Bedouins (bed'ô-inz), or Bedawi (bed-â-wê'). The nomadic Arabs, in distinction from the fellahin, or peasants, and the dwellers in towns, who usually call themselves "sons of the Arabs" (Ibn-el Arab). They are subdivided in tribes called Kabileh. Two principal groups may be distinguished: (1) Bedouins in the narrower sense—i. e. Arabic-speaking tribes who occupy the deserts adjoining central and northern Egypt, or who are to be found in various regions of southern Nubia as a pastoral people; (2) Bejas, or Bejas, who range over the regions of Upper Egypt and Nubia situated between the Nile and the Red Sea, extending to the frontiers of the Abyssinian highland. This second group consists of three different tribes, the Hadendoa, the Bisharin, and the Ababdeh. On the left bank of the Nile they are spread out as far as the boundaries of the Niger (lat. 9° N.). The territory occupied by them is called "Ed-bai," and they number about 600,000 souls. The peninsula of Mount Sinai is also occupied by three Bedouin tribes, the Terabiyin, the Tibyah, and the Sawarkeh or El-Araish. The Bedouins live in tents. Their chief occupation is breeding cattle. Their figures are symmetrical and slender, their form and limbs delicate and graceful, and their complexion bronze-colored. They are courageous and warlike. They all profess Islam, but are lax in following its precepts, and are tolerant in their intercourse with non-Mohammedans.

Bedr (bed'r), or Beder (bed'er). A village in Arabia, between Medina and Mecca. It was the scene of the first victory of Mohammed over the Korashites, about the beginning of 624 A. D.

Beef-eaters (bêf'ê'têrz). [Originally humorous.] A name given to the Yeomen of the Guard, whose function it has been, ever since 1485, when they first appeared in the coronation procession of Henry VII., to attend the sovereign at banquets and other state occasions. The Tower Warders are also called Beef-eaters, fifteen having been sworn in as Yeomen Extraordinary of the Guard during the reign of Edward VI. The uniform differs slightly, the Tower Warders having no cross-belt.

Beeffington (bê'fing-ton), Milor. A fictitious English nobleman exiled by royal tyranny before the granting of the Magna Charta. He is introduced in "The Rovers" in the Anti-Jacobin poetry by Frere, Canning, and Ellis.

Beefsteak Club. A club founded in the reign of Queen Anne (it was called a "new society" in 1709), believed to be the earliest club with this name. Estcourt, the actor, was made providore. It was composed of the "chief wits and great men of the nation" and its badge was a grilliron. The "Society of Beefsteaks," established some years later, which has been confused with this, seemed being called a club; they designated themselves "the Steaks." "The Sublime Society of the Steaks" was founded at Covent Garden Theatre in 1755. It is said to have had its origin in an accidental dinner taken by Lord Peterborough with Rich, the manager, in his private room at the theater. The latter cooked a beefsteak so appetizingly that Lord Peterborough proposed repeating the entertainment the next Saturday at the same hour. After the fire at Covent Garden in 1808 the Sublime Society met at the Bedford Coffee House, whence they removed to the Old Lyceum in 1809. When it was burned in 1830, they returned to the Bedford. When the Lyceum Theatre was rebuilt in 1838, a magnificent and appropriate room was provided for them (Timbs), where they met until 1867, when the dwindling society was dissolved. A Beefsteak Club was established at the Theatre Royal, Dublin, by Sheridan, about 1749, of which Peg Woffington was president. There were also other clubs of the kind. The present Beefsteak Club in Toole's Theatre, London, was established in 1876.

Gen. xxi. 31 and xxvi. 23-33.] In ancient geography, a town at the southern extremity of Palestine, 44 miles southwest of Jerusalem. It became a seat of idolatry (Amos v. 5; viii. 14). It was rehhabited after the return from the captivity (Neh. xi. 27). In the period of the Roman Empire it was the seat of a garrison, and later of a bishop. It was mentioned in the middle ages, and is identified with the ruins surrounding 1,000 large wells called by the Arabs Bir-es-Saba, "Well of the Lions." It was one of the oldest places in Palestine, and is familiar in the phrase "From Dan to Beersheba"—that is, "from one end of the land to the other."

Beeskow (bā'skō). A town in the province of Brandenburg, Prussia, situated on the Spree 43 miles southeast of Berlin. Population, about 4,000.

Beethoven (bā'tō-ven), Ludwig van. Born at Bonn, Prussia, probably Dec. 16, 1770; died at Vienna, March 26, 1827. A celebrated German composer, of Dutch descent. He began his musical education at the age of four years under his father, a musician in the court band of the Elector of Cologne. In 1779 he was taught by Pfeiffer, a tenor singer who lodged with his parents; and from 1783 till 1792 filled various positions as court organist, conductor of the opera band or orchestra, etc. In this year the elector sent him to Vienna to study music at his expense. He was now about twenty-two, and began his lessons with Haydn, principally in strict counterpoint. In 1794 Beethoven, dissatisfied with the lack of attention given him by Haydn, who was soon occupied, and who went to England in that year, took lessons of Albrechtsberger and from Schuppanzigh on the violin. He published his three trios, known as Opus 1, in 1795, and from this time published his compositions with regularity. In 1802 his deafness, which had previously troubled him, began to be serious. In 1814 lawsuits and other anxieties and worries commenced, which, with his now total deafness, clouded all his later years. On April 20, 1826, he made his last appearance in public. In 1824 he moved into Schwarzenbergstrasse in Vienna, where, on December 2, 1826, his last illness began. Among his compositions are the three trios (1795), three piano sonatas (1796), "Adelaide" (1795), "Promethens" and "Mount of Olives" (1802), "1st Symphony" (1800), "2d Symphony" (1802), "Kreutzer Sonata" (1803), "Eroica Symphony" (1804), "Fidelio" (1805-06; rewritten 1814), "4th Symphony" (1806), "Symphonies 5 and 6" (1808), "7th Symphony" (1812), "Battle Symphony" (1813), "8th Symphony" (1814), "Meeresstille" (1815), "9th Symphony" (1824), "Mass in D" (1824), etc.

Beets (bēts), Nikolaas. Born at Haarlem, Holland, Sept. 13, 1814. A Dutch poet. His works include the poems "Kuser" (1835), "Guy de Vlaming" (1857), "Ada van Holland" (1840), "Korenbloemen" (1853), etc.; and the prose writings "Camera Obscura" (1839), "Verscheidenheden, etc." (1858), "Stichtelijke Treen" (1848-60), etc.

Befana (bā-fā'nā), The. [It., corrupted from epifania, LL. epiphania, Epiphany.] An old woman in Italian folk-lore who is a sort of Wandering Jew and Santa Claus combined. She is the good fairy who fills the children's stockings with presents on Twelfth Night, or the feast of the Epiphany, Jan. 6. If the children have been naughty she fills the stockings with ashes; but she is compassionate, and will sometimes relent and return to comfort the little penitents with gifts. Tradition says that she was too busy sweeping to come to the window to see the Three Wise Men of the East when they passed by on their way to offer homage to the new-born Saviour, but said she could see them when they came back. For this lack of reverence she was duly punished, as they went back another way and she has been watching ever since. At one time her effigy was carried about the streets on the eve of the Epiphany, but the custom is mostly disused. She is used as a bugbear by Italian mothers.

Beg (beg), Callum. A minor character in Sir Walter Scott's novel "Waverley," the foot-page of Fergus Mac-Ivor, in the service of Waverley.

Bega (bā'go). A river and canal in southern Hungary, a tributary of the Theiss.

Begas, Oskar. Born at Berlin, July 31, 1828; died there, Nov. 10, 1883. A German historical and portrait painter, son of Karl Begas.

Begas, Reinhold. Born at Berlin, July 15, 1831. A German sculptor, son of Karl Begas.

Beggar's Bush, The. A comedy by Fletcher and others (Rowley and Massinger), performed at court in 1622, printed in 1647. It was long popular. Three alterations have appeared: one, "The Royal Merchant," an opera, in 1767; the last in 1815 under the title of "The Merchant of Bruges." Mr. Lewes says the plot is taken from a novel by Cervantes, the "Fuercia de la Sangre."

Beggar's Daughter. See Bess or Bessee, and Beggar of Bethnal Green.

Beggar's Opera, The. An opera by John Gay, produced at Lincoln's Inn Fields Jan. 29, 1728. It is said to have been suggested by a remark of Dean Swift to Gay "that a Newgate pastoral might make a pretty sort of thing." Gay was also said to have been induced to produce this opera from spite at having been offered an unacceptable appointment at court. It was intended as a satire on the effeminate style then recently imported from Italy, and was very successful. The songs were written for popular English and Scottish tunes, and were arranged and scored by Dr. Pepusch who composed the overture. The characters are highwaymen, pickpockets, etc., satirizing the corrupt political conditions of the day.

Beggar of Bethnal Green, The. A comedy by J. Sheridan Knowles, produced in 1834. It was abridged from "The Beggar's Daughter of Bethnal Green" (1828), which was based on the well-known ballad. See Blind Beggar, and Bess.

Beggars, The. See Gueux.

Beghards. See Beguins, 2.

Begon (bā-gōn'), Michel. Born at Blois, France, 1638; died at Rochefort, France, March 4, 1710. A French magistrate and administrator. He was a naval officer and successively intendant of the French West Indies, of Canada, and of Rochefort and La Rochelle. He was noted for his love of science, and the great genus of plants Begonia was named in his honor.

Beg-Shehr (beg'shehr'), or Bey-Shehr (bā'shehr'), or Bei-Shehr. 1. A lake in Asia Minor, in lat. 37° 40' N., long. 31° 40' E. Length, about 25 miles.—2. A town in the vilayet of Konieh, Asiatic Turkey, situated near the eastern shore of Lake Beg-Shehr.

Beguins, or Beguines (beg'inz). 1. A name given to the members of various religious communities of women who, professing a life of poverty and self-denial, went about in coarse gray clothing (of undyed wool), reading the Scriptures and exhorting the people. They originated in the 12th or 13th century, and formerly flourished in Germany, the Netherlands, France, and Italy; and communities of the name still exist in Belgium. [Now generally written Beguine.]

2. [Only Beguins.] A community of men founded on the same general principle of life as that of the Beguines (see def. 1). They became infected with various heresies, especially with systems of illumination, which were afterward propagated among the communities of women. They were condemned by Pope John XXI. in the early part of the 14th century. The faithful Beguins joined themselves in numbers with the different orders of friars. The sect, generally otiose and the object of severe measures, had greatly diminished by the following century, but continued to exist till about the middle of the 16th. Also called Beghard.

Béguinage (bā-gē-nāzh'), Grand. [F.] A monastery (of Beguins) in Ghent, Belgium, removed recently from its medieval site to a new one outside of the city. It forms a town by itself, walled and moated, with 18 convents, picturesque streets of small houses built in highly diversified medieval designs, and a handsome central church. The Petit Béguinage is similar.

Behaim (bā'hīm), or Behem (bā'hēm), Martin. Born at Nuremberg about the middle of the 15th century; died at Lisbon, July 29, 1506. A celebrated navigator and cosmographer. From about 1484 he was in the service of Portugal, taking part in the expedition of Diogo Cam (1484) and others on the African coast. He was a friend of Columbus. The celebrated Nuremberg globe, still preserved in that city, was constructed by him in 1492, during a visit to his family; and is interesting as showing the idea of the world entertained by the first cosmographers, just previous to the discovery of America. Behaim was one of the inventors of the astrolabe.

Behechio (bā-e-chē'ō). An Indian cacique of Xaragua, in the island of Hispaniola, at the time of its discovery. In 1495 he joined his brother-in-law, Cannabo, and other chieftains in war against the Spaniards. After the defeat of the Indians at the battle of the Vega Real (April 25, 1495) he retired to his own province, where he ruled conjointly with his sister, the celebrated Anacaona. Influenced by her, he made peace with Bartholomew Columbus (1498). He died about 1502.

Behem. See Behaim.

Behistun (be-his-tōn'), or Bisitun (bē-sō-tōn'). [Pers. Behistūn.] A rock in western Persia on the road from Hamadan (ancient Agbatana) to Bagdad, near the city of Kirmanshah. The rock, which rises nearly perpendicular to a height of 1,700 feet, has been noticed from ancient times as having on its surface mysterious figures and signs. Major-General Sir Henry Rawlinson, under great hardships and dangers, copied and afterward deciphered one of the greatest inscriptions in cuneiform characters. Three hundred feet above the base, on a polished surface, is sculptured a bas-relief picturing Darius with a long row of fettered prisoners, representatives of the subjugated nations. The bas-relief is surrounded by numerous columns of inscriptions, making in all over one thousand lines of cuneiform writing. The long account of Darius's reign is repeated three times in the different languages of the empire: in Persian, Assyrian, and the language of Susiana (Elam). The decipherment of this long trilingual inscription, executed by Sir Henry Rawlinson during the years 1835-37, formed an epoch in the history of Assyriology, as it put it on the basis of a science. By the Greeks this gigantic monument was attributed to Semiramis.

Behm (bām), Ernst. Born in Gotha, Jan. 4, 1830; died there, March 15, 1884. A German geographer and statistician. Bel (bel). [Lord.] One of the most important of the Babylonian gods of Semitic origin. In the enumeration of the twelve great gods he holds the second place in the first triad. His importance in Assyria-Babylonia was about the same as that of Baal among the Canaanites, but he had no solar character. To him is ascribed the creation of the world, and especially of mankind, whence the Assyrian kings call themselves "governors of Bel," "rulers over Bel's subjects." He is also often entitled "father of the gods," and his spouse, Belit ("lady"), "the mother of the great gods." It is Bel who brings about the deluge and destroys mankind. His name occurs in Isa. xli. 1, Jer. l. 2. The principal seat of his worship was Nippur (modern Niffer), while the tutelary deity of the city of Babylon was Merodach (Marduk), who is often called Bel-Merodach, or simply Bel, and is alluded to in the passages of the Old Testament cited above. Bel being known as the supreme god of Babylonia, Herodotus considered the great Nebo temple of Borsippa as that of Bel. See Baal.

Belgium (bel'ji-nm, commonly bel'jum). [From L. Belgica; F. La Belgique, G. Belgien.] A kingdom of Europe, bounded by the North Sea on the northwest, the Netherlands on the north, the Netherlands (separated by the Meuse), Prussia, and Luxemburg on the east, and France on the southwest and west. It is divided into 9 provinces: East Flanders, West Flanders, Brabant, Antwerp, Limburg, Liège, Luxemburg, Namur, and Hainaut. The capital is Brussels. The government is a hereditary constitutional monarchy, with king, senate, and chamber of representatives. The prevailing religion is Roman Catholic: the languages, French and Flemish. The surface is generally level, but hilly in the southeast (the Ardennes rise to a height of about 2,200 feet). It has flourishing agriculture; is very rich in coal and iron; has mines of lead, copper, zinc, calamine, manganese, etc.; and has important manufactures of linen, lace, woolen and cotton goods, firearms, gloves, beet-sugar, glass, etc. It is the most thickly settled country in Europe. Belgium was a part of the Roman and Frankish dominions, and was divided in the middle ages into various counties, duchies, etc. Its cities, Ghent, Bruges, Brussels, Antwerp, etc., were great commercial and manufacturing centers in the 13th-16th centuries. It formed part of the later duchy of Burgundy; passed to the house of Hapsburg; as the Spanish Netherlands, did not unite with the northern provinces in the revolt of the 16th century; passed to Austria as the Austrian Netherlands in 1713; was conquered by France in 1794, and annexed to France; and was united with the Netherlands in a kingdom in 1815. Belgium revolted against Holland in 1830: the resistance of Holland was subdued by the aid of France and Great Britain 1831-33. Limburg and Luxemburg were divided between Belgium and the Netherlands in 1839. Belgium has been the scene of many battles and sieges, as in the wars of the 17th century, the Spanish Succession, the Austrian Succession, the French Revolution, and the Napoleonic wars. The Congo Free State was mortgaged to Belgium in 1890. The constitution was reformed in a democratic direction in 1893. Area, 11,373 square miles. Population (1893), 6,195,355.

Belgravia (bel-grä'vi-ä). A fashionable district in the West End of London. It is bounded by Hyde Park, Green Park, Sloane street, and Piccadilly. It was originally marshy ground, and occupies in great part what was known as the Ebury Farm. In 1825 it was filled up with earth obtained in excavating St. Katharine's Docks, and residences were built. It derives its name from Belgrave Square, which, with Eaton Square, Grosvenor Place, etc., is included in it.

Belial (bel'liäl). [Early mod. E. also Belyall, ME. Belial, LL. (in Vulgate) Belial, Gr. Beliaz, Heb. bily'al, used in the Old Testament usually in phrases translated, in the English version, "man of Belial," "son of Belial," as if Belial were a proper name equiv. to Satan; hence once in New Testament (Gr. Beliaz) as an appellative of Satan (2 Cor. vi. 15). But the Heb. bily'al is a common noun, meaning worthlessness or wickedness.] The spirit of evil personified; the devil; Satan; in Milton, one of the fallen angels, distinct from Satan. In "Faust's Book of Marvels" (1469) he is called the Viceroy of the Infernal Kingdom under Lucifer or Satan.

Belianis (bäl-lē-ä'nēs) of Greece. One of the continuations of the romance "Amadis of Gaul." It first appeared, in Spanish, in 1547, and was written by Jeronimo Fernandez. In 1556 an Italian version appeared; in 1598 it was translated into English, and in 1625 into French.

Bel-Ibni (bel-ib'ni). [Assyr., 'the god Bel has created.'] Governor of Babylonia under Asurbanipal, king of Assyria (668-626 B. C.).

Belibus (bel-i-bus). [Perhaps contracted from Babylonian Bel-e-puš, Bel has made.] King of Assyria, appointed by Sennacherib, king of Assyria (705-681 B. C.).

Belidor (bäl-lē-dör'), Bernard Forest de. Born in Catalonia, 1697 (1693?): died at Paris, Sept. 8, 1761. A noted French engineer. His works include "Architecture hydraulique" (1737-51), "Le bombardier français" (1731), "Traité des fortifications" (1735), etc.

Believe as you List. A play licensed May 7, 1631. It is "unquestionably an alteration of the play of Massinger's which Herbert refused to license for its dangerous matter, the deposing of Sebastian of Portugal by Philip of Spain. Massinger altered Sebastian into Antiochus, Spain into Rome, etc., wrote an ironical prologue, and told his hearers to interpret as they liked 'Believe as you List'" (Fleay).

Bel Inconnu (bel-an-ko-nü'), Le. [OF., 'The Fair Unknown.'] One of the secondary romances of the Round Table. It is by Renaud de Beaujeu. The hero is a young knight who appears before the Round Table and, on being questioned, says he has no name, his mother having always called him Beau-fils, whereupon Arthur commands that he be called Le Bel Inconnu. The romance was printed for the first time in Paris in 1860.

Belinda (bel-in'dä). 1. One of the principal characters in Etherege's comedy "The Man of Mode."—2. A gay, witty, and sensible girl in Vanbrugh's comedy "The Provoked Wife." She loves Heartfree, and marries him ostensibly to get her aunt, Lady Brute, out of a scrape.

3. A rich woman in Charles Shadwell's play "The Fair Quaker of Deal."—4. An affected fine lady in love with Bellmour, in Congreve's comedy "The Old Bachelor."—5. The principal character in Pope's serio-comic poem "The Rape of the Lock." Belinda's curl, stolen by her lover, flew to the skies, and became a meteor which "Shot through liquid air, And drew behind a radiant trail of hair."

Belinda was intended for Arabella Fernor, and the incident of the "Rape of the Lock" is founded on fact.

6. A proud but tender-hearted girl in love with Beverley, in Murphy's play "All in the Wrong."

Belinda. A novel by Miss Edgeworth, published in 1801.

Béline (bäl-lēn'). The mercenary second wife of Argan in Molière's comedy "Le Malade Imaginaire." She pretends to love him, but her falsehood is discovered by his ruse of pretending to be dead, when she bursts into exclamations of joy.

Belisarius (bel-i-sä'ri-us). [Slav. Beli-tzar, i. e. White Prince.] Born in Illyria, or Dardania (?), about 505; died March 13, 565. The greatest general of the Byzantine empire. He was general of the eastern armies 529-532; rescued Justinian by the suppression of the "Green" faction at Constantinople in 532, overthrew the Vandal kingdom in Africa 533-534; won famous victories over the Goths in Italy 534-540; conquered Ravenna in 540; conducted the war against the Persians 541-542; again took command against the Goths in Italy in 544; was superseded by Narses in 548; rescued Constantinople from northern (Bulgarian) invaders in 559; and was imprisoned a short time by Justinian about 563. The tale that in old age he was blind and obliged to beg his bread from door to door is false.

The exploits of Belisarius, looked at in themselves, are enough to place him in the very first rank of military commanders; when we consider the circumstances under which they were achieved, he may fairly claim the first place of all. Hannibal is his only rival, as Heraclius had no Justinian to thwart him at home.

Freeman, Hist. Essays.

Bélie (bäl-lēz'). The sister of Philaminte in Molière's comedy "Les Femmes Savantes." She is gifted with remarkable self-appreciation, and thinks every man is in love with her.

Belit (bel-it'). [Babylonian, 'lady.'] One of the prominent female deities of the Assyro-Babylonian pantheon, wife of Bel. She is called "lady of the nations," "mother of the great gods." As goddess of the nether world her name is Allat. She is, however, sometimes identified with Ishtar, the Ashtoreth (Astarte) of the Canaanites, the goddess of love and war. Belit seems to have also been used as an honorary title of any goddess.

Beliza (bel-lē-zä). The waiting-woman of Doralice in Dryden's comedy "Marriage à la Mode."

He was collector of internal revenue in Iowa 1865-69, and Republican secretary of war 1869-76, resigning in consequence of charges of official corruption.

Bell (bel), Acton. Pseudonym of Anne Brontë.

Bell, Adam. An English outlaw, celebrated for his skill in archery, said to have lived in the time of Robin Hood's father. About him nothing certain is known. He is the hero of several old ballads, notably "Adam Bell, Clym of the Cloughe, and Wyllyam of Cloudeste, printed without date by William Copland about 1550. There are several allusions to him in dramatic literature. Shakspeare alludes to him in "Much Ado about Nothing" and in "Romeo and Juliet," and Davenant in a poem called "A Long Vacation in London." Ben Jonson speaks of Clyn of the Clongh in "The Alchemist." Percy and Ritson both adhere mainly to Copland's text, and Child reprints from Ritson with some improvements. The real person or persons of the name are thought by Child to have no connection with the hero of the ballads.

Bell, Alexander Graham. Born at Edinburgh, Scotland, March 3, 1847. An American physicist, son of Alexander Melville Bell. He came to the United States in 1872, and became a professor of vocal physiology in the Boston University. He first exhibited his apparatus for the transmission of sound by electricity, the telephone, in 1876. He invented the telephone, and has developed his father's system of "Visible Speech."

Bell, Alexander Melville. Born at Edinburgh, 1819. A Scottish-American educator, inventor of a method of phonetic notation called by him "visible speech," because the characters indicate by their form and position the physiological formation of the sounds. He has written "Visible Speech," "Principles of Phonetics," works on elocution and shorthand, and "World-English," an adaptation of the Roman alphabet to the phonetic spelling of English.

Bell, Andrew. Born at St. Andrew's, Scotland, March 27, 1753; died at Cheltenham, England, Jan. 27, 1832. Βελλεροφών, Βελλεροφόντης.] In Greek legend, a son of Glaucus, king of Corinth (or, in some accounts, of Poseidon), and grandson of Sisyphus. He was the rider of Pegasus, the slayer of the monster Chimera, and conqueror of the Solymi and Amazons. His exploits gained for him the daughter and one half the kingdom of Iobates, king of Lycia; but he later fell under the displeasure of the gods. According to Pindar his pride so increased with his good fortune that he attempted to mount to heaven on Pegasus; but Zeus maddened the horse with a gadfly, and Bellerophon fell and perished. He was worshipped as a hero at Corinth.

Bellerophon. 1. A British line-of-battle ship of 74 guns and 1,613 tons. She served in the Channel squadron of 1793 and 1794, was disabled at the battle of the Nile, Aug. 1, 1798, and fought in the battle of Trafalgar, Oct. 21, 1805.

Belphegor (bel'fe-gôr), or Belfagor (bel'fa-gôr). 1. Baal Peor (which see). — 2. An archdemon who undertook an earthly marriage, but who fled, daunted, from the horrors of female companionship. See the extract.

Pluto summoned an infernal council to consult on the best mode of ascertaining the truth or falsehood of such statements (that wives brought their husbands to hell). After some deliberation it was determined that one of their number should be sent into the world endowed with a human form, and subjected to earthly passions; that he should be ordered to choose a wife as early as possible, and after remaining above ground for ten years, should report to his infernal master the benefits and burdens of matrimony. Though this plan was unanimously approved, none of the fiends were disposed voluntarily to undertake the commission, but the lot at length fell on the archdemon Belfagor. . . . This story, with merely a difference of names, was originally told in an old Latin MS., which is now lost, but which, till the period of the civil wars in France, remained in the library of Saint Martin de Tours. But whether Brevio or Machiavel first exhibited the tale in an Italian garb, has been a matter of dispute among the critics of their country. It was printed by Brevio during his life, and under his own name, in 1545; and with the name of Machiavel in 1549, which was about eighteen years after that historian's death. Both writers probably borrowed the incidents from the Latin MS., for they could scarcely have copied from each other.

Dunlop, Hist. of Prose Fiction, II. 186.

[La Fontaine treated this subject in one of his "Contes," and Wilson printed an English tragedy called "Belphegor, or the Marriage of the Devil" in 1691. Legend brought out a French comedy called "Belphegor" in 1721.] 3. A translation and adaptation of "Palliasse," a French play by Dennerly and Mare Fournier, by Charles Webb (1856). The principal character, Belphegor, is a mountebank, and though he earns his living by the most ludicrous shams, his distress and despair at the apparent desertion of his wife are very pathetic.

Belphebe (bel-fē'bē). [F. bel, belle, fair, and L. Phæbe, Gr. Phōky, Artemis (Diana).] A huntress, in Spenser's "Faerie Queene," intended to represent Queen Elizabeth as a woman, as Gloriana represented her as a queen.

"Connected in friendship with all the men of letters and first poets of his age, he was a lover of the celebrated Lucretia Borgia, daughter of Alexander VI., and wife of Alfonso, Duke of Ferrara; and was a favorite with the Popes Leo X. and Clement VII., who loaded him with honors, pensions, and benefices. He enjoyed, from the year 1520, the title of historiographer to the Republic of Venice; and Paul III. finally created him a Cardinal in 1539. Wealth, fame, and the most honorable employments seemed to pursue him, and snatched him, in spite of himself, from a life of epicurean pleasure, which he did not renounce when he took the ecclesiastical habit. His death was occasioned by a fall from his horse, on the eighteenth day of January, 1547, in his seventy-seventh year." Sismond's, Lit. of the South of Europe, l. 426.

Born at Benaleaz, Estremadura, about 1499; died at Popayan, 1550. A Spanish conqueror of Quito and Popayan. He joined the expedition of Pedrarias to Darien, and in March, 1532, joined Pizarro on the coast at Puerto Viejo with 30 men. Incited by the Cañaris Indians, who promised to join him, he undertook the conquest of Quito. Marching over the mountains, he defeated the Inca general Kumiñani on the plains of Riobamba, and entered Quito. Joined soon after by Almagro, their united forces met those of Pedro de Alvarado, governor of Guatemala, who had attempted an independent conquest of Quito. (See Alvarado, Pedro de.) Alvarado was induced to retire, and many of his men joined Benalcazar, who continued his northern conquests. He invaded Popayan in 1533, and next year carried his conquests still farther north, to the country of the Chinchas Indians. After founding many Spanish towns, Benalcazar went to Spain in 1537, and in 1538 he was appointed governor of Popayan, a district which comprised what is now southwestern Colombia.

Benedict XIV. (Prospero Lambertini). Born at Bologna, March 31, 1675; died May 3, 1758. Pope 1740-58. He prohibited in two bulls, "Ex quo singularis" (1742) and "Omnium sollicitudinem" (1744), the practice, extensively adopted by the Jesuits in their Indian and Chinese missions, of accommodating Christian language and usage to heathen ceremonies and superstition.

Benedict, Saint. Born at Nursia, in Umbria, about 480 A. D.; died March 21, 543. An Italian monk who founded the order of the Benedictines, at Monte Cassino, about 529. He is commemorated in the Roman and Anglican calendars on March 1, and in the Greek calendar on March 14.

St. Benedict drew up for the monks of Monte Cassino statutes which were promptly adopted throughout Gaul. These wise regulations threw aside useless maceration, and divided the time of the monks into periods of prayer, mental and manual labor; they were obliged to cultivate the land, but also to read and copy manuscripts. Some little literary life was thus preserved in the retirement of the monasteries, and its dependencies formed what are now called model farms; they presented examples of activity and industry for the laborer, the mechanic, and the landowner. Darney, Hist. France, p. 54.

Benedict, Saint, of Aniane. Born in Languedoc about 750; died 821. A Roman Catholic saint, noted as a reformer of monastic discipline. Being intrusted by Louis the Pious with the superintendence of the convents of western France, he attempted to bring them all under one rule by joining to the rule of St. Benedict of Nursia, so far as practicable, all other rules, with the result that the "Concordia Regularum" of St. Benedict of Aniane became hardly less celebrated than the original rule of St. Benedict of Nursia.

Benedict. Died in 1193. Abbot of Peterborough 1177-93. He wrote a history of the passion, and another of the miracles of Thomas Becket; but is not, as has been commonly supposed, the author of the "Gesta Henrici Secundi."

Ben-hadad (ben-hā'dad), or Ben-Haddad. The name of three kings of Syria: (a) A contemporary of Asa, king of Judah (929-873 B. C.). 1 Ki. xv. 18 ff. (b) Son of the preceding, antagonist and ally in turn of Ahab, king of Israel (1 Ki. xx. 22, 34). Shalmaneser II., king of Assyria 860-824, relates in his annals that in the 6th year of his reign (854) he defeated at Karkar (near the river Orontes) 12 allied kings of Hatti and the sea-coast, among them the king Dadda-idri of Damascus, and Ahab of Israel. Two other victories over Dadda-idri are recorded in the annals of 849 and 846. Dadda-idri is, no doubt, the same as Ben-hadad, for in both the inscriptions and the Old Testament (1 Ki. xx. 34 ff.) he figures as an ally of Ahab and as the father and predecessor of Hazael (Assyrian Hazai-ilu). His full name was probably Lin-addu-idri, the son of the storm-god (called in Assyrian Ramman), and was shortened by the Hebrews as well as by the Assyrians. (c) Son of Hazael, and a contemporary of Jehoahaz, king of Israel (856-839). 2 Ki. xiii. 3.

Beni-Hassan (bā'nē-hās'sān). A village in Middle Egypt, situated on the east bank of the Nile, opposite the ancient Hermapolis, in lat. 27° 54' N. It is famous for its rock-tombs, and for its grottoes (the σπηλιές Ἀρτεμιδος, cave of Artemis). The chief groups of rock-cut sepulchers occupy a terrace in the limestone cliff bordering at a little distance the east bank of the Nile. The tombs date from the beginning of the 12th dynasty (3000-2500 B.C.), and consist of a rock-cut vestibule preceding a chamber in which is sunk a shaft at the bottom of which lies the tomb itself. The walls of the chambers are covered with very remarkable paintings of scenes of ancient life, but the tombs are especially notable for the celebrated so-called proto-Doric columns of many of their vestibules. These are set, usually two in antis, in the rectangular rock-openings, and support an architrave on their thin square abaci; there is no echinus. Some of the rock-cut shafts are shaped in prismatic forms; others have shallow channels with sharp arrises.

Benjamin (ben'jā-min). [Heb., commonly interpreted to mean "son of the right hand," i. e. 'fortunate,' felix; but other explanations are given.] The youngest son of Jacob. He was named Benoni ('son of my sorrow') by his mother, Rachel, who died in giving him birth; but this was changed to Benjamin by Jacob. The tribe of Benjamin occupied a territory about 26 miles long and 12 wide between Ephraim (on the north) and Judah, containing Jerusalem and Jericho.

The existence of the tribe of Benjamin was also very peculiar. Its territory was small and almost entirely occupied by the Canaanites, either allies like the Gibeonites or enemies like the Jebusites. The Benjamites were little else than a special military corps, of a high caste as regards the use of the sling, their young men being accustomed to use the left hand instead of the right. Their strong place was Gibeah, to the north of Jerusalem. They were not liked, and their morality was said to be very low. Renan, Hist. of the People of Israel, I. 289.

Beowulf (bā'ō-wulf). [AS. Beowulf, taken by some to mean 'bee-wolf' (from beo, bee, and wulf, wolf), i. e. 'bear,' a complimentary name for a fierce warrior; according to others, representing an orig. Beadwulf* (= Icel. Böðhulfr*), war-wolf, from beado, war, and wulf, wolf.) The hero of an Anglo-Saxon epic poem in alliterative verse, of unknown authorship, represented as a thane and later king of the Swedish Geatas. The scene of action is in Danish and Swedish territory. The foundation is mythical, legendary, and historical material from the time of the Danish conquest of the Cimbric Peninsula, in the early part of the 6th century. Danish poems embodying this material are supposed to have come to the neighboring Angles left behind in their old home, and to have then been brought over to England by the last migrations from the Continent. The poem was doubtless a gradual growth, and has probably existed in many successive versions. The form that has come down to us dates from near the beginning of the 8th century. It is preserved in a single MS. of the Cottonian Library in the British Museum. "Beowulf" is not only the oldest epic in English, but in the whole Germanic group of languages.

Béranger (bā-roñ-zhā'), Pierre Jean de. Born at Paris, Aug. 19, 1780: died at Paris, July 16, 1857. A famous French lyric poet. He was the author of songs, "political, amatory, bacchanalian, satirical, philosophical after a fashion, and of almost every other complexion that the song can possibly take. Their form is exactly that of the 18th-century chanson, the frivolity and licence of language being considerably curtailed, and the range of subjects proportionately extended" (Saintsbury). The first collection of his songs was published in 1815. He was the son of a notary's clerk. In 1804 necessity compelled him to seek aid from Lucien Bonaparte, which was given in the form of a clerkship in the office of the Imperial University, which he held until 1821. In 1848 he was elected to the Constituent Assembly from the department of the Seine. His political sympathies were republican and Bonapartist, and for expressing them he was twice prosecuted by the government (1821-1828). His songs have enjoyed an extraordinary popularity.

Population, estimated, 20,000.

Berbers (bēr'bēr). A race of people (and also the name of a class of languages) constituting, with the Cushites, the Hamitic family, which is found scattered over North Africa and the Sahara, from the Red Sea to the Atlantic. The complexion of the Berbers varies from white to dark brown; their features remind one of the Egyptian type; their stature is medium. They have occupied their present habitat since the dawn of history. Never have their indomitable tribes become entirely subject to a foreign master, or lost their ethnic and linguistic characteristics, in spite of Punic, Roman, Germanic, Arabic, and Osmanli conquests. In the Kabail Mountains they are agricultural; in the Sahara, nomadic. For centuries they have been the middlemen between the Mediterranean coast and the Negro states of the Sudan. Berber, a word of Aryan derivation, signifies "alien," and so does "Ratana" or "Ertana," the name given them by the Arabs. They call themselves "Amazirg"—that is "The Free." Owing to the barren nature of the soil, the Berber population, as compared with the area it covers, is disproportionately small. In religion the Berbers are nominally Mohammedan. A few tribes have adopted the Arabic, and so have a few Arabs adopted Berber dialects. The Berber languages are often called Libyan. Dr. Cust mentions nine principal languages: Old Libyan, Kabail, Tamashek, Ghat, Ghadamsi, Shilha, Zenaga, Guanch, Siwah. See Hamites.

Berbera (bēr-bā'rā). A seaport and town in Somali Land, northeast Africa, in the "land of incense" of the ancients. It is a great market-place for inland tribes. The climate is good. It was annexed by Egypt in 1875, and by England in 1884.

Berenice (ber-e-ni'sē). [L. Berenice, Beronice, Gr. Βερενίκη.] 1. The wife of Ptolemy Soter, and the mother of Ptolemy Philadelphus.—2. The daughter of Ptolemy Philadelphus, and wife of Antiochus Theos, king of Syria.—3. The wife of Ptolemy Euergetes. Having dedicated her hair in the temple of Arsinoë at Zephyrium for the safe return of her husband from an expedition to Syria, the astronomer Conon of Samos reported that it had been transformed into the constellation called Coma Berenices.

4. A sister of Cleopatra, slain by the Romans 55 B. C.—5. A niece of Herod the Great, and wife of Aristobolus, and afterward of Theudion.—6. Daughter of Agrippa I., king of Judah 37–44 A. D. She was first married to her uncle Herod, king of Chalcis in Lebanon, and after his death lived with her brother Agrippa II. It is alleged in criminal relations. To disprove this accusation she married Polemon, king of Cilicia, but abandoned him soon and returned to her brother. Josephus relates of her that she endeavored to stop the cruelties of Florus, the last and worst of Roman governors in Judea ("Jewish Wars," II, 15, 1). In the last struggle of her country she, like her brother, was on the side of Rome. She played some part in Roman politics, supporting the elevation of Vespasian as emperor. For some time Titus was attracted by her beauty and grace, and it was believed that he would marry her. She followed the conqueror of her country to Rome, but Titus was compelled to repudiate her. In the New Testament she is mentioned as coming with her brother to welcome Festus at Caesarea, and as being present at the audience which Paul had with this governor (Acts xxv. 13, 23; xxvi. 30).

Bérénice (bā-rā-nēs'). 1. A tragedy by Thomas Corneille, produced in 1657. The subject was taken from Mademoiselle de Scudéry's romance "Artamène, or The Grand Cyrus."

2. A tragedy by Racine, produced Nov. 21, 1670, founded on the story of Titus and Berenice. This subject was proposed to Racine and Pierre Corneille at the same time by Henrietta of England, who wished to see her own secret history on the stage. Corneille was beaten in this literary tourney, and his play was considered a sign of failing powers.

His right hand having been lost in battle, it was replaced by an artificial hand made of iron (whence he is sometimes called "Götz with the Iron Hand"). He was one of the leaders of the peasants in 1525, and subsequently served under the emperor Charles V. against the sultan Soliman and against Francis I. of France. The literary revolution of the 18th century from the artificial to the simple style was preluded by Goethe's "Götz von Berlichingen," a drama which he constructed from the autobiography of the original robber knight who represented himself as an honest but much misunderstood person. See Götz von Berlichingen.

Berlin (bèr-lín' or bër'lin; G. pron. ber-lén'). The capital of the German Empire and of Prussia, until 1881 in Brandenburg, situated on the Spree, in lat. 52° 30' N., long. 13° 24' E. It is the largest city in the German Empire, and has an important commerce and extensive manufactures of metals, machinery, cotton and woolen goods, confections, musical instruments, beer, etc. It was settled by the 13th century, and was greatly improved by the Great Elector, Frederick I., by Frederick the Great, and by later rulers. It was taken by the Allies in 1761, and by Napoleon in 1806. The following are among its objects of interest: Arsenal, now a Military Museum and Hall of Fame, so called. In plan it is a rectangle 295 feet square, with a large central court. It was finished in 1706, and the exterior is a good example of the architecture and decorative sculpture of the time. The mural paintings of historical and military subjects by Geselschap in the interior are the finest work of the kind in Berlin. There is also a collection of portrait and mythological sculpture, in addition to the impressive exhibition of arms and battle-trophies. Brandenburg Gate, at the west end of Unter den Linden, a monumental gateway begun in 1789. It presents on each face 6 lofty Doric columns and a Roman entablature, surmounted by an attic upon which is a bronze quadriga of Victory. There are 5 passages for vehicles, the central one of which is the widest. The gate is flanked by two Doric colonnaded structures in the form of temples. Column of Peace, in the Belle Alliance Platz, erected in 1840 in honor of the peace of 1815. The shaft is of granite on a high basement, and the capital of marble, surmounted by a figure of Victory. The total height is 60 feet. The monument is flanked by marble groups of Prussia, England, the Netherlands, and Hanover, the powers which triumphed at Waterloo. Monument of Victory, dedicated in 1873 in honor of the German triumphs of 1864, 1866, and 1870. It consists of a monumental column of yellow sandstone, supporting a colossal statue of Borussia, the total height being 200 feet. The capital of the column is formed of eagles, and the fluted shaft is adorned with captured cannon. The pedestal bears bronze reliefs of the Danish war, Königgrätz, Sedan, and the triumphant return of the troops. The base of the monument is surrounded by a colonnade with allegorical mosaics of the overthrow of France and the restoration of the German Empire. National Gallery of sculpture and painting, an effective building finished in 1876, in the form of a pseudoperipteral Corinthian temple, with a large semicircular projection at the northwest end, and an octastyle portico surmounted by a pediment filled with sculpture on the façade, which faces the southeast. It measures 105 by 200 feet, and is raised on a basement 39 feet high. Access to the front portico is afforded by an impressive double flight of steps. The interior contains two exhibition floors, and is richly decorated. Old Museum, the finest building in Berlin. The façade has the form of a Greek Ionic portico 284 feet long, with 18 columns between terminal ante. The entablature bears eagles as antefixes. A portion of the roof is raised in the middle, corresponding to the interior rotunda; at the corners are placed four colossal groups in bronze—in front copies of the Horse-Tamers of Monte Cavallo in Rome, and behind Pegasus attended by the Hours. The piers of the great central flight of steps bear bronze groups of equestrian combats with lions. In the vestibule stand statues of noted archeologists, and the walls are painted with allegorical frescoes of the Formation of the World from Chaos, and the Development of Human Culture. Schloss, or Royal Palace, forming a rectangle 650 by 280 feet, with a projection at one end, and inclosing two main courts. It has four stories, together 100 feet high, and the dome over the chapel stains 230 feet. The original building, which survives in part on the Spree, was a towered castle erected by the elector Frederick II. in 1451. About a century later a fine German Renaissance wing was added on the south, and after another century the Great Elector and King Frederick I. brought the palace substantially to its present form, though the chapel was built in the present century. The chief room is the White Saloon, 105 by 50 feet. Population (1893), 1,656,698. See Unter den Linden.

After the Chileans occupied Lima he remained faithful to the cause of Caceres, and when that officer became president (1886) Bermudez was chosen first vice-president; at the end of the term he was elected president of Peru, and inaugurated Aug. 10, 1890.

Bern (bèrn), F. Berne (bèrn). A canton of Switzerland, capital Bern, bounded by France and Alsace on the north, Basel, Solothurn, Aargau, Lucerne, Unterwalden, and Uri on the east, Valais on the south, and Vaud, Fribourg, Neuchâtel, and France on the west. It is traversed by the Jura and Alps, and contains the Bernese Oberland in the south. It is the largest canton in point of population, and sends 27 members to the National Council. The prevailing religion is Protestant, and prevailing language German. It entered the Swiss Confederation as the eighth canton in 1353. Area, 2,657 square miles. Population (1888), 536,679.

Bern, F. Berne. The capital of the canton of Bern, and the seat of government of the Swiss Confederation, situated on the Aare in lat. 46° 57' N., long. 7° 25' E. It has a picturesque situation and medieval appearance. It was made a free imperial city in 1218, and became the federal capital in 1848. The cathedral of Bern is an interesting late-Pointed monument founded in 1421, and well restored. The west front possesses a massive tower over a large, triple-vaulted porch, beneath which open sculptured portals. The central door is very beautiful: it has two entrances separated by a pier with statues; its large tympanum is filled with sculptures of the Last Judgment; and it is flanked by statues beneath rich canopies. The organ is celebrated. The Hall of the Federal Council is a large modern building in the style of the Florentine Renaissance. The Rathaus or town hall was built in 1406, and has lately been restored. Its most characteristic feature is the covered double stair rising from each side of the façade to an arched loggia on the level of the second story. Population (1893), 47,620.

Berodach Baladan. See Merodach-baladan.

Berosus (be-rō'sus). Lived in the first part of the 3d century B. C. A Babylonian priest and historian, author of a history of Babylonia (in Greek), fragments of which have been preserved by later writers. "He was a priest of the temple of Bel at Babylon, and is said by Eusebius and Tactian to have been a contemporary of Alexander the Great, and to have lived into the reign of Antiochos Sôtér. He had, therefore, special opportunities of knowing the history and astronomy of his country, upon which he wrote in Greek. Recent discoveries have abundantly established the trustworthiness of this Manetho of Babylonia, whose works, unfortunately, are known to us only through quotations at second and third hand. Since a cylinder of Antiochos, the son of Selenkos, has been found inscribed in Babylonian cuneiform, while bilingual fragments in cuneiform and cursive Greek of the Seleucid age have also been discovered, and a contract tablet in Babylonian cuneiform, dated in the fifth year of the Parthian king Pakoros, the contemporary of Domitian, exists in the museum of Zürich, there is no reason why Berosos should not have been equally well acquainted with both the Greek language and the old literature of his native country. And in spite of the fragmentary and corrupt state in which his fragments have come down to us, we now know that he was so. His account of the Deluge, for instance, agrees even in its details with that of the cuneiform texts." Sayce, Anc. Empires, p. 100.

Berquin (ber-kan'), Arnaud. Born at Langoubran, near Bordeaux, 1749; died at Paris, Dec. 21, 1791. A French man of letters, especially noted as a writer of juveniles; surnamed "the Friend of Children." He wrote "L'Ami des enfants" (24 vols., 1782-83), "Le petit Grandison" (1807), etc.

A French general, a companion of Napoleon I. at Elba and St. Helena. He served with distinction at Ansterlitz, Spandau, Friedland, in the campaign of Wagram, in Russia, at Leipzig, and at Waterloo. He succeeded Duroc as grand marshal of the palace. After his death his sons published "Les campagnes d'Égypte et de Syrie, mémoires pour servir à l'histoire de Napoléon, dictés par lui-même, à sainte-Hélène, un général Bertrand" (1847).

Bertrand, Louis Jacques Napoléon Aloisius. Born at Ceva, in Piedmont, April 20, 1807; died at Paris, May, 1841. A French poet and journalist, author of a posthumous work, "Fantaisies à la manière de Rembrandt et de Calot" (1842).

Louis Bertrand, a poet possessed of the rarest faculty, but unfortunately doomed to misfortune and premature death. Born at Ceva in Piedmont, in 1807, and brought up at Dijon, he came to Paris, found there but scanty encouragement, and died in a hospital in 1841. His only work of any importance, "Gaspard de la Nuit," a series of prose ballads arranged in verses something like those of the English translation of the Bible, and testifying to the most delicate sense of rhythm and the most exquisite power of poetical suggestion, did not appear until after his death. Saintsbury, French Lit., p. 546.

Bertrand de Born. See Born, Bertrand de.

Bertrand de Goth or Got. See Clement V.

Bertrand du Guesclin. See Du Guesclin.

Bertuccio (ber-tō'chō). A deformed court jester in Tom Taylor's tragedy "The Fool's Revenge." His gratified revenge on the duke culminates in the terrible conviction that through a mistake he has compassed the abduction and dishonor of his own child instead of that of the wife of his enemy. His hysterical efforts to play the fool, when maddened with agony, in order to gain admittance to the banquet-room into which his daughter has been carried, form a powerfully dramatic scene.

Bertulphe. A peasant who by his own energy rose to be the Provost of Bruges, in G. W. Lovell's play of that name. He is reduced to the condition of a serf by an extraordinary decree, as he had never been actually manumitted. He rises, slays the earl, the author of the law, and kills himself. Macready was very successful in the part.

Betham-Edwards. See Edwards.

Bethany (beth'a-ni). [Heb., 'house of poverty.'] A place about forty minutes' ride from Jerusalem, on the road to Jericho, southeast of the Mount of Olives. It is often mentioned in the New Testament as the home of Lazarus, Martha and Mary, and of Simon the Leper (Matt. xxi. 17, xvi. 6; Mark xi. 11.; Luke xix. 29; John xi. 1; A. V.). It is identified with the modern El-Azariyeh, a village with forty huts, inhabited by Mohammedans exclusively.

Beth-Arbel (beth-'ar-'bel). A place mentioned in Hos. x. 14 as the scene of a sack and massacre by Shalman; probably identical with the modern Irbid, east of the Jordan and northeast of Petta. Shalman may be either Shalmaneser III, king of Assyria 782-772 B. C., who made a campaign against Damascus, or Salaman, king of Moab, who is mentioned in the Assyrian inscriptions as having paid tribute to Tiglath-Pileser III., king of Assyria (745-727 B. C.).

Bethel (beth-'el). [LL. Bethel, Gr. Babijē, Heb. Beth-el, house of God.] In scriptural geography, a town (originally named Luz) in Palestine, 12 miles north of Jerusalem, the resting-place of the ark, and, later, a seat of idolatrous worship: the modern Beitin.

Up to the last, customs that had originated in a primitive period of Semitic belief survived in Phœnician religion. Stones, more especially acrolites, as well as trees, were accounted sacred. The stones, after being consecrated by a libation of oil, were called Beth-els, "habitations of God," and regarded as filled with the indwelling presence of the Deity. The Caaba at Mecca is a curious relic of this old Semitic superstition, which is alluded to in the Gisdhubar Epic of Chaldea, and may have suggested the metaphor of a rock applied to the Deity in Hebrew poetry. Prof. Robertson Smith, again, has pointed out that numerous traces of an early totemism lasted down into the historical period of the Semitic race, more especially among the ruler nomad tribes of Arabia.

See, Anc. Empires, p. 200.

Bethel, Slingsby. Born 1617; died Feb., 1697. An English merchant and politician of republican views. He was tried and heavily fined in May, 1683, for an assault during an election of sheriffs.

Bethel (beth-'el), Richard. Born at Bradford-on-Avon, England, June 30, 1800; died at London, July 20, 1873. An English jurist and statesman, created first Lord Westbury in 1861. He became attorney-general in 1856, and was lord chancellor 1861-65.

Bethencourt (bā-toñ-kōr'), Jean de. Died 1425 (?). A French adventurer, conqueror of the Canary Islands. He organized with Gadifer de la Salle an expedition which sailed from La Rochelle, May 1, 1402, in quest of adventure. Having arrived in the Canaries, he built a fort on Lanzarote, which he left in charge of Gadifer while he returned for reinforcements. He came again with the official title of seigneur of the Canary Islands; converted the king of the islands in 1404 an event which was followed by the baptism of most of the natives; and returned to France in 1406, after deposing his nephew as governor. His exploits are recorded in a "Histoire de la première découverte et conquête des Canaries, faite dès l'an 1402 par messire Jean de Bethencourt, écrite du temps mesme par F. Pierre Bontier . . . et Jean le Verrier, etc." (1630).

Bethesda (be-thes-'lā). [Heb., 'house of mercy, or 'place of the flowing water.'] In scriptural history, an intermittent spring near the sheep-gate in Jerusalem, Palestine; commonly identified with the modern Birket Israil.

Bethesda. A town in Carnarvonshire, Wales, 5 miles southeast of Bangor. Near it are the great Penryn slate-quarries. Population (1891), 5,799.

Beth-Gellert. See Gellert.

Beth-horon (beth-hō-'ron), Upper and Nether. [Heb., 'place of the hollow.'] Two villages of Palestine, about 12 miles northwest of Jerusalem. At the pass between them Joshua defeated the kings of the Amorites. It is also the scene of a victory of Judas Maccabæus in the 2d century B. C.

Bethlehem (beth-'lō-'em). [Heb., 'house of bread.'] A town in Palestine, 6 miles south of Jerusalem; the modern Beit-Lahm. It was the birthplace of David and (according to Matthew, Luke, and John) of Christ. The Convent of the Nativity at Bethlehem is a complex body of structures distributed between the Greek and Latin creeds, and grouped around the church, a basilica of 5 naves, with apse and apsidal transepts, built by the empress Helena and Constantine. There are four long ranges of monolithic Corinthian columns 19 feet high, above which rise the walls of the nave with round-arched windows. The choir is richly ornamented with attributes of the Greek rite; beneath it is the tortuous Grotto of the Nativity. The apse and parts of the walls bear beautiful Byzantine mosaics. The church measures 86 by 136 feet. Population, about 5,000.

Bethlehem. A borough in Northampton County, Pennsylvania, situated on the Lehigh River 50 miles north of Philadelphia, settled by the Moravians in 1741. It has manufactures of iron and machinery. Population (1890), 6,762.

Bethlehem, Synod of. An important synod of the Greek Church held at Bethlehem in 1672. It condemned Calvinism and Lutheranism, and defended the memory of Cyril Lucar, the famous patriarch of Alexandria and afterward of Constantinople, who had died in 1638, against the imputation of Calvinism. The acts of this synod were signed by the Patriarch of Jerusalem and other clergy, but have never been formally adopted without modification by the whole Orthodox Eastern Church.

Sometimes called Synod of Jerusalem.

Bethlehem Hospital. See Bedlam.

Bethlehemites (beth-'lō-'em-'its). A religious order founded in Guatemala in 1653, extended to Mexico a few years later, and ultimately to other parts of Spanish America. The members lived according to the monastic rules of the Augustinians.

Bethnal Green (beth-'nal grēn). A district in London, on the left bank of the Thames, east of Spitalfields, formerly occupied by silk-weavers partly descended from the Huguenot refugees. It is noted as being the locality mentioned in the old ballad "The Blind Beggar's Daughter of Bethnal Green." The beggar's house is still shown. (Harc.) The Bethnal Green Museum is a branch of the South Kensington Museum, and was opened in 1872 in Victoria Park Square, Cambridge road, for the poor of East London.

Bethphage (beth-'fāj; properly beth-'fa-'jē). [Heb., 'house of unripe figs.'] In scriptural geography, a village in Palestine, situated on the Mount of Olives eastward from Jerusalem and near Bethany. The exact site is in dispute. "The traditional site is above Bethany, halfway between that village and the top of the mount." Smith.

Betterton (bet-'er-'tōn), Thomas. Born in Tothill street, Westminster, 1635 (?); died in Russell street, Covent Garden, April 28, 1710. An English actor and dramatist, son of an under cook of Charles I. He was apprenticed to a bookseller. Little is known of his early life. It is supposed that he began to act in 1656 or 1657. He joined Davenant's company at the Lincoln's Inn Fields Theatre in 1661. Pepsy at the beginning of his career and Pope at the end spoke of him as the best actor they had ever seen. He was intimate with Dryden and with the most intellectual men of his time.

Of Betterton's eight plays, I find one tragedy borrowed from Webster; and of his comedies, one was taken from Marston; a second based on Molière's George Dandin; a third was never printed; his "Henry the Fourth" was one of those unhallowed outrages on Shakespeare, of which the century in which it appeared was prolific; his "Bondman" was a poor reconstruction of Massinger's play, in which Betterton himself was marvellously great; and his "Prophetess" was a conversion of Beaumont and Fletcher's tragedy into an opera, by the efficient aid of Henry Purcell, who published the music in score, in 1691.

Bhagavadgita (bha'ga-vad-gē'tā). In Sanskrit literature, 'the song of Bhagavat,' that is, the mystical doctrines sung by 'the adorable one,' a name of Krishna when identified with the Supreme Being. The author is unknown. He is supposed to have lived in India in the 1st or 2d century of our era. His poem was at an early date dignified by a place in the Mahabharata, but is of a much later date than the body of that epic. Its philosophy is eclectic, combining elements of the Sankhya, Yoga, and Vedanta systems with the later theory of Bhakti, or 'faith.' The whole composition is skillfully thrown into the form of a dramatic poem or dialogue, characterized by great loftiness of thought and beauty of expression. The speakers are the two most important personages of the Mahabharata, Arjuna and Krishna. In the great war Krishna refused to take up arms on either side, but consented to act as Arjuna's charioteer and to aid him with counsel. At the commencement of the Bhagavadgita the two armies are in battle array, when Arjuna is struck with compunction at the idea of fighting his way to a kingdom through the blood of his kindred. Krishna's reply is made the occasion of the dialogue which in fact constitutes the Bhagavadgita, the main design of which is to exalt the duties of caste above all other obligations, including the ties of friendship and affection, but at the same time to show that the practice of those duties is compatible with the self-mortification of the Yoga philosophy as well as with the deepest devotion to the Supreme Being, with whom Krishna claims to be identified.

Bhagavatapurana (bhā'ga-va-ta-pū-rā'nī). 'The purana of Bhagavata' or Vishnu, a work of great celebrity in India, exercising a more powerful influence upon the opinions of the people than any of the other puranas. It consists of 18,000 verses, and is ascribed by Colbrooke to the grammarian Yopadeva, of about the 13th century A. D. Its most popular part, the tenth book, which narrates the history of Krishna, has been translated into many of the vernaculars of India.

Bianchi (bē-än'kō), The. [It., 'the Whites.'] A political faction which arose in Tuscany about 1300. The Guelph family of the Cancellieri at Pistoia having banished the Ghibelline family of the Panciatichi, a feud arose between two distantly related branches of the former, distinguished by the names of Bianchi and Neri, which, 1296-1300, became so violent that Florence, in order to pacify Pistoia, engaged that city to banish the whole family of the Cancellieri, but at the same time opened its own gates to them. In Florence the Neri allied themselves with Corso Donati and the violent Guelphs, and the Bianchi with Veri de Cerchi and the moderate Guelphs, and subsequently with the Ghibellines and the Panciatichi. Boniface VIII. espoused the party of the Neri, and sent, nominally to bring about a reconciliation, Charles de Valois to Florence in 1301, with the result that the Bianchi, among whom was Dante, were exiled.

Bible of Forty-two Lines, The. An edition of the Vulgate, printed between 1450 and 1455 by Gutenberg and his companions. The book proper consists of 1,282 printed pages, 2 columns to the page, and, for the most part, with 42 lines to the column.

Bible of the Poor, or Biblia Pauperum. See the extract.

It is probable that the illustrations were made first, and that, in the beginning, the Bible of the Poor was a book of pictures only. Some German antiquarians say that the book, in its original form, was designed and explained by a monk named Wernher, who was living in 1180, and was famous during his lifetime both as a painter and a poet. Other German authorities put the origin of the first manuscript as far back as the ninth century, attributing the work to Saint Augustine, first bishop of Hamburg. It seems to have been a popular manuscript, for copies written before the fifteenth century have been found in many old monasteries. These copies are not alike. Nearly every transcriber has made more or less alterations and innovations of his own; but the general plan of the book—the contrasting of apostles with prophets, and of the patriarchs of the Old Testament with the saints of the Christian church—has been preserved in all the copies.

De Finne, Invention of Printing, p. 198.

Bible of Thirty-six Lines, The. A large demy folio of 1,764 pages, made up, for the most part, in sections of 10 leaves, and usually bound in 3 volumes. Each page has 2 columns of 36 lines each. A copy was given to a monastery near Mainz by Gutenberg. It is called the oldest edition of the Latin Bible.

Bibliander (bib'li-an-dēr) (originally Buchmann), Theodore. Born at Bischofszell, Thurgau, 1504; died at Zurich, Nov. 26, 1564. A Swiss divine and Orientalist. He was professor of theology and Oriental philology in the University of Zurich 1532-60, when, on account of his opposition to the Calvinistic doctrine of predestination, he was deposed. He wrote a Latin translation of the Koran, and made many valuable contributions to the history of Mohammedanism.

Bibliophile Jacob, Le. A novel by Balzac, written in 1830.

Bibliothèque de Ste. Geneviève. Originally, the library of the Abbey of Ste. Geneviève, founded in 1624. The present structure and organization date from 1850. The library is especially rich in incunabula, fine Aldines and Elzevirs, and other impressions of early printers. It has also a fine collection of manuscripts.

Bibliothèque Mazarin. A library of about 140,000 volumes and 3,000 manuscripts, founded by Cardinal Mazarin. It is rich in bibliographic curiosities.

Bibliothèque Nationale. The great French library, the largest in the world. It has been called successively La Bibliothèque du Roi, Royale, Nationale, Impériale, and Nationale. The Bibliothèque du Roi was originally in the Palais de la Cité, consisting of the library of King John. He bequeathed it to Charles V., who removed it and collected a library of 910 volumes in the Louvre. This was sold to the Duke of Bedford. Louis XI. partly repaired this loss and added the first results of the new invention of printing. Louis XII. established it at Blois, incorporating it with the Orleans library. The Gruthuyse collection was next added to it. Francis I. transferred the library to Fontainebleau, and placed it in charge of Jean Budé. Henry II. made obligatory the deposit of one copy of every book published in the kingdom. Henry IV. brought it back to Paris, where it changed in location frequently before resting in its present quarters in the Palais Mazarin, Rue Richelieu. Napoleon I. increased the government grant, and under his care the library was much enlarged. It contains 2,500,000 volumes, 90,000 manuscripts, and collections of prints and medals. It is especially rich in Oriental manuscripts.

Bismarck (biz'mârk), Otto Eduard Leopold, Prince von. Born at Schönhausen, Prussia, April 1, 1815. A Prussian statesman, the creator of German unity. He studied at the universities of Göttingen and Berlin; entered the united Landtag of Prussia in 1847; and in 1849-50, as a member of the second chamber of the Prussian diet, became known as an outspoken advocate of reactionary measures. In 1851 he was appointed Prussian ambassador to the diet of the German Confederation at Frankfurt; in 1859 he became ambassador to Russia; and in 1862 he was for a few months ambassador to France. He was appointed Prussian premier and minister of foreign affairs Oct. 8, 1862, and engaged in a long struggle with the Landtag over the question of the army increase and the prerogatives of the crown. After the Schleswig-Holstein war of 1864, in which he secured the cooperation of Austria, he was made a count, Sept. 1, 1865. On the renewal of the Schleswig-Holstein complications Bismarck concluded an alliance with Italy, and war against Austria was declared (1866). In 1867 he became chancellor of the North German Confederation, and added to Prussian prestige by baffling Napoleon's designs on Luxemburg. His conciliatory attitude toward the South German states prepared the way for the triumphs of the Franco-German war of 1870-71. In 1871 he became the first chancellor of the German Empire, and was made a prince. He labored until 1878 in harmony with the National Liberal party, and engaged in a protracted struggle with the Ultramontanes—the so-called Kulturkampf. After 1878 he inaugurated a series of economic reforms, including systems of insurance for the laboring classes, and advocated a vigorous colonial policy. He presided at the Berlin Congress of 1878, and concluded the Triple Alliance (1883). Having incurred the displeasure of William II., he resigned March, 1890, the title of Duke of Lauenburg being conferred upon him on his retirement. His eightieth birthday (April 1, 1895) was made the occasion for extraordinary ovations in his honor, in which the emperor joined.

His father was a clergyman at Østerdalen and later held the living at Næs in the Romsdal. After attending the grammar-school at Molde he went to the University at Christiania, and was subsequently in Upsala and Copenhagen. In 1857 he returned from abroad, and was first director of the theater in Bergen, and afterward (1859) for a short time editor of the journal "Aftenbladet" in Christiania. In 1860 he went abroad; upon his return, in 1863, the Storting voted him a yearly stipend. From 1865 to 1867 he was director of the Christiania theater, and editor, during the time, of the journal "Norske Folkeblad." He has taken an active part in the political and social life of Scandinavia. In 1880 he traveled in America. Recently he has lived upon his estate Olestad, in the Gausdal. His first novel, "Synnøve Solbakken," appeared in 1857. It was followed by "Arne" (1858), "En Glad Gut" ("A Happy Boy," 1860), and later (1868) by "Fiskerjenten" ("The Fisher Maiden")—all stories of Norwegian peasant life, to which are to be added at various times, in the same vein, a number of shorter tales, "Magnhild" (1877) and "Captain Manzana" followed—the one a tale of middle-class life in Norway, the other an Italian story. His latest novels, "Det Flager i Byen og paa Havnen" ("Flags are Flying in the Town and Harbor"), and "Paa Guds Veie" ("In God's Way"), are novels of tendency. He is the author, besides, of numerous dramas whose material has been taken from the sagas, from recent history, and from modern life. They are "Mellem Slagene" ("Between the Battles") and "Halte Hulda" ("Lame Hulda," 1858), "Kong Sverre" ("King Sverre," 1861), the trilogy "Sigurd Slenbe" (1862), "Maria Stuart i Skotland" (Mary Stuart in Scotland, 1863), "De Nygifte" ("The Newly Wedded Pair," 1865), "Sigurd Jorsalfar" ("Sigurd the Crusader," 1873), "En Fallit" ("A Bankruptcy") and "Redaktøren" ("The Editor," 1875), "Kongen" ("The King," 1877), "Leonardo" and "Det nye System" ("The New System," 1879). There are a number of less important dramas, viz.: "Brødslaaten," "En Hanske," "Geografi og Kjærlighed," "Over Ævne." The earlier works, like "Arne," contain a number of lyrics. An epic poem, "Arnljot Gelline," appeared in 1870.

Blackfriars. A name given to the locality at the southwestern angle of old London city, on the Fleet. The Black Friars, or mendicant monks of the Dominican order, made their appearance in London in 1221 under the patronage of Hubert de Burgh, and were located in Holborn. In 1255 they moved to the site of the old Montfichett tower, which had been given them for a monastery. The tower itself was destroyed and the material used in building the church. From Ludgate to the river the city wall was pulled down and moved westward to the Fleet, all the added space being devoted to the monastery. The original site was given by Gregory Rokesley "in a street of Baynard Castle." The monastery was endowed with a privilege of asylum, which attached itself to the locality after the dissolution. To this privilege and to the odor of sanctity attached to the place may be attributed the existence of the Theatre of Blackfriars (which see). Players had been expelled from the city limits, but the sheriff could not touch them here. W. J. Loftie, History of London.

Blackfriars Bridge. One of the great stone bridges of London, the third bridge from the tower, originally called Pitt Bridge, but soon named from the locality. After much discussion its construction was intrusted to Mr. Mylne, of Edinburgh. The first pile was driven June, 1760, and the structure completed Nov. 19, 1769, at a cost of £300,000. It was 995 feet long, 42 feet wide, 62 feet high. The central span was 100 feet wide. It was demolished in 1864, and rebuilt in a few years, from the designs of Cubitt, at a cost of £320,000.

Blackfriars Theatre. A famous London theater, the site of which is now occupied by the "Times" office and Playhouse Yard. Sometime in 1596 Sir William More conveyed to James Burbage, the father of Richard Burbage the actor, part of a large house in Blackfriars, consisting of "seven great upper rooms." This he converted into a theater. The first tenants were the Children of the Chapel, afterward called the Children of Her Majesty's Revels. Shakspeare and his colleagues, Richard Burbage, Lowin, and Conell, acted in Blackfriars. They were first known as the Lord Chamberlain's Company, but in 1603 James I. allowed them to take the title of King's Servants. The actors of Blackfriars were of grave and sober behavior, and men of high standing. The theater was celebrated for its music: the musicians, however, paid for the privilege of playing here. The stage was covered by a silk curtain. There were three tiers of galleries, and beneath them rooms or boxes. The orchestra was seated in a balcony at the side of the stage, and played at the beginning and between the acts as now. At a triple flourish of trumpets the curtain opened and disclosed the stage, which was strewn with rushes and, if a tragedy was to be represented, hung with black. Shakspeare wrote exclusively for the Globe and Blackfriars. Almost all of the great dramas of the time were performed here. It was pulled down in 1655 (Doran).

Black Friday. 1. Good Friday: so called because on that day, in the Western Church, the vestments of the clergy and altar are black.— 2. Blanketeers (blang-ke-têr'z'). The name given to a body of half-starved Manchester operatives who met at St. Peter's Field, March 10, 1817. Each man was provided with provisions and a blanket, and their purpose was to walk to London to petition for some legislative remedy against capitalistic oppression, and especially for the great panacea of parliamentary reform.

The project of these poor simple-minded men, instead of exciting compassion, filled the minds of the government and the upper classes with alarm. It was regarded as an attempt to overthrow the institutions of the country. The Habeas Corpus Act being at that time suspended, the leaders of the proposed expedition were seized and imprisoned. The greater part of those who had intended to join it yielded at once; a few, however, persisted in their intentions; but troops had been placed along the proposed line of march, and they were intercepted, searched, and either sent back or imprisoned. Nothing was found on them to justify these proceedings, except "two unusually long knives."

The loss of the Allies was 11,000-12,000, and that of the French and Bavarians, 40,000 (?). The battle is called by French and Germans the battle of Hochstadt.

Blenheim Palace. A mansion at Woodstock, Oxfordshire, England, built by Vanbrugh at national cost, 1705-16, for the first Duke of Marlborough. It is an imposing pile, measuring 320 feet east and west, and 190 feet north and south. The chief façade presents a projecting entrance-portal between two prominent wings whose inner faces sweep in a curve toward the entrance. The ornamentation is poor, and the columns are so large as to dwarf even the enormous building. The park façade and the two lesser façades are better: each has a large bow-window in the middle, and is flanked by end pavilions. The interior has many fine apartments.

Blennerhasset (blen-êr-has'et), Harman. Born at Hampshire, England, Oct. 8, 1765 (1764?); died at Guernsey, Channel Islands, Feb. 1, 1831. An Englishman of Irish descent, noted in connection with Burr's conspiracy. He settled about 1798 on a small island, since called Blennerhasset's Island, in the Ohio, near Marietta, where he erected a mansion which he surrounded with gardens and conservatories, and furnished with a library and other facilities for the gratification of intellectual tastes. He was persuaded in 1805 by Burr to join his enterprise, probably without knowing its true character, and was arrested and indicted for treason, but was released in 1807 on Burr's acquittal, his home having in the mean time been sold to satisfy his creditors. He died in poverty, having during the later years of his life been supported by the charity of a relative.

Blennerhasset's Island. A small island in the Ohio, 2 miles below Parkersburg, West Virginia: so called from Harman Blennerhasset, famous in connection with Burr's conspiracy.

Bloody Brother, The, or Rollo, Duke of Normandy. A tragedy by Fletcher and others (probably W. Rowley and Massinger), printed in 1639. The date of production is doubtful. Fleay assigns it to 1616-17; Ward thinks it later than 1624. It was very popular after the Restoration. One of the lyrics in it, "Take, oh take those lips away," is attributed to Shakespeare; another which has attained popularity begins "Drink to-day and drown all sorrow," and ends

"And he that will go to bed sober Falls with the leaf still in October."

B. J. F. is on the title-page of the first quarto (1639), and it has been supposed to stand for B. Jonson and Fletcher. Bullen considers it possible that the play was written by Jonson and Fletcher and revised by Massinger, but the authorship is uncertain.

He was appointed minister of the interior in 1837, and of justice in 1839, and president of the council of the empire and council of the ministry in 1861.

Bluebeard (blō'bērd), F. Barbe-bleue (bārb-blé'), G. Blaubart (blou'bärt). The nickname of the chevalier Raoul (an imaginary personage), celebrated for his cruelty. The historic original was, perhaps, Gilles de Laval. Baron de Retz (born 1396; died 1440). He is the subject of works by Perrault, Grétry, Offenbach, Tieck, etc. In Perrault he is a rich man who, in spite of his hideous blue beard, had had six wives and marries a seventh, a young girl named Fatima. He leaves the keys of the castle with her while he goes on a journey, telling her that she may enter any room but one. She disobeys, enters the forbidden chamber, and discovers the bodies of his former wives. A blood-stain on the key reveals her disobedience, and her husband gives her five minutes to prepare for death. Her sister Anne mounts to the top of the castle to watch for aid, and at last sees her brothers coming. They arrive and kill Bluebeard as he is about to despatch Fatima. Perrault's story was written in French about 1697, and translated into English in the 18th century. Several similar tales are to be found in Straparola's "Piaçevoli Notti," published in 1550, and in the "Pentamerone" by Gian Alezio Abbatis (Giambattista Basile). A series of frescoes dating from the 13th century has been discovered in a chapel at Morbilan, representing the legend of St. Trophine, which is that of the too curious wife of Bluebeard. "La Barbe Bleue has a striking resemblance to the story in the Arabian Nights of the Third Calender, who has all the keys of a magnificent castle intrusted to him, with injunctions not to open a certain apartment; he gratifies his curiosity, and is punished for his disobedience." Dunlop.

He [the Baron de Retz] was really burnt at Nantes in 1440 for having killed, not his wives, but a number of children, who had previously been victims to his turpitude. His family, according to Michelet, had, in order to avoid the stain of his disgrace, given him the name of the English partisan, Blue Beard.

Dunlop, Hist. of Prose Fiction, II. 497, note.

Boabdil (bö-äb-däl'), or Abu Abdullah (ä'bö-äb-döl'lä). The last Moorish king of Granada. He revolted against his father Muley Hassan, and seized the throne in 1481. In 1491 he was attacked and defeated by Ferdinand and Isabella, and made prisoner. He was set at liberty on condition of being a vassal of Spain.

Boaden (bö'den), James. Born at Whitehaven, Cumberland, England, May 23, 1762; died Feb. 16, 1839. An English dramatist and biographer. His works include "The Secret Tribunal" (1795), "An Italian Monk" (1797), "Aurelio and Miranda" (1799), etc., and lives of Kenble, Mrs. Siddons, Mrs. Jordan, and Mrs. Inchbald.

Boadicea (bö-ä-di-sē'ä). [L. Boadicea, Boadicea, Boudicca, Boudicca, Boadicea, corrupt manuscript forms of Boudicca, a name which also appears, applied to other persons, as Bodicea, lit. 'victress,' fem. of Bodiceus*, Bodiceus*, Bodiceus, lit. 'victor,' from Old Celtic boudi-, bodi-, OIr. buaid, W. bud, victory.] Died 62 A. D. The wife of Prasutagus, king of the Iceni, a tribe in eastern Britain. Thinking to secure his kingdom and family from molestation, Prasutagus, who died about 60 A. D., bequeathed his great wealth to his daughters jointly with the Roman emperor. The will was made by the Roman officials a pretext for appropriating the whole property.

Boadicea was flogged, her daughters outraged, and other members of the royal family treated as slaves, with the result that the Iceni joined the Trinobantes in a revolt under Boadicea against the Romans 62 A. D., which was put down by Suetonius Paulinus. Boadicea has been made the subject of a tragedy by Fletcher (see Boudicca), which was altered in separate plays by Powell, Colman, and Planché. Hopkins wrote a "Boadicea," acted in 1697, and Glover produced a play of the same name in 1735. Mason wrote a play on the same subject, called "Caractacus," in 1759. Both Cowper and Tennyson have made Boadicea the subject of poems.

Boanerges (bö-ä-nér'jéz). [Gr. Boanephe; etymology doubtful; meaning, perhaps, 'sons of tumult.'] A surname, explained in Mark iii. 17 as meaning 'sons of thunder,' given to James and John, the sons of Zebedee.

Boaz (bö'az). 1. A wealthy Bethlehemite, kinsman of Elimelech and husband of Ruth. See Ruth.—2. The name of one of the brazen pillars (see Jachin) erected in the porch of Solomon's temple.

Bobadil (bob'ä-dil), Captain. In Ben Jonson's "Every Man in His Humour," a Paul's man, that is, a man who lounged in the middle aisle of St. Paul's Cathedral, the resort of sharpers, gulls, east captains, and loafers of every kind. His cowardice and bragging are made amusing by his intense gravity and the serious manner in which he regards himself.

Bobadil is the only actually striking character in the play, and the real hero of the piece. His well-known proposal for the pacification of Europe, by killing, some twenty of them, each his man a day, is as good as any other that has been suggested up to the present moment. His extravagant affectation, his blustering and cowardice, are an entertaining melody; and his final defeat and exposure, though exceedingly humorous, are the most affecting part of the story. Hazlitt, Eng. Poets, p. 57.

Bobadilla, Count of. See Antrada, Gomes Freire de.

Bobadilla (bö-bä-thēl'yä), Francisco de. Died at sea, probably July 1, 1502. A Spanish officer who, in 1500, was sent to Hispaniola to investigate the affairs of that colony, and especially to inquire into charges made against Columbus. On his arrival at Santo Domingo (Aug. 23, 1500), he summoned Columbus before him, imprisoned him and his brothers, and sent them to Spain. Bobadilla remained as governor of the colony until the arrival of Ovando, April 15, 1502.

Bobbin Boy, The. A nickname of Nathaniel P. Banks. It was given him because he worked as a boy in the cotton-factory of which his father was superintendent. A book for boys, with this title, containing his early life, has been published.

Boboli (bö'bö-lē) Gardens. Gardens in the rear of and adjacent to the Pitti Palace in Florence. They are open to the public, and are filled with fountains, groves, and statues: some of the latter are by John of Bologna. From the terrace is a magnificent view of Florence. The land was bought in 1549 by Eleanor of Toledo, wife of Cosimo I., duke of Tuscany. The laying out was commenced by the sculptor Tribolo who died 1550, and finished by Buontalenti.

Bobolina (bö-bö-lē'nä). Died 1825. A Greek heroine, the widow of a Spetziot ship-owner who was assassinated by order of the sultan in 1812. She equipped three vessels in the revolution of 1821, one of which she commanded. She participated in the siege of Tripolizza, Sept., 1821.

Bœotia (bō-ō'shī). [Gr. Βοιωτία.] In ancient geography, a district in central Greece, bounded by the country of Lœri Opuntia on the north, the Euripus and Attica on the east, Attica, Megaris, and the Gulf of Corinth on the south, and Phœcis on the west. Its surface is generally level, forming a basin in which is Lake Copais. The inhabitants were proverbial for their dullness. The chief city of Bœotia was Thebes, which with other cities formed the Bœotian League (which see).

Bœotian League or Confederacy, The. A league of independent cities in Bœotia, supposed to have been originally fourteen in number, with Thebes at the head. Its common sanctuaries were the temple of the Itonian Athene near Coronea, where the Pambœotia were celebrated, and the temple of Poseidon in Onchestus. Its chief magistrates were called boeotarchs, and were elected annually, two for Thebes and one for each of the other cities. It was finally dissolved, 171 B. C. or 146 B. C.

Boerhaave (bōr'hā-ve), Hermann. Born at Voorhout, near Leyden, Holland, Dec. 31, 1668; died at Leyden, Sept. 23, 1738. A famous Dutch physician, professor of botany, medicine, and chemistry at Leyden 1701-29.

Boeroe, or Buru (bō'rō), or Bouro (bō'rō). An island in the East Indies, in lat. 3° S., long. 127° E., claimed by the Netherlands. Area, estimated, 1,970 square miles.

Boer (bōr). [D. boer, farmer.] One of the population of Dutch descent in South Africa. This element is prominent in Cape Colony and dominant in the Orange Free State and in the South African Republic (Transvaal). The first Boers immigrated from Java in 1652, and were reinforced by Huguenots in 1687. Since 1795 they have had to struggle with British influence and rule. As the English push up from the south, the Boers advance toward the north. Their farthest colony is that of Humpata in southern Angola, founded in 1811 and reinforced in 1893. See Transvaal and Orange Free State.

Boer War, The. The war which followed the proclamation of the Transvaal Republic, Dec., 1880, between that country and Great Britain. Its chief events were the defeat of the British at Laing's Neck Jan. 28, 1881, and at Majuba Mountain Feb. 27, 1881 (the British commander Colley being killed). By treaty of March, 1881, the independence of the republic was recognized, but the Boers acknowledged the suzerainty of the queen.

Boethius (bō-ē'thi-us). An early Provençal poem of 258 decasyllabic verses, consisting mainly of moral reflections taken from the "De Consolatione" of Boethius. "It dates from the eleventh century, or at latest from the beginning of the twelfth, but is thought to be a rehandling of another poem which may have been written nearly two centuries earlier." Saintsbury.

Boethius (bō-ē'thi-us). Anicius Manlius Severinus (less correctly Boetius). Born about 475 A. D.; died about 524 A. D. A Roman philosopher, probably grandson of Flavius Boethius who was put to death by Valentinian III. in 455. He was consul in 510, and became magister officiorum in the court of Theodoric, king of the Ostrogoths. Having incurred suspicion on account of his bold defense of Albinus who was accused of treason, he was put to death by Theodoric without trial on the charge of treason and magic. His most famous work is the "De Consolatione Philosophiæ," written probably during his imprisonment at Pavia. Parts of this were translated by King Alfred and by Chaucer. His translations from and commentaries on the logic of Aristotle were very influential during the middle ages.

Boëthus (bō-ē'thus). [Gr. Boῦθός.] Born at Chalcædon (or Carthage, according to Pausanias). A sculptor of the Alexandrian school (2d century B. C.), famous in antiquity for genre work of a high character. Pliny (N. H. 34, 84) mentions a bronze, a boy strangling a goose, of which there is a beautiful replica in the Louvre. The boy extracting a thorn, found in replica in many museums, is supposed to represent his famous statue of the same subject. The beautiful little girl playing with dice, now in Berlin, may be copied from Boëthus.

Boëtie (bō-ā-sē'), Étienne de la. Born at Sarlat, Dordogne, France, Nov. 1, 1530; died at Germinac, near Bordeaux, France, Aug. 18, 1563. A French writer, chiefly known as a friend of Montaigne.

Boffin (bof'in), Nicodemus (otherwise the Golden Dustman and Noddy). A disinterested old man left in charge of the Harmon property, in Dickens's novel "Our Mutual Friend." See Wegg, Silas.

Boffin's Bower. The residence of the Boffins, in Dickens's "Our Mutual Friend." Mrs. Boffin, not liking its former name, Harmon's Jail, given it from its late owner's habits of life, gave it this cheerful appellation. Miss Jennie Collins established a successful charity for working-girls in Boston in 1870 under this name.

Bogardus (bō-gār'dus), Everard. [NL. Bogardus, from D. Bogaerd (whence E. Bogart, Bogert), from bogaerd, contraction of boomgaard (Kilian), orchard, from boom, tree, and gaard, yard, garden. Cf. G. Baumgarten.] Born in Holland; drowned in Bristol Channel, Sept. 27, 1647. A Dutch clergyman in New Amsterdam. A crownland, capital Prague, in the Cisleithan division of Austria-Hungary, and the northernmost portion of the empire. It is bounded by the kingdom of Saxony (separated by the Erzgebirge) on the northwest and north, Prussian Silesia (separated by the Riesengebirge and other mountains) on the northeast, Moravia (partly separated by the Maltsche Gebirge) and Lower Austria on the southeast, Upper Austria on the south, and Bavaria (mainly separated by the Böhmerwald) on the southwest. Its surface is mountainous and undulating, and is traversed by the Elbe and its tributaries, the Moldau, Eger, Iser, etc. It produces wheat and other cereals, fruit, flax, and hops, has extensive forests, and is the chief region of the empire in the production of coal. It has also mines of iron, silver, lead, sulphur, alum, and graphite. It has manufacturers of linen, glass, calico, woollens, paper, chemicals, porcelain, beer, sugar, iron, etc. It has 92 representatives in the Austrian Reichsrath, and has a landtag of 242 members. The language of the majority is Czech; but about 35 per cent. speak German. The prevailing religion is Roman Catholic. The early inhabitants of this district were the Boii, and after them the Marcomanni. It was colonized by Czechs in the early part of the 6th century; was the seat of a temporary realm under Samo in the 7th century; formed part of Svatopluk's Moravian realm at the end of the 9th century, and became a fief of Germany in 929. It was a duchy and became a kingdom in 1198. Moravia was united to it in 1029. Under Ottocar II. (1253-78) it acquired temporarily Austria, Carinthia, and Styria; Lusatia and Silesia were annexed in the 14th century. Bohemia was one of the electorates of the Holy Roman Empire. After the extinction of the dynasty of Premysl (1306) the kingdom was ruled by the house of Luxemburg, 1310-1437. It was united with Austria in 1526. It suffered in the Hussite wars, and was the scene of the outbreak of the Thirty Years' War in 1618. Frederick (elector palatine) was chosen king of Bohemia in 1619, and overthrown in 1620, after which Protestantism was extinguished by the Hapsburg ruler, Ferdinand II. In recent times a vigorous agitation in favor of national autonomy has been carried on by the Czechs. Area, 20,000 square miles. Population (1890), 5,843,004.

2. A name for any place where people, especially artists and literary people, lead an unconventional or somewhat irregular life; or the people collectively who lead such a life. Caesar assigned them land in the territory of the Ædui.

Boileau-Despréaux (bō-ā-lō'dā-prā-ō'), Nicholas. Born at Paris, Nov. 1, 1636; died at Paris, March 13, 1711. A famous French critic and poet. He studied law, and was admitted to the bar in Dec., 1656. His first satire dates from 1660 or 1661, and was the forerunner of a series of seven, composed between 1660 and 1665. To this same period belong his "Dissertation sur Jocrande," and his "Dialogue des héros de roman." His satires were published without his sanction by a Dutch bookseller, who issued the book under the title "Recueil contenant plusieurs discours libres et moraux, en vers" (1665). Boileau issued his own corrected version in 1666, and within the next two years there appeared some twenty editions, both authorized and unauthorized. These models of elegant writing served as the foundation of literary criticism in France. Boileau was attacked from many quarters, and framed his reply in two satires, published in 1669. Little is known of his life between 1660 and 1677. During that interval, however, he wrote his second and third "Épîtres," translated the "Treatise on the Sublime" of Longinus, published fragments of the "Lutrin" in 1673, and finally gave out his fourth and fifth "Épîtres," the first four books of the "Lutrin," and "L'Art poétique," in the first edition of the "Œuvres du sieur D. . . ." (1674). This publication raised Boileau to the first rank among French writers. In 1677 he received a pension of 2,000 livres, and was invited with Racine to compile the history of Louis XIV. In the same year he composed his seventh, eighth, and ninth "Épîtres." In 1684, despite his enemies' opposition, Boileau entered the French Academy on the expressed desire of the king. In 1693 he published his "Réflexions critiques sur Longin," in answer to Perrault's "Dialogues sur les anciens et les modernes." The first five editions of Boileau's works are dated 1696, 1674, 1694, 1701, and 1713. The last edition revised throughout by Boileau himself, that of 1701, is generally taken as the standard. In addition to the works above mentioned, it contains the tenth and eleventh satires, and the last three "Épîtres." A twelfth satire was published after Boileau's death in the edition of 1716. To Boileau's works, and more especially to the "Art poétique," are due the theories on which the classical literature of France is based.

Bolivar (bol'i-vär; Sp. pron. bö-lë'vär). Simon. Born at Caracas, July 24, 1783; died at San Pedro, near Santa Marta, Dec. 17, 1830. A famous Venezuelan general and statesman. He took an active part in the revolution at Caracas in 1810; served under Miranda in 1812; captured Caracas Aug. 4, 1813; was there named general of the Venezuelan forces and temporary dictator, and received the title of "Liberator"; was forced to retire to Barcelona and thence to Jamaica (May, 1815); made an unsuccessful descent upon the Venezuelan coast in May, 1816, and a second, successful, attempt in December; and took Angostura in July, 1817. A patriot congress there confirmed Bolivar as dictator. In 1819 he marched into New Granada, and formed a junction with Santander. The victory of Boyacá (Aug. 7, 1819) made him master of Bogotá and New Granada. A congress at Angostura now decreed the union of Venezuela and New Granada in the republic of Colombia, and Bolivar was elected president Dec. 17, 1819. He completely routed the Spanish army in Venezuela in the battle of Carabobo (June 24, 1821), and entered Quito June 10, 1822, adding the region now called Ecuador to Colombia. Sept. 1, 1823, he went to Lima, and was made dictator of Peru. He defeated Canterac at Junin, Aug. 6, 1824, and on Dec. 9, 1824, Sucre's great victory at Ayacucho ended the Spanish power in South America. In June, 1825, Bolivar visited upper Peru; a congress met there in August, decreed the formation of the republic of Bolivia, invited Bolivar to frame the constitution, and named him perpetual protector. But Peru declared against him in 1826; Bolivia soon followed; and though he remained president of the three countries forming Colombia until his death, the great republic created by him fell to pieces soon after.

An adventurer in the French, Austrian, and Turkish service; known also as Aehmet Pasha. He served under Prince Eugene in Italy, Provence, and in the campaigns of 1710-12. In 1768 he commanded an army corps in the Papal States, and served against the Turks in 1715.

Bonneville (bon-vël'). A town in the department of Haute-Savoie, France, situated on the Arve 16 miles southeast of Geneva. Population (1891), 2,213.

Bonneville (bon'vil), Benjamin L. E. Born in France about 1793; died at Fort Smith, Ark., June 12, 1878. An American soldier. He fought with distinction in the war with Mexico, commanded the Gila expedition, 1857, and in the Civil War was commander of Benton Barracks at St. Louis, 1862-65. He became colonel in 1855, and brevet major-general in 1865. While captain he engaged in explorations in the Rocky Mountains and California, 1831-36. His journal was amplified by Washington Irving, and published under the title "Adventures of Capt. Bonneville, U. S. A., in the Rocky Mountains of the Far West" (1837).

Bonnibel (bon'i-bel). [F. bonne et belle, good and pretty.] A common name for a young girl in old pastoral poetry.

Bonnivard (bo-nē-viir'), François de. Born at Seyssel (?), near Geneva, 1496; died at Geneva about 1570. A Genevan prelate and politician, the hero of Byron's poem "The Prisoner of Chillon." He became prior of St. Victor in 1514, and was a conspicuous opponent of Charles, duke of Savoy, who endeavored to obtain control of Geneva. He was largely instrumental in bringing about an alliance between Geneva and Fribourg in 1518, and in 1519 was captured by the duke and imprisoned twenty months. In 1530 he obtained a safe-conduct from the duke to visit his aged parents at Seyssel, but was arrested at Lauanne, May 26, 1530, and confined in the castle of Chillon, where, after a visit from the duke (1532), he was placed in a subterranean dungeon and, according to the local tradition, fastened to a pillar. He was liberated, March 29, 1536, at the capture of Chillon by the Bernese. He was the author of "Les chroniques de Genève" (edited by Dunant, Geneva, 1831), which was written at the instance of the magistracy of Geneva.

Bonny. See Ilzo.

Bonny (bon'i), River. An arm of the Niger delta which flows into the Bight of Biafra in lat. 4° 30' N., long. 7° E.

Bonpland (bōn-plōn'), Aimé. Born at La Rochelle, Aug. 22, 1773; died at San Borja, Uruguay, May 4, 1858. A French naturalist and traveler. From 1799 to 1805 he traveled with Humboldt in America. On his return he published "Plantes équinoxiales," and other botanical works. In 1816 he went to Buenos Ayres, and in 1821 attempted a journey from that place to Bolivia. Passing by the frontiers of Paraguay, he was seized by order of the dictator Francia (Dec. 3, 1821), and was not allowed to leave the country until 1830. After his release he resided on a small plantation near the confines of Uruguay and Brazil.

Bonstetten (bon'stet-ten), Charles Victor de. Born at Bern, Switzerland, Sept. 3, 1745; died at Geneva, Feb. 3, 1832. A celebrated Swiss littérateur and philosophical writer. His works include "Recherches sur la nature et les lois de l'imagination" (1807), "Etudes sur l'homme" (1821), etc.

Bontemps (bōn-ton'), Roger. [F. bon temps, good time.] A pseudonym of Roger de Collyer, a French poet, born at Paris about 1470. He was of a lively, gay, careless temperament. Béranger has popularized this type in one of his famous songs, and the name is proverbially given to any jovial fellow. There is a very much older French song, without date or author, in which La Merc Bontemps gives lively, cheerful advice to young girls.

Bon Ton (bōn tōn). [F. 'good tone,' i. e. high fashion.] A comedy by Burgoyne, produced in 1760. Garrick shortened it, and produced it in 1775 as "Bon Ton, or High Life above Stairs."

Bontuku (bon-tō'kō). A town of Gyaman, north of the Gold Coast, West Africa, now in French territory. It is here that the coast traders meet the caravans of Mande-nga, which bring the produce from the Upper Niger basin.

Bonython (bon'i-thon), Richard. Born in England, 1580; died about 1650. An English soldier who received a grant of a tract of land on the east side of the Saco River, in Maine, and settled there in 1631. He was commissioner for the government of Maine under Gorges in 1636, and later (1640-47) one of his council. His son, John Bonython, introduced by Whittier in "Mogg Megone," was a turbulent character, and was outlawed for contempt of court.

Booby (bō'bi), Lady. In Fielding's novel "Joseph Andrews," a vulgar woman who tries to seduce Joseph Andrews, her footman, and dismisses him on account of his virtue.

Book of Common Order. The liturgy of the Church of Scotland. In 1562 the Book of Common Order, commonly termed "Knox's Liturgy," was partially introduced in place of the Book of Common Prayer, and in 1564 its use was authoritatively ordained in all the churches in Scotland. This liturgy was taken from the order or liturgy used by the English church at Geneva. McClintock and Strong.

Book of Common Prayer. The service-book of the Church of England, or a similar book authorized by one of the other branches of the Anglican Church. It is popularly known as the Prayer-book. The first Book of Common Prayer was issued in 1549. It was nearly all taken from medieval liturgical books. English was substituted for Latin, and a uniform use was established for the whole Church of England. Revisions were made in 1562, 1559, and 1662. The American Prayer-book was authorized in 1789; a revision was authorized in 1836 and issued in 1893.

Book of Cupid, God of Love, The. See Cuckoo and the Nightingale, The.

Book of the Dead, The. See the extract.

