PREFACE TO THIRD EDITION

Although resolved in December, 1902, to abjure further bookmaking, the desire to improve the book in the light of the experience and study of the ten years since the first edition was published, and to increase its usefulness overcame my reluctance, and I have given considerable time and labor to the threefold task of bringing it up to date, condensing it into one volume form and perfecting the analytical index. A great part of the work has been rewritten, such as the chapter on disposition of decedent's realty to pay debts and those on the transfer tax and on distribution. Parts have been consolidated from various chapters, as the discussion of claims against decedents' estates.

I have personally examined the hundreds of decisions made since the Edition of 1902 went to press and some 1,200 new citations have been made; and have also revised the citation of the Consolidated statutes as reported to the legislature of 1908 by the Board of Statutory Consolidation.

I have also adopted a system of continuous section numbering throughout the work, and have inserted an analytical table of contents summarizing such sections; while the analytical index at the end is believed to be complete, noting every proposition in the text, under such numerous catch-headings as to make the work available to every practitioner.

The change back to one volume I believe will add to the working helpfulness of the contents by bringing index and text within the two covers.

I beg to acknowledge not only the many testimonies to the practical helpfulness of the former editions, but also kindly criticisms and suggestions as to points in which it might be made more helpful.

PREFACE TO SECOND EDITION

The work of revising the first edition of this book has been in continuous progress since May, 1899, when the original manuscript went to press. Originally undertaken merely in order to keep the author's copy up to date, the numerous decisions and the many important changes in the Code by our Legislature and the demand upon the publishers for the work have necessitated the preparation and publication of a second edition. The work has been so thoroughly revised as to require its being entirely repaged and printed from new plates. The greatest change is in the chapter upon the Transfer Tax Law in which branch of the law the Legislature has displayed its greatest industry. In the preparation of this chapter I have had the benefit of the experience and services of Mr. Samuel T. Carter, Jr., who has had peculiar opportunities of familiarizing himself with the law and its development and changes as well as in constant practice in cases involving questions under the act. I have no apology to make for presenting in this edition the changes made by him in my original work, which I have adopted almost without alteration.

I also desire to express my indebtedness to Mr. Joseph T. Brown, Jr., for assistance upon the index and for his careful and remarkably clear summary of the law relating to the construction of wills, which will be found at the close of chapter 8 of Part III, which summary I have also adopted as it stands.

With the exception of this assistance, I have personally examined every case decided since the issuance of the first edition and have endeavored to give to the profession in the very language of the decisions, the law as declared by the courts applicable to proceedings in the Surrogates' Courts in the State of New York. The plan of the work has been unchanged; the Code sections are still differentiated in type so that the work can still be kept up to date by the code amendment pasters.

The index has been, it might be observed, a labor of love, and the author has diligently endeavored to prepare that which shall make available, without too much effort, the contents of the book. It is an analytical index and contains every possible heading under which the particular subjects have been thought likely to be looked for by the practitioner. The author begs to suggest that the usefulness of the book may be increased to those who have it by a careful use of the table of Code sections. In this table the pages upon which the section is actually quoted are printed in italics as distinguished from the pages upon which it is merely referred to or discussed. So far as has been possible, the cases under any particular section are grouped in that part of the book in which it is actually quoted.

At the request of many of those using the work, a table of cases has been prepared.

If it were appropriate, I should have liked to set forth here some reasons why, in my judgment, the jurisdiction of the Surrogate should be enlarged. It seems strange that he should be deemed equal to construing a bequest, and not a devise, though the latter be given in the same will and the same language. The Supreme Court by its appellate divisions would safeguard the interests affected by such additional power, if conferred upon men, who by daily study and experience, grow peculiarly capable of dealing with all problems of testamentary law.

I am sensible of the fact that a work of this character is not an addition to literature, but if the work shall make easier the task of the practitioner under our Code in ascertaining what the courts have held to be the intent of the Legislature in framing and reframing the Code, the eight years during which I have been occupied in it will not have been wasted.

PREFATORY NOTE

TO

THE LAW AND PRACTICE IN SURROGATES' COURTS IN THE

STATE OF NEW YORK

I have read with great care the proofs of the work entitled "Law and Practice of Surrogates' Courts in the State of New York," by my former partner, Henry Wynans Jessup, of the New York Bar, with much pleasure and instruction.

He has succeeded in collating and compiling the statutes and decisions of the courts relating to the subject-matter of his work with marked clearness and fullness. The work has been done in such a way as to be extremely helpful to practitioners in those courts as well as to the courts themselves, and the mode of doing so, and particularly of citing authorities and of arranging them with such clearness that they speak for themselves, renders the book peculiarly valuable.

I have no hesitation in recommending the work not only to all the members of the legal profession who practice in Surrogates' Courts, but by reason of its clearness of statement to executors, administrators, trustees and guardians and others who are interested in the administration and distribution of estates. I am sure this book will be greatly serviceable to them all because of such simplicity and clearness of its arrangement of the authorities and of the law on all subjects involved.

I hope the work will have the wide circulation it deserves.

AUTHOR'S PREFACE TO FIRST EDITION

This work was begun four years ago, at the request of Mr. David Banks. It is practically a commentary on Chapter XVIII of the Code of Civil Procedure, which defines the practice in the Surrogates' Courts in the State of New York.

So far as practicable the text has been worded in the language of the decisions. Earnest effort has been made to make discriminating citations to the various propositions in the text, both of the leading, and of the most recent adjudications. The wholesale citing of a large number of cases to a point clearly decided in one authoritative case has, in the author's professional experience, proved a hindrance rather than a help, and has, therefore, been avoided here.

The text is differentiated by appropriate type from the Code sections commentated. The table of Code sections will indicate where any given section is quoted. Should amendments be enacted by the Legislature to any sections in Chapter XVIII, the new section can be put in, in the form of adhesive slips, and the work thus kept constantly up to date.

The forms, inserted as precedents throughout the text, have been carefully prepared or adapted from those in use in the various Surrogates' offices in the State. They are inserted in the text, as in that way the discussion of the procedure is illustrated and made clearer. Nearly every Surrogate has official forms in his office, which as a general rule it is advisable to use, in order to expedition of business. Precedents in a text-book should never be blindly followed. They can only be useful as skeletons, or guides in framing the successive proceedings.

The precedents given in this work are somewhat fully annotated.

Here and there the discussion had been compacted into the form of analytical tables, which, it is hoped, will prove of service. Such, e. g., are the tables under the Transfer Tax Law.

No apology is thought necessary for the size of this commentary, which was necessarily caused by the plan of the work as well as the distressing lack of harmony between the decisions on many detail points by different Surrogates, as well as by the various Appellate Courts.

I am indebted for valuable aid and suggestions to Hon. Theodore H. Silkman, Surrogate of Westchester County; to Mr. Emmett R. Olcott, of the New York bar, for assistance in preparing the transfer tax precedents; to Mr. Edward W. Bonynge, Deputy Chief Clerk of the New York Surrogates' office, for valuable suggestions as to the practice on accountings; to Mr. Jacob Washburn, Probate Clerk in the same office, for hints as to the practice on probate proceedings; to Mr. Arthur D. Wing, for assistance in classifying the cases examined; to Mr. T. F. C. Demarest for expert aid in the preparation of the index; also to the Surrogates in the various counties and to the Public Administrator's Counsel in New York City, by whose courtesy I was furnished with full sets of their official forms.

I am also indebted to Hon. Noah Davis, with whom I was associated when I undertook this work, for kindly encouragement and suggestion in regard thereto

PART I

INTRODUCTORY DEFINITIONS

The statutory definitions should be carefully read before beginning the study of chapter 18 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

These definitions are contained in

In construing the provisions of this chapter, the following rules must be observed, except where a contrary intent is expressly declared in the provision to be construed, or plainly apparent from the context thereof:

1. The word, "intestate," signifies a person who died without leaving a valid will; but where it is used with respect to particular property, it signifies a person who died without effectually disposing of that property by will, whether he left a will or not.

2. The word, "assets," signifies personal property applicable to the payment of the debts of a decedent.

3. The word, "debts," includes every claim and demand, upon which a judgment for a sum of money, or directing the payment of money, could be recovered in an action; and the word "creditor" includes every person having such a claim or demand, any person having a claim for expense of administration, or any person having a claim for funeral expenses.

4. The word, "will," signifies a last will and testament, and includes all the codicils to a will.

5. The expression, "letters of administration," includes letters of temporary administration.

6. The expression, "testamentary trustee," includes every person, except an executor, an administrator with the will annexed, or a guardian, who is designated by a will, or by any competent authority, to execute a trust created by a will; and it includes such an executor or administrator, where he is acting in the execution of a trust created by the will, which is separable from his functions as executor or adminstrator.

7 The word, "surrogate," where it is used in the text, or in a bond or undertaking, given pursuant to any provision of this chapter, includes every officer or court vested by law with the functions of surrogate.

8. The expression, "judicial settlement," where it is applied to an account, signifies a decree of a surrogate's court, whereby the account is made conclusive upon the parties to the special proceeding, either for all purposes, or for certain purposes specified in the statute; and an account thus made conclusive is said to be "judicially settled."

9. The expression, "intermediate account," denotes an account filed in the surrogate's office, for the purpose of disclosing the acts of the person accounting, and the condition of the estate or fund in his hands, and not made the subject of a judicial settlement.

10. The expression, "upon the return of a citation," where it is used in a provision requiring an act to be done in the surrogate's court, relates to the time and place at which the citation is returnable, or to which the hearing is adjourned; includes a supplemental citation, issued to bring in a party who ought to be, but has not been cited; and implies that, before doing the act specified, due proof must be made, that all persons required to be cited have been duly cited.

11. The expression, "person interested," where it is used in connection with an estate or a fund, includes every person entitled, either absolutely or contingently, to share in the estate or the proceeds thereof, or in the fund, as husband, wife, legatee, next of kin, heir, devisee, assignee, grantee, or otherwise, except as a creditor. Where a provision of this chapter prescribes that a person interested may object to an appointment, or may apply for an inventory, an account, or increased security, an allegation of his interest, duly verified, suffices, although his interest is disputed; unless he has been excluded by a judgment, decree, or other final determination, and no appeal therefrom is pending.

12. The term, "next of kin," includes all those entitled, under the provisions of law relating to the distribution of personal property, to share in the unbequeathed residue of the assets of a decedent after payment of debts and expenses, other than a surviving husband or wife.

13. The expression, "real property," includes every estate, interest, and right, legal or equitable, in lands, tenements, or hereditaments, except those which are determined or extinguished by the death of a person seized or possessed thereof, or in any manner entitled thereto, and except those which are declared by law to be assets. The word, "inheritance," signifies real property, as defined in this subdivision, descended as prescribed by law. The expression, "personal property," signifies every kind of property, which survives a decedent, other than real property as defined in this subdivision, and includes a right of action conferred by special statutory provision upon an executor or administrator.

CHAPTER I

SURROGATES AND THEIR COURTS

§ 1. Definition.—Surrogates' Courts in the State of New York are courts of record, possessing a special and limited jurisdiction, which extends generally over the probate of wills, the administration and distribution of decedents' estates, and the protection of the interests of infants. Matter of Thompson, 184 N. Y. 36, 41.

Jurisdiction over this latter subject is not exclusive, and its limited character must be emphasized (see § 4 below), e. g., while they have the "like power and authority to appoint a general guardian . . . . of an infant which the chancellor had" (§ 2821, Code Civ. Proc.) they have the power to "direct and control" his conduct only in cases specially prescribed by law. Matter of Bolton, 159 N. Y. 129, 135.

Surrogates have also been given jurisdiction over the transfer tax procedure, to determine what is taxable, the amount of the tax, and its collection. In spite of this very substantial addition to the business of the Court, the State has made no provision for any additional compensation to the Surrogate, even in the counties whence the bulk of this tax is collected.

The Surrogate is the judge or judicial officer presiding over such a court.

§ 2. Surrogates' Courts in the State of New York date back to the act of March 16, 1778 (Laws of N. Y. [Jones & Varick's ed.] 23). "Before the Revolution, the power of granting letters testamentary and letters of administration resided, in New York, in the Colonial Governor, as judge of the Prerogative Court, or Court of Probates of the colony. It was afterward vested in the Court of Probates, consisting of a single judge, and so continued until 1787, when Surrogates were authorized to grant letters testamentary, and letters of administration of the estates of persons dying within their respective counties. If the person died out of the State, or within the State not being an inhabitant thereof, the granting of administration was still reserved to the Court of Probates (L. N. Y. sess. 1, chap. 12, and sess. 10, chap. 38; Goodrich v. Pendleton, 4 Johns. Ch. 552). This practice continued until the act of March 21, 1823, when the Court of Probates was abolished, and all the original powers of that court were transferred to the Surrogates." (2 Kent's Commentaries, 410.) The act of March 16, 1778, established a tribunal known as the "Court of Probates" vested with the powers, authority and jurisdiction in testamentary matters which the governor of the colony of New York, while it was subject to the Crown of Great Britain, had and exercised as judge of the Prerogative Court, or the Court of Probates of the colony, except, however, the power of appointing Surrogates.

§ 3. They are courts of record expressly enumerated as such by the Code. Code Civ. Proc. § 2, subd. 14.

Prior to 1877 they were not deemed courts of record (People v. Carr, 100 N. Y. 236, 241), although they exercised powers only incident to and characteristic of such tribunals (see table below; Matter of Latson, 1 Duer, 696), such, for example, as the power to punish by fine and imprisonment, which power, says Blackstone (III, 24), cannot be exercised by any other court than a Court of Record, adding: "The very creation of a new jurisdiction with the power of fine and imprisonment makes it instantly a court of record." But in 1877, by amendment to the Code, "a Surrogate's Court in each County" was added to the statutory list of courts of record.

Like all courts of record a Surrogate's Court has a seal, of which the Surrogate has charge (Code Civ. Proc. § 2507); it can fine and imprison for contempt (Code Civ. Proc. § 2481, subd. 7); its acts and judicial proceedings are "enrolled for a perpetual memorial and testimony" in books of record; and it has even been held that, as a Court of Record, it falls within the language of the Federal statute, and has common-law jurisdiction to grant naturalization. Matter of Harstrom, 7 Abb. N. C. 391.

§ 4. Their jurisdiction is special and limited.—It has always been held that the Surrogates' Court are tribunals of limited jurisdiction. Those claiming under a decree of the Surrogate must show affirmatively his authority to make it. Farmers' L. & T. Co. v. Hill, 4 Dem 41; Matter of Hawley, 104 N. Y. 250, 262; Matter of Randall, 152 N. Y. 508, 516, and cases cited; Matter of Bolton, 159 N. Y. 129, 136.

The subjoined table exhibits this in detail. And the facts necessary to confer jurisdiction must always be alleged in the initial papers. Potter v. Ogden, 136 N. Y. 384, 396.

It is well settled that, where a court has only a special limited jurisdiction, which jurisdiction depends upon certain specific facts, a total defect of evidence as to any one of these essential facts will make its action void. Id. See also Hewitt v. Newberger, 141 N. Y. 538, at page 543, citing Curry v. Pringle, 11 Johns. 444; Bigelow v. Sterns, 19 Johns. 39; Murphy v. Kron, 20 Abb. N. C. 259.

This case was a criminal case and related to the jurisdiction of the recorder, but the principle is applicable to the Surrogate's Court. The higher courts at first jealously restricted the jurisdiction of this inferior court (Harris v. Meyer, 3 Redf. 450; Sipperly v. Baucus, 24 N. Y. 46) to its statutory powers. As time went on certain implied powers were claimed and exercised; but in 1830, the Revised Statutes (2 R. S. 220. sec. 1) denied them this reasonable extension of their powers. After specifically enumerating the powers of Surrogates' Courts (see table) the statute provided that these powers should be exercised in the manner prescribed in the statutes, "and in no other;" and no "Surrogate shall, under pretext of incidental power, or constructive authority, exercise any jurisdiction whatever not expressly given by the statutes of this State."

This part of the law was short-lived, as might have been expected. It soon became necessary to repeal it (Laws of 1837, chap. 460, sec. 71; Sipperly v. Baucus, 24 N. Y. 46; Campbell v. Thatcher, 54 Barb. 382), because the courts found that the exercise of certain incidental powers "was absolutely essential to a due administration of justice." Pew v. Hastings, 1 Barb. Ch. R. 452. The following table sets forth in comparative form the growth of the powers of the Surrogates' Courts up to the present time. See also post, chap. II, Jurisdiction.

Laws of N. Y. (1799) Andrew's ed. 724.	To order the sale and disposition of the real estate of deceased persons. Before Revised Statutes	Under Revised Statutes of 1828-1830	Under Code of Civil Procedure, § 2472
To appoint guardians for infants as fully as the chancellor might do. 3 Webster (1802), 158.	To appoint guardians for minors, to remove them, to direct and control their conduct, and to settle their accounts as prescribed by law.	To appoint and remove guardians for infants; to compel the payment and delivery by them of money or other property belonging to their wards; and in the cases specially prescribed by law, to direct and control their conduct and settle their accounts.
To order the admeasurement of dower upon the application of the widow, of any heir, or of the guardian of a minor. 3 Webster (1806), 315.	To cause the admeasurement of dower to widows. 2 R. S. 220, § 1, tit. 1, c. II, part III.	Under the Code of Civil Procedure provision is made for an "action for dower" §§ 1596–1625, which is a civil action, local and triable by jury (§ 968) and Surrogates' Courts have no longer jurisdiction of it. See 3 Rumsey's Practice, p. 89. And by ch. 407, L. 1903, there was added subd. 8: "To settle the accounts of a father, mother, or other relative having the rights, powers and duties of a guardian in socage, and to compel the payment and delivery of money or other property belonging to the ward.
To hear and determine any cause touching a legacy or bequest in any last will and testament; to decree the payment of it, and to enforce it by execution against the person. 2 Laws of N. Y. (supra) 71. To record all wills proved before them with the proof thereof, letters testamentary and of administration granted by them with all things concerning the same, all orders or decrees made by them for the sals of real estate, and all instruments, writings or documents of a like nature left unrecorded by their predecessors, and to complete the unfinished business of their predecessors. Laws of 1813, 139; Laws of 1828, 130. To institute inquiry respecting the personal estate of intestates not delivered to the public administrator or accounted for lawfully by persons into whose hands it was supposed to have fallen. This was in 1821.	Every Surrogate had power to issue subpœoas, to compel attendance of witnesses, or production of any paper material to any inquiry pending in the court, and to punish for disobedience just as a court of record could. To issue citations and compel appearance of parties; to enforce all lawful orders, process and decrees of his court by attachment against the persons of those neglecting or refusing to comply with them. To exemplify under seal all transcripts of records, papers or proceedings. To preserve order by punishing for contempt. But all the powers above enumerated were to be exercised (1830–1837) in no manner other than that prescribed by the statute, and incidental powers were denied. After 1837 they held the same incidental powers conceded them before the adoption of the Revised Statutes.	Corresponding to this enumeration of powers is § 2481 of the Code which provides that a Surrogate in court or out of court as the case requires, has power. 1. To issue citations to parties, in any matter within the jurisdiction of his court; and in a case prescribed by law, to compel the attendance of a party. 2. To adjourn, from time to time, a hearing or other proceeding in his court; and where all persons who are necessary parties have not been cited or notified, and citation or notice has not been waived by appearance or otherwise, it is his duty, before proceeding further, so to adjourn the same, and to issue a supplemental citation or require the petitioner to give an additional notice, as may be necessary. 3. To issue, under the seal of the court, a subpœna, requiring the attendance of a witness, residing or being in any part of the State; or a subpœna duces tecum, requiring such attendance, and the production of a book or paper material to an inquiry pending in the court. 4. To enjoin, by order, an executor, administrator, testamentary trustee, or guardian, to whom a citation or other process has been duly issued from his court from acting as such, until the further order of the court. 5. To require by order, an executor, administrator, testamentary trustee, or guardian, subject to the jurisdiction of his court, to perform any duty imposed upon him by statute, or by the Surrogate's Court, under authority of a statute. 6. To open, vacate, modify, or set aside or to enter as of a former time, a decree or order of his court; or to grant a new trial or a new hearing for fraud, newly discovered evidence, cler-
They had authority to compel the attendance of witnesses, the production of wills, documents or writings and for disobedience in such cases to commit the party offending for contempt; and, lastly, in all matters submitted to their cognizance, they were authorized to proceed according to the course of the court having, by the common law, jurisdiction of such matters, except so far as they were restricted by statute, and they had such incidental powers as were necessary to carry those which were granted into effect. Laws of 1813, 139; Brick's Estate, 15 Abb. Pr. 12, 33.

ical error or other sufficient cause. (The powers conferred by this subdivision, must be exercised only in a like case, and in the same manner, as a court of record and of general jurisdiction exercises the same powers). Upon an appeal from a determination of the Surrogate, made upon an application pursuant to this subdivision, the appellate division of the Supreme Court has the same power as the Surrogate; and his determination must be reviewed, as if an original application was made to that term. 7. To punish any person for a contempt of his Court, civil or criminal, in any case where it is expressly prescribed by law that a court of record may punish a person for a similar contempt, and in like manner.	8. Subject to the provisions of law, relating to the disqualification of a judge in certain cases, to complete any unfinished business, pending before his predecessor in the office, including proofs, accountings, and examinations. 9. To complete, and certify and sign in his own name, adding to his signature the date of so doing, all records of papers, left uncompleted or unsigned by any of his predecessors. 10. To exemplify and certify transcripts of all records of his court, or other papers remaining therein. 11. With respect to any matter not expressly provided for in the foregoing subdivision of this section, to proceed, in all matters subject to the	cognizance of his court, according to the course and practice of a court having, by the common law, jurisdiction of such matters, except as otherwise prescribed by statute; and to exercise such incidental powers as are necessary to carry into effect the powers expressly conferred. See Matter of Underhill, 117 N. Y. 471, 473, citing Riggs v. Cragg, 89 N. Y. 480, "A Surrogate can exercise only such jurisdiction as has been specially conferred by statute, together with those incidental powers which may be requisite to effectually carry out the jurisdiction actually granted." See also Sipperly v. Baucus, 24 N. Y. 46; Stillwell v. Carpenter, 52 N. Y. 414; Bevan v. Cooper, 72 N. Y. 317; Matter of Camp, 126 N. Y. 377, 390.

By Laws 1909, ch. 65, a new subdivision is added: 12. A Surrogate or a clerk of the Surrogates' Court has power to administer oaths, to take affidavits and the proof and acknowledgment of deeds and all other instruments in writing, and certify the same with the same force and effect as if taken and certified by a County Judge.

Y. 434; Fiester v. Shepard, 92 N. Y. 251; Matter of Callahan, 152 N. Y. 320; Matter of Stevens, 20 Misc. 157. (See post.) Nor to direct a satisfaction of record of a mortgage belonging to an infant, although its estate is within its jurisdiction. Cromwell v. Kirk, 1 Dem. 599. Nor have they any jurisdiction over realty left by a decedent or its avails, unless brought within their jurisdiction by a will or by a statute for the purpose of being dealt with for some special purpose (like the payment of debts in case the personalty is inadequate for the purpose). Sweeney v. Warren, 127 N. Y. 426, 435.

When confronted by an act or instrument he is powerless to pass upon he must take it at its face or remit the parties to the proper forum. For example. A petitions that B account. B produces a full release by A, the validity or effect of which A disputes. The Surrogate will treat it as a bar. Matter of Wagner, 119 N. Y. 28. See also Sanders v. Soutter, 126 N. Y. 193; Matter of U. S. Trust Co., 175 N. Y. 304. See cases in dissenting opinion of Vann, J., p. 312.

The foregoing is merely illustrative. The rule in specific cases can be found under the chapters dealing with these cases (q. v.).

§ 5. They are constitutional courts, under the new constitution of 1894, which provides (art. VI, § 15): "The existing Surrogates' Courts are continued, and the Surrogates now in office shall hold their office until the expiration of their terms. . . . Surrogates and Surrogates' Courts shall have the jurisdiction and powers which the Surrogates and existing Surrogates' Courts now possess, until otherwise provided by the legislature." See Matter of Bolton, 159 N. Y. 129, 134.

Thus the legislature has, as before, the power to deal as it will with the jurisdiction and powers of these courts, but it may not abolish the courts. See People v. Carr, 86 N. Y. 512, 514.

§ 6. The terms of office of all Surrogates are regulated also by the constitution.

First. Those in office January 1, 1895, are to hold their unexpired terms.

Second. Those hereafter elected to serve for six years in all counties save the county of New York. In that county the term is fixed at fourteen years.

Third. But no Surrogate is to serve longer than until and including the last day of December next after he shall be seventy years of age.

This last provision is not to be taken as abridging the term of any Surrogate elected prior to the time when the new constitution went into effect who may become seventy years of age before his six or fourteen years expire. People ex rel. Davis v. Gardner, 45 N. Y. 812. This case is directly in point. This provision as to the Surrogates is new. For it has been expressly held that the provision in the old constitution fixing an age limit did not apply to Surrogates. People ex rel. Lent v. Carr, 100 N. Y. 236. So in People v. Gardner, the provision was new as to county judges, and a county judge chosen prior to the time when the new article of the constitution was to go into effect (that is, at the November election preceding January 1, 1870), and who had taken the oath of office, was held to be "in office at the adoption of this article" and entitled to hold his office for the full term of four years although he became seventy years of age on February 9, 1870.

It is true that the new constitution does not lengthen the term of office as was the case before, and, therefore, possibly the reasoning of Folger, J., might not be applicable that the insertion of an age limit was clearly called for by the new and longer term, and could not be made to apply to the old and shorter term which was in express words "continued." However, the express provision "shall hold their offices until the expiration of their terms" is unambiguous. What follows refers to other officers, to wit: their "successors" who are to be elected. As to these an age limit is fixed. It is thought that People v. Gardner would still be an authority in the case of any Surrogate in office January 1, 1895, who may be near seventy. His term would not be abridged thereby.

§ 7. Enumeration of courts.—The "existing Surrogates' Courts" and the "Surrogates in office" when the new constitution became operative were as follows: In thirty-one of the sixty counties of the State the county judge was also Surrogate for his county, under § 15, art. VI of former constitution. [This article was an amendment to the constitution of 1846, prepared by delegates, elected pursuant to chapter 194, Laws of 1867, who met in convention in Albany, June 4, 1867. This article was submitted to the people in November, 1869, and adopted by a very narrow majority of less than 7,000. The article provided (§ 15): "The county judge shall also be Surrogate of his county; but in counties having a population exceeding 40,000 the legislature may provide for the election of a separate officer to be Surrogate, whose term of office shall be the same as that of the county judge."] In one of the remaining thirty, Sullivan County, there was also a special Surrogate [see County Law, Laws of 1892, chap. 686; 5 R. S. (8th ed.) 3957], the regular Surrogate being also county judge.

In twenty-eight of the remaining counties, to wit: In Albany, Cattaraugus, Cayuga, Chatauqua, Clinton, Columbia, Dutchess, Erie, Jefferson, Kings, Monroe, Montgomery, Niagara, Oneida, Onondaga, Ontario, Orange, Oswego, Otsego, Queens, Rensselaer, Saratoga, St. Lawrence, Steuben, Suffolk, Ulster, Washington and Westchester, there were separate Surrogates, who had been elected by virtue of the provisions of the constitutional amendment above referred to.

In the county of New York there were two separate Surrogates elected under the provisions of chapter 642, Laws of 1892, either of whom is entitled to exercise all the powers conferred by law upon the Surrogate of the city and county of New York. Laws of 1843, chap. 9, Code Civ. Proc. § 2504.

In eight of the twenty-eight counties where separate Surrogates had been elected, to wit: Cayuga, Chautauqua, Jefferson, Oneida, Orange, Oswego, St. Lawrence and Washington, there were also special Surrogates as well.

So we find on January 1, 1896, thirty Surrogates (two in New York), thirty-one county judges acting as Surrogates and nine special Surrogates.

This leads us to note the distinction between Surrogates proper and other Surrogates.

§ 8. The law provides for five kinds of Surrogates.

I. Surrogates proper.
II. County judges sitting as Surrogates.
III. Special Surrogates.
IV. Acting Surrogates.
V. Temporary Surrogates.

§ 9. Surrogates proper are those Surrogates who are elected in counties of over 40,000 population to sit in the Surrogates' Courts of those counties. Each of the Surrogates of New York is a Surrogate proper.

> Where the county judge is also surrogate, he may be designated, in any paper or proceeding relating to the office of surrogate, as the surrogate of the county, without any addition referring to his office as county judge. A local officer elected, as prescribed in the constitution, to discharge the duties of surrogate, or of county judge and surrogate, is designated in this act, and, when acting as surrogate, may be designated, as the special "surrogate" of his county. Where an officer, other than the surrogate, acts as surrogate in a case prescribed by law, he must be designated by his official title, with the addition of the words, "and acting surrogate." § 2483, Code Civil Proc.

§ 10. County judges when sitting as Surrogates are entitled to the designation of "the Surrogate of the county, without any addition referring to his office as county judge." Code Civ. Proc. § 2483. The distinction between Surrogates proper and county judges sitting as Surrogates was formerly further emphasized by the fact that under the old constitution a Surrogate was not a judge, but merely a judicial officer (see People ex rel. Lent v. Carr, 100 N. Y. 236); but the distinction cannot longer be made now that the court is a court of record and a constitutional court as well. Code Civ. Proc. § 3343, subd. 3, says the word "judge" includes a Surrogate. Still, this was only for purposes of construction in interpreting the provisions of the Code itself. To preside, by right, over a Court of Record constitutes the one so presiding a judge.

§ 11. Special Surrogates are local officers whose election may be ordered on application of the board of supervisors "to discharge the duties of county judge and of Surrogates in cases of their inability, or of a vacancy, and in such other cases as may be provided by law, and to exercise such other powers as are or may be provided by law." Const. art. VI, § 16 (new matter being indicated by italics). The Code distinctly designates these officers as "Special Surrogates." Code Civ. Proc. § 2483. The Code is not to be taken as repealing the prior provisions of the law giving Special Surrogates their powers. Laws of 1849, chap. 306, and Laws of 1851, chap. 108; Aldinger v. Pugh, 132 N. Y. 403; Ross v. Wigg, 101 N. Y. 640.

§ 12. Acting Surrogates are officers other than the Surrogate who act as Surrogate in the cases prescribed by law. They must be designated by their regular official title, with the addition of the words "and Acting Surrogate." Code Civ. Proc. § 2483. The Code provides:

> Where, in any county, except New York, the office of surrogate is vacant; or the surrogate is disabled by reason of sickness, absence or lunacy, and special provision is not made by law for the discharge of the duties of his office in that contingency; the duties of his office must be discharged untill the vacancy is filled or the disability ceases, as follows:
> 1. By the special surrogate.
>
> 2. If there is no special surrogate, or he is in like manner disabled, or is precluded or disqualified, by the special county judge.
>
> 3. If there is no special county judge, or he is in like manner disabled, or is precluded or disqualified, by the county judge.
>
> 4. If there is no county judge, or he is in like manner disabled, or precluded or disqualified, by the district attorney.
>
> But before an officer is entitled to act, as prescribed in this section, proof of his authority to act as prescribed in section twenty-four hundred and eighty-seven of this act must be made. In any proceeding in the surrogate's court of the county of Kings, before either of the officers authorized in this section to discharge the duties of the office of surrogate of such county for the time being, if an issue is joined or a contest arises either on the facts or the law, such officer, in his discretion, may, by order transfer such cause to the supreme court to be heard and decided at a special term thereof, held in such county, which order shall be recorded in the surrogate's office. A certified copy of such order, together with the appropriate certificate or certificates of the authority of the officer to act as surrogate, shall be sufficient and conclusive evidence of the jurisdiction and authority of the supreme court in such matter or cause. After a final order or decree is made in the matter or cause so transferred to the supreme court, the court shall direct the papers to be returned and filed, and transcripts of all orders and decrees made therein to be recorded in the surrogate's office of such county; and when so filed and recorded, they shall have the same effect as if they were filed and recorded in a case pending in the surrogate's court of such county. § 2484, Code Civil Proc.

In the county of Kings, however, a special provision of law (chap. 490, Laws of 1884) is made for a certificate by the Surrogate that he is disabled; in which case first the county judge, and then the district attorney are named as the proper officers to discharge the duties of the disabled Surrogate. If neither of them can act, then the Surrogate must file the certificate required by section 2485 of the Code designating the Surrogate of an adjoining county, other than New York.

That section provides as follows:

> Where the surrogate of any county, except New York, is precluded or disqualified from acting with respect to any particular matter, his jurisdiction and powers with respect to that matter vest in the several officers designated in the last section, in the order therein provided for. If there is no such officer qualified to act therein, the surrogate may file in his office a certificate, stating the fact; specifying the reason why he is disqualified or precluded; and designating the surrogate of an adjoining county, other than New York, to act in his case in the particular matter. The surrogate so designated has, with respect to that matter, all the jurisdiction and powers of the surrogate making the designation, and may exercise the same in either county. § 2485, Code Civil Proc.
>
> In the county of New York the supreme court, at a special term thereof, on the presentation of proof of its authority, as prescribed in the next section, must exercise all the powers and jurisdiction of the surrogate's court, as follows:
>
> 1. Where the surrogate is precluded or disqualified from acting, with respect to a particular matter, it must exercise all the powers and jurisdiction of that court with respect to that matter.
> 2. Where the office of surrogate of the county is vacant, or the surrogate is disabled by reason of sickness, absence or lunacy it must exercise all the powers and jurisdiction of that court, until the vacancy is filled or the disability ceases, as the case may be. § 2486, Code Civil Proc.

Prior to the adoption of the new constitution the Code provided that if the Surrogate were precluded or disqualified from acting, or where the office of Surrogate was vacant, or the Surrogate disabled by reason of sickness, absence or lunacy, the Court of Common Pleas should exercise all the powers and jurisdiction of the Surrogates' Courts with respect to the matter regarding which the Surrogate is precluded or disqualified, or until the vacancy is filled or the disability ceases.

But as by the new constitution, the Court of Common Pleas is abolished, the Code has been amended (chap. 946 of Laws of 1895, taking effect January 1, 1896), by substituting the words "Supreme Court" for the Court of Common Pleas, which, together with the Superior Court of the city of New York is now merged in the Supreme Court.

> The surrogate's court, in a county where the county judge is also surrogate, may be held at the time and place at which the county court is held; and, in that case, the order of business of the county court, the court of sessions, and the surrogate's court, is under the direction of the county judge. § 2506, Code Civil Proc.

§ 13. Proof of authority.—Before any one may act as Surrogate, or another court assume jurisdiction in lieu of the Surrogate's Court proof of authority is required to be made. And the practitioner should be careful to see that the statutory requirement is complied with.

> Where the surrogate is disqualified or precluded from acting in a particular matter, that fact may be proved by the surrogate's certificate thereof, or, except as otherwise prescribed in section 2485, by affidavit or oral testimony.

That is to say, except in case there be no officer capable of acting as designated in § 2484, i. e., Special Surrogate, special county judge, county judge, or district attorney; for in such case the certificate of the Surrogate is requisite together with a designation by him of the Surrogate of an adjoining county.

> The fact that the surrogate is so disqualified or precluded, or that he is disabled, or that the office is vacant; and also the authority of the officer of the court, as the case may be, to act in his place, may be proved, and are deemed conclusively established by an order of a justice of a supreme court of the judicial district embracing the county. After such an order is made, the surrogate shall not make the certificate specified in section 2485 of this act, and if such a certificate has been theretofore filed, the powers and jurisdiction of the surrogate therein designated as specified in that section, thenceforth cease. § 2487, Code Civil Proc.

This proof of authority is an indispensable prerequisite to assuming jurisdiction. The Acting Surrogate himself is likewise interested in having such proof of authority duly filed, as his right to compensation depends upon it. Code Civ. Proc. § 2493; Matter of Tyler, 60 Hun, 566. The Code prescribes with great detail how the proof by order of a Supreme Court justice is to be made. Code Civ. Proc. § 2488.

> An order may be made, as prescribed in subdivision second of the last section, upon or without notice, as a justice of the supreme court of the judicial district embracing the county thinks proper. It must recite the cause of the making thereof, it must designate the officer or court, empowered to discharge the duties of the office of surrogate; and, if it relates to a particular matter only, it must designate that matter. It may, in the discretion of the justice, require an officer to give security for the due discharge of his duties therein. Where the office of surrogate is vacant, or the surrogate is disabled by reason of lunacy, the attorney general if directed by the governor, must, or the district attorney, upon his own motion, may, apply for the order, and a justice of the supreme court of the judicial district embracing the county must grant it upon his application. A justice of the supreme court of the judicial district embracing the county may also grant the order upon the application of a party, or a person about to become a party to any special proceeding in the surrogate's court. Where the surrogate is sick or absent, the granting of the order rests in the direction of the justice, and its effect may be qualified as the justice thinks proper. § 2488, Code Civil Proc.

The order of the Supreme Court justice may be made upon or without notice. If the Surrogate is merely sick or absent the justice has full discretion to refuse to grant the order. He may qualify its effect as he deems right. He may require security to be given by the officer designated. The order must recite the cause of the making thereof; it must designate the officer or court empowered to discharge the duties of Surrogate. If made in relation to a particular matter only, that fact must appear in the order, which should designate the matter.

Where the office of Surrogate is vacant, or should he be disabled by lunacy the attorney general, if directed by the governor, must apply for the order. Or the district attorney may do so, upon his own motion. Upon either application the justice to whom the application is made, that is, a Supreme Court justice of the judicial district embracing the county, must grant it.

It is proper for a party to any special proceeding in the court of a Surrogate disabled by lunacy or whose office is vacant, or for a person about to become a party, to make application for the order. If the application is thus made the granting of the order is discretionary. The justice may grant it on such application.

Where there is no special Surrogate in a county, but there is a special county judge, it is proper to designate the latter where the Surrogate is temporarily absent and unable to act. See § 2483, Code Civ. Proc.; Matter of Frye, 48 N. Y. St. Rep. 572.

And it is Further Ordered that the said (designating the officer) before exercising any of the powers or performing any of the duties of said Surrogate execute and file a bond (here describe the character and amount of bond)

(Signature of Judge).

§ 14. Termination of authority of Acting Surrogate.—Where the Acting Surrogate was appointed for any reason, except a vacancy in the office of Surrogate, his authority to act may be revoked by a justice of the Supreme Court of the judicial district embracing the county; such an order may be made on proof either that the cause for designating or appointing the Acting Surrogate no longer is operative or that the order or appointment was improvidently made in the first instance. When the cause of the making of the order or appointment was that the office of Surrogate was vacant, the filling of the vacancy supersedes the appointment and terminates the authority of the Acting Surrogate without any formal order of revocation.

But however terminated it is without prejudice to the proceedings theretofore taken by virtue of the original designation; and when terminated the unfinished proceeding must be transferred to, and may be completed by the Surrogate in the same manner, and with like effect as when a new Surrogate completes the unfinished business of his predecessor.

The language of the Code is as follows:

> Where an order is made by a justice of the supreme court of the judicial district embracing the county as prescribed in the last two sections or an appointment is made by the board of supervisors, as prescribed in section 2492 of this act, for any cause except a vacancy in the office of surrogate, it may be revoked, without prejudice to any proceedings theretofore taken by virtue thereof, by a justice of the supreme court of the judicial district, embracing the surrogate's county, upon proof that it was improvidently made, or that the cause of making it has become inoperative. Such an order or appointment, made upon the ground that the surrogate's office is vacant, is superseded without any formal revocation, by the filling of the vacancy. After the order or appointment is revoked, or the vacancy is filled, as the case may be, the unfinished business in any proceedings taken by virtue of the order or appointment, must be transferred to, and may be completed by the surrogate in the same manner and with like effect as where a new surrogate completes the unfinished business of his predecessor. § 2489, Code Civil Proc.

§ 15. Transfer from Supreme Court.—Similarly, if the Supreme Court has been entertaining proceedings, cognizable before a Surrogate, it may, in its discretion, and at any time, transfer the proceeding by its order back to the Surrogate's Court. This will usually be done if the Supreme Court is satisfied that the reason for the exercise of its powers and jurisdiction has ceased to operate.

See Code Civ. Proc. § 2491, which is as follows:

The court may, at any time, in its discretion, upon being satisfied that the reason for the exercise of its powers and jurisdiction has ceased to operate, make an order to transfer to the surrogate's court, any matter then pending before it. Such an order operates to transfer the same accordingly. Immediately after such a transfer, or after the revocation of the order of the general term, as prescribed in the last section but one, the surrogate must cause entries to be made in the proper book in his office, referring to all the papers filed, and orders entered, or other proceedings taken, in the supreme court; and he may cause copies of any of the orders or papers to be made, and recorded or filed in his office, at the expense of the county.

Present:

Hon.

Title. } Justice.

This proceeding having been transferred to me (or, to this court) from the Surrogate's Court of the County of by order of the Supreme Court dated the day of 19 for the reason that (state reason recited in order), and it appearing to my satisfaction that the reason for the exercise of the powers and jurisdiction of said Surrogate's Court by this court has ceased to operate, now, pursuant to section 2491 of the Code of Civil Procedure, it is Ordered that the above entitled proceeding be and the same is hereby transferred back to the said Surrogate's Court of the County of

(Signature.)

Note. "Such an order operates to transfer" the proceeding — § 2491 — and all subsequent proceedings must be entitled in and acted on by the Surrogate's Court.

So long as the proceedings remain out of the Surrogate's Court provision is made, as to New York and Kings counties, that they be entitled, sealed and signed as if originally cognizable in the court to which they are transferred. They are filed in the office of the clerk of that court, who performs the duties in relation thereto that the Surrogate or his clerk would, had they remained in his court. And the issues raised in the proceedings are tried according to the rules prevailing in the court to which it has been transferred. The issuing of a citation may be directed, and any order intermediate the citation and the decree may be made, by a judge of that court.

This is by virtue of the following provision of the Code:

> In a special proceeding cognizable before a surrogate, taken in the supreme court as prescribed in this article, the seal of the court in which it is taken, must be used, where a seal is necessary. The special proceeding must be entitled in that court; and the papers therein must be filed or recorded, as the case may be, and issues therein must be tried, as in an action brought in that court. The clerk of that court must sign each record, which is required to be signed by the surrogate or the clerk of the surrogate's court. The issuing of a citation may be directed, and any order intermediate the citation and the decree may be made by a judge of the court. § 2490, Code Civil Proc.

§ 16. Temporary Surrogates are special officers, appointed under special circumstances, to perform the duties of a Surrogate for a limited time. If the Surrogate is disabled by reason of sickness and there is no Special Surrogate, or special county judge (Matter of Frye, 48 N. Y. St. Rep. 572) of the county, the board of supervisors (this applies to any county except New York) may, in its discretion, appoint a suitable person to act as Surrogate until the Surrogate's disability ceases; or until a Special Surrogate or a special county judge is elected or appointed. The Supreme Court also possesses the power to appoint such temporary officer, by virtue of its succeeding to all the powers of the chancellor Matter of Hathaway, 71 N. Y. 238, 245.

The chancellor had this power under chap. 320 of the Laws of 1830, § 20. Held, In re Hathaway, supra, that this power was not divested by the constitution of 1846 which prohibited the justices of the Supreme Court from making appointments to public office. This case reviews the rule as to Temporary Surrogates under the old practice.

As to New York County, its Surrogate's Court was established prior to the constitution of 1846 (see art. 14) and was merely continued thereby (§ 12). The term of office was left under the control of the legislature. (It is now fourteen years.) When Surrogate Van Schaick died in 1876 leaving five years of his term of six years unexpired, Delano C. Calvin was appointed Temporary Surrogate until the general election next ensuing. At such election he was elected "in place of Delano C. Calvin, appointed in place of S. D. Van Schaick, deceased." Held (People v. Carr, 25 Hun, 325, and 86 N. Y. 512) that his election was for the unexpired term, i. e., to 1881, and not for a full term to 1882. See opinions of Davis, P. J., and of Rapallo, J.

This seems to be the proper rule as to terms of Surrogates elected to succeed a Surrogate upon the occurrence of a vacancy. As to New York County we have already noted under section 2486 that there would be no Temporary Surrogate, as the Supreme Court is directed to act until the vacancy is filled. (This is unlikely now to occur as there are two Surrogates.) Moreover, these decisions would probably govern in view of the manifest intention of the new constitution as to uniformity of terms in county offices.

Acting and Temporary Surrogates must not be confounded. The one is usually an existing officer—the other need not be. The Acting Surrogate unless directed so to do by the Supreme Court need not give additional security for the performance of his duties. Code Civ. Proc. § 2488. The Temporary Surrogate cannot enter upon his duties until he has given an official bond, such as is prescribed by law with respect to a person elected to the office of Surrogate (Code Civ. Proc. § 2492), and must file an oath of office. The Code expressly differentiates between them—for in providing for their compensation it mentions "an officer" (meaning Special Surrogate, special county judge, county judge or district attorney) "or a person" (meaning the suitable person mentioned in section 2492) "appointed by the board of supervisors, who acts as Surrogate of any county during a vacancy in the office, or in consequence of disability." Code Civ. Proc. § 2493.

> In any county, except New York, if the surrogate is disabled, by reason of sickness, and there is no special surrogate, or special county judge of the county, the board of supervisors may, in its discretion, appoint a suitable person to act as surrogate, until the surrogate's disability ceases; or until a special surrogate or a special county judge is elected or appointed. A person so appointed must, before entering on the execution of the duties of his office, take and file an oath of office, and give an official bond as prescribed by law, with respect to a person elected to the office of surrogate. § 2492, Code Civil Proc.

§ 17. The compensation of Acting and Temporary Surrogates equals, pro rata, the salary of the Surrogate (or of the county judge in counties where that officer is also Surrogate), and the amount must be audited and paid in like manner as that of the regular incumbent. Code Civ. Proc. § 2493, is as follows:

> An officer, or a person appointed by the board of supervisors, who acts as surrogate of any county during a vacancy in the office, or in consequence of disability, as prescribed in the last nine sections, must be paid, for the time during which he so acts, a compensation equal, pro rata, to the salary of the surrogate; or, in a county where the county judge is also surrogate, to the salary of the county judge. The amount of his compensation must be audited and paid, in like manner as the salary of the surrogate, or of the county judge as the case may be. Where an officer of the county performs the duties of the surrogate, with respect to a particular matter, wherein the surrogate is disqualified or precluded from acting, the supervisors of the county must allow him a just compensation for his services therein, to be audited and collected in the same manner.
> This section applied to Kings County, L. 1884, chap. 390.

But this refers only to work actually done and time actually occupied in discharging the duties of a Surrogate (Matter of Tyler, 60 Hun, 566), and not to the time elapsing from the day he first begins his duties until he is relieved therefrom. For time when he is not engaged as Surrogate he may not receive compensation. Where there is a Special Surrogate, under section 1 of chapter 306 of the Laws of 1849 (covering eight counties) his election contemplates his discharging the duties of Surrogate in his county in case of vacancy or of the disability of the Surrogate proper. Consequently his salary is in anticipation of his being called upon so to act—and when he is so called upon he has no right to additional compensation under section 2493. His compensation is fixed by the board of supervisors, and does not necessarily correspond to that of the Surrogate. See People v. Sup. Oneida Co., 82 Hun, 105.

The Code further provides:

> Where an act is done, or a proceeding is taken by, before, or by authority, of an officer, or a person appointed by the board of supervisors, temporarily acting as surrogate of any county, as prescribed in this article, the same must be recorded, or the proper minutes thereof must be entered, in the books of the surrogate's court, in like manner as if the same was done or taken by, before, or by authority of the surrogate of the county; and the officer or person so acting, or the clerk of the surrogate's court, must sign the certificate of probate and any letters so issued, and must certify the record thereof in the book. § 2494, Code Civil Proc.
> This section applied to Kings County by L. 1884, chap. 490.

This means he must sign the same with his proper official designation. If he omit it, however, the record may subsequently be amended. Monro's Estate, 15 Abb. Pr. 363.

§ 19. What constitutes disqualification.—The Code defines what causes will operate so to disqualify a Surrogate as to necessitate the appointment or designation of an Acting or Temporary Surrogate.

In the first place he is subject to the general disqualifications of a judicial officer. Thus he shall not try as Surrogate any proceedings in which he is a party, or interested; but where, by stipulation of the attorneys, moneys were paid in to the Surrogate to await the result of a litigation and the Surrogate took possession accordingly, held this was not an interest to disqualify him (Matter of Hancock, 91 N. Y. 284, reversing 27 Hun, 78; Matter of Newcombe, 63 Hun, 633, see 18 N. Y. Supp. 549); nor may he try proceedings in which he has been attorney or counsel (Darling v. Pierce, 15 Hun, 542) (see below); or where he is related by consanguinity or affinity to any party to the controversy within the sixth degree. Code Civ. Proc. § 46. Marriage to a legatee not a party to the proceeding held not to disqualify. Hopkins v. Lane, 6 Dem. 12.

In Underhill v. Dennis, 9 Paige, 202, it was held a Surrogate might appoint a relative guardian ad litem. So in Matter of Van Wagonen, 69 Hun, 365 it was held, following the case in 9 Paige, that, whatever might be said of the ethical proprieties of such appointment, the fact that such guardian was the Surrogate's brother would not disqualify him from acting. See also Matter of Hopper (a lunatic), 5 Paige, 489.

In addition to these general disqualifications:

> A surrogate is disqualified from acting upon an application for probate, or for letters testamentary, or letters of administration, in each of the following cases:
>
> 1. Where he is or claims to be, an heir or one of the next of kin to the decedent, or a devisee or legatee of any part of the estate.
>
> 2. Where he is a subscribing witness, or is necessarily examined or to be examined as a witness to any written or nuncupative will.
> 3. Where he is named as executor, trustee or guardian, in any will, or deed of appointment, involved in the matter. § 2496, Code Civil Proc.

But this was held not to disqualify a Surrogate who was warden in a church to which a legacy was given by a will, from entertaining proceedings for its probate. Hopkins v. Lane, 6 Dem. 12, aff'd 17 N. Y. St. Rep. 677.

Aside from the statutory causes for disqualification, a Surrogate must use his discretion in declining to act in a given case. Matter of Newcombe, 18 N. Y. Supp. 549. See, as to personal interest, Matter of Bingham, 127 N. Y. 296.

An adult party can waive objection to the power of a Surrogate to act unless one of these three disqualifications exists. The objection may be urged at any time before issue is joined by that party; "or, where an issue in writing is not framed, at or before the submission of the matter in question to the Surrogate." See Code Civ. Proc. § 2497, which is as follows:

> An objection to the power of a surrogate to act, based upon a disqualification, established by special provision of law, other than one of those enumerated in the last section, is waived by an adult party to a special proceeding before him, unless it is taken at or before the joinder of issue by that party; or, where an issue in writing is not framed, at or before the submission of the matter or question to the surrogate. § 2497, Code Civil Proc.

As for infants, their rights are not prejudiced. The acts of a disqualified Surrogate in proceedings in which their rights are involved are void as to them. The failure of a special guardian to interpose objection cannot be taken as a waiver, nor does it bind the infant. See Wigand v. De Jonge, 8 Abb. N. C. 260.

§ 20. Terms of court—Attendance by Surrogate.—The following provisions of the Code relate to the terms of the court and the Surrogate's duty to attend:

> The surrogate's court is always open for the transaction of any business, within its powers and jurisdiction. The surrogates of the city and county of New York, from time to time must appoint, and may alter the times of holding terms of that court for the trial of probate proceedings and for the hearing of motions and other chamber business. They must prescribe the duration of such terms, and assign the surrogate to preside and attend at the terms so appointed. In case of the inability of a surrogate of that county to preside or attend, the other surrogate may preside or attend in his place. Two or more terms of the surrogate's court may be appointed to be held at the same time. The term of that court held at the chambers shall dispose of all business except contested probate proceedings; all contested probate proceedings shall be disposed of at the trial term. An appointment must be published in two newspapers published in the city of New York during or before the first week in January in each year; except that the surrogates of that county may, by notice to be published in two newspapers in the city of New York for at least five days, appoint the time for holding chambers and trial terms during the year eighteen hundred and ninety-three. All the powers conferred by law upon the surrogate of the city and county of New York may be exercised by either of the surrogates of said city and county. § 2504, Code Civil Proc. (See below.)

The surrogate must, unless prevented by sickness or other unavoidable casualty, attend at his office on Monday of each week, except during the month of August, or where Monday is a public holiday, on the following Tuesday, to execute the powers conferred and the duties imposed upon him. But the surrogate of any county, may, by an instrument in writing, under his hand, filed in the office of the clerk of the county at least twenty days before the first day of January in any year, designate a day of the week, other than Monday, on which he will attend at his office, or a month other than August, during which he will be absent therefrom, or both during that year; and where the county judge is also surrogate, he is not required to attend at his office on any day when the county court or the court of sessions is sitting. The surrogate must also execute the duties of his office, at such other times and places, within his county, as the public convenience requires. The surrogate may sign decrees, letters testamentary, of administration and guardianship, and orders during the month of August or such other month as he shall designate for his vacation wherever he shall be passing such vacation within the state. § 2505, Code Civil Proc.

Abuses were discovered by the committee of the assembly which investigated the Surrogate's Court and office in the county of New York in 1889, which indicated the value of putting some check upon the appointments made by Surrogates in that county, and the amendment was enacted by chapter 605 of the Laws of 1899 to § 2504, at the end thereof, which reads as follows:

"And there shall be published in the official law paper published in said county, upon Monday of every week, under the name of the Surrogate making the several appointments, a full and true list of the names of all appraisers, transfer tax appraisers, special guardians, referees and temporary administrators, which either Surrogate shall have designated or appointed during the preceding week, together with the names of the proceedings in which they were appointed and the dates of said appointments."

§ 21. When Surrogate not to practice.—The constitution of 1894, art. 6, § 20, prohibits any Surrogate thereafter elected, in a county having a population exceeding 120,000, from practicing as an attorney or counsellor in any court of record in this State, and from acting as a referee.

The Surrogate of Westchester, taking office January 1, 1901, acted as referee, and a motion was made on the ground he was without power to act.

The Appellate Division refused to pass on the question because the order appealed from was made on consent in order to the appeal. But it was queried whether the state census of 1892 or the Federal census of 1900 would govern; it being claimed that under the state census there could be a deduction made for the population annexed to New York County in 1895. Brown v. Brown, 64 App. Div. 544. See also Matter of Silkman, 88 App. Div. 102, where a second application was made to disbar the then Surrogate from practice during his term. Three opinions were written. The motion was denied on the ground that if he had offended the constitution he had offended as Surrogate and not as a lawyer; and on the further ground that in the court's opinion of what the word "population" meant it did not appear the county had a population exceeding 120,000. See opinion of Woodward, J., pp. 106–123.

Further prohibitive provisions are contained in the Code itself:

> A surrogate shall not be counsel, solicitor or attorney in a civil action or special proceeding for or against any executor, administrator, temporary administrator, testamentary trustee, guardian or infant, over whom, or whose estate or accounts, he could have any jurisdiction by law. The surrogate of the county of Monroe shall not act as referee or practice as attorney or counsellor in any court of record in the state. § 2495, Code Civil Proc.

If a Surrogate has been acting as counsel or attorney before his election and undertakes to pass on proceedings initiated by him as counsel or attorney, as for example in making an order of sale based on a judgment recovered by him, or in passing an executor's accounts, prepared under his personal advice, his acts are void. Darling v. Pierce, 15 Hun, 542; Wigand v. De Jonge, 8 Abb. N. C. 260.

CHAPTER II

JURDISDICTION OF SURROGATES' COURTS—ITS NATURE AND EXTENT

§ 22. The Code is somewhat explicit as to the general jurisdiction of Surrogates, and has defined carefully their incidental powers in sections 2472 and 2481. (See also table under § 4, ante.)

§ 2472. General jurisdiction of surrogate's court.

Each surrogate must hold, within his county, a court, which has, in addition to the powers conferred upon it, or upon the surrogate, by special provision of law, jurisdiction, as follows:

1. To take the proof of wills; to admit wills to probate; to revoke the probate thereof; and to take and revoke probate of heirship.

2. To grant and revoke letters testamentary and letters of administration, and to appoint a successor in place of a person whose letters have been revoked.

3. To direct and control the conduct, and settle the accounts, of executors, administrators, and testamentary trustees; to remove testamentary trustees, and to appoint a successor in place of a testamentary trustee so removed.

4. To enforce the payment of debts and legacies; the distribution of the estates of decedents; and the payment or delivery, by executors, administrators, and testamentary trustees, of money or other property in their possession, belonging to the estate.

5. To direct the disposition of real property, and interests in real property, of decedents, for the payment of their debts and funeral expenses, and the disposition of the proceeds thereof.

6. To administer justice, in all matters relating to the affairs of decedents, according to the provisions of the statutes relating thereto.

Note. This does not, however, give such powers as to apply surplus income of a trust to payment of the beneficiary's creditors. Matter of Widmayer, 28 Misc. 362.

This can only be done by a court of equity. Wetmore v. Wetmore, 149 N. Y. 520, 527; Tolles v. Wood, 99 N. Y. 616.

7. To appoint and remove guardians for infants; to compel the payment and delivery by them of money or other property belonging to their wards; and in the cases specially prescribed by law, to direct and control their conduct, and settle their accounts.

8. (Added 1903.) To settle the accounts of a father, mother, or other relative having the rights, powers and duties of a guardian in socage, and to compel the payment and delivery of money or other property belonging to the ward.

This jurisdiction must be exercised in the cases, and in the manner prescribed by statue.

§ 2481. Incidental powers of the surrogate.

A surrogate, in court or out of court, as the case requires, has power:

1. To issue citations to parties, in any matter within the jurisdiction of his court; and, in a case prescribed by law, to compel the attendance of a party.

2. To adjourn, from time to time, a hearing or other proceeding in his court; and where all persons who are necessary parties have not been cited or notified, and citation or notice has not been waived by appearance or otherwise, it is his duty, before proceeding further, so to adjourn the same, and to issue a supplemental citation, or require the petitioner to give an additional notice, as may be necessary.

3. To issue, under the seal of the court, a subpœna, requiring the attendance of a witness, residing or being in any part of the state; or a subpœna duces tecum, requiring such attendance, and the production of a book or paper material to an inquiry pending in the court.

4. To enjoin, by order, an executor, administrator, testamentary trustee, or guardian, to whom a citation or other process has been duly issued from his court, from acting as such, until the further order of the court.

5. To require, by order, an executor, administrator, testamentary trustee, or guardian, subject to the jurisdiction of his court, to perform any duty imposed upon him, by statute, or by the surrogate's court, under authority of a statute.

6. To open, vacate, modify, or set aside, or to enter, as of a former time, a decree or order of his court; or to grant a new trial or a new hearing for fraud, newly discovered evidence, clerical error, or other sufficient cause. The powers, conferred by this subdivision, must be exercised only in a like case and in the same manner, as a court of record and of general jurisdiction exercises the same powers. Upon an appeal from a determination of the surrogate, made upon an application pursuant to this subdivision, the appellate division of the supreme court has the same power as the surrogate; and his determination must be reviewed, as if an original application was made to that division.

7. To punish any person for a contempt of his court, civil or criminal, in any case, where it is expressly prescribed by law that a court of record may punish a person for a similar contempt, and in like manner.

8. Subject to the provisions of law, relating to the disqualification of a judge in certain cases, to complete any unfinished business, pending before his predecessor in the office, including proofs, accountings, and examinations. See Matter of Johnson, 27 Misc. 167, Varnum, S.

9. To complete, and certify and sign in his own name, adding to his signature the date of so doing, all records or papers, left uncompleted or unsigned by any of his predecessors.

10. To exemplify and certify transcripts of all records of his court, or other papers remaining therein.

11. With respect to any matter not expressly provided for in the foregoing subdivisions of this section, to proceed, in all matters subject to the cognizance of his court, according to the course and practice of a court, having, by the common law, jurisdiction of such matters, except as otherwise prescribed by statute; and to exercise such incidental powers, as are necessary to carry into effect the powers expressly conferred.

12. A surrogate or a clerk of the surrogate's court has power to administer oaths, to take affidavits and the proof and acknowledgment of deeds and all other instruments in writing, and certify the same with the same force and effect as if taken and certified by a county judge.

Added L. 1909, ch. 65.

§ 23. The provisions of the new constitution are as follows:

Art. VI, § 15. Surrogates' Courts; Surrogates, their power and jurisdiction; vacancies.

The existing surrogates' courts are continued, and the surrogates now in office shall hold their offices until the expiration of their terms. Their successors shall be chosen by the electors of their respective counties, and their terms of office shall be six years, except in the county of New York, where they shall continue to be fourteen years. Surrogates and surrogates' courts shall have the jurisdiction and powers which the surrogates and existing surrogates' courts now possess, until otherwise provided by the legislature. The county judge shall be surrogate of his county, except where a separate surrogate has been or shall be elected. In counties having a population exceeding forty thousand, wherein there is no separate surrogate, the legislature may provide for the election of a separate officer to be surrogate, whose term of office shall be six years. When the surrogate shall be elected as a separate officer, his salary shall be established by law, payable out of the county treasury. No county judge or surrogate shall hold office longer than until and including the last day of December next after he shall be seventy years of age. Vacancies occurring in the office of county judge or surrogate shall be filled in the same manner as like vacancies occurring in the supreme court. The compensation of any county judge or surrogate shall not be increased or diminished during his term of office. For the relief of surrogates' courts the legislature may confer upon the supreme court in any county having a population exceeding four hundred thousand, the powers and jurisdiction of surrogates, with authority to try issues of fact by jury in probate cases. Id. § 15.

§ 24. Powers specially conferred by statute.—Among the powers specially conferred by statute referred to in section 2472, was the power to administer oaths and take acknowledgments. This was given by Laws, 1900, ch. 510, § 1. It is now embodied as subd. 12, supra in § 2481.

He may also direct an executor or administrator, having letters from his court to become a "consenting creditor," in proceedings to discharge an insolvent from his debts. Code Civ. Proc. § 2153. See Matter of P. Sherryd, 2 Paige, 602 where the chancellor held, prior to the statute, he had no power to permit a trustee to petition for such discharge.

He has also concurrent jurisdiction with the county courts in adoption proceedings, under the Domestic Relations Law. Laws, 1896, chap. 272, §§ 60–68. These proceedings are simple, and fall under two general heads: "Voluntary adoption" and "Adoption from charitable institutions." Both proceedings are cognizable before a Surrogate. See post, part V, chap. I.

Jurisdiction is also given, by the Tax Law, chap. 24 of the General Laws (Laws, 1896, chap. 908) article X, over taxable transfers. See part VI, chap. V, post.

A Surrogate has also power to give leave to issue execution against an executor or administrator in his representative capacity, upon a judgment for a sum of money. In fact no such execution can issue without such permission by order of the Surrogate from whose court the letters issued specifying the sum to be collected, and indorsed with a direction to collect that sum. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1825 et seq. See post.

He may also authorize an executor or administrator to prefer certain debts (see Code Civ. Proc. § 2719 and post, part VI, chap. III), and to compromise or compound claims, on application, for good and sufficient cause. Id.

He may decree payment by an executor or administrator personally of an amount equal to the value of exempt property negligently omitted to be set apart by him for a surviving husband, wife or child as prescribed by law, or equal to the amount of injury thereto in proper case. See Code Civ. Proc. § 2724, and post, part VIII.

He has power in certain cases (see discussion under §§ 2798 et seq. and § 2537, and § 2793, post), to receive surplus moneys and distribute the same. See Matter of Gedney, 30 Misc. 18.

He may, under § 1380 of the Code, q. v., make a decree granting leave to issue an execution against the property of a deceased judgment debtor on whose estate he may have granted letters. See § 1381 as to procedure in securing such decree. With this general survey of the extent of a Surrogate's jurisdiction, and the illustrations under § 4, ante, we pass to the examination of the nature of that jurisdiction.

§ 25. Nature of jurisdiction—The jurisdiction of a Surrogate's Court may be

I. Exclusive of all other courts.

II. Exclusive of other Surrogates' Courts.

III. Concurrent with other courts.

§ 26. Exclusive jurisdiction is vested in Surrogates' Courts in the State of New York, over the probate of wills and the issuance of letters testamentary or letters of administration. See Delabarre v. McAlpin, 71 App. Div. 591. Note hereafter "action to establish a will," and 2 R. S. 126, § 46; Burger v. Hill, 1 Bradford, 360, 371. See 1 R. S. of 1813, 365, § 7, as to probate prior to Revised Statutes; Brick's Estate, 15 Abb. Pr. 12, for historical sketch of jurisdiction of Surrogates and their courts.

Those provisions of the Code, §§ 1861–1867, under which an action may be brought to establish a will, constitute an exception to the general rule that wills are proved by and letters issued pursuant to a decree of a Surrogate's Court only.

The exception is, however, rather apparent than real. For in those cases where an action to establish a will is allowed by the Code [see also Revised Statutes (2d ed.), 2 R. S. §§ 67–68], the judgment of the court in which the action is brought must be supplemented by the action of the Surrogate. He must record in his office an exemplified copy of the judgment; after which recording letters testamentary, or letters of administration with the will annexed, are issued from the Surrogate's Court, as if the judgment of the other court were the very decree of the Surrogate. The letters issue in the same manner, and with like effect, as upon a will duly proved in the Surrogate's Court. Code Civ. Proc. § 1863. The Surrogate must (Code Civ. Proc. § 1864) record the will, and issue letters thereupon, but the court under whose judgment he has to act cannot do so.

Subject to this apparent exception the Surrogate's jurisdiction over probates is exclusive. But as all his jurisdiction is a limited one, so this exclusive jurisdiction is limited. It may depend upon and be conditioned by: 1. Mode of execution; 2. Place of execution; 3. Residence of testator; 4. Locus (or situs) of property willed.

§ 27. Mode of execution.—Surrogates may grant probate of wills,

(a) When executed as prescribed by the laws of the State, whether they be wills of real or personal property.

(b) Also wills of personal property, executed in other States, or in Canada, or in Great Britain or Ireland, as prescribed by their respective laws.

(c) Also wills of personal property of non-residents, executed according to the law of testator's residence.

This appears (a) from the Decedents' Estates Law, §§ 23–25, formerly § 2611 of the Code.

> § 23. A will of real or personal property, executed as prescribed by the laws of the state, or a will of personal property executed without the state, and within the United States, the dominion of Canada, or the kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, as prescribed by the laws of the state or country where it is or was executed, or a will of personal property executed by a person not a resident of the state, according to the laws of the testator's residence, may be admitted to probate in this state.

[This is a material amendment. It used to read "may be proved as prescribed in this article."]

> § 24. The right to have a will admitted to probate, the validity of the execution thereof, or the validity or construction of any provision contained therein, is not affected by a change of the testator's residence made since the execution of the will.
> § 25. The last two sections apply only to a will executed by a person dying after April eleven, eighteen hundred and seventy-six, and they do not invalidate a will executed before that date, which would have been valid but for the enactment of sections one and two of chapter one hundred and eighteen of the laws of eighteen hundred and seventy-six, except where such a will is revoked or altered by a will which those sections rendered valid, or capable of being proved as prescribed in article first of title third of chapter eighteenth of the Code of Civil Procedure.

See Matter of Rubens, 128 App. Div. 626 (1st Dep. 2 dissents) [will of one residing in France executed not according to French law but ours, property in this State.]

It appears (b) from § 2705 of the Code formerly chap. 731, Laws 1894, which is as follows:

Admission of will of non-residents to probate, etc.

The last will and testament of any person being a citizen of the United States, or, if female, whose father or husband previously shall have declared his intention to become such citizen, who shall have died, or hereafter shall die, while domiciled or resident within the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, or any of its dependencies, which shall affect property within this State and which shall have been duly proven within such foreign jurisdiction, and there admitted to probate, shall be admitted to probate in any county of this State wherein shall be any property affected thereby, upon filing in the office of the surrogate of such county, and there recording, a copy of such last will and testament, certified under the hand and seal of a consul-general of the United States resident within such foreign jurisdiction, together with the proofs of the said last will and testament, made and accepted within such foreign jurisdiction, certified in like manner; and letters testamentary of such last will and testament shall be issued to the persons named therein to be the executors and trustees, or either, thereof, or to those of them who, prior to the issuance of such letters, by formal renunciation, duly acknowledged or proven in the manner prescribed by law, shall not have renounced the trust therein devolved upon them; provided, that before any such will shall be admitted to probate in any county in this State, the same proceedings shall be had in the surrogate's court of the proper county as are required by law upon the proof of the last will and testament of a resident of this State who shall have died therein; except that there need be cited upon such probate proceedings only the beneficiaries named in such will. L. 1894, chap. 731.

§ 28. Same.—Under the first subdivision in the last section (a), any will is entitled to probate, wheresoever and by whomsoever executed, whatever the nature of the property whose disposition it seeks to effect, and wherever such property may be situated, provided it be shown to have been executed in conformity with the laws of this State. Matter of M'Mulkin, 5 Dem. 295, 297. Thus, where testatrix died in Glasgow, Scotland, where she resided at the time of making her last will and testament, which will was executed in conformity with the laws of this State, though fatally defective under Scotch law, it was (in the case just cited) admitted to probate. See also Matter of Rubens, supra. (See dissent by Ingraham.)

The second subdivision (b), adds to the list of provable wills wills not of realty, executed in any other State in the Union, or in the Dominion of Canada, or in the Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, provided they be shown to have been executed in conformity with the laws of the place of execution.

The provision is explicit—"laws of the State or country where it is or was executed" regardless of testator's residence, or the place of his death. Formerly this was not so; but if, after executing a will valid under the laws of the place in which it was made, the testator changed his domicile it might result in intestacy. Thus in 1856 a will was offered in New York County for probate, made by a man who at the date of execution of the will was a citizen of South Carolina. The will was executed according to the requirement of the laws of that State. Subsequently the testator removed to this State, where he became domiciled and died. It was held that he died intestate in New York. Moultrie v. Hunt, 23 N. Y. 394. This decision was followed until the amendment of 1893 to § 2611 Code Civ. Proc. above quoted. This section was a consolidation of old sections 2611–2613, and is again divided up in the Decedents' Estates Law.

The third subdivision (c), covers wills (also not of realty) executed by any non-resident of the State according to the laws of testator's residence. This means residence at time of execution, and is not affected by change of residence subsequently.

Under this subdivision it has been held that a New York Surrogate has jurisdiction and may proceed with the probate of a non-resident's will of personal property executed according to the laws of such testator's residence, without awaiting action by the corresponding tribunals of the other State or country. Booth v. Timoney, 3 Dem. 416; Matter of Delaplaine, 45 Hun, 225. So, a holographic will of one dying in France with no witnesses, valid under the Civil Code of France, section 970, was admitted to probate in New York County as a will of personal property. Matter of Cruger, 36 Misc. 477. But this section gives no jurisdiction to a Surrogate over the probate of wills of real property unless executed according to the New York laws. Matter of Gaines, 84 Hun, 520. Note that no will executed under either (b) or (c) of real property is provable here. A will of realty to be effectual to pass lands here must have been executed in conformity with the New York statute; prior to the amendment of 1893 to § 2611 the validity of execution of a will made by a non-resident without the State depended on his residence at the time of his death. Thus in Moultrie v. Hunt, 23 N. Y. 394, 403 (see extract from Story on pp. 404, 405), the court said: "It would be plainly absurd to fix upon any prior domicile in another country. The one which attaches to him at the instant when the devolution of property takes place, is manifestly the only one which can have anything to do with the question." The amended section applies "only to a will executed by a person dying after April 11, 1876, and it does not invalidate a will executed before that date, which would have been valid but for the enactment of sections one and two of chapter 118 of the Laws of 1876, except where such a will is revoked or altered by a will which those sections rendered valid or capable of being proved as prescribed in this article." Code Civ. Proc. § 2611, amended 1893.

§ 29. The place of execution may also determine the question of jurisdiction—this appears partly from the foregoing sections. If the will presented to the Surrogate was executed in this State it must have been executed in conformity with the laws of this State. If executed without the State by a resident of the State it must have been executed in conformity with the laws of this State if it devises real property; if it deals only with personal property it is covered by the provisions of the preceding section.

If executed without the State by a non-resident then it must have been executed in conformity with the laws of the place of testator's residence when he executed it.

§ 30. Residence of testator.—Conceding the will to have been executed so as to be provable in this State under either of the foregoing sections the Surrogate's jurisdiction is further conditioned by the residence of testator. If he was, at the time of his decease, a non-resident of the State the rule is that laid down above (and see section 31, infra, as to effect of locus of property willed). If he was, however, a resident of the State then the jurisdiction of the Surrogate's Court depends on the county of which he was a resident. Code Civ. Proc. § 2476. See James v. Adams, 22 How. Practice, 409, to effect that it is not the process under which parties come before the Surrogate that gives him jurisdiction; but the residence of the decedent.

§ 31. Locus of property willed is a most important element in determining jurisdiction, but it is more properly to be treated under the next subtopic.

It may be here remarked, however, that a properly executed will of a non-resident can be proved in this State only in one of three cases:

(1) Where the decedent died within a county of the State, leaving personal property in the State either at his death, or which after his death comes into the State and remains unadministered.

Or, (2) where the decedent died without the State, but leaving personal property in a county of the State, or which after his death comes into the State, and remains unadministered.

Or, (3) where decedent leaves real property to which the will relates, or which is subject to disposition for the payment of his debts, and which is situated within a county of the State, provided no petition has been presented under either of the two just mentioned cases in any other Surrogate's Court. Code Civ. Proc. § 2476, subd. 4.

§ 31a. Other questions exclusively within Surrogate's jurisdiction.—It may be added that the Surrogate's Court has further exclusive jurisdiction to determine all questions of fraud, imposition, undue influence, mistake and other circumstances relating to the factum of the instrument as well as to avoid the will or set aside its probate on the ground of fraud, mistake or forgery. Case of Broderick's Will, 21 Wallace, 503. See opinion Clark v. Fisher, 1 Paige, 176, and cases cited; Colton v. Ross, 2 Id. 398; Muir v. L. & W. Orphan Home, 3 Barb. Ch. 477. So also mistakes and variances between the will as prepared and the instructions given for preparing it can only be reformed in this court. Story's Equity, § 179; Burger v. Hill, 1 Bradf. 360, 372.

§ 32. Jurisdiction exclusive of other Surrogates' Courts.—Section 2476 of the Code provides that:

> The surrogate's court of each county has jurisdiction, exclusive of every other surrogate's court, to take the proof of a will, and to grant letters testamentary thereupon, or to grant letters of administration, as the case requires, in either of the following cases:

1. Where the decedent was, at the time of his death, a resident of that county, whether his death happened there or elsewhere.

2. Where the decedent, not being a resident of the state, died within that county, leaving personal property within the state, or leaving personal property which has, since his death, come into the state, and remains unadministered.

Note. Thus, the surrogate first issuing letters ancillary, on a non-resident's estate, acquires exclusive jurisdiction to appoint transfer tax appraisers. Matter of Hathaway, 27 Misc. 474.

3. Where the decedent, not being a resident of the state, died without the state, leaving personal property within that county and no other; or leaving personal property which has, since his death, come into that county, and no other, and remains unadministered.

Note. This gives jurisdiction not only to issue letters; but, even if none be issued, the surrogate may assume jurisdiction to assess the transfer tax, if the property, so within the county, be taxable. Matter of Fitch, 160 N. Y. 87, 93.

4. Where the decedent was not, at the time of his death, a resident of the state, and a petition for probate of his will, or for a grant of administration, under subdivision second or third of this section, has not been filed in any surrogate's court; but real property of the decedent, to which the will relates, or which is subject to disposition under title fifth of this chapter (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2749–2801, relating to disposition of decedent's real property for the payment of debts and funeral expenses), is situated within that county and no other. See Matter of Buckley, 41 Hun, 106; Matter of Taylor, 13 N. Y. St. Rep. 176. § 2476, Code Civil Proc.

Consequently in any case covered by the four subdivisions of this section, the petition must be presented to the Surrogate of the county having this exclusive jurisdiction.

Subdivisions 3 and 4, however, suggest the possibility of a case where personal property comes or real property is found to be situated in another county or counties. In such case, while the Surrogates of such counties have concurrent jurisdiction, exclusive of all others than themselves, the one first assuming jurisdiction of the probate proceedings has a jurisdiction exclusive of every other Surrogate. This is by virtue of section 2477.

Where personal property of the decedent is within, or comes into, two or more counties, under the circumstances specified in subdivision third of the last section; or real property of the decedent is situated in two or more counties, under the circumstances specified in subdivision fourth of the last section; the surrogates' courts of those counties have concurrent jurisdiction, exclusive of every other surrogate's court, to take the proof of the will and grant letters testamentary thereupon, or to grant letters of administration, as the case requires. But where a petition for probate of a will, or for letters of administration, has been duly filed in either of the courts so possessing concurrent jurisdiction, the jurisdiction of that court excludes that of the other. § 2477, Code Civil Proc.

§ 33. Jurisdiction of Surrogates over wills of residents.—The primary distinction indicated by section 2476 is between resident and non-resident decedents. Jurisdiction to take proof of the will of a decedent, who was a resident of the county at the time of his death, is wholly independent of assets. Matter of Taylor, 13 N. Y. St. Rep. 176. But it may be necessary for the Surrogate to determine the fact of residence, which he has power and which it is in fact his duty, to do. Bolton v. Schriever, 135 N. Y. 65. Where decedent was a lunatic, and her committee removed her from Putnam County, her former place of residence, to his own residence in Westchester County, where she lived till she died, Surrogate Coffin held that her residence at death was in the latter county. Hill v. Horton, 4 Dem. 88, 92. While the domicile of the father is that of the child (Von Hoffman v. Ward, 4 Redf. 244, 259; Kennedy v. Ryall, 69 N. Y. 379, 386), it is not changed by a mere separation of the father and mother, there being no legal dissolution of the relation of husband and wife, yet the domicile of the husband is not necessarily that of the wife, if they have separated. Matter of Florence, 54 Hun, 328. The original domicile will be presumed to continue until a new one is acquired (Von Hoffman v. Ward, supra; Depuy v. Wurtz, 53 N. Y. 556), and a new one can be acquired only by actual residence coupled with the intent there to abide. Graham v. Public Administrator, 4 Bradf. 127; Matter of Thompson, 1 Wend. 43. Their intention to change is not sufficient. Von Hoffman v. Ward, supra; Graham v. Public Administrator, supra; Matter of Clarke, 40 N. Y. St. Rep. 12. Where there is doubt as to the decedent's residence the will may be resorted to, for the words of description may be significant in disputed cases as fixing whether at the time of its execution his domicile of origin had changed. Matter of Stover, 4 Redf. 82, 87.

Where the petition contains distinct allegations as to testator's residence, and the allegations are practically substantiated by proof, the decree admitting the will to probate is conclusive, and cannot be collaterally attacked. Bumstead v. Read, 31 Barb. 661.

So if a petition is filed containing a distinct allegation of residence in that county, the Surrogate of such county acquires exclusive jurisdiction under section 2475 to try the question of residence. And if a petition is filed in another county alleging residence there, the Surrogate of that county acquires no jurisdiction unless the Surrogate first acquiring jurisdiction determines the residence of decedent not to have been in his own county. Matter of Buckley, 41 Hun, 106.

§ 34. County residence not state residence the test of jurisdiction.—Section 2476 expressly hinges the Surrogate's jurisdiction in case of residents upon the residence of the decedent at the time of his death within the county of the Surrogate.

Consequently a mere allegation in the petition that the testator at the time of his death was a resident of the State of New York is not sufficient to give jurisdiction. Oviedo v. Duffie, 5 Redf. 137. Not even where all the parties to the proceeding consent. Matter of Zerega, 58 Hun, 505. Where testator's home was in Westchester County where he voted and paid taxes, but spent the winter months in New York City at his daughter's house, paying board to her, it was held by the General Term, reversing the Surrogate of New York, that he was a resident of Westchester County, and that the New York Surrogate had no jurisdiction. Matter of Zerega, supra. See Matter of Walker, 54 Misc. 177, as to separate residence of wife for probate purposes, citing Matter of Florence Will, 7 N. Y. Supp. 578.

§ 35. Same.—The decedent must have been a resident of the county in which the Surrogate had his court, even though insane when removed thereto from his former domicile in another county. Hill v. Horton, 4 Dem. 88. Thus when a petition showed that testator was United States consul at Cadiz, Spain, where he died, leaving a will, executed there; that he was a citizen of the United States, an inhabitant of the State of New York, temporarily resident at Cadiz, it was held that probate could not be granted as it did not appear when the petition was filed, on the papers, that the testator resided in New York County. Oviedo v. Duffie, 5 Redf. 137, 139. And this is because the court being one of special and limited jurisdiction its right must be shown and not be presumed. The facts giving jurisdiction not only to the court as a Surrogate's Court, but also to the court as the Surrogate's Court of a particular county must be averred in the petition; Matter of Hawley, 104 N. Y. 250, 262, and cases cited; Riggs v. Cragg, 89 N. Y. 480, 489, and cases cited; and a petition for probate, omitting such averments is defective. Estate of Duffie, 3 Law Bull. 49. As this question of inhabitancy is a jurisdictional one by statute, the Surrogate must determine it when the application for probate is made. Such determination is conclusive when made, unless reversed on appeal. It, certainly, is not to be attacked collaterally. Bolton v. Schriever, 58 Super. Ct. 520, aff'd in 135 N. Y. 65. The Court of Appeals in the case just cited says (p. 73): "The actual death of an individual who, at the time of his death, was an inhabitant of the State is the jurisdictional fact. . . . Whether one or the other of the Surrogates' Courts in the various counties shall administer upon the estate . . . . is a question which the legislature has provided for, and it depends, among other things, upon the fact of inhabitancy. This fact the Surrogate to whom it is presented must decide, and if he decides that it exists, and upon evidence which legally tends to support his decision, under such circumstances we think it ought to stand until reversed. . . . The decision of the Surrogate of one county, after a hearing of the parties upon the question whether the case calling for the exercise of the jurisdiction of his court, or the Surrogate's Court of some other county, exists or not, should be conclusive in all collateral proceedings." And see Harrison v. Clark, 87 N. Y. 572; Power v. Speckman, 126 N. Y. 354; Bumstead v. Read, 31 Barb. 661, citing many cases; Matter of Hathaway, 27 Misc. 474.

The Code itself provides (§ 2473) after declaring the general jurisdiction of the Surrogate's Court, that where its decree is drawn in question collaterally, and the necessary parties were duly cited or appeared, the jurisdiction is presumptively, and, in absence of fraud or collusion, conclusively established by the allegation of jurisdictional facts in the petition. This relates only to such matters as are jurisdictional. As to these alone is the Surrogate's decision conclusive. Thus where a Surrogate appointed a minor as administrator, the question of age not having been brought to his notice, and the statute forbidding such an appointment, held, in a collateral matter, absolutely void (eligibility not being a jurisdictional fact). Knox v. Nobel, 77 Hun, 230, 232. It is the residence at death, not the location of decedent's assets that conditions jurisdiction in cases of residents of this State dying testate or intestate. Matter of Taylor, 13 N. Y. St. Rep. 176.

§ 36. As to what constitutes residence sufficient to give the Surrogate of a particular county jurisdiction it is a matter of fact which the Surrogate must determine according to the usual rules in such connection. Matter of Cruger, 36 Misc. 477, 479. "Residence" must be equivalent to domicile, and must include both actual residence and intention. Ibid., citing Dupuy v. Wurtz, 53 N. Y. 556.

But they are not identical terms—"A person may have two places of residence, but only one domicile. Residence means living in a particular locality, but domicile means living in that locality with intent to make it a fixed and permanent home. Residence simply requires bodily presence, as an inhabitant in a given place—while domicile requires bodily presence in that place, and also an intention to make it one's domicile." Opinion of Vann, J., in Matter of Newcomb, 192 N. Y. 238, 250. See whole opinion. "Residence, unless combined with intention, cannot effect a change of domicile." Ibid. Where evidence was contradictory and left Surrogate in doubt it was held that testator's declaration or recital in a will written by himself was conclusive. Matter of Stover, 4 Redf. 82. In Matter of Golden, 40 Misc. 544, there were two wills, and two contradictory recitals. The one was holographic, and recited Saratoga, where there was proof he intended to reside the rest of his life. The other, drawn by his attorney, recited Troy as his residence, where he had in fact resided for 40 years. The domicile of the child is that of the parent—as where the father had left England and settled in New York City, and after seven months sent for his wife and child. The child being killed by negligence on its arrival in New York, letters of administration on its estate were granted in New York County and suit brought for damages. Held that the father's domicile was the child's and the suit properly brought. Ryall v. Kennedy, 67 N. Y. 379, 387. See also Isham v. Gibbons, 1 Bradf. 62; Graham v. The Public Administrator, 4 Bradf. 127; Seiter v. Straub, 1 Dem. 264, case of an orphan infant whose general guardian resided in New Jersey; Von Hoffman v. Ward, 4 Redf. 244. An infant, not being sui juris, cannot change its domicile, Matter of Dawson, 3 Bradf. 130, but her testamentary guardian, acting in good faith, can effect such change. Matter of Kiernan, 38 Misc. 394. Where one parent dies, the child's domicile is that of the surviving parent. Ruall v. Kennedy, supra. See as to effect on domicile of intent shown in parent's will. White v. Howard, 52 Barb. 294. So where parents separate, not under decree of a court, the child's domicile is still that of the father, although actually removed by and in custody of the mother elsewhere. Von Hoffman v. Ward, supra. So also as to rule that original domicile continues until a new one is acquired. Same. Also Matter of Stover, 4 Redf. 82; Matter of Clark, 15 N. Y. Supp. 370; Matter of Zerega, 58 Hun, 505. See Dupuy v. Wurtz, 53 N. Y. 556; Hart v. Kip, 148 N. Y. 306; Matter of Brant, 30 Misc. 14. If husband and wife separate, the wife securing a divorce in another State, where she becomes domiciled, she retains such separate domicile. Divorce for his wrong makes it possible for her to acquire a new and separate domicile. Matter of Colebrook, 26 Misc. 139. In Matter of Walker, 54 Misc. 177, it was held that, for probate purposes, husband and wife could have separate domiciles, in that inhabitancy at death was the Surrogate's test, citing Matter of Florence Will, 7 N. Y. Supp. 578; Bolton v. Schriever, 135 N. Y. 65.

§ 37. Indians on reservation.—In Dole v. Irish, 2 Barb. 639, it was held, construing the "Indian Law," that the estates of Indians could not be administered in Surrogates' Courts. It there appeared that there was a custom of distribution having the force of tribal law. In Matter of Jack, 52 Misc. 424, Hickey, Surr., was asked to probate the will of a Tuscarora residing on the reservation in Niagara County. He examined the Indian law, as amended by chap. 679, L. 1892, and followed Dole v. Irish. But in Matter of Printup, 121 App. Div. 322, the court held that letters of administration could issue in the absence of proof that the particular tribe had ample governmental regulations amounting to the custom of distribution proved, in the Dole case, to exist among the Senecas. (See dissent by McLennan, P. J.) See also Peters v. Tall Chief, 121 App. Div. 309, rev'g 52 Misc. 617.

§ 38. Non-residence.—As to non-residents the provisions of the Code above cited fall under two heads: I. Decedent, non-resident, dies in the Surrogate's county. II. Decedent, non-resident, dies outside the State. The first is again subdivisible under three heads.

I

Decedent, non-resident, dies in Surrogate's county; (a) leaving personal property within the State;

(b) Or leaving personal property which has, since his death, come into the State; and remains unadministered;

(c) Or where no petition for probate or for letters has been filed under subdivision 2 or 3 of § 2476 [i. e. (a) or (b), supra] but real property of decedent to which the will relates, or which is subject to disposition for the payment of decedent's debts is situated solely within the Surrogate's county.

Note. See Matter of Fitch, 160 N. Y. 87, 92–95; Matter of Bronson, 150 N. Y. 1.

The second is also subdivisible under three heads.

II

Decedent, non-resident, dies without the State; (this makes the location of the assets within the State the prerequisite of jurisdiction. See Matter of Taylor, 6 Dem. 158) (a) leaving personal property within the Surrogate's county and no other, even though the will be in the actual possession of the court of another county and cannot be produced before him. Russell v. Hartt, 87 N. Y. 18; Booth v. Timoney, 3 Dem. 416; Matter of Seabra, 18 Wky. Dig. 428. If the property be stock of domestic corporations having different "principal places of business," the stock is deemed to be, under § 2476, subd. 3, in the county of such "principal place" and the Surrogate first acting in either county has jurisdiction. Matter of Arnold, 114 App. Div. 244.

(b) Or leaving personal property which has since his death come into the Surrogate's county and no other, and which remains unadministered. See Estate of Duffy, 1 Dem. 202; Matter of Hopper, 5 Dem. 242. Note the words "and remains unadministered." Thus where a foreign executor remits funds to be paid under the will to a legatee in one of the counties of this State that is not, it would appear, property of decedent coming into State after his death within the meaning of the Code. See Sedgwick v. Ashburner, 1 Bradf. 105.

(c) Same as I (c) above.

§ 39. Same subject.—The jurisdiction over wills of non-residents depends, therefore, under section 2476, upon property being in or being brought into the county of the Surrogate. Subdivision 4 relating to real property is very explicit. But the two prior subdivisions relate to personal property. Many of the decisions use the word "assets," but erroneously. The word "assets" is usually understood to relate only to personal property applicable to the payment of debts. White v. Nelson, 2 Dem. 265. But the words used in section 2476 cover every article of personalty. Consequently, jurisdiction, in a proper case, may be predicated on the existence of a Japanese folding chair (White v. Nelson), or a family Bible, or a pair of earrings, or an insurance policy (Johnson v. Smith, 25 Hun, 171), or a promissory note actually in the county. Matter of Hopper, 5 Dem. 242; Code Civ. Proc. § 2478; Beers v. Shannon, 73 N. Y. 292. The location of the property in the Surrogate's county is what gives him jurisdiction (Taylor v. Public Administrator, 6 Dem. 158), and it has been held that the fact that it was improperly brought in the county since decedent's death does not divest such jurisdiction. Matter of Hughes, 95 N. Y. 55; Parsons v. Lyman, 20 N. Y. 103. But, in Hoes v. N. Y., N. H. & H. R. R. Co., 173 N. Y. 435, 482, it was held "property brought into the State, for collusive purposes or temporarily, after owner's death, does not confer jurisdiction to grant administration." See also Matter of McCabe, 84 App. Div. 145. But the mere transmission by a foreign executor of funds into the State in pursuance of a decree for distribution by the court which appointed him does not warrant a Surrogate in basing on such funds a claim of jurisdiction here. Such funds cannot be subjected to a second administration. Sedg- wick v. Ashburner, 1 Bradf. 105. To acquire jurisdiction under subdivision 4, i. e., on the basis of "real property of the decedent to which the will relates in the Surrogate's county," it is sufficient that the will purports to devise such real property. For purposes of jurisdiction the Surrogate need not try the issues of the testator's title as a preliminary to the proof of the will. Vreeland v. McClelland, 1 Bradf. 393, 415. If the devise is general, and has no sufficient description on its face to show that the property devised is within the particular county, it would be competent for the Surrogate to hear testimony and satisfy himself on that point. Ibid. Finally it is important to note that the property on which the Surrogate bases his jurisdiction must be unadministered. So where an executrix under a Rhode Island will qualified in that State, and coming to New York City reduced to her possession as executrix, all the assets of her testator's estate that were in that county, and took them into actual manual custody, collecting in all moneys there held on deposit for his account, it was held there was no property within the county unadministered to sustain jurisdiction of a proceeding begun by a petition filed after the executrix had reduced the property to her possession. Townsend v. Pell, 3 Dem. 367, citing Evans v. Schoonmaker, 2 Dem. 249, aff'd 31 Hun, 638.

§ 40. Jurisdictional facts averred.—When, therefore, a Surrogate's court has presented to it a petition setting forth averments of these jurisdictional facts, it may assume jurisdiction. It need not await the institution of probate proceedings in the place of testator's residence; but may act forthwith. Booth v. Timoney, 3 Dem. 416. Nor is any considerable amount of property requisite as a basis for an exercise of jurisdiction. In New York County a "Japanese folding chair" was held sufficient as such a basis, it being brought into the county after decedent's death. White v. Nelson, 2 Dem. 265. In this case the singular objection was made that, under 2 R. S. 83, § 9, six chairs must be excluded in reckoning a decedent's assets—and, further, that under the New Jersey law, in which State decedent was domiciled, the chair was also exempted. The Surrogate overruled this objection and exercised his jurisdiction. See also Matter of Hopper, 5 Dem. 242. See also Van Giessen v. Bridgford, 83 N. Y. 348, 355, where the court seems to think that a family Bible and a pair of earrings would be sufficient personal property on which to assume jurisdiction. And so also where, in 1863, A took out a policy of insurance in favor of, among others, B and his personal representatives, and in 1866, B died, and thereafter, in 1868, A moved into this State and died in Broome County, it was held: that the interest of B's representatives in the policy was personal property brought into the county after B's death and warranted the Surrogate of Broome County in assuming jurisdiction. Johnston v. Smith, 25 Hun, 171, 176. In 1850, Surrogate Bradford refused an application for probate (Kohler v. Knapp, 1 Bradf. 241, 245), where the decedent, an inhabitant of Ohio, becoming insane while on a visit to New York City, died there. At that time the case of a non-resident, dying in the county, leaving no assets, but assets coming into the county after his death, was not, in terms, provided for in the statutes. After reviewing the old practice and holding that even though the Surrogate must exercise his powers in the manner prescribed by statute, yet in a case upon which the statutes were silent he should not decline jurisdiction when it is apparent that a proper occasion to invoke his authority has arisen, the Surrogate, deeming it such a casus omissus, nevertheless declined to exercise jurisdiction because the only assets claimed to have come into the county after decedent's death were (1) an old cloak lent to decedent by a friend by whom it was brought into the State, but subsequently after his death returned to Ohio; and (2) certain debts due the decedent from an estate in Connecticut, the administrator of which estate was in New York City. It was held, first, that the mere temporary presence of the cloak on bailment here was not sufficient to warrant jurisdiction, especially as it had since, and before filing the petition, been removed from the county; and second: that the debt mentioned constituted an asset not in New York but in Connecticut.

Under the Code, as it now stands, the cloak, though on bailment, would probably be held to constitute sufficient property to act upon, provided, of course, it were still in the county at the time of making application.

An application for probate on the will of a non-resident in the State of New York should be denied when it appears that an executor or administrator appointed in a foreign jurisdiction has reduced decedent's assets in the county to actual possession before the petition was filed. Townsend v. Pell, 3 Dem. 367, 369; Evans v. Schoonmaker, 2 Dem. 249, 250 (aff'd in 31 Hun, 638). But, on the other hand, once a New York Surrogate's Court has rightly assumed jurisdiction, no action of foreign courts can disturb it, or divest it of the control it has acquired over the executors or administrators it may have appointed, or prevent it from compelling them to account for the assets they are administering. Duffy v. Smith, 1 Dem. 202, 208. Nor, even, will this jurisdiction once assumed be disturbed by proof of the fact that the personal property, which came into the county after decedent's death, on the strength of which jurisdiction was exercised, was brought in irregularly and without authority of law. Matter of Accounting of Hughes, 95 N. Y. 55, and cases cited. The Surrogate of Kings County had assumed jurisdiction by virtue of subd. 4, § 23, art. 2, tit. 2, chap. IV, part 2 of the Revised Statutes. This was about 1883. In the case just cited the Court of Appeals held, in the first place, that where there were two administrators of a single estate, one in the place of decedent's domicile, and the other in a foreign jurisdiction, "whether the courts of the latter will decree distribution of the assets collected under the ancillary administration, or remit them to the jurisdiction of the domicile, is not a question of jurdisdiction, but of judicial discretion depending upon the circumstances of the particular case." Pages 59, 60, citing Harvey v. Richards, 1 Mason, 380; Parsons v. Lyman, 20 N. Y. 103; Despard v. Churchill, 53 N. Y. 192. In the second place, "conceding the illegality of the removal of the assets from Pennsylvania . . . . the assets being in fact here, the Surrogate of Kings County acquired jurisdiction to grant administration. He was not deprived of jurisdiction because the assets were irregularly brought here, nor does that fact deprive him of jurisdiction to decree distribution."

§ 41. Location of debts as affecting jurisdiction.—We have observed above cases where the assets on which jurisdiction by a Surrogate in this State was sought to be based consisted of debts. There is now provision made in the Code in this connection which is important and which reads as follows:

> For the purpose of conferring jurisdiction upon a surrogate's court, a debt, owing to a decedent by a resident of the state, is regarded as personal property situated within the county where the debtor, or either of two or more joint debtors, resides; and a debt owing to him by a domestic corporation, is regarded as personal property, situated within the county where the principal office of the corporation is situated. But the foregoing provision does not apply to a debt evidenced by a bond, promissory note, or other instrument for the payment of money only, in terms negotiable, or payable to the bearer or holder. Such a debt whether the debtor is a resident or a non-resident of the state, or a foreign or a domestic government, state, county, public officer, association or corporation, is, for the purpose of so conferring jurisdiction, regarded as personal property, at the place where the bond, note, or other instrument is, either within or without the state. § 2478, Code Civil Proc.

While this section is new yet the principle contained in the latter part is not.

Thus the Court of Appeals in 1878, in Beers v. Shannon, 73 N. Y. 292, held that a debt upon a bond has its situs where the bond is, and not where the obligor resides (citing Laws of 1830, chap. 320, § 16), for purpose of Surrogate's jurisdiction. See also Matter of Hopper, 5 Dem. 242.

§ 42. Jurisdiction concurrent with other courts.—This topic can be most readily discussed as follows: Jurisdiction may be exercised in certain cases concurrently with a Surrogate's Court by

1. Federal courts.
2. Other state courts.
3. Other Surrogates' Courts.

§ 43. (1) With Federal courts.—The only jurisdiction a Surrogate's Court can exercise concurrently with the Federal courts is that over naturalization, which, however, it rarely if ever has used. See Matter of Harstrom, 7 Abb. N. C. 391; chap. 1, § 4. On the other hand, the Federal courts have asserted a right to jurisdiction in certain cases arising between citizens of different States involving the validity and construction of wills. They do not, and cannot, claim a probate jurisdiction, that is to say, an application to prove a will would not be removable to a Federal court. It is not a suit at common law or in equity. It is a proceeding, and, moreover, a proceeding in rem, which does not necessarily involve any controversy between parties. In its initiation all persons are cited to appear who are interested, regardless of the State of which they may be citizens. So the United States

Supreme Court has said in this connection: "From its nature, and from the want of parties, ... the proceeding is not within the designation of cases at law or in equity between parties of different States of which the Federal courts have concurrent jurisdiction with the state courts under the Judiciary Act." Gaines v. Fuentes et al., 2 Otto (92 U. S.), 10, 21. And the court continues: "But whenever a controversy in a suit between such parties arises respecting the validity or construction of a will, or the enforcement of a decree admitting it to probate, there is no more reason why the Federal courts should not take jurisdiction of the case than there is that they should not take jurisdiction of any other controversy between the parties." Ibid., p. 22. It may be noted that Waite, Ch. J., and Bradley and Swayne, JJ., dissented, on the ground that to assume jurisdiction to revoke a probate was to all intents and purposes to assume probate jurisdiction which the Federal courts never had. See Broderick's Will, 21 Wallace, 503; Tracer v. Jennison, 106 U. S. 191, 195; Gaines v. New Orleans, 6 Wallace, 642. "The probate of a will duly received to probate by a state court of competent jurisdiction, is conclusive of the contents and validity of the will in this court." See Fouvergne v. City of New Orleans, 18 How. 470, 473. Mr. Rice in his work on "American Probate Law," p. 21, says: "Jurisdiction as to wills, and their probate as such, is neither included (in) nor excepted out of the grant of judicial power to the Federal courts. So far as it is ex parte and merely administrative, it is not conferred, and cannot be exercised at all, until, in a case at law or in equity, its exercise becomes necessary to settle a controversy as to which of those courts have jurisdiction by reason of citizenship."

But an original bill cannot be sustained in the Federal courts upon an allegation that the probate of a will was contrary to law (Tarver v. Tarver, 9 Pet. 174), because the courts "must receive the sentences of the state courts to which the jurisdiction over testamentary matters is committed as conclusive of the validity and contents of a will." Fouvergne v. New Orleans, just cited.

§ 44. (2) With other state courts.—We have already discussed "an action to establish a will" as the nearest approach to probate jurisdiction which courts, other than Surrogates' Courts, enjoy in this State.

LOST WILLS

The Supreme Court used to have jurisdiction (the power to take proof of a lost or destroyed will at first resided solely in the Court of Chancery. 2 R. S. chap. VI, tit. 1, §§ 42, 63, 67; Bowen v. Idley, 11 Wend. 227; 6 Paige, 46; Collyer v. Collyer, 4 Dem. 53, 55; Buckley v. Redmond, 2 Bradf. 281, 286; Timon v. Claffy, 45 Barb. 438; Voorhis v. Voorhis, 50 Barb. 119, aff'd 39 N. Y. 463) which the Surrogates' Courts did not have to prove a lost or destroyed will. Since 1870 (L. 1870, chap. 359, § 8; also 2 R. S. 58, § 67*b*) a lost or destroyed will can be admitted to probate in a Surrogate's Court (Code Civ. Proc. § 2621); but only in a case where a judgment establishing the will could be rendered by the Supreme Court, as prescribed in section 1865 of the Code, which reads: "But the plaintiff is not entitled to a judgment, establishing a lost or destroyed will, as prescribed in this article, unless the will was in existence at the time of the testator's death, or was fraudulently destroyed in his lifetime; and its provisions are clearly and distinctly proved by at least two credible witnesses, a correct copy or draft being equivalent to one witness." (See part III, chap. IX.)

ADMINISTRATION

Mr. Pomeroy in his treatise on "Equity Jurisdiction" divides the different States into three classes as regards the question of equitable jurisdiction over administration. The third, in which he includes New York, he says is where the "equitable jurisdiction is not concurrent, but is simply auxiliary or ancillary and corrective. The Probate Court takes cognizance originally of all administrations, and has powers sufficient for all ordinary purposes. Equity interposes only in special or extraordinary cases, which have either been wholly omitted from the statutory grant of probate jurisdiction, or for which its methods and reliefs are imperfect and inadequate, or where its proceedings have miscarried and require correction." Pomeroy's Eq. Jur. (2d ed.) § 1154, and read note to same on p. 1749. It has been held that the Supreme Court will decline to act where an administrator, being sole next of kin, is claimed to have made a gift causa mortis to another of the entire estate. The estate must first be administered in the Surrogate's Court. Dickinson v. Col. Trust Co., 33 Misc. 668.

ACCOUNTINGS

See Part VIII, post

Any court of equity has jurisdiction concurrent with that of Surrogates' Courts to compel executors, administrators and testamentary trustees to account and to direct and control their actions in relation thereto. Wood v. Brown, 34 N. Y. 337, 345, citing Rogers v. King, 8 Paige, 210. Thus, where an executor or trustee denies the existence of a trust, a court of equity, which has power to construe a will whenever necessary to control or guide the action of a trustee, can exercise its jurisdiction and call upon him to account. For, so far as the property is effectually disposed of by the will, the executor holds it in trust for the legatees or beneficiaries, and, according to the law of this country, if there is any part of such property or any interest therein not effectually disposed of by the will, he holds it in trust for those who are entitled to it under the statute of distributions. Wager v. Wager, 89 N. Y. 162, 166, citing Bowers v. Smith, 10 Paige, 193; Williams on Executors, 294; 2 Story's Eq. Juris. § 1208; Hays v. Jackson, 6 Mass. 153.

The seal of the Court of Probate is conclusive evidence of the factum of a will, but any court of equity has jurisdiction to construe the will for the purpose of enforcing a proper performance of any trusts arising thereunder. However, "where complete relief can be obtained in the Surrogate's Court, a court of equity may, in its discretion, decline, on that ground, to entertain an action for an accounting or other relief against executors." Wager v. Wager, supra, p. 168; Ludwig v. Bungart, 48 App. Div. 613, rev'g 33 Misc. 177; Chipman v. Montgomery, 63 N. Y. 221.

ESTABLISHING VALIDITY, CONSTRUCTION OR EFFECT OF WILL

This cannot, strictly speaking, be said to be a subject of concurrent jurisdiction of Surrogates' Courts and other courts, although it has been so treated. Under section 2624 of the Code the Surrogate is directed to try an issue, raised as to the validity, construction or effect of any disposition of personal property contained in the will of a resident of this State executed in this State. Under section 1866 of the Code an action may be brought to determine the validity, construction or effect of a testamentary disposition of real property within the State, or of an interest therein which would descend to the heir of an intestate. These sections seem wholly distinct but they are interrelated by reason of a provision that the section "does not apply to a case, where the question in controversy is determined by the decree of a Surrogate's Court, duly rendered upon allegations for that purpose, as prescribed in article first of title third of chapter eighteenth of this act, where the plaintiff was duly cited in the special proceeding in the Surrogate's Court, before the commencement of the action." Code Civ. Pro. § 1866.

Now, it will be seen that both these sections refer to the validity not of the will itself but of the testamentary disposition made in the will. The Court of Appeals has expressly denied jurisdiction over the former, except in actions to establish the will as provided in the Code. Anderson v. Anderson, 112 N. Y. 104, 113. The policy of the court has been to deny jurisdiction in equity in matters regarding wills separated from trusts.

In Delabarre v. McAlpin, 71 App. Div. 591, it is held (see headnote) that the Supreme Court will not entertain an action, brought by persons claiming to be entitled to personal property as beneficiaries under an unprobated will, against a person claiming title to such personal property under a subsequent unprobated will of the decedent and also under a transfer executed by the decedent, to obtain an adjudication that the subsequent will and transfer were obtained by fraud and undue influence, and to require the defendant to account to the plaintiff for such personal property, where it does not appear that the testatrix had any real property or that there are any circumstances which would prevent the Surrogate's Court from passing upon the question as to the validity of the two wills.

The general policy of this State is and has been to commit to the Surrogates' Courts the decision of questions upon the due execution of an alleged will. Anderson v. Anderson, 112 N. Y. 113; Higgins v. Union Trust Co., 32 N. Y. St. Rep. 197, aff'd 127 N. Y. 635.

See as to cases when real property is involved, Norris v. Norris, 32 Hun, 175; Wallace v. Payne, 14 App. Div. 597.

It has been held that section 2624 gives no jurisdiction to Surrogates to determine the validity, construction or effect of a testamentary disposition of real property. Prive v. Foucher, 3 Dem. 339, 340; Matter of Fuller, 22 N. Y. St. Rep. 352. Yet the jurisdiction of the court was asserted to give judicial construction to a will of real property under certain circumstances. Matter of Marcial, 37 N. Y. St. Rep. 569. In conclusion it would seem that the concurrent jurisdiction is limited to bequests of personality or such interests in real property as are personal in their nature, the jurisdiction of chancery being asserted by Chancellor Walworth in 1843. Bowers v. Smith, 10 Paige, 193. See Wager v. Wager, 89 N. Y. 162, 167, 168; Read v. Williams, 125 N. Y. 560, 566. (See part III, ch. VIII.) See also Ludwig v. Bungart, 48 App. Div. 613, where it was held the Supreme Court would not refuse jurisdiction merely because the Surrogate's Court had concurrent jurisdiction; but only in case it had already assumed to act in the premises (rev'g 33 Misc. 177).

PREVENTING PROBATE

We have said that the Surrogates' Courts have exclusive jurisdiction over probate of wills. Nevertheless, where testatrix had made an irrevocable will of certain property to one who had given it to her in her lifetime in consideration of such will, a complaint was sustained which asked for a judgment restraining an executor named in a later will from proving it, and directing that the former will be adjudged irrevocable and entitled to probate. Cobb v. Hanford, 88 Hun, 21.

APPOINTING GUARDIANS

There can hardly be said to be concurrent jurisdiction in this regard, although every court of inferior or general jurisdiction has power to appoint guardians ad litem of minors. Brick's Estate, 15 Abb. 12. Sections 468 to 477 of the Code, relating to infant parties, it is held are not applicable to Surrogates' Courts (Matter of Watson, 2 Dem. 642), as are sections 2530 and 2531. See Matter of Bolton, 159 N. Y. 129, 134, where the court discusses carefully the limits on the Surrogate's power over infants' interests. See § 1, ante.

§ 45. (3) Concurrent jurisdiction of Surrogates.

JURISDICTION ONCE ASSUMED IS EXCLUSIVE

Jurisdiction once duly exercised over any matter by a surrogate's court, excludes the subsequent exercise of jurisdiction by another surrogate's court, over the same matter, and all its incidents, except as otherwise specially prescribed by law. Where a guardian has been duly appointed by, or letters testamentary or of administration have been duly issued from, or any other special proceeding has been duly commenced in, a surrogate's court having jurisdiction, all further proceedings, to be taken in a surrogate's court, with respect to the same estate or matter, must be taken in the same court. § 2475, Code Civil Proc.

See also § 2477 quoted, ante, in § 35.

§ 46. Effect of change in county lines.—Where the boundaries of a county are changed or a new county constituted, the Code provides against the apparent confusion of jurisdiction likely to arise. This is by section 2479, which is as follows:

Where a new county has been heretofore, or is hereafter erected, or territory has been heretofore, or is hereafter, transferred from one county to another, the jurisdiction of the surrogate's court of each of the counties affected thereby, to take the proof of a will, or to grant letters, depends upon the locality, when the petition is presented, of the place, where the property of the decedent is situated, or where the event occurred, as the case may be, which determines jurisdiction. If, before the erection of the new county, or the transfer of the territory, letters have been granted, upon the ground that the decedent died or resided within the county, the surrogate's court from which they were issued has exclusive jurisdiction of the estate, and of all matters incidental thereto; and if the place where the decedent died or resided is embraced within another county, certified copies of any papers or proceedings, filed, entered, or recorded in the surrogate's court thereof, must be furnished, on payment of the fees therefor, by the proper officer, to any person interested in the estate; and, upon the latter's request and payment of the fees therefor, the proper officer of the court so having jurisdiction must file, enter, or record the same, in like manner and with like effect as the originals. Where the letters were granted upon any ground other than the decedent's death or residence within the county, the jurisdiction of the court from which they were issued, remains unaffected by any change in the territorial limits of its county. § 2479, Code Civil Proc.

