

tion of issuing a most valuable series of accurate maps, nothing more has been done. To illustrate these maps in a proper manner, suitable scientific and local Memoir Papers must be required. A few thousands of pounds would effect this object; more especially, as the matter for it has been already collected, classified and arranged. The Ordnance Survey Memoir for the Parish of Templemore is a fair specimen of what the completed work might be made. The sale of such Memoirs must fully defray the cost of publication, within a few years, and without any considerable money loss to the public exchequer. With a cherished hope of something being yet done in this way, the writer may assert, that he has endeavoured to present a complete and consecutive Catalogue, describing those valuable MSS., ancient maps, and antiquarian sketches. His humble efforts may attract the attention of more learned literary labourers to them. Changes have occurred since he first commenced this task, and which render the most interesting of these records accessible to the reading public. Not originally intending to follow this system of communication to its natural sequence and conclusion, it may be stated, the erudite and accomplished Hon. Sec., Rev. James Graves, expressed a desire that a work thus casually commenced should be completed. If it abound in errors of plan and execution—as the writer will readily admit it does—the Members of our Society must accept, as his partial excuse, the application only of occasional intervals, with more urgent duties often supervening, and inconvenient distances interposed; these combined causes served very much to prevent anything like a perfect unity in design, and delayed, to the present number, this closing Paper of a somewhat lengthened series.

The following papers were submitted to the Members :—

AN INQUIRY INTO THE ORIGIN OF THE FAMILY OF ARCHER IN KILKENNY, WITH NOTICES OF OTHER FAMILIES OF THE NAME IN IRELAND.

BY J. H. LAWRENCE-ARCHER, CAPTAIN.

IN certain popular heraldic works the crest assigned to the surname "Archer," in Ireland, is "a mound azure banded and crossed or," whereas there is no instance of the Archers of Kilkenny—probably the earliest of the name settled in this island—ever having borne any crest whatever; and in this respect their sculptured coats of arms, throughout that city, form a solitary heraldic exception. Even on an armorial "Archer" seal, attached to the will of an Archer who lived in the seventeenth century, although the shield is surmounted by a helmet, there is no crest, and the rotundity and high relief of the helmet may have been mistaken for an orb. Be this as it may, on another armorial seal, of the same period, although there is a crest, it is doubtful whether the seal bears the arms of Archer, notwithstanding that the estoiles, or mullets, found in the Archer coat, on monuments in this city, are conspicuous on this escutcheon, and form the crest.

Two questions at once present themselves—1st, How came the Kilkenny Archers not to have a crest? 2nd, What could have been the origin of the crest, imputed to them by Fairbairn and others?

Now, with reference to the latter, it seems to me that la monde or may have been adopted, by some Archer in the seventeenth or eighteenth century, as a canting heraldic memento of a civic connexion with the great feudal family of Ormonde, whose fortunes have been so intimately associated with the city of Kilkenny, and where, from the year 1345 to 1652, no fewer than sixty-five times does the name of Archer appear in the Magistracy, as Portreves, Sovereigns, Mayors, Sheriffs, and Coroners, &c.; while on the other hand the Great Duke of Ormonde was chiefly instrumental in obtaining for the people of Kilkenny the restoration of their property, which had been seized by Cromwell's followers.

In the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries, the great merchants were probably more frequently members of the aristocracy, than at the present day. Few, but such, could acquire the capital necessary for embarking in commercial enterprise, and in Italy and Flanders, &c., the chief merchants became the rulers of cities, and eventually hereditary princes; therefore the position held at an early period, by the Archers of Kilkenny, was not incompatible with a noble or knightly origin, but rather the contrary, as I hope to be able to show more clearly in the following notes.

