placed over her; and her Keys, Papers, and all Instruments wherewith she could hurt either herself, or any other Person, were taken from her.

Council. How came that?

Dr. Addington. I proposed it to Dr. Lewis, and we both thought it proper; because we had great Reason to suspect her as the Author of Mr. Blandy's Illness; and because this Suspicion was not yet publicly known, and, therefore, no Magistrate had taken any Notice of her.

Council. Please to go on, Dr. Addington, with your Account of Mr. Blandy.

Dr. Addington. On Tuesday Morning, August the 13th, we found him worse again. His Countenance, Pulse, Breath, and Power of swallowing, were extremely bad. He was excessively weak. His Hands trembled. Both they and his Face were cold and clammy. The Pain was intirely gone from his Bowels, but not from his Fundament. He was now and then a little delirious. He had frequently a short Cough, and a very extraordinary Elevation of his Chest, in fetching his Breath; on which Occasions an ulcerous Matter generally issued from his Fundament. Yet, in his sensible Intervals, he was chearful and jocose: He said, he was like a Person bit by a mad Dog; for that he should be glad to drink, but could not swallow.

About Noon this Day his Speech faltered more and more. He was sometimes very restless, at others very sleepy. His Face was quite ghastly. This Night was a terrible one.

On Wednesday Morning, August the 14th, he recovered his Senses for an Hour or more. He told me, he would make his Will in two or three Days; but he soon grew delirious again; and, sinking every Moment, died about Two o'Clock in the Afternoon.

Council. Upon the whole, did you then think, from the Symptoms you have described, and the Observations you made, that Mr. Blandy died by Poison?

Dr. Addington. Indeed I did.

Council. And is it your present Opinion?

Dr. Addington. It is; and I have never had the least Occasion to alter it. His Case was so particular, that he had not a Symptom of any Consequence, sequence, but what other Persons have had, who have taken white Arsenic; and, after Death, had no * Appearance in his Body, but what other Persons have had, who have been destroyed by white Arsenic.

Council. When was his Body opened?

Dr. Addington. On Thursday in the Afternoon, August the 15th.

Council. What appeared on opening it?

Dr. Addington. I committed the Appearances to Writing, and should be glad to read them, if the Court will give me Leave.

Then the Doctor, on Leave given by the Court, read as follows:

Mr. Blandy's Back, and the hinder Part of his Arms, Thighs, and Legs, were livid. That Fat which lay on the Muscles of his Belly, was of a loose Texture, inclining to a State of Fluidity. The Muscles of his Belly were very pale and flaccid. The Cawl was yellower than is natural; and on the Side next the Stomach and Intestines looked brownish. The Heart was variegated with purple Spots. There was no Water in the Pericardium. The Lungs resembled Bladders half filled with Air, and blotted in some Places with pale, but in most with black Ink. The Liver and Spleen were much discoloured; the former looked as if it had been boiled; but that Part of it which covered the Stomach, was particularly dark. A Stone was found in the Gall-Bladder. The Bile was very fluid, and of a dirty yellow Colour, inclining to red. The Kidneys were all over stained with livid Spots. The Stomach and Bowels were inflated, and appeared, before any Incision was made into them, as if they had been pinched, and extravasated Blood had stagnated between their Membranes. They contained nothing, as far as we examined, but a slimy bloody Froth. Their Coats were remarkably smooth, thin, and flabby. The Wrinkles of the Stomach were totally obliterated. The internal Coat of the Stomach and Duodenum, especially about the Orifices of the former, was prodigiously inflamed and excoriated. The Redness of the White of the Eye in a violent Inflammation of that Part, or rather, the White of the Eye just brushed and bleeding with the Beards of Barley, may serve to give some Idea how this Coat had been wounded. There was no Scirrhus in any Gland of the Abdomen; no Adhesion of the Lungs to the Pleura; nor indeed the least Trace of a natural Decay in any Part whatever.

Council to Dr. Lewis.

Council. Did you, Dr. Lewis, observe that Mr. Blandy had the Symptoms which Dr. Addington has mentioned?

Dr. Lewis. I did.

Council. Did you observe that there were the same Appearances on opening his Body, which Dr. Addington has described?

Dr. Lewis. I observed and remember them all, except the Spots on his Heart.

Council. Is it your real Opinion, that those Symptoms and those Appearances were owing to Poison?

Dr. Lewis. Yes.

Council. And that he died of Poison?

Dr. Lewis. Absolutely.

Dr. Addington cross-examined.

Prisoner's Council. Did you first intimate to Mr. Blandy, or he to you, that he had been poisoned?

Dr. Addington. He first intimated it to me.

Prisoner's Council. Did you ask him, whether he was certain that he had been poisoned by the Gruel that he took on Monday Night, August the 5th, and on Tuesday Night, August the 6th?

Dr. Addington. I do not recollect that I did.

Prisoner's Council. Are you sure that he said he was disordered after drinking the Gruel on Monday Night, the 5th of August?

Dr. Addington. Yes.

Prisoner's Council. Did you ever ask him why he drank more Gruel on Tuesday Night, August the 6th?

Dr. Addington. I believe I did not.

Prisoner's Council. When did you make Experiments on the Powder delivered to you by Mr. Norton?

Dr. Addington. I made some the next Day; but many more some time afterwards.

Prisoner's Council. How long afterwards?

Dr. Addington. I cannot justly say; it might be a Month or more.

Prisoner's Council. How often had you Powder given you?

Dr. Addington. Twice.

Prisoner's Council. Did you make Experiments with both Parcels?

Dr. Addington. Yes: But I gave the greatest Part of the first to Mr. King, an experienced Chemist in Reading; and desired that he would examine it, which he did; and he told me, that it was white Arsenic. The second Parcel was used in Trials made by myself.

Prisoner's Council. Who had the second Parcel in keeping till you tried it?

Dr. Addington. I had it, and kept it either in my Pocket, or under Lock and Key.

Prisoner's Council. Did you never shew it to any body?

Dr. Addington. Yes, to several Persons; but trusted no body with it out of my Sight.

Prisoner's Council. Why do you believe it to be white Arsenic?

Dr. Addington. For the following Reasons: 1. This Powder has a milky Whiteness; so has white Arsenic. 2. This is gritty and almost insipid; so is white Arsenic. 3. Part of it swims on the Surface of cold Water, like a pale sulphureous Film; but the greatest Part sinks to the Bottom, and remains there undissolved; the same is true of white Arsenic. 4. This thrown on red-hot Iron, does not flame, but rises entirely in thick white Fumes, which have the Stench of Garlick, and cover cold Iron, held just over them, with white Flowers; white Arsenic does the same. 5. I boiled ten Grains of this Powder in four Ounces of clean Water, and then, passing the Decoction through a Filter, divided it into five equal Parts, which were put into as many Glasses: Into one Glass I poured a few Drops of Spirit of Sal Ammoniac; into another some of the Lixivium of Tartar; into the third some strong Spirit of Vitriol; into the fourth some Spirit of Salt; and into the last some Syrup of Violets. The Spirit of Sal Ammoniac threw down a few Particles of pale Sediment. The Lixivium of Tartar gave a white Cloud, which hung a little above the middle of the Glass. The Spirits of Vitriol and Salt made a considerable Precipitation of a lightish-coloured Substance; which, in the former, hardened into glittering Crystals, sticking to the Sides

* The Doctor intended to have excepted the Stone found in Mr. Blandy's Gall-Bladder.

Sides and Bottom of the Glafs. Syrup of Violets produced a beautiful pale green Tincture. Having washed the Sauce-pan, Funnel, and Glasses, used in the foregoing Experiments, very clean, and provided a fresh Filtre, I boiled ten Grains of white Arsenic, bought of Mr. Wilcock, Druggist in Reading, in four Ounces of clean Water; and filtering and dividing it into five equal Parts, proceeded with them just as I had done with the former Decoction. There was an exact Similitude between the Experiments made on the two Decoctions. They corresponded so nicely in each Trial, that I declare I never saw any two Things in Nature more alike, than the Decoction made with the Powder found in Mr. Blandy's Gruel, and that made with white Arsenic. From these Experiments, and others, which I am ready to produce, if desired, I believe that Powder to be white Arsenic.

Prisoner's Council. Did any Person make these Experiments with you?

Dr. Addington. No: But Mr. Wilcock, the Druggist, was present while I made them; and he weighed both the Powder and the white Arsenic.

Prisoner's Council. When did Mr. Blandy first take Medicines by your Order?

Dr. Addington. As soon as he could swallow, on Saturday Night, August the 10th. Before that Time he was under the Care of Mr. Norton.

Benjamin Norton sworn.

I live at Henley; I remember being sent for to Mrs. Mounteney's in Henley, on Thursday, August the 8th, in order to shew me the Powder. There was with her Susan Gunnell, the Servant-maid. She brought in a Pan; I looked at it, and endeavoured to take it out, that I might give a better Account of it; for as it lay, it was not possible to see what it was: Then I laid it on white Paper, and delivered it to Mrs. Mounteney, to take Care of, till it dried; she kept it till Sunday Morning, then I had it to shew to Dr. Addington; I saw the Doctor try it once at my House, upon a red-hot Poker; upon which I did imagine it was of the Arsenic-kind.

Council. Did you attend the Deceased while he was ill?

Norton. I did; I went on the 6th of August; he told me he was ill, as he imagined, of a Fit of the Cholick; he complained of a violent Pain in his Stomach, attended with great Reachings, and swelled, and a great Purging; I carried him Physic, which he took on the Wednesday Morning; he was then better; on the Thursday Morning, as I was going, I met the Maid; she told me, he was not up; so I went about Twelve, he was then with a Client in the Study, he told me the Physic had done him a great deal of Service, and desired more. I sent him some to take on Friday Morning: I was not with him after Thursday.

Council. Had you used to attend him?

Norton. I had for several Years. The last Illness he had before, was in July 1750. I used to attend him.

Council. Did you ever hear Miss Blandy talk of Music?

Norton. I did. She said, she had heard it in the House, and she feared, something would happen in the Family. She did not say any Thing particular, because I made very light of it.

Council. Did she say any Thing of Apparitions?

Norton. She said, Mr. Cranstoun saw her Father's Apparition one Night.

Council. How long before his Death was it that she talked about Music?

Norton. It might be about three or four Months before.

Council. Was the Powder you delivered to Dr. Addington, the self-same Powder you received of Mrs. Mounteney?

Norton. It was the very same, it had not been out of my Custody.

Council. Should you know it again?

Norton. I have some of the same now in my Pocket. (He produces a Paper sealed up with the Earl of MACCLESFIELD and Lord CADOGAN's Seals upon it.) This is some of the same that I delivered to Dr. Addington.

Cross-examined.

Prisoner's Council. Who sent for you to the House?

Norton. I cannot tell that.

Prif. Council. When you came, did you see Miss Blandy?

Norton. I did. She and Mr. Blandy were both together.

Prif. Council. What Conversation had you then?

Norton. I asked Mr. Blandy, whether or no he had eat any Thing that he thought disagreed with him? Miss Blandy made answer, and said, her Papa had had nothing that she knew of, except some Peas, on the Saturday Night before.

Prif. Council. Did you hear any thing of Water-gruel?

Norton. I knew nothing of that, till it was brought to me.

Prif. Council. Had you any Suspicion of Poison then?

Norton. I had not, nor Mr. Blandy had not mentioned any thing of being poisoned by having taken Water-gruel.

Prif. Council. What did Miss Blandy say to you?

Norton. She desired me to be careful of her Father in his Illness.

Prif. Council. Did she shew any Dislike to his having Physic?

Norton. No, none at all; she desired, when I saw any Danger, I would let her know it, that she might have the Advice of a Physician.

Prif. Council. When was this?

Norton. This was on Saturday the 10th.

Prif. Council. When he grew worse, did she advise a Physician might be called in?

Norton. Yes, she did, after I said he was worse; she then begged that Dr. Addington might be sent for. Mr. Blandy was for deferring it till next Day; but when I came down, she ask'd, if I thought him in Danger? I said, he is; then she said, Though he seems to be against it, I will send for a Doctor directly, and sent away a Man unknown to him.

Prif. Council. Was he for delaying?

Norton. He was till the next Morning.

Prif. Council. How has she behaved to him in any other Illness of her Father's?

Norton. I never saw but at such Times she has behaved with true Affection and Regard?

Prif. Council. Had she used to be much with him?

Norton. She used to be backwards and forwards with him in the Room.

Prif.

Pris. Council. Did you give any Intimation to Miss Blandy, after the Powder was tried?

Norton. I did not; but went up to acquaint her Uncle; he was so affected, he could not come down to apprise Mr. Blandy of it.

Pris. Council. When did she first know that you knew of it?

Norton. I never knew she knew of it till the Monday.

Pris. Council. How came you to suspect that at the Bottom of the Pan to be Poison?

Norton. I found it very gritty, and had no Smell. When I went down, and saw the old Washerwoman, that she had tasted of the Water-gruel, and was affected with the same Symptoms as Mr. Blandy, I then suspected he was poisoned, and said, I was afraid Mr. Blandy had had foul Play; but I did not tell either him or Miss Blandy so, because I found by the Maid, that Miss was suspected.

Pris. Council. Who did you suspect might do it?

Norton. I had Suspicion it was Miss Blandy.

King's Council. When was Dr. Addington sent for?

Norton. On the Saturday Night.

Mrs. Mary Mounteney sworn.

Susan Gunnell brought a Pan to my House on the 8th of August with Water-gruel in it, and Powder at the Bottom, and desired me to look at it: I sent for Mr. Norton, he took the Powder out on a Piece of white Paper, which I gave him: He delivered the same Powder to me, and I took care of it and locked it up.

Cross-examined.

Prisoner's Council. Did you ever see any Behaviour of Miss Blandy otherwise than that of an affectionate Daughter?

Mounteney. I never did. She was always dutiful to her Father, as far as I saw, when her Father was present.

Pris. Council. To whom did you first mention that this Powder was put into the Paper?

Mounteney. To the best of my Remembrance, I never made mention of it to any body, till Mr. Norton fetched it away, which was on the 11th of August, the Sunday Morning after, to be shewn to Dr. Addington.

Pris. Council. Between the Time of its being brought to your House, and the Time it was fetched away, was you ever at Mr. Blandy's House?

Mounteney. No. I was not in that Time, but was there on Sunday in the Afternoon.

Pris. Council. Had you not shewed it at any other Place during that Time?

Mounteney. I had not, Sir.

Pris. Council. Did you on the Sunday, in the Afternoon, mention it to Mr. or Miss Blandy?

Mounteney. No, not to either of them.

Susannah Gunnell sworn.

Gunnell. I carried the Water-gruel in a Pan to Mrs. Mounteney's House.

Council. Whose Use was it made for?

Gunnell. It was made for Mr. Blandy's Use, on the Sunday Seven-night before his Death.

Council. Who made it?

Gunnell. I made it.

Council. Where did you put it, after you had made it?

Gunnell. I put it into the common Pantry, where all the Family used to go.

Council. Did you observe any particular Person busy about there afterwards?

Gunnell. No, no body; Miss Blandy told me on the Monday she had been in the Pantry, (I did not see her) stirring her Father's Water-gruel, and eating the Oatmeal out of the Bottom of it.

Council. What Time of the Monday was this?

Gunnell. This was some time about the Middle of the Day.

Council. Did Mr. Blandy take any of that Water-gruel?

Gunnell. I gave him a half-pint Mug of it on Monday Evening, for him to take before he went to Bed.

Council. Did you observe any body meddle with that half-pint Mug afterwards?

Gunnell. I saw Miss Blandy take the Tea-spoon that was in the Mug, and stir the Water-gruel, and after put her Finger to the Spoon, and then rubb'd her Fingers.

Council. Did Mr. Blandy drink any of that Water-gruel?

Gunnell. Mr. Blandy drank some of it, and on the Tuesday Morning, when he came down Stairs, he did not come through the Kitchen as usual, but went the back Way into his Study.

Council. Did you see him come down?

Gunnell. I did not.

Council. When was the first Time you saw him that Day?

Gunnell. It was betwixt Nine and Ten; Miss Blandy and he were together; he was not well, and going to lie down on the Bed.

Council. Did you see him in the Evening?

Gunnell. In the Evening Robert Harman came to me, as I was coming down Stairs, and told me, I must warm some Water-gruel, for my Master was in haste for Supper.

Council. Did you warm some?

Gunnell. I warm'd some of that out of the Pan, of which he had some the Night before, and Miss Blandy carried it to him into the Parlour.

Council. Did he drink it?

Gunnell. I believe he did; there seemed to be about half of it left the next Morning.

Council. How did he seem to be after?

Gunnell. I met him, soon after he had eat the Water-gruel, going up Stairs to Bed; I lighted him up: As soon as he was got into the Room, he called for a Basin to reach; he seemed to be very sick, by his reaching a considerable Time.

Council. How was he next Morning?

Gunnell. About Six o'Clock I went up the next Morning, to carry him his Physic: He said, he had had a pretty good Night, and was much better.

Council. Had he reached much over Night?

Gunnell. He had, for the Basin was half full, which I left clean over Night.

Council. Was any Order given you to give him any more Water-gruel?

Gunnell. On the Wednesday Miss Blandy came into the Kitchen, and said, Susan, as your Master has taken Physic, he may want more Water-gruel, and as there is some in the House, you need not make fresh as you are ironing; I told her, it was stale, if there was enough; and it would not hinder much to make fresh; so I made fresh accordingly, and I went into the Pantry to put some in for my Master's Dinner; then I brought out the Pan (the Evening before, I thought it had an odd Taste) so I was willing to taste it again, to see if I was mistaken or not: I put it to my Mouth, and drank some, and taking it from my Mouth, I observed some Whiteness at the Bottom.

Council. What did you do upon that?

Gunnell. I went immediately to the Kitchen, and told Betty Binfield, there was a white Settlement, and I did not remember I ever had seen Oatmeal so white before: Betty said, Let me see it; I carried it to her, she said, What Oatmeal is this? I think it looks as white as Flour. We both took the Pan, and turned it about, and strictly observed it, and concluded it could be nothing but Oatmeal. I then took it out of Doors into the Light, and saw it plainer; then I put my Finger to it, and found it gritty, at the Bottom of the Pan; I then recollected I had heard say, Poison was white and gritty, which made me afraid it was Poison.

Council. What did you do with the Pan?

Gunnell. I carried it back again, and set it down on the Dresser in the Kitchen; it stood there a small Time, then I locked it up in the Closet, and on the Thursday Morning I carried it to Mrs. Mounteney, and Mr. Norton came there and saw it.

Council. Do you remember Miss Blandy saying any Thing to you, about eating her Papa's Water-gruel?

Gunnell. About six Weeks before his Death, I went into the Parlour; Miss Blandy said, Susan, what is the Matter with you? You do not look well: I said, I do not know what is the Matter, I am not well, but I do not know what the Matter is. She said, What have you eat or drank? upon which I said, Nothing more than the rest of the Family. She said, Susan, have you eat any Water-gruel? for I am told Water-gruel hurts me, and it may hurt you. I said, It cannot affect me; Madam, for I have not eat any.

Council. What was it * Betty Binfield said to you about Water-gruel?

Gunnell. Betty Binfield said, Miss Blandy asked, if I had eat any of her Papa's Water-gruel? saying, if I did, I might do for myself, a Person of my Age.

Council. What Time was this?

Gunnell. I cannot say, whether it was just after, or just before, the Time she had spoke to me herself. On the Wednesday Morning, as I was coming down Stairs, from giving my Master his Physic, I met Elizabeth Binfield, with the Water-gruel in a Bason, which he had left; I said to the Chairwoman, Ann Emmet, Dame, you used to be fond of Water-gruel, here is a very fine Mefs my Master left last Night, and I believe it will do you Good; the Woman soon sat down on a Bench in the Kitchen, and eat some of it, I cannot say all.

Council. How was she afterwards?

Gunnell. She said, the House smelt of Physic, and every Thing tasted of Physic; she went out, I believe into the Wash-house, to reach, before she could finish it.

Council. Did you follow her?

Gunnell. No, I did not; but about twenty Minutes or half an Hour after that, I went to the Necessary-house, and found her there vomiting and reaching, and, as she said, purging.

Council. How long did she abide there?

Gunnell. She was there an Hour and half, during which Time I went divers Times to her; at first I carried her some Surfeit-Water; she then desired to have some fair Water; the next Time

I went to see how she did, she said she was no better; I desired her to come in a Doors, hoping she would be better by the Fire; she said, she was not able to come in; I said, I would lead her in; I did, and sat her down in a Chair by the Fire; she was vomiting, and reaching continually; she sat there about half an Hour or something more, during which Time she grew much worse, and I thought her to be in a Fit, or seized with Death.

Council. Did you acquaint Miss Blandy with the Illness and Symptoms of this poor Woman?

Gunnell. I told Miss Blandy, when I went into the Room to dress her, about Nine o'Clock, that Dame (the Name we used to call her by) had been very ill that Morning; that she had complained, that the Smell of her Master's Physic had made her sick; and that she had eat nothing but a little of her Master's Water-gruel, which he had left last Night, which could not hurt her.

Council. What did she say to that?

Gunnell. She said, she was very glad she was not below Stairs, for she should have been shocked to have seen her poor Dame so ill.

Council. As you have lived Servant in the House, how did you observe Miss Blandy behave towards her Father, and in what Manner did she use to talk of him, three or four Months before his Death?

Gunnell. Sometimes she would talk very affectionately, and sometimes but middling.

Council. What do you mean by middling?

Gunnell. Sometimes she would say, he was an old Villain, for using an only Child in such a Manner.

Council. Did she wish him to live?

Gunnell. Sometimes she wished for his long Life, sometimes for his Death.

Council. When she wished for his Death, in what Manner did she express herself?

Gunnell. She often said, she was very unkind, and that if he was dead, she would go to Scotland, and live with Lady Cranstoun.

Council. Did she ever say, how long she thought her Father might live?

Gunnell. Sometimes she would say, for his Constitution he might live these twenty Years; sometimes she would say, he looked ill and poorly.

Council. Do you remember when Dr. Addington was sent for, on the Saturday?

Gunnell. I do.

Council. Had Miss Blandy used to go into her Father's Room after that Time?

Gunnell. She did as often as she pleased till Sunday Night; then Mr. Norton took Miss Blandy down Stairs, and desired me not to let any body go into the Room, except myself, to wait on him.

Council. Did she come in afterwards?

Gunnell. She came into the Room on Monday Morning, soon after Mr. Norton came in, or with him; I went in about Ten o'Clock again.

Council. What Conversation passed between Miss Blandy and her Father?

Gunnell. She fell down on her Knees, and said to him, Banish me, or send me to any remote Part of the World; do what you please, so you forgive me; and as to Mr. Cranstoun, I will never see him, speak to him, nor write to him more, so long as I live, so you will forgive me.

Council. What Answer did he make?

Gunnell. He said, I forgive thee, my Dear,

* N. B. The Council for the Prisoner waved the Objection to this as Hearsay Evidence; because the Council for the Crown assured them, they should call Betty Binfield herself next.

and I hope God will forgive thee; but thee shouldst have considered better, than to have attempted any Thing against thy Father; thee shouldst have considered, I was thy own Father.

Council. What said she to this?

Gunnell. She answered, Sir, as for your Illness, I am intirely innocent. I said, Madam, I believe you must not say you are intirely innocent, for the Powder that was taken out of the Water-gruel, and the Paper of Powder that was taken out of the Fire, are now in such Hands, that they must be publickly produced. I told her, I believed I had one Dose prepared for my Master in a Dish of Tea, about six Weeks ago.

Council. Did you tell her this before her Father?

Gunnell. I did.

Council. What Answer did she make?

Gunnell. She said, I have put no Powder into Tea; I have put Powder into Water-gruel, and if you are injured, I am intirely innocent, for it was given me with another Intent.

Council. What said Mr. Blandy to this?

Gunnell. My Master turned himself in his Bed, and said to her, Oh! Such a Villain! come to my House, eat of the best, and drink of the best, that my House could afford, to take away my Life, and ruin my Daughter.

Council. What else passed?

Gunnell. He said, Oh! My Dear! thee must hate that Man, thee must hate the Ground he treads on, thee canst not help it. The Daughter said, Oh! Sir, your Tenderness towards me is like a Sword to my Heart; every Word you say is like Swords piercing my Heart; much worse, than if you were to be ever so angry. I must down on my Knees, and beg you will not curse me.

Council. What said the Father?

Gunnell. He said, I curse thee! my Dear, how couldst thou think I could curse thee? No, I bless thee, and hope God will bless thee, and amend thy Life; and said further, Do, my Dear, go out of my Room, say no more, lest thou shouldst say any Thing to thy own Prejudice: Go to thy Uncle Stevens, take him for thy Friend, poor Man! I am sorry for him. Upon this she directly went out of the Room.

Council. Give an Account of the Paper you mentioned to her, how it was found.

Gunnell. On the Saturday before my Master died, I was in the Kitchen. Miss Blandy had wrote a Direction on a Letter to go to her Uncle Stevens. Going to the Fire to dry it, I saw her put a Paper into the Fire, or two Papers, I cannot say whether. I went to the Fire, and saw her stir it down with a Stick: Elizabeth Binfield then put on fresh Coals, which I believe kept the Paper from being consumed. Soon after Miss Blandy had put it in, she left the Kitchen; I said to Elizabeth Binfield, Betty, Miss Blandy has been burning something; she asked, Where? I pointed to the Grate, and said, At that Corner; upon which Betty Binfield moved a Coal, and took from thence a little Paper; I stood by and saw her, she gave it into my Hand; it was a small Piece of Paper, with some Writing on it, folded up about three Inches long. The Writing was, The Powder to clean the Pebbles, to the best of my Remembrance.

Council. Did you read it?

Gunnell. I did not, Elizabeth Binfield read it to me. (Produced in Court, Part of it burnt, sealed up with the Earl of MACCLESFIELD and Lord CADOGAN's Seals.) This is the Paper, I believe, by the Look of it; but I did not see it unfolded, I delivered it into Elizabeth Binfield's Hand on Saturday Night, between Eleven and Twelve o'Clock. From the Time it was taken out of the Fire, it had not been out of my Pocket, or any Thing done to it, from that Time till I gave it her. I went into my Master's Room about Seven o'Clock in the Morning, to carry him something to drink; when he had drank it, I said, I have something to say to you concerning your Health, and concerning your Family; I must beg you will not put yourself in a Passion, but hear me what I have to say: Then I told him, I believe, Sir, you have got something in your Water-gruel, that has done you some Injury, and I believe Miss Blandy put it in, by her coming into the Wash-house on Monday, and saying, she had been stirring her Papa's Water-gruel, and eating the Oatmeal out from the Bottom: He said, I find I have something not right: My Head is not right as it used to be, nor has been for some Time. I had before told him, I had found the Powder in the Gruel: He said, Dost thou know any Thing of this Powder? Didst thee ever see any of it? I said, No, Sir, I never saw any, but what I saw in the Water-gruel. He said, Dost know where she had this Powder, nor canst not thee guess? I said, I cannot tell, except she had it of Mr. Cranstoun. My Reason for suspecting that was, Miss Blandy had Letters came oftener than usual. My Master said, And now thee mention'st it, I remember when he was at my House, he mentioned a particular Poison that they had in their Country; saying, Oh! that Villain! that ever he came to my House! I told him likewise, I had shewed the Powder to Mr. Norton; he asked, what Mr. Norton said to it? I told him, Mr. Norton could not say what it was, as it was wet, but said, Let it be what it will, it ought not to be there; and said, he was fearful, there was foul Play somewhere. My Master said, What, Norton not know! that is strange, and so much used to Drugs. Then I told him, Mr. Norton thought proper he should search her Pockets, and take away her Keys and Papers. He said, I cannot do it, I cannot shock her so much; canst not thee, when thou goest into her Room, take out a Letter or two, that she may think she dropped them by Chance? I told him, I had no Right to do it: She is your Daughter, and you have a Right to do it, and no body else. He said, I never in all my Life read a Letter that came to my Daughter, from any Person. He desired, if possible, if I could meet with any Powder any where, that I would secure it.

Council. Do you remember when Ann Emmet was sick (the Chair-woman)?

Gunnell. I do, but cannot say how long, or how little a Time before this; I remember she was ill some Time before my Master's Death.

Council. What did the Prisoner order the old Woman to eat at that Time?

Gunnell. She sent her some Sack-Whey, and some Broth: I believe to the Value of a Quart or three Pints at twice, about once a Day, or every other Day, for four or five Days.

Council. Have you been ill from what you eat yourself?

Gunnell. I was ill after drinking a Dish of Tea one Sunday Morning, which I thought was not well relished, and I believed somebody had been taking Salts in the Cup before.

Council. Who was it poured out for?

Gunnell.

Gunnell. I believe it was poured out for my Master.

Council. Why do you believe that?

Gunnell. Because he used to drink in a different Dish from the rest of the Family, and it was out of his Dish.

Council. When was this?

Gunnell. This was about six Weeks and three Days before his Death.

Council. How did you find yourself, after drinking it?

Gunnell. I found no ill Effect till after Dinner: I then had a Hardness in my Stomach, and apprehended it was from eating plentifully of Beans for Dinner.

Council. What Symptoms had you afterwards?

Gunnell. My Stomach seemed to have something in it that could not digest, and I had remarkable Trembling for three Days, and after that for three Mornings was seized with a Reaching.

Council. Have you since that Time been ill, from what you eat or drank?

Gunnell. I tasted the Water-gruel twice, once on the Tuesday Evening, when I was mixing it for my Master; and on Wednesday, when I was going to pour it away, I put the Pan to my Mouth, and drank a little of it.

Council. How did you find yourself after that?

Gunnell. I did not find any remarkable Disorder till the Wednesday Morning about Two o'Clock, before my Master's Death; then I was seemingly seized with Convulsions. My Throat was very troublesome for five or six Weeks after, and seemed a little sore and a little swelled. I continued very ill for three Weeks and upwards after my Master's Death, which was on the Wednesday. I went to Bed sick at Two that Morning, and apply'd to Dr. Addington.

Council. Do you remember any Thing besides Letters coming from Mr. Cranstoun?

Gunnell. I remember she had once a large Box of Table-Linen, and some Scotch Pebbles in it; she said, they came from him.

Council. What Time was this?

Gunnell. This was early in the Spring, before my Master's Death.

Council. Had she more than one Box sent to her?

Gunnell. She had a small Box sent afterwards of Scotch Pebbles; that might be about three Months before his Death, or less, I cannot say.

Council. Did she use to shew the Pebbles to any body?

Gunnell. She used to shew them to any Person of her Acquaintance; but I never heard of any Powder to clean them.

Cross-examined.

Prisoner's Council. For a Year before the 5th of August last, had any Thing ailed your Master, so as to call in the Apothecary?

Gunnell. About a Year before he had had a violent Cold.

Pris. Council. Was he, or was he not, in good Health for a Year before?

Gunnell. He was frequently complaining of the Gravel and Heart-burn, which he was subject to for Years.

Pris. Council. Did he make any other Complaints?

Gunnell. He used to have little Fits of the Gout.

Pris. Council. Was there any other Complaint for seven, eight, nine, or ten Years?

Gunnell. Nothing particular, but that of the Heart-burn; which I cannot tell whether I ever heard him complain of before or not.

Pris. Council. Can you take upon you to say, that he made any particular Complaint of the Heart-burn, more than he had done at any other Time?

Gunnell. I cannot say positively; because I have not continued these Things in my Memory. He ordered me to give him some dry Oatmeal and Water for the Heart-burn.

Pris. Council. Is that good for the Heart-burn?

Gunnell. I have been told, it is very good for it.

Pris. Council. How was her Behaviour to her Father?

Gunnell. Her general Behaviour was dutiful, except upon any Passion, or a hasty Word from her Father.

Pris. Council. When did she call her Father, old Villain?

Gunnell. She would use Expressions of that kind, when she was in a Passion.

Pris. Council. Upon what Account?

Gunnell. For using her ill.

King's Council. Were these Expressions made use of before his Face, or behind his Back?

Gunnell. I have heard her before his Face, and behind his Back.

Pris. Council. When have you heard it?

Gunnell. I believe in the last twelve Months; but cannot be sure.

King's Council. Recollect on what Occasion.

Gunnell. It has been, I believe, on little Passions on both Sides, and that generally from Trifles.

Pris. Council. When did you first communicate your Suspicion to Mr. Blandy, about his being poisoned?

Gunnell. On the Saturday Morning before his Death, from what I saw on the Wednesday before.

Pris. Council. Why did you keep this Suspicion of yours from Wednesday to Saturday?

Gunnell. The Reason I did not tell my Suspicions to Mr. Blandy, sooner than Saturday, was, because I staid for Mr. Stevens, the Prisoner's Uncle, who did not come till Friday Night; I told him then, and he desired me to tell Mr. Blandy of it.

Pris. Council. Did you ever say any Thing of it to Miss Blandy?

Gunnell. No, I did not.

Pris. Council. Pray, what Conversation passed between her Father and her down upon her Knees, &c.?

Gunnell. She said, Sir, how do you do? he said, I am very ill.

Pris. Council. Was any Thing said about Mr. Cranstoun's Addreses to her?

Gunnell. Yes, there was. That Conversation was occasioned by a Message, that Mr. Blandy had sent to his Daughter by me on Monday Morning.

Pris. Council. What was that Message?

Gunnell. That he was ready to forgive her, if she would but endeavour to bring that Villain to Justice.

Pris. Council. Did she say, with what Intent the Powder was given to her?

Gunnell. She said, it was given her with another Intent.

Pris. Council. Did she say, upon what Intent?

Gunnell.

Gunnell. She did not say that. He did not ask that.

Pris. Council. Was not that explained?

Gunnell. It was no ways explained.

Pris. Council. Did he treat her, as if she herself was innocent.

Gunnell. He did, Sir.

Pris. Council. Then all he said afterwards was as thinking his Daughter very innocent.

Gunnell. It was, Sir.

Pris. Council. As to the Ruin of his Daughter; did he think it was intirely owing to Cranstoun?

Gunnell. Mr. Blandy said, he believed his Daughter intirely innocent of what had happened.

Pris. Council. By what he said to you, do you think that the Father thought his Daughter was imposed upon by Cranstoun, when he used that Expression, She must hate the Man, &c.?

Gunnell. I do think so; he said, Where is Polly? I answered, In her Room; he said, Poor unfortunate Girl! that ever she should be imposed upon and led away by such a Villain to do such a Thing!

Pris. Council. Do you imagine, from the whole Conversation that passed between her Father and her, that she was intirely innocent of the Fact, of the Powder being given?

Gunnell. I do not think so; she said, she was innocent.

Pris. Council. What was your Opinion, did the Father think her wholly unacquainted with the Effect of the Powder?

Gunnell. I believe he thought so; that is as much as I can say.

Pris. Council. When you told Miss Blandy that the Washerwoman was extremely ill, having eat some Water-gruel, was any Thing more said with relation to the Father's having eat some of the same Water-gruel before?

Gunnell. I don't remember there was a Word said about the Father's having eat any of it.

Pris. Council. During the Time of his Illness, was not Miss Blandy's Behaviour to her Father, with as much Care and Tendernefs as any Daughter could shew?

Gunnell. She seemed to direct every Thing as she could have done for herself, or any other Person that was sick.

Pris. Council. Do you know that she was guilty of any Neglect in this Respect?

Gunnell. No, I do not, Sir.

King's Council. What did he mean when he said, Poor unfortunate Girl! that ever she should be imposed upon, and led away by such a Villain to do such a Thing! What do you imagine he meant by such a Thing?

Gunnell. By giving him that, which she did not know what it was.

Court. When she told you, that Water-gruel would serve for her Father on the Wednesday, did she know that her Father had been ill, by taking Water-gruel on the Monday and Tuesday Nights?

Gunnell. She knew he was ill, but I cannot tell whether she knew the Cause of it; and knew that the Chairwoman was ill, before she proposed my giving him the same Gruel; but did not oppose my making fresh, for any other Reason, than that it would hinder my Ironing.

Elizabeth Binfield sworn.

Binfield. I was a Servant to Mr. Francis Blandy at Henley, and had been almost three Years.

Council. When did you first discover his Illness, and hear him complain of unusual Prickings in his Stomach?

Binfield. About a Fortnight before he died.

Council. Did you ever hear Miss Blandy talk of something in the House, which she said presaged his Death, or something like it?

Binfield. I have often heard her talk of Walkings and Music in the House that she had heard; she said, she thought it to be her Mother; saying, the Music foretold her Father's Death.

Council. Who has she said so to?

Binfield. She has told me so.

Council. How long ago?

Binfield. For some Time before her Father's Death; I believe for three Quarters of a Year.

Council. How long did she continue talking in this Manner?

Binfield. She did till his Death; I have often heard her say, he would die before October.

Council. What Reasons did she give for that?

Binfield. By the Music; saying, she had been informed that Music foretels Death within a Twelve-month.

Council. Who did she say had informed her so?

Binfield. She said Mr. Cranstoun had been to some famous Woman who had informed him so, and named one Mrs. Morgan, who lived either in Scotland, or London; I cannot say which.

Council. Did she express herself glad, or sorry?

Binfield. Glad, for that then she should soon be released from all her Fatigues, and soon be happy.

Council. Did she talk of the State of Health in which he was?

Binfield. Sometimes she has said, he has been very well, sometimes ill. I remember I heard her say that my Master complained of a Ball of Fire in his Guts; I believe it was before the Monday he eat the Water-gruel, I cannot particularly say, I believe a Fortnight before he died; then she said, Mr. Cranstoun had told her of that famous Woman's Opinion about Music.

Council. Do you remember the first Time one Ann Emmet was taken ill?

Binfield. It was about a Month or six Weeks before.

Council. Do you know what Miss Blandy ordered her in that Illness?

Binfield. I do. She ordered her some White-wine Whey, and Broth several Times. I made it two or three Times, two Quarts at a Time.

Council. Do you remember a Paper being taken out of the Fire?

Binfield. I do. It was on the Saturday before my Master died, I took it out myself.

Council. Should you know it again, if you see it?

Binfield. I believe I should, (she is shewn a Paper,) I really believe this is it, which I took out of the Fire, and delivered it to Susan Gunnell; after which I had it again from her, and I delivered it to Dr. Addington, and Mr. Norton.

Council. Do you remember Miss Blandy's saying any thing about Susan Gunnell's eating the Water-gruel?

Binfield. I do. When Susan was ill, she asked me, how Susan did? I said, Very ill. Said she, Do you remember her ever drinking her Master's Water-gruel? I said, Not as I know of. She said, If she does, she may do for herself, may I tell you.

Council. Did she bid you tell Susan so?

Binfield. She did not bid me tell Susan, but I did tell her.

Council. What Time was this ?

Binfield. It might be about a Month or six Weeks before Mr. Blandy's Death.

Council. Do you remember any Expressions she made use of about her Father ?

Binfield. I heard her say, Who would grudge to send an old Father to Hell for ten thousand Pounds ? Exactly them Words.

Council. When was this ?

Binfield. It was about a Month before his Death, or it may be more, I cannot justly tell.

Council. How was this Conversation introduced ?

Binfield. She was speaking of young Girls being kept out of their Fortunes.

Council. Who was with you at this Time ?

Binfield. It was to me and no body else.

Council. Have you heard her use him with bad Language ?

Binfield. I have heard her curse him, call him Rascal and Villain.

Council. What was she so angry with her Father about ?

Binfield. Mr. Cranstoun was at our House about three Quarters of a Year before Mr. Blandy's Death. He came in August 1750, and stayed there till near Christmas. It was not agreeable to my Master; we used to think by his Temper, that he did not approve of his being so much with his Daughter; but I do not believe he debarred his Daughter from keeping him Company.

Council. Did you ever hear him say any Thing to her, of his having been once like to be poisoned ?

Binfield. I was in the Kitchen when my Master came in to be shaved. I stayed there till he went out again. Miss Blandy was there, and he said, that once he had like to have been poisoned.

Council. When was it that he said so ?

Binfield. It was on the 10th of August, saying, he was once at the Coffee-house, or the Lion, and he and two other Gentlemen had like to have been poisoned by what they had drank; Miss Blandy said, Sir, I remember it very well; she said, it was at one of those Places, and he said no, it was the other. He said, One of the Gentlemen died immediately, the other is dead now, and I have survived them both; but it is my Fortune to be poisoned at last. He looked very hard at her, during the Time he was talking.

Council. What did he say was put into the Wine ?

Binfield. I remember he said, it was white Arsenic.

Council. When he looked hard at her, how did she look ?

Binfield. She looked in great Confusion, and all in a Tremble.

Council. Did you sit up with Miss Blandy the Night after her Father died ?

Binfield. I did till Three o'Clock, she went to Bed about One. She said to me, Betty, will you go away with me? If you will go to the Lion or the Bell, and hire a Post-chaise, I will give you fifteen Guineas when you get into it, and ten Guineas more when we come to London. I said, Where will you go then, into the North? She said, I shall go into the West of England. I said, Shall you go by Sea? She said, I believe some Part of the Way. I said, I will not go. Then she burst into a Laughter, and said, I was only in a Joke, did you think I was in earnest ? Yes, said I. No, said she, I was only joking.

Council. Did you ever hear Miss tell Dr. Ad-dington, that she had given your Master some of that Powder ?

Binfield. I heard Miss Blandy tell the Doctor, she had given my Master some of that Powder before in a Dish of Tea, which, she said, he did not drink, and she throwed into the Street out of the Window, fearing she should be discovered, and filled the Cup again; and that Susan Gunnell drank it, and was ill for a Week after.

Council. When was this ?

Binfield. This was on the Monday before my Master died.

Council. Do you remember what happened on Monday, the 5th of August ?

Binfield. Yes. On that Day I and two Washerwomen were in the Wash-house. Miss Blandy came in, and said, Betty, I have been in the Pantry eating some of the Oatmeal out of your Master's Water-gruel. I took no Notice of it; but the same Day, in the Afternoon, I went into the Pantry, and Miss Blandy followed me, and took a Spoon and stirred the Water-gruel, and taking some up in the Spoon, put it between her Fingers and rubbed it.

Council. What was it in ?

Binfield. It was in a Pan. When my Master was taken ill on the Tuesday in the Afternoon, Miss came into the Kitchen, and said, Betty, if one Thing should happen, will you go with me to Scotland? I said, Madam, I do not know. What, says she, you are unwilling to leave your Friends? Said I, If I should go there, and not like it, it will be expensive travelling back again.

Council. Did she say, If one Thing should happen? What Thing ?

Binfield. I took no farther Notice of it then; but those were the Words. On the Monday Morning, before he died, she said to me, Betty, go up to your Master, and give my Duty to him, and tell him, I beg to speak one Word with him. I did; she went up; I met her when she came out of the Room from him; she clasped me round the Neck, and burst out a crying, and said, Susan and you are the two honestest Servants in the World; you ought to be imaged in Gold for your Honesty; half my Fortune will not make you amends for your Honesty to my Father.

Cross-examined.

Prisoner's Council. Had Mr. Blandy at any Time, and when, previous to the 5th of August, been ill ?

Binfield. About a Twelvemonth before, he had been ill some Time; but I cannot tell how long.

Pris. Council. What was his Illness ?

Binfield. He had a great Cold.

Pris. Council. Did he take any Physic ?

Binfield. I believe he did once or twice.

Pris. Council. Can you tell the Time ?

Binfield. I believe it was the latter End of July, or Beginning of August.

Pris. Council. Who made the Whey and Broth, that were sent to the Washerwoman ?

Binfield. My Fellow-Servant made the Whey, I made the Broth.

Pris. Council. Was she a kind Mistress to the Washerwoman ?

Binfield. She was; she had a greater Regard for her than any other Woman that came about the House.

Pris.

Pris. Council. About this Music, Who did she say heard it?

Binfield. She mostly mentioned herself hearing that.

Pris. Council. Was this Talk when Cranstoun was there?

Binfield. I heard her talk so, when he was there, and in his Absence.

Pris. Council. Was it when she was in an angry Temper only, that she used those Words to her Father?

Binfield. I have heard her in the best of Times curse her Father.

Pris. Council. Was Susan Gunnell very ill after drinking that Tea?

Binfield. She was, and continued so for a Week.

King's Council. Was it at the Time Susan was ill, from drinking of the Tea, that Miss Blandy asked you about her taking the Gruel, and said, It would do for her? And did she say any Thing else?

Binfield. Miss Blandy said, she poured it out for my Master; but he went to Church, and left it.

Pris. Council. Have you had any ill Will against her?

Binfield. I always told her, I wished her very well.

Pris. Council. Did you ever say, Damn her for a black Bitch, I should be glad to see her go up the Ladder, and be hanged?

Binfield. No, Sir, I never did in my Life.

King's Council. Did you and the rest of the Family observe, that Mr. Blandy's Looks were as well the last six Months as before?

Binfield. Miss Blandy has said to me, Don't you think my Father looks faint? Sometimes I have said, He is; sometimes not. I never observed any Alteration at all.

Here Dr. Addington is appealed to by the Council for the Prisoner.

Prisoner's Council. Do you, Dr. Addington; remember Miss Blandy's telling you on Monday Night, August the 12th, that she had on a Sunday Morning, about six Weeks before, when her Father was absent from the Parlour, mixed a Powder with his Tea; and that Susan Gunnell had drank that Tea?

Dr. Addington. I remember her telling me that Monday Night, that she had on a Sunday Morning, about six Weeks before, when her Father was absent from the Parlour, mixed a Powder with his Tea; but do not remember her saying, that Susan Gunnell had drank that Tea. I have several times heard Susan Gunnell say, that she was sure she had been poisoned by drinking Tea out of Mr. Blandy's Cup that Sunday Morning.

Pris. Council. Did not Miss Blandy declare to you, that she had always thought the Powder innocent?

Dr. Addington. Yes.

Pris. Council. Did she not always declare the same?

Dr. Addington. Yes.

The King's Council then interposed, and said, that he had not intended to mention what had passed in Discourse between the Prisoner and Dr. Addington; but that now, as her own Council had been pleased to call for Part of it, he desired the Whole might be laid before the Court.

Dr. Addington. On Monday Night, August the

12th, after Miss Blandy had been secured, and her Papers, Keys, &c. taken from her, she threw herself on the Bed and groaned; then raised herself; and wrung her Hands, and said, That it was impossible for any Words to describe the Horrors and Agonies in her Breast; that Mr Cranstoun had ruined her; that she had ever, till now, believed him a Man of the strictest Honour; that she had mixed a Powder with the Gruel, which her Father had drank on the foregoing Monday and Tuesday Nights; that she was the Cause of his Death, and that she desired Life for no End, but to go through a painful Penance for her Sin. She protested at the same Time, that she had never mixed the Powder with any Thing else that he had swallowed; and that she did not know it to be Poison, till she had seen its Effects. She said, that she had received the Powder from Mr. Cranstoun, with a Present of Scotch Pebbles; that he had wrote on the Paper that held it, The Powder to clean the Pebbles with; that he had assured her it was harmless; that he had often taken it himself; that if she would give her Father some of it now and then, a little and a little at a Time, in any Liquid, it would make him kind to him and her; that accordingly about six Weeks before, at Breakfast-time, her Father being out of the Room, she had put a little of it into his Cup of Tea, but that he never drank it; that Part of the Powder swimming at Top of the Tea, and Part sinking to the Bottom, she had poured it out of the Window, and filled up the Cup with fresh Tea; that then she wrote to Mr. Cranstoun, to let him know, that she could not give it in Tea without being discovered; and that, in his Answer, he had advised her to give it in Water-gruel for the future, or in any other thickish Fluid. I asked her, whether she would endeavour to bring Mr. Cranstoun to Justice? After a short Pause, she answered, that she was fully conscious of her own Guilt, and was unwilling to add Guilt to Guilt; which she thought she should do, if she took any Step to the Prejudice of Mr. Cranstoun, whom she considered as her Husband, tho' the Ceremony had not passed between them.

King's Council. Was any Thing more said by the Prisoner or you?

Dr. Addington. I asked her, whether she had been so weak as to believe the Powder, that she had put into her Father's Tea and Gruel, so harmless as Mr. Cranstoun had represented it? Why Mr. Cranstoun had called it a Powder to clean Pebbles, if it was intended only to make Mr. Blandy kind? Why she had not tried it on herself; before she ventured to try it on her Father? Why she had flung it into the Fire? Why, if she had really thought it innocent, she had been fearful of a Discovery, when Part of it swam on the Top of the Tea? Why, when she had found it hurtful to her Father, she had neglected, so many Days, to call proper Assistance to him? And why, when I was called at last, she had endeavoured to keep me in the dark, and hide the true Cause of his Illness?

Council. What Answers did she make to these Questions?

Dr. Addington. I cannot justly say; but very well remember; that they were not such as gave me any Satisfaction.

Pris. Council. She said then, that she was entirely ignorant of the Effects of the Powder?

Dr. Addington. She said, that she did not know it to be Poison, 'till she had seen its Effects.

Pris.

Pris. Council. Let me ask you, Dr. Addington, this single Question: Whether the Horrors and Agonies, which Miss Blandy was in at this Time, were not, in your Opinion, owing solely to an hearty Concern for her Father?

Dr. Addington. I beg, Sir, that you will excuse my giving an Answer to this Question. It is not easy, you know, to form a true Judgment of the Heart; and I hope a Witness need not deliver his Opinion of it.

Pris. Council. I do not speak of the Heart: You are only desired to say, whether those Agitations of Body and Mind, which Miss Blandy shewed at this Time, did not seem to you to arise intirely from a tender Concern for her Father?

Dr. Addington. Since you oblige me, Sir, to speak to this Particular, I must say, that all the Agitations of Body and Mind, which Miss Blandy shewed at this Time, or any other, when I was with her, seemed to me to arise more from the Apprehension of unhappy Consequences to herself, than from a tender and hearty Concern for her Father.

Pris. Council. Did you never then observe in her any evident Tokens of Grief for her Father?

Dr. Addington. I never thought I did.

Pris. Council. Did she never wish for his Recovery?

Dr. Addington. Often.

Pris. Council. Did not you think that those Wishes implied a Concern for him?

Dr. Addington. I did not; because I had before told her, that if he died soon, she would inevitably be ruined.

Pris. Council. When did you tell her this?

Dr. Addington. On Sunday Morning, August the 11th, just before I left Henley.

Pris. Council. Did not she desire you that Morning, before you quitted his Room, to visit him again the next Day?

Dr. Addington. Yes.

Pris. Council. And was she not very solicitous that you should do him all the Service in your Power?

Dr. Addington. I cannot say that I discovered any Sollicitude in her on this Score, 'till Monday Night, August the 12th, after she was confined, and her Keys, and other Things, had been taken from her.

King's Council. Did you, Dr. Addington, attend Susan Gunnell in her Illness?

Dr. Addington. Yes, Sir; but I took no Minutes of her Case.

King's Council. Did her Symptoms agree with Mr. Blandy's?

Dr. Addington. They differed from his in some Respects; but the most material were manifestly of the same Kind with his, though in a much less Degree.

King's Council. Did you think them owing to Poison?

Dr. Addington. Yes.

King's Council. Did you attend Ann Emmet?

Dr. Addington. Yes, Sir.

King's Council. To what Cause did you ascribe her Disorder?

Dr. Addington. To Poison: For she told me, that on Wednesday Morning, August the 7th, very soon after drinking some Gruel at Mr. Blandy's, she had been seized with Prickings and Burnings in her Tongue, Throat, and Stomach, which had been followed by severe Fits of Vomiting and Purging. And I observed that she had many other Symptoms, which agreed with Mr. Blandy's.

King's Council. Did she say, that she thought she had ever taken Poison before?

Dr. Addington. On my telling her that I ascribed her Complaints to Poison, which she had taken in Gruel at Mr. Blandy's, August the 7th, she said, that if she had been poisoned by drinking that Gruel at Mr. Blandy's, she was sure that she had been poisoned there the Hay-time before by drinking something else.

Alice Emmet sworn.

My Mother is now very ill, and cannot attend; she was Chairwoman at Mr. Blandy's in June last, she was taken very ill in the Night, with a Vomiting and Reaching, upwards and downwards. I went to Miss Blandy in the Morning by her Desire, to see if she would send her something, as she wanted something to drink, saying she was very dry; Miss said, she would send something, which she did in about two Hours.

Council. Did you tell her what your Mother had eat or drank?

Emmet. No, I did not; only said, my Mother was very ill, and very dry, and desired something to drink.

Mr. Robert Littleton sworn.

I was Clerk to Mr. Blandy almost two Years; the latter End of July last I went to my Father's in Warwickshire, and returned again August the 9th, and breakfasted with Mr. Blandy and his Daughter the next Morning, which was on a Saturday; he was in great Agony, and complained very much; he had a particular Dish to drink his Tea in; he tasted his Tea, and did not drink it; saying, it had a gritty bad Taste, and asked Miss, whether she had not put too much of the black Stuff in it? meaning Bohea Tea. She answered, it was as usual; he tasted it again and said, it had a bad Taste; she seemed to be in some Sort of a Tremor; he looked particular at her, and she looked very much confused and hurried, and went out of the Room. Soon after, my Master poured it out into the Cat's Basin, and set it to be filled again; after this, when he was not there, Miss asked me, what he did with the Tea? I said, he had not drank it, but put it into the Cat's Basin in the Window; then she looked a good deal confused and hurried. The next Day Mr. Blandy of Kingston came about half an Hour after Nine in the Morning; they walked into the Parlour, and left me to breakfast by myself in the Kitchen; I went to Church; when I returned, the Prisoner desired me to walk with her Cousin into the Garden; she delivered a Letter to me, and desired me to seal and direct it as usual, and put it into the Post.

Council. Had you ever directed any Letter for her before?

Littleton. I have a great many; I used to direct her Letters to Mr. Cranstoun.

He is shewn a Letter.

Littleton. This is one.

Council. Did you put it into the Post?

Littleton. I did not; I opened it, having just before heard Mr. Blandy was poisoned by his own Daughter; I transcribed it, and took it to Mr. Norton's the Apothecary at Henley, and after that I shewed it, and read it to Mr. Blandy.

Council.

Council. What did he say?

Littleton. He said very little; he smiled and said, Poor Love-sick Girl! What won't a Girl do for a Man she loves? (or to that Effect.)

Council. Have you ever seen her write?

Littleton. I have very often.

Council. Look at this Letter, is it her own Hand-writing?

Littleton. I cannot tell; it is wrote worse than she used to write, but it is the same she gave me.

Council. Do you remember Mr. Cranstoun coming there in August 1750?

Littleton. I do. It was either the latter End of July, or the Beginning of August.

Council. Did you hear any Talk about Music about that Time?

Littleton. After he was gone, I heard the Prisoner say, she heard Music in the House; this I heard her say very often, and that it denoted a Death in the Family; sometimes she said, she believed it would be herself; at other Times, it might be her Father, by reason of his being so much broken; I heard her say once, she thought she heard her Mother.

Council. Did she say when that Death would happen?

Littleton. She said that Death would happen before October, meaning the Death of her Father, seeming to me.

Council. Have you heard her curse her Father?

Littleton. I have heard her several Times, for a Rogue, a Villain, a toothless old Dog.

Council. How long was this before her Father's Death?

Littleton. I cannot justly tell that, but I have heard her a great many Times within two Months of his Death, and a great while before; I had used to tell her he was much broken latterly, and would not live long; she would say, she thought so too, and that the Music portended his Death.

Cross-examined.

Prisoner's Council. When you breakfasted with them in the Parlour, who was there first?

Littleton. She was.

Pris. Council. Did you see the Tea made?

Littleton. No, Sir.

Pris. Council. Did you see it poured out?

Littleton. No; but he desired me to taste the Tea; I did mine, and said, I fancied his Mouth was out of Taste.

Pris. Council. Did not this Hurry, you say Miss Blandy was in, arise from the Displeasure of her Father, because the Tea was not made to his Mind?

Littleton. I cannot say that, or what it was from.

Pris. Council. What became of that he throwed into the Cat's Basin?

Littleton. He left it there.

Robert Harman sworn.

I was Servant to Mr. Blandy at the Time of his Death; that Night he died, the Prisoner asked me, where I should live next? I said, I did not know; she asked me to go with her; I asked her, where she was going? she said, It would be 500 l. in my Way, and no Hurt to me, if I would; I told her, I did not chuse to go.

Council. Did she tell you to what Place she was going?

Harman. She did not.

VOL. X.

Council. Did she want to go away at that Time of Night?

Harman. Then, immediately.

Cross-examined.

Prisoner's Council. Did she give any Reason why she desired to go away?

Harman. No, she gave none.

Pris. Council. How long had you lived there?

Harman. A Twelve-month.

Pris. Council. What has been her general Behaviour to her Father, during the Time you was there?

Harman. She behaved very well, so far as ever I saw, and to all the Family.

King's Council. Did you ever hear her swear about her Father?

Harman. No, I never did.

Mr. Richard Fisher sworn.

I was one of the Jury on the Coroner's Inquest, that sat on Mr. Blandy's Body on Thursday, August the 15th. As I was going up Street to go to Market, I was told, Miss Blandy was gone over the Bridge. I went, and found her at the Sign of the Angel, on the other Side the Bridge; I told her, I was very sorry for her Misfortune, and asked her what she could think of herself to come from Home, and if she would be glad to go Home again? She said, "Yes; but what must I do to get there for the Mob?" I said, I would endeavour to get a close Post-Chaise, and carry her Home; I went out through the Mob, and got one, and carried her Home; she asked me, whether she was to go to Oxford that Night or not? I said, I believed not; when I came to her Father's House, I delivered her up to the Constables; when we were upon the Enquiry before the Coroner, a Gentleman was asking for some Letters, which came in the Time of Mr. Blandy's Illness; I went to her Uncle Stevens to see for them; she then asked me again, what the Gentlemen intended to do with her, or how it would go? I said, I was afraid very hard, unless she could produce some Letters to bring Mr. Cranstoun to Justice. She said, "Dear Mr. Fisher, I am afraid I have burnt some that would have brought him to Justice." She took a Key out of her Pocket, and said, "Take this Key, and see if you can find such Letters in such a Drawer." There was one Mrs. Minn stood by, I desired her to go with the Key, which she did; but no Letters were found there; then Miss Blandy said, My Honour to him will prove my Ruin.

Council. What did she mean by the Word him?

Fisher. Mr. Cranstoun: When she found there was no Letters of Consequence to be found.

Mrs. Lane sworn.

I was with my Husband at Henley, at the Sign of the Angel on the other Side the Bridge; there was Miss Blandy. The first Word I heard Mr. Lane my Husband say, was, if she was found guilty, she would suffer according to Law; upon which she stamp't her Foot upon the Ground, and said, O! that damn'd Villain! then paused a little, and said, But why should I blame him? for I am more to blame than he, for I gave it him, and knew the Consequence.

Council. Did she say, I knew, or I know?

Mrs. Lane. I really cannot say, Sir; for I did not expect to be called for to be examined here, and will not take upon me to swear positively to a Word; she was in a Sort of an Agony, in a very great Fright.

Mr. Lane sworn.

I went into the Room where the Prisoner was before my Wife the Day after Mr. Blandy's Death; she arose from her Chair, and met me, and looked hard at me; she said, Sir, I have not the Pleasure of knowing you. Said I, No, I am a Stranger to you. She said, Sir, you look like a Gentleman, what do you think they will do with me? Said I, you will be committed to the County-Gaol, and be tried at the Assizes, and if your Innocence appears, you will be acquitted; if not, you will suffer accordingly. She stamped with her Foot, and said, O! that damn'd Villain! but why do I blame him? I am more to blame. Then Mr. Littleton came in, which took off my Attention from her, that I did not hear so as to give an Account of the whole.

(The Letter which Littleton opened, read in Court.) Directed to the Honourable William Henry Cranston, Esq;

Dear Willy,

My Father is so bad, that I have only Time to tell you, that if you do not hear from me soon again, do not be frightened; I am better myself; and lest any Accident should happen to your Letters, take Care what you write. My sincere Compliments. I am ever

Yours.

The Prisoner's Defence.

My Lords,

IT is morally impossible for me to lay down the Hardships I have received—I have been aspersed in my Character. In the first Place, it has been said, that I have spoke ill of my Father; that I have cursed him, and wished him at Hell; which is extremely false.—Sometimes little Family Affairs have happened, and he did not speak to me so kind as I could wish.—I own I am passionate, My Lords, and in those Passions some hasty Expressions might have dropt: But great Care has been taken to recollect every Word I have spoken at different Times, and to apply them to such particular Purposes, as my Enemies knew would do me the greatest Injury. These are Hardships, My Lords, extreme Hardships! such as You yourselves must allow to be so.—It is said too, My Lords, that I endeavoured to make my Escape. Your Lordships will judge, from the Difficulties I laboured under. I had lost my Father—I was accused of being his Murderer—I was not permitted to go near him—I was forsaken by my Friends—affronted by the Mob—insulted by my Servants.—Although I begged to have the Liberty to listen at the Door where he died, I was not allowed it. My Keys were taken from me, my Shoe-buckles and Garters too,—to prevent me from making away with myself, as though I was the most abandoned Creature.—What could I do, My Lords? I verily believe I must have been out of my Senses.—When I heard my Father was dead, and the Door open, I ran out of the House, and over the Bridge, and had nothing on but an Half-Sack and Petticoat, without a Hoop,—my Petticoats hanging about me.—The Mob gathered about me.—Was this a Condition, My Lords, to make my Escape in?—A good Woman beyond the Bridge seeing me in this Distress, desired me to walk in till the Mob was dispersed; the Town-Serjeant was there, I begged he would take me under his Protection to have me Home; the Woman said, it was not proper, the Mob was very great, and that I had better stay a little. When I came Home, they said I used the Constable ill.—I was locked up for fifteen Hours, with only an old Servant of the Family to attend me.—I was not allowed a Maid for the common Decencies of my Sex. I was sent to Gaol, and was in Hopes, there, at least, this Usage would have ended. But was told, it was reported I was frequently drunk;—that I attempted to make my Escape;—that I never attended the Chapel. A more abstemious Woman, My Lords, I believe, does not live.

Upon the Report of my making my Escape, the Gentleman who was High Sheriff last Year, (not the present) came and told me, by Order of the higher Powers, he must put an Iron on me; I submitted, as I always do to the higher Powers. Some Time after he came again, and said he must put an heavier upon me, which I have worn, My Lords, till I came hither. I asked the Sheriff, Why I was so ironed? He said, he did it by the Command of some Noble Peer, on his hearing that I intended to make my Escape. I told them, I never had such a Thought, and I would bear it with the other cruel Usage I had received on my Character. The Reverend Mr. Swinton, the worthy Clergyman who attended me in Prison, can testify that I was very regular at the Chapel, whenever I was well; sometimes I really was not able to come out, and then he attended me in my Room.—They likewise have published Papers and Depositions, which ought not to have been published, in order to represent me as the most abandoned of my Sex, and to prejudice the World against me. I submit myself to your Lordships, and to the worthy Jury.—I can assure your Lordships, as I am to answer it before that Grand Tribunal, where I must appear, I am as innocent as the Child unborn of the Death of my Father.—I would not endeavour to save my Life at the Expence of Truth.—I really thought the Powder an innocent, inoffensive Thing, and I gave it to procure his Love.—It has been mentioned, I should say I was RUINED: My Lords, when a young Woman loses her Character, is not that her RUIN? Why, then, should this Expression be construed in so wide a Sense? Is it not ruining my Character to have such a Thing laid to my Charge? And whatever may be the Event of this Trial, I am RUINED most effectually.

For the Prisoner. Ann James sworn.

I live at Henley, and had use to wash for Mr. Blandy; I remember the Time Mr. Blandy grew ill; before he was ill, there was a Difference between Elizabeth Binfield and Miss Blandy, and Binfield was to go away.

Council. How long before Mr. Blandy's Death?

Ann James. It might be pretty near a Quarter of a Year before: I have heard her curse Miss Blandy, and damn her for a Bitch; and said, she would not stay. Since this Affair happened, I heard her say, Damn her for a black Bitch, I shall be glad to see her go up the-Ladder, and swing.

Council. How long after?

Ann James. It was after Miss was sent away to Gaol.

Cress.

Cross-examined.

King's Council. What was this Quarrel about?

Ann James. I do not know; I heard her say she had a Quarrel, and was to go away, several Times.

King's Council. Who was by at this Time?

Ann James. Mary Banks was by, and Nurse Edwards, and Mary Seymour; and I am not sure whether Robert Harman was there, or not.

King's Council. How was it introduced?

Ann James. It happened in Mr. Blandy's Kitchen, she was always talking about Miss.

King's Council. Was you there on the 5th of August?

Ann James. I cannot say I was.

King's Council. Do you remember the Prisoner's coming into the Wash-house, and saying, she had been doing something with her Father's Water-gruel?

Ann James. No, I do not remember it.

Elizabeth Binfield was called up again.

King's Council. Did you, Elizabeth Binfield, ever make use of such an Expression as this Witness has mentioned?

Elizabeth Binfield. I never said such Words.

King's Council. Did you ever tell this Witness, Miss and you had quarrelled?

Elizabeth Binfield. To the best of my Knowledge, I never told her about a Quarrel.

King's Council. Have you ever had a Quarrel?

Elizabeth Binfield. We had a little Quarrel some Time before.

King's Council. Did you ever declare you was to go away?

Elizabeth Binfield. I did.

Mary Banks sworn.

I remember being in Mr. Blandy's Kitchen in Company with Ann James.

Council. Who was in Company?

Mary Banks. I do not remember.

Council. Do you remember a Conversation between Elizabeth Binfield and Ann James?

Mary Banks. I do not remember any Thing of it.

Council. Do you remember her aspersing Miss Blandy's Character?

Mary Banks. I do not recollect.

Council. Did you hear her say, she should be glad to see the black Bitch go up the Ladder to be hanged?

Mary Banks. She did say, she should be glad to see the black Bitch go up the Ladder to be hanged.

Council. When was this?

Mary Banks. It was the Night Mr. Blandy was opened.

Council. Are you sure it was that Day?

Mary Banks. I am sure it was.

Council. Where was Miss Blandy then?

Mary Banks. She was then in the House.

Edward Herne sworn.

I formerly was a Servant in Mr. Blandy's Family; I went there eighteen Years ago, and left them about twelve Years ago last November, but have been frequently at the House ever since; that is, may be once, twice, thrice, or four Times in a Week.

Council. What was Miss's general Behaviour to her Father, and in the Family?

Herne. She behaved, according to what I always observed, as well to her Father and the Family, as any body could do, an affectionate, dutiful Daughter.

Council. Did you see her during the Time of Mr. Blandy's Illness?

Herne. I did. The first Time I went into the Room, she was not able to speak to me, nor I to her, for ten Minutes.

Council. What was that owing to?

Herne. It was owing to the Greatness of her Grief.

Council. When was this?

Herne. It was the 12th of August at Night.

Council. How did her Father seem to be satisfied with her Behaviour and Conduct?

Herne. She was put into my Custody that Night; when I went into the Room, (upon hearing the Groans of her Father) she said, at my Return, Pray, Ned, how does he do?

Council. Did you ever hear her speak ill of her Father?

Herne. I never heard her swear an Oath all the Time I have known her, or speak a disrespectful Word of her Father.

Cross-examined.

King's Council. What are you?

Herne. I am Sexton of the Parish.

King's Council. On what Night did Mr. Blandy die?

Herne. On the Wednesday Night?

King's Council. How came you, as she was put under your Care, to let her get away?

Herne. I was gone to dig a Grave, and was sent for home; they told me, she was gone over the Bridge.

King's Council. Had you any Talk with her about this Affair?

Herne. She declared to me, that Captain Cranstoun put some Powder into Tea one Morning for Mr. Blandy, and she turned herself about when he was stirring of it in the Cup.

King's Council. When did she tell you this?

Herne. In August 1750.

King's Council. Have you seen her since she has been in Oxford Gaol?

Herne. I have. When the Report was spread, that the Captain was taken, I was with her in the Gaol; a Gentleman came in, and said, he was taken; she wrung her Hands, and said, I hope in God it is true, that he may be brought to Justice, as well as I, and that he may suffer the Punishment due to his Crime, as she should do for hers.

Prisoner. Give me Leave to ask the last Witness some Questions.

Court. You had better tell your Questions to your Council; for you may do yourself Harm by asking Questions.

Pris. Council. Did not the Prisoner, at the same Time, declare, that as to herself, she was totally innocent, and had no Design to hurt her Father?

Herne. At that Time she declared, that when Cranstoun put the Powder into the Tea, upon which no Damage at all came, and when she put Powder afterwards herself, she apprehended no Damage could come to her Father.

Pris. Council. When she spoke of her own Suffering, did she not mean the same Misfortune that she then laboured under?

Herne. She said, she should be glad Cranstoun should be taken, and brought to Justice; she thought it would bring the whole to Light, he being being the Occasion of it all; for she suffered (by being in Prison) and was innocent, and knew nothing that it was Poison, no more than I, or any one Person in the House.

Thomas Cawley sworn.

I have known Miss Blandy twenty Years, and upwards, and her Father likewise; I was intimate in the Family, and have frequently drank Tea there.

Council. What was her Behaviour to her Father, during your Knowledge of her?

Cawley. I never saw any other than dutiful.

Thomas Staverton sworn.

Thomas Staverton. I have lived near them five or six and twenty Years, and upwards, and was always intimate with them; I always thought they were two happy People, he happy in a Daughter, and she in a Father, as any in the World; the last Time she was at our House, she expressed, her Father had had many Wives laid out for him, but she was satisfied, he never would marry till she was settled.

Cross-examined.

King's Council. Did you observe, for the last three or four Months before his Death, that he declined in his Health?

Staverton. I observed he did; I do not say as to his Health; but he seemed to shrink, and I have often told my Wife, my old Friend Blandy was going.

King's Council. Had he lost any Teeth latterly?

Staverton. I do not know as to that, he was a good looking Man.

Pris. Council. How old was he?

Staverton. I think he was Sixty-two.

Mary Davis sworn.

I live at the Angel at Henley-Bridge; I remember Miss Blandy coming over the Bridge the Day that Mr. Blandy was opened; she was walking along, and a great Croud of People after her. I seeing that, went and asked what was the Matter; I asked her, where she was going? She said, to take a Walk for a little Air, for they were going to open her Father, and she could not bear the House. The Mob followed her so fast, was the Reason I asked her to go to my House, which she accepted.

Council. Did she walk fast, or slowly?

Mary Davis. She was walking as softly as Foot could be laid to the Ground; it had not the least Appearance of her going to make her Escape.

Robert Stoke sworn.

Robert Stoke. I saw the Prisoner with Mrs. Davis the Day her Father was opened; I told her, I had Orders from the Mayor to detain her; she said, she was very glad, because the Mob was about.

Council. Did you think, from her Dress and Behaviour, she was about an Attempt to make her Escape?

Stoke. No, it did not appear to me at all.

Cross-examined.

King's Council. Was you there when Mr. and Mrs. Lane came in?

Stoke. I was.

King's Council. Did you hear the Words she said to Mr. Lane?

Stoke. I heard nothing at all.

Mr. Ford. As very unjustifiable and illegal Methods have been used to prejudice the World against Miss Blandy; such as, it is to be hoped, no Man will have the Boldness to repeat, I mean the printing and publishing the Examination of Witnesses before her Trial; and as very scandalous Reports have been spread concerning her Behaviour, even since her Imprisonment; it is desired, that the Reverend Gentleman who has attended her as a Clergyman, may give an Account of her Conduct whilst in Gaol, that she may at least be delivered of some of the Infamy she at present lies under.

To which he was answered by the Court, that it was needless to call a Witness to that, as the Jury was only to regard what was deposed in Court, and entirely to disregard what Papers had been printed, and spread about, or any Report whatsoever.

The Honourable Mr. Bathurst's Reply.

Your Lordships will, I hope, indulge me in a very few Words by way of Reply; and after the Length of Evidence which has been laid before the Jury, I will take up but little of your Lordships Time.

Gentlemen, you observe it has been proved to a Demonstration, that Mr. Francis Blandy did die of Poison. It is as clearly proved, that he died of the Poison put into his Water-gruel upon the 5th of August; and that the Prisoner at the Bar put it in: For so much appears, not only from her own Confession, but from a Variety of other Evidence.—The single Question therefore for your Consideration is, Whether she did it knowingly or ignorantly?

I admit, that in some of the Conversations, which she has had at different Times with different Persons, she has said she did it without knowing it to be Poison, or believing it to be so.—At the same Time I beg leave to observe, (as you will find when their Lordships sum up the Evidence to you) that she did not always make the same Pretence.

Examine then, Gentlemen, whether it is possible she could do it ignorantly.

It has appeared in Evidence, that she owned she saw Mr. Cranstoun put some Powder into her Father's Tea in the Month of August preceding; that she had herself afterwards done the same; but she said she saw no ill Effect from it, and therefore concluded it was not hurtful.—Her own Witness, Thomas Staverton, says, that for a Year past Mr. Blandy used to shrink in his Cloaths; that he made the Observation to his Wife, and told her, his Friend Blandy was going.—Our Witnesses have said, that she herself made the same Observation; told them, her Father looked very ill, as though he would not live; and said, he would not live till October.

And here let me observe one Thing. She says she gave her Father this Powder to make him love her.—After having heard the great Affection with which the poor dying Man behaved towards her, can you think she wanted any Charm for that Purpose? After having heard what her own Witnesses have said of the Father's Fondness for the Daughter, can you believe she had Occasion for any Love-powder?

But one Thing more. She knew her Father had taken this Powder in his Water-gruel upon the Monday Night, and upon the Tuesday Night; saw how violently he was affected by it; and yet would have had more of the same Gruel given to him upon the Wednesday.

Yet one Thing more. When she must have been fully satisfied that it was Poison, and that it would probably be the Occasion of his Death; she endeavoured to burn the Paper in which the rest of the Powder was contained, without ever acquainting the Physicians what she had given him, which might have been the Means for them to have prescribed what was proper for his Relief.

Still one Thing more. She is accused upon the Saturday; she attempts to burn the Powder upon the Saturday; and yet, upon the Sunday she stays from Church, in order to write a Letter to Mr. Cranstoun.—In that Letter she styles him her Dear Willy;—acquaints him, her Father is so bad, that he must not be frightened, if he does not soon hear from her again;—says, she is herself better;—then cautions him to take Care what he writes, lest his Letters should fall into a wrong Hand. Was this such a Letter as she would have wrote, if she had been innocent? if she had not known the Quality of the Powder? if she had been imposed upon by Mr. Cranstoun?

I will only make one other Observation, which is, that of all our Witnesses she has attempted to discredit only one. She called two Persons to contradict Elizabeth Binfield in regard to a scandalous Expression, (which she was charged with, but which she positively denied ever to have made use of,) in saying, She should be glad to see the Prisoner go up the Ladder, and swing.—They first called Ann James; she swore to the Expression, and said, It was after Miss Blandy was sent to Oxford Gaol. The next Witness, Mary Banks, who, at first, did not remember the Conversation, and, at last, did not remember who were present, said, (upon being asked about the Time) that she was sure the Conversation happened upon the Thursday Night on which Mr. Blandy was opened, and during the Time that Miss Blandy was in the House. These two Witnesses, therefore, grossly contradict one another; consequently ought not to take away the Credit of Elizabeth Binfield. And let me observe, that Elizabeth Binfield proved nothing, (besides some few Expressions used by Miss Blandy;) but what was confirmed by the other Maid-Servant, Susan Gunnell.

I will, in Justice to the Prisoner, add, (what has already been observed by Mr. Ford;) that the printing what was given in Evidence before the Coroner, drawing odious Comparisons between her and former Parricides, and spreading scandalous Reports in regard to her Manner of demeaning herself in Prison, was a shameful Behaviour towards her, and a gross Offence against public Justice. But you, Gentlemen, are Men of Sense, and upon your Oaths; you will therefore totally disregard whatever you have heard out of this Place. You are sworn to give a true Verdict between the King and the Prisoner at the Bar, according to the Evidence now laid before you: It is upon that we (who appear for the Public) rest our Cause.—If, upon that Evidence, she appears to be innocent, in God's Name let her be acquitted: But if, upon that Evidence, she appears to be guilty, I am sure you will do Justice to the Public, and acquit your own Consciences.

Prisoner. It is said, I gave it my Father to make him fond of me.—There was no Occasion for that,—but to make him fond of Cranstoun.

Mr. Baron LEGGE.

GENTLEMEN of the Jury —— Mary Blandy, the Prisoner at the Bar, stands indicted before you for the Murder of Francis Blandy, her late Father, by mixing Poison in Tea and Water-gruel, which she had prepared for him. To which she has pleaded that she is Not guilty.

In the first Place, Gentlemen, I would take Notice to you of a very improper and a very scandalous Behaviour towards the Prisoner, by certain People, who have taken upon themselves, very unjustifiably, to publish in Print, what they call Depositions, taken before the Coroner, in relation to this very Affair, which is now brought before you to determine. I hope you have not seen them; but if you have, I must tell you, as you are Men of Sense and Probity, that you must divest yourselves of every Prejudice that can arise from thence, and attend merely to the Evidence that has now been given before you in Court, which I shall endeavour to repeat to you, as exactly as I am able, after so great a Length of Examination.

In Support of the Indictment, the Council for the Crown have called a great Number of Witnesses. In order to establish, in the first Place, the Fact, that Mr. Blandy died of Poison, they begin with Dr. Addington; who tells you, that he did attend Mr. Blandy in his last Illness; that he was first called in upon Saturday Evening, the 10th of August last; that the Deceased complained, that after drinking some Water-gruel on Monday Night, the 5th of August, he perceived a Grittiness in his Mouth, attended with a pricking Burning, especially about his Tongue and Throat; that he had a Pricking and Burning in his Stomach, accompanied with Sickness; a Pricking and Gripping in his Bowels; but that afterwards he purged and vomited a good deal, which had lessened those Symptoms he had complained of; that on Tuesday Night, the 6th of August, he took more Gruel, and had immediately a Return of the same Symptoms, but more aggravated; that he had besides Hiccups, cold Sweats, great Anxieties, Prickings in every external as well as internal Part of his Body, which he compared to so many Needles, darting at the same Time into all Parts of him; but the Doctor tells you, at the Time he saw him, he said he was easy, except in his Mouth, his Nose, Lips, Eyes, and Fundament, and some transient Pinchings in his Bowels, which the Doctor then imputed to the Purgings and Vomitings, for he had had some bloody Stools; that he imputed the Sensations upwards to the Fumes of something he had taken the Monday and Tuesday before; that he inspected the Parts affected, and found his Tongue swelled, his Throat excoriated and a little swelled, his Lips dry, and Pimples on them, Pimples on the Inside of his Nostrils, and his Eyes blood-shot; (that next Morning he examined his Fundament, which he found surrounded with Ulcers) his Pulse trembled and intermitted, his Breath was interrupted and laborious, his Complexion yellowish, and he could not with the greatest Difficulty swallow a Tea-spoonful of the thinnest Liquid; that he then asked him, if he had had given Offence to any Person whatever. His Daughter the Prisoner was then present, and she made Answer, that her Father was at Peace with all the World, and all the World with him. He then asked, if he had been subject to this kind of Complaint before: The Prisoner said, that he was subject to the Heart-burn and Cholic, and she supposed this would go off as it used to do; that he then told them, that he suspected that by some means or other he had taken Poison: To which the Deceased replied, he did not know but he might, or Words to that Effect; but the Prisoner said, it was impossible: He returned to visit him on Sunday Morning, and found him something relieved; that he had had some Stools, but none bloody, which he took for a Spasm; that afterwards Norton the Apothecary gave him some Powder, which he said had been taken out of Gruel, which the Deceased had drank on Monday and Tuesday; this Powder he examined at Leisure, and believes it to be white Arsenic; that the same Morning a Paper was put into his Hands by one of the Maids, which she said had been taken out of the Fire, and which she saw Miss Blandy throw in; there was a Supercription on the Paper, Powder to clean the Pebbles; there was so little of it, that he can't say positively what it was, but suspects it to be Arsenic, for he put it on his Tongue, and it felt like Arsenic, but some burnt Paper mixed with it had discoloured and softened it. He tells you, that on Monday Morning the Deceased was worse; all the Symptoms returned, and he complained more of his Fundament than before: He then desired the Assistance of some skilful Physician, because he looked upon him to be in the utmost Danger, and apprehended this Affair might come before a Court of Judicature: He asked the Deceased, if he really thought he was poisoned; to which he answered, that he really believed so, and thought he had taken it often, because his Teeth rotted faster than usual; he had frequent Prickings and Burnings in his Tongue and Throat, violent Heart-burn and frequent Stools, that carried it off again by unaccountable Fits of Vomiting and Purging; that he had had these Symptoms, especially after his Daughter had received a Present of Scotch Pebbles from Mr. Cranstoun. He then asked the Deceased who he suspected had given the Poison to him; the Tears then stood in his Eyes, but he forced a Smile, and said, A poor Love-sick Girl, I forgive her: I always thought there was Mischief in those cursed Scotch Pebbles.

Dr. Lewis came that Evening, and Miss Blandy was sent into her Chamber, under a Guard, and all Papers in her Pocket, and all Instruments with which she might hurt herself, or any other Person, and her Keys, were taken from her, that nothing might be secreted; for it was not then publicly known that Mr. Blandy was poisoned, and they thought themselves accountable for her forth-coming. On Monday Night the Deceased mended again, and grew better and worse, unaccountably, as long as he lived. On Tuesday Morning every Thing growing worse, he became excessively weak, rambled in his Discourse, and grew delirious, had cold clammy Sweats, short Cough, and a deep Way of fetching his Breath; and he observed, upon those Occasions, that an ulcerous Matter issued from his Fundament. In the midst of all this, whenever he recovered his Senses, he said he was better, and seemed quite ferene, and told him he thought himself like a Man bit by a mad Dog, I should be glad to drink, but I can't swallow. About Noon his Speech faltered more than before; he grew ghastly; was a shocking Sight; and had a very bad Night. On Wednesday Morning he recovered his Senses a little, and said he would make his Will in a few Days; but soon grew delirious again, sunk every Minute, and about Two in the Afternoon he died.

The Doctor tells you, he then thought, and still thinks, that he died of Poison; that he had no Symptoms while he lived, nor after he was dead, but what are common in People who have taken white Arsenic. He then read some Observations which he had made on the Appearances of his Body after he was dead; that his Back, and the Parts he lay on, were livid; the Fat on the Muscles of his Belly was loose in Texture, and approached Fluidity; the Muscles of the Belly were pale and flaccid; the Cawl yellower than natural; the Side next the Stomach and Intestines brownish; the Heart variegated with purple Spots; there was no Water in the Pericardium; the Lungs resembled Bladders filled with Air, blotted with black, like Ink; the Liver and Spleen were discoloured, and the former looked as if it had been boiled; a Stone was found in the Gall-bladder; the Bile was very fluid, and of a dirty yellow Colour, inclining to red; the Kidneys were stained with livid Spots; the Stomach and Bowels were inflated, and looked as if they had been pinched, and Blood stagnated in the Membranes; they contained slimy bloody Froth; their Coats were thin, smooth and flabby; the Inside of the Stomach was quite smooth, and, about the Orifices, inflamed, and appeared stabbed and wounded, like the White of an Eye just brushed by the Beards of Barley; that there was no Appearance of any natural Decay at all in him, and therefore he has no Doubt of his dying by Poison; and believes that Poison to have been white Arsenic; that the Deceased never gave him any Reason why he took the same Sort of Gruel a second Time, nor did he ask him. He tells you, as to the Powder that was given him by Norton, he made some Experiments with it the next Day, and some Part of it he gave to Mr. King, an experienced Chemist in Reading, who, upon Trial, found it to be Arsenic, as he told him; that he twice had Powder from Norton; and that what he had the second Time he kept entirely in his own Custody, and made Experiments with it a Month afterwards; that he never was out of the Room, while those Experiments were making, and he observed them to tally exactly with other Arsenic which he tried at the same Time. I need not mispend your Time in repeating the several Experiments which the Doctor has told you he made of it; he has been very minute and particular in his Account of them; and, upon the whole, concludes the same to have been Arsenic.

Dr. Lewis, the other Physician, who has likewise been sworn, stood by all the while, and confirms Dr. Addington's Evidence, tells you he observed the same Symptoms, and gives it absolutely as his Opinion, that Mr. Blandy died by Poison, of which he has not the least Doubt.

The next Witness that is called on the Part of the Crown is Benjamin Norton, who is an Apothecary at Henley: He tells you, he was sent for to Mrs. Mounteney's in Henley, on Thursday Morning, the 8th of August; that there was a Pan brought thither by Susan Gunnell, Mr. Blandy's Maid-Servant, vant, with some Water-gruel in it; that he was asked, what that Powder was in the Bottom of the Pan; to which he replied, that it was impossible to say, whilst it was wet in the Gruel, but that he would take it out; that accordingly he did take it out, and laid it upon Paper, and gave it to Mrs. Mounteney to keep, which she did till the Sunday following, when it was delivered to him, and he shewed it to Doctor Addington, to whom he gave some of it twice, and, by the Experiment made upon it with a hot Poker, he apprehended it to be of the Arsenic-kind; that the Powder he gave Doctor Addington was the same that he received from Mrs. Mounteney; that he has some of it still by him, which he now produces in Court: He tells you, that he was sent for to Mr. Blandy on Tuesday the 6th of August; that he was very ill, as he imagined, of the Cholic, and complained of a violent Pain in his Stomach, attended with Reaching and Purging, and Swelling of the Bowels; that he took Physic on Wednesday Morning, for which he found himself better; that on Thursday he went there in the Morning, but did not then see him, but went again about Twelve o'Clock, and then saw him; he desired to have more Physic, which he sent him to take on the Friday Morning; that he has been used to attend Mr. Blandy, but that he never saw him thus out of Order; that the last Illness he had had, was thirteen Months before. He tells you, that he has heard the Prisoner say, that she had heard Music in the House, which portended something; and that Cranstoun had seen her Father's Apparition; and this was some Months before her Father's Death; he says, that he can't tell who it was sent for him, but that, when he came, he found Mr. Blandy and the Prisoner together; that he asked, if he had eat any Thing that had disagreed with him; to which the Prisoner made Answer, nothing that she knew of, except some Peas on the Saturday Night before: That, at that Time, he did not apprehend any Thing of Poison, nor did Mr. Blandy mention any Thing of taking the Gruel to him: That on Saturday the Prisoner desired he would take Care of her Father, and, if there were any Danger, call for Help; he told her, he thought he was in great Danger; and then she begged Dr. Addington might be sent for. Mr. Blandy himself would have deferred it till the next Day, but she, notwithstanding, sent for him immediately: He tells you, that as to the Powder he found it to be gritty, and had no Smell; at first he could not tell what it was, till he took Notice of the old Woman's Symptoms to be the same as Mr. Blandy's; then he suspected foul Play, and, from what he heard in the Family, suspected Miss Blandy.

Mrs. Mounteney is then called; who tells you, that she remembers Susan Gunnell bringing a Pan to her House, with Water-gruel, and Powder at the Bottom of it, on Thursday; that she sent for Norton the Apothecary, who took the Powder out, and laid it on white Paper, which he gave to her to keep till it was called for; that she locked it up, and delivered the same to Norton on the Sunday following: She tells you, that the Prisoner always behaved dutifully to her Father, as far as ever she saw, when in his Presence; that she did not mention the Paper left with her to any body, till it was fetched away on Sunday Morning, the 11th of August; that she was not at Mr. Blandy's in that Time, and neither saw him, nor the Prisoner; but she was there on the Sunday Afternoon, though she did not then mention any Thing of it.

The next Witness is Susan Gunnell, who tells you, that she carried the Pan of Water-gruel to Mrs. Mounteney's, from Mr. Blandy's, which had been made at his House, the Sunday Se'nnight before his Death, by herself; that she set it in the common Pantry, where all the Family used to go, and observed no body to be busy there afterwards; but on Monday the Prisoner told her she had been stirring her Papa's Water-gruel, and eating the Oatmeal-out-of-the-Bottom; that she gave him a half-pint Mug of it that Monday Night, before he went to Bed; that she saw the Prisoner take the Tea-spoon that was in the Mug, stir it about, and then put her Fingers to the Spoon, and rub them together, and then he drank some Part of it; that on Tuesday Morning she did not see him when first he came down Stairs, and the first Time she saw him was between Nine and Ten o'Clock, when Miss Blandy and he were together; that he then said he was not well, and going to lie down; that on Tuesday Evening Robert Harman bid her warm her Master some Water-gruel, for he was in Haste for Supper; that she warmed him some of the same, which Miss Blandy carried into the Parlour, and she believes he eat of it, for there was about half left in the Morning; that she met him that Night, after the Water-gruel, as he was going up to Bed; as soon as he got into the Room, he called for a Bason to reach, and seemed to be very sick, by reaching several Times; the next Morning, about Six o'Clock, she carried him up his Physic, when he told her he had had a pretty good Night, and was better; but he had vomited in the Night, as she judges by the Bason, which she had left clean, and was then about half full; that on Wednesday the Prisoner came into the Kitchen, and said to her, that as her Master had taken Physic, he might want Water-gruel, therefore she might give him the same again, and not leave her Work to make fresh, as she was busy ironing; to which she answered, that it was stale, if there was enough of it; that it would not take much Time, and she would make fresh, and accordingly did so; that she had the Evening before taken up the Pan, and disliked the Taste, and thought it stale, but was now willing to taste it again; that she put the Pan to her Mouth, and drank some of it, and then observed some Whiteness at the Bottom, and told Betty Binfield, that she never saw any Oatmeal Settlement so white before; whereupon Betty Binfield looked at it, and said, Oatmeal this! I think it looks as white as Flour; she then took it out of Doors, where there was more Light, and putting her Finger to the Bottom of the Pan, found it gritty; upon which she recollected, that she had heard that Poison was white and gritty, which made her fear this might be Poison; she therefore locked it up in a Closet, and on Thursday Morning carried it to Mrs. Mounteney's, where Mr. Norton saw it. She tells you, that about six Weeks before Mr. Blandy's Death, she was not very well herself, and Miss Blandy then asked her what was the Matter with her, and what she had eat or drank; to which she answered, that she knew not what ailed her, but she had taken nothing more than the rest of the Family; upon which the Prisoner said to her, Susan, have you eat any Water-gruel? for I am told it hurts me, and may hurt you. To which she she answered, Madam, it cannot affect me, for I have eat none. She then mentions a Conversation, that Betty Binfield told her she had with the Prisoner on the same Subject; but that you will hear from Betty Binfield herself. She then tells you, that on the Wednesday Morning, after she had given her Master his Physic; she saw Ann Emmet the Chairwoman; and said to her, Dame, you used to be fond of Water-gruel, here's a fine Mess for you, which my Master left last Night; and thereupon warmed it, and gave it her; that the Woman sat down on a Bench in the Kitchen, and drank some of it, but not all; and said, the House smelt of Physic, and every Thing tasted of Physic, and she must go out and reach before she could finish it; that she went out to the Wash-house, as she believes; that in about half an Hour she followed her, and then found her in the Necessary-house, reaching, and, as she said, purging; that the old Woman staid there an Hour and an half; during which Time she went frequently to her, and carried her Surfeit-water; she said she was no better, and desired some fair Water; upon that she persuaded her to come into the House; but she said, she was not able without Help; that then she led her in, and put her in a Chair by the Fire, where the Coughing and Reaching continued; that she staid in the House about half an Hour, and grew worse; and she thought her in a Fit, or seized with Death; that about Nine of the Clock that Morning, she went up to Miss Blandy, and acquainted her, that her Dame had been very ill, and complained that the Smell of Physic had made her sick, and at the same Time told her, that she had eat nothing but a little of her Master's Water-gruel, which could not hurt her; to which the Prisoner said, that she was glad she was not below Stairs, for she should have been shocked to have seen her poor Dame so ill. She tells you, that sometimes the Prisoner talked affectionately of her Father, and at other Times but middling, and called him an old Villain for using an only Child so. Sometimes she wished for his long Life, and sometimes for his Death; and would often say, that she was very unkind; and that if her Father was dead, she would go to Scotland, and live with Lady Cranstoun. That by her Father's Constitution he might live twenty Years; but sometimes would say, she did not think he looked so well. She remembers Dr. Addington being sent for on Saturday Evening; and tells you, that the Prisoner was not debarred going into her Father's Room till Sunday Night, when Mr. Norton brought her down with him, and told this Witness not to suffer any Person to go into her Master's Room, except herself, who looked after him. That about Ten of the Clock, on Monday Morning, the Prisoner came into the Room after Mr. Norton; that she then fell on her Knees to her Father, and said, Sir, Banish me where you please, do with me what you please, so you do but forgive me; and as for Cranstoun, I will never see him, speak to him, or write to him more, as long as I live, if you will forgive me: To which the Deceased made Answer, I forgive thee, my Dear, and I hope God will forgive thee; but thee shouldst have considered better, before thee attemptedst any Thing against thy Father; thee shouldst have considered I was thy own Father: That the Prisoner then said, Sir, as to your Illness I am intirely innocent: To which the Witness replied, Madam, I believe you must not say you are intirely innocent, for the Powder left in the Water-gruel, and the Paper of Powder taken out of the Fire, are now in such Hands, that they must be publickly produced. The Witness then told her, that she believed she had herself taken, about six Weeks before, a Dose in Tea, that was prepared for her Master: To which the Prisoner answered, I have put no Powder in Tea, I have put Powder in Water-gruel; if you have received any Injury, I am entirely innocent; it was given me with another Intent: The Deceased hearing this, turned himself in his Bed, and said, Oh, such a Villain! Come to my House, eat of the best, and drink of the best; my House could afford, should take away my Life, and ruin my Daughter. Oh! my Dear, thee must hate that Man; thee must hate the Ground he goes on; thee canst not help it: That the Prisoner replied, Sir, your Tenderness to me is like a Sword to my Heart; every Word you say is like Swords piercing my Heart, much worse than if you were to be ever so angry; I must down on my Knees, and beg you will not curse me. To which her Father answered, I curse thee, my Dear! how shouldst think I could curse thee! No; I bless thee, and hope God will bless thee, and amend thy Life. Do, my Dear, go out of the Room; say no more, lest thee shouldst say any Thing to thy own Prejudice: Go to thy Uncle Stevens, take him for thy Friend: Poor Man! I am sorry for him. And that then the Prisoner went directly out of the Room. This Witness further tells you, that on the Saturday before, she was in the Kitchen about Twelve of the Clock at Noon, when the Prisoner having wrote the Direction of a Letter to her Uncle Stevens, and going to the Fire to dry it, she observed her put a Paper or two into the Fire, and saw her thrust them down with a Stick; that Elizabeth Binfield then putting some fresh Coals on, she believes kept the Paper from being consumed; soon after which the Prisoner left the Kitchen, and she herself acquainted Betty Binfield that the Prisoner had been burning something; that Betty Binfield asked where; and the Witness pointed to the Corner of the Grate; whereupon Betty Binfield moved a large Coal, and took out a Paper, and gave it to her; that it was a small Piece of Paper, with Writing upon it, viz. The Powder to clean the Pebbles, to the best of her Remembrance. She did not read it herself, but Betty Binfield did, and told her what it was; that about Eleven or Twelve of the Clock that Night she delivered this Paper to Betty Binfield again, but it had never been out of her Pocket till that Time. She tells you, that before this, upon the same Saturday Morning, she had been in her Master's Room about Seven of the Clock, to carry him something to drink, and when he had drank it, she said to him, Sir, I have something to communicate to you, which nearly concerns your Health and your Family; I believe you have got something in your Water-gruel that I am afraid has hurt you, and I believe Miss Blandy put it in, by her coming into the Wash-house on Monday; and saying, that she had been stirring her Papa's Water-gruel, and eating the Oatmeal out of it: Upon which he said, I find I have something not right, my Head is not right as it used to be, nor has been for some Time: This Witness told him, that she had found a Powder in the Pan; upon which he said to her, Doft thee know any Thing of this Powder, didst thee ever see any of it? To which she answered, No, none but what she saw in the Water-gruel; he then asked her, Doft know where she had this Powder, or canst guess?

guess? To which she replied, I cannot guess any where, except from Mr. Cranstoun; my Reason to suspect that is, Miss Blandy has lately had Letters oftener than usual: Her Master then said, Now you mention it, I remember, when he was at my House, he talked of a particular Poison they had in his Country: Oh! that Villain! that ever he came into my House. She likewise told him, that she had shewn the Powder to Mr. Norton, but he could not tell what it was, as it was wet; but whatever it was, it ought not to be there; her Master expressed some Surprize, and said, Mr. Norton not know! that's strange, a Person so much used to Drugs! She told him, Mr. Norton thought it would be proper for him (her Father) to seize her Pockets, with her Keys and Papers: To which he said, I cannot do it; I cannot shock her so much.—But canst not thee take out a Letter or two, which she may think she has dropped by Chance? The Witness told him, No, Sir, I have no Right, she is your Daughter; you may do it, and no body else. She tells you, she cannot say how long before this it was, that Ann Emmet had been sick with the Tea; that Miss Blandy then sent her Whey and Broth, a Quart or three Pints at a Time, once a Day, or every other Day; that she herself once drank a Dish of Tea on a Sunday Morning, out of her Master's Dish, which was not well relished, and she thought somebody had been taking Salts in that Cup; and this was about six Weeks and three Days before her Master's Death; that she found no ill Effect from it till after Dinner that Day; she had then a Hardness at her Stomach, which she apprehended was from eating plentifully of Beans at Dinner; that afterwards she seemed to have some Indigestion, and had a remarkable Trembling upon her; that she had no other Symptoms for three Days, but afterwards, for about three Days more, she was troubled with a Reaching every Morning. She says, she tasted the Water-gruel twice; once on the Tuesday, when she was mixing it for her Master; and again on the Wednesday, but found no remarkable Disorder till about Two o'Clock on the Wednesday Morning before her Master's Death, when she was seized with Convulsions. She says, that her Throat continued troublesome for six or seven Weeks after she had drank the Tea, and continued ill for three Weeks after her Master's Death; she remembers once that the Prisoner had a large Box of Linnen and some Pebbles from Mr. Cranstoun, in the Spring, before her Master's Death, and a small Box of Scotch Pebbles afterwards, about three Months before his Death; that the Prisoner shewed the Pebbles to many of her Acquaintance, but the Witness never heard of Powder to clean them; she tells you, that about a Year before his Death, her Master had a Cold, but she does not remember he was so ill as to send for the Apothecary; that he used to be equally complaining of the Gravel, Gout, and Heart-burn for twelve Years; knows nothing particular of any Complaint but the Heart-burn, and that he may have complained of all the Time she has lived in the House, but she is not positive.

She says, the Prisoner's Behaviour to her Father, in general, seemed to be dutiful, but she used undutiful Expressions in her Passions; that there had been no Conversation between her Master and the Prisoner, before her asking Forgiveness, but a Message sent by him to her, that he was willing to forgive her, if she would bring that Villain to Justice; in all he said afterwards, he seemed to speak of his Daughter, as if he believed her innocent of any Intention to hurt him; and looked on Cranstoun as the first Mover and Contriver of all, and had said, Poor unfortunate Girl! that ever she should be led away by such a Villain to do such a Thing! She believes he thought his Daughter unacquainted with the Effects of the Powder; that the Prisoner, during his Illness, kept him Company, and directed every Thing for him as for herself; the Prisoner knew her Father was ill on Monday and Tuesday Nights, but won't take upon her to say, that she knew what was the Cause of it; but she knew that the Chairwoman had been ill on the Wednesday Morning; before she told the Witness that the old Water-gruel would serve for her Father.

The next Witness is Elizabeth Binfield, who tells you, that she was a Servant to the Deceased almost three Years before his Death; that he first complained of unusual Pains and Prickings, about a Fortnight before his Death; that she has often heard the Prisoner mention Walkings, and Music; that she had heard in the House; that she thought it to be her Mother, and three Quarters of a Year before her Master's Death, the Prisoner told her that the Music presaged his Death, and continued talking in the same Way to the Time of it; that she has often heard her say, he would die before October; that the Prisoner told her, that Mr. Cranstoun had informed her, that a famous Woman, one Mrs. Morgan, who lived in Scotland, or London, but which the Witness cannot say, had said so; that the Prisoner used to appear glad when she spoke of the Prospect of her Father's Death, for that then she should be released from all her Fatigues, and be happy. She tells you, she heard the Prisoner say, that her Father complained of a Ball of Fire in his Guts, before the Monday on which he took the Water-gruel; she tells you, that she remembers that Ann Emmet, the Chairwoman, was ill about five or six Weeks before this Time, and that the Prisoner ordered her White-wine Whey and Broth; that she herself made the Broth two or three Times, two Quarts at a Time; she says, that on Saturday, the 10th of August, the Paper was taken out of the Fire by herself, which she looks upon, and says, she really believes it to be the same which she gave to Susan Gunnell, had again from her, and then delivered to Dr. Addington and Mr. Norton. She tells you, that when Susan Gunnell was ill, the Prisoner asked this Witness, if Susan had taken any of her Father's Water-gruel; and upon her answering, Not that I know, the Prisoner said, If she does, she may do for herself, may I tell you: With this Conversation she acquainted Susan Gunnell, about a Month or six Weeks before her Master's Death, in which Particular she is confirmed by Susan Gunnell. She says further, that she heard the Prisoner say, Who would grudge to send an old Father to Hell for 10,000 l.? And this she introduced by talking of young Girls being kept out of their Fortunes. She has heard the Prisoner often curse her Father, and call him Rascal and Villain; she says, that Mr. Cranstoun had been at her Master's about three Quarters of a Year before his Death, and she believes her Master did not approve of his being so much with his Daughter, as she judged by his Temper; but she does not believe he debarred his Daughter from keeping him Company. She says, that upon Saturday, the 10th of August, she was in the Kitchen when her Master was shaving, and the Prisoner was there; and her Master said he had once like to have been poisoned at a Public-house; to which the Prisoner answered, that she remembered it very well: Her Master said, that one of the Company died immediately, the other is now dead, but it is my Fortune to be poisoned at last; and then looked hard at the Prisoner, who appeared in great Confusion, and seemed all in a Tremble; her Master said further, that it was white Arsenic that was put into their Wine. This Witness then tells you, that she sat up with the Prisoner the Night her Father died, till Three o'Clock, but the Prisoner went to Bed about One; that they had no Discourse at all of her Father, but the Prisoner asked her if she would go away with her, and offered, if she would go to the Bell, or the Lion, and hire a Post-chaise, she would give her fifteen Guineas at getting into the Chaise, and ten Guineas more when they got to London; that on the Witness refusing to comply with this Request, the Prisoner burst into a Laughter, and said she was only joking; she tells you further, that she heard the Prisoner tell Dr. Addington that she had given the Powder to her Father before, and then it was in Tea; that she was afraid of a Discovery, so flung it away, and filled the Cup up again, which Susan Gunnell drank, and was ill for a Week after. She says, that upon Monday, the 5th of August, the Prisoner came into the Wash-house, and said that she had been in the Pantry, eating Oatmeal out of her Father's Gruel, which she little regarded then, but the same Day in the Afternoon she saw the Prisoner in the Pantry take a Tea-spoon, and stir the Water-gruel which was in a Pan, and then rubbed it between her Fingers; that on the Tuesday Evening the Prisoner came into the Kitchen to her, and said, Betty, if one Thing should happen, will you go into Scotland with me? To which she said, Madam, I do not know. What, says the Prisoner, you are unwilling to leave your Friends. To which the Witness replied, that if she should go there, and not like it, it would be expensive travelling. She says, that on Monday Morning, the 12th of August, she went on a Message from the Prisoner, to beg of her Father that she might speak one Word with him, which being granted, the Prisoner went up; and that she afterwards met the Prisoner coming out of her Father's Room, when she clasped the Witness round the Neck, burst out a crying, and said to her, Susan and you are the two honestest Servants in the World; you deserve to be imaged in Gold for your Honesty; half my Fortune will not make you Amends for your Honesty to my Father. She tells you, that her Master had been out of order about twelve Months before this Time; and that it was at the Time when Susan Gunnell was ill by drinking the Tea, that the Prisoner cautioned her about Susan's drinking her Father's Water-gruel.

Dr. Addington having been appealed to by the last Witness, in the Course of her Evidence, is again called up, and confirms all that this Witness has said, except, he does not remember the Circumstance of Susan Gunnell's being ill with the Tea.

He says, that the Prisoner always told him she thought it an innocent Powder, but said, it was impossible to express her Horror, that she was the Cause of her Father's Death; tho' she protested that she thought it innocent when she gave it; for Mr. Cranstoun had assured her that he used to take it himself, and called it a Love-Powder; that she had a Letter from him, directing her to give it in Gruel, as she had informed him it did not mix in Tea; that for her own Part she desired Life for no other Purpose, than only to go thro' a severe Penance for her Sins; that on her being pressed by him to discover all she knew relating to Cranstoun, her Answer was, that she was fully conscious of her own Guilt, and would not add Guilt to Guilt, for she looked on Cranstoun as her Husband, tho' the Ceremony had not passed between them. He tells you further, that he does not remember that she gave him any satisfactory Answer to any of the Questions which he put to her, which he has repeated to you, and which are very material ones, but always persisted that she was intirely ignorant of the Effects of the Powder, till she saw them on her Father; and often said, Pray God send it may not kill him, after he had told her, and her Father too, the Danger of her Father, and that he apprehended her to be undone: He then tells you he attended Susan Gunnell, who had the same Symptoms with the Deceased, but in a less Degree; he also attended Ann Emmet, who had the same Symptoms, and told her that she was poisoned.

Alice Emmet is then called, who is Daughter to Ann Emmet the old Chairwoman, who gives you an Account that her Mother was Chairwoman at Mr. Blandy's in June last, in the Time of May-harvest; that she was then taken sick, was seized in the Night-time with a Vomiting and Purgings, and this Witness went in the Morning to the Prisoner, by her Mother's Desire, and acquainted her with the Condition she was in; that the Prisoner said she was sorry, and would send her something to drink, which she did in about an Hour or two afterwards.

The next Witness is Mr. Littleton, who had been Clerk to the Deceased about two Years, and tells you he came Home from his Father's in Warwickshire, upon the 9th of August last; that the next Morning the Prisoner, her Father, and himself, were at Breakfast together; that they stayed for the Deceased some Time; that when he came, he appeared to be ill and in great Agony; that he had always a particular Cup to himself; that he tasted his Tea, and did not like it, but said it had a gritty bad Taste, and asked the Prisoner if she had not put too much of the black Stuff in it (meaning Bohea Tea); the Prisoner said, it was as usual; he then tasted it again, and said it had a bad Taste, and looked very particularly at her; she seemed in a Hurry, and walk'd out of the Room; the Deceased then poured the Tea into the Cat's Basin, and went away. Soon after the Prisoner came into the Room again, when he told her that he thought the Deceased was very ill, for that he could not eat his Breakfast; on which she asked what he had done with it, and upon his acquainting her that it was poured into the Cat's Basin, she seemed a good deal confused. That the next Day, being Sunday Morning, Mr. Blandy of Kingston came to their House, and went to Church along with him; that after they returned from Church, the Prisoner desired this Witness to walk with her and Mr. Blandy in the Garden, when she put a Letter into his Hand, and bid him direct it as usual, which he understood understood to be to Mr. Cranstoun, (having been used to direct others before) to seal it, and put it in the Post. He tells you, he had then heard so much, that he opened the Letter, transcribed it, carried it to Mr. Norton, and read it to the Deceased, who only said, Poor Love-sick Girl! what won't a Girl do for a Man she loves? This Letter he has now looked at; tells you, that it is wrote worse than usual, therefore he cannot swear whether 'tis her Hand or no, but he can swear 'tis the same she gave him; the Letter itself has been read to you, and I will make no Remarks upon it. He tells you, that after Mr. Cranstoun was gone from Henley in August 1750, he has often heard the Prisoner say, that she heard Music, which portended Death in the Family, and sometimes thought it might be herself, sometimes her Father, because he was so much broken; that he has heard her say, Death would happen before October; that he has often heard her curse her Father, damn him for a Rogue and a toothless old Dog, within two Months of his Death, and a great while before; that he has told her himself, that he thought Mr. Blandy seemed broken; upon which she said she thought so too, and that the Music portended his Death.

Robert Harman is called next, who tells you that he was Servant to Mr. Blandy at the Time of his Death; that the Night his Master died, the Prisoner asked him where he should live next; on which he told her he did not know, and she then asked him if he would go away with her; and upon his saying he did not care to do so, she told him no Hurt would come to him, but it would be 500*l.* in his way, and wanted him to go away then immediately. He says, the Prisoner behaved well to her Father, and all the Family, as far as he knows, and never heard her swear about her Father.

The next Witness is Richard Fisher, who was one of the Jury on Inspection of the Body of the Deceased. On Thursday, the 15th of August, he was informed that Miss Blandy was gone over Henley-Bridge, and went to her at the Angel; when he came into the Room, he told her he was sorry for her Misfortune, and asked her if she would not be glad to go Home again: She said she should, but could not get through the Mob; upon which he got a covered Post-chaise, and carried her Home. As they were going, she asked him if she was to go to Oxford that Night; that he told her he believed not; when he brought her to her Father's House, he delivered her up to the Constable; that after this he was upon the Jury, and when he went to her again, she asked him how it was likely to go with her; upon which he told her he was afraid very hardly, unless she could produce Letters or Papers of Consequence to bring Cranstoun to Justice. Upon which she said, Dear Mr. Fisher, I have burnt those Letters that would have brought him to Justice, and gave a Key out of her Pocket to search a Drawer for Letters; but none being found, she said, My Honour to him (meaning Cranstoun) will prove my Ruin.

Mrs. Lane is then called, who says, she went to the Angel along with her Husband, when the Prisoner was there; the first Word she heard her Husband say was, if she was guilty, she would suffer according to Law; upon which the Prisoner stamp'd on the Ground, and the first Thing she heard her say was, O that damned Villain! then paused a little, and went on again, But why do I blame him? I am more to blame myself, for it was I gave it him, and knew the Consequence. Upon being asked, whether she said I knew or I know, the Witness tells you that she will not be positive which, but the Prisoner was in a Sort of Agony; whichever way it was, it may make some little Difference, but nothing material.

Mr. Lane, the Husband of the last Witness, is then called, and tells you, that he went into the Room before his Wife; that the Prisoner rose and met him, told him he was a Stranger to her, but as he appeared like a Gentleman, she asked him what they would do with her; that he told her she would be committed to the County Gaol, and tried at the Assizes; if her Innocence appeared, she would be acquitted; if not, she would suffer accordingly. Upon which she stamp'd with her Foot, and said, O that damned Villain! but why do I blame him? I am more to blame.—That then Mr. Littleton came in, which took off his Attention; that he did not hear what followed, so as to be able to give an Account of it.

The Letter from the Prisoner to Captain Cranstoun, without any Date to it, which was opened by Littleton, has then been read to you, and with that the Council for the Crown conclude their Evidence.

The Prisoner in her Defence complains of hard Usage she has met with, denies her ever speaking ill of her Father, owns herself to be passionate, and complains that Words of Heat, upon Family-Affairs, have been misconstrued and applied to an ill Intention in her; that she was not in her Senses when she lost her Father, nor in a proper Dress to have made her Escape when she went over Henley-Bridge; that she was taken in at the Angel by the Woman of the House out of mere Compassion, and was then desirous to put herself under the Protection of the Town-Serjeant; that, during her Confinement, she was not suffered to have decent Attendance for a Woman; that she was affronted by her own Servants, cruelly traduced, and heavily ironed, without any reasonable Cause; that she thought the Powder innocent, and never had a Thought of hurting her Father; but her own Ruin is effected by such an Imputation upon her, and her Appearance here, without her being convicted. She then calls her Witnesses, and the first is,

Ann James, who tells you she lives at Henley, and used to wash at Mr. Blandy's House; that she remembers that, some Time before Mr. Blandy's Illness, there was a Difference between the Prisoner and Elizabeth Binfield, and that the latter was to go away; and that she has heard Elizabeth Binfield curse the Prisoner, and damn her for a Bitch, and say, she would not stay; that since this Affair happened, she heard her say (speaking of the Prisoner) Damn her for a black Bitch, she should be glad to see her go up the Ladder, and swing. She tells you, that when this Conversation happened, the Prisoner was gone to Gaol; that it was in Mr. Blandy's Kitchen; and that Nurse Edwards, Mary Seymour, and Mary Banks were present.

Elizabeth Binfield is then called up again, and absolutely denies the Words she is charged with: She says, she never acquainted the Witness with any Quarrel she had had, to the best of her Remembrance, but that she had some few Words of Difference with the Prisoner, and had said, that she was to go away.

Mary Banks is then called, who says, that she was in Mr. Blandy's Kitchen while he was dead in the House, but she does not remember who was in Company, nor any Conversation that passed between Elizabeth Binfield and Ann James, till the Words are directly put into her Mouth, and then she recollects that Elizabeth Binfield said she should be glad to see Miss Blandy, that black Bitch, go up the Ladder to be hanged; but she tells you this was on the Night that Mr. Blandy was opened, and that the Prisoner was then in the House.

These two Witnesses are called to impeach the Credit of Elizabeth Binfield, as having a Prejudice against the Prisoner; but I see no great Strefs to be laid on their Evidence, for they manifestly contradict one another, but do not falsify her in any one Thing she has said.

The next Witness that she calls is Edward Herne, who was a Servant to Mr. Blandy eighteen Years ago, and has left his Place about twelve Years, but he has been very seldom without going three or four Days a Week to his House ever since; that the Prisoner's general Behaviour to her Father and the Family was as well as any body could do, with Affection and Duty, as far as ever he saw; that on the Monday Night before Mr. Blandy died, he went to the House, and that neither the Prisoner nor he could speak for some Minutes, which he attributed to her great Concern; that she was put into his Custody that Night; that on hearing the Groans of her Father, he went in to him, at her Desire, to enquire how he did; that he never heard her swear, or speak disrespectfully of her Father: He says, he was not in the way when she went over Henley-Bridge, (being sent for to dig a Grave, he being the Sexton); that he has seen her since her Confinement at Oxford, and she told him that Captain Cranstoun had before put some Powder in her Father's Tea; that she turned about, and when she turned again he was stirring it in; that on a Report that Captain Cranstoun was taken, she wrung her Hands, and said, She hoped in God it was true, that he might be brought to Justice as well as herself; that as she was to suffer the Punishment due to her Crime, he might do so too; but at the same Time she declared, that when Cranstoun put the Powder into the Tea, and she herself did so afterwards, she knew no ill Effects of it, or saw any Harm from it; but if he were taken, it would bring the whole to Light; for she was innocent, and knew no more of its being Poison than any Person there.

Thomas Cawley, the next Witness, says, that he has known the Prisoner twenty Years and upwards; that he was intimate in the Family, and never saw any other than the Behaviour of a dutiful Daughter from her.

Thomas Staverton, that he has known the Prisoner five or six and twenty Years; that he has lived near the Family, and always thought that her Father and she were very happy in each other. He has observed that Mr. Blandy was declining in his Health; for four Years or more he seemed to shrink, and believes he was about Sixty-two Years of Age.

Mary Davis is the next Witness; she lives at the Angel by Henley-Bridge, and remembers the Prisoner coming over, the Day her Father was opened; that she was walking along, with a great Crowd after her; that she went to her, and asked her what was the Matter, and where she was going? The Prisoner said, she was going to walk for the Air, for that they were going to open her Father, and that she could not bear the House; the Mob followed so close, that she invited the Prisoner into her House, which she accepted, and was walking gently, and had not the Appearance of making an Escape.

Robert Stokes tells you, he knows the last Witness Mrs. Davis, and saw the Prisoner with her, in her House, the Day her Father was opened; that he was ordered by the Mayor to take Care of the Prisoner, which she said she was very glad of, because the Mob was about; and he did not observe any Inclination or Attempt whatsoever to make an Escape.

This, Gentlemen, is the Substance of the Evidence on both Sides, as nearly as I can recollect it. I have not wilfully omitted or mistated any Part of it; but, if I have, I hope the Gentlemen, who are of Council on either Side, will be so kind as to set me right.

A very tragical Story it is, Gentlemen, that you have heard, and upon which you are now to form your Judgment, and give your Verdict.

The Crime with which the Prisoner stands charged, is of the most heinous Nature and blackest Dye, attended with Considerations that shock human Nature, being not only Murder, but Parricide—the Murder of her own Father—But the more atrocious, the more flagrant the Crime is, the more clearly and satisfactorily you will expect that it should be made out to you.

In all Cases of Murder, it is of Necessity, that there should be Malice aforethought, which is the Essence of, and constitutes the Offence: But that Malice may be either express, or implied by the Law: Express Malice must arise from the previous Acts or Declarations of the Party offending; but implied Malice may arise from Numbers of Circumstances, relating either to the Nature of the Act itself, the Manner of executing it, the Person killing, or the Person killed, from which the Law will as certainly infer Malice, as where it is express.

Poison, in particular, is in its Nature so secret, and withal so deliberate, that wherever that is knowingly given, and Death ensues, the so putting to Death can be no other than wilful and malicious.

In the present Case, which is to be made out by Circumstances, great Part of the Evidence must rest upon Presumption, in which the Law makes a Distinction: A slight or probable Presumption only has little or no Weight; but a violent Presumption amounts in Law to full Proof, that is, where Circumstances speak so strongly, that to suppose the contrary, would be absurd: I mention this to you, that you may fix your Attention on the several Circumstances that have been laid before you, and consider, whether you can collect from them such a Presumption, as the Law calls a violent Presumption, and from which you must conclude the Prisoner to be guilty: I would observe further, that where that Presumption necessarily arises from Circumstances, they are more convincing and satisfactory, than any other kind of Evidence, because Facts cannot lye.

I cannot now go through the Evidence again, but you will consider the whole together, and from thence determine, what you think it amounts to. Thus far is undeniably true, and agreed on all Sides, that Mr. Blandy died by Poison; and that that Poison was administered to him by his Daughter, Daughter, the Prisoner at the Bar. What you are to try, is reduced to this single Question, Whether the Prisoner, at the Time she gave it to her Father, knew that it was Poison, and what Effect it would have?

If you believe, that she knew it to be Poison, the other Part, viz. that she knew the Effect, is consequential, and you must find her guilty: On the other Hand, if you are satisfied, from her general Character, from what has been said by the Evidence on her Part, and from what she has said herself, that she did not know it to be Poison, nor had any malicious Intention against her Father, you ought to acquit her. But if you think she knowingly gave Poison to her Father, you can do no other than find her guilty.

The Jury consulted together about five Minutes, and then turned to the Court.

Cl. of Arr. Gentlemen, are you all agreed on your Verdict?

Jury. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. Who shall say for you?

Jury. Our Foreman.

Cl. of Arr. Mary Blandy, hold up thy Hand, (which she did.) Gentlemen of the Jury, look upon the Prisoner: How say you, is Mary Blandy guilty of the Felony and Murder whereof she stands indicted, or not guilty?

Jury. Guilty.

Cl. of Arr. What Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements, had she at the Time of the same Felony and Murder committed, or at any Time since, to your Knowledge?

Jury. None.

Cl. of Arr. Harken to your Verdict as the Court hath recorded it. You say that Mary Blandy is guilty of the Felony and Murder whereof she stands indicted; and that she had not any Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements, at the Time of the said Felony and Murder committed, or at any Time since, to your Knowledge; and so you say all.

Cl. of Arr. Mary Blandy, hold up thy Hand. You have been indicted of Felony and Murder. You have been thereupon arraigned, and pleaded thereto not guilty, and for your Trial you have put yourself upon God and your Country, which Country have found you guilty. What have you now to say for yourself, why the Court should not proceed to give Judgment of Death upon you according to Law?

Cryer. Oyez; My Lords the King's Justices do strictly charge and command all Manner of Persons to keep silence, whilst Sentence of Death is passing on the Prisoner at the Bar, upon Pain of Imprisonment.

Mr. Baron LEGGE.

Mary Blandy, you have been indicted for the Murder of your Father, and for your Trial have put yourself upon God and your Country: That Country has found you guilty.

You have had a long and a fair Trial, and sorry I am, that it falls to my Lot, to acquaint you, that I am now no more at Liberty to suppose you innocent, than I was before to presume you guilty.

You are convicted of a Crime, so dreadful, so horrid in itself, that human Nature shudders at it:—The wilful Murder of your own Father!—A Father, by all Accounts, the most fond, the most tender, the most indulgent that ever lived:—

That Father with his dying Breath forgave you:—May your heavenly Father do so too.

It is hard to conceive, that any Thing could induce you to perpetrate an Act so shocking, so impossible to reconcile to Nature or Reason. One should have thought, your own Sense, your Education, and even the natural Softness of your Sex, might have secured you from an Attempt so barbarous and so wicked.

What Views you had, or what was your Intention, is best known to yourself: With God and your own Conscience be it. At this Bar, we can judge only from Appearances, and from the Evidence produced to us: But do not deceive yourself; remember you are very shortly to appear before a much more awful Tribunal, where no Subterfuge can avail; no Art, no Disguise can screen you from the Searcher of all Hearts: He revealeth the deep and secret Things, he knoweth what is in the Darkness, and the Light dwelleth with him.

Let me advise you, to make the best and wisest Use of the little Time you are likely to continue in this World: Apply to the Throne of Grace, and endeavour to make your Peace with that Power, whose Justice and Mercy are both infinite.

Nothing now remains, but to pronounce the Sentence of the Law upon you, which is,

That you are to be carried to the Place of Execution, and there hanged by the Neck until you are dead: And may God of his infinite Mercy receive your Soul.

The Prisoner then addressed herself to the Judge in this Manner.

“ My Lord, as your Lordship has been so good to shew so much Candour and Impartiality in the Course of my Trial, I have one Favour more to beg, which is, that your Lordship would please to allow me a little Time, till I can settle my Affairs, and make my Peace with God.”

To which his Lordship replied,

Miss Blandy having received Sentence of Death, was re-conducted to the Castle from whence she came. Many People believed, that she behaved not only through the whole Course of her Trial, but afterwards, with such a decent Resolution, as does not often attend a Consciousness of Guilt; tho' great Part of Mankind (it must be owned,) seem fully convinced of even her Intention to destroy her Father. Be that as it will, her Conduct before the Judges was not only uncensured, but even applauded, by a Majority of the Spectators who were Witnesses of it. Nor did any material Alteration discover itself in the Tenour of her Behaviour, tho' her Spirits sometimes a little failed her, betwixt the Day of her Trial and that of her Execution.

It would be endless, however, notwithstanding this undoubted Truth, to recite the palpable Falsehoods, and inhuman Calumnies, industriously propagated of her, and dispersed throughout the Nation, in almost every Part of that Interval. Sometimes it was reported, that she had poisoned herself, and sometimes that she had laid upon herself violent Hands in a different Manner; tho' she discovered, on all Occasions, to the Minister who attended her, the most perfect Abhorrence of Suicide, cide, and of every Thing that had but even the least Tendency to it. Several Persons affirmed, that she was so perfectly hardened, that she would not acknowledge herself guilty of any Crime; the Reverse of which is true, as can be attested both by the aforesaid Minister, and other Persons of Character and Reputation. She has frequently said, that she deserved Death for destroying her Father, tho' she did not think herself so guilty as if she had designedly and intentionally perpetrated so black a Crime. This Declaration she constantly persisted in; tho' that Point of Conduct gave uncommon Offence to vast Numbers of People.

During the aforesaid Interval, Miss Blandy attended Divine Service in the Chapel as often as her Health would permit, and the Crowds of People, who flocked thither to gaze upon her, did not drive her from thence; and when any thing of that Kind happened, as well as at all other proper Seasons, the Minister of the Castle attended her in her own Apartment. She often professed herself a sincere Penitent, and said she was covered with Contrition for every Sin she had committed, and particularly that which occasioned the Loss of her dear Father's Life.—When such Professions as these were made, she pretty frequently shed Tears, and discovered the most apparent Emotions of Grief. This can be attested by several, as well as the aforesaid Minister, whose Testimony will be deemed authentic in all other Cases. Notwithstanding which, the contrary to this has been asserted by many Persons; but then some of them have been such as have not only had little Regard to Truth, but been incapable of all tender Sentiments.

She always professed a full Persuasion of the Truth and Excellency of the Christian Religion in general, and a close Attachment to the Tenets, Doctrines, and Usages of the Church of England in particular. Nor did any Thing, during the whole Course of her Confinement, so extremely shock her as the Charge of Infidelity, which some uncharitable Persons a little before her Death brought against her, on Account of her Intimacy with Cranstoun. That Cranstoun was an Infidel, there may be Reason enough to believe; but that she was so, because she had placed her Affections upon him, will by no Means follow. It appears, that he was a Man of infinite Art and Design; and therefore may very naturally be supposed to have adapted himself intirely to her Genius and Disposition, in order the more effectually to carry into Execution his wicked Designs: And that this was really the Case, with her dying Breath she positively affirmed. He never, as to the Minister attending her a little before her Death she declared, uttered any Thing in her Company, thro' the whole Course of her Acquaintance with him, that could be deemed shocking to pious Ears, or that in the least favoured of Infidelity. On the contrary, if she may be credited, in some of her last Moments, he gave her many instructive Lessons, and talked perfectly in the Style of a Christian. And this he might do, because he found it agreeable to her. 'Tis but charitable, therefore, considering her Education, to believe, that she never openly professed any Dislike to the Principles of Christianity.

She could discourse pertinently and clearly upon all the common, and some other theological Topics: From whence it may be rationally inferred, that she had not only been in a tolerable Degree conversant with the Scriptures; but likewise read, with some Attention, the Works of several of our most celebrated Divines. And this she owned herself to have done. This Point would not have been so copiously insisted upon here, had she not desired it might be cleared up in a particular Manner; and had not the Imputation of Infidelity, in some of her last Moments, given her infinite Uneasiness and Concern.

She was visited by several Clergymen, besides the Minister of the Castle who constantly attended her, one of whom was a Person of superior Rank and Character in the University. To all of these she expressed herself much in the same Manner, and constantly persisted in her first Declaration. She was pressed by them in the strongest Terms to confess the Truth, and not go out of the World with a Lie in her Mouth. But this she said she should do, if she affirmed that she had a Design to destroy her Father when she gave him the fatal Powder, or that she then knew there was any poisonous Quality lodged in it. She talked in such a plausible, or rather pathetic Strain, and gave such convincing Reasons for the Truth of what she affirmed, that some of her Enemies themselves, after one or two Visits, became greatly prejudiced in her Favour.

Some Attempts were made to procure her a short Respite; for it was never believed, that a Pardon could be obtained, at least before the Apprehension of the Villain Cranstoun. But all the Avenues to the Royal Clemency were shut up; so that every Measure pursued on this Occasion proved ineffectual. Nor did she ever entertain any Hopes of Success, tho' a Lady of great Interest and Distinction, whose innate Goodness renders her one of the brightest Ornaments of the present Age, made several Efforts in her Favour. The Prejudices she had to struggle with had taken too deep Root in some Men's Minds, to be effaced by any Sentiments of Tenderness and Compassion.

She herself observed, and spoke with great Commendation of them, that the Judges, as well as the worthy Sheriff and his Deputy, behaved towards her with great Candour and Moderation.

On Monday, April the 6th, 1752, the Day destined for her Execution, the Under-Sheriff, attended by one of Miss Blandy's Friends, visited her a little after Eight o'Clock in the Morning. She then discovered some Anxiety and Apprehensions, in relation to her future State, that had never before appeared. She said, that many Sins, both of Omission and Commission, which she had formerly considered as Trifles, seemed at that Time to be very black and enormous to her. The Minister, who was then also present, took a fresh Opportunity from hence to press her once more to declare the Truth, in relation to her Intention and Knowledge of the noxious Quality of the fatal Powder, by urging that a Failure herein would be a Crime of a much deeper Dye, than those which filled her with such terrible Apprehensions. But to this she immediately replied, that she should persist in her former Declaration to the Moment of her Death; and that this she would impart to the People attending her Execution. The Under-Sheriff, and the Gentleman attending him, also begged, that she would not impose upon herself, as well as upon the World, in these her last Moments. To which she answered much in the same Terms as she had done before. She likewise appeared appeared after this to be something more calm and composed. And the Minister, in order still more to comfort her, told her, that the Devil frequently presented former Sins as much more heinous than they really were, to even some of the best Christians themselves, when they were upon the Confines of Eternity, in order to ruffle and discompose them; and that therefore probably the Scene that at present seemed to disturb her, was nothing more than one of his Illusions: But however that might be, she had no Reason to be afraid of any of her Sins, if she sincerely repented of them, as she had always assured him she did, and placed an unshaken Confidence in the Mercy of God, through the Merits of Christ; and neither those Merits, nor that Mercy, to sincere Penitents, would admit of any Limits. This gave her great Consolation, inasmuch that she soon resumed her former Calmness, and declared herself not only willing, but even inclinable to die.

About Nine o'Clock she came out of her Bed-chamber, and was attended by the Minister to the Place of Execution. Here he read some of the Commendatory Forms of Prayer, and she joined most fervently with him. After this was ended, he said to her, "Madam, you may now, if you think proper, and have a sufficient Flow of Spirits, speak to the People." She then addressed herself to them, with a clear and audible Voice, in the following Terms: "Good People, give me Leave to declare to you, that I am perfectly innocent, as to any Intention to destroy, or even hurt my dear Father; that I did not know, or even suspect, that there was any poisonous Quality in the fatal Powder I gave him; tho' I can never be too much punished for being even the innocent Cause of his Death. As to my Mother's and Mrs. Pocock's Deaths, that have been unjustly laid to my Charge, I am not even the innocent Cause of them, nor did I in the least contribute to them. So help me God in these my last Moments. And may I not meet with eternal Salvation, nor be acquitted by Almighty God, in whose awful Presence I am instantly to appear, if the whole of what is here asserted, be not true. I from the Bottom of my Soul forgive all those concerned in my Prosecution; and particularly the Jury, notwithstanding their fatal Verdict." She then ascended the Ladder, and spoke again to the following Effect: "Good People, take Warning by me to be on your Guard against the Sallies of any irregular Passion; and pray for me, that I may be accepted at the Throne of Grace."

After which, she was turned off; and, in about half an Hour's Time, cut down. The Body was then carried to a neighbouring House, and put into a Coffin; from thence it was conducted about Five o'Clock in the Afternoon, in a Hearse, to Henley; and interred about Eleven o'Clock in the Chancel of the Church there, where the Bodies of her Father and Mother had been deposited. Miss Blandy suffered in a black Bombazine short Sack and Petticoat, with a clean white Handkerchief drawn over her Face. Her Hands were tied together with a strong black Ribband, and her Feet, at her own Request, almost touched the Ground. The Number of People attending her Execution was computed at about 5000; many of whom, and particularly several Gentlemen of the University, were observed to shed Tears. She behaved with such Serenity and Composure, and with such a decent Resolution, as greatly surprised many of the Spectators; and such as some there present thought nothing but a Consciousness of the Truth of what she had asserted, and a well-grounded Hope of future Felicity, could inspire. Contrary to what is observed at other Executions, there was almost a profound Silence during the Time of this. In fine, the whole was so well conducted, and made such a deep Impression upon the Minds of the People present, that the Circumstances attending Miss Blandy's Execution will not soon be forgotten at Oxford.

Copy of Miss Blandy's Declaration delivered at the Place of Execution in Oxford, April 6th, 1752.

I Mary Blandy do declare that I die in a full Persuasion of the Truth and Excellency of the Christian Religion, and a sincere, tho' unworthy Member of the Church of England. I do likewise hope for a Pardon and Remission of my Sins by the Mercy of God, through the Merits and Mediation of our most blessed Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. I do also farther declare, that I did not know or believe that the Powder, to which the Death of my dear Father has been ascribed, had any noxious or poisonous Quality lodged in it; and that I had no Intention to hurt, and much less to destroy him, by giving him that Powder. All this is true, as I hope for eternal Salvation, and Mercy from Almighty God, in whose most awful and immediate Presence I must soon appear. I die in perfect Peace and Charity with all Mankind, and do from the Bottom of my Soul forgive all my Enemies, as also those Persons who have in any Manner contributed to, or been instrumental in bringing me to the ignominious Death I am soon to suffer. This is my last Declaration, as to the Points contained in it; and I do most earnestly desire that it may be published after my Death. Witness my Hand,

MARY BLANDY.

XLV. The CASE of John Swan and Elizabeth Jefferys, for the Murder of Joseph Jefferys.

Q. *W*HETHER the Prisoners should be tried on the first or second Indictment, found against them?

The CASE.

John Swan, Servant to Mr. Joseph Jefferys, of Walthamstow in Essex, and Elizabeth Jefferys his Niece, were indicted at the Assizes held at Chelmsford in Essex, in the Summer 1751, for the Murder of the said Joseph Jefferys; Swan for giving the mortal Wound, and Elizabeth Jefferys for aiding and assisting, &c. therein. To which Indictment they both pleaded Not Guilty: But their Trial was then put off to the following Assizes.

In March 1752, at the following Assizes held at Chelmsford, before the Hon. Sir Martin Wright and Sir Michael Foster, the following Indictment was found against Swan for Petty Treason, and Elizabeth Jefferys for Murder, viz.

‘ John Swan, late of the Parish of Walthamstow,
‘ in the County of Essex, Labourer, late Servant
‘ to Joseph Jefferys in his Life-time, now deceased,
‘ was indicted, for that he, not having the Fear of ‘ God before his Eyes, but being moved and se-
‘ duced by the Instigation of the Devil, on the 3d
‘ Day of July, in the 25th Year of the Reign of ‘ our Sovereign Lord George the Second, King of ‘ Great-Britain, &c. with Force and Arms at the ‘ Parish aforesaid, in the County aforesaid, in and ‘ upon the said Joseph Jefferys, then the Master of ‘ the said John Swan, in the Peace of God, and
‘ of our said Lord the King, then and there be‘ ing, feloniously, traiterously, wilfully, and of ‘ his Malice aforethought, did make an Assault;
‘ and that the said John Swan a certain Pistol, of
‘ the Value of Six-pence, then and there charged ‘ with Gunpowder and leaden Bullets, (which ‘ he the said John Swan in his Hand then and ‘ there had and held) to, against, and upon the ‘ said Joseph Jefferys, his then Master, then and ‘ there feloniously, traiterously, wilfully, and of ‘ his Malice aforethought, did shoot and dis‘ charge; and that he the said John Swan, with
‘ the leaden Bullets aforesaid, out of the Pistol
‘ aforesaid, then and there by Force of the Gun‘ powder aforesaid, shot and sent forth, as afore-
‘ said, him the said Joseph Jefferys, his then ‘ Master, in and upon the left Side of his Head,
‘ then and there feloniously, traiterously, wilfully,
‘ and of his Malice aforethought, did strike, pe‘ netrate, and wound, giving to the said *Joseph
‘ Jefferys* then and there, with the leaden Bullets ‘ aforesaid, so as aforesaid shot, discharged, and sent ‘ forth out of the Pistol aforesaid, by the said John ‘ Swan, in and upon the said left Side of the Head
‘ of him the said Joseph Jefferys, one mortal Wound
‘ of the Width of half an Inch, and of the Depth

‘ of four Inches; of which said mortal Wound
‘ the aforesaid Joseph Jefferys then and there in‘ stantly died. And Elizabeth Jefferys, late of the ‘ said Parish, Spinster, was indicted, for that she,
‘ then and there feloniously, wilfully, and of her
‘ Malice aforethought, was present, aiding, help‘ ing, abetting, comforting, assisting, and main‘ taining the said John Swan, the Felony and ‘ Murder aforesaid, in Manner and Form afore-
‘ said, to do and commit; and that he the said ‘ John Swan, then and there, in Manner and ‘ Form aforesaid, feloniously, traiterously, wil‘ fully, and of his Malice aforethought; and that ‘ she the said Elizabeth Jefferys, then and there,
‘ in Manner and Form aforesaid, feloniously,
‘ wilfully, and of her Malice aforethought, did ‘ kill and murder the said Joseph Jefferys, against ‘ the Peace of our said Lord the King, his Crown
‘ and Dignity.’

When they were arraigned upon this Indictment, an Objection was taken by the Council for the Prisoners to their being tried on the above Indictment, as another had been found against them at the last Assizes; against Swan for the Murder of the said Joseph Jefferys, and Elizabeth Jefferys for aiding, assisting, &c. the said Swan in the said Murder; and to which Indictment they had both pleaded Not Guilty: That if they were tried on this Indictment, and were acquitted, they must be a second Time tried for their Lives on the former Indictment for the same Offence, which was contrary to Law.—After near three Hours Debate between the Council on both Sides, the Court were of Opinion, that the Prisoners must be tried on the last Indictment found against them, and the former Indictment quashed: Whereupon they both pleaded Not Guilty. The Fact was plainly proved against them; and they making little or no Defence, Swan was found guilty of Petty Treason, and Jefferys of Murder.—The printed Trial contains nothing remarkable in it, no Arguments of the Council on either Side on the Point of Law, on which of the two Indictments the Prisoners should be tried, nor any Speeches or Arguments, only the examining the Witnesses, and is a plain Narrative of the Evidence, and how the Murder happened: The Substance of which is acknowledged, and contained in the Confession of Elizabeth Jefferys and John Swan, as followeth.

The Confession of Elizabeth Jefferys, concerning the Murder of her Uncle Joseph Jefferys.

I Elizabeth Jefferys do freely and voluntarily confess, That I first enticed and persuaded John Swan and Thomas Mathews, to undertake and perpetrate the Murder of my deceased Uncle; which they both consented to do the first Opportunity:

tunity: That, on the 3d Day of July 1751, myself and John Swan (Mathews, to my Knowledge, not being in the House) agreed to kill my said Uncle; and accordingly, after the Maid was gone to Bed, I went into John Swan's Room, and called him, and we went down together into the Kitchen; and, having assisted Swan in putting some Pewter and other Things into a Sack, I said I could do no more: And then I went up into my Room; and afterwards Swan came up, as I believe, and went into my Uncle's Room, and shot him; which done, he came to my Door, and rapped. Accordingly I went out in my Shift, and John Swan opened the Street-Door, and let me out: That done, I alarmed the Neighbourhood. And I do solemnly declare, That I do not know that any Person was concerned in the Murder of my deceased Uncle, but myself, and John Swan; for that Mathews did not come to my Uncle's House the Day before, or Night in which the Murder was committed, as I know of.

Elizabeth Jefferys.

Miss Jefferys further confessed, That her Uncle took her from her Father when she was five Years old; and that, when she was sixteen, her said Uncle debauched her: That she lived in a continual State of Incest with him (having had two Miscarriages by him,) till about a Year before his Death, when he slighted her in Favour of another Woman. His repeated Neglects of her, and his threatening to alter his Will, which she knew had been made entirely in her Favour, were the Motives that induced her to perpetrate the Murder, for which she is sentenced to die.

Swan confessed, That he alone murdered his Master Mr. Jefferys, by shooting him with a Pistol loaded with Pieces of Bullets: That there was no Stab given; but that the several Wounds were given by the Pieces of the Bullets, and by the Splinters of the Pistol, that burst when it was fired off: And that Mathews was not at the House for five Days before the Murder was committed: But owned, That both he and Miss Jefferys had offered Mathews five or six hundred Pounds to shoot Mr. Jefferys, but that he refused to do it; and that they called him Villain for declining to commit the Murder: Upon which he resolved to do it himself, and agreed with Miss Jefferys what Time to commit it.

Thus much is inserted to let the Reader into the Case, and as an Introduction to Mr. Justice Foster's Opinion, upon which of the two Indictments the Prisoners should be tried; with the Determination of the Court thereon, and his Lordship's Observations on Indictments for Murder and Petty Treason.

The Case of John Swan and Elizabeth Jefferys *.

“ AT Chelmsford Assizes, in the Summer 1751, John Swan and Elizabeth Jefferys were indicted for the Murder of Joseph Jefferys; Swan for giving the mortal Wound, and Jefferys for being present, aiding and abetting; and they both pleaded Not Guilty: But their Trial was postponed to the next Assizes.

“ In the mean time the Attorney-General, who had received Orders to prosecute at the Expence of the Crown, was satisfied from the Evidence laid before him, that Swan was in the actual Service of the Deceased at the Time the Murder was committed, or at least when the Design was first laid. He therefore thought it adviseable to prefer another Bill against them for the Parts they respectively took in the same Murder, charging Swan with Petty Treason, and Jefferys with Murder. Accordingly at the next Assizes such Bill was preferred and found, and the Prisoners were arraigned upon it.

“ The Prisoners pleaded in Abatement Ore tenus, that another Indictment was depending for the same Offence; and pleaded over to the Treason and Felony. The Council for the Crown did not insist upon drawing up the Plea in Form (as was done in Layer's Case, Vol. VI. p. 237.) but demurred Ore tenus; and the Council for the Prisoners joined in Demurrer.

“ Mr. Justice Wright, who sat on the Crown Side, desiring the Company of Mr. Justice Foster, who went that Circuit with him, at the arguing the Plea, he went into Court, and sat there 'till that Matter was determined and the Jury sworn.

“ The Prisoners Council insisted, that they ought not to have been arraigned on this new Bill, pending the former Indictment, on which Issue is already joined: Because, if they plead to Issue on this Indictment, they may be liable to be tried twice for one and the same Fact. It will be in the Option of the Crown, after Issue is joined upon both Indictments, to proceed to Trial upon either of them; and if the Prisoners should be acquitted upon one, they may still be tried upon the other. For though Auterfoits acquit of Murder may be a good Bar to an Indictment of Petty Treason for the same Fact, or Auterfoits acquit of Petty Treason, to an Indictment of Murder; yet the Prisoners having pleaded to Issue on both Indictments, they may be told they come too late with their Plea in Bar, Issue being already joined on the Fact.

“ They therefore pressed that the Trial on the first Indictment might go on, before the Prisoners should be called upon to plead to the second; for said they, if the Prisoners should be found guilty on that Indictment, the Ends of public Justice will be fully answered. And if they should be acquitted, and the Council for the Crown should think proper to proceed on this new Bill, the Prisoners ought to be left at Liberty to avail themselves of that Acquittal, as they shall be advised.

“ The Court was of Opinion, that the Charge in the Bill last found must be answered, notwithstanding the Pendency of the former; for Auterfoits Arraign is no Plea in this Case. Perhaps the Bill last found is better adapted to the Nature of the Case than the former, and the King's Council must be at liberty to prosecute in such Manner as may best answer the Ends of public Justice. But at the same Time the Court must take Care, that the Prisoners be not exposed to the Inconvenience of undergoing two Trials for one and the same Fact.

“ With regard to the Prisoner Jefferys, the Offence charged in both Indictments is exactly the same, as well in Consideration of Law as in Point of Fact; with regard to Swan, the Fact in both is the same; and so is the substantial Part of the Charge, Wilful Murder of Malice Prepense: But falling under a different Consideration in the second Indictment, merely from the Relation the

* From Mr. Justice Foster's Reports, p. 104—107. and 326—328.

Prisoner is supposed to stand in to the Deceased. And if that Relation should not be made out in Proof, yet still he may be found guilty of Murder upon that Indictment.

“ And therefore, as the Ends of public Justice would be fully answered with regard to both the Prisoners, by trying them on the Indictment for Petty Treason and Murder, the Court proposed to the King’s Council that the first Indictment should be quashed by Consent, to which they agreed; which was accordingly done, and the Court proceeded to the Trial of the Prisoners on the second Indictment on the Issue of Not Guilty.

“ The Court in this Case followed the Precedent in Cro. Car. 147. Sir William Withypole’s Case. Only they took in the Consent of the King’s Council, which I think they needed not to have asked; the Justice of the Case was sufficient Warrant for what they did.

“ Before the Jury was called, the Judges agreed between themselves, that if the Prisoners should not think fit to challenge at all, they might be tried together; but if they should insist on their Challenges, they must be tried separately: * Because they cannot join in their Challenges, the Number of their peremptory Challenges being differently limited, Swan’s to 35, and Jefferys’s to 20.

“ The Court informed them of this; and the Prisoner Swan declaring that for his Part he waved all Benefit of Challenging, the Prisoner Jefferys challenged (one) two or three, and a Jury was sworn. The Prisoners were found guilty, Swan of Petty Treason, and Jefferys of Murder.

“ While the Case of the King against Swan was depending, and before the second Bill was preferred, a Question was made, whether Swan could be convicted on the Indictment for Murder, if it should come out in Evidence that he was Servant to the Deceased at the Time the Fact was contrived or committed; and consequently that his Offence was Petit Treason.

“ There is a Case cited in the printed Trial of Coke and Woodburne, 6 St. Tri. 224. which, if such Case there ever was, hath, as far as the Authority of it goeth, determined that Question.

“ At the Summer Assizes at Dorchester 1712, a Woman was indicted before Mr. Justice Eyre† for the Murder of another Woman; upon Evidence it appeared that the Person murdered was her Mistress, which made the Crime Petit Treason. The Judge directed this Matter to be specially found; and upon Conference with all the Judges it was held she ought to be acquitted upon this Indictment, as she accordingly was, and was afterwards indicted for Petit Treason, and convicted and executed.” This Case is not to be found in any Report printed or MS. that I have met with, or heard of. Nor have I upon a strict Inquiry met with any Footsteps of such Case among the Minutes of Proceedings on the Crown Side in the County where the Case is supposed to have arisen; though the Minutes from 1708 to 1722 have been carefully searched. For these Reasons, and what is suggested in the Note, I conclude that no such Case ever existed.

* Vide Noble’s Trial, Vol. IX. p. 11. for a different Opinion.

† Justice Eyre did not go the Western Circuit in the Summer 1712. Ward and Pricé went at that Time. This Information I (Mr. Justice Foster) have from Mr. Maddock, Clerk of Assize of the Western Circuit.

“ A Person who is guilty of Petit Treason may be indicted of Murder, for it is a Species of Murder, and a Pardon of Murder pardoneth Petit Treason.”

“ Lord Chief Justice Coke having cited the Opinion in Dyer 235. saith, “ That Petit Treason is Murder and more.” 6 Co. 13. b. And from thence it hath been inferred that Petit Treason and Murder are in Consideration of Law different Offences, or that the Crime of Murder is merged in Petit Treason. But this Inference will not hold, however true the Chief Justice’s Doctrine may be. There is undoubtedly in Consideration of Law a greater Degree of Malignity in the one than in the other, arising from that Degree of Allegiance, however low, which the Murderer owed to the Deceased at the Time the Fact was committed or conceived in his Heart. But certainly the Difference in Point of Malignity between Murder and Manslaughter is infinitely greater; and consequently in that Respect it may with equal Propriety be said that Murder is Manslaughter and more. And yet in Judgment of Law they are the same Offence, differing only in the Degree of Malignity, 4 R. 46. Keil. 103, 104. when considered in relation to one and the same Fact. And by a Parity of Reason Lord Chief Justice Hale, 2 Hale 251. concludeth, that Petit Treason and Murder are to be considered in the same Light, as one Offence, differing only in Degree.

“ But though I am satisfied that the Law considereth Petit Treason and Murder as one Offence, differing only in Circumstance and Degree; yet whether it may be adviseable to proceed upon an Indictment for Murder against a Person plainly appearing to be guilty of Petit Treason, is a Matter that deserveth great Consideration; and probably determined the Attorney-General to prefer a fresh Bill for Petit Treason in Swan’s Case. For though the Offences are to most Purposes considered as substantially the same, yet as there is some Difference between them with regard to the Judgment that is to be pronounced upon a Conviction, and a very material one with regard to the Trial, a Person indicted for Petit Treason being intitled to a peremptory Challenge of 35, I think if the Prosecutor be apprized of the true State of the Case, as he may be if he useth due Diligence, he ought to adapt the Indictment to the Truth of the Fact.

“ But if, through a Mistake on the Part of the Prosecutor, or through the Ignorance or Inattention of the Officer, a Bill be preferred as for Murder, and it should come out in Evidence that the Prisoner stood in that Sort of Relation to the Deceased which rendereth the Offence Petit Treason, I do not think it by any Means adviseable to direct the Jury to give a Verdict of Acquittal. For a Person charged with a Crime of so heinous a Nature ought not to have the Chance given him by the Court of availing himself of a Plea of Auterfoits Acquit. In such a Case I should make no Sort of Difficulty of discharging the Jury of that Indictment, and ordering a fresh Indictment for Petit Treason. In this Method the Prisoner will have Advantage of his peremptory Challenges, and the public Justice will not suffer. And on the other Hand, in Case of an Indictment for Petit Treason, if it be proved that the Defendant killed the Deceased with such Circumstances of Malice as amount to Murder, but the Relation of Servant, &c. is not proved, I have no Sort of Doubt that on such an Indictment the Defendant may be found guilty of Murder, and acquitted of the Treason. For Murder, 1 Hale 378. 2 Hale 184. is included in every Charge of Petit Treason, Felonice, Proditorie, & ex Malitiâ præcogitatâ MURDRAVIT.

“ The Treason is a Circumstance of Aggravation, of which the Defendant may be acquitted, and yet found guilty of the substantial Part of the Charge; just as a Man upon an Indictment of Murder may be acquitted of that, and found guilty of Manslaughter. “ Because,” say the Books, “ Manslaughter is included in the Charge “ of Murder.”

“ I will go one Step further, I offer it as my private Opinion, which is submitted to the Judgment of the Learned. Put the Case that a Person is brought to his Trial upon an Indictment for Petit Treason, and that one Witness only can be produced, or that the Prosecutor is not furnished with any Evidence except the Depositions taken before the Coroner, or Informations taken on Oath before Justices of the Peace pursuant to the Statutes; and let it be supposed that those Witnesses are living, but unable to travel, or kept out of the Way by the Procurement of the Defendant. 1, 2 Phil. and M. 13. 2, 3 Pb. and M. 10. Vid. Keil. 55. 1 Hale 305. 2 Hale 284. What is to be done in this Case? Is the Defendant to be acquitted of the whole Charge? I think not. I think this Evidence, though not sufficient to convict of Petit Treason, is still admissible Evidence, and proper to be left to the Jury as upon a Charge of Murder; and the Jury, if they are satisfied, may find the Defendant guilty of the Murder, and acquit him of the Treason, for the Reasons just now given, 2 Hale 184. Interest Reipublicæ ne Maleficia remaneant Impunita.”

The Prisoners were both executed March 28, 1752, at Bucket's-Hill, near the Bald-faced Stag on Epping-Forest, near the Place where the Fact was committed; and Swan was hanged in Chains.

“ At a Meeting of the Judges at the Lord Chief Justice Lee's Chambers in June 1752, to consider of the Act of the last Session, for the better preventing the horrid Crime of Murder, it was agreed by much the greater Part of the Judges, that the Judgment for Dissecting and Anatomizing, and touching the Time of Execution, ought to be pronounced in Cases of Petty Treason, though Murder is only mentioned, except in the Case of Women.* And in that Case too, the Time of Execution may be a Part of the Judgment.

“ There was some Doubt whether Hanging in Chains might ever be made Part of the Judgment; but on Debate it was agreed by nine Judges, that in all Cases within the Act, the Judgment for Dissection and Anatomizing only should be Part of the Sentence: And if it should be thought advisable, the Judge might afterwards direct the Hanging in Chains by special Order to the Sheriff, pursuant to the Power given for that Purpose in the Proviso.†

* Though the 1 E. 6. c. 12. enacteth that wilful Poisoning shall be deemed Murder of Malice prepened, and that the Offender shall suffer and forfeit as in other Cases of wilful Murder; yet if the Wife or Servant poison Husband or Master, they are constantly indicted for Petty Treason, and suffer the Pains peculiar to that Offence. Petty Treason is considered in no other Light than as an aggravated Murder.

† Before this Time, there was some Difficulty about Hanging in Chains.

For in the Year 1741, when James Hall pleaded Guilty to the Indictment of Petty Treason, for the Murder of his Master John Penny, of Clement's-Inn, Gent. the Rev. Dr. Penny, Dean of Litchfield, his Brother, and the Relations, applied to the Court at the Old-Bailey, before Sentence was passed, that they would be pleased to make an Order, That James Hall might be hung in Chains.—Sir Daniel Lambert, then Lord Mayor, spoke to Sir John Strange, the Recorder of London, about it; when the Recorder told the Relations, “ The Court never made any Order in such Cases; that they must apply to the King, the “ Body being at his Majesty's Disposal.”—The King was then at Hanover; and the Relations applied by Petition to the Regency, at their first Sitting (at Whitehall) after the Sessions about it, when they were told by Mr. Sharpe, Clerk to the Council, “ That the Regency, or the Council, never made any Order in such Cases; and that the Court who tried the Prisoner should have done it.” Under this Difficulty, Dean Penny, who was acquainted with the Archbishop of Canterbury, and with his Grace the Duke of Newcastle (to whom he had been Chaplain) sent in to the Regency, and begged as a Favour to speak to those two Noble Lords, who were pleased to come out to the Dean, who then told them what the Court at the Old-Bailey had said; whereupon their Graces went in, and acquainted the Regency with the Difficulty the Relations were in; upon which an Order was made for hanging him in Chains, and Mr. Sharpe came out and told them of it; but said, it was inserted therein, That it was on the Petition of the Relations of the Deceased: And Hall was executed at the End of Catherine-Street in the Strand, on Monday Sept. 14, 1741, and hanged in Chains at Sheppard's-Bush, just beyond Kensington Gravel-pits, on the Aston Road, in Middlesex.

XLVI. The TRIAL of James Stewart, in Aucharn in Duror of Appin, for the Murder of Colin Campbell of Glenure, Esq; Factor for his Majesty on the forfeited Estate of Ardsbiel; before the Circuit Court of Justiciary held at Inverary in Scotland, on Thursday the 21st, Friday the 22^d, Saturday the 23^d, and Monday the 25th of September, 1752, by his Grace Archibald Duke of Argyll, Lord Justice-General, and the Lords Elchies and Kilkerran, Commissioners of Justiciary.

The Criminal Letters, Libel or Indictment.

GEORGE, by the Grace of God, King of Great Britain, France and Ireland, Defender of the Faith: To our Lovits,——Macers of our Court of Justiciary, Messengers at Arms, our Sheriffs in that Part, conjunctly and severally, specially constitute, greeting: Forasmuch it is humbly meant and complained to us, by our Right Trusty William Grant of Prestongrange, Esq; our Advocate, for our Interest, and also by our Lovit Janet Mackay, Daughter to the Honourable Hugh Mackay of Bighouse, Esq; and Relict of the deceased Colin Campbell of Glenure, for herself, and on Behalf of Elizabeth and Lucy Campbells, her infant Children, with Concourse of our said Advocate, for our Interest, upon James Stewart in Aucharn in Duror of Appin, commonly known or reputed to be the natural Brother of Charles Stewart of Ardsbiel, attainted, and present Prisoner in Fort-William; and upon Allan Stewart, commonly called Allan Breck Stewart, Son to Donald Stewart, alias Vic Ean. Vic Allister, sometime in Inverchomrie in Rannoch; and since, or sometime after the eighteenth Day of April, 1746, a Cadet or Soldier in the French King's Service, or reputed in this Country to have been such.

That whereas, by the Law of God, and the Laws of this and all other well-governed Realms, Murder is a most heinous Crime, and severely punishable, especially when the same is committed deliberately, and by lying in wait, and from a Malice conceived against the Person so murdered, on Account of the faithful Discharge of the Duty of his Office.

Yet true it is, and of verity, that the said James Stewart and Allan Stewart, commonly called Allan Breck Stewart, complained upon, are guilty, Actors, or Art and Part of the said heinous Crime of Murder, aggravated as aforesaid, in so far as the Barons of our Court of Exchequer in Scotland having, by Commission dated the Twenty-third Day of February, 1748-9 Years, appointed the said Colin Campbell of Glenure to be Factor upon the Lands and Estate of Ardsbiel, forfeited to us by the Attainder of the said Charles Stewart, and lying within the Shire of Argyll, and in the Neighbourhood of Glenure, the House of the said Colin Campbell, and also appointed him Factor on that Part of the forfeited Estate of Lochiel, called Mammore, lying in the Shire of Inverness, and in the Neighbourhood of Fort-William, and upon the forfeited Estate of Allan Cameron of Callart, in the Shire of Inverness, adjoining to the said Lands of Mammore, and lying betwixt Fort-William and Appin; he, the said Colin, entered upon the said Office, and proceeding in the faithful Execution thereof, did, among other Things, at Whitsunday 1751, cause to be removed the said James Stewart from Glenduror, a Farm or Possession that had been held by him on the said Estate of Ardsbiel: And in the Month of April, in this present Year 1752, the said Colin Campbell had taken Measures for causing to be removed at the Term of Whitsunday, or fifteenth Day of May; now last bypast, certain other Persons who were Tenants or Possessors of Farms upon the said Lands or Estate of Ardsbiel; which Proceeding was by the said James Stewart, for Reasons known to himself, so much resented, that, without any Warrant or Authority from the Tenants, or Persons themselves, so intended to be removed, he, the said James Stewart, in the Month of April last, came in Person to Edinburgh, and caused to be presented, in Name of the said Tenants, to our Lords of Session, a Bill of Suspension of the said intended Removing, upon divers affected Reasons, that were either false or frivolous; and having procured an Order for answering the said Bill, and a Sift of Execution in the mean Time, he returned into the Country, and caused the Tenants intimate the Sift to the said Colin Campbell; who thereupon repaired to Edinburgh, where an Answer having been made to the said Bill, the same was refused by the Lord Ordinary, and the said Colin Campbell returned to his own House at Glenure, where he might be in the Way to attend the Duty of his Office, and to cause the said Removing to be put in Execution, and the new Tenants introduced to the Lands on the said fifteenth Day of May last.—And on Account of the said Colin Campbell's accepting of the said Office, and of the above-mentioned and other other his Proceedings in the faithful Discharge of the Duty thereof, the said James Stewart, and Allan Breck Stewart, conceived a most groundless and unjust Repentment, Malice, and Enmity against him, and at length entered into a wicked Conspiracy, barbarously to murder the said Colin Campbell, and to bereave him of his Life by the Hands of the said Allan Breck Stewart, who had but then lately come back from foreign Parts into that Country, and intended soon to go again beyond Sea; and, during his said last Abode in the Country, had chiefly frequented the House and Company of the said James Stewart.—And, in Prosecution of this wicked Conspiracy, upon Monday the eleventh Day of May last, on the Morning of which Day the said Colin Campbell left his own House of Glenure, to go to Fort-William, in the Country of Lochaber, about the Distance of sixteen computed Miles Northward, in order to transact some Business relating to his Factory on the Estate of Lochiel, and from whence he was certainly expected to return to the Lands of Ardshiel before Friday in the same Week, being the fifteenth Day of the said Month, when certain Tenants on the Lands of Ardshiel were to be removed, as above-mentioned, and others introduced in their Room; the said Allan Breck Stewart went from the House of John Stewart of Fasnacloch, which lies near to Glenure, to the House of the said James Stewart at Aucharn, lying in the same Neighbourhood, at the Distance of about four Miles Northward; and there the said James Stewart was informed, either by the said Allan Breck Stewart, or by his own Son Charles Stewart, or by Stewart, Daughter to the said John Stewart of Fasnacloch, that they heard, or were informed, that the said Colin Campbell of Glenure was to go to Lochaber that Day, and that he was to persist or proceed in the intended Removing of the Tenants of Ardshiel, (as the said James Stewart has, among other Things, acknowledged in his judicial Declaration taken before the Sheriff-substitute of Inverness;) and there, after receiving such Advice, in the Evening of the same Day, the said Allan Breck Stewart laid aside his own Cloaths, which he had brought with him, being a blue Coat, scarlet Vest, and black Breeches of Shag or Velvet, which were believed to have been brought by him from France, and which was a remarkable or distinguishing Dress in that Part of the Country; and then and there the said James Stewart furnished him, the said Allan Breck Stewart, with a Suit of his, the said James's, own Cloaths, being a dark coloured short Coat, with silver Buttons, Trowsers, and a blue Bonnet, in which the said Allan dressed himself that Evening.—And also next Morning of Tuesday the twelfth of May last, when he left the said James Stewart's House, where the said Allan left behind him his own French Cloaths aforesaid, together with his Hat, and then set out, in order to lie in wait for the said Colin Campbell on his Way, when he should return from Fort-William to the Lands of Ardshiel, which Lands are bordered on the North-east with the Lands belonging to Alexander Stewart of Ballachelish, whose House stands near to the Ferry of Ballachelish, upon a narrow Arm of the Sea called Lochlevin, that separates the Country of Appin on the South, from that of Mamore, Part of Lochiel's Estate, on the North Side of it, and by which Ferry of Ballachelish it was known or expected, that the said Colin Campbell would pass, in his Return from Fort-William; and, to the said Place of Ballachelish, the said Allan Breck Stewart directly went, from the House of the said James Stewart at Aucharn, on this Tuesday the twelfth of May last; and, from thence, the same Day, accompanied by James Stewart the younger of Fasnacloch, went to Glenco's House in Carnoch, about three Miles farther Eastward, where the Dowager Lady of the House is Sister to the said Charles Stewart late of Ardshiel, and to her the said James Stewart is natural Brother; and, from thence, he went that same Day to the House of Callart, which sometime belonged to Allan Cameron of Callart, attainted, and was still inhabited by Helen Stewart his Widow, and also Sister to the said Charles Stewart of Ardshiel, and to the said James Stewart, at which House he lodged all that Tuesday Night;—and, next Day, being Wednesday, the thirteenth of May last, the said Allan Breck Stewart came back, after calling again at Carnoch, to the House of Alexander Stewart of Ballachelish, near the Ferry aforesaid, where he remained the Night following;—and, upon Thursday the fourteenth of the said Month of May last, when it might be certainly expected, that the said Colin Campbell would return from Fort-William to the Lands of Ardshiel, and Country of Appin, by the said Ferry of Ballachelish, the said Allan Breck Stewart waited about the said House, till about Twelve of the Clock that Day; and then, under Pretence of going a fishing, walked up along a Burn or Rivulet near to the said House to the higher Grounds, from whence he had a Prospect of the high Road leading from Fort-William to the Lands of Ardshiel, and Access by a short Passage into the Wood of Lettermore, standing upon the Lands of Ardshiel, and adjoining to the said Road on the South Side, about a Mile distant from the House and Ferry of Ballachelish; and, having posted himself in the said Wood, near to the high Road, by which the said Colin Campbell was to pass, at a convenient Station for his wicked Purpose, where he had brought, or caused to be brought and placed, one or two Guns, or Muskets, loaded, with which he continued some Time concealed in the Wood; and, at length, about Five or Six o'Clock in the Afternoon of the said fourteenth Day of May last, the said Colin Campbell having passed the Ferry of Ballachelish, and been conveyed by the said Alexander Stewart of Ballachelish from the Ferry to the Entrance of the Wood of Lettermore, as he continued his Journey, passing on Horseback along, or through the said Wood, accompanied by Donald Kennedy, a Sheriff's Officer of Argyll-shire, who was on Foot, and had got some Space before him, the Road being bad for Horses, and by Mungo Campbell, Writer in Edinburgh, a young Man, who was then riding a little Way before him; and behind him, at some Distance, was John Mackenzie, Servant to the said Colin, and also on Horseback.

And then and there the said Allan Breck Stewart fired upon the said Colin Campbell from behind his Back, and shot him through the Body with two Balls, of which Wounds the said Colin Campbell died upon the Spot, in less than an Hour after.

Whereupon the said Allan Breck Stewart absconded, and, from that Time, appeared no longer openly in the Country; but, during the Night following, or about Three o'Clock in the Morning of Friday the fifteenth Day of May last, he came to Carnoch, the House of John Macdonald of Glenco above-mentioned, where he knocked at a Window when the Family were all in Bed; and the said John Macdonald of Glenco, and Isobel Stewart his Stepmother, got up, and went to the Door to the said Allan, who then told them, that the said Colin Campbell had been shot dead the Evening preceding, in the Wood of Lettermore, and that he, the said Allan, was leaving the Country, and going the Moor-road, and was come to take Leave of them, the said Lady, and Glenco her Son-in-law, which he immediately did, and went away, without entering the House, tho' he was invited by the Lady to come in, and take some Refreshment there.

That, in the mean Time, the said James Stewart, complained upon, remained at his own House at Aucharn, from which, on the Morning of Thursday, the fourteenth of May last, he sent a Letter, by John Maccol his Servant, to Charles Stewart, Writer in Auchintour, in which, inter alia, he writes, "As I have no Time to write to William, let him send down immediately 8 l. Sterling, to pay four Milk Cows I bought for his Use at Ard-skiel." And as he, the said James, hath judicially declared, (when examined at Fort-William, on the second of June last, in Presence of George Douglas, Sheriff-substitute of Inverness-shire,) he did not see the said Allan Breck Stewart after the Murder; but upon Notice being brought to the said James Stewart, complained on, at his own House at Aucharn, immediately after it happened, on the said Thursday Evening, by the said John Mackenzie, Servant to the said now deceased Colin Campbell, who, having left the said Mungo Campbell to attend the Corpse where it lay, rode away to get Help or Assistance for transporting the same to some fit House or Place; the said James Stewart, complained upon, appeared no ways surpris'd or concerned at the News of the Murder; and neither he, nor any of his Family, went to look after the Corpse, or to assist in the carrying it, as others of the Neighbourhood did. And, upon the Morning, or about Noon of the Day following the Murder, being Friday the fifteenth of May last, the said James Stewart, complained upon, sent Alexander Stewart, travelling Packman in Appin, to William Stewart, Merchant in Maryburgh, with Directions to get from the said William five Pounds Sterling, or five Guineas; and then told the said Packman, that his Friend Allan Breck Stewart was going to leave the Country; and that it was incumbent on him the said James, to supply him with Money; whereupon, the said Packman, that same Day, repaired to Fort-William, and delivered his said Message from the said James Stewart, to the said William Stewart, who immediately caused his Wife bring the Packman three Guineas,—with which the Packman returned the next Day, being Saturday, the sixteenth of May last, back to the said James Stewart's House at Aucharn; and, upon his Arrival there, found the said James Stewart Prisoner, in the Custody of a Party of Soldiers; and the said Packman being allowed to converse privately with the said James Stewart and his Wife; and having informed him, that he had only received three Guineas from William Stewart at Maryburgh, the said James Stewart took out of his Purse two Guineas, which he gave to his Wife, desiring her to give the same to the Packman; to go with these, and the three Guineas he already had, and also with Allan Breck Stewart's Cloaths, to him, the said

Allan: And, accordingly, on the Evening of that same Saturday, after the said James Stewart had been carried off Prisoner to Fort-William, his Wife brought the said Allan Breck Stewart's Cloaths above-mentioned, to the Packman, and delivered the same tied up in a Bundle to him, containing a Pair of red Breeches, besides the black Breeches above-mentioned, that were the Property of the said Allan himself; and, at the same time, delivered to the Packman the two Guineas above-mentioned, which she had received from her said Husband, for that Purpose, and directed the Packman to go with the Cloaths and the five Guineas, and deliver the same to the said Allan Breck Stewart, whom he would find or hear of at the House of John Maccol, Bouman, having the Charge of Milk Cows upon a Farm or Shealing belonging to Dougal Stewart of Appin, at a remote or solitary Place called Koalishnacooan; and the said Packman, after getting his Supper at Aucharn, set out on this Errand accordingly that same Night:—That, in the mean Time, in the Afternoon of the said Saturday, the sixteenth of May last, the said Allan Breck Stewart was seen by the said John Maccol, Appin's Bouman, in the Heugh of Corrynakegh, a Part of the Farm of Koalishnacooan; where, as the Bouman was cutting Fire-wood, he heard a Whistle, and, looking about, observed a Man, at a considerable Distance, beckon to him, whom, upon his going up to him, he found to be the said Allan Breck Stewart, who saluted him, by asking him how he did? And the Bouman returned the Salute, and told the said Allan, he was afraid it was no good Action occasioned his being in such a solitary Place; upon which the said Allan asked him, what he meant by that? And the Bouman answered, that he would, without doubt, be suspected of Glenure's Murder, who, he heard, was shot in the Wood of Lettermore; and that there were two Men seen go from the Place where the Action was committed; to which the said Allan replied, that, if he was rightly informed, there was but one Person concerned in the Murder; and, talking further of the Matter, said, he did not doubt the Family of Ard-skiel would be suspected of the Murder; and that he believed James Stewart and his Son would be taken up, in consequence of their Difference with Glenure about the Lands; but that their being taken up, would not be of any Consequence to them, as there would be no Proof, unless their own Tongues betrayed them: And, upon the Bouman's saying, that he wished he, the said Allan, would leave his Neighbourhood, Allan told him he could not, till he was supplied with Money and Victuals; and insisted with the Bouman, that he should go to the Strath of Duror, (where the said James Stewart's House of Aucharn lies) for Money, and to the Lady Glenco for a Peck of Meal; both which the Bouman appearing to decline, the said Allan added, that he, the Bouman, must go to Fort-William with a Letter, (which the said Allan then wrote with a Wood-pigeon's Quill he had gathered among the Trees,) to William Stewart, Merchant in Maryburgh, who, he said, would give him Money upon Receipt of the Letter; and the Bouman having also refused to comply with this Proposition, giving for his Excuse, that he heard that all that went to Fort-William at that Time were taken into Custody, the said Allan further told him, that unless he should be supplied, from some other Quarter, before next Day, that he, the Bouman, must go to Fort-William, notwithstanding notwithstanding these Difficulties, and that he, Allan, was surprised there was no Money sent him, though it was promised to be sent him to that Place.—That very early in the Morning of Sunday, the seventeenth of May last, the said John Maccol, Bouman, went out of his House, to look after some Cattle that he apprehended were amongst his Corns, and then observed, coming towards him from the Westward, a Man whom, at a Distance, he took to be Allan Breck Stewart, but, upon his nearer Approach, found him to be the said Alexander Stewart, Packman, who, upon his coming up to him, after the ordinary Salutations, asked the Bouman if he had seen Allan Breck Stewart? which the Bouman having denied, the said Packman told him, that he had Money and Cloaths for the said Allan, which he (Allan) had trusted, (or agreed with some other Person) to receive at that Place from any one who should be sent after him with it; and then the Bouman owned he had seen him, the said Allan, and that he was then in the Heugh of Corrynakiagh, and told the Packman, that if he went to an Eminence, which he pointed out to him, and whistled, that the said Allan Breck would probably appear to him; but this the Packman declined, complaining that he was so fatigued with travelling the whole Night, that he would not go, having been lately upon his own Business at Fort-William, and having been obliged to go there again on the said James Stewart's Errand above-mentioned; and therefore desired the said Bouman to deliver the five Guineas, which he then gave him, to the said Allan Breck Stewart, together with a Bundle of Cloaths, which he, the Packman, had left at the Root of a Fir-tree then in their View, which he pointed out to the said Bouman, who promised to deliver both to the said Allan as desired; whereupon the Packman, being much fatigued, went to Sleep in the Bouman's House;—and in the Evening of the same Sunday, the seventeenth of May last, after the said John Maccol, Bouman to Appin, was gone to Bed, he was awaked by the said Allan Breck Stewart his knocking at the Window of his, the said Bouman's, House; whereby the Board or Shutter of his said Window fell in; whereupon the said Bouman got up from his Bed, and went out, when he found the said Allan Breck Stewart retired at some Distance from his House, who, first of all, told him he stood in great need of a Drink; upon which the Bouman went into his House, and returned with a Noggan or Dish full of Milk and Water that had been boiled, which Noggan the Bouman carried in his Hand, in Company with the said Allan, till they came together to the Brink of a Burn or Rivulet not far from the Bouman's House; and, at this Meeting, the said Allan Breck asked the Bouman, whether there had any body come to that Place with a Message for him? which the Bouman answered in the Affirmative, and then gave the said Allan the five Guineas he had received from Alexander Stewart, the Packman; upon which the said Allan Breck Stewart said, he hoped that would do without his sending to William Stewart at Fort-William, and inquired if any Thing else had been brought for him? whereupon the Bouman delivered to him the Bundle of Cloaths above-mentioned, that had been left by Alexander Stewart, the Packman, for that Purpose, at the Fir-tree; and then the said Allan requested and intreated the Bouman to meet him at that Place next Morning early, that he might deliver to him the dark coloured Coat mounted with Silver Buttons, and a Pair of Trowsers, which the said Allan then wore and had upon him, and which he told the Bouman were the Property of the said James Stewart in Aucharn, to the End that the Bouman might restore and deliver these Cloaths to the said James, or to Margaret Stewart his Wife; and the said Bouman promised to meet the said Allan next Morning, as he desired;—and accordingly the Bouman repaired, next Morning before Sun-rise, to the Place appointed, at the Side of the Rivulet, for their Meeting, where he did not find or see the said Allan himself, but found there the black or dark coloured Coat and Trowsers before described, together with his own Noggan or Dish, in which he had brought the Milk and Water to the said Allan; and, in one of the Pockets of the said short Coat, the said Bouman found a small Powder-horn, of a flat Make, with some Carving upon the Horn, and red Wax on the Inside thereof, for mending a Slit or Hole:—That from this Place the said Allan Breck Stewart withdrew from that Country a-cross the Moors, as he proposed, by going a-cross Mountains and Defarts, where there was no Dwelling-house for the Space of about eighteen computed Miles Eastward, to the Country called Rannoch, in the North-west Corner of Pert-shire, where the Mother of the said Allan Breck Stewart, and other Friends or Relations of his, live; amongst whom he kept himself concealed for a few Days, and was there seen with the aforefaid French Dress, and a Pair of red Breeches; after which he withdrew from that Country, and has not been since seen or heard of, in this Kingdom, that the Complainers have been able to learn.—And in a Letter, wrote by the said James Stewart, since he was taken into Custody on Account of the said Murder, bearing Date at Fort-William the nineteenth Day of May last, and addressed to Mr. John Macfarlane, Writer to the Signet; wherein the said James professes great Detestation of the Murder, and great Desire that the said Allan Breck Stewart might be apprehended, and, for that Purpose, describes the Person and Dress of the said Allan; he, inter alia, says, that he, the said Allan, wore a Pair of red Breeches.

From all which, and other Facts and Circumstances, that will be proved against the said Persons complained upon, and particularly the Threatenings of Death and Destruction, which the said James Stewart, and the said Allan Breck Stewart, above complained upon, have been heard to utter against the said Colin Campbell of Glenure, now bereaved of his Life, by the horrid Murder and Assassination aforefaid, it will be made evident and proved, that the said James Stewart, and Allan Breck Stewart, complained upon, and each of them, are guilty, Actors, or Art and Part of the said horrid Murder.

And, as a Part of this Proof, there will be produced certain Documents in Writing, and other Particulars enumerated and contained in an Inventory or List thereof, signed by the Complainers or either of them, Copies of which List or Inventory will be delivered to, or served upon the Persons complained upon, at the Time of executing this Libel; and the said written Documents and other Particulars themselves will, before Trial, be lodged in the Hands of the Clerk to the Circuit Court of Justiciary, before which the Persons complained upon are to be tried, that they may see the same.

At least, at the Time and Place aforesaid, the said Colin Campbell of Glenure was barbarously murdered, and the said James Stewart and Allan Breck Stewart, above complained upon, are guilty, Actors, or Art and Part of the said Murder.

All which, or Part thereof, being found proven by the Verdict of an Assize, before our Lords Justice-General, Justice-Clerk, and Commissioners of Justiciary, in a Circuit Court of Justiciary, to be holden by them, or any one or more of their Number, within the Burgh of Inverary, upon the twenty-first Day of September, next to come, N. S. the said James Stewart and Allan Breck Stewart, complained upon, both, or one or other of them, who shall be so convicted, ought to be punished with the Pains of Law, to the Terror of others to commit the like execrable Crime in Time coming. Our Will is, &c.

Ex deliberatione dominorum commissioneriorum justiciariorum.

James Stewart. "My Lords, I am not guilty of the Crime of which I am accused, and I refer to my Lawyers to make my Defence."

VOL. X.

Mr. WALTER STEWART for the Pannel.

My Lord Justice-General,

I Appear as Council for this Prisoner James Stewart, who now stands at your Lordship's Bar, charged as being accessary to one of the foulest and most barbarous Murders that has occurred in any Country; the Murder not only of an innocent Gentleman, but, as will be proved, the Pannel's own intimate Friend; and that without the smallest Provocation, save what greatly enhances his Guilt, viz. Glenure's being in the faithful Discharge of his Duty in an Office entrusted to him by the Public. He is charged with causing Allan Breck Stewart lie in wait for this unhappy Gentleman, and take him off by a base and inhuman Assassination. I am sensible, my Lord, that the Pannel, accused of a Murder attended with so many aggravating Circumstances; must appear before your Lordship, his Jury, and the World, in a very unfavourable View. A certain Indignation naturally arises in every humane Breast against one suspected of so horrid a Crime; and this must not be a little increased by the malicious Stories and Insinuations industriously spread, which the Pannel, from his close Confinement, has had no Opportunity of contradicting. But now, as he has put himself for his Trial upon God and his Country, by pleading not guilty, until that Country finds him guilty, the Presumption is for Innocence. This he has a Title to demand.—All I shall ask, however, is, that as I know his Judges, so I hope his Jury, and all who now hear me, will lay aside any Prejudice against him, and will form no Opinion, until the Circumstances of the Libel, the Defences which I am now to offer against it, and the Proof of both, be attentively considered. For myself, my Lord, I must say (and I believe I may say the same for all the Gentlemen on the same Side with me), did I, after the strictest Inquiry, suspect the Pannel to be accessary to this Murder, it would be the last Action in my Life to stand up in his Defence: But, my Lord, we have gone thro' this Libel with the greatest Attention, and have taken a View of the several Facts, which, after a Precognition of above a thousand Witnesses, are set forth to support the Charge against the Pannel; we have heard from the Pannel's own Mouth his Defences against this Charge, which he avers he can prove; we have heard, from the Unprejudiced, the general Character he bears in the World, and, from the whole, cannot help concluding, that he is not guilty. We look upon ourselves as standing up for Innocence, when defending this Pannel. It is therefore our Duty to defend him with that Warmth which Innocence claims as its Due.

In the Entry of this Trial, my Lord, I cannot help complaining of most intolerable Hardships; which this Pannel has undergone since May last, when he was first incarcerated. My Lord Advocate's Humanity, his Tenderness to Pannels, I can, from my own little Experience in Trials, subscribe to. The unjustifiable Steps I am now to complain of, I must therefore lay to the Charge of the private Prosecutors. I dare say my Lord Advocate as little knew of them, as he will now, when he hears, approve of them. The Pannel, since the Month of May last, has been kept in the closest Confinement. For the first six Weeks, no Mortal was allowed Access to him: After that indeed; for some short Time, Admittance was given to his Wife and one or two more; but any who could be thought proper Persons to prepare Defences for his Trial, were carefully denied Access to him: And again, for a considerable Time before his Trial, he was close confined, and all Admittance refused. When his Council came to this Place, and wanted to see him, we were told that none were to be admitted without a Warrant from the Duke of Argyll; and a Petition was actually drawn, to be presented to your Grace, when a Message came allowing us Access. His Sons and his Servants too have suffered the same close Imprisonment. And all this not only contrary to Humanity, but directly in the Face of the Act of Parliament 1701, which discharges close Imprisonment after eight Days, under the severest Penalties. By the Precaution of this private Prosecutor too, the Bar has been in a Manner shut up against this Pannel; all the old experienced Council, tho' not brought to maintain the Charge against him, have been retained from giving him their Assistance; otherways, in all Probability, I had not now been employed to open his Defence. The Pannel's House and his Repositories have been three several Times searched, and Papers carried off by near Relations of the Prosecutors, attended by a military Force, and without any Warrant. His Wife and his Sons, who by the Laws of God and Man cannot be called as Witnesses against him, have been examined upon Oath; some of them five different Times, to catch at any Discordance, had there been any, in their Declarations; and these very Declarations are now proposed to be brought in Proof against the Pannel, while the Declarants themselves are alive, and ought, by the fundamental Laws of this Kingdom, to be examined in Presence of the Pannel and Jury. These are Hardships, my Lord, which, Thanks be to God, meet with no Encouragement in this now a free Country. The Time was indeed, when the feeble Law was unable to protect the Innocent, when the Rules of Justice were broke to pieces by the ruffian Hands of Power; then our unhappy Country groaned under the intolerable Yoke of arbitrary Power; then was scarce the Form of a Trial; the Best, the Greatest of our Country, even an Argyll, fell a Sacrifice to the Will of Tyranny. But now, my Lord, the Days which our Fathers wished to see, and did not see, we have the Happiness to enjoy. A fair Trial, which the Noblest could not obtain, the Meanest are now intitled to, under the Protection of Laws, guarded by a Government ever watchful for the Good of its Subjects, under which the Keeness of private Prosecutors will meet with no Countenance or Encouragement. The Pannel enjoying the Privileges of every free-born Briton, is now to stand Trial before the Judges and Jury of his Country; and as his Judges will shew the greatest Impartiality, he expects the same from the Gentlemen of the Jury. They will judge of the Proof brought before them, having in their Eye the Example of Almighty God, by whose holy Name they have sworn to do justly, before whose awful Tribunal there is no Judgment formed from Names or personal Prejudices, but every Man is judged according to his Works. They will consider, that as they are to answer to God, so they have to answer to the World, who will make a narrow and impartial Scrutiny into their Verdict. At the same

Time I cannot help saying, that, amid all the Hardships this Pannel has suffered, I hope it is one Piece of good Fortune; that he is to be tried by Gentlemen of the same County with himself; who, from their more particular Knowledge of the Pannel and his Character in the World, should be best Judges what Proof is necessary to fix upon him so black a Crime.

In order that your Lordships may more fully understand the Defences now to be offered for the Pannel, I will beg leave to lay before the Court an Account of the Facts, which have given rise to this Prosecution, as they really happened; and as we have got them from the Pannel's own Mouth, at a Time when it was little his Interest to hide the Truth from us. The Pannel, my Lord, was in Possession of a Farm in the Estate of Ardshiel called Glenduror, and was Tacksman of another called Lettermore, which he had sublet for about 70*l.* Scots a Year, when Glenure was appointed Factor on the Estate of Ardshiel in February 1749. That Gentleman continued the Friendship which he had before entertained for the Pannel in a very particular Manner. He gave him the Management of the whole Estate of Ardshiel, Power to put in and remove Tenants, and to raise the Rents as he should think proper, and took yearly from the Pannel his Bill for the Rent of the Estate, at which it had been surveyed by the Barons of Exchequer, leaving him to apply the Overplus to the Use of Ardshiel's Children. This Agreement will be instructed by Discharges and Letters under Glenure's own Hand. Sometime before Whitsunday 1751, Glenure applied to the Pannel to yield the Farm of Glenduror, which he then possessed, to Mr. Campbell of Bolaveolan, a particular Friend of his, who offered an additional Rent. This the Pannel immediately complied with, without waiting a Warning, and took the Farm of Aucharn, where he now lives, from Mr. Campbell of Airds, but still continued to uplift the Rents of Ardshiel, in Terms of his Agreement with Glenure. Sometime in April last, Glenure executed a Warning against the Subtenant in Lettermore to remove from that Farm at Whitsunday 1752; and likewise against several other Tenants of the Lands of Ardshiel. The Pannel does acknowledge, that he did expostulate with Glenure upon this, telling him, he thought it hard to turn them out, since they offered to give more additional Rent than any others would, and likewise to take the Oaths to the Government. But Glenure still persisted in his Resolution; upon which, the Pannel being occasionally in Edinburgh, at the Desire of the Tenants, made out a short Memorial of the Fact, and presented it to one of the Barons of Exchequer, who disapproved greatly of Glenure's Procedure; but could do nothing towards putting a Stop to the Removing, as a Quorum of the Barons was not to be had until the next Exchequer Term. But he kept the Memorial, promising to represent the Case to the whole Barons; and added, that he had no Doubt but they would give an Order to the Factor to continue the Tenants in their Possessions. The Pannel upon this advised with Council, how the Tenants might be kept in Possession until the Exchequer Term; and, by their Advice, applied for a Suspension of the Removing to the Court of Session: And a Bill of Suspension being accordingly presented, a Sift was obtained, and the Bill ordered to be answered; which Sift was intimated to Glenure upon the Pannel's returning into the Country; and he, not knowing the Forms, having carried with him the principal Bill of Suspension, and Glenure immediately giving in Answers, the same were advised without the Bill, and it was refused. This Scheme of a Suspension having failed, and Glenure persisting in his Resolution of ejecting the Tenants upon the Term-day at which they were warned to remove, the Pannel, upon a second Application from the Tenants, wrote to Alexander Stewart, Notary Public, to come, upon the 15th of May, that they might protest, and take an Instrument against Glenure, if he proceeded to Ejection; and when Alexander Stewart excused himself, the Pannel sent a Letter, by Express, on the 14th of May, to Charles Stewart, Notary in Auchintour, to come on the same Errand, and, in a Postscript, bid him tell William Stewart to send down 8 l. Sterling, to pay four Milk Cows which he had bought for his Use at Ardshiel, and which the Tenants had refused to deliver until they got the Price, tho' William Stewart had wrote for them. This Postscript is laid hold of by the Prosecutors, as a Circumstance to fix this Murder upon the Pannel. But this, my Lord, I am not surpris'd at; other Letters of his share the same Fate, tho', if possible, less criminal than this one: By what Conjunction, or what mighty Magic they can be made so, I own I cannot conjecture.

The Pannel, in further Prosecution of this Plan of taking a Protest, on Thursday the 14th, had engaged James Stewart younger of Fasnaclloch, and John Stewart younger of Ballachelish, to be present on the 15th, and witness his Protest. But, on the Thursday Evening, the Pannel received the melancholy Accounts of Glenure's being murdered in the Wood of Lettermore. These are the Facts which gave rise to that inveterate Malice, which the Libel says induced the Pannel to conspire the Death of Glenure. The Words are: "And, on Account of the said Colin Campbell's accepting the said Office, and of the above-mentioned and other his Proceedings in the faithful Discharge of the Duty thereof, the said James conceived Resentment, &c." How unjust this Conclusion is, I do humbly submit to your Lordships. After Glenure was made Factor, your Lordship sees, they continued in the greatest Friendship: You see the Pannel managing the Estate of Ardshiel under Glenure, removing from his Possession of Glenduror, at Glenure's Desire, without putting him to the Trouble of a Warning, and going and residing under Mr. Campbell of Airds. He had no Possession in Ardshiel Estate, as Lettermore was sublet; his Management of the Estate was not taken from him, and he was still allowed to remit Part of the Rents to Ardshiel's Family. He has no Connexion by Blood, or otherways, with the Tenants warned to remove; there is not so much as one of them of his Name. The Estate was annexed for ever to the Crown, and was in a few Months to fall into the Hands of Commissioners, appointed by his Majesty, who would probably restore the Tenants, as they offered more Rent than those put in by Glenure. Can any Mortal believe, that the Pannel, because Glenure was to execute a Removing against these Tenants, should enter into so execrable a Design, as to assassinate that Gentleman, by the Hands of Allan Breck, on the 14th, when we see him pursuing quite another Scheme, sending for a Notary and Witnesses to take a Protest against him on the 15th? In all Cases of Murder, I do humbly apprehend, it is of Necessity, that there should be Malice aforethought, which is the Essence of, and constitutes the Crime; and all Passions, particularly one of so extraordinary a Nature as this Malice, must have had some Cause. I do submit to your Lordships, if there is the smallest Appearance of that Malice, or any Thing like a Cause assigned for it. But, even taking the Story as it stands in the Libel, it is a Tale that can gain Credit with no Mortal. What earthly Purpose could the Pannel serve by such a desperate Piece of Villainy? Would the Murder of Glenure prevent the Removal of the Tenants? Would not the Murder of Glenure deprive him of the Liberty which that Gentleman had given him to uplift the Rents? Would it not put it out of his Power to help his Brother Ardshiel's Family? The Pannel is allowed to be a judicious Man, prudent in his Actions beyond most Men of his Rank in the World. Can it be believed he would do a Thing so directly contrary to his Interest? Suppose him capable of the Crime, we must suppose him the greatest Fool, as well as the greatest Monster that ever disgraced Humanity. But, is this his Character? No, my Lord, as he is a sensible Man, so all who know him will say, he is a humane, peaceable, good-natured Man, looked upon as a Father where he lives; Strangers were happy to get their Children under his Care, as in Fact he is Tutor and Curator at this very Time to several Orphans, who have not the smallest Relation to him.

Here, my Lord, I will for a little leave the Pannel, and give an Account of Allan Breck Stewart, who is charged as the Committer of this Murder, having entered into a wicked Conspiracy with the Pannel for that Purpose. Whether he was the actual Murderer or not, the Pannel knows not; neither is it my Business to say. I shall only point out what Connexions was betwixt the Pannel and Allan Breck, leaving it to your Lordship, and the Jury, to judge, if the Circumstances of these Connexions, as I shall now open them, or even as they are laid in the Libel, are sufficient to fix upon the Pannel his being a Conspirator in this execrable Plot. At the same Time there is no Question but the Prosecutors must fix the actual Murder upon Allan Breck, otherwise the Charge against the Pannel entirely flies off.

This Allan Breck Stewart, my Lord, was the Son of one Donald Stewart, a particular Friend, and distant Relation of the Pannel's. He died while his Children were Infants, and, upon his Death-bed, committed them to the Care of his Friend, naming him Tutor and Curator to them. The Pannel faithfully executed this Trust, took Care of the Childrens Education, and managed their Effects to the best Advantage. Allan turning extravagant, when he grew up to Man's Estate, and having spent what was left him by his Father, enlisted in his Majesty's Service, without clearing Accounts with the Pannel, who used to supply him with Money, and pay little Debts for him, even after he became a Soldier, though he knew he had already given him more than his Patrimony. This the Pannel thought he owed to the Memory of his deceased Friend. Breck continued in his Majesty's Service until the Battle of Preston, where being taken Prisoner by the Rebels, he enlisted with them, continued with them during the Rebellion, and afterwards made his Escape into France, and enlisted in the French Service, where he still continues. Since he first went

went over, he has been in use, now and then, of coming back to Scotland, and staying a few Months with his Relations; he commonly landed first at Edinburgh, and lodged in the House of one Hugh Stewart. There he seldom went out but in the Night; and more than once narrowly escaped being apprehended as a Defenter. When he came up to Rannoch or Appin among his Relations; he used to stroll about without any settled Residence; and where-ever he came, he generally threw off his French Cloaths, as they were remarkable and improper for that hilly Country, and borrowed from any Acquaintance, where-ever he happened to be at the Time. Among others, he used to visit at the Pannel's House; though he came seldomer there than to other Places in the Neighbourhood, as the Pannel used to take a good deal of Freedom in blaming his Conduct and Extravagance. About the Beginning of March last; he came over from France, was at the Houses of Balachallan and Annat, and went from thence to Glenbucky's House, where he continued until the End of March, and while there, he threw aside his French Cloaths; and wore Cloaths belonging to Glenbucky, or his Brother. In the Beginning of April, he came to the Pannel's House, immediately before the Pannel went to Edinburgh, and staying a Day or two, went off with a dark coloured short Coat with clear Buttons, and other Parts of the Country Dress, which he had picked up about the Pannel's House, and continued strolling about the Country in that Dress, until the latter End of April, when he returned to the Pannel's House, and staid a single Night. On the 11th of May, about One o'Clock Afternoon, he returned, and found the Pannel upon a Field, where his Servants were covering Potatoes. They continued there about a Quarter of an Hour in the hearing of the Servants, when an Express came from Mr. Campbell of Airds to the Pannel, desiring him to come to him at Keil upon Business; upon which the Pannel walked with Breck from the Field to the House, at about fifty Yards Distance, and leaving him there, without going in, went directly to Keil; continued there until betwixt Ten and Eleven at Night, when returning home, he found there several Strangers beside Allan Breck. They supped all together, and continued in one Room until they went to Bed. Breck lay in the Barn with the Pannel's Sons, and one Archibald Cameron. The Pannel had no private Conferences with him; they were not one Moment by themselves, nor ever in Company, but before the Family and the Strangers. Early in the Morning of Tuesday the 12th, before Breck was out of Bed, and without seeing or speaking with him, the Pannel went to Appin's House, and Breck was gone before he returned, and the Pannel has never seen him since. What Cloaths he carried off, he does not know; but he has authorised me to say, that what is laid in the Indictment may be true, that he went off in the short Coat which he used before. That he went to Ballachelish, from that to Glenco's House, and then to Callart, and, on Wednesday, came back to Ballachelish, where he staid all Night. On the Thursday, in the Forenoon, he assisted Ballachelish's Servants in carrying out Dung, and, after Dinner, he got a Rod, and went a fishing, continued some Time in Sight of Ballachelish and his Servants, who were carrying out the Dung; but going a little up the Water, a rising Ground intercepted their View, and they saw no more of him.

This, my Lord, is a true Account of the Connexion betwixt the Pannel and Allan Breck preceding the Murder, as it will come out upon Proof. I will draw this Conclusion, that this horrid Conspiracy must have been laid and concerted between them in a few Seconds, while the Pannel was walking from his Potatoe Ground to his House at fifty Yards Distance; for at no other Time had they any private Conference. The changing the Cloaths, your Lordship sees, was altogether unknown to the Pannel, and what Breck was in use to do at the Pannel's House, and over the whole Country. But taking the Story as it stands in the Libel, who can possibly believe that the Pannel would have given Breck his own Cloaths to disguise himself for committing this Murder; or that Breck would have put on this Disguise four Days before the Murder happened? The Libel says, Glenure was certainly expected on the Thursday to return from Fort-William to Ardshiel. Would Breck then have put on his Disguise on the Monday, and gone about publicly in it? No surely, my Lord; Children would have conducted a Plot better than this; and yet, upon this Circumstance of changing Cloaths, as incredible as it is falsely represented, stands one half of the Prosecutor's Hopes (if the Libel contains them all) of fixing this Crime upon the Prisoner.

