THIRTY-FOURTH ANNUAL MEETING OF THE AMERICAN ANTI-SLAVERY SOCIETY.

The American Anti-Slavery Society met at Steinway Hall, in the city of New York, on May 7th, at 10 o'clock a.m.

The President, WENDELL PHILLIPS, presided over the meeting.

A large number of well-known friends were present upon the platform.

The President opened the exercises with the following remarks:

REMARKS OF THE PRESIDENT.

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN OF THE AMERICAN ANTI-SLAVERY SOCIETY: I congratulate you upon the encouraging circumstances under which this year's annual meeting is held.

It is now, I think, the thirtieth session that I have had the privilege of attending, and I believe no one of those and the thirtieth session that I have had the privilege of attending.

And I believe no one of those and the thirtieth session that I have had the privilege of attending.

And I believe no one of those and the thirtieth session that I have had the privilege of attending.

And I believe no one of those and the thirtieth session that I have had the privilege of attending.

the present hour, not as the most dangerous, but certainly as one of the most critical in the history of our cause.

Meeting as we do, surrounded by a nation thoroughly in earnest in its determination to make absolute justice the law of the land, the only real question which stirs the anxiety of any thoughtful American is, not of the absolute future, but of the way to it.

Well, there is another doubt relieved. We not only are certain as a people that this nation is to survive, but I think we are certain, humbly speaking, of another thing, and that is that this generation of Americans will see the nation made up of free men.

Under such auspices I cannot but welcome you to the session of this, perhaps the most important of our meetings.

Under such circumstances, what is our duty? Well, friends, I think this audience represents the indispensable element in all republican governments.

man, are for a time to be put aside and checked by the managers of the party—the men who go outside over the country to secure its seeming success.

But in the meantime, if you speak out among politicians, you will find that they will not only think the policy of the party on any such objective individual.

There are only two parties to be trusted to-day. There are only two parties whose past history entitles them to confidence to-day.

These two elements are the right hand and the left hand of the nation.

I know that I am going back ten years to the fall of the Anti-Slavery cause in times past.

What we are to guard against is the inexperience of new converts.

Men, who ought to know better, meet me on the public platform and ask me by what right the white men of the South have admitted to it.