But to return—the absence of a family crest may fairly be attributed to the Kilkenny Archers having separated from the parent tree in England, before the period when crests became common; and it is worthy of note, that the three pheons borne by the Kilkenny Archers were the actual coat of the family of le Archer of Warwickshire before the time of Thomas le Archer, second son of John le Archer of Tanworth (Umberslade), who was the first of his family to use the three broad arrows, and to assume a crest. “He (Thomas le Archer) was Grand Prior of the Knights of St. John of Jerusalem, in England, and as such was reckoned the first Baron in the realm.”¹ His seal is well known, and is an example, at the early period of the reign of Edward II., of the adoption of supporters. To a document bearing date the fourteenth year of this monarch's reign, Thomas le Archer, Grand Prior, appears as party on the one part, and on the other, his relatives, *John le Archer*² and Thomas le Archer ; while the seal of Nicholas le Archer shows another variation of the same arms, viz., pheons, not arrows.

In all the printed pedigrees of the Archers of Umberslade, and even in that which is preserved in the Heralds' College, many younger sons' names are omitted ; but this defect is remedied in a copy of Dugdale's "Warwickshire," to be seen at the British Museum, where the annotator has carefully transcribed the ancient charters of this family, and given drawings of the seals attached to them, with other curious additions. Happening myself to possess the original holograph list of his family, charters, &c., made by Sir Simon Archer, I could verify those given by the annotator in question. Sir Simon, however, had not very carefully extracted all the names of collateral ancestors for his friend Dugdale ; and amongst others omitted, in all the printed pedigrees, is that of the above Nicholas le Archer, and also of another Nicholas le Archer, whose seal, attached to a grant of free warren, in the fourteenth century, bears the quaint device of a hare walking on its hind legs, a dead dog dangling to a stick over its shoulder, with the additional letters "c h e r"—i. e. Hare cher !

Now, in Rymer's "Fœdera" will be found a notice of John le Archer, Grand Prior (also in the reign of Edward II., and consequently contemporaneously with Thomas le Archer of Tanworth in England) of the Knights Hospitallers in Ireland. In the year 1341, while Grand Prior, he offered to prove his right to the church of Dunboyne "by his champion." His rank socially must have been considerable, for "none were admitted into the rank of Knights, but such as had previously distinguished themselves, or who were at least descended from ancient knights."¹

"This Prior" (le Archer), continues the same author, "was entrusted with a commission to Edward III. from a Parliament held in Kilkenny, praying that several grievances might be redressed for the English either ruled with a rod of iron (or had) become more Irish than the Irish themselves."²

In 1345, Walter Archer was Portreve of Kilkenny, as was also John Archer ; and in 1350 Adam Archer was Portreve. It is exceedingly probable that a clue to the origin of these three, if not indeed a direct proof of their parentage, would be found in the MS. additions to Dugdale just mentioned, especially as I do not think that any but the one family of Le Archer, descended from the tutor of King Henry I., bore the surname of Archer, until Henry V. conferred it on Simon de Bois, of Essex. This is contrary to what would naturally be supposed—namely, that the

patronymic was common when the profession of an archer was in repute; but that the contrary was the case, I am inclined to believe, there can be little doubt; and a paper on this question will be found in "The Herald and Genealogist."¹ Nicholas le Archer, it is there shown, had the privilege of carrying the King's own bow, through all the forests of England, and was, par excellence, "le Archer," a surname entirely monopolized by this family, until the profession of archery decayed, and Henry VIII. created a professional archer burlesque Duke of Shoreditch!

It has occurred to me as neither impossible, nor improbable, that the Archer family of Kilkenny came to Ireland in the immediate following of "Strongbow"; and may even have been connected with that noble by ties of kindred; for in the church of St. Burian, Cornwall, there is an old armorial sculpture of the now extinct family of Levelis, quartering "Clare"² and "Archer" in succession, the latter quartering being also that of the earliest Kilkenny Archers (sab. 3 pheons argt.), and of John le Archer, of Tanworth, father of Thomas, the Grand Prior of the Hospitallers, but with the difference of a chevron engrailed argent, which may be thus accounted for:—

John le Archer, of Tanworth, Co. Warwick, and champion to Thomas Earl of Warwick, married the daughter³ of William de Barneville (a name conspicuous in the Norman annals of Ireland, and particularly in the peerage of Trimleston), and bore for his arms—sab. 3 pheons argt.