I proceed to lay before your Lordship the Sequel to Glenure's Murder. Betwixt Six and Seven on Thursday Evening, Mackenzie, Glenure's Servant, called at the Pannel's House, and informed him, that his Master was shot dead in the Wood of Lettermore. The Libel says, that the Pannel appeared nowise surpris'd or concerned at the News; and that neither he, or any of his Servants, went to look after the Corpse. Mackenzie will not, dare not, say so. The Pannel shewed that Surprize, that deep Concern, which every innocent Man must feel at so unexpected and melancholy an Accident. He directed Mackenzie the nearest Road to Glenduror, to call Mr. Campbell of Bolaveolan, Glenure's Friend, and, in the mean Time, sent such of his Family as could be spared, and several of his Neighbours, to take Care of the Corpse. On Friday Morning, the Day after the Murder, the Pannel received a Message from Allan Breck, by Donald Stewart, Nephew to Ballachelish, who had seen him in the Fields about Nine o'Clock the Evening before, when Breck told him, that as Glenure was killed, there would be a strict Search for his Murderer; and he being a Defenter, it was proper for him to keep out of the Way; he was therefore resolved to leave the Country immediately; that he would hide himself for a Day or two in the Desert of Koalisnacoan; and as he had no Money, he begged of Donald Stewart to go to the Pannel, and inform him of this, and intreat him to send a little Money to him at Koalisnacoan. Donald Stewart then said to him, that he hoped he had no Hand in Glenure's Murder himself: Upon which he took God to Witness he had none, but his being a Defenter to the Highland Army, was the only Cause of his absconding, as he was sure he would be hanged, without Mercy, if he was seized. Upon receiving this Message, the Pannel sent Alexander Stewart, Packman, to Fort-William, to one William Stewart, a Merchant there, to get five Guineas from him, him, telling him, at the same time, that it was for the Use of Allan Breck Stewart, who was going off the Country, as he was a Defenter, to shun the Search which would be made for the Murderer of Glenure. Upon the Packman's Return, he found the Pannel in the Custody of a Party of Soldiers; and as he had got but three Guineas from William Stewart at Fort-William, the Pannel gave him other two, and bid him go to Koalisnacoan, where he would find Allan Breck, and give him the five Guineas. Upon which the Packman went home with the Pannel's Wife, who, he is since informed, gave him Breck's French Cloaths, which he had left at the Pannel's House the Monday before, but which the Pannel knew nothing of. As to the long Episode in the Indictment, narrating the Conversations betwixt Allan Breck and the Bouman, as the Pannel knows nothing of them, they shall pass unnoticed by me. Only I beg leave to make this single Observation to the Gentlemen of the Jury, that when this Part of the Libel comes under their Consideration, they will observe, that it can be proven by the Oath of but one Witness, and that Witness swearing only to what he heard Allan Breck say; consequently the mistaking one Word must be of the most fatal Consequence, for this Reason, hearsay Evidence is altogether rejected in Law. They will likewise consider, that what Allan Breck says, is said by one who wanted to clear himself to the Bouman of the Murder of Glenure, which the Bouman charged him with; for which Reason he might be tempted to throw out Insinuations against others. Let the Jury keep these Hints in their Eye, and then let them give what Weight to this Part of the Libel their Consciencés can allow them. The Pannel was taken into Custody on the 16th; on the 19th it was rumoured in Fort-William, where he was incarcerated, that Allan Breck was the Murderer of Glenure. No sooner does the Pannel hear this; but he writes a Letter to Mr. Macfarlane, Writer to the Signet, expressing the greatest Abhorrence and Detestation at the Murder; tells him that Allan Breck was suspected to be the Committer of it, as he was that Day seen near the Place where Glenure was killed, and immediately disappeared. He expresses his Desire of having him brought to Justice, gives a particular Description of his Looks and Dress; and further says, he was probably gone South, to take the first Opportunity of going abroad; and that he commonly lodged in the House of Hugh Stewart at the Back of the Fountain-well, when he came to Edinburgh. This Letter too is brought as a Point of Ditty against the Pannel. What strange and unaccountable Torturing of the most upright Actions must there be, to make this criminal? This Pupil, this Relation, this Friend's Son of his, whom he had supplied with a little Money, to keep him out of the Hands of the military Law as a Defenter, no sooner does he hear him named as being guilty of this horrid Murder, but he does all in his Power to have him brought to Justice: Strange it is indeed to make this a Crime! What should the Pannel have done? Should he have concealed the suspected Murderer? No, my Lord, he acted a more honourable Part, such a Part as this Court will approve of, such a Part as every Member of it would have acted himself.

As I have taken up too much of your Lordship's Time already, I shall but just mention such Defences as occur in Point of Law, leaving them to be insisted on by the Gentlemen who are to support me.

And, in the first Place, however willing the Pannel may be to stand the Issue of his Trial; it is our Business, as Council for him, to lay hold of every Handle against it. I therefore submit to the Court, whether this Pannel, who is only charged as Accessary, can be tried before the Principal Allan Breck be first discussed. I do most humbly contend, he cannot; 1mo, because, if the contrary Practice were allowed, Probation might be led against the Principal, tho' absent, contrary to the fundamental Law of this Nation; and it must first be proven he, the Principal, committed the Crime, primo debet constare de corpore delicti, before the Accessary can be convicted. 2do, If the Accessary must defend the absent Principal, it may be of the most fatal Consequence to both, tho' innocent. The Principal's greatest Enemies may be led as Witnesses, and such Defences as would have been sufficient to exculpate him entirely, may be omitted. 3tio, These Principles are followed by the Opinions of all Lawyers who write upon the criminal Law, and likewise by the Practice of neighbouring Nations, particularly that of England; where the Principal must be attainted after Verdict or Confession, before any Judgment can be given against the Accessary. But, 4to, what I now plead, I humbly apprehend to be the Law of Scotland; for so it is expressly said, Reg. Maj. ch. 26. b. 4. Quon. Attach. ch. 83. and 29 stat. David. II. And, agreeable to these, is the Opinion of our great criminal Lawyer Sir George Mackenzie, laid down in the strongest Terms in his Title Art. Part. Paragraph 9th. 2do, I must object for the Pannel to the Relevancy of this Libel, that the Facts and Circumstances mentioned in it, tho' they should be fully proven, are not sufficient to infer his being accessary to this Murder. Every Libel is a Syllogism: The major Proposition contains the Crime, and the Laws against that Crime; the minor contains the Facts charged against the Pannel; and the Conclusion is, that, from these Facts, he is guilty of the Crime; and deserves to suffer the Pains of Law. Now, if the Facts charged do not amount to the Crime, the Conclusion must be false, and the Libel irrelevant. This, I humbly apprehend, is the present Case. From the above Narration of the Facts, and what Observations I have already made upon them, I hope your Lordships will be of Opinion, that the Circumstances charged in the Libel are so extremely vague and trivial, that they are not sufficient to bring the Pannel under so much as a Suspicion of being guilty of this horrid Crime laid to his Charge.

If your Lordships shall think proper to repel these Defences, and to remit the Pannel on this Indictment to the Knowledge of an Assize, we humbly hope you will allow us a Proof of all Facts and Circumstances that can tend to his Exculpation; particularly of his Friendship with Glenure; of Allan Breck's being a Defenter, and being in use to put off his French Cloaths, and put on Cloaths belonging to the Family where he happened to be at the Time; of the Pannel's having no private Conference with him preceding the Murder; of the Message which the Pannel got from him after the Murder, bidding him send him a little Money to Koalisnacoan, where he was going; and, in general, of all other Defences that may occur as necessary to the Pannel in the Course of his Trial. I will conclude, my Lords, with a single Word to the Gentlemen of the Jury, that the more flagrant, the more atrocious any Crime is, the more clearly and distinctly they will require it to be made out to them: That as the Crime is proposed to be fixed upon the Pannel by presumptive Evidence alone, they will be cautious in distinguishing betwixt such Presumptions as are conclusive, and such as are not so; between such Presumptions as can arise from no other Cause but the Pannel's being in a Conspiracy to murder Glenure, and such as are more naturally construed to have arisen from other Causes. If they find such Presumptions, as that they can, before Almighty God, bring in a Verdict guilty, it is their Duty to do so, and the Law will have its Vengeance. But let them have this always in their Eye, that better twenty guilty escape, than that one innocent Man should suffer Death by their Verdict.

Mr. ROBERT MACINTOSH for the Pannel.

My Lord Justice-General, and Lords Commissioners of Justice;

I Appear also, to contribute my small Mite towards the Defence of this Pannel, who has the Misfortune to be accused of a Crime, which every body must admit to be of the deepest Dye; and, as laid in the Indictment, attended with the most aggravating Circumstances; and I do it, my Lords, not out of an Opinion of my being in any Degree equal to the Task, a Share of which I have undertaken; but rather that a poor Man, standing Trial for his Life, may not be absolutely destitute of Assistance, when uncommon Endeavours have been used to deprive him of abler Help.

My Lords, I dare say, every one who speaks in this Cause, on whatever Side, will begin with expressing a Detestation of the Crime now charged against the Pannel; if not in accusing the Pannel, yet in this we shall all agree, to condemn the miserable Person, whose Conscience accuses himself of it; whether he now stands at the Bar, or whether he flies from the avenging Sword of Justice. I must acknowledge, that if the Pannel has been guilty of, or accessory to this Murder, beyond all Controversy it constitutes him one of the greatest Criminals that this or any other Country can afford. Murder is a heinous Crime, whether it is the Fate of the Eminent or the Obscure. But this Murder seems to be a Complication of all Guilt; and as my Duty calls me to plead in Defence of one labouring under such an Accusation, I cannot do it but with the utmost Concern. The very Mention of such Barbarity and Iniquity, as was just now rehearsed, could not fail to move every humane Breast; but the Reading of an Indictment, such as we have a little while ago heard, is enough to inspire Horror even in the Innocent. It is still harder upon me, when I consider the unhappy Sufferer in that dreadful Scene, which is now to be the Subject of Trial; one, against whose Life I should be the last Man to excuse the smallest Attempt; one whom I knew, whom I regarded, whom I had the Honour to be in Friendship with: His Death, had it been common, would have affected me; but his Murder afflicts me. I sincerely regret it, for his own sake, for the sake of his Friends, for the sake of the poor disconsolate Lady, who now weeps over her own Widowity, and the orphan State of her infant Children; I regret it for the sake of the whole Land, that stands polluted by the cruel Shedding of innocent Blood; and in a particular Manner do I regret it for the sake of the Highlands of Scotland, for which I own, from private Connexions, I cannot help having a Regard, and which I am afraid have, by this unlucky Accident, suffered a deep political Wound, that it may take Time to rub off the Effects of; as being able to furnish so eminent an Instance of Barbarism, in spite of the noble Attempt of the Legislature, and of all in the Administration, to polish and civilize them, to reduce them to the righteous Plan of the Government of this Country, and to a constitutional Equality with the rest of the united Kingdom.

My Lords, for these Reasons do I most heartily join in deploring this fatal Catastrophe. At the same Time, my Lords, the Defence I am now to plead, fixes my Attention upon a more agreeable Prospect; that of Innocence, and not of Guilt; and the Importance of the Issue justly challenges my most sanguine Efforts. We have before us the Life and Fortune of a Man, a Countryman, I believe an innocent, tho' accused one: I must believe him innocent, not only as I am yet ignorant of any Proof that I think should convict him, but more as I have not been able, in a very strict Investigation, to discover from himself any Symptom of Guilt; and as the Persuasion of Innocence may give Courage to defend, so I persuade myself I need make no Apology, if I am able to speak with that Earnestness and Freedom that becomes the Consequence of what is at Stake. And, on the other hand, I hope to be excused, if I fail in that Accuracy and Distinctness, which I could wish to observe, from a just Regard to the Dignity of this high Court, and to the Presence of a crowded, and, I dare say, an interested Audience, who are ready to swallow with Greediness every Word that shall be spoke on this Subject.

My Lords, before I go farther, I cannot omit observing, what I am extremely sensible of, and that is, the Disadvantages under which this Pannel enters upon a Trial for himself, and all that is dear to him in this World, for what concerns all that is precious to him in another; Disadvantages which we share in, who appear as his Council. But when I say so, I would not be understood as meaning to insinuate any Reflexion upon the Conduct of the honourable Gentleman who prosecutes for his Majesty: He does the Duty of his Office, the Duty which he owes to his King and Country; and gave an early Proof in this Matter of that Candor for which he is remarkable on all Occasions, by turning a general Indictment into a special and circumstantiated Charge. But, to use his own Words, when hindered from doing what his humane Inclination equally led him to, his Lordship is here but half a Pursuer: There are others concerned in carrying on this Prosecution; and I am afraid their just Resentment of a Murder, which they had all the Reason in the World to be zealous in searching out the Committers of, has made them unguarded to Measures which I should be sorry to see retaliate; and pushed them beyond the Bounds of what I would call Humanity, perhaps think Justice; and yet, while I cannot approve of their Conduct, I am loth, if I could avoid it, to be severe against it, not knowing, whatever I now think, how far Rage might have got the ascendant of Reason with myself, if in their Place.

One Thing is obvious, that tho' it is true, that the Justice of our Law agrees with the common Law of Reason, in presuming every Man innocent till he is proved guilty, yet we have Reason to fear we come here oppressed with Prejudice, to create and propagate which, against this unfortunate Pannel, no Pains, no Expence has been spared, with manifest Intent to prejudge him in his Trial; and in this have some People been wise in their Generation; well knowing, that as presumed Innocence is a great Advantage in a Trial, so believed Guilt is no small Step to Conviction, and often anticipates the just Foundations of it, which can arise only in Proof. When I see and am sorry for this, my Lords, in one View, yet do I most rejoice at it in another, as it shews the Weakness of the Cause that has needed such artificial Feet to support it, even in the Beginning, and which being removed, as I hope they soon will be, the Superstructure built upon the false Basis will also fail. There are other Things too, which the Law of the Land would intitle us to complain of, and which a few Years more Experience might make it better become me to exclaim against: A close Confinement of the Pannel, contrary to the sacred Charter of Liberty, which this Nation boasts of; and which illegal Proceeding was only removed of late by the Interposition of this Court; Imprisonment of Witnesses to be adduced against him, where none had Access to them but the private Prosecutors, or their Agents, removed at a Distance from the Check of my Lord Advocate's Superintendance, whose Office, though it intitles him to investigate the Proof of public Offences, yet renders a Privilege, dangerous to be indulged to every injured Party, safe in his Hands. The Pannel has had but short Warning to prepare for his Trial, tho' he was at great Distance from the Capital, from which only he could have Council and Assistance: And it is but very lately since his Council had Access to see himself; not for some Time after we were in this Place. These Things I only mention, as my Brother has already fully opened them; and I mention them, my Lords, as what may have some Weight with the Jury, who are to try the Pannel, (and whom I now consider myself as addressing) to remove the Prejudices that are so naturally, tho' insensibly, imbibed without Doors, and which especially arise in the Mind from the unavoidable, tho' inconvenient Situation, in which a supposed Criminal must appear, even when as yet the Law presumes him not guilty, loaded with Irons and surrounded with Guards.

My Lords, I do not mention, as a Disadvantage to the Pannel, the Place of his Trial. I think it can be none: There are Reasons why this Place may be more proper for the Trial than any other, whether the Pannel be guilty or innocent; that he may be either acquitted or condemned, and Justice may take Place where the Crime was committed. And one Advantage the Pannel most surely profits of by the Trial being here, viz. the Presence of the Prince who presides in it, and who, in a special Manner, is the Father of his own Country, as he justly appears to be of this Part of the Kingdom. This of itself is more than sufficient to balance a Disadvantage, were it possible to suppose any could arise from the Opportunity that affords it: At the same Time, I would, with great Deference, observe (and I hope I may do it without giving Offence, which I am sure I do not mean to do,) that there may be something in this; which calls upon the Jury to be cautious; and I hope an Attention to it will have the Effect to make them rather lean to the favourable Side, than be disposed to make any Stretch against the Pannel. It is the Privilege of the Subjects of this Country to be tried by one another: Yet, when we have this Advantage, and it is an inestimable one, still it is to be tried by Men of like Passions, i. e. like Infirmities with ourselves; and all Men are more or less susceptible of Prejudice. I hope, however, I may safely trust to the Honour of such a Jury as will be put upon the Pannel's Trial, that they will, if any such there are, lay aside all Regard to Country Alliances or Connexions, divest themselves of all Prejudices, and sit down to the Trial with a candid Resolution to yield only to the Force of Truth; desiring rather to see Innocence thereby vindicated, than Guilt, unwished-for Guilt condemned, and inclined to give the Cast of Favour on the favourable Side, unless the Proof shall come out very clear and convincing. Trials in this Country are open and public, and the Eyes of the World are a Check both upon Judges and Jury; and as this Murder has been, and justly, the Subject of an extended Speculation, so will the Trial for it: I hope, be the Issue of it what it will, it shall be so conducted, as to reflect nothing on any concerned in it; and I shall only add, that, could I suspect that the Law of my Country, or the Court, could put any on the Pannel's Jury, who would overlook their Obligations to Impartiality, which I dare say is impossible in this present Case, I would put such in Mind, that, if they have no Regard to the Pannel, they should regard themselves; for, as the old Philosopher said, No body is happy before he die; what is the Pannel's Fate To-day, may be ours To-morrow, and what is Proof against him, may be against another long after this. Every Trial, therefore, tho' it presently affects only those who are under it, is in a material Sense the Cause of those who do try, of the Public, and of Posterity.

My Lords, having said so much in general, (and I think I could say no less) it should be my Province now to state what has occurred to me for the Defence of the Pannel against this Indictment.

And here, my Lords, we have a most barbarous, indeed a shocking Murder, charged against two Persons; but with this material Distinction between the two, that the one is by the Indictment charged as the actual Murderer, by himself; no Mortal along with him at the Perpetration of it; and the other is only alledged accessory thereto, as having been in a previous Conspiracy with the Murderer: And the Pannel now to be tried, is this Conspirator.

My Lords, I do not distinctly see, from the Indictment as laid against Breck, what Proof there will be of his being the actual Murderer. I should at present imagine, from the Way in which the Story is told, that there can be no Proof, at least no direct, no satisfying Proof. But, be that as it will, one Thing I am sure of, from the Nature of the Thing; it is impossible there can be any direct Proof of a Conspiracy, to which only the two Persons accused were privy: And therefore it is, we see my Lord Advocate has very properly, and, I think, very candidly, as I said before, specified his Charge of Accession against the Pannel, into these Circumstances, from which his Lordship infers the Accession or Conspiracy. And it is upon the Relevancy, or Import of these Circumstances, that I fall to speak to your Lordships. For, it is not to be imagined, that, by disputing the Relevancy of the Indictment, we mean to call in Question that Murder is a Crime: And, for my own Part, I as little contest, that, as the Law now stands, the Charge against the Pannel in the general Proposition of the Libel is relevant, that he is guilty, Actor, Art and Part of the Murder of Glenure. And I do farther admit, that, if the Pannel has been accessary to, or the Former or Contriver of a Conspiracy for perpetrating this horrid Murder, he is truly as much Art and Part thereof, as the actual Murderer: Nay, were that the Case, I should not hesitate to pronounce him, if possible, a greater Criminal than the Miscreant by whose Hands he accomplished the wicked Assassination. But it is my Business now to endeavour to shew, that the Circumstances condescended upon in the Libel, and on which I must suppose the Proof is to rest, are not tantamount to the general Charge; or, in other Words, that the Premises of the Indictment, supposing them true, do not infer the Conclusion, much less will they support it, when they appear in that Light which I hope the Proof will place them in, divested of the romantic Dress of Exaggeration, in which Fancy has dressed them. And when I attempt this, I own, my Lords, it is not with Design to influence your Lordships Interlocutor; for, as I have already admitted the general Proposition of the Libel to be a relevant Charge, I suppose the Interlocutor of the Court will be confined to that. It was the Custom, not many Years ago, for the Court to pronounce special Interlocutors upon such Indictments as the one now under Consideration, finding what Facts or Circumstances, if proven, would infer the Charge: But your Lordships later, and, I think, better Practice, has been to evade that, as what, if it had any Effect to influence the Judgment of the Jury, did in so far deprive the Pannel of his rightful Privilege to be tried by the Jury, and not by the Court; or as, what indeed was more likely to happen, being a Thing that had no Effect at all, as the Jury would judge over again for themselves, what the Court had ineptly judged of for them. I say, therefore, my Lords, I do not speak so much for your Lordships, as for the Jury; willing, so far as I can, to guide their Attention to where I apprehend it ought chiefly to be fixed, in the Proof they are to hear; and to help them, if I can, to judge on what Part of it they ought to lay Strefs in forming an Opinion of this Cause.

There is only one Thing which I must submit to your Lordships, and which I shall but mention, as my Brother, who opened the Defence, has already offered it, and your Lordships may hear more of it in the Reply to my Lord Advocate; and that is, the prejudicial Question how far the Pannel, charged with an Accession to the Crime of another, can be tried for it, till the Principal is first discussed. Your Lordships well know, that an Accessary does of its own Nature follow a Principal; till, then, there be a Principal, there can be no Accessary, and the Principal being removed, the Accessary is also taken away; and therefore, till the one is convicted, there is no Room for trying the other, in like manner as the Principal being acquit, the Accomplices cannot be condemned. That the Law stood formerly so, is most certain; as appears from many Authorities, which I forbear citing. How far this is altered by the Act of Parliament, introducing the Law of Art and Part, will be subject to the Judgment of the Court, where I leave it. But I must at least inform the Jury, that, however the Law stands in this Matter, it is undoubtedly certain, that they, or any Jury, cannot convict an Accessary, but upon this Supposition, that, if the Principal were under Trial before them, they would convict him, Quando proceditur contra aliquem tanquam quod prestiterit auxilium, debet constare principalem deliquisse. And the Gentlemen of the Jury will take heed to this, that if they shall find Cause to convict the Pannel upon the Evidence that shall be brought before them; they do, in the most express Manner, declare their Opinion, that Breck, and no other, was the Murderer of Glenure. Nor must they hold sufficient for this Purpose the presumptive Conviction, which arises from his flying Justice, and being fugitate and outlawed by the Sentence we heard this Day pronounced. The Law says expressly, That no Fugitation of a Principal is to be held for a Conviction against an Accessary; and indeed, why should it? For the Confession of the Principal, were he now here, would not be Evidence against the Pannel, and much less must his Absence or Run-away have that Effect. So that the Jury must here consider, that, before they can convict the Pannel, they must have such Evidence against Breck, as would condemn him, were he on Trial. And so, leaving Mr. Breck till we see what Proof comes out against him, the Question is at present, Upon what is the Charge of the Pannel's Guilt founded? or, Are the Circumstances alledged in the Indictment, sufficient to support the Accusation of Art and Part against the Pannel?

And here, my Lords, I do not propose to entertain your Lordships with a nice Disquisition on the Law of Art and Part; suffer me only, in three Words, to mention that, so far as I can comprehend by the Law of Scotland, Art and Part is inferred from Circumstances antecedent to, concomitant with, or subsequent upon the actual Commission of a Crime. Now, my Lords, when I look to the Indictment before me, I am able only to perceive two Facts condescended upon, from which the Pannel's Accession to this Murder is to be inferred; the Cloaths alledged to be furnished by the Pannel to Breck before the Murder, as a Disguise to commit it in, and the Money sent him after the Action, to enable him to go off the Country. These, I say, my Lords, are, so far as appears to me, the only two considerable Circumstances to infer Accession: For your Lordships will observe, there is an absolute Blank as to the principal Period in which Guilt ought to appear, the actual Commission of the Crime; at least, so far as I can gather, there is not one concomitant Circumstance alledged against the Pannel, which connects with the actual Murder. And, as for the Circumstance of the Pannel's sending the Money to a certain Place, where, as would appear from the Indictment, he had no Access to know that Breck was; as to that, I say, and some other ones of lesser Moment, which I likewise take Notice of, I take them to be designed as a Key to explain into a Connexion with the Murder, the two Facts already mentioned, by shewing a previous Knowledge of the Murder, which the Facts themselves do not import, and yet without which they have no Weight. Upon these two cardinal Facts, then, attempted to be supported by the other lesser Circumstances, in my Apprehension, lies the Burden of the Prosecutors Charge. And I will beg leave to say a few Words to each of them.

But, before Particulars, give me leave, my Lords, as shortly as I can, to make an Observation or two upon the Nature of Proof in general.

And, my Lords, I think it is a common, but a well-founded Maxim, derived from better Authority than mine, that, in Proportion to the Greatness of a Crime, ought the Strength of the Proof of it to be. The higher a Crime is, and the deeper it draws in its Consequences, so much the clearer and stronger ought the Evidence of it to be: And indeed justly; for, I hope, bad as Men are, corrupted as human Nature is, it is not come that Length, that Vice is natural to Mankind. I rather persuade myself, that it costs some Pains, by rooted Habits, to extinguish the Sparks of Reason, which are the Seeds of Virtue: Here then, my Lords; is a Crime of so enormous a Size, that it is almost too big to believe; Murder, deliberate Murder; Assassination in Face of the Sun, in Defiance of all Law and Government. What Proof should then be expected of so monstrous an Offence? That one should sit down deliberately and coolly to form a Conspiracy of be-reaving another of his Life, in so horrid and barbarous a Manner; what Degree of Flagitiosity must not be proved to suppose one capable of it? Sure, tho' many Circumstances be brought to establish a Presumption of Guilt, yet to believe it is no easy Matter. Must it then depend upon Guess-work? Is it to be tried upon questionable Evidence? Or, is a Jury to be persuaded into it by Art? No, there must be the most palpable and incontestable Proof; and, unless the Evidence is full and plain, no Credit, I will venture to say, can be given to so black, so detestable, and so unnatural a Charge. It would almost require to see the Blood of the Innocent reeking on the Hands of the Guilty. But what have we here? Presumptions built upon Presumptions; Suspicions, and these Suspicions supported by others; Suspicions without Proof, nay disproved. We have first to get over the Belly of a good fair Character, which this Pannel had the Happiness to possess, a blameless moral Life in private. And, should he all at once have deviated so far from the Paths of Virtue? Could he so suddenly shake off a Regard to all that is sacred? I should have expected to have heard urged against this Pannel, the abandoned Dissoluteness of his Manners, the Barbarity of his Nature, that his Life was one continued Course of Wickedness; in short, every Part of his Character devoted to Murder; that he was one inured to the Practice of it, and distinguished by the most consummated Guilt: Yet not one of these Circumstances so much as alledged in all this aggravated Charge; and for a good Reason, viz. That the contrary is well known to be true by the Prosecutors themselves. Next, my Lords, when we seek for a Cause of such a Malice as could produce this Crime, we find a Cause that never subsisted; a Cause noways adequate to the Effect: Resentment; for what? For accepting an Office which somebody must have got; and none could have made a more favourable Use of, for the Friends of the Pannel, than this Gentleman did: (For which Reason they will be proved to have been in good Friendship long after that) Resentment for turning out some Tenants from an Estate forfeit to the Crown; irrecoverably lost to the Family with which the Pannel was connected. This is the Foundation; and what is the Superstructure? Of a Piece with it truly. Why, the Murderer had on a Coat of the Pannel's, when he committed the brutal Action, and got Money from him after it. Here is the Proof; a circumstantiate Proof it is called.

My Lords, I have no Objection to circumstantiate Proof; what the Law calls argumentative Evidence. I do admit, that it is a legal and proper Sort of Evidence, as much as direct Proof by Witnesses. Every thing is legal Evidence; that is such real and certain Proof as ought, in natural Justice and Equity, to be received: For what is Evidence of a Fact, but such Testimony as the Nature of the Case requires to induce a moral Certainty of the Thing testified? And an Argument is nothing else than what gives Faith or Credit to a Thing in itself doubtful, which perfectly agrees with the Law-Definition of Proof or Proving, which is fidem facere. I will admit further, that circumstantiate Evidence, when clear, is perhaps the most satisfying and convincing Proof of any. Circumstances are inflexible Proofs: They will not bend to the Inclination of Parties: Witnesses may be mistaken, may be corrupted: Things can be neither; and therefore, so far as they go, deserve unlimited, unreserved Faith.

But then, my Lords, the Circumstances must be clear, certain, and well connected: No Blank in the Chain, else all goes for nothing: The Arguments must be perspicuous, nervous, and conclusive. The same Law that has said, crimina posse probari, vel testibus, vel documentis aut indiciis, as it requires idonei testes, so does it documenta aper-tissima, indicia indubitata, lucē meridiana clariora. We must therefore, my Lords, carefully distinguish between circumstantiate or argumentative Evidence, and bare Presumption, or even Probability; much more Suspicion and Conjecture, with all which it has a near Affinity, and is therefore apt to be confounded with them; for they all depend on Facts or Circumstances. But, says our great Criminal Lawyer Sir George Mackenzie, Crimes cannot be proved by Presumptions; for Presumptions are only founded on Verisimilitude, and what may be, may not be; whereas all Probations, especially in Criminals, should be infallible and certain; conclusio semper debet sequi debiliorem partem: If otherways, says he, Judges (or Juries now) would be arbitrary. Probabilities, again, says a good Reasoner, twenty of them allowed to be such, are not equal to one Matter of Fact well attested: They may strengthen the Fact, but cannot supply it: They cannot be Evidence themselves, because one Probability may be set against another, and so mutually destroy the Force of each other: And as for Suspicions and Conjectures, who will pretend a Right to indulge them, where Life and Fortune are concerned?

Guarding then, my Lords, against these Things which are ready to mislead, let us, and let the Jury, my Lords, examine cautiously and candidly the Circumstances I mentioned, on which the Burden of the Indictment lies: Let us see if they approach a Proof; if they do not more participate of the Nature hardly of Presumption, not at all Probability, rather Suspicion and Conjecture; or if they amount to a solid and substantial circumstance or argumentative Evidence.

My Lords, I mentioned first the Cloaths: And permit me, my Lords, once more in general to observe upon this Circumstance, as well as the others that follow, That I do, with great Submission, apprehend they derive their whole Weight from a Belief of the Pannel's Guilt, which it is indeed very natural to entertain from such Circumstances as he now appears in. The Indictment sets out with laying down this Crime in the most ugly Colours, as indeed it justly does deserve; and then subsumes, that the Pannel is guilty of it; and I venture to say, that, take away the Influence which too easy a Credit to this first Position gives to what comes after, all the Circumstances brought to support the Charge will in a great Measure lose their Force; so that the Assertion of the Charge is the very Thing which supports the Circumstances adduced to prove it, than which nothing can be a more false Circle of Probation. Prejudice, my Lords, is like a jaundiced Eye, or a magnifying Glass. To the first every Thing it looks at appears yellow; and the last to Appearance increases the Bulk of every Object to which it is applied. Just so Prejudice discolours every Circumstance, turns the most trivial into something of Importance, and makes what is in itself indifferent, a Proof of Guilt. Can the Truth of this appear more verified in any, than it is in the present Case?

My Lords, I will not repeat the true Fact, as your Lordships have already heard it opened, with respect to the Cloaths: Had it been that Breck had really received them from the Pannel, sure that of itself would not have proved the Pannel's Accession to a Murder committed by Breck at the Distance of so many Days. But has it any Weight at all, this Circumstance, as it has been told your Lordships, and as it will be proved to have in Fact happened? A Man comes to my House, and, without my Knowledge, puts on, and goes away with my Cloaths; and when wearing these, a Murder is committed: Must I be accessory to this Murder? Or must I be presumed accessory to it? Breck, your Lordships hear, was in use of changing his Dress: He had been six Weeks at one Time in Rannoch with these very Cloaths; and because he has them upon him again at the unlucky Period, must the Pannel for that be guilty with him? My Lords, we have heard of Villains borrowing, stealing Cloaths, assuming Characters, feigning Voices, and such like Things, when about to commit Crimes, of purpose to deceive, and to throw the Suspicion of Guilt off from themselves upon the Innocent. But surely these are dangerous Circumstances, and would need to be supported by better Proof, before the Life of any Man was taken away upon them; or indeed what Man is safe? It will not avail that we keep ourselves safe, so long as it is in the Power of others thus to bring us into Danger. Every Man must so be at the Mercy of others, and those of the vilest of Mankind. The Libel indeed says, the Pannel furnished Breck with his Cloaths; but how is that to be proved? Did the Pannel give him them? No, my Lords, we shall prove he took them, and went with them from the Pannel's House, when he was not there, when he knew nothing of it. But tho' he had known, as he did on former Occasions, or tho' he had with his own Hands given them to Breck, would it have been Proof against the Pannel? I cannot imagine it. I might admit, that had Breck never before changed his Dress at the Pannel's House, had this been the first Time, it might have been a Circumstance, and but a weak one too, from which to presume Guilt against the Pannel: But when he had been in use of doing it, does there from thence arise so much as a distant Suspicion against the Pannel? Whatever Effect it may have against Breck to presume that wicked Design, which I shall at present take for granted he soon thereafter executed, (to presume it, I say, against him) that he changed, at so critical a Conjunction, his Dress; yet sure it can have no Influence against the Pannel, who, till 'tis better proved, cannot be supposed privy to so horrid an Undertaking in Breck. And this, my Lords, puts me in mind to make a Distinction, which I should have made sooner, that is, betwixt Breck and the Pannel. And I must call upon the Jury carefully to separate the Parts of this Indictment, which refer to the one and to the other; for, when they are confounded together, one, in reading or hearing it, is extremely apt equally to apply the Effect of all the Circumstances to both. The Indictment has so chequered them thro' other, that it costs some Pains to distinguish them, and lay to the Door of Breck, and of the Pannel, what separately applies to each, and seems to support the different Charges against them. To shew the Necessity of this, I will but mention one Paragraph of the Libel, where this Confusion manifestly prevails. It is there first said, that Breck having come to the Pannel's House on the Monday Evening, James Stewart the Pannel was informed by him, (Breck) or by his Son Charles Stewart, or by Fasnacloch's Daughter, of Glenure's Motions and Resolutions. And then it immediately follows, "And there, after receiving such Advice, in the Evening of the same Day, the said Allan Breck Stewart laid aside his own Cloaths, &c." So your Lordships see, that first Breck is said to inform the Pannel, and then Breck's receiving such Advice or Information from the Pannel, (just inverting the Thing) is laid down as the Spring of Breck's Actions, with a Design, as is plain, to extract Guilt against the Pannel, from his giving Information to Breck, which produced his Action, when it was truly Breck himself that informed the Pannel, as the Indictment first asserts. This, my Lords, may be an Inaccuracy in wording the Indictment; but it is not for that, I observe it: I mention it that the Jury may see how carefully they must consider and weigh every Branch of this complex Charge, as being heedless to one Branch or Circumstance may have bad Effect. And surely it is evident in this Particular, that the Weight of the Circumstance as laid against the Pannel, wholly flies off by a just Attention to the erroneous Connexion of the Fact as narrated.

There is another Circumstance of the Indictment, which, tho' it does not fall so directly within my present View, I cannot omit taking Notice of it, as it comes a-cross my Thought; it is as to the Pannel's Behaviour when the Murder of Glenure was first notified to him by Glenure's Servant. It is said the Pannel appeared noways surpris'd or concerned. Alas, my Lords, what such Proof of Guilt is this? We have seen doubtful Actions by the Help of Innuendoes construed criminally; but to give that in Evidence which was neither said nor done, to construe Silence into Guilt, is entirely new; and the Author of this Invention Invention will deserve the Glory of the Discovery. This is indeed to conjure one into a Crime. My Lords, I could venture to invert the Proposition, if the Gentlemen please, and maintain, that a contrary Behaviour, to any remarkable Degree, would have been more suspicious, Tremor est signum cædis, or in the Words of the Proverb of our own Country, The greatest Thief cries first, &c. But, my Lords, the Fact is different from what is in the Libel. It will be proved to your Lordships and the Jury, that the Pannel, upon receiving this Piece of, I must call it melancholy News, expressed to the Messenger a decent Concern and Regret, tho' little did he think at that Time, that his Behaviour then, would now be brought into Judgment against him.

Of the same Kind with this, my Lords, is another Circumstance, which I remember in the Indictment, (for I cannot go thro' them all); and that is a Letter of the Pannel's to one Charles Stewart, relating to the Price of Milk Cows.—I confess, my Lords, it is to me mysterious yet, what Import this Letter is of as Proof against the Pannel. If it is, that the Subject of it is suspected to be fictitious, that we shall be able to prove real. But what Connexion has it with the Charge? I own I cannot find it out. It would appear to me that this Letter must suffer Torture, and not a little of it, before any thing can be squeezed out of it against the Pannel. It puts me in Mind of a Saying of a great but very wicked Politician, Cardinal Mazarine, who is said to have boasted, that, if he had but two Lines of a Man's Writing, with a few Circumstances attested by Witnesses, he would cut off any Man's Head when he pleased. Thank God, we breathe in a Climate different from the one that Pontiff ruled in: And I hope we do not delight in Blood so much as to adopt his cruel Scheme.

These Things, my Lords, I have thrown out by the Way; but as to what I was upon, the Circumstance of the Cloaths, I shall only add, that as it is in Truth, it appears of no Weight at all; and had it been as in the Indictment, I should have thought it a Circumstance greatly too thin and slender to build any thing upon.

There only then remains the other Circumstance of the Money, which is posterior to the Murder: For, as I have already had occasion to observe, I do not discover a concomitant Circumstance alleged, unless the Arms be pointed at for this Purpose; as I observe, there are two Guns mentioned in the List of Evidence, as found concealed near the Pannel's House, and which possibly the Prosecutors will attempt to prove to have been those which the Indictment says Breck had brought, or caused to be brought to the Place of the Murder. Were any thing of this to be proved, I shall fairly admit it would be a strong Circumstance, as it is one of these very Things which the Law points out; Opem fert qui, cum crimini patrato non interfuerit, ferramenta tamen, tela, venena commodaverit, sciens cujus rei causa commodaret. But I cannot see where the Proof of any thing like this can arise. It does not appear, that any Guns were found at the Place of Murder. I think 'tis presumable the Murderer would carry his Arms with him, after using them to his wicked Purpose. And as for these found concealed near the Pannel's House, we are instructed to say, they were in the Pannel's House at the Time of the Murder, and were hid after it for fear of an apprehended Search for Arms, by the Military that was expected to come into the Country.

This therefore I leave upon the Proof, and shall now, in a Word or two, take Notice of the Money sent by the Pannel to Breck after the Murder. And here, my Lords, I must be allowed to observe, in the first Place, what Sir George Mackenzie's Doctrine upon this Point is. His Words are, sect. 7. (Tit. Art and Part) "Assistance given after the Crime is committed, scarce deserves the Name of Assistance." And cites an Authority for this Opinion. I will admit, my Lords, that, if this Pannel did, knowing Breck to be the Murderer of Glenure, administer Help to his Escape, by furnishing him with Money, he did a very wrong Thing; perhaps was guilty of an Offence, which the Law would punish.—But it is an Offence quite different from that of Accession to the Murder. It is a Species of Crime by itself; and, as my Lord Advocate has not laid his Prosecution for that, we have nothing to do with it. At the same Time, my Lords, however wrong such a Conduct might have been, yet it could admit of an Excuse. Your Lordships have heard this Breck was the Pannel's Relation. He had been his Pupil, brought up in his Family till he went into the King's Service as a Soldier; and we all know, my Lords, the Strength of Compassion on such Occasions, especially to our Friends, it would perhaps be hard to punish for it. The Worthlessness of our Relations does not at once dissolve the Ties of Nature; none of us can be sure, but we may have a wicked Son or a Brother; and, in a Case of this Sort, it would be natural to wish to help him out of the Way; perhaps it would be wrong, but such is the known Force of natural Ties, and it, at least, lessens the Crime. However, here, my Lords, the Case does not apply; for we absolutely deny, that the Pannel knew any thing of Breck's Guilt; and such Knowledge can never be presumed; he knew the Situation he was in as a Defenter, and the Hazard of it, when the Military were coming into the Country to make a Search; and to be sure, had he been caught by the Military, they would have saved your Lordships the Trouble of trying him, supposing him to be guilty: A Court Martial would have made short Work with him, unless it had been (as likely it might) thought more for the End of public Justice, to make him suffer for so flagrant an Offence as this, than to hang him as a Defenter. It was for this Reason, my Lords, and not from any Knowledge of his Guilt, that the Pannel, upon Breck's Message to that Purpose, as your Lordships have heard, sent him the Money to enable him to get off the Country, and go where his Business called him; his Business, I say, my Lords; but at the same Time I call it his illegal, his unnatural Business, as an Enemy to his Country, and a Traitor to his King. And as to the Circumstance which I formerly noticed, as tending to point out the Pannel's previous Knowledge of Breck's Motions, by his knowing where to send the Money, tho' he had no Access to see Breck after the Murder; as to this, I say, my Lords, your Lordships see no Strefs can be laid upon it, when you have heard that it was by a Message from Breck that the Pannel learned his Motions: So that still something is desiderate here, whereon to fix that Circumstance, upon which alone depends the Pannel's Accession, to wit, his Foreknowledge of the Murder.

My Lords, I have finished what occurred to me on the Circumstances of the Indictment; and I am unwilling to weary your Lordships.

I forbear entering upon the Bouman's Conversation with Breck; that is but one Man's Story of what another said. It is but hearing a Hearsay, or rather less; and I know no Law, no Rule, it rather seems contrary to all Rule of Evidence, that one should suffer for what another said of him; and that the very guilty Person, as is here supposed. If he did say so, it might be to throw the Suspicion off himself with the better Grace: But, be it as it will, it can be no Evidence against the Pannel.

There is but one other Thing in the Indictment, which we have to finish this doubtful Evidence, if it can be called so much, and that is, the Threatnings; but, as they are libelled in general, I cannot argue upon them; nor has the Pannel any Opportunity to disprove them: They must therefore be left, till the Evidence is concluded.

My Lords, I have said what I could, from such Helps as were in my Way, upon the Nature and Import of this Sort of Evidence which is now before us. I shall only say further on it, that this Sort of Evidence, when imprudently handled, may be resembled to the monstrous Machine for making havock of Enemies, which, when invented by a Subject, was wisely smothered in the Birth by the Governor, lest, however convenient it might be when used for him, he might come one Day to regret the Invention, when he found it applied against himself. And as to this particular Case, I take it, that every individual Circumstance, as laid in the Indictment, so far as we know of it, will be unsupported with Evidence; that all put together do not amount to the Charge. I think there are no Grounds for any private Opinion of the Pannel's Guilt, but what arise from Prejudice only. I think Prejudice, or even Opinion, has nothing to do with judicial Proceedings. It is the Judgment that must acquit or condemn; and that must, can only be founded on Evidence, on Proof, not on Suspicion or Presumption.

I shall now take the Liberty to read to your Lordships, and the Jury, the Words of a great Criminal Writer on the Common Law, when treating on the Subject of argumentative Evidence. Math. de Crim. ad Tit. 15. Cap. 6. He is speaking of Arguments, and says, Argumentum est necessarium, cujus consequentia est necessaria, veluti corvisse eam quæ peperit; contingens, cujus consequentia est probabilis, veluti cædem fecisse qui cruentatus est. Then he adds, Contingentia argumenta, quamvis singula fidem non faciant, plura tamen conjuncta crimen manifestare possunt. Hæc appellantur præsumptiones; præsumptio enim nihil aliud est, quam argumentum verisimile communi sensu perceptum, ex eo quod plerumque fit aut fieri intelligitur: And he gives the following Example of an argumentative Evidence which may condemn, which I beg the Jury will attend to, Occisus est kallendis Mævius; Titius peremti inimicus fuit eidem sæpius non solum interminatus, sed & infidiatus est: cum deprehenderetur iisdem kallendis in loco cædis cruentatus cum gladio cruento, ad mensuram vulneris facto, toto vultu expalluit, interrogatus, nil respondit, trepide fugit. Hic singula (says our Author) quidem argumenta infirmiora sunt, universa tamen cædis auctorem Titium evidenter designant. And I most heartily agree with the Doctrine, and shall leave it to the Jury to judge, how far the Proof brought against the Pannel comes up to this Standard.

I shall conclude with laying before the Jury the Words of a great Judge and Lawyer of our own Country, on an Occasion somewhat similar to this. It is Part of my Lord Cowper's Speech upon the Bishop of Rocheſter's Trial, where the Evidence depended on Circumstances, as it does here. His Lordship says, "The Wisdom and Goodness of our Law appears in nothing more remarkably, than in the Perspicuity, Certainty, and Clearness of the Evidence it requires to fix a Crime upon any Man, whereby his Life, his Liberty, or his Property, can be concerned: Herein we glory and pride ourselves, and are justly the Envy of all our neighbour Nations. Our Law, in such Cases, requires Evidence so clear and convincing, that every By-stander, the Instant he hears it, must be fully satisfied of the Truth (and Certainty) of it. It admits of no Surmises, Innuendoes, forced Consequences, or harsh Constructions,* nor any Thing else to be offered as Evidence, but what is real and substantial, according to the Rules of natural Justice and Equity."

These are my Lord Cowper's Words as we have them given us, (It is very true, the Judgment of the House of Lords went against his Lordship's Opinion in that Question; but I must presume that the Judgment of that august Assembly, tho' against his Opinion, proceeded upon the Principles established by himself; and tho' it had been otherwise, the Argument would still be good, as Reasoning is not always bad, when it fails in Success.) I think I may with great Propriety adopt what that same Noble Lord farther said on that Occasion, as follows: "In the Case before you, the whole Charge is built upon Circumstances, and these are said to be supported by other Circumstances; but all of them are so remote, so general, and I may say so offensive, that they might suit any Lord here." I think the Circumstances charged against the Pannel might suit any one here.

My Lords, I beg Pardon for saying so much; I hope your Lordships will excuse it, for the Reasons I gave in the Entry. I shall only further add, that the Pannel is now on Trial for his Life; he asserts his own Innocence; he pleads Not guilty to the Charge. I hope it is the Answer of every one present, God give him a good Deliverance. And if he falls, let it be as a Sacrifice to Justice, to expiate Guilt, and purge the Land of Blood, not as a Victim to the blind Fury of his Enemies, or the Rage of the Deceased's Friends, to appease popular Prejudices, or ill-founded Clamour and Outcry.

Mr. FRASER, against the Pannel.

My Lord Justice-General,

I Appear as Council for Mrs. Campbell of Glenure, and her infant Children, against James Stewart, now in the Pannel, accused as guilty, Actor, Art and Part of the Murder of Colin Campbell of Glenure; a Murder aggravated by its being committed from a malicious Hatred and Resentment conceived against Mr. Campbell, on account of the faithful Discharge of his Duty in an Office intrusted to him by his Majesty.

* Lord Bacon says, "Judges must beware of hard Constructions and strained Inferences; for there is no worse Torture than the Torture of Laws." Fo. Edit. Vol. I. p. 440, 441.

This Crime, my Lord, is in itself so horrid, and in the present Instance is attended with aggravating Circumstances of such an extraordinary Nature, as must rouse the Indignation of every worthy Member of Society, and call loudly for the most severe and exemplary Punishment. Murder has always been looked upon as one of the most heinous Crimes; but in all civilized Countries, at all Times, that base, that treacherous Species of Murder, Assassination, has been held in still greater, as more deserved Abhorrence:—What then must be the Degree of that Man's Guilt, who deliberately, unprovoked, in cold Blood, during Times of full Peace, and in the most contemptuous Despite of Government, commits this most treacherous and most abhorred of all Murders! Heavy as that Load of Guilt is, I am sorry to say, my Lord, it lies with its utmost Weight upon the Prisoner now before you; which renders this Trial of great Importance to every Individual, but of still greater to this Country in general. If Assassins, capable, my Lord, of lying in wait with premeditated Malice, with Malice concealed in their Hearts, for Hours, for Days; if such are suffered to go unpunished, who of us all is safe, what Individual, however innocent, however brave, however particularly intitled to the public Protection! But what, I hope, my Lord, we all hold of greater Importance than the Safety of Individuals, the Interest, the Honour of this Country is very nearly concerned, not to suffer the most daring and bare-faced Insult to be offered to his Majesty's Authority and Government; and offered at a Time when we, in common with his Majesty's other Subjects, are reaping the Fruits of his most benign Reign: I say, my Lord, our Interest, our Honour is concerned, not to suffer this, without endeavouring to wipe off the Stain from the Country, to shew the King, and to shew the World, that this is the bloody Deed of one or two wicked and desperate Men; a Deed which the Country abhors, and which it will not suffer to go unpunished.

The Gentleman who opened the Defence, my Lord, has been as good as his Word, and has given indeed a plausible Account of this Affair; which makes me think it necessary to lay before the Court, as distinctly and as concisely as I can, that State of the Facts which there is the greatest Reason to believe the Proof will establish. And, in doing so, I hope to give your Lordships a more just View of this extraordinary Case; and, at the same Time, to be of some Use in leading the Gentlemen of the Jury to those Parts of the Proof which deserve most their Attention.

The Pannel, James Stewart, my Lord, is natural Brother to Mr. Stewart of Ardshiel, who commanded the Men of that Name that were engaged in the late Rebellion, and, by means of that, he acquired their Affections and Attachment. When Ardshiel was obliged to leave the Country, his Brother (the Pannel) set himself at the Head of the Family Interest; and it not appearing in that Part of the World a forced Transition, he was allowed to take this Authority upon him. In a short time, therefore, he came to be a leading Man, and to have the chief Influence over the common People. Such, my Lord, was the State of that Corner of the Country in the Year 1749, when

Mr. Campbell of Glenure was appointed Factor for his Majesty upon the Estate of Ardshiel, and some other forfeited Estates in that Neighbourhood. James Stewart soon foresaw how much this Factory must interfere with the Plan which he had laid, and with the Interest which he wanted to establish; Glenure, therefore, very early became the Object of his Ill-will. But it did not long rest there; for, in the Year 1751, Glenure having, in Consequence of Orders from the Barons of Exchequer, caused Mr. Stewart to be removed from the Farm which he possessed upon the Ardshiel Estate, what was before but Ill-will, was now turned into Hatred and Resentment. This led him to oppose all Glenure's Measures, and particularly to play the Volunteer in the Service of some other Tenants upon the same Estate, whom Glenure was about to remove at the ensuing Term: For this Purpose, he repaired in Person to Edinburgh, and, in Name of those Tenants, tho' without the smallest Commission or Authority from them, made be presented to the Lords of Session, a Bill of Suspension of the intended Removal, and obtained a Sift of Execution; this Sift he prevailed upon the Tenants to intimate to Glenure, who was put to the Trouble and Expence of a Journey to Edinburgh, before he could have the groundless Bill of Suspension answered; which was indeed all that was necessary in order to make it be refused.

Mr. Stewart, my Lord, little satisfied with this unsuccessful Attempt, which confirmed Glenure's Influence at the Expence of his own, and finding himself forced to quit the Country, and to abandon his favourite Plan of Popularity, formed a most desperate Scheme of Revenge, no less than a Plot to take away the Life of Glenure in the basest Manner. In Pursuance of this Scheme, he was at Pains, over all the Country, to represent Glenure's Conduct in the most disadvantageous Light; and, when he thought there was a general Odium raised, he had Recourse, in a more particular Manner, to those in whom he could most certainly confide, to those who were most easy to be stirred up, and most inclined to any desperate Deed. Different Sets of such Men, my Lord, he assembled at different Times, and, after expatiating against Glenure's ill Conduct, he used all his Art to convince them, that it was their Duty to free the Country of what he was pleased to call Glenure's Oppression; telling them, that he had once seen Commoners in Appin, who would, long ere then, have stopped his Career; and that he could assure any of them, who was hardy enough to undertake it, a certain Escape to France, and a handsome Pension afterwards! By those Methods, my Lord, Mr. Stewart used his utmost Endeavours to stir up some hot-headed Ruffian to the Execution of his Plot; but his Endeavours were long used in vain, till at length Allan Breck Stewart was thrown in his Way, a Man marked out for such a Purpose; a Deserter from our Service to that of the French; one who, in both Countries, was a Man of desperate Fortune, but who, in this, had not only lost all Title to the Protection of the Law, but was become obnoxious to its severest Penalties. This Man James Stewart immediately laid hold of and cherished. It was easy to stir him up to Resentment. To him therefore he communicated the whole of his Design, and with him he concerted the Execution of it. Allan had nothing to lose; therefore it was determined he should be the Actor, whilst James should lie by to protect him, and to turn the Mischief as much as possible to his own Advantage. Happily, my Lord, Keeness and Resentment, as usual in Crimes, got here the better of Caution, not only with Allan, but even with the more sagacious James; for, in the midst of their most cunning Contrivances, they could not refrain from uttering such strong and particular Threats against Glenure, as immediately pointed them out for the Objects of general Suspicion. Both of them have many Times threatened him with Death, and both of them have even gone beyond general Terms; for Allan declared he would, on the first Occasion, shoot him as he would a black Cock; an Expression very applicable to the base Manner which he afterwards made use of: And James, still more inveterate, swore, in the Fulness of his Heart, That he would shoot Glenure, even if he himself was so disabled, as to be obliged to go upon his Knees to a Window in order to do it. These are Instances of the Threats which they made use of, which first pointed them out, and which must still go a great way in convincing every thinking Man that they, and they only, were his Murderers.

In Consequence of their last Resolution, that Allan should act whilst James stood at the Helm, Allan laid himself out to get particular Information of Glenure's Motions; and, for that Purpose, he contrived to make a Visit at Fasnacloch, the very next House to Glenure, and within a Mile of it; there he remained upon the Look-out till Monday the 11th, when Glenure set out from his own House for Fort-William. Upon which Allan immediately repaired to his Associate James, to communicate the Intelligence he had got, viz. That Glenure was gone to Lochaber; that he was resolved to persist in removing the Tenants of Ardshiel, and was certainly to return for that Purpose before the Term-Day, the 15th. Having upon this Information consulted together, and settled the Plan of Operations, the Pannel furnished his Friend with a Dress more proper for what he was going about, giving him a Suit of his own Cloaths, a black short Coat, Trowsers, and a blue Bonnet; and, thus equipped, he set out the next Morning, Tuesday the 12th; but, knowing that Glenure might possibly not return for a Day or two, in order to avoid Suspicion, he made a Tour among his Relations, going first to Ballachelish, from thence to Glenco, from thence to Callart, where he staid Tuesday Night, and on Wednesday the 13th he went back, by the same Rout, to Ballachelish; in all which Circuit, he was at hand to lay wait for Glenure, at whatever Time he should return from Lochaber. On Thursday the 14th, when there was a moral Certainty that Glenure would return, (he having appointed a Meeting with several Gentlemen in the Country of Appin that Evening) Allan left Ballachelish's House under Pretence of fishing, and, very soon after, appeared at the Ferry of Ballachelish, by which Glenure must necessarily pass, in his Way from Lochaber to Appin: There he met the Ferryman, and, hastily calling him aside, inquired, with more than ordinary Earnestness and Anxiety, if Glenure had passed there that Day; and, being answered that he had not, Allan immediately ran up the Hill, towards the high Grounds above the House; from whence he had a View of the Country around, on both Sides of the Loch, and a short Passage into the Wood of Lettermore. In this Wood, my Lord, it was, that he marked out a most proper Station for the Execution of his desperate Design; a little Thicket, on a rising Ground, within a few Paces of the High-way, along which every Traveller must necessarily pass; from whence, himself unseen, he could distinctly see the Road leading to the Ferry of Ballachelish on the Lochaber Side, and the Road on the Appin Side, leading from thence to the Wood of Lettermore. Here, my Lord, he posted himself with one or two loaded Guns provided for the Purpose; and here he lay in wait till Mr. Campbell of Glenure had passed the Ferry, and was riding along the Road thro' the Wood. It was then, my Lord, that Allan Breck seized this long wish'd-for Opportunity, and when Glenure was come within convenient Distance, this abandoned Assassin shot him dead with two Balls from behind: A Deed as cowardly, as it was barbarous and inhuman! A Deed of which there is hardly an Example in this Part of the Kingdom, whose Inhabitants, however rash they may be to brave Dangers in an open Manner, have never, till this atrocious Crime of their unworthy Countrymen, been branded with the Ignominy of base and cowardly Assassination!

Allan having thus executed his deadly Purpose, immediately disappeared, in order to betake himself to the Concealment provided for him, calling in his Way, after a hidden Manner and at Midnight, at Glenco's House, where he informed the Lady and her Son that Glenure was murdered, and, without any more Conversation of either Side, added, as a Consequence of what he supposed known, that he himself was immediately to leave the Country. Soon after this, he arrived at his allotted Retreat, the Shealing of Koalisnacoon, the Habitation of the trusty Bouman; and, in a Conversation which he and the Bouman had there, he talked of the Murder in a more remarkable Manner than he had even done to Lady Glenco; for, after faintly enough denying his own Concern in it, he told his Friend that he was sure the Family of Ardshiel would be suspected, particularly James Stewart and his Son Allan; using this remarkable Expression, That there would be no Fear of them, if their own Tongues did not betray them, especially Allan's, who, he feared, was more open-mouthed than his Father.

All this while, my Lord, the Pannel remained at Home undisturbed, and when the Accounts came of Glenure's Murder, and every body else in the Neighbourhood was hastening to go to look after the Corpse, he never offered to stir, nay, he would not suffer any one of his Family to go near it. He, my Lord, had other Things to mind; not the unhappy Murdered, but the barbarous Murderer was the Object of his Attention; his own Preservation was so closely linked with Allan Breck's, that there was a Necessity for Allan's being kept out of the Way at any Rate; James therefore immediately dispatched Alexander Stewart Packman, his Relation, and a Person in whom he had entire Confidence, to Fort-William, with a most pressing Demand, as he himself acknowledges, for Money to supply his Friend Allan, and to enable him to make his Escape from Justice; and when the Packman returned with a less Sum than was expected, James, in the most critical Juncture of his own Affairs, added two Thirds of the Money which he had for his own Support, to the Sum brought from Fort-William, and sent away the faithful Packman, with this Money and his French Cloaths, Cloaths, to Allan Breck, giving particular Directions with regard to the Place of his Concealment; a Circumstance no one can well be supposed to have known who was not in the Secret, who was not originally privy to the Crime for which he was obliged to have Recourse to that Concealment.

These, my Lord, are the Facts which, I have Reason to believe, will soon be proved to your Lordship. The Gentleman has been pleased to express his Surprize, that, after so strict an Inquiry, this should be all that is made appear; and to say that these Facts are trivial, and not relevant to infer the Crime: But I cannot think any impartial Man who has read the Indictment now in my Hand, will join in the Gentleman's Surprize; on the contrary, I believe, every such Person must join with me, in thinking no small Praise due to the very proper Encouragement and Assistance of the Crown, and to the very uncommon Diligence and Activity of the private Prosecutors, which together have been able to throw so much Light upon so dark a Scene. Your Lordship has been told, that the Facts mentioned are not sufficient to infer the Crime libelled. I need hardly observe, my Lord, that such Crimes are particularly villainous and destructive, from the hidden and concealed Manner in which they are committed, which allows of no Defence, and too often screens from Punishment: Their very Nature does not admit of such a Proof as may be expected in other Cases; a Proof by Circumstances is all that can be looked for; indeed, when that is conclusive, it is of all others the most convincing. Witnesses may be partial, they may be perjured; but a closely connected Chain of Circumstances is liable to none of those Objections. Now, my Lord, I humbly apprehend, no Chain of Circumstances can be stronger, nor more closely connected, than that which I have just laid before your Lordship. You see a Discontent rationally, nay probably accounted for; the strongest and most particular Threats following that Discontent, and the Commission of the Crime as immediately following these Threats; the clearest Instance of the malum minatum, et damnum secutum. But it does not rest here; you see, my Lord, the Murderer traced from Day to Day, from Hour to Hour, from Place to Place, to the very Day, the very Hour, almost to the very Spot in which the Murder was committed; and you see his Associate in the strictest Connexion and Intimacy with him, caballing in private, and furnishing him with a proper Dress, before the Murder, and, after it, furnishing him with Cloaths and Money, to enable him to fly from Justice; and, what deserves particular Attention, you see his Associate minutely acquainted with the Place of his Concealment, the Place previously pointed out for his Retreat, and the Murderer, in that Retreat, where he thought himself in Safety, expressing his Concern for his Friend in very remarkable Terms; in Terms which carry a strong Conviction of their guilty Conspiracy, but, at the same Time, shew the Cunning with which they were conscious of having contrived it. I cannot doubt, but your Lordship will think this a Chain of Circumstances, more than sufficient to infer the Crime libelled: At the same Time, I must beg leave to observe, that, in such an Indictment as this, there was no Necessity of mentioning any one Circumstance; it would have been sufficient in Law, and the Gentlemen acknowledge it, to have libelled Art and Part in general Terms; that is, that, Time and Place libelled, the Crime was committed, and that the Pannel was guilty Art or Part of that Crime. Now, if my Lord Advocate, from the Humanity of his Disposition, from a Desire that every Offender, however heinous his Offence, should have the fairest Trial, and every Opportunity of making his Defence; if, from these Motives, he has given a very long and particular Indictment, when only a very short and general one was necessary, 'tis somewhat invidious in the Gentlemen of the other Side, to turn this into an Objection to the Relevancy. But let them, my Lord; the Point is fixed, as well by Law, as by uniform Practice; and therefore, whilst we contend, that the Circumstances, as particularized in the Indictment, are fully relevant, we at the same Time humbly hope, from your Lordship, an Interlocutor upon the general Point of Art and Part, independent of these Circumstances.

It has been objected to this Indictment, that an Accessary is here brought to Trial before the Principal is convicted, which is attended with these bad Consequences; that Proof must be led against the Principal in Absence; that his greatest Enemies may be produced as Witnesses, and the proper exculpatory Defences may be omitted. And further your Lordship has been told, that this is contrary to the Laws of neighbouring Nations, particularly that of England, and contrary to the Law of Scotland, as handed down to us in the Books of Reg. Maj. Quon. Attach. stat. Dav. II. and Sir Geo. Macken. There might, my Lord, have been some Room for such an Objection, if no formal Notice had been taken of the Principal; but I can hardly think any Objection will be admitted in the present Case; when the Principal is indicted, when every legal Step is taken by the Prosecutors for bringing him to Justice, and when the only Conviction which our Law admits of in such Cases, is gone against him. The Inconveniencies which it was said might follow from the present Practice, are trifling, compared to those which must be the necessary Consequence, if the Laws allowed not an Accessary to be tried, whilst the Principal, conscious of his own Guilt, dared not to appear. 'Tis but finding out some desperate Fellow for the Execution, who can afterwards be easily kept out of the Way; and the most inhuman Acts must go unpunished, the most abandoned Villains may laugh at Justice. The Authorities produced in Point of Law are, no doubt, great; but Times and Circumstances derogate from the greatest Authorities. If what Sir Geo. Mackenzie has given us as his Opinion was once Law, it is beyond all Doubt by later Practice no longer held as such; and it signifies as little what is the Law of neighbouring Nations, as what was once our own Law, if Custom, the justest of all Legislators, directed by common Sense and Equity, has now enacted the contrary.

The Hardships, my Lord, which it is pretended the Pannel underwent, can never be admitted as Objections to this Indictment. That they may not, however, leave any Impression upon the Gentlemen of the Jury, or even upon this Audience, I shall give your Lordship the true Account of what are called Hardships; and they will no longer appear to be such. That upon which most Strefs seems to be laid is, that the Pannel's Wife and his Children, who, by Law, cannot be called as

Witnesses

Witnesses against him, have been precognosced, or judicially examined, and that their Declarations are proposed to be produced in this Trial. The Fact is true; and nothing is more easily accounted for. When this Murder was committed, all was Confusion and Ignorance; and every Method that could be imagined was found necessary, in order to get to the Bottom of the deep-laid Plot. It was at that Time that James Stewart's Family, in common with all in that Neighbourhood, were called before a Judge, and examined upon what they knew of Glenure's Murder: It was more than probable, that some one of that Country committed the Murder, and that many in that Country were in the Secret of it: But when these People were examined, neither of these Acts of Guilt was charged upon any particular Person: Allan Breck was not then accused of the actual Murder, nor James Stewart of being accessory to it. So that his Wife and Children were really not examined with any View to him; they were examined, to discover the Truth in general, before it was known upon what particular Person the Accusation would fall. Whether their Declarations will be produced in this Trial, may be a Question afterwards; but, in the mean while, it appears not contrary to Law or Equity, that they should be produced: It is confounding Things to say that this is making the Pannel's Wife and Children Witnesses against him: The Declarations will not be produced to prove the Truth of any Thing contained in them, of which they would not be legal Evidence; they are only to prove, that the Persons who emitted the Declarations, averred these Things; and if any Words of theirs could give Cause of Suspicion against the Pannel, it would be surely competent to prove such Words by the Testimony of third Parties. Does it not then come altogether to the same Purpose, to prove them by Production of the Words themselves judicially committed to Writing? The close Confinement of the Pannel, as well as that of some others, who were then taken up upon Suspicion of Guilt, but are now to be produced as Witnesses, was owing to the Rules of the Place where they were confined. His Majesty's Garrisons have been used as Prisons more for the Custody of State Prisoners than of common Criminals: It is not to be wondered at, then, if military Officers, unacquainted with the Distinctions of Law, applied to the latter the Orders which they were in use to receive for the former: As soon as the Law was explained, it was obeyed; nor is it pretended, that the Pannel, or any other, was closely confined one Hour after the commanding Officer was informed that the Law forbid it. 'Tis true, a new commanding Officer came, to whom the Law was not immediately explained, which occasioned the second close Confinement complained of; but he, as well as his Predecessor, paid Obedience to the Law, as soon as it was made known to him. That it was not therefore made known to both, as soon as might have been, the Pannel's Council must account for. That was altogether their Business; and the Consequence, whatever it be, which may arise from the Neglect of it, ought not to fall upon the Prosecutors, far less upon the Gentlemen of the Army, who, the Pannel himself acknowledges, have all, in any Charge they had of him, done their Duty with the utmost Humanity, always like Soldiers, and like Men. It is surprising, the Gentlemen should mention, as a Hardship, their being refused Access to the Pannel, after they came to Inverary; they must be conscious, that this was a Hardship of not an Hour's Duration. They required Admittance from the chief Magistrate, who not caring, as the Duke of Argyll was upon the Spot, to take any Step without his Grace's Approbation, sent directly to acquaint him of the Demand; and his Grace gave immediate Orders for their Admittance. The Gentleman who spoke first, mentioned one Thing, which, I dare to say, he alone will think a Hardship upon the Pannel; I mean, my Lord, its having fallen to that Gentleman's Share to open his Defence; and I cannot help thinking the Complaint of the Pannel's Want of able Assistance, coming from that Side to this, looks like Banter: For, setting aside my Lord Advocate, whose Office obliges him to assist the Prosecutors; I need only beg your Lordship will cast your Eye, first to the one Side of this Table, and then to the other, in order to judge where the Advantage lies in Age and Experience.

Upon the whole, my Lord, I cannot doubt but your Lordship will find this Libel relevant to infer the most severe Pains of Law, as the Crime libelled is of the most heinous Nature; and that you will remit the Pannel to the Knowledge of an Assize, who, I find, from the List in my Hand, must be Men above the Imputation of any other Prejudice, but what every good Man must feel against so horrid a Crime; a Prejudice, which, I am sure, they will carefully distinguish, as I hope we all do, from any personal Prejudice against the Pannel, who has an undoubted Right to demand their most impartial Attention to the Proof, by which alone his Innocence must stand confessed, or his Guilt meet with its deserved Punishment.

MR. ERSKINE against the Pannel.

My Lords,

I HAVE likewise the Honour to be of Council for the Prosecutors in this Trial, and, as such, it is my Duty to support the Charge exhibited in the Libel; which has been just now very fully and distinctly opened.

The Importance of the Trial, the Respect I have for the Honourable Court, and this Audience, were alone sufficient to have laid me under great Uneasiness: But that Uneasiness is greatly increased, when I find myself engaged in a Task, which I am at present but ill prepared to execute.

Tho' I early and willingly engaged to take a Part in this Trial, an unexpected Distress, which has, for some Days, dissipated my Attention to Business, made me hope the Prosecutors would have relieved me of an Engagement which I was unfit to perform, and dispensed with my Attendance, which, I apprehended, could not be material to them; but in this I have been disappointed by the Indisposition of a Gentleman of great Abilities and Experience, which has unhappily deprived them of his abler Assistance.

For this Reason I will beg leave to confine myself entirely to make the proper Answers to the Arguments which have been urged by the learned Gentlemen in Defence of the Prisoner.

I shall forbear to enlarge upon the many aggravating Circumstances that appear in the horrid Scene just now opened to your Lordships.

I will not attempt to inflame the Jury, by giving loose Reins to an Imagination, warmed by a real Regard for the Gentleman deceased, Compassion

passion for the Widow and the Fatherless, under peculiar Circumstances of Distress, a high Concern for the Interest of this Country, and the Preservation of our present happy Constitution; all which appear to have been struck at by the Hand that gave this Wound.

These Considerations cannot fail to kindle Indignation in every Breast; and I am confident they have already had the Effect to rouse the Attention of the Court, and balance a misplaced Compassion, not unnatural to humane Minds, which sometimes blunts even the Sword of Justice: But the Prosecutors do not expect to obtain a Judgment against the Prisoner in this Court, upon any other Foundation than a real Conviction of his Guilt, arising from Evidence clear, unexceptionable, and agreeable to the Laws of this Country.

The Laws of this Country are favourable, particularly favourable to Persons under Trial for their Life; and the Prosecutors are willing to allow the Prisoner the full Benefit of every Advantage that these Laws, or the Practice of the Court, can give him a Title to.

This being the Case, I cannot omit observing how improperly the Prisoner has rested the greatest Weight of his Defence upon clamorous Assertions of unfair Advantages, and unlawful Oppression upon the Part of the Prosecutors.

For, 1mo, tho' they were founded on Truth, they would not amount to a Defence against the Libel: One Crime cannot compensate another, nor an Injury received from the Prosecutor, wipe away the Guilt of the Prisoner.

But, 2do, these are Measures so inconsistent with that glorious Spirit of Liberty that reigns even among the Rulers in this Age and Nation, so inconsistent with the known Mildness and Clemency of his Majesty's Government, and the unfortunate Circumstances of the private Prosecutors in this Trial, that I can hardly persuade myself it would be necessary to make a more particular Answer to these Complaints.

Nevertheless, as I am sensible that nothing is more inseparable from noble and generous Minds, than a Desire to throw every Atom into the Balance on the Side of the Distressed, while there remains a Possibility of their Innocence; and that a simple Suspicion that the Prisoner had suffered any unnecessary Hardship, or been deprived of any Means of defending himself, might avail him more in the Event of this Trial, than the best Defence in the Mouth of the ablest Advocate; for that Reason, I will beg leave, in a few Words, to shew the Court what Foundation there is for such Complaints.

The first was, that the Prosecutors had deprived him of the Benefit of Council, by retaining most of the ablest Lawyers at the Bar.

To this I can make no stronger Answer, than what the Court has just now heard from the very Gentlemen who make the Complaint, and will be confirmed by these who are to support them. I am confident they will convince the Court, and all who hear them, of the Absurdity of such a Complaint, when urged by four Gentlemen of such Abilities.

In the second Place, it has been said, that the Prisoner had been deprived of his Liberty, and kept in close Confinement contrary to Law, debarred the Conversation of his Family and Friends, and denied Access to speak either to his Agents or Witnesses.

To all which it may be answered in the general, that the Laws of every well-governed Realm certainly allow the Confinement of Persons charged with capital Offences, in such Manner as they may be secured, till they can be brought to Trial: That no Limitation of this Rule has been introduced, either by Law or Practice in Scotland, other than what is contained in that valuable and salutary Statute of Parl. 1. Sess. 9. of King William, for preventing wrongous Imprisonment. No Part of which has been infringed in the present Case.— That the Prisoner has been, since he came to this Place, strictly confined, cannot appear unreasonable or oppressive to those who know that of late, in spite of the Vigilance of the Magistrates, several Criminals have escaped from their Gaol, whose Cases were less desperate than his, and who had no formidable Tribe of Friends or Accomplices to assist their Escape.

It will not appear surprising or unjust, that the Magistrates were cautious to give Access to any Persons, under the Colour of their being Agents or Witnesses, without a proper Warrant, when it appears from the Proof to be brought in the Trial, that, during the Prisoner's Confinement in the Garrison at Fort-William, he found Means to tamper with the principal Evidences, (tho' also in Custody, in order to prevent such undue Influence) by Emissaries who carried repeated Messages in his Name.

This, I think, might likewise appear to be a good Reason for the Officer commanding at Fort-William, to be particularly careful to interrupt and prevent these Practices, by denying Access to the Persons by whose Means they were known to be carried on.

But, as the Prisoner's Complaint has been loud upon this Head, I must beg leave to recal the Attention of your Lordships and the Jury to one of the Facts libelled, from which the Accession to the Murder is inferred; it is the supplying the Murderer with Money to enable him to fly from Justice; let it be remembered in what Manner it was executed; the Prisoner was indulged by the Officer commanding the Party that apprehended him, to speak with his Wife apart, before he was carried off: The Use he made of that Indulgence, was to give her the greatest Part of the Money in his Pocket, with Instructions to send it, and the Murderer's Cloaths, to the Place where it had been concerted he should wait for them.

The Indulgence upon the Part of the Officer was natural and humane; from the Circumstances that were then known, there was no Reason to suspect, that such Use would have been made of it; and by God's good Providence it is become a material Circumstance in the Investigation of the Source of the horrid Scene of Iniquity before the Court.

Now, as this Fact is admitted to be true, I must submit, what Foundation there is to complain of Severity: Whether the commanding Officer had Reason to repeat such Indulgences, or to give unlimited Access to his Family and Relations? Nevertheless, I am well authorised to say, that, at Fort-William, the Prisoner had many and great Indulgences of this Kind; that he was allowed to take the Air in the Garrison, and to converse with his Friends and Relations, in such Manner as was consistent with the safe Custody of his Person, and the Inquiries which were then carrying on by the proper Officers: And, both before and since he was brought to this Place, his Agent and Lawyers have had Access to be with him as often as applied for in a proper Way. He was not indeed allowed Access to some of his Servants and Dependents, from whom material Evidence was expected; with whom he had been tampering, and who had declared, they were overawed by his Authority: But, for that, I apprehend, no Apology is necessary.

In the last Place, your Lordships have heard much from the Council for the Prisoner, of unfair Means that have been used to traduce his Character in the Country, and to prepossess the World with an Opinion of his Guilt, by which he is said to be, in some Measure, condemned before he is brought to Trial.

I must beg your Lordships and the Jury to consider the Circumstances of the Prosecutors who are charged with these Practices. Has the disconsolate Widow, who has no Relation, and scarce an Acquaintance in this Corner of the Island, been so successful in prepossessing the Country with an Opinion of the Prisoner's Guilt? Or, are her Children, as yet incapable of Speech, fit to assist her in traducing his Character?

If the Relations of the Deceased had attempted it without Foundation, they would have gained no Credit with the impartial World; or would have been counterbalanced by the numerous Relations of the Prisoner, at least in this Country. Nevertheless, my Lords, I will admit that he labours under great Disadvantages upon this Head; a general Opinion of his Guilt has prevailed; and I am sorry to say, that he has many and strong Adversaries, who have been busy to establish it. Magna est veritas et prevalebit. The Horror of the Crime with which he is charged, has raised the Attention of every impartial Person, and made them industrious to discover the Authors of it.

The Blood of the Innocent has called aloud to Heaven for Justice; and, by a remarkable Concurrence of many Circumstances, brought to light by the Declarations of a Cloud of Witnesses, the Prisoner is clearly pointed out, not indeed as the Executioner, but the Contriver of the Murder, and the Aider and Abettor of the Murderer.

I will not say, that his Character in private Life concurs against him; I have no Authority from my Employers to assert it; nor will I assert what is not supported by Evidence. But I must say, that his Family and Connexions, his Character and Conduct in public Life, are so many Circumstances forming a Presumption almost equal to a Proof, in Support of the Charge brought against him. These are the most powerful Adversaries he has to struggle with, and from them that general Opinion of his Guilt has taken its rise, which is unjustly ascribed to the Prosecutors.

What has been said, my Lords, would naturally lead me, in the next Place, to lay open, to the Consideration of the Court, the particular Circumstances set forth in the Libel, from which the Prisoner's Guilt is inferred; and to take Notice of what has been said in his Defence upon that Head: But in this I have been well prevented by the Gentleman who spoke last; and therefore I shall only beg leave to add a few Observations to what has been said by him.

The Court has been informed, that Mr. Campbell of Glenure was appointed Factor on the forfeited Estate of Ardshiel; that the Prisoner is natural Brother to the forfeiting Person, in whose Absence he fell to have the Leading of his Dependents, and the Protection of his Family: Under that Character, as he had an Interest, so he had Opportunities of opposing the Factor in the Execution of his Office: That this Opposition grew by Degrees to the Height of premeditated Malice, which soon after broke out in repeated Threatnings, and at last ended in Assassination and Murder.

On the other Hand, the Council for the Prisoner have asserted, that there was no Enmity or Malice between Glenure and him; but contrarywise, a Confidence and Friendship, which they offer to support by Letters written by Glenure to him. Now, as this must appear to be inconsistent with the Charge in the Libel, I must beg leave, in a few Words, to reconcile them.

When Glenure was appointed Factor on the Estate of Ardshiel, he was so far from shewing any Disposition to be severe upon the Tenants, or to put Hardships on the Family and Friends of the forfeiting Person, that he treated them with the utmost Humanity: And the Prisoner in particular had the Address to insinuate himself so far into his Confidence, as to be employed in collecting the Rents, and advised with in the letting of the Farms; and, during this Period, the Letters referred to were written. But, as the Prisoner undoubtedly took Advantage of this Confidence to bring Tenants into the Estate that were entirely under his Influence, and to make separate Agreements with them in Favour of the forfeited Person and his Family, in Defraud of his Majesty and the Public; the Barons of Exchequer justly took Exception against this Part of Glenure's Conduct; and, to prevent such Abuses for the future, gave him particular Instructions in Writing, to remove the Prisoner from a beneficial Farm which he possessed, and also any other of the Tenants who were connected with, or under the Influence of the forfeiting Person and his Family.

These Instructions were executed in Part at Whitsunday 1751, by the Removal of the Prisoner from his Farm; but as he easily procured another in the Neighbourhood, and retained his Influence over the Estate by the Means of the Tenants he had placed there, he discovered no Resentment at that Time.

But so soon as the Factor, in the further Execution of his Instructions, began to take the proper Measures for removing, at Whitsunday 1752, some of these Tenants, he then took the Alarm: That was to pluck up his Interest by the Root, and entirely to put an End to his Influence. He therefore made the Cause of the Tenants his own, and every Method of Opposition was tried to prevent their Removal.

He no longer affected any Intimacy or Friendship with Glenure, but took every Occasion to raise Discontent and Jealousies against him, and represent him as an Oppressor in the Country. At last, without any Authority from the Tenants who were to be removed, he took a Journey to Edinburgh, on his own Expence, and applied, by a Bill of Suspension, to the Court of Session in their Names; in which the Factor's Conduct was set forth in such false and odious Colours, as procured a Sift or Stop of Execution of the Decree of removing, pronounced pronounced by the Sheriff, at the Factor's Suit; and, by the same false Suggestions, he so far imposed upon such of the Barons, as were then in Town, as to make them listen to his Complaints against Glenure.

When Glenure was informed of all this, he went directly to Edinburgh by great Journies; and, as soon as he had an Opportunity of being heard, he obtained a Removal of the Sift from the Court of Session; and satisfied the Barons, that he had conducted himself entirely by their Instructions. And, having been only two Days in Town, he returned with Expedition to the Country, Whit-sunday being then near at Hand.

This Scheme being frustrated by the Diligence and Activity of the Factor, Measures of a different Nature became necessary.

The Prisoner had no Hopes of being able to keep up his Influence and Interest in the Estate, while Glenure continued to have the Management of it; and if he should be able to get the better of him, he had Reason to think no other would be so hardy as to undertake it. It was therefore resolved to take him off, and that before he should remove the Tenants.

For the Execution of this Scheme, a very proper Assistant was at Hand; Allan Breck Stewart, a Person in desperate Circumstances, who had already forfeited his Life to the Laws, and inlisted himself an Enemy to the Liberties of his Country; a Dependent of the Family of Ardshiel; brought up from his Infancy under the Care and Authority of the Prisoner.

With this Assistance, no Method was left unattempted to stir up the Populace, or some of the hardiest among them, to cut off Glenure by Violence. Their Attachment to their Chief was made Use of for that Purpose. The Preservation of his Family, the Welfare of their Country, and even the very Being of the Clan, were represented as inconsistent with allowing Glenure to live. Reproaches were used to some, Rewards offered to others, and strong Insinuations made by the Prisoner to his own domestic Servants: But all this had not the desired Effect.

Wherefore, on Monday the 11th of May, Allan Breck, who had no other Occupation but wandering from House to House amongst his Friends, and was thereby well able to trace all Glenure's Motions, came to the Prisoner's House, when the Resolution appears to have been taken, that Allan himself should set out early next Morning to way-lay Glenure, and take the first Opportunity to perpetrate the Murder.

This was no difficult Task to one who knew the Country. There were but three Days to run to the Term for the Removing. In that Period, it was known that Glenure was to go from his own House, to the Sheriff's Court at Fort-William, and return to the Lands from whence the Tenants were to be removed. The Nature of the Country, and the several Ferries which he could not avoid, made it certain what Road he must take, and a Wood near the Lands afforded a proper Place for the bloody Deed. But Allan's Dress, being the French Uniform, was too remarkable for an Executioner of the Works of Darkness: He was therefore supplied with another, of the usual Colour and Fashion of the Country, by the Prisoner. The Court has heard how he then took his Station at a Place within Sight of Glenure's House, till he saw him set out for Fort-William, and then how he retired towards a Ferry, where it was known Glenure must pass in his Return.

In the mean Time, Messenger after Messenger is sent to Fort-William by the Prisoner, to get more particular Intelligence of Glenure's Motions. On the Night of the 13th, Allan came to a Place adjacent to the Ferry, and retired in the Morning into the Wood, from which he only came out to inquire if Glenure was past. About this very Time a Gun, belonging to the Prisoner, was amissing; and, in the Evening, Glenure was shot in the Wood.

When the Horror of the Murder threw all the Neighbourhood into Confusion and Consternation, no Surprise appeared upon the Prisoner, or in his Family. Their Attention was entirely fixed upon the Execution of the Measures that had been concerted for facilitating the Murderer's Escape: For that Purpose, a Messenger was dispatched to procure Money: Upon the Return of that Messenger (tho' the Prisoner was then in Custody) the Money he brought, with what more the Prisoner could afford, and also the French Cloaths, were, by the Prisoner's Direction, carried to a remote Place in the Mountains, where Allan Breck had for some Time waited in Expectation of them. At the same Time the Prisoner's Arms, which had been concealed near his House, were discovered; and the very Gun, which had been missing on the Day of the Murder, was found amongst them, with such Marks as showed that it had been lately discharged.

Thus, my Lords, as I had Occasion to mention some of the Facts to be proved, I could not resist shortly running over the whole, in order to lay them in one View before your Lordships and the Jury.

And, from this View, I apprehend it will now appear, imo, That the Friendship mentioned by the Council for the Prisoner, does not derogate from the Probability of his Guilt. It is a natural, and even a necessary Link of the Chain upon which the whole depends.

2do, It must occur to every one who hears these Facts, that tho' it is possible, barely possible, that several of them might have happened, tho' the Prisoner had been innocent of the Crime that is charged upon him; yet it is impossible to conceive, that such a long Series of Circumstances, connected and corresponding with one another, all concurring to answer the same End, should be the mere Effect of Chance, and not the Consequence of Intention and Design.

To take an Instance, it is very easy to believe, that Allan Breck might have changed his Cloaths, tho' he had not intended to murder Glenure; and that he might have lodged for some Nights near Glenure's House, tho' he had not intended to lie in wait for his Life: But when we find the same Allan Breck himself threatening to murder Glenure, and instigating others to do it; afterwards changing his Cloaths, lying in wait at different Times and in secret Places, appearing and anxiously inquiring for Glenure near the Time and Place of the Murder, and, as soon as it was committed, flying with Terror and Precipitation; who can doubt that he was the Murderer?

In the same Manner it may be well supposed, that the Prisoner might have lent Allan Breck a Suit of Cloaths, or given him Entertainment in his House, tho' he had not instigated him to commit the Murder. But if it is considered, that Allan Breck had no Quarrel with Glenure, other than what he was engaged in by the Influence and Authority of the Prisoner; that he carried the Resentment, on the Prisoner's Account, to such a Height, as to threaten to shoot Glenure, and joined the Prisoner in prompting others to do it; that when Glenure returned unexpectedly from Edinburgh, Allan Breck went immediately with the Intelligence to the Prisoner; that when he set out to lie in wait for Glenure, it was after a Consultation with, and being accoutred, for that Purpose, by the Prisoner; that the Gun with which he shot Glenure, appears to have been the Property of the Prisoner; that, after the Murder was committed, the Murderer relied for Money and Cloaths for his Escape, and actually did receive them from the Prisoner; I say, let all these concurring Circumstances be laid together, and who will doubt that he was instigated, aided and abetted by the Prisoner?

It is therefore in vain to urge, that one or more of these Facts, when taken separately, are not relevant to infer the Conclusion of his Guilt. It is from the Connexion and Concurrence of the whole, that the Conviction of his Guilt does arise: And it is only from a Proof of the whole, that the Prosecutors expect a Judgment against him.

In the last Place, the Council for the Prisoner have urged a Point of Law in his Defence, viz. That supposing the Facts which have been set forth, to be relevant to infer his Guilt; as he is only charged as an Accessary, he cannot be brought to Trial for the Crime, until the Principal be first convicted. In supporting of this, Texts have been quoted from the old Law-Books, Quoniam Attachiamenta and Regiam Majestatem. It has been said that this is the Law of England at this Day, and that Sir Geo. Mackenzie, in his Treatise of Crimes, has laid it down to be the Law of this Country.

As the Word Accessary is a Relative, which cannot be without a Principal to which it relates; it must be admitted, that no Evidence will be sufficient to convict an Accessary; which does not prove that the Crime was committed by the Principal, who is thereby convicted, to the Effect that Justice may be executed against the Accessary.

In this Sense the Maxim is just; but in the Sense in which it is pleaded for the Prisoner, I will take upon me to say, it is not supported by the Law of this Country: It is inconsistent with the Principles of public Policy, and subversive of all civil Society.

It is indeed a Maxim, and a good one, in the Law of Scotland, That no Person can be condemned, so as to suffer the Punishment appointed by Law for any Crime, unless he be present in Court, and have Opportunity to object to the Evidence by which it is to be proved against him. But, in the present Case, it is not alledged, that Allan Breck could be condemned, and brought to Justice, upon the Evidence that is to be brought in his Absence against the Prisoner. If he shall afterwards appear, and stand his Trial, the Proof, in so far as it relates to him, must again be repeated in his Presence, and it will be competent to him to object to every Part of it. But at present, as the Evidence is brought only to the Effect that the Prisoner may be punished, it is he only that can plead the Benefit of this Maxim; and it is competent to him to object, as well to that Part of the Evidence which fixes the Crime upon the Principal, as to that which proves his Accession.

As to the Law of England, I will not take upon me to argue from it; I do not pretend to be versant in it; nor do I apprehend it will be decisive in this Case. Nevertheless I have Reason to believe, that it is the Practice in that Part of the Kingdom to proceed to the Trial of the Accessary, after the Outlawry of the Principal; from which I would infer, that, in our Practice, either the Fugitation has the Effect of the Outlawry, or there is no Argument to be drawn from the one Law to the other.

With regard to the old Law-Books mentioned, it is well known to your Lordships, that they are generally believed to have been transcribed from the Laws of England, at a Time, indeed, when many salutary Alterations are thought to have been introduced into our Practice from thence; but that it is by no Means admitted, that they were ever ingrossed into the Body of our Laws, or that every Part of them has been confirmed by our Practice; many Instances of the contrary might be mentioned. But I forbear to consume the Time of the Court upon this Question, because the only Ground I can find to suspect, that it ever was held to be a Doubt in our Practice, is the 153 Act, 12 Parl. Ja. VI. which appears to have been made with a View to take away all Doubt for the future. The Words of this Statute are, That, in all Time cumming, all criminal Libeles shall containe, that Persones compleined on are Airt and Pairt of the Crimes libelled; quibilk shall be relevant to accuse them thereof; swa that na Exception or Objection take awaie that Part of the Libell in Time cumming. Which, in more modern Language, imports, that, for the future, no Objection shall be sustained against a Libel, which charges the Person accused of being Contriver, Adviser, Aiding, Abetting or Assisting, in a Crime that is otherwise relevant.

And Sir Geo. Mackenzie, in that very Passage of his Treatise on Crimes, which has been quoted in behalf of the Prisoner, tho' he lays down the Arguments which have been suggested on both Sides by the Authors who have treated this Question, he concludes with observing, that, in Robertson's Case, the Court found upon this Act, that an Accomplice might be tried, tho' the Principal had not been convicted nor fugitated.

Upon these Principles, the Practice has been uniform for many Years; and the present Circumstances of the Case do not seem to afford any Reason to deviate from it. For your Lordships and the Jury must be convinced, from the Facts which have been opened, that as the Murder was committed with the Advice, and at the Instigation of the Prisoner; so, but for his Aiding, Abetting and Assisting, the Murderer had been now also Prisoner at your Bar.

LORD ADVOCATE.

My Lord Justice-General,

I Stand up at this Time, to support the Reply that hath been made by the learned and ingenious Gentlemen on the same Side with me, to the Defences that have been offered for this Pannel; but, as it hath not been frequently practised by my Predecessors in Office to attend in Person at Circuit Courts of Justiciary, I beg leave, first of all, to say a few Words for myself, to give the Reason of my being now here: And I am persuaded that every one who now hears me, will believe me, when I declare, that, negatively, that hath not proceeded from from any particular Animosity against this unhappy Man in the Pannel, whom I never saw until this Day when he appeared there; neither is it singly because it is a horrid and atrocious Murder that is to be now tried; or that the Trial is to proceed upon indirect and circumstantial Evidence, because such Cases have often occurred. But the Truth is, that upon my first hearing of this Murder, in the Month of May last, of a Gentleman of this Country, the King's Factor upon certain of the forfeited Estates that had been but a few Weeks before annexed to the Crown unalienably, and the Produce of them appropriated by Law to the most salutary and beneficial Purposes, for the future Tranquillity of the united Kingdom in general, and for the immediate Advantage and Improvement of these Highland Parts of Scotland in particular; I was greatly shocked, and considered the Murderers, whoever they were, as having been guilty not only of a most horrid Crime against the Laws of God and Humanity, but, together with this, of a most audacious Insult against the most gracious and beneficent Acts of the King's Government, and of the whole Legislature; and, as far as in them lay, had endeavoured to make the World or the Public believe, that the civilizing of the Highlands of Scotland was a vain and impracticable Attempt; and, under this Impression, I then resolved, whenever a Discovery should be made of any Persons concerned in this Wickedness, to attend at the Trial where-ever it should be, and to do all that in me lay, consistently with Law and Justice, to convince the disaffected Part of the Highlands of Scotland, that they must submit to this Government, which they have several Times in vain endeavoured to subvert.

And now, as to this Trial itself, your Lordships have heard the Libel read, and some Parts of the Evidence which we expect to bring in Support of it, more particularly opened by the Gentlemen who spoke of the same Side with me; and none of these Things shall I now repeat; but only make a few Observations upon what hath been offered by the Council for the Pannel by Way of Defence.

And, first of all, in order to lay out of the Case what is foreign to the Merits of the Trial, the Pannel's Council have been pleased to take Notice of certain Hardships, or Grievances, that he has laid under, during his Confinement in the Garrison of Fort-William; and that, by the Precaution of the private Prosecutor, all the old experienced Council have been retained from giving him their Assistance. As to the former of which supposed Grievances, I am truly ignorant of the particular Facts upon which the Complaint is founded; but if it be true, that the Pannel was longer kept in close Confinement than he should have been, or until the commanding Officer was informed how the Law stood, the Pannel can be under no real Disadvantage on that Account in his present Trial; because he was first taken into Custody on Saturday the 16th of May, that is, about four Months ago: And supposing it true, that, for some few Days of so long a Period, People had not Access to him whom he had a mind to see, he has had full Time, when all these are deducted, to make the necessary Provision for his Defence.

As for the other alledged Grievance, I myself know certainly the Foundation of that; and so far is true, that after I had expected, for some Time, to receive from the Sheriff-depute of this County the Result of his Inquiries concerning the Murder of Glenure, and the Examinations he had taken on that Subject; these were, at length, brought to me at Edinburgh by certain of the Family of the Deceased, who had taken upon them, as it was very just and natural, to be Managers and Conductors of the Inquiry, and to cause to be brought before the Sheriff to be examined, all Persons who, according to their Information, could give any Light in the Affair; and, with the Examinations so taken, they brought along with them to me three learned Council, which was also very reasonable and usual, and, as in all other Cases, was to myself most acceptable, that we might jointly consult and deliberate, whether from these Examinations, and the Discoveries thereby made, there was Matter sufficient for bringing this Pannel to Trial; upon which Question we all agreed in the Affirmative: But these three Gentlemen, tho' very able in their Profession, were not all the experienced Council. And, as it is my constant Wish to see every Pannel as ably defended as his Cause will bear, it is with Pleasure that I now see this Pannel attended by four of my Brethren, who I am sure will omit nothing material for his Service.

Upon the Cause itself, there is, in reality, no Place for a Debate on the Relevancy of the Libel; nor does there appear to me to be any Difference betwixt us concerning the Interlocutor that we desire or expect to receive from your Lordships; for the Gentlemen of Council for the Pannel have admitted the Atrocity of the Crime charged upon him as strongly as I am able to express it: And they farther admitted, as they must have done, that the charging the Pannel as being guilty, or Art and Part of that Crime, is relevant to infer the Conclusion, and necessarily requires his being remitted to the Knowledge of an Assize, whether he is so guilty or not.

And, on the other Hand, I readily admit to them, that the laudable and just Practice of this Court, of later Years, hath been, not to find or determine a particular Relevancy upon certain Facts or Circumstances set forth in the Subsumption, or minor Proposition of the Libel, which is indeed, in some Measure, to pre-occupy the Province of the Jury, who are the Judges of the Fact, and is also dangerous to the Course of Justice; because, when a Number of Facts and Circumstances were found jointly relevant to infer the Pannel's Guilt, if the least material of these should not be proved, altho' a more pregnant Circumstance, that was not specially libelled or expressed in the Interlocutor, should come out upon the Evidence, if the Jury followed the Directions of that Interlocutor, and adapted their Verdict to it, the Pannel behoved to be acquitted, tho' in Reality, and in their Opinion, he was guilty.

It was not, therefore, with Intent that your Lordships should give your Opinion upon the Relevancy and Sufficiency of the Facts and Circumstances set forth in this Libel, that these were so particularly there inserted; but this was done agreeably to some of the best Precedents in the Records of this Court, for the Furtherance of Justice, both in respect of the Prosecutors and of the Pannel: For the former, that as the Evidence to be brought is circumstantial, the Jury may be the better enabled to ponder the several Circumstances, and connect them together, and attend to the Evidence that shall be brought for Proof of them; and for the sake of the Pannel, that he, knowing the principal pal Facts that were to be proved in Support of the Charge against him, might prepare the Evidence for his Vindication, and for explaining those Appearances of Guilt with which he was loaded, in the best Manner he should be able.

Another Thing concerning the Interlocutor to be pronounced by your Lordships, in which I most readily agree with the Pannel's Council, is, that he should be allowed to prove the several Facts alledged for his Defence, and every pertinent Fact or Circumstance, that he, or his Council think, may be available for proving his Innocence.

And thus far we seem to be agreed on the Terms of the Interlocutor, if the Trial is at all to proceed; against which one previous Objection hath been made, namely, That this Pannel, who is only said to be charged as Accessary, cannot be tried before the Principal, Allan Breck, be first discussed: In Support of which Objection, they have alledged certain Passages in the old Books of the Law, and Sir Geo. Mackenzie in his Criminals, Title Art and Part. Parag. 9.

But to this I answer, first of all, that Sir George Mackenzie himself, in the Passage referred to, furnishes an Answer to the Objection; for, after stating the Question, whether Accessaries can be sued till the chief Actors be first discussed, and quoting the Passages in the Regiam Majestatem, and other old Books that favour the Negative, he adds a Decision of that Question in this Court in these Words: "Notwithstanding all which, Charles Robertson being pursued as Accessary to the casting down of a House, which was libelled to have been cast down by his Sons and Servants at his Command, the Justices found, that he might be put to the Knowledge of an Inquest, altho' the Children and Servants were not first discussed; because the Act appointing a Libel to be relevant, bearing Art and Part, did abrogate the foresaid; 4th Verse, 26th Chap. L. 4. R. M. since such as are pursued, as Art and Part, are all Principals." This was the Decision of the Court and the Reason of it, founded on the Act 1592. Chap. 153. which enacts, "That, in Time coming, all criminal Libels shall contain, that Persons complained on are Art and Part of the Crimes libelled; which shall be relevant to accuse them thereof; so that no Exception or Objection take away that Part of the Libel in Time coming."

The Author proceeds in the same Passage to recite some Part of the Argument previous to this Decision; and says, "That the Advocate alledged, it were absurd, that the King should be judged by the Absence of the Principal Party; to which it was answered, that the King was not prejudged, seeing, if the Principal Party were discussed and denounced fugitive, the Accessary might be proceeded against."

Now, this is what hath been done in the present Case: Allan Breck Stewart hath been called upon to stand Trial for his Part in the same Offence, and hath been denounced fugitive for not appearing to abide his Trial; which is discussing him as far as the Laws of this Land admit of, when his Person is not in Custody.

But further, it is to be observed, that Allan Breck is not charged in this Libel with being the Principal, and this Pannel as only Accessary to the Murder of the deceased Glenure; they are both charged in the same Words with being guilty, Actors, or Art and Part of the said heinous Crime; that is, in the Terms of the Statute of K. Ja. VI. just mentioned: And, tho' it be true, that, in the Subsumption or Recital of the Facts, it is said, that the actual Murder, or Firing upon the Deceased, was committed by Allan Breck, it is also said, that this was done in Revenge of the Quarrel which this Pannel took up against the Deceased, and in Pursuance of a Concert or Conspiracy betwixt the Pannel and Allan Breck, to take away the Life of Glenure; and such being the Case, they are in reality both Principals. By the Law itself (L. 15. ad legem Corneliam de sicariis) mandator cædis pro homicida habetur: And the learned Matheus, de criminibus, in his prolegomena, c. 1. § 12. qui mandant scelus, quique mandatum exequentur, utrique rei sunt, & ordinariæ quidem pœnæ subjugandi; and, for Proof of this, brings many Arguments and Authorities; and, inter alia, cum quis alicui mandat scelus, mandantem quidem caput esse; mandatarium vero manum, & instrumentum mandantis. Hinc sacro quoque oraculo cædes Uriæ Davidi impingitur, 2 Sam. xii. 9. in which Text the Words of Nathan the Prophet to David are, Thou hast killed Uriah the Hittite with the Sword.

And indeed it seems not to be agreeable to Reason or natural Justice, to hold, that, if this Allan Breck, for Instance, the actual Manslayer in the present Case, instead of making his Escape beyond Sea, as probably he hath, had died a natural Death, and so become out of the Reach of all human Laws, before this Trial could be brought on, and supposing the most direct and positive Evidence could be brought, that Breck committed the Murder libelled, by the Counsel, Command, or Direction of this Pannel, or, as our old Laws express it, out-bounded by him, that yet this Pannel could not be brought to Justice, because truly, tho' the Author, he was not the very actor cædis.

But, that such is not the Law of Scotland at this Day, besides the Case mentioned by Sir George Mackenzie, I need only remind your Lordships of the very last Trial in the Court of Justiciary at Edinburgh, of James Drummond Macgregor, for being guilty, or Art and Part of the Crimes of Hamesucken, forcible Marriage, and Rape: For all which the Trial proceeded against him; and tho', in the Crime of Hamesucken, he and his Accomplices might be all equally Principals; yet, in the forcible Marriage and Rape, Robert his younger Brother, to provide whom with a Wife and a Fortune that Wickedness was committed, was no doubt the principal Party and Actor; and yet Robert had been no otherwise discussed than Allan Breck has been in the present Case, that is, called upon to abide his Trial for these Offences, and pronounced a Fugitive for not so doing.

As for the Argument which the Council for the Pannel have chiefly insisted upon, and which they have professedly, and I think not improperly, calculated for the Jurors who now hear us, namely, to impugn the Relevancy or Sufficiency of the several Facts and Circumstances libelled to infer the Pannel's being guilty, or Art and Part of the Murder in Question; I do not chuse at present to enter particularly into that Argument, but to reserve that till we come to sum up the Evidence to the Jury, such as it shall come out in their Presence; which may possibly in some Articles be weaker, and in others stronger, than what is set forth in the Libel from the Materials that we then had before us; but, in order to shorten our Work at the End of a long Trial, and to engage the Attention of the Jury Jury to the Evidence that shall be brought before them, in Support of this Libel, I beg Leave now to make a general Observation or two for their sake.

It hath been admitted by the Council for the Pannel, that, even in the Trial of Crimes, circumstantial Evidence, when clear, is not only competent, but perhaps the most satisfying and convincing Proof of any; and it was well said, 'that Circumstances are inflexible Proofs, that Witnesses may be mistaken or corrupted; but Things can be neither:' To which I will add, that the Competency of such Evidence, for inferring the ordinary capital Punishment for Murder, was solemnly decided in the Court of Justiciary at Edinburgh, in February 1718, in the Trial of Stewart Abercrombie, for the Murder of Alexander Hay, Son to Mr. Robert Hay of Naughton; in which the Argument was treated with great Learning, and full Informations on the Debate written by the now Lord President of the Court of Session, who was the Profecutor, and by the now Lord Justice-Clerk, who was of Council for the Pannel. And I mention that Case, which I have lately perused in the Record, to give your Lordships and the Jury a Specimen of a circumstantial Evidence of Murder, that, in its general Nature or Complexion, was very similar to the present: The Case there, in short, was, that some Days before the Murder, Mr. Hay the Deceased, and Stewart Abercrombie the Pannel, had been in Company, when Hay complained of an Affront given him by Abercrombie; upon which nothing then ensued: But, just before the Murder, which happened about Nine at Night of the 6th of December 1717, Abercrombie was drinking in a Tavern near the Head of Black-Friers Wynd, when Mr. Hay came into the House, and made one of the Servants call him out into another Room; Abercrombie went to Hay, leaving his Hat in the Room where his Company were; they went out together near to a Lamp at the Head of the Wynd, where a Scuffle ensued betwixt them, without either of them drawing, tho' they had both Swords; and, during this Scuffle, Abercrombie drew his Sword, and run Hay through the Body, who was heard cry; he was murdered, and had got foul Play, his Sword not having been drawn; and soon after dropt down dead: Abercrombie was still without his Hat, and was seen by no Person who knew him during the Scuffle; they only saw the Man without the Hat stab the other who had one; and, after he had given the Wound, instead of returning to his Company where he had left his Hat, called at another Tavern, where he borrowed a Hat, and went directly to his own House, and to Bed, where he was, that same Night, apprehended.

In the Libel against him, all the Circumstances are particularly set forth, and, in the Information for the Profecutor, there is the following Passage, which I have extracted, and beg Leave here to read. "The Pannel trusted to the Darknes of " the Night, and Secrecy in which he had committed this Crime, as sufficient to cover him
" from the Eye of Justice, and prevent his Punishment; but that same wise Providence, which " sometimes leaves Men to execute their wicked
" Designs in such a Manner, and under such Circumstances, as emboldens them to go on with " Hopes of Impunity, frequently brings those " very Crimes to Light, by a wonderful Discovery
" of unforeseen Incidents and Circumstances con-
" curring to fix the Guilt upon the Criminal, with " more Force of Conviction and Strength of Evidence, than two concurring Witnesses could " give, on Purpose to convince the World how " little Darknes or Secrecy are to be relied on,

" either as Covers or Encouragements to Wick-
" edness.

" Such is the Case of this Pannel: Had it not " been by the small Chance of his leaving his Hat
" in the Room with the Company where he was,
" when he came forth to perpetrate this Crime,
" he might have gone off undiscovered.—But
" that small Accident, first indeed taken Notice
" of by a Child, who observed the Hat in the " Cellar, and knew it to be Mr. Abercrombie's,
" led those concerned to a full Discovery of such
" other concurring Circumstances, as supposing
" no positive Proof of the Fact should appear,
" are more than sufficient to condemn the Pannel
" in the Eyes of every Judge and Jury, and of " every Person else who will lay himself open to " receive Impressions from Truth."

The Jury in his Case were of that Disposition; he was convicted of the Murder, and suffered for it.

Another remarkable Instance of this Nature, was the Case of Alexander Maccowan, who was tried by two of your Lordships here present, at the Circuit held at Perth in May 1750, for the most horrid Murder of Margaret Maclean, and of Margaret his own Child by her, an Infant of about three or four Years of Age, committed in August 1749, not far from Crief, in the Shire of Perth, in a Thicket of Wood, where he left their Bodies, after having carried away the Money and Cloaths which the said Margaret had along with her in a Bundle. Before the Bodies were discovered, they were so mangled, that they could not be known, otherwise than by the Cloaths which were on the Body of the Woman, which her Relations could swear to: The Evidence against the Pannel was wholly circumstantial, and consisted chiefly of there being found in his Possession, after the Murder, a Pair of Stockings, a linnen Shirt, and a muslin Stock, that were proved to have been in Possession of the Deceased when she set out for Edinburgh; where she had told her Relations, she had been invited by the Pannel to go along with him, in order to their being married together; and, upon this Evidence, he was convicted of this double Murder and Robbery; and, upon your Lordships Sentence, suffered the Punishment that he so well deserved.

My Lords, it appears to me, that the present Case affords a fresh Instance, similar to these I have mentioned, of a providential Discovery of Circumstances, serving to fix the Guilt of Accession to this Murder upon the now Pannel, notwithstanding all the Precautions by him used to conceal it: His Enmity against Glenure, for removing him from his own Possession in May 1751, and discontinuing to employ him in the Management of the Ardshiel Estate, was well known, as likewise the various Efforts he made to prevent the Removing of certain Tenants of Ardshiel in the Month of May last; and also his Intimacy and close Connexion with Allan Breck Stewart, who disappeared abruptly immediately after the Murder, and to whom the Voice of the whole Country imputed the actual Murder itself: But as, when that happened, this Pannel was at his own House, at the Distance of one Mile from the Place of the Murder, the more direct and immediate Evidence of his Accession to it was long concealed: His Wife and his Daughter being examined upon Oath before the Sheriff-depute of this County, on the 22d and 25th of May last, touching what they knew concerning the Murder, deposed, That Breck Stewart left the Pannel's House on the Morning of Tuesday the 13th of May, dressed in his French Cloaths, and that the Pannel had no such black or dark coloured short Coat, as Breck had truly left his House dressed in, for three Quarters of a Year before that Time; but at length, above a Month after this Examination, namely, on the 30th of June last, Alexander Stewart the Packman, being examined before the Sheriff-substitute at Fort-William, and after being confronted with a Friend of his own, to whom he had been muttering some Part of the Truth, spoke out the whole Truth, as it is set forth in the Libel; and particularly, that from this very Wife of the Pannel he received, on the Evening of Saturday the 16th, at the Pannel's House, Allan Breck's French Cloaths, to be carried to him at the Place of his Retreat, together with the five Guineas, which the Pannel had been at great Pains to scrape together, after sending the Packman Express, for that Purpose, to his Friend William Stewart at Fort-William, and which he sent to Breck at the Place of his Retreat, with a declared Intent to put him in Condition to make his Escape, for that he must be suspected of the Murder: This Discovery was the first Thread which the Kindred of the Deceased got hold of to lead them to a more full Detection; and was afterwards confirmed by the Examination of the Bouman, who told the Particulars in the Libel recited, and about whose House the very Cloaths were found, the Property of the Pannel, which Breck had brought from the Pannel's, and left with the Bouman.

And as for the Importance of these particular Discoveries, which the Pannel's Council have endeavoured to diminish in the Manner that circumstantial Evidence is always impugned, by observing that each Article taken by itself is inconclusive; I may readily admit this, and yet, from the Result of the whole Circumstances, there may be convincing and irresistible Evidence. And to mention, at present, only these two material ones, of the Cloaths furnished, and the Money sent to Breck Stewart, before and after the Murder respectively; I do not say, that if a Man lends his Neighbour a Coat, in which the Borrower being dressed, two or three Days after commits a Murder of a Person who was his own Enemy in Time past, that this will afford any Evidence of Privity or Accession to that Murder in the Lender of the Coat; neither do I say, that if a Man's Friend or Relation has unfortunately committed a Murder, and one shall aid him, by Money, or otherwise, to make his Escape, that this will render such Friend accessory to, or chargeable with the Crime of Murder, tho' he is doubtless guilty of an Offence or Misdemeanor in its own Kind; but the Force of these united Circumstances in the present Case, with the others charged in the Libel against this Pannel, consists in the Connexion of the whole together; it was the Pannel's proper Quarrel that rendered the Deceased obnoxious to Breck Stewart; the Pannel had discovered and expressed his Enmity against the Deceased, and had uttered Threatnings against his Life; Breck Stewart, his intimate Friend, was a fit Instrument for such wicked Purpose; he had espoused all the Pannel's Opinions and Dispositions towards Glenure; he was, himself, not in Condition to remain in this Country, and was already provided with the Means of Subsistence in foreign Service; and to this Man it was, in the very Heat of a Contest with the Deceased about removing certain Tenants which this Pannel had put in, that he furnished the Dress, and, as we likewise believe, the Arms wherewith he perpetrated this foul Murder; immediately after which he retires to a desert Place, not far off, there to wait for a Supply of Money that was to be sent him; and it is especially to be remarked by your Lordships, and the Jury, that, as the Libel bears, at this Place, Breck told the Bouman, that he must go to Fort-William with a Letter to William Stewart, Merchant there, who he said would give him Money upon Receipt of the Letter; and this William Stewart was another intimate Friend of the Pannel's, and the very Person to whom, the Day after the Murder, the Pannel sent the Packman Express to get five Guineas for the Use of Breck, who was about to leave the Country; this Circumstance affords a Demonstration of a Concert betwixt the Pannel and Breck before they last parted at the Pannel's House on the Monday Night or Tuesday Morning preceding; after which the Pannel allows he never saw Breck; for how otherwise could Breck have known, that, for such a small Sum as he wanted, the Pannel was to have Recourse to this William Stewart, who lived twenty Miles distant from him? and this Circumstance serves to connect the Facts which immediately preceded the Murder, with those which immediately ensued it.

But I am going too far at present, on the Considerations that will be proper for the Jury after the Proof shall have been brought before them; and shall now conclude, hoping it will appear to your Lordships that no sufficient Objection hath been offered on the Part of the Pannel, why his Trial should not proceed, and that you will make such Interlocutor as, upon that Supposition, the Council on both Sides appear to be agreed in.

Mr. MILLAR for the Pannel.

My Lord Justice-General,

I Appear as Council for the Prisoner at the Bar: And, as I am sensible this Trial must draw out to a very great Length, and occasion a great deal of necessary Trouble to your Lordships, and the Jury, I shall endeavour, in what I am to offer, to avoid Repetition; and I shall confine myself to such Observations as most affected my own Mind upon reading the Indictment, which is the only Rule by which I can judge of their Importance. And, 2dly, I shall offer a few Considerations by Way of Reply to what has been said by my Lord Advocate and his Assistants, in Support of the Indictment.

The Prisoner is charged before your Lordships as Accessary, Art and Part of the Murder of the late Mr. Campbell of Glenure; a Crime of so foul and black a Nature, and attended with such particular Circumstances, as has not only justly excited the Attention of the Public, but also a more than ordinary Keeness and Ardour in the numerous Friends and Relations of the Deceased, in carrying on this Prosecution.

I would not chuse to make any Reflections upon their Conduct. I sincerely sympathize with them for their Loss, and feel the full Force of their just Revenge

Revenge against the guilty Person, whoever he is. But, my Lord, in such a Case, the Passion which we at first cherish as just and honourable, may get the better of us; and if the Restraints of Reason and strict Honour are not applied, will insensibly rise into Rage, and precipitate us into Measures inconsistent with Law, and the Dictates of cool Humanity.

My Lord, it is in such Circumstances as these, that even the Innocent may sometimes be brought into Danger. And in such Circumstances it becomes the Duty, and an honourable Part of the Duty of one of my Profession, to appear for the Accused, to assist him in his just Defence, and to obviate, by all the Remedies which the Law has provided for the Security of Innocence, any Disadvantage he may be brought under, by public Prejudice, or by the Number, Power, or superior Address of his private Prosecutors.

This Consideration determined me to appear in this Trial, and to give my poor Assistance in the Defence of the Prisoner; to which I was further prompted by my Lord Advocate himself, who had the Generosity so far to interest himself for the Pannel, as to recommend it to me, amongst others, to appear in his Defence.

And first, I observe, that it is admitted by the Prosecutors in their Indictment, that the barbarous Murder therein charged was perpetrated by one Person, to wit, by Allan Breck Stewart: And taking him to be the guilty Person, his Life is, no doubt, justly forfeited to public Justice, tho' in the mean Time he may have escaped from the Execution of the Law. The first Question therefore that must naturally occur, is, what are the Circumstances in this Case, which should lead your Lordships or the Jury to believe, that any other Person than Allan Breck, and particularly the Prisoner at the Bar, was also guilty of this foul and detestable Murder?

It is a Rule in Philosophy, in all our Inquiries into natural Causes and Effects, to rest satisfied so soon as one Cause or Principle is discovered, sufficient for answering and solving all Appearances in the Effect. This Rule, I am sure, with great Propriety, may, and ought to be applied to any moral or judicial Inquiry, such as the present. If a Crime is committed, there must, no doubt, be a Criminal; and if the Crime itself, or the Circumstances which attended the Commission of it, are of such a Nature, as must necessarily infer the Aid and Assistance of others towards the Commission of it; as the Appearances in such Case will not be answered by the Discovery of one guilty Person, the Mind will remain unsatisfied till further Discovery is made of the supposed Partners of the Crime.

But, my Lord, where the Guilt of one will account for the whole Appearances, for every Circumstance connected with the Crime, I apprehend it is a Rule in Morals, it is a Rule in Law, and in sound Reason, to presume, that no other but that one Person was concerned in the Commission of the Crime.

This Presumption is founded in the Respect which we owe to human Nature. For, my Lord, wicked and corrupted as Mankind are, thank God, a Murderer, a wilful deliberate Murderer is still a Monster in the Species; and it is undutiful in us, and against all the Rules of right Reason, to carry our Suspicions, far more our Prejudices, further than the corpus delicti, and the Circumstances attending it, do necessarily point out.

From this Consideration, I hope, the Prisoner comes to your Lordships Bar, attended and aided, not only by the general, legal Presumption of Innocence, but with this other more special Presumption, that no other Person was concerned in this horrid Murder but that one Person, whoever he was, who gave the fatal Shot by which Glenure died. And this Presumption, I flatter myself, will be present with your Lordships, and in the Mind of every Juryman, till contrary Proof and Evidence shall beat it out: Which we flatter ourselves will be so far from happening, that, on the contrary, in the Course of the Evidence, it will gather Strength, and at last terminate in that Issue, which, from the holy Providence of God, the Innocent may with Confidence expect.

My Lord, it is not my Intention to anticipate, or to argue upon Evidence which has not yet been brought: But, as my Lord Advocate has set forth, in his printed Indictment, a Variety of Circumstances, from which he would infer the Prisoner's Accession to this Murder; I must beg leave to take Notice of some of them, in order, if possible, to dispel that popular and illegal Prejudice, which I observe in most Cases, especially in the more atrocious Crimes, does attend the unhappy Person who is brought to your Lordships Bar.

When the Mind is enraged to a high Degree, it naturally seeks after, and is impatient to find, an Object for its Resentment. The Prisoner first occurs, and there we are too apt to fix our Opinion of Guilt, and alongst with it our Resentment; especially when our Confidence in the public Prosecutor is so great, as it justly is at present in the honourable Gentleman who fills that Office.

This, if I mistake not, is the Source of popular Prejudice against the unhappy Prisoner. All of us are subject to it, because it arises from, or at least is incident to human Nature; but however innocent it may be in the Crowd that surrounds us, it is dangerous, it is criminal, if received and entertained in the Mind of a Juryman. For their sakes therefore, I will beg leave to make a few Observations upon the Facts charged in the Indictment, that so the Jury, who for some Time have had the printed Indictment in their Hands, may, before they proceed to Trial, be also possessed of such Facts and Observations for the Pannel, as will, if attended to, entirely take off the Force of the Circumstances which are charged against him.

And first, it will be observed, that the Murder is not said to have been committed from sudden Passion, or chaud mella, as the Law expresses it, but to have been premeditated and resolved upon for some Days before it was committed. Now, to render Malice of so high a Nature probable, some very strong Ground or Cause ought to have been assigned for it; and what Cause is here mentioned? Why, 1st, because Glenure had accepted of a Factory from the Crown upon the forfeited Estate of Ardshiel. 2dly, Because Glenure had removed the Pannel from the Farm of Glenduror at Whitsunday 1751. And lastly, Because he was proceeding to remove certain other of the Tenants of Ardshiel, at the Whitsunday 1752.

The first of these could not be the Ground of the Resentment which gave Occasion to the Murder; because Glenure had been in that Office for more than three Years before the Murder; during the greatest Part of which Time, the Pannel and he lived in Friendship and Intimacy together; as will be clearly proved by a long Course of Letters which passed betwixt them. The Pannel's own Removal from Glenduror could as little be the Cause of such prepense Malice; for the Removal was voluntary, and the Possession yielded to the succeeding Tenant, in Consequence of a previous Concert between the Pannel and Glenure. And far less could the intended Removal of the other Tenants at Whitsunday last, give Occasion to the Conspiracy and Murder charged against the Pannel. Such deep Resentment could not have arisen from so trifling a Cause in the Mind even of a wicked Man, much less one of the Pannel's Disposition and Character.

2dly, The Circumstance of Allan Breck's having changed his Cloaths at the Pannel's House before the Murder, tho' it has been chiefly insisted on for inferring the Pannel's Accession to the Murder, is equally inconclusive. Allan Breck's Situation, as a Defserter from his Majesty's Service to the Rebels, and afterwards to the Service of France, made it necessary, so often as he came into this Country, to sculk amongst his Friends, of which the Pannel unfortunately happened to be one. It will be proven, that for this Purpose, he used to lay aside his French Dress, and borrow the Dress of the Country, such as is described in the Indictment, from any of his Friends, where he happened to visit or reside; and that he had gone about from House to House, changing his Dress in this Manner, since the Beginning of March last, and particularly had been furnished with such Change of Dress at the Pannel's House, about the Beginning of April, where he happened to be for a Night or two, in the Course of his Visits through the Country.

My Lord, if these Facts are proven, it is impossible any Weight can be laid upon the Circumstance of his having also changed his Dress at the Pannel's House, upon the Monday and Tuesday before the Murder happened. If a Disguise had been intended, would the Pannel, who is admitted to be a Man of more than ordinary Discernment, have furnished his own Cloaths, which were known to the whole Neighbourhood, and by which, if the Murderer was apprehended, he himself behaved infallibly to be discovered? Would he have dressed up the Assassin before his numerous Family and Servants, in the very Dress which was to serve for his Disguise, two different Days before the Plot was to be executed? Or would he have allowed him to traverse the Country for some Miles round, from Tuesday, when he left the Pannel's, till Thursday when the Murder was committed, in the very Dress which was intended to disguise and conceal him? Such a Conduct is unaccountable, and cannot be ascribed to the Pannel, whom the Prosecutors themselves represent as a Man of the deepest Design and Artifice.

My Lord, the next material Circumstance in the Indictment, which I would beg leave to take Notice of for the sake of the Jury, is the Correspondence which passed betwixt the Pannel and Allan Breck the supposed Murderer, after his Retreat to Koalisnacoan.

This Circumstance, I own, at first Sight, seems to carry great Weight against the Pannel, because it imports not only Aid and Assistance given by the Pannel to the supposed Murderer in order to enable him to make his Escape, but also a previous Knowledge of the Place to which he retired immediately after committing the Murder. But your Lordships and the Jury have heard how the Force of this Circumstance is taken off. The Pannel knew nothing of the Place of Allan Breck's Retreat till the Day after the Murder, when he received a Message from him by Donald Stewart, giving him Notice of the Place to which he had retired, and beseeching the Pannel to send him a small Supply of Money, in order to carry him off the Country. This Message the Pannel has undertaken, and hopes to prove by a Train of unquestionable Evidence; and if he shall be able to bring a satisfying Proof of the Fact, it will at once strip the Indictment of the only Circumstance in it which points at a previous Conspiracy betwixt the Pannel and Allan Breck the supposed Murderer.

And indeed, my Lord, independent of the Proof which is proposed to be brought by the Pannel, it cannot but appear unaccountable to your Lordships and the Jury, that a Person of the Pannel's Sagacity, if he had been in Concert with Allan Breck for several Days before the Commission of the Murder, should not have provided the necessary Means of Breck's Escape till after the Crime was committed, when he could no longer correspond with him, without the Interposition of others, and consequently without the Hazard of a Discovery. The Pannel could have had no Difficulty to have furnished Allan Breck with a little Money before the Commission of the Murder, in order to make his Escape immediately. He knew Breck's Circumstances, and that he had nothing to carry him off the Country, and Breck would not have engaged in such a Service without receiving from his Employer the necessary Supplies for his own Safety; and supposing the Pannel had not been in Cash upon the Monday, when they last parted, yet he would have taken care before the Friday to have been sufficiently provided for answering Breck's Demands. And yet, upon the Friday after the Murder, when the Message came from Breck, we find from the Indictment, that the Pannel was obliged to send in to Fort-William, at a considerable Distance from his own House, in order to borrow the Trifle of Money which was wanted, and sent the Day following to Allan Breck.

How far the Pannel was to blame in sending Money to Allan Breck, who was his Relation and had been his Ward, in order to enable him to make his Escape, depends upon the Opinion he then had of his being guilty or innocent of the Murder. If he believed him guilty, it was no doubt a very great Crime in the Eye of Law; but such Assistance furnished for the Escape of a Murderer, tho' knowingly, will not, in Law, or in the Nature of the Thing, infer Accession to the Murder, unless it had been previously promised as an Encouragement to the Commission of the Murder, which, from what has been said, appears could not have been the Case.

With regard to the Threatenings, which is the only remaining Branch of the Indictment of any Weight against the Pannel, I could have wished my Lord Advocate had been so good, as to have condescended upon the particular Expressions, and upon the Times and Places when and where these were uttered. As that is not done, it is impossible the Pannel can make any other Answer but a general Denial of this Part of the Charge: And as he is conscious he never entertained the barbarous Resolution, he hopes, and is persuaded, no Proof will be brought of any Expression uttered by him, which could import a deliberate Threatening to take away the Life of an innocent Gentleman.

My Lord, having touched upon a few of the most material Circumstances in the Indictment, which I thought material for the Jury to have in their View, in order to direct their Attention, during the Course of the Evidence, to the Plan of the Pannel's Defence, I shall next proceed to what at present falls more immediately under your Lordships Consideration, and that is, the Objection which has been moved to the Competency of this Prosecution.

It has been objected, that the Indictment does not charge the Pannel as a Principal in the Murder of Glenure, but only as a remote Accessary, by previous Counsel, and subsequent Aid and Assistance given to the Murderer in his Escape; and that tho' such Accessary is equally criminal and punishable with the Principal, yet that he cannot be brought to Trial, till the Principal be first tried and convicted.

This Objection was stated to your Lordships upon the Authority of the old Books of our Law, of Sir George Mackenzie, our only Author upon Crimes, and of several of the foreign Doctors who treat of this Subject; and, with your Lordships Permission, I will read some of the Passages upon which the Objection is founded, as I have taken them down from the Books.

Reg. Maj. lib. 4. cap. 26. de ordine cognitionis in criminibus.

Si duo homines fuerint implacitati, unus de principali furto, et alter de præcepto, primò debet ille qui defamatur de facto, quam ille qui factum illud committi præcepit, implacitari.

To which the learned Sir John Skeene subjoins the following Annotation, Complices criminis non possunt accusari ante principalem malefactorem, nam sicut remoto principali removetur accessorium, ita absoluto malefactore absolvuntur complices et consentientes.

Quoniam attachiamenta, cap. 83. de receptatione latrocinii.

Nullus defamatus tanquam receptator latrocinii debet puniri, antequam malefactor fuerit convictus vel attayntus de latrocinio illo; et hinc fiet ut dicitur, consentientes et agentes pari pœna puniuntur.

Statuta Davidis 2di, cap. 19. Complices non debent puniri ante principalem malefactorem.

Ordinatum fuit coram rege in pleno parlamento apud Sconam per regem et communitatem regni, quod supersedendum est de receptatore alicujus malefactoris judicandi sive appellandi, quosque receptatus judicetur. Et si receptatus quietus fuerit, receptator quietus sit sine aliqua alia assisa. Si autem receptatus damnatus fuerit, receptator habet assisam.

And, agreeable to the Doctrine laid down in these old Statutes, Sir George Mackenzie, in his Criminals, Tit. Art and Part, § 9. gives it as his Opinion, "That the chief Actor must be first discussed, and either found guilty or assolized, before such as are accessary can be pursued." Which he supports not only by the Authority of the old Books of our Law, already quoted, but also of many of the foreign Doctors.

'Tis true, he adds, that notwithstanding what is there laid down, Charles Robertson was tried before the Justices, as Accessary to the casting down a House, tho' his Sons and Servants, who cast down the same, escaped, and were not tried. But Sir George is far from approving of that Decision, and urges many strong Reasons against it, and in Support of the Doctrine he had formerly laid down.

The foreign Doctors also have generally gone into this Distinction, with respect to the Order of trying the Principal and Accessary. I shall only quote the Words of Julius Clarus, quæst. 90. n. 6. who lays it down as a Rule, Quando proceditur contra aliquem tanquam quod præstiterit auxilium delicto, debet primo in processu constare principalem deliquisse.

To all these allow me to add the Authority of the Law of England, which, upon a Point of this Nature, supposing it not fixed by any Statute or Custom of our own, will, no doubt, have greater Weight with your Lordships than the Opinions of any private Lawyers.

Thus Sir Matthew Hale, in his Pleas of the Crown, ch. 57. concerning the Order of Proceeding against Accessaries, lays down the following Propositions, as fixed Rules in the Law of England:

"The Accessary may be indicted in the same Indictment with the Principal, and that is the best and most usual Way.

"The Accessary shall not be constrained to answer to his Indictment, till the Principal be tried, unless he wave that Benefit; in which Case, his Acquittal or Conviction upon such Trial is good. But it seems necessary in such Case to respite Judgment, till the Principal be convicted and attainted: For if the Principal be afterwards acquitted, that Conviction of the Accessary is annulled.

"If A be indicted as Principal, and B as Accessary, they may be both arraigned together, and plead together, and tried by the same Jury; and the Jury shall be charged first to inquire of the Principal; and if they find him not guilty, then to acquit the Accessary; and if they find him guilty, then to inquire of the Accessary."

The Reason of this Distinction in the Order of trying Principals and Accessaries, is very well laid down by Sir George Mackenzie, in the Place above quoted, and will no doubt occur to your Lordships: For Guilt in the Accessary necessarily presupposes, that the Crime was committed by the Principal, which can only be made appear by the Trial and Conviction of the Principal. Neither is it sufficient to say, that, in the Trial of the Accessary, such Evidence may be brought of the Guiltiness of the Principal, as would be sufficient to convict him, if he were present. For, as no Man can, by the Law of Scotland, be convicted of any Felony in Absence, it is impossible to say or determine from Evidence, adduced in Absence of the supposed Criminal, what would have been sufficient to have convicted him, if he had been present. He might have had Defences against the Indictment, Objections against the Witnesses adduced for the Prosecutor, and Witnesses to adduce for his own Exculpation, which the Accessary doth not know, or cannot prove.

The Answers made by my Lord Advocate to this preliminary Objection to the Order of the Trial, have been three. First, That it is against the Interest of Society, that Crimes should pass unpunished; which often must be the Case, if the Escape or Death of the principal Actor shall be understood to be a perpetual Bar to the Trial and Punishment Punishment of those who are accessary, and no less guilty in the Commission of the Crime. 2dly, That Allan Breck Stewart hath been called upon to stand Trial for this Crime, and hath been denounced a Fugitive and Outlaw for not appearing to abide his Trial, which is discussing him, as far as the Laws of the Land admit. And, 3dly, That both Allan Breck and the Pannel are charged by the Indictment in the same Words, as being guilty, Actors, or Art and Part of the same heinous Crimes; which being in the precise Terms of the Act 153, Parl. 12th of James VI. nothing can be objected to the Relevancy of that Part of the Libel.

To these I will offer but a Word or two in Reply. As to the first, founded upon the public Expediency, and the dangerous Consequences which may result from this Distinction in the Order of Trial of Principals and Accessaries; it is sufficient for me to say, Incommodum non solvit argumentum. The Law has been more anxious in providing for the Defence and Safety of the Lives of the Subjects, in the Trial of Crimes, than for the Conviction and Punishment of the Guilty. And hence it has become an Axiom in the Law, Better that ten guilty Persons should escape, than that one innocent Person should suffer.

To the second, with regard to the Fugitation of Allan Breck, I answer, That such Fugitation does not imply a Conviction of the Crime, which, by the Law of Scotland, can only proceed upon Evidence brought against the Criminal present in Court upon his Trial. An Act of Fugitation is no more than a Judgment of the Court, awarding the Escheat of Moveables against the Defender, for his Contempt in not appearing to stand Trial upon his Indictment; and neither proceeds upon, nor implies the absent Person's Guiltiness of the Crimes charged against him. If he were present, his voluntary Confession would be no Probation of his having committed the Crime, so far as concerned the Accessary; and far less can his Absence imply or amount to such Conviction. And this is agreeable to the Opinion of Sir George Mackenzie and Julius Clarus, in the Places above quoted.

As to the third Answer to the Objection, founded upon the Statute of James VI. it will occur to your Lordships, as it did to Sir John Skeene and Sir George Mackenzie, who both wrote after the Date of that Act, That it could not be the Intention of that Law to abolish the Distinction betwixt Principals and Accessaries, and the Order of Proceeding in their Trials: All that was meant by that Statute was, to allow a Defender, whether Principal or Accessary in a Crime, to be charged under the general Words of Art and Part, without obliging the Prosecutor to condescend upon the whole particular Acts from which the Crime was to be inferred. But if a Prosecutor, as in the present Case, has brought a special Indictment, charging a Pannel, not as actor cædis, but as a remote Accessary thereto, the general Words of Art and Part, subjoined to the minor Proposition of the Libel, can never be understood to imply a Charge against the Pannel, as principal Actor, in Contradiction to the special Facts charged in the Indictment, but only as Accessary; and consequently, in the Sense of Law, Actor, Art and Part in the Commission of the Crime.

What is laid down by the learned Sir Matthew Hales in his fifty-fifth Chapter of Principals and Accessaries in Felony, is applicable to the present

Subject. "In Treason, says he, all are Principals; but yet, as to the Course of Proceeding, it hath been, and indeed ought to be the Course, that those who did actually commit the very Fact of Treason should be first tried, before those that are Principals in the second Degree; because otherwise, this Inconvenience might follow, that the Principals in the second Degree might be convicted, and yet the Principals in the first Degree might be acquitted, which would be absurd." And it is humbly thought, that this Absurdity would be much greater in the Case of a remote Accessary.

Nor does the Decision in the Case of James Drummond Macgregor apply to the Point in Hand; for though the Crime was, in that Case, committed with a View to procure a Marriage for Robert the younger Brother; yet, as James was present, and aiding and assisting in the Hame-sucken and forcible Abduction, consequently he was a Principal in the first Degree, being an immediate Actor in the whole Crimes libelled; and, therefore, could not be intitled to plead the Defence which has been offered for this Pannel.

What we therefore humbly submit to your Lordships Consideration is, that tho' an Accessary is equally guilty and punishable with the Principal, yet, as the Law hath laid down a certain Order, in Point of Time, as to the Trials of Principals and Accessaries in Crimes, and as this Order is not abolished by the Statute of James VI. therefore the Trial of this Pannel cannot proceed, until Allan Breck Stewart, the sole Actor in the Commission of the Murder, is first tried and convicted.

But, if your Lordships shall find Reason for over-ruling this Objection, the Pannel hopes and expects, from your Lordships Justice, that he will be allowed, by the Interlocutor, a Proof, at large, of all Facts and Circumstances that may tend to exculpate him from the Charge exhibited against him in this Indictment.

The Lords, upon hearing the Criminal Letters read, and the Debate thereupon, pronounced the following Interlocutor.

"— The Lord Justice-General, and Lords Commissioners of Justiciary, having considered the criminal Libel, pursued at the Instance of William Grant of Prestongrange, Esq; his Majesty's Advocate, for his Majesty's Interest, and also at the Instance of Janet Mackay, Daughter to the Honourable Hugh Mackay of Bigbouse, Esq; and Relict of the deceased Colin Campbell of Glenure, for herself, and on Behalf of Elizabeth and Lucy Campbells, her infant Children, with Concourse of his Majesty's Advocate, for his Majesty's Interest, against James Stewart Pannel, with the foregoing Debate thereupon, repel the Objections to the Libel, and find the Libel relevant to infer the Pains of Law: That, Time and Place libelled, the deceased Colin Campbell of Glenure was murdered, and that the Pannel James Stewart was guilty, Actor, or Art and Part thereof; but allow the Pannel to prove all Facts and Circumstances that may tend to exculpate him; and remit the Pannel, with the Libel as found relevant, to the Knowledge of an Assize."

ARGYLL, I. P. D.

Thereafter the Lords continued the Diet against the above James Stewart Pannel till To-morrow Morning

Morning at Six o'Clock precisely, and ordained the Parties, Witnesses, Assizers, and others concerned, to attend at that Time, and the Pannel to be carried back to Prison.

Curia itineris justiciarii, S. D. N. Regis, tenta apud burgum de Inverarii, vicefimo secundo die mensis Septembris, anno Domini millesimo septingentesimo quinquagesimo secundo, N. S. per nobilem et præpotentem Principem Archibaldum Ducem de Argyll, Dominum Justiciarium Generalem, et Patricium Grant de Elcbies, armigerum, et Dominum Jacobum Ferguson de Kilkerran, Dominos Commissionarios Justiciarii dicti, S. D. N. Regis.

Curia legitime affirmata.

Intrat. James Stewart Pannel, indicted and accused as in the former Sederunt.

Thereafter the Lords proceeded to make Choice of the following Persons, to pass upon the Assize of the said James Stewart Pannel :

- 1 Colin Campbell of Carwhin.
- 2 Dougal Macdougall of Gallanab.
- 3 Alexander Duncanson of Kiles.
- 4 Duncan Campbell of South-hall.
- 5 Hector Macneil of Ardmearish.
- 6 James Campbell, late Bailie of Inverary.
- 7 James Campbell of Rasbeilly.
- 8 James Campbell of Rudale.
- 9 Colin Gillespie of Balimore.
- 10 Colin Campbell of Skipniff.
- 11 Duncan Campbell of Glendarouh.
- 12 Colin Campbell of Ederline.
- 13 Niel Campbell of Duntroon.
- 14 Archibald Campbell of Dale in Craignish.
- 15 Niel Campbell of Dunstaffniff. *

The above Assize all lawfully sworn, and no Objection to the contrary.

Thereafter the Prosecutors, for proving the criminal Libel, called the Witnesses cited by them ; and the Pannel, for proving his Defences, called the Witnesses cited by him ; and the Prosecutors caused to be read, in Presence of the Jury, the Writings produced by way of Evidence for them ; and the Pannel's Council caused to be read, in Presence of the Jury, the Writings produced for him ; all which Depositions and Writings are as follows.

The whole Proof brought both on the Part of the Prosecutors, and on the Part of the Pannel.

JAMES STEWART, Pannel, does admit the Truth of all the Writings contained in the Inventory of Writings subjoined to the Criminal Letters, and which Inventory was delivered to him at executing the said Letters against him, excepting two of the said Writings which he does not admit, viz. the Writing, Number 7, intituled, Principal Holograph Letter by Allan Stewart, Son to the said James Stewart, addressed to Duncan Stewart of Glenbuckie, dated at Aucharn the 1st of April 1752; and the Writing, Number 12, intituled, Draught, Letter by the said James Stewart, and of an Instrument of Protest at the Tenants Instance, relative to the said Decreet of Removing and Suspension thereof: But the said Draught Letter and Instrument being again shown to the Pannel in Court, the Pannel admits the Truth and Authenticity of these also ; and therefore admits the Truth of the whole Writings, except the Writing before-mentioned, Number 7 ; but does not admit the Writings subjoined to the said Inventory, being two principal Declarations by Allan Stewart, Son to the said James Stewart, five principal Declarations by Charles Stewart, also Son to the said James Stewart, three principal Declarations by Margaret Stewart, Spouse to the said James Stewart, and two by Elizabeth Stewart, his Daughter.

(Signed) JAMES STEWART. P. GRANT.

Thereafter the Prosecutors, for proving the above criminal Libel, adduced the following Witnesses :

Mr. Archibald Campbell of Stonefield, Sheriff-depute of the Shire of Argyll, aged fifty-six Years, married, being solemnly sworn, purged of Malice, partial Counsel, examined and interrogate, and being shown the Writings following, viz. four principal Declarations by Charles Stewart, Son to the Pannel, bearing to have been emitted in the Deponent's Presence, and dated the 22d, 23d, and 25th Days of May last, and three Declarations by Margaret Stewart, Spouse to the Pannel, and two Declarations by Elizabeth Stewart, his Daughter, all of them bearing to have been emitted in the Deponent's Presence, as Sheriff of Argyll-shire, and dated the 22d and 25th Days of May last ; depones, That all these Declarations were emitted by the respective Persons therein mentioned, in Presence of the Deponent, and of the respective Dates therein contained, and were all subscribed by the respective Declarants in the Deponent's Presence, excepting only that the Declarations by the said Margaret Stewart and Elizabeth Stewart were not signed by them, but were signed by the Deponent for them, because they declared they could not write. And there being also shown to the Deponent two Declarations by Allan Stewart, Son to the Pannel, bearing to have been emitted in Presence of George Douglas, Sheriff-substitute of Inverness, dated the 3d of June last, and a Declaration bearing to be emitted by the said Charles Stewart, Son to the Pannel, in Presence of the said George Douglas, Sheriff-substitute, dated the 4th of June last, depones, That the Deponent was present, and saw and heard the said Declarations by the said Allan and Charles Stewarts, emitted in Presence of, and taken down in Writing by the said Sheriff-substitute ; and they were, at the Sheriff-substitute's Desire, dictated by the Deponent to the Clerk ; and the Deponent saw the said Declarations subscribed by the said Allan and Charles Stewarts respective, of the several Dates therein contained, voluntarily and freely, without any Compulsion or Coaction. Causa scientiæ patet. And this is the Truth, as he shall answer to God.

(Signed) ARCH. CAMPBELL. P. GRANT.

After emitting of the above Deposition by Mr. Archibald Campbell of Stonefield, to save the Time of the Court, in bringing further Proof of the Declarations therein mentioned, the Pannel judicially declared, that he admitted the Truth of all the several Declarations contained in the said Oath, that is, that these Declarations were emitted by the respective Persons therein mentioned, and in Presence of the respective Judges, and at the respective Times therein contained, voluntarily and freely; but does not admit the Truth of the Facts as declared by the said Declarants.

* What is something remarkable in this Trial, is, that the Prisoner was tried by a CAMPBELL, had Eleven Campbells out of Fifteen upon his Jury, and for the Murder of a Campbell.

(Signed) JAMES STEWART. P. GRANT.

Mungo Campbell, Writer in Edinburgh, aged twenty-four Years, unmarried, sworn, purged and examined ut supra, depones, That, in the Beginning of May last, the deceased Colin Campbell of Glenure applied to the Deponent, to go with him to Lochaber, to assist him in conducting the Ejecting of some of the Tenants of the Estate of Stewart of Ardkiel, and of the Tenants of Mamore, Part of the Estate of Lockiel, over which the said Colin Campbell was Factor, and which Tenants, he apprehended, would not voluntarily remove, without being legally ejected: That they set out from Edinburgh together, upon the 7th of May last, and arrived at Glenure upon Saturday the 9th of that Month: That they set out together for Fort-William upon Monday the 11th, about Ten o'Clock Forenoon, and remained at Fort-William till Thursday the 14th, when they returned, in order to execute the next Day the Ejection against some of the Tenants of Ardkiel: That, when they came to the Ferry of Ballachelish, the Defunct waited there about an Hour, communing with some of the Tenants, and crossed the Ferry betwixt Four and Five in the Afternoon: That, after crossing the Ferry, Alexander Stewart of Ballachelish, elder, met with the Defunct, and they travelled together on Foot about the Space of Half a Mile, till they came to the Skirts of the Wood of Lettermore: That, while they were communing together on Foot, the Deponent was at some little Distance before them on Horseback, and the Sheriff-officer Donald Kennedy was on Foot before the Deponent, and Glenure's Servant John Mackenzie was on Horseback a little before Glenure; and, the Servant happening to drop a Coat, Ballachelish called to him, and the Servant returned, and thereby fell behind Glenure and Ballachelish: That Ballachelish parted from Glenure at their entering into the Wood of Lettermore, or the Wood of Ballachelish, a Part of the Wood being called by that Name; and Glenure mounted his Horse, and came up to the Deponent: That the Deponent asked Glenure, whether Ballachelish had said any thing to him touching removing the Tenants? And Glenure said, that nothing passed betwixt them on that Subject: That, coming to a Part of the Road that was rough and narrow, so as they could not ride conveniently two Horses a-breast, the Deponent and Glenure separated, and the Deponent went before, and might have been about twice the Length of the Room where the Court now sits before Glenure, when the Deponent heard a Shot behind him, and heard Glenure several Times repeat these Words, Oh! I am dead. Depones, That the Deponent thereupon returned to Glenure, and heard him repeat the same Words; and thinks, but is not positive, that he added, Take care of yourself, for he's going to shoot you: That the Deponent immediately lighted, and run up the Hill from the Road, to see who had shot Glenure, and saw, at some Distance from him, a Man, with a short dark-coloured Coat, and a Gun in his Hand, going away from him; and, as the Deponent came nearer him, he mended his Pace, and disappeared by high Ground interjected betwixt him and the Deponent; and he was at so great a Distance, that the Deponent thinks he could not have known him, tho' he had seen his Face: That the Deponent thereupon returned to Glenure; and, either at that Time, or before, the Deponent run up the Hill as above deponed, (the Deponent cannot be positive which) he took Glenure from off his Horse. Depones, That, after taking Glenure from his Horse, he leaned a little upon the Deponent's Shoulder, and endeavoured to have opened his Breast, to see where the Bullets, wherewith he was shot, came out of his Body, but was not able; but saw, in his Waistcoat, two Holes in his Belly where the Bullets had come out. Depones, That Glenure intended to have been that Night at Kintalline, where he expected Mr. Campbell of Ballieveolan was to meet him; wherefore the Deponent sent Mackenzie, the Servant above-mentioned, forward to Kintalline, to acquaint Ballieveolan what had happened, and to bring him to his Assistance: That Glenure continued in Agonies for about Half an Hour or a little more, after sending off Mackenzie, and then died; and Night coming on, and no Appearance of Mackenzie's Returning, the Deponent sent back the Sheriff-officer above-named to Ballachelish, to desire Mr. Stewart's Assistance, and some of his People: That, in little more than an Hour, Ballachelish, and some of his People, with the Sheriff-officer, came to the Deponent's Assistance, and carried Glenure's Corpse that Night to Kintalline, by Sea; and next Day carried it to Glenure, where some Surgeons came, and inspected his Body; and the Deponent saw there the two Wounds in his Belly made by the Balls coming out of his Body. Depones, That when the Deponent laid Glenure upon the Ground, a great deal of Blood issued from his Body, and his Cloaths were all stained with Blood, particularly the Small of his Back, having been laid on his Back upon the Ground: That Mackenzie the Servant also returned, before they carried the Corpse off the Ground, and some People with him, particularly Ballieveolan's Sons; and, being shown a Coat and Waistcoat, and a Shirt, depones, That these are the Coat and Vest that Glenure had on when he was murdered; and believes also, it is the same Shirt. Depones, That, at the Place where Glenure was shot, the Wood is pretty thick on both Sides, and, on the Side from which he was shot, very rugged and stony, and Bushes in which the Murderer could have easily hid and concealed himself: That the Ground there rises up-hill towards the South, tho' there are Places in it where the Murderer might be pretty nearly upon a Level with Glenure; and there are also Places there so situate, as a Person standing there might see the most Part of the Road from the Ferry to the Wood, and even a Part of the Road betwixt Fort-William and the Ferry; and which Place is not a Musket-shot from the Spot where Glenure was murdered. Depones, That, neither the Defunct, nor the Deponent, nor any of their Company, had any Sort of Arms with them. Depones, That it was betwixt Five and Six o'Clock in the Afternoon, as he thinks, when Glenure was murdered as aforesaid; and remembers, when Glenure was dying, the Deponent looked at his own Watch, and found it was then about Six o'Clock. And depones, That, upon Recollection, he cannot be positive whether he observed both the Wounds in the Defunct's Belly, or only one of them; and being interrogate for the the Pannel, depones, That, some Days after the Murder, the Deponent sent a Serjeant and a Party of Soldiers to the Pannel's House at Aucharn, with Orders to search, and particularly to search for Writings: That the Serjeant reported to the Deponent, that he had searched, and delivered to the Deponent one Paper which he found there; being a Scroll of a Letter by the Pannel; and of an Instrument of Protest, being the Number 12. of the Inventory subjoined to the Libel, and which is now in the Clerk's Hands; and being shown to the Deponent, depones, That it is the same Writing that was delivered to him by the Serjeant. Depones, That the Serjeant gave him no more Papers but that one; and said that he had brought away no more. Causa scientie patet. And this is Truth, as he shall answer to God.

(Signed) MUNGO CAMPBELL. P. GRANT.

John Mackenzie, late Servant to Glenure, unmarried, aged nineteen Years, Witness cited, sworn, purged and examined ut supra; depones, That, upon the 14th of May last, he came, with his Master the deceased Colin Campbell of Glenure, from Fort-William, by the Horse-Road leading to the Ferry of Ballachelish, which Road coincides, a little Way next to Fort-William, with the new Road commonly called the King's Road: That they passed the Ferry of Ballachelish, and came along the high Road; which leads to Kintalline thro' the Wood of Lettermore: That, coming up with Alexander Stewart elder of Ballachelish, who was on Foot, Glenure alighted from his Horse to walk a little with Ballachelish; and desired Mungo Campbell, Writer in Edinburgh, who was in Company with Glenure, as also the Deponent, to step on, which accordingly they did; but coming up to a Place where they were stopt by the Tide; they were obliged to alight, and lead their Horses across a Rock; and, upon that Occasion, and by which Means it happened that the Deponent dropt a great Coat belonging to Donald Kennedy, Sheriff-officer, who was also along on Foot, and which he had got from him to carry when they passed the Ferry of Ballachelish; and Glenure and Ballachelish coming up, and finding the great Coat lying on the Road, one or other of them cried out, To whom this Coat belonged? Which the Deponent, being within Distance to hear, said, it belonged to Donald Kennedy, and that he had been carrying it, and had dropt it; whereupon he returned to fetch the Coat, by which Means Glenure, who had parted with Ballachelish at the Rock that has been just mentioned, got before the Deponent, and, when about a Musket-shot before him in the Wood of Lettermore, he heard a Shot which he took to be from a Firelock, which he did not much mind, nor know from what Quarter it had come; but when he came up, he saw Mungo Campbell wringing his Hands, and his Master lying on the Ground with a great deal of Blood about him, just breathing, and not able to speak; and Donald Kennedy, the Sheriff-officer, was at that Time standing by him; and, as near as the Deponent could guess, this was about Five o'Clock in the Afternoon. Depones, That Mungo Campbell directed the Deponent to ride forward with all Speed to Kintalline, and to see if John Campbell of Ballieveolan, or his Sons, were there; and, if they were, to acquaint them what had happened, and to come up immediately; accordingly he went, but found neither Ballieveolan nor his Sons there:

But being told by one of the Tenants of Aucharn, that probably James Stewart in Aucharn, who is now the Pannel, might give him some Account of Ballieveolan; that accordingly he went to James Stewart's House in Duror; and James seeing him weeping, asked what the Matter was? The Deponent told him, his Master was killed; whereupon James Stewart asked him, by whom and how it was done? To which he, the Deponent, answered, that he did not know by whom, and believed it to be by a Shot from a Gun or Pistol: That the Deponent then asked him, what was the nearest Road to Glenduror, where he expected to find Ballieveolan? Which accordingly James Stewart having pointed out to him; he followed; and meeting with one Allan Dow, whom he had seen several Times before; he prevailed with him to go to Glenduror, and acquaint Ballieveolan of what had happened, and to desire him to come up where his Master was; and which the said Allan Dow could do more expeditiously on Foot, than the Deponent could do in that Cross-way on Horseback; and the Deponent immediately returned where his Master lay, and brought no Person along with him: That his Master was then dead, and that the People of Ballachelish were at this Time come up, and were standing about him. Depones, That he was then sent off a second Time with a Horse by the Road Ballieveolan was expected to come, in order to hasten him; and having accordingly met Ballieveolan, he, at Ballieveolan's Desire; went and acquainted Captain Campbell younger of Barcaldine, of what had happened. Depones, That when his Master and he came, as has been said; from Fort-William, on the 14th of May last, they met the foresaid John Maccoll going to Fort-William at the Foot of the three-mile Water; which is about three Miles from Fort-William; and that the said Maccoll came to the Ferry of Ballachelish much about the same Time with the Deponent; but before Glenure, who had stayed sometime talking with the Tenants of Ballachelish; and further adds, that his Master had stayed at Corryborrachan, which is about five Miles from Fort-William, about an Hour and a Half or two Hours. Depones, That, when Maccoll desired the Ferryman to carry him over; the Ferryman begged to be excused till Glenure's Horses should go over; and that he was then employed in gathering Wreck: But Maccoll would not delay; and accordingly was ferried over, as he thinks, about Half an Hour before Glenure; whose Horses were first ferried over, and along with them the Sheriff-officer, and afterwards Glenure and Mungo Campbell. And depones, That neither Glenure, nor any in his Company, had Arms of any Sort along with them; and a Coat, Waistcoat, and bloody Shirt, referred to in the List of Evidence, being shown to the Deponent, depones, That they were the very Cloaths and Shirt Glenure had on when he was killed as aforesaid. And further depones, That, when he saw the Pannel at his House in Aucharn as aforesaid, the Pannel wrung his Hands, expressed great Concern at what had happened, as what might bring innocent People to Trouble, and prayed that innocent People might not be brought to Trouble; and being interrogate for the Pannel, depones, That beside that Road by which he and his Master came from Fort-William to Ballachelish, there is another Road by which People travel, both by Horseback and on Foot, which is computed to be the shortest by

by a Mile, and by which he supposes Maccoll came. Causa scientiæ patet. And this is Truth, as he shall answer to God.

(Signed) JOHN MACKENZIE. JA. FERGUSON.

Donald Kennedy, Sheriff-officer in Inverary, married, aged forty-eight Years, Witness cited, sworn, purged, and examined ut supra, depones, That, upon the 11th Day of May last, he was employed by James Campbell, Writer in Inverary, to carry a Pacquet to Glenure, then at Fort-William; and when he delivered the Pacquet to him, told him, that it contained a Warrant for ejecting certain Possessors of the Lands of Ardshiel: That, upon the 13th Day of May, he came to Maryburgh or Fort-William, where he found the deceased Glenure, and delivered the Pacquet to him, who told him, as James Campbell had before done, what the Pacquet contained; and that he, the Deponent, was to be employed in executing the Ejection: That, upon the 14th Day of May, Glenure, as also the Deponent, left Fort-William, and, at Glenure's Desire, the Deponent went before, being on Foot, and waited at the Ferry of Ballachelish till Glenure came up to him: That Glenure crossed the Ferry from the North to the South of Appin Side, and along with him a young Gentleman Mungo Campbell, said to be a Writer in Edinburgh, and his own Servant John Mackenzie: That Mackenzie and the Horses went first over: That the Boat again returned, and brought over Glenure, Mungo Campbell, and the Deponent: That the Deponent being on Foot, as has been said, went on the high Road leading to Kintalline, where he understood Glenure intended to quarter that Night; but was past on the Road by Glenure, Mungo Campbell, and Glenure's Servant, whom the Deponent could not keep up with; but as Glenure happened to find, upon the Road, Alexander Stewart elder of Ballachelish on Foot, he lighted from his Horse, and walked a little on the Way with Ballachelish, whereby the Deponent got the Start of Glenure, and the two Riders that were in Company with him; and the Deponent walking on thro' the Wood of Lettermore, and after he was about half a Mile or so within the Wood, he heard a Shot, and at the same Time heard the aforesaid Mungo Campbell make a great Noise as of one weeping, the Deponent being at that Time but about twopenny Stone-cast before the said Mungo, who was riding foremost, as he afterwards told the Deponent; the Deponent immediately upon hearing the Noise returned, for he had gone a little without minding the Shot, till once he heard the Noise, and when he came back to Mungo Campbell, Mungo said to him, The Villain has killed my dear Uncle, adding, that he had only seen one Man; and that he, the Deponent, asked no Questions, being in Confusion, and dreading for the same Fate himself. Depones, That he saw Glenure lying upon the Ground, with great Plenty of Blood about him, and, as the Breast of his Waistcoat had been opened before the Deponent came up, he saw a Hole in his Shirt, thro' which he supposed a Bullet had come; and that the Deponent stayed at the Place till Glenure expired. Depones, That John Mackenzie, Glenure's Servant, was dispatched by Mungo Campbell to the House of Kintalline, where Glenure was to lodge that Night, and Ballieveolan along with him, with Orders to bring Ballieveolan, and some other Gentlemen that were expected to be there; Mungo

Campbell also desired the Deponent to go for other People, which the Deponent at first declined, giving this Reason for it, that he would stay and run the same Risque with Mungo Campbell; but at last was prevailed upon to go by Mungo Campbell, whom he left alone with the Corpse, and the Deponent brought Alexander Stewart elder of Ballachelish, and several other People of the Town of Ballachelish. Depones, That while Glenure and his Company were at the Ferry of Ballachelish, as aforesaid, he saw a Man, who seemed to be in a Hurry to get over the Ferry, who proved to be John Maccoll, Servant to the Pannel; to whom Glenure said, in the Deponent's Hearing, Sir, you travel better than I do. To which he answered, I am in a Haste, and so went over the Ferry about an Hour before Glenure passed it, who had some Business to do with Tenants there. Depones, That, when the People were gathered about the Corpse, as aforesaid, the said John Maccoll was among them. And Mungo Campbell then told the Deponent, that when Glenure and he were come three Miles from Fort-William, they met the said John Maccoll going to Fort-William, and that he was back at the Ferry of Ballachelish, tho' on Foot, as soon as they. Depones, That Glenure was shot about Half an Hour after Five in the Evening, and died, as he thinks, about Six, Mungo Campbell having then looked at his Watch. Depones, That this John Maccoll was none of the People that this Deponent had called upon: That the Corpse was carried that Night to Kintalline by Water, the Place where they lay being but a short Distance down thro' a rugged Part of the Road towards the Loch. And being interrogate for the Pannel, depones, That there are two Roads leading from Fort-William to the Ferry of Ballachelish, one of them being a Horse-Road, by which Glenure came, the other a Foot-Road, which is the shortest of the two by about a Mile. Causa scientiæ patet. And this is the Truth, as he shall answer to God. And being further interrogate for the Pursuers, depones, That neither Glenure, nor any in his Company, had Arms along with them of any Kind. And being also further interrogate for the Pannel, depones, That John Maccoll was at the Ferry before Glenure came up. And this is Truth, as he shall answer to God.

(Signed) DONALD KENNEDY. JA. FERGUSON.

John Roy Livingstone, alias Macanura, in Ballachelish, married, aged forty, who being sworn by Archibald Campbell, Sheriff-substitute of Argyll-shire, sworn Interpreter, purged of Malice and partial Counsel, depones, That, upon Thursday the 14th Day of May last, he saw Allan Breck Stewart in Ballachelish, in the Forenoon, dressed in a dunnish big Coat; but had no Conversation with him: That, upon the Evening of the said Day, he saw John Beg Maccoll, Servant to the Pannel, travelling at a good Rate from the Ferry of Ballachelish, towards his Master's House. The Deponent joined him upon the high Road, and asked him where he had been? To which John Maccoll replied, that he had been at Maryburgh for Charles Stewart, Notary Public, but did not find him at home: That, during this Conversation, the Deponent travelled the Road along with the said John Maccoll, and only stopped for a very short Time; and that the said John Maccoll told the Deponent, that Glenure that Night was to be at Kintalline. Depones, That, about an Hour and a Half, or two Hours

Hours thereafter, the Deponent went to the Wood of Ballachelish, adjoining to Lettermore, to cut some Sticks he wanted: That, while he was in the Wood, he saw Donald Kennedy, Sheriff-officer at Inverary, passing along the high Road below him, and a little after him Mungo Campbell, and John Mackenzie, Glenure's Servant, and a little after them Glenure on Horseback, and Alexander Stewart elder of Ballachelish along with him; and, as the Deponent observed Glenure and Ballachelish, they found a big Coat upon the high Road, and called to the said John Mackenzie the Servant, and the Servant came back for the big Coat, and Glenure and Ballachelish parted: That the Deponent came down to the Road, and entered into Conversation with the said John Mackenzie, and, after a few Questions, the said John Mackenzie went on after his Master; and immediately thereafter the Deponent heard a Noise, which he imagined to be a Shot, but was not sure. Depones, That, some Time thereafter, he went along with Ballachelish to the Wood of Lettermore, where he found Glenure dead, and was one of the People that assisted to carry the Corpse to Kintalline. Causa scientiæ patet. And this is the Truth, as he shall answer to God. And depones he cannot write.

Alexander Campbell, Surgeon in Lorn, aged fifty Years, unmarried, sworn, purged and examined ut supra, depones, That he was called to the House of Glenure, upon the 15th Day of May last, to inspect the Body of the then deceased Colin Campbell of Glenure, who, the Deponent was informed, had been shot the Day before; and, having accordingly inspected the Body, he found, that he had been shot by two Bullets entering at his Back, one on each Side of the Back-bone; one of which had come out about Half an Inch below the Navel, and the other about two Inches from it, towards the right Side. And depones, That they were mortal Wounds, of which the Deponent believes Glenure died. Causa scientiæ patet. And this is Truth, as he shall answer to God.

(Signed) ALEX. CAMPBELL. JA. FERGUSON.

Angus Macdonald, Walk-miller in Auchsofragan, married, aged sixty-three, Witness cited, sworn, purged and examined ut supra, depones, That, in April last, Allan Breck Stewart, and John Stewart in Auchnacooan, came into the Deponent's House, and sat down; and, at the same Time, Duncan Campbell (the succeeding Witness) came in, and sat down also; and which Allan asked John Stewart, who that was? And John answered, that he was an honest Man in the Neighbourhood, Duncan Campbell naming him; to which Allan answered, that he did not like any of the Sort or Name: For that Glenure had wrote to Colonel Crawfurd, that he had come from France, and to take him up as a Defenter; but that he was not in his Reverence; for he had General Churchill's Pass: That John Stewart said, that he did not so much blame Glenure for turning out the Possessors of Ardshiel; for that he was but doing the King's Service; and that, if he had not the Factory, another would, who would do the same Thing; to which Allan answered, that he rather the meikle Devil had it than Glenure; and, being interrogate for the Panel, depones, That Allan was then dressed in a blue side Coat, a red Vest, and feathered Hat. Depones, That the Deponent saw him again about the 8th of May in the same Dress: That, at that Time, the Deponent, and the foresaid Duncan Campbell and Malcolm Maccoll, were travelling together, and met Allan on the Road: That Allan gave Duncan the common Salutation; and said, that the last Time he had been in Duncan's House, he was bad Company, tho' it was not he that was so much the bad Company, as the Drink. Causa scientiæ patet. And this is the Truth, as he shall answer to God.

(Signed) ANGUS MACDONALD. P. GRANT.

Duncan Campbell, Change-keeper at Annat, aged thirty-five Years, married, Witness cited, sworn, purged and examined ut supra, depones, That, in the Month of April last, the Deponent met with Allan Breck Stewart, with whom he was not before acquainted, and John Stewart in Auchnacooan, at the House of the Walk-miller of Auchsofragan, and went on with them to the House: That Allan Breck Stewart said, that he hated all the Name of Campbell; and the Deponent said, he had no Reason for doing so; but Allan said, he had very good Reason for it: That thereafter they left that House; and, after drinking a Dram at another House, came to the Deponent's House, where they went in, and drunk some Drams, and Allan Breck renewed the former Conversation; and the Deponent making the same Answer, Allan said, that, if the Deponent had any Respect for his Friends, he would tell them, that if they offered to turn out the Possessors of Ardshiel's Estate, he would make black Cocks of them before they entered into Possession, by which the Deponent understood shooting them, it being a common Phrase in the Country: That John Stewart said, he did not blame Glenure so much as Balliveolan for taking these Possessions, whereas Glenure was doing the King's Service; and Allan Breck replied, that besides that, he had another Ground of Quarrel against Glenure, for his writing to Colonel Crawfurd, that he, Allan, was come home from France; but that he was too cunning for him; for that, when at Edinburgh, he had made up his Peace with General Churchill, and had got his Pass, which he had in his Pocket-book: That the Deponent asked a Sight of it: That he searched his Pocket-book, but could not find it; upon which he tore a Leaf out of the Book, and said, there it was. And depones, That he said twenty Times over he would be fit-sides with Glenure, wherever he met him; and wanted nothing more than to meet him at a convenient Place. Depones, That, at this Time, Allan Breck was not drunk, for he could walk and talk as well as any Man; but it could easily be observed, he had been drinking. Causa scientiæ patet. And this is the Truth, as he shall answer to God.

(Signed) DUNCAN CAMPBELL. F. GRANT.

Depones, That Allan Breck was much in Drink at the Time of uttering the above Expressions; and was then dressed in his long blue Coat. Causa scientiæ patet. And this is the Truth, as he shall answer to God; and declares he cannot write.

(Signed) ARCH. CAMPBELL. P. GRANT.

That the said John Stewart answered, that he was an honest poor Man, with a numerous Family of small Children; and that it would be great Charity in any Body to assist him: Upon which Allan Breck desired the said John Stewart to give the said John Maccoll a Stone of Meal, and he would pay for it; which the said John Stewart promised to do: That the said Allan then gave the said John Maccoll a Dram, and told him, if he would fetch him the Red Fox's Skin, he would give him what was much better; to which the said John Maccoll answered, that he was no Sportsman; and that he was much better skilled in Ploughing or Delving. Depones, That the Deponent gave no great Notice to these Expressions at the Time; but, after he heard of Glenure's Murder, believed he meant Glenure, as he was commonly called Colin Roy, which Means Red Colin, in the Country. Causa scientiæ patet. And this is the Truth, as he shall answer to God; and declares he cannot write.

Depones, That the said Margaret Stewart did not tell the Deponent to whom the Cloaths belonged; but that the Deponent thought the said Coat and Waistcoat were Allan Breck's. Depones, That she went away with the said Sack, containing the said Cloaths; and, as she was going up the Brae, in order to hide them, was overtaken by Dugald and John Beg Maccoll, Servants to the Pannel, who had some Guns and Swords; and the said Dugald Maccoll asked the Deponent, what she had got in the Sack? The Deponent answered, it was Allan Breck's Cloaths; and that she was going to hide them; and that accordingly the said Sack, containing the above Cloaths, was hid in the Moor above the Pannel's House, by the said Dugald Maccoll, in Presence of the Deponent. Depones, That upon Saturday the 16th of May last, in the Evening, the said Mrs. Stewart, Spouse to the Pannel, desired the Deponent to carry back what she had hid, and leave it at the Back of the Brew-house; which the

ARCH. CAMPBELL:
ARGYLL.

John Breck Maccombich, Change-keeper at Kintalline, aged about forty, married, Witness cited, sworn and purged by the forenamed sworn Interpreter, ut supra; depones, That, in the Beginning of Summer last, before Whitsunday; Duncan Campbell, Sheriff-substitute of Killin, told the Deponent; that if he could, with Truth and Honesty; make any Discovery, tending to discover the Murderers of Glenure, it was probable he would not be turned out of his Possession. Depones, That, upon the 14th Day of May last; John Beg Maccoll, Servant to the Pannel, came to the Deponent's House about Seven o'Clock in the Morning, and told; that the Pannel had desired the Deponent and John More Maccoll, another Servant of the Pannel's, to ferry the said John Beg Maccoll from his House to Lochaber, that being the shortest Road from Aucharn to Fort-William: That the Deponent at the first declined it; but upon John Beg's telling, that it was the Pannel's Desire that he should be ferried there; they carried him over accordingly. Depones, That, in the Afternoon of the same Day, before Sun-set, the said John Beg Maccoll came back to the Deponent's House, and called for half a Mutchkin of Aquavitæ, but did not not sit down: That, during the Drinking of the Dram, the Deponent asked the said John Beg Maccoll, if he had been at Fort William? and if he had got Charles Stewart, Notary? (which he told in the Morning was his Errand to Fort-William), John Beg Maccoll answered, that he had been at Maryburgh, but Charles Stewart was not at Home. Depones, That, upon Tuesday the 12th of May last, Glenure sent Notice to the Deponent, that he and some other Company was to be at his House upon Thursday then next, and desired that he might be prepared for entertaining them; and that he accordingly made Provision for them. Depones, That he told that Glenure was to be at his House that Night; and that the whole Neighbourhood knew of it; and, upon the Pannel's Interrogatory, depones, That Glenure frequently went to Lochaber by Mamuckie, being a shorter Road to the Ferry of Ballachelish than the Strath of Appin; and he once coming from Lochaber, landed at Kintalline; and that a Person passing from Glencrearan to the Ferry of Ballachelish by Mamuckie, does not go through the Wood of Lettermore, nor by Kintalline. Depones, That he was warned to remove from his Possession, being a Part of Ardshiel Estate, at Whitsunday last, and employed no Person to keep him in Possession. Depones, That, some Time after he had got his Citation of Warning, the Pannel pass'd by his House on Horseback, and asked if he had his Copy of Citation in the Removing? The Deponent answered he had; the Pannel called for a Sight of it; and, upon the Deponent's producing it, the Pannel said he would keep it. And being interrogate if the Pannel informed him that he was going to Edinburgh, and was to produce his Copy of Citation there? depones, not; but only that he was going Southward. Causa scientiæ patet. And this is the Truth, as he shall answer to God; and declares he cannot write.

And this is Truth, as he shall answer to God.

Depones, That, after Mid-day, upon Thursday the 14th Day of May last, as the Deponent was sitting near the Ferry of Ballachelish, with the Son of John Campbell in Stromellachan in Glenorchie, Allan Breck came behind them and hoasted, and, upon the Deponent's looking about, desired him to come to him; which the Deponent did; and the said Allan inquired of him, if Glenure had cross'd the Ferry from Lochaber to Appin? The Deponent told him, he was sure he did not: That, upon this, Allan Breck went away towards the high Road; had on a dun-coloured big Coat, and had no Fishing-rod; and the Deponent has not seen him since. Depones, That he is Ferryer upon the Appin Side, where this Conversation happened. Causa scientiæ patet. And this is the Truth, as he shall answer to God; and declares he cannot write. Donald Stewart in Ballachelish, aged about thirty, married, solemnly sworn by Archibald Campbell, Writer in Inverary, sworn Interpreter, who, being purged of Malice and partial Counsel, examined and interrogate, depones, That, upon the 15th Day of May last, he met the Pannel in Duror, upon the Marches of Auchindarroch, opposite to the Pannel's House. Upon the Deponent's regretting that such an Accident as Glenure's Murder should happen in the Country, the Pannel joined with him, and said, that he was informed that one Serjeant More, alias John Cameron, had been threatening Harm to Glenure in France, but did not inform the Deponent who told him so. Depones, That, to his Knowledge, Serjeant More has not been in Appin these ten Years past. Depones, That, upon the Evening of Thursday the 14th of May last, about Night-fall, Katharine Macinish, then in Ballachelish, now in Larich, came to the Deponent, and told him that one without wanted to speak with him: That this Message came to him in

Ballachelish's

Ballachelish's own House: That, when he went out, the said Katharine Macinish informed him, that it was Allan Breck that wanted him; and that he was a little above the House in the Brae: That the Deponent went up the Brae, and met Allan Breck, who was then dressed in a great Coat, and a dark short Coat under it with white metal Buttons; the Deponent told him of the Murder, and said it could not be but that he, Allan Breck, was about it; to which Allan Breck answered, that he heard of the Murder, but had no Hand in it; to which the Deponent replied, he did not believe him. Depones, That the said Allan Breck Stewart told the Deponent, he was going immediately to leave the Kingdom, was very scarce of Money, and was going then for Koalisnacooan; and desired the Deponent to acquaint the Pannel, that he was gone to Koalisnacooan; and desired him, if possible, to send him Money there; and the Deponent then promised to acquaint James Stewart of the above Message. Depones, That the said Allan Breck said, he believed he would be suspected of the Murder, and upon that Account, and as he was a Deserter formerly from the Army, it was necessary for him to leave the Kingdom. Depones, That, before he had the above Conversation with Allan Breck, he assisted in carrying the Corpse of Glenure to the Boat. Depones, That, after the Conversation with the Pannel about Serjeant More, he delivered the above Message from Allan Breck to the Pannel; and that the Pannel did not say whether he was to send the Money or not: That this Conversation happened about Ten o'Clock in the Forenoon of Friday the 15th of May last; and that there was no body present. Depones, That, upon Sunday the 17th of May last, he met Alexander Bane Stewart, Packman in Appin, near the Houses of Larich in Glenco, who told the Deponent, that he had been at John Breck Maccoll, Bouman to Appin in Koalisnacooan, with either three or five Guineas, the Deponent is not positive which, that he had got at Aucharn, to be left with the said John Breck for the said Allan Breck's Use, if he called there; and told the Deponent, that he left the Money with the said John Breck Maccoll, but did not see the said Allan Breck. And, upon an Interrogatory put for the Pannel, depones, That, upon the Deponent's delivering the above Message from Allan Breck to the Pannel, the Pannel asked why Allan Breck himself did not come for Money, if he wanted it? To which the Deponent, to the best of his Remembrance, replied, that Allan told him he would be suspected for the Murder, and was a Deserter; to which the Pannel answered, that he hoped in God Allan Breck was not guilty of the Murder. Depones, That, during the above Conversation with the Pannel, Alexander Stewart, Duncan Maccombich, and several other Possessors of Auchindarroch, were in the adjoining Field delving, but at such a Distance that the Deponent cannot think they could hear the above Conversation. And, being shewn the short black Coat, with clear white Buttons on the Breast and Pockets, and the blue striped Trowsers, now lying in the Clerk's Hands, depones, That the said Allan Breck wore such a Coat and Trowsers upon Thursday the 14th of May last; and saw him in it the Forenoon of that Day at Ballachelish. And further depones, That he, the Deponent, is married to a Daughter of Stewart of Ballachelish, and stays in the House with him: That her Mother was Daughter to Stewart of Annat in Perthshire. Causa scientiæ patet.

And this is the Truth, as he shall answer to God; and depones he cannot write.

(Signed) ARCH. CAMPBELL. P. GRANT.

John Macdonald of Glenco, aged twenty-six Years, unmarried, sworn, purged and examined ut supra, depones, That, on the 12th of May last, Allan Breck Stewart came to Carnock, the House of the Deponent: That he staid there but a very little Time, viz. not above a Quarter of an Hour: That the Deponent had no Conversation with him; and the said Allan Breck Stewart went away: That, on Friday the 15th of May last, the said Allan Breck Stewart came again to the said House at Three or Four o'Clock in the Morning, and knocked at the Window of the said House, when the Family were all in Bed: That the Deponent went to the Door of his House, and there saw Allan Breck Stewart, who gave him the first Notice he had of Glenure's being murdered the Evening before in the Wood of Lettermore; and told him, that he was to leave the Country; and came to take leave of the Deponent and his Step-mother, who is a Sister of Ardshiel's: That his Cloaths were then a dun or brown great Jockey-coat: That the Deponent did not ask Allan Breck Stewart any Questions about the said Murder; nor did he say any thing upon the Subject to Allan Breck Stewart, as far as the Deponent can remember: Allan Breck Stewart told him he was to go the Moor-road leading to Rannoch: That, upon the Tuesday above-mentioned, James Stewart of Fasnacloch was along with the said Allan Breck Stewart; and that he was dress'd in a black short Coat with white Buttons. Causa scientiæ patet. And this is Truth, as he shall answer to God.

(Signed) JOHN MACDONALD. ARGYLL.

Isobel Stewart, Relict of Alexander Macdonald of Glenco, aged forty-two Years, sworn, purged and examined ut supra, depones, That, upon Tuesday the 12th Day of May last, Allan Breck Stewart, described in the Libel, came to her House at Carnock, in the Afternoon, accompanied by young Fasnacloch, dressed in a black short Coat with white clear Buttons: That he staid about an Hour; and then went away to the Deponent's Sister's House at Callart: That Allan Breck Stewart came again to the Deponent's House on Wednesday the 13th of May last, in the Afternoon, and staid about a Quarter of an Hour; and then went to Ballachelish: That, on Friday the 15th of May, the said Allan Breck Stewart came again to the said House, at Four o'Clock in the Morning, and knocked at the Window of the House, and all the Family was in Bed; upon which the Deponent went out with her Step-son; and she asked him, what News up the Country? To which he answered, a good deal of News, that Glenure was killed the Evening before in the Wood of Lettermore; that he was come to take farewell of the Deponent; for he was to leave the Country: That she asked him no more Questions about the Murder: That she asked him to come into the House; but he answered he would not stay: That, to the best of her Remembrance, Allan Breck Stewart told her, that Glenure was killed or shot: That, when he knocked at the Window, one of the Deponent's Children told her, that he heard Allan Breck Stewart's Voice. Causa scientiæ patet. And this is the Truth, as she shall answer to God.

(Signed) ISOBEL STEWART. ARGYLL.

Mary Macdonald, Spouse to Donald Macinnes in Leckintium, aged about forty, Witness cited, solemnly sworn by Archibald Campbell of Knockbuy, sworn Interpreter, purged of Malice and partial Counsel, examined and interrogate, depones, That a little before Sun-setting, on Sunday the 17th of May last, she saw Allan Breck Stewart sitting in the Wood of Koalisnacooan, less than a Mile's Distance from the Houses: That, upon her Approach, he started to his Feet: That she gave and received the common Salutation from him; and then she passed away on her own Business: That he was dressed in a long dun Jockey-coat and Bonnet. And depones, she was alarmed at meeting a Man in a Place so remote. Causa scientiæ patet. And this is the Truth, as she shall answer to God; and declares she cannot write.

(Signed) ARCH. CAMPBELL. P. GRANT.

Duncan Stewart, travelling Packman in Arlarich in Rannoch, aged thirty-two Years, married, sworn, purged and examined ut supra, depones, That he met with Allan Breck Stewart upon a Monday or Tuesday, about the 18th or 20th of May last, at a Place in Rannoch called Leckinstrensmeir; and, having asked Allan whence he had come, and whither he was going? he answered, he had come from Ballachelish or Callart, he does not remember which; and that he was going to a Shealing, where his Uncle Allan Cameron lived; and, as the Deponent had at that time heard nothing of the Murder of Glenure, he said nothing to him about it: That, two or three Days thereafter, the Deponent's Sister told him, there were two Gentlemen wanting him out-by: And, after he had got his Breakfast, he went out, and first saw Allan Breck, and afterwards Allan Breck and Allan Cameron together at a Know; and that, how soon the Deponent went up to the two, Allan Cameron went back, and the Deponent proceeded with Allan Breck down the Country, about six Miles, where he had occasion to be going about his own Business; and parted with him at a Place called Inching; and, after he parted with the said Allan Breck, he was apprehended by a Gentleman called Alexander Campbell, who supposed the Deponent to be Allan Breck Stewart; and, having asked the Deponent, if he had seen Allan Breck? he then denied his having seen him. Depones, That Allan Breck was, at this Time, dressed in a long blue Coat, and blue Bonnet. Causa scientiæ patet. And this is Truth, as he shall answer to God; and depones he cannot write.

(Signed) JA. FERGUSON.

Allan Oig Cameron, in Arlarich in Rannoch, aged thirty-eight, Widower, sworn, purged and examined ut supra, depones, That, on a Monday, he thinks the 18th of May last, Allan Breck Stewart, the Deponent's Nephew, came to the Deponent's House in Rannoch, who having told the Deponent, he had come from Appin or Glenco, the Deponent, who by that Time had heard a Rumour of Glenure's Murder, said to the said Allan, that he doubted not he might be suspected of it, as he was a loose idle Man in the Country; to which the said Allan answered, that he made no doubt himself that he would be suspected of it: And the Deponent having pressed him earnestly to make a clean Breast, and tell him all he knew of the Matter, he declared with an Oath, he had never seen Glenure, dead or alive; and the said Allan having staid with the Deponent till the Wednesday thereafter, the Deponent frequently repeated his Instances, to tell him what he knew of the Murder; at which Allan Breck became angry; and the Deponent desisted further Inquiry: That the said Allan Breck left the Deponent's House upon the Wednesday, whom the Deponent conveyed little more than two Gunshots from his own House; but Duncan Stewart, Chapman, the preceding Witness, who had come to the Deponent's House that Morning, went along with them; and he saw them take a little bye Road through Corn, which might have led them to the high Road; but what Road they afterwards took, he does not know: And depones, That, at this Time, Allan Breck Stewart was dressed in a big Coat of a brownish Colour, and had under it a long blue Coat lined with red, red Waistcoat, and a Bonnet: That, upon the 24th of May, as the Deponent thinks, having occasion to go to his Master Sir Robert Menzies, when about fourteen Miles from his own House, and at the Side of a Wood, he heard a Whistle from the Wood, and, looking about, saw it to be the said Allan Breck; and the Conversation he then had with him, was to the following Purpose: That Allan Breck having told him, his only Fear was to be apprehended by the Military, which might prove very fatal to him, as he had been a Defenter; which led the Deponent to say, that he was very sure, the Friends of the Deceased would procure him his Discharge, if he could discover the Murderer; to which Breck answered, that they were at this time in such Fury and Rage, he was very sure, were he apprehended, he would be hanged. Causa scientiæ patet. And this is Truth, as he shall answer to God.

(Signed) ALLAN CAMERON. JA. FERGUSON.

James Man, Change-keeper at Innerhadden, aged thirty-two, married, sworn, purged and examined ut supra, by the above Mr. Archibald Campbell of Stonefield, sworn Interpreter, depones, That Allan Breck Stewart came to the Door of the Deponent's House at Innerhadden, the lower Part of Rannoch, about Twilight, towards the End of May last, and asked the Deponent, who was then standing at his own Door, if that was his House? which the Deponent answered it was; and then Allan Breck told him, that he was directed by John Stewart in Bohallie to come there for some Supply of Provisions: That the Deponent desired him to come into his House, and that he would give him Part of such Fare as he had; but that Allan Breck declined to come in, being in a Hurry, and stood in need of some Provision; whereupon the Deponent brought him some Bread and Cheese, and after he gave him the same, conveyed him as far as his Barn, where the said Allan Breck desired the Deponent to return; and that he, the said Allan Breck, intended to go farther down the Country that Night: That the said Allan Breck was dressed in a great dun Coat and Bonnet, and short Hose; what Cloaths he had under the great Coat, he did not see; that he saw a Holster under his left Arm: That he asked him whence he had come, but he did not tell him. Depones, That before Allan Breck came, as aforesaid, it was reported in that Country, that he was concerned in Glenure's Murder; and that he himself suspected him at the Time, as he came unseasonably, and was wanting Provisions. Causa scientiæ patet. And this is Truth, as he shall answer to God. And further depones, That he has been acquainted with Allan Breck these these twelve Years. And this is also Truth, as he shall answer to God.

(Signed) JAMES MAN.
ARCH. CAMPBELL.
JA. FERGUSON.

John Crawford, Esq; Lieutenant-Colonel of General Pulteney's Regiment of Foot, aged thirty Years, unmarried, sworn, purged and examined ut supra, depones, That he knows the Paper now put in his Hands, being Number 11. of the Inventory of Writings in the Clerk's Hands: That it was sent open to him, before it was sent away. Being asked, whether the Deponent had any preceding Conversation with the Pannel on the Subject of this Letter? he answers, he does not remember he had any. And being asked, whether the deceased Colin Campbell of Glenure ever told the Deponent, that Allan Breck Stewart was a Defenter, and in this Country? the Deponent answers negativè. Causa scientiæ patet. And this is Truth, as he shall answer to God.

(Signed) JOHN CRAWFURD. ARGYLL.

Alexander Stewart of Innernabyle, aged forty-four Years, married, sworn, purged and examined ut supra, depones, That the Pannel was a great many Years ago Tenant to his Brother Ardshiel in the Farm of Glenduror, and was removed also several Years ago, the Deponent does not remember how many, by his Brother: That he again became Tenant in the same Lands in 1749, or perhaps 1748, and was again removed by the deceased Glenure, the Factor, at Whitsunday 1751, and the Lands set to Mr. Campbell of Ballieveolan. Depones, That, as the Pannel is the Deponent's near Neighbour, the Deponent had frequent Opportunities of conversing with him touching his said Removal: That the Pannel did not expect to have been removed, and seemed dissatisfied that he was; and said, he believed Glenure would not have removed him, if Ballieveolan had not sought these Lands from him. Depones, That the Pannel further said, that the Tenants generally allowed some Gratuity to Ardshiel's Children; and that these Lands were the best Farms on the Estate, and most of the Benefits accresced from them; and though he himself could be provided of a Farm elsewhere, yet the Children would be deprived of that Benefit. Depones, That, about the End of April, or Beginning of May last, the Deponent thinks about the Beginning of May, he casually met on the Highway with Allan Breck Stewart, and quarrelled with him for not making him, the Deponent, a Visit, and Allan Breck Stewart promised to see the Deponent before he left the Country; but the Deponent has never seen him since that Time. Depones, That, upon the Saturday and Sunday after Glenure's Murder, it was the general Opinion of the People in the Country, that he had been murdered by Allan Breck Stewart. Depones, That the Place where Glenure was said to be murdered, and where the Deponent observed Marks and Symptoms of the Murder, is a very bad Road through a Wood, interspersed with Rocks and Stones upon a hanging Brae, from which a Person may descry the Road on the North Side of the Ferry of Ballachelish, and where a Person may easily conceal himself, so as not to be seen from the Road. Depones, That the Deponent is acquainted with the Hand-writing of Allan Stewart, Son to the Pannel, and has frequently seen him write. And being shown a Letter signed Allan Stewart, and addressed to Duncan Stewart of Glenbuckie, dated at Aucharn the 1st of April 1751, being the Writing Number 7. in the Inventory of Writings subjoined to the Libel, depones, That it is like Allan Stewart's Hand-writing, and the Deponent would take it to be his, but cannot be positive that it is his. Depones, That, after the Attainder of Stewart of Ardshiel, the Factor gave the Pannel the Opportunity of having the greatest Influence with the Tenants of Ardshiel more than any other Person, by allowing the Pannel to set the Lands, which he continued down to Whitsunday 1751, if not at that Term also; but depones, That the Pannel's Connexion with the Family of Ardshiel gave him also a natural Influence over the Tenants, even before Glenure's Factory. Depones, That, before that Time, the Tenants, the Deponent believes, paid their Rent to the Lady of Ardshiel, and she again employed the Pannel to deal with them. And being interrogate for the Pannel, whether he, the Pannel, removed voluntarily from Glenduror without any Warning, depones, That he did not hear of any Warning, but that he removed voluntarily. Depones, That Allan Breck Stewart, as the Deponent has been informed, was a Soldier in the King's Army, and was taken Prisoner by the Rebels at the Battle of Preston; and that he was told so by a Man who took him from among the Prisoners. And depones, that he afterwards joined with the Rebels, where the Deponent saw him. Depones, That, after the Battle of Culloden, he left this Country, and, as he told the Deponent, went over to France, and entered into the French King's Service. Depones, That the Deponent had no Occasion of seeing Allan Breck Stewart last Time he was in the Country, but at the Time before deponed upon, and one Time before that; and both these Times he was dressed in a blue long Coat, a red Vest, and a feathered Hat, and black Breeches. Depones, That he remembers that Allan Breck Stewart came over to this Country a Year or two ago, and staid some Weeks among his Friends; but neither at that Time, nor the last Time, did he seem, so far as the Deponent observed, to be in any Apprehension of being taken; only, as he had been once in the Army, he did not chuse to meet with any of the King's Troops. Depones, That, at the Time the Pannel removed from Glenduror, he told the Deponent, that he had had a Meeting with Ballieveolan; and that there was a Compromise betwixt them, but does not remember the Particulars. Causa scientiæ patet. And this is Truth, as he shall answer to God.

(Signed) ALEX. STEWART. P. GRANT.

Donald Campbell of Airds, aged forty-seven Years, married, sworn, purged and examined ut supra, depones, That the Pannel was employed by the deceased Glenure for some Time as his Subfactor in levying the Rents of Ardshiel, and setting the Lands; and the Pannel told the Deponent, that whatever was made of these Rents over what was paid into the Exchequer, was accounted for to the Children of Ardshiel: And when he removed from Glenduror, he told the Deponent that he had Reason to believe, that the said Excrease of the Rents of that Farm would still be accounted for to them; and, in that Case, he would be easy as to his own Removal. And depones, That Ardshiel's Children, at the Time of the Rebellion, were all young; his eldest Son being now, as the Deponent Deponent believes, about eighteen. Depones, That, in Spring last, the Deponent had a Letter from Colonel Crawfurd, telling him that he heard Allan Breck Stewart was come to the Country, and inlisting Men for the French King's Service, and desired the Deponent to inquire if it was so: That the Deponent did inquire, and wrote the Colonel for Answer, that he heard he had been in the Country, but that he was then gone away: That this was in the Month of April, to the best of the Deponent's Remembrance; and it seems about that Time Allan Breck Stewart had gone to Rannoch, which gave Occasion to the Deponent's being informed that he was gone away; and did not hear of his having returned to the Country till after Glenure's Murder; and thinks he wrote also to Colonel Crawfurd, according to the Information he had got, that Allan Breck Stewart was in use of coming every Year to the Country, since Ardshiel went to France. Depones, That, upon the Afternoon of Monday the 11th of May last, the Deponent sent to the Pannel, desiring him to come to him to Keills, a Farm belonging to the Deponent, at about a Mile's Distance from the Pannel's House: That the Pannel accordingly came there to him that Afternoon, as soon as he expected him: That the Deponent's Business with him was for his Assistance in setting that Farm: That the Farm was accordingly set; and the Pannel himself took Part of it, and conveyed the Deponent a Part of of his Way home; and then they parted: That, before parting, he desired the Pannel to go next Morning to Appin's House: That the Pannel accordingly did so; and the Deponent had a Letter from him, from that Place. Causa scientie patet. And this is Truth, as he shall answer to God.

Charles Stewart, Writer and Notar at Bannavie, aged thirty-eight Years, married, sworn, purged and examined ut supra, depones, That James Stewart the Pannel wrote a Letter to the Deponent, desiring him to go with the Tenants of the Lands of Ardshiel to intimate to Glenure a Sift on a Bill of Suspension: That accordingly the Deponent went to Aucharn that Night; and the next Morning the Tenants came there; and he then went along with the Tenants to Glenure's House, and there intimated the Sift; and a Protest was also taken against the said Glenure: That this was on the 1st of May. Depones, That the Pannel told the Tenants at the Pannel's House, that there was a Sift come of the Removing; that he did not desire them to go with the Sift, unless they had a Mind themselves; and they chose to go, but the Pannel himself did not go along. Depones, That he received a second Letter from the Pannel of Date the 14th of May, desiring him to attend next Day at the Ejection; but that he declined the same, because he did not care to disoblige Glenure. Depones, That he saw Allan Breck Stewart at Aucharn the 1st of May; and when the Deponent left Aucharn next Day, he left him there: That he heard Allan Breck say, that he thought it hard that Glenure should remove the Tenants upon the Estate of Ardshiel, when he did not remove those of Mamore. Depones, That, in the Beginning of April having met Allan Breck Stewart, he told the Deponent, That he heard that Colonel Crawfurd was endeavouring to take him up as a Deserter; but that he, Allan Breck, had surrendered himself in 1746 to Sir Robert Menzies, as a Justice of Peace. De-pones, That, in the Beginning of April, the Deponent saw Allan Breck Stewart at Callart: That he did not appear to be sculking: That when he saw him first, he was dressed in a French Habit: That on the 1st Day of May, when he saw him at Aucharn, he was in a short black Highland Coat with white Buttons and Trowfers, and said he had come from Rannoch. Causa scientie patet. And this is Truth, as he shall answer to God.

Duncan Maccoll in Ardshiel, aged thirty Years and upwards, married, being sworn, purged and examined ut supra, by Mr. Alexander Campbell, Minister at Inverary, sworn Interpreter, depones, That, on his and others being warned to remove from the Lands of Ardshiel, as at Whitsunday last, he, for his Part, had no Intention other than to submit to the Warning, till a Paper was procured from Edinburgh, which he heard read by Charles Stewart, Notar at Aucharn, as on a Day he was there, being along with his Neighbours advertised to meet there: That, when the Notice was given for this Meeting, he was not at his own House; but, on his Return, his Wife told him, such a Message was sent, and that Advice was come from Edinburgh to direct those who were warned to remove, to continue in their Possession: That, on his coming to Aucharn, he does not remember whether the Paper was read in his Presence, but is positive he and his Neighbours were told by Charles Stewart, Notar, and the Pannel, that the Paper contained Advice, as above, on which they should go to ask the Lands from Glenure; and to be cautious in their Conduct, as they were to swear about their being faithful and peaceable Tenants. Depones, That he gave no Allowance or Mandate to the Pannel to make any Application at Edinburgh against the Removing: That, before he heard any thing of this Paper from Edinburgh, he had engaged to serve as Bouman to the Tenants Glenure was to introduce; but that, on hearing of the Paper from Edinburgh, he preferred keeping by his Neighbours, as he considered the being continued in Possession, did the Law support him in it, more beneficial to him. Depones, That the procuring the Paper at Edinburgh cost him no Money. Causa scientie patet. And this is Truth, as he shall answer to God. And, being interrogate for the Pannel, depones, That it was in Company with the rest of his Neighbours, he went to Aucharn, and went along with them likewise in Company from Aucharn to Glenure, along with the Notar; and that he remembers, before they left Aucharn, the Pannel, in general, told them, they might follow the Advice given them, or not, as they should see Cause; and that, upon their Arrival at Glenure, all that he remembers was, that they took Protests with Money, in the Notar's Hands, against Glenure. And this is also Truth, as he shall answer to God.

John Maccombich in Ardshiel, aged forty-three Years, married, sworn, purged and examined ut supra, by the above Mr. Alexander Campbell, sworn Interpreter, depones, That he was warned with the rest of the Tenants to remove, as at last Whitsunday, and meant to submit to it, and therefore agreed with the Tenants to be introduced to serve them as Bouman; but on his being called to Aucharn, by a Message in Charles Stewart the Notary's Name, and hearing the Advice from Edinburgh explained plained there, and that there were some Hopes the Government would allow them to sit still, if they continued peaceable, he chused to keep by this Chance with his Neighbours; upon which he went along with them to Glenure, and asked to be continued, and got for Answer, that the Application was too late, the Lands being set to others; upon which he joined with his Neighbours in taking a Protest in the Hands of the Notary. Depones, That, as to the Agreement betwixt him and the incoming Tenants, when he undertook to be their Bouman, he heard both Glenure and these Tenants say, that it was by Glenure's Advice that this was done. Depones, That, as Duncan Maccoll and he agreed at the same Time to be Boumen to the incoming Tenants, so he heard Glenure say, that it was his Advice to the Person who was to employ Duncan Maccoll, to take him as his Bouman. Depones, That, on his being warned, he advised with the Pannel how to behave: That he did not pretend to direct: That an Advice in Law should be asked: That he hoped the King, and those employed by him, would continue the former Possessors, they behaving dutifully; and that, on his being advised by the Pannel to have Patience, he resolved to wait the Issue: That likewise the Pannel advised him, if better could not be made of it, to endeavour to get a Subset from the incoming Tenant; and that the Pannel advised him, and others concerned, to qualify to the Government. Depones, That he told the Pannel, that if the Law countenanced the continuing them in their Possession, he would rather chuse it. Depones, That, on the Day he and his Neighbours went to Glenure, the Pannel left them to the Freedom of their own Choice, whether to follow the Purpose of the Advice from Edinburgh, or not; only it was his Opinion, that they had a Chance of being continued in their Possessions, they behaving themselves in all Respects dutifully, and go and ask the Lands of Glenure. Depones, That he does not remember that the Advice from Edinburgh cost him any Money, or that any was asked of him; but that some Accompts were at that Time betwixt him and the Pannel. Depones, That he continued with the rest of the Tenants about the Pannel, till they were desired by him to leave him, as he could take care of himself, and was to go Home; and that he does not remember to have heard Glenure's Name mentioned all the while; and that this happened on Occasion of Glenure and the Pannel's meeting at Kintalline: That he is not positive as to the Time; but thinks it was the last Night of the old Year. Depones, That he heard Glenure went next Day to the Pannel's House, and dined there. Causa scientiæ patet. And this is Truth, as he shall answer to God.