The chief monument of the religious literature of Egypt is the "Book of the Dead," in 106 chapters, now being critically edited by M. Naville. Portions of it were inscribed on the mummy-cases and tombs, and are met with in the latest of the demotic papyri. It was, in fact, the funeral ritual of the Egyptians, describing in mystical language the adventures of the soul after death, and the texts it must quote in order to escape the torments and trials of the lower world. It is the literary reflection of the Osiris myth, and grew along with the latter. A hieratic text of the eleventh dynasty gives two varying versions of the sixteenth chapter, ascribed to King Men-ka-ra, from which we may infer the antiquity of the latter. But only the essence of the work went back to the Old Empire. The rest consisted of additions and glosses, and glosses of glosses, which continued to be made up to the time of the Persians. The oldest portion seems to have been of a practically moral character, contrasting strikingly with the mystical tone of the later accretions, where the doctrine of justification by faith in Osiris has taken the place of that of good works. Sayce, Anc. Empires, p. 79.

Book of the Duchess. A poem by Chaucer, known also as "The Death of Blanche the Duchess." It was probably written near the end of 1369, as Blanche, the wife of the Duke of Lancaster, died Sept. 12, 1369. The poem represents the inconsolable nature of the grief of the duke, and embodies the story of Ceyx and Alcyon. The duke, John of Gaunt, however married again in 1372. The broader outlines of the plot come from Machault's "Dit du Lion" and "Dit de la Fontaine Amoureuse."

Book of Martyrs, The. A history of the persecution of Reformers in England, by John Foxe. It was finished in 1559, and was in Latin. It was published March 20, 1563, and called "Actes and Monuments," but was popularly known as "The Book of Martyrs." He translated it into English himself.

Book of Mormon. The sacred book of the Mormons, or Latter-day Saints; a corrupt version of a religious romance "The Manuscript Found," written in 1809 by Solomon Spaulding, and published in 1830 by Joseph Smith, who pretended that he had translated it from the "Plates of Nephi" transmitted to him by angels.

Book of St. Albans. A rimed treatise on hawk-hunting, hunting, etc., printed in English in 1486. It was reprinted by Wynkin de Worde in 1496. It has been attributed to Juliana Berners (Juliana Bernes), and some of it was certainly written by her. The second edition contains the popular "Treatyse on Fysshynge with an Angle." It has been many times reprinted. The original edition was reprinted in facsimile by Eliot Stock in 1881.

Book of Sentences. See the extract.

Of this kind is the "Book of Sentences" of Peter the Lombard (bishop of Paris, who is, on that account, usually called "Magister Sententiarum"; a work which was published in the twelfth century, and was long the text and standard of such discussions. The questions are decided by the authority of Scripture and of the Fathers of the Church; and are divided into four books, of which the first contains questions concerning God and the doctrine of the Trinity in particular; the second is concerning the creation; the third, concerning Christ and the Christian religion; and the fourth treats of religious and moral duties. Whewell, Ind. Sciences, I. 317.

Book of Snobs, The. A series of sketches by Thackeray on his favorite subject, snobbery in all its branches. They first came out in "Punch" as "The Snob Papers" in 1843.

Boone (bōn), Daniel. Born in Bucks County, Pa., Feb. 11, 1735; died at Charette, Mo., Sept. 26, 1820. A famous American pioneer in Kentucky. About 1748 his father settled at Holman's Ford, on the Yadkin, North Carolina. He began the exploration of Kentucky in 1769, and founded Boonesborough in 1775. He emigrated to Missouri, then a possession of Spain, in 1793.

Boonton (bōn'ton). A city of Morris County, New Jersey, 25 miles northwest of New York.

Boonville, or Booneville (bōn'vil). A city in Missouri, situated on the Missouri River 43 miles northwest of Jefferson City. Here, June 17, 1861, the Federals under Lyon defeated the Confederates under Marmaduke. Population (1890), 4,141.

Boorlos (bōr'los), Lake. A large lagoon in the delta of the Nile, near the Mediterranean.

Bootan. See Bhutan.

Boötes (bō-ō'tēz). [Gr. Βοώτης, the ox-driver or plowman.] A northern constellation containing the bright star Arcturus, situated behind the Great Bear. It is supposed to represent a man holding a crook and driving the Bear. In modern times the constellation of the Hounds has been interposed between Boötes and the Bear.

Booth (bōth). The husband of Amelia, a prominent character in Fielding's novel "Amelia." Fielding intended in this character to represent partly his own follies, improvidence, and weakness.

Booth, Barton. Born in Lancashire, England, in 1681; died at London, May 10, 1733. An English tragedian. He first appeared in London in 1700, having previously played in Ireland. He played with Betterton and with Wilks. In 1719 he married Hester Santlow (his second wife), a dancer and actress of great beauty but of irregular life.

Booth, Edwin Thomas. Born at Bel Air, Md., Nov. 13, 1833; died in New York city, June 7, 1893. A noted American tragedian. He was the son of Junius Brutus Booth, and his first appearance was as Tresselt to his father's Richard III., on Sept. 10, 1849. In 1857 he first appeared as "atar" in Boston as Sir Giles Overreach. In 1861 he went to London and played an engagement there. The assassination of Lincoln by his brother John Wilkes Booth led to his temporary retirement from the stage; but he reappeared as Hamlet on Jan. 3, 1866, in New York, and acted in Shaksperian plays at the Winter Garden Theater until its destruction by fire in 1867. He then erected a theater of his own in New York, which was opened Feb. 3, 1869, but was financially a failure. In 1880 he again went to London. In 1883 he acted in Germany. In 1886 he began his engagement to play under the management of Lawrence Barrett, and continued to play with him until Barrett's death in 1891. His last appearance was in Brooklyn, April 4, 1891, in the part of Hamlet. In 1888 he founded in New York "The Players," a club designed to promote social intercourse between the dramatic and kindred professions, and in its club-house he died.

Booth, John Wilkes. Born at Bel Air, Md., 1839 (1838?); shot near Bowling Green, Va., April 26, 1865. An American actor, the brother of Edwin Booth. He assassinated President Lincoln at Ford's Theater, Washington, April 14, 1865.

Booth, Junius Brutus. Born at London, May 1, 1796; died on a Mississippi steambot on Nov. 30, 1852. An Anglo-American actor. His first professional appearance was as Campillo in "The Honey-moon" in 1813 at Peckham, England; his last, as Sir Edward Mortimer in "The Iron Chest," Nov. 19, 1852, at New Orleans. His career was brilliant though erratic. His rivalry with Kean (whom he somewhat resembled) and his erratic conduct led to exciting incidents in the Covent Garden Theater in 1817, resulting in his departure for America in 1821. On Jan. 13 of that year he married Mary Anne Holmes. He played in America with great success. In 1822 he bought a farm in Harford County, Maryland, where his family lived and he retired when not acting.

Booth, Junius Brutus. Born at Charleston, S. C., 1821; died at Manchester, Mass., 1883. An American actor, eldest son of Junius Brutus Booth (1796-1852), and brother of Edwin Booth. He was both manager and actor.

Booth, William. Born at Nottingham, England, April 10, 1829. The founder of the Salvation Army. He became a minister of the Methodist New Connection in 1850; organized in 1865 the Christian Mission which, when it had become a large organization formed on military lines, was called the Salvation Army (1878); established the "War Cry" (1880); and published "The Darkest England" (1890). He is commonly styled "general."

Boothauk. See Buthak.

Boothia Felix (bō'thi-ii fē'liks). [NL., 'happy land of Booth'; named by Ross for Sir Felix Booth, who promoted the expedition.] A peninsula in British North America (northern extremity situated in lat. 72° N., long. 95° W.), discovered by John Ross in 1829. On its west coast (lat. 70° 5' 17" N., long. 96° 46' 45" W.) James Clarke Ross located the north magnetic pole.

Boothia Gulf. A continuation of Prince Regent Inlet, north of British North America. It lies between Cockburn Island on the east and Boothia Felix on the west. Length, 310 miles.

Bootle (bō'tl). A suburb of Liverpool, in Lancashire, England, situated at the mouth of the Mersey. Population (1891), 49,127.

Bo-Peep (bō-pēp'), Little. A small shepherd maiden, in a popular nursery story, who lost her sheep.

The term bo-peep appears to have been connected at a very early period with sheep. Thus in an old ballad of the time of Queen Elizabeth, in a MS. in the library of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge,—

Half England's eyes nowght now but shepe,
In every corner they play a bo-peep.

Hallivell, Nursery Rhymes, p. 211.

Bopp (bop), Franz. Born at Mainz, Germany, Sept. 14, 1791; died at Berlin, Oct. 23, 1867. A celebrated German philologist, noted for researches in Sanskrit, and especially in comparative philology, which he first placed upon a scientific basis. He became professor ("extraordinary") of Oriental literature and philology at Berlin in 1821 ("ordinary" professor, 1825). His chief work is a "Comparative Grammar of the Sanskrit, Zend, Armenian, Greek, etc." ("Vergleichende Grammatik, etc.," published 1833-52).

Boppard (bop'pärt). A town in the Rhine Province, Prussia, situated on the Rhine 9 miles south of Coblenz: the Roman Baudobrica or Bodobriga. It has a castle and the remains of a Roman wall. It was an ancient Celtic and Roman town. Population (1890), commune, 5,610.

Borachia (bō-rā'chā). [Sp. f. of Borachio.] A woman given to drink, a comic and unwholesome character in Massinger's play "A Very Woman."

Borachio (bō-rā'chō). A villain, a follower of Don John, in Shakspeare's "Much Ado about Nothing." Borachio is the Spanish name for a leathern wine-bottle (hence the name is frequently given in old writers either as a proper name or a mark of opprobrium to drunkards).

Borandon, Borondon. See Brendan, Saint.

Borås (bō'rōs). A town of southern Sweden, 37 miles east of Gothenburg.

Borbeck (bor'bek). A commune in the Rhine Province, Prussia, 3½ miles northwest of Essen. Population (1890), 28,707.

Borda (bor-dā'), Jean Charles. Born at Dax, in Landes, France, May 4, 1733; died at Paris, Feb. 20, 1799. A French mathematician and naval officer, noted for investigations in nautical astronomy and hydrodynamics.

Bordeaux (bor-dō'). [ME. Burdeus, OF. Bordeuz (F. Bordeaux), earlier OF. Bordele, from L. Burdigala, Burdigala, Gr. Burdigāla; supposed to be an Iberian or else a Celtic name.] The capital of the Gironde, France, situated on the Garonne in lat. 44° 50' N., long. 0° 35' W.: the fourth city and third port of France. It has a large and fine harbor, with extensive quays and floating basin. Its commerce is with the Atlantic and Baltic ports, America, India, and Africa; its trade is in wine, brandy, metals, timber, coal, grain, etc. It contains a celebrated bridge, Pont de Bordeaux (which see), and a ruined Roman amphitheater, and is the seat of a university. Bordeaux was a leading Roman city in Gaul, the capital of Aquitania Secunda, and passed under the sway of the Vandals, West Goths, Franks, and Normans, becoming a part of the duchy of Aquitaine, whose fortunes it followed. It flourished under English rule. It revolted against the salt tax, and was severely punished in 1548. It had a Parliament. It revolted against the Convention in the Girondist period, 1793. It was the seat of the provisional government and of the National Assembly, 1870-71. The cathedral was built during the English rule. The north transept is flanked by two graceful spires, and has a good portal and rose-window. The choir is notable for the great beauty of its five radiating and two lateral chapels. The nave, without aisles, has round arcades below and two ranges of pointed windows above. Population (1891), commune, 252,415.

Bordeaux, Duc de. See Chambord, Comte de.

Bordelais (bor-dē-lā'). [L. Burdigalensis, adj. from Burdigala, Bordeaux.] An ancient subdivision of France, now comprised in the departments of Gironde and Landes.

Bordighera (bor-dē-gā'rā). A small town in northwestern Italy, on the Riviera 15 miles east of Monaco.

Bordone (bor-dō'ne). Paride. Born at Treviso, Italy, about 1500; died at Venice, Jan. 19, 1571. A painter of the Venetian school, a pupil of Titian. His most noted painting is the "Fisher extending a Ring to the Doge."

Boreas (bō'rē-as). [Gr. Borēas or Borās.] In Greek mythology, the personification of the north wind. According to Hesiod, he is a son of Astræus and Eos, and brother of Hesperus, Zephyrus, and Notus. His home was a cave in Mount Hæmus, in Thrace.

Borel (bo-rel'), Pétrus. Born at Lyons, June 28, 1809; died at Mostaganem, July 14, 1859. A French journalist and man of letters. See the extract.

Pétrus Borel, one of the strangest figures in the history of literature. Very little is known of his life, which was spent partly at Paris and partly in Algeria. He was perhaps the most extravagant of all the Romantics, surnaming himself "Le Lycanthrope," and identifying himself with the extravagances of the Bousingots, a clique of political literary men who for a short time made themselves conspicuous after 1830. Borel wrote partly in verse and partly in prose. His most considerable exploit in the former was a strange preface in verse to his novel of "Madame Putiphar"; his best work in prose, a series of wild but powerful stories entitled "Champanvert." His talent altogether lacked measure and criticism, but it is undeniable. Saintsbury, French Lit., p. 545.

Borelli (bo-rel'lē), Giovanni Alfonso. Born at Castelnuovo, near Naples, Jan. 28, 1608; died at Rome, Dec. 31, 1679. An Italian astronomer, professor of mathematics at Messina and later at Pisa, founder of the iatromathematical school. His chief work is "De motu animalium" (1680-81).

Borgå (bor'gō). A decayed seaport in the province of Nyland, Finland, situated on the Gulf of Finland in lat. 60° 25' N., long. 25° 45' E. Population (1890), 4,214.

Borgerhout (bor'gér-hout). A manufacturing town 1½ miles east of Antwerp, Belgium. Population (1890), 28,882.

Borghese (bor-gā'se), Prince Camillo Filippo Ludovico. Born at Rome, July 19, 1775; died at Florence, May 9, 1832. An Italian noble, brother-in-law of Napoleon I.

Borghese Gladiator, so named, in reality an athlete or perhaps a warrior. A notable antique statue by Agasias of Ephesus. It is in the Louvre, Paris. It dates from about the beginning of the Christian era. The vigorous figure, undraped, is in an attitude of rapid advance, the left arm, encircled by the shield-strap, raised above the head, and the right (restored) extended downward and backward in the line of the body, grasping the sword. Also Fighting Gladiator.

Borghese Mars. An antique statue of Mars in the Louvre, Paris.

Borghese Palace. The famous palace of the Borghese family in Rome, noted for its art collections. It was built toward the end of the 16th century by Martino Lunghi and Flaminio Ponzio. It is situated in the Via della Fontanella, and though its galleries contained originally the most important art treasures of Rome, save those of the Vatican, many of them have now been removed to the private apartments of the Prince Borghese. See Villa Borghese.

Borghesi (bor-gā'sē), Count Bartolommeo. Born at Savignano, near Rimini, Italy, July 11, 1781; died at San Marino, Italy, April 16, 1860. A distinguished Italian numismatist and epigraphist. He wrote "Nuovi frammenti dei fasti consolari capitolini" (1818-20), etc.

Borghesi-Mamo (bor'gē-mā'mō). Adelaide. Born at Bologna, Italy, Aug. 9, 1829 (1830?). An Italian opera-singer.

Borgia (bor'jā), Cesare, Duke of Valentinois. Born Sept. 18, 1478; killed before the castle of Viana, Spain, March 12, 1507. The natural son of Rodrigo Lenzuoli Borgia (Pope Alexander VI.). He was created cardinal by his father in 1492, procured the murder of his brother Giovanni, duke of Gandia, in 1497, resigned the cardinalate in 1497, was invested with the duchy of Valentinois by Louis XII. in 1498, married Charlotte d'Albret, daughter of Jean d'Albret, king of Navarre, in 1499, and was created duke of Romagna by his father in 1501. He reduced by force and perfidy the cities of Romagna, which were ruled by feudatories of the Papal See, and, with the assistance of his family, endeavored to found an independent hereditary power in central Italy, including Romagna, Umbria, and the Marches. His father having died in 1503, he was detained in captivity by Pope Julius II. 1503-04, and by Ferdinand of Aragon 1504-06, when he escaped to the court of Jean d'Albret of Navarre, in whose service he fell before the castle of Viana. Handsome in person, educated, eloquent, a patron of learning, and an adept in the cruel and perfidious politics in vogue in his day, he is represented as a model ruler by Machiavelli in his "Principe."

Borgia, Saint Francesco, Duke of Gandia. Born at Gandia, Spain, about 1510; died at Rome, 1572. General of the Society of Jesus 1565-72.

Borgia, Lucrezia. Born 1480; died June 24, 1519. Duchess of Ferrara, daughter of Pope Alexander VI., and sister of Cesare Borgia. She married Giovanni Sforza, lord of Pesaro, in 1493. This marriage was annulled by Alexander, who (1498) found a more ambitious match for her in Alfonso of Bisceglie, a natural son of Alfonso II. of Naples. Alfonso having been murdered by Cesare Borgia in 1500, she married (1501) Alfonso of Este, who subsequently succeeded to the duchy of Ferrara. She was a woman of great beauty and ability, a patron of learning and the arts. She was long accused of the grossest crimes, but recent writers have cleared her memory of the worst charges brought against her.

Boulanger (bô-lôn-zhâ'), Georges Ernest Marie. Born at Rennes, April 29, 1837; died at Brussels, Belgium, Sept. 30, 1891. A French soldier and politician. He entered the army in 1856, took part in the Kabyle expedition in 1857, was with the expedition to Cochinchina in 1861, was chief of battalion in the army of Paris during the Franco-German war, and (1874) was placed in command of the army of occupation in Tunis, with the rank of a general of division. He became minister of war in the cabinet formed by M. de Freycinet, Jan. 7, 1886, which post he retained during the ministry of M. Goblet. He organized democratic reforms in the army, and posed as the leader of the party of revenge against Germany, which gave him great popularity. Left out of the ministry formed by M. Rouvier, May 30, 1887, he entered into secret alliance with the various revolutionary groups—the Intransigeants of M. de Rochefort, the League of Patriots of M. Déroulède, the anarchists, and with the Comte de Paris and the Orléanists. Hoping by means of this alliance to make himself dictator, he adopted the cry for the revision of the constitution, and by means of money furnished by the Duchesse d'Uzes and the Comte de Paris was elected by a large majority in the Department of the Nord in April, 1888. In July, 1888, he fought a duel with the then premier M. Floquet, in which he was severely wounded. In January, 1889, he was elected by the city of Paris, and later by a number of departments. The Boulanger movement had now grown to such proportions that the Tirard cabinet was formed specially with a view to putting it down. Frightened by the attitude of M. Constans, the minister of the interior, he fled to Brussels, April 2, 1889. Tried by the Senate for conspiracy, he was sentenced in contumaciam to deportation. He passed his exile in Belgium and Jersey, and shot himself on the grave of his mistress, Madame Bonnemain, in Brussels.

Boulanger, Gustave Rodolphe Clarence. Born at Paris, April 25, 1824; died there, Sept. 22, 1888. A French painter, noted especially for his paintings of Oriental subjects. Among his works are "Les Kabyles en déroute" (1863), "Cavaliers sahariens" (1864).

Bourbon, Charles, Duc de, commonly called Constable Bourbon (Comte de Bourbon). Born Feb. 17, 1490; died at Rome, May 6, 1527.

A celebrated French general. He was descended from a younger branch of the house of Bourbon, being a son of Gilbert, count of Montpensier, and married Susanne, heiress of Bourbon, with whom he obtained the title of duke. In 1515 he was created constable of France. He concluded in 1522 (on the death of Susanne) a private alliance with the emperor Charles V. and Henry VIII. of England. He was promised, by the emperor, the emperor's sister, Eleonora, in marriage, with Portugal as a jointure, and an independent kingdom which was to include Provence, Dauphiné, Bourbonnais, and Auvergne. He fled from France in 1523, aided in expelling the French from Italy in 1524, and contributed to the victory of Pavia in 1525, in spite of which his interests were neglected in the treaty of peace between Spain and France in 1526. He commanded with George of Frundsberg the army of Spanish and German mercenaries which stormed Rome, May 6, 1527, and fell in the assault.

Bourbon, Duc de (Louis Henri de Bourbon). Born at Versailles, France, 1692; died at Chantilly, France, Jan. 27, 1740. A French politician, prime minister 1723-26.

Bourbon (bôr'bôn; F. pron. bôr-bôn'), House of. [ME. Barbon, OF. Bourbon, Borbon, F. Bourbon, Sp. Borbon, It. Borbone, ML. Borbo(n)-, Burbo(n)-], in a bl. Burbono castru, Burbono castru, Bourbon castle. Cf. Borbona, now Bourbonne-les-Bains, Borbone vicaria, now Bourbon-Archambault.] A royal house of France, Spain, and Naples: so called from a castle in the quondam district of the Bourbonnais in central France. The first sire of Bourbon was Adhémar or Aimar, who lived about 920. His descendant Batrix, heiress of Bourbon, married 1372 Robert, count of Clermont (sixth son of Louis IX. of France), who became the founder of the Bourbon branch of the Capetian dynasty. Antoine de Bourbon married Jeanne d'Albret, heiress of Navarre, 1548, and became king of Navarre 1565. Their son Henry became king of France as Henry IV., 1589. The Spanish branch of the house of Bourbon was founded by Philippe, duke of Anjou (grandson of Louis XIV.), who became king of Spain 1700. His second son Charles became king of Naples (and Sicily) as Charles V., 1735. Charles acceded to the Spanish throne 1759, whereupon he resigned Naples (and Sicily) to his son Ferdinand IV., who became the founder of the Neapolitan branch. In France Henry IV. was succeeded by six descendants in the direct line: Louis XIII., 1610-43; Louis XIV., 1643-1715; Louis XV., 1715-74; Louis XVI., 1774-93; Louis XVIII., 1814-24; and Charles X., 1824-30. The interval between Louis XVI., who was deposed and executed by order of the National Convention, and Louis XVIII. was occupied by the French Revolution and the reign of Napoleon I. Charles X. was compelled to abdicate by the July revolution, 1830, which placed Louis Philippe on the throne. Louis Philippe represented a younger branch of the house of Bourbon, known as Bourbon-Orléans, which derived its origin from Philip, duke of Orléans, brother of Louis XIV. Louis Philippe was deposed by the revolution of 1848. In Spain, Philip V. was succeeded by Ferdinand VI., 1746-59; Charles III., 1759-88; Charles IV., 1788-1808; Ferdinand VII., 1813-33; Isabella II., 1833-68; Alfonso XII., 1875-85; and Alfonso XIII., the present occupant of the throne. The interval between 1808 and 1814 was occupied by the reign of Joseph Bonaparte; that between 1868 and 1875 by a revolutionary provisional government, by the reign of Amadeo, second son of Victor Emmanuel, by the reign of a republic. From Naples Ferdinand IV., who ascended the throne in 1759, was expelled by Napoleon in 1805. He withdrew to Sicily, where he maintained himself during the domination of the French under Joseph Bonaparte and Murat at Naples. On being restored to Naples in 1815, he assumed the title of Ferdinand I., king of the Two Sicilies. He died in 1825, and was succeeded by Francis I., 1825-30; Ferdinand II., 1830-59; and Francis II., 1859-60. Francis II. was expelled by his subjects, with the assistance of Garibaldi, and his dominions were united to those of Victor Emmanuel. Important branches of the royal house of Bourbon are the princely houses of Condé and Conti and the ducal house of Parma.

Bozrah (boz'rä). [Heb., 'sheepfold,' also 'fortified placee.'] In ancient history, a city of Bashan, Syria, in lat. 32° 28' N., long. 36° 36' E.; the Roman Bostra (?), and the modern Busra. Under Trajan it became the capital of the Roman province of Arabia, under Alexander Severus (222-235) a Roman military colony, and under Philip (244-249) the seat of a bishop (metropolitan). Later it became the seat of an archbishop. On its site are many ruins, including the following: Cathedral, built in 512 A. D. It is square without, the interior a circle 91 feet in diameter, with an apse in every angle. The circle was covered with a wooden dome. On the east side projects a choir flanked by parabemata, outside of which are two large chapels. Mosque of Omar el-Ketab, an example of a very early type, resembling an open cloister having on two sides a vaulted double gallery with fine columns, the shafts monolithic, of green cipollino marble, and the white marble capitals antique, of various orders. The walls bear a rich frieze of arabesques. The handsome square minaret is 150 feet high. Roman Triumphal Arch, with three openings, besides a transverse archway. The chief opening is about 40 feet high. The arch is ornamented with pilasters. Roman Theater, in great part covered by a strong, square-towered Arabian castle. Several tiers of seats of the cavea are exposed in the castle court. The cavea, about 250 feet in diameter, is supported on vaulted substructions. Flights of steps ascend from outside to the proscenium, and there was a gallery with Doric columns above the cavea. The stage-structure is unusually perfect. The stage is about 25 feet deep.

Bracton (brak'ton), or Bratton (brat'on), or Bretton (bret'on), Henry de. Died 1268.

An English ecclesiastic (chancellor of the cathedral of Exeter) and jurist. He was the author of a famous work, "De legibus et consuetudinibus Anglie" (printed in part in 1567 and entire in 1569), "the first attempt to treat the whole extent of the [English] law in a manner at once systematic and practical." "For the statement that he discharged the duties of Chief Justice for twenty years no foundation is now discoverable. During the earlier portion of his official life (1246-58) the office was in abeyance, and if Bracton was ever Chief Justice, it must have been either before 1258 or after 1265." (Dict. of Nat. Biog.) With regard to most of the facts of his life there is great uncertainty.

Bracy (brä'si), Maurice de. A handsome and not ungenerous mercenary, a follower of Prince John, in Scott's novel "Ivanhoe." He carries off Rowena, but she is speedily rescued.

Bradant (brad'a-mant). The sister of Rinaldo in Boiardo's "Orlando Innamorato" and Ariosto's "Orlando Furioso." She is a Christian but loves Rogero, and after incredible adventures in which her prowess, assisted by her enchanted spear, is equal to that of a knight, she marries him after he has been baptized. Robert Garnier wrote a tragedy with this name. It was produced in 1580, and Thomas Corneille produced a tragedy with the same name in 1695 (this was his last play). There have been several other plays on the same subject, notably one by La Calprenede written in 1637. Also written Bradantante, Bradamante.

Braddock (brad'ok), Edward. Born in Perthshire, Scotland, 1695; died July 13, 1755. A British general. He entered the Coldstream Guards in 1710, served in Holland 1746-48, and in 1753 became colonel of a regiment stationed at Gibraltar. He was promoted major-general in America, with a view to expelling the French from their recent encroachments west of the Alleghany Mountains. The plan of a general campaign against the French, which was to include several independent expeditions, having been agreed upon with the colonial governors, he marched from a spot known as Little Meadows with an army of 1,200 chosen men, regulars and provincials, against Fort Duquesne, June 18, 1755. He crossed the Monongahela, July 8, and on the following day, when about ten miles from the fort, fell into an ambuscade of French and Indians, who put his army to rout after two hours' fighting. He was mortally wounded while trying to reform his men, and died at a place called Great Meadows, about 60 miles from Fort Duquesne, the present Pittsburg.

Brag, Jack. See Jack Brag.

Brag, Sir Jack. A nickname given to General John Burgoyne (died 1792).

Braga (brā'gā). [L. Bracara, Bracara Augusta, Bracara Augusta, from Bracares or Bracari, a tribe name.] A city in the district of Braga, province of Minho, Portugal, 33 miles northeast of Oporto. It contains a cathedral, founded in the 12th century, but remodelled almost throughout in the latest pointed style. The early west doorway has a graceful triple porch of florid work, elaborately carved. There is a raised choir with well-sculptured Renaissance stalls, and a cloister, connected with which is a maze of chapels with some historic tombs. There is also a pilgrimage church of Bom Jesus, on a high hill, the ascent to which is bordered with 12 gilded chapels containing groups of large colored wooden figures illustrating the stations of the cross, etc., and with fountains typifying the five senses and the Christian virtues. The great church, simple in design and well proportioned, is preceded by pyramids and statues; the fine wooden reredos portrays the Crucifixion. The combination of nature and art is both curious and beautiful. Population, about 19,000.

Braga. See Bragy.

Bragança (brā-gān'sā), or Braganza (brā-gān'zā). A town in the district of Bragança, province of Traz-os-Montes, northern Portugal, in lat. 41° 50' N., long. 6° 45' W. It gives name to the house of Bragança. It contains a castle, a splendid medieval fortress, in great part ruinous, with an isolated central keep inaccessible except by a flying-bridge.

Bragança, or Braganza, House of. The reigning family of Portugal and, until 1889, of Brazil. In 1385 the Portuguese crown was seized by João, bastard of Pedro the First, and his illegitimate son Alfonso was created duke of Bragança in 1442. In 1640 a duke of this house headed the revolution by which Portugal was separated from Spain: he assumed the crown as João IV., and it has been retained by the family, though with some changes in the line, until the present time. Pedro I. of Brazil was son of João VI., and heir to the Portuguese throne; Pedro II. of Brazil was his son; and a daughter became queen of Portugal in 1834.

Braganza. See Bragança.

Bragelonne (brāzh-e-lon'), Le Vicomte de, ou Dix ans après (The Vicomte de Bragelonne, or Ten Years After). A novel by Alexandre Dumas. It is the third part of the trilogy of which "Les Trois Mousquetaires" ("The Three Musketeers") was the first, and "Vingt ans après" ("Twenty Years After") the second.

Bragg (brag), Braxton. Born in Warren County, N. C., 1817; died at Galveston, Texas, Sept. 27, 1876. An American officer, distinguished in the Mexican war, and a general in the Confederate service. He invaded Kentucky in 1862; commanded at Murfreesboro 1862-63, and at Chickamauga and Chattanooga in 1863.

Braggadocchio (brag-a-dōt'shiō). In Spenser's "Faerie Queene," a big bragging fool. He personifies cowardice, and is the comic element in the book. He was taken from Martano, a similar character in Aristotle's "Orlando Furioso."

Bragi (brā'gē). [ON.] In Old Norse mythology, a son of Odin, and the god of poetry. He is Odin's principal scald in "Valhalla." His wife is Idun. Bragi's prototype was probably a historical person, the Norse scald Bragi, who lived about the year 800.

Bragmardo (brag'mār-dō); F. pron. brāg-mār'-dō), Janotus de. A character in Rabelais's "Gargantua and Pantagruel." He was sent by the citizens of Notre Dame to object to his hanging the bells of Notre Dame around the neck of his horse.

Braham (brā'am), John. Born at London about 1774; died at London, Feb. 17, 1856. An English tenor singer, and composer of popular songs, among them "The Death of Nelson."

Brahe (brā; Dan. pron. brā'e), Tycho. Born at Knudstrup, in Scania, Sweden, Dec. 14 (O. S.), 1546; died at Prague, Bohemia, Oct. 24 (N. S.), 1601. A celebrated Danish astronomer. He built, under the patronage of Frederick II. of Denmark, an observatory, the Uraniborg, completed 1580, on the island of Hven; and, entering the service of the emperor Rudolph II., settled at Prague in 1599. He discovered a new star in Cassiopeia in 1572, discovered the variation of the moon and the fourth inequality of the motion of the moon, and is said never to have been surpassed as a practical astronomer, although he rejected the Copernican system.

Brahma (brā'mā), Brahman (brā'mān). [The Sanskrit has a neuter word brāhman (nominative brahma), and a masculine brāhmān (nominative brāhmā); from the root brh, 'be thick, great, strong,' causative 'make great, strengthen.'] 1. The neuter word brāhman means: (a) Devotion. (b) A sacred formula; especially, a spell. Hence the designation Brahmanava for the collection usually known as the Atharvaveda. (c) The Brahman (neuter), the highest object of theosophy, God thought of as impersonal, the Absolute. (d) The class that are possessors and fosterers of sacred knowledge theologians, Brahmins.

2. The masculine word brāhman (nominative brāhma) means: (a) A prayer, worshiper, and then a prayer by profession, a priest, a Brahmin; also one who knows the sacred formulae or spells, or sacred knowledge in general. (b) He who knows sacred science in the narrower sense; the chief priest, who conducts the sacrifice and is obliged to know the three Vedas. (c) A particular priest, the assistant of the Brahmin in the soma sacrifice. (d) Brahma, i. e., the neuter Brahman conceived as a person, etc. Brahma is a product of theological abstraction, not a god of popular origin. He is not known in the older books. In many passages the word that the native commentators regard as masculine is to be taken as neuter. Brahmanism has no Creator in the Christian sense. The personal god Brahma (masculine), who is called "the Creator," is himself evolved out of the one impersonal, self-existent Being, Brshma (neuter). The personal Brahma then becomes the Evolver of the Universe, while Vishnu is associated with him as its maintainer, and Shiva as its destroyer. These three gods constitute the well-known Hindu Triad (Trimurti). There are believed to be only two temples of Brahma in India: one at Pushkara (Pokhar), the other about 15 miles from Idar. The reason lies in the fact that the functions of Brahma, Vishnu, and Shiva are interchangeable, and that both Vishnu and Shiva may be identified with Brahma, or be worshipped as Brahma. The image at Pushkara has four black faces, each of which is supposed to be directed toward one of the four quarters of the compass. In fact three look at the observers, each having two great glass eyes. The four-faced head is covered by a broad red turban, and over that long umbrella-shaped ornaments. The image is dressed in red clothes.

Brahmagupta (brā-mā-gōp'tā). A Hindu astronomer whose date, according to Albiruni, is A. D. 664. Albiruni gives a notice of his recast of an earlier Brahmasiddhanta. To him also belongs, according to the same author, a work named "Aharana," corrupted by the Arabs into Arkanā. This Arkanā, the Sindhaveda (i. e. the five Siddhantas), and the system of Arjabah (Aryabhata) were the works which were principally studied and in part translated by the Arabs in the 8th and 9th centuries.

Brahmana (brāh'ma-na). [Skt. brāhmana, apparently relating to the brahman or worshiper.] Dicta on matters of faith and worship; especially "a Brahmana," as designation of one of a class of Vedic writings which contain these dicta. Their object is to connect the songs and sacrificial formulae of the Vedas with the rites. They contain the oldest rituals, linguistic explanations, traditional narratives, and philosophical speculations we have. They originated from the opinions of individual sages, imparted by oral tradition, and preserved as well as supplemented in their families and by their disciples. A comparatively large number of Brahmanas is still extant, owing to their being each annexed to a particular Veda, as well as to a sort of jealousy among the families in which the study of the different Vedas was hereditarily transmitted. The Brahmanas of the Rigveda treat especially of the duties of the Hotri, who recites the verses; those of the Yajurveda to the sacrifices by the Adhvaryu; and those of the Samaveda to the chanting by the Udgatri. The Brahmanas embrace also the treatises called Aranyakas and Upanishads.

Brahmapurana (brāh'mā-pō-rā'na). In Sanskrit literature, one of the eighteen Puranas: so called as revealed by Brahma to Daksha. This Purana is sometimes placed first, and therefore called Adipurana. Its main object appears to be the promotion of the worship of Krishna. It describes the creation, the Manvantaras or the life or period of a Manu, the history of the solar and lunar dynasties to the time of Krishna, Orissa with its temples and groves, the life of Krishna, and the mode of Yoga or contemplative devotion. It was not compiled earlier than the 13th or 14th century.

Bramante (brä-män'te), Donato d'Angnolo. Born at Monti Asdrualdo, near Urbino, about 1444; died March 11, 1514. A celebrated Italian architect. He studied painting before architecture. About 1472 he established himself in Milan, and lived in northern Italy the greater part of his life. He abandoned Milan for Rome in 1499, and became the greatest master of the Roman style growing up about the antique ruins. His principal works in Rome are: (a) The chancery built for the Cardinal Raffaello Riario, nephew of Pope Sixtus IV., his first work in Rome. The columns in the famous courtyard were taken from the old Basilica of San Lorenzo in Damaso, and were originally taken from the Portico of Pompey. (b) The Tempietto (1502). (c) Palazzo Grand-Torlonia (1503). (d) The cloisters of Santa Maria della Pace (1504). He was employed by Popes Alexander VI. and Julius II. His works at the Vatican were the long gallery connecting the old palace with the Belvedere, the court of the Loggia finished by Raphael, containing the frescos of Raphael, and the first plan of St. Peter's. (See St. Peter's.) Bramante's design has been considered by Michelangelo and all architectural critics as the best of the many which were made for this church. It was a Greek cross with a dome and two spires, and instead of the single great order of the interior employed two orders superimposed as in the Ospidali Maggiori. The first stone was laid on April 18, 1506. As a military engineer Bramante assisted Julius II. in the sieges of Bologna and Mirandola, and built the fine old fort at Civitá Vecchia near Rome.

An Italian statesman of Bolognese origin, elected by the people podestà, or senator, of Rome in 1253, with the power of enforcing justice, and the command of the military forces. He repressed the nobles and forced the Pope (Innocent IV.) to recognize the power of the people, but he exercised his power with such severity that he was driven from the city. Two years later, however, he was recalled.

Branchidæ (bräng'ki-dë). [Gr. Βραχίδια, descendants of Branchus (Βράχχος), and the name of their seat near Miletus, Asia Minor.] In ancient geography, a small town in Sogdiana, said to have been built by the priests of Apollo Didymæus near Miletus: it was destroyed by Alexander the Great. Temple of Apollo Didymæus, a very ancient sanctuary rebuilt at a late date on so great a scale that it was never finished. The temple was in plan 168 by 362 feet, Ionic, decastyle, dipteral, with twenty-one columns on each flank, and four between ante in the pronaos. The columns are 63 feet high. A sacred way, bordered with archaic seated statues, the best of which are now in the British Museum, led from the sea-shore to the temple.

The name Branchidæ, as the name of a place, is curious. The term properly applied to the priestly family to which was committed the superintendence of the oracle, and may be compared with such names as Eumolpidae, Iamidae, &c. According to the local tradition they were descended from Branchus, a Thessalian, or according to others a Delphian, the original founder and priest of the temple, of whom a legend was told similar to that of Hyacinthus. Rawlinson, Herod., III. 237, note.

Brandenburg (brän'den-börg). A city in the province of Brandenburg, Prussia, situated on the Havel 35 miles west-southwest of Berlin. It contains a cathedral and church of St. Catherine. It was an old Slavic stronghold; was taken by Albert the Bear in 1153; and was long the principal place in the mark of Brandenburg. Population (1890), commune, 37,817.

Brandenburg. A former margravate and electorate of the German Empire, the nucleus of the kingdom of Prussia. The Nordmark (see Nordmark) was granted in 1134 to Albert the Bear, who subdued the Slavic Wends, Christianized the region and colonized it with Germans, and took the title of Margrave of Brandenburg, making the town of Brandenburg his capital. Brandenburg was recognized as one of the seven electorates in the Golden Bull of 1356. It was united with Bohemia 1373-1415. In 1415 Frederick of Hohenzollern (Burggrave of Nuremberg) received the mark and electorate of Brandenburg, and was formally invested with it in 1417. The mark consisted then mainly of the Altmark, Prignitz, and the Mittelmark; the Uckermark was added (mainly) about 1415-40, the Neumark (mainly) about 1450. Brandenburg early embraced the Reformation. It acquired Cleves, Mark, and Ravensburg in 1614 (formally 1666), and the duchy of Prussia was united with it in 1618, during the reign of Frederick William, the Great Elector (1640-88), it became an important military power. In 1648 it acquired eastern (Further) Pomerania, and the bishoprics of Halberstadt, Minden, and Kammin, and in 1680 the archbishopric of Magdeburg. It became the kingdom of Prussia in 1701. See Prussia.

Brandenburg. A province of Prussia. It is bounded by Mecklenburg and Pomerania on the north, West Prussia, Posen, and Silesia on the east, Silesia and the province of Saxony on the south, and the province of Saxony, Anhalt, and Hannover on the west. It contains the government districts Potsdam and Frankfurt. Since 1861 Berlin has been separated from the province. It is composed of the Mittelmark, Uckermark, Prignitz, and most of the Neumark, and is the nucleus of the Prussian monarchy. The surface is generally level. Area, 15,376 square miles. Population (1890), 2,541,783.

Brandenburg, Friedrich Wilhelm, Count of. Born at Berlin, Jan. 24, 1792; died Nov. 6, 1850. A Prussian general and statesman, son of Frederick William II. of Prussia by hismorganatic wife, the Countess von Doenhoff. He became the head of a strongly reactionary minority, Nov. 2, 1848, and represented Prussia at Warsaw, Oct. 29, 1850, before the Czar of Russia, who acted as arbiter between Prussia and Austria in the difference arising out of Austria's interference in the politics of Hesse-Cassel.

Brandes (brän'des), Georg Morris Cohen. Born at Copenhagen, Feb. 4, 1842. A Danish writer on esthetics and the history of literature. Between 1865 and 1871 (time spent principally in France and Germany) he published "Ästhetische Studier" ("Esthetic Studies"), "Kritiker og Portraeter" ("Criticisms and Portraits"), and "Den franske Æsthetik i vore Dage" ("French Esthetics in Our Day," 1870). Returning to Denmark, he became docent at the University of Copenhagen. His lectures (which afterward appeared under the title "Hovedstrømninger i det 19de Aarhundredes Literatur," "Principal Tendencies in the Literature of the Nineteenth Century," 1872-75) brought upon him the charge of radicalism and free-thinking, and accordingly, in 1877, he left Denmark for Geranny, and settled in Berlin. In the same year fall "Soren Kjerkegaard" and "Danske Diktere" ("Danish Poets"). In Berlin appeared "Esaijas Tegner" and "Benjamin d'Israeli," both in 1878.

Brazil (brä-zil'; Pg. pron. brä-zel'), United States of. [F. Bresil, G. Brasilien.] A republic in South America, capital Rio de Janeiro, bounded by Venezuela and British, Dutch, and French Guiana on the north, the Atlantic on the east, Uruguay, the Argentine Republic, Paraguay, and Bolivia on the south, and Peru and Colombia on the west. It extends lat. 5° N.-33° 45' S., long. 35°-74° W. The southeastern portion is mountainous. The central, northeastern, and western parts are occupied by a great plateau, with the low plains of the Amazon to the north, and those of the Paraguay to the west. North of the Amazonian plains a portion of the Guiana plateau is included in Brazil. The mountain region and a large part of the Amazonian basin are covered with forest; the remainder is more or less open land. The principal rivers are the Amazon and its tributaries, Paraná and São Francisco, with the Uruguay and Paraguay on the frontiers. Brazil is very rich in agricultural resources, and exports coffee, sugar, hides, rubber, cotton, tobacco, etc. It contains 20 states, and the federal district of Rio. Its government is a federal republic with a president and a congress consisting of a senate of 63 members and a chamber of 205 deputies. The prevailing religion is Roman Catholic, and the prevailing language Portuguese. The inhabitants are Brazilians, Indians, negroes, mixed races, and colonists from Germany, Italy, and Switzerland. Brazil was discovered by Vicente Yañez Pinzon Jan. 26, 1500, and independently by the Portuguese Cabral in the same year. As the coast was in the hemisphere which, by the Pope's dictum, had been assigned to Portugal, it was claimed and colonized by the Portuguese. It was the residence of the exiled Portuguese royal family in the Napoleonic period. Its independence was proclaimed in 1822. An empire was formed, and Dom Pedro, son of the Portuguese king, became the first emperor. He was compelled to resign in 1831 in favor of his son, Pedro II. Brazil was in 1865-70 allied with the Argentine Republic and Uruguay against the dictator Lopez of Paraguay, who was defeated. She abolished slavery 1871-83. By the revolution of Nov. 15 and 16, 1889, the empire was overthrown, the imperial family compelled to leave Brazil, and a provisional government under Fonseca was established. A national congress was summoned in 1890, which in 1891 proclaimed the constitution of the United States of Brazil. Fonseca, the first president, assumed the dictatorship in 1891, but was obliged to resign the same year, and was succeeded by Peixoto as president. Revolts have occurred especially in Rio Grande do Sul and Matto Grosso, and in 1893 a serious rebellion of the fleet broke out under Mello. Area (claimed), 3,209,878 square miles. Population (official estimate of 1888), 14,002,335.

B. C. With an army of about 70,000 men he defeated a Roman army of about 40,000 in the battle of the Allia, and plundered and burnt Rome, which had been abandoned by its inhabitants, with the exception of eighty priests and old patriots, whom the Gauls massacred. After an unsuccessful night attack, repulsed by the valor of Manlius Capitolinus, who was awakened by the noise of Juno, he besieged the Capitol six months, till bought off by the garrison with 1,000 pounds of gold. According to a late legend, when the gold was being weighed a Roman tribune remonstrated against the use of false weights by the Gauls. Brennus threw his sword into the scale, with the famous exclamation, "væ victis!" ("woe to the conquered!"). His real name was probably Brenhin, Cymrian for "king," or Bran, a proper name of frequent occurrence in Welsh history.

Brennus. A Gallie leader who invaded Greece, in 279 B. C., with an army of 150,000 foot and 61,000 horse. Having dislodged 20,000 Greeks from the pass of Thermopylae by the secret path over the mountains followed two hundred years before by the Persians, he advanced with 40,000 men against Delphi, where he was repulsed by about 4,000 Delphians. He is said to have put himself to death, unable to survive his defeat.

Brigantia (brig-an'shi-â). The kingdom of the Brigantes. See the extract.

To the north of the Coritavi stretched a confederacy or collection of kingdoms to which the Romans applied the single name of "Brigantia." We first hear of these confederated states about the year A. D. 50, when their combined territories extended on one coast from Flamborough Head to the Firth of Forth, and on the other from the Dee or Mersey to the valleys on the upper shore of the Solway. "A line," says Mr. Skene, "drawn from the Solway Firth across the island to the eastern sea exactly separates the great nation of the Brigantes from the tribes on the north, the 'Gadeni' and the 'Otdeni': but this is obviously an artificial separation, as it closely follows the line of Hadrian's Wall; otherwise it would imply that the southern boundary of these barbarian tribes was precisely on a line where nature presents no physical demarcation." Elton, Origins of Eng. Hist., p. 236.

It is a station of the Peninsular and Oriental Company, and has steam connection also with Greece, the Levant, and Adriatic ports. It contains a cathedral, a castle of Frederick II, the ruined church of San Giovanni, and a Roman column, one of two which stood on a point in the harbor. The capital is carved with figures of divinities. These columns may have marked the end of the Appian Way, or have served to hold lights for the guidance of shipping. Brundisium was colonized by Tarentum, was acquired by Rome about 267 B. C., and became a Roman naval station. It was the terminus of the Appian Way, and the usual starting-point for Greece and the East. In 49 B. C. it was besieged by Caesar. It was the birthplace of Paeuvius and the place of Vergil's death. It was a frequent rendezvous of the Crusaders. In 1348 it was destroyed, and again in 1458, by an earthquake. Population, 14,000.

Bristol (bris'tol). [Formerly Bristow, Bristowe; ME. Bristow.] A seaport, city, and county in Somerset and Gloucester, at the junction of the Frome and Avon, 7 miles from Bristol Channel, in lat. 51° 27' N., long. 2° 36' W. It has a large foreign trade, especially with America, and manufactures of sugar, tobacco, leather, cotton, boots, glass, etc. Bristol Cathedral is of the 14th century, with rebuilt modern nave. It is small, and chiefly notable in that its aisles are of the same height as the nave, which thus has no clearstory, and for its superb Norman chapter-house, which is rectangular in plan and exhibits admirable moldings and interlacing arcades. Bristol became important in the middle ages, and was the second seaport of England down to the 18th century, and one of the chief seats of the slave-trade. In the reign of Edward III, it was made a county. It was taken by Prince Rupert in 1643, and by the Parliamentarians in 1645. It was the scene of great riots in 1831. A noted musical festival is held triennially here, lasting four days; the first one was held in 1873. Population (1891), 221,665.

Britain (brit'an or brit'n). [ME. Britaine, Bretayne, etc.; OF. Bretagne, L. Britannia.] The English equivalent for Britannia; Great Britain. In Arthurian romance "Britain" always means Brittany (Bretagne); England is called Loegris or Logria.

The word "Britain," in the mouth of an Englishman, is reserved either for artificial poetry, for the dialect of foreign politics, or for the conciliation of Scottish hearers. Before England and Scotland were united, the name "Briton," as including Englishmen, was altogether unheard of. Freeman, Hist. Essays, I, 165.

Britain (brit'an or brit'n), Benjamin, or Little. In Charles Dickens's story "The Battle of Life," at first a servant, afterward landlord, of the Nutmeg Grater Inn. He is very small, and announces himself as knowing and caring for absolutely nothing.

Britanni (brit-an'i). [LL. Britanni, Britones.] A Celtic people in the northwest part of Gaul, first mentioned in this location by Sidonius Apollonius. According to Jordanes they were leagued with the Romans against the West Goths. Gregory of Tours makes them subject to the neighboring Franks. They were called by the Franks Bretton; by Latin writers after the 5th century, Britanni, Britones, and their land Britannia Cismarina, modern Bretagne, Brittany. They were, in all probability, the descendants of the Dumnonii whose original home had been the southwestern part of Britain, whence they had been driven out by the Anglo-Saxons.

Britannia (brit-an'i-i). [L. Britannia, more correctly Britannia, Gr. Βρεττανία, from Britanni, more correctly Britanni, Gr. Βρεττανίαι, Βρεττανίαι.] In ancient geography (after the time of Caesar), the name of the island of Great Britain, and specifically of the southern part of the island; in modern times, a poetical name of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland.

However they were first constituted, the Roman divisions of Britain are the great territorial landmarks of our history. The country, before its conquest, was parcelled out among different tribes, who had come in on every side, and were struggling in the centre for supremacy. The Romans seem to have disregarded the limits of the existing kingdoms and the more natural features of mountain chains. Apparently, they took rivers as their landmarks. Britannia Prima, the first province, was the district south of the Thames, the Saxon Wesscx under Egbert; Flavia Caesariensis, between the Severn and the sea, was the Mercian kingdom of Offa; Britannia Secunda, west of the Severn, comprised Wales and the Welsh Marches; Maxima Caesariensis, between the Humber and the Tyne, is the Northumbrian province of Deira; and Valentinia, whose northern boundary was between the Firth of Forth and the Clyde, embraced the Lowlands of Scotland and Northumberland. Toward the end of the 4th century, Valentinia seems to have been abandoned.

Pearson, Hist. Eng., I, 40.

Britannia Prima. See Britannia.

Britannia Secunda. A Roman province nearly corresponding to Wales. See Britannia.

Britannia Tubular Bridge. A famous railway bridge across Menai Strait, Wales, built by Robert Stephenson between 1846 and 1850. British Legion. A body of British troops, commanded by Colonel Evans, which fought for Queen Isabella of Spain against the Carlists, in 1836.

British Museum. A celebrated museum at Great Russell street, Bloomsbury, London, founded in 1753. It contains collections of antiquities, drawings, prints, and a library of 1,600,000 volumes, 55,000 MSS., and 45,000 charters. The growth of the British Museum has been very rapid. Montagu House was first employed in 1753 when room was needed for Sir Hans Sloane's library and collections, which were bought for the nominal price of £20,000, raised by a lottery. The collection was opened to the public Jan. 1759. The Harleian manuscripts, purchased in 1755, and the royal library, largely taken from the monasteries by Henry VIII., and 65,000 volumes given by George III., and George IV., raised the library to a position of great importance. The new building, designed by Sir Robert Smirke and completed by his brother Sydney Smirke, was commenced soon after the beginning of the present century. In 1816 the Elgin marbles were bought for the sum of £35,000. The first great Egyptian acquisition consisted of the objects taken with the French army in 1801. In 1804 the Rosetta Stone and several sarcophagi were exhibited. A little later the collection of Sir Gardiner Wilkinson was added. The Assyrian, Babylonian, coin, and Greek vase collections are unquestionably the best in any contemporary museum. The natural history collections have been removed to the Museum of Natural History at South Kensington. The present building, finished in 1847, is one of the best structures of the "Classic Revival." The annual increase of the library is about 40,000 volumes. Modern English publications are added free of expense by a privilege, shared with the universities, of receiving gratis a copy of every book entered at Stationers' Hall.

British North Borneo. A British colonial possession in the island of Borneo. It is a protectorate under the British North Borneo Company (charter granted 1881). It produces tobacco, timber, rice, sago, coffee, gums, etc. The chief town is Sandakan. Area, 31,106 square miles. Population, 175,000.

British South Africa Company. A British commercial company chartered in 1829 for the exploitation of Matabeleland and the neighboring regions. The leader was Mr. Cecil Rhodes. The company has built Fort Salisbury, and developed Mashonaland to some extent. Its territory has been extended to include British Central Africa (north of the Zambesi) with the exception of Nyassaland. In 1893 the company put down a Matabele rising under the chief Lobengula.

Britomartis (brit-ô-mâr'tis). [Gr. Βριτομαρτις, the sweet maiden (?).] 1. In Greek mythology, a Cretan divinity of hunters and fishermen. The legends concerning her are various. According to one, to escape from the pursuit of Minos she threw herself among the fishermen's nets in the sea, and was rescued and made a deity by Artemis.

2. In Spenser's "Faerie Queene," a female knight, personifying chastity.

Britons (brit'onz). [ME. Britun, Brutun, etc., OF. Breton, a Briton, usually a Breton or native of Brittany in France, from ML. Brito (n-), pl. Britones, L. Britanni, Britous.] The natives of Great Britain; especially, the original Celtic inhabitants of the island of Briton.

So lately as James the Second's time, a Briton still meant a Welshman; and we believe that, exactly a century back, the famous declaration of George the Third that he "gloried in the name," not of Englishman, but "of Briton," was looked upon by many of his subjects as a wicked machination of the Scotchman Eute.

Freeman, Hist. Essays, I. 165.

Brittany, or Brittany (brit'a-ni), F. Bretagne. [From L. Britanni. See Britanni, Britain.] A former government of France, capital Rennes, the Roman Armorica. It is bounded by the English Channel on the north, Normandy, Maine, and Anjou on the east, Poitou on the south, and the ocean on the southwest and west. It is traversed by hills and low mountains (the Montagnes d'Arrée, Montagnes Noires, etc.), and is divided into Basse-Bretagne in the west, and Haute-Bretagne in the east. It comprises five departments: Finistère, Côtes-du-Nord, Morbihan, Ille-et-Vilaine, and Loire-Inférieure. The vernacular language is the Breton. Brittany is noted for its megalithic monuments (dolmens, menhirs, and cromlechs). A large part of the people are sailors and fishermen. Brittany was inhabited by the Veneti and other Gallic tribes, and formed a part of Lugdunensis under the Romans. It received the name of Lesser or Little Britain or Brittany (Britannia Minor; also Britannia Cismarina) in allusion to the Greater Britain across the Channel, from which it received colonists (from Cornwall) driven out by the Anglo-Saxons. The Frankish kings failed to retain a permanent hold on the country. In the 9th century it became independent, and was ruled by counts and dukes. In the 12th century it passed by marriage to Geoffrey, son of Henry II. of England. In 1204 it became a fief of France, and soon after passed under the rule of dukes of the Dreux family. It was united to France by the marriages of Anne (heirress of Brittany) with Charles VIII. of France in 1491, and with Louis XII. in 1499. It was finally incorporated with France in 1532. During the Revolution and later it was a center of royalist feeling. Compare Chouan.

Brunelleschi (brö-nel-les'kö), Filippo. Born at Florence, Italy, 1379; died there, April 16, 1446. A noted Italian architect. He at first studied jewelry and goldsmiths' work, and later experimented with mechanics, constructing clocks and machines of all sorts. He also attempted sculpture. In 1401 he entered into competition with Ghiberti for the doors of the baptistery at Florence. He associated himself with Donatello, and about 1403 the two made a famous visit to Rome. His study of the Roman monuments was most exhaustive, and when he returned to Florence he had reconstructed for himself the entire scheme of antique architecture. He built the famous dome of Santa Maria del Fiore, which was begun about 1417. The vault was started in 1425 and finished in 1436. Between 1445 and 1461 the lantern was built after his designs. This was the most important structural problem of the 15th century. Brunelleschi also built the church of San Lorenzo at Florence, the Badia at Fiesole, the cloister of Santa Croce, that of Santo Spirito (finished from his designs after his death), and the Capella dei Pazzi, also the Spedale degli Innocenti, the Pitti Palace, and the Pazzi Palace.

Brunello (brö-nel'lö). A thief in Boiardo's "Orlando Innamorato" and Ariosto's "Orlando Furioso." He was of mean extraction, but was made king of Tingitana by Agramont for his services, and after a life spent in theft and subtle knavery was hanged.

Brunetière (brün-tvär'), Ferdinand. Born at Toulon, July 19, 1849. A French editor and critic. He began his studies at the Lycée de Marseilles, and was graduated from the Lycée Louis-le-Grand in Paris. In 1875 he joined the staff of the "Revue des Deux Mondes," of which he is now (1893) the editor-in-chief. In 1886 he was appointed lecturer at the Ecole Normale; and in 1893 was elected to the Legion of Honor; and in 1893 was elected to the French Academy. His publications include "Études critiques sur l'histoire de la littérature française" (five series, 1880-93), "Le roman naturaliste" (1884), "Histoire et littérature" (1884-1886), "Questions de critique" (1889), "Nouvelles questions de critique" (1890), and more recently still, "L'Évolution des genres dans l'histoire de la littérature" and "L'Évolution de la poésie lyrique au dix-neuvième siècle." The first two series of the "Études critiques" and "Le roman naturaliste" have been crowned by the French Academy. In addition to these works, Brunetière has edited a number of books for French colleges.

Brunswick (brunz'wik), G. Braunschweig (brun'shviç). A duchy of northern Germany, and state of the German Empire. Capital, Brunswick (Braunschweig). It is mainly surrounded by the Prussian provinces of Hannover, Saxony, and Westphalia, and comprises 3 main detached portions (the Brunswick-Wolfenbüttele-Helmstedt division, the Blankenburg division, and the Gandersheim-Holzminden division), and also 6 smaller enclaves. It produces coal, iron, marble, salt, copper, lead, etc., and has flourishing agriculture. The government is a hereditary constitutional monarchy (Prince Albert of Prussia is regent), with a chamber of 46 members. Brunswick has 2 members in the Bundesrat and 3 in the Reichstag. The population is Protestant. Brunswick formed part of the realm of Charles the Great and part of the duchy of Saxony. "They [the descendants of Henry the Lion] held their place as princes of the Empire, no longer as dukes of Saxony, but as dukes of Brunswick. After some of the usual divisions, two Brunswick principalities finally took their place on the map, those of Lüneburg and Wolfenbüttele. . . . The simple ducal title remained with the Brunswick princes of the other line." (Freeman, Hist. Geog., p. 213.) The duchy of Brunswick suffered severely from the French in the Seven Years' War, was occupied by the French in 1806, was annexed to the kingdom of Westphalia in 1807, and was restored to its duke in 1813. It entered the German Confederation in 1815. Its direct line of rulers became extinct in 1884. A regent was chosen in 1885. Area, 1,421 square miles. Population (1890), 403,773.

Brunswick, G. Braunschweig. The capital of Brunswick, situated on the Ocker in lat. 52° 16' N., long. 10° 32' E. It has manufactures of tobacco, sugar, woolen goods, etc. It was the birthplace of Gauss and Spohr, and the place of Lessing's death. It was founded in 831 (?); was the residence of Henry the Lion? became a leading Hanseatic town; passed to the Wolfenbüttel line in 1671; and became the capital of the duchy in 1753. It was the scene of an insurrection in 1830. It contains a cathedral, built in the last quarter of the 12th century. The double aisles on the south side are of the 11th century; those of the north side, with twisted columns, of the 15th. The walls and vaults of the choir and south transept are adorned with scriptural mural paintings dating from 1224. There are many interesting monuments, including sculptured medieval tombs of emperors and princes. The columned crypt is spacious and triapsidal. The ducal palace is a fine modern Renaissance building of three stories, the lowest of which is rusticated and forms a basement. The chief façade, 410 feet long and 110 high, has two end pavilions with engaged Corinthian columns; and in the middle, over the entrance, a handsome hexastyle portico, with a sculptured pediment. Behind the pediment there is a square attic, on which is a quadriga in bronze. Population (1890), 101,047.

Brussels (brus'elz). [F. Bruzelles, Sp. Bruselas, G. Brüssel, D. Brüssel.] The capital of Belgium and of the province of Brabant, situated on the Senne in lat. 50° 51' N., long. 4° 22' E. Besides the city proper it comprises ten suburbs. It has important manufactures of lace, leather, linen, woolen and cotton goods, furniture, bronzes, etc. It is the seat of a university. Brussels appears in history in the 8th century, and became important in the middle ages. It had a brilliant period under Charles V. and Philip II., who made it the capital of the Low Countries, and was the scene of the earliest rising against the Spanish in 1568. It was the capital of the French department of Dyle 1794-1814, and alternately with The Hague the capital of the Netherlands 1815-30. In the latter year it was the scene of the outbreak of the Belgian revolution. It became the capital of Belgium in 1831. It has been noted latterly as an art center. It contains a cathedral, an imposing monument of the 13th century, with later additions. The 15th-century west front is flanked by high square towers, and has the vertical lines strongly marked by buttresses and panceling; it has three canopied portals, a large central tracered window, and an arcaded gable. The design is somewhat dry and mechanical. The interior is characterized by lofty arches with cylindrical pillars, and much superb glass, medieval, Renaissance, and modern. The five windows in the Chapel of the Sacrament were given about 1540 by the emperor Charles V., the Kings of France, Portugal, and Hungary, and the Archduke of Austria. The noted pulpit by Verbruggen (1699) is called the throne of St. Gudule; it is a mass of elaborate carving in wood representing the expulsion from paradise, with many birds and animals amid the profuse foliage, and a canopy supported by angels on which stands the Virgin destroying the serpent. The dimensions of the cathedral are 355 by 165 feet. The Palais de la Nation, built by Maria Theresa for the Council of Brabant, was used by the States-General between 1817 and 1830, and is now the seat of the Senate and Chamber of Deputies. It is a handsome building with a portico in whose pediment are sculptures exhibiting the administration of justice. The fine vestibule is adorned with historical statues, and the halls and apartments contain good portraits and other paintings. The Conservatoire de Musique et de Déclamation was established in 1832; it was an offshoot of the Ecole Royale de Musique founded in 1823. (Gross.) Population (1893), with suburbs, 498,400.

There was an antislavery conference at Brussels in 1890.

Brut (bröt). [ME. and OE., orig. same as AS. Brut, a Briton. See Brutus the Trojan.] A poetical version of the legendary history of Britain, by Layamon, a semi-Saxon paraphrase of the French "Roman de Brut" of Wace. See Wace. Its subject is the deeds and wanderings of the legendary Brutus, grandson of Aeneas, great-grandson of Aeneas, and king of Britain. It is about twice the length of Wace's "Brut," containing 32,250 lines. The latter is thought to be a mere versification of Geoffrey of Monmouth. There are two manuscripts of Layamon's poem, both in the British Museum.

Brute. See Brutus the Trojan.

Brute (bröt), Sir John. A drunken, roistering, rough fellow in Vanbrugh's comedy "The Provoked Wife." He passes through every phase of riot and debauchery, and is unbearably insolent to his "provoked wife," though too much of a coward to resent her consequent actions.

Catherine Bernard also produced a tragedy, "Brutus," at the Comédie Française Dec. 18, 1690.

Brutus, Decimus Junius, surnamed Albinus. Executed 43 B. C. A Roman general, one of the assassins of Julius Caesar. He was betrayed, and was put to death by order of Mark Antony.

Brutus, Lucius Junius. A Roman consul in 509 B. C. According to the (unhistorical) legend, he feigned idocy (whence the name Brutus, stupid; probably an erroneous etymology) to avoid exciting the fear of his uncle Tarquin the Proud, who had put to death the elder brother of Brutus to possess himself of their wealth. Tarquin, alarmed at the prodigy of a serpent appearing in the royal palace, sent his sons Titus and Aruns to consult the oracle at Delphi. They took with them for amusement Brutus, who propitiated the priestess with a hollow staff filled with gold. When the oracle, in response to an inquiry of Titus and Aruns as to who should succeed to the throne, replied, "He who first kisses his mother," Brutus stumbled to the ground and kissed mother earth. After the outrage on Lucretia, Brutus threw off his disguise, expelled the Tarquins, and established the republic 510 (?). While consul he condemned his own sons Titus and Tiberius to death for having conspired to restore Tarquin. He led in 507 (?) an army against Tarquin, who was returning to Rome. Brutus and Aruns fell in the battle, pierced by each other's spears.

Brutus, Marcus Junius (adoptive name Quintus Cæpio Brutus). Born 85 B. C.; died near Philipp, Macedonia, 42 B. C. A Roman politician and scholar. Originally an adherent of Pompey, he went over to Cesar after the battle of Pharsalia in 48; was governor of Cisalpine Gaul in 46, and praetor urbanus in 44; joined, induced by Cassius, in the assassination of Cesar, March 15, 44; gathered troops in Macedonia, with which he joined Cassius in Asia Minor in 42; and defeated

Octavianus in the first battle of Philippi in 42, while Cassius was defeated by Antony and committed suicide; but was defeated in a second battle twenty days later, and fell upon his sword. His (second) wife Portia, daughter of Cato Uticensis, on receiving news of his death, committed suicide by swallowing live coals.

Brutus the Trojan. [ML. Brutus, OF. Brut, really representing AS. Bryt, a Briton, but confused with the classical name Brutus.] A fabulous person, according to Geoffrey of Monmouth the grandson of Aeneas and founder of the city of New Troy (London).

Bubona (bū-bō'nā). [LL., from bos (bor-), ox.] In Roman mythology, a female divinity, protectress of cows and oxen.

Bucaneers (buk-ā-nēr'z'). [From F. boucanier, a curer of wild meat, a pirate, from boucaner, smoke meat, from boucan, a place for smoking meat.] A gang of adventurers and pirates which, in the 17th century, attained an almost national importance in the West Indies and on the coasts of South America. It had its nucleus in the English, French, and Dutch smugglers who carried on a clandestine trade with the Spanish island of Santo Domingo; they hunted the wild cattle there, drying the meat over fires; and gradually they formed regular settlements, not only on Santo Domingo but on many of the smaller islands. As they became stronger they began to prey on Spanish commerce. In 1630 they seized the island of Tortuga and made it their headquarters. In 1655 they aided the English in the conquest of Jamaica, and this became another center; and in 1664 they settled the Bahamas. Under their celebrated leader Morgan, they ravaged the coasts of the Gulf of Mexico and the Caribbean Sea, and made expeditions inland; Porto Bello was sacked; in 1671 Morgan crossed the isthmus and burned Panama; and from that year to 1685 the Bucaneers practically commanded the West Indian seas. Their immense spoils were divided equally, only the captain of a ship taking a larger share; French, Dutch, English, and Germans were banded together, their only bond being common interest and hatred of the Spaniards. In 1680 they again crossed the isthmus, seized some Spanish ships in the Pacific, and raided the western coasts of Mexico, Peru, and Chile for several years. After 1690 the war between France and England tended to separate the pirates of these two nations, and the impoverished coasts could no longer support their excesses. They gradually returned to the West Indies and Europe, and were drawn into the armies and navies of different powers.

Bucareli y Urzua (bō-kā-rā-lē ē ör-thō'ä), Antonio Maria. Born at Seville, Jan. 24, 1717; died at Mexico, April 9, 1779. A Spanish general and administrator. From 1760 to 1771 he was governor of Cuba, and from 1771 until his death viceroy of New Spain (Mexico).

Buccari (bök-kā'rē). A free haven in Fiume, Austria-Hungary, situated on the Adriatic in lat. 45° 18' N., long. 14° 32' E.

Bucentaur (bü-sen'tär). [From Gr. βοῦς, ox, and κένταυρος, centaur; but also said to be a corruption of L. ducentorum, of two hundred (ears), or of Bucintoro (= buzino d'oro), golden bark.] The state ship of the Venetian Republic, used in the ceremony of wedding the Adriatic, which was enjoined upon the Venetians by Pope Alexander III. to commemorate the victory of the Venetians under Doge Sebastiano Ziani over the fleet of Frederick Barbarossa, in the 12th century. On Ascension day of each year a ring was dropped from the Bucentaur into the Adriatic, with the words "We espouse thee, Sea, in token of true and lasting dominion." The ceremony was attended by the entire diplomatic corps. The ship perhaps took her name from the figure of a bucentaur (head of a man and body of a bull) in her bows. Three of the name were built. The last was destroyed by the French in 1798.

Bucephalus (bü-sef'ä-lus). [Gr. Βουκεφάλος, ox-headed, Βουκέφαλος, the name of Alexander's horse.] The favorite horse of Alexander the Great. His master was the only person who could ride him. He accompanied Alexander through his principal campaigns, and was buried on the banks of the Hydaspes with great pomp. Bucephalus is supposed to have been a name applied to Thessalian horses which were branded with a bull's head.

Bucer (bü'sér), or Butzer (büt'sér), Martin. [G. Butzer, NL. Bucerius, whence Bucer.] Born at Schlettstadt in Alsace, 1491; died at Cambridge, England, Feb. 28, 1551. A German theologian, a coadjutor of Luther. He became chaplain to the elector palatine Frederick in 1520, and pastor at Landstuhl in 1522; married the former nun Elizabeth Pallast in 1522; became pastor of St. Aurelia's in Strasburg in 1524; refused to sign the Augsburg Interim in 1548; and accepted, at the invitation of Cranmer, a professorate of theology in Cambridge in 1549. He is chiefly noted for his efforts to unite the different Protestant bodies, especially the Lutherans and Zwinglians, in which he was but partially successful.

Büchner, Luise. Born June 12, 1821; died at Darmstadt, Germany, Nov. 28, 1877. A German poet and novelist, sister of Georg Büchner, noted as a champion of the rights of women. She wrote "Die Frauen und ihr Beruf" (1855).

Büchner, Max. Born in Hamburg, April 25, 1846. A noted African traveler. He made a tour of the world in 1875 as ship's doctor. In 1878 the African Association of Berlin sent him to Muatyamvo, the king of Lunda, east of Angola, with instructions to explore the country to the east and north of Lunda. He reached Muatyamvo, and spent six months at his capital; but all his efforts to go beyond proved vain, and he returned. At Malange he met Pogge and Wissmann, who were to be more fortunate by trying the northern route to the Basilianga. In 1884 Büchner accompanied Nachtigal to West Africa, and was active in the annexation of Togoland and Kamerun. As curator of the Ethnologic Museum of Munich he made (1888-90) a voyage to Australia and New Guinea.

Buckingham Palace. The London residence of the queen, situated at the western end of St. James's Park. It was settled by act of Parliament in 1775 upon Queen Charlotte, and was hence known as the "queen's house." It was remodeled under George IV.; and the eastern façade, ball-room, and some other portions have been added by Queen Victoria, who began to occupy it in 1837. The chief façade is 360 feet long, but is architecturally uninteresting. The state apartments are magnificently adorned and furnished, the grand staircase, the throne-room, and the state ball-room being especially notable. There is a priceless collection of French huhl and other furniture, and the picture-gallery contains a number of old and modern masterpieces.

Buckinghamshire (buk'ing-am-shir), Buckingham, or Bucks. [AS. Buccingahamscir.] A county of England, lying between Northampton on the north, Bedfordshire, Hertford, and Middlesex on the east, Berkshire on the south, and Oxfordshire on the west. It is an agricultural county. The chief town is Buckingham. Area, 746 square miles. Population (1891), 185,190.

Buckland (buk'land), Francis Trevelyan. Born at Oxford, Dec. 17, 1826; died at London, Dec. 19, 1880. An English naturalist, son of William Buckland, noted for researches in fish-culture. He wrote "Curiosities of Natural History" (1857), "Natural History of British Fishes" (1881), etc.

His chief works are "Reliquia Diluviana, etc." (1823), and the Bridgewater treatise on "Geology and Mineralogy" (1836).

Bucklaw (buk'lä), Laird of. Frank Hayston, the dissipated but good-natured suitor of Lucy Ashton in Scott's "Bride of Lammermoor." He was married to her by her mother's machinations, and was thus the cause of the tragedy which ensued. See Ashton, Lucy.

Buckle (buk'1), Henry Thomas. Born at Lee, Kent, England, Nov. 24, 1821; died at Damascus, Syria, May 29, 1862. An English historian. His health in early youth was delicate, on which account he was educated at home, chiefly by his mother. In 1840, on the death of his father, a wealthy ship-owner in London, he inherited an ample fortune which enabled him to devote himself wholly to literary pursuits. In 1857 he published the first volume of his "History of Civilization in England." The appearance of this volume, which is characterized by vigor of style and boldness of thought, produced a sensation in Europe and America, and raised the author from obscurity to fame. The special doctrine which it sought to uphold was that climate, soil, food, and the aspects of nature are the determining factors in intellectual progress. A second volume, inferior in execution and interest, appeared in 1861.

Buckner (buk'nër), Simon Bolivar. Born in Hart County, Ky., April 1, 1823. An American general, in the Confederate service 1861-1865. He surrendered Fort Donelson to Grant, Feb. 16, 1862, after the escape of General Floyd, and commanded a corps at Chickamauga, Sept. 19 and 20, 1863. He was governor of Kentucky 1887-91.

Budapest (bü'dä-pest; Hung. pron. bü'do-pesh't'), since 1872 the official name of the united Buda and Pesth or Pest. The capital of Hungary, and the second city of the Austrian empire, consisting of Buda on the west bank of the Danube, and Pest on the opposite bank. The Danube is crossed here by a suspension-bridge and other bridges. The city contains ten municipal districts. It has a large trade in grain, wool, hides, etc., and extensive manufactures. It is also the seat of a university. Buda was the Roman Aquinum, and Pest was a Roman colony. Buda was the capital of Hungary from the middle of the 14th century. It was taken by the Turks in 1526, 1683, and 1841. The Turks were expelled in 1686. In 1784 Buda again became the capital. Budapest was occupied by the Austrians Jan., 1849. The Hungarians reentered Pest in April and stormed Buda in May, 1849. The Austrians reoccupied both places Aug., 1849. The German name of Buda is Ofen. Population (1890), with the garrison, 506,384.

Budaun (bü-dä-ön'). A district in the Rohilund division, Northwest Provinces, British India. Area, 2,002 square miles. Population (1881), 906,451.

He wrote "Historia juris nature, etc." (1695), "Elementa philosophiæ instrumentalis" (1703), "Historia ecclesiastica veteris testamenti" (1709), etc.

Buddha (bü'dä). [Skt., 'the enlightened.'] The title of Siddhartha or Gautama, the founder of Buddhism. From three newly discovered inscriptions of the emperor Asoka it follows that the 37th year of his reign was reckoned as the 25th from the death of Buddha. Hence it is inferred that Buddha died between 482 and 472 B. C. It being agreed that he lived to be eighty, he was born between 562 and 552 B. C. The Buddhist narratives of his life are overgrown with legend and myth. Senart seeks to trace in them the history of the sun-hero. Oldenberg finds in the most ancient traditions — those of Ceylon — at least definite historical outlines. Siddhartha, as Buddha was called before entering upon his great mission, was born in the country and tribe of the Sakhyas, at the foot of the Nepalese Himalayas. His father, Suddhodana, was rather a great and wealthy landowner than a king. He passed his youth in opulence at Kapilavastu, the Sakhya capital. He was married and had a son Rahula, who became a member of his order. At the age of twenty-nine he left parents, wife, and only son for the spiritual struggle of a recluse. After seven years he believed himself possessed of perfect truth, and assumed the title of Buddha, 'the enlightened.' He is represented as having received a sudden illumination as he sat under the Bo-tree, or 'tree of knowledge,' at Bodhi-gaya or Buddha-gaya. For twenty-eight or, as later narratives give it, forty-nine days he was variously tempted by Mara. One of his doubts was whether to keep for himself the knowledge won, or to share it. Love triumphed, and he began to preach, at first at Benares. For forty-four years he preached in the region of Benares and Behar. Primitive Buddhism is only to be gathered by inference from the literature of a later time. Buddha did not array himself against the old religion. The doctrines were rather the outgrowth of those of certain Brahmanical schools. His especial concern was salvation from sorrow, and so from existence. There are "four noble truths": (1) existence is suffering; (2) the cause of pain is desire; (3) cessation of pain is possible through the suppression of desire; (4) the way to this is the knowledge and observance of the "good law" of Buddha. The end is Nirvana, the cessation of existence. Buddhism was preached in the vulgar tongue, and had a popular literature and an elaborately organized monastic and missionary system. It made its way into Afghanistan, Bactriana, Tibet, and China. It passed away in India not from Brahman persecution, but rather from internal causes, such as its too abstract nature, too morbid view of life, relaxed discipline, and overgrowth of monasticism, and also because Shivaism and Vishnuism employed many of its own weapons more effectively. The system has been variously modified in dogma and rites in the many countries to which it has spread. It is supposed to number about 350,000,000 of adherents, who are principally in Ceylon, Tibet, China, and Japan.

Buddha-Gaya (bü'dä-gä). An ancient center of Buddhism, now in ruins, in the Gaya district, Bengal. The temple is a celebrated foundation in the Buddhist faith. It is a quadrangular pyramidal structure on a plain raised basement, 60 feet square and 160 high. The exterior faces are divided into piers, and ornamented with molded bands and panels forming nine stages or stories, and surmounted by a conical spire. In the interior is a cella with radiating arches, which date probably from a 14th-century restoration.

Buddhists (bü'dists). See Buddha.

Budé (bü-dä') (L. Budæus), Guillaume. Born at Paris, 1467; died Aug. 23, 1540. A French scholar. He was a friend of Erasmus, and was elevated by Francis I. to the post of royal librarian. He was suspected of favoring Calvinism. He wrote an excellent work on ancient coins, entitled "De Asse, etc." (1514).

Budgell (büj'el), Eustace. Born at St. Thomas, near Exeter, England, Aug. 19, 1686; committed suicide in the Thames, near London, May 4, 1737. An English miscellaneous writer. He was called to the bar, but his association with his cousin Joseph Addison induced him to turn his attention to literature. He contributed thirty-seven papers to the "Spectator," in Addison's style. He wrote many pamphlets of a political nature, and in 1733 started "The Bee," a weekly periodical which ran for about two years. He filled a number of positions after the accession of George I., when Addison became secretary to the lord lieutenant of Ireland, being at various times chief secretary to the lords justices, deputy clerk of the council, accountant-general, and member of the Irish House of Commons. He fell into money difficulties which affected his brain, and after a disgraceful affair connected with the disappearance of some bonds belonging to the estate of Matthew Tindal, he took his own life. He left a natural daughter, Anne Estance, who went upon the stage.

Budweis (bü'dvís), Czech Budejovice. A city in Bohemia, situated on the Moldau in lat. 48° 58' N., long. 14° 27' E. It has a cathedral. Population (1890) 28,491.

Buende (büwän'de), or Ba-Buende (bü-bwän'de). See Kongo language.

Buena da Silva (büwä'nö dä sël'vä), Bartholomeu, called Anhanguera. Born in São Paulo about 1635; died there about 1695. A Brazilian explorer. In 1682, at the head of a party in search of Indian slaves and mines, he penetrated to Goyaz, and probably beyond the Araguaya, bringing the first definite account of these regions.

Buena da Silva, Bartholomeu. Born in São Paulo, 1670; died in Goyaz, Sept. 19, 1740. Son of the preceding. He was with his father in the exploration of 1682, and in 1722 was sent by the governor of São Paulo to seek the same route. He was absent three years, and discovered the gold-mines of Goyaz. In 1728 he was made captain of the Goyaz colony.

Buenos Ayres (büwän 'i-réz; Sp. pron. büwän-nös 'i-rés). [Sp., 'good airs.'] A province of the Argentine Republic, lying between Cordoba, Santa Fé, Entre Rios, and the Rio de la Plata on the north, the ocean on the east and south, and the territories of Pampa and Rio Negro on the west. Capital, since 1882, La Plata. Its chief industry is cattle-raising. During most of the time from 1827 to 1862, Buenos Ayres was separated from the other provinces. Area, about 106,000 square miles. Population (1893), about 800,000.

Buenos Ayres. The capital of the Argentine Confederation, situated on the estuary of the Rio de la Plata, in lat. 34° 36' S., long. 58° 22' W. It is the second city of South America in size, and has the greater share of the export trade of the country, and also considerable manufactures. It is a railway terminus of importance. It contains a cathedral, university, and military school. Buenos Ayres was settled by the Spaniards in 1535; abandoned; and resettled in 1580. The revolution which led to the independence of the republic began there in 1810. Population (1893), 556,964 (including suburbs).

Buenos Ayres, or Colonias de la Plata (Colonias de la Plata). A vice-royalty established in 1776, and continued until the revolution of 1810. It included Buenos Ayres (colony), Tucuman, Cuyo (separated from Chile), Uruguay, Paraguay, and Charcas or Upper Peru; in other words, all now included in the Argentine Republic, Uruguay, Paraguay, and Bolivia, with the former Pacific coast of Bolivia, now annexed to Chile. The capital was Buenos Ayres.

Buffalo (büf'ä-lö). A city, port of entry, and chief place of Erie County, New York, situated on Lake Erie in lat. 42° 53' N., long. 78° 55' W.; the third city in the State. It has a good harbor protected by breakwaters, and is the terminus of the Erie Canal and an important railway-center. It is connected by steamer lines with ports on the Great Lakes. It has a large trade in grain, live stock, lumber, coal, cement, and salt, and manufactures of flour, iron, steel, beer, oil, leather, etc. Buffalo was founded in 1801, and incorporated as a city in 1832. It was the scene of extensive railroad strikes in 1892. Population (1890), 255,664.

Buffier (büf-yä'), Claude. Born in Poland, May 25, 1661; died at Paris, May 17, 1737. A French grammarian, philosopher, and littérateur.

Buffon (bü-fön'), Comte de (Georges Louis Leclerc). Born at Montbard, Côte-d'Or, France, Sept. 7, 1707; died at Paris, April 16, 1788. A celebrated French naturalist. He was the son of M. Leclerc de Buffon, a counselor of the parliament of Bourgoigne, from whom he inherited a competent fortune. About the age of nineteen he traveled in Italy in company with Lord Kingston, and in 1740 published a translation of Newton's "Treatise on Fluxions." He was elected a member of the Academy of Sciences at Paris in 1739, and in the same year was appointed director of the Jardin du Roi, the present Jardin des Plantes. His chief work is the "Histoire naturelle, générale et particulière, avec la description du cabinet du roi," the first three volumes of which were published in 1749. The first volume contained "La théorie de la terre" and "Le système sur la formation des planètes"; the second, "L'Histoire générale des animaux"; and "L'Histoire particulière de l'homme"; the third, a "Description du cabinet du roi" (by Daubenton) and a chapter on "Les variétés de l'espèce humaine." The next twelve volumes (1755-67) dealt with the history of quadrupeds. Subsequently he published in the history of quadrupeds, "L'Histoire naturelle des oiseaux et des minéraux" (1771-80), besides seven volumes of "Suppléments" (1774-83). The most striking of these is the fifth volume, "Les époques de la nature" (1779). Læcépède completed Buffon's work from his notes by publishing a volume, "Les serpents," in 1780. The credit for the six volumes on "Les poissons et les étacés" (1791-1804) belongs to Læcépède alone. When Buffon was admitted to the French Academy in 1753, he delivered as his inaugural address the famous "Discours sur le style."

Burbage (bēr'bāj), James. Died in 1597. An English actor, and the first builder of a theater in England; father of Richard Burbage. He was originally a joiner. In 1576-77 he erected the first building specially intended for plays. It was "between Finsbury Fields and the public road from Bishopsgate and Shoreditch." It was of wood, and was called "The Theatre." The material was removed to the Bankside in 1598 and was rebuilt as the Globe Theatre. The Curtain was put up near The Theatre soon after the latter was opened, and Burbage was instrumental in the conversion of a large house at Blackfriars into Blackfriars Theatre about Nov., 1595.

Burbage, Richard. Born in 1567 (?); died in 1619. A noted English actor, son of James Burbage (died 1597). He made his fame at the Blackfriars and the globe of which, with his brother and sister, he was proprietor, and played the greatest parts in all the best plays produced at the time. Shakspeare was a member of the Lord Chamberlain's Company, playing at Blackfriars at this time, and had some part in the profit of the house, as also a little later in the Globe; but Burbage apparently had the lion's share. There is no authentic account of any intimacy with Shakspeare till after 1594. Burbage seems to have been the original Hamlet, Lear, and Othello. He excelled in tragedy, and was held in the very highest esteem by authors and public; he was even sometimes introduced into plays in his own proper person. Many poems and tributes were written in his memory. Besides his fame as an actor he was known as a painter. In 1613 the Globe Theatre burned down, and he narrowly escaped with his life.

Burgh (börg or bērg), Hubert de. Died at Bantstead, Surrey, England, May 12, 1243. An English statesman. He was appointed chamberlain to the king about 1201, in which year he was placed at the head of a body of knights to guard the Welsh march. On the authority of Ralph of Coggeshall, who has been followed by Shakspeare (King John, iv. 1, 2), he was castellan of Psaïse when Arthur of Brittany was captured at Mirabel in 1202, was intrusted with the custody of the prince's person, and refused to obey an order of Arthur's uncle, King John of England, to put out the prince's eyes. He was a partizan of the king at Runnymede in 1215, in which year he first appears as justiciar, and is mentioned in the great charter as one of the magnates of the realm by whose advice it was granted. He gained a decisive naval victory over Eustace the Monk in 1217, which forced Louis to conclude the treaty of Lambeth (Sept. 11, 1217) and evacuate England. He became regent for Henry III. in 1219, and remained his chief minister 1228-32.

Burghers (bēr'gēr). A body of Presbyterians in Scotland, constituting one of the divisions of the early Secession Church. This church became divided in 1747 into the Associate Synod, or Burghers, and the General Associate Synod, or Anti-Burghers, on the lawfulness of accepting the oath then required to be taken by the burghesses in Edinburgh, Glasgow, and Perth. See Anti-Burgher.

Burghley, or Burleigh, Lord. See Cecil.

Burgkmaier (börk'mir), Hans. Born at Augsburg, Germany, 1473; died about 1531. A German painter and engraver, probably a pupil of Albrecht Dürer. His most noted work is a triumphal procession of Maximilian I.

Burgoa (bör-gō'ä), Francisco de. Born in Oaxaca about 1605; died 1681. A Mexican Dominican missionary and author. He took the Dominican habit in 1620, was twice provincial, represented the order at Rome in 1656, acted for the Inquisition, and during his later years was guardian of Huastolitan and other convents. His "Geográfica descripción . . . de esta Provincia de Predicadores de Antiquera" is a chronicle of his order in Oaxaca, of great historical value. Like his other historical and biographical works, it is now very rare.

Burgos (bör-gōs). A province in Old Castile, Spain. Area, 5,650 square miles. Population (1887), 337,822.

Burgos, Iberian Briga. The capital of the province of Burgos, Spain, situated on the Arlanzon in lat. 42° 21' N., long. 3° 42' W. Its chief building is the cathedral; it also contains a ruined castle, town hall, and several churches, and is noted as the birthplace of the Cid. It was founded at the end of the 9th century, and was for a long time the capital of Castile, and the rival of Toledo. Marshal Soult gained a victory here over the Spaniards, Nov. 10, 1808, and it was unsuccessfully besieged by Wellington in 1812. It had formerly a university. The cathedral, in the main of middle-pointed architecture, is notable for its graceful twin western spires of openwork, 300 feet high, its rich octagonal central lantern, and the pinnacled crown of the Constable's Chapel, behind the apse. This richly sculptured chapel contains the tombs of the Constable of Castile, Don Pedro de Velasco, and his wife. There is a large cloister of pointed work, with much figure- and foliage-sculpture comparable with the best French. Population (1887), 31,301.

Burgos, Laws of. A system of laws for the regulation of Indian labor in America, promulgated at Burgos, Spain, Dec. 27, 1512. The Dominicans of Hispaniola had represented that the Indians were very badly treated; the colonists opposed the monks, and the junta appointed to consider the question framed these laws. They provided that the Indian laborers should have houses, ground for culture, and religious instruction, with a peso of gold annually to buy clothes; those in the mines to work only five consecutive months, and to have official inspectors. The laws caused much dissatisfaction.

Burgoyne (bēr-gein'), John. Born about 1722; died at London, June 4, 1792. An English lieutenant-general and dramatist. He commanded the British army which invaded New York 1777; was defeated at Stillwater, Sept. 19 and Oct. 7, 1777; and surrendered with 5,791 troops to Gates at Saratoga, Oct. 17, 1777. In 1782 he was made commander-in-chief in Ireland, and in 1787 was one of the managers of the impeachment of Warren Hastings. He wrote satires directed against the administration of Pitt (the greater part of the "Westminster Guide"), "The Lord of the Manor" (1780, the libretto of a comic opera), "The Heiress" (1786, a comedy which was very successful), etc.

Burgoyne, Sir John Fox. Born July 24, 1782; died at London, Oct. 7, 1871. An English engineer, the illegitimate son of General John Burgoyne (1722-92). He was commanding engineer of the expedition to New Orleans 1814; chairman of the Board of Public Works in Ireland 1831-45; and inspector-general of fortifications in England 1845-68. He was sent to Constantinople to report on the defense of Turkey 1854; conducted the siege of Sebastopol Oct., 1854, -Feb., 1855; was created a baronet 1856; was constable of the Tower of London 1865-71; and became a field-marshal 1868. Author of "Our Defensive Forces" (1868), etc.

Burgschmiet (börg'shmēt), Jakob Daniel. Born at Nuremberg, Bavaria, Oct. 11, 1796; died at Nuremberg, March 7, 1858. A noted German sculptor. His chief works are statues of Albrecht Dürer, Melancthon (at Nuremberg), Beethoven (at Bonn), Charles IV. (at Prague), Luther (at Mohra), etc.

Burg-Steinfurt. See Steinfurt.

Burgundian (bēr-gun'di-an). 1. One of the Burgundii or Burgundiones, a Germanic (Gothic) tribe which settled in Gaul and founded the kingdom of Burgundy in the 5th century.—2. A native or an inhabitant of Burgundy, successively a kingdom and a duchy of western Europe, varying greatly in extent, part of which finally became the province of Burgundy in eastern France. See Burgundy.

Burgundian Dynasty (1095-1383). A reigning house of Portugal which referred its origin to Henri, grandson of Robert, first duke of Burgundy. Henri was appointed count of Portugal by Alfonso VI., king of Leon, Castile, and Galicia, in 1094, and was in 1112 succeeded by his son, Alfonso I., who erected Portugal into an independent kingdom in 1139. The legitimate line of the house of Burgundy became extinct in 1383 with the death of Ferdinand I., and was succeeded in 1385 by an illegitimate branch, the house of Avis. An illegitimate branch of the latter house, the house of Braganza, acceded to the throne in 1650, and was followed in 1853 by the present reigning house, the house of Braganza-Coburg. The sovereigns of the house of Burgundy were: Henri of Burgundy, 1094-1112; Alfonso I., 1112-85; Sancho I., 1185-1211; Alfonso II., 1211-23; Sancho II., 1223-43; Alfonso III., 1248-79; Diniz, 1279-1325; Alfonso IV., 1325-57; Pedro, 1357-67; Ferdinand I., 1367-83.

Burgundy (bēr'gun-di). [F. Bourgogne, It. Borgogna, Sp. Borgoña, G. Burgund, ML. Burgundia, from LL. Burgundii, also Burgundiones, a Germanic tribe. See Burgundian.] A geographical division in western Europe, whose limits and character have varied greatly. For the principal significations of the name, see the extract.

I. The kingdom of Burgundy (regnum Burgundionum), founded A. D. 407, occupying the whole valley of the Saône and lower Rhone from Dijon to the Mediterranean, and including also the western half of Switzerland. It was destroyed by the sons of Clovis in A. D. 534.

II. The kingdom of Burgundy (regnum Burgundie), mentioned occasionally under the Merovingian kings as a separate principality, confined within boundaries apparently somewhat narrower than those of the older kingdom last named.

III. The kingdom of Provence or Burgundy (regnum Provincie seu Burgundie) — also, though less accurately, called the kingdom of Cis-Jurane Burgundy — was founded by Boson in A. D. 879, and included Provence, Dauphiné, the southern part of Savoy, and the country between the Saône and the Jura.

IV. The kingdom of Trans-Jurane Burgundy (regnum Iurense, Burgundia Transiurenensis), founded by Rudolf in A. D. 888, recognized in the same year by the emperor Arnulf, included the northern part of Savoy, and all Switzerland between the Reuss and the Jura.

V. The kingdom of Burgundy or Arles (regnum Burgundie, regnum Arelatense), formed by the union, under Conrad the Pacific, in A. D. 937, of the kingdoms described above as III. and IV. On the death, in 1022, of the last independent king, Rudolf III., it came, partly by bequest, partly by conquest, into the hands of the emperor Conrad II. (the Salic), and thenceforward formed a part of the empire. In the thirteenth century, France began to absorb it, bit by bit, and has now (since the annexation of Savoy in 1861) acquired all except the Swiss portion.

VI. The Lesser Duchy (Burgundia Minor) (Klein Burgund) corresponded very nearly with what is now Switzerland west of the Reuss, including the Valais. It was Trans-Jurane Burgundy (IV.) minus the parts of Savoy which had belonged to that kingdom. It disappears from history after the extinction of the house of Zähringen in the thirteenth century. Legally it was part of the empire till A. D. 1648, though practically independent long before that date.

VII. The Free County or Palatinate of Burgundy (Franche-Comté) (Freigräfschaft) (called also Upper Burgundy), to which the name of Cis-Jurane Burgundy originally and properly belonged, lay between the Saône and the Jura. It formed a part of III. and V., and was therefore a fief of the empire. The French dukes of Burgundy were invested with it in A. D. 1384. Its capital, the imperial city of Besançon, was given to Spain in 1651, and by the treaties of Nimwegen, 1678-79, it was ceded to the crown of France.