In regard to this section it has been held that the words, "when the petition is presented," in the first paragraph (which fix the time of the location of the property of the decedent or the occurring of the event which determines the jurisdiction of the Surrogate), refer to the time when the petition is presented to the Surrogate upon the return of the citation and not to the time when the petition is filed in his office. Matter of McGinnis, 13 Misc. 714. So that if a new county should be erected or a transfer of territory be made subsequent to the filing of a petition and before the return day of the citation issued thereon, the matter should be brought on for a hearing before the Surrogate having jurisdiction under this section and if necessary the proceeding be re-entitled in the proper court. (But see Matter of McKeon, 26 Misc. 464, where, part of Westchester County having been annexed to New York County, Silkman, Surr., held it was annexed for municipal purposes only, and did not affect his judicial right to grant letters on estates of residents of such annexed district.) Accordingly where one of the changes occurs contemplated by section 2479, after the filing of a petition, but prior to the return day of the citation, it will be necessary to procure a formal order transferring the proceeding to the Surrogate of the county in which the matter is triable by reason of the change. This need not be on notice, but merely upon an affidavit showing the occurrence of the change of which presumably the Surrogate would take judicial notice, but showing the jurisdictional facts that either the property, the location of which determines the jurisdiction, or the event the occurrence of which determines the jurisdiction, is located or occurred in the territory erected into a new county or transferred from one county to the other. The Surrogate upon these facts being made satisfactorily to appear, must make an order transferring the proceeding to the court of the other Surrogate. This is by virtue of section 2480, which is as follows:

> A special proceeding pending in a surrogate's court, whose jurisdiction to entertain the same is taken away by the provisions of the last section, or in consequence of the erection of a new county, or the alteration of the territorial limits of a county, after this act takes effect, must be transferred, by order of the court in which it is pending, to the surrogate's court having jurisdiction; and the latter court has the same jurisdiction, power, and authority with respect thereto, which the former court would have had, if the territorial limits of its county had not been changed. § 2480, Code Civil Proc.

GENERAL PROVISIONS

§ 47. Presumption of jurisdiction.—Section 2473 of the Code provides that "where the jurisdiction of a Surrogate's Court to make" in a case specified in section 2472 "a decree or other determination, is drawn in question collaterally, and the necessary parties were duly cited or appeared, the jurisdiction is presumptively, and in the absence of fraud or collusion, conclusively, established, by an allegation of the jurisdictional facts, contained in a written petition or answer, duly verified, used in the Surrogate's Court. The fact that the parties were duly cited is presumptively proved, by a recital to that effect in the decree." Laws of 1870, ch. 359, § 1. See Power v. Speckman, 126 N. Y. 354; Bumstead v. Read, 31 Barb. 661. The presumption of service of citation from such recital may be negatived, especially in case of infancy of one cited. Hood v. Hood, 85 N. Y. 561, 578.

JURISDICTION NOT LOST BY DEFECT OF RECORD

> The surrogate's court obtains jurisdiction in every case, by the existence of the jurisdictional facts prescribed by statute, and by the citation or appearance of the necessary parties. [Dakin v. Demming, 6 Paige, 95, Matter of Graham, 39 Misc. 226.] An objection to a decree or other determination, founded upon an omission therein, or in the papers upon which it was founded, of the recital or proof of any fact necessary to jurisdiction, which actually existed, or the failure to take any intermediate proceeding, required by law to be taken, is available only upon appeal. But, for the better protection of any party, or other person interested, the surrogate's court may, in its discretion, allow such a defect to be supplied by amendment. § 2474, Code Civil Proc.

§ 48. Effect of adoption of Code.—Article 1, of title 1, of chapter 18, closes with section 2482, which declares the applicability of the provisions of the chapter in matters of jurisdiction to cases where a will was made or the decedent died whether before or after the chapter took effect. The provision is as follows:

Each provision of this chapter, relating to the jurisdiction of the surrogate's court, to take the proof of a will, and to grant letters testamentary or letters of administration or regulating the mode of proceeding in any matter connected with the estate of a decedent, applies, unless otherwise expressly declared therein, whether the will was made, or the decedent died, before or after this chapter takes effect. All acts hitherto of surrogates and officers acting as such in completing by certifying in their own names any uncertified wills, and by signing and certifying in their own names, the unsigned and uncertified records of wills and of other proofs and examinations taken in the proceedings of probate therof, before their predecessors in office, are hereby confirmed and declared to be valid and in full compliance with the pre-existing statutory requirements. § 2482, Code Civil Proc.

CHAPTER III

CLERKS AND STENOGRAPHERS IN SURROGATES' COURTS

§ 49. The clerk of the court.—The "Clerk of the Court" is distinguished by the Code from the "Surrogates' Clerks." The latter as will be seen directly have purely clerical functions; the former has certain specific powers and may in certain designated cases act concurrently with the Surrogate or even in his place and stead. See also "designated" or "deputized" clerks when special power is conferred on them by the Code or statutes in special counties. The sections are as follows:

Clerk of surrogate's court; deputy clerk of surrogate's court; how appointed; their powers.

By a written order filed and recorded in his office, which he may in like manner revoke at pleasure, a surrogate may appoint a clerk of the surrogate's court, and in any county containing a city of the second class, and in the county of Monroe, the surrogate may also appoint a deputy clerk of said court. Both said clerk and deputy clerk shall be paid by the county, and the board of supervisors or board of aldermen, as the case requires, must fix the compensation of the clerk and deputy clerk so appointed. The clerk and deputy clerk so appointed may severally exercise, concurrently with the surrogate, the following powers of the surrogate:

1. He may certify and sign as clerk of the court, or as deputy clerk of the court, as the case may be, any of the records of the court, including the certificate specified in section twenty-six hundred and twenty-nine of this act, and the records and papers specified in subdivision nine of section twenty-four hundred and eighty-one of this act.

2. He may issue any mandate, to which a party is entitled as of course, either unconditionally or on the filing of any paper; and may sign, as clerk of the court, or as deputy clerk of the court, as the case may be, and affix the seal of the court to any letters or mandate issued from the court.

3. He may certify in the manner prescribed by chapter ninth of this act, a copy of any paper, required or permitted by law to be filed or recorded in the surrogate's office.

4. He may adjourn to a definite time, not exceeding thirty days, any matter, when the surrogate is absent from his office, or unable, by reason of other engagements, to attend to the same.

5. He may take the acknowledgment or proof of any instrument, to be used or filed in the court of which he is clerk or deputy clerk. Said deputy clerk shall also act as confidential clerk to the surrogate.

6. The clerk of the surrogate's court of each of the counties of Kings and New York may, with the approval of the surrogate or surrogates of his county, authorize or deputize one or more of the other clerks, employed in the surrogate's office of his county, to sign his name, and exercise such of the other powers conferred upon him by this section, as he shall designate. The surrogate may prohibit the clerk and deputy clerk, or either of them, from exercising any powers specified in this section, but the prohibition does not affect the validity of any act of the clerk or deputy clerk done in disregard of the prohibition. The clerk or deputy clerk or other person employed in any capacity in a surrogate's office, shall not act as appraiser, as attorney or counsel, or as referee or special guardian, in any matter before the surrogate.

7. The clerk of the surrogate's court, of each of the counties of this state shall immediately upon the filing in the office of the surrogate of any decree or order of such court directing the deposit of money, either actually in the hands of some person or persons or thereafter arising from the sale of real estate described in any such decree or order, with the county treasurer of his county, or in the case of the county of New York, with the chamberlain of the city of New York, or upon the filing in the said surrogate's office of any treasurer's or chamberlain's receipt stating that a sum of money has been deposited with such treasurer or chamberlain, in accordance with a decree or order of any such surrogate's court, enter in a book to be kept in his office for that purpose, to be known as a court and trust fund register, the title of the proceeding or the name of the estate in which such decree or order was made, together with a statement of the amount so deposited, or ordered to be deposited, if said decree or order contains the amount of same, and the name of the person or persons, if any, to whom said money is ordered to be paid, and the date of the filing of the same or of such receipt as herein mentioned. § 2509, Code Civil Proc.

Additional powers of clerks of surrogates' courts.

The clerk of the surrogate's court, and in the county of Kings two other clerks to be designated by the surrogate, in addition to the powers enumerated in section twenty-five hundred and nine, may exercise, concurrently with the surrogate of the county, the following powers of the surrogate: On the return of a citation issued from such surrogate's court on a petition for the probate of a will, where no objection to the same is filed, or, where all the persons entitled to be cited, sign and verify the petition, or personally, or by attorney, appear on the probate thereof, cause the witnesses to the will to be examined before him. Such examination must be reduced to writing, and for such purpose, they are hereby authorized to administer and certify oaths and affirmations in such cases in the same manner and with the same effect as if administered and certified by the surrogate. § 2510, Code Civil Proc.

Under section 2509 it is clear that the clerk of the Surrogate's Court may issue an ordinary citation, as that is a mandate to which a party is entitled as of course. Matter of Hurlbut, 43 Hun, 311 (dictum, but unquestionably correct). But special citations such as one issued under section 2707 (q. v.), i. e., in proceedings to discover property withheld, are mandates to which a party is not entitled as of course; and section 2509 defines the mandates, which the clerk may issue as those to which a party is entitled as of course, either unconditionally or on the filing of any paper; thus citation for probate is such a mandate but a citation under section 2707, for instance, is one to which the party is not entitled unless in addition to the filing of the paper, the Surrogate be satisfied that there are reasonable grounds for the inquiry, and therefore the courts have held such citation not to be within the power of the clerk of the Surrogate's Court to issue. See Mouran v. Hawley, 2 Dem. 396.

The difference between citations which the clerk may issue and those which he may not, appears to hinge on whether the issue of the citation involves the exercise of judicial power by the Surrogate; such powers cannot be delegated through any of his subordinates. The word mandate in section 2509 unquestionably includes a citation (see § 3343, subd. 2, and also § 2515, Code of Civil Procedure, which begins, "A citation or other mandate of a Surrogate's Court," etc.). Fithian's Estate, 3 N. Y. Supp. 193. "The citation is the mandate of the court and is the only foundation of the proceeding. To it and the statute the respondent is bound to look for information and notice of the nature and scope of the proceeding; and his rights and those of all concerned depend entirely upon the terms of such information and notice."

There is nothing in the section just quoted authorizing the clerk of the court to sign Surrogates' decrees. And a decree not signed by the Surrogate has no validity. Munro's Estate, 15 Abb. 363; McNaughton v. Chave, 5 Abb. N. S. 226. Subsequent filing by the clerk gives no efficiency to such decree. The courts have gone so far as to hold, where the clerk of a Surrogate issued letters to an administratrix, using a blank which had been signed by the Surrogate, and it appeared that the Surrogate never saw the petition, or the petitioner, and never exercised any judicial function in respect to the matter, that the mere signature gave no validity to the letters and that their issuance by the clerk was inoperative and that one who had paid a debt to the administratrix under such invalid letters had no protection, and could be made to pay to the representative of the estate having valid letters. Roderigas v. E. R. Sav. Inst., 76 N. Y. 316.

§ 50. Surrogates' clerks.—Clerks as distinguished from "the clerk" are to be appointed in the various counties only as permitted by statute. The number of these Surrogates' clerks is of course dependent upon the volume of business to be transacted. In New York County they are assigned to various departments, such as probate department, administration department, accounting, guardian, records, etc. The chief clerk is the clerk of the Surrogate's Court, the other clerks including the heads of the departments are merely clerks in the Surrogate's office.

Chapter 530 of the Laws of 1884 is entitled, "An act in relation to the office of the Surrogate in the county of New York." By virtue of this act, several of the provisions of the Code already quoted, are made inapplicable to the Surrogate's Court in the county of New York. The power of the board of aldermen of New York, who corresponded to the board of supervisors, over the court, over the clerks and assistants, over their salaries and over the fees in the office was completely abolished, the appointment and removal of clerks is left entirely under the control of the Surrogate. He may appoint and at pleasure remove all clerks, officers, attendants and employees in his office or connected with his court, their number, duties and salaries are such as the Surrogate shall designate and approve, subject, however, to the revision of the board of estimate and apportionment, by which board the aggregate expenses of the office is to be fixed; the details of the annual statement are provided in the chapter (q. v.).

§ 51. Security or bond by clerks.—In New York County by the act just referred to the Surrogate was empowered to require security from his various assistants (section 5) for the faithful performance of their duty which provision is now made applicable to the whole State by section 2511 of the Code, which is as follows:

> A surrogate hereafter elected or appointed, and the sureties on his official bond, are liable for any act of the clerk or deputy clerk of the surrogate's court in the discharge of his official duties, during the surrogate's term of office, as if the act was performed by the surrogate. The surrogate may take security from the clerk or deputy clerk, or either of them to indemnify him against the liability created by this section. § 2511, Code Civil Proc.

Chapter 530 of the Laws of 1884 also abolished the charging of fees excepting fees for copies of papers filed or recorded in the office, excepting mileage where the Surrogate in a case prescribed by law or in any case upon the application of a party goes to a place other than his office or court room where he is required to hold court in order to take testimony. See subd. 1 of section 7.

§ 52. Disabilities of clerks.—By section 2509 already quoted the clerk or any other person employed in any capacity in a Surrogate's office is prohibited from acting as appraiser, attorney or counsel, or referee, or special guardian in any matter before the Surrogate. But it seems that this prohibition can be obviated by consent of all the parties. See decision of Ransom, Surr., In re Shipman Estate, 5 N. Y. Supp. 559, 562, holding that the person who had been appointed referee, an assistant to the Surrogate, could not properly act except upon written consent of the parties; this case was decided in 1889. Prior to that decision there was a decision by Surrogate Rollins in 1885 (Benedict v. Cooper, 3 Dem. 362), resting upon the decision in the Estate of Thorn, 4 Monthly Law Bulletin, 48. The learned Surrogate construed section 2511 in connection with section 90 of the Code which by section 3355 are declared to have been enacted simultaneously. Section 90 is as follows:

Certain assistants not to be appointed referees, receivers or commissioners. (Amended, 1977, 1896.)

"No person holding the office of clerk, deputy clerk, special deputy clerk or assistant in the clerk's office, of a court of record or Surrogate's Court (nor any person holding a salaried office under the city or county government, or who receives money by virtue of an office which is a county charge), within either the counties of New York or Kings shall hereafter be appointed by any court or judge a referee, receiver, or commissioner, except by the written consent of all the parties to the action or special proceeding, other than parties in default for failure to appear or to plead." And although certain editions of the Code have an annotation to this section to the effect that the words, "or a Surrogate's Court" are superfluous, yet the decisions substantially hold that the written consent of all parties appearing does away with the effect of section 2509. The court has even gone further, and held (Benedict v. Cooper, supra), that a stenographer does not have such a relation to the Surrogate's Court or office as to bring him within the scope of either section 90 or section 2509. It may therefore be stated to be the existing rule, "that upon written consent the prohibition of section 2509 may be waived," and it is submitted that the decision above cited would be a sufficient authority for a special guardian in a proper case to join in the necessary written consent. See discussion, post, under § 2546, part II, chap. III. In probate proceedings in the county of New York on the written consent of all the parties appearing, which may be taken to include infants appearing by special guardian, the Surrogate may appoint a referee to take and report testimony; he is also given power by the same section (2546) in his discretion to direct an assistant to take and report the testimony; neither the referee nor assistant has power to pass upon the issues involved, although either has authority to rule upon the admissibility of evidence, where objection is raised. Matter of Allemann, 1 Connoly, 441. Where the Surrogate in his discretion exercises his authority to appoint his assistant to take and report the testimony, the consent of the parties is wholly unnecessary. The object of this amendment was carefully reviewed by Surrogate Ransom in the case just cited in the following language:

"This amendment was prepared by my predecessor, Judge Rollins, and was adopted by the legislature at his instance. Its object was to enable the Surrogate to select an assistant to take such material, competent and relevant evidence, and such only, as pertained to the issues before the court, and thus afford the Surrogate some aid in disposing of the great and constantly increasing volume of business with which the court was being overburdened, and to permit of its being transacted with reasonable expedition. The plain language and import of the amendment show that the selection of the assistant was left to the absolute discretion of the Surrogate. To say, however, that the effect of the enactment is that the person selected is permitted to be chosen to perform the simple clerical service of noting down, without authority to rule thereon, all the evidence which the parties may see fit to produce, with the objection raised thereto, would increase instead of relieving the labor of the court and defeat the very object sought to be accomplished by the amendment. The power now questioned has, with the approval of and in pursuance of the construction given to the provision by Judge Rollins, been invariably exercised by the assistant who was appointed by him to take testimony in probate cases. His construction and practice accord with my own and are warranted by the amendment in question."

§ 53. Additional clerks.—Section 2508 provides for the subordinate clerks in a Surrogate's office, and is as follows:

> Each surrogate may appoint, and at pleasure remove, as many clerks for his office, to be paid by the county, as the board of supervisors of his county, or, in the city and county of New York, the board of aldermen, authorize him so to appoint. The board of supervisors or the board of aldermen, as the case requires, must fix the compensation of the clerk or clerks so appointed; and may authorize them, or either of them, to receive, for their or his own use, the legal fees for making copies of any record or paper in the office of the surrogate. A surrogate may appoint, and at pleasure remove, as many additional clerks, to be paid by him, as he thinks proper.
> This section was repealed so far as said section relates to the county of New York by Laws of 1884, chap. 530, sec. 11, which contains express authority for appointments in that county.

§ 54. Stenographers in Surrogates' Courts.—Provision is made for stenographers in Surrogates' Courts by sections 2512 and 2513, which together cover all the counties in the State, and are as follows:

> The surrogate of each of the counties of New York and Kings must appoint, and may, for cause, remove, a stenographer for his court, who is entitled to a salary fixed by law, and to be paid as the salaries of clerks in the surrogate's office are paid. The surrogate of Kings county may appoint, and at pleasure remove, all attendants and messengers, and court officers in his court, who must attend, from day to day, the terms and sittings of the court to preserve order, and to perform whatever services may be required of them by the surrogate. The surrogate of Erie county may appoint, and at pleasure remove, one court officer to attend his court and to perform such duties in respect thereto as the said surrogate may prescribe. Such officer shall possess al the powers of officers designated by sheriffs to attend upon such courts, and shall each receive a salary not to exceed one thousand two hundred dollars a year to be paid in equal monthly payments by the treasurer of the County of Erie.
> The surrogate of each county, except New York, Kings, Hamilton, Queens and Richmond, may, in his discretion, appoint, and at pleasure remove, a stenographer for his court, who, except in Sullivan county, shall receive a salary to be fixed by such surrogate, not exceeding in counties having a population less than thirty thousand, eight hundred dollars per annum; in counties having a population of thirty thousand and not more than fifty thousand, not exceeding one thousand dollars per annum, and in counties having a population exceeding fifty thousand, not exceeding twelve hundred dollars per annum, except that in counties in which are located cities of the second class, or in counties in which are located three cities of the third class, such salary shall not exceed eighteen hundred dollars per annum; and in any county wholly containing a city of the first class, such salaries shall not exceed two thousand dollars per annum. The population of the several counties shall be determined by the last preceding census. If a regular stenographer is appointed in Sullivan county, his salary shall be five hundred dollars per annum. The board of supervisors shall provide for the payment of such salary in the same manner as the other county expenses are paid. Such stenographer shall deliver to the surrogate of the county a full copy of all the minutes taken by him; and on the receipt of his fees, not exceeding three cents per folio, a like copy to the party, or each of the parties, to the proceeding in which the minutes were taken, except that in the counties of Onondaga and Monroe such fees shall not exceed six cents per folio. When not actually engaged in the discharge of his duties as stenographer, he shall perform such clerical duties in connection with the surrogate's court as the surrogate directs. In counties wherein the surrogate is also county judge, the stenographer so appointed shall be the stenographer of the county court, and shall perform the duties pertaining to a stenographer of the county court without additional compensation. In counties where, for any cause, a regular stenographer for his court has not been appointed, as provided by this section, the surrogate may, in individual proceedings requiring the services of a stenographer, appoint a stenographer who shall be paid a reasonable compensation, certified by the surrogate in every case in which he takes notes of testimony, from the estate or matter in which such services are rendered.

Subd. 2 relates merely to monthly salary in Sullivan County.

It will be seen from these sections, which have not been judicially construed, except in the Cooper case above referred to, which was in New York County, that in the counties outside the Greater New York the stenographer, when not actually engaged in the discharge of his duties as stenographer, shall perform such clerical duties in connection with the court as the Surrogate shall direct. The reasoning of the Cooper case, therefore, distinguishing a stenographer from clerks or other persons employed, would not be applicable. For purposes of convenience and economy, the practice that has grown up is certainly unobjectionable, and in the absence of independent disqualifications on the part of the persons consented to or designated, the regularity of a reference had thereunder would probably be sustained.

§ 55. Duties and rights of stenographers.

§ 2541. Duty of stenographer.

The stenographer of a surrogate's court must, under the direction of the surrogate, take full stenographic notes of all proceedings, in which oral proofs are given, except where the surrogate otherwise directs. The testimony must be legibly written out at length by him, from his notes; and the minutes thereof, as so written out, must, after being authenticated, as prescribed in the next section, be filed in the surrogate's office.

Stenographers in Surrogates' Courts are subject generally to the same duties as those in other courts of record. Thus it has been held, that, as they are only authorized to charge the prescribed legal rate to counsel for furnishing an official copy of the minutes, an agreement to furnish said copy more expeditiously for an advance in the legal rate cannot be enforced. M'Carthy v. Bonynge, 12 Daly, 356. See Wright v. Nostrand, 58 How. Pr. 184; Guth v. Dalton, id. 289.

See § 3311 as to fees per folio which the stenographer may charge, and as to Surrogate's power to "order that the fees for such record copy be paid out of the estate to which the proceeding relates." And see § 2558, subd. 3 as to ordering copy of minutes to be furnished to contestant's counsel and the expense charged to the estate, if contest be in good faith.

And a stenographer wrongfully refusing to give a copy of the minutes except on receipt of excessive fees, may be punished for contempt. Cavanagh v. O'Neill, 20 Misc. 233.

The Surrogate may entertain the application of a stenographer, e. g., who has reported an accounting before a referee, for the payment of his fees, and, in a proper case, direct payment thereof out of the estate. Matter of Maritch, 29 Misc. 270. See also Matter of Hurd, 6 Misc. 171; Estate of Maria Smith, Surr. Decs. 1894, p. 329; Estate of Philip McDowell, Surr. Decs. 1896, p. 139; Matter of Henry W. Andress, Surr. Decs. 1898, p. 396.

§ 56. Stipulations as to fees.—In the Maritch case above cited it was held that parties to such a proceeding may stipulate that stenographer's fees be paid out of the estate. One subsequently intervening is not bound by such stipulation, and cannot be made to contribute to such payment. Ibid.

Strictly speaking, the representative and other parties are individually liable, Russell v. Lyth, 66 App. Div. 290; Bottome v. Alberst, 47 Misc. 665, and the position of the representative is that while he cannot bind the estate by his contract yet, in any reasonable case, the payment of the expenses of a reference will be allowed. But the legal effect of a stipulation that these fees be taxed and paid out of the estate is not so much to foreclose the Surrogate, as to operate as an agreement not to hold the representative individually. See Bottome v. Nealy, 54 Misc. 258 (App. Term); 124 App. Div. 600. See also Harry v. Hilton, 11 Abb. N. C. 448; Kesler v. Bell, 48 Misc. 428.

The attorney's stipulation binds the client. Bottome v. Nealy, supra.

The committee of an incompetent is held to be a "party" in the sense that he may be bound. Bottome v. Alberst, supra.

A special guardian should not join in the stipulation for fees; but he may acquiesce therein, by not opposing, and leave the Surrogate, on taxation, to dispose of the matter.

PART II

CHAPTER I

PROCEEDINGS IN SURROGATES' COURTS

§ 57. No action in Surrogates' Courts.—Surrogates have no jurisdiction over civil actions. The Code's distinction is not clearly drawn between actions and special proceedings. It defines civil actions, of which there is but one form (Code Civ. Proc. § 3333; id. § 3339) as "an ordinary prosecution, in a court of justice, by a party against another party, for the enforcement and protection of a right, or the redress or prevention of a wrong." Any other prosecution of a party for either of such purposes above named is a special proceeding. Ibid. § 3334. This appears to make the distinction hinge on the word ordinary. But this is not satisfactory in point of clearness. Nothing is gained to that end by saying a special proceeding is an extraordinary or unordinary prosecution. A clearer idea of the difference can be had. A civil action must begin with a summons. By its issuance the court may acquire a divestible jurisdiction for purposes of provisional remedies but by its service on the other party the action is said to be commenced. Code Civ. Proc. § 416. Thus the party seeking relief brings the other into a court of justice by his own act alone. This is not true of a special proceeding. The party seeking relief in such a proceeding applies to the court which by its citation or by its order to show cause brings the other party before it. The only exception is in regard to motions or applications for orders, notice of which may be served by one party upon another, which notice of motion brings the adverse party before the court to oppose the granting of the relief referred to in the notice. But this is more an apparent than a real exception, in that such a proceeding by motion is rarely if ever a primary but only an incidental proceeding, entitled in the primary or original proceeding, and capable of being made only by a party thereto. Lafferty v. Lafferty, 5 Redf. 326, 329, citing Foster v. Foster, 7 Paige, 48, 52. Take the case of an application for the appointment of a temporary administrator pending a long contest. Here a citation issued after petition is not necessary. But the motion for an order making such an appointment must be made by a party to the original proceeding, that is, the primary probate proceeding, and notice given to every other party thereto.

§ 58. Proceedings, how commenced.—The Code itself expressly provides (§ 2516): "Except in a case where it is otherwise specially prescribed by law, a special proceeding in a Surrogates' Court must be commenced by the service of a citation issued upon the presentation of a petition. See Matter of Gregory, 13 Misc. 363. But, the presentation of the petition operates as does the issuance of the summons, since thereby the court acquires, in the language of the Code (§ 2516) jurisdiction to do any act which may be done before actual service of the citation. There are, of course, proceedings in Surrogates' Courts not begun by citation, but they are not special proceedings. They might be called incidental proceedings, e. g., filing objections to an executor's qualifying. This presents an issue which the Surrogate must try and determine. But his order is not appealable to the Court of Appeals. It is a discretionary determination and not a final order in a special proceeding. See Matter of Baldwin, 158 N. Y. 713.

But so far as any provisions of the Code are concerned which limit the time for the commencement of a special proceeding, the presentation of the petition and not the service of the citation commences the proceeding, provided the citation is properly served or its publication duly commenced within sixty days after it is issued.

> The presentation of a petition is deemed the commencement of a special proceeding, within the meaning of any provision of this act, which limits the time for the commencement thereof. But, in order to entitle the petitioner to the benefit of this section, a citation issued upon the presentation of the petition, must, within sixty days thereafter, be served, as prescribed in section 2520 of this act, upon the adverse party, or upon one or two or more adverse parties, who are jointly liable, or otherwise united in interest; or, within the same time, the first publication thereof must be made, pursuant to an order made as prescribed in section 2522 of this act. § 2517, Code Civil Proc.

Thus, where the statute limits the right of petition for revocation of probate of a will to one year the petition need only be presented on the last day. The citation must be served within sixty days thereafter (Pryer v. Clapp, 1 Dem. 387, 389, where the petition was filed in time, that is, within a year after the recording of the decree admitting the will to probate, but the citation though promptly issued was not served until 100 days later. Held that the Surrogate thereby lost his jurisdiction) or the petitioner loses the benefit of section 2517. By "thereafter" is meant after the issuing of the citation which the Surrogate is directed to issue upon the presentation of the petition. Should this citation prove defective or there be a failure to serve all the necessary parties he may issue a supplemental citation, after and in place of the other. If that is served or publication commenced within sixty days after the supplemental citation was issued, the proceeding will be regular. Matter of Will of Bradley, 70 Hun, 104, 110. This case cites Matter of Will of Gouraud, 95 N. Y. 256, and professes to overrule the case of Pryer v. Clapp, above cited. There is, however, a distinction, for in that case it appears that the citation was not served within sixty days of its issuance and that the party had to suffer for his own lack of due vigilance, while in the two cases of Bradley and Gourand the citation appears to have been served properly, but there was delay in issuing it by the Surrogate, for which delay the petitioner could not well be made answerable. This case further overrules Fountain v. Carter, 2 Dem. 313, which held that section 2517 gave the Surrogate no power to extend by order the sixty days referred to. It further overrules In re Bonnett, 1 Connoly, 294. The Gourand case was decided before section 2517 was enacted. So the authority of the Bradley case rests not on it but on the provisions of section 2481 of the Code under which the Surrogate has power to issue a supplemental citation, which power is by such decision made available in this connection to extend the time limited by statute within which service should be made.

§ 59. The petition in a special proceeding corresponds to the complaint in an action. It contains a plain and concise statement of the facts constituting the claim of the petitioner. The court allows oral petitions, but written pleadings may be required. Thus section 2533 is as follows:

> The surrogate may, at any time, require a party to file a written petition or answer, containing a plain and concise statement of the facts constituting his claim, objection, or defence, and a demand of the decree, order, or other relief, to which he supposes himself to be entitled. The surrogate may require the petition or answer to be verified, and a copy thereof to be served upon any other person interested. A party who fails to comply with such a requirement may be treated as a party in default. Except where such a requirement is made, or in case where a written petition is expressly required by this act, a petition, or the answer thereto, may be presented orally; in which case, the substance thereof must be entered in the records of the courts. § 2533, Code Civil Proc.

As a matter of ordinary practice, and as a regular rule in the county of New York, the petition is always in writing, and required to be verified. Rule 14, Surr. Ct. Rules. In the absence of a standing rule of the Surrogate's Court of any county or of the requirement of the Surrogate as provided for in section 2533 an oral petition is sufficient for jurisdictional purposes, only it is required that the substance thereof must be entered in the records of the court. Except in a case of urgency it is suggested that the careful practitioner, even where oral pleadings are allowed, will reduce his to writing. Van Vleck v. Burroughs, 6 Barb. 341.

Where a written pleading is required by the Surrogate, a failure to comply with such requirement may be treated as a default; as may also a failure to comply with a further requirement that it be verified, and a copy served on any other party in interest.

§ 60. Formal requisites of petition.—The petition, when made in writing, should conform to the fundamental laws of pleading applicable to complaints. It should be clear and concise. Its allegations should be in form stated to be made by the petitioner, and unless stated to be made on information and belief they will be regarded as being made on the knowledge of the petitioner. Code Civ. Proc. § 524.

A petition must not contain inconsistent claims; that is to say, improperly unite causes of action. See Cocks v. Barlow, 5 Redf. 406, where petitioner asked to have executors removed for misconduct and also asked that they be directed to invest certain funds as directed in the will. So there must not be a variance between citation and petition as to relief demanded. Such variance can be cured by amendment. Spencer v. Popham, 5 Redf. 425.

The tendency of the courts is to be liberal in allowing reasonable amendments. Matter of Rubens, 117 App. Div. 523. The object is to simplify and clarify the issues to be determined. But arbitrary amendments without leave, or those which change the nature of a proceeding to which parties have been brought in by citation are discountenanced. Matter of Sheldon, 118 App. Div. 488. In this case the original petition was for letters c. t. a. It failed to show petitioner's nominee's right to letters, or whether any other had prior right. Objections were accordingly filed. Thereupon petitioner filed an "amended petition," on which, however, no citation issued. A decree of the Surrogate based on this "amended" petition was reversed on the ground the only petition properly in court was insufficient to sustain the decree made.

The rules for verification are the same as for pleadings in civil actions. Substantial compliance with the Code requirements is sufficient. Thus a petition where in the verification the affiant says, "she knows the contents thereof and that the same are true," is good. The Court of Appeals held this to be equivalent to saying that "they are true to her knowledge." Matter of Macauley, 94 N. Y. 574, 577.

> The provisions of sections 523, 524, 525 and 526 of this act apply to a verification made pursuant to this chapter, and to the petition or other paper so verified, where they can be so applied in substance, without regard to the form of the proceeding. § 2534, Code Civil Proc.

Thus, where a party to a proceeding in the Surrogate's Court is not within the county where the attorney resides (or, if the attorney is a nonresident, the county where he has his office), the verification may be made under section 525, by the attorney. Moorhouse v. Hutchinson, 2 Dem. 429, 434. When so made it must conform to the requirements of section 526, that is, it must set forth the grounds of his belief, as to all matters not stated upon knowledge, and the reason why it is not made by the party. When the attorney in verifying a pleading swears that all the allegations are within his personal knowledge, it has been held that his failure to assign a reason why the party did not verify it was merely an irregularity. Betts v. Krindell, 20 Abb. N. C. 1; Ross v. Longmuir, 15 Abb. 326. Surrogate Rollins held (Moorhouse v. Hutchinson, supra), that where "the attorney of record who signs the petition alleges in his affidavit of verification that the petition is true, except as to the matters therein stated to be alleged upon information and belief, and that as to those matters he believes it to be true, and also swears that he verifies the petition because of the absence of the petitioner from the State, and declares that the grounds of his belief in the truth of the averments in the petition are the records of the Surrogate's Court, letters of the parties concerned, and conversations with them, it is to be held a substantial compliance with the statute."

§ 61. The citation.—Instead of preceding the petition, as the summons does the complaint, the citation is prayed to be issued in the petition. Upon the presentation, then, of the petition the Surrogate issues a citation. This citation is a mandate of the court directed to all the necessary parties to the proceeding requiring them to appear and show cause why the relief demanded by petitioner, which should be specified therein, should not be granted. The relief so described should be identical with that claimed in the petition. Should it inadvertently appear otherwise, application should be made to have it amended so as to conform to the petition or vice versa as the facts may require, which amendment the Surrogate has power to allow, Matter of Soule, 6 Dem. 137, 140; Spencer v. Popham, 5 Redf. 425, 428, under section 2538 which reads: "Except where a contrary intent is expressed in, or plainly implied from the context of, a provision of this chapter, the following portions of this act; to wit: title first" (i. e., §§ 721–730, entitled "Mistakes, omissions, defects and irregularities") "and articles third and fourth of title sixth of chapter eighth" (i. e., §§ 796–809, entitled "Service of papers") ". . . . apply to Surrogates' Courts and to the proceedings therein, so far as they can be applied to the substance and subject-matter of a proceeding, without regard to its form." It is indeed his duty to disregard any error or defect in proceedings which does not affect the substantial rights of parties.

> A citation must be made returnable upon a day certain, designated therein, not more than four months after the date thereof; and must specify whose estate or what subject-matter is in question. The names of all the persons to be cited, as far as they can be ascertained, must be contained in the citation. Where the name, or part of the name, of either of them cannot be ascertained, that fact must be stated in the citation. § 2519, Code Civil Proc.

§ 62. When names are unknown.—In proceedings in Surrogates' Courts, the names of one or some of the parties required to be cited may at the time be wholly or partly unknown to the petitioner. In fact it is sometimes prescribed that a petitioner must pray that creditors, or next of kin or heirs, or devisees, or other persons constituting a class, be cited in the particular proceeding. When this is the case, which will be discussed further on, the Code provides (§ 2518) that "the petitioner must set forth in an affidavit (a petition duly verified, is deemed an affidavit within the meaning of this section, ibid.)," the names of each of them, unless the name or part of the name, of one or more of them cannot, after diligent inquiry, be ascertained by him; in which case that fact must be set forth, and the Surrogate must thereupon inquire into the matter. For the purpose of the inquiry, he may, in his discretion, issue a subpœna, requiring any person to attend before him to testify respecting the matter. If he is satisfied, upon the allegations of the petitioner, or after making the inquiry that the name of one or more of the persons to be cited, cannot be ascertained with reasonable diligence, the citation may be directed to that person, or those persons, by a general designation, showing his, her or their connection with the decedent, or interest in the property or matter in question; or otherwise sufficiently identifying the person or persons intended. A citation, thus directed, has the same force and effect, as if it was directed to the person or persons intended, by their names; and where the person or persons so intended are duly cited, in any manner prescribed by law, the decree binds them as if they were named therein. A petition, duly verified, is deemed an affidavit within the meaning of this section.

§ 63. General formalties of citation.—It is the duty of the practitioner to see to it that all necessary names and facts are contained in the citation. This he does by means of the petition, which, when verified, serves as the affidavit above required in cases of unknown names of necessary parties, and which contains the statement of the petitioners' claim. But apart from these matters of substance and from the requirements referred to in § 3 (supra), there are still further rules as to form, which must be observed by the Surrogate issuing the citation.

And first, technically, the citation issues after the entry of an order, made on the prayer of the petitioner that citation issue, directing its issue. Practically, few Surrogates insist on such procedure. The practice in New York County is to issue the citation forthwith, and later to enter an order in a regular book kept for the purpose. This practice of itself is evidence of the inutility of the order. See opinion of Surrogate Coffin in In re Merritt's Will, 5 Dem. 544, "Although perhaps not strictly necessary an order for the issuing of the citation is usually entered." The issuing of the citation is, after all, not the act of the party, or of his attorney, but the very act of the Surrogate himself, and we fail to see the propriety or purpose of requiring that officer, to whom the prayer of the petitioner is addressed, to make a formal order directing himself to issue a citation when the Code is practically a standing order to him to issue such citation upon the presentation of the petition.

And, secondly, the citation is prepared by the Surrogate, or by his clerk, and no one else, not even the petitioner's attorney may insert anything therein unless so directed to do by the Surrogate, when it becomes his own act. Thus where, after the issuance of a citation, it was discovered that a necessary party was not named therein, and his name was thereupon inserted, but not by the clerk who had prepared the citation, it was held that the Surrogate acquired no jurisdiction over such party. Boerum v. Betts, 1 Dem. 471.

Thirdly. The citation runs in the name of the People, is addressed to the parties required to be cited, by name, or, as before explained, as a class, for example, "to all persons interested in the estate of James Brown, late of the city of New York, deceased, as creditors;" and requires their personal appearance before the Surrogate who issues the mandate (Code Civ.

Proc. § 2515) "A citation or other mandate of the Surrogate's Court must, except where it is otherwise specially prescribed by law, be made returnable before the Surrogate from whose court it was issued, [and may be served or executed in any county]" in his court on a day certain not later than four months from its date, then and there to show cause why the particular relief prayed in the petition should not be granted.

It is now customary to add a clause, whenever any of the persons cited are or may be infants, requiring them to appear by their guardians, if they have any, and if not, to appear and ask for the appointment of one ad litem, and further notifying such infants that upon their failure so to do, on or before the return day the Surrogate himself will appoint one to protect such infant's interest. See Price v. Fenn, 3 Dem. 341, 345. The citation must be attested by the seal of the Surrogate's Court and signed by the Surrogate himself or the clerk of the court.

§ 64*a*. Where person required as a party is unknown.—The Code, in its provisions regarding the summons, covers two contingencies as to parties required to be therein named: The first, where the name is unknown, and a fictitious name has to be used; the second, where the person himself is unknown, when he must be designated as unknown and also described in a manner tending to identify him. Code Civ. Proc. § 451. There is a similar distinction in regard to citations. Section 2518, already quoted, covers cases where there is knowledge by petitioner that persons exist as creditors, or as legatees, or as next of kin, but there is ignorance of their names, in whole or in part. They must be brought in, for section 2518 says they are "necessary" parties. And section 2523 also refers to persons unknown to petitioner, such as one or more unknown creditors, next of kin, legatees, heirs, devisees, etc., but thought to exist as members of a class; such persons must also be designated by a description tending to identify them, as, for example, by including them in a class. To make this clearer, suppose petitioner knows that his intestate had a brother known to be deceased. He may know that such brother left issue, but be ignorant of their names, or he may not know whether he left any issue at all, or their number if any.

If the description be comprehensive and sufficient all persons included therein are precluded by the decree as completely as if duly named in the citation. § 2518, and see Matter of Ellis, 22 N. Y. St. Rep. 77.

It seems if the petitioner, for example, decedent's widow, shows to the satisfaction of the Surrogate that testator left no heirs nor next of kin, the issuance of a citation may be dispensed with. See Bailey v. Stewart, 2 Redf. 212.

§ 65. Practice as to return day.—If practicable, the petition should state the ages and places of residence of the parties in order to guide the court in fixing the return day of the citation. So long as it is fixed within the statutory limits the Surrogate may consult his convenience and that of the petitioner in fixing it. Matter of Washburn, 12 Misc. 242. If it appear that all of the persons to be cited reside in the county of the Surrogate or an adjoining county, a return day will be fixed so that the citation may be served at least eight days prior thereto.

> A citation must be served, if within the county of the surrogate, or an adjoining county, at least eight days before the return day thereof; if in any other county, at least fifteen days before the return day; unless, in either case, the person served, being an adult, and not incompetent, assents in writing to a service within a shorter time. Any person, although a party to the special proceeding, may serve a citation. § 2520, Code Civil Proc., in part.

Service must be made so as to give eight days' notice and not to be served on the eighth day prior. The way to compute is to count eight days excluding the day of service. See Small v. Edrick, 5 Wend. 138; Matter of Carhart, 2 Dem. 627. If the person to be cited reside in any other county of the State, the return day will be fixed so that the service may be made at least fifteen days before the return day; and if out of the State, such a return day must be fixed as to enable personal service thereof to be made at least thirty days before the return day, or, if service be necessary by publication the return day must be fixed at least six weeks off. See In re Merritt's Will, 5 Dem. 544; Matter of Koch, 19 Civ. Pro. Rep. 165. But it is not necessary that the sixth publication be complete eight days before the return day. Matter of Denton, 86 App. Div. 358.

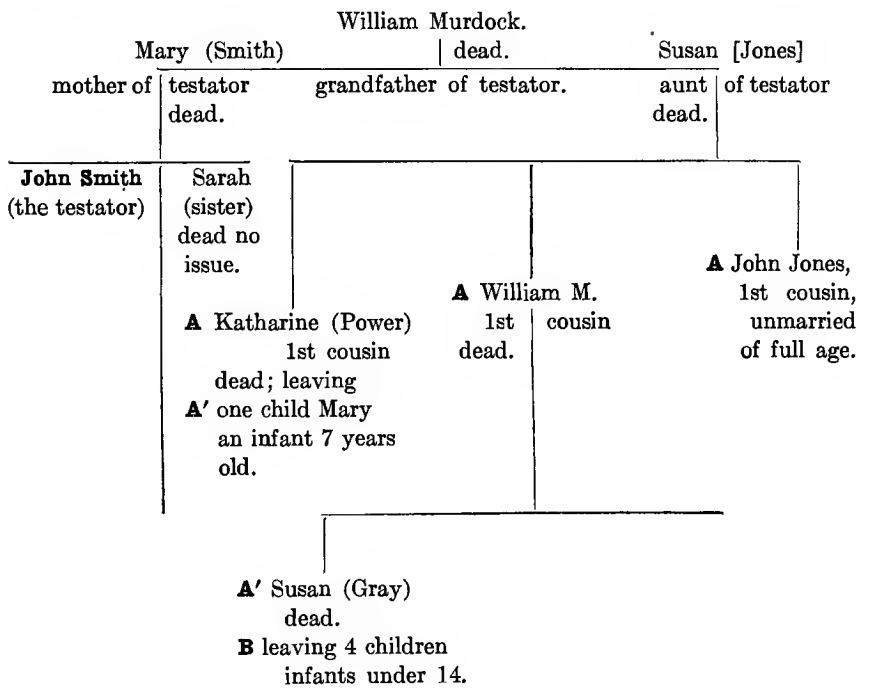
The allegations of the petition are the only guide the Surrogate has by which to fix the return day. If it contains nothing to indicate this he will require an affidavit setting forth the facts for that purpose.

It will be found to be an aid to the clerk of the court particularly in probate proceedings, if petitioner will prepare and file with his petition a chart, or family tree, showing all the known relatives of decedent. Where the will relates to personal property only, the next of kin need only be shown. Where it relates to real property also the heirs at law should be shown. Thus:



Thus: if John Smith's will is one of real property as well as of personal, the children in class B and the child in class A′ are entitled to be made parties; whereas if it be a will of personal property alone only class A would be entitled to citation.

§ 66. Rules for service of citation.—Rule 3 of the Surrogate's Court of the county of New York lays down this preliminary requisite: "No mandate issued out of this court shall be deemed duly served, unless copies of the petition or other papers upon which it shall be issued, and upon which relief is sought, shall be served with it, except the following:

"1. Citation to attend probate.

"2. Citation to revoke probate.

"3. Citation on application for administration.

"4. Citation for intermediate account.

"5. Citation to attend judicial settlement.

"6. Citation to temporary administrator to account.

"7. Citation to principal in a bond to give new sureties in place of sureties who apply to be released.

"8. Order to temporary administrator to make deposit.

"9. Order to executor to appear and qualify.

"10. Order requiring the executor or administrator to file inventory."

Bearing this requirement in mind the next point is mode of service. This may be in one of three ways: personal service, substituted service and service by publication. The mode may depend upon the residence of the party, his minority or his lack of legal capacity.

§ 67. Service of citation within the State.

> Except where special provision is otherwise made by law, service of a citation, within the state, must be made upon an adult person, or an infant of the age of fourteen years or upwards, by delivering a copy thereof to the person to be served, or by leaving a copy at his residence, or the place where he sojourns, with a person of suitable age and discretion, under such circumstances, that the surrogate has good reason to believe that the copy came to his knowledge, in time for him to attend at the return day. § 2520, Code Civil Proc., in part.

" Where it appears by affidavit to the satisfaction of the Surrogate from whose court a citation issued that proper and diligent effort had been made to serve it upon a resident of the State, as prescribed in the last section (§ 2520), and that the person to be served cannot be found, or, if found, that he evades service, so that it cannot be made, the Surrogate may make an order directing that service thereof be made, as prescribed in section 436 of the Code: "

> The order must direct that the serving of the summons be made by leaving a copy thereof, and of the order at the residence of the defendant, with a person of proper age, if upon reasonable application, admittance can be obtained, and such a person found who will receive it; or, if admittance cannot be so obtained, nor such a person be found, by affixing the same to the outer or other door of the defendant's residence, and by depositing another copy thereof properly enclosed in a postpaid wrapper, addressed to him, at his place of residence, in the post-office at the place where he resides;

" and the provisions of that section and of section 437, of this act "

> The order and the papers upon which it was granted, must be filed, and the service must be made, within ten days after the order is granted: otherwise the order becomes inoperative. On filing an affidavit, showing service according to the order, the summons is deemed served, and the same proceedings may be taken thereupon, as if it had been served by publication. . . .

" relating to the service of a summons, apply to the service of a 'citation' made pursuant to such an order." Code Civ. Proc. § 2521. This section confers the same authority upon the Surrogate as is possessed by a judge of a court of record. Scharmann v. Schoell, 38 App. Div. 528. Therefore, upon proof of service of citation as provided in this section the court acquires jurisdiction of the person, and may enter an effectual order. The order so made, if not complied with, will be a sufficient basis for an action against the surety on the official bond of the disobedient representative. Ibid., citing Hunt v. Hunt, 72 N. Y. 217; Burton v. Burton, 45 Hun, 68; Continental Nat. Bank v. Thurber, 74 Hun, 632.

§ 68. When service without the State or by publication.—In any one of the four following cases the Surrogate who has issued the citation may make an order directing the citation to be served without the State or by publication:

1. Where it is to be served upon a foreign corporation, or upon a person who is not a resident of the state.
2. Where the person to be served, being a resident of the state, has departed therefrom, with intent to defraud his creditors, or to avoid the service of process.
3. Where the person to be served, whether an adult or an infant, is a resident of the state, but is temporarily absent therefrom.
4. Where the person to be served is a resident of the state, or a domestic corporation, and an attempt was made to serve a citation, issued from the same surrogate's court, upon the presentation of the same petition, before the expiration of the limitation applicable to the enforcement of the claim set forth in the petition, as fixed in chapter fourth of this act; and the limitation would have expired, within sixty days next preceding the application for the order, if the time had not been extended by the attempt to serve the citation. § 2522, Code Civil Proc.

§ 69. When name or residence unknown.—Service can also be made pursuant to an order directing the service of a citation without the State, or by publication in the two following cases:

1. Upon a party, to whom a citation is directed, either by his full name or part of his name, where the surrogate is satisfied, by affidavit, that the residence of that party cannot, after diligent inquiry, be ascertained by the petitioner.
2. Upon one or more unknown creditors, next of kin, legatees, heirs, devisees, or other persons included in a class, to whom a citation has been directed, designating them by a general description, as prescribed in this article. § 2523, Code Civil Proc.

It will be noted the Surrogate is not bound to make an order for service by publication merely because there are non-residents. These sections give him discretionary power to do so. Matter of Washburn, 12 Misc. 242.

But it may be to petitioner's interest to ask for it. For example, in Matter of Killan, 172 N. Y. 547, rev'g 66 App. Div. 312, the settlement of an account was held void against non-cited unknown persons interested, who might have been made parties by proceeding under the foregoing sections.

Upon filing the verified petition of the executor named in the will of late of the City of New York, deceased, by which the petitioner has made proof to my satisfaction that are legatees or next of kin (or designate their relation to decedent) of said deceased, and that they are not residents of this State, and that personal service of the citation herein, cannot with due diligence be made upon them within the State; (and by which said petition, the petitioner has also made proof to my satisfaction that there are other legatees or next of kin of said deceased, whose names and places of residence are unknown, and cannot after diligent inquiry be ascertained by the petitioner), (and also that are legatees, or next of kin of said deceased, and that their places of residence are unknown, and cannot after diligent inquiry be ascertained by the petitioner).

Now, on motion of of counsel for the said petitioner, Ordered: That service of the citation in the above-entitled matter, upon aforesaid persons, viz.

be made by publication thereof in two newspapers, to wit: in the published in the City of New York, and in the once a week for six successive weeks; or, at the option of the petitioner, by delivering a copy of the citation to the above-named person, in person without the State;

And it is further Ordered and Directed, That on or before the day of the first publication, the petitioner deposit in the post-office at the City of New York sets of a copy of the citation and of this order, each set contained in a securely closed postpaid wrapper, directed to the following persons respectively, at the places designated below:

(And it is further Ordered, That service of citation in the above-entitled matter upon those persons whose names and places of residence are unknown, and cannot after diligent inquiry be ascertained by the petitioner herein, and also upon whose places of residence are unknown, and cannot after diligent inquiry be ascertained by the petitioner herein, be made by publication thereof in two newspapers, to wit: in the published in the City of New York, and in the once a week for six successive weeks; or, at the option of the petitioner, by delivering to and leaving with without the State, a true copy of the said citation.

And I being satisfied by the said petition that the petitioner cannot with reasonable diligence ascertain a place or places where the said legatees or next of kin would probably receive matter transmitted through the post-office, hereby dispense with the deposit of any papers therein.)

Short Form of order for Citation and for Service of same by Publication combined.

In the matter of Proving the Last Will and Testament of Deceased.

On reading and filling the petition of propounding the Last Will and Testament of late of the of in the County of Westchester, deceased, for probate:

It is Ordered, that a citation issue to the proper persons, pursuant to the prayer of said petition, requiring them to appear in this court, on the day of 190 at o'clock in the forenoon of that day, at the Surrogate's office in the of to attend the probate of said will.

It is further Ordered, that service of said citation upon the person hereinafter named of said decedent non-resident of this State, be made by publication thereof in the two newspapers published in said County, called not less than once in each of six successive weeks; or, at the option of the petitioner by delivering a copy of the said citation, without the State, to each of said persons in person, at least days before the return day thereof.

And it is further Ordered, that on or before the day of the first publication of said citation, the petitioner deposit in the post-office at a copy of said citation and this order, contained in a securely closed postpaid wrapper, directed to the following named person at the place below named and set opposite name to wit:

§ 71. How to serve by publication.—The provisions of the Code contained in § 2524, as amended by chapter 606 of Laws of 1899, now read as follows (the amendment of 1899 is italicized):

Where an order, directing the service of a citation without the state, or by publication, is made as prescribed in either of the last two sections, the party applying therefor must produce proof, by affidavit or otherwise, to the satisfaction of the surrogate, that the case is one of those specified in those sections. The order must direct that service of the citation, upon the person named or described in the order, be made by publication of the citation in two newspapers, designated as prescribed in this article, unless from the petition it appears that the estate amounts to less than two thousand dollars, in which case only one newspaper shall be designated, for a specified time, which the surrogate deems reasonable, not less than once in each of six successive weeks; or, at the option of the petitioner, by delivering a copy of the citation, without the state, to each person so named or described, in person, and if the person to be served is an infant under the age of fourteen years, also to the person with whom he is sojourning, or, if the service is made upon a corporation, to an officer thereof specified in section four hundred and thirty-one or four hundred and thirty-two of this act. It must also contain either a direction that on or before the day of the first publication, the petitioner deposit, in a specified post-office, a copy of the citation and of the order, contained in a securely closed postpaid wrapper, directed to the person to be served, at a place specified in the order, and if the person to be served is an infant under the age of fourteen years, a further copy, likewise contained in a securely closed postpaid wrapper, directed to the person with whom such infant is sojourning or, a statement that the surrogate, being satisfied, by the affidavit upon which the order was granted, that the petitioner cannot, with reasonable diligence, ascertain a place or places where the person to be served would probably receive matter transmitted through the post-office, dispenses with the deposit of any papers therein. § 2524, Code Civil Proc.

§ 72. What mode of service depends on.—The foregoing section shows clearly when the practitioner may resort to substituted service or service by publication. And, it may be added, in any of the six cases therein set forth the mode of service is thereby covered. But this all relates to adults and infants over fourteen years of age. In the cases of infants under fourteen years and of persons without legal capacity, such as habitual drunkards, idiots, lunatics, etc., there are additional requirements to be observed, which may also in the discretion of the Surrogate be extended to the case of an infant of fourteen years and upwards. No infant is bound by a decree in a proceeding to which he was not duly made a party. Nor does the decree foreclose the Surrogate himself who made it if and when the infant asserts rights sought to be affected by it.

This is the langauge of the Code in this regard:

Where a person, cited or to be cited, is an infant of the age of fourteen years or upwards, or where the surrogate has, in his opinion, reasonable grounds to believe that a person, cited or to be cited, is an habitual drunkard, or for any cause mentally incapable adequately to protect his rights, although not judicially declared to be incompetent to manage his affiars, the surrogate may, in his discretion (see Matter of Stephen, 2 N. Y. Supp. 36), with or without an application therefor, and in the interest of that person, make an order requiring that a copy of the citation be delivered, in behalf of that person, to > a person designated in the order; and that service of the citation shall not be deemed complete until such delivery. Where the person, cited or to be cited, is an infant under the age of fourteen years, or a person judicially declared to be incompetent to manage his affairs, by reason of lunacy, idiocy, or habitual drunkenness, and the surrogate has reasonable ground to believe that the interest of the person, to whom a copy of the citation was delivered, in behalf of the infant or incompetent person, is adverse to that of the infant or incompetent person, or that, for any reason, he is not a fit person to protect the latter's rights, the surrogate may likewise make such an order; and as a part thereof, or by a separate order, made in like manner at any stage of the proceedings, he may appoint a special guardian ad litem to conduct the proceedings in behalf of the incompetent person, to the exclusion of the committee, and with the same powers, and subject to the same liabilities, as a committee of the property. § 2527, Code Civil Proc.

This section it will at once be seen, provides for an extra service, in addition to the regular service required to be made on infants or incompetents. Matter of Cartwright, 3 Dem. 13. Such regular service is made precisely as service of a summons is made in analogous cases. See Code Civ. Proc. § 2526.

> Service of a citation must be made upon an infant under the age of fourteen years, a person judicially declared to be incompetent to manage his affairs by reason of lunacy, idiocy, or habitual drunkenness, or a corporation, in the manner prescribed for personal service of a summons upon such a person, or upon a corporation, in article first of title first of chapter fifth of this act. § 2526, Code Civil Proc.

Service upon a person non compos not in compliance with this section will be good ground for reopening the decree entered if the interests of the incompetent person so require (Matter of Toulon, 66 Hun, 199), and the same is true as to an infant. Potter v. Ogden, 136 N. Y. 384.

§ 73. Who may serve the citation.—Any person, even though a party to the special proceeding, may serve a citation. Code Civ. Proc. § 2520. Thus a service by an executor or legatee has been upheld. Wetmore v. Parker, 7 Lansing, 121, affirmed in 52 N. Y. 450, 456. But Rule 18 of the General Rules of Practice is undoubtedly applicable, to wit; that no service shall be made by any person who is less than eighteen years of age.

§ 74. Time of service.—The next requirement is time within which service of citation must be made. See concise discussion by Coffin, Surr., in Matter of Porter, 1 Misc. 489. The object of the citation is to apprise the person cited of the claim which the petitioner makes in time sufficient to enable him to prepare to meet it. What is sufficient or reasonable time is now fixed by law. And the time so limited varies with the mode and place of service.

1. If personal service is made in the Surrogate's county, or an adjoining county, it must be made at least eight days before the return day named in the citation. Code Civ. Proc. § 2530.

2. If personal service is made in any other county, it must be made at least fifteen days before such return day. Ibid. Matter of Washburn, 12 Misc. 242, overruling Matter of Porter, 1 Misc. 489.

3. If service is made by delivering a copy of the citation without the State, pursuant to the order in such case required, it must be made at least thirty days before such return day provided it is made within the United States, and at least forty days before if made without the United States. Matter of Merritt, 5 Dem. 544; Code Civ. Proc. § 2525.

4. If service is made by publication the notice required is fixed by the order directing publication. For that order requires publication not less than once in each of six successive weeks and must contain a direction that on or before the day of the first publication the petitioner deposit in a specified post office a copy of the citation and of the order addressed to the party cited. This cannot be dispensed with unless the Surrogate is satisfied by affidavit that the petitioner cannot with reasonable diligence ascertain a place to which to address such a copy. Code Civ. Proc. § 2524. We can therefore say that in the case of service by publication the time required is six weeks. See Estate of Koch, 12 N. Y. Supp. 94. See Matter of Denton, 86 App. Div. 358. In 40 Misc. 326, the court below pointed out that § 441 did not apply; for a summons requires defendant to appear in so many days, whereas the return day is a fixed date.

§ 75. Proof of service.—If personal service has been made, proof of such service is made by the affidavit of the person who delivered the citation; and such affidavit should state concisely the important facts, that deponent is over eighteen years of age, that on a given day (not "on or about" a day named, which will be fatally defective, Smythe v. Rowe, 4 Law Bull. 60) he served the within, or annexed, citation on the person to whom it was directed, whom he knew to be such person; then stating mode of service, as, for example, where a copy of the petition is required to be served with it "by delivering to and leaving with him a copy thereof together with a copy of the petition" on which the same was issued. Where the party served is an infant or incompetent, the additional service required must be alleged. Proof of the publication of the citation must be made by the affidavit of the printer or publisher, or his foreman, or principal clerk. Proof of deposit in the post office, of a paper required to be deposited must be made by the affidavit of the person who deposited it. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2524, 444. See also § 2532, Code Civil Proc.

§ 76. Appearance.

> In a surrogate's court, a party of full age may, unless he has been judicially declared to be incompetent to manage his affairs, prosecute or defend a special proceeding, in person or by attorney regularly admitted to practice in the courts of record, at his election, except in a proceeding to punish him for contempt, or where he is required to appear in person, by special provision of law, or by a special order of the surrogate. . . . The appearance of a party, against whom a citation has been issued, has the same effect, as the appearance of a defendant, in an action brought in the Supreme Court. § 2528, Code Civil Proc., in part.

We omit here portion as to waiver of issuance and service of citation.

See also Laws of 1847, chap. 470, § 46, and repeal of same by Laws of 1880, chap. 245, § 1, subd. 24; also Laws of 1870, chap. 359, § 2, applying only to New York County now made general by above section. But there is this difference, that, inasmuch as the jurisdiction of a Surrogate or of his court is statutory a voluntary appearance in a special proceeding is wholly without effect if the jurisdiction has been lost, by lapse of time, or by other cause.

Thus "where a Surrogate has lost jurisdiction of a cause by failure to serve a citation within the time prescribed by statute, the error is not cured by a voluntary general appearance, which, by Code Civ. Proc. § 424, is made equivalent to personal service of process, the objection being not that there has been no service, but that service has not been made within the requisite time." From official syllabus, Pryer v. Clapp, 1 Dem. 387.

But where there is merely an alleged defect in the petition affecting jurisdiction over the person, his voluntary general appearance has been held to be a waiver of such defect. Peters v. Carr, 2 Dem. 22, citing Hoag v. Lamont, 16 Abb. N. S. 91, 96; Sawmill Co. v. Dock, 3 Dem. 55; Matter of Hitchler, 21 Misc. 417.

§ 77. Non-resident—Appearance for.—An attorney appearing for a non-resident will, in New York County, be required to file written proof of retainer, or authority to appear, or his appearance will be ignored, and service of citation required. Matter of Dusenbury, 33 Misc. 166; Estate of Weiss, Surr. Decs. 1896, p. 597.

§ 78. Foreigners; Consuls.—Under certain treaty provisions, which can be readily procured from the State Department at Washington for a small fee, the accredited local consul of a foreign nation has a status to represent non-resident subjects of his government. For example, he may petition in probate, or for letters in intestacy, or he may appear and execute waivers and consents.

See Matter of Peterson, 51 Misc. 367; Matter of Davenport, 43 Misc. 573; Matter of Lobrasciano, 38 Misc. 415; Matter of Fattosini, 33 Misc. 18; Matter of Tartaglio, 12 Misc. 245. But if the non-resident foreigner be an infant, the issuance and due service of citation cannot be dispensed with. Matter of Peterson, supra.

The consul, petitioning, should allege the treaty, or a treaty to the benefit of which his governmental ward is entitled under a "most favored nation" clause. If the allegation is put in issue, the exemplified record from Washington is adequate proof.

§ 79. Special appearance.—A party to a special proceeding in a Surrogate's Court may of course appear specially, as, for instance, solely for the purpose of objecting to the jurisdiction on appropriate grounds. But it must be remembered that such an appearance must not be encumbered with any plea to the merits, as no protest of limited appearance can in such case avail to prevent the appearance from being deemed a general one. See Reed v. Chilson, 142 N. Y. 152. Thus where the person served claimed in his answer upon the return of a citation that the order for its service was irregular and jurisdiction had therefore not been acquired, he was held to have waived it because he went further, and raised objections on the merits to petitioner's claim. Matter of Macauley, 27 Hun, 577, 578, and 94 N. Y. 574, citing Barrard v. Burrowes, 2 Robertson, 213. And where a party cited to appear on the probate of a will, appeared by counsel, and his written appearance was filed with the court, and he made no objections on the probate, held that the court had full jurisdiction over him, although the fact that the will was one executed in duplicate, was not stated in the petition. Crossman v. Crossman, 2 Dem. 69, 80, citing Allen v. Malcolm, 12 Abb. N. S. 335, and Morrell v. Dennison, 8 Abb. Pr. 401.

A general appearance will cure void service; thus, where persons cited were non-residents, and the citation was served not by publication nor personally without the State, but was served within the State, and therefore the service was void, it was held that a personal appearance without objection by the non-resident would have obviated this defect. Matter of Porter, 1 Misc. 489, 490. This is overruled in 12 Misc. 242, as to such service being void.

§ 80. Waiver.—Where there is no contest, and all the parties are willing and competent so to do, they may execute formal waivers of the issuance and service of a citation under § 2528 of the code and consent to the granting of the relief prayed in the petition. If this be done, the fact should be alleged in the petition. See Matter of Gregory, 13 Misc. 363, holding that waiver of service cannot be accepted in lieu of the issuance and service of citation. Infants cannot waive service of the citation although a guardian can by a notice of appearance give the court jurisdiction. Thistle v. Thistle, 5 Civ. Proc. R. 43. By this is meant a general guardian not ineligible by reason of having any interest adverse to the infant's. For no special guardian ad litem is appointed until the citation has actually been served on the infant (see Ingersoll v. Mangam, 84 N. Y. 622; Davis v. Crandall, 101 id. 311–321; Crouter v. Crouter, 133 id. 56; Potter v. Ogden, 136 N. Y. 384, 392), nor before the return day unless the infant petitions for an appointment. Matter of Leinkauf, 4 Dem. 1, 2. The guardian, whether general or special, can thus never waive service of a citation. It is bad practice to secure waivers before the proceeding is begun. In Matter of Graham, 39 Misc. 226, Silkman, Surr., held that waivers antedating the petition were invalid, and that the Surrogate's jurisdiction depended upon strict compliance with the statute. Such a waiver is nugatory.

See § 281, post, as to waiver in probate.

§ 81. Formalities of publication.—The provisions regarding the cases in which service of the citation by publication may or must be made have been already given. The modus operandi remains to be discussed.

If the circumstances exist covered by sections 2522 and 2523 the order directing service by publication is applied for upon affidavits, or such other proof as may satisfy the Surrogate, stating facts showing the case to be one under one of such sections.

> The order must direct (see section 2524) that service of the citation upon the person named or described in the order, be made by publication of the citation in two newspapers, designated as prescribed in this article (which includes §§ 2115–2538) . . . . [see exception of estates less than $2,000] for a specified time, which the surrogate deems reasonable, not less than once in each of six successive weeks; or, at the option of the petitioner, by delivering a copy of the citation, without the state, to each person so named or described, in person, and if the person to be served is an infant under the age of fourteen years, also with the person with whom he is sojourning, or, if the service is made upon a corporation, to an officer thereof specified in sections 431 or 432 of this act. It must also contain either a direction that on or before the day of the first publication the petitioner deposit, in a specified post-office, a copy of the citation and of the order, contained in a securely closed postpaid wrapper directed to the person to be served, at a place specified in the order, and if the person to be served is an infant under the age of fourteen years, a further copy, likewise contained in a securely closed postpaid wrapper, directed to the person with whom such infant is sojourning; or a statement that the surrogate being satisfied, by the affidavit upon which the order was granted, that the petitioner cannot with reasonable diligence, ascertain a place or places where the person to be served would probably receive matter transmitted through the post-office, dispenses with the deposit of any papers therein. § 2524, Code Civil Proc., in part.

The whole publication may be vitiated if the order is not correctly framed. Every requirement of the statute must be observed (Sawmill Co. v. Dock, 3 Dem. 55, 56), unless there be a voluntary appearance by adults. As the provisions of the section are very similar to those of section 440 relating to the order for publication of summons decisions under that section are applicable. Thus see Smith v. Wells, 69 N. Y. 600, where copy summons and complaint was deposited in post office but addressed differently than required in the order. And Brisbane v. Peabody, 3 How. 109, where publication was made in a paper other than one designated in the order, and see generally notes to section 440 in Stover's Code, 6th ed. The directions of the order must be strictly followed.

§ 82. Papers in which publication should be made.—The act "to designate a state paper" (Laws, 1854, chap. 197) is now repealed (see Laws, 1884, chap. 133, and Laws, 1885, chap. 262) and the practitioner is only concerned with the papers designated in the order. Where the Code directs publication of a citation, or the service thereof by publication, the publication must be published in a newspaper published in the county. Code Civ. Proc. § 2535.

When the Surrogate thinks that the person or persons intended to be served or notified can be given surer notice, he may, in his discretion, direct additional publication in any other newspaper, either in the same or in another county. Ibid.

Within ten days after the publication is complete, proof by affidavit of the publishers, printers, or foreman, or one of them, of the publication in the newspaper in which the publication was made shall be made and tendered to the attorney or other person ordering or directing such publication. But delivery is not compulsory in case of private persons until payment of the bill for the publication. Laws, 1884, chap. 133, § 7.

§ 83. Time of publication.—The Code provides as a minimum time during which the publication must continue "not less than once in each of six successive weeks." Code Civ. Proc. § 2524. And in section 440 the words used are "not less than once a week for six successive weeks."

There is no longer any uncertainty as to just what this means. The publication is not complete until the expiration of forty-two days from the first publication excluding the first day. Richardson v. Bates, 23 How. Prac. 516; Board v. Heyman, 3 Abb. Prac. (N. S.) 396; Matter of Koch, 19 Civ. Proc. Rep. 165. That is, there is required a full six weeks' consecutive publication, and not merely six publications in six different weeks. Market Nat. Bank v. Pacific Nat. Bank, 11 Abb. N. C. 104; 89 N. Y. 397, 400, where the court says, "Section 400 provides for publication for a specified time, 'not less than once a week for six successive weeks.' The number of weeks is specified and not the number of times; section 441 declares that the time shall be complete upon the day of the last publication, and section 787 that the period of publication must be completed so as to include the day which completes the full period of publication. It will be perceived that the publication must be made for a specified period of time, and when the statute provides for six weeks it is obvious that this period will not elapse prior to its expiration. It does not provide for a publication six times within six weeks, but 'for a time not less than once a week for six successive weeks.' The publication evidently means rather more than printing the notice. The law intended a full six weeks' publication, and not six times in six different weeks." But the sixth publication need not be eight days before the return day. Matter of Denton, 86 App. Div. 359.

An illustration will make this very clear. An attorney under an order for publication publishes a citation Saturday, January 5; Friday, January 11; Thursday, January 17; Wednesday, January 23; Tuesday, January 29, and Monday, February 4, 1895. Here are six publications—once a week and in six successive weeks—and yet under this decision, and all the decisions, insufficient, for instead of giving six weeks' or 42 days' notice to the person published against and intended to be thereby notified, it gives him four weeks' and two days' or 30 days' in all, notice, which is a serious discrepancy. See Waters v. Waters, 7 Misc. 519.

However, it is not necessary to show publication on the same day of each week; it is sufficient if made on any day of each week for the requisite number of weeks, provided six weeks' notice be given. See Wood v. Knapp, 100 N. Y. 109, 114, and cases cited, noting distinction in circumstances.

If, while the publication is progressing, personal service without the State be made, it would be unnecessary to complete the publication, although the service would not be complete until the time prescribed for the publication has expired; that is to say, personal service without the State, under an order for service by publication, is only equivalent to publication. Fiske v. Anderson, 33 Barb. 71.

Where publication must be in two papers, it has been held, under section 440, that publication must be continuous in each, not necessarily concurrent. Herbert v. Smith, 6 Lans. 493.

In case the death of a petitioner abates the proceeding the publication terminates, if incomplete on the day of such death. Reilly v. Hart, 55 Hun, 465, affirmed 130 N. Y. 625.

PARTIES

§ 84. Infants.—Parties in Surrogates' Courts are differentiated either as adults or as infants. Infants are divided under two classes: infants under 14, and those of or over 14 years of age. All infants must appear by guardian; this is manifest from the wording of sections 2527 and 2530 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Section 2527 in part provides, that where a person cited or to be cited in a proceeding in the Surrogate's Court is an infant, the Surrogate may incidentally in his order for additional precaution in the service of the citation provided for by the section, or by a separate order at any stage of the proceedings, appoint a special guardian ad litem to conduct the proceedings. See also Matter of Watson, 2 Dem. 642. Section 2530 is as follows:

> Where a party, who is an infant, does not appear by his general guardian; or where a party, who is a lunatic, idiot, or habitual drunkard, does not appear by his committee, the surrogate must appoint a competent and responsible person, to appear as special guardian for that party. Where an infant appears by his general guardian, or where a lunatic, idiot, or habitual drunkard, appears by his committee, the surrogate must inquire into the facts, and must, in like manner, appoint a special guardian, if there is any ground to suppose that the interest of the committee or general guardian is adverse to that of the infant, or incompetent person; or that, for any other reason the interests of the latter require the appointment of a special guardian. A person cannot be appointed such a special guardian, unless his written consent is filed, at or before the time of entering the order appointing him. § 2530, Code Civil Proc.

The general guardian is entitled to represent his wards unless their interests require that they should be represented by a special guardian, or unless there is ground to suppose that the interest of the general guardian is adverse to that of the infant. Farmers' L. & T. Co. v. M'Kenna, 3 Dem. 219. And in New York County Rule 12 provides as follows:

"Whenever an infant interested in any proceedings in said Surrogate's Court has a general guardian, no decree will be entered without appointing a special guardian to represent said infant's interest therein, unless such general guardian shall file his appearance in writing and his affidavit of no adverse interest, as required by Rule 10, with the clerk of said Surrogate's Court." Farmers' L. & T. Co. v. M'Kenna, supra.

Where there is a general guardian, therefore, he is primarily entitled to appear and no appointment of a guardian ad litem is in such a case proper unless it be affirmatively shown upon the inquiry by the Surrogate into the facts, either, that there is ground to suppose that his interest is adverse to that of the infant, or that for any other reason the interests of the latter require the appointment of a special guardian. If it is intended, therefore, where there is a general guardian, to apply for the appointment of a guardian ad litem, notice of such application must be first given to the general guardian. Farmers' L. & T. Co. v. M'Kenna, supra. A foreign guardian may petition for appointment of special guardian of his infant. Rogers v. McLean, 34 N. Y. 536; Freund v. Washburn, 17 Hun, 543.

If there is no general guardian, or if his right to represent the infant is lost by reason of the causes specified in section 2530, then the Surrogate must appoint a special guardian.

In transfer tax proceedings where the infant's interest is not presently involved, the appointment of a special guardian is unnecessary. Matter of Post, 5 App. Div. 113.

§ 85. Upon whose application special guardian may be appointed.— Where the infant is over the age of 14 years, it is proper that the petition for the appointment of a special guardian be made by the infant. Where the infant is under the age of 14 years, it is customary that the application be made on his behalf by his parent or next friend.

Rule 10 of the Surrogate's Court in the county of New York provides: "No special guardian to represent the interests of an infant in any proceeding in said Surrogate's Court will be appointed on the nomination of a proponent or the accounting party, or his attorney. See Matter of Henry, 2 Howd. N. S. 250. The right of the infant to apply for the appointment is undoubted. It is directly inferable from section 2531, which is as follows:

> Where a person, other than the infant, or the committee of the incompetent person, applies for the appointment of a special guardian, as prescribed in the last section, at least eight days' notice of the application must be personally served upon the infant, or incompetent person, if he is within the state, and also upon the committee, if any, in like manner as a citation is required by law to be served. But, except in a case specified in title fifth of this chapter, the surrogate may, by an order to show cause, prescribe a shorter time, and direct the service of the order to be made in such a manner as he deems proper. The application may be made at the time of presenting the petition, and, in that case, the order to show cause may, in the surrogate's discretion, accompany the citation. § 2531, Code Civil Proc.

See also Matter of Ludlow, 5 Redf. 391, 392.

In the third place the Surrogate has the right to appoint upon his own motion. It is not necessary, where there are infant parties, that any application should be made for the appointment of a special guardian, either prior to or on the return day. If on the return of the citation no application for the appointment of such a guardian has been made by any one voluntarily, whether by the infant or by his next friend, or any other person, the Surrogate may of his own motion appoint a person to protect the interests of the infant; in such a case it is immaterial whether the infant is under or over the age of 14, as the consent of the infant is not necessary to the appointment. Brick's Estate, 15 Abb. Pr. 12. See also Matter of Seabra, 38 Hun, 218. Unless the infant is represented by general or special guardian, he is not properly a party to the proceeding. The failure to appoint the guardian ad litem is an irregularity, if the objection is properly made (Frost v. Frost, 15 Misc. 167), but it does not affect the jurisdiction of the court over the proceeding generally, and therefore upon the discovery of the irregularity the court may appoint a guardian nunc pro tunc. See Rima v. Rossie Iron Works, 120 N. Y. 433. Matter of Jones, 54 Misc. 202. But this will not avail to prejudice the infant's rights. Matter of Bowne, 6 Dem. 51. If the Surrogate finds after hearing the matter that one of the parties is an infant he will usually stop the proceeding, appoint the guardian, give him opportunity to go over the testimony and recall, for his cross-examination, if necessary, any witness.

It is manifest from the wording of section 2531 above quoted that the notice thereby required to be given, does not apply to cases where the Surrogate himself appoints a special guardian of his own motion. Matter of Monell, 19 N. Y. Supp. 361. The object of the service of the notice thereby prescribed is to enable the infant to have some one appear upon the application and prevent the appointment of a person in any respect unsuitable or having interests in any way adverse to those of the infant. See Pinckney v. Smith, 26 Hun, 524.

Where the county judge acts as Surrogate, he has the power to appoint a guardian ad litem in proceedings pending in the Surrogate's Court, and an error by which the order appointing the guardian is entitled in the County Court does not invalidate the appointment, as it will be presumed that he acted in the capacity in which he had a right to make the appointment. See Albrecht v. Canfield, 92 Hun, 240.

§ 86. When application should be made.—It is manifest in the first place, that no appointment of a special guardian in the Surrogate's Court, can be made for an infant not a party to the proceeding. Surrogate Coffin held (Matter of Watson, 2 Dem. 642) that it was wholly incompetent for him to appoint a special guardian of an infant purposing to initiate a proceeding for the probate of a will.

There is no statutory provision requiring an infant to institute a special proceeding in a Surrogate's Court by special guardian. The infant may present his petition upon which the Surrogate issues his citation; when this has been done the petitioner is a party to a proceeding, and, on the return day of the citation, if it appears that the party is an infant, the Surrogate must appoint a special guardian for him. The first rule, therefore, to observe is, that the infant must be a party to the proceeding before the appointment can be made. Therefore if the infant is not the petitioner in the proceeding, an application for the appointment of a special guardian is premature and the appointment wholly irregular if made prior to the service upon the infant of the citation in the proceedings which makes him a party; and if the service is irregular it is not regularized by mere proof that a special guardian was actually appointed. See Hogle v. Hogle, 49 Hun, 313; Davis v. Crandall, 101 N. Y. 311.

And similarly, if service of citation has been had upon the infant unlawfully or irregularly it will vitiate the appointment of the special guardian. See Potter v. Ogden, 136 N. Y. 384, where the second headnote concisely states the rule as follows:

"The appointment of a special guardian for an infant in proceedings in a Surrogate's Court is void, unless previous to such appointment jurisdiction over the infant has been acquired by the service of a citation in the manner prescribed by law."

Where the Surrogate makes the appointment of his own motion, it is manifest that he cannot appoint until the return day of the citation.

The provisions of sections 468 to 477 of the Code, regulating the mode in which infants may bring and defend actions, do not apply to special proceedings in Surrogates' Courts. One reason why the Surrogate cannot appoint before the return day is, that there may be a general guardian who is not bound to appear for the infant until the return day; and where at the time the petition is made and the citations issued there is no general guardian of the infant yet non constat but that a general guardian may be appointed before the return day, even by the Surrogate of another county, and Surrogate Coffin accordingly held, that an application by an infant party for an appointment of a special guardian, made before the return day, was premature for this reason. Matter of Leinkauf, 4 Dem. 1. This decision, however, should not be extended so far as to prevent the making of the application by the infant or by some person other than the infant before the return day. In the latter case under section 2531, it is distinctly provided, that the application may be made at the time of presenting the petition. And where the infant is over fourteen years of age, and desires to nominate his guardian; or where the parent or next friend desires to nominate a guardian for an infant under 14 years of age it is proper to file the petition looking to such appointment after the infant shall have been duly served with the citation. The proposed order should be submitted with the petition, and will usually be signed by the Surrogate upon the return day. Similarly where it proves necessary to serve the infant with the citation by publication an appointment of a special guardian prior to the expiration of the time during which publication must be made, is premature and irregular. Darrow v. Calkins, 154 N. Y. 503. The person who is entitled to appear as general guardian of the infant, must be one actually and legally such general guardian. The parent of the child as guardian in socage, by nature, or otherwise has no right to appear in the capacity of general guardian; and where through oversight a parent has so appeared for infant parties, in a probate proceeding, even in good faith, the rights of the infant are in no respect concluded, nor can the Surrogate subsequently to the making of the decree attempt to regularize the proceedings by appointing the parent special guardian nunc pro tunc. Matter of Bowne, 6 Dem. 51. The power to appoint nunc pro tunc must be exercised during the life of the proceeding (see Saltus's Estate, 1 Tucker, 230), and has been exercised almost uniformly only in cases where the infant was actually served and a party to the proceeding, and never it is believed has it been exercised for the purpose of attempting to make the infant a party of record to proceedings in which jurisdiction of the person of such infant was not in fact had by the Surrogate.

§ 87. Formalities of appointment.—Where the infant or some one upon his behalf applies for the appointment of a guardian ad litem, the application is made by petition duly verified substantially as follows:

§ 88. Special rules in New York County.—In the county of New York the Rules of the Surrogate's Court carefully define the precautions in favor of infants and are as follows:

RULE X

"No special guardian to represent the interests of an infant in any proceeding in said Surrogate's Court, will be appointed on the nomination of a proponent or the accounting party, or his attorney, or upon the application of a person having an interest adverse to that of the infant. To authorize the appointment of a person as a special guardian on the application of an infant or otherwise in a proceeding in this court, or to entitle a general guardian of such infant to appear for him in such proceeding, it must appear that such person, or such general guardian, is competent to protect the rights of the infant, and that he has no interest adverse to that of the infant, and is not connected in business with the attorney or counsel of or any party to the proceeding.

"Where the application for the appointment of a special guardian is made by another than the infant, or where the general guardian appears in behalf of the infant, it must appear that such applicant or general guardian has no interest adverse to that of the infant.

Note. Where mother of an infant under 14 is disqualified by adversity of interest from applying, the Surrogate may impute the same adversity of interest to a sister of the infant. Estate of Conrad Stein, Law Journal, June 17, 1902, citing Estate of S. Shethar, Surr. Decs. 1898, p. 387; Estate of F. Schaeffer, Law Journal, March 10, 1900; Estate of I. Meyer, Surr. Decs. 1901, p. 18.

"No party to a proceeding will be appointed special guardian of any other party thereto. If such applicant or general guardian is entitled to share in the distribution of the estate or fund in which the infant is interested, the nature of the interest of such applicant or general guardian must be disclosed. The application for the appointment of a special guardian as well as the appearance filed by a general guardian of a minor must, in every instance, disclose the name and residence and relationship to the infant of the person with whom the infant is residing, whether or not he has a parent living, and, if a parent is living, whether or not such parent has knowledge of and approves such application and appearance; and such knowledge and approval must be shown by the affidavit of such parent. If the infant has no parent living, like knowledge and approval of such application or appearance by the person with whom the infant resides must be shown in like manner. Where such application is made by an infant over the age of 14 years, his petition must show and be accompanied by the affidavit of the parent (in case the latter has an interest adverse to that of the infant), showing, in addition to such knowledge aforesaid, that such parent has not influenced the infant in the choice of the guardian."

Rule XI

"In any proceeding for a judicial settlement of the account, wherein a special guardian shall be appointed or a general guardian shall appear to protect the interests of an infant party to such accounting no decree will be entered as upon default against such infant, but such decree shall be so entered only on the written report of the guardian appearing for such infant that he has carefully examined the account and finds it correct, and upon two days' notice to the guardian of the settlement thereof."

RULE XII

"Whenever an infant interested in any proceeding in said Surrogate's Court has a general guardian, no decree will be entered without appointing a special guardian to represent said infant's interest therein, unless such general guardian shall file his appearance in writing and his affidavit of no adverse interest, as required by Rule X, with the Clerk of said Surrogate's Court."

§ 89. Qualification by nominee.—The competency of the person sought to be appointed as special guardian is shown by means of the consent and affidavit required of the person nominated to be filed with the application or at or before the time of entering the order appointing him. See section 2530. The following forms are suggested:

I counsellor at law, hereby consent to be appointed by the Surrogate of the County of the special guardian of an infant, for the sole purpose of appearing for and taking care of his interests in the above entitled proceedings, and I hereby state that I have no interest in said proceedings adverse to that of said infant and am not connected in business with the attorney or counsel of or any party hereto.

(Acknowledgment.)

This consent of the special guardian ought to be acknowledged, but a failure to properly acknowledge it has been held not to be a jurisdictional defect but an irregularity. Sheel v. Cohen, 55 Hun, 207, 210, citing Tobin v. Carey, 34 Hun, 432. In the case cited the General Term held, that an order made on consent of all the parties who had appeared permitting the proper acknowledgment to be filed nunc pro tunc validated the appointment, having been timely made. This was in an action involving rights in real property and would probably be held applicable in a Surrogate's Court, but not to the extent of cutting off rights of an infant party.

Surrogate.

Order appointing special guardian.

Title. }

It appearing to my satisfaction by the verified petition herein of an infant over the age of 14 years (or of the father or mother or next friend of an infant under the age of 14 years), verified the day of 19 that said one of the heirs at law (or next of kin) of the above named decedent is an infant having no general guardian (or is an infant having a general guardian, whose interests are adverse to those of his said ward by reason of here state facts constituting adverse interest or any other reasons making it inexpedient that the general guardian should appear for and represent the infant) (and has been duly served with the citation herein and is a party to the above entitled proceedings).

Now on reading and filing the affidavit and consent of Esq., counsellor at law in to become special guardian for the said infant for the sole purpose of taking care of his interests in the above entitled proceedings,

It is hereby Ordered that the said be and hereby is appointed the guardian of the said infant, to appear and protect his interests in this matter.

Surrogate.

§ 91. Qualification of a special guardian.—It has been held that special guardians are the most important officers in a Surrogate's Court, their responsibility being greater even than that of a referee. Estate of Wadsworth, 24 N. Y. St. Rep. 416. The person appointed should be a lawyer (see Spicer's Will, 1 Tucker, 80), as he must be competent to protect the rights of the infant; he must have no rights adverse to those of the infant and he should not be connected in business with the attorney or counsel of any party to the proceeding. See Ex parte Tillotson, 2 Edwards' Ch. 113; Ex parte Lansing, 3 Paige, 264.

Rule X in New York County provides that no party to a proceeding will be appointed special guardian of any other party thereof.

The Code in section 2530 merely requires that he be a "competent and responsible person." The statute thus fails to prescribe definite qualifications, but it has been held: "It is good practice to require the same qualifications as are required of a guardian ad litem for an infant defendant in the Supreme Court." Story v. Dayton, 22 Hun, 450. See also Matter of Henry, 2 Howd. Pr. N. S. 250.

The word "responsible" means that he should be of sufficient ability pecuniarily to answer to the infant for any damage which may be sustained by his negligence or misconduct. See Spellman v. Terry, 74 N. Y. 448.

It was formerly held that the appointment of a special guardian in the Surrogate's Court terminated with the proceeding in that court, and that if an appeal was necessary and the infant's interest required further protection it was the province of the Appellate Court to appoint a guardian ad litem for that purpose. Schell v. Hewitt, 1 Dem. 249, 250, Rollins, Surr., citing Kellinger v. Roe, 7 Paige, 364; Underhill v. Dennis, 9 Paige, 209; Chaffee v. Baptist Miss. Conv., 10 Paige, 85; Moody v. Gleason, 7 Cowen, 482; Fish v. Ferris, 3 E. D. Smith, 567. The better rule, however, seems to have been established by the Appellate Division, 2d Department, in a recent case (Matter of Stewart, 23 App. Div. 17), where the court denied an application for the appointment of a special guardian ad litem to take, perfect, and prosecute an appeal from a final decree of the Surrogate of Westchester County.

The court by Goodrich, P. J., denied the application, on the ground that the special guardian appointed by the Surrogate is not functus officio by the rendition of the decree.

The Code of Civil Procedure, section 2573, provides that where an appeal shall be taken from such a decree, "Each party to the special proceeding in the Surrogate's Court, and each person not a party who is or claims to have, in the subject-matter of the decree or order, a right or interest which is directly affected thereby . . . . must be made a party to the appeal." And the court held that as the time to appeal could be set running only by service of due notice of the entry of the decree upon the special guardian, it was manifest that the mere entry of the decree did not make him functus officio and that he would therefore be a party respondent to an appeal taken by another party, and that he had the undoubted right to take and prosecute an appeal as guardian and that his duties and office continued until the final determination of any appeal from the Surrogate's decree.

§ 92. The position of the special guardian.—The special guardian as a party to the proceeding is answerable to the court as well as to the infant; he is an officer of the court and he must report to the court his performance of the duties imposed upon him by virtue of his appointment. This report should give a full account of the matters in his charge, and where he is appointed upon an accounting or any proceeding involving the examination of papers or the performance of specific acts, his report should contain a specific statement in regard to such examination and his conclusions as to the rights of his infant ad litem. Estate of Wadsworth, 24 N. Y. St. Rep. 416. He is more than an attorney. He is a sort of trustee ad litem. Hence he must err on the side of caution, e. g., on an accounting, while he should not lightly increase the cost of the proceeding by meticulous objection, yet if he is in doubt he should put questionable items in issue, if they affect the infant's share, regardless of the desire of adult parties to accelerate a decree. The Referee or Surrogate can always overrule his objections, but his affidavit of qualification is a sort of bond or undertaking of responsibility. See Matter of Parr, 45 Misc. 564; Edsall v. Vandemark, 39 Barb. 589. So, again, in probate, he may safely contest a will even though it has a clause recalling bequests to a beneficiary contesting the same. Such a provision will not be enforced against an infant. It would be against public policy. Bryant v. Thompson, 59 Hun, 545.

The Surrogate's decree will only be made upon all the papers and (in the absence of mistake) it may be said as a general rule that there is no default as to infants in a Surrogate's Court, and that no decree will usually be made affecting an infant party, except upon prima facie proof that that infant's interests have been conserved. In New York County Rule XI, already quoted, emphasizes this by providing that in proceedings for the judicial settlement of an account no decree will be entered as upon default against an infant party, but only on the written report of the guardian (special or general as the case may be) who appeared for the infant, "that he has carefully examined the account and finds it correct."

Under the head of stenographers' fees, ante, it is noted that special guardians may acquiesce in but should not consent to stipulations as to fees on references.

§ 93. Adult parties—Necessary and proper parties.—There are no peculiar rules covering adult parties as such, in Surrogates' Courts, but it is proper to observe that in such courts all parties whether infant or adult fall under two designations, those who must be and those who may become parties to a proceeding, i. e., necessary, and proper parties. Necessary parties in Surrogates' Courts are those whom the statute authorizes to initiate a proceeding, or requires to be cited by the one initiating the proceeding. Reference must be had to the discussion of the various proceedings, q. v.; but an illustration is not here amiss. Upon a proceeding to probate a will the statute, to which reference must always be made, provides (Code Civ. Proc. § 2614) that any person designated in the will as executor, devisee, or legatee, or "any other person interested in the estate," or a creditor of the decedent, may petition for its probate. That is, any person falling within any one of the foregoing designations may become the petitioner, or proponent. The persons who must be cited upon such petition are, if the will relates, for example, to both real and personal property "the husband, or wife, if any, and all the heirs, and all the next of kin of the testator." See Code Civ. Proc. § 2615. The first noticeable point is that "necessary" parties often, if this example be a proper criterion, are designated by a general term as members of a class, as creditors, heirs, next of kin, "persons interested," legatees and devisees. These terms must be clearly understood at the outset. Some of them the Code itself defines. Thus, "the expression 'persons interested' where it is is used in connection with an estate, or a fund, includes every person entitled, either absolutely or contingently, to share in the estate or the proceeds thereof, or in the fund, as husband, wife, legatee, next of kin, heir, devisee, assignee, grantee, or otherwise, except as a creditor." Code Civ. Proc. § 2514, subd.

11. See Matter of Brown, 60 Misc. 628. So also "next of kin" is defined as including "all those entitled under the provisions of law relating to the distribution of personal property, to share in the unbequeathed residue of the assets of a decedent after payment of debts and expenses, other than a surviving husband or wife." Id. subd. 12. But even these definitions are not sufficient of themselves without further reference. An examination of the authorities covering each class will be of great assistance.

§ 94. Heirs.—The word heirs is intended to include those persons in whom the title to real property vests upon the death of another person called the ancestor (heirs are the persons related to one by blood, who would take his real estate if he died intestate), and the word embraces no one not thus related. Tilman v. Davis, 95 N. Y. 17, 24. Nemo est hæres viventis. An heir acquires property not by his own act (so one who willfully murders his decedent forfeits his rights as heir ipso facto. Riggs v. Palmer, 115 N. Y. 506), nor by the act of the ancestor (for he would in such event take not as an heir but as an assignee, that is, by purchase), but by operation of the law, which in this State sets forth in the Statute of Descents [Decedent Estate Law, Article III], the persons or classes of persons on whom upon the death of an owner of property, the inheritance would be cast.

These persons are thus designated:

1. Lineal descendants.
2. Father.
3. Mother.
4. Collateral relatives.

This may be summarized by saying that heirs-at-law are either lineal or collateral.

§ 95. Children.—Among lineal heirs must now be reckoned: First, adopted children; and second, illegitimates, duly legitimatized.

I Adopted children. (See post, Adoption.)

"A child when adopted shall take the name of the person adopting, and the two henceforth shall sustain towards each other the legal relation of parent and child, and have all the rights and be subject to all the duties of that relation, including the right of inheritance," (See Laws, 1873, chap. 830, § 10, as amended by Laws, 1887, chap. 703, and see note in 29 Abb. N. C. p. 49, on the effect of this.)

II Illegitimate children in default of lawful issue [Laws, 1855, chap. 547, IV Rev. Stat. (8th ed.) 2468]. See DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION, post.

"§ 1. (Illegitimate children in default of lawful issue may inherit real and personal property from their mother as if legitimate; but nothing in this act shall affect any right or title in or to any real or personal property already vested in the lawful heirs of any person heretofore deceased." See Ferris v. Pub. Admin'r, 3 Bradf. 249, held, "not to affect right to administer" of next of kin). The first act in this State making legitimate the illegitimate children of parents who married after the birth of such illegitimate children, was chapter 531, Laws of 1895, which act legitimatized all illegitimate children whose parents had before that time, or might thereafter, intermarry. This act provided that vested interests or estates should not be divested or affected by that act.

It continued in force until it was repealed by the Domestic Relations Law (chap. 272, Laws of 1896), section 18 of which declared that "an illegitimate child whose parents have heretofore intermarried, or shall hereafter intermarry, shall thereby become legitimate and shall be considered legitimate for all purposes, entitled to all the rights and privileges of a legitimate child; but an estate or interest vested before the marriage of the parents of such child shall not be divested or affected by reason of such child being legitimatized." Section 18 of the Domestic Relations Law was amended by chapter 725, Laws of 1899, the amendment protecting trusts created at the time of the remarriage, as well as estates or interests then vested. Matter of Barringer, 29 Misc. 457, 459.

The act of 1895 and that of 1896 are retroactive, so far as they change the status of illegitimates born before the acts in question went into effect. But while all such previous illegitimates are from May 3, 1895, to be regarded as legitimates, with full capacity to take by descent or under the Statute of Distributions, the legislature did not intend by such legitimation to divest interests vested before the act of 1895, or during the illegitimacy of any child who may be under either of the acts restored by them to a state of legitimacy. Both the act of 1895 and that of 1896 contain clauses which, in terms, purport to save interests vested in the one case at the passage of the act, and in the other at the time of the intermarriage of the illegitimate's parents. Ibid. Where there is lawful issue, illegitimates (unless legally adopted) are not entitled to citation, Matter of Losee, 119 App. Div. 107, aff'g 46 Misc. 363.

§ 96. Surrogate to determine status.—It may be said in this connection that should any uncertainty exist as to whether a certain party in any proceeding in a Surrogate's Court is within this or any class to whom a devise or bequest is made, that court is competent to pass upon the question. The Surrogate, accordingly, may take as evidence declarations as to pedigree to determine status of one claiming to be an heir, or next of kin. Matter of Fail, 56 Misc. 217, citing Eisenlord v. Clum, 126 N. Y. 564. It certainly creates no occasion for appealing to the equity jurisdiction of the Supreme or any other court. See Crouse v. Wilson, 73 Hun, 353, 356, where residuary estate was willed to testator's "heirs and next of kin, in the same proportion that is provided by the laws of the State of New York in cases of intestacy," citing Garlock v. Vandevort, 128 N. Y. 374; Riggs v. Cragg, 89 N. Y. 480; In the Matter of Verplanck, 91 N. Y. 439. If the word "heirs" is used by a testator to indicate the beneficiaries of a bequest of personal property, it will be interpreted as equivalent to "next of kin," the court seeking not so much for exact definitions as to carry out the intention of the testator. Tilman v. Davis, 95 N. Y. 17; Matter of Sinzheimer, 5 Dem. 321, 322. See post, "Construction of Wills." In the Matter of McGarren, 112 App. Div. 503, it was held that a Surrogate of whom a woman petitioned for letters as "widow," could examine the record of an annulment action, in the Supreme Court, to determine whether the decree therein, annulling her marriage to decedent, and set up in the answer to the petition, was based on summons duly served upon her. The Appellate Division held that if a judgment depends upon a fact litigated in the action, the Surrogate could not examine it, but is bound by it so long as it stands unreversed. Hence, in either event whether he finds the decree valid, as duly entered or is bound by it as it stands, in the case cited he was bound to deny petitioner's status as widow.

But the Surrogate has no jurisdiction to inquire into or settle the rights of heirs-at-law in real estate or its proceeds, or to divide the proceeds according to the laws of descent. Matter of McKay, 37 Misc. 590, and cases discussed; Matter of Woodworth, 5 Dem. 156, 160; Shumway v. Cooper, 16 Barb. 556. If an administrator receive such proceeds he will not be allowed to include them in his account to the Surrogate's Court. Matter of McKay, supra. Nor can he be allowed commissions thereon. Ibid. Of course in proceedings to sell decedent's real estate to pay debts, the Surrogate's decree will distribute surplus to heirs. See post, under, §§ 2793, C. C. P. et seq.

§ 97. Next of kin.—The Code definition has been given in full in section 93. By its terms reference is necessary to the Statute of Distributions which governs every case. [See Decedent Estates Law, Article, III, and see post, under "Administration" and "Distribution of Estate." The proper primary significance of the words is "those related by blood who would take personal estate of one who dies intestate." Tilman v. Davis, 95 N. Y. 17, 25.] The term "next of kin" is unfortunately not used with exactness. "It has been considerably discussed whether these words used simpliciter, mean the nearest blood relations, or mean the next of kin according to the Statute of Distributions, including those claiming per stirpes or by representation." Church, Ch. J., in Murdock v. Ward, 67 N. Y. 387, 389. The latter has been held to be the correct meaning. Slosson v. Lynch, 28 How. Prac. R. 417. The English rule was different (Fettiplace v. Gorges, 1 Ves. Jr. 46) i. e., that the husband succeeds to the wife's personal estate as her next of kin. Commenting on this Chancellor Kent says: "It would seem to be more proper to say that he takes under the statute of distribution as husband, with a right in that capacity to administer for his own benefit." 2 Kent's Com. 136, and see cases cited. It ought to mean "nearest of kin," but that idea is expressed by saying "next of kin in equal degree," so that the practitioner must not be unprepared to find that by next of kin is often included more than one degree of relationship such as brothers and sisters, together with children of a deceased brother or sister, included by "representation." See amended subd. 12 of § 2732, C. C. P. See Matter of Healy, 27 Misc. 352. "Next of kin" standing alone never means heirs-at-law (N. Y. L. I. & Trust Co. v. Hoyt, 161 N. Y. 1, 9), though "heirs" has sometimes been held to be equivalent to "next of kin." Armstrong v. Galusha, 43 App. Div. 248, 256, citing Tilman v. Davis, 95 N. Y. 17.

For purposes of citation, and of making them parties to proceedings, the nearest of kin are to be ascertained.

A surviving husband or wife is not within this designation. Bouv. Dict. sub. "Next of Kin;" Redfield on Wills, 78, § 13, vol. 2; 2 Kent's Com. 136; Murdock v. Ward, 67 N. Y. 387, 389; Platt v. Mickle, 137 id. 106; Luce v. Dunham, 69 id. 36; Matter of Devoe, 66 App. Div. 1, 6, aff'd 171 N. Y. 281. It includes only

1. Children and their descendants.
2. Father.
3. Mother and brothers and sisters and the legal representatives of deceased brothers or sisters.
4. Collateral relatives.

But such husband or wife should be cited in the proceeding, for the Statute of Distributions makes them distributees in certain cases. The statute provides in subdivision 5: "In case there is no widow, no children and no representatives of a child, then the whole surplus shall be distributed to the next of kin, in equal degree to the deceased and their legal representatives." Who are the "next of kin in equal degree" to the deceased is to be decided by the rule of the ecclesiastical law, which has always controlled in such matters, as a part of the common law. Sweezy v. Willis, 1 Bradf. 495–497.

Consanguinity is the connection or relation of persons descended from the stock or common ancestor. Lineal consanguinity is reckoned in the same way in the canon and common law, the rule being: to begin at the common ancestor, and reckon downwards, and in whatever degree the two persons, or the most remote of them, is distant from the common ancestor, that is the degree in which they are related to each other. The civil law, on the other hand, computes by counting upwards from either of the persons related, to the common ancestor, and then downwards again to the other, reckoning a degree to each person, both ascending and descending. In other words, the former start from the ancestor, the latter from the intestate, in computing the degree of consanguinity. The spiritual courts adopted the rule of the civil law in reckoning propinquity of degree (Bl. Com. II, chap. 32; Co. Litt. 23; Williams on Exrs. 344 et seq.) and while the Statute of Distributions altered in several particulars the mode of distribution consequent upon the computation of the civil law, nevertheless when the statute directs distribution to the next of kin, the rule of the civil law prevails for the purpose of reckoning propinquity of consanguinity. See Sweezy v. Willis, supra; Hurtin v. Proal, 3 Bradf. 414, 419. See opinion of Surrogate. Thus, the accompanying diagrams show: I. By either common or civil law, the grandfather in I is two degrees removed from the intestate. In II, reckoning by the civil law, the intestate and aunt are three degrees apart, reckoning one degree, ascending, to the mother, two, still ascending to the grandfather, and three, descending to the aunt. By the common law, the most remote from the common ancestor is the intestate, who is therefore two degrees only removed from the aunt. The importance of this is great, as under the common law aunt or grandfather are within the same degree of nearness, while under the civil law the aunt is one degree further removed, which is very important when questions of rights to administration, or to a distributive share, are concerned.

The words "next of kin" may be extended by judicial construction. Thus when a statute gave a creditor who had neglected to present his claims right to recover the same of the "next of kin of the deceased to whom any assets shall have been paid or distributed" it was held that it was not used in its strict sense, but included every relation of the deceased to whom any assets had been paid. Merchants' Insurance Co. v. Hinman et al., 15 How. Prac. R. 182.

§ 98. Persons interested.—In addition to the definition quoted in section 93 of this phrase, there are several adjudications as to who is and who is not a person interested in the sense of the statute. Thus legatees of a deceased legatee of a testator have been held to be "persons interested" in that testator's estate. Fisher v. Banta, 66 N. Y. 468, 481. So also a residuary legatee under the will of a nephew of an intestate. Matter of Prout, 52 Hun, 109. A debtor to an estate is not a person interested in it within the meaning of the statute. Estate of Berney, 2 McCarthy, 455. One to whom a share in a trust legacy has been assigned has been held to come under subdivision 11. In re Rogers's Estate, 16 N. Y. Supp. 197. Where the Code provides that a "person interested" may "object to an appointment or may apply for an inventory, an account or increased security, an allegation of his interest duly verified, suffices, although his interest is disputed; unless he has been excluded by a judgment, decree, or other final determination, and no appeal therefrom is pending." Code Civ. Proc. § 2514, subd. 11; Bonfanti v. Deguerre, 3 Bradf. 429. The sworn statement of interest gives the person making it a prima facie standing. The Surrogate may require further proof of interest if the claim is disputed. But in the case just cited where an administrator with a will annexed, being called upon to account, claimed that the petitioner had assigned all his rights in the estate, the Surrogate held that if the interest was sworn to, and the denial of such interest raised an issue, such as the validity of the assignment, which was beyond the Surrogate's jurisdiction to try, the Surrogate would not try it, and would entertain the petition on the prima facie standing of the petitioner. See also Matter of Clute, 37 Misc. 710, 714; Matter of Randall, 152 N. Y. 508. If, in answer to one petitioning for relief, a release is alleged or produced of all petitioner's rights in the estate, it is conclusive on the Surrogate, and bars the petitioner until set aside in a court having jurisdiction. Matter of Wagner, 119 N. Y. 28; Matter of U. S. Trust Co., 175 N. Y. 304, aff'g 80 App. Div. 77 (opinion of Hatch, J.). If a question as to a person's interest in a proceeding is raised the Surrogate will determine the disputed point unless it raises an issue he is without jurisdiction to try, such as the validity of an assignment of interest. Ibid. But he may decide whether, as a matter of fact, an assignment was made. Ibid.; Matter of Geis, 27 Misc. 490. In that event (see Bonfanti v. Deguerre, supra), the application will be rejected if the lack of interest appear on the face of the petition (Woodruff v. Woodruff, 3 Dem. 505, and Matter of De Pierris, 79 Hun, 279); but not if allowed by the respondent, or party required to be cited, and the verified allegation of petitioner gives him a prima facie standing (Bonfanti v. Deguerre, supra); but the words "person interested" may be limited by the context in which they are found. Thus in § 2653*a* of the Code relating to an action to determine the "validity" of a will, under which the proofs are limited to the factum of the will, the words used are "any person interested in a will or codicil offered for probate." This has been held not to include any one who does not take under the will, not even a child. Lewis v. Cook, 150 N. Y. 163; Whitney v. Britton, 16 App. Div. 457.

§ 99. Creditors.—Creditors are often necessary parties to proceedings and their interest as such is alleged and proved substantially as is that of "persons interested" although the Code distinctly excludes creditors from the definition of "persons interested." Code Civ. Proc. § 2514, subd. 11. But see Rafferty v. Scott, 4 App. Div. 429; Wever v. Marvin, 14 Barb. 376; Burwell v. Shaw, 2 Bradf. 322; Thomson v. Thomson, 1 Bradf. 24; Cotterell v. Brock, 1 Bradf. 148; cf. Matter of Stevenson, 77 Hun, 203. See Gove v. Harris, 4 Dem. 293, where Rollins, Surr., says: "I have repeatedly held, in applications by persons claiming to be creditors, for orders directing the filing of inventories or accounts, that a mere allegation that such applicants were 'creditors' would entitle them to the relief asked, unless that allegation were denied, but that in the event of such denial, the applicant should be required to set forth facts which if undisputed would show that his claim to be a creditor was well founded. It seems to me that the practice should be the same in a proceeding like the present" (which was an application for subpœna commanding production of will, with a view to propounding same for probate). "The petitioner's claim to be a creditor is here denied. Before his right to further prosecute the proceeding is recognized he must make a more definite statement of the nature of his claim by setting forth the facts upon which it is founded," citing Creamer v. Waller, 2 Dem. 351.

Creditors may be petitioners or respondents as the case may be. The statute must control every case. Thus, the statute permits a creditor to be proponent of a will, but nowhere is there provision made for his being respondent on the probate. That being the case, a creditor cannot come in afterwards and move to revoke probate. Heilman v. Jones, 5 Redf. 398, 400. The word "creditor" has a wide significance under the Code. Section 2514, subdivision 3, provides: "The word 'debts' includes every claim and demand, upon which a judgment for a sum of money, or directing the payment of money, could be recovered in an action; and the word 'creditor' includes every person having such a claim or demand." But this means only "having such a claim or demand" against the deceased only. Matter of Underhill, 117 N. Y. 471; Matter of Redfield, 71 Hun, 344, 346; Duncan v. Guest, 5 Redf. 440.

It does not mean a creditor of a creditor, or a creditor of one of the next of kin, or of a legatee. The Surrogate has no power to inquire into the merits of such a one's claim.

Section 2743 provides:

> Where an account is judicially settled as prescribed in this article, and any part of the estate remains and is ready to be distributed to the creditors, legatees, next of kin, husband or wife of the decedent, or their assigns, the decree must direct the payment and distribution thereof to the persons so entitled according to their respective rights. In case of whole or partial intestacy, the decree must direct immediate payment . . . . to creditors. . . . If any person who is a necessary party for that purpose has not been cited, or has not appeared, a supplemental citation must be issued as prescribed in section 2727. . . . Where the validity of the debt, claim, or distributive share is admitted, or has been established upon the accounting or other proceeding in the surrogate's court, or other court of competent jurisdiction, the decree must determine to whom it is payable, the sum to be paid by reason thereof and all other questions concerning the same. . . . § 2743, Code Civil Proc. in part.

Chap. 595 of the Laws of 1895, by which the foregoing section was originally amended to read as above, also amended section 1822 of the Code by providing for the filing of a written consent, signed by the claimant against a decedent's estate and the executor or administrator, with the Surrogate, consenting that a disputed claim may be heard and determined by the Surrogate upon the judicial settlement of the account. (Post, sub. Accountings.) With the exception of claims so stipulated over the necessary implication from section 2743 is or has been held to be (Martine's Estate, 11 Abb. N. C. 50; McNulty v. Hurd, 72 N. Y. 518, 520; Glacius v. Fogel, 88 N. Y. 434; Fiester v. Sheppard, 92 N. Y. 251; Giles v. De Tallyrand, 1 Dem. 97; Lambert v. Craft, 98 N. Y. 342, 347; Matter of Will of Walker, 136 N. Y. 20, 27) that the Surrogate has no authority to determine respective rights of contending parties nor pass on disputed claims. See Greene v. Day, 1 Dem. 45 (official syllabus). "The rule still prevails, under the Code of Civil Procedure (§ 2743) which must be deemed to have been substantially deduced, by the adjudications, from the former statute (R. S. part 2, chap.

6, tit. 3, § 71) viz.: 1st. That the delegation, to Surrogates, of authority to decree, upon the final accounting of an executor or administrator, a distribution to claimants 'according to their respective rights,' gave them no power to ascertain and determine what those rights were, except in cases where they were conceded to exist. 2d. That the imposition, upon the Surrogate, of the duty 'to settle and determine all questions concerning any debt, claim, legacy, bequest or distributive share' empowered him to settle and determine such question, and such only, as were not a matter of dispute between the parties, or in simpler phrase, such questions as there was no question about. The Surrogate's Court being utterly devoid of jurisdiction to adjudicate finally upon the validity of an alleged creditor's disputed claim against a decedent's estate, an allegation by any person, that he is a creditor of the estate is conclusive for the purpose of entitling him, under Code Civ. Proc. § 2731, to become a party to a contest over the correctness of its executor's account." Both creditors, or persons interested in an estate, may, under proper circumstances and although not cited, appear (Martine's Estate, 11 Abb. N. C. 50. Thus creditors whose claims are not barred by the statute of limitations may come in and object to claims which are barred, if assets are insufficient to pay both. Matter of Kendrick, 107 N. Y. 104) and make themselves parties to a given proceeding, such as for example a proceeding for judicial settlement of an executor's account initiated by an executor under section 2728. Nor is this right lost by omitting to present creditor's claim pursuant to executor's notice. Greene v. Day, 1 Dem. 45, and see cases chronologically arranged in decision. But, it seems, they can appear only "upon the hearing." Estate of Wood, 7 N. Y. St. Rep. 721. See "Accounting" for effect of recent amendments of Code.

§ 100. Devisees and legatees.—These terms have strictly distinct meanings. A devisee is one who takes realty, and a legatee one who takes personalty under a will. See Weeks v. Cornwell, 104 N. Y. 325, 343, where Court of Appeals included, by reason of the context and in order to carry out testator's intentions, devisees under legatees. They are certainly "interested" in the estate, but are not necessarily to be cited, although they may usually intervene in proceedings in which their interests are involved.

They may propound the will for probate. And a legatee named in a will prior in date to that offered for probate may come in and oppose probate of the subsequent will. § 2617, C. C. P. McClellan's Practice in Probate Courts, p. 55, citing Matter of Will of James Malcolm, Dayton's Sur. 3d ed. 159.

§ 101. Assignees.—If a devisee or legatee assigns his interest he loses his right to be a party, and while the assignee or receiver of a legatee or devisee is not entitled to stand in his shoes and become a party to the proceedings at the same stages, yet he is amply protected by the provision that he may come in on the distribution, and the Surrogate is empowered to decree payment to him of his share, or he may even be allowed to petition for an accounting. See Code Civ. Proc. § 2743. It has been held that such an assignee should be cited to attend the proceedings on accounting and distribution. Estate of Gilligan, 1 Con. 137.