John Maccorquodale, late in Lettermore, now in Ballachelish, aged twenty and upwards, married, sworn, purged and examined ut supra, by the said Mr. Alexander Campbell, sworn Interpreter, depones, That the last Night of December last, he was present at Kintalline, as Glenure and the Pannel, with some other Company, met; when, after drinking a while, from loud Words it was apprehended a Quarrel would ensue; to prevent which, the Deponent, with some others, carried out the Pannel, who seemed unwilling to part with Glenure, as he expected Glenure would go that Night to his House: That the Deponent heard that Glenure, though he declined to go with the Pannel that Night, yet he proposed to breakfast with him next Morning: That the Deponent was in Company with the Pannel, and followed him at some Distance from the House of Kintalline; and that all the while he was in the Pannel's Company, he heard nothing of Glenure; only the Pannel was disobliged at being separated from him, and said, that if they about him had kept off, Glenure and he would be good Friends before they would part. Depones, That, when he was warned, and consequently like to want Lands, he was talking of his Situation to the Pannel, being poor, and, in his own Apprehension, unable to bear the Expence of a Law-suit, did not propose to follow the Matter in that Way: That being asked a Sight of the Warning, he gave it to the Pannel, but did not desire any Advice in Law should be asked about it, having some Dependence on his Innocence, and not being concerned in any of the Troubles in that Country. And being interrogate for the Pannel, whether the Pannel had advised him; the Deponent, to engage as Bouman in Lettermore, if better could not be provided for him, depones negativè. Causa scientiæ patet. And this is Truth, as he shall answer to God.

Ewan Macintyre in Duchelly, late Herd in Glenduror, aged twenty Years and upwards, unmarried, sworn, purged and examined ut supra, by Mr. Archibald Campbell of Stonefield, sworn Interpreter, depones, that he engaged to be Herd to Mr. Campbell of Ballicveolan, in the Farm of Glenduror, for the Year 1751; and that the Day after he entered into his Service there, the Pannel challenged him for accepting thereof, and told him, that he would be fit-sides with him, sooner or later, for doing it; and that if he did not meet with Resentment himself in his Life-time, others, such as his Friends, might meet with it after his Death. Depones, He never was in the Pannel's Service. Causa scientiæ patet. And this is Truth, as he shall answer to God; and depones he cannot write.

(Signed) ARCH. CAMPBELL. ARGYLL.

Alexander Campbell in Teynaluib, aged fifty Years, married, sworn, purged and examined ut supra, depones, That, in the End of April last, the Pannel called at the Deponent's House in the Morning, to have his Horse corn'd; and having called for, and got a Dram, which was afterwards set down upon the Table, one Maclaren, a Merchant in Stirling, who had lodged with the Deponent the Night before; being present, asked the Pannel, if he would not help the Deponent to a Dram? And the Pannel answered; he did not know any thing that he would help the Deponent, or any of his Name to, if it was not to the Gibbet. The Deponent answered, that that was not a comfortable Expression to him, that it seems if any of them were at the Gibbet, the Pannel would draw down their Feet; and the Pannel replied, that of some of them he would, and some of them he would not: That then the Deponent said, that Glenure, as he supposed, was the Man of the Name with whom the Pannel had the greatest Quarrel, and the Deponent did not know any good Cause the Pannel had for it: Upon which the Pannel answered, that if Glenure had used the Deponent as ill as he had used him, the Pannel, by turning him out of his Possession, he would have no less Quarrel with him him than he had: And the Deponent replied, that that was no just Cause of Quarrel; for that if the Pannel had a Tack of his Farm, Glenure could not turn him out; and the Deponent's Wife was also present at this Conversation. And being interrogate for the Pannel, whether the Deponent then thought him serious, and in earnest, or that it was only a Joke? depones, That, at that Time, he thought it proceeded from Malice. And being further interrogate for the Pannel, depones, he was at that Time perfectly sober. Depones, That all they drank was a Gill of Aquavitæ, of which the Deponent got a Part. Causa scientiæ patet. And this is Truth, as he shall answer to God.

(Signed) ALEX. CAMPBELL. P. GRANT.

Ewan Murray, Vintner, at West End of Lochearn, aged thirty-four Years, married, sworn, purged and examined ut supra, depones, That, in April last, the Pannel and Colin Maclaren, Merchant in Stirling, came to the Deponent's House, and the Pannel told the Deponent, that Glenure had warned away several Families in Ardshiel's Estate to remove; and that he was informed, that none of the Factors on the forfeited Estates had Power to remove the Tenants; and that he was going to Edinburgh to take Advice of Lawyers about it; and, if he had not that Power, that the Pannel would apply for Suspension in his own Name, and in Name of the rest of the Tenants; and, the Conversation turning upon an Officer of the Army, that was branded with Cowardice, and had been broke on that Account, the Pannel said, that he had Reason to say that Glenure was as great a Coward as that Officer; for that he, the Pannel, had challenged him to fight him, which Glenure declined; and desired the Deponent to tell Glenure, that he had told him so; but the Deponent answered, that he would not carry any such Message from one Gentleman to another; and, from the Conversation, the Deponent understood, that the Arms with which the Pannel had challenged Glenure to fight, was with Pistols. And being interrogate for the Pannel, depones, That he thought the Pannel was a little concerned with Drink. Causa scientiæ patet. And this is Truth, as he shall answer to God.

(Signed) EWAN MURRAY. P. GRANT.

Colin Maclaren, Merchant in Stirling, aged twenty-two Years, unmarried, sworn, purged and examined ut supra, depones, That, in the Month of April last, the Deponent happened to lodge in the House of Alexander Campbell in Teynaluib a Night, and in the Morning about Nine o'Clock the Pannel alighted there; and having breakfasted and got a Dram, the Deponent understanding that the Pannel was going the same Road with him towards Sterling, desired the Pannel to give the Landlord a Dram, that they might go on their Journey; that the Pannel answered, that he did not think he should help the Landlord, or any of his Name, to a Dram or any thing else, if it was not to the Gibbet: That he had mentioned to the Landlord, that Glenure had warned him to remove from his Possession in Ardshiel; therefore the Landlord answered, that it seemed, if they were on the Gibbet, the Pannel would draw down their Feet; and he supposed it was on Glenure's Account; to which the Pannel answered, he could not say but it was; upon which the Pannel and Landlord entered into an Altercation, together touching the Justice of that Removing; and, as the Deponent had no Concern in the Matter, he took little Notice to what passed. Depones, That, upon the Landlord's using the above Expression, that, if they were on the Gibbet, the Pannel would draw down their Feet, the Pannel's Answer was in these Words, that he did not chuse to be an Executioner, but he could draw down some of them. Depones, That from Teynaluib the Pannel and Deponent proceeded on their Journey, and about Eleven o'Clock, or Mid-day, came to the House of Ewan Murray, the preceding Witness: That there the Pannel again complained of Glenure's removing him; told him it was one Campbell that was to succeed in his Room: That he did not know any Reason for Glenure's using him so; for that they were Cousins: And, upon the Deponent's saying, that possibly it was none of Glenure's Fault, and that he could not help it, the Pannel said, he did not know any Business that either the Exchequer or the Factors had to turn out Tenants, while they paid their Rent; and said, that he was going to Edinburgh to get a Suspension of the Decreet of Removing. Depones, That, having left Ewan Murray's House together, and the said Ewan in Company with them, the Conversation turned upon an Officer in the Army, who had been broke for Cowardice; and the Deponent said, he was surpris'd with it; for that that Officer, as the Deponent heard, had not declined to accept of a Challenge to fight from Glenure; that thereupon the Pannel said, that he esteemed that Officer a better Man than Glenure: And Ewan Murray having contradicted his being so good a Man as Glenure, the Pannel said, that he knew the contrary; for that he himself had given Glenure a Challenge to fight him, which Glenure declined; and desired Ewan Murray to tell Glenure, that he would fight him when he would; but Ewan Murray declined to carry such a Message. Depones, That, after parting with Ewan Murray, in the Course of their Journey the Deponent found that the Removing was much at the Pannel's Heart; and the Deponent endeavoured all he could to divert the Conversation to another Subject: That the Pannel told him, that, if he failed in his Suspension at Edinburgh, he would carry it to the British Parliament; and, if he failed there, told him, after a little Pause, and with an Emphasis, that he behoved to take the only other Remedy that remained: And, being interrogate for the Pannel, depones, That, during the Conversation in Campbell's House, above deponed upon, the Deponent at first thought, that the Pannel had been in Joke; but afterwards it was like to become very serious; for the Landlord and he came to pretty high Words together: And, being further interrogate for the Pannel, depones, That he did not think the Pannel drunk, either in Campbell's House, or in Ewan Murray's House; but, after leaving Murray's House, they drank two or three Drams at a Dram-House; and, after that, the Deponent thought him much concerned with Liquor; and it was after taking these Drams that the Conversation between Murray and the Pannel, with respect to challenging Glenure, happened. And depones, That they had rode several Miles together, before the Conversation about the British Parliament; and the Deponent thought him even then still concerned with Drink. Causa scientiæ patet. And this is Truth, as he shall answer to God.

(Signed) COLIN MACLAREN. P. GRANT.

John

John More Maccoll, late Servant to the Pannel, aged thirty-seven, married, Witness cited, solemnly sworn, purged and examined by the sworn Interpreter above-named, depones, That he was present at a Conversation that happened betwixt the Pannel, John Beg and Dugald Maccolls, both Servants to the Pannel, in the Pannel's Brew-house at Aucharn, before Day-light upon a Morning, about Yule last, as the Deponent best remembers: That the Deponent was then employed in distilling the second Draught of a Brewing of Aquavitæ; and the Pannel ordered the Deponent to give him and the People present a Dram, which the Deponent did: That the Pannel said, Glenure would not take the Rent from the Tenants of Aucharn, Part of the Ardshiel Estate, because they had given the Pannel some Bear, which Glenure alledged they ought to have paid him: That the Pannel complained it was hard to refuse the Rent in Money from the Tenants in a scarce Year; and observed, that it would be of no great Consequence to him, the Pannel, though he should pay back the Bear, in Comparison to what it would be to the Tenants for subsequent Years, in case they were obliged to pay their Farm Bear and Meal; and said, the Tenants or Commoners were likely to be very ill off; for, if Glenure went on in the Way he then did, it was likely he would be Laird of Appin in a very short Time; and that he knew once a Set of Commoners in Appin, who would not allow Glenure to go on at such a Rate: To which the Deponent and the rest answered, that they knew no Commoners in the Country that could strive or contend with Glenure in that Manner. Depones, That he had no Conversation with the said John or Dugald Maccolls that Day, nor any Time thereafter, about the Import of the above Communing. Depones, That in Seed-Time last, when they were harrowing the Tath-field in Aucharn, being the very Day that James Stewart went for Edinburgh, Allan Breck Stewart came to the Deponent, and the said Dugald Maccoll, as they were yoking the Horses; and the Deponent, having asked him some Questions about France, said, he did not see any of the People that went over there, come back in so good a Way as they went over: To which Allan Breck replied, that they came back better than they went; and that they, meaning the People of Appin, might be much better, if they were worth themselves: Upon the Deponent's answering, that he did not see how that could happen, Allan Breck answered, if they, the Commoners, were worth themselves, they could keep out Glenure, and hinder him from oppressing them; in which Case, they would not be banished from their natural Possessions; and, upon the Deponent's answering, he did not see how any body could pretend to strive or struggle with Glenure in that Way, as he had the Laws of the King and Country for him, and no body to support or take them by the Hand, after their so doing, Allan said, he had it in his Power to save or protect any body that would put Glenure from trampling upon the Country in the Manner he then did: And, being interrogate for the Pannel, what Dress the said Allan Breck used to wear, when he saw him at Aucharn? depones, That he always saw him wear a blue side Coat, red Waistcoat, and black Breeches, with a Hat and Feather, except twice that he saw him in a black short Coat, with white metal Buttons. The first Time he saw him with the said short Coat, was, when the Pannel was at Edinburgh; and the said Allan Breck told, he was going to Rannoch, and actually went away, and staid several Days; and the other was upon Monday the 11th Day of May last, when he saw the said Allan Breck come to Aucharn dressed in his long Cloaths, and came directly where the Pannel, Allan his Son, John Beg Maccoll, and the Deponent, were covering Potatoes: That, when Allan came up, they were resting themselves, and sitting by one another: That Allan Breck sat with them; and all the Conversation that the Deponent noticed was, some Questions about the Welfare of the People of Glencrearan: And that he did not observe the Pannel have any private Conversation with the said Allan Breck; for that, a very little Time after Allan Breck's Arrival, the Pannel had a Message to meet Mr. Campbell of Airds at Keel; and that this happened after Mid-day: That the Pannel immediately, upon receiving the above Message, went away in order to meet Airds: And that no body went along with the Pannel, Allan Breck having staid with them: That a little thereafter, the Deponent, Allan Stewart the Pannel's Son, and John Beg Maccoll, went to cover Potatoes at a greater Distance from the Pannel's House; that Allan Breck staid behind; and, some Time thereafter, Allan Breck came where they were working, dressed in a black short Coat with white metal Buttons and black Breeches, and wrought with them in covering Potatoes. Depones, That the Deponent came very early upon Tuesday Morning to the Pannel's Son, and found the Servants getting up: That the Deponent went to Aucharn, at about a Quarter of a Mile's Distance, for a Slaughter-spade; and, as he was returning from thence, he met the Pannel going for Appin's House; and, when he came to the Pannel's House, he saw Allan Breck sitting in a Room, dressed in the black short Coat, combing his Hair. Depones, he never saw the said Allan Breck at Work any of the Times he saw him at Aucharn, except covering the Potatoes upon the Monday Evening as aforesaid. Causa scientie patet. And this is the Truth, as he shall answer to God.

(Signed) ARCH. CAMPBELL. JA. FERGUSON.

Dugald Maccoll, Servant to the Pannel, unmarried, aged twenty-four Years, Witness cited, sworn, purged and examined ut supra, by the forenamed sworn Interpreter, depones, That, in the latter End of Winter last, about Day-break, the Deponent was alongst with the Pannel, in his Brew-house at Aucharn, in Company with John More Maccoll, and John Beg Maccoll, both Servants to the Pannel: That, after taking a Dram of Whisky, the Conversation fell upon the Tenants of Aucharn, a Part of the forfeited Estate of Ardshiel; and that it was then mentioned, that they were in use to pay some Bear and Meal as Part of their Rent: That the Tenants of the said Town of Aucharn had paid the Bear to the Pannel they were in use to pay, and made Offer of Money for that and the rest of the Rent to Glenure, the Factor; and that Glenure refused to take the Money, insisting to have the Victual paid in Kind as formerly: Upon which the Pannel said, that Glenure was like to hurt him, the said James Stewart, as much as was in his Power; for, as the Tenants had paid him the Bear in use to be paid out of that Farm, and turned it to his own Use, he would be obliged to answer to Glenure for that Article of the Rent; but added, that that was not the worst of of it, and that, if he, Glenure, went on in the same Way, it was likely he would in five Years be Laird of Appin; and, upon the Deponent and the said John More and John Beg Maccoll's saying, that that was likely to happen, the said James Stewart, the Pannel, answered, that that was the Fault of the Commoners or Followers; for however he, or People in Circumstances like him, would shift for themselves, they, the Commoners, would be very badly off: And added, that he knew Commoners once in Appin, who would not allow Glenure to go on at such a Rate; to which the Deponent and the others present answered, that they believed that there might be Commoners once in Appin who would do so. Depones, That he does not remember that he and John Beg Maccoll had, at any Time that Day or thereafter, any Communing about the Sense or Meaning of this Conversation that happened in the Brew-house. Depones, That, upon the last Night of December last, Glenure and John Campbell of Ballievolan were in Company with the Pannel, John Stewart younger of Ballachelish, and James Stewart in Ardnamurchan, Uncle to the Pannel, in the House of John Breck Maccombie, Change-keeper at Kintalline; and, after Night-fall, by the Desire of his Mistress, the Deponent went there to attend his Master Home; that, after he came there, Glenure, the Pannel, and his Company, drank till it was late at Night, and the Deponent heard them speaking together, but, as it was in English, he did not understand what they said: That at last they began to speak very loud, and got up upon their Feet: That the Deponent, and several other Commoners, who happened to be at the House at the Time, apprehending they were going to quarrel, went into the Room in order to prevent it: That they still spoke loud, and in English; and the Deponent, with the Assistance of John Maccombie, alias John the Son of Duncan and Grandson of Malcolm, and another John Maccombie, alias the Son of Duncan and Grandson of Duncan, both then Tenants in Ardshiel, and John Roy Maccorquodale, then in Lettermore, now in Ballachelish; carried the Pannel, and the said James Stewart his Uncle, out of the Room: That they insisted for being back to the Company, but that young Ballachelish came to them, and told them that they must not go back, and that they ought to be good Friends: Upon which the Pannel said, he would not stir from the Place, till he was told by Glenure if he would go to his House next Day; that Ballachelish said he would go and get Notice, and accordingly went into the Room, and returned back in a little Time, and told the Pannel that Glenure promised to see him at his House next Day: That the Pannel asked if Glenure had promised so upon his Honour; and, upon Ballachelish answering he did, the Deponent and the said John Roy Maccorquodale carried the Pannel over a Burn adjoining to the said House of Kintalline in the Road to Aucharn; upon which the Pannel told them, they were better at that than in doing what they ought to do, and that it was to side with Glenure, not with him, that they were there; and asked the Tenants then present, what kept them there so late, and why they did not go Home in proper Time of Night? And, they answering that they were there waiting upon him, the Pannel replied, that it was not waiting upon him they were, but upon Glenure, to see what they could get by him: That he continued at such Conversation as this, till they came to the Fields of Auchindarroch, hard by Aucharn, when the said John Maccombie, alias the Son of Duncan Macilchallum, said, that he was told that Glenure had a drawn Hanger in the Room where they had been drinking, after the Pannel and his Uncle were carried out, declaring that he would not allow them to return to his Company any more that Night; upon which the Pannel asked them, why he did not tell him that before he came away from the House, that he might see if it was true, and what Glenure meant by it? And insisted then on going back to know the Truth of it; but, the Deponent and the other Tenants declaring they would not allow him to go back, he bid them go about their Business and leave him, which they accordingly did; and the Pannel, and the said James Stewart his Uncle, went to Aucharn, attended only, as he remembers, by the Deponent and a Boy-herd named Duncan Maccannanich: That, when this happened, the Pannel James Stewart and his Uncle were very drunk. Depones, That, some Time in March last, when the Deponent and John More Maccoll were harrowing the Tath-field at Aucharn, being the same Day, or the Day after the Pannel went for Edinburgh, Allan Breck Stewart walked for a good Time about the Field; and, as they were loosing their Horses, the said Allan Breck and they entered into Conversation about France, and People from this Country there; and John More Maccoll asked if there was any Prospect of any of them's coming back? Upon Allan Breck's answering he was afraid they would not, John More said, he wished that none had ever come from that Country; in which the said Allan joined him, saying, it had dispersed the Friends he most regarded; and that it was a particular Misfortune that the Management of any Concerns they left behind them, fell into the Hands of one that was about to shew them no manner of Favour; and declared that he meant Glenure; and told that the Commoners of Appin were little worth, when they did not take him out of the Way before now; and, upon their saying no body would run that Risque, not knowing who would stand by them, Allan answered, that he knew a Way to convey out of the Way any Person that would do so, in a Way that he would never be caught; and also said, that they, and the Tribe they were of, (meaning the Maccolls) were not like to be the least Sufferers by Glenure's Proceedings. Depones, That the first Time he saw Allan Breck Stewart at Aucharn, was about the Beginning of the Oat-sowing, which was pretty far advanced in the Month of March: That he was then dressed in a side blue Coat, red Waistcoat, and black Breeches, with a Hat and Feather: That, while he was in the Country of Appin, he was for the most Part at the Pannel's House; but that he was absent once for a considerable Time, when he said he was at Rannoch: That the Deponent saw him when he said he was going to Rannoch: That he was then dressed in a black short Coat with silver Buttons belonging to the Pannel, blue Trowsers striped with white, and a dun great Coat, which the Deponent thinks belonged to Allan Stewart, the Pannel's Son; and, being now shown the two black short Coats in the Clerk's Hands, depones, That the Coat with the silver Buttons on the Pockets belonged to the Pannel, and is the same the said Allan Breck had on when he said he was going to Rannoch as afore-said; and the other Coat with no Buttons upon the Pocket belonged to Allan Stewart, the Pannel's Son.

Son. Depones, That he saw him have on the same Dress when he came back from Rannoch. Depones, That he does not mind to have seen the said Allan Breck wear the said short Coat at any other Time, except upon Monday and Tuesday the 11th and 12th of May last. Depones, That upon Monday the 11th Day of May last; he went to the Wood for Fire-Wood, and, upon his coming Home in the Afternoon; he found the said Allan Breck dressed in the said black short Coat, working at Potatoes along with John More Maccoll and John Beg Maccoll, two of the Pannel's Servants, having on his own black Breeches. Depones, That he saw the said Allan Breck, upon Tuesday Morning the 12th of May last, in the Pannel's House, dressed in the said black Coat belonging to the Pannel, and blue Trowfers striped with white, such as now shown to him in the Clerk's Hands, and a blue Bonnet. Depones, That the Deponent was told the said Allan Breck left Aucharn early upon the said Tuesday, and the Deponent has not seen him since. Depones, That upon Friday Evening the 15th of May last, the Deponent and John Beg Maccoll overtook Katharine Maccoll, Servant to the Pannel, in the Brae above the House of Aucharn, with a Pock or Sack, and something in it, under her Arm; the Deponent asked her; what she had got in the Sack? To which she answered, that it was Allan Breck's Cloaths, and that she was going to hide them; and the Deponent and the said John Beg Maccoll saw her hide the Sack in which the said Cloaths were; and that this happened about Four o'Clock in the said Afternoon. Depones; That upon Thursday Evening the 14th Day of May last, after Notice of Glenure's Murder came to Aucharn, Allan Stewart, Son to the Pannel, desired the Deponent and John Beg Maccoll to hide a large Spanish Gun that used to stand in the Brew-house; and told them, that he himself had concealed a lesser Gun; that used to stand at the End of the Girnel in the Barn, under the said Girnel, where he thought it would be safe. Depones; That the Deponent, and the said John Beg Maccoll, on the said Thursday Evening, hid the large or Spanish Gun, that used to stand in the Brew-house, under the Thatch of the Sheep-house, and three Swords they took out of the Barn, and a fourth that was brought by John Beg Maccoll; the Deponent does not know from whence, under the Thatch of the Back of the Barn. Depones; That about Four o'Clock, Friday the 15th of May last; the Pannel desired the Deponent to carry the above Arms from the Houses; and hid them in the Moor: That accordingly the Deponent; and John Beg Maccoll, took the aforesaid large Gun from the Back of the Sheep-house under the Thatch, and the said four Swords from under the Thatch of the Barn, and found the Gun that used to stand in the Barn under the Girnel, where the said Allan Stewart; the Pannel's Son, said he hid it, and carried them to the Moor, and hid them in the Hole of a Rock; above the Peat-Moss: And that it was told at Aucharn, that there were Soldiers coming to the Country, before these Arms were hid in the Hill as above. Depones, That the said John Beg Maccoll, and the Deponent, had the above Arms, when they overtook Katharine Maccoll as aforesaid with the Cloaths. Depones, That the large or Spanish Gun; that stood in the Brew-house, was charged with Powder and small Drops; and that there was no Shot in the small or lesser Gun, that used to stand at the End of the Girnel in the Barn; but Allan

Stewart, the Pannel's Son, carried out the said Gun two or three Mornings, in order to shoot black Cocks in the latter End of March, or Beginning of April last. Depones, That Allan Breck Stewart was also in use to carry out the said large or Spanish Gun two or three Mornings, in order to shoot black Cocks; and about that Time saw him endeavour to help the Lock of the said Gun with a File: And, being interrogate for the Pannel, depones, That he, the Deponent, has no Skill about Guns; but heard the said Allan Breck, and Allan Stewart, the Pannel's Son, more than once complain, that the Guns were in bad Order. Depones, That, when the Deponent came Home from the Wood upon Monday the 11th Day of May last, the Pannel was not at Home; and the Deponent was told, he was gone to Keels to meet the Laird of Airds: And that the Deponent had gone to Bed before the Pannel came Home that Night: And that, early upon Tuesday Morning, when the Deponent got up, he saw the Pannel without, who told him, that he was going to Appin's House: And that, to the Deponent's Knowledge, Allan Breck; or the Pannel's Sons, were not then up: That he saw the Pannel go towards Lettershuna, where Appin lives. Depones, That Allan Breck Stewart left Aucharn before the Pannel returned from Lettershuna: And, upon an Interrogatory put for the Pannel, if the Pannel had given the short black Coat the Deponent saw the said Allan Breck wear, and which he has deponed belonged to the Pannel, was given by the Pannel to the Deponent or any other of his Servants before the said 11th of May, depones, That the said black Coat was not given to him; the Deponent, nor to any other of the Servants; to his Knowledge: And, being interrogate for the Pursuers, after showing him the Powder-Horn; now in the Clerk's Hands, and which had been formerly shown him when he was examined upon the Precognition, whether he had ever seen it before the Time of taking the said Precognition? depones, he never did: And, being interrogate for the Pannel, depones, That Glenure and Ballieveolan dined at the Pannel's House, in Company with the Pannel, the Day after they were like to have quarrelled at Kintalline as aforesaid. Depones, That it was ordinary for the Pannel to give a Dram to his Servants every Time he distilled a double Draught of Whisky. Depones, That the double Draught was a distilling; when the Deponent and the other Servants got the Dram mentioned in the first Part of this Deposition: Causa scientie patet. And this is the Truth, as he shall answer to God; and declares he cannot write:

(Signed) ARCH. CAMPBELL. JA. FERGUSON.

John Beg Maccoll, Servant to James Stewart Pannel, aged twenty-seven Years; unmarried, sworn, purged and examined ut supra; by the sworn Interpreter, depones, That, the latter End of Winter, or Beginning of Spring last, early in a Morning, the Pannel gave a Dram to the Deponent, Dougal Maccoll, and John More Maccoll, both Servants to the Pannel; in the Pannel's Brew-house: That, the Conversation falling upon Glenure, the Pannel complained that Glenure was no Friend of his; but that that was not the worst of it; but that, if he was to go on as he did; it was likely in five Years he would be Laird of Appin; and the Deponent and the other two Maccolls answering; that that was likely to happen; the Pannel replied, that he knew once a Set of Commoners in Appin, who would not allow Glenure to carry Matters with such such a high Hand; and to which the Deponent and the other two Maccolls answered, that they did not believe there was any Commoner in Appin, that durst contend or strive with Glenure in such a Way: That, immediately thereafter, the Deponent and Dougal Maccoll went out of the Brew-house, leaving the Pannel and John More Maccoll there. Depones, That, after they went out of the Brew-house, either that Day, or some Time thereafter, the Deponent and Dougal Maccoll talked together, what the Import of this Conversation might be; and that the Deponent was at a Loss whether to consider it as an Encouragement to destroy Glenure, or as a Complaint against the Commoners of Appin, as not being so faithful to the Pannel as he expected them to be. Depones, That, in March last, Allan Breck Stewart came to the Pannel's House, late in the Evening, dressed in a blue side Coat, red Waistcoat, and black Shag Breeches, and a feathered Hat: That he looked into the Kitchen, and went immediately to the Room where the Pannel and his Family were: That afterwards he used to go to the Country to different Places, and come frequently back to the Pannel's House: That once he remained there a Week, which is the longest Time he staid there at one Time. Depones, That the said Allan Breck Stewart came to the Pannel's House from Fasnaclioich upon Monday the 11th of May last, about Mid-day, dressed as above: That, upon the Evening of the said Day, the Deponent saw the said Allan Breck dressed in a black short Coat with silver Buttons. Depones, That there was two short black Coats with silver Buttons in the Pannel's House; the one belonging to the Pannel, and the other to Allan Stewart, his Son; the Deponent does not know which of them the said Allan Breck had on. And depones, That the Coats were so like, that he could not distinguish the one from the other. And depones, That it was one of these black Coats he had on, the Deponent having seen him, the said Allan Breck, near the Houses, in his side Cloaths; and, some Time thereafter, coming from the House, dressed in the said short Coat, in the Evening of the said Monday the 11th of May, and came where the Deponent and John More Maccoll were covering Potatoes, and wrought with them for some Time. Depones, That, some Time thereafter, a young Lad, Brother to Glenco, by Name Donald, as the Deponent thinks, came to them, and told that Glenure was come Home from Edinburgh, and was to go to Lochaber; upon which, some Conversation happening about removing the Tenants, Allan Breck said, Devil a bit of the new Tenants would get Possession, unless they had a Warrant to show, or come in by Force. Depones, That, when the said Allan Breck came, upon the 11th of May last, to Aucharn, the Pannel was seeing the Deponent, John More Maccoll, and Dougal Maccoll, working at Potatoes; and that Allan Stewart, the Pannel's Son, was likewise there: That, when Allan Breck came, they were sitting all together; and that he seated himself by the Pannel, and had some Conversation in English, which the Deponent does not understand. Depones, That Charles Stewart, Son to the Pannel, and Stewart, Daughter to Fasnaclioich, came to Aucharn from Fasnaclioich, a little after the said Allan Breck. Depones, That, upon Thursday the 14th of May last, the Pannel gave a Letter to the Deponent, to be delivered to Charles Stewart, Notary Public at Maryburgh; and told the Deponent, that the Letter was to make or cause the said Charles Stewart come to the Country of Appin to protest against Glenure, in case he had not a sufficient Warrant to remove the Tenants of Ardshiel. Depones, That the Pannel desired the Deponent to make all possible Dispatch, and desire John Breck Maccombie at Kintalline, and the said John More Maccoll, Servant to the Pannel, who was then at Kintalline, to ferry the Deponent from Kintalline to Onich, being much shorter than the Ferry of Ballachelish. Depones, That the Pannel also told him, that he was to get some Money from William Stewart, Merchant at Maryburgh, to pay for Milk Cows that were bought for him in the Country; and that, if the Money was not sent, he would not get the Cows. Depones, That he was ferried from Kintalline to Onich, and went on to Fort-William, and met Glenure at the Three-mile Water, who asked the Deponent from whence he came? To which the Deponent answered, that he had come over Keilis. Depones, That, being acquainted with Glenure's Servant, he had some Conversation with him, and told him he was going to Fort-William. Depones, That he set out from Aucharn about Seven or Eight o'Clock in the Morning, and made all the Dispatch he could to Fort-William, where he arrived about Twelve o'Clock. Depones, That, when he came to Fort-William, he delivered the Letter he got from the Pannel to William Stewart, Merchant in Maryburgh, who told him, that Charles Stewart, the Notary, was not at Home, he having gone to the Braes of Lochaber in the Morning; and told the Deponent, that he, the said William, had wrote to the Pannel in the Morning; and that there was a Notary along with Glenure, who would serve the Pannel as well as Glenure. Depones, That he does not remember that he asked for any Money from William Stewart, nor did he give him any, but said, he would send Servants for the Cattle. Depones, That he staid a very short Time at Fort-William: That the said William Stewart asked him, if he wanted Victuals? Upon the Deponent's answering he did not, the said William brought him into his House, and gave him a Dram; and the Deponent immediately returned back by the short Road to the Ferry of Ballachelish, and found Glenure at the Ferry before him: That the Deponent required of the Ferry-man to ferry him immediately, and the Ferry-man desired him to stay till he would be ferried with Glenure's Horses; but the Deponent observed to him that the Stream was rapid, and might draw some time before they would ferry the Horses, he ought to ferry him immediately, which he accordingly did; and that this might be about Four o'Clock: That, upon his crossing the Ferry, he met Archibald Macinish, Ferryer upon the Appin Side, to whom he told where he had been, and his Errand; and that the said Ferryer told the Deponent, that he was informed by a Man, that he was going to meet Glenure: That the new Tenants, that were to come to Ardshiel, had come to Glenduror with their Cattle; and were to take Possession next Day; and the Deponent told him, that he did not believe they would get Possession till their Warrants were seen. Depones, That, a little thereafter, he met Alexander Stewart elder of Ballachelish, to whom he told where he had been, and his Errand, and the Conversation he had with the Ferry-man; and Ballachelish desired him to tell his Master, if he would send for him, he would go along with him to see Glenure's Warrant. Depones, That

That he passed through the Wood of Lettermore, and met or saw no body there : That he went then Home, and gave the Pannel an Account of his Errand : That he was hardly an Hour there, when John Mackenzie, Glenure's Servant, came to the Door calling for the Pannel : That the Pannel went immediately to the Door, and asked the Servant, what was the Matter; and what News he had? To which the Servant replied, The worst I ever had; my Master is murdered in the Wood of Lettermore : Upon which James Stewart said, Lord blefs me, was he shot? To which the Servant answered, that he was shot, and said the Pannel ought to go and take Care of his Corpse: That the Servant immediately went off, but neither the Pannel nor any of his Family went near the Corpse; and the Pannel said, that, as he and Glenure were not in good Terms, and some of the People that were to meet Glenure had Arms, he did not care to go near them, not knowing what might happen. Depones, That his Master said, that it was a dreadful Accident, and was afraid would bring Trouble on the Country; and appeared to be sorry for what had happened. Depones, That, upon the Evening of Friday the 15th of May last, the Deponent and the said Dougal Maccoll overtook Katharine Maccoll, Servant to the Pannel, going up the Brae above the House with a Sack, and something in it, under her Arm; and the said Dougal Maccoll asked her, what she had got there? To which she answered, that it was Allan Breck's Cloaths, which she was going to hide; and she hid them accordingly in the Deponent's Presence. Depones, That, when the said Allan Breck came first to Aucharn, he used to lie in a Room in the lower End of the House; but afterwards he, and the Pannel's Sons, and any young People that came about the House, when the Season was more advanced, used to lie in the Barn. Depones, That, upon the said Friday Evening the 15th of May last, Margaret Stewart, the Pannel's Wife, desired the Deponent and the said Dougal Maccoll to hide all the Arms that were about the House, as there was a Party of Soldiers coming to the Country : That accordingly they took two Guns and three Swords, and a fourth Sword was delivered to the Deponent by Allan Stewart, Son to the Pannel; which two Guns and four Swords the Deponent and the said Dougal Maccoll hid in the Brae a good Way above the Pannel's House; and the two Guns in the Clerk's Hands being shown to the Deponent, depones, That these were the same two Guns that were hid as above. Depones, That the largest of the Guns, now shown the Deponent, was loaded, and lay in the Brew-house; and the Deponent believes, that either Allan Stewart, the Pannel's Son, or Allan Breck Stewart, charged the said Gun; for the Deponent saw Allan Breck Stewart have the said Gun some time before, and go with it in order to shoot black Cocks : That, late on Thursday Evening the 14th of May last, after Notice came of Glenure's Murder, the said Dougal Maccoll told the Deponent, that the Pannel's Wife had desired to hide all the Arms about the House, not knowing but that some Soldiers might come to the Country; upon which the Deponent and the said Dougal carried the said loaded Gun from the Brew-house, and hid it under the Thatch upon the Out-side of the Sheep-house, and carried three Swords out of the Barn, and hid them under the Thatch upon the Out-side of the said Barn, being that Barn where the Pannel's Children and Allan Breck used to lie : That, upon their being desired by the said Margaret Stewart next Day to hide the Arms better, they took the foresaid loaded Gun and three Swords out of the Places where they had hid them; and upon their inquiring for the other Gun that used to lie in the said Barn, Allan Stewart, the Pannel's Son, told them, he had hid it under the large Girnel in the Barn, and told them they need not stir it, as it was safe enough there; but they answered, as they were hiding the rest, they would hide that likewise; and accordingly the Deponent went and took the said Gun from the Girnel, where the said Allan told him he had hid it, and concealed them all together as above: Upon Recollection depones, That it was upon the Thursday Evening the Deponent and the said Dougal Maccoll inquired about the little Gun which lay at the End of the Girnel in the Barn, and that the said Allan Stewart, Son to the Pannel, told them he had hid it, as above, under the Girnel. Depones, so far as he can remember, he did not see the said little Gun upon Thursday, but saw it stand as above, either upon Tuesday or Wednesday preceding, and used for some Time preceding to see it stand in the same Place. Depones, That it was upon Friday Evening the Deponent took the said Gun from under the Girnel, where the said Allan had hid it; and adds, that the Reason he did not see it on the Thursday was, that he was from Home almost all that Day. Depones, That he did not see the said little Gun loaded since March last, when the black Cocks were crouding; that then there was a Shot of Drops in it, and the said Allan Breck carried it out one Morning, and told that it misgave with him thrice at a black Cock, and shot with it the fourth Time without killing the black Cock. Depones, That the Brew-house, where the said large Gun used to lie, was always locked, but when People were in it : That the Barn, where the said little Gun stood, had a Lock and Key, but was not in use to be locked since the Crop was removed out of it, which was at the Time they were done with their Oat-feed, which was some Time before May-Day. And, being interrogate for the Pannel, depones, That neither of the Guns were in good Order : That the large or loaded Gun was in use, when going to be snapped, to stand at Half-cock, and the little Gun was in use to snap or misfire. Depones, That the little Gun had an old wore Flint in it; and that he observed this Flint in the said Gun, when he was in use to see it stand at the End of the Girnel as above; but did not observe whether it had a Flint or no, when he took it from under the Girnel as above. Depones, That he knows no Fault the Lock of the little Gun had, but its being in use to misfire; and that the Lock was on the said Gun when he hid it the Friday Evening as above. Depones, That when Allan Breck came, upon Monday the 11th of May last, to the Place where the Pannel, Deponent, and others, were covering Potatoes as above, they had sit together but for about a Quarter of an Hour; the Deponent went to work at Potatoes at a greater Distance, and, before he went away, heard a Message had come for his Master, to meet Airds at Keil, and heard his Master speak of going there; but when he went, or who went along with him, the Deponent does not know : That the Deponent continued working at the Potatoes till the Evening, and the Pannel was not come Home when he came from his Work : That the Pannel came Home at Bed-time, accompanied with John More Macilichattan, who lay with the Deponent that Night. Depones, That it was a while after (the Deponent cannot say how long) the Pannel parted from the Deponent, and the other People that wrought at the Potatoe-Ground: That Allan Breck came dressed in the black short Coat as above, and wrought with them at the Potatoes. Depones, That they all got up together, after the said Allan Breck came to them, and sat with them as above; and he thinks the Pannel went then towards the House. Depones, That Allan Breck and the Pannel were in use to converse together, sometimes in English, and sometimes in the Irish Language. Depones, That, when he went to Fort-William, with the above Letter, to Charles Stewart, the Notary, he had no Orders from his Master to inquire after the Motions of Glenure, or to acquaint any body thereof. Depones, That he never saw the said Allan Breck Stewart change his Cloaths, and put on short Cloaths, at any Time, at the said James Stewart's House, before the said 11th of May; but that, as the Deponent best remembers, at the Time the said James Stewart was at Edinburgh, he saw the said Allan Breck dressed in a black short Coat, a dun big Coat which the Deponent thinks belonged to Allan Stewart, the Pannel's Son; and he heard the said Allan Breck, or others about the House say, that he was then going to Rannoch. Causa scientiæ patet. And this is Truth, as he shall answer to God; and depones he cannot write.

Captain David Chapeau, in General Pulteney's Regiment of Foot, married, aged fifty-two, Witness cited, sworn, purged and examined ut supra, depones, That, upon the 23d of May last, he was informed by Mr. Campbell of Barcaldine, that there were some Arms hid among the Rocks near the Pannel's House; and was, at the same Time, shown the Paragraph of a Letter from Colonel Crawfurd, who commands the Regiment to which the Deponent belongs, addressed to Barcaldine, wherein the Colonel desired the Deponent to go in Search of such Arms. Accordingly the Deponent went that Day with a Party, and took along with him Mr. Patrick Campbell of Auchincallan, to direct him the Road; and, when they came to a Hill above the Pannel's House, Mr. Campbell found concealed in a Hill above the Pannel's House two Muskets and four broad Swords, whereof having informed the Deponent, the Deponent went and saw them taken out. And the Muskets or Fuzees, now in the Clerk's Hands, being shown to the Deponent, depones, That they are the very same Fuzees he saw taken out as aforesaid: And depones, That the largest of the two Fuzees was loaded, and the other not; and that, having drawn the Shot of the loaded Piece, found it to be loaded with small Shot, by which he means Drops and small Slug mixed together: And it appeared to the Deponent, that the said unloaded Piece had been lately fired, having put his Finger in the Muzzle, which he brought out black. And, being interrogate for the Pannel, whether a Piece which is laid by foul, will not, after a Month's Time, file one's Finger, when put in the Muzzle of it, as well as when it has been lately fired? depones, He cannot tell, not being accustomed to see Arms used so. And depones, That the said unloaded Piece had a Lock upon it at the Time; but which had only one Screw-nail in it. But depones, That a Gun, having a Lock with one Screw-nail, may be fit enough to be fired with; and adds, That that End of the Lock wanting the Nail, was tied to the Stock by a String. Depones, That the Pieces, or Fuzees, were carried along to Fort-William, where the Deponent delivered them over to the Adjutant at Fort-William; and does not know by what Means the said Lock upon the small Piece, now amissing, was lost; but believes it to have been by Accident. Causa scientiæ patet. And this is Truth, as he shall answer to God.

Patrick Campbell in Auchincallan, married, aged thirty-three Years, Witness cited, sworn, purged and examined ut supra, depones, That some Time in May last, he thinks on the 23d, he was called by Captain Chapeau to go along with him to Aucharn in Search of Arms; and, having come to a Moss, above the Pannel's House of Aucharn, the Deponent discovered two Guns in a Cove; whereupon he immediately called to the Captain, who was with him, when they were taken out of the Cove; as also, there was also there three or four broad Swords. Depones, That one of the Guns was heavier than the other; and the lightest Gun had a Stick laid along the Lock tied by a String about the Stock: But, whether the said Lock had any Screw-nail, or not, he does not remember; and that these Arms were carried away by Captain Chapeau. Depones, That the lightest of the said two Guns was unloaded, and the heaviest loaded: That he saw the Shot of the loaded Gun drawn, which consisted of Drops; with some small Slug among them. Depones, That, in order to know whether the unloaded Piece had been lately fired, several put their Finger in the Muzzle of it; and particularly the Deponent; and the Finger coming out black, he, and the rest with him, from thence concluded, that it had been lately fired. And, being interrogate for the Pannel, whether a Musket that has been laid by foul, after firing, will not, in like Manner, file a Man's Finger put in the Muzzle of it, after it has been fired a Month or longer before? depones, that he never made that Trial upon a Gun that he knew to have been so long before fired. Causa scientiæ patet. And this is the Truth, as he shall answer to God.

William Stewart, Merchant in Maryburgh, aged thirty-six Years, married, sworn, purged and examined ut supra; and, being shown a Letter, dated at Maryburgh the 14th of May last, signed William Stewart, and addressed on the Back to the Pannel, being the Writing Number 10. in the Inventory subjoined to the Libel; depones, That the Letter is of his Hand-writing, and was subscribed by him, and sent to the Pannel, of the Date it bears, by Ewan Mackenzie, a common Carrier in Maryburgh. And, being also shown a Letter dated at Aucharn the 14th of May last, Eight o'Clock in the Morning, signed James Stewart, and addressed on the Back to Mr. Charles Stewart, Writer at Auchintour depones, That the said Letter was wrote by the Pannel, and sent, of the Date it bears, by John Beg Maccoll, and in Absence of the said Charles Stewart, who was not then at Maryburgh, was delivered by the said Maccoll to the Deponent, who broke it open, and told Maccoll, that Charles Stewart was not then in Maryburgh, but that he expected him that Night, but thought that he could not go along with Maccoll: That Maccoll asked the Deponent, if he should wait for him, or go after him? The Deponent answered, it was needless; for, if Charles Stewart could could go, he would take a Boat. And, being interrogate whether he wrote any Answer by John Maccoll, or if he gave him any verbal Answer to the Postscript, wherein the Pannel wrote to Charles Stewart, to tell the Deponent to send him eight Pounds Sterling? depones, he gave no Answer in Writing; and thinks he did not give any verbal Answer, if it was not, that he bid him tell his Master he was not in Cash, which was the Case. And depones, That the Deponent was himself intended by the William in the Postscript. Depones, That Maccoll did not stay three Minutes with the Deponent, when he went away. Depones, that the next Day, being Friday, or the Day thereafter, the Deponent had a Message from the Pannel about Ten o'Clock Forenoon, or betwixt Ten and Twelve, by Alexander Stewart, Packman, who told the Deponent, that he was sent by the Pannel to Glenevis, and was ordered in his Way to call at the Deponent to send the Pannel five Pounds Sterling; and that his Errand to Glenevis was, to desire him to send for a Horse that he had bought from the Pannel: That the Deponent told the Packman, that he was not in Cash, and could not send the five Pounds; upon which the Packman said, that the five Pounds was to relieve some Cows that the Pannel had bought for the Deponent at Ardshiel; and, if the Deponent did not send the Money, he could not get the Cows: That the Deponent said, he was indifferent, but had not the Money to send; upon which the Deponent's Wife desired the Packman to go forward to Glenevis, and to call there in his Return, and he would get the Money, because they could not conveniently want the Cows: That the Packman accordingly went away; and the Deponent's Wife, as she afterwards told him, for he was not present, gave him three Guineas: That the Deponent is sure the Money was not given on a Sunday, and thinks it was on a Saturday; and therefore believes it was upon Friday the 15th that the Packman first called the Deponent, being certain that a Night intervened betwixt his calling and getting the Money. Depones, That he had no Conversation with the Packman touching Allan Breck Stewart, whose Name was not mentioned by either of them; but the Deponent asked him, if he had come by the Road where that unlucky Murder of Glenure had happened? And the Packman told him, he did; but the Deponent did not ask him who was suspected for it; nor had any other Conversation on that Subject, there being a great many People present in the Shop at the Time. Depones, That the Deponent received two of the Cows about eight or ten Days after, and other two he did not get at all. And being interrogate for the Pannel, depones, That, upon Allan Breck Stewart's first coming to this Country, which was in the Month of February or March last, the Deponent saw him at Edinburgh: That thereafter, upon the 1st of May last, the Deponent happening to be at the Pannel's House, Allan Breck Stewart came there from Rannoch, and was dressed in a short black Coat with clear Buttons, such as these now lying in the Court. Depones, That when the Deponent saw Allan Breck Stewart at Edinburgh, which, he thinks, was in February, he told the Deponent, that it was then but three or four Days since he arrived from France. Depones, That, at that Time, Allan Breck Stewart was dressed in long Cloaths, a blue Coat, and, as the Deponent thinks, a red Vest, a Hat feathered in the Inside. Depones, That, when the Deponent was at the Pannel's, the 1st of May, Charles Stewart was there also, in order to go to Glenure, and intimate a Sift that had been obtained in Name of the Tenants of Ardshiel, upon a Bill of Suspension of a Removing against them. Depones, That Allan Breck Stewart told the Deponent, that he had been a Soldier in the King's Troops at the Battle of Preston; and he thinks, he said, it was in Lascelles' Regiment, but is not positive, whether it was Lascelles' or Murray's. And depones, That thereafter he was in the Rebellion. Depones, That, when he was at the Pannel's House, the 1st of May, as aforesaid, he did not sleep within the Pannel's House, and seemed to be on the Watch, lest he should be searched for; and, being interrogate, whether Allan Breck Stewart did not then lie in the Barn, and some of the Pannel's Children with him? he says, it is very probable he might; but the Deponent knows nothing of it; for the Deponent saw him next Morning, and, he thinks, breakfasted with him at the Pannel's House. Depones, That the Deponent is first Cousin to the Pannel, and also his Brother-in-law. Depones, That, before Charles Stewart went with the Tenants to Glenure's House, upon the 1st of May, the Deponent heard the Pannel say to the Tenants, that they might go, or not, as they thought proper; but he would be far from advising them, Causa scientiæ patet. And this is Truth, as he shall answer to God.

Barbara Watt, Spouse to William Stewart, Merchant in Maryburgh, aged twenty-eight Years, sworn, purged and examined ut supra, depones, That the Day immediately after the Murder of Glenure, about Mid-day, Alexander Stewart, Packman, brought the Deponent's Husband, the preceding Witness, a Message from the Pannel, to send him five Pounds Sterling to pay for some Cows that the Pannel had bought for him: That the Deponent's Husband was angry at the Message, and said, that he had not then the Money to give, having given away some Money that Morning; but that tho' he had it, he would not send it; and the Packman answered, that he was a sufficient but himself for all the Sum, tho' the Pannel had not sent for it: That the Packman told at the same Time, that he was going to Glenevis on some Message from the Pannel touching a Horse; therefore the Deponent interposed, and desired the Packman to call there in his Return from Glenevis, and he would get the Money; for that they behoved to have the Cows to stock a Farm they had: That this Conversation happened in the Deponent's Shop, where several other Persons were present. Depones, That, next Day in the Afternoon, the Deponent's Husband not being then at Home, the Deponent met the Packman in the Street of Maryburgh, and happening to have three Guineas then in her Purse, she gave them to him there in the Street, and called her Servant-Maid to be Witness, because there was no Letter from the Pannel, nor Receipt to be given by the Packman. Causa scientiæ patet. And this is Truth, as she shall answer to God.

Alexander Stewart, travelling Packman in Appin, aged thirty, unmarried, Witness cited, sworn, purged,

purged and examined ut supra, by Archibald Campbell, Writer in Inverary, sworn Interpreter foresaid, depones, That, upon Friday the 15th Day of May last, about Twelve o'Clock, the Pannel desired the Deponent to go to Fort-William to William Stewart, Merchant there, and get from him five Pounds, or five Guineas; and told the Deponent, that his Friend Allan Breck was about to leave the Country, as there were Troops coming into it, and that he might be suspected of Glennure's Murder; and that it was incumbent upon him, the Pannel, to supply the said Allan Breck in Money; and the Pannel desired the Deponent to tell the said William Stewart, that he must send him Money, tho' he should borrow it from twenty Purfes; and desired him also to tell the said William to give Credit in five Pounds Sterling to John Breck Maccoll, Bouman to Appin at Koalisnacooan, in case he came to demand such a Sum; and the Pannel desired the Deponent to demand four Pounds Sterling more from the said William, as the Price of a Couple of Milk Cows bought for him. Depones, That, in Consequence of the above Message, he went to Fort-William, where he arrived early in the Evening: That he met the said William Stewart, and demanded from him for the Use of the Pannel the two Sums above-mentioned: That the said William told him he had not Money, but desired the Deponent to go to Glenevis, and that he, the said William, had Business to Glenevis, would meet the Deponent there in the Morning, and give him his Errand. Depones, That the Pannel desired the Deponent to tell the said William Stewart to send Notice to Glenevis, that he should send for a stoned Horse Glenevis had bought from the Pannel. Depones, That he went to Glenevis, where he arrived about Sun-set, and staid there the said Friday's Night: That, as the said William did not come there Saturday Morning, the 16th Day of May last, the Deponent went back to Fort-William, and met the said William Stewart upon the Street, and asked him if his Answer was ready? That the said William said, that he would let him go immediately, and went into his own House, and immediately thereafter Mrs. Stewart, Spouse to the said William, came to the Door, and gave the Deponent three Guineas, with which the Deponent went back immediately to Aucharn, and arrived there in the Evening of the said Saturday the 16th of May: That when he came to Aucharn, the Pannel was not at Home; but soon after the Deponent's Arrival, Notice came, that the Pannel, and Allan Stewart his Son, were made Prisoners at Inshaig, a Place of about a Quarter of a Mile from Aucharn: That, immediately upon this Notice, Mrs. Stewart the Pannel's Wife, and the Deponent, went to Inshaig, and by the Way the Deponent offered the three Guineas he had brought from Fort-William to Mrs. Stewart, but she desired him to keep them: That, upon their Arrival at Inshaig, they found the Pannel a Prisoner; but Mrs. Stewart and the Deponent having had Access to converse with the Pannel apart, the Pannel asked the Deponent, what Money he brought from Fort-William? And upon the Deponent's telling him, that he brought three Guineas, the Pannel pulled a green Purse out of his Pocket, out of which he took two Guineas, and gave them to Mrs. Stewart, and Mrs. Stewart delivered the two Guineas immediately to the Deponent; and the Pannel desired, that the five Guineas should be sent to that unhappy Man, meaning Allan Breck, to see if he could make his Escape; and pitched upon the Deponent as a Person that should go with the Money; and does not remember positively, that the Pannel spoke about Allan Breck's Cloaths: That soon thereafter the Pannel was carried off by a Party to Fort-William, and the Deponent returned to Aucharn with the Pannel's Wife: That the Party and Pannel called at Aucharn, and took a Dram; and upon their going off, Mrs. Stewart, the Pannel's Wife, told the Deponent, that he must go to Allan Breck with the five Guineas and his Cloaths; and upon the Deponent's inquiring where he would find him? Mrs. Stewart told him, that he would cast up in Koalisnacooan. Depones, That, some Time after Night-fall, the Deponent got his Supper at Aucharn, and how soon he was done eating, Mrs. Stewart, the Pannel's Wife, carried the Deponent to the Back of the Brew-house, where there lay a Sack, out of which the said Mrs. Stewart took a blue side Coat, red Waistcoat, black Breeches, a Hat, and some Shirts, all which she delivered to the Deponent, ordering him to go with the Cloaths and Money to Koalisnacooan immediately, and deliver them to John Breck Maccoll, Bouman to Appin, if he did not meet Allan Breck himself. Depones, That the said Mrs. Stewart directed the Deponent not to carry the Cloaths to John Breck Maccoll's House, lest any body might see them. Depones, That he declined going, and told Mrs. Stewart that she might send some other Person, and that, at any rate, he did not chuse to go alone in the Night-time; but that Mrs. Stewart insisted upon his going, telling there was no other Body she could send, as both her Servants were gone to Fort-William, and desired the Deponent to carry his Sister Margaret Stewart a Part of the Way with him: That accordingly the said Margaret his Sister went along with the Deponent as far as Larich in Glenco, where she parted with him about Day-light Sunday Morning: That thereafter the Deponent travelled alone to Koalisnacooan, and left the Cloaths, as directed, at the Root of a Fir-tree, at some Distance from the Houses; and as the Deponent was going to the House, he met said John Breck Maccoll, and asked him if Allan Breck was there? And upon his denying that he was there, the Deponent expressed some Surprize, and told that he was sent with Money and Cloaths to him; told from whence he came; and how he got the Money and Cloaths above-mentioned; upon which the said John Breck Maccoll told the Deponent, that Allan Breck was in the Heugh of Corrynakeigh, above the House of Koalisnacooan; and if the Deponent inclined to see, the said John Breck Maccoll directed him to go to a Hill above the Houses and whistle, and that the said Allan Breck would come to him: That the Deponent answered, he had gone far enough after the said Allan Breck already, pointed out to John Breck where he had left the Cloaths, and gave him the five Guineas to be given Allan Breck. Depones, That he went to the said John Breck's House, where he slept for some Time, and thereafter dined with the said John Breck at his House. Depones, That the said John Breck Maccoll told the Deponent, he did not know how the said Allan Breck could leave the Country, as he had no Victuals, and he, the said John, had none to give him, and desired the Deponent to go to Mrs. Macdonald of Glenco's House at Inver, and get a Peck.

Peck of Meal for Allan Breck's Use, which the Deponent refused. Depones, That the said John Breck Maccoll told the Deponent, that, unless he had come with the Money and Cloaths, he, the said John Breck, would hence been obliged to go to Fort-William for Money to the said Allan Breck. Depones, That he, the Deponent, came back to Aucharn upon the Evening of the Sunday the 17th Day of May last, and the Pannel's Wife asked him if he had seen Allan Breck? And upon his answering he had not, and telling that Allan Breck was at Koalisnacoan, tho' he had not seen him, and that he had given the Cloaths and Money to John Breck, she appeared satisfied. Depones, That the said John Breck Maccoll desired the Deponent to conceal his carrying the Cloaths and Money to Koalisnacoan, as above; told him, that he could not prove it against him, and that he could safely depone he did not deliver the Cloaths to him, since he only pointed out where they were. Causa scientie patet. And this is the Truth, as he shall answer to God. And declares he cannot write. And further depones, That he is a distant Relation of the Pannel's, tho' he cannot tell the Degree: That his Father lives at a Quarter of a Mile's Distance from Aucharn; and that he, the Deponent, used to be often in the Pannel's House. And this is also Truth, as he shall answer to God.

(Signed) ARCH. CAMPBELL. P. GRANT.

John Breck Maccoll, Bouman to Appin in Koalisnacoan, aged forty Years, married, sworn, purged and examined ut supra, by the above Mr. Archibald Campbell, sworn Interpreter, depones, That, upon the Afternoon of Saturday the 16th Day of May last, as the Deponent was in a Fir-bush near Aldavoim, at the Foot of the Heugh of Corrynakeigh in Koalisnacoan, he heard a Whistle; and, upon looking up, saw Allan Breck Stewart, at a little Distance, beckoning to the Deponent to come towards him; which he did: That after Salutations, the Deponent told him, he was afraid it was no good Action that occasioned his being in such a remote Place, and at such a Distance from any common Road: That Allan Breck answered, the Place was not very far from a common Road: That the Deponent, having heard the Day before of Glenure's Murder, charged Allan Breck with being guilty of it: That Allan Breck asked the Deponent, what he had heard about the Murder? That the Deponent answered, that he had seen no Person from the Strath of Appin; but that two poor Women, that had come up Glenco, were telling, that Glenure was murdered Thursday Evening in the Wood of Lettermore; and that two People were seen going from the Place where he was murdered; and that he, Allan Breck, was said to be one of them: That Allan Breck answered, he had no Concern in it; and that, if his Information was right, there was but one Person about the Murder; and that, as he was idle in the Country, he was sure he would be suspected of it; but that that would give him little Concern, if he had not been a Deserter, which would bear harder upon him, in case he was apprehended, than any Thing could be proved against him about the Murder: That the Deponent did not believe him, when he said he had no Hand in the Murder of Glenure; and not caring to press it much upon him, told him, that, as he was already suspected, it was dangerous to have any Intercourse with him, and pressed him to leave the Place, lest he should bring the Deponent and his Family to Trouble: That Allan Breck said, he did not doubt but the Family of Ardshiel would be suspected of the Murder, and it was probable the Pannel, and Allan Stewart his Son, might be taken into Custody about it; and that he, Allan Breck, was afraid Allan Stewart the Pannel's Son's Tongue was not so good as his Father's; by which Words the Deponent understood, that Allan was easier entrapped than the Pannel; and the Deponent still insisting upon Allan Breck's leaving that Neighbourhood, the said Allan Breck told him, he would not leave the Town for eight Days, unless some Necessaries he expected came to him; and told the Deponent, unless some Money came for him before next Morning, he, the Deponent, must go to Fort-William with a Letter: That tho' the Deponent refused to go, Allan Breck looked about among the Trees, and finding a Wood-pigeon's Quill, made a Pen of it, and having made Ink of some Powder he took out of a Powder-horn that was in his Pocket, he wrote a Letter, which he told the Deponent he must deliver to William Stewart, Merchant at Maryburgh; and, upon the Deponent's telling him that he would by no Means undertake that, as he was informed that every body that went to Fort-William was searched, Allan Breck said it was an easy Matter to hide a Letter; the Deponent answered, if he was caught upon the Streets, what would he do with it? Allan Breck told him, that the Letter must not be found upon him by any Means, and, if he was caught with the Letter, he must eat it before it was found: That the Deponent then told the said Allan Breck, that he did not know but he would be obliged to go for some Beer next Day to Fort-William, in which Case he might possibly carry the Letter; but at the same Time told the said Allan Breck, if he was caught with the Letter, he would tell all he knew about him: That the said Allan Breck desired the Deponent to go to Callart or Glenco's House for a Peck of Meal to him, which the Deponent refused; and at parting, the said Allan Breck told the Deponent, he would see him next Day. Depones, That, at the Time of the above Conversation, the said Allan Breck Stewart was dressed in a dun-coloured great Coat, black short Coat, and blue Trowsers striped with white. And the Deponent having seen in Court the black short Coat with the Buttons on the Pockets, and the Trowsers, depones, That they are the short Coat and Trowsers he saw the said Allan Breck wear, or exactly like them. Depones, That early upon Sunday Morning the 17th Day of May last, as the Deponent got up to look about his Corns, he saw a Man, which he at first imagined to be the said Allan Breck Stewart, travelling towards him up the Glen; but, upon his coming near, the Deponent knew him to be Alexander Stewart, travelling Packman in Appin (the immediate preceding Witness) who is Cousin-german by the Father's Side to Allan Breck; and after Salutation, and the Deponent's expressing his Surprise at seeing him so early, the said Alexander Stewart asked the Deponent, if he had seen Allan Breck? And the Deponent refusing his having seen him, Alexander Stewart seemed surprized, and told that he was informed he would meet Allan Breck there; and that he had brought some Necessaries for him: And the Deponent inquiring what he had brought, the said Alexander Stewart informed him, that he had brought five Guineas and some Cloaths; and told that he had a great great deal of Trouble in getting the Money: That he had been sent by the Pannel to William Stewart, Merchant at Fort-William, from whose Wife he got three Guineas; and that the Pannel, or his Wife, gave him the other two Guineas; and that the Pannel's Wife gave him the Cloaths, and informed him, that Allan Breck was to meet him at Koalisnacoan; but that now he would leave the Money and Cloaths with the Deponent: Upon this the Deponent told the said Alexander Stewart, that he had seen Allan Breck the Day before, and that he expected these Things; and told him that he believed Allan Breck was then in the Heugh of Corrynakeigh, and, if he would go to a Hill that the Deponent pointed out to him, and whistle once or twice, he believed Allan Breck would come to him: The said Alexander Stewart declined going, alledging he was very much fatigued: That the Deponent told the said Alexander Stewart, that he wondered he would not go that Length to see his Uncle's Son; the said Alexander Stewart answered, that he had slept none for two Nights, and was very much fatigued; and upon this he delivered to the Deponent the five Guineas, and told he had left the Cloaths at some Distance, and would show them to the Deponent when he was going away: That the Deponent told the said Alexander Stewart, that Allan Breck wanted a Peck of Meal from Glenco or Callart's House; and that he, the said Alexander Stewart, ought to get it for him; but the said Alexander Stewart refused to go for it: That, afterwards, the said Alexander Stewart slept in the Deponent's House. Depones, That the said Alexander Stewart told him, that the Pannel, and Allan his Son, were made Prisoners the Evening before, and sent to Fort-William; and, upon the Deponent's inquiring, who was suspected of Glenure's Murder? the said Alexander answered, that it was Allan Breck, and that it was likely that the Pannel, and Allan his Son, would stand the first Trial for it. Depones, That the said Alexander Stewart and the Deponent dined together; and as the said Alexander Stewart was going away, about Twelve o'Clock, he pointed out a Fir-tree, at the Root of which he said he had hid Allan Breck's Cloaths. Depones, That, after the Deponent had gone to Bed, upon the said Sunday Evening, he heard one knocking at the Window, and imagined it might be Allan Breck; the Deponent got up, and went out in his Shirt, and saw the said Allan Breck at a little Distance from the House; and, upon the Deponent's coming up to him, the said Allan Breck asked him if any Message had come for him? The Deponent told him, that his Uncle's Son had come with five Guineas, and some Cloaths: That Allan Breck complained there was but little Money, but hoped it would do his Business: That the Deponent told the said Allan Breck, he was afraid he would starve among the Heather; and that he was not able to help him: That Allan Breck answered, he had no Occasion for Victuals, but wanted a Drink very much: Upon which the Deponent went back to his House, and carried out some Whey, or some Milk and Water, in a Noggin, and the five Guineas, and gave both to Allan Breck: That the Deponent then went for the Cloaths, which he also gave the said Allan Breck, which consisted of a blue long Coat, red Waistcoat, black Breeches, a Hat, some Stockings and Shirts: That the Deponent told the said Allan Breck, that the Pannel, and his Son Allan, were apprehended upon Account of Glenure's Murder; to which

Allan Breck answered, that that was no more than he expected; but it would not signify much, as there could be no Proof against them; but expressed some Apprehension, lest Allan Stewart, Son to the Pannel, might be betrayed by his own Tongue: That the Deponent desired the said Allan, now that he had got all the Necessaries he expected, to go about his Business; and the said Allan Breck promised to do so, but told the Deponent, that he must meet him, the said Allan Breck, next Morning; that he must deliver the Deponent the Cloaths he, the said Allan Breck, had then on, to wit, the black short Coat and Trowsers shown to the Deponent in the Clerk's Hands, in order to be kept by the Deponent till he delivered them to the Pannel's Wife: That the Deponent promised to meet the said Allan Breck next Morning, but did not see him; and when the Deponent went out next Morning, he found the said short black Coat, Trowsers, and the Noggin in which the Deponent carried the Drink to the said Allan Breck, lying together in the Place where the Deponent parted with the said Allan Breck the Night before; and found in one of the Pockets of the said short Coat the Powder-horn now shown him in the Clerk's Hands; and depones, that he has not seen the said Allan Breck since. Depones, That, in a Conversation the Deponent had with the Pannel, as the Deponent best remembers, about two Years ago, Mention being made of Glenure's being about to take on the Management of the Estate of Ardshiel from the said Pannel, and thereby disabling the Pannel from being of any Service to Ardshiel's Children, he heard the Pannel say, he would be willing to spend a Shot upon Glenure, though he went upon his Knees to his Window to fire it. Depones, That he heard a waif Report in the Country, that Ardshiel (attainted) had sent Home a Message, that he believed all his Friends were dead, when Glenure was allowed to go on at the Rate he did. Depones, That, upon the Evening of the said Saturday the 16th Day of May last, Katharine Maccoll, Spouse to Hugh Maccoll in Koalisnacoan, told the Deponent, that she had seen a Man in the Heugh of Corrynakeigh that Day, at some Distance, and was greatly frightened: That the Deponent told her, there used to be Bogles seen in that Place, but she must take no Notice of what she had seen, for Fear of frightening the Women of the Town, and prevent them from attending their Cattle in that Part; and that the Reason of telling her so, was for Fear it would be known it was Allan Breck she saw. Depones, That, when he found the black short Coat and Trowsers he saw Allan Breck wear, upon Monday Morning the 18th of May last, he hid them; and that, after he, the Deponent, had been some time Prisoner at Fort-William, he came along with a Party of Soldiers, to whom he shewed the Place he hid the said Cloaths; and the said Party took the said Cloaths out of the Place he had hid them in, in the Deponent's Presence, and carried them to Fort-William. Causa scientiæ patet. And this is Truth, as he shall answer to God; and depones he cannot write.

Hugh Macclean, Barber in Maryburgh, aged twenty-seven Years, married, sworn, purged and examined ut supra, depones, That being a Barber to his Trade, and one Day being called by the Pannel to the Prison to shave him, which he thinks was upon a Saturday, the Pannel asked him, what News he heard in the Town? To which the Deponent answered, that he heard that he, the Pannel, was to be carried to Edinburgh on the Monday following: Whereupon the Pannel said, that that was a Matter gave him no Concern, and wished it had happened sooner, and was afraid of nothing but that his Servants might be enticed to take Money, and turn against him; and desired the Deponent, as from him, to tell his Servants to say nothing but Truth, to keep their Minds to themselves, and he would take Care of them; and accordingly the Deponent delivered the Pannel's Message, in his own Words, to two of his Servants, who were then in separate Custody in the same Prison; and that they were both of the Name of Maccoll. Depones, That at this Time the Pannel gave the Deponent a Shilling, and said; when he came again to shave him, he would give him more; but that he never got more from him than the said Shilling. Depones, That from the Pannel he went to his Son Allan also to shave him, to whom he told the Commission his Father had given to be delivered to the Servants; and the said Allan gave him Half a Crown. Causa scientiæ patet. And this is the Truth, as he shall answer to God; and depones he cannot write.

Thomas Baird, Serjeant in General Pulteney's Regiment of Foot, aged thirty-two Years, married, Witness cited, solemnly sworn, purged of Malice and partial Counsel; and having been called into Court, before closing of a former Deposition, in order to open a Bundle containing two short Coats and a Pair of Trowsers, to be shown to a preceding Witness during his Examination; and, after opening the said Bundle, was removed, and called in again; and being solemnly sworn and interrogate, depones, That, about the Beginning of July last, to the best of the Deponent's Remembrance, he was sent with a Party of Soldiers, and a Guide along with him, whose Name, he thinks, was John Breck Maccoll, to a Place computed of above ten Miles Distance from Fort-William over Lochleven; but after passing the Loch, their Guide carried them two Miles down the Side of the Loch, and up to the Top of a Rock, and, out of a Clift in the Rock, the Guide took a short black Coat with silver Buttons, and a Powder-horn in the Pocket, and a Pair of Trowsers, and gave them to the Deponent; and the Deponent carried them to Fort-William, and delivered them to Colonel Crawford. Depones, That one of the black Coats, with the Powder-horn and Trowsers, that the Deponent took out of the Pocket as above-mentioned, are the same that his Guide delivered to him, and which he delivered to Colonel Crawford, as above deponed. Causa scientiæ patet. And this is the Truth, as he shall answer to God.

HUGH STEWART, Residenter in Edinburgh, aged thirty and upwards, married, being sworn, purged and examined ut supra, depones, That he knows Allan Breck Stewart to have several Times gone to France, and returned again to this Country; particularly that he went to France in 1747, and returned to Scotland in December 1749; returned to France in May 1751, and came back in February 1752; and when in this Country, he was in use to lodge at the Deponent's House in Edinburgh: That he observed him to be afraid to be seen abroad, and kept at Home in the Day-time, and went abroad under Cloud of Night; for which he gave this Reason to the Deponent, that he had been a Soldier in Colonel Lee's Regiment, from which he had deserted, and was afraid to be discovered. And being interrogate, depones, That, when Allan Breck went abroad, as has been said, in May 1750, he owed the Deponent a Guinea, and, being run short of Money, he drew a Bill on the Pannel for that Sum, whereof he acquainted the Pannel some time he thinks in July, and some time in August he received the Money by Maccoll, the Appin Carrier; and by the same Carrier sent the Pannel the Bill upon him. Causa scientiæ patet. And this is Truth, as he shall answer to God.

(Signed) HUGH STEWART. J. A. FERGUSON.

Duncan Stewart of Glenbuckie, aged twenty-seven Years, unmarried, sworn, purged and examined ut supra, depones, That he was acquainted with Allan Breck Stewart; and that, at any Time, when he came from France to this Country, he had no fixed Residence to the Deponent known, but went about among his Friends and Acquaintances: That, when he came last to Scotland, his Dress was a long blue Coat, a red Waistcoat, black Breeches, and a feathered Hat: That, in March last, when he was at the Deponent's House, he was in that Dress; but, at other Times, he has seen him in a different Dress, particularly in April last at Glenenty, which was the last Time he saw him; his Dress was, a black short Coat with clear Buttons, a Tartan Waistcoat, Trowsers, and a Bonnet, and, above all, a dun-coloured great Coat. Depones, That he remembers, that upon one Occasion, while Allan Breck was at his House, being the first Time he came, he for two Days, to the Deponent's certain Knowledge, wore a short blue Coat of the Deponent's, which the Deponent, at his Desire, lent him; and whether he wore it any more than two Days, of the ten Days he at that Time staid at the Deponent's House, the Deponent does not know, not having been at Home all the Time. Causa scientiæ patet. And this is Truth, as he shall answer to God.

And that she told him, Glenure was murdered; and further asked her, who might have committed the Murder? And that she told him, she did not know; and that the said Allan further desired the Deponent to tell Donald Stewart in Ballachelish to go to the Pannel, and desire him to send the said Allan Money; and that she delivered this Message to Donald Stewart that same Night. Depones, That she told the said Donald Stewart where she saw Allan Breck; but that she did not tell him to go to the said Allan, nor did he desire her. Causa scientiæ patet. And this is Truth, as she shall answer to God; and depones she cannot write.

Depones, That the last Day of December last, the Deponent was in Company with the deceased Glenure, an Uncle of Ardshiel's, and the Pannel, and Mr. Campbell of Ballieveolan, when, after the Company had drunk very hard, and were all drunk, some high Words arose between Glenure and Ardshiel's Uncle, and they were like to come to Blows, which both of them attempted; but the Deponent once and again separated them: That Ardshiel's Uncle happened to go out of the House, as did also the Pannel, and the Deponent called to the People without not to let them in again, because they were drunk: That the Pannel had invited Glenure next Day to his House, which Glenure had accepted of, and therefore the Pannel pressed to come in again to the House to renew the Invitation, and take his Leave of Glenure; but the Deponent would not allow him to come in, and undertook to make his Excuse to Glenure: That the Deponent, coming into the House, found Glenure standing with a drawn Hanger in his Hand; and the Deponent asked, what he meant by that? and Glenure answered, that he should not allow him to be mobbed there; upon which the Deponent assured him he should not be mobbed there; and then Glenure threw the Hanger upon the Bed: That the Deponent went Home with the Pannel, and next Day Glenure came there before Dinner, (Signed) ALEX. STEWART.

ARCH. CAMPBELL.
P. GRANT.

Alexander Stewart of Ballachelish elder, Witness cited, sworn, purged and examined ut supra, depones, That the Deponent was with Allan Breck Stewart's Father a considerable Time before his Death; but, after he had contracted the Indisposition whereof he died, he told the Deponent, that he intended to leave the Care of his Children, and of his Affairs, to Ardshiel and the Pannel: That the Deponent knows they accordingly took upon them the Management, tho' he believes the Nomination was only verbal, and not in Writing. Causa scientiæ patet. And this is the Truth, as he shall answer to God.

(Signed) ALEX. STEWART. P. GRANT.

(Signed) JOHN STEWART. P. GRANT.

John Flockhart, Writer in Edinburgh, aged thirty and upwards, married, Witness cited, sworn, purged and examined ut supra, depones, That being shown a Letter by the Pannel to Mr. John Macfarlane, Writer to the Signet, dated the 19th of May last, depones, That that Letter came to the Deponent's Hands at Edinburgh by Course of Post the 24th of May last, and the Deponent being to go for Pertb next Day, he gave the Letter to Alexander Hart, Clerk to Mr. Macfarlane, to be delivered to his Master; and knows not whether any Thing was done by Mr. Macfarlane pursuant to that Letter. Causa scientiæ patet. And this is the Truth, as he shall answer to God.

(Signed) JO. FLOCKHART.

And, after closing the Oath, being further interrogate for the Pannel, depones, That there was no other Letter accompanying the one before-mentioned.

Depones, That he heard the said Serjeant More say, That, if he, the said Serjeant More, met with Glenure, he did not care tho' he should be up-sides with him; but had no Reason for saying so, he having heard no more of his Discourse. Depones, that the Deponent was then Servant to the former Witness, and was then in Rannoch attending him. Causa scientiæ patet. And this is the Truth, as he shall answer to God; and declares he cannot write.

Then the Procurators for the Pannel declared their Probation to be concluded.

Follows the Writings produced in Evidence for the Prosecutors.

The judicial Declarations of the Pannel, his Wife, and Children.

AT Fort-William, the 2d Day of June 1752 Years, in Presence of George Douglas, Sheriff-substitute of the Sheriffdom of Inverness, sitting in Judgment, compeared James Stewart in Aucharn, now Prisoner at this Place; who being judicially examined anent the Matter under-written, declares judicially, that Allan Breck Stewart came to his House in the latter End of March, upon his coming from France; that he staid two Nights there, when the Declarant went to Edinburgh, leaving the said Allan at his House: That the said Allan came to the Declarant's House in the Month of April, after being at Glenbuckie's and Rannoch; and that, upon Monday the 11th Day of May last, the said Allan came to the Declarant's House from Fasnacloch; and the Declarant being called upon by Mr. Campbell of Airds to go to Keil, had little Conversation with the said Allan till his Return, and no other after his Return, than what was in the Presence of the Family; nor does the Declarant remember, whether he supped with the said Allan that Night or not; but rather thinks he did; or whether the said Allan was dressed in a long blue Coat and Hat, or in a black short Coat with silver Buttons: That the Declarant thought himself concerned in Drink that Night, having drunk at the Miller of Keil's House with the old Piper, the young Piper, the said Miller, and old Duncan Maccombich, and his Son Archibald: The Declarant went away to Appin's House early upon Tuesday the 12th Day of May last, and did not see Allan that Day or since: That when the Declarant was at Edinburgh, the said Allan carried a short black Coat with silver Buttons, belonging to the Declarant, with him to Glenbuckie's and Rannoch, and wore it upon his Return; when the Declarant told the said Allan, that he wondered how his short Coat fitted him, as Allan was a large Man, and the Declarant a little Man; to which he answered, that it served him well enough: That, upon Monday Night the 11th Day of May last, the Declarant's Son Charles told him, he was to go to Glenco, Callart, and Fort-William; and that he did not see his said Son from that Night, till he saw him in this Place, after that he, the Declarant, was made Prisoner; nor is the Declarant sure if his said Son went to Glenco or Callart till Wednesday the 13th Day of May last. Declares also, That his Son Allan was at Home on Sunday's Night the 10th Day of May last; but is not sure whether he was at Home all that Day or not. That there were no Strangers at the Declarant's House upon the said Sunday's Night, or on the following Monday or Monday's Night, nor yet on the Tuesday or Tuesday's Night following, except the said Allan Breck and Fasnacloch's Daughter upon the said Monday's Night. Declares, That John Stewart younger of Ballachelish was at his House upon Wednesday's Night, and is sure that Ewan Roy Maccoll, Brother to Appin's Bouman at Koalisnacooan, supped at his, the Declarant's House, either upon the Wednesday or Thursday's Night the 13th or 14th Days of May last; and that the said Ewan Roy Maccoll was also at the Declarant's House upon Saturday thereafter, in the Forenoon, along with his Sister, Spouse to Ewan Maccombich, Padler in Cuil, and then paid the Declarant ten Pounds Scots, except seven Shillings and two Pence, for which the said Ewan Maccombich, Padler, became Debtor; which ten Pounds Scots was in Payment of the Grasmal of Cattle; and that the said Ewan Roy Maccoll did then give to the Declarant a List of Debts due to him in the Country, whereof twenty Pounds Scots was to be applied towards Payment of a Debt due by the said Ewan to his said Sister, as the Declarant had the Management of her Effects in the Country of Appin; and which Sister's Name is Christian Maccoll, and was last Winter Servitrix to Mr. Stewart of Ballachallan: That the Declarant delivered some Cattle to Duncan Stewart, Servitor to Glenbuckie, and Solomon Maccoll, Servitor to the Declarant's Son Allan Stewart, and John Maccoll, now Prisoner at Fort-William, at the Marches betwixt Aucharn and Sallackan; and that the said Ewan Roy Maccoll was to meet them at Glenduror with Cattle of his own that were to be sent South along with the Declarant's; and that the said John Maccoll parted with them at a Shealing called the Immerin; and that the Declarant did not see the said Ewan Roy Maccoll since. And being interrogate, if he had any Arms in his House? declares, That when he was made Prisoner, he had a small Fowling-Piece and a broad Sword, which broad Sword was to be kept for the Children of the deceased deceased Allan Stewart of Cuil, till they were of Age. Declares also, That the said Solomon Mac-coll, formerly Servant to Donald Stewart at Tay-harnan, came Home to his Service on the 15th or 16th Days of May last : That John Stewart in Auchnacooan came to the Declarant's House upon the Evening of the 14th Day of May last, and staid there that Night ; and declares, that he did not send him any Message, either that Day or the preceding Day, nor had he any Business that the Declarant knows of. Declares also, That, the Afternoon of Glenure's Murder, several of the Tenants in the Neighbourhood, particularly the Tenants of Auchindarroch, and Duncan Stewart at Inshaig, and Robert Stewart the Miller, came to the Declarant, to know what they should do, or whether they should go near the Corpse ; and that he advised them to go ; but that neither he nor his Son Allan went there, because he understood that Ballieveolan and his Sons were to be there ; and that there were some Chagrine betwixt him and them, they having taken the Declarant's Possession the Year before, wherewith he had a Stock of Cattle, viz. Glenduror, a Part of the Estate of Ardshiel : That when young Bal-lachelish was over-night at the Declarant's House as aforesaid, they had a Conversation about the Removal of the Tenants from the Estate of Ardshiel ; the Result of which was, that they should continue their Possession, and take the Hazard of the violent Profits, unless they were forced out ; and that he had Conversations with old Bal-lachelish to the same Purpose ; and that he gave the same Opinion to such of the said Tenants as applied to him, but recommended to them to use no Force in keeping their Possessions : That the Declarant had no written, but a verbal Commission from the said Tenants, to negotiate for them at Law ; nor did he receive any Money from them ; but that the Tenants of Lettermore and Ardshiel and the Miller promised to refund his Expence for representing their Case, particularly Dugald and John Maccombichs in Ardshiel. And being interrogate, if he had any Conversation with the said Allan Breck concerning Glenure ? the said Allan asked the Declarant, if he heard that Serjeant More was come from France, or if he was in the Country of Appin ? To which the Declarant answered, that he did not hear he was in Appin, but heard he was in Glenlive last Year ; whereupon the said Allan told the Declarant, that Serjeant More swore he would kill Glenure, because of the Treatment he gave the Tenants on the Estate of Mamore, Part of Lochiel Estate. Declares also, That the said Allan Breck threatened, that he would challenge Ballieveolan and his Sons to fight, whenever he met them, because of his removing the Declarant last Year from Glenduror, and being about to remove the other Tenants this Year from some other Parts of the Estate of Ardshiel ; and that the Declarant told him then, they would not fight him, as they would not consider him as their Equal ; and if he had come to the Country to fight, he had better staid in France. And being interrogate, if he had any Conversation with William Stewart, Merchant in Maryburgh ? declares he had, about the Expediency of the said Tenants their keeping their Possessions ; and that it was the said William's Opinion, that they should keep their Possessions ; and that their Case should be represented to the Barons of Exchequer ; and that it was hard they should be turned out, until their Case was stated. And being asked, if he had any Conversation with Callart anent the Removing ? declares, he does not remember ; but that commonly every body he saw asked him, what should become of the Tenants of the Estate of Ardshiel ? To which he answered, he did not know till the Term-day. This Declaration is emitted before the said Sheriff-substitute, Place and Date aforesaid, before these Witnesses, Colonel Howard, Colonel Crawford, Donald Campbell of Airds, and Colin Campbell of Carquhin, Esqrs.

Eodem die, The said James Stewart, being re-examined, judicially declares, upon Recollection, That it was upon Thursday the 14th Day of May last, that his said Son Charles went to Glenco, and not on Wednesdays, as before-mentioned ; and that Callart was at the Declarant's House upon Sunday's Night the 10th Day of May last. Declares, That, before Glenure served the Warnings against the Tenants of the Estate of Ardshiel, the Laird of Appin proposed to accommodate some of them in Land : That how soon the Declarant heard of Glenure's Murder, it came in his Mind, that Serjeant More had done it, because Allan Breck told him, that the said Serjeant swore bloody Revenge against Glenure before the Serjeant came from France, upon Account of Glenure's Treatment of Lochiel's Tenants, and his differing with John Cameron of Fassafarn, Brother to Lochiel : That the Declarant's Reason for suspecting Allan Breck afterwards, was, because he left the Country abruptly, without taking Leave of him, as he expected ; and if the said Allan was guilty of the said Murder, he believes it behoved to be on Account of the Disturbance given to the Tenants of the Estate of Ardshiel, and knows no other. Declares, That he did set out for Edinburgh on Friday the 3d Day of April last, was at Glenco that Night, the 4th at Innerkenvie, the 5th at Lanerick, the 6th at Annat, and called next Day at Newton, and was that Night at Mr. Wordie of Cambusbaron's House at St. Ninian's, called at Touch on the 8th, and got a Letter from Mr. Seaton to Mr. David Moncrief, Secretary to the Barons of Exchequer ; called at Mr. Wilson's House of Murray's-hall, and was that Night at Mr. Foster of Dunivan's House, and got a Letter from him to Mr. Patrick Haldane, the Solicitor ; but did not deliver it, or the other Letter, as he was told they would be of no Consequence ; and went to Edinburgh upon Thursday the 9th Day of April last, where he continued for eleven Days : That he left Edinburgh upon Sunday the 19th, was that Night at Dunivan, called at Mr. Wilson's and Mr. Wordie's, and was at Stirling at Night ; which Place he left on the 21st ; called at Mr. Dundas of Manner's House, Dunblain and Newton, and was at Annat's at Night ; upon the 22d came to Ballachallan's, and staid there that Night ; came to Glenbuckie's the 23d, and staid there two Nights ; on the 25th came to Tayindrom ; on the 26th came to Duncan Stewart's House in Glenco ; and upon the 27th came Home ; that, upon the 25th, he called at Mr. Murray of Glenkernock : That, soon after the Declarant came Home, he gave Notice to the Tenants of Ardshiel, that he had procured a Sift for them against the Decret of Removing ; and that, if they had a Mind to continue their Possessions, they were advised to go to Glenure and seek their Possessions, and if he did not grant their their Desire, they should send for a Notary; and go with him to protest against Glenure; and if they pleased, he would send for a Notary; to which they agreed: That accordingly the Declarant sent for Charles Stewart, Notary, and writ him a Letter, signifying they had obtained a Sift for the Tenants of the Estate of Ardsziel, and desired him to come to intimate the same to Glenure to the Purpose above-mentioned; and that the said Charles did accordingly come to the Declarant's House at Night, and the Tenants came also next Morning; and that the Declarant told them, in Presence of the said Charles, that, if it was not their Mind to proceed in that Method, he would not desire them to do it, because he could not assure them of Success; and that now they had the Advice as it was given to him; and particularly remembers, that three of the Tenants of Ardsziel met the Notary at the Declarant's House, but is not sure if old John Colquhoun, the fourth Tenant in Ardsziel, was there, but rather believes he was: That he was informed on Monday the 11th Day of May last, by his Son Charles, Allan Breck, and Fafnacloich's Daughter, that they heard Glenure was to go to Lochaber that Day. Declares also, That he saw James Stewart younger of Fafnacloich at Glenco's House upon the 5th Day of May last, who asking him what he had done at Edinburgh? the Declarant told him, he had procured a Sift for the Tenants of Ardsziel's Estate; and that he did not know what Service it might be of, but that some People thought they might sit, and take the Hazard of the violent Profits, till they had an Opportunity of laying their Case before the Barons of Exchequer: That at this Time the Declarant told the said James Stewart, that he wished some Persons of Understanding were present on the Term-day, to see if there was Law for ejecting them; and asked the said James, if he was to be in Duroor about that Time? who said he did not know: That when the said John Stewart of Ballachelish was at the Declarant's House, he asked him, if he would be present with the Tenants, to see if there was Law for turning them out? who said he would, if he did not go to Inverary. Declares also, That, in general, he recommended to every body not to make any Disturbance, and particularly recommended to his own Servants not to be present, not knowing what might happen if a Mob of People gathered; nor did he intend to be present himself. This Declaration is emitted judicially, Place and Date foresaid, before these Witnesses, Colonel Howard, Donald Campbell of Airds, and Colin Campbell of Carwhin, Esqrs.

CO. CAMPBELL, Witness.

At Maryburgh, the 3d Day of June, 1752 Years, in Presence of the said George Douglas, Sheriff-substitute of the Shire of Inverness, compeared Allan Stewart, Son to James Stewart in Aucharn; who, being examined judicially, declares, That Allan Breck Stewart came to the Declarant's Father's House on Monday's Afternoon the 11th Day of May last, dressed in a long blue Coat, red Waistcoat, black Breeches, Tartan Hose, and a Hat; and after being some Time there, did put off his blue Coat and Waistcoat, and put on a black sport Coat with silver Buttons, belonging to the Declarant's Father; and went that Afternoon to work with the Declarant's Father's Servants in covering Potatoes: That the said Allan Breck staid that Night, and was dressed next Morning in his blue Coat and red Waistcoat, as the Day before: That the Declarant did not see him go away from Aucharn upon the 12th, the Declarant being in the Fields from the Time he rose in the Morning till Twelve of the Clock that Forenoon, sowing Barley, except once that he made a Start Home for more Bear. Declares, That, upon the Afternoon that the said Allan Breck came to Aucharn, as aforesaid, he told the Declarant, that he heard in Glencrearen, that the Tenants who had taken the Lands of Ardsziel were to be at Glenduroor on Thursday's Night, in order to enter to the Possession on Friday the 15th Day of May last; and told him likewise, that he heard Glenure had come Home, and had Orders to remove the former Possessors: That Archibald Cameron, Cousin to Drumnasailly, came along with Fafnacloich's Daughter, and the Declarant's Brother Charles, to his Father's House, upon the said 11th Day of May last, and staid all Night; the said Allan Breck having come by himself about Two of the Clock in the Afternoon that Day: That the DECLARANT'S FATHER CONVERSED WITH THE SAID ALLAN BRECK ASIDE, UPON HIS FIRST ARRIVAL AT AUCHARN UPON THE said 11th DAY of MAY; but that the Conversation did not last above five Minutes, or thereabouts; nor did the Declarant hear what passed: That the Declarant's Father did not appear to be the least in Drink upon his coming Home upon the Evening the Monday aforesaid, but told that Mr. Campbell of Airds had given the Declarant's Father and the Tenants of Keil three or four Bottles of Whisky; and that the Declarant's Father supped at Home along with the said Allan Breck that Night: That, upon Tuesday Afternoon the 12th of May last, the Declarant, and the said Archibald Cameron, and Donald Macdonald, Brother to Glenco, went to the Isle of Ballienagowan; and the Declarant and the said Donald Macdonald returned in the Evening to Aucharn; but the said Archibald Cameron went to his Aunt's at Cuil: That, in the Morning of the 13th of May last, the Declarant went to Sallachan, where he saw John More Macilichatten, and delivered them a Mare and a Filly, and then returned Home; and in the Afternoon of that Day went to Kintalline, in order to go to Tayphinst; but being informed by Donald Mackendrick, the old Piper at Keil, whom he met there, that young Ballachelish was to be at Aucharn that Night, the Declarant returned with the said Piper, and went along with him to the Moss: That accordingly Ballachelish younger came to, and staid at the Declarant's Father's House that Night, and went next Day to Appin's House: That the said Ewan Roy Maccoll, Brother to Appin's Bouman at Koalisnacooan, wrought at the Declarant's Father's Peat-moss upon the said 13th of May last, and supped at the Declarant's Father's House that Night, and believes he took his Bed with Duncan Maccoll, his Uncle's Son, at Auchindarroch that Night: That, upon the 14th of May in the Morning, the Declarant went up to Freichie, and returned by the Houses of Glenduror, where he saw two Women, and spoke with one of them, to hinder the Cattle to trespass on his Father's Grounds; and whilst the Declarant was speaking to that Woman, he saw a Man passing at a little Distance, who was inquiring for Glenure, as the said Woman told the Declarant, which Man the Declarant thereafter observed travelling on the Road towards Auchindarroch: That the Declarant came straight Home from Glenduror, and continued at Home till he went to Insbaig, along with his Brother Charles and Fasnacloch's Daughter, and continued there till the News of Glenure's Murder reached his Father's House, where he heard the first Accounts of it, Glenure's Servant being just gone, as the Declarant was informed: That the Declarant was at Home all Day the 15th of said May; only that he made a Start to Cuil, where he was in Company with Duncan Stewart senior, and Duncan Stewart younger, his Son, and Duncan Stewart at Insbaig. And being interrogate, what Conversation passed betwixt him and his Father, on his return Home from Insbaig? his Father told him, that Glenure's Servant was there; and, upon the Declarant's Father's asking his News, he told him, the worst that ever he had; that his Master was killed at Lettermore; and that his Father asked, if it was by a Shot? and that the Servant answered, that it was; and that the said Servant also desired his Father to go and take Care of the Corpse; which he proposed to do, but that his Wife would not let him; but that he sent for the Tenants of Auchindarroch, and desired them to go to take Care of the Corpse; and that the Reason that he, the Declarant, did not go to take Care of the Corpse, was, because it did not at first occur to him; and that it was too late, and the rest of the People gone; yet it was clear Day-light, but thinks the Sun was set; and that the Declarant's Mother also hindered his going, and assigned for a Reason, that if the Friends of the Deceased were there, and had Arms, they might, in their Passion, do hurt to him and his Father; and that he was but a little Time at Home after his Return from Insbaig, when he saw Glenure's Servant returning from Glenduror, and passing towards Kintalline: That the Declarant thinks his Brother Charles went in the Afternoon of the 14th of May last with Fasnacloch's Daughter, and the said Archibald Cameron, and the Declarant's Sister, to Lagnaba, where they dined in Alexander Stewart senior his House, and afterwards came back to Aucharn, and then went to Insbaig as aforesaid. Declares, That he heard the said Ewan Roy Maccoll say, upon the 13th, two several Times, that it was hard in Glenure to turn out the honest Tenants of the Ardshiel Estate, as they paid their Rents well, and offered an Augmentation of Rent, and were willing to give Obedience to the Government; and that one of the Times was after Breakfast, when the People were together at the End of the Declarant's Father's House, going to the Moss; but that his Father was not present: That some of the Tenants of the Neighbourhood were there, as well as his Father's Servants; and that they generally talked in the same Strain with the said Ewan Maccoll; and that the other Time was after their returning from their Work that Evening at the Declarant's Father's House: That the Declarant does not know what became of the said Ewan Roy Maccoll all Thursday said 14th of May last; but is positive that he came into the Barn where the Declarant was lying, that same Night, about Twelve of the Clock, asking for a Bed; which was refused him, but ordered to go and lie with the Servants in another Barn in Aucharn, meaning Dougal and John Maccolls, now Prisoners at Fort-William: That the Declarant saw the said Ewan Roy Maccoll at Aucharn upon the 15th of May in the Morning, and saw him again at Cuil about Twelve of the Clock that Day; and that they came together from thence to Aucharn, where they parted; and that the Declarant does not remember if they had any Conversation all that Time about Glenure's Murder. This emitted judicially, Place and Date foresaid, before these Witnesses, Donald Campbell of Aird., and Colin Campbell of Carwhin.

Eodem die, The said Allan Stewart being re-examined judicially, and being interrogate whom he suspected guilty of Glenure's Murder? declares, That he thought, if Allan Breck did not soon cast up in the Country, he was the most likely Man to have done it: And further declares, that, in a Conversation between him and his Father; and others, they were of Opinion, that the People of Ballachelish and Lettermore must have known who committed the Murder at the Time it happened: That, upon the Friday after the Murder happened, he heard his Father say, he did not doubt but he would be taken up upon Suspicion of the said Murder: That when the Declarant's Father was at Edinburgh, he expected a Letter from him about what he was doing about the Removings; which Letter came to Aucharn in the Declarant's Absence, and was opened by James Stewart younger of Fasnacloch, and contained an Account of what the Declarant's Father had done about the Removings; and that he was about buying a Bargain of Meal. Declares also, That he heard his Father express his Desire to young Ballachelish to be present when the new Tenants came to take Possession of the Estate of Ardshiel; and that Donald Macintyre in Aucharn told him, that young Ballachelish had come back from Appin to Keil, in order to attend; but, upon hearing of Glenure's Murder, returned to Appin: That the Declarant's Father told him he would not be present at the Entering of the said new Tenants; nor was the Declarant resolved to be present himself; nor did his Father desire him to go, or suspect him such a Fool as to go: That he knows that the said Allan Breck Stewart lay with the Declarant's Brother Charles in a Barn in Aucharn, upon Monday's Night the 11th Day of May last: That the Declarant has a black short Coat, with nine round silver Buttons in the Breast, two upon each Haunch, whereof one is small, and it has no Buttons on the Sleeves or Pockets; and that his Father has also a black short Coat, with silver Buttons on the Breast and Pockets; and has none upon the Haunches or Sleeves, to the Declarant's Remembrance: That the said Allan Breck had no big Coat on upon the 11th Day of May last, when he came to Aucharn, nor had he any big Coat of his own that the Declarant knows of; for the said Allan borrowed the Declarant's big Coat, when he came to Rannoch: That, in a Conversation the Declarant had with old Ballachelish on the Sunday before Glenure's Murder, Ballachelish then told the Declarant, that the Man that had taken the Ferry of North Ballachelish, came there with his Boat, and was refused to enter to the Possession by the Tenants, who thought they had as good a Right to the Ferry as to the Land: That thereupon the Ferry-man drew his Boat, and went to Glenure, the Tenants being resolved to keep their Possessions for the Year; and that Ballachelish said, that the Tenants of the Ardsbiel Estate had as good a Title to sit, as the Tenants of Ballachelish, if the Suspension was not discussed; and that it was a cant Word through the Country, That the Tenants might sit, since the worst of it would be paying the violent Profits. Declares also, That he has a Gun and broad Sword: That he left the Gun in his Father's Brew-house, and the Sword he gave to John Maccoll, his Father's Servant, that is Prisoner at Fort-William: That John Roy Stewart, Nephew to Fasnacloich, lay in the Barn with the Declarant upon Thursday's Night the 14th Day of May last; and that John Stewart in Auchnacooan lay in the same Barn with the Declarant's Brother Charles, being the Night that the said Ewan Roy Maccoll came to look for a Bed there. This judicial Declaration emitted in Presence of the said Sheriff-substitute, Place and Date foresaid, before these Witnesses, the Right Honourable the Lord Bury, Colonels Howard and Crawford, Donald Campbell of Airds, and Colin Campbell of Carwhin.

gone a little before the said John Maccoll came. Declares also, That he saw Ewan Roy Maccoll, Brother to Appin's Bouman at Kealishnacooan, at the Declarant's Father's House, upon the Evening of the 14th Day of May last before they lighted Candles, and told he had come from Glenure that Day; that he afterwards, that Night, came into the Barn where the Declarant was lying with his Uncle John Stewart, looking for a Bed, and was directed to lie with the Servants in the other Barn in Aucharn. Declares, that upon his Return from Inshaig with the said John Maccoll Prisoner, That the Declarant asked him where Glenure was murdered, what Way it was done, and if any Person was seen by the Place? and that the said John answered, that it was done in the Wood of Lettermore; whether it was South or North of the Houses, he could not tell; that it was by a Shot, and that there was a Man or two seen near the Place; and this is all the Declarant remembers of the Conversation upon that Head; and that upon his coming Home, he heard his Father desire the People of Auchindarroch to go and take Care of the Corpse; and that his Father proposed to go himself, but that his Wife would not let him; and, at the same Time, heard his Father say that he would be suspected of the Murder, as he was taking so much Part with the Tenants against Glenure the Factor: That he heard Ewan Roy Maccoll say, upon the 13th Day of May last, that he wondered that Glenure was removing the Tenants that paid their Rent well, and were willing to qualify to the Government: That he observed his Father and the said Ewan Roy Maccoll have several Conversations aside about that Time. This Declaration emitted judicially, Place and Date foresaid, before these Witnesses, Donald Campbell of Airds, and Colin Campbell of Carwhin, Esqrs.

Letter addressed to Duncan Stewart of Glenbuckie:

NOW I am sorry to acquaint you, Affairs is going quite wrong upon this Estate of your Cousin's: Glenure wants Ardshiel and Lettermore in his own Hands, and more Rents for our Tenement, and the Carriages to himself. How far these Things will take Place, God knows! The Man that makes the whole Noise, is Ballieveolan, upon Account of our keeping John More; for he does not deny but what he offers more Rents for Glenduror, and gives this as his Reasons. However, it shall be A DEAR GLEN TO THEM OR THEY SHALL HAVE IT. All you heard about the Country is true: I go, in a few Days, to Kingailoch for the Stallion, which stands us eight Guineas; he wants to harrow him this Spring, and to get him broke for the Saddle again Harvest. Fasnacloich has made the Purchase for himself. You'll not neglect to send all the Money you can in a very short Time, as Money never was scarcer in this Country. Kingailoch has got Money; so that we are sure of his Cows. Malcolm Livingston has sent for more Money; for he employed what he got. I shall refer the whole History of the Country till I have the Pleasure of seeing you. I beg you'll not neglect sending a Servant soon, with as much as possible; let nothing stop him. Neglect not about your Brother. No more, but my Compliments to Miss Jeany, Sandy, and little Donald, is all from, dear Cousin, I am your affectionate Cousin,

Dear Charles,

NOT knowing of your Return from Mudart, sent for your Father Tuesday's Afternoon; but the Rascal I sent, went not by Glencrearan that Night, by which he missed the old Man, who went a fishing, as you'll see by the inclosed, early that Morning; which I reckon a very great Misfortune. The next best I can think of, is, that you be here without fail this Night, if you should hire a Horse, as every Thing must go wrong without a Person can act, and that I can trust. This is such a Tie upon all the Members of our Family, that I'll press you no further, but do depend on seeing you once this Night; and am your own, &c. dear Cousin,

I find Glenure has a Mind to eject the Tenants; but they ought to be deaf to it, and, at all Risques, keep Possession, as they are in good Hands, as it must end in Exchequer; so that I beg they keep Possession; as there will be no Troops, they ought to repel Force by Force, and take their Hazard of the Consequence; as it can be no more than violent Profits, which is often modified in inferior Courts, besides the Exchequer, who will insist for no such; their chief Design being to have a Set of peaceable Tenantry, and a well-paid Rent; so that the People ought to be assured they shall be supported as far as Law will, which no Doubt must determine in their Favours; and am, dear Sir, your own, &c.

Letter, James Stewart to Mr. John Macfarlane.

Sir,

JUST now had your Favour, and am sorry these poor Tenants should have made use of me for representing their Grievance, as, in all Appearance, it has brought a great deal of Trouble upon me; being carried here, and my Son upon Sunday last, suspected to be knowing to the barbarous Murder of Glenure, who was shot dead upon Thursday the 14th current, in a Wood within two Miles of my House. It is not pretended that I or my Son were Actors in this horrid Action, as we both can be well attested; but alledges, it was a premeditated Thing, to which I must have been knowing: But so far otherwise, that no Man (I thank God) abhors the Fact more, and would, if at Liberty, do all in my Power to bring it to Light. There is one Allan Stewart, a distant Friend of the late Ardshiel's, who is in the French Service, and came over in March last, as he said to some, in order to settle at Home; to others, that he was to go soon back; and was, as I hear, the Day the Murder was committed, seen not far from the Place where it happened, and is not now to be seen; by which it is believed he was the Actor; he is a desperate foolish Fellow; and, if he is guilty, came to the Country for that very Purpose. He is a tall pock-pitted Lad, very black Hair, and wore a blue Coat and metal Buttons, an old red Vest, and Breeches of the same Colour. I would own myself under many Obligations to any Friend would discover him; him; am persuaded he is gone South, in order to embrace the first Opportunity of going abroad. When at Edinburgh, he staid in Mr. Hugh Stewart's at the Back of the Fountain-Well; so begs, as you have any Regard for my Interest, recommend all that wish the Country well to be in search of him. What makes my Confinement very uneasy to me is, that this is the Time of the Year that my Business would require my Presence most; having bought Cattle (wherein I yearly deal) in different Countries, and taken Grasings South for the Cattle, which I must pay if I should never send a Beast upon it; which I am afraid will be the Case, if either my Son or self be not admitted to bail, to put our Affairs in Order: So hopes you'll spare no Pains in this, as Airds and Appin will bail me in any Sum whatever.

Your Return I'll expect in Course of Post; and am, with Compliments to your Lady and self, dear Sir, your most humble Servant,

THIS Moment I had yours by your Servant, with the twenty Pounds, eighteen Shillings, and five Pence Sterling, and the Warrant I formerly gave you. Receive inclosed your Note: Your Payments are very good, for which I am obliged to you. I intend, God will, to be at Edinburgh on, or a Day or two before the 25th current; that is, I intend to set out from this Place this Day, or To-morrow eight Days, and will go by Glasgow, and make no Stop by the Way. Remember Lady Ardshiel's Discharges, and all your other Tackling. I heartily wish you a good Journey.

(Signed) COLIN CAMPBELL.

My Wife, who, I find, is your sincere Well-wisher, returns you her hearty Thanks, and is sorry you have had such bad Weather to travel, when you are so weak.

Addressed on the Back thus: To James Stewart in Auchindarroch in Duror.

Sir, Glenure, 6th April, 1750.

I Have yours, and think it's quite right to have Burliemen: They are frequently very necessary, and can't well be wanted. You will therefore appoint two discreet honest Men for that Purpose of the Tenants; and, to prevent any Complaints or Objections, be sure you swear them to Fidelity in their Office. My Wife returns you her Thanks for your good Wishes. I am, Sir, your most obedient,

(Signed) COLIN CAMPBELL.

Sir, Glenure, 14th March, 1751.

AFTER you left this, something has occurred that makes it necessary that you do not set any Part of Ardshiel, Auchindarroch, or Aucharn, till I see you after my Return from Inverary; which is the Reason I run you this Express. I am, Sir, your affectionate humble Servant,

(Signed) COLIN CAMPBELL.

Addressed thus: To James Stewart of Aucharn, Duror.

Then, the Proof on both Sides being concluded, the Lord Elchies said to the Lord Advocate, that now was his Time to proceed to give his Charge to the Jury; which his Lordship did as follows.

LORD ADVOCATE.

Gentlemen of the Jury,

IT now becomes my Duty, to be assisting to you in the Discharge of yours, by stating to you this Case, and summing up the Evidence that hath been given in your Presence; which I shall now proceed to do as well as I am able, after so long an Attendance.

That Attendance, I am sensible, must have been very heavy upon you, and hath been such, as the like hath not happened since the Circuit-Courts of Justiciary were brought to be held in this County: But I hope you will not repine at the great Fatigue of this Trial, in a Case, whereof the Importance is as unusual as the Length of it; and in which your giving a just Verdict will be highly for the Service and Credit of your Country.

N. B. By the sixteenth Act Anno 1672, concerning the Regulation of Judicatories, Article tenth, on the Justiciary Court, it is provided in these Words: "That, in all criminal Pursuits, the Defender, or his Advocate, be always the last Speaker, except in Cases of Treason or Rebellion against the King."

I need not resume to you, Gentlemen, the Libel or Indictment, whereof I presume you have been furnished with printed Copies before you came here; that, being thereby informed of the principal Circumstances which have been discovered concerning the Murder of Mr. Campbell of Glenure, you might have Leisure to weigh the Import of these, and be the better enabled to attend to the Evidence that should be brought before you; and, on the other Hand, the Pannel James Stewart, who is now standing his Trial, was, by that Libel, fairly informed of the principal Facts and Circumstances that were then discovered against him, so as he might have Opportunity to account for these, and clear himself, if, notwithstanding such strong Appearances, he was truly innocent.

The Crime itself, which gives Occasion to this Trial, was of its Nature the most horrid and atrocious that can well be conceived. Wilful Murder, at any Rate, is a Crime most heinous; and concerning the first Murder, God Almighty himself said to Cain, The Voice of thy Brother's Blood crieth unto me from the Ground. And the Murder now in Question, as to this Pannel's Accession to it, was one of the most causeless and unprovoked that ever happened. Poor Mr. Campbell of Glenure was cut off in the Vigour of his Life, in the very Road of his Duty in the King's Service, and for no other Cause or Provocation than his doing that Duty; and then was he basely assassinated by a Ruffian, who lay in wait for him, and shot him from behind his Back, so as he died upon the Spot, leaving two infant Children, and his Widow pregnant.

And to this horrid Violation of the Laws of God and of Humanity, is to be added in the present Case, that the sole Offence taken at Glenure, was his acting in the Quality of Factor on the forfeited Estate of Ardshiel, agreeably to his Powers and Instructions from the Barons of Exchequer, as being Administrators for the King, whose Property that Estate was; and it was resented as a capital Injury, that the King's Factor should venture to exercise his Majesty's Property as freely, as every Subject may do his own.

And last of all, That this Murder was committed on the 14th Day of May last, just seven Weeks after his Majesty had given his Royal Assent, and passed into a Law, the Bill for annexing this and other forfeited Estates to the Crown unalienably, and for applying the Rents and Profits thereof for the better civilizing and improving the Highlands of Scotland.

The Clemency of the King had been extended early after the last Rebellion, by the Act of Grace of the 20th Year of his Reign, of which the Pannel James Stewart, among many others, had the Benefit; and other beneficial Laws were then made, to secure and promote Freedom, Property, and good Order in all Parts of Scotland. And, to crown all, this last most beneficent Act was made, for the more immediate Benefit of the Highlands of Scotland, out of which three Rebellions have been raised, since the Accession of the Royal Family now happily reigning; an Act of Beneficence not to be paralleled in History, and calculated to render all the Inhabitants of the Highlands good and useful Subjects under this Government, by making them feel their own Interest in being such, and rendering the meanest of them, who will be honest and industrious, free and happy: And at such a Juncture, the Murder you are now inquiring into received no small Aggravation; as it was flying in the Face of the Legislature itself, and endeavouring, as much as in these Criminals lay, to defeat or discourage the Prosecution of a Measure of Government, so highly gracious and beneficial to this Country.

The Truth is, Gentlemen, that though, God be praised, the Highlands of Scotland are in this Age less barbarous than they have been in former Times; yet, in our own Time, there have been such Instances of remaining Barbarism, as serve to prove but too strongly, that these Countries stand yet in need of being better civilized. I think it was in the Year 1724, that, for an Offence of the same Nature with what was here taken, an Attempt to remove certain Macphersons living on the Estate of the Duke of Gordon in Badenoch, the late Gordon of Glenbucket, his Factor or Tacksmen, was invaded, and received many Wounds, given with Intent to bereave him of his Life, though he chanced to recover.

You must all remember, how basely Captain Monro of Culcairn was assassinated, by lying in wait, when he was acting in his Duty in the King's Service, soon after the Defeat of the late Rebellion.

And you must have all heard of the late barbarous Enterprize of Robert Macgregor and his Accomplices, in carrying off from her own House the unfortunate Jean Kay, a young Widow and an Heiress, in the Depth of Winter, and Middle of the Night, into remote Parts of the Highlands, and causing her to be married to that Robert, a Person of no Fortune, and an Outlaw for Murder; for being a Conductor in which Attempt, James Drummond, alias Macgregor, a Brother of Robert, has been lately convicted.

The Excuse offered for James Macgregor, was the same mistaken Principle that appears to have misled the unhappy Prisoner at the Bar. It was said, that James Macgregor was actuated by one of the best Affections; he was seeking no personal Advantage to himself by that Enterprize, but only to make the Fortune of Robert his Brother.

And the now Pannel James Stewart conceived a mortal Enmity against Mr. Campbell of Glenure, for disabling him to provide for the Children of his Brother, Charles Stewart late of Ardshiel, attainted, by Contributions levied from the Tenants on that Estate, who had been under his Influence.

But alas! what a Delusion is it, from such Principle to be led to commit or justify the most heinous and abominable Crimes! The Care of the Interest of one's Kindred is doubtless a laudable Affection; and even when that Good-will is extended to the remoter Degrees, and enlarges the Circle of Benevolence, there is no Harm in it; provided in both Cases it be conducted with Justice, and Men exert themselves to serve their Friends, without violating the Rights of other Individuals, or the Laws of Society and civil Government; but he who robs or defrauds his Neighbour, to provide for his own Household, or the immediate Children of his own Body, is not the less criminal in the Sight of God and Man, that he was moved by an Affection, in itself natural and just, but which he pursued in a wicked Manner.

And, in the present Case of the Murder of Glenure, there appears to have been no reasonable or probable Scheme of Advantage to the Family of the late Ardshiel, or any Body; but that it proceeded from mere Wickedness, Malice, and Repentment, ment, the most groundless that ever was: It affords a recent and shameful Instance of that Spirit of Revenge, which was the Characteristic of the barbarous Highlanders in former Times; and a Pity it is, Gentlemen, and a Reproach to the present Age, that it should be yet capable of furnishing such an Example.

I am far from meaning by this; that the Crimes of a few wicked Persons can justly bring a general Imputation on the whole Country where these were committed; we daily hear of most horrid and unnatural Crimes perpetrated in the Parts of the Kingdom the most wealthy, populous, and civilized; but the Part incumbent on the Country where such Things happen, is, to purify the Land of the innocent Blood with which it is polluted, by bringing the Guilty to condign Punishment; and this is what you are now employed in; and as you have attended to the Evidence patiently, I desire nothing more, than, as an impartial and intelligent Jury, you may consider it carefully, in order to discern the Truth, and then to follow that resolutely according to the Conviction of your own Minds; which, if it lead you to believe the Pannel guilty, you will do Justice to your Country by saying so; and if you are not convinced of his Guilt, in God's Name, let him be acquitted; for better that this Murder, atrocious and scandalous as it is, should go altogether unpunished, than that one innocent Man should suffer for it.

In order to lay before you distinctly the Evidence that you have heard of this Pannel's Accession to the Murder of Glenure, I shall first of all recite the State or Situation in which the Deceased and the Pannel stood towards each other, previous to the Murder, and also that of Allan Breck Stewart in respect of both the others. 2dly, I shall point out to you the Evidence that Allan Breck was the actual Murderer, which I admit to be a Fact that was incumbent on us to prove, in order to convict this Pannel of wilful Accession to it: And, lastly, I shall sum up the Evidence that has been brought of that Accession, and examine the Force of the Defences or Excuses which the Pannel has endeavoured to prove.

As to the first of these, the Situation of the Pannel himself; That, Gentlemen, you partly know, and have heard proved: He is a bastard Brother of Charles Stewart late of Ardshiel, attainted, who, out of his own Tenants, and those of Dougal Stewart of Appin, his Chieftain, levied a Regiment or Battalion, at the Head of which he went into the late Rebellion, accompanied, among others, by this Pannel, who had the Benefit of his Majesty's Act of Grace or Indemnity; whereby he was left at Liberty to remain with his Family in the Country, whilst Ardshiel himself, the attainted Person, made his Escape into foreign Parts, leaving at Home his Wife and a Family of Children, who, as Mr. Campbell of Airds has deposed, were all young, his eldest Son being now, as he thinks, about eighteen Years of Age, and consequently, at the breaking out of the late Rebellion, must have been about eleven.

The late Rebellion, as you all know, was finally suppressed by his Royal Highness the Duke, in the Spring and Summer 1746: In the Year following, the Act vesting the forfeited Estates in the King was passed; and, in 1748, the Lands of Ardshiel, among others, were surveyed by Order of the Barons of the Exchequer; to the Property whereof a Claim was entered on Behalf of Alexander, the eldest Son of Charles Stewart, the attainted Person; which Claim, upon Answers made for the King, was dismissed by the Court of Session: And thus it happened, that there was no Factor appointed by the Barons on the Estate of Ardshiel, until Colin Campbell of Glenure was made Factor, by Commission, bearing Date the 23d February 1749, upon that Estate; and also upon the neighbouring Lands of Allan Cameron of Callart, attainted, and, adjoining to these, that Part of the Estate of Lochiel which lies in the Shire of Inverness, to the Southward of Fort-William, and betwixt that Fort and the Ferry of Ballachelish, of which you have heard so much, upon that Loch or Arm of the Sea, which separates Lochaber in Invernessshire, from the Country or District of Appin in this Shire.

Now, as this Factory was granted full three Years after the Rebellion, it is to be observed how the Estate of Ardshiel was possessed and managed in this Interval; and this appears by the Oath of Alexander Stewart of Innernakyle, who hath deposed, "That, before the Factory; as he believes, the Tenants paid their Rents to the Lady of Ardshiel, and that she again employed the Pannel to deal with them."

It was during this Period, that the Pannel, as the same Alexander Stewart deposes, who had been a great many Years ago Tenant to his Brother Ardshiel in the Farm of Glenduror, and had been removed also several Years ago by his Brother, again took Possession of the same Farm; and that Ardshiel's Lady and the Pannel, jointly, introduced certain new Tenants of their own Choice, into different Parcels of the Land, which Ardshiel, the attainted Person, had himself occupied before the Rebellion.

Again, when Glenure had obtained this Factory, after he had been for some time abroad with the Regiment to which he belonged, in Flanders; and being now come Home, was occupied with the Treaty for his Marriage with the young Lady who is now his Widow; he did, as Mr. Campbell of Airds hath deposed, for some Time employ the now Pannel, as his Sub-factor, in levying the Rents of Ardshiel, and setting the Lands; and, to the same Purpose, the said Alexander Stewart deposes, "That the Factor gave the Pannel the Opportunity of having the greatest Influence with the Tenants of Ardshiel, more than any other Person, by allowing the Pannel to set the Lands, which he continued doing to Whitsunday 1751, if not at that Time also: But adds, that the Pannel's Connexion with the Family of Ardshiel, gave him also a natural Influence over the Tenants, even before Glenure's Factory."

The Use which the Pannel made of this Influence, natural or acquired, appears partly from the Evidence of the same two Gentlemen: For, upon this Article, Mr. Campbell of Airds hath deposed, "That the Pannel told him, that whatever was made of these Rents, over what was paid into the Exchequer, was accounted for to the Children of Ardshiel; and, when he removed from Glenduror, he told the Deponent, that he had Reason to believe, that the said Excess of the Rents would still be accounted for to them; and, in that Case, he would be easy as to his own Removal."

And Mr. Stewart of Innernakyle deposes upon this Article, "That the Pannel was again removed by the deceased Glenure the Factor from the Farm of Glenduror at Whitsunday 1751, and

"the

“ the Lands let to Mr. Campbell of Balliveolan :
 “ That as the Pannel is the Deponent's near Neigh“ bour, the Deponent had frequent Opportunities
 “ of conversing with him touching his said Re“ moval : That the Pannel did not expect to have “ been removed, and seemed dissatisfied that he “ was ; and said, he believed, that Glenure would “ not have removed him, if (Mr. Campbell of) “ Balliveolan had not sought those Lands from “ him : That the Pannel further said, that the “ Tenants generally allowed, some Gratuity to “ Ardshiel's Children, and that these Lands were
 “ the best Farms on the Estate, and most of the “ Benefits accresced from them ; and tho' he “ himself could be provided of a Farm elsewhere ;
 “ yet the Children would be deprived of that “ Benefit.”

In what Manner this Removal of the Pannel, from this beneficial Farm of Glenduror, to which he had last entered since the Rebellion, without any lawful Title whatever, was brought about, appears from the Instructions to Glenure from the Barons of Exchequer; produced and proved before you ; the last of which is in these Words : “ You are, on no Condition whatever, to let a Farm to any of the Friends (i. e. the Relations) of the forfeiting Person.” And tho' it be true, that these Instructions bear Date the 25th July 1751, about two Months after the actual Removal of the Pannel from Glenduror, these were nevertheless the true Cause of that Removal ; for it was known or expected by the Factor, that he would receive such Instructions, there having been Notice given to the Lords Commissioners of the Treasury, of a considerable Possession of the Estate of Lochiel having been let to, or for the Use of one of the Brothers of the attainted Person ; upon which their Lordships had directed the Barons of the Exchequer to provide against the like being done for the future, in order to avoid the Occasions of continuing that Leading or Influence over the Vulgar inhabiting those Estates, that had produced so much Disturbance and Mischief to the Public.

And thus it was thro' Necessity, and in order to the faithful Discharge of the Duty of his Office, that Mr. Campbell of Glenure, at Whitsunday, or in May 1751, removed the Pannel from his Possession of the Farm of Glenduror, to the Continuance whereof he had no legal Title or Claim whatsoever ; and also resolved to employ the Pannel no longer as his Sub-factor or Assistant, in managing the Estate of Ardshiel.

It is not easy to conceive, that there was any Reason or just Cause given by this Conduct of Glenure, for Resentment or Hatred from this Pannel, even if it had been true, which the Pannel expressed to Stewart of Innernabyle, that, as he believed, Glenure would not have removed himself, if Balliveolan had not sought or solicited this Possession of Glenduror from him ; and yet, that the Pannel conceived and expressed, and prosecuted such Disposition in the most outrageous Manner, hath been now fully proved before you. But, before I mention the particular Evidence of this, I must proceed to recite the fresh Cause of Difference betwixt these Persons, and of Animosity conceived by this Pannel, from the After-proceedings of Glenure in the Spring of this present Year ; when he having taken the Resolution to remove a few of those Tenants, who had been introduced to their Possessions, as I have mentioned, by Ardshiel's Lady and this Pannel, in the Interval betwixt the Rebellion and the Date of the Factory, it appears, that the Pannel being apprehensive, that this would lessen his Interest and influence among the People, if he should not be able to protect those Persons in the Possessions, which he himself had bestowed or procured, took the Resolution to oppose these Removings ; which he prosecuted, by representing and complaining of it in the Country as a mighty Act of Oppression, because the King's Factor thought fit to remove four or five Tenants lately introduced upon this Estate, who had neither standing Leases nor old Possessions, to intitle them in Point of Right, or in Point of Favour, to be continued ; and this groundless Opposition to those Removings the Pannel set about and conducted at his own Expence, and gave himself great Agitation and Trouble in the Prosecution of it, having gone to Edinburgh in April last, on purpose to present the Bill of Suspension of those Removings, which you have heard, setting forth most frivolous Grounds ; and all this without the Knowledge, Application, or Contribution for the Expence by the Tenants themselves, in whose Names he took upon him to offer that Bill of Suspension, until he had obtained at Edinburgh an Order upon the Bill from the Lord Dun Ordinary, that Answers should be put in to the same, and sisting or staying Execution in the interim ; with which Sift, and certain Advices he had received at Edinburgh, for making Application for those Tenants to the Barons of Exchequer, when they should meet in the Beginning of June, the Pannel returned to his own House on the 27th April ; and then sent for those Tenants, and gave them Notice of his Proceedings at Edinburgh on their Account ; and that if they had a Mind to continue their Possessions, they were advised to go to Glenure, and seek their Possessions (or demand such Continuance) ; and if he did not grant their Desire, they should send for a Notary, and go with him to protest against Glenure ; and if they pleased, he would send for a Notary, to which they agreed : And accordingly the Pannel sent for Charles Stewart, who hath been examined on this Fact, and sent him along with the Tenants to Glenure's House, where he intimated the Sift, and took a Protest against him on the 1st of May last.

It was upon receiving this Notice of a Suspension presented, and a Sift granted, that Glenure repaired to Edinburgh, and put in his Answer to the Bill ; upon Consideration of which, the Bill was refused or dismissed by the Lord Haining Ordinary ; and then Glenure returned to his own House on Saturday the 9th May last, in order to take the necessary Measures for executing the Removings that had been thus opposed.

This Part of the Pannel's Proceedings is proved by the Oath of Charles Stewart, his Notary, by the Pannel's own Examinations, which you have heard read, and by Duncan Maccoll in Ardshiel, one of those Tenants, who hath now deposed, “ That, upon himself and others being warned to re“ move from the Lands of Ardshiel, as at Whit-
 “ sunday last, he for his Part had no Intention
 “ other than to submit to the Warning, till a “ Paper was procured from Edinburgh, which he “ heard read by Charles Stewart, Notary at Aucharn,
 “ as on a Day he was there, being along with “ his Neighbours advertised to meet there,—
 “ where he and his Neighbours were told by the “ Pannel and Charles Stewart, the Notary, that
 “ the Paper brought from Edinburgh, contained “ Advice for those who had been warned to re“ move, to continue in their Possessions; and “ that they should go to Glenure, and ask the same

 “ from him. And deposes, that he gave no Al“ lowance or Mandate to the Pannel to make any “ Application at Edinburgh against the Removing:
 “ That, before he heard any thing of this Paper
 “ from Edinburgh, he had engaged to serve as “ Bouman to the Tenants Glenure was to introduce;
 “ but that, on hearing of this Paper, he preferred
 “ keeping by his Neighbours, as he considered
 “ the being continued in his Possession, did the “ Law support him in it, as more beneficial to “ him: And adds, that the procuring the Paper
 “ at Edinburgh cost him no Money.”

To the same Purpose, John Maccombich, another of those Tenants in Ardshiel, hath deposed, and adds this farther Circumstance, “ That as to his agreeing with the incoming Tenants to be their Bouman, he heard both Glenure and these Tenants say, that it was by Glenure's Advice that this was done;” which is, by the way, an Instance of the Humanity, with which Glenure acted on this Occasion, in being at Pains to provide Bread for those Persons whom he did not think fit to continue as Tenants on this Estate of Ardshiel, where they had been so lately introduced by the Pannel.

These then were all the Causes of Offence, that, after the strictest Inquiry, can be discovered to have been ever given by Glenure to this Pannel, namely, that Glenure, as Factor upon this Estate of Ardshiel, removed the Pannel himself from the Farm or Possession of Glenduror at Whitsunday last Year, and gave over employing or entrusting the Pannel to act under him in the Management of the Lands of Ardshiel; and that he was taking Measures for removing the few Tenants lately introduced by the Pannel, at Whitsunday this Year; which Measure he persisted in, the Opposition that the Pannel was pleased to make, notwithstanding. Very strange Causes, it must be confessed, for the Pannel's conceiving a violent, and even a mortal Enmity against Glenure! And yet nothing is more certain, than that violent Offence may be taken, where no just, or even plausible Cause for it hath been given: And, from the first Murder recorded in sacred History, down to this now in Question, often hath it happened, that wicked Men have hated their Brothers without a Cause, that is, without a Reason or just Cause, tho' there was always an Occasion, or a Motive, such as it was, for that Hatred being conceived.

Again, it is to be considered, that Occasions of Offence operate differently, according to the Education, Temper, and Character of the Party who meets with them; and we have now heard from the Evidence in this Trial, what a wrong Way of thinking this unfortunate Pannel is possessed of, in holding it to be a Cause of mortal Enmity, that a Man should be removed by another from his Farm or Possession which he hath no manner of Title to hold or retain; which is a Prejudice or Delusion, that, in a lower Degree, prevails elsewhere, but seems to be in a particular Manner prevalent in the Highlands, and was the Cause of the Attempt made by the Macphersons to assassinate Glenbucket some Years ago, as well as the Cause of the horrid Murder into which you are now inquiring.

And, for one Proof that this Pannel is deeply poisoned with this most erroneous Opinion, you heard, Gentlemen, a little while ago the Objection that was by him made to Alexander Stewart senior in Lagnabaw, one of the Witnesses in the List served upon him, and called up to give Evidence against him, to whom the Pannel objected, that this Witness bore Enmity against him; for that the Witness was formerly in Possession of the Lands of Aucharn, which the Pannel now holds under Mr. Campbell of Airds; and that the Pannel had caused the Witness to be removed from that Possession, and succeeded him in it: An Objection in itself insufficient in Point of Law, which cannot suppose Men to be so wicked as to entertain mortal Enmity for such a Cause; and therefore, as you heard, it was over-ruled by the Court; notwithstanding which we freely passed from the Witness, being satisfied that we had Evidence enough besides, and unwilling to leave any Room for the Pannel to complain, or for you, Gentlemen of the Jury, to apprehend that any one Witness was used against him, of whose Credibility there could be the smallest Suspicion; but the very moving of such Objection on the Part of the Pannel, affords one Proof of his own Sense of the Nature and Degree of such Offence.

Another signal Proof of this appears from the Oath of Ewan Macintyre, late Herd in Glenduror, who hath deposed, “ That he engaged to be Herd “ to Mr. Campbell of Balliveolan in the Farm of “ Glenduror, for the Year 1751; and that, the “ Day after he entered into his Service there, the “ Pannel challenged him for accepting thereof, “ and told him, that he would be fit-fides with “ him sooner or later for doing it; and that, if “ he did not meet with Resentment himself in “ his Life-time, others, such as his Friends, might “ meet with it after his Death.” And adds, “ That he himself was never in the Pannel's Ser- “ vice.” This was surely carrying this Delusion to a most extravagant Pitch, and such as, to any Stranger to this odd Way of thinking, must have appeared incredible, till he heard the Proof of a Fact, which demonstrates how deeply that Opinion is rooted in the Mind of this Pannel.

And, accordingly, we have heard how that was farther displayed by his Words and by his Actions on other Occasions, in respect of the deceased Glenure, for the Causes of Offence I have mentioned, by the Evidence I shall now point out.

And first of all, John Breck Maccoll, the Bouman to Appin (who, tho' he lives in a Desert, appeared, to me, to have given his Evidence in a most natural ingenuous Manner; and, by his own Words and Behaviour related in it, discovers a Degree of Sagacity which, in a Person of his Situation, surprised me; and,) upon the Article I am now speaking of, he deposes, “ That, in a Con- “ versation the Deponent had with the Pannel, “ as the Deponent best remembers, about two “ Years ago,” (whether he was herein accurate in the Chronology, is not essential to the Question in Issue) “ Mention being made of Glenure's being “ about to take on himself the Management of the “ Estate of Ardshiel from the said Pannel, and “ thereby disable the Pannel from being of any “ Service to Ardshiel's Children, he heard the Pan- “ nel say, he would be willing to spend a Shot “ upon Glenure, tho' he went upon his Knees to “ his Window to fire it: And farther deposes, “ That he heard a waif (that is a flying or uncer- “ tain Rumour or) Report in the Country, that “ Ardshiel (the attainted Person) had sent Home “ a Message, that he believed all his Friends were “ dead, when Glenure was allowed to go on at the “ Rate he did.”

Again,

Again, another remarkable Conversation of the Pannel's, in the same Spirit, but carried a good deal farther, is proved to have happened about Christmas last 1751, within the Pannel's own Brew-house at Aucharn, betwixt him and three of his own Servants, who all concur in proving it, namely, John More Maccoll, Dougal Maccoll, and John Beg Maccoll; of whom the first hath deposed, "That he was present at a Conversation that happened betwixt the Pannel, John Beg and Dougal Maccolls, both Servants to the Pannel, in his Brew-house at Aucharn, before Day-light, upon a Morning about Yule (or Christmas) last, as the Deponent best remembers: That the Deponent was then employed in distilling the second Draught of a Brewing of Aquavitæ, and the Pannel ordered the Deponent to give him, and People present, a Dram; which the Deponent did: That the Pannel said, Glenure would not take the Rent from the Tenants of Aucharn, Part of the Ardshiel Estate, because they had given the Pannel some Barley, which Glenure alledged they ought to have paid him: That the Pannel complained, it was hard to refuse the Rent in Money from the Tenants in a scarce Year; and observed, that it would be of no great Consequence to him, the Pannel, tho' he should pay back the Barley, in Comparison of what it would be to the Tenants for subsequent Years, in case they were obliged to pay their Farm, Bear and Meal," (to-wit, in Kind according to their Leases) "and said the Tenants or Commoners were likely to be very ill off; for, if Glenure went on in the Way he then did, it was likely he would be Laird of Appin in a very short Time; and that he knew once a Set of Commoners in Appin, who would not allow Glenure to go on at such a Rate: To which the Deponent and the rest answered, that they knew no Commoners in the Country who could strive or contend with Glenure in that Manner."

This Conversation in the Brew-house is further proved or explained by the other two Servants present: And John Beg Maccoll adds this Circumstance, "That after he and Dugald Maccoll went out of the Brew-house, either that Day, or some time thereafter, they talked together what the Import of this Conversation might be; and that the Deponent was at a Loss, whether to consider it as an Encouragement to destroy Glenure, or as a Complaint against the Commoners of Appin, as not being so faithful to the Pannel, as he expected them to be."

It must be left to your Consideration, Gentlemen, whether this John Beg Maccoll was not in the right in his Conjecture; and that this Conversation can receive no other Construction, than that the Pannel took that Occasion to instigate these Servants of his own, who were all of one Tribe, to resent against Glenure the supposed Injuries to the common People of that Country, which the Pannel had thus represented and exaggerated to them; or at least to feel their Pulses, and try how they would relish such a Proposal or Insinuation.

But farther still, the Pannel continued to discover the Rancour with which his own Heart was filled against Glenure; the next Instance of which that hath appeared upon the Evidence, happened in April last, when he was on his Road to Edinburgh, with Intent to offer a Bill of Suspension of the Removing of the Tenants that hath been mentioned: And here three Circumstances are proved by the Testimonies of Alexander Campbell and Ewan Murray, two of his Landlords or Innkeepers by the Way, and Colin Maclaren, Merchant in Stirling, who fell into Company with the Pannel at both these Houses, and travelled in the Pannel's Company some Miles on the Road towards Stirling.

Alexander Campbell in Teynaluib hath deposed, "That in April last the Pannel called at the Deponent's House in the Morning, to have his Horse corned; and having called for, and got a Dram, which was afterwards set down upon the Table, one Maclaren, a Merchant in Stirling, who had lodged with the Deponent the Night before, being present, asked the Pannel, if he would not help the Deponent to a Dram? and the Pannel answered, he did not know any Thing that he would help the Deponent, or any of his Name to, if it was not to the Gibbet: And after some farther Conversation, the Deponent said, that Glenure, as he supposed, was the Person of the (Deponent's) Name, with whom the Pannel had the greatest Quarrel; and the Deponent did not know any good Cause the Pannel had for it. To which the Pannel answered, that if Glenure had used the Deponent as ill as he had used him (the Pannel,) by turning him out of his Possession, he would have no less Quarrel with him than he had. And, upon the Pannel's Interrogatories, the Witnesses added, "That at that Time he thought what the Pannel said proceeded from Malice, and that the Pannel was then perfectly sober."

This Conversation was confirmed by Colin Maclaren, the Merchant, who had lodged in that House all Night, who adds, "That the Pannel then said (speaking of the Campbells) that he did not chuse to be an Executioner, but he could draw down some of their Feet;—and that at first, during this Conversation in Campbell's House, he thought that the Pannel had been in Joke, but afterwards it was like to become very serious; for the Landlord and he came to pretty high Words together."

The next Landlord, Ewan Murray, at the West End of Lochern, hath deposed, "That in April last, the Pannel, and Colin Maclaren, Merchant in Stirling, came to the Deponent's House, and the Pannel told the Deponent, that Glenure had warned away several Families in Ardshiel's Estate to remove; and that he was informed, that none of the Factors on the forfeited Estates had Power to remove the Tenants; and that he was going to Edinburgh to take Advice of Lawyers about it; and if he had not that Power, that the Pannel would apply for Suspension in his own Name, and in Name of the rest of the Tenants: And the Conversation turning upon an Officer in the Army that was branded with Cowardice, and had been broke on that Account, the Pannel said, that he had Reason to say, that Glenure was as great a Coward as that Officer; for that he, the Pannel, had challenged him to fight him, which Glenure declined; and desired the Deponent to tell Glenure, that he had told him so: But the Deponent answered, that he would not carry any such Message from one Gentleman to another: And from the Conversation, the Deponent understood, that the Arms with which the Pannel had challenged Glenure to fight, was with Pistols."

And it is true, Gentlemen, that this Witness adds, upon the Pannel's Interrogatory, "That he thought “ thought the Pannel was a little concerned with “ Drink; but if it was so, tum veræ voces.”

This Conversation is again confirmed by Mr. Maclaren, the Pannel’s Fellow-Traveller, in both the Parts of it; who adds this Circumstance, that the latter Part of the Conversation happened upon the Road after they left that House, and Murray the Landlord rode some Part of the Way along with them: And then Mr. Maclaren deposes to a third Conversation betwixt himself and the Pannel, in these Words, “ That, after parting with Ewan Murray, in the Course of their Journey, the Deponent found, that the Removing was much at the Pannel’s Heart, and the Deponent endeavoured all he could to divert the Conversation to another Subject: That the Pannel told him, that if he failed in a Suspension at Edinburgh, he would carry it to the British Parliament; and if he failed there, told him, after a little Pause, and with an Emphasis, that he behoved to take the only other Remedy that remained.”

These last Words, Gentlemen, need no Explanation; for surely, after the Judgment of the British Parliament, no other legal or lawful Remedy could remain.

And, as to the Condition of the Pannel during these Conversations, Mr. Maclaren farther deposes, “ That he did not think the Pannel drunk either in Campbell’s House, or in Ewan Murray’s House; but, after leaving Murray’s House, they drank two or three Drams at a Dram-house, and after that the Deponent thought him much concerned with Liquor; and it was after taking these Drams that the Conversation between Murray and the Pannel, with respect to challenging Glenure, happened; and that the Deponent and the Pannel had rode several Miles together before the Conversation about the British Parliament; and the Deponent thought him even then still concerned with Drink:” And very likely it was this that threw the Pannel so much off his Guard as to speak out, to his Landlord and his Fellow-Traveller, so much of what lay deeply at his own Heart, and to tell upon himself this Matter of Fact about the Challenge he had given Glenure to fight him with Pistols.

Such appearing to have been the Temper and Disposition of the Pannel towards Glenure in the Month of April last, and before that Time; I shall next point out to you, Gentlemen, the Evidence concerning that of his Friend Allan Breck, who himself does not appear ever to have had any Acquaintance of, or Intercourse with Glenure in his Life, but, by the Pannel’s own showing, was his Kinsman, and had been his Ward or Pupil; and, by Breck’s Character, and his then Situation, as being engaged in foreign Service, and not at Liberty to live openly in this Kingdom for any long Time, though he went about among his Highland Friends without any Scruple, he was a fitter Instrument of the Vengeance meditated against Glenure, than the Maccolls the Pannel’s own Servants, or any of the common People of Appin, could be.

And, concerning this Allan Breck, John Beg Maccoll, one of the Pannel’s Servants, hath deposed, “ That, in March last, he came to the Pannel’s House, late in the Evening, dressed in a blue Coat, red Waistcoat, black shag Breeches, and a feathered Hat,” (that is in his French Dress, which the Witnesses call a side or long Coat, in Opposition to the black short Coat with silver Buttons belonging to the Pannel, which he was afterwards seen in; and, upon this his first Arrival, the Witness proceeds to depose,) “ That he looked into the Kitchen, and went immediately to the Room where the Pannel and his Family were; that afterwards he used to go through the Country to different Places, and came frequently back to the Pannel’s House: That once he remained there a Week, which was the longest Time that he staid there at one Time.”

Here is then the Intimacy still subsisting betwixt the Pannel and Breck, that naturally arose from the acknowledged Connexion betwixt them; the Pannel’s House was his Head-Quarters in the Country of Appin, from whence he made his Excursions to visit his other Friends in those Parts; and, during the Pannel’s Absence on his Journey to Edinburgh, Breck went over to see his Relations in Rannoch. And it hath appeared upon the Evidence, how thoroughly Mr. Breck espoused, and entered into the Notions and Sentiments of his old Guardian and Friend, the now Pannel, with respect to Glenure.

And on this Head Duncan Campbell, Change-keeper at Annat, deposes, “ That, in the Month of April last, the Deponent met with Allan Breck Stewart, with whom he was not before acquainted, and John Stewart of Auchnacooan, at the House of the Walk-miller of Achofragan, and went on with them to the House; that Allan Breck said, that he hated all the Name of Campbell; and the Deponent said, he had no Reason for doing so; but Allan said, he had very good Reason for it: That thereafter they left that House; and, after drinking a Dram at another House, came to the Deponent’s House, where they went in, drunk some Drams, and Allan Breck renewed the former Conversation; and the Deponent making the same Answer, Allan said, that if the Deponent had any Respect for his Friends, he would tell them, that if they offered to turn out the Possessors of Ardshiel’s Estate, he would make black Cocks of them before they entered into Possession, by which the Deponent understood shooting them, it being a common Phrase in the Country:—That John Stewart said he did not blame Glenure so much as Ballieveolan, for taking those Possessions; whereas Glenure was doing the King’s Service: And Allan Breck replied, that besides that, he had another Ground of Quarrel against Glenure, for writing to Colonel Crawfurd, that he, Allan, was come Home from France; but that he was too cunning for him; for that, when at Edinburgh, he had made up his Peace with General Churchill, and had got his Pass, which he had in his Pocket-Book: That the Deponent asked a Sight of it; that he searched his Pocket-Book, but could not find it; upon which he tore a Leaf out of the Book, and said, there it was. And deposes, that he said twenty Times over, he would be fit-sides with Glenure where-ever he met him, and wanted nothing more, than to meet him at a convenient Place.”

This Conversation is confirmed by Anne Maclaren, Servant to the said Duncan Campbell, who deposes, “ That she heard Allan Breck then say, “ That he would not shun Glenure, where-ever he met him; by which she understood, that he was to do Hurt or Harm to Glenure, where-ever he saw him.”

And it is farther confirmed by Angus Macdonald,

the Walk-miller mentioned by Duncan Campbell, and by Robert Stewart, a fourth Person present in the Company, who adds indeed, that Allan Breck was much in Drink at the Time of uttering the above Expressions; but they are not the less to be regarded in this Trial, when the Occasion of these Threats, the Repetition of them, and, last of all, the fatal Execution hath been at the same Time proved before you.

Another like Conversation of Allan Breck's was proved to have happened at the House of Malcolm Maccoll, Change-keeper at Portnacross, by the Landlord, and by Anne his Wife, who depose, "That, one Morning in April last, Allan Breck being in his House with John Stewart, John Maccoll, then Servant to the Deponent, came into the Company in a shabby Condition; that Allan Breck asked who he was? that the said John Stewart answered, that he was an honest poor Man, with a numerous Family of small Children, and that it would be great Charity in any body to assist him; upon which Allan Breck desired the said John Stewart to give the said John Maccoll a Stone of Meal, and he would pay for it, which the said John Stewart promised to do: That the said Allan then gave the said John Maccoll a Dram, and told him, if he would fetch him the Red Fox's Skin, he would give him what was much better.—And depose, that they gave no great Notice to these Expressions at the Time; but, after they heard of Glenure's Murder, believed he meant Glenure, as he was commonly called Colin Roy, which means Red Colin, in the Country."

A third and very remarkable Instance of Allan Breck's Conversations on this Subject, was one which he held with two of the Pannel's Servants above-mentioned, Dugald and John More Maccolls; whereof the former deposes, "That as he and John Maccoll were harrowing in a Field belonging to the Pannel at Aucharn, being the same Day, or the Day after the Pannel went for Edinburgh, (that is, on the 3d or 4th of April) Allan Breck Stewart walked for a good Time about the Field; and as they were loosing their Horses, the said Allan Breck and they entered into Conversation about France, and People from this Country there; and John More Maccoll asked, if there was any Prospect of any of them coming back? upon Allan Breck's answering, he was afraid they would not, John More said, he wished that none had ever come from that Country; in which the said Allan joined him, saying, it had dispersed the Friends he most regarded; and (then added) that it was a particular Misfortune, that the Management of any Concerns they left behind them, fell into the Hands of one that was about to show them no Manner of Favour; and declared, that he meant Glenure; and told, that the Commoners of Appin were little worth, when they did not take him out of the Way before now; and upon their saying, no body would run that Risk, not knowing who would stand by them, Allan Breck answered, that he knew how to convey out of the Way any Person that would do so, that he would never be caught; and also said, that they, and the Tribe they were of, (meaning the Maccolls) were not like to be the least Sufferers by Glenure's Proceedings."

John More Maccoll swears to the same Conversation at the harrowing, and deposes, that Allan

Breck then said, "If they, the Commoners of Appin, were worth themselves, they could keep out Glenure, and hinder him from oppressing them; in which Case they would not be banished from their natural Possessions; and, upon the Deponent's answering, he did not see how any body could pretend to strive or struggle with Glenure in that Way, as he had the Laws of the King and Country for him, and no body to support or take them by the Hand after their so doing; Allan said, he had it in his Power to save or protect any body that would put Glenure from trampling upon the Country in the Manner he then did."

Here then was Allan Breck the Pupil, in Spring last, a few Weeks before the Murder happened, speaking the very same Language, and using the same Arguments with two of these Maccolls, the Servants of the Pannel, with which the Pannel himself had been practising upon them in his own Brew-house about Christmas last; and this Conversation of Breck's was not like the former, after drinking Drams in Change-houses, but when he was sober and cool, walking in the Fields about the Pannel's House, which was in Effect his Home.

And, to the Evidence on this Article, may be added, what the Pannel himself hath declared at his first Examination before the Sheriff-substitute, which has been proved and read in your Presence, when, being interrogated, "If he had any Conversation with Allan Breck concerning Glenure?" answered, that the said Allan asked the Declarant, "if he heard that Serjeant More (Cameron) was come from France, or if he was in the Country of Appin?" To which the Declarant answered, "that he did not hear he was in Appin, but he heard he was in Glenetive last Year; whereupon the said Allan told the Declarant, that Serjeant More swore he would kill Glenure, because of the Treatment he gave the Tenants on the Estate of Mamore, Part of Lockiel Estate. Declared also, That the said Allan Breck threatened that he would challenge Ballieveolan and his Sons to fight, because of his removing the Declarant last Year from Glenduror, and being about to remove the other Tenants this Year from some other Parts of the Estate of Ardshiel."

Now, as to the Mention here made by the Pannel of Serjeant More Cameron, I shall hereafter have Occasion to take Notice of the Use the Pannel made of it; but have here only to observe, that the Causes of Offence, for which the Pannel says Breck threatened to fight Ballieveolan, were the very same which the Pannel himself, as well as Breck, resented so highly against Glenure, namely, the removing the Pannel himself from Glenduror the last Year, and being about to remove other Tenants of Ardshiel this Year: And though the Pannel carefully avoids saying any thing of Breck's Threatenings against Glenure, after he had been actually murdered, and had attempted to throw the Suspicion of that upon Serjeant More; yet here, by the Pannel's own showing, Breck had entered thoroughly into those Quarrels of his for the actual Removal of himself, and the intended Removal of others, and threatened to challenge and fight Ballieveolan upon that Account.

And as to the other Ground of Quarrel against Glenure, which Allan Breck mentions in one of the above Conversations, namely, for his supposed writing to Colonel Crawfurd, that he, Allan, was come Home from France, I shall not take upon me to explain, or to guess in what Manner Allan Breck came to be possessed with such a Conceit; because we have heard no Evidence concerning the Manner in which he received such Piece of false Information or Intelligence; for that it was false hath been fully proved before you. First of all, Colonel Crawfurd himself "being asked whether " the deceased Colin Campbell of Glenure ever told " him, that Allan Breck Stewart was a Deserter, " and in this Country? hath answered, upon Oath, " in the negative."

And next, Mr. Campbell of Airds hath deposed, " That, in Spring last, he had a Letter from " Colonel Crawfurd, telling him that he heard " Allan Breck Stewart was come to the Country, " and inlisting Men for the French King's Service, " and desired the Deponent to inquire if it was so: " That the Deponent did inquire, and wrote the " Colonel for Answer, that he heard he had been " in the Country, but that he was then gone " away: That this was in the Month of April, " to the best of the Deponent's Remembrance; " and it seems about that Time Allan Breck Stewart " had gone to Rannoch, which gave Occasion to " the Deponent's being informed that he was " gone away, and did not hear of his having re- " turned to the Country till after Glenure's Murder; " and thinks he wrote also to Colonel Crawfurd, " according to the Information he had got, that " Allan Breck Stewart was in use of coming every " Year to the Country since Ardshiel went to " France."

And Alexander Stewart of Innernabyle deposes, " That he remembers that Allan Breck Stewart " came over to this Country a Year or two ago, " and staid some Weeks among his Friends; but " neither at that Time, nor the last Time, did he " seem, so far as the Deponent observed, to be " in any Apprehension of being taken; only, as " he had been once in the Army, he did not " chuse to meet with any of the King's Troops."

And besides all this, it hath appeared in the Proof before you, that Breck Stewart remained in the Country, as usual, a full Month or more, after he had mentioned the supposed Notice given concerning him by Glenure to Colonel Crawfurd; and it hath not been proved, or even alledged, that in pursuance of that Notice, whoever gave it, there was any Search made for Breck, or the smallest Disquiet given to him, or any Alarm or Precautions taken by him, till after the Murder of Glenure: To say nothing therefore of the Injustice of that Cause of Offence, had it been true, that Glenure, a good Subject to his Majesty, formerly a military, and still a civil Officer in his Service, had given Notice to the commanding Officer in a neighbouring Garrison, of such a Person as Breck Stewart, a late Rebel, a Deserter, or a French Emisary, possibly for raising Recruits, being then lately come into that Country; I have only to observe on this Occasion, that in Fact it is incredible, that Breck Stewart himself, upon a bare Surmise, which was not true, that Glenure had given such Notice to Colonel Crawfurd, and upon which no Molestation followed to himself, should have conceived or prosecuted a deadly Hatred against Glenure; and therefore the true Cause of that Enmity must have been the other main Quarrel or Cause of Offence, which was first taken up by the now Pannel, and thereafter adopted and espoused by Breck in the Manner that you have heard.

And, for the Truth of this Observation, we have the Authority of the Pannel himself, who had the best Opportunity to be thoroughly acquainted with Allan Breck's Sentiments; for, in the Pannel's Examination that hath been read before you, he says, " That how soon the Declarant heard of " Glenure's Murder, it came into his Mind, that " Serjeant More had done it, because Allan Breck " had told him, that the said Serjeant swore " bloody Revenge against Glenure, before the Ser- " jeant came from France, upon Account of Gle- " nure's Treatment of Lochiel's Tenants, and his " differing with John Cameron of Fassaferru, Brother " to Lochiel: That the Declarant's Reason for " suspecting Allan Breck afterwards was, because " he left the Country abruptly, without taking " Leave of him, as he expected; and, if the said " Allan was guilty of the said Murder, he believes " it behoved to be on Account of the Disturbance " given to the Tenants of the Estate of Ardshiel, " and he knows no other."

Thus, Gentlemen, stands the Evidence you have heard of the Causes of Offence, such as they were, that were taken by the Pannel and his Friend Breck Stewart against the late Glenure, and of the Manner in which their Resentment against him had been expressed and displayed in and before the Month of April last, when the Pannel went to Edinburgh to obtain a Suspension for staying the Removings. And we must now proceed to examine the Evidence of the Sequel of these Animosities and Threatenings, and of the fatal Execution thereof by the actual Murder of Glenure, upon the very Eve of Whitsunday, or the 15th of May, when he was to have proceeded to the removing of the Tenants of Ardshiel, after he had, upon Answers made, obtained the Bill of Suspension offered by the Pannel to be refused or dismissed; whereby the Pannel's last Effort, to prevent those Removings, and to preserve his own Authority or Influence with the Tenants of Ardshiel, had been frustrated.

On the 27th April last, by the Pannel's own Account, he returned to his own House from Edinburgh, with the Order he had obtained on his Bill of Suspension, that the same should be answered, and a Sift or Stay of Proceeding in the Interim; soon after which, he called the Tenants, and gave them Notice what he had been doing for them, and sent them with his Notary to intimate the Sift to Glenure; which was accordingly done on the 1st of May, as Charles Stewart, the Notary, hath deposed.

On Saturday the 9th of May, Glenure returned to his own House from Edinburgh, whither he had gone to make an Answer to that Bill of Suspension that had been intimated to him; and, upon that Answer, had got the same refused or dismissed; and gave out, in his Family, his Resolution, after reposing himself that Sunday at Home, to set out on Monday the 11th for Fort-William, in order to settle the Affairs of his Factory on the Lochiel Estate, and to return to Appin or Ardshiel before the 15th.

At this Time Allan Breck Stewart is proved to have been at the House of John Stewart of Fasnacloch, distant but one Mile from Glenure's House, which, in that Country, is near Neighbourhood; and there, accompanied by Charles, one of the Pannel's Sons, where Allan Breck had Opportunity to get Intelligence of the Motions of Glenure; which accordingly he received from his Landlord John Stewart the elder of Fasnacloch, who hath deposed, " That he told Allan Breck, that Glenure

“ was come from Edinburgh, with a Warrant to remove the Tenants; to which Allan Breck said, that if there was a Warrant, there was no more to be said; but that if he had no Warrant, he would not be allowed to remove them: And the Witness adds, that he heard, on Sunday the 10th of May, that Glenure was going to Fort-William; and Allan Breck left his House about Nine o’Clock Monday Morning.”

This is confirmed by James Stewart the younger of Fasnaclloch, who adds, “ That Breck was then in his French Dreſs, and that, when he went away on Monday the 11th, about Nine in the Morning, he told the Family that he was going to leave the Country ſoon, but would ſee them again at Fasnaclloch before he went away: And further ſays, that, on Sunday the 10th, he heard, being in Company with Allan Breck, that Glenure had got an Order from Edinburgh to remove the Tenants, and was gone to Fort-William.”

From Fasnaclloch, Allan Breck came directly the ſame Day to the Pannel’s Houſe at Aucharn, where, ſoon after, he put off his French Cloaths, and put on the black or dark-coloured ſhort Coat belonging to the Pannel with ſilver Buttons, with a Bonnet and Trowſers, being, as ſeveral of the Pannel’s Servants have depoſed, the ſecond Time they ever ſaw him in that Dreſs; the only former Time having been, when Breck went in theſe Cloaths for ſome Days to Rannoch in April preceding, whiſt the Pannel was at Edinburgh.

And now the Pannel himſelf hath declared, “ That he was informed on Monday the 11th of May, by his Son Charles, Allan Breck, and Fasnaclloch’s Daughter, that they heard Glenure was to go to Lochaber that Day; and that one or other of them told him, that Glenure was to remove the Tenants of Ardſhiel.”

By the Communication of this Intelligence, it appeared, that the Matter in Diſpute was coming to a Criſis; the laborious Efforts made by the Pannel, in going to Edinburgh, of his own Accord, to get a Stop put to the Removing, he now ſaw were rendered ineffectual, by means of Glenure’s having gone thither after him: And it is preſumeable from the Facts that preceded, and that followed this Day, that this was the Time when the Pannel and Breck, at his own Houſe, concerted, that Glenure ſhould be cut off by the Hands of Breck, upon his Return from Fort-William into that Country of Appin; and, as it appears from the Evidence, that the Pannel at this Time was low in Caſh, the Facts that have been proved, ſerve to evince, or to render it farther preſumeable, that at this Time it was concerted, betwixt the Pannel and Breck, that the latter, as ſoon as his Work was done, ſhould retire to the Deſert of Koaliſnacooan, and there wait, till either the Pannel ſent him a Supply of Money to carry him off, or cauſed the Money to be furniſhed by his Friend and Correſpondent, William Stewart, Merchant in Maryburgh.

It is true, that, for ſome Hours of this Monday the 11th, the Pannel went from his own Houſe, upon a Meſſage from Mr. Campbell of Airds; but he returned Home in the Evening; and in the Diſpoſition that both he and Breck Stewart had long been in towards Glenure, which was now more inflamed by this freſh Intelligence they had received, that Glenure had got the better of them at Law, and was about to proceed in the Removings, a very ſhort Conſultation betwixt them might ſerve to make all this Concert; the Evidence of which ariſes from the enſuing Facts, joined with thoſe preceding this 11th of May.

For it hath been proved; that, on the Morning of Tueſday the 12th, Allan Breck ſet out from the Pannel’s Houſe, dreſſed in his ſhort Cloaths, and went directly to the Houſe belonging to Stewart of Ballacheliſh, adjoining to the Ferry of that Name, upon the Road by which Glenure was to come from Fort-William into Appin; and there Breck met his Friend Stewart the younger of Fasnaclloch, who hath depoſed, “ That he took Notice to Allan Breck, that he had changed his Dreſs; who answered, that he did it, becauſe the Day was warm:” And adds, “ That the Deponent was informed at Ballacheliſh, in Company with Allan Breck, that Glenure was gone to Fort-William.”

The ſame Day Allan Breck went, accompanied by Fasnaclloch the younger, to the Houſe of Macdonald of Glenco, where his Mother-in-law, the Pannel and Ardſhiel’s Siſter, alſo lived; and from thence, after ſtaying about an Hour, went a-croſs the Ferry to the Houſe of Cameron of Callart, where another Siſter of the Pannel and of Ardſhiel lives, and where he lodged all that Night; and next Day, being Wedneſday the 13th, came back; after calling again by the Way at Glenco’s Houſe of Carnoch, to Ballacheliſh, where he remained the Night following.

And now, Gentlemen, we are come to the fatal Day, which was Thuſday the 14th of May laſt, of which, and the Days immediately following, the various Events and Incidents that have been proved before you, merit your particular Attention, as I endeavour to put you in Mind of them, as nearly as poſſible in their Order.

On the Morning of this Thuſday the 14th, about Seven or Eight, as John Beg Maccoll, the Pannel’s Servant, hath depoſed, “ the Pannel ſent him off with a Letter to Charles Stewart, Notary Public at Maryburgh, and told the Deponent, that the Letter was to make, or cauſe the ſaid Charles Stewart come to the Country of Appin, to proceſs againſt Glenure, in caſe he had not a ſufficient Warrant to remove the Tenants of Ardſhiel;—and alſo told the Deponent, he was to get ſome Money from William Stewart, Merchant at Maryburgh, to pay four Milk Cows that were bought for him in the Country; and that if the Money was not ſent, he would not get the Cows; and that the Pannel deſired the Deponent to make all poſſible Diſpatch:—That accordingly he made all the Diſpatch he could to Fort-William, where he arrived about Twelve o’Clock, delivered the Pannel’s Letter to William Stewart, Merchant; who told him, that Charles Stewart, the Notary, was not at Home; but that there was a Notary along with Glenure, who would ſerve the Pannel as well as Glenure; and further told the Deponent, that he, the ſaid William, had wrote to the Pannel in the Morning; that the ſaid William did not give him any Money, but ſaid he would ſend Servants for the Cattle.”

The Reaſon why he got no Money at this Time, is explained by William Stewart himſelf, who depoſes, “ That he gave no Answer in Writing, and thinks he did not give any verbal Answer, if it was not, that he bid him tell his Maſter, that he was not in Caſh, which (he ſays) was the Caſe.”

The Letter itſelf, ſent from the Pannel by this Witneſs, hath been produced, and proved before you;

you; and the Postscript of it is in these Words, which I will now repeat, tho' they are inserted in the Libel: "As I have no Time to write to William, let him send down immediately 8 l. Sterling, to pay four Milk Cows I bought for his Use at Ardshiel."—The Pannel must have had a very pressing Use for Money, when he was thus urging the Payment of the Price before the Buyer received the Cattle; and let it be observed, that this first Express sent with this Demand of Money from William Stewart, was dispatched by the Pannel on the Morning of the Day on which the Murder happened in the Evening.

Again, you are here to observe the Connexion betwixt the Pannel and this William Stewart at Maryburgh, who appears, by the Letter which he mentioned to the Messenger as having been sent by him that Morning to the Pannel, to have entered with great Zeal into the Pannel's Scheme for opposing the Removing of the Tenants; for that Letter also hath been proved before you, and contains these Words: "I find Glenure has a mind to eject the Tenants; but they ought to be deaf to it, and, at all Risques, keep Possession, as they are in good Hands, and it must end in Exchequer; so that I beg they keep Possession; as there will be no Troops, they ought to repel Force by Force, and take their Hazard of the Consequence, as it can be no more than violent Profits."

About Noon on this Thursday the 14th, as Bal-lackelish elder hath deposed, "his Guest Allan Breck went out with a Fishing-rod in his Hand, and was fishing in a Burn near the Deponent's House; but he did not see him take any: That he did not take Leave of the Deponent, and did not return, and he knows nothing of him since."

Archibald Macinnish, the Ferry-man at Ballackelish, deposes, "That, after Mid-day upon Thursday the 14th of May last, as the Deponent was sitting near the said Ferry with another Man, Allan Breck came behind him, and hoasted (or hemmed,) and, upon the Deponent's looking about, desired him to come to him; which the Deponent did, and the said Allan inquired of him, if Glenure had crossed the Ferry from Lochaber to Appin? The Deponent told him he was sure he had not: That upon this Allan Breck went away towards the high Road, had on a dun-coloured big Coat, and had no Fishing-rod; and further deposes, that Glenure was expected back upon the Wednesday, and the Deponent was sure he must be back the Thursday, as it was currently reported in the Country, he was to have a Meeting with some Gentlemen at Kintalline (on the Ardshiel Estate) Thursday Night."

These Ferry-men have Opportunity to learn all the News in the Country; and that his Intelligence upon this last Article was just concerning the Motions of Glenure, and that the same were well known, is further proved by John Maccombich, Change-keeper at Kintalline, who hath deposed, "That upon Tuesday the 12th of May, Glenure sent Notice to the Deponent, that he and some other Company were to be at his House upon Thursday then next, and desired that he might be prepared for entertaining them: That he accordingly made Provision for them; that he told that Glenure was to be at his House that Night, and that the whole Neighbourhood knew of it."

And accordingly, it hath been proved by the Persons who were in Company with Glenure, Mungo Campbell who attended him as a Clerk or Writer, John Mackenzie his Servant, Donald Kennedy one of the Sheriff's Officers, that Glenure and they crossed the Ferry of Ballackelish betwixt Four and Five in the Afternoon of this Day; that, after crossing the Ferry, Balackelish elder walked along with Glenure about half a Mile, till they came to the Skirts of the Wood of Lettermore, where Glenure, pursuing his Journey through the Wood, which stood on the Ascent of the Hill on his left Hand, was suddenly shot through the Body with two Balls, that entered behind his Back and came out at his Belly; of which Wounds he died upon the Spot about Six o'Clock that same Evening.

It is unnecessary for me to repeat the several moving Circumstances related by his Attendants; but if this base and cruel Murder was truly perpetrated by Allan Breck Stewart, who had expressed his Wishes to meet Glenure at a convenient Place, it must be confessed with Regret, that he here met him, or rather, in a base and cowardly Manner, lay in wait for him, at a Place convenient indeed for that wicked Purpose, for concealing himself whilst he went about it, and not far distant from a proper Place of Retreat, after it should be over, until he should be put in Condition to leave the Country; for which a Supply of Money was necessary.

The News of the Murder was quickly brought to the House of the Pannel, by John Mackenzie, the Servant of the Deceased, who went there to get Intelligence of Mr. Campbell of Ballieveolan; where the Pannel seeing him weeping, asked what the Matter was? and the Servant having told him his Master was killed, the Pannel wrung his Hands, expressed great Concern at what had happened, as what might bring innocent People to Trouble, and prayed that might not happen."

And John Beg Maccoll, the Pannel's Servant, who had been sent Express that Morning to Fort-William, and who was present at this Circumstance, relates it in these Words: "That he was hardly an Hour returned Home, when Glenure's Servant came to the Door, calling for the Pannel; that the Pannel went immediately to the Door, and asked the Servant, what was the Matter? and what News he had? To which the Servant replied, The worst I ever had; my Master is murdered in the Wood of Lettermore: Upon which the Pannel said, Lord bless me! was he shot? To which the Servant answered, that he was shot, and said, the Pannel ought to go and take care of his Corpse: That the Servant immediately went off; but neither the Pannel, nor any of his Family, went near the Corpse; and the Pannel said, that as he and Glenure were not in good Terms, and some of the People that were to meet Glenure had Arms, he did not care to go near them, not knowing what might happen. And farther said, that this was a dreadful Accident, and he was afraid, would bring Trouble on the Country; and appeared to be sorry for what had happened."

Here it is evident, that as soon as the Deed was over, the Pannel's first Reflection, from whatever Cause that sprung, was an Apprehension, that it might bring himself into Trouble or Danger.

That same Night, at the Pannel's House, Orders were given to the Servants by his Wife, to hide all the Arms about the House; and accordingly John Beg Maccoll and Dugald Maccoll hid a large Spanish Gun, that used to stand in the Brew-house, and four four Swords. But here it is remarkable, that none of the Servants saw that Night the other shorter Gun, but of a larger Bore, as you have seen, both having been produced, and proved before you; concerning which Dugald Maccoll deposes, “ That Allan Stewart, Son to the Pannel, told him and his Fellow-Servant, that he himself had concealed the lesser (or shorter) Gun, that used to stand at the End of the Girdel in the Barn, under the said Girdel, where he thought it would be safe.”

That same Night, and after the Murder was over, two Witnesses have deposed, that they saw Allan Breck Stewart on the Hill above the House of Ballachelish, where he had lodged the Night before, and not far from the Spot where the Murder happened. These were Katharine Mackinnish, Servant to Ballachelish, a Witness called by the Pannel, who says, “ That in the Evening of the 14th of May, she saw Allan Breck Stewart at a Goat-house in the Moor of Ballachelish, after Glenure was killed; and that Allan Breck then asked her, what was the Occasion of the Stir in the Town? and that she told him, Glenure was murdered: And further asked her, who might have committed the Murder? and she told him, she did not know: And farther says, that she told Donald Stewart,” (who is Nephew and Son-in-law to Ballachelish,) “ where she saw Allan Breck; but that she did not tell him to go to the said Allan, nor did he desire her.”

And this Donald Stewart deposes, “ That upon the Evening of Thursday the 14th of May, about Night-fall, Katharine Mackinnish called him out of Ballachelish's House, and informed him, that Allan Breck wanted him, and that he was a little above the House on the Brae (or Hill): That the Deponent went up the Brae, and met Allan Breck, who was then dressed in a great Coat, and a dark short Coat under it, with white metal Buttons: The Deponent told him of the Murder, and said, It could not be but that he, Allan Breck, was about it: To which Allan Breck answered, that he heard of the Murder, but had no Hand in it: To which the Deponent replied, he did not believe him:—That the said Allan Breck further said, he believed he would be suspected of the Murder; and upon that Account, and as he was a Deserter formerly from the Army, it was necessary for him to leave the Kingdom.”

The Events of Friday the 15th May last, immediately following the Murder committed on the Evening of Thursday, do no less merit your Attention, and these begin very early on that Day; for John Macdonald of Glenco deposes, “ That on Friday the 15th of May last, the said Allan Breck Stewart came again to the Deponent's House at Carnock, at Three or Four o'Clock in the Morning, and knocked at a Window when the Family were all in Bed; that the Deponent went to the Door of his House, and there saw Allan Breck, who gave him the first Notice he had of Glenure's being murdered the Evening before in the Wood of Lettermore; and told him, that he was to leave the Country, and to go the Moor-road leading to Rannoch; and came to take Leave of the Deponent and his Step-mother, who is a Sister of Ardshiel's; and that the Deponent did not ask Allan Breck any Questions about the said Murder.”

And with Glenco concurs Isobel Stewart his Step-mother, who also got up, and went out with her Stepson, to receive Allan Breck's nocturnal Visit at the Door: And she says, “ That she asked him, what News up the Country? To which he answered, a good deal of News, that Glenure was killed, or shot the Evening before, in the Wood of Lettermore: That he was come to take farewell of the Deponent; for he was to leave the Country; and that she asked him no more Questions about the Murder, tho' she asked him to come into the House; but he answered, he would not stay.”

Upon this Incident it is an obvious Reflection, that neither the Pannel's Sister, the Lady Glenco, nor her Son, judged it necessary to ask any Question of Allan Breck about the Murder, which he now related to them, as what had happened a few Hours before he came thus unseasonably and abruptly to take Leave: These Circumstances superseded the Question as superfluous, who it was that did it?

About Ten o'Clock in the Forenoon of this same Friday the 15th, Donald Stewart, the Nephew and Son-in-law of Ballachelish, deposes, “ That he met James Stewart, the Pannel, in Duror, not far from his own House; and that, upon the Deponent's regretting that such an Accident, as Glenure's Murder, should happen in the Country; the Pannel joined with him, and said, that he was informed, that one Serjeant More, alias John Cameron, had been threatening Harm to Glenure in France; but did not inform the Deponent who told him so: And further deposes, that, to his Knowledge, Serjeant More has not been in Appin these ten Years past.”

Now this very Donald Stewart, who is a Friend and Neighbour of the Pannel's, had, as you have heard, the Night before said to Allan Breck himself, that he was surely the Murderer, which was the Sense and Opinion of the whole Country; and yet here it is very remarkable, that, when the Thing was recent, and as somebody must have done it who was likely to be capable of such an Enormity, this Pannel, for want of a better Shift, is endeavouring to start a very improbable Hypothesis, and to throw the Suspicion on this Serjeant More Cameron, which, as it was destitute of any Foundation in Truth, gained no Sort of Credit or Belief; and you are to consider, Gentlemen, if it could be started by the Pannel, at this Time, for any other Purpose than to divert the Attention and the Suspicions of Mankind from his Friend Allan Breck.

The same Day about Twelve o'Clock, Alexander Stewart, travelling Packman in Appin, and first Cousin to Allan Breck, deposes, “ That the Pannel desired him to go to Fort-William to William Stewart, Merchant there, and get from him five Pounds, or five Guineas; and told the Deponent, that his Friend Allan Breck was about to leave the Country, as there were Troops coming into it, and that he might be suspected of Glenure's Murder; and that it was incumbent upon him, the Pannel, to supply the said Allan Breck with Money; and the Pannel desired the Deponent to tell the said William Stewart, that he must find him Money, tho' he should borrow it from twenty Purses; and also to tell him to give Credit in five Pounds Sterling to John Breck Maccoll, Bouman to Appin at Koalisnacoan, in case he came to demand such a Sum: That, in Consequence of this Message, he went to Fort-William, where he arrived early in the Evening, met William Stewart,

“ Stewart, delivered his Message; that William Stewart told him, he had not Money; but that next Morning he would give him his Errand.”

William Stewart himself, who received this Message, deposes, “ That it was about Ten o’Clock Forenoon, or betwixt Ten and Twelve, that he saw the Packman at Fort-William; and his Wife swears it was about Mid-day;” and, if they are both in the right, the Packman himself must have been mistaken, when he says, that he was dispatched by the Pannel from Aucharn, so late as about Noon that Day; of which Circumstance I shall hereafter have Occasion to take some Notice.

William Stewart further deposes, “ That, at this Time, he asked the Packman, if he had come by the Road where that unlucky Murder of Glenure had happened? and the Packman told him, he did; but the Deponent did not ask him who was suspected for it, nor had any other Conversation on that Subject, there being a great many People present in the Shop at the Time.” But this Apology notwithstanding, (for all the People in the Shop at Maryburgh would have been ready to listen to News about such an uncommon Event,) this William Stewart; who was so well acquainted with the Cause of Difference betwixt the Pannel and Glenure, being so little inquisitive on this Occasion of receiving a Message from the Pannel the Day after the Murder happened, seems to be no otherwise accountable, than by the Supposition that he knew so well who were Glenure’s Enemies at that Time; that it was improper or unnecessary for him to be inquisitive about the Authors of his Murder.

Dugald Maccoll, the Pannel’s Servant, deposes, “ That, about Four o’Clock in the Afternoon of this Friday the 15th of May last, the Pannel desired the Deponent to carry the Arms from the Houses (at Aucharn) and hide them in the Moor; that accordingly the Deponent, and John Beg Maccoll, took the foresaid large Gun from the Back of the Sheep-house under the Thatch, and the said four Swords from under the Thatch of the Barn; and found the Gun that used to stand in the Barn under the Girnel, where the said Allan Stewart, the Pannel’s Son, said he hid it, and carried them to the Moor, and hid them in the Hole of a Rock above the Peat-mofs: That the large or Spanish Gun, that stood in the Brew-house, was charged with Powder and small Drops; and that there was no Shot in the small or lesser Gun, that used to stand at the End of the Girnel in the Barn: That they overtook Katharine Maccoll, Servant to the Pannel, in the Brae above the House of Aucharn, with a Pock or Sack, and something in it, under her Arm. The Deponent asked her, what she had got in the Sack? to which she answered, that it was Allan Breck’s Cloaths, and that she was going to hide them; and the Deponent, and the said John Beg Maccoll, saw her hide the Sack in which the said Cloaths were.”

This is confirmed by the Oath of John Beg Maccoll, the other Servant, who says, “ they were desired by the Pannel’s Wife to hide the Arms better,” (i. e. than they had done the Night before;) and by the Oath of Katharine Maccoll, who says, “ That, upon the Evening of this Friday, her Mistress, the Pannel’s Wife, put up a blue Coat and red Waistcoat, with something else, into a Sack, and delivered them to the Deponent, desiring her to hide them some way without: That her Mistress did not tell the Deponent to whom the Cloaths belonged, but that the Deponent thought the said Coat and Waistcoat were Allan Breck’s: And she adds, that, some time in Summer last, after the above Period, Solomon Bane Maccoll, Servant to the Pannel, told the Deponent, that the said Mrs. Stewart, Spouse to the Pannel, desired her to conceal what she knew about the above Cloaths, in case she should be asked or examined about them.”

On Saturday the 16th of May, as William Stewart’s Wife hath deposed, “ She being solicitous to have the Cows, bought for her Husband’s Use by the Pannel, towards stocking a Farm they had taken, gave the Packman, his Messenger, three Guineas out of her Purse: And the Packman deposes, that he got the Money from Mrs. Stewart, after he had seen William Stewart himself, on this Saturday the 16th; who told him he would let him go immediately; and that, having got the three Guineas; he forthwith returned to Aucharn; and arrived there in the Evening, near to which Place he found the Pannel a Prisoner; but the Pannel’s Wife, and the Deponent; having had Access to converse with the Pannel apart, the Pannel asked the Deponent, what Money he had brought from Fort-William? and; upon the Deponent’s telling him that he had brought three Guineas, the Pannel pulled a green Purse out of his Pocket, out of which he took two Guineas, and gave them to his Wife, who delivered them immediately to the Deponent; and the Pannel desired that the five Guineas should be sent to that unhappy Man, meaning Allan Breck, to see if he could make his Escape; and pitched upon the Deponent, as a Person that should go with the Money.—That soon after the Pannel was carried off by a Party to Fort-William; and Mrs. Stewart told the Deponent, that he would find Allan Breck in Koalisnacoan; and, some time after Night-fall, the Deponent got his Supper at Aucharn, and then the Pannel’s Wife carried the Deponent to the Back of the Brew-house, where there lay a Sack, out of which the said Mrs. Stewart took a blue Coat, red Waistcoat, black Breeches, a Hat and some Shirts, all which she delivered to the Deponent, ordering him to go with the Cloaths and Money to Koalisnacoan immediately, and deliver them to John Breck Maccoll, Bouman to Appin, if he did not meet Allan Breck himself; but directed the Deponent not to carry the Cloaths to the Bouman’s House, lest any body should see them; that the Deponent accordingly set out, that same Night, for Koalisnacoan.”

In the mean while, as John Breck Maccoll, Bouman to Appin, hath deposed, “ Upon the Afternoon of this Saturday the 16th of May, as the Deponent was in a Fir-bush (or Thicket) near Aldavoim, at the Foot of the Heugh (or deep hollow Place) of Corrynakeigh in Koalisnacoan, he heard a Whistle, and, upon looking up, saw Allan Breck at a little Distance, beckoning to the Deponent to come towards him; which he did: That, after Salutations, the Deponent told him, he was afraid it was no good Action that occasioned his being in such a remote Place, and at such a Distance from any common Road; that Allan Breck answered, the Place was not very far from a Road: That the Deponent, having heard the Day before of Glenure’s Murder, “ der, charged Allan Breck with being guilty of it:

 “ That Allan Breck asked the Deponent, what he “ had heard about the Murder? That the De“ ponent answered, that he had seen no Person
 “ from the Strath (or Vale) of Appin; but that
 “ two poor Women, that had come up Glenco;
 “ were telling that Glenure was murdered Tuesday “ Evening in the Wood of Lettermore; and that “ two People were seen going from the Place where “ he was murdered; and that he, Allan Breck;
 “ was said to be one of them.

“ That Allan Breck answered, he had no Con“ cern in it; and that, if his Information was “ right, there was but one Person about the Mur“ der; and that, as he was idle in the Country, “ he was sure he would be suspected of it; but
 “ that would give him little Concern; if he had “ not been a Defenter, which would bear harder “ upon him, in case he was apprehended, than “ any thing that could be proved against him
 “ about the Murder.

“ That the Deponent did not believe him; when “ he said he had no Hand in the Murder of “ Glenure; and, not caring to press it much upon “ him, told him, that, as he was already sus“ pected, it was dangerous to have any Intercourse
 “ with him; and pressed him to leave the Place;
 “ lest he should bring the Deponent and his Family
 “ to Trouble.

“ That Allan Breck said; he did not doubt but “ that the Family of Ardshiel would be suspected
 “ of the Murder, and it was probable the Pannel,
 “ and Allan Stewart his Son, might be taken into “ Custody about it; and that he, Allan Breck,
 “ was afraid Allan Stewart the Pannel's Son's “ Tongue was not so good as his Father's; by “ which Words the Deponent understood, that “ Allan was easier intrapped than the Pannel.

“ And, the Deponent still insisting upon Allan
 “ Breck's leaving that Neighbourhood; the said “ Allan Breck told him, he would not leave the “ Town (as the Witness expresses it, or the Place)
 “ for eight Days, unless some Necessaries he expected “ came to him; and told the Deponent, unless “ some Money came for him before next Morning;
 “ he, the Deponent, must go to Fort-William with “ a Letter; that, though the Deponent refused to “ go, Allan Breck looked about among the Trees,
 “ and finding a Wood-pigeon's Quill, made a Pen
 “ of it, and having made Ink of some Powder he “ took out of a Powder-horn that was in his “ Pocket, he wrote a Letter, which he told the “ Deponent he must deliver to William Stewart, “ Merchant at Maryburgh.

“ And, upon the Deponent's telling him, that “ he would by no Means undertake that, as he “ was informed that every body that went to “ Fort-William was searched, Allan Breck said, it “ was an easy Matter to hide a Letter; the De“ ponent answered, if he was caught upon the “ Streets, what would he do with it? Allan Breck
 “ told him, that the Letter must not be found “ upon him by any Means, and, if he was caught
 “ with the Letter, he must eat it before it was “ found; that the Deponent then told the said “ Allan Breck, that he did not know but he would “ be obliged to go for some Beer next Day to “ Fort-William, in which Case he might possibly “ carry the Letter; but at the same Time told
 “ the said Allan Breck, that, if he should be “ taken up, he would tell all he knew about “ him.

“ That the said Allan Breck desired the De“ ponent to go to Callart, or Glenco's House; for “ a Peck of Meal to him; which the Deponent “ refused; and, at parting, the said Allan Breck
 “ told the Deponent, he would see him next “ Day.”

The Bouman further deposes to the Dress in which he met Allan Breck at this Time; being the black short Coat and Trowsers lying upon the Table, and produced to him, and proved to have been the Property of the Pannel.

Early upon Sunday Morning, the 17th of May last, as both the Packman and the Bouman have deposed; they met near to the Bouman's House;
 whereof the latter at first denied to the Packman; that he had seen Allan Breck; and, upon the other's being surprized at this, and saying, he was informed he would meet Allan Breck there, and had brought some Necessaries for him; and the Bouman inquiring what he had brought? the Packman answered, five Guineas and some Cloaths; and told; that he had a great deal of Trouble in getting the Money; that he had been sent by the Pannel to William Stewart at Fort-William, from whose Wife he got three Guineas, and that the Pannel or his Wife gave him the other two Guineas; and that the Pannel's Wife gave him the Cloaths, and informed him, that Allan Breck was to meet him at that Place; whereupon the Bouman owned to the Packman, that he had seen Breck the Day before, and that he expected these Things, and directed the Packman how he might find Breck, if he would go to a Hill he pointed out to him, near to the Heugh of Corrynakeigh, and whistle once or twice;
 he believed Breck would come to him: But this the Packman declined; telling, that he had slept none for two Nights, and was very much fatigued; and upon this delivered to the Bouman the five Guineas, and told; he had left the Cloaths at some Distance, and would show them to the Bouman when he was going away; and then went to sleep in the Bouman's House.

After the Packman had slept some Hours here, he dined with the Bouman his Landlord, and told him, “ That the Pannel, and Allan his Son, were “ made Prisoners the Evening before, and sent “ to Fort-William; and, upon the Bouman's in“ quiring who was suspected of Glenure's Murder?
 “ the Packman answered, that it was Allan Breck;
 “ and that it was likely the Pannel, and Allan his “ Son, would stand the first Trial for it.” And about Noon this Sunday the Packman went away, without seeing his Cousin Breck, after having pointed out to the Bouman a Fir-tree, at the Root of which he had hid Allan Breck's Cloaths.

The Bouman further deposes, (and indeed every Word of his Testimony merits your Attention, and was given in a most lively; natural; and credible Manner) “ That, after he had gone to Bed upon
 “ the same Sunday Evening, he heard one knocking
 “ at the Window; and, imagining it might be “ Allan Breck, he got up, and went out in his “ Shirt, and saw Allan Breck at a little Distance
 “ from the House; and upon the Deponent's “ coming up to him, Breck asked him, if any “ Message had come for him? The Deponent told “ him, that his Uncle's Son had come with five “ Guineas and some Cloaths: That Allan Breck “ complained there was but little Money, but “ hoped it would do his Business: That the De“ ponent told the said Allan Breck, he was afraid
 “ he would starve among the Heather, and that “ he

“ he was not able to help him: That Allan Breck “ answered, he had no Occasion for Victuals, but “ wanted a Drink very much; upon which the “ Deponent went back to his House, and carried “ out some Whey, or some Milk and Water in a “ Noggin, and the five Guineas, and gave both to “ Allan Breck: That the Deponent then went for “ the Cloaths, which he also gave the said Allan
 “ Breck, which consisted of a blue long Coat, red “ Waistcoat, black Breeches, a Hat, some Stock“ ings and Shirts.

“ That the Deponent told the said Allan Breck,
 “ that the Pannel and his Son Allan were appre“ hended on Account of Glenure's Murder: To “ which Allan Breck answered, that that was no
 “ more than he expected; but it would not signify “ much, as there could be no Proof against him;
 “ but expressed some Apprehension, lest Allan
 “ Stewart, Son to the Pannel, might be betrayed
 “ by his own Tongue.

“ That the Deponent desired the said Allan,
 “ now that he had got all the Necessaries he ex“ pected, to go about his Business; and the said
 “ Allan Breck promised to do so, but told the De“ ponent, that he must meet him, the said Allan “ Breck, next Morning; that he must deliver the “ Deponent the Cloaths he, the said Allan Breck,
 “ had then on, to wit, the black short Coat and “ Trowsers shown to the Deponent in the Clerk's “ Hands, in order to be kept by the Deponent, “ till he delivered them to the Pannel's Wife: That
 “ the Deponent promised to meet the said Allan
 “ Breck next Morning, but did not see him; and “ when the Deponent went out next Morning,
 “ he found the said short black Coat, Trowsers,
 “ and the Noggin in which he had carried the “ Drink to Allan Breck, lying together in the “ Place where the Deponent parted with Allan
 “ Breck the Night before; and that he hath not “ seen the said Allan Breck since.”

On Monday the 18th of May, Allan Breck withdrew, as he had proposed, by a very unfrequented Road, through the Moors, and over the Mountains, to Rannoch; and came that same Day to the House of Allan Oig Cameron in Rannoch, his Uncle, with whom he remained till Wednesday following.
 The Uncle hath said, “ He pressed him earnestly “ to make a clean Breast, and tell him all he “ knew of Glenure's Murder. To which Breck
 “ answered with an Oath, that he had never seen “ Glenure, dead or alive; the Uncle however fre“ quently repeated his Instances, till Breck became “ angry, and the Uncle desisted further Inquiry.”

Four Days after Breck left his Uncle's House, that is, on the 24th of May, “ the Uncle having “ Occasion to be fourteen Miles from his own “ House, (further down the Country) and passing “ by the Side of a Wood, he heard a Whistle from
 “ the Wood, and, looking about, saw Allan Breck,
 “ who then told his Uncle, that his only Fear
 “ was to be apprehended by the Military, as he “ had been a Deserter. The Uncle answered, he “ was very sure the Friends of the Deceas'd would “ procure him his Discharge, if he could discover
 “ the Murderer. And Breck replied, that they “ were at this Time in such Fury and Rage, that “ he was very sure, were he apprehended, he “ would be hanged.”

It is unnecessary that I should resume minutely what the other Witnesses said, who saw Breck
Stewart in Rannoch or Athole, when he passed thro' that Country at this Time; his Appearances bespoke the Situation he was truly in, that of a Male-factor studying to conceal himself, and making his Escape.

It is however material, that you should further observe, that after Breck Stewart had thus disappeared from the Country of Appin, where this Murder was committed, every body in that Country, and in that of Rannoch, thro' which he retired, and in both which he was well known, and had Relations, imputed to him the actual Murder; and to no other Person. You have already heard, that Donald Stewart, the Nephew of Ballachelish, charged him with it to his Face, on the Night of Thursday the 14th, when the Blood of the Deceas'd was hardly yet cold, as the Bouman did on the Saturday following; and, on the Monday following;
Cameron his Uncle discovered the same Belief.
 And I have now to add upon this Head of the Voice of the Country, or the fama vicinia, that Ballachelish elder, who had been his Landlord the Night before the Murder, says, “ That, the “ Morning after the Murder was committed, the “ Deponent really thought, that Allan Breck
 “ Stewart might be the Actor in this Murder, be“ cause he did not return to the Deponent again.”
 And Macinnes, the Ferry-man at Ballachelish, says,
 “ That he heard no body suspected for the Murder
 “ of Glenure, but the said Allan Breck.” And James Mann, Change-keeper in Rannoch, says,
 “ That, before Allan Breck came to his House in “ May last, it was reported in that Country, that “ he was concerned in Glenure's Murder; and “ that he himself suspected him at the Time,
 “ as he came unseasonably, and was wanting “ Provisions.”

There are yet other Circumstances subsequent to the Murder, and to the Pannel's Commitment at Fort-William, that deserve your Consideration with the rest of the Evidence; one of these is deposed by Hugh Maclean, Barber in Maryburgh, who says, “ That one Day being called by the Pannel to “ shave him, he thinks upon a Saturday, the “ Pannel asked him, what News he heard in the “ Town? the Deponent answered, that he, the “ Pannel, was to be carried to Edinburgh on the “ Monday following; whereupon the Pannel said,
 “ that was a Matter that gave him no Concern;
 “ and wished it had happened sooner; and was “ afraid of nothing; but that his Servants might “ be inticed to take Money, and turn against him;
 “ and desired the Deponent, as from him, to tell “ his Servants to say nothing but Truth, to keep “ their Minds to themselves, and he would take “ Care of them; and accordingly the Deponent “ delivered the Pannel's Message, in his own “ Words, to two of his Servants, who were then
 “ in separate Custody in the same Prison; and that “ they were both of the Name of Maccoll.”

Again, Gentlemen, you have heard read, and,
 I dare say, with much Regret, the Examination of the Pannel's Wife and Daughter, taken before the Sheriff upon Oath, wherein they say, “ That “ Allan Breck Stewart came to the Pannel's House
 “ on Monday the 11th, in his French Dress (that “ has been often described) and that he went away
 “ next Morning, after taking Leave of them,
 “ dressed in the same Habit;” and you have heard by what a Cloud of Witnesses it was proved, that, from the Evening of Monday the 11th, till the Morning of Monday the 18th, Allan Breck was seen in no other Dress, than the short Coat and Trowsers belonging to the Pannel, now lying in Court;
 and,

and, by the Pannel's own Servants and the Packman, it has been proved; that Breck's French Cloaths were, by Mrs. Stewart's Order, put into a Sack, and hid in the Moor near the Pannel's House, from thence brought back by the same Servant-Maid, by Order of Mrs. Stewart, and by her delivered to the Packman, by him to be carried to Breck at Koalisnacooan; and that the Maid-Servant, who was employed by her Mistress to hide these French Cloaths, and to fetch them back again, was, by a Message from her, desired to conceal what she knew about the Cloaths, in case she should be asked or examined about them:

These, I think; Gentlemen, are the most material Facts and Circumstances that have been proved before you, which I have resumed in the Order of Time as they happened; with Intent to give you a just View of the Case of the Pannel; whom you are now trying; and I am persuaded, that the Reflections which naturally arise from these Facts, in respect of the Question before you, must have occurred to yourselves, when you heard the Evidence given, and when I have again resumed it; and therefore my Observations to you upon the Whole shall be as few and as short as possible.

I have admitted, that it is incumbent upon me in this Trial, as against James Stewart the Pannel; to make out, that Allan Breck Stewart was guilty of the actual Murder in Question; and I apprehend, that is done to full Conviction, upon these Considerations.

And, first of all, Gentlemen, here has been a very extraordinary and shocking Murder, committed within the County or District of Appin, in the most Northern Part of this County, of a Gentleman who had an Estate and Relations in that Neighbourhood; a Man of a fair Character; who was going about the Duty of his Office, in the King's and the Public Service, intending no Injustice to others, and apprehending no Harm to himself; for he and all his Attendants were unarmed; and yet he is bereaved of his Life, not by an open Enemy, upon a declared or a sudden Quarrel, but basely assassinated and shot behind his Back, by a Person lying in wait and lurking among Trees for that Purpose.

This, Gentlemen, is a very strange and shocking Event; and, as for every Event there must be a Cause, somebody must have done it, and upon some Reason or Temptation, such as it was: And this is not like a Murder committed on the Streets, or on the High-ways leading to a populous City, but in the Corner of a County, where the Deceas'd was himself a Gentleman of Note, and where every body of any Note is known to every body: The Deceas'd, therefore, must have had one or more Enemies fit or capable, or likely to have devised or perpetrated such an Action; and who these are, you have been now for many Hours inquiring.

And, upon the Result of that Inquiry, what Doubt can there be, in the first Place, that Breck Stewart was the Actor? His Character, and his Situation as a Defenter from the King's Service, and now actually listed in the French Service, and in this Country only as a Sojourner for a Visit to his Friends, rendered him the most likely Person then resident in that Country, for being guilty of such a Thing; nay, so much the only Person likely, that the Pannel himself, when he cast about for some other Man on whom the Suspicion of this Guilt might be thrown; mentioned only one Serjeant More Cameron, who is of a Character and Situation very similar to that of Allan Breck; but with this very material Difference indeed; which rendered it impossible for that Solution of the Question to pass; that Serjeant More had not been seen in Appin for several Years past; and surely the absent Wanderer could not do it.

But next, and more closely; the only known Quarrel that any body had with the Deceas'd; was that of this Pannel James Stewart, about his own Removing the last Year, and the Removing of other Tenants of Ardshiel this Year; into which Quarrel his former Pupil or Ward, and his intimate Friend; Breck Stewart; had most vehemently entered, and discovered that on several Occasions; and that he considered it as a Cause for deadly or mortal Hatred; insomuch that the Pannel himself hath declared; "That, if Allan was guilty of the Murder; he believes it behoved to be on Account of the Disturbance given to the Tenants on the Estate of Ardshiel; and knows no other Cause."

And more closely still; you have heard the Evidence of what passed immediately before, and after this Murder; of the Behaviour and Actions of this Breck Stewart; who had formerly displayed his Hatred to the Deceas'd, for this very Cause, frivolous and unjust as it was. On the 10th of May; at Fasnacloch, within a Mile of Glenure's House; he gets Intelligence of Glenure's Motions, and Designs to proceed in removing the Tenants of Ardshiel, when he should return from Fort-William. On Monday the 11th he comes to the Pannel's House, and there lays aside his French Dress, and puts on a Country Dress belonging to the Pannel; and in the same Habit, next Day, sets out to Ballachelish, hard by the Ferry over which the Deceas'd was to return; from thence he goes to visit two Sisters of the Pannel's in the Neighbourhood; he returns to Ballachelish on Wednesday; remains there that Night, and till about Noon next Day; when he takes a Fishing-rod in his Hand, a fit Pretext for going out alone, and for staying some Time; but, soon after; the Fishing-rod was laid aside, and he goes in Pursuit of his real Game; he calls aside the Ferry-man, and inquires if Glenure had yet crossed the Ferry, and being assured he was not, he walks off; and was never again seen about that Ferry, or the House of Ballachelish; but a few Hours after, that same Night, and when the Murder had been committed, he is seen by Katharine Macinnish, the Maid-Servant of Ballachelish, at the Goat-house in the Moor of Ballachelish: And if Donald Stewart speaks true, there also he saw him, and charged him with the Murder. Here was then the Defenter, now a foreign Soldier, and one declared mortal Enemy of the Deceas'd, inquiring for the Deceas'd a little before he passed the Ferry; and, soon after the Murder, found in the Hill, near to the Spot where it happened, and adjoining to the House where he had lodged the Night before; but to which he never returned; but, instead of that, wanders in the Fields; beats up Glenco and his Mother betwixt Three and Four in the Morning; tells them Glenure was murdered, and he was going abroad; takes Leave of them at the Door; retires from thence to a Den in a Desert, the Heugh of Corrynakeigh in Koalisnacooan, where he was to wait for his Baggage and his promised Viaticum; and where he durst not even venture to approach the Bouman's House, except to come to the Door or the Window in the Night; and when he had got these Necessaries he waited for, withdraws, as he proposed, across the Kingdom, over a Tract of Moors and Mountains uninhabited, till he came to his Uncle's House, and is by him, as well as every body else who knew him, reputed and believed to be the Murderer. And I have no Doubt, Gentlemen, but after the Proof of all these Things which you have heard, you must be entirely satisfied, that he was truly such; and, upon that Persuasion, will proceed to the main Question that is directly before you, namely, the Evidence of the Accession of this Pannel to that Murder, which may be summed up in the Articles following.

First of all, That it was the Quarrel of this Pannel against Glenure, that had been only taken up and espoused by Breck Stewart, for which Breck committed the Murder itself, as the immediate Actor; the Quarrel, as you have heard, or the Cause of Offence so highly resented, was, That this Pannel was himself removed from his Possession last Year by Glenure, who at the same Time withdrew from the Pannel, or forbore to employ him in the Office of an Assistant or Sub-factor, which had given him Interest and Influence with the Tenants of Ardshiel; and that this Year he was insisting to remove three or four Tenants, whom the Pannel had lately placed there; in all which Allan Breck had no personal Interest or Concern: A strange Cause of Offence, I admit, to be so highly taken up, and so deeply resented! but every Provocation works, according to the Temper or Turn of Mind of the Person who receives it; and what those of the Pannel were in this Respect, you have heard from the Evidence, and have seen in his Conduct before you, when he himself objected to Stewart in Lagnahaw, as an incompetent Witness against him; for that the Witness bore him capital Enmity, because he, the Pannel, had been instrumental in causing the Witness to be removed from the Possession at Aucharn, in which the Pannel succeeded him; nay, the Pannel carries this Madness so far, as to have threatened Ewan Macintyre and his Relations, or Posterity, (a poor Herd, who had never served the Pannel himself) for no other Offence, than that he engaged to be Herd to Campbell of Ballieveolan, the Tenant who succeeded the Pannel in the Farm of Glenduror, from which he was removed last Year.