VIII. The landgraviate of Burgundy (Landgrafschaft) was in [what is now] western Switzerland, on both sides of the Aar, between Thun and Solothurn. It was a part of the Lesser Duchy (VI.), and, like it, is hardly mentioned after the thirteenth century.

IX. The circle of Burgundy (Kreis Burgund), an administrative division of the empire, was established by Charles V. in 1548, and included the Free County of Burgundy (VII.), and the seventeen provinces of the Netherlands, which Charles inherited from his grandmother Mary, daughter of Charles the Bold.

James Bryce, Holy Rom. Emp. Appendix, p. 447.

X. The Duchy of Burgundy (lower Burgundy), a great French fief held by various Carlovingian and Capetian princes, and ceded by John the Good to his son, Philip the Bold. Its capital was Dijon. Flanders and the County of Burgundy were united to it in 1364. It was ruled by Philip the Bold 1363-1404; by John the Fearless 1404-1419; by Philip the Good 1419-67; and by Charles the Bold 1467-77. Under the two latter it was greatly extended in Belgium and eastern and central France, and became one of the most powerful monarchies of Europe. On the death of Charles the Bold (1477) the duchy proper passed (1479) to France. The other possessions — Franche-Comté and Low Countries — passed by the marriage of Mary (daughter and successor of Charles the Bold) to the house of Hapsburg. (Compare Maximilian, Charles the Bold.) The Duchy of Burgundy proper became a province and great government of France. It lay between Champagne on the north, Franche-Comté and Savoy on the east, Dauphiné and Lyonnais on the south, and Bourbonnais, Nivernais, and Orleanais on the west, and corresponded to the departments Côte-d'Or, Saône-et-Loire, Ain, and a part of Yonne. The region is famous for its wines.

Burial of Sir John Moore. A poem by Charles Wolfe, published in a collection of his works in 1825.

Buriats (būr'i-ats). A Mongolian people living chiefly in the government of Irkutsk and the Trans-Baikal territory, Siberia. They are Buddhists. They number about 208,000.

Buridan (bur'i-dan; F. pron. bü-ré-don'), Jean. Died after 1358. A French nominalistic philosopher. He was a native of Béthune, Artois. He studied under William of Occam, and lectured on philosophy in the University of Paris, of which he became rector. He was a noted logician, and is popularly but incorrectly regarded as the author of the sophism known as "Buridan's Ass," which was used by the schoolmen to demonstrate the inability of the will to act between two equally powerful motives. According to this sophism an ass placed between two equidistant and equally attractive bundles of hay would starve to death for want of a reason to determine its choice between the two bundles.

Burke (bēr'k), Ædanus. Born at Galway, Ireland, June 16, 1743; died at Charleston, S. C., March 30, 1802. An American jurist and politician. He became a judge of the State Supreme Court in 1778, was Democratic member of Congress from South Carolina 1789-91, and wrote "Considerations upon the Order of Cincinnati" (1783), a pamphlet denouncing that order.

Burke, Charles. Born at Philadelphia, Pa., March 27, 1822; died at New York, Nov. 10, 1854. A comedian. He was the son of Thomas Burke, an Irish actor, and Cornelia Thomas, who afterward married Joseph Jefferson.

Burke, Edmund. Born at Dublin, probably Jan. 12, 1729 (N. S.); died at Beaconsfield, England, July 9, 1797. A celebrated British statesman, orator, and writer. He was graduated at Trinity College, Dublin, in 1748; became a member of Parliament in 1766; delivered his speech on American taxation in 1774; was paymaster-general and privy councillor 1782-83; and conducted the impeachment of Warren Hastings 1787-95, when he resigned his seat in Parliament. His chief works are "A Vindication of Natural Society" (1756), "A Philosophical Enquiry into the Origin of our Ideas of the Sublime and the Beautiful" (1756), "Thoughts on the Causes of the Present Discontents" (1770), "Speech on Conciliation with America" (1775), "Reflections on the Revolution in France" (1790), and four letters on the subject of "a regicidal peace" with France, which appeared in 1796 and 1797. The publication of a collection of his works was begun, with his approval, in 1792, and was concluded in 1827.

Burke, Sir John Bernard. Born at London, 1815; died at Dublin, Dec. 13, 1892. An English genealogist, Ulster king at arms. He was editor of "Burke's Peerage" (established by his father, John Burke, 1811), and author of "History of the Landed Gentry" (1843), etc.

Burke, John Daly. Died near Campbell's Bridge, Va., April 11, 1808. An Irish-American historian. He emigrated from Ireland to America in 1797, and eventually settled in Petersburg, Virginia, where he devoted himself to the practice of law and to literature. He was killed by Felix Coquebert in a duel arising from a political dispute. Author of "History of Virginia from its First Settlement to 1804" (1804).

Burke, Robert O'Hara. Born at St. Clearys, Galway, Ireland, 1820; died in Australia, June 28, 1861. An Australian explorer. He was successively a captain in the Austrian army, member of the Irish constabulary, and inspector of police in Victoria, Australia, whither he emigrated in 1853. He traversed with Wills the Australian continent 1840-61, and died of starvation on the return journey.

Burleigh, William Henry. Born at Woodstock, Conn., Feb. 2, 1812; died at Brooklyn, N. Y., March 18, 1871. An American poet, journalist, and abolitionist.

Burley (bêr'li), John Balfour of. See Balfour.
Burley, Walter. Born in 1274 or 1275; died probably in 1345. An English schoolman, surnamed "The Plain Doctor." He studied first at Oxford, then at Paris, where he became a pupil of Duns Scotus. He was appointed almoner to the Princess Philippa of Hainault about 1327, and subsequently became tutor to the Black Prince. He wrote numerous philosophical treatises and commentaries on the classics, most of which have remained in manuscript. His printed works include "De vita et moribus philosophorum" (probably published at Cologne in 1467), and "Tractatus de materia et forma" (Oxford, 1540).

Burlingame (bêr'ling-gâm), Anson. Born at New Berlin, N. Y., Nov. 14, 1820; died at St. Petersburg, Feb. 23, 1870. An American diplomatist and politician. He was representative to Congress from Massachusetts 1855-61; ambassador to China 1861-67; and negotiated, as special ambassador from China, treaties with the United States, England, Denmark, Sweden, Holland, and Prussia.

Burlington (bêr'ling-ton). See Brillington.

Burlington. A city (capital of Des Moines County, Iowa) situated on the Mississippi River, in lat. 40° 48' N., long. 91° 10' W. It is an important railway center, and has large and varied manufactures. Population (1890), 22,565.

Burlington. A city and port of entry in Vermont, situated on Lake Champlain in lat. 44° 29' N., long. 73° 14' W. It has a large trade in lumber, and is the seat of the University of Vermont. Population (1890), 14,590.

Burlington. A city and port of entry in Burlington County, New Jersey, situated on the Delaware River 19 miles northeast of Philadelphia. It was bombarded by the British in 1776. Population (1890), 7,264.

Burlington Arcade. A covered pathway between Piccadilly and Burlington Gardens. It has shops on each side for all kinds of small wares.

Burlington House, Old. A house standing between Bond street and Sackville street, London. It was built by Richard Boyle, Lord Burlington, 1695-1753. It was purchased for the nation, 1854, from the Cavendishes for £140,000, including the Gardens, upon which three new edifices have been erected, effacing all the artistic features of the old house. Nearest to Piccadilly, and on the site of the famous gateway and curved colonnade, pulled down in 1808, rises New Burlington House (1872), containing rooms for the meetings and management of learned societies—the Royal, Geological, and Chemical east of the entrance; the Antiquarian, Astronomical, and Linnean on the west of it. Old Burlington House itself was in 1868 handed over to the Royal Academy. Murray, Handbook of London, p. 58.

Burma, or Burmah (bêr'mîj). A former kingdom in southeastern Asia, now a part of the British empire and a chief commissionership. It is divided into Lower Burma (the former British Burma) and Upper Burma (the recently annexed kingdom). It is bounded by Assam and China on the north, China, the Shan States, and Siam on the east, the Bay of Bengal on the west, and India on the northwest. It is hilly and mountainous, and is rich in minerals. Its exports are rice, teak, etc. The subdivisions of Lower Burma are Arakan, Pegu, and Tenasserim. Buddhism is the prevailing religion, the kingdom having been a Buddhist monarchy from the middle ages. Lower Burma was conquered by the British 1824-26 and in 1852, and Upper Burma was annexed in 1886, in consequence of the misgovernment of the last king, Thebaw (deposed 1885). Total area, 171,430 square miles; of Upper Burma, 83,473 square miles; of Lower Burma, 87,957 square miles. Total population (1891), 7,605,569; of Upper Burma, 2,946,933; of Lower Burma, 4,658,637.

Burma, British. See Burma.

Burma, Lower. That part of Burma formerly called British Burma.

Burma, Upper. That part of Burma which was independent down to 1886.

Burmeister (bôr'mis-têr), Hermann. Born at Stralsund, Prussia, Jan. 15, 1807; died at Buenos Ayres, May 1, 1892. A Prussian naturalist. He was professor at Berlin and subsequently at Halle, and represented the latter university in the National Assembly in 1848; subsequently he was a member of the first Prussian chamber. From 1850 to 1852 he traveled in Brazil, and in 1861 went to Buenos Ayres, where he was director of the National Museum until his death. He published several well-known handbooks of zoology and entomology, besides the "Uebersicht der Thiere Brasiliens" (2 vols. 1854-56), and numerous scientific papers, especially on the Tertiary and Quaternary mammals of Argentina.

Burmese Wars. The wars (1) of 1824-26, (2) of 1852, which the British waged with Burma, and which resulted in the cession of Lower Burma. See Burma.

Burne-Jones (bêrn'jônz'). Sir Edward. Born at Birmingham, England, Aug. 28, 1833. An English painter. He was a student at Exeter College, Oxford, with William Morris and Swinburne, the latter of whom dedicated to him his first volume of poems. He went to London in 1856, and became a pupil of Dante Gabriel Rossetti, whose manner he imitated for several years; but he soon formed a style of his own, inclining more to idealism and abstract beauty than to realism, and is now one of the chief exponents in England of the romantic school. From 1857 to 1858 he was associated with Rossetti, Morris, and others in painting the Arthurian legends at Oxford. In 1861 he was one of the originators of the house of Morris and Company, and he made many designs for decorative work. He was an associate of the Royal Academy 1885-93. In 1894 he was made a baronet.

Burnes (bêrnz), Sir Alexander. Born at Montrose, Scotland, May 16, 1805; killed at Kabul, Afghanistan, Nov. 2, 1841. A British geographer, and traveler in central Asia.

He spent a year in Mexico, 1827-28, and on his return was associated with Wilhelm von Humboldt in philological work. After 1832 he was employed in the Berlin Royal Library, eventually becoming librarian. After the death of Wilhelm von Humboldt, Buschmann was engaged by Alexander von Humboldt, assisting him in the preparation of "Kosmos" and other works. His principal independent writings are "Ueber die aztekischen Ortsnamen" (1853), "Die Spuren der aztekischen Sprache im nördlichen Mexiko" (1855, 2 vols.), several works on the Apache and Athapascan languages, and "Grammatik der somerischen Sprachen" (1864-69). He edited Wilhelm von Humboldt's "Ueber die Kawisprache," the third volume being his own work.

Bushire (bö-shêr'), or Abushehr (ä-bö-shêr'), or Bushahr (bö-shîr'). A seaport in Farsistan, southern Persia, situated on the Persian Gulf in lat. 28° 59' N., long. 50° 50' E. It is an important commercial center, and a station of the British-Indian Steam Navigation Company. It was taken by the British in Dec., 1856. Population, about 15,000.

Bushiri bin Salim (bö-shê'rê bin sä-lêm'). A mulatto Arab of East Africa, head of the Arab war against the Germans 1888-89. Bushiri was born about 1834, and owned a plantation at Pangani when the Germans annexed that region. In May, 1883, he was beaten by Captain Wissmann; in June he captured Mpwapwa and induced the Madi tribe to attack the Germans; in Oct. he again lost a battle with the Germans, and fled to the Nguru mountains. There he was captured by the natives, and in December hanged by the Germans at Pangani.

Bushman Land (büsh'man land), Great. A region in the northwestern part of Cape Colony, South Africa, in lat. 29°-30° S., long. 19°-21° E. It is inhabited chiefly by Bushmen.

Bushmen (büsh'men). [Tr. From S. African D. Bosjesman.] An African race. See Hottentot, Khoikhoïn, and Pygmies. The Bushmen are also called San, and Th. Hahn proposes this name for all the Bushmen, as Khoikhoïn is applied to the Hottentots. The San language is evidently a sister branch of the Khoikhoïn, but poorer and less regular in grammatical forms, while richer in clicks. The dialects diverge considerably. The Bushmen are known by different names, according to the Bantu tribes on whose skirts they live. Thus the Amo-Xosa call them Aba-tua, the Ba-suti, Ba-rua, Ba-tua, Ba-kua, Ba-tekua, is the name most generally given to the Pygmies and Bushmen from Galla-land to the Cape, and would, it seems, be the best name for the whole race. Owing to the fact that the Pygmies and Bushmen also speak the dialects of their Bantu neighbors, most of the Pygmy vocabularies given by travelers are Bantu. The principal Bushmen tribes are the Ba-Bumama in Basutoland; the Ba-Lala in Bechuanaland; the Ma-Domasana, serfs of the Ba-Mangwato, of Chuanu stock; the Ma-Sarwa in the Kalahari desert; the Ba-Kankala in the Knene valley; and the Ba-Kasake northeast of them. It is not yet settled whether the Ba-Kuise, Ba-Kuande, and Ba-Koroka near Mossamedes, southern Angola, are Bushmen or degenerated Bantu negroes.

Busnell (büsh'nel), Horace. Born at Litchfield, Conn., April 14, 1802; died at Hartford, Conn., Feb. 17, 1876. A distinguished Congregational clergyman and theologian. He preached at Hartford 1833-59. His works include "God in Christ" (1819), "Christ in Theology" (1851), "Nature and the Supernatural" (1858), "Vicarious Sacrifice" (1866), etc.

Bussy d'Ambois (bü-sê' don-bwä'). A tragedy by Chapman, published in 1607. The allusions in it to the knights of James I., and to Elizabeth as an "old queen," forbid a date earlier than 1603; and the statement in i. 2, "T is Leap Year," which must apply to the date of production, fixes the first representation at 1604 (Pleas). D'Urfe produced a play, adapted from Chapman's, with this title in 1691.

Bussy d'Ambois, The Revenge of. A sequel to "Bussy d'Ambois," by Chapman, published in 1613.

Bustamante (bö-s-tä-män'te), Anastasio. Born at Tiquilpan, Michoacan, July 27, 1780; died at San Miguel Allende, in Guanajuato, Feb. 6, 1853. A Mexican politician and soldier. He entered the Spanish army in 1808, and served against the early revolutionists. Joining Iturbide in 1821, he commanded a division in the march on Mexico, and was a member of the provisional junta. The fall of Iturbide (1823) forced him into retirement, but in 1828 he was elected vice-president under Guerrero, commanding the army. Soon after he revolted against Guerrero, heading the Centralist party, and its success made him acting president of Mexico. Santa Anna declared against him (1832), and after a bloody war Bustamante was deposed (Dec.) and banished. After Santa Anna was captured by the Texans, Bustamante was called back and elected president of Mexico (1837). There was a brief war with France in 1838, and new disorders which broke out in 1839 forced Bustamante to give up the presidency to Santa Anna (1841). He served in the army until 1843.

Bustamante, Carlos Maria. Born in Oajaca, Nov. 4, 1774; died at Mexico, Sept. 21, 1848. A Mexican statesman and historian. He commanded a regiment under Morelos (1812), was captured and imprisoned at Vera Cruz, but was released by Santa Anna and marched with him to the capital (1821). Thereafter he took an active part in political life. His historical works are of great importance for the revolutionary and modern period; the best-known is "Cuadro histórico de la revolucion de la América mejicana."

Bustamante y Guerra (bö-s-tä-män'te è-gär' rä), José. Born about 1750; died about 1822. A Spanish naval officer and administrator, from March, 1811, to March, 1818, captain-general of Guatemala.

A collective edition of his poems, the most notable of which are "Colin to Phebe," "Three Black Crows," and "Figg and Sutton," appeared at Manchester in 1773.

Byron. See Biron.

Byron (bi'ron), George Noel Gordon Byron, Lord. Born at London, Jan. 22, 1788: died at Missolonghi, Greece, April 19, 1824. A celebrated English poet. He was the son of John Byron, captain in the Guards, by his second wife Catherine Gordon. His family traced its origin back to the Norman conquest. He was born with a malformation of both feet. His mother, who had been deserted by her husband, resided with her son at Aberdeen, Scotland, 1791-98. On the death of his granduncle William, fifth Lord Byron, in the latter year, he inherited his titles and estate, including Newstead Abbey. He subsequently studied at Harrow and at Cambridge, where he took the degree of M. A. in 1808. In 1807 he published "Hours of Idleness," which elicited adverse criticism from a writer in the "Edinburgh Review," probably Lord Brougham. Byron responded with the satire "English Bards and Scotch Reviewers" (1809), which attracted considerable attention. In 1809-11 he traveled in Portugal, Spain, Turkey, and Greece, and in 1812 published the first two cantos of "Childe Harold," the others appearing in 1816 and 1818. In 1815 he married Miss Anne Isabella Milbanke, by whom he became, in 1816, the father of Augusta Ada (afterward Countess of Lovelace), and who left him for some unexplained reason in 1816. He abandoned England in 1816, and in this year met at Geneva Miss Clairmont, who bore him, in 1817, an illegitimate child, Allegra, who was placed by him in a Roman Catholic convent at Bagna-Cavallo, near Ravenna, where she died in 1822. In 1819 he met, at Venice, Teresa, Contessa Guiccioli, with whom he maintained a liaison during the remainder of his residence in Italy. He subsequently lived at Ravenna, Pisa, and Genoa, taking an active interest in the revolutionary movement of the Carbonari. In 1823 he joined the Greek insurgents at Cephalonia, and in the following year became the commander-in-chief at Missolonghi, where he died of a fever. Besides the titles already mentioned, his works include "The Giaour" (1813), "The Bride of Abydos" (1813), "The Corsair" (1814), "Lara" (1814), "Hebrew Melodies" (1815), "Poems by Lord Byron" (1816), "Prisoner of Chillon, and other Poems" (1816), "Manfred" (1817), "Mazeppa" (1819), "Marino Faliero" (1820), "The Two Foscari" and "Cain" (one volume, 1821), "The Deformed Transformed" (1824), "Don Juan" (1819-24), etc. "Life and Works" published by Murray (1832-35). See Moore's "Life of Byron" (1830), Galt, "Life of Byron" (2d ed. 1830), Trelawney, "Recollections of the Last Days of Shelley and Byron" (1858), and Guiccioli, Comtesse de, "Lord Byron jugé par les témoins de sa vie" (1868).

Byron, Harriet. An affected orphan, attached to Sir Charles Grandison, and the principal writer of the letters, in Richardson's novel of that name.

Byron, John. Born Nov. 8, 1723: died April 10, 1786. A British naval officer, second son of William, fourth Lord Byron. He entered the navy when a boy, and in 1740 was mid-shipman of the Wager, in Anson's squadron, which was wrecked near Cape Horn. From 1764 to 1766 he commanded two vessels in a voyage of exploration around the world; but beyond the curious observations on the Indians of Patagonia and the discovery of some small islands in the Pacific he accomplished little. He was governor of Newfoundland 1769-72; became vice-admiral in 1775; and on July 6, 1779, had an engagement with the French fleet of D'Estaing off Grenada, West Indies, but was defeated.

Byron's Conspiracy, and Byron's Tragedy. Two plays by Chapman, produced in 1695, printed in 1608; they may be regarded as one. They were reprinted during the author's lifetime, with revisions, in 1625. Charles, duke of Biron (who was executed in 1602), is represented in these plays as a self-confident braggart of "boundless vainglory."

In 1528 he was comptroller and royal treasurer with the expedition of Pamphilo de Narvaez to Florida. He and three others were the only ones who escaped from shipwreck and the savages; after living for years among the Indians, they reached the Spanish settlements in northern Mexico in April, 1536. Cabeza de Vaca returned to Spain in 1537, and in 1540 he was appointed governor of Paraguay. He sailed with 400 men, landed on the coast of southern Brazil, and marched overland to Asuncion, the journey occupying nearly a year. In 1543 he explored the upper Paraguay. On April 25, 1544, he was deposed and imprisoned by the colonists for alleged arbitrary acts. Sent to Spain the next year, he was tried by the Council of the Indies and sentenced to be banished to Oran, Africa; but he was subsequently recalled by the king, received a pension, and was made judge of the Supreme Court of Seville. While his case was pending before the Council of the Indies he published two works: one, "Naufragios, peregrinaciones y milagros," describing his Florida adventures, and the other, "Comentarios," relating to his own justification; but, making allowances for this, they are of great historical value. There are modern editions in several languages.

Cabinda, or Kabinda (kã-bën'dã). A town and harbor of Portuguese West Africa, situated a few miles north of the Kongo estuary, in lat. 5° 30' S., long. 12° 10' E. It is the capital of the Kongo district of the province of Angola, and is a favorite rendezvous of American whalers. It has developed rapidly since 1885, and especially since the introduction of a high tariff in the Kongo State. In the native language the country and people are called Nyoi. They have no head chief, but numerous petty chiefs, called kings. See Kongo and Angola.

Cabiri, or Kabeiri (ka-bi'ri). [Gr. Κάβειροι, the mighty ones.] 1. The seven planets worshipped by the Phœnicians. Their father was called Syduk ('justice').—2. In Greek mythology, certain beneficent deities of whose characteristics little is known, worshipped in parts of Greece and in the islands of Imbros, Lemnos, and Samothrace. They are possibly connected with the Cabiri of Phœnicia. To both were ascribed the invention of arts, especially of ship-building, navigation, and the working of iron. Their rites were secret. The mysteries of the Cabiri of Samothrace were regarded as inferior only to the Eleusinian in sanctity. The initiated were supposed to receive special protection against mishaps, especially by sea.

Cable (kã'bl), George Washington. Born at New Orleans, Oct. 12, 1844. An American novelist, noted especially for descriptions of Creole life in Louisiana. He has written "Old Creole Days" (1879), "The Grandissims" (1880), "Madame Delphine," "Dr. Sevier" (1884), etc.

Caboche (kã-bõsh'), Simonet. The leader of a band of ruffians in the service of the Duke of Burgundy during the civil war between the Armagnacs and the Burgundians.

Cabot (kab'ot), George. Born at Salem, Mass., Dec. 3, 1751; died at Boston, Mass., April 18, 1823. An American politician. He was United States senator from Massachusetts 1791-96, and president of the Hartford Convention in 1814.

Cabot, John, It. Giovanni Caboto, Sp. Gaboto. An Italian navigator in the English service. He was probably a native of Genoa or its neighborhood, and in 1476 became a citizen of Venice after a residence of fifteen years. He subsequently removed to Bristol, England. Believing that a northwest passage would shorten the route to India, he determined to undertake an expedition in search of such a passage, and in 1496 obtained from Henry VII. a patent for the discovery, at his own expense, of unknown lands in the eastern, western, or northern seas. He set sail from Bristol in May, 1497, in company with his sons, and returned in July of the same year. The expedition resulted in the discovery of Cape Breton Island and Nova Scotia. In the spring of 1499 he made a second voyage (north to Labrador (?), south to 30°), on which he died (?).

Cabot, Sebastian. Born at Bristol, England, 1474; died at London in 1557. A celebrated explorer, second son of John Cabot. He probably accompanied his father in the voyage of 1497, when the shore of North America was discovered (his name appears with his father's in the petition to Henry VII.); and it is probable that he was with him also in the voyage of 1499. In 1517, it is said (probably erroneously), he went in search of a northwest passage, visiting Hudson Strait and penetrating as far north as lat. 67° 30'; and later was on the northeast coast of South America and in the West Indies with an English ship. Invited by Charles V. to Spain, he was made grand pilot of Castile (1519), and commanded four ships which left San Lucar April 3, 1523. The intention was to sail to the Moluccas by the Strait of Magellan, but, lacking provisions, he landed on the coast of Brazil, where he had some encounters with the Portuguese; thence sailed southward, discovered the river Uruguay, and erected a fort there; discovered and ascended the Paraná; and explored the lower Paraguay to the present site of Asuncion. Convinced of the importance of this region, and joined by Diego Garcia, he relinquished the voyage to the Moluccas and despatched a ship to Spain for reinforcements; meanwhile he established himself at the fort of Espirito Santo on the Paraná (lat. 32° 50' S.). Not receiving aid from Spain, he returned in 1530, leaving a garrison at Espirito Santo. Cabot remained in the service of Spain until the end of 1546, when he returned to England. Edward VI. gave him a pension, and he was interested in various explorations in the Baltic; in 1555 he was made life governor of the Company of Merchant Adventurers destined to trade with Russia. A map of the world published in 1544 is ascribed to Cabot.

Cabourg (kã-bõr'). A watering-place in the department of Calvados, France, situated on the English Channel 14 miles northeast of Caen.

Cabral (kã-brãl'), Pedro Alvares; early writers abbreviate the name to Pedralvarez or Pedralvez. Born about 1460; died about 1526.

A Portuguese navigator. After Vasco da Gama returned from India (1499), Cabral was put in command of a fleet destined to follow up Gama's discoveries. Leaving Lisbon March 9, 1500, he followed his instructions and kept far out in the Atlantic; by this means he discovered the coast of Brazil near lat. 16° 20' S. (April 22, 1500). This was two months after Vicente Yanez Pinzon had discovered the northeast coast. Cabral took possession for Portugal of the new land, which he called Santa Cruz. Sending back a ship with the tidings, he continued his voyage May 2. On May 6 he lost four ships in a storm; with the rest he reached Mozambique and finally Calicut, where he erected a fort; this was destroyed by Samorin, and Cabral then made an alliance with the sovereign of Cochim. Loading his vessels with spices, he returned, losing one ship by the way, and arrived at Lisbon July 23, 1501. Nothing is known of his subsequent life.

Cabrera (kã-brã'rã). One of the Balearic Islands, situated in the Mediterranean Sea 9 miles south of Majorca. It is a penal settlement.

Cabrera, Don Ramon, Count of Morella. Born at Tortosa, Catalonia, Spain, Aug. 31, 1810; died at Wentworth, near Haines, England, May 24, 1877. A Spanish guerrilla chief. He was intended for the church, and had received the minor orders, when in 1533 the civil war broke out between the Cristinos and the Carlists, the latter of whom he joined. He took Valencia in 1837; surprised Morella in 1839; was created count of Morella by Don Carlos in 1839; was driven across the French frontier in 1849; instigated an unsuccessful Carlist rebellion in 1848-49; and recognized Alfonso as king of Spain in 1875.

Cabrera Bobadilla Cerda y Mendoza (kä-brä'ä-rü bö-bä-rhél'yä ther'dä é men-dó'thá), Luis Geronymo de, fourth Count of Chinchon. Born in Madrid about 1590; died near that city, Oct. 23, 1647. A Spanish administrator. From Jan., 1629, to Dec. 18, 1639, he was viceroy of Peru.

Cabul. See Kabul.

Cacafogo (kak-ä-fó'gö). In Fletcher's play "Rule a Wife and Have a Wife," a cowardly, bullying, and rich usurer. He has been said to be a direct copy of Falstaff, but his lack of courage is the only resemblance.

Cacama (kä-kä-mä), or Cacamatzin (kä-kä-mät-sën'), or Caminatzin (kä-mé-nät-sën'), or Cacumazin (kä-kö-mä-thén'). An Aztec Indian, nephew of Montezuma II. He became chief of Tezcuco in 1516. Montezuma sent him to Cortés (1519), inviting the latter to Mexico. After Montezuma's seizure by Cortés (1519), Cacama planned an armed resistance, but was arrested by emissaries of the monarch and brought captive to the Spaniards. He was killed on the noche triste, July 1, 1520.

Cacana. See Calchaquis.

Caccamo (käk-kä'mó). A town situated on the northern coast of Sicily 23 miles southeast of Palermo. Population, 8,000.

Caccini (kä-ché'né), Giulio. Born at Rome, 1558 (?); died at Florence, 1640. An Italian singer and composer, known as Giulio Romani. He wrote, with Rinuccini and Peri, the musical dramas "Dafne" (1594) and "Euridice" (1600). These first attempts to make music dramatic led directly to the modern opera. He composed a number of other works, among which is "Le Nuove Musiche," a collection of madrigals, etc. See Alterati and Daphne.

Cáceres (kä'thá-res). A province in Estremadura, western Spain. Area, 8,013 square miles. Population (1887), 339,793.

Cáceres. The capital of the province of Cáceres, Spain, situated in lat. 39° 27' N., long. 6° 24' W.; the ancient Castra Cæcilia (whence the modern name). It contains Roman and Moorish antiquities, and was the scene of a victory of the Allies (1706). Population (1887), 14,880.

Cáceres, Andrés Avelino. Born at Ayacucho, Nov. 11, 1838. A Peruvian general and statesman. He was colonel and afterward general in the Chilean war (1879-83), and after the taking of Lima was second vice-president in the provisional Calderon government. Dr. Calderon being seized by the Chileans and the first vice-president driven into Bolivia, General Cáceres became the constitutional chief of Peru. He held out against the Chileans, and refused to acknowledge Iglesias whom they had made president. Attempting to take Lima (Aug., 1884), Cáceres was repulsed after a bloody street fight. Raising a larger force, he entered the city, Dec. 1, 1885, and persuaded Iglesias to refer the presidential question to a general election. This resulted in favor of Cáceres, who was inaugurated president of Peru June 3, 1886. Succeeded by Berruetez, Aug. 10, 1890. General Cáceres soon after went to Europe as Peruvian minister to France and England. Re-elected president 1894.

Cacha (kä'chá). An ancient Peruvian temple situated in the Vileca-Maya valley south of Cuzco. It is believed to antedate the Inca empire, and is connected with some curious legends; though now in ruins, it shows traces of having been built in two stories.

Cachar (kä-chär'). A district in Assam, British India. Area, 3,750 square miles. Population (1881), 313,858.

Cacheo (kä-shä'ö). A Portuguese settlement in Senegambia, West Africa, situated near the coast in lat. 12° 20' N., long. 16° 30' W.

Cachibos, or Cashibos (kä-shé'hös). An Indian tribe or horde of eastern Peru, on the upper Ucayale River. They are very savage, constant enemies of the whites and of neighboring tribes, and cannibals: it is said that they eat their own relatives after death, and that they make war to procure human food. Probably the accounts of their ferocity are exaggerated, the tribe being very imperfectly known. They are not numerous.

Cachoeira (kä-shö-ä-rü). A town in the state of Bahia, Brazil, situated on the river Paragnassú 50 miles northwest of Bahia. Population about 4,000.

Cacos (kä'kös). [Sp., 'pickpockets.'] The nickname given to a political party of Guatemala which originated in 1820. Its members favored complete separation from Spain, and a republican form of government with essential equality to all. This was the germ of the Servile party of later years. Their opponents, called Bacos or Gazidas, were opposed to equality. Cacos is also the name of a political party in Haiti.

Cacus (kä'kus). In Roman mythology, a giant and son of Vulcan, living near the spot on which Rome was built. He stole from Hercules some of the cattle of Geryon, dragging them into his cave under the Aventine backward, so that their footsteps would not show the direction in which they had gone; but Hercules found them by their howling, and slew the thief.

Cadalso (kä-däl'sö), or Cadahalso (kä-dä-äl'sö), José de. Born at Cadiz, Spain, Oct. 8, 1741; died at Gibraltar, Spain, Feb. 27, 1782. A Spanish poet, killed at the siege of Gibraltar. His works include a tragedy, "Sancho Garcia" (1771), a satire, "Los eruditos á la violeta" (1772), "Poesias" (1773), "Las cartas marruecas" (1794), etc.

Cada Mosto, or Ca Da Mosto (kä dä mos'tó), Alois or Luigi da. Born at Venice about 1432; died at Venice about 1480. An Italian navigator. He explored, in the service of Prince Henry of Portugal, the coast of Africa as far as the Gambia from 1455 to 1466, in which latter year he discovered the Cape Verd islands. Author of "El libro de la prima navegacione per oceano a let erre de Nigri de la Bassa Ethiopia" (1507).

Caddee (käd-dä'). A name given to a league ("Gotteshaus-Bund") formed in the Grisons, Switzerland, in 1396, to oppose internal misgovernment.

Caddo (kä'dö). [From the Caddo Káede, chief.] A confederacy of the Caddoan stock of North American Indians. It consisted of many tribes, of which the following have been identified: Kado hadacho, Nadaaku, Aienai, Nabaidatu, Nashidosh, Yafasi, Yowani, Nakohodotse, Aish, and Hadai. Its former habitat was northwestern Louisiana and eastern Texas; now, the Onapaw reservation, Indian Territory. See Caddoan.

Caddoan (kä'dö-an). A linguistic stock of North American Indians, named after its leading division, Caddo. Its former habitat was in parts of North Dakota, Nebraska, Kansas, Arkansas, and Indian Territory, the northern group of the stock having been entirely surrounded by Siouan tribes, and the middle group by the Siouan and Shoshonean. Its divisions, beginning at the north, are as follows: Arikara (a tribe), Pawnee (the middle group, a confederacy), Kitai (a tribe), Wichita (a confederacy), and Caddo (a confederacy). Its tribes, especially the Pawnee, have been foes to the Dakota or Sioux for many generations; consequently their men have served as scouts in the United States army during wars against the Dakota. All of this stock, except the Arikara, are now in the Indian Territory and Oklahoma. They number about 2,250.

Caddoques. See Kado hadacho.

Cade (käd), John, called Jack Cade. Born in Ireland; killed near Heathfield, in Sussex, England, July 12, 1450. The leader in "Cade's Rebellion," a rising chiefly of Kentishmen, in May and June, 1450. The rebels defeated the royal forces at Seven Oaks, June 27, and entered London July 2. On July 3 they put Lord Say to death. In a few days the rebellion was suppressed. Cade is said to have been called Mortimer by his followers, and to have been regarded by them as a cousin of the Duke of York. He is introduced by Shakespeare in the second part of "Henry VI." as a reckless, ferocious, and vulgarly important rebel.

Cadell (ka-del'), Robert. Born at Cokenzie, East Lothian, Dec. 16, 1788; died at Edinburgh, Jan. 20, 1849. A Scottish publisher and bookseller. He was a partner of Constable from 1811 until the failure of the firm, and a business associate and friend of Sir Walter Scott. He became the publisher of Scott's works in 1826.

Cadenabbia (kä-de-näh'bé-ä). A small town in northern Italy, situated on the western bank of Lake Como 15 miles northeast of Como. It is a favorite resort.

Cadennus (ka-dé'nus). The name by which Dean Swift calls himself in his poem "Cadennus and Vanessa" (1726). The name is an anagram of decanus (dean).

Cader Idris (kad'er id'ris). A mountain in northwestern Wales, near Dolgelly, noted for its extensive view. Height, 2,925 feet.

Caderousse (käd-rös'). A noted character in Dumas's novel "Le Comte de Monte Cristo."

Cadesia (ka-dé'zhii'). A place situated near Cufa, in Irak-Arabi, Asiatic Turkey. Here, in 633 A. D., the Saracens under Sa'd ibn Abi Wakkis defeated the Persians (120,000) under Rustem.

Cadijah. See Kadijah.

Cadillac (kä-dé-yäk'). Antoine de la Mothe. Died about 1720. A French commander and pioneer in New France. He was commander of Michilimackinac 1694-97, founded Detroit in 1701, and was governor of Louisiana 1711-17.

Cadiuëos (kä-dé-wä'yöz), or Cadiguës, or Cadihéos. A branch of the Guayeurus Indians (which see). At the present time Brazilians commonly use this name for the whole tribe.

Cadiz (kä'diz; Sp. pron. kä'tsiéth). [Pg. Cádiz.] A province in Andalusia, Spain. Area, 2,809 square miles. Population (1887), 423,381.

Cadiz, former Eng. Cales. A seaport, the capital of the province of Cadiz, Spain, situated on a narrow neck of land, on the Atlantic, in lat. 36° 31' N., long. 6° 17' W.; the Greek Gadeira and the Roman Gades. It is an important commercial city, and is noted for its export of sherry. It has two cathedrals, a Capuchin convent, a hospital, etc. (For early history, see Gades.) It was destroyed by the Goths, was taken from the Moors in 1262, and was sacked by the English under the Earl of Essex in 1596. It was unsuccessfully attacked by the English in 1625 and 1702, was invested by the French 1810-12, and was held by the French 1823-25. The revolution of 1808 commenced here in September. Population (1887), 62,431.

Gades, or Cadiz, which has kept its name and its unbroken position as a great city from an earlier time than any other city in Europe.

E. A. Freeman, Hist. Geog., I. 35.

Cadmeia (kad-mé'yä). [Gr. Kadmeia.] The citadel or acropolis of Thebes in Boeotia, named from its mythical founder, the hero Cadmus. Two Frankish towers of some importance now stand on the summit of the low hill. The only remains of the ancient fortifications consist of a stretch of ruinous Cyclopean wall on the north side, and fragments of more recent walls on the southeastern slope.

Cadmeians (kad-mé'yanz). See the extract.

The Cadmeians were the Græco-Phœnician race (their name merely signifying "the Easterns") who in the ante-Trojan times occupied the country which was afterwards called Boeotia. Hence the Greek tragedians, in plays of which ancient Thebes is the scene, invariably speak of the Thebans as Kadmeioi. Burtonson, Herod., I. L. 56, note.

Cadmus (kad'mus). [Gr. Kadmos.] In Greek legend, a son of Agenor, king of Phœnicia, and Telephassa. He was the reputed founder of Thebes in Boeotia, and the introducer of the letters of the Greek alphabet.

These "Phœnician letters" were also called the "Cadmean letters," having been introduced, according to a Greek legend, which is repeatedly quoted by Herodotus, by Cadmus the Tyrian when he sailed for Greece in search of Europa. It is plain that Cadmus and Europa are merely eponymic names, Cadmus meaning in Semitic speech "the man of the East," while Europa is the damsel who personifies "the West." Taylor, The Alphabet, II. 14.

Cadodaquiuus. See Kado hadacho.

Cadorna (kä-dor'nä), Raffaele. Born at Milan, 1815. An Italian general. He commanded the troops of Victor Emmanuel in the occupation of the States of the Church in 1870. He occupied Civita Vecchia Sept. 16, and Rome Sept. 20, 1870. In 1877 he retired.

Cadoudal (kä-dö-däl'), Georges. Born near Auray, Morbihan, France, Jan. 1, 1771; guillotined at Paris, June 25, 1804. A celebrated French Chouan partisan and royalist conspirator, leader of the rising of 1799. He was implicated with Pichegru in 1803.

Cadsand, or Cadzant (käd-zänd'). A village in Zealand, Netherlands, situated at the mouth of the Schelde, 14 miles northeast of Bruges. Here in 1337 the English defeated the Count of Flanders.

Cadwal. See Arviragus, 2.

Cadwalader, George, Gent. A pseudonym of George Bubb Dodington.

Cadwalader, or Cadwallader (kad-wal'a-dër), surnamed "The Blessed." Died probably in 664. A British king. He was the son of Cadwallon, king of Gwynedd, whom he succeeded in 634. He obtained great fame by the heroic exploits which he performed in the defense of Wales against the Saxons, and holds a high place in Welsh tradition and poetry. According to the prophecy of Merlin, he is one day to return to the world to expel the Saxon from the land. He came in time to be regarded as a saint (hence his surname of "The Blessed").

Cadwallader (kad-wal'a-dër). A character in Foote's play "The Author." This play was stopped by the lord chamberlain at the request of Mr. Arpice, a friend of Foote, who was imitated and ridiculed in this part, especially in a haït he had of sucking his wrist as he talked.

Cadwallader, Rev. Mr. The rector of Middlemarch in George Eliot's novel of that name. He exasperates his wife, a clever, keen, epigrammatic woman, by his good temper. He would even speak well of his bishop, "though unnatural in a benefited clergyman."

Cadwallader. A misanthropic character in Smollett's "Peregrine Pickle."

Cadwallon (kad-wal'on), or Cædwalla, or Cadwalader. Died 634. A British king of Gwynedd, which was probably coextensive with North Wales. He invaded Northumbria in 629, but was repulsed by Eadwine near Morpeth. In 633, in alliance with Penda, king of the Mercians, he totally defeated the Northumbrians at Heathfield, near Doncaster. Eadwine and his son Osfrid being among the slain. He was defeated by Oswald, the nephew of Eadwine, at the battle of Hevenfelth, on the Deniseburn, in 633, and was killed in the flight.

Cadwallon. The minstrel of Gwenwyn in Scott's novel "The Betrothed." He disguises himself as Renault Vidal to prosecute a revenge, for which he is executed.

Cæcilia gens (së-sil'i-ä-jenz). In ancient Rome, a plebeian clan or house whose family names under the republic were Bassus, Denter, Metellus, Niger, Pinna, and Rufus.

Cæcilius (së-sil'i-us), surnamed Calactinus (kal-ak-ti'nus) and, erroneously, Callantianus (ka-lan-ti-ä'nus). A Hellenistic Jew of Calacte in Sicily (whence his surname), named Archagathus, naturalized at Rome, where he took the name of his patron, one of the Metelli.

He enjoyed a very high repute at Rome in the time of Cicero and Augustus, but his numerous works are all lost, with the exception of a few fragments.

Cælius Staius. A Roman comic poet, a member by birth of the Celtic tribe of the Insubrians, brought as a prisoner to Rome about 200 B. C. His comedies were adaptations of Attic originals. Fragments of them are extant (ed. Ribbeck, 1873).

Cædmon (kad'mon), or (corruptly) Cedmon, Saint, Flourished about 670. An Anglo-Saxon (Northumbrian) poet, the reputed author of metrical paraphrases of the Old Testament. He became late in life an inmate of the monastery at Whitby, under the abbess Hild. According to the account given by Bede ("Ecclesiastical History"), he was an unlearned man, especially lacking in poetical talent until he was commanded in a dream to sing "the beginning of created things." The miraculous gift thus bestowed upon him was fostered by Hild, and he produced metrical paraphrases of Genesis and other parts of the Bible. He was celebrated as a saint on Feb. 11 (107-12). It has been doubted whether he is a real personage.

Cælia, or Cœlia, gens (sê'li-ã-jenz). In ancient Rome, a plebeian clan or house whose family names were Calius and Rufus. The first member of this gens who obtained the consulship was C. Cælius Calvus, 94 B. C.

Cælian (sê'li-an), The. [L. Cælius mons.] The southeastern hill of the group of Seven Hills of ancient Rome, adjoining the Palatine, and between the Aventine and the Esquiline. The Lateran lies on its wê'ly extending eastern slope.

Caen (koñ). The capital of the department of Calvados, France, situated on the Orne in lat. 49° 11' N., long. 0° 22' W. It has a large import trade in timber, etc., and exports Caen stone, rape-oil, dairy products, etc. It has important manufactures. It is the seat of a university. Caen was developed by William the Conqueror. It was taken by the English in 1346 and 1417, and retaken by the French in 1450. It suffered in the Huguenot wars, and was a Girondist center in 1793. Abbaye aux Dames, or Trinity. A great Romanesque church founded by Queen Matilda (1066), with 3 large recessed portals, arched façade, and square flanking towers, and later central lantern. The solemn interior, with its superposed tiers of round arches, presents one of the most uniform examples of Norman architecture. Abbaye aux Hommes, or St. Etienne, dedicated by William the Conqueror in 1077, but, especially in its exterior, much modified later. The six spires and the central lantern form one of the most effective groups of this nature; they and the choir show the Norman lancets. The plain and massive nave dates from the Conqueror. The church is 349 feet long; the vaulting 68½ feet high. Population (1891), 45,201.

Cæpio (sê'pi-o), Quintus Servilius. Lived about 100 B. C. A Roman consul (106). As proconsul in Gaul (105) he was defeated with Mallius by the Cimbrî.

Cære (sê'rê), earlier Agylla (a-jil'ÿ). [Gr. Καίρη, Καίρη; Ἀγυλλᾶ.] In ancient geography, a city of Etruria, Italy, situated 25 miles northwest of Rome. Its site is occupied by the modern village of Cerveteri noted for Etruscan ruins.

The primitive name of Cære was Agylla, the "round town," which indicates that it was originally a Phœnician settlement. An ancient tradition, preserved by Dionysius of Halicarnassus, Strabo, and Pliny, affirmed that Agylla was a "Pelagian" city prior to the Etruscan conquest.

Taylor, The Alphabet, II, 74, note.

Caerleon (kâr-lê'ou). A town in Monmouthshire, England, situated on the Usk 3 miles northeast of Newport: the Roman Isea Silurum. It was important in the Roman period, and is the traditional seat of King Arthur's court.

Caermarthen. See Carmarthen.

Caernarvon. See Caruarvon.

Cæsar (sê'zâr), Caius Julius. [ME. Cesar, OF. Cesar, F. César, It. Cesare, G. Cäsar, etc., L. Cæsar.] Born July 12, 100 B. C. (according to Mommsen, 102): killed at Rome, March 15, 44 B. C. A famous Roman general, statesman, orator, and writer. He served at Mytilene in 80; was captured by pirates in 76; and was made questor in 63, curule edile in 65, pontifex maximus in 63, pretor in 62, and propretor in Spain in 61. He formed the "first triumvirate" with Pompey and Crassus in 60; was consul in 59, and proconsul in Gaul and Illyria in 58; defeated the Helvetii and Ariovistus in 58, and the Belgæ in 57; invaded Britain in 55 and 54; crossed the Rhine in 55 and 53; defeated Vercingetorix in 52; and crossed the Rubicon and commenced the civil war in 49. He was dictator in 49, 48, 47, 46, 45; defeated Pompey at Pharsalia in 48; ended the Alexandrine war in 47; and defeated Pharnaces at Zela in 47, and the Pompeians at Thapsus in 46, and at Munda in 45. He reformed the calendar in 46. Feb. 15, 44, he refused the diadem. He was assassinated by Brutus, Cassius, and others in the senate-house March 15. The "Commentaries" (or Memoirs) of Cæsar, the only one of his literary works extant, contain the history of the first seven years of the Gallic war, in seven books, and three books of a history of the civil war. The name Cæsar was assumed by all male members of the Julian dynasty, and after them by the successive emperors, as inseparable from the imperial dignity. It thus became the source of the German Kaiser and the Russian Tsar or Czar. After the death of Hadrian the title Cæsar was specifically assigned to those who were designated by the emperors as their successors and associated with them in the government. See Augustus.

Cæsar, Don. The father of Olivia in Mrs. Cowley's "Bold Stroke for a Husband."

Cæsar, Sir Julius. Born at Tottenham, England, 1558; died 1636. An English jurist of Italian extraction, appointed master of the rolls in 1614.

Cæsarea (sez-a-rê'ÿ). In ancient geography, a seaport of Palestine, situated on the Mediterranean in lat. 32° 33' N., long. 34° 54' E.: the modern Kaisariyeh. It was erected by Herod I., in the first decennium B. C., on the site of the former Turris Stratouis, on the line of the great road from Tyre to Egypt, between Jafa and Dora, and named in honor of Augustus. Its full name was Cæsarea Sebaste, from the name of the harbor. Herod adorned the city with many magnificent buildings. It became the residence of the Roman governors in Palestine, and was mostly inhabited by a foreign population hostile to the Jews. Here broke out the Jewish war under the governor Gessius Florus. Vespasian gave it the name of Colonia prima Flaviania. It is often mentioned in the New Testament (Acts viii. 40, ix. 30, x. 1, xli. 9, xxiv. 17, etc.). About 200 A. D. it became the residence of a bishop, and possessed a Christian school at which Origen taught. It was the birthplace of the church historian Eusebius (died 342). The modern Kaisariyeh is a desolate place of ruins.

Cairo (kã'rõ). [Ar. Muq̄-el-Qãhira, F. Le Caire.] The capital of Egypt, situated 1 mile east of the Nile, in lat. 30° 3' N., long. 31° 16' E. It has important transit trade, and is the starting-point for tours to neighboring pyramids, the sites of Memphis and Heliopolis (in the vicinity), and the upper Nile. Its chief suburb is Balak. It was founded by the Fatimite califs about 970, and made the capital. It was taken by the Turks in 1517, was held by the French 1798-1801, and was occupied by the British in 1882. It was the scene of the massacre of the Mamelukes in 1811. It contains a number of noted mosques: Mosque of Aqbar, a square, picturesquely ornamented building surmounted by a pointed dome covered with arabesques, now appropriated to the dances of the howling dervishes. The square minaret over one angle rises in recessed stages, and the entrance-porch is formed by a high trifoliate arch. The whole interior is colored in dark and light horizontal bands. Mosque of El-Azhar, founded in 970, but for the most part rebuilt at various subsequent times. It has six minarets. It is remarkable as the chief existing Mohammedan university. The divisions of the interior surround a large central court encircled by pointed arcades. The siwan, or sanctuary, used for instruction, consists of nine aisles formed by 380 columns of ancient and Christian provenience. Several subordinate mosques or chapels are included in the main foundation. Mosque of El-Ghuri, one of the most picturesque monuments in the city. It was built about 1513. Mosque of Sultan Ho-san, ranking as one of the chief monuments of Mohammedan architecture. It was completed in 1360 A. D. The exterior, built of stones taken from the Pyramids, consists of a massive wall about 113 feet high, inclosing an area of irregular form, and surmounted by two lofty minarets and the pointed brick dome of the sultan's mausoleum. The top of the wall is corbelled out about 6 feet in successive ranges of dentils, forming a cornice, and its face is diversified by panels, arches, and Ajimez windows, all used sparingly. The great minaret is 280 feet high. The interior court measures 105 by 117 feet, and contains two fountain-pavilions. In the middle of each side of the court opens a magnificent pointed arch. That on the east, 90 feet high and deep and 60 in span, is the largest. At the back of this recess are the minbar (pulpit) and mihrab (place of direction of prayer), and from it opens the mausoleum. The entrance-porch is a large archway curiously covered in by corbeling out the sides for part of its rise, and then throwing a small pointed arch over the opening; its piers are ornamented with rich vertical bands and angle-columns, and with paneling. Tomb-Mosque of Kait Bey, built about 1470, one of the finest pieces of architecture in Cairo. Tombs of the Colifs, so called, properly of the Circassian Mamelukes, a number of comparatively small mosque-tombs of the 15th century, grouped together about the Tomb-Mosque of Kait Bey. They are important in Arabic architecture for their angularly pointed stone domes covered with geometric ornament in relief, with small windows in the low drum; for their windows, consisting of a group of two or three slender round-headed arches surmounted by one or three circular openings arranged pyramidally; and for the fine, massive pointed arches usual in the lowest story. Some of them show incrustations of the beautiful colored porcelain tiles for which the older Arabic monuments of Cairo are famous. Tombs of the Mamelukes, so called, an extensive group of mosque-tombs on the southeast side of the city. They belong to the period of the Baharite sultans, and though ruinous are architecturally notable for their fine masonry and beautiful fluted or chevroned pointed domes, and for their graceful polygonal minarets, which rise in recessed stages. Mosque of Amru, the oldest mosque in Egypt (founded 613 A. D.), and a remarkable Mohammedan monument. The inclosure is 350 feet square, with exterior walls of brick. The entrance is on the west: here a single range of arcades borders the central court, while on the north there are three ranges, on the south four, and on the east side, which is the sanctuary, six ranges. There are in all 223 columns. The arches are round or keel-shaped, and a few are pointed. Nilometer, a monument for measuring the rise of the Nile, on the island of Roda. The present Nilometer dates from about 800 A. D.; it is a chamber about 18 feet square, originally domed, in each side of which there is a niche covered with a pointed arch, an important example of the early use of this form. In the middle stands a pillar divided into 17 cubits of about 21 1/2 inches. Population, 403,000.

Cairo (kã'rõ). A city in Alexander County, Ill., situated at the confluence of the Ohio and Mississippi rivers. It was nearly destroyed by an inundation in 1858. The Ohio is here crossed by a railway bridge. Population (1890), 10,324.

Caités, or Caetés, or Cahetés (kã-e-tãz'). [Probably from the Tupi Caá, forest, and eté, real, true, i. e. 'true forest-dwellers.'] A tribe of Brazilian Indians, of the Tupi race, which in the 16th century occupied much of the eastern coast region north of the São Francisco, in Pernambuco, Rio Grande do Norte, Parahyba, and Ceará. They were very powerful and warlike, and were cannibals. They dwelt in fixed villages, practised a little agriculture, and were skillful hunters. In 1554 they murdered the Bishop of Bahia and his companions, who were shipwrecked on their coasts, and they long carried on war with the colonists. As a tribe they are now extinct.

Calderon (käl-dä-rōn'), Francisco Garcia. Born at Arequipa, 1834. A Peruvian lawyer and statesman. In 1867 he was elected to Congress, and in 1868 became minister of the treasury. After the Chilians occupied Lima (1881), and President Pirola had fled, the citizens elected Calderon provisional president of Peru, a choice which was afterward ratified by Congress. He attempted to treat with the Chilians and to secure the interference of the United States. To prevent this the Chilians seized him and sent him to Valparaiso, where he was confined until the close of the war. He returned to Lima in 1886, and was made president of the senate. He was influential in arranging the Grace contract by which the finances of Peru were put on a better footing. He has published a "Dictionary of Peruvian Legislation."

Calderon, Serafin Estébanez. Born at Malaga, Spain, 1801; died Feb. 7, 1867. A Spanish poet and novelist. He wrote the novel "Cristianos y Moriscos" (1833), "Las Poesías del Solitario" (1833), "Escenas Andaluzas" (1847), etc.

Calderon de la Barca, Pedro. Born at Madrid, Jan. 17, 1600; died there, May 25, 1681. A celebrated Spanish dramatist and poet. He was educated first by the Jesuits and then at Salamanca, being graduated from the latter university in 1619. He had already some reputation as a dramatic writer. In 1620 and 1622 he gained the praise of Lope de Vega and the only prize in poetical contests. Until 1630 he served in the army at various times, but continued writing. In 1636 he was patronized by Philip IV., and was formally attached to the court, furnishing dramas for the royal theaters. He fought through the campaign of 1640. From this time he wrote both secular and religious plays and autos for the church, retaining a controlling influence over whatever related to the drama. In 1651 he entered a religious brotherhood. In 1663 he was created chaplain of honor to the king, and also became a priest of the Congregation of Saint Peter, and afterward its head, an office which he held till his death. Notwithstanding these religious duties, he did not cease from writing for the theater, besides which, during thirty-seven years, he composed the Corpus Christi plays which were performed every year in the cathedrals of Toledo, Seville, and Granada. His extraordinary popularity continued till his death. He himself made a list of one hundred and eleven plays and seventy (or seventy-three) sacramental autos which forms the basis for a proper knowledge of his works. One hundred and fifteen plays printed as his by the capricious booksellers have no claim whatever to his name. His "Comedias de Capa y Espada" ("Comedies of the Cloak and Sword"; which see) are peculiarly characteristic, and about thirty of these can be enumerated. Among them are "La Dama Duende" ("The Fairy Lady"), "Mejor Está que Estaba" ("T is Better than it Was"), "Peor Está que Estaba" ("T is Worse than it Was"), and "Astrólogo Fingido" ("The Mock Astrologer"). Dryden used this last in his "An Evening's Love, or The Mock Astrologer." Among his plays are "El Mágico Prodigioso" ("The Wonder-working Magician"), "La Devoción de la Cruz" ("The Devotion of the Cross"), "El Príncipe Constante" ("The Constant Prince"), "Vida es Sueño" ("Life is a Dream"), "El Mayor Encanto Amor" ("No Magic like Love"), "Las Armas de la Hermostia" ("The Weapons of Beauty"), and many others.

Caldiero (käl-dē-ä'rō). A village in northern Italy, 8 miles east of Verona. Here, Nov. 12, 1796, the Austrians under Alvinczy repulsed Napoleon, and Oct. 29-31, 1805, the archduke Charles of Austria repulsed Masséna.

Caldwell (käl'dwel'), Joseph. Born at Lamington, N. J., April 21, 1773; died at Chapel Hill, N. C., Jan. 27, 1835. An American clergyman and educator. He became president of the University of North Carolina in 1804.

Caldwell. A town and summer resort in eastern New York, situated at the southern end of Lake George, 53 miles north of Albany. Forts George and William Henry were situated here in the 18th century.

Caleb (käl'leb). [Heb.; of uncertain meaning. See the extract below.] A Hebrew leader at the time of the conquest of Canaan. He was one of those who were sent as spies into the land of Canaan.

Often, with names of this kind, El was omitted, Irahm being used instead of Irahmel; Caleb instead of Calbel. This last name, singular as it is, need not create any surprise, for "Dog of El" was an energetic way of expressing the faithful attachment of a tribe to the God to which it had devoted itself.

Renan, Hist. of the People of Israel, I. 89.

Caleb. The witch in "The Seven Champions of Christendom." Caleb had killed the parents of the young Saint George and brought him up.

Caleb. A character in Dryden's satire "Absalom and Achitophel." He is intended for Lord Grey of Wark, one of the adherents of the Duke of Monmouth. The latter had a notorious intrigue with Lord Grey's wife.

Caleb Quotem. See Quotem.

Caleb Williams. A novel by William Godwin, published in 1794. Caleb Williams is the secretary of Falkland; his insatiable curiosity finds out the secret of his master (See Falkland). Colman the Younger based his "Iron Chest" on this novel.

Caled. See Khalid.

Caledonia (kal-e-dō'ni-ē). [L. Caledonia, also Catidonia, Calydonia, Gr. Καλδωνία, from Caledonii, Catidonii, Calydonii, also Caledones, Catidones, Gr. Καλδωνοί, the name of the inhabitants.] A name given by the Roman writers to the northern portion of the island of Great Britain: now used as a poetical designation of Scotland.

Caledonian Canal. A canal in Scotland connecting the North Sea with the Atlantic Ocean. It extends from Inverness through a chain of lakes to Cerpach on Loch Eil. It was constructed 1803-22.

Calenders (kal'on-dérz), The Three. The three princes disguised as Calenders, or begging dervishes, in "The Arabian Nights' Entertainments." They have but one eye each.

Calepine (kal'e-pēn), Sir. A knight in Spenser's "Faerie Queene" who saves a child from a bear by squeezing the latter to death.

Calepino (käl-lä-pē'nō), Ambrogio. Born at Bergamo, Italy, June 6, 1435; died at Bergamo, Nov. 30, 1511. An Italian lexicographer. He compiled a Latin-Italian dictionary (published 1502), which passed through many editions, and became, after successive enlargements, in 1550 a polyglot of eleven languages. Faccioliati reduced this number to seven in his edition (1718).

Caleti (kal'e-ti), or Caletes (kal'e-tēz). An ancient Belgic tribe dwelling in the vicinity of Rouen. They opposed Caesar 52-51 B. C.

Calhoun (kal-hōn'), John Caldwell. Born in Abbeville District, S. C., March 18, 1782; died at Washington, March 31, 1850. A noted American statesman. He was of Irish extraction, was graduated at Yale College in 1804, studied law at the Litchfield (Connecticut) Law School, was admitted to the bar in 1807, and commenced practice at Abbeville. He was a member of the State general assembly 1808-09; was elected a representative to Congress from South Carolina by the War Democrats in 1811, and retained his seat until 1817, when he became secretary of war in President Monroe's cabinet. He was Vice-President of the United States 1825-32; was United States senator 1832-43; and was secretary of state under President Tyler 1844-45, when he was re-elected to the Senate, of which he remained a member until his death. A strenuous defender of the institution of slavery, he was the author of the doctrine of nullification, according to which each State has the right to reject any act of Congress which it may consider unconstitutional. This doctrine was declared by the legislature of South Carolina in 1829, in a document, mainly drawn up by him, known as the "South Carolina Exposition." He was one of the chief instruments in securing the annexation of Texas. His works, with memoir, were published by Richard K. Cralle (1853-54), and include a treatise "On the Constitution and Government of the United States."

Cali (käl-lé'). A town in the southwestern part of the United States of Colombia, department of Cauca, situated north of Popayan. Population (1892), about 10,000.

Caliban (kal'i-ban). In Shakspeare's "Tempest," a deformed and repulsive slave. He is a monster generated by a devil and a witch, with a sensual and malicious nature, educated by Prospero.

If the depth of an impression made by an imaginary character may be gauged by the literature which that character calls forth, then must Hamlet and Falstaff admit Caliban to a place between them. An eminent Professor (Wilson) has devoted a stout octavo volume to the proof that in Caliban we find the exact "link" which, in any scheme of Evolution, is "missing" between Man and the Anthropoids; the late and honoured Mr. Robert Browning has given utterance to the theological speculations which he imagined might have visited Caliban's darkened and lonely soul; and a brilliant Member of the French Institute, of world-wide fame, has written a philosophical drama bearing the name of "Caliban." No other unreal character, except the two I have mentioned, Hamlet and Falstaff, has called forth such noteworthy or such voluminous tributes. Furness, Shak. Var., Pref., viii.

Caliban. A philosophical drama by Renan, published in 1878 as a continuation of "The Tempest." Caliban, a socialist and revolutionist, overthrows Prospero and occupies the latter's palace and palace. He then comes to sympathize with property-owners and protects Prospero. The drama is keenly satirical.

Caliban. A pseudonym of Auguste Emile Bergerat.

Caliban upon Setebos, or Natural Theology in the Island. A poem by Robert Browning, published in "Dramatis Personæ" (1864).

Calicut (kal'i-kuṭ), or Kolikod (kol'i-kod). [Hind. Kolikkōdu.] A seaport in the Malabar district, Madras, British India, situated on the Indian Ocean in lat. 11° 15' N., long. 75° 49' E. It was the first Indian port visited by Vasco da Gama in 1498. It was destroyed by Tipu Saib in 1789, and ceded to the British in 1792. Population (1891), 65,978.

Calidore (kal'i-dor). A knight in Spenser's "Faerie Queene," the type of courtly. He is modeled upon Sir Philip Sidney.

Calif (käl'lif). [From Ar. kalafa, to leave behind.] The title given to the successor of Mohammed, meaning 'successor,' 'lieutenant,' 'vicegerent,' or 'deputy.' He is vested with absolute authority in all matters of state, both civil and religious, as long as he rules in conformity with the law of the Koran and the tradition. The calif must be a man, an adult, sane, a free man, a learned divine, a powerful ruler, a just person, and one of the Koreish (the tribe to which the prophet himself belonged). The Shiites (the schismatics of Islam) also demand that he should be a descendant from the prophet's family. After the first five califs, who, according to some Mohammedan authorities, were alone entitled to the title, the others being merely Amirs, or governors, the califate passed over to the Omniads, who, 14 in number, reigned 661-750 in Damascus. They were succeeded by the Abbassides, with 37 califs, reigning 750-1258 in Baghdad. After their temporal power had been overthrown by Halak Khan, 1258, descendants of the Abbassides resided for three centuries in Egypt, and asserted their claim to the spiritual power. In 1517 the califate passed over through one descendant of the Abbassides to Selim I., the ninth of the present Ottoman dynasty of Turkish sultans, and is still vested in the sultan of the Ottoman empire.

Calife de Bagdad (käl-léf' dè bäg-däd'), Le. An opera by Boieldieu, words by St. Just, first produced in Paris Sept. 16, 1800.

California (kal-i-för'ni-jil). [Sp. California (16th century), applied first to what is now called Lower California. Origin uncertain: said to be from California, a feigned island abounding in gold and precious stones, described in a Spanish romance, "Las Sergas de Esplandian," published in 1510.] One of the Pacific States of the United States of America. It extends from lat. 32° 33' 42" N., long. 114° 12' 25" W., and is bounded by Oregon on the north, Nevada and Arizona on the east, Lower California on the south, and the Pacific on the west. The Sierra Nevada and Coast ranges traverse it, and it is famous for picturesque scenery (Yosemite, etc.). Besides gold, quicksilver, lead, and silver, it produces various other minerals, petroleum, etc. Among its other important products are wheat, barley, wool, grapes and other fruit, wine, brandy, honey, and timber. Its capital is Sacramento, and its chief city San Francisco. It has 57 counties. The coast was explored by Cabrillo in 1542, and by Drake 1578-79. It was settled by Spanish missionaries in the 17th century, and from 1822 was part of the Mexican state. In 1846-47 it was occupied by American troops, and was ceded to the United States in 1848. Gold was discovered in El Dorado County on Jan. 24, 1848. It was admitted to the Union in 1850. Length, 775 miles. Area, 158,360 square miles. Population (1890), 1,208,130.

California, Gulf of. An arm of the Pacific Ocean lying between the peninsula of Lower California on the west and the Mexican states of Sonora and Sinaloa on the east. Length, about 700 miles; breadth at the entrance, 150 miles. It receives the river Colorado at its head.

California, Lower, or Old. [Sp. Baja, or Vieja, California.] A peninsula of North America, projecting into the Pacific Ocean, forming a territory of Mexico. It was discovered by Ximenes in 1534, was explored by Cortés in 1535, and settled by the Spaniards in the last part of the 17th century. Its surface is mountainous, and its climate dry. Area, 59,913 square miles. Length, about 700 miles. Population (1830), 31,167.

Caligula (ka-lig'ū-lä) (Caius Cæsar). [Caligula is a nickname from L. caligæ, the foot-dress of the common soldiers, worn by him when he was with the army as a boy.] Born at Antium, Italy, Aug. 31, 12 A. D.; killed at Rome, Jan. 24, 41. The third emperor of Rome, 37-41 A. D., youngest son of Germanicus, the nephew of Tiberius, and Agrippina. He succeeded Tiberius, whose death he had caused or accelerated. The beginning of his reign was marked by great moderation, but his savage and voluptuous nature soon revealed itself, and the rest of his career was marked by cruelty and licentiousness little short of madness. He is said to have exclaimed in a fit of vexation, "Would that the Roman people had only one head!" He had himself worshipped as a god, and raised his horse to the consulship. He invaded Gaul in 40. He was assassinated by Cassius Chærea, Cornelius Sabinus, and others.

Caligula. A tragedy by Crowne, printed in 1698.

Calila and Dimna. See Kalilah.

Calipoa. See Calapooya.

Calipolis (ka-lip'ō-lis). The wife of Muly Mahamet in Peele's play "The Battle of Alcazar." During a famine her husband presents her with a bit of meat, stolen from a lioness, on his bloody sword, with these words: "Feed then and faint not, fair Calipolis." Pistol ridicules this line in "2 Henry IV.," ii. 4.

Calippus. See Callippus.

Calista (ka-lis'tä). 1. The "Fair Penitent" in Rowe's play of that name. She is the proud, fierce wife of a forgiving husband, Altamont, and loves "that haughty gallant, gay Lothario," who has seduced her. After the latter's death her sense of guilt induces her to kill herself, though Doran remarks that she was more angry at being found out than sorry for what had happened.

2. The faithful wife of Cleander in Fletcher and Massinger's play "The Lover's Progress." Her struggle with her unfortunate passion for Lysander affords a powerful scene.—3. One of the principal characters in Massinger's "Guardian."

4. The queen's woman in Scott's novel "The Talisman." She is witty and intriguing.

Calixtines (ka-lik's'tins). [ML. Calixtini, a sect so called: referred to calix, a cup, the cup of the eucharist; in form as if from Calixtus, a proper name.] A sect of Hussites in Bohemia. They published their confession in 1421, the leading article of which was a demand to partake of the cup (calix) as well as of the bread in the Lord's Supper, from which they were also called Utraquists (L. uterque, both).

Calixtus I. (ka-lik's'tus), or Callistus (ka-lis'tus). Killed 223. Bishop of Rome. He succeeded Zephyrinus as bishop in 218 A. D. He is commemorated in the Roman Church on Oct. 14.

Calixtus II. (Guido of Burgundy). Died at Rome, Dec. 12, 1124. Pope 1119-24. He concluded the Concordat of Worms with Henry V., 1122.

Calixtus III. (Alfonso Borgia). Born in Spain about 1378; died Aug. 6, 1458. Pope 1455-58. He attempted fruitlessly a crusade against the Turks.

Callao (käl-lä'ō or käl-yä'ō). 1. A seaport in Peru, situated in lat. 12° 4' S., long. 77° 8' W., 6 miles west of Lima on the Bay of Callao: the chief port of Peru. On Oct. 28, 1746, it was swept away by an earthquake-wave, the result of the shock which destroyed Lima: 4,000 people perished, and a frigate and nineteen other vessels were stranded. San Felipe Castle was planned by M. Godin and completed about 1755; it was the last point occupied by the Spaniards in South America, being finally taken Jan. 19, 1826. The castle was important in all later Peruvian wars. Callao was bombarded by a Spanish fleet May 2, 1866, and by the Chileans in 1880. It exports wool, guano, bark, etc. Population (1890), 35,492.

2. A coast department of Peru, capital Callao, recently separated from Lima. It comprises only the city and suburbs.

Callcott, Lady (Maria Dundas, later Mrs. Graham). Born at Papecastle, near Coekermouth, in 1785; died at Kensington, near London, Nov. 21, 1842. An English writer, wife of Sir Augustus Wall Callcott.

Calleja del Rey (käl-yä'nä del räy'), Felix Maria. Born at Medina del Campo, Old Castile, 1750; died at Cadiz, 1820. A Spanish general. In 1759 he was sent to Mexico. In 1810 he was a brigadier, commanding at San Luis Potosi. Soon after Hidalgo revolted he marched against him, defeated him at Aculco, near Querétaro, Nov. 7, and on Jan. 17, 1811, won a great victory over him at the bridge of Calderon, near Guadalajara. His measures for repressing the revolution were very cruel, scores of his prisoners being shot. Called to the capital, he was sent against Morelos, whom he besieged in Cuautla from Feb. 17 to May 2, finally obtaining a barren victory, as Morelos and his army escaped. On Dec. 29, 1812, he was made military commandant of Mexico City, and from March 4, 1813, to Sept. 19, 1816, he was viceroy.

Callias (kal'i-as), Peace of. A peace, concluded at Sparta in June, 371 B. C., between Athens and Sparta, including their allies, from which, however, Thebes was excluded. It took its name from Callias, one of the Athenian envoys, prominent in the conferences.

Callières Bonnevue (käl-yür' bon-vü'), Louis Hector. Born in France, 1639; died at Quebec, May 26, 1703. A French colonial politician, governor of Montreal 1684, and of Canada 1699.

Calligrapher (ka-lig'ra-fër), The. A surname of Theodosius II., given to him on account of his skill in illuminating manuscripts.

Callimachus (ka-lim'a-kus). [Gr. Καλλίμαχος.] Lived before 396 B. C. An artist of antiquity, according to tradition the inventor of the Corinthian column.

Callimachus. Born at Cyrene: died about 240 B. C. A famous Alexandrian critic, grammarian, and poet, chief librarian of the Alexandrian Library. See the extract.

Callimachus has left six Hymns to the Gods and a collection of epigrams; but his once famous elegies are represented only by fragments, and by the Latin translation of Catullus from his "Lock of Berenice." Berenice, the queen of Ptolemy Euergetes, had dedicated some tresses of her hair in a temple; they had been stolen; and the court-poet makes them relate how the gods had placed them among the stars. Ovid imitated his "Ibis," a poetical invective against his pupil the poet Apollonius; and took the idea of the "Fasti" partly from his "Aitia" or "Origins" of sacred tradition and usage. Jebb, Gr. Lit., p. 140.

Callinicus (kal-i-ni'kus) of Heliopolis. An Egyptian architect who is commonly held to be the inventor of the Greek fire, the secret of whose composition has been lost. He is said to have destroyed by this fire a Saracen fleet which attacked Constantinople about 670 A. D.

Callinus (ka-lin'us). [Gr. Καλλίνος.] A Greek poet of Ephesus, of uncertain date (lived perhaps about 730-670 B. C.), probably the first known writer of elegiacs, the invention of which was anciently attributed to Archilochus. The longest fragment assigned to him has by some been thought to be the work of Tyrtaeus.

Calliope (ka-lī'ō-pē). [Gr. Καλλιόπη.] 1. In Greek mythology, the Muse of epic poetry.

She is represented with a tablet and stylus. See Muses.—2. An asteroid (No. 22) discovered by Hind at London, Nov. 16, 1852.

Callippus, or Calippus (ka-lip'us). [Gr. Κάλλιππος or Κάλιππος.] Born at Cyziens, Asia Minor; lived in the 4th century B. C. A Greek astronomer. He instituted the "Callippic" cycle of 76 years, formed by quadrupling the Metonic cycle (19 years) and subtracting one day.

Callirrhoe (ka-lir'ō-ē). [Gr. Καλλιρρόη.] A historic fountain in Athens, architecturally adorned and provided with conduits by Pisis-tratus, the use of whose water was prescribed for ceremonial rites. From the earliest study of Athenian topography, this fountain has been identified with the copious spring still flowing in the bed of the Ilissus, near the temple of Olympian Zeus. Dörpfeld, however, has lately demonstrated the probability that this identification is incorrect, and that the fountain was in fact situated at the southwest angle of the Areopagus, on the border of the Agora. While the evidence is still incomplete, excavation has revealed a water-conduit of the Pisis-tratid epoch ending at the site indicated, which accords with literary testimony.

Callirrhoe. In Greek legend, the wife of Ale-mæon. She persuaded her husband to procure for her the peplos and necklace of Harmonia, and thus caused his death, which was avenged by his sons. See Alcæon and Harmonia.

Callisthenes (ka-lis'the-nēs). [Gr. Καλλισθένης.] Born at Olynthus, Macedonia; died about 328 B. C. A Greek philosopher, a cousin and pupil of Aristotle, and a companion of Alexander the Great in Asia. He incurred Alexander's ill will, and was probably put to death by his order.

Callisto (ka-lis'tō). [Gr. Καλλιστώ.] In Greek mythology, an Arcadian huntress, a companion of Artemis, beloved of Zeus and transformed by him into a she bear. In this form she was slain by Artemis in the chase. She was placed among the stars as the constellation Arctos (Bear).

Callistratus (ka-lis'tra-tus). [Gr. Καλλίστρατος.] An Athenian orator. He commanded with Chabrias and Timotheus the forces which were despatched to the assistance of Thebes against Sparta in 378, and executed a number of embassies. In 366 he delivered a speech on the loss of Oropus, which is said to have determined Demosthenes to devote himself to the study of oratory. He was sentenced to death for political reasons in 361, as a result of which he went into exile. He subsequently returned, and was put to death. He is said to have founded the city of Datun, afterward Philippi, during his exile.

Callistratus. A Greek grammarian who lived about the middle of the 2d century B. C. He was the author of commentaries on the major poets of Greece, which were held in considerable repute by the ancients, but which are now lost. He is said on doubtful authority to have been the first to acquaint the Samians with the alphabet of twenty-four letters.

Callistratus. A Roman jurist who lived about the beginning of the 3d century A. D. He is said to have been a pupil of Papinian and to have been a member of the council of Alexander Severus. He is known chiefly on account of the numerous extracts from his works in the "Digest" of Justinian. None of his works is extant.

Callot (käl-lō'), Jacques. Born at Nancy, France, 1592; died at Nancy, March 28, 1635. A French engraver and painter.

Call to the Unconverted. A religious work by Richard Baxter, published in 1657, known as "Baxter's Call."

Calmar. See Kalmar.

Calmet (käl-mä'), Dom Augustin. Born at Mesnil-la-Horgue, near Toul, France, Feb. 26, 1672; died at Paris, Oct. 25, 1757. A noted French Benedictine scholar and biblical critic. He was the author of numerous works, including "Commentaire sur tous les livres de l'Ancien et du Nouveau Testament" (1707-16), a "Dictionnaire historique, critique et chronologique de la Bible" (1722-28).

Calmon (käl-mōn'), Marc Antoine. Born at Tanniès, Dordogne, France, March 3, 1815; died at Paris, Oct. 13, 1890. A French politician and political economist. He was chosen life senator in 1875. He published "Histoire parlementaire des finances de la restauration" (1868-70), etc.

Calmon du Pin e Almeida (käl-mōn' dü pin' ē ä'l-mä'dä), Miguel. Born at Santo Amaro, Bahia, Dec. 22, 1796; died at Rio de Janeiro, Oct. 5, 1865. A Brazilian statesman. He was member of the constituent assembly 1822; several times deputy; senator from 1810; minister in many governments, and premier in 1810 and 1843. From 1844 to 1847 he was special envoy in Europe. In 1849 he was created viscount, and in 1854 marquis of Abrantes.

Calnucks. See Kalnucks.

Calne (kän). A town in Wiltshire, England, 16 miles east-northeast of Bath. Population (1891), 3,495.

Calneh (kal'ne). One of the four cities of Nimrod in Shinar, or Babylonia (Gen. x, 10), which as yet has not been identified. It is to be distinguished from Calneh of Amos vi, 2, and the Calno of Isa. x, 9, which perhaps refer to one and the same city, identified by some with the Kullani mentioned in the Assyrian inscriptions as having been conquered 738 B. C. by Tiglath-Pileser III., and now represented by the ruins of Kullanthu about six miles from Arpad.

Calo-Joannes (kal-o-jō-an'ez), or Joannes II. Comnenus. [Gr. Καλο-Ιωάννης ο Κομνηνός.] Born 1088; died April 8, 1143. Byzantine emperor from Aug. 15, 1118, to April 8, 1143; son of Alexis I. whom he succeeded. He carried on successful wars against the Turks and Servians, and in 1137 added Armenia Minor to the Greek empire. He conceived the project of conquering the Latin kingdoms of Jerusalem and Antioch, and entered Cilicia with an army, where he died from a wound by a poisoned arrow in the hand, accidentally inflicted while boar-hunting.

Calonne (kä-lon'), Charles Alexandre de. Born at Douai, France, Jan. 20, 1734; died at Paris, Oct. 30, 1802. A noted French courtier and politician, comptroller-general of finance 1783-87.

Calov (kä'lōf), Latinized Calovius (ka-lō'-vi-us) (originally Kalau), Abraham. Born at Mohrungen, Prussia, April 16, 1612; died at Wittenberg, Germany, Feb. 25, 1686. A German Lutheran theologian and polemic writer. His chief work is "Systema locorum theologiorum" (1665-77).

Calpe (kal'pē). [Gr. Κάλπη.] The ancient name of the rock of Gibraltar, one of the Pillars of Hercules. See Abyla.

Calpee. See Kalpi.

Calprenède. See La Calprenède.

Calpurnia (kal-pēr-ni-ä). Daughter of L. Calpurnius Piso Cæsoninus, and last wife of Julius Cæsar, whom she married 59 B. C. She appears in Shakspeare's tragedy "Julius Cæsar."

Calpurnia gens (kal-pēr-ni-ä jenz). In ancient Rome, a plebeian clan or house which claimed to be descended from Calpus, the third son of Numa. Its family names under the republic were Bestia, Bibulus, Flamma, and Piso. The first member of this gens who obtained the consulship was C. Calpurnius Piso (180 B. C.).

Calpurnius (kal-pēr-ni-us), Titus (or Caius), surnamed Siculus ('the Sicilian'). A Latin pastoral poet who lived about the time of Nero. Seven elegies, a panegyric ("De laude Pisonis"), and two fragments of bucolic poems are attributed to him. Four other elegies formerly regarded as his are now referred to Nemesianus, a poet once thought to be identical with Calpurnius.

Caltanissetta (käl-tä-nēs-set'tä). A province in Sicily. Area, 1,263 square miles. Population (1891), 308,673.

Caltanissetta. The capital of the province of Caltanissetta, Sicily, situated in lat. 37° 26' N., long. 14° 7' E. It has a cathedral. Population (1891), estimated, 35,000.

Calton Hill (käl'ton hil). A height in the north-eastern part of Edinburgh.

Calumet (kal'ū-met). A town in Houghton County, in the northwestern part of the Upper Peninsula of Michigan. It is noted for its copper-mines.

Calumet, or Calumick (kal'ū-mik). A river in northwestern Indiana, and in Cook County, Illinois. It flows into Lake Michigan by two mouths, one near Chicago, the other in Lake County, Indiana.

Calvados (käl-vä-dōs'). A department in Normandy, France, lying between the English Channel on the north, Eure on the east, Orne on the south, and Manche on the west and south. Its capital is Caen. Area, 2,132 square miles. Population (1891), 428,945.

Calvaert, or Calvart (käl'värt; F. pron. käl-vär'), Denis, called Dionisio Fiammingo. Born at Antwerp, 1536; died at Bologna, Italy, March 17, 1619. A Flemish painter belonging to the Bolognese school. His best works are at Bologna.

Calvary (kal'vä-ri). 1. A word occurring in the New Testament (Luke xxiii, 33), adopting the calvaria by which the Vulgate translates the Greek kranion, which itself is the rendering of the Aramean golgotha, skull; it is not a proper name. The popular name "Mount Calvary" is not warranted by any statement in the gospels as being that of the place of the Crucifixion.

2. The name of the English version of Spohr's oratorio "The Saviour's Last Hours" ("Des Heilandes letzte Stunden"), first given in 1835, in England in 1839.

Calverley (kal'ver-li). A ruined gamester, brutally cruel to his wife and children, in "The Yorkshire Tragedy," once attributed to Shakspeare. The story is that of a real person of that name.

Calverley, Charles Stuart. Born at Martley, Worcestershire, Dec. 22, 1831; died at London, Feb. 17, 1884. An English barrister and poet. In 1852 he resumed his family name, Calverley, which his grandfather had changed to Blayds in 1807. He wrote verse and translations (1862, 1866, 1869), and a volume of humorous verse, parodies, etc., "Fly Leaves," in 1872.

Calvert (kal'vert), Cecilius or Cecil, Lord Baltimore. Born about 1605; died at London, Nov. 30, 1675. The first proprietor of Maryland. He was the son of George Calvert, mentioned below, who, having applied for a grant of land in northern Virginia, died before the charter had passed the great seal, in consequence of which it was issued in the name of his heir Cecil, June 20, 1632. In Nov., 1633, he sent an expedition of colonists under his brother Leonard to the new domain, which was named Maryland by Charles I. in honor of his queen. He married about 1623 Anne Arundel, whose name is borne by one of the counties of Maryland.

Calvert, George, Lord Baltimore. Born at Kipling, Yorkshire, about 1580; died April 15, 1632. The founder of Maryland. He entered Parliament in 1609, and became secretary of state in 1619, a post which he resigned in 1625, on declaring his conversion to the Roman Catholic faith. He was at his resignation raised to the Irish peerage as Baron Baltimore. While secretary of state he obtained from James I. a grant of land, called the province of Avalon, in Newfoundland, where in 1621 he established the settlement of Ferryland. He paid two visits to the colony between 1627 and 1629, which convinced him of the unsuitability of the climate, whereupon he applied for a grant of land (the present Maryland) in northern Virginia, the charter of which, as he died before it had passed the great seal, was issued in the name of his son Cecil in 1632.

Calvert, George Henry. Born at Baltimore, Md., Jan. 2, 1803; died at Newport, R. I., May 24, 1889. An American journalist, poet, and miscellaneous writer.

Calvert, Leonard. Born about 1606; died June 9, 1647. The first governor of Maryland. He was the brother of Cecil Calvert, second Lord Baltimore, by whom he was placed in command of the colonists who set sail from Cowes Nov. 22, 1633, and founded St. Mary's March 27, 1634. His claim to the jurisdiction of Kent Island was opposed by Claiborne whom he reduced to submission in 1647.

Calves' Head Club. A club said to have been instituted in ridicule of the memory of Charles I. It is first noticed in a tract reprinted in the "Harleian Miscellany," called "The Secret History of the Calves' Head Club," etc., undertaking to show how this club met for some years, 1633-37, on the anniversary of the king's death. An ax was revered, and a dish of calves' heads represented the king and his friends. It seems to have met in secret after the Restoration and till 1734, when some ill will was excited against it, and riots were said to have ensued.

Calvi (käl'vō). A fortified port on the western coast of Corsica, in lat. 42° 35' N., long. 8° 46' E. It was taken by the English in 1794.

Calvin (kal'vin), John, originally, in French, Jean Chauvin, or Cauvin, or Caulvin. [L. Johannes Calvinus, G. Johann Calvin, It. Giovanni Calvino; L. Calvinus, from calvus, bald.] Born at Noyon, Picardy, France, July 10, 1509; died at Geneva, May 27, 1564. A celebrated Protestant reformer and theologian. He studied at Paris, Orléans, and Bourges; embraced the Reformation about 1523; was banished from Paris in 1533; published his "Institutes" (which see) at Basel in 1536; fled to Geneva in 1535; and was banished in 1538, and returned in 1541. He had a controversy with Polseé in 1551, and with Servetus in 1553 (see Servetus), and founded the Academy of Geneva in 1559.

Calvo (käl'vō), Baldassarre. One of the principal characters in George Eliot's novel "Romola."

Calvo, Carlos. Born Feb. 26, 1824; died May 4, 1893. An Argentine historian. He resided for many years at Paris, where most of his works were published. These include important treatises on international law, the "Colección de tratados de la América Latina," also published in French and continued in a second series as "Anales históricos de la revolución en América Latina."

Calvo, Mariano Enrique. Born at Sucre about 1795; died at Cochabamba, 1842. A Bolivian politician. He was vice-president of the confederation of Peru and Bolivia, 1836-39. In 1840 he attempted a revolt against President Velasco, and was imprisoned.

Calvus (kal'vus), Caius Licinius Macer. Born May 28, 82 B. C.; died about 47 B. C. A Roman poet and forensic orator.

Calydon (kal'i-don). [Gr. Καλύδων.] In ancient geography, a city of Ætolia, Greece, situated near the river Evenus in lat. 38° 24' N., long. 21° 34' E. It is the legendary scene of the hunt of the Calydonian boar (which see).

Calydon. A great forest celebrated in the Arthurian romances. It was supposed to be in the north of England.

Calydonian Hunt. In Greek legend, the chase of a savage boar which the goddess Artemis, in punishment for a neglect of sacrifice by Æneus, king of Calydon in Ætolia, sent to ravage his country. The boar was pursued by Meleager and a band of heroes, and was slain by him. In some accounts Atalante, who was beloved of Meleager, joined the hunt and inflicted the first wound.

Calypso (ka-lip'sō). [Gr. Καλύψω.] In Greek legend, a nymph living in the island of Ogygia, who detained Ulysses for seven years. She promised him perpetual youth and immortality if he would remain with her.

Cam (kän), Sp. Cano (kä'nō). Diogo. Lived in the last part of the 15th century. A Portuguese navigator. He explored the West African coast to the Kongo 1484-85.

Cam (kam), or Granta (gran'tä). A river in Cambridgeshire, England, which joins the Ouse 3½ miles south of Ely. Length, about 40 miles. See Cambridge.

Camden, writing in 1586, recognizes the Cam as well as the Granta: "By what name writers termed this River, it is a question; some call it Granta, others Camus." On Speed's map of Cambridgeshire (1610) the name Cam occurs alone, written twice, once above, and once below, Cambridge; Milton personifies it as a river-god in "Lycidas" (1638):

"Next Camus, reverend sire, went footing slow,
His mantle hairy and his bonnet aedge,
Inwrought with figures dim, and on the edge
Like to that sanguine flower inscribed with woe;"

and on Logan's map of Cambridge (1688) the words The River Cam are written out in full, without any other designation. On the other hand, so late as 1704, an Act of Parliament for improving the navigation speaks of the River Cham, alias the Grant. Clark, Cambridge, p. 11.

Camacho (kä-mä'chō). A rich but unfortunate man in one of the episodes in "Don Quixote." He is cheated out of his bride, Quiteria, just as he has provided a great feast for his wedding; hence the phrase Camacho's wedding is used to signify great but useless show and expenditure.

It is like Camacho's wedding in Don Quixote, where Sancho laddled out whole pullets and fat geese from the soup-kettles at a pull. Hazlitt, Eng. Poets, p. 150.

Camanche. See Comanche.

Camaralzaman, Prince. See Badoura.

Camarão (kä-mä-rän'), Antonio Felipe. Born in Rio Grande do Norte about 1580; died there in 1648. A Brazilian Indian, chief of the Potyguarés tribe. His Indian name Poty ('shrimp') was translated into Portuguese Camarão when he was baptized. He joined the Portuguese in the wars against the Dutch of Pernambuco, and made several destructive raids into the Dutch territory. His wife, Clara, always accompanied him and fought by his side, and she is a favorite heroine of Brazilian history. On Aug. 23 and 24, 1636, Camarão and his Indians defeated a regular Dutch force under Artcholsky.

Camarão, Diogo Pinheiro. Dates of birth and death not recorded. A Brazilian Indian, nephew of Antonio Felipe Camarão. He was one of the Indian allies of the Portuguese in their wars with the Dutch, and on the death of his uncle in 1648 succeeded him in command of the Potyguarés tribe.

Camargo (kä-mär-gō') (Marie Anne Cuppi). Born at Brussels, April 15, 1710; died at Paris, April 20, 1770. A celebrated French dancer.

Camargo (kä-mär-gō'), Diego Muñoz. Born at Tlascalala about 1523; date of death not recorded. A Mexican, said to have been the son of a Spaniard by an Indian mother. In 1585 he finished an account of Mexican aboriginal history and customs, and of the conquest. It was first published, in a faulty French translation, in the "Nouvelles annales des voyages" (1815).

Camargo, Sergio. Born at Tiravitoba, 1833. A statesman of Colombia. He studied law, but entered the army, attained the highest military rank, and was commander-in-chief and secretary of war. He was several times representative and senator in the Colombian congress, president of the state of Boyacá, and in 1877 president ad interim of Colombia.

Camargue (kä-märg'), La. An island in the department of Bouches-du-Rhône, France, formed by the bifurcation of the Rhône. Length, 28 miles. Area, about 300 square miles.

Camarina (kam-ä-rä'nä). [Gr. Καμαρίνα.] In ancient geography, a city on the southern coast of Sicily, 45 miles southwest of Syracuse. It was founded as a Syracusan colony 599 B. C.; a Roman fleet was wrecked near here, 235 B. C.

The first destruction of Camarina took place within 46 years of its foundation, n. c. 553. It had revolted from Syracuse, and on being reduced was razed to the ground (Thucyd. vi. 5). On the cession of the site to the Geloans, Hippocrates rebuilt the town, which was a second time destroyed by Gelo, about B. C. 481. The date and circumstances of its later re-establishment are uncertain. They fall, however, into the time of Pindar, who speaks of Camarina as newly founded. Rawlinson, Herod., IV. 127, note.

Cambacérés (kon-bä-sä-räs'), Jean Jacques Régis de. Born at Montpellier, France, Oct. 18, 1733; died at Paris, March 8, 1824. A French statesman and jurist. He became a member of the Convention in 1792; president of the Committee of Public Safety in 1794, and of the Five Hundred in 1796; minister of justice in 1799; 2d consul in 1799; and arch-chancellor of the empire in 1804. He was made duke of Parma in 1808. He published "Projet du code civil" (1796).

Camballo (kam-bal'ō). The second son of Cambuscan in Chaucer's "Squire's Tale." He is introduced by Spenser, who calls him Cambel, in the "Faerie Queene."

Cambaluc (kam-bal'ök'). The name given by Marco Polo to Khambalu or Khan baligh, a Mongol designation of the city of Tatu, now the Tatar portion of Peking (which see).

Cambay (kam-bā'). A state in Guzerat, India. It is under British protection. Area, 350 square miles.

Cambay, or Kambay (kam-bā'). [Hind. Kham-bhāt.] The capital of the state of Cambay, situated on the Gulf of Cambay in lat. 22° 20' N., long. 72° 32' E. It was formerly an important commercial city, and the reputed Hindu capital of western India in the 5th century A. D. Population, about 36,000.

Cambay, Gulf of. An inlet of the Indian Ocean, lying west of British India, in lat. 21°-22° 20' N.

Cambebas, or Campevas (käm-bä'bäs or kämpä'väs). A modern name for the Omaguas Indians (which see).

Cambel. See Camballo.

Cambert (kon-bär'), Robert. Born at Paris in 1628; died at London in 1677. The earliest composer of French opera. He was associated with the Abbé Perrin in the production of French opera for 32 years, after which, Perrin having lost the Académie through the influence of Lully, he went to England and became "Master of the Music to Charles II." Among his operas are "La Pastorale," which was the first French opera, "Pomone" (1671), etc.

Camberwell (kam'bër-wel). A parliamentary borough in the southern part of London, county of Surrey. Population (1891), 235,312.

Cambina (kam-bi'nä). A daughter of the fairy Agape in Spenser's "Faerie Queene." She has magic powers, and in the end marries Camballo, or Cambel.

Cambini (käm-bë'nō), Giovanni Giuseppe. Born at Leghorn, Italy, Feb. 13, 1746; died at the Bicêtre, near Paris, in 1825. An Italian violinist, and composer of symphonies, quartets, etc.

Cambodia (kam-bō'di-ä), or Camboja, or Kamboja (kam-bō'jä). [Malay Kamboja.] A dependency of France in southeastern Asia, bounded by Siam on the northwest and north, Annam on the east, French Cochinchina on the southeast, and the Gulf of Siam on the southwest. Its surface is generally level, and it is traversed by the Mekong. Phnom-Penh is its capital, and its seaport is Kampot. It was formerly a kingdom of large extent, but became a protectorate under French rule in 1863, and is now united with other French dependencies in Indochina. Area, 33,600 square miles. Population, about 1,500,000.