In the case cited the petitioner for the accounting was one who had been appointed receiver of the administrator called to account. Held, the receiver was the assignee of the administrator's share in his intestate's (wife's) estate, and as such entitled to petition, or to be cited, or to intervene, citing Gibbons v. Shepard, 2 Dem. 247. In Matter of Losee, 119 App. Div. 107, B assigned his distributive share and died. In a subsequent proceeding it was held (a) his representative had no standing; (b) that as the proceeding was an application for letters involving question of priority of right the assignee had no standing, since the validity of the assignment was disputed, and the Surrogate could not pass on such an issue.

Attention must be called to chapter 692, Laws 1904, which affects the index under decedent's name, in special book.

§ 102. Interest of individuals not of a class; surviving husband or wife. —Persons may be necessary or proper parties to proceedings in Surrogates' Courts, not only because they belong to one of the classes just enumerated, such as heirs, next of kin, persons interested, creditors, devisees, or legatees, but by reason of the relations they may sustain to the decedent or to one already a party to the proceeding, as a surviving husband, a widow, one named as executor, or chosen as administrator, one who becomes surety for an executor, administrator or trustee, a guardian, a posthumous or illegitimate child. A surviving husband or wife require particular mention in this connection. By subdivision 12 of section 2514, they are both distinctly excepted from the definition of "next of kin." By subdivision 11, however, they are declared to be persons interested. Under sections 2614–2615 either may petition for probate, and is entitled to citation, being named before heirs or next of kin.

A widow, when entitled to be a party, is so de sui juris, and not as heir or next of kin. Wright v. Trustees of M. E. Church, Hoff. Ch. 202; Drake v. Pell, 3 Edw. Ch. 251; Slosson v. Lynch, 43 Barb. 147; Murdock v. Ward, 67 N. Y. 387; Luce v. Dunham, 69 N. Y. 36. But where the court is satisfied that, though those terms were used the testator intended to include the surviving husband or wife, such intention will be carried into effect. Murdock v. Ward, 67 N. Y. 387; Betsinger v. Chapman, 24 Hun, 15, 18, affirmed 88 N. Y. 487, and cases discussed.

If there is nothing in the context to show that the widow was intended to be included, the words will be given their primary meaning (Id.; Keteltas v. Keteltas, 72 N. Y. 312, 316. See the numerous cases cited by appellant herein on pp. 313–314. For what is primary meaning see preceding sections, and Tilman v. Davis, 95 N. Y. 17, 24, whereunder see examination of English decisions by Earl, J., on p. 27), for neither term is likely to be used by any testator to designate persons who were not related to him by blood. Id.

In the case of statutes also the intention of the legislature is the thing to be discovered, and, once known, words of description may be extended accordingly to include subjects to which they are not directly applicable. Betsinger v. Chapman, 88 N. Y. 488, 494, where object of Revised Statutes (p. 2, ch. 6, title 5, §§ 9–10) being to give a remedy by action against executors and administrators to "any legatee or any of the next of kin entitled to share in the distribution of the estate," held, to include widow as a distributee under the statute of distributions. The rights of a surviving husband or wife and their status as parties may be materially affected by the fact of a divorce formerly granted to or from the decedent. The Code provides (§ 1759, subdivision 3, as amended by ch. 891, Laws of 1895), "If when final judgment is rendered, dissolving the marriage, the plaintiff—which under this section is the wife—is the owner of any real property; or has, in her possession, or under her control, any personal property, or thing in action, which was left with her by the defendant, or acquired by her own industry, or given to her by bequest or otherwise; or if she is or may thereafter become entitled to any property by the decease of a relative intestate, the defendant shall not have any interest therein, absolute or contingent, before or after her death. 4. Where final judgment is rendered dissolving the marriage, the plaintiff's inchoate right of dower, in any real property, of which the defendant then is or was theretofore seized, is not affected by the judgment."

And per contra section 1760 (action brought by husband), provides: "A judgment dissolving the marriage does not impair or otherwise affect, the plaintiff's rights and interests, in and to any real or personal property which the defendant owns or possesses, when the judgment is rendered.

3. "Where judgment is rendered dissolving the marriage, the defendant (i. e., the wife) is not entitled to dower in any of the plaintiff's real property, or to a distributive share in his real property." The rights of a surviving husband or wife who was divorced may also be affected by the guilt or innocence of the survivor. Thus a woman divorced from decedent for her adultery is, under the provisions of the Code just quoted, not entitled to dower nor to a distributive share. If she had obtained the divorce, however, from decedent for his guilt, her dower rights are not divested from real property owned by him at or prior to the judgment of divorce.

But the divorce, whether in her favor, or against her, disentitles her to administer upon his estate, for she is not his widow in the eyes of the law, as well as to any distributive share in his personal estate, since her rights quoad hoc were determined by the judgment which has this very matter in view allowing and fixing her alimony. Matter of Estate of Ensign, 103 N. Y. 284; Kade v. Lauber, 16 Abb. Prac. N. S. 288. Although blameless, no dower attaches in her favor to lands acquired by him after the divorce. Her coverture, as to him, ended with the judgment. Under the provisions of law it is possible that he may marry again, in which case his last wife if she survive him is his "widow." Any other doctrine would tend to produce confusion, and is shown to be fallacious in Matter of Estate of Ensign, 103 N. Y. 284, where Finch, J., grimly asks, admitting the possibility of a man's legally marrying in another State, or even in this by consent of the court: "Suppose that, with unusual activity, he should leave four (such 'widows') how would each one get one-third of the personalty?"

See, for exhaustive opinion on effect of divorce, right to remarry in another State, and validity of new marriage, and effect of rule "straining after legitimatization of offspring," opinion of Beckett, Surr., in Matter of Garner, 59 Misc. 116.

§ 103. Executors or administrators, whether one or several, are looked upon as one, so far as being parties is concerned. Code Civ. Proc. § 1817. "In an action or special proceeding against two or more executors and administrators, representing the same decedent, all are considered as one person." But this relates only to such as have received letters testamentary. One to whom letters have not been issued is not a necessary party to an action or special proceeding, in favor of or against the executors, in their representative capacity. Code Civ. Proc. § 1818; Moore v. Millett, 2 Hilt. 522. But see Hunter v. Hunter, 19 Barb. 631. And this means one to whom letters have not been issued in this State. Thus if there are two coexecutors of a non-resident testator in another State, and only one takes out letters in this State, such one is the only one necessary as a party to proceedings in this State. Lawrence v. Townsend, 88 N. Y. 24, 32. When executors are necessary parties all must join or be joined. Matter of Slingerland, 36 Hun, 575, 577; Scranton as Ex'r v. Farmers' & Mechanics' Bank, etc., 24 N. Y. 424.

§ 104. Intervening.—Upon the probate of a will, any person, although not cited, who is named as a devisee or legatee in the will, or as executor, trustee, devisee or legatee in any other paper purporting to be a will of the decedent or who is otherwise interested in sustaining or defeating the will, may appear, and, at his election support or oppose the application. A person so appearing becomes a party to the special proceeding. Code Civ. Proc. § 2617. See Lafferty v. Lafferty, 5 Redf. 326, 329, citing Booth v. Kitchen, 7 Hun, 255, 259, 260, 264; Walsh v. Ryan, 1 Bradf. 433; Marvin v. Marvin, 11 Abb. N. S. 97; Children's Aid Society v. Loveridge, 70 N. Y. 387, 391; Terhune v. Brookfield, 1 Redf. 220. This rule applies in cases other than probates. In any case the party, having the necessary interest, must petition the Surrogate for leave to come in, and in every proper case such leave will be given; otherwise he may become a mere "interloper" and his claim of rights disregarded. Matter of Garner, 59 Misc. 116; Matter of Hamilton, 76 Hun, 200. No motion, or any other steps, can be taken by such person in the proceeding until after he becomes a party. Foster v. Foster, 7 Paige, 48, 52; Lafferty v. Lafferty, 5 Redf. 326, 329. It is no answer to his application that as to him the Statute of Limitations has run if the court has jurisdiction of the rem. Matter of Ibert, 48 App. Div. 510; Matter of Bingham, 127 N. Y. 296. If any one already a party to a proceeding in a Surrogate's Court dies, his representative is entitled to come in and protect his interest in his decedent's place and stead. Van Alen v. Hewins, 5 Hun, 44. A proceeding for probate of a will, being a proceeding quasi in rem, does not abate by the death of a party, whether proponent or contestant or even of all the parties. Lafferty v. Lafferty, 5 Redf. 326. The proceeding lives, and must continue unabated, until the will be either admitted to or refused probate. Van Alen v. Hewins, 5 Hun, 44; Brick v. Brick, 66 N. Y. 144. The right of a representative of a party to intervene upon such party's decease is thus an essential right. Merritt v. Jackson, 2 Dem. 214, Rollins, Surr.: "It seems eminently proper, even if it is not essential, that one who is the acknowledged representative of a party deceased, and who asks as such to intervene, should be allowed to do so." Whatever the proceeding, the party petitioning for leave to intervene must allege the facts constituting his interest or title to be brought in; such as, that he is a "person interested in the estate" (see § 98 and cases cited) or a creditor who desires, for example, to come in upon an accounting; or that he "has in the subject-matter of the decree or order, a right or interest, which is directly affected thereby (thus counsel for contestant of a will to whom the Surrogate had made an allowance were held to be properly parties to an appeal taken by the executrix. Peck v. Peck, 23 Hun, 312. See also Wilcox v. Smith, 26 Barb. 316; Matter of Thompson, 11 Paige, 453; Jauncey v. Rutherford, 9 Paige, 273) and which appears on the face of the papers presented in the Surrogate's Court, or has become manifest in the course of the proceedings" in case he desires to become a party upon an appeal. Code Civ. Proc. § 2573.

§ 105. Mode of intervention.—The ordinary manner of intervention is by order of the Surrogate upon the applicant's petition, or upon his appearance in open court, on the return day, and filing a sworn claim of interest. The evidence on the question of interest is taken pari passu with that relating to the will, in case of probate, and is not deemed a separate proceeding. Norton v. Lawrence, 1 Redf. 473, 475. But under Rule 4 of the court in the county of New York, the Surrogate first hears and passes upon the question of the status of the contestant, if it has been drawn in question, "unless for the convenience of the parties or the court, the Surrogate shall order otherwise." A claimant, not entitled to be cited as heir-at-law or next of kin, may become a party to an accounting proceeding by presenting his claim and filing a consent. Matter of Ingraham, 35 Misc. 577.

In case a person becomes a necessary party on appeal under § 2573, supra, he may be brought in by an order of the Appellate Court, made after the appeal is taken. Or the Appellate Court may prescribe the mode of bringing him in, as by publication, by personal service, "or otherwise."

And it has been held that when the appeal is pending the Surrogate's Court has no longer power to make an order allowing a party to intervene but that he may only apply to the Appellate Court. Matter of Dunn, 1 Dem. 294, citing the following: Foster v. Foster, 7 Paige, 48; Marvin v. Marvin, 11 Abb. Pr. 97; Matter of Wood, 5 Dem. 345. But a creditor of, or person interested in the estate or fund affected by any decree or order, who was not a party to the special proceeding, but who was entitled by law to be heard therein upon his application, or who has acquired since the decree or order was made a right or interest which would have entitled him to be heard, if it had been previously acquired, may intervene and appeal. The facts which entitle such a person to appeal must be shown by an affidavit, which must be filed, and a copy thereof served with the notice of appeal. Code Civ. Proc. § 2569. See Foster v. Foster, 7 Paige, 48; Marvin v. Marvin, 11 Abb. N. S. 97; Delaplaine v. Lawrence, 10 Paige, 602.

§ 106. Practice on intervention.—The following precedents used upon a proceeding for the probate of a will, sufficiently indicate the forms to be followed where a party desires to intervene:

Petition of an heir-at-law for leave to intervene.

Surrogate's Court,
County of
Title. }

To the Surrogate's Court of the county of

The petition of respectfully shows:

I. That he is (e. g., an infant over 14 years of age, and was years of age on the day of 19), that he resides in (with his).

II. On information and belief, that on the day of one departed this life leaving his last will and testament, which on the day of was duly filed in the office of the Surrogate of the county of for probate; and that proceedings for the probate of said will are now pending before said Surrogate; and that said will is a will of real and personal property (or of real, or of personal property).

III. That your petitioner is one of the heirs-at-law of said decedent (or one of the next of kin, or state relationship in full if necessary by showing kinship through common ancestor in case of collaterals, or by specifying that the decedent was an uncle, aunt, or brother or sister, or whatever the relationship may have been.) Note.

IV. Your petitioner further says, that he is interested in the said will [state briefly the facts showing whether the petitioner is interested in sustaining or defeating the will, and if the petitioner desires to defeat the will, state briefly the facts on which the petitioner intends to rely. For example, as follows: That your petitioner is informed and verily believes that said will was procured by undue influence, or, that at the time it was made, the petitioner was without testamentary capacity to make such a will; and your petitioner is advised and verily believes that said will is not in fact the last will and testament of said testator, but that probate should be denied the same; and he is further advised that if probate is denied the same, your petitioner will be entitled to share in the real or in the personal, or in the real and personal estate of said decedent (or if petitioner claims by representation say, entitled to that share in the realty, or personalty, or in the real and personal estate of said decedent, which his mother, or father, would have been entitled to if living, as one of the heirs, or next of kin of said alleged testator)].

WHEREFORE, your petitioner prays that an order of this court may be made adjudging your petitioner to be a necessary party to the above entitled proceeding and directing a supplemental citation to issue directed to him and to be served upon him according to law.

Order allowing party to intervene. Note.

On reading and filing the petition of (if necessary say an infant over the age of 14 years or where infant is under the age of 14 years and petition is made by parent or general guardian or next friend state the fact), verified the day of 19 from which it appears that the petitioner, (if necessary an infant as aforesaid) is interested in the probate of the will of deceased, proceedings for which are now pending in this court, and that the said petitioner desires to intervene in such proceedings that his interests therein may be protected.

Now after hearing counsel for said petitioner and for the proponent respectively, and on motion of of counsel for the petitioner,

It is Ordered that the said (an infant over or under the age of 14 years) be and he hereby is adjudged to be a necessary party to the above entitled proceeding and should be cited therein; and it is Further Ordered that a supplemental citation issue forthwith directed to the said be served upon him according to law. Note.

Note. These precedents are only necessary where the proponent's attorney puts in issue the right of the petitioner to be made a party. If this right to intervene is not put in issue, the supplemental citation may issue on consent, without the formality of an application to the court.

Note. Where the petitioner who is permitted to intervene is an infant he should petition for the appointment of the special guardian directly upon the order permitting him to intervene. If no application is made by him or on his behalf, the Surrogate will appoint a special guardian upon his own motion.

§ 107. Order not necessary.—It is not necessary but it is better practice that an order be entered on the intervenor's petition, granting his request. The same result is secured by issuing a citation to him and proof of service of such citation upon him is sufficient proof of his regular standing as a party to the proceeding. For the Surrogate, of his own motion, if he discover that any one is a necessary party to a pending proceeding, will bring him in, and if such a party be a minor, will appoint a special guardian. It is quite immaterial how he ascertains that such a one is a necessary party. The affidavit of an attorney is quite sufficient. Russell v. Hartt, 87 N. Y. 18, 23. So, in a case before the Surrogate of New York, the omission of a minor as a party to the proceeding was discovered by the Surrogate himself, after twelve years of litigation, and a special guardian appointed. Saltus's Estate, 1 Tucker, 230.

§ 108. Effect of death of a party.—At common law when a sole party to a legal action died before trial, the action abated, and there was no way to revive or continue it. Matter of Palmer, 115 N. Y. 493–495; Evans v. Cleveland, 72 N. Y. 486. The right to revive and continue such actions in the names of the administrators or executors of a deceased party always depends upon statutes. Matter of Camp, 81 Hun, 387, 388. Prior to 1891, the provisions of the Code upon this subject related only to actions. They were then amended so as to apply also to special proceedings, but not in Surrogates' Courts, except as expressly made applicable. Sections 765 and 785, are such sections made applicable by § 3347, subd. 6. They provide, 1. That no judgment may be entered against a party who dies before a verdict, report, or decision is actually rendered against him. 2. Where a party entitled to appeal from a judgment or order, or to move to set aside a final judgment for error in fact, dies either before or after this chapter takes effect, and before the expiration of the time within which the appeal may be taken, or the motion is to be made, by the heir, devisee, or personal representative of the decedent, at any time within four months after his death. This indicates that certain special proceedings in Surrogates' Courts abate on the death of a party, and that others may not. And, first, if the proceeding be in rem the jurisdiction of the Surrogate, once acquired, is not divested by the death of one of the parties, or even of all the parties. Lafferty v. Lafferty, 5 Redf. 326. Thus a probate proceeding, which is of this description, or, speaking exactly, a proceeding quasi in rem, is one in which the Surrogate's function is not to determine issues or rights between parties, and if the will is contested the issues then raised are deemed incidental to the general inquiry as to its probate, but whether or not the instrument propounded as the last will and testament of the decedent is a valid will, and is in very fact his last will. This inquiry is not affected by the death of a party to the proceeding and does not abate by reason thereof. Brick v. Brick, 66 N. Y. 144. The interests of the deceased party can if they survive, be represented by his legal representatives, whose application to be made parties should be granted. Van Alen v. Hewins, 5 Hun, 44, 47, citing Brick's Estate, 15 Abb. Pr. 12; Campbell v. Thatcher, 54 Barb. 382; Campbell v. Logan, 2 Bradf. 90; Pew v. Hastings, 1 Barb. Ch. 452; Kerr v. Kerr, 41 N. Y. 272–277, and see Merrick v. Jackson, 2 Dem. 214; Lafferty v. Lafferty, 5 Redf. 326. If no application is so made by them and the Surrogate proceeds with the probate, his decree is binding on all the surviving parties to the proceeding. Brick v. Brick, 66 N. Y. 144. So, also, in a proceeding in rem, such as a probate proceeding, the relation in which the party dying stands to the proceeding does not affect this question of abatement. Thus where a proponent died it was held the proceeding did not abate, but could be revived and continued (Matter of Govers, 5 Dem. 40); and similarly in a case where a contestant died. Van Alen v. Hewins, 5 Hun, 44. Where a proponent dies, who is also a beneficiary under the will, his executor or administrator should make an ex parte application to be made a party to the original proceeding, and when made a party he should then apply, on notice, for a revival in his name as proponent. It seems that this is better practice than that heirs or next of kin of the testator, other than the original proponent, if any there be, should apply to be substituted as proponents. In re Govers, 5 Dem. 40. The theory being that the proponent's executor is under the duty of seeking to reduce to possession that which his testator is entitled to under the will he had propounded and, to that end, to proceed with its probate.

If, however, the proponent have no beneficial interest under the will, and die, his executor is not bound to come in. So if one is named an executor in a will and in that capacity offers it for probate, and dies, pending the proceeding his estate can have no possible interest in intervening. In such a case any other person who would have been originally qualified to offer the will may come in and apply for a revival of the proceeding in his own name as proponent; of course first intervening if he be not already a party.

Such an application should not be ex parte but upon notice to all other parties to the proceeding.

§ 109. Same, continued.—But if the proceeding be in personam then the death of a party may materially change the situation. Thus a proceeding to compel the judicial settlement of an executor's account cannot survive the executor's death. Boerum v. Betts, 1 Dem. 471, 474, citing Leavy v. Gardner, 63 N. Y. 624; Matter of Grove, 64 Barb. 526; Daking v. Demming, 6 Paige, 95; Montross v. Wheeler, 4 Lans. 99; Farnsworth v.

Oliphant, 19 Barb. 30. And where an administrator himself instituted proceedings to settle his own account and died pending the Surrogate's decision it was held the proceeding abated and could not be revived. Herbert v. Stevenson, 3 Dem. 236. But this is without prejudice to the right given by the amendments of 1884 and 1891 to the Code (see § 2606) under which an executor or administrator of a deceased executor, administrator, guardian, or testamentary trustee, may be compelled to account for property for which his decedent could have been compelled to account (see Accountings) which is a new remedy, pursued in an independent proceeding. See Matter of Tredwell, 85 App. Div. 570, where executor died pending his accounting, and his representative being required to account for his decedent's acts sought to revive original proceeding. (See, post, Accountings.)

It is also important that the distinction be kept in mind which the Code now draws between special proceedings in general and special proceedings in Surrogates' Courts. Thus when in § 755 it was enacted that "a special proceeding does not abate by any event if the right to the relief sought in such special proceeding survives or continues," etc., it must be remembered that in § 3347 in subd. 6 it is provided that that section applies to proceedings only in the Supreme Court, the city court of the city of New York, or a county court. Matter of Camp, 81 Hun, 387, 388. See all of title IV, ch. 8, §§ 755–766, also § 785 in connection with subd. 6 of § 3347. The fact that the §§ 755, etc., were amended in 1891 does not make them applicable to all special proceedings. They are still subject to the limitations of § 3347. But if the party seeking to compel the executor or administrator to account dies while the proceeding is pending, the person succeeding to his interest may on proof of his interest intervene and continue the proceeding (Matter of Fortune, 14 Abb. N. C. 415) whether he be his personal representative or merely his assignee.

Section 766 of the Code provides that where . . . . a special proceeding is authorized or directed by law, to be brought by or in the name of a public officer, or by a receiver or other trustee, appointed by virtue of a statute, his death or removal does not abate it, but the same may be continued by his successor, etc.

By § 3347 of the Code, subd. 6, it appears that § 766 of the Code does not apply to Surrogates' Courts. But in the case of an executor or administrator or other person directed by a decree in proceedings for the sale of a decedent's real estate to sell such real estate, it is provided by § 2760 of the Code that,

"The death, removal, or disqualification before the complete execution of a decree of all the executors, or administrators, does not suspend or affect the execution thereof; but the successor of the person who has died, been removed, or become disqualified, must proceed to complete all unfinished matters as his predecessors might have completed the same. . . ." See also Matter of Camp, 81 Hun, 387.

CHAPTER III

HEARINGS AND TRIALS

§ 110. Practice similar to that in all courts of record.—Practice in Surrogate's Courts conforms substantially to that in other courts of record. Goulburn v. Sayre, 2 Redf. 310. Of course this general statement is subject to the limitation that the whole jurisdiction of the court is statutory. The general rule as to practice in Surrogates' Courts is defined by subd. 11 of § 2481 (supra) which provides, in effect, that where jurisdiction is given in any matter to the Surrogate's Court and the practice is not prescribed it shall proceed, "According to the course and practice of a court having by common law jurisdiction of such matters." Consequently, Surrogates' Courts have been accustomed to allow the resort to the ordinary machinery of practice. So, for example, the right to shorten the time of notice of a motion by an order to show cause has been very generally exercised. See Filley's Estate, 20 N. Y. Supp. 427; Cluff v. Tower, 3 Dem. 253, where Judge Rollins held (under subd. 6 of § 2481) that a proceeding to open, vacate, etc., a decree or order of his court (the power to do which by this section is directed to be exercised only in like case and in the same manner as a court of record and of general jurisdiction would exercise the same power) might be begun either by a notice of motion or by an order to show cause, but while, generally speaking, the rule is as above stated, yet, where practice in the other courts of record in special cases or in particular respects is changed, it will not be deemed to extend to Surrogates' Courts unless clearly made applicable thereto, or unless it clearly comes under one of the subdivisions of § 2481 as aforesaid. So, in Matter of Tilden, 98 N. Y. 434, it is held that a proceeding to open or vacate a decree is a special proceeding, and itself terminates in a final order. So, where the relief sought is in personam, such special proceeding must be begun by citation, or no jurisdiction of the person could be acquired, that is against nonresidents. See Bullowa v. Provident Life, etc., 125 App. Div. 545. See Havemeyer's Estate, 35 N. Y. Supp. 480, making inapplicable to Surrogate's referees the amendment of § 1022, Code Civ. Proc., as to separate statement of facts found and conclusions of law.

This was so held in spite of § 2546 of the Code, which makes applicable to references in the Surrogate's Court all the provisions of the Code applicable to references in the Supreme Court, "so far as that can be applied in substance, without regard to the form of proceeding." This, however, was in view of § 2545 which remained unamended, and under which the Surrogate, upon the trial by him of an issue of fact, is required to file in his office his decision in writing, which must state separately the facts found and the conclusions of law. Surrogate Fitzgerald held, that it would be highly improbable to suppose that the legislature intended to create the anomalous condition of relieving referees appointed by the Surrogate's Court from making the findings which are exacted from the court itself. But, while we believe he was technically right, in a later case [Matter of Woodward, 69 App. Div. 286, 290 (2d Dept.)], the contrary decision of the Surrogate of Kings County was affirmed, holding that § 1022 was applicable (in references in special proceedings under § 2546), as its provisions could be "applied in substance."

The Appellate Court went further and held that when a referee filed a short decision, the Surrogate himself was relieved of the duty imposed by § 2545 of stating separately the facts found and the conclusions of law. But by ch. 85, Laws 1903, § 1022, was subsequently changed again to require findings by court or referee. This is, therefore, merely discussed to indicate the attitude of the courts on the assimilation of practice.

§ 111. Same.—Similarly the rules which are applicable in other courts of record in the conduct of trials will be enforced in Surrogates' Courts. The examination and cross-examination of witnesses, the compelling of the attendance of witnesses, the privilege to which witnesses are entitled, the admissibility of the evidence adduced and the competency of the witnesses examined are to be regulated by the generic rules. We have already seen that among the powers of the Surrogates is the power to issue subpœnas, or subpœnas duces tecum, and to punish for contempt in like case and in like manner as any court of record. So he may under § 2008, C. C. P., issue a writ of habeas corpus "for the purpose of bringing before the court a prisoner, detained in a jail or prison within the State, to testify as a witness in the . . . . special proceeding, in behalf of the applicant." All statutory provisions as to proceedings in Surrogates' Courts must of course be carefully observed, but amendments of the Code prescribing new methods of practice or procedure can have no ex post facto operation (see subd. 11 of § 3347, excluding all proceedings pending in Surrogates' Courts upon the first day of September, 1880, when the act went into effect), that is to say (Mills v. Hoffman, 92 N. Y. 182), if the amendments relate to a matter of substantial right they ought to be construed as inapplicable to proceedings pending before they went into effect; but as regards mere incidental details of procedure they may properly be deemed operative as to all motions or applications made in proceedings after the amendment goes into operation. This would seem to be the rule deducible from the decisions.

§ 112. Attorneys.—In regard to parties the Surrogate's power has already been discussed. Over attorneys he, undoubtedly, has powers similar to those of any court of record, such as the power to direct substitution of one attorney for another (Chatfield v. Hewlett, 2 Dem. 191); and as incidental thereto to determine the terms and conditions upon which the substitution should be made. Surrogate Coffin in 1883 (Hoes v. Halsey, 2 Dem. 577), doubted the power of the Surrogate to prescribe the terms on which a change of attorneys could be effected. The better rule, however, had been laid down by Surrogate Rollins the year before (Chatfield v. Hewlett, supra), in a well reasoned opinion basing the power claimed upon the Code of Civil Procedure generally and in particular upon § 17 which authorized the general term justices of the Supreme Court with certain chief justices of the Superior City Courts to establish rules of practice to be binding upon all courts of record. The learned Surrogate pointed out that it was doubtful whether the Surrogate could lawfully have exercised such power, prior to the Code, citing Coates v. Cheever, 1 Cow. 463, 475; Cullen v. Miller, 9 N. Y. Leg. Obs. 62, 66; Petition of Hunt, 1 Tuck. 55; Matter of Sommerville, id. 76. But among the rules of practice commonly known as the "Court Rules" was the following: Rule 10. "An attorney may be changed by consent, or upon application of the client upon cause shown, and upon such terms as shall be just, by order of the court or a judge thereof, and not otherwise." By one of the statutes amending the Code, making the Surrogates' Courts courts of record, the procedure in such courts was made subject to these rules. Laws 1887, ch. 416. Section 17 of the Code above referred to went into operation on September 1, 1877. There can be no question, therefore, that since that time Surrogates have had authority to direct substitution of attorneys in proceedings pending before them upon such terms as to compensation of the retiring attorney as seem reasonable and just. See also Matter of Fernbacher, 18 Abb. N. C. 1; Eisner v. Avery, 2 Dem. 466. In Matter of Caldwell, 188 N. Y. 116, the executors employed attorneys designated by the testator in his will. But they also employed other counsel. The court held that while the designation in the will could only be treated as the expression of a wish, yet having employed them the executors could pay them out of the estate, whereas they must personally pay the additional counsel retained.

§ 113. Lien of attorneys—How enforced.—Since a court of record has undoubtedly the power to determine the amount of an attorney's lien for services by direct inquiry or by reference, the Surrogate may do the same (Barber v. Case, 12 How. Pr. 351; Gillespie v. Mulholland, Daly, Ch. J., 12 Misc. 40, 43, dist'g McKibbel v. Nafis, 27 N. Y. Supp. 723); and if the matter is referred by the Surrogate the reference will be subject to the usual rules governing references in Surrogates' Courts. See below; also Matter of Smith, 111 App. Div. 23 (opinion of Chase, J.) The lien was sustained as a charge against the estate, and execution against the representative personally was refused. Section 66 of the Code was amended (L. 1899, ch. 61) just after decision in Matter of Lex'n Ave., No. 1, 157 N. Y. 678, aff'g 30 App. Div. 602, by including special proceedings and protecting the lien of attorneys therein upon the client's cause of action, claim or counterclaim. The section now reads:

> § 66. [Am'd, 1879, 1899.] Compensation of attorney or counsellor.—The compensation of an attorney or counsellor for his services is governed by agreement, express or implied, which is not restrained by law. From the commencement of an action or special proceeding, or the service of an answer containing a counterclaim, the attorney who appears for a party has a lien upon his client's cause of action, claim or counterclaim, which attaches to a verdict, report, decision, judgment or final order in his client's favor, and the proceeds thereof in whosoever hands they may come; and the lien cannot be affected by any settlement between the parties before or after judgment or final order. The court upon the petition of the client or attorney may determine and enforce the lien.

Note. Now in Judiciary Law, §§ 474–475.

But the lien must be upon something over which the Surrogate has jurisdiction. So in Matter of Robinson, 59 Misc. 323, Ketcham, Surr., refused to proceed under § 66 to pass on the lien of former attorneys for a trustee upon books and papers which the trustee alleged belonged to him, and to be necessary in order to preparing and settling his account. There was no proceeding pending to which a decree as to the lien could have been made an incident.

§ 114. Protection of lien by Surrogate.—Accordingly, it is now held that the power of the Surrogate's Court to protect the lien of an attorney has been assimilated to that of the Supreme Court and other courts of record. Matter of Regan, 167 N. Y. 338, 343, rev'g 58 App. Div. 1, and aff'g 29 Misc. 527. (See opinion of Surrogate.) See Matter of Robinson, 125 App. Div. 424 (no lien on estate).

The decision in Matter of Krakauer, 33 Misc. 674, is not in conflict. It was there held only that there was no proceeding pending in which this incidental power of protection could be exercised. No order for substitution of attorneys can be made, and the lien of the first attorneys protected when no proceeding is pending to which the order can relate. Ibid., citing Matter of Hoyt, 5 Dem. 432, 445; Estate of Aaron, 7 N. Y. Supp. 735.

So, in the Regan case the power of the Surrogate was upheld to vacate the satisfaction of a decree to let in attorneys who had a liquidated claim, which attached by way of lien to the decree in their client's favor under § 66.

The question was not squarely before the court whether the case would be different if, first, the claim was unliquidated, or second, the client was able to respond pecuniarily apart from the proceeds of the attorney's industry.

The Surrogate has power, pending his determination of the merits of the question of substitution or of lien to order the attorney to deposit the moneys of the estate or client in a trust company to abide his decision. Oraindi's Estate, 9 N. Y. Supp. 873; Matter of Regan, 29 Misc. 527, 531; Matter of Rowland, 55 App. Div. 66. See Matter of Fitzsimmons, 174 N. Y. 15, and cases cited at p. 20. In this case the attorney had an agreement with a party (who contested the administratrix' account) for his fees. The administratrix collusively settled with the client behind the attorney's back. The client executed withdrawal of objections and consent to a decree. The Surrogate continued the proceeding on the attorney's petition for the purpose of determining the lien. The Appellate Division reversed and denied the petition and ordered the decree to be entered. The Court of Appeals sustained the Surrogate, and held the order of the Appellate Division to be a final order and appealable to that court.

This case also involved the questions whether the agreement in question was champertous or unconscionable, under §§ 73–74 of the Code. See opinion Martin, J., pp. 21–25. [These sections are now in Penal Code.]

On latter point see also Morehouse v. B. H. R. R. Co., 185 N. Y. 520.

See also Matter of Williams, 187 N. Y. 286. This was a case where the attorney's lien was impressed in proceedings under § 66 upon income from a trust fund which the trustee refused to pay, and which the attorney compelled payment of by proceedings in the Surrogate's Court. Held that while exempt from claims of creditors so far as not needed for beneficiary's support it was not exempt from the attorney's lien. Three judges dissented (see p. 293).

In Matter of Tyndall, 117 App. Div. 294, it is held that where an attorney brought suit in the Federal court in forma pauperis under an agreement with the special guardian of infant plaintiff for 50% of the recovery, the Surrogate properly remitted him to the Federal court for his remedy. The attorney in this case had been appointed general guardian of his infant plaintiff and secured an ex parte order of the Surrogate approving his 50% share. After getting the money he accounted in the Surrogate's Court. But the citation was not served on the infant in person. The decree provided for his retention of the 50%. Another general guardian having been appointed a supplementary accounting was had in which a special guardian objected to this 50% payment. Whereupon his objection was sustained, the former decree held not binding as jurisdictionally defective, and that under the state law the 50% agreement was not enforceable, as made for one suing in forma pauperis.

§ 115. Miscellaneous provisions as to trials in Surrogates' Courts.— Section 2545 of the Code was a new provision prescribing the practice in Surrogates' Courts, with regard to exceptions on a trial in such court. The section is as follows:

An exception may be taken to a ruling by a surrogate, upon the trial by him of an issue of fact, including a finding, or a refusal to find, upon a question of fact, in a case where such an exception may be taken to a ruling of the court upon a trial, without a jury, of an issue of fact, as prescribed in article third of title first of chapter tenth of this act. The provisions of that article, relating to the manner and effect of taking such an exception, and the settlement of a case containing the exceptions, apply to such a trial before a surrogate; for which purpose, the decree is regarded as a judgment, and notice of an exception may be filed in the surrogate's office. Upon such a trial, the surrogate must file in his office his decision in writing, which must state, separately, the facts found and the conclusions of law. Either party may, upon the settlement of a case, request a finding upon any question of fact, or a ruling upon any question of law; and an exception may be taken to such a finding or ruling, or to a refusal to find or rule accordingly. An appeal from a decree of an order of a surrogate's court brings up for review, by each court to which the appeal is carried, each decision, to which an exception is duly taken by the appellant, as prescribed in this section. But such a decree or order shall not be reversed, for an error in admitting or rejecting evidence, unless it appears to the appellate court that the exceptant was necessarily prejudiced thereby.

§ 116. The practice hereunder.—The foregoing section has been very largely discussed in the courts. In the first place it is to be observed that the particular procedure prescribed by it for Surrogates' Courts is unaffected by amendments to the Code covering the practice in this regard in other courts of record, unless the legislative intent is clear as noted in § 110. It is to be observed, in the next place, that § 2545 refers to §§ 992 et seq., with regard to the cases in which exceptions may be taken as upon trials before other courts of record without a jury of an issue of fact; but the first two paragraphs of the section are limited by the subsequent paragraphs which are specific and limit the practice in the Surrogate's Court. Thus, the findings of fact must be requested upon the settlement of the case, and at no other stage of the proceedings. Hartwell v. McMaster, 4 Redf. 389; Matter of Hoyt, 5 Dem. 432; Matter of Dodge, 105 N. Y. 585, aff'g 40 Hun, 443; Matter of Prout, 11 N. Y. Supp. 160. And a Surrogate cannot be required to determine particular questions before rendering his decision. Tilby v. Tilby, 3 Dem. 258, citing Hartwell v. McMaster, 4 Redf. 389; Matter of Chauncey, 32 Hun, 430. It is to be noted further that this section regulates specifically the method by which a review of errors on a trial before a Surrogate may be had by the Appellate Court. This method is exclusive. See post, ch. VI on Appeals. In this connection the Court of Appeals (Ruger, Ch. J., in Matter of Hawley, 100 N. Y. 206, 210) uses the following language: "The provision of the Code of Civil Procedure regulating the method by which a review of the errors occurring upon a trial before a Surrogate can be secured . . . . also furnishes the strongest implications that such errors are not remediable by any other proceeding."

§ 117. When section 998 is applicable.—Since § 2545 prescribes that the decree of the Surrogate is to be regarded as a judgment and makes applicable to trials in Surrogates' Courts those provisions of ch. 10, title 1, article 3 (§§ 992 et seq.) which relate to the manner and effect of taking exceptions to rulings of the Surrogate both upon the trial of an issue of fact and in finding or refusing to find a question of fact and also relating to the settlement of a case containing the exceptions, the practice may be assumed to be substantially assimilated to the proceedings on and after the trial of an action by the Supreme Court. Waldo v. Waldo, 32 Hun, 251; Hewlett v. Elmer, 103 N. Y. 156. This is manifest, not only by implication from the provision of § 2545, but also from the wording of §§ 2575 and 2576 (see ch. VI on Appeals, post), which provides for a case on appeal to be made and settled by the Surrogate in the manner prescribed by law, for the making and settling of a case upon an appeal in an action. See post. Ibid. It must be borne in mind, in view of what has already been said, that these provisions of § 2545, and those incidental thereto which are about to be discussed, being specific, do not apply to any other trial except a trial by the Surrogate of an issue of fact. Where the decree appealed from is not made upon the trial by a Surrogate of such an issue, it is not within the practice prescribed by § 2545 or § 2576. For example: Where the decree of a Surrogate charges a trustee with interest and denies him commissions upon the settlement of his account and the trustee appeals, there is no provision in this section of the Code, for the making or settlement of a case, consequently, it has been held in such a case that § 998 of the Code controls. Matter of Jackson, 32 Hun, 200. Section 998 is as follows:

> It is not necessary to make a case, for the purpose of moving for a new trial, upon the minutes of the judge, who presided at a trial by a jury; or upon an allegation of irregularity, or surprise; or where a party intends to appeal from a judgment entered upon a referee's report, or a decision of the court upon a trial, without a jury, and to rely only upon exceptions, taken as prescribed in section 994 of this act.

§ 118. Surrogate's duty as to findings.—When the practice was yet undefined by judicial decisions the case arose of an appeal from a Surrogate's decree confirming a referee's report. In view of the fact that the referee had already separately stated his findings of fact and of law, the Surrogate refused to make additional findings and on appeal to the Fourth Department, General Term, his decree was reversed. Matter of Keef, 43 Hun, 98.

This is overruled in Matter of Yetter, 44 App. Div. 404, 408, where the court approved the contrary rule laid down in Matter of Niles, 47 Hun, 348, namely, that under § 2546, where a reference has been ordered, it is not necessary where exceptions taken to the report of the referee are overruled by the Surrogate, to file exceptions again to the Surrogate's decree in order to entitle the aggrieved party to review the error complained of on an appeal from that decree. So, in Matter of Bettman, 65 App. Div. 229, it was similarly held, the court saying: "When the Surrogate confirmed the report, he adopted the findings of fact and conclusions of law reported by the referee as his own, and in all respects complied with the law. The same rule holds where the Surrogate sustains exceptions, on the coming in of the report, to the referee's conclusions of law. Matter of McAleenan, 53 App. Div. 193, 198. In Matter of Barefield, 177 N. Y. 387, the referee made the usual findings and conclusions. The Surrogate, on the motion to confirm came, however, to entirely different conclusions. He made a decree, containing no findings of fact. Whereupon the Appellate Division reversed him (82 App. Div. 463). But the Court of Appeals reversed the Appellate Division. Unfortunately, instead of explicitly asserting the rule in the Bettman case, the Court of Appeals merely held that the effect of the absence of separate findings by the Surrogate, coupled with the reversal of the Appellate Division not being stated to be on the facts, was to compel the presumption that all facts necessary to sustain the decree had been duly found.

But when the Surrogate determines a proceeding after the trial by him of an issue of fact, under § 2545, he is required to "file in his office his decision in writing, which must state, separately, the facts found and the conclusions of law." Matter of Widmayer, 52 App. Div. 301. And if he does not do so the case may be remitted to him for that purpose. Matter of Sherwood, 75 App. Div. 342; Matter of Daymon, 47 App. Div. 315, citing Hall v. Beston, 13 App. Div. 116; Shaffer v. Martin, 20 App. Div. 304. See also Matter of Sprague, 125 N. Y. 732; Hewlett v. Elmer, 103 N. Y. 156, 164; Matter of Kellogg, 104 N. Y. 648; Angevine v. Jackson, 103 N. Y. 470; Burger v. Burger, 111 N. Y. 523; Matter of Bradway, 74 Hun, 630; Matter of Marsh, 45 Hun, 108; In re Falls' Estate, 10 N. Y. Supp. 41; Matter of Otis, 6 N. Y. St. Rep. 631; Matter of Peck, 39 N. Y. St. Rep. 234; Matter of Hood, 104 N. Y. 103, 106; Matter of Kaufman, 39 St. Rep. 236.

The Court of Appeals has summarized the practice in the following language:

"Those provisions (§ 2545) point out the practice, to be followed with care and precision. The Surrogate is required to file in his office his decision stating separately the facts found, and the conclusions of law. Either party may except to the findings of fact or of law, and upon the settlement of the case may request findings, and take exceptions to a refusal, and the appeal brings up for review in the Appellate Court any question of fact or law thus raised by exceptions taken. The purpose was to assimilate the practice upon appeals from a Surrogate's decree in the prescribed cases to that which regulated appeals from a judgment rendered by the court or a referee, and to substitute a system which would point out specific errors, and evolve the exact questions intended to be reviewed. Angevine v. Jackson, 103 N. Y. 470, 471." In Matter of Schroeder, No. 2, 113 App. Div. 221, it was held that a failure to request findings constituted a waiver, and the court denied a motion to recommit the report in order to findings. (But, see opinion of Clarke, J., showing peculiar facts in the case.)

§ 119. Exceptions must be made as prescribed in the Code.—The appellant cannot secure a review of the Surrogate's decision by a mere exception "to the decree and each and every part of it;" such an exception is useless. Angevine v. Jackson, supra; Ward v. Craig, 87 N. Y. 550; Hepburn v. Montgomery, 97 id. 617. See also Matter of Falls, 10 N. Y. Supp. 41; Matter of Peck, 39 N. Y. St. Rep. 234. The only exception to this rule is where, as has occasionally happened, the Surrogate, although expressly requested to make findings, refused to do so or to make a record of his refusal. If an exception to such refusal is duly taken it will raise a question for the Appellate Court, and the decree will be reversed (Matter of Kaufman, 39 St. Rep. 236), if it appears that this refusal is prejudicial to the appellant. Matter of Hicks, 14 St. Rep. 320. While the language of the Code makes it the duty of the Surrogate to make these findings, the omission to do so is a mere irregularity, and will not avail the appellant if he has not procured to be made, or attempted to procure to be made such findings or refusals and had his exceptions duly noted. Matter of Hood, 104 N. Y. 103. See also In re Hesdra's Estate, 4 Misc. 37; Matter of O'Brien, 5 Misc. 136, 138.

§ 120. Procedure defined by the Court of Appeals.—The opinion of the Court of Appeals in Burger v. Burger, 111 N. Y. 523, at page 528, is most instructive. "We think the true rule under the Code is, that an appeal on the facts from the decree of a Surrogate, admitting or refusing to admit a will to probate, brings up for review in the Supreme Court the question of sufficiency, weight, or preponderance of evidence, and the general merits of the decision; and that it is not necessary that any exception should have been taken to the findings of fact, or that there should have been any request for findings in order to give the general term jurisdiction to review the facts, and reverse or affirm the decision of the Surrogate thereon. But where the appeal is also upon the law, only such questions of law can be considered as have been properly raised by exception. If the exception was taken to the conclusion of law of the Surrogate, it raises the question whether it was justified by the facts found. If taken to a finding of fact, it presents the question whether there was any evidence to sustain the finding. So, where the Surrogate refuses to make any finding whatever on a question of fact, or where he makes or refuses to make a ruling upon any question of law, an exception lies, and his decision may be reviewed in the Appellate Court. But an exception to facts found, or to a refusal to find upon a question of fact, is only important to entitle the appellant to have a review, first in the Supreme Court, and afterwards in this court, of the strictly legal question which it is the office of an exception to present. But in the Supreme Court the facts are open for review without any exception. An application to a court for a new trial on the facts in no proper sense presents a question of law. It is an appeal to the conscience of the court, and it is asked to consider whether, on the whole facts, a new trial ought not to be had. The review on the facts by the Supreme Court, of a decision of a Surrogate admitting a will to probate, still retains, in many features, the character of a rehearing in equity. This is quite clear from § 2586 of the Code, which permits the general term, on appeal from the Surrogate on the facts, to receive further testimony or documentary evidence and appoint a referee, and declares the Appellate Court has the same power to decide the questions of fact which the Surrogate had."

As a matter of a minor detail it has been held that it is the Surrogate's duty to note on the margin of each request to find his assent or refusal to find the same. Matter of Wheeler, 28 N. Y. St. Rep. 638. This serves a double purpose; it enables the exception to his findings or refusals to find to be noted in an orderly way; and also enables the Appellate Court to ascertain without laborious inquiry and careful comparison whether a failure to find has or has not wrought injustice.

§ 121. Witnesses.—Such statutory rules as are prescribed in particular proceedings as to competency, etc., of witnesses will be found in the discussion of the appropriate topics, post. But in view of the attempt to follow the order of the sections in the Code it is necessary here to take up the provisions of § 2544, which is as follows:

> § 2544. Bequest, etc., does not disqualify, etc., witness.
> A person is not disqualified or excused, from testifying respecting the execution of a will, by a provision therein, whether it is beneficial to him or otherwise.

It is stated in the note to this section, in Throop's edition of the Code of Civil Procedure, that it was substituted for § 6, and a part of § 50 of part 2, ch. 6, title 1 of the Revised Statutes. Those sections were, substantially, as follows: Section 6 provided that the creditor being a subscribing witness whose debt is by the will made a charge upon lands devised, should notwithstanding such interest, be a competent witness to prove the will. Section 50 provided that: "If any person shall be a subscribing witness to the execution of any will, wherein any beneficial devise, legacy, interest, or appointment of any real or personal estate shall be made to such witness, and such will cannot be proved without the testimony of such witness, the said devise, legacy, interest or appointment shall be void so far only as concerns such witness, or any claiming under him; and such person shall be a competent witness, and compellable to testify respecting the execution of the said will in like manner as if no such devise or bequest had been made." Section 51, referring to the same subject, provided: "In case such witness would have been entitled, as heir or next of kin, to a share in the estate of such testator if he had died intestate, that he might recover from the devisees and legatees in the will, if established, his proportion of such estate, not exceeding, however, the amount devised to him by the will." Section 6 of the Revised Statutes was expressly repealed by ch. 245 of the laws of 1880, and thereby rendered all interested witnesses, save those mentioned in § 50, which was expressly excepted from the repeal, incompetent to testify as subscribing witnesses. Section 2544 was, therefore, adopted as a substitute for § 6, and was intended to enlarge the former exception and embrace not only the special case provided for by the repealed section, but all other possible cases where an interest in the event of a controversy over the probate of a will, might, under the existing statute, disqualify a subscribing witness from testifying to its execution. Although it may not be easy to specify such cases the legislature, probably out of abundant caution, deemed it prudent by general words to embrace all subscribing witnesses by a comprehensive exception from disqualification by reason of interest. The language of the enactment seems to support this view. The evidence authorized to be given by § 2544 refers to that given in Surrogates' Courts alone, and relates solely to the subject of the execution of the will. It was clearly intended to operate as a substitute for prior statutes that related to subscribing witnesses alone, and there was no reason for including other persons in its provisions.

The reason for exempting such witnesses from the application of the general rule of exclusion, made by § 829, is obvious, as their testimony is made indispensable, if obtainable, to the probate of a will. Sections 2618, 2619. Otherwise numerous wills to which legatees and others interested, who had, through ignorance, carelessness or inadvertence become attesting witnesses, would fail in their probate, and the wishes of their makers in respect to the disposition of their property be altogether defeated. To obviate these consequences the provisions of the various statutes referred to were adopted. To carry the effect of § 2544 beyond the object alluded to would make interested witnesses competent to testify to facts no more essential to the establishment of wills than many other transactions respecting which they are obviously, under § 829, incompetent now to testify. Matter of Eysaman, 113 N. Y. 62, pages 75, 76, 77, opinion of Ruger, Ch. J., and cases cited; Matter of Brown, 31 Hun, 166.

No disqualification is imposed by this section, except upon persons who could be called to testify respecting the execution of the will, that is, the subscribing witnesses. Matter of Eysaman, supra; Estate of Voorhis, 1 How. N. S. 261. It does not apply to an executor as such. Children's Aid Society v. Loveridge, 70 N. Y. 387.

Surrogate Tucker held in 1867, that there could be no doubt but that a person named in a will as executor, who is also a subscribing witness, could be examined as a witness on the probate. Section 2544 in no respect alters this rule. Rugg v. Rugg, 83 N. Y. 592; McDonough v. Loughlin, 20 Barb. 238. The section contemplates by the words, "A provision therein . . . . beneficial . . . . or otherwise," a legacy, or a bequest. Consequently, not only is an appointment as executor not deemed to be a provision beneficial or otherwise, within the meaning of this section, but a gift by will of a sum of money as compensation for his services, even where it is provided that it shall be over and above his commissions, has been distinctly held not to be such a devise or legacy as would be forfeited, in case the executor so provided for, was also a subscribing witness and necessary to the probate of the will. Pruyn v. Brinkerhoff, 57 Barb. 176; Matter of Chase, 41 Hun, 203; Rugg v. Rugg, 83 N. Y. 592; In re Will of Huestis, 23 N. Y. Weekly Dig. 224; Reece v. Crosby, 3 Redf. 74; McDonough v. Loughlin, supra; Children's Aid Society v. Loveridge, 70 N. Y. 387; Matter of Folts, 71 Hun, 492. But, of course, where the executor who witnesses a will is the principal legatee in addition to the interest above described, that fact brings him within the statute avoiding his legacy, if the will cannot be proved without his testimony. Matter of Smith, 95 N. Y. 516, explained by Ruger, Ch. J., in Matter of Wilson, 103 N. Y. 374, and see Lane v. Lane, 95 N. Y. 494.

§ 122. When witness can take.—Section 2544 refers to every witness whose testimony is essential to the proof of the will containing the provision constituting him a person interested. Where there are but two witnesses and both reside within the State, the evidence of neither can be dispensed with, and consequently any "beneficial devise, legacy, interest, or appointment made to either in the will is void under the statute." Matter of Will of Orson, 18 Weekly Dig. 306; Matter of Brown, 65 How. 461. Where, however, of two witnesses, one is a non-resident and the will is proved without the testimony of the non-resident witness, he is not disqualified from taking under the will. Cornwell v. Wooley, 43 How. 475. So, where there are more than two witnesses, and the will is sufficiently proved by two of them without the testimony of the witness interested in any provision of the will, there is no disqualification under the statute. Cornwell v. Wooley, supra; Caw v. Robertson, 5 N. Y. 125. See also Matter of Beck, 26 Misc. 179, aff'd 6 App. Div. 211, and 154 N. Y. 750. The question whether the subscribing witness will, by testifying, forfeit his legacy is not material on the probate proceedings. Matter of Beck, supra; 6 App. Div. 211, 214. It comes up when he seeks to retain his legacy, as on accounting. Ibid., citing Caw v. Robertson, supra; Cornwell v. Wooley, 1 Abb. Ct. App. 441; Matter of Brown, 31 Hun, 166.

If his testimony is given, he cannot be allowed to withdraw it on the ground that he will imperil his legacy or devise. Ibid. If later, at the proper stage, he can demonstrate that the probate proof was sufficient, apart from his testimony, he may be allowed to have his legacy. So where there were three subscribing witnesses to a will, and it appeared from the Surrogate's record, that is to say, the record of the will and of the proceedings and the examination taken by the Surrogate, that the will was proved by the testimony of two of the subscribing witnesses, and that the third had been sworn "to testify as to the questions which should be put to him by the Surrogate touching the circumstances of executing the said will, and how his name came to be attached to said will as a witness," and it further appeared that his examination did not elicit the material facts ordinarily shown by a subscribing witness, his legacy would not be avoided. Caw v. Robertson, supra. See also Matter of Owen, 48 App. Div. 507. When legatees under a will are subscribing witnesses to a codicil to that will, it is held that their testimony on probate of such codicil does not preclude them from taking under the will, where it alone is proved, and the codicil is not necessary to the proof of the will. Matter of Johnson, 37 Misc. 334.

§ 123. Taking evidence.—Except where a contrary intent is expressed in, or plainly implied from the context of, a provision of ch. 18 of the Code, which relates to Surrogates' Courts, the following sections apply to such courts and to proceedings therein: §§ 870–886, q. v., relating to depositions taken and to be used within the State; §§ 887–913, q. v., relating to depositions taken without the State for use within the State. Code Civ. Proc. § 2538. It is added, that they shall apply "so far as they can be applied to the substance and subject-matter of a proceeding, without regard to its form." In this connection, therefore, we now turn to the subject of taking testimony, by deposition, before the Surrogate, and before referees appointed by the Surrogate.

§ 124. Commissions.—Section 888 of the Code, which prescribes the cases in which a commission may issue, is, as we have just noted, made applicable to Surrogates' Courts by § 2538. See In re Plumb, 64 Hun, 317, affirmed in 135 N. Y. 661. He had such power, originally, under ch. 460 of the Laws of 1837, § 77, but it was repealed in 1880 (ch. 245, § 1), and the Code provisions thereafter governed. By amendment to § 888 in 1894, a subdivision (6), was added reading, "In special proceedings." Standing alone this would seem to cover proceedings in Surrogates' Courts, but in fact does not except by virtue of § 2538. Attention is called to this somewhat confusing method of enactment in the Code which compels the practitioner to search carefully for modifying provisions before he dare rely on the prima facie meaning of any section. (This is one of the features of the Code which call for special attention in the event of a revision.)

The amendment of 1894 to § 888, was probably passed in view of a decision (In re Plumb), above cited, where the express language of the section making its provisions applicable only to actions had been relied on in opposing the granting of a commission in a Surrogate's Court.

There being now no question as to the Surrogate's power to issue a commission (Bristed v. Weeks, 5 Redf. 529; Cadmus v. Oakley, 2 Dem. 298; Henry v. Henry, 4 Dem. 253; Bull v. Kendrick, 4 Dem. 330), it is first to be stated that the same procedure is followed as is required in civil actions. And the decision of the courts in relation thereto will also be applicable so far as the substance and subject-matter of the proceeding admits. Thus, the party applying for the issuance of the commission must show by affidavit that the testimony of the witness is material, that he is without the State, and, since the right is altogether dependent on statute (Matter of an Attorney, 83 N. Y. 164; McColl v. Sun Mutual Ins. Co., 50 N. Y. 332) that the case is one in which the proceeding is properly to be allowed. See Matter of Neiding, 56 Misc. 216, rev'd 123 App. Div. 894. (See opinions in both courts.) The administrator moved for a commission to take testimony abroad as to his legitimacy, which involved impugning a foreign decree of bastardy in a proceeding "for reimbursement for spoliation of the virgin honor" of his mother. The Surrogate denied it on the ground he could not attack a decree under which he had accepted benefits. The Appellate Division reversed on the ground the judgment was in the matter of a police regulation having no extraterritorial effect.

The commission must name the commissioner and the witnesses. Wallace v. Blake, 4 N. Y. Supp. 438. The latter should be specifically designated. If not named, the order is irregular, unless the unnamed witnesses are described as of a class, or are designated as about to be produced to testify to a particular distinct fact. Matter of Anderson, 84 App. Div. 268. If the witnesses are unknown but sufficiently described, the order is not irregular.

Usually, the commission issues upon interrogatories, direct and cross (see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 891 et seq.), to be proposed by the parties and settled by the court. These interrogatories must be pertinent and material to the issues raised. Walton v. Godwin, 54 Hun, 387; Thorp v. Riley, 3 N. Y.

Supp. 547; Uline v. N. Y. C. & H. R. R. R. Co., 79 N. Y. 175; McDonald v. Garrison, 9 Abb. 178; Blaisdell v. Raymond, 9 Abb. 178*n*.

If the Surrogate in settling interrogatories allows an improper interrogatory, the remedy is by objection, on the hearing when the testimony is read. If, however, he disallows a pertinent interrogatory, the remedy is by appeal from the order. Uline v. N. Y. C. & H. R. R. R. Co., 79 N. Y. 175.

§ 125. The order.—An order must be entered, for a commission on stipulation cannot issue except an order, on consent, be first entered.

Interrogatories are to be annexed unless the order provide for an open commission to examine wholly or partly upon oral questions. But it seems an open commission should not issue except in cases where it clearly appears to be necessary for the purposes of justice (Beadleston v. Beadleston, 2 N. Y. Supp. 814; Clark v. Sullivan, 8 N. Y. Supp. 565; Purdy v. Webster, 3 How. N. S. 263; Heney v. Mead, 4 Law Bull. 10; Dickinson v. Bush, 17 Week. Dig. 17), and never when the adverse party is an infant, or the committee of a person judicially declared to be incapable of managing his affairs, by reason of lunacy, idiocy, or habitual drunkenness; or where the testimony is to be taken elsewhere than in the United States, or in Canada. Code Civ. Proc. § 895; Bull v. Kendrick, 4 Dem. 330. If an open commission be ordered the witnesses should be named. Matter of Anderson, 84 App. Div. 268.

If written interrogatories are in the discretion of the court dispensed with it may be on terms. So, in Deery v. Byrne, 120 App. Div. 6, the condition was imposed that the reasonable expense of the other side in traveling to the foreign place and attending the hearing should be paid in advance. (See opinion.)

This was in an action under § 2718 on a claim against a decedent's estate. See also Paddock v. Kirkham, 102 N. Y. 597. In Matter of Sentell, 53 Misc. 165, however, an open commission having been ordered, the guardian ad litem moved for an allowance to cover his expenses in attending on its execution. The Surrogate held he had no power to provide for it and instead vacated his order and made a new one directing a commission on written interrogatories. The Surrogate has discretion to grant or refuse the order. Jones v. Hoyt, 10 Abb. N. C. 324. But the order is appealable (Jemison v. Bank, 85 N. Y. 546) and will be reversed if it appear the discretion was unwisely or improperly exercised. Jones v. Hoyt, supra. If it appear that the party asking for the commission relies largely upon the testimony which it is claimed the witness to be examined will give, the order should be granted. Smith v. Talmadge, 3 Law Bull. 97. And if a commission is issued to take testimony without written interrogatories, as prescribed in § 893 or § 894, notice of time and place of examination of any witnesses thereunder (in which notice the witness must be named), must be served by the party on whose behalf the witness is to be examined on the attorney for the adverse party at least five judicial days before the deposition is taken; which time must be lengthened by one judicial day for each fifty miles by the usual route of travel, between such attorney's residence and the place where the deposition is to be taken. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 896, 899; Matter of Kendall, 2 Law Bull. 51.

§ 126. Same.—The commissioner must be named in the commission. Spurr &c. v. Empire State Surety Co., 117 App. Div. 816. He is held to be an officer of the court and in executing the commission to stand in the place of and to represent the court. So where a commissioner was appointed under the act of 1837, to take the testimony of the witnesses to a will in Scotland it was held that the production of the original will before him in Scotland was substantially a production of the will before the court. Russell v. Hartt, 87 N. Y. 18, 25; Matter of Delaplaine, 45 Hun, 225; Matter of Cameron, 47 App. Div. 123, 125. See post, PROBATE.

On the other hand, the Surrogate is not bound to wait indefinitely for the execution of the commission. So where a hearing closed before the return of a commission to take testimony in a foreign country, and it appeared that by the exercise of diligence it could have been executed in time, the Surrogate in his discretion refused to open the hearing to receive it. Leslie v. Leslie, 15 Week. Dig. 56. The Surrogate's power to issue a commission, was, at first, sought to be limited to probate proceedings, but the courts held that it was not the legislative intent so to limit it but that it could be exercised in any proceeding. See Matter of Plumb, 64 Hun, 317. See also Estate of Voorhis, 5 Civ. Pro. Rep. 444. The power to issue a commission in an appropriate case should be exercised before the trial or hearing. In re Plumb, 135 N. Y. 661. For when the application is postponed until a large amount of testimony has been taken, the Surrogate may exercise his discretion in regard to issuing the commission. Matter of Hodgman, 11 App. Div. 344. This case, however, was complicated by the fact that the term of the Surrogate before whom the proceeding was pending was about to expire, and the delay which the execution of the commission would have occasioned, would have been prejudicial.

And it is further Ordered, that (here specify other parties to the proceeding) be at liberty to join in such commission.

And it is further Ordered, that the hearing of the issues in the above entitled proceedings be and they hereby are stayed until the further order of this court. Note.

Note. The Surrogate is at liberty to proceed with the hearing if the execution of the commission is unreasonably delayed.

Unless the interrogatories to be annexed to the commission are settled by consent of the parties, they must be settled upon notice by the Surrogate as prescribed by the general rules of practice. (§ 891, Code Civ. Proc.)

The interrogatories when settled must be annexed to the commission. Either party must be allowed to insert therein any question pertinent to the issue which he proposes. The Surrogate, in settling them, can exclude questions clearly not pertinent. But unless so he will usually allow them subject to objection at the trial. See Irving v. Royal Exch. Assurance of London, 122 App. Div. 56. Unless the parties stipulate in writing, or the order granting the commission prescribes how it shall be returned, the Surrogate must indorse upon the commission the proper direction for that purpose. (§ 892, Code Civ. Proc.). The usual practice is to return the commission through the post office.

§ 128. Aged, sick or infirm witnesses.—The Code provides explicitly for the examination of witnesses suffering from physical disability.

> Upon the application of a party to a special proceeding, and upon proof, by affidavit, to the satisfaction of the surrogate, that the testimony of a witness in his county, who is so aged, sick, or infirm, as to be unable to attend before him to be examined, is material and necessary to the applicant, the surrogate must, where the special proceeding was instituted to procure the probate or revocation of probate of a will, and, in any other case, may, in his discretion, proceed to the place where the witness is, and there, as in open court, take his examination. Such a notice of the time and place of taking the examination, as the surrogate prescribes, must be given, by the party applying therefor, to each other party, except a party who has failed to appear as required by the citation. The surrogate may also, in his discretion, require notice to be given to any other person interested. § 2539, Code Civil Proc.

The above provisions, being special, apply in Surrogates' Courts rather than the general provisions of §§ 870 et seq., and such an examination as they relate to must be taken under § 2539, and not under the other. Estate of M'Coskry, 5 Dem. 256.

§ 129. Same.

> Testimony of aged, sick, or infirm witness in another county.
> In a case specified in the last section, except that the witness is in another county, where the witness is a subscribing witness to a will, if the surrogate has good reason to believe that the witness cannot attend before him, within a reasonable time, to which the hearing may be adjourned, he may make an order, directing that the witness be examined before the surrogate of the county in which he is; specifying a day, on or before which a certified copy of the order must be delivered to the latter surrogate; and directing notice of the examination to be given to such persons, and in such manner, as he thinks proper. A copy of the order, attested by the seal of the surrogate's court, must be transmitted by him to the surrogate designated in the order, together with the original will, where the testimony relates to the execution of a written will. The latter surrogate must, thereupon, on the day specified in the order, or on another day to which he may adjourn the examination, take the examination of the witnesses, as if he possessed original jurisdiction of the special proceeding. The examination, after it is reduced to writing, and subscribed by the witness, or otherwise duly authenticated, together with a statement of the proceedings upon the execution of the order, must be certified by the surrogate taking the examination, attested by the seal of his court, and returned without delay, with the original will, if any, to the surrogate who directed the examination, by whom all those papers must be filed. And in other cases named in said section 2539, he may appoint a referee to take the testimony, who shall report the same to the said surrogate. An examination so taken has the same effect, as if it was taken before the latter surrogate. § 2540, Code Civil Proc.

§ 130. Analysis of sections 2539 and 2540.—These two sections have been but seldom construed. From their provisions it will be seen that several cases are contemplated capable of arising.

A. Proceedings for probate or revocation of probate of a will. In these proceedings, if the aged, sick or infirm witness is in the Surrogate's county, the Surrogate must, upon satisfactory proof of the facts, by affidavit, go in person and examine such witness. If the witness is in another county, then the Surrogate of that county may be designated, who in turn must upon receipt of the authorization provided by § 2540 go in person and examine such witness. Matter of McCloskey, 10 Civ. Pr. R. 178. But, while I find no case in point, I am of opinion that the power which, in New York County, the Surrogate possesses in probate cases to appoint a referee on consent, or to direct his assistant, to take and report the testimony (see § 52, ante) would give the Surrogate of that county power under § 2539 to use the same agencies to secure the testimony of an aged, sick or infirm witness in that county in a probate case.

B. Proceedings other than probate or revocation of probate. In other proceedings the Surrogate is not required to go in person, or to designate another Surrogate to go in person; but may, whether the witness be in his county or in that of another Surrogate, appoint a referee to examine him and report, with the same effect as if he personally had taken the testimony.

Section 2540 is loosely drawn, and must be carefully read. The last two sentences really form a separate section, referring to both §§ 2539 and 2540. The first Surrogate referred to in § 2540 is, of course, the Surrogate before whom the proceeding is pending, who makes the order designating another Surrogate "where the witness is a subscribing witness to a will." The rest of the section, except these last two sentences, refers to the examination of such a witness, and no other.

§ 132. The testimony.

How minutes of testimony authenticated.

The minutes of testimony, written out as prescribed in the last section, or taken by the surrogate, or under his direction, while the witness is testifying, must, before being filed be authenticated by the signature of the stenographer, referee, the surrogate, or the clerk of the surrogate's court, to the effect that they are correct. § 2542, Code Civil Proc.

Minutes of testimony; to be bound in volumes, etc.

In the city and county of New York, in the county of Kings, and in any other county where the supervisors so direct, the minutes of testimony written out by the stenographer must be bound, at the expense of the county, in volumes of convenient size and shape, indorsed "Stenographic minutes," and numbered consecutively. Upon the record of a decree made in any contested matter, the surrogate must cause to be made a minute, referring to each volume of the stenographic minutes, and to the pages thereof containing any testimony relating to the matter. § 2543, Code Civil Proc.

§ 133. References in Surrogates' Courts.—We now pass to the discussion of references by a Surrogate. Notwithstanding the provision below noted as to the similarity of such references to references in the Supreme Court, they have nevertheless been made the subject of particular discussion which requires to be carefully noted. The Surrogate's power to refer is based upon § 2546, which is as follows:

Surrogate may refer question of fact or account.

In a special proceeding other than one instituted for probate or revocation of probate of a will, the surrogate may, in his discretion, appoint a referee to take and report to the surrogate the evidence upon the facts, or upon a specific question of fact; to examine an account rendered; to hear and determine all questions, arising upon the settlement of such an account, which the surrogate has power to determine; and to make a report thereon; subject, however, to confirmation or modification by the surrogate.

But no referee to examine an account rendered, whether intermediate or final, or to hear and determine all questions arising upon the settlement of such an account, shall be appointed, where the estate or fund does not exceed one thousand dollars in value, or in any case where the item or items in such account to which objections have been made do not aggregate more than two hundred dollars.

Such a referee has the same power, and is entitled to the same compensation as a referee appointed by the Supreme Court, for the trial of an issue of fact in an action; and the provisions of this act, applicable to a reference by the Supreme Court, apply to a reference made as prescribed in this section, so far as they can be applied in substance without regard to the form of proceeding.

The Surrogate of the County of New York, may, on the written consent of all parties appearing in a probate case, appoint a referee, or may, in his discretion, direct an assistant to take and report the testimony, but without authority to pass upon the issues involved therein.

Unless a referee's report is passed upon and confirmed, approved, modified or rejected by a surrogate within ninety days after it has been submitted to him, it shall be deemed to have been confirmed as of course, and a decree to that effect may be entered by any party interested in the proceeding upon two days' notice. § 2546, Code Civil Proc., as am'd by L. 1908, Chap. 128. (Amendment of 1908 italicized.)

§ 134. Development of Surrogate's power to refer.—The Surrogate's power to refer was originally limited to accountings, but on the adoption of the Code his power was amplified and now in virtue of frequent amendments may be summarized as follows: As to the examination of an account rendered if the estate exceed $1,000 in value, and the objections affect items aggregating more than $200, the Surrogate may appoint a referee to hear and determine; in addition to this he may appoint a referee to take and report evidence on any specific issue or upon all the issues in any other proceeding in his court except one instituted for probate or revocation of probate of a will. But in addition to this it is provided that in New York County the Surrogate may, even in probate cases, appoint a referee to take and report the testimony, provided written consent of all the parties appearing on the probate is filed. Such referee is without authority to pass upon the issues involved. In proceedings to remove an administratrix the Surrogate ordered a reference "to take testimony and report with his opinion thereon." Held valid. Matter of Ferrigan, 42 App. Div. 1, 4, aff'd 160 N. Y. 689; Matter of Hale, 45 App. Div. 578. So, also, to take testimony as to whether a disputed claim had been rejected, and whether the Statute of Limitations had run. Matter of Hoes, 54 App. Div. 281. So, also, in a proceeding to sell decedent's realty. Matter of Walker, 43 Misc. 475. The Surrogate it will be noted has also power without the consent of the parties, and of his own motion, to direct one of his assistants to take and report the testimony in a similar case and he is subject to this same limitation as to passing on the issues.

With this summary analysis of the section we pass to the powers of Surrogates' referees:

§ 135. Practice on references in Surrogate's Court.—The order of reference should be exact in defining the extent of the referee's functions. It is customary to use the language of the Code, where the reference is to hear and determine. The person named as referee should of course be free from the disqualifications which would prevent the Surrogate himself from trying the cause or hearing the evidence. A referee to hear and determine must be sworn, although where there are no infants, or parties not represented, the omission to take the oath will be deemed a mere irregularity in case the hearing proceeds without objection. Mason v. Luddington, 56 How. Pr. 172. The referee has power to rule on all questions of the admissibility or exclusion of evidence. Matter of Walker, 43 Misc. 475. The general rules of practice cover references in Surrogates' Courts. Matter of Russell, 3 Dem. 377; Matter of Leffingwell, 30 Hun, 528. Reasonable notice of intention to proceed with the hearing is sufficient. The fourteen days' notice is not requisite. Matter of Ferrigan, 42 App. Div. 1, 4. The testimony, therefore, taken before such a referee must be signed by the witnesses, except where the reference is one for the trial of the issues; that is, a reference to hear and determine. As such a reference in a Surrogate's Court can only be had upon an accounting, under § 2546, it may be stated as the rule that the testimony of the witnesses before Surrogates' referees, except on accountings, must be signed by them. See Rule 30 of General Rules of Practice; Matter of Russell, 3 Dem. 377, Rollins, Surr. But this may be waived, by express stipulation or by failure to exact it. See Matter of Hirsch, 116 App. Div. 367, 373. If the referee, after final submission, delays over 60 days his determination, it was held that either party may, under § 1019, Code Civ. Proc., elect to terminate the reference. Matter of Santos, 31 Misc. 76, citing Patterson v. Knapp, 83 Hun, 492. If the party duly serve a notice of such election, and nevertheless the report is subsequently made and filed, his right to raise this objection of invalidity is not affected by his filing exceptions to such report. The two positions are supplementary to, and not inconsistent with, each other. Ibid. But, in a recent case, Matter of Robinson, 53 Misc. 171, Church, Surr., held § 1019 to be inapplicable, certainly not to a reference to hear and report. He cited Matter of Bennett, 21 Abb. N. C. 238; Doyle v. Mayor, 26 Misc. 61; Bennett v. Pitman, 48 Hun, 612; Godding v. Porter, 17 Abb. Pr. 374. These cases certainly apply only to such references, styled references "under the approval of the Surrogate." But under the language of § 2546, referring to references in the Supreme Court the rule in the Santos case seems correct in regard to Surrogate's references to hear and determine.

The effect of § 1019 can be waived by formal stipulation or by conduct estopping a party from raising the objection. See Gill v. Clark, 31 Misc. 337.

The referee's power over the proceedings is similar to that of any referee; he may compel the parties to proceed promptly, and where vexatious or unreasonable delays are attempted by counsel, or frivolous objections interposed, it has been held that the referee should close the reference and report to the appointing Surrogate the exact facts, and if the Surrogate find the objection to be frivolous, idle or dilatory, he may charge the entire costs of the proceedings personally upon the offending parties. Matter of Williams, 17 N. Y. St. Rep. 839, Ransom, Surr. See also Matter of Odell, 1 Connoly, 94; Matter of Niles, 47 Hun, 348. So he has power to make an order extending the time to file briefs. Matter of Santos, 31 Misc. 76; Morrison v. Lawrence, 2 How. Pr. (N. S.) 72; Matter of Robinson, supra. He controls the examination of witnesses, and his rulings upon evidence will not be reviewed until the hearing upon his report. Estate of F. W. Mertens, N. Y. Law Jour., November 26, 1901. And the Surrogate's Court will enforce his mandates. Ibid., citing § 856, C. C. P. and Est. of Benj. Webb, N. Y. Law Jour., May 18, 1901. As, e. g., by directing a warrant for commitment to issue if witness refuses to obey direction of referee. Ibid. So, where a referee is appointed to take the account of executors he has power to allow them to file a supplemental account and doubtless to amend the account already filed where all the parties are before him. Matter of Frank, 1 App. Div. 39. The dubious language of the Court of Appeals in the Matter of Clark, 119 N. Y. 427, "that section 2546 seems to open everything and settle nothing," is quite immaterial in view of the fact that in that case these powers of referees were not directly under discussion. In Matter of Schneider also (sub nom. Matter of Frank), 1 App. Div. 39, Bartlett, J., passes directly on the question of the power of a referee to allow executors to file a supplemental account, showing payments made subsequent to the time when they were compelled to file their account. It is to be noted that in this case all the parties were before the court and the disposal of any objections to the supplemental account could thus be had in the same reference, thus economizing both time and money to the estate. The other point as to the power to allow an amendment of an account has been sustained in the Matter of Munzor, 4 Misc. 374, Ransom, Surr., where, when a contested account was pending before a referee, and counsel for the accountant moved before the Surrogate for leave to file an amended account, the learned Surrogate denied the motion on the ground that it should be made before the referee who was the proper one to fix the terms upon which the application should be granted, if at all, and in his opinion the Surrogate said: "There can be no question as to the power of the referee to grant such an amendment as the Surrogate himself might grant upon a trial," citing Estate of Odell, supra; Estate of Williams, supra. . . . " In an accounting before a Surrogate the accounting itself is the subject-matter of the proceeding and any amendment may be allowed which does not include a transaction subsequent to the return day of the citation," citing Price v. Brown, 112 N. Y. 677. From this opinion, which is carefully reasoned, it may be stated first that a Surrogate or his referee may allow an amendment of such an account provided no items are included of a date subsequent to the original return day of the citation; second, that if it is desired to include such subsequent items a supplemental account must be filed which may be done if all the parties are before the court; third, it would seem, if the subsequent item is of such a character as to involve the right of some one not before the referee, who would, if a party, be entitled to object, that in such event a supplemental citation would have to issue.

§ 136. Requests to find.—With regard to findings of fact and conclusions of law, the same rules applicable to trials by Surrogates apply to references in Surrogates' Courts (see discussion under § 2544, ante, and the referee when requested to make such findings must do so. Matter of Mellen, 56 Hun, 553. It was, however, held that where a referee neglected to respond to requests to find, although they were properly submitted to him, a judgment based upon his report would not be for that reason reversed unless his refusal was clearly prejudicial to the appellant. Matter of Hicks, 14 N. Y. St. Rep. 320.

In giving the Surrogate power to refer questions of fact or account, the plain intent of the legislature was to cast upon the referee judicial powers and responsibilities, and thus relieve the Surrogate from any duty in the proceeding except to review his conclusions of law from facts established by the evidence. It was not contemplated that the referee should be an assistant to the Surrogate acting simply ministerially. The referee's findings of fact should be regarded as the verdict of a jury, and, unless clearly against the weight of evidence, so as to amount to a finding without evidence, they should be sustained. Matter of Odell, 1 Connoly, 94.

§ 137. The report, filing.—The report of the referee must be filed together with the testimony, and the practice in regard thereto is covered by the general rules in the absence of special rules in the particular counties. In New York County, Rule 8 is as follows: " When a referee's report shall be filed, together with the testimony taken before him, said report shall be confirmed as of course, unless exceptions thereto shall be filed by any party interested in the accounting or proceeding within 8 days after a written notice of such filing and a copy of such report shall have been served upon the opposing party; and in case exceptions shall be so filed, any party may bring on the hearing of said exceptions on 8 days' notice on any stated motion day of said Surrogate's Court." This rule needs no particular interpretation. It is concise and clear. See post, § 140, as to time within which the Surrogate must act on the report under § 2546, Code Civ. Proc., as amended by L. 1899, ch. 607, and Matter of Clark, 168 N. Y. 427.

§ 138. Confirmation or modification of the report.—The Surrogate may confirm or modify the referee's report. The term "modification," of course, includes the refusal to confirm, confirmation with modification, or a remitting of the report to the referee with directions to proceed anew. Matter of Post, 19 N. Y. Supp. 18; Ex parte Pollock, 3 Redf. 100; Matter of Bayer, 54 Hun, 189. When the report comes up before the Surrogate and exceptions have been filed, the Surrogate is bound to consider such exceptions and the questions thereby raised. Matter of Bedford, 30 Hun, 551. Should he confirm the report in such case without passing on these exceptions it will be held error, but where no exceptions are filed, then by operation of the rules of practice, the Surrogate has power as would a supreme court justice to direct an order for confirmation to be entered (Matter of Leffingwell, 30 Hun, 528, 530); and exceptions filed after the Surrogate has so acted upon the report are unavailing, provided of course the eight days, within which exceptions may be filed, shall have expired before the making of the decree. The Surrogate must consider the referee's findings of fact which, as has been already observed, he should sustain, unless they be clearly against the weight of evidence (Matter of Odell, 1 Connoly, 94), or without any evidence to support them. Estate of Brady, 17 N. Y. St. Rep. 836.

§ 139. The Surrogate's duty regarding the report.—However, what has been said in regard to the confirmation of a referee's report as of course, "unless exceptions thereto are filed and served within 8 days after a written notice of its filing and a copy of the report shall have been served upon the opposing party" is not to be taken as depriving the Surrogate of his discretionary power over the referee's report; for example, he is not limited to the conclusions of law drawn by the referee from his findings of fact. In two recent cases the Court of Appeals has so held. Matter of Clark, 168 N. Y. 427, and Matter of Barefield, 177 N. Y. 387, 391. In the latter case the Surrogate drew absolutely contrary conclusions of law from the referee's findings of fact. The Court of Appeals held the last clause of § 2546 was not, explicit as it is, self-executing. The Surrogate has the right, and it is even his duty to act upon it, even if the specified period has expired. Ibid. And see Matter of Shaefer, 65 App. Div. 378, 382, so, although no exceptions be filed, and the findings of fact remain undisturbed, a Surrogate may modify the report in regard to the relief suggested and as modified confirm it; so, also, in the absence of exceptions where the report is not accompanied by the testimony as required by the Code, the Surrogate may set aside the report of his own motion as he certainly would upon motion of an objecting party. It was so held where the referee only returned imperfect notes of the testimony with his report (Matter of Azzeli's Estate, 4 N. Y. Supp. 462), where Ransom, Surr., used the following language: "The requisites of the statute and the rules of practice have not been regarded by the referee in any substantial respect. There is no testimony returned; simply notes here and there of something sworn to. The attorneys on both sides should have requested the referee to take all the testimony and caused it to be signed by each witness. If he neglected or refused to do this, application should have been made to the court for his removal."

§ 140. Time within which report must be acted on.—Where exceptions are filed to the referee's report in time, it must be acted upon, that is, confirmed, approved, modified, sent back or rejected within ninety days after it has been submitted to the Surrogate. If this be not done, then under § 2546 (ante, § 133) "it shall be deemed to have been confirmed as of course, and a decree to that effect may be entered by any party interested in the proceeding upon two days' notice." But, as just noted, in spite of the intent of those who framed this amendment, the Court of Appeals has held, four to three, that there is no confirmation by operation of the statute, until and unless a party interested notices a decree thereunder for entry, and in the meantime the Surrogate is not ousted of jurisdiction, and may, even after the ninety days, act on the report, and set it aside providing he acts before any party moves. Matter of Clark, 168 N. Y. 427, rev'g 61 App. Div. 337. Unfortunately the party entitled to confirmation of the decree in this case was guilty of laches and acts amounting to acquiescence in the Surrogate's decree made after the ninety days.* The Clark case is followed and reasserted in Matter of Barefield, 177 N. Y. 387, 391. The effect of these decisions is that the report of a Surrogate's referee is never final of itself. There must be a decision and decree by the Surrogate. His decree is the "first binding adjudication," from which alone can an appeal be taken.

The Surrogate must consider the exceptions in detail (Ex parte Bedford, 30 Hun, 551), and if he is left in doubt as to the validity of the exceptions by a lack of evidence, he may reserve the exceptions and send the matter back for further testimony. Ex parte Pollock, 3 Redf. 100; Matter of Bayer, 54 Hun, 189.

The provision of § 1023 of the Code prohibiting a referee from making additional findings of fact or ruling on questions of law after he has rendered his decision, are not applicable to special proceedings, and therefore do not apply to Surrogates' Courts. Matter of Bayer, supra, Barker, P. J. But a matter will not be sent back to a referee for a rehearing for an immaterial cause or where no fraud or clerical error is claimed to exist, or where it is clear that no injustice has been done. Matter of Kranz, 41 Hun, 463. Nor will the report be sent back merely because there is a conflict of evidence in the testimony taken before the referee; in such a case the Surrogate will support the finding of the referee unless it clearly amounts to a finding unsupported by evidence. Matter of Odell, 1 Connoly, 94. A Surrogate may send a matter back for additional report where there has been some accidental omission rendering the report incomplete or unintelligible. Abercrombie v. Holder, 63 N. Y. 628.

* Parker, J., in his dissenting opinion correctly states the intent of this amendment, drawn by the author as counsel to the committee of the Assembly that investigated the Surrogate's Court in New York County.

§ 141. Filing new objections to account before referee.—It is to be noted that where a disputed account is referred, the issues raised before the referee are determined by the objections filed in the Surrogate's Court. Prior to the Code, when it was the practice to send such accounts to an auditor, it was held by the Court of Appeals (Boughton v. Flint, 74 N. Y. 476), that the auditor had no judicial powers but was employed simply to aid the Surrogate, and that it was not within his power to allow further objections to be filed before him, and that the proper practice in case additional objections are desired to be filed would be by application to the Surrogate, by whom they could then be referred to the auditor. It is submitted that the reasoning on which this decision was based is not applicable to referees under the Code in Surrogates' Courts in view of the decisions conceding judicial powers to such referees, and even holding that a referee has power to allow an objection to be amended, and even to allow new objections to be interposed (Matter of Fithian, 3 N. Y. Supp. 193, Ransom, Surr.), although in this case leave to file the new objection was in fact granted by the Surrogate. See part VIII, Accountings. See Matter of Gearns, 27 Misc. 76, and cases cited.

§ 142. Compensation of referee.—With regard to his fees a referee in a Surrogate's Court stands substantially upon the same basis as a referee in the Supreme Court. This is expressly provided by § 2566 of the Code, which is as follows:

> § 2566. Fees of other officers, and witnesses.
> Each other officer, including a referee, and each witness, is entitled to the same fees, for his services and for traveling, as he is allowed for like services in the supreme court.
> 2 R. S. 69, § 19.

The statutory compensation of referees in the Supreme Court was increased by ch. 90 of the Laws of 1896, amending § 3296 of the Code to $10.00 a day. There is no question, however, but that the parties to a reference in the Surrogate's Court may stipulate that the referee shall not be limited to the statutory fees for his services; but, to make such stipulation valid, it must, first, be entered upon the minutes, and, second, it must fix the rate of compensation. First National Bank v. Tamajo, 77 N. Y. 476; Griggs v. Guinn, 29 Abb. N. C. 144; Griggs v. Day, 18 N. Y. Supp. 796, aff'd 135 N. Y. 469.

If the parties particularly agree at the commencement of the reference that the referee shall not be limited to the statutory fee, and also agree what he shall be entitled to charge, a subsequent entry upon the minutes of the terms of their agreement will be deemed to have been made in compliance with the statute, "at or before the commencement of the trial." Griggs v. Day, 135 N. Y. 469; Philbin v. Patrick, 22 How. Pr. 1. A stipulation that the referee may charge such fees for his services as he deems proper is insufficient, and if such stipulation is subsequently repudiated, the court is limited to allowing only the statutory fees. Matter of Hurd,

6 Misc. 171. The referee is entitled to charge for every day occupied in the hearings, and also for the time spent in the investigation and consideration of the case after its submission. Berg v. Rottek, Daily Register, Dec. 28, 1889. This of course means a reasonable time and must be determined by the nature of the case or the character of the questions before him. Fay v. Muhlker, 13 Daly, 314. The amount of time spent, when the fees are to be taxed, should be proved by affidavit. Such affidavit should not only show the time actually used, but should also contain a specific allegation that the time used was necessarily required. But if the parties omit to require such proof of time occupied, and an allowance is incorporated in the decree and the executor directed to pay the referee a specific sum, an Appellate Court will not disturb the Surrogate's allowance; for no question as to its propriety is in such case presented. Hancock v Meeker, 95 N. Y. 528; Kearney v. McKeon, 85 N. Y. 136; Brown v. Windmuller, 4 J. & S. 75; Shultz v. Whitney, 17 How. Pr. 471.

In the absence of a stipulation, the statutory provision is mandatory upon the Surrogate in fixing the referee's compensation. Matter of Willett, 6 Dem. 435. So, also, if a stipulation be made upon the referee's minutes that the referee shall be paid such sum as shall be fixed by the Surrogate upon the coming in of his report, the Surrogate has no power to give him more than the statutory compensation. Matter of Gillman, 12 Civ. Proc. R. 179.

In New York County, under Rule 22, in view of the expenses of a reference being taxable on the entry of the decree, it is required that the referee's bill (and the stenographer's) be sustained "by their affidavits or detailed proof." It seems infra dig. for a referee who is the alter ego of the Surrogate to have to swear to the amount of his service in hours or days, but it is quite proper his bill should be fully itemized as to every element of his charge particularly if the parties stipulate to pay "for each and every hour."

§ 143. Same subject.—The cases discussed, ante, under stenographers' fees are germane to those of referees. See Bottome v. Neeley, 124 App. Div. 600; Austin v. Monro, 47 N. Y. 360; O'Brien v. Jackson, 167 N. Y. 31; Shaffer v. Bacon, 35 App. Div. 248.

§ 144. How to collect referee's fees.—Before the Code it was held that an auditor could not withhold his report until his fees were paid, but that it was proper that the fixing of his compensation should be deferred until the confirmation of his report, at which time the Surrogate should fix it. Ex parte Foster, 3 Redf. 532. Since the Code, however, it appears that a referee may refuse to file his report until his fees are paid, although he runs a risk of the termination of the reference in case he fails to file or deliver his report within sixty days, as prescribed by § 1019 of the Code. See Matter of Santos, 31 Misc. 76. Nevertheless even though he have not filed his report within the sixty days, he will not be precluded from recovering his compensation in the absence of proof that either party actually elected to terminate the reference. Nealis v. Meyer, 21 Misc. 344.

See Hierman v. Hapgood, 1 Den. 188; O'Neil v. Howe, 16 Daly, 181. To avoid the termination of the reference the requirement of § 1019 must be literally complied with. Phipps v. Carman, 84 N. Y. 650. For if not, the right to fees may be forfeited. Bottome v. Neeley, supra. And if the referee, by his own fault, forfeits his fees under a stipulation which includes his and the stenographer's he may become personally liable to the stenographer himself, since he has destroyed his right against the parties. Ibid. Where within the sixty days, a referee, having completed his report, gave written notice to the attorney for the prevailing party that his report was ready for delivery upon payment of his fees, but it was not filed or delivered until after the sixty days, and after a notice of termination had been served, the tender of the report was held not to be a delivery within the intent of the Code. Little v. Lynch, 99 N. Y. 112. There is a peculiarity regarding references in the Surrogates' Courts, due to the fact, that on the one hand the Surrogate is powerless to direct the referee to file his report in advance of receiving his fees, and on the other hand powerless to direct any one of the parties to the proceeding to pay the referee before the report is filed. Geib v. Topping, 83 N. Y. 46; Perkins v. Taylor, 19 Abb. Pr. 146; Matter of Kraus, 4 Dem. 217. In the case last cited Surrogate Rollins used the following language: "If the referee shall see fit to file his report without exacting his fees, provision can be made, in the final decree or order that may hereafter be entered in this proceeding, for the payment of those fees by such of the parties hereto as may be found justly chargeable therefor. And if any one of the parties shall pay the referee, and it shall, at the termination of the proceeding, appear that such party ought not, under all the circumstances, to be charged with the expenses of the reference, a direction may be given for his reimbursement, and for payment of costs of reference, either out of the assets of the estate or by some one of the parties hereto as may seem just and proper." Originally, a referee must look for his fees to the party who takes up the report. Attorney General v. Continental Life Ins. Co., 93 N. Y. 45, 47. But the Court of Appeals held that while ordinarily, the court could not direct the parties to action to pay the fees and take up a report, yet, where the party was a receiver appointed by the court, whose legal expenses are properly payable out of the fund involved, the court has power to order the referee's fees to be paid out of the fund. So it has been held by analogy, that where a reference in a Surrogate's Court is necessary, as for example, upon the accounting of an executor or administrator who is an officer of the court over whom it has general supervision and control in directing the distribution of the estate or fund, the Surrogate's Court will have power to direct the payment of the referee's fees in a proper case out of such fund. Matter of Hurd, 6 Misc. 171, Abbott, Surr. The Appellate Division recently held that the referee has the right to exact as a condition of the delivery of the report the payment of his fees, and the court will sustain the attorney of the successful party in paying the same in order to secure the report; and lays down the rule, that the attorney in the event that the amount paid shall prove to be greater than the court will allow, is not personally to be chargeable with the excess paid; but the payment to the referee will be deemed to be made upon the implied condition that they shall be adjusted at the time of taxation of costs exactly as they might have been fixed by the court, if an application for that purpose had been made, and an understanding between the parties must be implied, that if, for any reason the amount paid to the referee shall prove to be greater than the court thinks is a proper allowance, the excess will be returned. Duhrkop v. White, 13 App. Div. 293, opinion by Rumsey, all concurred. See also Matter of Kenny, N. Y. Law Journal, October 24, 1890. Rule 22, of the Surrogate's Rules in the county of New York, provides explicitly, that where a party to a decree shall deem himself entitled to tax disbursements for referees' and stenographers' fees, such disbursements should be sustained by affidavit or detailed proof by the referee or stenographer. This is exclusive of the certificate required of such referee when services of counsel upon the reference is made the basis of a claim for an allowance.

If the case is not one where the Surrogate may properly direct the referee's fees to be paid out of the fund or estate, the referee is remitted, in case he be not paid his fees when the report is taken up, or filed, to a common-law action to recover them. Little v. Lynch, 99 N. Y. 112, 114.

§ 145. Trial by jury.—It has been stated that Surrogates have no jurisdiction over civil actions. See ante, part 2, ch. 1. Nevertheless provision is made by the Code under which the verdict of a jury can be had in certain specific cases on specific issues of fact arising in proceedings in the Surrogate's Court. The provisions of the Code are contained in § 2547, which is partly as follows:

> The surrogate may, in his discretion, make an order directing the trial by jury, at a trial term of the supreme court to be held within the county, or in the county court of the county, of any controverted question of fact arising in a special proceeding for the disposition of real property of a decedent, as prescribed in title fifth of this chapter. The order must state distinctly and plainly each question of fact to be tried, and it is the only authority needed for the trial. Either of the surrogates of the county of New York may, in his discretion, make an order transferring to the supreme court any special proceeding for the probate of a will pending before him, or in the court over which he presides, and thereupon the issues of fact arising in such proceeding shall be heard and determined by the supreme court. The order transferring such proceeding is the only authority necessary for the trial in the supreme court of such issues of fact. Such issues of fact shall be tried by jury. . . . If a motion to set aside the verdict be not made, or if at the termination of the proceedings for its review, the verdict is sustained, the supreme court shall certify to the surrogate's court the verdict, which shall be final and conclusive upon the parties to the litigation and their privies. Thereafter all proceedings relating to the will and to the estate of the decedent shall be had in the surrogate's court. The original will shall be returned to the surrogate's court at the time the verdict is certified thereto. The costs shall be taxed in the surrogate's court, and shall be the same, and shall be awarded in the same manner as if the proceedings had been heard by the surrogate. § 2547, Code Civil Proc., in part.

(It will be noted that a portion of § 2547 has been omitted above; it relates entirely to appeals from the verdict of such a jury and will be included and discussed in ch. VI, post, under Appeals.)

From the section just quoted it appears that there are only two proceedings in which the Surrogate may direct a trial by jury of specific issues. The one a special proceeding for the disposition of real property of a decedent, the other a special proceeding for the probate of a will. Any controverted question of fact arising in the first proceeding may be so dealt with by any Surrogate in the State. But issues of fact arising in a probate proceeding can only be transferred by either of the Surrogates of the county of New York. A further distinction is to be noted, that in the first case, that is, of a proceeding for the disposition of a decedent's real property, the proceeding itself is not transferred to the Supreme Court but the Surrogate's order specifies the controverted question or questions of fact, which in his discretion he determines should be tried by a jury and only those issues (which must be plainly and distinctly stated) will be so tried. But the second case, that is a special proceeding for the probate of a will pending in the county of New York, it is provided shall be transferred as a proceeding to the Supreme Court and thereupon the issues of fact arising in such proceeding shall be heard and determined by the Supreme Court. Various puzzling questions have arisen as to the Surrogate's power in the premises when the order directing the trial of a specific issue or transferring a probate proceeding has once been made and while the proceedings or issues are before the Supreme Court. The intent of the Code is, in the first place, very clear that when the Surrogate has directed such a trial by jury and the verdict has been certified back to him (whether immediately in case of no appeal, or finally after appeal and affirmation or otherwise as the case may be), the verdict shall be final and conclusive upon the parties to the litigation and their privies. By reason of this explicit language confusion is likely to be caused, if the distinction is not kept in mind between this trial by jury which the Surrogate may direct and the trial by jury herein below discussed which the Appellate Court may award where a decree admitting a will to probate, or revoking the probate of a will is reversed or modified by such Appellate Court. In the latter case the Surrogate's Court has no jurisdiction to grant a new trial, for until the final judgment is entered upon the verdict of the jury and finally certified to the Surrogate's Court, the matter is deemed to be still pending in the Supreme Court. Matter of Patterson, 63 Hun, 529; Matter of Clark, 40 Hun, 233. The reason for this is that the probate proceeding in case of an appeal from the Surrogate's decree is removed into the Supreme Court, which becomes a court of original jurisdiction and as such, has power to decide any question of fact which the Surrogate could have decided and may even in its discretion receive further or documentary evidence, or appoint a referee. Code Civil Proc. § 2586. But in regard to a case where the trial by jury is ordered by the Surrogate, a motion for a new trial may be entertained either by the Surrogate or the Supreme Court. Code Civ. Proc. § 2548. See Matter of Booth, 24 N. Y. St. Rep. 647. Where the whole proceeding is removed into the Supreme Court it would doubtless be improper for the Surrogate to make any order in the premises. Thus, before the abolition of the Court of Common Pleas in the city of New York, when the Surrogate had transferred a proceeding to that court, it appeared that a witness was about to leave the State, who was a necessary and important witness, the petitioner for probate at once moved in the Court of Common Pleas for an order for the examination of the witness before trial, but this order was vacated on the ground that the Code provisions upon which it was founded had no application to special proceedings but only to actions, and consequently could not refer to any matter removed from the Surrogate's Court. The proponents promptly moved in the Surrogate's Court for an order vacating the order for transfer so as to vest the Surrogate again with jurisdiction over the proceeding, with a view to his granting an order for the examination of the witness. Surrogate Rollins held, that he had no power to vacate the order of transfer, but intimated that as he was about to leave the county and as until his return the powers and jurisdiction of his court were to be exercised by the Court of Common Pleas, the application could be renewed in that court during the time it was possessed of his powers, although under the mere order of transfer it had no such power. Matter of Delaplaine, 6 Dem. 269.

It is submitted that if the Court of Common Pleas had power to make this order for examination in the proceeding pending before it, only by virtue of its temporary exercise of the powers and jurisdiction of the Surrogate's Court, it is clear that the Surrogate could, in the exercise of the same power, have made the order for the examination of the witness, himself, and if such power should be exercised in a given case it would doubtless be sustained in the absence of any other provision by law, as otherwise a party might be materially prejudiced. And it has been expressly held (Matter of Blair, 60 Hun, 523, 525), that where a Surrogate transferred certain probate proceedings to the Court of Common Pleas he was not divested thereby of any of the powers conferred upon him by the statute, except the specific powers expressly conferred upon the Court of Common Pleas by force of the transfer. The General Term, Bartlett, J., held that, "he could doubtless no longer try the issues of fact arising in the special proceeding for the probate of a will; that power by force of this transfer at once became vested in the Court of Common Pleas. But that power alone was transferred and that power alone became so vested. The transfer of such other powers as are vested by law in the Surrogate's Court, and are not necessary to the due execution of the power transferred cannot be implied." So it was held in that case that an application to the Surrogate's Court while the probate proceedings were still in the Court of Common Pleas, for the appointment of a temporary administrator was proper and should be granted. And it was moreover held that the provision in § 2547, "Thereafter all proceedings relating to the will and to the estate of the decedent shall be had in the Surrogate's Court," were not to be taken as meaning, that during the transfer, jurisdiction over such proceedings was in the court to which the specific matter was transferred, but that the words were inserted in the section plainly for abundant caution.

Order directing trial of issues by jury.

In the matter of the disposition of the real estate of deceased, for the payment of his debts.

By virtue of the authority vested in this court and in the Surrogate of this county by section 2547 of the Code of Civil Procedure, it is hereby Ordered, that the below specified controverted questions of fact arising in the above entitled proceeding be tried by jury at a trial term of the Supreme Court, to be held within this county (or in the County Court of this county).

And it is further Ordered, that the verdict of said jury be certified back to this court according to law.

Order by New York Surrogate for trial by jury under section 2547 of the Code. Note.

In the matter of the probate of a paper propounded as the last will and testament of deceased.

By virtue of the authority vested in the Surrogates of the County of New York by section 2547 of the Code of Civil Procedure, it is hereby, on motion of the above Surrogate

Ordered, that the above entitled proceeding now pending

Note. This order is the only authority necessary for the

in this court for the probate of the alleged last will and testament of late of the county of New York, deceased, be and the same hereby is transferred to the Supreme Court in and for the county of New York for the trial of the issues of fact in said proceeding by a jury.

(Signature.)

Note. It seems to be the practice for the calendar clerk to notify the parties of the removal of the proceedings by virtue of this order. It should be further noted that the verdict of the jury is certified back to the Surrogate's Court by the Supreme Court and that no order retransferring the proceedings to the Surrogate's Court is necessary, as after the said verdict is certified back all proceedings relating to the will and to the estate of the decedent must be had in the Surrogate's Court by operation of law. See section 2547.

An order, a form for which has already been given, remitting proceedings to the Surrogate's Court, is necessary only where proceedings have been transferred to the Supreme Court by reason of some vacancy or disability of the Surrogate discussed under that head.

CHAPTER IV

DECREES AND ORDERS

§ 147. Surrogates' decrees.—Section 2550 is as follows: "The final determination of the rights of a party to a special proceeding in the Surrogate's Court is styled indifferently a final order, or a decree."

Such determination of course presupposes a proceeding before the Surrogate initiated by petition and citation. This final order or decree contains the adjudication which the Surrogate is required to make fixing the rights of the parties before him. The validity of the decree hinges on, first, the power of the Surrogate to make it, which of course involves the regularity of the proceeding with regard to the jurisdictional facts. Secondly, it hinges upon its formal regularity. With regard to the first question it is merely necessary to restate the proposition that one claiming under a decree of the Surrogate must show affirmatively his authority to make it. Matter of Hawley, 104 N. Y. 250, 262; Farmers' L. & T. Co. v. Hill, 4 Dem. 41. As to its formal character the decree must be signed by the Surrogate. Roderigas v. E. R. Sav. Inst., 76 N. Y. 316. Should an unsigned decree be filed by the clerk, it can have no validity from the mere fact of filing, and can be disregarded without liability to proceedings for contempt. McNaughton v. Chave, 5 Abb. N. C. 225. One of the tests of whether an order made by a Surrogate is a final order, that is, a decree within the meaning of § 2550, is whether a party can be punished, as for contempt for disregarding it or disobeying it. See discussion under § 2555.

The best rule for determining, however, is the ordinary test of common sense as to whether the order in question is a final determination of a special proceeding or not.

Thus, where, after proceedings by a judgment creditor against an executor in the Surrogate's Court, petition is made that the executor be punished for contempt for failure to pay the judgment claim, and upon such petition the Surrogate makes an order directing the executor to pay, such an order is a final order within the meaning of the section. There is no further order in the premises which the Surrogate need make in the proceeding. It is a final determination as between the judgment creditor and the legal representative of the estate; it is in effect a decree for the payment of the money. See Matter of McMaster, 14 Civ. Proc. 195.

§ 148. Effect of Surrogate's decree.—There are certain specific statutory provisions. See section infra, defining the conclusiveness of certain decrees of a Surrogate. Of course a party obtaining a decree is estopped thereby from attacking it. This conclusiveness is irrespective of any

Code provision. Chester v. Buffalo Car Mfg. Co., 183 N. Y. 425. This does not mean he may not move to resettle it, or to open it, but that so long as it stands it is binding on him. Generally speaking, however, the conclusiveness of a decree depends upon the regularity of the proceedings before the Surrogate, the citation of all necessary parties upon such proceeding, and its jurisdictional validity. No consent of parties as has been already noted can give validity to the decree if he has not jurisdiction to make it, but his decree upon a question within his jurisdiction is, generally speaking, conclusive upon the parties to the proceeding. Frethey v. Durant, 24 App. Div. 58, 62; Graham v. Linden, 50 N. Y. 547. Except as to particular decrees, the effect of which is limited by the statute, a Surrogate's decree is a decree in rem and, therefore, is conclusive upon the question covered by it. Thus, where a Surrogate has jurisdiction to pass upon a claim, and decides adversely, his decree bars a subsequent suit upon such claim. Baldwin v. Smith, 91 Hun, 230. The right to appeal from a decree is always to be taken into account, but apart from this the cases are uniform with reference to the conclusiveness of the Surrogate's decrees. See Stiles v. Burch, 5 Paige, 132, where the Court of Chancery expressly declared in its own decree that the decree of the Surrogate involved in the case at bar was binding and conclusive between the parties to the proceeding as to the facts upon which the Surrogate had power to adjudicate. See also Wright v. M. E. Church, Hoff. Ch. 202, holding that the Surrogate's decree, his jurisdiction being conceded, was final as to all who were legally competent and were cited; that it was pleadable in every court and the only remedy was by appeal. See Ball v. Miller, 17 How. Pr. 300, holding that a Surrogate's decree upon a final accounting is conclusive as to balance therein stated to be due the representative of the estate. See opinion in Kirk v. McCann, 117 App. Div. 56, discussing binding effect of unreversed decrees, whether the decision was right or wrong, or the parties adult or infant. In that case the decree had directed an erroneous disposition of surplus income. It was held to conclude the parties to its date, though not to prevent a subsequent decree on a correct theory disposing of subsequently accruing income. Such a decree is also conclusive upon the sureties in the administration bond; and this regardless of their being cited. See Official Bonds, post. See also Johnson v. Smith, 25 Hun, 171. Such a decree has been held wholly conclusive against one of the parties interested in the fund, duly cited upon the accounting. Bushnell v. Drinker, 5 Redf. 581; Brown v. Wheeler, 53 App. Div. 6, 8, citing Garlock v. Vandevort, 128 N. Y. 374; Riggs v. Cragg, 89 N. Y. 480; Matter of Verplanck, 91 N. Y. 439; Purdy v. Hayt, 92 N. Y. 446. One not thus a party may, however, move in a proper case to reopen the decree and proceeding. It was held in Matter of Killan, 66 App. Div. 312, that this is the proper remedy, and if he tries to compel an account de novo, his application may be denied, and costs imposed on him personally. Ibid. But this ruling was reversed, 172 N. Y. 547, holding the applicant's right to an accounting was a substantial right, not so to be divested except as provided in the Code, whereunder the one accounting could have secured a citation to unknown parties. (But see dissenting opinion, the reasoning of which is persuasive.) And in a later case, Matter of Gill, 183 N. Y. 347, a creditor was held absolutely entitled to petition for an accounting, although he had omitted to present his claim pursuant to the published notice.

And in Matter of Gall, 182 N. Y. 270, a creditor was allowed to move to open and modify a decree eight years after its entry, having presented his claim, which was ignored, and the decree made without citing him, settling an account in which his claim was not specified.

These decisions are somewhat puzzling in view of the explicit language of the Code as to opening decrees where appeal is not an available remedy. But they certainly hold that a creditor not a party to an accounting can either move to reopen the proceeding or petition for a new accounting. Of course this does not revive his rights if they have been barred under the short statute, or increase them if by his laches his action is taken after distribution, and the representative has as such no further assets.

§ 149. Same subject.—However, every decree must be viewed in the light of the subject-matter with which it has to deal. Its conclusiveness is determined thereby. For example: A decree made by the Surrogate in the final settlement of an executor's accounts is an adjudication merely as to amounts received and paid out by him, and, therefore, as to the balance due to or from such executor. Johnson v. Richards, 3 Hun, 454. But it conclusively establishes the propriety of his acts up to that time (Matter of Union Trust Co., 65 App. Div. 449), in the capacity in which he accounts. For it has been held (Matter of Doheny, 70 App. Div. 370), that where A and B accounted as temporary administrators, the decree was inconclusive when later they accounted for the same estate as trustees. See § 2742, C. C. P., discussed, post. But where the Surrogate has jurisdiction of the parties and of the subject-matter, his decree has the same force and effect as the judgment of any other competent court. Garlock v. Vandevort, 128 N. Y. 374; Shimmel v. Morse, 57 App. Div. 434; Mutual Life v. Schwaner, 36 Hun, 373, aff'd 101 N. Y. 681; Baldwin v. Smith, 91 Hun, 230. As to infant parties, the court, having duly appointed a guardian ad litem, has full jurisdiction of the person, and its decree binds the infant. Matter of Hawley, 100 N. Y. 206; Matter of Wood, 70 App. Div. 321, 324. So future remainder-men, not in being, may be bound. Rhodes v. Caswell, 41 App. Div. 229. But the decree cannot have any conclusive effect or operate as a bar as to property not involved in it. Frethey v. Durant, 24 App. Div. 58.

§ 150. Collateral conclusiveness.—With regard to the collateral conclusiveness of such a decree it is to be borne in mind that as the court is one of special and limited jurisdiction those claiming collaterally under such a decree must prove the jurisdictional facts from which it derives its validity. Corwin v. Merrit, 3 Barb. 341. But see People v. Harman, 2 Sw. 576. It follows from the general rules of estoppel, that the proceedings of a Surrogate having jurisdiction cannot be questioned collaterally. Jenkins v. Robinson, 4 Wend. 436; Bensen v. Manhattan R. Co., 14 App. Div. 442. In this case the Appellate Division of the First Department (opinions by O'Brien and Ingraham, JJ.) passed upon the power of the Surrogate of New York County in probate proceedings to determine in certain cases the validity of testamentary dispositions affecting real estate, as defined by § 11 of ch. 359 of the Laws of 1870. The question before the court was whether under a fair construction of that act the Surrogate had jurisdiction to make a binding decree in reference to such testamentary dispositions. It appeared that the Surrogate under the act was requested by the heirs-at-law to determine the validity of certain devises or bequests under the will of the testatrix. The court held first, that the language of the act was broad enough to show a legislative intent to confer upon the Surrogate jurisdiction upon the probate of the will to determine the validity of the devises or bequests which were assailed by the heirs-at-law. Second, that by submitting to the Surrogate the determination of these questions the heirs-at-law should be held to have waived their constitutional right to have the question of title tried by a jury. And in the third place, although it might appear, that had the decree of the Surrogate been appealed from it might have been modified or reversed, nevertheless having been made in a proceeding to which the heirs-at-law were parties, it was binding and could not be collaterally attacked. To same effect Brown v. Landen, 30 Hun, 57, affirmed in 98 N. Y. 634; Roderigas v. E. R. Sav. Inst., 63 N. Y. 460; Same v. Same, 76 N. Y. 316; Parhan v. Moran, 4 Hun, 717. The general rule in this regard was stated by Marcy, J., in Johnson v. Robinson, 4 Wend. 437, 441. "However extraordinary or erroneous be the determination and proceedings of a court of limited authority, if it acts within its proper jurisdiction as to the subject-matter, place and person, its judgment or decree cannot be impeached or invalidated in a collateral action." So also if a decree be acquiesced in by the parties for a long time (as four years) it will not be disturbed in the absence of fraud. Matter v. Waack, 5 N. Y. Supp. 522.

§ 151. The statutory provisions.—The rule is now defined by statute.

> Where the jurisdiction of a surrogate's court to make, in a case specified in the last section, a decree or other determination, is drawn in question collaterally, and the necessary parties were duly cited or appeared, the jurisdiction is presumptively, and, in the absence of fraud or collusion, conclusively, established, by an allegation of the jurisdictional facts, contained in a written petition or answer, duly verified, used in the surrogate's court. The fact that the parties were duly cited is presumptively proved, by a recital to that effect in the decree. § 2473, Code Civil Proc.

(People v. Harman, 2 Sw. 576, holding that recital of jurisdictional facts in the decree raised no presumption was before the enactment of this section.) Attack in collateral proceedings is limited to the jurisdiction of the Surrogate to make the decree. See Dakin v. Hudson, 6 Cowen, 221.