The second Article in Proof is, that, in Consequence of the deep Resentment conceived by the Pannel for this supposed Injury of the Removings, he discovered, upon several Occasions previous to this Murder, an Intention or Desire to take away the Life of Glenure: This he expressed to Appin's Bouman in a most inveterate Manner, that he would be willing to crawl upon his Knees to a Window to shoot Glenure: But thereafter he proceeds farther than Expressions; his Conversation with the Maccolls, his own Servants, in the Brewhouse about Christmas last, could be intended for nothing but to instigate them, either by themselves, or by finding out proper Instruments among the common People of Appin, to cut off Glenure: And, when the late Removings came to be in Agitation last Spring, which the Pannel set himself to oppose with all his Might, it appears that his Malice and Fury against Glenure was increased; witness his Conversation with his two Landlords on his Way to Edinburgh, and with Mr. Maclaren of Stirling, his Fellow-Traveller Part of the Way; in which, among other Things, the Pannel told them, that he had actually sent Glenure a Challenge to fight him with Pistols; and told Maclaren, (who says he found the Removing was much at the Pannel's Heart) that, if he should get Relief neither at Edinburgh nor at the British Parliament, he would take the only Remedy that remained. Now, to a Man that laboured under this Distemper of Mind, it was natural or incident, that, after he had returned from Edinburgh in the End of April, with such Degree of Success as to obtain a Sift on his Bill of Suspension; and had some Hopes given him at Edinburgh, that, when the Barons of Exchequer should meet, they would countermand these Removings; when he had called the Tenants together, and acquainted them with these Operations of his on their behalf, and sent them with a Notary, on the 1st of May, to intimate the Sift to Glenure; and when, after this, he learned, on the 11th of May, that Glenure had gone to Edinburgh in his Turn, got the Sift removed, was come back to the Country, and to proceed in the Removings; that, from this fresh Disappointment and Affront, that must lessen him in the Eyes of those Tenants whereof he had assumed to be Protector, the Resentment and Hatred which he formerly bore Glenure should be yet higher inflamed, and drive him on to send out Breck his Emissary to cut off the Gentleman whom they both looked on as their Enemy, in Hopes of Safety to Breck, the Actor, by his getting abroad, where he was to go however; and to himself, the Mandator and Accomplice, by his remaining in Appearance quiet at his own House.

And the Evidence, that in Fact this was the Case, consists of these further Circumstances, of which you have heard the Proof; that the actual Murderer of Glenure, in the Quarrel of this Pannel, and in Resentment of which this Pannel had discovered Designs or Intentions against his Life, when the Quarrel itself was wrought up to the highest Pitch, sets out from the Pannel's House, leaving his own Cloaths and Baggage there, dressed in a Suit of the Pannel's Cloaths fitter for the Purpose, as being less remarkable or distinguished than his own; goes directly and puts himself in the Way of Glenure; passes his Time, whilst he waited for him, visiting the Sisters of this Pannel in that Neighbourhood; and with Stewart of Ballachelish, who was also in the general Interest of the Pannel in Respect of the Removings; retires, when the bloody Deed was done, to a deep Retreat that was not far off; where he remains till this Pannel caused to be sent him his Baggage and a Viaticum of Money, such as he could afford or scrape together, to enable the Assassin to get off.

And that this Aid and Succour was sent in Consequence of a Concert betwixt them, previous to the Murder itself, appears from these Circumstances; that, on the Morning of Thursday, on the Evening whereof the Murder was committed, the Pannel sent an Express to William Stewart at Maryburgh, earnestly pressing him to send him eight Pounds, as the Price of Cows not yet delivered; and it hath not been explained, and far less proved, on the Part of the Pannel, who is a Man of some Credit and Substance, tho' he had then but little Cash in Hand, what other pressing Exigency he then had for an immediate Supply of Money, when he was living upon his own Farm at Aucharn; he has not shewed you, that he had accepted a Bill payable on Friday the 15th of May, or the the Term of Whitsunday this Year, or that he was under Distress of any kind, that required such immediate Supply.

Again, as the Messenger of Thursday brought back no Cash, there is another sent on Friday, being the Packman, the Cousin-german of Breck Stewart himself, who carried two Commissions from the Pannel: First, That by all Means he should send him five Guineas, and this, tho' William Stewart should borrow it from twenty Purfes; and, 2dly, To tell William Stewart to give Credit in five Pounds Sterling to John Maccoll, Bouman to Appin at Koalifnacooan, in case he came to demand such a Sum; the Pannel at the same Time telling the Packman, when he gave him this Message, that Allan Breck was about to leave the Country; that he might be suspected of Glenure's Murder; and that it was incumbent upon him, the Pannel, to supply Allan Breck in Money.

Now, Gentlemen, to this Message from the Pannel to his Friend William Stewart, by the Cousin of Breck Stewart, you are to join another corresponding Circumstance deposed by the Bouman, to which I must call for your particular Attention; for, in relating what passed betwixt him and Allan Breck on the Afternoon of Saturday the 16th, he swears, "That Allan Breck then told him, he must remain there, till some Necessaries he expected came to him; and that, unless some Money came for him before next Morning, he, the Bouman, must go to Fort-William with a Letter, which Allan Breck then wrote to William Stewart, Merchant at Maryburgh." Does not this as plainly speak out, rebus ipsis & factis, the Concert betwixt the Pannel and Allan Breck, before they parted, as if you had heard it from Witnesses present at their Conference? Breck was setting out upon an Exploit, which, if performed, it would require a little Money, of which he, it appears, was then destitute, or very scarce, to carry him off the Country; the Pannel himself was not then in Cash; but the Assurances he gave to Breck must have been, that, without Loss of Time, he, the Pannel, would send the Money directly to Breck at Koalifnacooan, or otherwise send him Credit upon his, the Pannel's, Friend and Correspondent, William Stewart, Merchant in Maryburgh. Their respective Actions correspond exactly with this Concert, and are unaccountable without supposing it. On Friday the Pannel sends to William Stewart for five Guineas in Cash, and an Order to give Credit to Appin's Bouman for five Pounds more, in case he should call for it. On Saturday, Allan Breck being with this Bouman, at a Place distant from the Pannel, tells the Bouman, that unless Money came for him before next Morning, he, the Bouman, must go to Fort-William with a Letter, which Breck then wrote to the said William Stewart, Merchant at Maryburgh; and such a Letter, that Breck tells the Bouman, if he was caught with it, he must eat it before it was found upon him.

These Circumstances are so pinching against the Pannel, upon the capital Point now in Issue, that he has made an Attempt to prove an Answer or Solution of this Difficulty, and that by bringing Katharine Macinnish, then Servant to Ballachelish, to depose, That when she met Allan Breck at the Goat-house upon Thursday Night, "the said Allan desired her to tell Donald Stewart in Ballachelish to go to the Pannel, and desire him to send the said Allan Money;" and that she delivered this Message to Donald Stewart that same Night.

Again, this Donald Stewart hath deposed, not that Katharine Macinnish delivered him any such Message from Allan, but, "That she called him out, and told him that Allan Breck wanted him, and was a little above the House in the Brae or Hill, where the Deponent went and met Allan Breck, who then told the Deponent, he was going immediately to leave the Kingdom, and was going then for Koalifnacooan; and desired the Deponent to acquaint the Pannel that he was gone to that Place, and desired him, if possible, to send him Money there; and the Deponent then promised to acquaint James Stewart of the above Message." And this Donald Stewart further deposes, "That, after his Conversation with the Pannel about Serjeant More, he delivered the above Message from Allan Breck to the Pannel; and that the Pannel did not say whether he was to send the Money or not: That this Conversation happened about Ten o'Clock in the Forenoon of Friday the 15th of May last; and that there was no body present."

And, as I think the only plausible Thing proved for Defence of the Pannel, consists of these two Testimonies I have just repeated, I must beg your Attention, Gentlemen, to the Remarks I have to offer upon them, that you may be the better able to discern what Degree of Credit or Effect they deserve, or whether they deserve any at all.

And, first of all, this Donald Stewart is Nephew and Son-in-law to Ballachelish, and lives in Family with him; and it appears the whole Family are in the general Interest of the Pannel; for John Stewart the younger of Ballachelish, the Brother-in-Law of this Donald, hath deposed, "That, in the Time of the Spring-Circuit in this Place in May last, he was summoned to be of the Jury; but that, at the earnest Request of the Pannel, that he should be present with a Notary at the Removing of the Tenants from the Estate of Ardshiel, he was going on that Errand to the Pannel's House, but returned to Appin, upon hearing of the Murder committed that Day;" and has further deposed, "that he was in Edinburgh in August last, and was present at Consultations of the Pannel's Lawyers and Agents touching his Defence:" You are therefore to weigh the Credit due to a single Witness of that Family, swearing to a Fact or Conversation betwixt the Pannel and him when there was no body present, that they have judged material to be proved for the Pannel.

2dly, I have already observed to you, in resumming the Evidence of these two Witnesses, the Son-in-law and the Servant-Maid of Ballachelish, that there is a manifest Discrepancy between them, tho' it is not a long Time since the Fact they depose to happened, and it hath ever since been the Subject of Attention and Conversation in the Country where they live; for the Maid says, "She received the full Message from Allan Breck, and delivered it to Donald Stewart; and that she did not desire Donald to go up to Allan in the Hill, nor did Allan Breck desire her to send Donald to him there:" And yet Donald swears, "That the Maid informed him, that Allan Breck wanted him, and told him where Breck was; and that Breck himself gave him the Message to be delivered to the Pannel; which he delivered accordingly about Ten o'Clock next Day to

“ the Pannel, whom he met alone in the Fields.” So that the Whole of this Tale, attempted to be proved by these two Witneffes, appears extremely fuspicious, and their Accounts hang not well together.

3dly, Donald Stewart's Tale, if it be true, and if it be also true, that the Packman was not sent away by the Pannel to Fort-William, till about Twelve o'Clock on Friday, might serve to account for, or to have given rise to the Packman's Message on that Day: But how will it serve to account for the former Express sent upon the Morning of Thursday by the Pannel, to the same William Stewart at Maryburgh, to send him down immediately eight Pounds Sterling by the Bearer?

4thly, If it be true, which both William Stewart and his Wife depose, that the Packman came to them at Fort-William, upon Friday betwixt Ten and Twelve, as the Husband says, or about Mid-day, as the Wife says, then the Packman must have been mistaken in the Hour that he was dispatched by the Pannel from his House, when he says, it was about Twelve o'Clock that Day; and if Stewart and his Wife are rather to be believed, that he got to Fort-William by Noon, he must have been dispatched by the Pannel long before Ten o'Clock, when, Donald Stewart says, he delivered Breck's Message to the Pannel.

And, lastly, That which affords a solid and satisfying Reply to the Defence founded on these two Testimonies, of the Son-in-law and Servant-maid of Ballachelish, is this Consideration, That supposing it true, for Argument's sake, which they have sworn as to the Substance, that Breck sent Notice by Donald to the Pannel, that he was going to Koalishnacooan, and wanted Money, how will that account for what was observed a little while ago, “ of the Pannel's writing a Letter “ upon Saturday Afternoon, to be sent by the Bouman to William Stewart at Maryburgh?” For though here be a Tale, I am afraid lately invented by the Pannel, of a Message from Breck to him after the Murder, to tell the Place of his Retreat, and that he wanted Money, he hath forgot to provide Witneffes for proving another Thing, and that is a Message in Return from the Pannel to Breck, to give Breck Notice how the Money was to be found or furnished, namely, by the Pannel's giving Credit to him, or the Bouman, upon William Stewart at Maryburgh; for, without such Notice, how could Breck, from the Bottom of his Heugh in Koalishnacooan, so exactly co-operate with what the Pannel was doing from his own House at Aucharn, as to write a Letter on Saturday to the same William Stewart, Merchant in Maryburgh, to be sent by Appin's Bouman, to which William Stewart on Friday the Pannel sends Breck's Cousin, to bid him give Credit to Appin's Bouman for five Pounds, if he should call for it?

This Circumstance therefore, which is quite unanswered, as well as the Express on Thursday Morning for Money, before the Murder happened, makes the Evidence before-mentioned remain in full Force, the Tales of the Message to the Pannel, mentioned by these two Witneffes, notwithstanding.

There hath been hardly any Thing else proved for the Pannel's Defence, that merits a Reply: It is of no Moment, that this was not the first Time that Breck Stewart made Use of the Pannel's Habit or Cloaths above-mentioned; he had used them once before in the Month of April, when he went to Rannoch, whilst the Pannel was at Edinburgh; but it was not the lefs true, that this Habit was far more commodious for the murderous Purpose he went about, when he left the Pannel's House on Tuesday Morning the 12th of May, than his own French Cloaths would have been.

Again, it is true, that, on the Morning of Thursday, he writes a Letter for a Notary, to take Protefts against the Removings, at the same Time that he writes for the eight Pounds; and his Council have said, that this was pursuing quite another Scheme: But this is by no Means conclusive, to prove his Innocence; he was galled and incensed by these Removings, and his Protest by a Notary, after his Bill of Suspension was refused, would be of very little Avail; and yet he writes for one to attend, to be provided for all Events, as it was a possible Case, that the intended Murder of Glenure might have been prevented, by his going another Road than the common one, or other Accidents.

And as little can it avail the Pannel, that, after he was in Custody, he wrote a Letter to Mr. Macfarlane at Edinburgh, describing Allan Breck, and expressing a Desire that he might be apprehended; for this was a Letter shown to Colonel Crawford, the commanding Officer, and now appears to have been a manifest Dissimulation, when, by the showing of the Pannel's own Defences, he sent Money to Allan Breck in order to help him to escape, on Account, as he says, of his Relation, and having been formerly his Ward or Pupil.

When therefore, Gentlemen, you shall consider and duly weigh the whole Facts and Circumstances proved before you, and which I have now resumed; and when to these I have last mentioned you shall add, that, besides the Cloaths and the Money furnished to Breck, there is a strong presumptive Evidence, that the very lesser or shorter Gun produced before you, and proved to have been the Pannel's, and which is of the wider Bore of the two, was the very Instrument with which the Murder was committed; for none of the Servants saw it upon Thursday Night, when they hid the Arms; and when they saw it on Friday Night, when the Arms were carried up to the Hill, it was empty; and Captain Chapeau and others have deposed, it appeared to them to have been lately fired, when he found it on the 23d of May.

That the Pannel, on the first Notice he received of the Murder being over, discovered an Apprehension that he himself might be brought to Trouble on that Account.

That he made an Attempt, though a very unavailing one, to throw the Suspicion of the Murder upon Serjeant More Cameron, who had not been in that Country for many Years.

That the Pannel, being in Custody, sent a Message by his Barber to his Servants to keep their Minds to themselves, and he would take Care of them.

That his Wife and one of his Children have too strongly discovered their Sense of the Importance of the Article of the Cloaths furnished by the Pannel to Breck, by swearing, that Breck left their House in his own French Cloaths, though the Wife, at least, most certainly knew the contrary.

I say, Gentlemen, when you put all these Things together, you will form your Opinion, and pronounce accordingly, whether this Pannel is, or is not, guilty of Accession to this horrid Murder? In all circumstantial Evidence, there is a Possibility of Innocence, even without supposing any of the Witneffes perjured: For Example, in the Case of Stewart Abercrombie, which you heard mentioned in the Debate on the Relevancy in this Trial; it was urged urged for him; and very truly, that some other Man without a Hat, as well as he was, might have been the Murderer of the Deceased; for there was no Witness who could swear he saw him do it: And in the other Case of Maccowan you heard mentioned, who was convicted, principally, upon a Shirt and Stockings being found in his Possession, which the poor Woman had carried with her from Home; it was possible that Maccowan might have got these Garments immediately, or by Progress, from some other Person who had robbed or murdered the poor Woman. But, in both these Cases, the Pannels were convicted, and suffered accordingly.

And, in the present Case, if, notwithstanding what you have heard, you can believe, that Allan Breck Stewart committed this Murder purely of his own accord, and without any Privity or previous Concert with this Pannel; and the Aid given by the Pannel to carry him off, was out of mere Compassion, and a Resolution first taken after the Pannel had heard of the Murder itself; then surely it will be your Duty to acquit the Pannel; for, better that this Murder, atrocious and scandalous as it is, should remain unavenged by human Justice, than that one innocent Man should suffer.

But, on the other hand, if, upon the whole Evidence, you cannot believe the Pannel innocent, but are convinced in your own Minds, that he has been knowingly accessary to this Murder; then, doubtless, your Duty to God and your Country requires of you to pronounce him guilty.

Mr. BROWN for the Pannel.

Gentlemen of the Jury,

I Appear for the Pannel; and, as this Trial has already taken up a great deal of Time, I shall not follow the honourable and learned Gentleman on the other Side, in some Things which I conceive to be extraneous to the Matter in Issue; but shall endeavour to sum up what I have to say, in as few Words as the Importance of the Case, and Variety of Matters to be considered, will admit of.

As I am at all Times under no small Degree of Concern, as often as I appear in any Case of this Nature; so, I must acknowledge, I am at present under greater Concern than ever I was in any former Case, when I consider the many Disadvantages which this unfortunate Pannel labours under.

In the first Place, I am under the Necessity of entering the Lists with a learned Gentleman, of great Abilities, and of much more Experience in these Matters than I can pretend to.

But, Gentlemen, if I have undertaken what I am not sufficient for, the Fault lies at the Door of the private Prosecutor, who, before the Prosecution was commenced, begun early with pre-engaging the whole Council at the Bar, who had most Experience in these Matters, not with an Intention that they should assist in carrying on the Prosecution, (for many of the Gentlemen who were engaged have not appeared at the Trial) but with an Intention that they might not have it in their Power to appear on the Side of the Pannel.

A just Prosecution scarcely stands in need of an Advocate to support it. What then shall be said of a Prosecution, where the Prosecutor despairs of prevailing otherwise than by depriving the Pannel of those who were most able to defend him?

For my own Part, I chose rather to have it said of me, that I had imprudently undertaken what I was not sufficient for, than that I had uncharitably refused to give any poor Assistance in my Power to a Gentleman, who imagines that I can be in the smallest Degree useful to him.

I might also take Notice of many other Hardships which the Pannel has suffered from close Confinement, during more than four Months, contrary to the great Charter of Liberty in this Part of the Kingdom,—from the unwarrantable Seizure of his Papers without any legal Authority,—and from the Shortness of the Time allowed him for making his Defence: But these Things have been so fully insisted on by the Gentlemen who have spoke on the same Side, that it is unnecessary for me to repeat what has been already said. The Facts have not been denied by the Prosecutor; and as every Man must see at first Sight, what a prodigious Loss it is to a Pannel, to have Access, for so long a Time, denied to every Person who was capable of assisting him in making his Defence, so I must be forgiven to say, that if this Trial was at all proper for a Circuit-Court, (which may be doubted) it ought to have been brought on in the ordinary Form, by way of Presentment, and not summarily in the Form of Criminal Letters. By the former Method, the Pannel would have had upwards of three Months to prepare for his Defence, instead of fifteen Days, which is all the Time the Pannel has had, since the Criminal Letters were executed against him.

But, Gentlemen, there is yet another Disadvantage, which this Pannel labours under, which gives me more Uneasiness than all those I have already mentioned, and which, I must beg Leave to say, I dread more than all the Proof which has been brought against him.

What I mean is an Impression, which has been industriously raised and artfully propagated, as if it were some-how necessary that the Pannel should be found guilty; and as if his being acquitted might bring a Reflection on this Part of the Kingdom.

Gentlemen, I do not expect, nor do I desire, that you should return a Verdict contrary to Evidence: But it is my Duty to put you on your Guard, not to allow yourselves to be carried off by Passion or Prejudice: And tho' I have no Doubt of the Integrity or Honour of any of the Gentlemen to whom I now address myself; yet, upon this Occasion, it is my Duty to say, That if you find the Pannel guilty, either without Evidence, or upon doubtful Evidence, you will thereby bring the Blood of an innocent Person upon your own Heads:—I say, an innocent Person; for every Man is held to be innocent, till such time as he is convicted, not by doubtful, but by legal and complete Evidence.

And, if the Evidence is insufficient, which I am hopeful I shall be able to show, I am under no Apprehension, that your acquitting the Pannel can ever bring any Reflection either upon yourselves or upon your Country. It is the peculiar Happiness of this Part of the Island, that, in capital Cases, the Law makes it necessary, that the whole of the Evidence should be taken down in Writing; and as that has been fairly done in the present Case, the authentic Record will satisfy every reasonable and thinking Person, that the Grounds upon which you have proceeded were solid; and if you have the Approbation of such, you ought to disregard what others may say of you.

Having said so much in the general, I shall now proceed to consider the Crime which has been charged against the Pannel, and the Evidence which has been brought in Support of that Charge. As to the Crime itself, I readily agree with every one of the Gentlemen who have spoke before me, that it is of so atrocious a Nature, that Words can hardly be found, strong enough to express, in proper Colours, its Enormity; and I shall also admit, that it is highly aggravated from the particular Circumstances which have been very properly mentioned by the honourable Gentleman on the other Side. But then, the Prosecutor would do well to observe, that the more atrocious the Crime is, the more natural it is to presume, that the Pannel was not guilty of it. And it is my Duty to put you on your Guard, that a just Indignation at the Heinousness of the Crime may not lead you to condemn without proper Evidence: For, however foul the Crime may be, it is much better that it should escape unpunished, than that an innocent Person should suffer for it.

The Crime charged against the Pannel is, that he entered into a Conspiracy with Allan Breck Stewart to murder Colin Campbell of Glenure by the Hands of the said Allan, and that the Murder was accordingly so committed. And therefore, before the Prosecutor can prevail, it behoves him to prove, not only that the Murder was committed by the Hands of Allan Breck; but also, that the Pannel and he were previously in a Conspiracy to commit the Murder in that Manner.

The Prosecutor pretends not to have brought any direct Evidence of either of these Facts; but the Guilt of both Pannels is inferred from a Variety of Circumstances, which it now belongs to us to consider, so far as is necessary for the Defence of this Pannel.

And here I shall not dispute the general Proposition laid down by my Lord Advocate, "That Crimes may be proved by Circumstances." I admit that any Crime may be so proved; but then I humbly contend, that the Circumstances ought to be such, as necessarily infer the Guilt of the Pannel.

In order that this Matter may appear in its proper Light, I must beg Leave to lay down one general Rule, which admits of no Exception, and ought to be strictly followed in judging of all circumstantiated Evidence; which is, That where any Fact proved against the Pannel, is in its own Nature such, that it will naturally admit either of a good or a bad Construction, that Construction ought always to be received, which is favourable for the Pannel.

This is founded upon the first Principle of natural Justice, which directs us, "To do to others, as we would have them do to us:" And as every one of you would think yourself hardly used, if a bad Construction were put upon any Action of yours, which would naturally bear a good one; the Pannel asks no more, than that you should judge of his Actions by the same Rule.

And here, Gentlemen, I do not mean, that, in a circumstantiated Evidence, it is necessary, that every Circumstance taken separately should be conclusive: If that were necessary, few Crimes could ever be proved. But what I intend is, that, in all Crimes whatever, it is necessary that the Proof should be certain and conclusive; and, as the Law justly rejects all Arguments drawn from Conjectures and forced Consequences, it is not sufficient to convict a Pannel, that he might have been guilty of the Crime charged; but the Proof ought to be such as to leave no Room to doubt, that he was so: And tho' it is not necessary, in a circumstantiated Evidence, that every Circumstance, considered apart, should be conclusive; yet, I conceive, I may lay it down as a certain Principle, that, where the whole of the Circumstances are such, that they might naturally have happened without inferring the Guilt of the Pannel, such Circumstances, however numerous, ought to have no Authority against him.

To apply this Rule to the present Case, I am hopeful, I shall be able to satisfy you, Gentlemen of the Jury, that the Facts charged against the Pannel are either not proved, or they are such, that all of them might have naturally happened; and at the same Time the Pannel be entirely innocent of the Crime of which he is accused.

But, before I proceed to consider particularly the several Articles of the Proof brought against the Pannel, it will be necessary to put you in Mind of some Things which happened previous to the Murder, as these may tend to explain many Things which occur in the Proof, and which shall be afterwards particularly taken Notice of.

You have already heard, from the Gentleman who spoke first on the same Side with me, that, in the Month of February 1749, the deceased Colin Campbell of Glenure was appointed Factor by the Barons of Exchequer, upon the forfeited Estates of Lochiel, Callart, and Ardshiel; and, as the Pannel, who was then Tenant of Part of the Estate of Ardshiel, had always lived in great Friendship with Glenure, and had as fair a Character as any Gentleman in that Part of the Country, the Management of the whole Estate of Ardshiel was committed to him by Glenure, and his Bill was taken for that yearly Rent at which the Estate had been rated after Survey by the Barons of Exchequer, leaving it to the Pannel to apply the Surplus to the Use of Ardshiel's Children. This is proved by several Letters and Receipts produced, and in particular from Glenure's Letter to the Pannel, dated the 11th December 1749, in which he writes as follows: "This Moment I had yours by your Servant, with 20*l.* 18*s.* 5*d.* Sterling, and the Warrant I formerly gave you. Receive inclosed your Note. Your Payments are very good, for which I am obliged to you. I intend, God willing, to be at Edinburgh on, or a Day or two before the 25th current; that is, I intend to set out from this Place this Day, or To-morrow eight Days; and will go by Glasgow, and make no Stop by the Way. Remember Lady Ardshiel's Discharges, and all your other Tackling. I heartily wish you a good Journey."

About the Month of April 1751, Glenure applied to the Pannel to give up the Farm of Glenduror, which he then possessed, to Mr. Campbell of Ballievelan, Glenure's particular Friend, who, it appears, had offered an additional Rent; and, tho' the Pannel had not been legally warned, and so was not obliged to remove for that Year; yet he readily agreed with Glenure's Proposal, removed from the Possession, and took from Mr. Campbell of Airds the Farm of Aucharn, where his Family now resides; but he still continued to uplift the Rents as formerly from the Tenants of Ardshiel, and likewise to possess a small Farm called Lettermore, which he had sublet at about 6*l.* Sterling per Annum.

In the Month of April last, Glenure executed a Warning, and obtained a Decree of Removing, against against no less than five or six Tenants of the Estate of Ardshiel, and also against as many Tenants of the neighbouring Estates of Lockiel and Callart, decerning them to remove from their respective Possessions as at the Term of Whit Sunday last; and, among the rest, the Pannel's two Sub-tenants in the Farm of Lettermore were also decerned to remove.

This was complained of as a very great Hardship in that Part of the Country, more especially as the Tenants in Possession paid their Rents regularly, and were willing to take the Oaths to the Government; and altho' the Pannel's private Interest in the Matter was not great, yet, as he foresaw that a Procedure so severe might be attended with disagreeable Consequences, he went and often expostulated with Glenure upon the Subject; but he having persisted in his Resolution, the Tenants upon all the three Estates transmitted Memorials of their Case, to be laid before the Barons of Exchequer; and, as the Pannel was then occasionally at Edinburgh, about some private Affairs of his own, he presented the Memorials to one of the Barons, who disapproved greatly of Glenure's Conduct, but could do nothing towards putting a Stop to the Removings; as a Quorum of the Barons could not be held till the next Exchequer Term; though at the same time, he undertook to represent the Case to the whole Barons, adding, that he made no doubt but they would give an Order to the Factor to continue the Tenants in Possession; which in Part appears from a Letter wrote by the Pannel to Charles Stewart, Writer, dated 27th April 1752, and referred to in the Inventory subjoined to the Libel, in the following Words: " Yesternight I arrived here, after a very troublesome Jaunt; and as the Barons could not be got together, put it out of my Power to procure an Order for our Factor; but Baron Kennedy, who I found very kind, and seemed to sympathize much with the Tenants Case, gave it as his private Opinion, that they should sit their Possessions for this Year, and that all Justice would be done them; and thought they should take a Protest against the Factor's Proceeding in a Body, I mean the Mamore and Appin Tenants. The same Advice I had from all I advised with, who were not a few, and all were of the same Mind, that the Tenants had a good Chance, once their Affair came before the Barons."

Upon this the Pannel advised with Council, how the Tenants might be kept in Possession till the Exchequer Term, and by their Advice applied to the Court of Session for a Suspension of the Removing; and, a Bill of Suspension having been accordingly presented, a Sift was obtained, and the Bill ordained to be answered; which Sift was intimated to Glenure, upon the Pannel's Return to the Country: But, Answers having been thereafter made to the Bill by Glenure, who had gone to Edinburgh for that Purpose, as the Pannel had, through Ignorance of the Forms, carried off with him the principal Bill with the Sift upon it, the Answers were advised without the Bill, and the Bill refused by an Interlocutor the 5th of May last.

Upon Saturday the 9th of May, Glenure returned to his own House in the Country; and so soon as it came to be publickly known, that the Bill of Suspension was refused, and that upon Friday the 15th of May, being the Term-day, Glenure was to execute the Warrant of Ejection against the Tenants of Ardshiel, it was resolved, in Consequence of the Advice the Pannel had got from Edinburgh; that the Tenants should take a Protest against Glenure, in case he should attempt to put his Warrant of Ejection in Execution; and that they should continue in Possession notwithstanding thereof, till such Time as their Case should be fully heard before the Barons, and that their Directions should be known.

Accordingly, in Prosecution of this Plan, upon Tuesday the 12th of May, the Pannel wrote a Letter to Alexander Stewart, Writer in Glenettie, desiring him to come and act as Notary to the Protest intended to be taken against Glenure; and at the same Time he prevailed upon two Gentlemen of Character in the Neighbourhood, viz. John Stewart younger of Ballachelish, and James Stewart younger of Fajnacloch, to undertake to attend as Witnesses; and assist at taking the Protest; but the said Alexander Stewart, the Notary, having happened to be out of the Way, when the Pannel's Servant went to his House, and this having been notified to the Pannel upon the Morning of Thursday the 14th of May last, (the Day on which Glenure was murdered) he dispatched a Servant of his own very early, with a Letter to Charles Stewart, Writer at Auchintour, informing him of the Disappointment he had met with by the Absence of the Notary to whom he had first wrote, and desiring him (the said Charles) to come to his House with all possible Expedition that Night; in order to act as Notary to the Protest intended to be taken against Glenure next Day.

In this Situation Matters stood upon Thursday the 14th of May last, being the Day upon which this most execrable Murder was committed; and therefore, the Facts previous to the Murder being adjusted, I shall now proceed to consider the Evidence which has been brought for proving both Branches of the Libel; 1st, That the Murder was committed by the Hands of Allan Breck; and, 2dly, That it was committed in Consequence of a previous Conspiracy betwixt him and the Pannel.

And here it is highly necessary that you should be greatly on your Guard, to distinguish accurately between the Facts charged against the Pannel, and those charged against Allan Breck; which is the more necessary, as in the Libel the Facts are so intermixed, that it is no easy Matter to distinguish the one from the other. And though I must admit, that the learned Gentleman on the other Side has been very candid in summing up the Evidence; yet I could have wished he had been more careful to distinguish the Proof, so far as it relates to the different Pannels charged in the Libel.

With regard to the first Question, concerning the Guilt of Allan Breck, I shall not take up much of your Time; for, though it is incumbent upon the Prosecutor to prove that the Murder was committed by the Hands of Allan Breck, yet it is not absolutely necessary for the Pannel to maintain the Innocence of that Person; as it is of no Importance for the Prosecutor to prove that the Murder was committed by Allan Breck, unless he shall also prove that the Pannel was accessary to it.

And therefore I shall very shortly state the Objections against this Part of the Evidence, leaving it to your own Consciences to determine you, how far the Evidence brought by the Prosecutor is sufficient.

And the first Circumstance charged in the Libel is, " That, upon Monday the 11th of May, Allan Breck having been informed that Glenure had " gone

“ gone that Day to Lochaber, and was to return
 “ by the Ferry of Ballachelish upon the Thursday
 “ after, he had laid aside his French Cloaths,
 “ which were remarkable, and had disguised
 “ himself in a black Coat and Trowsers belonging “ to the Pannel, with an Intention to commit the “ Murder.”

But, in the first Place, it is not proved, that, upon Monday the 11th of May, Allan Breck had been particularly informed of Glenure's Motions; for though it does indeed appear, from the Depositions of some of the Witnesses referred to by the Prosecutor, that Allan Breck had heard of Glenure's having set out that Day for Lochaber, yet it does not appear that he had got any Information what Road he was to take, or at what Time he was to return: None of the Witnesses have said so, and, in Cases of this Nature, no Fact ought to be presumed without proper Evidence.

2dly, Though it is proved that Allan Breck did change his Cloaths upon the Day libelled, yet it is not natural from thence to presume, that this was done with an Intention to commit the Murder. It clearly appears from the Depositions of the Witnesses relative to this Article, “ That, upon “ former Occasions, Allan Breck had been in use
 “ of laying aside his French Cloaths, and putting “ on the Dress of the Country.” And, in particular, it is proved by the Depositions of the three Maccolls, (who cannot be said to have been partial for the Pannel,) “ That he had on these very “ Cloaths belonging to the Pannel, when he went
 “ to Rannoch in the Month of April last:” And therefore, as it was no new Thing, but a common Practice of Allan Breck's to lay aside his French Cloaths, and put on the Dress of the Country, it is wrong in the Prosecutor to lay hold of this Circumstance, which is in itself innocent, and to wrest it into an Argument against the Pannel; especially as it appears from the Depositions of the same three Witnesses, “ That Allan Breck wrought
 “ with them in the Potatoe-field the greatest Part “ of that Afternoon upon which he came to the “ Pannel's House,” which was a very natural Reason for laying aside his French Cloaths, as not being proper for that Purpose.

The next Circumstance charged against Allan Breck is, “ That, for some Days before the Murder happened, he had hovered near to the Ferry
 “ of Ballachelish, at which it was known Glenure
 “ was to pass; that, during that Period, he had “ been twice at the House of Ballachelish, twice
 “ at the House of Glenco, and once at the House

But, in the first Place, it is not proved, that Allan Breck knew that Glenure was to pass at the Ferry of Ballachelish; and therefore it is ridiculous to talk of hovering or lying in wait, when it was not known at what Ferry Glenure was to pass.

2dly, If Allan Breck had known that the Defunct was to pass at Ballachelish, and had intended to lie in wait, he would have kept close at Ballachelish, and would not have gone either to Callart or Glenco, which are each of them at three Miles Distance, the first on the North Side, and the other on the South Side of the Ferry. It is much more natural to presume, that Allan Breck went to these Places with an Intention to visit his Friends who lived there. And this is another Instance where the Prosecutor wrests a Circumstance, which is in itself innocent, into an Argument against the Pannel.

The third and strongest Circumstance against Allan Breck is, “ That he absconded that very “ Night upon which the Murder happened; and

But this Circumstance has been in like Manner obviated by the Proof brought in Behalf of the Pannel. It is clearly proved, that, in the Year 1745, Breck was a Soldier in the Regiment commanded by Colonel Lee; that, immediately after the Battle of Preston, he deserted to the Rebels; that he remained with them till they were happily defeated at the Battle of Culloden; and that, since that Time, he had been in the French Service: And therefore, as Breck must have foreseen, that, upon the Murder of Glenure, a very strict Search would be made, it was very natural for him, though innocent, to abscond and leave the Country; and accordingly it appears from the Proof, that he gave this Account of the Matter to every Person whom he had Occasion to converse with upon that Subject; and therefore, as this Circumstance, as well as all the rest, may naturally bear a Construction favourable for the Pannel, it is wrong in the Prosecutor to put a bad Construction upon an Action which will naturally bear a good one.

The only other material Circumstance from which the Guilt of Allan Breck is inferred, is, that, before the Murder, he had, upon different Occasions, used threatening or resentful Expressions against the Defunct: But, as it seemed to be admitted by the learned Gentleman on the other Side, that Expressions alone were not sufficient to infer the Crime, I shall have Occasion to consider more particularly the Effect of such Expressions, under the second Branch of my Argument, which properly relates to this Pannel.

And whatever may be your Opinion with regard to Allan Breck, I must humbly contend, that there is no Sort of Evidence that the Pannel, now at the Bar, was in any previous Conspiracy to commit this heinous Murder; and, as far as the Nature of the Thing could admit of it, the Pannel has proved the Improbability of his being any Way accessory to it.

In the first Place, the Character of the Pannel goes far to protect him from any Suspicion of this Kind: Though that Part of the Evidence was not taken down in Writing, yet he has proved by Witnesses, beyond all Exception, and can appeal to your own Consciences for the Truth of it, that his Character in private Life was never stained by any dishonourable Action. Is it possible then to believe, that one of such a Character can at once plunge himself into the deepest Guilt, by committing the Crime of Assassination, which is of all others the most shocking to human Nature?

2dly, The Pannel's Guilt is still the more improbable, as he could not possibly propose any Benefit by it. He was a Man of too good Understanding, not to see that Glenure's Place as Factor would soon be supplied; that the strictest Search would be made for the Authors of this enormous Crime; and that his Family, as being nearly connected with the forfeited Person, would be first suspected: Is it possible, that, in such Circumstances, it could enter into the Imagination of the Pannel, to commit a Crime of so black a Nature, when he could not only reap no Benefit by it, but when it behoved necessarily to involve his own Family in inevitable Distress and Ruin?

But, 3dly, There is another Circumstance which renders it incredible that the Pannel could have been in any previous Conspiracy to commit this Murder; for it is clearly proved, that at that very Time he was pursuing quite contrary Measures; that he had provided himself, and was endeavouring to provide the other Tenants, in other Possessions; and it is further proved, not only by verbal, but also by written Evidence, which cannot lie, That his Intention was to proceed in a legal Way, by taking a Protest against Glenure upon the Term-day, in case he should attempt to put his Removing in Execution. This is clearly proved by the Pannel's Letter to Charles Stewart, the Notary, dated the 14th of May, being that very Day on which Glenure was murdered: Which Letter ought to have the greater Weight, as it is not produced by the Pannel, but by the Prosecutors, the same having been recovered by them out of Charles Stewart's Hands.

In this Letter (which greatly deserves your Attention) the Pannel writes to Charles Stewart, That, by the Negligence of his Servant, he had been disappointed of the Notary he first intended, "which he reckons a very great Misfortune." And then the Letter concludes in these Words: "The next best Thing I can think of is, that you be here this Night, without fail, if you should hire a Horse; as every Thing must go wrong, without a Person can act, and that I can trust. This is such a Tie upon all the Members of our Family, that I'll press you no further, but do depend on seeing you once this Night."

It is indeed true, that this Letter does not particularly mention that the Pannel's Intention was to take a Protest against Glenure; but then, this is fully explained by the Depositions of the Witnesses; particularly by the Oath of Charles Stewart, who deposes, "That he received a second Letter from the Pannel, of Date the 14th of May, desiring him to attend the next Day at the Ejection; but he declined the same, because he did not care to disoblige Glenure."

This is further confirmed by the Oath of John Beg Maccoll, the Person who carried the Letter, who deposes, "That, upon Thursday the 14th of May last, the Pannel gave a Letter to the Deponent, to be delivered to Charles Stewart, Notary Public at Maryburgh; and told the Deponent, that the Letter was to make or cause Charles Stewart come to the Country of Appin to protest against Glenure, in case he had not a sufficient Warrant to remove the Tenants of Ardshiel: That the Pannel desired the Deponent to make all possible Dispatch, and desire John Breck Maccombie at Kintalline, and John More Maccoll, Servant to the Pannel, who was then at Kintalline, to ferry the Deponent from Kintalline to Onich, being much shorter than the Ferry of Ballachelish: That he set out from Aucharn about Seven or Eight o'Clock in the Morning, and made all the Dispatch he could to Fort-William, where he arrived about Twelve o'Clock. Deposes, That, when he came to Fort-William, he delivered the Letter he got from the Pannel to William Stewart, Merchant in Maryburgh, who told him that Charles Stewart, the Notary, was not at Home, he having gone to the Braes of Lochaber in the Morning; and told the Deponent, that he, the said William, had wrote to the Pannel in the Morning, and that there was a Notary along with Glenure, who would serve the Pannel, as well as Glenure."

And it is further proved, that the Pannel had gone so far as to provide proper Witnesses to be present at taking that Protest, as appears from the Deposition of John Stewart younger of Ballachelish, who deposes, "That, in the Time of the Spring Circuit in this Place, in May last, he was summoned to be of the Jury; but, at the earnest Request of the Pannel, that he, the Deponent, should be present with a Notary at the Removing of the Tenants from the Estate of Ardshiel, he was going, on that Errand, to the Pannel's House; but returned to Appin, upon hearing of the Murder of Glenure committed that Day."

And this Observation, that the Pannel had at this Time no Thoughts of the execrable Murder of which he is now accused, is further confirmed from William Stewart's Letter to the Pannel, dated the same 14th of May, recovered by the Prosecutors from out of the Pannel's Repositories, which concludes in the following Words: "I find Glenure has a mind to eject the Tenants; but they ought to be deaf to it, and, at all Risques, keep Possession, as they are in good Hands, as it must end in the Exchequer; so that I beg they keep Possession: As there will be no Troops, they ought to repel Force by Force, and take their Hazard of the Consequences; as it can be no more than violent Profits, which is often modified in inferior Courts, besides the Exchequer, who will insist for no such; their chief Design being to have a Set of peaceable Tenantry, and a well-paid Rent: So that the People ought to be assured they will be supported as far as Law will, which, no doubt, must determine in their Favours."

From the Depositions of these Witnesses, joined with the Letters which have been read in your Presence, it is incontestably proved, That the Plan concerted between the Pannel and his Friends went no further, than to take a Protest against Glenure, in case he should attempt to execute his Warrant of Ejection against the Tenants; or, at furthest, that the Tenants should continue in Possession notwithstanding the Warrant, and run the Risque of violent Profits. And it is of great Importance in the present Argument, that these two Letters are dated upon the Morning of that very Day on which the Murder happened; a Circumstance utterly inconsistent with the Libel, which has no other Footing to stand upon than this, That the Pannel and Allan Breck had concerted the Murder previous to the Time when Allan Breck changed his Cloaths; which, as has been already observed, was four Days before the Murder.

Amidst such glaring Improbabilities, it would require the strongest Evidence to convict the Pannel. And this leads me to consider the several Facts, according to the Order in which they are laid in the Indictment.

And the first Thing charged in the Libel is, that the Pannel had conceived an unjust Resentment against the Deceased, for three different Reasons: 1st, Because he had accepted the Factory of the Estate of Ardshiel; 2^{dly}, Because he had removed him from the Farm of Glenduror; and 3^{dly}, Because that, in the Month of April 1752, he had taken Measures for removing certain other Persons, who were Tenants and Possessors of that Estate.

The first is clearly disproved by Letters and Discharges under the Hand of the Deceased, which have been read in your Presence; and from which it appears, that, for several Years after the Date of the Factory, the Deceased and the Pannel were in perfect good Terms; and that Glenure had such Confidence in the Pannel, that he had employed him to uplift the Rents from the other Tenants.

The second Ground of Resentment is disproved by the Oath of Alexander Stewart of Innernabyle, who deposes, "That the Time when the Pannel removed from Glenduror, he told the Deponent, that he had had a Meeting with Ballicveolan, and that there was a Compromise betwixt them: That he did not hear of any Warning, but that he removed voluntarily."

And therefore the only Ground of Resentment which remains, is, That the Defunct had taken Measures for removing some of the other Tenants of the Estate, as at the Term of Whitsunday last: And tho' it may be true, that the Pannel has, upon different Occasions, complained, in strong Terms, of the Hardship of removing these Tenants; yet it is impossible to believe, that so trifling a Cause of Resentment could have so strong an Effect, as to push on the Pannel to the barbarous Murder of which he is now accused; more especially, when it is considered, that he is no ways related to any of these Tenants, and that none of them are so much as of the same Name.

The Prosecutor has been pleased to lay great Stress upon certain foolish Expressions alledged to have been used by the Pannel upon the Subject of these Removings.

It must occur to every Man, how extremely dangerous a Proof of this Kind is: There are very few Witnesses who can repeat exactly the Particulars of any Conversation, and still fewer who can recollect these Particulars at any Distance of Time. In such Cases, much may depend upon the Tone of Voice, or Gesture of the Person who speaks; and the Variation of a Circumstance may alter the Meaning of the whole Expression.

Besides, there is an obvious Disadvantage which this Pannel labours under, and of which, in the present Case, he has no small Reason to complain; which is, That the particular Expressions charged against him are not taken into the Libel, neither are the Circumstances of Time and Place mentioned; by which the Pannel is deprived of the Opportunity he ought to have had of bringing a contrary Proof. If the particular Expressions were known to the Prosecutor, it was but just that they should have been taken into the Libel; and, on the other hand, if they were not known, no such Thing ought to have been at all mentioned.

And indeed, with regard to some of the Expressions, it is impossible to believe, that the Pannel used the Words deposed to by the Witnesses. Thus, in particular, the strongest Expression is that deposed to by John Maccoll the Bouman, who deposes, "That, about two Years ago, he heard the Pannel say, That he would spend a Shot on Glenure, though he went on his Knees to the Window to fire it." But as this Expression is only deposed to by one Witness, who seems to have been abundantly forward in deposing against the Pannel; so it is utterly incredible, that, at the Time deposed to by this Witness, the Pannel would have used this Expression; as it is clearly proved, by the Depositions of the other Witnesses, that the Deceased and the Pannel were then in strict Friendship together; and that at that Time the Deceased had such Confidence in the Pannel, that he was then employing him as Sub-factor upon this Estate.

It would be very tedious, and is unnecessary, for me to make particular Observations upon the other Expressions deposed to by the several Witnesses; at the same Time, it is scarcely possible for me to recollect them, as I had no Opportunity to know them, till they were deposed to by the Witnesses themselves. It is sufficient for me, in general, to observe, that some of them may bear an innocent Meaning; that others of them appear to have been uttered when the Pannel was in Drink; and that none of them are so strong, as that deposed to by the Bouman, which has been already answered.

And though it should be admitted, that the Pannel had, upon different Occasions, expressed himself foolishly in Terms which implied Resentment against the Defunct; yet this, by itself, is by no Means sufficient to prove, that the Pannel was accessory to the Murder which afterwards happened.

And here I have only to appeal to your own Hearts, and ask, how often you have heard resentful Expressions thrown out in Conversation, where you were yourselves conscious, that nothing was seriously intended: And though it may be true, that such Expressions may serve as a Weight in the Scale, with other Circumstances, to convict the Pannel; yet this holds only where these other Circumstances cannot naturally admit of an innocent Construction, but can never apply to the present Case, where, I am hopeful, I shall be able to show, that the other Circumstances proved against the Pannel, have no Shadow of Relevancy in them.

At the same Time, it is a Circumstance of some Weight, in the present Case, to take off the Effect of these Expressions, that it is not pretended, that the Murder was committed by the Pannel; on the contrary, the Libel sets forth, that the Murder was committed by the Hands of Allan Breck: And however it may be true, that Expressions importing Resentment, proved against the Pannel, may go far to presume Guilt, where none other is condescended on as the Actor and Perpetrator of the Murder; yet that will no ways apply to the present Case, where the very Libel, upon which the Pannel is accused, sets forth, that the Murder was not committed by the Pannel, but by another.

The second Fact charged in the Libel, is founded on a Concert supposed to have been entered into betwixt the Pannel and Allan Breck, upon Monday the 11th of May; in Consequence of which Concert, it is alledged, the Murder happened. But as the Prosecutor has brought no Evidence of any such Concert, or that Allan Breck and the Pannel had any Conference whatever upon the Subject that Day; so it is proved, as strongly as the Nature of the Thing can admit of, by the Prosecutors own Witnesses, that no such Thing could possibly have been concerted that Day. The Sum of the Evidence relative to this Matter, is, That Allan Breck came to the Pannel upon Monday the 11th about Mid-day, the Pannel being then sitting in a Field of Potatoes, in Company with three of his Servants:—That, after they had sit for a Quarter of an Hour together, a Message came from Mr. Campbell of Airds, desiring the Pannel to come to him at Keil, which is about two Miles distant from the Pannel's House: That, in Consequence of this Message, he immediately went to Keil, leaving Allan Breck with his Servants: That he remained with Airds all that Afternoon, and did not return to his own House till late at Night, the Family being then at Supper, and several Strangers along with with them:—That the Pannel and Allan Breck had no Conversation together in private that Night:—That they slept in separate Places, and that the Pannel had left his House next Morning, before Allan Breck got out of Bed.

As this is a very material Circumstance, in respect it is admitted upon all Hands that this was the only Occasion the Pannel and Allan Breck had of conversing together, between Glenure's Return from Edinburgh, upon Saturday the 9th, and the Murder, which happened upon the Thursday thereafter, I must beg Leave to resume, particularly, the Evidence on this Head.

John More Maccoll depofes, “ That, upon Monday the 11th of May last, he saw Allan Breck come to Aucharn, dressed in his long Cloaths, and came directly where the Pannel, Allan his Son, John Beg Maccoll, and the Deponent, were covering Potatoes: That, when Allan came up, they were resting themselves, and sitting by one another: That Allan Breck sat with them, and all the Conversation the Deponent observed, consisted in some Questions about the Welfare of the People of Glencrearan; and that he did not observe the Pannel have any private Conversation with the said Allan Breck; for that, a very little Time after Allan Breck's Arrival, the Pannel had a Message to meet Mr. Campbell of Airds at Keil; and that this happened after Mid-day: That the Pannel immediately, upon receiving the above Message, went away, in order to meet Airds; and that no body went along with the Pannel, Allan Breck having staid with them.”

John Beg Maccoll depofes, “ That, when Allan Breck came, upon the 11th of May last, to Aucharn, the Pannel was seeing the Deponent, John More Maccoll, and Dougal Maccoll, working at Potatoes; and that Allan Stewart, the Pannel's Son, was likewise there: That, when Allan Breck came, they were all sitting together; and that he seated himself by the Pannel, and had some Conversation in English, which the Deponent does not understand. Depofes, That Charles Stewart, Son to the Pannel, and Stewart, Daughter to Fasnacloch, came to Aucharn from Fasnacloch a little after the said Allan Breck.”—And further depofes, “ That, when Allan Breck came back, upon Monday the 11th of May last, to the Place where the Pannel, Deponent, and others, were covering Potatoes, as above, they had sit together but for about a Quarter of an Hour, when the Deponent went to work at Potatoes at a greater Distance; and before he went away, heard a Message had come for his Master to meet Airds at Keil, and heard his Master speak of going there; but when he went, or who went along with him, the Deponent does not know: That the Deponent continued working at the Potatoes till the Evening, and the Pannel was not come Home when he came from his Work: That the Pannel came Home at Bed-time, accompanied with John More Macilichattan, who lay with the Deponent that Night.”

Dougal Maccoll depones, “ That when the Deponent came Home from the Wood, upon Monday the 11th of May last, the Pannel was not at Home, and the Deponent was told, he was gone to Keil, to meet the Laird of Airds; and that the Deponent had gone to Bed before the Pannel came Home that Night; and that “ early upon Tuesday Morning, when the Deponent got up, he saw the Pannel without, who told him, that he was going to Appin's House; and that, to the Deponent's Knowledge, Allan Breck, or the Pannel's Sons, were not then up: That he saw the Pannel go towards Lettersbuna, where Appin lives. Depofes, That Allan Breck left Aucharn before the Pannel returned from Lettersbuna.”

Katharine Maccoll depofes, “ That the Pannel went in the Afternoon of the Day (viz. 11th May) to Keils, to meet Mr. Campbell of Airds; and that it was late at Night before he came Home; but that the Family had not supped when the Pannel came Home; and that the Pannel supped in Company with Allan Breck Stewart, Fasnacloch's Daughter, and Archibald Cameron, Nephew to Fasnacloch, and the Pannel's Family.”

Archibald Cameron depofes, “ That, upon Monday the 11th of May last, the Deponent came from Fasnacloch's House to the Pannel's House, after Mid-day: That, some little Time after he came there, he saw Allan Breck Stewart: That the Pannel was not at Home when the Deponent came first there, but came Home before Night-fall: That the Deponent, Pannel, Allan Breck, and the Family, sat in one Room, and supped together: That he did not observe Allan Breck and the Pannel speak in private that Night: That the Deponent and Allan Stewart, the Pannel's Son, lay in one Bed, and Allan Breck and Charles Stewart, Son to the Pannel, in another Bed in the same Barn: That, to the best of his Remembrance, they all went to Bed much about one Time, and got up together next Morning: That the Deponent did not observe the Pannel about the House next Morning when he got up.”

And the Depositions of these Witnesses are corroborated by Donald Campbell of Airds, who depofes, “ That, upon Monday the 11th of May last, the Deponent sent to the Pannel, desiring him to come to him at Keils, a Farm belonging to the Deponent, at about a Mile's Distance from the Pannel's House: That the Pannel accordingly came there to him that Afternoon, as soon as he expected him: That the Deponent's Business with him was for his Assistance in setting that Farm: That the Farm was accordingly set, and the Pannel himself took Part of it, and conducted the Deponent a Part of his Way Home, and then they parted: That, before parting, he desired the Pannel to go next Morning to Appin's House: That the Pannel accordingly did so, and the Deponent had a Letter from him from that Place.”

From what has been said, therefore, it appears, that the Prosecutor has not only not proved, that upon the 11th of May there was any thing concerted with regard to the Murder betwixt the Pannel and Allan Breck, but, on the contrary, it is proved, as strongly as the Nature of the Thing can admit of, that no such Thing was or could be concerted betwixt them at that Time; and if this is once established, it saps the Foundation upon which the whole Libel stands, as it is not pretended, that the Pannel and Allan Breck had ever any other Opportunity of conversing together, betwixt Glenure's Return from Edinburgh and the Time of the Murder.

The third Article charged in the Indictment is,
That,

That, in pursuance of the Concert entered into upon the 11th of May, the Pannel had furnished Allan Breck with a Suit of his own Cloaths, in order to serve as a Disguise, that he might be enabled to commit the Crime with the greater Safety.

But, in the first Place, it must occur to every Man who hears me, that this is a most improbable Tale; for, if it had been intended that Allan Breck should be disguised at the Time of committing the Crime, it is impossible it could be seriously intended, that he should be disguised in a Coat belonging to the Pannel; for, however this might have served for a Disguise to Allan Breck, it might serve equally for a Point of Evidence against the Pannel: And therefore this improbable Position can gain Credit with no Mortal, unless it shall first be supposed, that the Pannel is not only the most wicked, but also the most foolish among Men; which will not be easily credited by you, who have been Witnesses to the decent Appearance he has made at this Trial.

2dly, As the Story is improbable, so it is equally destitute of all Foundation in Truth; for it is not proved by any of the Witnesses, that the Pannel furnished or gave the Cloaths to Allan Breck: And though it is proved, that he laid aside his French Cloaths, and put on a Suit of Cloaths belonging to the Pannel, or his own Son, upon the Monday before the Murder; yet it would be ridiculous to say, that a Party could be convicted as accessory to a Murder, because that the Murderer had on his Cloaths at the Time when the Crime was committed.

And, lastly upon this Head, the Circumstance of changing the Cloaths has been fully accounted for in the former Part of the Argument; and as it has been clearly proved, that Allan Breck had been formerly in use of wearing these very Cloaths, the Accident of his having them on at the Time when the Murder was committed, can have no Weight against the Pannel.

The fourth Article charged in the Libel is, That, upon the Morning of that Day upon which the Murder happened, the Pannel had sent John Beg Maccoll, a Servant of his own, to Fort-William, in order to watch, and give Intelligence concerning the Motions of the Deceased; and great Pains have been taken to prove this Article.

But, unluckily for the Prosecutor, this Fact happens to be contradicted by every Part of the Evidence.

In the first Place, it appears, from the Oath of John Beg Maccombich, "That it was known over the whole Country, that Glenure was to have been that Evening at Kintalline, which lies on this Side the Ferry of Ballachelish:" And therefore, if the Pannel's Intention had been to watch Glenure's Motions, it is natural to ask, what good Reason there could be to order his Servant to cross the Ferry, and go on to Fort-William, when, by waiting at the Ferry, he was sure to get Intelligence of Glenure's Motions?

2dly, The Fact is contradicted by the Depositions of Fergus Kennedy and John Mackenzie, two Witnesses also adduced for the Prosecutor, who concur in deposing, "That John Maccoll met Glenure and his Company in their Way Southward, about three Miles from Fort-William."—If his Errand had been to watch and give Intelligence concerning Glenure's Motions, he would have certainly returned immediately, and have given Intelligence accordingly. But, instead of this, it appears, from the Depositions of these Witnesses, compared with the Oaths of William Stewart and his Wife, that John Maccoll did not return, but went on to Fort-William; which is utterly inconsistent with what the Prosecutor supposes.

And, lastly, this Circumstance is flatly contradicted by the Oath of John Beg Maccoll himself, who expressly deposes, "That, when he went to Fort-William with the above Letter to Charles Stewart, the Notary, he had no Orders from his Master to enquire after the Motions of Glenure, or to acquaint any body thereof;" but had been sent to Fort-William, in order to bring a Notary from thence, to take a Protest against Glenure upon the Day following: And as that Part of his Evidence is confirmed by the Pannel's Letter to Charles Stewart, produced by the Prosecutor; so the remarkable Haste with which John Beg Maccoll went to and returned from Fort-William, clearly shows, that it was no sham Errand, but that the Pannel's real Intention was to proceed in a legal Way, by taking a Protest against Glenure, in case he should attempt to execute the Ejection.

The next Circumstance charged in the Libel is, that when John Mackenzie informed the Pannel of the Murder, he appeared no ways concerned nor surprized; and that neither he, nor his Family, went to look after the dead Body.

But as this Circumstance is extremely trifling, so the first Part of it is clearly disproved by the Oath of John Mackenzie, Glenure's Servant, who deposes, "That, immediately after the Murder, he went to James Stewart's House in Duror; and James seeing him weeping, asked what the Matter was? and the Deponent told him, his Master was killed: Whereupon James Stewart asked him, by whom, and how it was done? To which he, the Deponent, answered, that he did not know by whom; and believed it to be a Shot from a Gun or Pistol." And further deposes, "That, when he saw the Pannel at his House in Aucharn, as aforesaid, the Pannel wrung his Hands, expressed great Concern at what had happened, as what might bring innocent People to Trouble, and prayed that innocent People might not be brought to Trouble." And, to the same Purpose, the said John Beg Maccoll deposes, "That, when John Mackenzie informed the Pannel of the Murder, he said, It was a dreadful Accident, and he was afraid it might bring Trouble on the Country; and appeared sorry for what had happened."

It is indeed true, that the same Witness has deposed, "That neither the Pannel, nor any of his Family, went near the dead Body:" But as this is a Circumstance of no Manner of Weight; so the Witness has accounted for it in a very natural Way, viz. That as the Deceased and the Pannel had not been in good Terms together, the Pannel did not chuse to go to the Place where the Body lay; and more especially as he knew that some of those who were to meet Glenure had Arms, and it was impossible to know what unreasonable Lengths their Resentment might carry them: At any Rate, it shows how much the Prosecutors are pinched in point of Argument, when they are obliged to found upon it, as a Circumstance against the Pannel, that he did not go from his own House, which is about two Miles distant from the Place where the Murder was committed, merely to assist at the Funeral of a Person to whom he was no Way related.

The fifth Article charged in the Libel is, That, upon the second Day after the Murder, the Pannel had sent five Guineas by the Packman to Allan Breck, in order to enable him to make his Escape. As to which, Gentlemen, I do admit, that, if at this Time the Pannel had been in the Knowledge that Allan Breck was the Murderer of Glenure, his furnishing him with Money, in order to enable him to make his Escape, might have been considered as an Offence deserving Punishment. At the same Time, however wrong this would have been, it might have admitted of an Excuse, from the Connexion and Relation which the Pannel had to Allan Breck. And it is now proved, by the concurring Testimonies of two Witnesses, that the Pannel had been left his Tutor; and therefore it is much doubted, how far the Pannel's sending Money to Allan Breck, though he had known him to be the Murderer, would have been punishable.

But however the Law might have stood upon that Supposition, it will not apply to the present Case. The Pannel denies he knew any Thing of Breck's being the Murderer: And as he was well acquainted with his particular Circumstances, of which he has now brought full Evidence, by the concurring Testimonies of many Witnesses, that he had been first a Defenter, next a Rebel, and was then in the French Service; I conceive it was no ways criminal in the Pannel to advance this trifling Sum, in order to enable him to make his Escape; it was doing no more than what any good-natured Man would have done to his Friend in the like Circumstances: And hard will be the Case of the Pannel, if he should be condemned merely for doing a good-natured Deed, which had nothing criminal in it; more especially as he had Reason to believe the Message which was sent him from Allan Breck, importing, that he had no Accession to the Murder, but judged it prudent for him to leave the Country, in respect of his particular Circumstances, explained as above.

And indeed his Majesty's Advocate does not seem to lay much Strefs upon this Circumstance by itself; but then has attempted to rear up certain Arguments, tending to show that the sending of this Money must have been in Consequence of a previous Concert with Breck. And, in the first Place, it has been said, that the Pannel could not have known to have sent the Money to Koalisnacooan, if it had not been in Consequence of such previous Concert.

But, with Submission, there is a very satisfying Answer to this Objection, viz. That, upon the Day after the Murder, the Pannel had received a Message from Allan Breck, informing him where he was, and desiring him to send what Money he could spare, to enable him to make his Escape. This is distinctly proved by the concurring Testimonies of no less than four Witnesses, whose Depositions, as they connect with one another, fall now to be attentively considered.

Katharine Macinnes deposes, "That, in the Evening of the 14th of May last, the Deponent saw Allan Breck Stewart at a Goat-house in the Moor of Ballachelish, after Glenure was killed: That Allan Breck then asked her, what was the Occasion of the Stir in the Town? and that she told him, Glenure was murdered: And further asked her, who might have committed the Murder? and that she told him, she did not know: And that the said Allan further desired the Deponent to tell Donald Stewart in Ballachelish to go to the Pannel, and desire him to send the said Allan Money; and that she delivered this Message to Donald Stewart that same Night; and that she told the said Donald Stewart where she saw Allan Breck."

And Donald Stewart, the next Witness, deposes, "That, upon the Evening of Thursday the 14th of May last, about Night-fall, Katharine Macinnes came to the Deponent, and told him, that one without wanted to speak to him: That this Message came to him in Ballachelish's own House: That, when he went out, the said Katharine Macinnes told him, that it was Allan Breck that wanted him, and that he was a little above the House in the Brae: That the Deponent went up to the Brae, and met Allan Breck, who was then dressed in a great Coat, and a dark short Coat under it, with white metal Buttons: The Deponent told him of the Murder, and said, it could not be but that he, Allan Breck, was about it: To which Allan Breck answered, that he had heard of the Murder, but had no Hand in it: To which the Deponent replied, he did not believe him: That the said Allan Breck Stewart told the Deponent, he was going immediately to leave the Kingdom, was very scarce of Money, and was going then for Koalisnacooan; and desired the Deponent to acquaint the Pannel, that he was gone to Koalisnacooan, and desired him, if possible, to send him Money there; and the Deponent then promised to acquaint James Stewart of the above Message: That Allan Breck said, he believed he would be suspected of the Murder; and upon that Account, and as he was a Defenter formerly from the Army, it was necessary for him to leave the Kingdom: That, after the Conversation with the Pannel about Serjeant More, he delivered the above Message from Allan Breck to the Pannel; and that the Pannel did not say whether or not he was to send the Money; and this Conversation happened about Ten o'Clock in the Forenoon of Friday the 15th of May last; and that there was no body present." And further deposes, "That, upon the Deponent's delivering the above Message from Allan Breck to the Pannel, the Pannel asked why Allan Breck himself did not come for Money, if he wanted it? To which the Deponent, to the best of his Remembrance, replied, that Allan Breck told him, he would be suspected for the Murder, and was a Defenter: To which the Pannel answered, that he hoped in God Allan Breck was not guilty of the Murder: That, during the above Conversation with the Pannel, Alexander Stewart, Duncan Maccombich, and several other Possessors of Auchindarroch, were in the adjoining Field delving, but at such a Distance, that the Deponent cannot think they could hear the above Conversation."

From the Depositions of these two Witnesses, which connect exactly together, it is distinctly proved in what Manner the Pannel came to the Knowledge of the Place where Allan Breck was: And their Depositions are further supported by the Deposition of John Stewart younger of Ballachelish, who deposes, "That, the Day after the Murder, the Deponent was at the Pannel's House, who, after Twelve o'Clock of the Day, told the Deponent, that he had a Message that Morning from Allan Breck by Donald Stewart, to send him Money; but does not remember whether

“ the Pannel told him the Place where he was directed to send it; and the Pannel told the Deponent, that he was resolved to send him Money.”

And also by the Deposition of Alexander Stewart in Auchindarroch, who deposes, “ That, to the best of his Knowledge, he saw Donald Stewart in Ballachelish and the Pannel together, upon the Marches between Aucharn and Auchindarroch, in the Morning of the 15th of May; and that he himself was at the Time digging Ground with the other Tenants of the Town.”

The learned Gentleman on the other Side has been pleased to except against this Part of the Evidence; that the two material Witnessess are both connected with the Family of Ballachelish; that, as to some of the Facts, they are single Witnessess; and that they do not entirely agree as to the Import of the Message sent to Donald Stewart by Allan Breck.

I must acknowledge, I am under no small Difficulty to find out any Foundation for the first Part of the Objection. It is neither pretended nor proved, that Ballachelish is at all related to the Pannel; and as it cannot be said that any valid Objection could have been made against Ballachelish himself, if he had been produced as a Witness for the Pannel, far less does any Objection lie against the Son-in-law or Servant of Ballachelish, upon Account of his being in the Interest of the Pannel, of which, however, no Sort of Evidence has been brought. And as to the second Part of the Objection, that there are not two Witnessess concurring as to the whole of the Facts relative to the Message sent by Allan Breck to Donald Stewart;—the learned Gentleman would do well to observe, how much of his own Proof is founded only upon single Testimony; and then let him show Cause, why his Packman and Bouman, tho’ single Witnessess, should be credited, and the like Indulgence should not be given to the Pannel.

At the same Time it must be observed, that the two Witnessess who have deposed with regard to this Message, are not single; they concur as to the material Part, that Allan Breck had sent a Message to the Pannel, desiring him to send him a present Supply: And tho’ the two Witnessess differ with regard to the precise Words used by the Maid in delivering Allan Breck’s Message to Donald Stewart; yet, as they agree in every material Circumstance, no Regard ought to be had to trifling Variations; and it is believed the Gentleman on the other Side will admit, that the Objection would have been full as strong (if not stronger) if the two Witnessess had both used the same Words.

And lastly, As to the Observation that the Witnessess differ among themselves, as to the precise Hour when the Packman arrived at Fort-William, and demanded the Money from William Stewart, it is no ways surprising, that, at so great a Distance of Time, Witnessess should not be altogether exact as to Hours and Minutes. What appears most probable is, that William Stewart and his Wife have both mistaken the Hour, as, from their Oaths, neither of them seem to be positive with regard to that Matter: And Stewart the Packman seems to have been more attentive to this Particular, since he not only swears as to the Time when he received his Message from the Pannel, which he says was about Twelve at Noon, but also as to the Time when he delivered it to William Stewart, which, as the Packman says, was early in the Evening:

And as this agrees intirely with the Account which Donald Stewart gives of the Matter, when he says, “ That he delivered Allan Breck’s Message to the Pannel about Ten o’Clock Forenoon;” so it is plain there could be no Concert betwixt these two, not only as Donald Stewart is above all Suspicion of that Kind, but also as the Packman has been kept under close Confinement by the Prosecutor, and had no Opportunity of conversing with Donald Stewart from the Time of the Murder till he was produced as a Witness: And I cannot help thinking, that it would sound strangely to say, that the Prosecutors should be allowed to give Credit to this Packman where he swears for them, and, at the same Time, to reject his Testimony where it happens to make against them.

The Prosecutor has been pleased to lay great Stress upon the Oath of John Breck Maccoll, Bouman; and in particular upon that Part of it, where he says, that Allan Breck had desired him to go into Fort-William with a Letter to William Stewart, in case some Money did not come to him before next Morning; and this, it has been said, agrees exactly with the Message sent by the Pannel to William Stewart, desiring him to give Credit in five Pounds Sterling to John Breck Maccoll, Bouman in Koalishnacoon, in case he came to demand it; and it is pretended, that this is a clear Proof of a private Concert betwixt the Pannel and Allan Breck, settling the Manner in which he was to be supplied with Money.

But as the whole of this Argument is founded upon the Oath of the Bouman, deposing to a long romantic Story, in which he is altogether unsupported, I am intitled in Law to plead, that his Oath is not to be held as legal Evidence against the Pannel; more especially as it appears, from what has been already said, that his Evidence is disproved in one very material Article, in which he deposes to a very strong Expression, as applied by the Pannel against Glenure, at a Time when it is proved they were in perfect Friendship together.

2dly, The Oath of the Packman relative to this Article is as little to be relied on; for, though he has now deposed, that the Pannel had desired him to tell William Stewart, not only to send him five Pounds, but also to give Credit for the like Sum to John Breck Maccoll in Koalishnacoon, in case he came to demand it; yet it is remarkable, that, in the Libel, which it must be presumed was taken from his own Mouth, no Mention is made of the five Pounds, for which Credit was to be given to the Bouman; and therefore this must have been a new Discovery made by the Packman since printing the Libel. And it is further remarkable, that this Part of the Packman’s Evidence is contradicted by the Oath of William Stewart, who expressly deposes, That, at the Time when the Packman delivered his Message from the Pannel, no Mention was made of the Name of Allan Breck; and therefore no Argument can be drawn from any Thing either the Packman or Bouman have said upon this Matter.

But, 3tio, supposing all the Bouman has said to be true, viz. That Allan Breck had desired him to carry a Letter to William Stewart, it will not follow, that he and the Pannel were under any previous Concert relative to that Matter; for as Allan Breck was acquainted with William Stewart, and as nearly related to him as he was to the Pannel, it was natural for him to have Recourse to William Stewart to supply him in his Necessity; and therefore fore his doing so, will not prove that it was done upon any previous Concert with the Pannel. From the Commission Allan Breck had given to Donald Stewart upon the Thursday Evening, he had Reason to expect that the Pannel would have sent him a Supply with the first Opportunity; and as that had not happened, it was natural for him to apply to William Stewart, who was his Acquaintance, and as nearly related to him as the Pannel.

The learned Gentleman has been pleased also to found upon the Postscript subjoined to the Pannel's Letter of the 14th of May, to Charles Stewart; in which he desires, "That William may send immediately eight Pounds Sterling, to pay for four Milk Cows he had bought for his Use at Ardshiel:" From which it is inferred, that, before the Murder, the Pannel was preparing Money to give Allan Breck, in order to enable him to make his Escape. But as that Letter and Postscript do not mention the Name of Allan Breck, nor to what Purpose the Money was intended to be applied, the Observation does not deserve any Answer; tho' at the same Time it clearly proves, that the most innocent Circumstances have been laid hold of, and reared up into Arguments against the Pannel.

Thus it appears, that no Argument can be drawn from the Circumstance of the Pannel's sending Money to Allan Breck; as it is not proved, that the Pannel then knew that the Murder had been committed by him; and far less is it proved, that there had been any previous Concert betwixt them concerning the sending of that Money before the Murder was committed. And indeed, Gentlemen, it appears to me, that the Circumstances which attended the sending of this Money, and in particular the Difficulty there was in obtaining it, cannot fail to convince every unprejudiced Person, that this horrid Murder had not been committed in Consequence of any previous Concert betwixt the Pannel and Allan Breck; for, if that had been the Case, it is impossible to believe, that the Money would not have been more early provided. It behoved to occur to both Parties, that Money would be necessary to enable the Murderer to make his Escape; and as it clearly appears, that neither the one nor the other was in Cash upon Monday the 11th, when the Time and Manner of committing the Murder is supposed to have been concerted, it is impossible, that this important Matter of providing the Money would not have been instantly set about, or that it would have been delayed till the Hour when the execrable Act was to be committed.

The learned Gentleman has been pleased also to lay Weight upon another Circumstance, viz. That, some Days after the Murder, two Guns were found concealed near the Pannel's House, one of them loaded, and the other unloaded; and it has been insinuated, as if the unloaded Gun was that, with which Allan Breck committed the Murder. But this Circumstance is really so trifling, that it scarcely deserves a serious Answer. It is well known, that the Part of the Country where the Pannel lives, fell under the disarming Act; and therefore it was no ways surprising, that the Guns were found hid, and that Orders were given to hide them, at a Time when it was foreseen, that a strict Search was to be made by the Military; and, though one of the Guns was unloaded, it is a strange Flight of Imagination, from thence to infer, without Evidence, that this was the Gun with which the Murder was committed.

Besides, it appears from the Oaths of John Beg and Dougal Maccolls, both Witnesses produced for the Prosecutor, that the little Gun, which was found unloaded, was in such miserable bad Order at the Time when the Murder happened, that it is impossible it could have entered into the Head of any Mortal to use it for the Purpose supposed by the Prosecutor. Dougal Maccoll deposes, "That he, the Deponent, has no Skill about Guns; but heard Allan Breck, and Allan Stewart the Pannel's Son, complain more than once, that the Guns were in bad Order."

John Beg Maccoll deposes, "That neither of the Guns were in good Order; that the large or loaded Gun was in use, when going to be snapped, to stand at Half-cock; and that the little Gun was in use to snap or misfire: That the little Gun had an old wore Flint in it, and that he observed this Flint in the said Gun, when he was in use to see it stand at the End of the Girnel as above; but did not observe whether it had a Flint or not, when he took it from under the Girnel: That he knows no Fault the Lock of the little Gun had, but its being in use to misfire; and that the Lock was on the said Gun when he hid it on the Friday Evening: That Allan Breck carried it out one Morning, and told, that it misgave with him thrice at a black Cock, and shot with it the fourth Time, without killing the Cock."

And, in like Manner, Captain David Chapeau and Patrick Campbell concur in deposing, That this little Gun, at the Time when it was found, was in such bad Order, that, for want of a Screw-nail, the Lock was tied to the Stock by a String:—And therefore, upon the whole, I leave it to you to judge, how far it is possible that a Gun in such Order would have been used for the Purpose supposed by the Prosecutor; or that it would have been carried back so quickly, as it must have been, to the Pannel's House, at a Time when every Person was on the Watch inquiring about the Murder.

And it is of no Importance, that neither John Beg nor Dougal Maccoll saw this Gun, at the Time when the other Arms were hid upon the Thursday Evening; for as neither of these two Witnesses say that they looked for it, so they have both deposed, "That Allan Stewart, the Pannel's Son, had then told them, that he had hid it below the Girnel;" and as they accordingly found it so hid upon the Day following, it removes all Ground of Suspicion, which might otherwise arise from the Circumstance, that this Gun was not hid with the rest of the Arms on the Thursday Evening. At the same Time, the Pannel must beg Leave to say, that it would require some Explanation how it has happened, that the Lock of this little Gun comes to be now missing, when such Care has been taken to preserve every other Particular, which could possibly furnish any Handle for an Argument against the Pannel. A good deal of Weight has been also laid upon another Circumstance of the like Nature with the former, viz. That, upon the Day after the Murder, Allan Breck's Cloaths were hid, in Consequence of an Order by the Pannel's Wife: But as it is not easy to figure how an Order given by the Pannel's Wife should have any Effect against the Pannel; so it is humbly thought that this Circumstance may be easily accounted for.—It was foreseen, that, as Allan Breck was about to leave the Country, he would be immediately suspected as guilty guilty of the Murder; and; as there was great Reason to believe that a Search would be forthwith made in every Place where Breck was in use to visit; it was natural for the Pannel's Wife to put his Cloaths out of the Way, that they might not be the Occasion of Suspicion against the Pannel or his Family.

His Majesty's Advocate was pleased to found upon the Oath of John Maccoll, Bouman, who deposes, "That Allan Breck had said to him, that "the apprehending of the Pannel and his Son "would not signify much; but expressed some "Concern, lest Allan Stewart, Son to the Pannel, "might be betrayed by his own Tongue." But, as the Bouman is only here deposing to an Expression of Allan Breck's, when he was endeavouring to free himself from Suspicion; as the Bouman is at best only a single Witness; and as the Expression supposed to have been used by Allan Breck does not imply, that either the Pannel, or his Son, had been guilty of the Murder; this Circumstance, supposing it true, ought not to be regarded.

And here I cannot omit putting you in mind of one Circumstance deposed by Alexander Stewart, the Packman, which shows pretty clearly, that no Regard ought to be had to the Oath of the Bouman; and besides it is single, and not supported by other Evidence. The Packman deposes, "That "the Bouman had desired him to conceal his carrying the Cloaths and Money to Koalisnacooan; "told him that he could not prove it against him; "and that he could safely depose he did not deliver "the Cloaths to him, since he only pointed out where "they were." I leave to you, Gentlemen, to judge, what Credit can be given to a Witness, whose Principles were such, as to suppose that Perjury might be avoided by so poor an Evasion.

It has been also said, "That the Pannel's Wife, "his two Sons, and his Daughter, have, in some "Things, contradicted each other, in the Declarations made by them severally at Fort-William."

The Pannel cannot help thinking it hard, that extrajudicial Declarations made by his own Family should have been received as Evidence against him; more especially as it has been hitherto held to be an established Principle in our Law, not only that extrajudicial Declarations by third Parties cannot be taken, or received as Evidence against any Pannel, but also that those who stand in the Relation of Wife or Children to the Pannel, cannot be received as Witnesses against him.

However, as these Declarations have been allowed to be read in Court, though objected to by the Council for the Pannel, he must acquiesce in the Judgment given; but, at the same Time, I am fully persuaded, that, upon perusing these Declarations, the Jury will be of Opinion, that the Differences (if there are any) are so trifling, that they can have no Weight against the Pannel: And though it should be supposed that the Wife or Daughter of the Pannel, from a mistaken Notion of Duty to a Parent and Husband, who had been always indulgent to them, have endeavoured to conceal that Allan Breck went from the Pannel's House on Tuesday Morning, dressed in a Coat belonging to the Pannel; yet, as it has been demonstrated, it is hoped to your Conviction, that there is no Sort of Relevancy in this Circumstance, it can have no other Effect, but to show how extremely improper it is, that so near Relations should be examined against any Man upon Trial; but can never be used as an Argument against the Pannel. On the contrary, Gentlemen, I cannot help thinking, that these Declarations afford a very strong Argument for the Pannel; for as no less than sixteen different Declarations appear to have been taken from the Pannel himself, his Wife, and Children, (one of his Sons having been examined no less than five different Times) it is really surprising that so great a Number of Declarations; signed by different Parties, all relative to the same Matter, should agree so exactly together; and, as all the Attention of the Prosecutor has not been able to draw from these Declarations any thing which can fix the most distant Suspicion of Guilt against the Pannel, it tends strongly to fortify the legal Presumption of his Innocence.

As to the Letter wrote by the Pannel to John Macfarlane, referred to in the Libel, I am still at a Loss to discover what Argument can be drawn from it; for as that Letter (which was wrote soon after the Murder, and before any Advertisement had been published by the Friends of the Deceased for apprehending Allan Breck) contains an exact Description of Breck's Person and Dress, and also of the Place where he was most likely to be found; it rather proves for, than against the Pannel; and it was but natural, at this Period, for the Pannel to express an Anxiety to have Allan Breck apprehended; as it appears from the Proof, that before this Time it was the common Report of the Country, that the Murder had been committed by Allan Breck; and therefore it behoved naturally to occur to the Pannel, that the easiest and shortest Way to obtain his own Liberty, was to find out and secure the Person by whom the Murder was supposed to have been committed.

The learned Gentleman on the other Side still insists, that it is not proved, that any other Person, besides the Pannel, had any Quarrel or Resentment against the Deceased; and it has been further said, "That if Allan Breck was the Actor "in the Murder, he was only revenging the "Quarrel of the Pannel."

But the Weight of this Observation is fully taken off by the Evidence produced for the Pannel. It is clearly proved by the Depositions of Angus Macdonald, Duncan Campbell, Robert Stewart, and Charles Stewart, "That Allan Breck had sworn "Revenge against Glenure, upon a Belief, that he "had given Information against him as a Deserter." And though Colonel Crawford has deposed, "That "the Deceased had never given him any such "Information;" yet this does not at all vary the Argument, as it is undeniably proved, that Allan Breck still believed, that such Information had been given, and upon that Account bore deep Resentment against the Deceased: And therefore, supposing that the Murder had been committed by Allan Breck, (which is not admitted) it will not follow, that it was done with a View to resent any Quarrel the Pannel might have had with the Deceased; since it might have been done with a wicked Purpose of avenging his own private Quarrel: And, at the same Time, it is very proper to be here observed, that the Deceased had executed a Warning, and obtained a Decree of Removing, against a great many of the Tenants of Ardshiel and Lochiel; and if it is true, that in that Part of the Country a Step of this Sort is considered as a Cause of mortal Hatred, it was, at least, as much so to the Tenants removed, as it could possibly be to the Pannel: And therefore it is wrong in the Prosecutor

o say, that there was no other Person who had any Cause of Resentment against the Deceased, but only the Pannel; whereas it is plain, that every one of the Tenants who had been decerned to remove from their respective Possessions, had at least as strong a Cause of Resentment against the Deceased, as that which is libelled against the Pannel; and besides, I might also observe, that it is proved, by the Depositions of the two last Witnesses produced for the Pannel, that one Serjeant More Cameron (who in that Part of the Country is known to be of a most abandoned Character) had threatened to shoot Glenure, or to be upsides with him, in case he should happen to meet him.

Upon the whole, Gentlemen, I flatter myself, I have shown to your Conviction, that all and each of the Circumstances proved against the Pannel are such, that they can easily bear a good Construction, and might have happened naturally, though he had been innocent of the Crime laid to his Charge: And when to this it is added, that the Character of the Pannel in private Life, renders it highly improbable that he could have been accessory to so vile a Crime; that he could not possibly reap any Benefit by it; and that it is proved by incontestable Evidence, that, at the very Time when the Murder was committed, he was anxiously pursuing another Measure, which was utterly inconsistent with the Supposition of his being any way accessory to the Murder; I persuade myself that you will be careful to divest yourselves of any Impressions you may have received without Doors; that you will judge upon the Evidence impartially as it lies before you; and that, upon the whole, you will find the Pannel not guilty of the Crime laid to his Charge.

At the same Time, in case you shall have any Difficulty in finding the Pannel not guilty, or in case you shall be of Opinion, that there is a Shadow of Relevancy in any of the Circumstances proved against the Pannel, it is your Duty to return a special Verdict upon the Facts proved for and against the Pannel; and in that Case you ought to be particularly careful to omit no Circumstance which may have any Tendency to exculpate the Pannel.

After reading this Verdict, the Court proceeded to give Judgment; which, being written down in the Book, and signed by the whole Judges, was read by the Clerk, and, in the usual Manner, repeated pronounced by the Dempster to the Pannel, as follows:

“ The Lord Justice-General, and Lords Commissioners of Justiciary, having considered the Verdict of Assize, of Date the 24th current, according to the present Style, returned this Day against James Stewart, Pannel, whereby he is found guilty, Art and Part, of the Murder of Colin Campbell of Glenure; they, in respect thereof, by the Mouth of John Mackenzie, Dempster of Court, decern and adjudge the said James Stewart to be carried back to the Prison of Inverary, and therein to remain till the 5th Day of October next, according to the present Style; and then to be delivered over by the Magistrates of Inverary, and Keeper of the said Prison, to the Sheriff-depute of Argyllshire, or his Substitutes; and to be by them transported to the Shire of Inverness, and delivered over to the Sheriff-depute of Inverness, or his Substitutes; and to be by them transported to Fort-William, and delivered over to the Governor, Deputy-Governor, or Commander in Chief, for the Time, of the said Garrison, to be by them committed to Prison in the said Fort, therein to remain till the 7th Day of November next, according to the present Style; and then again to be delivered over to the Sheriff-depute of Invernessshire, or his Substitutes; and to be by them transported over the Ferry of Ballachelish; and delivered over to the Sheriff-depute of Argyllshire, or his Substitutes, to be by them carried to a Gibbet to be erected by the said Sheriff on a conspicuous Eminence upon the South Side of, and near to the said Ferry: And decern and adjudge the said James Stewart, upon Wednesday the 8th Day of November next, according to the present Style, betwixt the

After which the Lord Justice-General spoke to the Pannel to the following Effect:

JAMES STEWART, you have had a very long and most impartial Trial: You have been prosecuted with all the Moderation consistent with the Crime you stood accused of; and your Council have defended you with great Ability, and with Decency. The Jury have unanimously found you guilty of having been accessory to this horrid Murder, which, upon due Consideration of all Circumstances, seems to be according to the Evidence.

My Brethren, in delivering their Opinions, have endeavoured to make you sensible, how heinous the Crime is of which you stand convicted; a base and most infamous Murder and Assassination, in Defiance of the Laws of God and Man, and the common Principles of Humanity! I must add one Circumstance more, which aggravates your Guilt; and that is, your Ingratitude to that Gentleman, who, by your Means, is now no more. You had, by your Artifices, got into his Confidence, before he had Time to be well informed of the Circumstances of the Estate of which he was appointed Steward. This Confidence you abused so much, as to raise Sums of Money from the Tenants for your own Purposes: But when, in Obedience to the Orders of his Superiors, he was removing you and others from the Farms they did possess, then, according to the Malice always prevailing in uncivilized Parts of the Highlands, your inveterate Hatred began: So that it may be said of you, That you first eat his Bread, and then shed his Blood.

To trace your Crime from its true original Source, I will use the Words of our Statute-Book, Those barbarous Cruelties and lawless Oppressions practised in the Highlands during several Centuries, against which the Laws made so long ago as the Year 1587, and enforced in 1690, were so severe, that the Clans were bound to deliver Hostages, as Securities for the Peace, who were even to be put to Death, if no Redress was made. To this I must add that obstinate and almost incurable Disaffection and Aversion to the Government in several Highland Clans, and in particular your own, ever since the happy Revolution, and the Establishment of the Crown in the Protestant Line.

In the Year 1715, there broke out a most unnatural and unprovoked Rebellion, soon after the Accession of his late Majesty to the Throne; in which the Part your Clan acted is well known, so many being here present that were Witnesses of their composing Part of the Rebel Army, which besieged this Town. This I myself have Reason to know. A Royal Indemnity soon followed after those Treasons then committed: But, in the Year 1719, your Clan, unmindful of their Lives and Fortunes having been granted them only two Years before, did again rise in Rebellion, and assisted a foreign Enemy in an Invasion: In this you are said to have acted a Part, though at that Time very young.

In the Year 1745, the restless Spirits of the disaffected Highlanders again prompted them to raise a third Rebellion, in which you and your Clan formed a Regiment in that impious Service, and in which you persevered to the last. The divine Providence at first permitted you to obtain some Advantages, which has possibly been to give you Time to repent of your Crimes. But who can dive into the Secrets of the Almighty! At last Heaven raised up a great Prince, the Son of our gracious King, who, with Courage equal to that of his Ancestors, and with Conduct superior to his Years, did, at one Blow, put an End to all your wicked Attempts.

If you had been successful in that Rebellion, you had been now triumphant with your Confederates, trampling upon the Laws of your Country, the Liberties of your Fellow-Subjects, and on the Protestant Religion: You might have been giving the Law, where you now have received the Judgment of it; and we, who are this Day your Judges, might have been tried before one of your mock Courts of Judicature, and then you might have been satiated with the Blood of any Name or Clan to which you had an Aversion.

I have thought it my Duty to put you in mind of these Facts, only to mark out those wicked Paths which have led you to Destruction: And though you don't now stand accused as a Rebel, nor am I permitted to call you a Traitor, because his Majesty's undeserved Mercy to you did several Years ago restore you to the State of an innocent Man; yet I may say, with great Force of Truth, that this Murder has been visibly the Effect and Consequence of the late Rebellion.

You may yet, during the short Time you have to live, be of great Service to your Friends and Neighbours, by warning them against those Principles and Practices which have brought you to this untimely End; and may the Lord have Mercy upon your Soul.

Immediately after Sentence of Death had passed upon James Stewart, and the Lord Justice-General had ended his Speech, the Pannel said,

MY Lords, I tamely submit to my hard Sentence. I forgive the Jury, and the Witnesses, who have sworn several Things falsely against me: And I declare, before the great God, and this Auditory, that I had no previous Knowledge of the Murder of Colin Campbell of Glenure, and am as innocent of it as a Child unborn. I am not afraid to die; but what grieves me, is my Character, that After-ages should think me capable of such a horrid and barbarous Murder.

Thereafter the Pannel was ordered back to Prison, and executed according to his Sentence.

N. B. When the Sentence was pronounced against James Stewart at Inverary, the Gentlemen who attended the Trial the preceding Days, having been all tired with it, did not take Notes the last Day: But, as far as they can recollect, the Substance of what the Lord Justice General then said to the Pannel, was as is above set down.

XLVII. *The TRIAL of John Barbot, Attorney at Law, for the Murder of Matthew Mills, * Esq; at a Court of Oyer and Terminer and General Gaol-Delivery, held at the Town of Basseterre, in and for the Island of St. Christopher, on Friday the 5th Day of January, 1753, before the Honourable William Matthew Burt, Esq; President of his Majesty's Council of the said Island, and others, his Majesty's Justices of Gaol-Delivery.*

[Published by Permission of the Judges.]

ON Thursday the 4th of January, 1753, a Bill of Indictment was found by the Grand Inquest for the Island of St. Christopher, against John Barbot, Gentleman, for the Murder of Matthew Mills, late of the said Island, Esq;

On Friday the 5th of January, 1753, the Court being met, the Prisoner John Barbot was set to the Bar, when the Court proceeded thus:

Clerk of Arraigns. John Barbot, hold up thy Hand; (which he did.) You stand indicted by the Name of John Barbot, late of the Parish of St. George Basseterre, in the Island of St. Christopher, Gentleman; for that you, not having the Fear of God before your Eyes, but being moved and seduced by the Instigation of the Devil, on the 19th Day of November, in the 26th Year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord the King that now is, about the Hour of Five of the Clock in the Morning of the said Day, with Force and Arms, at a certain Place called Frigate-Bay, in the Parish of St. George Basseterre aforesaid, in the Island aforesaid, in and upon one Matthew Mills, Esq; in the Peace of God, and of our Sovereign Lord the King that now is, then and there being, feloniously, voluntarily, and of your Malice aforethought, did make an Assault; and that you the said John Barbot, with a Pistol of the Value of five Shillings, then and there charged and loaded with Gunpowder and leaden Bullets, which said Pistol you the said John Barbot in your right Hand then and there had and held, into and against the aforesaid Matthew Mills, then and there feloniously, wilfully, and of your Malice aforethought, did shoot off and discharge; and that you the said John Barbot, with leaden Bullets aforesaid, issuing and shot off out of the Pistol aforesaid, then and there, by the Force of the said Gunpowder, the said Matthew Mills, in and upon the right Side of the Body of the said Matthew Mills, and between the two last false Ribs, and near the Back of the said Matthew Mills, then and there feloniously, voluntarily, and of your Malice aforethought, struck, penetrated, and wounded; and that you the said John Barbot, then and there feloniously, voluntarily, and of your Malice aforethought, gave to the said Matthew Mills, with the leaden Bullets aforesaid, out of the said Pistol, then and there, by Force of the said Gunpowder, shot off and discharged, in and upon the right Side of the Body of the said Matthew Mills, and between the two last false Ribs, and near the Back of the said Matthew Mills, then and there one mortal Wound of the Breadth of one Inch, and the Depth of nine Inches; of which said mortal Wound the said Matthew Mills, at Frigate-Bay aforesaid, in the Parish aforesaid, in the Island aforesaid, instantly died: And so you the said John Barbot, the said Matthew Mills, in Manner and Form aforesaid, at Frigate-Bay aforesaid, in the Parish and Island aforesaid, feloniously, voluntarily, and of your Malice aforethought, did kill and murder, against the Peace of our said Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity.

Clerk of Arr. How sayest thou, John Barbot, art thou guilty of the Felony and Murder whereof thou standest indicted, or not guilty?

Prisoner. Not guilty.

Cl. of Arr. Culprit, how wilt thou be tried?

Pris. By God and my Country.

Cl. of Arr. God send thee a good Deliverance.

Pris. May it please your Honours, I have a Motion to make; which is, that I may be allowed Council on my Defence, not only to Matters of Law, but also to Matters of Fact, and to make my Defence in the fullest Manner. What I ask is no new Thing, it being, as I am informed, usual in England, and having been granted several Times to Prisoners in Cases of Life and Death in the King's-Bench of this Island: Which Mr. Solicitor-General knows to be so; having been himself concerned in those Cases on behalf of the Crown.

Mr. Solicitor-General, John Baker, Esq; May it please your Honours, I was indeed aware that this Motion would be made by the Prisoner, and in the Manner it has been; and therefore beg Leave to offer to the Court what has occurred to me on the Matter.

It is certain that the Practice in England, 'till a very few Years ago, was, that a Person indicted

* This Mr. Mills lived some time at Richmond in Surrey, and married a Daughter and Coheir of Colonel Soulegrave: (The other Daughter and Coheir married Stephen Theodore Janssen, Esq; Lord-Mayor of London in 1755.) He went over to St. Christopher, Antigua, &c. to look after his Estates there, and was barbarously murdered.

for a capital Offence was never allowed Council on a Plea of Not Guilty, unless to Matter of Law only; and that to be started by the Prisoner himself. And to this, besides the known Practice, the Authorities in Law are so full and plain, that you can look into no Book, which at all treats of this Matter, where this Doctrine does not at once stare you in the Face.

It is very true, that, by the more modern Practice, the Rigour of this Rule hath been something relaxed; but then it is proper to see how far it has been so: And I can venture to affirm, that it has gone no farther than to permit Council to examine and cross-examine Witnesses; and never to the giving them Leave to make Observations on the Evidence; or to draw Arguments or Inferences from it to the Point in Issue; or to do any Thing else in the Way of a formal or full Defence. And this, tho' at first a pure Indulgence, yet now seems to be so far grown into a Right, that I believe it would be thought hard to deny it to the Prisoner in the present Case; and I should readily consent to the granting it, on behalf of the Crown. But as to the allowing Council in the full Extent the Prisoner has moved for it, I am confident no Instance was ever yet seen of the Kind in England; and I fear, for that Reason, your Honours can hardly be thought at Liberty to allow it here.

This is a Trial of great Expectation, and your Honours will be very careful to do what is exactly right; and to leave no Part of your Conduct liable to Censure hereafter.

Whether it be a Hardship to deny full Council to Prisoners in capital Cases, I shall not pretend to say: But this is certain, that if it be one, it is of the Law's making, and not of your Honours; and therefore you cannot be blamed for it; tho' perhaps you might be so, for allowing an Indulgence which the Law and the Practice of England do not warrant.

For the Instances alledged by the Prisoner, in the Court of King's-Bench in this Island, they have been but two or three, and of very late Years only. It was no longer ago than the Year 1744, that I myself was refused by that Court to be of Council for one James Dixon, who stood indicted for the same Crime that the Prisoner at the Bar now does: So that any Instances to the contrary must have been since that Time; and none in the Case of Murder; tho' I think one or two of other Felonies. But these are too recent to govern the Determination of the Court in the present Case; which must therefore turn on this Question only, how far the permitting Council for the Prisoner is in itself right, and agreeable to Law.

I shall but just add, that in Proof of what I have affirmed as to the present Practice in England, I have here two printed Trials of Persons indicted for Murder, the one so late as in the Year 1741, and the other so very late as about ten Months ago: The former is of Captain Goodyer, Commander of one of his Majesty's Ships of War, for the Murder of his Brother Sir John Dinely Goodyer, Bart. and the latter of Miss Blandy, for the Murder of her own Father, tried at Oxford Assizes no longer ago than the Month of March last. The Prisoners were both Persons of some Rank and Fortune in Life, and such as both could well afford the Expence, and would not have wanted Advisers to move for full Council, had it been a Thing proper to have been asked or granted. And yet in neither Case is there the least Pretence on the Part of the Prisoner, of being intitled to it, or any Thing like a Motion for it; but (what is yet a stronger Confirmation of what I have alledged, than a mere Silence on the Matter,) it is only asked in the Case of Captain Goodyer, to allow Council for the Prisoner to examine and cross-examine Witnesses; and even that is insisted on by the Council for the Crown, to be a Favour, and not a Right; and it is there granted as such.

The President then put it to the Court for their Opinion, whether or how far the Prisoner ought to be allowed Council to make his Defence; when the Court unanimously declared it as their Opinion, that he should be allowed Council to speak to Points of Law to be started by himself, and also to examine his own and cross-examine the Witnesses for the Crown, but no further.

Pris. Then I pray your Honours will please to allow Mr. Frye to be of Council for me.

The Court accordingly assigned Mr. Frye of Council for the Prisoner.

Cl. of Arr. Cryer, make Proclamation for Silence.

Cryer. Oyez, Oyez, Oyez; His Majesty's Justices do strictly charge and command all manner of Persons to keep Silence, upon Pain of Imprisonment.

Cryer. Oyez; You good Men, that are impanelled to try between our Sovereign Lord the King and the Prisoner at the Bar, answer to your Names, and save your Fines.

The Jury were called over, and appeared.

Cl. of Arr. You, the Prisoner at the Bar, these Men which were last called, and do now appear, are those who are to pass between our Sovereign Lord the King and you, upon the Trial of your Life and Death; if therefore you will challenge them, or any of them, you must challenge them as they come to the Book to be sworn, before they are sworn: And you shall be heard.

Cl. of Arr. George Weatherill, look upon the Prisoner; You shall well and truly try, and true Deliverance make, between our Sovereign Lord the King, and the Prisoner at the Bar, whom you shall have in Charge, and a true Verdict give, according to the Evidence: So help you God.

And the same Oath was administered to the rest, (which were sworn) and their Names are as follow:

Mr. President. Can you prove this Declaration of Mr. Armour's?

Pris. Yes. I pray that Mr. Frye may be sworn to prove it.

Mr. President. Swear Mr. Frye, (which was done.)

Mr. Frye. I heard Mr. Armour say at Montserrat, that, if he was to be on Mr. Barbot's Jury, he would condemn him.

Cl. of Arr. Cryer, make Proclamation.

Cryer. Oyez, Oyez, Oyez; If any one can inform the King's Justices, the King's Solicitor-General, or this Inquest now to be taken, of any Treasons, Murders, Felonies, or Misdemeanors, committed or done by the Prisoner at the Bar, let him come forth, and he shall be heard, for the Prisoner stands now at the Bar upon his Deliverance; and all Persons that are bound by Recognizance to give Evidence against the Prisoner at the Bar, let them come forth and give their Evidence, or they will forfeit their Recognizances.

Pris. May it please your Honours, I humbly move that I may have Pen, Ink and Paper.

Mr. President. Ay, by all means.

Cl. of Arr. John Barbot, hold up thy Hand; Gentlemen of the Jury, look upon the Prisoner, and hearken to his Charge; he stands indicted by the Name of John Barbot, late of the Parish of St. George Basseterre, in the Island of St. Christopher, Gentleman, for that he not having (as in the Indictment before set forth.) Upon this Indictment he hath been arraigned, and upon his Arraignment hath pleaded Not guilty; and for his Trial hath put himself upon God and his Country, which Country you are: Your Charge therefore is, to inquire whether he be guilty of the Felony and Murder whereof he stands indicted, or not guilty. If you find him guilty, you shall inquire what Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements he had, at the Time of the Felony committed, or at any Time since: If you find him not guilty, you shall inquire whether he fled for the same: If you find that he did fly for the same, you shall inquire of his Goods and Chattels, as if you had found him guilty: If you find him not guilty, and that he did not fly for the same, say so, and no more; and hear your Evidence.

Jury. May it please your Honours, we pray we may have Pen, Ink and Paper.

VOL. X.

Mr. President. Mr. Smith, let the Jury have Pen, Ink and Paper.

Mr. Kerr. May it please your Honours, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I am of Council for the King on this Trial: It is an Indictment by which the Prisoner at the Bar stands accused of the Murder of Matthew Mills, Esq. The Indictment sets forth, that the Prisoner at the Bar; not having the Fear of God before his Eyes, but being moved and seduced by the Instigation of the Devil, on the 19th Day of November, in the 26th Year of the Reign of his present Majesty, about the Hour of Five of the Clock in the Morning, with Force and Arms, at a Place called Frigate-Bay, in the Parish of St. George Basseterre in this Island, in and upon one Matthew Mills, Esq; in the Peace of God and our said Lord the King then and there being, feloniously, voluntarily, and of his Malice aforethought, did make an Assault; and that the Prisoner, with a Pistol then and there charged with Gun-powder and leaden Bullets, which he in his right Hand then and there had and held, isto and against the said Matthew Mills, then and there feloniously, wilfully, and of his Malice aforethought, did shoot off and discharge; and that the Prisoner, with leaden Bullets issuing out of the said Pistol, by Force of the said Gun-powder, the said Matthew Mills, in and upon the right Side of his Body, and between the two last false Ribs, and near the Back of the said Matthew Mills, then and there feloniously, voluntarily, and of his Malice aforethought, struck, penetrated, and wounded; and that the said Prisoner then and there feloniously, voluntarily, and of his Malice aforethought, gave to the said Matthew Mills, in and upon the right Side of his Body, between the two last false Ribs, and near the Back of the said Matthew Mills, one mortal Wound of the Breadth of one Inch, and the Depth of nine Inches; of which said mortal Wound the said Matthew Mills instantly died.

To this Accusation the Prisoner at the Bar hath pleaded Not guilty, and for Trial hath put himself upon you Gentlemen of the Jury: It is, therefore, the Duty of us, who are of Council for the King, to prove this horrid Crime upon the Prisoner to your Satisfaction; and I make no doubt we shall be able to support this Indictment, upon the most violent presumptive Proof, that ever appeared on a Trial of this Kind: If this should be the Case, I hope the Jury will, under your Honours Direction, find the Prisoner guilty of this Murder. We shall proceed to examine the Witnesses for the King, as soon as the Gentlemen who are to follow me have opened to your Honours and the Jury, the Nature of the Evidence that will be produced on this Occasion.

Mr. Sol. Gen. May it please your Honours, and you Gentlemen of the Jury;

The Prisoner at the Bar, John Barbot, stands indicted of no less a Crime than that of Murder; the Murder of one Matthew Mills, Esq; I say, of one Matthew Mills; because such is the Style and Form of the Indictment; and not as supposing you are, or can be any Strangers to the Name or Character of that unfortunate Gentleman: For who the Deceased was, his Rank and Distinction in Life would not permit any one in these Parts to be ignorant; and as to what he was, if there were any who knew it not in his Life-time, they must necessarily have learned it from the general Sorrow and Concern, and the many Hearts that are yet bleeding, for his Death.

O o

Gentlemen,

Gentlemen, as to the Murder of which the Prisoner stands indicted, it is perhaps the hardest to be accounted for, as to its Causes and the Motives to it, of any intended, any concerted Event, that has ever fallen out within the Compass of your Knowledge and Experience. The two grand and ordinary Motives to the committing of Murder, are Interest and Malice. But, for the former of these, there does not seem to have been the least Prospect of any Advantage to be reaped by any one whatever, by the Death of the Deceased: Though how many, and in how grievous a Degree, will be Sufferers by it, God knows: And for the other Motive, Malice; one would have thought his amiable Character, and most unexceptionable Conduct towards every one, must have secured him against the Enmity and Ill-will of any Person living; and even still we may venture to affirm, that no good Man was, or could be, his Enemy: Yet that he had an Enemy, (one, at least, if not more; I say, that he had, at least, one Enemy) is but too apparent from the Manner and Circumstances of his Death: And I believe your Consciences will be abundantly convinced by the Evidence, that that Enemy was the Prisoner at the Bar; the Conscientiousness of whose Guilt, if that should be the Case, must be greatly aggravated by this Consideration, that he has robbed the World of a Man, whose Loss he cannot make good to it in himself; and that there is no Probability, that in the Course of twenty such Lives as his, he should ever be able to make Amends to the great Number of Persons whom he has rendered so unhappy, and made such Sufferers by it: So diffusive a Ruin, so extensive a Mischiefe, has been accomplished by a single Stroke of so insignificant a Hand!

Gentlemen, there are few Murders committed, of which it is not with some Difficulty and Labour the Authors are found out: For, as the more atrocious the Crime, and consequently the greater the Punishment attending it, so the greater the Caution and Secrecy used in the committing it, and the Manner and Means of putting it in Execution the more carefully studied and concerted, in order to avoid a Discovery, and escape the Hand of Justice.

And yet, Gentlemen, in most Cases of Murder (for, indeed, in some few Instances, Heaven has thought fit to reserve the whole of Vengeance to itself; but, I say, in most Cases of Murder) it has pleased Providence by some Mark or another to point out the guilty Person; and all the Care and Foresight of the coolest and cunningest Offenders, have not been able to guard against some Token, some unthought-of Circumstance, which has left a Door open to a Discovery, when they imagined they had barred up all Access to it.

Thus, Gentlemen, in the present Case, though the Prisoner at the Bar flattered himself he had so effectually laid his Measures, as perfectly to secure him against (not the Knowledge and Discovery of his Crime, for that he knew there were those about him who could, and must, make public; but against) the Punishment which he knew by Law was due to it; by taking care to have none present when he committed it, who could be legal Witnesses against him: Yet I believe all his Management and Precautions of that Sort will stand him in very little stead; since, by Evidence unquestionably legal, so many and evident Tokens of his Guilt will appear; such a Train of Circumstances will be laid before you of various Kinds, as, when taken and considered together, will give such Light and Strength to each other, as to convince the most incredulous Persons, and satisfy the most scrupulous and tender Consciences, that the Prisoner at the Bar was the Person by whose Hand the Deceased was murdered.

And this, Gentlemen, as it is legal Evidence, so it is sufficient too, if it be such as satisfies your Belief, that he committed the Fact. And indeed this is the best and only Evidence, which we can hope to meet with in almost all Cases of Murder; where the Caution and Secrecy which I observed to be used in the committing it, makes a Necessity of investigating the Truth by painful Steps, and of tracing and hunting out the Murderer, by following the Track of Circumstances, as we can find Light enough to discern and pursue it. For, if the bare taking care to have no Persons present at the Time of committing the most execrable Crimes should avail, in spite of the plainest and strongest Circumstances pointing out the Criminals, to screen them from public Justice, it would hardly ever be possible, but by extreme Accident, to convict the most flagrant Offenders; and nothing were easier than to commit the worst of Crimes with absolute Safety and Impunity.

Gentlemen, it were a Thing greatly to be wished, both for your sakes and the sake of this Island, that it had not been made the Scene of this abominable Act: So should you have been saved the disagreeable Task that is now imposed on you; and the Island the Odium, which will perhaps unjustly, as well as unfortunately, be thereby brought upon it: I say, unjustly; because, as you will hear from the Evidence, though the Matter was executed here, it was conceived and concerted elsewhere. The Arrow was indeed thrown in this Island; but it was first dipped in the Poison that was generated in another; where, as you will hear, Gentlemen, the Prisoner at the Bar was exercising himself in rehearsing this fatal Tragedy, and making himself perfect in his Part of it, some Days before it was acted.

Gentlemen, as I before told you, the Motive to this unhappy Affair is hard to be accounted for; yet all that can be conceived or imagined to have been a Provocation to it, with the Substance of what else you will hear in Evidence in Proof of the Indictment, I shall relate to you; and though the Provocation you will hear of was the slightest and strangest that was perhaps ever known to the committing an Act of this Kind, yet I believe the Prisoner will find it a difficult Matter to assign a stronger or a better.

You must know, Gentlemen, that on Tuesday the 7th Day of November last, there being a public Sale, at the Town of Charles-Town in the Island of Nevis, of an Estate in that Island commonly called Bridgewater's, the Prisoner at the Bar offered himself as a Purchaser, and accordingly bade for it the Sum of 2510 l. Sterling. The Deceased, who was largely interested in this Sale, as having a Demand for a considerable Part of the Purchase-Money, and who, as well as many others, was not only surprized to hear the Prisoner bid a Sum of Money so far beyond what all the World must be sensible he was able to make good, but also justly offended at the Prisoner's Behaviour, which tended to throw every Impediment in the Way of the Sale that he could, said, he desired that there might not be so much Cavilling, and that no Boy's-Play might be used on the Occasion; for that this Estate had once before been sold, and the Purchase-Money Money not paid : Upon which the Prisoner, with great Heat, and a Pertness peculiar to him, stepped up to the Deceased, and in modish Phrase told him, he expected to be treated like a Gentleman. To which the Deceased only replied, he should use him and every one as such.

And this, Gentlemen, is all the Provocation, which, on all the Recollection and Inquiry that can be made use of, it can be found was ever given by the Deceased to the Prisoner ; since there appear not the least Traces of their having long before spoken to each other, or had any Intercourse on any Occasion at all ; and it is almost a Certainty, that they never spoke to, or saw one another afterwards, till the Morning of the Death of the unfortunate Deceased : But this, Gentlemen, according to the very high Conceit which the Prisoner had of himself and his own Merit, was, it seems, such an Indignity, as nothing less than the taking away so important and valuable a Life as the Deceased's could atone for. And of this he was so full, and so blinded by his Purpose, that on the Friday following, the 10th of the same November last, he declared in the Street of this very Town, that there was a certain Gentleman in this Island, whom he would either kill, or be killed by, in less than a Fortnight : And indeed in less (and very little less) than that Time the Deceased was killed ; and (as I believe you will by and by be perfectly convinced) by the Prisoner at the Bar. What could induce the Prisoner to make this strange and unnecessary Declaration of his Intention, is difficult to say ; nor is it at all satisfactorily to be accounted for, but from that Fatality which it has pleased Providence shall hang upon Guilt, to convince Men, that what he thinks proper shall be revealed, it shall not be in their Power, with all their Care and Precaution, to keep secret. Gentlemen, in pursuance of this Declaration, and in the Interval between that and the 19th of the same Month, when (as it is laid in the Indictment) the Deceased was killed ; the Prisoner took an Opportunity to exercise himself in firing with Pistols at a Mark ; and, as the Event has proved, became but too apt a Proficient at it ; having fatally improved himself to such a Perfection in it, as to enable him to accomplish his Design on the Deceased ; who was found dead of a Wound, apparently given from a Pistol, between Five and Six of the Clock on Sunday Morning the 19th Day of November last ; the very Night before which, as you will hear, the Prisoner, in a very hasty Manner, made his last Will at a public Tavern in the Town of Charles-Town in Nevis, where he delivered it into the Custody of one who was to have some Concern in it. Gentlemen, from these Circumstances and this Behaviour of the Prisoner, previous to the Murder, I believe no Man, for his own private Satisfaction, would look further for the Person who committed it, than the Prisoner at the Bar. But from other more numerous, and much stronger Circumstances, which you will likewise hear from the Evidence, and which I shall first open to you, I think all Shadow of Doubt, whether it was the Prisoner who committed it, must be entirely taken away. For, Gentlemen, the Night before the committing the Fact, the Prisoner, after having thus executed his last Will, and delivered it out of his own Custody, went from the Tavern into the Country with one Dr. James Webbe, at whose House he slept, or, at least, made Appearance of sleeping ; and accordingly, between Nine and Ten o'Clock, he bade the Doctor and his Family a good Night, and retired to the Chamber allotted him, under Pretence of going to Bed ; but in the Morning when the Doctor arose at his usual Hour, he found to his very great—I beg Pardon ; I was going to say, to his very great Surprise ; but that I cannot take upon me to say ; but however he did find, that the Prisoner was gone from his House ; and about Eight or Nine o'Clock in the Morning he saw him riding up to his House on his [the Doctor's] own Horse, and with his own Negro Boy attending him. Where he had been while he had thus withdrawn himself, and what he had been doing, you will presently hear. Gentlemen, about Five o'Clock, or very little after, that same Sunday Morning, as one John M'Kenley, who is an Overseer at the Plantation of Mr. Spooner near Frigate-Bay, was lying on his Bed (for he had risen, it seems, some time before, and had been abroad ; but was now lying down again ; when) a Negro Boy whom he very well knew, called Coomy, who belonged to, and usually ran with the Deceased when he went on Horse-back, came hastily into the Chamber, and even leaped on the Bed, and with great Emotion and seeming Fright, told M'Kenley, that his Master was fighting on the Bay with a Gentleman come from Nevis, and that he feared his Master was killed ; the Negro then instantly went out of the Room, and mounting his Master's Horse, on which he had rode thither, galloped back to the Bay again. M'Kenley was going to saddle his Horse to follow him ; but thinking that would take up too much Time, and it not being more than a Quarter of a Mile, or thereabouts, to the Place, he walked away as fast as he could to the Place, where, when he came, he found Coomy supporting his Master against his Knees ; but on coming close to him, he found the unhappy Gentleman was actually dead, tho' still warm ; having just breathed his last. M'Kenley then asking Coomy, who it was that had killed his Master ? the Negro answered, it was Mr. Barbot, who was come from Nevis, and was then going back again ; and added, if you will go to the Seaside, I believe you will see him ; for I am sure he cannot be gone far. M'Kenley then ran to the Beach, which was about fifty Yards from the Spot where the Deceased lay ; but with a rising Bank between ; and there saw a Canoo with four Oars and a Paddle, rowing from the Shore towards Nevis, with somebody dressed in white sitting in the Stern ; but by the Person's Back being towards him, and from the great Consternation he was in at the unhappy Event, having himself a little while before been a Servant to the Deceased, he did not distinguish who the Person was. However, that, Gentlemen, will soon be made appear to you ; for about Half an Hour after, as the Canoo was in its Way to Nevis, it was met by a Schooner coming from Montserrat to this Port ; the Master of which very well knew the Prisoner, and saw him sitting in the Canoo, dressed in a white Coat, and having on a laced Hat ; he will shew you that there was no other Canoo then in Sight, than this one, which he pursued with his Eye, 'till he saw it near the Bay at Nevis, called Molton's Bay, where the Prisoner was seen to land out of it about Seven of the Clock in the Morning, by Persons who knew the Canoo, and two of the principal Negroes who rowed it. From thence, Gentlemen, the Prisoner walked up to the House of the Plantation called Bridgewater's, which was about Half a Mile distant from the Sea, and there inquiring for Dr. Webbe's Negro Negro Boy called Pope, ordered him to saddle the Horse; meaning, as you will hear, the Doctor's Horse, which, as you will find, the Boy had brought thither about Midnight, under the Pretence of looking for his Master, though he knew he was then at Home. From hence, Gentlemen, the Prisoner rode back to Dr. Webbe's, where he had pretended to go to Bed the Night before, and which is about three Miles distant from Bridgewater's; and there dismounting, finished his glorious Expedition, and rested from his worthy Labours. I must not omit, Gentlemen, that a very sensible Negro Fellow, belonging to the Canoo, as soon as they came back to Nevis, seeming greatly dejected and thoughtful, and his Master pressing him to know the Occasion of it, the Fellow answered, he was afraid Mr. Barbot had done some Mischief; which is thus far material, that it was said before the News came from St. Christopher's to that Island, of the unhappy Affair.

Gentlemen, as you may perceive by what I have said, and will still more plainly find from the Evidence, the Prisoner at the Bar, whether to secure a further Chance for his escaping the Punishment due to his Crime, or, it may be, despairing of other Means or Opportunity to accomplish his Purpose against the Deceased, took Care to draw him to a Place of Appointment, in order to give the Act he committed the favourable Construction of a Duel. But, in the first Place, I believe you are not to be told, that were it really so, or were it ever so fair a Transaction, as it is generally termed, of that Sort, that, in the Law, by which you upon your Oaths are to try the Prisoner, is absolutely Murder. Should that appear or be believed, how far it might be an Argument for Mercy or Pardon, is the Business of another Place, and of other Persons: But the serious and solemn Business of this Day, and of you, Gentlemen, is upon your Oaths to say, whether you believe, upon the whole Matter, the Prisoner killed the Deceased or not. And in the next Place, Gentlemen, I believe you will be too well convinced by the Evidence given, that the Notion and Form of a Duel was only meant as a Cover and a Sanction to the intended Murder; and that the Deceased was unquestionably killed before he was provided, or could have a Chance of worsting the Prisoner or defending himself: For you will find, Gentlemen, that by the Wound given, which was in the Side, and the Course it took along his Belly, the Deceased could be in no offensive Posture; and it is plain his Pistols neither were, nor had been, loaded. And now, Gentlemen, we shall call the Witnesses to these several Facts which I have mentioned, from whose Mouths, and on whose Oaths, you will have a Confirmation of what it was my Duty thus to open to you, in order the better to conduct your Attention to the proper and material Parts of the Evidence.

Mr. Horne. May it please your Honours, and you Gentlemen of the Jury;

I humbly beg your Honours Indulgence, and, Gentlemen of the Jury, your favourable Attention to my speaking in behalf of the Crown, and in Support of what Mr. Solicitor-General has opened to you with such Strength and Perspicuity. And, though I must long lament the fatal Deed which brings me before you this Day; yet, it is a Circumstance of no slight Satisfaction to me, when I observe the Solemnity of this Assembly, this unusual Concourse of People from all the Islands, speaking the Importance of the Occasion, and the Expectation of the Public, that my first Appearance before your Honours, is, in a Cause that requires no extraordinary Ability, in the Advocate, no Art to gloss, or Sophistry of Arguments to disguise it; that I am to speak to a Subject that lies level to every Understanding; and to a Crime whose Malignity is confessed by every Heart. And as in the Course of this Trial I shall not abuse you, or dishonour myself, in employing any dishonest Artifice; so am I as steadily resolved to suppress no Truth (however offensive to any Man) that may be necessary to detect Guilt, to retrieve Honour from the fantastic Notions under which it labours, and to engage your Justice to the Community, as well as to an injured Family, in becoming Instruments in the Hand of Heaven to punish the Guilty, and to determine agreeably to that Denunciation of Vengeance from Heaven, that, whoso sheddeth Man's Blood, by Man shall his Blood be shed.

Such is the natural Odium that every Man conceives against the Crime with which the Prisoner is charged, so much is the common Interest of Man affected by Murder, that at the Name of it we take the Alarm, with Impatience and Sympathy we hear and feel the Story, with Ardor we pursue the Murderer, with Eagerness apprehend him, with Pleasure deliver him up to Justice, with Satisfaction hear the Sentence, and with Approbation all acknowledge that Blood for Blood is a just Restitution. Is there a Crime, in the Discovery of which the Finger of God has been so often held forth? For when Man's Invention has entrenched the Criminal with Artifice behind Artifice, and covered him in a Disguise fitted to cheat the most inquisitive Eye, Heaven has wonderfully revealed the Man of Blood—That Providence which is attentive to the Fall of a Sparrow, can never be regardless of the most excellent of his Creation. The first Murderer carried about with him a distinguished Mark of divine Vengeance; and for the innocent Blood of a Brother, wandered a Vagabond through the World.

Crimes so odious in their Nature, which the Laws have punished with Death, are generally contrived with the utmost Caution, and perpetrated with the profoundest Secrecy; for he who knows that an ignominious Death must be the certain Consequence of the Discovery of his Villainy, will, as the Prisoner has done, employ all his Artifice, and exert his utmost Ability, in the Concealment of it; while Innocence acts always in open Day, where the World may be Spectators of its Actions. But, Gentlemen of the Jury, I am persuaded that the Witnesses will satisfy your Consciences, that in spite of all the artful Preparations that attended the Contrivance, and the studied Precaution and Secrecy that attended the Perpetration, of this Crime, that no Man on Earth but the Prisoner at the Bar could be guilty of it; for notwithstanding his Life depended upon the Concealment of his Crime, and the Knowledge of this kept alive all his Art and Caution when he was retired to himself, and was by himself concerting his Scheme; yet in Company you will be surprized to find his Vanity (such is the fatal, the providential Inconsistency of Guilt) throwing him off his Guard, and drawing from him the Discovery of his Resentment, and a Confession of his Intention. You will hear him expressing his Malice to the Deceased, vowing Vengeance against him, and setting but a Fortnight's

Fortnight's short Period, to a Life, which, from its amiable and uncommon Value, all good Men would have wished to have had protracted to the happiest old Age.

You will be able, Gentlemen, to trace him almost Step by Step through his whole Track, and keep him almost constantly in View, from the first opening to the closing of this abominable Deed. As Mr. Solicitor has already opened the Fact and the Evidence of it, it would be impertinent in me to abuse the Patience of the Court and Jury, by an unnecessary Repetition of them in all their Circumstances: And had there been nothing else proper to offer to you, Gentlemen of the Jury, upon this Occasion, I should not rise, however painful for me to be silent on a Subject that has so sensibly affected me, and must so long lie heavy at my Heart.

The Council for the King will not, Gentlemen, go out of the ordinary Road of Justice, and have recourse to an unusual Evidence, even upon so extraordinary an Occasion, when you are inquiring into the Murder of so excellent a Man. We shall not therefore attempt to produce positive Testimony [i. e. the Testimony of Slaves]: For, though we have such as no Law, either of our Mother-Country, or of these Colonies, prohibits; yet good Policy in general, the Ground of all Law, and in particular the Policy of these Islands, forbids it. Indeed there is no Necessity for it, the Evidence of concurring Circumstances being in the present Case, as well as many others, more convincing, than the Testimony of any one positive Witness. The Evidence of the Prisoner's Guilt must then result from Circumstances, but Circumstances so strong, so connected, reflecting such Light upon each other, as will amount to the most violent Presumption, which, Gentlemen, their Honours will inform you, is in Law a full Proof.

And here, Gentlemen of the Jury, as it is impossible in such small Communities to avoid hearing the Conjectures and Opinions that are thrown out in all Matters of Moment sufficient to engage the public Attention; give me Leave to take Notice of two Notions that seem to have been artfully given out, and industriously propagated, on this Occasion:—"That as the Testimony of the Slaves present at this melancholy Action, will not be offered, circumstantial Evidence can be no Proof; and that if the Deceased thought proper to meet the Prisoner, and was killed in a fair Duel, the Prisoner ought to be acquitted." Nothing can equal the Weakness of these Assertions, but the Boldness with which they have been maintained. For weak as they are, it seems they have found very zealous Supporters. How deep, or how extensive, the Impression and Influence of them may be, I cannot say: But as the Tendency of such Notions may be of pernicious Consequence, it becomes necessary to prove that they have no Foundation, either in Law or Reason. For it would be to little Purpose to aim at establishing a Fact upon Circumstances, if they were not to be regarded; and to as little Purpose would it be (admitting the Force of Circumstances) to prove the Prisoner killed the Deceased, if his doing it in what is called a fair Duel, was believed to be a Justification.

If, Gentlemen, it be considered, that a Witness may be bribed, and the Bribe pervert and falsify his Testimony; that a Witness may be concerned in Interest, and Interest warp him into Partiality; that a Witness may be a Partaker in the Guilt, and the Fear of Punishment intimidate him into a Suppression of the Truth; if these, I say, be considered, it will be allowed, that strong circumstantial Evidence is more to be depended upon, than the positive Testimony of a single Witness. For a Series of Circumstances, which the Wit of Man could never forge, following one the other in Order both as to Time and Place, and, as in the present Case, coming from different Witnesses in different Islands, where there was no Possibility of concerting a Scheme for the Prisoner's Condemnation; so many, and such strong Circumstances pointing him out, from the first Projection to the Completion of his Scheme, force a Conviction upon the Mind, and demand Belief. Facts arising out of Circumstances are stubborn Things, and will never lie.

Hence it is, that in numberless Trials Circumstances alone have determined the Jury. The Case of Harrison and Dr. Clenche, and many others might be mentioned: But I shall only observe further, that this Kind of Proof is thought so strong, that it is ruled particularly in the Case of a Bastard Child, that if it appears there has been an Endeavour to conceal its Death, there needs no Proof that the Child was born alive, or that there were any Signs of Hurt on the Body; but it shall be undeniably taken that the Child was born alive, and murdered by the Mother*. So that Circumstances always have determined, and always will determine, the Jury in Trials, when there is no Possibility of producing Eye-witnesses of the Fact.

This, Gentlemen, is no lately invented Proof that has but just found a Place only in our Law-Books; for I would (if I may presume to take a Liberty with it) refer you to a Case of the greatest Antiquity, and most sacred Authority, that depended absolutely upon Circumstance. You will anticipate me, I am sure, and immediately perceive, that I allude to the celebrated Judgment of the Man transmitted to Posterity as the wisest of the Creation. No Witnesses as Assistants to the Birth, appeared in that Case to evince the Reality of the Mother; the Truth of the Fact seemed to depend solely on the Assertion of each interested Party. Here was an Act of Justice to be done; the Case was nice, the Decision hard; even Solomon's Wisdom was at a Stand, 'till by a happy Thought the alarming Proposal for destroying the Child, produced a Circumstance that removed the Difficulty. The Tears and Anguish of the one revealed the true Mother, and prevailed against the Vociferation and obstinate Persistence of the other.

And indeed, if there was no Ground of Belief, no Evidence on which to determine, but from the direct and positive Testimony of an Eye-witness; the Mind would be left to fluctuate in perpetual Doubt, and be irresolute in the most interesting Concerns of Life. If the Proof that arises from Circumstance, from Reasoning and Induction, be excluded out of our Notion of Evidence, it would prove too much; for how should we be able to judge of the most important Points, even of Religion itself, either natural or revealed; how should we be able to prove the most momentous of all Truths, the Existence of the supreme Being? The several Parts of the Universe are but so many Circumstances of Creation, from whence is deduced the Proof of a Creator. If that absurd and strange Opinion already mentioned was to prevail, no Crime committed against Society would be punished, but such alone as were proved by direct and positive Evidence; the Consequence of which in a little Time would be, that no Crime would meet a Punishment at all, when the Criminal had nothing to do but to sin in secret, and sin safely. There would be then an End put to the patient Attention of Courts, and the Offices of Judge and Juror would be entirely useless.

One Thing more give me Leave to submit to your Consideration. If this Kind of Evidence were excluded from the Case of Duels particularly, which are always carried on with the utmost Secrecy and Precaution, Murders of that Sort could be rarely punished. This Consideration too will grow stronger, when you recollect, that if circumstantial Evidence is not to be admitted, particularly in Duels, what Opportunity, what Encouragement will you give to this romantic, this cruel Practice, in a Country where the Duellist's Purpose to act in secret, will be assisted by the Intervention of our Slaves, who are incapacitated to be Witnesses, and who are always at Hand to carry on the dangerous Intercourse! An unhappy Circumstance attending our Situation, (if circumstantial Evidence be rejected) that the most atrocious Crimes may be committed with their Assistance, without the Fear of being convicted on their Evidence. What an Inlet this to Confusion, and even to the Dissolution of Government!

Whatsoever, Gentlemen, makes the Truth evident, although it be Circumstance, is legal Evidence; and that which satisfies your Conscience, convinces your Understanding, and induces you to believe the Prisoner guilty, is good Evidence in Law. It may seem surprizing in another Place that any Pains should be taken to make out what is in itself so clear; but let Mistakes be ever so unreasonable, 'tis proper to remove them. Other Arguments upon this Point might be drawn from the Nature of Trials and other Considerations; but as that may possibly anticipate what may be offered in Reply to the Defence which may be expected from the Prisoner, I shall content myself with having premised thus much by way of Preparation for Evidence that is entirely circumstantial.

I must appeal to you, Gentlemen of the Jury, whether you have not heard it asserted with equal Confidence, that if the Deceased met the Prisoner on his Challenge, and was fairly killed, the Prisoner ought to be acquitted. That this is not the present Case, but that the Deceased was basely murdered, before he was prepared either to attack the other or to defend himself, you will find, Gentlemen, is to be violently presumed from the Circumstances of his unloaded Pistol, his Cloak and Gloves being found upon him, and, above all, the Situation of his Wound, which the Surgeons will prove to you, from its Entrance and its Direction, could not be received by a Man in the Posture of Defence.

To the Asserters of this second Opinion, as irrational and almost as dangerous as the first, it will be in vain to prove the Prisoner's Guilt; if the imaginary Notion of Honour is to varnish the Crime, and disappoint its Punishment. For Argument-sake then, grant what is supposed, that the Duel was fair, and see how reconcileable this Opinion is to Reason, or how justifiable by the Laws. Alas! how is the Name of Honour prostituted! Can Honour be the savage Resolution, the brutal Fierceness, of a revengeful Spirit? No, Gentlemen of the Jury, search your own Bosoms, and there you'll find, that true Honour is manifested in a steady uniform Train of Actions, attended by Justice, and directed by Prudence. Is this the Conduct of the Duellist? Will Justice support the Duellist (and in the present Case, the Prisoner, if he be found guilty) in robbing the Community of an able and useful Member, and in depriving the Poor of a Benefactor? Will it support him in preparing Affliction for the Widow's Heart? in filling the Orphan's Eyes with Tears, and in bringing Sorrow and Misfortune on Friends, and a numerous Train of Dependants? Will Justice acquit him for enlarging the Punishment beyond the Offence? Will it permit him, for (perhaps) a rash Word that may admit of Apology, an unadvised Action that may be retrieved, or an Injury that may be compensated, to cut off a Man before his Days be half numbered, and for a temporary Fault, inflict an endless Punishment? On the other hand, will Prudence bear him out in risking an infamous Death, if he succeeds in the Duel? but if he falls, will it plead his Pardon at a more awful Tribunal, for rushing into the Presence of an offended God, with all his Imperfections on his Head? View the Duellist in the Light that either Religion or the Law considers him, and you'll quickly perceive and acknowledge the Illegality, the Impiety of his Spirit. Man, like the Centinel fixed to his Post, who dares not stir till he is relieved; Man, I say, must wait till Death, natural Death, the grand Relief of human Nature, shall discharge him; nor can he prodigally throw away a Life bestowed for better Purposes. The Giver, the Preserver of Life must be displeased with him who usurps a Power to cast away his own, or take away his Fellow-Creature's. Man is made in the express Image of his Maker. Shall the Duellist with Impunity, in the Person of his Fellow-Creature, destroy that Image, in impious Disobedience to that Command, which bids us not to kill?

The Laws of his Country too condemn the Duellist. The Sages of the Law, in their Books, will tell him, that Persons convicted barely of sending a Challenge, have been adjudged to pay * a large Fine, and suffer Imprisonment without Bail, to make a public Acknowledgment of their Offence, and to be bound to their good Behaviour. That where Persons coolly and deliberately engage in a Duel, which cannot but be attended with the apparent Danger of Murder, it is not only an open Defiance of the Laws, but carries with it a direct Contempt of the Justice of the Nation, as putting Men under the Necessity of righting themselves. That if two Persons in † cool Blood meet and fight on a precedent Quarrel, and one of them is killed, the other is guilty of Murder. And this the Law adjudges to be of Malice, and that the Party cannot help himself by alledging that he was first struck by the Deceased; or that he had often declined to meet him, and was prevailed upon to do it by his Importunity; or that it was only his Intent to vindicate his Reputation.

Who then after this will be hardy enough to acquit the Criminal, whom the Laws of God and Man condemn? Notwithstanding the Law declares that that he affronts public Justice, who snatches the Sword from the Magistrate's Hand, and carves out his own Revenge; yet, who so loud as the Duellist, when he has secretly butchered some worthy Man, in demanding Justice and a fair Trial? Try me, says the Prisoner, by the Laws of my Country, and I have nothing to fear. Astonishing Presumption! That he should dare to hope for the Protection of those very Laws, which he has just before disobeyed and dishonoured! That he should insult the Wisdom and Justice of the Laws of his Country, and rush contemptuously into the Duel that they forbid; and at the same Time claim a Shelter under the Mercy of them, and demand open and positive Evidence for a Murder which he has contrived and committed in Darkness! What! says the Man of Honour, forbid by Laws divine on one Hand, and restrained by human Laws on the other, must I never draw my Sword, never shew my Courage? Yes, draw the one, and exert the other, in the Cause of your Country; employ them to guard your Property from a Robber, to defend your Person from a Russian, your Bed from Dishonour, your Daughter from Violation, and to save your Friend from Assassins. These are Actions worthy of the Man of Honour.

Duelling seems to be an unnatural Graft upon genuine Courage, and the Growth of a barbarous Age. The polite Nations of Greece and Rome knew nothing of it; they reserved their Bravery for the Enemies of their Country, and then were prodigal of their Blood. These brave People set Honour up as a guardian Genius of the Public, to humanize their Passions, to preserve their Truth unblemished, and to teach them to value Life only as useful to their Country. The modern Heroes dress it up like one of the Dæmons of Superstition, besmeared with Blood, and delighting in human Sacrifice.

A Man of Honour, in the modern Sense, signifies no more, than an audacious Man, who will fight at all Events: A Man, perhaps, who has been first indebted to your Generosity, by dishonest Artifices has abused your Patience, and at last attempts your Life for calling in your Debt: A Man, perhaps, who will wound your Peace in staining the Honour of a Wife or Daughter, and afterwards, on your remonstrating the Wrong, heroically wash away those Stains in the Father's or Husband's Blood.

Senseless as this Notion of Honour is, it unhappily has its Advocates among us. But for the Prevalence of such a Notion, how could the amiable Person, whose Death has made the solemn Business of this Day, be lost to his Country, his Family and Friends? Would to God that I was a Master of Words, and it could be indulged to the Tenderness of a Friend to pay a Tribute to his Memory! I might then endeavour to set him full before you in the Variety of his Excellence: But as this, perhaps, would be venturing too far, I can only lament that such Virtue had not a longer Date; that this good Man was cut off in the Strength of his Age, e'er half his Glass was run; when his large Heart was projecting and executing Schemes to relieve Distress, and by the most surprising Acts of Beneficence, vindicating the Bounty of Providence for heaping Wealth upon him.

We shall now proceed to call our Evidence.

The other Gentlemen of Council for the King, were Mr. Wilson; and Mr. Davis.

Mr. Peter Carew sworn.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, Mr. Carew, was you at Nevis on the 7th of November last?

Carew. Yes, Sir, I was.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was Bridgewater's Estate sold that Day?

Carew. Yes, Sir, it was.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Were you present at the Sale?

Carew. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was the Deceased there?

Carew. Yes.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was the Prisoner at the Bar there?

Carew. Yes, he was.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you remember any Conversation that passed between the Prisoner at the Bar and the Deceased at the Sale?

Carew. As I went into the Room where the Estate was put up to Sale, I heard the Prisoner say to the Deceased, he expected to be treated like a Gentleman, or, he did not treat him like a Gentleman, or, Words to that Effect; which seemed to be in Answer to something the Deceased had said to him, but I did not hear what.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know whether the Prisoner and the Deceased had any Conversation after that?

Carew. I cannot tell whether they had or not.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Were they together at any Time after?

Carew. I really do not know.

Pris. Pray, what was I doing at the Time that, you say, I said this to Mr. Mills?

Carew. I cannot tell what you were doing.

Pris. Was any body in the Room at that Time?

Carew. Yes, a great many People.

Thomas Mills, Esq; sworn.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, Sir, were you at Nevis when Bridgewater's Estate was last sold?

Mills. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Were you present at the Sale?

Mills. Yes, Sir, it was on the 7th of November last.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Were the Deceased and the Prisoner at the Bar there?

Mills. Yes, they were both there.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you remember any Conversation that passed between them at the Sale, and what it was?

Mills. I remember very well that Mr. Cottle the Attorney was drawing the Conditions of Sale, and after he had finished them, the Prisoner objected to them, and the Deceased said, Mr. Barbot, the Conditions of Sale are very fair; why will you cavil about them? Upon which the Prisoner said, Sir, I expect to be treated like a Gentleman; and the Deceased replied, Sir, I shall always treat you and all Mankind as such.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you observe that the Prisoner spoke with Warmth?

Mills. Yes, he spoke very warmly.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Can you tell whether the Deceased had any Conversation with the Prisoner at the Bar, at any Time after these Words passed?

Mills. I cannot tell whether they had or no, for I left them together in the Auction-Room.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know whether the Deceased saw the Prisoner after the Day of the Sale?

Mills. I cannot positively tell, but I have great Reason to believe he did not see the Prisoner till the Morning he was killed; for after the Sale was over, over, I went with the Deceased to Molton's Bay, and on the 9th, which was the second Day after the Sale, we went to St. Christopher's together, and I saw him or heard from him every Day after, 'till the 19th that he was killed.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know whether the Deceased gave the Prisoner at the Bar any Provocation?

Mills. None, to my Knowledge.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Had he never any Difference with him at all?

Mills. None, that I know of.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Had you ever any Difference with the Prisoner at the Bar yourself?

Mills. Never any.

Mr. Sol. Gen. The Prisoner is an Attorney at Law; did he ever do any Business for you?

Mills. Yes, he has done Business for me in his Profession.

Pris. Yes, I have, and have always been very honestly paid for it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know of any Letters that passed between the Prisoner and the Deceased?

Mills. No, I do not know of any; I have heard, since the Murder, that some Letters did pass between them.

Mr. Frye. Did you hear the Prisoner say any Thing to the Deceased in a cavilling Way, at the Sale of Bridgewater's Estate?

Mills. Yes, he cavilled at the Conditions of Sale, and the Deceased imagined he wanted to delay the Sale 'till Sun-set, in order to prevent the Estate being sold that Day; and from his Behaviour I imagined so too.

Pris. You say I was cavilling; pray, were not the Conditions of the Sale, that one Third of the Purchase-Money should be paid down immediately, and the other two Thirds in a Month, or else the first Third to be forfeited? and do not you remember I said, the Court-Act did not direct it should be so, and that it was very hard to impose such Conditions, against an Act made to regulate Sales under Executions?

Mills. I do not recollect that.

Pris. Pray, was not the whole of my Behaviour warm that Day? Did I not say something warmly to Mr. Cottle?

Mills. I do not remember that you did.

Mr. Andrew Armour sworn.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mr. Armour, do you recollect any Conversation that passed between you and the Prisoner at the Bar, some Time before you heard the Report of the Deceased being killed?

Armour. I remember some Time in the Beginning of November last, the Prisoner told me that Mr. Mills had treated him cruelly, and in such a Manner as ought never to be forgiven.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, what Time in November was it?

Armour. I am almost certain it was some Time between the 3d and the 7th, but I am sure it was before the 7th; for I went to Montserrat on the 7th, and did not return to this Island 'till after the Murder.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Where was you when he said this to you?

Armour. I was standing at Mr. Constantine's Door.

Pris. Pray, Sir, was there any Company present at that Time?

Armour. No, there had been, but the Company was just gone as I came to the Door.

Pris. Did I express myself warmly?

Armour. No, I do not think you did.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did not the Prisoner tell you his Reason for saying this? Did he not tell you in what Manner Mr. Mills had behaved to him, to occasion his saying this of him?

Armour. No, he only said generally, that Mr. Mills had treated him in such a Manner as ought never to be forgiven.

Pris. Who was in Company, do you say?

Armour. No body, the Company was just gone as I came up.

Pris. Had I any other Conversation with you about Mr. Mills?

Armour. Not that I remember; I do not recollect any other than what I have already related.

Mr. President. Did the Prisoner say which Mills it was that ought never to be forgiven?

Armour. No, Sir, he only said Mr. Mills.

Mr. President. Which Mills did you apprehend it to be?

Armour. I took it to be Mr. Matthew Mills.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Gentlemen, pray take Notice of what Mr. Armour says. Did you, from the Tenor of the Discourse between you, apprehend it to be Mr. Matthew Mills that the Prisoner meant?

Armour. Yes, Sir, I did.

Mr. Justice Losack. Pray, clear up this Point—Mr. Armour, did you then know, or have you known since, that, previous to this Declaration of the Prisoner to you, he had any Difference or Quarrel with Mr. Thomas Mills, or Mr. William Mills?

Armour. No, I never heard he had any Difference with either.

Mr. J. Losack. Did you know he was on good Terms with both those Gentlemen?

Armour. I knew nothing to the contrary.

Pris. I never had any Difference with either of those Gentlemen.

Mr. J. Losack. Pray, what Reason had you to imagine it was the Deceased that the Prisoner meant?

Armour. Because he mentioned Mr. Mills only, without any Christian Name by way of Distinction; I concluded from thence it was the Deceased that he meant.

Patience Dorset sworn.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mrs. Dorset, do you know the Prisoner at the Bar?

Dorset. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How long have you known him?

Dorset. Above a Twelve-month.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Give the Court and the Jury an Account of what you heard him say at any Time before you heard the Report of the Deceased being killed.

Dorset. Upon the King's Birth-day Mrs. McCabe (the Tavern-Keeper's Wife) sent to desire I would come and help her, for they were to provide an Entertainment for the Lieutenant-General and a great deal of Company that Day. Accordingly I went, and as I was going into the House, the Prisoner was standing under the Gallery talking to two Men, and as I was passing by, I heard him say, There was a certain Gentleman in this Island, that within a Fortnight he would either kill or be killed by.

Mr.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What Time of the Day was this?

Dorset. Between Eleven and Twelve in the Forenoon.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you hear any Guns fire that Day?

Dorset. Yes, I heard a great many.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know the Persons the Prisoner was talking to?

Dorset. No, I never saw them, to my Knowledge, before nor since that Time.

Pris. Are you sure it was on the King's Birth-day you heard me say those Words?

Dorset. Yes, I am very sure it was.

Mr. Frye. It is very well: We shall bring Witnesses to prove the Prisoner was at Nevis on the King's Birth-day.

Doctor James Webbe sworn.

Mr. Horne. Doctor Webbe, do you know the Prisoner at the Bar?

Webbe. Before I answer any Questions, I pray the Court will favour me with a Word. I am brought down from Nevis, where I live, as an Evidence on this Trial, and I desire the Protection of this Court from any Arrests that may be issued against me. I am a Stranger in this Island, and it would be impossible for me, if I was arrested, to find Security. Another Thing too, I am afraid of being assassinated.

Mr. Sol. Gen. This is not the Country of Assassins; they come from elsewhere.

Mr. President. What Reason have you to apprehend being assassinated?

Webbe. Sir, I have been told there is an Intention to assassinate me.

Mr. President. Who has told you so?

Webbe. I have heard it commonly reported, Sir.

Mr. President. Can you fix the Intention on any particular Person?

Webbe. No, Sir, but I am afraid of Mr. Mills's Family in general; and I desire Mr. Colboun will give me Security, that I may go in Safety from Mr. Mills's Family to Nevis.

Mr. Colboun. May it please your Honours, if Dr. Webbe will swear that he is in Danger of his Life from me, or from any Part of Mr. Mills's Family, I am very willing to give him the Security he asks.

Mr. President. Doctor Webbe, you hear what Mr. Colboun offers; what say you to it?

Webbe. Sir, I cannot take upon me to swear any more than that I have heard there is an Intention to assassinate me.

Mr. President. It is very strange you should not know from whom you heard so!

Webbe. I did not hear it from any particular Person: I have heard it commonly reported.

Mr. President. Well then, unless you can charge some particular Person, we can take no Notice of it. Surely you would not have us bind over the whole Island!

Webbe. Then, Sir, I desire I may have my Expences paid me since I have been down here.

Mr. President. No, you cannot; for this is a Prosecution at the Suit of the Crown, and in that Case the Witnesses always bear their own Charges. With respect to your being arrested, the Court will protect you from any Arrests during their Sitting. Mr. Solicitor, go on with your Evidence.

Mr. Horne. Do you know the Prisoner at the Bar?

Webbe. Yes.

VOL. X.

Mr. Horne. How long have you known him?

Webbe. Between four and five Years.

Mr. Horne. Did you not usually consult and advise with him in your Affairs?

Webbe. I have employed him as an Attorney.

Mr. Horne. Were you present when Bridgewater's Estate was sold last at Nevis?

Webbe. Yes, I was.

Mr. Horne. Did not that Estate belong to you, and was it not sold for a Debt of yours?

Webbe. Yes, it was my Estate, and was sold for a Debt of mine.

Mr. Horne. When was it sold?

Webbe. On the 7th of November last.

Mr. Horne. Were the Prisoner at the Bar and the Deceased present at the Sale?

Webbe. Yes, they were.

Mr. Horne. Did not the Provost-Marshal make Conditions of Sale?

Webbe. Yes, I believe there were Terms of Sale.

Mr. Horne. Were those Conditions read, before the Estate was put up to Sale?

Webbe. I believe they were, but I am not certain.

Mr. Horne. What were the Conditions, pray?

Webbe. I do not remember what they were.

Mr. Horne. Did the Prisoner make any Objections to them?

Webbe. I heard him say, We will be bound by these Conditions, as far as the Law can bind us, and no farther; and that the Marshal had no Right to make any Terms of Sale.

Mr. Horne. Did you hear him make no other Objection? Were there no other Words past?

Webbe. No, only the Deceased said, We will have no School-Boy's Play.

Mr. Horne. What Answer did the Prisoner make to that?

Webbe. I do not know, I did not hear any Answer.

Mr. Horne. Why, were you not present all the Time?

Webbe. No, I was backward and forward.

Mr. Horne. How near was you to the Prisoner, when he said what you have related?

Webbe. About the Distance of the Room off.

Mr. Horne. And did you hear nothing else that passed on the Occasion?

Webbe. No, Sir.

Mr. Horne. How came you so unconcerned, as not to attend to what was going forward?

Webbe. I was so confused I could not mind any thing.

Mr. Horne. What was the Cause of your Confusion?

Webbe. The Estate being sold.

Mr. Horne. Did the Prisoner at your Request purchase that Estate?

Webbe. Yes, he did purchase it at my Request.

Mr. Horne. One would imagine, that, as you were so nearly concerned in the Purchase of the Estate, you would have been more attentive to all that passed.

Webbe. I was walking backward and forward, and getting Mr. Jacob Saunders to sign the Bills for the Purchase-Money.

Mr. Horne. You say you were much confused; pray, did your Confusion proceed from Concern or Resentment?

Webbe. From Concern at having my Estate sold.

Mr. Horne. How long did the Deceased stay at Nevis after the Sale?

Webbe. I do not know, I never saw him after.

Mr. Horne. Did the Prisoner see him after the Sale?

Webbe. I do not know that he did.

Mr. Horne. Did the Prisoner go Home with you after the Sale?

Webbe. No.

Mr. Horne. When was the first Time that you saw him after the Sale?

Webbe. I saw him the next Day.

Mr. Horne. Do you not live in great Intimacy with the Prisoner?

Webbe. Yes, I am intimate with him.

Mr. Horne. Has he not confided in you often?

Webbe. Yes, he has.

Mr. Horne. The next Day after the Sale that you saw the Prisoner, did he not tell you the Conversation that had passed between the Deceased and him at the Sale?

Webbe. No.

Mr. Horne. Had you no Conversation at all about the Sale?

Webbe. No, we only talked about the Bills.

Mr. Horne. Did you see the Prisoner the Day after that? on the 9th?

Webbe. Yes.

Mr. Horne. What Conversation had you with him then?

Webbe. I do not remember the Conversation.

Juryman. Had you no Conversation about the Estate that Day?

Webbe. I do not remember we had.

Juryman. It is very strange, that you, who was the Purchaser of the Estate, should not say something of it to the Prisoner, who purchased it for you; or that you should not remember what he said to you about it!

Webbe. We had frequent Conversations about the Estate, but I do not remember the Particulars of them.

Mr. Horne. Did you make no Inquiry about the Event of the Sale?

Webbe. No.

Mr. Horne. Did you never hear any Complaint from the Prisoner of his having been ill-treated at the Sale?

Webbe. Not that I remember.

Mr. Horne. Try to recollect: I am sure, Sir, your Memory will serve you on this Occasion, if you please. Did you never hear the Prisoner mention any thing of Satisfaction, or Ill-treatment?

Webbe. Never.

Mr. Horne. Did you never hear him express any Dissatisfaction at the Conditions of Sale?

Webbe. I heard him say they were contrary to Law.

Mr. Horne. Did he not complain of the Hardship of them?

Webbe. I do not remember that he did.

Mr. Horne. Did you yourself complain of the Conditions?

Webbe. I said I thought them hard too, and I advised him not to sign them.

Mr. President. You said in the Beginning of your Evidence, that you knew not what the Conditions of Sale were, and now you say you advised the Prisoner not to sign them, because you thought them hard; surely you must have known what the Conditions were, or you could not have given him such Advice. This is strangely inconnected indeed!

Webbe. I advised him not to sign any Conditions at all.

Mr. Horne. Do you know whether the Prisoner went to St. Christopher's after the Sale of the Estate?

Webbe. I do not know that he did.

Mr. Horne. Pray, are not you a Guardian to Mrs. Dasent's Daughter?

Webbe. Yes.

Mr. Horne. Did not Mrs. Dasent apply to you, and tell you she thought it improper for the Prisoner to stay at her House, and did not she desire you to speak to the Prisoner not to continue there?

Webbe. Yes, she did apply to me, and I did desire the Prisoner to leave her House, and to come to mine.

Mr. Horne. And did he go to your House?

Webbe. Yes.

Mr. Horne. When did he go there?

Webbe. He came to my House on the 16th of November at Night.

Mr. Horne. How long did he stay there?

Webbe. He stayed there all the next Day.

Mr. Horne. Did he never say any thing to you on the Subject of the Dispute that had happened at the Sale of Bridgwater's Estate?

Webbe. No, he never did.

Mr. Horne. Do not you know, or did not you hear the Prisoner say, he had hired a Canoo from John Cribbe to carry him down to St. Christopher's?

Webbe. No, I never heard him say so, nor I do not know that he did.

Mr. Horne. Where was the Prisoner on the 18th of November?

Webbe. On the 18th he went to Mr. Jacob Saunders's, where we dined.

Mr. Horne. Did not you and the Prisoner execute a Bond of Indemnity to Mr. Jacob Saunders that Day?

Webbe. Yes, we executed a Bond to indemnify him for indorsing the Bills for the Purchase-Money of the Estate.

Mr. Horne. Do you know whether the Prisoner sent any Letters to St. Christopher's on the 18th?

Webbe. He told me he had wrote to Dr. William Mills, about Mr. Symmonds's Affair.

Mr. Horne. Did the Prisoner receive any Letters from St. Christopher's that Day?

Webbe. While we were at Mr. Saunders's, the Prisoner's Negro Boy brought him a Packet from St. Christopher's, and the Prisoner shewed me a Letter he had received from Dr. William Mills.

Mr. Horne. Did he shew you no other Letter?

Webbe. No.

Mr. Horne. Nor tell you he had received any Letter from the Deceased?

Webbe. No.

Mr. Horne. Did nothing more pass while you were at Saunders's, than what you have already related?

Webbe. Nothing more, that I remember.

Mr. Horne. Were you not at O Donnell's Tavern with the Prisoner, the Night before the Murder?

Webbe. Yes, we were that Evening at O Donnell's.

Mr. Horne. Did not you know the Prisoner intended to execute some Paper, or Writing, that Evening?

Webbe. No, I did not.

Mr. Horne. Did not you see the Prisoner that Evening writing a Paper at O Donnell's?

Webbe. Yes, I saw him writing at a Side-table.

Mr. Horne. What was it he was then writing?

Webbe. I do not know.

Mr. Horne. Do not you know he was then making his Will?

Webbe.

Webbe. No, I do not know whether it was a Will, or what it was.

Mr. Horne. Did not the Prisoner desire you to procure three Witnesses to attest that Paper? and did not you desire one Springett not to be out of the Way that Evening?

Webbe. Yes, I believe he did desire me, and I did speak to Springett not to be out of the Way.

Mr. Horne. Did not you look over the Prisoner while he was writing?

Webbe. No.

Mr. Horne. Nor did not you read what he was writing?

Webbe. No.

Mr. Horne. Nor after he had finished it?

Webbe. No.

Mr. Horne. You read no Part of it at all?

Webbe. No.

Mr. Horne. Was you in the Room all the Time the Prisoner was writing?

Webbe. No, I was in and out.

Mr. Horne. Did not the Prisoner call you frequently while he was writing?

Webbe. Yes.

Mr. Horne. What did he say to you at those Times?

Webbe. I remember nothing but his asking me if I had got the Witnesses ready.

Mr. Horne. Did not he whisper to you?

Webbe. No.

Mr. Horne. Did he say nothing else to you?

Webbe. No, he only asked me if the Witnesses were come.

Mr. Horne. Do you know the Contents of the Paper the Prisoner was writing?

Webbe. No.

Mr. Horne. Did not he shew it you while he was writing it?

Webbe. No.

Mr. Horne. Who were the Witnesses to it?

Webbe. Mr. O Donnell, Mr. Potts, and Mr. Springett.

Mr. Horne. Did the Prisoner execute it in their Presence?

Webbe. Yes.

Mr. Horne. Did not you know, or had not you great Reason to believe, it was his Will?

Webbe. I do not know it was his Will: It might have been his Will, or a Power of Attorney; for I heard him say, he would either make a Will, or give a Power of Attorney to secure Mr. Jacob Saunders for indorsing his Bills.

Mr. Horne. How could a Will or a Power of Attorney secure Mr. Saunders? Besides, what Necessity was there for either, when the Prisoner had that very Day joined you in a Bond of Indemnity to Mr. Saunders?

Webbe. I do not know, but he said he would do so.

Mr. Horne. Did not the Prisoner tell you he had made you a Legatee in his Will?

Webbe. No, he did not.

Mr. Horne. What did the Prisoner do with that Paper, when he had executed it?

Webbe. He gave it to me.

Mr. Horne. Did you look into it at the Time he gave it to you?

Webbe. No.

Mr. Horne. Was it sealed or open when he gave it to you?

Webbe. It was folded up, but not sealed.

Mr. Horne. When the Prisoner delivered it to you, did he pronounce any Words?

Webbe. None that I heard.

Mr. Horne. In whose Custody is that Paper now?

Webbe. In mine, it is at Nevis.

Mr. Horne. Was it indorsed?

Webbe. No.

Mr. Horne. Was it ever recorded?

Webbe. No.

Mr. Horne. What did you really take it to be?

Webbe. I thought it was a Power of Attorney to secure Jacob Saunders.

Mr. Horne. Did you never read it, nor look into it at all?

Webbe. No, I never did.

Mr. J. Losack. It is very strange you should not have the least Curiosity to look into a Paper, that, by your own Confession, was so relative to your own Concerns! But, upon the Oath you have taken, did the Prisoner say any thing to you, and what, at the Time he delivered into your Hands the Paper we are now upon, at the Tavern?

Webbe. No, he said nothing at all to me.

Mr. J. Losack. Did he not tell you it was his Will?

Webbe. No.

Mr. J. Losack. Upon your Oath, Dr. Webbe, did he not inform you it was his Will, and that you were a Legatee in it?

Webbe. No, he did not.

Mr. J. Losack. Is Dr. Webbe's Examination, which was taken at Nevis, in Court?

Cl. of Arr. Yes, Sir.

Mr. J. Losack. Please to hand it up here.

Mr. Horne. I pray that Judge Herbert may be called, and the Examination read; for this Gentleman has now contradicted what he positively swore to before Judge Herbert.

Joseph Herbert, Esq, sworn.

Mr. Horne. Judge Herbert, is not that the Hand-writing of Dr. Webbe subscribed to that Examination? and was not that Examination sworn to and subscribed by Dr. Webbe before you?

Mr. Herbert. Yes, this Examination was subscribed by Dr. Webbe, and sworn to before me, and that is my Hand to the Jurat.

Mr. Horne. Was not the Examination read by Dr. Webbe, or read to him, before he swore to it?

Mr. Herbert. Yes, the Examination was by my Desire written by Mr. Cottle the Attorney, and taken from Dr. Webbe's own Lips, and afterwards read by Mr. Cottle to Dr. Webbe before he swore to it, or before the Doctor had signed it, and he read it himself also.

Mr. President. Mr. Smith, read Dr. Webbe's Examination.

Cl. of Arr. Nevis, Before the Honourable Joseph Herbert, Esq, Chief-Justice of his Majesty's Court of King's-Bench and Common-Pleas, in the Island of Nevis, and Samuel Clarke and Sommers Payne, Esqrs. Justices of the same Bench.

The Examination of James Webbe, of the said Island, Surgeon, who being sworn on the holy Evangelists of almighty God, deposeth and saith,

THAT on Thursday the 16th Day of this Instant, Deponent going to his House, found John Barbot there.

That it was some Time in the Evening after Candle-light, when he so returned Home; but Deponent knoweth not the Time precisely, or any particular Hour near it.

That

That said John Barbot continued at this Deponent's with Deponent till the Saturday following, when they dined at Mr. Jacob Saunders's, and staid there till about Five in the Evening, when Barbot and Deponent both went away from thence to Mr. Edward Paris's, where they made a Stay of about Half an Hour, and thence came to Charles-Town to Mr. O Donnell's Tavern, where they staid about an Hour, and then went directly Home to Deponent's House, where they arrived about Nine o'Clock, as Deponent believes.

That the said Barbot, soon after his coming to Deponent's House, declared he was sleepy, and wished Deponent a good Night, and went to Bed, as Deponent believes; that Deponent being troubled with a Lax, got up in the Night to go to the Necessary-house, and on passing through the Hall for that Purpose, said Barbot called to Deponent, and asked him, what was the Matter? To which Deponent replied, nothing had happened, or was the Matter: Said Barbot then asked, what it was o'Clock? Deponent told him, he believed it was about One: No other Conversation then passed. Deponent did not see or hear said Barbot 'till the next Morning, Sunday the 19th Instant, when said Barbot came to Deponent's House on Horseback, upon one of Deponent's own Horses, between Eight and Nine o'Clock, attended by a Boy-Slave called Nero.

Barbot continued with Deponent 'till they both set out for Gingerland Parish, in order to dine abroad; and Deponent parted with said Barbot at Mr. Pemberton's Negro-Houses, when said Barbot took Leave of Deponent, who told him he was going to dine at Deponent's Uncle George Webbe's. That Deponent then went and dined at Mr. Maynard's; from thence he went with Mr. Maynard to Capt. Symmonds's; but whilst he was at Mr. Maynard's, a Negro Man came to inquire for Deponent, and asked Deponent, who was then by himself in a back Room upon a Bed, if he knew where Mr. Barbot was? Deponent told him, he was at Stony-hill; the Negro then went out, and soon afterwards returned, and told Deponent, that there were People come from St. Christopher's after Mr. Barbot, for killing Mr. Mills, or the Gentleman upon Toby Wall's Estate; but Deponent does not particularly remember which. The Boy told no other white Person in the Family. About Half an Hour after Deponent's hearing this Account from the Boy, Deponent and Mr. Maynard set out for Capt. Symmonds's as aforesaid, where he received a Note from said Barbot, desiring him, upon the Receipt thereof, to come to the said Barbot directly at Mr. John Herbert's; upon which Deponent went to him immediately, and found him drinking Tea. Barbot soon afterwards told Deponent he wanted to speak with him, and they both went out together into the Necessary-house. Barbot there asked Deponent, if he had heard any Thing of the killing Mr. Mills; the Deponent told him, yes, he had heard it at Capt. Symmonds's, who read a Letter which had been received from St. Kitt's about it, and that he (Capt. Symmonds) was gone after him (Barbot) to take him. Barbot replied, he did not care, he should not go out of the Way, for he knew nothing of the Matter. This was the Purport of all the Conversation which passed between Deponent and Barbot in the Necessary-house, 'till the Constables appeared to take him. That Deponent never heard, saw, knew, or was informed of any Letters or Messages that passed between the said Barbot and the deceased

Mr. Mills. That Deponent and said Barbot were one Day at the Widow of James Dasant's House upon Saddle-hill, when she was from Home; when Deponent took up a Case of Pistols that were lying in the House, and said he would try whether he could shoot with them, and asked the said Barbot if he would go; and they accordingly went out and fired several Shot together at the Head of a Barrel. That Deponent believes it was about the Time Mrs. Hickman was sick, and that Deponent believes Mrs. Dasant was then gone to visit her.

That on the Saturday Evening when the said Barbot came to Mr. O Donnell's Tavern as aforesaid, he made his Will; that the said O Donnell, and Charles Potts, and John Springett, both in the Deponent's Service, were Witnesses to the same; the Will was delivered to the Deponent that same Night; that said Barbot informed Deponent he was a Legatee. That the Road Deponent and Barbot went that said Saturday Night to Deponent's House, was through Willet's Estate. That said Barbot was writing at Mr. O Donnell's House that same Saturday Night, and Deponent believes it was his Will. That Deponent was present when the said Barbot's Will was executed, and does not recollect any Conversation that passed between the said O Donnell and Barbot on that Occasion, nor that, upon the said O Donnell's saying to said Barbot, that this (meaning the executing the said Will) looked like a military Settlement of a Man's Affairs, he this Deponent said hush to the said O Donnell, or made use of any other Means to desire the said O Donnell to keep Silence.

Mr. J. Lofack. Did you not ask the Prisoner where he had been?

Webbe. No.

Mr. Horne. Did you not ask him why he took your Horse and Boy without your Leave?

Webbe. No, for he was always welcome to my Horse and Boy too; he had my Leave to take them, whenever he wanted them; and he had frequently taken them without first acquainting me of it.

Mr. Horne. Where did you imagine the Prisoner had been?

Webbe. I had no Suspicion of where he had been; I thought he had been wenching.

Webbe. At a Barrel-head.

Mr. Horne. On what Day was it?

Webbe. The Sunday before the Deceased was killed.

Mr. Horne. Who did the Pistols belong to?

Webbe. They were a Pair of James Dasent's.

Mr. Horne. Are these the Pistols? (a Pair of Pistols shewn him.)

Webbe. I believe they are.

Mr. Horne. When you were exercising the Pistols, had you any Conversation with the Prisoner about the Deceased?

Webbe. No.

Mr. Horne. What became of the Pistols, when you had done exercising them?

Webbe. I ordered one of Mrs. Dasent's Boys to clean them.

Mr. Horne. Where were the Pistols generally kept at Mrs. Dasent's?

Webbe. There was no fixed Place for them: Sometimes they were kept in the Shop, and sometimes in the Judge's Room on a Beam.

Mr. Horne. When did you hear that Mrs. Dasent missed the Pistols?

Webbe. On Monday, the Day after I heard the Report of the Deceased being killed, Mrs. Dasent sent to me to desire I would go to her: I went to her accordingly, and she told me she missed a Pair of Pistols, and had been looking for them, but could not find them. She seemed frightened, and asked me, if I knew where they were? I said, I did not, but I would help her to look for them; and I went into the Shop, and searched there, but could not find them; from thence I went with her into the Judge's Room, and I said, Let us look under the Bed; and I sat upon the Bed, and took up the Base, and found the Pistols under the Bed.

Mr. Horne. Why, did you know where they were, that you so readily found them?

Webbe. No, I did not know where they were.

Mr. Horne. Were they not in Holster Caps?

Webbe. Yes, lying on a Box upon the Floor: The Caps were mouldy.

Mr. Horne. Did the Pistols appear to have been lately made use of?

Webbe. I cannot tell, I did not examine them.

Mr. Horne. Were they the same Pistols the Prisoner fired at the Mark with.

Night

Night before you heard the Deceased was killed, to lend him your Horse, or your Boy Pope?

Webbe. No.

Mr. Horne. Nor had you no Suspicion of his going out that Night?

Webbe. None at all; nor I did not know where he had been 'till the next Morning, that Pope told me he had been at Melton's Bay.

Mr. Horne. Did not you miss Pope that Night?

Webbe. No, I did not miss him 'till I saw him in the Morning coming up with the Prisoner.

Mr. Horne. Where did you dine on Sunday the 19th of November? and where did the Prisoner dine that Day?

Webbe. The Prisoner dined at my Uncle Webbe's at Stony-hill, and I dined at Mr. Maynard's.

Mr. Horne. Did the Prisoner stay at your House all that Morning, from the Time you saw him alight, 'till he went to your Uncle's to Dinner?

Webbe. Yes, he did, and I rode with him to the turning off at Mr. Ottley's, where we parted; I went to Mr. Maynard's, and he went to my Uncle's.

Mr. Horne. Had you no Conversation with the Prisoner about the Deceased then? Did he not tell you of his having killed the Deceased, or having fought a Duel with him that Morning?

Webbe. No, he did not say a Word about the Matter.

Mr. Horne. Did not you hear of the Murder while you were at Mr. Maynard's?

Webbe. Yes.

Mr. Horne. By what Means did you hear it?

Webbe. A Negro came to me and told me, that Mr. Barbot had killed Mr. Mills.

Mr. Horne. Whose Negro told you this, and who sent him to tell you? Did not you inquire?

Webbe. I do not know whose Negro it was: I did not inquire, and do not know who sent him.

Mr. Horne. This is extremely odd, that a Negro should come and tell you this News, and you not inquire whom he belonged to, or who sent him! When you heard this, did you tell the News to Mr. Maynard's Family?

Webbe. I do not know whether I did or not, but I believe I did tell it.

Mr. Horne. Strange indeed! that upon hearing such News as must have surprized and concerned every other Man, you should be so very indifferent about it, as not to recollect positively your telling it to the Family!

Webbe. I believe I told them the News.

Mr. Horne. How long did you stay at Mr. Maynard's after hearing the News?

Webbe. Not very long.

Mr. Horne. Where did you go from thence?

Webbe. I went to Mr. John Symmonds's.

Mr. Horne. Who did you find there?

Webbe. Mr. Edward Bridgewater.

Mr. Horne. Did you tell them the News of the Murder, when you went there?

Webbe. No, I did not.

Mr. Horne. Did you not receive a Letter from the Prisoner, while you were at Mr. Symmonds's?

Webbe. Yes, I received a Note from him.

Mr. Horne. What was the Purport of it?

Webbe. It was, as well as I remember, Dear Doctor, I want much to see you; on Receipt of this, come immediately to me.

Mr. Horne. Did not Mr. Symmonds, while you were at his House, receive a Letter, giving him an Account of the Murder?

Webbe. Yes, he did.

Mr. Horne. Did he not, upon receiving the News, ask you, if the Prisoner did not sleep at your House the Night before?

Webbe. Yes, he did; and I told him that the Prisoner had slept at my House the Night before.

Mr. Horne. Did he not ask you, if you had seen the Prisoner that Morning?

Webbe. Yes, I believe he did.

Mr. Horne. What Answer did you make him?

Webbe. I do not recollect the Answer.

Mr. Horne. Did you, or did you not tell him, you had not seen the Prisoner that Day?

Webbe. I do not recollect what I told him.

Mr. Horne. Did not Mr. Symmonds, on hearing the News of the Murder, say, he would go and assist the Posse in taking the Prisoner? and did he not immediately order his Horse, and set out for that Purpose?

Webbe. Yes, he did say he would go and assist, and did order his Horse, and I believe did go.

Mr. Horne. Did you make any Offer to assist in taking the Prisoner, or did you tell Mr. Symmonds where the Prisoner was?

Webbe. No, I did not.

Mr. Horne. Why did you not offer to give your Assistance? Was it not the Duty of every honest Man to assist in taking up a Murderer? What was your Reason for behaving with that Indifference, on a Matter of such Consequence?

Webbe. It was none of my Business. I did not like such troublesome Jobs.

Mr. Horne. It is very strange you should act thus, when a Gentleman of Mr. Mills's universal good Character had lost his Life, nay, when it was reported he had been murdered! Surely you must have had some very particular private Reasons for such a Behaviour!

Webbe. I did not care to meddle in such Matters; I thought it was nothing to me.

Mr. Horne. How long did you stay at Mr. Symmonds's, after you received the Letter you mention from the Prisoner?

Webbe. I did not stay long; I went immediately to Mr. John Herbert's, where I found the Prisoner.

Mr. Horne. Who was with the Prisoner?

Webbe. No body but the Family, they were drinking Tea.

Mr. Horne. Where was the Prisoner taken?

Webbe. At Mr. John Herbert's.

Mr. Horne. Was you present when he was taken?

Webbe. Yes, I was.

Mr. Horne. How long had you been with the Prisoner before he was taken?

Webbe. Not long.

Mr. Horne. How long?

Webbe. I cannot positively say.

Mr. Horne. Pray, Sir, recollect how long.

Webbe. When I came in, they were drinking Tea; and the Prisoner took a Turn or two about the House, and then desired to speak with me, and we went into the Necessary-house, where he was taken by the Officers of Justice.

Mr. Horne. This, Sir, does not answer the Question. Pray, Sir, tell the Court and Jury how long (as near as you can recollect) you were with the Prisoner at Mr. John Herbert's, before he was taken.

Webbe. We were in the Necessary-house, I believe, about five Minutes before he was taken.

Mr. Horne. Pray, what did the Prisoner say to you when he took you aside there?

Webbe.

Webbe. I do not recollect what he said to me.

Mr. Horne. What! not recollect what he said to you, when you had been sent for by the Prisoner upon a Matter of such Consequence! You say, you had heard the News of the Prisoner's killing the Deceased; the Prisoner wrote to desire you to come immediately to him: You went, you say, directly to him, and were in private with him, the Prisoner, your very particular Friend; and, notwithstanding all this, you cannot recollect what passed between you! This is very strange! But pray, Sir, recollect yourself, and tell the Conversation.

Webbe. I cannot recollect positively what passed, for I did not take much Notice of it. I believe he said something of the Report of his having killed Mr. Mills. He asked me, if I had heard the Report of his having murdered Mr. Mills? I told him, yes, I had heard it; and he said, he should not fly for it, for he knew nothing of it.

Mr. Horne. Did he, or did he not tell you, he had killed Mr. Mills that Morning?

Webbe. No, he did not.

Mr. Horne. Did no other Conversation pass between you and the Prisoner at that Time?

Webbe. No other, that I remember.

Mr. Horne. Did you not ask him whether he had been off Nevis?

Webbe. No, I did not.

Mr. Horne. Did not the Prisoner, after he was taken into Custody, take you aside in Mr. Herbert's Hall, and speak in private with you?

Webbe. Yes, he did.

Mr. Horne. What did he say to you at that Time?

Webbe. He desired me to speak to my Uncle George Webbe, to let him have ten Pistoles.

Mr. Horne. Did nothing more pass?

Webbe. Nothing more.

Mr. J. Lofack. Was that all he whispered to you?

Webbe. Yes, Sir, all.

Mr. J. Lofack. Was it necessary to convey such a Request in a Whisper?

Mr. Horne. How long was you aside with the Prisoner at that Time?

Webbe. About two or three Minutes.

Mr. Horne. Did he give you any Papers at that Time?

Webbe. No, he did not.

Mr. Horne. Did you see the Prisoner while he was in Gaol at Nevis?

Webbe. Yes, I saw him once.

Mr. Horne. What Conversation had you with him then?

Webbe. I desired him to make over Bridgwater's Estate to me.

Mr. Horne. What else?

Webbe. I do not remember any thing else.

Mr. Horne. Had you no other Conversation at all?

Webbe. I do not recollect any thing but that.

Mr. Horne. Do you know whether the Prisoner burnt any Papers while he was in Gaol?

Webbe. I heard Mr. Burnet the Marshal say he did.

Mr. Horne. Do not you know it of your own Knowledge?

Webbe. No, I only heard Mr. Burnet say so.

Mr. Horne. Did not you hear from the Prisoner what those Papers were that he burnt?

Webbe. No.

Mr. Horne. Did the Prisoner ever give you any Paper relative to this Murder?

Webbe. No, he never did.

Mr. Horne. Where was your Boy Pope on the Saturday Night preceding the Murder?

Webbe. At Home.

Mr. Horne. Did you send him out on any Errand that Night?

Webbe. No.

Mr. Horne. Did you send any of your Horses out?

Webbe. No.

Mr. Horne. You did not positively send either your Boy Pope or your Horse out at all that Night?

Webbe. No, I did not positively.

Mr. Horne. Were you sent for that Night by any of your Patients?

Webbe. No.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Gentlemen of the Jury, I beg, for a particular Reason, that you would attend to this Part of Dr. Webbe's Evidence. He says, that the Night preceding the Murder, he neither sent out his Boy Pope, nor any of his Horses; and further, that he himself was not sent for by any of his Patients.

Mr. Horne. Did you give the Prisoner any Dram or Cordial that Night?

Webbe. No.

Mr. Horne. Did you make any Composition for him?

Webbe. No.

Mr. Horne. When you got up that Night, did you observe what kind of Night it was?

Webbe. Yes, it was a very boisterous Night.

Mr. Horne. Would you have gone out in such a Night for Pleasure?

Webbe. No, I should not.

Mr. Horne. Do you know whether Pope was at Bridgwater's Estate that Night?

Webbe. I cannot tell whether he was or no.

Mr. Horne. Do you think that, from the Time you spoke to the Prisoner that Night, to the Time you saw him riding up to your House the next Morning, he could have been at St. Christopher's and back again?

Webbe. Yes, I believe he might.

Mr. Horne. Were you present at Mrs. Dasent's, when the Prisoner's Trunk was opened?

Webbe. Yes.

Mr. Horne. What was in it?

Webbe. There was a Coat and Waistcoat, and some Linen.

Mr. Horne. Was not there a Night-gown?

Webbe. Not that I saw.

Mr. Horne. Were the Coat and Waistcoat wet?

Webbe. Yes, they were moist.

Mr. Horne. What Part of them was moist?

Webbe. I cannot tell what particular Part, but they were moist.

Mr. Horne. Are these the same Coat and Waistcoat that were found in the Trunk, and is this the Trunk (the Prisoner's Trunk and Cloaths shewn him) in which they were found?

Webbe. I believe they are the same, and I believe that is the Trunk.

Mr. Horne. Are these the same Coat and Waistcoat the Prisoner had on, when he came to your House on Sunday Morning, the 19th of November last?

Webbe. I cannot tell whether they are or not.

Mr. Horne. Is this the Prisoner's Trunk?

Webbe.

Webbe. I do not know.

Mr. Horne. Did you know that the Coat and Waistcoat were in the Trunk at your House?

Webbe. No, I knew nothing of the Matter.

Mr. Horne. May it please your Honours, we have done with this Witness.

Mr. President. Mr. Barbot, the King's Council have done with this Witness, would you ask him any Questions?

Pris. No, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then call Hugh O Donnell, (who appeared, and was sworn.)

Mr. O Donnell, do you keep a Tavern at Nevis?

O Donnell. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you remember to have heard the Report of the Deceased being killed?

O Donnell. Yes, I heard it on Sunday the 19th of November last.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you remember to have seen the Prisoner the Night before you heard the Report?

O Donnell. The Night before I heard the Report, between Seven and Eight o'Clock, Dr. Webbe, and Mr. Barbot the Prisoner at the Bar, rode up to my House. I called to the Prisoner, and gave him a Letter that had been left at my House for him. As soon as I gave him the Letter, he attempted to read it by the Light of the Moon; but finding, I suppose, that he could not, he alit off his Horse, and came into the House; Dr. Webbe followed him in, and the Prisoner, as soon as he came in, asked for Pen, Ink, and Paper, which was brought him, and he sat down to write, and continued writing for a considerable Time.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was Doctor Webbe in the Room with the Prisoner while he was writing?

O Donnell. Yes, the Prisoner called to him several Times, and he went to him.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did the Prisoner speak to him while he was writing?

O Donnell. Yes, but I did not hear what he said, for they spoke in a kind of Whisper.

Mr. Sol. Gen. When the Prisoner called Dr. Webbe to him, did Dr. Webbe look over him?

O Donnell. Yes, he did look over him.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What did the Prisoner do with the Paper he was writing, when he had finished it?

O Donnell. As soon as it was finished, he sealed it, and the Prisoner and Dr. Webbe went into another Room; and after some little Time, Dr. Webbe came out, and desired Dr. Potts, Mr. Springett, and myself, to go in and witness a Paper: We went into the Room, where the Prisoner was, and we did see him write his Name to the Seal.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you see him acknowledge it?

O Donnell. Yes, he put his Thumb on the Seal, and spoke some Words, but they were hurried over so inarticulately, that I did not understand them.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Tell in what Manner he did it.

O Donnell. When he took his Thumb off the Seal, he said, seal and deliver this, and then mumbled over some Words (as I said before) so very inarticulately, that I did not understand them.

Mr. Justice Greatheed. Was there any Thing written just over the Place where you signed?

O Donnell. I believe there was, but he covered that with his Hand.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, what did you take that Paper to be?

O Donnell. I took it to be a Will.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Why did you think it was a Will?

Vol. X.

O Donnell. Because there were three Witnesses to it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Who witnessed the Paper besides yourself?

O Donnell. Dr. Potts and Mr. Springett were the other Witnesses.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What did the Prisoner do with the Paper, after it was signed and witnessed?

O Donnell. He folded it up, and gave it to Dr. Webbe.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you hear him say any Thing, when he delivered it to Dr. Webbe?

O Donnell. He did say something, but I could not hear distinctly what it was, for he spoke in a low Voice.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you hear him pronounce the Words, publish or declare?

O Donnell. I did not hear any one Word distinctly that he said.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Had you Reason to think, from his Manner of pronouncing the Words, that he intended to conceal them?

O Donnell. No, I did not apprehend that he did.

Mr. Sol. Gen. In what Manner did he speak the Words?

O Donnell. He seemed to speak them indifferently.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was the Paper sealed, or only folded up, when he delivered it to Dr. Webbe?

O Donnell. It was folded up, but not sealed.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Is it usual to make Wills, or draw Instruments of Writing, at your Tavern?

O Donnell. No, Sir, I do not remember any such Thing being done at my House before.

Mr. President. Would you ask this Witness any Questions, Mr. Barbot?

Pris. No, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then call Charles Potts, (who was sworn.)

Do you remember on what Day it was you heard that the Deceased was murdered?

Potts. Yes, I remember it was on Sunday the 19th of November last.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Were you at Mr. O Donnell's Tavern the Night before you heard the Deceased was killed?

Potts. Yes, I was.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you remember what passed with regard to your witnessing any Paper for the Prisoner?

Potts. I was sitting in the Tavern in the Evening, and somebody called me, and told me, I was wanted in the inner Room.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Who called you?

Potts. I cannot tell who it was, but somebody called me, and told me, I was wanted in the inner Room, and I went in, and the Prisoner desired me to sign, as a Witness, to an Instrument of Writing; and accordingly the Prisoner signed his Name to it: Mr. O Donnell signed first as a Witness to it, I signed next, and Mr. Springett last.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did not the Prisoner acknowledge that Instrument of Writing, when he had signed his Name to it?

Potts. Yes, he put his Thumb on the Seal, and took it off again.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What did he say when he acknowledged it?

Potts. I do not recollect what he said.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What did you apprehend that Instrument of Writing to be?

Potts. I thought it was some Deed to secure Jacob Saunders.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Why did you think so?

Potts. Because I met the Prisoner and Dr. Webbe coming from Mr. Saunders's that Day.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Is that all the Reason?

Potts. That is all, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you read the Paper before you signed it?

Potts. No, I did not read it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Nor any Part of it?

Potts. No, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then how are you sure it was not a Note of Hand that you signed?

Potts. I am sure it was not a Note of Hand, for it was too long.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What was too long, the Attestation? Did you not sign just under the Attestation?

Potts. I did not observe the Attestation: I had no Suspicion of its being a Note of Hand: I thought it was a Deed to secure Mr. Saunders's Debt.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did not the Prisoner cover the Attestation with his Hand?

Potts. He did not when I signed.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you not hear the Prisoner say he published that Paper as his Will.

Potts. No, I did not.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you come to the Tavern by Accident, or did any one desire you to be there at that Time?

Potts. I came there by Accident; I had been round the Island, and called at Mr. O'Donnell's to refresh myself with a Mug of Beer.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Where did you go after you signed as a Witness to the Paper?

Potts. I went with Mr. James Brodbelt to his Plantation, and from thence I went to Dr. Webbe's: It was about Ten o'Clock when I got there, and I went to Bed in about an Hour after.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you see the Prisoner that Night at Dr. Webbe's?

Potts. No, I did not see him from the Time I left Mr. O'Donnell's, till about Nine o'Clock next Morning: I saw him come into the Yard on Horseback, upon Dr. Webbe's Horse, Kent.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you ever hear of any Resentment the Prisoner had against the Deceased?

Potts. None in the World: On the contrary, I have always heard him express great Respect for the Deceased.

Pris. Mr. Potts, you saw me some Days before this Accident happened; did you ever hear me express any Resentment against Mr. Mills?

Potts. Never, I never did indeed.

Pris. Have you not often heard me speak of him in the most respectful Terms, and such as shewed I had a great Esteem for him?

Potts. I have indeed very often; and I never heard you say any Thing of him that looked like Malice or Resentment.

Thomas Hobson sworn.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you remember hearing the Report of the Deceased being killed?

Hobson. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you remember when it was that you heard it?

Hobson. It was on Sunday the 19th of November last.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Where do you live?

Hobson. I live on Bridgewater's Estate at Nevis.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray inform the Court and the Jury of what you know concerning a Horse and Boy coming to your House, the Night before you heard the Deceased was killed.

Hobson. On Saturday Night, the Night before I heard the Deceased was killed, Dr. Webbe's Boy Pope came to the House where I live with Dr. Webbe's Horse; and knocked at the Door, and called me: It was about Midnight. I got up and opened the Door, and saw it was Pope. He was wet. I asked him, where he had been; he told me he had been round the Island looking for his Master.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was the Horse wet?

Hobson. Yes, the Horse was wet.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did the Horse and Boy stay at your House all Night?

Hobson. Yes, Sir, he put the Horse in the Stable, and staid there all Night; and about Eight o'Clock next Morning, I saw a little Man, in a whitish Coat, and a silver-laced Hat, coming up. As soon as he came up to the Steps, he asked for Pope. Pope went to him, and he bade him saddle the Horse.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did not he ask first, if there was a Horse there?

Hobson. No, the Minute he came to the Steps, he called for Pope, and bade him saddle the Horse.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did he seem to expect a Horse there?

Hobson. Yes, I believe he did, for he bade Pope saddle the Horse, without asking whether there was any Horse there.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, look at the Prisoner. Was the Person you saw that Morning, that bade Pope saddle the Horse, like the Prisoner?

Hobson. Yes, it was that very Man.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You are sure it was the Prisoner?

Hobson. Yes, I am sure it was him.

Mr. Sol. Gen. After he ordered Pope to saddle the Horse, what did he do then?

Hobson. As soon as the Horse was saddled, he asked Pope which Road he should take, and Pope shewed him the nighest Way to Pinney's, where Dr. Webbe lives, and he got on Horseback, and rode away.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did the Prisoner come up from the Bay the Morning you saw him?

Hobson. I believe he did; he came from that Way.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you take Notice whether his Cloaths were wet?

Hobson. I observed his Shoes were wet. I cannot tell if the rest of his Cloaths were wet or not.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How high up was he wet?

Hobson. Only his Shoes, that I saw.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Had he any Boy with him with a Trunk?

Hobson. No, I saw no Boy with him, nor no Trunk.

Mr. Sol. Gen. We have done with this Witness.

Mr. President. Would you ask this Witness any Questions, Mr. Barbot?

Pris. No, Sir.

Sarah Hobson sworn.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Where do you live?

Hobson. I live on Bridgewater's Estate at Nevis.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you remember hearing the Report of the Deceased being killed?

Hobson. Yes.

Mr. Sol. Gen. And when it was?

Hobson. Yes, it was on Sunday the 19th of November last.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Well, give the Court and the Jury an Account of what you know of a Horse and Boy coming to your House, the Night before you heard of the Report of the Murder.

Hobson. The Night before I heard the Report of the Murder, I heard a knocking at the Door about Midnight, and I called to my Brother, and asked him what it was. He told me, he believed it was the Negroes cutting Wood in the Garden; but I knew it could not be that, for the Garden was too far off to have heard, if it had been so. My Brother immediately got up and opened the Door, and found it was Dr. Webbe's Pope with his Horse. My Brother asked him, where he had been; he said, he had been round the Island looking for his Master. I did not see Pope, but I heard this as I was in the Chamber; and, about Eight o'Clock the next Morning, as I was standing at the Door, I saw a little Gentleman coming up to the House. As soon as I saw him, I went into the Chamber, and looked through the Window at him; and as soon as he came up to the Steps, he called for Pope. Pope went to him, and he ordered him to saddle the Horse.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Gentlemen of the Jury, you observe both these Evidences say the Boy Pope declared, when he came to Bridgewater's, that he was looking for his Master; and yet, as I desired you to take Notice in the Course of Dr. Webbe's Evidence, the Doctor himself declared, he neither sent out this Boy, nor any of his Horses, that Night. What! did he bid Pope saddle the Horse, before he knew whether there was a Horse there or no?

Hobson. Yes, the Moment he came to the Steps, he called for Pope, and bade him saddle the Horse.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did he speak as if he expected to find a Horse there?

Hobson. I believe he did, by bidding Pope saddle the Horse the Minute he came to the Steps.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, how was he dressed?

Hobson. He had on a whitish Coat, a silver-laced Hat, and a pig-tail Wig.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Look at the Prisoner. Pray, was the Person, you saw that Morning, like him?

Hobson. Yes, that is the very Man.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You are sure it was the Prisoner?

Hobson. Yes, I am sure it was him.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What did he do, after he had ordered Pope to saddle the Horse?

Hobson. As soon as the Horse was saddled, he asked Pope which Road he should take, and Pope shewed him the nighest Way to Pinney's, where Dr. Webbe lives, and he got on Horseback, and rode away.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know where the Prisoner came from, when he came up to your House?

Hobson. I believe he came from the Bay, for he came from that Way.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Were his Cloaths wet?

Hobson. I did not take Notice that his Cloaths were wet, but his Shoes were.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How high up was he wet?

Hobson. I only observed that his Shoes were wet.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Had he any Boy with him with a Trunk?

Hobson. No, he had no body at all with him, that I saw, nor no Trunk.

Mr. Sol. Gen. We have done with this Evidence.

John M^cKenley sworn.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mr. M^cKenley, where do you live?

M^cKenley. I live upon Mr. Spooner's Estate at Frigate-Bay.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray inform the Court and the Jury of what you know concerning the Death of the Deceased.

M^cKenley. On Sunday Morning the 19th of November last, I got up at about Four o'Clock, and went out to give some Orders in the Plantation, and returned in about a Quarter of an Hour. As soon as I came in, I lay down upon my Bed; and presently after a Negro Boy rushed into my Chamber, and threw himself upon the Bed where I was lying, and cried out, O Lord, Master, make Haste and come down, for my Master is fighting with Sword and Pistols, with a Gentleman that is come from Nevis. I immediately got up, and asked him, who was his Master? He answered me, Mr. Matthew Mills. I then looked hard at the Boy, and knew him to be Coomy, that always ran with the Deceased. The Boy immediately got upon his Master's Horse, (for he had rode up) and galloped down as fast as he could, and I followed him on Foot, for I thought I should get down to the Bay sooner, than if I stayed to have my Horse saddled. When I came down to the Place just by the Starting-Post, I found Coomy supporting the Deceased between his Legs, and the Deceased's Head leaning on Coomy's Breast. I ran immediately up to him, and asked him who had used him so, but he made me no Answer. I took hold of his Hand at the same Time, and he had no Pulse. I found then that he was stone dead, but still warm, and was but just expired. I then asked Coomy, who it was that had killed his Master; he told me it was Mr. Barbot, and that if I would go down to the Bay, I might see him, for that he was just gone off in a Canoo.

Pris. Gentlemen of the Jury, you will please to observe, that what Mr. M^cKenley tells you of Coomy's Declaration, is no Evidence at all. Coomy himself cannot be an Evidence at any Rate, much less can what he only told another be Evidence.

Mr. Frye. Gentlemen, this is but hearsay Evidence, which I appeal to the Bench is no Evidence in any Case, much less where a Man's Life is concerned.

M^cKenley. I immediately ran down to the Seaside, and saw a Canoo with four Oars and a Paddle, making very fast from the Shore.

Mr. Sol. Gen. At what Distance was the Canoo from the Shore, when you first saw it?

M^cKenley. It was about fifty Yards off.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Could you distinguish the Persons in the Canoo?

M^cKenley. No, I could not distinguish who they were. I saw somebody in white sitting in the Stern of the Canoo, but I could not tell who it was. I was in so much Confusion, that I did not take as much Notice as I might have done.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What Cloaths had the Deceased on?

M^cKenley. He had on his great Coat and his Gloves.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What Kind of Gloves?

M^cKenley. I really cannot tell what Kind of Gloves; they were of a brownish Colour.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Were they Buff Gloves?

M^cKenley. No; I think they were not Buff; but I cannot positively say what Kind of Gloves they were.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What Situation were the Deceased's Pistols in?

M^cKenley.

M^rKenley. His Pistols were in the Holsters on his Horse.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you examine his Pistols?

M^rKenley. No, I did not.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was his Sword drawn?

M^rKenley. No, his Sword was lying on the Ground at some Distance from him in the Scabbard, and the Belt wrapt round the Hilt.

Mr. J. Lofack. What Time do you think it would take to go in a Canoo from Frigate-Bay to the Salt-Ponds?

M^rKenley. I cannot tell; but the Canoo was rowing very hard from the Shore.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How long do you think it would take? You may guess pretty near the Time.

M^rKenley. I believe it might take about Half an Hour.

Pris. Was the Person you saw in white, sitting in the Stern of the Canoo, a white Man or a Negro?

M^rKenley. I cannot tell whether it was a white Man or a Negro.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Call William Johnson, (who appeared.)

Pris. May it please your Honours, I humbly beg Leave to oppose Johnson's being sworn.

Mr. President. Let us hear your Objections to him.

Pris. He is an infamous Person.

Mr. Frye. He is so, for I saw him publicly whipt at Montserrat for Petty Larceny.

Mr. Sol. Gen. May it please your Honours, if the Prisoner would invalidate the Evidence of Johnson, on the Score of what Mr. Frye alledges, it is necessary that he produce the Record of his Conviction. Let him produce the Record.

Mr. Frye. I knew nothing of this Man's being produced as a Witness till the Day before Yesterday; otherwise I could have had the Record, or an attested Copy of it now. But I humbly apprehend I may be admitted to produce Witnesses to prove that he was publicly whipt for Petty Larceny, for stealing a Pair of silver Shoe-buckles. He is rendered an infamous Man, and ought not to be admitted as a Witness.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I am surprized to hear a Gentleman of Mr. Frye's Standing and Experience in the Law, offer a Thing of this Kind, when he must know, that nothing but the Record of this Man's Conviction, or an attested Copy of it, can disable him to be a Witness. It is absolutely illegal, Sir, to offer to prove the Fact Mr. Frye speaks of by Witnesses, who, he says, saw Johnson punished; or by any other Method, than that which I have mentioned.

Mr. Frye. Surely we shall be allowed to examine Witnesses to the Character of this Man.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Yes, to his general Character you may be allowed to give Evidence, but not to any particular Part of it; and that only to discredit his Evidence, after he has given it: But no Evidence of that Sort can disable him from being a Witness at all.

Mr. Frye. I did see him publicly whipt, and I know him to be an infamous Person, and would not regard his Oath of a Farthing.

Mr. Horne. May it please your Honours, I humbly beg that Mr. Frye be not allowed to speak in this Manner of the Witness. If he had intended to object to this Man, he ought to have done it legally; he knew the Method the Law had prescribed, and ought to have pursued it; and I hope your Honours will not allow him to discredit the Witness, by throwing out Things he cannot legally support. It is done with a Design to influence the Jury. If Mr. Frye can produce any Evidence to his general Character, he has been told he may do so; but that in its proper Place, and not to prevent his giving his Evidence, or before he has given it.

Mr. Frye. I will produce Witnesses to his Character; but it is strange I sha'n't be allowed to prove that Fact by vivâ voce Witnesses!

Mr. Horne. You are not to be allowed that, Mr. Frye; you know it is illegal; and I am surprized a Gentleman of your Knowledge in the Law, should insist on a Thing of this Kind.

Mr. Frye. Go on then, Sir, I will by and by produce Witnesses to this Man's Character.

Mr. President. Swear Johnson, (which was done.)

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you come to this Island at any Time in or about the Month of November last?

Johnson. Yes, on Sunday the 19th of November.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray inform the Court and the Jury, whether you saw the Prisoner at the Bar on Sunday the 19th of November last, and where it was you saw him?

Johnson. I left Montserrat on Saturday the 18th of November last, and came to an Anchor at the Salt-Ponds at about Two o'Clock the next Morning, and at about Four I put out of the Salt-Ponds; and in about two Hours after, a Canoo with four Oars and a Sail passed by me. The Prisoner was in the Canoo, he had on a white Coat and a laced Hat, and a dark-coloured Waistcoat.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know the Prisoner?

Johnson. Yes, I have seen him several Times at Nevis, and once at Montserrat.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Could you see, from the Place where you were when you met the Canoo, all the Way between Frigate-Bay and Nevis?

Johnson. Yes.

Mr. Sol. Gen. And was there any other Canoo in the Channel?

Johnson. No, there was none but that which the Prisoner was in.

Mr. Sol. Gen. At what Distance was the Canoo from you, when it passed by?

Johnson. It was about forty or fifty Yards off.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Where did you think it came from?

Johnson. It seemed coming from Frigate-Bay, and was standing for Nevis.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Are you sure the Prisoner at the Bar was the Person you saw in the Canoo?

Johnson. Yes, I am sure he was the Person.

Mr. Frye. It is very odd you should now be so positive it was the Prisoner, when you could not positively swear to him the very Day of the Murder, when you were examined before the Coroner's Inquest. We shall produce a Witness by and by to prove that you were not then so positive.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Since this has been thrown out, I beg Leave to ask the Witness another Question. Pray, did you see the Prisoner at any Time between your Examination before the Coroner, and this Day?