Cambodia River. See Mekong.

Cambon (kon-bōn'), Joseph. Born at Montpellier, France, June 17, 1754; died at Brussels, Feb. 15, 1820. A French revolutionist. He was a member of the Legislative Assembly in 1791, of the Convention in 1792, and of the Committee of Public Safety in 1793.

Camboricum (kam-bor'i-kum), or Camborium. The Roman name of an ancient town which occupied the site of the modern Cambridge, England. See Cambridge.

Camboricum was without doubt a very important town, which commanded the southern fens. It had three forts or citadels, the principal of which occupied the district called the Castle-end in the modern town of Cambridge, and appears to have had a bridge over the Cam or Granta; of the others, one stood below the town, at Cherteston, and the other above it, at Granchester. Wright, Celt, p. 135.

Camborne (kam'börn). A mining town in Cornwall, England, situated 12 miles southwest of Truro. Population (1891), 14,700.

Cambrai, or Cambray (kam-brä'; F. pron. kon-brä'). [Rom. Cameracum, later Camaraeus; G. Camerik or Kambryk, LL. Camarauc.] A town in the department of Nord, France, on the Schelde in lat. 50° 10' N., long. 3° 14' E. It has been long noted for the manufacture of cambrics, which derived their name from it. It is a fortress, and contains a cathedral and citadel. It was finally acquired by France in 1678. Fénelon and Dubois were archbishops of Cambrai. Population of commune (1891), 24,122.

Cambray, League of. An alliance between Louis XI. of France, the emperor Maximilian I., Ferdinand "the Catholic" of Spain, and Pope Julius II., formed here, Dec. 10, 1508, the object of which was the partition of the Venetian territories.

Cambray, Peace of. A peace negotiated at Cambray, Aug. 5, 1529, between Francis I. of France and Charles V. France abandoned Italy to the emperor and relinquished her claim to suzerainty over Flanders and Artois; her title to the duchy of Burgundy was recognized. Called "La paix des dames" ('Ladies' Peace'), because the preliminaries were conducted by Louise, mother of Francis I., and Margaret, aunt of Charles V.

Cambria (kam'bri-ä). The Latin name of Wales.

Cambrian Shakspeare. A name given to Edward Williams.

Cambridge (käm'brij). [ME. Cambrigge, Cambrig, Cantebriige; earlier Grantebriige, Grauntebriige, AS. Grantabrycg, Grantabrycg, 'bridge of (the river) Granta'; L. Cantabrigia. See

Cam.] The capital of Cambridgeshire, England, situated on the Cam in lat. 52° 12' N., long. 0° 6' E. It is the seat of a famous university (which see). Cambridge is probably on the site of a British town and of the Roman Camboritum. It had a castle (now destroyed), founded by William the Conqueror. Population (1891), 36,983.

Cambridge. A city in Middlesex County, Massachusetts, separated from Boston by the Charles River, and practically a suburb of Boston. It is the seat of Harvard University. It has in its manufacturing quarters (East Cambridge, Cambridgeport) manufactures of iron, etc. It was founded by English colonists under Winthrop in 1630, and called at first Newtown; its name was changed to Cambridge after the founding of Harvard College, in honor of Cambridge, England, where some of the early colonists were graduated. It was occupied by the American army 1775-76. Incorporated as a city 1846. Population (1890), 70,028.

Cambridge (käm'brij) (Adolphus Frederick), Duke of. Born at London, Feb. 24, 1774; died July 8, 1850. An English general, youngest son of George III. He was viceroy of Hannover 1831-37.

Cambridge, University of. A celebrated university at Cambridge, England. It was a center of learning in the 12th century, and in 1231 Henry III. issued writs for the regulation of Cambridge "clerks." It contains twenty colleges: St. Peter's, founded as a hospital in 1257, converted into a college by Hugh de Balsham 1280-86; Clare, by Richard Badew in 1326 as University Hall, refounded by the Countess of Clare in 1359; Pembroke, by the Countess of Pembroke in 1347; Gonville and Caius, by Gonville in 1348 and Caius in 1358; Trinity Hall, by Dameau in 1359; Corpus Christi, or Benet College, by Cambridge guilds in 1352; King's, by Henry VI. in 1441; Queens', by Margaret of Anjou in 1448 and Elizabeth Woodville in 1465; St. Catherine's, by Woodlark in 1473; Jesus, by Aleock in 1496; Christ's, by William Eingham as a school in 1483, refounded by Margaret Beaufort, mother of Henry VII., in 1535; St. John's, founded as a hospital in 1155, refounded in 1511 by Margaret Beaufort; Magdalene, established as a hostel for students in 1428, given to Lord Audley who founded it as a college in 1519; Trinity, by Henry VIII. in 1546 on several earlier foundations; Emmanuel, by Mildmay in 1584; Sidney Sussex, by the Countess of Sussex in 1595; Downing, by Sir George Downing, died 1741 (charter in 1800); Ayer's Hall, founded in 1884, "to provide an economical education for theological students and others"; Cavendish College, in 1873, by an association, for younger students; Selwyn College, in 1882, in memory of George Augustus Selwyn. (See these names.) The university library contains about 400,000 volumes, 6,723 manuscripts; the library of Trinity College, 90,000 volumes. It has (1893) 2,209 students and 120 instructors.

Cambridge Platform. A declaration of principles respecting church government and doctrine adopted by a synod, composed of representatives of the Congregational churches of New England, held at Cambridge, Massachusetts, in 1648.

Cambridgeport (käm'brij-pört). A manufacturing district of the city of Cambridge, Massachusetts, lying on the Charles River, opposite Boston, 1½ miles west of the state-house.

Cambridgeshire (käm'brij-shir), or Cambridge. An eastern county of England, lying between Lincoln on the north, Norfolk and Suffolk on the east, Essex and Hertford on the south, and Northampton, Huntingdon, and Bedford on the west. It is divided into Cambridge proper and the Isle of Ely; it forms part of the fen country which was largely reclaimed in the 17th and 18th centuries. It formed part of East Anglia, and was included in the Danelaw. It was celebrated for its resistance to William the Conqueror, and sided with Parliament in the 17th century. It contains Roman remains. Area, 859 square miles. Population (1891), 188,961.

Cambronne (kon-brōn'), Count Pierre Jacques Etienne. Born at St. Sébastien, near Nantes, France, Dec. 26, 1770; died at Nantes, Jan. 8, 1842. A celebrated French general. He fought against the Vendéens, participated as colonel in the campaigns of 1812 and 1813, accompanied Napoleon to Elba, was made lieutenant-general and admitted to the Chamber of Peers during the Hundred Days, and commanded a division of the Imperial Guard at Waterloo. He is the reputed author of the expression "La garde meurt et ne se rend pas" ('The guard dies, but never surrenders'), incorrectly said to have been used by him at Waterloo when asked to surrender.

Cambuscan (kam-bus-kan' or kam-bus'kan). A Tatar king in Chaucer's "The Squire's Tale," who had most wonderful magical possessions—a ring, a glass, a sword, and a brzen horse. He is the father of Canace, Camballo, and Algarsife. Chaucer did not finish the story.

Cambuskenneth (kam-bus-ken'eth) Abbey. An abbey situated near Stirling, Scotland. Near here, 1297, took place the battle of Stirling. See Stirling, Battle of.

Cambyes (kam-bi'séz) I. [Old Pers. Kabiyiya, which is thought to be derived from the Sanskrit kab, to praise, and uji, speaker. The Greeks inserted the euphonic m before the b. An Aryan people existed in the northwest corner of India under the name of Kamboja, which has survived as the name of a country bordering on Siam.] A Persian king whose historical character is doubtful. In the genealogy of Xerxes, as given by Herodotus, both he and his son Cyrus are omitted, and Diodorus, where he gives this name, seems to mean the father of Cyrus the Great. On the other hand, a Cambyses is mentioned whose sister was the ancestress in the fourth degree of one of the seven conspirators. Possibly Cambyses I. was one of the sons of Theispes (on the Cuneiform monuments Chishpaish), and grandson of Achemenes.

Cambyses II. The son and successor of Cyrus I., and father of Cyrus II., called "The Great." According to Herodotus he was merely a Persian nobleman, but Xenophon states that he was king of the country, and his statement is confirmed by native records.

Cambyses III. The son and successor of Cyrus the Great, 529-522 B. C. He is depicted as despotic and tyrannical. He defeated Psammetichus III. (called by the Greeks Psammetichus), king of Egypt, in the battle of Pelusium (525 B. C.), and incorporated that country in the Persian empire. His expeditions against Ammon and Ethiopia were unfortunate. While he was devastating Egypt, an impostor assuming the name of his brother Bardia (called by the Greeks Smerdis) who was secretly assassinated at Cambyses's instigation, forced him to return to Persia, but he died on the way from a wound inflicted by himself.

Cambyses, King of Persia. A play by Thomas Preston, written as early as 1561. "In allusion to a passage in it, 'Cambyses vein' has, in consequence of its being cited by Shakspeare, become proverbial for rant, [but] the language of the play is in no instance specially obnoxious to this charge." Ward.

Camden (kam'den). A town in Kershaw County, South Carolina, near the Wateree River 32 miles northeast of Columbia. Here, Aug. 16, 1780, the British under Cornwallis defeated the Americans under Gates; the loss of the Americans was about 2,000, including De Kalb. Near here, at Hobkirk's Hill, April 25, 1781, the British under Rawdon defeated the Americans under Greene. The first battle is also called the battle of Sanders' Creek.

Camden. A city and port of entry, capital of Camden County, New Jersey, situated on the Delaware River opposite Philadelphia. It is a railway center, and is noted for its manufactures and ship-building. Population (1890), 58,313.

Camden, Earl. See Pratt, Charles.

Camden (kam'den), William. Born at London, May 2, 1551; died at Chiselhurst, Kent, Nov. 9, 1623. A noted English historian and antiquary. His chief works are "Britannia" (1583), "Annales rerum Anglicarum et Hibernicarum regnante Elizabetha" (1615).

Camden Society. An English historical society formed in 1838 for the publication of documents relating to English history; named from William Camden.

Camden Town. A northern quarter of London, east of Regent's Park. "[It] takes its name from the first Earl of Camden, who acquired large property here by his marriage with Miss Geffreys." Harr, I, 221.

Camelford (kam'el-fôrd). A town in Cornwall, England, situated 15 miles west of Launceston. It is one of the places identified as the Camelot of the Arthurian cycle, and a traditional scene of the final battle between Arthur and Modred.

Camelon (kam'el-on), in Scotland. See the extract.

At Camelon, on the Firth of Forth, we found the site of the battle that closed the career of the historical Arthur in 537. Stuart Glennie, Arthurian Localities, iii, 2.

Camelopardalis (ka-mel-ô- or kam'ê-lô-pâr'da-lis). The Camelopard, a northern constellation formed by Bartsch and named by Hevelius. It is situated between Cepheus, Perseus, Ursa Major and Minor, and Draco. As given by Hevelius, the name was Camelopardalus.

Camelot (kam'e-lot). A legendary spot in England where Arthur was said to have had his palace and court, and where the Round Table was. Shakspeare alludes to it in "Lear," ii, 2, 79.

"Goose, if I had you upon Sarum plain,
I'd drive ye cackling home to Camelot."

This is supposed to be in allusion to the fact that great quantities of geese were bred on the moors near Camelot in Somersetshire. Capell maintained that Camelot was, or was near, Winchester. Caxton locates it in Wales. Tennyson alludes to it in "The Lady of Shalott" and in the "Idylls."

Camel's Hump. One of the chief peaks of the Green Mountains, Vermont. It is west of Montpelier. Height, about 4,000 feet.

Camenæ (ka-mê'nê). In Italian mythology, four prophetic divinities; by Roman poets identified with the Muses.

Camerarius (kâ-mâ-râ'rê-ôs) (Liebhard), Joa-chim. [L., 'Chamberlain.'] Born at Bamberg, Bavaria, April 12, 1500; died at Leipsic, April 17, 1574. A German scholar, author of a life of Melancthon (1536), and editor of Melancthon's letters (1569).

Camerarius, Rudolf Jakob. Born at Tübingen, Württemberg, Feb. 12, 1665; died at Tübingen, Sept. 11, 1721. A German physician and botanist, author of "De sexu plantarum epistola" (1694), etc.

Camerino (kâ-mâ-rê'nô). A town in the province of Macerata, Italy, in lat. 43° 9' N., long. 13° 5' E. It was the ancient Camerinum. It was annexed to the Papal States in the middle of the 16th century.

Cameron (kam'e-rôn), James Donald. Born at Middletown, Dauphin County, Pa., May 14, 1833. An American politician. He graduated at Princeton in 1852, was president of the Northern Central Railway Company of Pennsylvania 1863-74, and was secretary of war under President Grant May 22, 1876-March 3, 1877, when he was elected a United States senator from Pennsylvania as a Republican.

Cameron, John. Born at Glasgow about 1579; died at Montauban, France, 1625. A Scottish theologian, an advocate of "passive obedience." He became professor of divinity at Saumur, and later at Montauban. His followers in France were called Cameronites (which see).

Cameron, Richard. Born at Falkland, Fifeshire, Scotland; killed near Aird's Moss, Ayrshire, Scotland, July 20, 1680. A noted Scottish Presbyterian minister, and leader of the Covenanters. His followers, a sect of Scottish dissenters, were called Cameronians (which see).

Cameron, Simon. Born in Lancaster County, Pa., March 8, 1799; died there, June 26, 1889. An American politician. He was in 1815 elected United States senator for Pennsylvania to succeed Buchanan, who had been appointed secretary of state by President Polk. His term expired March 4, 1849. During his term of office he acted with the Democratic party; but having about 1855 identified himself with the People's party, he was in 1856 returned to the Senate as a Republican. He was secretary of war in the cabinet of Lincoln, March 4, 1861-Jan. 11, 1862, when he was appointed United States minister to Russia, a post which he resigned the following year. He served as senator from Pennsylvania 1866-77, when he resigned and was succeeded by his son James Donald Cameron.

Cameron, Verney Lovett. Born July 1, 1844; died March 26, 1894. A noted English explorer. As a naval officer he was chosen in 1872, by the Royal Geographical Society, to lead an expedition in search of Livingston. In March, 1873, he started from Bagamoyo. In Unyanyembe he met Livingston's body, but proceeded to Lake Tanganyika. His two European assistants died soon, and he had to carry on his explorations alone. He circumnavigated the Tanganyika, discovered the Lukuga, and made his way through Urua and southern Lunda to Benguela and Loanda, where he arrived in Nov., 1875. He was the first explorer to cross Africa from east to west. His "Across Africa" appeared in 1876. In 1878 he made a railroad survey in Asia Minor and Persia. Since 1887 he has lectured and written on antislavery.

Cameronians (kam'e-rô'nî-anz). 1. The followers of Richard Cameron in Scotland. They refused to accept the indulgence granted to the Presbyterian clergy in the persecuting times of Charles II., lest by so doing they should be understood to recognize his ecclesiastical authority. They were known at first as The Societies, but were afterward organized as the Reformed Presbyterian Church of Scotland, most of which in 1876 was merged in the Free Church.

2. A name given to the 26th regiment of British infantry, from its having been originally composed of the Cameronians who flocked to Edinburgh during the revolution of 1688. Its nucleus consisted of the men who fought under Richard Cameron at Aird's Moss in 1680, when he was killed.

Cameronites (kam'e-rôn-its). A group of French Protestants, professing a modified Calvinism, led by John Cameron, a native of Glasgow, professor of theology at Saumur and elsewhere. They were condemned by the Synod of Dort.

Caminha (kâ-mên'ya). Pedro Vaz de. A Portuguese who accompanied Pedro Alvares Cabral in 1500 as secretary of the proposed factory at Calicut. He wrote a letter, still preserved in Lisbon, which is the oldest extant description of the discovery of Brazil. This was first published by Muñoz, 1790, and there are subsequent editions. Caminha probably perished in the massacre at Calicut, Dec. 16, 1500.

Camisards (kam'i-zârdz). A name given to the French Protestants of the Cévennes who took up arms in defense of their civil and religious liberties early in the 18th century; so called from the white blouses worn by the peasants who were the chief actors in the insurrection.

Camlan, Battle of. A battle which took place in Cornwall about 537, in which both Arthur and his nephew Modred fell in single combat.

Cammin. See Kammin.

Camões (in Portuguese spelling, Camões) (kam'ô-ens; Pg. pron. kâ-môn'êsh). Luiz de. Born at Lisbon (?) in 1524 (?); died at Lisbon, June 10, 1580. A celebrated Portuguese poet.

He was of gentle birth, and was educated at Coimbra. On leaving college he returned to Lisbon, and quickly became accustomed to court life and manners. His romantic passion for Donna Caterina de Ataide, a high-born lady in attendance on the queen, with the jealousy of another lover and the dislike of her father, was one of the principal reasons for his banishment from Lisbon about 1547. In 1550 he, having joined the army of Africa, lost the sight of his right eye in a naval engagement at Ceuta. After a careless and somewhat dissolute period, he was cast into prison in 1553 for wounding one of the king's eunuchs in a street fracas. He was pardoned on condition of his immediate embarkation for India. He reached Goa in the same year. He joined several naval expeditions, and on his return to Goa he devoted his pen to the exposure of the abuses so rife in the East, and became very unpopular in consequence. After seventeen years of adventure and suffering from persecution and imprisonment in Goa, Macao, Mozambique, and Sofala, he was allowed to return to Portugal in 1570. "He lived poor and neglected, and so died," is said to have been placed on a marble tablet to his memory on the wall of the church of the convent of Santa Anna, both church and tablet having been destroyed by earthquake in 1775. His great epic, "Os Lusíadas" ("The Lusiad"; which see), written during his banishment, and perfected in his humble home in Lisbon, was first published in 1572. Its success was great, and a second edition was published in the same year; but this only added to the malice with which he was regarded at court, and when in 1578 the young king Dom Sebastian went to Africa on his fatal expedition, Bernardes, a courtier and poet, was selected to go with him and sing his triumphs. After the defeat and death of the king "Camões went as one dreaming." Thirty-eight editions of the "Lusiad" were published in Lisbon before 1700. There are translations in nearly every European language. The first English translation was by Sir Richard Fanshawe, 1655. Mickel's translation appeared in 1776. Musgrave's in 1826. Quillman's (five cantos) in 1853. Sir Thomas Mitchell's in 1854. Camões's influence and efforts preserved the Portuguese language from destruction during the period of the Spanish occupation, when the language of the court was Castilian. His minor works, or "Rimas," were sonnets, comedies, elegies, ballads, and epigrams.

Camonica (kâ-mon'ê-kâ), Val. The valley of the Oglio in its upper course, in Lombardy, Italy, north of the Lago d'Isco.

Campagna di Roma (kâm-pân'ya dê rô'mâ). A large plain in Italy, surrounding Rome, lying between the Mediterranean and the Sabine and Alban Mountains. It corresponds in great part to the ancient Latium. It is of volcanic formation, and has been for centuries noted for its malarious climate, though in antiquity it was covered with villas and towns and was brought to a high state of cultivation. It has been reclaimed in part.

Campaign, The. A poem by Addison celebrating the battle of Blenheim, published in 1704.

Campan (koñ-poñ'). A town in the department of Hautes-Pyrénées, situated on the river Adour 18 miles southeast of Tarbes. It is noted for its picturesque scenery.

Campan, Madame (Jeanne Louise Henriette Genest). Born at Paris, Oct. 6, 1752; died at Mantes, France, March 16, 1822. A French teacher. She was, at the age of fifteen, appointed reader to the three daughters of Louis XV., was for nearly twenty years first lady of the bedchamber to Marie Antoinette, and narrowly escaped during the storming of the Tuileries by the mob, Aug. 10, 1792. After the fall of Robespierre, she opened a boarding-school for young ladies at Saint-Germain, and in 1806 was appointed by Napoleon superintendent of the school at Ecouen for daughters, sisters, and nieces of officers of the Legion of Honor, a post which she held till the abolition of the school by the Bourbons. She wrote "Mémoires sur la vie privée de Marie Antoinette" (1822), etc.

Campanerthal, or Kampanerthal (käm-pä'-ner-täl). A work on the immortality of the soul, by Jean Paul Friedrich Richter, published in 1797; named from a picturesque valley of the upper Adour in the Pyrenees.

Campania (kam-pä'-ni-ä). [Gr. Καμπανία.] In ancient geography, a region in Italy, lying between Latium on the northwest, Samnium on the north and east, Lucania on the southeast, and the Mediterranean Sea on the west. Its original inhabitants were probably of Oscan or Ausonian race; it was settled later by the Greeks, and submitted to Rome 310 B. C. It is noted for its fertility and products. It contained the ancient cities Cumæ, Capua, Baiæ, Puteoli, Herculaneum, Pompeii, etc. The modern compartmento of Campania comprises the provinces Avellino, Benevento, Caserta, Napoli, and Salerno.

Campanile of Giotto. A famous tower at Florence, Italy, begun by Giotto in 1334, and after his death, in 1337, continued by Andrea Pisano. It is square in plan, 3½ feet to a side, and 275½ feet high, and is divided by string-courses into five stories, the two lowest of which are practically solid; the two middle ones have each, on each face, two arched and traceried windows; and the highest, about twice as high as any of those below, has one large beautifully decorated and traceried window in each face, and a bold cornice. The whole exterior of the tower is incrimsted with colored marbles arranged in panels. The basement is surrounded by two ranges of reliefs, the lower in hexagonal, the upper in diamond-shaped panels, by Giotto, Andrea Pisano, and Luca della Robbia. The subjects include the Creation, the Arts and Sciences, the Cardinal Virtues, and the Works of Mercy. These reliefs are famous for their naive but wonderfully effective presentation of their story. Above is a range of large statues in niches. This campanile is the finest example of the Italian Pointed style, of which it embodies all the virtues, while possessing some of its defects.

Campanile of St. Mark's. A square tower in Venice, measuring 42 feet to a side, and 323 feet high to the angel at the apex of the pyramidal spire. It was begun in 902, but the arched belfry or "cella," with the square die and pyramid above, dates only from the 16th century. Despite its celebrity, it is ugly: the lower part is a practically plain mass of brickwork, and the belfry is crushed by the superstructure.

Campanini (käm-pä-nö-né), Italo. Born at Parma, June 29, 1846. A noted Italian tenor singer. He first attracted attention in 1871 at Bologna. In 1872 he first appeared in England, and has since been successful in St. Petersburg and Moscow, and in America.

Campbell (kam'bel; Se. pron. kam'cl), Alexander. [The name Campbell, more correctly spelled Cambell, is from Gael. Caimbeul, lit. 'wry-mouth,' from cam, wry, and beul, mouth.] Born near Ballymena, in the county of Antrim, Ireland, Sept. 12, 1788; died at Bethany, W. Va., March 4, 1866. A clergyman, founder (about 1827) of the sect "Disciples of Christ," or "Campbellites." He came to America in 1809. He established the "Christian Baptist" in 1823, which was merged in 1830 in the "Millennial Harbinger."

Campbell, Archibald, second Earl of Argyll. Killed at Flodden, 1513. Son of the first Earl of Argyll. He became master of the royal household in 1494, and shared with the Earl of Lennox the command of the right wing of the Scottish army at the battle of Flodden, Sept. 9, 1513, in which engagement he was killed.

Campbell, Archibald, fourth Earl of Argyll. Died 1558. Grandson of the second Earl of Argyll, and a leading supporter of the Reformation. He commanded the right wing of the Scottish army at the battle of Pinkie in 1547, and in the following year rendered important service at the siege of Haddington. He embraced the Reformation, and was a warm supporter of Knox, whom he entertained at Castle Campbell in 1556.

Campbell, Archibald, fifth Earl of Argyll. Died Sept. 12, 1573. Son of the fourth Earl of Argyll, and a supporter of Mary Queen of Scots. He was originally one of the leaders of the Lords of the Congregation, but afterward became a partizan of Mary Queen of Scots, was a party to the murder of Darnley and the marriage of Bothwell, and commanded the queen's forces at Langside, May 13, 1568. He made his submission to the Earl of Moray in 1569, and in 1572 was appointed lord high chancellor.

Campbell, Archibald, eighth Earl and first Marquis of Argyll. Beheaded at Edinburgh, May 27, 1661. A Scottish nobleman. He sided with the Covenanters; became marquis in 1641; and was defeated by Montrose in 1645. He sided with Charles II. after the death of Charles I., but submitted later to Cromwell. At the Restoration he was executed for treason.

Campbell, Archibald, ninth Earl of Argyll. Beheaded at Edinburgh, June 30, 1685. Son of the eighth Earl of Argyll. He supported the Royalists in the civil wars, and Charles II. after the Restoration. He was obliged to leave Scotland at the end of the reign of Charles II., on the charge of treason. He landed in Scotland in 1685 to take part in Monmouth's rising, and was executed for treason.

Campbell, Archibald, first Duke of Argyll. Died Sept. 20 (28?), 1703. Son of the ninth Earl of Argyll, created duke 1701. He favored the Revolution, and was one of the commissioners who offered the Scottish crown to William and Mary at London in 1689.

Campbell, Archibald, third Duke of Argyll. Born at Petersham, Surrey, in June, 1682; died April 15, 1761. A Scottish statesman, brother of the second Duke of Argyll. He was a firm supporter of Walpole, by whom he was intrusted with the chief management of Scotch affairs. He was appointed lord keeper of the privy seal in 1725, and keeper of the great seal in 1734, which latter post he occupied until his death.

Campbell, Colin, first Earl of Argyll. Died 1493. A Scottish nobleman, created earl in 1457. He was one of the conspirators against James III. in 1487.

Campbell, Colin, Baron Clyde. Born at Glasgow, Oct. 20, 1792; died at Chatham, England, Aug. 14, 1863. A British field-marshal. He served with distinction at Chillianwalla and Gujerat, 1849, and at the Alma and Balaklava, 1854; was commander-in-chief in Bengal in 1857; rescued Havelock and Outram at Lucknow and then relieved Awnpore, and recaptured Lucknow in 1858. He was made a K. C. B. in 1849, and was elevated to the peerage as Baron Clyde of Clydesdale in 1858.

Campbell, George. Born at Aberdeen, Scotland, Dec. 25, 1719; died there, April 6, 1796. A Scottish theologian and philosophical writer. He was ordained in 1748, became minister at Aberdeen in 1757, and in 1759 was appointed principal of Marischal College. His chief works are "Dissertation on Miracles" (1762), "Philosophy of Rhetoric" (1776), and "Translation of the Gospels" (1789).

Campbell, George Douglas, eighth Duke of Argyll. Born April 30, 1823. A Scottish statesman and writer. He was lord privy seal 1853-55; postmaster-general 1855-58; lord privy seal 1859-66; secretary for India 1868-74; and lord privy seal 1880-81. His chief works include "The Reign of Law" (1866), "Scotland as It Was and as It Is" (1887).

Campbell, John, second Duke of Argyll. Born 1678; died 1743. A Scottish general and statesman, son of the first Duke of Argyll. He took part in effecting the union; commanded at Sheriffmuir in 1715; and sided at different times with the Whigs and Tories. He was created duke of Greenwich in 1719.

Cana, Marriage at. See Marriage at Cana.

Canaan (kɑ̃-nan). 1. The fourth son of Ham (Gen. ix. 25 ff., x. 6-15).—2. More frequently, 'Land of Canaan' (Gen. xi. 31, xii. 5; Isa. xxiii. 11; Zeph. ii. 5, etc.). Interpreted to mean 'lowland,' from Semitic kanā, to humble, subdue, generally denoting in the Old Testament the country west of the Jordan and the Dead Sea to the Mediterranean. As the name "lowland" would indicate, originally it comprised only the strip of land, from 10 to 15 miles in breadth and 150 in length, shut in between the Lebanon and the Mediterranean, and extending from the Bay of Antioch to the promontory of the Carmel, i. e. southern Phœnicia. To this maritime plain of the Phœnicians and Philistines passages like Isa. xlviii. 11, Zeph. ii. 5 refer. Later the name was extended to the whole west-Jordanic territory. Thus also in the Tel-el-Amarna tablets, which date back a century before the exodus, Kinnak, or Canaan, denotes the district between the cities of Philistia and the country northward of Gebel (Byblos). The Egyptians named it the land of Kefl, or the "palm," of which the Greek φοίνιξ (see Phœnicia) is a translation. 3. The non-Israelitish inhabitants of Palestine (more frequently in the plural, "the Canaanites"). The origin and affinities of the various tribes are still disputed.

Candide (kōn-dēd'), ou L'Optimisme (ō lop-tē-mēzm'). A philosophical novel by Voltaire, published in 1759. It is named from its hero, who bears all the worst ills of life with a cool, philosophical indifference, laughing at its miseries. (See Pangloss.) A second part followed, with the same name, by an anonymous writer.

Written ostensibly to ridicule philosophical optimism, and on the spur given to pessimist theories by the Lisbon earthquake, Candide is really as comprehensive as it is desultory. Religion, political government, national peculiarities, human weakness, ambition, love, loyalty, all come in for the unflinching sneer. The moral, wherever there is a moral, is, "be tolerant, and cultivate your garden," that is to say, do whatsoever work you have to do diligently. Saintsbury, French Lit., p. 423.

Candolle (kōn-dol'), Alphonse Louis Pierre Pyramus de. Born at Paris, Oct. 23, 1806; died April 4, 1893. A Swiss botanist, professor at the Academy of Geneva, son of Augustin de Candolle. Cano, Diego. See Cam, Diogo.

Cano, Juan Sebastian del. Born at Guetaria, in Guipuzcoa, about 1460; died Aug. 4, 1526. A Spanish navigator. After commanding a ship in the Mediterranean, in 1519 he was made captain of the Concepcion, one of the ships in the fleet of Magellan (which see). After the death of Magellan, Carabello was put in command, but was soon deposed, and Cano took his place. He reached the Moluccas, loaded his two remaining ships with spices, and finally in one of them (the Victoria) arrived at Spain Sept. 6, 1522, by way of the Cape of Good Hope, being thus the first circumnavigator of the globe. He was second in command in the expedition of Loaisa, destined to follow the same track. Leaving Spain July 24, 1525, they encountered severe storms on the South American coast and in the Pacific; sickness appeared in the vessels, Loaisa perished, and Cano took command, but died less than a week after.

Canongate (kan'on-gät). The principal thoroughfare in the Old Town of Edinburgh. The little burgh of the Canongate grew around the abbey of Holyrood, which is about a mile east of the castle, in the 12th century, soon after the founding of the abbey. The street runs from that point, bearing different names at various parts of its course. Scott laid the scene of his "Chronicles of the Canongate" there.

Canonicus (ka-non'i-kus). Died June 4, 1647.

A chief of the Narragansett Indians. Alarmed by the alliance of the colonists at Plymouth with his enemy Mnasasot, he sent Governor Bradford in Jan., 1622, a hostile message consisting of a bundle of arrows wrapped in a rattlesnake's skin, but did not follow up the threat implied in this message when Bradford promptly returned the rattlesnake's skin stuffed with powder and ball. He gave to Roger Williams the land on which the town of Providence was founded in 1636; and acknowledged the sovereignty of Britain in a treaty concluded April 19, 1644.

Canon's Yeoman's Tale, The. One of Chaucer's "Canterbury Tales." It exposes the tricks of the alchemists. Ashinole in his "Theatrum Chemicum" quotes the whole poem, with the prologue, under the impression, apparently, that Chaucer was an adept in the art, and wrote in its favor. The canon is a raged alchemist who has no gold but what he gets by trickery, and he and his hungry yeoman join the Canterbury pilgrims to practise their thieving arts upon them.

Canova (kä-nō'vä), Antonio. Born at Possagno, near Treviso, Nov. 1, 1757; died at Venice, Oct. 13, 1822. A celebrated Italian sculptor.

At seventeen he made the statue of Orpheus and Eurydice for Fallier, which brought him commission for Apollo and Daphne and Dedalus and Icarus. In 1779 he obtained a pension from the municipality of Venice, and went to Rome. His first work of importance in Rome was Theseus and Minotaur. For the remainder of his life he was established in Rome, although he made various journeys in Europe, and was three times in Paris—twice to execute commissions for Napoleon I. and his family, and once, after the battle of Waterloo, on a mission from the Pope to recover the works of art taken from Italy by the emperor. At this time he was called to London to pronounce upon the artistic importance of the Elgin Marbles. He was very successful in the business of his profession, and organized a system of reproducing his models mechanically which enabled him to produce a vast amount of work. Among his most celebrated productions are the Pegasus of the Belvedere, made to replace the Apollo Belvedere while the latter was in Paris; the two boxers Kreuzgaa and Damoxenes, also in the Belvedere; the Venus which stood on the pedestal of the Medici Venus when the latter was taken to Paris; the Cupid and Psyche of the Louvre; Paris of the Glyptothek, Munich; Hercules and Lichas, in Venice; and the great group of Theseus and the Centaur which was suggested by a metope of the Parthenon: it is in a specially designed temple at Vienna. At the end of his life Canova projected the temple of Possagno, in which he combined the characteristics of the Pantheon and Parthenon, and even modeled some of the metopes before his death.

Cantemir, Demetrius. Born Oct. 26, 1673; died Aug. 23, 1723. A Moldavian historian. He was appointed hospodar of Moldavia by the Porte in 1710; formed a treaty with Peter the Great in 1711, according to which Moldavia was declared independent of the Porte and placed under the protection of Russia; and was driven from Moldavia, and in compensation extensive domains in the Ukraine from Peter the Great. He wrote "Growth and Decline of the Ottoman Empire" (in Latin), which has not been printed in the original, but has been published in several translations.

Canterac (kān-te-rāk'), José. Born in France about 1775; died at Madrid, 1835. A general in the Spanish army. He was sent in 1815 (then a brigadier-general) with Morillo to America; went to Peru (1818), and fought several campaigns with La Serna in Charcas; led the military cabal which deposed the viceroy Pezuela at Lima and put La Serna in his place (Jan. 29, 1823); in 1824 opposed the march of Bolívar; was defeated in the cavalry engagement of Junin (Aug. 6); and in the final battle of Ayacucho (Dec. 9, 1824) commanded the reserve. He was shot while trying to suppress a mutiny at Madrid.

Canterbury (kan'tēr-ber-ī). [ME. Canterbury, Cauntirbyry, etc., AS. Canteraburh (dat. Canteraburh), the borough of the Kentmen; gen. pl. of Canterare, Kentmen, and burh, borough, city.] A city in Kent, England, situated on the Stour in lat. 51° 16' N., long. 1° 5' E.: the Roman Durovernum and Saxon Cantwara-byrig. Its chief objects of interest are the cathedral, St. Martin's Church, St. Dunstan's Church, remains of the castle, the monastery of St. Augustine, and many old houses. It is on the site of a British village, and was a Roman military station and a Kentish town. Augustine here in 606 became the first archbishop. It was sacked by the Danes in 1011. The cathedral was founded in the 11th century. The existing choir was built by William of Sens, France, after 1174, and the Perpendicular nave, transepts, and great central tower are of the 15th century. In plan the cathedral is long and narrow, with double transepts. The interior is light and impressive. The choir is raised several feet, and separated from the nave by a sculptured 15th-century screen. The columns, arcades, vaulting, and chancel are very similar in character to those of the cathedral of Sens, which supplied the model. Some of the glass of the deambulatory is of the 13th century. The portion of the choir behind the altar contains several fine altartombs of early archbishops, and the tombs of Henry IV. and the Black Prince. At the extreme east end is a beautiful circular chapel called the Corona. The crypt is very large, and early Norman in style. The Perpendicular cloisters are ornate and picturesque. The dimensions of the cathedral are 514 by 71 feet; the height of the nave-vaulting 80, and of the central tower 235. St. Martin's is called the "Mother Church of England." The original foundation was no doubt pre-Saxon, and there are Roman bricks in the lower parts of the walls. The upper parts of the long, low, quaint, ivy-clad structure are much later. Population (1891), 23,026.

Canterbury, Unl 1876, a province in the South Island, New Zealand.

Canterbury, Viscount. See Sutton.

Canterbury College. An ancient college of Oxford University. It was founded by Simon Islip, archbishop of Canterbury, in 1361 or 1362. John Wyclif was the second warden. It was disbanded in the reign of Henry VIII., and the last remains of its buildings were demolished in 1775.

Canterbury Tales, The. A work by Chaucer (c. 1340-1400), consisting of twenty-two tales in verse, with two in prose, told by twenty-three pilgrims out of the twenty-nine who meet at the Tabard Inn in Southwark, on their way to the shrine of Thomas à Becket at Canterbury. About fifty manuscripts of the "Canterbury Tales" are known to exist. The Chaucer Society (Furnival) has printed six of the best of them in parallel columns. These are the Ellesmere, belonging to Lord Ellesmere; the Hengwrt, belonging to Mr. William W. E. Wynne of Penarth; the Petworth, belonging to Lord Leconfield; and one from each of the Chaucer collections at Oxford, Cambridge, and the British Museum. The Harleian manuscript from the British Museum, first edited by Wright for the Percy Society, was afterward reprinted. Two editions were published by Caxton, the first thought to have been printed in 1475, the second about six years later from a better manuscript. Wyknen de Worde published an edition in 1495 and another in 1498; Richard Pynson, one in 1493 and again in 1526. In 1532 William Thynne made an attempt to collect all Chaucer's works, both prose and verse, in one volume. It was printed by Godfrey, and for two hundred and fifty years was the standard text of the "Canterbury Tales." After this they were included in all the editions of Chaucer. (See Chaucer.) Professor Skeat has edited some of the separate poems. The "Canterbury Tales" are: The General Prologue, The Knight's Tale, The Miller's Tale, The Reeve's Tale, The Cook's Tale, The Man of Law's Tale, The Shipman's Tale, The Prioress's Tale, Chaucer's Tale of Sir Thopas, Chaucer's Tale of Melibeus, The Monk's Tale, The Nun's Priest's Tale, The Doctor's Tale, The Pardoner's Tale, The Wife of Bath's Tale, The Friar's Tale, The Summoner's Tale, The Clerk's Tale, The Merchant's Tale, The Squire's Tale, The Franklin's Tale, The Second Nun's Tale, The Canon's Yeoman's Tale, The Manciple's Tale, and The Parson's Tale. They were modernized by several hands and published by Tonson in 1741. Much of the work was done by Ogle (who started it), also by Samuel Boase, Henry Burke, and Jeremiah Markland. The edition was not completed when Ogle died in 1746. It was taken up by Rev. William Lipscomb in 1792. He brought out a version of The Pardoner's Tale, the rest following. In 1795 the whole edition was published, including Tonson's edition. The General Prologue was modernized by Betterton, and posthumously published in 1712.

It is situated in the left shoulder of Auriga, in front of the Great Bear, nearly on a line with the two northernmost of the seven stars forming Charles's Wain; and it is easily recognized by the proximity of "the Kids," three stars of the fourth magnitude forming an isosceles triangle. The color of Capella is nearly the same as that of the sun.

Capella, Martianus Mineus Felix. Lived in the last part of the 5th century (?) A. D. A writer of northern Africa (Carthage). His chief work is an allegorical encyclopedia of the liberal arts ("Satyra de nuptiis Philologie et Mercurii"), in nine books.

Capello, or Cappello (káp-pel'lo), Bianca. Born at Venice about 1562; died at the castle Poggio di Cajano, Oct. 11, 1587 (?). An Italian adventuress belonging to a noble Venetian family. She eloped with Buonaventuri in 1563; married Francesco, grand duke of Tuscany in 1578; and was recognized as grand duchess in 1579.

Capello, Hermenegildo Augusto de Brito. Born at Lisbon, Portugal, 1839. A naval officer and African explorer. He was sent with Robert Ivens and Major Serpa Pinto, by the Portuguese government in 1877, to explore Angola. They separated from Serpa Pinto, and explored the Kuangu basin from its head waters to the Yaka country. This journey is described in "From Benguela to Yacca" (1881). In 1884, again in the service of the government, they crossed the continent from Portuguese West Africa to Portuguese East Africa. Starting from Mossamedes, they successively explored Amboella, the Upper Zambesi valley up to its watershed with the Kongo-Lualaba; traversed Msidi's kingdom; joined again the Zambesi at Zumbo, and reached the east coast at Quilimane in May, 1885. Their "De Angola à Contra-Costa" appeared in 1886.

Cape May. 1. The southernmost point of New Jersey, situated at the entrance of Delaware Bay, in lat. 38° 56' N., long. 74° 57' W.—2. A city and watering-place at the southern extremity of New Jersey, in Cape May County. Also called Cape City, and Cape Island City. Population (1890), 2,136.

Cape of Storms, Pg. Cabo Tormentoso. The name first given by Dias, in 1486, to the Cape of Good Hope.

Caper (ká'pér). A "high fantastical" character in Allingham's comedy "Who Wins, or The Widow's Choice," made elaborately nonsensical by Liston.

Cape River. The D'Govia or Wanx River, on the northern boundary of Nicaragua.

Capernaum (ka-pér'nā-um). [Aram., 'village of Nahum.'] In the time of Christ, an important place on the western shore of the Sea of Galilee, about an hour distant from where the Jordan falls into the sea. It was the scene of many incidents and acts in the life of Christ, and is sometimes called "his own city" (Mat. ix. 1). It had a Roman garrison (Mat. viii. 5 ff.). It is identified by most archaeologists with the modern ruins of Tel Hum, by some with Khan Miniyeh.

Capet (ká'pet; F. pron. ká-pá'). A surname of the kings of France, commencing with Hugh Capet, 987.

Capet, Hugh. See Hugh Capet.

Capetians (ka-pé'shianz). [F. Capétiens.] A royal family reigning over France as the 3d dynasty, 987-1328. Collateral branches were the ducal house of Burgundy, and the houses of Anjou, Bourbon, and Valois.

Cape Town (káp ton). The capital of Cape Colony, South Africa, situated on Table Bay at the foot of Table Mountain, in lat. 33° 56' S., long. 18° 26' E. It is an important seaport; its chief buildings are the houses of Parliament. It was founded by the Dutch in 1651. Population (1891), 51,251.

Cape Verd, or Verde (káp vérd). ['Green cape.'] The westernmost point of Africa, in Senegambia, in lat. 14° 43' N., long. 17° 30' W.

Cape Verd, or Verde, Islands. [Pg. Ilhas do Cabo Verde.] A group of islands lying in the Atlantic, west of Cape Verd, belonging to Portugal. The chief islands are Santiago, Fogo, São Antão, Brava, and São Nicolão. They are mountainous and volcanic. The capital of the islands is Porto Praya. They were discovered and colonized by the Portuguese in the middle of the 15th century. Area, 1,650 square miles. Population, mostly negroes, about 111,000.

Capgrave (kap'gräv), John. Born at Lynn, Norfolk, England, April 21, 1393; died at Lynn, Aug. 12, 1464. An English historian, provincial of the Augustinian order in England. He wrote a "Chronicle of England," from the creation to A. D. 1417, "Liber de Illustribus Henricis" ("Book of the Illustris Henrys"). "A Guide to the Antiquities of Rome," and other historical and theological works in Latin. The chronicle and the lives of the Henrys were published in the Rolls Series (ed. F. C. Hingston, 1858).

Caph (kaf). [Ar., 'the hand.'] The bright third-magnitude, slightly variable and spectroscopically interesting star β Cassiopeie. The Arabic name refers, however, to a different form of the constellation from that represented on our modern star-maps, which show the star as on the framework of the lady's chair.

Cap Haitien (káp i-è-tè-an'), or Cape Haytien (káp hä'ti-en). A seaport in northern Haiti, in lat. 19° 46' N., long. 72° 11' W. It was bombarded by the British in 1865. Population, estimated, 12,000. Formerly called Guarico, Cap Français, Le Cap, etc.

Caphis (ká'fis). A servant of Timon's creditors, in Shakspeare's "Timon of Athens."

Caphtor (kaf'tor'). The name of a country in the Old Testament, mentioned as the starting-point in the migrations of the Philistines, whence they are also called Caphtorim (Dent. ii. 23, Jer. xlvii. 4, Amos ix. 7); formerly identified with Cappadocia or Cyprus, but considered by most modern scholars as identical with Crete. This view is favored by many passages in which the Philistines are called Cretans (Cherethites) (Ezek. xvi. 16, Zeph. ii. 5, 1 Sam. xxx. 14), and it is supported by ancient writers who connected the Philistines with the island of Crete. In Gen. x. 14 the Caphtorim are enumerated among the descendants of Egypt (Mizraim), and it is therefore assumed that a portion of the Philistines emigrated from Crete by way of Egypt to Palestine.

Capistrano (ká-pēs-trá'nō), or Capistran (káp-is-trán'), Giovanni di (L. Johannes Capistranus), Saint. Born at Capistrano, in the Abruzzi, Italy, June 24, 1386; died at Illoek, in Slavonia, Oct. 23, 1456. An Italian monk of the order of St. Francis. He distinguished himself by his preachings against the Hussite heresy in Bohemia and Moravia, and in 1456 led an army of crusaders to the relief of Belgrad which was besieged by Mohammed II. Author of "Speculum conscientie."

Capitaine Fracasse (ká-pé-tán' frá-käs'), Le. A novel by Théophile Gautier. The title of the book is the stage name adopted by De Sigognac, the hero, on joining a company of strolling players.

Capitan (Sp. pron. ká-pé-tán'; F. pron. ká-pé-ton'). [Sp., 'captain.'] A character of ridiculous bravado, introduced conventionally in early Italian comedy, probably originating in the "Miles Gloriosus" of Plautus, and introduced in French comedy prior to Molière. He came upon the stage only to bluster, and talked of murder and bloodshed, but submitted with great meekness to punishment. When Charles V. entered Italy a Spanish capitan was introduced who dealt in Spanish bravado and kicked out the Italian capitan; when the Spanish influence ceased in Italy, the capitan was turned into Scaramouch, who was still a coward (I. D'Israeli); hence the name was given to a person who behaved in this manner.

Capitanasses. See Onondaga.

Capitanata. See Foggia.

Capito (ká-pé-tó) (originally Köpfel), Wolfgang Fabricius. Born at Hagenau, Alsace, 1478; died at Strasburg, Nov., 1541. A German divine, a coadjutor of Luther. He became preacher in 1513 at Basel, and removed in 1519 to Mainz, where he became chancellor to Albert, elector and archbishop of Mayence. In 1523 he went to Strasburg, where he became the local leader of the Reformation. He was the chief author of the "Confessio Tetrapolitana," and devoted himself to the conciliation of the Lutherans and the Swiss reformers.

Capitol, The. [L. capitolium, from caput, head.] 1. In ancient Roman history, that part of the Capitoline Hill which was occupied by the Temple of Jupiter Optimus. See Rome.—2. As generally apprehended, the Piazza del Campidoglio on the Capitoline Hill, Rome, with the palaces which face it on three sides. The piazza is approached on the north-west by a wide, monumental flight of steps from the Piazza Araclii in front, opposite the Palace of the Senator, and flanked by the Palazzo dei Conservatori and the Capitoline Museum. This area, occupying the depression between the citadel and the site of the Capitoline temple, is the historic center of Rome. Here Romulus, according to tradition, founded his asylum, and the earliest public assemblies met. In the 11th century, upon the revival of old memories, it again became the municipal center, as the residence of the prefect and the seat of popular meetings; and here, in the old Palace of the Senator, Petrarch was crowned in 1341, and in 1347 Rienzi was established as tribune of the people. The present Palace of the Senator was founded at the end of the 14th century by Boniface IX. The existing façade, with its Corinthian pilasters and double flight of steps, as well as those of the flanking palaces, is based on designs by Michelangelo. In the center of the Piazza del Campidoglio stands the noted ancient bronze equestrian statue of Marcus Aurelius, which originally stood in the Forum Romanum, then near the Lateran, and has occupied its present position since 1538.

3. The seat of the National Congress, at Washington, D. C., founded in 1793, and completed according to the original designs in 1830, but since enlarged to over double its original area. It consists of a central cruciform building crowned by a great dome, and connected at each end by galleries with a large rectangular wing, one of which contains the Senate-chamber, and the other the Hall of Representatives. The style is Renaissance, based on English models, the dome being inspired by that of St. Paul's. The elevation exhibits a single main story, with an attic, over a high rusticated basement. The great feature of the exterior is the porticos of the central building and of the two wings, with their fine flights of steps. These porticos comprise 148 Corinthian columns 30 feet high exclusive of their high square pedestals. The dome is 257 feet high to the top of the statue above the lantern, and 94 high in interior diameter; it is very impressive in effect, though unfortunately built of cast-iron in imitation of stone. It rises from a circular drum, and is encircled by a fine Corinthian colonnade supporting a gallery. Beneath the dome is a monumental hall called the Rotunda, adorned with works of art relating to American history. The total length of the Capitol, north and south, is 751 feet.

Capitoline Hill, The. One of the seven hills of ancient Rome, northwest of the Palatine, on the left bank of the Tiber. It constituted the citadel of the city after the construction of the Servian wall. Its southwestern summit was the famed Tarpeian Rock; on its northeastern summit rose the temple of Jupiter Capitolinus. The modern Capitol stands between the two summits. From the Capitoline the Forum Romanum extends its long, narrow area toward the south-east, skirting the northern foot of the Palatine.

Capitoline Museum. One of the chief museums of antiquities of Rome. It was founded in 1471 by Sixtus IV., who presented the papal collections to the Roman people, and designated the Capitol as the place where the art-treasures of Rome should be preserved. The museum was greatly enriched by Clement XI. and Benedict XIV. The collections now occupy the palace on the left-hand side of the Piazza del Campidoglio and the Palazzo del Senator, which was built in the 17th century from modified designs of Michelangelo. Among the most noted of the antiquities of the Capitoline Museum are the colossal statue of Mars in armor, the Dying Gaul, the Satyr of Praxiteles, the Centaurs by Aristes and Papias, and the Capitoline Venus (after Praxiteles).

Capitolinus (kap'i-tó-li'nus), Julius. Lived perhaps about 300 A. D. A Roman historian, one of the writers of the Augustan History (which see).

Capmany (káp-má'nē), Montpalau y Antonio de. Born at Barcelona, Spain, Nov. 24, 1742; died at Cadiz, Spain, Nov. 14, 1813. A Spanish antiquarian, historian, philologist, and critic.

Capodistria (ká-pō-dēs'trē-ä). A town in Kiustentland, Austria-Hungary, situated on an island 8 miles south of Trieste. It has a cathedral and salt-works. Population (1890), commune, 10,706.

Capo d'Istria (ká'pō-dēs'trē-ä), or Capodistrias (ká-pō-dēs'trē-äs), Augustin. Born 1778; died in Corfu, May, 1857. A brother of Giovanni Capó d'Istria, provisional president of Greece 1831-32.

Capo d'Istria, or Capodistrias, Count Giovanni Anton. Born at Corfu, Feb. 11, 1776; killed at Nauplia, Greece, Oct. 9, 1831. President of Greece. He entered the Russian service in 1804, represented Russia in the Congress of Vienna from 1814 to 1815, and was Russian secretary of foreign affairs from 1816 to 1822. Dismissed from the Russian service, he devoted himself to the cause of Greek independence; was elected president of Greece through the influence of the Russian party in 1827; and served from 1828 to 1831, when he was assassinated by the brothers Constantine and George Mavromichalis.

Cappadocia (kap-a-dó'shiij). [Gr. Καππαδοκία.] In ancient geography, a country in the eastern part of Asia Minor, lying west of the Euphrates, north of Cilicia, and east of Lycaonia; in a wider sense, the territory in Asia Minor between the lower Halys and Euphrates, and the Taurus and the Euxine: an elevated tableland intersected by mountain-chains. It constituted under the Persians two satrapies, afterward two independent monarchies: Cappadocia on the Pontus, later called Pontus; and Cappadocia near the Taurus, called Great Cappadocia, the later Cappadocia in a narrower sense. In 17 A. D. Cappadocia became a Roman province. It had then only four cities: Mazaca, near Mount Argaus, the residence of the Cappadocian kings, later called Lasebia, and by the Romans Cæsarea, the episcopal see of St. Basil (modern Kaisariyeh); Tyana; Garsaura, the later Archelaus; and Ariarathea. Of its other cities may be mentioned Samosata, Myssa, and Nazanzus, the birth-places or seats of celebrated ecclesiastics.

Cappel (káp'pel). A village in Switzerland. See Kappel.

Capperonnier (káp-rón-yä'). Claude. Born at Montdidier, France, May 1, 1671; died at Paris, July 24, 1744. A French classical scholar. He wrote "Traité de l'ancienne prononciation de la langue grecque" (1703), etc.; and edited Quintilian (1725).

Capponi (káp-pō'nē). Gino, Marchese. Born at Florence, Sept. 14, 1792; died at Florence, Feb. 3, 1876. A noted Florentine historian, statesman, and scholar, prime minister of Tuscany 1848. He wrote "Storia della repubblica di Firenze" (1875), etc.

Capraja (káp-prā'yā). An island in the Mediterranean Sea, belonging to the province of Genoa, Italy, situated northeast of Corsica, in lat. 43° 2' N., long. 9° 50' E. It was anciently called Capraria.

Caprara, Giovanni Battista. Born at Bologna, Italy, May 29, 1733; died at Paris, June 21, 1810. An Italian cardinal and diplomatist, bishop of Milan. He negotiated the concordat at Paris in 1801.

Caprarola (káp-prā-rō'lā). A town in the province of Rome, Italy, situated 31 miles north of Rome. It contains the Farnese palace. Population, 5,000.

Caprera (káp-prā'rā), or Cabrera (káp-brā'rā). An island north of Sardinia, belonging to the province of Sassari, Italy, situated in lat. 41° 14' N., long. 9° 28' E. It was the usual residence of Garibaldi in 1854-82.

Capri (káp-prē). A small island of Italy, off the coast of Campania, 19 miles south of Naples: the ancient Caprē. It is a favorite resort for tourists and artists on account of its picturesque and bold scenery. Among the points of interest are the towns of Capri and Anacapri, the Blue Grotto, and the Villa di Tiberio. It was the favorite residence of Augustus, and is especially famous as the abode of Tiberius in the last half of his reign and the scene of his licentious orgies. Highest point, Monte Solaro (1,920 feet). Population, about 4,900.

Capricornus (káp-ri-kōr'nus). [L., 'goat-horned.'] An ancient zodiacal constellation between Sagittarius and Aquarius; also, one of the twelve signs of the zodiac, the winter solstice. It is represented on ancient monuments by the figure of a goat, or a figure having the fore part like a goat and the hind part like a fish. Its symbol is ♄.

Capriivi (káp-prē'vē) de Caprara de Montecucoli, Georg Leo von. Born at Charlottenburg, Feb. 24, 1831. A noted German statesman, chancellor of the empire 1890-94. He was educated at the Werdersche Gymnasium at Berlin, and April 1, 1849, entered the Kaiser-Franz-Grenadier regiment, becoming second lieutenant Sept. 19, 1850. He entered the military academy and became first lieutenant in 1859, and in 1861 captain in the general staff. He rose rapidly in rank, and in 1883 was made chief of the admiralty, and accomplished important results in the reorganization of the German navy. For his efficiency in this service he was promoted by Emperor William II. (July 10, 1888) to be commanding general of the 10th army corps in Hannover, and later was made general of infantry. On the fall of Bismarck (March 20, 1890), Capriivi succeeded him as imperial chancellor, president of the Prussian ministry, and imperial minister of foreign affairs. He secured Heligoland from England in exchange for German claims in Zanzibar and Witul July, 1890, strengthened the colonial policy, renewed the Triple Alliance June, 1891, and concluded important commercial treaties. He was made a count Dec. 18, 1891. He resigned the presidency of the Prussian ministry in March, 1892, and retired from the imperial chancellorship and the ministry of foreign affairs Oct. 26, 1894.

Captain. 1. An English line-of-battle ship of 72 guns. She served in the Mediterranean squadron of Lord Hood before Corsica in 1794-95: was flag-ship of Commodore Nelson in 1796; served in the battle off Cape St. Vincent, Feb. 14, 1797; and was burned March 22, 1813.

2. One of the earliest English armored turretships, launched March 29, 1869. She had an all-round water-line belt 10 and 7 inches thick, low freeboard, and two turrets on the upper deck 120 feet apart. Tonnage, 4,272. She foundered off Cape Finisterre with 500 men, Sept. 6, 1870.

Captain, The. 1. A play by Fletcher and another, produced about 1613, printed in the folio of 1647. Fleay suggests Jonson; Bullen thinks there are traces of Middleton's hand.—2. A bragging, coarse ruffian in Middleton's play "The Phoenix."

Capua (káp'ū-ā). An ancient city of Campania, Italy, 17 miles north of Naples, famous for its wealth and luxury. It was founded by the Etruscans, was taken by the Samnites in 423 B. C., and came under Roman rule about 340 B. C. It opened its gates to Hannibal in 210 B. C. (whose army wintered there 210-215). In 211 B. C. it was retaken by the Romans, and severely punished. It afterward flourished until sacked by Genseric in 456 A. D. It was destroyed by the Saracens in 840, and its inhabitants colonized modern Capua. Its site is occupied by the village of Santa Maria di Capua Vetere. It contains the ruins of a triumphal arch and of a Roman amphitheater which dates from the early empire. In the early middle ages it was fortified as a citadel, and has suffered from sieges. It was an imposing monument, much resembling the Roman Colosseum, and nearly as large. The axes of the outer ellipse are 557 and 458 feet; of the arena, 250 and 150 feet.

Capua (káp'ū-ā). A town in Italy, on the Volturno, situated 2 miles north of ancient Capua, on the site of the ancient Casilinum. It was colonized from ancient Capua in the 9th century. It has a cathedral, and a museum with antiquities. Cesar Borgia attacked it in 1501. Near it is the battle-field of the Volturno, 1860. It was taken by the Piedmontese, Nov., 1860. Population, 12,000.

Capuchins (káp'ū-chinz). A mendicant order of Franciscan monks, founded in Italy in 1528 by Matteo di Bassi, and named from the long pointed capouch or cowl which is the distinguishing mark of their dress. According to the statutes of the order, drawn up in 1529, the monks were to live by begging; they were not to use gold or silver or silk in the decoration of their altars, and the chalice were to be of pewter. The Capuchins are most numerous in Austria. In the United States they have convents in the dioceses of Green Bay, Milwaukee, Leavenworth, and New York. See Franciscans.

Capuchin (káp'ū-chin), The. A play by Foote, produced in 1776. It was an alteration of the notorious "Trip to Calais," which was stopped by the public censor.

Capucius (káp'ū-shius). In Shakspeare's "Henry VIII.," an ambassador from Charles V.

Capulet (káp'ū-jet). In Shakspeare's "Romeo and Juliet," a coarse, jovial old man with a passionate temper, the father of Juliet. The expression "the tomb of the Capulets" is not in Shakspeare; it occurs in Burke's letter to Matthew Smith—and as "the family vault" "of all the Capulets" in his "Reflections on the Revolution in France," III. 349.

Capuletti ed i Montecchi (káp-pō-jet'tē ed ē mon-tek'kē), I. [It., 'The Capulets and Montagues.']. An opera by Bellini, first produced in Venice in 1830: a musical version of "Romeo and Juliet."

Caquetios (káp-kā-tē'ōs), or Caquesios. An Indian tribe which, at the beginning of the 16th century, occupied the coast of Venezuela from La Guayra to Lake Maracaybo, together with the neighboring islands. They received the first Spanish explorers as friends, but were soon enslaved and carried away, and by 1545 none was left on the coasts. There were other Indians of the same name and probably of the same race in the highlands south of Coro, and on the llanos to the rivers Sararé and Apuré.

Carabas (káp-a-bas), Marquis of. The master for whom "Puss in Boots" performs such prodigies in Perrault's tale "Le Chat Botté" ("Puss in Boots"). The name is used proverbially for a pretentious aristocrat who refuses to march with his age. The Marquis of Carabas in Disraeli's "Vivian Grey" is intended for the Marquis of Clanricarde.

Carabaya. See Caravaya.

Carabobo (káp-rā-bō'bō). A state in Venezuela, bordering on the Caribbean Sea. Its capital is Valencia. Area, 2,984 square miles. Population (1891), 198,021.

Carabobo. A plain south of Valencia, Venezuela, in the same valley. Here, on May 28, 1814, Bolivar with 5,000 men defeated the Spanish captain-general Cajal with 6,000 men. On June 24, 1821, Bolivar won a second victory on the same plain over the Spanish army of La Torre. This was the last Spanish force of consequence in Venezuela, and the victory secured the independence of northwestern South America.

Caracalla (káp-ā-kal'ā), or Caracallus (káp-ā-kal'ūs) (Marcus Aurelius Antoninus, originally Bassianus). [Caracalla, a nickname given him on account of the long Gaulish hooded coat or tunic which he introduced.] Born at Lyons, April 4 or 6, 188 A. D.; died near Edessa, Mesopotamia, April 8, 217 A. D. Emperor of Rome, son of Septimius Severus. Having become joint emperor of Rome with his brother Geta in 211, he murdered the latter with many of his friends, including the jurist Papinian, and made himself sole emperor in 212. He extended by the Constitutio Antoniana the full citizenship to all free inhabitants of the empire, in order to increase the produce of the accession duty of five per cent. which Augustus had imposed on the property of citizens. He was murdered on a plundering expedition against the Parthians.

It had hitherto been the peculiar felicity of the Romans, and in the worst of times the consolation, that the virtue of the emperors was active, and their vice indolent. Augustus, Trajan, Hadrian, and Marcus visited their extensive dominions in person, and their progress was marked by acts of wisdom and beneficence. The tyranny of Tiberius, Nero, and Domitian, who resided almost constantly at Rome, or in the adjacent villas, was confined to the senatorial and equestrian orders. But Caracalla was the common enemy of mankind. He left the capital (and he never returned to it) about a year after the murder of Geta. The rest of his reign was spent in the several provinces of the empire, particularly those of the east, and every province was by turns the scene of his rapine and cruelty. Gibbon, Decline and Fall, I. 160.

Caracalla, Baths of. See Baths of Caracalla.

Caracaras (káp-rā-kā-rās'). [Guarany, 'hawks.']. A horde of South American Indians, of the Tupi-Guarany race, who, in the 16th century, lived on the western side of the river Paraná, about lat. 32° S. Later they retreated northward into the Chaco region, and became extinct, or were amalgamated with other tribes.

Caracas (káp-rā-kās). An Indian tribe of Venezuela, which formerly occupied the valleys about the present city of Caracas. They had large villages, and appear to have been agriculturists, with some skill in weaving hammocks, making gold ornaments, etc. They kept up a long and brave resistance to the whites. As a tribe they were probably destroyed before the end of the 16th century.

Caracas (káp-rā-kās). The capital of Venezuela and of the federal district, situated in lat. 10° 32' N., long. 67° 4' W., near the coast. It is an important commercial center, and contains a cathedral and university. It was founded in 1567, and destroyed by an earthquake in 1812. Its seaport is La Guayra. Population (1891), 72,429.

Caracas, Province of. A colonial province which embraced approximately the present states of Miranda, Zamora, Venezuela, and Carabobo. The captain-general of Venezuela, formed in 1751, was commonly called Caracas, from the capital, just as New Spain was called Mexico.

Caracci. See Carracci.

Caraccioli (káp-rā'chō-lē), Francesco. Born at Naples about 1748; hanged near Naples, 1799. A Neapolitan admiral, commander of the navy of the Parthenopean Republic, 1799, condemned to death by order of the junta.

Caractacus (káp-rak'ta-kus), or Caradoc (káp-rā-dok). Flourished about 50 A. D. A British king, son of Cunobelin, king of the Trinobantes. His capital was Camulodunum (Colchester). He was chief of the Catuvellauni (which see), and resisted the Romans (under Anlus Plautius, Ostorius Scapula, and, for a short time, the emperor Claudius) for about nine years. Finally defeated, he took refuge among the Brigantes, but was delivered by Cartimandua, their queen, to the Romans, and was sent to Rome. Claudius granted him his life and his family.

Caractacus. 1. A tragedy by J. R. Planché, an alteration of Fletcher's "Bonduca." It was produced in 1837.—2. A tragedy by William Mason, published in 1759.

Caractères de Théophraste, Les. See La Bruyère.

Caraculiambo (káp-rā-kō-lē-ām'bō). A mythical giant whom Don Quixote proposes to conquer.

Caradoc (káp-rā-dok). See Caractacus.

Caradoc, or Cradock. A knight of the Round Table, in the Arthurian cycle of romance. He had the only chaste wife in the court. The story of the magic mantle which she alone could wear is told in "The Boy and the Mantle" (which see).

Carafa (káp-rā'fā), Michele. Born at Naples, Nov. 28, 1785; died at Paris, July 26, 1872. An Italian composer of operas, author of "Le Solitaire" (1822), "Masaniello" (1827), etc.

Carajás (káp-rā-zhās'). A tribe of Indians dwelling in the vicinity of the river Araguaia, in the states of Goyaz and Matto Grosso, Brazil. They number at least several thousand, are uncivilized, but friendly to the whites. They speak a language very different from the dialects of the surrounding tribes. The Carajás live in villages, and are agriculturists and fishermen. The Carajais, Javahais, and Chimbioas are branch tribes in the same region.

Caraman. See Karaman.

Caramania. See Karamania.

Caramurú. See Alvares, Diogo.

Caramurú (káp-rā-mō-rō'). The nickname given to a political party in Brazil which, after the abdication of the emperor Pedro I. in 1831, sought to secure his restoration. The name, if not virtually adopted by the party, became their common designation, and is used by historians. After the death of the ex-emperor most of the members of the Caramurú party joined the conservatives.

Carathis (káp-rā-this). The mother of Vathek, in Beckford's "Vathek," an adept in judicial astrology.

Carausius (káp-rā'si-us), Marcus Aurelius Valerius. Died 293 A. D. A Roman insurgent. He was a Menapien or Belgio-German by birth, and in his youth is said to have been a pilot. In 286 he distinguished himself in the campaign of the Augustus Maximian against the revolted Bagaude in Gaul, and was about this period intrusted with the enterprise of suppressing the Frankish and Saxon pirates who ravaged the coasts of Britain and Gaul. Suspected of acting in collusion with the pirates, orders were issued for his execution, whereupon he made himself master of Britain and part of Gaul in 287, and assumed the title of Augustus. He was recognized as a colleague in the government of the empire by the Augusti Maximian and Diocletian in 290. On the appointment of Galerius and Constantine Chlorus as Cæsars in 292, the latter undertook a campaign against Carausius, who was assassinated in the following year by his chief minister, Allectus.

Caravaca (káp-rā-vā-kā). A town in the province of Murcia, Spain, situated on the river Caravaca in lat. 38° 4' N., long. 1° 53' W. Population (1887), 15,053.

Caravaggio, da. See Caldara, Polidoro.

Caravaggio, da (Michelangelo Amerighi or Merighi). Born at Caravaggio, near Milan, 1569; died near Porto Ereole, Italy, 1609. An Italian painter belonging to the naturalistic school. His most noted work is the "Entombment of Christ" (in the Vatican). After painting many important pictures in Rome, he fled to Naples to escape justice for the homicide of a companion.

Carabaya (kä-rü-vü'yä), or Carabaya (kä-rü-bä'yä). [A corruption of Collahuaya, the Quechua name.] A province of eastern Peru, in the department of Puno. Gold was discovered there about 1543, and for a century the mines of this region were famous. Its towns, especially Sandia, San Gaban, and San Juan del Oro, were important. In 1767 they were all destroyed by the Chuncho Indians, not a Spaniard being left east of the Andes. The region is now almost unknown, being frequented only by cinchona-collectors. Area, 12,000 square miles.

Caravellas (kä-rü-vä'las). A seaport in the state of Bahia, Brazil, in lat. 17° 43' S., long. 39° 14' W. Population, about 5,000.

Carbajal (kä-bä-häl'), or Carvajal (kä-vä-ñäl'), Francisco. Born in Aravalo, 1464; died near Cuzco, Peru, April 10, 1548. A Spanish soldier in South America. In 1528 he went to Mexico, and in 1536 Cortés sent him with others to aid Pizarro in Peru. As field-marshal under Vaca de Castro, he directed the battle of Chupas, where the younger Almagro was overthrown. He took an active part in the struggle of Gonzalo Pizarro against Gasca, was captured at the battle of Sacsahuana April 9, 1548, and condemned to death.

Carberry Hill (kär'ber-i hil). A place near Musselburgh, Mid-Lothian, Scotland. Here, in June, 1567, Lord Home dispersed Bothwell's forces, and took prisoner Mary Queen of Scots.

Carbonari (kär-bö-nä'ri). [It., pl. of carbonaro, from L. carbonarius, a charcoal-burner, a collier.] A secret society formed in the kingdom of Naples during the reign of Murat (1808-15) by republicans and others dissatisfied with the French rule. They were originally refugees among the mountains of the Abruzzi provinces, and took their name from the mountain charcoal-burners. Their aim was to free their country from foreign domination. After having aided the Austrians in the expulsion of the French, the organization spread over all Italy as the champions of the National Liberal cause against the reactionary governments. At one time the Carbonari numbered several hundred thousand adherents. They were concerned in the various revolutions of the times until crushed out by the Austrian power in Italy. About 1820 they spread into France, and played an important part in French politics until the revolution of 1830.

Carbondale (kär'bon-däl). A city in Lackawanna County, northeastern Pennsylvania, situated 15 miles northeast of Scranton. It is the center of rich coal-fields. Population (1890), 10,833.

Carcassonne (kär-kä-son'). The capital of the department of Aude, France, situated on the Aude in lat. 43° 13' N., long. 2° 20' E.: the ancient Carcaso. It consists of two parts, the Upper Town (la cité) and the Lower Town. The Upper Town, now practically abandoned for the more convenient site below, is in its entirety one of the most remarkable monuments of the middle ages existing. In plan it is square, about a mile in circuit, inclosed by two lines of walls with fifty-four towers, all of admirable masonry, and retaining in their approaches, their gates, battlements, etc., all the defensive devices evolved by medieval military engineers. Part of the inner walls and towers dates from the Visigothic rule in the 5th century; the greater portion is of the 12th century, and the remainder of the reign of St. Louis. On one side rises a powerful castle or citadel. The battlemented Church of St. Nazaire has a Romanesque nave, and a very light and beautiful Pointed choir, with splendid glass. This unique fortress was thoroughly restored by Napoleon III. It was a Roman town, and was ruled later by the West Goths. It was an Albigensian stronghold, and was sacked by the Black Prince in 1355. Population (1891), commune, 28,235.

Car-cay. The most northeasterly ramification of the Sierra Madre, lying due west from Corralitos in Chihuahua. It is a rugged and wild chain, difficult of access.

Carchemish (kär'kem-ish). The ancient capital of the Hittites. It was formerly identified with Circussium of the Greeks and Romans, a fortified place near where the Chaboras empties into the Euphrates. Later excavations brought out its identity with the Gargamis of the Assyrian inscriptions (Egyptian Guarnes-ha), situated on the right bank of the Euphrates north-west of the river Sajur, and now represented by the ruins of Jerablús. The city is mentioned in the annals of Tiglath-Pileser I., 1110 B. C., Salmanser II., in 858, and Sargon, in 717, subjected this capital of the Hittites, and placed an Assyrian governor in it. In 605 B. C. the battle between Nebuchadnezzar and Necho of Egypt took place under its walls (Jer. xlv. 2, 2 Chron. xxxv. 20), in which Egypt was thoroughly defeated by western Asia.

To Mr. Skene, for many years the English consul at Aleppo, is due the credit of first discovering the true site of the old Hittite capital (Carchemish). On the western bank of the Euphrates, midway between Birejik and the mouth of the Sajur, rises an artificial mound of earth, under which ruins and sculptured blocks of stone had been found from time to time. It was known as Jerablús, or Kalaat Jerablús, "the fortress of Jerablús," sometimes wrongly written Jerabis; and in the name of Jerablús Mr. Skene had no difficulty in recognising an Arab corruption of Hierapolis. In the Roman age the name of Hierapolis or "Holy City" had been transferred to its neighbour Membij, which inherited the traditions and religious fame of the older Carchemish; but when the triumph of Christianity in Syria brought with it the fall of the great temple of Membij, the name disappeared from the later city, and was remembered only in connection with the ruins of the ancient Carchemish.

He ran away from school, joined a band of gypsies, and was eventually chosen king or chief of the gypsies. Convicted of vagrancy, he was transported to Maryland, whence he escaped and returned to England. He is said to have accompanied the Pretender to Carlisle and Derby.

Carew, George. Born in England, May 29, 1555; died at London, March 27, 1629. An English soldier and statesman, son of George Carew, dean of Windsor, created Baron Carew June 4, 1605, and Earl of Totnes Feb. 5, 1626. He served in Ireland from 1574; became sheriff of Carlow 1583, and master of ordnance in Ireland 1588; was appointed lieutenant-general of ordnance in England 1592; and played an influential part in Ireland (in various offices) from 1599 until 1603, especially during the rebellion of the Earl of Tyrone. He left a valuable collection of letters and manuscripts relating to such affairs.

Carew, Richard. Born at East Antony, Cornwall, July 17, 1555; died there, Nov. 6, 1620. An English poet and antiquarian, high sheriff of Cornwall 1586, and member of Parliament: author of the "Survey of Cornwall" (1602), etc.

Carew, Thomas. Born about 1598; died, probably at London, about 1639. An English poet, son of Sir Matthew Carew (died 1618). He studied (but was not graduated) at Corpus Christi College, Oxford, and afterward led an idle and wandering life, serving for a time as secretary to Sir Dudley Carleton, ambassador at Venice, Turin, and the States, and later about the court of Charles I. He wrote "Cælim Britannicum," a mask (performed at Whitehall, Feb. 18, 1634), and various smaller pieces.

Carey (kä'ri), George Saville: pseudonym Paul Tell-Truth. Born 1743; died at London, 1807. An English poet, son of Henry Carey. He was a printer by trade, and for a time an actor. He wrote "The Inoculator," a comedy (published 1766), "Liberty Chastized, or Patriotism in Chains" (1768), "The Nut-Brown Maid" (1770), "Shakespeare's Jubilee, a Masque" (1769), "The Old Women Weather-wise, an Interlude" (1770), "Balnea, or History of all the Popular Watering-places of England" (1799), etc.

Carey, Henry. Born near the end of the 17th century; died at London (probably by his own hand), Oct. 4, 1743. An English poet and composer of musical farces, illegitimate son of George Saville, marquis of Halifax. He was the reputed author of "God Save the King," and author of the ballad "Sally in our Alley," "Nambly-Pamby," "The Contrivances" (acted 1715), "Hanging and Marriage," a farce (1722), "Poems" (1727), "Chronohotonthologos," a burlesque (acted Feb. 22, 1734), "A Musical Century, or a hundred English Ballads," etc.

Carey, Henry Charles. Born at Philadelphia, Dec. 15, 1793; died at Philadelphia, Oct. 13, 1879. An American political economist, son of Matthew Carey, noted as an advocate of protection. His chief works are "An Essay on the Rate of Wages" (1835), expanded in "Principles of Political Economy" (1837-40), "Credit System in France, Great Britain, and the United States" (1838), "The Past, the Present, and the Future" (1845), "Harmony of Interests" (1852), "The Slave Trade," etc. (1853), "Principles of Social Science" (1853-59), "Unity of Law" (1872).

Carey, James. Born at Dublin, 1845; assassinated July 29, 1883. An Irish political assassin. He was a bricklayer and builder by trade, and a town councillor of Dublin (1882). He became one of the leaders of the Irish "Invincibles" in 1881, and was an accomplice in the assassination of Mr. T. H. Burke and Lord Frederick Cavendish in Phoenix Park. He was arrested Jan. 13, 1883, and turned Queen's evidence. In order to escape the vengeance of the "Invincibles" he was secretly shipped for the Cape on the Kinfauns Castle, July 6, 1883, under the name of Power; but his plan of escape was discovered, and he was followed on board the ship by Patrick O'Donnell, who shot him before the vessel reached its destination.

Carey, Mathew. Born at Dublin, Jan. 28, 1760; died at Philadelphia, Sept. 16, 1839. An Irish-American publicist and bookseller, the son of a Dublin baker. He made the acquaintance of Franklin in 1779, established "The Volunteer's Journal" in 1783, and was prosecuted and imprisoned, as the proprietor of that paper, in 1784. In the same year he emigrated to Philadelphia, and with the financial aid of Lafayette established "The Pennsylvania Herald" (first number Jan. 25, 1785); later he became connected with the "Columbia Magazine" and the "American Museum," and conducted an extensive publishing business. He wrote "Essays on Political Economy" (1822), "Letters on the Colonization Society," "Female Wages and Female Oppression" (1835), etc.

Carey, William. Born at Paulerspury, Northamptonshire, Aug. 17, 1761; died at Serampore, India, June 9, 1834. An English Orientalist, and missionary in British India from 1794. Carheil (kä-räy'), Étienne de. Died after 1721. A French Jesuit, missionary among the Hurons and Iroquois in Canada.

Caria (kä'ri-ä). In ancient geography, a division of Asia Minor, lying between Lydia on the north, Phrygia and Lycia on the east, and the Aegean Sea on the south and west. The Meander, a noted river, flows through it. Its chief towns were Miletus, Halicarnassus, and Cnidus. The early inhabitants were Illyric, and the Greeks formed colonies on the coasts. Its princes became tributary to Persia.

Caria was anciently the whole country from Cunnus on the south to the mouth of the Meander on the west coast. It extended inland at least as far as Carura, near the junction of the Lycus with the Meander. The chain of Cadmus (Baba Dagh) formed, apparently, its eastern boundary. In process of time the greater part of the coast was occupied by the Greeks. The peninsula of Cnidus, with the tract above it known as the Byzantine Chersonese, was colonized by Dorians, as was the southern shore of the Ceramic Gulf, from Myndus to Ceramus. More to the north the coast was seized upon by the Ionian Greeks, who seem to have possessed themselves of the entire seaboard from the Herons to the furthest recess of the Sinus Eassius. Still the Carians retained some portions of the coast, and were able to furnish to the navy of Xerxes a fleet of seventy ships. Raukinson, Herod., I. 333.

Cariaco (kä-rö-ä'kō). A seaport town in north-eastern Venezuela, situated at the head of the Gulf of Cariaco, in lat. 10° 30' N., long. 63° 41' W. It is also called San Felipe de Austria. Population, about 7,000.

Caribana (kä-ri-bä'nä). The name given on some maps of the 16th century to Guiana, or the region between the Amazon and the Orinoco, sometimes including a portion of Venezuela. It was evidently derived from the Carib Indians who inhabited these coasts.

Caribbean Sea (kär-i-bē'an sē). An arm of the Atlantic lying between the Greater Antilles on the north, Caribbean islands on the east, South America on the south, and Yucatan and Central America on the west. It is connected with the Gulf of Mexico by the Yucatan channel.

Caribbees (kär-i-bēz), or Caribbean Islands. [From the Spanish Caribe, a Carib.] A general name for the chain of islands on the eastern side of the Caribbean Sea, forming a portion of the West Indies.

Caribs (kär'ibz). [From Caribá or Cariná, the name which they gave to themselves, meaning "people."] A powerful and warlike tribe of Indians who, at the time of the conquest, occupied portions of Guiana and the lower Orinoco and had conquered the Windward or Caribbee islands from the Arawaks. There was little tribal union, and the authority of the chiefs was nominal. At the time of the conquest they practised agriculture. Columbus first encountered these Indians at Guadeloupe, and had a battle with them at Santa Cruz (1493). The Spanish courts condemned them to slavery, but they were little molested, probably because they could not be forced to work. The French and English occupations of the Caribbee islands led to long wars with these Indians; their last stronghold was in St. Vincent, where some of them became mixed with fugitive negro slaves, giving rise to the race called "black Caribs." After a bloody war with the English, the surviving Caribs, to the number of 5,000, were transported from St. Vincent, to the island of Ratan, near the coast of Honduras (1796). Thence they passed over to Honduras and Nicaragua, where their descendants, mostly "black Caribs," now live. A few were allowed to return to St. Vincent where they have a reservation, and there are a few more in other islands. Some thousands remain in a semi-wild state in Guiana and Venezuela. In French Guiana they are called Galibis. The name Carib was applied by the Spaniards to any Indians whom they regarded as cannibals or very savage. The word cannibal or canibal, in various languages, is a corruption of Caribá.

Carignan (kä-rēn-yōn'). A village in the department of Ardennes, France, 12 miles south-east of Sedan. The French were repulsed here by the Prussians, Aug. 31, 1870.

Carignano (kä-rēn-yū'nō). A town in the province of Turin, Italy, situated on the Po 11 miles south of Turin. It manufactures silk.

Carijós (kä-rē-zhōs'). A tribe of Indians of the Tupi race, formerly inhabiting the coast region of southern Brazil, in what is now the state of Santa Catharina.

Carilef (kär'i-lef), William de, Saint. Died Jan. 2, 1096. An English ecclesiastical and statesman, made bishop of Durham by William the Conqueror in 1080. He was influential in ecclesiastical and civil affairs (especially as an antagonist of Lanfranc and Anselm) during the reigns of William I. and William II., and took an important part in the building of the cathedral of Durham.

Carillo (kä-rēl'yō), Braulio. Born at Cartago, 1800; murdered at San Miguel, Salvador, 1845. A Costa Rican statesman. He was president of Costa Rica 1835-37, and again 1838-April, 1842, when he was overthrown and banished by Morazan.

Carimata (kä-rē-mä'tä) Islands. A group of small islands lying west of Borneo, in lat. 1° 30' S., long. 108° 50' E. They are under Dutch rule.

Carimata Strait. A strait between the islands of Borneo and Billiton.

Carino (kä-rē'nō). 1. In Guarini's "Pastor Fido," a courtier. He contrasts the corruption of the town with the Arcadian simplicity of the other characters. 2. The father of Zenocia in Fletcher and Massinger's "Custom of the Country."

Carinola (kä-rē-nō'lä). A town in the province of Caserta, Italy, situated in lat. 41° 12' N., long. 13° 58' E.

Carinthia (kä-rin'thi-ä). [G. Kärnten; from L. Carni (which see).] A crownland of the Cisleithan division of Austria-Hungary. It is bounded by Salzburg and Styria on the north, Styria on the east, Carniola, Küstenland, and Italy on the south, and the Tyrol on the west. It is very mountainous, containing the Carnic and Noric Alps, and is traversed from west to east by the Drave. Its capital is Klagenfurt. It has 9 representatives in the Austrian Reichsrath, and a Landtag of 37 members. About 70 per cent. of the inhabitants are Germans, about 30 per cent. Slovenes; the great majority are Roman Catholic. Carinthia was a part of the ancient Noricum. It was colonized by Slavs, and was part of Charles the Great's empire. It became a mark and a duchy. Styria was separated from it in 1180. It was acquired by Bohemia in 1260, united with Gorz in 1286, and acquired by Austria in 1335. In 1849 it became a crownland. Area, 4,905 square miles. Population (1890), 361,008.

Carinus (kä-rī'nus), Marcus Aurelius. Died near Margum, in Mesia, 285 A. D. Roman emperor 283-285, elder son of Carus. He was appointed governor of the western provinces, with the titles of Caesar and Imperator, on the departure of his father and brother (Numerianus) in 282 on an expedition against the Persians, in the course of which Carus died (283), leaving the two brothers joint emperors. Numerianus died soon after, and the army of Asia proclaimed Diocletian emperor. A decisive battle was fought in 285 near Margum, in Mesia, in which Carinus was victorious. He was, however, killed in the moment of triumph by his own officers.

Caripunäs (kä-rē-pō'näs). [In Tupi, "white men of the water."] A horde of Brazilian Indians on the river Madeira, especially about the rapids. They are hunters and fishermen, wandering in the forests, and often attacking travelers. In number they probably do not exceed, at present, one or two thousand. The Caripunäs are exceptionally light-colored for Indians, hardly darker than many Europeans. Their language bears little relation to that of surrounding tribes. They call themselves Mannu. The name Caripuna has been applied to other wandering hordes in various parts of the Amazon valley.

Cariris. See Kiriris.

Carisbrooke (kär'is-brük). A village in the Isle of Wight, England, 1 mile south of Newport. It is noted for its ruined castle.

Carisbrooke Castle. An ancient castle in the Isle of Wight, England, the place of captivity of Charles I., 1647-48. It is of Saxon foundation; but of the existing remains the keep is Norman, most of the towers and main walls are of the 13th century, and the outworks and chief residential buildings were added or remodeled under Queen Elizabeth. The castle is now ruins, but extensive and exceedingly picturesque, with ivy-clad towers and ramparts.

Carker (kär'kär). James. The manager in the offices of Dombey and Son, in Dickens's novel of that name. He is "sly of manner, sharp of tooth, soft of foot, habitually of eye, oily of tongue, cruel of heart, nice of habit." He induces Edith, the second wife of Dombey, to elope with him, to revenge herself on her husband. He is killed while trying to escape from Dombey, having been deceived and balked by Edith.

Carlisle (kär-lil'). [Formerly also Carlile, Carlyle, Carleil, ME. Carlile, Karlile, British Caer Luel, from caer, city, and Luel, from LL. Lugwallion, Lugwallium, or Lugwallia, the Roman name.] The capital of Cumberland, England, situated at the junction of the Caldew, Peteril, and Eden, in lat. 54° 54' N., long. 2° 55' W. It is an important railway center, and has manufactures of iron and cotton. It contains a cathedral and castle, and near it is the end of the Roman wall. The cathedral, as it now stands, is almost wholly of the 14th century. The Norman nave was burned in the 13th century, except the two bays nearest the transept, which have since constituted the entire nave. The fine choir is in the Decorated style, with a remarkably large and handsome Perpendicular east window (50 by 30 feet). The stalls are of the 15th century, with contemporaneous paintings on their backs. It was an important Roman town; was destroyed by the Danes about 875; and was rebuilt by William I. Bruce besieged it unsuccessfully in 1315, and it was the place of imprisonment of Mary Queen of Scots in 1568. It was besieged and taken by the Parliamentarians in 1645, and by the Young Pretender in 1745. Population (1891), 39,176.

Carlisle. The capital of Cumberland County, Pennsylvania, situated 17 miles west-southwest of Harrisburg. It is the seat of Dickinson College, and was bombarded by the Confederates July 1, 1863. Population (1890), 7,620.

Carlisle (kär-lil'), John Griffin. Born in Kenton County, Ky., Sept. 5, 1835. An American statesman. His family came from near Culpeper in Virginia. In 1855 he went to Covington, Kentucky, to study law, supporting himself as a teacher in the public schools. He was admitted to the bar in 1858, and in 1866 entered the State senate of Kentucky. He served his term, and was reelected, but resigned. In 1876 he was elected to the 45th Congress, and remained in the House of Representatives until his promotion to the Senate in 1890 as successor to Senator Beck. He was speaker of the House 1883-89. He was appointed secretary of the treasury by President Cleveland, March 4, 1893.

Carlists (kär-lists), The. In Spanish history, the partisans of the pretender Don Carlos, brother of Ferdinand VII., and subsequent claimants under his title. Ferdinand repealed in 1829 the Salic law of succession, introduced by Philip V. in 1713, in accordance with which females could inherit the throne only in case of the total extinction of the male line; and by a decree of March, 1830, established the old Castilian law, in accordance with which the daughters and granddaughters of the king take precedence of his brothers and nephews. Ferdinand died Sept. 29, 1833, without male issue, and the throne descended to his minor daughter Isabella Maria II., who was placed under the regency of her mother Donna Maria Christina. Carlos, who was heir presumptive to the throne under the Salic law, refused to recognize the pragmatic sanction, and inaugurated, with the aid of the Clericals or Absolutists, a civil war which lasted from 1833 to 1840. (See Cristinos.) He resigned his claim in 1845 to his son Don Carlos, Duke of Montemolin, who entered Spain with 3,000 men in 1860, but was defeated at Tortosa, and made prisoner. His claim descended to his nephew Don Carlos (III.), who, after several short-lived risings in his name, headed a formidable insurrection from 1873 to 1876.

Carlos (kär-lós). [See Charles.] 1. The treacherous younger brother of Biron in Southerner's play "Isabella."—2. An apathetic pedant in Cibber's comedy "Love Makes a Man." He is transformed by love into an enthusiastic and manly fellow.

Carlos (kär-lós), Don. Born at Valladolid, Spain, July 8, 1545; died at Madrid, July 24, 1568. Eldest son of Philip II. of Spain and Maria of Portugal. He received the homage of the estates of Castile as crown prince in 1560. In 1567, angered by the appointment of the Duke of Alva to the governorship of the Netherlands, he struck at the duke with a poniard in the presence of the king. Having laid plans to escape from Spain, he was apprehended by his father, Jan. 15, 1568, and a commission was appointed to investigate his conduct. He died in prison a few months after, the manner of his death being involved in mystery. Tragedies with Don Carlos as subject have been written by Otway (1676), De Campistron (1683), De Chénier (1789), Schiller (1787), and others. (See Don Carlos.)

Carlos, Don (Carlos Maria José Isidoro de Bourbon). Born March 29, 1788; died at Trieste, Austria-Hungary, March 10, 1855. A pretender to the throne of Spain, second son of Charles IV., and brother of Ferdinand VII. He was in 1808 compelled by Napoleon to renounce, with his brother, the right to the Spanish succession, and was detained with his brother at Valençay till 1814. He became after the restoration heir presumptive to the throne, but was deprived of this position by the abolition of the Salic law through the pragmatic sanction of March 29, 1830, and by the birth of the infantia Maria Isabella, Oct. 10, 1830. On the death of Ferdinand, Sept. 29, 1833, he was proclaimed king by the clerical party, and was recognized by the pretender Dom Miguel of Portugal. Resistance being made hopeless by the Quadruple Treaty, concluded at London, April 22, 1834, between Spain, Portugal, England, and France, for the purpose of expelling the two pretenders from the Spanish peninsula, he embarked for England June 1, 1834. He returned to Spain, however, and appeared at the headquarters of the Absolutist or Carlist insurgents in Navarre, July 10, 1834, but was forced by the capture of his army by General Espartero to seek refuge across the French border, Sept. 14, 1839. He resigned his claims to his son Don Carlos, May 18, 1845, and assumed the title of Count de Molina.

Carlos, Don (Carlos Luis Fernando de Bourbon). Born at Madrid, Jan. 31, 1818; died at Trieste, Austria-Hungary, Jan. 13, 1861. Eldest son of Don Carlos (1788-1855), called Count of Montemolin, pretender to the throne 1845-1861. He headed an unsuccessful rising in 1860.

Carlos, Don (Carlos Maria de los Dolores Juan Isidoro José Francisco, Duke of Madrid). Born March 30, 1848. A pretender to the Spanish throne, nephew of Don Carlos (1818-1861), and son of Don Juan, who abdicated in his favor Oct. 3, 1868. His standard was raised in the north of Spain, April 21, 1872, and he himself entered Spain July 15, 1873. The war was carried on with some measure of success till after the fall of the republic and the proclamation of Alfonso XII. Tolosa, the last Carlist stronghold, fell in Jan., 1876. Since the death of Alfonso XII. Don Carlos has not prosecuted his claims in the field.

Carlos, Don. The principal character in Corneille's comedy "Don Sanche d'Aragon." He is really Don Sanche, the heir to the throne.

Carlos, Don. The extravagant and profligate husband of Victoria in Mrs. Cowley's comedy "A Bold Stroke for a Husband." She strikes a bold stroke and regains him.

Carlowitz (kär-ló-vits), Peace of. A peace concluded Jan. 26, 1699, for twenty-five years, between Austria, Poland, Russia, Venice, and Turkey, by the mediation of England and the Netherlands. Austria received the portion of Hungary between the Danube and Theiss, and was allowed to appropriate Transylvania; Russia received Azoff; Poland regained Podolia and the Ukraine; and Venice retained the Morea.

The treaty of Carlowitz is memorable, not only on account of the magnitude of the territorial change which it ratified; not only because it marks the period when men ceased to dread the Ottoman Empire as an aggressive power; but, also, because it was then that the Porte and Russia took part, for the first time, in a general European Congress; and because, by admitting to that congress the representatives of England and Holland, neither of which states was a party to the war, both the Sultan and the Czar thus admitted the principle of intervention of the European powers, one with another, for the sake of the general good. Cressy, Hist. of the Ottoman Turks, p. 319.

Carneia (kär-né'yä). [Gr. Κάρεια.] A Spartan festival, lasting 9 days, in the month of August.

The Carneian festival fell in the Spartan month Carneus, the Athenian Metageitnion, corresponding nearly to our August. It was held in honour of Apollo Carneus, a deity worshipped from very ancient times in the Peloponnese, especially at Amycle. Muller (Orchom., p. 327) supposes this worship to have been brought to Amycle from Thebes by the Ægidae. It appears certainly to have been anterior to the Dorian conquest (Dorians, vol. i. pp. 373-375, E. T.). The Spartan festival is said to have been instituted B. C. 676 (Athen. xiv. p. 635, E.; Æneid. Chron. Can. pars i. c. 33). It was of a warlike character, like the Athenian Boëdromia. Racineon, Herod., IV. 167, note.

Carpocratians (kär-pö-krä'shianz). A sect of Gnostics of the 2d century, followers of Carpocrates or Carpoeras of Alexandria. See the extract.

The Carpoeratians were avowed Eclectics: they worshipped, as benefactors of the human race, the images of Zoroaster, Pythagoras, Plato, Aristotle, and Jesus Christ, as well as that of their own founder. By this school were received, possibly were invented, many of the astrologic or theurgic books attributed to Zoroaster and other ancient sages. The Jewish Scriptures were the works of inferior angels; of the Christian, they received only the Gospel of St. Matthew. The supreme, unknown, uncreated Deity was the Monad; the visible world was the creation, the domain of inferior beings. But the Carpoeratian system was much simpler and, in some respects, rejecting generally the system of Æous, or Emanations, approached much nearer to Christianity than those of most of the Gnostics.

