I regularly ask Wikipedians this question:

How can we improve Wikipedia?

Here's what I hear most often ...

Be Kind to each other (even to the annoying ones!)

Our challenge

The Wikimedia movement faces some cultural issues:

- a lack of civility
- hostile behavior turns off good people
- this is most frustrating for new users
- these issues prevent us from growing

How can we learn to be nicer to each other?

Growing a Culture of Kindness

Here are some ideas to improve how we interact with each other:

- help newbies
- train editors
- reward kindness
- more social tools
- friendlier channels
- give everyone a voice

Help newbies

- welcome new users
- show them how to contribute
- give them safe spaces to learn -- e.g. Teahouse
- simple to-do lists and micro-tasks

Train editors

- civility toolkit
- communications courses
- conflict resolution workshops
- mentoring programs

Reward kindness

- identify people who 'play nice'
- show them appreciation
- celebrate their acts of kindness
- document their best practices

More social tools

- develop 'convivial software'
- positive feedback ('Thanks')
- civil discussion tools ('Flow')
- better user profiles and avatars
- persistent identity and reputation

'Thanks' notification

Friendlier channels

- multimedia conversations
- video roundtables
- call-in talk shows
- social media
- meetups

Give everyone a voice

- reach out to all stakeholders
- invite readers to contribute
- make women feel at home
- welcome minorities
- engage content experts

MAKE IT EASY AND
THINGS TO DO!

What other tools & practices can we develop to support a 'culture of kindness' ?