Johnson. Yes, I saw him in Gaol; and when I saw him there, I was satisfied he was the Man that I had seen in the Canoo the Morning I was coming from the Salt-Ponds.

Mr. Sol. Gen. However, to make this Matter still plainer, we shall call a Gentleman of Character, who will inform the Court and Jury, that this this Witness declared his seeing the Prisoner at the Time and Place he has now sworn he did, before he had received any Intimation, or had it at all suggested to him, that the Prisoner was then there. Call Thomas Wilson, Esq;

Thomas Wilson, Esq; sworn.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mr. Wilson, will you please to give the Court and the Jury an Account of your seeing Johnson on the 19th of November last, and what passed between you?

Wilson. On Sunday the 19th of November last, in the Morning, on hearing that the Deceased was killed, I went down to Mr. Colboun's, to inquire further of the Matter. I staid there about Half an Hour, and at my Return home I found this Witness Johnson waiting for me with a Letter, which he had just brought from Mr. Misset of Montserrat. He told me, that Mr. Misset had hired him on Purpose to bring me that Letter, and that if I did not dispatch him by Twelve o'Clock, Mr. Misset was to pay him so much an Hour after that Time. I then said to him, There has been Murder committed here. He asked me, What Murder? I told him, that a Gentleman of this Island, one Mr. Mills, was killed, and it was supposed by Mr. Barbot. Barbot! said he, why I met him going in a Canoo to Nevis this Morning. Do you know him then? said I. Yes, said he, I have known him above eighteen Months. I thought this so material a Circumstance, that I immediately acquainted Mr. Colboun of it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. The Court and Jury will take especial Notice of Mr. Wilson's Evidence, because it will stand for an Answer to the Objection that will be made to Johnson's Evidence, from what they insinuate of the Badness of his Character; which in this Case must be wholly out of the Question, seeing the first Information he gave was before there is the least Probability he could have had it suggested to him.

Jasper Thomas sworn.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray inform the Court and the Jury, whether you saw the Prisoner on the 19th of November last, and where you saw him.

Thomas. On Sunday Morning, the 19th of November last, I saw a Canoo land under the Manchioneal Trees, just under Lowland-Church: It was Mr. Cribbe's Canoo; Mr. Hulburd's Peter and Mr. Deverade's Joe were in it, and the Prisoner jumped out of the Canoo the Instant it struck the Shore. He had on a silver-laced Hat, and a whitish Coat.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What Time in the Morning was it that he landed?

Thomas. It was between Six and Seven in the Morning.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did any body come out of the Canoo with the Prisoner?

Thomas. There was a little yellow Negro Boy, with a little red Trunk on his Head, that jumped out of the Canoo at the same Time that the Prisoner did, and went towards the Town.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you see the Canoo at any Distance before it landed?

Thomas. I saw it above fifteen hundred Yards off before it landed. It was under Sail, and they did not strike Sail 'till the Canoo struck the Ground.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Where did you think the Canoo came from?

Thomas. It seemed to me to be coming from the Salt-Ponds.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Are you sure it was the Prisoner at the Bar you saw land out of the Canoo?

Thomas. Yes, I am sure it was him, for I know him very well.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know where he went to when he landed?

Thomas. No, I cannot tell where he went to.

John Thomas sworn.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you remember when it was you heard the Deceased was killed?

Thomas. Yes, it was on Sunday the 19th of November last that I heard it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you see the Prisoner at the Bar that Day?

Thomas. Yes.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then give the Court and the Jury an Account where, and at what Time, you saw him.

Thomas. It was on Sunday Morning, the 19th of November last, the Day that I heard the Deceased was killed. I was with my Father Jasper Thomas, and I saw a Canoo at a Distance under Sail, that seemed to be coming from St. Kitt's; and I said to my Father, I believed there were some St. Kitt's People coming up; and soon after the Canoo came ashore, and Mr. Hulburd's Peter and Mr. Deverade's Joe were in it; and I saw a little Man, very like the Prisoner, jump out of the Canoo, and run up the Bank. He had on a silver-laced Hat and a long-tail Wig, a whitish Coat, and a brownish Waistcoat.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was it the Prisoner at the Bar that you saw?

Thomas. I do believe it was him, for the Person I saw was very like him.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did any body land out of the Canoo besides the Prisoner?

Thomas. There was a little yellowish Negro Boy, with a small red Trunk on his Head, that jumped out of the Canoo at the same Time the Prisoner did, and went towards Town.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What Time in the Morning was it that the Prisoner landed out of the Canoo?

Thomas. It was between Six and Seven in the Morning.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you observe which Way he went after he landed?

Thomas. No, I did not take Notice which Way he went.

William White sworn.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know the Prisoner at the Bar?

White. Yes, I know him very well.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you live at Nevis?

White. No, but I have been working there for above a Twelvemonth.

Mr. Sol. Gen. When was it you first heard the Report of the Deceased being killed?

White. I heard it on Sunday the 19th of November last.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you see the Prisoner that Day?

White. Yes, I was at work at Mr. Woodley's Estate at Nevis that very Morning, and I looked towards the common Road, and saw a little Man that I took for the Prisoner. He was walking up the Road that leads to Bridgewater's Estate.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, does that Road lead to any other Estate or House besides Bridgewater's?

White. Yes, it leads to Mr. Huggins's.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you see where the Prisoner came from?

White. No, but I believe he came from the Bay.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How was he dressed?

White. He had on a laced Hat, and a brown Coat.

Mr. Sol. Gen. A brown Coat? You must be mistaken surely?

White. No, I am not; it was a brown Coat.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you see any Coat here in Court that is like it? Look about, and see if you can't find some Coat that resembles it in Colour.

White. It was like this Coat, I think, (showing a brown Coat.)

Mr. Sol. Gen. He may be mistaken in the Colour of the Coat. If he swears to the Identity of the Person, it is sufficient. Once more let me ask you on your Oath, Are you sure it was the Prisoner at the Bar that you saw?

White. Yes, I am sure it was him.

Mr. Edward Bridgewater sworn.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mr. Bridgewater, pray inform the Court and the Jury, whether you saw the Prisoner on the 19th of November last, and where you saw him.

Bridgewater. On the 19th of November last, between Nine and Ten in the Morning, I saw the Prisoner riding over Gruff's Gutt, the nearest Way to Dr. Webbe's. He met Jacob Saunders, and they stopt and spoke together, and that gave me an Opportunity of coming pretty near him, and I took Notice that the Prisoner was on a Horse of Dr. Webbe's; it was a sorrel Horse, with a white Face. In the Afternoon of the same Day I went to Mr. John Symmonds's; while I was there, Dr. Webbe came in, and presently after Mr. Symmonds received a Letter, that gave an Account of the Prisoner's having killed the Deceased. As soon as Mr. Symmonds mentioned it, Dr. Webbe said, that the Prisoner had lain at his House the Night before.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you perceive any Alteration in Dr. Webbe, on Mr. Symmonds's mentioning what had happened?

Bridgewater. Yes, he changed Countenance, and seemed, I thought, a good deal confused; and Mr. Symmonds asked him, if he had seen the Prisoner that Morning? Dr. Webbe answered, that he had not seen the Prisoner since he went to Bed the Night before at his House; at which I expressed a good deal of Surprize, and said, that I had seen him that Morning riding towards Dr. Webbe's House on a Horse which I was sure belonged to Dr. Webbe.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did Dr. Webbe make you any Answer to this?

Bridgewater. I do not remember that he did; but in about five or six Minutes after he went away, and said he was going up towards the Mountain.

John Cribbe sworn.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray inform the Court and the Jury, whether the Prisoner hired a Canoo of you, and when it was.

Cribbe. It was the Friday before I heard the Deceased was killed. The Prisoner hired my Canoo to carry some Letters to St. Kitt's, and the Canoo returned the next Day in the Afternoon.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did the Prisoner hire the Canoo again of you the Day she returned?

Cribbe. No, the Day she returned, the Negroes that belong to her took her to go a fishing, as I understood; and I did not see them again 'till about Eight o'Clock on Sunday Morning, which was the Day I heard the Deceased was killed. I went to Peter, and asked him, What Luck? for I imagined they had been fishing: He answered me, Poor Luck! and looked very thoughtful and melancholy, and said, he was troubled. I asked him, what was the Matter? He told me, he had been at St. Kitt's with Mr. Barbot, who, he was afraid, had done a great deal of Mischiefe, for he believed he had killed Mr. Mills.

Pris. Gentlemen of the Jury, pray don't be influenced by this Part of the Evidence. This is the same with what M^cKenley swore of Coomy's Declaration; but neither one or other of them, as being only hearsay Evidence, and that of Slaves too, ought to affect me.

Mr. Frye. Nay, indeed, the Evidence ought not to have been given: Surely, no Hearsay can be Evidence. Nothing is more indisputable than that.

Mr. Sol. Gen. In this Case it is very material Evidence; but of that by and by: We won't interrupt the Course of Evidence; but observe upon it in a more proper Place. At what o'Clock in the Morning was it that you had this Discourse with Peter?

Cribbe. It was about Ten o'Clock.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Had you then heard it reported that the Deceased was killed?

Cribbe. No, I had not heard it 'till Peter told me of it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. He was the first Person you heard it from?

Cribbe. Yes, he was the first that told me of it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. We will bring a Witness to prove that Peter could not have heard the Report of the Murder at the Time this Witness says he told him of it; for we shall shew that the Person who carried the first News of the Murder to Nevis did not arrive there, 'till at least an Hour after Cribbe had the Conversation he has related with Peter.

Call Thomas Quin, (who was sworn.)

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mr. Quin, at what o'Clock did you arrive at Nevis, the Day you were sent up in pursuit of the Prisoner at the Bar?

Quin. It was about Eleven o'Clock, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. When you arrived at Nevis, did you report publicly that the Deceased was killed?

Quin. No, I did not say a Word of it to any body but the Gentleman I carried the Letters to from Mr. Colboun.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was it known at Nevis, before you arrived there, that the Deceased was killed?

Quin. No, I am sure it was not, or I should have heard of it. I am sure I was the first that carried the News of it, for I did not stop or stay any where, but went off the Minute Mr. Colboun gave me the Letters, and made the best of my Way up.

Mrs. Frances Dasant sworn.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Madam, will you please to give the Court and the Jury an Account of what you know concerning the Prisoner's taking away a Case of Pistols from your House?

Dasant. Upon hearing that the Magazine was broke open on Sunday Night, the 19th of November last, I ordered all the Arms in the House to be be searched for, to see that there were none missing; and upon missing a Pair of Pistols, I ordered the Boy to look on the Beam for them, where I had directed him to put them. He looked, and could find but one Pair: I then grew very uneasy, and sent to desire Dr. Webbe to come over to me. He did so the next Morning, and I told him I was very uneasy; that I missed a Pair of Pistols, and asked him, if he knew where they were? He told me, that he knew nothing of them. I begged of him then to help me to search for them. Accordingly he went into the Shop with me, and searched there, but could not find them. From thence we went into the Chamber, and the Doctor looked under the Bed, and found the Pistols.

Mr. Horne. What was it that induced you to look for the Pistols?

Dasent. Hearing the Magazine was broke open, and the Accident that had happened to Mr. Mills together, made me think of looking for them. I was very uneasy about it, for I had heard that the Prisoner and Dr. Webbe took down the Pistols in my Absence, while I was at my Mother's, to fire out of.

Mr. Horne. Did you see a red Trunk belonging to the Prisoner, in the Room where the Pistols were found?

Dasent. Yes, there was a small red Trunk that belonged to the Prisoner.

Mr. Horne. Did you ever desire the Prisoner to leave your House?

Dasent. Yes; the Thursday before this Accident happened, I desired him to come to my House no more, for some prudential Reasons I had.

Mr. Horne. Did this put an end to his Visits?

Dasent. Yes, he came to my House no more; but he sent to borrow a Horse of me the Day before the Murder, which I refused to lend him; nor I knew nothing of his Trunk being at my House 'till the Monday after the Accident, that Judge Herbert came to my House, and demanded the Trunk, and it was opened before him.

Mr. Horne. Were you present when the Trunk was opened?

Dasent. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Horne. What was in it, pray?

Dasent. I saw nothing in it but a brown Waistcoat, and a Pair of black Breeches.

Mr. Horne. Did they belong to the Prisoner?

Dasent. Yes, I believe they did.

Mr. Horne. Is this the Prisoner's Trunk, and are these the Cloaths (the Prisoner's Trunk and Cloaths shewn her) you saw taken out of that Trunk?

Dasent. Yes, I believe they are.

Joseph Herbert, Esq; sworn.

On hearing the Deceased was killed by the Prisoner with a Pair of James Dasent's Pistols, I went, the Day after the Murder, to Mrs. Dasent's, to inquire for them. When I came there, I saw a small red Trunk, which being opened, I found a Pair of black Breeches and a brown Waistcoat in it, which were wet. I touched the Waistcoat with my Tongue, and found it salt, from which I concluded it must have been wet with Salt-Water. These Pistols (Pistols shewn him) which Mrs. Dasent had missed, were shewn to me at the same time; and I was informed by some of the Negroes, that they believed the Prisoner's Boy had brought the Pistols to Mrs. Dasent's privately in his Cloaths.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Is this the Trunk, and are these the Cloaths, you saw at Mrs. Dasent's, (the Trunk and Cloaths shewn him) the Day after the Murder?

Mr. Herbert. Yes, they are.

Dr. Hamilton and Mr. Edwards sworn.

Mr. Horne. Dr. Hamilton, you were sent for, I think, to inspect the Body of the Deceased?

Dr. Hamilton. Yes, Sir, I was sent for on Sunday the 19th of last November by the Coroner, to view the Body of the Deceased. When I came to Mr. Colboun's, where the Body lay, I found that the Deceased had received a Wound on the right Side, which must have been given him by a Ball out of some Fire-arm.

Mr. Horne. Whereabout on the right Side?

Dr. Hamilton. I cannot describe it better than thus; by drawing a straight Line directly from the Pap four Inches downwards, and then carrying it four Inches towards the Back. In that Place was the Wound.

Mr. Horne. Sir, will you please to put your Finger on the Place, as near as you can guess, where the Wound was received?

Dr. Hamilton. It was just here, (placing his Finger on his own Side.)

Mr. Horne. Now go on, Sir, if you please.

Dr. Hamilton. I then, with the Assistance of my Son Mr. Edwards, opened the Body, and found that the Ball had entered between the two last false Ribs, and splintered one of them, and had penetrated the Body obliquely from the right to the left Side, and had wounded the fore Part of the Liver on the left Side. I found too, that in passing it had wounded a large Blood-vessel.

Mr. Horne. Do you think the Deceased could have received that Wound, if he had been standing in a Posture of Defence?

Dr. Hamilton. No, I think he could not; for the Situation of the Wound was such, that had he been in a Posture of Defence, he could not have received it in that Place: And from the Course the Ball took (which was towards the fore Part of the left Side of the Body) it is evident, I think, that the Deceased could not have been in a Posture of Defence.

Mr. Horne. Do you think that that Wound was the Cause of his Death?

Dr. Hamilton. Yes, I am certain it was.

Mr. Horne. Did you find the Ball?

Dr. Hamilton. No, I searched for it, but could not find it. I believe it had fallen into the Abdomen, which was so full of Blood, that there was no Possibility of finding the Ball, unless we had taken out all the Bowels; and it was so late, that the Jury, satisfied on my Report that the Wound must have been given by a Ball discharged from some Fire-arm, and that it was the Cause of the Deceased's Death, did not think it necessary to look any farther for the Ball.

Mr. Horne. Mr. Edwards, you assisted Dr. Hamilton in opening the Body of the Deceased; can you give the Court any farther Information of the Nature of the Wound than what the Doctor has already related?

Edwards. No, Sir, I can say no more than what Dr. Hamilton has already related.

Mr. Walter Pringle and Mr. Samuel Baker sworn.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mr. Pringle, pray give the Court and the Jury an Account of the Situation you found the Deceased's Pistols in the Morning he was killed.

Pringle. On Sunday Morning, the 19th of November last, I heard the Deceased was killed at Frigate-Bay, and that his Body was brought to Mr. Colboun's, where I went to see it. As soon as I came into the Room, I asked for the Deceased's Pistols, and somebody (I really do not recollect who it was) brought them to me. They were a small Pair of screw-barrel Pistols, with a brown wooden flat Handle, (the Pistols shewn him.) These are the Pistols. I unscrewed one of them, and found a Ball sticking in the Barrel. I looked into the Chamber, and could find no Powder in it. I smelt it, and it did not appear to me by the Smell that it had been lately fired out of. Then I examined the Screws and the Cock very carefully, and could not perceive that any Part of them were the least tinged with Powder. I then unscrewed the other Pistol, and examined it in the same Manner I had done the first; but I found no Ball in it, nor any the least Sign of Powder either in it or about it, except about two Grains, which I imagine had been bruised by the Hammer; but I think, if the Pistols had been fired out of lately, there would have been a Stain of burnt Powder left about the Cock, which always remains after any Fire-arm is discharged; and there was no such Stain on either of these Pistols.

After I had done with the Pistols, I examined the Deceased's Cloaths, and found upon the right Flap of his Coat a Stain of dry Powder, and the same upon the Inside of his great Coat, on the right Side.

Baker. I was at Mr. Colboun's on Sunday the 19th of November last, the Morning that the Deceased was killed, and upon inquiring for the Deceased's Pistols, they were brought to me. These are the Pistols: They were half-cocked. I unscrewed one of them, and examined it very carefully, and there was neither Powder nor Ball in it, nor any where about it, except about two Grains of Powder, which seemed to have been bruised by the Hammer. I unscrewed the other, and examined it in the same Manner, and found a Ball sticking in the Barrel, but no Powder at all either in the Chamber, or any where else about it, nor there was not the least Stain of burnt Powder either about the Cock, or any where else; for I put my little Finger into the Barrel, and there came off upon my Finger a yellowish rusty Dirt; whereas if the Pistols had been fired out of, there would have remained in the Barrel a black Moisture, which would have come off on my Finger: From all which Circumstances I am convinced the Pistols had not been fired out of. After I had done with the Pistols, I examined the Deceased's Cloaths; and the right Flap of his Coat, and the Inside of his great Coat, were stained with dry Powder, as Mr. Pringle has related.

Mr. Horne. I desire Judge Herbert may be called again.

Judge Herbert was called and appeared.

Mr. Horne. Will you please, Sir, to give the Court and the Jury an Account of what you found in the Pockets of the Deceased?

Mr. Herbert. The Morning that the Body of the Deceased was brought to Mr. Colboun's, I was there; and a little while after the Body was laid down, I searched the Deceased's Pockets, and found in his Breeches Pockets three Bullets.

Mr. Sol. Gen. May it please your Honours, we shall call no more Witnesses, unless the Prisoner makes it necessary by his Defence; but shall rest the Charge here.

Mr. President. Mr. Barbot, now is the Time to make your Defence. The King's Council will call no more Witnesses, 'till they hear what you have to say.

Prisoner. May it please your Honours, and you Gentlemen of the Jury,

Now that the Council for the Crown have gone through their Evidence, such as it is, and finished their Charge, I am to beg your serious Attention, while I speak to you in my Defence.

To you, Gentlemen of the Jury, I shall chiefly address myself. You, Gentlemen, are my principal Judges on this unhappy Occasion; Judges which the Wisdom of our Ancestors have provided for every British Subject, who is, or shall be, accused; lest the Torrent of Power should at any Time prevail over Justice, and Malice and Ill-will should injure and oppress the Innocent. It is now, Gentlemen, I have Reason to think myself fortunate. I am by Birth an Englishman, and thereby, notwithstanding the implacable Resentment of my powerful Prosecutors, I cannot be denied the Privilege of having twelve honest Men to acquit me of the Crime laid to my Charge: For acquit me you must, if you, as I am sure you will, govern yourselves according to the Evidence; since, notwithstanding the Colourings which the Gentlemen for the Crown have given to what they have produced as such, there cannot, even upon the Footing on which it now stands, be more Reason to adjudge me guilty, than any of you, Gentlemen, who are now to pass upon me on my Life or Death.

Gentlemen, could I lay open my Heart to you, and make the Sentiments of my Soul visible to your Eyes, you would there see the most lively Sorrow for the Decease of the worthy Gentleman, for whose Death I stand here accused. I truly revere his Memory. He was, I doubt not, all that the Gentlemen concerned against me have said of him. But while I lament his untimely End, I cannot accuse myself for his Death. Would the depriving me of Life, on Rumour and Surmise, make Atonement for the Loss the World has sustained in him? Surely no! And therefore, as this Prosecution has been begun and carried on against me, not only with all imaginable Heat, but every Art has been used to deprive me of Existence, I must, I will stand up in Support of it, and, by preserving my Life, thereby pave the Way for vindicating my injured Character, and deprive my Prosecutors of the Satisfaction of triumphing over my Misfortunes.

Gentlemen, was I not afraid I should take up too much of your Time, I could give you a Detail of Impositions and Hardships that would shock you; the chief End of which was to deprive me of the Opportunities and Means of making a fair and just Defence. My Friends, Gentlemen, have been spirited from me; they have been threatened, if they should dare to come near me; Spies have been placed round the Gaol, to see if I was continually in Irons or no, and if at any Time I was taken out to dress: Mr. Thompson the Marshal has been harrassed and reprimanded for giving me too much Indulgence. I have been kept in total Ignorance of all which I ought to have known; and, 'till this Day, I was not made acquainted with the Persons who were to be produced as Evidence against me, much less with the Purport of what they were to swear, lest I might have provided the Means of invalidating any of their Testimony. I have been deprived the Privilege of writing privately to such Persons as I had Business with;

with; even Mr. Cooke my Sollicitor never approached me without a Witness (intended at least) to our Conversations; and the whole Island has been made acquainted with the Contents of a private Letter I received from my Father, on which some very ingenious Comments have been made, with an Intent, I suppose, to raise a popular Odium against me, and to make you think, Gentlemen, the Life of a Villain, such as I have been represented to be, was not worth your Care, and that you might, upon the slightest Surmise, condemn me to Death, if not for the Crime wherewith I am accused, yet for the general Disrepute I might acquire by the Success of these artful Endeavours to vilify my Reputation.

No Wonder then, Gentlemen, if that appears thus clouded. But I have such Confidence, Gentlemen of the Jury, in your Honour and Integrity, that I am assured you will not be influenced by any of these Artifices. Your Breasts, I doubt not, are divested of all Prejudice. I therefore promise myself you will attend calmly and deliberately to me, while I make some Observations on the Evidence you have heard delivered to you, and answer the Arguments which have been advanced against me.

One of these Witnesses, Johnson, Gentlemen, has taken upon himself, you have heard, to swear most positively he saw me on Sunday the 19th of November last in a Canoo, rowing towards Nevis, with some other Particulars. Yet is it not strange that this Man, on the very Day on which he thus pretends to have seen me, when the Fact must have been supposed to be most recent in his Memory, before the Coroner's Inquest, on being to this Purpose particularly interrogated by Mr. Julius, declared he could not positively swear it was me he saw, but only believed so? his Reason he gave for knowing me, at the same Time shewing his Malice against me, on Account of my being the Instrument of putting him twice in Gaol, which, however, I have no Recollection of. It is most plain, if he saw any Canoo at all, he judged me to be in such Canoo, from the Reports he had heard on Shore; and mad with the Desire of Revenge, he hastened to the Coroner's Inquest, with Intent to do me all the Prejudice in his Power. Yet there his Conscience pricked him, and, when made to recollect himself, could say no more than that he believed he saw me. After this, and from the Character you have heard of him, can any Credit be given to what he has sworn? I am well assured, Gentlemen, you will give it none.

As to the Evidence of Patience Dorset, she swears, Gentlemen, positively, that the Words which she is pleased to have heard me say, were spoken by me on the 10th of November in the Morning, being the King's Birth-day, at Mr. McCabée's Tavern. Now, Gentlemen, I shall prove to you beyond Contradiction, I was all that Day, and for four preceding Days, and for ten Days after, at Nevis. And particularly on the 10th of November, I was for the whole Day in a Part of Nevis the farthest removed from this Island, at least seven Miles from the Town, and did not in the least dream of coming down here, having Business of Importance to transact there, which required my Presence. And when I have done this, I hope I shall have effectually destroyed this mighty Fabrick, which the Council for the Crown have taken such infinite Pains to raise up.

All the rest of the Evidence have not the least, the most distant Relation to the Crime wherewith I am charged, consisting only of my Motions from Place to Place, and of some trifling Transactions, none of which shew any Thing like my harbouring Designs to the Prejudice of any one, much less of Mr. Mills; against whom there is not the least Appearance I could entertain any Anger. I desire Mrs. Lowman may be called.

Mrs. Frances Lowman sworn.

Pris. Please to inform the Court, Madam, whether I was, or was not at Nevis on the 10th of November last.

Lowman. Mr. Barbot came to my Father's, Mr. George Webbe's senior, on the 8th of November last; he dined and lodged there; and lodged there the next Night also. On the 10th he breakfasted there; and after Breakfast, he and Mr. William Daniel walked out together, and returned in about two Hours; and I left him at my Father's, at about One o'Clock, just going to sit down to Dinner. Dinner was upon Table, and I went away to my Brother George Webbe's, where I dined in Company with Mr. William Herbert.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You say the Prisoner and Mr. Daniel took a Walk after Breakfast on the 10th of November; pray, where did they go to?

Lowman. I believe they went to Mr. Ottley's.

Mr. Sol. Gen. They were absent for two Hours, you say; at what Time in the Morning did they go out?

Lowman. They went out at about Nine o'Clock, and returned in about two Hours.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, Madam, when were you first applied to, to endeavour to recollect where the Prisoner was on the 10th of November?

Lowman. I was first applied to the Day before Yesterday, and I am positive he was at my Father's on the 10th of November.

Pris. I pray Mrs. Ottley may be sworn.

Mrs. Lucretia Ottley sworn.

Pris. Do not you recollect, Madam, that I came to your House with Mr. William Daniel, on the King's Birth-day in the Morning?

Ottley. I do remember that Mr. Daniel and you came to my House one Morning after the Sale of Bridgewater's Estate, but I cannot positively say what Day it was, though I remember it was in the same Week that Bridgewater's Estate was sold.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was the Prisoner at your House any more than one Morning?

Ottley. No, he never was there more than once, to my Knowledge.

Pris. I pray Mr. Ottley may be also sworn.

Mr. Thomas Ottley sworn.

Pris. Will you please, Sir, to inform the Court on what Day it was I came to your House with Mr. William Daniel?

Ottley. I remember that the Prisoner did come to my House one Morning with Mr. Daniel, but I neither remember on what Day of the Week or Month it was.

Pris. I desire that Mr. Josiah Webbe, the Son of Mr. George Webbe, senior, may be sworn.

Mr. Josiah Webbe sworn.

Pris. Pray, Sir, be kind enough to inform the Court, whether I was not at your Father's on the 10th of November last.

Webbe. I am not certain, but I think Mr. Barbot dined at my Father's on the 10th of last November. I remember that he and Mr. Daniel dined at my Father's on Wednesday the 8th of November, and lay there at Night, and they stayed all next Day, and spent most Part of the Day in playing at Backgammon, and lay there again that Night; and, I cannot be positive, but to the best of my Remembrance, Mr. Barbot dined at my Father's on the 10th. I stayed at Home that Day to keep Mr. Barbot Company, and I am almost sure it was the 10th.

Mr. Sol. Gen. When were you first desired to recollect this?

Webbe. The Day before Yesterday.

Pris. I desire Mrs. Lowman may be called again.

Mrs. Lowman called up again.

Pris. Pray, Madam, are you not very positive I was at your Father's on the 10th of November?

Lowman. Yes, Sir, I am positive that I left you at my Father's on the 10th of November, and I dined that Day at my Brother George Webbe's, in Company with Mr. William Herbert.

Mrs. Ottley. I now recollect very well that it was on Thursday the 9th of November, that Mr. Barbot came to my House with Mr. Daniel. Miss Nanny Herbert was at my House at the same Time. She is now here, and has mentioned some particular Circumstances, that make me recollect the Thing perfectly well.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I desire Miss Herbert may be sworn.

Miss Ann Herbert, the elder, sworn.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Please to declare to the Court, on what Day it was the Prisoner went with Mr. Daniel to Mr. Ottley's.

Herbert. The Day after the Sale of Bridgwater's Estate, I dined in Town at my Brother's with Mrs. Ottley, and we saw Mr. Daniel there, and Mrs. Ottley invited him to her House in the Country: Accordingly he came the next Morning after Breakfast with Mr. Barbot: They stayed about an Hour and an half, and went away again.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Are you sure it was on the 9th of November that the Prisoner and Mr. Daniel went to Mr. Ottley's?

Herbert. Yes, I am sure it was on the 9th; for it was on the second Day after the Sale of Bridgwater's Estate.

Pris. I desire Mr. William Herbert may be sworn.

Mr. William Herbert sworn.

Pris. Please to declare to the Court, Sir, whether you did not dine, in Company with Mrs. Lowman, at Mr. George Webbe's junior, on the 10th of November last.

Herbert. I remember dining at young Mr. George Webbe's, the Thursday after the Sale of Bridgwater's Estate, in Company with Mrs. Lowman; and the next Day I dined at Mr. Cole's. As I was riding to Mr. Cole's, I heard the Guns fire, and on asking the Reason of their firing, I was told it was the King's Birth-day: I remember particularly it was the King's Birth-day; for after Dinner, I said to Mr. Pemberton, who was one of the Company, As you are the oldest Man in Company, begin with a Bumper to his Majesty's Health.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Are you sure it was on the King's Birth-day you dined at Mr. Cole's?

Herbert. Yes, I am sure it was, Mr. James

Brodbelt is now in Court, he was one of the Company.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Can you tell how many Guns you heard fired on the King's Birth-day?

Herbert. I think I heard fifteen; but Mr. Weekes the Gunner is in Court, he can tell positively how many he fired.

Mr. William Weekes sworn.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you remember firing any Guns on the King's Birth-day?

Weekes. Yes, I remember to have fired fifteen.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you fire any more or less than that Number?

Weekes. No. I fired exactly fifteen.

Pris. I pray John Cornelius may be sworn.

John Cornelius (a free Negro) sworn.

Pris. Do you remember on what Day it was Bridgwater's Estate was sold?

Cornelius. It was on Tuesday the 7th of November last. I was at work at Mr. George Webbe's that Day, and the Thursday after I saw Mr. Barbot at old Mr. Webbe's: He and Mr. Daniel went out in the Morning to Mr. Ottley's, as I was told, and returned in about two Hours; and the next Day, which was the King's Birth-day, Mr. Barbot dined at old Mr. Webbe's.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you hear any Guns fire that Day?

Cornelius. No, I heard none.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was you desired by any body to recollect this?

Cornelius. No.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did no body instruct you to say it?

Cornelius. No body at all.

Mr. James Brodbelt sworn.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Please to declare to the Court, where you dined on the King's Birth-day.

Brodbelt. I dined at Mr. Cole's on the King's Birth-day, with Mr. William Herbert, Mr. Pemberton, Mr. Paris, and some other Gentlemen. The Fort-Guns fired on account of the Day, and I remember Mr. Herbert proposed to Mr. Pemberton drinking the King's Health in a Bumper, which we all did.

Pris. I desire Samuel Lawrence may be sworn.

Samuel Lawrence sworn.

Lawrence. No.

Pris. Do not you know how long I stayed there?

Lawrence. Indeed I cannot tell.

Pris. Do you remember the Day I wrote a Note for old Mr. Webbe to send to Mr. Cradock for Corn?

Lawrence. I do remember you wrote a Note to Mr. Cradock for Corn for Mr. Webbe, but I do not recollect on what Day it was.

Pris. Do you not remember I dined at old Mr. Webbe's the Day I wrote that Note?

Lawrence. Yes, you did dine there the Day you wrote the Note, but I do not remember what Day that was.

Pris. I pray Mr. Josiah Webbe (Dr. Webbe's Brother) may be sworn.

Mr.

Mr. Josiah Webbe sworn.

Pris. Pray, Sir, inform the Court, whether I was not at your House on the King's Birth-day, and whether I was not sent for, while I was there, to make Mrs. Hickman's Will?

Webbe. I remember Mr. Barbot came to my House one Afternoon soon after the Sale of Bridgewater's Estate, and while he was there, a Messenger came from Mrs. Hickman to him, to desire he would go and make her Will.

Pris. Was it not on the King's Birth-day?

Webbe. It was one Day after the Sale of Bridgewater's Estate, but I am not certain what Day it was.

Pris. I desire Mrs. Dasent may be sworn.

Mrs. Frances Dasent sworn.

Pris. Please to declare to the Court, Madam, on what Day it was you sent for me to make your Mother's (Mrs. Hickman's) Will.

Dasent. I sent for Mr. Barbot to make my Mother's Will, and I remember he came and made her Will, but I cannot be certain what Day it was.

Pris. I desire Miss Jenny Herbert may be sworn.

Miss Jane Herbert sworn.

Herbert. Yes.

Pris. Do you remember my making her Will?

Pris. Do you recollect when Bridgewater's Estate was sold?

Herbert. Yes, it was on Tuesday the 7th of last November.

Pris. How long after that was it that I made Mrs. Hickman's Will?

Herbert. I am not certain whether it was the Thursday or Friday after, but I believe it was the Friday.

Pris. It was the Friday after?

Herbert. I think it was, but I am not positive whether it was the Thursday or Friday.

Pris. Did you stay at Mrs. Hickman's that Night?

Herbert. No.

Pris. Do you know whether young Mr. Payne came there the Day following?

Herbert. I cannot tell whether he did or no.

Pris. I pray Mr. Sommers Payne, junior, may be sworn.

Mr. Sommers Payne, junior, sworn.

Pris. Do you remember the Day that I was at Mrs. Hickman's?

Payne. I remember seeing you there, but I cannot tell on what particular Day it was.

Pris. I pray Miss Nancy Herbert may be sworn.

Miss Anne Herbert, the younger, sworn.

Pris. Do you remember what Day it was I was at Mrs. Hickman's to make her Will?

Herbert. No, I do not recollect the Day.

Pris. Do not you remember to have heard of a Ball being at St. Kitt's on the King's Birth-day.

Herbert. I remember to have heard there was to be a Ball at St. Kitt's, but I cannot tell on what Day.

Pris. Had you no Conversation with any young Ladies of your Acquaintance about the Ball?

Herbert. Yes, I believe I might have talked about it, but I do not remember the Day.

Pris. I desire Mr. Julius may be sworn.

Mr. William Julius sworn.

Pris. Mr. Julius, you were one of the Coroner's Inquest; pray, what did Johnson swear before the Inquest?

Julius. When he came before the Inquest, I asked him if it was Mr. Barbot that he saw in the Canoo? He said, he believed it was, but he could not swear positively to him, for he was a Musket-shot off.

Pris. I pray Mansell Wilkes may be sworn.

Mansell Wilkes sworn.

Mr. Frye. Do you know Johnson?

Wilkes. Yes, I know him very well.

Mr. Frye. What Character does he bear?

Mr. Sol. Gen. You are to take Notice, that you are to speak to the Character of the Man in general, and not charge him with any particular Fact; for he is not come here prepared to defend himself against any particular Charge.

Wilkes. Since I have known him, he has always borne a bad Character.

Mr. Frye. Has he been always looked upon as a Man of infamous Reputation?

Wilkes. Yes, he is reckoned a bad Man.

Mr. President. Have you any more Witnesses to examine, Mr. Barbot?

Pris. No, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. May it please your Honours, since the Prisoner has attempted to prove that he was at Nevis on the 10th of November, in order to invalidate the Testimony of Patience Dorset; we beg leave to produce some further Evidence of his being actually on this Island on that Day. Call Martha Scoaper, Mary Sutton, and Mary Cockade, (a free Mulatto;) who appeared and were sworn.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mrs. Scoaper, do you know the Prisoner at the Bar?

Scoaper. Yes, Sir, I know Mr. Barbot very well.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How long have you known him?

Scoaper. I have known him a great while; he is my near Neighbour.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you remember seeing him on this Island on the 10th of November last?

Scoaper. I do not know what Day of the Month it was, but I am almost sure I saw Mr. Barbot here on the King's Birth-day. To the best of my Remembrance, I saw him pass by my House in the Forenoon, and his Boy came to my House that Morning to beg some Water.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know, by any particular Circumstance, that it was on the King's Birth-day you saw the Prisoner?

Scoaper. It was the Day that there was a great Ball at Manasseh Williams's. I was at the Ball myself.

Mr. Sol. Gen. That was on the King's Birth-day. Mrs. Sutton, do you know the Prisoner at the Bar?

Sutton. Yes, I know him very well.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Please to inform the Court and the Jury, whether you saw him here on the King's Birth-day.

Sutton. Between Eleven and Twelve o'Clock in the Forenoon, on the King's Birth-day, as I was sitting in my House, I saw Mr. Barbot coming down by Mr. Bunyard's House, and he turned down the Alley that leads to Mrs. Philips's,

Mr.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you remember how he was dressed?

Sutton. He had on a white Coat, a green Waistcoat, and a silver-laced Hat flapt.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Are you sure it was on the King's Birth-day you saw the Prisoner?

Sutton. Yes, I am sure it was on the King's Birth-day.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mrs. Cockade, do you know the Prisoner at the Bar?

Cockade. Yes, Sir, I know him very well.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray inform the Court and the Jury, whether you saw him here on the King's Birth-day.

Cockade. Mrs. M^cCabée sent for me on the King's Birth-day to help her; for they were to provide an Entertainment for a great deal of Company: And while I was in the public Room below, Mr. Barbot came in, and I heard him ask a Man whom I did not know, whether there was a good deal of Company up Stairs.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Are you sure it was on the King's Birth-day you heard him say this?

Cockade. Yes, I am sure it was.

Mr. Sol. Gen. May it please your Honours, we have gone through all our Evidence. We could produce many more Witnesses to prove the Prisoner's being actually on this Island on the 10th of November, but we think those that have been already examined sufficient to establish that Fact, notwithstanding what hath been sworn to by Mrs. Lowman and Cornelius, who are the only positive Witnesses to the Prisoner's being at Nevis on the 10th of November; and the first of them (Mrs. Lowman) founds her Evidence on two Circumstances, in both of which she stands flatly contradicted: The first, that of the Prisoner's going with Mr. Daniel to Mr. Ottley's on the King's Birth-day in the Morning; and the other, that of her dining on the same Day at her Brother George Webbe's, in Company with Mr. William Herbert. Now, your Honours and the Gentlemen of the Jury must have observed, that, in the first of these Circumstances, Mrs. Lowman stands contradicted by the Evidence of Mrs. Ottley and Miss Anne Herbert, who have both positively sworn that it was on the 9th of November, the Day preceding the King's Birth-day, that the Prisoner and Daniel were at Mr. Ottley's; and in the other she is also contradicted by Mr. William Herbert, who has likewise positively sworn, that it was on the 9th of November he dined at Mr. George Webbe's junior, in Company with Mrs. Lowman, and that on the 10th he dined at Mr. Cole's. And this Evidence of Mr. Herbert is corroborated by that of Mr. James Brodbelt.

Mr. President. Mr. Barbot, go on with your Defence.

Here Mr. Frye got up, and handed some Papers to the Prisoner, which Mr. Horne, one of the Council for the King, observing, addressed the Court in this Manner:

Mr. Horne. May it please your Honours, I beg Mr. Frye may not be allowed to do this. He is now giving Papers to the Prisoner to assist him in his Defence.

Mr. Frye. They are nothing more than simple Notes of the Evidence, which I took, in order to help his Memory, when he comes to make his Defence; and one or two Cases that I have writ down for him.

Mr. Sol. Gen. It is what they have not a Right to; but it is no great Matter. You may give him the Papers.

Mr. Frye. Here, Mr. Barbot, you are to read from this Place to this, (pointing with his Finger.)

Pris. May it please your Honours, the first Witness produced against me, in order to prove my having had some Resentment against the Deceased, is Mr. Carew, who, as you must have observed, says no more, than that on the Day Bridgewater's Estate was sold at Nevis, he heard me say to the Deceased, that I expected to be treated like a Gentleman. If I did say these Words, I assure you, Gentlemen, they made no Impression at all on me, for I have not the least Recollection of having said any Thing like this to the Deceased. But, admitting I had; does the saying to a Gentleman, that I expect to be well treated, or treated like a Gentleman by him, imply any kind of Malice, or Resentment, against that Gentleman? Surely no!

Mr. Thomas Mills was the next Witness produced on this Occasion. He agrees with Mr. Carew in the Words that passed at the Sale of Bridgewater's Estate. But, Gentlemen, was there any Thing offensive, or malicious, in my Answer to the Deceased; or can any Thing be collected from thence, to shew that I had any Resentment against him? I think not, and I am confident you will think so too.

Mr. Armour has sworn to a Conversation that, he says, passed between him and myself, some Time before the Sale of Bridgewater's Estate. He swears he heard me say, Mr. Mills had treated me in a Manner never to be forgiven. This, I confess, astonishes me; for I have not the least Remembrance of it. And it is indeed strange and very improbable, that I should throw out such Expressions concerning a Gentleman, against whom I never had any Reason to conceive the least Anger or Resentment. It is probable I might, at the Time Mr. Armour says he joined Company with me, have been talking about Mr. James Dasent's Affairs, and might have said that Mr. Mills's Behaviour to Mr. Dasent ought never to be forgotten; for I well knew that Mr. Mills had been a great Friend to Mr. Dasent. It is therefore probable, I say, that Mr. Armour might have misunderstood me. And indeed he must have been mistaken, for I am certain I never uttered the Words he has sworn to. Besides, it is observable, that Mr. Armour does not swear which of the Mills's I spoke of. He believes, indeed, it was the Deceased, and for no other Reason than because I did not use any Christian Name by way of Distinction. I might, Gentlemen, for any Thing Mr. Armour knew, have meant Mr. William Mills, or Mr. Thomas Mills.

The Evidence of Patience Dorset, I confess, is more surprizing than any. She has boldly sworn, that she heard me throw out a Menace at a public Tavern in this Town on the King's Birth-day, in Company with two Men, whom she says she did not know, nor did she hear any of the Conversation previous or subsequent to this Menace. Is it not very strange, that this Woman should only hear that particular Part of the Conversation and no other, and not be able to recollect who the People were I was talking to? Besides, admitting I had had any Resentment against Mr. Mills, it would have betrayed great Weakness in me to have thrown out such a Menace. But, Gentlemen of the Jury, I am confident this Piece of Evidence will have no Weight with you, as it has been sufficiently sufficiently proved by three Witnesses, (one of them a Lady, and the other a Gentleman, of undoubted Characters, and the third a very honest Man) that at the Time Dorset heard me use this Threat she has sworn to, I was actually at the Island of Nevis. This, I think, Gentlemen, fully sufficient to invalidate her Evidence, and I make no Doubt will have its proper Weight with you.

Doctor James Webbe was called next on the Part of the Crown. Between the Doctor and myself, there has for a long Time past, and still does subsist a very great Intimacy; insomuch, that if I had ever had any Quarrel with, or Resentment against, the unhappy Gentleman deceased, it is extremely probable I should have communicated it to him. And yet, Gentlemen, you have heard the Doctor positively swear, that so far from his being acquainted with my having any Difference with the Deceased, or any Intention to fight him, that he never knew, or even suspected, any Thing of the Kind.

It has been also given in Evidence to your Honours, and the Gentlemen of the Jury, that on the 18th of November at Night, I went to Bed at Dr. Webbe's House about Nine o'Clock; and Dr. Webbe swears, that about One in the Morning, as he was passing through the Hall, he spoke to me. This plainly proves, I was at that Time at Dr. Webbe's House in Nevis. It has been also proved, that I was at Dr. Webbe's at Nine o'Clock in the Morning of the 19th, the Day on which the Deceased is supposed to have been killed; and it is observable, that through all the Evidence that has been produced against me, there has not been one Witness who could swear that I was even at Frigate-Bay that Morning; and I do take upon me to say, it was incumbent on the Council for the King to prove, by some positive Witness, that I was that Morning at Frigate-Bay. They have endeavoured indeed, by presumptive Evidence, to prove my being there, and for that Purpose John M'Kenley and Johnson have been examined. M'Kenley swears the Deceased's Negro Boy Coomy told him, I had killed his Master, and that on this he ran to the Bay, and saw a Canoo rowing from the Shore, with a Person in white sitting in the Stern. I beg leave to make two Observations on M'Kenley's Evidence. First, that his Information was from a Slave, who, by the Laws of this Country, would have been an incompetent Witness, had he been produced as such; and consequently any Hearsay from him must be illegal, and ought to have no Weight with the Jury. Add to this too, the Possibility that Coomy might have been bribed to fix the Murder on me. And next, that M'Kenley himself cannot positively say that it was even a white Person that he saw sitting in the Stern of the Canoo. Is it not therefore unjust to conclude that I was the Person?

As to Johnson's Evidence, I beg leave to add only one Observation to what I have already said on that Matter. It has appeared in Evidence to you, Gentlemen of the Jury, that he is a Man of a very bad Character, and, had I had timely Notice of his being a Witness against me, I could have had a Copy of the Record of his Conviction for Petty Larceny from Montserrat, which would have proved him beyond all Doubt an infamous Person. But although I have been so unfortunate as not to be able to produce this Record, yet from what you have heard of this Man's Character, I am persuaded you, Gentlemen of the Jury, will pay no Regard to what he has sworn.

The Council for the King, to prove this Fact upon me, have endeavoured, by a Number of Witnesses, to trace me, as they are pleased to call it, from Place to Place. This kind of Evidence, I hope, will have no Weight with you, Gentlemen of the Jury, as it is at best but very light presumptive Evidence, and as it is absolutely necessary to prove positively that I committed the Fact. Great Stress has been laid also on my exercising the Pistols at Mrs. Dasent's. It has been proved to your Honours and the Jury, by Dr. Webbe, that this was merely accidental, and that after we had done with the Pistols, they were cleaned and put up by a Boy of Mrs. Dasent's. Is it not strange that this Piece of Evidence should be made use of to prove the Murder upon me? What had my exercising these Pistols (which I did a Week before merely for my Amusement) to do with the killing Mr. Mills? Did no other Person ever fire at a Mark with Pistols? Now, Gentlemen of the Jury, if it had happened that a Man was found dead of the Wound of a Sword, and one of you had been exercising a few Days before a Case of Foils; might it not with equal Justice be said that you killed that Man?

For my being seen to land out of a Canoo, I am sure, Gentlemen, that can be no Proof of my having been at Frigate-Bay. Besides, the Witnesses themselves cannot take upon them to swear I came from Frigate-Bay. For any Thing they knew, I might have been a fishing; and surely that is an innocent Action. Was no other Person seen that Morning in a Canoo but myself?

There has been no kind of Proof that I had any Pistols with me, or that my Boy had any. They have indeed now produced a Case of Pistols which they suppose I used that Morning; but I beg leave to observe, that these very Pistols were found by Dr. Webbe, under the Bed at Mrs. Dasent's, in a Pair of Holster Caps; and it does not appear, from any of the Evidence, that they had been lately used.

I make no Doubt the Council for the King will lay great Stress on the Evidence that has been given of my having executed a Paper at O'Donnell's, which they have endeavoured to prove was my Will. Is it not the Duty of every Man, as well as a Satisfaction to him, to make a Will? and is he not at Liberty to make it when and where he pleases? Besides, I had very good Reasons for making a Will, which were to secure Mr. Jacob Saunders for indorsing my Bills, as I intended going to England in Captain Fleming, who was to sail in a few Days.

Mr. Justice Lofack. Mr. Barbot, give me leave to interrupt you. I apprehend you are only wasting your Time, and doing yourself very little Service, by all this. Would it not be much more for your Advantage, to prove where you was from the Time you went to Bed at Doctor Webbe's the Night preceding the Murder, to the Time you were seen to land at Nevis?

Pris. That, Sir, would be a Hardship indeed. I submit it to you, Gentlemen of the Jury, whether it would not be very difficult for any of you to prove where you were on any particular Night, from Nine to Six in the Morning; and, on Failure of such Proof, to be supposed guilty of Murder? Besides, may it please your Honours, I humbly apprehend that in this Case the onus probandi lies on the Crown, and that they must first prove an ibi, before I am obliged to prove an alibi. But admitting I had been out the Night preceding the Murder, ought it from thence to be concluded, that I committed the Murder? Was no other Person out that Night but myself?

Gentlemen of the Jury, it has been said to you, that presumptive Evidence is sufficient to convict a Man of Murder, and I expect the Council for the King will labour to prove this Point. But I beg leave to assert, that presumptive Evidence is by no Means sufficient, and that nothing but positive Proof ought to be admitted to convict a Man of a Crime where his Life is at Stake. It would be of the most dangerous Consequence to admit of presumptive Evidence in such Cases; for an innocent Man might suffer for a Crime he never was guilty of. I have some Authorities in my Hand, to shew how extremely cautious Juries ought to be in finding a Man guilty, on any but the clearest and fullest Proof. Coke Inst.

“ An Uncle was correcting his Nephew, and
 “ the Boy was heard to cry out, O Lord,
 “ Uncle, don’t kill me. The Boy immediately
 “ after absented himself. The Neighbours, “ who had heard the Outcry, on missing the “ Boy, suspected the Uncle had killed him.
 “ The Uncle, finding he was suspected to “ have murdered his Nephew, procured a Boy “ very like his Nephew to personate him. But “ it being soon discovered that this was not “ his real Nephew, the Uncle was thereupon “ apprehended, tried for the Murder, and “ convicted. Some Time after this the Nephew “ appeared.”

Another Case I have, Gentlemen, to the same Point. I do not immediately recollect the Book it is in, but the Case is this.

“ A Man was found dead in a Field. Another “ Man happened to pass by and see him, and “ went and told two Persons of it. These two “ Persons, suspecting him to be the Murderer, “ carried him before a Magistrate. He was “ indicted for the Murder; and one of the “ Jury that tried him, contrary to the Opinion
 “ of the other eleven, and of the Court also,
 “ would not find him guilty. Upon this Man’s “ standing out a long Time, and absolutely
 “ refusing to agree with the rest of the Jury,
 “ they were called into Court, and upon the “ Judge’s asking this Man his Reason for “ refusing to find the Prisoner guilty, he “ honestly confessed that he himself had “ killed the Man, and that the Prisoner at
 “ the Bar was perfectly innocent.”

From hence it appears, Gentlemen of the Jury, that you ought not to be determined by circumstantial Evidence. If former Juries have taken upon themselves to judge severely from presumptive Evidence, that should be no Rule, no Example, for you.

I beg leave to trouble your Honours, and the Gentlemen of the Jury, with one Case more, to shew the Necessity of having positive Evidence to convict a Man on a Trial of this Sort.

“ It happened at Montserrat, that one Captain
 “ Watts was indicted for killing of one Oulds.

“ A Woman, who was the only Evidence,
 “ swore she heard the clashing of Swords,
 “ and saw Captain Watts draw a Sword out
 “ of Oulds’s Body; but because she could “ not swear that she saw Watts thrust the “ Sword into his Body, the Jury acquitted
 “ him.”

Common Fame, Gentlemen, I am persuaded, will have no Weight with you at all. You must all have been sensible at Times, how Report is apt to speak untruly. And, in the present Case, every Art has been tried to raise it to my Prejudice. You are sworn to judge by the Evidence which is delivered to you, not by what you have heard out of Doors. If the Evidence is favourable, you must in your Consciences judge so; otherwise you introduce a Precedent for the greatest Evils.

Gentlemen, if you examine the whole Tenor of my Behaviour for a few Days which preceded this unhappy Accident, until my Commitment, you will find me solely employed about Dr. Webbe’s and Mrs. Dasent’s Affairs, and preparing for a Voyage to Europe; and for the Moments of Recess from Business, only employed in passing my Time agreeably among my Friends. The very Night before poor Mr. Mills’s Death, my Behaviour was such, as shewed I harboured no mischievous Intentions. And can it be supposed that, if I had been conscious of the Crime laid to my Charge, I should have dined at Colonel Webbe’s (the House where I always dined on a Sunday when at Nevis) the very Day on which the Murder was committed, and behaved there in my usual Manner? My Circumstances were such as might have made the Means of escaping very easy to me, had I been guilty of so weighty a Crime as that I am accused of.

Upon the whole, if any Presumption can be drawn from Evidence like this, it must be favourable for me, as they do most effectually demonstrate the whole of my Behaviour to have been most innocent and inoffensive. I shall just beg leave to caution ye, Gentlemen, against any Arguments that have, or may be made use of, to influence your Passions on this Occasion. Much Pains have been taken to stir up in your Breasts Sentiments of Rage and Indignation against me, and to make me appear guilty in your Eyes, though I could by no Means be proved so.

But, Gentlemen, I know you are not to be blinded by Subtleties of this Kind. It is not rhetorical Flourishes will move you on this Occasion to lay down my Life a Sacrifice to my Prosecutors, however powerful they may be. You are, Gentlemen, a Jury, Judges upon your Oaths of Matters of Fact according to Evidence; and, from the personal Knowledge I have of every one of you, I am persuaded nothing but full and demonstrative Proof will any ways induce you to condemn me: not distant Arguments that amount hardly to a Possibility; and when they have an equal Possibility, that any of the Persons in this Court may be the guilty Person, and not me. For the Presumption, I am sure that is altogether in my Favour.

I shall say no more to you on this Occasion, but commit myself, Gentlemen, to your Judgments, not doubting a happy Issue. May God Almighty incline your Hearts in my Favour. On his Protection I depend; and to him be all Honour and Glory henceforth and for ever. Amen.

Mr. Sol. Gen. May it please your Honours,

I shall beg the Indulgence of a few Words, in Reply to the Prisoner's Defence. I shall not make any Recapitulation of the whole Evidence; both as the Trial has been drawn out into so very great a Length, and as that will be done from the Bench; but confine myself to the making a few Observations which I think necessary, on what has fallen from the Prisoner in the Course of his Defence: In which too I shall not be long; for indeed the Prisoner has saved me the Necessity of giving you much Trouble, by the extreme Weakness of his Defence; which was indeed so very weak, that his very Defence itself seems a Proof of his Guilt. For has he invalidated any Part of the Evidence against him? Has he disproved a single Fact? Nay, has he even attempted to do it? save in one Instance only, where it was not without Concern I saw him endeavouring to cover one Crime by another, in offering, by a palpable Perjury, to take away the Force of the Evidence of Patience Dorset, by getting it proved, that he was not on this Island at the Time when she swore she heard him speak the particular Words she gave an Account of. Could he indeed have fairly and honestly disproved her, it might have been of no small Avail to him: But by unsuccessfully attempting to do it, he has only the more established the Truth of her Testimony; and the very Attempt itself shews how strongly he felt the Weight of it lie upon him; and amounts to a Sort of Confession of his Crime, in labouring, by so undue Means, to destroy an Evidence, which only the Consciousness of his Guilt could make him so strenuous to invalidate.

But the main of his Defence seems to lie in this, that the Evidence against him is only circumstantial; and therefore, however strong, ought not to avail to convict him, without absolute and positive Proof of his committing the Fact, by Persons who saw him do it. I indeed expected he would fly to this miserable Refuge, the last Resort of a guilty Man, oppressed by the Weight of Conviction, and borne down by the Force of the plainest Evidence against him. I shall therefore beg to be a little particular to this Point; not only as being what the Prisoner seems to have rested the whole Force of his Defence upon, and placed all his Hopes of an Acquittal in; but as I am sensible great Pains have been also taken to inculcate this Doctrine abroad: A Doctrine the falsest and most dangerous that can be broached, and which plainly contradicts all our Reason and Experience on this Matter. For,

Not only, according to this Doctrine, hardly any Criminal could ever be convicted at all; but moreover, I am bold to say, out of all those that have been so, by much the greater Part were convicted on circumstantial Evidence.

So far from being none, or even bad Evidence, it has ever been allowed that, for the Lights it does give, it is the best and surest of all Kinds whatsoever, and the least likely to deceive and mislead.

A Man may lye, but, as an ingenious Gentleman said this Morning, Facts cannot lye. A well-invented Tale may be told and stood to by a wicked and daring Witness, in a Manner that he knows it is impossible for him to be detected in: But a Variety of Facts of several Kinds, all collected from different and distant Persons, Places and Times, with an apparent Impossibility of Combination or Confederacy, all independent of each other, and with no other Connexion or Agreement between them, but what arises from their bearing from different and distant Points to the same Center of Truth; these can never mislead the Judgment, or impose upon the Belief; but justify and confirm each other, and are the surest and most unerring Guides to conduct to Truth.

They who affirm, that circumstantial Evidence alone cannot be sufficient to convict, must not only be greatly unused to the hearing or reading of Trials; but must also be perfectly ignorant of the very Nature of a Trial, and what it is. For what is a Trial, but to hear, examine, and weigh all that is offered on either Part; and then from the whole to draw out, or (as the well-known Term is) to find the Truth?

Is it not the constant and universal Practice on Trials by Juries, for the Judge who sums up the Evidence, to close the Charge with Words to this Effect? "If, upon the whole Matter, you believe in your Consciences that the Prisoner at the Bar committed the Fact of which he stands indicted, you are to find him guilty: But if, upon the whole Matter, you do not believe in your Consciences that he committed it, you are to find him not guilty?" Is it not the usual and constant Practice, I say, to close the Charge with Words like these?

But where is the Sense or Meaning, I pray ye, of such an Admonition, or of Words like these, if strong Circumstances alone may not, in any Case, be a sufficient Evidence to authorize the Jury to find the Prisoner guilty?

If nothing but positive, ocular, point-blank Evidence can be sufficient for that Purpose, how trifling and impertinent were it to give such a Charge? For,

If there be such positive and absolute Evidence, what Doubt or Difficulty can there be in the Case? or how is it then congruous to say, if they believe, upon the whole Matter, a Thing so plainly and palpably sworn, as to leave no Room to talk of the whole Matter, or hardly of believing at all? And,

If there be not such positive and absolute Evidence, what Reason or Justice is there in the Judge's saying to them, if, upon the whole Matter, they believe in their Consciences, what he sees there is no Foundation, and they can have no Right, to exercise their Belief or their Consciences at all about?

In a Word, if nothing less than such positive Evidence would avail, how can there ever be any Doubt at all? or what Occasion can there be, in any Case, of having a Jury at all? In God's Name, what, in that Case, is, or can a Jury be for?

If such positive Evidence only will suffice, 'tis immediately seen whether there be such or not: And then the Court, without the Mediation of a Jury, have no more to do than to acquit or condemn at a single Word; and the very swearing a Jury were a most unnecessary and idle Formality.

But to consider this Matter a little further.—How frequently do Trials of Murder in England, last eight, twelve, sixteen Hours, or longer? Every body knows that such Things have frequently happened.

But, I beseech ye, how could this be, if only ocular, downright positive Proof could avail to convict a Person?

Is it not, and must it not be seen, in one Hour of the Trial, whether there be such positive and absolute Proof or not?

If there be such positive Proof, what can there be further to be done? or what Occasion to protract the Trial to any greater Length?

If there be not such positive Proof, why are so many fruitless Hours wasted in giving in Evidence, and laying together Circumstances and Presumptions, which, though ever so numerous, or ever so powerful, could be of no Consequence at all?

What a Figure must the Judges make in suffering so much Time to be mispent, in hearing, and permitting to be solemnly given in Evidence, what in itself, at this Rate, must all be so utterly insignificant and beside the Purpose?

And yet, do they not constantly, after Trials of so great a Length, solemnly and gravely enumerate all the Circumstances and Presumptions, and then put it to the Belief and Consciences of the Jury, whether they are from them convinced of the Prisoner's Guilt? and are not Prisoners accordingly constantly convicted on them? But

Were it not the most crying Abuse in the Judges, and the greatest Profanation of Justice in itself, thus gravely to set the Prisoner's Life on such a Hazard, if they knew in their Consciences, that there was no Evidence given, which ought to affect him?

Ought they not to tell the Jury at once, they are to find the Prisoner not guilty, without more ado?

Gentlemen of the Jury,

Though I hope you need no further Conviction of the Falseness of this Doctrine, yet it may not be amiss to tell you what our great Oracle of the Law, my Lord Coke, whose Name you have, I make no Doubt, often heard of, defines a Trial to be: "A Trial (says he) is to find out, by due Examination, the Truth of the Point in Issue."

And is not this, Gentlemen, perfectly agreeable to, and a Confirmation of, what I have been insisting on? That is, that it is to hear, examine and weigh all that is offered on either Side? Is not this, I say, the finding out the Truth on due Examination?

But, I pray ye, would this be an apt or proper Definition, or would this exhibit a just or adequate Idea, of a Trial, if nothing but point-blank Proof of the Commission of the Fact were, or could be, allowed a sufficient Evidence to convict a Person?

Does it not, on the contrary, suppose an Uncertainty? Does it not imply a Doubt and Difficulty? But Where can be the Doubt and Difficulty, if there is such positive point-blank Proof? or what is there to be found out, on due Examination, if none else be sufficient?

But, Gentlemen, to illustrate this Matter still further by the same great Authority, I beg Leave to read you other Words of the same Author, extremely pertinent to this Purpose; and, Gentlemen, they are these: "When the Trial is by Verdict of twelve Men, there the Judgment is not given upon Witnesses, or other Kind of Evidence, but upon the Verdict; and upon such Evidence as is given to the Jury, they give their Verdict—And many Times Juries, together with other Matter, are much induced by Presumptions, whereof there be three Sorts, viz. violent, probable, and light or temerary. Violenta presumptio is many Times plena probatio; as if one be run through the Body with a Sword in a House, whereof he instantly dieth,

"and a Man is seen to come out of that House with a bloody Sword, and no other Man was at that Time in the House." Thus you hear, Gentlemen, the general Doctrine he lays down; and the Instance he gives by way of Illustration of it, and which may serve the better to make it understood.

But, Gentlemen, I have another Authority in my Hand still more explicit of this Matter, and which may enable you still the more clearly to judge of it; and that is from a Trial which I had Occasion to mention this Morning to another Purpose; which is of Miss Blandy, who (as I make no Doubt you have all heard) was tried at Oxford no longer ago than the Month of March last, for the Murder of her own Father; where the learned Judge, in the Close of his Charge to the Jury, has the following Words, extremely apposite to the present Purpose: "In the present Case, which is to be made out by Circumstances, great Part of the Evidence must rest upon Presumption, in which the Law makes a Distinction: A slight or probable Presumption only, has little or no Weight; but a violent Presumption amounts, in Law, to full Proof, that is, where Circumstances speak so strongly, that to suppose the contrary, would be absurd."

Thus, Gentlemen, it appears in the plainest Manner, from the Reason of the Thing; from constant Experience; from the Words with which the Charge of the Judge to the Jury is always wont to be closed; from the, otherwise, Impropriety of those Words of the Charge; from the frequent extreme Length of Trials of Murder in England; from the absolute Unnecessariness of such Length on any other Supposition; from the Definition of a Trial by my Lord Coke; and lastly, from the express and plain Words of the very Charge of which I have just now read you a Part: From all these, I say, it is plain and clear, that circumstantial Proof may be, and frequently is, sufficient in itself to convict an Offender, and prove the Charge against him; and that the contrary Doctrine is contrary to Experience and good Sense, and in itself false and absurd.

But, may it please your Honours, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, as absurd as this Doctrine is, the Absurdity of it is not all.—No; there is still something further to be considered and guarded against; and that is, its dangerous and destructive Tendency.

If once it comes to be established into a Rule, that nothing but point-blank, positive, ocular Evidence shall suffice to convict a Man; who can be secure of his Life or Property but for a single Day? What a Lesson of Encouragement were this to hold out to bloody-minded and ill-disposed Men! What a Security and Indemnity were here promised and insured to them in the Commission of their Crimes!

Were not this plainly to say to them in so many express Words, "See that you commit your Crimes with tolerable Secrecy and Caution, and you may be assured of Impunity; only take Care that none be present to behold you execute them: And then, though a thousand and a thousand Circumstances ever so loudly proclaim your Guilt; though it should be evinced by ever so many and ever so glaring Tokens; though every body believes, sees, and assuredly knows, that you did, and must have

“ have committed the Fact; yet all this is ‘but “ Circumstance and Presumption, and by no “ Means Evidence to convict, or at all affect,
 “ you; but, with all the plainest and clearest
 “ Marks of your Guilt about you, you may laugh
 “ at your Prosecutors, and set the whole World
 “ at Defiance.”

Is not this the plain and palpable Language, is it not the necessary and inevitable Consequence, of such a Doctrine? Is it to be supposed that ill Men can be so mighty dull, as not to take so very plain a Hint? or is it to be imagined they will be checked and restrained by Justice and the Laws, when they are taught how they may so easily, and with using so little Caution, put themselves out of their Reach?

I hope, therefore, we shall hear no more of this senseless and pernicious Doctrine; pretended to be grounded on Scrupulousness and Tenderness of Conscience; but the mere Effect of Falseness of Judgment, or Perverseness of Will. For,

What Sort of Conscience must that be, which thus combats itself? or by what unaccountable Kind of Reasoning must it be, that a Man persuades himself he is bound in his Conscience to find that to be the Case, which in his Conscience he believes, and is perfectly assured, is not the Case?

A Man that can argue at this Rate, let his Pretence be what it will, perversely belies the Truth, and equivocates and plays double with God Almighty, and Justice, and his own Conscience.

But now if it should be asked, if then any Thing less than positive and absolute Proof of the Commission of the Fact will avail, and a Man may be convicted on circumstantial Evidence only; how shall we know what Circumstances are sufficient to convict an Offender? I say, if this be asked, I answer, in the Words which I observed to be wont to be used in the Close of a Charge, “ when, upon the whole Matter, you “ believe in your Consciences that the Prisoner “ committed the Fact of which he stands in“ dicted;” or, (which is still better) when (as it is so happily and ingeniously expressed in the Part of the Charge I have just read to you) I say, “ when Circumstances speak so strongly, that to “ believe the contrary, would be absurd.” For,

It is not barely what this or that Witness, or these two or three, or any other precise Number of Witnesses say, that shall acquit or condemn. No; ’tis the joint Result of the whole Evidence taken and considered together; and what, upon examining and weighing that, shall appear to you, or (as the well-known Term is) you shall find, to be the Truth.

To pretend to lay down any general Rule of what is, or is not, sufficient Evidence, were ridiculous and absurd.

Every Fact is to stand on its own Circumstances; and that, and that only, is to be taken to be proved, of which the Consciences and Belief of the Jury are convinced.

The Evidence that does not convince their Consciences and Belief, though it consist of a thousand Particulars, is not enough: And

The Evidence that does convince their Consciences and Belief, is enough, though it consist of ever so few.

Gentlemen, you may have observed how strenuous both the Prisoner and his Council were in endeavouring to ward off the Force of one Piece of Evidence, which they perceived made so powerfully against him; and that was that Coomy, the Deceased’s Negro Boy, told M^r Kenley, when he came down to the Bay, that it was Mr. Barbot who had killed his Master: This, they say, you are to give no heed to; as being what is called hearsay Evidence only, and no more than what one Person tells another. But, Gentlemen, give me Leave to observe, there is a Distinction in this Matter; and that this is, in Truth, a very strong Evidence indeed. That hearsay Evidence is no Evidence at all, I do generally allow; and therefore, had Coomy the next Day, or some Hours after, told this to M^r Kenley, or any other Person, it ought to have no Weight at all with you, because in that Case it might not be true; but in the present Case it ought to weigh with you, and powerfully too, because it must have been true, as the Event and what followed invincibly demonstrated.

A Gentleman is found murdered, and just expiring, and a Clamour is made, on the Spot and on the Instant, that such an one was his Murderer; a Person is seen flying from the Place where the Murder was committed; and the Person so flying is pursued from the Place, and found to be the very same who was alledged on the Spot to have been the Murderer: I pray ye, does not this prove that the Clamour was, and must have been, true? and that the Persons who made it spoke from absolute Certainty, and were neither deceived themselves, nor deceived others? Therefore as Hearsay is generally no Evidence, because it may be false; so that Coomy told M^r Kenley is good Evidence, because it must be true. And there is no Medium between these two Things, that either Coomy saw the Prisoner kill his Master, or he must have been inspired.

The same Observation will hold, with regard to what Peter the Negro told Cribbe in the Morning at Nevis, viz. that he feared Mr. Barbot had done Mischief; and against which too the same Objection was so strongly pressed, that it was only Hearsay, and what one Person told another. But as you heard, Gentlemen, this was said by Peter before the News otherwise came from this Island to Nevis of this unhappy Event: And therefore Peter (who, as Jasper Thomas swore, was one of the Negroes who rowed the Canoo which brought the Prisoner to Nevis) could not then speak what he did, from the Information of others, but of his own Knowledge only; and as the Deceased actually was found murdered at that Time, either what he said of the Prisoner was a necessary Truth, or he must have known that Mischief was done, by Inspiration. And now, Gentlemen, as either of these two Circumstances singly, speaks so exceeding strongly, what is not the Force of them when put together? ’Tis plain there could be no Combination or Confederacy between these two Negroes, Coomy and Peter; and therefore for the former to say, on the Spot, and on the Instant, of the Murder committed, that Mr. Barbot had killed his Master; and the latter so soon after, at the Distance of several Leagues, that he feared Mr. Barbot had done Mischief, amounts to a Demonstration that both must have spoke Truth: And when to this we join all the intermediate Circumstances, and the tracing the Prisoner from Place to Place, the Whole composes the fullest and most invincible Proof, without a Possibility of Perjury or Mistake in the Matter, that ever was made of any Fact whatsoever. And therefore,

It is to little Purpose that the Prisoner has asked, Did no other Person than himself make a Will such a Day? Did no other Person go in a Canoo? Was no other Person out at such an Hour of the Night? Did no other Person fire at a Mark with Pistols? For were these Questions singly asked, there is no Doubt but there might be many Persons, of whom each of these Matters might with Truth have been separately affirmed: But alas! that is not the Matter! for of what avail were this to the Prisoner's Defence, unless there were other Persons of whom all these together might be also affirmed? And therefore the only Way of asking these Questions materially to this Purpose, were in this Manner: Was there any other Person who had Words of Heat with the Deceased on the 7th of November? Who made such a Declaration on the 10th? Who was firing at a Mark with Pistols on the 12th? Who hastily made a Will at a Tavern, and delivered it out of his own Custody on the 18th? Who the same Night left his Bed and House at Midnight; and the next Morning was seen flying from the Place where the Deceased was murdered, just after he was so? And then if there be any one else, of whom only Half these Circumstances can with Truth be affirmed, we may safely allow all these, in the Case of the Prisoner, to go for nothing.

And here, in speaking of flying from the Place of the Murder committed, I cannot but observe how vastly stronger is the presumptive Proof against the Prisoner, than that in the Case put by my Lord Coke, and which I just now read to you: For there was only that single Circumstance; but here is the same accompanied with twenty others, which of themselves had availed to convince any reasonable Person's Mind, who must have committed the Murder, even without the seeing him fly from the Spot.

Gentlemen, I shall but just add; the Prisoner cautioned you against suffering your Passions to be unduly worked upon by the Eloquence of the Council, and being misled by their Rhetoric into a Belief of his Guilt. For my own Part, I pretend to no Mastery over the Passions, or other Talent of the Sort; and did I even imagine I were possessed of such, should think myself not warranted to use it on an Occasion like this. The present Case is a Case of Blood, where the Ornaments of Speech, and the Arts of Rhetoric, to inflame the Passions, and blind the Reason, however justifiable they may be in a Prisoner on his Defence, are certainly not candid or allowable on the Part of the Prosecution. The single Question in the Case is of mere Fact, to wit, whether the Prisoner committed the Murder; and therefore I have confined myself to such Reasonings and Arguments only, as I thought conduced to the better finding out the naked Truth of that; and can truly say, I have urged nothing to your Consciences, which did not seem right and just to my own. For

I should think the offering to mislead or abuse yours, were doing my own the greatest Injury.

You will therefore, Gentlemen, consider the Whole together; and if, upon the Whole, you believe in your Consciences the Prisoner did not commit this Murder, God Almighty forbid you should condemn him; and if you believe in your Consciences he did commit it, God Almighty forbid you should acquit him.

Mr. Kerr. May it please your Honours,

Mr. Sollicitor, in his Reply, has so fully answered every Objection of the Prisoner, that it were needless to trouble your Honours further on this Occasion. I shall only beg Leave to observe one Thing which has been omitted by Mr. Sollicitor, and that is, that the Cases which have been quoted by the Prisoner, I will venture to affirm, are not in any Book of Authority now extant; so that I am really inclined to believe they are Cases of Mr. Frye's own making.

Mr. President. Gentlemen of the Jury, this Trial has taken up a great deal of Time, and been attended with a Variety of Circumstances. I shall therefore, as briefly as possible, sum up the Evidence, and make such Observations as occur to me, with as much Perspicuity as I am able.

The first Witness produced by the Council for the King, was Mr. Carew, who says, that at the Sale of the Estate called Bridgewater's, on the 7th of November last, the Prisoner and the Deceased being present, he heard the Prisoner say to the Deceased, that he expected to be treated like a Gentleman, or Words to that Effect. These Words, the Witness says, were spoke, he believes, in answer to something the Deceased had said to the Prisoner, which the Witness did not hear.

The next Witness is Mr. Thomas Mills, who was also present at the Sale of Bridgewater's Estate. He says, that the Prisoner objected to the Conditions of Sale, and that the Deceased (apprehensive that he did it with Design to protract the Time 'till Sun-set, after which the Estate could not be sold on that Day) said to the Prisoner, Mr. Barbot, the Conditions of Sale are very fair, why will you cavil about them? To which the Prisoner replied, I expect to be treated like a Gentleman, or Words like these; that to this the Deceased made no other Answer, than that he should always treat him and all Mankind as such. This Witness says also, that the Prisoner's whole Behaviour appeared to be calculated to delay the Sale. He says too, that he verily believes the Prisoner and the Deceased never saw each other from the Day of the Sale, 'till that of the Murder; for that he either saw the Deceased, or heard from him, every Day after the Sale, 'till he was killed; but he does not know whether they had any other Conversation the Day of the Sale; for he left them together in the Room where the Estate was sold. You will observe, Gentlemen, that the Testimony of Mr. Carew and Mr. Mills corroborate each other.

The next Witness is Mr. Armour, who says, that between the 3d and the 7th of November last, he was in Company with the Prisoner at Mr. Constantine's Door, and heard him say, that Mr. Mills had treated him in such a Manner as ought never to be forgiven. Mr. Armour indeed says, that the Prisoner did not particularly mention which of the Mills's it was that had treated him thus; but he understood that it was the Deceased he meant. I would make one short Remark here. The Prisoner himself has declared he never had any Difference with either Mr. Thomas Mills, or Mr. William Mills; and as there was no other Man of the Name of Mills in this Island but the Deceased, Deceased, you will judge from the Event, who it was the Prisoner meant in that Conversation with Mr. Armour.

The next Witness that is called on the Part of the Crown is Patience Dorset: She tells you, that on the King's Birth-day she saw the Prisoner standing under the Gallery at Mr. Cabée's Tavern, talking to two Persons whom she does not know, and in passing by she heard him say, There was a certain Gentleman in this Island, that within a Fortnight he would either kill or be killed by. She is very positive that it was on the King's Birth-day she saw the Prisoner, and heard him say these Words, from two Circumstances; the first, that Mrs. Mr. Cabée sent for her that Day to assist in providing an Entertainment for the Lieutenant-General and his Company; and the other, that she heard a great many Guns fired. The King's Birth-day, you all remember, (I suppose) was celebrated on the 10th of November. Now, if you will compare what the Prisoner said to Mr. Armour before the 7th, his Behaviour to the Deceased upon the 7th, and the Declaration he made on the 10th, in the hearing of Patience Dorset; I think there is too much Reason to imagine it was the Deceased he meant, when he threw out that Menace.

Dr. James Webbe is then called. Before this Gentleman was examined, I confess, I expected he would have fully proved the Fact upon the Prisoner; for, from the close Connexion and Intimacy between them, I thought it highly probable he might have known something, if not the Whole of this Matter. And from the Character of the Doctor, his Education, and Rank in Life, I took it for granted he would have candidly and ingenuously related all that he knew concerning this unhappy Affair. But; I own, I was no less surprized than concerned, to find that every Thing which came from him, tending to bring this Matter to Light, was extorted with seeming Violence; and that he readily told all that he thought would obscure and hide the Fact. He says, that he has known the Prisoner between four and five Years; that he has frequently employed him as an Attorney; and that he lives in great Intimacy with him. That he was present at the Sale of Bridgewater's Estate on the 7th of November last, where the Deceased and the Prisoner also were; that the Estate then belonged to himself, and was sold for his Debts. He does not know what were the Conditions of Sale; but he remembers to have heard the Prisoner say, We will be bound as far as by Law we can be bound. He does not recollect any other Words passing at the Sale, only hearing the Deceased say to the Prisoner, Let us have no School-boy's Play, or something to that Effect. He did not hear the Prisoner make any Answer to this; for he was at that Time, he says, so distracted and confused at having his Estate sold, that he gave very little Attention to what passed. He tells you, that the Prisoner, at his Request, purchased the Estate for him. This really seems strange and unaccountable, that a Man whose Estate was then selling, and who had procured a Friend to purchase it for him, should be so inattentive, as not to recollect what the Conditions of Sale were; and it is as extraordinary, that a Man should buy an Estate without knowing on what Conditions. He says, he does not know how long the Deceased stayed at Nevis after the Sale, or whether the Prisoner ever saw him after. That the Day after the Sale he saw the Prisoner, but does not recollect that any Conversation passed between them on the Business of the preceding Day, or that the Name of the Deceased was mentioned by the Prisoner. This is very amazing, that a Man, in an Affair so near his Heart, and which had thrown him into such Confusion and Distraction of Mind, should not the next Day, on seeing his Friend who purchased his Estate for him, make some Inquiry about the Event of the preceding Day. But this Gentleman's Memory is fatally treacherous to him; for he, in almost the same Breath, says, he thought the Terms of Sale hard too, and advised the Prisoner not to sign them. From hence it plainly appears, that Dr. Webbe was well acquainted with the Conditions of Sale, and must have had some Conversation with the Prisoner about them, or he could not have thought them hard, nor have advised the Prisoner not to sign them. He tells you, that the Prisoner came to his House on the 16th of November, and stayed there 'till the 18th, on which Day they dined together at Jacob Saunders's, and executed a Bond of Indemnity to Saunders, for having indorsed the Prisoner's Bills for the Deposit of the Purchase-Money of the Estate; that from thence in the Evening he went with the Prisoner to O Donnell's Tavern, where the Prisoner sat down to write; that the Prisoner desired him to get three Witnesses to attest the Paper he was writing; and that he did procure three Witnesses, which were Potts, O Donnell, and Springett, in whose Presence the Prisoner executed the Paper he was writing; and immediately after delivered it to him (Webbe.) He tells you, that he neither read the Paper while the Prisoner was writing it, nor since it has been in his own Custody; and that he is quite ignorant of the Contents of it. In this he is manifestly contradicted by his own Deposition which you have heard read, and which, as has been proved to you, was taken before Judge Herbert at Nevis. In that Deposition he swears, that the Prisoner made his Will at O Donnell's on the 18th of November in the Evening, and delivered it to him (Webbe.) informing him at the same Time that he had made him a Legatee in it. He tells you, that after this Paper (for he will not now call it a Will, though it has been fully proved he knows it to be so) was executed and delivered to him by the Prisoner, they both went Home together to this Witness's House; that the Prisoner at about Nine o'Clock went to Bed; that having Occasion to get up at about One o'Clock, as he was passing through the Hall, the Prisoner called to him, and asked him what o'Clock it was; but that he did not see the Prisoner from the Time he went to Bed, 'till the next Morning, at about Nine o'Clock, he saw him riding up to the House on one of his (Webbe's) Horses, attended also by his Negro Boy Pope; that he had on a white Coat, a dark-coloured Waistcoat, and a silver-laced Hat; that he did not ask the Prisoner, nor does he know, where he had been; but thinks there was Time enough, from the Hour he spoke to him the Night before, 'till the next Morning that he saw him riding up, to have been at St. Christopher's and back again; that he knew nothing of the Prisoner's taking his Horse and Boy, but that it was very customary for him to take them whenever he wanted them, without asking his Leave. He remembers the Prisoner having having a red Trunk, which he brought from Mrs. Dasent's on the 16th of November; that he did see the Prisoner's Boy Nero bring a red Trunk to his House the Morning of the 19th, at the same Time that the Prisoner was riding up to his House; but he does not know whether that Trunk was the same the Prisoner brought from Mrs. Dasent's on the 16th, or whether the Trunk now produced to him is the same. He tells you, that on the Sunday before the Murder, the Prisoner and he were firing at a Mark with a Pair of Pistols that belonged to Mrs. Dasent; that Mrs. Dasent, on missing a Pair of her Pistols, sent to him, to desire he would come to her House; that he did go and assist her in searching for the Pistols; that he found them under the Bed in a Pair of Holster Caps; but he knew not of their being in that Place, nor who put them there: That at the Time he was searching for the Pistols in the Chamber, he observed a red Trunk, which he believes belonged to the Prisoner, and which he saw opened afterwards by Judge Herbert; in which were found, he says, a Coat, Waistcoat, and some Linen, which were moist; that he cannot tell whether the Cloaths found in the Trunk were the same the Prisoner had on the 19th in the Morning, when he rode up to his House; that he believes the Trunk and Cloaths now produced to him, are the same which he saw at Mrs. Dasent's the Morning after the Murder. He tells you, that on the 19th the Prisoner dined at Mr. George Webbe's senior, and he himself dined at Mr. Maynard's; that in the Afternoon, while he was at Mr. Maynard's, a Negro came to him, and told him the Prisoner had killed the Deceased; that he went soon after to Mr. Symmonds's; that he did not mention there what the Negro had told him, though he had a very good Opportunity to do it; for while he was there, he says, Mr. Symmonds received a Letter, giving an Account of the Prisoner's having killed the Deceased; that he himself also received a Note from the Prisoner, pressing him to come immediately to him at John Herbert's; that he did not mention at Mr. Symmonds's, having received such a Note from the Prisoner, though he heard Mr. Symmonds say, he would go and assist the Posse in Pursuit of him; that he went immediately after to John Herbert's, where he found the Prisoner drinking Tea; that the Prisoner immediately took him out into the Necessary-house, and asked him if he had heard the Report of his having killed Mr. Mills; that he answered, yes; that the Prisoner replied, he should not fly for it, for he knew nothing of it. He tells you, that this was all the Conversation that passed between them at that Time; that while they were in the Necessary-house, the Officers of Justice apprehended the Prisoner; that the Prisoner took him aside in Mr. Herbert's Hall, after he was apprehended, and desired him to get ten Pistoles from his Uncle Webbe for him; that he saw the Prisoner while he was in Gaol at Newis; that all the Conversation he had with him there was, desiring him to make over Bridgewater's Estate to him. He tells you, that he never knew that the Prisoner had any Resentment against the Deceased; that he knew nothing of his Boy Pope's having been at Bridgewater's Estate the Night before the Murder; that he did not send Pope out any where that Night, and did not know that he was gone out; that he himself was not sent for by any of his Patients that Night; and that it was so boisterous a Night, as he should not have gone out in for Pleasure.

Upon the Whole of Dr. Webbe's Evidence, his Inclination to serve the Prisoner very plainly appears: But from his Want of Candour and Ingenuity, from the many Prevarications he has been guilty of, and the manifest Contradiction between his Deposition at Newis, and his Examination on the Trial; his Evidence, instead of answering the Intention of his giving it, serves rather to fix a strong Suspicion of Guilt on the Prisoner.

Mr. O Donnell, who was the next Witness, says, that the Prisoner and Dr. Webbe came to his House between Seven and Eight o'Clock in the Evening on the 18th of November; that the Prisoner called for Pen, Ink, and Paper, and sat down to write; that while he was writing, he called Dr. Webbe to him several Times, and they spoke together in a low Voice; that Dr. Webbe looked over the Prisoner frequently while he was writing; that as soon as the Prisoner had finished what he was writing, he went with Dr. Webbe into an inner Room; that after some little Time Dr. Webbe returned, and desired him, with Potts and Springett, to go in and witness a Paper; that the Prisoner did execute a Paper in the Presence of Potts, Springett, and this Witness; that he knows not what the Paper was, but believes it was a Will, because there were three Witnesses to it; that the Prisoner, after he had signed the Paper, put his Thumb on the Seal, and pronounced some Words, but so inarticulately, that he could not distinguish what he said; that the Prisoner covered with his Hand the Place where the Attestation is usually written, so that he could not see it. He tells you, that as soon as the Prisoner had executed this Paper, he delivered it to Doctor Webbe.

Charles Potts is then called. He says, that on the 18th of November last, being at O Donnell's in the Evening, somebody called to him, and told him he was wanted in the inner Room; that he went in, and the Prisoner desired him to witness an Instrument of Writing; that he, together with O Donnell and Springett, did witness a Paper, to which he saw the Prisoner sign his Name; that the Prisoner put his Thumb on the Seal, and took it off again, but does not recollect that he heard him say any Thing; that he took the Instrument of Writing to be some Deed to secure Jacob Saunders, because he met the Prisoner and Dr. Webbe coming from Saunders's that Day. I cannot help observing, that this is a very weak Reason for supposing it to be a Deed to secure Saunders; for had it been really so, there could be no Necessity for keeping it such a profound Secret; and, in the next Place, it is very natural to suppose, they would have executed any Deed of that Kind at Saunders's House, when they executed the Bond of Indemnity to him. He tells you, that he never knew that the Prisoner had any Resentment against the Deceased, but that, on the contrary, he has heard him often express great Regard for him.

The next Witness that is called is Thomas Hobson. He tells you, that on Saturday Night, the Night before he heard the Deceased was murdered, Dr. Webbe's Boy Pope came with a Horse of his Master's at Midnight, to the House where he (Hobson) lives, on Bridgewater's Estate, and said he had been round the Island looking for his Master; that Pope and the Horse were both wet; that Pope put the Horse in the Stable, and stayed there all Night.

Night. He tells you, that about Eight o'Clock the next Morning (which was the Day on which he heard of the Murder) he saw a little Man coming up to the House in a white Coat, and silver-laced Hat; that as soon as he came up to the Steps, he called for Pope, and ordered him to saddle the Horse; that he asked Pope which Road he should take; that Pope shewed him the shortest Way to Mr. Pinney's, where Dr. Webbe lives; and that he got on Horseback; and rode away: He believes he came from the Bay; and that his Shoes were wet. He tells you, that the Prisoner at the Bar is the very Man who came to his House on the 19th in the Morning, and whose Dress and Person, with the other Circumstances, he has described to you.

Sarah Hobson, the Sister of Thomas Hobson, is called next; but as her Evidence agrees in every Particular with that of her Brother, I think it is needless to repeat it to you.

The next Witnesses on the Part of the Crown is John M'Kenley. He tells you, that between Four and Five o'Clock in the Morning on the 19th of November, as he was lying on his Bed, Coomy, a Negro belonging to the Deceased, rushed into his Chamber, and, in great Fright, told him, that his Master was fighting at Frigate-Bay, with a Gentleman from Nevis; that he immediately got up, and ran down to the Bay, where Coomy, being on Horseback, had got before him; that he found Coomy supporting the Deceased; that he went up to him, and took hold of his Hand, and spoke to him; that he made him no Answer, nor had no Pulse; that he found then he was dead, though still warm, and was but just expired. He tells you, that on inquiring of Coomy who it was that had killed his Master, Coomy told him it was the Prisoner, and that he was just gone off in a Canoo; that he immediately ran down to the Sea-side, and saw a Canoo, with four Oars and a Paddle, making very fast from the Shore, and somebody in white sitting in the Stern of it, but he could not distinguish whether it was a white Person or a Negro; that the Deceased had on his great Coat and Gloves; that his Pistols were in the Holsters on his Horse; and his Sword in the Scabbard, wrapped in the Belt, at some Distance from him.

The next Witness is William Johnson. He tells you, that about Six o'Clock in the Morning, on the 19th of November last, as he was coming down from the Salt-Ponds, he saw the Prisoner in a Canoo, with four Oars and a Sail, between forty and fifty Yards distant from him; that the Canoo seemed coming from Frigate-Bay, and was rowing towards Nevis; that the Prisoner had on a white Coat, a silver-laced Hat, and a dark-coloured Waistcoat; that he knows the Prisoner very well; that he could see all the Way between the Place where he met the Prisoner, and Nevis; and that no other Canoo was in the Channel, but that in which the Prisoner was. The Prisoner and his Council have attempted to discredit the Testimony of Johnson, by saying he was publicly whipt for Petty Larceny at Montserrat; and that he could not positively swear before the Coroner's Inquest, that it was the Prisoner he saw in the Canoo. But they should, to have effected their Purpose, have produced the Record of Johnson's Conviction, without which, a bare Assertion of his Guilt ought to have no Weight with you. With regard to his refusing to swear positively to the Prisoner before the Coroner's Inquest, I think he swore as every cautious Man ought to do, that he verily believed it was the Prisoner he saw in the Canoo; but after he had, for his better Recollection, seen him in Gaol, he was certain, and has now, as you have heard, positively sworn it was the Prisoner he saw in the Canoo. And besides, Mr. Wilson's Evidence does entirely acquit Johnson of any ill Design against the Prisoner, and does certainly strengthen his Evidence; for Mr. Wilson swears, that Johnson brought him a Letter from Montserrat the Morning the Deceased was murdered; that having heard the Report of the Murder, he told Johnson, that the Deceased was killed by the Prisoner; at which Johnson expressed a good deal of Surprise, and said, that he had met him that Morning in a Canoo going to Nevis. From this Circumstance, I think, Johnson's Evidence ought to receive its full Credit.

Jasper Thomas, and his Son John Thomas, are next called. They both agree in their Evidence, and tell you, that between Six and Seven o'Clock in the Morning, on the 19th of November last, they saw a Canoo belonging to John Cribbe land under the Manchioneal Trees, just under Lowland-Church, at Nevis; that as soon as the Canoo struck the Shore, the Prisoner jumped out of it; that a little yellow Negro Boy jumped out at the same Time, with a small red Trunk on his Head, and went towards the Town; that Hulburd's Peter, and Deverade's Joe, were in the Canoo; that the Prisoner had on a whitish Coat, and a silver-laced Hat; that they saw the Canoo above fifteen hundred Yards before she came to Land; that she was under Sail, and did not strike Sail 'till she landed; and that she seemed coming from the Salt-Ponds.

William White is then called. He tells you, that on the 19th of November in the Morning, as he was at work at Mr. Woodley's Estate, he saw a little Man in a brown Coat and a laced Hat, which he knew to be the Prisoner, walking up the Road that leads to Bridgewater's Estate; that he believes he came from the Bay; that he knows the Prisoner very well, and is certain he is the Person he saw.

The next Witness is Mr. Bridgewater, who tells you, that between Nine and Ten o'Clock in the Morning, on the 19th of November, he saw the Prisoner on a sorrel Horse belonging to Dr. Webbe, going the nearest Way to Dr. Webbe's House; that on the same Day in the Afternoon he went to Mr. Symmonds's; that while he was there, Dr. Webbe came in; that presently after, Mr. Symmonds received a Letter, giving him an Account of the Prisoner's having killed the Deceased; that as soon as Mr. Symmonds mentioned it, Dr. Webbe changed Countenance, and said that the Prisoner had lain at his House the Night before; that Mr. Symmonds asked Dr. Webbe if he had seen the Prisoner that Morning; that Dr. Webbe said he had not seen him since the Night before; at which this Witness expressed a good deal of Surprise, and said he had seen the Prisoner that Morning riding towards his (Webbe's) House, on one of his Horses; that to this Webbe made no Answer, but, in about five Minutes, went away, and said he was going up towards the Mountain.

John Cribbe is then called, who tells you, that on the Friday before the Deceased was killed, the Prisoner hired his Canoo to carry some Letters to St. Kitt's; that she returned the next Day in the Afternoon, and the Negroes that belonged to her, took her (as he thought) to go a fishing; that he did not see them again 'till about Eight o'Clock the next Morning, which was the Day he heard the Deceased was killed; that he went to Peter, one of the Negroes belonging to the Canoe, and asked him, What Luck? (supposing he had been fishing;) that Peter answered him, Poor Luck! and seemed very melancholy and thoughtful; that upon inquiring the Reason of it, Peter told him he had been to St. Kitt's with Mr. Barbot, who, he was afraid, had done a great deal of Mischief, for he believed he had killed Mr. Mills. He tells you, it was about Ten o'Clock in the Morning when he had this Conversation with Peter; that at that Time he had not heard, either by common Report, or otherwise than from Peter, of the Death of the Deceased; and indeed from the Evidence of Quin, which immediately follows, he could not have heard it from common Report; for Quin tells you, he was the first that carried the News to Nevis, and that he did not arrive there 'till Eleven o'Clock. This makes it highly probable, that what Peter said was too true.

Mrs. Dasent is then called. She tells you, that on the 19th of November last, hearing that the Magazine was broken open, and of the Murder of the Deceased, she ordered all the Arms in her House to be searched for; that missing a Pair of Pistols, she sent to Dr. Webbe, who came to her, and after searching a good while, at last found the Pistols under the Bed; that the Prisoner's Trunk was in the Room where the Pistols were found, but she knew not of its being there 'till that Day, nor how it came there; that she saw the Trunk opened, in which were found a brown Waistcoat and a Pair of black Breeches, which she believes belonged to the Prisoner; that she believes the Trunk and Cloaths now produced to her, are the same she saw opened at her House by Judge Herbert.

Judge Herbert, who is the next Witness, tells you, that the Day after the Murder he went to Mrs. Dasent's, where he saw the Pistols, with the Trunk and Cloaths which have been produced to him; that the Cloaths were wet, and he believes with Salt-Water; for, on touching the Waistcoat with his Tongue, he found it salt. He also tells you, that being at Mr. Colboun's, where the Body of the Deceased was brought on the Day of the Murder, he searched the Pockets of the Deceased, and found in his Breeches Pockets three Bullets.

Mr. Pringle and Mr. Baker are then called, who tell you, that being at Mr. Colboun's on the Day the Deceased was killed, they examined his Pistols, which they know to be the same that are now produced; that they could not, upon the most careful Examination of them, perceive the least Stain of Powder on either of them, except about a Grain or two, which they supposed to have been bruised by the Hammer; that they are convinced neither of the Pistols had been lately discharged, for Mr. Baker having put his Finger into the Barrel, there came off on it a rusty Dirt, which he tells you would not have been there, if the Pistols had been lately fired out of. They also tell you, that upon examining the Cloaths of the Deceased, they found on the right Flap of his Coat, and the Inside of his great Coat, on the right Side, a Stain of dry Powder.

The Council for the Crown, to corroborate and support the Evidence of Patience Dorset, have produced Martha Scooper, Mary Sutton, and Mary Cockade, with whom they conclude their Evidence. The two last swear positively that the Prisoner was on this Island on the King's Birth-day, and are so very circumstantial in their Evidence, that I think they cannot be mistaken. For Sutton has very particularly described his Drefs to you, and Cockade has also sworn to some particular Words she heard him say in M^cCabée's Tavern on the King's Birth-day. The Evidence of Scooper is not so positive as that of the other two, but it serves to strengthen and give Weight to what they have sworn.

The Prisoner, in his Defence, positively denies his having had any Resentment against the Deceased; says it was very easy for him to have made his Escape, if he had been guilty of the Crime laid to his Charge, and that it was natural to suppose he would have done so; that the firing the Pistols the Sunday before the Murder, was merely accidental, and to amuse himself; that he was not on this Island on the 10th of November. He then calls his Witnesses, the first of which is Mrs. Lowman. She is positive that the Prisoner was at her Father's on the 10th of November; that in the Morning of that Day he went with Daniel to Mr. Ottley's, and returned and dined at her Father's; that on that same Day she herself dined at her Brother George Webbe's, in Company with Mr. William Herbert. In the first of these Circumstances she is contradicted by the Evidence of Mrs. Ottley and Miss Anne Herbert, who tell you, that it was on the 9th of November the Prisoner and Daniel came to Mrs. Ottley's; in the other she is also contradicted by Mr. William Herbert, who tells you, that it was on the 9th of November he dined at young George Webbe's, in Company with Mrs. Lowman, and on the 10th he dined at Mr. Cole's; so that Mrs. Lowman must be mistaken in the Day. Mr. Josiah Webbe, the Brother of Mrs. Lowman, is next called. He cannot swear positively; but he believes the Prisoner was at his Father's on the 10th of November.

John Cornelius is the next Witness. He is positive that the Prisoner was at old Mr. Webbe's on the 10th of November; but the contrary has been proved by so many Witnesses on the Part of the Crown, supported with such strong Circumstances, that Cornelius must certainly be mistaken in the Day.

Mr. Julius was also called upon by the Prisoner to prove that Johnson, one of the Witnesses against him, could not swear positively to him before the Coroner's Inquest; but the Observations I have already made on that Part of Johnson's Evidence, will be sufficient, without repeating to you that I think Johnson's Evidence a good one, and ought to have its proper Weight with you.

These are the Witnesses produced by the Prisoner, that seem to be any ways material in his Favour: He has, indeed, called many others to prove his being at Nevis on the tenth of November; but they have all failed in this Circumstance, which would have been of great Consequence to him, if he could have established it; as it would have effectually invalidated the Evidence of Patience Dorset, and the rest, who swore to his being in this Island on that Day.

I have, as well as I have been able, Gentlemen, given you the Substance of the Evidence on both Sides, in which I hope I have omitted nothing material.

I must observe to you, that in Cases of Murder, and the like atrocious Crimes, the Law has relaxed much of its Severity and Scrupulousness in the Proofs, and does not so absolutely require such positive Proof, as in Matters of meum and tuum, where where they may be had, but in these cannot: For no Man who knows, or even imagines, that his Life must answer for the Perpetration of a Deed, will call Eye-witnesses to it; but will, with as much Secrecy as his Invention can supply, execute his Intention; and to admit none but positive ocular Proof, would be rejecting all, and proclaiming Impunity.

It has been justly observed to you by the Council for the Crown, that the Law, where the Circumstances are so closely connected and linked together, as in this Case, and amount so fully to what is called a violenta presumptio, admits this as full Proof, and, in my Opinion, more so than any one positive Evidence, whose Memory may be deceitful, or who may possibly be suborned; but in Facts made appear from Circumstances which are dumb, we cannot be deceived; nor they falsely charge, or partially excuse.

The Circumstances of this unfortunate Affair hang so closely together, that they carry too glaring a Proof to admit of much Doubt, by whose Hand Mr. Mills fell.

Mr. Armour declares, that he heard the Prisoner say, between the third and seventh of November, that Mr. Mills had treated him cruelly, and in such a Manner as ought never to be forgiven: The Prisoner has acknowledged, he had never any Difference with Messieurs Thomas and William Mills, it then could have been none but the Deceased he meant: Though this the Prisoner denies, and says, Mr. Armour must have misunderstood him.

Patience Dorset swears, that she heard the Prisoner declare, on the tenth of November, that he would either kill or be killed by a Person of Distinction in this Island, in the Course of ten Days. Mr. Mills is found dead in a remote Part of the Island on the 19th, within the Time limited; and by the Evidence now given in Court, by the Gentlemen who opened the Body before the Coroner's Inquest, it appears, that he had been killed by a Bullet, or some other Substance discharged from a Fire-arm. From the Evidence of Armour and Dorset, a pre-pense Malice appears; and a Life taken away through such Malice pre-pense, in the Eye of the Law and Man, is deemed Murder in the highest Degree.

The Prisoner too, in a precipitate Manner, and in a Tavern, the Night before Mr. Mills was found dead, executed his Will; in his Defence he acknowledges the Deed executed at O Donnell's to have been such: Had he not been conscious that he might have ran some Risque of losing his Life the next Morning, why in such a Place, and in such a Manner, draw and execute a Deed of so nice a Nature, and of such Consequence, as his Will? But the Time, by Mrs. Dorset's Evidence, which it appears he had limited to his own Life, or a Person's of Distinction in this Island, was near expired, therefore necessary such a Deed should be executed.

The next Morning Mr. Mills is found dead. The Prisoner is declared by Coomy to be the Person by whose Hand his Master fell: And tho' by Law this is not Evidence; yet by Mr. M'Kenley's Evidence, who declares he saw a Person rowing in a Canoo, from the Place from whence Coomy had told him the Prisoner embarked, describing his Dress; which Person is immediately after met by Johnson, who personally knows him, describes him to be dressed in the same Manner, and declares that no Canoo was then at Sea, but the one in which was the Prisoner; that he could distinctly see the whole Passage from Frigate-Bay, the Place where Mr. Mills then lay dead, to Nevis, where the Prisoner was seen to land by Jasper Thomas and his Son, who declare that they saw the Canoo coming from St. Christopher's, describe his Dress to be the same as M'Kenley and Johnson: Jasper is so particular as to name two of the Negroes who rowed the Canoo, one of which (Peter) as appears from Cribbe's Evidence, and which strengthens and is strengthened by Coomy's Declaration, says, that he had been that Morning to St. Kitt's with Mr. Barbot, who he feared had done a great deal of Mischief, for he believed he had killed Mr. Mills. And as this Declaration of Peter's was made to Cribbe, before the Account of Mr. Mills's Death had reached Nevis, as appears from Quin's Evidence, who was the Express sent up in Search of the Prisoner, and the two Slaves were four or five Leagues asunder, and could not have seen each other from the Time of the Commission of the Fact, to this Declaration of Peter's; this could not have been by them concerted, and of itself carries so much Weight, as to merit some Attention. Again, Thomas Hobson and Sister declare, that in the Morning of the Day on which they heard the Account of Mr. Mills's Death, they saw a little Man, whom they know to be the Prisoner, coming up from the Bay; that he came to their House, and asked for Dr. Webbe's Boy Pope: When the Boy appeared, he did not ask if he had got a Horse, but ordered him to saddle the Horse: From this then it is evident, that he knew the Horse and Boy were there, or he would not have called so immediately for Pope, and ordered saddling the Horse. Dr. Webbe too proves, that the Horse and Boy must have been taken out of his Stable by the Prisoner; for he declares, that he himself had not that Night been called out by any Patient, nor had he sent that Boy on any Message. These Evidences describe the same Dress as the preceding ones. Other Evidences have been produced by the King's Council, who described the same Dress, and traced the Prisoner to Dr. Webbe's, where the Doctor acknowledges his Arrival, dressed also in the same Manner, as every other Evidence had.

From such a Chain of Evidences, who were separated from each other in different Islands, Persons no ways connected, and so exactly tallying with each other, little Room, as I said before, can be left to doubt.

It was essentially incumbent on the Prisoner, for his own sake, to prove where he was, from the Time he went to Bed at Dr. Webbe's, on the 18th of November at Night, to the Time he was seen to land at Nevis, on the 19th in the Morning; but this he has not attempted to do.

Lest you should have entertained a Notion, that the killing a Person in a Duel is not Murder in the Eye of the Law, as the Life of each in such an Encounter runs an equal Risque; I assure you, Gentlemen, the Law makes no such Distinction, even in Cases of fair Duels. If from the Evidences you are satisfied, that Mr. Mills fell by the Hands of the Prisoner, and that he had a malicious Intent, the Law makes it Murder as much in this Case as any other. The Prisoner, in his Defence to clear himself, says, from his known and past Conduct in Life, there is no Reason why he should be even suspected of engaging in a Duel: But from the Evidences of Messieurs Pringle and Baker, that the Pistols of the Deceased had never been discharged, or even were they loaded; and from his Sword's Belt Belt being buckled round the Hilt, and at a Distance from him, as appears from M^r Kenley's Evidence; and from the Direction of the Ball or Substance which pierced the Body of the Deceased, which entered so far backwards, and struck on the opposite Side so far forwards; and of which Messieurs Hamilton and Edwards declare, to the best of their Knowledge and Belief, Mr. Mills died, and that he could not have received the Wound in a Posture of Defence: From these Circumstances, it must be left to you, upon the Evidences, to consider whether this was even a fair Duel.

I shall detain you, Gentlemen, with but one more Observation, which is, that no Person but the Prisoner has been proved or known to have declared a Resentment to Mr. Mills, the Deceased; no Person but the Prisoner was seen going from the Place where Mr. Mills was found but just expired; and no Person of Distinction in this Island killed but Mr. Mills.

All Circumstances of Persons, Time, and Place, must be well considered. It is also your Duty to weigh the Evidences that have been offered to you, and to judge from thence, whether the Prisoner is guilty of the Murder wherewith he stands charged, or not guilty; and in considering this Matter, let me recommend to you, that you divest yourselves of any Impressions that may have been made on you from the Relation of this Fact out of Doors, and that you consider merely the Evidence given you here on the Trial.

If, upon the whole, you believe in your Consciences, that the Prisoner committed the Fact of which he stands indicted, you will find him guilty: But if, upon the whole, you do not believe in your Consciences that he committed it, you are to find him not guilty.

Then the Jury withdrew, and in about Half an Hour returned.

Cl. of Arr. Gentlemen, are you all agreed on your Verdict?

Jury. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. Who shall say for you?

Jury. Our Foreman.

Cl. of Arr. John Barbot, hold up thy Hand, (which he did.) Gentlemen of the Jury, look upon the Prisoner: How say you, is John Barbot guilty of the Felony and Murder whereof he stands indicted, or not guilty?

Jury. Guilty.

Cl. of Arr. What Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements, had he at the Time of the same Felony and Murder committed, or at any Time since, to your Knowledge?

Jury. None.

Cl. of Arr. Hearken to your Verdict as the Court hath recorded it. You say that John Barbot is guilty of the Felony and Murder whereof he stands indicted; and that he had not any Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements, at the Time of the said Felony and Murder committed, or at any Time since, to your Knowledge; and so you say all.

Cl. of Arr. John Barbot, hold up thy Hand. You have been indicted of Felony and Murder. You have been thereupon arraigned, and pleaded thereto Not guilty, and for your Trial you have put yourself upon God and your Country, which Country have found you guilty. What have you now to say for yourself, why the Court should not proceed to give Judgment of Death upon you according to Law?

Pris. May it please your Honours, there is a Fault in the Indictment. The Fact is laid to have been committed at Frigate-Bay in the Parish of St. George Basseterre, and Frigate-Bay is in the Parish of St. Peter.

Mr. Sol. Gen. May it please your Honours, the Prisoner, admitting it were as he says, is too late in his Exception. That is a Matter of Fact, and, if it had been material, (which it was not) ought to have been shewed on Evidence; but cannot be made use of in Arrest of Judgment. However, the Truth is, there is no such Mistake as he mentions in the Indictment; for Frigate-Bay is actually in the Parish of St. George, and if it were necessary we could prove it.

Pris. May it please your Honours, I have nothing more to say.

Mr. President. John Barbot, you have been indicted for the Murder of Matthew Mills, Esq; and for your Trial have put yourself upon God and your Country: That Country has found you guilty.

You have had a long and a fair Trial. You have challenged many who were called up as Jurors, though not the whole Number you were intitled to by Law; so that I may with Justice say, you have been tried by a Jury, to which you yourself had no Exception.

I am sorry it falls to my Lot to acquaint you, that I am no longer at Liberty to suppose you innocent.

You are convicted of a Crime the most horrid and dreadful in itself: A Crime attended with the most aggravating Circumstances. You have deprived the World of one of its most worthy and useful Members; and rendered unhappy Numbers of Persons, who drew the Means of Subsistence immediately from the Bounty and Benevolence of the unfortunate Gentleman deceased.

It is hard to conceive what Provocation you could have received from a Gentleman of so mild and gentle a Disposition as the Deceased was, to induce you to perpetrate an Act so shocking. But I would advise you, as some Kind of Atonement for the Crime you have been guilty of, to make a full Confession of the whole Matter. Let me recommend to you also, to employ the little Time you are likely to continue in this World, in endeavouring to make your Peace with that great God, whose Mercy is equal to his Justice.

Nothing now remains, but to pronounce the Sentence of the Law upon you, which is,

That you are to be carried to the Place from whence you came, and from thence to the Place of Execution, where you are to be hanged by the Neck until you are dead: And may God of his infinite Mercy receive your Soul.

The Prisoner then addressed himself to the Court in this Manner:

May it please your Honours,

Since it can no longer avail me to conceal the Fact, I will make a frank Confession of the Whole.

That I did kill Mr. Mills, is most true.— That I killed him fairly, is equally true—fairly according to the Notions of Honour prevailing among Men. From these false Principles of Honour I was induced to engage in the unhappy Duel, which in its Consequences deprived the World of so worthy a Gentleman, and has involved me in these unhappy Circumstances. False I am convinced they are, notwithstanding the Countenance they receive from the daily Practice of the World.

World

I make no Doubt but that the Words which Mr. Carew and Mr. Mills have sworn, did pass between the Deceased and myself at the Sale of Bridgewater's Estate, though I cannot now recollect that they did. But this was not the Cause of the Duel.

The Provocation I received from Mr. Mills was this:

After I was declared the Purchaser of the Estate, I sat down to draw the Bills of Exchange for the Deposite. While I was about them, Mr. Mills came and looked over me, and observing that I had made them payable at ninety Days Sight, he objected to them, and asked me if I knew what I was about, and insisted on having the Bills drawn at a shorter Sight: To which I answered, that I was sure he must know it was usual for Bills of so large a Size to be drawn at a long Sight. I told him further, that I apprehended he had no Right to object to the Bills at all, if the Marshal agreed to accept them as they were drawn. To this Mr. Mills replied, Sir, you are an impertinent Puppy. I took no Notice of this 'till after I had finished the Bills, and then I took him aside, and spoke to him to this Effect: That I little expected to receive such Treatment from a Gentleman of his known Politeness and good Breeding; that, as I was not conscious of having deserved it, I desired he would make me some Apology for it. He replied, that he would not make me any Apology; but that, if I thought myself injured, he was at my Service when properly called upon. I made him no Answer, but immediately left him; and, on the Thursday following, I wrote him a Letter, telling him, that since he had done me the Honour to assure me he would be at my Service whenever I should call upon him, I expected he would meet me by Dawn of Day the next Morning, near Lowland-Church, armed with a Case of Pistols only. Mr. Mills sent me an Answer to this; and there were six Letters in all passed between us, three from him, and three from me, which I do not now recollect, for I destroyed them*, though I believe I shall be able to remember the Substance of them. The last I received from him was, that he would meet me at the Time and Place appointed, which was Frigate-Bay. The Night before the Duel, I made my Will at Mr. O'Donnell's, and delivered it to Dr. Webbe. The Doctor put it in his Pocket without reading it, and we immediately went Home to the Doctor's House, where I went to Bed soon after I arrived. At about One in the Morning I heard the Doctor up, and called to him: He answered me, and went out; and as soon as he came in and returned to Bed, I got up, and went with Pope to the Stable, and saddled one of the Horses, which I immediately mounted, directing the Boy to follow me, and rode very fast 'till I passed Mr. Pinney's, where I was overtaken in a very hard Shower of Rain, that wet me through all my Cloaths. I rode with all the Speed I could 'till I came to Molton's-Bay, where I had ordered a Canoo to wait for me. At first I could not perceive the Negroes, but on looking round, I saw them lying under a Sail. They immediately got ready, and I jumped into the Canoo, and ordered Pope to carry the Horse to Bridgewater's Estate. The Night was very tempestuous, and the Canoo was several Times near filling with Water. I had a Phial of Rum with me, which I had filled at Dr. Webbe's, and finding myself excessive cold and chilly, I drank a Dram of it. When I got to Frigate-Bay, I jumped out of the Canoo, and ordered my Boy to follow me with my Trunk, in which were my Pistols. I then seated myself under a Privet-hedge, and sent my Boy to the Entrance of the Basseterre Road, to wait for Mr. Mills's Arrival. In the mean Time I examined my Pistols, and fresh primed one of them. I had no sooner done this, than I heard the Footsteps of a Horse. I arose immediately, and saw Mr. Mills riding fast up to me. As soon as he came near, we saluted each other; after which he immediately alit, and took his Pistols out of the Holsters, and primed them. While he was priming his Pistols, his Horse's Head being between me and himself, I told him, I had, as I had wrote to him, brought down the Letters he had wrote me, and I doubted not he had likewise with him those I had wrote him. I then took out the Letters from my Pocket-book, and offered them to him: He made me no Answer, but hastily ordered his Boy to lead away his Horse, and putting himself in a Posture of Defence, presented his Pistol at me. I gave his Letters then to my Boy, and ordered him, in case I should drop, to give them to Mr. Mills. I immediately then presented my Pistol at him; which he observing, cried out, Stay, stay! I instantly dropped my Pistol, and Mr. Mills said to me, Stay, let me give the Letters to the Boy; which he immediately did; and then recovering his Posture again, himself on one Side the Road, and I on the other, we presented our Pistols at each other. I observed Mr. Mills drew his Pistol near his Eye, from which I imagined he was near-sighted. About four or five Seconds after I had presented, I fired; and Mr. Mills cried, Sir, you have killed me, you have killed me, Sir. I was extremely shocked to see him fall, and I went up to him and said, Sir, I am heartily sorry, I pray God to bless you, but I can stay no longer here. I then ordered his Boy to take Care of him, and immediately went down to the Canoo and jumped in, and ordered the Negroes to row as fast as ever they could. I asked my Boy, when we were in the Canoo, whether Mr. Mills's Pistol had snapped. He told me it had; but for my own Part, I neither heard it snap, nor saw the Flash.

The Letters Mr. Mills wrote me on this unhappy Occasion were extremely polite; and those I wrote him were in as respectful Terms as I was Master of. It was Mr. Mills's Character, his Rank

* The Prisoner, in a Conversation he had with the Publisher, while he was under Condemnation in Gaol, told him, that he had destroyed the original Letters which passed between Mr. Mills and himself; but that he had preserved Copies of them, which Copies he had put in a Bottle, and buried in Mr. Pinney's Garden (where Dr. Webbe lives) at Newis. So remarkable a Circumstance as this, had it been true, one would think could hardly have escaped him on his Confession in Court. The Omission of this Circumstance therefore very justly calls in Question the Genuineness of the Letters, and inclines one too reasonably to believe, from that and some other Observations, that the Letters which he has given for those that passed between Mr. Mills and himself, are the Effect of an After-thought, and were probably formed, during his Condemnation in Gaol, and sent up by him with Directions to bury them at Newis.

and Distinction in Life, that engaged me in this unfortunate Business; for I should not have accepted a Challenge from any Man inferior to him.

For myself, my Concern for the unhappy Fate I shall soon meet with is little, compared to that I feel for the Sorrow and Affliction it will bring on a tender Parent; and the Grief and Anguish the Consequences of this unfortunate Duel will occasion to an unhappy Lady, when she hears the shocking News of her Husband's Death.

I must, in Justice to Dr. Webbe, acquit him of any Concern in the Matter. He is perfectly innocent of the Cause of my Quarrel with Mr. Mills; neither did he know any thing of the Duel, either before or after it. One Gentleman was acquainted with it; a Gentleman whom I asked to be my Second, which he refused. I beg to be excused mentioning his Name, but he is neither of this Island, nor of Nevis.

I am obliged to your Honours for the Candour and Impartiality you have shewn in the Course of my Trial. You, Gentlemen of the Jury, I must acknowledge, have acted like upright honest Men. Had I been in your Place, I should have found the same Verdict you have done.

I have nothing now to ask of your Honours, but that you would please to allow me a little Time, to settle my Affairs, and to make my Peace with God.

To which Mr. President replied,

To be sure you shall have a proper Time allowed you.

On Saturday the 20th of January, 1753, the Prisoner was executed at the Town of Basseterre, according to the Sentence pronounced against him.

At the Place of Execution he delivered the following Paper to the Provost-Marshal.

My Friends and Fellow-Subjects,

“ You see me this Moment a dreadful Instance, how much the human Mind may be led away and imposed on by false and empty Notions, affecting Reputation in the Estimation of weak and fallible Men: Even so far as to commit the highest Crimes in the Sight of God, and daringly to violate all human Laws, calculated for the Good and Safety of Society. Let my Example be a Means to teach Men to act more consistently with their Reason; and let my Punishment deter them from the Commission of Crimes like mine. And then my Death, and that of the unhappy Gentleman who fell by my Hand, will, I hope, by the Benefit the World will receive from the Example, make some Amends to the Community for the Loss of two Subjects, who might, had it not been for the unhappy Fate which attended them, have lived not unuseful Members of Society.”

Mr. Barbot was born in London, where his Father, who is a Working Silversmith, (a Man of some Substance in the World, and, as it is said, of a good Character) still lives. At about fourteen Years of Age, he was put Clerk to Mr. Delaport, an Attorney in Staples-Inn in London; with whom he served a Clerkship for the usual Term of five Years. After that Time expired, he came from England, in the Year 1746, in Character of Clerk to a Gentleman of the Profession of the Law in Antigua. With this Gentleman he lived near two Years; and then, having not been very prudent in his Conduct, and having besides contracted some Debts there, to the Amount of 2 or 300*l.* Currency, he came to Nevis; where he made a very close Acquaintance with the Family of the Webbe's. Having for some Time lived a very idle Life there; and given away, and otherwise unprofitably disposed of, a considerable Part of a small Cargo of Goods, of about the Value of 4 or 500*l. Sterling*, which his Father had sent him to sell, and spent the Produce of the rest of it; and being at length reduced to extreme Necessity, he came, about three Years ago, to this Island; where, by a critical Scarcity of Attornies at Law, he got himself admitted one in the ordinary Court of Common Law; and in the very first Year, had such a Run of Business, as to enable him to clear off what Debts he owed in the West-Indies; which amounted to near 400*l.* Currency; and to put a handsome Sum of Money in his Pocket besides. The first Year of his being here, he behaved with Industry and Fairness; but soon after, from a natural Dislike to Business, and too great a Disposition to get Money by the most likely Means that offered, he greatly neglected his Clients Affairs, and fell into a Way of buying up desperate Debts; which he commonly found Means so to turn and twist about, as to make them good in the End; by getting still better and better Security for them every Time he sued for them, and by adding each Time the Interest and Costs: By which Means he made them at once larger and more secure. Thus by the Dissatisfactions of many who employed him, and some small Imputations he drew on his Character; as also by Persons of less questionable Reputation, and more Industry; coming to practise as Attornies in the same Court, his Practice was greatly reduced: And yet, by one Means or another, he became at length worth, as he says, (and, I believe, truly) about 800*l. Sterling*. His Age, by the Plate on his Coffin, appeared to be but twenty-five: Though I should think he must have been two or three Years older: But of this I have no Certainty.

For the rest, he had a good School Education; and knew Latin, and spoke French, very well. He had made some Progress in the Mathematics; and knew, and was very apt in, Figures; and was a tolerable Proficient in Music. He had a pretty good Taste of Literature in general; and a good deal of general light Reading: But his Judgment was by no Means solid; and his Mind of a romantic Cast; though not without something of ingenious in it, and some considerable Sprightliness of Parts. To which I must add, he was a very ready Writer, in either Sense of the Word; having both great Freedom and Quickness of Hand, and Fluency of Expression. He was remarkably courteous in his common Behaviour; but his Politeness and Deportment were of that Sort, which is usually distinguished by the Name of Priggism: which the Littleness of his Person (a Circumstance well worthy the Attention of Persons of the same Size and Turn) contributed to make much more observable, and thereby to set him in a more ridiculous and contemptible Light; as a certain Pertness in his Manner, and Forwardness in his Behaviour, with a Vanity conspicuous in all he said and did, rendered him often very troublesome and disgusting.

Cl. of Arr. Timothy Murphy, hold up thy Hand. (Which he did.)

Gentlemen of the Jury, look upon the Prisoner, and hearken to his Cause: He stands indicted by the Name of Timothy Murphy, late of London, Yeoman, for that he, after the 29th of June, 1729, to wit, on the 9th of February, in the twenty-fourth Year of his present Majesty's Reign, with Force and Arms, at London, viz. in the Parish of St. Benedict, near St. Paul's Wharf, in the Ward of Castle-Baynard, in London aforesaid, feloniously did falsely make, forge, and counterfeit, and cause and procure to be falsely made, forged, and counterfeited, and willingly act and assist in the false Making, Forging, and Counterfeiting, a certain Will and Testament, purporting to be the last Will and Testament of John Wilkinson: The Tenor of which said Will and Testament is as follows, that is to say,

In the Name of God, Amen. John Wilkinson, late of the Princess Amelia, being of sound and disposing Mind and Memory, make this my last Will and Testament; first and principally commend my Soul into the Hands of the Almighty God, hoping for Remission of all my Sins, through the Merits of Jesus Christ, my blessed Saviour and Redeemer, and my Body to the Earth or Sea, as it shall please God; and as for such worldly Estate and Effects which I shall be possessed of or tilted (meaning entitled) unto at the Time of my Decease, I give and bequeath the same followeth, that is to say, unto my loving Friend John Daunt, of Lisbon, in the Kingdom of Portugal, Victualler, all such Sallery or Sallaries, Prize-Money, Bounty-Money, Wages, Tickets, Short-Allowance-Money, Smart-Money, and all other Sum or Sums of Money that shall be due to me at my Decease: And I do hereby grant the said John Daunt whole and sole Executor of my last Will and Testament, and I do hereby revoke and disannul other Wills, at any Time by me before made: And I do hereby nominate, constitute, and appoint the said John Daunt, Exectu^r (meaning Executor) of this my last Will and Testament; and I do give and bequeath unto my said Executor, all the rest and of my Estate whatsoever, both real and personal, hereby revoking and making void all others and former Wills by me heretofore made as aforesaid, declare this to be my last Will and Testament. In Witness whereof, I have hereunto set my Hand and Seal, this 5th Day of May, in the Year of our Lord, 1747.

Joⁿ Wilkinfon.

Signed, sealed, published, and declared, by the said John Wilkinfon, (meaning by the said John Wilkinfon) as and for his last Will and Testament, in the Presents (meaning Prefence) of us who have hereunto subscribed our Names, as Witnesses, in the Presents (meaning Prefence) of the Testator.

L. S.

Thomas Carty, Dinish Collins.

With an Intent to defraud Thomas Noads, against the Form of the Statute in such Case made and provided. There are several other Counts in the Indictment for publishing the said forged Will, with the like Intention to defraud the said Noads, &c.

Upon this Indictment he hath been arraigned, and thereunto hath pleaded Not guilty, and for his Trial hath put himself upon God and his Country, which Country you are; your Charge is to inquire whether he be guilty of the Felony and Forgery whereof he stands indicted, in Manner and Form as he stands indicted, or not guilty.

Mr. Bamber Gascoyne having opened the Indictment,

The Honourable Mr. Hume Campbell (Brother to the Earl of Marchmont) spoke as follows: May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I am Council on the Side of this Prosecution. You have heard from the Indictment, that the Person who now stands a Prisoner before you, is charged with the Forgery of a pretended Will of one John Wilkinfon, in order to defraud Thomas Noads of a considerable Sum of Money. And, Gentlemen, was there nothing more requisite in this Case, than to open the Evidence which shews the Prisoner's Guilt; had no Artifice been used, no extraordinary Attempts been made, to prevent or to prejudice this Trial, I should scarce have appeared here to give you any Trouble at all. And now I am here, I should have been glad, if the Conduct of a Person acting for the Prisoner, and who now hears me, had permitted me to state only such Facts, as prove the Justice of the Prosecution. But from what happened this Session as well as the last, in relation to this Trial; from an Intimation that the baffled Attempt to try the Prosecutor on the Evidence of the Prisoner, would be turned into an Endeavour to avoid or discredit the Testimony of that Prosecutor; it becomes necessary for me to relate Facts of an earlier Date than I should otherwise have done, and Circumstances I should have wished not to mention: These will prepare you for what may arise in the Course of the Trial, and enable you to understand what, I guess, the learned Gentlemen I see here on the other Side will insist on.

You all, doubtless, have heard, that some Years ago, in the Time of War, several Privateers, four in Number, were fitted out by the Merchants of Bristol and London, by the Name of the Royal Family: On board one of these Ships (the Princess Amelia) one John Wilkinfon entered as a Midshipman: The Ships put to Sea, and having taken Prizes of great Value, Mr. Henry Casemajor of Bristol was appointed Agent for the Payment of the Sailors, for whom it was thought most convenient they should be paid at Bristol; but as some Persons might have Occasion to call for their Money in London, Mr. Casemajor employed a Person in Town, who was to write to him, that Money might be remitted to pay them; that Person was Thomas Noads, a Gentleman who has unfortunately, by that Situation, brought his Name into Question in this Place, and is become (God only knows why) the Object of the Resentment of a Man, whose Name I must presently mention to you; though much to his Discredit and Dishonour.

Mr. Noads being thus employed, and in August 1750 Notice having been given that all the Sailors might receive their Prize-Money of the proper Agent, in the February following the Prisoner at the Bar conceived he might get Money by setting up the forged Will and Power of a Person he probably thought would never appear to call it in Question, or at least that he had so much Art as to avoid a Discovery, or evade the Justice and Laws of his Country.

The Prisoner happened to be at a House near Charing-Cross, a House of bad Fame, with a Man whose true Name now comes out to be Thomas Williams: To him the Prisoner applied, and desired he would co-operate with him, telling him he would get him Money enough; that he should wear a Sword, and live like a Gentleman: The Man did not very well understand in what Manner this was to be contrived; but Murphy, who it seems is pretty ready at Invention, disclosed his Method of executing his Scheme in this Manner: If you will, says he to Williams, appear as the Executor, I will forge the Will of John Wilkinfon: We shall go together, you as recently arrived from Portugal, and I as your Acquaintance: We shall get the Money without Suspicion. Williams was a Novice; and, terrified at that which might reach his Life, he did not care to join in what the Prisoner proposed. You don't know, says the Prisoner, how many there are in London that live by forging Wills and Powers: Why, you may dress like a Gentleman, appear in good Company, and wear a Sword. Go down Stairs, continues the Prisoner, and I'll make a Will and Power for this John Wilkinfon, that shall intitle you to his Prize-Money: Your Name shall be John Daunt. John Daunt! Who is John Daunt? replied Williams. He is a Man, answers the Prisoner, whom I knew when at Lisbon with the Privateers; he kept a Public House there, where Wilkinfon, myself, and others, used to resort; this will make the Story tell; for we will say, that you, John Daunt, of Lisbon, a House-keeper, are come over with this Will and Power of Wilkinfon, in order to get the Money, and that he made his Will to you on the Account of a Debt of about seventeen Moidores; and I'll go along with you as a Friend, and shall get the Money. By this Artifice, and some Threats, Williams was prevailed on to assent, and left Murphy to do as he pleased. Soon after, Murphy called him up, and read over to him the Will he had made. The Will, Gentlemen, is here to be shewn to you, with two Witnesses Names to it. Then Murphy said to Williams, Now you are John Daunt, the Executor. After he had read over both both the Will and Power, fresh forged, he conducted him to the Lodgings of Mr. Noads, where the Money was to be received. The Letter of Attorney was first produced. Mr. Noads asked a very natural Question, viz. Where is this Wilkinson? Here Murphy made a Mistake, by producing the Power first; but, I suppose, they thought to get it upon the Letter of Attorney; but finding that would not do, Murphy answered, Wilkinson went from Lisbon to the Coast of Guiney, and there he died. Then, says Noads; I can't pay the Money on a Letter of Attorney. But we have his Will as well as Power, replies Murphy; and then the Will in question was produced, and Williams passed at this Time for Daunt the Executor. Mr. Noads told them, the Will was nothing 'till proved. Daunt was to pass for a Stranger, and as unacquainted with what was to be done in this Country; and therefore the Prisoner took upon himself the Conduct of the Whole, and asked Noads where they were to go to prove the Will, who recommended them to Mr. Crespigny, (a Gentleman of very great Character in his Profession, and employed by the Managers as their Proctor;) therefore they desired Mr. Noads to write the Name on the Back of the Will, and he wrote Crespigny accordingly; then Murphy, and Williams, by the Name of Daunt, (for at this Time neither Mr. Crespigny nor Mr. Noads had the least Suspicion that he bore any other Name,) went to Mr. Crespigny, where they produced this Will again as the Will of John Wilkinson, who, they said, was dead on the Coast of Guiney. Mr. Crespigny's Clerk wrote it down, and went with them before a learned Doctor, where Williams (as Daunt) took the Oath usual on such Occasions; and the Probate was granted; but not being able to pay for the Probate, they told Mr. Crespigny's Clerk, that they were poor Sailors, and had nothing but what they were to get by the Will, and therefore they could not pay him then; but if he would be so good to send the Probate to Mr. Noads; the Money should be paid out of the Prize-Money. After this they came again to Mr. Noads to receive the Money. The necessary Form was to give Mr. Noads a Letter of Attorney, to receive it in the Name of Daunt, and then he was to pay it to them: Mr. Noads wrote to Mr. Casamajor at Bristol, to let him know of the Application made to him; and as Mr. Casamajor was always desirous to avoid Clamour, on Account of detaining any Prize-Money, he immediately remitted to Mr. Noads what was due for Wilkinson's Share; but the Letter of Attorney made to Noads not being executed before a Magistrate, Murphy, with Williams, by the Name of John Daunt, went before the then Lord-Mayor of this City, and Williams (as Daunt) there re-executed the Letter of Attorney, to which Murphy was a Witness: They then returned to Noads, and received the whole Money due to Wilkinson, amounting to thirty-seven Pounds; and having given Noads a Guinea for his Trouble, and paid Mr. Crespigny's Clerk his Bill for the Probate of the Will, a Receipt was given, and signed John Daunt, Executor, in the Presence of Murphy. Dated the 20th of February, 1750-1. It is in these Words:

Received of Thomas Noads 37l. 12s. 6d. being so much he received from Mr. Casamajor, per Probate of the Will of John Wilkinson, in full Ballance of his Account.

Signed John Daunt, Executor.

You will observe the Date, it is the 20th of February, 1750-1. Thus the Matter rested without Suspicion. Mr. Noads had paid the Money, little imagining what he had been thus transacting as a Servant, was paying 37l. out of his own Pocket, in his own Wrong, or that he should; by the Artifice of any Man, be called in Question, not only for his Character, but even for his Life; yet such a Man there is in this Country: But I trust in God it will not be long before Vengeance overtakes him.

There was not a Suspicion of the Transaction 'till January 1752, or thereabouts, when John Wilkinson, whose Will was proved as dead, and his Prize-Money paid; arrived in England. Then Mr. Noads found he had been cheated, and therefore he determined to do; what every body will commend him for, to discover and bring to Justice the Contrivers and Perpetrators of this Iniquity; little imagining, that he should by that Means incite a capital Prosecution against himself. Murphy; at the Time of the Transaction, in order to impose upon Noads; pretended that he acted only as a Friend to assist a Stranger from Lisbon, and therefore; in the Presence of Noads, demanded Half a Guinea of Daunt for his Trouble. You perceive, Gentlemen, the Artifice of the Prisoner: From this small Demand it was natural for Mr. Noads to think that Mr. Murphy acted as a Friend and Assistant only; but as soon as he got out of Noads's House, he made a very different Demand; he insisted upon Half the Money received, besides two Guineas for making the Will; and he threatened Daunt with Hanging; if he refused to pay it.

Mr. Noads was now endeavouring to find out the Men, and bring them to Justice. He inquired of all the Sailors whom he knew. Murphy had gone by his own Name, but John Daunt had imported his from Lisbon; therefore it is plain, Murphy might be discovered, though Daunt might long lie hid: Accordingly Mr. Noads having got Information that Murphy was in London, (this was about two Years after the Forgery) he instantly applied to one of the worthy Aldermen of this City for a Warrant to take him up; but the Bird was flown, not to be found in that Jurisdiction. He got at last Intelligence that he was in Surry; and immediately had the Warrant backed by a Justice of the Peace of that County, put it into the Hands of a Constable, who with other Assistants secured him. Murphy knew not at first for what he was taken; perhaps he flattered himself that this Iniquity, committed so long ago, was not discovered; but as soon as Noads appeared; which was after he was in Hold, his Conscience struck him; he then knew what the Matter was, that it was a capital Offence, and therefore broke from the Officer and ran away; but he was soon taken again, and brought before the Sitting Alderman at Guildhall; and upon the Oath of Mr. Noads, upon his Charge, and at his Prosecution, he was committed for the Forgery now to be tried. The Defence he then made, was not that he was persuaded by his Prosecutor to commit this Forgery, but that he was innocent, and went only as a Friend of John Daunt's, whom he knew at Lisbon, to receive of Noads what Daunt pretended to be due to him as Executor of Wilkinson; that he knew nothing at all of any Forgery, and therefore it was a very cruel Case, and hard upon him. However, he was committed to the Compter. He had not long been there, before a Person got Access to him, whose Profession I know not, but his Business was to persuade Murphy, that it was in his Power to pervert the Laws, to screen the Guilty, and spill innocent Blood. This Person's Name is Goddard. What was the Artifice made use of? It makes me tremble to think of it; it was an Attempt to make the Prisoner a Witness against his Prosecutor, and punish him for the other's Guilt. If this should be suffered to prevail, farewell all Prosecutions for Iniquity. If such a Person can have the Ear of a Magistrate, and get a Prisoner admitted an Evidence against his Prosecutor; if a Felon may be allowed to charge his Prosecutor with the very Felony he stands committed for, the Law is made in vain, and Magistracy will only be a Terror to the Injured.

This Attempt Goddard conceived and perpetrated. He procured the Prisoner to be carried from the Gaol to turn Evidence against Mr. Noads. One would scarce believe any Justices could be found to join in such a Scheme; yet he imposed on two Justices so far, that they not only admitted the Information of the Felon, but went in Person to the Grand Jury to procure a Bill to be found to hang that Man who had been injured, who had seized and prosecuted that Evidence. Shocking as this is, yet such was the Attempt, and it is this strange Iniquity which calls me to this Place.

Thus far Iniquity prospered: But there is a superintendent Power, and we may thank the Almighty for it, who here stopped its Progress.

Mr. Noads continued his Inquiry after Daunt; for Murphy never would inform him who he was: At last he providentially discovered, that John Daunt's true Name was Thomas Williams, and that he was confined in the Gaol of Corke in Ireland: From thence he has been brought, and is now here to be produced as a Witness before you.

After Goddard and his Associates had got Information that Williams was discovered, and might be produced; that Mr. Noads was a Person whose Character could be established beyond the Power of any Stain from Goddard, (though I am informed he has attacked many higher Characters) the next Contrivance was to defeat all the Evidence; and for this Purpose a Bill of Indictment was procured against Mr. Noads, the original Prosecutor; against Williams, a Witness they knew for the King; and against another Man, who knew nothing of the Offence; but Conscience told them, he might be a Witness, as he was acquainted with Murphy's Hand; he was therefore clapped into the Indictment. Having effected this Stratagem, of putting the King's three Witnesses into one Indictment, for the identical Offence with which the Prisoner is charged, they endeavoured to impose upon this Court, and struggled hard to get these three Men tried first upon the Evidence of Murphy.

It came before the Court the last Sessions, and the Court did that which was just. The present Indictment was ordered to come on first, that you, Gentlemen, might have the whole of this Case laid before you by those who were the original Prosecutors, and who brought this Transaction to Light. And it will be proved to you, with this additional Circumstance, that when the other Indictment was found against Noads, Williams, and Carter; the Will being produced from Doctors-Commons; and Murphy having declared before Goddard and other Persons then present, that it was all of his own Hand-writing; Goddard soon after had the Assurance to apply to Peter Edwards, (who brought the Will from the Prerogative-Office, and heard Murphy's Declaration,) and importuned him to conceal that Part of his Evidence.

This, Gentlemen, is the Nature of the Case. You are only to try whether the Prisoner forged the Will of John Wilkinson, with Intent to defraud Mr. Noads, whom he has defrauded of 37*l.* We shall produce the Will, and prove the actual doing of it by the Prisoner, his Confession of its being his own Hand-writing, and that Wilkinson is now alive.

When that is done, I make no Doubt but you will be satisfied that you ought, according to your Oaths, to find the Prisoner guilty.

I have said nothing, I hope, to bear harder upon him than the Facts will warrant.

As to that Man Goddard, whom I have so often named to you, I could not do less than place him in the Light I have done: If I guess right, the Question will not be, whether the Prisoner is guilty or not, but whether the Artifices which Goddard has used shall be sufficient to stifle the Evidence, and prevent its being offered for your Consideration. For that Reason I have stated the Case at large.

My Lord will give us an Opportunity, I doubt not, to support the Character of Mr. Noads, if they attack it. I have not the least Doubt but they will repent it, if they do, as I hope they will every Part they have acted in this Affair. We shall now proceed to call our Witnesses.

Peter Edwards sworn:

Edwards. I am an Officer in the Commons in the Prerogative-Office. [He produces a Will of John Wilkinson.]

Coun. Where had you that?

Edwards. I had it out of the Prerogative-Office; it was filed there.

Coun. Who delivered it to you?

Edwards. It was delivered to me by the Record-keeper's Clerk; he has them Wills in his Custody always.

Coun. for the Pris. Did you see the Record-keeper's Clerk take it off the File?

Edwards. Yes, I did. [It is read in Court to this Purport.]

' In the Name of God, Amen. John Wilkinson, late of the Princess Amelia, being of sound and disposing Mind, &c. as set out in the Indictment: In Witness whereof I have hereunto set my Hand and Seal, this 5th Day of May, in the Year of our Lord 1747.'

John Wilkinson

' Signed, sealed, published, and declared, by the said John Wilkinson, as and for his last Will and Testament, in the Presents of us who have hereunto subscribed our Names, as Witness, in the Presents of the said Testator.'

Thomas Carty, Dinish Collins.

Coun. Has the Prisoner seen this Will?

Edwards. He saw it the last Sessions, I was present, it was at the Coffee-house in the Old-Bailey.

Coun. Who delivered it to him?

Edwards. I gave it to Mr. Goddard, and Mr. Goddard handed it to him.

Coun. Did he read it over?

Edwards. He looked it over, and owned he wrote the Body of the Will.

Coun. What were his Words?

Edwards.

Edwards. He said he wrote the Body of the Will, but that Noads either signed the Name John Wilkinson, or one of the Witnesses Names.

Coun. Did he say Thomas Noads?

Edwards. He said Noads, I cannot be positive whether he mentioned Thomas.

Coun. Did Mr. Goddard come to you afterwards; and what was the Conversation?

Edwards. He came to the Office some Time afterwards, I believe the next Week after, and told me not to take any Notice of what passed: That I only attended with the Will as an Officer of the Court; and he desired me not to take in the Conversation at any Time.

Coun. Did he give you any Reason?

[Here his Lordship interposed, because what Goddard said, was not Evidence to affect the Prisoner.]

Cross-Examination.

Coun. for the Pris. Did you attend as an Officer of the Court last Sessions?

Edwards. I did, I attended with the Will before the Grand Jury, when the Prisoner at the Bar was there as a Witness.

Coun. for the Pris. What did you attend for?

Edwards. To produce the Will, as I have done now.

Coun. for the Pris. Was it before or after you went to the Grand Jury, you heard the Prisoner own he wrote the Body of the Will?

Edwards. Before I went to the Grand Jury, the Prisoner spoke to Goddard, and then he confessed writing the Body of the Will.

Coun. for the Pris. Which Name did he confess he wrote?

Edwards. I cannot be certain; if I could; I would tell it.

Coun. for the Pris. How do you know that a Probate has been granted?

Edwards. Here is a Memorandum of a Probate being granted on the Back of it.

Coun. for the Pris. What is the other Mark on the Back for?

Edwards. It is that the Testator was late belonging to his Majesty's Ship the Amelia.

Coun. for the Pris. Have you seen the Probate?

Edwards. No, I have not.

Coun. for the Pris. Whose Hand-writing is that Memorandum?

Edwards. It was Mr. Crespigny's Clerk. That is filled up by the Proctor's Clerk, in order to fix the Seal. Before it is sealed, there is an Entry made by some Officer, to shew that this is a Person that died beyond Sea.

Coun. for the Crown. What is that Entry made on the Back of it for?

Edwards. That is the Foundation of granting out the Administration.

Thomas Noads called:

Prisoner's Council, Mr. (afterwards Serjeant) Nares.

My Lord, though I am of Council in this Case with the Prisoner at the Bar, I shall think myself no farther bound to defend him, than he shall actually appear to be, or at least may be presumed to be, innocent of this Accusation. On which Side soever the Villainy is, I sincerely wish it may be detected; and if I knew, or was at Liberty to presume, that the Facts now stated by Mr. Hume are as he represents them, I would throw up my Brief directly.

But every Man, my Lord, is by Law presumed to be innocent, till he is proved to be guilty; therefore it would ill become me, who am of Council with the Prisoner, to presume him otherwise; and therefore your Lordship will excuse me, if I take such Objections in Point of Law, in the Course of this Trial, as either are, or at least my weak Judgment induces me to believe, may be of Service to the Prisoner.

In the first Place, my Lord, Noads, who is now offered as an Evidence on behalf of the Prosecution, stands indicted for the same Crime for which the Prisoner at the Bar is now on his Trial. The Indictment is found, and principally, if not solely, upon the Prisoner's Evidence; therefore I must first desire the Indictment may be read. [It is produced.]

I must submit it to your Lordship; that Noads in this Case is not a Witness. I will not take upon me to say, that no Accomplice can be a Witness; to be sure it is laid down in many Cases that he may, and it is often absolutely necessary he should be so; therefore I shall not take up your Lordship's Time in insisting on a Point which seems now to be settled: But it seems to me by no means settled, that an Accomplice, against whom an Indictment is found, is admissible as a Witness; therefore I beg Leave to state what are my Reasons why the Law appears to be doubtful in this Particular.

I shall very candidly own; that in Hawkins's Pleas of the Crown, it is said, that although an Accomplice be indicted, he may be a Witness; but then it is likewise said, in the same Paragraph, that he may be a Witness, if he is not indicted; and that Mr. Serjeant Hawkins seems to lay down in the first Place as Law, and cites Authorities for it; and from the Expression, if he be not indicted; this Conclusion seems plainly to be deduced; that if he is indicted he cannot be a Witness.

Supposing then the Authorities are both Ways; I shall think myself justified in saying, there is a Doubt in the Case; and if it should remain a Doubt with your Lordship, I dare say your Lordship will determine on the merciful Side, in Favour of Life.

My Lord Hale, in his first Volume of his History of the Pleas of the Crown, 305, takes Notice of the same Doctrine that is laid down by Mr. Serjeant Hawkins, and after stating the several Instances in which an Accomplice may be admitted, he goes on and says, "But that Person must never be indicted;" and speaks of his Capacity of being a Witness, in case he is indicted, with so much Diffidence, that he seems to have a great Doubt whether he is to be admitted or not; and I cannot help saying, that there is, in Point of Reason, great Weight in such an Objection; for it seems exceeding strange to me, if not absurd, to say, that, in Point of Law, the most minute pecuniary Interest in the World, though ever so remote, shall take off a Man's Testimony, and render him incapable of being a Witness, as not being unbiassed and impartial, and at the same Time to say, a Person can be an unbiassed and impartial Witness, who is indicted for the same Crime, and is swearing to save his own Life, (which must necessarily be the Consequence in the present Instance,) for if the Prisoner is convicted, there can be no Evidence against the Witness.

As to the Minuteness of a pecuniary Interest to take away a Person's Capacity of being a Witness, I shall only mention one Instance, which I have known in Practice; which is, that on an Indictment ment for stopping up or obstructing an Highway, which is laid to be used for Carts and Carriages, no one of the Inhabitants, who are bound to repair, can be admitted as a Witness to prove it is not a Way for Carts and Carriages, but only for Horses; because it is to diminish an Expence to which he is liable. And this Rule holds, though the Number of Inhabitants who contribute to the Repairs amount to ten thousand.

But supposing your Lordship should think that the View of saving Life, or securing personal Safety, though immediate, is not considered, in Point of Law, as having the same Influence on a Witness, as so small and so remote a pecuniary Interest as I have mentioned, there is an Objection to Noads's being an Evidence arising from such an Interest.

It has been opened by Mr. Hume, and Noads is now called to prove, that he hath been defrauded of 37 l. which Sum he paid out of his own Pocket, by an Imposition put upon him by the Forgery of this Will, it being produced to him as the Will of John Wilkinson, who was on board the Amelia Privateer, by his pretended personal Representative; and it is likewise laid in the Indictment to be to Noads's Damage.

And I must submit it to your Lordship, that 'tis a Rule of Evidence, that no Person can possibly be admitted as a Witness to overturn a Fact, the Overturning of which may be any ways beneficial to himself.

In order to state this Objection as fully as I can, I beg Leave to mention the Words of Hawkins's Pleas of the Crown, 433, and apply what is there said to the present Objection.

It is there laid down as a good Exception against a Witness, that his Interest is concerned; "that he is either to be a Gainer or a Loser by the Event of the Cause, whether such Advantage be direct and immediate, or consequential only: And this seems to be the Reason, why he who is Bail for the Defendant cannot be a Witness for him without Consent. Also upon the same Ground it is agreed, that he who borrows Money upon an usurious Contract, cannot be a Witness upon an Information for the Usury, unless he hath paid the Money, whether such Information be brought by himself, or any other; for, if in such Case a Man might be a Witness, he would in Effect swear for himself, by proving a Matter which may avoid his own Contract. And upon the like Reason it hath been ruled, that he who has been imposed upon by a Sleight, to set his Hand to a Note for more Money than he intended, is no Witness on an Information for the Cheat, because a Conviction may be a Means to avoid the Note, by being made use of as a Motive to influence the Jury: And for the like Reason it is generally agreed, that he whose Property may be prejudiced by a Forgery, is no Evidence to prove it: And it hath been adjudged, that he, against whom a Verdict is given, cannot be a Witness to prove Perjury in the Evidence; so that, if there be but the remotest Possibility even of its being thrown out to a Jury, that the Witness can avail himself by his Testimony, he can be no legal Witness."

These are the Words of the Book: Let us then apply the Doctrine here laid down to the present Case.

It is very plain, Noads, as it has been opened, has paid 37 l. upon this Will being produced to him as a real Will. This certainly was an Imposition on him. Now the Question is, how far any Advantage can arise to Noads one Way or the other, from the Consequence of this Conviction: The Money was paid to Williams, who personated one Daunt, the pretended Executor of Wilkinson's Will: Noads might bring an Action for the Money against Williams, as Money had and received to his Use, being procured by a Deceit: In order to prove the Deceit, it may be necessary to shew the Will, of which Williams pretended to be Executor; and by Colour of which he received the Money; was forged; and though I will not contend that Verdicts in criminal Prosecutions are in general to be given in Evidence in Actions, yet I cannot see why the Copy of the Indictment, in which the Will is set forth, and of the Conviction in consequence of it, might not be a proper, if not necessary Evidence to prove the Deceit; if not, the mentioning it to the Jury would have a great Influence on them; and if that is Law which is laid down in Hawkins, an Advantage, even of that Sort only, would be sufficient, in Point of Law, to take away a Man's Testimony.

For these Reasons, my Lord, I beg Leave to insist that Noads is not a proper Witness, as being an Accomplice indicted; and if he is as such, yet if he hath that Interest or Advantage arising to him from the Consequence of this Trial, in respect of the Money he has paid, as I have hinted at, that will be sufficient to destroy his Testimony.

Second Council for the Prisoner, Mr. (afterwards Serjeant) Davy.

I do assure your Lordship, the Matter hinted at by Mr. Hume is intirely new to us, and if we had any Reason to believe it to be Truth, your Lordship would not have been troubled with the Appearance of either of us here; and without doubt, we cannot be justified in deserting the Prisoner, as he is to be tried for his Life, so he may be sure of all the Assistance we can give him under your Lordship's Directions.

Where a Man is at all influenced in the Evidence he is to offer to your Lordship, by any Interest he may receive, either pecuniary, or any Advantage he may have in escaping Punishment, or what not, it will be such a Bias, that will take off that Credit to his Testimony, and therefore be the Cause of his Rejection.

The first Objection is, that he himself stands indicted. I take this to be a Rule, that if he had been indicted in the same Indictment, he might come in as a Witness, supposing he would confess himself guilty, as in Sir Peter Crosby's Case, 1 Hale's P. C. 303. It was held in the Star-Chamber, that if two Defendants be charged for a Crime, one shall not be examined against the other to convict him of an Offence, unless the Party examined confess himself guilty, and then he shall be admitted.

This will account for the Distinction made by my Lord Chief Justice Hale, mentioned by Mr. Nares; for my Lord Hale's Idea of it is, that no Man can turn Evidence for himself; if that is so, your Lordship will see whether there is any Distinction in the Case, when there are two-Indictments in the same Case.

This will come still stronger, when it is considered that the Prisoner stands as an Accuser on the Back of that Indictment which is found against Noads, and and that which Noads is by and by to be tried for. If he can give Evidence against Murphy, and convict him, he will prevent that: No Interest can be more immediate, than that he should give Evidence to take off the Testimony of another Man from convicting him of a capital Crime immediately.

The Order was, Murphy being first indicted, should be first tried: Your Lordship will observe who squeaked first. This Indictment against Murphy was never found 'till such Time that there was a Charge against Noads for this very Forgery: And, my Lord, this Objection comes in some measure stronger by the Evidence of Mr. Edwards: He has been called in to prove a Kind of Confession of the Prisoner of this Forgery. Now all Confessions must not be taken in Part, but together: The same Evidence proves Noads also to have a Hand in it, because Murphy confessed he wrote the Body of it, and Noads either the Attestation or another Name. An Objection will come here in Point of Interest: Mr. Noads is the Person charged in the Indictment to have been defrauded by this Murphy; for so it has been opened by the Gentlemen on the Part of the Prosecution: Can't he avail himself of this afterwards? And as he is immediately concerned in this to save his own Life, he will disable Murphy by his Conviction, who is Prosecutor against him in the other Indictment; and under such a Bias he ought not to be received as a Witness.

The Case in Hawkins, about a Woman who had indicted her Son for fraudulently obtaining from her a Note of 100*l.* intending to give her 50*l.* Lord Hardwicke in the Case of the King and Bray mentions that Case; my Lord Hardwicke's Words are, That nothing but that great Authority could support it; but he says this too in that Case of the King and Bray, That nothing is more unsettled than the Rule of Evidence: The Determinations often turn upon some right or wrong Application of that Rule I have mentioned, and that is, the Bias Witnesses are under when they come to give Evidence.

Whether Noads is not under such a Bias, is not the Question; but whether that Bias is not so strong, that it is a material Objection to his being received as a Witness, I leave to your Lordship.

Mr. Hume Campbell's Reply.

My Lord, I should scarce think it justifiable to take up any of your Lordship's Time to answer the Objections, which the Gentlemen, by stating with so much Candour, have really answered themselves, was it not that the present Question is of the utmost Importance to Futurity, in the Attainment of the great Ends of Protection and Justice. We are now to consider it as a Matter of Doubt, whether every Criminal, by turning the Charge against his Prosecutor, may not evade Justice, and prevent the Court from having any Evidence produced on the Part of the Crown.

There are always two Ways in which Objections to Evidence are made; one is to the Competency of a Witness, which is a total Rejection of his Testimony; and the other is to his Credit, which is proper only for the Consideration of the Jury.

In the present Case, the Gentlemen don't chuse their Objection should be directed at Mr. Noads's Credit; that would not answer their Purpose, because we can establish his Credit beyond a Doubt. Their Attempt, therefore, is totally to reject his Testimony; nothing less can afford a Possibility of supporting the Scheme of turning the Prisoner's Evidence against his Prosecutor, or of making the extraordinary Behaviour of the two Justices, to bring this Matter about, of any Effect.

I have watched to hear if they could produce an Instance, wherein it was ever held that a Prosecutor's Testimony should be rejected, to receive that of a Prisoner charged and committed originally upon such Prosecutor's Oath; and my learned Friends have not offered to state to your Lordship a single Authority for it: The Authority quoted out of Hawkins is strongly against them: My Lord Chief Justice Hale puts it rightly; it may go to his Credit, and may be weighed by the Jury, but it never can go to the total Rejection of his Evidence. There is no Colour, therefore, why your Lordship should not hear the Witness.

The next Objection is very singular; it is, that because, by a forged Will of a living Man, Williams has defrauded Noads of 37*l.* and Noads may bring an Action against him for imposing upon him, therefore Noads cannot be a Witness to prove Murphy guilty of forging that Will, which, whether counterfeit or genuine, leaves Mr. Noads equally defrauded.

I submit it to your Lordship, that there is not a sufficient Foundation to support either of the Objections, which, your Lordship observes, may be attended with those perilous Consequences which I pointed out, and endeavoured to prepare the Court for, in the Opening of the Case.

Mr. (afterwards Lord Chief Justice) Pratt's Reply.

In a common Case, I think, I should hardly have thought it worth while to give your Lordship any Trouble; but the present Objection is of the last Consequence to the Justice of this Kingdom; for, if it prevails, it will teach every Criminal a Method how to screen himself from the Law, and no Prosecutor will ever be able to apprehend a Felon, without running the Risk of putting his own Life in Danger.

This therefore is a Point which deserves a very serious Consideration. Murphy, who appears now the Prisoner on this present Indictment, was, upon hearing Council on both Sides, ordered to be tried first in favour of Mr. Noads. Now, if the Objection prevails, it will not only go to Noads, but likewise to Williams and Carter, who are both indicted with Mr. Noads by the Prisoner, and these are all the Witnesses who are capable of proving the Forgery upon him; the Consequence then will be, that not only the present Prisoner must be acquitted for want of the King's Evidence being heard, but Mr. Noads must be tried immediately after, and this very Prisoner's Evidence must be admitted against him. Your Lordship will observe, what strange perverted Proceedings there would be upon these Occasions, if, where two cross Indictments are depending, one brought by the Prosecutor, and the other by the Criminal himself, it should be held just to render the Prosecutor's Testimony incompetent upon the first Indictment that comes to be tried. If this be the Case, Mr. Noads would have done right to have come to the Court, and desired to have been first tried; because then, the Prisoner being set aside as having been indicted for the same Offence, Mr. Noads would have been clearly acquitted, and upon the second Indictment, being clear of Objection by the Acquittal, must have convicted the Prisoner.

But to consider the Principle of Law upon which this Kind of Testimony stands. This then I take to be a clear Maxim and Ground of Law, and is universal, That every Man in this Kingdom is a competent Witness on an Indictment in Behalf of the Crown, unless he is convicted or attainted of some scandalous Offence. There must be a Conviction before the Witness can be disqualified; which proves that a mere Accusation or Indictment cannot render him incompetent, however it may affect his Credit; for, in Point of Law, every Man is presumed innocent 'till he is proved guilty: Nor is this denied, but admitted by my Lord Chief Justice Hale, though what has been cited upon the present Occasion, is confined to Cases of confessed Accomplices and joint Indictments; as to which his Words are, that such Persons, though indicted, may be admitted as Witnesses if they confess themselves guilty, but their Testimony is not conclusive to the Jury; for they may as well consider the Credibility or not Credibility of the Witness, as the Matter he swears. And this is all the Distinction he makes even in this Case, that though one be indicted, it is not an Objection to his Competency, but may be to his Credit. Nay, in Cases of Treason, he is clear, that such a Person is not barely a competent Witness, but may be one of the two Witnesses required by the Statute to an Overt-Act of Treason. The only Qualification to the Rule is this, that such a Witness, so indicted, should confess himself guilty of the Crime for which he stands indicted, which undoubtedly is right; for, if the Court was to admit him a Witness to prove his own Innocence, that would be a clear Objection to him; but, if he confesses, he comes only to charge another, and not to clear himself. But these are not like the present Case. What is the Case here?

Mr. Noads is the original Prosecutor, and preferred the first Indictment. The Prisoner afterwards indicts the same Mr. Noads, by a separate Indictment, for the same Offence. Mr. Noads does not come here to give Evidence that he in Conjunction with the Prisoner forged this Will; he does not come under the Light of an Accomplice, but insists upon his Innocence, and must at this Time be deemed in Law as innocent, with regard to this Fact, as any Man in Court. This then is a material Difference between joint and separate Indictments; to which Purpose my Lord Hale in that very Book puts this Case, that if A, B, and C are separately indicted, A, one of the Persons indicted, may be Evidence for B and C, and they may both be acquitted on his Testimony. Mr. Noads is indicted in one separate Indictment, and the Prisoner in another. Can there be any Ground to say, that Mr. Noads, the Person defrauded, and the first Indicter, shall be no Witness against the Prisoner, for this Reason only, because he has been afterwards indicted by him? Was ever a Case like this before? That six Weeks after the Prisoner had been committed, he should be permitted to turn Evidence against Mr. Noads, who was the only Person defrauded in the first Instance by the Forgery; who took him up, and confronted him before the Alderman; who charged him upon his own Oath with this Offence uncontradicted; who caused him to be committed, who indicted him? Shall this Prisoner now, to save his own Life, give Evidence against his Prosecutor (for the second Indictment is the Evidence of the Prisoner) to set aside that Indictment upon which he himself is to be tried? If this be the Case, the Lord have Mercy upon every Man that attempts to prosecute a Felon for the sake of Justice; for, if this should be allowed, no Man, except the Prosecutor, will ever be convicted.

[Mr. Moreton was going to enforce what had been said, when his Lordship declared it was unnecessary, and that the Court was clearly of Opinion, Mr. Noads ought to be admitted a Witness, and therefore over-ruled the Objections to his Competency.]

Thomas Noads sworn.

Noads. The Prisoner at the Bar was one of the Sailors on board one of the Royal-Family Privateers; he came to me in the Beginning of February 1750-1, about the 3d or 4th, with a Person by the Name of John Daunt.

Q. Where did you live then?

Noads. I lived then in the New-Buildings, Coleman-Street.

Q. What is your Business?

Noads. I act as a Book-keeper or Clerk to the Managers of the Royal-Family Privateers.

Q. Had you seen the Prisoner before February 1750-1?

Noads. He has been frequently at our Office: I was by when he received his own Part: The first of his coming was to solicit for 20 l. before the Accounts were settled.

Q. Had you ever seen that Person before, that came in the Name of John Daunt?

Noads. No, I never had.

Q. What did they come about?

Noads. The Prisoner brought Daunt, and a Will and Power, and told me it was the Will and Power of John Wilkinson. I knew by our Book there was such a Person on board. The Prisoner told me that Daunt kept a Public-House in Lisbon, and that he had frequently drank at his House at Lisbon with Wilkinson; and said it was a House that he and several other Sailors used while the Ships lay there; and that he knew Daunt to be a very honest and worthy Man: He desired I would write to Mr. Casamajor of Bristol, (who was the Agent appointed to pay the People for their Services on board) for the Money due to John Wilkinson for his Service on board the Royal-Family Privateers. I asked him some few Questions with regard to the Ships: Both of them told me, that John Wilkinson lodged with John Daunt at Lisbon, at the Time the Ships were fitting out for a second Cruize. I asked them, what was become of Wilkinson, that I had heard nothing of him for upwards of two Years; Murphy replied, he died on the Coast of Guiney: I should otherwise have paid them the Money on the Power of Attorney, which they had first produced; but as I understood the Man was dead, I could not then pay the Money upon the Power. Murphy then immediately proposed to go to the Commons to prove the Will, saying at the same Time, he knew very well how to go about it; for that he had proved the Will of one Miles Masterfon, I think the Name was; he then mentioned some Proctor's Name, I think it was Hughes; I then told him he might as well go to Mr. Crespigny.

Q. Do you know the Day of the Month you had this Conversation?

Noads. I believe this was the 9th of February. They were several Times with me from the Beginning of February to the 9th. In the Afternoon the the same Day they returned to me, and told me that the Will was proved, and desired me to make out a Power of Attorney for me to receive the Money of Mr. Casamaijor, he living at Bristol. I made one out accordingly, Murphy was a Witness to it. (He produces it.) They went away from me, and came in two Days after. I believe this was on Saturday, and they returned on the Monday, and brought it re-executed before the then Lord-Mayor. I then wrote to Mr. Casamaijor, and he remitted me the Money on the 18th or 19th of February: They both called again on the 20th, and on that Day I paid the Money to Thomas Williams, the Man who calls himself John Daunt: I took a Receipt for it; (He shewed a Receipt) this is it. Thomas Williams signed it by the Name of John Daunt, and Murphy was present at the Time. I paid down the whole Money on the Table, 37*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.* they paid back the Deductions, which was about forty Shillings, for proving the Will; they had not Money to pay for the proving the Will, so Mr. Crespigny's Clerk sent the Will to me, to take the Money for him.

Q. What did they give you for your Trouble?

Noads. I believe they gave me about a Guinea; it was not more than twenty-five Shillings, for the Trouble I had in writing Letters, paying Postage, and drawing the Letter of Attorney.

Q. Who received the Money of you?

Noads. It was received by the Person who went by the Name of Daunt, in the Presence of Murphy. Murphy at that Time desired that Daunt would give him something for his Trouble in shewing him the Way to Doctors-Commons, so Daunt gave him Half a Guinea; Murphy muttered and grumbled, and said it was too little; then they went out of the House.

Q. Had you ever seen the Will of Wilkinson, or Power of Attorney, before that Time they brought it in February?

Noads. No, I had not.

Q. Who wrote Crespigny at the Back of the Will?

Noads. I might write it very likely, but it is so much erased that I can't say: I should have in Course sent them to Mr. Crespigny; I sent every Body that came to have any Thing done in his Way to him; he is the Person employed by the Gentlemen as their Proctor.

Q. Have you seen Wilkinson since that Time?

Noads. I have: I believe him to be the same that was on the Books.

Q. Has there been any Demand by him for this Money since?

Noads. No, there has not, neither by him or any body else.

Q. When did you first hear that Wilkinson was living?

Noads. I heard it when the Cause came on in Chancery about a Year ago, then he appeared.

Q. Have you seen him?

Noads. I saw him in this Court in the Parlour with Mr. Goddard, the Sessions before last.

Q. Did you ever see him before?

Noads. I have seen him at Lisbon among the Ships Crews, and I talked with him since about his being there, and about two or three of the Ships, and believe him to be the Man.

Q. How long was it after you paid the Money, when you saw him first?

Noads. It was a Year and an half after, and that was at this Court, as I mentioned before.

Q. To which Ship did he belong?

Noads. He was one of the Crew of the Princess Amelia.

Q. Upon your hearing he was alive, and you having paid the Money, what was the first Thing you did?

Noads. I made Inquiry after this Daunt, but could not find him. I then began to inquire for Murphy; and one Carter, who had been intimate with Murphy, and was on board the Privateers commanded by Commodore Talbot, was the first Person that gave me any Information of him: He at first thought I wanted to arrest him, 'till I told him the whole Affair. Carter went to several Places to make Inquiry after him. When we got an Account of him, which was in about a Fortnight, I got a Warrant from Mr. Alderman Ironside, and then I heard he was at Tooting: I got the Warrant backed by Justice Clarke, and went there, and found he had been there, but was gone: Then I heard he was at Dulwich; there I got the Warrant backed by another Justice, and found he had been at the Green-Man there; but was gone a few Days: I applied to the Master of the College, and, by the Assistance of a Servant to that Gentleman, he was taken at Newington on that Side the Water. After he was taken, I appeared. As they were bringing him round the Corner, the Prisoner made his Escape from the Constable, and ran; but was taken again in a few Minutes after. We took him into a Public-House there: He asked what he was taken up for: I told him he might well imagine for what; I said it was for forging such a Will, and that I was very confident it was his Hand-writing, I had compared it with some of his. He took me to one Corner of the Room, and said, Dear Sir, (lifting up his Hands) do you think I had any Thing to do with it? But upon my telling him I was confident it was his Hand-writing, and that several People knew it, he said he threw himself at my Feet, and hoped I would not take away his Life, or to that Purpose.

Q. What were his Words, as near as you can recollect?

Noads. He said, I beg my Life. I told him I did not want to take his Life away, I only wanted to have common Justice done.

Q. Did you understand him to mean he wrote the Will and Letter of Attorney?

Noads. I did understand him so; he allowed he wrote it, but did not immediately say he did.

Q. During all this Conversation which you had with him, did you inquire after John Daunt?

Noads. I asked him, if it was not one Thomas Williams that personated John Daunt, because I understood from Carter that it must be him; and he said but very little afterwards, and called for some Water, and was ready to faint; he never made me any Answer to that, whether it was he or not. We then took him before Justice Clarke, and he sent him to Guildhall, there he was committed to the Poultry-Compter by Mr. Alderman Chitty, the Sitting Alderman.

Q. Was you by at his Examination before the Alderman?

Noads. I was.

Q. Who made the Charge against him?

Noads. I did.

Q. Did you make it upon Oath?

Noads. I did.

Q. What was the Charge?

Noads. It was with the Forgery for which he now stands indicted. I had several Opportunities of of comparing Hand-writings of his that I had got during the Time of my knowing it was a Forgery, and the Time I took him up; and by several Comparisons, I believe the whole to be his Hand-writing. When we had him before the Alderman, he was asked after Daunt; he said he could prove he lived at Lisbon, but said he could not tell where he then was; afterwards he insisted upon his Innocency, and said he knew nothing of the Matter; he did own he met Daunt in the Street, and said he had seen him at Lisbon, and that Daunt told him he had a Right of receiving that Money from that Will.

Q. When did you prefer a Bill of Indictment against him?

Noads. I did the very next Sessions, which was in September.

Q. Were Mr. Wilkinson and Mr. James Goddard there at that Time?

Noads. They were: I believe that to be Wilkinson.

Q. Who else were there?

Noads. There were Peter Edwards and Anthony Devoyer. That Bill was not found.

Q. How long have you been informed that the Person who called his Name John Daunt, was Thomas Williams?

Noads. Carter would have it to be him; but I was not confident 'till I went over to Ireland, after that Bill was thrown out, to see whether a Man who I was informed was in Corke Gaol, was the Man that I paid the Money to; I found him to be the same Person, I remembered him immediately, and am sure he is the same Man that I paid the Money to by the Name of John Daunt, who was recommended to me by the Prisoner as an honest Man.

Cross-Examination.

Coun. for the Pris. Who was you Agent to?

Noads. I was Agent under Mr. Henry Casamaijor, I transacted Business for him.

Coun. for the Pris. Did you know Murphy before?

Noads. I had seen him frequently before he came with that Person who called his Name Daunt; he was one of the Seamen on board the Royal-Family Privateers; he at last got to assist the Captain's Steward as a Kind of Cabbin-Boy.

Coun. for the Pris. You say he came to receive his own Money, what was it?

Noads. The Ballance of the Account came to about 7 or 8l. a Share was 36l. 8s. 1d. each, and I believe he had a Share and an Half.

Coun. for the Pris. Did he produce the Will and Power of Attorney both together?

Noads. He did, I believe he took them out of the other Man's Hand, and gave them to me.

Coun. for the Pris. Did you direct them to make Use of your Name to Mr. Crespigny?

Noads. No, I did not.

Coun. for the Pris. Pray recollect yourself, did you write that Name on the Back of the Will or not?

Noads. I might, but I don't know; that which is not crazed looks like my Writing.

Coun. for the Pris. Do you know how it came to be scratched out?

Noads. No, I do not, nor when it was scratched out.

Coun. for the Pris. Did you read over the Probate?

Noads. No, I did not, I only looked to see whether the Name John Wilkinson was there.

Coun. for the Pris. Is it not usual to read the Probate over?

Noads. I don't know that ever I read over one in my Life, I don't know that it is customary.

Coun. for the Pris. Is this the Probate produced here?

Noads. This is the very Probate.

Coun. for the Pris. Had you ever seen Williams before that Time he came with the Prisoner, as you say, in the Name of Daunt?

Noads. I never did, as I know of: The first Time I saw him was in the Beginning of February 1750-1.

Coun. for the Pris. Have you seen him since?

Noads. I have, several Times; I was with him eight or ten Times in Ireland.

Coun. for the Pris. What was your Business when you went to Ireland?

Noads. I went on purpose to find him out.

Coun. for the Pris. How came you to mistrust him being the Person?

Noads. I shewed the Receipt to Carter, and he said he was very confident the Name John Daunt was his Hand-writing.

Coun. for the Pris. Have you no other Witness to prove that, than Carter?

Noads. No, I have not.

Coun. for the Pris. Did you make use of any Threats?

Noads. No, I did not.

Coun. for the Pris. Did you mean the Will and Power was the Hand-writing of Murphy?

Noads. The Will and Power, Signing and all; I mean all in general.

Coun. for the Pris. Did you think the Name Dimish Collins is of a different Writing to the other Names?

Noads. I think it is all the Writing of one Hand.

Coun. for the Pris. What is Carter?

Noads. He was on board the Privateers, not the same Cruize, but the Cruize before.

Coun. for the Pris. Did you shew him the Will?

Noads. I did, and he said the Name John Wilkinson in particular was Murphy's Hand-writing.

Thomas Williams sworn.

Mr. Hume Campbell to Noads. Do you know this Witness?

Noads. This Thomas Williams is the same Man that came to me and received the Money in the Name of John Daunt.

Mr. Hume Campbell to Williams. Do you know Timothy Murphy?

Williams. I do, it is the Prisoner at the Bar.

Q. How long have you been acquainted with him?

Williams. I was acquainted with him about a Month or five Weeks before the Beginning of February 1750-1. I met him near Charing-Cross in the Street; we went to a House of ill Fame there; I believe the Man of the House his Name is Mullings, he is a Scotchman: This was the Month of January; he took me a walking round the Park, and to several Places, and told me he had something to relate to me, and if I would be ruled by him, he would do for me, and in the Park he swore me to Secrecy, (not by Book, but by Word.) He first swore, then I swore; I told him, if it be any thing except Robbery or Murder, I'd stand true to him; the next Day in the Morning we came to this Mullings's House again.

Q. Can you recollect what Time in January 1750-1 this was?

Williams.

Williams. It was about the latter End of January. Then he said, Come, Williams, God I'll do for you now. He took me up Stairs into a large Room, and called for a Bowl of Punch, saying, This is cold Weather, we must drink something that will make us warm; he made me drink pretty heartily. At last he pulled out a whole Parcel of Papers, some of them were Prints, some with Stamps, and some without; he began to laugh and smile; he said, I told you, I had something to do for you, now I'll do for you, said he; there's one Wilkinson that belongs to the Princess Amelia private Ship of War, that is dead on the Coast of Guiney, and his Money can be taken by any body, and said, I will go for it; said I, I don't understand that Way of getting of Money; said he, D—n it, what a Fool you are, not to consent to get Money at so safe a Rate! there are several of my Acquaintance (if you were to know as well as I) that get Money enough in forging Seamens Wills and Powers, and receiving Wages and Prize-Money due to them; and if you'll be ruled by me, you shall not want Money, for you shall dress like a Gentleman, and wear a Sword; then he rubbed his Hands, and said, Drink t'other Glafs, and go down and warm yourself by the Fire: I went down, and left him with Pen, Ink and Paper; and in a short Time after he called me up Stairs again, and told me he had Writings drawn up, purporting to be the Will and Power of John Wilkinson; he made them to me in the Name of John Daunt, and he called for a Candle, which was brought lighted; he took a Piece of Sealing-Wax, and clapped the Seal on it, before the Name John Daunt was wrote; then he wrote John Wilkinson, Thomas Carty, and Dinish Collins; then he put a Seal on them.

Q. How many Seals were there?

Williams. I believe there were more than one; there was one to each Paper, that is, the Will and the Power. After he had sealed them, he asked for a Penknife; I lent him one; he made two or three different Pens, and said, that this will not do well, to have these Witnesses all of one Hand-writing. The Names Thomas Carty and Dinish Collins were for two subscribing Witnesses.

Q. What were these Pens made for?

Williams. To write the Names with different Pens, that they should not look alike.

Q. Did he write all, both on the Will and Power?

Williams. He wrote it all over, every Word, both the Will and Power, and then took and sealed them up, and put them into his Pocket.

Q. Did he say any Thing about Wilkinson owing Daunt any Money?

Williams. He said John Wilkinson owed John Daunt seventeen Moidores; these were the Reasons which he gave to me for my going by the Name of John Daunt, saying, if a Reason should be required why it was left to me, it should be represented, that this Wilkinson was indebted to me these Moidores. After this, we went to some other House of his Acquaintance, where we drank that Afternoon, and I went to Bed pretty merry; the next Morning early he came and called me out of Bed, and desired me to come along with him to the House of Thomas Noads in Coleman-Street. I said, I had not got my Breakfast. He said, Come along; what a Blockhead you are? We will get a Pint of Purl, and go about our Business: Then he hurried me out. After we had had a Draught of Purl at the Castle and Horse-shoe, Charing-Cross, we took Boat at Whitehall Stairs, we landed at the Old Swan, and went to the House of Mr. Noads; there the Prisoner introduced me by the Name of John Daunt, and said I was a very honest Man, and that he had known me a great while to keep a House at Lisbon, and that he had drank at my House several Times in Company with John Wilkinson; then he produced this forged Will and Power, and desired he'd pay the Money due to John Wilkinson, for his Services on board the Princess Amelia, a private Ship of War, to me, in the Name of John Daunt; Mr. Noads and he talked a little while together; he told the Prisoner, I believe I can't pay it upon this Power; then the Prisoner said, This Wilkinson is dead: How long has he been dead? said the other: Said Murphy, I believe he has been dead two Years, he died upon the Coast of Guiney: Then Murphy proposed to go to the Commons (I think he said to a Proctor) to prove the Will, but Mr. Noads told him to go to Mr. Crespigny to do it; we went, and on our Way thither I stopped, and said, Murphy, I don't understand what you are about, I believe you are going to play the Rogue with me, I'll not go a Step farther; I'll return back, and tell Mr. Noads my Name is not Daunt; I'll divulge the whole Affair to him. With that he swore vehemently, and took up a great Stick, and said, he'd dash my Brains out, or have me hanged, if I did not go that Minute, and prove the Will in the Commons.

Q. Where were you when you had this Conversation?

Williams. It was in a little Alley not far from Coleman-Street.

Q. Did you go?

Williams. By the Fright I went along with him, and by his Desire and Directions, and there in his Presence I proved the Will.

Q. To what Proctor did you go?

Williams. To Mr. Crespigny; there the Will was produced and proved.

Q. Look at this Paper, do you know it?

Williams. That is the very Will; the Hand-writing is Murphy's; if I was to die this Minute, I am sure no Man wrote it but he; here are the Names, I saw them wrote; he wrote this Name John Wilkinson, with a fine Pen, which he made with my Knife; he wrote also the other Names Thomas Carty and Dinish Collins, and I am sure I saw him have such a Seal in his Pocket as is here put on the Wax.

Q. What did you do after the Will was proved?

Williams. Then he came back to Mr. Noads's House, and told him, the Will was proved at the Commons.

Q. Who told him so?

Williams. Murphy did; then there was a Letter of Attorney made by Murphy's Desire, for Mr. Noads to have Power to receive the Money of Mr. Casamaijor, who he told us was in Bristol at that Time.

Q. Who signed that Power?

Williams. I did, and Murphy was the only subscribing Witness to it; then we took it along with us, (this was I believe on Saturday Afternoon) and on the Monday he called me very early, and by his Desire, I went along with him to my Lord-Mayor's Office, and there I think this Letter of Attorney was re-executed; then we went again to Mr. Noads's House, and gave him the Power of Attorney, to receive the Money of Mr. Casamaijor; then we went away, and went again two or three Times between that and the 19th or 20th of February: On one of them Days we received the Money, he said, he had from Mr. Casamaijor, and then he paid me 37l. 12s. or thereabouts, in the Name of John Daunt, in the Presence of Murphy, and took a Receipt for the Money, signed by me; I wrote John Daunt; if you'll please to look, you'll see a Sort of a Boggle, there is a Letter not made right; instead of the Letter a, I was going to write o, and was forced to make it an a afterwards; I did not know how to write Daunt cleverly. [His Lordship, Jury, and Council, looked at it, and it appeared as he said.] Murphy said to Mr. Noads, I have taken a d—d deal of Trouble, he ought to give me something for my Trouble, (we had made that Bargain before we came there, that I was to give him Half a Guinea in the Presence of Mr. Noads, to induce Mr. Noads to believe he was only to have that for his Trouble) I gave him Half a Guinea in Mr. Noads's House, then we went away, and at a little Distance he said to me, Don't you remember you are to give me two Guineas for my Trouble in making the Writings, over and above the Half of the Money? I was very much disheartened, and said, Murphy, I'll go back and give him the Money back, saying, it is a very unjust Thing, I will not carry it any farther; he swore Damnation to his Soul, if I should go a Step farther, he'd give a Judge or Jury no Trouble, but he'd dash my Brains out if I did not go forward, and had a great Stick in his Hand at the Time, he pushed me along before him; I was afraid of my Life, for he threatened me both one Way and t'other, either to kill me or get me hanged: Then I said, Take all the Money, and gave it him all in his Hand, I'll have nothing to do with it: He answered to that, No, no, I have revealed all my Secrets to you, and now you are going to have me hanged; he said, I'll take two Guineas, and Half the whole Money, which he did, and gave me the Remainder of it.

Q. When was the first Time you saw Mr. Noads?

Williams. I never saw him 'till I went with the Prisoner to his House, nor never saw Wilkinson, or knew that there was such a Man living.

Q. When did you hear Wilkinson was alive?

Williams. I never heard it 'till Mr. Noads came to me in Corke in Ireland, where I was a Prisoner for Debt.

Q. Had you seen Mr. Noads between the Time you took the Money and the Time you saw him in Corke?

Williams. No, I never did.

Cross-Examination.

Coun. for the Pris. How much Punch might you drink at the House near Charing-Cross, when you say this Will was made?

Williams. I believe we drank about three Shillings worth.

Coun. for the Pris. Did you call for a second Bowl?

Williams. No, we did not.

Coun. for the Pris. What had you been drinking before?

Williams. We had been drinking a Dram each, and a Pint of Purl.

Coun. for the Pris. Then you was a little in Liquor, was you not?

Williams. I was tolerably warm.

Coun. for the Pris. Was there a Fire above Stairs?

Williams. No, there was not.

Coun. for the Pris. What Time of the Day was it that you was there?

Williams. It was in the Morning.

Coun. for the Pris. Did either of you smoke Tobacco?

Williams. No, we neither of us did.

Coun. for the Pris. What did you do with your Candle then?

Williams. That was brought up by the Prisoner's Desire, after he had drawn the Writings up.

Coun. for the Pris. How long had you been in the House before the Candle was brought you?

Williams. We might have been in the House two Hours before the Maid brought it up.

Coun. for the Pris. How long had you been in the House in all?

Williams. I believe we might have been in the House two Hours and an Half in all.

Coun. for the Pris. How long was you in the House before you went above Stairs?

Williams. It might be above Half an Hour before I went up, which was when he called me.

Coun. for the Pris. When did you hear the Name of John Daunt first?

Williams. I never heard it before that Day.

Coun. for the Pris. Where did he get the Wax?

Williams. He had Wax in his Pocket, and I believe a Seal too.

Coun. for the Pris. Did you see him put the Seal to the Wax?

Williams. I did, he put it to one of them before he wrote the Name.

Coun. for the Pris. Did he to the other, do you remember?

Williams. I can't say whether he wrote the other first or not.

Coun. for the Pris. Which did he seal before he wrote the Name?

Williams. It was the Will.

Coun. for the Pris. What Sort of a Table were they wrote upon?

Williams. It was a Table big enough for Half a Dozen Men to dine at.

Coun. for the Pris. Did you see him write all the Will?

Williams. I saw him write Part of it, that is the latter End, that is Part of one Side, where the Witnesses are; he had not finished it when he called me up.

Coun. for the Pris. Had he Ink of his own, or was there any other that he made use of?

Williams. There was a Pewter Ink-stand in the Room?

Coun. for the Pris. Are you sure you saw him write the Name to the Will?

Williams. I saw him write them three same Names on it.

Coun. for the Pris. Was there but one Ink-stand?

Williams. No, there was but one Dish with Ink.

Coun. for the Pris. Were these three Names wrote with the same Ink?

Williams. They were, but with different Pens.

Coun. for the Pris. How long do you think you might be above Stairs?

Williams.

Williams. We might be there about an Hour.

Coun. for the Pris. Where did you bestow your Time the other Part of the Day?

Williams. We went and walked and smoked and drank mostly, for it was very cold Weather.

Coun. for the Pris. Then you must go near being fuddled, was you not?

Williams. I went to Bed brave and heavy, I know.

Coun. for the Pris. Where did you live then?

Williams. I lodged near Mr. Manning's at Charing-Cross, at the Tbisle and Crown: Bob Carter lodged over-against me.

Coun. for the Pris. You say you never saw Mr. Noads 'till that Time the Prisoner and you went to his House the Beginning of February 1750-1; recollect yourself whether you had not seen him before?

Williams. I had not.

Coun. for the Pris. Did not he once lend you Half a Crown on your Chatham-Chest Ticket?

Williams. No, he never lent me any Thing.

Coun. for the Pris. Do you know one Margaret Williams?

Williams. I lodged at her House several Nights, but my proper Place of lodging was at Mr. Fox's on the Back of the Haymarket.

Coun. for the Pris. Did you ever pawn your Chatham Ticket?

Williams. No, I never did; I might, but I don't remember I did; I am almost sure I never did; it is a 4*l.* Ticket, that is, 4*l.* a Year for my Life.

Coun. for the Pris. Upon your Oath, did you or did you not borrow Money on your Ticket of Mr. Noads?

Williams. Upon my Oath, I never did, nor never let it go out of my Possession to any body.

Coun. for the Pris. In your Way going along, you say your Conscience seized you, and you told the Prisoner you would not go a Step farther; was that the first Remorse you felt?

Williams. No, I had a Remorse of Conscience that Morning, when he desired me to go.

Coun. for the Pris. Did you believe he would be as good as his Word, when he said he'd knock your Brains out, and threatened you?

Williams. I did by his Countenance.

Coun. for the Pris. Was he with you all the Time you was proving the Will?

Williams. He was.

Coun. for the Pris. Did not you go into a particular Office to prove it by yourself?

Williams. No.

Coun. for the Pris. Were there any Threats made use of in Doctors-Commons?

Williams. No, there were not.

Coun. for the Pris. Was you under any Surprize when you was there?

Williams. I was under much Fear.

Coun. for the Pris. How many People were there in the Room?

Williams. There was but one Gentleman there.

Coun. for the Pris. Why did you not tell the Gentleman the Affair, that he might assist you?

Williams. I was shocked so, that I did not know what I had best to do.

Coun. for the Pris. Did you swear there that your Name was John Daunt?

Williams. I did, by the Prisoner's Directions and Desire.

Coun. for the Pris. Was any body with you and Murphy, when you were with Mr. Noads?

Williams. There was not a Soul with us.

Coun. for the Pris. Why did not you tell Mr. Noads that it was a Forgery?

Williams. I did not indeed, I did not know what to do, I was so confounded.

Coun. for the Pris. Who wrote the Word Extor, after the Name John Daunt, on the Receipt?

Williams. I wrote the Name John Daunt, but I don't know who wrote the Word Extor, either Murphy or Noads.

Coun. for the Crown. Which do you believe wrote it?

Williams. I believe Murphy did.

Coun. for the Pris. Whether your Remorse and Threatening to go back again was not because he demanded two Guineas of you?

Williams. No, it was not.

Coun. for the Pris. Did he demand two Guineas of you before, or after you said you'd go back?

Williams. I told him I'd go back, and return the Money, before he demanded the two Guineas, and after too.

Coun. for the Pris. How long did you stay in England after this Transaction?

Williams. But a very little Time, about a Fortnight; I was obliged to go down to Chatham to receive my Pension-Money that was due to me there.

Coun. for the Pris. In this great Remorse of Conscience that you had before and after you had received the Money, how came you to remain a Fortnight out of the Power of Murphy, and did not make a Discovery of it?

Williams. I was afraid to go about it myself, and I had no Opportunity to do it 'till Mr. Noads came to me in Gaol in Ireland; I thought the very Stones would fly in my Face about it, and he hunted me out of the Way as fast as he could.

Q. from his Lordship. Why did not you open the Affair before my Lord-Mayor?

Williams. I had not the Sense to do it; I was directed and led like a Child by him, as he pleased.

[The Receipt read to this Purport.]

Received the 20th of February 1750-1, of Thomas Noads, 37*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.* being so much he received of Mr. Cafamajor, per Probate of the Will of John Wilkinon, in full Ballance of his Account.

£. 37 12 6

John Daunt, Extor.

Coun. for the Pris. to Noads. Who added the Word Extor to the Receipt, after the Name John Daunt?

Noads. I did.

Pris. I desire Mr. Noads may be put out, while I ask Williams a Question or two.

[It was granted, and he went out.]

Q. from the Pris. How came Williams to be so perfect as to the Day of the Month, that he mentions of the Money being paid? Whether the Papers were not shewn to him by Noads since?

Williams. No, they never were since I came to England; I have not seen one of them 'till I saw them now; nor Mr. Noads never told me what Day of the Month the Money was paid.

Q. from

Q. from the Pris. Whether that Witness ever went to Mr. Noads with Mrs. Williams?

Williams. No, I never did.

Q. from the Pris. Whether he ever heard Margaret Williams say her Dependance was upon Mr. Noads?

Williams. I heard her say there was some Prize-Money due to her.

Q. from the Pris. Did you ever hear her mention one Jones?

Williams. I don't know that ever I heard her mention the Name of Jones.

Q. from the Pris. Did not he borrow Money on your Ticket? Where did you get the Money you paid her?

Williams. I pawned my Watch in St. Martin's-Lane.

Q. from the Pris. Where did he and I agree upon this?

Williams. At Mac Mullings's, a Bawdy-house.

Q. from the Pris. Did I pay for the Punch there?

Williams. No, the Prisoner took Care of that, he made me pay.

Q. from the Pris. Where did he get the Money?

Williams. The Prisoner found roguish Money for me.

Noads called in.

Coun. for the Pris. to Noads. Whether or no you shewed either the Power of Attorney or Will of Wilkinson to Williams since he came to England?

Noads. No, I have not.

Coun. for the Pris. Whether or no you told him the Month in which you paid the Money to him?

Noads. I shewed it him in Ireland.

Coun. for the Pris. Whether you have not since he came to England?

Noads. No, I have not.

Coun. for the Pris. Did ever Thomas Williams come to your House along with one Mrs. Williams?

Noads. No, never.

Q. from the Pris. Do you know Mrs. Williams?

Noads. She came to me two or three Times, and told me the Prisoner had robbed her of her Prize-Money.

Q. from the Pris. When did you see her last?

Noads. I believe I saw her in the Court-Yard this Morning.

Coun. for the Pris. Do you know where she is now?

Noads. No, I don't know that.

Q. from the Pris. Was not this Mrs. Williams at your House in Bell-Alley?

Noads. She never was to my Knowledge.

John Daunt. †

Sealed and delivered (being first duly stamped) in the Presence of Timothy Murphy.

London, re-executed the 11th Day of February,
1750, before me,

F. Cokayne, Mayor.

Anthony Devoyer sworn.

Anthony Devoyer. I am Clerk to Mr. Crespigny the Proctor; in February 1750-1, I don't remember the Persons, but there were two Men applied to me in the Absence of Mr. Crespigny, to prove a Will of John Wilkinson.

Q. What was the Executor's Name?

Devoyer. It was John Daunt; the Person pretending to be so, was one of the two that desired me to get a Probate of the Will. We always do inquire where the Testator died, and when, and we write that under the Jurat, that it should be passed to the Seal. The Description of the Testator was, that he was a Batchelor, and belonged to some Ship, I don't remember the Name; that he died on the Coast of Guiney, within the Time there limited.

[He is shewed the Will.]

Devoyer.

Devoyer. This is my Hand-writing on it, and this is the very Will brought to me at that Time; I attended the Person who called his Name John Daunt before the Surrogate, who subscribed his Name.

Q. Was he sworn?

Devoyer. He was, I think, in my Presence, as Executor to the Will, as is usual on such Occasions, and upon that the Probate was put under Seal afterwards, which is now upon it.

Cross-Examination.

Coun. for the Pris. You say, you can't swear to the Persons of the two Men that came?

Devoyer. No, Sir, I cannot.

Coun. for the Crown. Can you recollect what passed at the Compter, when you saw the Prisoner there?

Devoyer. I was at the Compter; the Prisoner there told me he remembered me; he there told me, while I was gone to get the Executor sworn, he was in Conversation with Mr. Crespigny.

Coun. for the Crown. Did he mention any Thing of his being the Person that came along with the pretended Executor?

Devoyer. Yes, Sir, he did.

Coun. for the Pris. When was this Conversation?

Devoyer. This was the Day that the first Bill was thrown out.

Coun. for the Pris. When you carried Daunt in to be sworn, did that other Person go with you into the Room?

Devoyer. I believe we left him in the Office.

Thomas Dyer sworn.

Dyer. I was Constable. Mr. Noads applied to me to take the Prisoner at Newington on the other Side the Water; I was at my House over-right the Black Prince, and Mr. Noads was at the Black Prince, and one Frith brought me the Warrant. On the Saturday Morning Murphy had been with me to Justice Hammond to assist me with a Prisoner; I promised to pay him; he came on the Monday Morning for his Money; I said, I'll pay you presently, but I have got a Warrant against you: He said, For what? and wanted to see the Warrant: I told him, I would not shew it him. The other Man (Frith) said, it was for Forgery, and asked him if he knew Mr. Noads; he said, yes. This was as we were going along: He desired to walk by my Side. Frith, at the same Time, went out to fetch Mr. Noads from the Black Prince; the Prisoner turned on his Heel and ran away, and kept calling out, A poor Debtor! A poor Debtor! I ran after him, and called, Stop Thief! knock him down!

Q. Was Mr. Noads in Sight when he turned to run away?

Dyer. I cannot say whether he was or not; but if he was at the Black Prince Door, the Prisoner might see him very well.

Q. How far did he run?

Dyer. He ran into a Brick-field; there we took him again, and we carried him to the Black Prince; then I went to get my Breakfast 'till they were ready to go; then we took him before 'Squire Clarke, and from thence to Alderman Chitty. I delivered him up to Mr. Ward on London-Bridge as we were going, and went with him before the Alderman as an Assistant; then the Prisoner was charged by Mr. Noads for forging a Seaman's Will; the Prisoner said, he knew nothing of it.

VOL. X.

Q. Do you recollect he said any Thing about Half a Guinea?

Dyer. Yes, he said he had Half a Guinea for signing a Letter of Attorney.

Cross-Examination.

Coun. for the Pris. Had he been told what he was taken for, before he ran away?

Dyer. He had.

Coun. for the Pris. He soon stopped, I suppose, did he not?

Dyer. He stopped when he could run no farther; there was one Fielder went to stop him, and he ran against him to knock him down, and turned him round.

Coun. for the Crown. When he stopped, did he surrender? or what did he do?

Dyer. No, he then took up a Brickbat, and swore he'd kill the first Man that opposed him.

John Frith sworn.

John Frith. I am Servant to the Master of Dulwich College; I was applied to by Mr. Noads to endeavour to discover and take up Timothy Murphy, the Prisoner at the Bar; and was by when the Constable, Mr. Dyer, took him at Newington.

Q. Was Mr. Noads by at the Time?

Frith. No, he was not; the Prisoner asked, what he was taken up for? Mr. Dyer would not tell him: He said, Pray, Gentlemen, what am I taken up for? I desire to know: Then said I, If you must know, it is for Forgery; said he, Upon what Account? I said, I can't tell, but I'll go to a Gentleman hard by, and he'll tell you. Then I went for Mr. Noads; and when I was at a little Distance, I heard the Constable call out, Stop Thief! then I turned again, but I was too far behind; he was taken and secured before I came up.

Q. How far was you from the Place where Mr. Noads was, when he ran away?

Frith. I was about 200 Yards from him.

Q. Where was Mr. Noads when you heard the Cry, Stop Thief!

Frith. He was at the Black Prince.

Q. Was he within or out of the House?

Frith. I can't tell which.

Q. Did he attempt to break away 'till you had informed him it was for a Forgery?

Frith. No, he did not.

Mr. Woodman sworn.

Woodman. I am Keeper of the Poultry-Compter.

[He is shewed a Commitment.]

Woodman. I remember this being brought to me with the Prisoner on the 27th of July last, the Day it bears Date, to the Poultry-Compter.

Q. What is he charged with in that Commitment?

Woodman. He is charged before Alderman Chitty, by the Oath of Thomas Noads, upon a violent Suspicion of being concerned with one John Daunt, not yet taken, in publishing and uttering a false, forged, and counterfeit Will. It is signed, Thomas Chitty.

Mr. Hume Campbell.

My Lord, In the general Course of Business Witnesses are not produced to support the Character of a Prosecutor, unless his Character is impeached either by Evidence or the Nature of the Transaction itself; in the present Instance the Gentlemen have taken an Objection to Mr. Noads's Competency as a Witness; it has been, with great Justice, over-ruled in that Respect, but left to operate on his Character with the Jury: The Indictment against him has been read in Evidence: It is an Indictment against him, together with the other Witness to the Fact, and upon the Back of it stand Mr. Goddard and two or three more. This being admitted Evidence against his Character, we are proper to produce Evidence in Support of Mr. Noads's Character, and I hope your Lordship will be of Opinion we are regular in so doing.

Lord Chief Baron. You have a Right to it under the Circumstances of this Case.

To the Character of Thomas Noads.

Nicholas Magens, Esq; sworn.

Mr. Magens. I have known Thomas Noads ever since he came to London, which is about seven or eight Years; it was about the Beginning of the breaking-out of the Spanish War.

Q. What is his general Character?

Magens. I have always known him for a very diligent, sober, promising young Man; I have all the Reason in the World to believe him so, and don't doubt his Integrity in the least.

Cross-examined.

Coun. for the Pris. Do you think he would not say what is false to save his own Life?

Magens. I can't answer to that.

James Laroche, Esq; sworn.