Milman, Hist. of Christianity, II. 83.

To find a northern passage to the Pacific, he started from Boston, June, 1766, explored the shores of Lake Superior, and proceeded as far west as the sources of the St. Pierre, returning in 1768. In 1769 he went to England. He published "Travels to the Interior Parts of North America," including an account of the manners, customs, languages, etc., of the Indians (1778), "A Treatise on the Cultivation of the Tobacco-plant" (1779), etc.

Carvilius (kär-vil'i-us), Spurius. A Roman freedman, noted as one of the first to open a public school at Rome, and as the arranger of the Roman alphabet. See the extract.

K disappeared from use at a very early date, being represented by C instead. Later, when the need appeared for a distinction between the smooth (tenuis) and middle (media) gutturals, the freedman of Sp. Carvilius, eos. 520 234 and 520 228, invented the sign G by slightly altering the C, and put it in the place of the almost unnecessary and little used Z, which was only restored (together with Y) in the time of Cicero, and was then placed at the end of the alphabet. Thus the alphabet of Carvilius likewise consisted of twenty-one letters.

Casas (käs'säs), Bartolomé de las. Born at Seville, 1474; died at Madrid, July, 1566. A Spanish Dominican, celebrated as a defender of the Indians against their Spanish conquerors. He went to Hispaniola in 1502, accompanied Velasquez during the conquest of Cuba, and became a curate there. In 1514 he began to preach against the system of Indian slavery; and in 1515 went to Spain to intercede for the Indians with Ferdinand. By Cardinal Ximenes he was named "Protector of the Indians," with considerable powers, and returned to Hispaniola in 1516. He again visited Spain to urge his views on Charles V.; attempted to plant a colony on the coast of Cumana, which was destroyed by the Indians (1521); took the Dominican habit at Santo Domingo (1522), and remained in retirement for eight years; and finally returned to Spain. From 1544 to 1547 he was bishop of Chiapa in Mexico.

He published "Brevisima relacione de la destructione de las Indias" ("Destruction of the Indies," Seville, 1552), "Historia de las Indias" (published 1875, but well known before by manuscript copies), etc.

Casas Grandes (käs'säs grän'des). [Sp., 'great houses.'] An extensive ruin in northwestern Sonora, about 120 miles south of the United States boundary line in New Mexico. The settlement appears to have been considerable, and to have contained as many as 4,000 souls at the time. The edifices were of large adobe with very thick walls and as many as four and perhaps five stories. The pottery accompanying the ruins and all the artifacts show an advance in culture beyond the Indians of New Mexico. Concerning its inhabitants nothing is known, except that they had disappeared long previous to the discovery of the ruins by the Spaniards in 1660. At that time the site was occupied by a tribe called Sumas, which has since disappeared also. A mile south of the ruins there is a village of Mexican inhabitants numbering about 1,000 souls. The name Casas Grandes is also given to various similar ruins in northern Mexico.

Casati (käs-sä'té), Gaetano. Born at Lesmo, Italy, 1838. An Italian soldier and African explorer. She married Peter the Great in 1707; was acknowledged as his wife in 1712; was crowned as his empress in 1724; and reigned 1725-27. She was of obscure origin; was brought up in the family of a Protestant minister at Marienburg, named Glück; married a Swedish dragoon; fell into the hands of the Russians at the capture of Marienburg, Aug. 23, 1702; and eventually became the serf of Prince Menshikoff, in whose house she attracted the attention of Peter the Great, who made her his mistress in 1703. She rescued him, by bribing the Turkish grand vizir, in 1711, from a dangerous position on the Pruth, when with an army of 38,000 men he was surrounded by 200,000 Turks. During her reign she was led chiefly by the influence of Menshikoff. She founded the Russian Academy of Sciences, and fitted out the naval exploring expedition under Bering.

Catharine II., or Catherine. Born at Stettin, Prussia, May 2, 1729; died at St. Petersburg, Nov. 17, 1796. Empress of Russia 1762-96, daughter of the Prince of Anhalt-Zerbst. She married in 1745 the empress Elizabeth's nephew, who ascended the throne Jan. 5, 1762, as Peter III. With the assistance of her paramour Gregory Orloff, the hetman Razumovski, Count Pavin, and Princess Dashkoff, she brought about the deposition of Peter (who was put to death in prison), and usurped the throne in July, 1762. She participated in the partitions of Poland 1772, 1793, and 1795; concluded with the Turks in 1774 the peace of Kutchuk-Kainardji, by which Russia acquired Kimburn, Azov, Yenikale, Kerch, and both Kabardas; and in 1792 signed the peace of Jassy, by which Russia acquired Otchakov and the country between the Bug and Dniester; and incorporated Conland in 1795. She improved the administration of the empire, introduced a new code of laws, and encouraged art and literature. She has been called "the Semiramis of the North," and Voltaire said, with reference to her, "Light now comes from the North."

No sovereign since Ivan the Terrible had extended the frontiers of the Empire by such vast conquests. She had given Russia for boundaries the Niemen, the Dniester, and the Black Sea. Rimbaud, History of Russia, II. 127.

Catharine, or Catherine, of Aragon, Queen of England. Born at Alealá de Henares, Spain, Dec. 15 or 16, 1485; died at Kimbolton, Huntingdon, England, Jan. 7, 1536. A queen of England. She was the daughter of Ferdinand and Isabella of Spain; married Arthur, prince of Wales, in 1501; married Henry VIII. in 1509; and became the mother of Mary (who subsequently ascended the throne of England) in 1516. About 1527 Henry, who was infatuated with Anne Boleyn, began to take measures to secure a divorce; and in 1533, application having been made in vain to the Pope, the marriage was declared void by Cranmer, archbishop of Canterbury.

Catholic Anglicum. An English-Latin dictionary, compiled about 1483. It was edited by Mr. Sidney J. H. Hertrage for the Early English Text Society in 1881. He believes it to have been compiled in the East Riding of Yorkshire. The name "Catholicum" was first used for such a work in a Latin grammar and dictionary written by Giovanni dei Balbi, a Genesee monk, frequently called Jannensis. It was finished in 1286, and the first edition was printed by Gutenberg in 1460.

Catholic Majesty. A title of the kings of Spain, assumed at times after the Council of Toledo, and permanently since the time of Ferdinand "the Catholic" 1474-1516.

Cathos (kät-tos'). A female character in Molière's "Les Précieuses Ridicules," who assumes the name Aminte. She affects the fashionable sentimentality of les précieuses, and is finally taken in by a valet who adopts the same style with greater success.

Catiline (kat-i-lī'nā), E. Catiline (kat-i-lī'n).

Lucius Sergius. Born about 108 B. C.; killed at Fiesula, Italy, 62 B. C. A Roman politician and conspirator. He was of an ancient but impoverished patrician family. As a partizan of Sulla he rendered himself infamous by his complicity in the horrors of the proscription, destroying with his own hand his brother-in-law, Q. Caecilius. He was pretor in 68, and governor of Africa in 67. After an abortive attempt, in conjunction with P. Antonius, to murder the consuls elect for 65, with a view to seizing the fasces, and after an unsuccessful candidacy in the consular elections of 64, he organized a wide-spread conspiracy against the republic, whose object is said to have been the cancellation of debts, the proscription of the wealthy, and the distribution among the conspirators of all offices of honor and emolument. It was defeated by the vigilance and eloquence of Cicero, who was then consul. The rebellion having broken out in Etruria, Oct. 27, Cicero pronounced in the senate, Nov. 8, his first oration against Catiline, which caused the latter to leave the city. On Nov. 9 Cicero delivered in the Forum his second Catilinian oration, in which he acquainted the people with the events in the senate and the departure of Catiline from Rome. On Dec. 3 documentary evidence of the conspiracy was obtained from an embassy of Allobroges, which had been tampered with by the Catilinians; and in the evening Cicero delivered in the Forum his third oration, in which he acquainted the people with the events of the day and the seizure of the conspirators left in Rome. On Dec. 5 Cicero delivered in the senate his fourth oration, which was followed by the execution in prison of Lentulus, Cethegus, Statilius, and Galinius. Meanwhile Catiline had assumed command of the revolutionary force, which amounted to about two legions, but was overtaken by the army of the senate as he was attempting to escape into Gaul, and was defeated and slain in the battle which ensued.

Catiline's Conspiracies. 1. A play by Stephen Gosson, written before 1579. It was acted, but not printed.—2. A tragedy by Robert Wilson and Henry Chettle, perhaps a revised version of Gosson's play (1598, Henslow).

Catiline's Conspiracy. A tragedy by Ben Jonson, produced in 1611. Catiline is made inhumanly ferocious in this play.

Cat Island (kat i'land), or San Salvador (sän sä'l-vä-dör'). An island in the northern part of the Bahama group, West Indies, long identified with Guanahani, Columbus's first landfall.

Catley (kat'li), Ann. Born near Tower Hill, London, in 1745; died at Ealing, Dec. 14, 1789. An English singer. She was the daughter of a hackney-coachman. In 1762 she appeared at Vauxhall, and from this time her beauty and voice made her not only successful but notorious. In 1784 she made her last appearance, having then become the wife of Major-General Francis Lascelles. The ladies eagerly copied her dress, and to be "Catleyfied" was to be dressed becomingly.

Catlin (kat'lin), George. Born at Wilkesbarre, Pa., June 26, 1796; died at Jersey City, N. J., Dec. 23, 1872. An American artist, and traveler among the North American Indians and in Europe. His chief work is "Illustrations of the Manners, Customs, and Condition of the North American Indians" (1841). He painted more than 500 portraits of Indians from life, a unique and valuable collection, now in the United States National Museum at Washington.

Cato, Marcus Porcius, surnamed Uticensis (from Utica, the place of his death). Born at Rome, 95 B. C.; committed suicide at Utica, North Africa, 46 B. C. A Roman patriot and Stoic philosopher, great-grandson of Cato the Censor. He fought under Gellius Publicola against Spartacus in 72, served as military tribune in Macedonia in 67, and was questor in 65, tribune of the people in 62, and pretor in 61. He supported Cicero against the Catilinians, and sided with Pompey against Caesar on the outbreak of the civil war in 49. After the battle of Pharsalia he retired to Utica, where he put himself to death on receiving intelligence of the victory of Caesar at Thapsus.

Cato, Marcus Porcius, surnamed "The Censor," and Priscus. Born at Tusculum, Italy, 234 B. C.; died 149 B. C. A Roman statesman, general, and writer. He was questor under Scipio in 204; consul in 195; served in Spain in 194, and against Antiochus in 191; was censor in 184; and was ambassador to Carthage in 150. He sought to restore the integrity of morals and the simplicity of manners prevalent in the early days of the republic, and was one of the chief instigators of the third Punic war, in his effort to incite to which he for years closed every speech in the senate with the words, "Ceterum censeo Carthaginem esse delendam." He wrote "De re rustica" (ed. Keil, 1882), and "Origines" (extant in fragments).

Cato Street Conspiracy, or Thistlewood Conspiracy. In British history, a conspiracy under the lead of Arthur Thistlewood, which aimed to assassinate Castlereagh and other ministers. The plot was discovered Feb. 23, 1820, at the rendezvous, Cato street, near Edgeware road, London.

Cats (käts), Jakob. Born at Brouwershaven, Holland, 1577; died 1660. A Dutch poet. He studied at Leyden and Orleans, where he received a doctor's degree, and was subsequently advocate in the Hague and in Middelburg. In 1636 he was made pensionary of Holland. He died on his estate near Scheveningen. "Father Cats," as he was affectionately called, was for generations the favorite poet of the people. His "Houwelijck" ("Fidelity") appeared in 1625, "Spiegel van den Ouden en Nieuwen Tijd" ("Mirror of the Old and New Time") in 1632, "Trouwring" ("Wedding Ring") in 1637.

Catullus (ka-tul'us), Caius Valerius. Born at Verona, Italy, 87 (?) B. C.; died about 54 B. C.

A celebrated Roman poet. Concerning his personal history little is known, except that he came to Rome at an early age; that he enjoyed the society of the most celebrated men of his day, including Cicero, Caesar, and Pollio, and that he was probably possessed of a moderate independence, although vicious and expensive habits reduced him to pecuniary difficulties. He is remarkable for the versatility of his genius, for the liveliness of his conception, and for his felicity of expression. According to Apuleius the real name of Lesbia, who forms the theme of most of his amatory poems, was Clodia; and some critics have, though apparently erroneously, identified her with the sister of the demagogue Clodius slain by Milo. His extant works are 116 poems, lyric, epigrammatic, elegiac, etc.

Catulus (kat'ū-lus), Caius Lutatius. A Roman general. He was chosen consul for the year 242 B. C. When he entered office the first Punic war had been waged since 264; and the senate, discouraged by numerous losses, had abandoned the war at sea. He obtained command of a fleet built by wealthy patriots at Rome, and 241 gained the decisive victory at the Ægadian Islands which resulted in a favorable treaty of peace.

Catulus, Quintus Lutatius. Born about 152 B. C.; died 87 B. C. A Roman general. He was consul with Marius 102 B. C., and was associated with him in the victory over the Cimbri, at Vercelle, in 101 B. C. He joined Sulla in the civil war, and, having in consequence been proscribed by Marius, committed suicide 87 B. C.

Catulus, Quintus Lutatius. Died 60 B. C. A Roman politician, son of Quintus Lutatius Catulus. He was consul 78 B. C., and censor 65 B. C. He was a strong supporter of Cicero against the Catilinian conspiracy, 63 B. C.

Caverne de l'Homme Mort. [F., 'cave of the dead man.'] See the extract.

For the determination of the characteristics of this Iberian or Aquitanian race no more typical sepulchre can be selected than the celebrated Caverne de l'Homme Mort in the Department of the Lozère. It lies in an inaccessible and desolate ravine which traverses a barren limestone plateau. Here the feeble Iberian race seems to have maintained itself for a time, after the more fertile surrounding lands had been seized by the brachycephalic intruders whose descendants now occupy the region. In this cave some fifty persons must have been interred, and in fifteen cases the skeletons have been so well preserved as to admit of accurate measurement, and even of the determination of the sex. Taylor, Aryans, p. 94.

Cavery, or Cauvery. See Kaveri.

Caviana (kã-vê-î-nã), or Cavianna (kã-vê-î-nã). An uninhabited delta island in Brazil, situated at the mouth of the Amazon under the equator, in long. 50° W. Length, 50 miles.

Caxton (kaks'ton), Pisistratus. The principal character in "The Caxtons," by Bulwer. Under this name Bulwer Lytton wrote "My Novel" (the sequel to "The Caxtons") and other works.

Caxton, William. Born in Kent about 1422; died at Westminster, 1491. The first English printer. He was first apprenticed to a London mercer, Robert Large (Lord Mayor of London 1439-40), and after his master's death (1441) went to Broges, where he served out the remainder of his apprenticeship (1446), and then established himself as a mercer, becoming about 1465 governor of the English Association of Merchant Adventurers in that city. In 1469 he began to translate into English the "Recueil des Histoires de Troie" (completed in 1471 in Ghent and Cologne), and to supply the great demand for copies of the book set himself to learn the art of printing. The "Recueil," the first printed English book, probably appeared in 1474, and may have been printed either at Cologne or at the press of Colard Mansion in Bruges. In 1475 he completed and had printed (by Mansion?) a translation of a French version of the "Ludus Scacchorum" of J. de Cessolis, under the title "The Game and Playe of the Chesse" — the second printed English book. He left Bruges in 1476, and set up his press in Westminster (the exact site is uncertain), from that time until his death being constantly engaged in translating and printing with several assistants, among whom was Wynkyn de Worde, his successor.

Cecil, William. Born at Bourn, Lincolnshire, Sept. 13, 1520; died at London, Aug. 4, 1598. A celebrated English statesman, son of Richard Cecil of Burleigh, Northamptonshire, created baron of Burghley Feb. 25, 1571. He studied at St. John's College, Cambridge, 1535–41, but did not take a degree; was entered as a student at Gray's Inn, May, 1541; married Mary Cheke (died Feb. 22, 1544), sister of John Cheke, the celebrated scholar, May 5, 1542; and took as his second wife Mildred, daughter of Sir Anthony Cooke, Dec. 21, 1545. In Nov., 1547, he entered Parliament, and in the same year became secretary to Somerset, who was then protector; and when his patron fell (1548) was committed to the Tower, where he remained for two months. He was appointed a secretary of state, Sept. 5, 1550, and for the rest of his life occupied a position of great influence successively under Edward VI., Mary, and Elizabeth. It was as chief minister to Elizabeth for forty years that he won his great fame.

Cecilia (se-sil'i-ä). A novel by Madame d'Arblay, published in 1782.

Cecilia, Saint. Died at Rome, 230. A Christian martyr. According to the legend, she was compelled, in spite of a vow of celibacy, to marry a young nobleman, Valerian. She succeeded in converting him to her views and also to Christianity, for which they suffered death. She has generally been considered the patron saint of music, particularly church music, and is represented in art as singing and playing on some musical instrument, or as listening to the music of an angel who has been drawn from heaven by her harmony. Dryden alludes to this in his "Ode for St. Cecilia's Day." Her story is also told by Chaucer in the Second Nun's Tale, one of the "Cantebury Tales." In the Roman and Anglican calendars her feast is celebrated on Nov. 22.

Cecilia, Saint. A painting by Rubens, in the Old Museum at Berlin. The saint is playing on a harpsichord and singing, attended by four angels. It is in reality a portrait of the painter's second wife, Hélène Fourment.

Cecilia, Story of Saint. Five celebrated frescoes by Domenichino, in San Luigi dei Francesi, Rome. The subjects are the saint distributing her clothes among the poor, her contempt for idols, her martyrdom, her reception of the martyr's crown, and her assumption. There are no better examples of Domenichino's somewhat cold and academical style.

Cecropia (se-krō'pi-ä). The widow of the younger brother of King Basilius in Sidney's romance "Arcadia."

Cecrops (sē'krops). [Gr. Κέκροψ.] In Athenian tradition, the first king of Athens, and the introducer of civilization into Greece. He was at first regarded as autochthonous, and as a being whose upper half was human and the lower half a dragon; later he was represented to be of Egyptian origin.

Cedar Creek (sē'dār krēk). A stream in the Shenandoah Valley, Virginia, which joins the Shenandoah 4 miles from Strasburg. Here, Oct. 19, 1864, the Confederates under Early surprised the Federals under Wright. Later in the day the Confederates were defeated by Sheridan. Loss of the Federals, 5,995; of the Confederates, 4,200. See Sheridan and Sheridan's Ride.

Cedar Falls (sē'dār fälz). A city in Black Hawk County, Iowa, situated on the Cedar River 99 miles west of Dubuque. Population (1890), 3,459.

Cefalù (chā-fā-lō'). A seaport in the province of Palermo, Sicily, in lat. 38° 1' N., long. 14° 4' E.; the ancient Cephaloedium or Cephaloedis. It has a cathedral and a ruined castle. It was taken by the Arabs in the 9th century. The cathedral, founded in 1131 by King Roger, is one of the finest of Sicilian monuments. The front, of Norman character, has a triple porch between two four-tiered towers, a beautiful sculptured portal, and pointed arcades with tooth-molding. The nave has cylindrical columns and wooden roof; the aisles are vaulted. Choir and apse are lined with magnificent mosaics on gold ground; the semidome of the apse is occupied by a colossal half-figure of the Saviour. On the north side of the cathedral there is a beautiful cloister of the type of that at Monreale. Population, 12,000.

Celadon (sel'ā-don). 1. A witty, inconstant gallant in Dryden's play "Secret Love, or The Maiden Queen." He marries the flirt Florimel, with the understanding that they may each have their own way after marriage.

2. The lover of the beautiful Astrée (Astræa) in D'Urfé's romance "Astrée." His is one of the stock names for a lover in the French drama.—3. A sort of generic name in pastoral poetry for a rustic lover, as Chloe is for his mistress.—4. A character in Thomson's "Seasons."

Celæne (se-lē'nē). [Gr. Κελαινά.] An ancient city of Phrygia, once of great size and importance. It became a royal residence in the time of Xerxes.

The site of Celæne, unknown until within these few years, has been determinately fixed by Mr. Hamilton (Asia Minor, vol. i, pp. 498–500). It is the modern Deunair (lat. 38° 3', long. 30° 20'). This town, which abounds in remains of high antiquity, is situated near the source of the southern or main stream of the Mæander, and in all respects corresponds to the accounts left of the ancient Celæne. Ravlinson, Herod., IV. 28, note.

Celæno (se-lē'nō). [Gr. Κελαινώ.] In classical mythology, one of the Harpies (see Harpies); also, a Pleiad, a daughter of Atlas and Pleione.

Celæno. [L. Celæno, Gr. Κελαινώ, one of the daughters of Atlas and Pleione.] The 6½-magnitude star 16 Pleiadum, barely visible with the naked eye.

She began her professional career, in the latter capacity, at the Bowery Theater, New York, Oct., 1827, and afterward danced and acted chiefly in London, visiting America a second time 1834–37.

Celestial Empire, The. In western countries, a popular name for the Chinese empire, translating the Chinese "Tien Chao" ('Heavenly Dynasty').

Celestials (sē-les'tialz), The. The Chinese: from "the Celestial Empire" (which see).

Celestina (Sp. thā-les-tē'nā). A Spanish prose drama in twenty-one acts, or parts, originally called "The Tragedy of Calisto and Melibœa." Though, from its length and structure, it can never have been represented, its dramatic spirit and movement have left traces that are not to be mistaken of their influence on the national drama ever since.

The first act, which is much the longest, was probably written by Rodrigo Cota, of Toledo, and in that case we may safely assume that it was produced about 1480.

Ticknor, Span. Lit., I. 235.

Celestine (sel'es-tin) I., or Cœlestine (sel'es-tin), Saint. Died at Rome, 432. Bishop of Rome 422–432. He convoked the Council of Ephesus, which in 431 condemned the heresy of Nestorius, and is said by some to have sent St. Patrick to Ireland and Palladius to Scotland, although it is not clear that either of these missionaries had any connection with Rome. He is commemorated on April 6.

Celestine II., or Cœlestine (Guido di Castello). Died at Rome, March, 1144. Pope 1143–1144. He absolved Louis VII. of France.

Celestine III., or Cœlestine (Giacinto Orsini). Born about 1106; died at Rome, Jan. 8, 1198. Pope 1191–98. He crowned Henry VI. of Germany in 1191, and confirmed the Teutonic Order in 1192.

Celestine IV. (Goffredo Castiglione). Died Oct. 10, 1241. Pope, elected Sept. 22, 1241. He reigned only 18 days.

Celestine V., Saint (Pietro di Morrhone). Born in central Italy about 1215; died at the castle Fumone, in the Campagna, Italy, May 19, 1296. He founded the order of the Celestines about 1254, and was elected pope, at the age of eighty, July, 1294. Being nupted for this exalted station by his previous life as a hermit and consequent ignorance of the world, he abdicated, Dec., 1294, and was imprisoned at Fumone by Boniface VIII., who feared that, if left at liberty, he might become the occasion of schism.

Celia (sē'li-ä). [Fem. of L. Celivus.] 1. A character in Spenser's "Faerie Queene," mother of Faith, Hope, and Charity. She lived in the hospice called Holiness.—2. In Shakspeare's comedy "As you Like it," the cousin and devoted friend of Rosalind, and daughter of the usurping Duke Frederick. She masquerades with Rosalind in the forest of Arden, in the disguise of Aliena, a shepherdess.

3. A straightforward, affectionate English girl, with no squeamishness, in Beaumont and Fletcher's play "The Humorous Lientenant," made love to by both Antigonus and his son Demetrius. She disguises as Enanthe.—4. The wife of Corvino in Jonson's "Volpone."—5. A very young girl in Whitehead's "School for Lovers." The part was written for Mrs. Cibber, then over fifty years old.

Célimène (sā-lē-mān'). 1. An artificial, coquetish, but charming and sparkling fine lady in Molière's comedy "Le Misanthrope." She makes Acate and Clitandre both believe she loves them, but finally consents to marry the "Misanthrope," Alceste, though declining to seclude herself from the world with him, whereupon he rejects her. Her name is applied proverbially to a coquette.

2. A character in Molière's "Les Précieuses Ridicules," who has nothing to say.

Cellamare (chel-lā-mā're), Prince of (Antonio Giudice, Duke of Giovenazza). Born at Naples, 1657; died at Seville, Spain, May 16, 1733. A Spanish general and diplomatist, ambassador to France 1715–18.

Celle (tsel'le). A city in the province of Hannover, Prussia, situated on the Aller 22 miles northeast of Hannover. It has an ancient ducal castle. Population (1890), commune, 18,901.

Cellini (chel-lē'nē), Benvenuto. Born at Florence, Italy, Nov. 10, 1500; died Feb. 13, 1571.

A famous Italian sculptor and worker in gold and silver. He studied with Michelangelo Bandinelli, father of the sculptor Bandinelli, and Marcone the goldsmith. From 1516–17 he worked in Pisa. In 1517 he returned to Florence, where he met Torregiano (see Torregiano), who tried to secure him for his work in England. Benvenuto's loyalty to Michelangelo, however, prevented the engagement. From 1523–40 he was in Rome, occupied entirely with his work as goldsmith. In May, 1527, occurred the siege and sack of Rome by the troops of the Constable de Bourbon, in which Cellini assisted in the defense of the castle of St. Angelo, and claimed to have killed Bourbon and wounded the Prince of Orange. At the instigation of Pier Luigi Farnese, bastard of Paul III., he was imprisoned in the Castle of St. Angelo, Oct., 1533. The account of his escape, Dec., 1539, is the greatest marvel of his marvelous autobiography. From 1540–44 he sojourned in France at the court of Francis I. He had his atelier in the Petit Nesle. (See Petit Nesle.) At this time his first attempts at sculpture were made, the chief being the Nymph of Fontainebleau. From 1544 to his death in 1571 he served Cosimo I. and the Medici family in Florence. His story of the casting of the Perseus of the Loggia dei Lanzi at this time has played a great rôle in literature. His autobiography, one of the most famous of Italian classics, circulated in MS. until it was printed in 1730. It was translated into German by Goethe. The latest English translation is by J. A. Symonds.

Celman, Miguel Juarez. See Juarez Celman.

Celsius (sel'si-us or sel'shi-us), Anders. Born at Upsala, Sweden, Nov. 27, 1701; died at Upsala, April 25, 1744. A Swedish astronomer, nephew of Olaf Celsius, professor of astronomy at Upsala. He introduced, about 1742, the centigrade or Celsius thermometer.

Celsius, Olaf. Born July 19, 1670; died at Upsala, Sweden, June 24, 1756. A Swedish botanist, uncle of Anders Celsius. He was professor of theology and Oriental language in the University of Upsala, and rendered himself famous by his researches in regard to the plants mentioned in the Scriptures. He was the instructor and patron of Linnaeus.

Celsius, Olaf. Born at Upsala, Sweden, Dec. 15, 1716; died at Lund, Sweden, Feb. 15, 1794. A Swedish historian, son of Olaf Celsius (1670-1756). He became professor of history in the University of Upsala in 1747, and bishop of Lund in 1777. He wrote a history of Gustavus I. (1746-53), and a history of Eric XIV. (1774). He was ennobled in 1756.

Celsus (sel'sus). Lived in the 2d (?) century A. D. A Platonist philosopher. He was the author of a famous treatise against Christianity, Ἀληθὴς Λόγος ("True Discourse"), the substance of which is preserved in the "Contra Celsum" by Origen.

Celsus, Aulus (or Aurelius) Cornelius. Lived in the first half of the 1st century A. D. A Roman writer, author of a comprehensive encyclopedia treating of farming, medicine, military art, oratory, jurisprudence, and philosophy. "Of this only the eight books de medicina have come down to us, being b. 6-13 of the complete work, the only one of this kind in the good age of Roman literature. In those Celsus gives an account of the whole medical system of the time, writing as a layman and following chiefly Hippocrates and Asclepiades, with sound judgment and in simple, pure diction. The parts dealing with surgery are especially valuable; next to these the diagnosis of internal maladies." Teuffel and Schwabe, Hist. of Rom. Lit. (tr. by Warr), II, 22.

Celsus, or Cellach (kel'läch), Saint. Born 1079; died at Ardpatrick, Munster, Ireland, April 1, 1129. An Irish ecclesiastic, archbishop of Armagh after 1104.

Celtiberi. See Celtiberia.

Celtiberia (sel-ti-bē'ri-ä). [From the Celtiberi. See the def.] In ancient geography, a region in Spain corresponding to the modern southwestern Aragon and the greater part of Soria, Cueneça, and Burgos: in an extended application nearly identical with Hispania Citerior. The Celtiberi (Celtiberians) were thought to be a mixture of the indigenous Iberians and invading Celts from Gaul (whence their name). They offered a vigorous resistance to Rome, and were finally subdued after 72 B. C. Among their chief towns were Numantia and Segobriga.

Celtica (sel'ti-kä). The central division of Transalpine Gaul, according to the threefold division of the Gauls by Julius Cæsar (Gauls or Celts, Aquitanians, Belgians). It coincided with the province of Lugdunensis, except that it extended southwestward to the Garonne.

Celts, or Kelts (seltz, kelts). [L. Celtæ, from Gr. Κέλται, a name at first vaguely applied to a Western people, afterward the regular designation of the Celtic race. Origin unknown.] The peoples which speak languages akin to those of Wales, Ireland, the Highlands of Scotland, and Brittany, and constitute a branch or principal division of the Indo-European families. Formerly these peoples occupied, partly or wholly, France, Spain, northern Italy, the western parts of Germany, and the British islands. Of the remaining Celtic languages and peoples there are two chief divisions, viz., the Gadhelic, comprising the Highlanders of Scotland, the Irish, and the Manx, and the Cymric, comprising the Welsh and Bretons; the Cornish, of Cornwall, related to the latter, is only recently extinct.

Amalgamation of race has since been effected to a certain extent; but still in many parts of Wales, Scotland, and Ireland the mass of the population is mainly or entirely Celtic. Four Celtic dialects — the Manx, the Gaelic, the Erse, and the Welsh — are spoken in our country; and the pure Celtic type survives alike in the Bretons, the Welsh, the native Irish, the people of the Isle of Man, and the Scottish Highlanders, of whom the two former represent the Cimbric, and the three latter the non-Cimbric branch of the nation. Rauflinson, Herod., III, 186.

The Celts appear to have crossed to Britain from Belgic Gaul. In the neolithic age a race indistinguishable from that of the British round barrows occupied Belgium.

Taylor, Aryans, p. 81.

Cemetery Ridge. A low ridge near Gettysburg, celebrated in the battle of that name.

Cempoala (thäm-pō-äl'lä). An ancient town of the Totonac Indians of Mexico, not far from the present site of Vera Cruz, and a little back from the coast. It is described as a city of 23,000 inhabitants, with many palaces and temples; but these accounts are probably exaggerated. In 1519 the Cempoalans gave Cortés a friendly reception, and some of their chiefs marched with him to Mexico. The inhabitants were removed to a mission village near Jalapa about 1600, and the original site of Cempoala is now uncertain, though there is a village with the same name. Also written Cem-poola, Cem-pool, Cempohual, or Zumpual.

Cenci (chen'ché), Beatrice. Born at Rome, Feb. 12, 1577; executed at Rome, Sept. 11, 1599. The daughter of Francesco Cenci, a Roman nobleman, and Ersilia Santa-Croce. Her father, a dissipated and passionate man, treated his family with such severity that his second wife Lucrezia Petroni, his eldest son Giacomo, Beatrice, and the two younger sons Bernardo and Paolo, procured his murder at the palace of Petrella in the kingdom of Naples, Sept. 9, 1598. For this crime Lucrezia, Giacomo, and Beatrice were hanged at Rome, Sept. 11, 1599, and Bernardo was condemned to the galleys for life, being, however, pardoned March 20, 1606. Paolo died shortly after the murder. At the trial Beatrice's counsel, in order to justify the murder, accused Francesco, apparently without foundation, of having attempted the commission of incest upon his client, which has placed her in the light of a martyr. Her tragic end and her patrician birth have made her a favorite theme in poetry and art. She has been made the subject of a tragedy by Shelley, "The Cenci" (1819), and of a painting by Guido Reni, in the Barberini palace, Rome.

Ceneda. See Vittorio.

Cenimagni (sen-i-mag'nī). [L. (Cæsar).] A Celtic people located by Cæsar in the eastern coast region of Britain, north of the Thames.

Cenis, Mont. See Mont Cenis.

Cenomani (sen-ō-mā'nī). [L. (Cæsar) Cenomani, Gr. (Polybius) Κενομάνοι.] A Celtic people, a part of the army of Bellovesus, who with his sanction crossed the Alps under a legendary leader, Etiovinus, and settled north of the Po about Brescia and Verona according to the detailed account of Livy. They were a branch of the Aulerci. Their original seat in Gaul, where they are called Aulerici Cenomani, was on the Sarthe near Le Mans. The Aulerci were included among the tribes constituting the Armorici.

Centaur. See Centaurus.

Centaurus (sen-tá'rus). [L., 'the Centaur.'] An ancient southern constellation, situated between Argo and Scorpio, pictured to represent a centaur holding a Bacchic wand. Its brightest star, α Centauri, is the third brightest in the heavens, being a quarter of a magnitude brighter than Arcturus. It is of a reddish color. Its second star, β, a white star, is about as bright as Betelgeuse, and is reckoned the eleventh in the heavens in order of brightness. The two stars are situated near each other on the parallel of 60° south, a little east of the Southern Cross. Centaurus has, besides, two stars of the second magnitude and seven of the third, and is a spicidid constellation.

Centla (sánt'lá). An ancient town situated near the present Frontera, in Tabasco, southern Mexico: scene of the first victory of Cortés, 1519.

Centlivre (sent-liv'ér or sent-lé'vër), Susan-nah. Born in Ireland (?), of English parents, about 1667; died at London, Dec. 1, 1723. An English actress and dramatist. She is said to have been the daughter of a Mr. Freeman, of Lincolnshire, who removed to Ireland shortly before her birth. About 1706 she married Joseph Centlivre, chief cook to Queen Anne and George I. Among her numerous plays are "The Platonic Lady" (acted 1706), "The Busybody" (acted 1709), "A Gotham Election" (published 1715: 2d ed., 1737, entitled "Humours of Elections"), "A Bold Stroke for a Wife" (acted 1718).

Cent Nouvelles Nouvelles (sön nö-vel' nö-vel'). [F., 'one hundred new tales.'] An old French collection of tales, first printed in folio, by Vêrard, without date, from a manuscript of the year 1456. Dunlop.

The Cent Nouvelles Nouvelles are to all intents and purposes prose fabliaux. They have the full licence of that class of composition, its sparkling fun, its truth to the conditions of ordinary human life. Many of them are taken from the work of the Italian novelists, but all are handled in a thoroughly original manner. The style is perhaps the best of all the late mediæval prose works, being clear, precise, and definite without the least appearance of baldness or dryness.

Saintsbury, French Lit., p. 148.

Cento (chen'tō). A town in the province of Ferrara, Italy, situated near the Reno 17 miles north of Bologna. Population, 5,000.

Centoatl (then-tō-ät'l'). In Mexican (Nahuatl) mythology, the goddess (according to some authorities a god) of maize, and consequently of agriculture. Her principal feast was in the fourth Mexican month (April-May), and she was also honored in the eleventh month (Sept.). She was one of the patrons of childbirth. The offerings made to her were generally grain and fruits. Some authorities identify this goddess with Cihuacoatl, Tlazolteotl, etc. Also written Cinteotl, Centeatl, Tzinteatl.

Centones Homerici (sen-tō'néz hō-mer'i-si). See the extract.

Even the life of Christ was put together in Homeric hexameters, called centones Homerici, which were attributed to the Empress Eudocia, and thought worthy of being printed by Aldus (1501), and Stephens (1568), but apparently as Christian literature.

Mahaffy, Hist. of Classical Greek Lit., I, 153.

Cento Novelle Antiche (chen'tō nö-vel'le än-té'ke). [It., 'one hundred old tales.'] A collection of tales from ancient and mediæval history, the romances of chivalry, and the fabliaux of the trouvères, made in Italy about the end of the 13th century.

Central Africa, British. The British sphere of influence north of the Zambesi. The total area is about 500,000 square miles; the total native population, about 3,000,000.

Central America. A name applied collectively to the five republics of Guatemala, Honduras, Salvador, Nicaragua, and Costa Rica.

Central India Agency. The official name for a collection of native states in India, under the control of Great Britain, situated between Rajputana and the Northwestern Provinces on the north, and the Central Provinces on the south. Chief states, Gwalior, Indur, Bhopal, Rewa. Area, 77,808 square miles. Population (1891), 10,318,812.

Centralists (sen'tral-ists). [Sp. Centralistas.] A political party in Mexico which began in 1823, was reorganized in 1837, and has ever since been prominent. The Centralists favor a single centralized republican government, and are opposed by the Federalists, who desire autonomy of the states. The struggles for ascendancy of these two parties have caused most of the civil wars which have desolated Mexico. Temporarily each of the parties or branches of them have been known by other names. Santa Anna was long the leading spirit of the Centralists. Centralist and Federalist parties have been prominent in the affairs of other Spanish-American countries, notably Argentina, Venezuela, and Central America, but they are commonly distinguished by other names.

Central Park. The principal park in New York, extending from 59th street to 110th street, and from Fifth avenue to Eighth avenue. It was designed by Olmsted and Vaux, and contains, besides numerous drives, the Mall, the Croton Reservoirs, Cleopatra's Needle (the Obelisk), the Metropolitan Art Museum, etc. Length, 2½ miles. Area, 840 acres.

Central Provinces. A chief-commissionership of British India, lat. 18°-24° N., long. 77°-84° E. It contains four divisions: Nagpur, Jabalpur, Nerbudda, and Chatisgarh. Its chief town is Nagpur. Area, 80,561 square miles. Population (1891), 19,784,294. Connected with the Central Provinces are 15 vassal states: Bastar, Bamra, Patna, etc. Area, 29,435 square miles. Population (1891), 2,160,511.

Centuripe (chen-tō'rē-pe), or Centorbi (chen-tō'r'bē). A town in the province of Catania, Sicily, 20 miles northwest of Catania: the ancient Centuripe. It has Roman antiquities. It was destroyed by the emperor Frederick II. in 1233. Population, 8,000.

Century White. A nickname given to John White (1590-1645), from his work "First Century of Scandalous Malignant Priests, etc."

Genú (sä-nō'). The name given about 1515 to a region on the northern coast of South America, about midway between Darien and Cartagena. Enciso, sent from Darien to conquer it (1515), tried to treat with the Indians, but afterward ravaged their country. A second expedition, sent soon after, under Becerra, was entirely destroyed by the natives.

Geos (sé'os), or Cea (sē'ä). [Gr. Γεως or Κία.] An island of the Cyclades, situated in the Ægean Sea 13 miles southeast of Attica; the modern Zea, or Tzia. It formerly contained four cities, and was the birthplace of Simonides and Bacchylides. It belongs to Greece.

Geos. The capital of the island of Ceos.

Genwalh (kän'walch). Lived about 643-672. Son of Cyneigils, whom he succeeded as king of the West Saxons in 643.

Cepeda (thä-pä'thä), Diego. Born at Torde-sillas about 1495; died at Valladolid, 1549 or 1550. A Spanish judge. He was oidor of the Canary Islands, and subsequently one of the royal audience which accompanied the viceroy Blasco Nuñez Vela to Peru (1544). There he led the judges in their opposition to Vela, imprisoned him, joined Gonzalo Pizarro, and took part in the battle of Anauquito, where the viceroy was killed (Jan. 18, 1546). Foreseeing Pizarro's defeat, he deserted him on the battle-field of Sacahuana (April 8, 1548), was sent to be tried in Spain, and, it is said, poisoned himself in prison.

Cephalonia (sef-a-lō'ni-ä), ancient Cephalonia (sef-a-lē'ni-ä), modern Gr. Kephallenia. [Gr. Κεφαλληνία or Κεφαλλήνια.] One of the Ionian Islands, west of Greece, forming with Ithaca and neighboring small islands a nomarchy of Greece. Its surface is mountainous. Its capital is Argostoli. The island was called by Homer Same or Samos. It became subject to Rome in 189 B. C., and later came under Byzantine, Venetian, and Turkish rule, and a British protectorate. Area, 302 square miles. Length, 30 miles. Population (1891), 80,178.

Cephalus (sef'ä-lus). [Gr. Κεφαλος.] In Greek mythology, the son of Deion and Diomede, and the husband of Procris or Proene whom he accidentally slew while hunting.

Cephas (sō'fās). [Aram., 'a rock'; Gr. Κηφᾶς.] A surname given by Christ to Simon; rendered in Greek Κηφᾶς ('a rock'), in Latin Petrus, and in English Peter.

Cepheus (sē'fūs). [Gr. Κηφείης.] 1. A king of Ethiopia, son of Belus, husband of Cassiopeia, and father of Andromeda.—2. One of the Argonauts.

Cepheus. One of the ancient northern constellations, preceding Cassiopeia. It is figured to represent the Ethiopian king Cepheus wearing a tiara and having his arms somewhat extended. Its brightest stars are of the third magnitude.

Cephissus (se-fis'us). [Gr. Κηφισσός.] In ancient geography: (a) A river in Phocis and Bœotia, Greece, flowing into Lake Copais (Topolias). (b) A river in Attica, Greece, flowing through the plain of Athens into the Saronic Gulf. (c) A river of Attica, Greece, flowing through the plain of Eleusis into the Gulf of Eleusis.

Ceracchi (chā-rāk'kē), Giuseppe. Born in Corsica about 1760; executed at Paris, Jan. 30 (?), 1801. An Italian sculptor, conspirator against the life of Napoleon 1800.

Ceram (se-ram'; Pg. pron. se-rān'), or Zeram, or Serang, or Ceiram (Pg. pron. sā-rān'). An island of the Moluccas, East Indies, lat. 3°-3° 30' S., long. 128°-131° E. Its inhabitants are Malays and Alfuras. It is under Dutch sovereignty. Area, 6,665 square miles. Population, about 100,000.

Ceramicus (ser-a-mī'kus). [Gr. Κεραμικός.] A large area on the northwest side of ancient Athens: so named from the early gathering in it of the potters, who still affect it, attracted by the presence of water and excellent clay. It was divided into two parts: the Inner Ceramicus, within the walls, traversed by the Dromos street from the Dipylon Gate, and including the Agora; and the Outer Ceramicus, contiguous the first division outside of the walls. The Outer Ceramicus became a favorite place of burial for the Athenians, and here were interred those honored with a public funeral. The tombs were ranged beside and near the various roads which radiated from the Dipylon Gate. Little trace of them remains, except of the unique group upon and near the inception of the Sacred Way to Eleusis: a group which was preserved by being buried in 86 B. C. in the siege-agger of Sulla, and contains historical and plastic memorials of very high value, among them the sculptured monument of Dexileus, who fell before Corinth in 393 B. C., and tombs of Euphrosyne, Hegeso, Aristion, Demetria, and Pamphile.

Ceraunian Mountains (se-rā'ni-an moun'tānz). [Gr. τὰ Κεραυνία ὄρη, L. Ceraunii montes.] In ancient geography: (a) a range of mountains in the eastern part of the Caucasus system; exact position undetermined. (b) A chain of mountains in northwestern Epirus, terminating in the promontory Acroceramaia (which see).

Cerberus (sēr'be-rus). [Gr. Κέρβερος.] In Greek mythology, the watch-dog at the entrance to the infernal regions, offspring of Typhaon and Echidna: usually represented with three heads, a serpent's tail, and a mane of serpents' heads.

Cercinthis (sēr-si-nī'tis). [Gr. Κερκινθίτις λίμνη.] In ancient geography, the lake or enlargement of the river Strymon (in Macedonia), near its mouth: the modern Takinos.

Cercops (sēr'kops). [Gr. Κέρκοψ.] 1. An ancient Greek Orphic poet, said to have been the author of a poem, "The Descent into Hades," also attributed to Prodicus of Samos and others.—2. A Greek poet of Miletus, a contemporary of Hesiod. To him a poem on the war of Ægimius, king of the Dorians, against the Lapithe (also attributed to Hesiod), is by some assigned.

Cerda (ther'dā), Tomás Antonio Manrique de la, Count of Paredes and Marquis of La Laguna. Born about 1620; died 1688. A Spanish administrator. He was a member of the royal council, and from 1680 to 1686 viceroy of New Spain (Mexico). During his term the bucaners sacked Vera Cruz (May, 1683), and committed other ravages.

Cerda Sandoval Silva y Mendoza, Gaspar de la. Born about 1630; died 1697. A Spanish administrator. In 1688 he was created count of Galve and made viceroy of Mexico, holding the office from Nov., 1688, to July, 1695. He sent expeditions against the French of Santo Domingo and Louisiana, 1690-91, and in 1694 Pensacola, Florida, was founded by his orders. He returned to Spain in May, 1696.

Cerdagne (ser-dāny'), Sp. La Cerdaña (ther-dān'yā). An ancient countship on both sides of the eastern Pyrenees. Part of it is now in the department of Pyrénées-Orientales in France, and part is in Spain. It followed in the later middle ages the fortunes of Catalonia, and then of Aragon. It was released from homage to France in 1255, was acquired by France in 1462, and was restored to Aragon in 1493. The part to the north of the Pyrenees was ceded to France in 1659.

Cerdic (kēr'dik). Died 534. A Saxon ealdorman who founded a settlement on the coast of Hampshire, England, in 495 A. D., assumed the title of King of the West Saxons in 519, and became ancestor of the English royal line. He defeated the Britons at Charford in 519; was himself defeated at Mount Badon, or Badbury, in Dorsetshire, in 530; and conquered the Isle of Wight in 530.

Cerdisford (kēr'diks-fōrd). The scene of the victory of Cerdic and Cymrie over the Britons in 519: usually identified with Charford (which see).

Cerdo (sēr'dō). Born in Syria: lived about 137 A. D. A Gnostic teacher, founder of a sect named from him Cerdonians (which see).

Cerdonians (sēr-dō'ni-anz). A Gnostic sect of the 2d century, named from its founder Cerdo. They held that there were two first causes, one good (the unknown father of Jesus Christ) and one evil (the Creator revealed in the law and the prophets), and that one was not subject or inferior to the other.

Ceres (sēr'rēz). 1. In old Italian mythology, the goddess of grain and harvest, later identified by the Romans with the Greek Demeter. See Demeter.—2. An asteroid (No. 1) discovered by Piazzi at Palermo Jan. 1, 1801.

Ceres. An antique statue in black and white marble, in the Glyptothek at Munich. The head, arms, and feet are white; the very thin draperies are in polished black marble.

Céret (sā-rā'). A town in the department of Pyrénées-Orientales, France, situated on the Tech 17 miles southwest of Perpignan. It was the scene of a Spanish victory over the French April 20, 1793, and of a French victory over the Spanish April 30, 1794. Population (1891), commune, 3,828.

Ceridwen. In Welsh fairy lore, a deity, degraded into a sorceress, who presides over a mystical cauldron, and has a fight in which she and her foe assume different shapes at pleasure.

Cerignola (ehā-rēn-yō'lā). A town in the province of Foggia, Italy, in lat. 41° 16' N., long. 15° 53' E. Here, April 23, 1593, the Spanish army (about 6,300) under Oonsalvo de Cordova defeated the French (6,000) under the Duc de Nemours. Loss of French, 3,000-4,000. Population, 22,900.

Cerigo (cher-ē'gō), modern Gr. Kythera. One of the Ionian islands, situated 8-10 miles south of Laconia, Greece: the ancient Cythera. It contained a shrine of Aphrodite. Area, 107 square miles.

Cerimon (ser'i-mon). A physician of Ephesus who saves the life of Thaisa, in Shakspeare's "Pericles."

Cerinthians (sē-rin'thi-anz). A sect of early heretics, followers of Cerinthus.

Cerinthus (sē-rin'thus). Born in Egypt: lived probably in the latter part of the 1st century A. D. A Gnostic teacher, founder of the heretical sect of the Cerinthians or Merinthians.

Cerinthus was the first of whose tenets we have any distinct statement, who, admitting the truth of Christianity, attempted to incorporate with it foreign and Oriental tenets. Cerinthus was of Jewish descent, and educated in the Judaic-Platonic school of Alexandria. His system was a singular and apparently incongruous fusion of Jewish, Christian, and Oriental notions. He did not, like Simon or Menander, invest himself in a sacred and mysterious character, though he pretended to angelic revelations. Like all the Orientals, his imagination was haunted with the notion of the malignity of matter; and his object seems to have been to keep both the primal Being and the Christ uninfected with its contagion. The Creator of the material world, therefore, was a secondary being,—an angel or angels; as Cerinthus seems to have adhered to the Jewish, and did not adopt the Oriental language. Milman, Hist. of Christianity, II. 59.

Cérisoles (sā-rē-zōl'), It. Ceresole (cher-e-zō'le). A village in Piedmont, Italy, 13 miles northwest of Alba. Here, April 14, 1544, the French under the Duc d'Enghien defeated the Imperialists and Spaniards under the Marquis of Guasto. Loss of the Imperialist army, about 12,000.

Cerna (ther'nā), Vicente. A Guatemalan general. He was elected president of Guatemala, assuming the office May 24, 1865; was reelected in 1869, and held the office until June 23, 1871, when he was defeated and overthrown by Barrios.

Cerne (sēr'nē). In ancient geography, an island west of Africa, discovered and colonized by the Carthaginian Hanno: perhaps the modern Arguin.

Cerqueira e Silva, Ignacio Accioli de. See Accioli.

Cerro de Pasco (ther'rō dā pās'kō), or Pasco. The capital of the department of Junin, Peru, in lat. 10° 55' S., long. 76° W.: 14,280 feet above the sea. It owes its existence to the celebrated silver-mines of the vicinity, long among the most productive in the world, and still very rich. Population (1889), about 14,000.

Cerro Gordo (ser'rō gor'dō; Sp. pron. ther'rō gōr'dō). [Sp., 'big mountain.'] A pass by the side of the Rio del Plan, between Vera Cruz and Jalapa, state of Vera Cruz, Mexico, through which passes the principal road from the coast to Mexico by Jalapa. The pass was carried by the American forces, after a severe battle, April 17-18, 1847.

Cerro Largo (ther'rō lār'gō). [Sp., 'wide mountain.'] A department in northeastern Uruguay. Capital, Melo. Area, 5,840 square miles. Population (1891), about 28,000.

Certaldo (cher-tāl'dō). A town in the province of Florence, Italy, 17 miles southwest of Florence. It is the place of the birth and death of Boccaccio.

Certosa (cher-tō'sā). [It., 'Carthusian Monastery.'] A former Carthusian monastery at Pavia, Italy, one of the largest and most splendid existing. The great church was founded in 1396, and is most picturesque, with its central pyramidal dome in recessed stages, its many arched and pinnacled turrets, its semicircular apses, and its beautiful arcaded galleries beneath the roofs. The rich west front is a unique achievement of the Italian Renaissance. The interior is architecturally defective, but is splendid with painting and church furniture, and contains the splendid tomb of Gian Galeazzo Visconti. The small and great cloisters are superb examples of brickwork with terra-cotta ornament.

Cervantes Saavedra (sēr-van'tēz; Sp. pron. ther-vān'tes sä-ä-vā'drā), Miguel de. Born at Alcalá de Henares, about 20 miles from Madrid, Oct. 9 (?), 1547; died at Madrid, April 23, 1616. A celebrated Spanish poet and novelist. His parents were poor, but of a noble family. It is conjectured that he was educated at Alcalá and at the University of Salamanca; little is known of his early years, however, except that he wrote verses when very young. In 1570 he served as chamberlain in the household of Monsieur Aquaviva (who was afterward cardinal) in Rome. He soon left Rome and volunteered as a common soldier in the expedition commanded by Don John of Austria and organized by the Pope and the state of Venice against the Turks. In 1571 he was severely wounded at the battle of Lepanto, losing the use of his left hand and arm for life. He was honorably discharged in 1575. He was captured in returning to Spain and passed five years in slavery in Algiers, but was finally ransomed by his family and by "religious charity" in 1580. Being depressed by adversity and without means or friends, he recanted and served in Portugal and the Azores. In 1584 he had returned and was married. After this he lived much at Madrid, where he began to earn his living by authorship, at first by writing plays. In 1588 he went to Seville, where he lived, with some interruptions, until about 1598. Here he was extremely poor, and was even imprisoned, as being indebted to the government. After this there is a tradition that he was sent by the grand prior of the Order of St. John in La Mancha to collect rents due the monastery in Argamasilla. The debtors persecuted and imprisoned him, and it is said that here, in indignation and in prison, he began to write "Don Quixote." In 1603 he went to Valladolid, where he lived poorly as a sort of general agent and amanuensis. Here he prepared the first part of "Don Quixote" for the press, and printed it at Madrid in 1605; here he returned in 1606. In 1615 he published the second part of "Don Quixote." There was then a difference between the English calendar and the Spanish of ten days; hence he did not, as has been asserted, die on the same day with Shakspeare (though on the same date). His chief work is "Don Quixote" (1605 and 1615). Among his other works are "Galatea, an Eclogue" (1584), "Novelas Exemplares" ("Twelve Instructive or Moral Tales," 1613), and "Viaje del Farnaso" ("Journey to Parnassus," 1614). "Pericles and Sigismunda, a Northern Romance," was published by his widow in 1617. He wrote "twenty or thirty plays" according to his own account, some of which are preserved; but his genius did not lie in that direction. See Don Quixote.

Cervin, Mont. See Matterhorn.

Cesari (chā'sā-rē), Antonio. Born at Verona, Italy, Jan. 16, 1760; died at Ravenna, Italy, Oct. 1, 1828. An Italian philologist. He was the author of a new edition of "Vocabolario della Crusca" (1806-09), "Bellezze di Dante" (1824-26), translations of Terence (1816) and of Cicero's Epistles (1826-31), etc.

Cesari, Giuseppe; called Il Cavaliere d'Arpino, and Il Giuseppino. Born at Rome about 1570; died at Rome about 1640. An Italian painter. His chief works are frescos at the Capitol, Rome.

Cesario (se-zā'ri-ō). 1. The name assumed by the disguised Viola in Shakspeare's "Twelfth Night."—2. A young gentleman of a fiery nature, the supposed son of Albertus, in Massinger, Rowley, and Fletcher's "Fair Maid of the Inn."

Cesarotti (che-sā-rot'tē), Melchiorre. Born at Padua, Italy, May 15, 1730; died Nov. 4, 1808. An Italian poet and miscellaneous writer. His works include a translation of Ossian (1763), "Saggio sulla filosofia delle lingue" (1785), etc.

Cesena (che-sā'nā). A town in the province of Forlì, Italy, 20 miles south of Ravenna: the ancient Cæsena. It has a cathedral, an interesting brick structure of the 14th century, following the type of the cathedral of Florence. It contains sculptures of unusual excellence, of the school of Donatello, especially a St. John and a St. Leonard. Population, 11,000.

Cesnola (ches-nō'lā), Count Luigi Palma di. Born at Rivarolo, near Turin, July 29, 1832. An Italian-American archaeologist. He was appointed United States consul at Cyprus, and while occupying this post undertook a series of excavations, which resulted in the discovery of a large number of antiquities. The collection was purchased in 1873 by the Metropolitan Museum (New York), of which he became director in 1879. Author of "Cyprus: its Ancient Cities, Tombs, and Temples" (1877), and "The Metropolitan Museum of Art" (1882). See Cyprus.

Céspedes (thás'pe-thás er sás'pe-thás), Carlos Manuel de. Born at Bayamo, April 18, 1819; died March 22, 1874. A Cuban revolutionist. In 1868 he headed an armed revolt which spread until nearly the whole island, except the coast towns, had declared against the Spaniards. A congress of the revolutionists declared Cuba independent, and elected Céspedes president (1899). Driven at last to the mountains, Céspedes was shot while resisting capture.

Céspedes, Pablo de. Born at Cordova, Spain, 1538; died at Cordova, July 26, 1608. A Spanish painter, poet, sculptor, and architect, noted as a colorist. Fragments of his poem "Arte de la pintura" were published in 1649.

Cetwayo. See Cettwayo.

Cethegus (se-thé'gus), Marcus Cornelius. Died 196 B. C. A Roman general. He was curule edile 213, pretor 211, censor 209, and consul 204. In the next year he commanded as proconsul in Cisalpine Gaul, where, with the aid of the pretor Quintilius Varus, he defeated the Carthaginian general Mago, brother of Hannibal.

Cetinje, or Cetigne. See Cettinje.

Cette (set). A seaport in the department of Héruault, France, situated on a tongue of land between the Mediterranean and the Étang de Than, in lat. 43° 25' N., long. 3° 41' E. It is an important commercial center. It exports wines, brandies, and salt. Its port was founded in the 17th century. Population (1891), commune, 36,541.

Cettwayo (set-i-wá'yó), or Ketshwayo (ká-chwá'yó). A Zulu chief, elected at Ulundi in 1873. In 1878 he rebelled against British suzerainty. In the war which followed a British regiment was annihilated by the Zulus at Isandula, 1879; but General Wolseley defeated and captured Cettwayo the same year. Until 1882 Cettwayo was held captive in Cape Colony. Owing to the efforts of a party which had formed in his favor among friends of the Zulus in South Africa and in Great Britain, he was transferred to England, where he was lionized. England tried to reinstate him as king of the Zulus, but he had lost his prestige. Resent on all sides by hostile chiefs, he had to seek refuge in British territory. More captive than free, he was kept at Ekove until 1884, when he died.

Cetus (sét'us). [L., 'whale.'] A southern constellation, the Whale, in advance of Orion. It was anciently pictured as some kind of marine animal, possibly a seal.

Ceuta (süt'tá; Sp. pron. thá'ó-tá), Moorish Sebta. [From Ar. septá, seven: from its Roman name ad Septem Fratres.] A fortified town belonging to Spain, situated on the northern coast of Morocco, opposite Gibraltar, in lat. 35° 54' N., long. 5° 17' W. It is a military and penal station, and is built on the ancient Abyla, one of the range "Septem Fratres." It was taken by Belisarius in 534, by the West Goths in 618, by the Arabs about 700, and from the Moors by Portugal in 1415. It passed to Spain in 1580.

Cevallos (thá-vál'yós), Pedro Fermin. Born at Ambato about 1814. An Ecuadorian historian. He is a lawyer, has held high judicial posts, and was senator in 1867. His most important work is "Resumen de la historia del Ecuador," in 5 volumes.

Cévennes, Les. [Gr. τὸ Κέφεινον ὄρος (Strabo), L. Cebenná mons: a Celtic name.] A mountain-chain in southern France. The Cévennes proper extend from the Canal-du-Midi northward, including the mountains of Vivarais, or northern Cévennes, to the Canal-du-Centre, department of Saône-et-Loire. They separate the basins of the Loire and Garonne from those of the Rhône and Saône, and are continued northward by the mountains of Lyonnais and Charolais to the plateau of Langres. They are celebrated as a stronghold of the Protestants and Camisards. The highest peak is Mezenc (5,756 feet). Mont Pilat, northern Cévennes, is 4,705 feet high.

Ceylon (sē-len' or si-len'). [F. Ceylan, ancient Taprobane: from the Pali Sīlam for Sīhalam, the land of the Sinhals (the Aryan inhabitants of Ceylon).] An island in the Indian Ocean, a crown colony of Great Britain, south of Hindustan, from which it is separated by the Gulf of Manaar and Palk Strait. It is mountainous in the south, and produces coffee, cinchona bark, tea, cinnamon, cacao, etc. It is celebrated for precious stones. The chief towns are Colombo, Galle, Trincomalee, Kandy, and Jaffna. The leading races are Sinhalese, Kandyans, Tamils, Moormen, and Veddahs. It is ruled by a governor and executive and legislative councils. In ancient times it was governed by different native dynasties. The Portuguese took possession of it in the 16th century. It was conquered by the Dutch about 1638, and by the British 1795-96, and was formally ceded to Great Britain in 1802. The last king of Kandy was deposed in 1815. Area, 25,364 square miles. Population (1891), 3,008,466.

Ceyx (sē'iks). [Gr. Κῆϋξ.] The son of Heosphoros, or the Morning Star, and the nymph Philonis; the husband of Aleyone or Halkyone, daughter of the Thessalian Æolus. The pair were arrogant enough to style themselves Zeus and Hera, and were accordingly changed respectively by Zeus into birds of the same name, a diver and a kingfisher. Another story confused Ceyx with a king of Trachis, and dwelt on the tender love of the pair for each other. Ceyx is drowned at sea, and Aleyone finds his body cast upon his native shore. The gods take pity on her grief, and change the husband and wife into kingfishers (alcyones), whose affection for each other in the pairing season was proverbial. (Scyffter, Dict. of Classical Antiquities, p. 127.) Their story is told in Chaucer's "Death of Blanche." It is conjectured that it was an independent production afterward abridged and inserted as an episode in "The Death of Blanche." Of the original nothing is in existence.

Chablais (shā-blá'). A former province of Savoy, since 1860 the arrondissement of Thonon, department of Haute-Savoie, France.

Chablis (shā-blé'). A town in the department of Yonne, France, 11 miles east of Auxerre, noted for the wines produced in its vicinity.

Chabot (shā-bó'), Admiral of France. A tragedy by Chapman and Shirley, licensed in 1635, printed in 1639.

Chabot, François. Born at St.-Geniez, Aveyron, France, 1759; guillotined at Paris, April 5, 1794. A French revolutionist, a member of the Convention in 1792.

Chabot, Philippe de, Comte de Charny et de Busangeis. Born about 1480; died June 1, 1543. A French general, admiral of France. He successfully defended Marseilles against the Imperialists in 1524, was made prisoner at the battle of Pavia in 1525, and on his release was appointed admiral to succeed Bonivert, who was killed in the action. He was sent to Italy in 1529 to negotiate the ratification of the treaty of Cambrai by Charles V. In 1535 he had the chief command of the war against the Duke of Savoy, in the course of which he conquered parts of Savoy and Piedmont, but incurred censure for not having properly followed up his victories. He was in 1541 convicted of fraud against the national treasury, on charges preferred by the constable Montmorency, but was pardoned by the king. He is said to have been the first to suggest the colonization of Canada. Also called Admiral de Brion.

Chabrius (ká'brí-as). [Gr. Χαβρίας.] Killed near Chios, 357 B. C. An Athenian general. Being in 888 sent to the assistance of Evagoras of Cyprus against the Persians, he landed on the way in Agina, and gained by an ambuscade a decisive victory over the Spartan general Gorgopas, who fell in battle. In 378, in a campaign against Agesilaus, he acquired great celebrity by the adoption of a new maneuver, which consisted in receiving the enemy's attack with spears presented and shields resting on one knee. In 376 he gained a decisive naval victory over the Lacedæmonians at Naxos. On the outbreak of the Social War, 357, he was placed in command of the Athenian fleet, which cooperated with the army under Chares. He was killed at the siege of Chios in the same year.

Chabrilan (shā-bré-yón'), Comtesse de Moreton de Céleste Vénard, surnamed Mogador. Born at Paris, Dec. 27, 1824. A French actress and writer of novels, operettas, vaudevilles, etc.

Chaca (chā'ká), Cañon de. A long gorge or valley in western New Mexico, now deserted, but containing large and well-preserved ancient ruins. The Pueblo Bonito, Pueblo del Arroyo, etc., are among the most interesting specimens of ancient Indian architecture known in the southwest.

Chacabuco (chā-kā-bó'kó). A pass in the transverse spur of the Andes, on the northern side of the plain of Santiago, Chile. During the war for independence, General San Martín's army, which had marched over the Andes, found this pass strongly defended by the Spaniards under Maroto. It was carried by a bayonet charge led by General O'Higgins, Feb. 12, 1817, thus opening the way for the patriots to Santiago.

Chacatos. See Choctaw.

Chachapoyas (chā-chā-pó'yás). 1. A region of ancient Peru, nearly corresponding to the present department of Amazonas. The inhabitants were noted for their warlike spirit and intelligence; they were conquered by the Incas after a long war. Alonso de Alvarado was sent by Pizarro to reduce this district in 1535, and was made governor of it.

2. A province of Peru, in the department of Amazonas. Capital, Chachapoyas. Previous to 1832 it was much larger. Chachapoyas borders on the gorge of the Upper Marañon, and the surface is much broken. Area, about 4,300 square miles. Population, about 20,000.

3. A city of northern Peru, capital of the province of the same name, in the department of Amazonas, and episcopal city of the diocese of Chachapoyas. It was founded in 1540 by Alonso de Alvarado, who called it Ciudad de la Frontera. Population, abt 5,000.

Chac-Mool, Chaak-Mool, or Chackmool (shák-mól'). A traditional chief or "king" of the Maya Indians of Yucatan. The name was given by Le Plongeon to a statue discovered by him in 1876 at the ruined city of Chichen-Itza in eastern Yucatan, and supposed to represent this chief; but archaeologists are not in accord as to this identity, and the statue is of Mexican rather than of Yucatec type. It was appropriated by the Mexican government, and is now in the National Museum at Mexico.

Chaco (chā'kó), or Chacu (chā'kó), Gran. [From the Quichua chacu, the animals driven together by a cordon of hunters: in allusion to the numerous Indian tribes of this region.] A vast tract of land in South America, extending from the Paraguay to the Bolivian highlands, between lat. 20° and 29° S. It is a low plain, generally open, with a few isolated hills, and portions are flooded every year; the great rivers Pilcomayo and Bermejo pass through it to the Paraguay. The Chaco region is divided between Argentina, Paraguay, and Bolivia; the greater part is very imperfectly known, and inhabited only by savage tribes of Indians. Since 1870 considerable settlements have been made in the Argentine Chaco. In the 17th century the name Chaco included the plains as far north as lat. 16° S.

Chacon y Castellon (chā-kón'yē kás-tel-yón'), Luis. Born at Havana, Cuba, about 1670; died there in 1716. A Cuban soldier. From 1699 until his death he was governor of the Morro Castle at Havana, and during this time he was thrice ad interim captain-general of the island (Dec., 1702, to May 13, 1706; July 3, 1707, to Jan. 18, 1708; and Feb. 18, 1711, to Feb. 4, 1713). In 1707 he led an expedition against the English colonies in Carolina.

He served on the Cambridge committee for drawing up the authorized version of the Bible.

Chad's Ford (chad'förd). See Brandywine.

Chæreas and Callirrhoe (kē'rē-as and ka-lir'-ō-ē). An old Greek romance by Chariton Aphrodisiensis, only a part of which is extant.

Chariton of Aphrodisias is the feigned name of the erotic novelist to whom we owe the romance of Chæreas and Callirrhoe. He pretends to have been the secretary of Athenagoras, who is mentioned by Theocritus as a Syracusan orator, the opponent of Hermocrates; and the daughter of the latter is the heroine of the piece. The romance is less known by its merits than by the very elaborate commentary of which D'Orville made it the vehicle and excuse. The age of the author is not ascertained, but it seems to us, from internal evidence, that it belongs to the same school as the romance of Achilles Tatius, and was perhaps suggested by it. We have a revival in the tomb, with happier results than that of Juliet, and the usual intervention of robbers.

K. O. Müller, Hist. of the Lit. of Anc. Greece, III. 360. (Donaldson.)

Chæronea (ker-ō-nē'ē), or Chæroneia (ker-ō-nē'yē). [Gr. Χαλκιδεα.] In ancient geography, a town in western Bœotia, Greece, in lat. 38° 29' N., long. 22° 50' E. It was the birthplace of Plutarch. Here, 338 B. C., Philip of Macedon defeated the Bœotians and Athenians; and in 86 B. C. Sulla, with 30,000-40,000 men, defeated the army of Mithridates (about 110,000) under Archelaus.

Chagga (chäg'gä). [G. Dsehagga.] A Bantu tribe of German East Africa. They are settled on the lowest terrace of Mount Kilimanjaro, and are almost surrounded by the Masai tribes. They are tall, brave, and less dark than the coast people. The Germans have had much trouble in subduing them, one military expedition being massacred by the Moshl in 1892. The Chagga language is closely related to Suahili.

Chagres (chä'gres). 1. A river in the isthmus of Panama, Colombia, which flows into the Caribbean Sea at the town of Chagres. The line of the (incomplete) Panama Canal follows the valley of the Chagres.—2. A seaport in Colombia, 12 miles southwest of Aspinwall.

Chahta. See Choctaw.

Chailé-Long (shä-yä'lon), Charles. Born, of French parents, at Baltimore, Md., 1843. An African explorer. After serving in the Confederate army he went to Egypt, and was made lieutenant-colonel by the khedive in 1870. In 1874 Gordon appointed him chief of his staff and sent him on a mission to King Mtesa of Uganda. Though obliged by intrigues, to return to Gordon at Gondokoro, he succeeded in exploring part of Lake Victoria and the surrounding country, the course of the Somerset Nile, and the Makaraka and Nyam-Nyam countries. He published "Central Africa" (1887), and "The Three Prophets" (Gordon, the Mahdi, Arabi) in 1888.

Chaimas, or Chaymas (chī'māz). An Indian tribe of eastern Venezuela, between the Cumaná coast and the Orinoco. They are of the Carib stock, and were formerly numerous and powerful, resisting the Spanish invaders with great bravery. In the 16th and 17th centuries most of the survivors were gathered into mission villages, and their descendants are now mingled with other tribes.

Chaitanya (chī-tau'ya). Born at Nadiya, in Bengal, 1485; died 1527. The founder of a sect of Vaishnavas found in Bengal. His first principle was that all the faithful worshipers of Krishna (Vishnu) were to be treated as equals. Caste was to be subordinated to faith in Krishna. "The mercy of God," said Chaitanya, "regards neither tribe nor family." While the Vedic hymns and Brahmanas rely on works (karma), and the Upanishads on abstract meditation and divine knowledge, as the path to blessedness, Chaitanya found it in intense devotion, displayed by complete union of the spirit with Krishna. He disappeared mysteriously in 1527, at the age of forty-two. His followers came to regard him as Krishna incarnate, and his disciples Advaita and Nityananda as manifestations of portions of the same deity. These three leaders are therefore called the three great lords (Prabhū). They form the triad of this phase of Vaishnavism.

Chaka (chä'kä). See Zulu.

Chalcedon (kal-sē'don). [Gr. Χαλκηδών.] In ancient geography, a town in Bithynia, situated on the Bosphorus opposite Byzantium. It was founded by Megarian colonists about 685 B. C. The fourth ecumenical council, at which Eutychianism was condemned, was held there in 451 A. D. It was convoked by the emperor Marcianus, and was attended by 630 bishops (mostly from the Orient), the legates of Pope Leo I., and the commissioners of the emperor. It assembled originally at Nicaea in Sept., 451, but was on account of its turbulence transferred to Chalcedon in order that the imperial court and senate might attend in person. It condemned the Robber Council (Eutychian) of Ephesus (449), and adopted an orthodox confession of faith.

Chalcedon was called the city of the blind, because its founders passed by the then unoccupied site of Byzantium. Freeman, Hist. Essays, III. 277.

Chalchihuitlicue (chäl'che-wē-tlē'kwe). [Petitico of blue-stones.] In Mexican (Nahuatl) mythology, the goddess of water, and the wife or companion of Tlaloc. She had many other names.

Chalcidice (kal-sid'i-sē). [Gr. Χαλκιδική.] In ancient geography, the chief peninsula of Macedonia, terminating in the three smaller peninsulas of Pallene, Sithonia, and Acte, projecting into the Ægean Sea. It was settled by Eubœans about the 7th century B. C. Its chief town was Olynthus.

Chalcidius (kal-sid'i-us). Lived in the 6th (or 4th?) century A. D. A Platonic philosopher, author of a Latin translation of and commentary on the first part of Plato's "Timeus."

Chalcis (kal'sis). [Gr. Χαλκίς.] The chief town of Eubœa, Greece, situated on the Euripus 34 miles north of Athens: the modern Egripo, or Negropont. It was subdued by Athens in 506 B. C., and was an important trading and colonizing center. Population (1889), commune, 15,713.

Chalcis had been one of the most important cities in Greece. It was said to have been originally a colony from Athens (Strab. x. p. 651), but shortly acquired complete independence. In a war which it had maintained with Eretria, some considerable time before this, all Greece had been concerned on the one side or the other (Thucyd. i. 15, and infra, ch. 93). Few cities sent out so many or such distant colonies. The whole peninsula situated between the Theraic and Strymonic gulfs acquired the name of Chalcidic, from the number of Chalcidian settlements (Thucyd. passim). Scripius, Papeirethus, and others of the Cyclades, were Chalcidian (Scym. Chius, l. 555). In Italy and Sicily, the colonies of Chalcis exceeded in number those of any other state. Naxos, Leontini, Catania, Zancle, Rhegium, and Cumæ were among them. Ravelinon, Herod., III. 275, note.

Chalco (chäl'kō). A village of Mexico, on the east side of Lake Chalco, about 20 miles southeast of Mexico City. Before the Spanish conquest Chalco was one of the most important pueblos of the Mexican valley.

Chalcondyles (kal-kōn'di-lēz), or Chalcondylas (kal-kōn'di-las), Demetrius. Born at Athens about 1424 (1428?): died at Milan, 1511. A Greek grammarian, teacher of Greek in Perugia, Rome, and elsewhere in Italy, and in Florence. He wrote a Greek grammar entitled "Erotomata" (1493?), and edited Homer (1488), Isocrates (1493), and Suidas (1499).

Chalcondyles, Laonicus or Nicolas. Born at Athens: died about 1464. A Byzantine historian, ambassador of John VII. Palaeologus to the Sultan Murad II. during the siege of Constantinople in 1446. He wrote a history of the Byzantine empire 1297-1462 (ed. by Bekker 1843).

Chaldea (kal-dē'ā). [In the Old Testament Kashdu, in the Assyrian inscriptions Kaldu for Kashdu (by the phonetic law of the change of a sibilant before a dental to l). The etymology of the name is still uncertain: some suggest the Assyrian stem kašādu, to conquer, so that it would mean 'the country of the conquerors.'] In the older inscriptions, middle Babylonia, the tract south of the city of Babylon in the direction toward the Persian Gulf: other portions of the country were designated Akkad, Sumir, etc. Under the name Kaldu (like "Land of Kusim" in Jer. xxiv. 5, Ezek. xii. 13) was extended to the whole country of Babylonia, i. e. the territory bounded on the north by Assyria, on the south by the Syrian desert and the Persian Gulf, on the east by Elam, and on the west by Syria. It is not certain to which family of men the Chaldeans belonged, but some have supposed that they were a mixed race composed of Babylonians and Kassites or Cossæans.

Chaldean Empire. The Babylonian Empire. Chaleurs (shä-lörz'), or Chaleur (shä-lér'), Bay of. [F. chaleur, heat; named by J. Cartier (1534) from its warmth.] An inlet of the Gulf of St. Lawrence, lying between Quebec on the north and New Brunswick on the south. Length, 90 miles. Greatest width, 20 miles.

Chalgrove (chal'gröv). A village in Oxfordshire, England, 7 miles southeast of Oxford. Here, June 18, 1643, Prince Rupert defeated the Parliamentarians. Hampden was mortally wounded.

Chalkis. See Chalcis.

Morningside, near Edinburgh, May 31, 1847. A celebrated Scottish divine and author. He was minister at Glasgow 1815-23; professor of moral philosophy at St. Andrew's 1823-28, and of divinity at Edinburgh 1828-43; and leader in the accession of 1843 from the Church of Scotland. He wrote "Discourses on Astronomy" (1817), "Political Economy" (1832), "Natural Theology" (1823), "Institute of Theology" (1847-49), etc.

Chalone (chä-lō'nā). A tribe of North American Indians. They formerly resided at and near San Antonio and San Miguel missions, California, where they numbered about 2,600 in the latter part of the last century, but only 12 families were identified in 1889. From these and from the Rumsen were taken one half of the neophytes of Soledad mission, about which the Chalons had been settled in seven villages. See Salinan.

Chaloner (chal'on-er), Sir Thomas. Born at London, 1521; died there, Oct. 14, 1565. An English statesman and writer. He was ambassador to the court of the emperor Ferdinand, 1558; later to Philip II. at Conrtray; and to Spain, 1561. He translated into English the homilies of St. John Chrysostom (1544), Erasmus's "Praise of Folie" (1549), etc.

Chaloner, Sir Thomas. Born 1561; died Nov. 17, 1615. An English naturalist, son of the preceding. He wrote "A Short Discourse of the most rare Vertue of Nitre" (1584). He opened the first alum-mines in England, at Belman Bank, Guisborough, about 1600.

He acted as one of the judges of Charles I., 1648, and was prominent in Parliament until the Restoration, when he fled to the Low Countries.

Châlons-sur-Marne (shä-lôn'sür-märn'). The capital of the department of Marne, France, situated on the Marne in lat. 48° 58' N., long. 4° 21' E.: the ancient Catalaunum (whence the modern name) or Durolaconnum. It is the seat of a bishopric. It exports champagne, and was formerly famous for its woolen cloth. According to tradition the great battle in 451, in which Aetius defeated Attila and his Huns, took place near Châlons; "but there is good reason to think that it was fought fifty miles distant from Châlons-sur-Marne, and that it would be more correctly named the battle of Troyes, or, to speak with complete accuracy, the battle of Méry-sur-Seine" (Itodpkin). The camp of Châlons was established in the neighborhood by Napoleon III. in 1857, and is now used for manœuvres. The town was taken by the Allies in 1814 and 1815, and by the Germans in 1870. The cathedral of Châlons is an interesting monument, chiefly of the 13th century, with effective and lofty interior. The west front is of the 17th century. The façade of the north transept, with its sculptured and canopied portal, has much beauty, and the tracery and buttresses are admirable. Population (1891), commune, 25,863.

Châlons-sur-Saône (shä-lôn'sür-sōn'). A city in the department of Saône-et-Loire, France, situated on the Saône in lat. 46° 48' N., long. 4° 52' E.: the ancient Cabillonum or Caballinum. It is an important commercial and manufacturing center, and has an ancient cathedral (of St. Vincent). It was the seat of important church councils in the early middle ages. Later it was the capital of the county of Chalonais. Population (1891), 24,686. Also Châlons-sur-Saône.

Complete works published 1870.

Samuel de Champlain has been fitly called the Father of New France. In him were embodied her religious zeal and romantic spirit of adventure. Before the close of his career, purged of heresy, she took the posture which she held to the day of her death — in one hand the crucifix, in the other the sword. His life, full of significance, is the true beginning of her eventful history.

Parkman, Monsters of France, p. 165.

Champlain (sham-plān'), Lake. [Named for Samuel de Champlain.] A lake between Vermont and New York, extending from Whitehall, New York, to St. John's, Canada. "It was the chief centre of the money transactions of the 17th century, when the Stock Exchange was held here at 'Jonathan's Coffee House.' It was the great scene of action in the South Sea Bubble of 1720, by which so many thousands of credulous persons were ruined. Another coffee house in this alley which played a great part in the same time of excitement was 'Garraway's,' so called from Garway, its original proprietor. It was here that tea was first sold in London." Hare, London, 1, 362.

Changeling (chānj'ling), The. A play by Middleton and William Rowley, acted as early as 1623.

Changos (chān'gōs). A tribe of Indians which, it is believed, once occupied most of the valleys of the Peruvian coast. According to tradition they were driven southward by the invasion of the Chinus, and subsequently of the Incas, and took refuge on the desert coasts between lat. 22° and 23° S. There some of their descendants remain, but their language is lost. They are a dwarf race, seldom exceeding five feet in height, and they now live entirely on fish, crustaceans, and seals. They are hospitable, and have never resisted the whites.

Changsha (chāng-shā'). The capital of the province of Hunan, China, on the river Siang.

Channel, The. See English Channel.

Channel Islands. A group of islands in the English Channel, belonging to Great Britain, 7-30 miles from the coast of Normandy, France, near the Bay of St. Malo. They comprise Jersey, Guernsey, Alderney, Sark, and a number of islets. They are noted for their picturesque scenery and mild climate, and for their breeds of cattle. The prevailing language is old Norman French. They came under Norman rule early in the 10th century, and were Norman and English after 1066. They are the only part of Normandy which remained to the English after 1204. Area, 75 square miles. Population (1891), 92,272.

Channing (chān'ing), Edward Tyrrel. Born at Newport, R. I., Dec. 12, 1790; died at Cambridge, Mass., Feb. 8, 1856. An American scholar, brother of William Ellery Channing. He was one of the founders of the "North American Review" in 1815.

Channing, William Ellery. Born at Newport, R. I., April 7, 1780; died at Bennington, Vt., Oct. 2, 1842. An American clergyman, writer, and philanthropist, one of the chief founders of American Unitarianism. He became pastor of the Federal Street Church, Boston, in 1803. His complete works were published in 1848.

Channing, William Ellery. Born at Boston, June 10, 1818. An American poet, journalist, and general writer, nephew of William Ellery Channing (1780-1842).

Chanson de Geste (shōn-sōn' dē zhest'). [F., 'song of heroic deeds.'] The name given to epic or narrative poems which first appeared in France about the beginning of the 11th century. Nearly all the best date from the 12th century. The technical definition of a chanson de geste is "a narrative poem, dealing with a subject connected with French history, written in verses of ten or twelve syllables, which verses are arranged in stanzas of arbitrary length, each stanza possessing a distinguishing assonance or rhyme in the last syllable of each line." Saintsbury, French Lit., ii.

Chanson de Roland (shōn-sōn' dē rō-lōn'), or de Roncevaux (dō rōns-vō'). [F., 'song of Roland, or of Roncevaux.'] A French epic poem, or chanson de geste, ascribed to Théroude or Turoldus, a Norman trouvère (11th century?). It was first published as a whole by M. F. Michel in 1837. The Oxford MS. gives its earliest form. The text of this MS. is probably that of the end of the 11th century; the date of the MS. probably the middle of the 12th. It contains about 4,000 lines, and is the story of the death of Roland with the peers of Charlemagne at Roncevaux or Roncesvalles, and Charlemagne's vengeance.

Chant du Départ (shōn dū dā-pār'). [F., 'song of departure.'] A popular French military song by Marie Joseph Chénier.

Chan-ta-bon (shān-tā-bun'). A city in Siam, situated near the Gulf of Siam 150 miles southeast of Bangkok. Population (estimated), 30,000.

Chantal (shōn-tāl'), Jeanne Françoise Frémot, Baronne de. Born at Dijon, France, Jan. 23, 1572; died at Moulins, France, Dec. 13, 1641. A French devotee, founder of the Order of the Visitation at Ancey in 1610.

Chanticleer (chān'ti-klēr). [Also accom. chanti-clar (B. Jonson), ME. chanteclere, chante-clar, OF. Chantecler, the name of the cock in the epic of Renart (Reynard the Fox); from chanter, sing, and cler, clear; so called from the clearness or loudness of his voice in crowing.] 1. The cock in "Reinecke Fuchs."—2. The cock who is the hero of the Nun's Priest's Tale in Chaucer's "Canterbury Tales."

Chantilly (shōn-tē-yē'). A town in the department of Oise, France, 23 miles north-northeast of Paris. It has noted lace manufactures, is the place of the races of the French Jockey Club, and contains a Renaissance castle, formerly the property of the family Montmorency, later of the family Condé, of the Duc d'Anjou, and now (by gift of the Duc d'Anjou) of the French Institute. It was rebuilt by a Montmorency in the 16th century, and transformed into a magnificent palace by the Great Condé in the 17th. Population (1891), commune, 4,231.

Chantilly (shān-til'i). A village in Fairfax County, Virginia, 20 miles west of Washington. It was the scene of a battle, Sept. 1, 1862, between the Confederates under Jackson, and a part of Pope's army under Reno, Stevens, and Kearny (the two latter were killed). Loss of the Federals, 1,300; of the Confederates, 500.

Chantry (chān'tri), Sir Francis Legatt. Born near Norton, Derbyshire, April 7, 1781; died Nov. 25, 1842. A noted English sculptor and portrait-painter. He is known chiefly for his portrait sculpture, his sitters including many of the most distinguished men of his time. The greater part of his property was left to the Royal Academy to make provision for its president and to establish a fund for the purchase of the most valuable work in sculpture and painting executed in Great Britain by artists of any nation.

Chanzy (shōn-zē'), Antoine Eugène Alfred. Born at Nonart, Ardennes, France, March 18, 1823; died at Châlons-sur-Marne, France, Jan. 4, 1883. A French general. He became commander of division in Oct., 1870, and of the 2d Army of the Loire in Dec., 1870; was distinguished in the battles near Orléans, Dec., 1870; was defeated at Le Mans, Jan. 10-12, 1871; and became governor-general of Algeria in 1873.

Chaos (shā'os) or Bird Islands (bērd i'landz). A group of small islands in Algoa Bay, Cape Colony, South Africa.

Chapala (chā-pā'lā). A lake situated chiefly in the state of Jalisco, Mexico, in lat. 20° 30' N., long. about 102°-103° W. Area, over 1,300 square miles.

Chapeau de Paille (shā-pō' dē pây'). [F., 'straw hat.'] A noted painting by Rubens, in the National Gallery, London. It is a half-length portrait of a young girl robed in black velvet and crimson, and wearing a broad-brimmed plumed hat which shades the face completely, yet without obscuring its brilliant color.

Chapelain (shăp-lă''), Jean. Born at Paris, Dec. 4, 1595; died at Paris, Feb. 22, 1674. A French poet and littérateur, one of the first members of the French Academy, and influential in determining the character of its labors: author of "La Pucelle" (1656).

Chapel Hill (chăp'el hîl). A town in Orange County, North Carolina, 25 miles west-northwest of Raleigh. It is the seat of the University of North Carolina (founded 1789). Population (1890), 1,017.

Chaplin (chăp'lin), Charles. Born at Les Andelys, Eure, France, June 8, 1825; died at Paris, Jan. 30, 1891. A painter and engraver, of English parentage, naturalized in France. He was a pupil of Drolling. He obtained a medal of the second class in 1852, and a medal in 1865.

Chaplin, Jeremiah. Born at Rowley, Mass., Jan. 2, 1776; died at Hamilton, N. Y., May 7, 1841. An American Baptist clergyman and educator, first president of Waterville College (Maine), 1821-33.

Chapman (chăp'man), George. Born near Hitchin, Hertfordshire, about 1559; died at London, in the parish of St. Giles-in-the-Fields, May 12, 1634. An English poet and dramatist, chiefly celebrated for his translation of Homer. He is said to have studied at Oxford and afterward at Cambridge. He lived in straitened circumstances, but was intimate with Jonson, Fletcher, and other great men of the time. Among his dramatic works are "The Blind Beggar of Alexandria" (printed in 1598), "All Fools" (produced in 1598, printed in 1605), "Eastward Ho" with Jonson and Marston (printed 1605), "The Gentleman Usher" (1606), "Monsieur d'Olive" (1606), "Bussy d'Ambois" (1607), "The Revenge of Bussy d'Ambois" (1613), "The Conspiracy and Tragedy of Charles, Duke of Byron" (1608), "May Day" (1611), "The Widow's Tears" (1612), "Cesar and Pompey" (1631), "Alphonsus, Emperor of Germany" (published in 1654, after his death), "The Ball" with Shirley (1639), "Tragedy of Chabot, Admiral of France" with Shirley (1639). He completed Marlowe's fragment of "Hero and Leander" in 1598. The first part of his translation of the Iliad was published in 1598; the whole was not issued before 1609 (entered on the "Stationers' Register" in 1611). The translation of the Odyssey was entered on the "Stationers' Register" in 1614. Finally, the Iliad and Odyssey were issued together with the date 1616 on Chapman's portrait prefixed. About 1624 he issued his translation of the "Batrachomyomachia" ("Battle of the Frogs and Mice").

Chapman, John Gadsby. Born at Alexandria, Va., in 1808. An American painter, etcher, and wood-engraver. He was elected national academician in 1836, and has lived in Rome since 1848.

Chappe d'Auteroche (shăp dôt-rôsh'), Jean. Born at Mauriac, Cantal, France, March 2, 1722; died at San Lucar, California, Aug. 1, 1769. A French astronomer. He observed the transit of Venus at Tobolsk in 1761 ("Voyage en Sibirie," 1768), and went to California in 1769 to observe another transit ("Voyage de la Californie," 1772), but died soon after his arrival.

Chaptal (shăp-tăl'), Jean Antoine, Comte de Chanteloup. Born at Nogaret, Lozère, France, June 5, 1756; died at Paris, July 30, 1832. A noted French chemist and politician, minister of the interior 1800-04. He wrote "Le perfectionnement des arts chimiques en France" (1800), "Chimie appliquée aux arts" (1806), etc.

Chapter Coffee House. A London coffee-house situated at the corner of Chapter-house Court, on the south side of Paternoster Row, noted in the 18th century as the resort of men of letters. It was famous for its punch, pamphlets, and good supply of newspapers. It was closed as a coffee-house in 1854, and then altered to a tavern. Timbs.

Chapu (chă-pô' or shi-pô'). A seaport in the province of Che-Kiang, China, situated on the estuary of the Tsién-tang 55 miles northwest of Ningpo: the port of Hang-chow. It has an important trade, especially with Japan. The heights were stormed by the British, May 18, 1842.

Chapultepec (chă-pôl-te-pek'). [Nahuatl, 'hill of the grasshoppers.'] A rocky eminence about 3 miles southwest of the city of Mexico. About 1245, when it was surrounded by swamps, it was occupied by the Aztecs, and subsequently an aqueduct from the hill furnished water to Mexico. It is said by some historians that the Aztec monarchs had a summer residence at Chapultepec, but this has been denied by recent investigators. Like all places strong in position and in natural resources, it was the site of some kind of worship, but no buildings of any kind were erected there previous to the 16th century. At the foot of the hill and in the park there are some interesting vestiges of rock-carvings, which date from the first decennium of the 16th century. About 1785 the viceroy of Mexico, Galvez, began the erection of a palace on the Chapultepec hill. This was made in the form of a fort or castle, and was, in fact, intended for a stronghold as well as a summer residence. The building remained unfinished until after the revolution. Under the republic a portion was used for a military school, and the National Astronomical Observatory was erected on the hill. During the war with the United States the castle was stormed by General Pillow, Sept. 13, 1847. The emperor Maximilian made Chapultepec his principal palace, and it is now occupied as a summer residence of the president, portions being still reserved for the military school and observatory. The hill is surrounded by a beautiful park, a favorite resort of the Mexicans.

Chara (kă'ră'). [L.] Properly, the name of the southern of the two dogs in the constellation of Canes Venatici, but also used as the name of the fourth-magnitude star 8 Canum.

Charaës (chă-ră'es), or Xaraës, or Jaraës (nä-ră'es). [From the name of an Indian tribe, possibly the modern Guatos (which see).] The name given in maps of the 16th and 17th centuries to a great lake near the center of South America, represented as the source of the Paraguay. The Upper Paraguay is bordered by vast plains which are flooded every year, and are still known as the Charaës marshes or flood-plains. Probably the story of the lake originated with them, but some suppose that it referred to one of the small lakes which communicate with the Paraguay on the western side, between lat. 17° and 19° 30'. The Charaës marshes cover 80,000 square miles, and are now uninhabited.

Charalois (chă-ră-lwă'). In Massinger and Field's "Fatal Dowry," a character of dignity and noble daring.

Charasiab (chă-ră-sê-âb'). A place in Afghanistan, 10-12 miles south of Kabul. Here, Oct. 6, 1879, the British under General Baker defeated the Afghans.

Charbar. See Chubar.

Charcas (chăr'käs). An Indian tribe of southern Bolivia, principally in the highlands of Chuquisaca. They are a branch of the Aymará or Colla stock, and like other tribes of the family are now partially civilized and Christianized.

Charcas (chăr'käs). A portion of the old viceroyalty of Peru, nearly corresponding to the modern Bolivia. It was formed into an audiencia in 1559, with four auditors or judges, who resided at Chuquisaca and were responsible to the viceroy at Lima. The desert of Atacama, with its ports, was included in Charcas, and it extended eastward to Paraguay and southward to Tucuman. In 1776 it was annexed as a province to the new viceroyalty of Buenos Ayres. Charcas was also called Upper Peru.

Charcot (shăr-kô'), Jean Martin. Born at Paris, Nov. 29, 1825; died Aug. 16, 1893. A noted French physician. He was particularly noted for his treatment of nervous and mental diseases and for his experiments in hypnotism and mental suggestion at the Salpêtrière, where he founded a clinic for nervous diseases in 1880. He published a number of works on the diseases of old age, insanity, hysteria, etc.

Chardin, Jean Baptiste Siméon. Born at Paris, Nov. 2, 1699; died there, Dec. 6, 1779. A French painter, famous for his work in still life. He was admitted to the Academy in 1728.

Charente (shă-roî't'). 1. A river in western France which flows into the Bay of Biscay 14 miles south of La Rochelle. Length, over 200 miles.—2. A department of western France, lying between Deux-Sèvres and Vienne on the north, Haute-Vienne on the east, Dordogne on the east and south, and Charente-Inférieure on the south and west. It is formed chiefly from the ancient Angoumois. It exports brandy (cognac), etc. Capital, Angoulême. Area, 2,294 square miles. Population (1891), 360,259.