Statutory changes in the power of the Surrogate have no ex post facto operation; so, where a Surrogate in New York County prior to 1880 adjudicated in his decree admitting a will to probate upon the validity of a disposition of real estate in said will, acting under authority of § 11 of ch. 359 of the Laws of 1870, the Appellate Division held that such a decree could not be attacked collaterally. Bensen v. Manhattan R. Co., 14 App. Div. 442. See also as to conclusiveness of a decree, People v. Townsend, 37 Barb. 520; Curtis v. Williams, 3 Dem. 63; Matter of Kranz, 41 Hun, 463; Newcome v. St. Peters Church, 2 Sand. Ch. 636; Scoffield v. Churchill, 72 N. Y. 565; Gerould v. Wilson, 81 N. Y. 573; Wetmore v. Parker, 52 N. Y. 450; Matter of Harvey, 3 Redf. 214; Leonard v. Columbia S. N. Co., 84 N. Y. 48, 55. In Shaw v. N. Y. Central, 101 App. Div. 246, the administrator's right to sue was attacked on the ground that his petition for letters was verified before a New York notary under a Columbia County venue. Held, the effect was merely to make the petition an unverified one; but the letters having been issued were prima facie sufficient proof of his representative status. The court cited Belden v. Meeker, 2 Lans. 473, 47 N. Y. 307; Farley v. McConnell, 52 N. Y. 630; Welch v. N. Y. Central, 53 N. Y. 610.

In O'Connor v. Huggins, 113 N. Y. 511, the Court of Appeals summarizes the rule as to the conclusiveness of Surrogates' decrees in the following language:

"The record shows that the necessary facts were alleged upon which the Surrogate acted in granting them. His determination upon the proof cannot be disturbed by an attack upon its correctness, in a collateral proceeding. Surrogates' Courts, though established as courts of special and limited jurisdiction, have possessed the general and exclusive jurisdiction to order the administration upon the estates of deceased persons, and, where jurisdiction to act exists, their orders and decrees are made conclusive until they are revoked, or reversed on appeal. 2 R. S. 80, § 56. That conclusiveness attaches in a case where a jurisdictional fact is in question, and it then appears that there was proof with respect to its existence, upon which the Surrogate decided. His adjudication, in the exercise of his general and conclusive jurisdiction, where jurisdictional facts, necessary to the possession of that jurisdiction, appear to have been alleged, and when the necessary parties have been duly cited to appear before him, is not thereafter open to collateral attack. Power to affect the adjudication resides in the court which made it, and in the court to which it may be appealed; but otherwise it is not open for question. This principle, of course, in its application to other parties affected, implies the absence of fraud, or collusion. (See Fulton v. Whitney, 66 N. Y. 548.) It is not material how the decision was reached, provided the facts, which confer power to act, were alleged. The Surrogate was not confined to any form of procedure, or to any mode of proof, in acting upon an application for letters. The defect in the allegations of the petition was supplied by allegations in a subsequent deposition, and we are bound to presume that, prior to issuing the letters, the Surrogate deliberated and decided upon the right of the petitioner."

The plea, when urged collaterally, that the decision was erroneous, must always be unavailing. For its errors the remedy is by a direct proceeding for their correction, and subsequent proceedings which rest upon the decree, will not be affected, however erroneous the adjudication may be urged to have been. Porter v. Purdy, 29 N. Y. 106. The dictum in the foregoing opinion, with regard to the absence of fraud or collusion is in conflict with a decision in Stillwell v. Carpenter, 2 Abb. N. C. 238, which held that not even fraud in securing a decree would be sufficient grounds for attack; for that the party prejudiced had his remedy by an action in equity to be relieved against the fraud. But see Hoes v. N. Y., N. H. & H. R. R., 173 N. Y. 435, rev'g 73 App. Div. 363, which settles the point. In this case the right of the public administrator to sue for damages for death of intestate was attacked because of the manner in which his letters were issued. It appeared that legal fraud had been committed in that the only assets here on which jurisdiction to grant letters could be based were a watch and chain brought into the State solely for that purpose. Held the status of the plaintiff under such letters could be attacked collaterally. (See opinion.) The cause of action, negligently causing death, it must be noted, did not arise here, but in the State from which the "assets" were imported.

If it appears, however, that the Surrogate had no jurisdiction to make the decree in question it will have no conclusiveness. Ziemer v. Crucible Steel Co., 99 App. Div. 169. So, where the decree purports to adjudicate upon a contested claim of a creditor over which the Surrogate has no jurisdiction (Matter of Walker, 136 N. Y. 20, 27), the decree is not binding (Tucker v. Tucker, 4 Keyes, 136), although it would be otherwise if it passed upon the claim of an executor against the estate. Kyle v. Kyle, 67 N. Y. 400; Shakespeare V. Markham, 72 N. Y. 400; Boughton v. Flint, 74 N. Y. 476. See also Mott v. Fort Edward &c. Co., 79 App. Div. 179, where recital, in decree for sale of decedent's realty, of due service of citation was held to prove presumptively the fact of due service, as against collateral attack.

In Matter of Welch, 61 Misc. 5, Ketcham, Surr., held conclusive on accounting, a former decree, in a proceeding to remove an executor for improper dealings with bonds, and holding they belonged to him; it being claimed again on the accounting that they should be accounted for as of the estate, citing Shearer v. Field, 6 Misc. 189, and Matter of McGoughran, 124 App. Div. 312.

§ 152. Conclusiveness specially.—The effect of certain specific decrees has been defined by the Code, and the various sections are here collated to avoid confusion. First, as to decrees on probate, § 2626 provides as follows:

a. Probate; how far conclusive as to personalty.

A decree admitting to probate a will of personal property, made as prescribed in this article, is conclusive, as an adjudication, upon all the questions determined by the surrogate pursuant to this article, until it is reversed upon appeal, or revoked by the surrogate, except in an action brought under section twenty-six hundred and fifty-three-a of this act to determine the validity or invalidity of such will; and except that a determination, made under section twenty-six hundred and twenty-four of this act, is conclusive, only upon the petitioner, and each party who was duly cited or appeared, and every person claiming from, through, or under either of them. § 2626, Code Civil Proc.

And § 2627 relates to the conclusiveness of a probate decree as to real property.

b. Probate how far conclusive as to realty.

A decree, admitting to probate a will of real property, made as prescribed in this article, establishes, presumptively only, all the matters determined by the surrogate, pursuant to this article, as against a party who was duly cited, or a person claiming from, through, or under him; or upon the trial of an action, or hearing of a special proceeding, in which controversy arises concerning the will, or where the decree is produced in evidence, in favor of or against a person, or in a case, specified in this section, the testimony taken in the special proceeding, wherein it was made, may be read in evidence, with the same force and effect, as if it was taken upon the trial of the action, or the hearing of the special proceeding, wherein the decree is so produced. § 2627, Code Civil Proc.

The primary distinction between the two sections, is that as to the personal estate the decree is conclusive and as to real estate it is merely presumptive. Smith v. Hilton, 19 N. Y. S. R. 340. It is also provided, in respect to a decree for payment and distribution, where an account is judicially settled:

c. With respect to the matters enumerated in this section the decree is conclusive as a judgment upon each party to the special proceeding who was duly cited, or appeared, and upon every person deriving title from such party. § 2743, Code Civil Proc., in part.

See Accounting for the Estate, post, and discussion by Thomas, Surr., in Matter of Halstead, 41 Misc. 606.

§ 153. Same.—Under § 2626 we note first, that if the decree contains an adjudication construing any disposition of personal property, that adjudication is binding only upon the limited class defined in the section, q. v. We note, second, that whatever the character of the decree, it is conclusive only as to the questions properly coming before the Surrogate or in the language of the section "determined by the Surrogate pursuant to this article." That is to say, if he adjudicates upon some disposition of the will, this determination is only conclusive so far as it relates to the personal estate. If the will is one of real and personal property, his decree will not be conclusive in an action to construe the will, so far as it relates to real estate thereby devised. Corse v. Chapman, 153 N. Y. 466, 475. But the mere fact that the will relates both to real and personal property as has been pointed out, does not affect its conclusiveness as to the personal property. Post v. Mason, 26 Hun, 187, affirmed, 91 N. Y. 539. In this case the court used the following language:

"Since the enactment of these provisions of the statute, it has been held that the decree of the Surrogate cannot be impeached collaterally in respect to a will which relates to personal property. Vanderpoel v. Van Valkenburgh, 6 N. Y. (2 Seld.) 190. These provisions apply to a will so far as it relates to personal property, even though it be a will relating, as the one before us, to both real and personal property. Matter of Last Will of John Kellum, 50 N. Y. 298. So far as it affects the disposition of the personal property of the testator, the probate of one year becomes conclusive, and equity has not jurisdiction in a collateral action to set aside the probate in the absence of fraud in respect to the probate;" citing Collier v. Idley's Executors, 1 Bradf. 94, and cases cited; Burger v. Hill, 4 Bradf. Sur. 360; Brady v. McCosker, 1 Comst. 217; Dayton's Surr. 168; Pemberton v. Pemberton, 13 Vesey, 290; 1 Story's Eq. Jur., § 184; Gould v. Gould, 3 Story, 537; Tarver v. Tarver, 9 Pet. 180; Gaines v. Chew, 2 How. (U. S.) 245, and cases cited; Armstrong v. Lear, 12 Wheat. 175, Story, J.; Colton v. Ross, 2 Paige, 398; Bogardus v. Clark, 4 Paige, 623; Muir v. Trustees of Leaks and Watts Orphan House, 3 Barb. Ch. 480.

We note further that if there is no determination as to the validity of the will but the decree simply admits the will to probate, it is conclusive only as to the sufficiency of its execution, that is to say, its formal validity. Matter of Gillman, 38 Barb. 364.

Thus while we have seen that among the incidental powers of a Surrogate he has a right to determine upon a probate whether a person is an heir or belongs to any class designated in the will (see ch. I), nevertheless the decree admitting to probate is not conclusive as to this incidental inquiry. Nor would it be conclusive as to any incidental question, or by reason of mere obiter dicta. Washbon v. Cope, 144 N. Y. 287. Thus, where a will offered for probate was contested on the ground, that after its execution the testatrix gave birth to an illegitimate child whose rights were sought to be asserted and the Surrogate's decree merely admitted the will to probate, it was held (Patterson, J.) that the decree was not conclusive nor would the proceeding constitute an estoppel against the child when subsequently asserting its rights against the estate of the testatrix. Bunce v. Bunce, 20 Civ. Proc. Rep. 332.

Where probate was denied, held (semble), a person not a party to the proceeding could again present the instrument for probate and have the question of its proper execution and validity determined. Matter of Tilden, 56 App. Div. 277, rev'g 32 Misc. 118.

§ 154. Same.—We note further as to the formal validity of the decree, the statute makes it conclusive without limitation, that is to say, against all the world, as opposed to the determination in the decree of the validity of any particular testamentary disposition which is made conclusive only upon the petitioner and each party who was duly cited, or appeared, and every person claiming from, through, or under either of them (Matter of Dates, 35 N. Y. S. R. 338. See as to parties not cited, Matter of Patterson, 146 N. Y. 327); or as the court says in Hoyt v. Hoyt, 112 N. Y. 493, 504, "as to the personal property if the person interested is not under disability or the Surrogate's discretion is not invoked for a sufficient cause under subdivision six of § 2481, the probate concludes all mankind after the lapse of one year; in such event the disposition and distribution of the personalty by the executor are beyond question or recall and a finality. The proceeding for the probate is in the nature of a proceeding in rem which is binding upon all parties who are entitled to participate and are brought in by due process of law."

We note further that the section limits the rule as to conclusiveness thereby defined to a decree admitting a will to probate; consequently decrees refusing probate have been distinguished under this section, and the conclusiveness of such a decree is determined by the general rules hereinabove laid down. Thus, in Matter of Goldsticker, 192 N. Y. 35 (disting. Corley v. McEmeel, infra) the court held that a decree refusing probate for improper execution and for lack of capacity was in those respects conclusive on the parties in subsequent controversies as to the personal estate. Section 2625 provides for the decision to be made by the Surrogate refusing probate of a will, and is as follows:

> Where the surrogate decides against the sufficiency of the proof, or against the validity of a will, or upon the construction, validity, or legal effect of any provision thereof, he must make a decree accordingly; and, if required by either party, he must enter in the minutes the grounds of his decision. § 2625, Code Civil Proc.

Where a will related to real property, and the Surrogate decided adversely to its sufficiency, his decree refusing probate was held not to be conclusive upon the devisees in a subsequent action. But it was also held that such decree was admissible in evidence in an action brought to establish the will under § 1866 of the Code, and further that so far as the right to have it probated was concerned it was res adjudicata. Corley v. McEmeel, 31 Abb. N. C. 113. But see Matter of Tilden, 56 App. Div. 277, as to parties not cited.

This discussion amounts, therefore, to this: that in Surrogate's Courts, as in any court of record the principle of res judicata will be applied. The same issue is not to be settled between the same parties on the same grounds, once it has been properly litigated and decided. See Matter of McGoughron, 124 App. Div. 312. Section 1866 provides for an action in the Supreme Court brought to determine the validity, construction or effect of a testamentary disposition of real property situated within the State, but the section provides that it "does not apply to a case where the question in controversy is determined by the decree of a Surrogate's Court, duly rendered upon allegations for that purpose as described in article first, of title third, of chapter eighteenth of this act, where the plaintiff was duly cited in the special proceeding in the Surrogate's Court before the commencement of the action."

§ 155. Same.—With regard to the conclusiveness of a decree admitting to probate a will of real property, we have already distinguished it as being presumptive only, against parties who were duly cited, or parties claiming from, through or under such parties. The manner in which probate of a will covering real property can come up in other courts or in proceedings other than for probate, is either in the form of the decree itself, which under § 2627 may be produced in evidence, in which case the testimony taken in the probate proceeding, may be read in evidence, subject to all the objections or rebuttal which would be available if it had been taken upon the trial or hearing in which it is sought to be used.

Secondly, the certified will or record thereof may be read in evidence as provided in § 2629, which is as follows:

> The Surrogate must cause to be endorsed upon, or annexed to, the original will admitted to probate, or the exemplified copy, or statement of the tenor of a will, which was admitted without production of an original written will, a certificate, under his hand, or the hand of the clerk of his court, and his seal of office, stating that it has, upon due proof, been admitted to probate, as a will valid to pass real or personal property, or both, as the case may be. The will, or the copy or statement, so authenticated, the record thereof, or an exemplified copy of the record, may be read in evidence, as proof of the original will, or of the contents or tenor thereof, without further evidence, and with the effect specified in the last three sections. § 2629, Code Civil Proc.

The record of the will is thus presumptive evidence only of its due execution and of the mental competency and freedom from restraint of the testator and not of the validity of the devises contained in it, in any tribunal where the title to the real property of the testator may be in issue. Matter of Merriam, 136 N. Y. 58, 61; Hoyt v. Hoyt, 112 N. Y. 493, 504. So it is held that under the statutory provisions, the probate of a will is never conclusive as to real property, and amounts upon the trial of an action, or in a special proceeding in which a controversy arises concerning the will, only to presumptive evidence.

§ 156 Same.—The distinction between the conclusiveness of decrees admitting to probate wills of real or personal property, is carefully drawn by Judge Rapallo, in Matter of Kellum, 50 N. Y. 298, where he construes that section of the Revised Statutes, which gave conclusive effect to the probate of a will of personal property. 2 R. S. 61, § 29. His reasoning is still applicable, because the section of the present Code in question is the re-enactment of former provisions of the Revised Statutes on the subject, and was in effect a legislative recognition of the pre-existing law. See Matter of Gouraud, 95 N. Y. 256. The subsequent provisions, which were adopted, by which the next of kin were permitted, within one year after probate, to contest the same by filing allegations against the validity of the will or the competency of the proof thereof, were "an important safeguard against imposition or mistake and afford the next of kin a whole year after the probate to investigate the circumstances attending the execution of the will." But no such provisions are necessary as to wills of real estate, as the probate thereof may be repelled at any time by contrary proof.

A will may be a will of real and personal property, but if offered for probate merely as a will of personal property, the decree admitting it to probate is utterly without validity as regards the real estate and would have no presumptive or evidential force whatever. The will would have to be proved and recorded anew as a will of real property. Smith's Estate, 1 Tucker, 108. Therefore the proof of the will as a will of real estate simply relieves a claimant under the will, of the burden of establishing it in a subsequent action or proceeding. Corley v. McEmeel, 31 Abb. N. C. 113. See also Baxter v. Baxter, 76 Hun, 98, as to the conclusiveness of decree of Surrogate.

The peculiar situation may exist, however, of a will being valid as to realty, so that the decree admitting it to probate has the presumptive and evidential force above specified, while as a will of personalty it may turn out to be invalid. This is due to the rule of law that the question of testacy or intestacy as to personalty is governed by the law of domicile of the testator, whereas its validity as to real estate may be governed by the lex loci. Thus where a will was proved as a will of real and personal property in the county of New York and letters testamentary issued, it developed on the final accounting that the domicile of the testator at the time of his death was in the State of Connecticut. It also appeared that a court of competent jurisdiction in Connecticut had adjudged the will revoked by the subsequent birth of a child to the testator. The New York Surrogate's Court held the will invalid as to personalty, but as to realty in regard to which the will contained a direction for sale and distribution of proceeds, the Surrogate asserted his jurisdiction to order distribution as to all real estate situated in New York. Bloomer v. Bloomer, 2 Bradf. 339. In conclusion it may be stated that the object of the statute, by which is meant both the original provisions of the Revised Statutes as well as the present section of the Code, was to make the certificate of the Surrogate or the record of the will or exemplification thereof so far as real estate was concerned, prima facie evidence only. See Vanderpoel v. Van Valkenburgh, 6 N. Y. 190, 199; Carroll v. Carroll, 60 N. Y. 121, 123, citing 2 Greenleaf's Evidence, § 239. This was a case where in an action of ejectment brought by a widow to recover her dower, the Code held that the probate of the will and the proceedings thereon were not competent evidence to prove the fact of the testator's death. This fact being the very basis and the foundation of the widow's action, without proof of which it could not be maintained, it was held that as the probate of the will could not in any respect affect the widow's right of dower, nor the final adjudication by the Surrogate in any way strengthen or injure her claim, the probate decree and the proceedings on which it was based were incompetent and entirely immaterial.

§ 157. Preservation of decrees of Surrogates' Courts.—Originally Surro-

gates' decrees were merely entered in the office of the Surrogate and recorded by the clerk in one of the books required to be kept by him. These books were covered by §§ 2498 and 2499 of the Code, which are as follows:

§ 2498. Books to be kept by surrogate.

Each surrogate must provide and keep the following books:

1. A record-book of wills, in which must be recorded, at length, every will, required by law to be recorded in his office, with the decree admitting it to probate, and also, if the probate is not contested, the proof taken thereupon.

2. A record-book of letters testamentary and letters of administration, in which must be recorded all such letters, issued out of his court.

3. A record-book, in which must be recorded every decree, whereby the account of an executor, administrator, trustee, or guardian is settled.

4. A book, containing a minute of every paper filed, or other proceeding taken, relating to the disposition of the real property of a decedent, and a record of every order or decree, made thereupon; with a memorandum of every report made, and other proceeding taken, founded upon a decree for such a disposition.

5. A book, containing a record of every decree or order, the record of which is not required by this section to be kept elsewhere; together with a memorandum of each execution issued, and of the satisfaction of each decree recorded therein.

6. A book, in which must be recorded all letters of guardianship, issued out of his court.

7. A book of fees and disbursements, in which must be entered, by items, all fees charged or received by him for services or expenses, and all disbursements made or incurred by him, which are chargeable against those fees, or the county.

The expense of providing the books specified in this section is a county charge.

To this should be added the book in which must be recorded assignments of legacies or beneficial interests under L. 1904, ch. 692.

§ 2499. Books to be kept by Surrogate.

To each of the books, kept as prescribed in the last section, must be attached an alphabetical index, referring to the page of the book, where each subject may be found. The surrogate may keep two or more books, for a further division of the subjects specified in either subdivision of the last section; in which case, he must keep a separate index to each set of books. Each decree, revoking the probate of a will, or revoking or otherwise affecting letters testamentary, letters of administration, or letters of guardianship, or suspending or removing a testamentary trustee, or modifying or otherwise affecting any other decree, must be plainly noted at the end or in the margin of the record of the will, letters, or original decree, with a reference to the book and page where the subsequent decree is recorded. The books, kept as prescribed in the last section, appertain to the surrogate's office, and must be open, at all reasonable times, to the inspection of any person.

§ 158. Surrogate's duty to preserve papers.—And by § 2500 it is provided that:

> The surrogate must carefully file and preserve in his office, every deposition, affidavit, petition, report, account, voucher, or other paper relating to any proceeding in his court; and deliver to his successor all the papers and books kept by him. All bonds required to be filed with the surrogate or in his office must be proved or acknowledged as deeds are required by law to be proved or acknowledged.

Papers which have not been copied, such as exhibits consisting of books and writings, cannot be removed from the files of the court. Matter of Smith, 15 N. Y. St. Rep. 734.

§ 159. Docketing decrees.—Although the entry and record of a decree is sufficient for all purposes of its conclusiveness and indeed of its enforcement, yet, in order to give a Surrogate's decree the force and effect of a judgment of the Supreme Court (which it is provided can be done where a Surrogate makes a decree directing the payment of money), it may be docketed as provided for in § 2553.

> Where a decree directs the payment of a sum of money into court, or to one or more persons therein designated, the surrogate, or the clerk of the surrogate's court, must, upon payment of his fees, furnish to any person applying therefor, one or more transcripts, duly attested, stating all the particulars, with respect to the decree, which are required by law to be entered in the clerk's docket-book, where a judgment for a sum of money is rendered in the supreme court, so far as the provisions of law, directing such entries, are applicable to such a decree. Each county clerk, to whom such a transcript is presented, must, upon payment of his fees, immediately file it, and docket the decree in the appropriate docket-book, kept in his office, as prescribed by law for docketing a judgment of the supreme court. The docketing of such a decree has the same force and effect, the lien thereof may be suspended or discharged, and the decree may be assigned or satisfied as if it was such a judgment.

The Court of Appeals held (Townsend v. Whitney, 75 N. Y. 425) that the docketing of a surrogate's decree (as provided for by ch. 460 of the Laws of 1837, as amended by ch. 104 of the Laws of 1844, the provisions of which Laws were replaced by § 2553 of the Code) did not merge the decree. That is to say, the docketing did not make it a judgment, but simply gave it the force and effect of a judgment, so that after a decree is thus docketed the person or persons in whose favor it is docketed have two remedies to enforce payment of the money due them. The one upon the Surrogate's decree in the Surrogate's Court; the other by issuing an execution to enforce the docketed decree just as any judgment recovered in the Supreme Court. The two remedies are not inconsistent but concurrent or cumulative, and they may both be pursued until the decree has been complied with. See opinion of Earl, J., at p. 428. Where a decree directs payment of money by one or more persons, the decree may be docketed separately as against each or any of such persons, and separate executions issued with respect to each person. Bramley v. Forman, 15 Hun, 144. The lien of such a decree is the same as if the judgment, to which, by docketing, the decree is assimilated, had been entered against the person directed by the decree to make payment. It in no sense constitutes a lien against the property of the decedent, and, if execution is issued thereunder (to enforce payment of money) against the executor, it issues against his property and not that of the estate. Matter of Waring, 7 Misc. 502; Bennett v. Crain, 41 Hun, 185. The provision of § 2553 that the lien thereof may be suspended or discharged as if it were a judgment of the Supreme Court distinctly divests the Surrogate of personal jurisdiction to suspend or discharge the docketed decree; whatever action he may take in regard to the proceedings in his own court. It can only be suspended or discharged by a judge of the court in whose office it is docketed. Underhill's Estate, 9 N. Y. Supp. 457, Coffin, Surr. In Sackett v. Woodbury, 70 App. Div. 416, it was held, however, that the Surrogate, or his clerk, alone has power to enforce the decree though docketed.

§ 160. Enforcement of decrees.—Under the Code, Surrogates' Courts are given greater power to enforce their decrees than is vested in other courts of records. See Code Civ. Proc. §§ 14, 1241, 2481, 2554, 2555, 3347. Generally speaking the Code provides for enforcement of a decree, either by execution or by punishment for contempt. The following sections define the power of the Surrogate:

Enforcement of decree by execution.

A decree directing the payment of a sum of money into court, or to one or more parties, may be enforced by an execution against the property of the party directed to make the payment. The execution must be issued by the surrogate, or the clerk of the surrogate's court, under the seal of the court, and must be made returnable to the court. In all other respects, the provisions of this act, relating to an execution against the property of a judgment-debtor, issued upon a judgment of the supreme court, and the proceedings to collect it, apply to an execution issued from the surrogate's court and the collection thereof, the decree being, for that purpose, regarded as a judgment; except that the proceedings prescribed in title twelfth of chapter seventeenth of this act if founded upon such a decree must be taken, as if the decree was a judgment of the county court, or, in the city of New York of the supreme court. § 2554, Code Civil Proc.

Enforcement of decree by punishment for contempt.

In either of the following cases, a decree of a surrogate's court, directing the payment of money, or requiring the performance of any other act, may be enforced, by serving a certified copy thereof upon the party against whom it is rendered, or the officer or person who is required thereby, or by law, to obey it; and if he refuses or wilfully neglects to obey it, by punishing him for a contempt of court:

1. Where it cannot be enforced by execution, as prescribed in the last section.

2. Where part of it cannot be so enforced by execution; in which case, the part or parts, which cannot be so enforced, may be enforced as prescribed in this section.

3. Where an execution, issued as prescribed in the last section, to the sheriff of the surrogate's county, has been returned by him wholly or partly unsatisfied.

4. Where the delinquent is an executor, administrator, guardian, or testamentary trustee, and the decree relates to the fund or estate, in which case the surrogate may enforce the decree as prescribed in this section, either without issuing an execution, or after the return of an execution, as he thinks proper.

If the delinquent has given an official bond, his imprisonment, by virtue of proceedings to punish him for a contempt, as prescribed in this section, or a levy upon his property by virtue of an execution, issued as prescribed in the last section, does not bar, suspend, or otherwise affect an action against the sureties in his official bond. § 2555, Code Civil Proc.

§ 161. Discussion of sections 2554 and 2555.—The distinction between these two sections just quoted is, first, that an execution is the proper remedy to be resorted to where a decree merely directs the payment of a sum of money into court, or to one or more parties; but second, that where such a decree directing the payment of money cannot be enforced wholly or in part by execution, or where execution has been issued and returned unsatisfied in whole or in part, or where the decree relates to a fund or estate of which the delinquent is an executor, administrator, guardian, or testamentary trustee, in such case a decree for the payment of money can be enforced by contempt proceedings under § 2555; and in the third place, where the decree does not direct the payment of money but the performance of some other specific act, it must be enforced by contempt proceedings under § 2555.

In Koenig v. Wagenen, 126 App. Div. 772 (1st Dept., 2 dissents) it was held competent for the representative of one to whom a share had been decreed payable to sue on the Surrogate's decree in the Supreme Court without using the remedial procedure of the Surrogate's Court.

§ 162. And first then as to enforcing decrees for the payment of money by an execution against the property.—The execution under § 2554 is issued by the Surrogate or the clerk of his court, under the seal of that court, and is made returnable to that court. If the decree directs A, as executor, to pay a certain sum of money, the execution under § 2554 must run against A's property. Matter of Quackenbos, 38 Misc. 66. Section 1825 of the Code as to obtaining leave to issue execution against an executor or administrator in his representative capacity is not applicable. Section 1371 of the Code applies, q. v. The execution issues as of course (Joel v. Ritterman, 2 Dem. 242). It was held no notice need be given to the executor as under § 1826, Peyser v. Wendt, 2 Dem. 221. But in Matter of Quackenbos it was held the notice required by §§ 1825–26 was necessary. See Felt v. Dorr, 29 Hun, 14; Olmsted v. Vredenburgh, 10 How. Pr. 215. But the Surrogate may, under proper circumstances, require that such notice be given, irrespective of any statutory authority. People v. Woodbury, 70 App. Div. 416. This case held also that §§ 1377 and 1378, which provide that notice of an application to the court for leave to issue execution on a final judgment, after the lapse of five years from its entry, must be served personally upon the adverse party, if a resident, apply to a Surrogate's decree; and that the five years run from the entry of the decree in the Surrogate's Court. It has been held where a Surrogate's decree was docketed in the office of the clerk of the county, and the execution issued upon said decree so docketed, was tested in the name of one of the justices of the court and not by the Surrogate, that the execution was invalid. Bingham v. Burlingame, 33 Hun, 211. This seems to be in conflict with the decision of the Court of Appeals in Townsend v. Whitney, 75 N. Y. 425, where Judge Earl held after the docketing of the decree the party in whose favor it was docketed had two remedies, one by an execution based upon the docket and one by attachment or contempt proceedings in the Surrogate's Court. But in view of the language of the court in another case (Power v. Speckman, 126 N. Y. 354), where the court remarks, that all such decrees for the payment of money may be docketed and become a general lien and be enforced by execution, the apparent conflict is reconciled and the practice may be said to be, that upon the entry of such a decree in the Surrogate's Court, if it be intended to enforce it by execution, the party in whose favor it is made should apply for a transcript under § 2553, duly attested, stating all the particulars with respect to the decree which are required by law to be entered in the clerk's docket-book, and to present such transcript to the county clerk so that his decree may be docketed; this decree so docketed can then be enforced as if it were a judgment of record, but the execution enforcing that decree, although by the docketing it has the same force and effect as if it were a judgment of the Supreme Court, must nevertheless be issued by the Surrogate as provided by § 2554, and not by a judge of the court in the office of which the judgment has been docketed. See Matter of Dissosway, 91 N. Y. 235; Wilcox's Estate, 1 Misc. 55; Union Trust Co. v. Gage, 6 Dem. 358; Estate of Kellinger, 2 McCarty, 68. The decree remains a decree of the Surrogate's Court (Townsend v. Whitney, supra), and the five years after which execution can issue only by consent of court runs from time of its entry, and not from time the transcript is docketed. People v. Woodbury, 70 App. Div. 416.

§ 163. Disobeying the decree—A decree may be reversible on appeal and yet be enforceable by execution until reversed. Such a decree cannot safely be disregarded or disobeyed. Ferguson v. Cummings, 1 Dem. 433; People v. Bergen, 53 N. Y. 404; Matter of Humfreville, 19 App. Div. 381, 384; Erie R. Co. v. Ramsey, 45 N. Y. 644. But if the decree is fatally defective so that a motion to vacate it could properly be made, disobedience of the decree will not render one liable to punishment for contempt, nor can it be enforced by execution. Eisner v. Avery, 2 Dem. 466, where Judge Rollins held, that a decree directing all the executors of a certain estate to pay a certain sum as costs to one of their number was unenforceable, and an execution issued under such a decree must be vacated, although if the decree had ordered two of them to pay costs to the third, it would have been enforceable. So an order directing an administrator to pay costs to a special guardian in excess of statutory amount, and not out of the infant's estate cannot be enforced in contempt proceedings. Matter of Monell, 28 Misc. 308. So a sheriff was excused from contempt in disregarding an order of commitment "void upon its face." Matter of Leggatt, 47 App. Div. 381; Roderigas v. East R. S. I., 63 N. Y. 460, 474; Porter v. Purdy, 29 N. Y. 106, 113; Bovee v. King, 11 Hun, 250; Chegaray v. Jenkins, 5 N. Y. 376; Field v. Parker, 4 Hun, 342.

§ 164. Enforcement of decrees by punishment for contempt.—Section 2555 gives the Surrogate what have well been termed extraordinary powers. These powers, however, should not be intolerantly used but should be exercised in conformity to the liberal spirit of our legislation. Ferguson v. Cummings, 1 Dem. 433, citing Doran v. Dempsey, 1 Bradf. 490; Matter of Latson, 1 Duer, 696; Hosack v. Rogers, 11 Paige, 603; Matter of Callahan, 1 Tucker, 62. In Matter of Holmes, No. 2, 79 App. Div. 267, a decree ordered an executrix to pay certain legacies. She appealed, but failed to file the second undertaking under § 2578 to stay execution. The Surrogate, in proceedings under § 2555 fined her the amount of the legacies ordered to be paid. Held, a proper exercise of his power, citing Matter of Snyder, 103 N.Y. 178. See also Matter of Ryer, 120 App. Div. 154.

Analyzing § 2555, it appears that the punishment of a person refusing to obey a Surrogate's decree whether it direct the payment of money or requires the performance of some specific act, is carefully defined. In the first place the spirit of the whole section appears from subd. 1. The legislature evidently contemplated, that the first resort of the practitioner should be to enforce the decree by execution as prescribed in § 2554. And if the decree cannot be enforced as a whole, that is to say, so as to realize the full amount directed thereby to be paid, it is contemplated that the practitioner shall if possible realize partially under his decree before resorting to the remedy provided by § 2554. Where, however, the execution has been returned unsatisfied, proceedings for contempt may be at once instituted, or when it has been satisfied only in part, proceedings to punish for contempt for failure to pay the residue may be instituted. Subdivision 4, however, gives the Surrogate discretion to proceed directly by proceedings for contempt without the delay incident to docketing the judgment and the issuance and return of the execution, where the party disobeying the decree directing him to make a payment or do a particular act is an executor, administrator, guardian, or testamentary trustee directed to pay from the fund in his hand or do some particular act in regard to the estate held or represented by him. Nevertheless, Surrogates will not use this extraordinary power unless it is made to appear to their satisfaction that there is some necessity or propriety in resorting in the first instance to this severe measure of punishing the representative for contempt of court; therefore when the practitioner moves under § 2555 against an executor, administrator, guardian, or testamentary trustee, it is well that the moving papers should indicate that the rights of the applicant would be prejudiced by the delay incident to execution, or that the person sought to be punished has no property out of which an execution if issued could be satisfied. Ferguson v. Cummings, 1 Dem. 433.

§ 165. What judgment may be so enforced.—It is obvious the Surrogate's power relates to the enforcement of his mandates. But his power may be invoked though the original judgment obligation arose in another court. Thus, in Matter of Mahoney, 88 App. Div. 140, the original judgment was a Supreme Court judgment against an administratrix. Application was made to the Surrogate for leave to issue execution. In the "inquiry" thereupon had, and accounting, he held she was in possession of a certain sum applicable to the judgment and to that extent execution might issue.

It was issued and returned unsatisfied. Thereupon, the Surrogate, treating this as a wrongful or fraudulent concealment of estate assets made a decree directing her to pay the sum already found in default of which she was to be punished as for contempt.

§ 166. Limitation on the Surrogate's power.—The Surrogate's Court can only enforce obedience by attachment to its lawful orders and decrees, that is, to such orders and decrees as it is empowered by statute to make; so, where an order had been made upon consent of all parties directing the deposit of the property of an estate in a trust company, but not under the circumstances contemplated by § 2602 of the Code, and the executor deposited only a part of the funds of the estate and refused to deposit the balance, Surrogate Coffin held that he was without power to enforce the order. Guion v. Underhill, 1 Dem. 302. But where the court has power to make the order or decree, which is disregarded or disobeyed, all that is preliminarily requisite to the exercise of the Surrogate's jurisdiction to punish, is proof of compliance with the provisions of the section that is, of the following facts:

(a) The making of a decree directing the payment of money or the performance of some particular act.

(b) That a certified copy thereof has been served upon the party against whom it is rendered, or upon the person or officer who is required thereby, or by law, to obey it. Sudlow v. Pinckney, 1 Dem. 158; Woodhouse v. Woodhouse, 5 Redf. 131.

(c) That said party, officer, or person has refused or wilfully neglected to obey it. Dunford v. Weaver, 84 N. Y. 445.

There is no necessity for a preliminary citation to show cause why the party, officer, or person should not be punished for contempt. Guion v. Underhill, supra.

The refusal to obey the decree must be clearly shown. Thus where a decree directed the payment of a balance to A, and A alleged a demand for such balance and costs, the executor's failure to comply with such demand was held not to lay foundation for a proceeding to punish him for contempt. Matter of Feehan, 36 Misc. 614. See also Matter of Humfreville, 154 N. Y. 115; Estate of Lenihan, Surr. Decs. 1901, 470; Estate of E. Broderick, id. 1899, 189.

§ 167. Costs, as well as estate funds, are covered, and payment may be enforced.—It is also to be remarked that while the language of the Code, "A decree directing the payment of money," has no limitation as to the kind or nature of the money to be paid, and seems to include, therefore, not only moneys held in trust in a representative or trust capacity, but also costs or disbursements, or any sum of money which in a final decree is directed to be paid, nevertheless, where the decree directs payment of costs only, it cannot be enforced by imprisonment for nonpayment. Matter of Banning, 108 App. Div. 12. In such case § 15 of the Code controls. Matter of Humfreville, 154 N. Y. 115, rev'g on this point, Matter of Humfreville, 19 App. Div. 381, 383. See Matter of Kurtzman, 2 N. Y. St. Rep. 655; Richardson v. Van Voorhis, 3 N. Y. Supp. 396.

So much of a decree as charges an executor personally with costs is a money judgment and enforceable by execution only. Matter of Feehan, 36 Misc. 614.

By final decree is meant one that determines the particular matter in controversy, and which is therefore appealable. Matter of Van Houten, 18 App. Div. 301.

Where the jurisdictional facts above enumerated appear in the record, the discretion of the Surrogate will not usually be interfered with by the Appellate Court. If it appear that the decree has been made, properly certified, duly served, and disobeyed, the power of the Surrogate to punish is clear; it is only in the cases above hinted at where that power may have been abused that his order in the premises will be interfered with; for example, where an executor was required by a final decree to pay the balance adjudged to be in his hands upon the judicial settlement of his account to the parties beneficially interested, and he failed to do so, and opposed proceedings to punish him for contempt by affidavits showing insolvency on his part, and consequent inability to comply with the decree, which affidavits the Surrogate held insufficient, the Court of Appeals declined to review his decision. Matter of Snyder, 103 N. Y. 178, 181, citing Cochrane's Exr. v. Ingersoll, 73 N. Y. 613.

§ 168. Distinction between nonpayment of debt and refusal to pay estate moneys.—The courts have drawn a distinction in the cases where it is an executor or administrator who is directed to pay, between mere debts due by such executor or administrator personally to the estate, and refusals to pay money which by an accounting or otherwise they are adjudged to distribute or pay over. The Code cannot be said to have contemplated the punishment by the extreme measures provided for in § 2555 of a mere inability to pay a contract debt. In such latter case, where by some misfortune the debtor is unable to pay his debt to the next of kin or the legatees of his creditor, the bare fact of his assumption of the duties of executor will not make him amenable to the harsh and drastic contempt process. Rugg v. Jenks, 4 Dem. 105; Baucus v. Stover, 89 N. Y. 1; Matter of Snyder, 34 Hun, 302, 308, 309; Watson v. Nelson, 69 N. Y. 537. See Matter of David, 44 Misc. 337; Matter of Ockerhausen, 59 Hun, 200; Joel v. Ritterman, 5 Redf. 136.

In Matter of Strong, 111 App. Div. 281, it is said that the decree, treating the debt as an asset, is prima facie conclusive. But the representative may allege insolvency, which he must affirmatively prove. If the Surrogate is satisfied he cannot pay he may decline to punish him, unless as in the David case, supra, its appears he was solvent at or since decedent's death. In the Strong case the court hints that the order punishing him may be entered and then relieved against under § 2286 which empowers a court to release an offender imprisoned for contempt.

And so where an executor has been adjudged to pay a specified sum to a person named, as costs or disbursements in a proceeding, it is quite competent for the executor to set up want of assets as a reason why he should not be punished for disobeying the decree. Matter of Davidson, 5 Dem. 224.

§ 169. The practice.—It has already been pointed out that an order to show cause is not necessary, and it has been stated that it is unnecessary to give notice of an application to enforce a decree by execution which remedy issues as of course; but it is the customary practice to initiate proceedings to punish for contempt for disobedience of an order or decree by service of an order to show cause based upon affidavits reciting substantially the jurisdictional facts. It is not necessary that all the facts and proceedings should be set forth at length, but if on the face of the process of attachment subsequently issued it appears to have been issued in a proceeding of which the Surrogate had jurisdiction and the disobedience complained of is set out with substantial particularity it will be sufficient. Dunford v. Weaver, 84 N. Y. 445. The order to show cause is intended to give notice to the party whom it is intended to punish, first, of the application, and second, of the act of disobedience charged. If such an order contains some erroneous statement of fact, it may be amended, provided the respondent is not misled or prejudiced thereby; or where the mistake is quite immaterial the Surrogate may disregard it and proceed on the original order. Gillies v. Kreuder, 1 Dem. 349. But while it is the better practice to begin the proceedings with an order to show cause it is not imperative so to do. Surr. Coffin held (Guion v. Underhill, 1 Dem. 302), that no citation to show cause why an attachment should not issue is necessary. The proper way in which to show disobedience to the decree or order directing the payment of a sum of money is by allegation showing a personal demand upon the person directed by the decree or order to pay, made by or on behalf of the person to whom the money is directed to be paid. Estate of Gillman, 15 N. Y. St. Rep. 718. The order of commitment should be definite and should distinctly fix the sum necessary to be paid by the delinquent to secure his release and purge him from contempt. Matter of McMaster, 16 N. Y. St. Rep. 240.

The general provisions as to punishment for contempt are contained in § 14 of the Code relating to courts of record.

The general provisions governing procedure in contempt proceedings are contained in title 3 of chap. 17, being §§ 2266 to 2292. Without detailed reference to these sections it may be stated, by way of summary, that the practice indicated therein is, first, that the courts of record may inflict summary punishment for contempt, where the offense is committed in the immediate view and presence of the court. See § 2267.

Second, that where the offense consists of a neglect or refusal to obey an order of the court requiring the payment of costs or of a specified sum of money, and the court is satisfied by proof, by affidavit, that personal demand thereof has been made and payment thereof has been refused or neglected, it may issue without notice a warrant to commit the offender to prison, "until the costs or other sum of money and the costs and expenses of the proceeding are paid, or until he is discharged according to law." § 2268, Code of Civil Procedure.

Third, the cases in which notice of the proposed punishment must be given by the offender are given in § 2269, which is as follows:

> § 2269. Order to show cause, or warrant to attach offender.
> The court or judge, authorized to punish for the offence, may, in its or his discretion, where the case is one of those specified in either of the last two sections, and in every other case, must, upon being satisfied, by affidavit, of the commission of the offence, either
>
> 1. Make an order, requiring the accused to show cause before it, or him, at a time and place therein specified, why the accused should not be punished for the alleged offence; or
> 2. Issue a warrant of attachment, directed to the sheriff of a particular county, or, generally, to the sheriff of any county where the accused may be found, commanding him to arrest the accused, and bring him before the court or judge, either forthwith, or at a time and place therein specified, to answer for the alleged offence.

The practice under the order to show cause, in regard to its service, etc., is indicated by §§ 2273 to 2276, q. v. The following forms are intended to indicate this procedure. An affidavit such as is first indicated is intended to bring the contempt to the notice of the court. If the order is one directing the performance of a given act, the Surrogate should proceed by order to show cause. If the order disobeyed was one directing the payment of a sum of money, the Surrogate may in his discretion proceed by order to show cause; such order is indicated in the precedents below.

But if the order is one for the payment of a sum of money, the Surrogate may, in his discretion upon the affidavit, make an order for a warrant of commitment, which order and warrant are below indicated by suitable precedents. An order is also indicated of commitment upon the return of the order to show cause.

Note. Give representative designation if necessary.

And Whereas, a certified copy of said order has been duly served upon said more than five days since, and personal demand has been made on the said for the payment of the said sum of dollars, by (or on behalf of) the said as aforesaid, and by (or on behalf of) his attorneys;

And Whereas, an order was made herein on the day of 19 directing a warrant to issue to commit the said to the common jail of the said county, there to be kept and detained until he shall pay the said sum of money, together with the costs fixed by said last order and the sheriff's fees herein:

Now, Therefore, we command you, that you take the body of the said if he shall be found within your county, and commit him to the common jail of the county of and keep and detain him therein, under your custody, until he shall have fully paid the sum of dollars, as required by the said order, and the costs aforesaid, and also your fees hereon, or until the said be discharged according to law.

And you are to return this writ and mandate on the day of 19 to this court, together with a certificate, under your hand, of the manner in which you shall have executed the same.

Witness, Surrogate of the county of at the county courthouse, in the day of 19

(Seal.) (Signature of Surrogate.)

Where the act for which the offender is sought to be punished is failure to do some particular act, or disobedience to a citation or other mandate of the court, the Surrogate may upon proof of such disobedience proceed by attachment. This practice is customary, where the offender is one acting in a representative capacity, such as executor, administrator, trustee, or guardian, subject to the jurisdiction of the Surrogate's Court; if such a person in such capacity is, for example, cited to render an account of his proceedings and fails to do it within a reasonable time, or if he has been directed to do it within a given time and fails to do it within that time, the Surrogate may issue an attachment substantially in the following form:

THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK,
To the Sheriff of the County of

The attachment.

GREETING:

We command you, that you attach the (describe, as executor or administrator, etc.) of the of deceased, under letters of duly issued to him on the day of 19 by the Surrogate of the county of if he shall be found in your bailiwick, and bring him personally before our Surrogate of the county of at the Surrogate's office in the county of on the day of 19 to answer unto us for certain trespasses and contempts against us in not complying with the exigency of a citation heretofore duly issued by our Surrogate of the county directed to him, requiring him to appear before said Surrogate on a certain day, now past, and (describe purport of citation, as, for example, render an account of his proceedings as such as aforesaid), or show cause why an attachment should not be issued against him, which said citation was duly and personally served on the said more than days before the return day thereof, as appears by satisfactory proof of such service duly taken and had before our said Surrogate, and for disobedience to which citation this attachment is issued. And you are to make and return to our said Surrogate, in the Surrogate's Court of the county of on the day of 19 at the Surrogate's office in aforesaid, a certificate under your hand, of the manner in which you shall have executed this writ; and have you then and there this writ.

In testimony whereof, we have caused the seal of office of our said Surrogate to be hereunto affixed.

(L. S.) Witness, etc.

(Signature of Surrogate.)

(Indorsement.) Let the administrator within named give a bond for his appearance to answer on the return day of the within writ, in the penalty of dollars, with two sufficient sureties. (See text, supra.)

(Signature of Surrogate.)

When such an attachment has been issued and the person charged with contempt denies the contempt or seeks to justify or excuse his disobedience to the citation, which he may do on the ground that it was not duly served upon him, or that he was prevented by circumstances beyond his control from compliance, or for any other reason appealing to the discretion of the Surrogate, it is proper that an order be made directing certain interrogatories to be addressed to the offender and to which he must make categorical reply, precedents for which forms are here indicated.

It is Ordered, that interrogatories addressed to the said touching the said citation, and his acts or omissions in the premises complained of, be forthwith filed in this office, and that a copy thereof be served on the said and that he put in, immediately after the service upon him of such copy, written answers to such interrogatories, upon oath, and file the same in this office.

To the first interrogatory: If defective service is claimed state the facts concisely; if not describe the manner of service.

To the second interrogatory reply fully.

To the third interrogatory answer yes or no.

To the fourth interrogatory answer yes or no.

To the fifth interrogatory answer yes or no.

To the sixth interrogatory the party may answer stating concisely his reason for noncompliance, such as illness or some act of God, or any other valid reason. Note.

Note. The excuse is addressed entirely to the discretion of the Surrogate, unless defect in jurisdiction or process is shown.

It is proper for the respondent, if new facts excusing his disobedience can be shown to move to vacate the contempt proceedings. But if he do so, and his motion is denied, and he takes no appeal nor asks for a reargument a subsequent similar motion to vacate is properly denied. Matter of Hayward, 44 App. Div. 265.

If by his answers to the interrogatories, the offender satisfies the court, that his refusal to disobey was justified, or that his neglect to obey was not wilful, the Surrogate may discharge him from custody, or make an order vacating the order for his attachment and discharging the sureties if he has given bail, forms for which orders it is unnecessary to indicate. If, however, the offender admits the contempt or he is unable to satisfy the Surrogate as to his innocence, the Surrogate may thereupon commit him, by an order of commitment, in which a provision may be included stating the amount of the fine which the Surrogate has discretion to impose by way of penalty.

Title.

A writ of attachment having been heretofore issued, out of and under the seal of this court, against the of deceased, for his contempt in not appearing and (here state act required by citation) as duly cited and ordered to do, directed to the sheriff of county, and returnable the day of instant, and the said sheriff having returned that he had attached said and taken his body, and that, for want of bail, he had him in custody before the court (or and had let him at large on bail according to a bond returned with such attachment); and the said having been, by virtue of such attachment, personally before the court, on said day, and denying the alleged contempt, it was thereupon ordered that interrogatories addressed to the said touching the said citation, and his acts or omissions in the premises complained of should be forthwith filed in this office, and that a copy thereof should be served on him, and that the said should put in, immediately after the service of such interrogatories upon him, written answers to such interrogatories, upon oath, and file the same in this office. And it now appearing, from said interrogatories and answers thereto (and if the Surrogate has directed a reference to take further testimony or has examined the party in person, state the fact) that the said has committed the contempt with which he is charged, and this court now adjudging him to have been guilty of the misconduct alleged, and that such misconduct was calculated to, or did, actually defeat, impair, impede or prejudice the rights of (describe parties prejudiced) in the above entitled proceedings;

It is Ordered, that a fine of $ be, and the same is, hereby imposed upon the said for his said misconduct. Note.

Note. E. g., sum specified in the decree he disobeyed. Matter of Ryer, 120 App. Div. 154.

And it is further ordered, that the said do pay the charges and fees for serving the citation in this matter, amounting to $ and also do pay to the sheriff of the county of his legal charges and fees for executing said warrant of attachment.

And it is further ordered, that the said be, and he is hereby, directed to stand committed to the common jail of the county of there to remain charged upon his contempt, until he shall have (describe act required by citation), and shall have paid the said fine, charges, and costs; unless the court shall see fit sooner to discharge him.

And it is further Ordered, that a warrant issue for that purpose.

(Signature of Surrogate.)

170. Relief from undue punishment.—If the offender is punished by imprisonment and it develops, either that he cannot physically endure confinement, or pay the sum named as the fine, or actually do the thing directed, then the Surrogate has power under § 2286 to discharge him. Matter of Strong, 111 App. Div. 281.

But he will exact "satisfactory proof" of the inability. For example, merely going through bankruptcy is not of itself proof of inability to pay estate moneys. Matter of Collins, 39 Misc. 753.

§ 171. Enforcement of order.—Orders have been differentiated from decrees above. Orders are defined by § 2556, which is as follows:

> Definition of "order"; how enforced.
> A direction of a surrogate's court, made or entered in writing, and not included in a decree, is styled an order. It may be enforced in like manner as a similar order, made by the supreme court in an action; and the costs are the same as upon such an order, and may be collected in like manner. § 2556, Code Civil Proc.

An order thus is an interlocutory direction of the court, while a final order or decree is an adjudication which brings some particular proceeding to a determination. Matter of Bernhardt, 16 N. Y. St. Rep. 240. Where a party applies to have a decree opened the denial or granting of his application must be by order, and not by decree. An order is to be enforced just as any Supreme Court order would be; and it carries only the costs which such an order would carry, that is, the usual motion costs. Pease v. Egan, 3 Dem. 320; Estate of Stokes, 1 Dem. 260.

It is unnecessary to discuss in detail the rules applicable to the enforcement of orders as the general principles above laid down, as to a reasonable exercise of discretion and a substantial compliance with the Code apply to orders as well as decrees. Where a party, however, is sought to be punished for contempt for disobedience to an order, it must clearly appear that the act which he has refused to do, was distinctly required to be done by the order; thus, where a reference was ordered of the final account of certain testamentary trustees, and the referee directed to hear and determine all issues by the objections of the account; and the said trustees declined to answer certain inquiries put by the contestant's counsel although directed so to do by the referee, Surrogate Rollins held that it was material, upon proceedings to punish them for contempt for such refusal, to inquire whether the questions they had declined to answer were material or in any wise involved in the issues raised by the objections which had been filed, and if it appeared that they were not so material or relevant, the motion to punish for contempt would be denied. Robert v. Morgan, 4 Dem. 148, 152.

Where an order directed an executor to file an account, and he filed a printed blank with the word "nothing" written in on each schedule, held, a contempt, and punishable. Matter of People's Trust Co., 37 Misc. 392.

§ 172. Power to open decree.—Section 2481, subd. 6, confers the authority now had by Surrogates' Court to open, vacate, modify or set aside decrees or orders, or to enter them nunc pro tunc. This section is as follows:

> A surrogate, in court or out of court, as the case requires, has power. . . .
> 6. To open, vacate, modify, or set aside, or to enter, as of a former time, a decree or order of his court; or to grant a new trial or a new hearing for fraud, newly discovered evidence, clerical error, or other sufficient cause.

> The powers, conferred by his subdivision, must be exercised only in a like case and in the same manner, as a court of record and of general jurisdiction exercises the same powers. Upon an appeal from a determination of the surrogate, made upon an application pursuant to this subdivision, the appellate division * of the supreme court has the same power as the surrogate; and his determination must be reviewed, as if an original application was made to that term. § 2481, Code Civil Proc.

It is to be observed in the first place that error of substance or of law must be corrected on appeal. Matter of Tilden, 98 N. Y. 434; Matter of Hawley, 100 N. Y. 206; Matter of Seaman, 63 App. Div. 49, 53, and cases cited. Hence § 2481 does not cover an attempt to attack the probate of a will, two years old, and otherwise unattacked. Matter of Gaffney, 116 App. Div. 583. But see Matter of Wohlgemuth, 110 App. Div. 645.

Where a decree has been made final upon appeal it is held the Surrogate cannot then open it. Matter of Westerfield, 61 App. Div. 413; Hood v. Hood, 5 Dem. 50, see opinion.

The Surrogate's discretion is appealed to by a motion to open his decree, and he may properly refuse to open on motion of one who was not a party to the proceeding where it appears he could readily have intervened. Matter of Tilden, 56 App. Div. 277. If he denies such an application his order is appealable to Appellate Division. Ibid. (as a semble). See Matter of Gall, 182 N. Y. 270 where a creditor not a party came in after 8 years, and moved to open an accounting decree.

This power of the Surrogate is very broad and general. The Court of Appeals has held (Matter of Regan, 167 N. Y. 338, 343), "The Surrogate's Court has power, independently of any statute, to exercise control over its own records, and to vacate its own decrees for mistake, fraud, or clerical error," citing Matter of Henderson, 157 N. Y. 423; Hyland v. Baxter, 98 N. Y. 610; Sipperley v. Baucus, 24 N. Y. 46; Heermans v. Hill, 2 Hun, 409; Code, §§ 1269, 2481; Matter of Flynn, 136 N. Y. 287. He may exercise this power in aid of one in default if the default be excusable. Matter of Doig, 125 App. Div. 746.

The Surrogate thus has the power of a court of general jurisdiction to vacate his decrees and may grant relief as in the Supreme Court "upon the application of any one for sufficient reason in furtherance of justice." Ladd v. Stevenson, 122 N. Y. 325; Matter of Salisbury, 24 N. Y. St. Rep. 413. Thus, where a creditor filed his claim, and thereafter the administrator, without notice to him, accounted and a decree was made, it was held the creditor was not concluded thereby and could move to reopen the decree. Matter of Gall, 40 App. Div. 114.

When such decree is opened he may establish any proper claim against the estate, S. C., 42 App. Div. 255, and he need not make the beneficiaries under the decree parties to the controversy with the administrator. S. C., 47 App. Div. 490.

* The section inadvertently still reads "general term."

If distribution has been actually made under the decree, the creditor is not bound to follow the distributees, but may, if he establishes his claim, hold the administrator or his surety. Ibid. at p. 494, citing Deobold v. Oppermann, 111 N. Y. 531; Matter of Hodgman, 140 N. Y. 421; Matter of Lang, 144 N. Y. 275.

§ 173. Time within which application may be made.—Section 2481 above quoted provides that the powers conferred thereby "must be exercised only in a like case and in the same manner as a court of record and of general jurisdiction exercises the same powers." Accordingly, it was repeatedly held that §§ 1282 and 1290 governing the Supreme Court in setting aside judgments for irregularity and limiting the time within which applications to that end may be made were applicable to and controlled similar applications in the Surrogate's Court. See Corbin v. Westcott, 2 Dem. 559; Matter of Hesdra, 4 Misc. 37. The Court of Appeals in Matter of Hawley, 100 N. Y. 206, expressly held that relief from an erroneous or irregular decree, except upon the ground of fraud, clerical mistake, newly discovered evidence or other like causes, must be applied for within the period prescribed by § 1291 of the Code. And in Matter of Tilden, 98 N. Y. 434, it was held that the causes for which Surrogates' decrees may be vacated under § 2481 are analogous to those enumerated in §§ 1282 and 1283, and are governed by limitations imposed in §§ 1282 and 1290, except where fraud and collusion are made the ground of the application. And so in the latter case the court held that a motion on behalf of one who was a minor when the decree was entered must be made within one year after attaining his majority, if the two-year limit had previously expired. See also Cline v. Sherman, 78 Hun, 298. But in Matter of Henderson, 157 N. Y. 423, these cases were qualified (see opinion at page 429), and the court held that this provision of § 2481 was not intended to assimilate, in all respects, the power of the Surrogates' Courts over their records to that possessed by the Supreme Court; and that §§ 1282 and 1290 were not applicable in the way of limiting the time within which the Surrogate may act; and that while the gereral powers of the Surrogates' Courts are wholly statutory, it certainly must possess such incidental powers as are necessary to the proper exercise of its expressly conferred authority. But most of the powers mentioned in § 2481 were exercised by the Surrogate before the enactment of the Code, and so far the statute is merely declaratory of the law as it previously existed. The court passed upon the contention that "since the Surrogate must exercise his powers to open and correct the record only in a like case and in the same manner as the Supreme Court, he must necessarily act within the same time." In overruling this contention, the court observes at page 428:

"The statute, in speaking of a like case, means that the party making the motion must show the existence of the error or mistake in the same way as if the record was in the other court, and, in providing for the exercise of the power in the same manner, all that is meant is that the Surrogate shall proceed in the same way to hear the application. Proof must be made, notice given and a judicial hearing of the parties had, but there is no more limit as to the time within which the application may be entertained since the enactment of the statute than there was before."

And the court continues:

"There is no force in the suggestion that the legislature must have intended to assimilate, in all respects, the power of the Surrogate's Court over its own records to that possessed by the Supreme Court. If it did, it is quite sufficient to say that it has not expressed such intention. But there is no reason to suppose that it had any such intention in mind. The functions of the two courts are so radically different that the reason for a limitation in the one has but little if any application to the other. Litigants in courts of common law confront each other upon equal terms and upon well-defined issues. They are represented by counsel who are watchful of their interests and who have every opportunity to know the contents and scope of every order or judgment entered in the case. Under such circumstances, it is reasonable to suppose that any error or mistake of fact that has crept into the record, such as is involved in the case at bar, will be detected within two years. Not so with proceedings in Probate Courts. They are quite informal, conducted in many cases without the aid of counsel, frequently ex parte, by the representatives of deceased persons under such circumstances that a material error may lurk in the papers for many years without discovery. A court charged with such powers and duties should have ample authority over its own records for the correction of such mistakes as appear in this case, and, until the legislature shall limit the power by some language, clearer and more explicit than it has, it may entertain such an application as was made by this executor. (In re Flynn, 136 N. Y. 287.) I am aware that what has here been said may seem to be in conflict with the decision in In re Tilden (98 N. Y. 423) and In re Hawley (100 N. Y. 206), but the conflict, if any, is with the reasoning and not with the decision in those cases. The decision in both of them was doubtless correct, whatever may be said with respect to some of the reasons given.

"In both cases the ground for opening the decree was not a clerical error such as is involved in the case at bar, nor indeed any error such as is contemplated by § 2481, regulating proceedings for opening and correcting manifest mistakes, but errors of substance made at the hearing which should have been corrected by appeal and not by motion. It was claimed that the Surrogate decided certain questions of fact or law erroneously, and that the decree was affected by such error to the prejudice of the party applying for a rehearing. The other provisions of the Code covering regular appeals afforded the aggrieved party the true remedy. The questions that were involved and decided in those cases are not like the one now before us. They were not to correct a record so as to make it conform to what every one intended, but to review the decision upon the merits. In other words, it was an attempt to appeal by motion from an erroneous decision. In the case at bar the application was to correct a clerical error in the record. It was always a part of the inherent power of a court to supervise its own records, and we think that this particular power, at least, has not been limited or restricted by any statute." See also Matter of Mather, 41 Misc. 414.

§ 174. Same subject.—Where a motion is made on the ground of newly discovered evidence, the Surrogate will proceed to apply the same rules that the Supreme Court would; that is to say, such a motion will be granted only where such evidence

(a) Is likely to change the result,

(b) Is material,

(c) Is not cumulative,

(d) Could not have been obtained on the original hearing by reasonable diligence. Matter of McManus, 35 Misc. 678. This was reversed, 66 App. Div. 53, on the ground that sufficient reason was not shown on the record why the alleged new evidence could not have been originally adduced by reasonable diligence. In Matter of Banks, 108 App. Div. 181, the rule is stated thus: In order to a new trial upon the ground of newly discovered evidence, he must show that the existence of the alleged new evidence was (a) unknown to him at the time of the trial and could not have been discovered by him in the exercise of proper diligence; or (b) that he was misled and induced to refrain from making certain proof because of excusable mistake, or by some act or admission of his adversary on which he had a right to rely.

§ 175. Same subject.—The power to amend a decree when opened will be exercised in respect of material error or mistake due to inadvertence (see § 179). So in Campbell v. Thatcher, 54 Barb. 382, a Surrogate's power to open a decree settling an executor's account and insert a credit of $500, inadvertently omitted, was upheld. In Matter of Robertson, 51 App. Div. 117, the power to amend was upheld in inserting a provision as to the payment of a distributive share. See Matter of Hoes, 119 App. Div. 288. Appeal may be taken from the decree as amended. Ibid. See also Matter of Douglas, 52 App. Div. 303; Matter of White, 52 App. Div. 225.

So in a transfer tax case the proceeding was opened on motion of a legatee who did not receive the notice of the hearing required by the act. Matter of Daly, 34 Misc. 148, 152, citing Matter of Flynn, 136 N. Y. 287, 291; Matter of Salisbury, 24 N. Y. St. Rep. 413. And where one of the decedent's debts was overlooked the Surrogate opened and modified his decree by deducting the account and directing a refund of the amount erroneously assessed and paid. Matter of Campbell, 50 Misc. 485.

But if the tax is based on an overvaluation it is an "error of fact arising upon the trial" under § 1283 and not remediable in this way. Matter of Lowry, 89 App. Div. 226.

§ 176. Same subject.—The power to open decrees given by the present Code merely gives Surrogates' Courts expressly a power which they had previously exercised as incidental to powers expressly conferred by statute. Matter of Henderson, 157 N. Y. 423; Farmers' L. & T. Co. v.

Hill, 4 Dem. 41; Matter of Clark, 5 Redf. 466. Thus in Pew v. Hastings, 1 Barb. Ch. 452, Chancellor Walworth held that the power to open a decree was absolutely essential to the due administration of justice by a Surrogate. Similarly it was held, in Butler v. Emmett, 8 Paige, 12, 21, that a Surrogate had power to enter an order nunc pro tunc, provided that at the time to which it was made to relate back, he would have had power to make it. Similarly a Surrogate was held to have power to vacate and set aside a decree or order which he had no jurisdiction to make. Vreedenburg v. Calf, 9 Paige, 128. So also to modify a decree by the correction of mistakes and clerical errors, the result of oversight or accident (Sipperly v. Baucus, 24 N. Y. 46; Campbell v. Thatcher, 54 Barb. 382); or to revoke a decree for fraud (Yale v. Baker, 2 Hun, 468), and see Strong v. Strong, 3 Redf. 477, citing Brick's Estate, 15 Abb. Pr. 12.

§ 177. Same subject.—From this brief review of the power possessed by Surrogates before § 2481 was enacted, it will be seen that the Surrogate's Court had prior power to open, vacate, modify, or set aside a decree for fraud, clerical error, or other sufficient cause, such as a want of jurisdiction or an excusable default. Olmstead v. Long, 4 Dem. 44, 48; Matter of Filley, 47 N. Y. St. Rep. 428, Coffin, Surr. It would, seem, therefore, from an examination of § 2481, that the only really new power conferred thereby, is to grant a new trial or new hearing for newly discovered evidence which means a retrial of the issues made by the pleadings. Matter of Hawley, 100 N. Y. 206, aff'g Estate of Singer, 3 Dem. 571; Matter of Douglas, 52 App. Div. 303. But this power to grant a new trial or hearing must be limited to the cases specified in subd. 6, which are fraud, clerical errors, or "other sufficient cause;" this does not include errors of law which ought to be reviewed upon appeal (Matter of Walrath, 37 Misc. 696; Matter of Wallace, 28 Misc. 603, 605), for the Code has expressly regulated the methods by which a review of the errors occurring upon a trial before a Surrogate can be secured, and expressly provided for a loss of this right to review unless such methods are regularly pursued. This furnishes the strongest implication that such errors are not remediable by any other proceeding; certainly not under § 2481 of the Code. Matter of Hawley, 100 N. Y. 206, 211, opinion of Ruger, Ch. J. Also Matter of Beach, 3 Misc. 393; Matter of Carr v. Tompkins, 46 N. Y. St. Rep. 585. The character of the amendment must be such as could have been inserted in the decree when it was made. So, when it was sought to amend a decree settling an account by inserting allowance of payments made since the account was filed, the application was denied. Matter of Arkenburgh, 38 App. Div. 473.

178. Same subject.—The words, "other sufficient cause," are intended to cover only those cases where relief cannot be had by appeal or action to set aside the decree. Matter of Tilden, 98 N. Y. 434; Matter of Soule, 72 Hun, 594; Matter of Humfreville, 8 App. Div. 312. And so where a Surrogate refused to remove an executor and proceeded with the judicial settlement of his account and allowed him commissions, and, in the meantime, an appeal from the order refusing to remove the executor had been had and his decision reversed, it was held, that the remedy was not by motion to vacate his decree settling the executor's account, but by appeal from said decree. Matter of Humfreville, supra. In the headnote it is stated: "Even were the power of the Surrogate under § 2481 of the Code of Civil Procedure analogous to that of a court of record under § 1283 of the Code of Civil Procedure permitting the court to vacate or modify in the case of 'error in fact not arising upon the trial,' it would not cover the case, as here, the error in question did arise upon the trial on which the Surrogate must have decided that the executor had not been guilty of any misconduct forfeiting his commissions." It may be stated as the general rule that the power of a Surrogate to open his decree on the ground of clear mistake, accident, or fraud is undoubted. But the power should be cautiously exercised and it should never be used for the mere purpose of enabling the Surrogate to review his own decision. The only appropriate method of review is by appeal. Story v. Dayton, 22 Hun, 450.

§ 179. Cases where the power has been upheld.—The courts have upheld the power of the Surrogate to open, vacate, etc., decrees in such cases as the following:

Where a party though served with citation was sick at the time of the hearing, and probably had no knowledge thereof. Matter of Traver, 9 Misc. 621.

Where a Surrogate failed to file findings of fact and conclusions of law. Matter of Hesdra, 4 Misc. 37.

Where the accounting executor appears to have been guilty of fraud. Matter of Flynn, 20 N. Y. Supp. 919, aff'd 136 N. Y. 287.

Where the law under which he acted is later held to be unconstitutional, as in transfer tax cases. Matter of Scrimgeour, 80 App. Div. 388.

Where an heir-at-law was not brought before the court by a proper service of citation, and was not a party to the probate proceedings. Matter of Harlow, 73 Hun, 433; Matter of Odell, 1 Misc. 390; Bailey v. Stewart, 2 Redf. 212; Bailey v. Hilton, 14 Hun, 3; Matter of Lyon's Will, 26 N. Y. Supp. 469.

So a decree settling a judicial account may be opened on application of a party interested who had no notice of the accounting. Wells v. Wallace, 2 Redf. 58; Matter of Gall, 182 N. Y. 270 (opinion of Werner, J.).

Where matters in the nature of fraud have actually misled or prejudiced parties to the proceeding, although they may not actually amount to legal fraud. Matter of Hodgman, 82 Hun, 419.

Where the name of a distributee has been unintentionally omitted in a decree for distribution, the decree may not be vacated, but may be amended in that respect so as to include the omitted name. Matter of Grant, 16 N. Y. Supp. 716.

Where citation was properly served but the person served was non compos, and was not represented on the proceeding by any next friend or representative. Matter of Donlon, 66 Hun, 199.

It is also within the discretion of the Surrogate to open proceedings and admit claimants to a hearing who have not presented their claims until after the Surrogate has announced the principle of his decision; that is to say, if a Surrogate decides that persons belonging to a certain class are entitled to distribution, persons claiming to belong to that class should be admitted to the proceeding upon equitable terms, and the proceeding should be opened for the purpose and the parties heard. Matter of Pierson, 19 App. Div. 478, 489.

The mere fact that the decree was made by the predecessor of the Surrogate to whom the application to open it is made, is quite immaterial. Matter of Smith, 89 Hun, 606; Cohen's Estate, 58 How. Pr. 496.

He has power to open or modify such a decree equally with one made by himself.

So where an executor had been credited with the full amount of a note claimed to have been paid by him, and it subsequently appeared that he had settled the debt for less than the face of the note, the decree settling the account was opened, and a rehearing granted. Matter of Beach, 3 Misc. 393.

So where an executor has charged himself with property of the testator, which it subsequently appears had been sold before the testator's death, and suit was brought on such bill of sale against the estate after a decree had been made settling the executor's account, held that it was a proper case for opening the decree under subd. 6 of § 2481. Matter of McGorray, 20 N. Y. Supp. 366.

So, where it appeared that an heir had been forcibly detained, and so prevented from appearing in probate proceeding, a decree admitting the will to probate should be opened, and such heir allowed to contest. Hoyt v. Hoyt, 112 N. Y. 493.

It has even been held that a decree admitting a will to probate may be opened for the purpose of allowing a former contestant to obtain a construction of one of the provisions of the will. Matter of Keeler, 5 Dem. 218, Rollins, Surr.

So a Surrogate may vacate a decree which he signed through fraud or by reason of a mistaken supposition of jurisdiction on his part, or of death or intestacy on the part of the alleged decedent. Dobke v. McClaran, 41 Barb. 491; Brick's Estate, 15 Abb. 12; Matter of Patterson, 79 Hun, 371.

So where an order for the payment of money is vacated after the payments therein directed to be made have been made, the Surrogate has power to direct the repayment of said moneys by the recipients. Matter of Gillman, 7 St. Rep. 321.

So where it is brought to the attention of a Surrogate that the Court of Appeals has sustained the validity of a codicil to a will, which codicil removes an executor, to whom, upon probate of the will, he has issued letters testamentary, the Surrogate may revoke such letters. Estate of Wood, 29 St. Rep. 298.

§ 180. When power will be denied.—However, granting or refusing an application to open a decree is a matter of discretion with the Surrogate. Boughton v. Flint, 74 N. Y. 476.

And while under § 2481 his determination may be reviewed by the Appellate Division (Matter of Tilden, 56 App. Div. 277), the exercise of his discretion is not reviewable in the Court of Appeals. Boughton v. Flint, supra. If the Appellate Division hold his discretion to have been wrongly exercised it can itself make the appropriate order. Matter of Hoes, 119 App. Div. 288. (But read dissenting opinion.)

A decree will not be opened except on application of a party entitled thereto. So a creditor cannot move to vacate a decree admitting to probate as he is not a proper party to the probate proceedings. Heilman v. Jones, 5 Redf. 398.

Nor of course will it be opened where the party applying is guilty of laches. Matter of Kranz, 41 Hun, 463; Matter of Becker, 28 Hun, 207; Matter of Deyo, 36 Hun, 512, aff'd 102 N. Y. 724. Matter of Bodine, 119 App. Div. 493, holding that "other sufficient cause" means a cause "ejusdem generis." Nor will it be opened to correct an immaterial or inconsequential error or mistake. Matter of Deyo, 102 N. Y. 724, amount involved, $280.02. Nor unless the errors suggested are distinctly and conclusively alleged. Yale v. Baker, 2 Hun, 468; Matter of Deyo, supra. Nor on the ground of a mere mistake in law. Matter of Tilden, 5 Dem. 230; Matter of Carr, 19 N. Y. Supp. 647; Brick's Estate, 15 Abb. Pr. 12; Matter of Beach, 3 Misc. 393; Matter of Monteith, 27 Misc. 163; Matter of Mount, 27 Misc. 411. A decree was opened on motion of a judgment creditor. Subsequently his judgment was reversed. The order opening the decree was thereupon vacated on the ground that he was then merely a creditor having a disputed claim, but without prejudice to his applying again if he got a new judgment on the new trial. Matter of O'Brien, 33 Misc. 17.

Nor has he power to open a decree, which has been affirmed on appeal and remitted for further proceedings, on the ground of an alleged error at law. Reed v. Reed, 52 N. Y. 651.

Nor where it appears that all the parties were represented upon the proceeding will it be reopened for an error in law. Brick's Estate, supra; Matter of Underhill, 117 N. Y. 471, 479.

Nor should a decree of a Surrogate's Court be set aside for fraud unless the fraud is clearly established. Matter of Salisbury, 6 N. Y. Supp. 932.

Nor unless the facts are such as would be sufficient to justify the Supreme Court in setting aside a judgment of its own. Matter of Richardson, 81 Hun, 425.

Nor where the petitioner has been guilty of laches. Matter of Salisbury, supra.

Nor has the Surrogate right to open a decree merely on the ground that it was not made in conformity with the understanding of the parties by reason of an attorney's inadvertence. Matter of Soule, 72 Hun, 594.

Nor has he power to open or vacate a decree judicially settling the accounts of an executor or administrator, merely because an allowance of commission to such executor or administrator was inadvertently omitted, unless sufficient cause is shown for such omission. Matter of O'Neil, 46 Hun, 500.

Nor will a decree be opened merely because it was entered while an infant party was unrepresented by guardian; the Surrogate should be satisfied that the opening of such decree would be advantageous to the infant interested; and if the decree as entered sufficiently covers the interest of the infant, the omission will be deemed a mere irregularity and the decree allowed to stand. Benedict v. Cooper, 3 Dem. 362.

It is competent in such a case for the Surrogate to order a reference to determine whether or not it will be advantageous for the infant to set aside the proceedings. S. C., Rollins, Surr.

§ 181. Making orders or decrees nunc pro tunc.—Where, owing to some act or omission of the court, the making of an order or even the entry of a decree has been omitted, to the making or entry of which a party was entitled at a given time or stage in the proceedings, the Surrogate's Court has power to make the order or enter the decree as of such former time, that is, nunc pro tunc, upon the facts being properly presented to the attention of the court. But there are well known limitations upon the authority of the court to enter a decree nunc pro tunc. So, where a party had filed proofs of a will, thinking there would be no contest and that a decree would be entered as of course, persuaded the clerk to issue letters of administration with the will annexed without waiting for the formal entry of the decree; and the administrator proceeded to administer the estate without knowing that subsequent notice of an intention to contest the validity of the will was filed in the Surrogate's office and a memorandum of that fact was made upon the papers, and the decree accordingly withheld, Surrogate Rollins (Stapler v. Hoffman, 1 Dem. 63) held, upon an application for the entry of the decree nunc pro tunc, that the party must not only show that he was absolutely entitled to the decree at the earlier date, but that the delay in entering it had not been due to his own negligence, carelessness, or misapprehension, but to some act or omission of the court. See cases cited. In this case Surrogate Rollins defined as the proper practice that the proofs should be presented de novo and a probate of the instrument sought.

Where a Surrogate intended to refer an account for hearing and determination, but the order entered merely directed the referee to hear and report, he may amend the order nunc pro tunc. Matter of May, 53 Hun, 127.

So also where an order entered omits a recital of the papers on which it was granted, it may be amended nunc pro tunc. Matter of Post, 38 N. Y. St. Rep. 1.

CHAPTER V

APPEALS FROM DECREES AND ORDERS

§ 182. General provisions made applicable in Surrogates' Courts.—Section 1, art. 4, title 2, of ch. 18, provides a complete system covering appeals in Surrogates' Courts, both to the Appellate Division and to the Court of Appeals. By § 2575:

> The provisions of the following sections of this act, to wit: sections 1295, 1297, 1298, 1299, 1303, and 1305 to 1309, both inclusive, apply to an appeal taken as prescribed in this article. § 2575, Code Civil Proc.

These sections made so applicable are purely formal. Section 1295 refers to the designation of parties to an appeal as appellants and respondents, and the change of the title of the cause by substituting the name of the Appellate Court. Section 1297 provides for an appeal when an adverse party has died, by substituting the heir, devisee, executor, or administrator of the deceased party as the case requires. Section 1299 (q. v.) provides for proceedings when a party dies pending an appeal. Section 1303 covers the remedying of defects in proceedings on appeal. Sections 1305 to 1309, both inclusive (q. v.), provide for the waiver of security; for the making of a deposit in lieu of undertaking on appeal; for the filing of the undertaking; and for the giving of a new undertaking when the sureties become insolvent, and finally as to when an action may not be brought upon the undertaking on appeal. It is unnecessary to quote these sections in full further than to say, except as they are expressly made applicable by reference, appeals from orders or decrees of the Surrogate are provided for by art. 4 of ch. 18. It is unnecessary to refer to the statute providing for the taking of appeals after September 1, 1880, from decrees or orders made before that date; as the lapse of time since the adoption of the Code gives to such enactment merely a historic interest.

§ 183. Who may appeal.—The first distinction drawn by art. 4, is between appeals by parties and persons who are not parties. As to parties they are prohibited from appealing in any case where the decree or order appealed from was entered upon the default of such party. See Delmar v. Delmar, 65 App. Div. 582. In this case the parties appeared at the trial but declined to proceed.

> Any party aggrieved may appeal from a decree or an order of a surrogate's court, in a case prescribed in this article, except where the decree or order of which he complains was rendered or made upon his default. § 2568, Code Civil Proc.

The section contemplates by the word party, one who is a party at the time the appeal is intended to be taken, consequently, where a person has had the status of a party to a proceeding, and the interest by reason of which he became a party has ceased, his right to appeal also ceases. Reid v. Vanderheyden, 5 Cow. 719. This was a case where the party appealing was at the commencement of the proceedings in the Surrogate's Court a distributee, but this interest was defeated by the birth of a posthumous child just before the decree of the Surrogate was pronounced; this divested his rights as distributee and was held to have taken away all possibility of interest on his part and when his interest ceased, his right further to litigate ceased with it. All power of appeal was therefore gone. A mere interest in the costs, it was also held, gave no right to appeal in respect of any other matter. So it has been held that where an executor had not paid a claim or become personally liable to pay it, and the Surrogate refused to allow said claim, the executor was not a proper person to appeal from the Surrogate's decision but only the party in interest. Kellett v. Rathburn, 4 Paige, 102. Similarly it was held that where an appeal was taken from certain provisions of a decree settling the accounts of an executor and directing distribution, and it appeared that the appellant had no interest in the question arising on certain of the provisions specified in the notice of appeal, the Appellate Court would confine its deliberations to that portion of the decree alone in which the appellant had an interest on which to base the appeal. Matter of Allen, 81 Hun, 91. See also Matter of Hodgman, 140 N. Y. 421, 430; Bryant v. Thompson, 128 N. Y. 426. Only one failing to appear is "in default" within the meaning of § 2568 of the Code, permitting appeals except by one in default. People ex rel. Patrick v. Fitzgerald, N. Y. Law Journal, June 12, 1902.

§ 184. Only party aggrieved may appeal.—A party aggrieved is one whose rights are denied or prejudiced by the order or decree to be appealed from, and whose rights can be protected by appropriate action by the Appellate Court. Thus an executor nominated in a will is a "party aggrieved," within the intent of §§ 1294 and 2568 of the Code, by a decree refusing to admit to probate a codicil attached to the will. Matter of Stapleton, 71 App. Div. 1 (but see dissenting opinion at p. 8); Matter of Blair, 28 Misc. 611; Bryant v. Thompson, 128 N. Y. 435; Matter of Rayner, 93 App. Div. 114; Matter of Eckler, 126 App. Div. 199. See also Bliss v. Fosdick, 76 Hun, 508. But trustees under a will are not aggrieved by a construction of the will as to rights of the beneficiaries, and have no interest which is injuriously affected. Bryant v. Thompson, citing People v. Lawrence, 107 N. Y. 607; Hyatt v. Dusenbury, 106 N. Y. 663. So on a submission of an "agreed statement" to the Appellate Division by executors and trustees on the one hand and the "persons interested" on the other to determine from what fund to pay a transfer tax, held, the representatives had no standing to appeal to the Court of Appeals where none of the "persons interested" desired or joined in such appeal. Isham v. N. Y. Assn. for Poor, 177 N. Y. 218, 222, citing Bryant v. Thompson, supra, Matter of Hodgman, 140 N. Y. 421; McLouth v. Hunt, 154 N. Y. 179; Matter of Richmond, 63 App. Div. 488.

So where an order was made directing an executor to pay a legacy to A, and he appealed, claiming the legacy was invalid, and the money should go to the residuary legatees, he was held not to be a party aggrieved, and not to represent the residuary legatees. Matter of Coe, 55 App. Div. 270, citing Matter of Hodgman, 69 Hun, 487, aff'd 140 N.Y. 421; Matter of Mayer, 84 Hun, 539. Where, however, an allowance is made to a special guardian, the trustees directed to pay it represent the infant sufficiently to review the Surrogate's discretion by an appeal. Matter of Stevens, 114 App. Div. 607. The Code has changed the rule as it formerly obtained with regard to the character of the interest to sustain the right of appeal. Thus, where formerly it was held that a petitioner for probate could nevertheless appeal from a decree admitting to probate (Vandemark v. Vandemark, 26 Barb. 416; Delafield v. Parish, 42 Barb. 274), nevertheless the language of § 2568, "a party aggrieved may appeal," limits the right of appeal to those who have proper reason to complain of the decree or order in question. Thus § 1294 which provides for appeals generally (ch. 12 of the Code of Civil Procedure), is almost in identical terms and reads as follows: "A party aggrieved may appeal in a case prescribed in this chapter except where the judgment or order of which he complains was rendered or made upon his default." The Court of Appeals construing this section held (Bryant v. Thompson, 128 N. Y. 426, 434), that the right to appeal was limited to a party aggrieved and that accordingly questions of however great interest and importance could not be passed upon by that court until brought there by some party having an actual and practical, as distinguished from a mere theoretical, interest in the controversy. See opinion of O'Brien, J., at page 435, citing People ex rel. Breslin v. Lawrence, 107 N. Y. 607; Hyatt v. Dusenbury, 106 N. Y. 663. Consequently now, a party in whose favor a decree or order is given cannot be said to be aggrieved by it. Hooper v. Beecher, 109 N. Y. 609; Fairbanks v. Corlies, 1 Abb. 150. But the words are held to include the representatives of a deceased party who was himself a party aggrieved. See Campbell v. Gallagher, 18 Civ. Proc. 90. So also a person upon whom the interest of a party has devolved or to whom it has been set over. McLauchlin v. Brett, 2 Civ. Proc. 194. A stranger to the proceeding has no standing upon the appeal; that is to say, a person who does not bring himself within the definition of the interest prescribed by the section quoted may not appeal. See Matter of Bristol, 16 Abb. 397. Where a stranger to a proceeding applied for relief against the proceeding and his application being denied sought to appeal from such order, held that he could not do so.

§ 185. When person not a party may appeal.—It is expressly provided that certain persons although not parties shall have the right to obtain a review of a Surrogate's determination; they are specified in § 2569, which is as follows:

A creditor of, or person interested in, the estate or fund affected by the > decree or order, who was not a party to the special proceeding, but was entitled by law to be heard therein, upon his application; or who has acquired, since the decree or order was made, a right or interest which would have entitled him to be heard, if it had been previously acquired; may intervene and appeal, as prescribed in this article. The facts, which entitled such a person to appeal, must be shown by an affidavit, which must be filed, and a copy thereof served with the notice of appeal. § 2569, Code Civil Proc.

These persons, not parties, are thus differentiated from "parties" who defaulted.

It has been held that this section does not give an attorney status to appeal from an order withdrawing, against his objection, his client's objection to an account. Matter of Evans, 33 Misc. 671.

This section does not require the obtaining the leave of the court in order that such a person may appeal. Lewis v. Jones, 50 Barb. 645. The intervention is informal, not based on petition and order. The notice of appeal, and affidavit required by § 2569 is enough See Matter of Sullivan, 84 App. Div. 51. This case also held such intervening appellant need not file exceptions. The appeal was taken by a municipal corporation "aggrieved" by a failure in the decree on accounting to direct the payment of a valid tax assessed against the administrator as such. Held it was a creditor within the intent of § 2569.

It has been held that unless legatees who may not have been cited upon the probate proceedings do intervene and become parties they cannot appeal from the decree of probate. Section 2569, however, may be said to require that such a person interested in the estate or fund affected by the decree or order may intervene as therein provided and when he has become a party he may then appeal, as prescribed in art. 4. Foster v. Foster, 7 Paige, 48.

In order to determine the precise meaning of this section it should be considered in connection with § 2573, which is as follows:

§ 186. Who must be made parties.

> Each party to the special proceeding in the surrogate's court, and each person not a party, who has, or claims to have, in the subject-matter of the decree or order, a right or interest, which is directly affected thereby, and which appears upon the face of the papers presented in the surrogate's court, or has become manifest in the course of the proceedings taken therein, must be made a party to the appeal. A person not a party, but who must be made a party, as prescribed in this section, may be brought in by an order of the appellate court, made after the appeal is taken; or the appeal may be dismissed on account of his absence. The appellate court may prescribe the mode of bringing in such a person, by publication, by personal service, or otherwise. But this section does not require a person interested, but not a party, to be brought in, if he was legally represented, or was duly cited in the court below. § 2573, Code Civil Proc.

This section distinctly provides that upon the appeal, persons who are not already parties to the proceedings must be brought in by an order of the Appellate Court made after the appeal is taken. See Marvin v. Marvin, 11 Abb. N. S. 97; Matter of Dunn, 1 Dem. 294. So in Matter of Hunt, 120 App. Div. 883, the court held the appeal pending the bringing in of omitted necessary parties on its own order.

It would appear, therefore, from these two sections and the cases already cited, that as the Surrogate's Court has no power to grant an order of intervention after the decree is entered, that the purpose of § 2569 is that a person such as is described therein may, by filing an affidavit showing that he has the interest therein required and by filing and serving his notice of appeal, with a copy of such affidavit, become an original appellant and be thereafter a party to the proceedings in the Appellate Court. This construction of the section would obviate the risk which such a party might run of having the time within which he must appeal (which is brief at best) further shortened by the delay incident to action by the Surrogate on a formal application for leave to intervene which, Surrogate Coffin held in the Dunn case, supra, he had no power to grant.

§ 187. Parties to appeal—Guardian ad litem.—Section 2573 defines who must be made parties.

It has been held by the Appellate Division that a special guardian appointed in a Surrogate's Court does not become functus officio by the rendition of the decree; but that under § 2573 he is a party to the special proceeding and has to be served with a copy of the decree with notice of entry, and that his duties and office should continue until the final determination of the appeal from the Surrogate's decree. Matter of Stewart, 23 App. Div. 17, opinion of Goodrich, P. J.

In such a case not only is the guardian ad litem a necessary party, but the infant whom he represents should also be made a party to the appeal, although it is not necessary that the appeal be taken in the name of the infant. Underhill v. Dennis, 9 Paige, 202. The acceptance of costs and allowance in the court below does not preclude a guardian ad litem, however, from appealing. Matter of Edwards, 110 App. Div. 623.

Among the persons who have been held entitled to be made parties as aforesaid are heirs-at-law, next of kin, legatees and executors (Gilman v. Gilman, 1 Redf. 354; Pruyn v. Brinkerhoff, 57 Barb. 176); persons to whom money is directed to be paid by the decree (Jauncey v. Rudderford, 9 Paige, 273; Matter of Thompson, 11 Paige, 453), also any persons who are interested in sustaining the order or decree appealed from. Kellett v. Rathburn, 4 Paige, 102; Gardner v. Gardner, 5 Paige, 170; Gilchrist v. Rea, 9 Paige, 66. As, for example, where allowance is made to counsel for the contestants of a will and the executor appeals from the decree, such counsel have been held to be properly made parties upon the appeal. Peck v. Peck, 23 Hun, 312.

A motion made under § 2573 to bring in as parties to the appeal persons, not parties below, but interested in the subject-matter, should be made in the Appellate Court, after the appeal is duly perfected as to those already parties. Matter of Marks, 128 App. Div. 775

§ 188. Appellate Division, first appellate tribunal.—An appeal from a Surrogate's order or decree must be taken in the first instance to the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, under § 2570, which is as follows:

> An appeal to the appellate division of the supreme court may be taken from a decree of a surrogate's court, or from an order affecting a substantial right, made by a surrogate or by a surrogate's court in a special proceeding. § 2570, Code Civil Proc.

By this section parties aggrieved or persons entitled under § 2569 may appeal from any decree of a Surrogate's Court, except of course a decree rendered upon the default of such party (see § 2568), but as to orders, the section is explicit that they must be orders affecting a substantial right in order to be appealable. Matter of Burnett, 15 N. Y. St. Rep. 116. As for example, an order directing the executor to pay a legacy. Matter of Halsey, 17 Weekly Digest, 241. An order adjudging that an executor or administrator has funds in his hands for which he is therefore directed to account, affects a substantial right, and appeal may be taken to the Appellate Division as also an order which permits an administrator after his account has been passed upon by a referee, to file a supplemental account. Matter of Gilbert, 104 N. Y. 200; Stephen v. Lott, 42 Hun, 408. So also a decree fixing the fees of an appraiser is appealable. Matter of Harriot, 145 N. Y. 540. But where the order is ex parte (Matter of Johnson, 17 Hun, 538; Skidmore v. Davies, 10 Paige, 611), no appeal lies. The proper practice is to move on notice to vacate an ex parte order; if this motion is refused an appeal may lie. So an order denying a motion to dismiss a petition does not affect a substantial right. Matter of Soule, 46 Hun, 661; Matter of Phalen, 51 Hun, 208. So orders merely affecting the procedure on the hearing before the Surrogate do not affect substantial rights and are not appealable (Henry v. Henry, 3 How. N. S. 386), as where a Surrogate denies a motion for the simultaneous trial of several issues in a proceeding pending before him. See 4 Dem. 253. So the exercise by the Surrogate of his discretion to appoint a referee is not reviewable by the General Term. Matter of Post, 64 Hun, 635; Matter of Pearsall, 21 N. Y. St. Rep. 305. An appeal to the Surrogate's discretion, as for example, an application to reopen probate proceedings to admit extrinsic evidence is not reviewable (Boughton v. Flint, 74 N. Y. 476), unless the exercise of the discretion has been abused. So also in a case where the Surrogate granted a motion to issue a commission. Matter of Plumb, 64 Hun, 317. So where a motion was made before the citation was served or was returnable to vacate the citation upon the ground that the petition was insufficient, an order denying such motion was held not to affect any substantial right, and was therefore held not to be appealable. Matter of Westurn, 5 App. Div. 595, citing Tracy v. Reynolds, 7 How. Pr. 327; Matter of Burnett, 15 N. Y. St. Rep. 116, and other cases cited above. So an order overruling objections to the jurisdiction of the Surrogate to make an order, e. g., to fix value of an attorney's services, is not appealable. The person aggrieved should wait until he exercises the asserted jurisdiction and then appeal from such determination. Matter of Loewenguth, 114 App. Div. 754, and cases cited. In this case the Appellate Court of its own motion dismissed the appeal, but without costs. So an order setting aside a referee's report and referring the matter back is not appealable. Matter of Post, 64 Hun, 635. Where a Surrogate, however, improperly refused to decree distribution of an estate ready for distribution, it was held that the parties aggrieved ought not to appeal but to proceed by mandamus. Matter of Nottingham, 88 Hun, 443.

§ 189. Intermediate order reviewable.—It is next to be noted that,

> An appeal, taken from a decree, brings up for review each intermediate order, which is specified in the notice of appeal, and necessarily affected the decree, and which has not already been reviewed by the appellate court, upon a separate appeal taken from that order. § 2571, Code Civil Proc.

See Kearney v. McKeon, 85 N. Y. 136. An intermediate order may be said to be one forming a part of the history of the case involving the legal proposition which it is sought to bring before the court; but an order is not intermediate merely because made in the same matter and at a time prior to the order made directly the subject of appeal. Thus, where a will was admitted to probate and on appeal the General Term reversed the Surrogate's decree on a question of fact, and granted a new trial to be had before a jury upon certain questions, first, whether the testator was of unsound mind when the will was executed, and second, whether the will was procured by undue influence; such trial having been had and the result certified to the Surrogate, the Surrogate entered a decree adjudging that the will was invalid and revoking the former record and probate of the instrument. On appeal this decree was affirmed by the General Term. In the Court of Appeals, it was held that upon appeal from this last order of the General Term affirming the Surrogate's decree refusing probate, the prior order reversing his decree granting probate was not an intermediate order necessarily affecting the decree within the meaning of § 2571. Matter of Bartholic, 141 N. Y. 166, 171, citing Matter of Budlong, 126 N. Y. 423.

§ 190. Same subject; limit to right.—The last clause of § 2571 may make it an important question whether to appeal directly in the first instance from an "intermediate order." The question, of course, will be determined by the further question of an ultimate intention to appeal to the Court of Appeals. To illustrate this I give a case unreported in this particular. A accounted as administrator. B filed objections claiming the whole estate as widow. A moved to strike out the objections on the ground that by a former adjudication the Surrogate had held that B was not the widow, her marriage to decedent having been annulled, and his determination having been affirmed by the Appellate Division. The motion to strike out the objections having been granted, B decided to appeal directly from this order. The order was affirmed. She appealed to the Court of Appeals and there her appeal was dismissed. In the meantime, the matter proceeded under the affirmance by the Appellate Division before the Surrogate to a decree settling the account. B appealed from the final decree and stated in the notice of appeal that she intended to bring up for review the "intermediate order" striking out her objections.

Now, it is manifest on this appeal from the decree the Appellate Division could not review such order, because it had already been reviewed upon a separate appeal. The Appellate Division, further, having affirmed the decree, B then appealed to the Court of Appeals making a similar statement in her notice of appeal as to the "intermediate order" of the Surrogate. Quære, could the Court of Appeals, which can only entertain appeals from the Appellate Division, review anything which was not before the Appellate Division, under § 2571; quære, further, whether the difficulty could have been obviated in the appeal to the Court of Appeals by specifying as an intermediate order, not the order of a Surrogate, but the first order of the Appellate Division affirming the order of the Surrogate?

The question will doubtless in most cases turn in deciding as to the propriety of an appeal in the first instance from an order called intermediate as to whether it would come within the somewhat elastic definition of final order found in the decisions of the Court of Appeals. We have already noted, in Matter of Loewenguth, 114 App. Div. 754, that an order overruling objections to the jurisdiction of the Surrogate to make an order is not appealable until he has exercised his jurisdiction and made an order. But, in the case just outlined it might well have been claimed that the order striking out the objections on the ground that the objectant had no status was final, in that it effectually put her out of court (see further below, Appeals to Court of Appeals).

§ 191. Time to appeal.

> An appeal by a party must be taken within thirty days after the service, upon the appellant, or upon the attorney, if any, who appeared for him in the surrogate's court, of a copy of the decree or order from which the appeal is taken, and a written notice of the entry thereof. An appeal by a person who was not a party, taken as prescribed in this article, must be taken within three months after the entry of the decree or order, unless the appellant's title was acquired by means of an assignment or conveyance from a party; in which case, the appeal must be taken within the time limited for the taking thereof by the assignor or grantor. § 2572, Code Civil Proc.

This section preserves the distinction between appeals by parties and persons who were not parties, it being expressly provided that where the person not a party acquired his interest or title by assignment or conveyance from one who was a party, his appeal must be taken within the thirty days limited by the first part of the section. Otherwise a person not a party has ninety days in which to appeal. Thus, in transfer tax proceedings, to which the state comptroller was not a party, he was allowed to come in within three months and take an appeal. Matter of Dingman, 66 App. Div. 228. The time for a party to appeal is limited or set running not by the filing of the decree or order but by the service of a copy thereof with written notice of its entry. By the entry of a decree or order is meant its record in the proper book required by the Code to be kept by the Surrogate under §§ 2498 and 2499, so that the service of a copy of the decree with notice of its filing does not start the time within which to appeal running. Matter of Armstrong, 32 N. Y. St. Rep. 441.

§ 192. Making and settling case.—Where the appeal is by a party, that is, where the time to appeal is limited to thirty days, the case on appeal must be made and a copy served on the opposite party within thirty days after a service of a copy of the decree or order with notice of the entry thereof. The party so served may within ten days thereafter propose amendments thereto and serve a copy on the party proposing a case or exceptions, who may then within four days thereafter serve the opposite party with a notice that the case or exceptions with the proposed amendments will be submitted for settlement at a time and place specified to the Surrogate before whom the case was tried. The time for settling the case, which must be specified in such notice, shall not be less than four days nor more than ten days after the service of the notice. Rule 32, General Rules of Practice. But it is expressly provided that the Surrogate, on appeals from his court, may by order allow further time for the doing of any of the acts above provided to be done on such appeal. That is to relieve him from the consequences of his omission to do any of the acts relating to the preparation, service, or settlement of the case, within the time limited. See Matter of Williams, 6 Misc. 512, 515, which holds the purpose to be to give the Surrogate power, on seasonable application, and for good reason shown for the delay. Hence the power may be exercised after the time has expired. This of course does not extend to the matter of taking an appeal in the first instance. See § 1303, Code Civ. Proc., and Matter of Sheldon, 117 App. Div. 357. This covers the case where the appeal is by one not a party. No order extending the time to serve a case, or a case containing exceptions, or the time in which amendments thereto may be served, shall be made unless the party applying for such order, served a notice of at least two days upon the adverse parties of his intention to apply therefor, stating the time and place for making such application. The practice is assimilated to that in the Supreme Court by the latter part of § 2576, which is as follows:

> If the appeal is taken "from a decree rendered upon the trial, by the surrogate, of an issue of fact, it must be heard upon a case, to be made and settled by the surrogate, as prescribed by law, for the making and settling of a case upon an appeal in an action." § 2576, Code Civil Proc., in part.

The recitals in the order appealed from determine the papers to be printed. Matter of Gowdey, 101 App. Div. 275. The appellant may first move to amend it; if he does not his appeal may be dismissed. Ibid., citing Whipple v. Ripson, 29 App. Div. 70. However, the Appellate Division has power to remit a cause to the Surrogate to be "resettled in conformity with the facts," when it clearly appears either that a paper actually used was not recited in the decree, in that the decree recites a paper not actually used. Matter of Richardson, 120 App. Div. 406.

§ 193. Same.—It has been held that § 2576 was not intended to regulate the practice in bringing appeals, except to require that when the appeal is from a decree rendered upon a trial of an issue of fact, a case must be made and settled as on an appeal in an action. Matter of Stewart, 135 N. Y. 413, 416; Matter of Walrath, 69 Hun, 403, opinion of Mayham, P. J., citing Spence v. Chambers, 39 Hun, 193; Angevine v. Jackson, 103 N. Y. 470; Burger v. Burger, 111 N. Y. 523; Matter of Falls, 29 N. Y. St. Rep. 759; Matter of Marsh, 45 Hun, 109. Where no case on appeal is presented, the Appellate Court will have nothing to consider. Matter of Clark, 34 N. Y. St. Rep. 523. So in Matter of Goldsticker, 54 Misc. 175, Thomas, Surr., held that the only way he could settle a case involving his determination of the sanity of testator on a probate proceeding was by including all the evidence "which any party may claim to be material to the determination of the questions to be passed upon by the Appellate Court," citing Perkins v. Hill, 56 N. Y. 87, 91. Otherwise, he pointed out, it would be impossible for that court to decide under § 2545 whether the receiving by him of evidence objected to under §§ 829 and 834 of the Code was prejudicial to appellant and warranted reversal. So where the case on appeal does not contain all the evidence or does not have the usual certificate that the case contains all the evidence or contains a certificate which expressly states that part of the evidence has been excluded, the Appellate Court may decline to review the decree upon the merits. The case or papers on appeal must be certified or stipulated to be correct copies. The latter is now proper under amendment of 1904, ch. 137, to § 2567. If certified the Surrogate must charge one cent a folio "when printed copies are presented." The section now provides:

> Where in a proceeding in the surrogate's court the attorneys for all the adult parties interested and special guardians, or general guardians, appearing for all infant parties interested, other than parties in default, or against whom a final order has been taken and is not appealed from, stipulate in writing that a paper is a copy of any paper whereof a certified copy is required by any provision of this act, the stipulation takes the place of a certificate as to the parties so stipulating, and the surrogate or his clerk is not required to certify the same or entitled to any fee therefor. And the paper so proved by stipulation shall be received by the clerks of all the courts and by the courts, and shall be used or filed with the same force and effect as if certified by the surrogate or his clerk. § 2567, Code Civil Proc., in part.

§ 194. Contents of case on appeal.—In Matter of Sprathoff, 50 Misc. 109, Church, Surr., reviews this matter at length. (See opinion.) The next section deals with the matter of findings and exceptions. The whole matter turns on the nature of the determination appealed from. If the Surrogate make an order on moving affidavits and opposing affidavits the appeal is brought on upon a record containing the order and the papers on which it was based. Ibid., and cases cited. But if to make that order he had to pass on an issue of fact his decision will have included findings of fact and conclusions of law. The words "trial by the Surrogate of an issue of fact" means inquiry into and determination of such an issue, personally or by a referee whose report, however modified, he has made his own.

§ 195. Appeal may be on facts and on law.—"An appeal from an order or decree of the Surrogate may be taken upon questions of law, or upon facts, or upon both." Code of Civil Procedure, § 2576, in part. The rule has already been stated that under § 2545, the Surrogate must make findings of fact and conclusions of law, and that exception must be taken to his refusals to find, or to his decision. See ante. This provision is mandatory. See cases cited, ante; Matter of Falls, 29 N. Y. St. Rep. 759; Matter of Sprague, 125 N. Y. 732; Matter of Peck, 39 N. Y. St. Rep. 234; Matter of Kaufman, id. 236. It has been held that without the necessary exceptions no question in such case is presented for the Appellate Court to determine. Matter of Bolton, 141 N. Y. 554; Burger v. Burger, 111 N. Y. 523, limiting Angevine v. Jackson, 103 N. Y. 470. The decision in Angevine v. Jackson merely settled the principle that there must be an exception in order to raise a question of law in the Appellate Court. Judge Finch there held that an exception "to the Surrogate's decree and each and every part of it," is useless, citing Ward v. Craig, 87 N. Y. 550; Hepburn v. Montgomery, 97 N. Y. 617. For such an exception indicates no specific error and directs attention to no finding, and leaves the court in the dark as to what is the precise cause of complaint. In Burger v. Burger, Judge Andrews, writing the opinion of the court, distinguishes between review of the facts and a review of the law, and uses the following language: "An exception to facts found or to a refusal to find upon a question of fact is only important to entitle the appellant to a review, first, in the Supreme Court, and afterward in this court, of the strictly legal question which it is the office of an exception to present. But in the Supreme Court the facts are open for review without any exception." This refers to § 2586, providing that: "Where an appeal is taken upon the facts, the Appellate Court has the same power to decide the questions of fact which the Surrogate had, and it may in its discretion receive further testimony or documentary evidence, and appoint a referee." See Matter of Wilcox, 37 N. Y. St. Rep. 462; Matter of Patterson, 63 Hun, 529. By virtue of this section then it is manifest that no exceptions to findings of fact are necessary in order to secure a review of said facts by the Appellate Court. Exceptions, however, should be taken duly to every ruling of the Surrogate, in order to raise the questions of law which it is sought to have reviewed in the Appellate Court. Nor is it necessary in order to a review of the facts in the Supreme Court that the notice of appeal should specify the exact findings complained of; this is neither expressly required by the statute nor is it necessarily to be implied from the language of § 2576. Section 2574, which prescribes how an appeal may be taken (see infra), declares that it must be by written notice to be served referring to the decree or order appealed from and stating that the appellant appeals from the same or from a specified part thereof. It is nowhere required that the grounds of the appeal shall be stated in the notice. Matter of Stewart, 135 N. Y. 413, 416. Except in transfer tax appeals, q. v. post.

§ 196. Extent of power of Appellate Division.—The power of the Appellate Division in the review of a decision of the Surrogate is not limited to a determination of whether there exists evidence upon which his decree may be supported by virtue of § 2586 quoted in § 223 below, q. v. Not only has the court the same power in regard to the facts that the Surrogate himself had, Matter of Laudy, 148 N. Y. 403; Matter of Purdy, 46 App. Div. 33; Matter of Rossell, 121 App. Div. 381, but it must determine for itself upon the facts whether the case was correctly decided when such question is presented by the appeal. Matter of Rogers, 10 App. Div. 593, 594, citing Gilman v. Gilman, 3 Hun, 22; Matter of Hardenburg, 85 Hun, 580; Kingsland v. Murray, 133 N. Y. 170; Burger v. Burger, 111 N. Y. 523. This is well illustrated in Matter of McGarren, 112 App. Div. 503. The Surrogate refused to recognize as widow one whose marriage had been annulled by a Supreme Court judgment, holding that such judgment bound him so long as it stood, and that he had no power to examine whether it was based on personal service of process. The Appellate Division held he had such power, examined the facts as to service for itself, held service had been duly made and affirmed the Surrogate's denial of her status as widow, but on this further and stronger ground, which afterwards was given the force of res adjudicata. Matter of McGoughran, 124 App. Div. 312.

When an appeal from a Surrogate's decree is taken on the facts, the Appellate Court, while the proceedings are before it, has power to decide any questions of fact which the Surrogate could decide, and in its inquiry into such facts it may take further testimony or documentary evidence, and also direct a reference for the purpose of taking such testimony.

> Where an appeal is taken upon the facts, the appellate court has the same power to decide the questions of fact, which the surrogate had; and it may, in its discretion, receive further testimony or documentary evidence, and appoint a referee. § 2586, Code Civil Proc.

We referred above to the "semble" in Matter of Gilman, 92 App. Div. 462 as to the propriety of stating in the notice of appeal that such power would be invoked. (See §§ 197, 198).

Section 2586 means what it says: the Appellate Division has and may exercise the trial powers of the Surrogate. Matter of Tyndall, 117 App. Div. 294, and cases cited at p. 299; Matter of Hall, 61 App. Div. 266; Matter of Stapleton, 71 App. Div. 1.

This power, however, will only be exercised in necessary cases and where a clear reason therefor is shown. So in the Gaines Will case, where the decree appealed from had been made several years before the appeal came on, and application was made to the General Term to direct the taking of further evidence, the General Term refused to exercise its power under § 2586. Matter of Gaines, 74 Hun, 94. But in Matter of Burr, 116 App. Div. 518, where the appellant executor was removed for failing to inventory a demand note he had given decedent and complained on appeal that Surrogate had refused to allow him to prove payment, the Appellate Division appointed its own referee to take such proof. The Appellate Court must be satisfied that the evidence sought to be secured is important enough to justify a rehearing. Matter of Hannah, 45 Hun, 561. Newly discovered evidence may be received by the Appellate Division. Caujolle's Appeal, 9 Abb. 393; Matter of Drake, 45 App. Div. 206, 211. In Matter of Snedeker, 95 App. Div. 149, the court even assumed to supply an essential finding of fact omitted by the Surrogate, as well as by his referee.

The duty of the Appellate Division is not merely to determine whether there was sufficient evidence to support the decision, but it is expected to determine for itself whether the Surrogate correctly determined the facts. Matter of Rogers, 10 App. Div. 593; Matter of Warner, 53 App. Div. 565, 567.

When the remittitur of the Appellate Division is sent down, an order must be entered in the Surrogate's Court making the order of the Appellate Division the order of that court. Until that be done, no decree or further proceeding can be made or had. Estate of George Geissler, N. Y. Law Jour., June 19, 1902.

This power prior to the adoption of the Code was possessed by the Court of Appeals as well. Robinson v. Raynor, 28 N. Y. 494, 496, opinion of Selden, J., citing Schenck v. Dart, 22 N. Y. 420; Caujolle v. Ferrie, 23 N. Y. 90; Moore v. Moore, 21 How. Pr. 211. See also Howland v. Taylor, 53 N. Y. 627; Kyle v. Kyle, 67 N. Y. 400, 408; Hewlett v. Elmer, 103 N. Y. 156, 163. But under the present limitations of the jurisdiction of the Court of Appeals this is no longer so. Section 190, Code Civ. Proc. The Appellate Division may review discretionary orders of the Surrogate, but will not disturb his determinations unless there be an abuse of his discretion. Matter of Goundry's Estate, 57 App. Div. 232. Discretionary orders are not appealable to the Court of Appeals. Matter of Baldwin, 158 N. Y. 713.

§ 197. Appeals, how taken.—Section 2574 provides:

> An appeal must be taken by the service, within the state, upon each party to the special proceeding, other than the appellant, and upon the surrogate, or the clerk of the surrogate's court, of a written notice, referring to the decree or order appealed from, and stating that the appellant appeals from the same, or from a specified part thereof. Where a party to the special proceeding in the court below appeared in person, the notice of appeal must be personally served upon him; where he appeared by an attorney, it must be served personally, either upon him or upon his attorney. When a party, who was duly cited, did not appear in the surrogate's court, notice of appeal must be served upon him personally, if he can, with due diligence, be found within the county; otherwise it may be served by depositing it, indorsed with a direction to the party, with the surrogate, or the clerk of the surrogate's court. Where a person to be served cannot, with due diligence, be found, to make personal service upon him, as prescribed in this section, the surrogate, or a justice of the supreme court, may, by order, prescribe such a mode of service as he thinks proper; and service in that mode has the same effect as personal service. § 2574, Code Civil Proc.

The notice is thus to be served within the State. This section is clear and explicit. The only point to comment on is that when the Appellate Division has sent its remittitur down, and its determination has been made that of the Surrogate's Court, and an appeal is taken to the Court of Appeals, the notice of appeal, so far as service on the clerk is concerned, is served on the clerk of the Surrogate's Court, not of the Appellate Division.

The notice of appeal, as has been already noted in another connection, need not be as specific as exceptions are required to be; it need not state the grounds of appeal (Matter of Stewart, 135 N. Y. 413); but need only refer to the decree or order appealed from, that is to say, to describe it with sufficient particularity as to its date of entry, title and effect. It is only requisite that the notice of appeal should contain a definite statement that the appellant appeals from a specific order or decree or a specific part thereof. So it has been held that notices of appeal from Surrogate's orders and decrees will be liberally construed (Matter of Lawson, 42 App. Div. 377, 382), calling attention to the fact that §§ 2571 and 2545 are not so exacting as § 1301. But see Matter of Gilman, 92 App. Div. 462, which intimates by a "semble," that when the appeal is taken upon the facts, the power given the Appellate Division by § 2586 to independently decide the facts, receive further testimony or documentary evidence, or appoint a referee should be invoked in the notice of appeal. While this case was unanimously decided, yet in later cases the same court has exercised the power irrespective of the notice of appeal.

§ 198. Form of notice.