This John died in the 35th of Henry III., leaving several sons (elsewhere accounted for); and Nicholas le Archer, either his son or brother, held possessions at Stoke, in Clare, Gloucestershire, in the 15th Edw. I., by providing a man with bow and arrows,⁴ to attend the King's army when it marched against the Welsh.

In the 7th Edw. II., Edmond le Archer held these lands in Clare (partly, at any rate) of Gilbert de Clare, Earl of Gloucester and Hertford: they were contiguous to those of the Berkeley family;⁵ while it is not unworthy of note, that (see "Herald and Geneal.," p. 22) David le Blund, of Bristol, was married to Amabilia le Archer; and in transactions during the reigns of Henry III. and Edw. I., these persons' names are recorded along with that of John, "fili Mauricii de Salso Morisco," all of the County Gloucester.

Possibly, before the extinction of the male line (or at any rate of the senior family) of le Archer of Stoke, in Clare, by the marriage of its heiress with William de Berkeley of Coberly⁶ (as appears by an Inquis. P. M. of the 24th Edw. III., in which it is stated, that "Gilbert le Archer, seised of Archerstok, in the County of Gloucester, held of the King in capite, by supplying him with a sheaf of arrows in war time, for ever"—that "he died on the 8th October; and that "Joanna, the wife of Thomas de Berkeley de Coberly, is his daughter and heir, and is aged 24 years and upwards"), an uncle, or brother, of the original Nicholas le Archer, accompanied the relatives of his mother or kinswoman, Christian de Barneville, to Ireland, taking with him the pure paternal coat; or the Kilkenny family may have only adopted the latter, on the death of Gilbert le Archer, in the reign of Edwd. III., having previously used some other coat, of which I do not think that any record is preserved.

In the meantime, another branch of the Gloucester le Archer family, after one of the Welsh expeditions of the Clare family,¹ probably settled in Cornwall, and introduced, for a difference, the chevron, engrailed argt. while it is highly probable that the family of Levelis, in that county, was of similar origin—a supposition which has acquired weight, by the suggestion of an excellent authority on the point, that "Levelis" was simply "Le Walleys," "Le Vallis," "Wallis," "Walsh,"—the Welshman, as he was likely to have been named in his new locality.

This connexion between Archer and Clare in Gloucester—between Clare,² Archer, and Levelis, in Cornwall,³ and finally between "Strongbow," Barneville, Walsh, and Archer, in Ireland, is very suggestive, on more than one point.

On the extinction of the chief male line of Archer, in Kilkenny, (by the marriage of its heiress, Rose Archer, with Richard Shee, and the consequent transfer of her arms to the escutcheon of the latter), it would be curious to ascertain, whether the other, and junior family of Archer, did not then, for the first time, assume a coat-armorial, selecting for their purpose that of their kinsmen, the Walshes of Castle Hoel, by reversing the three pheons of the latter.

Possibly, however, that of Walsh itself was a coat manufactured, so to speak, originally, during one of the Welsh expeditions, out of the sable, three pheons argt. of the Gloucestershire Archers (of which family the original Walsh, was perhaps, a not fully recognised member), with the augmentation of the chevron gules of Clare; but, inasmuch as the latter would have been "colour upon colour," the former were exactly reversed in every particular. If this suggestion be worth anything, then the presumption is, that the junior Archers of Kilkenny resumed, to a certain extent, their own coat, which might well have been qualified by such a motto as that borne by the present noble family of Warwick.

² I am informed that this coat is that of "Trecire," viz., sable 3 chevrons

argt. (query, "Langton," of Kilkenny), and not that of "Clare," as stated by one of the historians of Cornwall.