Charente-Inférieure (shă-roî't' an-fă-rê-ôr'). A department in western France, lying between Vendée and Deux-Sèvres on the north, Charente and Dordogne on the east, Gironde on the south, and the river Gironde and the Bay of Biscay on the west. It is nearly identical with the ancient Saintonge and Aunis. Capital, La Rochelle. Area, 2,635 square miles. Population (1891), 456,202.

Charenton-le-Pont (shă-roî-ton' lé-pôn'). A town in the department of Seine, France, situated on the Marne 1½ miles southeast of Paris. Population (1891), commune, 15,306.

Chares (kă'rêz). [Gr. Χάρης.] Died at Sigeum (?), in Troas, before 324 B. C. An Athenian general, prominent in the wars from 367-338 B. C.

Chares. Born at Lindus, Rhodes: lived about 290-280 B. C. A Rhodian sculptor, a pupil of Lysippus (see Lysippus), and sculptor of the Colossus of Rhodes: the founder of the Rhodian school. The Colossus of Rhodes was made to commemorate the successful defense of that place against Demetrius Poliorcetes in 303 B. C. It required 12 years for its completion, and cost $470,000. It was probably finished before 280 B. C. It represented the Rhodian sun-god, Helios; was over 105 feet high; and was considered one of the seven wonders of the Old World. It stood 66 years. Its artistic qualities are unknown. It is said to have been made from the engines of war which Demetrius was obliged to abandon.

Charette de la Contrie (shă-ret' dè lä kôn-trê'). François Athanase. Born at Couffé, Loire-Inférieure, France, April 21, 1763; died at Nantes, France, March 29, 1796. A leader of the Vendean insurgents against the French republic. He placed himself at the head of a force of insurgents in 1793; gained a number of victories over the republicans 1793-94; signed a treaty of peace, Feb. 15, 1795, which he soon violated; suffered a decisive defeat at St. Cyr, March 25, 1796; and, being taken prisoner shortly after, was executed at Nantes.

Charford (chăr'fôrd). A place in Hampshire, England, on the Lower Avon, where Cerdic defeated the Britons in 519: identified with the ancient Cerdicesford.

Charge of the Light Brigade. A poem by Tennyson, written in the meter of Drayton's "Battle of Agincourt." It commemorates the heroic charge at Balaklava. See Light Brigade.

Chariclea (kar-i-klé'ă). The heroine of Heliodorus's novel "Æthiopia." See Theagenes and Chariclea.

Charing Cross (chăr'ing krôs). A cross in memory of Queen Eleanor, erected by Edward I., 1½ miles west-southwest of St. Paul's, London. It was demolished by the Long Parliament in 1647, and restored by the South Eastern Railway Company in 1865. In traveling northward to join her husband in Scotland, Eleanor was seized with a fever at Hardeby, near Grantham in Lincolnshire, and died there Nov. 29, 1290. Edward I. followed her corpse in person during a thirteen days' progress from Grantham to Westminster Abbey; and wherever the royal bier rested, at the end of each stage, a memorial cross was erected. Thirteen of these monuments once existed: those of Northampton and Waltham still remain.

Charioteer or Wagoner, The. See Auriga.

Charis (kă'ris). [Gr. Χάρις, L. Gratia, E. Grace.] In Greek mythology, the personification of grace and beauty; also regarded as a triad, the three Charites. See Graces.

In the Iliad Charis is the name given to the spouse of Hephaestus (383); in the Odyssey, according to a certain portion of it, it is Aphrodite. Moreover Charis seems in the latter poem to have multiplied into Charites (known also to the Iliad, 267), and these have further subsided into handmaids to Aphrodite (Od. 564 and 194). It would therefore appear that Hephaestus in the Iliad had married one who was the handmaid to his Odyssean wife, and the Choriizontes thought the relation was an awkward one. Geddes, Problems of the Homeric Poems, p. 54.

Charisi (chă-rê-zê), Judah ben Solomon. A Jewish poet who lived in the 13th century in Spain. Among his works most known are his 50 Makamat under the title of "Tachkemoni" ("Wisdom Town"), a Hebrew counterpart to the Arabic poems of Hariri.

Charité (shă-rê-tă'), La. A town in the department of Nièvre, France, situated on the Loire 15 miles north-northwest of Nevers. Population (1891), commune, 5,443.

Charites (kar'i-téz). See Charis and Graces.

Chariton (char'i-ton). A river in southern Iowa and northern Missouri, which joins the Missouri 60 miles northwest of Jefferson City. Length, about 200 miles.

Chariton of Aphrodisias (kar'i-ton ov af-rô-dis'i-as). [Gr. Χαρῖτων.] Probably the assumed name of the Greek author of the romance "Chareas and Callirhoe" (which see). Called Aphrodisiensis (of Aphrodisias).

Charlatan (shăr-lătôn'). Le. A novel by Balzac, written in 1830.

Charlemagne (chăr'le-măn; F. pron. shăr'l-măny'), or Charles the Great. [G. Karl der Grosse, It. Carlo Magno, ML. Carolus Magnus.] Born at Liège (Ingelheim, Aachen (?), Salzburg (Bavaria)?), April 2, 742 or 747; died at Aachen, Germany, Jan. 28, 814. A great king of the Franks and emperor of the Romans. He was the son of Pepin the Short, king of the Franks, on whose death in 768 he acceded to the throne conjointly with a brother Karlman. He usurped the entire government on the death of the latter in 771. In 772 he began a war against the Saxons, the most notable events of which were the storming of Eresburg, the destruction of the Irminsul, the May-field at Paderborn (777), and the submission of the Saxon leader Wittekind (785), and which resulted in 804 in the complete subjugation and Christianization of Saxony. In 773, at the instance of the Pope, he made war upon Desiderius, king of the Lombards, who had occupied the Pentapolis and was threatening Rome. He captured the Lombard capital, Pavia, in 774, and the same year incorporated the kingdom of the Lombards with that of the Franks. In 778 he made an expedition against the Arabs in Spain, which terminated in the destruction of the Frankish rear-guard under Roland at Roncevaux. He subdued Bavaria in 788; conquered the Avars 791-796; was crowned emperor at St. Peter's, Dec. 25, 800; and in 808-810 defeated the Danes, whom he compelled to retire behind the Eider. His kingdom, for the protection of which he erected in the border districts the so-called marks or margravates, extended at the close of his reign from the Ebro to the Raab, and from the Eider to the Garigliano. He resided chiefly at Aix-la-chapelle, and by his patronage of letters attracted to his court the scholars Einhard, Paul Warnefried, and Alcuin, the last-mentioned of whom wrote an account of his life entitled "Vita Caroli Magni."

Charlemagne. A tragedy in five acts by Le-mercier, first played at the Théâtre Français, June 27, 1816.

Charlemagne Cycle of Romances. A series of medieval romances having Charlemagne or some one of his twelve peers or paladins as a center. The Frankish heroic ballads were reduced to writing by the order of Charlemagne, and from these similar ballads were written about himself and his warriors. These chansons de geste were arranged as cyclic poems in the 13th century, and may be divided into three groups: the "Geste of the King" (Charlemagne), the "Geste of Provence or of Garin de Montglane," and the "Geste of Doon or Doolin of Mayence." These are all composed of many parts, but may be described, as a whole, as a mythical history of Charlemagne, his peers, and the wars they undertook. The names and number of the peers vary, but Roland and Oliver are included in each of the series. About 890 a monk of St. Gall wrote a chronicle called "De Gestis Karoli Magni," and another was written by Benedict, a monk of St. André, in 968. "The Pseudo-Chronicle of Turpin" was constructed from the chansons; it was written in Latin by various hands from 1000 to 1150, and was believed to be a genuine history. The first prose version of Carolingian romance was the "Reali di Francia" ("Princes of France"), written in Tuscan, early in the 14th century. The first printed French prose version of the cycle was that of Bagnyon, 1478. It became very popular. The chronicle of Turpin, however, was reduced to prose early in the 13th century. Among these romances are "Fierabras," "Garin de Montglane" ("Guerin de Montglaise"), "Gallien le Rhetoré," "Milles et Amys" ("Amiles et Amys"), "Ogier le Danois," "Doon or Doolin of Mayence," "Quatre Filz Aymon" ("Four Sons of Aymon"), "Maugis d'Aigremont," "Huon of Bordeaux," and others of widely differing dates.

Charlemont (shär-l-môn'). A fortress on the Belgian frontier, near Givet, Ardennes, France. See Givet.

Charlemont, Viscount and Earl of. See Caulfeild.

Charleroi (shär-lé-rwä'). A city in the province of Hainaut, Belgium, situated on the Sambre 31 miles south of Brussels. It is the center of a coal- and iron-mining district, and has manufactures of iron, glass, etc. It is one of the most important industrial towns in Belgium. It was fortified by Vauban. In 1794 it was captured by the French. Population (1893), 22,062.

Charles (chärلز) I. [L. Carolus, F. Charles, It. Carlo, Sp. Pg. Carlos, G. Karl. See Carl.] Born at Dunfermline, Scotland, Nov. 19, 1600; died at London, Jan. 30, 1649. A king of England, second son of James I. He became prince of Wales in 1616, and in 1623, accompanied by the Duke of Buckingham, presented in person an ineffectual suit at the court of Madrid for the hand of the infanta Maria. He acceded to the throne on the death of his father in 1625, and in the same year married Henrietta Maria of France. He retained in office the Duke of Buckingham, his father's unpopular minister, in consequence of which he became involved in a dispute with Parliament amounting in substance to a question of sovereignty. He granted the Petition of Right, June 7, 1628. On the assassination of the Duke of Buckingham in August following, he made Laud and Wentworth his chief advisers. He governed without Parliament from 1629 to 1640, meeting the expenses of government by forced loans, poundage and tonnage, ship-money, and other extraordinary means of revenue. His ecclesiastical policy, which looked, among other things, to the introduction of the Episcopal liturgy in Scotland, provoked the adoption by the Scots of the Solemn League and Covenant, Feb. 28, 1638, and the outbreak of a civil war, which terminated without a battle in the Pacification of Dunse or Berwick, June 18, 1639. The war having broken out anew in 1640, he was compelled to summon Parliament, which met Nov. 3, 1640. This Parliament, the so-called Long Parliament, impeached Laud and Wentworth (who had been created Earl of Strafford), and proceeded to the redress of grievances. The House of Commons having ordered the publication of the Grand Remonstrance, Dec. 14, 1641, he replied by impeaching and attempting to arrest (Jan. 4, 1642) five of the Parliamentary leaders, failing in which he left London, Jan. 10, 1642. He raised the royal standard at Nottingham, Aug. 22, 1642; suffered a decisive defeat at the hands of the Parliamentary forces under Fairfax at Naseby, June 14, 1645; delivered himself to the Scottish army at Newark, May 5, 1646; was surrendered to Parliament, Jan. 30, 1647; was tried for treason, Jan. 20-27, 1649, and was executed at Whitehall. See Stuart.

Charles II. Born at St. James's Palace, London, May 29, 1630; died at St. James's, Feb. 6, 1685. A king of England, son of Charles I. He was appointed to the command of the Royalist forces in the western counties of England in the civil war, and after the decisive victory of the Parliamentary army at Naseby left England March 2, 1646, living during his exile chiefly in France and Holland. He was proclaimed king at Edinburgh Feb. 5, 1649; arrived in the Firth of Cromarty June 16, 1650; was crowned at Scone Jan. 1, 1651; was totally defeated by Cromwell at Worcester Sept. 3, 1651; and escaped, after numerous adventures, to Fécamp, Normandy, Oct. 16, 1651. Owing to the influence of General Monk, he was proclaimed king at Westminster May 8, 1660; entered London May 29, 1660; and was crowned April 23, 1661. He married Catherine of Braganza May 20, 1662. He assented at his restoration to the abolition of the feudal rights of knight service, wardship, and purveyance, in consideration of a yearly income to the crown of £1,200,000, and to an act of indemnity for all political offenses committed between Jan. 1, 1637, and June 24, 1660, from the operation of which act, however, the regicides were excluded.

Charles I., surnamed "The Great." See Charlemagne.

Charles (chärلز; F. pron. shär) II., surnamed "The Bald" (F. le Chauve, G. der Kahle). Born at Frankfort-on-the-Main, June 13, 823; died near Mont Cenis, Alps, Oct. 6, 877. King of France and emperor of the Romans, younger son of Louis le Débonnaire: as king of France, reckoned as Charles I. Louis died in 840, after dividing his empire among his sons Lothaire, Louis, and Charles, the last of whom received all of France lying west of the Rhône. Lothaire having claimed the preeminence, his brothers united against him, defeated him at Fontenay June 25, 841, and compelled him to accept the treaty of Verdun, concluded in Aug., 843. In 875, on the death of Louis II. of Italy without issue, Charles invaded Italy, and after defeating the army of his brother Louis, the rightful heir of Louis II., was crowned emperor by Pope John VIII. at Rome Dec. 25, 875. During his reign France was ravaged by the Normans, who sacked Bordeaux, Tours, Rouen, Orléans, and other cities, including some quarters of Paris.

Charles III., surnamed "The Fat" (F. le Gros, G. der Dicke). Born 839; died at Neidlingen, Swabia, Jan. 13, 888. King of France and emperor of the Romans, son of Louis the German: as king of France, reckoned as Charles II. Louis died 876, after dividing his kingdom among his sons Carloman, Louis, and Charles. His brothers dying without lawful issue, Charles inherited their portions. He was crowned emperor in 881, and in 885 became king or regent of France, whose heir, Charles the Simple, was a minor. In Sept., 886, he concluded a humiliating treaty with the Normen at Paris. He was deposed by Arnulf of Carinthia in 887.

Charles III., surnamed "The Simple" (F. le Simple, or le Sot). Born Sept. 17, 879; died at Péronne, France, Oct. 7, 929. A king of France, son of Louis "the Stammerer." He was crowned in 893 by his partisans in opposition to Eudes, who had been elected king by the nobles in 888 during his minority; and on the death of the latter in 898 became sole king. In 911 he ceded Normandy to Rollo.

Charles IV., surnamed "The Fair" (F. le Bel). Born 1294; died at Vincennes, near Paris, 1328. A king of France, youngest son of Philip "the Fair." He reigned 1322-28. His sister Isabella was married to Edward II. of England, with whom he was at war concerning the homage for the duchy of Guénes. Isabella having been sent to France to negotiate the question, he permitted her to perfect preparations for the dethronement of Edward.

Charles V., surnamed "The Wise" (F. le Sage). Born at Vincennes, near Paris, Jan. 21, 1337; died at Vincennes, Sept. 16, 1380. King of France, son of John II. He reigned 1364-80. He was lieutenant-general or regent of France, 1356-60, during the captivity of his father in England. During his reign France recovered nearly all the territory that had been conquered by Edward III., except Calais and Bordeaux. He was a patron of learning, and founded the Royal Library of Paris.

Charles VI., surnamed "The Well-Beloved" (F. le Bien-Aimé). Born at Paris, Dec. 3, 1368; died at Paris, Oct. 21, 1422. King of France, son of Charles V. He reigned 1380-1422. Being a minor at his accession, the regency was conducted by his uncles the dukes of Anjou, Burgundy, and Berry. He defeated the Flemings under Philip van Artevelde at Rosebecque Nov. 27, 1382. In 1388 he assumed the government. Becoming deranged in 1392, a dispute for power arose between the Duke of Burgundy and the Duke of Orléans, the king's brother. The ascendancy was gained by the former, who died 1404. His son Jean procured the murder of the Duke of Orléans (1407), which provoked civil war, the so-called war of the Burgundians and Armagnacs. Henry V. of England invaded the country, and Oct. 25, 1415, defeated the French at Agincourt. Supported by Queen Isabella, the Burgundians concluded at Troyes May 21, 1420, a treaty with Henry V., according to which he was to be king of France on the death of Charles.

Charles VII., surnamed "The Victorious" (F. le Victorieux). Born at Paris, Feb. 22, 1403; died at Mehun-sur-Yèvre, near Bourges, France, July 22, 1461. King of France, son of Charles VI. He reigned 1422-61. At his accession he found a rival in Henry VI. of England, who claimed the throne by virtue of the treaty of Troyes (see the preceding article). The English were masters of the country north of the Loire, including the capital, and in 1428 invested Orléans, which was delivered by Joan of Arc in 1429. He was crowned at Rheims in 1429, and entered Paris in 1437. He effected a reconciliation between the Armagnac and Burgundian factions, and regained all of France from the English, except Calais.

Charles VIII., Born at Amboise, France, June 30, 1470; died at Amboise, April 7, 1498. King of France, son of Louis XI. He reigned 1483-98. He invaded Italy in 1494 with a view to conquering Naples, which he entered 1495. Ferdinand of Aragon, Maximilian, and the Italian powers having united against him, he left the Duke of Montpensier with a strong force in Naples and returned to France with the remainder of his army, defeating on the way the numerically superior allies at Fornovo, July 6, 1495. The French were soon after expelled from Naples by the Spaniards.

Charles IX., Born at St. Germain-en-Laye, near Paris, June 27, 1550; died at Vincennes, near Paris, May 30, 1574. King of France, the second son of Henry II. He reigned 1560-74. Being a minor at his accession, he was placed under the regency of his mother, Catharine de' Medici. He was declared of age in 1563, but the policy of the government continued to be dictated by his mother, under whose influence he consented to the massacre of St. Bartholomew, Aug. 24, 1572.

Charles X., Born at Versailles, France, Oct. 9, 1757; died at Görz, Austria, Nov. 6, 1836. King of France 1824-30, younger brother of Louis

XVIII. He received at birth the name of Charles Philippe and the title of Comte d'Artois. He joined the royalist emigration of 1789. In 1795, having obtained ships and men from England, he commanded an expedition which was to land on the coast of Brittany and join the Vendean chief Charette, but which resulted in failure through the cowardice of its leader, who did not venture to attempt a landing. He entered Paris with the Allies in April, 1814, and Sept. 16, 1824, succeeded his brother Louis XVIII. His government, whose policy was dictated by the ecclesiastical party, became extremely unpopular. After the defeat of the ministries of Villele and Martignac the king formed an extreme royalist ministry under the Prince de Polignac, Aug. 8, 1829. The Chamber of Deputies voted in March, 1830, an address hostile to the ministers, who, appealing to the country, were defeated. Resolving on a coup d'état, the king and ministry issued, July 26, 1830, a body of ordinances which restricted the freedom of the press, established a new mode of election, and declared the recent elections illegal. As a consequence the so-called July revolution, which lasted from July 27-29, broke out, in the course of which Charles was expelled from the throne.

Charles IV. Born at Prague, Bohemia, May 14, 1316; died at Prague, Nov. 29, 1378. Emperor of the Holy Roman Empire, son of John of Luxemburg, king of Bohemia. He reigned 1347-78, and published the Golden Bull (which see) in 1356.

Charles V. Born at Ghent, Flanders, Feb. 24, 1500; died at Yuste, near Placentia, Estremadura, Spain, Sept. 21, 1558. Emperor of the Holy Roman Empire. He was the son of Philip of Burgundy by Joanna, daughter of Ferdinand and Isabella, and was the grandson of the emperor Maximilian I. He became king of Spain (as Charles I.) in 1516, was elected emperor in 1519, and was crowned at Aix-la-Chapelle in 1520. He attended the diet at Worms 1521, defeated Francis I. at Pavia 1525, concluded (with him) the peace of Cambray 1529, held the diet at Augsburg 1530, conquered Tunis 1535, made a fruitless invasion of Provence in 1536-1537, conducted an unsuccessful expedition against Algiers in 1541, concluded with Francis I. of France the peace of Crespy in 1544, defeated the forces of the Smalckaldic League at Mühlberg in 1547, was attacked by Maurice of Saxony 1551, and forced to conclude the convention of Passau in 1552, and concluded with the Protestants the peace of Augsburg in 1555. He abdicated the government of the Netherlands (1555) and of Spain (1556) in favor of his son, Philip II., and that of Germany (1556) in favor of his brother, Ferdinand I., to whom at the beginning of his reign he had relinquished the sole sovereignty over the hereditary Austrian dominions, and who had inaugurated Hapsburg rule in Bohemia and Hungary. In the reign of Charles V. the Spaniards conquered Mexico and Peru. He subsequently lived in the monastery of Yuste in Spain. The portraits of this emperor are: (a) A portrait by Titian (1548), in the Old Pinakothek at Munich. (b) A famous portrait by Titian (1533), in the Royal Museum at Madrid. (c) An equestrian portrait by Titian, in the Royal Museum at Madrid. This is held by many to be the finest portrait ever painted. (d) A portrait by Titian, in the Royal Museum at Madrid. The emperor is portrayed in his privacy, with the marks of illness and care on his face.

Charles VI. Born Oct. 1, 1685; died at Vienna, Oct. 20, 1740. Emperor of the Holy Roman Empire, son of Leopold I. He reigned 1711-40. He issued his pragmatic sanction (which see) in 1713, and was pretender to the throne of Spain (as Charles III.: see Spanish Succession, War of) 1700-14.

Charles VII. (Karl Albrecht). Born at Brussels, Aug. 6, 1697; died at Munich, Jan. 20, 1745. Emperor of the Holy Roman Empire, son of Maximilian Emmanuel, elector of Bavaria, whom he succeeded in 1726. A claimant of the Austrian inheritance, he participated in the War of the Austrian Succession, which broke out in 1740, was proclaimed king of Bohemia in 1741, and was crowned emperor in 1742. He died during the war.

Charles I., Born April 20, 1839. King of Rumania, son of the Prince of Hohenzollern. He was elected prince of Rumania in 1866, and proclaimed king in 1881.

Charolais, Comte de. See Charles the Bold.

Charolles (shä-rol'). A town in the department of Saône-et-Loire, France, in lat. 46° 26' N., long. 4° 18' E. It was the ancient capital of Charolais. Population (1891), commune, 3,246.

Charon (kä'rön). [Gr. Χάρων.] In Greek mythology, the ferryman, a son of Erebus, who transported the souls of the dead (whose bodies had been buried) over the rivers of the lower world. His fee was an obolus or danace, and this coin was placed for him in the mouth of the dead previous to burial.

Charondas (ka-rön'das). [Gr. Χαρώνδας.] Born at Catania, Sicily; lived about 500 B. C. A Sicilian lawgiver who legislated for the cities of Chalcidian origin in Sicily and Italy.

Charon's staircase. See the extract.

At the middle point of the [Greek] stage, some steps—known as "Charon's staircase," because the ghost sometimes comes up by them—lead down into what we should call the pit. The Greeks call it the orchestra or dancing-place. Jebb, Or. Lit., p. 76.

Charras (shä-rä'). Jean Baptiste Adolphe. Born at Pfalzburg, Lorraine, Jan. 7, 1810; died at Basel, Switzerland, Jan. 23, 1865. A noted French military writer. His chief work is a "Histoire de la campagne de 1815" (1857).

Charrière (shä-ryär'). Madame de Saint-Hyacinthe de (Isabelle Agnès Van Tuyll). Born at Utrecht, Netherlands, 1746; died near Neuchâtel, Switzerland, Dec. 27, 1805. A French authoress who wrote under the pseudonym Abbé de la Tour. Her chief works are "Lettres neuchâtelaises" (1784), "Caliste, ou lettres céciles de Lausanne" (1786).

Charron (shä-rön'), Pierre. Born at Paris, 1541; died at Paris, Nov. 16, 1603. A noted French philosopher and Roman Catholic theologian. His works include "Traité des trois vérités" (1594), "Traité de la sagesse" (1601), etc.

Charruas (chä-rö'äs). The name usually given to a numerous race of Indians who, in the 16th century, occupied the region on both sides of the river Uruguay, ranging to the Paraná and the southern coast. The Bohanes, Minanes, Yaros, and Guennas were subtribes; but all these names are sometimes applied to the whole group. The Charruas were a dark race, apparently allied to the Chaco tribes. They were wandering hunters and robbers, very savage and treacherous, and waged a destructive war on the Spaniards. Solis, the discoverer of the Plata, was killed by them. They fought principally with the bolas or weighted lasso; later they became skilful horsemen. About 1750 they were partly subdued and forced into villages. The modern Gauchos of Uruguay have much Charrua blood, and portions of the race remain in a nearly pure state. They are much employed as soldiers and herdsmen.

Charter, The Great. See Magna Charta.

Charterhouse (chär'tèr-hons). [A corruption of Chartreuse; orig. the name of a village in France (ML. Cartusia), near the seat of the original monastery of the order, called distinctively La Grande Chartreuse.] A Carthusian monastery (later a hospital, and a school for boys) in London, founded in 1371 by Sir Walter Manny and the Bishop of Northburgh. At the dissolution the Charter House was given by Henry VIII. to Sir Thomas Andley, and passed through various hands to Sir Thomas Sutton, who in 1611 endowed it as a charity under the name of the Hospital of St. James. This foundation long existed as a hospital for decayed gentlemen and a school for boys. The school was transferred to Godalming, Surrey, in 1872, and the premises are now occupied by the school of the Merchant Taylors' Company. The buildings are for the most part of the early 16th century, and the great hall is one of the finest architectural interiors of that time. The great staircase, great chamber, chapel, and cloister are also of much interest.

Charter Oak, The. A tree celebrated in American (legendary) history, which formerly stood in Hartford, Connecticut. According to tradition, when Governor Andros came to Hartford in 1687 to demand of the Assembly the surrender of the colonial charter, the debate in that body over the governor's demand was prolonged beyond daylight, when suddenly the lights were extinguished, and in the darkness a patriot, Captain Wadsworth, escaped with the charter and hid it in a hollow oak. There is, however, no contemporary record of this event. The Charter Oak was overthrown by a storm in 1856.

Chartier (shär'tyā'), Alain. Born at Bayeux, France, about 1392; died about 1430 or 1433 (Gaston Paris). A famous French poet and man of letters. He wrote "Le quadrilogue invectif," "L'Espérance," "La belle dame sans mercy," and numerous other works. His poetry consists mainly of allegorical and controversial love-poems and moral verse. He is best known by the story that Margaret of Scotland stooped and kissed his lips while he lay asleep, to the astonishment of the attendants, for the poetry and virtuous sentiments that had issued from them.

Chartists (chär'tists). A body of political reformers (chiefly working-men) that sprang up in England about the year 1838. The Chartists advocated as their leading principles universal suffrage, the abolition of the property qualification for a seat in Parliament, annual parliaments, equal representation, payment of members of Parliament, and vote by ballot, all of which they demanded as constituting the "people's charter." The members of the extreme section of the party, which favored an appeal to arms or popular risings if the charter could not be obtained by legitimate means, were called "physical-force men." The Chartists disappeared as a party after 1849. Also Charterists.

Charton (shär-tôn'), Édouard Thomas. Born at Sens, Yonne, France, May 11, 1807. A French author. He was elected to the Constituent Assembly in 1848, and to the National Assembly at Bordeaux and Versailles in 1871, and became a senator in 1878. He founded the "Magasin Pittoresque" (1833), the "Illustration" (1853), and "Le Tour du Monde" (1860). Author of "Les voyageurs anciens et modernes" (1855-1857), etc.

Chartres (shärtr). The capital of the department of Eure-et-Loir, France, on the Eure 48 miles southwest of Paris: the ancient Autricum, later Carnutum. It has a large trade in grain, and is famous for its cathedral, one of the great churches of the world, built in the 12th and 13th centuries, and notable for both beauty and solidity. The oldest part is the west front, with three admirably sculptured portals, and south tower and spire considered the finest of their type. The elegant and ornate north spire is much later. The great triple porches of the transepts, covered with sculpture, are matchless. The interior is simple, but of most impressive dignity. Over 100 of the great windows retain their 13th-century glass, forming a display of jeweled color unequalled elsewhere. Other remarkable features are the rose of the west front, and the series of sculptures of the life of Christ and of the Virgin, framed in the richest Flamboyant tracery, which adorns the exterior of the choir-screen. Chartres was the capital of the Carnutes, and a center of Druid worship. It was the capital of the county and later duchy of Chartres and capital of Beauce. Henry IV. was crowned here king of France in 1594. It was taken by the Germans, Oct., 1870. Population (1891), commune, 23,108.

Chartres, County of. An ancient district in northern France, comprised in the government of Orléanais, and partly corresponding to the department of Eure-et-Loir. Capital, Chartres. It was united to Champagne 1125-52, and was purchased by St. Louis in 1234. It was afterward a duchy and a royal appanage.

Chartres (shärtr). Duc de (Robert Philippe Louis Eugène Ferdinand d'Orléans). Born at Paris, Nov. 9, 1840. A French prince, younger brother of the Comte de Paris, and grandson of Louis Philippe. He served in the Italian army 1859, and on General McClellan's staff 1861-1862. After the revolution of Sept. 4, 1870, he returned incognito to France, served under an assumed name in General Chanzy's army, and in 1871, when the National Assembly revoked the law banishing the Orléans family, was appointed major. He became colonel in 1878, and was in command of the 12th Chasseurs, stationed at Rouen, when by the decree of Feb. 24, 1883, he was suspended from the active list: by the law of June 23, 1886, he was expelled from the army. He married Françoise Marie Amélie d'Orléans, June 11, 1863, and has issue two daughters and two sons, Prince Henri Philippe Marie and Prince Jean Pierre Clément Marie (born at Paris, Sept. 4, 1874).

Chartreuse (shär-tréz'), La Grande. The leading Carthusian monastery, situated 13 miles northeast of Grenoble, in the department of Isère, France. It was founded by St. Bruno about 1084. It gives name to the liqueur Chartreuse, manufactured there.

Chartreuse de Parme (shär-tréz' dé pärm), La. A novel by Stendhal (Beyle), published in 1839.

Charudes. See Harudes.

Charybdis (ka-rib'dis). [Gr. Χαρυβδης.] In Greek mythology, a sea-monster which three times a day sucks in the sea and discharges it again in a terrible whirlpool: depicted as a maiden above, but ending below in the body of a fish begirt with hideous dogs. Opposite her was the other monster Scylla. In later times they were placed in the Straits of Messina, Scylla being identified with a projecting rock on the Italian side. The name of Charybdis is derived by some from Semitic char obed, 'hole of perdition, abyss.'

Charyllis (ka-ril'is). In Spenser's "Colin Clout's Come Home Again," a character intended for Lady Anne Compton, one of the six daughters of Sir John Spenser of Althorpe.

Chasday ben Isaac ben Shaphrut (chäs-di' ben i'zak ben shäp-röt'). A Jewish statesman and physician in Cordova, Spain, 915-970, body physician and minister of finance under the califs Abd-er-Rahman III. and Al-Hakim. He was appointed by them Nasi (prince, head) over the Jews in the califate. He was a generous promoter of literature, and translated the botanical work of Dioscorides from Latin into Arabic. His correspondence with Joseph, the Jewish king of the Khazar kingdom, near the Caspian Sea, is extant.

Chase, Salmon Portland. Born at Cornish, N. H., Jan. 13, 1808; died at New York, May 7, 1873. An American statesman and jurist, nephew of Philander Chase. He was United States senator from Ohio 1849-55; governor of Ohio 1856-60; secretary of the treasury 1861-64; and chief justice of the Supreme Court 1864-73.

Chase, Samuel. Born in Somerset County, Maryland, April 17, 1741; died June 19, 1811. An American jurist, a signer of the Declaration of Independence. He was appointed associate justice of the Supreme Court in 1796; was impeached for misconduct 1804; and was acquitted 1805.

Chase, William Merritt. Born at Franklin, Ind., Nov. 1, 1849. An American painter of portraits, still life, and landscapes. He was a pupil of the schools of the National Academy of New York. In 1871 he went to St. Louis, where he had some success as a portrait-painter, and in 1872 to Germany, where he studied under Piloty at Munich, returning to New York in 1878. He is a member of the National Academy, president of the Society of American Artists, and has been the recipient of many honors at home and abroad.

Chasidim (chä-sé'dim), or Assideans. [Heb., 'pious ones, pietists.'] A party which arose among the Jews during the period of the Maccæbean struggles. Its object was the defense and maintenance of the Jewish law in all its particulars against the encroachments of Greek customs (Hellenism). It is not improbable that they were the forerunners of the Essenes. In modern times a similar sect has spread among the Jews of eastern Europe and the Orient, which is supposed to have originated with a certain Israel Eaal Shem in the 15th century. They strive after a closer communion with God by means of the Kabbalah ('mysticism') and the mediation of a rabbi or zaddik ('just man') whom they believe to be a special favorite of God, and to be endowed with the power of performing miracles by prayer.

Chasles (shäl), Michel. Born at Épernon, Eure-et-Loir, France, Nov. 15, 1793; died at Paris, Dec. 19, 1880. A celebrated French geometer, professor at the École Polytechnique, and later at the Sorbonne. He was the author of "Aperçu historique sur l'origine et le développement des méthodes en géométrie, etc." (1837), "Traité de géométrie supérieure" (1852), "Traité des sections coniques" (1856), "Rapport sur les progrès de la géométrie" (1870), etc. He was the victim of a literary forgery (by Irène Lucas) in 1867, being persuaded of the genuineness of a large number of forged letters of Pascal, Dante, Shakspeare, and others. On those of Pascal he made a report to the Academy.

Chasles, Victor Euphémion Philarète. Born at Mainvilliers, near Chartres, France, Oct. 8, 1798; died at Venice, July 18, 1873. A French literary critic, novelist, and general writer. His essays have been collected in eleven volumes, under the title "Études de littérature comparée."

Chassé (shäs-sä'), David Hendrik, Baron. Born at Thiel, Netherlands, March 18, 1765; died at Breda, Netherlands, May 2, 1849. A Dutch general. He was distinguished in the French service in the Peninsular campaign, and in the Dutch service at Waterloo in 1815, and at Antwerp 1830-32. From his predilection for attacking with the bayonet, he was nicknamed by the soldiers "General Bayonet."

Chasseloup-Laubat (shäs-lô' lô-bä'), François, Marquis de. Born at St. Sornin, Charente-Inférieure, France, Aug. 18, 1754; died at Paris, Oct. 10, 1833. A French military engineer, distinguished in the campaigns from 1792-1812.

Chastelard (shät-lär'). Pierre de Boscose de. Born in Danphiné, France, about 1540; executed at the Tolbooth, Edinburgh, 1563. A French poet at the court of Francis II. and Mary Queen of Scots, a descendant of the Chevalier Bayard. He was a page in the household of the constable Montmorency, and afterward in that of Marshal Damville. When Mary went to Scotland after the death of her husband, in 1561, Chastelard followed her in the train of Damville who escorted her. He was violently in love with her, and she amused herself with him and his amorous verses. He went back to France, but returned in 1563. His love for her was not without encouragement. He was twice discovered in her bedchamber: she pardoned him the first offense, but for the second sacrificed him mercilessly to public opinion, and he was taken to the Tolbooth and hung.

Chastelard. A tragedy by Swinburne, published in 1865.

Chasteler (shät-lä'), Jean Gabriel Joseph Albert, Marquis du. Born at Malbais, near Mons, Belgium, Jan. 22, 1763; died at Venice, May 7, 1825. An Austrian general, distinguished at Wattignies 1793, in Italy 1799, and in the Tyrol 1800, 1805, and 1809.

Châtelet (shät-lä'), Le Grand. [F. 'the great fort.'] An ancient fortress in Paris, situated on the right bank of the Seine, on the present Place du Châtelet, used for a prison and for courts of justice until 1802, when it was destroyed. Its origin is very obscure. It was at first simply a tower commanding the northern approach to the city. There was probably a wooden tower here as early as 885. The earliest mention is in a charter of Louis le Jeune in 1147. The Châtelet was the city prison of Paris in the medieval and Renaissance periods, and was one of the most terrible prisons of the Old World. The prisoners were generally of the more or less helpless class of city malefactors, but occasionally persons of a better class were confined in it.

Châtelet, Le Petit. [F. 'the little fort.'] An ancient fortress in Paris, situated on the left bank of the Seine, near the Hôtel-Dieu, used for a prison. It was destroyed in 1782.

Chatsworth (chats'wërth). The seat of the Duke of Devonshire, situated on the Derwent about 3½ miles northeast of Bakewell, Derbyshire, England. This imposing Renaissance palace, 500 feet long, was begun in 1688. The interior is lavishly adorned with painting and sculpture, and contains a splendid collection of drawings by the old masters, some fine old and modern paintings, a Venus by Thorwaldsen, and Canova's Napoleon, Madame Létitia, and Endymion. The formal gardens are famous. They contain elaborate fountains and fine conservatories.

Chattahoochee (chat-a-hô'chë). A river in Georgia which forms part of its western boundary, and unites with the Flint to form the Appalachicola at the southwestern extremity of the State. Length, over 500 miles. It is navigable to Columbus (over 200 miles).

Chattanooga (chat-a-nô'gë). The capital of Hamilton County, Tennessee, situated on the Tennessee River in lat. 35° 4' N., long. 85° 19' W. It is an important railway and commercial center, with trade in lumber and grain, and manufactures of iron, steel, machinery, cotton, etc. It was a strategic point in the Civil War. Population (1890), 29,100.

Chattanooga, Battle of. A series of engagements near Chattanooga, Nov. 23-25, 1863. The Federals (about 60,000) under Grant defeated the Confederates (40,000-50,000) under Bragg. Loss of Federals, 5,616; of Confederates, 8,684 (6,142 prisoners). See further under Lookout Mountain and Missionary Ridge.

Chatterton (chat'er-ton), Thomas. Born at Bristol, England, Nov. 20, 1752; committed suicide at London, Aug. 25, 1770. An English poet, famous for his precocity and for his literary impostures. See Rowley Poems.

Chatti (kat'i), or Catti (kat'i). [L. (Tacitus) Chatti, Gr. (Strabo) Χαττοι.] A German tribe, a branch of the Suevi, first mentioned by Strabo. They originally occupied the Tannus region north of the Main, but were assigned by Drusus to the old territory of the Sugambri further northward, back from the Rhine, in the region about the Fulda and the middle Weser. They took part in the rising under Civilis, and were afterward, down into the 3d century, in frequent conflict with the Romans. They were one of the most powerful of the German inland tribes. Two minor tribes of the Chatti, the Batavi and the Canninefates, were ultimately merged in the Saliic Franks. Those left behind in the old territory became, finally, the Hessians, a name which appears early in the 8th century.

Chaucer (chä'sër), Geoffrey. [ME. Chaucer, lit. 'Shoemaker,' from OF. chaucier, ML. calcearius, calciarius, a shoemaker, from L. calcus, calcus, a shoe.] Born at London about 1340; died at London, Oct. 25, 1400. A celebrated English poet. He was the son of a well-to-do London vintner, John Chaucer. He was liberally educated, but there is no certain evidence that he was a student at either Oxford or Cambridge. In the year 1357 he is twice mentioned as being in the service of Prince Lionel, the second son of Edward III. In 1359 he was with the king's army in Brittany, where he was taken prisoner. According to his own statement, in 1366, he bore arms for twenty-seven years. In 1367 he is described as a viceroy of the king's household ("dilectus valetus noster"). About this time it is thought that he married Philippa Roet, the eldest daughter of Sir Payne Roet, the king at arms for Guienne, and a native of Hainault, who came to England in the train of Queen Philippa probably in 1325. (Morley). By 1374 Chaucer had been raised to a higher rank, sent on royal embassies to Italy, etc., and called "Esquire" in official records. He was also made comptroller of the customs of wools, skins, and tanned hides in London, and received other grants, missions, and pensions. John of Gaunt, the younger brother of Prince Lionel, became the patron of Chaucer: in 1396 married for his third wife Catherine Swinford, a widow, who had been his mistress, and who was the sister of Chaucer's wife. From 1374 to 1386 Chaucer lived in the Gate-house of Aldgate. In 1378 he was sent again to Italy, after which he was apparently closely confined by his business to London till 1385, when he was allowed to have a deputy in the office of comptroller of customs of wool, etc. In 1386 he was elected knight of the shire for Kent, but was dismissed from all his various offices and became poor before the end of the year. By 1399, however, he had, through the patronage of Henry IV., the recently crowned son of John of Gaunt, a sufficient income, and took a fifty-three years' lease of a house on the spot in Westminster where Henry VII.'s chapel now stands: here, however, he lived less than a year. Among his works are—Genuine works before 1380: "Prologus and Cressida," "The Translation of Boethius on the Consolation of Philosophy," "The Dream of Chaucer" (about 1369), "The Assembly of Fowls," "Of Queen Anelida and False Arcite," "The House of Fame," "Chaucer's A. B. C., called La Priere de nostre Dame,"—Genuine works after 1380: "The Canterbury Tales," "The Legend of Good Women," "The Conclusions of the Astrologer," "The Complaint of Mars," "Good Counsel of Chaucer," "Lenvoye to Seogan," "Chaucer unto his Empty Purse," "Chaucer's Words unto his own Scrivener."—Genuine works, dates unknown: "The Complaint of Mars," "The Complaint of Venus" (a translation—Skeat), "The Former Age," "How Pity is Dead and Buried in a Gentle Heart."—Doubtful works: "The Romaunt of the Rose," "Orison to the Holy Virgin," "An Amorous Complaint,"—Spurious works: "A Goodly Ballade of Chaucer," "The Flower of Courtesy, with a Ballade," "La Belle Dame sans Mercy," "The Assembly of Ladies," "A Praise of Women," "The Testament of Love," "The Lamentation of Mary Magdalen," "The Remedy of Love," "A Ballade in Commendation of our Lady," "The Plowman's Tale," "Balade de bon Conseil," "Against Women Unconstant," "The Craft of Lovers, a Ballade," "The Ten Commandments of Love," "The Nine Ladies Worthy," "Alone Walking," "Jacke Upland," "The Tale of Gamelin," "The Prologue, or the Merry Adventures of the Pardoner and Tapster at the Inn at Canterbury," "The Merchant's Second Tale, or the History of Beryn," "The Testament and Complaint of Cressida" (by Robert Henryson, about 1490), "The Complaint of the Black Knight" (by Lydgate, first half of the 15th century), "The Cuckoo and the Nightingale" (about 1400, perhaps, but uncertain), "The Letter of Cupid" (by Occleve, 1402), "The Court of Love" (about 1500), "Chaucer's Dream," "The Isle of Ladies" (about 1450), and "The Flower and the Leaf" (about 1420). Lounsbury.

Chaucer, Thomas. Born about 1367; died March 14, 1434. An English statesman, probably eldest son of Geoffrey Chaucer. He was chief butler of Richard II., constable of Wallingford Castle, steward of the honors of Wallingford and St. Valery and of the Chiltern Hundreds, successor of Geoffrey Chaucer as forester of North Petherton Park, Somersetshire, and member of Parliament 1400–31. He was chosen speaker of the House of Commons in 1407, 1410, 1411, and 1414. He was present at the battle of Agincourt.

Chaucer of France, The. A name given to Clément Marot.

Chaucer's Dream. 1. A name once given to "The Book of the Duchess," in which the poet relates his dream.—2. The title of an independent poem, first printed by Thomas Speight in the 1597 edition of the works of Chaucer. He prefixed to it a note saying: "That which heretofore hath gone under the name of his Dreame, is the Book of the Duchesse: on the death of Blanche, Duchesse of Lancaster."

There is no extant MS. of this poem earlier than one at Longleat of about 1550. If the poem be Chaucer's, it is in a late copy, with corruptions of the text, and was an early work of his. I leave its authenticity in question. Morley, Eng. Writers, V. 166.

Chaucer Society, The. A society founded by Mr. Furnivall in 1867 for the purpose of furnishing to scholars material (manuscripts, early texts, etc.) relating to Chaucer which was not accessible to the public, and of facilitating collation.

Chauci (ká'si). [L. (Pliny) Chauci, Gr. (Strabo) Χαυκοί.] A German tribe, first mentioned by Strabo, in the region along the North Sea, on both sides of the Weser from the Ems to the Elbe. Pliny divides them into "greater" and "lesser." They were brought by Drusus and Tiberius into subjection to the Romans. The name disappears early in the 5th century. They were ultimately merged in the Saxons.

Cheapside (chēp'sid). [ME. chepe, market.] The central, east-and-west thoroughfare of the City of London, originally a large open common in the course of Watling street where the markets and public assemblies were held. Different kinds of wares were sold separately, and the names were perpetuated in the streets which were built up where the old booths had stood. In the middle ages (Chepe was the great street of the retail trade. It was built with the finest houses in the city, and well supplied with churches, the principal one being St. Mary le Bow, so called from its great vault or bow, on the south side. On the south side also was the stone gallery from which royalty reviewed the tournaments which were held here. There were two crosses in Chepe: the principal one was erected by Edward I. to mark the resting-place of his queen, Eleanor of Castile. (See Charing Cross.) The highway ran through the more southern portion of the marketplace, and became known as Cheapside. Before the fire in 1660 it was twice as wide as the present street, and was lined with houses five stories high, each story projecting over the one below, and with high gables. Cheapside is 59 feet above tide-water.

Chebar (kē'bār). Mentioned in Ezek. i. 3 as a river in the "land of the Chaldeans," on the banks of which the Jewish exiles lived. The river or canal is as yet not identified with any of the numerous canals of Babylonia mentioned in the cuneiform inscriptions. The view, held formerly, that it was the same as Habor, a river which joins the Euphrates near the site of the ancient Ctesium, is now, for philological and geographical reasons, generally abandoned.

Cheddar Cliffs (ched'ār klifz). A picturesque group of limestone cliffs in the Mendip Hills, Somersetshire, England, near Wells. Height, 500 feet.

Chedorlaomer (kē-dōr-lā-ō'mēr). A king of Elam who, according to Gen. xiv., in the time of Abraham, with his three tributary kings Amraphel of Shinar (Shuuir of the inscriptions), Arioch of Ellasar (Larsa), and Tidal of Goyim, invaded Palestine and subdued the five kings of Siddim (around the Dead Sea). For twelve years they remained in subjection; in the thirteenth year they rebelled, whereupon Chedorlaomer came again with his three allies and defeated the five kings, pillaging the whole country and carrying away with him Lot, the nephew of Abraham. According to the Assyrian monuments, Elamite kings conquered Babylonia and reigned over it during the period between 2300 and 2076 B. C. Among the Elamite kings mentioned are Kudur-Mabuk and Kudur-Nahundu. The first calls himself "conqueror of the Westland." Chedorlaomer, or, as the name would have been read in the ancient Elamite language, Kudur-Lagamar, may be put about 2000 B. C. Lagamar is, as ascertained by the Assyrian inscriptions, the name of an Elamite deity, and Kudur probably means 'servant.'

Chédotel (shā-dō-tel'). Lived about 1600. A French navigator and explorer in Canada. Having been selected to guide the expedition of the Marquis de la Roche to New France, he landed, in 1598, fifty men on Sable Island, whom on his return from an exploring expedition along the coast of Acadia he was compelled by stress of weather to abandon. He was sent to their rescue by the Parliament of Rouen in 1605, but recovered only twelve men, all that survived.

Chemosh (kē'mosh). The principal deity, or Baal, of the Moabites. In Judges xi. 24 Chemosh also appears as the national god of Ammon. Under Solomon his worship was introduced in Judah, but was abolished by Josiah (1 Ki. xi. 7, 2 Ki. xxiii. 13).

Chemisan. See Tsimshian.

Chemulpo (che-mul'po). A treaty port of Korea, near Seoul. It is the most important of the treaty ports.

Chenab, or Chinab (chē-nāb'). The central river of the Panjab, British India, which unites with the Sutlej to form the Panjad (an eastern affluent of the Indus), in lat. 29° 25' N., long. 71° 5' E. Length, about 750 miles.

Chenango (shē-nang'gō). A tributary of the Susquehanna, which it joins at Binghamton, New York. Length, about 100 miles.

Chenavard (shē-nā-vār'). Paul Joseph. Born Dec. 9, 1808; died April 12, 1895. A French historical painter, a pupil of Delacroix and Ingres. He executed a series of cartoons for the Pantheon in Paris.

Chénédollé (shān-de-lā'). Charles Julien Pioult de. Born at Vire in 1769; died 1832. A French poet.

Chénédollé was in production, if not in publication, for he published late in life, a precursor of Lamartine, much of whose style and manner may be found in him.

Saintsbury, French Lit., p. 403.

Chênée (shā-nā'). A manufacturing suburb of Liège, Belgium, situated at the junction of the Vesdre and Ourthe. Population (1890), 7,043.

Chenevix (chen'e-viks), Richard. Born in Ireland (of French parentage), 1774; died April 5, 1830. A chemist, mineralogist, and man of letters, fellow of the Royal Society 1801, and Copley medalist 1803. Besides numerous scientific papers, he wrote "Mantuan Revels" (a comedy), "Henry the Seventh" (a tragedy), and poems.

Chénier (shā-nyā'). André Marie de. Born at Constantinople, Oct. 30, 1762; guillotined at Paris, July 25, 1794. A celebrated French poet, son of Louis Chénier. According to Sainte-Beuve he is the greatest writer in French classic verse since the days of Racine and Boileau. He went to the Collège de Navarre in France; was in the army in 1782; in Switzerland and Italy 1783-84; in Paris 1784-87; secretary to the French embassy in London till 1790; and finally reverted to literary occupations and studies in Paris. Only two poetical compositions of Chénier were published during his lifetime, "Le jeu de paume à David peintre" (suggested by the great painter's "Serment du jeu de paume"), and "Hymne aux soldats de Châteauneuf." His pamphlet directed against the Jacobin club, "Avis au peuple français sur ses véritables ennemis," brought him a medal of recognition from Stanislas, king of Poland. Chénier's plain words in political matters led to his inscription on the exile list, but he seems to have been of assistance to Malesherbes in preparing the defense of Louis XVI., and to the king himself in preparing the latter's appeal to the people. March 7, 1794, he was accused of sheltering a political criminal, and was sent to prison. On the 7th Thermidor he was one of twenty-four guillotined on a charge of prison conspiracy. "La jeune captive" was published Jan. 9, 1795, in the "Décade philosophique," with reprints in "L'Almanach des muses" and "Le magasin encyclopédique." "La jeune Tartentine" came out in the "Mercure" of March 22, 1801. In a note to Châteaubriand's "Génie du christianisme" several passages were quoted from the "Élégies." Other fragments were inserted by Fayette in his "Mélanges littéraires" (1816). The first complete edition of Chénier's works was made by Latoche in 1819, the second by D. C. Robert, the third and fourth again by Latoche in 1823 and 1829 respectively. Beq de Fouquieres published the first critical edition in 1862, and the second in 1872. An indifferently edited version was given by Gabriel de Chénier in 1874. Beq de Fouquieres pointed out its shortcomings in his "Documents nouveaux sur André Chénier" (1875). He also published in 1881 a revised and enlarged edition of Chénier's "Œuvres en prose," based on the version of Hugo and Lacroix in 1810; and finally gave the results of his latest research in his "Lettres critiques d'André Chénier" (1881).

Chénier, Louis de. Born at Montfort, France, 1723; died at Paris, May 25, 1796. A French historian. He resided at Constantinople for many years, and was consul-general there until 1764. His works include "Recherches historiques sur les Maures et l'histoire de l'empire de Maroc" (1787), "Révolutions de l'empire Ottoman, etc." (1789), etc.

Chénier, Marie Joseph de. Born at Constantinople, Aug. 28, 1764; died at Paris, Jan. 10, 1811. A French poet, son of Louis Chénier. He wrote the tragedy "Charles IX" (1789), the song "Chant du départ," "Tibère," etc. His complete works were published 1821-26.

Chenonceaux (shē-nōn-sō'). A village in the department of Indre-et-Loire, France, situated on the Cher 19 miles southeast of Tours. It is famous for the castle built under François I in a graceful Renaissance style, to which picturesque quality is added by the introduction of medieval round, cone-roofed towers. The beautiful chapel has fine glass, and the old furniture and ornament of the interior remain in great part. A unique feature is the bridge over the Cher, covered with a range of buildings.

Chenooks. See Chinooks.

Cheops (kē'ops). [Gr. Χεοψ.] See Khufu.

Chepenafa (che-pē-na-fā). [Pl.] The Mary River Indians, or Marysville Indians, a band of the Lakmiut division of the Kalapooian stock of North American Indians. They formerly lived on the forks of St. Mary creek, near Corvallis, Oregon, and are now on Grande Ronde reservation. They numbered 23 in 1890. See Lakmiut.

Chephren. See Khafra.

Chepman (chep'man), Walter. Born about 1473; died about 1538. A printer and merchant of Edinburgh, the earliest Scottish printer with the exception of Andrew Myllar.

Chepstow (chep'stō). A town in Monmouthshire, England, situated on the Wye 13 miles northwest of Bristol. It contains the ruins of Chepstow Castle, a fortress of the 13th and 14th centuries, with high walls and massive cylindrical towers. There are four interior courts. Population (1891), 3,373.

Cher (shār). A river of France which joins the Loire near Tours. Length, 215 miles; navigable 74 miles.

Cher. A department of France, lying between Loiret on the north, Nièvre on the east, Allier and Creuse on the south, and Indre and Loiret-Cher on the west. Capital, Bourges. It is a leading industrial department, and is formed from parts of Berry and the Bourbonnais. Area, 2,780 square miles. Population (1891), 359,276.

Cherasco (kā-rās'kō). A town in the province of Cuneo, Italy, near the junction of the Stura and Tanaro, 30 miles south of Turin.

Cherasco, Armistice of. An armistice concluded between Napoleon and Victor Amadeus III. of Sardinia, April 29, 1796. A definite peace followed, May 15, 1796, making great concessions to France.

Cherasco, Treaty of. A treaty of peace, signed April 6, 1631, which confirmed the treaty of Ratisbon, concluded between Richelieu and Ferdinand II. in 1630. The latter invested the Duke of Nevers with Mantua and Montferrat. Savoy received concessions. The treaty ended the war of the Mantuan Succession.

Cherbourg (shēr'bōrg; F. pron. shār-bōr'). A seaport in the department of Manche, France, situated on the English Channel in lat. 49° 39' N., long. 1° 38' W. It is the third naval port of France, and is a strong fortress. It has a roadstead protected by a long dike, a commercial harbor and a naval harbor, and contains extensive docks, an arsenal, and naval establishments. It is the Roman Coriolum, Cæsaris burgum. After various English occupations it was permanently held by France from 1450. It was planned as a naval station by Vauban, and the works were encouraged by Napoleon I. and completed by Napoleon III. The fortifications were destroyed by the English in 1758. Population (1891), commune, 38,554.

Cherbuliez (shār-bū-lyā'), Antoine Elisée. Born at Geneva, July 29, 1797; died at Zurich, Switzerland, March 14, 1869. A Swiss political economist, author of "L'Utilitaire" (1828-1830), etc.

Cherbuliez (shār-bū-lyā'), Charles Victor. Born at Geneva, July 19, 1829. A French novelist and critic. He began life as a teacher, but resigned his professorship and traveled extensively in the East. On his return he published in the form of a novel the result of his studies in archeology. The first edition was called "A propos d'un cheval" (1860), and the second "Un cheval de Phidias" (1864). Two other works of a similar character, "Le prince Vitale" (1864) and "Le grand œuvre" (1867), embody his views on the origin, transformation, and destiny of this globe. In the "Revue des Deux Mondes" he has published a long series of novels, including "Le comte Kostin" (1863), "Paul Mérier" (1864), "Le roman d'une honnête femme" (1864), "Prosper Randoce" (1868), "L'Aventure de Ladislav Bolski" (1869), "La revanche de Joseph Noirel" (1872), "Meta Holden" (1873), "Le fiancé de Mlle. Saint-Maur" (1876), "Samuel Brohl et Cie" (1877), "L'Idée de Jean Téterol" (1878), "Amours fragiles" (1880), "Noirs et rouges" (1881), "La ferme du Choiquart" (1883), "Olivier Mangant" (1885), "La bête" (1887), "La vocation du Comte Ghislain" (1888), "Une gageure" (1890). Among his productions in most recent years are "L'Art et la nature" ("Revue des Deux Mondes," 1891) and "Le secret du précepteur" (ibid., 1892-93). Both over his own name and under the nom de plume of G. Valbert, Cherbuliez has also contributed to the same review several papers on foreign politics and historical literature. These articles have been collected in part and published as "L'Allemagne politique depuis la paix de Prague" (1870), "L'Espagne politique" (1874), "Hommes et choses d'Allemagne" (1877), "Hommes et choses du temps présent" (1883), and "Profilis (étrangers)" (1889). His art criticisms in the "Temps" give an account of the annual art exhibit in Paris, the Salon of 1872. They have been published separately under the title "Études de littérature et d'art" (1873). Two novels of Cherbuliez have been dramatized, "Samuel Brohl" (1879) and "L'Aventure de Ladislav Bolski" (1879), but neither scored as a play the success attained in the original form. Cherbuliez is a distant relative of J. J. Rousseau. He took out papers as a Frenchman after 1870. He was elected into the French Academy Dec. 8, 1881.

Cherchel, or Cherchell (sher-shel'). A seaport in the department of Algiers, Algeria, situated on the Mediterranean 54 miles west by south of Algiers. Population (1891), commune, 8,786.

Cherentes, or Xerentes (shā-rēn'tāz). An Indian tribe of Brazil, on the eastern side of the river Tocantins, in Goyaz, southern Maranhão, and portions of Piauhy and Bahia. They are closely allied to the Chavantes (which see), and are evidently an offspring of that tribe. Like them, they are very savage and warlike. Their numbers are now greatly reduced.

Chéri (shā-rē'), Rose (Rose Marie Cizos). Born at Etampes, France, Oct. 27, 1824; died at Passy, near Paris, Sept. 22, 1861. A celebrated French comedian. She first appeared at the Gymnase March 30, 1842. In 1846 the rôle of Clarisse Harlowe placed her in the first rank of her profession. In May, 1847, she married M. Lemoine Montigny, but continued to play under the name of Rose Chéri.

Cheribon, or Sheribon (sher'i-bon). A seaport on the northern coast of Java, Dutch East Indies, lat. 6° 45' S., long. 108° 35' E. Population, estimated at 11,000.

Cherokee (cher-ō-kē'), native Tsalaki. [Pl., also Cherokees.] An important tribe of North American Indians. The name means 'upland field,' the tribe being peculiarly upland; they may have so designated themselves to their first European visitors. They are probably the people known traditionally to the Delawares as Taliigewi, a powerful body which once occupied the valleys of the Ohio and Allegheny rivers, and afterward was driven south by the Delawares and Iroquois. When first known to Europeans their center was in the southern Alleghenies, and they occupied the mountains of southern Virginia, North and South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, and Tennessee. Their chief settlements were on the head waters of the Savannah and Tennessee rivers, and were respectively called Elati Tsalaki, or Lower Cherokee, and Atali Tsalaki, or Upper Cherokee, speaking two different dialects. As the white settlements pressed upon them they retreated westward, until by the treaty of 1835 they sold all their remaining country, and the main body removed to a tract assigned to them west of the Mississippi. A considerable number remained behind, and gradually concentrating in western North Carolina, are now known as the eastern band of Cherokees, numbering about 2,000. Those in the Indian Territory number about 17,000. Both divisions have a large admixture of foreign blood. See Iroquoian.

Cherry (cher'i). [A nickname of Charity.] 1. The daughter of the landlord Boniface in Farquhar's "Beaux' Stratagem."—2. The nickname of Charity Pecksniff in Dickens's "Martin Chuzzlewit."

Chersiphron (kēr'si-fron). [Gr. Χερσίφρων.] Born at Cnossus, Crete; flourished about 576 B. C. The first architect of the Artemision at Ephesus. He was associated with his son Metagenes, and with Theodoros. The Artemision was one hundred and twenty years in building, and was finished about 456 B. C. This building was later destroyed by fire, and rebuilt about the time of Alexander by Dinocrates.

Cherso (ker'sō). 1. An island in the Adriatic Sea, belonging to Küstenland, Austria-Hungary, in lat. 44° 40'—45° 10' N., long. 14° 30' E. Length, 40 miles.—2. The chief town on the island of Cherso. Population (1890), commune, 8,250.

Cherson. See Kherson.

Chersonesus (kēr-sō-nē'sus), or Chersonese (kēr'sō-nēs or -nēz). [Gr. Χερσονήσος, a peninsula.] The Greek name for a peninsula. It was specifically applied to the following: (a) Chersonesus Aurea, the modern peninsula of Malacca. (b) Chersonesus Cimbrica, the modern peninsula of Jutland (Denmark). (c) Chersonesus Taurica or Scythica, the modern Crimea (Russia). (d) Chersonesus Thracica, the modern peninsula of Gallipoli, between the Hellespont and the Gulf of Melas.

Chertsey (ches'i or chert'si). [AS. Certes eg, Coertes iy or eg, Coert's island.] A town in Surrey, England, situated on the Thames 22 miles southwest of London. It was the ancient capital of the South Saxons. It contained a Benedictine monastery founded in the 7th century.

Cherub, The. See Wilfer, Bella.

Chérubin de la Ronda (shā-rū-bān' dè lā rôn'dā), Don. The Bachelor of Salamanca (which see) in Le Sage's novel of that name.

In this work [Le Sage's "The Bachelor of Salamanca"]. Don Chérubin, the Bachelor of Salamanca, is placed in all different situations of life—a plan which gives scope to the author for satire as various as the classes of men with whom his hero at different times associates. The first part, in which he appears as a tutor, is by much the most novel and entertaining.

Dunlop, Hist. of Prose Fiction, II. 478.

Chérubin (shā-rū-bān'). A page in "Le Mariage de Figaro," by Beaumarchais. Timid before the Countess Almaviva, he is extremely forward with Suzanne. In "La Mère Coupable" he has overcome this weakness, and is proved to be the rival of Almaviva, the father of his supposed son Leon, and the cause of the "guilty mother's" tears.

Cherubini (kā-rō-bē-nē), Maria Luigi Carlo Zenobio Salvatore. Born at Florence, Sept. 14, 1760; died at Paris, March 15, 1842. A celebrated Italian composer. He studied under Sarti at Bologna, and finally established himself in Paris in 1788. His works include the operas "Armida" (1782),

"La Finta Principessa" (1785), "Ifigenia in Aulide" (1787), "Demophon" (1788), "Lodoiska" (1791), "Médée" (1797), "Les deux journées" ("Der Wasserträger," 1800), "Fanniska" (1806), "Ali Baba" (originally "Konkourgi" (1793), produced in 1833), "Requiem in C" (1817), "Requiem in D" (1836). He also wrote many motets, masses, string-quartets, one-act operas, etc.

Cherusci (ke-rus'i). [L. (Cæsar) Cherusci, Gr. (Strabo) Χερυσακoi.] A German tribe, in the time of Cæsar dwelling about the middle Weser in territory extending as far east as the Elbe. They were subjugated to the Romans by Drusus and Tiberius, but rose against Varus under the leadership of their own countryman, Arminius. In the time of Tacitus they had sunk into comparative unimportance. The name disappears early in the 6th century. They ultimately became a constituent part of the Saxons.

Chervin (sher-vān'), Nicolas. Born in the department of Rhône, France, Oct. 6, 1783; died at Bourbonne-les-Bains, Haute-Marne, France, 1843. A French physician. He is noted for researches in regard to yellow fever, on which he published several monographs. He also wrote "Recherches médico-philosophiques sur les causes de la polygamie dans les pays chauds" (1812).

Cherwell (chēr'wel). A small river in England, which joins the Thames at Oxford.

Chesapeake (ches'a-pēk), The. An American frigate of 38 guns, built at Norfolk, Virginia, in 1799. During the campaign of 1812 she cruised in South American waters. In May, 1813, she returned to Boston, and was placed under the command of Captain James Lawrence. The ship was repaired and remained under his direction, but he was obliged to make up his crew of very unsatisfactory material. The British frigate Shannon, thirty-eight guns rating, commanded by Captain Philip Vere Broke, was at this time cruising off Boston harbor. Broke had brought his ship to a high state of efficiency. On June 1, 1813, the Chesapeake sailed out of Boston harbor, the Shannon being in sight in the offing. The battle occurred six leagues east of Boston light. Immediately after opening fire both ships fell aboard, and Captain Lawrence was mortally wounded. He was carried below exclaiming "Don't give up the ship!" Captain Broke boarded the Chesapeake, and at 6.05 P. M., fifteen minutes after the first gun was fired, her flag was struck.

Chesapeake Bay (ches'a-pēk bā). An inlet of the Atlantic Ocean, in Virginia and Maryland. It enters the Atlantic between capes Charles and Henry. Its chief affluents are the Susquehanna, Patapsco, Potomac, York, Rappahannock, and James. It was first explored by Captain John Smith in 1608. Length, about 200 miles. Breadth, 4-40 miles.

Chesebro (chéz'brō), Caroline. Born at Canandaigua, N. Y., March 30, 1825; died at Piermont, N. Y., Feb. 16, 1873. An American novelist, author of "Dreamland by Daylight" (1851), etc.

Cheselden (ches'el-den), William. Born at Somerby, Leicestershire, Oct. 19, 1688; died at Bath, April 10, 1752. A noted English surgeon. He was celebrated for his "lateral operation for the stone" and for operations upon the eye. He wrote "The Anatomy of the Human Body" (1713), "Treatise on the High Operation for the Stone" (1723), "Osteographia, or the Anatomy of the Bones" (1735). A short paper (Phil. Trans., XXXV. 447) upon the case of a boy who was born blind and was couched at about thirteen years of age has been much quoted by psychologists.

Chesham (chesham). A town in Buckinghamshire, England, 28 miles northwest of London. Population (1891), 8,018.

Cheshire (ches'ir), or Chester (ches'tēr). A maritime county in western England, lying between Lancashire on the north, Yorkshire on the northeast, Derby and Stafford on the east, Stafford and Shropshire on the south, and Wales and the Irish Sea on the west. Its surface is generally level, and its leading pursuit is dairy-farming. The chief city is Chester. It was made a county palatine by William the Conqueror. The palatinate count was abolished in 1830. Area, 1,427 square miles. Population (1891), 730,058.

Chesil Bank (ches'il bank). A long bar on the English coast between Portland and Bridport.

Cheskaya, Gulf of. See Tcheskaya.

Chesne, André du. See Duchesse, André.

Chesney (ches'ni), Francis Rawdon. Born at Annalong, County Down, Ireland, March 16, 1789; died at Mourne, County Down, Jan. 30, 1872. A British general and engineer. He examined the isthmus of Suez in 1830, and demonstrated the feasibility of a canal across it (his report serving later as the starting-point of De Lesseps); explored the valley of the Euphrates in 1831; and later (1835-36) established an overland route to India. He commanded the artillery at the station at Hongkong, China, 1843-47. He published an account of the "Expedition for the Survey of the Rivers Euphrates and Tigris" (1850), etc.

Chester (ches'tēr). [From L. castra, camp. It was the camp of the 20th legion.] The capital of Cheshire, England, situated on the Dee 15 miles south-southeast of Liverpool; the Roman Deva and Castra, and the Celtic Caerleon. It has an extensive trade in cheese, etc. It contains many Roman antiquities, and is notably medieval in appearance. It has a cathedral which presents every variety of English medieval architecture, from the Norman to the last Perpendicular. It has recently been well restored. The exterior is marked by its fine ranges of windows and its square central tower. The interior is very effective, the various architectural styles grouping in such manner as to contrast agreeably. The nave has modern fan-vaulting in oak. The south transept is as large as the choir, while the Norman north transept is very small. The choir is of the 13th century; its 15th-century stalls are elaborately enopied and pinnacled. The Lady chapel is an excellent example of Early English. The dimensions of the cathedral are 355 by 75 feet; length of transepts, 201; height of vaulting, 75. The cloister is Perpendicular; the rectangular chapter-house and the refectory are Early English. Chester was an important Roman military station, was destroyed by Æthelfrith of Northumbria in 607, and was rebuilt by Æthelræd. It surrendered to William the Conqueror in 1070, was long besieged by the Parliamentarians, and was taken by them in 1646. Population (1891), 37,105.

The name of Chester alone proves its Roman antiquity; it also proves its importance, as having come to be known as the city or the camp emphatically. Still the name is historically a contraction. The Roman Deva became in later times the Civitas Legionum, the Cærlleon of the Welsh, the Legeceaster (in several different spellings) of the English. Both names, it will be seen, Welsh and English, translate Civitas Legionum, the two tongues, according to their several habits, placing the qualifying word first in the English name and last in the Welsh. And here we have to distinguish our Cærlleon, our Legeceaster, from other places which might easily be confounded with them. The name of Cærlleon on the Dee is simply the same as Cærlleon on the Usk, and Welsh writers naturally speak of Chester as Cærlleon.

E. A. Freeman, Eng. Towns and Districts, p. 231.

Chester. A city in Delaware County, Pennsylvania, situated on the Delaware 12 miles southwest of Philadelphia. It has important manufactures of cottons and woolsens, and is especially noted for its shipyards. It was settled by Swedes in 1643. Population (1890), 20,226.

Chester, Battle of. A battle in which Æthelfrith of Northumbria defeated (613 [607?]) the Cymry of Strathclyde under Broemael, prince of Powys. As a result he annexed Chester and the surrounding district, thus surrendering the Cymry of Strathclyde from those of Wales. A thousand Cymric monks, who prayed on the field of battle for their countrymen, were killed by the order of Æthelfrith.

Chester, Joseph Lemuel. Born at Norwich, Conn., April 30, 1821; died at London, May 26, 1882. A noted American genealogist, resident in England after 1858. He engaged in various occupations (teacher, clerk, commissioner of deeds, journalist), and was aide-de-camp with the rank of colonel to the governor of Pennsylvania (1855-58). His genealogical work was begun in England, "yet when he died he had no superior as a genealogist among English-speaking people" (Dict. Nat. Biog.). He compiled the "Matriculations at the University of Oxford," "The Marriage, Baptismal, and Burial Registers of the Abbey of St. Peter, Westminster" (1876), etc.

Chesterfield (ches'tër-fêld). A manufacturing town in Derbyshire, England, situated on the rivers Rother and Ilpper 11 miles south of Sheffield. Population (1891), 13,242.

Chesterfield, Earl of. See Stanhope.

Chesterfield Inlet. An arm of Hudson Bay in British America, about lat. 64° N., long. 91°-97° W. Length, 200 miles. Greatest breadth, about 25 miles.

Chester-le-Street (ches'tër-le-strêt). A town in Durham, England, 6 miles north of Durham; the Roman Condercum, and later Cuneeceastre.

Chester Plays, The. A "collection of mysteries" founded upon "scriptural subjects," formerly represented by the guilds of Chester at Whitsuntide. They were twenty-four in number, and were played during three days.

According to the proclamation for the holding of these plays made in the year 1533, they were devised "of old time by one Sir Henry Francis, some time monk of this monastery dissolved," . . . "which plays were (in the 14th century) devised to the honor of God by John Arway . . . to be brought forth, declared and played," etc. . . . A note, written in a later hand, adds to the MS. copy of this proclamation written at the end of the sixteenth century, that Sir John Arway was mayor of Chester in 1327-8, at which time these plays were written by Randal Higgenet, a monk of Chester Abbey, and played openly in Whitsun week. Randal Higgenet is one of the corruptors of the name of Randolph or Ralph Higden, author of the "Polychronicon." . . . There are several MSS. of the Chester Mysteries none early. A MS. belonging to the Duke of Devonshire is dated 1581. A MS. once possessed by Mr. Heber was dated 1592. The two MSS. in the British Museum are dated 1600 and 1607; that at Oxford is dated 1604. A specimen of these Chester Mysteries was printed in 1818 by Mr. Markland for the members of the Roxburgh Club, and in 1831 these and other Mysteries, then unpublished, were described by Mr. Collier in his "History of Dramatic Literature"; but the only complete publication of them has been that made for the Shakespeare Society in 1843, when they were edited by Mr. Thomas Wright.

Chevreur (she-vrèl'), Michel Eugène. Born at Angers, France, Aug. 31, 1786; died at Paris, April 9, 1889. A celebrated French chemist. He was chemist at the Gobelins factory 1824-89, and professor at the Museum of Natural History 1830-83. His scientific works are numerous and important.

Chevreuse (she-vrüz'), Duchesse de (Marie de Rohan). Born Dec., 1600; died at Gagny, near Paris, Aug. 12, 1679. A French political intriguer. She was the daughter of Hercule de Rohan, duc de Montbazou, and was the wife first of Charles d'Albret, duc de Luynes, and, after his death, of the Duc de Chevreuse. She was one of the most formidable enemies at court of Cardinal Richelieu, by whom she was, however, eventually forced to leave France. On the death of Louis XIII. she returned, but was coldly received by the queen regent, Anne of Austria. Having acted in concert with Cardinal de Retz against Mazarin, she was a second time sent into exile.

Chevy Chase (chev'i chäs). A famous old English ballad which recounts the incidents of the battle of Otterburn, though not with the exactness of the Scotch ballad "The Battle of Otterburn," which is historical. The name is variously explained.

In the warfare against English settlements in France such a raid was called by the French allies of Scotland a chevache, and, by a common process, that name was corrupted into Chevy Chase. It lives yet among school-boys as a "chivy." Now, since there are in Northumberland Cheviot Hills as well as an Otterburn, Chevy Chase was interpreted into the Hunting of the Cheviot. The old ballad of the "Battle of Otterburn," or "Chevy Chase"—the battle of the chevache which was its cause—was therefore recast as, "The Hunting of the Cheviot," always with some confused sense of identity between one incident and the other. [In the oldest extant version of "Chevy Chase," the name means "the Cheviot hunting-ground." This version is in a manuscript in the Ashmolean Collection at Oxford. It was printed by Thomas Hearne, in the year 1719, in his preface to an edition of William of Newbury's "Chronicle." Its date seems to be about 1500, and if not the original, it is much nearer to the original than the version given in Percy's "Reliques." —Note. The battle of Otterburn is an incident minutely described by Froissart, but there is no record whatever of any similar battle that arose out of a Hunting of the Cheviots. Morley, English Writers, VI, 233.

Cheyenne (shî-en'). [Pl., also Cheyennes; from a Siouan word meaning 'enemies.'] A tribe of North American Indians that claim lands watered by the north and south forks of the Platte River. About 1800 they lived in the Black Hills and on the Cheyenne liver of Dakota. They are divided into Northern or Upper Cheyennes, now on the Tongue River reservation in eastern Montana, and Southern Cheyennes, at the Cheyenne and Arapaho agency, Indian Territory. Others are at Pine Ridge agency, South Dakota, and altogether they number 3,026. See Algonquian.

Chiaja (kê-ä'yä), La. [It. chiaja, a dial. form. = Sicilian chiazza for piazza, place, plaza.] A fashionable drive in modern Naples, extending about a mile along the coast between the open Villa Nazionale (a public park) and hotels and other handsome buildings on the other side. It begins at the Largo Vittoria. Its full name is the "Riviera di Chiaja."

Chiana (kê-ä'nä). A river in Tuscany, Italy. It is conducted by engineering works partly into the Arno, partly into the Tiber.

Chiana, Val di. The level and fruitful valley of the Chiana, near Chiusi.

Chianti (kê-än'tè). A mountain group near Siena, Italy. It gives name to celebrated wines.

Chiapa, Bishop of. The title of Bartolomé de las Casas, 1544-47. It is often used in speaking of him.

Chiapanecs (chê-ä-pä-neks'), or Chapanecs (chä-pä-neks'), or Chapas (chä'pääs). [Probably from chapa, their name for the red macaw, which was the totem or emblem of the tribe.] A race of Indians formerly powerful in that part of southern Mexico which now forms the state of Chiapas. They had considerable and well-built towns, practised agriculture, had made some advances in mechanic arts, and understood picture-writing. The Chiapanecs were never conquered by the Aztecs, but were easily reduced by the Spaniards. Remains of the tribe exist in central Chiapas, and still speak their own language. The Mangues of Nicaragua and the Guetares of Costa Rica seem to be ancient offshoots of this race.

Chiapas (chê-ä'pääs). The southeastermost state of Mexico, lying between Tabasco to the north, Guatemala to the east, the Gulf of Te-huantepeque on the south, and Vera Cruz and Oaxaca on the west. The limits with Guatemala are disputed. Chiapas contains antiquities (at Palenque, etc.). Capital, San Cristóbal. Area (claimed, 1894), 29,725 square miles. Population (1893), 248,608.

Chibchacum. See Bochica.

Chibchas (chēb'chās), or Muyscas (mū-ēs'kās). A tribe of South American Indians which, previous to the conquest, occupied the highlands east of the Magdalena, from the head waters of that river to the Sierra Nevada de Merida. They were powerful and had attained some degree of civilization, living in large towns and obeying fixed though unwritten laws. They were skillful weavers, potters, and goldsmiths, and practised agriculture, planting maize, quinoa, potatoes, and cotton. Their chiefs were hereditary in the female line, had absolute power, and were treated with great ceremony. The Chibchas believed in a Supreme Being, but worshipped the sun, stars, and other natural objects. In 1537, while they were engaged in a civil war, the Spaniards under Quesada reached their country. They were quickly conquered, and those who survived enslavement and persecution adopted the Spanish language and customs. Their descendants, mixed with European blood, form a large part of the present population of Colombia. The word Chibcha, applied to this tribe, is properly the name of their language. They called themselves Muysca, i. e. 'mea.'

Chibokwe, or Ba-Chibokwe (lä-chē-bō'kwe). See Kioko.

Chicaca. See Chicaca.

Chicacole. See Chicacole.

Chicago (shi-kā'gō). A city of Cook County, Illinois, situated on Lake Michigan in lat. 41° 50' N., long. 87° 37' W. It is the largest city in the State, and the second city in the United States. Its chief quarters are the North, South, and West Sides. It has a vast commerce by many railroads and by the lake, and exports wheat, meat, manufactured goods, etc. It has manufactures of lumber, iron, steel, furniture, clothing, tobacco, liquors, agricultural implements, leather, etc. Among its largest industries are beef-packing and pork-packing. It is the seat of Chicago University, and of several theological seminaries and other institutions, and has important libraries and art collections. The site was visited by Marquette in 1673. Fort Dearborn was built in 1804, evacuated in 1812, and rebuilt in 1816. Chicago was incorporated as a city in 1837. Two thousand one hundred acres were burned, with a loss of over $190,000,000 (2), in the great fire of Oct. 8-10, 1871. Owing to its position it has been the place of meeting of many national political conventions. It was the scene of an anarchist riot (Old Haymarket) May 4, 1886. The most important recent event in its history was the World's Columbian Exposition in 1893, lasting from May 1 to Oct. 30. Population (1890), 1,099,850.

Chicago, University of. An institution of learning in Chicago, situated between 56th and 59th streets. It has an endowment of $7,000,000 (contributed by Mr. J. D. Rockefeller and others). Its president is William R. Harper, and it was opened in 1892 with 600 students.

Chicaneau (shē-kā-nō'). One of the principal characters in the comedy "Les Plaideurs," by Racine. He is a tradesman with a mania for going to law, and is the type of the captious, litigious plaintiff, as his name implies.

Chicasa (chik'a-sā), or Chickesaw (chik'e-sā). [Pl., also Chickesaws.] A large tribe or subdivision of North American Indians, chiefly of Mississippi. In the 18th century their villages were about Pontotoc County, and their main landing-place on the Mississippi River was at the present site of Memphis, Tennessee, from which there was a trail 160 miles long to their villages. They now number about 3,500, and are at the Union agency, Indian Territory. Also Chicaca, Chicaho, Chicksaw, Chickasaw. See Muskogean.

Chichele (chich'e-le), or Chicheley (chich'e-li), Henry. Born at Higham Ferrers, Northampton, England, about 1362; died at Canterbury, England, April 12, 1443. An English prelate, appointed archbishop of Canterbury Feb. 19, 1414. He was a graduate of Oxford, and founded All Souls' College, Oxford, 1437.

Chichen-Itza (chē-chān'ēt'zā), or Chichen. A ruined city of northern Yucatan, 18 miles southwest of Valladolid. Some of the remains indicate very large buildings with elaborate sculptures, wall-paintings, and hieroglyphics. There is a pyramid 550 feet square and still 70 feet high. The Chichen-Itza ruins are connected with ancient Maya traditions. They have been known since the conquest, and have been studied in modern times by Charney, Le Plongeon, and other archaeologists. Le Plongeon discovered there the remarkable statue which he called Chac-mool (which see).

Chichester (chich'es-tēr). [L. Cisiss Castrum, AS. Cissanceaster: the Roman Regium, destroyed in the 5th century by Ella, and restored by his son, Cissa, king of Sussex, from whom it was named.] A city in Sussex, England, 14 miles northeast of Portsmouth. It contains a noted cathedral, for the most part a Norman building of the 12th and 13th centuries, showing many details, as the paired lancets surmounted by quatrefoils of the central tower, which might have been transported bodily from Normandy. The tall, slender spire awkwardly placed on this tower is later. The interior has double aisles and narrow nave, and very beautiful carved choir-stalls. There are Perpendicular cloisters, and a late, detached bell-tower. The dimensions are 410 by 91 feet; width of transepts, 131; height of nave, 62. The town was refounded by Cissa in the 6th century. Population (1891), 7,842.

Chichester, Arthur. Born at Rawleigh, near Barnstable, England, May, 1563; died Feb. 19, 1625. An English soldier and statesman, second son of Sir John Chichester of Rawleigh, made Lord Chichester of Belfast, in the Irish peerage, Feb. 23, 1613. He was appointed governor of Carrickfergus and sergeant-major general of the English army in Ireland, and was lord deputy of Ireland from Feb. 3, 1605, to Nov. 29, 1614. After his recall he was appointed lord treasurer of Ireland.

Chichevache (ME. chēch-e-vāch'; mod. F. shēsh-vāsh'). [ME., as if from an OF. chichvache*, lean cow (from chiche, poor, lean, and vache (L. vacca), a cow); but this is a perversion of the OF. form chichface, chūche-face (also chūcheface, simulating vache, a cow), lit. 'ugly face.')] A fabled beast which devoured patient and submissive wives. The fable, of Old French origin, became a favorite with Middle English writers, who made the beast a lean cow (see etymology), and ascribed her leanness to the scarcity of her peculiar diet. They added another beast named Bycorne (Bycorne) (literally, 'two-horned'), who lived only on patient and submissive husbands, and was in consequence always fat. Lydgate wrote a poem called "Bycorne and Chichevache."

Chichilticale (chē-chēl-tē-kā'le). [A corruption of the Nahuatl chichiltic-calli, red house.] A name given by the Mexican Indians who followed Fray Marcos of Nizza to New Mexico in 1539 and Coronado in 1540, to a ruined structure built of red earth or clay, near the banks of the Gila. It has been supposed that it was the Casa Grande, but in all probability it was some ancient ruin near the site of New Fort Grant, in Arizona, along the slopes of Mount Graham.

Chichimecs (chē-chē-māks'), or Chichimecas, or Chichimecos. [Nahuatl of Mexico: derivation doubtful, but possibly from chichiltic, red, and mccayoll, generation.] An ancient term used to designate indiscriminately wild and dangerous tribes of Indians. It was also an honorific title, any warrior who distinguished himself by particular ferocity being termed a chichimeatl. The name has remained in American Spanish. Misunderstood folk-lore has given rise to the belief in the immigration into Mexico of a numerous tribe of barbarians under this name at some very ancient time.

Chick (chik), Mrs. Louisa. Mr. Dombey's sister in Charles Dickens's "Dombey and Son," a weak and self-satisfied woman who urged the fading Mrs. Dombey to "make an effort."

Chickahominy (chik-a-hom'i-ni). A river in Virginia which joins the James about 40 miles southeast of Richmond. Length, about 75 miles. Near it were fought the battles of Fair Oaks, Mechanicsville, Gaines's Mill, Savage's station, and Frayer's Farm, 1862; and Cold Harbor, 1864. See Fair Oaks, Seven Days Battles, Cold Harbor.

Chickahominy, Battles of the. See Seven Days Battles, Fair Oaks.

Chilán Balám (chē-lān' bā-lām'), or Chilám Balám. A priest of the Maya Indians of Yucatan, who is supposed to have died about 1430. He is reputed author of several Maya writings which have come down to us and are known as the books of Chilán Balám, and it is said that he foretold the coming of the Spaniards. Many of the narrative songs still found among the Indians are also attributed to him.

Chilcat (chil'kāt) or Chilcats (-kātz). A tribe of North American Indians. Their habitat is on Chilcat River and Bay and Chilcot River, in Alaska, extending into British Columbia. They number 988. See Kutchikan.

Child (child), Francis James. Born at Boston, 1825. An American scholar. He was educated at Harvard College, and was professor of rhetoric and oratory there from 1851 till 1876, when he became professor of English literature. His most important work is an edition of "English and Scottish Ballads" which he first brought out in 1857-59 in 8 volumes.

Child, Mrs. (Lydia Maria Francis). Born at Medford, Mass., Feb. 11, 1802; died at Wayland, Mass., Oct. 20, 1880. An American writer, noted as a supporter of the abolition movement. She was editor of the "National Anti-Slavery Standard" 1840-43, and assistant editor till 1844. Her works include "The Rebels" (1822), "The American Frugal Housewife" (1829, a 3rd ed. in 1856), "Flowers for Children" (1844-46), "Looking toward Sunset" (1864), "Miria, a Romance of the Republic" (1867), etc., besides her "Appeal for that Class of Americans called Africans" (1833), which created much comment.

Childebert (chil'de-bèrt; F. pron. shèl-de-jàr') I. Born about 495; died 558. Son of Clovis, king of the Franks, whom he succeeded (as king of Paris) in 511. He inherited (524) part of the dominions of his brother Chlodomer of Orleans, and in conjunction with his brother Clothaire I. of Soissons and his nephew Theudebert I. of Austrasia conquered part of Burgundy in 534 and part of Provence in 536.

Childebert II. Born 570; died 596. Son of Sigebert I. of Austrasia by the West-Gothic princess Brunehaut. Having remained under the regency of his mother, 575-585, he attempted, on reaching his majority, to deprive the young son of Fredegunde of Neustria, Clothaire II., of his kingdom, but was himself signally defeated by Fredegunde.

Childe Harold's Pilgrimage (chil'd bar'oldz pil'gri-màj). A poem by Lord Byron, of which the first and second cantos were published in 1811, the third in 1816, and the fourth in 1817.

Childeric (chil'de-rik; F. pron. shèl-de-rèk') I. Died 481. Father of Clovis, and Frankish king from about 458. He sustained friendly relations with the Romans, who assisted him against the West Goths, the Alamanni, and the Saxons. His tomb was discovered at Tournai in 1653, and contained, among other things, his seal-ring and a number of gold bees, which latter had presumably served to ornament his mantle, and which suggested to Napoleon I. the adoption of the bee as an imperial emblem.

Children (chil'dren), John George. Born at Tunbridge, England, May 18, 1777; died at Halstead Place, Kent, Jan. 1, 1852. An English physicist and naturalist, best known for his experiments in electricity. He was a secretary of the Royal Society 1826-27 and 1830-37, and was librarian in the department of antiquities in the British Museum 1816-40.

Children in the Wood, or Babes in the Wood. An old English ballad, of unknown authorship, preserved in Ritson's, Percy's, and other collections. The ballad was entered in the "Stationers' Register" in 1595. In 1601 a play was published "of a young child murdered in a wood by two ruffins with the consent of his nkle." The plot of this play was undoubtedly derived from the Italian, and the ballad may have been produced from the same source. Child.

Children of the Mist. A band of Highland outlaws in Scott's "Legend of Montrose." There is a famous picture with this title by Landseer.

Childs (chil'dz), George William. Born at Baltimore, Md., May 12, 1829; died at Philadelphia, Feb. 3, 1894. An American publisher and philanthropist. Publisher of the "Public Ledger" in Philadelphia 1864-94.

Chile (chil'e; Sp. pron. ché'li), or Chili (chil'i). [Probably from the Quechua chiri, cold.] A republic of South America, capital Santiago, lying between Peru on the north, Bolivia and the Argentine Republic on the east, and the Pacific Ocean on the south and west. It has 24 provinces: Aconagua, Aruco, Atacama, Biobio, Chiloé, Colchagua, Concepcion, Coquimbo, Curico, Linares, Llanquihue, Malleco, Maule, Nuble, O'Higgins, Santiago, Talca, Taona, Valdivia, Valparaiso, Antofagasta, Magalanes, Tarapacá, and Cautin. It lies between the crest of the Andes on the east and the Pacific on the west; in the northern part portions east of the western Andes are included. The mountains send ramifications over the surface, connecting with a lower coast-chain, and including extensive plains and valleys. It exports niter, copper, silver, wool, wheat, etc. The government is a republic under a president and Congress (Senate and Chamber of Deputies). The prevailing religion is Roman Catholic. The language is Spanish, and the inhabitants are chiefly of Spanish descent. The name Chile was applied by the natives only to the valley of Aconagua, including Quilota; it was extended by the Spaniards to all their conquests south of the Atacama desert. During the 17th century the government of Chile included considerable tracts east of the Andes. After the revolution conquests were extended south into Patagonia, and by treaty with Argentina the region was divided between the two countries, the boundary being the Andes. Chile acquired Atacama and a portion of southern Peru by the war of 1879-83, waged against Peru and Bolivia. It was invaded by Almagro in 1535; and was first settled by Valdivia in 1541. Long wars with the Araucanians followed. Independence was finally declared Feb. 12, 1818. Area, about 250,000 square miles, though more is claimed. Estimated population (1890) 3,413,776.

Chilianwalla. See Chilianwalla.

Chilka (chil'kai), Lake. A lagoon of India, in Orissa, near the Bay of Bengal.

Chillán (chil-yán'). The capital of the province of Nuble, Chile, about lat. 36° 35' S., long. 72° 10' W. There are mineral springs in the vicinity. Population (1892), about 25,000.

Chilianwalla, or Chilianwalla (chil'i-an-wal'a). A town in the Panjab, British India, near the river Jhelum, in lat. 32° 45' N., long. 73° 35' E. Here, Jan., 1849, a battle occurred between the British army (about 15,000), under Lord Gough, and the Sikhs (about 23,000). It was technically a British victory. Loss of the British force, 2,400.

Chillicothe (chil-i-koth'e). A city and the county-seat of Ross County, southern Ohio, situated on the Scioto 45 miles south of Columbus. It was the State capital until 1810. Population (1890), 11,288.

Chillingham (chil'ing-am). A village in the northern part of Northumberland, England, 11 miles northwest of Alnwick.

Chillingworth (chil'ing-wèrth), Roger. The injured and malicious husband of Hester Prynne in Hawthorne's romance "The Scarlet Letter."

Chillingworth, William. Born at Oxford, England, Oct., 1602; died at Chichester, England, Jan. 30, 1644. A noted English divine and controversialist. He was graduated at Oxford (B. A. 1620), became a fellow of Trinity College 1623, was converted to Romanism about 1630, returned to Protestantism 1634, was made a chancellor of Salisbury 1638, and became a member of the Royalist army. He was captured by Waller at Arundel Castle, Dec. 9, 1643. The most famous of his works is "The Religion of Protestants, a Safe Way to Salvation, etc." (1637).

Chillip (chil'ip), Mr. A mild and gentle little doctor who attended Mrs. Copperfield, in Charles Dickens's "David Copperfield."

Chillon (shè-yón'). A castle in Vaud, Switzerland, at the eastern end of Lake Geneva. It covers an isolated rock on the edge of the lake, and is a very picturesque combination of semicircular and square towers and machicolated curtains grouped about a higher central tower. It is famous in literature and song (Byron), especially as the prison of Bonivard (1530-36), a defender of Swiss liberties against the Duke of Savoy in the 16th century. The castle is of very early foundation, though, as it now stands, essentially of the 13th century. Some of the rooms preserve curious wooden ceilings, and the massive ribbed vaulting of the two-aisled dungeon-crypt is impressive. It was taken by the Beruese in 1536, and was used for a state prison in the 18th century, and later as an arsenal.

Chilmari (chil-mà'rè), Hindustani Chalamari (chal-à-mà'rè). A town in the district of Rungpur, Bengal, British India, in lat. 25° 25' N., long. 89° 40' E., on the Brahmaputra. It is the seat of a religious and commercial festival.

Chiloé (chè-lò-à'). 1. A southern province of Chile, including the island of Chiloé and the islands to lat. 47° S. Area, 3,995 square miles. Population (1891), 79,514.—2. An island in the province of Chiloé, west of the mainland, discovered by the Spaniards in 1558. Length, 120 miles. Greatest width, 40 miles. The chief town of island and province is Añend, or San Carlos.

Chilon (ki'lou), or Chilo (ki'lò). [Gr. Χείλον, Χίλον.] Lived in the first part of the 6th century B. C. A Spartan, one of the "Seven Sages" of Greece. He was eponymos at Sparta 556 B. C., and is said to have died of joy caused by the victory of his son in boxing at the Olympic games.

Chilperic (chil'pe-rik) I. Died 584. King of Neustria 561-584. He murdered his second wife, the West-Gothic princess Galeswintha, sister of Brunehaut of Austrasia, in order to marry his mistress Fredegunde, thereby bringing on a war with the husband of Brunehaut, his brother Sigebert I. of Austrasia.

Chiltern Hills (chil'tèrn hìtz). A range of low chalk hills in Oxfordshire, Bucks, Hertfordshire, and Bedfordshire, England.

Chiltern Hundreds (chil'tèrn hun'dredz). The three hundreds of Stoke, Desborough, and Bodenham, in Buckinghamshire. The stewardship of the Chiltern Hundreds (originally an office charged with the suppression of the robbers who infested the Chiltern Hills) is a nominal office, conferred upon a member of Parliament who wishes to resign his seat, such resignation being impossible unless the member is disqualified by the acceptance of a place of honor and profit under the crown, or by some other cause. The place is in the gift of the chancellor of the exchequer.

Chilula (chil'ò-là). A division of North American Indians. They formerly lived in Humboldt County, California, but were removed to the Hupa reservation and absorbed. See Weitspeken.