Notice of appeal.

Surrogate's Court,

Please take notice that (specifying status of appellant in proceeding in which the order or decree appealed from was made) appeals to the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court in the department, from the decree (or from the order) made by the Surrogate of the county of and entered in his office on the day of 19 and from each and every part thereof. (If only part of the decree is appealed from specify the purport of that part of the order or decree which is intended to be appealed from.) (If Gilman case, supra, is deemed good law, add: and appellant intends to bring up the facts for review under § 2586 of the Code.)

§ 199. What is brought up by appeal.

An appeal from a decree or order of the Surrogate's Court brings up for review by each court to which the appeal is carried, each decision to which an exception is duly taken by the appellant. § 2545, Code Civil Proc.

This implies, however, that there shall be a case containing the evidence incorporating the findings of fact and conclusions of law with the exceptions thereto. So, where there was no case made and settled and no record of any exceptions, it was held that an appeal brought up nothing for review. Matter of Potter, 32 Hun, 599. And where there had been findings of fact and exceptions but no case on appeal had been made and settled, it was held that the mere fact that these findings and exceptions were mentioned in the notice of appeal would not entitle the appellant to a review thereof in the Appellate Court. Matter of Clark, 34 N. Y. St. Rep. 523. See also Waldo v. Waldo, 32 Hun, 251; Burger v. Burger, 111 N. Y. 523, limiting Angevine v. Jackson, 103 N. Y. 470; Matter of Kellogg, 104 N. Y. 648. So the Court of Appeals held (Matter of Sprague, 125 N. Y. 732), that where no findings had been made and the case on appeal contained no exceptions, neither the General Term nor the Court of Appeals, had any power to review the Surrogate's decision on the facts. But in a case where the respondent having omitted findings of fact in the entry of his decree argued an appeal upon the merits, it was held he could not set up such omission and demand a reargument on the ground that no findings were made. Matter of Patterson, 16 N. Y. Supp. 146; Matter of Bradway, 74 Hun, 630; Matter of Falls, 29 N. Y. St. Rep. 759; Matter of Kaufman, 39 N. Y. St. Rep. 236. See Matter of Widmayer, 52 App. Div. 301. In this last case it was found that the Surrogate had not made any decision under § 2545, and accordingly the case was sent back to the Surrogate for compliance with the statute, following Matter of Peck, 60 Hun, 583.

§ 200. Reversal.—Generally where the Surrogate's decree is a determination upon a disputed question of fact and upon conflicting evidence, the Appellate Division will decline to disturb his decision upon appeal. See Matter of Clark, 82 Hun, 344. But under the power which the court has to decide all questions of fact which the Surrogate had under § 2586 (see Matter of Rogers, 10 App. Div. 593, 594, and cases cited), if they are satisfied that the evidence contained in the case on appeal is not merely conflicting, but is such as would warrant a jury in arriving at a verdict contrary to the decision of the Surrogate, the Appellate Division will reverse the decree of the Surrogate and order a trial of the issues of the specific questions of fact involved. Matter of Brunor, 21 App. Div. 259, 263, 265; Matter of Van Houten, 11 App. Div. 208; Howland v. Taylor, 53 N. Y. 627.

§ 201. Same subject.—A decree or order of the Surrogate's Court, "shall not be reversed for an error in admitting or rejecting evidence, unless it appear to the Appellate Court that the exceptant was necessarily prejudiced thereby" (§ 2545 of the Code of Civil Procedure); therefore, where the Appellate Court is satisfied that while the evidence admitted or rejected was improperly admitted or rejected, yet the court could independently of such evidence have justly arrived at the conclusion that it did, the error may be disregarded. Matter of Watson, 101 App. Div. 550. The effect of the section is to leave the Appellate Court at liberty to disregard the error if it could have had no influence on the determination of the case. Matter of Miner, 146 N. Y. 121, 136; Matter of Crane, 68 App. Div. 355, 357, citing Matter of Rogers, 10 App. Div. 593; Matter of Welling, 51 App. Div. 355. If the judgment is clearly right notwithstanding the error, it is no ground for reversal. Loder v. Whelpley, 111 N. Y. 239, 246. The courts in applying this rule under § 2545 have held that to justify a reversal it must appear, either, that had the evidence which was rejected been received, the appellant's case would not have failed, or that without the improper evidence which was received, the respondent's case was deficient. Matter of Seagrist, 1 App. Div. 615, opinion of Rumsey, J., citing Snyder v. Sherman, 88 N. Y. 656; Matter of Miner, supra.

§ 202. Same subject.—It is, however, the duty of the Appellate Court to determine whether or not the error was prejudicial; this inquiry is necessarily affected by the question whether the specific evidence was admitted improperly or rejected improperly.

Where a Surrogate, on the trial of an issue of fact, receives incompetent evidence, the case is different from an error of the Surrogate in rejecting competent testimony. In the former case the evidence improperly received is before the court, and it may appear that, although the Surrogate has erred in admitting it, yet the error did no harm, because the fact to which such incompetent testimony related was clearly proved by other competent evidence. Thus in the case of Loder v. Whelpley et al., 111 N. Y. 239, incompetent evidence was received. The Court of Appeals determined that this error afforded no ground for a reversal of the decree, because the Surrogate, in his opinion, which was incorporated in and formed a part of his decision, stated that he had disregarded the incompetent evidence, and also because the decision of the Surrogate's Court was justified "by testimony which leaves no doubt of its correctness, and leaving out all the evidence objected to by the contestant, the same result, and that only, could be reached." The court in the case cited determined that if a decree of the Surrogate was clearly right, notwithstanding an error in receiving incompetent testimony, such error is no ground for a reversal. See Matter of Benton, 71 App. Div. 522, 524; and Matter of Hopkins, 73 App. Div. 559.

But the case is different where a Surrogate errs in rejecting competent and material testimony. It is impossible to determine what effect such testimony, if received, would have had on the decision of the question of fact before the Surrogate. A party offering competent and material testimony is necessarily prejudiced by its exclusion; he is entited to have such evidence considered by the Surrogate; if received it might affect the result; he is injured by its exclusion. This is true of a refusal to permit cross-examination. Matter of Steenwerth, 97 App. Div. 116. The true rule as to the construction that should be given to § 2545 of the Code of Civil Procedure is stated by Andrews, J., in The Matter of the Will of Smith, 95 N. Y. 516, 527, 528, as follows: "Under this section, when the court of review finds that incompetent evidence has been received, or competent evidence rejected, it then becomes its duty to determine whether the error prejudiced the party against whom it was committed. If it appears to the court that it did not, then its duty is plain. If, on the other hand, the evidence erroneously admitted or rejected was important and material, and the court cannot say that, notwithstanding the error, the judgment is right, or if it entertains a reasonable doubt upon the subject, then we conceive a case is presented where the party excepting was necessarily prejudiced within this section." Matter of Potter, 17 App. Div. 267; Copland v. Van Alst, 9 Weekly Digest, 407; Horn v. Pullman, 72 N. Y. 269; Matter of Morgan, 104 N. Y. 74, 86; Brick v. Brick, 66 N. Y. 144.

§ 203. Same subject.—Where, on the probate of a will, persons whose testimony is made inadmissible by § 829 of the Code are allowed to testify, of course not meaning subscribing witnesses, unless the Appellate Court is able to say with certainty that the evidence was without influence upon the result (as, for example, where other witnesses testify independently, substantially and conclusively to the same facts), it will be proper ground for reversal. Schoonmaker v. Wolford, 20 Hun, 166, 168, citing Foote v. Beecher, 78 N. Y. 155. By conclusive evidence, however, is meant in this connection such evidence as is capable of but one construction and incapable of being answered. In this sense if the incompetent evidence was slight or irrelevant, or if, without it, the fact is conclusively established by other evidence, the Appellate Court will disregard it because it could not have injured the other party (Foote v. Beecher, Church, Ch. J.), or could not legitimately affect the result. Hobart v. Hobart, 62 N. Y. 84; Matter of Torkington, 79 Hun, 118; Matter of Degen, 89 Hun, 143; Petrie v. Petrie, 126 N. Y. 683. But if evidence be improperly excluded in the erroneous belief that § 829 is applicable, it is reversible error. In such case it is not necessary that the appellant should have made an "offer" of the testimony sought to be introduced. Matter of Potter, 161 N. Y. 84, 88.

§ 204. Perfecting appeal.

To render a notice of appeal effectual for any purpose, except in a case specified in the next section, or where it is specially prescribed by law, that security is not necessary to perfect the appeal, the appellant must give a written undertaking, with at least two sureties, to the effect that the appellant will pay all costs and damages which may be awarded against him upon the appeal, not exceeding two hundred and fifty dollars. § 2577, Code Civil Proc.

Since § 2575 makes §§ 1305–09 applicable as already noted, it is merely hinted that by written consent security can be waived under § 1305, or a deposit of money made with the clerk and notice of the fact served under § 1306.

(Note.)

§ 205. How stay effected.—Section 2577 is general in its operation, and fixes the character of the security which must be given to perfect any appeal, except such as are expressly provided for. The stay which it is desired to secure pending any appeal is given, not by virtue of this section, but by virtue of § 2584, which is as follows:

> Except as otherwise expressly prescribed in this article, a perfected appeal has the effect, as a stay of the proceedings to enforce the decree or order appealed from, prescribed in section 1310 of this act, with respect to a perfected appeal from a judgment. § 2584, Code Civil Proc.

This assumes that the appeal is by one entitled to appeal. An appeal improperly taken cannot so operate. Matter of Evans, 33 Misc. 671.

The sections referred to in § 2584 are 2578, 2579 and 2583, which will be discussed separately. The effect, therefore, of perfected appeals generally under §§ 2577 and 2584 is the same as the effect of a perfected appeal under § 1310 which provides that where an appeal is perfected as prescribed in ch. 12, "the appeal stays all proceedings to enforce the judgment or order appealed from, except that the court or judge from whose determination the appeal is taken may proceed in any matter included in the action or special proceeding, and not affected by the judgment or order appealed from or not embraced within the appeal."

Consequently where a Surrogate in probate proceedings denies a motion for a commission, an appeal from his order does not stay the probate proceedings. Estate of Henry, 4 Dem. 253. Nor would an appeal from an order denying a union of issues previously directed to be separately tried stay the probate proceedings. Such orders merely affect modes of procedure that are entirely within the control of the trial court. Matter of Henry, supra, citing Arthur v. Griswold, 60 N. Y. 143; Whitney v. Townsend, 67 N. Y. 40; Miller v. Porter, 17 How. Pr. 526.

On the other hand, if a Surrogate makes an order granting an application for the issuance of a commission to take testimony without the State, a perfected appeal from such order would stay the issuance of such commission. Matter of Henry, opinion of Rollins, Surr., at page 264.

§ 206. When second undertaking necessary to effect stay.—There is no provision for any other undertaking upon appeal except that required by § 2578, where some appointee of the Surrogate's Court, such as an executor, administrator, testamentary trustee or guardian, appeals from a decree requiring him to pay, distribute or deposit money, or to deliver property, or where an executor or administrator appeals from an order granting leave to issue execution against him; in such cases, in addition to the undertaking for costs and damages, there must be a further undertaking as required by the section which follows:

> Notice of appeal by an executor, administrator, testamentary trustee, guardian, or other person appointed by the surrogate's court, from a decree, directing him to pay or distribute money, or to deposit money in a bank or trust company, or to deliver property; or by an executor or administrator from an order granting leave to issue an execution against him, as prescribed in section 1825 of this act, does not stay the execution of the decree appealed from, unless the appellant gives an undertaking, with at least two sureties, in a sum therein specified, to the effect that, if the decree or order, or any part thereof, is affirmed, or the appeal is dismissed, the appellant will pay all costs and damages, which may be awarded against him upon the appeal, and will pay the sum so directed to be paid or collected, or, as the case requires, will deposit or distribute the money, or deliver the property so directed to be deposited, distributed, or delivered, or the part thereof as to which the decree or order is affirmed. § 2578, Code Civil Proc.

§ 207. Section 2578 requires two undertakings to effect a stay.—It must be distinctly borne in mind that the undertaking specified in § 2578 that the appellant will pay the sum directed to be paid or collected, or deposit or distribute the money, or deliver the property, is not sufficient of itself to stay the decree unless the undertaking to pay all costs and damages required by § 2577 is also given. Matter of Whitmark, 15 N. Y. St. Rep. 745. Where an executor, however, is mentioned in the will as a legatee and he takes an appeal from the decree of the Surrogate which declares his legacy void, the fact that he is an executor does not require the double undertaking contemplated by § 2578, for his appeal is an individual appeal, and the single undertaking under § 2577 will be deemed sufficient. Du Bois v. Brown, 1 Dem. 317, 334, Coffin, Surr. Unless, then, the appeal is by an executor, administrator, testatmentary trustee, guardian, or other person appointed by the Surrogate's Court, as such no undertaking can be required except the one for $250 required by § 2577, and the giving of that undertaking perfects the appeal. Matter of Arkenburgh, 17 Misc. 543, Tompkins, Surr., affirmed on Surrogate's opinion in 11 App. Div. 44, 45. The danger of failing to give both undertakings in the proper case is illustrated in Matter of Holmes, 79 App. Div. 267. The Surrogate by decree ordered the executrix to pay certain legacies. She filed only the undertaking required by § 2577. The decree not being stayed she was proceeded against for contempt, and fined the amount directed to be paid. The Surrogate's action was sustained on appeal.

If there are two proceedings between the same parties for the same object and one ripens into judgment, it bars the later proceeding even though stayed by perfected appeals. Matter of Moran, 59 Misc. 133.

§ 208. Contempt cases; different undertaking.

Security to stay proceedings in case of commitment.

An appeal from a decree or an order, directing the commitment of an executor, administrator, testamentary trustee, guardian, or other person appointed by the surrogate's court, or an attorney or counsel employed therein, for disobedience to a direction of the surrogate, or for neglect of duty; or directing the commitment of a person refusing to obey a subpœna, or to testify, when required according to law; does not stay the execution of the decree or order appealed from, unless the appellant gives an undertaking, with at least two sureties, in a sum therein specified, to the effect that, if the decree or order appealed from, or any part thereof, is affirmed, or the appeal is dismissed, the appellant will, within twenty days after the affirmance or dismissal, surrender himself, in obedience to the decree or order, to the custody of the sheriff of the county, wherein he was directed to be committed. If the undertaking is broken, it may be prosecuted in the same manner, and with the same effect, as an administrator's official bond; and the proceeds of the action must be paid or distributed, as directed by the surrogate, to or among the persons aggrieved, to the extent of the pecuniary injuries sustained by them; and the balance, if any, must be paid into the county treasury. § 2579, Code Civil Proc.

Where an undertaking is required under section 2579 to stay proceedings pending appeal in case of commitment, follow the foregoing from up to and including the names, residences and occupations of the sureties, and then continue: hereby jointly and severally undertake that if the decree (or order) appealed from or any part thereof is affirmed or the appeal is dismissed, the appellant will within twenty days after such affirmance or dismissal surrender himself in obedience to such decree (or order) to the custody of the sheriff of the county of whereto by such decree he is directed to be committed.

(Note.)

Note. Follow same rules as to signature, acknowledgment, affidavit of sufficiency and approval by the court.

The language of this section may be confusing because it contains no explicit provision for an undertaking for costs. It has been held, however, that when an appeal is taken from an order of commitment by the Surrogate for disobedience to a direction of such Surrogate, or for neglect of duty by an executor, administrator, testamentary trustee, guardian or other person appointed by the Surrogate's Court or by some attorney or counsel employed therein, a stay of the execution of such an order will be effected by giving the security provided by § 2579. Matter of Pye, 21 App. Div. 266, Hatch, J. But it was further held that, if the appeal was prosecuted to the Court of Appeals, in order to secure a stay, such second appeal must be perfected under § 1326. But when the appeal to the Court of Appeals is perfected by the giving of an undertaking to the effect that the appellant will pay all costs and damages not exceeding $500, which may be awarded against him on the appeal, then under § 1310, q. v., the appeal operates as a stay. And it was held in the case just cited that the Supreme Court had power to grant a stay of proceedings upon an appeal from an order made in a Surrogate's Court; the order in such case being conditioned on the giving by the appellant of the security required by § 1326. It was further held that the undertaking given under § 2579 remained in force unaffected by the appeal to the Court of Appeals and was a continuing security for compliance with the decree of the Surrogate, and that no further security was required to be given so long as it remained in force. Judge Hatch added: "It is quite evident therefore that the appellant had complied with all the provisions of law necessary to perfect his appeal except the giving of the undertaking for security for costs; when this was done, it, together with the appeal, operated as a stay of proceedings upon the decree appealed from until disposition was made by the Court of Appeals. No order was therefore necessary except for leave to file the security to stay proceedings upon the decree upon filing the required undertaking for costs. See page 268. See also Matter of Gihon, 29 Misc. 273, where Surrogate Silkman summarizes the practice, and holds that a duly perfected appeal by a contestant of a will stays issuance of letters testamentary, unless the Surrogate deems it necessary to issue them under § 2582 (see § 211, post) for the preservation of the estate. (Affirmed 48 App. Div. 598, on opinion below).

§ 209. Appeal by one of several parties, not necessarily a stay as to all.—Where there are a number of parties in interest and they do not all appeal, an appeal by one will not necessarily stay the execution of the decree where the appellant's rights are clearly separable from those of the other parties to the proceeding and can be protected, as by a deposit of money covering his interest pending the appeal. So where one of several residuary legatees under a will, that has been declared invalid, appeals from the decree directing distribution to the next of kin, the perfected appeal will only operate to prevent the execution of the decree so far as is necessary to protect his interests. Kavanagh's Estate, 9 N. Y. Supp. 443, Ransom, Surr. In this case the court made the following direction: "The executor should set aside a sum sufficient to provide for a possible reversal on appeal and then proceed to carry out the directions of the decree so far as the same will not be affected by the success of the appellant."

§ 210. Certain appeals not to stay execution of order or decree appealed from.—It is expressly provided by § 2583 that,

> An appeal from a decree revoking the probate of a will, or revoking letters testamentary, letters of administration, or letters of guardianship; or from a decree or an order, suspending an executor, administrator, or guardian, or removing or suspending a testamentary trustee, or a freeholder, appointed to execute a decree, as prescribed in title fifth of this chapter, or appointing a temporary administrator, or an appraiser of personal property, does not stay the execution of the decree or order appealed from. § 2583, Code Civil Proc.

It has been held that no stay can be secured under the decrees specified in this section, although the security provided by § 2577 has been given. In such cases while the undertaking for $250 must be given in order to perfect the appeal it does not operate as a stay as contemplated by § 2584, which commences "except as otherwise expressly prescribed in this article." See Fernbacher v. Fernbacher, 4 Dem. 227, Rollins, Surr. In the case last cited the learned Surrogate held as follows: "Upon careful examination of the various provisions of art. 4, tit. 2, ch. 18 of the Code of Civil Procedure, I am convinced that the operation of the decree removing the executors and trustees cannot be prevented by appeal; and that to make an appeal otherwise effectual, it is only necessary to give an undertaking, under § 2577, in the sum of $250. Section 2584 provides that a perfected appeal shall operate as a stay, 'except as otherwise expressly prescribed in this article.'

"Now, it is, among other things, expressly prescribed, in § 2583, that an appeal from a decree suspending an executor, or removing or suspending a testamentary trustee, 'does not stay the execution of the decree or order appealed from.' "

Sections 2578 and 2579 make special provision for the exacting of extraordinary security in the cases in such sections referred to, and § 2580 indicates the mode of ascertaining the amount of the security to be exacted in those cases, and in those cases only. In the third paragraph of that section, which begins with the words, "In every other case it must be fixed by the Surrogate," the word it refers, not generally to "the sum specified in an undertaking," but particularly to "the sum specified in an undertaking executed as prescribed in either of the last two sections" (§§ 2578, 2579).

"In the cases provided for in §§ 2578 and 2579, the appeal is perfected by giving the special security, and thereupon proceedings are stayed by the operation of § 2584. In the cases for which § 2583 makes provision though the appeal is not effectual for any purpose until the $250 undertaking has been given, there is no provision for exacting or accepting any other undertaking than that, and the giving of that does not effectuate a stay." A distinction has, however, been drawn between cases where there is a final order or decree revoking letters and the cases where by an intermediate order an executor or administrator is directed to do some particular act within a given time in default of which the order provides that the letters shall be revoked and annulled. If within the time limited by the order the executor or administrator appeals and perfects his appeal by filing the undertaking required by § 2577, no decree having actually been made revoking his letters, and the order appealed from being incapable of operating to revoke them, at any rate until the time therein limited shall have expired, such appeal stays the operation of the order, in which case a decree revoking the letters cannot be entered. Halsey v. Halsey, 3

Dem. 196, Rollins, Surr. In the case just cited the learned Surrogate, upon an application made to him after the twenty days had expired (the executor having failed to comply with the order but having perfected his appeal to the Supreme Court), asking that a decree absolute be made revoking the letters of the disobedient executor, held that he could not in any event make such a decree because either the order already entered operated as a decree, in which case no further decree was necessary, or the perfecting of the appeal by the executor stayed all the proceedings and prevented the entry of the decree sought to be entered.

§ 211. Appeal from probate decree—Limited effect.—In order that the administration of an estate may not be injuriously affected by litigation, it is expressly provided by statute that, where a decree grants probate, or directs the issuance of letters testamentary, or letters of administration, the perfecting of an appeal from such a decree shall have only a limited effect. The section is carefully devised and contemplates merely the safeguarding of the property by the executor or administrator and is as follows:

> An appeal from a decree of a surrogate, admitting a will to probate, or granting letters testamentary, or letters of administration (or from an order or judgment of the appellate division of the supreme court affirming a decree of the surrogate admitting a will to probate, or granting letters testamentary, or letters of administration), does not stay the issuing of letters, where, in the opinion of the surrogate, manifested by an order, the preservation of the estate requires that the letters should issue. Letters so issued confer upon the person named therein all the powers and authority, and subject him to all the duties and liabilities of an executor or administrator in an ordinary case, except that they do not confer power to sell real property by virtue of a provision in the will, or to pay or satisfy a legacy, or to distribute the unbequeathed property of the decedent, until after the final determination of the appeal. And in case letters shall have been issued before such appeal, the executor or administrator, on a like order of the surrogate, may exercise the power and authority, subject to the duties, liabilities, and exceptions above provided. § 2582, Code Civil Proc.
> (Clause in brackets is an amendment of 1900, after decision in Matter of Gihon, 48 App. Div. 598, affirming Surrogate Silkman's decision that section 2582 applied to appeals to the court of appeals as well as to appeals to the appellate division, 29 Misc. 273.)

While the object of this section is to preserve the estate for the benefit of the persons legally entitled thereto, there is no power in the Surrogate to authorize the executor or administrator to make expenditures, other than such as are necessary to conserve the estate; and so he cannot authorize the executors to disburse moneys in defense of the proceedings in the Appellate Court. Swenarton v. Hancock, 22 Hun, 43, 46; Matter of Hopkins, 95 App. Div. 57. However, reasonable expenses incurred by such administrator in sustaining the decree may be paid, and if the decree is sustained upon appeal will doubtless be eventually allowed upon the accounting. In the absence, however, of an order by the Surrogate directing letters to issue upon the ground that the preservation of the estate requires this to be done, the appeal does operate as a stay. Matter of Place, 5 Dem. 228, Rollins, Surr.; Matter of Choate, 105 App. Div. 356. And although letters issued before such appeal, the appeal will operate as a stay until the making of an order by the Surrogate manifesting his opinion that the preservation of the estate demands the exercise by the executor or administrator of the limited authority provided by § 2582. If he refuse such an order, it will be on the ground that the preservation of the estate does not at the time require it. Matter of Gihon, 48 App. Div. 598. In this case such an application was at first refused, but later it was granted in order to ensure the sale of securities of fluctuating value, and the investment of the proceeds. It was held that such investment could not well be done by a temporary administrator, as the executors under the will were given such discretion. This limited power will continue until a final determination of the issue raised by the appeal, that is to say, until the Surrogate shall revoke the probate or letters and the decree of revocation is served upon the executor or administrator with notice of entry. See Thompson v. Tracy, 60 N. Y. 174; Matter of Voorhis, 1 N. Y. St. Rep. 306; Bible Society v. Oakley, 4 Dem. 450.

§ 212. Limitations of executor's power specified.—It is further to be noted that the executor or administrator is limited in his powers under his letters only by the express exceptions noted in § 2582 which are three: (a) he may not sell real property by virtue of a provision in the will, (b) he may not pay or satisfy a legacy, (c) he may not distribute unbequeathed property of the decedent.

These limits are the same as those fixed by ch. 603 of the Laws of 1871, which was in operation prior to the Code, which act was construed by the Court of Appeals in Thompson v. Tracy, 60 Hun, 174, 177, Rapallo, J., where the court uses the following language:

"It will be observed that the only limitations upon the powers of executors to whom letters are issued under this act are, that they shall not pay legacies, sell real estate or distribute the effects of the testator. It is for the Surrogate to determine whether, in his opinion, the protection and preservation of the estate require the issuing of such letters. His determination of that question is a necessary preliminary. It is a consideration to guide him in deciding whether or not to issue the letters, but not a limitation upon the powers of the executors. When the letters are granted they possess all the powers and are subject to all the duties and liabilities of executors, except as expressly restricted in the then specified particulars."

It was accordingly held, the contention having been made that the prohibition of the statute was against distributing the effects of the testator even to creditors, that there was nothing in the act preventing creditors from establishing their claims by prosecuting them to judgment against the executor during the pendency of the litigation. And moreover the court held that it was not the intention of the act to interfere with the payment of debts during the litigation for the reason that the rights of a creditor could not be affected by the determination of the controversy as to the will one way or the other; their rights being independent of the will, and superior to those of persons claiming under or contesting it. If the appeal ends in a reversal of the probate decree, the executor is functus pending further probate or other proceedings unless under § 2582 an order be made continuing his powers to preserve the estate. Matter of Hopkins, 95 App. Div. 57.

§ 213. Formalities of undertaking.—Sections 2580 and 2581 relate to the form and the amount of the undertaking required to be given on appeal from a Surrogate's decree. Section 2580 is as follows:

> The sum specified in an undertaking, executed as described in either of the last two sections, must, where the appeal is taken from a decree directing the payment, depositing, or distribution of money, be not less than twice the sum directed to be paid, deposited or distributed. Where the appeal is taken from an order granting leave to issue an execution, it must be not less than twice the sum, to collect which the execution may issue. In every other case, it must be fixed by the surrogate, or by a judge of the appellate court, who may require proof, by affidavit, of the value of any property, or of such other facts as he deems proper. The respondent may apply to the appellate court, upon notice, for an order requiring the appellant to increase the sum so fixed. If such an order is granted, and the appellant makes default in giving the new undertaking, the appeal may be dismissed or the stay dissolved, as the case requires. § 2580, Code Civil Proc.

But § 2580 refers only to appeals taken by the persons described in the two sections preceding, that is to say, an executor, administrator, testamentary trustee, guardian, or some other person appointed by the Surrogate's Court (or, in contempt cases, including attorney or counsel). In all cases other than those covered by §§ 2578 and 2579, the security to perfect the appeal is only required to be an undertaking for $250. Matter of Arkenburg, No. 1, 11 App. Div. 44, affirming 17 Misc. 543, on opinion of Tompkins, Surr. This was a case where a decree had been made settling the account of certain executors; some of the legatees appealed, the executor although a legatee under the will did not appeal, the appellants gave an undertaking for $250 to perfect their appeal. Thereafter the executor moved for distribution under the decree unless a proper undertaking should be given to stay the execution and enforcement of the decree. The learned Surrogate, whose opinion was adopted by the Appellate Division in deciding the case, says:

The question is: "Does the undertaking already given effect a stay?

"Section 2577 of the Code provides for the undertaking which has been given and which is necessary to render the appeal effectual.

"The only other undertaking provided for on an appeal from a decree of the Surrogate's Court is in cases of appeals by executors, administrators, trustees, guardians or other persons appointed by the Surrogate's Court.

Then to stay the enforcement of the decree there must be an additional undertaking.

"Counsel for the executor and the motion insists that § 2580 gives the Surrogate discretion to require an additional undertaking and fix the amount thereof; these are the words relied upon: 'In every other case, it (the amount) must be fixed by the Surrogate, or by a judge of the Appellate Court, who may require proof,' etc.

"These words, however, clearly refer to undertakings required of executors, administrators, etc., and not to any other appellant.

"The case of Steinback v. Diepenbrock, 5 App. Div. 208, cited in support of the motion, is not applicable; there the appeal was from a judgment of the Supreme Court.

"There is authority for requiring an undertaking to indemnify a respondent against loss and damage, in such a case, that is not found in the provisions in reference to appeals from Surrogates' Courts.

"My conclusion is that unless the appeal is by the executor, administrator, etc., no undertaking can be required except the one for $250 required by § 2577, and that the giving of that undertaking on his appeal perfects the appeal, and hence under § 2584 operates as a stay of proceedings to enforce the decree."

§ 214. Same.—The Surrogate must fix the amount of the additional undertaking. If the party himself undertake to determine what is the amount in controversy his bond may on motion be vacated. Matter of Dittrich, 52 Misc. 277. In this case the Surrogate directed the removal of A and ordered her to account. The costs were $70. She gave one bond for $250 and one to secure the $70 costs as being the "amount in controversy." Held on motion to vacate it as inadequate and based on false recital of fact, that it must be vacated and that the amount of the new bond would be determined on formal application upon notice.

§ 215. Requisites of undertaking.

> An undertaking, given as prescribed in the last four sections, must be to the people of the state; must contain the name and residence of each of the sureties thereto; must be approved by the surrogate or a judge of the appellate court; and must be filed in the surrogate's office. Except as otherwise specially prescribed, the filing of a proper undertaking, and service of the notice of appeal, perfect the appeal. The surrogate may, at any time, in his discretion, make an order, authorizing any person aggrieved to bring an action upon the undertaking, in his own name, or in the name of the people. Where it is brought in the name of the people, the damages collected must be paid over to the surrogate, and distributed by him, as justice requires. § 2581, Code Civil Proc.

A precedent for the undertaking is given in § 204, ante.

§ 216. Effect of perfecting appeal on jurisdiction.—The Surrogate's Court as soon as the appeal has been perfected no longer has jurisdiction over the matter involved in the appeal, Matter of Murphy, 79 App. Div. 541, consequently proceedings relating to the appeal must be had in the Appellate Court, for example, the bringing in of a person not a party who is required to be a party by § 2573 (q. v.) must be done by an order of the Appellate Court, if such action is had after the appeal is taken; in which case the Appellate Court prescribes the mode of bringing in such persons by publication, by personal service or otherwise. So a motion to dismiss the appeal either for the absence of necessary parties or for any other sufficient reason must be made in the Appellate Division. Patterson v. Hamilton, 26 Hun, 665. The Surrogate's Court has no power to entertain the application for an order allowing the intervention of new parties on appeal; nor, where the appeal involves the whole proceeding (as an appeal upon a contested will) can he do anything in regard to the litigation except to conserve the estate as provided for in § 2582. Matter of Dunn, 1 Dem. 294. In the Murphy case, supra, the Surrogate, pending an appeal from his probate decree, assumed to open the decree and grant a new hearing. Held he had no jurisdiction to do so. But, if the appeal does not involve the whole proceeding or subject the whole estate to the Appellate Court he may act, as by appointing a temporary administrator. See Matter of Blair, 60 Hun, 523, quoted in § 218 below, Matter of Patterson, 63 Hun, 529, 531. So, by § 2580, any application for an increase of the security given upon the appeal must be made to the Appellate Court upon notice. So, if the undertaking filed by the appellant appears to be insufficient, the Surrogate has no jurisdiction, but the proper remedy is either for the respondent to move the Appellate Court for a dismissal of the appeal, or for the appellant to apply to the Appellate Court for leave under § 1303 (which is made applicable to the Surrogate's Court by § 2575), to file an amended undertaking. Du Bois v. Brown, 1 Dem. 317, 334, Coffin, Surr.

§ 217. Justification.—In the absence of local rules as XVI and XVII in New York County the only authority for justification of sureties is in the language of § 2580 which gives the Surrogate power when he fixes the amount of the bond to take proof by affidavit, "of the value of any property, or of such other facts as he deems proper."

If sureties become insolvent, the remedy is to move for a new or additional bond. Matter of Sheldon, 117 App. Div. 357. This is under § 1308 made applicable hereto by § 2575 above quoted. The court also held that § 2597 applies to any surety on any bond taken under ch. 18 of the Code. Section 2580 also gives the Appellate Court power on notice to order the increase of the undertaking, and gives a judge of the Appellate Court the same power as the Surrogate to fix it at the outset. The following are the local rules in New York County.

> XVI. The respondent, on any appeal from a decree or order of this court, may, within 10 days after the filing of the undertaking required on such appeal, serve upon the attorney for the appellant a written notice that he excepts to the sufficiency of the sureties therein; whereupon, and within ten days thereafter, such sureties, or other sureties in a new undertaking to the same effect, must justify before the Surrogate or the chief clerk on five days' notice of such justification, to be served upon the respondent's attorney, by each surety appearing in person before said Surrogate or chief clerk and submitting to an examination, on oath, on the part of the appellant, touching his sufficiency. If such sureties shall be found sufficient, said Surrogate or chief clerk will endorse an allowance thereof upon the undertaking or a copy thereof, and a notice of such allowance shall be served upon the attorney for the exceptant; and the effect of any failure to so justify and procure such allowance shall be to avoid the undertaking.

XVII. Wherever a bond with sureties shall be executed by an executor, administrator, guardian or other trustee, any person interested in the estate, or in behalf of such guardian may apply to the Surrogate for an order requiring the sureties in said bond to appear before him, or his chief clerk, and submit to an examination under oath as to their sufficiency as such sureties. If it shall appear to the satisfaction of the Surrogate that such examination was necessary he will make an order, prescribing the time and place where such examination shall take place, a copy of which order shall be served upon such executor, administrator, guardian or trustee at least five days before the time fixed for such examination. If on such examination the Surrogate shall be satisfied of the sufficiency of such surety he will endorse his approval upon the bond or a copy thereof; and in case such surety or such examination shall not, in the opinion of the surrogate, be sufficient, the Surrogate will make an order requiring the substitution of new sureties, within five days after the service of a copy of said order from the executor, administrator, guardian or other trustee, or his attorney if he shall have appeared by attorney on such examination.

§ 218. Appeal from verdict after trial by jury in probate cases.—Where either of the Surrogates of New York County has made an order transferring to the Supreme Court any special proceeding for the probate of a will pending before him, under § 2547, the Code makes particular provision for the manner in which such verdict is to be reviewed. Such verdict it is provided by § 2547 (in part) can be reviewed only by a motion for a new trial upon the minutes of the judge. Such motion must be made within ten days after the verdict is rendered. A new trial may be granted upon exceptions, or because the verdict was rendered upon insufficient evidence or is against the evidence or the weight of evidence. An appeal lies to the appellate division of the supreme court from the order granting or refusing a new trial. An appeal must be taken by serving written notice of appeal upon the clerk of the court, and upon the attorney for the respondent, within ten days after the service upon the attorney for the appellant of the order appealed from, and of written notice of the entry thereof. The appeal shall be heard upon a case containing all the evidence; and an error in the admission or exclusion of evidence, or in any other ruling or direction of the judge upon the trial may, in the discretion of the court, be disregarded if substantial justice does not require that there should be a new trial.

It is to be noted in this connection that while the matter transferred is pending in the court to which it is transferred or in the court to which it may be appealed, the Surrogate is only deprived of the power to try the issues referred. His jurisdiction over the estate continues. Matter of Blair, 60 Hun, 523, Barrett, J. In the case just cited where a Surrogate had transferred a probate proceeding to the Court of Common Pleas and an appeal had been taken from the verdict of the jury, and pending the appeal an application was made to the Surrogate for the appointment of a temporary administrator, the General Term held as follows:

"We think the Surrogate was not, by the transfer in question, divested of any of the powers conferred upon him by statute except such powers as by force of the transfer were expressly conferred upon the Court of Common Pleas. He could doubtless no longer try the issues of fact arising in the special proceeding for the probate of the will. That power, by force of his order of transfer, at once became vested in the Court of Common Pleas. But that power alone was transferred, and that power alone became so vested. The transfer of such other powers as are vested by law in the Surrogate's Court, and are not necessary to the due execution of the power transferred, cannot be implied. Thus the authority of the Court of Common Pleas, by force of the order of transfer, is limited to the trial of the issues of fact, and to certain appellate proceedings which may follow. The only implied power is that which is necessary to secure a proper and adequate trial of the issues of fact, and a proper and adequate hearing thereafter of the appellate proceedings provided for. The authority of the Court of Common Pleas under the order of transfer ends when it finally certifies to the Surrogate's Court the verdict upon the issues of fact. If the verdict sustains the will, the latter court may then admit it to probate. The Court of Common Pleas is nowhere authorized by § 2547 to perform that function. Under this transfer, standing alone, the Court of Common Pleas acquires none of the general statutory jurisdiction of a Surrogate's Court any more than would the Superior Court if § 2547 of the Code had specified that tribunal as the transferee. The application for the appointment of a temporary administrator is no part of the proceeding for the probate of the will. It is an independent proceeding for the preservation of the estate (pending litigation) authorized by § 2668 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and resting in the discretion of the Surrogate. That discretion may be exercised where delay necessarily occurs in the granting of letters testamentary or letters of administration, not only in consequence of a contest with regard to the probate of a will, but for any cause whatever. This would seem to be decisive of the present question."

It was also held in the same case that the provisions in § 2547 to the effect that after the proceedings have been certified back to the Surrogate's Court, "thereafter all proceedings relating to the will and to the estate of the decedent shall be had in the Surrogate's Court," was not to be taken as meaning that prior to such certification of the verdict, proceedings relating to the estate of the decedent had been transferred to the Supreme or County Court, but that the expression, "the estate of the decedent," was plainly inserted for abundant caution.

dict to the Surrogate's Court, and places that court in precisely the same position as though the Surrogate himself had decided the contest for probate."

§ 219. Review of verdict after trial by jury in proceedings for sale of decedent's real estate.—Where any Surrogate in the State has made an order directing the trial by jury at a trial term of the Supreme Court to be held within his county or the County Court of the county, of any controverted question of fact arising in a special proceeding for the disposition of real property of a decedent under § 2547, the method of review differs slightly from that noted in the previous section for the review of the verdict had upon the transfer of a probate proceeding to the Supreme Court, by either of the Surrogates of New York County. The practice is covered by § 2548, which is as follows:

> A trial by jury pursuant to an order made in a proceeding for the disposition of the real property of a decedent, made as prescribed in the last section, can be reviewed in the first instance, only upon a motion for a new trial. A new trial may be granted by the surrogate of the court in which the trial took place, or, if it took place at a trial term of the supreme court by the supreme court, in a case where a new trial of specific questions of fact, tried by a jury pursuant to an order for such trial made in an action, would be granted. The verdict of the jury must be certified to the surrogate's court by the clerk of the court in which the trial took place. § 2548, Code Civil Proc.

It is to be noted in the first place that in proceedings of this character, the order for a new trial may be granted by the Surrogate as well as by the court empaneling the jury; the grounds for such new trial are the same as those upon which a new trial would be granted in an action in the Supreme Court. The Surrogate of the county of New York has no authority under the prior § 2547 to entertain a motion for a new trial upon a verdict in a special proceeding for the probate of a will transferred to the Supreme Court. Matter of Patterson, 63 Hun, 529. The practitioner should bear in mind the distinction between a trial by jury ordered by a Surrogate, and a trial by jury of issues directed by an Appellate Tribunal on an appeal from the Surrogate's decree; and for this reason, that the motion for a new trial must be made in the court in which the proceeding is pending, that is of course, unless there is express statutory authority for making the application to any other judge or court. So in the case mentioned in § 2548, where the power to grant new trials is conferred upon the Surrogate, the Surrogate retains jurisdiction of the proceedings, the direction for the trial of the issues proceeds from the Surrogate, the clerk of the court in which the trial took place is required to certify the verdict of the jury to the Surrogate's Court for further proceedings thereon, whether the trial was had in a County Court or a Circuit Court. On the other hand, where the Appellate Division directs a new trial or a trial by jury of specific issues it would be an anomaly, if, although the Surrogate had lost all jurisdiction of the particular proceeding by the appeal to the Supreme Court, he could nevertheless entertain a motion for a new trial. Matter of Patterson, 63 Hun, 1st Dep. 529, 532. The distinction, therefore, is that the only occasion upon which a Surrogate can entertain a motion for a new trial, is after the verdict of a jury upon a controverted question of fact arising in a special proceeding for the disposition of the real property of the decedent, or upon a probate case in New York County under § 2547, and even in such a case the motion for a new trial may also be made before the court in which the trial took place or the Supreme Court. In all other cases where a trial by jury has been ordered, the motion for a new trial should now be made in the Supreme Court. See discussion below. By § 2549 it is provided that

> An appeal may be taken from an order, made upon a motion for a new trial, as prescribed in the last section, as if the order had been made in an action, and with like effect. Costs of such an appeal may be awarded by the appellate court, as if the appeal was from an order or decree of the surrogate's court.

§ 220. Award of jury trial upon reversal in probate cases.—Section 2588 provides:

> Award of jury trial upon reversal in probate cases.
> Where the reversal or modification of a decree by the appellate court is founded upon a question of fact, the appellate court must, if the appeal was taken from a decree made upon a petition to admit a will to probate, or to revoke the probate of a will, make an order, directing the trial, by a jury, of the material questions of fact, arising upon the issues between the parties. Such an order must state, distinctly and plainly, the questions of fact to be tried; and must direct the trial to take place, either at a trial term of the supreme court specified in the order; or in the county court of the county of the surrogate. After the trial, a new trial may be granted, as prescribed in section two thousand five hundred and forty-eight of this act. § 2588, Code Civil Proc.

The duty of the Appellate Division to direct a jury trial under this section, has been clearly adjudicated. It arises, first, where the appeal was taken from a decree made upon a petition, (a) to admit a will to probate, or (b) to revoke the probate of a will. It arises, second, where an Appellate Division reverses or modifies such decree. It arises, third, where such action is founded upon a question of fact. Hence, where the General Term reversed a Surrogate's decree refusing probate, and the reversal was based upon the facts, it was held (Matter of Laudy, 148 N. Y. 403, 409), that the court below could not on such reversal direct the Surrogate to admit the will to probate, but must direct "that a trial by jury be had at a trial term of the Supreme Court in the county of New York" of the specific questions of fact as to which they doubted the correctness of the Surrogate's findings.

It held further that the exception to the rule was where the evidence disclosed by the record is such that in case of a trial before a jury the court could properly take the facts from the jury and determine the question as one of law. (See history of the practice in this case stated at p. 431 of 161 N. Y. same name.)

§ 221. Test of necessity for jury trial.—The test is stated to be (a) the existence of a question of fact; (b) presented by evidence not free from doubt; (c) result reached by Surrogate not entirely satisfactory. See Matter of Burtis, 107 App. Div. 51. See for cases where trial by jury was ordered: Matter of Coe, 47 App. Div. 177, 181, where court was in doubt whether will was the "free act of a competent testatrix;" Matter of Drake, where court was in doubt as to testamentary capacity, and where the court framed the issues to be tried. See also Matter of Iredale, 53 App. Div. 45, 51; Burger v. Burger, 111 N. Y. 523, 526; Matter of Pike, 83 Hun, 327, 331; Matter of Van Houten, 11 App. Div. 208; Matter of Dixon, 42 App. Div. 481; Matter of Tompkins, 69 App. Div. 474, citing Matter of Will of Ellick, 19 Wkly. Dig. 231; Matter of Hannah, 11 N. Y. St. Rep. 327, 331, citing in turn, Howland v. Taylor, 53 N. Y. 627; Matter of Lansing, 17 N. Y. St. Rep. 440; Van Orman v. Van Orman, 34 N. Y. St. Rep. 824; Sutton v. Ray, 72 N. Y. 482, 484. The order of the Appellate Court is the origin and test of the questions the jury must try and should specify them. Matter of Tompkins, supra; Matter of Rayner, 93 App. Div. 114; Matter of Shannon, Ibid., 373; Matter of Warnock, 103 App. Div. 61; Matter of Finck, 115 App. Div. 871.

§ 222. The new trial.—The closing provision of § 2588 has been construed by the Appellate Division. Matter of Patterson, 63 Hun, 529; Matter of Laudy, 14 App. Div. 160. In the case first cited it was held that the Surrogate had no power to entertain the motion for a new trial by reason of the reference to § 2548 in § 2588. The court held as follows:

"Section 2588 relates to the practice which shall be followed upon a reversal or modification of a decree of the Surrogate, by the Supreme Court, upon a question of fact in a probate proceeding. It is provided that the court must, in such a case, direct a trial by a jury of the material questions of fact arising upon the issues between the parties; and that it must direct the trial to take place either at a Circuit Court specified in the order, or in the Country Court of the county of the Surrogate, or in the City of New York in the Court of Common Pleas.

"The question is now presented as to how, after such a trial, the results of that trial are to be reviewed. And it is provided for explicitly by the last clause of § 2588, which provides that a new trial may be granted as prescribed in § 2548. And it is upon the construction which is to be placed upon this clause that the question here presented, as to the proper practice, must be determined.

"In determining this question it is necessary, in the first place, to bear in mind the effect of an appeal to the Supreme Court from the Surrogate's Court. A probate proceeding by such appeal is removed into the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court becomes a court of original jurisdiction, and has the same power to decide questions of fact which the Surrogate had, and may, in its discretion, receive further or documentary evidence and appoint a referee. (Section 2586.) By § 2587 the Supreme Court may reverse, affirm or modify the decree or order appealed from, and each intermediate order specified in the notice of appeal, which it is authorized by law to review as to any or all of the parties, and it may, if necessary or proper, grant a new trial or hearing. And by § 2585 it is provided that the judgment roll containing the judgment of the Appellate Court shall be filed in the office of the clerk of the county of the Surrogate from whom the appeal is taken. And the sole authority which the Surrogate has for his subsequent action in the case is derived from the judgment roll so filed. It is thus apparent that when once an appeal of this kind is taken the whole proceeding is in the Supreme Court, and remains in such court until formerly remitted back to the Surrogate; and until it is so remitted the orders and decrees in the proceeding must be orders and decrees of the Supreme Court. We think, therefore, that the only portion of § 2548 which was intended to be referred to in § 2588 was the case in which a new trial might be granted, and not the tribunal which should ascertain the application therefor, the particular practice relating to such motions being governed by the other provisions of the Code in reference to actions or proceedings pending in the Supreme Court. And this view is supported by the fact that § 2548, where it speaks of the tribunals which are to entertain the motion, expressly refers to the cases provided for in § 2547. In those cases the proceedings are all in the Surrogate's Court, and the direction for the trial of the issues proceeds from the Surrogate's Court; and even where they are sent to a Circuit Court the motion for a new trial may be made before the Surrogate or in the Supreme Court; in the Supreme Court, because the Circuit Court has no power to entertain motions for new trials except upon the judge's minutes, and such motions are not appropriate in a case where issues have been framed in another court and sent by such court to the Circuit Court for trial. In a probate case, where issues have been framed by the Supreme Court and sent to a Circuit Court for trial, it never has been claimed that the Surrogate had any further jurisdiction of the case except to proceed in accordance with the final judgment in the case."

In Matter of Laudy, supra, the Appellate Division of the First Department held, that the motion for a new trial after a trial by jury under § 2548, incorporated by reference, should be made precisely as is required where a new trial of specific questions of fact tried by a jury pursuant to an order for such trial made in an action would be granted. The court held that § 1003 and § 999 were applicable, and that consequently a motion for a new trial could be made upon the minutes of the court at the same term at which the verdict is rendered. But that under § 1003, "where the judge who presided at the trial neither entertains a motion for a new trial nor directs exceptions taken at the trial, to be heard at a term of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, a motion for a new trial can be made only at the term where the motion for final judgment is made or the remaining issues of fact are tried as the case requires." Matter of Laudy, 14 App. Div. 160, 162. See also Matter of Clark, 40 Hun, 233; Webster v. Cole, 17 Hun, 507; Matter of Drake, 45 App. Div. 206, 215; Matter of Dixon, 42 App. Div. 481.

§ 223. Practice upon the appeal.—The practice after the Appellate Court has decided the appeal is covered by § 2585, which is as follows:

> Appeal; proceedings thereupon.
> In the appellate division of the supreme court the order made upon an appeal from a decree or an order of a surrogate's court must be entered with the clerk of the appellate division, and a certified copy thereof annexed to the papers transmitted from the court below upon which the appeal was heard, must be transmitted to the court from which the appeal was taken, and the court below shall enter the judgment or order necessary to carry the determination of the appellate division into effect. § 2585, Code Civil Proc.

It is only to be noted in this connection, that the certification of the papers to the court below, or the entry by such court of the judgment or order necessary to carry the determination of the Appellate Division into effect, is not required to be done before the party aggrieved by the determination of the Appellate Court can appeal to the Court of Appeals; the appeal can be taken from the order of the Appellate Division as soon as it has been entered and served with notice of entry. Libby v. Mason, 112 N. Y. 528. But where the proceedings are remitted by the Appellate Court to the Surrogate for a rehearing or for further action, this rehearing or action by the Surrogate cannot be had until the papers have been certified back to the Surrogate's Court; and so, where an appeal has been had to the Court of Appeals, which directs a rehearing by the Surrogate, the rehearing cannot proceed until the remittitur of the Court of Appeals has been filed and the Supreme Court has entered a formal decree thereon. Wright v. Wright, 3 Redf. 325, 327, Coffin, Surr. (See below Appeals to Court of Appeals).

§ 224. Judgment or order upon appeal.—The form of the determination of the Appellate Court is prescribed by § 2587, which is as follows:

> The appellate court may reverse, affirm, or modify the decree or order appealed from, and each intermediate order, specified in the notice of appeal, which it is authorized by law to review, and as to any or all of the parties; and it may, if necessary or proper, grant a new trial or hearing. The decree or order appealed from may be enforced, or restitution may be awarded, as the case requires, as prescribed in title first of chapter twelfth of this act, with respect to an appeal from a judgment. § 2587, Code Civil Proc.

The sections of ch. 12 which are made applicable are §§ 1319 and 1320, which provide the mode of enforcing a judgment or order, either modified or affirmed. These sections are as follows:

> Mode of enforcing affirmed or modified judgment.
> Where a judgment from which an appeal has been taken, from one court to another, is wholly or partly affirmed, or is modified, upon the appeal, it must be enforced, by the court in which it was rendered, or to the exten permitted by the determination of the appellate court, as if the appeal there from had not been taken. § 1319, Code Civil Proc.

See Matter of Cook, 125 App. Div. 114, holding that after the Court of Ap peals has directed the modification of a Surrogate's decree he has no powe to change the decision formerly made by him except in conformity with th superior tribunal's direction.

Mode of enforcing affirmed or modified order.

Where a final order, from which an appeal has been taken, from one cour to another, as prescribed in title fifth of this chapter, is wholly or partly affirmed, or is modified, upon the appeal, the appellate court may enforce its order, or may direct the proceedings to be remitted, for the purpose to the court below, or to the judge who made the order appealed from. § 1320 Code Civil Proc.

§ 225. Partial reversal and partial affirmance.— It has been questioned whether, when there are several defendants, the Appellate Court has authority to reverse a decree in part and to affirm it in part. The rule seems to be well settled that upon an appeal from a judgment which is entire and against several defendants, the Appellate Court must either totally affirm or reverse, both as to the recovery and as to all the parties. But in cases where there are separate and distinct judgments, or where an error exists as to a separate claim or defense, which relates only to a transaction between the plaintiff and one of the defendants, the judgment may be reversed as to such a claim or defense, and only as to the parties interested therein, and affirmed as to the remainder. The taking of "piecemeal" appeals will not be tolerated. See Matter of Cook, 125 App. Div. 114, aff'd 194 N. Y. 400. These rules are not of recent origin. They existed and were practically the same at common law, under the Revised Statutes and the Code of Civil Procedure. Altman v. Hofeller, 152 N. Y. 498, 504, citing Richards v. Walton, 12 Johns. 434; Arnold v. Sanford, 14 Johns. 417, 425; Van Bokkelin v. Ingersoll, 5 Wend. 315; Shelden v. Quinlan, 5 Hill, 441; Farrell v. Calkins, 10 Barb. 348; Story v. N. Y. & Harlem R. R. Co., 6 N. Y. 85, 89; Wolstenholme v. Wolstenholme File Mfg. Co., 64 N. Y. 272; Goodsell v. Western Union Tel. Co., 109 N. Y. 147; Board of Underwriters v. Nat. Bank, 146 N. Y. 64. See discussion of cases cited, at pages 504 to 506.

§ 226. Appeals to the Court of Appeals.—There is in art. 4, of ch. 18, no provision as to appeals to the Court of Appeals; they are regulated by § 190 of the Code, q. v. Hence the Court of Appeals only reviews the action of the Appellate Divisions, and that on appeals from decrees or final orders.

§ 227. Final orders.—Under this section the following decisions have been made as to what is or is not a final order of a Surrogate. An order settling an intermediate account of executor, and awarding commissions, and determining the rights of the parties to the extent that it actually adjudged them, is an order finally determining a special proceeding, and an appeal will lie to the Court of Appeals as of right from an order of the Appellate Division affirming the same. Matter of Prentice, 160 N. Y. 568. So is an order which effectually puts out of court an attorney asserting his lien in the Surrogate's Court. Matter of Fitzsimmons, 174 N. Y. 15. See also Matter of Regan, 167 N. Y. 338. An order of a Surrogate directing an executor or administrator to make and file an account is not a final order. Matter of Callahan, 139 N. Y. 51. Nor is his order denying a motion to open a decree and require a further accounting. Matter of Small, 158 N. Y. 128, citing Van Arsdale v. King, 155 N. Y. 325; City of Johnstown v. Wade, 157 N. Y. 50. The order of the Surrogate fixing appraiser's fees is a final order. Matter of Harriot, 145 N. Y. 540. An order of a Surrogate denying a motion to direct an executor to institute legal proceedings is not a final order but is merely the exercise of his discretion, and cannot be reviewed in the Court of Appeals. Sherman v. Page, 85 N. Y. 123. So also a Surrogate's order vacating a stay on probate, denying an application for issuance of letters testamentary, and relief from a stipulation of renunciation by an executor, and granting letters of administration c. t. a. is a discretionary order and not reviewable in the Court of Appeals. Matter of Baldwin, 158 N. Y. 713. An order fixing the amount of a creditor's claim is a final order. Mead v. Jenkins, 4 Dem. 85. So where a Surrogate made an order denying a motion to vacate certain decrees made upon executor's accountings and the General Term reversed his decree and vacated the decree which he had refused to vacate, held that it was a final order and reviewable in the Court of Appeals. Matter of Tilden, 98 N. Y. 434. But where a Surrogate's order denies an application that an executrix be required to account and on appeal the General Term reversed such order, and remitted the proceedings to the Surrogate for the purpose of accounting prayed for, held that this was not such a final order as to be reviewable in the Court of Appeals. Matter of Latz, 110 N. Y. 661.

§ 228. Practice on such appeals.—When appeal is taken to the Court of Appeals from judgment of the Appellate Division affirming or reversing a Surrogate's decree, the appeal may be noticed on the calendar for appeals from orders and heard as a motion.

While the Court of Appeals reviews the act of the court immediately below, and no appeal lies directly from the Surrogate's Court to the Court of Appeals, Matter of Union Trust Co., 172 N. Y. 494, yet the clerical practice is just as if it could so lie. For, after the remittitur is sent by the Appellate Division to the Surrogate, the return to the Court of Appeals is certified by the Surrogate's Clerk, the notice of appeal is served on him,* and the remittitur of the Court of Appeals is sent back to him so that the clerk of the Appellate Division has no further relation to the matter, except in the one case when the appeal is on questions certified to the Court of Appeals.

It must be borne in mind that the Court of Appeals will apply to appeals coming up from the Surrogate's Court the same rules it does to other appeals. Thus an order of the Appellate Division reversing a Surrogate's decree revoking probate of a will which does not state that the reversal was upon the facts must be reversed if the record discloses no error of law. Matter of Keefe, 164 N. Y. 352, rev'g 47 App. Div. 214, applying §§ 1338, 1361, and citing Matter of Chapman, 162 N. Y. 456; Wetmore v. Wetmore, 162 N. Y. 503; People v. Barker, 152 N. Y. 417. See also Matter of Hall, 164 N. Y. 196; Matter of Barefield, 177 N. Y. 387.

In such a case the Court of Appeals can examine the record only to ascertain if any of the findings of fact are unsupported by evidence, thereby disclosing legal error. Matter of Keefe, supra, and cases cited at p. 354.

In Nat'l Harrow Co. v. Bement & Sons, 163 N. Y. 505, 508, the court laid down the rule, "When the Appellate Division reverses on the law we have but three questions open to us here, viz.: 1. The correctness of the rulings as to the admission or rejection of evidence; 2. Whether any material finding of fact is without evidence to support it; 3. Whether the conclusions of law are supported by the facts found." Where the Appellate Division reverses a Surrogate's decree upon questions of law only, an appeal may be taken to the Court of Appeals from its decision. Kingsland v. Murray, 133 N. Y. 170, 177. Where the evidence is conflicting, or where it is of such a nature that diverse inferences may be drawn therefrom, the decisions of the Appellate Division upon questions of fact cannot be reviewed in the Court of Appeals. Matter of Ross, 87 N. Y. 514. Section 1337 of the Code provides that a question of fact arising upon conflicting evidence cannot be determined upon an appeal to the Court of Appeals, unless where special provision for the determination thereof is made by law. No special provision is found in the Code authorizing a review in the Court of Appeals of a question of fact in any special proceeding or upon any appeal from the Surrogate's Court. Kingsland v. Murray, supra, opinion of Earl, Ch. J., at page 178.

Where the Appellate Division reverses on both facts and law the Court of Appeals has no jurisdiction. Matter of Totten, 179 N. Y. 112. But in this case the court asserted jurisdiction, holding that the Appellate Division "cannot create a question of fact" by its mere say-so. So they examined the record, held the inferences from uncontradicted evidence so pointed to one conclusion and the only one a reasonable mind could reach, hence there was no question of fact!

§ 229. Findings below.—In the Barefield case, above cited, there were no findings of facts. The order of reversal by the Appellate Division did not state it was on the facts. The Court of Appeals held it must be presumed that all facts warranted by the evidence, and necessary to support the determination of the trial court were duly found, citing, People v. Adirondack Ry. Co., 160 N. Y. 225; Gannon v. McGuire, 160 N. Y. 476.

If exceptions are made to the Surrogate's conclusions of law underlying a decree, which is affirmed by the Appellate Division, questions of law are thereby raised which the Court of Appeals can review. Matter of Killan, 172 N. Y. 547.

§ 230. Appeal must be direct from Appellate Division.—It is not possible, after action by the Appellate Division modifying a Surrogate's decree, to appeal directly to the Court of Appeals from that decree duly modified; nor can such an appeal be regularized by stating in the notice that the modifying action of the Appellate Division will be brought up for review, for it is not an "intermediate order" in the sense of the Code. Either an appeal must be taken directly from the order of the Appellate Division; or the device resorted to of modifying the Surrogate's decree, taking a second appeal to the Appellate Division which will affirm pro forma, and thus appealing to the Court of Appeals from this "final" judgment of the Appellate Division. So held in Matter of Union Trust Co., 172 N. Y. 494, citing Ansonia Brass & Copper Co. v. Conner, 98 N. Y. 574.

§ 231. Remittitur from Court of Appeals.—When the Court of Appeals has decided the appeal its remittitur is sent down. It should be filed in the Surrogate's court, Matter of Hopkins, 41 Misc. 83, aff'd 95 App. Div. 57, when the usual order is then made making the determination of the Court of Appeals that of the Surrogate. This is made on notice. Baylies, New Trials & Appeals, 2d Ed., p. 368. Perplexing questions may arise. For this last order of the Surrogate must conform strictly to the remittitur, which, if erroneous, can only be amended by the Court of Appeals on notice. Zapf v. Carter, 90 App. Div. 407. The court below cannot make any change. Parish v. Parish, 87 App. Div. 430. Yet, on the other hand, the Surrogate can make no order he could not originally have made. Thus in the Hopkins case above, Silkman, Surr., on the remittitur made his order accordingly "reversing the Appellate Division and ordering a jury trial." Held this was unauthorized and surplusage.

In the same case, the Surrogate queried whether a jury trial could be had under § 2588 under the decision of the Court of Appeals since its reversal is presumed to be on questions of law and that section only authorizes such trial upon a reversal on the facts. The Appellate Division does not pass on this point directly, but doubtless the Court of Appeals has power on such an appeal to make the determination which the Appellate Division ought to have made.

CHAPTER VI

COSTS AND ALLOWANCES

§ 232. Costs in Surrogates' Courts.—Costs in Surrogates' Courts are awarded either by order or by decree. An order is a mere direction of a Surrogate's Court made or entered in writing and not included in a decree. Code Civ. Proc. § 2556. A decree or final order as it may be called, is a final determination of the rights of a party to a special proceeding in a Surrogate's Court. Code Civ. Proc. § 2550. The costs allowed by an order are determined by the same rules, as to amount and method of collection, as in the case of an order made by the Supreme Court in an action (§ 2556). Thus, the costs which may be imposed upon the granting or denial of a motion being $10.00 in the Supreme Court, a party to a proceeding in a Surrogate's Court cannot be permitted to increase the amount of his costs, by framing his order as a decree. Pease v. Egan, 3 Dem. 320.

Where petitioner moved to open a decree and his application was denied, Rollins, Surr., held, that while the decree sought to be vacated was a final determination within the meaning of § 2550, the refusal to disturb it must be framed as, and incorporated in, an order (§ 2556). An application for an order is a motion. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 757, 768. Maximum costs upon a motion are $10.00 in the Supreme Court and must be limited to that sum in the Surrogate's Court (§ 3251). Stokes v. Dale, 1 Dem. 260, 264. The allowance of costs is regulated by the Code, and the Surrogate has no power to award costs or make an allowance for any purpose unless expressly authorized to do so by the Code. Matter of Ingraham, 35 Misc. 577; Matter of Holden, 126 N. Y. 589; McMahon v. Smith, 20 Misc. 305, 308; Du Bois v. Brown, 1 Dem. 317; Matter of Bender, 86 Hun, 570. This applies to costs, allowances and disbursements, including witness's and stenographer's fees. Matter of Engelbrecht, 15 App. Div. 541.

§ 233. Collecting costs.—As to the enforcement of either an order or a decree awarding costs, see ch. IV, ante, on Decrees and Orders. It is sufficient here to observe that motion costs must be collected in the manner provided by § 779, Code Civ. Proc., q. v. Surrogate Rollins in 1884, held explicitly (Scofield v. Adriance, 2 Dem. 486), that § 779 of the Code providing how costs of a motion are to be collected, does not apply to a Surrogate's Court. This was where petitioner asked that the Surrogate's Court should refuse to entertain a certain application on the ground that the party applying had omitted to pay certain costs, and that therefore all proceedings on his part should be deemed stayed until the payment of such costs. In 1886 the same Surrogate (Matter of Lippincott, 5 Dem. 299) held that the manner of collecting motion costs in the Surrogate's Court is declared by § 2556 of the Code to be the same as collecting costs upon an order in a Supreme Court action. "The reference is to § 779 which provides that the collection of costs upon an order may be enforced by execution." These decisions are not to be deemed necessarily conflicting, for, while by subd. 6 of § 3347, it is manifest, that § 779 is not made applicable to Surrogates' Courts, yet it is equally clear from § 2556 or so much thereof as provides that costs upon an order of a Surrogate's Court are the same, and may be collected in like manner as upon an order of the Supreme Court, that part of § 779 which provides that the collection of motion costs directed by an order to be paid may, in case of nonpayment, be had by execution is inapplicable. As to the enforcement of decrees Surrogates' Courts are given greater power to enforce their decrees by contempt proceedings than appears to be vested in any other court of record. See Code Civ. Proc. §§ 14, 1241, 2481, 2555, 3347; Matter of Humfreville, 19 App. Div. 381, 382, O'Brien, J., citing Matter of Kurtzman, 2 N. Y. St. Rep. 655; Matter of Dissosway, 91 N. Y. 235. On appeal, Matter of Humfreville was reversed, 154 N. Y. 116, but merely to hold, as intimated ante, that where the only money payment directed by a Surrogate's decree is costs, it cannot be enforced by imprisonment.

§ 234. Analysis of discussion.—With this introductory statement we pass to the general costs in Surrogates' Courts. The subject will be discussed under the following subtopics:

(a) When costs are awarded as of right.

(b) When costs are in the discretion of the Surrogate.

(c) Allowances in Surrogates' Courts.

(d) Taxable disbursements in Surrogates' Courts.

§ 235. Costs, how made payable.—But it may be preliminarily observed that, since proceedings in the Surrogate's Court are proceedings in rem, the question has always been an important one as to whether the fund or estate over which the Surrogate has jurisdiction may be had recourse to for the payment of the costs which the Surrogate is authorized to award. This is expressly covered by § 2557, which is as follows:

> Except where special provision is otherwise made by law, costs, awarded by a decree, may be made payable by the party personally, or out of the estate, or fund, as justice requires; but costs, other than actual expenses, cannot be paid out of an estate or fund, which is less than one thousand dollars in amount or value. § 2557, Code Civil Proc.

This action gives the Surrogate not only power but discretion, as to making the costs payable by a party personally or out of an estate or fund. Matter of Henry, 5 Dem. 272. But the expression "as justice requires," undoubtedly makes his discretion reviewable at the Appellate Division. Costs will be charged upon parties personally in all cases where the Surrogate has reason to believe that the proceedings have been instituted by such party either in bad faith or for any other reason unjustifiably. Matter of Lowman, 1 Misc. 43; Matter of Whelan, 6 Dem. 425. So, where an attorney or counsel has been guilty of palpable bad faith or fraud, the court has the power to compel him to pay the costs personally. In re Tacke's Will, 3 N. Y. Supp. 112, same case, 3 N. Y. Supp. 431, citing Matter of Kelly, 62 N. Y. 198, and § 2481, subd. 7. Where there are various parties to a proceeding before the Surrogate's Court, as in the case of contested wills, the Surrogate may allow costs against the petitioner personally to any or all of the several contestants. Collyer v. Collyer, 110 N. Y. 481–487; but see discussion under § 2558 below, at § 236 et seq., prohibiting the allowance of costs to an unsuccessful contestant whether payable out of the estate or otherwise. No personal liability for costs attaches, however where a party to a proceeding is merely a formal party, that is to say, not a necessary party, unless he has needlessly intervened and compelled the litigation of unnecessary issues. Matter of Davis, 105 App. Div. 222, aff'd 182 N. Y. 468. When upon the application for the appointment of a guardian, the mother of the infant interested was cited to comply with the requirements of the Code, the Court of Appeals held that she was not a party within the meaning of the Code as to liability for costs. Matter of Valentine, 22 Weekly Dig. 175. But mere lack of success in proceedings in Surrogates' Courts is no reason for imposing personal costs. In re Castles's Will, 2 N. Y. Supp. 638. See also Silling's Estate, 2 N. Y. Supp. 637, where Surrogate Ransom enforced the payment of personal costs charged upon an objector to the probate of a will personally by deducting the amount from said objector's share of the estate in the hands of the executor. One who institutes a proceeding in good faith will not be subjected to the burden of paying costs personally. Matter of Keeler, 2 Connoly, 45. So on a contested accounting, where some of the objections prove to be well founded, contestant should not be charged with costs. Matter of Corbin, 101 App. Div. 25. So where a contestant unsuccessfully attacked the will, but the proceedings were not unreasonably delayed and no witnesses were examined except the subscribing witnesses to the will, Surrogate Rollins held that justice did not require that such contestant should be personally charged with the proponent's cost. But if it appears that the contestant has merely engaged in a fishing expedition, and blocks the expeditious probate of the paper propounded, or hinders and delays the proceeding for the purpose of forcing some recognition of fancied rights with a wavering hope that something may turn up which will be of advantage, in such cases the Surrogate is vested with power to impose personally costs by way of a deterrent from reckless litigation. Matter of Whelan's Estate, 2 N. Y. Supp. 635. Costs will not be awarded to a number of contestants separately if they are united in interest, but where they appear by various attorneys and have entirely distinct interests under the will, they will be allowed separate bills of costs. Matter of Lasak, 1 Connoly, 490; Collyer v. Collyer, 4 Dem. 53–64; Hanselt v. Vilmar, 76 N. Y. 630. See also Matter of Fuller, 16 Civ. Pro. Rep. 412. The award of costs in a case is made by way of indemnity to the successful party. One who is entitled to share in an estate is not indemnified in that regard if he is compelled to give up part of the estate to pay himself for costs which other people have made in trying to take the estate away from him. Therefore when the person trying to get the estate fails to secure it, it is a proper case to require him to pay the costs personally of his unsuccessful attempt. Matter of Seagrist, 1 App. Div. 615–623, opinion of Rumsey, J. This of course does not cover cases where the person trying to get the estate sustains such a relationship to the decedent as to give him a prima facie case, as where the alleged will purports to disinherit a wife or child in favor of some stranger to the estate.

§ 236. Costs against an executor or administrator personally.—So also, costs may be imposed upon an executor or administrator personally, as where an executor or administrator was shown to have been dilatory in accounting proceedings referred to a referee, and to have manifested no disposition to proceed in good faith to exhibit the condition of the estate in his hands. Estate of Goetschius, 23 N. Y. Supp. 975; Matter of Williams, 17 St. Rep. 839; or where he interposed merely technical objections to being compelled to account. Matter of Post, 30 Misc. 551. So, also, where an executrix has wasted the estate in her hands. Estate of Stanton, 18 St. Rep. 807. Or when he denies assets, which are shown to exist. Matter of Long Island L. & T. Co., 92 App. Div. 5. So where an executor unreasonably compels a litigation of a personal claim against the estate as in requiring a construing of the will to determine whether a particular fund belongs to the estate and the distributees, or to the executor personally. Estate of Mull, 16 St. Rep. 981. But if an executor resists a claim and succeeds in materially reducing it, he will not be subjected to costs (e. g., reduction of 75 per cent). Matter of Ingraham, 35 Misc. 577. Where executors unreasonably defend a proceeding to compel them to give a bond or furnish additional security, they will be adjudged to pay costs. O'Brien's Estate, 19 N. Y. Supp. 541; 25 N. Y. Supp. 704. So, if an executor or administrator refuses to comply with an order or decree directing him to do a particular thing or pay a particular sum, and a motion to compel him to comply with the order or decree is necessitated, the costs of such a motion will be personally imposed upon the executor. Curry's Estate, 19 N. Y. Supp. 728. So where a guardian filed an account containing improper items, and objections had to be interposed to protect his ward's interests, costs were imposed on the guardian personally. Matter of Decker, 37 Misc. 527. See also Matter of Kopp, 15 Civ. Pro. 282.

§ 237. When costs are awarded as of right.—Taking up the discussion as to costs generally we turn first to § 2558:

> Costs; when awarded.
>
> The award of costs in a decree is in the discretion of the surrogate, except in one of the following cases:
> 1. Where special directions, respecting the award of costs, are contained in a judgment or order, made upon an appeal from the surrogate's determination, or upon a motion for a new trial of questions of fact tried by a jury; in either of which cases, costs must be awarded according to those directions.

2. When a question of fact has been tried by a jury; in which case, unless it is within the foregoing subdivision, the decree must award costs to the successful party.

3. When the decree is made upon a contested application for probate or revocation of probate of a will, costs, payable out of the estate or otherwise, shall not be awarded to an unsuccessful contestant of the will, unless he is a special guardian for an infant, appointed by the surrogate, or is named as an executor in a paper propounded by him in good faith as the last will of the decedent; but the surrogate may order a copy of the stenographer's minutes to be furnished to the contestant's counsel, and charge the expense thereof to the estate, if he shall be satisfied that the contest is made in good faith. § 2558, Code Civil Proc.

It is apparent from subd. 1, that where a Surrogate's decree has been appealed from, or the verdict of a jury on a trial of questions of fact had been appealed from and the order or judgment of the Appellate Court gives special directions respecting the award of costs, the Surrogate has no discretion but must follow such directions. But if the Appellate Court has directed that one of the parties shall have costs for his proceeding in the Surrogate's Court but none for his proceedings in the Appellate Court, the Surrogate is under the necessity of fixing the costs to be allowed in his own court (Matter of Bull, 1 Connoly, 395, 398), or if the Appellate Court gives no direction as to whether they shall be paid personally or out of the estate, then the Surrogate of course has discretion in regard to such details. Schell v. Hewitt, 1 Dem. 249, 255.

So, if the Appellate Division reverses an order of the Surrogate "with costs" only, he has no power to tax disbursements on appeal, for §§ 3251 and 3256 are held as not applying to Surrogates' Courts' orders but refer, to actions. Matter of Steencken, 58 App. Div. 85, citing Cassidy v. McFalrand, 139 N. Y. 209. In this case, however, leave was given to resettle the order in the Appellate Division, on notice. In a later case, Matter of Babcock, 86 App. Div. 563, it was held on an appeal from a final order, affirmed by the Appellate Division "with costs" that §§ 3240 and 3256 did apply and that the disbursements specified in the latter section were "awarded by implication" and should have been taxed by the Surrogate. Section 3240 refers to costs on appeal from a final order in a special proceeding. This case refers expressly to § 3256 as carrying certain disbursements with costs of an appeal. And it seems that both § 2556 as to costs of orders, and § 2559 as to costs awarded by a decree which "include all disbursements of the party . . . . which might be taxed in the Supreme Court" and § 2560 as to appeal costs put the rule of the Babcock case beyond dispute.

§ 238. Same.—But none the less the decision of the Appellate Court is what determines the power of the Surrogate as a taxing officer. This is manifest also from § 2589 which is as follows:

Costs of appeal.

The appellate court may award to the successful party the costs of the appeal; or it may direct that they abide the event of a new trial, or of the subsequent proceedings in the surrogate's court. In either case, the costs may be made payable out of the estate or fund, or personally by the unsuccessful party, as directed by the appellate court; or, if such a direction is not given, as directed by the surrogate. § 2589, Code Civil Proc.

Section 2560 should be considered in this connection. It provides that:

Where a question of fact has been tried by a jury, the costs, awarded against the unsuccessful party, are the same as the taxable costs of an action in the supreme court. The costs of an appeal, where they are awarded in a surrogate's court, are the same as if they were awarded in the supreme court. § 2560, Code Civil Proc.

It is clear from these three sections, i. e., §§ 2558 and 2560 (q. v. ante), as limited by § 2589, that the Surrogate, while he has the power to adjust in his final decree the costs in appeal proceedings, either according to the direction of the order or judgment of the Appellate Court, or in his discretion, in the particulars wherein the Appellate Court has failed to exercise its own, still he is not given by such section any power to award such costs; in other words, they do not aim to enlarge the scope of his authority so as to enable him to adjudge that costs be paid when the court above has refused to pay them or has given no direction whatever. They are simply designed to establish the mode whereby the Surrogate is enabled to exercise in respect to costs on appeal, such limited authority as is conferred upon him by other provisions of law. Schell v. Hewitt, supra, opinion of Rollins, Surr. So where the Appellate Court has refused to award costs the Surrogate has no power to award them. Estate of Hatten, 6 Dem. 444. Or, again, where there are several appellants and the Appellate Court reverses "with costs," the Surrogate in his order on the remittitur cannot enlarge the scope of the award by making it read "with costs to each appellant." Isola v. Webber, 12 App. Div. 267; Matter of P. E. P. School, 86 N. Y. 396; Van Gelder v. Van Gelder, 84 N. Y. 658. Same rule as to successful respondents. Estate of Akers, N. Y. L. J., March 19, 1903, citing Estate of Oakley, Surr. Dec. 1902, p. 76. See, as to costs in Appellate Court, Matter of Baldwin, 30 Misc. 169, 172, citing Matter of W. Comm'rs of Amsterdam, 104 N. Y. 677; B. S. Inst. v. Pelham, 148 N. Y. 737. But it has been held, where a Surrogate refused probate of a will and appeal was taken from his decree, which was reversed and the issues ordered to be tried under § 2588, and a verdict had upon these issues, that it would be irregular for the circuit judge before whom the trial was had, to make any order for costs or any direction as to how they should be paid; the practice in such case is that the verdict of the jury must be certified to the Surrogate who makes a decree accordingly; and in making his decree the matter of costs rests with the Surrogate, except as to the costs of appeal which must be fixed by the Appellate Court. As to such appellate costs the Surrogate has no discretion, except to direct how they shall be paid, in case the Appellate Court has given no direction in that regard. Matter of Campbell, 48 Hun, 417. Nor can he modify the decree as fixed by the Appellate Division. Matter of McEchron, 55 App. Div. 147, 149, citing Reed v. Reed, 52 N. Y. 651; Hone v. De Peyster, 106 N. Y. 645, 649; Sheridan v. Andrews, 80 N. Y. 648. Surrogate Ransom held in Matter of Hatten, supra, that § 2558 contemplated in subd. 2 thereof, the jury trial mentioned in § 2560, and also the case where a Surrogate may grant a new trial, by a jury, of questions of fact upon a motion for the purpose, but, he added, "to authorize the Surrogate to award costs in either of these cases, there must, as required by subdivision 2 aforesaid, be an absence of the direction specified in subdivision 1." In every other case the Surrogate has the usual discretion as to awarding costs except as further limited by subd. 3, which provides explicitly that costs should not be awarded to unsuccessful contestants of a will, either upon a contested application for probate or revocation of probate. Where A contested a will, and while unsuccessful as to the factum of the will, was successful in getting the construction of it for which he contended he was held entitled to costs. Matter of Bogart, 46 App. Div. 240. However this rule is stated not to apply to a special guardian for an infant, who has been appointed by the Surrogate, who may contest the will, or where the contestant is a person named as executor in a paper propounded by him in good faith as the last will of the decedent. § 2558, subd. 3. These provisions are explicit, so where an infant party intervenes by counsel and not by special guardian, and contests the probate of a will unsuccessfully, the Surrogate cannot award him costs. Matter of Lamb, 22 N. Y. St. Rep. 350. But where an infant intervenes and has a special guardian appointed, and opposes the probate of a will and probate is granted, his special guardian is an unsuccessful contestant under subd. 3, and costs may be awarded him out of the estate or otherwise as the Surrogate may allow; only in such a case the court is of course limited by § 2561, post, as to amount of costs it can award. Forster v. Kane, 1 Dem. 67. Where an executor propounded a paper in good faith as the last will of a decedent, but being an attorney acted as his own counsel, Surrogate Coffin held that he was not entitled to costs. Whelpley v. Loder, 1 Dem. 368, 383. Although in such case he is not prevented from having a copy of the stenographer's minutes at the expense of the estate, under the last paragraph of subd. 3. Where an executor received letters under a will and opposed an application to revoke the probate thereof on the ground that another paper propounded was the decedent's last will, and said latter paper was admitted to probate, probate of the former will being revoked, it was held that it was nevertheless within the meaning of subd. 3 of § 2558, and the executor could have his costs. Bertine v. Hubbell, 1 Dem. 335. So where decedent's widow contested probate of a will made in favor of another woman, and presented a prior will in her own favor for probate, and the Surrogate admitted the latter will to probate, it was held that she was an unsuccessful contestant excepted within the meaning of subd. 3, but that the allowing of costs was wholly within the discretion of the Surrogate and his refusal to award them to her was not error. Matter of Mondorf, 110 N. Y. 450, 457. Therefore costs are awarded as of course under subds. 1 and 2 of § 2558; denied as of course under the first part of subd. 3; and discretionary in case of the classes of "unsuccessful contestants" excepted by the latter part of subd. 3.

§ 239. Costs when discretionary.—With the exceptions already noted, first, as to cases in which the Surrogate cannot award costs at all, and second, as to persons to whom he cannot allow costs, the allowance of costs by a Surrogate rests in his discretion within the limits as to amount to be hereinafter noted. He acts on affidavits, which should be specific in detailing the party's claims. Matter of Richmond, 63 App. Div. 488. Section 2559 of the Code provides how costs are to be awarded:

> Costs, when awarded by a decree, include all disbursements of a party to whom they are awarded, which might be taxed in the supreme court. The sum allowed for costs must be fixed by the surrogate, and inserted in the decree. § 2559, Code Civil Proc.

Under this section it is to be noted that a Surrogate has no power to award costs to any but parties to the proceeding. It has been distinctly held that this does not mean attorneys for the parties. Matter of Welling, 51 App. Div. 357; Matter of Wright, 121 App. Div. 581. The power to award costs is derived wholly from statutory provisions. Matter of Holden, 126 N. Y. 589; McMahon v. Smith, 20 Misc. App. Term, 305, 308; Du Bois v. Brown, 1 Dem. 317. Previously to 1870 the statute (2 Rev. Stat. 223, § 10, Banks's 6th ed., vol. III, 330) was as follows: "In all cases of contest before a Surrogate's Court, such court may award costs to the party in the judgment of the court entitled thereto, to be paid either by the other party personally, or out of the estate which shall be the subject of such controversy." See Western v. Romaine, 1 Bradf. 37; Wilcox v. Smith, 26 Barb. 316; Lee v. Lee, 39 Barb. 172; Devin v. Patchen, 26 N. Y. 441; Reed v. Reed, 52 N. Y. 651. By the act of 1870 (ch. 359, § 9) the Surrogate of New York was authorized to make allowances in lieu of costs, directly to counsel. Kearney v. McKeon, 85 N. Y. 136; Walton v. Howard, 1 Dem. 103, Rollins, Surr. But the Code of Civil Procedure repealed this act, and under the Code there is no provision whereby the Surrogate of any county can lawfully award compensation out of a decedent's estate directly to the counsel of parties. Noyes v. Children's Aid Society, 70 N. Y. 483; Estate of Withers, 2 Civ. Proc. Rep. 162. Nor will the fact that numerous counsel were retained avail to increase the taxable costs. Matter of Brown, 65 How. 461; Du Bois v. Brown, 1 Dem. 317, 330. Their charges are against the executor personally or against the parties personally and may not be made payable out of a fund. Seaman v. Whitehead, 78 N. Y. 306; Marsh v. Avery, 81 N. Y. 29; Matter of Seigler, 49 Misc. 189.

§ 240. Amount of costs.—Section 2559 already quoted provides that the sum allowed for costs must be fixed by the Surrogate and inserted in the decree, and also provides that it shall include all disbursements which could be taxed in the Supreme Court. The Surrogate, therefore, is made the taxing officer instead of the clerk, and the authority for all costs taxed must be found in the statute. See § 3256 under disbursements, infra. Matter of Bender, 86 Hun, 570. Rule 22 of the New York County Surrogate's Court is carefully drawn and provides a reasonable practice in regard to taxation of costs in that court.

"Whenever a party to a decree shall deem himself entitled to costs, the same will be considered and determined by the Surrogate, on two days' notice of adjustment, to be served upon the opposing party, with the items of costs and disbursements to which the party may deem himself entitled at the time of the settlement of the decree, which disbursements shall be duly verified, both as to their amount and necessity, the disbursements for referee's and stenographer's fees being sustained by their affidavits or detailed proof; and at the same time, and on like notice, the Surrogate will pass upon any additional allowance to be made to any executor, administrator, guardian or testamentary trustee, upon a judicial settlement of his account; which notice of adjustment and allowance shall be accompanied by an affidavit, setting forth the number of days necessarily occupied in the hearing or trial, the number necessarily occupied in preparing the account for settlement, and in the preparation for the trial, the time occupied on each day in the rendition of the services, and their nature and extent in detail. In case such trial shall have been had before a referee, the time necessarily occupied in such trial before him may be shown by a certificate of such referee. The affidavit as to disbursements, time engaged in trial, and in preparing the account and for trial, may be controverted by affidavit."

But in the absence of such or a similar rule, the practice in the Supreme Court should be followed, a bill of costs, allowances and disbursements should be prepared and notice of taxation given in the case and manner required by that court. Where the stenographer's fees are taxable they should be paid by the proper party and the amount included as a disbursement in the bill of costs; the same regarding referees' fees and other disbursements. Du Bois v. Brown, 1 Dem. 317, 333; Estate of Willett, 6 Dem. 435.

§ 241. Same subject.—The amount of costs and allowances is limited by §§ 2560 and 2561, which are as follows:

> Amount of costs on trial of fact and on appeal. (As to costs on appeal, see ante, p. 228.)
>
> Where a question of fact has been tried by a jury, the costs, awarded against the unsuccessful party, are the same as the taxable costs of an action in the supreme court. The costs of an appeal, where they are awarded in a surrogate's court, are the same as if they were awarded in the supreme court. § 2560, Code Civil Proc.

See Matter of Bull, 1 Connoly, 395, opinion of Ransom, Surr.

When surrogate to fix amount of costs.

In a case other than one of those specified in the last section, the surrogate, upon rendering a decree, may, in his discretion, fix such a sum, to be allowed as costs, in addition to the disbursements, as he deems reasonable, not exceeding, where there has not been a contest, twenty-five dollars, or where there has been a contest, seventy dollars; and, in addition thereto, where a trial or hearing upon the merits before the surrogate necessarily occupies more than two days, ten dollars for each additional day; and where a motion for a new trial is made before the surrogate, if it is granted, seventy dollars; if it is denied, forty dollars. § 2561, Code Civil Proc.

The Surrogate has no power, therefore, to increase the costs fixed in the specific cases covered by these sections. Matter of Dodge, 40 Hun, 443; Matter of Fernbacher, 8 Civ. Pro. R. 349; Matter of Withers, 2 Civ. Pro. R. 162. For his power to award costs is derived wholly from statutory provisions. Matter of Ingraham, 35 Misc. 577, 579, citing Matter of Holden, 126 N. Y. 589; McMahon v. Smith, 20 Misc. 305, 308; Du Bois v. Brown, 1 Dem. 317. But his discretion within the statutory limit will not be interfered with by the Appellate Courts. In re Miles, 12 N. Y. Supp. 157; Hannahs v. Hannahs, 68 N. Y. 610. Yet as his discretion is limited by the words "as justice requires" it is reviewable. Matter of Selleck, 111 N. Y. 284. Section 2561 is very sweeping and covers every proceeding other than those specified in § 2560, that is to say, practically every proceeding which the Surrogate has tried. This of course includes a trial had before a referee. Matter of Clark, 36 Hun, 301. But in such case there can be no allowance for days on which adjournments are had without any actual hearing, and so also it has been held that time occupied in preparing pleadings, making briefs, appearing on adjournments, or settling a decree, cannot be relied upon to increase time contemplated by § 2561 by the Surrogate, "where a trial or hearing upon the merits before the Surrogate necessarily occupies more than 2 days," and no per diem allowance can be made under that section. However, a summing up or argument made to the court must be regarded as a hearing upon the merits. Du Bois v. Brown, 1 Dem. 317, 330. Where a disputed claim is referred by consent to the Surrogate and heard by him upon the judicial settlement, costs to the successful claimant are discretionary, the amount being limited by § 2561. Matter of Ingraham, 35 Misc. 577; Matter of Coonley, 38 Misc. 219. But in the exercise of this discretion the Surrogate should be guided by the principles and decisions relating to the question of costs against estates in case of actions. Ibid., at p. 580, quoting §§ 1835 and 1836, Code Civ. Proc. So, where trustees contest and defeat an application made in behalf of an infant beneficiary to have the whole income of the trust applied to his support, they are successful contestants and entitled to $70.00 in addition to their disbursements. Matter of McCormick, 40 App. Div. 73, 78. In Matter of Hogarty, 62 App. Div. 79, 87, it was held that while the term "contest" in § 2561 clearly relates to the trial of an issue of fact, yet, where the Surrogate passed on the issue, raised as to whether a trust had terminated, and had treated the case as a contest without objection, the costs allowed could not be objected to on appeal for the first time.

§ 242. Costs to special guardians.—A special guardian is appointed to look after and protect the interests of the infant; he has no duty in reference to the estate of the testator; so that, as to his compensation, there is no authority for its payment out of the estate, even though the guardian be appointed by the court on its own motion. Matter of Robinson, below, citing Matter of Budlong, below; Matter of Holden, 126 N. Y. 589. This does not apply to his costs; they may be awarded out of the estate within the limits of the provisions of the sections already quoted, i. e., §§ 2557–2561. See Matter of Robinson, 160 N. Y. 448, 452, aff'g 40 App. Div. 30; Matter of Farmers' L. & T. Co., 49 App. Div. 1. Matter of O'Keeffe, 80 App. Div. 513. Such costs may not exceed $70.00 where the trial does not occupy more than two days, and $10.00 additional for each day necessarily occupied. This is, of course, in addition to his taxable disbursements. Matter of Tracy, 18 Abb. N. C. 242. The compensation of the special guardian, by which is meant an allowance, such an allowance as the Surrogate is authorized to award, must be had by him from the infants or their estate. Matter of Budlong, 100 N. Y. 203, 205; Matter of Ruppaner, 7 App. Div. 11; N. Y. Life Ins. & Trust Co. v. Sands, 26 Misc. 252; Brinckerhoff v. Farias, 52 App. Div. 256, 263. See also Illensworth v. Illensworth, 110 App. Div. 399. It is submitted that this rule should be modified so that in cases where a guardian ad litem, acting for the infant or infants, is successful in maintaining a will in which they are interested against a contest, or in setting a will aside which divested their interest in the estate, his costs and allowances should be payable out of the estate, whether his infants have a present estate therein or not. Thus, where a special guardian was appointed to protect the rights of certain infants to whom a whole estate was left after the life interest of testator's widow in the whole property should have determined, and the will was contested, and the whole burden of the contest assumed by the guardian ad litem and the contestants defeated, it was certainly a hardship that the special guardian should be limited to a $70.00 bill of costs. See Stone's Will, N. Y. Law Journal. Moreover, the representation of the infant by special guardian, even though an infant's interest be very small, is imperative in order to the regularity and conclusiveness of the proceeding, and his reasonable compensation in such a case would be a fair expense for the estate to bear.

An order allowing costs to a guardian ad litem, in excess of those allowed by the statute is therefore improper and may be disregarded. Such disobedience thereto cannot be punished as for contempt. Matter of Monell, 28 Misc. 308.

Another point must be noted arising out of the special guardian's peculiar relation. The Surrogate's discretion, as already stated, is review-able. So if he directs a trustee to pay an allowance from the infant's fund to the special guardian, the trustee is a "person aggrieved," and can appeal from the decree on this point alone. See Matter of Stevens, 114 App. Div. 607 (and see opinion as to proper basis for such an allowance).

The fact that the special guardian retains counsel is wholly immaterial; a Surrogate has no power to award counsel fees to counsel. Forster v. Kane, 1 Dem. 67; Matter of Johnston, 6 Dem. 355. It was held in one case that where the appointment of a special guardian of infant heirs is necessary for the protection of an administrator, such special guardian may have an allowance out of the estate. Ex parte Locklan, 4 Abb. N. C. 173. It was formerly held that unless a special guardian is reappointed to protect the rights of the infant upon an appeal the Surrogate is without power to allow him costs in case the Appellate Court has awarded him none. Schell v. Hewitt, 1 Dem. 249; Matter of Bull, 6 N. Y. Supp. 565. The rule was if the interests of an infant needed protection in proceedings upon appeal from the Surrogate, it is the province of the Appellate Court to appoint for that purpose a guardian ad litem. Schell v. Hewitt, supra, Rollins, Surr., citing Kellinger v. Roe, 7 Paige, 362; Underhill v. Dennis, 9 Paige, 209; Chaffee v. Baptist Miss. Con., 10 Paige, 85, 89; Moody v. Gleason, 7 Cowen, 482; Fish v. Ferris, 3 E. D. Smith, 567. But the better rule is that stated in the chapters on "Parties" and "Appeals," namely, that he is not functus, that he may himself appeal, that the notice of appeal must be served upon him. Matter of Stewart, 23 App. Div. 17. He should, however, on the settlement of the Appellate Court's order, see to it that his costs, if he is entitled to any, are explicitly mentioned. Otherwise the Surrogate is powerless.

§ 243. Allowances in Surrogates' Courts.—In addition to the provisions for costs, the Code provides for additional allowances upon the judicial settlement of an account, or upon an intermediate accounting required by a Surrogate, and also upon the sale of decedent's real property certain allowances which in the latter case are stated to be in lieu of commission. The sections are as follows:

Additional allowance in settling accounts.

In addition to the sums specified in the last two sections, the surrogate may, in his discretion, allow to an executor, administrator, guardian, or testamentary trustee, upon a judicial settlement of his account, or an intermediate accounting required by the surrogate, such a sum, as the surrogate deems reasonable, for his counsel fees and other expenses, not exceeding $10.00 for each day occupied in the trial, and necessarily occupied in preparing his account for settlement, and otherwise preparing for the trial. § 2562, Code Civil Proc.

Allowance upon sale of real property.

Upon the disposition of real property of a decedent, as prescribed in title fifth of this chapter, the executor, administrator, or freeholder, disposing of the property, must be allowed by the surrogate, out of the proceeds of the sale brought into court, his expenses; and he may be allowed, out of the proceeds, a reasonable sum for his own services, not exceeding $5.00 for each day, actually and necessarily occupied by him in disposing of the property and such a further sum as the surrogate thinks reasonable, for the necessary services of his attorney and counsel therein. § 2563, Code Civil Proc.

Upon sale of real property, no commissions allowed.

The allowances, specified in the last section, are in lieu of commissions. § 2564, Code Civil Proc.

The allowance provided for by § 2562 is expressly provided to be awarded to the executor, administrator, guardian or testamentary trustee who is accounting. It is not to be awarded to counsel directly (see ante, § 239). Matter of Welling, 51 App. Div. 355; Matter of Crane, 68 App. Div. 355; Seaman v. Whitehead, 78 N. Y. 306, 309. In this last case the court by Miller, J., uses the following language: "The Surrogate's Court is one of limited jurisdiction, and is confined to such proceedings and the exercise of such powers as are given by the express terms of statutes, and as are incidental thereto. Bevan v. Cooper, 72 N. Y. 317. The power of the Surrogate in respect to allowances upon the settlement of estates is conferred by chapter 362, section 8, Session Laws of 1863, which declare that: 'On the settlement of the account of an executor or administrator, the Surrogate shall allow to him for his services, and if there be more than one, shall apportion among them, according to the services rendered by them respectively, over and above his or their expenses. . . . And there shall also be allowed on each settlement such sum for counsel fee thereon and preparing therefor as to said Surrogate shall seem reasonable, not exceeding the sum of $10.00 for each day engaged therein.' It will be noticed that the allowance is to be made 'to him;' that is, to the executor or administrator, and not to his counsel, nor against the executor or administrator. There is no authority whatever which warrants a decree in favor of the executor's counsel against the estate which is represented by the executor or against the executor as such. Previous to the statute cited an executor could not charge the estate for a counsel fee, upon the final settlement of his accounts or for drawing up the same in proper and legal form upon such settlement. Burtis v. Dodge, 1 Barb. Ch. 77. Such charges for services to an executor are against him individually and not as executor. Austin v. Monroe, 47 N. Y. 360.

"The act of 1863 has not altered the rule and created a liability of the estate to counsel. It was evidently intended to enable the executor or administrator to charge the estate for such counsel fees as he was obligated to pay upon an accounting, at the rate prescribed by law. It has been adjudicated that the Surrogate, except in the city and county of New York, has no authority to award counsel fees. Reid v. Vanderheyden, 5 Cow. 719; Burtis v. Dodge, supra; Devin v. Patchin, 26 N. Y. 441. He can only award taxable costs, and it is error to allow a sum in gross. Reed v. Reed, 52 N. Y. 651."

§ 244. Same subject.—Section 2562 will be strictly construed and where an executor being an attorney himself does not retain counsel to assist in the preparation of his accounts, he is entitled to no allowance. Estate of Valentine, 9 Abb. N. C. 313. It is to be noted that upon the accounting contemplated by § 2562, the costs of course cannot be included as they are to be fixed by the decree which is subsequent to the account, but actual disbursements for counsel fees may be inserted in the account provided they do not exceed the limits fixed by § 2562; the voucher for such a disbursement will take the form of an affidavit showing the number of days occupied in the trial or necessarily occupied in preparing the account for settlement or otherwise preparing for the trial. Harward v. Hewlett, 5 Redf. 330, 332; Carroll v. Hughes, 5 Redf. 337; Du Bois v. Brown, 1 Dem. 317. And in this connection it may be stated that time devoted to mere examination of the law, and drawing a decree or attending at the court, is not occupied in the manner contemplated by this section, and no allowance will be made therefor. Matter of Miles, 5 Redf. 110, Calvin, Surr. Such services are assumed to be covered by the $25.00 allowed by § 2561, where there is no contest, or such additional sum up to $70.00 where there is a contest; and the attendances upon the court are allowed for by the additional $10.00 per diem, where the trial or hearing necessarily occupies more than two days; the theory of the section is to provide for a means of enabling the accounting party to secure legal assistance and advice in preparing his account. Matter of Peyser, 5 Dem. 244. Nor can it be made to any one except the party accounting. Matter of Weeks, 5 Dem. 194; Matter of Nockin, 15 N. Y. St. Rep. 731.

§ 245. Counsel fees.—What has been stated in the previous section with regard to allowances, is of course independent of the ordinary counsel fees or compensation paid by executor, administrator, guardian or trustee to counsel retained by them to guide them in the administration of the estate. For such counsel fees executors are entitled to reimbursement from the estate. This is discussed more fully in the chapter on "Accountings." Some doubt was thrown upon this rule by various contradictory decisions based upon §§ 2561 and 2562, but which did not bear directly upon the point. Surrogate Rollins, in 1882, set forth at length his view with reference to the power of the Surrogate under §§ 2561 and 2562, in Walton v. Howard, 1 Dem. 103. After referring to those sections, and the restrictions imposed thereby, Judge Rollins says: "It need scarcely be said that the statute, which has thus regulated the authority of the Surrogate to award costs, does not preclude executors from employing counsel to give them necessary legal assistance in the management of their trusts, or from rewarding the services of such counsel according to their value, and without reference to the limitations of the Code of Civil Procedure. For payment so made, such an officer may, of course, present to the Surrogate his claim for reimbursement out of the funds of the estate. Such claim may justly form, as it often does form, one of the items with which he credits himself in his accounts, and, so presented, it is laid bare to the scrutiny of all persons interested in the estate, may be objected to, like all other items, by any party who chooses to contest it, and will be allowed, or disallowed, according as it is ascertained to have been a proper or an improper disbursement. Gilman v. Gilman, 6 Thomp. & C. 214, affirmed 63 N. Y. 41." In passing on reasonableness of fees paid, it is proper for the Surrogate to consider the amount involved, and the size of the estate. Matter of Jones, 28 Misc. 599.

Surrogate Ransom in 1890 (In re Smith's Estate, 2 Connoly, 418), also passed upon this question, using the following language:

"The sole objection raised to the account under consideration is the item therein for services of counsel. The gravamen of the objection is that these services were rendered in a proceeding for an accounting, and that the personal representative is confined to §§ 2561, 2562 of the Code of Civil Procedure for remuneration of his counsel. In other words, that, without regard to the value of the services rendered, the character of the litigation, the size of the estate, the question of the amount involved, he can pay his counsel not exceeding $10.00 per day for the actual number of days spent upon the accounting, and that, if he does compensate him at a higher rate, he cannot be indemnified from the funds of the estate. In proceedings in the Surrogate's Court it is very frequently the case that the services rendered are amply compensated by the statutory allowance, and it may happen in some instances that an allowance up to the limit prescribed would be excessive, but the cases are numerous where the allowance which the Surrogate may make upon the entry of decree, by way of costs, is grossly inadequate. In 1 Conn. Surr. 564, the Surrogate, in his remarks to the bar, commenting on the impossibility in every instance of compensating counsel by an allowance made by way of costs on the entry of decree, said: 'It is the duty of the executor to employ and pay, as a matter of independent private contract between himself and the attorney, such compensation as the attorney fairly earns, and that amount of money should go in his account, and, when presented, would be allowed by the Surrogate out of the estate, if fair and reasonable. It is a mere misapprehension on the part of the bar to suppose that attorneys can get adequate compensation under what is known as "a per diem allowance, ..." They should have obtained their pay from their clients before, and put it in the account.' And it is the practice to require information upon this point upon the entry of the decree; for, in taxing costs, the Surrogate of this county requires information upon the question whether compensation has been paid out of the funds of the estate for or on account of the services specified in the bill, and the printed form of affidavit supplied in the court contains an averment on this point. In re Bailey, 47 Hun, 477, the General Term, Judge Parker, writing the opinion, says: 'While the authority of the Surrogate to award costs is thus limited by statute, executors or administrators are in nowise precluded from employing counsel to give them necessary legal assistance in the management of their trusts, or from compensating counsel according to the value of the services rendered. For payment so made, a claim may be made for reimbursement out of the funds of the estate.' In this case, the services were rendered by the attorney, not for the protection and benefit of the estate, but they were solely for the benefit of the executor in an action brought against him for misconduct in his office as executor, in which contest he was successful." See balance of opinion at page 424, citing Halsey v. Van Amringe, 6 Paige, 18. See also Matter of Decker, 37 Misc. 527.

"This last case, it seems to me, recognizes the difference between allowances to be made to an executor for counsel fees as remuneration for services rendered, and the taxable costs which may be awarded against one party in favor of another. In other words, it recognizes the difference between costs, as such, and the sum included in the account for services rendered by counsel. While it would not be proper for the Surrogate to make an allowance of the character claimed in this case to be charged against a contestant, it would be proper for the executor to pay his counsel such amount, if justified by the proof of services performed. To present the idea in a different form, should the Surrogate determine that one or the other of the parties to the contest should be charged with costs of the proceeding, he could only charge him with the taxable costs at the rate specified in the sections of the Code, and it would be improper to charge him with whatever sum might be a suitable reward for the attorney's services. This is in analogy with the procedure in common-law courts. A successful plaintiff, for instance, does not recover from the defendant for costs the entire sum, which he, the plaintiff, may be required to pay his counsel, but only statutory costs. And it is elementary that costs are not intended as indemnity, but only partial reimbursement. In the case of Wilcox v. Smith, 26 Barb. 316, the court said: 'It seems to be well settled that an executor or administrator is not entitled to charge the estate he represents with a counsel fee paid by him upon the final settlement of his accounts before the Surrogate, or for drawing up his accounts in a proper and legal form on such a settlement; and also that the Surrogate has no authority to make an arbitrary allowance to him in lieu of the compensation directed by the statute to be paid to advocate and proctors in Surrogates' Courts, where the sum is to be paid as costs in the suits or proceeding, either by the adverse party or out of the fund in litigation. Burtis v. Dodge, 1 Barb. Ch. 77; Halsey v. Van Amringe, 6 Paige, 12; Western v. Romaine, 1 Bradf. 37; This rule does not conflict with the one, now statutory, which authorizes the Surrogate to allow executors and administrators "for their actual and necessary expenses," which are "just and reasonable," in the management of the estates committed to them (see 2 R. S. 93, § 58; Laws, 1849, ch. 160), such as expenses incurred by them in the employing agents and clerks, where their services are beneficial to such estates (McWhorter v. Benson, Hopk. Ch. 28; Vanderheyden v. Vanderheyden, 2 Paige, 287; Matter of Livingston, 9 Paige, 440; 2 Dem. 575; Glover v. Holley, 2 Bradf. 291, 294), and such cases as costs paid in actions brought by them in good faith to recover debts supposed to be due to their decedents, when the results show that different modes of proceedings would have been more beneficial to the parties interested in the estates. Collins v. Hoxie, 9 Paige, 81. The two rules already mentioned harmonize, and they are founded on solid reasons. It is not often that executors or administrators need the services of counsel in making final settlements of their accounts before the Surrogate, if they have properly managed the estates in their hands, and are diligent in making such settlements; and where they are negligent, or permit their accounts to become confused, or suffer the estates under their control to decrease unnecessarily, they ought to pay counsel out of their own funds for assisting them in closing up their trusts. And the reasons are too obvious to be stated which uphold the rule that permits the Surrogate to allow them all actual and necessary expenses incurred by them, which appear reasonable and just, in bringing and defending actions, in good faith, and the expectation of benefiting the estates under their control, and in managing such estates solely for the benefit of those interested in them.' In Burtis v. Dodge, 1 Barb. Ch. 77, referred to by the court above, the executor charged in his account $50.00 as a fee for his counsel upon final settlement. The court held (page 91) : 'Neither was the executor entitled to charge the estate with a counsel fee upon the final settlement of his account before the Surrogate, nor for drawing up his accounts in a proper and legal form on such final settlement. The whole was a part of the proceeding for the settlement of the account of the executor; and the statute having fixed the allowances which were to be made to advocates and proctors in Surrogates' Courts, when they were to be paid as costs in the suit, either by the adverse party or out of the funds in litigation, the Surrogate is not authorized to make an arbitrary allowance to the executor in lieu thereof. Here, the Surrogate had the power to award costs to the executor, to be paid out of the estate of the testator, or by Burtis personally, if he thought this final accounting had been rendered necessary by his perverseness. He had not thought proper to do so in this case, except to the extent of his own fees, which he has awarded against Burtis personally, by deducting them from the balance found due to him upon the accounting. If it was a proper case to allow the executor for the expenses of his proctor and advocate upon the accounting, the Surrogate should have taxed their costs at the rates of allowance fixed by the act of 1837.' In Osborne v. McAlpine, 4 Redf. 6, Surrogate Calvin took occasion to condemn the practice theretofore prevailing of making an allowance to counsel for executor, etc., on final accounting, to cover the professional services rendered during the progress of administration, and prior to the proceeding initiating the final account. He said: 'If the representative of an estate shall employ counsel, which he clearly has the right to do, it is the duty of such counsel to present his account for payment before the final accounting, and for the representative to fix upon the amount which is reasonable to be paid, and pay it on his own responsibility, and credit himself with such payment in his final accounting. This will enable the executor in the first place to scrutinize the charges, and will give the parties in interest an opportunity to interpose objections, if it shall appear to be exorbitant.' In Carroll v. Hughes, 5 Redf. 337, an accounting party claimed credit for the sums paid for counsel fees, and the Surrogate held that so much of the charge for legal services as related to the accounting must be separately stated, so that the court may judge whether it exceeds the limit fixed by § 2562 of the Code, and there should be proof by affidavit of the number of days necessarily occupied in preparing the account for settlement. In Matter of Miles, 5 Redf. 110, an account was had upon the application of a legatee. The petitioner and respondent were the only parties interested in the estate, and for that reason Surrogate Calvin held that it was a 'judicial settlement.' He held that the executors were entitled to $25.00 and three days for preparing account, but that they were not entitled to an allowance for attendance at court, examination of the law, and the drawing and settling of the decree, for the reason that they were not devoted to 'preparation for the trial.' He says: 'The theory of the codifiers seems to have been that the $25.00 should cover all the proceedings, except the preparation of the account, where no trial was had; unless, perhaps, where objections were filed, and reasonable preparation made, and, before the trial commenced, the objections were withdrawn.' Chatfield v. Hewlett, 2 Dem. 191, was a contest over the substitution of an attorney. No question whatever was made but that the retiring counsel was entitled to a lien for whatever his services might be worth, independent of the per diem allowance under the Code. None of the authorities cited by contestant seem to maintain his position, and independent investigation has not disclosed any reported decision in conflict with the opinion I have formed. Until I am differently instructed by the Appellate Courts, I shall hold that an accounting party is not confined to the sections of the Code (2561, 2562) in remunerating his counsel, but may expend such sums as he deems proper in that behalf, to be included in his accounts, and the correctness and propriety of which may be contested by the persons interested. I am supported in this conclusion by the clear distinction made by the legislature in its provisions with reference to the allowance to special guardians, and to the allowance made to an executor, administrator, or freeholder on the sale of real estate."

§ 246. Taxable disbursements in Surrogates' Courts.—Section 2559 already quoted in § 239, provides that costs when awarded by a decree include all disbursements of the party which might be taxed in the Supreme Court.

"Disbursements" usually means official fees, witness fees, and such expense for affidavits, postage or serving of papers as are customarily taxed. As just noted above counsel fees for a representative are an estate disbursement (within certain limits) but not as a rule taxable. "Disbursements" does not mean "all expenses incurred in the litigation." Potter v. Richards, 10 Wend. 607. But counsel fees other than the per diem $10.00 allowance above discussed are sometimes taxable. For example, on the execution of an open commission—particularly if a motion to limit it by interrogatories be denied—the amount per diem for necessary attendance may be determined on affidavits pro and con by the Surrogate. Re Bull's Estate, 1 Connoly, 395. Notice of taxation must be given as in the Supreme Court. Du Bois v. Brown, 1 Dem. 317. Where there is no stipulation binding the parties stenographer's fees can only be taxed as in the Supreme Court. Estate of Willett, 6 Dem. 435. The party who pays them, may insert them in his bill of costs at the legal rate. Du Bois v. Brown, supra. See Rule 22 in New York County when disbursements for referee's or stenographer's fees are to be supported by their affidavits or detailed proof.

§ 246a. Counsel fees as disbursements.—Counsel fees are disbursements, but not in the sense of being taxable. It will have been seen from a preceding section that counsel fees as such are practically to be included in the executor's account as disbursements, or as Surrogate Ransom said in his speech to the New York Bar on the opening of his court, January 3, 1889, that it is a misapprehension on the part of the bar to suppose that attorneys can get adequate compensation under what is known as the per diem allowance. "They should have obtained pay from their clients before and put it in the account." Viewed, however, as disbursements they must be reasonable so that in the event of contest they will stand the scrutiny of the objecting parties in interest and of the Surrogate himself; for example, in the Collyer case, 1 Connoly, 546, Surrogate Coffin rejected as improper numerous disbursements made by an administrator as counsel fees. The headnote of the case reads as follows:

"The administrator of an estate will not be allowed the following expenses:

"Counsel fee paid to an attorney for consultations of the administrator, next of kin, before his appointment, as to the selection of an administrator, such appointment being without a contest.

"Payment to counsel for attendance and advice as to the making of an inventory. Pullman v. Willetts, 4 Dem. 536.

"Payment of retaining fee to an attorney. Hanley v. Singer, 3 Dem. 589; Mygatt v. Wilcox, 45 N. Y. 306.

"Payment of counsel fee in a proceeding for the revocation of the will, in which the administrator appeared in his representative capacity as well as next of kin, where he was a necessary party only as next of kin; especially where his attorney has received costs which he had not credited against the charges for services to the administrator.

"A large amount of money, $3,000, paid to a young attorney who was not retained by the administrator, but who, by his persistent attendance in the proceeding, was finally recognized by the administrator as one of the counsel, such expense not appearing to be necessary or reasonable.

"Searching for evidence by the administrator's attorney for the purpose of beginning actions. See also Matter of Van Buren, 19 Misc. 373.

"A sum paid as counsel fees for services upon furnishing a new bond on the release of one of the administrator's original bondsmen.

"Fees to an attorney for services rendered necessary by the attorney's remissness.