Mr. Laroche. This is the second Time I have come from Bristol to London to speak to Mr. Noads's Character: I have known him eight Years, I knew him at Bristol, where he was under the Direction of a Gentleman there, (that Gentleman is so infirm he can't come up.) Mr. Noads behaved so well there, that the Gentleman recommended him to my Brother-in-Law, Mr. Henry Casamaijor, to transact his great Affairs, being Agent for very rich Prizes; he behaved diligently through the whole Transaction. I have heard many speak well of him in Bristol, and never heard any Thing reflecting on his Character in my Life. I don't think he'd be guilty of a Forgery.

John Ellis, Esq; sworn.

Mr. Ellis. I have known Mr. Noads these six Years; I believe him to be as honest a Man as any Man whatsoever; I don't think he'd do a scandalous Thing; I don't think he is capable, for any lucrative Views whatsoever, to be guilty of a Forgery.

Mr. Alderman Ironside sworn.

Mr. Alderman Ironside. I have known Mr. Noads about seven or eight Years; he has been concerned in an Affair where I am interested, in which he has always acted with great Diligence and Prudence; I have trusted him with large Sums of Money; it has been in his Power to have injured us, but I never had any Occasion or Room to doubt his Honesty; I don't believe he'd be guilty of a Forgery on any Consideration.

Henry Casamaijor, Esq; sworn.

Mr. Casamaijor. I have known Mr. Noads I believe ten Years.

Q. What is his general Character?

Mr. Casamaijor. As good as any Man's in Being, both for Honesty and Industry; I have had great Experience of him, he was with me from a Child: I, from my good Opinion of him, recommended him to my Brother; he might have wronged me of large Sums of Money; I never found a Disposition in him either to wrong me or any body else.

Mr. Nares. I desire the first Part of the Will may be read.

[It is read.]

“ In the Name of God, Amen. I John Wilkinson, late of the Princess Amelia Privateer.”

Coun. for the Pris. Now read in the Probate.

[It is read.]

“ The last Will and Testament of John Wilkinson, of his Majesty's Ship the Princess Amelia.”

Coun. for the Pris. There is a Difference between his Majesty's Ship and a Privateer.

Lord Chief Baron. The Probate being a wrong Description does not alter the Case; suppose there had been no Probate at all, the Prisoner is indicted for forging the Will.

The Prisoner being called upon to make his Defence, said only, that they had sworn as they thought proper.

Whereupon the Lord Chief Baron summed up the Evidence to the Jury, who, in less than a Minute, gave in their Verdict, Guilty, Death.

Immediately after this Trial, Mr. Thomas Noads and Mr. Robert Carter were tried for this Forgery; but were honourably acquitted, and Copies of their Indictments granted them by the Court.

The Confession of Timothy Murphy.

I Was taken up in the Month of July by the Orders of Thomas Noads, Clerk to the Managers of the Royal-Family Privateers, for forging the Will of John Wilkinson, late belonging to the Princess Amelia Privateer, being one of the Ships that composed the said Royal-Family, and was committed to the Poultry-Compter for the said Offence; and on that Day, and the Day after, one Patrick Flanigan came to me, and asked what Motive induced me to sign a general Release for my Share of my Prize-Money, to the said Managers: I made Answer, that Mr. Belchier, and the rest of the Gentlemen, had long before that Time advanced me twenty Pounds, when I was in want of Money, and that they had behaved to me with the greatest Honour. The said Flanigan further asked me, how came I to give a Receipt for 54 l. and upwards, and insinuated so much was not due to me, and desired me not to conceal it from him, for that he was acquainted with the whole Affair: And said, if I had a Million of Lives, unless I would do one Thing, I was a lost Man. I then went on my Knees, and begged for Heaven's Sake he would let me know what that was. He made Answer, Not yet; and said, I know you have been a Tool to Mr. Noads a long Time, and asked me, who came to me from him or any of the said Managers. I told him, I had not seen or heard from any of them. He then said, Keep your own Mind from them: I commiserate your present Situation, I will call at another Time. And gave me 18 d. In a few Days after, he came again, and asked me, whether the said Noads, or any of the said Gentlemen, men, had been with me. I answered, they had not. He then gave me Half a Crown, and said some of them would send to me with Directions to write to Mr. Belchier, and advised me not to answer that I would, and said, Do not write at your Peril: And promised to come next Night; which he accordingly did, and advised me to get some Person in Prison to write a Letter to Mr. Belchier, but not to have any Thing mentioned in relation to the said Will (I so unfortunately forged of the said John Wilkinson.) He went away, and promised to come again. He came again the same Night; when I shewed him the Letter I caused to be wrote, which he desired I would send to Mr. Belchier; and after many Assurances of Friendship, he went away; and said he would come the next Night. The Day after, Mr. Robinson, Clerk to Mr. Belchier, came and shewed me the Letter I sent, and asked me, if it was not my Hand-writing; I told him, it was not. He desired me to write my Mind freely to Mr. Belchier, in my own Hand-writing; which, after he went away, I accordingly wrote, with a full Resolution to send to Mr. Belchier, in order to open the whole Affair, and rely on his Mercy. He the said Flanigan called soon after, and told me Mr. Robinson had been with me, and asked what he said: I told him, that he brought back the Letter he directed me to send, and asked me, if it was my Hand-writing; I told him it was not; and that he had directed me to write in my own Hand, and that I had wrote such, but had not sent it. He then replied, Did not I tell you that was a dead Set for you? That a Letter under your own Hand is what will cast you in Court? And told me, that he had been with Mr. Belchier, and the rest of the Gentlemen the said Managers, and that he was in great Friendship with them, and knew all their Secrets; and said, I was a dead Man if I sent such Letter, or acted contrary to his Advice. Then I said, The Lord have Mercy upon my Soul, I fear my Life is gone at any Rate. Replied Flanigan, If they can, you Fool, do you know how far it lies on them to do so? I said, I did not; neither did I know what Service my Life could be to them: And said, it was the general Character of Mr. Belchier, that he was merciful, and that the Gentlemen Prisoners in the Compter had so assured me. Flanigan then replied, What a great Fool you are! Take special Care of them; as sure as Death, they are set upon to get Words out of your own Mouth; and advised me to keep my Room, and keep my Secrets, otherwise it would not be in his Power to have me saved. I then went down on my Knees, and prayed to the Almighty to have Mercy on my Soul, and that he (Flanigan) would assist me: He desired me to get up, and assured me that I should be saved, if I took his Advice, and that he had been that Day about me; and told me, I need not fear, for there was one of the Persons was a Duke of very great Interest; and told me, he had caused a Letter to be presented to the Duke, which he received, and declared he would stick to that Cause, and that he would acquaint his Majesty thereof, and that I should have his Interest: I desired him to explain himself, what he meant by that Cause. He said he would not then tell me, but again advised me to keep my Room, and avoid speaking to any Persons, and gave me one Shilling, and went away: Came again, and told me he had been at Doxors-Commons, and saw the forged Will, and that he knew the Name Dinish Collins, subscribed as a Witness to the said Will, to be the Hand-writing of said Noads, and said it was in vain for me to deny it; and insisted it was so, and that he would swear it to be so, and that it must be so, and said, you are now under no Restraint, and might and should be admitted a King's Evidence, provided I would impeach the said Noads; and said, it was in vain for me to deny the Forgery, saying, I can and will prove the Body of the said Will to be all of your Hand-writing, when subpoena'd on the Trial; but said, if you impeach Noads; and are admitted an Evidence, you'll make him squeak; and assured me that nothing else could save my Life: And assured me afterwards, that all the Managers would be prosecuted by the King and Government; but did not explain for what; and said, if I did not hang, they must; and if it cost them ten thousand Pounds, they would cast me; and desired me to give him one of the Buttons out of my Sleeve, and said, The Man to whom this is to be given, is a Person whose Interest will save your Life; repeating at the same Time, that the Dependance of 78,000 l. was on the said Will. I then said, The Lord have Mercy on me, I am a lost Man. He then said, the Managers want you to submit to be cast; and they will promise to save you, (they will tell you so) I know it to be what they are upon, but for your Life don't send them a Scroll from under your Hand; if you do, it will be impossible to save you; and said, he knew all their Secrets, and that they could do nothing without his Knowledge, and gave me Half a Crown, and went away. He came next Morning, and told me that one Robert Carter's Hand-writing was procured, and compared with the Names to the said Will, and that it appeared he the said Carter was also concerned in said Forgery; and said, there was a Decree granted against the Managers for all the Money; and unless I was hanged, they never could get over the Decree: Now, says Flanigan, if you flinch, I shall be subpoena'd to prove the Will to be your own Hand-writing, and said he would not perjure himself for any Man; and then insinuated my Life was in his Hands. He then went away, and came the next Day, and produced me a Letter from Commodore Walker, giving me a strict Charge to stand on my Defence, assuring me his Interest with the Duke of Argyll would save my Life; and Flanigan then gave me a strict Charge to stick to whatever should be prescribed to me, and that he would let me know from Time to Time all the said Managers Secrets. He then swore me on a Book not to make Use of his Name, or to discover what Conversation had or should pass between him and the Person who should produce to him the said Sleeve-button, and that I should not call him by any other Name than Mr. Friend, and told me he had also sworn that Person, meaning Goddard, not to mention his Name before me. That on the same Day, after Flanigan went away, Mr. James Goddard came to me, and introduced himself, and called for a Pint of Wine, and asked me how I did; and bid me have a good Heart, and then presented the said Sleeve-button, and told me he was a Man of as good a Fortune and as great Interest as any of the Managers were; and said he thought it was a lucky Thing for me that he had purchased the Interest of the said Flanigan, whom he named by the Name of Mr. Friend; and said such Purchase cost him fifty Pounds, in order to get at all the Secrets of the said Managers; and told me the said Friend was very great with the said Noads, and all of them, and without his Interest, my Life could not be saved. He said, he was Master of all that passed between me and Friend, and said that Friend could and would prove the Forgery against Carter and Noads, as well as I, and that I might freely speak to him; and said, that Friend was to be subpoena'd as an indifferent Person against Noads, and that he would swear that Noads wrote the said Name Dinib Collins, and that Friend had seen the said Will in the Commons, and could prove the Body to be my Hand-writing; and expressed himself much in the same Manner as Friend had repeated, before he told me that Friend acted as Attorney for Commodore Walker: He gave me a Crown, and said he would call again. He came the next Day, and expressed himself to the Purport aforesaid, and said he would call the Day after; and charged me, at my Peril, not to write to the said Mr. Belchier: Then went away, and neglected coming according to Promise, which made me very uneasy in Mind, and induced me to write a Letter to the said Friend, purporting, I thought it was a Scheme laid between him and Goddard to take away my Life; and that I would write to Mr. Belchier. Soon after, Goddard came to me, and told me of the said Letter, and said it frightened him and Friend, and desired I would not write in that Manner any more, assuring me I need not be afraid, and requested I would not communicate to any body what passed; telling me I was safe. He then took a Paper out of his Pocket, which he read to me, purporting what I was to swear to; and told me I had no Business to deny it, for Friend knew it to be true, and that he would also prove it; and said, the same Seal which was to the Will Friend assured him was the said Noads's. He then took another Paper out of his Pocket, and got me to sign it, purporting to be admitted an Evidence, and addressed to Alderman Chitty: He wrote something more to the other Paper he brought, and said my Irons should be knocked off, and assured me it was by Mr. Belchier's Directions that I was ironed, that I might easily judge by that what they were upon; assuring me of his Friendship, and went away. The next Morning he came, and told me I should be sent for to Sir Joseph Hankey's, and that my Irons should be taken off, which accordingly were. He then read over the said Paper he had so first produced as aforesaid, and desired me to recollect the Contents, when examined; and to stick to it, otherwise my Life would be lost. I was carried to Sir Joseph Hankey's, and in the Presence of Alderman Chitty, Goddard appeared, and Mr. Lock; Goddard took out the said Paper, and asked me several Questions, as did also the Justice, and sent me back: Goddard came to me, and had me in private, and told me I should be sent for again to be examined the next Day, and then produced the said Papers, and made some Amendments, and desired me to stick to it. The next Day I was carried to Sir Joseph's, Alderman Chitty was there; Goddard, Lock, and the said John Wilkinson, attended; and Wilkinson shewed me a Subpœna he was served with by Noads, to prosecute me at the Old-Bailey; and Goddard there asked me several Questions, as did also the Justice; and the Answers I gave were calculated by the false Counsel, Instructions, and Advice, the said Goddard and Friend gave me, without doing which, they assured me, my Life could not be saved.

I was sent back. Goddard frequently came to me, and advanced me Money from Time to Time; and one Morning he told me he had thought of a Thing which would prevent the Bill being found against me, which he afterwards told me was, that the forged Will was proved at the Commons, as the Will of John Wilkinson, who belonged to his Majesty's Ship the Princess Amelia. The Day the Bill was thrown out by the Grand Jury, that was preferred against me, soon after Goddard came to me, and told me, that Alderman Chitty made it appear to the Grand Jury, I was admitted an Evidence, and that the Bill was thrown out; and told me, I should be sent for the next Day to Guildhall, to swear to a Paper that was drawn up, and prepared according to Form in Law, and said, he would shew it me at Guildhall. The next Morning I was sent for to Guildhall, where Goddard attended before the Sitting Alderman came, and called me into a Closet there, and took out a Paper, and gave me to read, and said, he had got it drawn up, and that it was what I must swear to, in order to save my Life; and said, I must stick to that Paper, or my Life would be lost. He went out of the Room, and Mr. Lock came in, and said, Mr. Murphy, was you not afraid before the Bill was thrown out? I replied, I was. He then said, You are a free Man, and desired me to consider what I was about. I had not Time to converse with Mr. Lock, to know how I was free, before Mr. Goddard came in, and interrupted us; and Lock and Goddard went out, and Goddard soon returned, and desired me not to speak to Mr. Lock, or to the Alderman, but to swear to that Paper; and said, he would give Mr. Lock Half a Guinea for his Trouble. I was soon after brought into the Room where Alderman Chitty was, and some other Person, and was sworn to the said Writing, which I never saw, 'till produced in the said Closet, and declared such Writing was calculated by the said Goddard. I was sent back. Goddard came to me, and produced a Paper ready drawn, which he desired me to copy in my own Hand, which was of his Hand-writing, and directed me to give it to the Judge or Recorder at the Old-Bailey, the next Day, which he said would clear up all to Satisfaction. I copied the same, and the Day after delivered it at the Old-Bailey to the Recorder, and was sent back to the Compter. Goddard came there to me, and asked me what passed: I told him I had delivered the Paper as he directed. That Goddard and Mr. Woodman had a Pint of Wine together, and had some Conversation in respect of having me detained in the Compter, and it was agreed a friendly Action to be laid, which Goddard assured me was in order to preserve my Life, assuring me, if I went abroad, I should certainly be knocked on the Head, poisoned, or a Robbery sworn against me, by the Contrivance of the said Managers, to prevent my Evidence. Goddard put me on the Master-Side, for which he paid Woodman. I grew very uneasy at not being at my Liberty. As the Bill was thrown out, and I admitted, as Goddard told me, a King's Evidence, being in a bad State of Health, of the Gaol-Sickness, of which many died, I requested Goddard, when he came again, to have me bailed out, and sent into the Country, to the same Place where he kept the said Mr. Wilkinson; at which Goddard seemed uneasy, and declared he knew of no Place in England so safe to preserve my Life as the Place where I was, and repeated as aforesaid, that if I went abroad before I was examined as a Witness, I should certainly lose my Life; and promised to get me on the Debtors Side, with the Assistance of Mr. Woodman, provided I could get a Friend that could be confided in to keep Things secret, who would bring a friendly Action against me, and promised he would allow me a Shilling a Day, and pay for my Lodging, till discharged; at which I was more reconciled to stay than I was before, apprehending what Goddard had so represented was intended in order to preserve my Life. I then told him, that I believed Timothy Mabony, who was my Relation, and whom Goddard knew, and was in the Secret, would be the only proper Person to bring such Action. Then Goddard took a Direction where the said Mabony lived, and told me, he would go to him. The said Mabony came to me in a Day or two after, and told me, Mr. Goddard had been with him, and addressed himself to him, by telling him, he had something to say to him to save my Life, and wanted him to go and swear a Debt against me, in order to keep me on an Action in the Compter: And that he assured him, that though the Bill was thrown out against me, yet if I went abroad, I should be knocked on the Head, poisoned, or a Robbery sworn against me, and that my Life would certainly be taken away, by the Party who were against me. The said Mabony told me he said to the said Goddard, he would not take such an Oath on any Account: And that Goddard asked him, Would he not do such a Thing as to take an Oath to save my Life, being my Relation? and said, he told the said Goddard, he would not take a false Oath for the World. And that Goddard, at length, by many fair Speeches, importuned him to go to take out such Action, and had directed him to his Brother's House in St. Christopher's Church-yard, for 15s. on that Account, and promised to leave Directions with his Brother to give the Money, and desired Mabony, when he got the Money, to come to me, in order to take out such Action. The said Mabony also told me, he had received the 15s. which he offered to give me, and said, he would not take out any such Action, as I was not indebted to him in any Sum that amounted to an Arrest: Then I pressed and intreated the said Mabony to bring such Action, as it was intended to save my Life, and told him I would give him a promissory Note for as much as he was to take the Action for, and he would be safe in so doing, which he then complied with; and I drew a Note for 5 or 6l. which I antedated, payable to him or Order; and it being then too late to take out any Action, in a Night or two after Mabony came again to me, and I directed him to go to the Office and lodge such Action, which he did; and he afterwards gave him 15s. — That the said Mr. Friend, at different Times, came to me, and assured me he would attend at the Trial, and swear that Noads wrote the said

Name Dimish Collins; and he also assured me that if I went abroad before the Trial was over, I should be murdered or poisoned, or have a Robbery sworn against me, by the Contrivance of the said Managers. That Goddard frequently came to me, and kept me full of Spirits, assuring me I should be an Evidence against Noads and Carter; and if Thomas Williams, who was the supposed Executor of the said Wilkinson, and went by the Name of John Daunt, should not be produced on my Trial, the said Mr. Friend was to swear falsely against the said Noads. I do declare, that the said Mr. Noads and Robert Carter were innocent of what I swore against them, relating to any Knowledge they had in any Forgery; and that I, and the said John Williams, otherwise Daunt, were the only Persons concerned in forging and publishing the said Will of the said John Wilkinson. And I do also declare, that I never had any Intention whatsoever to charge the said Mr. Noads, or the said Carter, with the said Forgery, until I was spirited and prompted up in the Manner aforesaid, by the Art, Management, and Contrivance of the said Goddard and Flanigan. And I do also solemnly declare, that the said James Goddard has often, since my Conviction, sent several Messages to me, to desire I would not reveal any of the secret Transactions that passed between us as aforesaid, and sent, in his own Hand-writing, a false Paper to be published, which he requested I would sign, but refused so to do. I had several Letters and Papers of Consequence, which, being advised and requested, I burnt, lest I should be searched, which would have given a very full and satisfactory Discovery in this Affair. That Word was sent to me last Night by Goddard, that if I kept it secret, in case my Life could not be saved, I should be decently buried, provided I would send back to him signed the false Confession, which he sent me in his own Hand-writing, as also another Writing that would be sent me. Mr. Vicors, Chaplain to the Spanish Ambassador, being my Father, this Day told me, that he dined with the same James Goddard Yesterday, and that he had desired him to bring back to him from me the said Confession, and proposed to send by him another Writing to be signed by me, which the said Mr. Vicors told me he informed the said Mr. Goddard he would not be any wise concerned therein, but he said he would charge me to make an open Confession of the Truth before Life parted. And I declare the said Mr. Vicors advised me so to do; and, as a dying Man, being desirous to discharge my Conscience, have made this Declaration, which is nothing but the Truth. Given under my Hand, from my Cell in Newgate, the 27th of January, 1753.

XLIX. Proceedings against Dr. Archibald Cameron, at the King's Bench, May 17, 1753; on the Bill of Attainder passed against him 19 Geo. II. for being in the Rebellion 1745.

“ THIS Dr. Cameron * was younger Brother
 “ to Donald Cameron of Lochiel, and Son
 “ of Evan Cameron, who was in the Rebellion in “ 1715, and was one of the Seven that came “ from France with the young Pretender, and who,
 “ on their landing in July 1745, went to the House
 “ of Donald Macdonald of Kenloch-Moidart, and
 “ from thence Orders were issued for the Clans
 “ to join the young Pretender: On which Donald “ Cameron, after much Intreaty, waited on him,
 “ and expressed his Surprize to see him so weakly “ attended, and refused to raise his Clan, ’till the “ young Pretender could produce in Writing the “ French King’s Resolution to assist him with a “ proper Number of Forces, &c. and being “ assured that he would, he summoned his Clan,
 “ and set up his Standard with this Motto,
 “ TANDEM TRIUMPHANS, At length Triumphant;
 “ though, at the same Time, he told the young “ Pretender, that his Scheme was so ill concerted,
 “ that he feared no Success would happen from
 “ it, and that the Issue of it would be the Ruin
 “ of his Friends; as in the End it proved.

“ Dr. Cameron was in himself of a quiet and “ peaceable Temper; and, had he not been “ Brother to Lochiel, it is very probable he would “ never have gone into the Rebellion.

“ His Father gave him the best Education “ Scotland could afford, designing him for the “ Bar; which Profession he did not like, and “ applied himself to the Study of Physic and “ Anatomy, and put himself under the Direction “ of Dr. Alexander Monro, of the University of “ Edinburgh, a Gentleman of established Repu“ tation; and when he had acquired a competent “ Skill in Anatomy, he applied himself to Physic,
 “ and was instructed therein by Dr. Sinclair, a “ Gentleman very eminent in the Faculty; after “ which he travelled abroad, and studied in those “ Branches at Paris; and after staying some Time
 “ there, returned to Lochaber, and married a “ young Lady of the Name of Campbell, by whom “ he left seven Children.

“ This Dr. Cameron might have made a con“ siderable Figure in his Profession, had he settled
 “ at London or Edinburgh; but chose his Residence “ near his Brother’s, among the Highlands, where “ he took great Pains to cultivate the Minds and “ Manners of the Highlanders, who by his “ Means were greatly improved. He was a Man
 “ of no Ambition, but of an easy, quiet Temper.
 “ His chief Business in the Rebel Army was to “ attend his Brother, and to assist him with his “ Skill, if any Accident should befall him in “ Battle; and he did attend not only several of the “ wounded Rebels, but likewise several of the “ King’s Troops that fell wounded into the “ Hands of the Rebels. But the Battle of Culloden “ put a final End to the Rebellion, and all the “ Pretender’s Hopes, and ruined vast Numbers of “ Families, that put their Trust in French Faith:

 “ Lochiel was wounded in the Ankle in the Battle,
 “ and carried off by his Clan, and attended daily
 “ by the Doctor his Brother, wandering about
 “ for some Time after the Battle; ’till at last
 “ the young Pretender, Lochiel, his Brother the “ Doctor, and some other of his Followers, “ embarked on board a Vessel in the Harbour of “ Flota in the Isle of South-Ulst, and landed at “ Boulogne in France about the Middle of September
 “ 1746, to their great Joy, having suffered “ innumerable Hardships.

“ Lochiel had immediately a Regiment given “ him by the King in the French Army, and the “ Doctor was made Physician to it; but on the “ Death of his Brother, in September 1748, he “ was appointed Physician to Lord Ogilvie’s “ Regiment, then quartered at Lisle in Flanders.

“ About the Year 1749, a Collection was “ made among the Jacobites for their Friends “ abroad; and, it was said, Dr. Cameron came “ over, and received a Part of it: After this,
 “ another Collection was made for these unhappy “ People; and the Doctor represented, that his “ Pay would not keep him and his Family: But,
 “ after many Sollicitations, receiving no satis“ factory Answer, he came over himself to Scot“ land, and was there discovered, and was seized
 “ by a Party of Lord George Beauclerk’s Regiment, “ who were sent from the Fort of Inversnaid in “ search of him, and brought Prisoner to Edinburgh
 “ March the 26th, 1753; and being brought be“ fore the Lord Justice Clerk, who told him, You
 “ are the only Man in your Circumstances, that ever
 “ I had Occasion to speak to since I have been engaged
 “ in Business, whose Answers to me could be of no “ Prejudice to him; because you are to be carried to “ London, and there are Witnesses ready to appear “ against you at the Court of King’s Bench, to prove “ that you are the identical Dr. Cameron mentioned
 “ in the Bill of Attainder: This will condemn you,
 “ and you are to have no other Trial.—This struck “ him; and, after some Pause, he replied, That he “ did not come over with any political Design, but only
 “ to transact some Affairs relating to Lochiel’s Estate.

“ Upon his Arrival at London, he was examined
 “ by the Council at the Cockpit, and committed “ Prisoner to the Tower.”

Doct^r CAMERON'S Case.*

PLEAS before our Lord the King at Westminster of Easter Term, in the 26th Year of the Reign, &c.

Amongst the Pleas of the King Roll.

ENGLAND. Our present Sovereign Lord the King hath transmitted to his beloved and faithful Sir William Lee, and others his Fellows Justices, &c. [as in the Case of Mr. Murray of Broughton, mutatis mutandis, Vol. ix.]

Dr. Archibald Cameron, who was one of the Persons attainted by the Act of the 19th of the King, was, on the 17th of May 1753, brought to the Bar by Habeas Corpus directed to the Lieutenant of the Tower; and being arraigned by the Secondary on the Crown Side, the Writ of Mittimus with the Certiorari and Return were read to him by the Secondary. The Attorney-General then prayed that Execution might be awarded; and the Secondary demanded of the Prisoner, what he had to say why Execution should not be done upon him.

The Prisoner, who, during the whole Time he stood at the Bar, behaved with great Propriety, not insensible of his Condition nor greatly disconcerted, said, That he was led to take a Part in the Rebellion against his own Judgment and Inclination, by some upon whom his All depended: That he still flattered himself he should appear not unworthy of his Majesty's Mercy; and mentioned some Facts which he hoped might intitle him to it. He said, he did not offer these Things as a Defence he relied on in point of Law, but as Facts which he hoped might have some Weight in another Place, for he was determined to throw himself entirely on his Majesty's Mercy.

Whereupon Proclamation being made for Silence, the Chief Justice, after a short Exhortation to the Prisoner, pronounced the usual Judgment in Case of High Treason, as an Award of Execution grounded on the Act of Attainder. And a Rule was made for his Execution on the 7th of June, and Writs for that Purpose to the Lieutenant of the Tower and the Sheriff of Middlesex were ordered, as in the Case of Mr. Ratcliffe, Vol. ix.

The Court in pronouncing Judgment in this Case followed the Precedents in the Cases of Humphry Stafford, (1 H. 7. 23, 25.) and of Barkstead, Okey, and Corbet, (1 Sid. 72. 1 Lev. 61. State Trials, Vol. viii. p. 363.) The Cases of Holloway and Sir Thomas Armstrong in Charles the Second's Time, (State Trials, Vol. iii. Edit. 1741. p. 944, 984.) and of Lord Griffin † in the late Queen's Time, were mentioned at a Conference among the Judges of the King's Bench on this Occasion; but little Regard was paid to them.

For in Holloway's, which was the leading Case, the Opinion of the Court seemeth to have been given hastily and against the Sense of the Bar. And in Lord Griffin's Case, Chief Justice Holt, who was at that Time absent, was of a contrary Opinion, and, as I have heard, constantly persisted in it; and I do not see how an Attainder by Outlawry at Common Law, is, in this respect, distinguishable from the Case of an Attainder by Act of Parliament, which, in the present Case, is but in Nature of a Parliamentary Outlawry.

Indeed in Cases within the Act of the 19th of the King, c. 34. where the Proceeding is upon a Suggestion on the Roll that the Prisoner did not surrender to Justice pursuant to that Act, the constant Course hath been to award Execution, without pronouncing Sentence of Death as in Cases of Felony: But that Practice is grounded on the Words of the Act; "And it shall be lawful for the Court to award Execution against such Offender, in such Manner as if he had been convicted and ATTAINTED in the said Court."

The Record in the Case of Barkstead, &c. was searched, and the Judges had Copies of it. It is of Easter Term in the Fourteenth of King Charles the Second; it agreeth, mutatis mutandis, with the Record in Mr. Murray's Case, Vol. ix. and after setting forth the Act of Parliament by which the Prisoners stood attainted, it proceedeth, *Et modo scilicet die Mercurii prox' post Quinden' Pasch' isto eodem Termino coram Domino Rege apud West' veniunt prædicti Johannes Barkstead, Johannes Okey, & Milo Corbet, per Johannem Robinson Mil. & Bar. † The Case of Lord GRIFFIN, from a MS. Report of the late Lord Chief Baron Dod. Pasch. 7 Annæ 1708.

Lord Griffin, who had been outlawed for High Treason, was this Term brought to the King's Bench; and the whole Record of the Indictment and Outlawry was read to him, and he was demanded, if he had aught to say why Execution should not be done; and he not making any material Objection, the Court ordered Execution to be done. But note, Sir James Mountagu, Solicitor-General, (there being then no Attorney-General) prayed that Judgment as in Case of High Treason might be pronounced; or that at least it might be entered on the Roll in the Award of Execution: And said, this was the Opinion of Holt, Chief Justice, then at Bath præter Ægritudinem. But Powell and the Court held, that the Award of Execution should be general; for the Judgment in the Outlawry implieth all the Particulars, and no second Judgment ought to be given. And so they said it was held in the Cases of Holloway and Sir Thomas Armstrong. Mes per auters dubitatur, quia le Livre del 1 H. 7. fo. 24. est contra; and it was said that in the Case of Barkstead, Okey, and Corbet, the Court followed the Precedent of that Book.

prædicti ad hoc impannellati exacti veniunt, qui ad Veritatem de præmissis dicendi electi tria & jurati dicunt super sacramentum suum, quod prædicti Johannes Barkstead, Johannes Okey, & Milo Corbet, sunt eadem Personæ, & quilibet eorum est eadem Persona in prædicti Actu Parlamenti nominati qui de altâ Proditione prædicti in Actu Parlamenti prædicti Convicti & Attinere existunt, prout prædicti Galfridus Palmer Mil. & Bar. Attornatus Domini Regis nunc Generalis pro dicto Domino Rege superius allegavit &c. & Ulterius quæsit est de præfatis Johanne Barkstead, Johanne Okey, & Milone Corbet, sepe ratim, si quid ulterius pro se habeant vel dicere velint necne, qui Nihil dicunt &c. Ideo considerat est quod prædicti Johannes Barkstead, Johannes Okey, & Milo Corbet, ducantur, & quilibet eorum ducatur usque Turrim London, & deinde per medium Civitatis London directe usque ad Furcas de Tyburn Trabantur, & quilibet eorum Trabatur, & super Furcas illas ibidem Suspendantur & quilibet eorum Suspendatur, & Viventes ad Terram prosternantur, & quilibet eorum prosternatur, & Interiora sua extra Ventres suos & eorum cujuslibet capiantur, ipsisque Viventibus comburantur, & Capita eorum & eorum cujuslibet amputentur, & Corpora eorum & eorum cujuslibet in quatuor Partes dividantur, & quod Capita & Quarteria illa ponantur ubi Dominus Rex ea assignare voluerit &c.

“ On Dr. Cameron’s receiving Sentence, he made a genteel Bow, and only desired he might have Leave to send for his Wife, who, with seven Children, entirely dependent on him for Support, were at Lisse in Flanders; which was granted. He said, that in 1746 he came from France to surrender himself, agreeable to the Proclamation, but was prevented by an Accident happening in his Family: He behaved with great Resolution and Decency before the Court. *

“ During the Interval between the Sentence and his Execution, his Wife used all possible Means to obtain a Pardon, by delivering a Petition to his Majesty, another to her Royal “ Highness the Princess of Wales, and to several of the Nobility; but without Effect: For on Thursday June 7th, about Ten o’Clock in the Forenoon, he was brought out of the Tower; guarded by a Party of the Horse-Guards, and delivered to the Sheriffs of London and Middlesex. As soon as he was out of the Tower Gate, he was put into the Hurdle, to which he was fastened by the Executioner. In this Manner he was drawn through the City, attended by Sir Richard Glyn, one of the Sheriffs, and under the Care of the Sheriff’s Officers and Constables, to the Place of Execution. Sir Charles Asgill, the other Sheriff, left the Prisoner at the Tower.

“ The Doctor being arrived at the Place of Execution, and helped into the Cart, desired to speak to the Sheriff, who came to him: The Doctor intreated the Favour of him, that he would give Orders to let his Body hang ’till he was quite dead, before the Executioner began his further Operation, and the Sheriff promised to oblige him in his Request; and accordingly the Body hung three Quarters of an Hour before cut down, when no Remains of Life was in him.

“ While in the Cart, a Gentleman in a lay Habit came and prayed with him, and then left him to his own private Devotions; by which it was imagined the Doctor was a Roman Catholic, and the Gentleman who prayed with him a Priest. He died with great Decency and Resolution, without any visible Alteration in his Countenance or Behaviour, but perfectly resigned to the Will of Heaven. He left no Paper behind him. After his Body was taken from the Gallows, the Executioner cut off his Head, and took out his Bowels, but did not quarter the Body. His Body and Head were put into a Coffin, with this Inscription on the Lid of it, Dr. Archibald Cameron suffered the 7th of June, 1753, aged 46.”

And that she the said Elizabeth Canning, being so sworn, did then and there, upon the said last-mentioned Trial, falsely, willingly, and corruptly, by her own proper Act and Consent, say, depose, swear, and give in Evidence to the Jurors of the said Jury, according to the Purport and Effect following, (that is to say) I (again meaning herself the said Elizabeth Canning) got out (meaning out of the said Room) about Four o'Clock in the Afternoon, on a Monday, (meaning Monday the 29th Day of the said Month of January,) after I (again meaning herself the said Elizabeth Canning) had been confined there (meaning in the said Room) four Weeks, all but a few Hours. And that she the said Elizabeth Canning, being so sworn, did then and there, upon the said last-mentioned Trial, falsely, willingly, and corruptly, by her own proper Act and Consent, say, depose, swear, and give in Evidence to the Jurors of the said Jury, according to the Purport and Effect following, (that is to say) I (again meaning herself the said Elizabeth Canning) took an old Sort of a Bed-gown and a Handkerchief, that were in the Hay-loft, (meaning the said Room,) and lay in a Grate in the Chimney, (meaning the Chimney of the said Room.) Whereas, in Truth and in Fact, she the said Elizabeth Canning was not taken by two Men to the said House of the said Susannah Wells; about Four o'Clock in the Morning of the said 2d Day of January, or at any other Time of that Day; and whereas, in Truth and in Fact, she the said Elizabeth Canning did not, at any Time on the said 2d Day of January, see the said Mary Squires in the said House; and whereas, in Truth and in Fact, the said Mary Squires, on the said 2d Day of January, was at Abbotsbury in the County of Dorset, and was not at any Time on that Day in the said House; and whereas, in Truth and in Fact, the said Mary Squires did not, on the said 2d Day of January, take the said Elizabeth Canning by the Hand in the said House, and ask her if she chose to go their Way, saying, if she did, she should have fine Cloaths; and whereas, in Truth and in Fact, she the said Mary Squires did, not, on the said 2d Day of January, take the said Elizabeth Canning by the Hand; and whereas, in Truth and in Fact, she the said Mary Squires did not take a Knife out of any Dresser-Drawer, or any other Drawer, and cut the Lace of her the said Elizabeth Canning's Stays, and take them from her; and whereas, in Truth and in Fact, the said Mary Squires did not cut the Lace of her the said Elizabeth Canning's Stays; and whereas, in Truth and in Fact, the said Mary Squires did not push the said Elizabeth Canning up any Stairs belonging to the said House; and whereas, in Truth and in Fact, she the said Elizabeth Canning did not continue, or was in any wise confined in the said Room belonging to the said House, into which the said Stairs lead, for a Month by the Weeks, all but a few Hours; and whereas the said Elizabeth Canning did not continue, or was any ways confined in the said Room, or in any other Room belonging to the said House, for a Month by the Weeks, all but a few Hours, or for any other Space of Time; and whereas, in Truth and in Fact,

Fact, she the said Elizabeth Canning did not get out of the said Room about Four o'Clock in the Afternoon of the said 29th Day of January, or at any other Time of that Day; and whereas, in Truth and in Fact, she the said Elizabeth Canning did not take any Bed-gown or Handkerchief out of any Grate in the Chimney of the said Room; and whereas, in Truth and in Fact, there was no Grate in the Chimney of the said Room on the said 2d Day of January, or on the 29th Day of January, or at any other Time between the 2d and 29th Days of January, as she the said Elizabeth Canning by her false and corrupt Testimony aforesaid, at and upon the said last-mentioned Trial, did most falsely, voluntarily, and corruptly, by her own proper Act and Consent, upon her said Oath, so taken as aforesaid, say, depose, swear, and give in Evidence to the Jurors of the said Jury, in Manner aforesaid. And so the Jurors aforesaid, now here sworn, upon their Oath aforesaid, do say, That she the said Elizabeth Canning, at and upon the said Trial, upon the said 21st Day of February, in the 26th Year aforesaid, at London aforesaid, (that is to say) at the Parish of St. Sepulchre, in the Ward of Farringdon Without, in London aforesaid, before the said Justices of our said Lord the King last above-mentioned, and others their Fellows aforesaid, by her own proper Act and Consent, and of her own most wicked and corrupt Mind, in Manner and Form aforesaid, did falsely, voluntarily, and corruptly, upon her said Oath, so taken as aforesaid, commit wilful and corrupt Perjury, to the great Displeasure of Almighty God, in Contempt of our said Lord the King and his Laws, to the evil and pernicious Example of all others in the like Case offending, and against the Peace of our said Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity.

Mr. GASCOYNE.

May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury; I am Council in this Case for the King, against the Prisoner at the Bar, who stands before you indicted of wilful and corrupt Perjury: And the Indictment sets forth, that, at the General Session of the Peace held for the County of Middlesex, on the 19th of February, in the 26th Year of his present Majesty's Reign, an Indictment was found against one Mary Squires, for having, on the 2d Day of January in the same Year, with Force and Arms, assaulted the Prisoner at the Bar, and having put her in Fear of her Life, feloniously and with Force took and stole from her Person, and against her Will, in the Dwelling-House of one Susannah Wells, in the Parish of Enfield, in the County of Middlesex, a Pair of Stays of the Value of ten Shillings, the Property of the Prisoner at the Bar: And the Indictment charges, that at the Gaol-Delivery of Newgate, on the 21st Day of February in the same Year, which was the Year 1753, Mary Squires was arraigned upon the Indictment so found against her, and having pleaded Not guilty, the Prisoner at the Bar appeared at the Trial, and being duly sworn as a Witness, did maliciously and deliberately, and in order to procure the said Mary Squires to be convicted of the Felony and Robbery charged on her, falsely and corruptly depose and give in Evidence, that she the Prisoner at the Bar, on the 11th Day of January 1753, had been at a Place called Salt-Petre Bank, to see an Uncle and Aunt; that she stayed there till about Nine at Night; that her Uncle and Aunt came with her from thence as far as Aldgate, where they parted; that she the Prisoner at the Bar being then alone, and coming over Moorfields by Bedlam Wall, two Men laid hold of her, and took her by Force from thence to the House of Susannah Wells at Enfield; and being there, that Mary Squires took her by the Hand, and asked her if she would go their Way, saying, that if she did, she should have fine Cloaths; that she refused; and that thereupon Mary Squires, with a Case-Knife, cut the Lace of her Stays, and took them from her, gave her a Slap on the Face, and pushed her up Stairs into another Room, which they called the Hay-loft; that as soon as she was there, the Door of the Room was shut upon her; and that she was threatened by Mary Squires, that if she heard her stir or move, she would cut her Throat: And the Indictment charges, that the Prisoner at the Bar being asked on the Trial of Mary Squires, how long she had continued in that Room, she falsely and wilfully swore, that she was kept there a Month, all but a few Hours; and that upon the 29th of January she broke down a Board that was nailed up at the Inside of the Window, and got out there: Whereas in Truth, as the Indictment charges, the Prisoner at the Bar was never taken or carried to the House of Susannah Wells; and that, in Truth and in Fact, Mary Squires was at that Time at Abbotsbury in the County of Dorset: And the Indictment charges, that in Truth and in Fact, Mary Squires did not cut the Lace of the Prisoner's Stays, and take them from her, or slap her on the Face, or push her up Stairs into another Room, or say, that if she heard her stir or move, she would cut her Throat; and that, in Truth, the Prisoner at the Bar was not in any Room or Place belonging to the House of Susannah Wells; and therefore, that she was on the Trial of the said Mary Squires guilty of wilful and corrupt Perjury: All which is said to be done, to the great Displeasure of Almighty God, in Contempt of the Laws of this Land, and to the evil and pernicious Example of all others in the like Case offending, and against the Peace of our Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity. To this, Gentlemen, the Prisoner has pleaded Not guilty: We shall call our Witnesses, and if we prove her guilty, you will find her so.

Mr. (now Serjeant) DAVY.

May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury;

I am Council for the Prosecution against the Defendant at the Bar, who now comes before you to be tried for wilful and corrupt Perjury; attended with so many Circumstances of Aggravation, and calculated to produce such fatal Effects, that it is to be lamented the Law has not made it capital.

For it was committed to support a groundless Prosecution for Felony, and, under Colour of Justice, to take away the Life of an innocent Person.

Than which it is hard to conceive an Offence more shocking to Humanity, or more dreadful.

Gentlemen, the Indictment sets forth, that the Defendant maliciously and deliberately intending to pervert the due Course of Law and Justice, and to procure one Mary Squires untruly to be convicted of a Robbery, did, upon the 21st of February

February 1753, in this Court, give false Testimony against her. It contains several Particulars of the Defendant's Evidence upon that Occasion; and avers, that in each Particular she was guilty of Perjury.

What could tempt one so young to such accumulated Wickedness, though the Prosecution is not concerned to account for it, may be easily conceived upon recollecting what had happened.

And, indeed, one would give Way to any charitable Suggestion, rather than suppose her Heart so thoroughly polluted, as at first to design a Sacrifice.

To preserve her Character, it became necessary to frame an Excuse for her Absence from her Master's Service, during the Space of a Month, from the 1st to the 29th of January. To what such Absence was really owing, I am not inclined to suggest, lest I should wrong her. But her Flight was sudden, unexpected, and alarming.

An ill-concerted Story for this Purpose, or the forgetting some material Circumstances in one invented with a greater Appearance of Truth, was, in all likelihood, her first Step to the Crime she is now to answer for. And a too great Forwardness in satisfying unexpected Inquiries, the Effects of Distrust and Curiosity, might lead her unwarily into a Description of Places and Persons, unthought of before, from which, once fixed, she thought it dangerous to deviate.

But an additional Temptation fell in her Way, a Temptation too strong to be resisted in the Situation to which she was reduced; and this was a Scheme to raise Money.

For those, who were weak enough to believe all the Absurdities to which their own Credulity had given rise, were so affected with her unprecedented Sufferings, that they proposed a general Subscription, as well to punish the infamous Wretches, who, it was said, had endeavoured to starve her out of her Chastity, as to reward her Purity.

Here then she was under a Necessity, either to renounce those golden Hopes, by retracting what she had declared, and so to ruin her Character, or to persist in it through Perjury. And having by this Time subdued all Remains of Virtue, she preferred the Offer of Money, tho' she must wade through innocent Blood to attain it.

The Project succeeded to the utmost of her Wishes. For, by the Help of Prejudices most artfully, industriously, and (I may add) infamously inculcated, she made her Way to the Conviction of Mary Squires and Susannah Wells, (the former for robbing her of her Stays, and the other for being an Accomplice in that Robbery,) and so she became the Object of almost universal Compassion.

The unfair Means made use of upon that Occasion, by Advertisements in the Daily Papers, and in printed Bills, every where dispersed, with the Names of six reputable Tradesmen, attesting the Truth of a Story, of which they were not able to prove a single Syllable; and all this for the sake of prejudging those unhappy Women, who in Consequence of it fell a Sacrifice; would pass unnoticed in this Trial, had not the same unjustifiable Methods been continued to the present Hour.

An Appeal to the Public concerning Matters triable by Juries, has a direct Tendency to shut up the Avenues to Conviction, and to enervate the Arm of Justice.

But it is the Happiness of this Prosecution to be brought before a Jury of Citizens, whose Characters give the greatest Room to hope for an impartial Trial, notwithstanding all the Arts which have been practised to inflame their Passions and corrupt their Judgment.

And if I am not greatly mis-instructed, the Prejudices must be strong indeed, that can resist the Proofs of this Woman's Guilt.

Gentlemen, before I open the Evidence we have to offer, I must beg Leave to trouble you with repeating what the Defendant swore upon the Trial of Mary Squires, and with remarking some of the Objections to which it stands exposed, without any other Proofs to contradict it.

She swore, " That on the 1st of January 1753, " about Nine at Night, two Men seized her in " Moorfields; and, without speaking, robbed her " of Half a Guinea, and three Shillings, and her " Gown, Apron and Hat, which they folded up, " and put into a great-coat Pocket.

" That she screamed out, and then one of the " Men stopped her Mouth with a Handkerchief.

" That they then tied her Hands behind her; " after which one of them gave her a Blow on the " Temple, which stunned her, and threw her " directly into a Fit.

" That this Transaction in Moorfields lasted " Half an Hour; but no body passed by in all " that Time.

" That she remained totally insensible for six " Hours after; when she found herself by a large " Road, with the two Men who had robbed her.

" That they dragged her to the House of one " Susannah Wells, (who was at the same Time tried " as an Accessary to Squires) at Enfield-Wash, " (which is between eleven and twelve Miles from " Moorfields) where she arrived in Half an Hour " after the Recovery of her Senses. And it was " then about Four o'Clock in the Morning.

" That she there saw Mary Squires, and two " young Women in the Kitchen. And, as soon " as she was brought in, Squires took her by the " Hand, and asked her, if she chose to go their Way, " saying, if she did, she should have fine Cloaths.

" That upon her answering, No, Squires cut off " her Stays, and took them from her. And im- " mediately the two Men went away.

" That Squires then called her Bitch, gave her " a Slap in the Face, pushed her up Stairs into a " Hay-loft, (a few Steps from the Kitchen) and " shutting the Door upon her, threatened to cut " her Throat, if she heard her stir or move.

" That when Day-light appeared, she saw " about the Room, in which there was a Fire- " place, and a Grate in it, no Bed or Bedstead, " nothing but Hay to lie upon, a Pitcher almost " full of Water, and about twenty-four Pieces of " Bread, to the Amount of a Quartern Loaf in " the whole.

" That these Pieces of Bread, and this Water, " between three and four Quarts, was all she had " to subsist on, (except a Penny Mince-pye, which " she had in her Pocket,) for the whole Time she " remained in that Room; which was from " Tuesday the 2d of January at Four in the " Morning, till Monday the 29th at Four in the " Afternoon. And that she had no Stool in all " that Time.

" That no one came to her, nor did she see a " human Creature, except once she saw some- " body look through a Crack of the Door.

" That

“ That she had eat up all her Bread on Friday the 26th, and had drank up all her Water on Monday the 29th, at Half an Hour after Three in the Afternoon; and at Four o’Clock she made her Escape, which she had never attempted (nor did it ever once come into her Head to attempt) till that Day.

“ That the Manner of her Escape, was by breaking down a Board which was nailed up at the Inside of a Window, about eight or ten Feet from the Ground; from which she jumped down, without the least Hurt, it being soft clay Ground.

“ But, before she left the Room, she took a Bed-gown and a Handkerchief, which she found in the Chimney Grate.

“ That having never been on that Road before, she inquired her Way of People she met, and so walked on the great Road to her Mother’s House, (about twelve Miles) without seeking Refuge in any of the Houses on the Road, for fear she should meet with somebody belonging to the House she had escaped from.

“ That she arrived at her Mother’s in Alder-manbury, at a Quarter past Ten at Night; and she told her Friends that her Confinement was somewhere in the Hertfordshire Road, which she had discovered, while she was under Confinement, by seeing a Coach go by, which she knew frequented that Road.

“ And being called upon by the Court to particularize the Furniture of the Room she was confined in, she mentioned a Barrel, a Saddle, a Basin, and a Tobacco-mould.”

This, Gentlemen, was her Evidence.

Now I would ask any reasonable unprejudiced Man in the World, whether he ever heard a Story so intirely destitute of all human Probability?

Is it not a Heap of monstrous Absurdities, with Falshood glaring in every Circumstance?

What could induce the two Ruffians in Moorfields to behave in this extraordinary Manner?

Did they mean to rob, or kidnap her, or both?

If only to rob, why did they kidnap her? If only to kidnap, why rob her? If both, why lose Half an Hour in stripping her in so public a Place, when Multitudes of People were continually passing by; since they might have done it securely at the End of their Journey?

Having robbed and stripped her, what Temptation had they to take the Pains and run the Hazard of carrying her twelve Miles, in a Fit, (supposing it possible,) through several Turnpikes and Villages, where it was a thousand to one, that they would be discovered and apprehended?

The same Difficulties occur at Enfield-Wash. While she was in the House, was any Thing transacted, whereby one can trace the Motive of her being brought or confined there?

At first, indeed, she was asked, whether she would go their Way; and if she would, she should have fine Cloaths.

Their Meaning in this was left unexplained, and no further Persuasions were used to tempt her!

Advantage taken of a concise Refusal,—she was instantly locked up for a Month upon Bread and Water!

Not the least Inquiry in all that Time, what Effect this hard Usage had upon her; or what was become of her!

Whether she was dead, which might have been expected, if she remained in the Room; or had escaped, which it was more reasonable to suppose: For,

SEE HOW WONDERS MULTIPLY!

The Means of Escape were left open to her every Moment of the Time; at the Hazard of their Lives! Those Means unemployed, and unthought of, for the Preservation of her own!

Is it not amazing she should manage her Allowance of Bread and Water (scarce sufficient for a Week’s Subsistence) with such Providence, that the former lasted till within three Days, and the latter, (which she could less endure the Want of,) tho’ less in Proportion, till within Half an Hour of her coming away!

And yet she had never received the least Intimation, how long she was to remain in Confinement; or whether she was to have any Supplies!

That she should survive all this Treatment, too hard for the best Constitution, and find Strength to walk twelve Miles immediately afterwards, without the least Refreshment or Rest!

These are not all, nor the fiftieth Part of the Objections, to which this unexampled Tale is liable! It would be mispending Time to enumerate them—they are obvious to every Understanding.

Does there need much Evidence to contradict this? Does not common Sense, and the Observation of all Mankind upon the Course of Nature, refute it in every Instance?

Yet such Arts have been practised to engage Men to believe it, that there are, at this Day, thousands who embrace it as zealously, as an Article of religious Faith.

Insisting upon the mere Possibility of this romantic Story, and having an implicit Faith in the Defendant’s Sincerity, because her Character (they say) is clear of any other Imputation, they have been drawn in to conclude upon the Truth of all she has sworn.

Such are incapable of Conviction; upon whom neither Argument nor Evidence can have any Effect.

Let me imagine a Case, better authenticated than this before you, but in Favour of which Men have no Prejudices; and see what Reception it would meet with.

Suppose a Pretender to the Art of Flying (an Art which some soaring Geniuses of the last Age thought practicable) should swear to have taken a Month’s Tour round the Extremity of the Atmosphere, without breathing in all that Time.

Were no Arts used to mislead Men’s Understanding, were they left to judge for themselves; no one would believe this even upon the Faith of fifty Witnesses.

For, however unlikely it is, that fifty disinterested Men should concur in a Falshood, it would be still more unlikely, that a Man should be flying for a Month without drawing Breath.

But, Gentlemen, this Prosecution will not rest upon Improbabilities. It was commenced upon the clear Proof of Facts; sufficient to convince every Man, whose Judgment is not captivated by Prejudice.

The Evidence to be produced against the Defendant is of several Kinds.

First, To shew that Mary Squires was in another Place, above 130 Miles from Enfield-Wash, at the Time of the supposed Robbery there.—But lest the the Believers in Wonders should think this insufficient, and insist upon the Possibility of Squires' being in two Places at once; we shall,

In the next Place, under various Heads of Proof, attack the whole of the Defendant's Evidence, and shew that in every Part of it she is forsworn.

Gentlemen, because there may be no Uncertainty in that Part of the Case which relates to Squires; she will attend here in Person, to be referred to by the Witnesses. And you will observe, (to use her own Language to the Defendant, when she first charged her with the Robbery,) that the Almighty has not created her Likeness. So it is impossible; either for the Witnesses, or the Defendant, to mistake her for another.

She is one of that Tribe of People called Gypsies, and ströls about the Country as a Hawker and Pedlar. She is a Widow; and has a Son George; a young Man, and two Daughters Lucy and Mary, both young Women.

It happened, that in the latter End of the Year 1752, this Gypsie, with her Son and her Daughter Lucy, travelled on Foot into the West of England with smuggled Goods, such as they meet with in Sea-port Towns, and sell again to People in the Country.

The material Questions with respect to these People will be, Where were they upon the 1st and 2d of January 1753? And when did they arrive at Enfield-Wash?

In order to give you the clearest Satisfaction in this Matter, it will be necessary to go a little farther back than the 1st of January, and trace them down to the Time of their being apprehended on the 1st of February.

Gentlemen, it will be worth your Observation, with what Degree of Certainty the Witnesses swear, not only with regard to the Identity of the three Persons, (who will be all in Court to be referred to,) but also as to the precise Times of seeing them.

And, if it should appear to you, that they can be under no Mistake, either as to Persons or Times; it will only remain for your Consideration, what Credit should be given to their Oaths.

They are forty in Number; they are totally disinterested; and of unexceptionable Characters.

Upon Friday the 29th of December 1752, in the Evening, these three Foot-Travellers, Mary Squires, George and Lucy Squires, came to lodge in a little Inn at South-Parrot, in Dorsetshire; and went forward towards Abbotsbury the next Morning. The Landlady of the Inn will tell you, she is certain as to the Time, from an Accident of some Guests leaving a Reckoning to pay, which she entered in her Book that Evening: A Book, wherein she had seldom occasion to make Entries; but whenever she did, it was her Custom to ascertain the Time by her Almanack: And she remembers to have referred to the Almanack, while they were in the House.

You will find them the next Morning, Saturday the 30th of December, between Eight and Nine o'Clock, taking Refreshment upon the Road, at a Place called Winyard's Gap, about a Mile from South-Parrot. The Person who proves this, saw them the Evening before as they were going to South-Parrot, and was so struck with the old Woman's hideous Face; that she compared her to a Picture then in her House of Mother Skipton.

The same Day at Two in the Afternoon they came to Litton, about nine Miles from Winyard's Gap, and three from Abbotsbury. There they lay at an Ale-house, and stayed till Monday Afternoon the 7th of January. This will be proved by five Witnesses, who will give you a particular Account of them during all that Time.

Monday the 1st of January, in the Evening, they came to Abbotsbury, a Sea-port Town in Dorsetshire; where they were very well known by a great many People, having been often there before. There they stayed till Tuesday the 9th. This will be proved by no less than eleven Witnesses: And as it is impossible these People should be under any Mistake as to their Persons, it will be material to observe, that it is equally impossible they should mistake as to the Time. It happened, that the Exciseman, stationed at Abbotsbury, was taken ill a few Days before the coming of these People there; and another Officer was placed in his stead, who lodged in the same House with them, at one Gibbons's, and came there on the very same Day. You will find this, not only by the Exciseman himself, and several of the Witnesses who remember his and their coming; but we shall also produce the Books from the Excise-Office, by which the Time of this Man's coming to Abbotsbury will appear with absolute Certainty. There are, besides, several other Circumstances, which lead the Witnesses to Exactness of Time, as well here, as at the other Places before-mentioned.

Before we leave Abbotsbury, it will be proper to let you know that Lucy Squires, though the Daughter of such a deformed Woman, is very far from disagreeable, and had an Acquaintance there, who was dear to her. This was one William Clarke, a Shoe-maker of that Place, who met them at Litton, and travelled on a Day and a half's Journey with them from Abbotsbury. The Reason of my taking Notice of this Circumstance will appear hereafter, when you find them at Basingstoke.

With this Clarke they left Abbotsbury on Tuesday the 9th of January, and went to Portersham, where they lay that Night.

Wednesday the 10th they went to Ridgway; where Clarke took an unwilling Leave of his Lucy, after obtaining her Promise to send him a Letter soon; they lay at Ridgway that Night; and,

The next Day, Thursday the 11th, you will find them crossing the Waters by Dorchester, which were very high after great Rains.

They had received an Account, that the other Daughter Mary was ill, and so travelled faster from this Time, to hasten Home.

Friday the 12th they lay at Chettle.

Saturday the 13th at Martin, in a Farmer's Barn.

Sunday the 14th at Coombe: From whence they proceeded the next Day in the Road to London.

The next Account you will receive of them, will be Thursday the 18th at Basingstoke; which you will observe, according to their Rate of travelling, to be four Days Journey from Coombe.

And here you will find a Piece of Evidence very material, and conclusive with regard both to Persons and Times, and which will confirm the rest of the Evidence before it to the utmost Degree of Certainty.

I mentioned before, that Lucy Squires had promised her Sweetheart, William Clarke, to send him a Letter on the Road. It was at this Place she performed her Promise.

But being an illiterate Girl, she was obliged to have Recourse to the Landlady of the Inn to write for her.

The Letter is dated from Basingstoke, the 18th of January 1753. The Landlady, Mrs. Morris, will will tell you it was wrote by her at the Time it bears Date. It will appear with the Basingstoke Post-Mark upon it.

There being no direct Post from Basingstoke to Dorchester, the Letter was put into the London Bag; and therefore the London Post-Mark is also upon it, by which it will appear, that it came into the General Post-Office on the 19th of January.

It happens that this Letter (which will be read to you in the Course of the Evidence) refers to the Circumstance of Clarke's travelling with them from Abbotsbury.

Friday the 19th they went to Bagshot, and Saturday the 20th to Brentford; where George left his Mother the Sunday Morning, to go to his Sister Mary, whom he found well enough recovered to go with him to Brentford the Monday to her Mother.

Tuesday the 23d they lay at a House called the Seven Sisters at Page-Green, by Tottenham. And the next Day, Wednesday the 24th of January, they went to Enfield-Wash.

Here they were Strangers; and, inquiring for Lodging, had the ill Luck to be recommended to Susannab Wells, whom they had never seen before.

Happy for that Woman, that these unfortunate Strangers came to her House! In all likelihood she owes her Life to that Accident. For,

Had there been no old Woman in her House, besides herself; nay, had she not (another Accident for which she is indebted to Providence!) changed Seats with the old Gypsey at the Fire-side, five Minutes before the Defendant's Arrival there on the 1st of February—there is too much Reason to believe, that Wells herself had been accused of this Felony.

Had it so happened, the same Evidence, which was applied to Squires, would have served for her Conviction. And she had no alibi to save her Life.

The Defendant had then been prosperous in Perjury; and the Means of detecting her had been borne down by popular Clamour.

Squires, her Son and Daughter, remained at Wells's from the 24th of January till the 1st of February; when they were apprehended.

What happened that Day, will fall under another Head of Evidence.

I have now done with that Part of the Prosecutor's Case, so far as it relates to the Innocence of Mary Squires.

Upon which I shall only observe, that, if the Evidence brought to support it is clear and convincing, it will be too late for the Defendant to shelter herself under any Pretence of a Mistake.

For whether she was robbed by Squires, or not, was the most material Question upon that Woman's Trial, and her Fate depended upon the Defendant's positive Testimony.

And it is worthy Observation, that there was not the least Doubt suggested, when she was giving Evidence against the most remarkable Person in the World.

Gentlemen, the next Head of Evidence will be to shew, (what would of itself be sufficient to convince all Mankind,) that the Defendant could give no Account of the Room she pretended to have been confined in for a whole Month together; and that the Place she afterwards fixed upon, and positively swore to, was not in any Respect answerable to her first Description of it; and that her Description of the Room upon the Trial of Squires, was in Consequence of its being shewn to her some little Time before. You will also find her Evidence flatly contradicted, in a Variety of material Circumstances, by her own Information upon Oath at another Time.

It has been urged in the Defendant's behalf, with much Shew of Reason, that her giving an exact Description of the Place of her Confinement is a strong Proof of her having been there.

But on the other hand, if her Description of the Place of her Confinement was as unapplicable to the Room she ventured afterwards to swear to, as it was to St. Paul's Cathedral, is it not an answerable Proof, that she was not there?

For can it be imagined, she should be alone in a Room for twenty-eight Days, without any Obstruction of her Senses, and at the End of that Time as ignorant of it, as if she had never seen, or heard of such a Place?

It was on Monday Night the 29th of January, according to her Account, that the Defendant returned to her Mother. On Wednesday the 31st she applied, with several of her Friends, to Mr. Chitty, the Sitting Alderman, for a Warrant against Wells, upon Suspicion of having robbed her. For at that Time she did not pretend to Certainty.

The Alderman having heard her Story, then declared his Doubts, and called upon her to authenticate it by a particular Description of the Place she had been in.

She swore it was a little, square, dark Room, in which was an old Stool or two, an old Table, and an old Picture over the Chimney. And this was all the Description she gave. No Mention of any Bason, Saddle, Tobacco-mould, or Barrel; and so far from any Pretence of Hay, that she complained of having been forced to lie every Night upon the bare Floor.

She also swore, that her Modicum of Bread was in five or six Pieces, (not four and twenty;) and that she left some of the Water in the Pitcher, when she came away: That she escaped by the help of a Pent-house under the Window, upon which she slid down, and from thence jumped upon a Bank on the Back-side of the House.

A Warrant being obtained from the Alderman; it was agreed upon by her Friends, who had heard this, to go down to Wells's the next Morning; and after securing all the People in the House, to inquire whether any Room there was answerable to the Account she gave. Resolving, if they found she spoke Truth, to support her to the utmost of their Power; if otherwise, to drop her.

The next Morning they all set out for Enfield-Wash, and immediately secured all the People in Wells's House; there were Mrs. Wells, Mary Squires, her Son and two Daughters, Virtue Hall, and Fortune Natus, and his Wife Judith Natus.

It will be proper here to describe this House, and the several Rooms in it.

At the Entrance into the House there is a Stair-case, the Bottom of which is within two or three Yards of the Street-door; this Stair-case leads to three Rooms on the first Floor, in one of which lay the old Gypsey and her two Daughters, in another George Squires, and in the third Mrs. Wells and her Daughter, and Virtue Hall.

Below Stairs, on the left Side of the little Passage from the Street-door, is a Parlour, in which all the Family were placed, as soon as they were seized.

On the right Hand of the Passage is the Kitchen, from which a Door opens to a little Flight of seven or eight Steps, leading into a Sort of Lumber-room or Workshop, where Natus and his Wife lay upon a Bed of Hay. These Steps or Stairs are inclosed in the Room, there being no Door but at the Foot of the Steps, which separates it from the Kitchen. And this Place, which some call a Workshop, and others a Hay-loft, (on Account of some Hay usually kept there,) the Defendant was pleased to fix upon, as the Place of her Confinement.

The Arrival of the Defendant's Friends was above an Hour before her; but no Room could be found like what she had represented.

There were two Persons, one called Adamson, the other Scarrat, who (for Reasons best known to themselves) were extremely desirous of reconciling every Difficulty; and they would have it, that this Lumber-room must be the Place of Confinement.

But some Obstacles were to be removed.

There was a Quantity of Hay, not less than Half a Load, in the Room; and not a Word of Hay had been mentioned. These two Gentlemen imagined she might have forgot it, and proposed that one of them should ride back to meet the Defendant upon the Road, in order to ask her about it. They cast Lots, who should go upon this honest Errand, and it fell to Mr. Adamson.

In a little Time Adamson returned brandishing his Hat, and exulting, We are all right; she says, there is Hay in the Room!

She had never said so before; and, if she forgot to mention it, she also forgot the Use of it, for the whole Month while it was before her Eyes. For she lay upon the bare Boards!

But this was not the only Difficulty which required the Skill of Adamson and Scarrat to solve.

The Room is neither square, nor dark, nor little. It is thirty-five Feet three Inches and a half long, by nine Feet eight-Inches wide; it is extremely light, not only from the Windows, (but one of which she pretended was boarded up) but also from the Roof itself, which is of Pantiles, raised above the Walls, so as to let in a great deal of Light from the Top.

There was no Grate in the Chimney, nor the least Sign that a Grate had been there. For, in the first Place, there was no Hearth to it; and besides, the whole Chimney, from the Bottom upwards to the Mantle-piece, was full of Cobwebs and Nastiness. It is impossible therefore that a Grate or any Thing else could have been there within three Days before, or indeed, as many Months.

There was a large Chest of Drawers by the Side of the Wall, which she had said nothing of. Did she forget this too?

Perhaps it had been put there since her Escape the Monday before. Remove it, and see whether it has the Marks of long standing. The Experiment was made, and immediately fifty Spiders ran out to give Testimony of a long, undisturbed Possession.

Instead of any Pictures over the Chimney, there was an old broken Casement, which filled the whole Place, and had the like Vouchers for its long standing; the Cobwebs uniting it to the Wall:

Where was the Stool and Table she spoke of? Nothing like either to be found.

Where was the Pent-house, or Shed of Boards under the Window, by which she escaped? The Wall on both Sides perpendicular; the Windows but eight Feet from the Ground on the Outside; and there never was either Pent-house, or Shed, or any Thing else by the Wall.

On the right-hand Side coming into this nasty Room, was some Hay made in the Form of a Bed, with a little Bag of Wool by way of Bolster. And Natus's Wife was seized just rising from this Bed.

Near this Bed's-head was a Hole, through which a Jack-line had formerly run from the Kitchen. The Hole was almost large enough to thrust her Head through, and looked quite over the Kitchen. This she never observed; for she saw no body, but once during the whole Month, and then it was through a Crack of the Door.

Over this Hole were the Pullies of the Jack-line, which she also forgot to mention.

In short, she forgot almost all the Things that were there, and supplied her Defect of Memory, by naming several Things which had never been in the Room.

By this Time there was a great Company of People in the House; some led by Curiosity, some by Justice, and some by Motives, which must be left to themselves to assign.

At last the Defendant arrived with her Mother in a Coach. She was immediately conducted to the Kitchen, and set on the Dresser.

The Door leading to the Lumber-room was then open, on her left Hand, and within three Yards of her, so that she could then see all the Stairs, and a considerable Part of the Room; yet she took no Notice of it. Nor did she drop the least Hint that the Kitchen she was then in, was the Place where her Stays were cut off; though she remained in the Kitchen five or six Minutes.

She was then placed on a Chair, with the Door of the Lumber-room open on her right Hand, where she could see up into other Parts of the Room. Still, not the least Notice taken of it.

It was then proposed to carry her into the Parlour, where all the Family were Prisoners, in order for her to fix upon the Person who cut off her Stays.

In the mean while the Prisoners were disposed in the Room so, as she might have a distinct View of them all. Mother Wells was placed on the right Side of the Chimney, and the Gypsey on the left. But, a few Minutes before the Defendant's coming into the Parlour, the two old Women had changed Places, and the Gypsey then sat on the right Side of the Chimney, leaning over the Fire, almost double, and smoaking her Pipe.

In this Situation were they, when the Defendant entered the Room; and in a Moment, without seeing her Face, pointing to the Gypsey, she said, This is the Woman who robbed me of my Stays.

The poor old Woman, smoaking her Pipe, was inattentive to what was said. But one of her Daughters exclaimed, Lord! Mother, the young Woman says you robbed her.

Immediately the Gypsey starting from her Chair, and looking in Astonishment full at her, exposed exposed her hideous Face, which till then was almost covered with a Clout. I rob you! take care what you say; if you have once seen my Face, you can't mistake it, for God never made such another! And being told that this Fact was committed on the 1st of January, the old Woman immediately, without the least Hesitation, declared she was then above one hundred Miles off in Dorsetshire. And George Squires then said, they were at Abbotsbury on the 1st of January, and for several Days after.

Protestations of Innocence were to no Purpose; the Defendant remained positive, and Mary Squires must suffer for it.

The next Thing to be done, was to fix upon the Room.

In the first Place, the Defendant suffered herself to be led up the great Stair-case from the Street-door, and so into all the Rooms forward. But neither of these was the Room.

Not the least Notice taken that the Place she was confined in was contiguous to the Kitchen, and but a few Steps from it; not at all like this Stair-case.

At last she was conducted to the Lumber-room; and, after pausing for some Time, she declared this was the Place; but that there seemed to be more Hay, than she had observed during her Confinement there.

The Witnesses, who had heard what she swore before Mr. Alderman Chitty, and had made their Observations upon this Room just before her coming down to Enfield-Wash, were astonished.

She then recollected one of the three Saddles, and the Barrel, Basin, and Tobacco-mould; neither of which she had mentioned before. But she remembered nothing of the Chest of Drawers, the broken Casement over the Chimney, the Hay-bed, the Hole in the Wall, nor the Pulley.

One asked her, why she had not opened the Window Casement, and escaped that Way, seeing she might have done it without the least Difficulty? Her Answer was, she took it for granted it was nailed, but had never tried it.

The Effect these Observations had upon such of her Friends, as did not go there with a Resolution to assist her in all Events, is easy to imagine. They were satisfied she was an Impostress, and withdrew their Assistance.

Their Names are Mr. Gawen Nash, Mr. — Hague, and Mr. — Aldridge, Citizens of established Reputation; who will give you a very faithful and circumstantial Account of this whole Transaction.

Though what has been already opened would be abundantly sufficient to maintain this Indictment, yet this is not all.

For, instead of relying upon Circumstances, however satisfactory, we shall go further, and shew by direct positive Evidence, that the Defendant was not in this Room in the Month of January.

Natus, a poor labouring Man, and his Wife, will tell you, that this Bed of Hay was their only Lodging during that whole Month, and for five or six Weeks before; and that they lay in this very Room every Night: And this will be confirmed by the Evidence of several other Witnesses.

They will all tell you, that this Room, being the Repository of Mrs. Wells's Hay, with which her Horse was fed, and of Pollard for the feeding her Pig, was visited by some or other of them every Day.

That this black Pitcher, which the Defendant says was in the Room for all the Time she was there, was in constant Use in the Family, and filled with Water from a Neighbour's Pump almost every Day, during the Time the Defendant pretends to have been in the House.

That none of them ever saw the Defendant, or heard of her, till she came down on the 1st of February with Mr. Alderman Chitty's Warrant.

Ezra Whiffin, who keeps an Inn in the Neighbourhood, will be produced a Witness to prove, that he bought of Mrs. Wells a Sign, which formerly hung at her Door, when she kept a Public House; and on the 18th of January he took it out of this Workshop, and Natus's Wife was then lying there upon a Hay-bed.

He will fix the precise Day by a very particular Circumstance, in which he will be confirmed by another Witness.

John Whiffin, his Son, went with him to bring away the Sign; and stayed below in the Parlour, while his Father went up into the Room for it.

Three Witnesses will be produced to prove their lopping Trees by the Side of Mrs. Wells's House on the 8th of January; and at that very Time they had some Conversation with two Women, Virtue Hall and Sarah Howit, another Witness, then looking out at the Window of this very Room, where the Defendant is supposed to have been confined.

And the Time of their lopping these Trees will be fixed also by a fifth Witness to this Fact.

Such of these Witnesses, as have been in the Workshop, will give you the same Account of it, as you will find by the other Witnesses to the former Head of Evidence.

After proving the Defendant perjured, not only with regard to the Person, whom she charged with having robbed her, but also as to the Place, in which she swore she was confined; we shall need an Apology for proceeding further.

But to cut off all Pretence for Excuse, we shall beg Leave in another Instance to shew the Defendant's Guilt, by her own Testimony.

In her Evidence at the Old-Bailey, set forth in this Indictment, she swore that she had drank up all the Water in the Pitcher, about Half an Hour before the Time of her Escape.

Before Mr. Alderman Chitty she swore that she did not drink it all, but some of it remained in the Pitcher, when she came away.

But in an Information she made before Mr. Fielding, a Justice of Peace for Middlesex, (which we shall produce for this Purpose) she swore that she had drank up all the Water on the Friday, and so had not a Drop to drink from that Time till the Monday, on which Day she escaped.

The Pain of Thirst has been felt by almost every one, at some Time or other; and whoever has endured it for three Days and Nights, will be sure to remember it as long as he lives.

These Self-contradictions therefore could not arise from mere Mistake; except only it was forgetting at one Time, what she had sworn at another.

A Lyar, says the Proverb, should have a good Memory. But he who is resolved to speak Truth, needs take no Pains to recollect in what Manner he had told his Story before.

Gentlemen, to all this Evidence we shall add

Two Circumstances, which you may possibly think worth your Attention.

Soon after the Defendant's supposed Return to her Mother, she was visited by a Midwife, who was an old Acquaintance; to whom the Mother, in the Daughter's Presence, related the whole Story.

The Midwife's Curiosity took Place of her Pity, and she desired to see the Shift, which the Defendant was supposed to have worn for a Month.

The Observations made upon it will best become the Witness herself to tell you. They lead to suspect strongly, that it had not been worn so long as was pretended. On the contrary, it looked as clean, as if it had not been worn three Days.

The other Circumstance is a striking one. After the Conviction of Squires, there was a Re-examination of the Case before the late Lord-Mayor, in order to pave the Way to the Throne for Mercy, which proved effectual.

The Defendant was present at that Inquiry, and the Bed-gown which she pretended to have taken out of the Workshop, as also the Pitcher, were both produced.

She was very desirous of taking them with her; which my Lord-Mayor objected to, and proposed that they should be deposited in some public Place to be seen by any body, because they might possibly lead to a Discovery.

What induced the Defendant to be so extremely anxious for the Possession of this tattered Bed-gown and broken Pitcher, is hard to say; but she was so much bent upon it, that she unwarily claimed a Property in the Bed-gown, and said, it was her Mother's.

If it was her Mother's Bed-gown, how did it get to Mrs. Wells's?

This, Gentlemen, is the Nature of the Evidence we have to lay before you; upon the Weight of which there can be no Doubt but you will find the Defendant guilty.

Mr. WILLES.

I am Council in this Case for the Crown; and though I cannot help feeling some Concern for the unhappy Situation of the Prisoner at the Bar, yet I own I rejoice, for the sake of Truth, and for the sake of the deluded Multitude, that this Matter is at length to receive the most solemn and impartial Examination.

For, in what Light soever we consider the Prisoner's History of herself, either as a gross Imposition on the World, or, as others would have it, a wonderful and miraculous Truth; most certainly 'tis a Fact about which Mankind have been much divided, which has been the Cause of great Uneasiness and Distraction in this Country, and concerning which the Minds of the People ought to be quieted.

Nor can we wonder at these Dissensions among the Populace, when many able and great Magistrates have engaged in this Dispute; some of whom have with great Warmth and Eagerness declared themselves implicit Believers of this amazing Story, whilst others have looked upon Elizabeth Canning as the most vile and abandoned Impostress.

I do not mention this with an Intent to throw Reflections on the Patrons of either Side of the Question; the wisest of Men have been deceived, nor will it be any Imputation on their Character, that they have been so; unless there is any Reason for conjecturing, that either through Partiality, Prejudice, or other still worse Motives, they have wilfully shut their Eyes to the Truth.

Far is it from me to insinuate that any thing of this Sort has happened in the present Instance: I verily believe that the Fountain of Justice in this Kingdom has flowed, through all its Channels, unstained, uncorrupted, and clear from all Manner of Pollution. I hope that those who have sat under his Majesty's Commission of the Peace, have acted merely and singly in that Capacity, and have not descended from the Dignity of Magistracy, to become Advocates for either Party.

But be that as it will, it is not our Duty, as Council for the Prosecution, to take Notice of collateral Circumstances or extrajudicial Behaviour in any one; 'tis our Business only to lay the Particulars of the Charge against the Prisoner before you; and if the Weight of Evidence appears clearly to be on the Side of the Crown, I don't doubt but that the Truth will be irresistible, and that we shall have your Verdict for the Conviction of the Prisoner.

And, Gentlemen, the Prisoner stands indicted of one of the most heinous of Crimes; an Endeavour, by wilful and corrupt Forswearing herself, to take away the Life of a guiltless Person; and without Aggravation, in the black Catalogue of Offences, I know not one of a deeper Dye. 'Tis a Perversion of the Laws of her Country to the worst of Purposes; 'tis wresting the Sword out of the Hands of Justice to shed innocent Blood.

Let us reflect a Moment on the sad Catastrophe which might have ensued. On her Evidence Mary Squires was condemned to be executed, and had suffered the Judgment of the Law, but for the Wisdom and Clemency of his Majesty, ever careful, ever tender of the Lives even of the meanest of his Subjects. During the Application that was made to the Throne for Mercy, did the Prisoner abate ought of her Repentment against the unhappy Convict? No; her cruel Heart never in the least relented: God forbid, that the Measure she has meted another, should this Day be measured to her again!

When I think of the Age of the Prisoner at the Bar, scarcely yet above nineteen Years old, I can hardly persuade myself that human Nature could so early attain to such a Pitch of Wickedness: But when I attend to the very strong and convincing Proofs we have to produce against her, I must give up my Reason to my Incredulity, if I any longer doubted, whether she was guilty or not.

And, Gentlemen, the whole we have to lay before you in support of this heavy Charge, will naturally arise under one or other of these Considerations:

The numberless Inconsistencies, and even Contradictions of herself in her own Evidence, as taken at different Times before different Magistrates:

The Improbability of her Story:

The Testimony of a Multitude of Witnesses of Credit and Character, who contradict her materially in almost every Circumstance she has related.

And, Gentlemen, in order to make you sensible how frequently Canning has varied in her own Account of these Facts, it will be necessary to inform you that she has been examined on Oath four several Times. On the 31st of January before Alderman Chitty, when a Warrant was granted granted for the apprehending Mrs. Wells; on the 1st of February before Justice Tashmaker, after she had been down at Enfield-Wash; on the 7th of February before Justice Fielding; and on the 21st of February at the Trial of Squires; on which last Examination we have assigned the Perjuries mentioned in the Indictment.

In tracing her through these several Examinations, we shall have an Opportunity of discovering what Variations from Time to Time there are in her Story, what new Circumstances, Supplements, or Embellishments were added to her first Relation; and then we shall be able to judge impartially whether all these are reconcilable with Truth.

Before Alderman Chitty her Evidence was simply this; That she was robbed by two Men in Moorfields of her Money, Hat, Gown, and Cap: That there she received a Blow on her Head, which stunned her, but did not so far deprive her of her Senses, but that she remembers her being afterwards carried through Bishopsgate-Street: That she then was dragged to Mother Wells's, and there stript of her Stays, and because she would not go their Way, (as it is termed) confined in a little, square, dark, or darkish Room, which had nothing in it but an old Grate, an old Table, a Stool or two, and some Pictures over the Chimney: That there were four or five Pieces of Bread and some Water, on which she lived till she made her Escape; and that she lay all the Time on the bare Boards: That she got out of the Window on a small Shed of Boards or Pent-house, down which she slid, having clothed herself with an old Bed-gown and Handkerchief, which she took from the Grate.

This is the short Account she gave at first before the Alderman, for her Story had not then received Half its Decorations. The Circumstance of her being subject to Fits was not then mentioned: No Hint of any Gypsey's being concerned, much less any Description of Mary Squires, the most remarkable Woman in her Person that ever perhaps existed: Not a Word of any Hay being in the Room; though it appeared, on her coming down to Enfield, that there was above Half a Load, which had been laid in the Summer before. Let any one then believe, if they can, that, during her long Confinement, she could overlook such a Quantity of Hay, and continue Night after Night to take up her hard Lodging on the bare Boards!

In her Examination before Justice Tashmaker, her Story receives several new Improvements. She had seen Mrs. Wells's little Workhouse, so now drops the unfortunate Circumstance of its being a little, square Room: Had she ever seen it before, she could not have so described it. She now recollects more Particulars of what the Gypsey said to her: That she promised her, if she would go their Way, she should have fine Cloaths enough. This Attack (if it deserves the Name of an Attack) on the poor innocent Girl's Virtue, was a proper Subject to excite the Compassion of the Public, and a pretty Use was made of it in the several Advertisements, which were printed at that Time, to raise Subscriptions for her.

She now swears, that after she came to Mrs. Wells's, a Man unknown to her took away her Cap. This expressly contradicts her former Evidence, in which she says she was robbed of her Cap in Moorfields.

She now introduced, for the first Time, the Circumstance of the famous broken-mouthed black Pitcher, on the Water in which, and some Pieces of Bread, she lived till the Wednesday before she made her Escape, when the whole was consumed. No Wonder she could now describe the Pitcher, which was artfully conveyed into the Workshop by her Friend Adamson before her Arrival at Enfield-Wash.

As to the Circumstance of her Provision lasting her only till Wednesday, it neither agrees with what she afterwards swore before Justice Fielding, nor with her Evidence on the Trial of Mary Squires. Truth is always consistent, but Falshood and Fiction must be judged by another Criterion.

We are now come to her Examination before Justice Fielding: I know not through what Medium they were conveyed, but she had certainly then received some new Lights, and is infinitely more learned and artful in the Manner of her telling her Story. The Men she swears in Moorfields feloniously and violently took from her a Shaving Hat, &c. These Words, feloniously and violently, are not the Expressions of a poor illiterate Girl, perhaps they are the Suggestion of her Solicitor.

She now swears, that the Blow in Moorfields threw her into a Fit, which deprived her of her Senses; and that she was used to have Fits, which lasted six or seven Hours. This was an useful and necessary Embellishment of her Story, as a Fit accounted much more naturally for a six Hours Insensibility, than a Blow which only stunned her could do.

That on her Recovery she found herself in a high Road, but that she was so intimidated, she durst not call out. 'Twas proper to give a Reason for not doing what any body in her Circumstances naturally would have done. I own I always admire and suspect an Affidavit, which assigns a Reason for every Thing which is sworn in it.

She then swears she was shoved into a back Room without any Furniture at all in it. I will not dwell on this trivial Mistake in her Account; and yet surely, in the Imagination of a Girl who had had her Education at an Alehouse, Stools, Tables, and Pictures would be deemed Furniture.

But 'tis material to observe, she now says, that on Friday, and not Wednesday, she had consumed all her Bread and Water. This Alteration of her Evidence from Wednesday to Friday must have its Design: Weak and ill as she was, could she have been able to walk from Enfield to London in less than six Hours, which is eleven Miles, if she had received no Sustainance for five Days before? Whereas shortening the Time of her being without any Refreshment, took off a good deal from the Improbability of this Part of her Story.

In her Evidence on the Trial of Mary Squires, she adds still some new Circumstances. She says, on her Recovery from her Fit, she found herself in a great Road, where there was Water. This Addition was not without some View, and I think there is no Difficulty in finding out what it was. It supplied the World with a Reason, why she and her Friends at first directed their Inquiries towards Enfield-Wash.

A Barrel, Saddle, Bafon, and Tobacco-mould, are now recollected to have been in the Room: Strange, we should never hear any thing of them before!

She now swears, she had not drank all the Water till about a Quarter of an Hour before she escaped. This Amendment of her Evidence was with the same same Intention as the former Alteration from Wednesday to Friday; that is, to lessen the Improbability of her being able to walk from Enfield to Town, without once stopping to take the least Refreshment.

These are some of the most glaring Contradictions in her own Evidence, which must strike every body, who reflects that these were Particulars in which she could not err either through Forgetfulness or Mistake; I will not say more.

But to this we may add the Improbability of her whole Story, which is as it were felo de se; at least, 'tis such a Tale as requires the strongest Proof in the World to compel us to believe one Tittle of it.

The two Ruffians to continue with her Half an Hour in so public a Place as Moorfields, and though it was so early in the Evening, (an holiday Evening too) yet when she screamed out, for nobody to hear her! But why first rob her, and afterwards kidnap her? Was it their Design to rob her only? or, to rob her, and afterwards carry her where (in the Gypsy Language) they hoped they should oblige her to go their Way?

If a Robbery only was designed, would they have carried with them the strongest Evidence of their Guilt? If their Purpose was only to add this poor Girl to the Herd of wicked Wretches at Mother Wells's, what Reason was there to begin their Seducement with a Robbery? At these Kind of Houses a young Woman may be easily stripped of her Money, and yet no Robbery committed: Mother Wells might soon have made herself Canning's Cash-keeper, without the Aid of a Blow to stun her, or the Terrors of a Case-Knife.

If her Murder was intended, why not have done it on the Road? Why not on her first Arrival at Enfield-Wash? Why was she supplied with any Bread and Water at all?

Her Fit likewise is of the marvellous Kind; it continued on her near six Hours, went away in an Instant; and though she was used to have Fits on any Fright; yet she never had another during her long and terrifying Confinement. How amazing this! What! a Girl used to Fits on Frights not have a Fit for a Month together, when she might naturally expect, during all that Time, every next Minute would be her last!

But let us now follow this wonderful Girl to Enfield; not forgetting one very extraordinary Circumstance in her Evidence before the Alderman, that though she was stunned in Moorfields, yet she remembers afterwards her being carried through Bishopsgate-Street.

Is it credible, on her coming thither, that the Gypsy, an artful Procurefs, hackneyed in the Ways of Women, should only slightly ask her to go their Way, and, because she faintly said No, should give over all further Attempts? Was this acting like the President or Lady Abbess of such a House as Mother Wells's? Was this any proper Trial of the Prisoner's Virtue? I hope, for the Honour of the Female Sex, that there hardly ever was a young Woman not above eighteen Years of Age, who did not say No, once at least, especially if solicited by an ugly, old, decrepit Hag. And yet this faint, this half-consenting, no-Refusal, is the only Reason given for her long and barbarous Confinement. Her Confinement! To what Purpose was it? What! starve a young Woman out of her Virtue? Rich Food and strong Liquors may do much; but Bread and Water, Cold and Hunger, are not apt to inflame the Passions.

This Bread and Water; a broken Pitcher of Water, and just twenty-four Pieces of Bread, about equal to a Quartern Loaf; before Alderman Chitty these twenty-four Pieces were not above four or five. But be they more or less, when was the Pitcher of Water and these conveyed into the Room? Was there any Expectation of such a Guest? No. Were they carried in after Canning came thither, and before she was shoved into the Workshop? There was not Time enough to make such a particular Provision. As to the Supposition that they might be conveyed into the Room after Canning was there, she herself expressly swears that no body came into the Room from the Time of her being shut up till she made her Escape. Virtue Hall indeed in her Information says, that the Pitcher of Water was conveyed in there afterwards; but I shall lay her Evidence out of the Case, especially as she is in this Circumstance absolutely contradicted by the Prisoner.

But having mentioned Virtue Hall's Name, I cannot help taking Notice of an Argument I have heard in favour of the Prisoner's Innocence, which is this, That Canning and Virtue Hall were never together before Virtue Hall's Examination, and yet they agree in almost every Circumstance of the Story, and therefore Canning's Evidence must be true. But the Answer to this is a very easy and obvious one. It does not at all appear, but that Canning and Virtue Hall were together before Virtue Hall's Examination; at least, 'tis certain they might have found out some Means of communicating their Sentiments to each other, which would answer the same End. 'Tis very remarkable, that Virtue Hall's Confession was not taken at first (for what Reason I know not) vivâ voce before Justice Fielding. She was sent out of the Room to retire with her Solicitor, who was also Canning's Solicitor: Her Information was reduced into Writing, and was two Hours in preparing. After this, what mighty Wonder is there, that when she came into the Justice's Presence again, she should repeat her Lesson without the least Hesitation?

But to pursue the Train of Improbabilities: Was it not strange, that Canning should subsist so long on so small a Quantity of Bread and Water; four Weeks, wanting only a few Hours? Stranger, that she should husband her Store so well as to have some of her Bread left, according to her first Account, till the Wednesday; according to her last, till the Friday before she made her Escape; and that she should save some of her miraculous Pitcher till the last Day? Was the twenty-fourth Part of a six-penny Loaf a Day sufficient to satisfy her Hunger? If not, why should she defer the immediate Gratification of her Appetite, in order to make Provision for a precarious uncertain Futurity? Shall we suppose some Revelation from above in Favour of one of the Faithful? Perhaps an Angel from Heaven appeared to this Mirror of modern Virtue, and informed her, if she eat above one Piece of Bread a Day, her small Pittance would not last her till the Time she was to make her Escape. Her Mother, we know, is a very enthusiastical Woman; a Consulter of Conjurers; a Dreamer of Dreams; perhaps the Daughter dreamed also what was to happen, and so, in Obedience to her Vision, would not eat when she was hungry, hungry, nor drink when she was thirsty. However that was, I would risk the Event of the Prosecution on this single Circumstance, that, without the Interposition of some preternatural Cause, this Conduct of the Prisoner's must appear to exceed all Bounds of human Probability.

That she should have no Evacuations except by Urine, is another strange Circumstance, which decorates this romantic Girl's Story.

But another Thing; How came she to make her Escape so easily at last, and yet never before once attempt it? Were these Dragons always on the Watch? Surely, if they sat up all Night, they must sleep in the Day-time, and the Prisoner tells you the House was then very quiet. Even the Evening she made her Escape, it must astonish us to find, that a Girl, who had been kept so long without her proper Nourishment, should stop no where on the Road to take the least Refreshment, though she passed by several Houses, and met several Persons.

But these Wonders, if possible, will grow more and more wonderful, when we come next to examine the Place of her supposed Imprisonment. This Room, what was it but a weak Erection of Lath and Plaster? Cracks and Crannies innumerable in the Sides of it, and the whole Building so slight, that a Boy of ten Years old might in an Hour's Time have demolished any Part of it. The Window towards the East neither boarded nor fastened; but three Feet from the Floor, and but nine from the Ground. The Casement so large, that a very fat Man might have got out of it; so little a Way from the Ground, that a Child might have slipped down without hurting himself. And yet in this Cage, with the Door open, was this extraordinary Girl confined for a Month, without once trying to get out. The Story indeed is all of a Piece, 'tis all Witchcraft and Enchantment.

But, if she was afraid of breaking out, why should she not call out of the Window for Assistance? It was near at Hand; the Hertfordshire Road was not above sixty Yards from the North Window, and she frequently saw the Coachman pass by, who used to drive her former Mistress. Besides this, there is a little Lane directly under that Window, which was used every Morning and Night by the Farmers and their Servants, who went that Way with their Cattle to the Marshes. There is likewise a Pond not above seven or eight Yards from the Window, where the Townsman watered their Horses, and in frosty Weather it was a Sliding-place for all the Boys and Girls in the Village. Had she made the least Alarm, there were many ready to have come to her Assistance; but we hear of no Endeavours of this Kind; may be, the Gypsey had put a Spell upon her.

But perhaps I am talking of Impossibilities to Persons, whose Credulity is great enough to believe whatever is artfully told them, how monstrous and absurd soever it may be in reality. I know the present Age to be, in some Respects, a very credulous one. Mr. Davy's Story of a flying Man might now, for ought I know, be credited; 'tis not long since the Bottle Hero drew after him a numerous Attendance; this Heroine likewise has had her Admirers and Protectors; but, for my own Part, I would as soon believe either of those Stories, as hers, which is equally incredible.

But should these Improbabilities, I might almost say Impossibilities, find Credit with you; yet surely, Gentlemen, you cannot be totally inattentive to the Testimony of several Persons of Credit and Character, who contradict the Prisoner in almost every Circumstance of her Narrative.

As to her Description of the Room, what say Mr. Nash, Hague, Aldridge, and Mr. White the Sheriff's Officer? They will give you such an Account of it, as must amaze you. The three first were her Friends, who went down to Enfield-Wash on the 1st of February, with her Master Mr. Lyon, to assist in this notable Discovery; they will give you the Reasons why they have not continued to be her Friends: That the Room Canning fixed upon as the Place of her Confinement, was a long, light Room, not a little, dark, square one: That the Dimensions of it were above thirty long, and only about nine Feet broad: That there was a large Quantity of Hay there, and an old rusty Hay-bed: That there was no Grate in the Room, and the Chimney so overspread with Cobwebs, that it was impossible there should have been a Grate there for some Months before: No Pictures over the Chimney, nor any Marks that there ever had been any, but in their Place an old Casement joined to the Wall by Cobwebs: That there were in different Parts of the Room three old Saddles, a Nest of old-fashioned Drawers, and a Tub of Pollard: That, on removing the Chest of Drawers from the Side of the Wall, they found it so affixed to it by Filth and Nastiness, that they are certain it could not be lately brought there: That they observed, under the Pulley of an old Jack-line, a large Hole in the Wall, which had Communication with the Kitchen, and commanded a View of every Thing that was done there. This Hole likewise had escaped Canning's Notice, though it will be proved to have been in the same Condition for many Years past. That, on the most careful Examination, they could not find that there either was, or ever had been, any Shed or Pent-house under the North Window, or any Thing which could possibly be mistaken for it: That the Room had a light Casement in it, large enough for a Person to get out; and that Canning being asked, why she did not make her Escape this Way, said, she believed it was fastened, but that she had never tried.

These were the Circumstances that staggered their Belief; nor could they account for the Prisoner's remembering none of these Things, though, during her long Continuance there, she had Leisure enough to have marked every Cranny in the Room, and to have counted every Nail in the Floor.

These Witnesses and others will inform you, that on her coming down to Enfield, she was first carried into the Kitchen, and set on the Dresser; and though the Door was open which led to the Hay-loft, yet she never once intimated that this was the Place where her Stays were cut off, but suffered herself afterwards to be carried over the rest of the House in Search of the Place of her Imprisonment. These Witnesses, and particularly White, will speak to the busy Officiousness of Scarrat and Adamson, in pulling down the Boards of the North Window, and in conveying the Pitcher into this Room before Canning came there; and that one of them was then dispatched to meet her on the Road,—with what View one may easily guess.

But in order to give you more convincing Proofs that Canning never was at Mother Wells's in the Month of January, Fortune Natus and Judith his Wife will assure you, that they lay in this very Room at the Time the Prisoner pretends she was there. This Fact they both asserted on the 1st of February, and this they would have given in Evidence on Squires's Trial, if the furious Temper of the Times would have permitted them, without the Hazard of their Lives, to have come into Court and given their Testimony. I will not say what are the usual Attendants of Fraud and Imposture; but thus much is certain, Truth wants not a Party-Mob to support it.

Another very remarkable Piece of Evidence to this Purpose, is the Attestation of three honest day-labouring Men, who on the 8th of January were lopping a Tree just over-against the East Window of this Room, and saw Virtue Hall and Sarah Howit looking out of the Casement; they had a deal of Chat with these Girls, and in Sport threw Dirt at them: Sarah Howit will confirm this, who is one of Mother Wells's Daughters. The Time will be fixed by John Cantril, a Publican, who used at that Season of the Year to give his Neighbours and Customers a cold Entertainment.

One Ezra Whiffin will tell you, he went into this Workshop with Mother Wells herself on the 17th of January, to fetch out the Irons of a Sign-arm he had bought of her, and that he then observed Fortune Natus's Hay-bed, at the Feet of which lay this Sign-arm. His Evidence will be supported likewise by his Son's; and the Time will be ascertained by a Note of Hand, which was just then become payable, and for the Discharge of which he was going to Wormleigh to borrow some Money. Ezra Whiffin will acquaint you how he came not to be examined at Mary Squires's Trial. I am sorry he has so good a Reason for his Absence. If the Avenues which lead to the Seat of Justice are to be surrounded and guarded by an inflamed Mob, what Security is there for our Lives and Properties; where is all our boasted Liberty?

Robert White, a poor labouring Man, will prove, that in the Month of January he was at Mother Wells's almost every Night in the Week, and that he frequently saw the People of the Family go in and out of this Room; though 'tis true he was never in it himself.

John Howit, and indeed all the People who were at the House, will affirm that Mother Wells kept Hay in this Room for her Horse, and Pollard for her Poultry, and that some one or other of them went in there every Day. If all this last Set of Witnesses are not forsworn, if but one of them speaks the Truth, what must we think of Canning's Assertion, That there was no body in the Room during the whole Time she was kept there?

As to the taking of the Bed-gown out of the Grate, two Gentlemen of Figure and Reputation will acquaint you, that the Prisoner, on her Examination at the Mansion-House, insisted upon taking away the Bed-gown with her, and said, it was her Mother's. If her Mother's, how could it be found at Mrs. Wells's, or taken out of the Grate, when there was no Grate in the Chimney?

Old Mrs. Canning's Midwife will inform you, that the Daughter's Shift, which she pretended she had worn a Month in that nasty Place, was not dirty enough to have been worn by a cleanly Person a Week; that it was not draggled in, the least, nor had any Spots of Dirt on it. Some other Particulars you will hear from her own Mouth, which perhaps may lead you to guess what was the Prisoner's Employment during this long Recess from the World and her Friends.

But if to all these Circumstances we add the incontestable Proof we have to produce of Mary Squires, and her Son George and Daughter Lucy, being at Abbotsbury on the 1st of January, what Opinion ought we to have of the Prisoner's Veracity? Let it be remembered likewise, that this is no new-invented Story; for at Enfield-Wash, as soon as the Gypsey was charged by Canning with having cut off her Stays on the 1st of January, she immediately answered, That can't be, for I was at that Time above a hundred Miles off at Abbotsbury. This Fact of the Gypsey's being then at Abbotsbury will be attested by above thirty Witnesses. The Unexceptionableness of their Characters, the amazing Consistency of their Evidence, their Remoteness of Habitation, and Ignorance of each other, as well as their having no Inducement to swear falsely, will, I am certain, not escape your particular Observation.

These Witnesses speak not only as to the Person of Mary Squires, but also to the Persons of the Son and Daughter, who travelled with her; they conversed with them; and several of them have known the old Woman for many Years last past, which removes all Possibility of imagining they are mistaken.

These Witnesses take up the Gypsies at South-Parrot on the 29th of December, about eight or ten Miles beyond Abbotsbury; and from thence from Place to Place, Step by Step, bring them to Enfield-Wash, but not till the 24th of January.

At Abbotsbury they stayed from the 1st of January till the 9th, appeared publicly, and were present at several Dancing-Matches: Lucy had a Sweetheart there, who accompanied her Part of her Journey, and was an Evidence for the old Woman on her Trial. The Time will be fixed to a Degree of Demonstration by the Excise-Books, to which Gibbons, who keeps the Skip Ale-house there, referred himself on his former Examination. The young Man who officiated for the Exciseman lay in the same Room with George Squires, and is now attending to be examined. A Number of little Circumstances will confirm their Testimony, and leave the Truth of it incontestable. A Piece of Nankeen left at one Place, a dead Horse seen at another, a Letter wrote by Lucy's Direction at Basingstoke, and which will be produced with the Post-mark on it, are some of those unerring Tokens, by which Truth is always to be distinguished from Falshood.

If the Gypsey was at Abbotsbury on the 1st of January, God (I hope) will forgive the Prisoner, for she has sworn that both the Mother and Daughter were then at Enfield-Wash.

After all these Contradictions, Absurdities, and glaring Falshoods, need I remark that the Prisoner (conscious of her Guilt) did not surrender herself till she was in Danger of an Outlawry? The fugam fecit is by our Law considered always as a strong Proof of Guilt, and is allowed as Evidence in all criminal Prosecutions. And now a Question may be asked, What could be the Prisoner's Inducement to all this? Mr. Davy has suggested Gain; and doubtless she and her Associates have had a plentiful Harvest. Perhaps this was only a secondary Motive; the primary one might be the Concealment of some Things from the World, which would have placed her Conduct in no very advantageous Light. But another ther Question may be asked, Where was she all this Time? Certainly it will appear she was not at Mocher Wells's, which is all that is necessary for us to shew in order for the Conviction of the Prisoner.

It was agreed upon by the Council on both Sides, that the Witnesses should be examined apart, and, when examined, not to return to the others. And they gave each other a List of their Witnesses Names.

William Chetbam. (He produced the Copy of the Record of the Conviction of Mary Squires.) This I examined at the Office at Hicks's-Hall; it is a true Copy.

Cross-examined.

Mr. Williams. How did you examine it?

Chetbam. I examined it with the Clerk of the Peace. I read this, and the other was read to me.

Mr. Williams. Did you read the Record?

Chetbam. I looked upon it when the Copy was read over, and saw that it was right.

*The Copy read in Court. The Purport of which was, that Mary Squires had a Bill of Indictment found against her at Hicks's-Hall before the Grand Jury for the County of Middlesex, for putting Eliz. Canning, Spinster, in bodily Fear, in the House of Susannah Wells, Widow, at Enfield-Wash, and stealing a Pair of Stays, Value ten Shillings, on the 2d of January, 1752. And that she was tried for the same at the Old-Bailey, in the February Sessions 1753, and found guilty of the Indictment.

When he was asked, if he saw Elizabeth Canning sworn upon that Trial, Mr. Davy answered, that was admitted.

Thomas Gurney sworn.

Mr. Davy. You are the Short-hand Writer, I believe, that took the Evidence here at the Old-Bailey, upon the Trial of Mary Squires for the Robbery of Elizabeth Canning?

Gurney. Yes.

Mr. Davy. I suppose you have got the Minutes you took at that Time.

Gurney. I have.

Mr. Davy. Please to mention the Evidence she gave.

Gurney. The Contents are in the Sessions-Paper.

Mr. Davy. You are to give an Account of all the Evidence she gave at that Time; you may refresh your Memory by looking on your Minutes.

Gurney. She said, she had been at Salt-Petre Bank to see her Uncle and Aunt there; her Uncle's Name was Thomas Colley. She went from Home about Eleven o'Clock, and stayed there till about Nine at Night, on the 1st of January; then came homewards; her Uncle and Aunt came with her as far as Aldgate, there they parted with her; and she had no body in Company with her; she came down Houndsditch, over Moorfields by Bedlam Wall; two Men came to her by Bedlam Gate, better than a Quarter after Nine o'Clock; they took hold on her, and said nothing. Then she was asked, what Sort of Men they were? she said, they were lusty Men. She was asked, if she

* To make this Trial of Canning's more complete, we shall here add the Trial of Mary Squires and Susannah Wells, from the Sessions-Paper; also the Lord-Mayor's Memorial, delivered to the King on Squires's behalf, &c.

The TRIAL of Mary Squires, and Susannah Wells, Widows, at the Sessions-House in the Old-Bailey, before the Right Hon. Sir Crisp Gascoyne, Knt. Lord-Mayor of the City of London, the Hon. Mr. Justice Wright, the Hon. Mr. Justice Gundry, the Hon. Mr. Baron Adams, William Moreton, Esq; Recorder, and others his Majesty's Justices of Oyer and Terminer of the City of London, and Justices of Goal-Delivery of Newgate, holden for the said City and County of Middlesex, on Wednesday the 21st of February, and continued till Monday the 26th, 1753.

MARY SQUIRES, Widow, and Susannah Wells, were indicted; the first, for that she, on the 2d of January, in the Dwelling-House of Susannah Wells, Widow, on Elizabeth Canning, Spinster, did make an Assault, putting her the said Elizabeth Canning in corporal Fear and Danger of her Life, and one Pair of Stays, Value ten Shillings, the Property of the said Elizabeth, from her Person, in the Dwelling-House, did steal, take, and carry away. And

The latter, for that she, well knowing her the said Mary Squires to have done and committed the Felony aforesaid on the said 2d of January, her the said Mary did then and there feloniously receive, harbour, comfort, conceal, and maintain, against his Majesty's Peace, and against the Form of the Statute.

Elizabeth Canning. I had been to Salt-Petre Bank to see an Uncle and Aunt; his Name is Thomas Colley. I set out from Home about Eleven in the Forenoon, and stayed there till about Nine at Night, on the 1st of January; then my Uncle and Aunt came with me as far as Aldgate, where we parted;

I was then alone, so came down Houndsditch, and over Moorfields by Bedlam Wall; there two lusty Men, both in great Coats, laid hold of me, one on each Side; they said nothing to me at first; but took Half a Guinea in a little Box out of my Pocket, and three Shillings that were loose.

Q. Which Man took that?

E. Canning. The Man on my right Hand. They took my Gown, Apron, and Hat, and folded them up, and put them into a great-coat Pocket. I screamed out; then the Man that took my Gown put a Handkerchief; or some such Thing, to my Mouth.

Q. Were there any Persons walking near you at that Time?

E. Canning. I saw no body. They then tied my Hands behind me; after which one of them gave me a Blow on the Temple, and said, D—n you, you B—h, we'll do for you by and by. I having been subject to Convulsion-Fits these four Years, this Blow stunned me, and threw me directly into a Fit.

Q. Are these Fits attended with a Struggling?

E. Canning.

lost any Thing? she said, Half a Guinea in a little Box, and three Shillings. She said, the Man that stood on the right Hand took it, and took her Gown, Apron, and Hat, folded them up, and put them into a great-coat Pocket; she screamed out; then one of them put a Handkerchief, or some such Thing, in her Mouth; it was the Man who took her Gown that did that, and that she saw no other Persons by at that Time; they then tied her Hands behind her; after that, one gave her a Blow on the Temple, and said, D—n you, you B—h, we will do for you by and by. Then she was asked about her having Fits; she said, she had been troubled with Fits four Years, that they were convulsive Fits. She gave an Account, that the Blow stunned her, and flung her into a Fit. She was asked, whether those Fits were attended with Struggling? she said, she could not tell. The next Account she gave was, she found herself by a large Road where there was some Water, and the two Men that robbed her were with her: She said, they lugged her along, and said, You B—h, why don't you walk faster? that one held her by one Arm, and the other by the other, while they pulled her along, and took her to the House of Susannah Wells, which was about Four o'Clock in the Morning. When she was asked, if she could form any Judgment of the Manner in which she was carried to the Place? she said, they dragged her along by the Petticoats, she thought, they being so dirty: That when she came there, it was not Day-light; that it was Day-light about three Hours after; that she believed it was then about Four o'Clock, and that she then saw the Gypsey Woman. She was then asked the Woman's Name; and she said, Mary Squires.

Mr. Davy. Was Mary Squires then at the Bar? Gurney. She was. She then went on and said, there were two young Women there, but she did not see the Prisoner Wells then; that the young Women were standing up, and the Gypsey Woman was sitting in a Chair: That when she was brought in, she took her by the Hand, and said, if she chose to go their Way, she should have fine Cloaths; that she said, No. She was then asked, if she explained the Words, go their Way? she said, she did not: That then the Gypsey took a Knife out of the Dresser-drawer, and cut the Lacing of her Stays, and took them from her. She was then asked, if she was under Apprehensions of Danger at that Time? she said, she thought they were going to cut her Throat. She was asked, if she saw Wells there? she said, No; and that Mary Squires looked at her Petticoat, and said, Here, you B—h, take that, or I will give you that, and gave her a Slap on the Face. She was asked, if she had the Petticoat in her Hand? she said, No, it was on me: Afterwards, she said, she pushed her up Stairs. She was asked to describe the Kitchen; she said, it was on the right Hand going in, and the Stairs by the Fire-side. She was asked, what they called the Place where she was? she said, the Hay-loft, and that it was not then Day-light. She gave an Account that the Room-door was shut, but she did not know whether it was fast or no; that the Door was at the Bottom of the Steps in the Kitchen. She said, that if

E. Canning. I don't know that.

Q. What happened afterwards?

E. Canning. The first Thing that I remember after this was, I found myself by a large Road, where was Water, with the two Men that robbed me.

Q. Had you any Discourse with them?

E. Canning. I had none; they took me to the Prisoner Wells's House.

Q. About what Time do you think it might be?

E. Canning. As near as I can think, it was about Four o'Clock in the Morning. I had recovered from my Fit about Half an Hour before I came to the House. They lugged me along, and said, You B—h, why don't you walk faster? One had hold on my right Arm, and the other on the left, and so pulled me along.

Q. Can you form any Judgment in what Manner you was conveyed to the Place before you recovered of your Fit?

E. Canning. I think they dragged me along by my Petticoats, they being so dirty.

Q. When you came to Wells's House, was it Day-light?

E. Canning. No, it was not; I think it was Day-light in about three Hours, or better, after I was there; which is the Reason I believe I was carried in about Four o'Clock.

Q. When you was carried in, what did you see there?

E. Canning. I saw the Gypsey Woman Squires, who was sitting in a Chair, and two young Women in the same Room; Virtue Hall (the Evidence) was one; they were standing against a Dresser.

Q. Did you see the Prisoner (Wells) there?

E. Canning. No, I did not. As soon as I was brought in, Mary Squires took me by the Hand, and asked me if I chose to go their Way, saying, if I did, I should have fine Cloaths; I said, No.

Q. Did she explain to you what she meant by going their Way?

E. Canning. No, Sir. Then she went and took a Knife out of a Dresser-drawer, and cut the Lace of my Stays, and took them from me.

Q. Had you, at that Time, any Apprehensions of Danger?

E. Canning. I thought she was going to cut my Throat, when I saw her take the Knife.

Q. Did you see the Prisoner (Wells) at that Time?

E. Canning. No, I did not.

Q. Was any thing else taken from you?

E. Canning. There was not then; but Squires looked at my Petticoat, and said, Here, you B—h, you may keep that, or I'll give you that, it is not worth much, and gave me a Slap on the Face.

Q. Had she the Petticoat in her Hand?

E. Canning. No, it was on me. After that, she pushed me up Stairs from out of the Kitchen, where we were.

Q. Describe the Kitchen.

E. Canning. The Kitchen was at the right Hand going in at the Door, and the Stairs are near the Fire.

Q. How many Steps to them?

E. Canning. There are Four or Five of them.

Q. What did they call the Name of the Place where they put you in?

E. Canning. They call it the Hay-loft. The Room-door was shut as soon as I was put up.

Q. Was it fastened?

E. Canning.

if she (the Gypsey Woman) heard her stir or move, or Words to that Purpose, she said she would cut her Throat. She was asked, if she saw any thing brought up to eat or drink? she said, No: That when Day-light appeared she could see about the Room. She was asked, what sort of a Room it was? she said, a long Room, with a Fire-place and a Grate; that there was no Bed or Bedstead, only Hay to lie upon; that she saw a black Pitcher, which was produced in Court; then she said, This is the Pitcher, it was full up to near the Neck with Water, and about twenty-four Pieces of Bread. She was then asked, how great a Quantity of Bread there was? she said, about a Quartern Loaf; and that she had a Penny Mince-pye in her Pocket, that she bought to carry Home to her Brother. Then she gave an Account that she was confined there a Month by the Weeks, all but a few Hours; and that she saw no body in the Room all that Time, only she once saw a Person look through the Crack of the Door, but did not know who it was. Then she was asked, if she had made any Attempt to get out before? she said, No. Then she was asked, what Time she got out? she said, about Four o'Clock in the Afternoon on a Monday. Then she was asked again, how long she had been confined there? she said, four Weeks, all but a few Hours; she said, she broke down a Board from the Window, and got out. She was then asked, how high that Window was from the Ground? she then pointed to a Place in the Court, which was about eight or ten Feet high: She gave an Account, that she first put her Head out, and got fast hold on the Wall, then got her Body out, and then jumped into a little narrow Place by a Lane. She was asked, if she did not hurt herself? she said, there was some soft Clay: Then she gave an Account that it was Day-light. She was asked, what she had for Cloathing? she said, she took a Bed-gown and Handkerchief, which lay in the Grate in the Chimney. Then she was asked, if she saw any body when she got out? she said, she did not. Then she went up the Back of the House, crossed a little Brook over two Fields, as she thought, and there got into the Road-way, then she went straight up the Road to London. She gives an Account, that she did not know the Way, therefore asked her Way to London. Then she was asked, if she called by the Way? she said, she did not call at any House; but coming over Moorfields, the Clock struck Ten. She was asked, if she acquainted any body with it? she said, No, she got to her Mother's in Aldermanbury a Quarter after Ten o'Clock; the first Person she met with was the Apprentice, then she saw her Mother and the Children; her Mother, she says, went into Fits directly.

Mr. Davy. As far as you have mentioned, are you able to say, upon your Oath, that that was the Evidence that the Girl, upon her Oath, then gave in Court?

Gurney. The Substance of it is the Evidence she gave in Court.

Cross-examined.

Mr. Moreton. What Day did she say she was robbed?

Gurney.

E. Canning. I don't know that; it was at the Bottom of the Stairs in the Kitchen. After she shut the Door, she said, if ever she heard me stir or move, or any such thing, she'd cut my Throat.

Q. Did you see any thing brought up to eat or drink?

E. Canning. I saw nothing brought up. When Day-light appeared, I could see about the Room; there was a Fire-place and a Grate in it, no Bed nor Bedstead, nothing but Hay to lie upon; there was a black Pitcher not quite full of Water, and about twenty-four Pieces of Bread, (a Pitcher produced in Court.) This is the Pitcher, which was full to near the Neck.

Q. How much in Quantity do you think these twenty-four Pieces of Bread might be?

E. Canning. I believe about a Quartern Loaf.

Q. Had you nothing else to subsist on?

E. Canning. I had in my Pocket a Penny Mince-pye, which I bought that Day to carry Home to my Brother.

Q. How long did you continue in that Room?

E. Canning. A Month by the Weeks, all but a few Hours.

Q. What do you mean by a Month by the Weeks?

E. Canning. I mean a four-weeks Month.

Q. Did any body come to you in the Room during that Time?

E. Canning. No, Sir, no body at all. On the Wednesday before I came away, I saw somebody look through the Crack of the Door, but don't know who it was.

Q. Did you, during the Time you was in this Confinement, make any Attempts to come down Stairs, or make your Escape?

VOL. X.

E. Canning. No, Sir, I did not till the Time I got out.

Q. Had you any thing to subsist on during the Time, besides the Pieces of Bread, Penny Pye, and Pitcher of Water?

E. Canning. No, I had not.

Q. At what Time did you get out?

E. Canning. I got out about Four o'Clock in the Afternoon on a Monday, after I had been confined there four Weeks, all but a few Hours.

Q. How did you get out?

E. Canning. I broke down a Board that was nailed up at the Inside of a Window, and got out there.

Q. How high was the Window from the Ground?

E. Canning. (She described it by the Height of a Place in the Sessions-House, which was about eight or ten Feet high.) First I got my Head out, and kept fast hold by the Wall, and got my Body out; after that I turned myself round, and jumped into a little narrow Place by a Lane, with a Field behind it.

Q. Did not the Jump hurt you?

E. Canning. No, it was soft clay Ground.

Q. Was it light then?

E. Canning. It was.

Q. What did you do for Cloathing?

E. Canning. I took an old sort of a Bed-gown and a Handkerchief, that were in this Hay-loft, and lay in a Grate in the Chimney. (Produced in Court.) I made my Ear bleed at getting out; the Handkerchief I tied over my Head instead of a Cap, it was very bloody.

Q. Did you see any body when you jumped out at the Window?

3 M

E. Canning.

Gurney. I have it in my Minutes that it was the 11th of January, which was the Day she went to see her Uncle.

Mr. Davy. Now describe what she observed in the Hay-loft.

Gurney. There was a Barrel, a Saddle, a Bafon, and a Tobacco-mould, in the Room where she was. She was asked, what she meant by a Tobacco-mould? she said, what People do up Papers of Tobacco in.

Mr. Davy. Now please to go on where you left off.

Gurney. She was then asked, if she had given the Account to any body at that Time? she said, Yes, to Mrs. Woodward, who came to see her; she told her she had lived upon Bread and Water.

Mr. Davy. Did she say Mrs. Woodward was so frightened she could not ask her any Questions?

Gurney. She said, she did not ask her any more Questions then. Then she says, Mr. Wintlebury came in, with whom she had lived Servant: He took her by the Hand, and asked, where she had been? she said, on the Hertfordshire Road: He said, Bet, how do you know that? she said, Because I have seen my Mistrefs's Coachman go by, knowing them to go to Hertfordshire; she said, she knew it, for she used to carry Things to the Coach, and fetch them back again. Then she was asked, if she was asked any Questions that Night about the Room or Jug? she said, she had told them there was a Jug not quite full: That they asked her, how much? she said, better than a Gallon. She was asked, how she got out of the Window? then gave an Account how she tore her Ear in getting out.

Upon her Cross-Examination; she gave an Account, that the two Men were with her about Half an Hour in Moorfields, and that no body else was by, and there was a Box taken out of her Pocket: Then she gave an Account, that she had a Handkerchief, which she did not lose. She was asked, if there was any Light near the Place where she was first attacked? she said, there was a Lamp. She was asked, how long it was before she came to herself? she could not be sure, but she came to herself Half an Hour before she came to the House of Wells. She was then asked, if she had any Degree of Sense? she said as before, she had none, only about Half an Hour before she got to Mrs. Wells's House: Then she was asked the Question again, to which she answered as before. Then she was asked, if she had Sense enough of any Sort to know by what Means she was conducted there? she said, she thought they dragged her along by the Petticoats, for they were dirty. Then she gave an Account, that she was in a great Surprize and all of a Tremble, and the Terror made her sensible. Then she gave an Account, that the two Men stayed there no longer than till they saw her Stays cut off; then they went away, before she was put in the Hay-loft. She said, she did not attempt to get out of the Hay-loft till Monday: She was asked, why she did not? she said, she thought they might let her out, and that it never came into her Head till that Morning: Then she was asked, where she was sitting, when she

E. Canning. No, no body at all; then I went on the Backside the House up a Lane, and crossed a little Brook, and over two Fields, as I think, but I did not take Notice how many Fields; the Path-way brought me by the Road-side. Then I went by the Road straight to London.

Q. Did you know the Way?

E. Canning. I did not.

Q. Did you call at any House?

E. Canning. No, I did not. It struck Ten o'Clock just as I came over Moorfields. I got Home about a Quarter after to my Mother's House in Aldermanbury.

Q. Did you acquaint any body with your Misfortune coming along?

E. Canning. No, I did not.

Q. Who did you meet with first?

E. Canning. I met with the Apprentice first; then I saw my Mother and the Children. She went into a Fit directly.

Q. Did you give an Account to any body how you had been treated?

E. Canning. Yes, I did to Mrs. Woodward, who came to see me, that I had lived on Bread and Water. She was so affrighted, she could not ask me many Questions then; then Mr. Wintlebury came in, with whom I lived Servant before I went to live with Mr. Lyon; he took me by my Hand, and asked me where I had been; I said, Sir, in Hertfordshire Road; he said, Bet, how do you know that? I said, Because I saw my Mistrefs's Coachman go by, which she used to go into the Country into Hertfordshire, that was Mrs. Wintlebury; I knew the Coach, because I used to carry Things to it, and fetch them back again.

Q. Was you asked any Questions about the Room or Jug that Night, and what you had to subsist on?

E. Canning. Yes, there were many People came in, and I told them I had a Jug which was not quite full of Water; they asked me, how much? and I said, I believed better than a Gallon of it: They asked me also, how I got out? and I said, I broke out of the Window, and hard torn my Ear in getting out, which bled all the Way coming Home.

Q. What Things did you observe in this Hay-loft?

E. Canning. There was a Barrel, a Saddle, a Bafon, and a Tobacco-mould.

Q. What do you mean by a Tobacco-mould?

E. Canning. I mean such a Thing that they do up Pennyworths of Tobacco with.

Cross-Examination.

Q. How long might these two Men continue with you in Moorfields?

E. Canning. About Half an Hour.

Q. Did any body pass by at the Time?

E. Canning. No body at all.

Q. Was this Box, that contained your Half Guinea, taken out of your Pocket?

E. Canning. Yes, Sir, it was.

Q. Had you any thing else in your Pocket?

E. Canning. I had a Pocket-handkerchief with a Pye in it, which I did not lose.

Q. Was there any Light near this Place where you was first attacked?

E. Canning. There was a Lamp.

Q. Have you recollected how long you lay in this Fit before you came to yourself?

E. Canning.

she saw somebody peeping through the Door? she said, she was walking along the Room: She said, there were four or five Steps up, and that she did not in all the Time perceive where she was, till about a Week after she was there, and that was by looking out of the Window and seeing the Coach. She was asked, if she was not extremely weak? she said, she was; her Words were, I was pretty weak. Then she was asked, whether she was that Way before? she said, she was not. She gives an Account of passing by many Houses, and asking the Way of the People on the Road. Then she was asked, why she did not go into any House? she said, she thought she might meet somebody belonging to that House, that might know her and take her back again. Then she was asked over again, the first Time of her making the Discovery: She said, it was in her Mother's House; and then she gave an Account where her Mother's House is, the Corner of Aldermanbury. Then she gives an Account to Questions asked before, whether she saw Mrs. Wells at the Time she was there? she then said, she saw her afterwards when she went down to the House. She was asked again about it, whether she is certain to the Prisoner Squires? and she says, she is sure she is the Person who cut her Stays off, and she was sitting in a Gown and a white Handkerchief about her Head. She was asked, during her whole Confinement, whether she tried to see if the Door was fast? she said, she had pushed against it, and found it fast. She was asked, whether she heard any Noise in the Kitchen? she said, she heard People blowing the Fire, and passing in and out; and there was another Room she heard a Noise in of Nights, but that it was very quiet of Days, being a House of Entertainment in the Night. She said, that she eat all her Bread on the Friday before she got out. Then she was asked, how she eat it? she said, it was quite hard, that she was forced to soak it in the Water, and that she drank all her Water about Half an Hour before she got out. Then she was asked, where she did her Occasions? she said, she had never a Stool during the Time she was there, only made Water.

Mr. Davy. Was the Apprentice she says she saw first, examined as a Witness on that Trial?

Gurney. No.

Cross-examined.

Mr. Moreton. Were Mr. Nash, Mr. Hague, and Mr. Aldridge, examined as Witnesses?

Gurney. They were not.

Esther Hopkins sworn.

I live in Dorsetshire, at South-Parrot.

Mr. Willes. How far is that from Abbotsbury?

Esther Hopkins. I don't know, it is the lowest Part of Dorsetshire; it is about a Mile from Winyard's Gap. I keep a House of Entertainment for Travellers of all Sorts.

Mr. Willes. Look at that old Woman sitting there; do you know her?

E. Hopkins. I really believe in my Conscience, this is the old Woman that was at my House on the 29th of December 1752, with her Son. I remember the Son particularly well: They lodged there one Night, and went away the next Morning.

Mr.

E. Canning. I cannot be sure, but it was about Half an Hour before I arrived in Wells's House.

Q. During the Time of your first being attacked, whether you had any Degree of Sense at all?

E. Canning. Not till Half an Hour before I came to that House.

Q. Had you Sense enough of any Sort to know by what Means you was conducted?

E. Canning. I think they dragged me along by my Petticoats, they were made so dirty; but I was not sensible.

Q. Was you in any Surprise when she took your Stays?

E. Canning. I was in a great Surprise, and all of a Tremble.

Q. Then how can you tell who was there at the Time?

E. Canning. The Terror made me look about me to see what Company was there.

Q. How long did the two Men stay in the Room?

E. Canning. They stayed no longer than till they saw my Stays cut off, then they went away, before I was put up in the Loft.

Q. Did not you make an Attempt to get out before that Monday you talk on?

E. Canning. I did not.

Q. How came you not to make an Attempt before?

E. Canning. Because I thought they might let me out; it never came into my Head till that Morning.

Q. Where was you sitting, when you saw somebody peep through the Crack of the Door?

E. Canning. I was walking along the Room.

Q. How wide was this Crack?

E. Canning. It was about a Quarter of an Inch wide.

Q. Did not you, in the whole twenty-seven Days, perceive where you was?

E. Canning. I did in about a Week after, by seeing the Coach go by.

Q. Was not you extreme weak?

E. Canning. I was pretty weak.

Q. Was you ever that Way before?

E. Canning. No, I never was.

Q. Did not you pass many Houses in your Way Home?

E. Canning. I did, and asked my Way of People on the Road.

Q. How came you, being in that deplorable Condition, not to go into some House, and relate the Hardships you had gone through?

E. Canning. I thought, if I did, may be I might meet somebody belonging to that House.

Q. Did you see the Prisoner (Wells) while you was in that Confinement?

E. Canning. I never saw her in the House at all till I went down afterwards.

Q. Had you any of your Fits while in that Room?

E. Canning. I had not, but was fainting and sick. Squires. I never saw that Witness in my Lifetime till this Day three Weeks.

Q. How was the Prisoner (Squires) dressed, when you was carried in?

E. Canning. She was sitting in her Gown with a Handkerchief about her Head.

Q. Did you never, during all the Time, try if the Door was fastened or not?

E. Canning.

Mr. Willes. Do you remember what Day of the Week it was?

E. Hopkins. I cannot say that I can.

Mr. Willes. How do you remember the Day of the Month?

E. Hopkins. Because there were several Gentlemen there in Company at that Time, and two of them left the Reckoning to pay, and I put down the Day of the Month, and I keep my Book by the Almanack.

Mr. Willes. Do you remember any Thing of her Daughter being there?

E. Hopkins. I don't remember whether it was the Daughter or not; I remember the old Woman; I think I never saw a Woman more particular in my Life; she told me the young Woman was her Daughter, and the other was her Son.

Mr. Willes. Did they tell you where they were going next Morning?

E. Hopkins. No, they did not.

Mr. Willes. Look at the young Man and young Woman behind her; do you know them, or either of them?

E. Hopkins. That is the Man (pointing to George Squires) to the best of my Knowledge.

Cross-examined.

Mr. Moreton. I think you did not seem to speak positively to the old Woman.

E. Hopkins. I never saw a Woman more like her in all the Days of my Life, and I really believe she is the Woman.

Mr. Moreton. Have you not many Passengers lie at your House?

E. Hopkins. Some or other lie at my House every Night.

Mr. Moreton. What was her Business? did she sell any Thing?

E. Hopkins. I asked them, what they sold? they told me, Hard-ware.

Mr. Moreton. Did they sell any Thing in your House?

E. Hopkins. No.

Mr. Moreton. Did you see any Thing they had to sell?

E. Hopkins. The Man carried a Bundle or Bag; not very large, under his Arm.

Mr. Moreton. Had they a Horse?

E. Hopkins. I suppose they had not.

Mr. Moreton. Had you ever seen the old Woman before?

E. Hopkins. No, I had not.

Alice Farnham sworn.

I live at Winyard's Gap; it is a Mile South from South-Parrot, in the lower Part of Dorsetshire, and about ten from Abbotsbury; it lies between them.

Mr. Gascoyne. How far is it from Litton?

A. Farnham. I don't justly know, I believe it is about ten or eleven Miles.

Mr. Gascoyne. Look at that old Woman; do you know her?

A. Farnham. I remember I saw her once on a Saturday Morning, between Eight and Nine o'Clock, a little after New Christmas 1752: She came in at my House for Refreshment: I keep a Public House: I took particular Notice of her, and

E. Canning. I did once push against it with my Hand, and found it fast.

Q. Had you used to hear any body in the Kitchen?

E. Canning. I heard People sometimes blowing the Fire, and passing in and out. There was another Room in which I heard a Noise at Nights, but the House was very quiet in the Day-time.

Q. Did you eat all your Bread?

E. Canning. I eat it all on the Friday before I got out; it was quite hard, and I used to soak it in the Water.

Q. When did you drink all your Water?

E. Canning. I drank all that about Half an Hour before I got out of the Room.

(Upon being asked, where she did her Occasions while in the Room, she answered, she never had had any Stool while in Confinement, she had only made Water.)

Virtue Hall. I know the two Prisoners at the Bar; Wells lived at Enfield-Wash; I went and lived there as a Lodger. Mary Squires lived in the House, and had been there about seven or eight Weeks.

Q. How long before E. Canning was brought in?

V. Hall. About a Fortnight before, which was on the 2d of January, about Four in the Morning; she was brought in there by two Men; John Squires was one of them; he is Son to Mary Squires; the other Man I don't know any thing of; I never saw him before.

Q. How was she dressed when brought in?

V. Hall. She had no Gown on, or Hat or Apron.

Q. Who was in the House at the Time?

V. Hall. There was I and Mary Squires, the Prisoner and her Daughter. The Gypsey Man said, Mother, I have brought you a Girl, do you take her: Then she asked E. Canning, whether she would go her Way.

Q. What did she mean by that?

V. Hall. She meant for her to turn Whore, but she would not.

Q. Do you mention this by way of Explanation, or as Words that she said?

V. Hall. As Words that she said; then Mary Squires took a Knife out of a Dresser-drawer in the Kitchen, and ripped the Lace of her Stays, and pulled them off, and hung them on the Back of a Chair in the Kitchen, and pushed her up into the Room, and said, D—n you, go up there then, if you please; then the Man that came in with the Gypsey's Son, took the Cap off E. Canning's Head, and went out a doors with it; the Gypsey Man John Squires took the Stays off the Chair, and went out with them.

Q. Where was E. Canning, when the two Men took away the Things?

V. Hall. She was then up in the Room.

Q. Had you ever been in that Room?

V. Hall. I had, before she was brought there, several Times.

Q. What was the Name they call it by?

V. Hall. They call it by the Name of the Workshop; there was a great deal of Hay in it; they only put Lumber in it; there was a great many Pieces of Wood, a Tobacco-mould, and this black Jug; about three Hours after the young Woman was put up, Mary Squires filled the Jug with Water, and carried it up.

Q. How

and compared her to a Picture that I had in the Room of old Mother Sbipton; there was a young Man and Woman with her.

Mr. Gascoyne. Look at that Man.

A. Farnbam. I see him; I know him perfectly well; it is her Son.

Mr. Gascoyne. Look at the young Woman near him.

A. Farnbam. I think, to my Knowledge, she is the same Person; they stayed with me almost an Hour that Morning; I never saw them before or since; they had one Quart of Beer and some Bread and Cheese; and told me they would come to see me again in Old Christmas Holidays; they asked me how far it was to Litton, and went up the Road, all three of them together, towards it; I am certain I know the old Woman and her Son.

Mr. Gascoyne. How far is Litton from your House?

A. Farnbam. It is ten or eleven Miles.

Mr. Gascoyne. Had you seen them before they came to your House?

A. Farnbam. I was coming out of South-Parrot on the Friday Night, and met them as they were going in, and the next Morning they came to my House; I told my Mother, as we were laughing and talking, that I had met three Gypsies, and she asked me, if I was not affrighted.

Mr. Gascoyne. How do you know that this was before Old Christmas?

A. Farnbam. My Mother was a brewing, and I went and asked her, if she would let me go to Crookborne Market, which is on a Saturday: She told me, she could not spare me, and said it would be rare enough to go on Monday to buy some Things against Old Christmas; and this was just as those People went out at the Door.

Cross-examined.

Mr. Nares. When was the first Time you saw them?

A. Farnbam. It was on the Friday Night.

Mr. Nares. Do you know where they lay that Night?

A. Farnbam. No, I cannot tell; when they came into my House, they asked me, how far it was from South-Parrot, and I said, one Mile.

Mr. Nares. What Sign is yours, you keep?

A. Farnbam. I keep the Sign of the Three Horse-shoes; it is a Public House.

Mr. Nares. What made you think they were Gypsies?

A. Farnbam. Because they were all three together; one had a little Bag in his Hand, not a large one nor a small one; it was about as much as I could carry under my Arm; it was a little Fardle.

Mr. Nares. Which had that?

A. Farnbam. To the best of my Knowledge, the Man had the Bag.

Mr. Nares. How was this old Woman dressed?

A. Farnbam. She had a sort of a drab-coloured Cloak on, and a sort of a Serge Gown.

Mr. Nares. Was it whole or ragged?

A. Farnbam. It was not Rags.

Mr. Nares. How was the Daughter dressed?

A. Farnbam. She had a white Gown on and a red

Q. How do you know it was three Hours after?

V. Hall. Then it began to be lightish.

Q. Did you hear any Talk between them after she was in the Room?

V. Hall. They took Care I should know but little.

Q. Has Susannah Wells a Husband?

V. Hall. No, she has not: When I went out of the Kitchen, I went into the Parlour; Wells said, Virtue Hall, the Gypsies came in and told me, that his Mother had cut the Stays off the young Woman's Back, and he had got them; and she bid me not to say any thing to make a Clack of it, fearing it should be known.

Q. How long was you in that House?

V. Hall. I was there a Quarter of a Year in all, if not more; I was there the whole Time E. Canning was there; but I never saw her once after she was put up into that Room. I was the first that missed her; I asked the Gypsies Woman once, whether that Girl was gone? She answered, What is that to you, you have no Business with it: But I durst not go to see if she was gone; if I had, very likely they would have served me so.

Q. Did you ever see the other Man after that Night?

V. Hall. No, I never did.

Q. Who lodged in the House at the Time besides?

V. Hall. There was Fortune Natus did.

Q. Did Mary Squires continue in the House long after this?

V. Hall. She did, till we were all taken up, which was I think on the Thursday after the young Woman was gone.

VOL. X.

Q. What was you in that House?

V. Hall. I went there as a Lodger, but I was forced to do as they would have me.

Q. from Mary Squires. What Day was it that the young Woman was robbed?

Court. She says on the Morning of the 2d of January.

M. Squires. I return Thanks for telling me, for I am as innocent as the Child unborn.

Q. from Wells. How long were these People (meaning the Gypsies) at my House in all, from first to last?

V. Hall. They were there six or seven Weeks in all; they had been there about a Fortnight before the young Woman was brought in.

Q. Did you ever see this Cap or Bed-gown before?

V. Hall. Not to my Knowledge.

Thomas Colley. I am E. Canning's Uncle; I live at Salt-Petre Bank; on the New-year's Day she dined and supped at my House, and went away about Nine in the Evening, as near as I can guess; I and my Wife went along with her to Houndsditch, almost to the Blue-Ball; there we parted with her, about a Quarter or very near Half an Hour after Nine o'Clock.

Q. How was she cloathed?

Colley. She had a Gown, Hat, and white Apron on.

Elizabeth Canning. E. Canning that has given her Evidence is my Daughter; after she was missing from New-year's Day, I advertised her three Times; she came back on the Day before red Cloak; it was a sort of a Holland Gown; very clean and neat.

Mr. Nares. Then she did not look like a Traveller or Gypsy by her Dress?

A. Farnham. No, she did not.

Mr. Nares. Did you inquire of them, what Business they were of?

A. Farnham. No, I did not inquire that; they asked me for one Mug of Beer, and I drew it them; they stayed almost an Hour.

Mr. Nares. Was you with them all the Time they stayed?

A. Farnham. Yes; I was.

Mr. Nares. Look at them, and tell us from the Dress they are in now, and the Dress they were in then, whether you are certain they are the same Persons?

A. Farnham. To the best of my Knowledge, they are the same Persons.

Mr. Moreton. I think it is opened that the young Man and young Woman (meaning George and Lucy Squires) are to be examined; if so, they ought not to be in Court to hear the other Witnesses examined.

Mr. Davy. Then I'll either call them next; or not at all, which you chuse.

Mr. Moreton. Then call them next.

Mr. Nares. Did they make the same Appearance they do now, or a different one?

A. Farnham. They were very well dressed, as they are now; they were clean and fitty.

Mr. Nares. Did the old Woman appear to be as weak as she is now?

A. Farnham. She was very unhealthy, seemingly coming up against the Hill.

Mr. Nares. Could she walk without Assistance?

A. Farnham. She did not hold by them, they walked before her.

Mr. Nares. Can you take upon you to swear to the Identity of her Person?

A. Farnham. I do think she is; I took a true Observation of her; she had a great Nose and Lips.

Mr. Nares. Did you take Observation of her Daughter?

A. Farnham. I did; she seem'd to be a very clean Sort of a Body, and of a black Complexion.

Mr. Nares. What did you think them to be?

A. Farnham. I took them to be Travellers; I did not know whether they sold any Thing for a Livelihood; they offered me nothing, and I asked them for nothing; they paid for what they had.

Mr. Davy. Lucy must go out while George is examined. (She goes out of the Court.)

George Squires sworn.

Mr. Davy. What Relation is that old Woman to you?

G. Squires. My own Mother, and the young Woman that is turned out is my Sister Lucy.

Mr. Davy. Where was you on the Christmas before your Mother was taken up?

G. Squires. Really I cannot tell you.

Mr. Davy. Was you ever in Devonshire?

G. Squires. I am not acquainted there; I was in Somersetshire in Queen-Canneal.

Mr. Davy. Was you ever in South-Parrot?

G. Squires. I was.

Mr. Davy. Can you remember the Time?

G. Squires. I came there on a Friday Night.

Mr.

King Charles's Martyrdom, about a Quarter after Ten o'Clock at Night; she had nothing but this ragged Bed-gown and a Cap; I fell into a Fit directly; my Daughter is subject to Fits; there was a Garret Ceiling fell in upon her Head, which first occasioned them; and at times, when any body speaks hastily to her, or at any Surprize, she is very liable to fall in one; she has sometimes continued in one seven or eight Hours, sometimes three or four; she is not sensible during the Time she is in one, no more than a new-born Babe; when I came to myself, my Daughter was talking to Mrs. Woodward and Mr. Wintlebury; they asked her, where she had been? she said, on the Hertfordshire Road, which she knew by seeing a Coach going by; she gave the same Account she has here. When she came into her warm Bed, she was very sick, and had no free Passage through her for Stool or Urine, till she was supply'd with Glysters, for seven Days after she came Home, but what was forced by half a Cup-full at a Time.

John Wintlebury. I saw Elizabeth Canning the Night she came Home; she appeared in a very bad Condition, and had this dirty Bed-gown and Cap on. Hearing she was come Home, I went to her Mother's House, and said, Bet, how do you do? She said, I am very bad. Said I, Where have you been? She said, I have been somewhere on the Hertfordshire Road, because I have seen the Hertfordshire Coach go backwards and forwards.

Q. Have you heard the Evidence she has given here in Court?

Wintlebury. I have; she gave the same Account that Night, but not quite so fully that Night, as she did before the Sitting Alderman on the Wednesday after; but all agrees with what she has said here. I found her in a great Flurry, so did not ask her many Questions that Night.

Joseph Adamson. I have known Elizabeth Canning the younger some Years. I never saw her after she came Home, till the Day we went down to take the People up. I, and several Neighbours of us, agreed to go to the Place, some on Horseback, and some in the Coach with E. Canning. I was down about an Hour, or an Hour and half, before the Coach came, and had secured all the People we found there. I seeing the Room before she was brought in, thought she was capable of giving some Account of it: I returned to meet her, and asked her about it; she described the Room with some Hay in it, a Chimney-place in the Corner of it, an odd Sort of an empty Room. I went with her to the House, and carried her out of the Chaise into the Kitchen, and set her on the Dresser, and ordered all the People to be brought to her, to see if she knew any of them; she was then very weak. I took her in my Arms like a Child. Upon seeing Mary Squires, she said, That is the Woman that cut my Stays off, and threatened to cut my Throat if I made a Noise.

Q. Did any of the People seem unwilling to be inspected?

Adamson. Yes, they were very unwilling to be stopped, when we went down in the Morning, particularly Mary Squires; after the Girl had said this

Mr. Davy. What Day of the Month was it?

G. Squires. It was on the 29th of December; my Mother and Sister Lucy were there with me.

Mr. Davy. What makes you certain as to the Time?

G. Squires. It was after New Christmas, that made me take an Account of it.

Mr. Davy. At whose House was you?

G. Squires. I put up at the Sign of the Red Lion, to the best of my Knowledge; her Name is Hopkins; I have been there since, we stayed there but one Night.

Mr. Davy. From whence did you come to that Place?

G. Squires. We came from it by Yeovil.

Mr. Davy. What was the last Village you came from, when you came to South-Parrot?

G. Squires. I can't recollect it.

Mr. Davy. Where did you lie the Night before you came to South-Parrot?

G. Squires. I cannot tell the Place's Name.

Mr. Davy. How long had your Mother, Sister, and you been travelling together?

G. Squires. I came from Home at Newington-Butts in Southwark, and I went from thence, as near as I can guess, about seven or eight Weeks before Michaelmas.

Mr. Davy. Can't you recollect the Place you lay at before you came to South-Parrot?

G. Squires. It was a pretty large Village.

Mr. Davy. How many Miles had you travelled that Day?

G. Squires. We had travelled about seven or eight Miles.

Mr. Davy. Where did you go the next Day, that is the Saturday?

G. Squires. I went to Litton.

Mr. Davy. Is not there a Town between South-Parrot and Litton?

G. Squires. There is Winyard's Gap.

Mr. Davy. How far is South-Parrot from Litton?

G. Squires. It is ten or twelve Miles, to the best of my Knowledge; I lay at Litton on the Saturday, and left my Sister and Mother there on the Sunday Morning, and went to Abbotsbury.

Mr. Davy. What Day of the Month was the Sunday?

G. Squires. It was the 31st Day of the Month; my Mother stayed there one Night after me; Mr. Clarke had then a good Regard for my Sister Lucy; he was a Sweetheart of hers, and she of his; I went to him at Abbotsbury, and lay at Gibbons's House one Night; then in the Morning, which was on a Monday the 1st of January, Clarke and I went to Litton; there we dined upon two Fowls, which I bought: My Mother was surpris'd at my staying all Night at Abbotsbury, and she went in pretence to see what was the Matter with me, thinking I was sick; there she heard I was gone with Clarke to Litton, and she came back again to Litton before we had dined.

Mr. Davy. How far is Litton from Abbotsbury?

G. Squires. It is three or four Miles.

Mr. Davy. Who walked with your Mother to Abbotsbury?

G. Squires. No body, that I know of; after Dinner, my Mother, Sister, Clarke, and I walked to this of Squires, Squires said to her, she hoped she would not swear her Life away, for she never saw her before: E. Canning pointed to Virtue Hall, and said, That young Woman was in the Kitchen, when I was brought in: She pointed also to another young Woman, and said, she was there at the Time. Then we carried her up to examine the House; she said, none of the Rooms she had seen, was the Room in which she was confined: Then I asked if there were any other Rooms; they said, Yes, out of the Kitchen, (I had before been in it, but did not say so then, because I had a mind to see if she knew it.) We had her up into it: She said, This is the same Room in which I was, but here is more Hay in it than there was then: I laid my Hand upon it, and said, It has lately been shook up, it lay hollow. She was then pretty near a Casement; said I, If you have been so long in this Room, doubtless you are able to say what is to be seen out here. She described a Hill at a Distance, which is Chinkford Hill: I believe she could not see it at the Time she spoke about it, for I was between her and the Casement, with my Back towards the Casement. She also said there were some Houses on the other Side the Lane; then I opened the Casement, we looked, and it was as she had described. I asked, where was the Window she broke out of? she shewed it us, (there were some Boards nailed up against it,) and said, That is the Window I used to see the Coach go by at: Then we pulled down the Board; it was big enough for me to have got out of it; it appeared to me to be the same Window, before she came to the House, for I saw some of the Plaster broke off on the Outside; that Window was one Story high.

Edward Lyon. The young Woman lived Servant with me till she was missing. I live in Aldermanbury. I was one of the Persons, that went down to Wells's House. I went after the rest of the Gentlemen on the 1st of February; we were there some time before she came, and had taken the People up; when she came, she was carried into the Kitchen, and set on a Dresser, and the People set all round her! I said to her, Bet, don't be frightened or uneasy, you see your Friends about you, and on the other hand don't be too sure, without you really can swear to what you say, therefore be very careful: She pitched upon Mary Squires to be the Person that cut her Stays off; she pitched upon a young Woman that was said to be Daughter to Mary Squires, and said, she was in the Kitchen at the Time, and likewise Virtue Hall, but said they did nothing to her. This black Jug was brought down, a Bason, and the Tobacco-mould: She said, they were both in the Room where she was confined; she had described this Jug before, and said it was broken at the Mouth, as it now appears to be.

Robert Scarrat. I went down to Enfield-Wash; there were six of us in all: Her Mother and two Women were with her in the Chaise; she described the Fields, and likewise a Bridge, that Night she came Home, near the House; I asked her, if she perceived a Tanner's House near? she said, she believed there was.

to Abbotsbury, and we danced there that Night in Mr. Gibbons's Parlour; he keeps the Sign of the Ship.

Mr. Davy. What Company had you there?

G. Squires. There were a great many of my Acquaintance; I can't call them all to Mind; there was Mr. Wallace a Shop-keeper, and Mr. Bond a School-master, he got fuddled that Night; Mr. Wallace generally drinks Cyder, he came in for a Penny Pot of Cyder.

Mr. Davy. Who was your Partner?

G. Squires. I danced with Gibbons's Sister, and Mr. Clarke with my Sister Lucy; I can't mention all the Company, it is impossible; we danced Country Dances till about Eleven or Twelve at Night; we danced several Nights there after the first Night.

Mr. Davy. Had you ever been at Abbotsbury before?

G. Squires. Yes, I had several Times; and know several People in the Town.

Mr. Davy. How long did you continue at Abbotsbury?

G. Squires. We came there on the 1st of January, and went away on the 9th.

Mr. Davy. Did your Mother stay with you there all the Time?

G. Squires. She did; and when we went away, Mr. Clarke went with us to a little Village they called Portersham, about a Mile or a Mile and Half from thence; this was on a Tuesday.

Mr. Davy. Do you remember one Andrew Wake, an Exciseman, at Abbotsbury?

G. Squires. I do; he borrowed a great Coat of me one Day in order to survey in it, being a very wet Day.

Mr. Davy. What Day was that?

G. Squires. I cannot take upon me to say that; it was one Day while we were there.

Mr. Davy. What House did you go to at Portersham?

G. Squires. To the best of my Knowledge, it was the Chequer, an Ale-house; it is on the left Hand going down the Village; we lay there, Mr. Clarke lay with me, and we all went the next Day to Ridgway, which was Wednesday the 10th, which is about five or six Miles from Abbotsbury; we breakfasted there the next Morning, and, to the best of my Knowledge, went from thence about Eight or Nine o'Clock.

Mr. Davy. At what House did you lie at Ridgway?

G. Squires. At the House of Mr. Bewley, the Sign of the Ship; his Son, and he, and a Maid-servant, keep the House.

Mr. Davy. Did any Thing happen remarkable at Ridgway while you was there?

G. Squires. There was a dead Horse, and a Man skinning him as we came by; and I left a Piece of Nankeen, about three Yards and a Quarter, for my Reckoning with my Landlord. I was afraid that Silver would fall short; so I went to his Bed-side, and told him I was afraid Money would fall short before I came Home, and desired he would take that till I fetched it. My Mother, Sister, and I went from Ridgway to Dorchester on Thursday the 11th, which is about three Miles Distance; we did not lie there, but went forward almost

Q. Have you heard the other Evidences that went down give their Evidence?

Scarrat. I have, and what they have said is the Truth, which I heard also; I also heard E. Canning examined before the Sitting Alderman, she gave the same Account she has done here.

Q. Was John Squires in the Room at the Time she pitched upon his Mother and the rest?

Scarrat. He was; she said she could not swear to him; he had his great Coat on at our first going there, but he had pulled it off; she said, he looked like the Person, but she could not swear to him; they made him put his great Coat on before the Justice; then she said, he looked more like one of the two Men that brought her there.

Edward Rossiter. I went down with the rest on the Thursday. I heard E. Canning examined before Mr. Tasemaker the Justice; she gave the same Account then as now; she said, John Squires was much like one of the Men, when he had got his great Coat on; she said, she did not see Wells in the House, but she once saw her out at a Window, but did not know she was the Woman that belonged to the House.

Sutherton Bakler. I am an Apothecary; I saw E. Canning, the Day after she came Home, on the 30th of January about Noon; she was extremely low and weak; I could scarcely hear her speak, her Voice was so low, and her Pulse scarcely to be felt, with cold Sweats; she told me she had no Passage during the whole Time of her Confinement; she was then in such a Condition, she had a Glyster administered the same Day; she had many Glysters given her, which after some Time relieved her.

Q. Whether a Person that is extremely costive cannot subsist longer without Food, or with less Food, than a Person that is not so?

Bakler. I cannot answer to that. (Each of the Persons that said they went down to take the Prisoners, were asked where they went to, and answered, to Enfield-Wash, the House of the Prisoner Wells.)

Mary Squires said nothing in her Defence, but called the following Witnesses.

John Gibbons. I live at Abbotsbury, six Miles from Dorchester; I am Master of the House called the Old Ship; on the 1st of January, 1753, the Prisoner Squires came into the House; there was George her Son, and Lucy her Daughter with her, as she called them; she came with Handkerchiefs, Lawns, Muslins, and Checks, to sell about Town; she stayed there from the 1st to the 9th Day of the Month, and lay at my House.

Q. How long have you kept that House?

Gibbons. I have kept it two Years, come Lady's Day.

Q. Look at the Woman, are you sure that is her?

Gibbons. He looks at Squires, and says; I am sure it is.

Cross-Examination.

Q. How long have you known her?

Gibbons. I have known her three Years, and have seen her there three Years ago.

Q. How

almost all Night; for we had received a Letter from my Sister Mary, who was at London, that she was extremely ill, and desired us to come Home as soon as possible; there was a very great Water out at Dorchester, and the Miller's Man carried my Sister Lucy over it on Horseback, behind him; for which I told him I'd give him a Pint of Beer; and I took my Mother, and carried her on my Back through the Water; there is a Mill just by the Place; my Sister stayed till we came to her, then we all three walked on together.

Mr. Davy. Where did you stop?

G. Squires. The next Day we got to a Place called Tawney-Down, and we went into a little Ale-house on the Road, and had some Bread and Cheese, and a Pint of Beer: We lay at a Place called Chettle that Night, which was the Friday.

Mr. Davy. How many Miles is Chettle from Dorchester?

G. Squires. I cannot tell, because we went through Blandford.

Mr. Davy. What Time did you get to Chettle on the Friday?

G. Squires. We got there in the Evening; my Mother was very weary, and I asked a Shepherd on the Downs for an Ale-house, and he said there was never a one to Chettle: On the Saturday we went from thence to Martin; there I asked at an Ale-house for Lodging, and could get none; so a Gentleman let us lie in his Barn.

Mr. Davy. Do you know his Name?

G. Squires. I do not recollect it.

Mr. Davy. Was it Farmer Thanes?

G. Squires. It was; we lay there; my Mother and Sister were with me, we never were a Minute from each other all the Time to London.

Mr. Davy. Where did you go when you went from Martin?

G. Squires. We went from thence to Coombe on the Sunday Night, to the House of Widow Greville; her Son Thomas Greville is dead of the Small-pox.

Mr. Davy. When did you leave Coombe?

G. Squires. We left that on the Monday, but can't recollect where we lay.

Mr. Davy. Where did you lie on the 15th?

G. Squires. I cannot tell; I went to Basingstoke on the Tuesday, I think.

Mr. Davy. Recollect again.

G. Squires. I cannot recollect it.

Mr. Davy. How many Places did you lie at, or how many Days were you in going from Coombe to Basingstoke?

G. Squires. I cannot tell.

Mr. Davy. What Day of the Week did you get to Basingstoke?

G. Squires. I cannot tell: We travelled about ten Miles a Day.

Mr. Davy. Where did you put up at Basingstoke?

G. Squires. At the Spread-Eagle; a Widow Woman keeps it; she wrote a Letter for my Sister Lucy to Mr. Clarke; Mr. Clarke and we had parted a long Time, and he desired Lucy to send a Letter to him.

Mr. Davy. Where did Clarke and you part?

G. Squires. We parted at Ridgway.

Mr. Davy. What is the Landlady's Name who wrote this Letter?

G. Squires. I don't know her Name; the Letter was sent to the Post-Office at Dorchester, directed to Mr. William Clarke at Abbotsbury; we did not lie at the Spread-Eagle, we could not have Lodging there; but she directed us about a Mile or Mile and Half farther on our Way to London.

Mr. Davy. What is the Name of the Place you lay at?

G. Squires. It is called Old Basing, it is a little out of the Way.

Mr.

Q. How long have you lived there?

Gibbons. I was born at that Town; I am a married Man, have a Wife and one Child; I was bred in the Farming Way at Fisherton.

Q. By what do you recollect the Day?

Gibbons. There came an Exciseman to officiate there for one John Ward that was sick, and I put the Day of the Month down, when he came; the Excise-Office is kept at my House; the Man that came was Andrew Wicks, or Wick.

Q. Did you see the Prisoner sell any of these Goods you mentioned?

Gibbons. No, I did not; they offered them to sell to me, and others; my Wife bought two check Aprons.

William Clarke. I live at Abbotsbury, and have for seven Years; I remember seeing the Gypsey there; the last Time I saw her was on the 10th of January last; I met with them on the Road; we went some Way together; we parted at Crude-way-foot, four Miles from Abbotsbury, and three from Dorchester.

Q. Where were they going?

Clarke. I cannot tell that.

Q. Had you ever seen her before?

Clarke. I saw her, and her Son and Daughter, three Years ago come March, at Abbotsbury; they came with Handkerchiefs, Lawns, and Muslins to sell; I saw the Landlord's Wife at the Ship buy some Aprons of them the last Time they were there.

VOL. X.

Cross-Examination.

Q. How came you to take particular Notice of the Day?

Clarke. By keeping my other Accounts; I carried Goods out with me the same Day to Portersham.

Q. Have you your Book with you?

Clarke. No, I have not; but I can't forget the Day, because I don't go so often.

Q. Which Way were they going?

Clarke. They were making for London, they talked so.

Q. Did they give you any Account to what Place they were bound next?

Clarke. They did not; they lodged at this Man's House (pointing to Gibbons) at Abbotsbury.

Q. Did you see them there?

Clarke. I did, on the 1st of January: I commonly go there of an Evening, to have a Pot of Liquor.

Q. Do you remember when you kept Christmas-Day?

Clarke. I do not.

Q. Can you give any Account of New Stile or Old?

Clarke. No, I cannot; but if I was to die for the Woman, I'll speak the Truth.

Q. How was she cloathed there?

Clarke. The same as now, and the Son in a blue Coat and a red Waistcoat, and had a great Coat with him.

Q. What Size is he?

Mr. Davy. Where did you go the next Day?

G. Squires. We went, I believe, to Bagshot, and lay at the Greyhound there; and on the Saturday we went to Brentford, to the House of Mrs. Edwards; I lay there one Night, and on Sunday I went to London to look after Sister Mary; I stayed there one Night, and the next Day, which was on a Monday, I brought my Sister Mary to Lucy and my Mother at Brentford; we all stayed there till Tuesday.

Mr. Davy. What Sign does Mrs. Edwards keep?

G. Squires. She keeps no Sign, but there is the Sign of the Drum just by it; there we were all four together; and to the best of my Knowledge, we all left Brentford on the Tuesday, and went to the Seven Sisters by Tottenham, to the Sign of the Two Brewers.

Mr. Davy. Is not there another Name to that Place?

G. Squires. I don't know; there is a Green; they call it by some Name, but I don't know it.

Mr. Davy. What Day of the Week was this?

G. Squires. It was on a Tuesday.

Mr. Davy. Where did you go the next Day?

G. Squires. Then we went to Mrs. Wells's House; this was on a Wednesday.

Mr. Davy. How came you to go there?

G. Squires. I was recommended to her House for Lodging; they said she was a very civil Woman: I never saw her in my Life before this Time, if I was to be racked to Death. There is an Acquaintance of mine that owed me seven Pounds fifteen Shillings in London, and I went there to stay till I could receive it, to Mrs. Wells's House: We went to a Woman's House who sells Pease-foop at Edmonton; we would have lodged there;

but my Mother wanted to wash, and the Woman said that was not customary, so she recommended us farther, to a Place called Chestnut; upon that we went to Mrs. Wells's House, being recommended there by Mrs. Long's Daughter; I left my Mother and two Sisters at Mrs. Wells's House, and went to London to receive my Money about two or three Days after we got there; I lay in London one Night, and came back the next Day, and we all remained there till we were taken up:

Mr. Davy. Describe particularly the Rooms you lay in at Mrs. Wells's House.

G. Squires. The Room my Mother and two Sisters lay in, is as you go by the Kitchen Door up a Pair of Stairs, and turn short on the right Hand; it is a large Room, with one Bed in it, in which they all three lay; it is the handsomest Room they have in the House.

Mr. Davy. What Room was under that?

G. Squires. There is a Parlour under it; I lay in a little Room facing the Stair-head.

Mr. Davy. Where did Mother Wells lie?

G. Squires. She lay in a Room on the left Hand of mine, as you go up Stairs.

Mr. Davy. Who lay in that Room with her?

G. Squires. There was a Daughter of hers, and Virtue Hall.

Mr. Davy. Do you remember any body else that lay in the House?

G. Squires. There was Fortune Natus and his Wife lay in a Place where there is a vast deal of Hay.

Mr. Davy. What do you call that Room?

G. Squires. It was a Shuffle-board Room, as they say; you go up two or three Steps to it out of the Kitchen; they had a Bed made of Hay on the right Hand going up.

Mr.

Clarke. He is about five Foot seven or eight Inches high; the Girl was in a Camblet Gown.

Q. You are sure you saw her the Time you mention?

Clarke. I undertake to swear positively to that, that I saw her there on the 1st of January last, and either on the 9th or 10th afterwards; and saw them going about the Town in the Time, to sell Things.

Q. What are you?

Clarke. I am a Housekeeper, and have been in Business about six Years; I am a Cordwainer.

Thomas Greville. I live at Coombe, three Miles from Salisbury; I keep a Public House there, the Sign of the Lamb; I saw Mary Squires at my House on the 14th of January.

Q. How many Miles is Coombe from Dorchester?

Greville. I cannot tell.

Q. Who was with her there?

Greville. There was her Sister and her Brother, as she said; they sold Handkerchiefs, Lawns, and such Things.

Q. How long did she stay at Coombe?

Greville. They stopped there but one Night.

Cross-Examination.

Q. What January do you mean?

Greville. I mean last January, five Weeks ago last Sunday.

Q. How came you to take such particular Notice of it?

Greville. There was a Carpenter at my House; he had spent the biggest Part of his Money; it being Sunday Night, I would have him go about his Business, and put him out of the House two or three Times, and after that he went over the way to another House, and pawned his Ax. (These three Witnesses shewed their Subpoena's, as the Cause of their coming to give their Evidence.)

For the Crown.

John Inifer. I sell Fish and Oysters about Waltham-Cross and Theobalds. I know the Prisoner Squires very well by Sight; the last Time I saw her before now, was at the Time she was taken at Susannah Wells's House; before that I had seen her several Times every Day up and down, before she was taken.

Q. Are you very certain of that?

Inifer. I am, that I saw her three Weeks before; that she walked into People's Houses, pretending to tell Fortunes. She told me mine once.

Q. Did you see any Goods she had to sell?

Inifer. No, I did not; I always saw her by herself. I saw a young Man in blue-grey when she was taken up, and two young Women, all taken in the House of Wells.

Wells being called upon to make her Defence, said, As to her Character, it was but an indifferent one; that she had an unfortunate Husband, who was hanged; and added, she never saw the young Woman (meaning E. Canning) till they came to take us up; and as to Squires, she never saw her above a Week and a Day before they were taken up.

Squires Guilty, Death. Wells Guilty.

Squires,

Mr. Davy. At the Time you was at Enfield-Wash, how did you supply yourselves with Provision?

G. Squires. I bought my own Victuals myself; there is a little Chandler's Shop over the Way; the Man's Name is Larney; he is a Bricklayer; they sell Butter, Tea and Coffee, Soap and Candles; I went there several Times for Tea.

Mr. Davy. Where did you buy your Butchers Meat?

G. Squires. It was in Herring Time; we lived on Fish, and did not buy Meat there; there was an old Man came to the Door, Mrs. Wells bought Fish of him, and so did I.

Mr. Davy. Did you see this young Woman at the Bar when you was there?

G. Squires. No, I did not; I never saw her before we were taken up in my Life, if I was to be racked to Death; I'll stand with a Sword put to my Heart, if ever I saw her till she came in the Chaise; we came there on a Wednesday, and at the End of a Week and a Day my Mother was taken up.

Cross-examined.

Mr. Moreton. At setting out on your Examination, you said you could not tell where you was at Christmas.

G. Squires. Not the New Christmas.

Mr. Moreton. You said you was not at London before.

G. Squires. I mean, not before six or seven Weeks before Michaelmas.

Mr. Moreton. From what Place did you set out?

G. Squires. I went down into Hampshire.

Mr. Moreton. When did you set out on your Journey, and where is your Home?

G. Squires. We set out from Newington to Somersetshire and Dorsetshire.

Mr. Moreton. Where did you leave your Sister Mary, when you set out?

G. Squires. She was with a particular Acquaintance; with Mrs. Squires's Brother-in-law; I left her in Kent; Mrs. Squires in the Borough has a Brother, and his Wife was very ill, and I left my Sister Mary with her, in order to do what was in her Power for her; they sell Goods in the Country, and travel about as we do.

Mr. Moreton. At what House, or in what Town did you leave her?

G. Squires. I had not a Thought of being called to such Questions as these.

Mr. Moreton. I shall ask you a great many Questions you have not heard yet: Can you give me any Answer, at what House, or what Town you left your Sister Mary?

G. Squires. It was in Kent.

Mr. Moreton. Was your Mother and Sister with you when you parted with her?

G. Squires. We were all three together; I don't know at what Town, or whose House; when I left my Lodgings, I went into Kent, and happened to meet with them. I went into the Wild of Kent.

Mr. Moreton. Did you come back again then to Newington?

G. Squires. I went from Kent into Sussex.

Mr. Moreton. Name a Town there.

G. Squires. Lewes, Battel.

Mr. Moreton. Did you go through either of them?

G. Squires. No, I did not.

Mr. Moreton. Name the first great Town that you went through in Kent.

G. Squires.

Squires, the last Day of the Sessions, being asked what she had to say before she received Sentence, answered, that on New-year's Day I lay at Coombe at the Widow Greville's House; the next Day I was at Stoptage; there were some People who were cast away, and they came along with me to a little House on the Top of the Moor, and drank there; there were my Son and Daughter with me. Coming along Popham Lane, there were some People raking up Dung. I drank at the second Alehouse in Basingstoke on the Thursday in the New-year Week. On the Friday I lay at Bagshot-Heath, at a little tiny House on the Heath. On the Saturday I lay at Old Brentford at Mrs. Edwards's, who sells Greens and Small Beer. I could have told this before, but one pulled me, and another pulled me, and would not let me speak. I lay at Mrs. Edwards's on the Sunday and Monday; and on the Tuesday or Wednesday after, I came from thence to Mrs. Wells's House at Enfield.

The Time drawing near for the Report of the Convicts, Sir Crisp Gascoyne laid before His Majesty, not only the whole Evidence given at the Trial; but also the several Informations and Certificates he had received since her Conviction, accompanied by the following Memorial.

To the KING's Most Excellent MAJESTY.

" May it please your Majesty to permit your dutiful Subject, the Lord-Mayor of your faithful City of London, with the most profound Humility and Respect to represent to your Majesty, that before the Trial of Mary Squires,

" for the Robbery of Elizabeth Canning, and of Susannah Wells, as Accessary, many unfair Representations were printed and dispersed, which could not fail to excite public Prejudice against them.

" The fatal Consequence whereof, in depriving those unhappy Wretches of a material Part of their Evidence, engaged me, from the high Station I have the Honour to bear, to express my Duty to your Majesty, and the Public, by making this Inquiry.

" In which the utmost Caution has been observed. — All the Witnesses have been strictly, separately, and publicly examined, and their Credit well certified.

" Many other Informations, to the same Effect, have been offered; but I declined troubling your Majesty with further Evidence, as humbly apprehending it totally unnecessary.

" In the Course of this Inquiry, Virtue Hall, a principal Witness, voluntarily and publicly retracted the whole of the Evidence she gave upon the Trial.

" To this I presume, by your Majesty's Leave, to add, that amidst all the Examinations I have taken, there has not appeared any Variation or Inconsistency, or the least Circumstance or Suspicion, that could lead me to doubt the Innocence of those unhappy Convicts.

" All which is humbly submitted to your Majesty's great Wisdom and Judgment, by

Your Majesty's faithful Subject,

CRISP GASCOYNE, Mayor."

G. Squires. I don't know which I went through first; I went through Lewes; I made the best of my Way into the West.

Mr. Moreton. After you left Lewes, what is the first Town you came to that you did know?

G. Squires. Really I do not know; it is so long ago, I can't tell you.

Mr. Moreton. You, without an Almanack, have given a long and seeming fair Account of a long Journey, pray trace yourself down into Dorsetshire; I don't ask you the first Town from Lewes; but the first Town you do remember after you left Lewes.

No Answer.

Mr. Moreton. It was not South-Parrot, was it?

G. Squires. No, it is not possible I can tell you; I went from thence into Hampshire and Wiltshire; I went through Salisbury.

Mr. Moreton. Is that the first Town you can remember, after you left Lewes, you came at?

G. Squires. No, I went through several, but don't remember their Names; I must have went through some: I hope you will excuse me, I hope you will not ask me any more.

Mr. Moreton. Can you tell the Name of any Town you went through between Lewes and Salisbury?

G. Squires. No, I cannot.

Mr. Moreton. Where did you go when you went from Salisbury?

G. Squires. I went to Hindon.

Mr. Moreton. What County is that in?

G. Squires. That is in Wiltshire.

Mr. Moreton. Where did you go when you went from Hindon?

G. Squires. I went partly by Mear.

Mr. Moreton. What was the next Town when you left Mear?

G. Squires. Really, Sir, I hope you will excuse me, be pleased to excuse me; I cannot tell indeed; please to excuse me.

Mr. Moreton. You gave so clear an Evidence on that Part of your Return, that if you do not go on, it must be left to my Lord who tries you: Tell me where you went when you left Mear?

G. Squires. From Mear we went towards Shaftsbury.

Mr. Moreton. Did you go to it?

G. Squires. I went partly by it.

Mr. Moreton. Tell me some Town you lay at: No Answer.

Mr. Moreton. Did you lie at Lewes?

G. Squires. I did; I cannot tell the House; it was an Ale-house, but I don't know the Sign.

Mr. Moreton. Tell us another Town you lay at.

G. Squires. I know Mear very well; I lay there, but had never lain at that House before.

Mr. Moreton. Where did you use to lie there?

No Answer.

Mr. Moreton. Did you lie at Shaftsbury?

G. Squires. I cannot tell whether I did or not.

Mr. Moreton. Where was you going to in the West?

G. Squires. I sell Goods.

Mr. Moreton. What Goods?

G. Squires. I had white Waistcoats, and worked Gowns, and Hollands, and such Things; and where my Business led me, there I went.

Mr. Moreton. What Quantity of Goods might you have when you went out of Kent?

G. Squires. I had not dealt largely, I believe I had then about twenty Pounds Worth of Goods, consisting in Aprons, worked Gowns, Nankeens, and such Things.

Mr. Moreton. How long was you before you came to South-Parrot?

G. Squires. I cannot tell; I never was at South-Parrot before the 29th of December; I went down with a Gentleman once since.

Mr. Moreton. Is Yeovil farther from London than South-Parrot?

G. Squires. No, Sir.

Mr. Moreton. Did you go through that?

G. Squires. No, I came partly by it; but they said they had got the Small-pox in the Town, and I had never had it, so I did not come thro' it.

Mr.

“ On the 10th of April following, the Report was accordingly made of the Convicts under Sentence of Death; when his Majesty was graciously pleased to respite the Execution of Mary Squires for six Weeks; and to refer the Consideration of the Evidence on both Sides, (for Evidence against her had been presented) to his Attorney and Solicitor-General. — Soon after the Attorney and Solicitor-General made their Report, with their Opinion, That the Weight of Evidence was in the Convict's Favour: Whereupon his Majesty was graciously pleased to grant her a free Pardon.” Thus far from Sir Crisp Gascoyne's Address to the Livery, p. 26, 27.

The Friends of Canning, in their Refutation of Sir Crisp Gascoyne's Address, say, “ But of the Purport of this Memorial, and what in particular was annexed to it, the Friends of Canning were totally ignorant till the Publication of The Address; and therefore could not examine any Witnesses with a particular View to contradict it. They had indeed, upon the Recantation of Virtue Hall, taken some Affidavits to prove, that the Gypsey was at Enfield when the Robbery was committed; and the Duke of Newcastle (on whom they waited) having acquainted them, that his Majesty had referred the Consideration of the Evidence on both Sides to his Attorney and Solicitor-General; they took many other Affidavits to prove the same Facts; but when these Affidavits were presented to the Attorney and Solicitor-General, they rejected them, because they were not at Liberty to examine any Evidence that was taken after the Day of Reference: It necessarily followed therefore, that the Weight of Evidence was in the Convict's Favour; and so it was reported, and she pardoned. Upon this View of the Case, however, it does not become in any Degree more probable, that she was innocent.” See the Refutation of Sir Crisp Gascoyne's Address to the Livery, in Folio, p. 18.

These Friends of Canning likewise gave an Answer to Sir Crisp's Memorial presented to the King, &c. But Sir Crisp's Address, and Canning's Friends Refutation of it, make two large Folio Pamphlets; and the many other Pamphlets published on both Sides at that Time, are too numerous to insert here, or take any Notice of; and, as Canning's Friends thought, did not clear up that mysterious Affair; probably this Trial of Canning, for Perjury, may be said to have done it.

Mr. Moreton. Was you at Crookhorne?

G. Squires. No, I was not there at all.

Mr. Moreton. Tell me a great Town after you left Shaftsbury?

G. Squires. I went away from Shaftsbury to Abbotsbury.

Mr. Moreton. Tell me the Name of one Town you lay at in Somersetshire.

G. Squires. I did not go very far in Somersetshire.

Mr. Moreton. Name one Town betwixt Yeovil and South-Parrot, that you lay at.

G. Squires. I don't know a Town betwixt them; there are several Villages, but I can't tell the Name of one.

Mr. Moreton. Tell me the Sign of an Inn where you lay at beyond Shaftsbury, whether it was a Fox, a Goose, a Dog, or a Pair of Compasses.

G. Squires. I don't know the Sign of any Place where I lay at, because it is so long ago.

Mr. Moreton. You remember the other Places very well.

G. Squires. That is because I have been there since.

Mr. Moreton. Then you remember it by the last Journey you took.

G. Squires. Yes, Sir, and by the other too.

Mr. Moreton. Then you cannot remember either a Town, an Ale-house, or a Sign where you lay at, after you left Shaftsbury?

G. Squires. No, I cannot.

Mr. Moreton. Now we shall be a little better acquainted: We bring you now to South-Parrot; you say you had travelled seven or eight Weeks before Michaelmas, till the 29th of December.

G. Squires. But I did not travel all that Time, I came Home to my House at Newington before that.

Mr. Moreton. Did you return Home after you set out for Kent, and so into the West, before you got to South-Parrot?

G. Squires. Before the Time of my coming Home, I could not.

Mr. Moreton. Let me understand you: Did you return back to Newington before Christmas?

G. Squires. No, Sir, not till after Christmas.

Mr. Moreton. Then from the Time you set out, seven or eight Weeks before Michaelmas, you was travelling about the Country with your Goods?

G. Squires. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Moreton. Can you tell the exact Time you set out from Newington-Butts?

G. Squires. It was Harvest-time, or near it; I can't tell whether it was in July or August.

Mr. Moreton. Well, we are come to South-Parrot; you say you came there the 29th of December; you say you met with Mr. Clarke on a Sunday at Abbotsbury, and lay there that Night, and set out with him on the Monday, and went to Litton, and your Mother went after you to Abbotsbury: Now I'll ask you this Question, When your Mother went after you there, did you meet her on the Road?

G. Squires. No, I did not.

Mr. Moreton. Then did your Sister come with your Mother there on the Monday Morning?

G. Squires. No, she stayed in the House at Litton.

Mr. Moreton. Then your Mother walked on the Monday Morning December, the 31st, from Litton to Abbotsbury by herself, and back again, and dined on two Fowls, then went with you to Abbotsbury again?

Vol. X,

G. Squires. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Moreton. What Time did she come back to Litton?

G. Squires. Betwixt Two and Three o'Clock, and dined with us, and walked with us to Abbotsbury that Night.

Mr. Moreton. What Time did you all set out from Litton to go to Abbotsbury?

G. Squires. We set out between Three and Four o'Clock in the Afternoon.

Mr. Moreton. Was it dark?

G. Squires. It was quite dark.

Mr. Moreton. Where did you buy the two Fowls?

G. Squires. I bought them of one Mrs. Turner; I made a Cludation for the Feathers, she said she would have the Feathers.

Mr. Moreton. You lived well, I should think two Fowls a very remarkable Dinner for three Gypsies.

G. Squires. Fowls are bought there for Sixpence a-piece, it is cheaper than Beef or Mutton; that I have very often.

Mr. Moreton. I hope you always buy them.

G. Squires. I do.

Mr. Moreton. Were they boiled or roasted?

G. Squires. They were both boiled; I was not at Home to see them boiled, but I eat Part of them.

Mr. Moreton. What Day was it you lent the Exciseman your Coat?

G. Squires. I don't know the Day.

Mr. Moreton. How many of your Goods might you have disposed of at that Time?

G. Squires. I had disposed of them all, except a Piece of Check and two Waistcoats.

Mr. Moreton. Then you had taken a little Money?

G. Squires. I had, and owed some, and returned it to London.

Mr. Moreton. To whom?

G. Squires. To an Acquaintance of mine, Mr. Norman; he is since dead; he was a Tide-waiter.

Mr. Moreton. From what Place did you return the Money?

G. Squires. I cannot name the Place.

Mr. Davy. I beg leave to ask one Question I forgot; What happened at Ridgway when you were there?

G. Squires. A young Man that lives at Abbotsbury, who sells Turnips, had two Horses, and Mr. Clarke, after he had dined with us, designed to return Home; he knowing the Man, desired him to come in; we had got some Beef-steaks; this Man dined with us, and Mr. Clarke rode on one of his Horses Home; he is here.

Mr. Moreton. Tell me his Name.

G. Squires. I don't know his Name.

Mr. Moreton. Is that the House you left a Piece of Nankeen at?

G. Squires. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Moreton. Do you call Nankeen Check?

G. Squires. No, Sir.

Mr. Moreton. When you left this Piece of Nankeen in Pawn, because you was afraid you should want Money, pray how much Money had you then?

G. Squires. I had borrowed some of Mr. Clarke, and had some of my own.

Mr. Moreton. Tell us this one Thing, that as Mr. Clarke was so much your Friend, and your Sister's Friend, why did he not pay your Reckoning, and save your Nankeen, that you might make your Money of it?

G. Squires. He offered it, but I was so kind I would not let him.

Mr. Moreton. What Money did you borrow of Clarke?

G. Squires. I borrowed six Shillings of him.

Mr. Moreton. Have you had your Nankeen since?

G. Squires. No, he has got it in Custody since.

Mr. Moreton. What was your Reckoning?

G. Squires. It was about three Shillings and Sixpence.

Mr. Moreton. What is Nankeen worth a Yard?

G. Squires. It is worth, or I generally sell it for two Shillings a Yard.

Mr. Moreton. Where did you receive the News of your Sister Mary's Illness?

G. Squires. It was in the Country, I cannot tell the Town where.

Mr. Moreton. How did you receive the Account of it?

G. Squires. It came by the Post, sure it must.

Mr. Moreton. Upon your Oath, did you leave any Directions with her to write to you in the Country?

G. Squires. Yes, and I had a Letter she was ill, I had it first by a Letter.

Mr. Moreton. Can your Sister Mary write?

G. Squires. No, she cannot.

Mr. Moreton. Was the Letter directed to you or your Mother? Was it after you left Abbotsbury you received the Letter?

G. Squires. I cannot say that.

Mr. Moreton. Then, if you received it before you came there, or at the Place, it is strange you should stay dancing there!

G. Squires. I will not swear I received it before we came there, or not.

Mr. Moreton. You say, at Dorchester the Miller carried your Sister over the Water on Horse-back, how did you and your Mother get over?

G. Squires. I asked him to carry my Mother over; he said he could not stay.

Mr. Moreton. Did he come back again by you, or go on?

G. Squires. No, he went another Way.

Mr. Moreton. How far, after you set out from Ridgway, where the dead Horse was, might you walk with that old Woman, that Day and Night after you had received an Account of your Sister Mary's Illness?

G. Squires. She got no farther than Chettle.

Mr. Moreton. How far is Ridgway from Dorchester?

G. Squires. It is about three or four Miles.

Mr. Moreton. How far is it from Chettle to Blandford?

G. Squires. I can't tell how many Miles.

Mr. Moreton. What did you lie upon in that Barn you mentioned?

G. Squires. We all three lay upon Straw; we don't carry Sheets or Blankets with us; we all sat up in our Clothes.

Mr. Moreton. Whereabouts does Chettle lie?

G. Squires. It is on the left Hand, and Martin on the right.

Mr. Moreton. Which was you at first?

G. Squires. At Chettle, and then to Martin, and from thence to Coombe.

Mr. Moreton. Is not Martin in the direct Road from Chettle to London?

G. Squires. No, it is not; it is the Bottom Way; we came there because it was Night.

Mr. Moreton. How long did you stay at that House where the Letter was wrote?

G. Squires. About an Hour and Half; we came there about Three o'Clock, to the best of my Knowledge.

Mr. Moreton. Where did you go to find your Sister Mary?

G. Squires. To a Relation's of mine, who belongs to the Customs, named Samuel Squires; he lives down in White-Hart-Yard.

Mr. Moreton. Did she ask you whether you had received a Letter from her or not?

G. Squires. I told her I had.

Mr. Moreton. Did you tell her where you received it?

G. Squires. No.

Mr. Moreton. Which Way did you go from Brentford to Tottenham-High-Cross?

G. Squires. I went through the City, along by Covent-Garden.

Mr. Moreton. Did you go to your House at Newington?

G. Squires. No.

Mr. Moreton. Nor your Sister nor Mother?

G. Squires. No.

Mr. Moreton. On which Side the Park Wall did you come from Kensington?

G. Squires. Through Knightbridge, and all along the great Road.

Mr. Moreton. Do you know this Town of London?

G. Squires. I can find my Way in any Part of the City, but I am not acquainted with the Streets Names.

Mr. Moreton. Did you go through the City?

G. Squires. I went clear quite through the City.

Mr. Moreton. Which Way did you go out of Town to Tottenham?

G. Squires. By Shoreditch.

Mr. Moreton. Had you, or had you not, a Lodging at Newington at that Time?

G. Squires. Yes, I had; and my Household Goods were there at the Time.

Mr. Moreton. Then how came you to go through London, and not to your Lodgings?

G. Squires. Because I owed a Sum of Money, and was afraid of being arrested, and wanted to see Mr. Squires, who lived in the Neighbourhood, to make it up for me.

Mr. Moreton. What Day of the Week did you pass through London?

G. Squires. I left Mrs. Edwards's House of a Wednesday, and the same Day I came through London.

Mr. Moreton. Where did you meet the Person that recommended you to this House of Wells's?

G. Squires. Before I came to Enfield; the Woman's Name is Long.

Mr. Moreton. How many Beds are there in the Room at Wells's where your Mother lay?

G. Squires. There is but one Bed.

Mr. Moreton. If you ever did go this Journey, be positive with yourself, whether it was in the Year 52?

G. Squires. Yes, Sir; I am sure it was then, and not at any other Time.

Mr. Moreton. Did your Mother and Sister help you in your trading?

G. Squires. My Mother buys old Clothes and silver Lace.

Mr.

Mr. Moreton. Who bought these Goods of yours?

G. Squires. I did myself.

Mr. Moreton. Did your Mother and Sister know of your trading?

G. Squires. They did.

Mr. Moreton. Did they know what Quantity of Goods you had?

G. Squires. I don't know whether they did or not.

Mr. Darcy. We will not call Lucy the Sister; she is rather more stupid than her Brother, and has not been on that Road since their coming to Enfield-Wash; and so can give but a very imperfect Account either of Times or Places. But we will call Mr. Willis, who went with George Squires about the Country since the Commencement of this Prosecution, in order to ascertain the particular Places where Mary Squires and her Family have travelled through: And Mr. Willis will assign the Reason of this Man's remembering the Times and Places of their Return from the West with such Exactness, when he can recollect so little of the Journey of going down.

Robert Willis sworn.

I set out some Time in last June from Dorchester.

Mr. Nares. Whether this Gentleman is called to prove any thing else than what Squires has related to him, and what he has heard from others since the Fact, I object to his Evidence.

Mr. Gascoyne. Mr. Willis went into the Country with George Squires, in order to ascertain the Places, he being a Person of Reputation, at Houses where these three People lodged; and has found them to be Facts.

Mr. Moreton. You have shewn there was a Person with them in Court, (that is Lucy) and you refuse calling her, and now call this Man to give an Evidence of Hearsay only, after a Person has been examined an Hour and Half, and told you of a Person within your Lordship's Power to call, who he says has been with him all the Journey: Will your Lordship suffer a third Person, that can only tell what this or that Man told him upon his making Inquiry? We are willing to risque the Issue of this Trial singly upon the Evidence of George and Lucy, examined separately.

Mr. Baron Legge. If they don't call the Sister, you'll make what Observations you please upon it. That Evidence has said upon his Oath, that his Sister went this whole Journey with him; and in order to confirm that what he said was Truth, they will not call her, but this Attorney.

Mr. Justice Clive. This is but Hearsay Evidence, and that is not Evidence; but if you go to discredit this Man, surely they may produce Evidence to shew the Conformity of his Evidence, that he was always in one Story.

Mr. Nares. This must be proved by a Person that was present at the Fact; if the Case was otherwise, I could call a hundred Witnesses in order to confirm my own Evidence.

Mr. Baron Legge. The several People that lived at the Houses where he says he called, are the Evidences to call to prove that.

Mr. Moreton. Here is a Man goes and tells his Case to his Attorney, and he comes here as a Witness. (Refused.)

George and Lucy Squires were again placed by their Mother in the Court.

John Fry sworn.

I live at a Place called Litton, in Dorsetshire; I am a Tiler and Plaisterer; I came to Town on Wednesday last.

Mr. Willes. Do you know that old Woman that sits there? (meaning Mary Squires.)

J. Fry. I have seen the old Gypsey several Times; I remember seeing her on the 30th of December 52, at Litton; it was on a Saturday, at the House of James Hawkins; I was at Work there at the same Time.

Mr. Willes. Pray, how can you remember the particular Time?

J. Fry. Because it was in the New Christmas Time, and the Monday following was the New-year's Day; this is the very old Woman.

Mr. Willes. Look at the Man and Woman with her.

J. Fry. They are the two Persons that were with her on that Saturday Evening.

Mr. Willes. Was you in Company with them?

J. Fry. I was not at all, but I saw them by the Kitchen Fire.

Mr. Willes. How can you be certain these are the People?

J. Fry. I have known the old Woman thirty Years; she has been in that Part many Times; I have seen her Face often before.

Cross-examined.

Mr. Nares. Is this Mr. Hawkins living?

J. Fry. He is, and is now here.

Francis Gladman sworn.

Mr. Gascoyne. Do you know Mary Squires?

Fr. Gladman. Yes, Sir; that is the Woman. (Pointing to her.)

Mr. Gascoyne. Do you know these two People that stand by her?

Fr. Gladman. I do, they are her Son and Daughter; I keep a House at Litton, and am a Gardener; I remember seeing these People there on Monday the 1st of January 53, in the House of James Hawkins; there is no Sign, it used to be the Three Horseshoes; I shaved George the Sunday, being the Day before, at my House.

Mr. Gascoyne. Had you ever seen the old Woman before?

Fr. Gladman. To the best of my Knowledge, I never did; but I am positive sure to them.

Mr. Gascoyne. What is the Reason you know it to be the 1st of January?

Fr. Gladman. The Reason is, we generally ring-in the New Year; I went to ring a Peal, and the People of the Parish gave us some Liquor, that is, some Ale and some Cyder, to drink; we concluded to go to the Alehouse with our Jug of Cyder, that was given us, to have something put into it; we went to Hawkins's; the old Woman sat there; I sat down close by her, and asked her, if she could tell Fortunes? she said, No; she was no Fortune-teller: I asked her, if she could talk Spanish? and said, I thought I had seen her abroad somewhere or other; she said, she could not: I asked her, if she could talk Portuguese? she said, No: I said, Nor French? she said, No: Nor Dutch? No: She said she knew what I said, but could not answer me. Upon this an old Gentleman said, You must cant to her, talk Gypsey to her, and she'll answer you; then I said, You are one of the Family of the

Scamps;

Scamps; she said, No, I am no Scamp; and a young Man in the Room said her Name was Squires.

Cross-examined.

Mr. Williams. Did she sell any thing?

Fr. Gladman. She did not appear to me to sell any thing.

James Angel sworn.

Mr. Davy. Did you ever see that old Woman before?

J. Angel. I have seen her a great many Times.

Mr. Davy. Did you ever see her at Litton?

J. Angel. I saw her there on the last Day of the Year 52, at James Hawkins's Apartment, a Public House; and I believe there was Miss Lucy with her.

Mr. Davy. Did you ever see the young Man?

J. Angel. No, I did not see him there.

Mr. Davy. By what Circumstance do you remember the particular Time?

J. Angel. Because it is a usual Thing for us to ring-in the New Year; we rang a Peal, and in the Morning concluded to go to a Public House to drink together; there we saw the old Woman sitting smoaking her Pipe; I was there two Hours, and then I was called away to go a Fox-hunting.

Mr. Davy. Did you ever see her before that Time?

J. Angel. No, but I have several Times since, and am well satisfied it is the same Woman.

Mr. Davy. What is your Business?

J. Angel. I am a Stay-maker.

Cross-examined.

Mr. Moreton. What Time of the last of December did you see her?

J. Angel. It was after the Evening Prayer on a Sunday; she was not in the Kitchen, but in a new Apartment, which was not made a Public House of then, but is now.

Mr. Moreton. What Time did you ring in the Morning?

J. Angel. It was just about Day-break.

Mr. Moreton. How long might you stay at Hawkins's?

J. Angel. I believe near two Hours; she was there all the Time, and I left her there when I went away.

Mr. Moreton. What Time was it you went to go a hunting?

J. Angel. I believe betwixt Nine and Ten o'Clock, I am not certain to the very Time.

Mr. Moreton. How long did you stay a Fox-hunting?

J. Angel. Till almost Night; I believe it might be Three o'Clock.

Mr. Moreton. Did you go to Hawkins's in the Evening?

J. Angel. I did, but then they were not there.

Mr. Moreton. Do you know Clarke? Did you see him there that Evening?

J. Angel. I know him, but I did not see him there.

Mr. Moreton. Do you imagine, that betwixt Ten and Two, or Half an Hour after, the old Woman could walk from Litton to Abbotsbury and back again, and after that walk again to Abbotsbury?

J. Angel. I think she might; she must make very good Speed.

Mr. Moreton. How many Miles are they from each other?

J. Angel. It is three little Miles we call it.

James Hawkins sworn.

I keep an Alehouse at Litton.

Mr. Willes. Do you know that old Woman there?

J. Hawkins. Yes, she passes by the Name of Mary Squires; I remember seeing her at our House on the 30th of December 52, being on a Saturday.

Mr. Willes. Do you know that young Man and Woman?

J. Hawkins. Yes, they are George and Lucy, her Son and Daughter; they were all three of them at my House at that Time together; it was just at the turning of the Date; they lay there on the Saturday and Sunday Nights; and went away on the Monday about Two in the Afternoon.

Mr. Willes. What Time did they get to your House on the Saturday?

J. Hawkins. About Two in the Afternoon; George went to Abbotsbury on the Monday the 1st of January, and one Clarke came with him.

Mr. Willes. Where was the old Woman that Monday Morning?

J. Hawkins. She was at our House; she eat a Fowl in a little new Chamber.

Mr. Willes. Did she not leave your House before they all went away?

J. Hawkins. I don't remember she did; they were by themselves; that Chamber is not in the House; they eat Fowls for their Dinner.

Mr. Willes. Who were the Fowls bought of?

J. Hawkins. They were bought of one Dance Turner, in our Parish.

Mr. Willes. Were they boiled or roasted?

J. Hawkins. They were boiled, I believe; we don't eat roast Meat in the Country but very little.

Mr. Willes. What Time did they leave your House?

J. Hawkins. They went away, I believe, about Two in the Afternoon.

Mr. Willes. Were George Squires and Clarke at Dinner with the others?

J. Hawkins. I am certain they were; in my Opinion the old Woman went to look for George out into the Fields, somewhere or another; she did not tarry long.

Mr. Willes. How long?

J. Hawkins. About an Hour; but I went but seldom into the Room where they were.

Mr. Willes. Do you remember Angel's being at your House at the Time?

J. Hawkins. I do; they had been a ringing; and the Minister's Kinsman went a Fox-hunting that Day, and gave the People some Money.

Mr. Willes. How do you know it was the 31st of December?

J. Hawkins. By reason I made a Fire in that little Chamber on the Monday Morning, when the People were ringing, where no Fire had been made before.

Cross-examined.

Mr. Nares. Was Angel in the new Room or the common Kitchen?

J. Hawkins. In both of them.

Mr. Nares. Did Mary Squires smoak in the Kitchen or the other Room?

J. Hawkins. I believe she might smoak in both Rooms.

Mr.

Mr. Nares. Where did she smook on Monday Morning?

J. Hawkins. I believe it was in the old House.

Mr. Davy. If you design to impeach these People's Characters, here is the Minister we can call to confirm them.

Mr. Moreton. We have nothing to say against their Characters.

William Clarke sworn.

I live at Abbotsbury, and know the old Woman, Lucy and Polly; I remember George coming to my House at Abbotsbury the Day before New-year's Day, in the Forenoon, last December, was twelve Months; he and I went to Litton together on the Monday Morning; I was a Sweetheart of Lucy's; we got there some time in the Afternoon, and met with Lucy about Three or Four o'Clock; I know it was some time before it was dark.

Mr. Gascoyne. Was the old Woman there?

W. Clarke. She was not when we came there; for she had come to make Inquiry where George was, because he did not return on the Sunday Night; the old Woman came there about half an Hour after us, and George, she, Lucy and I went to Abbotsbury that Night, and we danced at Gibbons's House.

Mr. Gascoyne. Do you remember any thing of a Couple of Fowls?

W. Clarke. We eat something there; I took Part of a Fowl.

Mr. Gascoyne. Was it roast or boiled?

W. Clarke. It was boiled Fowl, to the best of my Remembrance.

Mr. Gascoyne. Then if you stayed to dine, what Time did you set out for Abbotsbury?

W. Clarke. We set out late after dark.

Mr. Gascoyne. Who was your Partner?

W. Clarke. Lucy was my Partner.

Mr. Gascoyne. Can you tell who was George Squires's Partner?

W. Clarke. I cannot tell you indeed; Melchisedech Arnold played on the Music; that I am sure of.

Mr. Gascoyne. How many Days did they stay at Abbotsbury?

W. Clarke. They stopped there from the 1st to the 9th, all three of them.

Mr. Gascoyne. Did you see them often in that Time?

W. Clarke. I was in their Company every Day the Time they were there, and saw Lucy some Part of her Journey; I went as far as Portersham.

Mr. Gascoyne. At whose House did you lodge at Portersham?

W. Clarke. We lodged at Sias Frampton's House, that is a Mile from Abbotsbury; I saw her three Miles farther, and parted with them at Ridgway-Foot; I supped with them there at Francis Bewley's, and then returned to my own House.

Mr. Gascoyne. Did any body borrow Money of you at Ridgway?

W. Clarke. Yes, George borrowed six Shillings of me.

Mr. Gascoyne. What had you for Supper there?

W. Clarke. We had Beef-steaks.

Mr. Gascoyne. Upon what Terms did Lucy and you part, upon good Terms?

W. Clarke. We were upon civil Terms; I never saw any thing by her but civil Terms; she is as honest a Girl as any in the World, for what I know.

VOL. X.

Mr. Gascoyne. When she and you parted, did you give her Directions to write to you?

W. Clarke. I did.

Mr. Gascoyne. Did she give any Directions to you?

W. Clarke. She did.

Mr. Gascoyne. Did you give Directions only, or desire her to write to you?

W. Clarke. I desired her to write to me as soon as possible; after that I received a Letter from Bristol at Esbam in the Vale.

Mr. Gascoyne. How long after your parting with them was it you received this Letter from Bristol?

W. Clarke. It was not half a Year after; I had it brought to Abbotsbury; it was directed to me, but who wrote it I cannot tell.

Cross-examined.

Mr. Williams. What Countryman are you?

W. Clarke. I was bred and born at Abbotsbury.

Mr. Williams. How long have you been acquainted with these People?

W. Clarke. Four Years last March; the first Time that ever I saw them was at the Old Ship at Gibbons's; the second Time I saw them was the last of December 52, when George came from Litton to me, and I went there back with him.

Mr. Williams. What Time of the Day was it when you came to Litton?

W. Clarke. Some Time in the Afternoon; I can't say to an Hour or two; it might be Three o'Clock.

Mr. Williams. How long were you walking from Litton to Abbotsbury?

W. Clarke. We were two Hours walking it; it is three Miles.

Mr. Williams. What Time did Mary Squires come in, after you was at Litton?

W. Clarke. She might come in in half an Hour, and that might be between Three and Four o'Clock; we took Part of a Fowl there.

Mr. Williams. What, amongst you all?

W. Clarke. Yes, amongst us all.

Mr. Williams. Was it boiled or roasted?

W. Clarke. To the best of my Remembrance, it was boiled.

Mr. Williams. Who paid the Reckoning?

W. Clarke. I don't know indeed, I did not pay a Farthing.

Mr. Williams. Is it but three Miles from Litton to Abbotsbury?

W. Clarke. It is three computed Miles, but it is four Post Miles.

Mr. Williams. Can you walk as fast as Mary Squires?

W. Clarke. I can, and a great deal faster.

Mr. Williams. Could she do it in less than four Hours?

W. Clarke. No, I don't think she could, because she is an elderly Woman; that is, walking thither and back again.

Mr. Williams. When you parted at Ridgway-Foot, did George Squires tell you whether he had Money, or no Money?

W. Clarke. He did not tell me whether he had or not.

Mr. Williams. Who paid all the Money from the 1st to the 9th, where you drank?

W. Clarke. George paid it, I believe; I don't know but he did; whether he paid it or not, he had six Shillings of me.

Mr. Williams. Did he sell any Goods, do you know; to any body?

W. Clarke. Yes, he sold an Apron to the Landlady at the Old Ship, and another to the Servant.

Mr. Williams. Did he ask you to lend him any thing?