Chimæra (ki-mè'rài). [Gr. Χίμαιρα.] In Greek mythology, a fire-breathing monster of divine origin (according to Hesiod, a daughter of Typhæon and Echidna), having the fore part that of a lion, the middle that of a goat, and the hind part that of a dragon; also represented as having three heads—a lion's, a goat's, and a dragon's. It was often shown in art as having a goat's head in the middle of the back and a dragon's head at the end of the tail. It dwelt in Lycia, and was slain by Bellerophon.

Chimakuan (chim-à-kò'an). A linguistic stock of North American Indians, embracing the Chimakum (from which it is named) and Quileute tribes. It formerly occupied the western coast of Puget Sound, from Port Townsend to Port Ludlow, and a small area on the Pacific coast of Washington, thirty miles below Cape Flattery, about Quileute River. They are the remnant of a once powerful body which occupied the entire coast region from Port Townsend to the Quileute country on the Pacific, the Salishan tribes separating the two Chimakuan branches being intruders. They are now confined to reservations in Washington, and number about 300.

Chimakum (chim'ä-kum), more correctly Tsemakum (tsem'ä-kum). A tribe of North American Indians which formerly occupied the coast of Puget Sound, Washington, from Port Townsend to Port Ludlow. Their wars with their Salishan neighbors early reduced their number, and in 1853 they amounted to only 90 souls, living in about 15 lodges; subsequently placed on the Skokomish reservation, Washington. They are now practically extinct. See Chimakuan.

Chimalakwe (chi-mäl'ä-kwä). A tribe of North American Indians formerly living on New River, a tributary of the Trinity, California. It was once a comparatively populous tribe, but chiefly through constant aggression by the Hupa, who exacted an annual tribute, was overpowered and as a tribe became extinct. See Chimarikan.

Chimalpain Quautlehuanitzin (chè-mäl-pin'kwä-ò-tle-wä-nè-tsen'), Juan Bautista de San Anton Muñon. Lived in the latter part of the 16th century. A Mexican Indian, a descendant of the chiefs of Ameameca. He was educated by the Franciscans, and taught in their college of Santiago Tlatelolco. He wrote several works on ancient Aztec history, and is said to have written one on the conquest; these are known only in manuscript. The "Historia de las Conquistas de Hernando Cortés," attributed to him, is merely a translation of Gomara.

Chimalpopoca (chè-mäl-pò-pò'kä). The third ruler of ancient Mexico, from 1417 to 1428, or according to other chronologies from 1410 to 1422. He was the brother of his predecessor, Huiztlihuilitl. He interfered in a quarrel of rival Tepanec chiefs, was seized by one of them, Maxtla, and committed suicide while in confinement.

Chimanos. See Jumanas.

Chimarikan (chim-ä-rò'kan). A linguistic stock of North American Indians, comprising the Chimariko and Chimalakwe tribes, formerly living on Trinity and New rivers, Trinity County, California. They were once comparatively numerous, but constant oppression by the Hupa Indians, as well as by the early white settlers, has resulted in their extinction as tribes.

Chimariko (chim-ä-rò'kò). A tribe of North American Indians which formerly inhabited the banks of Trinity River, California, from Burnt Ranch northward to the junction of the north and south forks. It was reduced to about six individuals in 1876, and is now probably extinct. See Chimarikan.

Chimay (shè-mä'). A town in the province of Hainaut, Belgium, 32 miles southeast of Mons. Place of Froissart's death. Population (1890), 3,308.

Chimay, Princesse de (Jeanne Marie Ignace Thérèse de Cabarrus). Born at Saragossa, Spain, July 31, 1773; died at Brussels, Belgium, Jan. 15, 1835. The daughter of the Comte de Cabarrus, married at an early age to the Marquis de Fontenay, who obtained a divorce from her in 1793. In the same year she made the acquaintance at Bordeaux of Talien, whom she married, and on whose career in the Convention she exercised a profound influence. Having procured a divorce from Talien in 1802, she married in 1805 the Comte de Caraman, who subsequently became prince of Chimay.

Chimay, Principality of. A small principality in Hainaut. It passed in 1804 to the present possessors (French family De Riquet de Caraman).

Chimborazo (chim-bò-rä'zò; Sp. pron. chèm-bò-rä'thò). A province of western Ecuador. Population, 122,300.

Chimborazo. One of the highest mountains of the Andes, situated in Ecuador in lat. 1° 30' S., long. 79° W. It was nearly ascended by Humboldt in 1802, and was ascended by Whymper in 1880. Height (Whymper), 20,498 feet; height above the plain of Quito, about 12,000 feet.

Chimène (shè-män'). The faithful daughter of Don Gomès in Corneille's tragedy "The Cid."

Chimes, The. Dickens's Christmas story for 1844.

Chimihuahua. See Chemchuevi.

Chimmesyan (chim'mā-sō-an). [From the name of the Ts'emsian tribe, signifying 'on the Ksián (Skeena) river.'] A linguistic stock of North American Indians inhabiting the region of the Nasse and Skeena rivers, British Columbia, and nearly all the Pacific islands near the coast between lat. 52° 15' and 55° N. It embraces the Nasja and Ts'emian or Tsimshian divisions, which comprise a number of tribes. The estimated number is 5,000. In 1887 about 1,000 removed to Annette Island, 60 miles north of the southern boundary of Alaska, where they are making rapid progress in civilization.

Chimsian. See Tsimshian.

Chimu (chē'mō), also as pl. Chimus. [From the title of their sovereign.] An ancient civilized nation of the Peruvian coast-valleys, between lat. 3° and 11° S. They were entirely distinct from the Incas in language, architecture, and customs. According to tradition they came from beyond sea, and drove out the savages who had occupied this region (about the 12th century). They built great cities, remarkable for the size of some of the buildings, the walls ornamented with elaborate arabesques and paintings. Their aqueducts and irrigation works were very extensive. The Chimu people excelled in gold and silver work and in the manufacture of cloth and pottery. The Incas called them Yuncas. Descendants of the race still live in the same region, but their language, called Moehica, is extinct. A grammar and list of words are extant. The ruins of the Chimu cities are the most striking archeological remains in Peru. The black pottery commonly seen in museums, and loosely called "Peruvian," was of their manufacture.

Chimu. The name given by archeologists to the ruins of the capital and chief city of the Chimu people, on the sea-shore about 4 miles north of Truxillo, Peru. The remains cover a space 15 miles long and 5 or 6 broad, and embrace the walls of vast palaces and temples, some of them ornamented with arabesque work and paintings. An aqueduct many miles long supplied the city with water, which was received in large reservoirs. There are several sepulchral mounds from which many objects of interest have been obtained.

China (chī'nā). [F. Chine, Sp. China, It. Cina, Ml. China, Sina, Ar. Sin; in Gr., as the name of the people, Sina, Oiva (Ptolemy), a name of unidentified Eastern origin. Another name known to the ancients was L. Serica, Gr. Σερικὴ (Ptolemy), from L. Seres, Gr. Σέρεις, the people. In later times Cathay (Kitai). Chinese designations, Chung Kwoh ('Middle Kingdom'), Chung Hwa Kwoh ('Middle Flowery Kingdom'), etc.] The most important division of the Chinese empire, extending from about lat. 18° N. to Mongolia and Manchuria on the north. It comprises 18 provinces: Chihhi, Shantung, Shansi, Shensi, Kansu, Henan, Anhwei, Kiangsu, Chekiang, Fukkien, Kiangsi, Hupeh, Hunan, Szechuen, Kweichow, Yunnan, Kwangsi, Kwangtung. The capital is Peking. The surface, except in part in the northeast, is largely mountainous, with many of the summits attaining an elevation of 10,000-11,000 feet. The chief rivers are the Peiho, Hwangho, Yangtze, Kiang, Min, and Pearl. The leading products are rice, tea, silk, cotton, sugar, pulse, cereals, tobacco, coal, iron, copper, etc. The chief exports are tea, silk, straw goods, porcelain, etc. The government is administered by viceroys of provinces, who report to the central autocratic power at Peking. The principal religions are Shintism, Buddhism, and Taoism; the philosophical system known as Confucianism is sometimes erroneously classed with them. The Chinese assign a fabulously early origin to their nation. Among the semi-mythical kings is Fuh. From about the era of Confucius (in the 6th century B. C.) the dates become more trustworthy. In the 3d century B. C. was the Tsin dynasty which built the Great Wall. To it succeeded the Han dynasty when the empire was consolidated. Buddhism was introduced in the 1st century A. D. Soon after the empire became disorganized, but was again consolidated about 600. There followed a brilliant period, especially in literature, interrupted by Tatar attacks. Jenghiz Khan occupied the northern portion of the empire in 1215, and the Mongol dynasty was fully established by Kublai Khan in 1260. The Ming dynasty followed in 1368. In the 16th century Portugal obtained a foothold at Macao. The present Manchu dynasty of Tsing acceded in 1644. The empire attained a westward extension in the 18th century. The Opium War with Great Britain began in 1840, and ended in 1842 with the cession of Hong-Kong and the opening of certain treaty ports: ports were opened to France and the United States in 1844. The Taiping rebellion (which see) broke out in 1850, and was suppressed in 1864. Meanwhile Anglo-French wars in 1856-58 and 1859-60 resulted in the victory of the allies. China ceded the Amur country to Russia in 1858. In 1881 she recovered Kuldja from Russia. War with France 1843-85 terminated in favor of the French. In 1894 disturbances in Korea, whither Chinese and Japanese troops were despatched, led to the seizure of the Korean government by Japan and a war (declared July 31) between that country and China in which the latter was completely defeated on land and sea. A treaty of peace, which included the payment of a heavy indemnity by China, the cession of Formosa, the independence of Korea, and other concessions, was signed April 16, 1895. Area of China proper, estimated, 1,511,000 square miles; with the territory of Sin-Tsang, sometimes recognized as a 19th province, about 2,100,000 square miles; population, 348,000,000. Area of the whole empire, 4,200,000 square miles; population, about 360,000,000.

Chinalaph (shē-nā-lāf'). The ancient name of the Sheliff.

Chinandega (chē-nān-dā'gā). A town in Nicaragua, Central America, situated about 20 miles northwest of Leon. Population (1889), 8,000.

Chinantecs (chō-nān-tek's'), or Chinantlas (chō-nānt'lās). An ancient tribe of Mexican Indians who at the time of the conquest occupied the Sierra Madre Mountains, about 200 miles southeast of Mexico City. They had little civilization, but were bold warriors, using long lances tipped with obsidian or copper. They had been conquered by the Aztecs, and, anxious to avenge their wrongs, they sent two thousand warriors to aid Cortés in the siege of Mexico. The Chinantecs are now amalgamated with other tribes. Their language, which was very harsh and guttural, has been preserved only in the "Doctrina" of the missionary Barreda, published in 1730.

Chinantla (chō-nānt'lā). The ancient name for the mountainous region in the northern part of the present state of Oajaca, Mexico, occupied by the Chinantec Indians.

China Sea (chī'nā sē). That part of the Pacific Ocean which is included between China, Indo-China, Borneo, the Philippines, and Formosa. Its chief indentations are the gulfs of Siam and Tongking. It is noted for its typhoons, and notorious for piracy. Sometimes the name is used to include also the Yellow Sea.

Chincha Islands (chīn'chā or, as Sp., chēn'chā i'landz). Three small islands in the department of Lima, Peru, in lat. 13° 40' S., long. 76° 20' W., 12 miles from Pisco, long noted for their guano deposits, now exhausted.

Chinchas (chēn'chāz). An ancient people of Peru who occupied the coast valleys south of the Chimu people, in the vicinity of the present site of Lima. They were of Quichua origin, and had attained a considerable degree of civilization before they were conquered by the Inca Tupac Ynpanqui, about 1450. Their renowned temples of Rimac and Pachacamac (which see) were preserved by the conquerors and held in great veneration. The cemeteries of the Chinchas were of vast extent, the dead being buried in a sitting position in baskets or sacks. Owing to the dryness of the climate these bodies were naturally desiccated; many have been exhumed, and are the so-called "Peruvian mummies" of the museums.

Chinchaycocha (chēn-chī-kō'chā), or Laguna de Junin or Reyes. A lake in the department of Junin, Peru, in lat. 10° 50' S., long. 75° 40' W.

Chinchay-suyu (chēn-chī-sō'yō), or Chinchay-suyu (chēn-chī-sō'yō). A great province of the Inca empire of Peru, comprising the region north of Cuzco, including eventually Quito and the region of the Upper Marañon.

Chincheró (chēn-chā'rō). A village about 15 miles north of Cuzco, Peru. It was an ancient country-seat of the Incas, and Vira-Cocha built a palace there. The walls of this, with the surrounding buildings, remain in an almost perfect state.

Chincheu, or Chinchu, or Chincheu (chīn-chē'). 1. A name given to the city of Changchow, in Fukien, China, 50 miles northeast of Amoy; formerly an important port, and probably identical with the medieval Zaitūn or Zayton.—2. A name given by the Spanish and Portuguese (and formerly by the English) to Changchow (which see), southwest of Amoy.

Chinchilla (chēn-chē'lā). A town in the province of Albacete, Spain, lat. 38° 54' N., long. 1° 43' W.

Chinchon, Count of. Viceroy of Peru. See Cabrera Bobadilla Cerda y Mendoza.

Chinchon (chēn-chōn'), Ana, Countess of. Born at Astorga, Castile, in 1576; died at Cartagena, Dec., 1639. A Spanish lady, daughter of the eighth Marquis of Astorga. She married Don Luis de Velasco, marquis of Salinas, twice viceroy of Mexico and once of Peru; and, after his death, Don Luis Geronyano de Cabrera, count of Chinchon, who was appointed viceroy of Peru in 1629. During her second residence in Lima she was attacked with a tertian ague, and was cured by some powdered Peruvian bark which had been sent to her physician by the corregidor of Loja, Don Juan Lopez de Canizares. When the countess embarked for Spain she carried a quantity of the bark with her. She died on the voyage, at Cartagena, Dec., 1639, but it was through her cure that the cinchona bark was first introduced into Europe. In honor of her Linnaeus named the genus of quinine-bearing plants Cinchona, or, as it should have been written, Chinchona.

Chindwara (chīnd-wā'rā). 1. A district in the Nerbudda division of the Central Provinces, British India, situated about lat. 22° N., long. 79° E. Area, 3,915 square miles. Population (1881), 372,899.—2. The chief town of the district of Chindwara.

Chinese (chī-nēs' or -nēz'). [From China and -ese; = F. chinois = Sp. chino = Pg. chinez = G. chinesisch, etc.] 1. sing. and pl. (plural also formerly Chineses). A native or natives of China; specifically, a member or members of the principal indigenous race of China proper, as distinguished from other Mongoloids, such as the Manehus, the present ruling race in the Chinese empire.—2. The language of China.

It is a monosyllabic tongue, and on this ground is generally classed with the other languages of the same character in southeastern Asia, in Further India and the Himalayas, as constituting the monosyllabic family. It exists in many dialects, of which the so-called Mandarin is the leading and official one. It is composed of only about 500 words, as we should distinguish them in writing, all of them ending in a vowel-sound or in a nasal, although some of the dialects still retain final mutes, lost in Mandarin. This small body of words, however, is raised to 1,500 by differences of the tone of utterance, as rising, falling, even, abrupt, and so on. The language is without inflection, and even without distinction of parts of speech; but words are classed as "full" or "empty," according as they are used with their full meaning or as auxiliaries in forming phrases: like our will and have in "I will it," "they have it," on the one hand, and in "they will have seen it," on the other. Chinese records go back to about 2000 B. C., and the literature is immense and varied. The mode of writing is by signs that represent each a single word in one of its senses or in a certain set of senses. The signs are of ideographic or hieroglyphic origin; but the greater part of them at present are compound, and many contain a phonetic element along with an ideographic. They number in the dictionaries about 40,000; but only the smaller part of these are in current and familiar use. They are written in perpendicular columns, and the columns follow one another from right to left. The language and mode of writing have been carried to the neighboring nations that have received their culture from China, especially Japan, Corea, and Annam, and have been more or less borrowed or adopted by such nations.

Chinese Empire. An empire of Asia, bounded by Asiatic Russia on the north, the Pacific on the east, Tongking and India on the south, and the Pamirs and Asiatic Russia on the west. It includes China proper, or the eighteen provinces, and its dependencies, Manchuria, Mongolia, Tibet, Eastern Turkestan, and Dzungaria. The independence of Korea is now acknowledged. See China.

Chinese Gordon. See Gordon.

Chinese Tatar. A name given vaguely to a vast region in the northern and northwestern parts of the Chinese empire, including Mongolia, Dzungaria, Eastern Turkestan: sometimes restricted to Eastern Turkestan.

Chinese Turkestan. A dependency of China, sometimes called Little Bokhara, or East Turkestan (which see).

Ching-hai (ching-hī'), or Chin-hae (chīn-hī'). A seaport in the province of Chekiang, China, 12 miles northeast of Ningpo. It was taken by the English in 1841.

Chingiz Khan. See Jenghiz Khan.

Chingleput (ching-gle-put'), or Chengalpatt. 1. A district of India, in Madras.—2. The chief town of the district, situated 35 miles southwest of Madras. It was taken by the French in 1751, by Clive in 1752, and was besieged by Hyder Ali 1780-81.

Chingú River. See Ningú.

Chin-kiang (chīn-kē-ang'). A city in the province of Kiangsu, China, in lat. 32° 10' N., long. 119° 25' E., situated at the junction of the Grand Canal with the Yangtze. It is a treaty port. It was taken by the English July 21, 1842. Population, 135,000.

Chingtu (ching-tō'). The capital of the province of Szechuen, China, situated on the river Min-kiang.

Chin-India. See Indo-China.

Chinon (shē-nōn'). A town in the department of Indre-et-Loire, France, situated on the Vienne 26 miles southwest of Tours. It contains a ruined castle, a royal residence from the 12th century to the reign of Henry IV. The remains occupy a large rock-platform. The exterior walls are ruinous, except the high towers. The royal apartments are chiefly of the 12th century, and include armory, kitchen and other commons, the king's room, the great hall, where Charles VII. first saw Jeanne d'Arc, etc. The great keep is of the 13th century. Chinon has a considerable trade. Population (1891), 6,112.

Chinook (chī-nūk'), or Tchinuk, or Tsinuk. [Pl., also Chinooks.] The principal tribe of the Lower Chinook division of North American Indians. Its former habitat was from Gray's Bay, Washington, on the north shore of Columbia River to its mouth, and the strip of coast northward as far as and including Shoalwater Bay. There were 100 left in 1857. There still remain three or four families about six miles above the mouth of the Columbia. See Chinookan.

Chinookan (chī-nūk'an). [From Chinook and -an.] A linguistic stock of North American Indians, named after the Chinook, the leading tribe. Their former habitat was Oregon and Washington, on both sides of the Columbia River from the Dalles, about 200 miles from its mouth, to the Pacific Ocean, and along the coast in both directions, northward nearly to the northern extremity of Shoalwater Bay, Washington, and southward to about Tillamook Head, Oregon, 20 miles from the mouth of the Columbia River. The stock is divided into Upper and Lower Chinook. The principal tribes remaining are the Arctsmilch, Chinook, and Clatsop of the Lower Chinook; and the Cathlamet, Clackama, Wasco, and Watlala of the Upper Chinook. They number between 500 and 600, and are now chiefly on reservations in Oregon and Washington.

Chinsura (chīn-sō'rā). A town in Bengal, British India, situated on the Hugli 24 miles north of Calcutta: the seat of Hugli College. It was settled by the Dutch in 1656, and ceded to the English in 1824. It is now included in Hugli (which see).

Chintamani (chin-tā'ma-ni). In Sanskrit folklore, a "thought jewel": a jewel that possesses the magic power of securing that to which the possessor has directed his thoughts; the philosopher's stone. The word appears in the names of a number of manuals and commentaries. See Abhidhana-chintamani.

Chioggia (kē-ōd'jā), or Chiocza (kē-ōt'sā). A seaport in the province of Venice, Italy, situated on the island of Chioggia, in the Gulf of Venice, 15 miles south of Venice. It was captured by the Genoese in 1379. They were defeated in 1380 by the Venetians. Population, 20,000.

Chiquitos (chō-kē'tōs). [Sp., 'little.' The first whites who visited their country observed that the houses had very low doors, and erroneously supposed that these Indians were below the medium size (hence the name).] A numerous race of Indians in northeastern Bolivia, on the lowlands bordering the affluents of the Madeira and the Paraguay. They were gathered into mission villages in the 17th century, and were readily civilized. The Chiquitos spoke a peculiar language, and were a gentle race, practising agriculture. They were divided into a great number of subtribes, and had no general chief. Other tribes were joined to them in the mission villages, and adopted their language. The descendants of all these are the modern Chiquitos of the same region, numbering about 20,000. Most of them still speak their own language.

Chiricahua (chē-rē-kā'wā). [From two Apache words meaning 'great mountain.' A tribe of North American Indians near the Gila River. They are included by some writers among the Gileño, or Gila Apache. See Apaches.

Chiricahui (chē-rē-kā'wē). [Opata, properly Chihui-cahui, turkey-mountain: from chihui, turkey, and cahui, mountain.] A mountain-range of southeastern Arizona, south of the Southern Pacific Railroad. During the wars with the Apaches, and earlier, the Chiricahui were the refuge and stronghold of some of the wildest bands, and they gave their name to that band of the tribe which has become famous in the outbreaks since 1880. See Apaches.

Chiriguano (shē-rē-gwā'nōs), or Xiriguano, or Siriguano, or Chiribuanos (shē-rē-wā'nōs'). An Indian tribe of Bolivia, of the Tupi stock. They inhabited the lowlands and valleys south and east of the present site of Santa Cruz de la Sierra, and were partially conquered by the Incas of Peru about 1450. In 1572 they repulsed an invasion of the Spaniards under the viceroy Toledo. They were Christianized in the 18th century, and their descendants, to the number of 15,000 or more, inhabit the eastern highlands of Bolivia, in the provinces of Santa Cruz de la Sierra and Chuquisaca.

Chocos (chō-kōs'). A race of South American Indians in western Colombia. They were formerly scattered over the region from the isthmus of Panama southward probably to lat. 4° N., occupying the Pacific coast, the Atrato valley, and extending eastward in some places to the Cauca. It is probable that other and more warlike tribes were interspersed over the same region. They were divided into many small tribes, and their houses, instead of being gathered into villages, were often scattered singly through the forests. It is said that in the marshy Atrato valley they lived in trees. The descendants of the Chocos are either civilized or lead a miserable existence in the marshy forests.

Choctaw (chok'tá), or Chacatos, or Chactaws, or Cháhta. A large tribe or division of North American Indians, whose chief habitat in historic times was the middle and north of Mississippi. They were engaged on both sides in the French and English contests ending with 1763. They compressed the heads of male infants, whence the term "Flatheads" or "Têtes plates," used for them by early writers (not to be confounded with the Flatheads of the Salishian stock). Their present lands are in the southeast angle of Indian Territory. They number about 18,000; 9,996 of them are stated to be of pure blood. See Muskogean.

Choiseul (shwä-zël'), César, Duc de, Siènr du Plessis-Praslin. Born at Paris, Feb. 12, 1598; died at Paris, Dec. 23, 1675. A French general. He distinguished himself at the siege of La Rochelle 1628, served in Piedmont 1636-45, became marshal 1645, and gained the decisive victory of Trancheron over the Spaniards 1648. He commanded the royal forces in the war of the Fronde, and defeated Turenne at Rethel in 1653. He was created duke 1663. Also known as Marshal du Plessis.

Choiseul, or Choiseul-Amboise, Étienne François, Duc de. Born June 28, 1719; died at Paris, May 7, 1785. A French statesman. He entered the army in his youth, and in 1750 obtained the rank of lieutenant-general. Through the influence of Madame de Pompadour, mistress of Louis XV., he was appointed ambassador to Rome in 1756. Some months after this appointment he succeeded the Abbé Bernis as ambassador to Vienna. In Nov., 1758, he was appointed minister and created Duc de Choiseul (having hitherto been known as Comte de Stainville). On his accession to office he continued the alliance of France with Maria Theresa of Austria in the Seven Years' War. He sought to prosecute hostilities against England with vigor in Europe, to the neglect of the proper defense of the colonies: a policy which resulted in the loss of Canada and Cape Breton Island to England, and of Louisiana to Spain, at the peace of Paris in 1763. He negotiated the "Family Compact" between the Bourbon sovereigns of France, Spain, and the Two Sicilies in 1761, and in 1764 expelled the Jesuits from France. He was dismissed from office in 1770 through the influence of the king's new mistress, Madame du Barry.

Cholovone (chō-lō-vō'ne), or Tcholovone. The northern division of the Mariposan stock of North American Indians, formerly on lower San Joaquin River, California. See Mariposan.

Cholula (chō-lō'li). [Nahatl of central Mexico, probably.] A considerable Indian town of Mexico, uninhabited, at the time of the conquest, by an independent tribe of Nahuatl Indians. It lies about 60 miles southeast of the city of Mexico, about 15 miles from the foot of the great volcano on the east, and, in a direct line, 5 or 6 miles west of the city of Puebla. At this day the town of Cholula has 5,600 inhabitants, and the surrounding villages contain nearly five times that number. All those villages except two are modern. Previous to the 16th century Cholula had a population of not over 25,000 souls, and these were congregated in the central settlement. The tall mound, erroneously called the "Pyramid of Cholula," was probably a very ancient settlement erected on an artificial basis of sun-dried brick, with a second platform of lesser extent and greater elevation, and a central mound, the average elevation of which is now 170 feet. Of the fate of this prehistoric settlement there are not even definite traditions. There are, besides the great mound, several other sites of ruins in and around Cholula. The average elevation of the district above the sea-level is 7,000 feet.

[Nahuatl, 'strangers,' 'foreigners.'] The name given in southern Mexico, Guatemala, and Nicaragua to various Indian tribes which are not ethnically related, but were originally distinguished by the Nahuatls as different from themselves. Most of them are now known to ethnologists by other names.

Chopin (shō-pän'), Frédéric François. Born at Zelazowa-Wola, near Warsaw, Poland, March 1, 1809; died at Paris, Oct. 17, 1849. A celebrated Polish composer and pianist. His father was French, his mother a Pole. His earliest compositions were dances, mazurkas, polonaises, etc. At nineteen he was a finished virtuoso. His masters were a Bohemian, Zwiny, and Elsner, the director of the School of Music at Warsaw. He began at this age, with his two concertos and some smaller works, to give concerts in Vienna, Munich, and Paris. In the latter place he settled. In 1837 began his romantic connection with George Sand. In 1838 she took him to Majorca for his health, and nursed him there. She depicted him as "Prince Karol" in her novel "Lucrezia Floriani," as a "high-flown, consumptive, and exasperating nuisance." She left him after a friendship of eight years, and he lived in retirement, giving lessons and composing. His works include two concertos for piano and orchestra, and 27 études, 52 mazurkas, and many preludes, nocturnes, rondos, etc., and 16 Polish songs. Grove.

Chowanoc (chō-wan'ok). [Algonquian, 'Southlanders.'] A tribe of North American Indians formerly on the Chowan River in northeastern North Carolina. When first known, 1584-85, they were the leading tribe in that region. They joined in the Tuscarora outbreak in 1711, and afterward the survivors, about 240 in number, were settled on a small reservation on Bennett's creek. Also Chowanoc. See Triquian.

Chrestien (krä-të-än'). Florent. Born at Orleans, France, 1541; died at Vendôme, France, 1596. A French satirist, composer of Latin verse, and one of the authors of the "Satyre Ménippée" (which see).

Chrestien, or Chrétien, de Troyes (dè trwä). Born at Troyes (?), France, about 1140-50; died before 1191 (?). A noted French poet (trouvère) attached to the courts of Hainault and Champagne and of Philip of Alsace, count of Flanders. Little is known of his life before the fact that he was under the patronage of Mary, daughter of King Louis VII., who was married in 1164 to Henry I., count of Champagne. He was among the first trouvères to write after the model set by the troubadours in southern France, and in his Arthurian legends he set forth the theories of love as accepted by the noble ladies of his day. His extant Arthurian works are "Le Chevalier à la Charette," taken from a prose "Lancelot du Lac" (concluded by Geoffroy de Ligny, or Godefroy de Laguy), "Le Chevalier au Lyon" (attributed by the Abbé de la Rue to Wace), "Erce and Enide" (the same legend that Tennyson used in the "Idylls of the King"), "Le roman de Cligès or Cliget," "Percevale" (a work continued by successive versifiers to the extent of some fifty thousand lines, and probably representing in part a work of Robert de Borron). He also translated Ovid, and wrote a poem on "William the Conqueror."

Chriemhild. See Kriemhild.

Christ (krist). [L. Christus, Gr. Χριστός (ὁ Χριστός, the Anointed).] The Anointed One, the Greek translation of Messiah (Hebrew māšîaḥ): a title of Jesus of Nazareth.

Christabel (kris'ta-bel). I. The daughter of the king who secretly betrothed herself to Sir Cauline, in the old ballad of that name. The king discovered it, and Sir Cauline performed prodigies of valor to win her. He was at length killed while freeing her from the soldier, and she "burst her gentle heart in twain."

2. The heroine of Coleridge's poem of that name, published in 1816. The gentle and pious daughter of Sir Leoline, she is induced by a powerful spell to bring into her father's castle the enchantress who calls herself the Lady Geraldine.

Christian (kris'ti-an) I. Born 1426; died at Copenhagen, May 21, 1481. King of Denmark, the founder of the house of Oldenburg in Denmark. He was a son of Theodorik, count of Oldenburg, and Hedwig, heiress of Schleswig and Holstein. He was elected in 1448 to succeed Christopher III., who had died the same year without issue, and was crowned king of Norway in 1450. He took possession of the government of Sweden in 1457, but was expelled from the country by Sten Sture in 1470. He was elected duke of Schleswig and count of Holstein 1460, and founded the University of Copenhagen June 1, 1473.

Christian II. Born at Nyborg, Denmark, July 2, 1481; died at Kallundborg, Denmark, Jan. 25, 1559. King of Denmark and Norway 1513-23, surnamed "The Cruel," son of John whom he succeeded. He married Isabella, sister of the emperor Charles V., in 1515. He conquered Sweden in 1520; but by his massacre of the Swedish nobility at Stockholm the same year provoked an uprising under Gustavus Vasa, which resulted in the liberation of Sweden. He was deposed in 1523, and driven out of Denmark. He made a descent on Norway in 1531, but was captured in 1532 and detained in prison till his death.

Christian III. Born 1502; died at Kolding, Denmark, Jan. 1, 1559. King of Denmark and Norway 1534-59. He introduced the Reformation into Denmark and Norway, destroyed the influence of the Hanse towns in his dominions, and reduced Norway to a province.

Christian IV. Born at Frederiksborg, Denmark, April 12, 1577; died at Copenhagen, Feb. 28, 1648. King of Denmark and Norway 1588-1648, son of Frederick II. He carried on a successful war against Sweden 1611-13. As duke of Holstein he was invited in 1625, in the Thirty Years' War, to take the lead in the rising of the Protestants in northern Germany. He was defeated by Tilly at Lutter am Barenberge, in Brunswick, Aug., 1626, and forced to accept the peace of Lubeck May, 1629. In a second war with Sweden, begun 1643, and concluded Aug., 1645, by the peace of Bromsebro, he lost the Norwegian districts of Jemtland and Herjedalen, and the islands of Gotland and Ösel, and was forced to make other important concessions. He promoted commerce and enterprise, founded the Danish settlement at Tranquebar in the East Indies, and by his courage and magnanimity acquired in a high degree the favor of his subjects. The well-known ballad "King Christian stood by the lofty Mast" commemorates his heroism in the sea-fight with the Swedes before Kiel, July, 1644.

Christian V. Born April 13, 1646; died at Copenhagen, Aug. 25, 1699. King of Denmark and Norway 1670-99, son of Frederick III. He carried on an unsuccessful war against Sweden 1675-79, and published in 1683 a code which bears his name.

Christian VI. Born Nov. 30, 1693; died Aug. 6, 1746. King of Denmark and Norway 1730-1746, son of Frederick IV. He was completely under the influence of his wife, Sophie Magdalene of Brandenburg-Kulmbach, who squandered his revenue in magnificent building operations, including the palace of Christiansborg.

Christian VII. Born at Copenhagen, Jan. 29, 1749; died at Rendsburg, Holstein, March 13, 1808. King of Denmark and Norway 1766-1808, and Duke of Schleswig-Holstein; son of Frederick V. by Louisa, daughter of George II. of England. Christian's reason having become impaired as a consequence of dissipation, the royal physician in ordinary, Struensee, supported by the queen, Caroline Matilda, sister of George III. of England, obtained, through his appointment in 1770 as prime minister, the paramount influence in the government. Struensee was deprived of power Jan. 17, 1772, and put to death (while the queen was banished) by the queen-dowager and the minister Ove Hoegh-Guldberg. The crown prince Frederick assumed the government April 14, 1784, and had himself declared regent.

Christian VIII. Born at Copenhagen, Sept. 18, 1786; died at Copenhagen, Jan. 20, 1848. King of Denmark 1839-48, and Duke of Schleswig-Holstein and Lauenburg; eldest son of Frederick, stepbrother of Christian VII. He was governor of Norway when the peace of Kiel, concluded Jan. 14, 1814, which ceded Norway to Sweden, was repudiated by the Norwegians, Jan. 28, 1814. He came forward as the champion of the national independence, collected an army of 12,000 men, convened a diet at Eidsvoll April 10, which adopted a constitution May 17, and was proclaimed king of Norway under the title of Christian I. May 19, 1814. Unable, however, to maintain his position against the Swedes, supported by the allied powers, he concluded a truce at Moss Aug. 14, and relinquished the crown Oct. 10, 1814. He issued a proclamation July 8, 1846, in which he declared Schleswig and Holstein to be indissolubly united to Denmark.

Christian IX. Born near Schleswig, April 8, 1818. King of Denmark, fourth son of Frederick, duke of Schleswig-Holstein-Sonderburg-Glücksburg. He succeeded Frederick VII. Nov. 15, 1863. He proclaimed himself sovereign of Schleswig and Holstein, the succession to which duchies was claimed by Prince Frederick of Sonderburg-Augustenburg, who was supported by the inhabitants, and on Nov. 18, 1863, he ratified a constitution incorporating Schleswig with Denmark. The Schleswig-Holstein dispute finally involved him in a war with Prussia and Austria, whose forces invaded Schleswig Feb. 1, 1864, and after an obstinate resistance occupied Jutland. By the treaty of Oct. 30, 1864, Christian formally renounced all claims to Schleswig, Holstein, and Lauenburg. He has issue Crown Prince Frederick (born June 3, 1843); Alexandra, princess of Wales (born Dec. 1, 1844); George I., king of Greece (born Dec. 24, 1845); Dagmar, dowager empress of Russia (born Nov. 26, 1847); Thyra, duchess of Cumberland (born Sept. 29, 1853); Prince Waldemar (born Oct. 27, 1858).

Christophe, or Cristophe (kres-tōf'), Henri. Born Oct. 6, 1767; died Oct. 8, 1820. A negro of Haiti. He took part in the revolution of 1790, and became the most trusted general of Toussaint Louverture, serving against the French. Subsequently he commanded under Dessalines in the black republic of northern Haiti, and succeeded him in 1806. War with Pétion followed during several years. In 1811 Christophe was proclaimed king of Haiti, and was crowned June 2 as Henri I. His wars with the republic of the south, and rebellions caused by his tyranny, brought about his downfall. Attacked by the rebels, he shot himself at Port au Prince.

Christopher (kris'tō-fēr), Saint. [L. Christophorus, Gr. Χριστόφορος, Christ-bearer; It. Cristoforo, F. Christophe, Sp. Cristóbal, Pg. Christovão, G. Christoph.] A martyr of the 3d century. He is said to have lived in Syria, and to have been of prodigious height and strength. As a penance for having been a servant of the devil, he devoted himself to the task of carrying pilgrims across a river where there was no bridge. Christ came to the river one day in the form of a child and asked to be carried over, but his weight grew heavier and heavier till his bearer was nearly broken down in the midst of the stream. When they reached the shore, "Marvel not," said the child, "for with me thou hast borne the sins of all the world." Christopher is usually represented as bearing the infant Christ and leaning upon a great staff. The Roman and Anglican churches celebrate his festival on July 25; the Greek Church on May 9.

Christ's Hospital. A celebrated school in Newgate street, London, known as the Blue Coat School from the ancient dress of the scholars, which is still retained. It was founded by Edward VI. on the site of the monastery of Gray Friars, given by Henry VIII. to the city near the end of his reign for the relief of the poor. The gift was confirmed by Edward VI. just before his death. Walford, London.

Christy (kris'ti), Henry. Born at Kingston on the Thames, July 26, 1810; died at La Palisse, France, May 4, 1865. An English ethnologist, noted especially for his exploration of the caves in the valley of the Vézère, in southern France. He began the preparation of a work containing the results of his investigations, which was completed, after his death, by M. Lartet and Professor Rupert-Jones, under the title "Reliquiæ Aquitanicæ: being Contributions to the Archaeology and Palæontology of Périgord and the adjacent Provinces of Southern France."

Chrodegang (krō'de-gang), or Godegrand (gō'de-grānd), Saint. Died at Metz, March 6, 766. A bishop of Metz. He was a native of Hasbana (Belgian Limburg), and was descended from a distinguished family among the Ripuarian Franks. He was appointed bishop of Metz by Pepin the Short in 742, conducted the Pope on a journey from Rome to Gaul in 753, and in 764 brought from Rome the relics which had been presented by the Pope to the churches and monasteries of Gaul. He is the author of the "Vita Canonica," a rule borrowed in part from that of St. Benedict, and of which there are two versions—an older one intended for the cathedral of Metz, and a more recent one, intended for the church in general.

Chronicle of Paros. An important Greek historical inscription found in the island of Paros, and now preserved among the Arundelian marbles at Oxford. It extended originally from the mythical reign of Cæropus, king of Athens, taken as B. C. 1552, to the archonship of Diogenetus, A. C. 264; but the end is now lost, and the surviving part extends only to B. C. 355. The chronicle embraces an outline of Greek history, with special attention to festivals, poetry, and music. Political and military events are less carefully recorded, many of importance being omitted entirely.

Chronicle of the Cid. See Cid.

Chronicle of the Kings of England from the Time of the Romans' Government unto the Death of King James. The principal work of Sir Richard Baker. It was published in 1643, and its popularity is attested by its many editions, a ninth appearing in 1636. It was continued by another to the time of George I., and issued in 1730.

Chronicles (krou'i-klz). Two books of the Old Testament, supplementary to the books of Kings. They formed originally one book, the division into two having been made for convenience in the LXX. The name Chronica (Eng. Chronicles), which is given in some copies of the Vulgate, appears to date from Jerome. In the LXX they are called παραλειπομένα (omitted things), and in the Hebrew "Journals" or diaries. They probably consist of materials which may have been in part collected by Ezra, and were revised about the second half of the 4th century B. C. by another, probably a Levite.

Chronicles of the Canongate. [See Canongate.] A collection of stories by Sir Walter Scott. The first series, published in 1827, includes "The Highland Widow," "Two Drovers," and "The Surgeon's Daughter." The second series ("The Fair Maid of Perth") was published in 1828. The tales are supposed to be narrated by Mr. Chrystal Croftangry, to whom they are told by Mrs. Balfour.

Chronicles of the Schönberg-Cotta Family (shēn'bērg-kōt'fā fam'i-li). A historical novel by Mrs. Charles, published in 1863.

Chrononhotonthologos (krō-non'hō-ton-thol'ō-gos). A burlesque by Henry Carey, "the most tragical tragedy ever yet tragedized," first performed in 1734. It was imitated to some degree from Fielding's play "Tom Thumb." Chrononhotonthologos is the King of Queerummania. His name is occasionally used as a nickname for any particularly bombastic and inflated talker. See Aldiboronteposephornio.

Chrudim (chrō'dim). A town in Bohemia, situated on the Chrudinka in lat. 49° 57' N., long. 15° 47' E. Population (1890), 12,128.

Chrysal (kris'al), or the Adventures of a Guinea. A novel by Charles Johnstone, published in 1760. Chrysal is an elementary spirit whose abode is in a piece of gold converted into a guinea. In that form the spirit passes from man to man, and takes accurate note of the different scenes of which it becomes a witness. Tuckerman, Hist. of Eng. Prose Fict., p. 240.

Chrysalde (chrō-zāld'). A character in Molière's comedy "L'École des femmes."

Chrysale (krē-zāl'). A good, stupid citizen of the middle class, the husband of Philaminte, in Molière's comedy "Les femmes savantes." See Philaminte.

Chrysaor (krī-sā'ēr or kris'ā-ēr). [Gr. Χρυσάωρ.] 1. In classical mythology, a son of Poseidon and Medusa, and father (by Callirrhoe) of the three-headed Geryones and Echidna. He sprang forth from the head of Medusa when Perseus cut it off.—2. The sword of Artagal, in Spenser's "Faerie Queene."

Chryseis (krī-sē'is). [Gr. Χρυσίης.] In Homeric legend, Astynome, the daughter of Chryses, seized as a slave by Agamemnon. When the king refused to give her up, Chryses prayed to Apollo for vengeance, and the god sent a plague upon the camp of the Greeks, which was not stayed until the maiden was taken back to her father by Odysseus.

Chryses (krī'sēz). [Gr. Χρυσίης.] In Homeric legend, a priest of Apollo at Chrysa.

Chrysippus (kris-sip'us). [Gr. Χρυσίππος.] Born at Soli, Cilicia, 280 B. C.; died at Athens, 207 B. C. A Greek Stoic philosopher, a disciple of Cleanthes. He invented the logical argument called sorites, and was, next to Zeno, the most eminent philosopher of his sect. He is said to have died from an immoderate fit of laughter on seeing an ass eating some figs destined for his own supper. "Give him a bumper of wine," he cried to the old woman who attended him, and was so amused by the incident that he sank under the exhaustion of his own merriment." K. O. Müller, Hist. of the Lit. of Anc. Greece, III. 27. (Donaldson.)

Chrysoloras (kris-ō-lō'ras), Manuel. [Gr. Μανουήλ ὁ Χρυσόλωρας.] Born at Constantinople (?) about 1355; died at Constance, Germany, April 15, 1415. A celebrated Greek scholar, teacher of Greek in Italy. Many distinguished scholars were his pupils. He wrote "Erotemata sive Questiones," one of the first Greek grammars used in Italy.

Chrysopolis (krī-sop'ō-lis). [Gr. Χρυσόπολις, golden city.] An ancient town on the site of the modern Scutari, in Asia Minor.

Chrysostom (kris'os-tom or kris-os'tom), Saint John. [Gr. χρυσόστομος, golden-mouthed.] Born at Antioch, Syria, probably in 347 A. D.; died near Comana, Cappadocia, Sept. 4, 407.

A celebrated father of the Greek Church. He was preacher and prelate at Antioch, was patriarch of Constantinople 398-404, and was exiled to Cappadocia 404-407. The chief editions of his works are the "Benedictine" (13 vols. fol. 1718), and that of the Abbé Migne (13 vols. 1863). He is commemorated in the Greek Church on Jan. 27 and Nov. 13, in the Roman Church on Jan. 27.

The last of the great Christian sophists who came forth from the schools of heathen rhetoric was John, the son of Secundus, a general in the imperial army, who is generally known by the surname Chrysostomus, given to him, as to the eminent sophist Dio Coecilianus, on account of his golden eloquence. He was born at Antioch, about A. D. 347, and was taught rhetoric in his native city by Libanius, who would gladly have established him in his school as his assistant and successor, if Chrysostom had not been drawn away from secular pursuits by his religious convictions.

K. O. Müller, Hist. of the Lit. of Anc. Greece, III. 341. (Donaldson.)

Chrysostome (kris'os-tōm). A character in Cervantes's "Don Quixote," a learned man who died for love.

Church (chérch), Benjamin. Born at Duxbury, Mass., 1639; died at Little Compton, R. I., Jan. 17, 1718. An American soldier. He took part in King Philip's war, including the swamp fight with the Narragansets, Dec. 19, 1675, and was in command of the party which hunted King Philip to death Aug. 12, 1676. Under his direction and from his notes his son Thomas compiled "Entertaining Passages relating to Philip's War" (1716).

Church, Frederick Edwin. Born at Hartford, Conn., May 4, 1826. A noted American landscape-painter, a pupil of Thomas Cole. His best-known works are "Niagara Falls from the Canadian Shore" (1857) in the Corcoran Gallery, Washington, "The Heart of the Andes" (1859), "Cotopaxi" (1862), etc.

Church, Frederick Stuart. Born at Grand Rapids, Mich., 1841. An American painter.

Church, Sir Richard. Born in the county of Cork, Ireland, 1784; died at Athens, Greece, March 20, 1873. A British soldier, long a military commander and official in the Greek service. He served as ensign in the Egyptian campaign of 1801; became captain in the Corsican Rangers 1806; was present at the battle of Maida, and took part in the defense of Capri (as assistant quartermaster-general) in various actions in the Ionian Islands; and was appointed lieutenant-colonel of a Greek infantry regiment in 1822. When the Greek revolution began, he joined the insurgents (March 7, 1827), and possessed great influence as a leader of the movement and as a military commander. He also took part in the revolution of 1843. In that year he was appointed senator, and in 1854 general in the Greek army.

Church, Sanford Elias. Born at Milford, N. Y., April 18, 1815; died at Albion, N. Y., May 14, 1880. An American jurist and politician. He was lieutenant-governor of New York 1851-54, and chief justice of the State Court of Appeals 1871-80.

Churchill (chérch'il), Arabella. Born 1648; died 1730. Eldest daughter of Sir Winston Churchill of Wootton Bassett, Wiltshire, and elder sister of John Churchill, duke of Marlborough: a mistress of James II.

Churchill, Charles. Born at Westminster, Feb., 1731; died on a visit to Boulogne, Nov. 4, 1764. An English poet, son of Charles Churchill, rector of Rainham, Essex. He was ordained a priest in 1756, and became curate at Rainham, and in 1758 of St. John's, Westminster; was for a time a teacher in various schools; was separated from his wife (Feb., 1761), with whom he had contracted a Fleet marriage at the age of seventeen; and thereafter devoted himself to literature, becoming famous as a satirist through his "Rosciad" (1761) (which see). He also published "The Apology; addressed to the Critical Reviewers" (1761), "Night; an Epistle to Robert Lloyd" (1762), "The Ghost," in which Johnson is ridiculed in connection with the Cock Lane ghost (1762-63), "The Prophecy of Famine; a Scots Pastoral" (1763), "The Duellist," an assault on the enemies of Wilkes (1763), "The Author" (1763), "Gotham," a poetical statement of his political opinions (1764), "The Candidate" (1764), etc. He was a friend of Wilkes, and a collaborer with him on the "North Briton."

Churchill, John, first Duke of Marlborough. Born at Ashe, Musbury, Devonshire, probably June 24, 1650; died near Windsor, June 16, 1722. A famous English general and statesman. He served for a time as page of honor to the Duke of York (afterward James II.), and in 1667 obtained a commission as ensign in the Foot Guards. He served under Monmouth in the French army in Flanders in 1672 and subsequently, and commanded under Feversham at Sedgemoor in 1685. He joined William of Orange in Nov., 1688, was made earl of Marlborough in 1689, served on the Continent and in Ireland 1689-91, and in 1692 was removed from his offices and imprisoned for complicity in Jacobite intrigues. He was restored to favor by William III. in 1698, and was appointed commander-in-chief in Holland in 1701, and captain-general of all the British forces in 1702. During the War of the Spanish Succession, which broke out in 1701, he was, with Eugene of Savoy and Heinsius, pensionary of Holland, a leading spirit of the grand alliance of the naval powers and the emperor against France. He conducted a successful campaign against the French in 1702, was created duke of Marlborough in 1702, shared with Eugene the victory of Blenheim in 1704, defeated Villeroi at Ramillies in 1706, and in conjunction with Eugene gained the victories of Oudenarde in 1708 and Malplaquet in 1709. He was deprived of his command in 1711, in consequence of the fall of the Whig ministry and the accession to power of the Tories. See life by Coxe (3 vols. 1813-19).

Churchill, Randolph Henry Spencer (called Lord Randolph Churchill). Born Feb. 13, 1849; died at London, Jan. 24, 1895. An English politician, second son of the sixth Duke of Marlborough. He entered Parliament in 1874. He was Conservative member of Parliament for Woodstock 1874-85, when he was returned for South Paddington. He was reelected for South Paddington in 1886 and in 1892, was secretary for India in Lord Salisbury's first ministry (June, 1885-January, 1886), and in Salisbury's second ministry was chancellor of the exchequer and leader of the House of Commons from July to December, 1886. He married Miss Jerome of New York in 1874.

Church Island (Utah). See Antelope Island.
Churchyard (chérch'yård), Thomas. Born at Shrewsbury, England, about 1520; died April 1604. An English poet and miscellaneous writer, and soldier. He was the author of numerous tracts and broadsides, "The Worthines of Wales," a poem (1687), "The Legend of Shore's Wife" (in the 1563 edition of Baldwin's "Mirror for Magistrates"), his best-known poem, "Churchyard's Challenge," a collection of prose and verse (1593), etc. As a soldier he served in Scotland, Ireland, the Low Countries, France, and elsewhere.

Thomas Churchyard was an inferior sort of Gasconne, who led a much longer if less eventful life. He was about the Court for the greater part of the century, and had a habit of calling his little books, which were numerous, and written both in verse and prose, by alliterative titles playing on his own name such as "Churchyard's Chips," "Churchyard's Choice," and so forth. He was a person of no great literary power, and chiefly noteworthy because of his long life after contributing to Tott's "Miscellany," which makes him a link between the old literature and the new. Sainsbury, Hist. of Elizabethan Lit., p. 18.

Churruas. Same as Charruas.

Churubusco (chō-rō-bōs'kō). A village about 5 miles south of the city of Mexico. During the Mexican war, Aug. 20, 1847 (after the battle of Contreras, which see), about 8,000 United States troops under Scott defeated there a force of 20,000-25,000 Mexicans under Santa Anna. An old convent in the village, garrisoned by about 500 Mexican troops under General Pedro Maria Anaya, was attacked by about 6,000 United States soldiers under Generals Twiggs, Smith, and Worth. The strong convent walls served as a fortress, and it was only carried after a severe battle, the ammunition of the defenders being exhausted. The losses were: United States, 1,053; Mexico, about 7,000 (including the battle of Contreras).

Churwalden (chör'vål-den). A town, noted as a health-resort, in the canton of Grisons, Switzerland, 5 miles south of Coire.

Chusan (chō-sān'). The largest island of the Chusan group, situated in the China Sea in lat. 30° 10' N., long. 122° 10' E. It was taken by the English in 1840 and 1860. Capital, Ting-hai.

Chusan Archipelago. The group of islands of which Chusan is the chief.

Chuichupa (chō-wē-chō'pā). [Opata.] The wild and scarcely explored region of the sources of the Yaqui River in the Sierra Madre, near the confines of Sonora and Chihuahua, Mexico.

Chuzzlewit (chuz'l-wit), Anthony. The shrewd and cunning father of Jonas, in Charles Dickens's "Martin Chuzzlewit."

Chuzzlewit, Joas. An unscrupulous, selfish, and overreaching fellow, the cousin of Martin and son of Anthony Chuzzlewit, in Charles Dickens's "Martin Chuzzlewit." His slyness, selfish ignorance, and brutality finally culminate in murder.

Chuzzlewit, Martin. The grandfather of Martin Chuzzlewit, in Charles Dickens's novel of that name.

Chuzzlewit, Martin. A young architect, the principal character in Charles Dickens's novel of that name. At first dissipated, by dint of many hard knocks from fortune, especially in his dreary American adventures with Mark Tapley in search of wealth, he reforms and becomes the heir of his rich grandfather.

Chuzzlewit, Mrs. Jonas. See Pecksniff.

Chyavana (chya-vā'na). In Sanskrit mythology, a Rishi whom, when old, the Ashvins made again a youth. This germ, all that is found in the Rigveda, is variously developed in stories of Chyavana (the later form for the earlier Chyavana) in the Shatapatha Brahmana and the Mahabharata, a motive of which is to explain how the Ashvins came to share libations of soma.

Cialdini (chäl-dē'nē), Enrico, Duke of Gaeta. Born at Castelvetro, Modena, Italy, Aug. 8, 1811; died at Leghorn, Sept. 8, 1892. An Italian general, politician, and diplomatist. He served with distinction in the campaigns of 1860-61, and was ambassador to France 1876-1879 and 1880-81.

Ciança (thē-än'thā), Andres de. A Spanish lawyer, a native of Peñafiel in the diocese of Palencia. He went with Gasea to Peru in 1546, was made a member of the audience there, and was one of the judges who condemned Gonzalo Pizarro and Carvajal to death. From Jan., 1550, to Sept., 1551, he governed Peru as president of the audience.

Cibalæ (sib'a-lē), or Cibalis (-lis). In ancient geography, a town in Pannonia, near the modern Esseg in Slavonia. Here, in 314, Constantine defeated Licinius.

Cibao (sē-bā'ō). [Probably from the Indian word ciba, a stone or rock.] A mountainous region in the central part of the island of Santo Domingo. At the time of the conquest it was included in the province of Maguana, governed by Caonabo. The Indians told Columbus that gold was found there, and he supposed it to be the Cipango (Japan) of Marco Polo. Ojeda entered this region in March, 1494, and a considerable amount of gold was obtained there.

Cibber (sib'er), or Cibert (sē'bért), Caius Gabriel. Born at Flensburg, in Holstein, 1630; died at London, 1700. A Danish sculptor, resident in England, the father of Colley Cibber.

Cibber, Colley. Born at London, Nov. 6, 1671; died there, Dec. 12, 1757. An English actor and dramatist, son of the sculptor C. G. Cibber by his second wife, Jane Colley. He began his career as an actor about 1690, his first recorded appearance being in 1691 at the Theatre Royal, and subsequently played a large number of parts, of many of which he was the original. Among his plays are "Love's Last Shift" (1694), "She Would and She Would Not" (1702), "The Careless Husband" (acted 1704), "The Double Gallant" (1707), "The Provoked Husband" (1728), "The Non-Juror" (acted 1717), etc. He altered and adapted "Richard III." and "King Lear," and other plays, the former keeping the stage for a century. In 1730 he was appointed poet laureate. Pope attacked him under the name of "Dulness" in the "Dunciad" (1741). His "Apology for his Life" was published in 1740.

Cibber, Mrs. (Susannah Maria Arne). Born at London, Feb., 1714; died at Westminster, Jan. 30, 1766. A noted English actress and singer, wife of Theophilus Cibber and sister of Thomas Arne. Her first appearance was at the Haymarket in 1732, in the opera "Amelia" by Lurupé, and her reputation was for several years chiefly founded upon her singing. In 1736 she made her début as a tragic actress in the part of Zarah, in Hill's version of Voltaire's "Zaire," and rapidly became famous.

Cibber, Theophilus. Born Nov. 26, 1703; perished in a shipwreck in the Irish Channel, Oct., 1758. An English actor and dramatist, son of Colley Cibber. He wrote "The Lover" (1730), "Patie and Peggy, or the Fair Foundling" (1730), "The Harlot's Progress, or the Ridotto al Fresco" (1733), "The Action" (1757), etc. He published an alteration of "Henry VI." In April, 1734, he married Susannah Maria Arne, afterward famous as an actress. She abandoned him a few years later. Cibber was a man of unsavory reputation.

Cibobé (sē-bō-bā'). [Tehuua of northern New Mexico.] A mythical place, probably some spring or lagoon in southern Colorado, where, according to the traditions of the Tehuua, their ancestors issued from the interior of the earth to begin their wanderings over its surface. It is the mythical cradle of the tribe.

Cibola (sē' bō-lā). [Origin unknown.] The name given by Fray Marcos of Nizza to the cluster of villages occupied by the Zuñi tribe in 1539. He heard the word in Sonora, and it may have been a corruption of Shuona, the Zuñi name for the range held by that tribe.

Cibot (sē-bō'). François Barthélemy Michel Édouard. Born at Paris, Feb. 11, 1799; died at Paris, Jan. 10, 1877. A French painter, noted especially for historical subjects and landscapes.

Cibot, Pierre Martial. Born at Limoges, France, 1727; died at Peking, China, Aug. 8, 1780. A French Jesuit, missionary in China. He was the author of many dissertations and treatises, comprised in the "Mémoires concernant l'histoire des lettres, sciences et arts de la Chine."

Cibrario (chē-brī'rē-ō), Count Giovanni Antonio Luigi. Born at Turin, Feb. 23, 1802; died at Salò, Brescia, Italy, Oct. 1, 1870. An Italian jurist, historian, and politician, cabinet minister 1852-56. He wrote "Storia della monarchia di Savoia" (1840-47), "Origini e progressi delle istituzioni della monarchia di Savoia" (1851-55), "Della economia politica del Medio Evo" (1842), etc.

Cibyra (sib'i-rii). [Gr. Kiβρα.] An ancient town of Phrygia, Asia Minor, the modern Khorzum; called Cibyra Magna, to distinguish it from a smaller town of the same name in Pamphylia. Its ruins comprise an odeum, 175 feet in diameter, with thirteen tiers of seats visible above ground. The front wall is noteworthy, and is practically complete; it has five arched doorways between two square ones. There is also an ancient theater of some size and considerable interest, and a stadium, in part excavated from a hillside. There are twenty-one tiers of seats in marble, which remain in place around the curved end. There was a monumental entrance, consisting of three lofty arches.

Chicacole (sik-ā-kōl'), or Chicacole (chik-ā-kōl'). A town in the district of Ganjam, Madras, British India, situated on the Nagavulli in lat. 15° 20' N., long. 83° 52' E.

Cicely Homespun. See Homespun.

Cicero. A surname given to Johann, elector of Brandenburg 1486-99, on account of his eloquence.

Cicero (sis'c-rō), Marcus Tullius. Born at Arpinum, Italy, Jan. 3, 106 B. C.; assassinated near Formia, Italy, Dec. 7, 43 B. C. A celebrated Roman orator, philosopher, and statesman. He served in the Social War in 89; traveled in Greece and Asia 79-77; was questor in Sicily in 75; accused Verres in 70; was edile in 69; pretor 68; and as consul suppressed Catiline's conspiracy in 63. He was banished in 58, living in Thessalonica, and was recalled in 57. He was proconsul of Cilicia 51-50; joined the Pompeians in 49; lived at Brundisium, Sept., 48-Sept., 47; pronounced the Philippics against Antony 44-43; and was proscribed by the Second Triumvirate and slain in 43. Of his orations 57 are extant (with fragments of 20 more), including "Against Verres" (six speeches, 70 B. C.; five of these were never delivered), "Against Catiline" (four speeches, 63 B. C.; see Catiline), "Against Archias" (62 B. C.), "Against Piso" (55 B. C.), "For Milo" (52 B. C.), "For Marcellus" (46 B. C.), and "Philippics" (which see). His other works include "Eloquence," "De oratore," "De republica," "De legibus," "De finibus bonorum et malorum," "Tusculan disputationes," "De natura deorum," "Cato major," "De divinatione," "Laelius," "De officiis" (see these titles), etc. There are, besides, four collections of his correspondence. He also wrote poetry, including an epic on Marius.

Cicero, Quintus Tullius. Born about 102 B. C.; killed 45 B. C. A Roman commander, younger brother of Marcus Tullius Cicero, distinguished in Gaul in 54.

Cicero's younger brother, Quintus (n. 652/102-711/43), took much interest in literature, especially in poetry, and seems to have resembled his brother in facility of composition, but he never attained any distinction. He undertook an amalphic work, and translated tragedies of Sophocles and the like. We possess by him the Commentarium petitionis, a missive addressed to his brother Marcus, composed early in 60/64, and a few letters. Teuffel und Schoebe, Hist. Rom. Lit. (tr. by G. C. W. [Ware], I, 324.

Cicogna (chē-kōn'yā), Emmanuele Antonio. Born at Venice, Jan. 17, 1789; died at Venice, Feb. 22, 1868. An Italian historian and archæologist. He wrote "Delle inserzioni Veneziane" (1824-53), etc.

Cicognara (chē-kōn-yā'rā), Count Leopoldo. Born at Ferrara, Italy, Nov. 17, 1767; died at Venice, March 5, 1834. An Italian antiquarian and diplomatist, author of "Storia della scultura" (1813-18), etc.

Cid (sid; Sp. pron. thēTH), The; called also El Campeador (kām-pe-ä-dōr') (Ruy or Rodrigo Diaz de Bivar). [Cid, Sp., representing Ar. Scytil, master; el Campeador, Sp., the champion or challenger.] Born at the castle of Bivar, near Burgos, Spain, about 1040; died at Valencia, Spain, July, 1099. The principal national hero of Spain, famous for his exploits in the wars with the Moors.

The title of Cid, by which he is almost always known, is often said to have come to him from the remarkable circumstance that five Moorish kings or chiefs acknowledged him in one battle as their Sid, or their lord and conqueror; and the title of Campeador, or Champion, by which he is hardly less known, though it is commonly assumed to have been given to him as a leader of the armies of Sancho the Second, has long since been used almost exclusively as a mere popular expression of the admiration of his countrymen for his exploits against the Moors. At any rate, from a very early period he has been called El Cid Campeador, or The Lord Champion. Ticknor, Span. Lit., I, 12.

In this critical age we are frequently obliged to abandon with regret the most charming traditions of our childhood's histories; and the Cid has not been spared. A special book has been written by an eminent Orientalist to prove that the redoubtable Challenger was by no means the hero he was supposed to be: that he was treacherous and cruel, a violator of altars, and a breaker of his own good faith. Professor Dozy maintains that the romantic history of the Cid is a tissue of inventions, and he has written an account of "the real Cid" to counteract these misleading narratives. He founds his criticisms mainly on the Arabic historians, in whom, despite their national and religious bias, he places as blind a reliance as less learned people have placed in the Chronicle of the Cid. Yet it is surprising how trifling are the differences that can be detected between his "real Cid" and that romantic Chronicle of the Cid, the substance of which was compiled by Alfonso the Learned only half a century after the Cid's death, and which Robert Southey translated into English in 1805 with such skill and charm of style that his version has ever since been almost as much a classic as the original. Every one can separate for himself the obviously legendary incidents in the delightful old Chronicle without any assistance from the Arabic historians, who deal chiefly with one period alone of the Cid's career; and the best popular account of the hero, in discriminating hands and with due allowances, is still Southey's fascinating Chronicle. The Cid of the Chronicle is not at all the same as the Cid of the Romances; and while we cheerfully abandon the latter immaculate personage, we may still believe in the former.

Poole, Story of the Moors, p. 192.

Cid, Romances of the. 1. A Spanish poem ("Poema del Cid") composed by an unknown author about 1200. It consists of more than 3,000 lines, and is a bold and spirited exhibition of national peculiarities in the chivalrous times of Spain. It was printed first by Sanchez in the first volume of his "Poesias Castellanas Anteriores al Siglo XV." (Madrid, 1779-90). Ticknor.

2. An old poetical Spanish chronicle ("Cronica Rimada de las Cosas de España"), nearly the whole of which is devoted to the history of the Cid. It is later than the "Poema del Cid," and was first published by Michel in the "Jahrbücher der Literatur," Vol. CXV, at Vienna in 1846. Both these poems seem built up from older ballads.

3. The "Chronicle of the Cid," date unknown, printed in 1512, the same in substance with the history of the Cid in the "General Chronicle of the History of Spain" composed and compiled by Alfonso the Wise about 1260.—4. A Spanish tragedy ("Las mocedades del Cid Campeador") by Guillen de Castro. It appeared in 1618.—5. A French tragedy ("Le Cid") by Pierre Corneille, represented in 1636.

Cieneguilla (thē-ā-nā-gēl'yā). [Sp., 'little marsh.'] A place 12 miles west or west-southwest of Santa Fé, in New Mexico. Near it are the ruins of an important ancient pueblo of the Tanos.

Cienfuegos (thē-en-fwā'gōs). A seaport on the southern coast of Cuba, in lat. 22° 12' N., long. 80° 35' W. It exports molasses, sugar, etc. Population (1887), 40,964.

Cienfuegos, Nicasio Alvarez de. Born at Madrid, Dec. 14, 1764; died at Orthez, France, July, 1809. A Spanish poet and dramatist. His poems were published in 1798.

Cienfuegos y Jovellanos (thē-en-fwā'gōs ē hō-vel-yā'nōs), José. Born at Gigon, Asturias, Spain, 1768; died at Madrid, 1825. A Spanish general. He was a cadet in 1777, served in the French wars, and from April, 1816, to the end of 1819 was captain-general of Cuba. In 1822 he was minister of war, and at the time of his death councilor of war and lieutenant-general and director-general of artillery. The town of Cienfuegos, Cuba, founded during his rule, was named in his honor.

Cieza (thē-ā'thā). A small town in the province of Mureia, Spain, near the Segura north-west of Mureia.

Cieza de Leon (thē-ā'thā dā lā-ōn'), Pedro de. Born at Llerena, Spain, 1518; died at Seville, 1560. A Spanish soldier, author of the "Cronica del Perú." From about 1534 to 1552 he was with the Spanish armies in America, serving in New Granada and Peru and traveling extensively. His "Cronica," or history, of Peru was commenced in 1541, and consisted of four parts. Part 1, a general description of the country, was published in 1553; and part 2, with a portion of part 3, in modern times; other portions are known in MS., but several books are lost. Cieza de Leon is one of the best authorities on the early history of Peru and the customs of the Incas.

Cignani (chēn-yā'nē), Count Carlo. Born at Bologna, Italy, May 15, 1628; died at Forli, Italy, Sept. 6, 1719. An Italian painter of the Bolognese school. His chief work is an "Assumption of the Virgin," painted in the cupola of the cathedral at Forli.

Cignaroli (chēn-yā-rō'lē), Giovanni Bettino. Born at Salò, near Verona, Italy, 1706; died at Verona, Dec. 1, 1770. An Italian painter of the Venetian school. In 1769 he became director of the Academy at Verona.

Ciguay (sē-gwā'), or Higüey (ē-gwā'y'). The Indian name for a portion of the eastern part of the island of Santo Domingo, bordering on Samaná Bay. It was first visited by Columbus in 1493. The natives were warlike, and resisted the Spaniards for some years.

Cihuacohuatl (sē-wā'kō-wā'tl). [Nahuatl, 'snake-woman.'] 1. In Mexican (Nahuatl) mythology, Tonantzin ('our mother'), the first mother of mankind, who begot twins, male and female, from which sprang the human race. According to Sahagun she was the goddess of adverse things—poverty, toil, sickness, etc.—and the patroness of medicine and abortion. Also written Cihuacoatl, Ciuacoatl, etc.

2. The title of the Mexican civil head chief. It has lately been suggested that his title may have been Cihua-coatl, which would signify 'twin woman.' The civil head of the Mexican tribe was elective as well as the war chief, and had, like the latter, religious functions connected with his administrative duties.

Cilicia (si-lish'yā). [Gr. Kilikia.] In ancient geography, a province in southeastern Asia Minor, separated by the Taurus from Lycaonia and Cappadocia on the north, and by the Amanus from Syria on the east, and extending toward the sea. During the Syrian period many Greeks and Jews settled in Cilicia. It was repeatedly invaded by the Assyrian kings, and was successively under Persian, Macedonian, Syrian, and Roman dominion. The dreaded Cilician pirates were subdued by Pompey 67 B. C. The capital was Tarsus.

Cilli (tsil'lē), Slovenian Celje. A town in Styria, Austria-Hungary, on the Sann in lat. 46° 14' N., long. 15° 15' E.: the Roman Claudia Celeja, founded by Claudius. It is a summer resort. It was governed by counts in the later middle ages. Population (1890), 6,264.

Cimabue (chē-mā-bō'ā), Giovanni. Born at Florence, 1240; died there, about 1302. A noted Italian painter, called "The Father of Modern Painting." He is mentioned as a forerunner of Giotto by Dante, who thereby gives occasion to his own anonymous commentator, writing in 1334, to make some remarks upon Cimabue's fame and ambition, quoted by Vasari. Cimabue practised painting on wall-panels and mosaics. The works accredited to him are simply assumed by Vasari without corroborating testimony. They consist of: (a) Several large Madonnas on panels with gold grounds. The most celebrated is that in the chapel of the Rucellai family in Santa Maria Novella in Florence. There is another in the Louvre, and another in the Accademia at Florence. They are effective from their mild solemnity and simple color, which is lively and clear in the flesh-tints. (b) Frescos in the Church of San Francisco d'Assisi, quite similar to the panels, but slighter and more decorative. (c) Mosaics in the apse of the cathedral of Pisa, the only work well authenticated as his by original documents, and probably his last.

Cima di Jazzi (chē'mā dō yāt'sē). A mountain of the Valais Alps, on the border of Italy, east of Zermatt. Height, 12,526 feet.

Cimarosa (chē-mā-rō'siā), Domenico. Born at Aversa, near Naples, Dec. 17, 1749; died at Venice, Jan. 11, 1801. An Italian composer of opera. His chief opera is "Il matrimonio segreto" ("The Secret Marriage," 1792).

Cimarron (sē-mā-rōn'). [Sp., 'wild.'] A name given to the Canadian River in northern New Mexico (Rio Cimarron).

Cimarrones (hē-mā-rō'nes). [Sp. cimarron, untamed; whence ultimately E. maroon, marooner.] A name given in the Spanish colonies of America to fugitive slaves; in particular, the bands of fugitive negroes who collected on the isthmus of Panama about the middle of the 16th century. They numbered many hundred, built walled towns, attacked the Spanish settlements, robbed treasure-trains, and made their name a terror in all parts of the isthmus. Under their chief or "king," Bayano, they resisted the forces of Pedro de Ursoa for two years, but were at length obliged to submit. They soon revolted. In 1572 they joined forces with the English adventurer Drake, and for many years they aided the bucaners in their descents on the isthmus. Finally they became amalgamated with the Indian tribes.

Cimbebasie. See Nlonga.

Cimbri (sim'brī). [L., Gr. Kλυβροι.] An ancient people of central Europe, of uncertain local habitation and ethnographical position. They pushed into the Roman provinces in 113 B. C., and in company with the Teutons and Gauls engaged with and defeated Roman armies in southern Gaul and elsewhere (the most notable defeat being that of Cæpio and Mallius in 105 B. C.) until 101 B. C., when they were defeated and virtually exterminated by Marius on the Raudian fields in northern Italy. The peninsula of Jutland was named from them the Cimbrie Chersonese.

Cimmerians. See Cimmerians.

Cimmeria (si-mē'ri-ā). [Gr. Κιμμερία.] The country of the Cimmerians (which see), fabled to be a place of perpetual darkness.

Æschylus places Cimmeria in close proximity to the Palus Mæotis and the Bosphorus; and here in the time of Herodotus were still existing a number of names recalling the fact of the former settlement of these regions of the Cimmerian nation. Ravinton, Herod., III, 179.

Cimmerian Bosphorus (si-mē'ri-an bos'pō-rus). The strait between the Black Sea and the Sea of Azof. The Crimean side was colonized by a Greek expedition from Miletus in 433 B. C. It flourished until absorbed in the dominions of Mithridates, and for some centuries afterward experienced vicissitudes of hardship and prosperity. Relations which became intimate were early established with Athens, which sent her oil, jewelry, and works of industrial art in return for Crimean wheat. The chief city was Panticapæum, the modern Kerch, the center of the highly important archaeological discoveries which have been yielded by this region as well as by the territory around it. The first systematic excavations were made in 1816. Since 1832 explorations have been regularly conducted by the imperial government, and their results, rich in Greek industrial antiquities, are in the Hermitage Museum in St. Petersburg. The architectural remains are scanty, perhaps the chief of them being the fine revêtement, in quarry-faced ashlar with margin-draft, of the so-called Tomulus of the Czar at Kerch. The sculpture found, too, is scanty in quantity, late in date, and poor in style. The great archeological wealth of the region lies in its abundant burial tumuli and catacombs. It was the practice of the ancient inhabitants to bury with their dead a large part of their possessions; hence the remarkable harvest of jewelry, vases, implements, and even textile fabrics and a pair of woman's leather boots, found in these graves. Little or nothing discovered is older than the 4th century B. C.; the finest specimens of jewelry and pottery are Athenian, and include some of the most beautiful work known in their classes. Many of the vases are decorated in brilliant polychrome; others have gilded ornament, and others bear figures in relief. The work of local manufacture is inferior in style, though much of it is very beautiful, and with the advance of time Scythian influence increases. Some of the tomb-chambers bear interesting mural paintings.

Cimmerians (si-mē'ri-anz), or Cimmarians (si-mā'ri-anz). [Gr. Kιμῆριοι.] A people dwelling north of the Black Sea and the Sea of Azoff (modern South Russia), known already to Homer. Herodotus speaks of "Cimmerian cities," and says that the strait which unites the Azoff Sea to the Black Sea was called Cimmerian Bosphorus. In the 7th century, pressed by the Scythians, the Cimmerians invaded the kingdom of Lydia in Asia Minor, and were merged, as it seems, in other nations. Their invasion of Lydia under King Gyges is mentioned in the annals of Eashaddon (850-663 B. C.) and Asurbanipal (663-626), where they are called Gimir. The Armenians call Cappadocia Gimir, which is probably a reminiscence of the Cimmerian invasion in Lydia and Asia Minor. Their name has also survived in the modern Crimea. In the Old Testament they are mentioned by the name of Gomer (Gen. x. 2). Also Kimmerians.

Cimmerii (si-mē'ri-i). See Cimmerians.

Cimon (si'mon). [Gr. Κίμων.] Died at Citium, Cyprus, 449 B. C. A celebrated Athenian commander, son of Miltiades. He defeated the Persians on sea and land by the Eurymedon in 463, reduced Thasos in 463, and was ostracized about 453-454 (P.).

Cimon. Born at Cleonae, in Chalcidice. A Greek painter, famous in antiquity. He is mentioned in two epigrams of Simonides.

Cinaloa. See Sinaloa.

Cincinnati (si-u-si-nā'ti). [Originally called Losantiville (said to be from L(icking) *o*s ('mouth') anti ('opposite') *v*ille, 'town opposite the mouth of the Licking'); later named from the Society of the Cincinnati.] The capital of Hamilton County, Ohio, on the Ohio in lat. 39° 6' N., long. 84° 27' W.: the largest city of Ohio and of the Ohio valley, surnamed "The Queen City." It has an extensive trade by railroad and river. Among its leading industries are pork-packing, manufactures of iron, furniture, malt liquors and distilled liquors. It has a large trade in grain and tobacco. Its suburbs are Covington and Newport (in Kentucky). It was founded in 1788, and incorporated as a city in 1814. Population (1890), 296,908.

Cincinnati, Society of the. An association founded by the regular officers of the Continental army at the quarters of Baron Steuben on the Hudson River, in 1783. Its name, derived from the Roman dictator L. Quinctius Cincinnatus, was adopted in allusion to the approaching change from military to civil pursuits. Its chief immediate objects were to raise a fund for the relief of the widows and orphans of those who fell in the Revolutionary War, and to promote a closer political union between the States. Its members were to consist of the officers of the Continental army and of their eldest male descendants, in failure of which collateral descendants were to be eligible for membership. It was divided into State societies, including a branch society in France. It met with considerable opposition on account of its alleged aristocratic tendencies. Its first president was George Washington, who was succeeded by Hamilton and the Pinckneys. Of its State societies six survive. The French society in France, which was organized under the most favorable auspices, was dispersed by the revolution of 1792.

Cincinnatus (si-u-si-nā'tus), Lucius Quinctius. Born about 519 B. C. A Roman legendary hero. He was consul suffectus 460, and distinguished himself as an opponent of the plebeians in the struggle between them and the patricians, 462-454. In 458 a Roman army under L. Minucius having been surrounded by the Æquians in a defile of Mount Algidus, he was named dictator by the senate, whose deputies, despatched to inform him of his appointment, found him digging in the field on his farm beyond the Tiber. He gained a complete victory over the Æquians, and laid down the dictatorship after the lapse of only sixteen days. In 439, at the age of eighty, he was appointed dictator to oppose the traitor Spurius Maelius, who was defeated and slain. The details of his story vary.

Cinco de Mayo (thēn'kō dā mā'yō), Battle of the. [Sp., 'fifth of May.'] The name given by Mexicans to an action fought May 5, 1862, before Puebla, in which the French under General Lorencez were defeated by the Mexicans. This battle did not prevent the establishment of an empire two years later, but it was regarded as a great national triumph, and the anniversary is still celebrated.

Cinderella (sin-de-rel'ä). [F. Cendrillon, G. Achenbrödel or Achenpüttel.] In a noted fairy tale, a beautiful girl who acts as a household drudge to her stepmother and sisters. The prince of the country falls in love with her at a ball which she attends dressed by her fairy godmother in magic finery which will vanish at midnight. Fleeing from the palace as the clock strikes, she loses one tiny glass slipper, by means of which, as it would fit no one else, the prince finds and marries her. In the German version, instead of the fairy godmother two white doves befriend her, and her golden slipper is caught, as she runs from the palace, by pitch spread, by order of the prince, on the staircase. The story is of very ancient, probably Eastern, origin. It is mentioned in German literature in the 16th century, and a similar legend is told in Egypt of Rhodopis and Psammetichus. In France, Perrault and Madame d'Aunoy include it in their "Fairy Tales" as "Cendrillon" and "Ficette Cendrol," and Grimm also gives it in his "Household Tales." There are many English versions, and it is found in various forms in almost every language in Europe. The glass slipper of the English version should be a fur slipper, the mistake arising in the translation of veir ('fur') as verre ('glass').

Cineas (sin'e-as). [Gr. Κινέας.] Died, probably in Sicily, about 277 B. C. A Thessalian politician in the service of Pyrrhus, king of Epirus; ambassador to Rome after the battle of Heraclea, 280.

Cinna (sin'ä), or La Clémence d'Auguste (lä klä-mōns'dō-giüst'). A tragedy by P. Corneille, produced in 1640. An anonymous tragedy called "Cinna's Conspiracy" was taken from this and played at Drury Lane in 1713. Defoe attributed it to Cibber.

Cinna, Lucius Cornelius. 1. Slain in a mutiny at Brundisium, Italy, 84 B. C. A Roman general and statesman, celebrated as a leader of the popular party and an opponent of Sulla. He was consul with Octavius in 87, with Marius in 86, and with Carbo 85-84.

2. A son of the preceding, pretor in 44 B. C., and brother-in-law of Caesar. Though he did not join the conspirators against Caesar, he approved of their act.

Cinna, Caius Helvius. A Roman poet, a friend of Catullus. On the occasion of the funeral of Julius Caesar he was slain by the populace, who mistook him for Lucius Cornelius Cinna.

Cinnamon (sin'a-mōn), Land of. [Sp. Tierra de Canelo.] A name given by the early Spanish conquerors of Peru to a region east of the Andes, in the forest-covered plains about the Napo, where there were trees with aromatic bark. Gonzalo Pizarro led an expedition into it in 1541, and returned after two years of terrible suffering. Orellana, deserting him there, became the discoverer of the Amazon. The first settlements were made in 1552, but the region is still a wilderness.

Cinnamus, or Cinamus, or Sinnamus (sin'amus), Joannes. [Gr. Κίναμος, or Κίναμος.] Lived in the 12th century. A distinguished Byzantine historian, a notary of the emperor Manuel Comnenus. He was the author of a history of the period 1118-76, covering the reign of Manuel (to the end of the siege of Iconium) and that of his father Calo-Johannes.

Cino da Pistoja (ehē'nō dā pēs-tō'yä), originally Guittoncino Sinibaldi. Born at Pistoja, Italy, 1270; died at Pistoja, Dec. 24, 1336. An Italian jurist and poet, author of a commentary on the Justinian Code, "Rimo" (published 1864), etc.

Cinq-Mars, ou une Conjuración sous Louis XIII. 1. A historical novel by De Vigny (published 1826), founded on the life of Cinq-Mars.—2. An opera by Gounod, first produced at Paris, April 5, 1877.

Cinq-Mars (sān-mār'), Marquis de (Henri Coiffier de Ruzé). Born 1620; died at Lyons, France, Sept. 12, 1642. A French courtier. He was at the age of eighteen introduced to the court by Richelieu, and, gaining the favor of Louis XIII., rose quickly to the post of grand master of the wardrobe and grand master of the horse. Richelieu having refused to countenance his claim to a seat in the royal council and his aspiration to the hand of Maria de Gonzaga, princess of Mantua, Cinq-Mars formed a conspiracy against the cardinal, in the course of which he entered into treasonable communication with Spain; and with his fellow-conspirator, the youthful De Thou, was beheaded at Lyons.

Cinq Ports (singk pōrts). [F., 'Five Ports.'] A collective name for the five English channel ports: Hastings, Romney, Hythe, Dover, Sandwich. Winchelsea and Rye were added later. They furnished the chief naval contingent until the time of Henry VII. Most of their especial privileges have been abolished. They are governed by a lord warden.

Cynthia. See Cynthia.

Cinthio. See Giraldi, Giovanni.

Cintra (sēn'trā). A town in the district of Lisbon, Portugal, 15 miles northwest of Lisbon. It contains: (a) The Cork Convent, founded by the viceroy of India, Dom João de Castro. It consists of about twenty cells, each about five feet square, which as well as the refectory are in part excavated from the rock, and are lined with cork to exclude dampness. (b) A Moorish Castle, an extensive fortification on the hill above the town, inclosing a ruined mosque with traces of ornament in color, and a so-called bath, a curious vaulted reservoir 50 feet long. The inclosed space is now a royal park and garden. (c) The Palace of the Pena, on the summit of the high, steep hill, originally a convent, but given the aspect of a medieval castle when remodeled as a royal residence. The interesting monastic cloister and chapel remain; the carved retables in alabaster is beautiful. (d) The Royal Palace, founded by the Moors, altered and added to later, and finished about 1500. The exterior presents a picturesque combination of Moorish and pointed features, and is especially characterized by the two enormous conical chimneys of the kitchens. There are some interesting rooms, in which historic scenes have been enacted.

Cintra, Convention of. A convention concluded Aug. 30, 1808, between the French under Junot and the English. By its provisions the French evacuated Portugal, and were conveyed to France in English vessels.

Cinyumuh. See Tusayan.

Ciotat (sē-ō-tä'), La. A seaport in the department of Bouches-du-Rhône, France, situated on the Mediterranean 15 miles southeast of Marseilles. Population (1891), commune, 12,233.

Cipango (si-pang'gō), or Zumpango (zūmpang'gō). The name given in Marco Polo's narrative to an island or islands east of Asia, supposed to be the modern Japan. Columbus imagined that the West Indies were outlying portions of it.

Cipas, Kingdom of. New Granada. See Zipas. Cipias (tsē'pē-ās). A former Indian tribe of eastern Arizona. Its exact location is unknown as yet, but the name is mentioned by Spanish authors in the 17th and 18th centuries. The Zunis also have traditions concerning the Cipias, and call them Tzipiakwe. The tribe is doubtless extinct.

Circars (sēr-kärz'), Northern. A non-official designation for five ancient circars (districts) in the northern part of Madras, British India, in lat. 16°-20° N.

Circassia (sēr-kash'ä). [F. Circassie, NL. Circassia, G. Tscherkessien; Russ. Zemlya Cherkesov, Circassian land; Cherkes, a Circassian.] A region in the Caucasus, Russia, lying between the river Kuban on the north, the land of the Lesghians on the east, Mingrelia on the south, and the Black Sea on the west. It includes Great and Little Kabarda, the countries of the Abkhassians and Tsherkeassians (Circassians). It was incorporated with Russia in 1829. The Circassians emigrated in large numbers about 1864.

Circe (sēr'sō). [Gr. Κίρκη.] 1. In Greek mythology, an enchantress, daughter of Helios by Perse, living in the island of Ææa. Odysseus in his wanderings came to her home, and was induced to remain a year with her. She metamorphosed some of his companions into swine. Before she would let him depart she sent him to the lower world to consult the seer Teiresias.

2. An asteroid (No. 34) discovered by Chacornae at Paris April 6, 1855.

Circeii (sēr-sō'yī). [Gr. Κίρκαιον.] In ancient geography, a town of Latium, Italy, situated near the sea 57 miles southeast of Rome. It belonged to the Latin League 340 B. C.

Circeo (chēr-chā'yō). A promontory or isolated rock on the western coast of Italy, near Terracina: the ancient Circeius Mons, or Circeum Promontorium. It was a frequented resort in ancient times. It has some antiquities of the Roman town Circeii, and abounds in grottoes.

Circleville (sēr'kl-vil). A city and the county-seat of Pickaway County, Ohio, situated on the Scioto 26 miles south of Columbus. It is on the site of an aboriginal circular fortification (whence the name). Population (1890), 6,556.

Circumcellions (sēr-kum-sel'ionz). [From L. circum, around, and cella, cell.] A party of Donatists in northern Africa, chiefly peasants, in the 4th and 5th centuries: so called because they wandered about in bands from place to place. They persistently courted death, wantonly insulting pagans, and challenging all they met to kill them, looking upon such a death as martyrdom. They supported themselves by plunder, and committed so many acts of violence, aggravated by their religious differences from the orthodox, that soldiers often had to be employed against them. They were not entirely extinct till about the close of the 5th century.

Circumlocution Office. The name by which Dickens in "Little Dorrit" satirizes the red tape of the public-office system in England.

Circus Maximus (sēr'kus mak'si-mus). The great Roman circus which occupied the hollow between the Palatine and the Aventine hills. According to tradition, the site was already used for athletic exhibitions and provided with wooden seats under Tarquinius Priscus. Under Caesar and Augustus it was first largely built of stone, and splendidly adorned. The present obelisks of the Piazza del Popolo and of the Lateran ornamented its spina. It was rebuilt by Nero, and again by Domitian and Trajan, and in its final form is said to have accommodated 35,000 spectators. The site is for the most part covered with modern structures, and the remains are scanty. Some of the vaulted substructions which upheld the seats survive, and there are considerable ruins about Santa Maria in Cosmedin of the carceres, or pens, from which the racers were started. The length of the arena was 2,200 feet.

Circus of Romulus or Maxentius. A Roman circus built in 311 A. D., the most perfect ancient circus surviving. It is 1,500 feet long and 260 wide. The outer wall remains almost complete, and the central spina, 892 feet long, can be traced throughout. At the west end, between two towers, are the chief entrance and twelve pens (carceres) for competing chariots; the east end is semicircular.

Cirencester (sis'e-tēr), or Cicester. [ME. Cirecestre, Cirestre, Ciceter, etc., AS. Cirenceaster, Cyreneaster, Cyreneaster, from *Cyren. L. Corinium, and ceaster, city.] A town in Gloucestershire, England, situated on the river Churn 16 miles southeast of Gloucester: the Roman Corinium or Durocornovium. It has a large trade in wool. Population (1891), 7,441.

Cirey (sē-rā'). A château on the borders of Champagne and Lorraine, which Voltaire fitted up in 1734, and where he lived with Madame du Châtelet and, occasionally, her husband.

Cirra (sir'ā). In ancient geography, the seaport of Cirssa (with which it is often confounded), in Phocis, Greece. It was destroyed on account of sacrilege in the Sacred War about 585 B. C.

Cirta (sēr'tā). [Gr. Κίρτα: Phen., 'the city.'] An ancient city of the Massylii, in Numidia, Africa, in lat. 36° 21' N., long. 6° 35' E., noted as a fortress: the modern Constantine (which see). It was restored by Constantine the Great.

Cisalpine Republic. [L. Cisalpinus, from cis, on this side, and Alpes, Alps, adj. Alpinus, Alpine.] The state formed by Napoleon Bonaparte in northern Italy in 1797, including the previously formed Cispadane and Transpadane republics, south and north of the Po, with Milan for its capital. It was abolished in 1799, restored in 1800, and in 1802 was reconstituted as the Italian Republic.

Cisleithania (sis-li-thā'nī-ā or sis-li-tā'nō-ā), or the Cisleithan Division. A name given popularly (not officially) to those crownlands of Austria-Hungary which are represented in the Austrian Reichsrat: so named from the river Leitha, part of the boundary between Austria and Hungary. It comprises Lower Austria, Upper Austria, Salzburg, Styria, Carinthia, Carniola, Kärntenland, Tyrol and Vorarlberg, Bohemia, Moravia, Silesia, Galicia, Bukovina, Dalmatia. Population (1890), 23,835,413.

Cisneros (thēs-nā'rōs), Diego. A Spanish Geronymite friar who went to Lima, Peru, about 1875, and resided there until his death in 1812. He had been confessor of the princess Maria Luisa (afterward queen), and her influence gave him the protection of the viceroys. While attending to the business of his order he opened a kind of bookstore, a small circle of advanced thinkers gathered about him, and after encountering great opposition they succeeded in introducing marked reforms in the universities and schools, and in giving greater liberty to the press. They constantly opposed the Inquisition. Fray Diego's library, bequeathed to the university, became the nucleus of the magnificent public library of Lima.

Cisneros y Latorre, Baltazar Hidalgo de. See Hidalgo de Cisneros y Latorre.

Cispadane (sis-pā'dān) Republic. [From L. cis, on this side, and Padus, the river Po, adj. Padanus.] A republic formed in 1796 by Napoleon Bonaparte out of the dominions of Bologna, Ferrara, Modena, and Reggio, and modeled on that of France. In 1797 it was merged with the Transpadane Republic in the new Cisalpine Republic.

Cisplatine (sis-plā'tin) Province. [Sp. Pg. Provincia Cisplatina.] The official name of Uruguay during the last five years of its union with Brazil (1823 to 1828). Before and after this time it was sometimes called the Cisplatine State (Estado Cisplatino). See Estado Oriental.

Cissey (sē-sā'), Ernest Louis Octave Courtot de. Born at Paris, Dec. 23, 1811; died at Paris, June 15, 1882. A French general and politician. He served with distinction in Algeria, in the Crimea, in the Franco-German war, and in the war against the Commune, 1871. He was minister of war 1871-73 and 1874-76.

Cis-Sutlej (sis-sut'lej) States. A name formerly given to a territorial division of British India, south of the Sutlej. The states are now incorporated in the Panjab.

Citania (sē-tā'nē-ā). A prehistoric village near Braga, in the province of Douro, Portugal. It is probably Celtic, and has recently been excavated. There are a number of circular buildings, with granite walls, about 20 feet in diameter, and some of rectangular plan. Streets and buildings are paved, and roofing tiles abound. The circular structures had conical roofs. Two buildings have been restored as specimens.

Citeaux (sē-tō'). A village in the department of Côte-d'Or, France, 12 miles south of Dijon. It is celebrated for its abbey, founded 1098, the headquarters formerly of the Cistercian order.

Citharon (si-thē'ron). [Gr. Κίθαρόν.] In ancient geography, a range of mountains separating Boeotia from Megaris and Attica. It was celebrated in Greek legend, and was sacred to Zeus and to Dionysus. It is now called Elatea.

Citizen, The. A farce by Arthur Murphy (1763).

Civil War, The. The war between Charles I. of England and the party of Parliament.

Civil War, American, or the War of Secession. A civil war in the United States, 1861-65. Its chief causes were the antislavery agitation and the development of the doctrine of State sovereignty. The former had been gaining force since the Missouri Compromise, and especially since the Wilmot proviso, the Mexican war, the Omnibus Bill, and the Kansas-Nebraska trouble (see these titles). The latter found expression in the Kentucky resolutions, nullification, and especially in the teachings of Calhoun. The immediate occasion of the war was the election of Lincoln in 1860, which was followed by the secession of 11 States (see Confederate States). Leading events—In 1861: Fort Sumter fired on (April 12); surrender of Fort Sumter (April 13); President Lincoln's call for volunteers (April 15); battles of Bull Run (July 21) and Wilson's Creek (Aug. 10); seizure of Mason and Seward—"the Trent affair" (Nov. 8).—In 1862: Battle of Mill Spring (Jan. 19); capture of Fort Henry (Feb. 6); battle and capture of Fort Donelson (Feb. 13-16); battle of the Monitor and Merrimac (March 9); capture of Newbern (March 14); battle of Shiloh (April 6, 7); siege of Yorktown (April-May); passage of the New Orleans forts (April 24); battles of Williamsburg (May 5) and Fair Oaks (May 31, June 1); Seven Days' Battles—Mechanicsville, Gaines's Mill, Frayser's Farm, Malvern (June 25-July 1); battles of Cedar Mountain (Aug. 9), (2d) Bull Run (Aug. 30), Chantilly (Sept. 1), South Mountain (Sept. 14), Antietam (Sept. 17), Iuka (Sept. 19), Corinth (Oct. 4), Fredericksburg (Dec. 13), and Murfreesboro (Dec. 31-Jan. 2, 1863).—In 1863: Emancipation Proclamation (Jan. 1); battle of Chancellorsville (May 1-4); Vicksburg campaign—battles of Grand Gulf (April 29, May 3), Raymond (May 12), Jackson (May 14), and Champion's Hill (May 16), and the fall of Vicksburg (July 4); battles of Gettysburg (July 1-3), Chickamauga (Sept. 19, 20), and Chattanooga (Nov. 23-25).—In 1864: Battles of the Wilderness and Spotsylvania (May 5-7, etc.); battles of Sherman's advance in northern Georgia (May and June); battle of Cold Harbor (June 1-3); defeat of the Alabama by the Kearsarge (June 19); battles of Atlanta (July 20, 22); naval victory at Mobile (Aug. 5); battles of Winchester (Sept. 19) and Cedar Creek (Oct. 19); reelection of Lincoln (Nov. 8); march through Georgia to the sea (Nov.-Dec.); battle of Nashville (Dec. 15, 16).—In 1865: Surrender of Fort Fisher (Jan. 15); battles of Averysboro (March 16), Bentonville (March 19-21), and Five Forks (April 1); surrender of Richmond (April 3); surrender of Lee's army at Appomattox (April 9); surrender of Johnston's army (April 26); and the surrender of Kirby Smith (May 26). The theater of the war was mainly in the Southern and border States. The Federal army numbered about 1,000,000 at the close of the war, and the number of Confederates enrolled during the war was probably about the same. The Federal losses amounted to about 360,000; those of the Confederates to about 300,000.