"A charge of $20.00 a day by the attorney of the administrator for attending sessions of a reference where nothing was done but to adjourn. (This charge was reduced to $10.00 for each of such sittings.)"

In Matter of Caldwell, 188 N. Y. 115, the testator assumed to nominate attorneys for the estate whom the executors, though not bound so to do, employed. They also, however, retained other counsel. Held that the extra fees paid to such additional counsel must be paid by the executors personally.

The preparation of an account is often a difficult matter, but it is well settled that it is the duty of the executor to prepare his account, unless he can show that such preparation would be impossible owing to the volume of the account, or that its nature required the employment of an accountant, but not because of his not having the leisure to devote to its preparation. Matter of Quinn, 1 Connoly, 381, 388. Nor where the complication of the preparation of the account is caused by the fact that the executor did not keep proper books of account. O'Reilly v. Meyer, 4 Dem. 161; Estate of Wilcox, 11 Civ. Proc. R. 115; Matter of Woodward, 13 N. Y. St. Rep. 161. But if an executor can satisfy the court that the account was such as to justify the employment of an accountant, a disbursement for that purpose will be sustained, but the burden of proof is upon the accounting party. Underhill v. Newburger, 4 Redf. 499, 506.

As a general rule clerk hire cannot be allowed as a disbursement (Fowler v. Lockwood, 3 Redf. 465), but where the estate is large and in a condition necessarily requiring some assistance from an agent or clerk, to give it proper attention, the expense of such agent or clerk is a proper charge upon the estate. Bohde v. Bruner, 2 Redf. 333, 339, citing Vanderheyden v. Vanderheyden, 2 Paige, 287; Cairns v. Chaubert, 9 id., 160.

PART III

CHAPTER I

PROBATE PROCEEDINGS—PRELIMINARIES TO PROBATE

§ 248. Deposit of wills.—Provision has been made by law that any person who has made a will may deposit the same for safekeeping with any county clerk, or any Surrogate, or with the register of deeds in New York County. The formalities to be observed are set out in the statute. 8 R. S. part III, title 3, ch. VII, art. 7, §§ 67–70, 8th ed., p. 2663. (§ 30, Dec. Est. Law, ch. 13. Consol. Laws, art. 2.) The word "will" includes all codicils. § 2, Dec. Est. Law.

Such will shall be inclosed in a sealed wrapper, so that the contents thereof cannot be read, and shall have indorsed thereon: the name of the testator, his place of residence, and the day, month and year when delivered, and shall not, on any pretext whatever, be opened, read or examined, until delivered to a person entitled to the same, as provided in the statute. (§ 31, Dec. Est. Law).

Such a person is carefully defined by § 32, Dec. Est. Law. Such will shall be delivered only

1. To the testator in person; or
2. Upon his written order, duly proved by the oath of a subscribing witness; or
3. After his death, to the persons named in the indorsement on the wrapper of such will, if any such indorsement be made thereon; or
4. If there be no such indorsement, and if the same shall have been deposited with any other officer than a Surrogate, then to the Surrogate of the county.

Section 33, Dec. Est. Law. If such will shall have been deposited with a Surrogate, or shall have been delivered to him as above prescribed, such Surrogate, after the death of the testator, shall publicly open and examine the same, and make known the contents thereof, and shall file the same in his office, there to remain until it shall have been duly proved, if capable of proof, and then to be delivered to the person entitled to the custody thereof; or until required by the authority of some competent court to produce the same in such court.

If a testator files his will in the foregoing manner, for safekeeping he pays a nominal fee (six cents to a county clerk or register, nothing to a Surrogate).

§ 249. Producing and filing the will.—The will of a decedent should be filed by the person petitioning for its probate whenever possible. But where it is in the custody of a safe deposit company or of a person who for any reason declines to produce it, it has been held that the Surrogate has no power to compel the production thereof by order. Matter of Foos, 2 Dem. 600. The practice is to file the petition for probate, whereupon a subpœna duces tecum will be issued, directed to the proper persons, requiring them to produce the will in court upon the return day of the citation. Id., p. 601. The Surrogate has the power, under § 2481, subd. 3, to enforce obedience to the requirements of such a subpœna.

Where, however, the will is that of a nonresident citizen dying in the British Empire, and cannot be produced, it may under certain restrictions, be substituted, for probate purposes, by a copy certified pursuant to the provisions of ch. 731 of the Laws of 1894, which is now section 2705 of the Code, and is as follows:

> The last will and testament of any person being a citizen of the United States, or, if female, whose father or husband previously shall have declared his intention to become such citizen, who shall have died, or hereafter shall die, while domiciled or resident within the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, or any of its dependencies, which shall affect property within this State, and which shall have been duly proven within such foreign jurisdiction, and there admitted to probate, shall be admitted to probate in any county of this State wherein shall be any property affected thereby, upon filing in the office of the Surrogate of such county, and there recording, a copy of such last will and testament, certified under the hand and seal of a consul-general of the United States resident within such foreign jurisdiction, together with the proofs of the said last will and testament made and accepted within such foreign jurisdiction, certified in like manner; and letters testamentary of such last will and testament shall be issued to the persons named therein to be the executors and trustees, or either, thereof, or to those of them who, prior to the issuance of such letters, by formal renunciation, duly acknowledged or proven in the manner prescribed by law, shall not have renounced the trust therein devolved upon them; provided, that before any such will shall be admitted to probate in any county of this State, the same proceedings shall be had in the Surrogate's Court of the proper county as are required by law upon the proof of the last will and testament of a resident of this State who shall have died therein; except that there need be cited upon such probate proceedings only the beneficiaries named in said will. § 2705, Code Civil Proc.

Where such will is not in the custody of a court having jurisdiction, the production of the original cannot be dispensed with. So held, where it was shown to be held by a foreign notary. Diez's Will, 56 Barb. 591. But if the original be produced before a commissioner, duly appointed to take the testimony, it is held to be equivalent to production before the court appointing him. Russell v. Hartt, 87 N. Y. 18; Matter of Delaplaine, 45 Hun, 225; Matter of Cameron, 47 App. Div. 120, 125; aff'd 166 N. Y. 610; Spratt v. Syms, 104 App. Div. 232.

Again, a will may have been made here, by a resident, and before New York witnesses, and yet may have been filed and probated in a foreign court. If in such case its production is impossible, and it develops that the Surrogate could not secure the evidence of the witnesses because unable to compel their attendance before a foreign commissioner in the place where the will is, then, semble, the Surrogate is powerless and an action under § 1861, discussed in ch. IX, would afford the only remedy. Matter of Law, 80 App. Div. 73. A lost or destroyed will, also, may be proved in a proper case. See discussion below under § 2621, Code Civil Proc. A case of hardship is that of Matter of Weston, 60 Misc. 275. The opinion of Beckett, Surr., shows the difficulties presented: "He (the proponent) is, however, unable to produce or secure the production of the paper propounded as the will as distinguished from the codicil, in order to prove it in the customary way in open court, and he cannot prove it by commission because the subscribing witnesses reside one in this State and the other in the State of New Jersey, and the paper itself is deposited in a court in the District of Columbia, by which it has been admitted to probate. Matter of Cameron, 47 App. Div. 120, aff'd 166 N. Y. 610; Matter of Law, 80 App. Div. 73, 75, 76, aff'd 175 N. Y. 471. Nor can he prove it by an exemplified copy of the proceedings of the court which admitted it to probate, as it is incompetent and inadmissible as evidence for the purpose. Code Civ. Pro. §§ 2618, 2619, 2620; Matter of Delaplaine, 45 Hun, 225. It is proposed to probate or establish the will by proving the codicil which refers to it. This cannot be done without showing that the statutory requisites as to the execution of a will have been complied with, and this the petitioner is in no position to do in this case. Matter of Andrews, 43 App. Div. 401; Matter of Conway, 124 N. Y. 464; Matter of O'Neil, 91 id. 523; Cook v. White, 43 App. Div. 393, aff'd 167 N. Y. 588; Matter of Carll, 38 Misc. Rep. 474, 475; Matter of Emmons, 110 App. Div. 701. In Brown v. Clark, 77 N. Y. 369; Matter of Campbell, id. 84, and Cook v. White, supra, where it was held that a legally executed codicil revived or effected a ratification or establishment of the will, there was proof of compliance with the statutory requirements as to the will itself. The codicil cannot be admitted to probate as a separate and independent testamentary paper. It displaces one of three persons named as executors in the propounded paper, and appoints another as an executor thereof in his stead, and makes no disposition of property whatever. From the nature of this change it is obvious that the operation and efficacy of the codicil are necessarily dependent upon the establishment or proof of the paper to which it relates as an effective testamentary instrument. Matter of Emmons, 110 App. Div. 704, 705. Petition dismissed. As a consequence, the motions for commission and temporary administrator must be denied."

The object in directing the filing of the will is obvious. Moreover, in contested cases, the contestant is entitled to inspect, under proper safeguard, the instrument propounded. In New York County the practice now is to require a verified copy of the original to be filed with it. It is verified by the joint affidavit of two persons to the effect that they have each

> "carefully compared the foregoing paper with the original thereof, dated the , about to be filed for probate, and that the same is in all respects a true and correct copy of said instrument, and of the whole thereof."

The blank is furnished by the probate clerk.

§ 250. Duplicate wills.—Where a will is executed in duplicate or triplicate the Surrogate may direct the filing of two or more of the copies. The object is to determine (a) that they are in fact duplicates; (b) that they are live instruments, since by the alteration or revocation of either the testamentary finality of either or both may be affected or destroyed. But if they are duplicates, it is idle to prove both or to admit both to probate. Roche v. Nason, 185 N. Y. 128, 135, citing Crossman v. Crossman, 95 N. Y. 145, 150.

§ 251. Photographing and testing will.—Contestants may desire to have the will photographed, particularly in cases where the signature is disputed, and claimed to have been forged. The Surrogate has power to allow this to be done (Matter of Monroe, 1 Connoly, 496, Ransom, Surr.), or even to have chemical tests made of the ink. Ibid.; Matter of Wait, 16 N. Y. St. Rep. 292, where test was made in court. Application should be made in compliance with the practice prescribed in §§ 803–809 of the Code. Matter of Woodward, 28 Misc. 602. But in Matter of Gartland, 60 Misc. 33, Beckett, Surr., refused to permit it on the original probate, in the face of future litigation in which it was of high importance that "the very paper itself, unchanged, in its exact original form and character" should be available.

§ 252. Who may propound the will?

> A person designated in a will as executor, devisee, or legatee, or any person interested in the estate, or a creditor of the decedent, or any party to an action brought or about to be brought, and interested in the subject thereof, in which action the decedent, if living, would be a proper party, may present to the surrogate's court having jurisdiction, a written petition, duly verified, describing the will, setting forth the facts, upon which the jurisdiction of the court to grant probate thereof depends, and praying that the will may be proved, and that the persons, specified in the next section, may be cited to attend the probate thereof. Upon the presentation of such a petition, the surrogate must issue a citation accordingly. § 2614, Code Civil Proc.

But, once the will is offered for probate, the proceeding is beyond the control of the proponent (Hoyt v. Jackson, 2 Dem. 443, 456; Greeley's Will, 15 Abb. Pr. N. S. 393), in this sense that it becomes then the proceeding, not of such proponents only, but of all persons interested in the estate under the will, whose right it is that the instrument shall be proved, and neither the proponent nor the Surrogate can arbitrarily terminate the proceeding so as to deprive any party thereto of his right to support the probate, for the proceeding is one in rem. Matter of Lasak, 131 N. Y. 624; Paxton v. Brogan, 12 N. Y. Supp. 563. After the petition is filed, and the proper parties are cited, the Surrogate has jurisdiction of both subject-matter and parties. If the proponent decides not to prove the will, any other party may become the actor and proceed to offer witnesses in support of the will. Matter of Lasak, supra, citing Code Civ. Pro. § 2617.

If all the parties are of full age and should join in asking that the proceedings be dismissed, it would be the duty of the Surrogate to dismiss the proceeding. But so long as any person cited is before the Surrogate in support of the will, he has no right, upon the motion of any other party, arbitrarily to arrest or dismiss the proceeding. It is a proceeding in behalf of all the parties interested to prove the will. If the proponent should die, the jurisdiction would not be divested (Brick v. Brick, 66 N. Y. 144), nor would the proceeding abate. Lafferty v. Lafferty, 5 Redf. 326. If he left successors to his interest they would have to be brought in and be made parties to the proceeding as persons interested in the estate. Matter of Lasak, 131 N. Y. 624, 627; Matter of Govers, 5 Dem. 40; Van Alen v. Hewins, 5 Hun, 44.

§ 253. Persons interested.—What is meant by "persons interested" in an estate has heretofore been discussed ("Parties," ante.). And the Surrogate has power to determine whether the petitioner is a person entitled to propound the will before going on with the proceeding. It may be added that it has been held by the Court of Appeals (Russell v. Hartt, 87 N. Y. 19, 21), that the right to present a will for probate may be by a person possessing it transferred to another who as attorney or agent may act for and in the stead of the party interested. In the case cited, one Janet Russell was named in the will as legatee, as devisee and as executrix—thus possessing a threefold right to ask for its probate. By a power of attorney duly and properly executed, reciting the circumstances which made it necessary, she appointed one Hartt, her agent and attorney in her name, place and stead, to present the will or duly authenticated copies thereof to the proper Surrogate for probate and to have the same duly proven as a will of real and personal estate, and to ask for and receive letters of administration, and take possession of and administer upon the estate of the deceased. Held that the Surrogate was justified in acting upon a petition filed by Hartt, and had full jurisdiction to entertain the proceeding.

If the person interested is a woman, whether married or single, she may petition for probate, and if married her husband need not join in the petition.

Where the petition for probate is filed by a creditor of the testator, it has been held that a mere allegation that the petitioner is a creditor would be sufficient unless put in issue. If denied, then he must be required to set forth facts showing that he is such creditor. Gove v. Harris, 4 Dem. 293, citing Creamer v. Waller, 2 Dem. 351.

§ 254. Will must be propounded.—It is the duty of an executor to propound his testator's will (Schouler on Ex'rs & Adm'rs, § 53; Thorn v. Sheil, 15 Abb. N. S. 81), and if probate be refused he may carry the matter to the Court of Appeals (see Appeals), and if successful is entitled to his counsel fees and disbursements thus incurred (Matter of Blair, 28 Misc. 611), to be adjusted upon his accounting. S. C., modified on appeal, 49 App. Div. 417. See also 34 Misc. 444. And any party finding a will, in which he is interested, should propound it. Matter of Griswold, 15 Abb. 299; Boynton v. Laddy, 20 N. Y. St. Rep. 148. But the executor cannot be compelled to take an active part in the probate. If he files the will and the petition for probate, he may decline to examine witnesses or to support the will in case of contest. He cannot cause the dismissal of the proceeding except all parties cited are of full age and consent. Matter of Lasak, 131 N. Y. 624. But if he takes such a negative stand any other party interested may undertake the burden of proving the will. And if none of the parties is willing so to do it is the duty of the Surrogate to do it under § 2618. Matter of Lazak, 1 Connoly, 486, 489. The executor is not ex officio beneficially interested under a will, and yet he cannot be permitted to deprive those who are of their rights by blocking the proceedings. If he is recalcitrant any other party may become an actor. Matter of Lasak, supra, Coffin, Surr. In Matter of Scott, 8 App. Div. 369, the court, however, says that where an executor propounds a will and codicil, he is thereupon bound to procure and lay before the Court the evidence necessary and appropriate to establish it, and that one interested in the probate cannot be penalized by terms when because of the omission of the executor to perform this "duty" he applies for a commission or other means of eliciting the proof.

Persons discovering a codicil to a will which is propounded for probate should, if interested thereunder, offer it for probate in the proceeding pending for the probate of the original will. Carle v. Underhill, 3 Bradf. 101. If several persons produce independent instruments and severally petition for their probate as the last will of the same decedent, the proceedings will be consolidated in one, and the Surrogate will determine whether they are in harmony with one another, so as, when taken together, to constitute one last will, or whether they are entirely independent so that only one can stand. Van Wert v. Benedict, 1 Bradf. 114, 119. Such an inquiry must establish one paper as the last will and the others either as codicils to it, or as invalid by being revoked or otherwise. Ibid., Opinion of Bradford, Surr., and cases cited at p. 119.

§ 255. Preliminary inquiries.—Before filing the petition it is well to ascertain with accuracy the names and addresses of all persons interested, with their relationship—degree of kinship—to the decedent. The delays occasioned by bringing in, subsequently, necessary parties, who might readily have been ascertained in the first instance, is sufficient warrant for this suggestion. The drafting of a family tree on which all the next of kin and all infants, especially issue of deceased parents, entitled by representation, are shown, will be found of great service in the preliminary steps before the probate clerk or Surrogate in contested cases.

CHAPTER II

REVOCATION OF WILLS

§ 256. Revoked will not entitled to probate.—Before discussing the practice on probate it is important to determine whether the instrument, or any one of several, found among a decedent's papers is a live instrument or is one that he has revoked. For a distinctive feature of a will is its ambulatory nature. A will validly revoked (as below set forth) is no will, and cannot be proved as the decedent's last will and testament. But unless the proponent knows the circumstances to be such as to constitute valid revocation, as for example, that the date of the will is prior to the marriage of testatrix (Brown v. Clark, 77 N. Y. 369, 2 R. S. 64, § 44), which thus destroys the will, he should propound the paper and let the court determine. Of several papers, all purporting to be complete wills, the last in point of time should be offered. But if any doubt exists as to the character of papers of a testamentary character found as to whether they may or may not be codicils they should be offered.

The provisions of the Revised Statutes covering revocation of wills are still in force and are as follows:

"Written wills, how revoked or canceled.

"No will in writing except in the cases hereinafter mentioned, or any part thereof, shall be revoked or altered otherwise than by some other will in writing or some other writing of the testator declaring such revocation or alteration; and executed with the same formalities with which the will itself was required by law to be executed, or unless such will be burnt, torn, canceled, obliterated or destroyed with the intent and for the purpose of revoking the same by the testator himself, or by another person in his presence by his direction and consent, and when so done by another person, by the direction and consent of the testator, the fact of such injury or destruction shall be proved by at least two witnesses." 2 R. S., part II, ch. 6, title 1, art. III, p. 64, § 42 (§ 34, Dec. Est. Law, ch. 13, Cons. Law, art. 2).

"Will, when revoked by marriage and birth of issue. (See § 269 below.)

"If after the making of any will disposing of the whole estate of the testator, such testator shall marry and have issue of such marriage, born either in his lifetime or after his death, and the wife or the issue of such marriage shall be living at the death of the testator, such will shall be deemed revoked unless provision shall have been made for such issue by some settlement or unless such issue shall be provided for in the will or in such way mentioned therein as to show an intention not to make such provision and no other evidence to rebut the presumption of such revocation shall be received." Id. § 43 (§ 35, Dec. Est. Law); Matter of Gall, 32 N. Y. St. Rep. 695. This statute is derived not from the common but from the civil-law rule, which rests upon the "presumed oversight of the parent." See Wormser v. Croce, 120 App. Div. 287, citing Brush v. Wilkins, 4 Johns. Ch. 506; Smith v. Robertson, 24 Hun 210. See Tavshanjian v. Abbott, 59 Misc. 642. But the adoption of a child does not operate to revoke a prior made will. Matter of Gregory, 15 Misc. 407.

"Will of unmarried woman, revoked by marriage. (See § 267 below.)

"A will executed by an unmarried woman shall be declared revoked by her subsequent marriage." Id. § 44 (§ 36, Dec. Est. Law). These statutes are self-operative. It seems an extreme case, yet it is held that a will made by a woman in contemplation of her marriage, and providing for her intended husband, was revoked by the act of her marriage. Matter of Mann, 51 Misc. 315. (See cases cited.)

See also §§ 45, 46, 47 and 48 (§§ 37, 38, 39 and 40, Dec. Est. Law) as to effect on previous made will of bonds, agreements, covenants, charges, incumbrances, conveyances, settlements, deeds or other acts of the testator affecting the property devised in such will. (See § 270 below.)

§ 257. Express words of revocation.—Where by a conveyance, settlement, deed or other act of a testator by which his estate or interest in property previously devised or bequeathed by him, shall be altered but not wholly divested, and in the instrument by which such alteration is made, intention is declared that it shall operate as a revocation of such previous devise or bequest, it will so operate, but not otherwise. In the absence of such express intention the devise or bequest made prior to such conveyance or deed shall pass to the devisee or legatee, the actual estate or interest of the testator which would otherwise descend to his heirs, or pass to his next of kin. (See § 47, art. III of ch. 6, part II, Revised Statutes, Banks's 8th ed., p. 2549, § 39, Dec. Est. Law).

But, if the provisions of the instrument by which such alteration is made are wholly inconsistent with the terms and nature of such previous devise or bequest, such instrument shall operate as a revocation thereof, unless such provisions depend on a condition or contingency and such condition be not performed, or such contingency do not happen. Id. § 48 (§ 40, Dec. Est. Law). If a testator shall duly make and execute a second will after the making of any will, the destruction, cancellation or revocation of such second will shall not revive the first, unless it appear by the terms of such revocation that it was his intention to revive and give effect to his first will, or unless after such destruction, cancellation or revocation, he shall duly republish his first will. Id. § 53 (§ 41, Dec. Est. Law).

In Matter of Stickney, 161 N. Y. 43, 45, aff'g 31 App. Div. 383, the court observes: "Obviously, the first sentence of § 53 relates only to the revocation in writing provided for by § 42, and, therefore, to revive a first will under that provision, a writing executed with the same formalities, as are required for the execution of a will, must exist in which the testator in express terms declares his intention to revive and give effect to such former will. The second sentence of § 53 provides the only other method of reviving a prior will where it has been revoked by a second which has been destroyed, and requires that when the revocation of the second has been by its destruction the first will must be republished by the testator." Hence the court held that republication must be made to the very witnesses who attested the will thus sought to be republished. Of course it could be re-executed and published anew to new witnesses.

§ 258. Necessity of revoking clause in later will.—The mere execution of a later will has been held not to operate as a revocation of the prior will, unless it contains an explicit revoking clause or is wholly inconsistent with the prior will; thus, where a will purports to dispose of all the testator's property, it is in such case clearly inconsistent with the prior will, and will be deemed to revoke it. Simmons v. Simmons, 26 Barb. 68. See § 262 below. The reason for this rule is that a later will disposing of other property or only a portion of the decedent's property is to all intents and purposes nothing more than a codicil, and only operates to change pro tanto the dispositions made by the testator in the prior document; in other words, the inconsistency between the prior and later instrument must be complete. This necessarily leads to the further statement that as a codicil, in order to become operative, must be shown to have been executed with all the statutory formalities as if it were an independent will, so a subsequent will cannot operate to change or revoke a previous will, unless it is executed with the same formalities with which the will itself was required by law to be executed; thus where (Nelson v. The Pub. Adm., 2 Bradf. 210) a testator selects the mode of revocation by writing, he will fail in accomplishing his purpose if he dispenses with any of the necessary formalities. In the case just cited, the testator made four unattested wills, three others apparently duly executed, and several papers of revocation. Three of the attested revocations were wills signed, but not attested; three were mere declarations of revocation subscribed by the testator, but without the names of subscribing witnesses. The court held that while they expressed as strongly as anything could a determination to rescind every instrument of a testamentary character ever executed by the testator, and while they expressed this repeatedly, showing a continued and earnest intention to revoke, nevertheless the law must govern. "The testator might have revoked by burning, tearing, canceling, obliterating or destroying, but he selected the mode of revocation by writing, in which he has failed to comply with the law and these formal acts have no validity." See also Leaycraft v. Simmons, 3 Bradf. 35, 43; McLosky v. Reid, 4 Bradf. 334, where the Surrogate admits a second will not executed with the formalities necessary in order to dispose of real property in the State of New York to be sufficient as a will of personal property admitting the prior will, which had been executed, as a will of real property. See, also, Barry v. Brown, 2 Dem. 309, and Mairs v. Freeman, 3 Redf. 181, holding that where a party offering a subsequent will to that propounded, which it was claimed operated as a revocation, the burden of proof is on such party, and he is required to show the due execution of that instrument in order that it may constitute a revocation. Where a codicil was written at the foot of the will and made such dispositions as to blend the codicil and will into one testamentary disposition, a revocation of the codicil by erasure of the signature was held to revoke the will as well. Matter of Brookman, 11 Misc. 675. In Matter of Barnes, 70 App. Div. 523, it was held that probate of a will would be denied on the ground of its revocation when satisfactory proof was adduced that a will revoking the will offered for probate was duly executed, even though the revoking will was not and could not be produced, and was not in fact probated.

§ 259. Reviving prior will.—The provision of § 53, art. III, ch. 6, part 2, Revised Statutes, 8th ed., p. 2550 (§ 41, Dec. Est. Law) above quoted, that the destruction, cancellation or revocation of a second will shall not revive the first will, unless it appears by the terms of such revocation that it was the testator's intention to revive and give effect to his first will, or unless he shall duly republish his first will, must be taken to be limited in its application to the exact cases covered by the statute, and for this reason, that cases are not infrequent where the testator is known to have made a second will, which, however, cannot be found. In such a case if the prior will be propounded as the last will of the decedent, it will be admitted to probate in the absence of proof:

(a) That there was a later will;

(b) That it was properly executed (by which of course is meant that all elements of proper execution were present, including capacity, etc.);

(c) That the later will contained a revoking clause or,

(d) Such proof of the contents of the later will as show inconsistency with the provisions of the former will.

There is no doubt, however, as to the jurisdiction and power of the Surrogate to receive proof that the prior will was revoked by the subsequent will, and further to receive proof that the subsequent will had been fraudulently destroyed: or, that having been properly executed, it was destroyed by the testator when his mind had become so impaired that he was incompetent of performing a testamentary act, which incompetency of course taints with invalidity the act of revocation as well. Matter of Waldron, 19 Misc. 333. Therefore, while it may be perfectly clear that the second will was duly made and executed, and that it was destroyed, or canceled or revoked, or where there is an absence of proof as to the contents of a later will, the Surrogate is without power to say that the second will was in fact a revocation of the first and the prohibition of the statute against reviving the first will is not infringed; inasmuch as there is no proof that the first will was not continuous in its operation as a declaration of the testator's testamentary intention. Nelson v. McGiffert, 3 Barb. Ch. 158, 164. So in Matter of Stickney, 161 N. Y. 42, the court held that a will that has been revoked by a subsequent one which is destroyed by a second one, is not revived by his declaration of desire to revive the first one, unless such declaration be made to the original subscribing witnesses.

§ 260. Codicil to earlier will.—A curious complication may arise where a testator executes two wills, and after executing both, makes a codicil to the earlier will. The question then arises, what is the effect of such codicil upon the intermediate will, and can it revive the earlier will? The question will turn on whether the earlier will was destroyed or revoked.

The effect of a codicil to a will, revoked by a later will, is to revive and republish the earlier will; which speaks as of the date of the codicil, assuming it to be duly executed. Knapp's Will, 23 N. Y. Supp. 282. It also operates by implication to revoke the intermediate will. In other words, the codicil and the earlier will, read together, constitute the final testamentary disposition of the estate. Matter of Campbell, 170 N. Y. 84, aff'g 67 App. Div. 627. See also Matter of Conway, 124 N. Y. 455; Caulfield v. Sullivan, 85 N. Y. 153; Matter of Miller, 11 App. Div. 337; 1 Williams on Executors, 6th Am. ed., pp. 251, 252; 1 Jarman on Wills, 5th Am. ed., pp. 114–191; Brown v. Clark, 77 N. Y. 369.

In the case of the Will of Pinckney, 1 Tucker, 436, the learned Surrogate considers this question briefly, and states that it is not altogether without precedent. He refers to an English case (3 Vesey R., p. 402) where the testator executed a codicil in 1776, referring to a will of 1752. A devisee of real estate under a second and later will of 1756, filed a bill to sustain that will. The codicil was held to cancel the intermediate will (citing also Crosbie v. McDonald, 4 Vesey R., p. 616). He also cites another case (Hall v. Tokeler, 2 Robt., p. 318) where the decedent executed two wills, destroyed the earlier one animo revocandi, and then executed a codicil showing an intention to revive it; and it was held that the codicil was inoperative to revive the former will which had been destroyed but did operate to revoke the later will.

The facts before Surrogate Tucker were that the decedent had executed a will in June, 1861, and another March 16, 1863, and a codicil March 28, 1863, which in terms was expressed to be a codicil to the will of June, 1861; the will of June, 1861, was found with the seal and signature cut out; which constituted cancellation under the statute; due execution was proved of the other will and of the codicil; it was held that the codicil being expressly declared to be a codicil to the will of June 21, 1861, could not be attached to the later will, and the effect of the codicil was to revoke and abrogate the later will, because it republished the earlier will as testator's last will; and since the codicil could not operate to revive the earlier will, as it had been canceled, both wills were revoked and abrogated.

The Surrogate further held that inasmuch as the codicil propounded was not sufficient to stand alone as a testamentary disposition, intestacy must be decreed. Jarman in his work on Wills, says (at p. 188) that the law in England is that "if a testator makes a will in 1830, and at a subsequent period, say 1840, makes another will inconsistent with the former, but without destroying such former will, and afterwards makes a codicil which he declares to be a codicil to his will of 1830, this would set up the will so referred to in opposition to the posterior will."

If the codicil is properly executed, published, etc., the will revoked and revived needs no republication. Matter of Emmons, 110 App. Div. 701. The codicil and will are by the reference made one instrument, and though the original will was informally executed it would be cured and corrected by due execution of the codicil. Storm's Will, 3 Redf. 327, citing Mooers v. White, 6 Johns. Ch. 374, 375. Where a testator was improperly prevented from revoking a will, the ancient rule was that the one who so hindered the revocation was rendered thereby unworthy, i. e., he was excluded from participation. But it is very doubtful whether the prevention of the execution of a codicil by improper means can revoke a previous will. Leaycraft v. Simmons, 3 Bradf. 35, 43. Where a will is revoked by destruction it seems that it revokes a codicil thereto, even though it turns up later uninjured. Cunningham v. Hewitt, 84 App. Div. 114. This means, naturally, a codicil in existence when the destruction occurs.

§ 261. Parol declarations inadmissible.—Where questions of conflicting will and codicil come up, evidences of mistake in the testator's reference to one of two wills in a codicil dating subsequently to both, is inadmissible (see Matter of Pinckney, supra), nor are subsequent declarations by testator that he had revoked his will to be allowed in evidence. Coe v. Kniffen, 2 Johns. 31; Dan v. Brown, 4 Cow. 483. See also Matter of Kennedy, 167 N. Y. 163; Matter of Burbank, 104 App. Div. 312. For a will cannot be revoked by parol, or in any but the statutory manner, and a will certainly will not be deemed revoked by alleged declarations by testator that he did not understand its provisions, nor can such declarations be admitted. Matter of Hammond, 16 St. Rep. 977; Shaw v. Shaw, 1 Dem. 21. But where a trust deed, executed with the formalities of a will, purported to revoke a will, it was held duly revoked. (See Matter of Backus, 49 App. Div. 410), and the Surrogate's decree (29 Misc. 448), admitting the will to probate was reversed and probate denied.

§ 262. Revoking act must be equally solemn with act revoked.—To make a subsequent will or a codicil operate to revoke a will, such codicil or will must be an affirmative testamentary disposition in itself. In the Backus case just cited the trust deed effected a complete disposition of the grantor's property. But the court held that the writing effectual to revoke a will need not be charactized as a will by the person executing it. Of course due execution of the later will must be satisfactorily established. Mairs v. Freeman, 3 Redf. 181. If the later will be not produced it must be satisfactorily proved by affirmative evidence as to factum and contents. Matter of Williams, 34 Misc. 748; Matter of Meyers, 28 Misc. 359. Even though the paper claimed to have a revocatory effect clearly manifests an intention to revoke, that is not sufficient. The most satisfactory evidence that the testator had repeatedly and explicitly declared that it was his deliberate design to annul or destroy the will, would not authorize the court to reject the instrument (Delafield v. Parish, 1 Redf. 1, 104, aff'd 25 N. Y. 9, 30, 35), particularly if the testator was physically enfeebled when making the later will. Judge Davis writing the prevailing opinion in the Parish Will case formulated this rule which is concise and clear. See 25 Abb. Pr. 35.

"When it is sought to establish a posterior will, to overthrow a prior one made by the testator in health, and under circumstances of deliberation and care, and which is free from all suspicion, and when the subsequent will was made in enfeebled health, and in hostility to the provisions of the first one, in such case the prior will is to prevail unless he who sets up the subsequent one can satisfy the conscience of the Court of Probate that he has established a will. And also the prior will is to prevail, unless the subsequent one is so proven to speak the testator's intentions, so as to leave no doubt that it does so speak them." The Court of Appeals in a much later case (Newcomb v. Webster, 113 N. Y. 191, 196), declared the rule in respect of the effect of a codicil claimed to have revocatory operation. Judge Danforth says: "It may be taken as a well-settled general rule that a will and codicil are to be construed together as parts of one and the same instrument, and that a codicil is no revocation of a will further than it is so expressed. Westcott v. Cady, 5 Johns. Ch. 343. But if, when regarded as one instrument, it is found to contain repugnant bequests in separate clauses, one or the other, or both, must fail, and therefore, the rule is that, of the two, the bequest contained in the later clause shall stand. The same principle applies with greater force where there are two distinct instruments relating to the same subject-matter. In such a case an inconsistent devise or bequest in the second or last instrument is a complete revocation of the former. But if part is inconsistent and part is consistent, the first will is deemed to be revoked only to the extent of the discordant dispositions, and so far as may be necessary to give effect to the one last made." Citing Nelson v. McGiffert, 3 Barb. Ch. 158. Consequently the Court of Appeals held that as the codicil made a new and complete disposition of the estate, but appointed no executors, both will and codicil should be admitted to probate, that the former was operative so far as to designate the executors, but revoked by the latter as to the disposition of the property. 113 N. Y. 197. Hence revocation by a writing means by an authenticated writing. A mere writing, unattested in "solemn form" though signed and dated and indorsed on the very will is a mere sign of an intention, but not an "equally solemn" or sufficient act. Matter of Miller, 50 Misc. 70. But if in addition the original signature is canceled, and produced, thus indorsed from decedent's safe, and there is no suspicion of any tampering, revocation, not by "equally solemn" act but by cancellation, may be declared. Ibid. See § 265 below.

§ 263. Effect of duplicate wills.—It seems that where a will has been executed in duplicate, revocation by the testator of one of such duplicate wills, by cancellation or destruction, will be held to operate to nullify the other, in the absence of proof that the other was within the control of the testator so as to be similarly destroyed. See Asinari v. Bangs, 3 Dem. 385.

This of course would not apply to a revocation by an instrument in writing. The duplicate will can in such case be treated only as one instrument, and a reference to a will of the given day, or a reference to it as a prior will need not specify that the will is a duplicate will, if the revocation be in conformity with the statute, and express in its items. Biggs v. Angus, 3 Dem. 93, 96. See Roche v. Nason, 185 N. Y. 128.

§ 264. Mutual wills.—Mutual wills, unless made in pursuance of a contract between the testators, may be revoked by either testator without notice to the other. Edson v. Parsons, 85 Hun, 263. And such a contract, effectual to prevent revocation, must be affirmatively proven by full and satisfactory evidence. S. C., 155 N. Y. 555. See also Herrick v. Snyder, 27 Misc. 462. An agreement to make mutual wills can be enforced only at instance of a party thereto. Equity will not enforce it at a suit of a third party. Everdell v. Hill, 58 App. Div. 151.

§ 265. Revocation by obliterating or canceling.—It is the settled rule that the provisions of the statute in regard to proof of revocation of a will by cancellation or obliteration, contemplates the cancellation or obliteration of the whole will. The language of the statute is explicit. It says, "No will or any part thereof shall be revoked or altered unless such will" (not unless such will or such part) "be burnt, torn, canceled, obliterated or destroyed animo revocandi." See § 2, ante. The effect of the words in the statute are that not even a part of the will shall be deemed revoked unless the will itself is destroyed, and they forbid the possible inference that a part might be revoked by destroying such part. Lovell v. Quitman, 25 Hun, 537, aff'd 88 N. Y. 377. This, however, must not be taken to mean that a complete destruction of the instrument must be effected; thus, where a testator in infirm health, feeble in his physical powers, was yet of sufficient mental soundness to be capable of a testamentary act, calls for a will previously executed, tears the paper into fragments and then or thereafter declares that he has destroyed his will in the presence of witnesses, it will be held to be a sufficient destruction of the will, the act being clearly proved as well as the intent of revocation. See Sweet v. Sweet, 1 Redf. 451. See further on the point that the mere act of tearing or canceling is not sufficient, Jackson v. Halloway, 7 Johnson, 394; Jackson v. Pattie, 9 id. 312; Smith v. Hart, 4 Barb. 28; Nelson v. McGiffert, 3 Barb. Ch. 158; Perrott v. Perrott, 14 East. 423; Willard on Ex. 123.

It will be noted that the statute quoted above in § 256 contemplates a cancellation, either by the hand of the testator, or by the hand of another; and where, by the hand of another, by testator's direction and consent. But it must be actually done. So where testatrix told her brother to destroy her will and he falsely told her he had done so, at her death it was held not to have been revoked. Matter of Evans, 113 App. Div. 373. And it must be done by testator or in his presence. See Matter of Hughes, 61 Misc. 207, opinion by Ketcham, Surr. Moreover, such cancellation and the direction to cancel must be proved by at least two witnesses. The statute does not provide for any presumptions, but leaves the circumstances to be proven. A most instructive case is Matter of Hopkins, 35 Misc. 102, aff'd 73 App. Div. 559, rev'd 172 N. Y. 360. In this case the special guardian argued that where a will is found with the signature erased, there arises a presumption that it was done by the testator, and that to overcome such presumption there must be evidence that it was done by some other hand, and cited Matter of Philp, 46 N. Y. St. Rep. 356; Matter of Clark, 1 Tucker, 445, as authorities directly in point, and cited as analogous, Hard v. Ashley, 88 Hun, 103; Collyer v. Collyer, 110 N. Y. 481, where the question was that of an alleged lost will. The court observed: "No one questions but that these cases were correctly decided upon their own peculiar facts, and it is the facts of each case which control.

"The statute was enacted to prevent fraud and not to invite it, therefore such a broad presumption which would make the accomplishment of a fraudulent cancellation the easier would contravene the spirit of the act." And it was held below that as the signature was sought to be canceled by vertical marks, which were proved by expert testimony not to have been made by testator, the will was not duly canceled. The Court of Appeals reversed on the ground that testimony of expert that ||||| marks on signature were not made by testator was inadmissible as such marks are not writing for purposes of comparison under Laws 1880, ch. 36 and Laws 1888, ch. 555. (See cases discussed in opinion.) It was remitted for a jury trial. (See second appeal.) Matter of Hopkins, 97 App. Div. 126. Held that while it was shown the signature was canceled yet as neither party offered any evidence as to whether, when found in testator's custody the signature was in fact then canceled, the only presumption to be entertained was that the cancellation was subsequent to execution. On the next appeal it was held to have been canceled by another than testator. Matter of Hopkins, 109 App. Div. 861. See also Matter of Brookman, 11 Misc. 675. In this case the signature was erased by ink lines, and the word "void" in margin initialled by testator. Held, will was revoked.

In Matter of Akers, 173 N. Y. 620, aff'g 74 App. Div. 461, the testator wrote at head of, and also opposite signature to his will "This will and codicil is revoked. Jan'y 14, '96. Fred'k Akers." The New York Surrogate held this not sufficient cancellation and probated the will. This was affirmed.

In a recent case in Kings County, Matter of Alger, 38 Misc. 143, the testator had drawn across all the provisions of his first codicil, including the signature and attestation clause numerous cross marks in lead pencil and also wrote in on the place of the attestation clause, the word "canceled" and in another place the date, "April 19th, 1895."

The second codicil contained several cross marks in lead pencil in the first clause thereof, and at the foot of the attestation clause there was written:

"Brooklyn, April. The codicil in the within is this day 20th, 1895, canceled for personal abuse and ungratefulness on her part. Geo. Alger, 203 12th St., in the city of Brooklyn, N. Y."

The words "Geo. Alger" were also written a second time below this. It was proved that the word "canceled" and the date were all in the handwriting of the decedent. The Surrogate held both codicils to be canceled. He points out the derivation of the word canceled from cancelli, cross-bars or lattice work, and held that where it is apparent that the cross lines had been made by the testator with the evident intention of effecting a revocation, such act is sufficient to work a revocation of the will, citing Matter of Brookman, 11 Misc. 675.

So far as intention to cancel is concerned, there can be little doubt but that in the Akers case, the intention of the testator was clear beyond peradventure, and yet the court, as we think properly, held the revocation not to be according to the statute, and it may thus be doubted whether under Lovell v. Quitman, the decision in the Alger case will stand as to the second codicil. See opinion as to meaning of cancellation and cases discussed.

The recovered several fragments of a will so torn and supposed by the testator to have been destroyed, will be denied probate. When testator desires to revoke part of his will he must resort to the means provided for in the first part of § 42, quoted in § 256, q. v. above, that is, to some formal writing executed as therein prescribed. Lovell v. Quitman, 88 N. Y. 377, 380, Danforth, J.; Gugel v. Vollmer, 1 Dem. 484. So, if the will is found in draughtman's desk, cut in two, there is no presumption of revocation. Matter of Ackels, 23 Misc. 321.

So where a testator having, by will, devised property to his son, whose name was given, it was held that the erasure of the name leaving, however, the word "son" could not operate to revoke the devise. Clark v. Smith, 34 Barb. 140. So in Matter of Kissam, 59 Misc. 308, Millard, Surr., testatrix's will gave to R. and H. each the sum of $5,000. After execution he erased the name of H. and the word "each." Held this could not alter the will, nor was it a revocation. See cases reviewed at p. 309.

So in Matter of Gartland, 60 Misc. 31, the writing in by a third party of additional pecuniary bequests, after execution was held not to invalidate the will and were rejected by Beckett, Surr., in probating it. See, contra, Dan v. Brown, 4 Cow. 483, holding that so long as there exists animo revocandi the slightest decree of cancellation will revoke. Where one who had acquired property after making his will, interlined provisions therein and altered other provisions so as to cover such after-acquired property, it was held that such changes not being properly attested could have no testamentary effect, and yet not being done animo revocandi would not affect the will as it originally stood. Howard v. Holloway, 7 Johns. 394. Similarly where it appeared that the signature of the testatrix had been erased, first by drawing diagonal lines over the name, and then nearly erasing such lines and the name itself, after which the testatrix carefully rewrote her signature over the original place of signing, Surrogate Jenks held that there was no presumption of its having been done with the intention of revoking the will, and in the absence of affirmative proof to that effect he admitted it to probate. Matter of Wood, 2 Connoly, 144.

§ 266. Material alterations in will.—Where a will is offered for probate having material alterations and erasures, the Surrogate must determine whether they were or were not made before execution. Matter of Wilcox, 131 N. Y. 610. When it clearly appears that the alteration was made before the will was executed, probate will be granted. But, in doubtful cases, where material provisions have been erased or altered, and the Surrogate cannot determine from the proof whether the alterations were made before or after execution, the whole instrument must be rejected, and probate refused. Matter of Barber, 92 Hun, 489, 497. When material alteration follows signature the whole will will be refused probate, "on the theory that testator would not desire his will to stand with a material part omitted." But if not material it may be disregarded and probate decreed. Matter of Gibson, 128 App. Div. 769. The burden of proof is on the proponent to show they were made before execution. For the presumption in regard to alteration in a will is in this State, that it was made after execution. Matter of Dake, 75 App. Div. 403, citing Matter of Potter, 33 N. Y. St. Rep. 936, and Crossman v. Crossman, 95 N. Y. 145. See, also Matter of Carver, 3 Misc. 567, Davie, Surr.; Wetmore v. Carryl, 5 Redf. 544, 547, Rollins, Surr., citing Herrick v. Malin, 22 Wend. 388; Smith v. McGowan, 3 Barb. 404; Acker v. Ledyard, 8 Barb. 514, and opinion of Lord Brougham in Cooper v. Bockett, 4 Moore's P. C. C. 419. See, also, Van Buren v. Cockburn, 14 Barb. 118; McPherson v. Clark, 3 Bradf. 93; Estate of Prescott, 4 Redf. 178. Those seeking to establish a will containing such apparent defects must overcome the usual presumption by proof direct or inferential. Dyer v. Erving, 2 Dem. 160, Rollins, Surr.; Matter of Carver, supra. If the interlineations are in body of holographic will in testator's handwriting there is a presumption they were made in preparing will and before execution. Matter of Dake, supra. Yet, once a will has been signed and published and attested, the testator though he may absolutely revoke it by destruction, or may amend or modify it by another writing executed with formalities such as attended its own execution, cannot otherwise, by one jot or tittle, vary its terms, either by additions, interlineations, obliterations, erasures or other changes upon its face, or by the after preparation of unattested papers, designed to supplement its provisions, or by the alteration of any such papers already in existence and engrafted by proper reference upon the will itself. Dyer v. Erving, supra, opinion of Rollins, p. 170. See interesting case, Matter of Johnson, 60 Misc. 277, where alterations were made at testatrix's request and witnessed, and she reidentified her original signature to them. Will admitted, but alterations ignored. The Court of Appeals (Crossman v. Crossman, 95 N. Y. 145, 152), intimated that there is no presumption where the interlineation is fair upon the face of the instrument and there are no circumstances to cast suspicion upon it that such interlineation though unexplained was fraudulently made after the execution of the instrument.

But in that case the court had before it duplicate wills. The interlineation was in one of the two, and the words interlined were necessary to make the will the duplicate of the other. Moreover, the interlineation was noted in the attestation clause. Judge Earl said (p. 153), "Taking all these circumstances there was sufficient to cast the burden upon the contestants to show that the interlineations were fraudulent and unauthorized." See Matter of Dwyer, 29 Misc. 382, 390. In determining whether the alterations were made before or after execution, the Surrogate will interrogate the witnesses or persons present as to their personal knowledge; and in the absence of any light from this source he should consider the handwriting, comparing it with that in the body of the instrument, the color of the ink, which he has authority to have chemically tested (Matter of Monroe, 5 N. Y. Supp. 552), the manner of the interlineation, and, particularly, whether reference is made to it in the attestation clause (Crossman v. Crossman, supra), for in case there is such reference, the interlineation is sufficiently accounted for. 1 Greenleaf, § 564. See also Matter of Whitney, 90 Hun, 138–143. If the will is in testator's writing and was in his custody till his death, any interlineation or erasure will be presumed to have been made before execution. Matter of Potter, 33 N. Y. St. Rep. 936. But pencil interlineations will not be deemed permanent parts of a will. Will of Tighe, N. Y. Law Journal, August 15, 1898. They show the deliberation of the testator, but are not sufficient as an embodiment of his determination. In Matter of Stickney, 41 Misc. 70, Church, Surr., admitted a will, validly executed, to probate, but enumerated in his decree each provision held to be annulled by interlineation or change proved to have been made after execution. In Matter of Raisbeck, 52 Misc. 279, pencil marks made in a lawyer's will (holographic) found in his private box were disregarded, being treated as mere indicia of a purpose to make a new will, but not sufficient to revoke the old until and unless the new testamentary act was actually complete.

Again, in Matter of Westbrook, 44 Misc. 339, a peculiar case was presented. Testatrix had cut out a paragraph and pasted the two remaining pieces of the will together, and put the paper into her box. She later wrote her executor telling him of the box and that it contained her will. Held there was no proof of intent to revoke. Thereupon the Surrogate took proof of the cut out missing portion of the will, and, incorporating the same into the existing paper, decreed probate.

§ 267. Effect of marriage of a woman as a revocation.—It was the rule of the common law that the marriage of a woman operates as an absolute revocation of her prior will. Brown v. Clark, 77 N. Y. 369, 373, and cases cited.

This rule of the common law was made a part of the law of this State by the Revised Statutes, which is the declaration of an absolute rule. (Now § 36, Dec. Est. Law.)

It has been held that the fact that the testamentary capacity conferred upon married women by the so-called married women's acts in this State, takes away the reason of the prior rule, does not abrogate this rule (Brown v. Clark, supra), in spite of the maxim cessante ratione legis, cessat lex ipse. 3 Redf. 445, reversed.

The courts cannot dispose of a statutory rule because it may appear that the policy upon which it was established has ceased, but where a testatrix makes a will before her marriage and after her marriage makes a codicil referring to such will, the due execution and publication of such codicil is now, as it was prior to the Revised Statutes, a sufficient republication of the will to which it refers. Van Cortlandt v. Kipp, 1 Hill, 590; Brown v. Clark, 77 N. Y. 369, 377, and cases cited. See also 1 Jarman on Wills, p. 78. "A codicil duly attested communicates the efficacy of its attestation (even) to any unattested will or previous codicil so as to render effectual any devise of the freehold estate which may be contained in such prior unattested instrument."

The revocation accomplished by a marriage subsequent to the making of a will is absolute and operates eo instanti. Lathrop v. Dunlap, 63 N. Y. 610. See also Matter of Gall, 2 Connoly, 286, aff'd in 131 N. Y. 593, where testator married one to whom he had for a long time prior thereto sustained illicit relations; the marriage found by the court was nonceremonial, but was adjudged to have taken place by mutual consent at a time subsequent to the making of the will. Held that while the fixing of the period when the parties passed by mutual consent from a state of illicit intercourse into that of marriage was incapable of being positively fixed, that negatively it certainly had not taken place at the time of the making of the will, which therefore was revoked by the subsequent marriage and birth of issue.

A widow is deemed an unmarried woman under this rule, and a will made while she is a widow will be deemed revoked by her subsequent remarriage. Matter of Kaufman, 131 N. Y. 620, aff'g 61 Hun, 331.

But where a married woman makes a will and subsequently to its execution her marriage is dissolved by judicial decree, she is not deemed to have executed it as an unmarried woman, and in such a case the Court of Appeals held that the subsequent remarriage of such a woman would not operate to revoke the will. Matter of McLarney, 153 N. Y. 416, aff'g 90 Hun, 361. The word "unmarried" in the statute means a person not in a state of marriage. Id. See also Matter of Union Trust Co., 179 N. Y. 261, "not being married at the time." The whole subject of a woman's will, as affected by the statutes is summarized in one of Surrogate Thomas' luminous and comprehensive opinions. Matter of Yung, N. Y. Law Journ., July 11, 1908, which is quoted in full:

"The propounded paper was duly executed by the decedent on July 2, 1895, at which time she was the wife of James Boyd Blake, and the mother of two infant children born of her marriage with him, only one of whom now survives, the other having predeceased her. Thereafter, her then husband, James Boyd Blake, died, and she married Charles Yung, one of the persons nominated in the testamentary instrument as executors, who is the proponent in this proceeding, and by her marriage with him she became the mother of Charles Francis Yung, now an infant of the age of about 3 years. The only objection filed in the proceeding is made by the special guardian of the infant Charles Francis Yung, and the only issue raised thereby is as to whether, upon the facts already stated, the propounded paper was revoked. The statutes applicable are contained in chapter 6, title 1, of the Revised Statutes, enacted in 1830, with later amendments thereto. Section 1 provided that 'all persons except idiots, persons of unsound mind, married women and infants may devise their real estate by a last will and testament, duly executed according to the provisions of this title.' Section 21 also declared that 'every male person of the age of 18 years or upwards, and every female not being a married woman, of the age of 16 years or upwards, of sound mind and memory, and no others, may give and bequeath his or her personal estate by will in writing." In other words, a valid will could not be made by a married woman, and this rule was not a new one, the statute being, in this respect, a new statement of the law existing at the time of its enactment and for long prior thereto. Three sections in the title cover all cases in which a constructive revocation of a will thus authorized to be made could occur, and these sections are numbered 43, 44 and 49. By section 44 it was declared that 'a will executed by an unmarried woman shall be deemed revoked by her subsequent marriage.' Section 43 provided for the revocation of the will of a man by his subsequent marriage and the birth of a child, if either wife or issue survived him. Section 49 provided for the partial revocation of the will of a man in favor of and to protect any child afterwards born, who was not mentioned or provided for in such will, or otherwise provided for by a settlement. The scheme thus presented was definite, complete and harmonious. By Laws 1849, chapter 375, it was provided that 'any married female may . . . . devise real and personal property and any interest or estate therein, and the rents, issues and profits thereof in the same manner and with like effect as if she were unmarried.' By Laws 1867, chapter 782, sections 1 and 21 of the Revised Statutes were amended so as to place women and men on precisely the same footing as to the making of wills. Thereafter, in 1869, in Cotheal v. Cotheal (40 N. Y. 405), a case of great hardship to a child born after the execution of a will by its mother, by which he was deprived of any interest in her estate or of any provision therefrom, was presented to the Court of Appeals, and an effort was made to procure a construction of section 49 of the Revised Statutes which would make it applicable to the will of a married woman. Notwithstanding the equities which might have influenced the court if the statute had been capable of two constructions, it was adjudged that it had no application and that the will of the mother was unrevoked, and that the afterborn child was without remedy. Shortly following this decision section 49 was by Laws 1869, chapter 22, amended so as to read as follows: 'Whenever a testator shall have a child born after the making of a last will, either in the lifetime or after the death of such testator, and shall die leaving such child so afterborn unprovided for by any settlement, and neither provided for nor in any way mentioned in such will, every such child shall succeed to the same portion of such parent's real and personal estate as would have descended or been distributed to such child if such parent had died intestate, and shall be entitled to recover the same portion from the devisees and legatees in proportion to and out of the parts devised and bequeathed to them by such will.' This statute is conceded to have application to the present case, and without an adjudication that the will is in whole revoked and null the contesting infant will be entitled to the full share of his mother's estate which would pass to him in case she were intestate (Matter of Murphy 144 N. Y. 557). If any advantage will come to him by the rejection of the paper it will not be in the nature of an increase of his interest in the estate of the decedent, and nothing less will serve to give him a legal standing to contest and resist the probate of the paper (Trustees v. Ritch, 91 Hun, 509, 532; Matter of Murphy, 144 N. Y. 557; Matter of Brown, 47 Hun, 360, 361; Matter of Rollwagen, 48 Howard, 103). My further examination as to the propriety of admitting the will is therefore made in pursuance of my general duty to examine as to the validity of the paper, though not contested. No amendments have been made to sections 43 and 44 of the statute. Under section 44 the will would have been revoked if it had been executed either before the marriage of the decedent or after her first husband's death and while she was a widow (Matter of Kaufman, 131 N. Y. 620), for 'a will executed by an unmarried woman shall be deemed revoked by her subsequent marriage,' but she was not 'an unmarried woman' when she executed the paper, and that provision of law has no application (Matter of McLarney, 153 N. Y. 416). Section 43 of the statute, which is claimed to have application here, is as follows: 'If after the making of any will disposing of the estate of the testator, such testator shall marry and have issue of such marriage, born either in his lifetime or after his death, and the wife or issue of such marriage shall be living at the death of the testator, such will shall be deemed revoked unless provision shall be made for such issue by some settlement or unless such issue shall be provided for in the will, or in such way mentioned therein as to show an intention not to make such provision, and no other evidence to rebut the presumption of such revocation shall be received.' It can scarcely be contended that this section of the statute was intended by the revisers or by the Legislature which enacted it to apply to the wills of women; it has never yet been held to apply to the wills of women, and I am of opinion that it does not apply to them. The 'testator' mentioned in it is one who can marry a 'wife,' which 'wife' can or may survive him. While in the construction of statutes the use of a masculine term will include the feminine, it has never been held that the use of a word applicable only to a female shall also include the male. The objections will be overruled and the will admitted to probate."

is contemplated the solemn relation involving the mutual rights of the parties in a manner sufficient to entitle either to the aid of the court. A ceremonial marriage between parties competent to contract it is of course sufficient to revoke a prior will in any case covered by the statute. Doubts may arise when the marriage claimed is of that vague character known as a common-law, or nonceremonial marriage for the reason that it is often no easy judicial task to determine just when the alleged marital relation commenced. While the cohabitation of parties may continue for such a period and under such circumstances as to warrant a court in deciding that the parties are in law husband and wife, yet it may be impossible for the court to say just when illicit intercourse ended and the marital state commenced. The cohabitation, apparently decent and orderly, of two persons opposite in sex, raises a presumption of more or less strength that they have been duly married. Such cohabitation does not constitute marriage. It only tends to prove that the parties have entered into a marriage contract. But where the cohabitation is illicit in its origin, there is a presumption that it so continues until a change in its character is shown by acts and circumstances strongly indicating that the connection has become matrimonial. Gall v. Gall, 114 N. Y. 109, 117, Vann, J., citing Caujolle v. Ferrie, 23 N. Y. 90; O'Gara v. Eisenloher, 38 N. Y. 296; Badger v. Badger, 88 N. Y. 546, 554; Hynes v. McDermott, 95 N. Y. 451, 457.

So when a testator living in illicit relations with a woman, made a will, and such relations continued to his death, and were subsequently by the Court of Appeals held to have grown into a matrimonial relation without fixing the time exactly, Surrogate Abbott applying the opinion of the Court of Appeals in Gall v. Gall, just quoted, held in the absence of affirmative proof that the illicit intercourse had changed into matrimonial relations before the execution of a codicil a year after the making of the will, he must hold that the subsequent marriage, adjudged by the Court of Appeals to have subsisted, and the birth of issue, must operate to revoke the will. In re Gall's Will, 9 N. Y. Supp. 466.

§ 269. Revocation by marriage and birth of child.—The language of the statute is express in this regard, and the rule must be borne in mind that when the statute defines such a revocation, all other cases are impliedly excluded; thus the statute making no provision for the revocation of a will by the discovery of the existence of a child, living at the time of the making of the will, a will made in ignorance of such existence, is not revoked. Ortlish v. McDermott, 2 Redf. 460. The Yung case quoted in § 267 shows that this statute refers only to a man. So the will of a married woman is not revoked by the subsequent birth of children although they are not provided for in the will. Cotheal v. Cotheal, 40 N. Y. 405. So it seems, the will of an unmarried woman will not be deemed revoked by the birth of an illegitimate child. Matter of Bunce, 6 Dem. 278; Matter of Huiell, 6 Dem. 352. But even where a child is born after a will has been executed in which no provision has been made for it, and the whole of testator's estate is thereby disposed of, the fact that the child is under the statute entitled to the same share in the estate which would have been his or hers if the father had died intestate does not justify refusing probate to the will. That is proper only where the marriage, of which the child unprovided for is the issue, occurred after the testamentary act. Matter of Gall, Rollins, Surr., 5 Dem. 374. But even a contingent provision will prevent revocation, in view of the rule of the civil law that the statute aims at, namely, to prevent "omission by oversight." Stachelberg v. Stachelberg, 52 Misc. 22.

The statute (old § 43, now § 35, Dec. Est. Law) ends with the provision "and no other evidence to rebut the presumption of such revocation shall be received." Held to exclude proof that a legatee died before testator, ergo, his legacy lapsed, ergo, the will did not dispose of the whole estate. Matter of Rossignot, 50 Misc. 231.

§ 270. Effect of agreement to convey.—The statute (§ 45, now § 37, Dec. Est. Law) does not give to a bond or covenant to convey lands already devised by the grantor in his will subsequently probated the effect of revoking the devise. The devisee takes subject to the grantee's remedies as though testator were still living. The subject is covered in the opinions in Van Tassel v. Burgen, 119 App. Div. 509, q. v.; § 48, now § 40, Dec. Est. Law, provides when revocation results from such a contract or conveyance, while the preceding section provides for the same in case the intent is declared expressly in the instrument so to revoke.

§ 271. Irrevocable wills.—A will being ambulatory in its nature is, therefore, revocable at any time before the testator's death, the act of revocation being conducted pursuant to the requirements already pointed out; so far as the Surrogate's Court is concerned, there are, therefore, no irrevocable wills.

The agreement of the testator for a good and valid consideration to make an irrevocable will in favor of the person from whom such consideration is received, or of some person named by him, is an agreement unenforceable in the Surrogates' Courts, so that though the testator has made such a will and although it expressly states that it is an irrevocable will, it may be revoked by his later will provided the requirements above set forth are complied with; and the later will, if propounded before the Surrogate, and duly proved, must be admitted to probate as the last will and testament of the decedent. Matter of Gloucester, 11 N. Y. Supp. 899. The remedy of the beneficiary is not by excluding the later will from probate, for the Surrogate has no jurisdiction to deal with contracts, but by a suit in equity to enforce the agreement evidenced by the will purporting to be irrevocable. Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Holladay, 13 Abb. N. C. 16. In Matter of Goldsticker, 123 App. Div. 474, aff'd 192 N. Y. 35, three brothers made mutual wills on condition they were to be operative so long as all remained unmarried. Two subsequently married. Held this could not operate to revoke will of third, who had died unmarried without revoking his will pursuant to statute.

In this case a later will had been refused probate for lack of capacity to make it. Held the later will so made could not revoke the original mutual will.

§ 272. Effect of antenuptial agreement.—Where an antenuptial agreement was made between decedent and his future wife to execute mutual wills after marriage and such wills were accordingly executed, nevertheless, it was held that such wills did not thereby become as wills irrevocable, nor operate to prevent the decedent from thereafter executing a testamentary paper varying from and repugnant to it. Matter of Keep's Will, 2 N. Y. Supp. 750, citing Ex parte Day, 1 Bradf. 476; Schumacher v. Schmidt, 4 Amer. Rep. 138 (Ala.); Hopper v. Reed, 32 Daily Reg., October 26, 1887. See Edson v. Parsons, 155 N. Y. 555.

So where A made an oral antenuptial agreement with B to make a will in her favor after marriage, it was held that marriage was a part of the agreement, and sole consideration therefor, but not a sufficient part performance to take the case out of the Statute of Frauds. Hunt v. Hunt, 171 N. Y. 396, aff'g 55 App. Div. 430. In this case B proved actual execution of a will by A, but it appeared that such will was destroyed, and the oral testimony in support of its contents did not show that it contained any recognition of the antenuptial agreement. Held insufficient to bar the statute, citing Cooley v. Lobdell, 153 N. Y. 596, 600; Mentz v. Newwitter, 122 N. Y. 491.

In Phalen v. U. S. Trust Co., 186 N. Y. 178, the agreement was in writing. Held marriage was a valid consideration. See opinion of Werner, J., as to rule under which such contracts are favored and effectuated. But, in this case no revocation was involved. The plaintiff consented to the probate of the codicil which violated the agreement, but was nevertheless held entitled to specifically enforce the agreement to "make a will without discriminating among his children."

See also Brown v. Brown, 117 App. Div. 199, as to antenuptial agreement being in lieu of dower. Dower is favored, and if there be doubt widow should take both, citing Matter of Gorden, 172 N. Y. 25, 28.

Where an antenuptial agreement for a fixed sum in lieu of dower carried interest from death of husband, held that such interest would run on a larger sum given by the will and defined therein as the payment "as agreed upon between us." Matter of Bostwick, 119 App. Div. 455.

§ 273. Effect of agreements to will.—An agreement to make a will is perfectly valid, and after the death of either of the parties becomes irrevocable (Ex parte Day, 1 Bradf. 476, and cases cited); but as a will, an irrevocable instrument is unknown to the testamentary law of either this country or England. See Hobson v. Bluckburn, 1 Addams, 274, opinion of Sir John Nicholl. Once the notion of irrevocability is imported into a document, purporting to be a will, the circumstance changes its essence as a will and converts it into a contract; over such instruments Surrogates' Courts have no jurisdiction. Everdell v. Hill, 58 App. Div. 151, 159.

The distinction between an irrevocable will and a will that becomes irrevocable as being one of two mutual wills, the testator of the other having died, is clear. Therefore between the mutual will, as a will, and its irrevocability as a will, and the will as an agreement, and its irrevocability as an agreement, there is an equally clear distinction (see Ex parte Day, supra) but while a will is held to be always revocable and the last will regardless of the nature and provisions and declarations in the first, must always be the testator's last will and testament, yet a man may so bind his assets by agreement that his estate shall be a trustee for the purpose of his agreement, and so a compact between the parties to a so-called irrevocable will will be operative in equity to the extent of making the devisees of the will trustees for performing the decedent's part of the contract. See Ex parte Day, supra, extracts from English decisions. This contract or agreement is said to attach to the estate of the decedent as an equitable lien or trust enforceable in a court of equity. See In re Keep's Will, 2 N. Y. Supp. 750, citing Ex parte Day, supra; Schumacher v. Schmidt, supra; Parsell v. Stryker, 41 N. Y. 480; Giles v. De Talleyrand, 1 Dem. 97. See also Re Gloucester's Estate, 11 N. Y. Supp. 899, opinion of Surrogate Abbott, who says, "Under the authorities, if a first will was made for a valuable consideration, its provisions may be enforceable against testator's estate as a binding contract in a court of equity. So far as it can be deemed to be a last will and testament, it has been revoked in express terms by the testator in his last will, and therefore has no longer any legal existence as a last will and testament. This court has no jurisdiction to deal with contracts; let decree enter admitting the last will to probate."

§ 274. Same, enforcement.—There can be no doubt but that a person may make a valid agreement binding himself legally to make a particular disposition of his property by last will and testament, and if a testator agrees to devise property to another and receives a good and valuable consideration for such agreement, such agreement, a court of equity will hold, must be specifically performed. Stevens v. Reynolds, 6 N. Y. 458; Parsell v. Stryker, 41 N. Y. 480, 487, and cases cited.

Almost any "good" consideration will support such an agreement. For example:

"If you will get me up a cane." Bush v. Whitaker, 45 Misc. 74, citing note to Johnson v. Hubbell, 66 Am. Dec. 784.

For nursing and harboring decedent. Yarwood v. The Trusts, etc., Co., 94 App. Div. 47.

For abstaining from tobacco until twenty-one years old. Horner v. Sidway, 124 N. Y. 538.

The rule is the adequacy of the consideration is for the parties to consider when the agreement is made, and not for the court when reviewing the transaction. Godine v. Kidd, 64 Hun, 585.

This agreement can be enforced by compelling a conveyance from heirs of the promisor, or from purchasers with notice from him in his lifetime. See also Giles v. De Talleyrand, supra, where the Surrogate held that he had no authority to construe or pass upon such an agreement as affected the will propounded before him. The settlement of the executor's accounts and distribution of the estate was deferred until the question of the validity and effect of the instrument could be passed upon by a competent tribunal. See also Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Holladay, 13 Abb. N. C. 16. But where mutual wills are made not in pursuance of agreement between the testators, either may revoke his will without giving notice of his intentions to the other. Edson v. Parsons, 85 Hun, 263, citing Ex parte Day, 1 Bradf. 476. And if it be claimed subsequently that the wills were made pursuant to a contract, that fact must be established by the most clear and satisfactory evidence. So, if it is recited in the wills that they were so made, or if it in any way appears on their face that they were executed pursuant to a contract, it is quite sufficient.

The will made in violation of the agreement must be probated by the Surrogate, and such probate is effective to transfer the legal title. Kine v. Farrell, 71 App. Div. 219. In a proper case, however, such legal title can be impressed with a trust in favor of a party having prior equities. In the case cited there was an agreement in writing between plaintiff and decedent, reciting a good consideration, free from ambiguity, and neither inequitable nor against public policy. No superior equities had intervened. The court decreed "that the legal title is impressed with a resulting trust in favor of the plaintiff for the performance of the testator's agreement," and that such agreement would be specifically enforced by requiring a conveyance of the legal title to the plaintiff in execution of such trust, and by enjoining the beneficiaries under the will from questioning such title. Ibid., citing Parsell v. Stryker, 41 N. Y. 480; Shakespeare v. Markham, 10 Hun, 311, aff'd 72 N. Y. 400; Godine v. Kidd, 64 Hun, 585; Brantingham v. Huff, 43 App. Div. 414; Gates v. Gates, 34 App. Div. 608; Winne v. Winne, 166 N. Y. 263; Edson v. Parsons, 155 N. Y. 555; Ellerson v. Westcott, 148 N. Y. 149.

The party to the agreement with the decedent need not object to the probate of the will made in fraud of the agreement. Phalen v. U. S. Trust Co., 186 N. Y. 178. The Surrogate would not deny probate on his objection, and his failure to so object works no estoppel. Kine v. Farrell, supra, at p. 220, citing Matter of Gloucester's Estate, 11 N. Y. Supp. 899; Giles's Estate, 1 Abb. N. C. 57; Matter of Keep, 17 N. Y. St. Rep. 812.

CHAPTER III

PROCEDURE OF PROBATE PROCEEDINGS

§ 275. The petition.—The petition is the first step in proceedings to prove a will. The distinction between proving a will in common form and in solemn form is practically no longer observed under the Code. Section 2614 provides for the presentation of the petition and is as follows:

> Who may propound will.
> A person designated in a will as executor, devisee, or legatee, or any person interested in the estate, or a creditor of the decedent, or any party to an action brought or about to be brought, and interested in the subject thereof, in which action the decedent, if living, would be a proper party, may present to the surrogate's court having jurisdiction, a written petition, duly verified, describing the will, setting forth the facts, upon which the jurisdiction of the court to grant probate thereof depends, and praying that the will may be proved, and that the persons, specified in the next section, may be cited to attend the probate thereof. Upon the presentation of such a petition, the surrogate must issue a citation accordingly. § 2614, Code Civil Proc.

The petition accordingly is to be made to cover all necessary jurisdictional facts, and to include all persons entitled to be cited, so as to leave out none upon whom the decree admitting the will to probate ought to be binding under §§ 2626 and 2627, post.

The petition should substantially set forth the following facts:

Decedent's name;

Date of his death;

Place of his death;

That he left a will;

Date of the will;

Same as to codicils, if any;

Execution of will, and names of witnesses;

Residence of decedent at the time of his death;

If a nonresident, that he left personal property within the State; or that he left such property which since his death has come within the State and remains unadministered; or that he died seized of real property situated in the county, and to which the will offered relates; or which is subject to disposition to pay decedent's debts. And it is proper to add that no other application for probate or administration has been made to any other Surrogate in the State, whether the will relates to real or personal property or both;

Approximate value of personal property;

Names of necessary parties, which will be, in case the will relates to real property, the husband or wife and all the heirs of testator or, in case it relates to personalty the husband, or wife and all the next of kin. If it relate to both all must be named. It is customary to add the residence of one so named, or the statement that it is unknown and cannot be ascertained;

Unknown persons must be approximately designated or included in a class;

Whether all are of full age, and if not which are infants and whether over or under fourteen years of age;

The character in which petitioner appears should be made clear, whether as executor named, or as party interested, and facts showing prima facie that he is entitled to propound the will;

Prayer for probate.

§ 276. Same.—The petition must be in writing, and verified (Code Civ. Proc. § 2614) as pleadings are verified. Code Civ. Proc. § 2534. The decision in Wright v. Fleming, 19 Hun, 370, in 1879, where the General Term of the Second Department held it not to be strictly necessary "to have a petition in writing to set in motion proceedings to prove a will," must not be considered as controlling now in face of the express words of the Code, § 2614, and the universally accepted practice. Section 2534 of the Code provides that the provisions of §§ 523–526, q. v. (§ 523; when pleading must be verified. § 524; allegations on knowledge, and on information and belief. § 525; verification, how and by whom made. § 526; form of verification), apply to the verification of pleadings in Surrogate's Courts and to the petition or other papers so verified, where they can be applied in substance, without regard to the form of the proceedings.

§ 277. To what Surrogate petition must be presented.—It has been noted under the head of jurisdiction that "the Surrogate's Court obtains jurisdiction in every case, by the existence of the jurisdictional facts prescribed by statute, and by the citation or appearance of the necessary parties" (Code Civ. Proc. § 2474), but exclusive jurisdiction is conferred on certain Surrogates of the probate of wills under certain circumstances. See ante, §§ 27 et seq.

Section 2476 of the Code provides:

> The surrogate's court of each county has jurisdiction, exclusive of every other surrogate's court, to take the proof of a will, and to grant letters testamentary thereupon, or to grant letters of administration, as the case requires, in either of the following cases:
>
>
> 2. Where the decedent, not being a resident of the state died within that county, leaving personal property within the state, or leaving personal property which has, since his death, come into the state, and remains unadministered.
> 3. Where the decedent, not being a resident of the state, died without the state, leaving personal property within that county, and no other; or leaving personal property which has, since his death, come into that county, and no other, and remains unadministered.

4. Where the decedent was not, at the time of his death, a resident of the state, and a petition for probate of his will, or for a grant of letters of administration, under subdivision second or third of this section, has not been filed in any surrogate's court; but real property of the decedent, to which the will relates, or which is subject to disposition under title fifth of this chapter, is situated within that county, and no other. § 2476, Code Civil Proc. See ante, §§ 33 and 34, for discussion.

§ 278. Conflict of jurisdiction.—Section 2477 (quoted in § 35, ante) declares that where a petition for probate or for letters of administration is once filed with either of two or more Surrogates' Courts having concurrent jurisdiction, the jurisdiction of the one with whom such petition is filed, becomes exclusive.

It seems, however, that the jurisdiction of the other Surrogate in such a case is merely held in abeyance and revives if the jurisdiction of the one so acquiring exclusive control terminates for any cause. So, when two petitions were filed, one with the Surrogate of Wayne County for letters of administration, and the other, a day later with the Surrogate of Monroe County for probate of the will, it is manifest that under § 2477 the jurisdiction of the Surrogate of Wayne County was exclusive. But when he denied the application before him, it was held the other Surrogate had thereupon jurisdiction to proceed with the probate of the will. Matter of Gould, 9 N. Y. Supp. 603, aff'd 131 N. Y. 630. See Matter of Golden, 40 Misc. 544, where there were two wills. The one, holographic, described testator as of Saratoga. There was proof he was intending to remove there to spend the rest of his life. The other, drawn by his attorney, recited his residence as at Troy, where he had lived 40 years.

§ 279. Jurisdiction of wills of nonresidents.—The jurisdiction given over wills of nonresidents by § 2476, subds, 2, 3 and 4, and conditioned (1) either by the nonresident's death within the Surrogate's County leaving property in the State or which comes into the State subsequently; or (2) by the nonresident's leaving personal or real property in that county and in no other in case he died out of the State, is preconditioned by the provisions of former § 2611 of the Code, now § 23, Dec. Est. Law, and of former ch. 731 of the Laws of 1894, which is now § 2705 of the Code, which prescribe what wills of nonresidents can be proved in this State. Both are quoted in § 27, ante, under "Jurisdiction," q. v., with discussion.

§ 280. Waiver of citation.—Section 2528 of the Code was amended in 1896 (by ch. 570, Laws of 1896, which took effect September 1, 1896), so as to provide explicitly for the waiver of issuance and service of citation. The amendment provides: "The issuance and service of a citation may be waived by a party in any proceeding by an instrument in writing acknowledged and approved as a deed entitled to be recorded; or by personal appearance, or by his attorney with written authorization executed and acknowledged as a deed, and filed in the office of a Surrogate."

This amendment amounts practically only to a declaration of a rule already existing and practiced in the Surrogates' Courts. It must be borne in mind that the section refers to appearance of parties and the amendment is preceded by provisions for the prosecuting or defending of special proceedings in Surrogates' Courts by a party of full age, unless he has been judicially declared to be incompetent to manage his affairs; and while the language of the amendment is very broad, "may be waived by a party in any proceeding," it is believed that the intention of the legislature was that such waiver should be limited to persons of full age, and does not extend to give infants or incompetent persons the power to execute such waivers. In Matter of Petersen, 51 Misc. 367, the Surrogate recognized the right of a foreign consul to represent subjects of the power he represented in this State, under proof of the treaty with that power (Denmark) which contained a "most favored nation" clause, and of the treaty with the Argentine Republic which contained adequate provision for consular representation. But this power was limited to adult foreigners. As to infants "the only way in which a Surrogate's Court can obtain jurisdiction . . . . is by the issuance and service of a citation."

The decision of the Surrogate of Ostego County (Matter of Gregory, 13 Misc. 363), that waiver of service cannot be accepted in lieu of "issuance and service" of citation is not inconsistent with the practice. Where there are infants, issuance of service cannot be dispensed with nor the time shortened. But where all parties are of age and consent, the issuance and service of citation is in ordinary practice deemed unnecessary if formal waivers properly acknowledged, covering both issuance and service of the citation, are filed.

It is only necessary to add here that in addition to dispensing with the issuance and service of citation by waivers, where all the parties are of full age and competent, it can also be dispensed with when the petition sets forth and the Surrogate is satisfied that the decedent left no other heir, next of kin, or person interested except the petitioner only. Bailey v. Stewart, 2 Redf. 212, 222. The object of the citation is to give notice to all parties interested. If the Surrogate is satisfied there are none besides the petitioner, he may dispense with what would be a useless form. This seems to have been the procedure upon the probate of the will of Alexander T. Stewart. See Bailey v. Stewart, 2 Redf. 212, 221. The widow filed a petition that the "widow, only heirs and next of kin of said deceased" was the petitioner, and that the deceased left him surviving neither father, mother, brother, nor sister, nor descendants of any or either of them, nor any descendants of his, nor any relation nor next of kin of said deceased.

This was held to be "satisfactory evidence" to warrant the Surrogate in omitting to issue citations to "persons thus clearly proved not to exist." Same affirmed sub nomine, Bailey v. Hilton, 14 Hun, 3.

It has occasionally been claimed by practitioners that it is unnecessary to cite the next of kin of a decedent leaving personal estate alleged not to exceed $2,000 in value, where the widow or husband of the decedent is the petitioner for probate in case there are no legacies bequeathed by the will, on the ground that in such cases the widow or husband would take the whole estate under the statute of distributions. 8 R. S. 2565, 2567, part. II, ch. VI, art. III, title 3, § 75, subd. 3.

But it would seem to be safer that citations should issue nevertheless in order that those cited may have opportunity to prove if possible that there is more than $2,000 in the estate, in which case they might be "persons interested." Such is the custom in the New York Surrogate's Court. See ante, §§ 76 et seq. as to appearances, their character and limits. Also § 80 as to waivers generally.

§ 281. Persons entitled to citation.—Section 2615 of the Code, which provides what persons are to be cited upon a petition presented for the probate of a will, has been frequently amended (in 1892, 1893, 1894 and 1905), and in examining into the regularity of probate proceedings with a view to ascertaining whether or not they are conclusive against a given person, the practitioner will do well to refer to the language of the statute as it may have been in force at the time of the probate. The language now is as follows:

> The following persons must be cited upon a petition presented as prescribed in the last section:
> 1. If the will relates exclusively to real property, the husband or wife, if any, and all the heirs of the testator.
>
> 2. If the will relates exclusively to personal property, the husband or wife, if any, and all the next of kin of the testator.
>
> 3. If the will relates to both real and personal property, the husband or wife, if any, and all the heirs, and all the next of kin of the testator. § 2615, Code Civil Proc.
> 4. (Added in 1905.) Any person designated in the will as executor.

The word all is inclusive—alien heirs must be cited as well as those resident here. Kilfoy v. Powers, 3 Dem. 198. So, in Matter of Healy, 27 Misc. 354, it was held to include issue of deceased uncles and aunts, who by virtue of subd. 12 of § 2732 (see post, Distribution) were entitled by representation. But legatees are not required to be cited. Walsh v. Ryan, 1 Bradf. 433; Dyer v. Erving, 2 Dem. 160.

The provisions, for a time operative, whereby all persons in being who would take an interest in any disposition of the real or of the personal property, or of both, under the provisions of the will were also required to be cited, are now wisely left out.

This simplification of the statute is believed to be a step in the right direction. There is no provision made for citation of legatees or devisees who are not heirs or next of kin; yet they may properly be cited if it is desired to make the probate conclusive upon them, and as already elsewhere laid down, if not cited, they may petition to be brought in as parties in the probate. Welsh v. Ryan, 1 Bradf. 433. It is to be noted that this decree was in 1851 and before the amendment requiring legatees or devisees to be cited, the statute at that time provided only for the citation of the widow, heirs and next of kin in probate cases; this was undoubtedly on the principle that these persons being the persons who would succeed to the estate in case of intestacy are all the persons interested against admitting the will, and therefore entitled at the outset to be cited, and this case expressly held that such a person in interest was not bound to rely upon the proper representation of his interests by the executor, but might intervene to protect his interests and oppose the probate of the will or a codicil thereof. The learned Surrogate cited the following cases: Lewis v. Bulkley, 1 Cas. Temp. §§ 513 and 190, notes; Bittleston v. Clark, 2 id. 250; Hayle v. Hasted, 1 Curt. 236; Mansfield v. Shaw, 3 Phill. 22; Urquhart v. Fricker, 3 Add. 58. See, also, Lawrence v. Parsons, 27 How. Pr. 26; Foster v. Foster, 7 Paige, 48.

Where a party becomes interested, while a probate proceeding is pending, as by the death of the person to whose interest he succeeds, the Surrogate has power to bring such person in as a party. Russell v. Hartt, 87 N. Y. 18. The exclusion of "creditors" from "persons interested," by subd. 11 of § 2514, of the Code of Civil Procedure, does not apply to a judgment creditor of a devisee named in a will. Thus where the interest of such a devisee would be defeated if an alleged codicil were proved, such a creditor has been held to be entitled to appear and oppose the probate of the codicil, as a "party interested." Rafferty v. Scott, 4 App. Div. 429. If the person so becoming interested be a minor, the Surrogate will appoint a special guardian for him upon bringing him in. Russell v. Hartt, supra. But if a guardian be not appointed at the proper time, the defect cannot be cured by an order nunc pro tunc. Matter of Bowne, 6 Dem. 51. For the defect is one which ipso facto gives the infant, if the decree is against him, the right to move to vacate it on attaining majority, and this right the Surrogate's Court cannot defeat.

And if a person entitled to be cited has been inadvertently omitted as a party, it has been held that the Surrogate may bring him in by a supplemental citation. Matter of Crumb, 6 Dem. 478; Code Civ. Proc. § 2481; Matter of Bradley, 70 Hun, 104, 110.

In the case first cited the Surrogate inserted in the citation a direction to attend and show cause why the evidence taken and the proceedings theretofore had to prove the will should not stand, and why the decree admitting said will to probate and adjudging the same to be a valid will, to pass real and personal estate should not be sustained, and why he should not be bound thereby with the same force and effect as if he had been previously cited to attend the original probate thereof.

The practice seems to be correct for the reason that the power to take the proof of wills being given generally, the mode of its exercise in a case not provided for by the statute, must be regulated by the court in the exercise of a sound discretion according to the peculiar circumstances of each particular case. Campbell v. Logan, 2 Bradf. 90.

§ 282. Section 2615 is mandatory and explicit.—The requirements of § 2615 must be specifically complied with. The omission of any who are by this section made "necessary parties," is a serious defect. The surviving husband or wife, as the case may be, must always be cited. Lusk v. Alburtis, 1 Bradf. 456. But the husband of one of the heirs or next of kin, unless himself one of the heirs or next of kin, is not entitled to citation. Keeney v. Whitemarsh, 16 Barb. 141; Beeker v. Lynch, 1 Bradf. 458. Where, however, a wife has been divorced from the testator, a different rule prevails. If divorced for her own wrong she has no rights in his estate whether real or personal. If divorced, though blameless, she has no rights in his personal estate. Consequently a divorced wife need never be cited upon the probate of a will of personal property, and a wife divorced for her own wrong need not be cited upon the probate of a will of personal property or of real and personal property. Matter of Estate of Ensign, 103 N. Y. 284, 290.

The contents of citation must be as required by § 2616, which is as follows:

> The citation must set forth the name of the decedent, and of the person by whom the will is propounded; and it must state whether the will relates, or purports to relate, exclusively to real property, or personal property, or to both. Where the will propounded was nuncupative, that fact must be stated in the citation. Where the surrogate is unable to ascertain to his satisfaction, whether the decedent left, surviving him, any person, who would be entitled to the property affected by the will, if the decedent had died intestate, the citation must be directed, where the will relates to real property, to the attorney-general; where it relates to personal property, to the public administrator, who would have been entitled to administration, if the decedent had died intestate. § 2616, Code Civil Proc.

The theory on which this latter provision is based is that in case the will can, for any reason, be shown to be invalid, and an intestacy be made out, the county or State, as the case may be, is interested, and must be given opportunity to show it, as in default of such heirs, or next of kin, or husband, or wife, the State would take the property as in case of an escheat. See Gombault v. Public Administrator, 4 Bradf. 226, which is considered as establishing the rule. In that case there appeared to be a reasonable chance of proving lack of testamentary capacity. But unless there seemed to be such a reasonable chance of preventing probate, the attorney general and public administrator will not be zealous to contest probate; and this provision is chiefly precautionary, though none the less to be observed.

§ 283. Intervention of interested parties.—The practice in the Surrogate's Court is peculiarly favorable to the admission of parties claiming or having any interest in the estate. Lawrence v. Parsons, 27 How. Pr. 26. The line is usually sharply drawn between those who must be cited and those who may become parties, the first class being necessary for jurisdictional purposes, and with a view to the finality of the decree to be entered, the second looking to the protection of any whose rights might be prejudiced by the decree if they were not represented in the proceeding; thus the Code provides that:

> Any person although not cited who is named as a devisee or legatee in the will propounded, or as executor, trustee, devisee or legatee in any other paper purporting to be a will of the decedent, or who is otherwise interested in sustaining or defeating the will may appear and at his election support or oppose the application. A person so appearing becomes a party to the special proceeding. § 2617, Code Civil Proc., in part.

"Any person" is very general. It will include a foreign administrator. See Matter of Davis, 182 N. Y. 468.

"Otherwise interested in sustaining or defeating the will" means an actual, i. e., a pecuniary interest, to protect. Whether individual or representative. Ibid. See cases discussed in opinion at p. 474. In Matter of Hoyt, 55 Misc. 159, an application to intervene was denied when it appeared that the applicant was interested in an "other paper purporting to be a will of the decedent" which gave him a legacy less than that given him by the will propounded and which for some mysterious reason he asked leave to contest.

But § 2617 does not affect the right or interest of any such persons as are there described unless they become parties. In 1894 there was added to this section by amendment, the following provision:

> And in case the will propounded for probate is opposed, due and timely notice of the hearing of the objections to the will shall be given in such manner as the surrogate shall direct, to all persons in being who would take any interest in any property under the provisions of the will, and to the executor or executors, trustee or trustees named therein, if any, who have not appeared in the proceeding, and any decree in the proceeding shall not affect the right or interest of any such person unless he shall be so notified.

The first part of this section giving a person the right to ask to be allowed to intervene in a proceeding for the probate of a will for the purpose of protecting his own interests has been held not to lay down a new rule but only to be a formulation in this respect of the law as it existed before the Code went into effect. Lafferty v. Lafferty, 5 Redf. 356, citing Booth v. Kitchen, 7 Hun, 255; Walsh v. Ryan, 1 Bradf. 433; Marvin v. Marvin, 11 Abb. N. S. 97; Children's Aid Society v. Loveridge, 70 N. Y. 387; Turhune v. Brookfield, 1 Redf. 220.

In the case first cited Surrogate Livingstone showed that under the act of 1837 (ch. 460, § 4), "an executor, devisee or legatee named in any last will or any person interested in the estate might have such will proved."

As has already been said in another connection, a person claiming to be so interested must show to the satisfaction of the Surrogate that he comes within one of the classes described in the Code. If the person claiming to be interested claims under some testamentary document other than the will propounded, he must prove the provisions of the document under which he claims, so as so show the Surrogate the nature and extent of his interest. Matter of Hamersley, 43 Hun, 639.

In 1863 Surrogate Gideon J. Tucker held that if parties claiming to be interested filed a verified claim of interest and appeared in open court on the return day, that the filing of the claim constituted the claimant a contestant and a party to the proceedings, and his appearance constituted a waiver of a service of citation. Norton v. Lawrence, 1 Redf. 473. He further held that should his interest be disputed he was bound to prove his interest and that where issue was taken on the allegation of interest the evidence in relation to that question and that which related to the proof of the will should proceed pari passu. This has not been changed. The case of Jones v. Hamersley, 4 Dem. 427, contains a careful discussion by Surrogate Rollins showing a correct limitation on the rights of intervenors to raise questions in the proceeding for the determination of the Surrogate.

The second part of § 2617 above quoted has for its object, not the protection of the rights of the next of kin, or heirs-at-law; for they are entitled to citation under § 2615. It aims to protect legatees and devisees under the will, who, but for the provisions of this section might have no knowledge of the pendency of a proceeding in which a decree might be made rejecting the will under which they are beneficiaries. Cook v. White, 43 App. Div. 388, 390.

But where one is not required to be cited on probate, and does not in fact intervene, a decree, denying probate to a codicil is, as to personalty, conclusive upon him, and § 2617 is not applicable. Matter of Tilden, 32 Misc. 118, 119, citing Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2626, 2627; Vanderpoel v. Van Valkenburgh, 6 N. Y. 190; Marvin v. Marvin, 2 Abb. N. S. 100, 101; Hoyt v. Hoyt, 112 N. Y. 493; Post v. Mason, 91 N. Y. 539; Smith v. Hilton, 19 N. Y. St. Rep. 340.

§ 284. The petition must be filed.—The practitioner having prepared his petition in the name of a person known to be qualified to propound the will, and having prayed for the citation of all necessary persons, and having exercised his discretion in regard to the citing of such other parties in interest upon whom he deems it necessary that the decree of probate when obtained should be conclusive, and having satisfied himself that the will is one of which the Surrogate of the county in which his application is made has jurisdiction will commence his proceeding by filing the petition; and it is good practice to file the will at the same time, it being required in New York County by Rule 4; whereupon the clerk of the Surrogate will prepare the citation and deliver copies thereof to the attorney for service. In the larger counties it is customary for the attorney to make the copies. The rules for the service of the citation have been carefully elaborated in ch. I, part II, ante, q. v., as well as the rules governing the return day.

In New York County, Rule 4 provides: "The will shall be filed with petition for probate, unless upon good cause shown by affidavit the Surrogate dispenses therewith, in which case it must be filed at least two days before the return day of the citation. In all cases a copy of the will must be filed with the petition."

The practice in cases where new parties necessary to the proceeding are discovered after the filing of the original petition, is not by amending the petition, but by filing a supplemental petition under which the additional party is cited.

This can be done even after the decree admitting the will to probate has been made (Matter of Odell, 1 Misc. 390), upon an application of course to open the decree and give the petitioner an opportunity of being heard in opposition.

The modern practice is liberal as to permitting amendments, seasonably applied for, to the petition. E. g., where petition erroneously states facts of residence. Matter of Rubens, 117 App. Div. 523.

In view of the fact that the service of citation has a twofold object, first, to advise the party interested of the proceeding, second, and equally important, to give the court jurisdiction of the persons served, it follows that where it is necessary to file a supplementary petition and issue a supplementary citation, it is unnecessary again to serve those already cited.

Upon the discovery of the existence of an additional necessary party the proceeding is suspended until he is brought in the manner already specified. In the Matter of Odell, 1 Misc. 390.

The practitioner should in the calculation of a return day, fix it at a time which will allow for the time of the service on the newly discovered person in interest. Should the return day as fixed by the service of the original citation be overlapped, it will be necessary to adjourn the original return day in order that all the parties may be represented upon one return day.

In the absence of infants, practitioners are reminded of the great value in shortening proceedings in the Surrogates' Courts, by the use of waivers and consents; these waivers and consents should be carefully drawn and should cover the precise point contemplated, in which case they are conclusive upon the parties signing them, and are most efficient in expediting proceedings in this court. See Code Civ. Proc., § 2528, as amended by ch. 570, Laws, 1896, as to proper execution of waivers.

§ 285. Parties in interest under will other than that propounded.— The provisions of the Code (Code Civ. Proc. § 2617) in which it is provided that a person "named as an executor, trustee, devisee or legatee in any other paper purporting to be a will of the decedent" may intervene as a party, has already been referred to in a preceding section. The object of this section is to consolidate proceedings relating to the probate of the last will and testament of any decedent.

The idea of the statute is to enable the Surrogate to determine in admitting a paper to probate that it is in fact the last will of the decedent. It becomes therefore most important that the person claiming under some paper other than the one propounded as a will should either produce the same, or offer satisfactory proof to the Surrogate that the other paper under which he claims was in existence when the decedent died, or that it had been previously lost, or, without his procurement, destroyed. Hamersley v. Lochman, 2 Dem. 524. See also Matter of Hamersley, 43 Hun, 639; S. C., 7 N. Y. St. Rep. 592.

§ 286. Return day.—It is necessary to summarize, in this connection, some of the rules already elaborated elsewhere as to the fixing of the return day. Section 2520 of the Code requires a citation to be served within the county of the Surrogate, or an adjoining county, at least eight days before the return day thereof; if in any other county, at least fifteen days before the return day. This is quite irrespective of the question whether the person served is a resident or nonresident. A nonresident, if he is served within the State, is brought within the Surrogate's jurisdiction. Matter of Washburn, 12 Misc. 242, 244, Silkman, Surr. Where the service is required to be by publication, in a case allowed under § 2522, the service must be completed as required by § 2525, at least thirty days before the return day, if within the United States, and forty days if without.

But this does not mean that the return day must be fixed at a time to allow such thirty or forty days' service, where there are necessary parties known to be nonresidents, or where a foreign corporation is intended to be served. If service can be secured upon them within the State, or admissions of the service duly acknowledged are filed, or a duly executed and acknowledged waiver of the issuance and service of the citation is filed, it is not compulsory that nonresidents be served by publication, or that the longer period be regarded in fixing the return day. Matter of Washburn, supra. See Matter of Porter, 22 N. Y. Supp. 1063. The Code merely requires that the citation be made returnable upon a day certain, designated therein, not more than four months after the date thereof. Code Civ. Proc. § 2518. The citation must be served within sixty days after it issues. § 2517, Code Civ. Proc.; In re Bradley, 70 Hun, 104. And it is customary for the Surrogate to fix the return day, taking into consideration the time in which service may be made. Merritt's Will, 5 Dem. 544, 545. But if petitioner shows by affidavit that although there are nonresident parties, service may be made upon them within the State, the Surrogate has power to fix any day within the limits, eight days and four months, which may suit his convenience and that of the proponent. Matter of Washburn, supra.

§ 287. The hearing.—The hearing is usually begun upon the return day, but may be had on any subsequent day which may on the return day be designated. This is not inconsistent with § 2618, which provides that "upon the return of the citation the Surrogate must cause the witnesses to be examined before him."

The proofs of service of the citation or the proper waivers must be filed on or before the return day. And in New York County Rule 4 requires that the probate clerk must have at least two days' notice in all probate cases where all parties in interest have waived the service of citation before the testimony of the subscribing witnesses will be taken.

§ 288. Special guardians in probate cases.—Infant parties must be represented by guardians ad litem. Where there is no application prior to the return day on behalf of such an infant party the Surrogate will appoint a special guardian to protect the interests of the infant. It is the practice to insert in citations to infants a clause advising them that in the event of their not appearing by general guardian and of their failure to ask for the appointment of a special guardian, such a special guardian will upon the return of the citation, be appointed by the Surrogate. Price v. Fenn, 3 Dem. 341, 345, Rollins, Surr. The Code regulates the power to appoint in § 2530, which is as follows:

> Where a party, who is an infant, does not appear by his general guardian; or where a party, who is a lunatic, idiot, or habitual drunkard, does not appear by his committee, the surrogate must appoint a competent and responsible person, to appear as special guardian for that party. Where an infant appears by his general guardian, or where a lunatic, idiot, or habitual drunkard, appears by his committee, the surrogate must inquire into the facts, and must, in like manner, appoint a special guardian, if there is any ground to suppose that the interest of the general guardian or committee is adverse to that of the infant, or incompetent person; or that, for any other reason, the interests of the latter require the appointment of a special guardian. A person cannot be appointed such a special guardian, unless his written consent is filed, at or before the time of entering the order appointing him. 2530, Code Civil Proc.

"Rule 10. No special guardian to represent the interests of an infant in any proceeding in said Surrogate's Court will be appointed on the nomination of a proponent or the accounting party, or his attorney, or upon the application of a person having an interest adverse to that of the infant. To authorize the appointment of a person as a special guardian on the application of an infant or otherwise in a proceeding in this court, or to entitle a general guardian of such infant to appear for him in such proceeding, it must appear that such person, or such general guardian, is competent to protect the rights of the infant, and that he has no interest adverse to that of the infant, and is not connected in business with the attorney or counsel of any party to the proceeding. Where the application for the appointment of a special guardian is made by another than the infant, or where the general guardian appears in behalf of the infant, it must appear that such applicant or general guardian has no interest adverse to that of the infant. No party to a proceeding will be appointed special guardian of any other party thereto. If such applicant or general guardian is entitled to share in the distribution of the estate or fund in which the infant is interested, the nature of the interest of such applicant or general guardian must be disclosed. The application for the appointment of a special guardian as well as the appearance filed by a general guardian of a minor must, in every instance, disclose the name and residence and relationship to the infant of the person with whom the infant is residing, whether or not he has a parent living, and if a parent is living, whether or not such parent has knowledge of and approves such application or appearance; and such knowledge and approval must be shown by the affidavit of such parent. If the infant has no parent living, like knowledge and approval of such application or appearance by the person with whom the infant resides must be shown in like manner. Where such application is made by an infant over the age of fourteen years, his petition must show and be accompanied by the affidavit of the parent (in case the latter has an interest adverse to that of the infant), showing, in addition to such knowledge aforesaid, that such parent has not influenced the infant in the choice of the guardian." Rule XII also applies, "Whenever an infant interested in any proceeding in said Surrogate's Court has a general guardian, no decree will be entered without appointing a special guardian to represent said infant's interest therein unless such general guardian shall file his appearance in writing, and his affidavit of no adverse interest, as required by Rule X, with the Clerk of said Surrogate's Court. See also special rules in each Surrogate's Court.

§ 289. Citation only need be served in probate cases in New York County.—It is unnecessary in the New York Surrogate's office to serve the petition or other papers on which the citation may be issued with the citation to attend the probate. Rule 3, N. Y. Surrogate's Court.

§ 290. The examination of witnesses.—The Code provides, by § 2618, that,

> Upon the return of the citation, the surrogate must cause the witnesses to be examined before him. The proofs must be reduced to writing. Before a written will is admitted to probate, two, at least, of the subscribing witnesses must be produced and examined, if so many are within the state, and competent and able to testify. Before a nuncupative will is admitted to probate, its execution and the tenor thereof must be proved by at least two witnesses. Any party, who contests the probate of the will, may, by a notice filed with the surrogate at any time before the proofs are closed, require the examination of all the subscribing witnesses to a written will, or of any other witness, whose testimony the surrogate is satisfied may be material; in which case, all such witnesses, who are within the state, and competent and able to testify, must be so examined. § 2618, Code Civil Proc.

The provision that the Surrogate must cause the witnesses to be examined before him does not debar him from devolving this duty upon the clerk of the court in uncontested cases, or where all the parties entitled to be cited are before the court. This right he has under § 2510, which provides:

> The clerk of the surrogate's court, and, in the county of Kings, two other clerks to be designated by the surrogate, in addition to the powers enumerated in section twenty-five hundred and nine, may exercise, concurrently with the surrogate of the county, the following powers of the surrogate: On the return of a citation issued from such surrogate's court on a petition for the probate of a will, where no objection to the same is filed; or, where all the persons entitled to be cited, sign and verify the petition, or personally, or by attorney, appear on the probate thereof, cause the witnesses to the will to be examined before him. Such examination must be reduced to writing, and for such purpose they are hereby authorized to administer and certify oaths and affirmations in such cases in the same manner and with the same effect as if administered and certified by the surrogate. § 2510, Code Civil Proc. See also ch. 510, L. 1900.

This power is exercised in proper cases in the county of New York by the probate clerk. The power was originally not given in all the counties of the State, but in 1894 § 2510 was amended by leaving out the words of special designation, and it is now applicable to the clerks of all Surrogates' Courts, and by the amendment of 1887 (ch. 701) to § 2546 of the Code, the Surrogate in New York County was given power to direct an assistant to take and report the testimony in probate cases. This power is valid. The assistant is known as the probate clerk. He has no authority to pass upon the issues involved. Section 2546.

The object of the amendment, which was prepared by Judge Rollins, was stated by Surrogate Ransom (Matter of Allemann, 1 Connoly, 441), to be to enable the Surrogate to take such material, competent and relevant evidence, and such only, as pertained to the issues before the court, and thus afford the Surrogate some aid in disposing of the great and constantly increasing volume of business with which the court was being overburdened.

Consequently, the words in § 2546, that the assistant is without authority to pass upon the issues, do not prevent him from passing upon objections to the admissibility of evidence. Matter of Allemann, page 443. Nor do the words, "on the written consent of all the parties appearing," refer to the designation of the assistant but only to the appointment of a referee. Ibid.

§ 291. What witnesses to be examined.—Two, at least, of the subscribing witnesses must be produced and examined, if so many are within the State and competent to testify. Section 2618.

They must be produced by the proponents, not in pursuance of any mandatory requirement of law, but because there can be no probate until they are produced and examined, and the Surrogate is satisfied of the genuineness of the will, and of the validity thereof. Section 2622. And, as will be seen later in the discussion of contested probates, the duty of producing witnesses other than subscribing witnesses under the notice allowed by § 2618, also rests upon proponents for the same reason, indicated by Surrogate Rollins, that the contestants could, by filing such a notice, and by satisfying the Surrogate of the materiality of the witnesses specified therein, effectually block probate until such witnesses were produced and examined. Hoyt v. Jackson, 2 Dem. 443, 455; Matter of McGovern, 5 Dem. 424, 426. If the proponent cannot produce the necessary subscribing witnesses he must satisfy the Surrogate of the sickness, death, absence from the State, lunacy, or other incompetency of such witness in the manner required by § 2619. For, in the absence of such explanatory proof, probate will be refused. Graber v. Haaz, 2 Dem. 216, Rollins, Surr.

§ 292. Incompetency of witness, how shown.—The provisions of § 2619 are as follows:

> The death, absence from the state, lunacy, or other incompetency of a witness, required to be examined, as prescribed in this or the last section, or proof that such witness cannot, after due diligence, be found within the state or elsewhere, must be shown by affidavit or other competent evidence, to the satisfaction of the Surrogate, before dispensing with his testimony. Where a witness, being within the state, is disabled from attending, by reason of age, sickness, or infirmity, his disability must be shown in like manner; and in that case, the testimony of the witness, where it is required, and he is able to testify, must be taken in the manner prescribed by law, and produced before the Surrogate, as part of the proofs. § 2619, Code Civil Proc.

§ 293. The examination.—It is not necessary that the Surrogate should make any order requiring the attendance of the subscribing witnesses. It is the proponent's duty to produce them. Matter of McGovern, 5 Dem. 424. But if such witnesses refuse to attend, the Surrogate has power to compel their attendance by subpœna, and to punish them for contempt in case of disregard of the subpœna when served. Section 2481. The requirement of § 2618 as to the producing of two witnesses is limited by the words "if so many are within the State." See Swenarton v. Hancock, 22 Hun, 38, construing similar provision before the Code, "if so many are living within this State." If they are, the testimony of neither can be dispensed with (Chapman v. Rodgers, 12 Hun, 342, 345) unless, it seems, by express waiver of all parties entitled to citation, being of full age (Id.), in which case the Surrogate would be bound to inquire more particularly into all the facts and circumstances in corroboration of the witness examined. And even though the subscribing witnesses are examined, there is no rule forbidding the introduction of other witnesses to the due execution of the will. Reeve v. Crosby, 3 Redf. 74, 77, citing Trustees of the Theological Seminary v. Calhoun, 25 N. Y. 422; Peebles v. Case, 2 Bradf. 226.

§ 294. Competent subscribing witnesses.—Section 2618 further limits the compulsory production of "two at least of the subscribing witnesses," by the words, "competent and able to testify." The courts have freely construed the word "competent." Thus, while an attorney is prohibited by §§ 835 and 836 of the Code from disclosing communications made by his client to him, or his advice thereon, unless the client waives his privilege, yet the Court of Appeals held in Matter of Coleman, 111 N. Y. 220, that the request to his attorney to sign as a subscribing witness was to be deemed a waiver of the statute, and Surrogate Ransom held (In re Lamb's Will, 18 N. Y. Supp. 173), that such waiver extended "to all communications and transactions had between the testator and his attorney having reference to the paper under consideration." (See post, p. 293, under Lost Will.) But § 836 of the Code was amended to meet the rule laid down by the Court of Appeals (see L. 1893, ch. 295), by providing that "nothing herein contained shall be construed to disqualify an attorney in the probate of a will heretofore executed or offered for probate or hereafter to be executed or offered for probate from becoming a witness, as to its preparation and execution in case the attorney is one of the subscribing witnesses thereto." § 836, Code Civ. Proc. See In re Gagan's Will, 20 N. Y. Supp. 426. This amendment was thus merely declarative of the law as it was stated to be in the Coleman case. But it was held (Matter of Sears, 33 Misc. 141), that unless an attorney who drew a will was such subscribing witness, he cannot testify to its execution by his client. See Matter of O'Neil, 26 N. Y. St. Rep. 242. And where he was not a witness, and seeks to testify to contents of a lost will the waiver as to execution does not extend to publication of contents, since they were not published, and his mouth is sealed, if objection be made. Matter of Cameron, 61 Misc. 546. "A person is not disqualified or excused, from testifying respecting the execution of a will, by a provision therein, whether it is beneficial to him or otherwise." Code Civ. Proc. § 2544. This section limits the testimony such a person is not disqualified from giving, to that relating to the execution of a will. Its terms clearly refer only to subscribing witnesses to a will (Matter of Eysaman, 113 N. Y. 62, 75), and was intended to make all such witnesses competent to testify in a Probate Court to the execution of the will, however their interest might arise. It was not intended, however, to operate as a repeal of § 829 (Cadmus v. Oakley, 3 Dem. 324, 328), prohibiting legatees or devisees from testifying concerning any personal transaction or communication between the witness and the decedent. Ruger, Ch. J., observed in Matter of Eysaman, supra: "The evidence authorized to be given by section 2544 refers to that given in Surrogates' Courts alone, and relates solely to the subject of the execution of the will," and he points out that the reason for exempting subscribing witnesses from the application of the general rule of exclusion, made by § 829, is obvious, as their testimony is made indispensable, if obtainable, to the probate of a will under §§ 2618 and 2619.

§ 295. Same subject.—While a legacy, devise, interest, or appointment of any real or personal estate made in a will to a person who is a subscribing witness thereto is void when the will cannot be proved without the testimony of such witness (2 R. S., ch. 6, title 1, § 50), such person is nevertheless a competent witness respecting the execution of the will and can be compelled to testify respecting its execution. Ibid.; Matter of Eysaman, 113 N. Y. 62, 76. So an executor who is a subscribing witness, is competent to prove the execution of the will. Levy's Will, 1 Tuck. 87; Children's Aid Society v. Loveridge, 70 N. Y. 387; McDonough v. Lough- lin, 20 Barb. 238; Rugg v. Rugg, 83 N. Y. 592. And the commissions to which he is entitled do not constitute such a beneficial interest as to disqualify him. Reeve v. Crosby, 3 Redf. 74. Where he is a legatee, but only to the extent of a sum specified to be by way of compensation for his services as executor, although in addition to his lawful commissions, the same is true. Pruyn v. Brinkerhoff, 57 Barb. 176.

§ 296. Dispensing with testimony of subscribing witness.—Section 2619 above quoted permits the dispensing with the testimony of a subscribing witness who is proved, to the satisfaction of the Surrogate, to be dead, absent from the State, a lunatic, or incompetent under some provision of the law to testify or who, it is proved, cannot after due diligence be found within the State or elsewhere.

But when such a witness's testimony has been dispensed with the will need not fail of probate for lack thereof. His testimony, when he is merely absent from the State, may, if it appears it can be done, be taken by commission. But in all other cases the will is established by the methods provided by § 2620, discussed in § 299 below.

Section 2538 of the Code makes applicable, in Surrogates' Courts, the provisions of §§ 887–913, which relate to taking depositions without the State for use within the State, as well as §§ 870–886 which relate to depositions taken and to be used within the State.

Where, therefore, a necessity arises for taking testimony in this way for use in the Surrogate's Court the practitioner will resort to the ordinary practice. Matter of Plumb, 64 Hun, 317. The rule as to "due diligence" is expressly emphasized in § 2620. Leslie v. Leslie, 15 Week. Dig. 56. The applicant must offer an affidavit showing the necessity for the commission. It may be made by the party, or by his attorney, or his agent. Eaton v. North, 7 Barb. 631; Ball v. Dey, 7 Wend. 513; Rule 24, Hun's Rules. The Surrogate has discretionary power to grant a stay pending the execution of the commission, which he may revoke, if it is not diligently proceeded with. Notice of the application must be given to the other parties to the proceeding. § 889, Code Civ. Proc. After hearing the parties, or upon the stipulation, if it issue on consent, the Surrogate will make an order which will contain directions as to interrogatories if they be required. Or he may allow an open commission, upon oral questions. § 893, Code Civ. Proc. The proposed interrogatories and cross-interrogatories may be settled by consent, or by the court upon notice. The commission issues under this order, and indorsed upon it are the directions for executing the same directed to be annexed by §§ 901 and 902, Code Civ. Proc. The commission must be made under the seal of the court. M. & H. O. Co. v. Pugsley, 19 Hun, 282. But this can be waived. Churchill v. Carter, 15 Hun, 385.

§ 297. Resident subscribing witness's testimony not to be dispensed with.—But when a subscribing witness is within the State but is, by reason of age, sickness, or infirmity, disabled from attending, such disability must be proven to the satisfaction of the Surrogate by affidavit or other competent evidence. Code Civ. Proc. § 2619. The testimony of such a witness where it is required, if he be able to testify, must be taken in the manner prescribed by law and produced before the Surrogate as part of the proofs. The manner of taking the testimony of such an aged, sick or infirm witness is expressly prescribed. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2539, 2540.

Upon proof by affidavit to the satisfaction of the Surrogate that the testimony of the witness is material and necessary, and that he is so aged, sick or infirm as to be unable to attend and is a resident of the county, the Surrogate must in a proceeding to probate a will proceed to the place where the witness is, and there, as in open court, take his examination. Provision is expressly made that such notice of the time and place of this examination must be given as the Surrogate may prescribe to any parties who have appeared in the proceeding, or to any party to whom the Surrogate in his discretion requires notice to be given.

§ 298. Same.—Where all these facts are shown to the satisfaction of the Surrogate with the exception that it appears that the subscribing witness to the will is in another county, it is provided that if the Surrogate has good reason to believe that the witness cannot attend before him within a reasonable time to which the hearing may be adjourned, he may make an order directing that the witness be examined before the Surrogate of the county in which he is. Such order must specify a day on or before which a certified copy thereof must be delivered to the Surrogate designated, and should direct to whom, and the manner in which, the notice of the examination is to be given. The Surrogate must then transmit a copy of this order, attested by the seal of his court, to the Surrogate whom he has designated, together with the original will.