³ See note on Walsh, infra.

On the other hand, the question at once presents itself, was not the coat of Walsh of Castle Hoel a coat armorial taken from the real one, of the first Irish Archer, under Strongbow, before the family assumed the pure coat, in the 14th century, as before suggested?

Be this as may, it is quite certain that much confusion existed in Norman Irish heraldry, in the feudal ages; and a notable instance is to be found, in that of the family of O'Shee of Garden Morris, three of whose four first quarterings are inverted, and are not O'Shee at all, but simply Archer reversed, with its quarterings of Bermingham, Walsh, Purcell, &c.—an error, strange to say, that has escaped notice up to the present time.

With regard to other families of Archer in Ireland, there are strong reasons for believing, that the Archers of Wicklow originated in the Suffolk branch of the Warwickshire family; and that they are, if so, probably akin to that of Kilkenny; while by their connexion with the family of Archer in Wexford, they probably have engrafted the Essex family of De Boys alias Archer. The Archers of Belfast, on the other hand, came from Berwickshire, and are akin to the Archers of Cupar Angus, whose ancestors appear to have been related by marriage, to the family of the "Admirable Crichton," inasmuch as Elspeth Archer was spouse to John Crichton in the Hill of Strathworde (Will, 10th July 1601). In conclusion it may be observed that this surname is exceedingly rare, as it always has been, in Scotland.

I do not presume to put forward these suggestions, and ideas, dogmatically, on so remote and obscure a subject, but merely scatter them as arrows, to be used again by other hands, or cast aside, if pointless.

In conclusion, the foregoing evidence may be thus briefly summarized:—

1st. That the family of Archer in Ireland came over with Strongbow.

2nd. That at that period, and until temp. Hen. V., there was but one family called le Archer in England, all others being only branches of that one.

3rd. That the Archers of Stoke Archer, in Clare, held their lands from the time of Henry III. in Gloucester, partly under the Clares, and partly "in capite."

4th. That Nicholas le Archer of Archerstoke, Gloucester, accompanied Strongbow's father in his expedition against the Welsh, and that the two families were in connexion feudally, with each other, from the earliest period.

5th. That while Thomas le Archer of Tanworth was Grand prior of the Hospitallers in England, John le Archer was Grand Prior in Ireland, and was in Kilkenny at the sitting of the famous Parliament there.

6th. That the first coat armorial borne by the le Archers in Ireland, was sable 3 pheons arg.: and that this was the coat of the Gloucester family, derived from the Warwickshire, before the latter had acquired "Azure 3 arrows or."

7th. That after the Archers of Gloucester cease to be noticed in that county, other (?) Archers, with the same baptismal names, appear in Ireland.

8th. That the original Irish Archer coat passed by an heiress to the Shees, while the other branches adopted variations on those of Strongbow, and that there is evidence, that the Gloucester and Irish Archers were related to the Barneville family, a daughter of which married John le Archer of Tanworth. The Barnevilles followed Strongbow's father into Wales, and the Tanworth and Clare Archers were identical.

WILLS OF THE ARCHER FAMILY RECORDED IN THE PROBATE COURT, CITY OF KILKENNY.

(Extracts.)

- 1536, September 20th. Peter Archer—This is a will and inventory “bonorum Petri Archer filii Willelmi Archer Burgensis villæ Kilken.” The testator mentions his wife, Ellen Purcell, his sons, William and Richard, his daughter, Rose, and a friend, Nicholas Hacked.
- 1574, September 11th. Lawrence Archer, of Kilkenny, mentions his son and heir John, his brothers, Walter, Patrick, and Richard Archer; his sister Catherine Archer; his daughter Catherine; his four married daughters; his cousin John Archer, of Ross; Mathew Dormer. He forgives debts due to him by his cousins, William Archer Fitz-John, and Michael Archer; his brother Walter Archer, and Patrick Rothe, are also mentioned. FÆDERA, ETC. (RYMER).