Classis (klas'is). [L.] See the quotation.

The town of Ravenna was already three miles distant from the sea (no doubt owing to a previous alteration of the coast line), but he [Augustus] improved the then existing harbour, to which he gave the appropriate name of Classis, and connected it with the old town by a causeway, about which clustered another intermediate town called Cæsarea. Classis, then, in the days of the Roman emperors was a busy port and arsenal—Wapping and Chatham combined—capable of affording anchorage to 250 vessels, resounding with all the noises of men "whose cry is in their ships." Go to it now, and you find one of the loneliest of all lonely moors, not a house, scarcely a cottage in sight: only the glorious church of San Apollinare in Classe, which, reared in the sixth century by command of Justinian, still stands, though the bases of its columns are green with damp, yet rich in the unfaded beauty of its mosaics. Hodgkin, Italy and her Invaders, I, 435.

Clatsop (klăt'sop). A tribe of the Lower Chinook division of North American Indians. They formerly lived at Cape Adams, on the south side of Columbia River, Oregon, up that river to Tongue Point, and southward, along the Pacific coast, nearly to Tillamook Head, Oregon. There are still a few survivors residing about six miles above the mouth of the Columbia River in Oregon, and also a few on the Grande Ronde reservation in the same State. See Chinookan.

Claude (klād; F. pron. klöd), Jean. [F. Claude, from L. Claudius.] Born at La Sauvotat, near Agen, France, 1619; died at The Hague, Netherlands, Jan. 13, 1687. A celebrated French Protestant clergyman and controversialist. He was pastor of La Treyne, then at Saint-Affrique, and then at Nîmes where he was also professor of theology, and in 1661 was prohibited from exercising his ecclesiastical functions. In 1662 he was appointed pastor and professor of theology at Montauban, but was suspended in 1666. He retired to Holland on the revocation of the Edict of Nantes. His chief work is a "Défense de la réformation" (1673).

Claude d'Abbeville (klöd äb-bè-vèl'). Died at Rouen, 1616. A French Capuchin, a native of Abbeville. From 1612 to 1614 he was a missionary in the French colony of Maranhão, in Brazil. His "Histoire de la mission des pères Capucins en l'Isle de Maragnan" (Paris, 1614) is of great historical and ethnological value. It is now very rare. There is a modern Portuguese translation (Maranhão, 1874).

Claude Lorrain (klād lo-rän'; F. pron. klöd lo-rän') (real name, Claude Gellée or Gellée). Born at Chamagne, Vosges, France, 1600; died at Rome, Nov. 21, 1682. A celebrated French landscape-painter. Taken in 1613 to Rome by a relative, he went thence to Naples, where he spent two years as a pupil of Godfrey Wals, a painter from Cologne. From 1619 to 1625 he lived in Rome, working as an apprentice and valet to Agostino Passi, who was employed by the Cardinal di Montalto to decorate his palace. After this he returned to Lorraine by Venice and the Tyrol. At Nancy he found employment in decorating the Chapelle des Carmes, for Duke Charles III., with figures and architectural ornaments, until the middle of the year 1627, when he returned to Rome to remain for the rest of his life. By 1634 Claude had become a celebrity in Rome, and had painted many pictures. The "Liber Veritatis," a collection of two hundred outline drawings of his paintings (often engraved and published) was begun about 1634 and finished March 25, 1675. The "Claude Lorrain mirror" is so called from the fancied similarity of its effects to his pictures.

Claudia Quinta (klä'di-ä kwin'tij). In Roman legend, a woman, probably the sister of Appius Claudius Pulcher. In 206 B. C., when the ship conveying the image of Cybele stuck fast in a shallow at the mouth of the Tiber and the soothsayers announced that only a chaste woman could move it, she cleared herself from an accusation of incontinency by stepping forward from among the matrons who had accompanied Scipio to receive the image, and towing the vessel to Rome.

Claudio (klä'di-ö). 1. A young Florentine in love with Hero, in Shakspeare's "Much Ado about Nothing." He falls too easily into belief in Hero's dishonor.—2. The lover of Juliet in Shakspeare's "Measure for Measure." According to an old law, newly put in force, he is about to be executed for his intercourse with her, though he considers himself her husband. He is saved by his sister Isabella.

Claudius (klä'di-us) I. (Tiberius Claudius Drusus Nero Germanicus). [L., 'lame'; It. Sp. Claudio, F. Claude.] Born at Lugdunum, Gaul, Aug. 1, 10 B. C.; died 54 A. D. Emperor of Rome 41-54. He was the grandson of Tiberius Claudius Nero and Livia, who afterward married Augustus, and son of Drusus and Antonia, the daughter of Marc Antony. Being feeble in mind and body, he was excluded from public affairs by his predecessor, although the empty honor of a consulship was bestowed on him in 37 by his nephew Caligula, on whose murder in 41 he was proclaimed emperor by the pretorian guards. Naturally of a mild and amiable disposition, his accession was signaled by acts of clemency and justice, which, however, under the influence of his third wife, the infamous Valeria Messalina, and his favorites, the freedmen Narcissus, Pallas, and others, were subsequently obscured by cruelty and bloodshed. He visited Britain in 43. In 49, after the execution of Messalina, who, during his absence at Ostia, had contracted a public marriage with Caius Silus, he married his niece Agrippina the younger. She persuaded him to set aside his own son Britannicus, and to adopt her son by a former marriage, L. Domitius, as his successor. Repenting of this step soon after, he was poisoned by Agrippina, and L. Domitius ascended the throne under the name of Nero. The famous Claudian aqueduct in Rome is named for him.

Claudius II. (Marcus Aurelius Claudius, surnamed Gothicus). Born in Dardania or Illyria, 214; died at Sirmium, Pannonia, 270 A. D. Emperor of Rome 268-270. He defeated the Alamanni in northern Italy in 268, and defeated the Goths near Naïssus, Mœsia, in 269.

Claudius. 1. The King of Denmark and uncle of Hamlet in Shakspeare's tragedy "Hamlet."—2. A servant of Brutus in Shakspeare's "Julius Cæsar."

Claudius, Appius, surnamed Cæcus ('the Blind'). Died after 280 B. C. A Roman statesman. He was censor 312-308, and consul 307 and 293. He commenced the Appian Way and completed the Appian aqueduct. From him Roman jurisprudence, oratory, grammar, and Latin prose date their beginning. He abolished the limitation of the full right of citizenship to landed proprietors.

Claudius (klon'dë-ös), Matthias. Born in Reinfeld, in Holstein, Aug. 15, 1740; died at Hamburg, Jan. 21, 1815. A German poet. He studied at Jena, and settled afterward in Wandsbeck, near Altona, where, under the name of Asmus, he published a weekly periodical, "Der Wandsbecker Bote." He was the author of numerous lyrics, some of which have become genuine folk-songs. A collection of his works with the title "Asmus omnia sua secum portans, oder Sammtliche Werke des Wandsbecker Boten" appeared at Hamburg 1775-1812.

Clearchus (klē-är'kus). [Gr. Κλέαρχος.] Born at Sparta: executed by Artaxerxes, 401 B. C. A Lacedæmonian general. He fought under Mindarus at the battle of Cyzicus 410. In 408 his tyrannous conduct as harshmost during the siege of Byzantium by the Athenians led to the surrender of the city by the inhabitants during his absence in Asia, whither he had gone to collect a force to raise the siege. In 406 he fought under Callicratidas at the battle of Arginusæ. After the Peloponnesian war he persuaded the ephors to send him as general to Thrace to protect the Greeks against the natives; and, having proceeded thither in spite of an order for his recall which overtook him on the way, was condemned to death. Defeated by a force sent against him under Pantoïdes, he fled to Cyrus the Younger, under whom he commanded a body of Greek mercenaries in the expedition against Artaxerxes, 401. After the battle of Cunaxa, in which Cyrus was killed, he was treacherously seized, with four other Grecian generals, by Tissaphernes at a conference, and sent to Artaxerxes, who ordered them to be put to death. The surviving Greeks, however, having chosen new generals, accomplished the famous retreat known as the "Retreat of the Ten Thousand." See Xenophon, Anabasis.

Cleaveland. See Cleveland.

Cleaveland (klēv'land), Parker. Born at Rowley, Mass., Jan. 15, 1780: died at Brunswick, Maine, Oct. 15, 1858. An American mineralogist. He was professor in Bowdoin College (Maine) 1805-58. He wrote "Mineralogy and Geology" (1816), etc.

Cleaver (klē'ver), Fanny. A deformed little dolls' dressmaker, called "Jenny Wren," in Charles Dickens's "Our Mutual Friend." "My back's bad and my legs are queer," is her frequent excuse, and she always describes herself with dignity as "the person of the house."

Cleef (klāf), Jan van. Born at Venlo, Netherlands, 1646: died at Ghent, Belgium, Dec. 18, 1716. A Flemish painter.

Cleishbotham (klēsh'both'am), Jedediah. The assumed compiler of the "Tales of My Landlord," by Walter Scott. A "Peter Pat-tieson" is credited with the authorship.

Cleisthenes (klis'the-nēz), or Clisthenes (klis'the-nēz). [Gr. Κλεισθένης.] An Athenian politician, son of Megacles, and grandson of Cleisthenes of Sicyon. He developed in a democratic spirit the constitution of Solon (adopted 594 B. C.) by substituting ten new for four old tribes, with a view to breaking up the influence of the land-owning aristocracy, the new tribes being composed not of contiguous demes or local communities, but of demes scattered through the country and interspersed with those of other tribes. He was expelled in 507 by Isagoras, leader of the aristocratic party, aided by a Spartan army under Cleomenes; but was recalled in the same year by the populace, which compelled the Spartans to withdraw and sent Isagoras into exile. He is said to have established the ostracism, or power of the sovereign popular assembly to decree, without process of law, by means of a secret ballot, the banishment of any citizen who endangered the public liberty.

Cleland (klē'land), John. Born 1709: died Jan. 23, 1789. An English writer. He was the author of the notorious novel "Fanny Hill, or the Memoirs of a Woman of Pleasure" (1749-50), and "Memoirs of a Coxcomb" (1751). He was consul at Smyrna, and in 1736 was in the service of the East India Company at Bombay. In the latter part of his life he wrote for the stage and also dabbled in philology.

Clelia (klē'h-ä), or Clélie (klä-lē'). A romance by Mademoiselle de Scudéry, published in 1656, named from its heroine.

Clémenceau (klā-mōn-sō'), Eugène. Born at Mouilleron-en-Pareds, Vendée, France, Sept. 28, 1841. A French radical politician. He studied medicine in Paris, entered the National Assembly in 1871, became president of the municipal council of Paris in 1875, and was elected to the Chamber of Deputies in 1876. In 1887 he declined an invitation to form a ministry. He suffered in the general wreck of French politicians caused by the Panama scandal in 1892, and failed of reelection in 1893.

Clemens Alexandrinus. See Clement of Alexandria.

Clemens (klem'enz), Samuel Langhorne: pseudonym Mark Twain. Born at Florida, Mo., Nov. 30, 1835. A noted American humorist. He was apprenticed to a printer at the age of thirteen; became a pilot on the Mississippi in 1851; went to Nevada in 1861, and became city editor of the "Enterprise" in Virginia City in 1862; removed to San Francisco in 1865; visited the Sandwich Islands in 1866; and traveled in Europe and the East in 1867. He resides in Hartford, Connecticut. In 1884 he established at New York the publishing-house of C. L. Webster and Co. His works include "The Innocents Abroad" (1869), "Roughing It" (1872), "A Tramp Abroad" (1880), "Jumping Frog, etc." (1887), "The Gilded Age," conjointly with C. D. Warner (1873; this has been successfully dramatized), "Adventures of Tom Sawyer" (1876), "Adventures of Huckleberry Finn" (1884), "A Yankee at the Court of King Arthur" (1889), etc.

Clement (klem'ent) I., Saint: also called Clemens Romanus (klē'menz rō-mā'nus) ('the Roman'). [L. Clemens, merciful, mild; It. Sp. Clemente, F. Clement, G. Clemens.] Lived in the 1st century A. D.: died probably about 100. A bishop of Rome: according to the common tradition, the third bishop of Rome after St. Peter. Nothing is known with certainty concerning his personal history, except that he was a prominent presbyter of the Christian congregation at Rome immediately after the apostolic age. He is by some identified with the Clement mentioned by Paul in Phil. iv. 3 as his fellow-laborer, by others with the consular Flavius Clemens who was put to death by Domitian on a charge of atheism. Tradition has reckoned him among the martyrs; but according to Eusebius and Jerome, he died a natural death in the third year of the reign of Trajan. Numerous writings, most of which are evidently spurious, have been attributed to him. The most celebrated among these are two "Epistles to the Corinthians," which were held in the greatest esteem by the early Christians. They disappeared from the Western Church after the 5th century, and were rediscovered in the Codex Alexandrinus (a present from Cyrillus Lucaris to Charles I.) by Patricius Junius (Patrick Young), who published them at Oxford in 1633. Another MS. was discovered by Philotheos Bryennios in the convent library of the patriarch of Jerusalem, and published in 1875.

Clement II. (Suidgar). Died at Pesaro, Italy, Oct. 9, 1047. Pope 1046-47.

Clement III. (Guibert). Died at Ravenna, Italy, 1100. An archbishop of Ravenna, elected pope (antipope), through the influence of the emperor Henry IV., in 1080. After having been expelled from Rome, he made his submission to Paschal II. in 1099.

Clement III. (Paolo Scolari). Born at Rome. Died March, 1191. Pope 1187-91. He preached the third Crusade against the Saracens, who under Saladin had retaken Jerusalem, Oct. 3, 1187.

Clement IV. (Guy Foulques). Born at St. Gilles on the Rhône, France: died at Viterbo, Italy, Nov. 29, 1268. Pope 1265-68. He held a high position at the court of Louis IX., when the death of his wife led him to enter the church. He became bishop of Puy 1256, archbishop of Narbonne 1259, cardinal 1262, and was on a journey to England as papal legate when he was elevated to the see of Rome, 1265. He favored Charles of Anjou in his conquest of Naples, which was ruled by Manfred, the illegitimate son of the emperor Frederick II., and which had been granted to Charles by the preceding pontiff, Urban IV.

Clement V. (Bertrand d'Agout). Born near Bordeaux, France, about 1264: died at Roque-maure, in Languedoc, France, April 20, 1314. Pope 1305-14. He was elected through the influence of Philip the Fair of France, to please whom he removed the papal residence to Avignon in 1309, and dissolved the order of Templars in 1312.

Clement VI. (Pierre Roger). Born near Limoges, France, 1292: died at Villeneuve d'Avignon, France, Dec., 1352. Pope 1342-52. He established the jubilee for every fifty years, and purchased Avignon in 1348. During his pontificate Cola di Rienzi attempted to reestablish the republic at Rome.

Clement VII. (Count Robert of Geneva). Born about 1342: died at Avignon, Sept., 1394. An antipope elected 1378 in opposition to Urban VI.

Clement VII. (Giulio de' Medici). Born at Florence about 1475: died at Rome, Sept., 1534. Pope 1523-34. He was the illegitimate son of Giuliano de' Medici, and cousin of Leo X. He entered into a league with France, Venetia, and Milan against the emperor Charles V., and in 1527 Rome was stormed and sacked by the troops of the constable de Bourbon and Clement made prisoner. He was released and fled to Orvieto Dec. 9, 1527, but concluded a peace with Charles in 1529, and crowned him emperor at Bologna in 1530. He forbade (1534) the divorce of Henry VIII. of England from Catharine of Aragon.

Clement VIII. (Ægidius Nuños). Antipope 1424-29. He resigned in 1429, thus terminating the great Western schism.

Clement VIII. (Ippolito Aldobrandini). Born at Fano, Italy, 1536: died March 5, 1605. Pope 1592-1605. He absolved Henry IV. of France in 1595, and ordered a revised edition (the "Clementine") of the Vulgate in 1592.

Clement IX. (Giulio Rospigliosi). Born at Pistoja, Italy, 1600: died Dec. 9, 1669. Pope 1667-69. He mediated in 1668 the peace of Aix-la-Chapelle between Louis XIV. and Spain, and the "Pax Clementina," which brought the Jansenist controversy to a temporary conclusion.

Clement X. (Emilio Altieri). Born at Rome, July 13, 1590: died July 22, 1676. Pope 1670-76. He was eighty years old at his election, and was completely under the influence of his relative Cardinal Paluzzi. During his pontificate commenced the controversy with Louis XIV. concerning the enjoyment, during vacancy, of episcopal revenues and benefices, and the right of appointment to such vacancies.

Clement XI. (Giovanni Francesco Albani). Born at Pesaro, Italy, July 22, 1649: died March 19, 1721. Pope 1700-21. He was at war with the emperor Joseph I. 1708-09, and published bulls directed against the Jansenists: "Vincam Domini" (1705) and "Unigenitus" (1713).

Clement XII. (Lorenzo Corsini). Born 1652: died Feb. 6, 1740. Pope 1730-40. He condemned the Freemasons in 1738.

Clement XIII. (Carlo della Torre di Rezzonico). Born at Venice, March, 1693: died Feb., 1769. Pope 1758-69. He was elected through the influence of the Jesuits, in whose favor he issued a bull on their expulsion from Portugal and France. In 1768 the French seized Avignon, and the Neapolitans Benevento.

Clement XIV. (Giovanni Vincenzo Antonio Ganganelli). Born at St. Arcangelo, near Rimini, Italy, Oct. 31, 1705: died Sept. 22, 1774. Pope 1769-74. He suppressed the order of Jesuits by the brief "Dominus ac Redemptor noster" (1773), and founded the Clementine Museum at the Vatican.

Clément (klā-mōn'), François. Born at Beze, near Dijon, France, 1714: died March, 1793. A French historian, a Benedictine of Saint-Maur. He compiled from the tables of Maurice d'Antine the important chronological work "L'Art de vérifier les dates des faits historiques depuis la naissance de Jesus-Christ" (new revised and improved edition 1784-87).

Clément, Jacques, called Clemens non Papa to distinguish him from Pope Clement VII. Died before 1558. A once celebrated Flemish composer, principally of sacred music: chief chapel-master to the emperor Charles V.

Clément, Jacques. Born at Sorbon, Ardennes, France, about 1565: killed at St. Cloud, France, Aug. 1, 1589. A fanatical monk who assassinated Henry III., with the consent and aid of his religious superior and other members of the "League," Aug. 1, 1589. He was slain on the spot, and was honored as a martyr by the church.

Clément, Jean Pierre. Born at Draguignan, Var, France, June 2, 1809: died at Paris, Nov. 8, 1870. A French political economist and historian, member of the French Institute. His works include "Histoire de la vie et de l'administration de Colbert" (1846), "Le gouvernement de Louis XIV." (1848), "Jacques Cœur et Charles VII." (1853), etc.

Clement, Justice. A city magistrate in Ben Jonson's "Every Man in his Humour."

Clement (klā'ment), Knut Jungbohn. Born in Amrum, Schleswig, Dec. 4, 1803: died at Bergen, N. J., Oct. 7, 1873. A Danish historian, resident in the United States after 1866. He wrote "Die nordgermanische Welt" (1840), "Die Lebens- und Leidensgeschichte der Friesen" (1845), etc.

Clement (klem'ent) of Alexandria (Titus Flavius Clemens). Born, probably at Athens, about 150 A. D.: died in Palestine about 220. A father of the primitive church, head of the catechetical school at Alexandria 190-203, and one of the most noted of the founders of the Alexandrian school of theology.

Clement of Rome. See Clement I., Bishop of Rome.

Clementi (klā-men'tē), Muzio. Born at Rome, 1752: died at Evesham, near London, March 9, 1832. An Italian pianist and composer, resident in England after 1770. His principal work is a series of piano studies, "Gradus ad Parnassum" (1817).

Clementina (klem-en-tē'nā), Lady. An Italian lady passionately in love with Sir Charles Grandison, in Richardson's novel of that name. When she fears that her relative will separate her from him, she takes the decided step of going mad. Sir Charles, however, marries Miss Byron.

Clement's Inn. An inn of court in London, situated at the entrance of Wych street, at the west of the New Law Courts. It was formerly intended for the use of patients who came to use the waters of St. Clement's Well, which was near. Dugdale speaks of it as being in existence in the reign of Edward II. as an inn of chancery. Shakspere speaks of it as the home of "Master Shallow."

Clelland (klen'el), Luke. Born at Ugham, near Morpeth, Northumberland, England, April 8, 1781; died Feb. 9, 1840. An English painter and wood-engraver, an apprentice and pupil of Thomas Bewick. His best-known painting is the "Waterloo Charge." For many years before his death he was insane.

Cleobis (klē'ō-bis). [Gr. Κλεόβιστος.] See Biton. Cleobulus (klē-ō-bū'lus). [Gr. Κλεόβουλος.] Born at Lindus, Rhodes; died probably after 560 B. C. One of the seven sages of Greece, the reputed author of various riddles and songs.

Cleofas (klē'ō-fas). Don. A high-spirited Spanish student in Le Sage's novel "Le diable boiteux." Amodeus exhibits to him the fortunes of the inmates of the houses of Madrid by unroosting them. See Amodeus and Diablo boiteux, Le.

Cléomadés (klā-ō-mā-dās'), Adventures of. An early French poem (about the end of the 13th century), also known as "Le cheval de fust" ('the Wooden Horse'), by Adenès le Roi. Its central incident is the introduction of a wooden horse, like that in the "Arabian Nights," which transports its rider whithersoever he wishes to go. The poem, notwithstanding its length (20,000 lines), enjoyed very great popularity.

Cleombrotus (klē-om'brō-tūs) I. [Gr. Κλεόμυβροτος.] Killed at Leuctra, 371 B. C. A king of Sparta 380-371. He waged war with the Thebans, and was defeated by them at Leuctra.

Cleomedes (klē-ō-mē'dēz). [Gr. Κλεομένηδης.] A Greek astronomer whose birthplace, residence, and era are unknown. He wrote a treatise on astronomy and cosmography, entitled "The Circular Theory of the Heavenly Bodies," in which he maintains that the earth is spherical, that the number of the fixed stars is infinite, and that the moon's rotation on its axis is performed in the same time as its synodical revolution about the earth. His treatise contains also the first notice of the theory of atmospheric refraction.

Cleomenes (klē-om'ē-nēz) I. [Gr. Κλεομένης.] King of Sparta from about 519-491 B. C. He expelled Hippias from Athens in 510.

Cleomenes III. King of Sparta 236-220 B. C. He abolished the ephorate 225, waged war with the Achaean League and Macedonia 225-221, and was defeated at Selasia 221.

Cleomenes. A Sicilian noble in Shakspere's "Winter's Tale."

Cleomenes, or The Spartan Hero. A play by Dryden. Part of the fifth act is by Southerne. It was acted in 1692.

Cleon (klē'on). [Gr. Κλέων.] Killed at Amphipolis, Macedonia, 422 B. C. An Athenian demagogue. Coming forward shortly after the death of Pericles as leader of the democratic party, he violently opposed Nicias, the head of the aristocratic party, who advocated peace with Sparta and the conclusion of the Peloponnesian war. Having conducted a successful expedition against the Spartans at Pylæa in 425, he was in 422 intrusted with the command of an expedition destined to act against Brasidas in Chalcidice. He was defeated by the latter at Amphipolis, and fell in the fight. He was satirized by Aristophanes in the "Knights" (425), and in other plays.

Cleon. In Shakspere's "Pericles," the governor of Tharsus, burned to death to revenge the supposed murder of Marina.

Cléonte (klā-ōnt'). The lover of Lucille in Molière's comedy "Le bourgeois gentilhomme."

Cleopatra (klē-ō-pā'trī). [Gr. Κλεοπάτρα.] Born at Alexandria, Egypt, 69 B. C.; died at Alexandria, 30 B. C. The last queen of Egypt, daughter of Ptolemy Auletes. She was joint ruler with her brother Ptolemy from 51 to 49, when she was expelled by him. Her reinstatement in 48 by Cæsar gave rise to war between Cæsar and Ptolemy. The latter was defeated and killed, and his younger brother was elevated to the throne in his stead. Cleopatra lived with Cæsar at Rome from 46 to 44, and had by him a son, Cæsarion, who was afterward put to death by Octavianus. She returned to Egypt on the murder of Cæsar, and in the civil war which ensued sided with the Triumvirate. Antony having been appointed ruler of Asia and the East, she visited him at Tarsus in 41, making a voyage of extraordinary splendor and magnificence up the Cydnus. She gained by her charms a complete ascendancy over him. On her account he divorced his wife Octavia, the sister of Octavianus, in 32. Octavianus declared war against her in 31. The fleet of Antony and Cleopatra was defeated in the same year at the battle of Actium, which was decided by the flight of Cleopatra, who was followed by Antony. After the death of Antony, who killed himself on hearing a false report of her death, she poisoned herself to avoid being exhibited in Rome at the triumph of Octavianus. According to the popular belief, she applied to her bosom an asp that had been secretly conveyed to her in a basket of figs. She had three children by Antony. Besides extraordinary charms of person, she possessed an active and cultivated mind, and is said to have been able to converse in seven languages. Shakspere's portrait of her in his "Antony and Cleopatra" is one of the most extraordinary of his creations.

If Cleopatra's death had been caused by any serpent, the small viper would rather have been chosen than the large asp; but the story is disproved by her having decked herself in "the royal ornaments," and being found dead "without any mark of suspicion of poison on her body." Death from a serpent's bite could not have been mistaken; and her vanity would not have allowed her to choose one which would have disfigured her in so frightful a manner. Other poisons were well understood and easy of access, and no boy would have ventured to carry an asp in a basket of figs, some of which he even offered to the guards as he passed; and Plutarch (Vit. Anton.) shows that the story of the asp was doubted. Nor is the statue carried in Augustus' triumph which had an asp upon it any proof of his belief in it, since that snake was the emblem of Egyptian royalty; the statue (or the crown) of Cleopatra could not have been without one, and this was probably the origin of the whole story. [G. W.]

Raukinson, Herod., II. 123, note.

Cleopatra's Needles. A pair of Egyptian obelisks of pink granite which were transported from Heliopolis to Alexandria in the eighth year of Augustus. One of them was taken to London and set up on the Thames embankment in 1878, and the other was soon after brought to New York and erected in Central Park. The latter is 67 feet high to its sharp apex, and 7 feet 7 inches in diameter at the base. It stands on a massive cube of granite, on which it is supported by four great bronze crabs, imitating the ancient originals. It is covered on all its faces with deeply incised hieroglyphs, which present the names of Thothmes III., Rameses II., and Seti II. (16th-14th centuries B. C.).

Cléopâtre (klā-ō-pā'tr). A play by Sardon (with Moreau). It was written for Sarah Bernhardt, and produced in 1890.

Cleophon (klē'ō-fon). [Gr. Κλεοφών.] Died 405 B. C. An Athenian demagogue, said to have been of Thracian origin. He opposed the oligarchical party, and successfully used his influence to prevent peace with Sparta after the battles of Cyzicus (410), Arginusæ (406), and Egospotami (405). He was put to death in 405 by the Athenian council.

Cleopolis (klē-op'ō-lis). A name given by Spenser in his "Faerie Queene" to the city of London.

Clerc, Jean Le. See Le Clerc, Jean.

Cochrane, Thomas. Born at Annsfield, in Lanarkshire, Dec. 14, 1775; died at Kensington, England, Oct. 31, 1860. A Scottish noble (tenth Earl of Dundonald) and British naval commander. He was appointed vice-admiral Nov. 23, 1841, admiral March 21, 1851, and rear-admiral of the United Kingdom Oct. 23, 1854. On May 6, 1801, in the Speedy, a small and poorly armed vessel with 54 men, he captured the Spanish frigate Elgamo of 600 tons and 319 men. He entered Parliament in 1806. On April 11, 1809, he attacked a French fleet in Aix roads, and destroyed four of the enemy's vessels. In Feb., 1814, Cochrane was accused of complicity in originating a fraudulent report of Napoleon's death for speculative purposes, and, though he claimed to be entirely innocent, was imprisoned for a year, fined, and expelled from the navy and from the House of Commons. His constituents stood by him, and at once returned him again to Parliament. Accepting an invitation to organize the infant navy of Chile, he reached Valparaiso Nov., 1818. During the subsequent campaign, with only one frigate and a few old vessels, he managed to neutralize the powerful Spanish squadron; took Valdivia in Feb., 1820; transported San Martin's army to Peru; blockaded Callao, and performed the feat of cutting out a Spanish frigate from under the guns of the castle (Nov. 5, 1820), and contributed greatly to the capture of Lima. Owing to quarrels with San Martin and the Chilean authorities, he left their service, and from March, 1823, to 1825 commanded the Brazilian navy; during this time he recovered Bahia and Maranhão from the Portuguese. Accused of insubordination, he resigned. In 1827 and 1828 he commanded the Greek navy, but accomplished nothing. In 1832 he was virtually exonerated from the charges on which he had been imprisoned in 1814, and was restored to the Order of the Bath and to his rank in the British navy.

Cochut (kō-shū'), André. Born at Paris, 1812; died there, Jan. 18, 1890. A French publicist.

Cockaigne, Cocagne (kō-kān'). [Also Cockayne, etc., in various archaic forms, after ME. cockaigne, cokeyne, cockaigne, cokeyne, cocaigne, etc., from OF. coecaigne, cokeyne, coquaigne, co-caigne, coquoingne, F. coecagne (= Sp. cuecaña, = Pg. cucanha = It. cocagna, cucagna, now cucagna), profit, advantage, abundance, a time of abundance; pays de cocagne, Land of Cocagne (It. "Cocagna, as we say, Lubberland"; "Cucagna, the epicures or gluttons home, the land of all delights; so taken in mockery"—Florio); ML. Cocania, an imaginary country of luxury and idleness; prob. lit. 'Cake-land,' Usually associated with cockney, but there is no original connection.] A fabled land of perfect happiness and luxury, intended to ridicule the stories of the mythical Avalon, an isle in the west, prevalent in medieval times. Its houses were built of good things to eat; roast geese went slowly down the streets, turning themselves and inviting the passers-by to eat them; buttered larks fell in profusion; the shingles of the houses even were of cake; and the rivers ran wine. The English poets of the 16th century called it Lubberland.

Cockburn (kō'bērn), Sir Alexander James Edmund. Born Dec. 24, 1802; died at London, Nov. 21, 1880. A noted British jurist of Scotch descent, lord chief justice of England. A noted English jurist. He was speaker of the House of Commons in 1592-93, attorney-general 1593-94, chief justice of the Common Pleas 1606, and chief justice of the King's Bench 1613. He came into conflict with the king and Bacon on matters touching the royal prerogative, especially the right of granting commendams, and was removed from the bench Nov. 15, 1616. Among the noted cases which he conducted as prosecutor are those of Essex and Southampton in 1601, of Sir Walter Raleigh in 1603 (in which he disgraced himself by the brutality of his language), and of the gunpowder plotters in 1605. In the latter part of his life he rendered notable service, in Parliament, to the cause of English freedom, his last important speech being a direct attack on Buckingham. His chief works are his "Reports" (1600-15) and his "Institutes," which consist of a reprint and translation of Littleton's "Tenures" with a commentary (popularly known as "Coke upon Littleton"); the text of various statutes from Magna Charta to the time of James I., with a commentary; a treatise on criminal law; and a treatise on the jurisdiction of the different law-courts.

Coke, Thomas. Born at Brecon, South Wales, Sept. 9, 1747; died at sea, May 2, 1814. A British preacher and missionary, first bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church (1784). He wrote a "Commentary on the Holy Scriptures" (1807), "History of the West Indies" (1808), etc.

Coke, Thomas William. Born May 4, 1752; died at Longford Hall, Derbyshire, June 30, 1842. An English nobleman and Whig politician, created earl of Leicester of Holkham and Viscount Coke Aug. 12, 1837. He was the son of Thomas Weeman, and assumed the name Coke on succeeding to the estate of his maternal uncle, Thomas Coke, earl of Leicester. He is best known for his improvements in agriculture on his estates about Holkham, Norfolk, especially in the breeds of cattle, sheep, and pigs.

Cokes (kōks), Bartholomew. A foolish young squire in Jonson's comedy "Bartholomew Fair."

Cokes is unquestionably the most finished picture of a simpleton that the mimetic art ever produced. With sufficient natural powers to take from us all sense of uneasiness at his exposure, he is forever wanting on the verge of imbecility. His childish but insatiable curiosity, his eagerness to possess every object within his reach, his total abandonment of himself to every amusement that offers, his incapacity of receiving more than one of two events at a time, with his anxious fears that the other will escape him, joined to the usual concomitants of folly, selfishness, cunning, and occasional fits of obstinacy.

Gifford, Notes to Jonson (Bartholomew Fair), II. 210.

Colada (kō-lä'ñä). [Sp.] The second sword of the Cid.

Colapur. See Kolhapur.

Colban (kol'bän), Madame (Adolfine Marie Schmidt). Born at Christiania, Norway, Dec. 18, 1814. A Norwegian novelist. Her works include "Tre Noveller" (1873), "Tre nye Noveller" (1875), "Jeg lever" (1877), "Cleopatra" (1880), etc.

He entered the army in 1794; served under Wellington in Portugal, France, and Spain 1809-14; fought with distinction at the battle of Waterloo in 1815; was appointed lieutenant-governor of Guernsey in 1825; and in 1830 became lieutenant-governor of Upper Canada, a post which he resigned on being promoted to lieutenant-general in 1838. He returned to England in 1839, after having in the mean time quelled the Canadian rebellion, and in the same year was raised to the peerage as Lord Seaton of Seaton in Devonshire. He was promoted general in 1854, was commander of the forces in Ireland 1855-60, and was created field-marshal in 1860.

Colbrand (kōl'brand), or Coldbrand (kōld'brand). A Danish giant, slain by Gouf of Warwick. There is some slight foundation of fact in this legend. See Guy of Warwick.

Colburn (kōl'börn), Warren. Born at Dedham, Mass., March 1, 1793; died at Lowell, Mass., Sept. 15, 1833. An American mathematician, best known as a writer on arithmetic.

Colburn, Zerah. Born at Cabot, Vt., Sept. 1, 1804; died at Norwich, Vt., March 2, 1840. An American, celebrated during his boyhood as an arithmetical prodigy.

Colby (kōl'bi) University. An institution of learning situated at Waterville, Maine. It was organized in 1820, and previous to 1867 was called Waterville College. It is under the control of the Baptists.

Colcampata (kōl-käim-pä'tä). [Quechua, 'terrace of the granaries.'] A series of artificial terraces at the foot of the Saesahuaman hill, north of and overlooking the city of Cuzco, Peru. Under the Inca sovereigns they were a sort of sacred garden; every year the Inca himself broke the soil there as a signal that the season of planting had commenced, and there he plucked the first ears of the harvest. These ceremonies were celebrated by festivals. The Colcampata palace was at the base of the terraces, and portions of it remain in a good state of preservation.

Colchester (kōl'ches-tēr). A town in Essex, England, situated on the Colne in lat. 51° 54' N., long. 0° 54' E.: the Roman Camulodunum, and the Anglo-Saxon Colneceaster. It has long been famous for its oyster-fishery, and contains many Roman antiquities, including Roman walls. It has a castle and the ruins of St. Botolph's Priory and of a Benedictine monastery. The castle is the most powerful Norman military structure in England. The dimensions of the keep are 168 by 126 feet, and its walls vary in thickness from 11 to 30 feet. In one portion of the walls appears Roman herring-bone work in brick. The chapel is now a museum of Roman antiquities. Camulodunum was the earliest Roman colony in Britain, and was destroyed by the Iceni, but rebuilt. Later it became a stronghold, and was taken by Fairfax in 1648. Population (1891), 34,559.

The grand city of Camulodunum, or, as it is called in the Itinerary, Camalodunum, the capital of the British princes after they had submitted to the Romans, and the first Roman city in the island which was honoured with the rank of a colonia. History speaks of its temples and public buildings; and if, at an early period of its history, it was exposed to attack without walls of defence, that want was so well supplied at a subsequent period, that the ponderous masonry of its walls has endured to the present day, and ought never to have allowed anybody to hesitate in placing the site of this ancient city at Colchester. Wright, Celt, p. 134.

Colchester, Baron. See Abbot, Charles.

Colchis (kol'kis). [Gr. Κόλχίς.] In ancient geography, a country in Asia, lying between the Caucasus on the north, Iberia on the east, Armenia on the south, Pontus on the southwest, and the Euxine on the west; the modern Mingrelia. It was the legendary land of Medea and the Golden Fleece, and its inhabitants were famous for the manufacture of linen.

Cole, King. See King Cole.

Cole, Mrs. A character played by Foote in his comedy "The Mirror," a procuress whose pretended reformation was intended as a slur on the Methodists. She refers to her friend Dr. Squintum, which gave great offense, as he was at once identified with George Whitfield. She was a real person, a "Mother Douglass."

Cole, Thomas. Born at Bolton-le-Moors, Lancashire, England, Feb. 1, 1801; died at Catskill, N. Y., Feb. 11, 1848. A noted American landscape-painter. He came with his father to the United States in 1819, settled in Ohio, and in 1825 removed to New York. He aspired to be a painter of large historical, or rather allegorical, landscapes; and some of his productions in this line (as, for instance, those in the New York Historical Society's rooms) will always secure him a respectable place among the followers of the old school. He was a great lover of the Catskills and White Mountains.

Cole, Timothy. Born at London, April 6, 1852. A noted American wood-engraver, and leader of the new school of wood-engraving. His most important work is "Old Italian Masters," begun in 1883, published in 1892 (text by W. J. Stillman).

He was master of the grammar-school at Helston, Cornwall, 1825-1840; principal of St. Mark's College, Chelsea, 1841-64; and rector of Hawwell 1864-80.

Coleridge, Hartley. Born at Clevedon, Somersetshire, Sept. 19, 1796; died at Rydal, Westmoreland, Jan. 6, 1849. An English poet and man of letters, son of Samuel Taylor Coleridge. He published "Biographia borealis" (1833), republished as "Worthies of Yorkshire and Lancashire" (1836), and an edition of Massinger and Ford (1840), etc. His poetical and prose remains were edited by his brother Derwent Coleridge in 1851. His life was one of misfortune, due to an exceptionally sensitive, shy, and ineffectual character.

Coleridge, Henry Nelson. Born at Ottery St. Mary, England, Oct. 25, 1798; died Jan. 26, 1843. An English lawyer and man of letters, nephew of Samuel Taylor Coleridge, and husband of Sara Coleridge. He became his uncle's literary executor, and edited several of his works, besides publishing his "Table Talk."

Coleridge, Herbert. Born at Hampstead, England, Oct. 7, 1830; died at London, April 23, 1861. An English lawyer and philologist, son of Henry Nelson Coleridge, and grandson of Samuel Taylor Coleridge. He was one of the original promoters and practically the first general editor of the dictionary at first designed by the Philological Society to supply the deficiencies of Johnson's and Richardson's, but which in the hands of later editors has developed into the "New English Dictionary, on Historical Principles," in process of publication since 1884.

Coleridge, John Duke, Baron Coleridge. Born Dec. 3, 1820; died June 14, 1894. An English jurist, son of Sir John Taylor Coleridge. He became chief justice of the Court of Common Pleas in 1873, and lord chief justice of England in 1880.

Coleridge, Samuel Taylor. Born at Ottery St. Mary, Devonshire, England, Oct. 21, 1772; died at Highgate, London, July 25, 1834. An English poet, philosopher, and literary critic. He studied, with a short interruption, at Cambridge 1791-94, when he left without a degree. Soon after this he formed, with Southey, George Burnett, and others, the project of establishing a communistic society on the Susquehanna River, a scheme which was never executed owing to want of funds. He married Sara Fricker, the sister of Southey's wife, in 1795; and in the same year settled at Bristol, where the first volume of his poems was published in 1796. He began in 1796 the publication of a weekly periodical, entitled "The Watchman," of which only ten numbers appeared. In 1798 he published, in conjunction with Wordsworth, the "Lyrical Ballads," contributing the "Ancient Mariner," the "Nightingale," and two scenes from "Osorio" (afterward "Remorse"). In 1798 he accepted an annuity of £150 from the brothers Josiah and Thomas Wedgwood, and in the same year went to Germany, where he studied physiology and philosophy some months at the University of Göttingen. He returned to England in 1799, and in 1800 settled at Keswick, the home of Southey and Wordsworth. He was secretary to the governor of Malta 1804-05. Subsequently, owing to domestic difficulties, aggravated by his habit of taking opium, he separated from his wife and went to London, where he lectured to fashionable audiences on Shakspeare, the fine arts, and cognate subjects. In 1816 he became the guest of Mr. Gillman, a physician of London, in whose house he spent the rest of his life. Among his works are "Remorse, a Tragedy" (1813), "Christabel" (1816), "Biographia Literaria" (1817), "Aids to Reflection in the Formation of a Manly Character" (1825), etc., "Literary Remains" edited by H. N. Coleridge (1836-39), complete works edited by Shedd (1853-54).

Coligny, or Coligni (kō-lēn-yē' or kō-lēn'yē), Gaspard de. Born at Châtillon-sur-Loing, France, Feb. 16, 1517; killed at Paris, Aug. 24, 1572. A celebrated French general and Huguenot leader, son of Gaspard de Coligny, marshal of France. He was presented at the court of Francis I. by his uncle the constable Anne de Montmorency in 1537, was knighted by Condé on the field of Cérisolles in 1544, became admiral of France in 1562, and was taken prisoner of war by the Spaniards at St. Quentin in 1557. On his return to France he openly embraced Calvinism, and, taking advantage of his official position, made several attempts to establish colonies in America as places of refuge for the Huguenots, including the expedition of Jean Ribault in 1562 and that of Laudonnière in 1564. Civil war having broken out in 1562, he was chosen second in command of the Huguenot forces. The murder of the Prince of Condé after the battle of Jarnac (1569) placed him at the head of the Huguenot party until superseded by Henry of Navarre, in whose name he fought the disastrous battle of Moncontour the same year. His victory over the Catholics at Arzac-le-Duc June 27, 1570, however, resulted in the peace of St. Germain, concluded Aug. 8, 1570. On the occasion of the marriage of Henry of Navarre with Margaret of Valois, sister of Charles IX., he visited Paris, where, although treated with apparent cordiality by the king, he was murdered in his chamber in the presence of the Duke of Guise, falling as the first victim of the massacre of St. Bartholomew.

Colima (kō-lē'mā). 1. A state in Mexico, lying between Jalisco on the north, Michoacan on the east, and the Pacific Ocean on the west. Area, 2,704 square miles. Population (1892), 74,600.—2. Colle (kol'le), Raffaello dal, or Rafaellino dal. Born at or near San Sepolero, Tuscany, about 1490; died about 1540 (?). An Italian painter, pupil of Raphael (whence his surname Raffaellino).

Colleen Bawn (kol'ēn bān), The, or The Brides of Garry-Owen. A play by Dion Boucicault, founded on Gerald Griffin's novel "The Collegians." It was first played on Sept. 10, 1860. A novel with this title was published in 1861. See Collegians, The.

Collège de France (ko-lāzh' dē frāns), or Collège Royal. An institution of learning founded by Francis I. in 1529. It was designed to promote the more advanced tendencies of the time, and to counteract the scholasticism of the university. It at first consisted of four chairs for instruction in Greek and Hebrew. Later were added medicine, mathematics, philosophy (in the reign of Henry II.), eloquence, botany, Arabic (Henry III.), and Syriac (Louis XIII.). In 1789 there were 18 chairs; in 1835 there were 24 chairs. There are about 40 at the present time. The Collège Royal, or Collège de France, was at first dependent upon the university for lecture-rooms. In 1610 a new building was commenced, which has been finished in the present century.

Collège Mazarin (ko-lāzh' mā-zā-rān'). A college in Paris, founded by Mazarin, March 6, 1661. He endowed it, and gave it his library of 40,000 volumes. The building was erected on the site of the Tour de Nesle by the architect Le Van, and was finished in 1672. In 1674 the new college was incorporated in the university. Its object was the gratuitous instruction and sustenance of sixty sons of gentlemen living in the four newly acquired provinces, Flanders, Alsace, La Flandre, and Ronsillou; hence its name "Collège des Quatre Nations" ("College of the Four Nations").

College of the Four Nations. See Collège Mazarin.

College of William and Mary. See William and Mary College.

Collegians (kol-lē'ji-anz), The. A novel by Gerald Griffin, issued anonymously in 1829. In 1861 an edition was produced, illustrated by Phiz, and called "The Colleen Bawn, or The Collegian's Wife." See Colleen Bawn.

Collegiants (kol-lē'ji-ants). A sect founded near Leyden, Holland, in 1619, the societies of which are called colleges. The sect spread rapidly in the Netherlands, and is still maintained there and in Hanover. In doctrine and practice the Collegiants resemble the Quakers, having no creed or organized ministry; but they believe in the necessity of baptism, which they administer by immersion.

Colleoni (kol-lā-ō'ne), or Coleone (kō-lā-ō'ne), Bartolommeo. Born at Solza, near Bergamo, 1400; died Nov. 4, 1475. A noted Italian mercenary commander, the foremost tactician and disciplinarian of the 15th century. He was of an ancient and noble family which exercised a minor sovereignty over the province of Bergamo. He served in his youth under the principal condottieri, or mercenary generals, of the time; and in wars between Milan and Venice followed his advantage by serving either side at discretion. The Visconti of Milan cast him into prison, and the Council of Ten at Venice conspired for his assassination. In 1454 he finally became generalissimo of the land forces of Venice, and retained this post until his death. He was a patron of the arts. The most notable works which celebrate his greatness are the statue by Verrocchio and Leopardi in Venice, the best equestrian statue in existence (see Verrocchio and Leopardi); the castle of Malpaga, near Bergamo, with its frescos; and the Colleoni chapel in the Alta Città at Bergamo, with the tombs of Bartolommeo and his daughter Medea. The statue by Verrocchio stands before San Giovanni e Paolo in Venice. It was cast in 1496, and is the second equestrian statue of the Italian Renaissance. It characterizes with striking naturalism the haughty and formidable mercenary soldier. The rich marble pedestal has Corinthian columns and entablature.

Collet (kol'et), John. Born at London about 1725; died at Chelsea, Aug. 6, 1780. An English painter, chiefly of humorous scenes from low life.

Colleton (kol'e-ton), James. Governor of South Carolina 1686-90. He received with his appointment the dignity of landgrave and 48,000 acres of land. He attempted in vain to enforce the recognition of Locke's constitution by the colonial parliament. He was deposed and banished by the colonists on the proclamation of William and Mary, 1690.

Colletta (kol-let'tā), Pietro. Born at Naples, Jan. 23, 1775; died at Florence, Nov. 11, 1833. A Neapolitan general. He was made intendant of Calabria by Murat in 1808, obtained the rank of general in 1812, was one of the leaders of the constitutional party under the Bourbons, and on the outbreak of the revolution of 1820 was sent as viceroy to Sicily. He was named minister of war in Feb., 1821, but was banished through Austrian intervention and retired to Florence. He wrote "Storia del reame di Napoli 1734-1825" (1834).

Collierts. See Cagots.

Collier (kol'yēr), Arthur. Born at Langford Magna, Wiltshire, Oct. 12, 1680; died there, 1732. An English clergyman and metaphysical writer, rector of Langford after 1704. His chief work is his "Clavis Universalis, or a New Inquiry into Truth, being a Demonstration of the Non-existence or Impossibility of an External World" (1713), in which he propounds a subjective idealism closely resembling that of Berkeley.

Collier, Jeremy. Born at Stow-cum-Quy, Cambridgeshire, Sept. 23, 1650; died at London, April 26, 1726. An English nonjuring clergyman, celebrated as a controversialist. He was graduated at Cambridge in 1673, was rector of Amp-ton in Suffolk 1679-85, and removed to London in the latter year, where he was for some time lecturer at Gray's Inn. A political pamphlet in which he maintained that the withdrawal of the king was not an abdication, and that the throne was not vacant, caused his imprisonment for a short time in Newgate in 1688, and in 1692 he was again imprisoned, for political reasons. In 1696 he, with two other nonjuring clergymen, attended Sir John Friend and Sir William Parkyns (who were condemned to death as conspirators against the life of William) to the scaffold and absolved them, and, having concealed himself to avoid arrest, was outlawed (July 2). He wrote a large number of controversial pamphlets, a "Historical, Geographical, Genealogical, and Poetical Dictionary" (1701-21), a learned "Ecclesiastical History of Great Britain . . . to the End of the Reign of Charles II." (1708-14), and the famous "Short View of the Immorality and Profaneness of the English Stage" (1698). The last work was a vigorous attack upon the coarseness of the contemporary theater, and produced a great impression, forcing from Dryden a confession of fault and a declaration of repentance, and unwilling recognition from other dramatists, and initiating a reformation.

Collier, John Payne. Born at London, Jan. 11, 1789; died at Maidenhead, Sept. 17, 1883. An English journalist, lawyer, and Shakspearian critic. He was a reporter for the "Times" 1809-1821, and parliamentary reporter, dramatic and literary critic, and editorial writer for the "Morning Chronicle" 1821-47. In 1847 he was appointed secretary of the royal commission on the British Museum, and continued in that office until 1850, when he returned to Maidenhead. He published a new edition of Dodsley's "Old Plays" (1825-27), a "History of English Dramatic Poetry and Annals of the Stage" (1831), an edition of Shakspeare (1842-1844), "Shakspeare's Library" (1844), "A Booke of Roxburgie Ballads" (1847), "Extracts from the Registers of the Stationers' Company" (1848-49), "The Dramatic Works of Thomas Heywood" (1850-51), "The Works of Edmund Spenser" (1862), a "Biographical and Critical Account of the Rarest Books in the English Language" (1865), "An Old Man's Diary—Forty Years Ago" (1871-72), an edition of Shakspeare (1875-78). His able and useful work on the older English literature is marred and brought under general suspicion by a series of literary frauds which he committed, of which the most notable is his use and defense of spurious annotations "by a seventeenth century hand" which he professed to have found on the margin of a copy of the second folio Shakspeare originally belonging to one "Thomas Perkins," and since known as the "Perkins Folio."

Colline Gate (kol'in gāt). [L. porta collina.] A gate at the northeastern extremity of ancient Rome. Near here, Nov., 82 B. C., Sulla defeated the Samnites under Pontius.

Collingwood (kol'ing-wūd), Cuthbert. Born at Newcastle-on-Tyne, Sept. 26, 1750; died at sea near Port Mahon, Balearic Islands, March 7, 1810. A noted English admiral, created Lord Collingwood in 1805. He was appointed lieutenant for his services, with a party of seamen, at the battle of Bunker Hill; was promoted to commander (succeeding Nelson) in 1779; served with distinction in command of the Excellent in the battle off Cape St. Vincent, Feb. 14, 1797; became rear-admiral in 1799, with a command in the Channel fleet, and vice-admiral in 1804; was second in command at the battle of Trafalgar; and on Nelson's death, in that action, succeeded to the chief command.

Collingwood. A lake port in Simcoe County, Ontario, Canada, situated on Georgian Bay, Lake Huron, 72 miles northwest of Toronto. Population (1891), 4,940.

Collingwood. A northeastern suburb of Melbourne, Australia.

Collins (kol'inz), Anthony. Born at Heston or Isleworth, near London, June 21, 1676; died at London, Dec. 13, 1729. A noted English deist, a disciple and friend of John Locke. He published "An Essay Concerning the Use of Reason" (1707), "Priestcraft in Perfection" (1709), a "Discourse on Freethinking" (1713), "A Philosophical Enquiry Concerning Human Liberty" (1715), "A Discourse on the Grounds and Reasons of the Christian Religion" (1724), etc.

Collins, Charles Allston. Born at Hampstead, near London, Jan. 25, 1828; died at London, April 9, 1873. An English painter (of the Preraphaelite school) and writer, brother of William Wilkie Collins. He married the younger daughter of Charles Dickens.

Collins, John. Born at Bath, England, about 1742; died at Birmingham, England, May 2, 1808. An English actor and poet.

Collins, Mortimer. Born at Plymouth, England, June 29, 1827; died at Knowl Hill, Berkshire, July 28, 1876. An English novelist, poet, and miscellaneous writer. He was mathematical master of Queen Elizabeth's College, Guernsey, 1850 (?)-56, and after 1862 was occupied with literary work at his residence at Knowl Hill. He published "Idyls and Rhymes" (1865), "Sweet Anne Page" (1868), "The Inn of Strange Meetings, and Other Poems" (1871), "The Secret of Long Life" (1871), etc.

Collins, Rev. Mr. A character in Jane Austen's novel "Pride and Prejudice." He is a self-conceited toady.

Collins, William. Born at Chichester, England, Dec. 25, 1721; died there, June 12, 1759. An English poet. He was the son of a hatter who was twice mayor of Chichester; studied at Winchester and at Oxford, where he was graduated B. A. Nov. 18, 1743; and about 1745 went to London to follow literature as a profession. The later years of his life were obscured by insanity. He published "Persian Eclogues" (1742; republished as "Oriental Eclogues" 1757), "odes" (1746), etc. His works have been edited by J. Langhorne (1765), Mrs. Earbauld (1797), A. Dyce (1827), and others.

Collins, William. Born at London, Sept. 8, 1788; died at London, Feb. 17, 1847. A noted English landscape and figure painter, father of William Wilkie Collins.

Collins, William Wilkie. Born at London, Jan. 8, 1824; died there, Sept. 23, 1889. An English novelist, son of William Collins (1788-1847); author of "The Dead Secret" (1857), "The Woman in White" (1860), "No Name" (1862), "Armada" (1866), "The Moonstone" (1868), "The New Magdalen" (1873), "Man and Wife" (1870), etc. "No Thoroughfare," in collaboration with Charles Dickens, appeared as a Christmas story in 1867.

Collinson (kol'in-son), James. Born at Mansfield, Nottinghamshire, about 1825; died April, 1881. An English painter, one of the original members of the Preraphaelite Brotherhood, which he abandoned about 1850. His work was unimportant.

Collombet (ko-lōn-bā'), François Zénon. Born at Siéges, Jura, France, March 28, 1808; died at Lyons, Oct. 16, 1853. A French Roman Catholic historian and littérateur. He wrote "Histoire de St. Jérôme" (1844), and many other historical and critical works.

Collop Monday (kol'op muu'dā). The day before Shrove Tuesday; named from the custom of eating collops of salted meat and eggs on that day.

Collredo (kol-lō-rā'dō), Rudolf von. Born Nov. 2, 1585; died Jan. 24, 1657. An Austrian general in the Thirty Years' War. As field-marshal of the imperial army he successfully defended Prague against the Swedes in 1648.

Collredo-Mansfeld (kol-lō-rā'dō-māns'feld), Hieronimus, Count von. Born at Wetzlar, Germany, March 30, 1775; died at Vienna, July 23, 1822. An Austrian general, distinguished in the campaign of 1813.

Collredo-Mels (mels) and Wallsee (vāl'sā), Count Joseph Maria von. Born at Regensburg, Bavaria, Sept. 11, 1735; died Nov. 26, 1818. An Austrian general. He fought with distinction in the Seven Years' War, and was minister of state and conference, and director of the council of war 1805-09.

Collot-d'Herbois (ko-lō'der-bwā'), Jean Marie. Born at Paris about 1750; died in Cayenne, South America, Jan. 8, 1796. A French actor and revolutionist, notorious for his brutality. He was deputy to the Convention in 1792, and a member of the Committee of Public Safety in 1793. In Nov., 1793, he was sent with Fouché as judge to Lyons, by Robespierre, and executed his commission with great cruelty. An unsuccessful attempt upon his life was made May 23, 1794. Having become hostile to Robespierre, he joined the successful conspiracy against him (9 Thermidor), but was nevertheless expelled from the Convention (April, 1795) and transported. He published "Almanach du père Gérard" (1792).

Collyer (kol'yēr), Joseph. Born at London, Sept. 14, 1748; died Dec. 24, 1827. A noted English engraver, member of the Royal Academy, and engraver to Queen Charlotte.

Collyer, Robert. Born at Keighley, Yorkshire, England, Dec. 8, 1823. An American Unitarian clergyman. He was apprenticed to a blacksmith about 1837; emigrated to the United States in 1850; settled at Shoemakerstown, Pennsylvania, where he followed the trade of a hammer-maker; joined the Unitarian Church in 1859; became a missionary to Chicago, where in 1860 he founded the Unity Church; and in 1879 became pastor of the Church of the Messiah in New York city. He wrote "Nature and Life" (1866), "The Life that Now is" (1871), etc.

Colman (kōl'man), George, the elder. Born at Florence, Italy, 1732; died at Paddington, London, Aug. 14, 1794. An English dramatist. His father, who was envoy at the court of Tuscany, died in 1733, and his mother then brought him to London. William Pulteney, afterward Earl of Bath, undertook the charge of him and sent him to Westminster School. He went to Oxford, where he was graduated from Christ Church in 1755, and, having been previously entered at Lincoln's Inn, was called to the bar in the same year. An intimacy with Garrick and a natural taste for literature interfered with his legal work, and he produced a number of plays (at first anonymously) with the assistance of Garrick, who played in them. In connection with the latter he wrote "The Claudine Marriage," and a coolness arose between them as to Garrick's part in the cast. In 1767, having received two accessions of fortune, he bought a fourth share in the Covent Garden Theatre. This completely alienated Garrick, and annoyed his friends, who wished him to continue in the law. He became acting manager. In 1774 he resigned the management, and in 1776, having been reconciled to Garrick, he bought the Haymarket Theatre from Foote. In 1785 he had a stroke of paralysis, and finally grew so feeble in mind that he was put under restraint at Paddington, where he died. He brought out alterations of many old plays, most of which were successful. Among his own plays are "Polly Honeycomb" (1760), "The Jealous Wife" (1761), "The Claudine Marriage" (with Garrick, in 1776). In 1778 he brought out an edition of Beaumont and Fletcher. His dramatic and miscellaneous works have never been completely collected.

Colman, George, the younger. Born Oct. 21, 1762; died at London, Oct. 26, 1836. An English dramatist, son of G. Colman the elder. He took charge of the Haymarket when his father's health failed, but he became involved in pecuniary difficulties and was obliged to live within the rules of the King's Bench. He was released by George IV., who appointed him lieutenant of the Yeomen of the Guard, a dignity which he sold. The lord chamberlain made him examiner of plays, in which position he was extremely liberal. Among his best-known plays are "The Poor Gentleman" (1802), "John Bull" (1805), "The Heir-at-Law" (1808). He also wrote a good deal of popular humorous poetry, including "My Nightgown and Slippers" (1797), "Broad Girths" (1802), and "Poetical Vagaries" (1812). He frequently wrote under the name of "Arthur Grillohoofe."

Colman, Samuel. Born at Portland, Maine, 1832. An American landscape-painter, a pupil of A. B. Durand.

Colmar (kōl'mär'), or Kolmar (kol'mär). The capital of the district of Upper Alsace, Alsace-Lorraine, situated on the Lauch 39 miles southwest of Strasburg. It contains a museum (formerly a Dominican monastery), and has large manufactures of cotton. It was formerly a free imperial city; was taken by the French in 1673; was ceded to them in 1678; and in the Revolution was made the capital of the department of Haut-Rhin. In 1871 it again became a German city. Population (1890), commune, 30,399.

Colne (kōln). A town in Lancashire, England, 26 miles north of Manchester. It formerly manufactured woolen goods, an industry which has given place to cotton manufacture. Population (1891), including Marsden, 16,774.

Colney Hatch (kōl'ni hach). A village in Middlesex, about 6 miles north of London, in which is the Colney Hatch Lunatic Asylum, founded in 1851.

Colocolo (kō-lō-kō'lō). Born about 1490; killed in the battle of Quiaipo, 1560 (according to some authorities, he died about 1570). An Araucanian chief of southern Chile, celebrated in the "Araucana" of Ercilla. Probably Ercilla's verses gave him undue prominence.

Colocotronis. See Kolokotronis.

Cologna-Venetia (kō-lōn'vā-nā'tī). A town in the province of Verona, Italy, 20 miles southeast of Verona.

Cologne (kō-lōn'), G. Köln (kēln). 1. The capital of the government district of Cologne, situated on the west bank of the Rhine in lat. 50° 57' N., long. 6° 57' E.: the Roman Colonia Agrippina. It is the largest city of the Rhine Province, a fortress of the first class, the center of the Rhine trade, and one of the principal commercial places in Germany. It has manufactures of eau de Cologne, sugar, tobacco, etc. The principal objects of interest are, besides the cathedral (see below), the Ringstrasse, the Iron Bridge, the Municipal and Archiepiscopal Museums, the Museum of Industrial Art, the Rathaus (Hansa-Saal; see below), the monument of Frederick William III., and the churches of the Minorites, Gross St. Martin, St. Maria im Capitol, St. George, St. Severin, St. Peter, St. Cecilia, Apostles, St. Pantaleon, St. Gercon, St. Ursula (see below), St. Andreas, Jesuits, and St. Cunibert. The cathedral, one of the great buildings of the world, was begun in 1248 on the site of an earlier church, and was completed only in 1880, after being wholly neglected from the 15th century until 1823. Its design was inspired by the cathedral of Amiens, and all that is best in its architecture is French, while the less admirable features are indigenous. The cathedral has double aisles, with polygonal chevet, projecting transepts, and two enormous towers and spires at the west end. These, with the façade, have been completed according to the original design of the 14th century, which still exists. The towers and spires are so huge as to dwarf the vast cathedral. The façade has three great gabled portals filled with sculpture, and two tiers of huge canopied and traceried windows, to which the towers add two more stories beneath the springing of the spires. The effect is somewhat mechanical, and inferior to the best French façades. The transept-façades are of modern design, with rich tracery and arcading, and triple portals, sculptured and canopied. The upper part is too narrow, and its elaborate tracery does not fill the place of the great roses of French churches. The interior is exceedingly impressive: it is notable for its splendid glass, much of it modern, but much of the 13th, 14th, 15th, and 16th centuries. The fine choir-stalls are of the 15th century. The canopied statues supported on consoles on the pillars of the nave are architecturally a defect. The choir-chapels are of great beauty, and contain some admirable paintings and sculptures. The cathedral is 468 feet long; its area, 91,464 square feet. The nave is 48 feet wide and 145 high. The western spire measures 512 feet, and were, until the completion of the cathedral of Ulm, the loftiest existing. The Rathaus, or town hall, is an interesting monument built between the 14th and 16th centuries on Roman foundations. The main structure is of the 14th century, battlemented, with high roof and traceried windows; the picturesque tower and low spire are of the 15th. The Renaissance portico, in two areaded stages with engaged Corinthian columns, is an admirable example of the local architectural development. The great Hansa-Saal is adorned with good statues of medieval heroes, and with the emblazoned arms of patricians, burgoasters, and guilds. The Church of St. Ursula is a very early foundation in honor of the 11,000 martyred virgins, but often remodeled. The simple pointed choir has recently been restored to its original form. There are curious old paintings of the legend of the virgins; and in the treasury, whose walls are covered with elaborate patterns formed of the bones of the virgins, are preserved the beautiful Romanesque shrine of St. Ursula, and a great number of other reliquaries in the form of female heads and busts. Cologne was an ancient town of the Ubii, Oppidum Ubiorum, and a Roman colony founded by Agrippina in 51 or 50 A. D. Later it belonged to the Frankish empire, and in the 13th century became a Hanseatic town, and one of the principal commercial centers in Germany. It was a free imperial city, and is noted in the development of German architecture and painting. It was taken by the French in 1794, and was granted to Prussia in 1815. Population (1890), 197,081; of commune, 281,681.

2. A government district in the Rhine Province, Prussia. Population (1890), 826,827.

Cologne, Electorate of. A former archbishopric and electorate of the German Empire. It extended mainly along the left bank of the Rhine, north and south of Cologne. It was made an archbishopric by Charles the Great in 785, acquired the duchy of Westphalia in 1180, was confirmed one of the seven electorates in 1356, and was secularized in 1801. In 1801 the portion on the left bank of the Rhine became French territory; that on the right bank passed in 1803 to Hesse-Darmstadt, etc. The larger part was granted to Prussia 1814-15.

Cologne, Three Kings of. In medieval legend, the three magi who followed the Star of Bethlehem from the East to lay gifts before the infant Jesus. Their names were Gaspar, Melchior, and Balthazar. It is claimed that their bones are deposited in Cologne Cathedral. "The three days after New Year's day bear their names in the calendar, and their memory is preserved in the feast of the three holy Kings—the Epiphany." Chambers.

Colomb (kō-lōn'), or Columb, Michel. Born at Saint-Paul-de-Léon, in Bretagne, about 1440; died 1512. The first great sculptor of the French Renaissance. At a very early age he went to Dijon. He settled at Tours 1460-61. In 1472 he received from Louis XI. an order for a bas-relief destined for the Abbaye of Saint-Michel-en-Tierme, destroyed in 1569. His most important work is the tomb of Francis II., duc de Bretagne, and his wife, Marguerite de Foix, begun about 1502 by the order of Anne, queen of Louis XII., and finished in 1507. It is now in the cathedral of Nantes.

Colomba (kō-lōn'bā). A story by Prosper Mérimée, published in 1830.

Colombey (kō-lōn-bā'). A place in Lorraine 4½ miles east of Metz. Near it occurred the battle of Colombey-Neuilly, Aug. 14, 1870, in which the Germans under Steinmetz checked the French under Bazaine. The German loss was 4,906; that of the French, 3,608. Also called battle of Courcelles, and of Borny.

Colombia (kō-lōm'bē-ā). The name was first given in 1811 to what is now Venezuela. It was proposed by General Francisco Miranda. It was afterward extended to the confederation of Venezuela, New Granada, and Quito, and was dropped when the union was dissolved. Later the old region of New Granada renewed the name.

Colombia, Republic of. [Formerly United States of Colombia, Sp. Estados Unidos de Colombia; named after Columbus (It. Colombo),] A republic of South America, lying between the Caribbean Sea on the north, Venezuela and Brazil on the east, Ecuador on the south, and the Pacific Ocean and Costa Rica on the west. It is traversed by the Andes, and is rich in agricultural and mineral products. Its chief rivers are the Magdalena and the affluents of the Amazon and Orinoco. Among its chief products are gold, silver, and coffee. The prevailing language is Spanish, and the prevailing religion Roman Catholic. It is divided into nine departments: Antioquia, Bolívar, Boyacá, Cauca, Cundinamarca, Magdalena, Panama, Santander, Tolima. Its capital is Bogotá. The government is republican, the executive power being vested in a president, and the legislative in a senate and chamber of representatives. The Spanish power was established here in the first half of the 16th century, and independence was proclaimed in 1811. In 1819 this territory, with Venezuela and Ecuador, formed the Republic of Colombia, from which Venezuela and Ecuador withdrew in 1831. In 1831 the republic of New Granada was founded, in 1863 the name "United States of Colombia" was adopted, and in 1886 the present constitution was formed. Area, 504,773 square miles. Population, about 3,300,000.

Colombo (kō-lōm'bō). A seaport and the capital of Ceylon, situated on the western coast in lat. 6° 55' N., long. 79° 55' E. It was fortified by the Portuguese in 1617, was taken from them by the Dutch in 1656, was ceded to the British in 1796, and is now an important coaling-station. Population (1891), 126,926.

Colonna (kō-lōn'nā). A promontory at the southeastern extremity of Attica, Greece; the ancient Sunium.

Colonna (kō-lōn'nā), Fabio, L. Fabius Columna. Born at Naples, 1567; died at Naples about 1640-50. A Neapolitan scholar and botanist, author of various botanical works. He is considered the creator of genera in botany.

Colonna, Fabrizio. Died at Naples, 1520. An Italian military leader, lord high constable of Naples.

Colonna, Marco Antonio. Born 1535; died Aug. 1, 1584. An Italian commander, duke of Paliano. He commanded the papal contingent in 1571 at the battle of Lepanto, in which the allied Spanish, Venetian, and papal fleets under Don John of Austria gained a decisive victory over the Turks. He was viceroys of Sicily when he died.

Colonna, Prospero. Born 1452; died 1523. An Italian general. He commanded the united imperial and papal forces in Lombardy against Francis I. of France 1521, and in conjunction with Georg von Frundsberg defeated Marshal Lautrec at Bicocca 1522.

Colonna, Vittoria. Born at Marino, near Rome, 1490; died at Rome, Feb. 25, 1547. A celebrated Italian poet. She was the daughter of Fabrizio Colonna, grand constable of Naples, by his marriage with Agnesina di Montefeltro, daughter of Federico, duke of Urbino. She was betrothed when four years old to a boy of the same age, the only son of the Marchese di Pescara. In their nineteenth year they were married at Ischia. Pescara died in Nov., 1525. His wife survived him twenty-two years, spent partly at Ischia, in convents at Orvieto and Viterbo, and, finally, in semi-monastic seclusion at Rome. She was the center of a group of celebrated men of letters and artists, of whom the foremost was Michelangelo. Her poems consisted mainly of sonnets to the memory of her husband, or on sacred and moral subjects. Michelangelo preserved a large number of them, and composed several madrigals and sonnets under her influence. Vittoria is the only woman who is known to have touched the heart of the great sculptor.

Colonsay (kō-lōn-sā). An island of the Inner Hebrides, in the county of Argyllshire, Scotland, situated west of Jura and north of Islay. It is noted for its ecclesiastical antiquities. Length, 8 miles.

Colonus (kō-lō-nus), The White Hill of, or Kolonos Hippios (kō-lō-nos hip'i-os). A site about 1½ miles northwest of Athens, north of the Academy on the banks of the Cephissus. It is the birthplace of Sophocles, and is immortalized by his description in the "Edipus at Colonus." Upon the hill now stand the tombs of two noted archaeologists, Otrified Müller and Charles Lenormant.

Colorado (kō-lō-rā'dō). [Named from the Colorado River.] One of the United States of North America, lying between Wyoming and Nebraska on the north, Nebraska and Kansas on the east, Oklahoma and New Mexico on the south, and Utah on the west. It is traversed by the Rocky Mountains in the center and west, the foothills of which descend to the eastern "Great Plains." Many of the highest and best-known summits of the Rocky Mountains (Pike's Peak, Long's Peak, Sierra Blanca, Mountain of the Holy Cross) are in this State, which is also riddled by deep canyons (Arkansas, Gunnison, Mancos). Its leading industries are mining (gold, silver, lead, etc.) and stock-raising, and it is noted as a health-resort. In the production of silver and lead it ranks as the first State of the Union. It has 56 counties, sends 2 senators and 2 representatives to Congress, and has 4 electoral votes. Capital, Denver. Its territory formed part of the Louisiana purchase and part of the country acquired from Mexico. Gold was discovered in 1858; the Territory was organized in 1861, and was admitted as a State in 1876. Called the Centennial State. Area, 103,925 square miles. Population (1890), 412,198.

Colorado, Sp. Rio Colorado. [Sp., 'colored' (i. e. red) 'river'.] 1. A river formed by the union of the Grand and Green rivers in southeastern Utah. It flows through Utah and Arizona, and separates Arizona from Nevada and California. It empties into the Gulf of California, in Lower California, about lat. 32° N. It is famous for its canyons, of which the most celebrated, the Grand Cañon, situated in the middle course of the river, and explored by the Powell survey expedition in 1869, has walls from 4,000 to 6,500 feet in height. Length (from source of Green River), about 2,000 miles; navigable to Callville, 612 miles. Also called Colorado of the West.

2. A river in Texas which flows into Matagorda Bay near Matagorda. Length, about 900 miles; navigable, except in summer, to Austin. Called the Eastern Colorado.—3. A river in the Argentine Republic which flows into the Atlantic Ocean about lat. 39° 50' S., long. 62° 10' W. Length, about 620 miles.

Colorado Springs (kol-ō-rā'dō springz). The capital of El Paso County, Colorado, situated 64 miles south of Denver. It is a place of summer resort, near the foot of Pike's Peak. Population (1890), 11,139.

Colorados (kō-lō-rā'dōs). [Sp., 'the Reds.'] A political party of Uruguay. See Blancos.

Colossæ (kō-lōs'ē). [Gr. Ko'lossai.] In ancient geography, a city in southwestern Phrygia, Asia Minor, situated on the Lycus. It was the seat of a primitive Christian church.

Colossæ has been generally supposed to have been situated at Chonos, the ancient Chone, with which Constantine Porphyrogenitus identifies it (de Themat. i. 3, p. 24). Mr. Hamilton, however, seems to have discovered the true site, at the distance of three miles from Chonos, in the plain, on the banks of the Lycus (Choruk).

Rawlinson, Herod., IV. 31, note.

Colosseum (kol-o-sē'um), or Flavian Amphitheater. [L. Colosseum: said to be named from the colossal statue of Nero which stood near it in the Via Sacra.] An amphitheater in Rome, begun by Vespasian (T. Flavius Sabinus) in 72 A. D., and for 400 years the seat of gladiatorial shows. The axes of this chief of amphitheaters are 617 and 512 feet; of the arena, 282 and 177 feet. The exterior was ornamented with four tiers of engaged columns with their entablatures, the lowest three inclosing arches, and the highest walled up, with square windows in every second intercolumniation. The material of the interior is stone, of the inner passages and vaults largely brick and concrete. The interior was faced with marble. In the substructions there is a most elaborate system of chambers, passages, dens, and drains. Despite the enormous mass of the existing ruin, it is estimated that two thirds have been carried away in the middle ages and later as building-material.

Colossus of Rhodes. See Chares of Lindus.

Colot (ko-lō'), Laurent. Born near Troyes, France; lived about 1550. A French court surgeon in the reign of Henry II. (1547-59), noted as a lithotomist.

Colquhoun (ko-hōn'), Patrick. Born at Dumbarton, Scotland, March 14, 1745; died at London, April 25, 1820. A London police magistrate and writer on economic subjects. From about 1769 to 1766 he lived in Virginia, was lord provost of Glasgow 1782-83, and from 1789 resided in London, where he became (1792) a police magistrate. He published a "Treatise on the Police of the Metropolis," etc. (1795), a "Treatise on the Population, Wealth, Power, and Resources of the British Empire in every Quarter of the World" (1814), and other works treating especially of the condition and relief of the poor.

Colt (kōlt), Samuel. Born at Hartford, Conn., July 19, 1814; died at Hartford, Jan. 10, 1862. An American inventor. He patented the revolver in 1835, and established a noted manufactory of arms at Hartford in 1852.

Colton (kōl'ton), Charles Caleb. Born at Salisbury, England, about 1780; died at Fontainebleau, April 28, 1832. An English clergyman and writer. He was a graduate of Cambridge (King's College), and rector of Kew and Petersham. He led an eccentric life, and committed suicide in preference to undergoing a surgical operation. He published "Lacon, or many things in few words, addressed to those who think" (1820-22), etc.

Colton, Walter. Born at Rutland, Vt., May 9, 1797; died at Philadelphia, Jan. 22, 1851. An American clergyman and writer of voyages, author of "Ship and Shore" (1835), etc.

Columbia (kō-lum'bā), Saint. Born at Gartan, Donegal, Ireland, Dec. 7, 521; died at Iona, Scotland, June 9, 597. A Celtic missionary in Scotland, surnamed "the Apostle of Caledonia," the founder of the monastery of Iona (about 565).

Columbia Noachi (kō-lum'bā nō-ā'ki). [L., 'Noah's Dove.'] A constellation in the southern hemisphere, close to the hind feet of Canis Major. It contains, according to Gould, 115 stars visible to the naked eye; but only 3 are prominent. It was proposed by Bartsch in 1624.

Columbanus (kol-um-bā'nus), or Columban (kō-lum'bān), Saint. Born in Leinster, Ireland, about 543; died at Bobbio, Italy, Nov. 21, 615. An Irish missionary in France, Switzerland, and Italy. He founded the monastery of Luxeuil (Vosges) about 590-595, and that of Bobbio (Italy).

Columbia (kō-lum'bi-ä). [NL., from Columbus.] 1. A poetical name of the United States, or of the New World.—2. See Colombia.

Columbia, or Oregon (or'ē-gon). A river in North America, the second in size on the Pacific coast. It rises in the Rocky Mountains in British Columbia, traverses Washington, flows between Washington and Oregon, and empties into the Pacific Ocean in lat. 46° 15' N., long. 124° W. Its chief tributaries are Clarke's Fork and Snake River. It has very important salmon-fisheries. Length, 1,200-1,400 miles. It is navigable to the Cascades (165 miles), from the Cascades to the Dalles (about 50 miles), and above the Dalles for small vessels. It was discovered in 1792 by Captain Robert Gray, and was explored by Lewis and Clark 1804-05.

Columbia. 1. A town in Boone County, Missouri, 27 miles northwest of Jefferson City. It is the seat of the University of the State of Missouri. Population (1890), 4,900.

2. A borough in Lancaster County, Pennsylvania, situated on the Susquehanna River 24 miles southeast of Harrisburg. It is an important lumber-market and seat of manufactures. Population (1890), 10,593.

3. The capital of South Carolina, in Richland County, situated on the Congaree River in lat. 34° N., long. 81° 2' W. It is the seat of the University of South Carolina (founded in 1804), became the State capital in 1790, and was burned about the time of its occupation by the Federals, Feb. 17, 1865. Population (1890), 15,353.

4. The capital of Maury County, Tennessee, situated on the Duck River 42 miles southwest of Nashville. Population (1890), 5,370.

Columbia, British. See British Columbia.

Columbia College. An institution of learning in the city of New York. It comprises an academic department, a law school, a medical school (the College of Physicians and Surgeons), a school of mines, a school of political science, a graduate department, and a department of architecture. It was originally founded as King's College in 1754, and its present name was adopted in 1754. The law school was opened in 1858. Its main library (1894) contains 175,000 volumes. It has 226 instructors, and 1,641 students.

Columbia, District of. See District of Columbia.

Columbian University. A university in Washington, District of Columbia, incorporated by Congress in 1819. It consists of a college department, law, medical, dental, and graduate departments, and the Corcoran Scientific School.

Columbine (kol'um-bin). A conventional character in old Italian comedy, first appearing about 1560: the daughter of Pantaloon, or sometimes her coquettish maid-servant. She was the object of Harlequin's adoration, and so appears in English pantomime.

Columbretes (kō-lōm-brā'tes). A group of small volcanic rocks in the Mediterranean, east of Spain, in lat. 39° 54' N., long. 0° 43' E.

Columbus (kō-lum'bus), Bartholomew, Sp. Bartolomeo Colon. Born probably in Genoa about 1445; died at Santo Domingo, May, 1515.

A brother of Christopher Columbus. He was with Bartolomeo Diaz on the West African coast 1486-87, and went to England in 1488 to interest Henry VII. in his brother's project. He returned to Spain in 1493, after the admiral had sailed on his second voyage, but followed him in command of a supply fleet, arriving at Isabella in June, 1493. The admiral made him adelantado, and from 1496 to 1498 he governed the island during his brother's absence; founded Santo Domingo 1496; subdued an Indian revolt; marched to Xaraguá in 1497; and in 1498 had the first trouble with Roldán. In 1500 Bobadilla sent him a prisoner to Spain, where he was released with the admiral. He was with his brother on the fourth voyage, 1502-04, and was the leader where active work was required. In the struggle with Poyras at Jamaica he was wounded. After the admiral's death he seems to have been in Rome, and in 1509 he accompanied Diego Columbus to Hispaniola, where he held important and lucrative offices.

Columbus, Christopher. [It. Cristoforo Colombo, Sp. Cristóbal Colon, F. Christophe Colomb, L. Christophorus Columbus.] Born at or near Genoa, Italy, probably in 1446; died at Valladolid, Spain, May 20 or 21 (O. S.), 1506.

The discoverer of America. His parents were wool-combers, but he was fairly well educated, and early began to follow the sea. In 1473 (?) he went to Portugal, where he married and had a son, Diego; he also lived in the island of Porto Santo, near Madeira. It is probable that he joined in some of the Portuguese explorations on the African coast; and there is some doubtful evidence of a voyage made to Iceland. Impressed with the idea, founded on the known rotundity of the earth, that Asia might be reached by sailing westward, he proposed to the Portuguese king to make an expedition in that direction. Failing, he went to Spain (1484?) and offered the enterprise to Ferdinand and Isabella. He was repeatedly put off with promises or rebuffed by adverse reports of those set to inquire into the scheme, and lived in poverty. His brother was sent to ask aid of Henry VII. of England (1488), and Columbus himself was about passing to France when he obtained a personal interview with the sovereigns at Granada. The excessive grants and honors which he demanded in case of success led to a refusal; but as he was about leaving Granada his friends made a last effort with the queen, he was recalled, and on April 17, 1492, the king and queen signed a paper in which all the demands of Columbus were agreed to. He was made, for himself and heirs, admiral in all the regions which he might discover, and viceroy in countries acquired by him for Spain, with full powers and a generous share of the revenues. Partly with royal aid, partly with the help of the Pinzons, merchants of Palos, three small vessels were fitted out, the Santa Maria as flagship, and the Niña and Pinta, commanded respectively by Vicente Yañez Pinzon and Martin Alonzo Pinzon. With these and 120 (or 99?) men Columbus left Palos Aug. 3, 1492. He touched at the Canaries, thence steered west, and on Oct. 12 (O. S.), 1492, or Oct. 22 (N. S.), discovered the island of Guanahani or San Salvador, one of the Bahamas, but which one is uncertain. He landed and took possession for Castile, had some intercourse with the natives, and sailed on, discovering various islands and coasting part of the northern side of Cuba (Oct. 26-Dec. 22), and Haiti or Hispaniola, everywhere treating amicably with the natives, and obtaining small quantities of gold and island products. All these lands, he supposed, were outlying parts of Asia. The Santa Maria was wrecked on the Haitian coast, and he left there a colony of 40 men, building a fort called La Navidad in the land of a friendly chief. On Jan. 4, 1493, he started to return in the Niña. He narrowly escaped wreck in severe storms, parted company with the Pinta, touched at the Azores and in Portugal, where he was called to see the king; and finally reached Palos, March 15 (O. S.), 1493. Called to court, he was received with great honor, his privileges confirmed, and ample means given for a new expedition. He again embarked at Palos, Sept. 25, 1493, with 17 vessels and 1,500 men; discovered Dominica Nov. 3; landed on several of the Caribbee islands and had encounters with the Caribs; coasted Porto Rico; and on Nov. 27 reached the harbor of La Navidad. He found that his colony had all been killed by hostile Indians. On a new site, farther east, he founded Isabella (Dec.), the first European town in the New World. After some explorations in the interior he made an expedition westward (April, 1494), in which he coasted the south side of Cuba (supposed by him to be a peninsula of Asia), and after discovering Jamaica returned to Isabella, Sept. 29, 1494. Ill treatment by the Spaniards caused an insurrection of the Indians, but Columbus defeated them in a great battle on the Vega Real, April 25, 1495. Shortly before he had proposed a plan for enslaving hostile Indians, for which he has been much blamed. There was much suffering and discontent among the colonists, and some of them went to Spain to make complaints; they were supported by Bishop Fonseca, an enemy of Columbus, who was at the head of colonial affairs; and in 1495 Juan Aguado was sent as a royal commissioner to Española. He collected complaints against the admiral, who, fearing the effect of the report, returned to Spain at the same time with Aguado (March, 1496), leaving his brothers in charge. He was well received by the sovereigns, and the charges dismissed. After much delay he started on a third voyage (May 30, 1498), in which he kept farther south, discovered Trinidad (July 31), and the lowlands at the mouth of the Orinoco (Aug. 1), this being, in all probability, the first discovery of the continent of South America; the Caribs had already seen North America. With much difficulty he passed the two straits between Trinidad and the mainland, and was convinced that the turbid water came from a continental (Asiatic) river. In a report at this time he argues that the earth is pear-shaped and the highest land at the head of this river, where also is the terrestrial paradise; this, and some other later reports, have been supposed to indicate temporary aberration of mind, caused by sickness. On Aug. 30 he reached Santo Domingo, which had been founded during his absence. Some of the colonists, under Roldán, had rebelled, and Columbus was forced to make a disgraceful peace with them. Disorders continued, and on Aug. 24, 1500, Francisco de Bobadilla arrived as royal commissioner. He deposed Columbus and his brothers and sent them in chains to Spain (Oct., 1500); they were at once released, but Columbus could not obtain a reinstatement in his dignities; and only after much delay he obtained four caravels for a final exploration, in which, it appears, he intended to circumnavigate the globe. Leaving Spain March, 1502, he touched at Santo Domingo, thence sailed to Central America, discovering Honduras July 30, and coasting to the Isthmus of Panama, seeking for a passage westward. After encounters with the Indians and a vain attempt to plant a colony (Feb., 1503), he returned to Jamaica. There his ships, worn-out and storm-beaten, gave out, and he and his men remained on the island, enduring great sufferings: some rebelled, and were subdued after a hard fight. A canoe sent out reached Española, and at length (June, 1504) ships were sent to take them off. Columbus reached Spain Nov. 7, 1504. Queen Isabella, who had always befriended him, died soon after. His repeated petitions for reinstatement had no effect, and he passed his remaining days in poverty and neglect. He never knew that the regions discovered by him constituted a new continent, always supposing them to be portions of Asia.

Columbus, Diego, It. Giacomo Colombo; by Latin writers called Jacobus. Probably born at Genoa about 1450; date and place of death unknown. A brother of Christopher Columbus, who accompanied him in the second voyage (1493), and was at times left in command at Isabella or Santo Domingo. He was sent to Spain with his brothers in 1500, and about that time became a priest. In 1500 he accompanied his nephew to Santo Domingo, and probably died soon after.

Columbus, Sp. Colon, Diego. Born probably at Lisbon about 1476; died at Montalvan, near Toledo, Feb. 23, 1526. A son of Christopher Columbus. In 1492 Queen Isabella made him a page at the Spanish court, where he remained until after his father's death. He was confirmed in 1509 as admiral of the Indies and governor of Hispaniola, but without the title of viceroy. He arrived at Santo Domingo, July 10, 1509; but the conflicting claims of jurisdiction, and dissatisfaction with his rule, soon made the position an uneasy one. Velasquez, whom he sent to conquer Cuba in 1511, virtually threw off his authority; the establishment of a royal audience at Santo Domingo restricted his power; and though, in a visit to Spain, he obtained new favors (1520), he was finally called back by the Council of the Indies in 1523 to answer charges against him. His wife was left in charge of the government; but Diego followed the court, vainly seeking redress, until his death.

Columbus, Ferdinand, Sp. Ferdinando Colón. Born in Cordova, Aug. 15, 1488; died at Seville, July 12, 1539. An illegitimate son of Christopher Columbus and Doña Beatriz Henriquez, a lady of Cordova. He was made page of Queen Isabella in 1498; was with his father on the fourth voyage, 1502-04; and by the admiral's will received an ample income, afterward increased by royal grants. He amassed a library of over 20,000 volumes, which passed by will to the cathedral chapter of Seville, where it was known as the "Columbina"; only about 4,000 volumes remain. A history of the Indies by him is lost, as is the original Spanish of his biography of his father, which was used by Las Casas.

Columbus, Sp. Colón (kō-lōn'). Luis. Born at Santo Domingo, 1521 or 1522; died in Oran, Africa, Feb. 3, 1572. A son of Diego and grandson of Christopher Columbus. In 1536 he gave up all claims to the title of viceroy, receiving in return the island of Jamaica in fief, a large pension, lands in Veragua, and the titles of Duke of Veragua and Marquis of Jamaica. He was captain-general of Hispaniola 1540-51. He was imprisoned in 1559 for having three wives, and in 1565 banished to Oran. For descent of the titles, see Veragua, Dukes of.

Columbus. 1. The capital of Ohio, and of Franklin County, situated on the Scioto River in lat. 39° 57' N., long. 83° 3' W. It is an important railway center and manufacturing place, and is remarkable for its State capitol and other public buildings. It was made the State capital in 1816. Population (1890), 88,150.

2. The capital of Muscogee County, Georgia, situated on the Chattahoochee River in lat. 32° 28' N., long. 85° 5' W. It has manufactures of iron and steel. Population (1890), 17,303.—3. The capital of Bartholomew County in southern central Indiana. Population (1890), 6,719.

—4. A town in western Kentucky, situated on the Mississippi River 16 miles south of Cairo. It was a strategic point of the Confederates in 1861-62.—5. The county-seat of Lowndes County, eastern Mississippi, situated on the Tombigbee River in lat. 33° 31' N., long. 88° 28' W. Population (1890), 4,559.

Columella (kol-ū-mel'li). Lucius Junius Moderatus. Born at Cadix, Spain; lived about 40 A. D. A Roman writer on agriculture. He wrote "De re rustica," in twelve books (edited by Schneller in the "Scriptores rei rusticae," 1794), and an earlier work on the same subject, of which one book, "De Arboribus," is extant.

Column of July, F. Colonne de Juillet (kolon' dē zhiē-yā'). A monument in Paris, France, erected on the site of the Bastille in 1840, in honor of the citizens killed in the attacks on the royal government in 1830. It is a Corinthian column of bronze, 13 feet in diameter, rising from a square base and marble substructure, and capped by a gilded statue of the winged Genius of Liberty. Its total height is 154 feet.

Column of Marcus Aurelius, or Antonine Column. A monument in the Piazza Colonna, Rome, erected in 174 A. D. in honor of the campaigns against the Marcomanni. It reproduces the type of the Column of Trajan, and consists of a Roman Doric column of marble raised on a square pedestal, the total height, without the statue of St. Paul of Sixtus V., being 123 feet. The shaft is sculptured in a spiral of 20 turns, with reliefs of the wars it commemorates.

Column of the Congress, F. Colonne du Congrès (kolon' dū kōn-grā'). A monument erected in Brussels, Belgium, in commemoration of the Belgian constitutional congress of 1831. It is a Roman Doric column 147 feet high, on the summit of which stands a statue of Leopold I. Reliefs on the pedestal represent the Belgian provinces. At the angles stand four female figures in bronze, personifying types of liberty.

Column of Trajan. A monument in Rome, dedicated in 114 A. D. in honor of the emperor. It is a Roman Doric column of marble, on a square base, the total height, exclusive of the present statue of St. Peter, being 127 feet. The base bears reliefs of warlike trophies and an inscription; the entire shaft is occupied by vigorous and lifelike reliefs ascending in a spiral, representing Trajan's campaigns. The reliefs contain about 2,500 human figures, besides those of animals and inanimate objects.

Column of Vendôme (voñ-dōm'). F. Colonne Vendôme. A monument in the Place Vendôme, Paris, France. It is a Roman Doric column of masonry incased in bronze, in design imitating the Column of Trajan at Rome, and was erected by Napoleon I. in honor of his victories over the Russians and Austrians in 1805. The shaft is encircled with reliefs referring to the campaigns in question, ascending in a spiral, the height of the figures being 3 feet. The column is surmounted by a figure of the emperor. Its height is 142 feet, and its diameter 13 feet. It was overthrown by the Commune in 1871, but was restored in 1875.

Columns of Hercules. See Pillars of Hercules.
Columns of St. Mark and St. Theodore. Two columns in Venice, situated at the end of the Piazzetta toward the Grand Canal. The massive plain cylindrical shafts are of granite, the western pink, the eastern gray, resting on spreading, stepped bases. The capitals are ascribed to an Lombard architect. The figure of St. Theodore, with his crocodile, was erected on the western column in 1329. The eastern column bears the famous winged lion of St. Mark, in bronze, with eyes inlaid in precious stones. The existing lion is of the 15th century.

Colville (kol'vil). A name, of European origin, applied to a Salishan tribe formerly dwelling near Kettle Falls on the upper Columbia River, near the Canadian boundary. The tribe now numbers 247 persons, dwelling on the Puyallup reservation, Washington. See Salishan.

Colwell (kol'wel). Stephen. Born in Brooke County, West Va., March 25, 1800; died at Philadelphia, Jan. 15, 1871. An American merchant, economist, and general writer. He wrote "Ways and Means of Payment" (1859), etc.

Coma Berenices (kō-mā ber-e-nī'sēz). [L., 'hair of Berenice.' See Berenice.] An ancient asterism (though not one of the 48 constellations of Hipparchus) situated north of Virgo and between Boötes and Leo, and supposed to represent the famous amber hair of Berenice, the wife of Ptolemy Euergetes.

Comacchio (kō-māk'kē-ō). A town in the province of Ferrara, Italy, situated near the Adriatic 29 miles southeast of Ferrara. Population, 7,000.

Comana (kō-mā-nū). [Gr. τὰ Κόμανα.] 1. In ancient geography, a city of Cappadocia, Asia Minor, situated on the river Sarus. It was noted for its temple to Ma, the moon-goddess. Also called Chryse ("the Golden").

2. In ancient geography, a city of Pontus, Asia Minor, situated about lat. 40° 20' N., long. 36° 50' E. It was perhaps a colony of the Cappadocian city, and it was sacred to the same goddess. The modern Gumenek is on its site.
