NOTE.—Mr. Edward Walford, M.A., states in Notes and Queries 16 June 1888 p. 478 that Mark Lemon told him the place of his birth was a house included in the Crystal Palace bazaar just behind Peter Robinson's emporium, this was probably the present No. 228 Oxford st. formerly No. 108 down to 1881 when all the houses in Oxford st. west of Tottenham Court road were renumbered. There is a portrait of Lemon by John Leech in his two-page cartoon called "Mr. Punch's fancy ball" in Punch 9 Jan. 1847 as the conductor of the orchestra. In Alfred Bunn's A word with Punch 1847 Lemon is spoken of as Thickhead, there is a portrait representing him as a pot boy and it is suggested that he was a sailor and vastly like Moses. He wrote the first article in the first number of Punch entitled The Moral of Punch. The rev. J. Richardson, LL.B. states in his Recollections of the last half century vol. 1 (1856) 80-2 that Lemon kept the Shakespeare's Head tavern in Wych st. Strand for one year after his marriage. In "Mr. Punch: his origin and career" [1870] there is a facsimile of the original prospectus of Punch in the handwriting of Lemon.