The Surrogate designated, upon the day specified in the order, or upon an adjourned day designated in his own discretion, must take the examination of the witness as if he possessed original jurisdiction of the probate proceeding. The examination must be reduced to writing and subscribed by the witness or otherwise duly authenticated, and must be certified by the Surrogate taking the examination, together with a statement of the proceedings upon the execution of the order designated; and these papers, attested by the seal of the Surrogate who took the examination, must be returned without delay, and with the original will, to the original Surrogate, by whom all the papers must be filed.

> If all the subscribing witnesses to a written will are, or if a subscribing witness, whose testimony is required, is dead, or incompetent by reason of lunacy or otherwise, to testify, or unable to testify; or if such a subscribing witness is absent from the state; or if such a subscribing witness has forgotten the occurrence, or testifies against the execution of the will; the will may nevertheless be established, upon proof of the handwriting of the testator, and of the subscribing witnesses, and also of such other circumstances as would be sufficient to prove the will upon the trial of an action. Where a subscribing witness is absent from the state, upon application of either party, the surrogate shall cause the testimony of such witness to be taken by commission, when it is made to appear that by due diligence such testimony may be obtained. Where a written will is proved as prescribed in this section, it must be filed and remain in the surrogate's office. But where it shall be shown, by affidavit or otherwise, to the satisfaction of the Surrogate, that the decedent left real or personal property in another state or territory of the United States or in a foreign country, and that the laws of such state, territory or country require the production of the original will before provisions thereof become effective, the Surrogate may, at any time after probate, and upon such notice to the parties interested in the estate as he may think proper, cause any original will remaining on file in his office to be sent by post or otherwise to any court which, or to any officer of such state, territory or country who, under the laws thereof, is empowered to receive the same for probate, or may deliver such will to any person interested in the probate thereof in such state, territory or country, or to his representative, upon such terms as he shall think proper for the protection of other parties interested in the estate. Where in any matter before the surrogate or in a surrogate's court the testimony of any witness shall be taken by or on commission, the same, together with the commission on which it is taken, shall be duly filed in the office of the surrogate but need not be recorded. The testimony, or other proceeding duly taken to be used before the surrogate or surrogate's court, by a stenographer, shall be filed and need not be recorded. § 2620, Code Civil Proc. (As amended L. 1902, c. 114.)

Beckett, Surr., has recently decided an interesting case of this kind, of a will over forty years old, no attestation clause, two of the witnesses dead, and the third leaving the State in 1868 and reported dead. See Matter of Leaird, 58 Misc. 477.

This section is substantially an embodiment of the pre-existing statutes (Rolla v. Wright, 2 Dem. 482), but differs in one material respect. The former statute provided for the proof of the handwriting of a necessary subscribing witness who "should be shown to reside out of the State." Under this statute it was held that mere absence from the State of such a witness of a resident of the State would not authorize the Surrogate to admit such proof. Stow v. Stow, 1 Redf. 305. But the inconvenience of such a rule led to the enactment of the law as it now stands. Where the necessary witness is absent from the State and the Surrogate is satisfied that his testimony cannot with due diligence be taken by commission, he may dispense with his testimony, and take proof of his handwriting with that of testator under § 2620. In determining this question the Surrogate will construe "due diligence" not only in reference to the efforts of the proponent to ascertain the whereabouts of the witness, but also in regard to whether the proceedings will be unreasonably delayed. The Surrogate may permit resort to the proof allowed by this section where it is shown to his satisfaction that the absence of the witness from the State has been procured by persons interested in delaying or defeating the probate of the will. Matter of Dates, 12 N. Y. Supp. 205. In Matter of Briggs, 47 App. Div. 47, the subscribing witnesses to the will were dead. It was held that § 2620 gave the Surrogate the right to admit a will on less evidence than if both witnesses were living, by the words "of such other circumstances as would be sufficient to prove the will upon the trial of an action." The court says, at p. 50, "A will may be established upon the trial of an action by ordinary common-law evidence from which its execution may reasonably be inferred by the jury, although that evidence is given by but one witness," citing Harris v. Harris, 26 N. Y. 433; Jackson v. Vickory, 1 Wend. 406, 412. That is, the question will be whether, upon the whole evidence, the jury may fairly infer that the requirements of the statute have been complied with. Upton v. Bernstein, 27 N. Y. Supp. 1078. See also Matter of Foley, 55 Misc. 162. In the Briggs case the court held that declarations of the decedent as to the execution of the will, were competent in support of due execution, and afforded as strong an inference as to due execution as one derived from an attestation clause had there been one. In Matter of Law, 80 App. Div. 73, the court states the rule as to when an action under § 1861 is the only procedure to adopt.

§ 300. The proof required to establish uncontested will.—(See "Contested Probates" as to examination of witnesses in such cases.) Where there is no contest, the proof required to satisfy the Surrogate is to be addressed to two points,

(a) The genuineness of the will.

(b) The validity of its execution.

Section 2622 which prescribes this confers upon the Surrogate the power to require in his discretion further proof. It is as follows:

> Before admitting a will to probate, the surrogate must inquire particularly into all the facts and circumstances, and must be satisfied of the genuineness of the will, and the validity of its execution. Before admitting a written will to probate, the surrogate may, in his discretion, require proof of the circumstances attending the execution, the delivery, and the possession thereof, or any of them, to be made by the affidavit, or the testimony, at the hearing, of the person who received the will from the testator, if he can be produced, and, also, of the person presenting it for probate. § 2622, Code Civil Proc.

The genuineness of the will propounded is usually established by the identification of the instrument by the witnesses when identifying their signatures as witnesses. But § 2622 enables the Surrogate, where that means of satisfying him fails by reason of failure of memory or of vagueness of the proof, or where one or both witnesses are dead, to fix the genuineness of the instrument not only by proof of the handwriting of the testator and the witness or witnesses under § 2620, but by tracing it back through the proponent and the person who obtained the will from the testator, as, for example, the attorney who drew the will, who would be quite competent to testify to the fact that the will propounded is the will he drew and the testator signed. See Matter of Way, 6 Misc. 484. In Matter of Burbank, 104 App. Div. 312, the court lays down the rules as to proving the signature.

1. By having seen the party write.

2. By familiarity with authenticated signatures.

3. By comparison, by a qualified expert.

See also discussion in dissenting opinion by Hiscock, J., in Matter of Burtis, 107 App. Div. 57, 70. The proof necessary to satisfy the Surrogate as to the validity of the execution of the will must of course be addressed to the various requirements of execution under the statute and is discussed in full in the next chapter under contested probates.

§ 301. Proof of lost or destroyed will.

> A lost or destroyed will can be admitted to probate in a surrogate's court; but only in a case where a judgment establishing the will could be rendered by the supreme court, as prescribed in section 1865 of this act. § 2621, Code Civil Proc.

Section 1865 provides as follows:

> § 1865. Proof of lost will in certain cases.
> But the plaintiff is not entitled to a judgment, establishing a lost or destroyed will, as prescribed in this article, unless the will was in existence at the time of the testator's death or was fraudulently destroyed in his lifetime; and its provisions are clearly and distinctly proved by at least two credible witnesses, a correct copy or draft being equivalent to one witness.

The Surrogate's power to admit to probate a lost or destroyed will is purely statutory. Hatch v. Sigman, 1 Dem. 519. As are also the mode of procedure, the proof required and the restrictions imposed. Surrogate Spring summarized the rules governing such cases as follows (Hatch v. Sigman, supra, p. 521):

"First. Where a will, duly executed, has been lost or destroyed, by accident or design, before it was duly proved and recorded within this State, an action to establish it may be maintained. Code Civ. Proc. § 1861; Voorhees v. Voorhees, 39 N. Y. 463, affirming 50 Barb. 119.

"Second. Since the enactment of the Code of Civil Procedure, proceedings to establish lost or destroyed wills can be entertained in a Surrogate's Court. Code, § 2621.

"Third. Petitioner is not entitled to a decree establishing such will, unless 1st, the will was in existence at testator's death, or 2d, was fraudulently destroyed in his lifetime; and, in either case, its provisions must be clearly and distinctly proved by at least two credible witnesses, a correct copy or draft being equivalent to one witness. Code, § 1865; Kerry v. Dimon, 37 N. Y. Supp. 92.

"Fourth. The power of a court to admit to probate a lost or destroyed will exists only in the cases I have mentioned. Timon v. Claffy, 45 Barb. 438, 446; Harris v. Harris, 36 Barb. 88, 97.

In entertaining applications then under § 2621 to establish alleged lost or destroyed wills, Surrogates must not relax the rules by which they are governed in admitting wills that are actually producible before them. See Matter of Reiffeld, 36 Misc. 472. But, on the contrary, they will require unmistakable evidence of the existence of a properly executed will (Matter of Purdy, 46 App. Div. 33), and "clear and distinct" proof of its provisions. See Sheridan v. Houghton, 6 Abb. N. C. 234; McNally v. Brown, 5 Redf. 372. It is not necessary that the witnesses should remember the exact language used by the testator; but they must be able to testify at least to the substance of the whole will, so that it can be incorporated in the decree, should the will be admitted to probate. In Matter of Purdy, supra, probate was denied because there was no evidence that the signature was made in the presence of both witnesses, or that decedent acknowledged his signature, nor was there sufficient proof of the will's contents under § 1865.

Mere proof of the existence of the will is not alone sufficient. It must be shown to have been lost, or fraudulently destroyed. If a will cannot be found which is known to have existed, the only presumption is that it was destroyed by the testator animo revocandi. Matter of Kennedy, 167 N.Y. 163, aff'g 53 App. Div. 105, and 30 Misc. 1; Matter of Nichols, 40 Hun, 387, 389, citing Idley v. Bowen, 11 Wend. 227; Holland v. Ferris, 2 Bradf. 334; Hatch v. Sigman, 1 Dem. 519, 530, citing Betts v. Jackson, 6 Wend. 173; Bulkley v. Redmond, 2 Bradf. 281; Schultz v. Schultz, 35 N. Y. 653; Hard v. Ashley, 88 Hun, 103. See also Collyer v. Collyer, 110 N. Y. 481, 486; Knapp v. Knapp, 10 N. Y. 276. This presumption may be overcome by proof of the deposit of the will after execution with a custodian and that the testator had thereafter no access to it. In the Kennedy case, supra, it was held that it was incompetent to prove the existence of the will by declarations of the decedent (see opinion, reviewing cases). This is not at variance with Matter of Cosgrove, 31 Misc. 422. In that case there was evidence by disinterested witnesses that the will was, upon execution, handed to the executor named in it, and there was no evidence that it ever returned into the possession of testatrix. A week before her death it was proved she spoke of the will as in such executor's possession, and as satisfactory to her. Thomas, Surr., held that such declarations were competent to rebut any inference of revocation arising from the loss of the will, occurring while the executor had it, citing Betts v. Jackson, 6 Wend. 173, 187, 188; Matter of Marsh, 45 Hun, 107. But the proof as to its loss or destruction must be such as to counteract the presumption of lawful intent to revoke, if it occurred before the alleged testator's decease. In other words, "He who seeks to establish a lost or destroyed will assumes the burden of overcoming this presumption by adequate proof." Collyer v. Collyer, 110 N. Y. 481, 486. So if the evidence is conflicting and unsatisfactory, particularly as to its contents, the application must fail. But the rule is liberal to this extent, that if the witnesses recollect the substantial disposition of the property, and the names of the beneficiaries, the Surrogate is justified in decreeing it as proved.

So Surrogate Livingston held that § 1865 should receive a liberal construction, and the words "its provisions" must be "clearly and distinctly proved," should be deemed to refer to the disposing provisions of the will, and not necessarily to the appointment of an executor. Early v. Early, 5 Redf. 375, 386. See Matter of Purdy, 46 App. Div. 33. But where no two witnesses prove all the provisions, or prove any of them with sufficient clearness to enable the court to more than surmise the nature of the will, probate must be denied. McNally v. Brown, 5 Redf. 372. It will not suffice to prove one provision by two or more witnesses, and another provision in the same way by others, but each of the witnesses must be able to testify to all the disposing parts of the will. Collyer v. Collyer, 4 Dem. 53; Matter of Ruser, 6 Dem. 31, 33.

Declarations of the testator as to its contents are not admissible (id.). So where the lawyer who drew the alleged lost will testified that "it either gave the whole estate to the wife absolutely, or it gave it to her for life with the remainder to the children," Surrogate Coffin observed that this testimony "lacks the elements of clearness and distinctness which the statute exacts." Matter of Ruser, supra. See Grant v. Grant, 1 Sand. Ch. 235. See discussion by Beekman, J., of credible evidence in such a case. Kahn v. Hoes, 14 Misc. 63.

§ 302. Existence of will at testator's death.—The Court of Appeals has held, that where a will has been lost or destroyed, under circumstances showing that it was not done with the knowledge or consent of the testator, it may be established as his will whether the loss or destruction took place before or after his decease. Schultz v. Schultz, 35 N. Y. 653. Section 1865 prescribes that such a will cannot be established "unless the will was in existence at the time of the testator's death, or was fraudulently destroyed in his lifetime." This, therefore, limits the case of fraudulent destruction as a ground for nonproduction of the will offered for probate to that taking place in testator's lifetime. It must also be a fraud as to the testator. Matter of De Groot, 9 N. Y. Supp. 471. A destruction without his knowledge or consent and in disregard of his intention, is such a fraud. Early v. Early, 5 Redf. 376. But mere proof of opportunity to destroy, or motive to destroy, is not enough to satisfy the statute, though it may have evidential weight in connection with other evidence. The burden of proof, of "clear and distinct" proof, is on the person claiming under the alleged will. Collyer v. Collyer, 110 N. Y. 481, 486; Betts v. Jackson, 6 Wend. 173; Knapp v. Knapp, 10 N. Y. 276.

§ 303. Due execution must be proved.—The Surrogate must require satisfactory proof that the will was executed as required by our statutes. In this regard there is no distinction between a lost will and one actually laid before the court, excepting that the court and the witnesses are deprived of the substantial aid to memory given by the sight of the will and of the recitals of an attestation clause. See Early v. Early, 5 Redf. 376, and cases discussed. Surrogate Rollins (Matter of Paine, 6 Dem. 361) outlined the issues to be determined in a given case, substantially as follows:

1. Did the decedent, on a given day, execute, in compliance with the requirements of law, a written instrument as and for his last will and testament?

2. If he did so execute such instrument, did he, at the time of such execution, possess the testamentary capacity requisite for making a valid will?

3. If he did so execute such instrument, was he induced so to do by undue influence or fraud?

4. If not, have the provisions of such instrument been clearly and distinctly proved, as required by § 1865 of the Code of Civil Procedure?

5. If such instrument was so executed, was it in existence at the time of the decedent's death?

6. If such instrument so executed was not in existence at the time of this decedent's death, had it been fraudulently destroyed in his lifetime?

The statement of these issues indicates in general terms the issues the proponent of a lost will or destroyed will must undertake to meet, and all of which he must meet by affirmative evidence. Counsel cannot stipulate the contents of a will, although it is proved that there was a will, and that it was duly executed. Matter of Ruser, 6 Dem. 31.

In this case the draughtsman of the will, an attorney, was doubtful whether the testator gave his estate to his wife absolutely or for life. Counsel for all parties entered into a stipulation that the testator left his estate to his widow for her life with a remainder to his children. Surrogate Coffin very properly held that the statute contemplated no such royal road to probate and refused to give force to the stipulation. Section 835 of the Code does not, in such a case, render the draughtsman of the will, an attorney, incompetent to testify as to what took place at the time of execution. Matter of Barnes, 70 App. Div. 525, 528, citing Hurlburt v. Hurlburt, 128 N. Y. 424; Rosseau v. Bleau, 131 N. Y. 183; Matter of Chase, 41 Hun, 204; Sheridan v. Houghton, 16 Hun, 628, aff'd 84 N. Y. 643; Hebbard v. Haughian, 70 N. Y. 55. But in this case the incompetency (discussed ante, at § 294) was shown to have been waived by the testator at time of execution.

In Matter of Eldred, 109 App. Div. 777, the will involved was holographic. There was no attestation clause. The witnesses testified somewhat unsatisfactorily. But the probate was sustained. See opinion at p. 780. In Matter of Halstead, 51 Misc. 542, the Surrogate found the will had been in existence; he found its contents and that it had been destroyed after decedent's death. But as both the witnesses were dead and there was no proof of their handwriting he refused probate.

§ 304. Proof of codicil to or revocation of alleged lost or destroyed will.—In case, upon an application to prove a lost or destroyed will, one opposing its probate sets up an alleged codicil or a revoking clause in a later but also lost will, the question becomes material whether this codicil or later will and its execution and contents must be established in the same way and under the same rules required in order to the admission of the will sought to be probated.

Surrogate Rollins intimates that it is not necessary, but that "any legal evidence which satisfies the Surrogate of the existence of a will executed subsequently to the one offered for probate is sufficient also to justify the denial of probate to the earlier paper." And he held (Colligan v. McKernan, 2 Dem. 421, 425), that it was not, accordingly, necessary that two witnesses should testify as to the contents of the later instrument, nor was it necessary to show that such instrument was in existence at the time of the testator's death, nor that, if not then in existence, it had been fraudulently destroyed in his lifetime. He bases this decision upon the decision of the Court of Appeals in Harris v. Harris, 26 N. Y. 433, which held that the statutory provision respecting the mode of establishing lost wills related only to the special proceeding pointed out by the statute and did not abolish the common-law rule of evidence, which allowed the proof of a lost will by a single credible witness. See Jackson v. Le Grange, 19 Johns. 386; Dan v. Brown, 4 Cow. 483; Jackson v. Betts, 6 Cow. 377; Chapman v. Rodgers, 12 Hun, 342, 347; Fetherly v. Waggoner, 11 Wend. 599. The learned Surrogate accordingly declared he would admit parol evidence of the execution of a later will as well as of the fact that it contained a revoking clause. See Collyer v. Collyer, 4 Dem. 53, at page 59.

In Matter of Meyers, 28 Misc. 359, a lost will was proved to contain a clause revoking an earlier will. The latter was accordingly denied probate.

§ 305. Nuncupative wills.—A nuncupative will (so termed a nuncupando, that is, from naming an executor by word of mouth) is a verbal testamentary declaration or disposition.

By the common law, it was as valid in respect to personal estate as a written testament. A will could not only be made by word of mouth, but the most solemn instrument in writing might be revoked orally.

In a rude and uncultivated age, to have required a written will would have been a great hardship, but with the growth and progress of letters, the reason for permitting a verbal testament diminished in force, until finally an effort to establish such a will by means of gross fraud and perjury, gave rise to the Statute of 29 Charles II in 1676, termed the Statute of Frauds. Ex parte Thompson, 4 Bradf. 154, 155, citing Cole v. Mordaunt, 4 Vesey, 196.

Originally nuncupative wills were valid, although not made in sickness. In the reign of Henry VIII (Perkins, 476), they were defined as properly made when the testator "lieth languishing for fear of sudden death, dareth not to stay the writing of his testament, and therefore he prayeth his curate and others, his neighbors, to bear witness to his last will and declareth by word of mouth, his last will."

In a treatise published in the time of King James I (Swinbourne, page 32), it is said that this kind of testament is only made when the testator "is now very sick, weak and beyond all hope of recovery."

It has now, therefore, become the doctrine that the nuncupative will is only to be tolerated when made in extremis. See Prince v. Hazelton, 20 Johnson, 501, 511, reviewing history of this subject, and citing 7 Bac. Abr. by Gwillim, 305; 6 Wood on Conveyances, 574. See also 2 Blackstone's Com. 500, 501, where the learned author says, referring to the Statute of Frauds, "thus has the legislature provided against any frauds in setting up nuncupative wills by so numerous a train of requisites that the thing itself has fallen into disuse, but in the only instance where favor ought to be shown to it, when the testator is surprised by sudden and violent sickness." See also cases of Philips v. The Parish of St. Clements Danes, 1 Eq. Cas. Abr. 404, Pl. 27, and Hedges v. Hedges, Prec. in Ch. 269; Gilb. Eq. Rep. 12. The rule contemplates cases where a man lies in extremis or being surprised by sickness or not having an opportunity of making his will, or lest he die before he could make it, gives away his personal property with his own hand, if he dies, it operates as a legacy, if he recovers, the property reverts to him.

At present the Revised Statutes cover the question of nuncupative wills (see § 16, Decedent Estate Law), providing that no nuncupative or unwritten will bequeathing personal estate shall be valid unless made by a soldier while in actual military service, or by a mariner while at sea. See discussion in Ex parte Thompson, 4 Bradf. 154, 156, containing extracts from the preface of the life of L. Jenkins, reviewing the testator's privilege in the Roman Army, and its influence among civil nations.

Before the limitation of the rights of nuncupation to soldiers and sailors, it was essential that the will should be made in the last sickness. Prince v. Hazelton, and Ex parte Thompson, above cited. The only other inquiry which need now be made is whether the nuncupation was made by a person entitled to that privilege, so that the evidence necessary to be adduced is first on the question whether the testator properly falls within the class.

In the case already cited (Ex parte Thompson) the decedent was a cook on board a steamship, and not what is ordinarily understood as a mariner, but the court held that as the term "soldier" embraces every grade from the private to the highest officer (see cases cited) so the term "mariner" under the principle upon which the privilege of nuncupation is conceded must be applied "to all persons engaged in the marine service, whatever may be their special duty, or occupation in the vessel." See cases cited. All the court can demand is to be satisfied by sufficient evidence as to the description of the last testamentary request or declaration of the decedent; this being done, a decree for probate is made, into which the testamentary disposition is incorporated as a recital, and letters must issue.

Of course "sufficient evidence" must include proof of the testamentary capacity of decedent, and proof that the declaration of the decedent was intended to be testamentary, and of course the establishing of the will may be defeated by proof of improper or undue influence exercised upon the nuncupator in extremis.

The opinion of Judge Woodworth in Prince v. Hazleton, above cited, is most exhaustive as to the sufficiency of evidence establishing a nuncupative will. It must be noted that the phraseology "soldier in actual military service," is unambiguous; it is not enough to be a soldier or sailor, but there must be actual service, as under the rules prescribed by Julius Cæsar,

"amid the perils of warfare, the forms prescribed by law for the execution of a will were that the soldier might declare his last wishes by word of mouth." Ex parte Thompson, above cited.

From what has been said, it is clear what the necessary allegations in the petition propounding a nuncupative will must be. First, the petition should contain the allegations establishing the jurisdiction of the Surrogate to probate the will. See § 275. Then must follow description of the decedent as a mariner or soldier engaged in actual military operations (see Hubbard v. Hubbard, 8 N. Y. 196, and cases cited) and allegations sufficient to show that he was actually at sea, as a mariner, or in active military service. It is to be remembered that the courts have liberally construed the term "mariner" and "soldier," holding the terms to include the whole army, naval and merchant marine service. In the case of a mariner, it must appear that he was really at sea. The term "at sea" in this connection is held to mean the open sea, where the tide ebbs and flows. See Hubbard v. Hubbard, supra, and see Matter of Wm. Gwin, 1 Tucker, 44, 45, citing Gilpin's R. 526; The Thomas Jefferson, 10 Wheaton, 428; Steamboat Orleans v. Phœbus, 11 Peters, 175; Earl of Easton v. Seymour, 2 Curteis, 339; 3 Curteis, 530, where a commander in chief of naval forces of Jamaica, lived on shore at his official residence and that of his family, and died there, it was held that he was not at sea. See also Goods of Lay, 2 Curteis, 375, where a seaman lying in the port of Buenos Ayres, had leave to go ashore, was injured and died; he was held by the English court to have been at sea and his nuncupative will made in extremis was admitted; but this was in a case where the decedent belonged to a seagoing ship, and was upon a sea voyage. While the policy of the courts is to liberally construe the definition of mariner, at sea, or soldier in active service, yet from the very nature of the personal privileges granted to this class in making testamentary disposition of personal property, the courts will not enlarge the limit laid down by the statute within which such wills may be maintained so that the practitioner propounding such a will must be careful to affirmatively establish every necessary jurisdictional and evidential fact.

§ 306. The probate decree.—In case the will propounded for probate is not opposed, and no objections are filed, and notice served pursuant to § 2617, the petition with the proofs attached may be marked for decree, and the decree admitting the will to probate and directing that letters testamentary issue to the executors named therein will be made pursuant to § 2623. This section will be discussed later on, following the chapter on contested probates.

CHAPTER IV

CONTESTED PROBATES

§ 307. The manner of beginning contest.—Every Surrogate's Court has the power to prescribe special rules as to the manner in which contestants must proceed in opposing the probate of a will. These rules must be observed so long as they are not inconsistent with the provisions of the Code or of any other statute. Reference should be had to the local rules in all cases.

In the Surrogate's Court of the county of New York this procedure is defined by Rule 4, which is as follows:

"A party seeking to contest the probate of a last will and testament must file a written appearance with the clerk of this court together with a written and verified answer, containing a concise statement of the grounds of his objection to such probate, and any facts he may allege tending to establish a want of jurisdiction of the court to hear such probate. In case such jurisdiction shall be denied or the right of any objecting party to appear and contest shall be questioned, the court will first hear and pass upon the question of jurisdiction, or the status of the contestant, unless, for the convenience of the parties or the court, it shall be ordered otherwise. When a contestant files with the Surrogate the notice provided for by § 2618 of the Code of Civil Procedure, requiring the examination of all the subscribing witnesses to a will, or any other material witness, he must present with such notice an affidavit showing the materiality of the testimony of the witnesses or witness sought to be examined, and an order requiring the production by the proponent of such witnesses or witness. A copy of such order, if the same shall be signed, must be immediately served upon the proponent or his attorney.

"In all cases of contests in probate proceedings, the proponents shall, within five days after objections to the probate are filed, present a verified petition for and procure and enter an order directing notice of the time and place of hearing of such objections to be given, and prescribing the manner of giving such notice, to all persons in being who would take any interest in any property under the provisions of the will, and to the executor or executors, trustee or trustees, named therein, if any, who have not appeared in the proceeding, as required by § 2617 of the Code, and such petition shall contain the names and addresses of such parties, and state whether any, and which of them, are infants or of unsound mind. In case the proponents shall not present such petition and enter such order within the time aforesaid, such petition may be presented and order entered by or on behalf of any party or parties interested in the estate.

"Proofs of service of such notices must be filed with the probate clerk at least four days before the date named therein for such hearing.

"In probate proceedings, when all parties in interest have waived the service of citation, notice of at least two days must be given to the probate clerk before the testimony of the subscribing witnesses will be taken.

"The will shall be filed with petition for probate, unless upon good cause shown by affidavit the Surrogate dispenses therewith, in which case it must be filed at least two days before the return day of the citation.

"In all cases a copy of the will must be filed with the petition."

The provision of Rule 4 of the New York Surrogate's Court as to filing a written and verified answer by the one who is to contest defines what is good practice in all the Surrogate's Courts, under the provisions of § 2533, which permits any Surrogate to require a party to file a written petition or answer containing a plain and concise statement of the facts constituting his claim, objection or defense with a demand of the decree, order or other relief to which he supposes himself to be entitled. Where such a rule obtains or where such an answer is directed to be filed the fundamental rules of pleading are applicable to it as to its form. However, it is undoubtedly the fact that Surrogates do not always require such strictness in regard to pleadings in their courts and it is customary to allow considerable latitude by way of amendment, if upon the hearing it shall appear necessary to protect the rights of the party.

But careless "answers" may impair the remedy desired. See Matter of Garner, 59 Misc. 116. The following may serve as a precedent for the answer in a contested will case:

Answer in contested will case.
Erase inappropriate allegations.

Surrogate's Court,
County of New York.

In the Matter of Proving the alleged Last Will and Testament of
S. P., Deceased.

The answer of an infant and one of the heirs-at-law and next of kin of the above named decedent, by his Special Guardian, respectfully shows to the Court, on information and belief:

I. That the paper writing bearing date the 8th day of May, 1909, and purporting to have been executed on that day, is not the last Will and Testament of said decedent.

II. That the said alleged will was not duly executed by the said S. P., deceased; that he did not publish the same as his Will in the presence of the witnesses whose names are subscribed thereto; that he did not request the said two witnesses to be witnesses thereto, and that the said alleged witnesses did not sign as witnesses in his presence or in the presence of each other.

III. That on said day of 19 the said decedent, S. P., was not of sound mind or memory, or mentally capable of making a will.

IV. That the said paper writing was not freely or voluntarily made or executed by the said S. P., as his last Will and Testament, but that the said paper writing purporting to be his Will was obtained, and the subscription and publication thereof, if it was in fact subscribed or published by him, were procured by fraud and undue influence practiced upon the decedent by one (the principal legatee and devisee named in said paper), or of some other person or persons acting in concert or privity with him, whose name or names are at present unknown to this contestant.

V. That the paper propounded for probate herein is invalid as a last Will and Testament, and is illegal and void in respect to (the residuum thereby bequeathed).

Wherefore the above named infant by his Special Guardian, contestant, prays that this proceeding may be dismissed with costs.

Signature,
Special Guardian for infant,
address.

(Verification.)

§ 308. Fixing the time of hearing.—In the absence of such a rule as Rule 4 in New York County, a similar procedure is proper under § 2617, whereunder any person, "whether cited or not cited, who is named as a devisee or legatee in the will propounded, or as executor, trustee, devisee, or legatee in any other paper purporting to be a will of the decedent, or who is otherwise interested in sustaining or defeating the will, may appear, and, at his election support or oppose the application." In 1894, § 2617 was amended by adding the following clause:

> And in case the will propounded for probate is opposed, due and timely notice of the hearing of the objections to the will shall be given, in such manner as the surrogate shall direct, to all persons in being, who would take any interest in any property under the provisions of the will, and to the executor or executors, trustee or trustees named therein, if any, who have not appeared in the proceeding, and any decree in the proceeding shall not affect the right or interest of any such person unless he shall be so notified.

Where the citation of a legatee is not requisite to jurisdiction the will cannot be attacked collaterally for failure to cite him. Matter of Wohlgemuth, 110 App. Div. 644.

When it appears to the satisfaction of the Surrogate, or in the county of New York to the probate clerk, that all the necessary parties or the parties contemplated by this section have been cited, or served with notice of hearing of the objections, or have filed duly executed and acknowledged waivers of the issuance and service of citation, or have voluntarily appeared in the proceeding, a day is set for the hearing which thereupon proceeds before the Surrogate.

It will be recalled that the Surrogate's power to appoint referees is limited by § 2546 to proceedings other than one instituted for the probate or revocation of probate of a will, except in the case of the Surrogates of the county of New York, who may under written consent of all the parties appearing in a probate case appoint a referee to take and report the testimony (but without authority to pass upon the issues involved therein) or such Surrogates may in their discretion direct an assistant to take and report the testimony, with a similar limitation. See § 2546 of the Code. See also Laws of 1885, ch. 367, as to the power of clerk in Kings County Surrogate's Court to examine witnesses.

It has been held that the assistant appointed by the Surrogate of New York County, who is known as the probate clerk, in such cases may rule upon the admissibility of the evidence which may be offered. Matter of Alleman, 1 Connoly, 441.

§ 309. Surrogate's control of the proceeding—Writ of prohibition.—In the Rice will case, reported as People ex rel. Patrick v. Fitzgerald, 73 App. Div. 339, it was sought, by writ of prohibition, to prevent the probate of one will, and the rejection of probate of a later will, the witnesses to which were under indictment. The Appellate Division laid down the following legal propositions: (See headnote.)

"A writ of prohibition lies only where there is a want of jurisdiction or where the court, judge or other tribunal is proceeding in excess of the jurisdiction conferred. See cases cited.

"Authorities regarding it as applicable to prohibit proceedings 'contrary to the general law of the land' refer to proceedings without permitting a party to be heard, and this means no more than excess of jurisdiction.

"Errors of law or procedure must be corrected by appeal, and a writ of prohibition is not designed to regulate admission or rejection of evidence or the proceedings of an inferior court having jurisdiction.

"The right to an adjournment rests in discretion, reviewable only by direct appeal, and the question of an adjournment of civil proceedings, arising out of the same facts as pending criminal proceedings, until the determination of the criminal proceedings, is not a matter of strict legal right, reviewable by prohibition, but involves the exercise of discretion, reviewable only by direct appeal.

"A Surrogate has jurisdiction to decide whether to dismiss probate proceedings for want of proof, or to continue the proceedings to permit the presentation of further evidence, and his dismissal for want of proof would not be a dismissal upon the merits.

"A claim of privilege against self-incrimination, advanced by subscribing witnesses to a will under indictment, as an excuse for not testifying to the execution of the will, may properly be sustained. See cases cited.

"A decision on appeal in prohibition proceedings is not to be construed as an approval of rulings in the inferior court on evidence, practice, procedure and discretion, such as are reviewable on direct appeal.

"Where a court refuses to grant an absolute writ, upon return to an alternative writ of prohibition, a stay pending appeal from the final order refusing the absolute writ is unauthorized."

§ 310. The hearing—Examination of witnesses—Section 2618 has been already quoted in discussing how proof of a will must be taken which is not contested. All that has been said in that connection is applicable here so far as the proponent's case is concerned. It is his duty to establish the will prima facie, proving its due execution and the mental capacity of the testator; the burden of establishing both is of course upon such proponent. Delafield v. Parish, 25 N. Y. 9; Rollwagen v. Rollwagen, 63 N. Y. 504; Miller v. White, 5 Redf. 320; Legg v. Meyer, 5 Redf. 320. It is true that there is a legal presumption that every man is compos mentis (Delafield v. Parish, 25 N. Y. 9, 97), and that the burden of proving a decedent's unsoundness of mind is upon him who asserts the existence of that unnatural condition. Delafield v. Parish, supra. But there is a distinction, which has been clearly drawn by the Supreme Court (Harper v. Harper, 1 T. & C. 355), in the following words:

"It is the established rule of this State that the legal presumption to begin with is, that every man is compos mentis and the burden of proof that he is non compos mentis rests on the party who alleges that unnatural condition of mind existing in the testator. But it is also the rule that in the first instance the party propounding the will must prove the mental capacity of the testator."

The practice is for the proponent to prove the formal execution of the will and to show prima facie by the attesting witness the decedent's age, mental competency, and freedom from restraint; the contestant then offers his evidence in support of his objections and the proponent in reply may offer rebutting evidence or strengthen his prima facie case as to the allegations which he is bound to maintain. It is one thing to say, that the burden of proving unsoundness of mind, that is, lack of testamentary capacity, is on the contestant; and quite another thing to say, that the proponent need not make out a prima facie case of mental capacity in the first instance. Matter of Schreiber, 112 App. Div. 495. This is manifest from the provisions of § 2623 which requires the proponent to satisfy the Surrogate that the testator was in all respects competent to make a will and not under restraint. Consequently, if the proponent addresses his proof only to the question of execution and rests his case without showing affirmatively that the testator was of unsound mind and free from restraint, a sufficient case will not have been made out for admitting the will to probate. See Ramsdell v. Viele, 6 Dem. 244, citing Delafield v. Parish, 25 N. Y. 9, 34; Kingsley v. Blanchard, 66 Barb. 317, 322; Miller v. White, 5 Redf. 320; Cooper v. Benedict, 3 Dem. 136; Matter of Freeman, 46 Hun, 467. The Court of Appeals (Matter of Will of Cottrell, 95 N. Y. 329, 336), says by Ruger, Ch. J.:

"The determination of the question of fact involved in the inquiry . . . . is governed by the same rules which control the trial of other issues of fact. The proponent has the affirmative of the issue, and if he fails to convince the trial court by satisfactory evidence that each and every condition required to make a good execution of a will has been complied with, he will necessarily fail in establishing such will." In spite, therefore, of the elasticity of procedure occasionally obtaining in Surrogates' Courts the best practice is for the proponent to try a contested will case as strictly as he would any litigated action in the Supreme Court.

§ 311. Issues.—The character of the issues to be raised and tried on contested probate are readily inferred from the language of §§ 2622 and 2623 of the Code, which are as follows:

> Before admitting a will to probate the surrogate must inquire particularly into the facts and circumstances and must be satisfied of the genuineness of the will, and the validity of its execution. Before admitting a written will to probate, the surrogate may in his discretion require proof of the circumstances attending the execution, the delivery and the possession thereof, or any of them, to be made by the affidavit or testimony at the hearing of the person who received the will from the testator, if he can be produced, and also of the person presenting it for probate. § 2622, Code Civil Proc.

This section replaces the old Statute which provided that the Surrogate should be satisfied with the genuineness and validity of the will. The words now are "validity of its execution." See Matter of Davis, 182 N. Y. 468. See post, "Determining validity of Will."

> If it appears to the surrogate that the will was duly executed and that the testator at the time of executing it was in all respects competent to make a will and not under restraint, it must be admitted to probate as a will valid to pass real property or personal property, or both, as the surrogate determines, and the petition and citation require, and must be recorded accordingly. The decree admitting it to probate must state whether the probate was or was not contested. § 2623, Code Civil Proc.

The witnesses may forget, or may differ or may swear falsely. But the Surrogate is merely to be satisfied of the facts requisite in order to probate. Matter of Eldred, 109 App. Div. 777. If as to any requisite fact he is not satisfied he must deny probate. Matter of Eckler, 47 Misc. 320; Matter of Choate, 110 App. Div. 874.

§ 312. Order for production of witnesses.—With regard to the form of procedure in a contested will case it is proper to know before proceeding to discuss the cases under the various grounds of contest, that it is competent for the Surrogate upon proper application by a contestant at any time before the proofs are closed, to require under § 2618, "the examination of all the subscribing witnesses of a written will or of any other witness whose testimony the Surrogate is satisfied may be material; in which case, all such witnesses, who are within the State, and competent and able to testify, must be examined." The hearing may also be adjourned if necessary for the issuance of a commission or for the designation of a Surrogate in an adjoining county or for the execution of such other order in the premises as the Surrogate may be empowered to make. See § 2619, and § 2620 discussed in ch. III, ante,

Surrogate's Court,
New York County.

Petition under § 2618, C. C. P.

In the Matter of Proving the Last Will and Testament of Deceased.

State of New York, County of New York, } ss.:

Note. Contestant may be an adult and if so, state the fact.

Note. being duly sworn, deposes and says: that he is an attorney and counsellor at law having offices at No. Street in the City of New York; that on the day of 190 he was appointed Special Guardian for an infant over the age of fourteen (14) years, who is interested in the estate of the above named decedent, having been adjudged to be a necessary party thereto by an order of this Court dated the day of 190 by which order he was made a party to these proceedings; that as such Special Guardian deponent believes it to be his duty to contest the paper propounded as the last Will and Testament of deceased, and has accordingly filed objections on behalf of said infant to the probate of said Will.

That deponent has for some time been investigating this case, and has caused to be investigated the rights of his said ward, and he has made and caused to be made an examination relative to the probable testimony and evidence to be adduced upon said contested probate, and deponent is informed and verily believes that the testimony of the following witnesses will be or may be material upon the said contest for the following reasons:

Here state who witnesses are, and the facts rendering their testimony material.

On information and belief, is the proponent of the propounded paper, the petitioner herein, and is made legatee and devisee for life of the entire estate, except a few small legacies; that he had for years resided with the decedent prior to his death, during which time it was difficult to gain access to said decedent save in the said 's presence. Moreover, he is the person, who, it is alleged in the objections filed, obtained and procured the said will by the exercise of undue influence. On information and belief that the said decedent residing with said proponent for many years prior to his death, was broken in health for many years prior to the execution of said will, and was mentally incapable at the time of making an independent, voluntary, uninfluenced last will and testament.

On information and belief, that is a practicing physician and attended the decedent prior to his death and signed his certificate and record of death which is on file in the records of the Health Department in the City of New York.

That Jane Doe and Mary Roe, as deponent is informed and verily believes, were in attendance upon the said decedent at or about the time the said propounded paper purports to have been executed, and their real names are unknown to this deponent, but are known to the said proponent, in whose employ they were, as deponent is informed and believes, nor are their present addresses known to deponent.

Wherefore deponent prays for an order directing the production of the said witnesses upon said contested probate, pursuant to section 2618 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

§ 313. Who may contest probate.—The language of the Code is very broad as to what persons may contest the probate of a will. It is contained in the first part of § 2617.

> Any person . . . . who is named as devisee or legatee in the will propounded or as executor, trustee, devisee or legatee, in any other paper purporting to be a will of the decedent, or who is otherwise interested in sustaining or defeating the will.

See ante, §§ 284 et seq.

This section has no connection with § 2624 as to the right to put in issue before the Surrogate the validity, construction or effect of any disposition of personal property contained in a will [See Jones v. Hamersley, 4 Dem. 427], the cases under which are elsewhere discussed. The language of § 2617 is broad; the use of the words, "in any other paper purporting to be a will" includes papers of a testamentary character both prior and subsequent in date to the one offered for probate. See Matter of Greeley's Will, 15 Abb. N. S. 393. But the words, "who is otherwise interested in sustaining or defeating the will," while apparently broad and general, are limited by the courts to persons who can satisfy the Surrogate by proper proof that they are interested in the probate of the will in substantially the same way in which that interest is limited in the decisions under § 2624 above referred to, q. v. Therefore a person intending to contest a will must be prepared to establish by competent proof that he belongs to one of the classes specified. If he claims to be a devisee, or legatee in the will propounded, or an executor, trustee, devisee or legatee in some other alleged will, the testamentary paper itself may indicate the contestant by name; if he claims as one of a class he must prove that he belongs to that class; if he bases his right under the words, "or who is otherwise interested in sustaining or defeating the will," he must prove such a legal interest as the Surrogate would be justified in recognizing.

This naturally implies the right of the Surrogate to determine the status of the party proposing to contest. Matter of Hamilton, 76 Hun, 201, opinion of Van Brunt, P. J., at page 205. The contestant must state his interest with certainty. Public Administrator v. Watts, 1 Paige, 347.

The contestants of a will have an absolute right to withdraw their objections, even against the protests of the attorney of record, claiming a lien for services. Matter of Evans, 33 Misc. 567.

In determining the status of the contestant it has been held that the Surrogate is not exceeding his jurisdiction or exercising equitable powers if, for example, he declares an alleged widow of a testator not to be in fact such widow; his decision as to her status does not amount to a decree annulling her marriage. See Matter of Hamilton, supra. In the case cited Van Brunt, P. J., observes (where the alleged widow of Robert Ray Hamilton contested probate of his will, her right to so contest being objected to by one of the legatees and the Surrogate found that she was never the wife, and therefore not the widow, of the decedent, and was not in anywise interested in sustaining or defeating his alleged will): "The appellant, by virtue of an alleged marital relation was seeking to enforce her rights in a court of law, which rights could be defeated by showing that no such relation existed, because, at the time of the attempted contract, of the disability of one of the parties. This has always been the rule, and the Surrogate, in passing upon the status of this contestant, assumed no equity jurisdiction, but was passing upon a legal question." 76 Hun, at page 206. Where one, asserting herself to be the widow of the decedent, appeared and sought to contest his will, Surrogate Rollins passed upon the regularity of a decree annulling her marriage to a former husband, and held that, while the decree was defective in form under the statute, she might offer other proof that said first marriage was void in support of her claim that she was the widow of the decedent. Matter of Bethune, 4 Dem. 392; Matter of McGarren, 112 App. Div. 305.

§ 314. Same subject. After-born child.—Where one claims to be the child of a decedent, born of a marriage contracted before the execution of the alleged will, he has no status to contest the probate of the will, but is confined to his remedy to recover his share of the property under § 28, Dec. Est. Law, formerly § 1868 of the Code; for such child is entitled only to that share of the estate which would have come to him had the parent died intestate (see Davis v. Davis, 27 Misc. 455), and only to that in case his birth occurred after the making of the will; and that right does not affect the right of the proponent to have the will probated. After the probate of the will, resort may be had to the remedies afforded by § 1868 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Matter of Gall, 5 Dem. 374; Matter of Bunce, 6 Dem. 278. In the last case where the decedent, an unmarried woman, died shortly after the execution of her will leaving a daughter born shortly before her death and after the execution of the will offered for probate, Surrogate Rollins held, that as such daughter would be entitled under the statute to succeed to the decedent's entire estate in the event of her intestacy, she was a proper contestant in the proceedings to prove the will.

The after-born child has no status in court unless the Surrogate ascertains that within the meaning of § 49 of title 1, ch. 6, 2 R. S. now Dec. Est. Law, a settlement was in fact made for her benefit by the alleged will; if there was, then the child is not entitled to the share in the parent's estate as if the parent had died intestate, but is entitled to oppose the probate of the alleged will upon any ground affecting its legality and validity. The Surrogate has power to pass on the regularity of adoption of a child. Matter of Thorne, 155 N. Y. 140, aff'g 23 App. Div. 624. But where A claimed to be an adopted child and the Surrogate passed adversely on the claim, it was held that his decree to that effect was not a bar to a subsequent suit by A under the agreement of adoption to recover the estate which the decedent had agreed to leave him. Brantingham v. Huff, 43 App. Div. 414.

§ 315. Same subject. Other persons in interest.—"Devisees" and "legatees" fall under two classes: those specified in the will offered for probate, and those claiming under a prior or subsequent will. Those claiming under the will offered for probate so far as rights to contest are concerned have unquestionably the right to be made parties, for they may be next of kin or heirs, whose share in the estate would be increased by defeating the will or they may be in possession of alleged codicils to the will materially affecting its testamentary provisions, and which they are entitled to have acted upon in the pending proceeding. See Dyer v. Erving, 2 Dem. 160, citing Walsh v. Ryan, 1 Bradf. 433. Or the legatee may desire to oppose probate of a codicil which purports to revoke his legacy given under the will. Walsh v. Ryan, 1 Bradf. 433. Where the devisee or legatee claims under a will prior or subsequent to that propounded, it is immaterial whether he is an heir-at-law or next of kin of the decedent. Turhune v. Brookfield, 1 Redf. 220. But if he claims under another will he must, in proving his status to the satisfaction of the Surrogate, prove that such testamentary paper existed when the decedent died, or was lost or fraudulently destroyed, within the meaning of § 2621, before his death. Hamersley v. Lockman, 2 Dem. 524, 533. See also Will of Lucius Crittenden, 1 Tucker, 135. An executor or trustee named in a prior or subsequent will is expressly covered by § 2617 and has the right to contest the will propounded. Matter of Greeley's Will, 15 Abb. N. S. 393; People ex rel. Patrick v. Fitzgerald, N. Y. Law Journal, June 12, 1902.

§ 316. Same.—The public administrator has been held entitled to contest a will of personal property (Gombault v. Public Administrator, 4 Bradf. 226), and the attorney general a will of real property. Merrill v. Ralston, 5 Redf. 220, 258. Surrogate Livingston (Lafferty v. Lafferty, 5 Redf. 326) held, when a devisee, named in a will offered for probate, executed a mortgage, on real estate passing under the will, after the testator's death, the mortgagee or his administrator was a person sufficiently interested to intervene in the probate proceedings. A creditor of the decedent as such has no right to contest his will (Stapler v. Hoffman, 1 Dem. 63, 65); nor has the widow of a son of decedent's husband by a former wife; nor has the wife of an heir-at-law a right by virtue of her inchoate right of dower (Matter of Rollwagen, 48 How. 103); nor can a receiver in supplementary proceedings of the property of a decedent's husband, contest her will, although she has thereby cut off the judgment debtor from any share of her estate. Matter of Brown, 47 Hun, 360. The fact of incorporation or nonincorporation of an association is immaterial as to its right to contest, provided the association is competent to take a devise or bequest in the will propounded or in some other testamentary paper under which it claims (Carpenter v. Historical Society, 1 Dem. 606, citing Potter v. Chapin, 6 Paige, 639; De Witt v. Chandler, 11 Abb. Pr. 459; Owens v. Missionary Society, 14 N. Y. 380); nor is it material whether the force and effect of the objection which the contestant may raise may defeat the will in respect of a matter in which he may not be ultimately interested. For example, when the question of testamentary capacity is properly raised by a party having the right to raise it in some capacity, and where, upon the investigation which succeeds, the Surrogate becomes satisfied and finds that the testator had not mental capacity to make a will, and that the instrument offered for probate was obtained by fraud and undue influence exercised upon one not capable of resisting the same, it is the Surrogate's right and duty to refuse probate of the will, even though the contestant who prosecutes the controversy is only interested as an heir-at-law and not one of the next of kin. Matter of Bartholick, 141 N. Y. 166, 172.

§ 317. What wills may be proved.—Before proceeding to discuss in detail the grounds upon which a will may be contested and the sufficiency of evidence to establish a will propounded for probate, it is necessary to define clearly what wills may be proved in a Surrogate's Court.

In the first place the Consolidated Laws prescribe who may make a will of real and who of personal property. In the first respect the provision is, "All persons, except idiots, persons of unsound mind, and infants, may devise their real estate by a last will and testament duly executed according to the provisions of this article." Dec. Est. Law, § 10. As to personal property the provision is, "Every male person of the age of 18 years or upwards and every female of the age of 16 years or upwards, of sound mind and memory, and no others, may give and bequeath his or her personal estate by will in writing." Dec. Est. Law, § 15. See as to full discussion of who may take and create estates by will, 1 Thomas on Law of Estates Created by Will, pages 1 to 75 inclusive. In addition to these provisions of the Statutes, former § 2611 of the Code must be considered, which is now contained in the Decedent's Estate Law, which provides "what wills are entitled to probate," and is as follows:

What wills may be proved.

A will of real or personal property, executed as prescribed by the laws of the state, or a will of personal property executed without the state, and within the United States, the Dominion of Canada, or the Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, as prescribed by the laws of the state or country where it is or was executed, or a will of personal property executed by a person not a resident of the state, according to the laws of the testator's residence, may be admitted to probate in this state. Dec. Est. Law, § 23. This last clause before the revision read "may be proved as prescribed in this article."

§ 24. Effect of change of residence since execution of will.

The right to have a will admitted to probate, the validity of the execution thereof, or the validity or construction of any provision contained therein, is not affected by a change of the testator's residence made since the execution of the will.

§ 25. Application of certain provisions to wills previously made.

The last two sections apply only to a will executed by a person dying after April eleventh, eighteen hundred and seventy-six, and they do not invalidate a will executed before that date, which would have been valid but for the enactment of sections one and two of chapter one hundred and eighteen of the laws of eighteen hundred and seventy-six, except where such a will is revoked or altered by a will which those sections rendered valid, or capable of being proved as prescribed in article first of title third of chapter eighteenth of the Code of Civil Procedure.

See § 27, ante, for discussion as affecting question of jurisdiction.

Prior to this section, or rather to the Act of 1876 which it now embodies, the place of residence at death, and not at date of execution controlled the law applicable to the factum. To decide, however, the fact of residence is fully within the Surrogate's power. Matter of Spencer, N. Y. Law J., June 2, 1908, Thomas, Surr. In this case the facts showed a holographic will. There were no witnesses. It was claimed to be valid under the law of France of which it was claimed testator was a resident. The Surrogate found a. He was not a resident.

b. That such a will was only valid in France when made by one not a citizen of France, or not "duly domiciled" as a foreigner in France, in case it would be thus valid under the "law of domicile of origin" of the testator.

c. It being uncertain whether decedent was a resident here or in Rhode Island (where he paid taxes) the will was rejected as unwitnessed and hence unprovable in either State.

The principle is thus simply: Where a will is executed abroad according to the laws of testator's residence, but not according to New York law, the will is provable here under the section above quoted; but as its probate owes its force to the laws of the foreign country, so the will can be given no further effect than if proved in that country. Matter of Cruger, 36 Misc. 477. In this case the Surrogate construed the will as inoperative to grant the beneficiaries any greater rights than they could have taken under due probate in the country of domicile.

It will be seen by the provision of the Revised Statutes (see also New York Real Property Laws, Laws of 1896, ch. 547, § 3), to wit: "a person other than a minor, idiot, or person of unsound mind, seized of or entitled to an estate or interest in real property, may transfer such estate or interest," that the question of the testator's age at the time of making the will may be an important preliminary inquiry, whether it be a will of real or of personal property; for no minor can devise his real estate by will; and as to the personalty the age limits are expressly designated in the statute. These limitations in the statute amount to a legislative intimation, that persons under the ages specified are presumed to be mentally incompetent to dispose of their property by will. Townsend v. Bogart, 5 Redf. 93, 105. The age of a testator in this connection is proved just as it would be in any other case. See Matter of Paige, 62 Barb. 476, as to what is and what is not competent evidence of age.

§ 318. Order of discussion.—The questions arising upon the probate of a will to which objections are interposed will be discussed in the following order:

1. Due execution of the document propounded (under which will be discussed all questions arising out of compliance or noncompliance with the statute relating to the execution of wills).

2. Testamentary capacity (for regardless of the mode or regularity of the execution if the decedent making the will had not testamentary capacity, it must be denied probate).

3. Fraud and undue influence (for conceding compliance with the statute as to its execution and testamentary capacity to make, the will may be invalidated by proof of such influence or fraud, under which falls also the knowledge of contents of the will by the testator).

DUE EXECUTION

§ 319. Requirement of the statute—The Consolidated Laws provide for the proper execution of wills as follows, in the Decedent Estate Law:

"Section 21. Every last will and testament of real or personal property, or both, shall be executed and attested in the following manner:

"1. It shall be subscribed by the testator at the end of the will.

"2. Such subscription shall be made by the testator in the presence of each of the attesting witnesses, or shall be acknowledged by him, to have been so made, to each of the attesting witnesses.

"3. The testator, at the time of making such subscription, or at the time of acknowledging the same, shall declare the instrument so subscribed, to be his last will and testament.

"4. There shall be at least two attesting witnesses, each of whom shall sign his name as a witness, at the end of the will, at the request of the testator."

Section 22 prescribes an additional requisite, that the "witnesses to any will shall write opposite to their names their respective places of residence; and every person who shall sign the testator's name to any will by his direction, shall write his own name as a witness to the will." But, it is expressly provided, the omission to comply with this requisite merely subjects the person guilty thereof to a penalty of $50.00 to be recovered by any person interested in the property devised or bequeathed, who shall sue for the same. It shall not affect the validity of the will; nor "shall any person liable to the penalty aforesaid, be excused or incapacitated on that account, from testifying respecting the execution of such will." Hallenbeck v. Van Valkenburg, 5 How. Pr. 281. Dodge v. Cornelius, 168 N. Y. 242, rev'g 40 App. Div. 18, was an action of this character. The constitutionality of the act was not passed on, the court finding the defendant had waived that claim (see Ibid. p. 245) although O'Brien and Landon, JJ., dissented (see pp. 249–254). The three years' statute, on an action for a penalty, was held to run, not from the date of the will, but from the death of testator.

§ 320. Substantial compliance with the provisions of the statute.—The provisions of the Statutes prescribing what the necessary formalities are in the due execution of wills, were very carefully discussed by Judge Denio in Hoysradt v. Kingman, 22 N. Y. 372, in which case the Court of Appeals declared that the restrictions which, from motives of prudence, are thrown around the general right to dispose of one's property by act in writing to take effect at testator's death, should be construed liberally in favor of the testament, and forms should not be required which the legislature has not plainly prescribed. Ibid. at page 379. In other words, substantial compliance with the requirements of the statute is sufficient. Gilbert v. Knox, 52 N. Y. 125, 129; Matter of Menge, 13 Misc. 553; Matter of Carey, 14 Misc. 486; Larabee v. Ballard, 1 Dem. 496; Matter of Application of Beckett, 103 N. Y. 167, 174; Trustees, etc., v. Calhoun, 25 id. 422; Gamble v. Gamble, 39 Barb. 373; Coffin v. Coffin, 34 N. Y. 9; Nelson v. McGiffert, 3 Barb. Ch. 158; Carle v. Underhill, 3 Bradf. 101; Seguine v. Seguine, 2 Barb. 385; In the Matter of Cottrell, 95 N. Y. 329; Lane v. Lane, id. 494; Seymour v. Van Wyck, 2 Seld. 120; Lyman v. Phillips, 3 Dem. 459, affirmed at the General Term and in the Court of Appeals. See also Matter of Kenny, N. Y. Law Journal, June 1, 1908, citing Matter of Voorhis, 125 N. Y. 765; also Matter of McIntyre, N. Y. Law Journal, June 2, 1908. But this rule of substantial compliance does not permit vague, or insufficient proof as to any of the essential requirements provided by law. Matter of Rogers, 52 Misc. 412. The proponent of a will, having, as already stated, the affirmative of the issue, must convince the trial court by satisfactory evidence that each and every condition required to make a good execution of a will has been complied with. The rule may be stated then to be not only that substantial compliance with the statute is sufficient but also that it is absolutely essential. See Matter of Will of Cottrell, 95 N. Y. 329, 336; Matter of Elmer, 88 Hun. 290.

321. The subscription by the testator.—The provision of the statute is that the will shall be subscribed, by the testator, at the end thereof.

Before the Revised Statutes, it was held by the Court of Errors, that by the common law as generally received and understood in England as well as in this country on the 19th of April, 1775, when the common law was by the constitution adopted as part of the law of this State, a will found in an iron chest among valuable papers of a person deceased, without signature, having an attestation clause, without witnesses, written by the deceased with his name in the beginning thereof, in a fair hand, engrossed on conveyancing paper with a seal attached thereto, evincing much deliberation and foresight in its provisions, and disposing of real and personal property to a large amount, should be considered a good and valid will of the personal estate therein mentioned. Watts v. Public Administrator, 4 Wend. 168, rev'g 1 Paige's Ch. 347.

The decedent in this case had died in 1827, before the enactment of the Revised Statutes, which went into operation on the 1st of January, 1830. Matter of Booth, 127 N. Y. 109.

The present rule is distinct and clear that the testator's name must be subscribed at the end of the will. See Hoysradt v. Kingman, 22 N. Y. 372.

The object of the law as to signature at the end of the will is not only to exclude signatures at any other part (Sisters of Charity, etc., v. Kelly, 67 N. Y. 409; Hewitt's Will, 91 N. Y. 261; 5 Redf. 271; O'Neil's Will, 91 N. Y. 516; Matter of Sanderson, 9 Misc. 574; McGuire v. Kerr, 2 Bradf. 244), but also in order to secure the instrument from interpolation or unauthorized addition. The provision is a judicious and wise one. The intention is that the act of authentication must take place at the termination of the testamentary disposition, and the testator and the witnesses must concur in determining that point. Younger v. Duffie, 94 N. Y. 534, 539. The law is no more fulfilled by the testator signing in the middle of the will, and the witnesses attesting at the end, than the witnesses signing in the middle and the testator at the end. They must both subscribe at the end. McGuire v. Kerr, supra. A will may be said, therefore, to be signed at the end thereof where nothing intervenes between the instrument and the subscription. Gilman's Will, 1 Redf. 354; 38 Barb. 364. Blanks in the body of a properly executed will do not affect its validity. Matter of Murphy, 48 App. Div. 211. See Matter of McCarthy, 59 Misc. 128, effect of intervening blank page in body of will. Nor is it material that at the moment of executing a will written on three sheets of paper, they were not fastened together. Matter of Snell, 32 Misc. 611; In re Fitzgerald, 33 Misc. 325.

In a very recent case (Matter of Whitney, 153 N. Y. 259, rev'g 90 Hun, 138), the Court of Appeals passed upon this point, stating that it was no longer an open one in that court. The will was in that case drawn upon a printed blank, covering one page, and the testator and subscribing witnesses signed at the foot thereof; the subdivisions of the will, marked respectively "First" and "Second," filled the entire blank space in the printed form, and at the end of the second subdivision were the words, "see annexed sheet." On a separate slip of paper were written two additional subdivisions marked respectively "Third" and "Fourth;" this was attached to the face of the will, immediately over the first and second subdivisions, by metal staples, so that the slip annexed had to be raised up or turned back in order to read the first two clauses.

The court held that the alleged will was not subscribed at the end thereof, observing, "the will must be a complete whole signed by the testator and witnesses at the end thereof."

The court, Judge Bartlett writing the opinion, reviewed four cases on this point as follows:

"In Matter, etc., of Hewett, 91 N. Y. 261, the will was written on two sides of an irregular shaped piece of paper, about one half of it upon one side and the other half upon the other side.

"The witnesses signed their names at the bottom of the first side and again at the top of the second side.

"The testator signed his name at the end of the disposing portion of the instrument, near the middle of the second side, and again at the bottom of the second side.

"It was held that the statute required that both the testator and the witnesses must sign at the end of the will. Judge Earl said: 'Wherever the will ends, there the signatures must be found, and one place cannot be the end for the purpose of subscribing by testator, and another place be the end for the purpose of subscribing by the witnesses.'

"This court held that the probate of the instrument was properly denied.

"In Matter, etc., of O'Neil, 91 N. Y. 516, the instrument was drawn upon a printed blank, the formal commencement being on the first page and the formal termination at the foot of the third page. The blank space was filled on the first, second and third pages and the last or thirteenth clause of the will was partly written on the third page and the balance carried over to the blank fourth page. The names of the testator and the witnesses were subscribed near the bottom of the third page, below the formal termination of the will, and there only. The written matter on the fourth page was not connected with the main body of the will by reference of any kind, although it was obviously a continuation and completion of the thirteenth paragraph of the will.

"This court held that the will was not subscribed at the end thereof and that parts of the instrument preceding the signature could not be received, as the will was either valid or invalid as a whole.

"In Matter of Conway, 124 N. Y. 455, there was a state of facts quite similar to Matter of O'Neil, just commented upon, with the exception that at the end of the provisions in the body of the will were the words, 'carried to back of will,' and upon the back of the sheet was the word 'continued.' Following this word were various bequests, and then below them were added the words 'signature on face of the will.'

"The Second Division of this court held, with three judges dissenting, that this instrument was not signed by the testator and witnesses at the end thereof, and had been improperly admitted to probate. The dissenting opinion rested mainly upon the fact that there was a clear and distinct reference in the body of the will to the provisions on the back of the paper, and that they were thereby properly connected with the subject-matter preceding the signatures.

"This court, very recently, in Matter, etc., of Lewis R. Blair (reported in 152 N. Y. p. 645), affirmed, without an opinion, the judgment of the General Term, First Department, reversing the decree of the Surrogate's Court of the county of New York, admitting the alleged will of Lewis R.

Blair to probate. This instrument consisted of eight pages; the testator signed at the bottom of the seventh page and the witnesses signed at the end of a proper witnessing clause at the top of the eighth page.

"After the place for the signatures of the witnesses, but before they were actually signed or the will executed, a clause was added directing the executors to sell at private sale a certain piece of real estate, and to devote the proceeds of the sale in liquidating any deficiency in interest or cash bequests under the will.

"The will was then executed, as before stated, and the testator signed the added clause, but the witnesses did not.

"The Surrogate held that the will was complete without the added clause, and admitted the main body of the instrument to probate, excluding the added words. We held that the additional clause was a part of the will, and that it was not signed at the end thereof by testator and witnesses as required by the statute.

"The object of the statute is to surround testamentary dispositions with such safeguards as will protect them from alteration and prevent fraud." Matter of Blair, 84 Hun, 581, citing Sisters of Charity v. Kelly, 67 N. Y. 409; Matter of Case, 1 N. Y. St. Rep. 152. See also Matter of Andrews, 162 N. Y. 1, where will was executed on reverse side of first page, the second page containing dispositive parts of will. The court held it was not subscribed "at end thereof" and also refused to read the second page into the will as by incorporation. Matter of Donner, 37 Misc. 57. See Matter of Dake, 75 App. Div. 403; Matter of Albert, 38 Misc. 61.

Thus while it has been intimated that the court will not undertake judicially to say, that the subscription should be one-eighth, one-half, two, or ten inches, from the last line of the instrument, yet the rule embodied in the decisions contemplates that the signature of the testator shall follow so closely after the end of the testamentary instrument as to provide a reasonable safeguard against interpolation of additional provisions, there have been a number of cases where the signature of the testator has been confused with the attestation clause (see Matter of Noon, 31 Misc. 420), and the signature of the witnesses; and yet, where a testator by mistake subscribed beneath the attestation clause, it was held to be a valid execution. Will of Cohen, 1 Tucker, 286. The learned Surrogate observed that as the statute also provided that the attesting witnesses must also sign, "at the end of the will," and as there was no provision in the statute for an attestation clause, that there was a substantial compliance with the provisions of law. "It is customary," he says, "where there is an attestation clause for the testator to sign opposite a seal and just preceding that clause and for the witnesses to sign below the clause. In that case they do not all sign in exactly the same place; yet the propriety of this practice has never, I believe, been called in question."

§ 322. Same subject.—In this connection it is necessary to note that the attestation clause is not an essential part of the will. Jackson v. Jackson, 39 N. Y. 153, 159, citing Chaffee v. Baptist Missionary Association, 10

Paige, 85; Leaycraft v. Simmons, 3 Bradf. 35; Jackson v. Christman, 4 Wend. 277; Younger v. Duffie, 94 N. Y. 534, 539.

Bearing in mind, therefore, that the purpose of the law which requires the subscription to be at the end of the will, is to prevent fraudulent additions to a will before or after its execution, it is manifest that the statute should be so construed as to accomplish this purpose. The testator shall determine what shall form part of the instrument which he intends as his will, that is, as the instrument by which he makes disposition of his property to take effect after his decease. In this connection the Court of Appeals observes (Younger v. Duffie, supra), "every word contained in the instrument may not relate to or bear upon the disposition of property. It is not uncommon for the testator to recite in the will his religious faith and hopes, and the moral or prudential maxims which have guided his life, and to give directions concerning his body, and to make many declarations which have no bearing whatever upon the disposition of his property; and yet they are all part of the instrument which he intends as his will. Such matters and declarations are usually inserted at the commencement of the will, but they may as well be placed after the disposing parts of the will; and yet if the signature in such case is placed below them, it is at the end of the will, within the meaning of the statute. So, too, ordinarily what is called the attestation clause, when it follows the signature, is no part of the will. Jackson v. Jackson, 39 N. Y. 153. It is not essential to the validity of the will, and as it follows the signature, it cannot be taken as a part thereof. But if the testator chooses to insert the attestation clause before his signature, thus making it a part of the instrument, then like any other matter contained in the will which does not relate to the disposition of the property, it becomes a part of the instrument called a will. If the testator, beneath the disposing part of the will, and before his signature, should insert the Apostles' creed, or the Lord's prayer, it would be a part of the instrument called a will, and although it would intervene between the signature and the disposing part of the will, it could not be contended that the will was not subscribed at its end."

It is manifest that this language contemplates a case very different from those where (as in McGuire v. Kerr, 2 Bradf. 244, and In re O'Neil, 91 N. Y. 516) portions of the will succeed the signature of the testator, where of course it is properly held that the will is not subscribed at the end thereof. So where a testatrix signed in a blank space in the attestation clause it was held a valid subscription. Matter of Acker, 5 Dem. 19. But in that case it appeared beyond doubt that it was intended by her to be a subscription to the will and was so understood by the witnesses. So, where a will was written upon an ordinary sheet of legal cap and the will covered the first and third page only, leaving the back of the first page blank and ending at the very bottom of the third page, where the testator signed it, leaving no room for the signature of the witnesses, and the attestation clause was placed upon the opposite blank second page of the instrument so that in appearance the attestation clause was in the middle of the will and upside down, the General Term of the Second Department, Judge Barnard writing the opinion, held that the will was duly executed, and there was no fraud, that the testator signed at the end of the will; and that the will was in point of fact attested after its execution by the testator at the end of the will. Hitchcock v. Thompson, 6 Hun, 279. See also Matter of Singer, 19 Misc. 679, citing Matter of Dayger, 47 Hun, 127, and Hitchcock v. Thompson, supra.

It is also manifest, from what has been said as to the signature of the testator, and as to the attestation clause forming no part of the will, regarded as a testamentary disposition, that it is immaterial whether the attestation clause is carried entirely across the face of the instrument, as a matter of fact separating the signature of the testator from that of the witnesses. In such a case all signatures may properly be said to be at the end of the will. The attestation clause may be opposite the signature of the testator or below it; the cases are clear on this point. See Matter of Beck, 6 App. Div. 211, Cullen, J., citing McDonough v. Loughlin, 20 Barb. 238; Williamson v. Williamson, 2 Redf. 449; Wooley v. Wooley, 95 N. Y. 231. However, where testamentary dispositions are interpolated between the signature and the attestation clause, the signature is invalidated. Matter of Sanderson, 9 Misc. 574.

§ 323. Same subject—Effect of reference to annexed paper.—(See also § 438, post, and article in Albany Law Jour., June 3, 1899, by Henry W. Hardon). Cases have not been infrequent where a testator, by reason of carelessness or a desire to economize space or effort, has referred in his will to extraneous papers or memoranda, either as fixing the names of beneficiaries of particular devises or bequests, or as fixing the amount or the manner in which the amount of such devises or bequests is to be ascertained. It has been held that the power of incorporating the contents of extraneous papers by suitable words of reference in the will itself is undoubted, but that it is subject to certain limitations. First, the paper or papers sought to be incorporated must be shown to have been actually in existence at the time the will was executed. Matter of Robert, below. Second, it must be capable of identification as the self-same paper which the testator intended to indicate. Thus in Caulfield v. Sullivan, 85 N. Y. 153, the court held that proof of a codicil referring to a will was sufficient proof of the will. Van Courtlandt v. Kip, 1 Hill, 590. Third, it must not contain any testamentary dispositions of property. See Dyer v. Erving, 2 Dem. 160; Matter of Robert, 4 Dem. 185, 192; In the Matter of the Will of O'Neil, 91 N. Y. 516, 523; Cook v. White, 43 App. Div. 388, 393; Matter of Andrews, id., p. 394, aff'd 162 N. Y. 1; Matter of Conway, 124 N. Y. 455; Matter of Whitney, 153 N. Y. 259.

In Matter of Andrews, supra, the Appellate Division said, at p. 401, "We think that under the law now prevailing in this State, extraneous documents can be referred to only to ascertain matters of description, and not for dispository provisions." This incorporation of extraneous papers by reference must not be confused with the republication of a prior instrument either defectively published or revoked. For example, where a codicil refers to a prior unattested instrument of the character of a testamentary disposition and the codicil is duly executed, the prior instrument may be so identified by the codicil or subsequent will. See Brown v. Clark, 77 N. Y. 369, 378; Vogel v. Lehritter, 139 N. Y. 223, 235; Caulfield v. Sullivan, supra.

In the Robert case cited above the testator provided that any moneys or indebtedness which should appear upon any inventory or ledger, or a book of accounts kept by him or under his direction, "charged as due to me from any or either of my said children or Robert College of Constantinople, during my lifetime, and as an outstanding or unsettled account at the time of my decease," should be considered as forming a part of his estate, and that his executors, by discharging such indebtedness to such children or college, should be deemed to have paid an equivalent amount on account of the share given by the will to such child or college. Surrogate Rollins held that it was competent to consider all such entries as should have been made before the will was executed, and that the legacies should be abated by the amount thereby shown to have been advanced to any of his said children or said college. 4 Dem. 185. The Court of Appeals in construing this same will (Robert v. Corning, 89 N. Y. 241) held it to be valid "within this rule that a testator may direct that the amount of a legacy once completely fixed by the will itself, shall be diminished by events actually occurring as matters of fact but not by an unattested testamentary writing, disconnected from any actual occurrence." See dissenting opinion in Conway case, 124 N. Y. 455.

So where a will directed trustees to pay to testator's sister a certain income, "excepting those items named and referred to in clause fourth of this will," by which clause the testator directed his trustees after the sister's death to distribute certain legacies to sundry institutions and persons named in "three memorandums left with this will for their guidance." After the will had been proved application was made to have these memoranda admitted to probate as a necessary and important part of the testator's will. In the petition it was alleged that these papers were in the handwriting of the testator and were prepared by him, at or before the time when the will itself was executed, with the intent that they should be treated as forming a part thereof.

The learned Surrogate Rollins (Dyer v. Erving, 2 Dem. 160), observing that he had reviewed every reported case bearing upon the subject which by diligent search he had been able to discover (at page 168, Ludlam v. Otis, 15 Hun, 410, Brown v. Clark, 77 N. Y. 369, and English and other cases cited at page 169) held:

"First. That words of reference in a will will never suffice to incorporate the contents of an extraneous paper, unless it can be clearly shown that, at the time such will was executed, such paper was actually in existence.

"Second. That an extraneous paper produced as and for a paper so referred to in a will, and shown to have been in existence when such will was executed, may be adjudged to form part of such will, and be admitted to probate as such, under these circumstances, and no other: to wit, when by satisfactory and conclusive evidence it has been proved to be the self-same paper which the testator by his words of reference designed to indicate." He added,

"By its recent decision in Matter of O'Neil, 91 N. Y. 523, the Court of Appeals of this State gives distinct intimation of its unwillingness to enlarge, if not, indeed, of its disposition to narrow, the scope and effect of referential words in testamentary papers."

Consequently the proof identifying the papers referred to must be clear and satisfactory. The mere fact that they were found in the same box, or trunk, or drawer, or even in the same envelope is by no means conclusive. Dyer v. Erving, supra, at page 170 et seq.

A decedent left two papers, each in a separate envelope, sealed, both indorsed as purporting to contain her will, the second, however, containing this additional writing by her:

"I direct that this should not be opened until after the death of my brother Stewart and my sister Harriet." The paper contained in the first envelope purported to give the possession and use of all her estate to such brother and sister, and provided: "From and after the death of the longer lived of my said brother and sister, I give, devise, and bequeath my said estate to persons named on another sheet and enclosed in another envelope which shall not be opened until after the death of my said sister and brother."

The first paper was executed in due form and the second one contained a disposing clause between the signature of the testator and the attestation clause, and was held not to be properly executed. It was held that the first paper was valid as a will; that the second paper was void as a will; that the second paper was not sufficiently identified as the paper referred to, although corresponding generally to the description in the first, and although both were executed on the same day and were both in the handwriting of the testatrix; and finally that the reference in the valid will to a paper which could not be identified, did not have the effect of annulling the will. Matter of Sanderson, 9 Misc. 574. A peculiar case arose (Vogel v. Lehritter, 139 N. Y. 223) where a will was claimed to have been made by the testatrix in Germany. It appeared that the paper offered as a will was signed by the testatrix only but inclosed in an envelope within which it was sealed, and upon which was indorsed an elaborate certificate by a Royal Bavarian notary, to the effect that the envelope contained the last will of the testatrix so declared by her to him, and also indorsed by two witnesses who also signed, whereupon the notary made an additional certificate, reciting all the facts as to the publication of the will. The Court of Appeals held in the first place, that the paper contained in the envelope was not subscribed before the witnesses. Second, that the containing envelope and the certificate of the notary could not be regarded as a will or as any part of a will; and that, when the signatures were placed upon it, there was a complete absence of any testamentary intent, and that the most that could be said was that, by these alleged formal acts before the notary, the testatrix desired to identify the paper contained in the envelope which was not in fact properly executed; and that the papers propounded could not be admitted as a will.

A writing inseparably connected with the previous clauses of the will, though named a "schedule," and sought to be incorporated solely by reference, will be deemed a part of the will where the attestation clause attests the schedule as solemnly as the will itself. Matter of Brand, 68 App. Div. 225, 227. In this case the "schedule" was admitted to probate with the will. Ibid., citing Matter of Hunt, 110 N. Y. 278; Matter of Beckett, 103 N. Y. 167; Matter of Turell, 166 N. Y. 330, 337.

The annexation of papers referred to in a will, will not invalidate a proper signature at the end of the will (Tonnele v. Hall, 4 N. Y. 140), where a map of testator's property was annexed. Nor will a reference in a will to a paper which is not annexed invalidate it. Thompson v. Quimby, 2 Bradf. 449. Nor necessitate refusal of probate. Matter of Reins, 59 Misc. 126; Matter of Sanderson, supra, and other cases cited. The paper is to be deemed complete as it stands at the time of execution and of attestation. Where, however, after decedent's signature, a clause is inserted appointing an executor or making any testamentary disposition, the signature is not at the end of the will within the meaning of the statute. Matter of Niles, 13 St. Rep. 756; Matter of Sanderson, 9 Misc. 574.

It has been held that where a paper purporting to be a will contained a clause appointing executors after the signatures of the testator and of the witnesses, the question of validity turns on whether this clause was written in before or after the time of the execution (Matter of Jacobson, 6 Dem. 298), the theory of course being that if they were written in before execution then they are a part of the will, and the will is not executed at the end thereof, and is therefore invalid. If, however, the words were written in after execution, they cannot affect the validity of the will, as they are mere surplusage and cannot be considered as a part of the will. See Matter of Conway, 124 N. Y. 455, discussion by Parker, J., as to what is sufficient signing at the end of a will. See also In re Purdy's Will, 20 N. Y. Supp. 307.

§ 324. Place of signature where will is executed without the State.—At common law, if a person wrote his name in the body of a will or contract with intent to execute it in that manner, the signature so written was as valid as though subscribed at the end of the instrument. Matter of Booth, 127 N. Y. 109, citing Merritt v. Clason, 12 Johns. 102; People v. Murray, 5 Hill, 468; Caton v. Caton, 2 H. L. 127; 2 Kent's Com. 511; 1 Jarman on Wills, 79. So in the Booth case above cited, the only signature was the words italicized.

"If I, Cecilia L. Booth, should die within the year 1884, I leave to my sister, Geraldine Josephine Timoney, all money due me from my late father's deceased will, also my wearing apparel and furniture, and I also leave to my little nephew, Albert Philip Timoney, all money deposited in the Emigrant Savings Bank in my maiden name, Cecilia L. Hatfield.

The Surrogate held that this instrument was well executed under the laws of New Jersey and admitted it to probate. 3 Dem. 414. This was reversed by the General Term and its judgment affirmed by the Court of Appeals. Chief Justice Follett in writing the opinion, observed, "We assume that under the laws of New Jersey a will may be legally executed if the name of the testator is written by him in the body of the instrument with intent to execute it. Nevertheless, as the record contained no evidence tending to show that the testatrix, directly or indirectly, by word or gesture, referred to her name in the first line of this paper as her signature," her simple declaration, "This is my will; take it and sign it," is insufficient to sustain a finding or verdict that her name was written with intent that it should have effect as her signature in the final execution of the will. The court said, that where signatures are subscribed at the end of the will in the usual way in which instruments are finally authenticated, there is a legal presumption that the signatures were written for the purpose of finally executing the documents, but that no presumption arises when the name of the testator appears elsewhere in the body of the instrument alleged to be authenticated thereby.

§ 325. Manner of signature.—The signature of a testator may be made in any one of four ways.

1. He may subscribe his name personally.
2. A third person may subscribe it for him at his request.
3. Such third person may guide the testator's hand in writing.
4. The testator may make his mark.

§ 326. Signature by testator personally.—When the signature purports to be that of the testator, the inquiry is addressed to the genuineness of the signature. The object of having the subscribing witnesses is that they may testify as to the fact of signature, or as to an acknowledgment by the decedent that he did in fact sign; therefore the legibility of the signature is not necessarily a test of its genuineness. Where a signature is indistinct or imperfect or illegible, but the witnesses testify that it was in fact made by the testator in their presence or acknowledged by him to them to have been made, the court will deem it to be the testator's mark (Hartwell v. McMaster, 4 Redf. 389), which as will be seen below has repeatedly been held to be a substantial compliance with the statute. Where the signature of the testator is disputed or where the subscribing witnesses are dead, the genuineness of the signature must be proved. See Matter of Hesdra, 119 N. Y. 615, aff'g 17 N. Y. St. Rep. 612.

§ 327. Burden of proof.—The burden of satisfying the Surrogate of the genuineness of the signature is on proponent throughout. Hence, contestant need not, in proving forgery, establish it "to the exclusion of every other reasonable hypothesis." If the Surrogate be not satisfied that the signature is genuine, he will refuse probate. The fact that the will is holographic has been held to raise no presumption of actual execution. Matter of Burtis, 43 Misc. 437. Expert evidence is of value only where the opinion given is based on satisfactory premises, i. e., established facts, as reasons for the opinion. In the Burtis case the signature was too good. It was so identical with a concededly genuine one as to afford strong proof of superimposition and tracery. See cases cited in opinion.

§ 328. Signature by other than testator.—The Court of Appeals has held in regard to the acts which the statute requires of a testator in the execution of his will, that it is not absolutely essential that he should perform them himself, provided they are done by a third person in his presence and he assents thereto and adopts the same. Gilbert v. Knox, 52 N. Y. 125, 130. This has chiefly been held with regard to declarations by the draughtsman or some one else present, that the paper is the testator's will, or where such third person requests the witnesses to sign or asks the decedent whether he desires them to sign. This same rule that the act of the third person may be adopted has been applied to the signature; namely, that it is competent for a third person to sign the will for the testator and in his name; only, in such cases the courts will require conclusive proof that this was done at the testator's express desire and also that he was himself unable to append his signature thereto in person. Merchant's Will, 1 Tucker, 151; Robbins v. Coriell, 27 Barb. 556. In the first of the cases last cited there was a dispute upon the probate of the will as to whether the name of the testator was in his handwriting; it was proved, however, that at the time the subscribing witnesses signed, the testator drew a paper out of his pocket, and that his name appeared already signed at the end of the will, and the subscribing witnesses thereupon duly signed their names as such; there was also proof that the testator acknowledged the signature before the witnesses. It was held first that convincing proof of such acknowledgment would amount to an adoption of the signature whether in fact made by the testator or not. Second, that there was not sufficient proof of the forgery alleged in respect of such signature. Where, however, the name is written by another than the testator at his request, the usual acknowledgment that the paper is the will of the testator which is sufficient where the subscription is made in the presence of the witnesses is not sufficient. The testator must expressly adopt the signature.

So Chancellor Walworth held (Chaffee v. Baptist Missionary Convention, 10 Paige, 85, 92), that there must be either, "the actual subscription in the presence of the witnesses or an acknowledgment to each of them that the testator had previously subscribed or had directed some other person to sign it with the testator's name which appeared thereon."

The Court of Appeals (Matter of Will of Phillips, 98 N. Y. 267, 273), Rapallo J., said in a case where the signature was not made in the presence of the witnesses, the exhibition of the will and of the testator's signature attached thereto and his declaration to the witness that it was his last will and testament and his request to the witness to attest the same, were a sufficient acknowledgment of the signature; but the acknowledgment of the signature must in every case include the same identification of the written words as necessarily exists when the witnesses see the testator write. Mitchell v. Mitchell, 16 Hun, 97, 98, aff'd in 77 N. Y. 596.

Under the Revised Statutes (2 R. S., ch. 6, title 1, art. 3, § 33), it was provided that any person who should sign the testator's name to any will by his direction, should write his own name as a witness to the will, under a pecuniary penalty of $50.00 in case of omission. Such omission, however, neither disqualified the person from testifying respecting the execution of the will nor did it affect the validity thereof. This provision was repealed by Laws of 1880, ch. 245, but though inserted in § 41 is not now in Decedent Estate Law. See as to signing through another, Butler v. Benson, 1 Barb. 526; Campbell v. Logan, 2 Bradf. 90; Hollenbeck v. Van Valkenburgh, 5 How. 281.

§ 329. Guiding testator's hand.—In the third place the testator's hand may be guided by a third person in cases of illness, or weakness, or illiteracy and a subscription so made is valid. Campbell v. Logan, 2 Bradf. 90. See also Van Hanswyck v. Weise, 44 Barb. 494; Simpson's Will, 2 Redf. 29. The reason for requiring conclusive proof of an express desire on the part of a testator that another should sign his name for him to the will or should guide his hand in making his own subscription is that in the case of persons who are so ill, or otherwise disabled as to be unable to write, as well as in cases of illiteracy, there is no presumption that the testator knew what he was doing; but the knowledge of the contents of the will and the character of the paper have to be proved. The contestant may well urge that there was undue influence in persuading the ill, disabled, illiterate testator in performing the act of signature. See Rollwagen v. Rollwagen, 3 Hun, 121.

The material inquiry is whether the aid rendered was assistance or control. Matter of Kearney, 69 App. Div. 481, 483. So, if, against the wish of the alleged testator at the time, or without his consciousness as to the purpose, another writes the name with a pen which is merely in physical contact with the hand of the alleged testator, then the signature is not, in legal intent, made by the latter. Ibid., citing Butler v. Benson, 1 Barb. 526; Campbell v. Logan, 2 Bradf. 90, 97.

§ 330. Signature by testator's mark.—It has been observed that legibility of the signature is unimportant. So if the signature is indistinct, if all the letters necessary to the proper spelling of the name cannot be made out, the court may treat the signature as the testator's mark, and signature by mark has long been upheld as valid. See Jackson v. Jackson, 39 N. Y. 153. In Matter of Hopkins, 172 N. Y. 360, the court refers to the experts' using testator's mark in executing or cancelling will as a basis of comparison.

In the first place signature by mark must not be confused with signature of the testator's name by a third party at his direction; nor is the writing of the testator's name around or on either side of, or above, or under the mark made by the testator to be deemed, "signing the testator's name by his direction;" the two are wholly distinct; the testator may subscribe the will by his full name or by his mark, and if he does so that is the subscription required by the statute and would be effective as such even though no one made the written memorandum thereof around such mark. Such memorandum is useful and important not only as a guide to the memory of witnesses and a contemporaneous declaration of the purpose of the mark and that it was made by the testator, but as a protection against fraud; but it is not the essence of the execution. Where it is necessary to prove the execution of an instrument, "by a marksman," the proof consists of evidence of the making of the mark; the writing of the name around it is no essential part of the execution. Jackson v. Jackson, supra, at page 160, citing Butler v. Benson, 1 Barb. 526; Chaffee v. Baptist Missionary Convention, 10 Paige, 91. See Matter of Engler, 56 Misc. 218. But the illiterate must subscribe. So where he merely put a check mark O.K'ing a written memo made by a witness "the will is not subscribed by testator because he is illiterate" it is held not to be a subscription. Matter of Beneventano, 38 Misc. 272. So where one of the witnesses was dead and the other when examined testified that he did not see the mark made, probate was necessarily denied. Porter's Will, 22 N. Y. Supp. 1062. But in case where one of the witnesses is dead and the surviving witness testifies clearly and conclusively as to the making of the mark by testator it has been held to be sufficient proof without confirmatory evidence by other witnesses. Hylands's Will, 27 N. Y. Supp. 961, discussing Matter of Walsh, 1 Tucker, 132, criticised in Simpson's Will, 2 Redf. 29; Reynolds's Will, 4 Dem. 68; Worden v. Van Gieson, 6 Dem. 237; Matter of Dockstader, 6 Dem. 106; Matter of Phelps, 5 N. Y. Supp. 270.

As a cross mark has no such cast or form as to distinguish it from a like mark made by any other individual, it cannot of course be the subject of expert testimony; so unless the witnesses actually saw the mark made, or other witnesses are procurable to testify in this regard, probate must be refused. Yet see Hopkins case, supra.

In the Hyland case Surrogate Ransom summed up his examination of the adjudicated cases in these words:

"While it is desirable to have the testimony of both witnesses to prove the making of a mark by a testator, yet when one cannot be produced and no other person was present, the testimony of the other if his character is not impeached, supported by the apparent good faith of the transaction and a full attestation clause, I hold to be sufficient." 27 N. Y. Supp. 961, 965.

The effect of the attestation clause will be discussed directly, but it may be here observed, that while the decision in the Hyland case referred to the existence of an attestation clause it did not really turn upon that fact. The point decided and we think properly decided was, that if the testimony as to the making of the mark is clear and uncontradicted the will may be admitted upon the testimony of one credible and disinterested witness, it being impossible to produce and examine the other. See also Matter of Wilson, 76 Hun, 1, citing Matter of Kane, 20 N. Y. Supp. 123, and Matter of Hyland, supra. Neither a will of real nor of personal property requires a seal and if it has a seal that fact does not permit the court to attach any greater solemnity to the instrument or to dispense with any of the statutory requirements in ascertaining whether it was duly executed. See Will of Diez, 50 N. Y. 88. See Matter of McCarthy, 59 Misc. 128, Ketcham, Surr., as to recital of seal where there is in fact none. An imperfect signature cannot be deemed the testator's mark where the proof shows that it was after all an uncompleted signature due to the illness, or death of the decedent preventing his completion thereof at the time of the alleged execution. Thus, where the testimony proved that the decedent, Patrick J. O'Neil, started to sign his name but that when he had finished the letter "t" the pen dropped from his hand and he said that he could not go any further, whereupon a third person present took up the pen, made a cross mark, and finished the signature; but there was no proof that his act in so doing was either at the request or with the knowledge and approbation of the testator, Surrogate Rollins held that there was not a sufficient execution. Knapp v. Reilley, 3 Dem. 427. See also Matter of Van Geisen, 47 Hun, 5. The misspelling of the name of a testator subscribed to a will raises no presumption of forgery and if the subscribing witnesses swear the signature was in fact made in their presence and the other formalities were duly observed, the will must be admitted. Matter of Williams, 40 N. Y. St. Rep. 356.

§ 331. The second statutory requirement.—The second subtopic in this discussion falls under the provision of the statute, supra, to wit:

"Such subscription shall be made by the testator in the presence of each of the attesting witnesses or shall be acknowledged by him, to have been so made, to each of the attesting witnesses." See Matter of Purdy, 46 App. Div. 33. The discussion of this provision of the statute is closely related to the foregoing. This provision contemplates that all the subscribing witnesses may be able to testify, that the testator signed in their presence, or they shall severally be able to testify that the testator acknowledged to each that his subscription had been made by him. This provision may be paraphrased by saying, the subscription may be made by the testator either in the presence of each of the witnesses, which means in the presence of both, or it shall be acknowledged by him to each of them as having been theretofore made. Accordingly it has been held that he may make it in the presence of either and acknowledge to the other or that he may make it in the presence of neither and acknowledge it to each. See Matter of Diefenthaler, 39 Misc. 765, Thomas, Surr., citing Hoysradt v. Kingman, 22 N. Y. 372; Willis v. Mott, 36 N. Y. 486; Matter of Carey, 14

Misc. 486; Barry v. Brown, 2 Dem. 309; Lyman v. Phillips, 3 Dem. 459, aff'd 34 Hun, 627, and 98 N. Y. 267; Matter of Engler, 56 Misc. 218.

Signature in the presence of the witnesses even though they do not see the mark made by the pen in the testator's hand has been held to be sufficient. Thus, in Matter of Van Houten, 15 Misc. 196, it appeared that the signature of the testator upon an alleged codicil appeared in the form of a cross mark between the Christian and surname. Both the subscribing witnesses were present. The testator's counsel who prepared the will, read the will to the testator and then held the pen and wrote the testator's name, the testator holding the penholder while he wrote. The witness testified that he did not see what mark the pen made and could not swear whether the signature or the cross mark was made when the testator had his hand on the pen. The other witness testified substantially to the same effect and added that he heard a scratching noise made by the pen. Surrogate Tompkins held from this testimony that the codicil was signed in their presence by the testator and should be probated.

In Matter of Beneventano, 38 Misc. 272, Church, Surr., held a will unexecuted where it appeared that decedent did not sign it, but merely made a check mark opposite a statement at the end of the alleged will, written by the draughtsman, "The present will is not subscribed by the testator because he has stated he is illiterate."

The Court of Appeals in a very recent case (Matter of Laudy, 148 N. Y. 403, 407, modifying S. C., 78 Hun, 479; S. C., later, 161 N. Y. 429), reiterated the rule formerly declared (Matter of the Probate of the Last Will and Testament of James Mackay, Deceased, 110 N. Y. 611) that, "subscribing witnesses to a will are required for the purpose of attesting and identifying it," (Lewis v. Lewis, 11 N. Y. 220; Mitchell v. Mitchell, 77 N. Y. 596, aff'g 16 Hun, 97; Matter of Nevins, 4 Misc. 22; Baskin v. Baskin, 36 N. Y. 416; Chaffee v. Baptist Missionary Society, 10 Paige, 85) and in order to do this it is essential, (a) that they should see the testator subscribe his name, or (b) that with the signature visible to them he should acknowledge it to be his.

In Matter of Clute, 37 Misc. 586, the court observed: A subscribing witness is one who was present at the time when the instrument was executed, and who at that time subscribed his name to it as a witness of the execution. Henry v. Bishop, 2 Wend. 575. Although the witness was present at the execution, if he did not subscribe the instrument at that time, but did it afterwards without request of the parties, he is not a good attesting witness. Hollenback v. Fleming, 6 Hill, 303; Welch v. St. Patrick Church, 63 N. Y. St. Rep. 235; 81 Hun, 372; Pritchard v. Palmer, 68 N. Y. St. Rep. 588; 88 Hun, 416.

A notary who subscribed the notarial certificate of acknowledgment is not a subscribing witness. Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Corey, 27 N. Y. St. Rep. 608, rev'd 48 id. 247, but not on above point. Matter of Rogers, 52 Misc. 412.

In Lewis v. Lewis, supra, it appeared that the paper was so folded that the witnesses did not see any subscription. The court held the will not properly executed, and said: "If the party does not subscribe in their (the witnesses') presence, then the signature must be shown to them, and identified, and recognized by the party, and in some apt and proper manner designated by him as his signature. The statute is explicit and will not be satisfied with anything short of a substantial compliance with its terms."

In Matter of Mackay, supra, it appeared that the paper was so folded that the witnesses could see no part of the writing except the attestation clause, and they did not see either testator's signature or his seal. For this reason the will was held not to have been properly executed.

This language of the courts has been held to mean that the signature of the testator must be so far visible to the witnesses as that they can see and know that the name purporting to be subscribed is the very name of the testator, otherwise they cannot identify it as that of the testator as required by the rule laid down in Matter of Laudy, 148 N. Y. 403. If the will is so far sealed or covered up by the testator that the witnesses can merely see some writing where the signature is claimed to have been, then the signature cannot be fairly said to be visible to the witnesses in such a sense as to constitute a compliance with the statute and the construction given to its language by the courts. Matter of Laudy, 14 App. Div. 160, opinion of Williams, J., at page 164. See also Matter of De Haas, 9 App. Div. 561, and same case on appeal after the jury trial (reported in 19 App. Div. 266) had been had. If the signature is in plain sight, a request that the witnesses sign the paper published and declared as a will is a sufficient acknowledgment of the signature. Matter of Phillips, 98 N. Y. 267; Matter of Lang, 9 Misc. 521; Matter of Stockwell, 17 Misc. 108. But where a will was shown not to have been signed in the witnesses' presence, and neither witness saw the signature, probate was refused, although one witness testified to an acknowledgment by the testatrix. Matter of Abercrombie, 24 App. Div. 407, 408. The Appellate Division says: "It is the subscription, and not the instrument, which the statute requires to be acknowledged; and a signature which is neither seen nor identified can in no proper sense be said to have been acknowledged by the mere statement that it had been affixed to a paper which was characterized as a will." Id., citing Chaffee v. Baptist Miss. Convention, 10 Paige, 85; Lewis v. Lewis, 11 N. Y. 220; Mitchell v. Mitchell, 16 Hun, 97, aff'd 77 N. Y. 596; Matter of Mackay, 110 N. Y. 611; Matter of Laudy, 148 N. Y. 403; Matter of Whitney, 153 N. Y. 259.

A third witness is unnecessary and may be disregarded if there are two subscribing witnesses. Matter of Sizer, 129 App. Div. 7.

§ 332. Same subject.—The testator's signature must have been made before the witnesses signed. This rule was established by the case of Jackson v. Jackson, 39 N. Y. 153, 161. It has been uniformly followed by the subsequent decisions; so where the testator after the witnesses had signed added an attestation clause in his own handwriting, beginning with the words, "subscribed by John Kelly, the testator named in the foregoing will," the Court of Appeals held that the will was not properly executed and probate should be denied. Sisters of Charity v. Kelly, 67 N. Y. 409, 413. This case has been cited as holding that the testator may sign after witnesses if he subsequently acknowledges his signature. An examination of the first three paragraphs negatives this. See cases discussed in opinion of Folger, J. See also Matter of Blair, 16 N. Y. Supp. 875. The acknowledgment by the testatrix in the presence of the witnesses of the making of a signature amounts to nothing if as a matter of fact there was no signature at the end of the will as required by statute. Matter of Booth, 127 N. Y. 109, 115. The same rule applies where the name of the testator written in at some place other than at the end of the will is not shown to have been written with intent to execute the will.

§ 333. Publication.—The testator at the time of making such subscription or at the time of acknowledging the same, shall declare the instrument so subscribed to be his last will and testament. "At the time of" merely requires "contemporaneity in the whole transaction;" e. g., A, the testatrix, says: "this paper is my will and I wish you two to witness it." Then she signs and they sign. This is a sufficient declaration and request. Matter of Gamber, 53 Misc. 168. The object of this provision of the statute is obvious; it is that the will shall be declared to be the testator's last will and testament, and that it shall be so declared to the subscribing witnesses and that such declaration shall be made at the time of executing the will.

While the recitals in an attestation clause may have a strong corroborative effect in supplying deficiencies in proof in certain cases, the absence of recitals in the attestation clause as to the occurrence of one of the essential acts making up a due execution is by no means conclusive. Thus, publication of the will may be proved wholly regardless of the contents of such attestation clause. The omission to recite at the end of the will any or all of the prescribed forms affects neither the validity of the instrument nor the proof thereof. Leaycraft v. Simmons, 3 Bradf. 35, 37.

A will offered for probate must be the will of the testator and of no one else, and when a testator is ignorant of the contents of the paper propounded, it cannot be said to be his will. Proponents are bound to show affirmatively as a condition of probate, that the testator had an intelligent knowledge of the contents of the will. Matter of De Castro, 32 Misc. 193, citing Barry v. Boyle, 1 T. & C. 422; Townsend v. Bogart, 5 Redf. 93; Hyatt v. Lunnin, 1 Dem. 14; Cooper v. Benedict, 3 id. 136; Heath v. Cole, 15 Hun. 100; Jones v. Jones, 42 id. 563; Matter of Green, 67 id. 527. See also Rollwagen v. Rollwagen, 63 N. Y. 504.

The testamentary character of the instrument must have been unequivocally communicated by testator to witnesses. Matter of Delprat, 27 Misc. 355, citing Lewis v. Lewis, 11 N. Y. 220; Ex parte Beers, 2 Bradf. 163. See also Matter of Dale, 56 Hun, 169, aff'd 134 N. Y. 614; Matter of Turrell, 28 Misc. 106, 108. When a will was read over to testator who said, "It was all right," held, together with full attestation clause sufficient evidence of publication. Matter of Buel, 44 App. Div. 4, 5. Where the witnesses deny publication, the impeaching of their credibility does not affirmatively prove what they deny, even where will is holographic. Matter of Moore, 109 App. Div. 762.

The publication must be proved to both witnesses; this is elementary. Matter of Sarasohn, 47 Misc. 535. A request to both to sign, and a confidential statement made to but one that the paper is a will is fatally insufficient. Ibid.

The rule requiring substantial compliance with the statute permits, however, any communication by the testator to the witnesses, at the time of signing or acknowledging, indicating that the testator intended to give effect to the paper so signed and attested as his will. Remsen v. Brinckerhoff, 26 Wendell, 325, 332. Judge Nelson observed in the case just cited, "Any communication of this idea or to this effect will meet the object of the statute." Coffin v. Coffin, 23 N. Y. 1. It has never been supposed that a particular or in fact any form of words was necessary to effect it. Lane v. Lane, 95 N. Y. 494, 498, citing Remsen v. Brinckerhoff, supra.

In the Lane case, Judge Danforth adopted the language of the Court of Errors defining the word "declare" as signifying, "to make known, to assert to others, to show forth," and this in any manner, either "by word or by act, in writing or by signs;" in fine "that to declare to a witness that the instrument described was the testator's will, must mean to make it at the time distinctly known to him by some assertion, or by clear assent in words or signs." Lane v. Lane, supra, 498, 499, citing Coffin v. Coffin, 23 N. Y. 1; Trustees of Auburn Seminary v. Calhoun, 25 N. Y. 422; Gilbert v. Knox, 52 N. Y. 125; Thompson v. Stevens, 62 N. Y. 634; Rugg v. Rugg, 83 N. Y. 592; Dack v. Dack, 84 N. Y. 663; In re Pepoon, 91 N. Y. 255.

The necessary publication may be proved by circumstances as well as words (Lewis v. Lewis, 11 N. Y. 220), and inferred from the conduct and acts of the testator and those of the attesting witnesses in his presence (Lane v. Lane, supra), as well as established by their direct and positive evidence.

Any act of a testator in the presence of the witnesses at the time of the execution of the will that tends to show that he desired to publish the paper as his will, and that he wishes the witnesses to execute it, may be considered. Matter of Hardenburg, 85 Hun, 580, 587, citing Lane v. Lane, supra; Reeve v. Crosby, 3 Redf. 74; In the Matter of the Revocation of the Probate of the Last Will and Testament of Ann Voorhis, Deceased, 125 N. Y. 765; Darling v. Arthur, 22 Hun, 84; Matter of Cottrell, 95 N. Y. 329; Matter of the Will of Bernsee, 141 N. Y. 389; Matter of Hunt, 110 N. Y. 278. So it is held that a man is not to be denied the right to make a testamentary disposition of his property on account of defect of speech and hearing; and a deaf and dumb man may make a will if only the formalities prescribed by the statute are observed in their spirit and intent in such manner as is practicable under the condition existing. In re Perego's Will, 65 Hun, 478. So where a testator makes his will during an illness and his only declaration is in the form of a sign of assent, when asked by the draughtsman or by any person present, if he declares the will to be his last will and testament and desires the witnesses to sign it as such, it will be held sufficient; but such assent in such case must be clearly proved. Heath v. Cole, 15 Hun, 100; Matter of McGraw, 9 App. Div. 372, 381. So where the witnesses are present as the will is being drawn up and are told by the draughtsman that he is writing the testator's will and that they had been sent for as witnesses, and upon the completion of the will the testator takes and reads it and signs it, and then passes it over to the witnesses for their signatures, the circumstances are sufficient to constitute a declaration within the meaning of the statute. See Lane v. Lane, 95 N. Y. 494, 500.

§ 334. Meaning of the words, "at the time of."—The object is general contemporaneity, as above noted. The intent of the statute is that the publication should be made at the time of execution. Ex parte Collins, 5 Redf. 20; Matter of Phillips, 98 N. Y. 267; Walsh v. Laffan, 2 Dem. 498; Jackson v. Jackson, 39 N. Y. 153. A subsequent declaration is not by itself sufficient. Matter of Moore, 109 App. Div. 762. The purpose is that the acts constituting the declaration and publication must be contemporaneous with the execution, that is, form part of the same transaction. Thus the publication may be incorporated with the request to the witnesses to sign. Matter of Murphy, 15 Misc. 208; Coffin v. Coffin, 23 N. Y. 9. Or the publication of the will may be made by the testator immediately before he signs his own name. Matter of Williams, 2 Connoly, 579. If the declaration is made while the witness is signing, it is sufficient. Matter of Phillips, 98 N. Y. 267. In this case the Court of Appeals held that although when the witness started to sign he did not know he was witnessing a will, yet since the declaration was made before the signature was finished, the execution was valid. So where a testator reads his will and signs it in the presence of the witnesses and hands it over with the request that the witnesses read the attestation clause which contains a recital of publication, and the witness does so, there is sufficient compliance with the statute. Matter of Woolsey, 17 Misc. 547. The wording of the statute that the testator should declare the instrument either at the time of making his subscription or at the time of acknowledging the same implies that the declaration may be made to the witnesses apart from each other, for the signature may be acknowledged to them separately. Barry v. Brown, 2 Dem. 309, Rollins, Surr.; Hoysradt v. Kingman, 22 N. Y. 372. Surrogate Calvin held (Von Hoffman v. Ward, 4 Redf. 244), where testator in the presence of all the witnesses read the will adding, "evidently I give all I possess to my mother," that there was sufficient publication, there being also an attestation clause reciting due publication. See also Seymour v. Van Wyck, 6 N. Y. 120. It has been stated that, "knowledge derived from any other source or at any other time, cannot stand as a substitute for the declaration of the testator." Thomas on Law of Estates Created by Will, vol. 2, page 1162. That is to say, that a communication by the testator to the witnesses at some subsequent time, that the paper which they had signed is his will, is not a compliance with the statute. Matter of Dale, 56 Hun, 169. But the Court of Appeals held (Matter of Application of Beckett, 103 N. Y. 167) where a testatrix who had previously made a will and had had some conversation with the witnesses in regard to availing herself of their services in that capacity, called them in after her will was ready for execution and said to one, "This is the paper I spoke to you about signing," and in speaking to the other witness who had witnessed the prior will, asked her if she would sign "that paper" and that she was sorry to trouble her again to sign "the paper," that it was a sufficient compliance with the statute. The court held that there was a sufficient identification of the paper as a will and that the remarks of the testatrix relating back to the prior conversation were not too indefinite or imperfect, but that the witnesses could hardly fail to correctly interpret her meaning, to wit: that the paper she referred to was her will. See opinion of Ruger, Ch. J., at pages 174, 176.

But a mere request to witness "this instrument" is an insufficient publication of it as a will (Matter of Delprat, 27 Misc. 355, citing Rutherford v. Rutherford, 1 Den. 33; Wilson v. Hetterick, 2 Bradf. 427), or "document," even though it proves to be a holographic will. Matter of Turrell, 28 Misc. 106, aff'd 47 App. Div. 561, aff'd 166 N. Y. 330. Witnesses may not guess it to be a will, or infer it such. Wilson v. Hetterick, supra. See, where after hearing will read testator said, "It is all right," Matter of Buel, 44 App. Div. 4. (There was, however, an attestation clause in this case.)

§ 335. Effect of assent where there is no express declaration.—The assent by sign or by affirmative response to a question by the scrivener or counsel, or by any person present, whether the testator declares the instrument to be his last will and testament is usually a valid publication as has been already indicated. Matter of Menge, 13 Misc. 553; Matter of Murphy, 15 Misc. 208. But this must be clearly proven, particularly where the testator is in his last sickness, or very feeble, or is shown to have been unconscious, or under the influence of some drug, such as opium. Heath v. Cole, 15 Hun, 100; Matter of Lyman, 14 Misc. 352. Where the sum of the testimony of the witnesses is to the effect that all the formalities required by the statute were complied with, it is immaterial whether both witnesses testify to identical transactions, so long as there is no conflict between them. Thus where one of the witnesses testified that the testator's counsel who was present asked the testatrix, if it was her desire that the witnesses should witness her will, and she answered yes; and the other witness testified that either the counsel or the testatrix said, at the time of the execution, that the paper they were called upon to witness was the will of the testatrix, it was held to be sufficient evidence of publication. Matter of Voorhis, 125 N. Y. 765. The effect of an attestation clause, where the witnesses do not recollect o where their recollection conflicts, is discussed below. See Matter of Bernse 141 N. Y. 389, 392.

§ 336. Republication.—Cases may occur where the publication of subsequent or supplemental testamentary instrument may cure defects i publication of a prior will. This rule usually applies to cases where th second will or codicil is executed upon a distinctly separate occasion subse quent in time and affects the prior instrument by reference or incorpora tion; but cases have arisen where the two instruments are shown to hav been prepared and in existence simultaneously and to have been the sub ject of the one act of execution. Thus in the Hardenburg case, 85 Hun 580, the General Term held there was due publication upon the following facts: The will having been drawn and read to the testator the draughts man was requested to change a certain clause of the will which was don in the presence of the testator, not, however, by changing the body of th instrument but by appending a brief clause entitled "codicil." The wil was signed by the testator by his mark; then followed the attestation claus signed by both the witnesses one of whom also witnessed the mark; then followed the codicil bearing the same date again signed by the testato and the two witnesses. The subscription to the will and codicil were made at the same time, the testator requested one of the witnesses to sign for him; the attesting clause was read aloud and the witnesses subscribed in both places on the same occasion. The General Term held that the paper though apparently divided into a will and codicil, was really one instrument executed at one time, and to be taken together as one transaction. The declaration of the deceased, after he had executed the paper by signing his name twice, that it was his last will and testament, was a declaration as to the whole instrument, and his request to the witnesses to sign it related to the same. See Graham's Will, 9 N. Y. Supp. 122, and cases cited.

§ 337. Same subject.—But where the paper purporting to be a will or codicil (the due publication or execution of which is alleged to give validity to an imperfectly executed prior testamentary instrument) (see Matter of Douglas, 38 Misc. 609) is executed on an entirely distinct separate occasion, not only must all the formalities of execution (Matter of Stickney, 161 N. Y. 42), be distinctly and separately proven in substantial compliance with the statute, but the fact of reference to or incorporation in such will or codicil must satisfactorily appear. The codicil, however, distinctly referring to the will, need not be actually annexed to the will; it may be on an entirely separate paper; any sufficient words of reference will operate as a republication. Van Cortlandt v. Kip, 1 Hill, 590. This has long been the rule. In the case last cited Judge Cowen remarked, "It seems to me that at this day it would be a violation of all reliable authority to deny that a codicil duly attested to pass real estate would per se, whether it related to real or personal property, operate as a republication of a devise, unless the testator declares that he does not intend the codicil should have that effect" (see cases cited at page 593); and the learned justice quoted the words of Lord Commissioner Eyre, that a codicil might be inseparably annexed to a will not by a wafer or wrapper, but by internal annexation. But a wholly invalid codicil was held inoperative to republish a will to which it was annexed, when revoked by a later will. Matter of Frost, 38 Misc. 404. In Matter of Emmons, 110 App. Div. 701, the rule is stated that a codicil, properly executed, is a final testamentary disposition; and so, if there be an existent and complete will, it takes it up and incorporates it, citing Matter of Campbell, 170 N. Y. 84. But if the will sought to be so taken up is not itself an existent, validly executed will (e. g., only one witness) the codicil cannot so operate, and stands only if complete in itself. Ibid. Hence, it may stand if it suffice to merely designate an executor.

Yet, if there be sufficient identification of the prior will due execution of a codicil to it validates the will not only without re-execution thereof, but even where it has been formally revoked by a subsequent will. Cook v. White, 43 App. Div. 388, 392. In re Knapp's Will, 23 N. Y. Supp. 282, citing 1 Jarman on Wills, page 188; Storm's Will, 3 Redf. 327; Illensworth v. Illensworth, 39 Misc. 194; Brown v. Clark, 77 N. Y. 369. The Court of Appeals held in the case last cited, that where a woman, being unmarried had made her will, and, after her marriage, duly executed a codicil to such will, any testamentary document in existence at the execution of the latter testamentary instrument might by reference be incorporated into it, and the will and codicil were accordingly sustained although the will by law had been revoked by the marriage. The effect of sustaining a will and codicil in such cases, is to revoke the intermediate will, for the date of the codicil attaches to the will revived or republished thereby and constitutes the last will and testament of the testator. See Matter of Miller, 11 App. Div. 337.

"A testatrix named Ellen Campbell made a will on July 6, 1897, revoking all former wills and this she specifically revoked by a will made in 1899. On December 7, 1900, she executed a paper, headed "Codicil to the last will and testament of Miss Ellen Campbell, which will bears date July 6, 1897," and this contained no revocation clause whatever.

Held that the will of 1899 was not her last will.