Vol. II. Pars 2, p. 1188.

De hominibus ad arma in Hiberniâ eligendis.

A. D. 1342. An. 16 Edw. III.—Rex, justiciario Hiberniæ, vel ejus locum tenenti, & fratri Johanni Larcher priori hospitalis Sancti Johannis Jerusalem' in Hiberniâ, Salutem.

Quia passagium nostrum versus partes transmarinas, tam pro defensione regni nostri Angliæ quam pro recuperatione jurium nostrorum manu forti, ordinavimus in proximo, Deo duce, & eâ de causâ, multitudinem armatorum oportet necessario nos habere;

Vobis mandamus quod centum homines ad arma de fortioribus validioribus, decentioribus, et melioribus hominibus terræ nostræ Hiberniæ, ac nongentos hobelarios armis competentibus benè & sufficienter munitos, in eâdem terrâ, cum celeritate quâ fieri poterit, eligatis, arraietis, & ipsos armis et aliis necessariis muniri faciatis; ita quod prædicti homines, tam armati quam hobelarii, electi, arraiati, & ad plenum muniti, ut est dictum, prompti sint & parati cum vos, vel aliquem vestrum, & ipsos facerimus præmuniri, in obsequium nostrum, prout tunc ordinabimus profecturi.

Et hoc, sicut nos & honorem nostrum ac expeditionem negociorum nostrorum diligitis modis omnibus faciatis.

REGISTER OF ALL HALLOWS, DUBLIN. IR. ARCH. SOC., 1845, p. 72.

A Convention between the Prior of the Convent of All Hallows & Adam Long, of the town of Wicklow, the latter giving "illam placeam edificatam quam dictus Adam emit de Galfrido le Archer."

Dated 15 Hen. III. (28 Oct., 1230, to 27 Oct., 1231).

HERALD AND GENEALOGIST,

Manor of Bitton, Gloucestershire.

The Manor of Oldland was, in 1275, held by Gilbert de Clare, while David le Blund & Stephen de la More held Bitton.

From the Clares it passed to the Earls of Stafford. Inq. P. M., 10 Ric. 2. The dependency of Bitton—Hanham—was, after the Domesday record, held by Salso Marisco (Saltmarsh). In 1287 J. de S. M. founded his title to it on a charter of Robert Harding (ancestor of the Earls of Berkeley), to Robert Hanham, (ancestor of Saltmarsh).

After the year 1327 John Brittain occupied Bitton Court, as a tenant. In a quo warranto, 15 Edw. I., it is shown that Rob^t D'Amnerville had two daughters, both named Petronilla. The younger married W^m de Putot, Sheriff of Gloucester, 1222 to 1228, Warden of the Stanaries, Cornwall, and of the Bristol Coast; the other Petronilla married Nicholas de Oxhaye.

SOME ADDITIONAL FACTS AS TO THE MARRIAGE OF JAMES, VISCOUNT THURLES, AFTERWARDS DUKE OF ORMONDE, AND THE LADY ELIZABETH PRESTON.

BY THE REV. JAMES GRAVES, A.B., M.R.I.A.

SINCE the printing of a Paper on the "Early Life and Marriage of James, First Duke of Ormonde" in the "Journal" (vol. IV., new series, p. 276), the publication of the Calendar of the Irish Patent and Close Rolls of Chancery enables me to give some further particulars of the marriage of the Lady Elizabeth Preston with Lord Thurles, fully confirmatory of Carte's statement that the ceremony was far from being clandestine, and had the full consent of King Charles the First.

On the death of her father, the Earl of Desmond, the King, by his Letter, under the Privie Seal, to the Lord Deputy Falkland, dated February 9th, 4 Chas. I. (1628), took under his special protection the Countess of Desmond, and her daughter and sole heir—the Lady Elizabeth Preston; and when the Countess died, another Royal Letter was issued to the Lord Deputy, dated April 9th following, which thus commences:—
