represented the Judge and Jury society, in which Charles Bender, made up like Nicholson, opened the proceedings by calling 'Waiter a glass of brandy and water and a cigar.' The Society is referred to in R. H. Barham's Ingoldsby Legends, 18 ed. 1860 in The Ghost, vol. ii, p. 296 as follows—

It more resembled one of later date
And tenfold talent, as I'm told, in Bow st.,
Where kindlier souls do congregate;
And though there are who deem that same a low street,
Yet I'm assured, for frolicsome debate
And genuine humour it's surpassed by no street,
When the 'Chief Baron' enters and assumes
To rule o'er mimic Thesigers and Broughams.

His pamphlet on the British Museum was sold in Russell st. in front of the building by a sandwich man, but it is now very scarce. In this work John Winter Jones the secretary and chief librarian with a clique of his friends are denounced in strong language. Some of the Museum officials furnished information for the compilation of the pamphlet.