W. Clarke. Yes, he did.

Mr. Williams. Did you know of his pledging that Piece of Goods at Ridgway for the Reckoning?

W. Clarke. I did not till afterwards.

Mr. Williams. Did you offer to pay half there?

W. Clarke. No, I did not; George would not let me.

Mr. Williams. Did you lend him this Money before or after he pawned the Nankeen?

W. Clarke. It was before.

Mr. Williams. How came he to pawn it?

W. Clarke. I cannot tell that.

Mr. Williams. How long was you at Ridgway?

W. Clarke. I might be there two Hours.

Mr. Williams. What Time did you set out for Abbotsbury?

W. Clarke. I set out about Four o'Clock in the Afternoon, and lodged at Portersham going back.

Mr. Davy. When you came to Litton, had Lucy and Mary Squires sat down to Dinner?

W. Clarke. No, Sir.

Mr. Davy. Did you see the Dish when first served up?

W. Clarke. I eat Part of what was meddled with.

Mr. Davy. Had they been eating before you came there?

W. Clarke. I don't know whether they had eat any thing or not.

Mr. Davy. Did you lie with George Squires at Ridgway?

W. Clarke. No.

Mr. Davy. Do you know any thing of the Circumstance of the Piece of Nankeen?

W. Clarke. No, Sir.

Mr. Davy. Do you know any thing about a dead Horse?

W. Clarke. There was a dead Horse lay in the Highway at Ridgway as I went by.

John Gibbons sworn*.

I keep the Old Ship at Abbotsbury; I know Mary Squires, and the young Man and Woman; they are Son and Daughter to the good Woman.

Mr. Willes. When did you see them at your House?

J. Gibbons. They were at my House on Monday the 1st of January 53; they came there in the darkish of the Evening.

Mr. Willes. Had you any Merriment at your House that Night?

J. Gibbons. Yes, Sir; Dancing; George danced with a Sister of mine named Mary Gibbons, and Lucy danced with William Clarke; the old Woman was in the House at the Time.

Mr. Willes. How long did they stay at your House?

J. Gibbons. They stay'd from the 1st to the 9th, then they went away.

Mr. Willes. Did they stay in your House all that Time?

J. Gibbons. The old Woman did, I saw her every Day there, and so I did George and Lucy; I am sure of this, upon my Oath; I knew Mary Squires

Squires almost three Years before, and knew her when she came into my House.

Mr. Willes. When they went away, where did they tell you they were going?

J. Gibbons. They told me they were going to Portersham; Clarke went with them.

Mr. Willes. Do you remember an Exciseman coming to your House to officiate for another that was sick?

J. Gibbons. I do, his Name is Andrew Wake; he lay in the same Room with George Squires, and they were very familiar together.

Mr. Willes. Do you remember the Exciseman borrowing George's great Coat?

J. Gibbons. I believe he did one Night, as he was walking his Rounds?

Mr. Willes. Was it as he was walking his Rounds, or to walk his Rounds?

J. Gibbons. It was to walk his Rounds.

Mr. Willes. How do you know that?

J. Gibbons. I heard him tell it.

Cross-Examination.

Mr. Moreton. You was examined when Mary Squires was tried at this Bar?

J. Gibbons. I was.

Mr. Moreton. I will only ask you, whether you gave an Account of seeing them dance, as you have now?

J. Gibbons. I don't know that it was asked me.

Mr. Moreton. Was it not material to say, We had Music and they danced at our House at that Time? Did you swear that then?

J. Gibbons. I can't say whether I might or not.

Mr. Moreton. When did you first recollect it?

J. Gibbons. On the 1st of February.

Mr. Moreton. Then why did you not swear it then, and give my Lord and the Jury an Account of it?

J. Gibbons. I don't know, I was not asked it then.

Mr. Moreton. Did you give an Account of the Exciseman lying in the same Room with George?

J. Gibbons. No; but I then told the Court the Exciseman was there at my House.

Mr. Moreton. Was the Exciseman here then?

J. Gibbons. No.

Andrew Wake sworn.

I was an Exciseman about nine Months ago; and am now in the Foot-Guards; I was ordered to Abbotsbury to officiate for one Mr. Ward who was ill, by Order of the Supervisor, from Dorchester; on the 31st of December 1752, I got there, I went to the Ship at Gibbons's; (he takes a Book in his Hand, and looks in it) this is my Writing, these are our Entries, it is the Journal.

Mr. Gascoyne. Look at the old Woman sitting there, do you know her?

A. Wake. I do, it is Mary Squires; I saw her at Abbotsbury, at Gibbons's House, at that Time, the 31st of December 52.

Mr. Gascoyne. Do you know that young Man?

A. Wake. I do; he passed for George Squires; he lay in the same Room with me.

Mr. Gascoyne. Do you know that young Woman by him?

A. Wake. I do, it is Lucy; they both went for Son being called on, the Right Honourable the Lord-Mayor quitted the Chair, and retired out of Court.—But in order to remove the Indictments into the Court of King's Bench, and to supersede the Jurisdiction of this Court, three Parchment Writings, said to be Writs of Certiorari, were presented to the Court: Whereupon Mr. Davy, of Council for the Defendants, inform'd the Court, that he was greatly surprized at this Attempt, not only as the Court of King's Bench had, on the last Day of last Term, absolutely refused to grant these Writs, although applied for by the Prosecutors; but as the Defendants had acted so very fairly, as to have given them (what they were not obliged to give) eight Days Notice of Trial, and had now near an hundred Witnesses attending, many of them brought from great Distances, at a vast Expence, to manifest the Innocence of the Defendants to the World.—Upon which the Person who attended with these Writs, being asked by the Court, Who he was? How he came by them? And how those Writs had been obtained? He informed the Court, that he was Clerk to Mr. Miles, (an Attorney) who was out of Town; that he had the Writs delivered to him by Mr. Miles's Brother, the Distiller; and that he himself knew nothing further of the Matter.—Which Answer not being satisfactory to the Court, the Court was pleased to order him to take the Writs back again, to recommend an Inquiry how these Writs had been obtained, and the Trials to be called on. Whereupon the Jury were charged with the following Indictment against John Gibbons.

First Indictment.

LONDON. } The Jurors for our Lord the King upon their Oath present, That at the Delivery of the King's Gaol of Newgate, holden for the County of Middlesex, at Justice-Hall in the Old-Bailey, in the Suburbs of the City of London, on Wednesday the 21st Day of February, in the 26th Year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord George the Second, King of Great-Britain, &c. before Sir Crisp Gascoyne, Knt. Mayor of the City of London, Sir Martin Wright, Knt. one of the Justices of our said Lord the King, assigned to hold Pleas before the King himself, Nathaniel Gundry, Esq; one of the Justices of our said Lord the King of the Court of Common Pleas, Sir Richard Adams, Knt. one of the Barons of the Court of Exchequer of our said Lord the King, and others their Fellows Justices of our said Lord the King, assigned to deliver the Goal of our said Lord the King of Newgate, of the Prisoners therein being, Mary Squires, late of the Parish of Enfield, in the County of Middlesex, Widow, was tried and convicted upon an Indictment against her, For that she, on the 2d Day of January, in the 26th Year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord George the Second, King of Great-Britain, &c. with Force and Arms, at the Parish aforesaid, in the County aforesaid, in the Dwelling-house of one Susannah Wells, Widow, there situate, upon one Elizabeth Canning, Spinster, in the Peace of God and our said Lord the King then and there being, feloniously did make an Assault, and her the said

Elizabeth

Son and Daughter of Mary Squires; I saw George first there; he was sitting by the Kitchen Fire, and one Clarke, a Shoemaker of that Place, with him; this was on Sunday Night: I am not positive to the first Day I saw Mary Squires, because I was obliged to be out early in the Mornings; but I think I first saw her on the Wednesday, and Lucy with her, by the Kitchen Fire.

Mr. Gascoyne. How long did you remain in that Town?

A. Wake. From the 31st of December to the 14th of January; Gibbons's House was my House all that Time; I remember they went away two or three Days before I did.

Mr. Gascoyne. Can you remember the Day they went away?

A. Wake. Upon my Word I do not.

Mr. Gascoyne. Do you know this by your Memory, or by your Books?

A. Wake. By my Memory.

Mr. Gascoyne. Did George Squires lie in the same Room you did every Night?

A. Wake. I don't remember but he did; the Mother and Lucy lay in a Room where there were two Beds, which we went through to go to Bed; it was up one Pair of Stairs; I saw them in Bed.

Mr. Gascoyne. Do you remember any Dancing there?

A. Wake. I do; I was in the Room with them one Evening; George danced with a young Woman of Abbotsbury, Clarke danced there, and Lucy danced there.

Mr. Gascoyne. What Sort of Weather was it, while you was there?

A. Wake. There was a good deal of Snow: I remember I borrowed a great Coat of George Squires to go my Rounds in; because I had been out in my own, and it was wet.

Mr. Gascoyne. Who played the Music?

A. Wake. A Blacksmith, named Melchisedech Arnold, played on a Fiddle; he sold Cyder; I surveyed his House; I remember I had been taken ill coming my Rounds, and was sitting by the Fire-side, and the old Gentlewoman prescribed something to cure me, she got me something hot; the next Morning, or the Morning after, she made me a buttered Toast before I went out.

Mr. Gascoyne. You had a Book in your Hand; is every Day's Gauge in that?

A. Wake. I believe they are; we return these Books to the Excise-Office; this Book was sent for out of the Country on purpose; when I was examined; I had left them with John Ward at Abbotsbury; when I went from thence to Dorchester again.

Mr. Gascoyne. What Time was it you heard of this Affair about the Trial of the old Woman?

A. Wake. I saw it in a News-paper; that one Mary Squires, a Gypsie Woman, was taken up for a Robbery.

Mr. Gascoyne. Did it mention the Time?

A. Wake. I cannot remember whether it did or not; but I believe I told my Mother, that that could not be the Woman, because I saw her at Abbotsbury when I was officiating for Mr. Ward; I was sent to Lewes in Suffex, and had an Order by my Supervisor, from the Commissioners, to come up and attend my Lord-Mayor, but I did not know

Elizabeth in bodily Fear and Danger of her Life then and there feloniously did put, and one Pair of Stays of the Value of ten Shillings, of the Goods and Chattels of the said Elizabeth, from the Person and against the Will of the said Elizabeth, in the Dwelling-house aforesaid, then and there violently and feloniously did steal, take, and carry away, against the Peace of our said Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity. Upon which same Trial, one John Gibbons, late of Abbotsbury, in the County of Dorset, Victualler, on the 21st Day of February, in the Year aforesaid, to wit, at Justice-Hall aforesaid, in the Parish of St. Sepulchre, in the Ward of Farringdon Without, in the City of London, came in his own proper Person as a Witness on the Behalf of the said Mary Squires, of and upon the Matters contained in the said Indictment; and the said John Gibbons, then and there in the Court aforesaid, before the said Justices last above-named, and others their Fellows assigned as aforesaid, upon the Trial aforesaid, was in due Manner and Form sworn, and took his corporal Oath upon the Holy Gospel of God, as such Witness, (the same Court then and there having a sufficient Authority to administer the same Oath to the said John Gibbons in that Behalf.) And the said John Gibbons, on the said 21st Day of February, in the Year aforesaid, not having God before his Eyes, but being moved and seduced by the Instigation of the Devil, and wickedly and unjustly devising and intending to pervert Justice, and to procure the said Mary Squires unjustly to be acquitted of the said Crime laid to her Charge in the said Indictment, then and there upon the Trial aforesaid, upon his Oath aforesaid, falsely, maliciously, wilfully, wickedly, and corruptly, did say, depose, swear, and give in Evidence to the said Court, and the Jurors of the said Jury, upon the Trial aforesaid, as follows, (that is to say,) On the 1st Day of January, 1753, (meaning the Year of our Lord 1753,) the Prisoner Squires (meaning the above-named Mary Squires) came into the House, (meaning the House of the said John Gibbons, at Abbotsbury aforesaid, in the said County of Dorset.) There was George her Son, (meaning George the Son of the said Mary Squires,) and Lucy her Daughter, (meaning Lucy the Daughter of the said Mary Squires,) with her, (meaning the said Mary Squires.) And that the said John Gibbons, upon the Trial aforesaid, upon his Oath aforesaid, on the said 21st Day of February, in the Year aforesaid, at Justice-Hall aforesaid, in the Parish of St. Sepulchre aforesaid, in the Ward of Farringdon Without aforesaid, did falsely, maliciously, wilfully, and corruptly, say, depose, swear, and give in Evidence as follows: She (meaning the said Mary Squires) came with Handkerchiefs, Lawns, Muslins, and Checks, to sell about Town, (meaning Abbotsbury, in the County of Dorset;) she (meaning the said Mary Squires) stayed there (meaning at Abbotsbury, in the said County of Dorset) from the 1st to the 9th Day of the Month, (meaning from the 1st to the 9th Day of the Month of January, in the said Year of our Lord 1753,) and lay at my House, (meaning the House of him the said John Gibbons, at Abbotsbury aforesaid, in the said County of Dorset.) And the said know upon what Account; I came up, and gave the same Evidence before his Lordship, as I do now, after he had sent me to Newgate to see Mary Squires, whom I knew very well by many Circumstances, and she knew me.

Mr. Gascoyne. How came you to be out of the Excise?

A. Wake. I was discharged, and so went into the Guards.

Mr. Gascoyne. For what was you discharged?

A. Wake. For Stamping.

Mr. Gascoyne. How could you see the People in Bed when you went through the Room?

A. Wake. Because there were no Curtains to their Beds.

Cross-examined.

Mr. Williams. Tell us what Year this was.

A. Wake. This is the Book we had from the Office at that Time; they are marked at the Excise-Office before they come.

Mr. Williams. Look in it, and shew me the first Entry you made there.

A. Wake. It was on the 1st of January; it is my Hand-writing from that to the 14th of January.

Mr. Williams. Was it in the Year 1752 or 1753?

A. Wake. There is no Year to it, only the Days of the Month.

Mr. Williams. What Year was this 1st of January in?

A. Wake. I believe it was the Year 53; the Mark 52 is done by the Supervisor on the 1st Page, before we have them.

Mr. Williams. Had you ever seen Mary Squires before that Time?

A. Wake. No, Sir, not since, till I saw her in Newgate.

Mr. Williams. Did you dance there?

A. Wake. No, I did nor at all.

Mr. Williams. Can you tell who Clarke danced with?

A. Wake. Clarke danced with Lucy, to the best of my Knowledge.

Mr. Williams. Did Mary Squires recollect you, or you her first, before you told her upon what Account you came to see her?

A. Wake. I said nothing at all to her, only asked her if she knew me; she said, Yes, that I was the young Man belonging to the Excise-Office; and said she remembered me very well, that I borrowed her Son's great Coat.

Mr. Williams. Did she seem to be under any Hesitation at that Time?

A. Wake. No, she seemed rather over-joyed; she knew me through the Grate as she was in the Prefs-yard.

Mr. Williams. Had you the same Cloaths on then, as you wore in Dorsetshire, when you saw her there?

A. Wake. Yes, I had the same Coat on, a sort of a Pepper-and-Salt Coat; I went there before I went to my Lord-Mayor.

Mr. Williams. Had you sent her any Notice you was coming there?

A. Wake. No, I had not.

Mr. Williams. Explain what you mean by Stamping.

A. Wake.

A. Wake. That is Neglect of Duty, writing at home instead of going abroad.

Mr. Williams. Did not you say my Lord-Mayor sent you to see her in NevoGate?

A. Wake. My Lord asked me, if I had seen her? I said, I had: He asked me, if I was positive to the Woman? I said, I was: He said, If you are not, go again; so I went and talked with her again.

Mr. Davy. Was you not positive, made you go again?

A. Wake. I was positive then.

Mr. Williams. Did my Lord-Mayor examine you before he had the Excise-Books?

A. Wake. I don't know that.

Francis Aldborough sworn.

I am Assistant to the General Examiner at the Excise-Office; these Books are called the 5th and 6th Round for the Year 1752, ending at Midsummer 1753; they are sent from the Office once in a Quarter of a Year, by Order of the Board; these are for Abbotsbury Division; they are returned to the Office by the Supervisor; these contain an Account of what was done in Abbotsbury from the 21st of December 1752, to the 15th of March following, 1753; there is an Order of Board for every Officer that officiates in the place of one that is sick.

Mr. Gascoyne. Look in the Book: Do you know whose Hand-writing it is?

F. Aldborough. I don't know Wake's Hand-writing; here is noted in this Book January 1 to 13; Andrew Wake officiated for the proper Officer, he being indisposed; the Book says John Ward is the proper Officer.

Cross-examined.

Mr. Moreton. At what Time are these Books returned to the Office?

F. Aldborough. There is no certain Time for that; there is an Order for them to be sent in six Weeks after they are done with; some may be kept three Months, some more, some less; but we look upon him to be the more industrious Officer that sends them up in proper Time: I was informed these came up according to Express, and they were put in my Possession.

George Clements sworn.

I live at Abbotsbury.

Mr. Davy. Do you know that old Woman there? look at her Face.

G. Clements. I have looked at her Face many Years ago.

Mr. Davy. Do you remember her Daughter?

G. Clements. What, Lucy? Yes, Sir, and her Brother too; he is my Name-fake.

Mr. Davy. When did you see them in your Country?

G. Clements. I saw them all three on the 1st of January; I went into the Public House the Old Ship; there the old Woman's Son and Daughter danced with our Abbotsbury People; it was about Nine at Night.

Mr. Davy. Who was Lucy's Partner?

G. Clements. William Clarke.

Mr. Davy. Did they stay at Abbotsbury?

G. Clements.

the said John Gibbons in that Behalf) falsely, maliciously, wilfully, wickedly, and corruptly, in Manner and Form aforesaid, did commit wilful and corrupt Perjury, to the great Displeasure of Almighty God, to the evil Example of all others in the like Case offending, and against the Peace of our said Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity.

All the Witnesses, on the Back of the Bill, were called out to give Evidence; but no one appearing, except Mary Woodward, and she declaring she knew nothing of the Matter, an Officer was sent to the Prosecutors to attend the Court; but none of them appearing, the Jury acquitted the Defendant.

A second Indictment to the same Purpose was read against William Clarke; but he was acquitted for want of Evidence.

A third Indictment was preferred against Thomas Greville, for swearing he saw Mary Squires at Coombe on the 14th of January; and he was acquitted likewise for want of Evidence.

During the Time a Messenger was sent to the Prosecutors to attend the Court, Mr. Davy, Council for the Defendants, took that Opportunity of addressing himself to the Court as follows:

My Lord,

I HAVE the Honour to appear before your Lordship in Behalf of the three Defendants; who stand indicted for Perjury, supposed to have been committed by them in this Place, upon the Trial of Mary Squires, for the Robbery of Elizabeth Canning, at Enfield-Wash, in January last.

Gibbons and Clarke are charged with falsely swearing, that Mary Squires was at Abbotsbury from the 1st to the 9th of January; and Greville, that she was at Coombe on the 14th.

If their Testimony was true, Mary Squires was unjustly accused; but it was hers, and their Misfortune, that it then obtained no Credit.—

They were Strangers, unknown to every body at the Trial.—Canning was positive, and being by unfair Means confirmed in her Evidence, Squires was convicted.

Upon this Charge of Perjury, great Care hath been taken, attended with great Expence, on either Side, to search this Matter to the Bottom; every Circumstance hath been scrutinized, and nothing omitted to investigate the Question thoroughly.

It hath a long while been the general Subject of Conversation, and hath engaged the Attention of the Public, more, perhaps, than any private Transaction ever did before.

Here are the Names of no less than fifty Witnesses indorsed upon each of their Indictments; yet only one of them, a poor Woman, whose Evidence is immaterial, appears to prosecute!

This Desertion may occasion various Conjectures, and many false Reasons will probably be suggested for not prosecuting these Indictments.

It may perhaps be attributed to a Compromise—It may be said, that these Defendants are to be acquitted by Consent, and that the Indictment against

G. Clements. They did; they lodged at Gibbons's; I drank with them the first and second Mornings, and dined with them the Sunday following; I saw them on the Monday, and on the Tuesday, the Day they set out from thence.

Mr. Davy. Who set out with them?

G. Clements. William Clarke; he and Lucy went together.

Mr. Davy. I hope they are married by this Time.

G. Clements. The Lord knows, I don't know that.

Cross-examined.

Mr. Nares. How often have you seen this old Acquaintance of yours, Mary Squires?

G. Clements. About fifteen or sixteen Times in that Place, but justly I cannot tell.

Mr. Nares. How often have you seen George?

G. Clements. I cannot tell; I have seen him more than once

Mr. Nares. Twice?

G. Clements. More.

Mr. Nares. Three times?

G. Clements. Three times.

Mr. Nares. Four times?

G. Clements. I cannot tell.

Mr. Nares. Then you will not say you have seen him more than three times?

G. Clements. It may be more, I will not say.

Mr. Nares. When George was not with the old Woman, who came with her?

G. Clements. Her Daughters, Polly and Lucy.

Mr. Nares. How often have you seen Polly and Lucy?

G. Clements. I cannot tell.

Mr. Nares. Have you seen them oftener than you have George?

G. Clements. I cannot tell.

Mr. Nares. How long is it since you saw the old Woman at Abbotsbury, before this Time you are speaking of?

G. Clements. I believe it is four Years since.

Mr. Nares. Was George with her that Time?

G. Clements. Yes, Sir.

Melchisedech Arnold sworn.

I am a Blacksmith, and live at Abbotsbury; I know the old Woman perfectly well, and the Girl on the left Hand, and the Man behind her; they are her Son and Daughter; the last Time I saw them all three, was in January last was Twelvemonth; I saw them on an Evening at the Old Ship at Abbotsbury.

Mr. Willes. Do you mean Old Stile or New?

M. Arnold. I mean this present calculated Time; I remember it was on the 1st of January at Night; the young Man and young Woman danced, and I played on the Violin.

Mr. Willes. Do you know who was Lucy's Partner?

M. Arnold. Her Partner was William Clarke, and George Squires's Partner was Mary Gibbons; they might give over Dancing at Eleven or Twelve at Night.

Mr. Willes. Did you see them afterwards?

M. Arnold. I be not positive I saw them the next Day, but I saw them several Times that Week there; I saw them on the Saturday Night in particular, against Canning is to be dropped. One cannot easily imagine what Rumours Malice may raise.

For this Reason, and to prevent any Imputation upon those who are concerned for the Defendants, I beg Leave to assure your Lordship, and all who hear me, that the Defendants now come prepared for Trial; that their Witnesses attend your Lordship, ready to give their Testimony with such clear, ample, convincing Circumstances, as would demand universal Assent; and fully prove the Innocence of the three Defendants, and the Falsity of Elizabeth Canning's Story in every Particular.

Here are Witnesses, more in Number than perhaps ever appeared in any one Cause, collected together at a vast Expence, and from different remote Places.

Here is other Evidence also ready to be produced, such as, in its Nature, cannot deceive.

The Prosecutors have been invited to meet them here before your Lordship and the Jury; and so desirous were the Friends of the Defendants that this Matter should be fairly tried, that they have offered to bear Part of the Charges of this Prosecution.

The Public hath been a long while amused with Promises, that, in the Trials of these Indictments, the Guilt of the present Defendants should be clearly manifested, and the whole of this mysterious Transaction unravelled.

The Time is come to perform these Promises, and Thousands expect it.

Why do all these Boasters now hide their Faces? because they are covered with Confusion.

They are aware how dangerous it is to pursue a Prosecution, founded in the foulest and most daring Perjury; and wisely withdraw themselves from a Trial which would involve them in Ruin.

Had I considered the Case of the Defendants alone, without regard to any other Person, I should have thought it needless to give the Court any Trouble upon this Occasion.

They are private Countrymen, without any Connections in this Part of the World, and totally unconcerned at any Reports which may prevail here:—Within the narrow Circle of their Acquaintance, their Characters will remain unblemished, let Fame do its worst; because the Charge against them is the Attestation of a Fact, which all their Acquaintance, all their Parish, and their whole Country, know to be true.

But there is One, whose near Relation to this great City makes it necessary for me to say thus much.

It is impossible for Him to be unsollicitous for public Approbation, after having done so much to deserve it.

Yet all the Reproaches which Malice could suggest to little, dark, designing Men, have been levelled at the Chief Magistrate of this City, only for doing what the Love of Justice and Humanity inspired him to.

For His Sake, therefore, I have thus trespassed upon your Lordship's Patience, and only beg Leave to add a few Words more, to shew how unmerited those Reflections were.

As his Lordship was at the Head of the Commission at the Trial of Mary Squires, and was ticular, that Week, they were dancing again, and the old Woman sat in the Dancing-Room; she was in the Kitchen on the Monday Night, sitting by the Fire-side; I also saw them the next Monday, being the 8th; they were then in Gibbons's House; I heard they went away the Tuesday, being the next Day.

Cross-examined.

Mr. Williams. Had you any Knowledge of them before this Time you talk of?

Mr. Arnold. I don't remember any perfect Knowledge I had of them; but I have heard say they were there three Years before, but I don't remember I ever saw them before.

Mr. Williams. What Business do they follow?

Mr. Arnold. I don't know that, for I never dealt with them.

Mr. Williams. Where did you see them these Times you mention?

Mr. Arnold. They were at the Ship, and I don't know that I saw them at any other House.

John Ford sworn.

I live at Abbotsbury, and am a Carpenter.

Mr. Davy. Did you ever see that old Woman before? (Pointing to Mary Squires.)

Mr. Ford. I have seen her many Times before at Abbotsbury; I saw her a matter of four Years ago, and I saw her on the 1st of January, a Twelve-month ago last January, being of a Monday; I shook Hands with her, drank with her Son, and kissed her Daughter; the Daughter, Son, and she came all together to the Excise-Office in our Town, (there they lodged;) John Gibbons keeps the House; he is a Nephew of mine; I drank with George, or else I am not here now.

Mr. Davy. Did you see them often?

Mr. Ford. I saw them at Gibbons's House from the 1st to the 9th every Day; they bought the Bread they eat of me; I am as sure I saw them there, as I am that I am here this Minute.

Mr. Davy. Who bought the Bread?

Mr. Ford. Mary Squires did, or her Son, or Daughter.

Mr. Davy. How came you, that are a Carpenter, to sell Bread?

Mr. Ford. I keep a Shop, and sell Bread and several other Things.

Mr. Davy. Have you any particular Reason for remembering the Day?

Mr. Ford. I have, it being the 1st of January; and Mr. Bond, a School-master in our Town, gives his Scholars a Holiday at New-year's Time; he was there on the Sunday Evening, and gave them Liberty; I was with him, and Mr. Wallace, and George Squires.

Cross-Examination.

Mr. Moreton. Where did they come from then?

Mr. Ford. They came from a Place called Litton.

Mr. Moreton. How early on the Monday did you see them there?

Mr. Ford. It was some Time about One, Two, or Three o'Clock; I am sure it was some Time in the Afternoon; I know it was not Night, because I was looking over the Hatch, and saw George coming down the Street, and spoke to him.

Mr. Moreton. How far might you see George, before he came to speak to you?

Mr. Ford. I saw him, perhaps, fifty Yards; I could see a hundred, and I believe I could see a thousand Yards.

Mr. Moreton. What Hour do you take it to be?

Mr. Ford. I am sure it was not come to Three o'Clock; upon my Life I kissed Lucy before Three o'Clock.

Mr. Moreton. You have given a very particular Reason for knowing it to be the 1st of January, that is, that Mr. Bond had given his Scholars a Play-day; then does he only give them a Play-day on the 1st of January?

Mr. Ford. No, not in particular.

Mr. Moreton. Does not he let them break up at Christmas?

Mr. Ford. No, he does not let them break up all the Christmas; they had several Days at this Time, that is the Reason I know the Day.

Mr. Davy. You say the first Time you saw them was on Monday the 1st of January; pray what Time of the Day was it?

Mr. Ford. I went to the Ale-house between One and Two o'Clock for a Mug of Beer.

Mr. Davy. How many Pots of Beer have you drank To-day? Do you take upon you to say you saw them on the Monday about Two or Three in the Afternoon?

Mr. Ford.

was totally uninfluenced by the infamous Endeavours which at that Time had been used to give Credit to a most improbable Narrative; he was directed, merely by a Regard for Truth; to make further Inquiry into a Story, pregnant with Absurdities, and unlike any Transaction that ever went before it.

And the Evidence of Elizabeth Canning depending entirely upon this Question, Whether the Account which these three Men had given was true, where could his Lordship so properly direct his Inquiry, as to those Places, where they swore they had seen her?

The Success of that Inquiry answered the Wishes of his Humanity; and the most indubitable Proofs of the Convict's Innocence warmed the Royal Heart to Mercy.

One should have thought, that this Conduct of a Magistrate, whose sole Motive to it was a Desire of rescuing a wretched, friendless Convict, from the Miseries into which Perjury and popular Prejudice had thrown her, should, at least, exempt him from Censure.

But his Enemies could never forgive him the Merit of this Action: As it raised him still higher in the Esteem of good Men, he became more the Object of Envy; and no Arts were unessay'd to diminish the Reputation he had so justly acquired.

Had my Lord-Mayor been present, I should not have said so much; but I have been the more encouraged to it from observing, that his Lordship withdrew himself as soon as these Causes were called, because he was pleased to think it improper for Him to preside, where any thing that might be thought to concern Himself should come before the Court.

I have an Apology to make for giving your Lordship any Trouble, where there is no Prosecution; but as the Court waits for the Return of a Messenger, and no Business is now proceeding upon, I hope I have given no Offence. Vide Sessions-Paper in Gascoyne's Mayoralty, Sept. 1753.

J. Ford. I did.

Mr. Davy. You are drunk now, and ought to be ashamed of yourself.

Daniel Wallace sworn.

I live at Abbotsbury, and am a Mercer: I have seen these three People before, and remember them all very well: I saw them there the 7th of January, which was on a Sunday.

Mr. Willes. Had you seen the Son and Daughter before?

D. Wallace. I had several Times before.

Mr. Willes. When did you see the Son and Daughter first?

D. Wallace. It was three or four Years before; I saw them that Time almost every Day.

Mr. Willes. Had you seen either of them that Week, before Sunday the 7th, at Abbotsbury?

D. Wallace. I saw George almost every Day; he bought Sugar of me; and I saw Lucy twice that Week, but did not see the Mother till the 7th, and did not see them after that Day.

Mr. Willes. Had you ever seen the Mother before, so as to be certain of knowing her?

D. Wallace. I had, and that is the real Woman.

Cross-examined.

Mr. Williams. When did you first see them that Week?

D. Wallace. I saw George the Day he came to Town; I believe he came into Town the Sunday before.

Mr. Williams. What Day of the Month was it when you first saw George?

D. Wallace. I saw him on the first Day he came into Town, about Six in the Evening.

Mr. Williams. Did you see him on the Monday the 1st of January?

D. Wallace. I saw none of them on the Monday; I believe I saw George on Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday and Friday; I have seen the old Woman several Years ago, and have conversed with her a great many Times.

Mr. Williams. What did they come there for?

D. Wallace. That I don't know; they have at different Times sold Things.

Mr. Recorder. What do you know the particular Day by, on which you saw the old Woman?

D. Wallace. I had bought a new Jack, and had a Shoulder of Mutton roasted for Dinner on the Sunday; and the old Woman was peeling Potatoes, and asked me to dine with her, and I said, I had something particular to dine on.

Hugh Bond sworn.

I am a School-master at Abbotsbury; I saw this old Woman there on the 8th and 9th of January 1753, and George and Lucy along with her; this was on a Monday and Tuesday, at the Sign of the Old Ship: I had been down in Devonshire, and came Home about Six or Seven at Night: I lodged at the Old Ship, and had never seen the old Woman before; they went away on the Morning of the 9th about Nine o'Clock; this old Woman is the very same Person; whoever sees her once, can never mistake her again: I saw George again the same Night; then Clarke and he came back again from Portersham.

Mr. Gascoyne. Had you any Conversation with her?

H. Bond. No, but I had with George, and one Mr. Wake, an Exciseman, that officiated in the room of Mr. Ward, who was then sick; for when I came Home, my Landlady begged I would not be offended at her putting somebody in my Bed; that was this Exciseman; there are two Beds in the Room, and in the other George Squires lay.

Mr. Gascoyne. When did you go down into Devonshire?

H. Bond. I went on the 31st of December, and came back on Monday the 8th of January.

Mr. Gascoyne. As you are a School-master, you must know the Time of your going out.

H. Bond. My Wife was in Devonshire; I went to see her; she was sick, and is since dead.

Cross-examined.

Mr. Moreton. What Time did you see this old Woman on the 8th?

H. Bond. It was after Candles were lighted; after I had shifted myself, I came and sat down by the Fire, with George Squires and Mr. Wake; I had never seen George before; I asked my Landlady, who he was? she said, his Name was Squires, and that his Mother and Sister were in another Room; after which the old Woman came out to call her Son to go to Bed.

Mr. Moreton. What Time did they go away the next Day?

H. Bond. I don't know what Time; but when the Girl came to call me from the School to Breakfast, they were then in the Kitchen.

Mr. Moreton. How far is Portersham from Abbotsbury?

H. Bond. It is about a Mile Distance.

Mr. Moreton. Are you sure you saw George, after he came back again from Portersham?

H. Bond. I am; he came back again in the Evening; and drank a Mug of Beer at my Door, after School-time, with William Clarke, in the Street.

Mr. Moreton. What might it be o'Clock?

H. Bond. It might be Five o'Clock; I saw no more of him; George said he would not stay any longer; for he must go to Portersham; I did not go out, but went to Bed afterwards.

John Bailey sworn.

I live at Abbotsbury, and am a Carpenter.

Mr. Davy. Look at that old Woman; do you know her?

Bailey. I do; the Man and Woman behind her are George and Lucy: I saw them at Abbotsbury on the 1st of January 1753, at the Old Ship, the Excise-Office; and I saw them all three there the Monday and Tuesday, which was a Week after. My Yard joins to the Old Ship; I saw them most Days of that Time; I shaved George twice, the Time he was there, on the Wednesday and Monday after; I practise the Trade of a Barber as well as a Carpenter.

Mr. Davy. How long have you known the old Woman?

Bailey. I have known her ten or fifteen Years, and am sure I am not mistaken.

Mr. Davy. How long have you known the Son and Daughter?

Bailey. Not so long; I have known them above three Years; that is, from the last Time they came there before this 1st of January I mentioned.

Mr. Davy. By what Circumstance do you recollect it to be the 1st of January?

Bailey. I had a Brother that used the Sea, and he went away that very Day for Bristol; I am certain that was the very Day: He left something of a Will for me to enjoy, if he died; and he has since returned, and taken the Paper from me.

Cross-examined.

Mr. Moreton. What Time did you see them at Abbotsbury on the 1st of January?

Bailey. It was in the Evening, betwixt Eight and Nine o'Clock, by the Kitchen Fire.

Mr. Davy. Do you remember the Dancing there?

Bailey. I cannot say I do, for I went Home to Bed.

Thomas Anson sworn.

I live at Abbotsbury, and am a labouring Man; I know that old Woman very well, and her Son and Daughter, as she calls them.

Mr. Willes. Did you ever see them at Abbotsbury? and when?

Anson. I saw them on Old Christmas-Day there, being on a Friday, the 5th, at John Gibbons's House; they were all three together; I had seen them a Day or two before that.

Mr. Willes. Had you seen them before this Time of coming there?

Anson. I had seen her about four Years ago, and her Son and two Daughters with her.

Mr. Willes. Do you know one William Clarke?

Anson. I do; he was with them at the same Time; they were intimate together, that is, Lucy and he, as Sweethearts; it was reported so then.

Cross-examined.

Mr. Nares. Do you know their Reasons for coming there?

Anson. No, I do not.

Mr. Nares. How long have you lived at Abbotsbury?

Anson. About five Years.

Mr. Nares. How far is that from the Sea?

Anson. It is about a Mile from it.

John Hawkins sworn.

I live at Abbotsbury, and am a Weaver.

Mr. Gascoyne. Look at that old Woman that sits there, and her Son and Daughter.

Hawkins. I do; I know them: I saw them at Gibbons's at Abbotsbury, on the 1st of January, about Eight at Night.

Mr. Gascoyne. What January?

Hawkins. I am no Scholar; it was not last January, but January was Twelve-month; the Son and Daughter were dancing then.

Mr. Gascoyne. Who played on the Violin that Time?

Hawkins. Melchisedech Arnold.

Mr. Gascoyne. Where was the old Woman?

Hawkins. She was sitting in the other House by the Fire-side in the Kitchen.

Mr. Gascoyne. Why do you call it the Kitchen, belonging to the other House?

Hawkins. That is the lower House, joining to the same House.

Mr. Gascoyne. Did you see the old Woman more than once?

Hawkins. I saw her every Day till the Day she went away, which was on a Tuesday, being the 9th Day of the Month.

Mr. Gascoyne. Had you ever seen the old Woman before that January?

Hawkins. Yes, Sir, I had; it may be a Year, two, or three before, at George Clements's.

Mr. Gascoyne. By what do you remember the particular Time of your seeing her?

Hawkins. Because it was on New-year's Day, and being Holiday-time, we got to dancing.

Mr. Gascoyne. Were you acquainted with them before this?

Hawkins. No, I was not.

Mr. Gascoyne. Did you dance with them?

Hawkins. Yes, I did on the Monday Night.

Mr. Gascoyne. Can you tell how they were coupled?

Hawkins. I cannot tell who my Neighbours danced with.

Mr. Gascoyne. Who did Clarke dance with?

Hawkins. I cannot tell.

Mr. Gascoyne. Who did you dance with?

Hawkins. I cannot tell now.

Cross-examined.

Mr. Moreton. This was a very merry Dance: What had you been at all Day? Had you kept Holiday the whole Day? Cannot you remember your Partner?

Hawkins. I do not remember my Partner.

Mr. Moreton. Nor who danced with Lucy?

Hawkins. No, I cannot; there was a very great Company of us.

Mr. Moreton. Who did George dance with?

Hawkins. I do not know.

Mr. Moreton. Do you remember the Place?

Hawkins. Yes, I do; it was in Gibbons's Parlour; it was a common Dance, any body might come as would.

Mr. Moreton. What was Clements's House, where she came before?

Hawkins. A private House; she used to lie at that House.

Mr. Moreton. What is his Trade?

Hawkins. He is no Trade, but a Fisherman.

Mr. Moreton. Does he never catch such a Thing as a Handkerchief, such as is round your Neck, at Sea?

Hawkins. No, not as I know of.

Mr. Moreton. What had the old Woman used to deal in?

Hawkins. I never saw her deal in any thing; I have heard People talk she sold Things.

Mr. Moreton. Was it hard Ware?

Hawkins. I do not know what Ware it was.

Mr. Moreton. Did you ever talk with her?

Hawkins. Yes, once at Clements's.

Mr. Moreton. What was your Conversation then?

Hawkins. It was about telling of Fortunes; we asked her Questions, and she told us she was no Fortune-teller.

Mr. Moreton. Did she tell you what her Trade was?

Hawkins. No; we went about our Business; there were two young Men with me.

Mr. Davy. Now we leave Abbotsbury, and come to Portersham.

William Haines sworn.

I live at Portersham.

Mr. Davy. Look at that old Woman; do you know her?

W. Haines.

W. Haines. I know her very well, her Name is Mary Squires; I have known her thirty Years and upwards.

Mr. Davy. Where did you see her last?

W. Haines. I remember seeing her at Portersham on the 9th of January 1753.

Mr. Davy. Do you know that young Man and Woman that are by her?

W. Haines. I do; they are George and Lucy: They were all three of them at my Door with William Clarke from Abbotsbury; they were going to their Quarters, the Sign of the Chequer, Josua Frampton's House; Clarke called at my House, to know if I had done his Cloaths; (I am a Taylor.) I asked the old Gentlewoman and the rest to come into my House, but they did not, and went on to the Chequer; after that I went down to the Chequer; there was one Richard Chipman; we drank a Pot of Beer: Mrs. Squires sat in one Corner, and George in the other, and Lucy and Clarke before the Fire in the Kitchen.

Mr. Davy. What Sort of Weather was it that Night?

W. Haines. It was terrible bad Weather the next Day; I left them that Night there.

Mr. Davy. What makes you remember it to be the 9th of January?

W. Haines. I rent a Shop at Abbotsbury, and was going there on New-year's Day; and because of the Old Christmas, I never went till Monday the 8th. Although I have known the old Woman so long, yet I never had any Knowledge of the young ones, till William Clarke courted Lucy: As for George, he might pass by, but I never had any Knowledge of him till then. I lived two Years at Abbotsbury: I was once at Work at George Clements's, and the old Woman happened to be there all the Time I was there, which was seven or eight Days.

Cross-Examination.

Mr. Nares. What Time in the Afternoon did you see them at your Door on the 9th of January?

W. Haines. It was about Ten or Eleven o'Clock in the fore Part of the Day.

Mr. Nares. Did you go after them to the Chequer?

W. Haines. I did.

Mr. Nares. In how long Time after?

W. Haines. About an Hour or two after them.

Mr. Nares. How long did you stay with them?

W. Haines. I only drank a Pot or two of Beer.

Mr. Nares. Did you see George Squires there?

W. Haines. No, I did not see him there any Time after that Afternoon; after I went away, I went to Abbotsbury, and I met him in the Fields that come from Abbotsbury.

John Haines sworn.

I am Son to William Haines of Portersham; I live there with my Father.

Mr. Willes. Look at that old Woman; do you know her?

J. Haines. I have seen her before at Portersham on the 9th of January.

Mr. Willes. Do you know her Son and Daughter?

J. Haines. Yes, I saw them there the same Time.

Mr. Willes. What Day of the Week was the 9th of January?

J. Haines. It was on a Tuesday; they lay at the Chequer; William Clarke came with them; they came there about Nine, Ten, or Eleven o'Clock; William Clarke lay there, so did they; they went away about Nine or Ten the next Day; it was a very bad rainy Day.

Cross-Examination.

Mr. Williams. Did you ever see this old Woman before that Time?

J. Haines. I saw her at Abbotsbury on the 6th of January, and never before.

Mr. Williams. Did you see them in the Evening?

J. Haines. I do not remember I saw them in the Evening; I saw them the next Morning.

Mr. Williams. Did you see an Exciseman there?

J. Haines. No, I did not.

Mr. Williams. How came you to be so particular as to the Day?

J. Haines. The Reason is, because I saw them at Abbotsbury the 6th of January; the Epiphany Day; I was at Abbotsbury then.

Mr. Williams. How long have you lived with your Father?

J. Haines. Ever since I was born.

Mr. Davy. Upon your Oath, is this the very Woman?

J. Haines. It is; I cannot be mistaken.

Francis Bewley sworn.

F. Bewley. I live at Ridgway, and keep a small Public House, the Sign of the Sloop a-ground.

Mr. Davy. How many Miles is that from Portersham?

F. Bewley. It is four or five.

Mr. Davy. Look upon that old Woman there; and tell us whether you have seen her before?

F. Bewley. I have several Times at my House.

Mr. Davy. Did you see her at any Time about a Year ago at your House?

F. Bewley. I did on Wednesday the 10th of January.

Mr. Davy. Were the Son and Daughter with her at that Time, and Clarke of Abbotsbury?

F. Bewley. They were.

Mr. Davy. What Time might they come to you?

F. Bewley. I believe, betwixt Nine and Eleven in the Morning.

Mr. Davy. Did they come in all together?

F. Bewley. I don't know whether they came all together, but they were there all together in a short Time.

Mr. Davy. What had they to eat or drink?

F. Bewley. At first they had some Roll and Cheese; I carried it myself; and they had some Beef-steaks for Dinner, at about One or Two o'Clock, or after; it was not much off of that.

Mr. Davy. Do you remember the Circumstance of any body having a dead Horse?

F. Bewley. Yes, Sir; a Woman going from Siron Market to Weymouth Market, the Horse was taken sick upon the Road, and she hired my Horse to ride to Weymouth Market: She bid me take care of this Horse, and get a Blacksmith to do something to him, and the Horse died on the Wednesday Morning, at almost Day: I got a Man to lend me a Horse to draw him out of my Stable to a Place behind my House, under a Hedge: When the Woman came back, she desired me to give somebody Six-pence to skin him, and the Horse Horse was a skinning as they came along into the Yard.

Mr. Davy. Did Clarke stay at your House that Night?

F. Bewley. No, he did not: A Man was selling Turnips, with two Horses, about the Parish; and Clarke had spoke to him, as far as I heard, to come to be to carry him Home on one of those Horses: It was a terrible wet Day as ever I know'd.

Mr. Davy. Where did the Gypsey Woman, her Son and Daughter lie?

F. Bewley. They lay at my House that Night.

Mr. Davy. Before you was up in the Morning, did any body come to your Bed-side?

F. Bewley. Yes, George Squires did, with his Mother: He told me he had a Pattern of a Waistcoat, (he produces a Remnant of Nankeen) this is the Stuff.

Mr. Davy. What did he say to you?

F. Bewley. The first he said was, he asked me if I wanted a Waistcoat, and said he had been to Abbotsbury, and Money was short, and I should have it cheap. I said, I did not understand it, and I never had such a Waistcoat in my Life, and I did not want it: With that his Mother came in, and said, they were short of Money, and desired to leave it in my Hand, and desired I'd take it for the Reckoning, which I did, and have had it ever since. They told me they would either send the Money, or bring it.

Mr. Davy. Had you ever, before this Time, seen the Gypsey Woman and her Daughter?

F. Bewley. I can't say justly to the old Woman; I once saw the Son and Daughter dancing at our House, when they lodged at Broadway once.

Mr. Davy to George Squires. Look at this Piece, (he takes the Nankeen in his Hand.)

Squires. I can't swear this is the same that I left with him, but it is very much like it; it is the same Sort of Stuff.

F. Bewley. I wrote my Name upon it, before I let it go out of my Custody to any body; my Name is now on it, (shewn to the Jury, and appeared with his Name on it.)

Mr. Davy. How do you remember the Time particularly?

F. Bewley. I am sure it was that Time, by reason it was such Weather, and the Blandford Sessions were sitting at Court; it was a Flood, and the dying of the Horse, and several Circumstances.

Mr. Davy. How far is Blandford from Ridgway?

F. Bewley. It is fifteen computed Miles. We know that Sessions is always kept the 8th or 10th of January; many of my Neighbours were at the Sessions, and told me, when they came Home, what a Flood there was in going.

Cross-examined.

Mr. Moreton. Are you sure this was January 53?

F. Bewley. It was January was Twelve-month.

Mr. Moreton. Are you sure you have seen George and his Sister a dancing before this?

F. Bewley. Yes, Sir, I have, three or four Years back; but I can't say I had seen the old Woman; they lodged at Broadway then.

Mr. Moreton. What Trade did they carry on?

F. Bewley. Upon my Word I cannot tell.

Mr. Moreton. Did not you know of their dealing in Nankeens?

F. Bewley. I never know'd they did; they brought this to me; I never saw them have a Bit in my Life before.

Mr. Moreton. How far is Ridgway from the Sea?

F. Bewley. It is about two Miles.

Mr. Moreton. Was you up here when Mary Squires was tried?

F. Bewley. No, I was not.

Mr. Moreton. Was you not apply'd to by George or Lucy to come up to that Trial?

F. Bewley. No, I was not. I read in the News of a Mary Squires tried for a Robbery, but I did not know that it was this Mary Squires; I said there were others of that Name.

Mr. Davy. Did you ever know a Mary Squires with such a Face as this?

F. Bewley. No, Sir.

Thomas Mockeridge sworn.

Mr. Davy. Inform the Court who you are, and whether you have ever seen those three Persons, and when, and where?

T. Mockeridge. I live at Abbotsbury now; I had been at Ridgway and Upway selling Turnips (it was very bad Weather) on the 10th of January, by the present Stile; it was the Wednesday after Old Christmas-Day. I found the old Woman, her Son George, and her Daughter Lucy, and William Clarke, at Mr. Bewley's House, at the Sign of the Ship; I had made an End of selling my Turnips before I came there: I came in, I believe, between Twelve and One at Noon, and think I stopp'd there till between Two and Three.

Mr. Davy. Had you seen the old Woman Mary Squires before?

T. Mockeridge. I had several Times. I remember seeing her at George Clements's House, going down towards the Sea, (we call it Gracechurch-Street) about three Years ago before that.

Mr. Davy. Are you sure those are the People you saw there that Day?

T. Mockeridge. I am upon my Oath, and will not come here to speak a false Word for the World.

Mr. Davy. Do you know of any Accident that happened to a Horse on this Day?

T. Mockeridge. No, I do not.

Cross-examined.

Mr. Nares. Where did you go back to afterwards?

T. Mockeridge. To Abbotsbury: I had two Horses; I rode one, and William Clarke the other; he went to Portersham, where he lodged, and I went Home with my Horses; he took leave of those People at Ridgway.

John Taylor sworn.

J. Taylor. I live at Fordington; at the Sign of the Coach and Horses.

Mr. Davy. Whereabouts is that?

J. Taylor. It is joining Dorchester; it is not a Stone's-cast apart; many do mistake it for Part of the Town.

Mr. Davy. Do you remember this unhappy old Woman?

J. Taylor. I know her perfectly well; I have seen her above once or twice.

Mr. Davy. Do you know that Girl and the young Man there?

J. Taylor.

J. Taylor. I do, and have known them some Years; they are her Son and Daughter; I saw them at Fordington on Thursday the 11th of January; they were not in my House, they were in my Stable on the 10th; there was such a Rain they could not pass along the Road; the Waters were so high, they went through a Neighbour's House and my Stable the back Way.

Mr. Davy. Are you a Miller?

J. Taylor. No, but there is a Mill lies close by my Door.

Mr. Davy. How did they get through the Water?

J. Taylor. The old Woman took up her Coats and went along through it, and the young Woman was carried over by the Miller's Boy on Horseback.

Mr. Davy. Did you see the old Woman cross on Foot?

J. Taylor. Yes, Sir, to be sure, I saw it as plain as I see you.

Mr. Davy. When was this?

J. Taylor. It was on Thursday the 11th of January 53, in the Forenoon, betwixt the Hours of Eight and Eleven.

Mr. Davy. Did you see her walk all the Way through the Water?

J. Taylor. I saw her go along Part of it, I did not see it all, because it is two or three Rivers; I saw her go over two of the Rivers.

Mr. Davy. Did you see any body carry her over?

J. Taylor. No body carried her, she went on Foot.

Mr. Davy. Did you see the old Woman cross all the Rivers?

J. Taylor. She went over the Bridges, as far as I know of it; she forded the Water at my Stable-door, or as near it as it is cross the Court-yard; I did not see her walk through all the Water; I had no Business to watch her; George had told me they lodged at Mr. Bewley's at Ridgway-Foot, the Night before.

Mr. Davy. Did they tell you whither they were going?

J. Taylor. I can't tell where they were going; they were in the Blandford Road.

Cross-examined.

Mr. Williams. You say you saw the Miller's Boy carry over the Daughter?

J. Taylor. He carried her over all of it: The Place where he took her up she waded through, and after that there be Bridges; one is Stone, and the rest are wooden ones.

Mr. Williams. How far is it from your House to Chettle?

J. Taylor. I cannot tell; I believe it is seventeen or eighteen Miles, but I don't know where it is.

Thomas Hunt sworn.

T. Hunt. I live at Chettle, I am a Thresher.

Mr. Willes. Look at that old Woman, her Son and Daughter: Have you seen them before?

T. Hunt. I have at Chettle, on Friday the 12th of January 53, about Four in the Afternoon: The old Woman came into out Back-side, to the Barn-door to me, and begged Lodging of me; there was no Public House in the Place; I let her lie in an Out-house on some clean Oat-straw; it belongs to Mr. Watts of Cranborne: I asked her, if she had any body belonged to her? she told me she had none but a Couple of Children, and immediately call'd, Why don't you come along? and immediately there came a Man and Woman.

Mr. Willes. Look at that Man and Woman near her; do you know them?

T. Hunt. The Man I can swear to safely; the Woman I do not so much, because she was cover'd over: I know the Man full well, as I know my right Hand from my left; I let them in at Night, and there I found them in the Morning; and the Morning being very wet, they remained there till Ten or Eleven o'Clock, or it may be something more.

Mr. Willes. Had you ever seen the old Woman before?

T. Hunt. I had not; but I am very sure it is the Woman, before God and the World.

Mr. Willes. How can you fix upon the Time?

T. Hunt. It was a very remarkable Day, the Old New-year's Day, which proved, by altering the Style, to be the 12th of January.

Cross-examined.

Mr. Moreton. Did you ever see them before?

T. Hunt. No, never before that Friday.

Mr. Moreton. Have you seen them since?

T. Hunt. I have, in the City, about a Month before Michaelmas.

Mr. Moreton. Do you know where they came from, that Day you saw them at Chettle?

T. Hunt. No, Sir, I don't.

Mr. Moreton. How far is Ridgway-Foot from Chettle?

T. Hunt. I don't know.

Mr. Moreton. How far is Chettle from Dorchester?

T. Hunt. They count it twenty Miles; but I never was there in my Life.

John Elderton sworn.

J. Elderton. I am a Servant-man; a Carter to one Farmer Thane, at Martin; I have seen that old Woman, and the young Woman, and the young Fellow.

Mr. Gascoyne. Where?

J. Elderton. At Martin, on Saturday Seven-night after Old Christmas-Day, in the Year 53, in the Afternoon, about Four o'Clock; they all three lay in an Out-house where I live; the old Woman came first, and asked my Master Leave to lie there.

Mr. Gascoyne. Did you hear her?

J. Elderton. I did.

Mr. Gascoyne. Was there Straw or Hay?

J. Elderton. Straw; I saw them all in the Out-house about Four in the Evening, and on the Morning before they went away.

Mr. Gascoyne. What Time did you see them in the Morning?

J. Elderton. I saw them about Eight o'Clock; they were getting up; I am sensible they are the three People.

Mr. Gascoyne. Had you ever seen the old Woman before?

J. Elderton. No, I had not.

Mr. Gascoyne. Is your Master Farmer Thane here?

J. Elderton. No; he was coming up, but was taken sick on the Road; he came to Salisbury in Company with us, and there we left him; he came to give Evidence in this Trial.

Cross-examined.

Mr. Nares. What Time did they come to your Master's?

J. Elderton. About Four o'Clock.

Mr. Nares. Did they all come together?

J. Elderton. The old Woman came a little before the others: When Master had granted Lodging, she went and called them; then they came.

Mr. Nares. What is getting up out of a Barn?

J. Elderton. It is dressing themselves; putting on their Cloaths, or tackling themselves up.

Mr. Nares. Did you see any Sheets they had?

J. Elderton. No, I did not see any.

Mr. Nares. Did you see any of their Cloaths off?

J. Elderton. No, I did not; they were tying their Cloaths up.

Mr. Nares. Did you see their Gowns off, or Caps off, or Petticoats off?

J. Elderton. No, Sir.

Mr. Davy. Did the Straw appear as if they had laid on it?

J. Elderton. It did; there were Marks where they had laid.

William Hort sworn.

W. Hort. I live at Martin.

Mr. Davy. Look at that old Woman; did you ever see that Face before?

W. Hort. Yes, Sir, I have at Martin.

Mr. Davy. Do you know that Girl behind her, and that Man near her?

W. Hort. Yes, Sir, I do; they are the Woman's Daughter and Son, for what I know.

Mr. Davy. When did you see them before?

W. Hort. I saw them all three at Martin, on Saturday Seven-night after Old Christmas-Day; they lay in an Out-house at Farmer Thane's.

Mr. Davy. What do you mean by an Out-house?

W. Hort. By that I mean a Barn, or Place where was Straw.

Mr. Davy. How did they lie?

W. Hort. I don't know; I did not see them lie in Bed: I am Farmer Thane's Servant; they asked Leave of Master to lie there.

Mr. Davy. What did they lie upon?

W. Hort. I cannot say what they lay upon, there was Straw.

Mr. Davy. Do you take upon you to say these are the same three Persons?

W. Hort. I do by my Life; that I say in the Presence of God.

Mr. Davy. Look upon them again.

W. Hort. I do, I am sure they are the same.

Cross-examined.

Mr. Williams. How long did they stay?

W. Hort. They came in the Evening, and went away the next Morning.

Mr. Williams. Did you see them at any other Time?

W. Hort. I saw the old Woman in Master's House by the Fire, and her Daughter was joining China for them.

John Blandford sworn.

J. Blandford. I live with Farmer Thane, at Martin.

Mr. Willes. What are you?

J. Blandford. I am a Blacksmith.

Mr. Willes. Look at that old Woman.

J. Blandford. I saw her there on the Saturday Evening, seven Nights after Old Christmas, about Four o'Clock, or something after, which is the 13th of January.

Mr. Willes. Did you see only the old Woman?

J. Blandford. No, I only saw her, because she came in before them.

Mr. Willes. Had you ever seen her before that Time?

J. Blandford. No, I don't know that ever I did.

Mr. Gascoyne. Do you know that old Woman, and young Man and Woman?

Mr. Gascoyne. What Year do you mean?

J. Hayter. I mean in the Year 53; the young Man was a little before them, and the old Woman had hold on the Daughter's Hand: The young Man asked me, how far it was from Coombe? I said, I thought he knew as well as I did, (as I had seen him before;) the old Gentlewoman was half a Dozen Luggs behind him; she ask'd me, and I told her, it was two Miles and a half.

Mr. Gascoyne. Had you seen them both before?

J. Hayter. I had, but I can't say I had seen the young Woman before.

Mr. Gascoyne. What is the Reason you know that particular Day?

J. Hayter. By reason my Wife was gone over to keep Christmas, and I was going to fetch her home from Martin: And I saw them again the same Day at Coombe; I came back to Coombe again the same Night: I saw them on the Monday Morning at Seven o'Clock; I saw them at Mrs. Greville's, the Sign of the Lamb; Thomas Greville is dead; I went down to ask him if he had a Load of Furz, I wanted a Load; there this old Gentlewoman sat in the Corner, and George stood up in the Middle of the House, and Lucy stood by him; I never spoke a Word to them then.

Mr. Nares. Was you here when Greville was indicted?

J. Hayter. No, I was not here Time enough.

Mr. Nares. Did you come up to the old Woman's Trial.

J. Hayter. I was not applied to, to come up; I told it, as soon as ever I heard Greville went, that I met her in such a Place.

Mr. Nares. Why did you not appear to give Evidence before?

J. Hayter. I was not subpœna'd, is the Cause I did not come.

Mr. Davy. Had you ever seen them before?

M. Greville. I don't remember I ever did.

Mr. Davy. Did you notice the old Woman?

Mr. Davy. Do you know the Day of the Week?

R. Merchant. No, Sir.

Mr. Davy. How do you know it to be the 14th of January?

Cross-examined.

Mr. Williams. When did your Master tell you it was the 14th of January?

M. Waters. No, she did not; I did not want it.

Mr. Davy. Your Lordship may remember, that George Squires could give no Account of Places between Coombe and Basingstoke, therefore we could not collect any Evidence between these Towns; so the next Witness comes from Basingstoke, which you will find to be forty Miles from Coombe, and that is four Days Journey, according to their Rate of Travelling: They were at Coombe on the 14th of January, and you will find them at Basingstoke on the 18th.

Mary Morris sworn.

M. Morris. I live at Basingstoke, at the Spread-Eagle.

Mr. Davy. Look at that old Woman.

M. Morris. That old Gentlewoman is Mary Squires, and the young Woman is Lucy Squires, and the young Man is George Squires. I wrote a Letter for the young Woman on the 18th of January.

Mr. Davy. What Day of the Week was it?

M. Morris. Really I will not be positive; it was on a Thursday or Friday; it was for one Clarke at Abbotsbury.

Mr. Davy. Look at this Letter; is this your Writing?

M. Morris. (She takes it in her Hand)—Sir, it is my Hand-writing, Directions and all; my little Boy carried it to the Post-Office, and Mr. Squires gave him a Half-penny because he did not stay.

(The Letter read, directed “ To the Post-House in Dorchester, to be directed to Abbotsbury for Mr. William Clarke, Cordwainer. This with Care.”)

“ Basingstoke, Jan. 18, 175 *

“ S I R,

“ This, with my kind Love and Service to you, and all your Family, hoping you are all in good Health, as I be at present. This is to acquaint you, that I am very uneasy for your troublesome Journey, hoping you received no Illness after your Journey; so no more at present from “ Your most obedient and humble Servant,

“ Lucy Squires.

“ I desire to hear from you as soon as possible. Direct for Lucy Squires at Brentford, near London. George and Mother give their Compliments to you, and all your Family.”

Mr. Davy. You are sure this is your Hand-writing?

M. Morris. This is my own Hand-writing, which

* The other Figure being in the Corner, was supposed to be torn off.

which I wrote at Basingstoke, at the Request of Lucy Squires.

Mr. Davy. Were the old Woman and Son there then?

M. Morris. They were in the House all the Time; they would have lodged at my House, but I had not Lodgings; they had a Pint or two of Beer, and eat a Bit of Bread, and went on to Old Basing.

Mr. Davy. How far is Old Basing from Basingstoke?

M. Morris. It is about two Miles.

Mr. Davy. Is it not possible you may mistake these People for any other Gypsies?

M. Morris. I am positive that these are the very People I saw at my House.

M. Morris. She had lain at my House about a Year and three Quarters before.

Mr. Nares. None but the old Woman?

M. Morris. No; I never saw the Son and Daughter before.

Mr. Nares. Are you sure this Letter was wrote the Day it bears Date?

M. Morris. I am positive sure it was.

Mr. Willis sworn.

Mr. Willes. How far is Coombe from Basingstoke?

Willis. It is about forty Miles.

Mr. Willes. Where had you this Letter?

Willis. When I came to the Post-office at Dorchester, which is the nearest Post-office to Abbotsbury, the Directions being very blind, the Post-master had sent it under Mistake to one Clarke, as I understood, at Charlster, who sent his Wife with it immediately.

(The Court look upon the Back of the Letter, and discover two Post-marks upon it.)

Thomas Ravenbill sworn.

T. Ravenbill. I belong to the Post-office; I am Assistant Clerk to the Western Road.

Mr. Davy. Look at the Post-mark upon that Letter, and tell us where the Letter was marked.

T. Ravenbill. This is a Mark of the General Post-office in London.

Mr. Davy. What Day of the Month does it appear to be stamped?

T. Ravenbill. The Stamp is very imperfect, I cannot take upon me to speak with Certainty.

Mr. Davy. Of whose Hand-writing is the Post-charge?

T. Ravenbill. This is mine, that is the Charge, which is seven Pence; the original Place where it came from to London is three Pence; that is three Pence up, and four Pence down; it is directed to be left at the Post-house in Dorchester, that is four Pence.

Mr. Davy. See what Part of the printed Mark do you find plain?

T. Ravenbill. The Stamp is so very imperfect, that I cannot with any Degree of Certainty tell; the 9 is very plain; whether it is 19 or 29 I cannot say; it is not the 9th, for if it was, that Figure would have been in the Center.

Mr. Davy. Look at the Letters at the Bottom of the Circle.

T. Ravenbill. The second Letter seems to be an A.

Mr. Davy. I think your Stamps are marked MR for March?

T. Ravenbill. They are.

Mr. Davy. Then there can be the Name of no Month, the second Letter of which is A, but January and May.

T. Ravenbill. I do not recollect that the second Letter of any Stamp is A, but that of January and May.

Mr. Davy. Can you get the Stamps from the Post-office, that the Court may see them?

T. Ravenbill. Yes. (He goes, and returns with several Impressions on Paper, as Jan. 9, Jan. 19, Jan. 29, and May 1, March 26.) These are all the Stamps where A is the second Letter; all the inland Stamps have the Figure on the Top of the Letter, and the foreign Stamps have it at the Bottom; the Figure 9 is placed not in the Center, but just over the second Letter.

Mr. Davy. Look at this Letter; do you believe that Stamp to be January?

T. Ravenbill. I cannot form an Opinion of it, more than any Stranger to it; I believe it to be the 19th or 29th, rather than the 9th.

Cross-examined.

Mr. Moreton. What are those Stamps made of?

T. Ravenbill. They are made of Box.

Mr. Moreton. Do you stamp a Letter for 52 with the same Stamp of 51?

T. Ravenbill. No, we do not; we use every Day one, and they last no longer; sometimes, at the latter End of the Day, it is so defaced and clogged, that it will hardly last a Day; and after they have been used, they are thrown into a Drawer, where they remain five or six Months, and then we burn them.

Mr. Moreton. Are you sure this Mark of the Charge is your Mark?

T. Ravenbill. I am very sure it is.

Mr. Davy. Has Basingstoke a Stamp to it?

T. Ravenbill. I can't say whether it has or no.

Mr. Davy. Is there a Post-master there?

T. Ravenbill. There is.

Mr. Davy. Have not all Post-masters Stamps?

T. Ravenbill. I can't say whether they have or not.

Mr. Davy. Look at this, and see if there is a Post-mark upon it.

T. Ravenbill. I see very plainly there is a Mark; but it is so blind, I can't distinguish what it is.

Mr. Davy. Is it a Mark of two Lines?

T. Ravenbill. I believe it may be a Post-mark of two Lines.

Mr. Davy. Why have some two Lines, and some but one?

T. Ravenbill. Those of two Lines are generally where the Town's Name is a long one.

Elizabeth Edwards sworn.

E. Edwards. I live at Brentford.

Mr. Willes. Look at that old Woman, and these two People with her.

E. Edwards. I see her, and her Daughter and Son; they came all three into my House; I don't know the Day, but we had a Neighbour's Child christened at the Time they were there; (She produces the Copy of the Register) this is a true Copy of the Register of the Child when it was christened; Mr. Gascoyne went himself and took it out of the Book.

Mr. Willes. Can you tell by any other Circumstance ?

E. Edwards. No, I cannot.

Mr. Willes. What Day was it the Child was christened ?

E. Edwards. By this, it was the 22d Day of January, and the old Woman went away on the 23d, being on a Tuesday; but they came to my House on the Saturday before.

Mr. Willes. Do you keep a Public House ?

E. Edwards. No, I do not; I keep a Shop; they lodged at my House: George went out on the Sunday, and brought his other Sister to our House on the Monday, and they went all away together on the Tuesday Morning betimes towards London.

Mr. Willes. What did they call the other Sister's Name ?

E. Edwards. I have forgot what he called her, but one of them he called Lucy.

Mr. Willes. Was that she that he brought on the Monday ?

E. Edwards. No, it was not.

Mr. Willes. Are you sure they were at your House at that Time ?

E. Edwards. I am positive they were.

Susannah Burwill sworn.

S. Burwill. I live at Brentford; the last Witness is my Mother; she has had two Husbands, which is the Reason our Names differ.

Mr. Gascoyne. Do you know that old Woman there ?

S. Burwill. I do: I never saw her before she came to my Mother's. I know them all three; they all came together on a Saturday Night, the 20th of January; they asked for Lodgings, and said they were recommended by a Friend of my Mother's, and my Mother let them lie there: On the Sunday the old Gentlewoman and her Daughter stayed there, and the Son went to London, and did not come home till the Monday, and then he brought a Sister (as he called her) with him.

Mr. Gascoyne. What Time did he return ?

S. Burwill. I can't tell the Time directly; it was some Time of the Day.

Mr. Gascoyne. Did they lie there on Monday Night ?

S. Burwill. They did, Sir, and went all four of them away on the Tuesday Morning.

Mr. Gascoyne. Did they say where they were going ?

S. Burwill. They said they were going to Epping in Essex.

Mr. Gascoyne. Can you tell what Time they went away ?

S. Burwill. I really cannot; they went away some Time in the Morning.

Cross-examined.

Mr. Nares. Had you ever seen them before ?

S. Burwill. No, I never had, to my Knowledge.

William Tredget sworn.

W. Tredget. I live at Tottenham, at the Seven Sisters, the Sign of the Two Brewers.

Mr. Davy. How far is that from London ?

W. Tredget. It is four Miles.

Mr. Davy. How many Miles is it from Enfield-Wash ?

W. Tredget. I cannot justly tell: I know the Place.

Mr. Davy. Look at those three People, — that old Woman, and the Daughter and Son.

W. Tredget. I remember the old Woman very well, and the Daughter and Son too.

Mr. Davy. Where did you see them ?

W. Tredget. I saw them at Tottenham on the 23d of January, which was on a Tuesday: I am sure to the Day and the People.

Mr. Davy. Where did they say they came from ?

W. Tredget. They said they came from Brentford.

Mr. Davy. Did they lie at your House ?

W. Tredget. No, they did not; I told them I had no Lodging, and directed them over the Way to a Farm-house, one Mr. Philips's; but cannot say whether they lay there or not.

Mr. Davy. What Time of the Day did they call at your House ?

W. Tredget. It might be about Four; it was a little before Candle-lighting.

Mr. Davy. Had you ever seen them before ?

W. Tredget. I cannot say I ever did, unless it was the old Gentlewoman; I believe I had seen her about three Years before; I had taken Notice of her Face, that she was a Woman not common to be seen, the last Time.

Mr. Davy. Had you taken Notice of her Face before that Time ?

W. Tredget. No.

Mr. Davy. When you saw her upon the 23d of January, did you recollect that you had seen her before ?

W. Tredget. No; but when they came to ask me to come and see her in Newgate, then I recollected that it was the Face I had seen three Years before.

Mr. Davy. Do you now say upon your Oath, that these are the very People whom you saw upon the 23d of January ?

W. Tredget. It is the very same Woman; I saw her then at Page-Green; then her Son and Daughter were with her, but not when I saw her before, as I know of.

Cross-examined.

Mr. Williams. How many People did you see at Page-Green, that asked for Lodging on the 23d of January ?

W. Tredget. I saw none but the old Woman, George and Lucy.

Mary Tredget sworn.

M. Tredget. I am Wife to the last Witness; we live at Page-Green; I saw the old Gypsey at my House on Tuesday the 23d of January; she asked us for Lodgings; I did not let them have any, but recommended them to a Farm-house over the Way.

Mr. Willes. What is the Farmer's Name ?

M. Tredget. His Name is Philips.

Mr. Davy. My Lord, we have now gone through the Proof of the alibi of Mary Squires, and brought her to Page-Green, within two or three Miles of Enfield-Wash: We will leave her there for the present, and proceed to another Part of our Case, which goes in Contradiction to the whole of the Defendant's Evidence: We shall therefore call Witnessess to prove, that her Information before Mr. Alderman Chitty, on the 31st of January, differed in many Instances from what she swore afterwards; and that she at first gave a false Description of the Place she pretends to have been been confined in, and varied in her Story after she had been carried to Wells's House at Enfield-Wash; on the 1st of February: We will also give your Lordship and the Jury a true Description of this supposed Prison, and of what happened there on the 1st of February. We beg Leave first to examine Mr. Alderman Chitty; but I must let the Gentlemen concerned for the Defendant know the Names of the Witnesses we intend to call to this Part of our Case, that they may also be examined separately; Mr. Chitty, Mr. Nash, Mr. Hague, Mr. Aldridge, and William White.

W E D N E S D A Y the 1st of May:

Alderman Chitty sworn.

Mr. Gascoyne. Be pleased, Sir, to give an Account of what passed before you on the 31st of January 1753, relating to Elizabeth Canning.

Alderman Chitty. I was the Sitting Alderman at that Time; Elizabeth Canning was brought before me, but as it is about a Year and half ago, I cannot give a distinct Account of it. I remember it was on the 31st of January; about half an Hour after Twelve, or One o'Clock. Mr. Lyon and another Person (I believe it was Mr. Nash) came to me. There were a few Notes taken for my own Memorandum, which I believe are in Court, which are the Substance of what passed.

Mr. Gascoyne. Were they signed by her?

Alderman Chitty. No; I took it on Paper; as I generally do; but not thinking it would have been the Subject of so much Inquiry; I did not take it so distinct as I could wish. (He produces a Paper.)

Mr. Gascoyne. Is this your Hand-writing?

Alderman Chitty. It is; this is not what I had taken at that Time, but what I took since from that Paper I took then of hers, and other Persons that were brought before me.

Mr. Gascoyne. Then is this the Substance of that Account of hers you took?

Alderman Chitty. It is:

Mr. Gascoyne. You may refresh your Memory by looking on it, and give the Court an Account of it; you may read it.

He reads. "A Copy of the Minutes taken by Thomas Chitty, upon the Examination of Elizabeth Canning, at Justice-Room, Guildhall, January 31, 1753."

"Elizabeth Canning swore, that on last New-year's Day, as she was returning from her Uncle's, about Saltpetre-Bank, as she came along by the dead Wall against Bedlam, in Moorfields, about or near Ten o'Clock at Night, she was met by two Men, who stripped her, and robbed her of Half a Guinea, three Shillings, and a Halfpenny."

Mr. Davy. Are you sure she said a Halfpenny?

Alderman Chitty. I am sure she did; also her Gown from her Back. (Now I would observe, here I asked her, What else? she said, a Hat, she said it was a straw or chip Hat; I did not put that down, but I as well remember it as if it was but Yesterday.) She said, "A Hat from her Head; she struggled and made a Noise; one stopped her Mouth with something like a Handkerchief, and swore, if she made any Noise or Resistance, they would kill her, and then hit her a Blow over the Head, and stunned her, and forced her along Bishopsgate-

Street; each holding her up under her Arms; but did not remember any thing more that passed, and did not come to herself till about half an Hour before she came to Enfield-Wash, as she had learned since, to Wells's House there, and there were several Persons in the Room; they said, she must do as they did, and if so, she should have fine Cloaths; &c. She said, she would not, but would go Home, and refused Compliance; and then a Woman forced her up Stairs into a Room; and, with a Case-knife she had in her Hand, cut the Lace of her Stays, and took her Stays away, and told her there was Bread and Water in the said Room, and if she made any Noise, she would come in immediately and cut her Throat; then went out, and locked the Door; and never saw her nor any one of them since, till after her Escape; which Bread was in Quantity about a Quarter of a Peck Loaf in Pieces, and three Quarters of a Gallon of Water; or a little more, in a Pitcher; as she supposed; on which only she subsisted, and one Penny Mince-pye she had in her Pocket; till she got away, which was on the 29th of January, about half an Hour after Three o'Clock or Four in the Afternoon, and then made the best of her Way to Town to her Mother's at the Bottom of Aldermanbury. She farther said, on Inquiry, she had no Stool all that Time, only made a little Water; and said, there was an old Stool or two, an old Table; and an old Picture over the Chimney; two Windows in the Room, one fastened up with Boards, the other, Part ditto and Part Glass; in which latter she made a Hole by removing a Pane, and forced Part open, and got out on a small Shed of Boards or Pent-house, and so slid down and jumped on the Side of a Bank on the Back-side of the House, and so got into the Road, and proceeded to her Mother's that Night, which was about Ten o'Clock. Her Mother said she was faint, so she got her some Wine and Water, but it would not go down, the Passages being swelled, therefore sent to the Apothecary for Advice. Mr. Lyon her Master gave her an exceeding good Character, and so did her late Master Mr. Wintlebury." There were a great many Questions asked her, which are not down here. There was an Examination for I believe near an Hour; and after I had examined her, I sent for Alderman Fludger; but he did not chuse to examine her, and put her over to the Sitting Alderman, which happened to be my Turn.

Mr. Gascoyne. During the Time of this Examination, did she mention any Hay?

Alderman Chitty. She said, there was nothing in the Room but those Things she had mentioned; not one Tittle of Hay, neither do I remember what she said she lay upon.

Mr. Gascoyne. Did she describe any Gypsey, or any remarkable Woman?

Alderman Chitty. I asked her, whether she should know the Woman again? she said, she believed she should; but she did not make mention of any extraordinary Woman doing this.

Mr. Gascoyne. Did she say when she drank all her Water?

Alderman Chitty. She said, a little Water was left when she made her Escape. I asked her, whether whether she knew what the Quantity of a Quartern Loaf was? she said, she did, for her former Master kept a Public House. I asked her, what Sort of Bread this was? she said, there were four or five Pieces, to the Quantity of a Quartern Loaf.

Mr. Gascoyne. Are you sure she said four or five Pieces?

Alderman Chitty. I am sure she said four or five, or five or six Pieces.

Mr. Davy. Did she mention any such Thing as a Tobacco-mould, a Bafon, a Saddle, Hay, or a Barrel?

Alderman Chitty. I heard of no such Things: She said, there was nothing in the Room but what Things she had mentioned: She apprehended then, it might be the Woman of the House that had served her thus; but it appears, as it comes out, she had no Notion who that Woman was. I asked her, whether or no she had seen any body in all that Time? she said, she had not but once; she looked through the Key-hole, and saw some one Person pass below.

Mr. Gascoyne. Please to look at this Paper.

Alderman Chitty. This is my Hand-writing; it is my Warrant for the apprehending the People that she charged.

Mr. Gascoyne. Did she mention the Name of Wells, or whose House she had been at?

Alderman Chitty. I was a little unwilling, at this extraordinary Account, to grant a Warrant: I said to her, Be sure what you say; say nothing but what you can swear to: And as she swore all to be true, upon this Information I granted her a Warrant, but told her I could not believe the Story she had told me.

Mr. Gascoyne. Do you recollect whether, in the Time she was in Confinement, she heard any thing by which she could discover the Names of any of the People?

Alderman Chitty. The Name of Wells was not mentioned at all by her.

Mr. Gascoyne. How came you to grant a Warrant in particular against Wells?

Alderman Chitty. Because they had learned the Name since of the Keeper of the House, and that they supposed to be this Wells.

Mr. Gascoyne. Were there any particular Features described of the Person?

Alderman Chitty. No.

Mr. Gascoyne. Who mentioned the Name of Wells, as Canning never mentioned that Name?

Alderman Chitty. I cannot remember that: It was mentioned, Mother Wells was the Occupier of this House.

Mr. Gascoyne. Was one Scarrat there?

Alderman Chitty. There were above fifty People there; I did not know them.

Mr. Gascoyne. During this Examination, did she mention any Fit she had?

Alderman Chitty. I don't remember she did, but the Mother did; she said, she had been subject to Fits from her Infancy.

Mr. Gascoyne. Did she say she went down Bishopsgate-Street?

Alderman Chitty. She did, between two Men, one held under one Arm, and the other under the other; but said, how she came there, she could not tell; that she was not so far stunned, but that she knew a little, as she went along that Part; but how she went afterwards, she did not know: She said, she might have been put in some House, for what she knew, but she could not tell that.

Mr. Gascoyne. Previous to this Examination, had you seen any Advertisement in the Papers of the 6th of January, which gave an Account of a young Woman taken out of a Hackney Coach?

Mr. Moreton. That is not a proper Question.

The Warrant read.

“ To all Constables and other Peace-officers.
“ London, to wit. These are in his Majesty's “ Name to command you, and every one of you,
“ upon Sight hereof, to take and bring before “ me, or some other of his Majesty's Justices of “ the Peace, the Body of a Person that goes by “ the Name of Mother Wells, at Enfield-Wash,
“ in the County of Middlesex, —

Q. from a Juryman. Who put that Name in the Warrant, or who gave the Name?

Alderman Chitty. I cannot recollect who mentioned the Name Wells: I apprehend they had got that Name before they came to the Justice-Room: I asked the Girl, whether that was the Mistress of the House or no? she said, she could tell nothing of the Woman's Name.

The Conclusion of the Warrant.

“ of whom you shall have Notice, to answer to “ such Things that shall be alledged against her
“ by Elizabeth Canning, for violently assaulting “ her, and robbing her of a Pair of Stays, and “ confining her in a Room in the said House,
“ and keeping her on Bread and Water for up“ wards of three Weeks, as Oath has been made
“ before me,

“ Jan. 31, 1753.

Thomas Chitty.”

Gawen Nash.

G. Nash. I belong to Goldsmiths-Hall, and keep a Coffee-house in Gutter-Lane. On the 31st of January 53, I went to Mr. Lyon's House in Aldermanbury; he is a particular Acquaintance of mine, and has been some Years; there was he and his Wife. I asked them, whether that Paragraph in the Paper, about their Servant's coming Home in such a Condition, was true? he told me it was.

Mr. Davy. Was you present in the Justice-Room, when the Defendant was there before Mr. Alderman Chitty?

G. Nash. I was, as a Friend to this Girl; the City-Marshall's Man was there: I was there a little before the others; I asked leave to let the Room be cleared, there being many People in the Room: I had never seen the Girl till that Day; but had Compassion for her from the Account I had heard of her hard Usage.

Mr. Davy. Was Mr. Adamson there?

G. Nash. I think he was.

Mr. Davy. Was Mr. Scarrat there?

G. Nash. I do not know whether he was or not. The Girl gave an Account of the Place where she had been in: Mr. Alderman Chitty asked her, (how it might slip his Memory, I cannot tell) what Sort of a Room she had been confined in? her Answer was, that it was a little, square, darkish or dark Room, with Boards nailed up before the Windows.

Mr. Davy. Are you sure the Words little and square were mentioned?

G. Nash. I am sure of it, I remember it very well.

Mr.

Mr. Davy. Did she say Windows, in the plural Number?

G. Nash. She did; she said, through the Cracks of the Boards she could see the Hertfordshire Coach pass by upon the Road, that had used to carry her Mistress. Upon being asked what was in the Room, she said, there was an old broken Stool or a Chair, and in the Chimney an old Iron Grate, and a few old Pictures hung over the Chimney.

Mr. Moreton. Did you take this in Writing?

G. Nash. No, I never did: Upon being asked what she lay upon, I remember very well she said, she lay on the Boards; which melted my Heart indeed: I felt an inward Affection for the Girl, upon recollecting it was cold Weather at that Time, for I think we had a good deal of Frost at that Time.

Mr. Davy. Have you heard what the Alderman said in his Evidence?

G. Nash. I have.

Mr. Davy. What did she say about Bread in the Room, and how many Pieces were there?

G. Nash. She said, there was about the Value of a Quartern Loaf thrown about the Room in Crufts, which were blue and mouldy; the Number of Pieces I do not remember she said.

Mr. Davy. Do you remember she said she slid down a Pent-house?

G. Nash. I do not; she said, she pulled down one of the Boards of the Window, after she had strove at it many Times; and in getting out at the Window, she tore her Ear by a Nail by the Side of the Window in turning herself about; and her Mother standing by, said, her Ear was then bloody; her Ear then seemed to be very sore. There was a Warrant granted upon this against one Wells. The Alderman does not remember what it was that induced him to grant it against her in particular: I recollect it, because it was in a Paragraph in the News-paper, that she had been at the House of Mother Wells at Enfield-Wash.

Mr. Davy. What Charge was there before the Alderman against Mother Wells? for he could not grant a Warrant by Information from the News-paper.

G. Nash. I recollect she was asked where she had been, and that she, or somebody else, said she had been at the House of Mother Wells, at Enfield-Wash.

Mr. Davy. Recollect, if you can, whether it was she, or another Person, who said so.

G. Nash. Upon my Word I cannot positively tell which; but it was repeated aloud, that she had been at the House of Mother Wells, (that is a notorious bad Woman;) she being asked how she came to know she had been at Mother Wells's, she said, she had heard her called so while she was under Confinement in the Room.

Mr. Davy. Did she describe any Person she saw in the House?

G. Nash. There were no particular Descriptions given by her of any one Person in the House.

Mr. Davy. Was the Name of Virtue Hall mentioned then?

G. Nash. I never heard it indeed before the Alderman.

Mr. Davy. Do you remember any other Particulars of the Description of the Room, or any other Circumstances?

G. Nash. I do not recollect any other Description than I have hitherto told: Upon this a Warrant was granted.

Mr. Davy. Did you, upon that, go down with any Persons to Enfield-Wash, and when, in order to apprehend the People, or see the House?

G. Nash. I really can't recollect whether Mr. Lyon took the Warrant out of the Clerk's Hand or I, but we went on cheek-by-jowl to the Hall-yard; I know Mr. Lyon paid the Shilling for the Warrant: When we were in the Yard, we were consulting what to do in this Affair; fearing it should gather Wind in the Country, and the People all get away before we got down there. Upon this, Mr. Lyon and I being very intimate, went Home to my House; my Wife was very unwilling I should lie out of Town that Night, otherwise we had gone down immediately, to have apprehended the People that Night. We agreed to go the next Morning in a Coach, and he asked me to take a Friend or two, which I did; they were Mr. Edward Aldridge and Mr. John Hague. We went (this was on the 1st of February) at our own Expence, and took Coach in Chiswell-Street, and desired the Coachman to proceed as fast as he could, fearing we should miss what we aimed at. When we came to about Hounds-Field, somewhere by Ponder's-End, we had several People met us, riding as hard as they could, to give us Intelligence that they had seized all the People in the House.

Mr. Davy. As you had heard the Defendant give a Description of the Room, did you mention that to Mr. Hague and Mr. Aldridge?

G. Nash. I told them what I had heard.

Mr. Davy. At the Time you were going down with them, did you declare any Intention you had to take a Survey of the Place, and see whether it answered her Description?

G. Nash. I can't tell whether I said so, but it was my Intention so to do, and to see the Warrant executed.

Mr. Davy. What Time did you arrive there?

G. Nash. I guess it was about Eleven o'Clock, which was about an Hour before Elizabeth Canning came there: The Coachman drove us up to the Sun and Punch-bowl, almost opposite to Mother Wells's House; there were People, some on Horseback, and some on Foot, all in an Uproar. Mr. Hague, Mr. Lyon, and Mr. Aldridge went into the House. I pushed over to the House, in order to find if the Description of the Room answered: I saw some People in the Room on my left Hand, which they call the Parlour; then I went up the Stair-case leading from the great Door that comes into the Street, and, to my great Surprise, I looked about the three Rooms, and found nothing there like it; there were Beds in them, which seemed to have been laid in that Night; then I came down again, and went into the Kitchen, and saw a Man with a Broom-stick in his Hand; I said to him, Friend, do you know any Thing of this House? he said, there is a Room here: He unbuttoned a Button, and opened the Door; I saw a Door on each Side, one opened to a Cellar full of Water, another opened to a Place like an Oven, and the other led me to a Place where were a few Steps or Stairs, which led up into this Hay-loft, a nasty Room: I have since told the Steps; I think there were eight of them; I am sure there was nothing like her Description there at that Time. I cannot say I observed the Key-hole, but I was thereabout afterwards, and believe there has not been a Lock upon that Door for many Years; there were no Signs where a Lock could have been placed; placed; I saw no Marks of a Lock fastened thereon; I am sure there had been no Lock there; neither was there any Bolt; there was a large Bar that secured the three Doors.

Mr. Davy. Are the Steps without or within-side the Door?

G. Nash. They are on the Inside the Door; the Stairs are Part of the Room.

Mr. Davy. Can you mention the exact Length and Breadth of the Room?

G. Nash. I never measured it; it is a very long Room; you may as well call this Table a Square, (meaning a long Table in the Sessions-house;) that Man and I went up into it by ourselves.

Mr. Davy. Did you take any particular Notice of what Things were in the Room?

G. Nash. At that Time I cannot say I did, because I had not found out the Room according to the Girl's Description. I came down, and saw Mr. White, one of my Lord-Mayor's Marshal-men, who went down to execute the Warrant: I said to him, For God's sake, what do you think of this Affair? he said, he believed we were got into the wrong Box, and he believed the Girl had never been there: Then I went over to my Companions that came down along with me; this was before Canning came. We went over to the House again; we went up into this Room: Some Persons, I cannot tell who, said, This must be the Room; Mr. Lyon stood near me; said I, This cannot be the Room according to her Description, for she said it was an empty, dark Room; Mr. Lyon said, These Things may have been put here since: There were Numbers of Things then in it.

Mr. Davy. Mention the Things you saw there.

G. Nash. There was to the Quantity of half a Load of Hay; an old Nest of Drawers, about four Feet long, and three high; there was a high Tub with Pollard in it; two Side-Saddles, and an old Man's Saddle: On my right Hand coming up Stairs, there seemed to be a Place as if some poor People had laid upon it; it was some Part Hay that was taken from the Heap, and some Wool put into a Sack for a Bolster, made up in the Form of a Bed: Over this nasty Bed (if I may so call it) were some Pullies and a Line belonging to a Jack; and at the Head of this Bed was a Hole, through which, it seems, formerly the Line did run, that had some Hay stuffed in it to keep out the Wind; I took it out; it was a long Square, about six by eight Inches; there is a Jack in the Kitchen, to which the Line had been fastened; the Hole looks directly into the Kitchen; it is a very thin Partition; it is Lath and Plaster: Through that Hole might be seen every Thing in the Kitchen, except just under it; and there was a Window in the Kitchen, which looks out into the Road, and from that Hay-loft a Person might see through that Window cross the Road.

Mr. Davy. Could you, when standing in the Kitchen, see through into that Room?

G. Nash. You might see the Window that fronts the Kitchen, through the Hole.

Mr. Davy. How high is the Hole from the Floor of the Kitchen?

G. Nash. I believe it might be about seven or eight Feet, to look through from the Kitchen; a Person might elevate himself, or look upwards; and when in the Room, the Hole is about five or six Inches above the Pillow of this Hay-bed, which was made on the Floor. In this Room was a Chimney, which I apprehended was for the warming a Glew-pot; and over this Place was a little Ledge, upon which stood an old Iron Casement all dusty; the Chimney stands in the Corner of the Room; as near as I can think, it is to the South; there was Cobwebs and Nastiness upon the Things; it is impossible they should have been newly put there:

Mr. Davy. Were there any Cobwebs on the Casement?

G. Nash. There were; they seemed to fix the Casement to the Chimney-ledge; it had such an Appearance to me, I did not move it; it was all over Cobwebs, and seemed to be soldered to the Wall with them; I did not move it.

Mr. Davy. Was there any Grate in the Chimney?

G. Nash. No, there was not; it appeared to me as if there never had been any.

Mr. Davy. Was there a Hearth to the Chimney?

G. Nash. I think there was not.

Mr. Davy. Was the Hearth-place, I mean the Floor of the Chimney, covered with Dust?

G. Nash. At that Time I did not particularly observe whether it was or no.

Mr. Davy. Was there any Appearance to you of any Pictures having been over the Chimney?

G. Nash. I believe there never was a Picture hung up in that Room in this World.

Mr. Davy. Did you observe the Window at the North End of the Room?

G. Nash. I did; that Window was nailed up with Boards, and the Muntam was betwixt; there were two Windows in the Room, one at the End, and the other almost facing the Stairs, going up out of the Kitchen; the Window at the End seemed to have had a Light; the Casement was whole, with the Boards nailed up upon the Top, and Boards nailed to the Muntams, and the Glass Casement shut.

Mr. Davy. What do you mean by a Muntam?

G. Nash. It is the Upright that divides the Window in halves: The Western Side was boarded up, and the Eastern Side was Glass; the which Casement commanded the Hertford Road, with a Pond at the End of the House, that came within eight or ten Feet of it; a Person standing at that Window might see all the People that pass upon the Road. The other Window was not then boarded up, nor, I believe, ever had been; that was only a Casement. I made particular Observations on it, to see if there ever had been any Nails on either Side, and could see no Appearance of any; that is large enough for me to get out at; I have since shook Hands with my Wife out at it, she standing on the Ground without, and I in the Room; it was easily opened, only by turning a long Hook; this looks out to a little narrow Lane or Ditch, and over the Hedge is a large common Field.

Mr. Davy. Was the Room light or dark?

G. Nash. It is what you may call a light Room, rather than dark, by means of these two Windows, and the Tiles never were pointed; the Light came in from the Roof; it could never be a dark Room.

Mr. Davy. What Sort of Tiles were they?

G. Nash. They were Pan-tiles.

Mr. Davy. How far was that Window from the Ground?

G. Nash. I believe, was I to hang out at the Window by my Hands, I should not be above three Feet from the Ground. The Ground is higher higher at that Window than it is at the North Window a good deal.

Mr. Davy. Did you observe an old Sign in the Room?

G. Nash. I don't recollect there was.

Mr. Davy. Were there any Trees in that Hedge near the East Window?

G. Nash. There were, so near the Window, that was I within-side with a hunting Whip, I could reach the Boughs.

Mr. Davy. Did you observe the Boughs, whether they had been lopped lately?

G. Nash. I did not.

Mr. Davy. Were there any Cobwebs on the Drawers, so as to fix them, as it were, to the Wall?

G. Nash. I did not observe that.

Mr. Davy. Was Canning come at this Time, while you was observing the Room?

G. Nash. No, she was not.

Mr. Davy. Was Adamson there?

G. Nash. He was in the Room long before she came; there were a great Number of People there.

Mr. Davy. Whether any Thing remarkable happened from Adamson's Conduct?

G. Nash. Whether it was from his Zeal I know not, but he took hold on the Boards, and pulled them down from the North Window: I said, Gentlemen, this cannot be the Room, for the Girl gave no Account of any Hay being in the Room.

Mr. Davy. What Part of the Room did the Hay lie in?

G. Nash. It lay toward the East, on the same Side the Window was on, betwixt the North and East Window; and the Bed was on the right Side the Stairs, under the Jack-line Hole, in the South-west Part; we agreed by-and-by to go over the Way again.

Mr. Davy. Did you see the Pitcher while you was in the House?

G. Nash. I can't say I saw one, or look'd for one; it might be there, and I overlook it.

Mr. Davy. Where were the People of the House then?

G. Nash. We had left them in Custody in the Parlour, which is the left-hand Room coming into the House; when we were over the Way, I saw Mr. Adamson, and another Man whom I did not know, tofs up to know who should go to meet Canning; and Adamson went to meet her, and came back before her.

Mr. Davy. For what Purpose did they want to go to meet her?

G. Nash. I conjectured it was to see if they had not gone to a wrong House: We were all impatient to see her; for if I had had a Horse, I would have gone myself: When I and abundance of other People were returned to Mother Wells's House, Adamson came riding up, seemingly with a good deal of Pleasure, waving his Hat with his left Hand, and said, We are all right yet, for she says there is a little Hay in the Room. Presently after the Chaise appeared, in which the Girl was: When she came, some were for carrying her over to the Public House; others were for bringing her to the House of Mother Wells, which they did; she was brought, and set on a Dresher in the Kitchen, on the left Hand of the Door, fronting the Fire-place; and the Door where she afterwards said she had been confined was on the left Hand, and the Door at that Time open; if she had turned her Head that Way, she might have seen the Stairs; but whether she did turn her Head that Way, or whether she might have seen up into the Room, I cannot say; I believe she might have seen Part of it. Then there was a Proposal to send for a Bottle of Wine to refresh those People that had been in the Landau with her in the Cold. She remained on the Dresher about four or five Minutes; then she was removed to the Middle of the Kitchen, on a broken Stool, with her Back toward the Fire-place, with the Door of the Hay-loft on her right Hand, looking towards the Dresher; the Door of the Room was then remaining open, and she might have seen that Part of it that the Stairs led up to: I believe she might sit thus, first and last, twenty Minutes: It was the Time they went and got a Pint of Wine, and mulled it.

Mr. Davy. When it came, did she drink much?

G. Nash. She drank but very little: Then somebody put the Thing thus, Now let us call Mother Wells in: I said, Hold, Gentlemen, this will be an Old-Bailey Story, and whoever is fixed upon for the committing the Fact, they'll certainly be hanged: Let the Room be filled full of People, and let her go and find out the People whom she accuses with robbing her; and proposed to carry her into the Parlour, where were a great many People: She was carried in; and Mary Squires sat on the right Hand of the Chimney; upon a low Chair, almost doubled together, with a black Bonnet on; I am sure I could not see her Face.

Mr. Davy. To what Part of the Room did Mary Squires then direct her Looks?

G. Nash. I believe her Face was pointing to the Window, straight as she sat, and Mother Wells sat on the left-hand Side of the Fire: I said to Canning, Now look for the Woman that robbed you; she immediately pointed to Mary Squires, and said, That old Woman in the Corner was the Woman that robbed me.

Mr. Davy. Did she see her Face at that Time?

G. Nash. I could not, but I will not pretend to say what she could see; I stood close to her; somebody said, (I think it was Mary Squires's Daughter,) Do you hear what the Gentlewoman says? she says you robbed her. The old Woman got up from the Stool immediately, and said—

Mr. Moreton. I object against that being mentioned; it is no Evidence.

Court. He may give an Account of what was said in the Defendant's Hearing and Presence.

G. Nash. The old Woman came up to her, and said, Madam, do you say I robbed you? (and put herself in a particular Posture, and had a Sort of a Clout about her Face;) Pray, Madam, look at this Face; and sure, if you have once seen it before, you must have remembered it, for God Almighty, I think, never made such another; pray, Madam, when do you say I robbed you? She answered, it was on the first Day of this New Year—The first Day of this New Year, Madam, do you say? Lord bless me! I was an hundred and twenty Miles from this Place then. I with my Finger tapped her on the Shoulder, and said, Dame, where was you? She replied, I was at Abbotbury in Dorsetshire, and there are a hundred People I can bring to prove it; and some of them have known me twenty, thirty, and forty Years. I think there were twenty People saying she has been been here but a very little Time. There was a poor Woman they called Natus, fat there, who said, she herself had been there, I think, ten or eleven Weeks, and that she had never seen Canning there before; and she said, Squires had been there but a very little Time. After this was done, Canning was carried out of the Room, and carried up the Stairs facing the Street-door into all the Rooms; I did not go up with her: After that she was carried up into the Hay-loft; there she said, she believed that was the Room.

Mr. Davy. Are these her Words, she believed?

G. Nash. I think I can take upon me to swear they were her Words. I asked her, what she knew in the Room? she turned about on her left Hand, and said, This is the Room, for here is the Hay I lay upon, but I think there is more of it than there was then, pointing to the loose Hay on her left Hand. Upon that, she was asked by the People, that had her under the Arms, what could she note more in the Room? They took up a Pitcher that stood upon the Ground, and held it up to her; she said, Yes, that is the Jug I had my Water in: Then a Gentleman that was there took hold of a Tobacco-mould, which was in a Corner, and asked her, if she remembered that? she said, she remembered that. He asked her what else she remembered, (I think that was Mr. Hague) and added, Do you remember these three Saddles? (that were in the Room) she said, I believe there might be one; the Saddles seemed to be all over Dust, they seemed to have been laid up there out of the Way for a long Time: Then she was asked, if she remembered the Nest of Drawers? she said, she did not remember them. A Gentleman made Answer, Have you been here twenty-eight Days, and never remember them Drawers? she said, she did not remember them. Then Mr. Hague asked, why she did not strive to get out at that Window? (that is the East Window fronting the Stairs) she said, she thought it had been fastened.

Mr. Davy. Did she say she had tried to see if it was fast?

G. Nash. I don't remember she said she had.

Mr. Davy. Did Natus's Wife say any Thing about her lying in the Room?

G. Nash. Natus's Wife said in the Parlour, that her Husband and she had laid there, in this Hay-loft, ten or eleven Weeks: Canning's Mother was in the Room, lamenting sadly, that that was the Hay that her poor dear Girl had laid upon.

Mr. Davy. Was the Girl asked whether she remembered the Jack-line?

G. Nash. She was; she said, she did not remember seeing it.

Mr. Davy. Was the Tub of Pollard mentioned to her?

G. Nash. I think it was not.

Mr. Davy. Did she continue positive that Squires was the Woman who robbed her?

G. Nash. I heard no Contradiction to that.

Mr. Davy. What has led you to recollect, at this Distance of Time, all these Particulars?

G. Nash. It was so remarkable, it could not slip out of my Head; it was at that Time the Subject of Conversation: It is well known I told my Sentiments the same Night to abundance of People that came to know about it.

Mr. Davy. Knowing all these Particulars, which would have been extremely necessary to have been proved in the Defence of Mary Squires and Mother Wells, how came you, when these People were to be tried, the one for a capital Felon, and the other as an Accessary, not to be an Evidence then?

G. Nash. I was here some Part of the Time the Girl was giving her Evidence, and really was a little discontented in my Mind, about her giving her Evidence at that Time, and her varying from the Particulars she first related before Mr. Alderman Chitty, and then to us: We had a very large Feast at Goldsmiths-Hall, and I was obliged to give my Attendance, because I am Butler to the Company; I had the Care of, may-be, three or four thousand Pounds Worth of Plate; so that I stayed in Court but till Eleven o'Clock, being obliged to be there, and I did not think there was any Danger of her being convicted upon such an incredible Story.

Mr. Davy. Had you a Subpœna?

G. Nash. No, I had not.

Mr. Davy. Did you then know that Mary Squires was upon Trial for her Life?

G. Nash. I did, and I did not think she would have been cast, indeed.

Mr. Davy. Had you apprehended her in Danger of being convicted, should you have thought yourself excusable in not giving Evidence?

G. Nash. If she had died, and I not gave my Evidence, I should not have forgiven myself; I should have been very angry with myself; but in my own single Opinion I did not think she would have been convicted; I thought the whole Circumstance of the Thing collected together could not amount to full Proof, and apprehended the Woman was in no Danger.

Mr. Davy. If you had apprehended it possible that the Woman should have been convicted, would you not have stayed and given Evidence?

G. Nash. I would have gone and made an Excuse, and come again.

Mr. Davy. Have you been always of the Opinion you are now, that Canning's Evidence was untrue?

G. Nash. I have always insisted upon the same I have now related. At the Trial of Mary Squires, I went Home and told Mr. Flower, the Assistant of the Goldsmiths Company, how far I had heard of the Trial, and said, I think it is impossible, with all the Circumstances, that she can be convicted; and he said, he thought so too.

Mr. Davy. How came you not to acquaint the Court, that you, of your own Knowledge, knew she was guilty of Perjury?

G. Nash. I can give no Reason for that.

Mr. Davy. What Conduct did you pursue after the Conviction of Squires, in order to atone for your not giving Evidence for her?

G. Nash. Some Time after that, I heard the old Woman had a Respite; I immediately waited on my Lord-Mayor, and told him, I believed I could let him into the whole Affair, as well as any Man could.

Mr. Davy. Did you do this voluntarily?

G. Nash. I did; I was very glad to hear there was some Design of saving the poor Woman; I did it not out of Spite to the Girl, but merely in Justice to the Gypsey.

Cross-examined.

Mr. Moreton. Did you hear the Girl positively charge Mary Squires with robbing her at Enfield-Walk, on the Trial of Mary Squires?

G. Nash. I did.

Mr.

Mr. Moreton. Did you hear her finish her Evidence?

G. Nash. I cannot tell whether she had quite done or not, for I looked at my Watch, and found it was Time to go, so went away.

Mr. Moreton. What did Mr. Flower say?

G. Nash. He said, they never could convict her.

Mr. Moreton. Whether your Dissatisfaction that you have given an Account of, was not owing to the Observation you made at Mother Wells's, upon the Answers the Girl gave there on the 1st of February?

G. Nash. I did then think she was mistaken in the Woman.

Mr. Moreton. Whether you heard the Girl give any Account of this at her Mother's?

G. Nash. I never was at her Mother's.

Mr. Moreton. When the old Woman made her Face so odd, by putting herself in a particular Posture, as you described, did the Girl alter in her Opinion?

G. Nash. No, I did not hear she did.

Mr. Moreton. Was Canning in the Room, when Natus's Wife said she had laid in the Room ten or eleven Weeks?

G. Nash. She first said she had laid in the House; whether it was before we went up into the Room, I cannot say; but I am certain she said so in the Parlour, when Canning was by.

Mr. Moreton. Did you continue to have a good Opinion of Canning?

G. Nash. I dropped my Opinion quite about her being innocent.

Mr. Moreton. Look at this Letter, is it your Hand-writing? (He takes a Letter in his Hand.)

G. Nash. It is my Hand-writing.

Mr. Moreton. When was it wrote?

G. Nash. The Day it bears Date.

Mr. Moreton. Who is it wrote to?

G. Nash. To Mr. Lyon.

John Hague sworn.

J. Hague. I am a Goldsmith, and live in Noble-Street, and am acquainted with Mr. Nash: He came to me on the 31st of January 53, at Night, and told me of an extraordinary Affair; the Contents were what he had heard before Mr. Alderman Chitty from Elizabeth Canning; he desired me, and I agreed to go down to Enfield-Wash with him. Mr. Nash, Mr. Lyon, Mr. Aldridge, and myself, went together in a Coach on the next Morning. Before we got down, we met a Man on Horseback, (who it was, I do not know;) he came to the Coach Side, and said, We have taken them all. When we came there, we went to Mrs. Wells's directly; we first went into the Parlour on the left Hand, there we saw the People that were taken; after we had talked with them, we went to take a View of the House; we went up the Stairs, and saw the Rooms; then we came down, and went up into the Hay-loft or Workshop, and finding nothing that answered the Description the Girl had given before Mr. Alderman Chitty, as Mr. Nash had said to us, he said, here is no Room answers the Description she gave: We went over to Cantril's, and got a Glass of Wine to refresh ourselves.

Mr. Willes. Was Mr. Adamson in the Room called the Hay-loft, when you was?

J. Hague. He was; he and Scarrat were saying to one another, Do you go, and Do you go, and at last they tossed up a Halfpenny, and it fell to Adamson's Lot to go; he took his Horse and went, and came back with great Triumph, with a Whip lashing over his Head, saying, By G—d we are all right, she says there is a little Hay in the Room; and in about a quarter of an Hour after this, Canning came; she was first brought to Mother Wells's Door, and was taken into the Kitchen on the right Hand; she was set upon the Dresser in the Kitchen on the left Hand, and the Door opening to the Hay-loft was then open, which she could not miss to see; but she did not mention a Word that that was the Place where she had been in; she sat there a few Minutes; then they took her off, and set her in a Chair; she never opened her Lips about her Stays being cut off there.

Mr. Willes. How long do you think she was in the Kitchen?

J. Hague. In sitting on the Dresser and in the Chair, I believe she had been there a little better than a quarter of an Hour; then they carried her into the Parlour, and set her upon a Table; Mother Wells sat very close to her; as they were bringing her in, Mother Wells said, with a Sort of a Sneer, Why, the Girl is sick; there was no Answer made to that; as Canning was sitting, she pointed to the Gypsey Woman, and said, That is the Woman that cut my Stays off.

Mr. Willes. Was the Gypsey in such a Situation, that she could then see her Face?

J. Hague. Upon my Word, I think she could not; I was close to her, she was smoaking a Pipe.

Mr. Willes. Upon that, what did the Gypsey say or do?

J. Hague. Lucy Squires went up to her Mother, and said, Mother, the Girl says that you have cut her Stays off: Then the old Woman got up, and, in a great Trembling, she took her Bonnet off, and stroked her Hair up, and said, Madam, consider what a remarkable Woman I am; would you go to take a Life away? I was at Abbotsbury at that Time.

Mr. Willes. Did she say how many Miles that was from Town?

J. Hague. I don't remember she did; but George Squires then said it was a hundred and twenty Miles from London.

Mr. Willes. Have you heard Mr. Nash give Evidence a little Time ago?

J. Hague. I have not heard a Word of his Evidence.

Mr. Willes. Did any body else take Notice how long the Gypsey had been at Enfield?

J. Hague. No, I don't remember any body did.

Mr. Willes. Do you remember seeing Judith Natus?

J. Hague. I cannot say I heard her say any thing.

Mr. Willes. How long had Canning been in that Room, before you took her up into the Hay-loft?

J. Hague. I believe, about half an Hour; I led her up Stairs myself; I had hold on one Arm, and another Person on the other, but I do not know who it was; he has not appeared since; but before we went there, we went into several other Rooms; she was very quick, and said, This is not it, and That is not it.

Mr. Willes. What did she say upon her first coming into the Hay-loft?

J. Hague. When we got to the Top of the Stairs, she turned upon her right Hand next to the Chimney, and took no manner of Notice of any thing: Then turning to the left, This is the Room, says she, that I was confined in: Then her Mother said, Ay, this is the Room where my poor Child was confined in. Said I, Good Woman, was you confined here with her? No, says she, but I believe every thing my Daughter says: Then I said, Pray hold your Tongue, and do not answer any Questions. There I saw a very large Hole on the right Hand coming up Stairs, large enough for a large Cat to go through; it was open.

Mr. Willes. How high is it from the Floor?

J. Hague. It is close to the Floor; the Jack-line run through it, and a Pully just over it; if there had been a Mouse in the Room, she might have seen it.

Mr. Willes. Was you in that Room as soon as Nash and Aldridge?

J. Hague. No, they had been there before me. There I saw also a dirty nasty Hay-bed on the Ground, nothing but Hay, which I suppose was taken from the other Hay, where we were told Fortune Natus and his Wife lay. I asked Canning, whether she remembered the Pully? she said, No, she never saw it. There is a little narrow Chimney, about fifteen or sixteen Inches wide; there was no Grate, or Appearance that there ever had been one in the Chimney; it was full of hardly any thing else but Cobwebs, which seemed to have been there a considerable Time, they were so nasty and dirty.

Mr. Willes. Were the Cobwebs so spread about the Chimney, that it was impossible there should have been a Grate there two Days before?

J. Hague. Yes, Sir. There was an old Casement over the Chimney that was very dirty and dusty: I said to Canning, Child, did you take this for a Picture? she said, No. When I took it away, all the Cobwebs came with it from the Top to the Bottom; and on the Place from whence it was taken, there appeared a Print of it, that looked as if it had been there a Year or two.

Mr. Willes. Was there any Mark of any Place, as if a Picture had been there?

J. Hague. No, Sir.

Mr. Willes. Did you observe the Window that looks towards the East?

J. Hague. I did; it is a Casement large enough for me to get out at; that is it which fronts the Stairs: I asked her how she came not to get out there, and opened it when I had hold of her Arm; she said, Sir, I believe it was nailed; then I looked to see if there were any Appearance of Nails being there, and could see none at all.

Mr. Willes. How high is this Window from the Ground?

J. Hague. It might be about ten Feet; it went into a little narrow kind of a Ditch, about half a Yard wide, where was a Bank up against it, and a Hedge and a Field behind it; in the Hedge were several Trees near the Window.

Mr. Willes. Did the Branches look as if they had been lopped lately?

J. Hague. Yes, they did.

Mr. Willes. How much Hay do you think there might be in the Room?

J. Hague. I believe about half a Load; it lay in the Room on the same Side the Window was on; it seemed to have laid there a long Time: There was another Window opened into the Road, boarded up on one Side, and a Casement on the other that opened, that is to the North, and there is a Lane at the Corner of it; I looked out at it; there was no Pent-house or Shed under it; it was perpendicular. Mr. Adamson turned some of the Hay over to look for the Stays. I saw also a Chest of Drawers, which, I dare venture to say, had been there more than a Year, if not two; they were so very dusty betwixt the Drawers and the Wall, that I did not care to meddle with them.

Mr. Willes. Do you remember a Barrel or Tub in the Room?

J. Hague. I cannot say I do; there was a Tobacco-mould over Fortune Natus's Bed; somebody asked her, if she knew that? she said, she did. There were two Womens Saddles and a Man's Saddle; I asked her, if she saw them? she said, she believed there was one; they all appeared to have been there a long while, they were very nasty and dusty.

Mr. Willes. Did you observe the Door that leads to this Room, how it fastened?

J. Hague. I did particularly: I could not perceive there ever was a Lock upon it; I believe there never was one; it fastened only by a Latch and a Button; I will not be positive there was a Latch; I said to the Girl, Zounds, Child, I cannot think you was ever here at all.

Mr. Willes. What Answer did she make to that?

J. Hague. She made me none at all.

Mr. Willes. Did you hear Judith Natus say any thing in Canning's Presence about the Room?

J. Hague. I cannot say whether I did or not.

Mr. Willes. Did you go away satisfied with what you had seen?

J. Hague. No, I went away very much dissatisfied. When we were in the Coach going Home, Mr. Nash, and Mr. Aldridge, and I gave our Opinions to Mr. Lyon, that we did not think she was there; we said, she must be mistaken: He was so angry at it, that he did not speak to us all the Way Home, and that, I suppose, is the Reason we were not subpoena'd or called.

Mr. Willes. How came you not to come and give your Opinion in Favour of Squires?

J. Hague. I was in Court all the while, and I'll give my Reasons why. When they were first taken up, Canning said, Virtue Hall was one of the Girls that stood by when her Stays were taken off; at the same Time Virtue Hall, with all the seeming Innocency, laughed in her Face, and said, God forgive you, Madam, I never saw you in this House in my Life. She had challenged her and Lucy Squires with being by: Lucy Squires said the very same as she did. Seeing such seeming Innocence in her there, and when in Court to hear her swearing such a Thing that I thought to be as false as the Gospel is true, I protest I had not Power to speak; I believed she was perjured in all she said, that is the whole Reason why I did not speak; but had I had Spirits, I would have spoke.

Mr. Willes. After Squires was convicted, did you approve of your own Conduct?

J. Hague. Upon my Word, Sir, I was not easy upon my being silent. I went of my own free Will before my Lord-Mayor, and gave an Account of what I knew, the same as now.

Mr. Willes. Had you any Acquaintance with Alderman Gascoyne then?

J. Hague.

J. Hague. No, I do not know that ever I had seen him before.

Mr. Willes. How long after the Trial was it, that you went to my Lord-Mayor?

J. Hague. It was about a Fortnight or three Weeks after; it was long before Squires was respited.

Mr. Willes. Had you any Knowledge of Canning before you went down with her?

J. Hague. No, I never saw her before in my Life.

Mr. Willes. Did you go with her as her Friend?

J. Hague. I did, as much her Friend as any one that went along with her; and before she came down, did as much abuse old Mother Wells and George Squires, and the People in the House.

Cross-examined.

Mr. Nares. Was you present at the whole Trial of Mary Squires?

J. Hague. I was.

Mr. Nares. How long was you in Court after Virtue Hall had been examined as a Witness?

J. Hague. She was the second Witness.

Mr. Nares. Was you so much alarmed, you could not recover yourself in the whole Trial?

J. Hague. Upon my Oath, I could not recover myself; I really was shocked at it.

Mr. Nares. Had you heard Canning give her Information of the Room?

J. Hague. No, I had not; I had it from Mr. Nash.

Mr. Nares. Did you see Canning's Mother in the Hay-loft?

J. Hague. I did; she followed us up there, and said them Words to her as I said before.

Mr. Nares. Are you sure you saw her in the Hay-loft?

J. Hague. Yes, I am.

Mr. Nares. Did she continue there the whole Time you was examining it?

J. Hague. I do not know that.

Mr. Nares. How near is the Dresser in the Kitchen to the Stairs?

J. Hague. It is very close to the Stairs.

Mr. Nares. Can you, from that Dresser, see up the Stairs, if the Door is open?

J. Hague. When the Door is open, you may sit on any Part of the Dresser, and see quite up into the Room; to be sure she could see quite up into the Room.

Mr. Nares. Was Mr. Adamson in the Hay-loft when the Girl was there?

J. Hague. I do not remember I saw him there then; I saw him there before the Girl came down to Enfield-Wash.

Mr. Nares. Was you in the Room all the Time the Girl was?

J. Hague. I was.

Mr. Nares. Did you hear any body ask her, what was to be seen out at the Window?

J. Hague. I did not hear that; I saw him and Bob Scarrat going to tear the Boards down before the Girl came there, and they were pulled down before she came.

Mr. Nares. What did they do that for?

J. Hague. I do not know; it may be through Prejudice; I do not know the Reason why.

Mr. Nares. Whether there was not an Observation of yours, or somebody else, that those Boards had been but lately done up?

J. Hague. No, not by me, or any body else that I know of.

Edward Aldridge sworn.

E. Aldridge. I live in Foster-lane, and am a Working Silversmith; I am acquainted with Mr. Nash, Mr. Hague, and Mr. Lyon. On the 1st of February, 1753, I went down along with them to Enfield-Wash, having been told how sadly Mr. Lyon's Maid had been used. When we were on the Road, there was a Man came on Horseback, and told us they had taken up the People of the House.

Mr. Gascoyne. Have you heard any of the Evidence given by Mr. Nash and Mr. Hague?

E. Aldridge. No, I have not. When we got to Enfield-Wash, we went to Mrs. Wells's House; I went into the Parlour; there were all the People sitting all round the Fire; then I went into the Kitchen by myself, and so all over the House: I was in the Room where the Girl says she was confined; it is called by the Name of the Hay-loft. I believe I was there before Mr. Nash was; I was then alone.

Mr. Gascoyne. In what Circumstance was this particular Window that looks towards the North?

E. Aldridge. It was Part of it Glass, and Part Wood.

Mr. Gascoyne. Had the Casement Wood over it?

E. Aldridge. That I cannot tell; I am sure Part of it was boarded up.

Mr. Gascoyne. That Part that was not boarded up, had that any Appearance of any thing nailed up?

E. Aldridge. I was not so curious while I was there to examine it: They had described the Room to me as being a square Room, and a Room with a Grate in it. After I had been there, Canning came down, and was carried into the Kitchen, and set on a Dresser.

Mr. Gascoyne. Was the Door open that leads up into the Hay-loft?

E. Aldridge. I cannot be sure of that; I was not in the Kitchen all the Time she was there. She looked about as if she did not know where she was. I was with her when she was carried into the Parlour: As soon as we had taken her in there, Mother Wells came to her, and said, Madam, do you know me? No, said she, I do not know that ever I saw you in my Life before: Then George Squires came up, and said, Madam, do you know me? She said, No, I don't know that ever I saw you in my Life; it was that old Woman in the Corner that cut my Stays off. I was close by Canning at the Time.

Mr. Gascoyne. Did you see the Gypsey's Face at the Time?

E. Aldridge. No, I never saw her Face till she got up: Madam, said she, I cut your Stays off! (she throwed her Things open) I am very remarkable, if ever you see me before, you must know me. She mentioned Abbotsbury, and several other Places Names, which I have forgot, where she said she was.

Mr. Gascoyne. Could Canning see the Gypsey's Face in that Position she was in at the Time she charged her?

E. Aldridge. That I cannot tell: When Canning went up into the Hay-loft, I followed just after her: I remember seeing the Hole in the Wall, when I went up before, there was a great Wisp of Hay in it, which I took out and put in again; when it was out, I could look all over the Kitchen; it was a Hole where the Jack-line was; it was pretty pretty large, I could get my two Hands in it; there was a Pully hung over it, but it then had no Communication with the Jack.

Mr. Gascoyne. Did you ask Canning any Question?

E. Aldridge. No; I heard Mr. Hague ask her, why she did not get out at that Window? she said, she believed it was fastened up.

Mr. Gascoyne. Did you hear any body ask her, if she remembered that Hole?

E. Aldridge. No: There was Hay between the Stairs and the Jack-hole, and a little square Chimney just at the Corner.

Mr. Gascoyne. Were there any Pictures over it?

E. Aldridge. There was a Casement over it, that seemed to have been there a great while, because it had Cobwebs over it, and was tied, as it were, to the Wall by them; and the Chimney was covered with Cobwebs from one Side to the other, and full of Dirt, and no Sign that there had been a Grate there at all.

Mr. Gascoyne. Did you look at the Window towards the East?

E. Aldridge. No, I did not. I came down Stairs, and left them above.

Mr. Gascoyne. Do you remember a Chest of Drawers being in the Room?

E. Aldridge. I do.

Mr. Gascoyne. Did you hear her asked any Thing concerning them?

E. Aldridge. No, I did not.

Mr. Gascoyne. Do you remember some Saddles, a Tobacco-mould, and about half a Load of Hay being there?

E. Aldridge. I do: There were three Saddles, and a large Quantity of Hay.

Mr. Gascoyne. Did you see ever an old Stool, or Table?

E. Aldridge. I did not take Notice of any. I went up just after the Chest of Drawers were removed a little Way from the Wall; it seemed as if it had stood there twenty Years. I remember there was a Barrel with some Stuff in it, Bran or Flour, Pollard I believe.

Mr. Gascoyne. Did the Hay seem as if it had been there pretty long?

E. Aldridge. It did, because it was pretty hard.

Mr. Gascoyne. Was you satisfied with the Room upon seeing it?

E. Aldridge. I was satisfied it was not like a Place of Confinement; neither did I believe she was ever there.

Mr. Gascoyne. Did you, upon your being in the Room two or three Times, observe the Window towards the Chimney?

E. Aldridge. Yes; it was a narrow Casement Window, big enough for a Man to get out at.

Mr. Gascoyne. How far was it from the Ground?

E. Aldridge. Any body might drop out of it very easily, without hurting themselves.

Mr. Gascoyne. Did you look to see if the Window had been fastened?

E. Aldridge. I looked, but could not find any Thing like Fastening to it.

Mr. Gascoyne. Did you examine the Door, how that was fastened?

E. Aldridge. Yes; it was not fastened at all, only with a Button; there was no Lock to it; there were some Holes where Locks had been; they looked like Key-holes, pretty large Holes.

Mr. Gascoyne. Was it probable to think there had not been a Lock upon the Door for a Month?

E. Aldridge. Yes, and longer than that.

Mr. Gascoyne. Might you venture to swear, by the Appearance of the Door, there had been no Lock upon it for a Week before?

E. Aldridge. That I might, or for a Month before.

Mr. Gascoyne. Or a Year?

E. Aldridge. Things alter very much in a Year.

Mr. Gascoyne. Did you go down as a Friend of the Girl's?

E. Aldridge. I did, and at my own Expence.

Mr. Gascoyne. After examining these Circumstances, did you return with the Belief of her Story or not?

E. Aldridge. I went and stood at the Door, and there came one Hall, a School-master, who lives at Theobalds, and said to me, What do you think of it? I said, The Girl is mistaken; I believe she never was here.

Mr. Gascoyne. Is there any Pent-house under the Window, where 'tis supposed she made her Escape?

E. Aldridge. No; there was a Cellar-door under it; no Boards, no Pent-house; it was perpendicular to the Ground.

Mr. Gascoyne. Did you observe the Wall on the Outside?

E. Aldridge. I did; I went out in particular to look at it; there was no Sign of clawing the Wall, or any thing.

Mr. Gascoyne. When you returned to Town, upon the whole, what did you think of it?

E. Aldridge. Upon the whole, I did not think she had been there.

Mr. Gascoyne. How came you not to appear as a Witness for Squires upon her Trial?

E. Aldridge. I was never subpoena'd.

Mr. Gascoyne. Was you in Court on that Trial?

E. Aldridge. I was at the Beginning of it.

Mr. Gascoyne. Why did you not stay all the Time?

E. Aldridge. Because we had a Dinner at Goldsmiths-Hall, and I was going to it.

Mr. Gascoyne. Was you not very much concerned at your Conduct, when you heard she was convicted?

E. Aldridge. I said to Mr. White the Officer, at going out, What do you think of it? he said, he thought she would be acquitted: I said, I thought so too.

Mr. Gascoyne. How came you, after this, to go before my Lord-Mayor?

E. Aldridge. My Lord-Mayor had heard of me by Mr. Hague or Mr. Nash: They desired me to go with them.

Mr. Gascoyne. Had you any Acquaintance with the Lord-Mayor before that?

E. Aldridge. No, I had not.

Mr. Gascoyne. How long after the Conviction of Mary Squires was it, that you went before my Lord-Mayor.

E. Aldridge. I can't justly tell.

Mr. Gascoyne. Was it a Week after?

E. Aldridge. It was a great deal longer than that.

Mr. Gascoyne. Did you give the same Account there, as you have done now?

E. Aldridge. I believe, I gave exactly the same.

Mr. Gascoyne. Had you any Acquaintance with Canning before?

E. Aldridge. No, I had not. I went with Mr. Lyon, because I had heard a bad Character of Wells at Enfield-Wash, and was glad to hear she was taken; in order to be brought to Justice.

Mr. Gascoyne. Did Mr. Lyon and you all return very good Friends?

E. Aldridge. They went before Justice Tasb-maker, and I was quite tired of the Thing. I went to an Alehouse, and got some Mutton Chops, and half a Pint of Wine: I thought it was not worth hearing.

Cross-examined.

Mr. Williams. Was you with Elizabeth Canning in the Kitchen?

E. Aldridge. I was; She seemed to stare about her, as though she did not know where she was.

Mr. Williams. Did any body ask her if she knew the Place?

E. Aldridge. No; no body did, as I know of.

Mr. Williams. How long might she be in the Kitchen?

E. Aldridge. Not a long Time; she had some Wine brought her there.

Mr. Williams. Did she seem to be ill?

E. Aldridge. She did, to be faint and ill then.

Mr. Williams. How long was she before she pointed to the old Woman, after George Squires asked her the Question whether she knew him?

E. Aldridge. It was immediately after.

Mr. Williams. Did she speak that of her own accord?

E. Aldridge. I believe she did; I don't think any body prompted her to it: I saw no body talk to her then.

Mr. Williams. When did you declare your Dissatisfaction first?

E. Aldridge. I declared it before I left the House.

Mr. Williams. When did you cease to be her Friend?

E. Aldridge. I soon ceased to be her Friend.

Mr. Williams. How long after this was it you had Conversation with Mr. and Mrs. Howard about this? and upon what Account did you go down there to them?

E. Aldridge. I was going down to Enfield-Wash, I cannot tell how long after; I don't know whether it was not that Week. I hardly knew the Gentleman; I have heard say he is a Surveyor of the Window-lights: I remember I went down to Mr. Edward Aldridge's at Enfield-Wash; when I went out, I was desired to take some of the Papers (her printed Case in order for a Subscription) to Mr. Aldridge there.

Mr. Williams. Did you recommend it to them about subscribing for the Girl?

E. Aldridge. I did not deliver Papers: Mr. Aldridge took one in his Pocket with him, and I went with him to Mr. Howard's; we had some Discourse with him, but I can't say what it was justly.

Mr. Williams. I'll put you in Mind of one Thing: Did you, or did you not, say you were satisfied with the Girl's Description she gave of the House, either to Mr. or Mrs. Howard?

E. Aldridge. I denied it from the very first.

Mr. Williams. Did you say you thought she had been at the House, or did you declare you thought she had not?

E. Aldridge. If I declared any Thing about it, I declared she was not at the House; whether I did, or did not, I am sure, if I said any Thing, I said she was not confined there.

Mr. Williams. Did you any ways recommend this Paper to Mr. or Mrs. Howard, or endeavour, with Mr. Aldridge, to encourage the Case?

E. Aldridge. No; I only left the Paper with him; I did not encourage the Case either one Way or other; we did talk about the Gypsies, whether she was there; they could not tell what Time she had been there. I asked them, how long they thought she had been there? Mrs. Howard said, she could not call to mind how long she had been there, but said, she thought she had been there some Time, for she knew her very well.

Mr. Williams. How many Papers had you there?

E. Aldridge. I had but one.

Mr. Williams. How long after the Conviction of the old Woman was it, before you went before my Lord-Mayor?

E. Aldridge. Mr. Nash and Mr. Hague had been there two or three Times before I had been there, and they desired me to go with them.

Mr. Williams. Was it a Month after?

E. Aldridge. It was that, to be sure.

Mr. Williams. How came you, when you heard this poor Woman was reprieved, upon an Information made on her Behalf, when every body was then endeavouring to explain the Matter, not to go before the Magistrate in a Month's Time? Did not you think it a Matter of Justice to go?

E. Aldridge. When I was called for, I did: It was no Business of mine to trouble my Head about it to go.

William White sworn.

W. White. I am an Officer under my Lord-Mayor. I remember going down to Enfield-Wash, on the 1st of February 1753, to apprehend Susannah Wells. There was a Warrant went down before me: I met three Gentlemen there with the Warrant: I apprehended it was to take up Mother Wells, for cutting off Elizabeth Canning's Stays: I went over the Way to a Public House; then somebody said they saw Mother Wells go by; then I said, Let us go over and secure every body in the House: There were four of us, Mr. Adamson, Mr. Wintlebury, I, and another Person whom I do not know: We went there: When we were in the Parlour, Mr. Adamson pointed to Mother Wells, and said, That is she; there were two or three other Women in the Room with her. I immediately drew my Hanger, and said, they were all Prisoners. I put a Centry over them, and went to the other Parts of the House, and took all that were in the House, and put them into the Parlour: Mother Squires and her two Daughters were in a fore Room up one Pair of Stairs: George Squires was brought into the Room by some of the People: I told him he must be detained: Gentlemen, said he, look over every Thing that I have here: I turned them all out, and the old and young Womens Things too, to look for the Stays, but no such Thing was found.

Mr. Willes. Did you tell them the Reason of your apprehending them?

W. White. I did not just then: I said, there was a Robbery committed, and they must not go away: I found one of Mother Wells's Daughters, and Virtue Hall next, and brought them to the rest: After this, I went into the Kitchen on the right Hand, and looked round: After that, I saw a Woman's Head, by looking over the Door through a Chasm, in a Place they call the Hay-loft. There was at the Bottom of it seven Steps to go up. I went and fetched her down, and put her amongst the rest; this was Judith Natus; she appeared to be just getting up.

Mr. Willes. What Time of the Day might this be?

W. White. I take it to be about Nine in the Morning. After I could find no body else, I went up into the Hay-loft to take a View of it; I just looked round, and saw the Hay, and two Windows, some Saddles, a Chest of Drawers, an old Barrel, a Musket, and a Tub, and a great deal of Lumber that I can't particularly describe.

Mr. Willes. How much Hay might there be?

W. White. If it had been bound up, I believe there were about the Value of twelve or fifteen Trusses; it seemed to have laid there a great while: I saw also a little Stove Chimney without a Grate in it. I did not stay to make particular Observation.

Mr. Willes. Were there any Pictures over the Chimney?

W. White. No, there were none: I saw the Bed Judith Natus had lain in, that was opposite the Fire-place. When I had looked round the Room, I was a little surprized, and thought the Girl was mistaken; so I went out on the Outside, and looked under the Window that fronts the Road, the North Window: I could not observe any Thing particular there, neither the Footsteps of any body dropping from the Window, or Print of their Cloaths by dropping down; it was clay Ground; it was so soft, that a Step of a Dog might make an Impression: There was a Heap of human Dung lay under it, about as high as the Body of a Quart Bottle; there was no Appearance of any body being there for some Time; neither did it appear to me as if any body had been out at that Window: I called Mr. Adamson to shew him; he would have persuaded me there were some Scratches on the Wall with her Foot, but I could not see any.

Mr. Willes. Was there any Pent-house or Shed between the Ground and the Window?

W. White. No, there was not; the Wall was perpendicular from the Ground. I was in the Parlour amongst them when Canning came down, which I believe was about Twelve or One o'Clock; she was carried into the Kitchen, and set upon the Dresser opposite the Parlour; she sat there about four or five Minutes.

Mr. Willes. Were the other Witnesses there at that Time?

W. White. There were so many People, I can't tell: After this, she was carried up Stairs to where I fetched the Gypsey from, but I did not go up Stairs with them; neither did I go up into the Hay-loft with her. The Prisoners being all in the Parlour, it was proposed to bring them one at a Time into the Kitchen; I objected against that, and desired they would all go back again into the Parlour, and let Canning go in and pick the Woman out from among them all, that had robbed her; I was afraid somebody would go and give a Signal; then we went into the Parlour; they were all placed in a Circle round the Fire; I believe, before they were moved, Mary Squires was on the left-hand Side of the Fire; Wells sat with her Elbow against the Fire-place, on the right-hand Side; this was before they got up to come in one at a Time; after this, their Positions were most of them altered; and when Canning came in, which could not be above a Minute or two after, upon some Occasion, Wells was shifted, and got into Squires's Side, and Squires in her Place. Canning fixed upon the old Gypsey, as soon as she came into the middle of them; the Gypsey was sitting in the Corner stooping, I think, with a black Bonnet on: Canning said, That is the Woman there, pointing to her: I saw her fix her Eye immediately on that Corner of the Room.

Mr. Willes. Was her Face fronting Canning?

W. White. No, it was cross the Fire-place, as I apprehend.

Mr. Willes. Do you think Canning could see her Face then?

W. White. I can't answer for what she could see: I begged of her, before she went in, for God's sake, to be sure before she fixed upon any body.

Mr. Willes. Who did you expect she would have fixed upon?

W. White. I expected she would have fixed upon Mother Wells, before she went into the Room. When she had fixed upon the Gypsey, one of her Daughters got up, and went to the old Woman, and said, This Gentlewoman says you have robbed her. Canning was then standing in the middle of the Room amongst the People. The Gypsey Woman came up to her, and opened her Face, and said, Me rob you! I never saw you in my Life before; for God Almighty's sake, don't swear my Life away. When I said there was a Robbery committed, George Squires asked me, when the Robbery was committed? (his Mother and two Sisters were then with him) I said, it was on the 1st of January: He said, We were in Dorsetshire at that Time, at a Place called Abbotsbury; we went there to keep our Christmas: Then I took an Opportunity to find out Mother Wells's Daughter by herself.

Mr. Willes. Was Canning present?

W. White. No.

Mr. Moreton. Then what Wells's Daughter said, is not Evidence against the Defendant.

Mr. Willes. I meant what was said in Canning's Presence.

W. White. They all said they were at Abbotsbury, while Canning was in the Room; that is, the Son, two Daughters, and Mother.

Mr. Willes. Did they mention keeping their Christmas before Canning?

W. White. No, they did not mention that in the Parlour, but they did to me before Canning came; we stayed some Time; then we went before Justice Taselmaker at Edmonton with them all in a Cart.

Cross-examined.

Mr. Moreton. I think you are an Officer in London.

W. White. I am, but I had a Constable there.

Mr. Moreton. Was one Long, a Son-in-law to Mother Wells, in the House?

W. White. I believe he was there with a Cart to carry them: There were a great many People; I did not know Long.

Mr. Moreton. After you had collected the People out of all the Rooms, you say you went up Stairs?

W. White. I did.

Mr. Moreton. Did you meet with any Obstruction?

W. White. There was a Man made some Obstruction, struction, and said, he would first see the Warrant; upon which I went to the Constable and fetched it, and went up.

Mr. Moreton. In whose Custody did you leave the Prisoners?

W. White. With the People that went down with me; the Officer that had the Warrant was in the Parlour.

Mr. Moreton. When you went down, did you leave that Man alone?

W. White. I believe he stood upon the Stairs till I fetched the Warrant; he was at the Door of the Room, but said he would not open it till he had seen the Warrant.

Mr. Moreton. Was that Man's Name Long?

W. White. There was one Long that carried them to Justice Tashmaker's; but whether that was he, I cannot tell.

Mr. Moreton. The Long I mean, is Son-in-law to Mrs. Wells.

W. White. Then I don't know him.

Mr. Moreton. Were they all uniform in giving the Account of being at Abbotsbury?

W. White. They were.

Mr. Moreton. Mention what the old Woman said.

W. White. She said, she was at Abbotsbury on the 1st of January; and George and Lucy said they were there; and Mary said, she was at her Uncle's in the Borough; she said, she was there at Christmas.

Mr. Moreton. You say Adamson and you had no other Conception but that Mother Wells was the Thief.

W. White. We did think so.

Mr. Moreton. Were there any shewing any body to Caming, when she came in?

W. White. No, Sir, not as I saw; she, of her own accord, voluntarily picked out Mrs. Squires as the Person that cut off her Stays.

Mr. Davy. We shall now produce several Witnesses, who, at various Times during the Month of January 53, were in the very Room in which the Defendant swore she was confined.

Fortune Natus sworn.

F. Natus. I live at Waltham-Cross, when I am at Home; I have lived there almost two Years.

Mr. Davy. Was you there before the Year 52?

F. Natus. I was there a good while before that.

Mr. Davy. Did you ever live at Enfield-Wash, and when did you come there?

F. Natus. On the Monday Fortnight after my Lord-Mayor's Day, of Sir Crisp Gascoyne's Mayoralty, I came from the Wheat-sheaf at Waltham-Cross, and went to lodge at Mrs. Wells's House at Enfield-Wash.

Mr. Davy. Are you a married Man?

F. Natus. I am, Sir; my Wife's Name is Judith; she lived with me all the Time.

Mr. Davy. In what Room did you lodge at Mrs. Wells's?

F. Natus. In a Room properly called the Workshop, that is, the Room that goes up out of the Kitchen, about seven or eight Steps to go up.

Mr. Davy. Is it a long or square Room?

F. Natus. It is a long Room, no Squareness belongs to it, with a Pan-tile Roof.

Mr. Davy. How many Windows are there to it?

F. Natus. There are two; one facing the Feet of my Bed, it was a single Casement; and the other at the farther End of the Room, upon the left Hand as I lay, a larger than the other, one half boarded, and the other half Glass, looking into the great Road; and there was a Chimney facing the Foot of my Bed, on the right-hand Side, in the Corner of the Room next the little Window.

Mr. Davy. What was your Bed?

F. Natus. It was made of Hay and Straw mixed together.

Mr. Davy. Had you any Pillow or Bolster, and what was it made of?

F. Natus. I had a Sack of Wool for my Bolster.

Mr. Davy. Did your Wife lie with you on this Bed?

F. Natus. She did, Sir.

Mr. Davy. Mention the Furniture of the Room.

F. Natus. When I came first into the Room, there was pretty nigh half a Load of Hay, as nigh as I can guess; a large Chest of Drawers on the left-hand Side, about half Way in the Room; two or three Side-saddles, one Man's Saddle; a large Box that had some Pollard in it, it was a deepish Drawer, and formerly did belong to the Chest of Drawers; a Tub to hold some Chaff for Mrs. Wells's Horse, and a Tub with some Iron Hoops on it; an old Gun, and a Barrel of a Gun besides; the Gun stood in the Corner upon some Pan-tiles; an old Lanthorn, an old Spit, and an old cross-cut Saw, that stood upright in the Chimney; there was Pullies and a Line that belonged to a Jack, that came through the Hole at the right Hand of my Bed, over my Head; the Hole the Line came through, was large enough to put three of my Fists in, and about a Foot in Length; I used to put a Wisp of Hay in it to keep out the Cold; there was also the Sign of the Crown there, almost at the Feet of my Bed.

Mr. Davy. Was the Sign made of Wood or Copper?

F. Natus. It was made of Wood.

Mr. Davy. Was there any Grate in the Chimney?

F. Natus. No, there never was a Grate in the Room since I knew the House.

Mr. Davy. Did you observe any Thing else in the Room?

F. Natus. I observed a Bar there, that belonged to the Bar in the Kitchen, where they used to keep all their Liquor; it was old, so they brought it up Stairs.

Mr. Davy. Were there any Pictures in the Room?

F. Natus. I never saw a Picture in the Room in my Life.

Mr. Davy. What was over the Chimney?

F. Natus. There was an old Iron Casement on the Top of the Chimney; it was all Iron, no Glass at all, to the best of my Remembrance.

Mr. Davy. Was there any Lead in it?

F. Natus. There was no Lead in it, as I think, only the Frame of a Casement.

Mr. Davy. How long did you lodge there?

F. Natus. I lodged there ten Weeks, all but three Days, and in no other Place but this Room. I lay out of it but one Night in all the Time, that was on a Wednesday Night; my Wife never lay a Night out of it in that Time, except that Night I can't tell, I not being there.

Mr. Davy. Was the Quantity of Hay decreased, when you lodged there?

F. Natus.

F. Natus. It was; they kept a Horfe, and had some for him out of it constantly, almost every Day.

Mr. Davy. How much Hay might there be left, when you last lay there?

F. Natus. It might be the value of ten or twelve Trusses, if it had been tied up.

Mr. Davy. Was any of the Furniture of the Room taken out while you was there?

F. Natus. None at all, but the Sign of the Crown, that was bought by Ezra Whiffin.

Mr. Davy. When did he buy that?

F. Natus. I cannot justly say that; I did not see him take it away.

Mr. Davy. How do you know that he bought it?

F. Natus. Because he has now got it hanging up at his Door. There was a large Piece of Wood under the Foot of my Bed, and some Irons in it that belonged to the Sign; he has had them since he bought the Sign, and the Piece of Wood is in the Chamber now. I was there New and Old Christmas, and all the Month of January, till I was taken up on the 2d of February.

Mr. Davy. Look at that young Woman, (meaning Canning) did you ever see her there in January?

F. Natus. I don't know any thing of her; I never saw her in the House, or at the House; I only had a Glimpse of her at Justice Tashmaker's; when they were taken up, I was at Work, and was sent for Home.

Mr. Davy. Did any body besides your Wife and yourself go into that Room?

F. Natus. Yes, one John Howit, Mrs. Wells's Son; he came there for some Pollard to feed his Mother's Sow and Pigs with, and several Times for Hay, when I was there; and Sarah Howit, his Sister, she often came for Pollard to serve the Pigs; she almost always lived at Home: I have seen the Widow Long there; her maiden Name was Elizabeth Wells; I have seen her there several Times in the Month of January; there are two Longs; one of them is Mr. Long's own Daughter, she never was there: I have seen Virtue Hall in that Room.

Mr. Davy. Did Virtue Hall lodge in the House?

F. Natus. She was a Lodger there before I knew the House, in one of the best Chambers.

Mr. Davy. Do you remember when the Gypsey first came there?

F. Natus. I cannot well remember the Day punctually that they came there; they came about a Week and a Day before they were taken up.

Mr. Davy. What Rooms did they lodge in?

F. Natus. They lodged up the main Stairs; in one of the best Rooms.

Mr. Davy. Mention, if you can, what Rooms the several People lay in.

F. Natus. I can describe none of them, because I never was much in them: Virtue Hall lay along with Mrs. Wells: I had been in the Rooms, but never to take much Notice of them.

Mr. Davy. Describe the several Rooms to which the Stair-case leads.

F. Natus. There was one Room on the left-hand Side the Stair-case; there Mrs. Wells and Virtue Hall lay in one Bed, I believe; the old Gypsey lay in a Room opposite.

Mr. Davy. Where did George Squires lie?

F. Natus. I don't know.

Mr. Davy. Have you any particular Reason for remembering the Time of the Gypsey's coming to Wells's House?

F. Natus. I am no ways exact to the Day, but by reason she looked so frightful, that I did not care to be at the Fire with her.

Mr. Davy. Had you ever seen Mary Squires, or her Son, or Daughters, before the Time you mention?

F. Natus. No, I never had, Sir, in all the Course of my Life.

Mr. Davy. Do you know who came to Enfield-Wash with Mary Squires?

F. Natus. No, I don't, because I was then at Work; her Son and two Daughters lodged there all the Time she did.

Mr. Davy. Did they board in the House?

F. Natus. No, they went to the Shops to buy their Victuals; they were acquainted with Mrs. Larney, who sells Butter, Cheese, Bread, and Bacon; she lives about two Stones-cast from Mrs. Wells's House.

Mr. Davy. Is she a married Woman?

F. Natus. She is; her Husband is a Brick-layer, I think, named John.

Mr. Davy. Do you remember any Pitcher in the House?

F. Natus. I remember one very well; it was a largish black Pitcher, broken about the Mouth; my Wife made use of it over Night, before we were taken up, to fetch Water from a Pump over the Way, at Mr. Howard's, for my Supper: Virtue Hall, and Mrs. Wells, and Sarah Howit, used to go there for Water.

Mr. Davy. Do you remember any Bed-gown Mrs. Wells had?

F. Natus. No, I don't remember she ever had any at all.

Mr. Davy. Look at this Pitcher, Handkerchief, and Bed-gown; do you know either of them?

F. Natus. I'll swear to the Pitcher, that is Mrs. Wells's; I never saw the Handkerchief and Bed-gown in my Life.

Mr. Davy. Do you remember one Robert White coming to Wells's House?

F. Natus. I do; he used to come there, as far as I know, under Pretence of courting Sal Howit, almost every Night; I have known him five or six Years; he has seen me go to Bed in that Room several Nights.

Cross-examined.

Mr. Nares. What is your Business?

F. Natus. I am a poor labouring Man.

Mr. Nares. Where have you been since you was taken up?

F. Natus. I have been at Work at Mr. Bell's, at the Four Swans at Waltham-Cross.

Mr. Nares. Did you work for him before?

F. Natus. No, I did not, Sir.

Mr. Nares. Are you sure this is the Pitcher that used to go so often to the Pump?

F. Natus. This is it.

Mr. Nares. How came you to go to live at Enfield-Wash?

F. Natus. I went there from London, being hired by a Farmer at Waltham-Cross, and I could not have constant Lodging there.

Mr. Nares. Who directed you to Mother Wells's House?

F. Natus:

F. Natus. A Man, whose Name is Payne, and my Wife went and asked for Lodging; I was to pay nine Pence per Week.

Mr. Nares. Why did not you lodge in the other Part of the House?

F. Natus. There were no Rooms empty there.

Mr. Nares. Was not there a Garret empty?

F. Natus. I don't know, I never was up them.

Mr. Nares. Was not you sometimes disturbed of your Rest by People making a Noise in the Kitchen?

F. Natus. They could not come into the Kitchen but I could hear them; I very seldom heard much Noise; sometimes I slept almost all Night.

Mr. Nares. What Time do the Family use to go to Bed?

F. Natus. The Family generally go to Bed betwixt Nine and Ten o'Clock; I never knew any Harm by the House; the People that belong to the House have got a very bad Character; but from what I know of it, I never saw any Harm in it, and it is a very sober honest House; I never saw any ill Tricks, or Irregularity, all the Time I was there.

Mr. Nares. What Time of the Day did Robert White use to come?

F. Natus. He used to come when he left off his Day's Work, may-be about Six or Seven o'Clock.

Mr. Nares. How long did he use to stay?

F. Natus. May-be two Hours, seldom longer.

Mr. Nares. Was there any other Lodger there besides you?

F. Natus. Virtue Hall was another.

Mr. Nares. What did she use to do for a Living?

F. Natus. She used to spin.

Mr. Nares. She was a very industrious Girl; was she not?

F. Natus. I cannot say for that, she used to work but a little.

Mr. Nares. Can you remember when the Sign was carried out?

F. Natus. I cannot say when it was really; I do not say what Time I missed it, but only I remember its being there.

Mr. Nares. What Time were the Sign-Irons carried out?

F. Natus. They were not carried out till some Time in January, before I was taken up.

Mr. Nares. How long before you was taken up?

F. Natus. It may be more than a Week or ten Days before.

Mr. Nares. Now I would ask you whether you was in Company with Arthur Newit?

F. Natus. I have several Times; I have work'd for him.

Mr. Nares. Do you know one John Jackson?

F. Natus. I do; he is a Farmer, and lives about a Mile out of Ware Town.

Mr. Nares. Do you know William Hubbard?

F. Natus. I cannot say I do.

Mr. Nares. Did you ever take an Oath upon this Affair?

F. Natus. The first I ever took was before Sir Crisp Gascoyne at the Mansion-House.

Mr. Nares. How long is that ago?

F. Natus. I cannot recollect that.

Mr. Nares. Do you think it is more than six Months ago?

VOL. X.

F. Natus. It must be more than that.

Mr. Nares. Are you sure the Girl never was in that Room?

F. Natus. Yes, Sir, I am, the Time I lodged there, which was ten Weeks all but three Days.

Mr. Nares. Did you ever fall in Company with Mr. Newit after this?

F. Natus. Yes, several Times.

Mr. Nares. Do you remember what Conversation passed?

F. Natus. He has taxed me several Times with swearing false, and offered to lay a Wager that I lodged in another House at Enfield-Wash, besides Mother Wells's.

Mr. Nares. Was ever such a Wager laid?

F. Natus. I believe there was; but what I said was Truth.

Mr. Nares. What was the Wager?

F. Natus. I believe it was a Shilling a-piece, I think so; but it was drawn, because he found he was wrong.

Mr. Nares. We have those present that can give an Account of it, so be careful: Say whether or not, upon that Conclusion, you did admit you had lodged at another House?

F. Natus. No, Gentlemen, I am come here to speak the Truth; I never did admit, in their Presence, that I lodged in another Room, or in another House.

Mr. Nares. Did you never admit you had lost your Wager, and that you had laid in another Room?

F. Natus. I never did admit it; I did not lose the Wager at all, because it was drawn.

Mr. Davy. When was you applied to, to lay this Wager?

F. Natus. It is about a quarter of a Year ago.

Mr. Davy. Where was this?

F. Natus. It was at Mr. Bell's House at the Four Swans at Waltham-Cross.

Mr. Davy. What was the Wager?

F. Natus. I cannot say what Money was laid; I down'd with my Money myself.

Mr. Davy. Who was in the Room at that Time?

F. Natus. There were several People there drinking; I cannot say whether they were common Men or Gentlemen.

Mr. Davy. Was the Money staked?

F. Natus. I cannot say whether it was a Shilling; the Money was staked down.

Mr. Davy. Who held the Stakes?

F. Natus. I don't know.

Mr. Davy. Did Mrs. Bell hold it?

F. Natus. I don't know that she did; I will not be sure of that; I had some of mine again.

Mr. Davy. Why had you it not all again?

F. Natus. I paid for a Decanter of Beer out of it.

Mr. Davy. Did Mr. Newit pay for any out of it?

F. Natus. He paid for none.

Mr. Davy. Did you drink Part of the Beer?

F. Natus. I did, Sir.

Mr. Davy. Was you here upon the Trial of Mary Squires?

F. Natus. I had a Subpœna, and did come, and was in the Old-Bailey Yard, and up near the Door.

Mr. Davy. What prevented your coming into Court to give Evidence.

F. Natus. Because I was not called; none of the Witnesses were called, never a one.

Mr. Davy. Was there any other Reason?

F. Natus. No other Reason, but they were not called.

Mr. Davy. Was you not assaulted?

F. Natus. I was, at the Place that turns out of the Old-Bailey Yard, three or four Times, and I shewed my Subpœna.

Mr. Davy. Who assaulted you?

F. Natus. There was a tallish Man that kept the Gate, pitted very much with the Small-Pox, he was the only Person that turned me out of the Yard.

Mr. Davy. Did any other Person use you ill?

F. Natus. There were several other People, but none touched me to turn me out.

Mr. Davy. Was you alone?

F. Natus. I was with the other Witnesses; they stood upon the Steps; two or three of them were turned out of the Yard.

Mr. Davy. What were the other Witnesses attending for?

F. Natus. For the same as I did.

Mr. Davy. What are their Names?

F. Natus. I cannot say half their Names.

Mr. Davy. Name some of them.

F. Natus. There was the Widow Long was one; they wanted to mob her.

Mr. Nares. I must obstruct this; this does no ways affect Canning, if it was the Neglect of the Officers; it cannot be proved that she was privy to it.

Judith Natus sworn.

J. Natus. The last Witness is my Husband; he does Husbandry-Work; he did work for Mr. Payne at Waltham-Cross; and we then lodged at Mrs. Arnold's, a Fortnight; she bid us provide ourselves, because we were very poor; and at the Fortnight's End we came to Mrs. Wells's House at Enfield-Wash, where we lodged ten Weeks, all but three Days, before we were taken up; I cannot tell the Day of the Month when we came there.

Mr. Willes. What Month was it in?

J. Natus. I cannot tell.

Mr. Willes. Was it in September, October, November, or December?

J. Natus. I cannot tell.

Mr. Willes. Was it before New Christmas-Day?

J. Natus. It was.

Mr. Willes. How long is it ago?

J. Natus. Upon my Word I cannot tell, because I am no Scholar.

Mr. Willes. During the ten Weeks all but three Days, how many Nights did you lie out of that House?

J. Natus. I never lay out of it one Night during the whole Time; my Husband lay out of it one Night, and but one.

Mr. Willes. What Room did you lie in?

J. Natus. We lay in a Room they call the Workshop.

Mr. Willes. In what Part of the House is it?

J. Natus. They go through the Kitchen, and up eight Stairs, as near as I can guess; our Bed was of Hay and Straw, on the right Hand going up; we had a Sack of Wool for our Bolster.

Mr. Willes. On which Side was the Head of your Bed?

J. Natus. It looked into the Kitchen.

Mr. Willes. Was there any Hole near your Bed?

J. Natus. Yes, there was one at the Head of the Bed; we used to stuff it with Hay to keep the Cold out; it was there before we came there.

Mr. Willes. Where did that Hole look into, when it was not stopped up?

J. Natus. It looked into the Kitchen.

Mr. Willes. Describe the Room; is there any Chimney in it?

J. Natus. There is, and a Casement over it.

Mr. Willes. What do you mean by a Casement over it?

J. Natus. There was an old Casement, all to Pieces almost, over the Chimney, when we came into the Room.

Mr. Willes. Was there any Glass in it?

J. Natus. There might be about half a Casement, not much Glass to signify.

Mr. Willes. Was there any Grate in the Chimney?

J. Natus. No, there never was for the Time I was there.

Mr. Willes. Was there any Chest of Drawers?

J. Natus. There was a Nest of Drawers, which I used to put my Bread and Cheese in, because the Mice should not run away with the Cheese.

Mr. Willes. Was this Chest of Drawers on the right or left-hand Side of your Bed?

J. Natus. They were on the left-hand Side.

Mr. Willes. Was the Hole you used to stop with Hay of any Use?

J. Natus. No, none at all.

Mr. Willes. How big was it?

J. Natus. It was about as big as my two double Fists.

Mr. Willes. What was hung over this Hole?

J. Natus. The Jack-line that was at the Head of my Bed.

Mr. Willes. Then cannot you tell the Use of the Hole?

J. Natus. I believe it was for the Jack-line to go through.

Mr. Willes. Pray, what other Furniture was there in the Room?

J. Natus. I believe, as nigh as I can guess, there was about half a Load of Hay, that was there before we came.

Mr. Willes. What was there in the Room besides?

J. Natus. There were Pan-tiles at the farther End of the Room, which had laid there before we came; an old Spit, and an old Lanthorn, just by the Chimney; one Man's Saddle, and two Women's Saddles; there was a Saw, and a Tub which Mrs. Wells used to put Chaff in for the Horse, and a Box that she used to put Pollard in for the Pigs, that stood on the left-hand Side.

Mr. Willes. Did she use to keep Pigs?

J. Natus. Yes, Sir, she did, in a little Sort of a Wash-house. She used to go into the Room for Pollard every Day, and feed them with it. There was a Sign of a Fountain there; it stood in the Room before we came, behind a Tub where the Chaff was.

Mr. Willes. Was there ever a Gun there?

J. Natus. Yes, there was a Gun.

Mr. Nares. Don't put Words into her Mouth.

Mr. Willes. Was there one Sign or two?

J. Natus. There were two, the Fountain and the Crown.

Mr. Willes. Where was the Sign of the Crown?

J. Natus. They stood together, fronting you as you go up. Mr. Whiffin bought the Sign of the Crown

Crown before Old Christmas; the Irons that belonged to the Sign-post were at the Feet of my Bed, and he bought them: He took them away about a Week or a Fortnight before we were taken up, as nigh as I can guefs.

Mr. Willes. How long had Mrs. Squires lodged there, before she was taken up?

J. Natus. She had lodged there a Week and one Day.

Mr. Willes. Do you know George Squires?

J. Natus. I do; I never saw him in my Life before he came to lodge there: There were two Daughters, one is named Lucy.

Mr. Willes. Where did they use to lie?

J. Natus. They used to lie up Stairs in the other Part of the House; she and her two Daughters lay in a Chamber over the Parlour.

Mr. Willes. Were there any other young People in the House?

J. Natus. There were no body at all in the House but them and ourselves.

Mr. Willes. In what Room of the House did Virtue Hall lodge?

J. Natus. In the Room fronting the Stairs, near where the Gypsies lodged.

Mr. Willes. Had there been any Use made of this Hay?

J. Natus. They used to fetch it for the Horse.

Mr. Willes. Who used to fetch it?

J. Natus. Sal Howit; she is Mrs. Wells's Daughter; and Mrs. Wells herself, and Virtue Hall used to fetch some, and sometimes Pollard for the Pigs.

Mr. Willes. How came Sal Howit to be Mrs. Wells's Daughter?

J. Natus. Mrs. Wells had two Husbands.

Mr. Willes. How was this House supplied with Water?

J. Natus. Sometimes we fetched it from a Gentleman's Pump from over the Way.

Mr. Willes. Look at this Pitcher.

J. Natus. I cannot swear to the Pitcher; but I have fetched Water myself many a Time in such a black Pitcher; I think it was not broke so much at the Mouth as it is now: One may be like another: I cannot say it is the same; I think it was not quite so big as this.

Mr. Willes. Look upon this Bed-gown, examine it well.

J. Natus. I do; I never saw this in my Life, before they came and took us up: Mrs. Wells had no Bed-gown.

Mr. Willes. Look at that young Woman, (meaning Elizabeth Canning;) did you ever see her at Mrs. Wells's?

J. Natus. I never did, before she came with them to take us up, if that was the last Word I was to speak.

Mr. Willes. Look at this Handkerchief; do you know it?

J. Natus. I never saw it in my Life before.

Mr. Willes. Was you subpoena'd at Squires's Trial, in order to give Evidence?

J. Natus. I was; but they would not let me come in.

Mr. Willes. You was taken up with the rest, was you?

J. Natus. I was, and carried before Justice Tasbmaker, and from thence to Justice Fielding. Canning cleared me; she said she never saw me before.

Mr. Willes. Did you give the same Account as you do now?

J. Natus. I did.

Cross-examined.

Mr. Williams. Did she charge you with any thing, when you was taken up?

J. Natus. No, she did not.

Mr. Williams. Did she charge Mrs. Wells at all?

J. Natus. No, she did not.

Mr. Williams. Did you hear her say Virtue Hall was by, when Mrs. Squires cut the Lacing of her Stays?

J. Natus. I cannot say I heard her say it.

Mr. Williams. What Countryman is your Husband?

J. Natus. He comes from Gloucestershire.

Mr. Williams. From whence are you?

J. Natus. I was bred and born at Ware in Hertfordshire.

F R I D A Y the 3d of May.

Mary Larney sworn.

M. Larney. I live at Enfield-Wash, and keep a Chandler's Shop. I have known Fortune Natus and his Wife some considerable Time; they have bought Goods of me, that is, Bread, Butter, Cheese and Beer.

Mr. Davy. When was the first Time you ever saw them?

M. Larney. It was some Time after Michaelmas was Twelve-month, between that and Christmas they lodged at Mrs. Wells's House.

Mr. Davy. Did you ever hear them say in what Part of the House they lodged?

M. Larney. No, I never did, indeed.

Mr. Davy. How long did they remain there?

M. Larney. They remained there after the Time they were taken up; for they came back after that.

Mr. Davy. Do you remember any other Lodgers Mrs. Wells had in her House?

M. Larney. Virtue Hall used to come sometimes for Things, and I remember the Gypsies coming.

Mr. Davy. When was the first Time of your seeing them?

M. Larney. It was on a Wednesday; and the Thursday was Se'nnight after, in the Morning, they were taken up.

Mr. Davy. When you saw the Gypsies, how many of them were there?

M. Larney. Lucy was the first I saw of them; she knocked at my Door, and asked me if I sold small Bread, on the Wednesday; I said, Yes; I sold her a Loaf and some Cheese and Small Beer, and lent her a Pitcher to carry it Home; (I live opposite Mrs. Wells's House;) in the Evening of the same Day old Mrs. Squires came. George brought the Pitcher Home the next Morning. He or the Sister came every Day till they were taken up, and had Things of me, and sometimes the old Gentlewoman for Tobacco; I saw them commonly two or three Times a Day; that very Morning they were taken up, they had Tea.

Mr. Davy. What is your Husband's Name?

M. Larney. His Name is John Larney; he is a Bricklayer.

Mr. Davy. Do you know whether Mrs. Wells keeps any Cattle?

M. Larney. She keeps a Horse and a Hog.

Mr.

Mr. Davy. How long have you known her?

M. Larney. I have known her almost forty Years; ever since I can remember.

Mr. Davy. With what did she use to feed her Horse?

M. Larney. I have seen them fetch Grains; and I know she bought Hay, for I saw it brought in, and by the Badness of the Weather it was spoiled.

Mr. Davy. When was it brought in?

M. Larney. In the seasonable Time of Hay-making, before last Christmas was Twelve-month.

Mr. Davy. Where did she put it?

M. Larney. As she said then, she put it into the Room called the Shop.

Mr. Nares. I object against that, as legal Evidence.

Mr. Davy. I am not asking any thing Mrs. Wells said since 1752, but what she said before, when it was impossible for her to know of this Affair, when it could serve no Purpose to speak falsely; that is Evidence.

Mr. Nares. There is one plain Rule as to the Evidence of Hearsay; that is, that when you can have that very Person that proves this very Fact, she is the Person to be called; this is not Evidence at all.

Court. The Court are of Opinion that it will be proper for Wells to give her own Evidence.

Mr. Davy. Was you ever in this Workshop at Mrs. Wells's?

M. Larney. No, not till after the People were taken up.

Mr. Davy. Do you remember seeing any Hay carried to the House after that Time you have mentioned?

M. Larney. No, I do not.

Mr. Davy. How much was brought there in the Year 1752?

M. Larney. It was loose upon the Cart; I don't know how much there was of it; I saw it carried to the Door, but did not see it put into the Workshop.

Mr. Davy. What Door did you see it carried to?

M. Larney. Towards the Stable-door, as they call it.

Mr. Davy. Near what Part of the House is the Stable?

M. Larney. The lower Part towards London; it lies in a Line with the House.

Mr. Davy. Is there any Loft over the Stable?

M. Larney. Not as I know of.

Mr. Davy. To what Part of the House was this Hay carried?

M. Larney. I saw it standing against the Stable.

Mr. Davy. Did you see it unloaded?

M. Larney. No, I did not.

Cross-examined.

Mr. Moreton. How was this Hay brought?

M. Larney. It was brought in a Cart, and drawn up to the Stable, which ranges along with the House; I saw no more of it.

Mr. Moreton. What Countrywoman are you?

M. Larney. I was born and bred at Enfield-Wash.

Mr. Moreton. How long has Mrs. Wells lived in that House?

M. Larney. She lived there before I can remember.

Mr. Moreton. A good Sort of a House, was it not?

M. Larney. I did not frequent the House.

Mr. Moreton. What is the general Reputation of the House?

M. Larney. I suppose, by the Report, you know what a House it was.

Mr. Davy. We will suppose it to be a most infamous House.

Mr. Moreton. Did you ever see any Gypsies there before?

M. Larney. No, never before that Time, to my Knowledge; I never saw any at Mrs. Wells's before. I was very much surprized, and put the Money I took of her into a Pail of Water, because I had heard they can get the Money again.

Mr. Moreton. Whose Money was you afraid would be so nimble, Lucy's or the old Woman's?

M. Larney. I had put Lucy's in my Pocket amongst other Money; it was the old Woman's Money I put in the Water.

Mr. Moreton. Do you know William Smith?

M. Larney. He lives two or three Miles from me, upon the Chace; he is a Farmer.

Mr. Moreton. Do you know Samuel Arnot?

M. Larney. I know no such Name, unless it be he that lives up in the Town.

Mr. Moreton. Do you know Mr. Howard and his Wife?

M. Larney. They are People of very good Character, to be sure.

Mr. Moreton. Do you know Humphry Holding?

M. Larney. I do; he lives in Turkey-Street, about half a Mile from me.

Mr. Moreton. Do you know Mr. Story?

M. Larney. I have no Acquaintance with him, or Knowledge of him.

Sarah Howit sworn.

S. Howit. I am Daughter to Susannah Wells, and lived at Enfield-Wash with her at the Time Mrs. Canning said she was confined there.

Mr. Willes. Do you know Mary Squires?

S. Howit. I do, upon the Account of her being at our House a Week and one Day, and George and Lucy; they were all three together; they came on the Wednesday, and were taken up the Thursday Se'nnight after.

Mr. Willes. Look at that Pitcher; do you know it?

S. Howit. There was a Pitcher that used to go frequently to Mr. Howard's Pump.

Mr. Willes. Is this the Pitcher?

S. Howit. I cannot tell; it was a black Pitcher.

Mr. Willes. Did you live there the Time Fortune Natus and his Wife were there?

S. Howit. I did.

Mr. Willes. What Time did they come?

S. Howit. I cannot say at what Time they came.

Mr. Willes. How long were they there before Mary Squires came?

S. Howit. O! a great while; they were there the Time Squires was there, and the Time that Canning said she was confined there; and they lay in the Room she says she was confined in, which was the Workshop.

Mr. Willes. What do you mean by Workshop?

S. Howit. I mean the long Room that you go through the Kitchen to go up to it.

Mr. Willes. What did Natus and his Wife lie upon there?

S. Howit. They lay on Hay and Straw.

Mr.

Mr. Willes. Can you speak particularly, how long they were there?

S. Howit. They were there two Months.

Mr. Willes. What Use was made of this Room?

S. Howit. There was a great deal of loose Hay in it, and Lumber; the Hay was for an old Horse my Mother had. There was Pollard in a great Drawer, to feed a Sow and Pigs.

Mr. Willes. Do you remember about Christmas-Time, before Squires came there, whether the Room was locked up?

S. Howit. No, there never was a Lock upon the Door in my Memory; I remember it ever since I was born almost; I was born in the House.

Mr. Willes. Was you ever in that Room in that Month of January?

S. Howit. I was almost every Day.

Mr. Willes. Are you sure of that?

S. Howit. I am sure of it.

Mr. Willes. Can you take upon you to swear you was at your Mother's all the Month of December?

S. Howit. Yes, I can.

Mr. Willes. Can you, that you was all the Month of January?

S. Howit. I lay in that House every Night in the Month of January.

Mr. Willes. Do you remember, about a Fort-night or three Weeks before Squires came to your House, that any body was in that Workshop with you?

S. Howit. Virtue Hall went into it frequently, as much as I: We were there both together at the Time the Trees (against the little Window, a Casement that faces the Stairs) were lopped.

Mr. Willes. At what Time was it that the Trees were lopped?

S. Howit. I believe it was on the 8th of January; there were Edward Allen, Giles Knight, and John Larney, that lopped them.

Mr. Willes. Was the Casement open or shut?

S. Howit. I opened it myself at that Time.

Mr. Willes. Did any Thing pass between you and them?

S. Howit. There were Words passed, but I cannot tell what the Conversation was.

Cross-examined.

Mr. Nares. Have you lived at this House of your Mother's all your Life-time?

S. Howit. I was bred up there, and lived there some Time, not the greatest Part of my Life.

Mr. Nares. How long have you been absent from thence?

S. Howit. I have been five or six Years from it, and never saw my Mother's House in the Time.

Mr. Nares. How came you to be at Home at this Time?

S. Howit. I was out of Place, and so came Home.

Mr. Nares. How long had you been at Home before the Gypsies came there?

S. Howit. I believe about a Year and a half, or two Years.

Mr. Nares. How do you get your Living?

S. Howit. I go out to get my Bread, to work in the Country, sometimes Harvest-Work; I have no Family Affair with my Mother; I used to be in the Family, when I was not engaged another Way.

Mr. Nares. Do you remember what Quantity of Hay your Mother had at this Time?

- VOL. X.

S. Howit. There was a great deal of it; I believe, not a Load.

Mr. Nares. Had she any other Hay for her Horse?

S. Howit. No, she had not; it was carried to the Horse from Time to Time.

Mr. Nares. How much Hay might there be when Natus lay there?

S. Howit. There was a great deal.

Mr. Nares. Can't you tell any thing of this Conversation between these Men and you?

S. Howit. I cannot.

Mr. Nares. Did you begin, or they?

S. Howit. I don't know whether Virtue Hall began, or who.

Mr. Nares. Who conversed with them most?

S. Howit. I said some Things, but can't tell what; I don't pretend to say one Word that passed.

Mr. Nares. Did they begin with you, or you with them?

S. Howit. I can't tell who began.

Mr. Nares. Were they Acquaintance of yours?

S. Howit. Edward Allen went to School with me.

Mr. Nares. What sort of Trees were they?

S. Howit. They are great high Trees.

Mr. Nares. Which lopped the Tree?

S. Howit. Giles Knight; they were not all at Work at the same time; my Mother gave them a full Pot to lop the Tree; I saw them drink it.

Mr. Nares. Who had the Lop?

S. Howit. Larney had the Lop.

Mr. Nares. Whose Trees were they?

S. Howit. They are Richard Allen's Trees; they only cut off some Part that hung over the Place.

Mr. Nares. How much in Quantity was cut off?

S. Howit. I can't tell; I thought there was a Faggot, but I did not see Larney make it up; I saw him go by with some of it.

Mr. Nares. Were these People sent there on purpose?

S. Howit. No; two were hedging round the Fields.

Mr. Nares. What did the others do, while Knight lopped the Tree?

S. Howit. They stood on the Ground, and looked on.

Mr. Nares. How did Virtue Hall and you stand, by the Side of each other at the Window?

S. Howit. Virtue Hall looked over my Shoulder.

Mr. Nares. Could the Men see you both?

S. Howit. Yes, Sir; but I was the principal Person that was looking out at the Window.

Mr. Nares. Was there any other Window in the House that looked towards that Part?

S. Howit. No, not directly; there is one, but it stands slanting.

Recorder. Was you present when the Gypsies, her Son and Daughter, and your Mother, were taken up?

S. Howit. Yes, I was.

Recorder. Was you present when Elizabeth Canning was brought there?

S. Howit. I was then shut up in the Parlour with the others.

Recorder. Do you remember Elizabeth Canning being brought into the Parlour?

S. Howit. I do.

Recorder. Recollect what passed there.

S. Howit. She swore to the Gypsie Woman, and did not see her Face.

Recorder. Are you sure of that?

S. Howit. She had never seen her Face; she swore to her before she saw her Face; I am sure of it.

Recorder. What did the Gypsie Woman say upon that?

S. Howit. The poor Woman did not know it was she that she swore to, till her Daughter Lucy said, Mother, she swears you cut off her Stays: then the Gypsie got up and said, Look, Madam, don't say it is me that cut off your Stays; and pushed up her Hat;) Look, for God's sake, (and don't swear to me; don't say it is me, for I am innocent, or to that Purpose; I may not repeat directly the Words in particular.

Recorder. Did she say where she was at the Time?

S. Howit. No, she did not, but George did; but what he said, I can't tell.

Recorder. Can you describe in what sort of a Posture the Gypsie sat, when Canning came into the Parlour?

S. Howit. She was sat with her Pipe in her Mouth, by the Fire-side, with a Hat and Cloak on, with her Hand upon her Knee.

Recorder. Upon your Oath, whether Elizabeth Canning could see her Face at that Time?

S. Howit. She could not.

Recorder. Did she give any Reason, why she desired her not to swear against her?

S. Howit. I did not hear any Reason; after she swore to her, then she shewed herself, and pushed her Hat up.

Mr. Nares. Had Elizabeth Canning seen your Mother's Face, before the Time she spoke to the Gypsie?

S. Howit. Yes, Sir; yes, in the Room.

Mr. Nares. Did she charge your Mother?

S. Howit. No, she did not.

Mr. Nares. Did she pitch upon the Gypsie of her own accord?

S. Howit. I don't know whether she did or no.

Mr. Nares. Did you hear any body tell her to pitch upon her?

S. Howit. No, I did not.

Mr. Nares. How came you not to be examined upon the Trial of your Mother?

S. Howit. I was not subpoena'd up; I have but two Subpœna's, one before the Grand Jury, and the other here.

Recorder. What was the Reason you was not subpoena'd up on your Mother's Trial?

S. Howit. I was not; I know not the Reason.

John Larney sworn:

J. Larney. I am Husband to Mary Larney; I live at Enfield at the Two Bridges; I am a Bricklayer. I was along with Edward Allen and Giles Knight, near the House of Susannah Wells, January 8, 1753. Giles Knight lopped a Tree; he told me, if I would come over, I should have the Lops: When we were there, Edward Allen flung some Dust into the Window of the Work-shop near the Trees, to Sal Howit and Virtue Hall, who were within-side.

Mr. Gascoyne. In what Position did they stand?

J. Larney. Sal Howit looked over Virtue Hall's Head.

Mr. Gascoyne. What Conversation passed upon this?

J. Larney. Upon my Word I can't tell; there were Words passed, but I don't believe there were many; when he bulled the Dust in, they bid him be easy.

Mr. Gascoyne. Where was Knight at the Time?

J. Larney. He was then in the Tree, and I stood upon the Ground by the Tree.

Mr. Gascoyne. How long did you talk to them through the Window?

J. Larney. It might be the value of ten Minutes.

Mr. Gascoyne. Did they both look out at the Window at the same Time?

J. Larney. They did, and kept talking to us.

Mr. Gascoyne. Who had the Boughs of this Tree?

J. Larney. Mrs. Wells.

Mr. Gascoyne. Who carried them to her?

J. Larney. I don't know; I believe they were flung over the Hedge to her; I had the Arms, and she the small Lop.

Mr. Gascoyne. What did you do with them?

J. Larney. I carried them Home, and we burnt them: We had half a Dozen or a full Pot of Beer for lopping the Tree; I don't know which.

Mr. Gascoyne. Who do these Trees belong to?

J. Larney. They belong to Richard Allen. This Window looks into the Room properly called the Workshop.

Mr. Gascoyne. Is there ever another Window that looks the same Way as this does?

J. Larney. There is one above upon the Stairs going into the Garret, that belongs to the House.

Mr. Gascoyne. Are you sure it was not that Window at the Garret Stairs, that these two Women were looking out at?

J. Larney. I am very sure it was not.

Mr. Gascoyne. Nor a Cellar Window?

J. Larney. No, it was not. There were three other Windows in the Workshop, and I plaistered them up, and left two, one at the North End, and the other at the East, that they looked out at.

Mr. Gascoyne. What was this Room built for?

J. Larney. It was built for a Carpenter's Shop. Mrs. Wells's first Husband was a Carpenter.

Mr. Gascoyne. How far was this East Window from the Ground, that they were looking out at?

J. Larney. I believe it may be about seven or eight Foot.

Mr. Gascoyne. In what Condition is the Wall?

J. Larney. It is Lath and Plaister, very slight; there are a great many Holes in it; that Part towards the South you might shake down with your Hand.

Mr. Gascoyne. Was it in that Condition at the Time you were lopping the Tree?

J. Larney. I can't say that, because People have been up in it, and beating it about.

Mr. Gascoyne. Were there so many Holes in it, when you were lopping the Tree, as there are now?

J. Larney. There was not; but I did not much mind it.

Mr. Gascoyne. Which is the tallest of the two, Virtue Hall, or Sarah Howit?

J. Larney. Sarah Howit, it may be, by two Inches.

Mr. Gascoyne. Recollect, as well as you can, whether you can positively say, who was the undermost, and who the uppermost?

J. Larney. To the best of my Knowledge, Virtue Hall stood nearest.

Cross-examined.

Mr. Williams. Whereabouts do you live?

J. Larney. I live opposite Wells's House.

Mr. Williams. Have you been much at her House?

J. Larney. I have often, and all over her House?

Mr. Williams. When was it you were lopping the Trees?

J. Larney. On the 8th of January, I believe, on a Monday.

Mr. Williams. Pray, how came you to be so particular as to the Time?

J. Larney. Because the Arms of the Trees, that I carried Home, set my Chimney on Fire on the 10th, and I christened my Child on the 12th, and Mrs. Wells was at my House at the Christening.

Mr. Williams. What Quantity of this Lop might you have?

J. Larney. About half a Dozen pretty large Sticks, about as big as my Wrist. Knight was busy there, and came and begged a little Small Beer, and said, if I would come, he'd give me the Lop.

Mr. Williams. Had you seen Virtue Hall or Howit that Day before?

J. Larney. I can't say; I may forget, if I had.

Mr. Williams. Was you at the Tree, before they were at the Window?

J. Larney. They came there partly as soon as we.

Mr. Williams. Did they continue there till you had done?

J. Larney. They did partly.

Mr. Williams. How long might you be there in all?

J. Larney. It might be about ten Minutes.

Mr. Williams. Can you recollect what was said at flinging the Dirt up?

J. Larney. I believe she said, Don't, you'll break the Windows.

Mr. Williams. Who stood foremost?

J. Larney. They stood both together.

Mr. Williams. Did they stand a-breast of each other?

J. Larney. No, the Window is not big enough. Virtue Hall looked under Sal's Breast, and Sal stood over the Shoulder of Virtue Hall.

Mr. Williams. Does that Window upon the Stair-case look upon the Trees?

J. Larney. It does.

Mr. Williams. Is it directly over the other Window?

J. Larney. No, it is partly over it.

Mr. Williams. Are you sure they looked out at the lower Window?

J. Larney. I am positive of that.

Mr. Williams. When was the first Time you gave this Account, you have given here, about your having spoke to these Women on the 8th of January?

J. Larney. I never was sworn before.

Mr. Williams. Do you remember the Trial of the Gypsies?

J. Larney. I do.

Mr. Williams. When you heard of that, what did you say about Canning's being confined in that Room? Did you ever say it was true or false?

J. Larney. I have mentioned several Times the Circumstance of the Women looking out at Window.

Mr. Williams. To whom?

J. Larney. To different People.

Mr. Williams. Did you then mention the Day?

J. Larney. Yes, the 8th of January.

Mr. Williams. Did you ever mention it before Mary Squires was tried?

J. Larney. Yes.

Mr. Williams. To many Persons?

J. Larney. Yes.

Mr. Williams. Why was you not subpoena'd up?

J. Larney. My Wife was. I did not know it was very material to give an Account of it; and did not think proper to put myself forward, and I was obliged to get my Bread another Way.

Mr. Williams. Who was in the Tree?

J. Larney. Giles Knight. I was right against the Tree on the Ground.

Mr. Williams. What Year were these other Windows plaistered up in?

J. Larney. In the Year 1750; the Date of the Year is there; I put the Stones up myself.

Mr. Williams. You say the South Side is very rotten; how was it, when you were lopping the Trees?

J. Larney. I did not see it then, the Hedge parted us.

Mr. Williams. When was the first Time you saw Mary Squires?

J. Larney. The Saturday before she was fetched away, and never before, to my Knowledge.

Giles Knight sworn.

G. Knight. I live at Enfield, and have these forty-two Years. I am a Gardener by Trade.

Mr. Davy. How far do you live from Mrs. Wells's House?

G. Knight. About a Mile and a half; I was hedging near her House; I lopped some Boughs of a Tree, within about a couple of Yards from her House, at the North Corner, near a Window.

Mr. Davy. Is there a Window in the Garret of that House?

G. Knight. Yes, there is.

Mr. Davy. Was you ever in the Garret?

G. Knight. No.

Mr. Davy. Did you see any body looking out at that Window, when you was lopping the Tree?

G. Knight. No, but I did out of a Window below that; they were Virtue Hall and Sarah Howit.

Mr. Davy. What Room do they call that, at the Window of which you saw these Women?

G. Knight. I do not know; the Window is about ten Feet high.

Mr. Davy. Who were with you?

G. Knight. John Larney and Edward Allen were.

Mr. Davy. Did Virtue Hall and Sarah Howit both look out together?

G. Knight. Yes; Sarah Howit was looking over Virtue Hall.

Mr. Davy. Had you any Conversation with them?

G. Knight. I had not: I believe Edward Allen spoke to them.

Mr. Davy. Did you hear the Women speak?

G. Knight. I did; but don't know what they said; I think Allen threw a couple of Clods of Dirt in to them.

Mr. Davy. Where did he stand?

G. Knight. Just against the Window.

Mr. Davy. Who had the Lops of the Tree?

G. Knight.

G. Knight. I gave it to John Larney; he had the biggest, I don't know who had the rest. Allen was at Work with me that Day a hedging in the Field for one Mr. Allen.

Mr. Davy. Did you see Mrs. Wells at that Time?

G. Knight. Yes; we had some Beer from Cantril's; Mother Wells paid for it.

Mr. Davy. When was this?

G. Knight. This was on the 8th of January.

Mr. Davy. How do you know it to be precisely on the 8th of January?

G. Knight. Because it was on the Monday after Old Christmas-Day.

Mr. Davy. What led you to take particular Notice of the Time?

G. Knight. Mrs. Picket had a Cart, loaded with Chalk, broke down on Old Christmas-Day, but it came Home that Day.

Mr. Davy. Have you seen any of the other Witnesses, since they have been examined?

G. Knight. No, I have seen none of them.

Mr. Davy. What Time of the Day was it, when the two Women were looking out at the Window?

G. Knight. It was in the Morning I believe, or some Time in the Forenoon.

Mr. Davy. Do you remember the Trial of the old Gypsey here?

G. Knight. Yes, I was here; I was subpœna'd on Mother Wells's Side.

Mr. Davy. What prevented your appearing in Court as a Witness?

G. Knight. Because I was not called; I was in the Yard.

Mr. Davy. Was it in your Power to have come in, if you had a Mind?

G. Knight. I did not know for that: I did not know the Way of it.

Mr. Davy. Was you ever a Witness in any Cause before now?

G. Knight. No, I never was, till I went before the Grand Jury upon this.

Mr. Davy. How large was that Window, at which the Women were looking out?

G. Knight. I believe, big enough for me to get out at.

Mr. Davy. How big is the Garret Window?

G. Knight. That is bigger than this below.

Mr. Davy. Is the Garret Window in a direct Line over the other?

G. Knight. I don't know that.

Cross-examined.

Mr. Moreton. Was that directly over the other Window?

G. Knight. No; that above was directly over-against the Tree I lopped.

Mr. Moreton. How many Boughs did you lop off?

G. Knight. Six or seven.

Mr. Moreton. Who had it?

G. Knight. John Larney.

Mr. Moreton. What Wood was it?

G. Knight. It was Elm.

Mr. Moreton. Should you have been afraid of setting your Chimney on Fire with it?

Mr. Davy. What Weather was it?

G. Knight. It was frosty Weather.

Edward Allen sworn.

E. Allen. I live at Enfield High-way.

Mr. Willes. What Business do you follow?

E. Allen. I am a Costermonger; I go a hedging and ditching: Richard Allen is my Brother: He has a Field near Mother Wells's House: Giles Knight and I were stopping the Gaps round it on the 8th of January: There is a Tree that hangs over a Lane by her House; we cut some Boughs off it; John Larney was there; he came to have the biggest of the Wood, which he had, and the rest was thrown over to Mother Wells's. She gave us a full Pot of Beer for doing it. The Beer was fetched from Mr. Cantril's, at the Time Giles Knight lopped the Tree. I saw Virtue Hall and Sarah Howit looking out at a little Window; I tossed up several Chumps of Dirt to them; the Place they were in was a Sort of a Leantoo, on the back Part of the House.

Mr. Willes. How high is that Window from the Ground?

E. Allen. It may be about ten Feet to the Bottom of the Window.

Mr. Willes. Do you remember what Words passed between you?

E. Allen. No, I do not.

Mr. Willes. Is there ever another Window belonging to that House, which looks out as that does?

E. Allen. There is one at the Top of the House partly, that may be twenty Foot above the other, where they were.

Mr. Willes. Was you ever in this Room in the Leantoo?

E. Allen. Yes, I have twice since this Talk of the Girl's being confined there.

Mr. Willes. What Sort of a Room is it?

E. Allen. It is a long Room, with some Hay and Stuff in it.

Mr. Willes. Do you remember the Trial of Squires and Mother Wells?

E. Allen. I do.

Mr. Willes. How came you not to come up then, and give Evidence?

E. Allen. I was not ordered to come; I had no Subpœna.

Mr. Willes. When did you first tell this Circumstance of lopping the Tree?

E. Allen. I told it, when I was asked the Question.

Mr. Willes. Have you mentioned these Circumstances before Squires's Trial?

E. Allen. I have several Times.

Cross-examined.

Mr. Nares. Were they both at the Window?

E. Allen. They were.

Mr. Nares. Can't you remember what passed between you?

E. Allen. Upon my Word, I do not know.

Mr. Nares. Had she said any Thing to you to provoke you to throw Dirt?

E. Allen. No; we did not throw it in Malice.

Mr. Nares. Was you acquainted with them before?

E. Allen. I was.

Mr. Nares. How did they stand at the Window?

E. Allen. They stood one by the Side of the other.

Mr. Nares. Did you see Squires and Wells taken away?

E. Allen. I did; I saw them get into the Cart.

Mr. Nares. Did you mention this of seeing them at the Window then?

E. Allen.

E. Allen. I did.

Mr. Nares. To whom?

E. Allen. I cannot tell to what Person particularly; it was to several that were in the Room.

Mr. Nares. Did you go before Justice Tossmaker?

E. Allen. No, I did not.

Recorder. Did you hear at that Time, that Elizabeth Canning was so long in that Room?

E. Allen. I did.

Recorder. Was you not surprized, when you heard she was confined there?

E. Allen. I was surprized; and said, if she was there, I thought we should have heard something of her, and if I had, I should presently have fetched her out.

Mr. Nares. Whether, at the Time you heard Canning had said she was confined in that Room from the 1st of January to the Time of her making her Escape, did you tell this Story, that you had been at the Window lopping a Tree?

E. Allen. Yes, I did.

John Cantril sworn.

J. Cantril. I live not above a hundred Yards from Wells's House; I keep a Public House: Giles Knight and Edward Allen came to my House on Monday the 8th of January; they said they had done but an indifferent Day's Work, for they had been at Play with Mother Wells's Daughter, out at the back Window, throwing Clods of Dirt in at the Casement, and they had been lopping of Trees, and a hedging.

Mr. Gascoyne. What is your Reason for being particular to the Day?

J. Cantril. They came to Breakfast; they wanted to know if I had got any small Meat; I said, I should roast a large Piece on the Morrow, which I did, it being the 9th; I seldom roast less than five Stone, to give to my Customers for Christmas Beef: I have done it for Years: Mother Wells used to buy her Liquor of me sometimes.

Mr. Gascoyne. When did you first see the old Gypsey?

J. Cantril. I never saw her till that Morning she was taken up; then she came into my House to light her Pipe: I think I saw her Son the Wednesday before that; he came into my House very sharply, and said, Let's have a Halfpenny-worth of Gin.

Mr. Gascoyne. Had you ever seen him before?

J. Cantril. No, nor but once since.

Mr. Gascoyne. Do you know any Thing about any Hay of Mrs. Wells's?

J. Cantril. I saw the Hay loaded in the Field where it grewed, by the New-River Side; I was then a fishing, and I saw it unloaded at this very Window, that this young Woman says she got out at. [He looks at the Model.] That is the Window at the End of it.

Mr. Gascoyne. What Hay-harvest was this Hay brought in?

J. Cantril. It was the Hay-harvest before the last.

Mr. Gascoyne. Do you know the Stable?

J. Cantril. I do very well.

Mr. Gascoyne. Is there a Loft over that?

J. Cantril. Yes, there is.

Mr. Gascoyne. Can you assign any Reason, why the Hay was not put up there?

J. Cantril. There used to come Bargemen and others, that would rob her when she put the Hay there, therefore she put it in this Place to prevent that.

Cross-examined.

Mr. Williams. How many Loads did you see loaded?

J. Cantril. I saw but one Load; it was a little Cart, and one Horse to draw it.

Mr. Williams. Had she a Horse?

J. Cantril. She had; but it was the Man's Horse that drawed his Cart, to the best of my Memory.

Mr. Williams. How much Hay might there be of it?

J. Cantril. It is possible there might be half a score Trusses.

Mr. Williams. What Sort of a Window is it, that they put the Hay in at?

J. Cantril. One Part of it was Glass, and the other boarded over.

Mr. Williams. Was it so when they were pitching the Hay in?

J. Cantril. I can't say how it was then.

Mr. Williams. Was the Board on the Side of the Glass, or over it, or under it?

J. Cantril. One half to the Upright in the Middle was boarded, the other Side Glass, to the best of my Memory.

Mr. Davy. Did you know Natus and his Wife?

J. Cantril. I did; they used to lodge at Mrs. Wells's; but I can't say how long; but I think they had been there, backwards and forwards, about three Months; the Woman used to come to our House for Gin.

Mr. Davy. Do you know in which Room they lay?

J. Cantril. No, I do not.

Ezra Whiffin sworn.

E. Whiffin. I live at the White-Hart and Crown at Enfield-Wash, a Public House: I was told by a Glazier, he knowing I wanted some Irons to a Sign, that Susannah Wells had a Sign sawed down in the Rebellion Time, and she had the Irons to dispose of; I went to her House on the 18th of January 1753, and asked her; she said, she could find them; she and I went together through the Kitchen into a Room called the Lumber-room; it had formerly been a Workshop, or a Shuffle-board Room; it is a long Room; it is about seven or eight Steps up out of the Kitchen.

Mr. Davy. Did you take any Notice what was in the Room?

E. Whiffin. I can't say I did; but Judith Natus was in Bed in that Room upon some Hay, with a Sheet over it. The Bed was on the right Hand going in. As we were looking about for the Irons, Mrs. Wells said, Now I recollect myself, it lies under the Feet of this poor Creature's Bed: We looked and found them in a Piece of Wood there. Then Fortune Natus's Wife raised herself up upon her Elbow, and said, What are you going to do, or What are you about? Mrs. Wells said, We are only looking for a Piece of Wood. I took it, and set it upon an End, and said, Well, Girl, what must you have? She said, I will not sell the Wood, it is of Use to this poor Creature's Bed; the Irons I'll have a Shilling for: I gave it her directly, and said, I have a Son below Stairs, if you'll let him take it Home, and take the Irons out, he shall bring the Wood again; he took it, and carried it Home, and took the Hooks out, and carried the Wood back again, and there it is now.

Mr. Davy. What are the Circumstances by which you recollect the Time?

E. Whiffin. I owed Mr. Proffer, a Brewer, at the White Lion, Ratcliff-Highway, 11 l. 7 s. and on the 8th of January Alexander Livingstone joined in a Note with me; it was upon Demand, but he gave me some Time to pay it; and I was going to borrow five Guineas, to enable me to pay it, of Robert Mitcham, at the Globe at Wormleigh; so I went directly there, as soon as I had sent my Son Home with the Wood to take the Irons out; but he was gone to Cambridge; so I came back and went to London that same Day, and carried what Money I had, and that satisfied the Person, and in about three Weeks Time I paid the Remainder.

Mr. Davy. To whom was the Note made payable?

E. Whiffin. To Bomar Lovit, at the Iron-Gate, Tower-Hill; he is an Officer; he arrested me on the 8th of January, on Mr. Proffer's Suit.

Mr. Davy. Are you sure this was on the 8th of January?

E. Whiffin. As I hope to be saved, that was the Day; I have the Note here.

Mr. Davy. Produce it, (which he did, and the Note was read;) Alexander Livingstone and I signed this the Day it bears Date.

Mr. Davy. Who was in the Room at that Time besides Mrs. Wells, Judith Natus, and you?

E. Whiffin. No body else as I know of.

Mr. Davy. Did you look about the Room?

E. Whiffin. I did, and saw no body else; I removed some of the Hay, and should have removed a great deal more, had she not found it.

Mr. Davy. A great deal of Hay! How much was there?

E. Whiffin. I believe there might be five hundred Weight, that is, ten Trusses; the Top of it lay as high as I could reach.

Cross-examined.

Mr. Moreton. What is the Glazier's Name?

E. Whiffin. William Metcalf; he painted my Sign, that is, only the Crown.

Mr. Moreton. Was it put up in January?

E. Whiffin. No, it was not until February.

Mr. Moreton. When did he mention these Sign-irons to you?

E. Whiffin. I don't remember that; but it was before the 18th of January.

Mr. Moreton. When was your Sign brought Home?

E. Whiffin. I don't know whether it was in January or February.

Mr. Moreton. Did he mention these Irons before the Sign was brought Home?

E. Whiffin. My Sign stood in my House a Month, I believe, before it was put up; so I cannot tell whether it was before or after.

Mr. Moreton. What Time did you keep Christmas?

E. Whiffin. I went by the New Stile, for I dropped the Old Stile, and hope all other People did.

Mr. Moreton. What Day of the Week was the 18th of January?

E. Whiffin. It was on a Thursday.

Court. Consider that.

E. Whiffin. My Lord, it is true.

Mr. Moreton. Do you know Mr. Harrington?

E. Whiffin. I do.

Mr. Moreton. Had you ever any Talk with him about this Matter?

E. Whiffin. I talked with him about the Time I was in this Room.

Mr. Moreton. When did you talk with him?

E. Whiffin. I don't know the Time; but it was not my Business to tell every body what I knew, but I answered him as I thought proper.

Mr. Moreton. Don't you know what Week it was when you talked with him?

E. Whiffin. No, I do not; I don't know within a Week or a Fortnight of the Time; he asked me Abundance of Questions, and I was not in a Mind to resolve him; I thought he was not a proper Man to ask me Questions, and I answered him just as I pleased.

Mr. Moreton. What Month was it in?

E. Whiffin. I do not know.

Mr. Moreton. What Year was it in?

E. Whiffin. It was some Time in the Year 1753.

Mr. Moreton. How long is it ago?

E. Whiffin. It is above a Year ago.

Mr. Moreton. Was you asked by any body, whether you could fix the Time you went into the Room?

E. Whiffin. I don't remember any body asked me that; but if they did, it was a silly Question.

Mr. Moreton. What was you asked by Mr. Harrington?

E. Whiffin. He talked a great deal more than what became him: He asked me, what Day of the Year? I told him it was the 18th of January, and I never told any body any Time else.

Mr. Moreton. Are you sure of that?

E. Whiffin. I am.

Mr. Moreton. Did you say any thing of seeing any body else in the Room at that Time?

E. Whiffin. I don't know whether I did or not.

Mr. Moreton. Or that Judith Natus was in the Room?

E. Whiffin. I might.

Mr. Moreton. Did he ask you, if you saw the Woman's Face?

E. Whiffin. I told him, I did not force my Discourse to him; I told him, I saw Judith Natus in Bed; he asked several Questions, but I resolved him no farther; I said, I saw her Face, and that I knew her plainly.

Mr. Moreton. Was you asked whether she spoke to you?

E. Whiffin. No, I don't remember that.

Mr. Moreton. Do you remember you said you did not hear her speak?

E. Whiffin. No, I don't remember that.

Mr. Moreton. Was you at the Trial of Mary Squires?

E. Whiffin. I was subpoena'd up, but was not admitted in.

Mr. Moreton. Did you try to come in?

E. Whiffin. There was a Constable in the Yard that denied my coming into the Yard for a good while, and so he did Fortune Natus's Wife a good while.

Mr. Moreton. Was you present, when they were denied?

E. Whiffin. I was not.

Mr. Moreton. Have you been examined before?

E. Whiffin. I have been examined by my Lord-Mayor, and gave the same Account as now.

Mr.

