Something however it becomes us to say of both, and this I think may with Truth and Modesty enough be said, that as few Men knew Books, and that part of Learning which is call'd Historia Literaria better than himself, so there never yet appeared in England so Choice and Valuable a Catalogue to be thus dispos'd of, as this before us: more especially of that sort of Books which are out of the Common Course, which a Man may make the Business of his Life to Collect, and at last not to be able to accomplish. the instruction of those who know them not, that I were my self able to name them.

But because there may perhaps be some who are not well acquainted with his Character, and not much better with Books, may wonder to see so many here that may seem scarcely worth preserving: let them take this for an Excuse, that in all vast Collections there will be always too many of this kind; but let them beware that they do not despise all those which they do not know, and some too which they may fancy they do; for let them know, that it was very seldom that he bought any Book without some very particular Reason. For if any Man did, he certainly knew what we call the Secret History of Learning so well; that if there were but one single Passage in an Author, for which only it was to be valued, it never escap'd him. So that if he had but taken the trouble upon himself of setting down in the vacant Leaf of many of his Books the Reasons which he had to buy them, what they contain'd that was remarkable or worth knowing, and which was to be met with in no other Author (in which sort of Learning he was knowing to a Miracle) it had become not only a very great advantage to the Sale, but a singular piece of Service to the future Possessors, and perhaps to Learning in general; and this Omission some of his particular Friends were complaining of to him but very few days before his Death, himself concurring in the Complaint, but lamenting too, that it was now too late. We must confess that being a Person who Collected his Books for Use, and not for Ostentation or Ornament, he seem'd no more solicitous about their Dress than his own; and therefore you'll find that a gilt Back or a large Margin was very seldom any inducement to him to Buy. 'Twas sufficient that he had the Book. Though considering that he was so unhappy as to want Heirs capable of making that use of them which he had done, and that therefore they were to be dispersed after this manner, I have heard him condemn his own negligence in that particular, observing that the Garniture of a Book was as apt to recommend it to a great part of our modern Collectors (whose Learning ous not beyond the Edition, the Title Page, and the Printer's Name,) as the intrinsic Value could.

But that he himself was not a mere Nomenclator, and versed only in Title Pages, but had made that just and laudable use of his Books, which would become all those that set up for Collectors, I appeal to the Letterati of his acquaintance who conversed most frequently with him; how full, how ready, and how exact he was in answering any Question that was propos'd to him relating to Learned Men or their Writings, making no Secret of any thing that he knew, or any thing that he had; being naturally one of the most communicative Men living both of his Knowledge and his Books. True it is, that having formerly suffer'd not a little by the easiness of his Temper, he grew towards the declension of his days a little more reserv'd and tenacious of the latter, especially towards a sort of Men, whose fidelity in Restoring, or officiousness in Lending, he thought he had reason to suspect. Certain I am, that if he had assum'd that humour, which was mistaken for Moroseness, earlier, we had not miss'd so many valuable Books, whose Names only now remain in the Manuscript Catalogue; though it must at the same time be acknowledged that he had an infelicity of a worse Nature which contributed not a little to the incompleatness of the Catalogue as 'tis now presented. But though there are not all the Books which ought of right to have been here; yet this I affirm, that there is not one Book added, of which he was not possessed at the time of his Death.

As for the Books of his own Faculty, tho' it be not an entire Collection, (for who could, or rather, who would have one in Physick?) yet it may be said, that it is infinitely the best and largest that ever yet appeared in these Islands; and from hence the Gentlemen of his own Profession, (I mean the Learned Part of them who are still of Opinion that Books and Reading may be of some use to them in the Art of Healing) may be supplied with almost every thing necessary or useful in it.

And

To the Reader.

And give me leave to say this of him upon my own knowledge, that he never grudg'd his Money in procuring, nor his Time or Labour in perusing any Book which he thought could be any ways instructive to him; and having the Felicity of a Memory always faithful, always officious, which never forsook him, though attack'd by frequent and severe Sickness, and by the worst of Diseases, Old Age, his desire of Knowledge attended him to the last, and he pursued his Studies with equal Vigour and Application to the very extremity of his Life.

It may be here expected that some Apology should be made for the Errors and Imperfections of the Catalogue, but the Reasons that occasioned them, not being to be given without some violation of good Nature or good Manners; we must only in general beg the Learned and Judicious Reader's excuse, and by way of Compensation, assure him, that all imaginable Care shall be taken in the Sale that nothing shall be offered him unbecoming a Gentleman and a Scholar.