Mr. Davy. Look at the Prisoner; did you ever see her before?

E. Whiffin. No, I never saw her Face before in my Life, as I know of.

Mr. Davy. Upon your Oath, do you believe she was in that Room?

E. Whiffin. Upon my Oath, I did not see her in the Room.

Mr. Davy. Upon your Oath, is she the Woman that lay in that Bed?

E. Whiffin. Upon my Oath, she is not; I have made Oath of that before.

Q. from a Juryman. Where did you buy the Sign?

E. Whiffin. I bought it of Mrs. Wells, but it was a good while before; it was about three Weeks before Christmas was Twelve-months.

Alexander Livingstone sworn.

Mr. Willes. Look at this Note; is this your Hand-writing?

A. Livingstone. My Name at the Bottom is.

Mr. Willes. When did you sign it?

A. Livingstone. I think I signed the Day it bears Date: Ezra Whiffin signed the same Day; he was then arrested by Bomar Lovit.

Mr. Willes. Was there any Mention made of dating it before or after?

A. Livingstone. No, none.

Mr. Willes. Who wrote the Body of the Note?

A. Livingstone. Bomar Lovit did.

Mr. Willes. Did you sign it the same Day it was drawn?

A. Livingstone. I did, at the House of Whiffin at Enfield-Wash; I was a Boarder with him then.

Mr. Willes. How long after Christmas was it that you signed it?

A. Livingstone. It was signed directly after it was wrote, the Day it bears Date; I have no Reason to believe to the contrary. (The Note is shown to the Jury.)

John Whiffin sworn.

J. Whiffin. Ezra Whiffin is my Father. I have been Coachman to a Gentleman at Hertford ever since February 14, 1753; before that I was at my Father's from Old Christmas-Day; I went with my Father to Mrs. Wells's House on the 18th of January, New Stile; he was going to the Globe at Wormleigh, to Mr. Mitcham. When we went into Mrs. Wells's, she was gone over the Way; we stayed there till she came in; then my Father and she went and fetched that Piece of Wood, and I carried it Home and took the Hooks out, and brought the Wood back to her House again.

Mr. Gascoyne. In which Room did you stay while they went for the Wood?

J. Whiffin. I stayed in the first Room on the left-hand Side.

Mr. Gascoyne. Did you see your Father and Mrs. Wells go into that Room where that Wood was?

J. Whiffin. No; I did not go out of the Room where I was, till they came to me again.

Mr. Gascoyne. When did you return the Piece of Wood again?

J. Whiffin. I did in three or four Days.

Mr. Gascoyne. Did you know of the Debt your Father owed Mr. Proffer?

J. Whiffin. I did; and Mr. Livingstone entered his Hand to the Note to pay it to Mr. Lovit.

Cross-examined.

Mr. Nares. Was you at Home with your Father from the Old Christmas-Day, to the 14th of February, 1753?

J. Whiffin. I was.

Mr. Nares. Did you see Mr. Metcalf at your Father's in that Time?

J. Whiffin. I did.

Mr. Nares. Did he paint a Sign for your Father?

J. Whiffin. He did.

Mr. Nares. When was that brought Home?

J. Whiffin. It was brought Home before I was at my Father's; I went there on Old Christmas-Day; it stood then in the Parlour.

Elizabeth Long sworn.

E. Long. I am Daughter to Mrs. Wells; I have been a married Woman; my Husband is dead; my maiden Name was Wells; I used very frequently; every Day in the Year 1753, to go to my Mother's; I lived but three Houses from her.

Mr. Davy. Was you at her House in the Month of January in that Year?

E. Long. I believe I was there every Day in that Month, and all over the House, excepting the Garrets.

Mr. Davy. Who lived in the House the first and second Weeks of January?

E. Long. My Mother, and my Sister, and Virtue Hall, and Fortune Natus and his Wife.

Mr. Davy. When did you see Fortune Natus and his Wife there?

E. Long. I had seen them there from before January; they were there, from first to last, about ten Weeks.

Mr. Davy. Did you use to go up into this Hay-loft?

E. Long. I have for Judith Natus, for her to come to my House to help me to do what I wanted to be done: I have frequently gone into that Room to her; she used to lie there; I have seen her and her Husband in Bed in the Month of January there.

Mr. Davy. Did you ever see any body else in that Room, in the Month of January?

E. Long. No, Sir.

Mr. Davy. Look at that young Woman there, (meaning Elizabeth Canning.)

E. Long. I never saw her there; she never was at my Mother's House, till she came down, and they were taken up.

Mr. Davy. Do you remember the Furniture of that Room?

E. Long. Yes, I do; the Chimney is on the right Hand going up Stairs, at the Foot of Fortune Natus's Bed.

Mr. Davy. Was there a Grate in it?

E. Long. No, there never was in this World; I have remembered it twenty-two Years; there was a great Nest of Drawers, three Women's Saddles, and a Man's Saddle, a Tub that my Mother kept her Chaff in for the Horse, and a great deal of Hay, and a Drawer of Pollard for the Sow and Pigs.

Mr. Davy. Who fed the Horse, Sow and Pigs, during that Time?

E. Long. I know I went in, in January, to fetch some Pollard out of the Drawer, to feed the Pigs;

Pigs; but I went in so frequently, I can't tell the particular Days.

Mr. Davy. Are you sure there were three Women's Saddles and a Man's Saddle in the Room?

E. Long. Indeed, there were.

Mr. Davy. Look at this Pitcher.

E. Long. It looks like my Mother's Pitcher, but I will not be positive; she had such a one with a broken Mouth, which she used every Day.

Mr. Davy. Did you see it in the Month of January?

E. Long. Yes, I have seen our People fetch Water with it in January.

Mr. Davy. Look at that Bed-gown.

E. Long. I never saw this in my Life, till I was at my Lord-Mayor's; my Mother, my Sister, nor I, never wore it; it is none belonging to our Family; my Mother has never a Bed-gown, as I know of; there was no body at my Mother's House had a Bed-gown, that I am sure of.

Mr. Davy. Look at this Handkerchief; do you know it?

E. Long. No, I do not; I never saw that till at my Lord-Mayor's.

Mr. Davy. When did Mary Squires come to your Mother's House?

E. Long. She came on a Wednesday, and was there, from first to last, a Week and a Day, before she was taken up, which was on a Thursday.

Mr. Davy. Had you ever seen her before?

E. Long. No, never in my Life; if I had, I must have known it; her Face is a very remarkable one.

Mr. Davy. Do you remember her Family that came with her?

E. Long. There were two Daughters and a Son; the old Woman called one Lucy, the other Polly, and the Son George.

Mr. Davy. Was you in the House, when Elizabeth Canning came down there to take your Mother up?

E. Long. I was coming out of the Parlour, when she was carried into the Kitchen; I had heard a great Disturbance, and I went to my Mother's House, after the Gentlemen were got there.

Mr. Davy. Was the Door going up into the Workshop open, when she sat upon the Dresser?

E. Long. I think it was.

Mr. Davy. Was she removed to any other Part of the Kitchen?

E. Long. Never, as I know of.

Mr. Davy. Did any body ask her, if she knew that Room?

E. Long. Not as I heard; when she was brought into the Parlour, my Mother, Mrs. Squires, her two Daughters and Son, and Virtue Hall, and my Sister, were sitting round the Fire; she pointed to Mary Squires, and said, That is the Woman that cut my Stays off; she was sitting on the right Hand of the Chimney-place.

Mr. Davy. Could you see Squires's Face then?

E. Long. The Gentlemen were all before me; I could not see her Face, and she did not turn her Face, as I saw; she had a Hat and Cloak on, and a Clout on her Head, instead of a Cap, and sat holding her Head down.

Mr. Davy. Was she smoking a Pipe?

E. Long. I can't tell whether she was or not.

Mr. Davy. Did she sit upright?

E. Long. I think she did not; she is not an upright Woman. Canning spoke twice before Mary Squires heard her. One of her Daughters got up, (I don't know which it was,) and said, Mother, the young Woman says you cut her Stays off. Then she got up, and said to the young Woman, Young Woman, you are mistaken; I am a very remarkable Woman, and have got the Evil in my Face, and you may know me by Night or by Day. She shewed her Face by putting her Hand up to her Clout on each Side to make her Face bare.

Mr. Davy. Did you hear the young Woman mention the Time of the Robbery?

E. Long. I can't say I did, or any body else.

Mr. Davy. Did George, or Lucy, then say where they were on the 1st of January?

E. Long. Not then, as I remember.

Mr. Davy. Did you come as a Witness, when your Mother was tried with Mrs. Squires?

E. Long. I came into the Old-Bailey Yard, and the People would not let me come in; there were other Witnesses; I subpoena'd them myself.

Mr. Davy. How many Witnesses did you serve with Subpœna's to attend at that Trial?

E. Long. Eight: I had the Subpœna's of a Lawyer, Mr. Talmastr; he lives in Red-Lion-Street: I delivered one to Fortune Natus, and another to his Wife, one to Mary Larney, one to Giles Knight; I can't recollect them all: Somebody knowed me to be Mother Wells's Daughter, and they pushed me out, and would not let me come in; they frightened me very much, and I went back again, and up two or three Pair of Stairs in a House in the Old-Bailey, and heard the Mob cry out, Mother Wells's Daughter!

Cross-examined.

Mr. Williams. Who was with you at that Time?

E. Long. Mary Larney and Giles Knight were with me; I saw them go into the Yard with me; I cannot say whereabouts they were.

Mr. Williams. Did John Larney go into the Yard?

E. Long. I did not subpoena him.

Mr. Williams. Are you sure Giles Knight was refused being in the Yard?

E. Long. I am not.

Mr. Williams. How long had you been parted from your Mother?

E. Long. Not long; I had not been married quite a Year, and I lived at Home a quarter of a Year after I was married.

Mr. Williams. Was you away a Month?

E. Long. I am sure I was not; I lived in that House three quarters of a Year, and don't know I missed a Day in all that Time going to my Mother's House, and used to go into the Workshop sometimes for Ashes to carry Home for my own Use.

Mr. Williams. What January do you speak of?

E. Long. I mean that January the young Woman says; I think it is above a Year ago.

Mr. Williams. What Month is this?

E. Long. I can't justly tell of a sudden.

Mr. Williams. Is it May, or November, or December?

E. Long.

E. Long. May, I think.

Mr. Williams. Was you before Justice Tasb-maker, when they were carried there?

E. Long. They did not take me away, and I did not go there at all.

Mr. Davy. Was you often at this Workshop, within a Week, or Fortnight, or three Weeks before your Mother was taken up?

E. Long. I was there every Day; I used to go frequently to Breakfast there.

John Howit sworn.

J. Howit. I am a Carpenter; Mrs. Wells is my Mother; I have lived at Enfield-Wash about seven Years; I used to go to her House now and then: I was at Work at Broman-Green, about seven Miles from thence; having done Work, I was discharged from that Place on the 19th of January; about Six o'Clock at Night I came to my Mother's House.

Mr. Willes. Do you know the Hay-loft?

J. Howit. I know the Workshop, and was in it on the 19th, 20th, and 21st of January.

Mr. Willes. What led you to go there?

J. Howit. My Mother sent me up to serve the Sow; and I had brought my Tools, and lodged them in that very Room; and on Sunday the 20th I went to fetch my Axe and Saw, to cut some Wood for my Wife.

Mr. Willes. Was any body in the Room then?

J. Howit. Yes, Fortune Natus and his Wife were.

Mr. Willes. What Business had they there?

J. Howit. They lay in that Room.

Mr. Willes. How do you know they lay in the Room?

J. Howit. Because I saw them in Bed, or what they call a Bed; it was on the right-hand Side going up; they had Sacks to lay their Heads on, and what they thought fit to cover them.

Mr. Willes. Had they a Pillow, or Bolster?

J. Howit. I can't say they had.

Mr. Willes. Look at Elizabeth Canning; did you ever see her there in that Room?

J. Howit. No, I never did.

Canning. I never saw him before, as I know of.

Cross-examined.

Mr. Moreton. You say you wanted your Axe and Saw to cut Wood for your Wife: Where does she live?

J. Howit. We live just by the ten-mile Stone, about a Quarter of a Mile from my Mother's.

Mr. Moreton. Did you go Home first to your House, or to your Mother's, on the Saturday?

J. Howit. I went to my Mother's first, and there I left my Tools.

Mr. Moreton. Which is nearest your Master's, where you came from?

J. Howit. My Mother's is.

Mr. Moreton. How came you to leave your Tools at your Mother's?

J. Howit. By reason that was nearest, and I was tired of them.

Mr. Moreton. What Time of the Morning of the Sunday was it you went for them?

J. Howit. About Nine o'Clock.

Mr. Moreton. Are you sure you spoke to Fortune Natus and his Wife, as they were in Bed in that Room?

J. Howit. I am positive of it.

Mr. Moreton. How came you not to be here, when your Mother was tried?

VOL. X.

J. Howit. Because I was never asked any Questions before, nor had I a Subpœna at all.

Mr. Moreton. Had you heard that this Girl said she was confined in this Room?

J. Howit. Yes, but I can't say how long.

Mr. Moreton. Then how came it, you did not come and give Testimony against it?

J. Howit. I was asked no Questions, and I was not to come without; I was up here, but the Mob would not let us come in.

Mr. Moreton. Did you design to come in as a Witness?

J. Howit. Yes, I did; we went to Mr. Legg's in Greene-Arbour-Court, and had like to have been knocked on the Head, them that had got Subpœna's, and them that had not.

Mr. Moreton. Who was your Mother's Attorney at that Time?

J. Howit. Mr. Talmash.

Mr. Moreton. Did you ever go to him, and tell him about your coming Home, and going into that Room three Days together in January?

J. Howit. No, I never did.

Q. from a Juryman. We should be glad to know, whether that Drawer was in the Chest of Drawers, or a single Drawer of itself?

J. Howit. It is one of them Drawers, but it was not in it; it was swelled, and would not go in.

Robert White sworn.

R. White. I live at Enfield, and am a Day-labourer; I have been at Mother Wells's House a great many Times.

Mr. Gascoyne. Was you there in the Year 1753?

R. White. I was, in Old Christmas, and New Christmas too; I was there commonly four or five Times a Week.

Mr. Gascoyne. What Day in January was you there?

R. White. I am not so well learned to give an Account of the Day of the Month.

Mr. Gascoyne. What Christmas do you mean?

R. White. I mean last Christmas was Twelve-month: Natus had quartered at my Brother's, and I knowing him, used to go and keep him Company, and used to stay there sometimes till Eight or Nine o'Clock, and used to come as soon as I had done my Labour, at about Seven.

Mr. Gascoyne. Which Room had you used to be together in?

R. White. I used to be in the Kitchen, at the right Hand going into the House.

Mr. Gascoyne. Do you know the Door that goes into the Hay-loft?

R. White. Yes, I do; it is the Room that Natus and his Wife lay in, but I was not in it the Time they lay there.

Mr. Gascoyne. Did you ever see that Door open that goes up into the Hay-loft?

R. White. Yes, I have, and have seen Fortune Natus and his Wife both go in, and come out a gain; I remember they did on a Sunday Morning in particular.

Mr. Gascoyne. Have you ever seen any body else go into that Room?

R. White. No, Sir.

Mr. Gascoyne. How long might you keep going to this House?

R. White. I believe it might be almost two Months, or nine Weeks.

Mr. Gascoyne. Was you ever in the Kitchen any Time when Mary Squires was there?

R. White. No, I never was.

Mr. Gascoyne. Do you know the Day of the Month she came there?

R. White. No, I do not.

Cross-examined.

Mr. Nares. Did you ever see Mary Squires?

R. White. I saw her go by the Barn where I labour, about four or five Days before she was taken up; but I did not see her Face then.

Mr. Nares. Did you ever see any of the young ones?

R. White. I saw one of the Daughters once go into the Parlour one Sunday.

John Donoval sworn.

J. Donoval. I surveyed the Room (Elizabeth Canning said she was confined in) on Easter-Eve, the 13th of April last.

Mr. Davy. Give the Court the Dimensions of it.

J. Donoval. It is thirty-five Foot, three Inches and a half, from Quarter to Quarter in the Inside of the Room upon the Floor; by nine Foot eight Inches.

Mr. Davy. Is this, that is produced here, a true Model of it, according to its Proportion?

J. Donoval. This Model is exactly in Proportion with it, and there is the Scalé upon the Roof. (There was the Hole for the Jack-line, a Window on the opposite Side to the Stairs, another at the End, and a Chimney at one Corner, a Chest of Drawers, and Saddles, and Jack-pullies, drawn on the Wall, &c.)

George Talmasb sworn.

G. Talmasb. I having some Knowledge of Mrs. Wells, and hearing of this extraordinary Story, I went out of Curiosity to Bridewell to see her: When I came there, she addressed herself to me, and desired I would be concerned for her, as her Attorney; I did not care to be concerned in it: After that, her Daughter came to my House, with a List of Witnesses to the Number of eight, and desired me to take out Subpœna's for them. I sued them out; I remember one was for Fortune Natus, another for Judith Natus, and another for Ezra Whiffin; I can't pretend to tell all the rest of their Names now. I delivered them to the Woman, and gave her Directions to serve them.

Mr. Willes. When that Trial came on, can you tell why those People did not appear?

G. Talmasb. No, no more than what they told me: I was concerned no more in it.

Elizabeth Mayle sworn.

E. Mayle. I am a Midwife; I brought this Girl, Elizabeth Canning, into the World, and laid her Mother of more Children; I am intimately acquainted in the Family.

Mr. Davy. Was you at Mrs. Canning's House in February last was Twelve-month?

E. Mayle. I was in the Beginning of February; I saw the Mother; and the Daughter also.

Mr. Davy. Can you mention the Day?

E. Mayle. It was the 2d or 3d; it was the first Week, I am sure.

Mr. Davy. Where does she live?

E. Mayle. She lives in Aldermanbury Postern; the Daughter was then lying on a Bed in her Mother's House.

Mr. Davy. Had you any Conversation with the Mother, in the Daughter's Presence, about the Daughter's Misfortunes?

E. Mayle. I had.

Mr. Davy. Was the Daughter awake?

E. Mayle. She was: I had Business by the House, and I went in, in order to inquire, if she had heard of her Daughter Elizabeth. As soon as I came in, Mrs. Canning said, Madam, O Lord; Madam, have you heard of my Misfortune? I said, I had read it in the News-papers in the Month of January, and asked her if she had heard of her Daughter; she said, Yes, she is come Home as naked as she was born.

Mr. Davy. Are you sure she mentioned these Words, Naked as she was born?

E. Mayle. I am positive of it: I immediately said, O Lord! what, without a Shift on? She said, No, she had a Shift on. Then I asked her, where her Daughter was? She said, behind me; I turned about to the Girl, and said, Lord bless me! Bet, how came this about? She said, I was coming over Moorfields one Night, and two Men came up to me, one took hold of my two Hands and pulled me along, and the other robbed me: I said, Of what, Child? She said, Of half a Guinea and three Shillings and some Half-pence, my Gown and my Cloak. I said, My Dear, don't trouble yourself about these Things, for God Almighty will raise you Friends to get you more; I hope the Men did not use you ill, so as to debauch you: She said, she could not tell, for she had her Fits. Said I, What did they do with you after they had robbed you? She said, They carried me to Enfield-Wash. I asked her, where Enfield-Wash was? She said, Out of Town. I asked, what they did with her there? She said, they carried her into a House, and as soon as she came in, there was an old Gypsey took a Knife and cut her Stays off, and put her Hand into her Pocket and pulled a Farthing out, and put it in again, and hit her a Slap on the Face, and called her Bitch, and bid her go up Stairs. I said to her Mother, Mrs. Canning, have you got this Shift your Child went abroad in? Sure never was such a Case before. I said, I'll tell you if any body has debauched your Child, if you'll let me see it. She immediately reached it, and I looked at it, and said, Mrs. Canning, is this the Shift your Daughter went away in? She said, Yes: Then I said, I supposed it was washed since she had been gone: She said, No, how could that be? For she was in a Room where no body came to her.

Mr. Moreton. Was the Prisoner present, and heard all this?

E. Mayle. She was. We stood by her Bed-side. She said, she had been confined in a Room, where she lived upon nothing but Bread and Water. I said, I think the Shift is too clean, except you have had it washed since she came Home. She said, No, it had not been washed. I said, Then, my Dear, you may make yourself easy, for I can see by it, that no Man has debauched your Child; but it is uncommonly clean to be wore so long. Then the Mother said, she never had a Stool all the Time she was gone: Then, I said, she must have a Glyster given her; but I can assure you no Man has debauched your Child in this Shift, unless it has been washed since. She again said, No, it had not.

Mr. Davy. Did the Shift appear to be dirty enough to have been wore three Weeks and some Days?

E. Mayle.

E. Mayle. No, it did not; there were three little Spots of Excrement, about the Bigness of the upper Part of my Thumb: I don't think it was dirty enough to have been wore three Weeks by any clean Woman that ever sat still in a Room, because every Woman must go to Bed and get up; and by sitting by the Fire the Dust will arise.

Mr. Davy. Do you think it had been wore three Weeks?

E. Mayle. I don't think it had.

Mr. Davy. Did you take Notice of the Bottom of it, whether it was draggled?

E. Mayle. I did; I took particular Notice of that; I saw no Dirt there; there was a Hole on the right Side of the Shift down one of the Guffets, but there was no draggled Tail, not at all.

Mr. Davy. How long did it appear to have been wore?

E. Mayle. It seemed as if it had been wore a Week, or such a Matter; I can't tell how long it had been wore.

Mr. Davy. Had you been acquainted much with her?

E. Mayle. I had been acquainted with the Girl from her Birth.

Mr. Davy. How long do you think she might have been in making that Shift so dirty as it was?

E. Mayle. About a Week.

Mr. Davy. Did the Girl herself say any Thing to you on this Occasion?

E. Mayle. Yes; she told me how she had been used, and the Gypsey had cut off her Stays, as I said before. I left her Mother an Order to give her a Glyster: She said, will you examine her Body, to see if she has been hurted? I said, No; I never was before the Face of a Judge in the Old-Bailey in my Life, and I did not care to be in dirty Work: Going away, she said to her little Girl, Go and call Mrs. Woodward over the Way to me: When she came in, Mrs. Canning said to me, Will you say what you said before? I said, Yes, Mrs. Canning, with all the Pleasure in Life; if this Shift has not been washed, I'll make an Oath before a Judge no Man had Copulation with her. I went away; I had proposed to bring a Doctor. I returned in about half an Hour; I went to the Bed-side to the Girl, and said, Bet, I was very sorry I did not ask you whether your Feet were not very sore in walking barefoot: She said, No, they are not; I had my Shoes and Stockings on, they did not take them from me. This I look upon to be from the Mother's Agony of Mind, that made her say she was come Home naked. I said, What more had you on? She said, My Under-petticoat, and an old Bed-gown, which I found in a Corner of the Room: Then I said, Good-b'ye Child; and went away.

Mr. Davy. Did the Mother seem to be pleased or displeased at what you said?

E. Mayle. She fell down on her Knees, and held up her Hands and said, Thank God, my Daughter is not a Whore.

Mr. Davy. Was her Mother angry with you for any Thing you said or did, then or afterwards?

E. Mayle. She was not then; but she was two Days after, when I came there, as I did not go the next Day before the Doctor, as I proposed. Then there were with her two young Women and an elderly Woman: I said, Mrs. Canning, I am come to ask if Bet has had a Stool? She said, No. I said, Then she must die, without you have given her Glysters, and she has Relief that Way; and asked her, why she did not give it her? She said, she had. I asked her, if any Thing came off with it? She said, Yes, a little: I said, If nothing more came off, she is a dead Girl, and all the World can't save her Life: I went and took hold on the Girl's right Hand with my left, and said, Now she seems as cold as Death, and if she has no Passage, she must die, and all the World can't save her.

Mr. Moreton. Was the Daughter there when the Mother was angry?

E. Mayle. Yes, Sir. A young Woman in the Room said, How can you frighten the Girl out of her Life, to tell her she must die, when she has no Fever? Then I turned to another Woman, and said, Did you ever hear there was such a Thing before? I said, there was one Thing in her Favour, she has not been debauched: I said, Reach the Shift to this Gentlewoman, (she was a grave Woman:). I said, Let her judge the Case, and see that your Child has not been debauched: When that was reached out, the old Gentlewoman said, I don't see any Thing like it: I said, Look over it well; do you think this has been worn three Weeks and three Days? No, says she, I don't think it has, I don't think that is likely. Mrs. Canning said, she had no Stool all the while: I said, Here is three Spots upon it; I said, behold it. Then Mrs. Canning said, Do you come here to set my other Friends against me?

Mr. Davy. Who was that other Woman?

E. Mayle. I don't know her Name.

Mr. Davy. Was it Mrs. Woodward?

E. Mayle. No, it was not.

Mr. Davy. Was it observed that there were no Marks of her being according to the Course of other Women?

E. Mayle. That old Gentlewoman mentioned it, and Mrs. Canning said her Daughter had got Cold, and had been out of Order for three or four Months.

Mr. Davy. What is the Mother?

E. Mayle. She is a fine likely Woman as any, and a Woman that I respect as much as any Woman, and the Girl too.

Cross-examined.

Mr. Williams. What Sort of a Character has she had?

E. Mayle. I never knowed any Ill of the Girl, nor heard any in my Life.

Mr. Williams. Have you been intimately acquainted with her?

E. Mayle. I have, and never heard any Reflection upon her Character; and I don't question but the Mother was very anxious about her Daughter not being debauched.

Mr. Williams. Might not that Matter of Excrement have been from the Day before she was carried there?

E. Mayle. It might, and the Mother told me so then.

Mr. Williams. What was your Reason of being so inquisitive in this?

E. Mayle. I was so, as a Lover of Truth, and a Friend, fearing the Girl had been debauched.

Mr. Davy. Now we shall prove the Defendant's Information before Justice Fielding, in order to shew a material Variance, both in that and her Evidence Evidence on the Trial, particularly in respect to the Time of expending the Water.

Mr. Brogden sworn.

Mr. Brogden. I am Clerk to Justice Fielding.

Mr. Davy. Look on this Paper.

Mr. Brogden. This is the Information of Elizabeth Canning, taken before Justice Fielding, the 7th of February, 1753. (It is read.)

The Information of Elizabeth Canning, of Aldermanbury Postern, London, Spinster, taken upon Oath this seventh Day of February, in the Year of our Lord 1753.

“ THIS Informant, upon her Oath, saith,
 “ that on Monday the first Day of January
 “ last past, she this Informant went to see her “ Uncle and Aunt, who live at Saltpetre-Bank, “ near Rosemary-Lane, in the County of Middlesex,
 “ and continued with them until the Evening;
 “ and saith, that upon her Return Home, about “ half an Hour after Nine, being opposite to “ Bethlem Gate, in Moorfields, she this Informant
 “ was seized by two Men, (whose Names are un“ known to this Informant) who both had brown
 “ Bob Wigs on, and drab-coloured Great Coats,
 “ one of whom held her this Informant, whilst
 “ the other feloniously and violently took from “ her one Shaving Hat, one Stuff Gown, and one “ Linen Apron, which she had on, and also half
 “ a Guinea in Gold, and three Shillings in Silver;
 “ and then he that held her, threatened to do for “ her this Informant: And this Informant saith,
 “ that immediately after, they the said two Men “ violently took hold of her, and dragged her “ up into the Gravel Walk that leads down to “ the said Gate, and about the middle thereof,
 “ he the said Man that first held her, gave her
 “ with his Fist a very violent Blow upon the “ right Temple, which threw her into a Fit,
 “ and deprived her of her Senses, (which Fits
 “ she this Informant saith she is accustomed and “ subject to upon being frightened, and that they “ often continue for six or seven Hours.) And
 “ this Informant saith, that when she came to “ herself, she perceived that she was carrying “ along by the same two Men, in a large Road“ way; and saith, that in a little Time after she “ was so recovered, she was able to walk alone;
 “ however, they continued to pull her along,
 “ which still so intimidated and affrighted her,
 “ that she durst not call out for Assistance, or “ speak to them. And this Informant saith,
 “ that in about half an Hour after she had so “ recovered herself, they the said two Men carried “ her this Informant into a House (which, as she
 “ this Informant heard from some of them, was “ about Four o’Clock in the Morning, and which “ House, as she this Informant hath since heard
 “ and believes, is situate at Enfield-Wash, in the “ County of Middlesex, and is reputed to be a “ very bad and disorderly Bawdy-house, and “ occupied by one Wells, Widow)
 “ and there this Informant saw in the Kitchen
 “ an old Gypsey Woman, and two young Women,
 “ whose Names were unknown to this Informant,
 “ but the Name of one of them this Informant
 “ hath since heard and believes is Virtue Hall:
 “ And saith, that the said old Gypsey Woman “ took hold of this Informant’s Hand, and pro“ mised to give her fine Cloaths, if she would go

“ their Way, (meaning, as this Informant under“ stood, to become a Prostitute) which this “ Informant refusing to do, she the said old
 “ Gypsey Woman took a Knife out of a Drawer,
 “ and cut the Lace of the Stays of her this “ Informant, and took the said Stays away from “ her, and one of the said Men took off her
 “ Cap, and then the said two Men went away
 “ with it, and she this Informant hath never “ since seen any of her Things. And this In“ formant saith, that soon after they were gone
 “ (which she this Informant believes was about “ Five in the Morning) she the said old Gypsey
 “ Woman forced her this Informant up an old “ Pair of Stairs, and pushed her into a back “ Room, like an Hay-loft, without any Furniture “ whatsoever in the same, and there locked her
 “ this Informant up, threatening her this In“ formant, that if she made the least Noise or “ Disturbance, she the said old Gypsey Woman
 “ would cut her Throat; and then she went away.
 “ And this Informant saith, that when it grew “ light, upon her looking round to see in what
 “ a dismal Place she was, she this Informant “ discovered a large black Jug, with the Neck “ much broken, wherein was some Water, and “ upon the Floor several Pieces of Bread, near “ in Quantity to a Quartern Loaf, and a small “ Parcel of Hay. And saith, that she continued
 “ in this Room, or Place, from the said Tuesday “ Morning the second Day of January, until “ about half an Hour after Four of the Clock
 “ in the Afternoon of Monday the twenty-ninth “ Day of the same Month of January, without “ having or receiving any other Sustenance or “ Provision, than the said Bread and Water, “ (except a small Mince-pye, which she this “ Informant had in her Pocket) or any thing to “ lie on, other than the said Hay, and without “ any Person or Persons coming to her, although “ she often heard the Name of Mrs. and Mother “ Wells called upon, whom she understood was
 “ the Mistress of the House. And this Informant “ saith, that on Friday the twenty-sixth Day of “ January last past, she this Informant had con“ sumed all the aforesaid Bread and Water, and “ continued without having any thing to eat or “ drink, until the Monday following, when she
 “ this Informant being almost famished with “ Hunger, and starved with Cold, and almost “ naked during the whole Time of her Confine“ ment, about half an Hour after Four in the “ Afternoon of the said twenty-ninth Day of “ January, broke out at a Window of the said “ Room, or Place, and got to her Friends in “ London, about a quarter after Ten, the same “ Night, in a most weak, miserable Condition,
 “ being very near starved to Death. And this “ Informant saith, that she ever since hath been,
 “ and now is in a very weak and declining State
 “ and Condition of Health; and although all “ possible Care and Assistance is given to her, “ yet whatever small Nutriment she this In“ formant is able to take, the same receives no “ Passage through her, but what is forced by the “ Apothecary’s Assistance and Medicines.

The Mark of

E C

Elizabeth Canning.

Sworn before me, this

7th Day of February,

1753.

H. FIELDING,

Mr.

Mr. Deputy Molineux sworn.

Mr. Deputy Molineux. I was at Sir Crisp Gascoyne's when Canning came there, at the Time that Virtue Hall was there; Sir Crisp was then Lord-Mayor; I and others were desired to go and hear her Examination; after my Lord had concluded his examining of Virtue Hall, he turned to Betty Canning, and asked her, if she had any thing to say? she said, No, she had nothing at all more than she had said upon the Trial; my Lord said nothing further to her; the Bed-gown and Pitcher were on the Table; Betty Canning was rolling up the Bed-gown, in order to take it away, as I apprehended; my Lord said, Child, you must not take that away, you must leave that with me; upon which, she replied, and said, It is my Mother's; it shocked me a good deal, because I had heard it said, that she came Home in a Bed-gown, and that she found it in the Room where she was confined; I mentioned this to several People that very Afternoon, that were very strong Advocates in the Affair.

Mr. Willes. Did she demand the Pitcher at that Time?

Mr. Deputy Molineux. I don't remember she did.

Cross-examined.

Mr. Moreton. I had not asked you a Question, if I had not found you was at the Examination of Virtue Hall: Was you there upon the first of her being brought in to be examined?

Mr. Deputy Molineux. I was, the first of that Day.

Mr. Moreton. Had she recanted that Day?

Mr. Deputy Molineux. I had heard that she had; I heard my Lord-Mayor say he had gone through the Examination.

Mr. Moreton. Was you there the Day before she was examined publickly, the Day when she recanted?

Mr. Deputy Molineux. No, I was not.

Samuel Reed sworn.

S. Reed. I was present the Time Mr. Molineux speaks of. I very particularly remember she was going to fold up this Bed-gown; my Lord-Mayor said, Child, you must not have that; she said, It is my Mother's; which struck me very much.

Cross-examined.

Mr. Nares. Did any body ask her to explain what she meant by it?

S. Reed. No, Sir.

Mr. Davy. We have several Witnessess to call to the Characters of those who have been examined; and desire to know the Pleasure of the Court, whether we shall call them now, or stay till they are attached.

Court. Stay till they are attached.

Mr. Davy. Then we have done for the present.

Mr. MORETON, (now Chief Justice of Chester.)

May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury;

I am Council in this Cause for the unfortunate Prisoner Elizabeth Canning; and unfortunate she certainly is, whether, upon the whole, you shall think her guilty, or acquit her of the heinous Crime of which she now stands indicted. For guilty of such an Offence, at her Years, she cannot have been, without having been very unfortunate in a most profligate and abandoned Education; and should you think her innocent, most unfortunate must she surely be thought by all, because she is now brought to answer for a most foul Offence in herself, merely from having done her Duty in prosecuting others for the most unheard-of Violation of her own Person and Property, and the Laws of her Country.—But the more unfortunate such an Accusation, under such Circumstances, renders the Defendant, the more, I am sensible, she will be entitled to that Patience, which you have already shewn in the Progress of this Trial. And, Gentlemen, when I consider how long that Patience and Attention has been already exercised, when I see before me that even short Minutes have swelled to no less than six or seven Sheets, I am too sensible that I have neither Ability nor Experience to do my Client that Justice, which the extraordinary Nature of her Case requires. But, as I have been unfortunately fixed upon for my present Station, I hope, the great Length of the Trial, the great Pains taken by the Gentlemen on Behalf of the Prosecution, the numerous Facts and minute Circumstances that have been laid before you, will be some Excuse, at least, for the many Defects and Omissions that will appear in my opening for the Defendant. And, before I go into the Particulars of the Case, I shall premise and agree with Mr. Davy in his opening, that if the Perjury was corrupt and wilfully false; it is one of the most abominable and horrid Pieces of Corruption ever brought into a Court of Justice: A Falsehood the most cruel and impious! So much so, that I will also agree with him, that if it should appear by the Course of the whole Evidence, that the Defendant was never in the House of Susannah Wells, and that Mary Squires was not the Actor of the Mischief there supposed to be done, Canning's Magnitude of Offence deserves even a particular Law, which this Country has not yet thought proper to enact in Cases of Perjury.

But, Gentlemen, you, as a Jury, will guard your Judgments against all Impulses, which must necessarily arise from Considerations of this Nature: From Reflections on the Consequences of the Crime, into the Truth of which alone you are now to inquire. Facts alone are the proper Objects of your Attention: And glad I am, for the sake of Justice and Truth, that a Fact of this Importance, I say, of this Importance (for, in a free Country, the Nature and Circumstances of the Crime, not the Condition of the Criminal, makes every Inquiry more or less important) is to be investigated and determined by a Jury of distinguished Property and Integrity—by a Jury selected by the Prosecutor, in a Manner, I believe, unparalleled in any Prosecution, when the Crown is not directly concerned:—For, I believe, Gentlemen, that you are the selected Choice of the Prosecutor, after no less than seventeen Challenges:—And therefore, surely, the Prosecutor can now have none: The Defendant, I believe, never had any Diffidence of the Impartiality and Ability of any Jury, legally returned from the Citizens of London.

And, Gentlemen, in making such Observations as may occur to me to be material for the Defence of my Client, I shall, in the Outset, beg leave to remind you, what the Accusation is against this Girl now at the Bar: It is for wilful, malicious, and corrupt Perjury, committed in this Court; and that with the aggravated Circumstances of being designed to destroy the Life of an innocent Fellow-Creature. Let me add, that this Crime, Gentlemen, is supposed to be committed, when the Defendant was under the Age of nineteen Years.

This Charge has been fully opened by Mr. Davy, and endeavoured to be supported three Manner of Ways: The first (which has been most relied upon, and, I think, with the Prosecutor's Council, is the most material Part of the Case) is the alibi Defence of Mary Squires, and the positive Proof they have brought of several Persons being in the Place of Canning's Confinement, during the Time she says she was there. If both these are proved, beyond all Possibility of Doubt in your Minds, then you must conclude Canning could not swear true in the Manner she has.

The second Method of proving this heavy Charge, is endeavoured to be made out from the Improbability of the Defendant's own Story; and the third, by her own Conduct, in the Delays and Precautions taken in not appearing to make an earlier Defence. Mr. Willes makes use of a very remarkable Expression, well known in the Law-books, fugam fecit, she has flown from Justice; and from thence would infer, (I mean legally) it is confessing her own Guilt. I am very sorry this Fact was at all observed upon; because, if it had not, I might have been at Liberty to have passed over Circumstances of Persons and Things, which I must now take Notice of, in order to shew, that the Delay of this Day's Trial can, in no humane and impartial Breast, be any Evidence of Canning's Guilt;—was a Step that every Person, in her unhappy Situation, would have taken;—was a Conduct that those, who had then the Care of her Defence, would have been void of common Sense, had they not advised it.—For, Gentlemen, in these Days, who would trust the Trial and Test of their Character, and their Liberty depending thereon, to the same Person, both supreme Judge and Prosecutor?

However Popish Legends may have attempted to persuade us, that such Impartiality has existed, —That a Judge has even condemned, and passed Sentence on himself;—Yet, in these happier Times, when Men are at Liberty to see and judge for themselves, such Traditions will never influence any Man, endued with the least reasoning Faculties, not to wish the Provinces of Judge and Prosecutor, at least, may ever be distinct and independent in this Country. I speak this without even the remotest Thought of casting any Reflection on the Integrity and Justice of any of those, who preside in our Courts in these Times.—There never was a Time, when the Subject was equally secure in this Respect: But it does by no means follow from thence, that Failings, inseparable from human Nature, are not to be guarded against by those, who may suffer from them.—And that a Prejudice to our own Cause, is such a Failing, is so obvious to every candid Man's own Breast, —that no Man, with any Pretence to an upright Heart, would trust himself in such a Situation, as the present Prosecutor must have been in, had the present Examination came on, when he so properly presided in the Magistracy of this City.

But what was another known Reason of this Delay?

It is notorious, the Girl was (and from Motives not to be disavowed here, or in any other Court) advised to remove her Cause, from this Place, to the supreme Court of all criminal Proceedings in Westminster-Hall.

Was this a Step that looks like an Evasion of Justice? Do those, who hope to elude the Force of Justice, voluntarily approach the most awful Tribunal? Happy might it have been for her, and for the Course of Justice, had her Design and Attempt, in this Particular, been agreeable to the Rules of that Court: For, however satisfied I am, that all here wish, and mean, to do complete Justice; yet the Obstructions, which we have here met with from a licentious Rabble, (the Effect of which on some Men's Minds no one knows) would probably have been avoided, could the Defendant's Choice of a more solemn Trial have been complied with.—But no sooner was one just Cause of Delay removed;—no sooner was the other, as just Reason, not to be complied with, by the Course of legal Proceedings;—than Canning immediately submitted to her Defence in the Place she now stands.

If therefore I have wiped off all Aspersions of her Guilt, from a supposed Intent to avoid her Trial,—What Arguments may I not justly raise in Favour of her Innocence, from her Appearance here at all?

If she was conscious of the least Fear of Conviction, —(and what Person, really guilty, is free from these Fears?)—Why did not she make her Flight from Justice? She had not even Gratitude to detain her. No Friends were to suffer, either in Person or Fortune, by her Flight. She was under no Recognizance, either by self or Friends.

In Opposition to even the remotest Apprehension of the Punishment of the Crime of Perjury, (and especially such a Perjury) could the Place of Canning's Abode be the Object of a Moment's Doubt? Whether a Servant in London, or elsewhere, must be surely very indifferent to one in her Station.

It may possibly be some Comfort, even to be a Servant in England, preferably to other Countries. But suppose her only apprized of the Nature of her Crime, and she must know her Residence here of a very short Duration. Under such Circumstances, therefore, can any one doubt, that such a Delinquent would not have made her own Choice of her Place of Exile, especially, when by such Choice she should have avoided the most severe Part of her Punishment, if guilty, —That of Slavery?

I hope therefore the Imputation of her Guilt, at least from this Circumstance mentioned by Mr. Willes, is entirely wiped off.

I must now, Gentlemen, beg leave to make two or three Observations, in offering to you my Thoughts on the Prosecutor's own Case, as it stands unanswered by any Facts on our Side. And in this Part, I shall invert the Order laid down by my two learned Friends, Mr. Davy and Mr. Willes; and begin first with the Improbability objected to Canning's own Tale, because (I think) even allowing the Improbability of her Story to be a sufficient Proof to ground a Conviction of Perjury on, I can by no means think there is a greater Share of Improbability in in the Defendant's Relation, than there is in many Parts of the Account given to contradict the Truth of it.

It would be endless, in this Place, to follow the learned Gentlemen's Example, and to observe, as minutely as they have done, on the several Facts related by Canning, and their Evidence to disprove them.

I shall therefore confine myself, on this Head of Improbability, to the general Facts related by Canning in her own Story, and to some general Objections, which that Relation has furnished the Prosecutor's learned Council with.

And what are their Objections to the Improbability of her Story? They consist in the Circumstances of the Time of her Absence, the Nature of the Place of her Confinement, the particular Manner in which she led her Life there, the seemingly surprizing Account of the first Robbery.—I cannot forbear observing in this Place, to what forced and strange Observations on Facts one of the Gentlemen was driven, in order to keep alive his own Cry of Improbability.

Mr. Davy, I think, endeavours to raise five different Objections of Improbability from his Observations. — The first is, It is very strange; says he, that there should appear no Premeditation previous to the Robbery in Moorfields.—Mr. Davy has had much more Experience; particularly in this Court, than I have had. — I was therefore the more surprized to hear such an Observation come from a Gentleman, who must have heard so many unhappy Wretches tried in this Place, for Crimes that would be doubly shocking, did all the Circumstances appear the Effect of Design and Premeditation in the Authors: And shall it then be urged as an Argument of every Felon's Innocence, that we are not able to shew that his guilty Act was deliberately premeditated? Such Reasoning would, I apprehend, be as effectually serviceable to Villainy as a general Pardon.

The next Improbability is made to arise from the very great Danger which these Robbers (whom Mr. Davy must still suppose to be all Coolness and Deliberation) naturally foresaw in carrying Canning so far from the Place of her Robbery to her Prison.

But, for my own Part, only suppose any Robbers, for once, rash enough to commit any Robbery at all, between Nine and Ten o'Clock at Night in the middle of Winter, in such a Place as Moorfields, (and I would to God every Day did not afford Instances of such unpremeditated Rashness) and where is then the Improbability of the subsequent Attempts?

Is it improbable that such Villains should not at once be satisfied with the trifling Sum of Money, and the Gown and Apron? — Is it in the least incredible, that those, who were either of Mrs. Wells's or Mrs. Squires's Gang, should be desirous of adding one more Prostitute to the Retinue of this notorious Bawd, or smuggling Gypsey?

Mr. Davy was so drove to support the Improbability of Canning's Relation in this Part of his Observation, that we are now told, Robbers themselves must be thought so wary and circumspect, that they must even have apprehended immediate Discovery from the Resort of those, who go to see the unhappy Inhabitants of one Side of this Square. What! between Nine and Ten at Night!

If the learned Gentleman has not already gratified this Curiosity, I hope he will, at least, chuse a more seasonable Hour, lest the Keepers there may be led to mistake the Motive of so unexpected and unseasonable a Visit.

We are then to see this Improbability from the known Humanity of Street-Robbers.—These, he thinks, were never cruel on Purpose.—This is, I own, an Observation of great Good-nature. I wish there was the least Foundation in Fact for the Support of it.—But because we cannot assign a Motive or Reason for every Instance of Cruelty and Barbarity these Russians commit, are we to shut out all Belief that such Acts of Violence are committed?

Because, therefore, there is no Design of Murder proved, we must not believe that these humane, these deliberate, these wary Robbers, could be tempted to offer any Violence to Canning, that was not absolutely necessary to a supposed premeditated Design of Robbery.

There is one more Observation, and that, perhaps, might afford an Argument of Improbability, and that is the Prisoner's great Caution in husbanding her Water; for now I am accompanying Mr. Davy in his Observations at Enfield-Wash. But how does this appear, that she did husband her Water at all, in the Manner Mr. Davy supposes?

Canning's Evidence, or Relation, at no one Time, or Place, justifies this Observation: All she tells, or swears, is, that the Bread and Water lasted to such a Time; but no where does she relate, how regular she made her Meals. If there is a Possibility, that this Bread and Water was sufficient to sustain human Nature twenty-eight Days, all that Part of the Case, of Mr. Davy's eking it out Ounce by Ounce, falls to the Ground.

Another Observation was made, which would appear of some Weight, if founded on Facts, either admitted or proved.

Says Mr. Davy, If she had a mind to escape, she might, every Hour of the Day, have pushed out the Plaister-Wall. She did attempt, she says, to open the Window, and could not. But where is there any Proof, or Admission, that she might have escaped every Hour of the Day, if she would? Another Improbability is to arise, that the People never came to see whether Canning was there or not.—But this, once more, resting solely on Mr. Davy's Imagination, wants a Support of Proof. Canning herself says, she once saw a Person look through the Crack of the Door, to see if she was gone.—From whence, therefore, are we to collect, that this Improbability ever did happen? — For might not this Observation through the Crack be repeated a hundred Times, and Canning not observe it?

We are now come to the last and great Objection, which is for ever to overturn this Story, on the Foot of Improbability: That is, that Canning should return from the Wash, without attempting to take any Shelter till she reached her own House. This, I admit, is a Fact related by herself, and she is consistent, in this Part of her Story, on every Relation of it; but I leave you, Gentlemen, to judge, what Inference of Improbability arises from hence.—Is it possible for you to determine, in your own Minds, what would be the Conduct of any one, or more People, in such a Situation? Different Judgments, and different Resolutions, would be acted upon by very different rent Ideas, under such Circumstances.—And therefore I submit, that no Argument of Improbability can be drawn from this Conduct in Canning, that would not equally have furnished Mr. Davy's Speech, had she acted a quite different Part, and made her Story known at the first House she came by.

Mr. Davy having now finished his Chain of Observation, and, as he supposes, entirely destroyed all Pretence to Truth in Canning's Narration;—yet thinks it necessary to ask one Question,—Was ever a Story attended with such improbable and incoherent Circumstances? Many very improbable Things, many very incoherent ones, have happened; and therefore I might safely answer to this doughty Question, Yes; I think as improbable, as incoherent Circumstances have been true. But the Guilt or Innocence of the Defendant will not receive the least Light or Assistance from either Question or Answer.

And, therefore, allow such refined Observations their utmost Latitude, (and as they have been thus relied on by the Prosecutor's Council, I have been obliged to take some Notice of them) and let us then see, where just Observations on Facts will turn the Weight of Improbability.

This is a Fact not disputed, Canning was certainly missing.—That she gave a particular Account of her Absence on her Return home, January 29, 1753, is not disputed.—She was particular in Circumstances of Place, Persons, and Things. The remarkable Pitcher now before you in particular.

Now on this State of Facts all uncontradicted,—permit me only to ask a few Questions, as the properest Answer that can be given to the Observations on the Head of Improbability.

If Canning was absolutely ignorant of the Place she was resolved to charge as her Prison, could she have ventured to mention any one Circumstance she did?

In such a Sort of Room, as the Gentlemen themselves allow she did describe,—even a Chimney would have been a hazardous Particular.—But, that she should descend to such a Pitcher, as now produced, was risking the whole on a Circumstance, that would fail her a million to one.

The very Person of Squires, stamped, as Mr. Davy says, by God, with a Particularity never to be forgotten—Would Canning have ventured to fix on such a Person? Though Canning was not equal in her Description of Squires's Deformity with Mr. Davy, the Account of the Person who robbed her is too remarkable to proceed from mere Invention.

Now it is certainly most probable, that if any Person at all had been described to Canning,—it must have been Wells:—For, according to the Prosecutor's Account, Squires had come there but a few Days before Canning's Return home; and yet Canning's Description neither did fit, nor would she charge Wells on Sight. The Person of Wells, even by the Prosecutor, was supposed as unknown by Canning, as that of Squires. The Name, indeed, of Wells or Wills, (now too supposed by the Prosecutor to have been named by Scarrat to Canning) was mentioned by her at her first Return,—and from this Circumstance every body had predetermined Mother Wells for the Robber.—Mr. Willes assures you, no body dreamed of a Gypsey.—Every body had fixed on Wells, as she was known to be the Mistress of the House, and as the House was infamously known to be capable of harbouring those that were capable of any Villany.—Every body therefore fixed their Attention on Wells.—And yet, Gentlemen, the Prosecutor's own Witness, Mr. Aldridge, tells you, that Squires was directly pitched on by Canning.—She could not have been more ready, if she had received her Description from Mr. Davy.

But, Gentlemen, Arguments and Inferences on Evidence of this Kind would be endless.—No Deduction from them can, or ought to conclude your Judgment on a Charge of this Kind: Yet the Gentlemen for the Prosecution have throughout grounded all their Arguments on this Head, that some Story was necessary to be forged.—Suppose this granted, in order to argue with them in their own Way, let me ask them,—Could a weak illiterate Woman (however supported) have either invented, or, when invented, be uniform in the Proof of it? Would any one, endued with the most common Share of Understanding herself, or assisted by those who were, have taken a Tale so very difficult to have gained Belief?

Surely, a Description of Persons, Places, and Things, really not existing, would as probably have gained Belief, and yet have been much more easily managed, in case of more particular Inquiries.

But, however strange many of the Circumstances of this Tale may seem, I apprehend it is not so destitute of all presumptive Proofs, as has been contended.

I have before said, no one doubts that Canning was missing. That the Condition of her Body, on her Return, was most miserable, has been proved by some of the Prosecutor's Witnesses;—will be confirmed by such of ours, whose Characters and Stations place them above all Suspicion of being privy to, or capable of supporting a Fraud of any Kind.

The same will prove, that several Symptoms attending this unhappy Girl's Illness, were unerring Tokens of some most extraordinary Treatment she had received.

The Answer attempted to these uncontradicted Facts, is, All this was practised for the sake of Gain—To become a false Object of Charity, or, more probably, says Mr. Davy, to cover the Reproach of Whoredom. To this Answer I will make no other Reply, than ask this one Question,—What Fact of Distress, however uncontroverted, may not be supposed to have proceeded from a Design to deceive and impose?—And, in this Instance, we have had nothing but mere Suppositions to induce your Belief that all Canning's Sufferings were fraudulent.

I will trespass with only one Question more, on the Head of Improbability. Canning was missing—Where was she? After more than a Twelve-month's Inquiry—That Inquiry backed with as active a Prosecution as ever was carried on in this Kingdom—That Prosecution made the universal Object of Argument and Curiosity—And yet not the least Surmise of any other Place of Confinement than that alledged by Canning herself. To this we have had no other Account than Mr. Davy's bare Opinion—She was secreted somewhere—to conceal a Pregnancy—or to get free of Disorders incident to the Gay and Young.

If this was the Fact, I shall venture to pronounce she might have made more of her Means of Secrecy, than by any Distress she could counterfeit, terfeit, even in these charitable Days.—But to give such a Supposition, as Mr. Davy's, the least Colour of Truth, we must suppose that Canning, poor, illiterate, and friendless, has succeeded in an Attempt, that Money, Art, and Friends have scarce ever effected.

I will, therefore, leave this Part of the Prosecutor's Case, upon which, I am sensible, I have taken up more of your Time, and the Court's, than may have been necessary; not only as I think the supposed Motives of all Canning's Story, at least, as improbable as the Facts related by her, but also, as I hope this will be the last Prosecution, where I shall hear a Conviction of wilful and corrupt Perjury contended for on the mere Improbability of any Facts, which have been credited by twelve Men on their Oaths, and that too in a Case where the merciful Ear is ever most open. Since, Gentlemen, it is not to be denied, here at least, where I can vouch the Annals of this Place for my Assertion,—That Things, seemingly impossible for human Power to have performed, have been proved true—Things, the most unlikely to be attested as true, if false, have been credited, and yet have been utterly false.

There are two known Instances of this Kind: The one that most improbable Ride from a Place near this City to York in one Day, on the same Horse: I had almost said, as improbable a Performance as Mr. Davy's Flight round the Atmosphere! Yet this was a certain Fact done, was attested and believed in this Court, and by that Proof the Prisoner was acquitted of a Robbery, which he confessed himself actually guilty of; as soon as acquitted.—Under the other Head, is the well-known Story of a Steward's Son belonging to a Noble Family—If I remember, it was the Gainsborough Family; but that is not material. There the Steward was missing, and a large Sum of Money supposed to have been taken from him; his own Son accused himself, his Mother, and his Sister, of the Murder and Robbery, and that they had thrown the Body into such a Pit.—The Pit was searched, and no Body found; and yet, as the Son persisted in his own Accusation, they were indicted, tried, and hanged.—Yet, some Time after, the Father returned, gave a particular Account of his Absence, and the Cause of it.—Now in both these Instances, who, on the first Relation, could either assent to the Truth of the one, or would doubt the Truth of the other?—And yet the one was uncontrovertibly proved to be true, and the other demonstrably false.—I mention these Facts, to shew the great Danger of acquitting or condemning against positive Proof on Oath, on refined Arguments of Improbability, which we see are thus capable of deceiving.

And, indeed, I cannot but express some Degree of Wonder in this Place, that a Point of this Nature should have been thus laboured by the Prosecutor,—as he has contended for, and has endeavoured to produce Proof of Facts, which, if credited, would make all Resort to Supposition useless.—I infer, therefore, that even touching on Suppositions and Arguments of Improbability implies a Diffidence in their Proof of Facts.

But having done with this Part of the Case, which rests on the Head of Improbability, it now remains to examine how the Charge is otherwise supported; and how it is to be answered on our Part. And, after the great Attention you have given, I need not remind you, that the Strefs of the Proof has been levelled to shew Mary Squires was elsewhere; on which Mr. Davy has logically concluded, (ergo) Canning has wilfully sworn false. But this is not a necessary Consequence. How does it necessarily follow, that though Squires was elsewhere, Canning has maliciously perjured herself? May there not be a Similude in Deformity, that may deceive, as well as there may be in the more admired Part of the Sex?

But having, in general, denied the Truth of Mr. Davy's Inference, I shall wave this Part of my Defence so far as to agree with Mr. Davy, that Squires is so stamp'd, that it is scarce possible to mistake her. Canning has sworn she is not mistaken; twelve Men upon their Oaths have believed her; and her Defence now is, that she is not mistaken. It will be as needless as prolix, to go minutely through every Branch of the Prosecutor's Evidence, that is meant to prove the contrary. The Witnessess are many: However, all their Force is direct and obvious to a single Point, viz. to prove Squires at Abbotsbury and other Places, from the 29th of December 1752, to the 1st of February 1753: When we shall endeavour to prove she was at Enfield.

It is not quite immaterial to remark, that Esther Hopkins and Alice Farnham, the two first Witnessess, are not quite positive, but believe only they are the Persons.

You will observe from hence, that Abbotsbury is to be the grand Scene of Contradiction: There all the Witnessess, whether united by a long Course of Smuggling, or only occasionally there, are express and positive: Other Circumstances, surely not altogether common in the Course of a Gypsey's Life, are reserved only for their Residence at Abbotsbury. In all other Places Squires is attempted to be shewn properly as a Vagrant,—fortune-telling,—staying a Night only in a Place, and lodged in Barns.

But when once brought to Abbotsbury, without any Cause opened or proved, they are at once to halt, not as Gypsies, but become, in an instant, remarkable Guests; live in the new Part of the House, instead of lying in a Barn; instead of being Gypsies, that every one avoids, except such as want to deal in Fortune-telling and smuggled Goods, they are now Companions of those of the best Rank in the Place, and at two Balls in one Week. This so ugly and deformed Woman, whom they have brought a Man that subsisted on Charity at Enfield, to swear that he chose rather to sit in the Cold, than by the Fire where she was in Company; I say, this extraordinary Piece of Deformity you are to believe at Abbotsbury present at all Meetings usual at this Season, and carested as a principal Guest.

One Remark will suffice for all this Particularity of Description at Abbotsbury. This Time was necessary to be consumed somewhere, or the alibi Evidence, prior in Point of Time, would not defeat the Gypsey's Arrival at Enfield, in Contradiction to Evidence, which they are aware we have to produce. You will now observe, that it has been thought necessary to have some Standard to resort to, as a Reason for all this particular Series of Evidence and Recollection, relative to all these three Gypsies.—It happens, that most of the Evidence have chosen the late Change of Stile as their common Object of Memory.—Scarce one, who did not remember this or that particular Fact, by the Æra of Old or New Christmas.—I wish this may be the only Scene of Falshood and Confusion flowing from this Law. I was myself against it, as I thought it likely to be productive of Mistakes in Evidence; and don't yet see any Use it ever can be of to the Public.

It is, however, I confess, natural to confirm our Remembrance of particular Persons or Things by remarkable Æras in point of Time. But I much doubt, whether this is not the Occasion of the whole Mistake in this Case; not, perhaps, designed by all, though by others calculated merely to add a Credit to Facts, that a mere positive Averment would fail to establish.

And in the Evidence of the second Witness, Alice Farnham, at Winyard's Gap, (which was given with great Modesty, and an Air of Truth) there is a Particular, which induces me to believe, that the Year must be mistaken by this Witness. In order to convince you that she was not mistaken in the Persons of the Gypsies,—she recollects they told her they would come and see her again at Old Christmas.

It was then the 31st of December.—These Gypsies, as you have heard from all their own Accounts, on their Return hither to Winter-Quarters; Abbotsbury, a remarkable Point in View; and yet all this must be defeated, if they had then the least Intent of being at Winyard's Gap again at Old Christmas; but this is very reconcileable, supposing it the Year before, that these Wanderers were in those Parts.—And this is no unnatural Supposition; for the Change of Stile was then enacted into a Law, though it had not taken place; and therefore the first Old Christmas was no uncommon Day of Return for these Gypsies, as Dissenters from the New Stile, to fix on. But surely, Gentlemen, if this extensive Scene of alibi Proof ought to find Credit with you, it is evident George and Lucy Squires were the most proper Evidence to support the Truth of it.

To this I desired to appeal, as being the best Evidence, when I observed those two in Court, after all other Witnesses were, by Order, obliged to withdraw.—The Prosecutor's Council saw the Force of this Appeal, and agreed to call these two Witnesses in Succession.—George was called.—If Lucy had been ventured, and they two had agreed in Points of Facts, of Persons, and Times, as they must have done, if true in the Accounts they gave—I say, if this had been done, I then agreed, and I still say, that I must have submitted, that the Defendant was at least mistaken in her Evidence against Mary Squires.

But, Gentlemen, you have heard George alone. From his Cross-Examination, the Danger of a manifest Contradiction became too apparent. George hardly supported himself.—If Lucy was called, and faltered, the whole alibi was gone.—Such a Trial was therefore not to be ventured. I re-demanded this Test of the Truth of the alibi; but the Prosecutor absolutely refused it.—A Reason indeed was assigned; but, like many others, the Effect of a quick Invention, unsupported by Proof. Both these Witnesses were, at once, made almost Ideots. Nothing of this was mentioned in the Opening, or as an Excuse for not calling them, when at first demanded.

But as Lucy was not called, (which I really think would have determined this whole Affair) let me remark a little on the Conduct of George. And, Gentlemen, where did there appear any Defect of Understanding, during his Examination on behalf of the Prosecution? He was clear, quick, and minute, both as to Times, Names, and Places, that were within the Rout to be proved. Of other Places; certainly as remarkable, certainly as natural Objects of Memory, not a Tittle was to be remembered; for to have remembered any Thing, would have given a Clue.

And, therefore, not a Town out of the alibi, except Shaftsbury, through a Tour from August to December, from Surry quite along the Coast of Suffex and Dorset, is to be mentioned. Not a Transaction of buying or selling a single Scrap of his Goods, in any one Place out of the alibi; and yet it is impossible but their Trade must have been their View and Support, in one Part of their Journey as well as another. But I submit, that some Parts of the Story, in which the Prosecutor has allowed this Witness to be capable of giving his Testimony, afford strong Suspicions of Falshood. I will enumerate some of them, that strike me in this Light: First, that decrepid old Woman's Walk from Litton to Abbotsbury, and back again to Dinner, and then to Abbotsbury the same Evening, seems highly improbable. You are told by other Witnesses, that such a Walk would necessarily take up more Time, than other Circumstances of George's Story can possibly allow for it.—Add to this, the Improbability of her being at Abbotsbury, and that too at Clarke's House, and yet not seen there by one of all her numerous Acquaintance. You observe scarce a Person there, but has known her intimately for many Years. Here, you have heard from many of the Witnesses, there was an Halt of eight or nine Days.—George then tells you, that the first Day they went only to Portersham, a very small Distance; and from this Place such forced Marches, as amount to the highest Degree of Improbability. I asked him a Reason for this immediate and unusual Expedition.—This was one of the Questions, which you find he did not expect to be asked. At last, it was a Sister's Illness occasioned this Hurry—We received a Letter from her by the Post on that Account. He could not, however, tell where this Letter was received, and, perhaps, that might be forgot: But, Gentlemen, he could scarce receive this Letter at Portersham, because that was a mere occasional Resting-place; and if a Letter, that really required and occasioned such Expedition, was received at Abbotsbury, I desire to have it accounted for, how they came to attempt no further than Portersham the first Day. It is obvious therefore to me, that the particular Stages, this Witness gives an Account of, were not in pursuance of this Letter; but in order to be at Basingstoke on the 18th of January, for a Purpose that is very material for the Truth of their whole Story, and which I shall take particular Notice of, when I attend them at that Place.

But first let me ask, If such a Letter ever sent,—if a Sister ever sick,—Why not that Sister here, to confirm the Truth of this plain and simple Fact? Is she too of so weak an Understanding, as not to be trusted with this Question? Did you write a Letter to your Brother George in January 1753, and to what Place? Was you then ill, and did you inform him so by such Letter? An Answer in the Affirmative to either of these Questions, from a Witness whose Character stands, and must stand, unimpeached by any Thing which now appears, appears; would have had great Weight, with me at least, in confirming this Part of George's Evidence.

There is another most remarkable Defect in George's Account of this Journey.—From Coombe to Basingstoke is forty Miles:—He wanted, at first, to make this March in two Days; but he was put right in his Road here by the learned Gentleman's Rota on his Brief, or else they would have been too early at Basingstoke for this material Letter:—But, in this three Days March of forty Miles,—not a single Place known;—no Witness called, that ever saw them;—and yet they eat, drank, and lodged, as in other Parts of their Journey.—And yet, to put the Truth of this Narration beyond the Reach of a Doubt, this Witness has repeated his whole Journey, accompanied by an Attorney, not only to refresh his own Memory, but to give his Testimony a Prop and Support, which he was no doubt prudently advised it might stand in need of.

It is, surely, somewhat strange, that the nearer he arrived to his own Home, the less he should be capable of remembering Things and Places himself,—the less he should be able to produce Persons to remember him, his Mother, or his Sister. But, Gentlemen, this is a glaring Objection to his Testimony, both between Coombe and Basingstoke, and from Basingstoke to Brentford. But at Basingstoke a Circumstance is pretended to have happened, and which, if it really did happen, makes it beyond a Doubt, that they were really at Basingstoke on the 18th of January.

This is the Letter, supposed to be wrote, by the Direction of Lucy, by the Landlady at Basingstoke, to her Lover Mr. Clarke, whom, you have been told, she danced with at Abbotsbury. You have also been told, that this Pledge of Lucy's Love was unfortunately delivered to a wrong Mr. Clarke, by some Mistake of the Dorchester Post-house.—Now, Gentlemen, you will observe, all that makes this Letter, in any Degree, a material Piece of Evidence for the Prosecution, is the Time it was wrote: For, that these Vagabonds may have been in all the Places through which the Evidence has traced them,—that they might dance at Abbotsbury,—and that Lucy, whose Beauty Mr. Davy himself seems to have been so enamoured with, might there also captivate the Heart of Mr. Clarke,—is very probable, but intirely immaterial. It was therefore incumbent on the Gentlemen for the Prosecution to have fixed the Time at which this Letter was wrote, without the least Blot of any Suspicion; and not only the Time, but that the Gypsies actually came on this supposed 18th of January to Basingstoke, directly from Abbotsbury; for, otherwise, their being at Enfield-Wash on the 1st, 2d, or 3d of January, and at Basingstoke on the 18th, are not in the least inconsistent: And therefore, Gentlemen, I before took Notice, that a most material Part of this Journey was very imperfectly accounted for by George Squires, and not any Witness to assist him quite from Coombe to Basingstoke. How material therefore would it have been, in this Part of their Case, to have had this wrong Mr. Clarke, to whom this Love-Epistle was sent by Mistake?—We should then, at least, have been sure, that it was not of an earlier Date than 1753: And, when I come to observe on the Letter itself, as produced to the Court, I think, some Suspicions, on this Head, will not appear to be groundless. Mr. Davy with great Confidence asserted, that this Piece of Evidence alone was sufficient to detect the whole Imposture. I have allowed how strong it would be, accompanied with some Requisites, that, I submit, do not now accompany it.—An essential one is, that the Letter should, beyond a Doubt, appear to you to be wrote on the 18th of January 1753.—Mr. Davy and Mr. Willes have therefore, on all Occasions, mentioned this Date of the Letter, as a Fact not disputable, or, indeed, to be disputed.—But, Gentlemen, you, on Oath, must, from the Appearance of the Letter itself, at least think this uncertain; for, however often the Date has been repeated 1753, it, in fact, has no other Figures than 175; the Corner, where the fourth Figure should stand, is torn or rubbed off.—That Corner alone, Gentlemen, out of four, though all equally secured by the Fold and Make of the Letter, has suffered by Time. When an Obliteration, or other Accident, happens in so material a Part of so very material a Piece of Evidence, it naturally excites some Suspicion. And here again, how material would it have been to have had the wrong Mr. Clarke, who could not, I am sure, have perused so unexpected a Letter without some Degree of Attention? And from him we might possibly have known how the Date appeared, when delivered to him.

'Tis also unlucky for this material Point of Evidence, that the Post-mark is by no means plain enough to give any satisfactory Account of the Time, when this Letter actually passed through the Post. This, I own, is a Defect not in the Prosecutor's Power to have cured; but therefore it was the more incumbent on him to have authenticated the Time and Date of the Letter, by such Means as were in his Power; and therefore, I think, the Absence of Mr. Clarke greatly discredits the Authority of this Piece of Evidence; for, as I have before said, on the Truth and Exactness of Time depends the whole Force of this alibi Evidence.—I doubt I have appeared very prolix on this Part of the Case: But as the Conduct of the Prosecution seemed to make this so very material, I hope I have not seemed to trespass too much on that Indulgence, which has been so remarkable through this whole Cause.—I shall therefore close my Observations on the other numerous Witnesses to this alibi Part of the Case, that however they may agree in general Facts, that Squires was at this and that Place, as sworn, such Account may either be false or immaterial in this Prosecution; may be, as other alibi Defences too often are, absolutely false, or false in Point of Time; and the one, as well as the other, equally invalidates the whole of this, as relative to, or material in, a Proof of Canning's Guilt.

It is therefore one of the Corner-stones to the Credit of this Sort of Proofs, that the several Witnesses should be uniform in all their Circumstances, and particularly in such, which they themselves might not think a necessary or essential Part of the Case which they are brought to prove. But, Gentlemen, you may remember, that in such Circumstances there were many contradictory Accounts: One in particular was most material, either in establishing or overthrowing George Squires's Account of his Mother's famous Walk to Abbotsbury and back again. To give this a seeming Probability, all the subsequent Witnesses were to bring them into Abbotsbury very late in the Evening; Evening; and yet John Ford, one of the Gang's most intimate and old Acquaintance, swore positively, that he kissed Lucy before Three o'Clock in the Afternoon at Abbotsbury. Mr. Davy was aware, that so signal a Token of Remembrance would weigh strongly against some of the former Evidence; and therefore this Witness is directly called drunk. There is another of this Sort very material: Hawkins at Litton, though in and about his House the whole Morning, remembers not a Tittle of this Morning's Walk by the old Woman to Abbotsbury.

Having gone through this Range of the Prosecutors's Evidence, and troubled you with such Observations as occurred to me on those Parts which they seemed to lay their greatest Strefs on; I am now in Course brought nearer Home, and am to see how far another Class of Witnesses have produced any substantial Charge against the Defendant. And I hope, Gentlemen, I shall have Occasion to be much less prolix on this Part; because the Evidence, in its own Nature, is much weaker; and whatever Weight it may carry, allowing every Tittle of it to be true, there are scarce any three Persons to be found, who will agree in drawing the same Inferences from the Facts related by the Set of Witnesses I am now come to; that is, Gentlemen, those Witnesses, who have given you an Account of the several Occurrences before Alderman Chitty, and at the Time Canning was down at Enfield, and at other Times, when she has, either in ordinary Discourse, or in Obedience to the Civil Magistrate, made her Confinement and Delivery the Subject of any Description. I will not go through the several Parts of these Transactions, which the Gentlemen for the Prosecution have endeavoured to paint so contradictory to each other, as must necessarily stamp the whole for a Fiction and Forgery. You, Gentlemen, have had these different Accounts, both the written and related, laid before you. Your Understanding and Judgment is too sound for me to imagine myself capable of reconciling you to the Truth of any Contradictions by any Observations. It therefore becomes me only to state this Branch of the Evidence. If it contains any Contradictions in Facts material, I cannot lessen the Force of them: But if you see what is artfully termed by the Prosecutor contradictory Accounts, in the Light I do in this Branch of the Evidence, I really and seriously imagine, that we have been wasting your Time, both on the one Side and the other. For what does it all amount to more than this, that a general Fact, compounded of a Variety of Things done and said, when related on particular Occasions, and at different Times, has not always been minutely and exactly related the same Way? And therefore, from this Sort of Defect alone, which I believe no various Relations of a long Story were ever free from, can any Weight seem proper to be laid on this Part of the Prosecutors's Case? And yet, so far has this been pushed, that you have had a Contradiction endeavoured to be made appear to you, even from the figurative Expression of the unhappy Mother, in describing her Daughter's Wretchedness on her Return. The Midwife telling you, Mrs. Canning said to her, Here is my poor Daughter returned as naked as she was born—What! says Mr. Davy, did she say, as naked as she was born? The Energy, Gentlemen, of the Question, was to remind you that all Canning's

Accounts mentioned a Handkerchief on her Head, and a Bed-gown on her Shoulders. One can really be scarce serious in observing on Attempts of this Kind; and yet, Gentlemen, much of your Time has been taken up with Arguments on such seeming Contradictions. Pardon me in digressing in this Place to one more Remark; that Arguments drawn from such seeming Contradictions have been the only Materials, which the printed Trash of Quacks, Inspectors, and Justices, have supplied on either Side of this Question; and yet, Gentlemen, from this modern Practice of acquitting or condemning in Pamphlets, without Judge or Jury, it is easily foreseen, that not a Trial of any Importance will soon be laid before a Jury in that unprejudiced Manner, which the cautious Jealousy of the excellent Laws of this Country requires.

But to return, and to give one Proof, how far these Contradictions really did carry along with them any Conviction of Canning's Imposture; let us see whether those, who now make Inferences of Canning's Guilt from such Circumstances, have acted the Part, that Men, supposed thus convinced, would or could have done.

For, Gentlemen, you will observe, that Mr. Nash, Hague, and Aldridge, would now have you believe, that from the 1st of February, the Time they attended Canning at Enfield, they were all satisfied that Canning was at least mistaken. I will not ask, whether the Contradictions before Alderman Chitty, or elsewhere, were the Ground of their Conviction in this Particular. Satisfied they were, that Canning was mistaken; and yet, Gentlemen, they were all at the Trial of Squires. These Men, hitherto of unimpeached Characters, saw one Life in great Jeopardy for Felony; another Person trying as Accessary to that Felony; and yet offered no Evidence in Contradiction to that Proof, which they then believed to be false, and saw was likely to be so fatal.

The Reasons for not doing this Act of necessary Justice you have heard. One of these convinced Gentlemen was, if I remember, to attend a City Feast. The other was so terrified with the Perjury, that he could make no Attempts to prevent the fatal Effects of it. But there is something still more particular in the Conduct of Mr. Nash: I produced a Letter to him, dated the 10th of February, which he acknowledged to be his; and you will observe, this is almost a Fortnight after he tells you that he was convinced that Squires and Wells were not justly accused.

And yet, Gentlemen, what is the Purport of this Letter? It is wrote to one Mr. Lyon, a known and zealous Friend of the Defendant, and it is to inform Mr. Lyon, that considerable Contributions might be raised about Enfield-Wash for the poor unhappy Girl, and that he wishes them good Luck. Good Luck! Gentlemen, In what? Will you believe Mr. Nash wished them good Luck in a Contribution, by the Means of which he must know that Innocence was designed to be arraigned? that an Accusation, he then believed false, would be supported by Perjury? Or, are we now to believe, that Mr. Nash, thus convinced, was weak enough to think Canning that poor unhappy Girl, as to be a worthy Object of his Recommendation to Charity? Let the former Conduct of these three Gentlemen explain and account for themselves, if it can: But yet see how far they have been positive in Facts, where we have nothing to do do either with their Observations or Opinions, and which, from henceforth, I think no Man can place any Reliance on. They have all positively sworn, that Canning continued fixed to her first Charge on Squires; though the Warrant was taken out against Mother Wells; though all her Friends, and the City Officer, expected, nay pointed out Wells as the Criminal; though Wells was continually running her Face close up to Canning's, and interrogating her, Is it me? Is it me, Madam? though the more artful Gypsey, who is neither deaf nor blind as yet, during this Transaction kept her Face much concealed, till positively charged by Canning. Then, indeed, directly the Mask of her Deformity is produced, and made a Defence, which, to a Person conscious of no Guilt, would have appeared a much more natural Protection, by being never concealed at all.

While we are still on this Scene at Enfield-Wash, if you are to suppose Canning's Story all a Fiction, nothing but a Design to carry on a Cheat; Why should Canning determine on the Gypsey? The Name of the Gypsey had been echoed through all Parts of the House. You cannot suppose Canning ignorant of the Life these People lead; never fixed long in a Place.—Mother Wells then at her usual Place of Abode,—of an infamous Character,—Facts both agreed to be known to Canning: And yet Canning, as the Foundation of her Cheat, determines on a Fact, which, if she knew to be false, she must be morally sure would depend on her Evidence alone, and that too (from her own Account) liable to be contradicted by the Testimony of Virtue Hall; for, in all her Accounts, she is uniform, that Virtue Hall was there, when she was brought in: And if all this was a known Forgery to Canning, could she have left such a Witness's Character unimpeached by her Accusation? for could she then imagine, that instead of Hall's appearing to confute her, she would appear to confirm the Truth of her whole Testimony?

If Inferences drawn from Facts are in this Inquiry to have their Weight in Opposition to Facts themselves, I only desire this Part of the Transaction may be remembered, when you take the Consideration of this Case, under the Head of probable or improbable.

Gentlemen, I have hitherto confined myself to Observations and Answers to such Facts, as the Prosecutor himself has made a Part of his Case. And as the Facts we have to lay before you will not require the Illustration of refined Arguments and Observations, I hope not to trespass much more on your Patience. I am sorry my Duty has obliged me to have done it so long already. But, before I give you the general State of our own Evidence, which is all I shall attempt to do in this Part of our Defence for the Prisoner, let me only remark to you the Omission of a Piece of Evidence, so material in the Confirmation of Canning's Guilt, that I am sure the Prosecutor's Council could not have omitted it, had they really thought the Story as false, as they have, by other Sort of Evidence, endeavoured to make it; that is, Gentlemen, their not having called Virtue Hall here to support the Truth of her Recantation. That they could have had her, is certain; that she might give Testimony, extremely material, on one Side or the other, cannot be denied; that her Word, or her Oath, (I know not which has been relied on) has been deemed void of all Credit, cannot, I am sure, be asserted; because I am confident, that it must have been used as one Argument, at least, for the Application for that Mercy, which has been shewn to Mary Squires. I say, Gentlemen, these are some of my Reasons why I think Virtue Hall has gained Credit, since the Time she was sworn here in Confirmation of Canning's Story; and therefore, Gentlemen, why is she not now brought here by the Prosecutor to give a Sanction to the Truth of that Recantation on Oath? What, Gentlemen, can the Absence of this Witness be imputed to, but that they were afraid (I do not mean the Council were afraid, but the prudent Management of their Cause was justly afraid) of another solemn and public Examination of this Witness. I think this Observation a just one, or I would not have made it. The Gentlemen have rather chose that I should make it, than risque another Relapse from Virtue Hall. But perhaps, whatever may be your Verdict, her Recantation will still serve for Cafes and News-papers.

Mr. Recorder. If she had been here, she has already discredited herself, and cannot be a Witness.

Mr. Moreton continues. With Submission, Sir, I must insist on the Propriety of my former Observation. Virtue Hall, by the known Practice and Rules of Evidence, is a legal and competent Witness. Courts of Justice can take no Notice of private Recantations, or of Discoveries supposed to be made to Magistrates in private, so far as to repel the Testimony of a Witness: I therefore rely on the Propriety of my Observation.

And now, Gentlemen, I have gone through the Case, the Evidence, and the Conduct of the Prosecutor. I shall have Occasion to be but very short in stating our Answer to each of them; because, as I before said, I shall trust the Merits of the Defence to absolute Facts, not to refined Observations on them. Many of the Facts, proper on our Part, have been proved by the Prosecutor's own Evidence; such as the Absence of Canning, her Return, her Account of herself, her real Condition, her Charge of Squires at Enfield-Wash, and many more Circumstances, which I have already observed on to you. I wish a Repetition of the same Facts could be wholly excluded from our Evidence, merely for the sake of Time; but I foresee that is impracticable. But, Gentlemen, these Facts being already proved, the Remainder of our Proof is pointed to the absolute Overthrow of the Truth of the Prosecutor's alibi of Mary Squires, at the Time of Canning's Robbery and Confinement. In order to do this, we shall call you many Witnesses, who have lived in and about Enfield-Wash from fifteen to thirty Years, People of known and established Credit.

The Prosecutor has had a List of these Witnesses now many Days, and, in that Respect, the necessary Adjournments of this Trial have given him an Advantage and Opportunity of impeaching the Credit of all our Witnesses, if their Characters cannot stand the Test of Inquiry: I say, by a Number of Witnesses, unconnected in any Respect with the Party in whose Behalf they now appear, we shall shew you, that this never to be forgotten Image of Mary Squires was seen at Enfield on several of the Days, which the Witnesses for the Prosecutor fix her to be in the different Parts of her Journey in the West. We shall not, indeed, have so exact a Diary of the various Motions of these Vagrants, (I might say Felons, for so they are by Law) or of their various Entertainments; their Companions and Amusements. Whether the Want of such particular Exactness in the Relation of Facts, in themselves, at the Time performed, entirely indifferent, will diminish the Credit of our Account or not, I shall leave to your own Observation. They all, as I have before said, stand free and clear of all Imputation; as to Credit; and they have, almost all of them, some natural as well as particular Account to assign for their Remembrance of the Time of the Abode of these remarkable Strollers at the Wash.

Some will tell you of their dealing with them in one Way, some in another. It would be inexcusable to be particular on this Head. — There are those who took Money of them; and from a vulgar Belief of some superior Power in these People called Gypsies, thought it necessary to purify the Money so taken, lest it might be conjured from them by this left-handed Kind of Divinity. There are others, who will tell you, that they have parted with their Money to this very Woman in her Trade of Fortune-telling, — have been Face to Face with this remarkable Impression of Deformity. — And therefore so far the alibi proved by the Prosecutors has an express Contradiction in Proof. There are other Ingredients in our Evidence, which afford a Light to those Parts of Canning's own Narration, which gives you both her Journey to, and Return from the Wash. I only mention all these, in general, because I shall rely on them, when we go into our Proof. Whatever other Observations either the Prosecutor's Case and Proof, or our own affords, (and many they must be which I have omitted) I am satisfied the Care and Diligence of the Gentlemen who are on the same Side with me will amply supply. — Tired, therefore, as I am, in having attempted to go through so very long a Case, — tired, as I am sure you, Gentlemen, must be, by that most laudable and impartial Attention, which you have shewn through this whole Inquiry, — I shall only beg that Attention to a very few general Observations. The Weight and Credit of Evidence is your Province. The Weight and Credit of Arguments and Observations, in Opposition to Facts expressly sworn, you will know how to estimate. — If, on the whole, only a just and rational Doubt should remain on your Judgments, the Policy, the Lenity, the Justice of our Laws, incline to Mercy. In Circumstances which must have been, nay, yet are doubtful, Squires has found Mercy.

And tho' I am satisfied there never was a Time, when the most rigid Hand of Justice was more properly required to the Suppression of Perjury; I am as fully convinced there never was a Time, when active and resolute Prosecutions for other reproachful Villanies should be more cautiously deterred by such Proceedings as the present against the now Defendant.

Mr. N A R E S.

May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury;

Notwithstanding this Cause has taken so long Time already, and no Man upon Earth is more sensible of the great Care that should be taken not to mispend the Time of the Court unnecessarily, than myself; yet, as it is now become my Duty to make some few Observations, I shall make no Apology for intruding on your Patience somewhat longer, though perhaps, in the Consequence, it may be to little Purpose.

I am not only of Council; but, I will say, greatly concerned for the Prisoner at the Bar; who, to use the Epithet of my learned Leader, may be truly called extremely unfortunate, and that in many Instances; unfortunate in being accused of any Crime, if ever so innocent; unfortunate in having once appeared in this Court as a Witness, and being so unhappy as to be believed; and unfortunate likewise in this Respect, as she is now brought to her Trial for a Perjury in such a Cause, and under such Circumstances, as, I will venture to say, the Annals of Time cannot produce a similar Instance. It is not my Inclination, or my Meaning, to reflect upon any Man: I mean not to reflect upon the Worshipful Magistrate, through whose Lenity, though, perhaps, a mistaken or injudicious one, she now stands accused; though I cannot help observing, that this Prosecution hath been carried on and supported with more Warmth and Spirit than any I ever had the Honour to attend; and if this Warmth and Spirit spring merely from a Zeal of bringing a supposed Criminal to exemplary Punishment, far be it from me to blame or condemn it. — God forbid such a Warmth should ever cool, or such a Spirit grow degenerate.

Thus much I think it material to say for the Prisoner at the Bar, on the Nature and Manner of her Prosecution; that it is totally unprecedented, that, as a Prosecutor who had convicted a Criminal, she should now come to be tried to overturn that Conviction. You know, as well as I, the unfortunate Prisoner was a Witness against Mary Squires and Susannah Wells; and you know, that they were both convicted; and you will recollect one Circumstance well worth your Consideration, and which I shall endeavour to enforce more strongly hereafter, that it was not on her Testimony only that these Persons were convicted, but her Evidence was supported by the Testimony of another Person; which Person's Testimony you are now totally deprived of, because it hath been artfully insinuated to the World, as many other Circumstances have been, that she hath now recanted all she swore at the Trial, and therefore the poor Prisoner at the Bar dare not venture to call her, for fear she should, by any means, be induced to contradict her former Evidence; which if she did, the Prisoner might be condemned, instead of acquitted, by the Mouths of her own Witnesses. How that Recantation was brought about, I shall hereafter tell you from the Instructions of my Brief: But I cannot help making this Observation at present, that the Gentlemen on Behalf of the Prosecution have not ventured to insinuate, nor attempted to prove, what Means were or could be used by, or what Influence that Woman was or could be under to the poor Prisoner and her poor Relations, to induce her to swear as she did, if all she swore was so gross a Falshy.

And, Gentlemen, however, thro' Tenderness or Lenity, a Magistrate may think, (for the sake of any particular Persons, being convinced in their own private Judgments that such Persons have been wrongfully convicted) that such a Prosecution is laudable; yet, give me leave to say, because because I can speak it from great Authority, that such Inquiries into the Guilt or Innocence of a Prisoner, after they have been legally convicted, are vastly inconvenient and improper; and although Prosecutions of this Nature may shew Kindness to Particulars, yet they may be attended with Cruelty to Mankind in general, as they tend to interrupt, at least, if not overturn that common Course of Justice, that the Wisdom of this Kingdom, in all Ages, has established; and may, and must serve to intimidate and prevent Numbers of People from commencing Prosecutions to endeavour to bring the Guilty to Punishment, lest, by some strange Alteration of Affairs, they themselves may, in their Turn, be prosecuted.

And, Gentlemen, when I say Prosecutions and Inquiries of this Nature must be attended with great Inconveniency to the Community in general, I speak it from Authority, in a Case in which I was Council for the Prisoner.

There was a Man, whose Name was Williams, that was indicted at Stafford, for a Robbery committed at Wolverhampton Town's End, the 24th of December: It appeared in Evidence, the Moment the Prisoner was charged with the Robbery, he told the Prosecutor he was that very Day at Islington: The Prosecutor, however, swore to the Man, though it was by Moon-light: After which I called for the Prisoner five Witnesses, four of them from Islington, and another from Redbourn, near St. Alban's. In my Life I never heard so circumstantial an Account; and such a vast Multitude of concurring Circumstances, in point of Time, and Knowledge of the Man, to prove him at Islington at the Time the Fact was committed; insomuch that the learned Judge, who tried the Prisoner, asked Mr. Serjeant Haywood, who was of Council with the Prosecutor, What he could say to it? for that he never heard so strong a Defence in his Life. In Reply, they called two poor Persons, who swore they saw the Prisoner at Wolverhampton the Day the Robbery was committed. The Prisoner was convicted. Soon after, as soon as the Prisoner returned to Gaol, he declared his Brother committed the Robbery; and there being a great Disposition in the Country in general to save the Prisoner, supposing him to be innocent, they directed the Brother to be taken up, and, on being charged with this Robbery, he immediately confessed it, and several other Robberies, for which he was immediately committed to Warwick Gaol, and for one of which he was afterwards hanged. This Account was brought to the Judge at Skrewsbury, and he was so far prevailed on, as to order the Under-Sheriff of Staffordshire to write to his Agent to inquire into the Characters of the Islington Witnesses. — The Agent accordingly inquired of the Clergyman of the Parish, and received for an Answer, that they were all Persons of good Character. — This Account was sent directly to me at Gloucester, with a Request from many Gentlemen to wait on the Judge with it. This Request I complied with, and the Judge read the Account, but told me he had, notwithstanding, some Reasons to apprehend him guilty; and however he might be inclined to extend his Mercy to this Prisoner in particular, yet he should not do it, as he thought it of the most dangerous Consequence to the Justice of the Nation in general, to try the Guilt or Innocence of a Prisoner, after his Country, on a fair and impartial Trial, had found him guilty. After this the Man was hanged; and after he was executed, twenty Witnesses might have been produced to have proved him at Wolverhampton, when he was sworn to be at Islington, and no Person in the Country doubted of his Guilt. This I mention to shew how dangerous these subsequent Trials must necessarily be. Why are they dangerous? because, supposing People wicked enough, either out of Love to the Party accused, or Malice to the Prosecutor, to meditate Revenge on him two or three Years after, (for there is no Time limited to call his Prosecutor to an Account, and to indict him for Perjury) he may be brought to a Trial, when, perhaps, all his Witnesses are dead, and it will be totally impossible for him to support his Testimony. When I have said this, I am sure these Observations will and ought, at least, to weigh with you thus far, that if any Doubt should arise of the Guilt of the Prisoner, you will not give the least Encouragement to this Sort of Prosecution; for, supposing People wicked enough either to be tempted by Rewards, or Promises of Rewards, there is not a Man living safe or secure from some Prosecutions of this Nature.

I cannot help once more mentioning the great Difficulties the Prisoner lies under, in being deprived of the Testimony of the only Person, who could speak to the same Facts the Prisoner did, which would prove her innocent. Every body knows that Virtue Hall gave the same Account that the Prisoner did of the Robbery; and what convinces me, beyond all Possibility of Doubt, that what Virtue Hall said could not be dictated or taught her, is, she did not only go Step by Step with the Prisoner's Relation, as far as that went,—but after she had left the Story, Virtue Hall took it up again, and told you what became of the Stays, and the Conversation that passed after she was put into the Room, and what she feared from too nice an Inquiry into it afterwards. This Witness has not been called.

In order to obviate any Objections or Observations that were expected to be made from not producing her, it hath been thrown out, that if she was produced, she could not be a Witness, at least, on Behalf of the Prosecution, because the Moment she came to charge the Prisoner, she must confess herself perjured: But I beg leave to insist, that such an Objection would only go to the Credit, not to her Competency; and it was so determined in this Court, in an Indictment against one Murphy for a Forgery of a Seaman's Will, (Vide p. 183 of this Volume.) There was a pretended Will set up and proved in the Commons; the very Man who forged the Will, and had sworn in the Commons, to obtain the Probate, and to authenticate the Will, was called on Behalf of the Prosecutor, to prove that he forged it by the Directions of the Prisoner. I made the same Objection to his Testimony, as is now hinted at with respect to Virtue Hall's; but the Court over-ruled it, and the Man was admitted an Evidence. He came, and told the Court, all he had said upon Oath in the Commons was a Contrivance between Murphy and himself, and that every Word of it was false; and on his Evidence, supported by some corroborating Circumstances, the Prisoner was convicted. — If there wanted other Arguments or Cases to prove this Sort of Evidence admissible in this Court, I need only mention the common Case of Subornation of Perjury; there the Person who hath been suborned, suborned, and hath sworn false, is generally, if not always, called to convict the Suborner, and to shew and prove by what Means he was prevailed on.

Virtue Hall then certainly would have been a proper Witness, if they would have called her. I have already mentioned some great Difficulties the Prisoner is put under from her not being produced: I shall mention only one more; the Prisoner may, by this Means, be deprived of an Opportunity of shewing the Court the Methods that were used to bring about this Recantation; and, as she may yet be called, which will make this Account Evidence, and as I apprehend it will be for the Benefit of my Client, I cannot conceal it. And, Gentlemen, I am instructed to say, and have many Witnesses in my Brief to prove those Instructions, that Virtue Hall's Recantation was brought about in a very extraordinary Manner: She was called upon in public to declare, whether what she had sworn on the Trial was true or false. And tho' I doubt not but the Magistrate meant well by it, yet, when called upon thus publickly to make Recantation, what did she say? She declared openly, all she had sworn was Truth. She was asked the same Question again, and she made the same Answer; upon which somebody or other suggested, it would be proper to take her in private. For God's sake! why in private? I am sure, by the Knowledge I have of the Worshipful Magistrate, he could never intend to seduce her by Rewards or Promises: But this may be the Case; the poor Girl might weakly imagine, that, if she altered her Evidence, she might have some Rewards, though the strict Justice of the Magistrate never could or would have given her the least Foundation for such a Belief. But, as the Poor and the Ignorant are more liable to be led away with false Fears or Hopes, built on the weak Basis of their own Imaginations, the taking her into a private Room was by no means proper. After she had been examined in private, she did return and made the Recantation. But, if she did make that Recantation, why does she not come here, and swear and avow it? I dreaded seeing her appear; because, if all she said was false, it must have been owing to some undue Influence, and in consequence of some deep-laid Plan, Scheme, or Contrivance of the Prisoner at the Bar, or some other Person. Nothing of this Nature hath even been suggested; then what Room can there be for any Presumption of that Nature? What could induce Virtue Hall, who had no Friendship, nor even Acquaintance with the Prisoner, to turn Evidence on her Behalf, against her greatest Friend in the World, in whose House she had lived, and, perhaps, been supported? Reward she could not have from the poor indigent Prisoner, or any of her Relations; and therefore the Behaviour of Virtue Hall, if she did swear false, is totally unaccountable.

But now, Gentlemen, having said this, in order to take off or counteract the Prejudices that have artfully been raised against the Prisoner; here she now stands at the Bar, and she must be tried, however improperly she may have been brought upon her Trial. I cannot help mentioning, happy she is, that she has got such a Jury to try her; for, according to the best Observations I can make, I never saw a Jury attend with greater Impartiality.

I should now consider what are the Principles the Council for the Prosecutor have laid down, as the Foundation for proving the Prisoner guilty. They say, the Story is extremely improbable, — full of Absurdities, — so ridiculous, that no Person in his Senses could contrive or believe it: But, Gentlemen, let me tell you, under the Direction of the Court, Trials for Perjury are not to be determined by Matters of Improbability. If a Person is indicted for Perjury, and one Witness only is produced to swear directly the contrary, the Person cannot be convicted; because there is Oath against Oath, and the Justice of this Country is never weighing the Credit of Witnesses in golden Scales; but, if there is Oath against Oath, the presumptive Innocence of each is equal. Then consider, the Prisoner hath sworn the Fact; this is to be considered an Oath by one Witness of a Fact, which is only attempted to be contradicted by Circumstances, or by Matter of Improbability.

Mr. Davy has said, that no Person living, nay, human Nature itself, is not capable of such Cruelty, as that of putting another Person to Pain, merely through Wantonness. And I have seen an Expression of a very great Writer to that Purpose, tho' in other Terms, "There is no Man upon Earth so wicked, as to play the Platonic with Damnation." Let us consider how far that Principle is applicable to the Prisoner at the Bar. There is a Maxim never controverted, Nemo repente fuit turpissimus. I may safely say, no Person leaped from exceeding good to exceeding bad in a Moment; it takes up a great deal of Time to get rid of that natural Modesty, which every Person is endued with; a Man must go by Steps to the Pitch of Wickedness. In what State was this poor Girl before this Transaction? How do the Witnesses on Behalf of the Prosecutor describe her? "A Girl of as good a Character as any in the World; I have known her from her Birth; and I have never heard any Ill of her," was the Language of Mrs. Mayle. How could this Girl, from this very Instant, a Girl of a good Character, turn that wicked and abandoned Wretch, that she must be, to give all this false Evidence against a Person she had never seen in her Life? Is it conceivable she could have had any Scheme to injure Squires, who was an utter Stranger? It certainly is not. Indeed, could that be conceived, she must be as wicked as Mr. Davy's Rhetoric can paint her; but whilst she stands thus accused of Wickedness, she must be acquitted of one dangerous Part of her Character, which hath been laid to her Charge, which is Art or Contrivance; for no one can think her capable of either, who can suppose this a formed Scheme; because, supposing it to be so, it is the only one that could not fail of being detected.

But the Gentlemen have said, and would have you believe, the Prisoner's Friends have taken great Care and Pains, as far as possibly they could, to fix this to be the Place, and to ascertain the Descriptions of it. 'Tis insinuated, a Man went, came back again from meeting her on the Road, saying, It is all right; There is Hay. But when that comes to be observed upon, you will find no more Foundation for that Relation, than for some other Evidence that has been given of the Contrivance in ascertaining the Place. But could there be any Contrivance in ascertaining the Person?

Person? It would be a Reflection on your Understandings to intimate that you could think so. Wells was the Person pointed out, and the Person all the World thought it must be; her own Character must have convicted her; she could never have set up a Defence like this; the Prisoner must have been sure to have fixed her at that Place, at least during the Time of her Confinement. No Person would have interposed to have saved her from the Gallows. But how did the Prisoner act when she came there? That very Person, who had been thus pointed out to her, and whom she with Safety and Impunity might have accused, if she had had any Scheme or Design of injuring any one, she totally acquits of the Fact of robbing her. It was asked, Did she rob you? Her Answer was, No. In an Instant she said so. One of the Company went so far as to say, There was Mother Wells. What could be expected from that, but that she would have instantly said, That is the Woman? But what does she say? That is not the Woman that robbed me; there is the Woman that robbed me, (pointing to Squires.) A Person, that no one there did, or could direct her to; because it was contrary to every body's Expectation. Then Mr. Davy would have you imagine this was a concerted Scheme between her and her Mother to raise Contributions. Let us try this Suggestion upon any one Principle of Nature or Reason. Upon my Word I can scarce think of such a Notion, and keep my Countenance. I remember the Saying of a very great Man, which is the best Answer that can be made to it:

“ The Man that hangs, or beats out's Brains,
“ The Devil's in him, if he feigns.”

Would she go within a Hair's-Breadth, nay to the very Brink of Death, to raise Friends by way of Contribution? Can you a Moment doubt, upon hearing even Mrs. Mayle's Account of her, that her Life was in the utmost Danger? Indeed there were no Hopes of her Recovery. If you have any Doubt of that Fact, the Prisoner hath other Witnesses, who could prove it to a Demonstration. What! is this Girl to kill herself, to have a Subscription after her Death, for the Benefit of her Family? It is inconceivable to the last Degree. Then consider how consistently the Mother acted with any Scheme or Design of that Nature. If she intended her Daughter should be almost starved, and should be concealed till this was brought about, why did she advertise her Daughter? which was the only Means to discover her immediately, and mar the Plot, if she knew when she was to return. How could she be (as it was beyond what could be feigned) so particularly affected at the Sight of her, on her Return? These Circumstances must be totally laid out of the Question, before you can believe it a Scheme; or, if she did it designedly, it must be done without any View, either to benefit herself, or any of her Family. But then the Gentlemen have recourse again to Improbabilities: They ask, How could she possibly go from Mother Wells's to London, without telling her Complaint? Mr. Moreton has mentioned many Reasons, why she did so. Mr. Davy would have you believe, the only one that could be suggested, was for fear of meeting any of the People belonging to the House; and to answer this, he hath said, why did not she call at Gentlemen's Houses? as she could never conceive she should meet with Mother Wells and her Conspirators there. Think of this Objection one Minute, and you will not want an Answer to it. How was this poor Wretch, in that Condition,—wretched and almost frightful in Appearance,—without Strength (almost) to tell her Story,—to gain Credit, if she had complained? She might as well have attempted to have told her Story to the Winds. She must necessarily argue thus with herself, if she had her Senses: Weak as I am, I must endeavour to get Home before I tell my Complaints; because I must go to the Persons that know me, before I can be credited.

The Moment she came Home, she made known her Story; and that was the proper Time to make it known. But the Manner, in which she related it, I shall observe on hereafter, as it very well deserves your Attention.

Having endeavoured to answer some of the Objections made to the Girl's Story, let us now attend a little to the Witnesses on Behalf of the Prosecution, and consider how far these have been consistent with themselves, and how far they are the best Witnesses that could have been produced, in order to clear up this intricate Affair; because, if it should be obvious (as I dare say it is to every body) that the Prosecutor has it in his Power to clear up this Matter, and yet hath left Witnesses unexamined, who were the only ones capable of doing it in point of Law as well as Reason, every Thing must be presumed, that can be presumed against the Prosecution.

It will take up too much of your Time to go into critical Observations on every Witness; therefore I shall only here and there point out some particular Circumstances, which, perhaps, may have escaped Mr. Moreton's Notice, with respect to such Inconsistencies. The Gentlemen of the other Side, conscious to themselves that there have been some gross Contradictions, have endeavoured to persuade you, that supposing some Circumstances in the Account their Witnesses have given are inconsistent, and others entirely false; yet you are not to regard any Thing that does not go to the very substantial Point, which is, whether Squires was then at Enfield-Wash; and that little Circumstances are always to be overlooked: But give me Leave to tell you, that is not the Way of trying the Weight of Evidence. And I am sure, when you come to consider what the Nature of the Evidence is, you will perceive it absolutely necessary to go out of the common Road in the Examination of the Witnesses, in order to detect the Villany: You will easily think it is absolutely impossible a Set of Witnesses can contradict one another in the very Point they are called for, when they have been half a Year conferring together on that Point only; they know how to swear, as to that Particular; they are upon their Guard, as to that; they know how to answer you. Then how are these Witnesses to be treated? They are to be taken, as far as possible, off their Guard, and to be asked those Things they thought never would be inquired into. It is by this Means that you are to find out the Inconsistency; because Truth is always the same, and always consistent; it will be equally so with respect to the Circumstances attending a Fact, as the very Fact itself.

Gentlemen, I shall begin with George Squires, the Son:—What did that Man say? You observe, Mr. Davy represented him as a weak, ignorant Man, and almost stigmatized him for a Fool, the Moment he appeared; and for what Reason? 'Tis not difficult to assign the Reason,—because he was apprehensive that he would make some Blunder: But was there the least Sign of either a weak, an ignorant, or a foolish Man, during the whole Course of his Examination from Abbotsbury to London? There certainly was not. This Examination he expected, he was apprized of it, and prepared.—Then consider how he appeared, when taken out of the Road from Abbotsbury to London: Mr. Moreton asked him, Where did he set out from? He staggered a good deal, and desired to be asked no more Questions; at last, he went from Kent, from his Sister Mary.—Pray, what House was she at?—I cannot tell.—Where did you lie? Where did you trade? Or, where did you buy your Goods, or where did you dispose of them? In above an hundred and fifty Miles travelling, he scarce tells you he went into or by any one Town, or notorious Place: What is the Reason he can give no better Account? Why, because he never expected to have been asked about it. In short, such a strange and improbable Account I never heard in all my Life.—Then consider the other Evidence that has been given. Far be it from me, to pretend to say they have not given you an exceeding strong Account of this Woman's being at South-Parrot, and coming from thence up to London: But there is this Observation to be made; even with respect to these Witnesses; several of them have said, before the Time of Squires's Trial, they expected to be called upon as Witnesses, and declared what they could prove; yet not one in twenty either did appear on the former Trial, or were ever asked to appear. But this Observation may be made as to the Number of Witnesses that have been examined, that, wherever a Story is talked of by one or two People, and they have declared that they had seen Mary Squires the Gypsey, and that they were acquainted with her, another Person, to whom it is related, recollects he hath seen a Gypsey; and being told that must be the same, would not any body be almost persuaded, in half a Year's Time, that they must mean the same Person? When the Centre is moved, there is a Circle succeeds, and spreads from Man to Man; but supposing the first to be deceived, all the rest might depend upon his Credit; whereas, had they been asked, upon recent Reflection, abstracted from other People's Representations, they never would have spoke with that Degree of Certainty.

But supposing these Observations to be justly made, Mr. Davy says, there is one Set of Witnesses that must prove the Prisoner guilty, beyond all Degree of Doubt. We have, says he, some Witnesses, which were the Girl's Friends; they went down to assist her as far as possible, not imagining she would tell a false Story; but when her own Friends turn against her, it is the strongest Evidence in the World, to think she was deceived. The principal Witness called for this Purpose was Mr. Nash; and he tells you, the very Instant he came down to Enfield, he found the Girl was in the wrong: He said to her, Child, you are mistaken, you can never have been there. After what he hath here sworn, could you conceive that Mr. Nash, a Man of Sense, a Man of Prudence, a Man of Justice, could ever, after he was convinced the Prisoner was in the wrong, continue to give any Assistance to the Girl in the Prosecution? I am sure it is casting a greater Reflection upon Mr. Nash, than I would chuse to do on any one, to suppose he could act such a Part: But how do we find him acting? Doth he behave consistently with such Conviction of her being deceived? Ten Days after, he writes to a Person of Fortune and Consequence, (who will be produced) to encourage a Subscription in Favour of the Girl. This Objection, I think, is not to be answered. Then another Friend of the Prisoner's, Mr. Aldridge, is called, and he said exactly the same Thing: He was every bit as much convinced; he detested every Thing the Girl had told him; and, in short, he was the greatest Convert that ever could possibly be imagined. I asked him, Have you had any Conversation with Mr. or Mrs. Howard since that Time? What does he say? I own I have, and I distributed a Paper in Favour of the Prisoner. And, unless my Instructions are false, he then declared he believed the Story, and earnestly desired they would encourage the Subscription.

I should almost have suspected my Brief, which gives me an Account of the Behaviour of these three Gentlemen, who have now been called against the Prisoner at the Bar, had not they themselves given such an Instance of their own Behaviour in this very Court, as is not to be accounted for. They were all convinced of the Mistake of Elizabeth Canning; they have now on their Oaths sworn it; they were all convinced that her Story was a Falshood, from the Beginning to the End; and that the poor Woman, the Gypsey, who then stood in Danger of her Life, was as innocent of what she then stood accused of, as the Child unborn; they were present in Court when this innocent Woman was so unjustly accused: What would you have expected they would have done? what common Humanity and common Honesty would immediately have suggested,—would have interposed, and prevented the Blow which was just then falling upon the Head of the Innocent. Did they act in such a Manner? No, they acted in a Manner which common Humanity would make every one presume they were incapable of acting in, had not they themselves sworn it. In short, one was engaged to Dinner, another was Butler to some great Person, and every one had some trifling Excuse to desert and forsake the poor Wretch, when falling into that Destruction which she did not deserve, and which they only were capable of preventing. What Conclusion can be drawn from such a Behaviour? I will not say, it necessarily follows, that they are in this particular Instance prevailed on to say, what they otherwise would not; but thus far I will say, that they have been, according to their own Account, influenced by trifling and inconsiderable Motives to desert those first Principles of Honesty and Justice, which, notwithstanding all the Temptations on Earth, they ought obstinately to have adhered to.

Let us now consider the other Head of Evidence I proposed to observe on. Has here been any Evidence omitted, that might serve to clear up the Story? Indisputably there has. Why was not Mary Squires, the Daughter, called? Why was not Mrs. Wells called, in order to shew you that all this was a Falshity? With respect to Mary Squires, have you heard a Hint against her Character? She could have spoke materially to the Fact of her Mother's being at another Place. She was at Brentford; she wrote to her Brother, giving an Account of her Illness; she would have told you the Time when she wrote this Letter, and in what Manner they went from Brentford to Enfield; but she has not been called. Why was not Lucy Squires

Squires called? She was more concerned in it; she, in short, was the very Person that could have made this appear either a Falshood, to a Demonstration, or thrown such a Damp upon the whole Prosecution, that they could never have gone on with it. She attended her Mother thro' the whole Rout, and could have confirmed every single Circumstance her Brother had related, supposing all true. Why was she not called? I need not mention the Reason, it is so extremely obvious: The Gentlemen on the other Side have Art and Judgment enough not to call a Person to do Mischief; they saw how George Squires was baffled and confounded; in short, gave no Sort of Account whatsoever, when taken the least out of the settled Rout. What are they afraid of, but that she might contradict her Brother? which there seems great Reason to imagine must have been the Consequence of producing her. Then why was not Wells produced? There may be one good Reason assigned for that; but the same Reason they assign for not producing of her, must weigh greatly with every body as a Corroboration of the Innocence of the Prisoner, and the Truth of her Account.

It may be said, that she was a Woman convicted: But she is now pardoned, and she is a Witness in point of Law. But then they will say, she is a Woman of bad Character, and no Credit can be given to her Evidence: When they say that, they admit her a Woman capable of doing the Act complained of, or receiving Persons who could do it. They were apprehensive this would cut both Ways: For had she been called, and the Prisoner could have contradicted her in any Circumstance of the Story, I am sure you would not only have been induced to have disbelieved what she had said, but to have believed her guilty; and if you did believe that, it would be very hard to direct the Line between the Innocence or Guilt of her and the Gypsey; and you would have been able to have distinguished why one attempts a Defence, the other not; because one is always fixed to a Spot, and could never have set up this Defence; the other is a Vagabond, and it ever will be difficult to fix her Habitation or Residence, for one Day together.

Gentlemen, these are all the Observations that occur to me on the Prosecutor's own Evidence, except one particular Circumstance with respect to the Hay said to be in the Chamber. You have heard it said, there was a great Quantity of Hay; and they would have you believe this Hay was all a feigned Story, founded on the Representation of those who went down before, in order to prevent the Prisoner's giving a false Account. But what does Adamson say when he came back? Says he, she says there is Hay in the Room, and the Description is right. Will you, upon your Oaths, say, Adamson had told her there was Hay in the Room, and that she had never mentioned Hay to any one before? No. The Meaning of that Part of the Evidence is plain; the Girl had told other People there was Hay in the Room, tho' she had not told it to Adamson before; and we shall prove she declared so, in the very first Description she gave of the Room. But Mr. Adamson himself will be called in Behalf of the Prisoner, and he will swear he never dictated to her, or gave her the least Intimation to say there was, or was not, Hay in the Room. And as there was Hay in the Room, beyond all Doubt, I shall only ask this Question, How came this Description of the Room (which is a very extraordinary one) to answer, if the Prisoner never had been there, and all her Story was an utter Falshity? But, Gentlemen, there is one Argument arising from the Prisoner's Evidence, that, to me, seems totally unanswerable: I myself have heard it mentioned; and it hath been artfully, though now it appears falsely, insinuated to thousands, in order to prejudice them against the Prisoner, and to leave no Doubt but she must be convicted, that the Prosecutor would actually shew where she was at that Time. I know the Gentleman who related it. And I call on the Prosecutor now to account but for any four Hours out of the twenty-eight Days, and I shall be convinced all is a Falshity; and that she is not only greatly deceived, but wilfully perjured. Has it been attempted to be proved? I beg leave to say it has not. What Weight then ought this Circumstance to have with you? It ought to have more or less, according to the Time or Opportunity that there hath been to prove where she was. Had the Fact happened but a Week ago, I must confess, it might with Truth be said, there was neither Time nor Opportunity to make the Inquiry. But let us consider the Circumstances of this Case; the Fact committed a Year and an half ago,—talked of before it came to Trial,—from the Time of Trial to this Time; I will venture to say there never was a Fact that hath undergone greater or more particular Inquiry. There have been Accounts published, which have gone all over the Kingdom; and, I believe, I may with Truth say, all over Europe. I do not believe there is an Individual in this great City that has not heard of this Affair, nor hath a Company met for one single Evening, where this was not a Subject-matter of Conversation. Then was there not Time or Opportunity to inquire into it? There certainly was; and unless they can shew what has been suggested, I mean where she was, it is one of the strongest Arguments in the World in Favour of the Prisoner. Thus then it stands on the Evidence on Behalf of the Prosecution.

With respect to our Evidence, I shall again take Notice, that, as to the Facts themselves, one Witness hath positively sworn to them; I mean, the Prisoner. You cannot now expect other Witnesses to swear to confirm hers, as to them; there never was but one, and that the Prisoner is now deprived of; therefore all we can do, will be to support her by Circumstances and Probability. And, in the first Place, we shall shew you the utmost Probability for her going there, for two Reasons: Because she is traced in the Road from thence (and not a Tittle of Evidence to say she was further) towards London, and not by one Person only, or by Persons who seemed to take no Notice of her; but we have in our Briefs no less than three, who saw her go by dressed in that very particular Manner in which she came Home, tracing her from that very Place towards London. One of the Men, at one of the Turnpikes, where she inquired her Way, went farther than merely describing her Dress; he had an Opportunity, by asking her Questions, of seeing her Face; and he will tell you, by the Observations he made then, and by seeing her soon after, he verily believes her to be the same Person.

When she came Home, she gave the Account you have heard: But the Manner in which she gave gave it, is very well worth your Consideration; it was not given in a wanton Manner, not with that Eagerness or in that Hurry an Impostor would have told it, in order to run through the Chain of her Story, and tell it as soon as she could, fearing she should forget it. How does she tell it? more as if she was desirous of concealing, than of artfully publishing it. You find her at her first Arrival so weak, that she could not run into a long Detail; and when she grew more able to relate it, it came out only by Answers to Questions asked from Time to Time; in which she answered no farther than the Question absolutely required, or obliged her. Is that like a formed Scheme or Story? It seems to me totally otherwise. But what will you say, when this same Mary Squires, who, as Mr. Davy hath urged, cannot be mistaken for another, who has that remarkable Stamp upon her Countenance, as he hath expressed it, is proved by twenty-five or thirty Witnesses (many of whom are Persons of Figure and Fortune) to be at Enfield-Wash on the 16th or 17th of December? Was she only seen to go by as a Traveller? No, that is not the Case; many conversed with her; she talked of losing a little Horse, and was lamenting her Loss; she inquired after this Horse of several; of some who were Strangers to her, and of others that had known her for a long Time: With respect to the first, they asked her, how they should know her Horse? she not only described him, but told them that he had a Lock on with her Name: They then asked, what her Name was? she told them, Mary Squires. We shall produce some Farmers, in whose Barns she hath lain for three or four Days together, to identify her Person; and no one can suppose but that these Witnesses are as little liable to Mistakes, as any produced on Behalf of the Prosecution. And this Observation you will carry with you during the whole Course of our Examination, that we shall not produce one Witness, who doth not live within ten Miles of London, nor one that the Prosecutor hath not long known of; they will be regarded or not, in proportion as their Characters do, or do not, stand impeached; and when I have said this, I defy the Prosecutor to impeach the Character of any one Witness. With respect to the Witnesses on Behalf of the Prosecution, it is absolutely impossible to know their Characters, or, at least, to prove them; because one is picked up at one Place, and another at another; and the Prisoner could never know, before she heard their Testimony, who was to be examined against her. Supposing you believe, from the Girl's Account, from the Witnesses we shall produce, that Mary Squires was at Enfield, there is an End of all Attempts of the Defence that was set up; and I dare say you will believe it, when we prove to you (which we shall certainly do) from Gentlemen that went down with the Prisoner to Enfield-Wash, who had no Reason to think Mother Wells's was the Place, any otherwise than they were led to imagine it the Place, from the Account she had given of it; and, however Mr. Lyon and Mr. Adamson may differ in point of Opinion, yet they must and will tell you, that the Place answered, as far as it could be expected, to the Description that was given by the Prisoner. We are not to catch at nice and minute Circumstances, with respect to the Description of the Room: If you were to make that a Rule of judging of the Truth of the Story, consider how the People that were in the House vary in their Descriptions. There were also some Pan-tiles, Judith Natus says, in the Room: Did any body else mention them but herself? One Man says, there was a Tub in the Room: Did any body else mention it but him? You observe, it is impossible to be conceived, that this poor Girl, who perhaps might be, and indeed there is the greatest Reason in the World to be certain, was in a Fright, should be so very minute and exact with respect to every Particular in the Room. But then it is said, supposing the Prisoner not contradicted in her Account in this Respect, yet it is plain her Mother and she contradict each other; for the Mother was observed to cry out, when her Daughter returned, that she was naked. Mrs. Mayle has given you an Account of it, and great Stress hath been laid on this Observation: But if we consider this Expression coolly, is there any Weight in the World to be laid upon the Words of a Parent, who at that Time was inflamed with Indignation that her Child had been used ill? Is it strange or remarkable, that this Mother should aggravate Things? Besides, the Word naked was in this Particular a comparative, not a positive Term; and she might certainly be called naked, according to the Prisoner's own Account, comparatively speaking, to what she was when her Mother saw her last.

But supposing this a feigned Story, how happened it, that any one Description or Circumstance, mentioned by the Prisoner, should coincide? And there are some Circumstances, all must agree, which amazingly correspond. How came the Chimney in the Corner of the Room? How came this Pitcher to be in the House? It makes no Difference, whether it was in the Room or not. How came it to be there at all, and so exactly to answer what she described the first Moment she came Home? We shall shew you, by Persons that went down, other Circumstances, altogether as surprising, that confirmed her Account. The Gentlemen, as if aware of one, asked, Could any Person get out of the Window? You observe, White told you, because he was forced so to do, well knowing that Adamson would say so, that he perceived some Lime, or Lath and Plaster, broke from the Wall, as if somebody had got out; should that be the Case, it is the strongest Circumstance in the World. One more I must mention; an Account was given from the first Instant, that her Ear was bloody. A Man, who lived over the Way, came and found either a Piece of Iron; or a Bit of Lead, under that Window, all bloody, and the Handkerchief produced here is stained with Blood; and, if that Circumstance should be proved, it is a very strong one, and such as requires the utmost Consideration. There is but one Observation or two I shall mention, and that is with respect to what has been called the Hinge, or Sort of Criterion, or Touch-stone, upon which you are to try this Narration; and that is the Letter. Mr. Moreton has made some strong Observations on it; and extremely strange it is, that this Letter should not appear dated in such a Manner, as to determine the Truth when it was wrote, or sent by the Post. Was this Date (for you will see the Letter) put in any Place where, either by the opening the Letter, or by the Wax coming near it, it might be possibly injured, there would be an End of any Observations that could be made on the Occasion; because you must know, who receive Letters upon Business, that it is impossible possible to unfold a Letter, sometimes, without tearing a very material Part of it. But how is this? The Date is in the very Corner of the Letter, that Corner which was sheltered by the folding of it, and must have been the last that could have received any Injury; it was not near the Wax or Seal, or liable to any Injury on that Account; and although the Outside was all dusty, this Part, being folded in, was as clean as possible; how therefore this Part of the Letter, in particular, came to be torn off, is a Matter beyond my Comprehension, and; I am certain, you will give this Observation the Weight it deserves.

Then thus it stands upon the Evidence on both Sides: And, Gentlemen, I shall now only mention to you again, that, upon Trials for Perjury, we are not to convict a Person merely upon Conjecture, Improbability, or Argument. I told you before, and, under the Direction of the Court, I shall repeat, that every Person's Oath, though Perjury is assigned in it, is to be considered as one Witness: If a Man forswears himself in an Answer in Chancery, one Witness only contradicting it, is of no Signification, as both are to have equal Credit: She then is the only Person that speaks to the Fact of this Transaction, and that is not controverted but by Circumstances and Arguments: And, if any Witnesses could have been produced, or any Evidence given, that could have cleared up and explained this intricate Affair (for so I will call it, even upon their Evidence given) and the Prosecutor hath omitted so to do, which to me seems plain to a Demonstration, you will then presume in Favour of Innocence, as far as it is possible, and especially against those Persons, by whom the whole might have been explained; and if you have the least Doubt remaining, whether the Person is innocent or not, Charity and Christianity will induce you to take the favourable Side; the Consequence of which will be, that the Defendant will be acquitted.

Mr. WILLIAMS.

We shall lay our Evidence before you, and begin first with Mr. Lyon, the Master of this Girl.

Edward Lyon sworn.

E. Lyon. Elizabeth Canning had been my Servant about ten Weeks: On the 1st of January 1753, my Wife gave her Liberty to go to see her Uncle, who lived at Saltpetre-Bank.

Mr. Williams. Had you known her any Time before?

E. Lyon. I have known her sixteen Years before she was my Servant.

Mr. Williams. Pray, how has she behaved herself?

E. Lyon. Very well: I believe her to be a very honest Person. She not coming Home that Night, we inquired about, and sent to her Mother several Times, but heard nothing of her.

Mr. Williams. Whom did you send?

E. Lyon. I do not recollect any particular Person.

Mr. Williams. Had she ever been guilty of such Neglect before in not coming Home?

E. Lyon. No, not at all. The first Time I saw her afterwards was on the 31st Day of the said Month before Mr. Alderman Chitty; she was there, in order to take up a Person that she said had used her ill at Enfield-Wash. I being a little thick of hearing, cannot give much Account of what passed before the Alderman; but there was a Warrant granted, and several of our Neighbours went down to Enfield-Wash the next Morning on Horseback; I went in a Coach, with Mr. Nash, Mr. Hague, and Mr. Aldridge; the Prisoner and her Mother went in a Chaise.

Mr. Williams. Did she give you any Description of the Room she had been confined in?

E. Lyon. Not to me, for I was not with her.

Mr. Williams. Give an Account of what passed between you and a Person that met you on the Road.

E. Lyon. Mr. Wimblebury came riding on Horseback, and said, they had taken a Number of People in Mrs. Wells's House. When we came there, I saw about ten Persons, one Man and the rest Women, sitting round the Fire, in what they call the Parlour. After I had been there some Time, Elizabeth Canning came, and was brought in and set upon the Dresser: I went to her, and said, Bet, will you take any Thing to refresh you? She said, No. I said, Do not be daunted, for you have Friends about you, and, on the other hand, be careful, and challenge no body in this House without you are positive of them. Sir, said she, I will not. Then, said I, you shall see them. Accordingly she was taken from the Dresser, and led by two into the Room. She saw Mrs. Wells first, and said, she had nothing to say to her; and upon seeing Mrs. Squires, she said, That is the Woman that cut my Stays off.

Mr. Williams. Did you see Squires then?

E. Lyon. I did, very plain.

Mr. Williams. Was she sitting or standing?

E. Lyon. She was sitting first, but she got up out of her Chair.

Mr. Williams. When Elizabeth Canning fixed upon her, was she sitting or standing?

E. Lyon. Squires was just got out as she charged her, and came towards her.

Mr. Williams. Attend to the Question: Was she sitting or standing up?

E. Lyon. The Room was full of People: I cannot justly say whether it was the Time she was getting out, or got out: Several People got nearer than I did.

Mr. Williams. Have you any Reason to think Elizabeth Canning saw her Face, before she fixed upon her Person?

E. Lyon. I believe she saw her Face.

Mr. Williams. Why do you think so?

E. Lyon. I think she would hardly charge her without the Sight of her Face; I have no other Reason.

Mr. Williams. When Mary Squires was charged with being the Person, what was done?

E. Lyon. She came up to her, and said, I hope you will not swear my Life away, for I never saw you. Then Betty Canning was carried into the Kitchen.

Mr. Williams. Did you hear Mary Squires say where she was at the Time?

E. Lyon. I did not hear any Thing of that.

Mr. Williams. Did you hear Elizabeth Canning, or any body else, say what Day the Robbery was committed?

E. Lyon. No, I did not hear any body say any Thing of it.

Mr. Williams. Did you see George Squires there?

E. Lyon. Yes, I did; he was in the Room before Canning came in; he pulled off his Hat to me, as soon as I came into the Room: I said to him, How came you in this House? He said, I am a Traveller, and came here to lodge: I said, Could you not find a House of better Character? that, however, you must give a farther Account of yourself. Then he sat down.

Mr. Williams. When Canning came in, was she asked whether she had any Thing to accuse George with?

E. Lyon. She saw Lucy before she did him: She said, That young Woman was in the Room when my Stays were cut off: Then she saw Virtue Hall, and said the same of her; but they did nothing to her. After that George Squires was brought forward to her: Said she, That Man looks very much like the Man that robbed me in Moorfields, but I will not swear to him. He had pulled his Great Coat off in the House, I think, before she came: He had it on before Justice Tashmaker; then she said, she verily believed he was the Man, and that was the Coat he had on, which he put her Gown under, when she was robbed in Moorfields; but she would not swear to him.

Mr. Williams. Did you at any Time receive a Letter from Gawen Nash?

E. Lyon. I did.

Mr. Williams. Did he at coming Home express any kind of Doubt about this Affair?

E. Lyon. No: We all came Home together in the Coach; he seemed very well satisfied; I could see but very little otherwise.

Mr. Williams. Did he say any Thing at all, whether he was satisfied or not?

E. Lyon. I cannot say but he did say something, but I cannot recollect what: I can recollect Mr. Hague said, he did not see any Grate in the Chimney, nor Pictures in the Front of it. I said, I never heard that mentioned, but these Things are Moveables, and may be moved: We had a little Talk; after that we had a Beef-steak at the Three Crowns at Newington, and were good Friends.

Mr. Williams. Did Mr. Hague say any Thing else?

E. Lyon. No, he said nothing else; there was no Matter of Doubt between that Time and the Trial of Mary Squires. Mr. Nash was once at my House afterwards, and as he was going out of the Door, he made use of a very odd Expression; he said, Mr. Lyon, I hope God Almighty will destroy that Model that he made that Face by, and never make another by it; a very odd Expression, I remember it very well, meaning the Gypsey.

Cross-examined.

Mr. Davy. Was you at the Four Kings last Wednesday?

E. Lyon. No, Sir.

Mr. Davy. I would be glad to know where you live.

E. Lyon. I live at Aldermanbury.

Mr. Davy. What is your Business?

E. Lyon. I am a Carpenter.

Mr. Davy. How long had Elizabeth Canning lived with you?

E. Lyon. She had lived with me about ten Weeks.

Mr. Davy. Had you any Knowledge of her before?

E. Lyon. I knew her in Mr. Wintlebury's Service, I believe, near upon two Years. I had before that employed her Father.

Mr. Davy. When was the last Time you saw her before the 29th of January?

E. Lyon. I saw her in the Morning before she went out, on the 1st of January.

Mr. Davy. Can you tell whether the Door from the Kitchen to the Hay-loft was open or shut, when Elizabeth Canning sat upon the Dresser?

E. Lyon. I cannot say that, for the Room was full of People.

Mr. Davy. Was the Motive of your going down (besides the taking the People up) to make as many Observations as you could?

E. Lyon. No doubt of that, Sir.

Mr. Davy. Then why did you not observe towards what Part of the Kitchen her Face was directed, when she sat upon the Dresser?

E. Lyon. I must have shoved People down, if I had; for the Room was full of People.

Mr. Davy. Was you with her in the Parlour?

E. Lyon. I was just at, or hardly in the Parlour-door.

Mr. Davy. How many People were there between you and Mary Squires?

E. Lyon. It is impossible I should tell; there might be five or six between me and the People in a Circle round the Fire; the Parlour was almost full of People.

Mr. Davy. When they were all in the Room, and Canning also there, and you at a Distance, whether you could see Mary Squires sitting by the Fire?

E. Lyon. No otherwise than this, in a Clift between the People's Shoulders.

Mr. Davy. Did you see her sitting?

E. Lyon. I did; this was all in a very little Time before Canning charged her with robbing her.

Mr. Davy. How far is the Chimney from the Door?

E. Lyon. It may be ten or eleven Feet.

Mr. Davy. Did you see her after Canning was in the Room?

E. Lyon. I did.

Mr. Davy. Had you seen her before?

E. Lyon. I had; she was sitting smoking a short Pipe by the Fire, before Canning came down.

Mr. Davy. Was her Face or Back towards you?

E. Lyon. She was side-ways partly to me.

Mr. Davy. Did you see her sitting on a Chair, after Canning was in the Room?

E. Lyon. No, I did not, till after she got up; but saw her sitting by the Fire, between the People, just at Canning's coming into the Room.

Mr. Davy. How long was Canning in the Room before she charged her?

E. Lyon. She charged her in a very little Time.

Mr. Davy. What did the Gypsey do upon that?

E. Lyon. She took her Hat off, and opened the Clout which was upon her Head; her Face was almost hid with them before.

Mr. Davy. Could you see the Side of her Head, when you was at the Door?

E. Lyon. Not then, but before and after I did.

Mr. Davy. How far was Elizabeth Canning from you?

E. Lyon. She was within about three or four Feet of me.

Mr. Davy. Was she in a direct Line between you and Squires?

E. Lyon. No; she was partly in the Centre in

in the Half-moon, and Squires was upon an Angle.

Mr. Davy. Was Canning at your right or left Hand?

E. Lyon. She was more to my left Hand.

Mr. Davy. Have you any other Reason for believing Canning saw the Face of Mary Squires, than from your good Opinion of her?

E. Lyon. No otherwise.

Mr. Davy. What was the first Thing Squires did or said, after she rose from her Seat, to convince Canning that she was not the Person who robbed her?

E. Lyon. No otherwise than by telling her, as I have told you.

Mr. Davy. Did she desire Canning to take Notice of her Face?

E. Lyon. I did not hear; I am thick of hearing at some Times, and I was then; I am more in Winter than at other Times.

Mr. Davy. Did you hear Canning say at what Time she had been robbed?

E. Lyon. No, I did not.

Mr. Davy. Did Mary Squires continue speaking after the Words you before mentioned?

E. Lyon. Very little; the Girl was moved away presently afterwards, so that they were in that Position but a very little Time.

Mr. Davy. Did Mr. Hague, Mr. Nash, and Mr. Aldridge, and you, return Home together after this?

E. Lyon. We did.

Mr. Davy. What was your Discourse coming Home?

E. Lyon. We had very little Talk in the Coach about it.

Mr. Davy. Did you return good Friends?

E. Lyon. We did, and were very jocular, as we were when we went down.

Mr. Davy. Did you hear or understand any Doubt they had touching this Affair?

E. Lyon. No, I did not.

Mr. Davy. Was either of them dissatisfied at the Account she had given, and at her Behaviour when in the House?

E. Lyon. No, none at all; we were as agreeable as we were when we went down.

Mr. Davy. Recollect yourself, and seriously answer, whether you had any Conversation with these Gentlemen about Canning's Mother dreaming a Dream?

E. Lyon. I never did, nor never mentioned any such Thing.

Mr. Davy. Did you ever say any thing about her Mother's going to the Conjurer?

E. Lyon. Going to a Conjurer has been mentioned, but not by me.

Mr. Davy. Did the Mother tell you, five Days before her Daughter's coming Home, that a Conjurer had told her she was in the Hands of an old Woman, and would come Home the next Week?

E. Lyon. She had told other People, as I heard; but not me; I never heard it from her Mouth; I never conversed with her about it.

Mr. Davy. When did you hear it?

E. Lyon. I don't know.

Mr. Davy. When did she return?

E. Lyon. On the 29th of January.

Mr. Davy. Have you ever talked with her, since her Return Home, of any thing that passed during the Time of her Absence?

E. Lyon. I can say nothing in particular.

Mr. Davy. If you have had any Conversation with her about it, it must be particular.

E. Lyon. I know nothing but—how do you do, Betty? But as to relating how she was used, or any thing like it, I cannot tell any thing in particular.

Mr. Davy. Then what do you remember upon the whole?

E. Lyon. I have often seen her and talked with her since, but cannot remember any particular Part, or Words, that have been related.

Mr. Davy. Whether you expressed to her any Surprize concerning the Account she gave to you of her ill Usage?

E. Lyon. She has never given me an Account in a particular Manner; it was always to other Persons.

Mr. Davy. Had you any Talk with her, since her Return, relating to a Cunning Man?

E. Lyon. No, none at all, nor don't know she has heard it; one Thing, I think, I recollect; at Mr. Marshall's House I was with her, and asked her thus, Bet, if you know any thing of this Affair, that you believe you are mistaken in, or such like, I desire you will let me know it; don't deceive us upon any Account. Sir, said she, I have said nothing but what is really true.

Mr. Davy. Have you had any Dispute or Falling-out with Mr. Hague, Mr. Aldridge, or Mr. Nash, on Account of this Affair?

E. Lyon. No, not on any Account. Some few Words, that I related, were concerning the Grate and Pictures over the Chimney: Mr. Hague was saying there would be some Marks left where they had hung.

Mr. Davy. Were you formerly very intimate with them?

E. Lyon. I was with Mr. Nash and Mr. Aldridge, but not with Mr. Hague. I have done Business as a Carpenter for about sixteen Years for the Goldsmiths Company.

Mr. Davy. Are you acquainted with them now?

E. Lyon. We have no Conversation now.

Mr. Davy. What is the Reason of the Discontinuance of your Acquaintance with Mr. Nash?

E. Lyon. My Reason is this, that he did not appear: That he should seem to have something to say, and not say it. I thought it was an odd Thing not to appear, and then to appear afterwards.

Mr. Davy. Did that break your Acquaintance?

E. Lyon. It has so.

Mr. Davy. Did you ever hear him say, before the Trial of Squires and Wells, that he did not believe a Word of the Defendant's Story?

E. Lyon. No; not at all, upon no Account.

Mr. Davy. Did you ever hear Mr. Aldridge say so?

E. Lyon. No: Mr. Aldridge I have seen casually pass and repass. Your humble Servant, and so on; but I was not in his Company. When I saw Mr. Nash on the Morning of the Trial of the Gypsies, it was, Your Servant, and so on; but no Conversation. I never was with Mr. Aldridge since the Time of coming from Enfield-Wash.

Mr. Davy. Had you used to be frequently with him before?

E. Lyon. No; but casually.

Mr. Davy. Have you been as intimately acquainted with Mr. Nash since, as before?

E. Lyon.

E. Lyon. I have been at his House. I did not keep from his House on that Account. There was no Difference, as I know of. I never shunned his House on that Account.

Mr. Davy. Did you belong to a Club at his House?

E. Lyon. We had a Club of all the Workmen belonging to the Goldsmiths Company at his House; that is, Plumbers, Bricklayers, and others.

Mr. Davy. How often did you usually meet?

E. Lyon. Sometimes once a Fortnight, sometimes three Weeks.

Mr. Davy. Did you go pretty constantly?

E. Lyon. I did.

Mr. Davy. Have you frequented that Club, and drank there, as you used to do before?

E. Lyon. I declared off upon that very Account, because he did not appear on Squires's Trial; and after that, Mr. Nash making use of my Name in sundry Places, I resented it.

Mr. Davy. Then I desire to know of you, whether from the Time of your Return from Enfield-Wash with Mr. Nash and Mr. Aldridge, to the Trial of the Gypsey, your Intimacy was the same with them as it had been before?

E. Lyon. I had not seen Mr. Aldridge. I had no Dislike against him till afterwards, that Things went in such a Line that were disagreeable. Mr. Nash had been at my House, as I observed before. I did not keep from Mr. Nash on that Account, till after the Trial of the Gypsey.

Mr. Davy. Are you sure of that?

E. Lyon. I aver it. I know nothing to the contrary. I had no Dislike to him, till after that Trial.

Mr. Davy. During that Period of Time between your Return from Enfield-Wash, and the Trial of Mary Squires, did you ever hear Nash say any thing of his Disbelief of Canning's Story, or that he thought it improbable?

E. Lyon. Indeed, I did not.

Mr. Davy. Whether Mr. Nash, Mr. Aldridge, and Mr. Hague, when they went with you to Enfield, had not the same Evidence of the Truth of the Story, and all its Circumstances, as you had?

E. Lyon. I know the Coach stopped two or three Times; as for Mr. Aldridge, he was very little there; Mr. Nash was in the House, and saw as much as I did.

Mr. Davy. Why did not you subpoena those three Persons to give Evidence on the Trial of Squires?

E. Lyon. I was not concerned in the Thing, there were other Persons concerned.

Mr. Davy. Who were fixed upon as Prosecutors?

E. Lyon. I don't know.

Mr. Davy. Was you examined before the Grand Jury?

E. Lyon. No, I was not.

Mr. Davy. Did not you, on the 15th of February, set your Name to a Paper to encourage Contributions to carry on the Prosecution?

E. Lyon. There was my Name in Print to an Advertisement, when there were several Gentlemen together.

Mr. Davy. Did they make use of your Name without your Consent?

E. Lyon. No, they did not: They mentioned this; they thought, as I was the Master, it would be more agreeable to put it in; I said, Gentlemen, if that is the Case, put it in.

Mr. Davy. Did not that contain a Reward for the apprehending two Men concerned in carrying her down to Enfield-Wash? and did you advance any Money towards paying that?

E. Lyon. I was half a Guinea; the rest were the same. As to paying in particular, that was not mentioned.

Mr. Davy. The Advertisement concludes with these Words: Whoever will take or apprehend one, or either of them, &c.

Francis Roberts, Aldermanbury.

Edward Lyon, { Aldermanbury, the Girl's Master.

Mr. Davy. Did you consent to the Publication of this Paper?

E. Lyon. I did.

Mr. Davy. Whether there was not a Subscription going on, in order to encourage her for her Virtue? Was you one of those?

E. Lyon. I did not go about to get her any Money; there were Persons that did.

Mr. Davy. Did you contribute to the Expence of the Prosecution of the Gypsey and Wells at the Old-Bailey?

E. Lyon. I did not act; I had no Concern in the Delivery of the Money; the Subscription was not made then; I subscribed nothing to that; what I did was since that.

Mr. Davy. How much did you contribute towards the carrying on the Prosecution of Squires?

E. Lyon. No more than that half Guinea then.

Mr. Davy. Did you give Evidence on that Trial of what passed at Wells's House?

E. Lyon. I did.

Mr. Davy. Do you think Mr. Nash, Mr. Aldridge, and Mr. Hague, could hear what passed as well as you?

E. Lyon. They could hear better than I.

Mr. Davy. Did you see them in the Room where she says she was confined?

E. Lyon. I cannot tell whether they were in the Room; I saw them in the House.

Mr. Davy. Why were the three not called to give Evidence against Squires and Wells, as well as yourself?

E. Lyon. I as much believed, that Mr. Nash, when I saw him in Court, came upon that Affair, as ever I believed any thing in my Life.

Mr. Davy. Did you at that Time believe he would give Evidence for or against the Gypsey?

E. Lyon. I believed he would against the Gypsey, as I did.

Mr. Davy. Was there no Club-day betwixt your going down to Enfield-Wash and the Trial?

E. Lyon. I cannot tell whether there was or not; if there was, I might not be at it. I remember going Home after the Trial was over: Mr. Aldridge sent his Servant after me, who said, his Master gave his Service to me, and desired to know how the Affair went: I said, They are both cast. I went directly to Mr. Nash's, and drank a Glass of Cyder, but do not know that I saw him.

Mr. Davy. Was you then angry with Mr. Nash?

E. Lyon. No.

Mr. Davy. When you was at Justice Tash-maker's, was George Squires there, and how was he dressed?

E. Lyon. He was; he then had his Great Coat on.

Mr. Davy. Was it put on in order for the Defendant to see whether that was the Man or not?

E. Lyon. I don't know that.

Mr. Davy. Did not you say, upon the Trial of Squires and Wells, that she said he looked more like the Man after he had that Coat on?

E. Lyon. She did say to that Purpose.

Mr. Davy. How came the Justice not to commit him?

E. Lyon. Why, we mentioned that it was a Pity they were not all committed.

Mr. Davy. Did you hear George desire he might be committed?

E. Lyon. No, I never did: So different from that, that when the Mittimus was writing, he looked over a Woman (and seemed to quiver a little) to see whether there was a Mittimus making for him, as I took it; but I did not hear him express a Word about it.

Mr. Davy. It seems, you believed the Girl's Story from the first Hearing?

E. Lyon. I did.

Mr. Davy. Did you take any Method, from that Time to this, to satisfy yourself about it?

E. Lyon. I got farther Evidence of the Story as far as I could, in questioning the Girl at Mr. Marshall's, as I mentioned before; I had no Doubt at all.

Mr. Davy. You bid her be careful; do you believe she was careful?

E. Lyon. I believe she was.

Mr. Davy. Then why did you desire her to recollect herself, to see if she was mistaken?

E. Lyon. Because there was such a great Clamour about it, and I was willing to ask her again.

Mr. Williams. Whether you did not give the Gentleman a true Answer before, when you told him you had been instrumental in bringing them to be discovered in the Advertisement of twenty Pounds?

E. Lyon. Yes, I had been, and would have turned out something.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, we are now to read the Letter that Mr. Nash owns to be his Hand-writing. — (To E. Lyon.) Is this the Letter that you received?

E. Lyon. This is it. (He takes it in his Hand.) It appears to have been wrote on the 10th of February.

Mr. Williams. Did not you think he was a Well-wisher to the Discovery of this Affair?

E. Lyon. Indeed I did, and all the Time afterwards, to the Time of the Trial.

Mr. Williams. How old is the Girl now?

E. Lyon. I believe about nineteen Years of Age.

(The Letter read.)

Mr. Lyon, Feb. 10, 53.

I am informed by Mr. Aldridge, who has been at Enfield, that if a Person be appointed there to receive Contribution, some Money would be raised in that Place for the unhappy poor Girl. I wish you Success, and am your's,

Gawen Nash.

Directed on the Back, To Mr. Lyon, Aldermanbury.

Recorder. Can you tell what it was occasioned by?

A. Colley. By being used very ill, and half starved.

Elizabeth Canning sworn.

E. Canning. I am Mother to the Girl; she was nineteen the 17th of last September: In December 1752 she lived with Mr. Lyon in Aldermanbury.

Mr. Williams. Did you know of her going to her Uncle's, Mr. Colley's?

E. Canning. I did; she called at my House, (it was on a Monday, New-year's Day) and told me, she was going to her Uncle.

Mr. Williams. Was there, or was there not, any Account brought to your House that Night, that she was not come back?

E. Canning. Mr. Lyon, her Master, came to my House just after Nine o'Clock, and said, he wondered she stayed so long: I was frightened out of my Wits: I sent my three Children into the Fields to see after her, and I sent my Apprentice to Mr. Colley's, her Uncle; they said, they had parted with her after Nine o'Clock at Houndsditch. I sent again in the Morning, and I went myself before it was light. Mrs. Colley was a-bed then: I said, Let me in, let me in: Mrs. Colley got up, and said, O lack, has not she come in yet? I said, No. She said, she left her there. Her Husband was called from the Glass-house; and I was ready to run distracted.

Mr. Williams. From that Time, to the 30th or 31st of January, did you hear any thing of your Daughter, or know where she was?

E. Canning. She came Home the Day before King Charles's Martyrdom, at a quarter after Ten o'Clock. I had advertised her in the Papers the first Time on my own Head; and then afterwards one Mrs. Maynard, a Turner's Wife, came to me, and said, Have you advertised her any more? I said, I did not think to do it; indeed it was out of my Power, it was very hard with me.

Mr. Williams. Did you hear any thing in Consequence of this Advertisement?

E. Canning. One gave me a Shilling, and another gave me a Shilling; so I advertised her two or three Times, and had no Account of her.

Mr. Williams. Upon your Oath, did you know any thing of her during the Time she was gone?

E. Canning. No, I did not.

Mr. Williams. On this Night, what Time did your Daughter come Home?

E. Canning. A quarter after Ten.

Mr. Williams. Where was you when she came Home?

E. Canning. I was partly getting into Bed, and my Apprentice was going to fasten the Door. He called and said, Here is somebody at the Door. I said, Who is it? He said, Betty. I said, What Betty? He said, Our Betty. My little Girl ran screaming up to the Chimney: I said, Feel her, feel her: I thought she was an Apparition. She came in in this Posture, (describing it, which was almost double, and walking side-ways, holding her Hands before her.) When she came up so, I took her to be an Apparition.

Mr. Williams. What was her Dress?

E. Canning. She had a loose Bed-gown, and a Rag about her Head, and her Ear was bloody, and the Rag was bloody.

Mr. Williams. Did you, before she brought that Bed-gown Home, ever see it before?

E. Canning. No, never in my Life. I never wore such a Thing, so poor as it is with me.

Mr. Williams. Did any of your Neighbours come in, after your Daughter came Home?

E. Canning. After my Daughter came Home, the first that came in was Mrs. Woodward; my Apprentice James ran and fetched her, and Polly Lyon next Door to me; and the third Person was Mrs. Myers; then Mr. Roberts's Maid, and Mr. Wintlebury.

Mr. Williams. Now, when these People were come in, was your Daughter interrogated by them where she had been?

E. Canning. They asked her, where she had been? Her Master Wintlebury took her by the Hand, and said, Where have you been? She said, Sir, I don't know, but only by seeing my Mistress's Coach, the Hertfordshire Coach: She was not able to say the Place where she had been at.

Mr. Williams. Was she able to give an Account of the Persons?

E. Canning. No; she said, there was an old Woman, and two young ones, and she should know them again if she saw them, she thought.

Mr. Williams. Did she give an Account to you, what Sort of an old Woman it was?

E. Canning. No, she did not.

Mr. Williams. Did she give an Account what befel her, after her Uncle Colley had left her in Moorfields?

E. Canning. She said, she had been robbed, and by what Sort of Men, but she could not tell who they were; but that it was the same two Men that robbed her, that dragged her away.

Mr. Williams. Who asked her?

E. Canning. We all asked her. She gave an Account, that they pulled her along, and after they gave her a Blow, she could tell no more, and that she was confined where there was Hay in the Room; she said, she lived upon Bread and Water; that from the Friday to the Monday she had none to subsist on; and she gave an Account of the Mince-pye she bought for her Brother.

Mr. Williams. Did she give a Description of a Pitcher?

E. Canning. She said there was a broken Pitcher of Water, that very Night.

Mr. Williams. What was done to her that Night? Did you put her to Bed?

E. Canning. I did, and it was Five o'Clock in the Morning before I could get any Warmth in her Feet.

Mr. Williams. Look at this Pitcher, (which she did.) Is this your Pitcher?

E. Canning. It never was mine.

Mr. Williams. Did you carry that Pitcher down with you?

E. Canning. I did not. I pull'd off my own Stockings, and put them upon her; and in the Morning you might have wrung the Things about her, she was in such a Sweat. Polly Lyon brought brought some Wine, and Mrs. Woodward and she mull'd it, and when she had some poured out, she could not swallow it; she was in an extreme deplorable Condition in regard to her Health.

Mr. Williams. The next Day was any body sent for of Skill in a physical Way?

E. Canning. Mr. Bakler the Apothecary's Man came in that Night; he wiped her Ear, and put a Plaster to it; he gave her some Drops, and then went away. His Master came in the next Morning; he ordered something for her, to give her, in Bottles; he asked her as to the State of her Health.

Mr. Williams. What is his Name?

E. Canning. His Name is Bakler.

Mr. Williams. Did the Apothecary give her any Thing in order to cause a Stool?

E. Canning. She had no Stool, till she had three Glysters; she continued extremely ill.

Mr. Williams. Had you the Advice of any other?

E. Canning. We had the Advice of Dr. Eaton. I had not Conveniency for her, having but one Room, and the Room which the Boy lay in; so she was carried from my House to a House over the Way.

Mr. Williams. How came there to be a Suspicion, that it was at Mother Wells's that she was confined?

E. Canning. She nominated the Name of Mother Wills or Wells that Night, she did not know which; that she heard them call it very plain; I believe, Mr. Wintlebury, Mr. Scarrat, Mrs. Woodward, and Polly Lyon, all were there at that Time.

Mr. Williams. Had any body that was there given her the least Hint of Wills or Wells, or any Name like it?

E. Canning. No Soul ever spoke to her, till her own Mouth mentioned it.

Mr. Williams. How was it first known or believed, that this Mother Wills or Wells lived at Enfield-Wash?

E. Canning. I don't know, Sir, because she had described it to be upon the Hertfordshire Road: Upon this, there was Application made to Mr. Alderman Chitty.

Mr. Williams. Who fixed it down to be the House of Mother Wells at Enfield-Wash?

E. Canning. I don't know; there were a great many People, and I was so concerned, I did not hear all their Talk.

Mr. Williams. Was there any Proposal to go down to Enfield-Wash?

E. Canning. There was; we went down on the Thursday after she came Home; she came Home on a Monday Night: There was Mrs. Myers, Mrs. Garrat, my Girl and me, and a young Child in my Arms: We went in a Chaise.

Mr. Williams. Do you recollect any body that met you on the Road before you got down?

E. Canning. Yes; Mr. Adamson.

Mr. Williams. Did he give you or your Daughter any, or what Description of the House of Mother Wells?

E. Canning. Upon my Oath, he did not.

Mr. Williams. Did he ask Betty any Questions?

E. Canning. His Horse would not stand still: He said, Drive, Coachman, I wonder you stay so long. The Coachman said, the Road was so bad, and such a Load he had, he could not go faster. He asked her, what sort of a Place she was in, and if she could remember it? and she said, she could. Then he rode on, and we came after. When we came down there, I was only in the Parlour and Kitchen.

Mr. Williams. Upon your Oath, did you ever go up in that Room which goes up where your Daughter was confined?

E. Canning. I went up one or two Steps, and said, Oh! oh! this is the Place of my Child's Confinement; and a Gentleman shoved me, and said, Get you down, get you down.

Mr. Williams. Recollect, when you came back, did Mr. Adamson bid her tell what was in the Room, if she could?

E. Canning. I don't remember he did.

Cross-examined.

Mr. Davy. I think you say, one Mrs. Maynard, a Turner's Wife, applied to you to advertise her?

E. Canning. She did the second Time, but the first Time I did it myself.

Mr. Davy. (He shows her a Paper.) I should be glad to know whose Hand-writing this is.

E. Canning. I don't know whose Hand-writing it is.

Mr. Davy. When you advertised her, did you carry the Paper to the Press?

E. Canning. No; a young Woman did for me; her Name is Mary Northan.

Mr. Davy. Who wrote the Paper that Mary Northan carried to the Press?

E. Canning. I believe Alice Colley, her Aunt, wrote the first Advertisement; but I am not sure.

Mr. Davy. Did you see it, before it was carried?

E. Canning. I did, and read it.

Mr. Davy. Is this it?

E. Canning. I cannot tell.

Mr. Davy. Are you acquainted with Mrs. Colley's Hand-writing?

E. Canning. No, Sir, I am not.

Mr. Davy. The first was on the 4th of January, and the second was two Days afterwards, was it not?

E. Canning. I believe it was.

Mr. Davy. Who wrote the second?

E. Canning. Indeed I cannot tell, if you would give me all the World.

Mr. Davy. Did you write it?

E. Canning. No, Sir, I did not; Mrs. Maynard, the Turner's Wife, advised me to it.

Mr. Davy. Did she write for you?

E. Canning. No, she did not.

Mr. Davy. Who carried it to the Advertiser?

E. Canning. Mary Northan carried all the Papers.

Mr. Davy. Who delivered them to her?

E. Canning. I believe I did; I know I did the first.

Mr. Davy. Did you, or did you not, deliver the second Paper to be carried to the Press?

E. Canning. I did, I think; I am positive they were delivered in my Room, and in my Presence.

Mr. Davy. Who were in the Room at that Time?

E. Canning. Her Aunt Colley was at the first Time.

Mr. Davy. Who else?

E. Canning. I don't know there was any body, but the young Girl that carried it, and my Children, that Time.

Mr. Davy. Who were in the Room when the second Paper was delivered?

E. Canning. I believe none but the young Woman and my Children then.

Mr. Davy. Who had you the first Paper of?

E. Canning. My Sister Alice Colley wrote it in my Room.

Mr. Davy. Do you know her Hand-writing?

E. Canning. I have seen her write twice before; but don't know her Hand-writing. She wrote Scowerer instead of Sawyer.

Mr. Davy. I see upon it Scowerer is struck out, and Sawyer wrote: Who had you the second Paper of?

E. Canning. I believe it was done at the White Lion, at the End of Fore-Street, facing the Gully-hole, by either the Master or somebody there; Polly Northan can tell, for she stayed the Writing of it.

Mr. Davy. Now, had you at that Time heard any thing of your Daughter's being in Bishopsgate-Street?

E. Canning. Yes; I heard it of a Gentlewoman at an Oil-shop, the Sign of the Two Jars through Bishopsgate, towards Cornhill. She informed me, she heard a young Voice scream out in a Coach; but whether it was a Man's or a Woman's Voice, she could not tell.

Mr. Davy. How long was it before the 6th of January, the Time of sending the second Paper, that you had this Account from that Gentlewoman?

E. Canning. I don't know but it was a Night or two Nights before.

Mr. Davy. Then her screaming in Bishopsgate-Street was wrote in the Paper by your Order?

E. Canning. It was. I thought I would leave no Stone unturned to find her, and so I told Polly Northan of that.

Mr. Davy. Where had you the third Draught of an Advertisement?

E. Canning. That was wrote in my Kitchen by one Spencer; he did it by the Directions of the Gentlewoman at the Oil-shop for me, as I was advised by my Friends to do it.

Mr. Davy. Who advised you to put a Reward in?

E. Canning. It was her Uncle bid me do that, and said, he'd pay that, if he stripp'd his Skin.

Mr. Davy. Had you any Knowledge, at that Time, how much Money your Daughter had in her Pocket on the 1st of January?

E. Canning. Yes, I had; for I lent her a little Box to put the half Guinea in; for I was to have gone out with her on that Afternoon to buy her a Cloak and a Pair of Mittens.

Mr. Davy. When was that Agreement made to buy a Cloak together.

E. Canning. She made that Agreement with me, before she went from me to go to her Uncle's; she intended to return to me that Afternoon, but they would not let her return till she had a hot Supper, because they had nothing but cold Victuals for Dinner.

Mr. Davy. How much Money had she in her Pocket at that Time?

E. Canning. She had half a Guinea, three Shillings, and a Farthing. I saw the half Guinea put into the Box, and she put the three Shillings loose into her Pocket; and the Night she returned, she gave the Farthing to her Brother.

Mr. Davy. Was Thirteen and Six-pence Farthing all the Money she had?

E. Canning. It was.

Mr. Davy. When you advertised her the last Time, did you know then what Money she had in her Pocket?

E. Canning. Her Brother said, she had changed a Six-pence, and gave every one of them a Penny; and Mrs. Lyon told me, she had given her half a Guinea in Gold, and three Shillings in Silver.

Mr. Davy. Did your Child tell you she had changed Six-pence?

E. Canning. Yes; and that she did not give him his Penny, because he huffed her; but I find with his Penny she bought a Penny Mince-pye.

Mr. Davy. Was it a Half-penny or a Penny each she gave them?

E. Canning. I don't know whether it was a Half-penny, or a Penny a-piece.

Mr. Davy. Did she turn out her Pocket to you?

E. Canning. No, she did not. She shewed me the Money; half a Guinea, three Shillings, and a Farthing, is all I saw.

Mr. Davy. Did she tell you it was all she had?

E. Canning. No, she did not.

Mr. Davy. How many Children had you then?

E. Canning. I had five in the whole with her, with the Child in my Arms.

Mr. Davy. Who was to have had the Mince-pye?

E. Canning. My little Boy.

Mr. Davy. How came you to advertise that she had twelve Shillings and Nine-pence Half-penny?

E. Canning. I took it so, that she had but twelve Shillings and Nine-pence Half-penny.

Mr. Davy. Here is by way of Postscript, Had in her Pocket twelve Shillings, Nine-pence Half-penny.

E. Canning. I ordered it to be advertised; she had Six-pence more, for what I know.

Mr. Davy. I observe these Words, twelve Shillings, Nine-pence Half-penny, are scratched out on this Paper; how came that?

E. Canning. I fixed upon that Sum, thinking she might have changed some Momey to give Half-pence to the Children.

Mr. Davy. Who wrote the third Advertisement?

E. Canning. I can't tell who.

Mr. Davy. How came Part of the Writing on the Paper to be scratched out? And I observe that Part is not printed in the Daily Paper.

E. Canning. I can't give the Reason, if you would give me the World.

Mr. Davy. When it was delivered to Polly Northan, was it scratched out?

E. Canning. I don't know.

Mr. Davy. I find in this Paper, This is the last Time of Advertising; that also is scratched out, and both these are in different Ink and different Hands.

E. Canning. I don't know that I ordered her to be advertised, This is the last Time of Advertising. I could not have advertised her, had I not had Assistance, and my Neighbours put me upon it. I don't know that I ordered any thing to be scratched out.

Mr. Davy. Did you order Polly Northan to carry the Papers directly to the Printing-Office, or elsewhere?

E. Canning. To the Printing-Office.

Mr. Davy. After you missed your Daughter so long a Time, you took all the Means in your Power to know what was become of her?

E. Canning. Sure I did. I went to all the Agents and Places where I could think of, fearing some Casualty.

Mr. Davy. Did you go to Wood-Street Compter?

E. Canning. The People told me, if there were any Quarrels, they would take all away, Good and Bad together, was the Reason I went there.

Mr. Davy. Did you go to a Conjuror?

E. Canning. I did. They call him the Astrologer.

Mr. Davy. Where does he live?

E. Canning. He lives in the Old-Bailey.

Mr. Davy. What is his Name?

E. Canning. I don't know his Name: He had a black Wig over his Face.

Mr. Davy. When did you go to him?

E. Canning. I don't know when I went.

Mr. Davy. How long after your Daughter was missing?

E. Canning. I don't know. It was before she returned.

Mr. Davy. What was done there?

E. Canning. I told him I had lost my Child, and after he had got my Money, he bid me go Home and advertise her; he said, Make yourself easy, she'll come Home again.

Mr. Davy. Did he tell you when she would return?

E. Canning. No, he did not. He only asked me two or three Questions, and wrote, scribble, scribble, scribble along.

Mr. Davy. Did he tell you she was in the Hands of an old Woman?

E. Canning. No, he did not.

Mr. Davy. Recollect yourself.

E. Canning. I don't know whether he did or no: He might, for what I know.

Mr. Davy. Or what Misfortunes had happened to her?

E. Canning. No.

Mr. Davy. Whether he did not tell you she was in the Hands of an old black Woman?

E. Canning. The Word black I don't remember. I know he frightened me. When he shut the Door, and lighted the Candles up, he looked so frightful, I was glad to get out at the Door again.

Mr. Davy. What was his first Question?

E. Canning. I think, he first asked me, what I came for? I said, For my Child.

Mr. Davy. What were the other Questions?

E. Canning. I can't recollect them: It was about her going away. I believe he asked her Age.

Mr. Davy. Did he ask what State of Health she was in?

E. Canning. No, Sir.

Mr. Davy. Nor when was the last Time you saw your Daughter?

E. Canning. No.

Mr. Davy. Did he ask any thing about Bishopsgate-Street?

E. Canning. I believe I told him that; he bid me advertise her again, makes me think I did.

Mr. Davy. Did you tell him of a Dream you had?

E. Canning. No, I did not.

Mr. Davy. Had not you had a Dream or a Vision about it?

E. Canning. I don't know of any such Thing.

Mr. Davy. Or an Apparition?

E. Canning. No; but I had wandering Thoughts.

Mr. Davy. What did you mean just now, by saying you had wandering Thoughts?

E. Canning. I say, I never had Rest Night or Day, for my Thoughts were wandering.

Mr. Davy. How came you to imagine she was confined by an old Woman?

E. Canning. It never came into my Thoughts that she was; I more thought she was murdered in Houndsditch, and throwed into some Ditch there.

Mr. Davy. At this Time, upon your Oath, had you ever heard of the Name of Mother Wells, when you went to this Cunning Man?

E. Canning. I never heard of that Name till she came Home.

Mr. Davy. Did you mention the Name of Mother Wells to him?

E. Canning. No; I did not. He said, an old Woman, I believe.

Mr. Davy. Did you mention twelve Shillings, Nine-pence Half-penny to the Conjuror?

E. Canning. I believe I did not. I was not there long, for I was all of a Fright when I was there.

Mr. Davy. Was there any other Person there?

E. Canning. I saw no other besides himself; he let me in, and I went by myself.

Mr. Davy. Who advised you to go to him?

E. Canning. A great many of my Neighbours; one gave me Six-pence and another Three-pence, till I got a Shilling, and then I went directly.

Mr. Davy. What are their Names who gave you the Money?

E. Canning. I can't recollect any of them. I believe, a Gentlewoman that lived Cook or Chambermaid, who lodges at a House over the Way, her Name is Mrs. Johanna, being out of Place; I was wringing my Hands and tearing about, and she advised me to go to the Cunning Man. There were a Crowd of People about the Door, like a Fair about me.

Mr. Davy. You advertised her as lost or strayed: Why did not you advertise your Suspicions of her being murdered?

E. Canning. I never did.

Mr. Davy. Do you remember your saying, that you had pray'd to God, and had an Answer to your Prayers, so as to assure you that your Daughter would return?

E. Canning. I never had no Answer. I prayed by myself, and gave up Bills in the Church, both at Aldermanbury and Cripplegate, and at the Meetings and Mr. Wesley's. I did not leave a Meeting or a Place, where I could put up a Bill in.

Mr. Davy. Of what Religion are you?

E. Canning. I am of the Church of England, and was baptized at Cripplegate.

Mr. Davy. Did you not, about a quarter of an Hour before your Daughter returned, mention to the Apprentice, you had prayed for your Daughter's Return, and that she would return presently?

E. Canning. I said to James, The last Thing you do, pray for her: He said, he never went to Prayer but what he did. This was just before she came in. I bid him every Night pray for her, and I repeated it.

Mr.

Mr. Davy. Did you mention, that you believed your Daughter would be at Home that Night?

E. Canning. No, I did not.

Mr. Davy. Where has this Apprentice been ever since?

E. Canning. He has never laid a quarter of an Hour out of my House since.

Mr. Davy. Has there been any Care taken to prevent People seeing him, and his being asked Questions?

E. Canning. Here was a young Man came and said, he'd give half a Crown to see him; I was told this was some Scheme or Skit, and thought it would not be convenient, and so it was concluded he should not be seen. There were about a dozen Sawyers there.

Mr. Davy. Did they not impose another Person upon him, instead of the Apprentice?

E. Canning. Yes, they brought over another Sawyer, instead of him, to the young Man.

Mr. Davy. And so bilk'd him out of half a Crown?

E. Canning. They did.

Mr. Davy. How soon after your Daughter's coming in was it, that the Apprentice was sent for these People?

E. Canning. He help'd her into a Chair, and went out directly; and immediately came in Mrs. Woodward, Mrs. Myers, and Polly Lyon; and in two Minutes the House was full.

Mr. Davy. What Things of the Room at Wells's did your Daughter mention that Night?

E. Canning. She mentioned the Chimney and the Grate in the Room, and said, she took the Gown out of the Grate.

Mr. Davy. Did she mention any thing of the Jack-line, or Pulley, or broken Casement?

E. Canning. No.

Mr. Davy. Or Saddles, or Chest of Drawers?

E. Canning. No; she mentioned Hay, and a Pitcher.

Mr. Davy. Did she mention how much Hay?

E. Canning. No.

Mr. Davy. Did she say, she lay upon Hay?

E. Canning. She said, she did now and then, or always, I don't know which.

Mr. Davy. Where did she say the Hay was?

E. Canning. She said, it lay of a Lump in a Corner.

Mr. Davy. Did she mention it was spread out like a Bed?

E. Canning. No.

Mr. Davy. Had your Daughter had a Stool, did she say?

E. Canning. It is a constant Method with her to go a Fortnight without a Stool. I have another little Girl at Home now, that commonly goes sometimes ten and sometimes eleven Days without a Stool.

Mr. Davy. Did you ever mention this to any Doctor before the 1st of January?

E. Canning. When she was little, I mentioned it to Dr. Catridge, who lived in Aldermanbury.

Mr. Davy. Did they use to give her Glysters?

E. Canning. No; they used to give her Physic; that was when she was ill.

Mr. Davy. Was any Method used to occasion a Stool before the 1st of January?

E. Canning. No.

Mr. Davy. Had she her Health perfectly well?

E. Canning. She had; only she was troubled with Pain in her Head.

Mr. Davy. Had she a good Stomach to her Victuals?

E. Canning. She had a very little Stomach always; that they know where she lived.

Mr. Davy. Was she very thirsty?

E. Canning. She drank very little, without it was a Dish of Tea; but not plentiful of that.

Mr. Davy. When your Daughter came Home, and told you this Story, did you think it was a very strange one, or did you believe all she said?

E. Canning. No, I did not think it strange at all. I have known her, at Home, to live upon half a Roll a Day, when Things have gone hard with me.

Mr. Davy. Did she tell you in what Manner she escaped?

E. Canning. Yes; out of a Window, by pulling down a Board.

Mr. Davy. Did she mention any thing of a Pent-house?

E. Canning. No, she did not.

Mr. Davy. How did she look when she came Home?

E. Canning. Her Face was swelled, bloated, and black, and sodden, as if it had lain in Water, and her Arms black. She swallowed nothing hardly.

Mr. Davy. Did she eat any thing that Night?

E. Canning. No, nothing but a little Wine and Water; that she could scarce get down.

Mr. Davy. Were her Teeth loose?

E. Canning. No.

Mr. Davy. Nor no Soreness in her Mouth?

E. Canning. No.

Mr. Davy. Do you know Mr. Scarrat?

E. Canning. I have known him within this Twelve-month.

Mr. Davy. Did Scarrat come the first Night she came Home?

E. Canning. He did.

Mr. Davy. How lately, before your Daughter returned, had you seen him?

E. Canning. I never had any Acquaintance with him before that. I don't know but I might see him go by a good many Times; but I never spoke to him in my Life before; but I hear since, he is a Neighbour.

Mr. Davy. Did he tell you he had formerly been at Mother Wells's?

E. Canning. No, never.

Mr. Davy. Did you never hear him say he had jumped out of the Window himself?

E. Canning. No, I never did.

Mr. Davy. How many Rooms have you got in your House?

E. Canning. I rented the House in my Husband's Time; and before he died, Mr. Roberts took the two Garrets, the Chamber, and a little Room I had below, which he has put to his Compting-house, for which he paid seven Pounds per Year; and after that I desired he'd pay that to my Landlord. So I have but two Rooms.

Mr. Davy. Was any thing mentioned of Enfield-Wash, the Night of your Daughter's Return?

E. Canning. I don't know when it was first mentioned. I believe it was when they came all together the next Morning.

Mr. Davy. Was your Apprentice a Witness upon the former Trial?

E. Canning. No, he was not.

Mr. Davy. Was he subpoena'd?

E. Canning.

E. Canning. I don't know what a Subpœna is.

Mr. Davy. How came you not to mention the Grate, the Pitcher, nor the Bed-gown, on the Trial?

E. Canning. Because it was not asked me.

Mr. Davy. Was Mr. Adamson present when your Daughter mentioned the Hay?

E. Canning. He did not see her the first Night, nor till we went down to Enfield.

Mr. Davy. Was Scarrat there when Hay was mentioned?

E. Canning. I don't know, the House was full of People.

Mr. Davy. Do you know one Mr. Dod, a Surgeon?

E. Canning. I do not.

Mr. Davy. Did you ever hear your Daughter say, she was afraid to lie on Hay, fearing there should be a dead Man under it?

E. Canning. I never heard her mention that, to my Knowledge.

Mr. Davy. Did you never say so to any body?

E. Canning. No, not to my Knowledge.

Mr. Davy. Can your Daughter write?

E. Canning. She can a little; it is a sad Hand.

Mr. Davy. Can she write a Letter well enough for you to find out the Meaning of it?

E. Canning. She can hardly write at all.

Mr. Davy. Can she write her Name?

E. Canning. I believe she can; I have seen her write it.

Mr. Davy. How long was she at a Writing-School?

E. Canning. About a quarter of a Year.

Mr. Davy. When did you see any of her Hand-writing?

E. Canning. I do not know that I have seen her Hand-writing these six Years.

Mr. Davy. Look at this Paper, (it was a Notice of Trial with her Name to it, the Name wrote by her;) Is this Name her Hand-writing?

E. Canning. I believe it is her scribbling like.

Mr. Davy. Do you think, when your Daughter could write, she would only make her Mark?

E. Canning. I do not know for that.

Mr. Davy. I ask this, my Lord, because in her Information before Justice Fielding, there she only makes her Mark, and by this Paper I see she writes an exceeding good Hand. — (To E. Canning.) How was your Daughter's Head covered, when she came Home?

E. Canning. With this Rag upon her Head, (holding the half Handkerchief in her Hand,) and an old ragged Handkerchief she had in her Pocket tied over that, (producing it.)

Mr. Davy. Whether you did not swear upon the Trial of Mary Squires, that your Daughter had a Cap on when she came Home?

E. Canning. No, not to my Knowledge; she had no Cap on, to my Knowledge.

Mr. Davy to Thomas Gurney. You hear the Evidence this Woman has given; look at your Minutes, and give an Account of what she said in her Evidence on that Trial, as to the State and Condition in which her Daughter came Home, and particularly how she was dressed.

Gurney. She said, she had nothing on but a ragged Bed-gown and a Cap.

Mr. Davy. Read the Account she gave to that.

Gurney. She said, after she was missing from New-year's Day, she advertised her three Times. She came back on the Day before King Charles's

Martyrdom, about a quarter of an Hour after Ten o'Clock; she had nothing but a ragged Bed-gown and Cap on.

Mr. Davy. Were these her own Words?

Gurney. I have here mentioned the Person she, where she said I. I will not take upon me to say these are the very Words she made use of, or that she made use of no more Words; it is my Method, if a Question brings out an imperfect Answer, and is obliged to be asked over again, and the Answer comes more strong, I take that down as the proper Evidence, and neglect the other: For Instance, here have in the Course of this Trial been many Questions asked, which have not brought out any satisfactory Answer to the Council, which, when asked in other Words, and upon Recollection, have produced more proper Answers, which I have put down. It is not to be expected I should write every unintelligible Word that is said by the Evidence.

Mr. Davy. Are you certain the Witness on that Trial said, she had a Cap on?

Gurney. She did, or I had not put it down; and had she said a Handkerchief, I doubt not but I should have found it in my Minutes.

Alice Colley again.

Mr. Moreton. Look at this Paper, (which was the first Advertisement sent to the Daily Advertiser;) Is this your Hand-writing?

A. Colley. I believe it is.

Mr. Moreton. Here is the Word Scowerer scratched out, and another Word put for it over it; is that your Hand-writing?

A. Colley. That other Word is not my Hand-writing, nor the P. S. at the Bottom is not my Hand-writing.

Mr. Moreton. Look at this other Paper, (which was the second Advertisement.)

A. Colley. I did not write that; I never saw it before.

Mr. Moreton. Did you write the first of your own Accord, or did any body dictate to you?

A. Colley. Her Mother did; she told me what to write down.

Mr. Moreton. Were you two alone then?

A. Colley. I believe there were several Strangers by at the Time.

Mary Northan sworn.

Mr. Nares. Do you remember carrying any Papers to be printed in the Daily Advertiser?

M. Northan. I carried three.

Mr. Nares. Who wrote the second?

M. Northan. (She takes it in her Hand.) I cannot remember indeed who wrote it. I think Mrs. Canning sent me to the Corner of Moor-lane, at the White Lion, there it was wrote.

Mr. Nares. Who wrote the third?

M. Northan. I cannot justly remember that.

Cross-examined.

Mr. Willes. Did you go by yourself, or in Company with any body?

M. Northan. I went by myself.

Mr. Willes. How came you to put in these Words, any Coachman?

M. Northan. The Mother gave Directions to put in about the Coach, because she was a sober Body, and we thought she might be forced away in a Coach.

Mr.

Mr. Willes. How came the Circumstance of the Coachman to be inserted?

M. Northan. Because her Mother had been informed by a Gentlewoman in Bishopsgate-street, that she heard a Coach drive in great Hast, and a young Person screaming out in it; and that she had no body at Home, or she would have sent and stopped the Coach.

Mr. Willes. Was this Writing on the Back-side one of the Papers on it, when you carried it to the Printer?

M. Northan. I do not know; if it was read to me, I could tell better. (It is read.)

Note, It is supposed she was forcibly taken away by some evil-disposed Person, as she was heard to screech out in a Hackney-Coach in Bishopsgate-Street: If the Coachman remembers any thing of the Affair, by giving an Account as above, he shall be handsomely rewarded for his Trouble.

M. Northan. This was wrote at Mrs. Canning's House, I believe, but I cannot tell by whom; I did not mention about the Coachman at the White Lion.

Mr. Willes. During the Time it was in Mrs. Canning's House, was there any thing wrote in it, or on the Back of it, by any body there?

M. Northan. No, there was not.

Mr. Willes. Can you read?

M. Northan. I can hardly read at all. (She looks at it.) There was nothing on the Back-side when I carried it. (It is read.)

Elizabeth Canning went from her Friends between Nine and Ten on Monday Night, betwixt Houndsditch and Bishopsgate; fresh-colour'd, pitted with the Small-Pox, high Forehead, light Eyebrows, about five Foot high, well-set, had on a purple masquerade stuff Gown, black stuff Petticoat, a white chip Hat bound round with green, white Apron and Handkerchief, blue Stockings, and leather Shoes.

Mr. Willes. Is this all you mentioned to the Person who wrote?

M. Northan. It is, I believe.

Mr. Willes. Do you know who scratched out these Words? (Any Coachman, who remembers taking up such a Person, and can give any Account where she is, shall have two Guineas Reward, to be paid by Mrs. Canning, in Aldermanbury-Postern, Sawyer, which will greatly satisfy her Mother.)

M. Northan. The other is all I gave Directions for; I don't know who scratched this out.

Mr. Nares. I dare venture to say this Alteration was made by the Printer, for I observe he has altered the English and Spelling all the way through by the printed Paper; he saw there was some Suspicion of a Coachman put in in a stupid Manner, and he began to alter it on the Back-side, as it is put down.

Mr. Willes. Here is the third Paper; do you know who wrote this?

M. Northan. I don't know; Mrs. Canning sent me to carry it to the Printer.

Mr. Willes. Here are two Lines scratched out in this; how came that?

M. Northan. The Printer scratched them out, and said, they were of no Use.

Mr. Willes. In the third Letter here are two Lines scratched out: Were they so when you carried it? The Words are, Had in her Pocket twelve Shillings, Nine-pence Half-penny.

M. Northan. The Printer read it, and scratched them out; he said, it was not material to name the Money.

James Lord sworn.

J. Lord. I have been Apprentice to Elizabeth Canning's Mother between Six and Seven Years. I remember her being missing upon New-year's Day was Twelve-month. Mr. Lyon came to our House first about Nine o'Clock, then about Ten, to know whether Mistress know'd whether Betty was come Home to her House. Then I was sent directly to her Uncle Colley's, at Saltpetre-Bank: They were all a-bed: Mrs. Colley answered and said, they had left her about half an Hour after Nine o'Clock, upon the other Side Aldgate Church, in Houndsditch: Then, after that, I came Home and acquainted Mistress with it. There was great Inquiry about the Neighbourhood all Night long almost; I inquired of several Neighbours that Night.

Mr. Williams. When was the next Time you saw her?

J. Lord. On the 29th of January, the Night before King Charles's Martyrdom, about a quarter after Ten o'Clock, I was just going to make fast the Door, going to Bed; somebody lifted up the Latch; it goes with a Bit of String; Mistress was down upon her Knees a praying to see her Apparition, before she came in.

Mr. Williams. Did you see her down on her Knees before Elizabeth Canning came in?

J. Lord. She was down on her Knees some Time before ever she lifted up the Latch.

Mr. Williams. From the 1st of January to this Time, did you ever see the Mother on her Knees?

J. Lord. Yes, I have several Times, praying to God to hear somewhat of her, whether she was alive or dead.

Mr. Williams. This Prayer that you mention, and the Position of her being down on her Knees on the 29th, was that any thing particular, or was it no more than what she had done before?

J. Lord. It was the same as she had several Times done since she missed her Daughter?

Mr. Williams. You was giving an Account that Elizabeth Canning lifted up the Latch, and you was going to make fast the Door; go on, and give an Account in what Manner she came.

J. Lord. I had the Candle in my Hand, and was going to make fast the Door, and she came in: Mistress was praying: Mistress asked, who was there? I then looked her up in the Face, and thought it was somebody else came to inquire Tidings after her: I did not know her at first: After I had looked her in the Face again, she frightened me, because she looked in such a deplorable Condition. I said to Mistress, it was Betty: She said, What Betty? I said, Our Betty: Upon that Mistress fell in a Fit directly, and continued so some Minutes, I cannot say how long.

Mr. Williams. Upon your Oath, do you think it was a real Fit, or a sham Fit?

J. Lord. I never saw her in a Fit before; it was far from a sham Fit. When Elizabeth Canning came in, she was e'en almost spent: I took her by the Arms, and set her down in a Chair: She was e'en almost dead, as black as the Chimney-stock, black and blue: She was dressed up with an old Bit of an Handkerchief round her Head, and an old dirty ragged Bed-gown, what they properly call a Jacket.

Mr. Williams. Did you see what was upon her Head?

J. Lord. She had no Cap, nor Hat, nor Stays on; her Ear was cut, and all bloody.

Mr. Williams. Did it bleed as if it had been fresh cut?

J. Lord. It was a bleeding.

Mr. Williams. Was there any Blood upon the Handkerchief?

J. Lord. There was some Blood upon the Handkerchief that was about her Head: She had an old Handkerchief in her Hand, and a Bit of one upon her Head.

Mr. Williams. What Colour were the Handkerchiefs of?

J. Lord. One was white, but I cannot say for the other.

Mr. Williams. What Condition did she seem to be in with regard to her Health?

J. Lord. She seem'd to be almost spent, just gone; and if it had been much further, I believe she must have dropt down.

Mr. Williams. Who were in the Room at that Time?

J. Lord. There were none but my Mistress and Children in the Room. As soon as my Mistress recovered out of her Fit, I was ordered by Mistress to call Mrs. Woodward, Polly Lyon and Mrs. Myers: They came; she began to say where she had been confined; the Woman was either named Wills or Wells, at Enfield-Wash.

Mr. Williams. Was this that Night?

J. Lord. It was the same Night. So many People came in, I was obliged to keep the Door, to keep People out.

Mr. Williams. Who asked her where she had been?

J. Lord. My Mistress; and she said, she had been at Enfield-Wash, and heard the Name of Wills or Wells, she did not know which; for she heard them go backwards and forwards in the House, and heard them call her by her Name.

Mr. Williams. Did she say how she came to go there?

J. Lord. I was not much in the Room all the Time; I was obliged to keep the Door.

Mr. Williams. Then you cannot give an Account of what she said any further?

J. Lord. I know nothing further than that she is an honest, industrious, sober Girl.

Mr. Williams. Upon your Oath, do you, or do you not, know where Elizabeth Canning was from the 1st of January, to the Day before King Charles's Martyrdom, or any Part of that Time?

J. Lord. No; nor never set Eyes on her, or heard any thing where she was, till she came Home.

Cross-examined.

Mr. Gascoyne. What Time was you sent to Colley's House to inquire for the Girl?

J. Lord. It was between Eleven and Twelve at Night when I got there.

Mr. Gascoyne. How came you to sit up so late that Night?

J. Lord. Mr. Lyon came to our House, as nigh as I can guess, between Nine and Ten, (which is generally about the Time we go to Bed) and asked Mistress if she know'd any thing of her Daughter? She said, No, she thought she had been come Home to his House. The next Morning Mistress and I both went to Mr. Colley's to inquire.

Mr. Gascoyne. Did you not go to Mr. Lyon's first?

J. Lord. I think I did not.

Mr. Gascoyne. What Time in the Morning did you go to Mrs. Colley's?

J. Lord. I believe we went out about Six o'Clock.

Mr. Gascoyne. What Time did you get Home again?

J. Lord. I believe about Ten, and I went out to inquire after her again; I went one Way, and Mistress another, to the Neighbours about.

Mr. Gascoyne. To what Places?

J. Lord. I cannot tell all the Places; I did not go to any Place in particular.

Mr. Gascoyne. Where did your Mistress go?

J. Lord. I cannot tell; she did not tell me; she was just like a mad Woman.

Mr. Gascoyne. Did she order you to go to any Place?

J. Lord. I had no Directions from her to go to any Place in particular.

Mr. Gascoyne. When did you go to your Work?

J. Lord. I did not go to Work till after Dinner.

Mr. Gascoyne. What Time do you generally dine?

J. Lord. About One o'Clock.

Mr. Gascoyne. Was your Mistress at Home, when you came Home from Work?

J. Lord. I don't know.

Mr. Gascoyne. Was the Door open?

J. Lord. It always is.

Mr. Gascoyne. Was you in the Room when your Mistress first kneeled down, the Night the Girl came Home?

J. Lord. I was.

Mr. Gascoyne. Did she not advise you to kneel down?

J. Lord. She did not.

Mr. Gascoyne. What was you doing?

J. Lord. I was praying to God, in my Heart, that she might hear of her.

Mr. Gascoyne. What particular Conversation passed between you and your Mistress that Night, before she kneeled down?

J. Lord. I cannot say; I did not take Notice of all the Words.

Mr. Gascoyne. Did she say she had more Reasons for praying that Night, than at any other Time?

J. Lord. No, she did not.

Mr. Gascoyne. Upon your Oath, whether she did, before the Time she kneeled down, say she should see her?

J. Lord. No, she did not.

Mr. Gascoyne. Did she say she had any Reason to expect her that Week?

J. Lord. No.

Mr. Gascoyne. Did she say, she had some Knowledge, or somebody had told her she would come Home that Week?

J. Lord. She did not expect her coming Home that Night, or that Week, no more than any other.

Mr. Gascoyne. Do you know any thing of your Mistress's going to a Cunning Man?

J. Lord. I know nothing at all about it: She did not acquaint me with it.

Mr. Gascoyne. What, not of going to a Conjuror?

J. Lord. No; she does not acquaint me with all her Affairs.

Mr. Gascoyne. Did you never hear her mention tion she had gone, or would go; to a Cunning Man?

J. Lord. No.

Mr. Gascoyne. Did you never hear your Mistress relate a Dream or Vision she had had?

J. Lord. No, not to my Knowledge.

Mr. Gascoyne. Are you sure?

J. Lord. I might, or might not, hear it; I cannot tell; the Care of my Mistress's Business lies upon me, and I have other Things to mind.

Mr. Gascoyne. Give me a direct Answer, whether you ever heard any such Transaction concerning your Mistress's going to a Conjuror, or having been there?

J. Lord. There was some Talk of a Cunning Man; but I did not know whether she had been with one.

Mr. Gascoyne. What was said of the Cunning Man?

J. Lord. I do not know: I remember there was mention made of a Cunning Man that lived in the Old-Bailey.

Mr. Gascoyne. What Cunning Man was that that lived in the Old-Bailey?

J. Lord. He used to tell Fortunes.

Mr. Gascoyne. How came this Cunning Man to be mentioned?

J. Lord. I believe Mistress or somebody did go to him, but I do not know who.

Mr. Gascoyne. For what did they go?

J. Lord. To hear somewhat of her Daughter.

Mr. Gascoyne. Did you hear this before or after she had been there?

J. Lord. I believe it was after.

Mr. Gascoyne. Who did you hear speak of it?

J. Lord. To the best of my Remembrance, it was my Mistress herself.

Mr. Gascoyne. What Conversation passed upon that, when your Mistress first informed you of it?

J. Lord. I did not hear a Word what he said to her; I heard no more than that she had been there.

Mr. Gascoyne. Was any body by at that Time?

J. Lord. I cannot say who were in the House at the Time, or whether there was, or was not, any body there but ourselves.

Mr. Gascoyne. Did you not inquire what the Cunning Man told her?

J. Lord. No.

Mr. Gascoyne. Did you ever hear any body else in Conversation speak of what was done at this Cunning Man's?

J. Lord. No; nor have I heard to this Time; I always believed he could not tell.

Mr. Gascoyne. Did you ever hear who your young Mistress was with?

J. Lord. No, I never did.

Mr. Gascoyne. Nor any thing about an old Woman?

J. Lord. No.

Mr. Gascoyne. Have you not heard your Mistress say any thing about it?

J. Lord. I have heard her say, she feared some rakish young Gentleman had caught her up, and so carried her away; and I have heard her say, she suspected she was murdered.

Mr. Gascoyne. What was your own Opinion?

J. Lord. I could not tell what to think.

Mr. Gascoyne. Did you ever hear your Mistress say she was taken away in a Coach?

J. Lord. No, I never did.

Mr. Gascoyne. As to the Night she came in, you say the Door was upon the Latch, and your Mistress fell into a Fit; how came you not to be affrighted when she came in?

J. Lord. As soon as she came in, all the Blood of my Body was in my Face; and when I recovered myself, I said, it was our Betty.

Mr. Gascoyne. Was you ever affrighted at the Thoughts of an Apparition before?

J. Lord. No, I never was.

Mr. Gascoyne. How did she appear as to her Face?

J. Lord. She was black and blue on her Face and Arms, like the Stock of a Chimney.

Mr. Gascoyne. Did she look as if she had been beat?

J. Lord. She did, just in the same Manner; her Face and Hands would compare, for Blackness, to a Hat almost.

Mr. Gascoyne. Had she black Eyes?

J. Lord. I did not see that, any more than other Persons are.

Mr. Gascoyne. Did the Black and Blue seem to be Bruises?

J. Lord. The Colour of her Flesh was next a-kin to the Colour of Beating.

Mr. Gascoyne. How long did she continue so black and blue?

J. Lord. I was kept out of the Room, and a Doctor attended her; it was not so proper for me to go there.

Mr. Gascoyne. Can you remember, the Day she went to her Uncle's to Dinner, what Time she was to have come back again?

J. Lord. Yes, towards the Evening, and go with her Mother and buy a Cloak.

Mr. Gascoyne. What Time did she call at your House?

J. Lord. About Eleven o'Clock.

Mr. Gascoyne. When she came Home, what had she on as to Cloaths?

J. Lord. She had a Piece of an old Handkerchief about her Head, and a black Petticoat, I believe an upper one; I think it was the same she went away with. She had nothing over her but that Jacket.

Mr. Gascoyne. How many Petticoats had she on?

J. Lord. I can't say that.

Mr. Gascoyne. Did the Petticoat look clean or dirty?

J. Lord. It looked as if it had been draggled in Country Dirt, with Dirt and Mud.

Mr. Gascoyne. How do you know the Difference between Country Dirt and London Dirt?

J. Lord. Because London Dirt is black, and the other lighter.

Mr. Gascoyne. Did you see the Ear was fresh bleeding?

J. Lord. It was.

Mr. Gascoyne. Have you ever been examined before you came into this Court?

J. Lord. No.

Mr. Gascoyne. Did you ever make your Affidavit before?

J. Lord. No; I never was examined upon Oath before.

Mr. Gascoyne. Look at this Bed-gown.

J. Lord. This is the Bed-gown she came Home in, the Day before King Charles's Martyrdom.

Mr. Gascoyne. Did you ever see it before you saw it upon her, the Night she came Home, on the 29th of January?

J. Lord.

J. Lord. No; I never did.

Mr. Gascoyne. Is it your Mistress's?

J. Lord. No; I am positive it is not.

Mr. Gascoyne. What Reason have you to say that is the Bed-gown?

J. Lord. It looks like it; I am almost positive to it. I saw it the next Day after it was pulled off.

Mr. Gascoyne. Did you make your Inquiry any other Day, after the second Day she was missing?

J. Lord. No; I kept on with my Mistress's Business.

Mr. Gascoyne. Upon your Oath, do you believe your Mistress did know where she was.

J. Lord. Upon my Oath, I am positive, if my Mistress had known where she was, she would have fetched her Home, wherever she was.

Mr. Gascoyne. Did your Mistress say, she expected to see her on the Sunday Night?

J. Lord. No, she did not.

Mr. Gascoyne. In what Position was she when the Girl came in?

J. Lord. She was on her Knees by the Bed-side.

Mr. Gascoyne. Did you ever hear she expected her Home that Night, or was told so by the Cunning Man?

J. Lord. No.

Robert Scarrat sworn.

R. Scarrat. I heard Elizabeth Canning was come Home on the 29th of January, at Night; and as I had never seen her, or spoke to her in my Life, to my Knowledge, I went in out of Curiosity to see her.

Mr. Moreton. Had you heard before, she was missing?

R. Scarrat. I had, the very next Day after she was missing.

Mr. Moreton. What passed after you went in?

R. Scarrat. I was there some Time before she spoke a Word. Mr. Wintlebury came in after me: He said, Bet, how do you do? She said, O Sir, you don't know what I have suffered. He asked her, where she had been? She said, she had been on the Hertfordshire Road. He asked her, how she came to know that? She said, she saw the Coachman, that used to drive her Mistress into Hertfordshire, go by. She was asked, how far she might have been in the Country? She said, it might be about nine or ten Miles.

Mr. Moreton. Did she give any Reason for that?

R. Scarrat. I did not hear her. I asked her, if she knew the Name of the Person; and said, I'll lay a Guinea to a Farthing, she has been at Mother Wells's, for that is as noted a House as any is: She said, her Name is Mother Wills or Wells.

Mr. Moreton. Was that Answer after you had said you would lay a Guinea to a Farthing she had been at Mother Wells's House?

R. Scarrat. It was. I asked her about the House: She said, she had been confined in a longish, darkish Room, and saw the Coachman thro' the Crack of the Window, and that there were some Boards nailed over it. I asked her, whether the Window fronted the Road? She said, it did not; and when she got out, she turned down a little Lane, and then turned into the Fields on her right Hand. I asked her, if she took Notice if any of those Fields were ploughed up? She said, she believed there was. I asked her, when she was in them Fields, on which Hand was the Road?

She said, on the right Hand coming to London. I asked her, when she came out of these Fields, whether she observed coming over a little Brook? She said, she did. I asked her, if she thought it was a Tan-house? She said, she believed it was. I said, it was Mr. Neal's, a Tanner, at Enfield-Wash.

Mr. Moreton. Did you know that Road?

R. Scarrat. I did very well; and that there was such a House, and what Sort of a Character it bore, that it was a very bad House. She said, she met a Man, and asked her Road to London. She said, she had been robbed, and described the Person that cut her Stays off to be a tall, black, swarthy Woman.

Mr. Moreton. Who asked that Question?

R. Scarrat. It was asked, but I can't tell by whom: I said, I had seen Mother Wells, and, to the best of my Knowledge, that Description did not answer to her.

Mr. Moreton. Did she tell you any thing else?

R. Scarrat. She said, there were two young Women, one with black Hair and the other fair; stood laughing at her, while her Stays were cutting off.

Mr. Moreton. How did she appear to be for Health?

R. Scarrat. She appeared to be very wake and feeble, sitting on a little Stool: To the best of my Knowledge, she had on a dirty Bed-gown and black Petticoat, and a foul Cap of her Mother's. I went down to Enfield-Wash with Mr. Wintlebury and Mr. Adamson on the 1st of February: The People were all taken into Custody.

Mr. Moreton. Did she give an Account of any particular Things where she had been confined?

R. Scarrat. She described a black Jug, broken about the Neck, that might hold about four or five Quarts; and she said, she believed there might be about four Quarts of Water in it, and the Jug was left in the Room when she came away; that she had some Bread, but it was so hard, she was forced to dip it in the Water.

Mr. Moreton. Who was the first that went into the Room?

R. Scarrat. I believe several of her Friends had been up in the Room before she came down.

Mr. Moreton. Upon your Oath, when did you see the black Pitcher first?

R. Scarrat. Upon my Oath, I had never seen it, till I saw her fix upon it in the Room.

Mr. Moreton. Was you there when she was in the Parlour?

R. Scarrat. She was brought into the Parlour, supported by two Men. I was in the Parlour then. We made them all sit down, that is, the People that were taken up. The Room was full of Neighbours and People that went down: Susannah Wells was on the left Hand of the Fire, and Mary Squires sitting by the Fire, with her Head and Knees together. Canning looked very hard at her; and whether any body bid her look up, I can't say; but she fixed upon her, and said, That is the Woman that cut off my Stays, and pointed to her. The Gypsie got up, and said, Dear Madam, don't swear my precious Life away. Canning said, I know you very well, I know you too well, to my Sorrow. She was asked, if she knew any body else in the Room, and if she knew a young Man, which was George Squires: She said, she did not say she did. She pointed to the Gypsie's Daughter and Virtue Hall, and said, the young Woman, meaning meaning the Gypsey's Daughter, was leaning on the Dresser when her Stays were cut off, and Virtue Hall was standing by her, when she went into the Room. She was then carried up the Stairs that front the Door. I saw her in one Room, but did not in the first she went into; that was the last she went into there. Coming down Stairs, she said, there was another Room; when she came into the Kitchen, the Door was shut; she said, Through that Door is the Place where I was confined; then the Door was opened, and she went up.

Mr. Moreton. Was you one of the first that went up?

R. Scarrat. No, I was not. I saw her there with the black Jug in her Hand. She said, that was in the Room. She looked round, and found a Tobacco-mould, and said, that was there when she was there. She said, an old Cask and a Saddle or two she left there.

Mr. Moreton. Was she positive that was the Place?

R. Scarrat. She pointed to the Window, and said, she broke out at that Window.

Mr. Moreton. Did you go before Justice Tasb-maker? What Account did she give there?

R. Scarrat. I did: She gave the same Account there, to the best of my Knowledge, as she did here. When the People were taken up, George Squires had a Great Coat on, and a slouched Hat; he pulled the Coat and Hat off; he was made to put them on again in the House, before he got into the Cart to go before the Justice; but Canning would not swear to him.

Mr. Moreton. Had he the Hat and Coat on at the Justice's?

R. Scarrat. He had.

Mr. Moreton. Upon your Oath, did you not, from the 1st of January to the 29th, know where she was?

R. Scarrat. I never saw her, to the best of my Knowledge, till she came Home.

Mr. Moreton. Do you know, at this Hour, any body that does know where she was?

R. Scarrat. No, I do not.

Q. from a Juryman. Which Window did she point to, where she said she got out at?

R. Scarrat. To the End Window.

Cross-examined.

Mr. Davy. Do you know Wells's House?

R. Scarrat. I do, by passing and repassing.

Mr. Davy. Had you ever been in her House before January 1753?

Mr. Moreton. Though you should stigmatize yourself, let not the Truth go undiscovered.

R. Scarrat. I have been there.

Mr. Moreton. How long ago is it, that you was in her House?

R. Scarrat. It is some Years ago.

Mr. Davy. Was you ever in the Hay-loft?

R. Scarrat. I never was.

Mr. Davy. Are you very certain of that?

R. Scarrat. I am.

Mr. Davy. Did you never jump out at a Window in that Room?

R. Scarrat. No, I never did; I don't like jumping so well.

Mr. Davy. Where did you live, when you went there?

R. Scarrat. I was then Servant to Mr. Snee.

Mr. Davy. How often was you there, and when?

Vol. X.

R. Scarrat. I was there once or twice, about four or five Years ago.

Mr. Davy. With whom?

R. Scarrat. With two or three Friends.

Mr. Davy. Men or Women?

R. Scarrat. Men.

Mr. Davy. Were there no Women?

R. Scarrat. No.

Mr. Davy. Did you never take a Girl there?

R. Scarrat. No, never in my Life.

Mr. Davy. Was you never there with a Woman?

R. Scarrat. No.