That the codicil amounted to a republication of the will of 1897 and made it speak, as modified by the codicil, as of the date of the codicil. Matter of Campbell, 35 Misc. 572 (headnote). In Cook v. White, supra, it was held that a will made while testator was insane could be validated if republished in a lucid interval, citing 1 Wms. on Exrs., 7th Am. ed., 267. In Langdon v. Astor's Executors, 16 N. Y. 9, the Court of Appeals held that the effect of a codicil re-executing a will made six years prior, giving a legacy which was in the meantime satisfied or adeemed, did not operate to revive or reinstate such satisfied legacy. See opinion of Denio, C. J., at pages 37 and 38. Generally speaking, then, the publication of a codicil operates as a republication of the will and, so far as regards the formalities of execution, the will is sufficiently proved by proof establishing that the codicil was executed, in accordance with law. Matter of Nisbet, 5 Dem. 286, Rollins, Surr., citing among other cases, Van Cortlandt v. Kip, 1 Hill, 590; Kip v. Van Cortlandt, 7 Hill, 346; Van Alstyne v. Van Alstyne, 28 N. Y. 375; Brown v. Clark, 77 N. Y. 369.

The language of the Court of Appeals in Langdon v. Astor's Executors, supra, to the effect that the republication of a will by a subsequent codicil or codicils does not cause the will and codicils to speak as one as of the date of the last execution (see headnote at page 12), must not be extended beyond the evident meaning of the court in that case; for the learned chief justice observed (at page 537) that all the instruments together although executed at different times did in fact constitute the last will and testament of the deceased. And in the Van Alstyne case, 28 N. Y. 375, Judge Selden observed that a codicil to a will amounts to a republication of the whole will so far as it is not changed by the codicil, and must be held to speak as of the time of the execution of the codicil. The point involved in that case was as to what charges were released by the testator. See as to republication of a will, Rogers v. Potter, 9 Johns. 312; Simpson's Will, 56 How. Pr. 125; Master's Estate, 1 McCarthy, 459. The rule was summarized by Judge Earl (Caulfield v. Sullivan, 85 N. Y. 153, 160), by observing, that where a codicil distinctly refers to and identifies the will and reaffirms the same, the will and the codicil together constitute the will of the testator; the provisions of the former may be treated as embodied in the latter and both may be treated as if executed and published at the same time. Brown v. Clark, 77 N. Y. 369, q. v. at page 375. See Mooers v. White, 6 Johns. Ch. 375; Jackson v. Holloway, 7 Johns. 394. See also Moffett v. Elmendorf, 82 Hun, 470.

§ 338. Insufficient publication.—Failure to comply substantially with the statute as quoted above, namely, that the testator indicate in some sufficient manner to the witnesses and every of them that the instrument they are by him requested to sign as witnesses is his last will and testament, will necessitate a refusal of probate. Thus, where a draughtsman, sent out to bring two persons desired by the testator to witness his will, requested them to come to the house to witness a paper or a will, but it did not appear from the testimony that when they actually were present at the time of execution any declaration was made by or on behalf of the testator identifying the paper which they witnessed as a will, probate was refused for want of due publication. McCord v. Lounsbury, 5 Dem. 68. So where testator of a holographic will requests A to witness "this document" held insufficient. Matter of Turrell, 28 Misc. 106, aff'd 166 N. Y. 330. There must be a declaration of the testamentary character of the instrument. Ibid., citing Baskin v. Baskin, 36 N. Y. 416; Matter of Will of Phillips, 98 N. Y. 267; Matter of Mackay, 110 N. Y. 611; Matter of Laudy, 148 N. Y. 403. It must be remembered in this regard that publication is one of the distinct acts constituting execution; it is an independent fact from subscription or acknowledgment of subscription or from request to sign and must be sufficiently separately proven. In re Nevin's Will, 24 N. Y. Supp.

828, citing Baskin v. Baskin, 36 N. Y. 416. The fact that the messenger sent for the witnesses states to them that they are desired to witness a will, is of itself wholly immaterial except that proof of such fact might contribute in a doubtful case to satisfy the Surrogate that acts or conduct on the part of the testator alleged to constitute a declaration by assent was clearly understood by the witnesses to relate to the execution of a testamentary instrument. See also Dodworth v. Crow, 1 Dem. 256; Matter of Kane's Will, 20 N. Y. Supp. 123; Burke v. Nolan, 1 Dem. 436, 440, 441.

§ 339. The witnesses.—There shall be at least two attesting witnesses, each of whom shall sign his name at the end of the will as witness at the request of the testator. In the first place it may be said that the words, "at the end of the will," have the same meaning already discussed with regard to the testator's signature, except that as the witnesses are supposed to attest an executed instrument, the statute contemplates that they shall sign after the testator has signed (Jackson v. Jackson, 39 N. Y. 153; Rugg v. Rugg, 83 N. Y. 592), or at the end of the signed will. The object of having witnesses is not only that there may be persons capable of identification, and who may be called upon to testify as to substantial compliance with the provisions of the statute, but, particularly, in order that they may by the act of witnessing record the fact that at that time the will had been duly and actually signed by the testator; or as Surrogate Silkman says (Losee's case, 13 Misc. 298):

"In the case of a will a witness must have knowledge that the paper is a will by the declaration of the testator that it has been signed, by either seeing the signature written or by seeing the signature with an accompanying acknowledgment by the testator that it is his or her signature." Lewis v. Lewis, 11 N. Y. 220; Mitchell v. Mitchell, 16 Hun, 97; In re Mackay, 110 N. Y. 611; Sisters of Charity v. Kelly, 67 id. 409; Willis v. Mott, 36 id. 486; Matter of Van Geisen, 47 Hun, 8; Matter of Bernsee, 141 N. Y. 389.

In the Mackay case, Earl, J., in writing the opinion, says:

"Subscribing witnesses to a will are required by law for the purpose of attesting and identifying the signature of the testator, and that they cannot do unless at the time of the attestation they see it."

And in the case of Bernsee, Andrews, Ch. J., cites the Mackay case, and says: "It is essential to the due publication of a will either that the witnesses should see the testator sign the will or that such signature should have been affixed at some prior time and be open to their inspection." Where both witnesses sign before the testator does probate must be refused. See Knapp v. Reilly, 3 Dem. 427. From what has been already said in another connection it will be remembered that intervention of the attestation clause between the testator's and witnesses' signatures, is perfectly proper. See Williamson v. Williamson, 2 Redf. 449; McDonough v. Loughlin, 20 Barb. 238; Matter of Dayger, 110 N. Y. 666, aff'g 47 Hun, 127.

§ 340. Same subject.—There is nothing in the statute as to the witnesses subscribing in the presence of each other. Lyman v. Phillips, 3 Dem. 459, aff'd 98 N. Y. 267; Herrick v. Snyder, 27 Misc. 462; Matter of Diefenthaler, 39 Misc. 765; Willis v. Mott, 36 N. Y. 486; Matter of Engler, 56 Misc. 218. If the testator signs in the presence of one witness requesting him to sign which he thereupon does, and subsequently acknowledges his signature to the other witness who thereupon signs in his presence, it is immaterial that the two witnesses did not subscribe in the presence of each other. Hoysradt v. Kingman, 22 N. Y. 372. If the witnesses, however, are not present at the same time all the formalities must be repeated in the presence of each. Tyler v. Mapes, 19 Barb. 448. If there are more than two witnesses the will may be probated if the formalities were sufficiently complied with in the presence of at least two. Carroll v. Norton, 3 Bradf. 291.

Where the signature purports to have been made in the presence of the witnesses, it has been held sufficient, provided it clearly appeared that the witnesses signed after the signature of the testator had been appended; but where the recollection of a witness is defective upon the point whether the witness saw the testator actually sign, the courts will hold that if the witness was in a position where he could have seen the act of signature he did see it. This is the English rule as stated by Lord Ellenborough that "in favor of attestation it is presumed, if he might see he did see." See Spaulding v. Gibbons, 5 Redf. 316, 319; Gardiner v. Raines, 3 Dem. 98; Peck v. Carey, 27 N. Y. 9, 31.

So, in case where one of the witnesses testified that she was in the same room with the testatrix when she signed, but refrained from looking at her "from fear it would make her nervous," the execution was not invalidated. Bedell's Will, 12 N. Y. Supp. 96. The statute of course contemplates the signature "at the end of the will" by the witnesses; a total absence of signature by a sufficient number of witnesses or at "the end of the will" within the legal meaning of the term invalidates its execution. Ex parte Le Roy, 3 Bradf. 227; Heady's Will, 15 Abb. Pr. N. S. 211; Matter of Case, 4 Dem. 124. And while the witnesses need not actually attest in the presence of each other (Matter of Carey, 14 Misc. 486), yet they must attest upon the same occasion, that is to say, there must be sufficient contemporaneity to make all the acts constituting due execution parts of the same transaction. The continuity of the transaction is of course interrupted if the testator's death intervenes before all the formalities have been complied with, for of course the statute contemplates that all the acts going to make up due execution shall occur during the lifetime of the testator; so where a testatrix died after one witness had signed and before the other could sign, her will was properly refused probate. Matter of Fish, 88 Hun, 56. In that case the General Term held that while it was manifest that the instrument attempted to be executed contained the intentions of the testatrix, and that she intended and had requested the witness to sign it as such, yet in construing the statute the intention of the legislature and not that of the testator must be kept in mind, and that as a will takes effect at the instant the testator dies, it must at such instant be a valid, complete, perfect instrument. It was held (Herrick v. Snyder, 27 Misc.

462, 466, by Hiscock, J.), that signature by a witness, not in the presence of testator, fifteen minutes after testator signed and published the will, at another house, was sufficient, citing Lyon v. Smith, 11 Barb. 124. See also Matter of Phillips, 34 Misc. 442; Ruddon v. McDonald, 1 Bradf. 352.

The witnesses may subscribe by mark or per alium. Mock v. Garson, 84 App. Div. 65. So Surrogate Bradford upheld a will where one of the witnesses attested by making a mark which she then acknowledged to be her mark and signature. Meehan v. Rourke, 2 Bradf. 385, 392. See Jackson v. Van Deusen, 5 Johns. 144. Signature by mark is resorted to only in case of illiterate witnesses, but a witness otherwise able to write may be temporarily incapacitated, in which case a request to a third party, even the other witness, to sign for the incapacitated witness, properly proven, will sustain the execution of the will. In re Strong's Will, 16 N. Y. Supp. 104, where one of the witnesses had a felon on her right hand. The case last cited was peculiar in that, after the death of the testatrix, the witness whose signature had been at her request written by her husband, the other witness, caused her name as written by her husband to be erased and then personally signed her name in its place; the Surrogate does not seem to have passed upon this singular act in his opinion. A subsequent case by Surrogate Silkman in the same county which purports by the headnote to be in conflict with this, is not in fact authority to the contrary. In re Losee's Will, 34 N. Y. Supp. 1120. The learned Surrogate in that case held that as the witness who signed per alium, so signed because her eyesight was too defective for her to see to write her own name, she could not be a competent attesting witness to a will at all. He says at page 1122:

"There must be an identification of the instrument by one who has seen the signature written, or has seen the signature which has been acknowledged by the testator as his or hers. The paper propounded is identified only by the witness, Lefurgy. She is the only one who saw the signature of the decedent at the time of the execution, and can swear that it is the paper that the decedent signed, and which she signed as a witness. It is true that the statute permits the proof of the handwriting of the decedent and of the subscribing witness or witnesses, where the subscribing witness or witnesses are dead, or absent from the State, and their testimony cannot be obtained; but the statute applies only where there have been two attesting witnesses who have signed their names as such. The statute was passed to allow the probate of wills that had been executed with all the formalities required by law. The difficulty in this case is that there was but one witness, and the formalities prescribed by the statute were not fulfilled. Mrs. Brown was not a witness, because she could not see at the time of the alleged execution. If she had been able to see then, and subsequently lost her sight, the case might be different. Such was the case of Cheeney v. Arnold, 18 Barb. 434, relied upon by the proponents. In that case, a subscribing witness who had signed the will had become blind by reason of great age. The case was decided upon the well-established legal principle that, where the witnesses are dead, or by lapse of time do not remember the circumstances attending the execution, the law, after diligent production of all the evidence existing, if there are no circumstances of suspicion will presume a proper execution of the will, particularly when the attestation clause is full. The statute prescribing the necessary formalities for the due execution of a will was passed to provide against fraud and imposition, and the protection given by it cannot be repealed by the court. Its wisdom needs no argument to sustain it, even though in isolated cases injustice is done and the wishes of the dead thwarted. A decree will be entered denying probate."

§ 341. The request to the witnesses to sign.—The statute requires a request by the testator that the witnesses sign the paper declared by him to be his will as witnesses thereof. The circumstances, however, under which wills are frequently executed are such, that the request is not and indeed cannot always be made by the testator. The same principle above noted in other connections may be relied upon in support of valid execution, to wit: that the attendant circumstances were such that from them a request by the testator may properly be implied.

The Court of Appeals in an early case (Coffin v. Coffin, 23 N. Y. 1, 16), Comstock, Ch. J., says: "Now, the statute, it is true, declares that each witness must sign on such request. But the manner and form in which the request must be made, and the evidence by which it must be proved, are not prescribed. We apprehend it is clear that no precise form of words, addressed to each of the witnesses at the very time of the attestation, is required. Any communication importing such request, addressed to one of the witnesses in the presence of the other, and which, by a just construction of all the circumstances, is intended for both is, we think, sufficient. In this case both the witnesses, by the direction or by the knowledge of the testator, were summond to attend him for the purpose of witnessing his will. They came into his presence accordingly, and, in answer to the inquiry of one of them, in which the singular instead of a plural pronoun was used, he desired the attestation to be made. In thus requiring both the witnesses to be present, and in thus answering the interrogatory addressed to him by one of them, we think that he did, in effect, request them both to become the subscribing witnesses to the instrument. Any other interpretation of his language, and of the attending circumstances, would be altogether too narrow and precise." See also Brady v. M'Crosson, 5 Redf. 431. Where witnesses have previously been requested by the testator to attend on a certain occasion to witness his will, and are accordingly so present, and hear the will read and see it signed, and sign it themselves, there is a presumption that the desire of the testator continues and the request to the witnesses though not distinctly proven to have been made in so many words at the time of execution, may be presumed from all the circumstances. Coffin v. Coffin, 23 N. Y. 1, 16; Brady v. M'Crosson, 5 Redf. 431. As to whether the circumstances amount to a request in substantial compliance with the statute, depends upon the facts in each particular case. And so the courts have always held that there is no particular form or manner in or by which it is requisite that the request of the testator should be made; it may be verbal; or it may be by sign; it may come directly from the testator to the witnesses; or it may come interrogatively from the witness to the testator, in which case it will be sufficient if assented to by the latter. See Hutchings v. Cochrane, 2 Bradf. 295. In the case last cited two witnesses were in attendance upon the testatrix, one of whom, George C. Barrett, had copied the will which included an attestation clause. The testatrix knew the purpose for which the witnesses had come; she read the formal attestation clause in their presence; she was told by one that two witnesses were necessary; she signed and published the instrument as her will and they signed it as witnesses in her presence. The request was held to be sufficiently shown. Id., page 296, citing Doe v. Roe, 2 Barb. 200.

Where the words of request are made on behalf of the testator by a third person they must be made in presence of the testator, and his assent to such request may be manifested by words, sign or conduct, indicating acquiescence or approval.

In Peck v. Carey, 27 N. Y. 9, the draughtsman, in the presence of the testator, requested the witnesses to sign the will, and they thereupon signed it; it was held to have been done at the request of the testator.

In Gilbert v. Knox, 52 N. Y. 125, one of the subscribing witnesses had charge of the execution of the will and assumed to act and speak for the testator, and publicly stating the character of the instrument, observed that it was necessary that the testator should request those who were in attendance as witnesses to sign the will as such, and then stated in the presence of the testator and such witnesses, that the testator wished them to sign the will in that capacity, the testator made no dissent, and when the will had been executed took it into his possession and thereafter retained it; held, to be a sufficient request. See also Matter of Nelson, 141 N. Y. 152; Matter of Barnes, 70 App. Div. 523, 528.

In Brinkerhoff v. Remsen, 8 Paige, 499, the chancellor observes: "I think, therefore, there can be no reasonable doubt that, if this will and this attestation clause, or this attestation clause alone, had been read over in the presence and hearing of the testatrix, so that the witnesses could be fully satisfied that she knew and understood its meaning, her request to them to attest it as witnesses would have been such a recognition of the instrument as her will as to make it a good execution thereof, according to the intent and spirit of the statute." See also Trustees of Auburn Theological Seminary v. Calhoun, 25 N. Y. 422.

The rule in regard to the communication by a testator of his request to witnesses through a third person was stated by Surrogate Livingston (Burke v. Nolan, 1 Dem. 436) as follows: "If the communication is made through the intervention of a third person it must be so made in the presence and hearing of the testator, and to the witnesses, so that the attesting witnesses may know of their own knowledge that what was said or done by the third person on behalf of the testator was assented to by him," citing Thompson

v. Stevens, 62 N. Y. 634; Stein v. Wilzinski, 4 Redf. 441, 448; McDonough v. Loughlin, 20 Barb. 238, 244. In the case in which he so stated the rule, the learned Surrogate denied probate for the reason that while the witnesses heard the lawyer who superintended the will ask the testator, "if he wanted those gentlemen to witness it," to which the witnesses testified he made some affirmative motion or indicated his assent in some way, yet there was no evidence that the testator knew whom the lawyer referred to, nor that he knew that the witnesses were there for the purpose of witnessing his will; and moreover the testator was not in a condition to observe or take notice of things not pressed upon his attention. He says (at page 422), "Under such circumstances it must appear that the questions which were asked (of the testator) were made very clear to him," citing Heath v. Cole, 15 Hun, 100. Moreover, it appeared in that case that one of the witnesses was in an outer room and not near enough to the testator or the lawyer to come within the scope of the cases, holding, that where the witness was in such a position that he could and ought to have heard what was said, the request will be presumed to have been made in his hearing. In such cases the presumption will outweigh a defective recollection but not positive testimony that he did not hear. See Lewis v. Lewis, 11 N. Y. 220, 224; Orser v. Orser, 24 N. Y. 51; Wilson v. Hetterick, 2 Barb. 427.

Where a decedent, a man of upwards of sixty years of age, had been deaf and substantially dumb from early childhood, and accustomed to communicate his ideas mainly by signs and gestures, and it appeared from the evidence of the witnesses that the dumb show by the testator indicating his desire that they should witness the instrument, and his thanks to them when they had done so, was unmistakable, the General Term reversed a decree of the Surrogate denying probate and ordered a trial by jury of the material questions of fact as to the execution. Matter of Perego, 65 Hun, 478. See also Matter of Beckett, 103 N. Y. 167, 174; Matter of Stillman, 29 N. Y. St. Rep. 213, and cases cited. The desire of the testator that the witnesses sign may consist merely in a passive acquiescence in the acts and words of the one superintending the execution of the will. Matter of McGraw, 9 App. Div. 372; Matter of Lyman, 14 Misc. 352; Matter of Menge, 13 Misc. 553; Matter of Voorhis, 125 N. Y. 765. The request may be combined with the publication (Matter of Murphy, 15 Misc. 308), and may be made to the witnesses before the testator has actually subscribed his own name (Matter of Williams, 2 Connoly, 579), and is sufficient although it consists merely in a request to one or both witnesses, or to the scrivener to read aloud the attestation clause which contains such request. See Matter of Woolsey, 17 Misc. 547. See also Kingsley v. Blanchard, 66 Barb. 317; Stewart's Will, 2 Redf. 77, 79; Neugent v. Neugent, 2 Redf. 369, 375. In the case last cited Surrogate Calvin held the request insufficient as not appearing to have been made in the presence or hearing of the testatrix, one of the witnesses having subscribed in an adjoining room, there being an absence of sufficient proof that such witness had validly subscribed the instrument. The learned Surrogate remarked: "I am aware that it is not essential that the attesting witnesses should each subscribe in the presence of the other (Hoysradt v. Kingman, 22 N. Y. 372; Willis v. Mott, 36 id. 486), nor is it necessary that the witnesses should sign in the presence of the testator. Ruddon v. McDonald, 1 Bradf. 352; Jackson v. Christman, 4 Wend. 277. If they sign at the testator's request, although in an adjoining room, out of sight, it is sufficient, though their signing must be done at the time of the execution, or acknowledgment, with the knowledge and at the request of the testator (Lyon v. Smith, 11 Barb. 124), but I think the proof in this case fails to show that the signing of the witness Cosgrove was with the knowledge, or at the request, of the testatrix." See Troup v. Reid, 2 Dem. 471, where Surrogate Rollins collates the authorities upon the question of the sufficiency of a decedent's assent to the words of another upon this question. Rutherford v. Rutherford, 1 Denio, 33; Doe v. Roe, 2 Barb. 200; Brown v. De Selding, 4 Sandf. 10; Torry v. Bowen, 15 Barb. 304; Trustees of Auburn Seminary v. Calhoun, 25 N. Y. 422; Matter of Gilman, 38 Barb. 364; Gamble v. Gamble, 39 Barb. 373; Peck v. Carey, supra; Gilbert v. Knox, supra; Heath v. Cole, supra; Burke v. Nolan, supra.

§ 342. Effect of attestation clause.—In connection with all that has been said above with regard to the formal execution of a will, the importance of a proper attestation clause containing recitals of all the acts required by the statute constituting due execution will be manifest. Particularly will this be so where one or more of the witnesses may have died and their oral testimony as to what actually took place cannot be obtained. And its absence, where the witnesses contradict one another as to the occurrence of one of the cardinal facts of due execution may defeat probate. Matter of Sarasohn, 47 Misc. 535. We have already discussed § 2620 of the Code (see ante, page 290), which permits the Surrogate to dispense with the testimony of a subscribing witness, who may be dead or incompetent by reason of lunacy or otherwise, or is unable to testify, or if such a subscribing witness is absent from the State, or if such subscribing witness has forgotten the occurrence or testifies against the execution of the will. Section 2620 provides in such cases that the will may nevertheless be established upon proof of the handwriting of the testator and of the subscribing witnesses, and also "of such other circumstances as would be sufficient to prove the will upon the trial of an action;" this section requires a little further discussion in connection with this discussion of the effect of the attestation clause.

Forgetfulness on the part of a witness may be pecuniarily induced. The courts have held that positive denial of execution of a will by a subscribing witness whose name appears to be signed thereto is "forgetfulness" within the meaning of this section. Estate of Bogart, 67 How. Pr. 313. This section of the Code puts in the form of a statutory enactment, a rule in relation to the proof necessary to show the valid execution of a will, which had been, indeed, before then well settled but had previously existed by force of adjudication alone, to wit: that the due execution of a will might be established by competent evidence even against the positive testimony of the subscribing witnesses thereto. Matter of Cottrell, 95 N. Y. 329, 332. See also Wyman v. Wyman, 118 App. Div. 109. And see opinion of Marcus, Surr., in Matter of Moor, 46 Misc. 537, when the witnesses were all hostile to probate, and so "failed" to remember any publication by decedent. In this case there was a holographic will. Held, this was a persuasive element in deciding on testator's declaration, for the object of the declaration exacted by the statute is to make sure that testator knew he was making a will. Trustees v. Calhoun, 25 N. Y. 422. Prior to the Code it had been held that the facts making due execution need not all or any of them be established by the concurring testimony of the two subscribing witnesses; while both of such witnesses must be examined, a will could be established even in direct opposition to the testimony of both. Trustees of Auburn Seminary v. Calhoun, 25 N. Y. 425; Tarrant v. Ware, reported as a note to Trustees of Auburn Seminary v. Calhoun, where Judge Denio says: "My purpose is to show that whether their denial of what they had attested proceeds from perversity or want of recollection, the testament may in either case be supported." See also Rugg v. Rugg, 83 N. Y. 592; Lewis v. Lewis, 11 N. Y. 220. So Chancellor Walworth stated the rule to be (Jauncy v. Thorne, 2 Barb. Ch. 59), "A will may therefore be sustained even in opposition to the positive testimony of one or more of the subscribing witnesses who either mistakenly or corruptly swear that the formalities required by the statute were not complied with, if from other testimony in the case the court or jury is satisfied that the contrary was the fact." See also Chaffee v. Baptist Missionary Conv., 10 Paige, 91.

In Matter of Fitzgerald, 33 Misc. 325, the Surrogate refused to believe the subscribing witnesses, and admitted the will on the testimony by another of due execution, which was "complete and satisfactory," citing Matter of Cottrell, 95 N. Y. 329; Matter of Carey, 24 App. Div. 531, 542.

§ 343. Same subject.—The cases cited under the discussion (§ 2620 of the Code) are sufficient to indicate the rule. It is now proper to consider what effect, presumptive or otherwise, a proper attestation clause will be deemed to have. In an early case (Nelson v. McGiffert, 3 Barb. Ch. 158, 163), the chancellor held, that an attestation clause, after a considerable lapse of time, when it may reasonably be supposed that the particular circumstances attending the execution of the will have escaped the recollection of the attesting witnesses, is a circumstance from which the court or a jury may infer that the requisites of the statute were complied with. This rule so declared has been substantially adopted in subsequent decisions. See Matter of Bernsee, 141 N. Y. 389, 392; Matter of Probate of Will of Pepoon, 91 N. Y. 255; Matter of Cottrell, 95 N. Y. 329; Lane v. Lane, 95 N. Y. 494; Brown v. Clark, 77 N. Y. 369; Peck v. Carey, 27 N. Y. 9, 31; Trustees of Auburn Seminary v. Calhoun, 25 N. Y. 422; Matter of Van Houten, 15 Misc. 196; Matter of Merriam, 16 N. Y. Supp. 738; Matter of Sears, 33 Misc. 141; Matter of Buel, 44 App. Div 4. See, also, Matter of

Foley, 55 Misc. 162, where all the witnesses were dead, and testatrix had signed by "mark," of which there was no eyewitness procurable, nor any "standard of comparison" to prove his "writing." The Surrogate held that these facts, and the fact there was no case in point, "should not dethrone reason!" Nor should it warrant "a constipated construction of the Statute;" so he admitted the will on "common-law evidence." See, as to when this rule is not applicable, Matter of Turrell, 28 Misc. 106, 109, aff'd 166 N. Y. 330. As when, e. g., one of its recitals is shown to be false. Porteus v. Holm, 4 Dem. 14; Rumsey v. Goldsmith, 3 Dem. 494. So, where the distinct recollection of the witnesses contradicts a recital. Matter of Nash, 76 App. Div. 212.

In Matter of Pepoon, supra, the court held, "Where the attestation clause of a will is full and complete it is not always essential that all the particulars required by the statute to constitute a valid execution of the instrument should be expressly proved." 91 N. Y. 255, 257. See also Matter of Carey, 24 App. Div. 531, 543. The Court of Appeals also observed in the Pepoon case, supra, "the rule is well established that when there is a failure of recollection by the subscribing witnesses the probate of the will cannot be defeated if the attesting clause and the surrounding circumstances satisfactorily establish its execution." See Rugg v. Rugg, supra; Matter of Kellum, 52 N. Y. 517, 519. See also Lane v. Lane, 95 N. Y. 494.

In Matter of Sizer, 129 App. Div. 7, Gaynor, J., asks whether a full attestation clause and proof of the signatures of the testator and the witnesses was "alone evidence of the execution of the will with the formalities required by law?" He answers: "It was." See opinion at p. 9 and cases at p. 10.

§ 344. Same subject.—It has already been observed that the attestation clause is no part of the will, but is useful merely as a memorandum of facts which may be presumed to have transpired, which may aid the recollection of the witnesses and even overbear their testimony where there is a conflict. Where one of the witnesses is dead and the recollection of the other is defective much effect may be given to the attestation clause; especially so when it purports to make the subscribing witnesses say that all the essentials to the proper execution of the will were observed. Matter of Brissell, 16 App. Div. 137, 139, citing Matter of Will of Kellum, 52 N. Y. 517; Brown v. Clark, 77 N. Y. 369; Matter, etc., of Pepoon, 91 N. Y. 255; Matter, etc., of Cottrell, 95 N. Y. 329; Matter, etc., of Hesdra, 119 N. Y. 615. This presumption in favor of the regularity of the execution of a will when the attestation clause contains full recitals, may be strengthened by proof, that it was read aloud at the time of the execution. Matter of Wilcox, 14 N. Y. Supp. 109.

But the formal proof may not be presumed from the attestation clause alone. Matter of Delprat, 27 Misc. 355, citing Woolley v. Woolley, 95 N. Y. 231; Lewis v. Lewis, 11 N. Y. 220. But the presumption created by the existence of such a clause may be rebutted. In Woolley v. Woolley, 95 N. Y. 231, it was held that the attestation clause was not effectual to raise the presumption of the formal and due execution of the will against positive evidence to the contrary. See also Lewis v. Lewis, 11 N. Y. 220; Mitchell v. Mitchell, 77 N. Y. 596; Matter of Van Geison, 47 Hun, 5. But these are cases where the evidence of the witnesses against the recitals in the attestation clause is positive and explicit as to the nonoccurrence of one of the essential facts recited in such clause. See also Rumsey v. Goldsmith, 3 Dem. 494. Failure of the memory of both witnesses may, however, be disregarded if the facts may be found from other evidence in the case and the inference to be drawn therefrom. Matter of Laudy, 14 App. Div. 160, Williams, J. So, if it appears that at the time of the execution the attestation clause was not read and the witnesses were not even permitted to see it, and the witnesses differ as to the compliance with the statute, the attestation clause cannot have its usual effect. Matter of Laudy, supra; M'Cord v. Lounsbury, 5 Dem. 68. Surrogate Rollins discussed the adjudicated cases somewhat fully (Rolla v. Wright, 2 Dem. 482), in connection with § 2620 of the Code and the effect of an attestation clause (among others Butler v. Benson, 1 Barb. 526; Rider v. Legg, 51 Barb. 260; Moore v. Griswald, 1 Redf. 388), in all of which cases the court commented on the absence of circumstances calculated to arouse suspicion. In the following cases a full attestation clause was instrumental in sustaining a will where the memory of witnesses was defective. Matter of Sears, 33 Misc. 141, 146; Matter of Graham, 9 N. Y. Supp. 122; Matter of Hunt, 110 N. Y. 278; Matter of Rounds, 7 N. Y. St. Rep. 730; Matter of Townley, 1 Connoly, 400; Matter of Wilcox, 14 N. Y. Supp. 109; Matter of Langtry, 5 N. Y. Supp. 501; Matter of Frey, 2 Connoly, 70; Potter v. McAlpine, 3 Dem. 108.

But on the other hand where the attestation clause is as to its recitals in conflict with one of the witnesses and it appears the other never read it, it loses its value. Porteus v. Holm, 4 Dem. 14, 23. So if any one of the recitals in the attestation clause is shown to be false it loses its presumptive force. Rumsey v. Goldsmith, 3 Dem. 494; Matter of Turrell, 28 Misc. 106, 109, aff'd 166 N. Y. 330; Porteus v. Holm, 4 Dem. 14. The attestation clause itself is always some proof of the due execution of the will (Matter of Nelson, 141 N. Y. 152, 156), although it does not furnish any evidence of the facts. Matter of Look, 125 N. Y. 762, aff'g 4 Silv. 233. But where beyond its presence or in addition to its presence there is evidence that it was read aloud in the hearing of the testator and witnesses, with the assent of all concerned, express or inferential, to its statement of facts, it cannot in the words of Judge Finch (Matter of Nelson, supra), "be denied that there is some and quite persuasive evidence of the actual occurrence of the facts recited." This is so even if one of the essential requirements is omitted from the recital. If in addition to such omission, however, which lays the fact open to dispute, one of the surviving witnesses denies the occurrence of the fact, the Surrogate is warranted in refusing probate unless there is other and convincing evidence either from persons present, whether as witnesses or not, or from the attendant circumstances which tend to satisfy him that the omission was accidental and that the requirements so omitted were actually complied with. Matter of Nelson, supra.

But it must be noted that the absence of an attestation clause does not invalidate the will, nor raise any presumption of defective execution. Lewis v. Merritt, 98 N. Y. 207; Matter of Crane, 68 App. Div. 355, 357.

§ 345. Due proof.—Due execution of a will is presumed although all the witnesses are dead, provided their handwriting be proved as required by the Code, even though there is an attestation clause defective in respect of some one of the essential requirements. Price v. Brown, 1 Bradf. 291. See § 300, ante, discussing § 2620 of the Code. But in such case it is proper for the Surrogate to require proof of "other circumstances" under § 2620. See Brown v. Clarke, 77 N. Y. 369. Surrogate Fitzgerald in a recent case (Matter of the Will of John Oliver, 13 Misc. 466), reviewed the cases and stated what are the "other circumstances" which in the judgment of a Surrogate should be sufficient to prove the will within the meaning of § 2620. The learned Surrogate uses this language at page 473: "I have before me proof of the handwritings of the testator and of his deceased witnesses; a will reasonable in its provisions when the circumstances of the family are considered, the scheme of which was suggested in part, but as a whole was approved by the testator; his declarations as to the manner in which it was executed, showing that he knew the requisites of the execution, and that all the facts were in conformity with the statute, and the whole transaction from beginning to end in apparent good faith with nothing to raise a suspicion to the contrary; and the paper was preserved for ten years with no suggestion of dissatisfaction with its provisions. These facts, under the decisions, would be ample proof to admit the will in evidence on the trial of an action, when its admission might go far to determine, if it would not be conclusive of, the rights of the parties to the controversy, and under § 2620 of the Code, already cited, the facts are equally effective to prove its execution in a special proceeding on the probate of a will in this court.

"I hold that the will was duly executed and I will sign a decree admitting it to probate." So Surrogate Calvin, where two of the witnesses were dead and the handwriting of a testator and such witnesses was proved and there was a full attestation clause, took into consideration the fact that the testator was a lawyer and the will was in his handwriting, as circumstances tending to show regularity in execution. Williamson v. Williamson, 2 Redf. 449. In addition, in this case there was a third witness who corroborated the attestation clause in all respects. Where a witness did not recollect distinctly the occurrences at the time of execution but on reading the attestation clause testified that he believed it was true in its recital of the facts, the will was admitted to probate. In re Klett, 3 Misc. 385.

Where the subscribing witnesses are strangers to the testator, while their testimony is sufficient to prove due execution (Marx v. McGlinn, 88 N. Y. 357), it is proper to identify the testator by proving his handwriting or by any other sufficient method. Mowry v. Silber, 2 Bradf. 133.

See also Simpson's Will, 2 Redf. 29; Peebles v. Case, 2 Bradf. 226, which see for full discussion of circumstantial evidence where witnesses deny or forget the execution, citing Jackson v. Christman, 4 Wend. 277, where Justice Sutherland said: "If the subscribing witnesses all swear that the will was not duly executed, the devisee may notwithstanding go into circumstantial evidence to prove its due execution."

While it has been held that the testimony of persons present at the execution of a will other than the subscribing witnesses, is not entitled to the same weight as that of such witnesses (Matter of Higgins, 94 N. Y. 554), on the principle doubtless that the minds of the subscribing witnesses being addressed to the fact of execution are more likely to be actually retentive of the circumstances, yet this will not be true where the third person happens to be the lawyer superintending the execution of the will and familiar with the legal requirements, particularly if the subscribing witnesses are persons who are not shown to possess knowledge of the essential elements of a valid execution. See Egan v. Pease, 4 Dem. 301; Matter of Cornell, 89 App. Div. 412. See ante, at page 288, as to when an attorney, not a subscribing witness, may testify, i. e., where testator has waived the statute.

Where the will is holographic and particularly where the testator is shown to have been familiar with the requirements essential to due execution, there is some presumption so far as the acts of the testator are concerned that he complied with the statute. See Lawrence v. Norton, 45 Barb. 448; Matter of Buckley, 2 N. Y. Supp. 24; Williamson v. Williamson, 2 Redf. 449; Matter of Stillman, 9 N. Y. Supp. 446. But in Matter of Turrell, 28 Misc. 106, aff'd 47 App. Div. 561, and 166 N. Y. 330, where witness was asked to witness a "document" it was held insufficient, though the "document" was a holographic will, citing Matter of Beckett, 103 N. Y. 167, 174. See also Lewis v. Lewis, 11 N. Y. 220; Matter of Dale, 56 Hun, 169; Matter of Eldred, 109 App. Div. 777. In Matter of Moor, 109 App. Div. 762, it is said: "In proving the execution of a will of that kind, the evidence of its publication may be relaxed somewhat." See also Matter of Palma, 42 Misc. 469.

TESTAMENTARY CAPACITY

§ 346. Presumption that everyone is compos mentis.—See Jarman on Wills, ch. 3, on personal disabilities of testators, Redf. on Wills, 4th ed., vol. 1, ch. 4, on mental capacity requisite to execute a valid will, Schouler on Wills, 2d ed., part 2, ch. 1, on capacity and incapacity to make a will.

It has already been stated that the proponent must sustain the burden of proof, and in offering his evidence in support of the will must make out a prima facie case as to the testator being at the time the will is alleged to have been executed competent in the eyes of the law to dispose of his property. The proponent, however, has in his favor the legal presumption that every man is compos mentis. The provisions of the Revised Statutes which permit the making of a will of personal property by any male of the age of eighteen years or upwards or any female of the age of sixteen years or upwards "of sound mind and memory," and the making of a will of real property of all persons except "idiots, persons of unsound mind and infants," are the provisions under which the law of testamentary capacity in this State has developed. The party propounding the will is bound to prove to the satisfaction of the court that the testator was at the time of making and publishing the document propounded as his will "of sound and disposing mind and memory." Delafield v. Parish, 25 N. Y. 9. See also Ramsdell v. Viele, 6 Dem. 244, citing Harper v. Harper, 1 T. C. 355; Kingsley v. Blanchard, 66 Barb. 317, 322; Miller v. White, 5 Redf. 320; Matter of Cottrell, 95 N. Y. 336; Cooper v. Benedict, 3 Dem. 136; Matter of Freeman, 46 Hun, 467; Matter of Goodwin, 95 App. Div. 183.

Of course if it develops upon the proponent's case that the testator was very old, or very sick, or very weak, or the subject of habits of intoxication or other self-indulgences from which physical or mental weakness might develop, the burden upon the proponent is increased and he will have to offer clear and convincing proof that the testator's mind accompanied the act of execution. See Matter of Hitchcock, 16 Weekly Dig. 533; McSorley v. McSorley, 2 Bradf. 188; Loder v. Whelpley, 111 N. Y. 239. See Hyatt v. Lunnin, 1 Dem. 14, 20. So in Weir v. Fitzgerald, 2 Bradf. 42, the court held, something more than formal proof of execution is necessary to establish the validity of a will when from the infirmness of the testator or the circumstances attending the transaction the usual inference cannot be drawn from the execution itself.

§ 347. What is testamentary capacity.—In the first place the age of the testator is a material fact. The statutes fix the minimum age when persons of sound mind may execute a will; this has been held to indicate the judgment of the legislature that a person under that age is not of sufficient mental capacity presumably, though with ordinary intelligence, to execute such an instrument. See Townsend v. Bogart, 5 Redf. 93, 105. But once the age which the statute fixes as the age at which persons may make wills has been reached, then there is no presumption from mere advanced age without proof of other circumstances of mental unsoundness; or as Judge Rollins puts it, "no man can live so long as to be legally incapable by the mere lapse of years, from ordering the disposition which shall after his death be made of his estate." Matter of Henry, 18 Misc. 149; Matter of Halbert, 15 Misc. 308; Matter of Pike, 83 Hun, 327; Matter of Otis's Will, 22 N. Y. Supp. 1060; In re Carver's Will, 23 N. Y. Supp. 753; Cornwell v. Riker, 2 Dem. 354, 366, citing Van Alst v. Hunter, 5 Johns. Ch. 158; Clarke v. Fisher, 1 Paige, 171; Horn v. Pullman, 72 N. Y. 276; Maverick v. Reynolds, 2 Bradf. 360; Moore v. Moore, 2 Bradf. 261; Leaycraft v. Simmons, 3 Bradf. 35; Carroll v. Norton, 3 Bradf. 291; Crolius v. Stark, 64 Barb. 112.

The general principles of law in relation to the capacity of a person to make a will have long been settled. So Chancellor Walworth declared (Clarke v. Fisher, 1 Paige, 171, 173) that "the testator must be of sound and disposing mind and memory so as to be capable of making a testamentary disposition of his property with sense and judgment in reference to the situation and amount of such property, and to the relative claims of the different persons who are or might be the objects of his bounty." Stewart v. Lispenard, 26 Wend. 255, 306, 311, 312; Blanchard v. Nestle, 3 Denio, 37. The rule as to what constitutes testamentary capacity has been variously stated, but nowhere perhaps more clearly than in the leading case of Delafield v. Parish, 25 N. Y. 9, to wit: "It is essential that the testator has sufficient capacity to comprehend perfectly the condition of his property, his relation to the persons who were, or should, or might have been the objects of his bounty, and the scope and bearing of the provisions of his will. He must, in the language of the cases, have sufficient active memory to collect in his mind, without prompting, the particulars or elements of the business to be transacted, and to hold them in his mind a sufficient length of time to perceive at least their obvious relations to each other, and to be able to form some rational judgment in relation to them. A testator who has sufficient mental power to do these things is, within the meaning and intent of the Statute of Wills, a person of sound mind and memory, and is competent to dispose of his estate by will." See also Matter of Townsend, 75 Hun, 593; Matter of Seagrist, 1 App. Div. 615, 620; Matter of Carey, 14 Misc. 486; Matter of Will of Snelling, 136 N. Y. 515, 517; Matter of Flansburgh, 82 Hun, 49; Matter of McGraw, 9 App. Div. 372; Matter of Bolles, 37 Misc. 562, 566; Van Guysling v. Van Kuren, 35 N. Y. 70; Matter of Martin, 98 N. Y. 193. See Lavin v. Thomas, 123 App. Div. 113. The general line along which all the cases have been decided is very clearly discussed by Senator Verplanck, in Stewart v. Lispenard, 26 Wend. 255, at page 306: "When the testator is shown to possess such a rational capacity as the great majority of men possess, that is sufficient to establish his will. 'When this can be truly predicated, bare execution is sufficient' (per Sir J. Nichol, 1 Hagg. R. 385); no matter how arbitrary its provisions, or how hard and unequal may be its operation on his family. On the other hand, when a total deprivation of reason is shown, whether from birth, as in idiocy, or from the entire subsequent overthrow of the understanding, whether permanently or existing only at the time of execution, further inquiry is needless; the will is itself a nullity, however just and prudent in its provisions, and with whatever fairness of intention it may have been obtained by well meaning friends. This intermediate class, who fall below the most ordinary standard of sound and healthy minds, whether from the partial disease of one faculty, or the general dullness and torpor of the understanding, are not on that account interdicted from the common rights of citizens, and least of all from that of testamentary disposal. But their defect of intellect may furnish most essential and powerful evidence, in union with other proof, that some particular will or codicil was obtained by fraud and delusion; that it had not the consent of the will and understanding, and was not executed by one who in that respect was of a sound and disposing mind and memory. As in the former class of cases, there is a general legal disability, because the party, from total unsoundness of mind and memory is unable to consent, with understanding, to any legal act whatever; so, in the latter instances, there may be shown an absence of consent to the particular will, from inability to comprehend its effect and nature." See also Horn v. Pullman, 72 N. Y. 269, 276.

§ 348. Same subject.—It has already been intimated that mere advanced age does not create any presumption of lack of testamentary capacity; but it is always a most material inquiry as to whether by reason of advanced age the testator's powers have been thereby impaired and weakened to the extent of rendering him incapable of making a lawful will. Horn v. Pullman, 72 N. Y. 269; Van Guysling v. Van Kuren, 35 N. Y. 70, 74; Bleeker v. Lynch, 1 Bradf. 458, 472; Matter of Metcalf, 16 Misc. 180, 182, citing Matter of Carver, 3 Misc. 573. So in Matter of Dwyer, 29 Misc. 382, it was held that the marriage of a woman seventy years old with a much younger man, of itself, though foolish, did not rebut the presumption of sanity. See Matter of Barbineau, 27 Misc. 417. In Matter of Brower, 112 App. Div. 370, capacity was predicated of a testatrix ninety-six years old.

It has been held that there is no standard of mental capacity which it is necessary for a person to possess to enable him to make a disposition of his property by will; all that is required is that the testator have sufficient intelligence and mental power to understand what he is doing and the legal effect of the instrument he is making. In re Otis's Will, 22 N. Y. Supp. 1060; In re Gray's Will, 5 N. Y. Supp. 464. Therefore no presumption arises from the mere fact of old age if the faculties be unclouded and the testator have competent understanding; which necessarily must be determined from the facts of each particular case. See Delafield v. Parish, 25 N. Y. 9; Clark v. Davis, 1 Redf. 249. Chancellor Kent (Van Alst v. Hunter, 5 Johns. Ch. 158) laid down the rule which has always been followed that the law looks only to the competency of the understanding and neither age nor sickness nor extreme distress nor debility of body will affect the capacity to make a will if sufficient intelligence remains. So Judge Andrews says (Horn v. Pullman, supra), incapacity cannot be inferred from vast age, or a feeble condition of the mind or body; and he adds (72 N. Y. 269, 276), "such a rule would be dangerous in the extreme and the law wisely sustains testamentary disposition made by persons of impaired mental and bodily powers, provided the will is the free act of the testator and he has sufficient intelligence to comprehend the condition of the property and the scope, meaning and effect of the provisions of the will." See Matter of Conaty, 26 Misc. 104. So proof that testator was "an old man, feeble in mind and body and could not make his mark unassisted," was held insufficient of itself to show lack of capacity. Matter of Dixon, 42 App. Div. 481; Patterson's Will, 13 N. Y. Supp. 463. Therefore it may be observed that the existence of physical infirmity whether due to age or illness, merely operates so that the usual inference as to capacity cannot be drawn from the mere formal execution of the will. Weir v. Fitzgerald, 2 Bradf. 42, 69.

§ 349. Analysis of discussion.—The more important decisions in respect of this subject will be discussed under the following heads:

Illness and bodily infirmity.

Eccentricity.

Addiction to the use of liquor, opium, etc.

Idiocy, lunacy and delusions.

§ 350. Rule of evidence.—It has been noted in an early chapter that, as to the examination of witnesses, the generic rules in Courts of Record prevail in the Surrogate's Court, e. g., where a legatee under a will has made admissions as to the lack of testator's testamentary capacity as of the date of the will, or even prior thereto, such admissions may be competent and cogent to bind him, were he the only person in interest; but they cannot be held binding on other legatees, for their interest is separate and several. Matter of Kennedy, 167 N. Y. 163, 177; Matter of Myer, 184 N. Y. 54, 61.

§ 351. Illness and bodily infirmities.—The effect of chronic or acute illness or of congenital bodily infirmities must always be taken into account in determining the question of testamentary capacity; but the existence of such illness is by no means conclusive upon the question. Matter of McLean, 31 Misc. 703; Matter of White, 121 N. Y. 406, 413; Dobie v. Armstrong, 160 N. Y. 584, 593. The fact that a man is upon his deathbed when he executes a will is no argument against its validity (Matter of Seagrist, 1 App. Div. 615, 620); nor will medical testimony to the effect that the testator was very weak, and that his mental powers were impaired, or that he was a mental and physical wreck or incoherent in speech suffice to outweigh positive testimony by other witnesses competent and disinterested to testify to actual facts, from which the court may infer that the testator was possessed of sufficient comprehension to enable him to comprehend generally the existence of his property, to remember the persons who depended upon him, and to decide intelligently as to the propriety of his benefactions to them. Matter of Seagrist, supra; Opinion of Rumsey, page 620. The character of the will, plus proof that the testator, while dictating it, was under a powerful dose of morphia, may turn the scale in deciding the question, "Is it, or is it not, the real testamentary desire of the decedent?" Matter of Simon, 47 Misc. 552. See also In re Buckley's Will, 2 N. Y. Supp. 24, Ransom, Surr. See also In re Liddy's Will, 4 N. Y. Supp. 468, Ransom, Surr., the first headnote: "The testimony of the three subscribing witnesses to a will, showing testamentary capacity, will prevail over the opinion of an expert, where to give credence to the latter would be to impute perjury to the former." But where the evidence of the attending physician, as to a condition of stupor or of impairment of faculties or of incoherence on which he bases an opinion as to lack of capacity to transact business or to make a will is corroborated as to the facts on which he bases an opinion by the testimony of the subscribing witnesses or of other persons at the time of execution, probate will be refused. See Matter of Coop, 6 N. Y. Supp. 664. Where a testator over ninety years of age met with an accident by which he fell and broke his thigh, from which injury he died in a short time, and it appeared that he suffered much pain, and was in the language of the witness "a very sick man after the accident," yet it nowhere appeared that his mind was affected or impaired by the accident up to the time of the execution of the will, but it was clear he understood the nature of such will and gave explicit directions in regard to its construction, the will was admitted to probate. Matter of Harris, 19 Misc. 388. See also In re Schreiber's Will, 5 N. Y. Supp. 47, where testator suffered from Bright's disease and was at times intemperate. In Matter of Soden, 38 Misc. 25, probate was refused of a will of a woman of seventy, where the will was proven to be in conflict with previously expressed testamentary intentions and was executed when she was a victim of tumor in the face, paralysis, progressive aphasia and symptoms of paresis, and afflicted with a delusion. So, where a person tenaciously holds to a belief that a certain state of affairs exists, which do not, he is suffering from a delusion, and where a will is governed by such a delusion it is invalid. Matter of Lapham, 19 Misc. Rep. 71; Matter of Soden, 38 Misc. 25, 27.

§ 352. Same—Paresis; heredity.—In Matter of Myer, 184 N. Y. 54, the attack on capacity was based on paresis. Contestant, in a proceeding to revoke probate, sought to prove this condition by calling two physicians who had attended the brother and the mother of testatrix. These physicians testified that both their patients had general paresis. The Court of Appeals, reversing the courts below, held that such testimony was prohibited by § 834, and not within the exceptions of § 836; also, that there was no proof, anyhow, that the paresis as to which they testified was of the transmissible type so as to involve a hereditary taint in testator. The general rule is stated to be: "Where the mental soundness of an individual is in question, the sanity of the blood relations in the ancestral line may be shown, as tending to establish the fact in issue," citing Welsh v. People, 88 N. Y. 458. But "there must be evidence that such disease is hereditary or transmissible." Ibid.

Admissibility of proof of hereditary tendency is upheld only in aid or support of other evidence going directly to show disordered mind in the person whose capacity is under examination. Pringle v. Burroughs, 185 N. Y. 375, 381, aff'g 100 App. Div. 366.

§ 353. Same—General debility or paralysis.—In Matter of Rounds, 25 Misc. Rep. 101, it was held of a will executed when the testatrix was in a very feeble condition, being afflicted with creeping palsy, and a witness testifying to an expressed desire of the testatrix for a different disposition of the property, than that made, that probate was properly refused, citing Delafield v. Parish, 25 N. Y. 9; Van Guysling v. Van Kuren, 35 id. 70. A mere progressive paralysis although conducing to, or resulting in death, and extending over a period of years will not raise any presumption of incapacity, if the decedent continued to administer all his business affairs with prudence and judgment. In re Birdsall's Will, 13 N. Y. 421. Incompetency may, under acute recurring attacks, be intermittent. Matter of Winne, 50 Misc. 113. It may be observed that the intimation in the celebrated case of Stewart v. Lispenard, 26 Wend. 255 to 306, that a man's capacity may be perfect to dispose of his property by will, although wholly inadequate to the management of other business, as for instance to make contracts for the purchase or sale of property, has not been wholly approved in subsequent decisions. See Delafield v. Parish, supra. And proof of a testator's ability to transact his ordinary business affairs with judgment and discretion, and to manage his property with reasonable prudence, will generally be considered very strong if not conclusive evidence of testamentary capacity. See Matter of Birdsall's Will, supra; Matter of Kiedaisch, 2 Connoly, 435; Matter of Gray, 5 N. Y. Supp. 464; Coit v. Patchen, 77 N. Y. 533; Horn v. Pullman, 72 N. Y. 269; Pilling v. Pilling, 45 Barb. 92; Crolius v. Stark, 64 Barb. 112; Heyzer v. Morris, 110 App. Div. 313. So evidence of some acute serious illness during which the testator may well be said to have been incapable of making a will, must if it is desired to show lack of capacity at the time of execution be followed by affirmative proof showing that the effect of such illness or attack continued; for there is no presumption that it does. Just as has been held in the case of intoxication and drunkenness the disability ends when the exciting cause is removed. In re Johnson's Will, 27 N. Y. Supp. 649, 650, Fitzgerald, Surr. In this it differs from insanity which once shown to exist is presumed to continue until there is proof that intelligence and reason have reasserted themselves. Where a paralytic attack is of so severe a character as to completely alter the testator's disposition and personal habits, destroying his aptitude for business and results in moroseness and delusions, these facts may raise a presumption of impairment of the mental powers, but this presumption may always be met by proof that at the time of execution the testator knew what he was about and exercised his judgment, will, and memory in the testamentary act. See Sheldon v. Dow, 1 Dem. 503, and Delafield v. Parish, 25 N. Y. 1. So where at the time or just prior to the execution of the will the testator has fainted and lost consciousness, this does not prove sufficient mental weakness to render him incapable of executing a will, particularly if, subsequently, the testator refers to the fact of having made a will or to some of the testamentary dispositions contained in the instrument. Matter of Mahoney, 34 St. Rep. 183. See also Cheney v. Price, 90 Hun, 238.

If the Surrogate is satisfied that at the time the will was executed the testator was competent and of sound mind, proof of severe illness prior to that time culminating subsequently in acute mental disorder or in irrational action or dementia is immaterial. Matter of Davis, 91 Hun, 209; Matter of Fricke, 19 N. Y. Supp. 315. Evidence of subsequent physical or mental weakness is of course proper only as bearing upon the impairment of his mind and body. Matter of Skaats, 74 Hun, 462, where the General Term in the First Department (at p. 467) says: "It is conceivable that, by reason of physical and mental weakness, one might be deprived of testamentary capacity just prior and subsequent to a period when such capacity existed, and the question in all such cases necessarily must be as to the mental condition of the testator at the date when the will was made." Declarations of the testator, while incompetent to prove external facts are admissible on the question of mental capacity or undue influence. Matter of Woodward, 167 N. Y. 28; Matter of Potter, 161 N. Y. 84; Waterman v. Whitney, 11 N. Y. 157; Chambers v. Chambers, 61 App. Div. 299, 308; Marx v. McGlynn, 88 N. Y. 374; Matter of Clark, 40 Hun, 233.

§ 354. Same—Total breakdown.—When the disease is one which, if proven to exist, by its very nature involves breaking down of the brain tissues, the decision is easily made. Non experts may testify to acts and symptoms. The expert may give his opinion, by observation or inference, as to the nature and effect of the disease. Matter of Wendel, 43 Misc. 571.

§ 355. Same—Nature of will.—The unfairness or injustice of a will made by a sick or aged testator, is no proof of lack of testamentary capacity in and of itself. If the disposition is unnatural and inconsistent with the obligation of the testator, it then becomes the duty of the proponents to give some explanation. Matter of Budlong, 126 N. Y. 423; Matter of Soden, 38 Misc. 25, 27. Matter of Donohue, 97 App. Div. 205. An unnatural disinheritance of an infant child taken together with testimony as to mental weakness requires submission to a jury, in an action under § 2653*a*. Byrne v. Byrne, 109 App. Div. 476. But, if a testator says in his will that the disinherison of a child is for undutifulness, the proponent is not under any burden of accounting therefor. Matter of Arensburg, 120 App. Div. 463, citing Ross v. Gleason, 115 N. Y. 664. Of course, if the disinheritance is the result of fraud or undue influence a different situation is presented. (See below.)

In Matter of Lowenthal, 2 Misc. Rep. 323, it was held that where a testator died of paralytic dementia, having made his will while in the first stages of the disease and giving his wife but a small sum, where their devotion prior to that time was marked, a finding of incompetency was sustained.

It is proper to consider the provisions of the will in determining this question (La Bau v. Vanderbilt, 3 Redf. 384), but the crucial inquiry is, was the testator compos mentis at the time of execution (Hoyt v. Ross, 20 N. Y. Supp. 521); if he was, his will must stand, although it is evidently the result of anger or ill-will. Matter of Suydam, 84 Hun, 514.

§ 356. Forgetfulness and mistake.—Failure of memory is not of itself evidence of lack of mental capacity, nor will the mistakes consequent thereon invalidate a will (Matter of Stewart, 13 N. Y. Supp. 219; Matter of Lang, 9 Misc. 521); still if the failure of memory is so complete as that the testator cannot recognize or recall those dependent upon his bounty or so marked as to obscure his testamentary intentions, it may be sufficient when viewed in connection with other circumstances to warrant a finding of lack of testamentary capacity. The rule seems to be that where defect of memory is proven it will not be sufficient to create incompetency unless it be total or appertain to things very essential. See Bleeker v. Lynch, 1

Bradf. 458, 466, 467. See also Reynolds v. Root, 62 Barb. 250. See also Children's Aid Society v. Loveridge, 70 N. Y. 387.

§ 357. Eccentricities.—Contestants of wills on the ground of lack of testamentary capacity, frequently rely unduly upon eccentricities displayed by the testator in his habits or conduct, particularly when such eccentricities begin and seem to develop from and after paralytic or apoplectic seizures or chronic diseases. Undoubtedly such eccentricities are symptomatic, and may be proven as facts from which the court may be asked to infer mental unsoundness; and while as Lord Brougham observed, it is not the duty of the court to strain after probate, and the proponent is undoubtedly bound to sustain the burden of proof and satisfy the court that the testator was competent to make the will propounded, nevertheless Surrogates are loath to predicate insanity or unsoundness of mind upon acts often innocent and harmless, occasioned by individualities of disposition or peculiarities of circumstance. The leading case already freely cited (Delafield v. Parish, 25 N. Y. 9), was one as the headnote says: "Where the question of fact, whether the deceased possessed that moderate degree of reason and understanding which is required to enable one to dispose of his property by will, was determined in the negative." In that case prior to the paralytic attack resulting in the conditions which were made the basis of contest the testator was a wealthy, refined gentleman, hospitable, of great command of temper and strict observance of decorum. The Court of Appeals refers with some detail to the melancholy developments resultant from the attack of paralysis, that he was often violent, vulgar, offensive and rude, showing as the court remarks, "the changed man, the forgetfulness of the gentleman, and the habits of the imbecile." The numerous eccentricities of character and conduct, totally inconsistent with and opposite to his character and conduct prior to his paralytic attack, the court held were most significant and material on the point of testamentary capacity. See opinion of Davies, J., at page 47.

So Surrogate Rollins (Cornwell v. Riker, 2 Dem. 354, 368), observes: "Evidence respecting eccentricities of dress or demeanor, weakness of memory, absurdities of speech or conduct, and such like things, on the part of a decedent, is admissible in opposition to the probate of a paper offered as his will, only because it tends to show, in a greater or less degree, that, in the making and execution of such a paper, such decedent did not thoroughly understand what he was doing; was not able to appreciate the nature and extent of his possessions; could not, after calling to mind the persons who might naturally expect, because of the claim of kinship or for other reason, to participate in his bounty, form an intelligent purpose as to whom he would make, and whom he would refuse to make, his testamentary beneficiaries."

In the case last cited the eccentricities claimed to be at variance not only with the demeanor that persons endowed with reason and intelligence exhibit, but also with the habits of the decedent herself earlier in life, were proven in great detail before the Surrogate; they tended to establish penuriousness, conspicuous untidiness, want of delicacy in certain features of her daily life; it was claimed that there was a great and general impairment of all her mental faculties, that she was slovenly as to the care of her body, and as to the fashion of her apparel, coarse and vulgar in her tastes, grossly offensive in her personal habits, and well-nigh bereft of her powers of memory. Nevertheless the Surrogate found that the will expressed the free, unrestrained, deliberate purpose of the decedent and that she was of sound mind and memory when she published it. Id. at page 395. See also Matter of Murphy, 41 App. Div. 153; Ivison v. Ivison, 80 App. Div. 599; Matter of Armstrong, 55 Misc. 487.

In this connection it is proper to note that the witnesses must be interrogated as to facts which they have observed. Petrie v. Petrie, 126 N. Y. 683, affi'g 6 N. Y. Supp. 831. The Court of Appeals has summarized the rule in this regard. Hewlett v. Wood, 55 N. Y. 634.

"The general rule is that witnesses must speak of facts alone, and may not utter opinions, conclusions or inferences. To this rule there are these exceptions.

"The subscribing witness to a will may speak as to the sanity of the testator at the time of executing a will. Powell on Devisees, 69; Clapp v. Fullerton, 34 N. Y. 190.

"Experts may give their opinions (see post, page 369) upon questions of trade, skill, or science from the facts proven, or the circumstances noted by themselves. Persons not experts may testify to facts and incidents, known or observed by them, in relation to a testator, which tend to show soundness of mind or the contrary, and may testify to the impression produced upon them by what they beheld or heard, and whether the acts and declarations thus testified to seemed to them rational or irrational (Clapp v. Fullerton, supra); but they may not express any opinion as to the general soundness or unsoundness of the mind of the testator (People v. O'Brien, 36 N. Y. 276; Real v. People, 42 id. 270), nor as to the competency of the testator to execute a will. 36 N. Y. 276; De Witt v. Barley, 17 id. 340. In a later case (Holcomb v. Holcomb, 95 N. Y. 316), Judge Danforth reviewed the cases in this connection. De Witt v. Barley, 17 N. Y. 340; Clapp v. Fullerton, 34 N. Y. 190; O'Brien v. People, 36 N. Y. 276; Real v. People, 42 N. Y. 270; Hewlett v. Wood, supra; Rider v. Miller, 86 N. Y. 507; Matter of Ross, 87 N. Y. 514. Judge Danforth says, citing Clapp v. Fullerton, that when a layman is examined as to facts within his own knowledge and observation tending to show the soundness or unsoundness of a testator's mind, he may characterize as rational or irrational the acts to which he testifies.

"But to render his opinion admissible even to this extent, it must be limited to the conclusions from the specific facts he discloses; he may testify to the impression produced by what he witnesses, but he is not legally competent to express an opinion on the general question whether the mind of the testator was sound or unsound." This limitation applied to such witnesses is made more apparent by the exception in favor of subscribing witnesses; they may be required to state not only such facts as they remember, but their own conviction of the testator's capacity. Clapp v. Fullerton, 34 N. Y. 190. See also Matter of Peck, 17 N. Y. Supp. 248; Matter of Folts, 71 Hun, 492. This exception, however, also has its limitations; thus where a subscribing witness was asked, "Do you think the testator had mind sufficient, at the time he is alleged to have executed that will, to give those specific directions with reference to the disposition of this property?" the General Term (Matter of McCarthy, 5 Hun, 7, Barker, P. J.) held the admission of the question error, on the ground that the inquiry was not limited to an expression of the opinion of the witness as to the sanity of the testator at the time of the execution of the will so as to bring the case within the rule stated in Clapp v. Fullerton and Hewlett v. Wood. The court adds, "in determining the question of testamentary capacity on the part of the testator in particular instances whenever the question arises, the inquiry is not, had the testator capacity to make the will in question, but, whether he was of sound mind and memory at the time of its execution." Mere opinions of witnesses as to the testator's lack of capacity will be given little weight aside from the facts upon which they are claimed to be based (Nexsen v. Nexsen, 2 Keyes, 229), and even though the witnesses be distinguished experts their conclusions and opinions may be rejected or disregarded when they are based upon premises which the Surrogate is unable to infer from the facts proven. Cornwell v. Riker, 2 Dem. 354, 368; Harper v. Harper, 1 S. C. 351; Matter of Connor, 7 N. Y. Supp. 855; Matter of Buckley, 2 N. Y. Supp. 24; Matter of McArthur, 12 N. Y. Supp. 822. And their competency may be tested upon cross-examination. Hoag v. Wright, 174 N. Y. 36.

In Matter of Myer, 184 N. Y. 54, the following was in the record: "Q. Did such acts and conversations make any impression on you as to their being rational or irrational? A. I think they were irrational" (stricken out). Whereupon he answered: "Yes, they did. Q. What was the impression made on you? A. She was irrational, I thought."

Held the last answer should have been stricken out. The question was proper in form; but the answer was an attempt by a lay-witness to give an opinion upon the question of capacity. They can only give their contemporary impressions as to the rationality or irrationality of the acts testified to. Ibid and cases cited at p. 60.

The exception taken on this record appears hypertechnical. In fact the court concedes that alone it would not justify a reversal. It was as nearly exact and direct as a woman and lay-witness could be expected to give. Even an expert's opinion evidence carries only the weight of its logical sequence from stated facts, and some latitude, in non-jury cases is preferable to a rule which would practically require the "coaching" of witnesses. See Wyse v. Wyse, 155 N. Y. 367.

§ 358. Capacity for business.—Referring generally to insane delusions, intoxication, existence of prejudices in the mind, sudden fits of anger, melancholia, etc., it may be said that the possession by testator of a capacity for transacting his business and amassing an estate, establishes a strong presumption that the testator also has a capacity to direct how that estate shall be disposed of after his death. Matter of Murphy, 41 App. Div. 153, 156 (where court described testatrix as "shrewd, rugged old woman," of "whims and filth," "parsimoniously clinging to her property"). Contestants of a will can often prove eccentricity of character by emphasizing and exaggerating idiosyncrasies which have formed a part of testator's character and individuality among those who knew him, but which emphasized may, to an outsider, and one unacquainted with his character, make him appear to border on the insane.

The knowledge of this fact will make courts extra cautious in their consideration of such evidence; see Matter of Murphy, 41 App. Div. 153, 156; particularly when the same is advanced by interested witnesses. The Court of Appeals has summarized this rule by saying (Brick v. Brick, 66 N. Y. 144, 148, Rapallo, J.), "It would be indeed strange that a person should have the capacity to acquire a large fortune by his personal industry and intelligence, and from causes existing at the same time be held not to have sufficient mental capacity to dispose of it by will."

§ 359. Addiction to the use of liquor, opium, etc.—The leading case in this connection is Peck v. Carey, 27 N. Y. 9. In that case the testator for some time before making his will had become excessively addicted to the use of spirituous liquors; had experienced several attacks of the particular mania arising from such habits; had more than once attempted to put an end to his existence by means of poisonous drugs; and eventually committed suicide; there was testimony to the effect that he indulged in habits of licentiousness and was scarcely ever sober. Denio, Ch. J., observed, that in order to avoid a will made by an intemperate person it must be proved that he was so excited by liquor, or so conducted himself during the particular act as to be at the moment legally disqualified from giving effect to it; and adds it is not to be understood that a will made by one who is at the time under the influence of intoxicating liquor is for that reason void . . . . for under a slight degree of excitement from liquor, the memory and understanding may be as correct as in the total absence of any exciting cause. A drunkard may make a valid will even if at the time of the execution of the instrument he is under the influence of liquor, provided he comprehends the nature and extent and disposition of his estate, his relation to those who have or might have come upon his bounty and is free from undue influence, fraud or coercion. Matter of Reed, 2 Connoly, 403, 405, Ransom, Surr., citing Peck v. Carey, supra; Gardner v. Gardner, 22 Wend. 526; Van Wyck v. Brasher, 81 N. Y. 260. See also Matter of Sutherland, 28 Misc. 424, 427; Cook v. White, 43 App. Div. 388, 392; Matter of Hewitt, 31 Misc. 81. See also Matter of Will of Johnson, 7 Misc. 220, Fitzgerald, Surr. The reason for this rule is stated to be that the most pronounced drunkards have times when they are sober and have perfectly lucid intervals in which every act performed is of course legal and binding, their deranged condition of mind is transitory and when the exciting cause is removed and the effects have disappeared the person is capable in the eyes of the law. See Matter of Halbert, 15 Misc. 308, and cases cited at page 311; and Matter of Tifft, 55 Misc. 151; Matter of Feeney, 55 Misc. 158.

In Matter of Woolsey, 17 Misc. 547, the Surrogate found from testimony of the subscribing witnesses that the testator was not drunk at the time the will was executed, although it appeared that he had taken three bottles of whiskey during the day, the will being executed in the evening; he held from all the evidence that the testator's understanding was not clouded or his reason dethroned by actual intoxication at the exact time the will was executed. See also Matter of Watson, 12 N. Y. Supp. 115, where a person had been declared to be an habitual drunkard after judicial inquiry. Matter of Sutherland, 28 Misc. 424, 427. It was held in several early cases that his will would not therefore be void, but that there must be satisfactory affirmative proof of his mental capacity. Lewis v. Jones, 50 Barb. 645. See also Ex parte Patterson, 4 How. Pr. 34; McLaughlin's Will, 2 Redf. 504.

Whether, therefore, the intoxication is habitual or not the court's inquiry is addressed to the question, was the decedent intoxicated at the time of executing the will? If he was, the further inquiry is, whether he was so intoxicated as to disorder his faculties and pervert his judgment sufficiently to incapacitate him. The same rule applies where the indulgence by the testator is in opium or other drugs tending to impair the mental powers or disturb the testator's volition or judgment; the same rule holds that it must appear that the action of the drug at the time of execution was such, that the testator cannot be said to have been in possession of his faculties or to be acting as a free agent. See Glockner's Will, 2 N. Y. Supp. 97; Matter of Lowman's Estate, 1 Misc. 43.

Where a will was executed under circumstances presenting the question of incapacity by reason of intoxication, but there was no such evidence in regard to a codicil which in express terms ratified the will, the court would uphold the will, upon due proof of the codicil. Cook v. White, 43 App. Div. 388, 392.

§ 360. Idiocy, lunacy and insane delusions.—It has been held that by the words, "a sound mind," in the meaning of the law is not meant a mind which is perfectly balanced and free from all prejudice or passion (Phillips v. Chater, 1 Dem. 533, 547); nor will mere imbecility of mind incapacitate a testator, if there be sufficient understanding to satisfy the rule, to wit: that the testator must have at the time of executing the will sufficient capacity to comprehend the condition of his property and his relation toward the persons who are or might be objects of his bounty, and the scope and bearing of the provisions of the will. Wade v. Holbrook, 2 Redf. 378. See also McLaughlin's Will, id., page 504. "An imbecile is neither a lunatic nor an idiot." McGown v. Underhill, 115 App. Div. 638. "Imbecility is not a disqualification for making a will, provided the testator has the capacity which the law requires, and that is determined not by any mere generalization of his capacity (i. e., by expert opinion that he was imbecile) but from his acts in reference to the particular business in hand." Ibid. It has already been noted that mere eccentricities are not enough to disturb testamentary capacity. See cases cited, supra, and Hartwell v. McMaster, 4 Redf. 389, 394. One who is congenitally an idiot comes within the prohibition of the statute and is incompetent to make a will. Insanity, if it is shown to have existed at the time of execution, will also incapacitate. Matter of Lawrence, 48 App. Div. 83; Matter of Richardson, 51 App. Div. 637. The difficulty had always lain in the question whether the specific acts proven are sufficient to warrant the conclusion that the testator was in fact at such time insane. It has already been noted that insanity or imbecility will not be presumed merely from extreme old age. See cases cited, supra, and also Romaine's Will, 6 N. Y. Legal Observer, 1056. In regard to imbecility, insanity or insane delusions, the court must judge from the facts. Opinions of medical men and of alienists have no more value than attaches to the reasonableness of their conclusions from the facts from which they testify. Nor is insanity inferable from the mere act of suicide. Roche v. Nason, 185 N. Y. 128, 137 (105 App. Div. 256), citing Weed v. Mutual Ben. Life Ins. Co., 70 N. Y. 561; Shipman v. Protected Home Circle, 174 N. Y. 398, 405.

In respect to the subject now under discussion the ordinary presumption is that every man is compos mentis and he that alleges the contrary must prove it. If testator is proved to have been insane on a date subsequent to that of the will's execution, it cannot affect its validity. Matter of Lawrence, 27 Misc. 473. But once lunacy has been shown to have existed, the legal presumption arises that it continues, and the burden of proof then rests upon a proponent to show that the execution of the will took place during a lucid interval. Matter of Coe, 47 App. Div. 177; Carter v. Beckwith, 128 N. Y. 312, 316; Matter of Lapham, 19 Misc. 71, 75. See also Wadsworth v. Sharpsteen, 8 N. Y. 388; Hughes v. Jones, 116 N. Y. 67; L'Amoureux v. Crosby, 2 Paige, 422. This presumption arises as soon as a testator has been declared incompetent in lunacy proceedings; it is not conclusive as to testamentary incapacity, but prima facie or presumptive evidence thereof. Matter of Widmayer, 34 Misc. 439, citing Matter of Coe, 47 App. Div. 177; Matter of Clark, 57 App. Div. 5; Lewis v. Jones, 50 Barb. 645; Wadsworth v. Sharpsteen, 8 N. Y. 395. But if a person so declared a lunatic is subsequently declared to have recovered his sanity, a will executed thereafter has the benefit of the presumption of his continued sanity; if subsequently he is again declared insane it is for the Surrogate to determine from all the available evidence whether at the time of the execution of the will he possessed testamentary capacity; in such a case a Surrogate will attach more importance to the testimony of witnesses who observed the testator's daily life and conduct, than to the evidence of medical experts in answer to hypothetical questions. See Matter of Kiedaisch, 13 N. Y. Supp. 255. In the case last cited Surrogate Ransom referred in his opinion at page 260, to the Pendleton case, 5 N. Y.

Supp. 849, where the will of a person who at the time the will was made was under the care and custody of a commission in lunacy, was admitted to probate. The learned Surrogate intimated that the case was an authority only to the effect that the existence of the commission in lunacy was not conclusive upon the question of capacity and that the court had a right to inquire independently into the facts to ascertain whether the alleged insane person was in fact sane or executed a will in a lucid interval. See also Van Guysling v. Van Kuren, 35 N. Y. 70.

§ 361. The test of insanity.—It is by no means always or frequently the case that the testator who is alleged to have been insane had in fact passed the scrutiny of judicial proceedings de lunatico inquirendo, and the court is usually asked to infer that he was insane from his peculiar conduct or the extraordinary character of his disposition. The cases will fall under two general heads:

(a) Where alleged insanity is based upon the existence of insane delusions.

(b) Where it is claimed to follow as an irresistible inference from the condition of health or the eccentric behavior of the decedent.

§ 362. Insane delusions.—First then as to predicating insanity upon the existence of insane delusions. In this connection it will be noted from the cases about to be discussed that two facts must be proved:

1. The insane delusion must be shown to have existed.

2. The insane delusion must be shown to have operated on the mind of the testator in making the particular will sought to be invalidated. See Matter of Richardson, 51 App. Div. 637, 638.

In the leading case in this State (Society v. Hopper, 33 N. Y. 624), Judge Denio, in delivering the opinion of the court, enunciates the principle governing this class of cases of dementia, or loss of mind and intellect, "The true test of insanity is mental delusion. . . . If a person persistently believes supposed facts, which have no real existence except in his perverted imagination, and against all evidence and probability, and conducts himself, however logically, upon the assumption of their existence, he is, so far as they are concerned, under a morbid delusion, and delusion in that sense is insanity. Such a person is essentially mad or insane on those subjects, though on other subjects he may reason, act, and speak like a sensible man. If the deceased was unconsciously laboring under a delusion as thus defined, in respect to his wife and family connections, who would naturally have been the objects of his testamentary bounty when he executed his will, or when he dictated it, and the courts can see that its dispository provisions were or might have been caused or affected by the delusion, the instrument is not his will, and cannot be supported as such in a court of justice. The conduct and designs which he imputed to his wife and relations were such as, upon the assumption of their existence, should have justly excluded them from all share in the succession of his estate." See also definition in In re Smith's Will, 24 N. Y. Supp. 928.

In the light of this opinion it is manifest, first, that the courts will require proof that the testator's mind was possessed, (a) of a conviction, (b) actually influencing his conduct, (c) which has no foundation in the facts. These three conditions should be shown to coexist.

§ 363. Insane delusions, spiritualism.—Having observed that the three conditions above noted must coexist, to wit: a conviction, actually influencing conduct, without reasonable foundation in fact, it is important to note first, that the court will not go in its inquiry into those realms of thought in which all persons are free to indulge in independent individual speculation unless a clear case is made out amounting to religious mania, and even in such cases the existence of such religious mania is deemed symptomatic and is only important as bearing upon the general sanity or insanity of the decedent. It is manifest, for example, that the courts will not regard infidelity or a lack of adherence to generally accepted religious truths as indicating insanity in the eye of the law whatever may be the theological view. To illustrate, Surrogate Coffin observes (Hartwell v. McMaster, 4 Redf. 389, 394), "The testator's want of belief in the saving efficacy of infant baptism, and of the doctrine of the Real Presence are utterly without significance as evidence of his insanity." Again Surrogate Calder (Matter of Halbert, 15 Misc. 308, 318), observes, "We are not to treat spiritualism theologically but legally, in its application to the testamentary capacity of the testatrix. It matters not what our individual opinion may be as to the facts, formalities or claims of spiritualism." In that case it appeared that the testatrix had been a spiritualist and had done many things consistent with the teachings of spiritualism. "She visited the cemetery and communed with the spirits of her deceased husbands; set apart a bedroom for them in order that they might have a place to rest when they visited her; placed at the table a sufficient number of plates for them," etc. But the learned Surrogate observed, "It is well settled that believers in this faith, when testamentary capacity is in question, must be considered in the same light as they who take part in any other religious ceremony," citing Keeler v. Keeler, 22 N. Y. St. Rep. 439; Matter of Vanderbilt, 3 Redf. 384; Matter of Vedder, 14 St. Rep. 470. So again, Surrogate Calvin (Matter of Cornelius Vanderbilt, 3 Redf., 384) held that evidence of a belief in clairvoyance on the part of a testator might be material, provided the will sought to be proved was the direct offspring of the belief. He cites the case of Robertson v. Adam, Redf. Cases upon Wills, 367, where the will was shown to be the direct offspring of the testatrix's assumed communication with her deceased husband, and her belief in regard to her son-in-law being possessed of a supernatural control over his wife, and of himself being under the immediate control of evil spirits; and he cites an excellent definition by Judge Redfield of an insane delusion as, "the result of a false perception of the mind that cannot be cured or dispelled by any amount of evidence or argument addressed to the mind while in this insane state." Mere speculative opinion upon religious questions however singular or absurd in the common judgment, will not affect the validity of wills made by such persons. No belief as to future rewards and punishments or principles of justice upon which they are to be administered, or other religious creed, can be regarded as evidence of insanity, since there is no test by which their truth can be ascertained so as to determine whether they are delusions or not, and if so, whether they will yield to reason or not. Will of Cornelius Vanderbilt, at page 388, supra. In Matter of Brush, 35 Misc. 689, it was held that a belief in Christian Science, when founded on religious convictions, is consistent with testamentary capacity, and beyond the scope of judicial inquiry. In fact, the truth or falsity of religious beliefs has always been held an improper subject of judicial inquiry. Keeler v. Keeler, 20 N. Y. St. Rep. 439.

In the case of Thompson v. Quimby, 2 Bradf. 449, where a great deal of evidence was given as to singular beliefs held by the testator as to the Philosopher's Stone, as to his ability to locate the treasures of Captain Kidd; and as to his having a spiritual eye by which he could discern the presence of ghosts, and of spirits in the moon, Surrogate Bradford discussed the question at great length (see especially page 474 et seq.), and commented upon the danger of confounding the results of ignorance, early impression, credulity, and superstition with the phenomena of mania, and noted that it would be most dangerous as erecting a standard of sanity dependent upon education and knowledge; and he observes that where peculiar speculative beliefs are the result of impressions of childhood they are not only very seldom throughly eradicated, but have very little evidential value in this connection, as compared to cases where they break out suddenly or at an advanced stage of life or subsequent to some sudden illness or seizure. See exhaustive statement of deductions and conclusions at the end of Thompson v. Quimby, at pages 507, 508.

In Matter of Rohe, 22 Misc. 415, Surrogate Marcus observed, that while the testimony offered proved the fact that the testatrix was a believer in spiritualism and that she was a constant attendant upon spiritualistic séances there was not sufficient proof that either the spirits or mediums in which she believed or with which she had relations operated to induce or affect specific dispositions in her will. So a belief in transmigration of souls is not of itself proof of lack of testamentary capacity. Matter of Bonard, 16 Abb. Pr. N. Y. 128. See also Fowler v. Ramsdell, 4 Albany Law Journal, 94. So the courts have held that the belief in spiritualism is so common that so far as testamentary capacity is concerned the law must treat it as it would any other religious conviction. Keeler v. Keeler, 3 N. Y. Supp. 629.

In Matter of Vedder, 6 Dem. 92, a will was admitted to probate in spite of the testator's belief in witches and in witchcraft and proof of various hallucinations, such as, that she had been and conversed with Jesus; that if live coals and a red garter should be put under a churn the butter would come; that it was impossible to keep her horses fat because the witches rode them at night, etc., it appearing that her belief did not affect her testamentary act. See opinion at pages 104 and 105 and cases cited at page 101. In Forman's Will, 54 Barb. 274, 297, it was held that a believer in witches and witchcraft, in spiritualism, or in the doctrines of Mohammed, may make a valid will. The General Term in affirming Surrogate Bradford's decision (Thompson v. Quimby, 21 Barb. 107), observed: "Erroneous, foolish and even absurd opinions on certain subjects do not show insanity when the person entertaining them still continues in the possession of his faculties, discreetly conducting not only his own affairs but the business of others." So also on the subject of religion. Matter of White, 121 N. Y. 406. In Van Guysling v. Van Kuren, 35 N. Y. 70, it appeared that the testatrix believed she was tormented by witches and spooks which kept her awake at night and became enraged at those who told her there were no witches; that she imagined she saw things that did not exist and described visions she had while sleeping; that she used the fingers in place of knife and fork; and that her eyes were frequently wild and glaring. The Court of Appeals held she was of disposing mind and memory.

§ 364. Insane delusion as distinguished from mistaken beliefs.—Proof of a mistaken belief not amounting to an insane delusion will not invalidate a will. Clapp v. Fullerton, 34 N. Y. 190. The inquiry which the court must make has been stated to be whether a person situated in all respects like the decedent might have believed all that the evidence shows he believed, and yet have been in full possession of his senses. Phillips v. Chater, 1 Dem. 533, 543. So the Court of Appeals (in Clapp v. Fullerton, supra) sustained probate where a testator excluded one of his children by reason of his mistaken belief that she was illegitimate. See also Matter of Gross, 14 St. Rep. 429. See also In re Smith's Will, 24 N. Y. Supp. 928.

§ 365. Erroneous belief resulting in disinheritance of an heir.—Where a testator is shown to have possessed erroneous ideas or beliefs in regard to one or more of the persons who might naturally be supposed to benefit by his will, and by reasons of such beliefs disinherits them, the court will not be influenced by sentiment (Potter v. McAlpine, 3 Dem. 108, 113), but can deny probate only where the mistaken belief amounts to an insane delusion. Matter of O'Dea, 84 Hun, 591, affirming probate on opinion of Surrogate Fitzgerald. Unjustifiable impressions, resulting in an estrangement so that testator disinherits the one as to whom he entertains such impressions cannot be styled delusions. Dobie v. Armstrong, 160 N. Y. 584. A testator, may "use his will for displaying kind or vindictive sentiment, may indulge if he choose, his whims, spite, vanity, or his egotism, or his animosities, to the top of his bent; if he is not deficient in mental capacity and is observant of the forms which have been established by law for the execution of the testamentary instrument, his wishes must be respected by the courts, at least to the extent of adjudging that they be made effectual." Hagan v. Yates, 1 Dem. 584, 596, Rollins, Surr. In the case last cited the testator had discriminated against two daughters by his first wife for what the court termed a very ignoble reason; but the Court of Appeals intimates in Horn v. Pullman, 72 N. Y. 269, that if a reason is satisfactory to the testator, however inadequate it may seem to a court, it is no ground of itself for setting aside a will.

In Phillips v. Chater, supra, a wife was excluded from her husband's will owing to a mistaken impression on his part that she had been unfaithful. The Surrogate sustained the will, holding that the facts upon which his belief was evidently based would warrant such a person as the testator in entertaining the belief. In Matter of Jenkins, 39 Misc. 618, there was no reasonable basis for this belief of infidelity, and the Surrogate set aside the will cutting off the wife on the ground it was the "offspring of delusion." He uses this definition, "A person is under a delusion where he, without cause or evidence, firmly and persistently believes in and acts upon certain premises as existing facts when no such facts really exist."

This is correct if the word "delusion" is read in the light of Bouvier's definition quoted at page 620 of the opinion. So wills have been admitted to probate where the testator had a mistaken belief that one of his kinsmen had wronged him. Matter of Lang, 9 Misc. 521. But where the testator after his second marriage became possessed of the belief that his children were opposed to the marriage and were all trying to rob him and lived apparently in continual fear of them and became violent whenever they were referred to, it was held that he was a monomaniac on the subject of his children, the delusion having no basis in fact and such delusion operating directly to modify his testamentary dispositions, the will was not admitted. Matter of Dorman, 5 Dem. 112, 117, citing Matter of Shaw's Will, 2 Redf. 107; Lathrop v. Borden, 5 Hun, 560; Stanton v. Wetherwax, 16 Barb. 259; Seaman's Friend Society v. Hopper, 33 N. Y. 619; Morse v. Scott, 4 Dem. 507; In re McCue, 17 Weekly Dig. 501; Riggs v. American Tract Society, 95 N. Y. 503. So a will was admitted to probate where the testatrix excluded her brother from her will by reason of a deep-rooted and long-continued dislike of him; and a belief that he had in some indefinite manner wronged her. Bull v. Wheeler, 6 Dem. 213. The insignificance of the matter out of which the dislike arises is immaterial. In the case last cited the trouble seems to have originated in regard to the use of a horse and a wagon. Where a testator was shown to have repeatedly declared that a certain young man whom he had adopted was not his son and in fact left him out of his will, it was held not to be sufficient proof of insane delusions. Matter of Zeigler, 19 N. Y. Supp. 947.

Where a decedent at the time of making his will was persuaded that his wife and children had entered into a conspiracy against him to send him to a lunatic asylum; that they had attempted to poison him and it was proven that he finally killed his wife and attempted to kill himself, Surrogate Ransom held that he was laboring under an insane delusion and denied probate to his will (Matter of Kahn, 1 Connoly, 510, 514), holding that the proof showed that the instrument propounded had its origin in the delusion of a mind unsound in respect of the subject involved. So where a testator, who ultimately died in an insane asylum of progressive paresis, made a will during the first stage of the disease discriminating against his wife with whom prior to his disorder his relations had been "more than ordinarily felicitous," the General Term of the Common Pleas (Matter of Loewenstine's Will, 2 Misc. 323), held that there was not reasonable basis for his delusion, that he was unduly influenced thereby in the making of his will, and accordingly refused to disturb the finding of a jury that he was not possessed of testamentary capacity. See also Matter of Weil, 16 St. Rep. 1. So where a testator among other delusions believed that his brothers and sisters desired to poison him and made special provision in his will for his executor of a sum "large enough to be over and above any bribe that may be offered by my brothers and sisters, and children," it was held that he was laboring under an insane delusion sufficient to invalidate the will. Matter of Lockwood, 8 N. Y. Supp. 845. The Court of Appeals in a recent case (Matter of Will of White, 121 N. Y. 406) where the prejudice of the testator against his son grew out of the fact that he was a Free Mason, of which order the testator had from his youth entertained a bitter dislike, sustained the will. Judge Gray remarks in his opinion: "On questions of testamentary capacity courts should be careful not to confound perverse opinions and unreasonable prejudices with mental alienation," citing Seaman's Friend Society v. Hopper, 33 N. Y. 624. "Delusion is insanity, where one persistently believes supposed facts, which have no real existence, except in his perverted imagination, and against all evidence and probability, and conducts himself, however logically, upon the assumpton of their existence. But if there are facts, however insufficient they may in reality be, from which a prejudiced, or a narrow, or a bigoted mind might derive a particular idea, or belief, it cannot be said that the mind is diseased in that respect. The belief may be illogical, or preposterous, but it is not, therefore, evidence of insanity in the person. Persons do not always reason logically, or correctly, from facts, and that may be because of their prejudices, or of the perversity, or peculiar construction of their minds. Wills, however, do not depend for their validity upon the testator's ability to reason logically, or upon his freedom from prejudice." Clapp v. Fullerton, 34 N. Y. 190. See also Dobie v. Armstrong, 160 N. Y. 584. See contra, Lathrop v. American Board of Foreign Missions, 67 Barb. 590.

Where a testator who left all his property to his wife was shown to have a delusion that his brother by athletic exercise was developing his muscle for the purpose of killing him, probate was sustained. Fricke's Will, 19 N. Y. Supp. 315. The court will always take into consideration where the disinheritance of an heir or one of the next of kin is alleged to be due to an insane delusion, the relation of the person disinherited to the decedent. See Probate of the Will of Forman, 1 Tucker, 205, 221. See also Matter of Springstead, 8 N. Y. Supp. 596. Those who in the testator's lifetime have been unfriendly or bitter, or hostile in their conduct towards him will not be heard to complain if the natural result of disinheritance from a share in the estate after his death follows therefrom. Dobie v. Armstrong, 160 N. Y. 584; Matter of Will of White, 121 N. Y. 406; Matter of Iredale, 53 App. Div. 45, 51.

§ 366. Insane delusions must be effectual.—Where an insane delusion is relied upon in contesting a will it must not only appear that it existed but that it materially affected the testamentary disposition made by the will propounded. For example, where a testator had an exaggerated idea as to the extent of his own property, and was shown to have declared that he had more property than anyone knew, Surrogate Davie admitted his will to probate although there was other evidence indicating that the testator was of a licentious nature, vulgar and indecent in conversation, passionately fond of narrating his amorous exploits, speaking of his liaisons publicly and boastingly. In re Jones's Will, 25 N. Y. Supp. 109. The Surrogate observes: "The inference is fairly justified by the evidence that the testator was either a notorious romancer or a veritable Don Juan; but eccentricities of habit or perversion of feelings and conduct, forming what is termed 'moral insanity,' do not constitute legal incapacity. 1 Jarm. Will., p. 75. The law, recognizing the fact that proof of moral depravity does not necessarily establish a lack of intellectual ability, does not require any particular grade of moral rectitude as an element of testamentary capacity. Even pronounced insane delusions, if they do not relate to, or directly bear upon, the testamentary act, do not invalidate a will. Cases illustrating the proposition are numerous. Coit v. Patchen, 77 N. Y. 533; Society v. Loveridge, 70 N. Y. 387; Van Guysling v. Van Kuren, supra; Thompson's Case, 21 Barb. 107; Forman's Will, 54 Barb. 274; Bonard's Will, 16 Abb. Pr. (N. S.) 128; In re MacPherson's Will (Surr.), 4 N. Y. Supp. 181. Several witnesses on part of the contestant have described certain acts and statements of testator, and characterized them as irrational, but such expression of opinion affords no evidence of mental unsoundness. In re Rapplee's Will (Sup.), 21 N. Y. Supp. 801. No reliable estimate of one's mental condition can be predicated upon isolated and independent acts. It is the entire line of conduct, each act examined with reference to that which preceded and that which followed it, which indicates whether the man is controlled by the dictates of sense and reason, or by the illusions of a disordered mind or imagination." In the Vedder case, 6 Dem. 92, where the eccentricities and alleged delusions, were of extraordinary character, the learned Surrogate nevertheless observed (at page 97): "There is no evidence whatever to show that any or all of these beliefs, delusions, eccentricities, or peculiarities had the slightest connection with or influence upon her testamentary act here in question." The cases are uniformly to the effect that unless the delusion entered into the testamentary act, its existence will not operate to defeat probate. See Matter of Lapham, 19 Misc. 71; Matter of Gannon, 2 Misc. 330; Matter of Loewenstine, 2 Misc. 323; Matter of Dorman, 5 Dem. 112; Lockwood's Will, 2 Connoly, 118; Matter of Kahn, 1 Connoly, 510; Leslie v. Leslie, 92 N. Y. 636; Matter of McCue, 17 Weekly Dig. 501; Keeler v. Keeler, 3 N. Y. Supp. 629. In Matter of Long, 43 Misc. 560, Church, Surr., denied probate of a will made by a woman, fifty years married, which cut off her husband as to whom he found she was under the insane delusion that he was unfaithful and an habitual drunkard. Singularly, the husband was not contestant; but the ruling was made in a contest by a collateral relation (see opinion and cases).

§ 367. Expert and opinion evidence.—Allusion has already been made to the weight and value which the courts attach to the opinions of witnesses testifying to the insanity or sanity of a testator, and the fact has been noted that subscribing witnesses to a will may testify as to the testamentary capacity of the decedent, stating their opinion that he was or was not capable of making a will. (See ante.) See Matter of Peck, 17 N. Y. Supp. 248, and other cases cited, supra. So, also, it is held that testimony of subscribing witnesses who had opportunity of seeing and observing testator, should prevail over the opinion of an expert, based merely upon a hypothetical question. Matter of Connor, 29 Misc. 391, 393, citing In re Lyddy's Will, 4 N. Y. Supp. 468; Matter of Kiedaisch, 13 N. Y. Supp. 255, 260; Matter of Johnson, 7 Misc. 220. The declarations of beneficiaries under the will are incompetent, however, on this inquiry. Matter of Van Dawalker, 63 App. Div. 550. The Court of Appeals in a recent case restated the rule in regard to evidence given by nonexperts (Paine v. Aldrich, 133 N. Y. 544, 546) upon the trial. The Court of Appeals says: "The trial court applied the correct rule in regard to this class of evidence. The witness was a layman and could not properly give an opinion as to the mental capacity of the grantor, or as to whether he was rational or irrational, even when such opinion might be based upon specific acts and conversations, and his personal observations. He could state the acts and conversations of which he had personal knowledge, and then be permitted to say whether, in his judgment, such acts and conversations were rational or irrational, or were those of a rational or an irrational person. This is the extent to which any of the cases have gone, and the tendency is to limit rather than enlarge the rule, because, even in the present form, it is an infringement of the fundamental law of evidence that a witness, who is not an expert, shall not be permitted to testify to his conclusions or opinions as to an issuable fact." See also Hewlett v. Wood, 55 N. Y. 634, where it was said: "Persons not experts, after testifying to facts and incidents in relation to a testator, tending to show soundness of mind or the contrary, may testify to the impression produced upon them thereby, and also whether the acts and declarations testified to seem to them rational or irrational, but they may not testify as to the general soundness or unsoundness of mind of the testator." See also DeWitt v. Barley, 9 N. Y. 371. Nonexperts may observe and testify to facts as symptoms of a disease, of which the expert may state the nature and effect. Matter of Wendel, 43 Misc. 571. While of course an expression of opinion by a witness in a contested will case that the testator's conduct observed by him was irrational and showed unsoundness of mind, does not of itself prove a lack of testamentary capacity (Matter of Rapplee, 66 Hun, 558), yet if he has testified to particular acts or remarks of the testator, he may also testify as to the impression received by him from such acts or remarks. See People v. Strait, 148 N. Y. 566; Petrie v. Petrie,

6 N. Y. Supp. 831; Matter of Folts, 71 Hun, 492; Yeandle v. Yeandle, 5 N. Y. Supp. 535. The limitations of § 834, Code Civ. Proc., must be kept in mind. Matter of Myer, 184 N. Y. 54. Where expert evidence is attempted to be offered it must first be noted, that the question whether the witness is or is not an expert, is a question of fact for the trial court. See Otis v. Cowles, etc., Co., 13 N. Y. Supp. 251; Hyman v. Boston Chair Co., 13 N. Y. Supp. 609. Second, that they are competent witnesses to testify to their opinions as to matters which are the subject of their expert knowledge. Garbig v. N. Y., L. E. & W. R. R. Co., 75 Hun, 605. See also Reich v. Union R. R. Co., 78 Hun, 417. In Hewlett v. Wood, 55 N. Y. 634, the court stated the rule, that witnesses testifying as experts may give opinions upon questions of trade, skill or science, from facts proven or the circumstances noted by themselves. Applying this rule the General Term (Matter of Arnold, 14 Hun, 525, 527), held it error to admit the second of the following questions, to a medical expert in a contested will case.

"Q. Do you understand what is meant in law or medical jurisprudence by the term, 'testamentary capacity'? A. I do.

"Q. Did you consider him possessed of that power between the time of this shock and the time of his death?" (Objected to, objection overruled and exception.) "A. No, sir, I do not think he was."

Similarly where a physician was permitted to testify under the objection and exception of the proponent that the testatrix, "had not sufficient mental strength to manage her estate or conduct the business connected with it," held error. Matter of Mason, 60 Hun, 46, 54. Where the expert witness personally observed the testator at or about the time of the execution of the will he should testify to the facts, and may be allowed to give his opinion therefrom, but where medical experts are called to testify in answer to hypothetical questions the court will require the hypotheses upon which the question is based to be founded upon facts proved in the case. The Court of Appeals has laid down this rule, "Hypothetical questions are allowed to be put to experts but the hypothesis upon which they are examined must be based upon facts admitted or established by the evidence, or which if controverted the jury might legally find on weighing the evidence." People v. Augsbury, 97 N. Y. 501. And again, "In such a case it is not the province of the witness to reconcile and draw inferences from the evidence of other witnesses, and to take in such facts as he thinks their evidence has established or as he can recollect and carry in his mind, and thus form and express an opinion." Matter of Mason, supra, at p. 55, citing Reynolds v. Robinson, 64 N. Y. 589; Guiterman v. Liverpool, etc., S. S. Co., 83 N. Y. 358; Hagadorn v. Conn. Mutual Life Ins. Co., 22 Hun, 249. Nor can medical books be introduced in evidence; nor can an expert witness be permitted to testify to statements made therein. See Roe v. Strong, 107 N. Y. 350; Matter of Mason, supra, and cases cited at page 57.

Where a testatrix out of extreme caution secured two experts in insanity as subscribing witnesses to her will, both of whom testified in the probate proceedings that she was of sound mind, memory and understanding at the time of execution, the Appellate Division of the Second Department (Matter of Journeay, 15 App. Div. 567, Bartlett, J.), held that there was nothing suspicious in the circumstances of having such persons act as subscribing witnesses, and further that the clear and explicit evidence given by these qualified specialists as to the mental condition of the testatrix at the very time of executing the codicil republishing her will should prevail, "even if the proof from other sources indicating that the testatrix had been deranged or suffered from delusions at other times was much stronger than it actually was." The Court of Appeals has stated the rule as to the value attached to expert witnesses. People v. Kemmler, 119 N. Y. 580, 583. "Expert evidence is only entitled to much importance in arriving at a judgment, when fairly given by one properly accredited to give it, through his experience, study and scientific eminence, and upon a hypothesis which shall be true in relation of its parts to the whole case which is the subject of inquiry." And it has very properly been stated that the testimony of an expert, "although admissible and always a great aid to a court or jury in discovering where the truth lies in a question of this kind cannot ever be held to be conclusive and controlling against the testimony of persons of intelligence who saw the testator daily and who had transactions with him socially and on business." Matter of Kiedaisch, 13 N. Y. Supp. 255, 260, Ransom, Surr. Matter of Tifft, 55 Misc. 151; Matter of O'Connor, 29 Misc. 391. In framing a hypothetical question, however, the rule, that it must be based upon facts in the case, does not debar counsel from assuming the facts to be in accordance with his theory of them; he may assume any facts within range of the evidence already offered (Cowley v. People, 65 N. Y. 464; Harnett v. Garvey, 66 N. Y. 641), but when this opinion is asked upon facts not within his personal knowledge or observation, the question must be based upon some particular specified state of facts. Bolt v. Murray, 2 N. Y. St. Rep. 232. See Barton v. Govan, 116 N. Y. 658. See also Bristed v. Weeks, 5 Redf. 529, Rollins, Surr. See also In re Lyddy's Will, 4 N. Y. Supp. 468, 470, Ransom, Surr. If the hypothetical question, however, does not state the facts as proven, it becomes valueless as the basis for a determination. Matter of Connor, 29 Misc. 391, 392; Dickie v. Van Vleck, 5 Redf. 284, 293. Or, if based on a hypothesis shown to be erroneous it becomes valueless. Philips v. Philips, 77 App. Div. 113. See Heyzer v. Morris, 110 App. Div. 313, 317.

UNDUE INFLUENCE

§ 368. Definition.—Undue influence as used with reference to wills has been defined as, "that which compels the testator to do that which is against his will, from fear, a desire of peace or some feeling which he is unable to resist" (Schouler on Wills, 2d ed. par. 22); or again, "the influence that will avoid a will on account of undue influence must amount to moral coercion, restrain independent action and destroy free agency; or the importunities must be such as to constrain the testator to do that which is against his desire;" or again, "undue influence has been defined to be any improper or wrongful constraint, machination or urgency of persuasion, whereby the will of a person is overpowered and he is induced to do or forbear an act which he would not do or would do if left to act freely." 27 American and English Encyclopedia of Law, 453, citing 2 Abb. Law Dictionary, page 615. And the same authority at page 454 continues: "Influence which exists from attachment, affection, or a desire to gratify, or which results from argument and appeal to reason and judgment, is not undue influence." See, e. g., gratitude for saving life, Matter of Cleveland, 28 Misc. 369. (See post, p. 374.) Or undue influence may by way of summary be defined as the exerting upon a testator of an improper influence whether fraudulent, threatening, or otherwise coercive, so as to effect a change in the testator's testamentary dispositions so that the will made is not the will he would, if uninfluenced, have made. See Matter of Bolles, 37 Misc. 562, 568; Matter of Martin, 98 N. Y. 193; Matter of Vedder, 14 N. Y. St. Rep. 470. See Matter of Eckler, 47 Misc. 320. An extreme case is presented where a stranger to the blood secures a will in his favor, drawn by himself, from an aged and infirm person of wealth who before and after the event has denied that he will leave any will.

The circumstance is so suspicious that in order to "satisfy" the Surrogate he is under the burden of overcoming by a preponderance of evidence the presumption of undue influence resulting therefrom.

§ 369. Burden of proof.—The underlying idea of undue influence is that the will of another is substituted for that of the testator nominally acting, whose act is only the expression of another's will, so that all questions of free agency fail. Any influence to be material must be operative and must actually produce an effect which is clear. It can never be inferred from mere opportunity. It must arise in one of two ways: either from proof, or presumption of law. The exerting of undue influence is a fact and must be proved like any other fact, it must not be guessed out. Stebbins v. Hart, 4 Dem. 501, 505; Mason v. Williams, 53 Hun, 398. It is to be established affirmatively from the circumstances. Matter of Murphy, 41 App. Div. 153, 157; Matter of Shannon, 11 App. Div. 581; Matter of Snelling, 136 N. Y. 515; Matter of Rohe, 22 Misc. 415. That is to say the facts proved must be sufficient to justify an affirmative finding. Matter of Hurlbut, 48 App. Div. 91.

The burden of proof has been held almost, if not quite generally, to be upon those who allege it, and anyone contesting a will on those grounds, who sets the same up in his pleadings must prove such undue influence by a clear preponderance of evidence. Matter of Read, 17 Misc. 195, 198; Dobie v. Armstrong, 160 N. Y. 584; Matter of Nelson, 97 App. Div. 212; Matter of Mondorf, 110 N. Y. 450. To invalidate a will on the ground of undue influence there must be affirmative evidence of the facts from which such undue influence is to be inferred; it is not sufficient to show that a party benefited by a will had both motive and opportunity to exert such influence; it must be shown that he did exert it and so controlled the actions of the testator either by importunities which he could not resist or by deception, fraud or other improper means that the instrument is not really the will of the testator. Cudney v. Cudney, 68 N. Y. 148, opinion of Rapallo, J., at page 152. So it has been held, "If there is testamentary capacity and a present knowledge of the contents of the will and the will is executed pursuant to the formalities prescribed by the statute, it can only be avoided by proof of influence amounting to force or coercion and the burden is on the party making the allegation, that the testatrix was imposed upon or overcome by the acts or practice of the beneficiary." Matter of Mabie, 5 Misc. 179, 183, citing Matter of Martin, 98 N. Y. 193; Loder v. Whelpley, 111 id. 239; Matter of Williams, 19 N. Y. Supp. 778, and cases cited. See also In re Soule, 3 N. Y. Supp. 259, 268; Matter of Cornell, 43 App. Div. 241, 242; Matter of Munger, 38 App. Div. 268.

§ 370. Mutual wills.—Where mutual wills are simultaneously executed there arises a nearly absolute presumption that no undue influence was exerted. Matter of Tredwell, 58 Misc. 103, citing Matter of Drake, 45 App. Div. 206; Matter of Nelson, 97 App. Div. 212; Matter of Martin, 98 N. Y. 193.

§ 371. Character of evidence required.—It has been held that, "The proof of undue influence must be by direct affirmative evidence, or by such an array of circumstances as to make the inference of its exercise irresistible; in other words, the contestants must show facts utterly inconsistent with the hypothesis of the execution of the will by any other means than undue influence." In re Williams' Will, 15 N. Y. Supp. 828, 834, citing Gardiner v. Gardiner, 34 N. Y. 155; Loder v. Whelpley, supra; In re Clausmann, 9 N. Y. St. Rep. 182; Marx v. McGlynn, 88 N. Y. 357. See also Matter of Murphy, 41 App. Div. 153; Matter of Snelling, 136 N. Y. 515. On the other hand, it has been stated that, "Direct proof is never required, but the fact of its exercise always may be inferred from other facts proven." Matter of Read, 17 Misc. 195, 198. For it is rarely that a case is susceptible of such direct evidence. Chambers v. Chambers, 61 App. Div. 299, 310, citing Tyler v. Gardiner, 35 N. § 372. How a presumption of undue influence will arise.—It has been stated that undue influence must be proved as any other fact; and further that a case of undue influence must arise in one of two ways, either from proof or from a presumption of law.

Before discussing what is or is not proof of the exercise of undue influence it may be well to indicate the various classes of cases where the courts have held that no presumption of undue influence will be necessarily entertained. It is true that undue influence is not always capable if ever of being proven by direct evidence and must usually be proven or inferred from circumstantial evidence. See Marvin v. Marvin, 3 Abb. Ct. of App. Dec. 192. See Chambers v. Chambers, 61 App. Div. 299, 310. The Court of Appeals (Tyler v. Gardiner, 35 N. Y. 559) has properly declared: "It is not to be supposed that fraud and undue influence are ordinarily susceptible of direct proof. The purposes to be served are such as court privacy rather than publicity. In some cases, as this court said, in the case of Sears v. Shafer, 'undue influence will be inferred from the nature of the transaction alone; in others from the nature of the transaction and the exercise of occasional or habitual influences. The grounds for imputing it, as Sir John Nicholl said in the case of Marsh v. Tyrrell, must be looked for in the conduct of the parties and in the documents, rather than in the oral evidence. The necessary inferences to be drawn from that conduct will afford a solid and safe basis for the judgment of the court. Where the oral evidence harmonizes with those inferences, a moral conviction rightfully follows; but the dispositions, where they are at variance with the conduct of the parties, and with the res gestæ, are less to be relied upon.' " See also Matter of Baker's Will, 2 Redf. 179.

On the question, however, of presumption it may be remarked first that there are certain classes of circumstances or degrees of relationship which if shown may be material although not necessarily conclusive upon the question of undue influence. This may be discussed under the following headings:

1. Confidential relationship and fiduciary relationship.
2. Opportunity.
3. Weakness of testator.

§ 373. Confidential relationship and fiduciary relationship.—In regard to any presumption arising from proof of the persons benefiting by the will alleged to have been procured by undue influence sustaining near relations of kinship or affection to the testator, it may be said in the first place that it has been repeatedly held that there is a legitimate influence which such persons may indulge in without danger of the wills being set aside upon the ground of undue influence. Thus it has been said that "certain forms of influence, such as suggestion and advice or solicitation, persuasion and entreaty, unless the testator is worn out by importunities so that his will at last gives away, have been held not to be undue, although the amount of pressure allowable always depends upon the relation of the parties in each case, and the strength of the testator's resistance." Matter of Read, 17 Misc. 195, 198. Again it has been held, "Such influence as arises from gratitude, esteem or affection does not come within the meaning of undue influence." Ledwith v. Claffey, 18 App. Div. 115, 119. The Appellate Division in the First Department has stated the rule very clearly (Matter of Seagrist, 1 App. Div. 615), as follows: "Those persons who occupy intimate and affectionate relations with any individual have the right, by personal request, by fair argument, and even by decent importunities, to procure a will to be made. The fact that they have done so is no argument against the validity of the paper, provided these importunities do not proceed so far as to overpower the will of the testator and induce him to do the thing which he would not have done but for these importunities, and to substitute the will of the beneficiary in the place of his own uncontrolled judgment." Opinion of Rumsey, J., at page 619, citing Tyler v. Gardiner, 35 N. Y. 559. See also Matter of Hedges, 57 App. Div. 48, reviewing cases; Matter of Cruger, 36 Misc. 272; Matter of McGill, 26 Misc. 102; Matter of Hurlbut, 48 App. Div. 91; Matter of Bonner, 33 Misc. 9, 11. So, where the chief beneficiary of a proposed will was trustee of testatrix during her lifetime, and had control and custody of her estate, while he is under the burden of showing that the will was her free, untrammeled and intelligent act, yet he has "a right by faithful service and delicate attention to win her esteem." Matter of De Vaugrigneuse, 46 Misc. 49. In this case, Thomas, Surr., uses the words "to create a testamentary intention in his favor" in decedent's mind. So, no presumption of undue influence arises from the fact that one child gets more than another. Matter of Woodward, 52 App. Div. 494. The importunities, requests or arguments, which it has been intimated may be resorted to to influence the testator in making his will, must not, however, be such as to fraudulently deprive any other person or persons of a share of the testator's estate. Thus where a daughter by vague and indefinite charges against her brother of improper conduct towards her persuaded her mother to discriminate against him in her will, there being no reasonable basis for these charges, and the mother, while of testable capacity, being in a condition such as to be peculiarly exposed to the exercise of undue influence, the Court of Appeals held, that a will executed under such circumstances should be rejected. Tyler v. Gardiner, 35 N. Y. 558. See Matter of Drake, 45 App. Div. 206. And obtaining control of an aged, infirm parent, by constant importunity and insidious effort may be held undue influence. Matter of Sears, 33 Misc. 141, 142. See also Matter of White, 23 N. Y. St. Rep. 882; Matter of Bishop, 31 N. Y. St. Rep. 314. Importunity amounting to threats is improper. Chambers v. Chambers, 61 App. Div. 299. And the Appellate Division of the First Department (Matter of Spratt, 4 App. Div. 1, 5) held, that the natural influence of the parent or guardian over the children, or husband over wife, or attorney over client, may lawfully be exerted to obtain a will or a legacy as long as the testator thoroughly understands what he is doing and is a free agent, citing Brick v. Brick, 66 N. Y. 144; Matter of Liddy, 5 N. Y. Supp. 636; Matter of Bedlow, 67 Hun, 408.

Where the will is shown clearly to have been prompted by gratitude, e. g., for saving testator's life, Matter of Cleveland, 28 Misc. 369, even though all the testator's property is left away from the natural objects of his bounty, there is no presumption of undue influence in the absence of fraud, imposition or coercion. The Court of Appeals so held in a case where the testator who had lived upon unfriendly terms with his wife or rather apart from her, left all his property to a woman with whom it was claimed he had for several years meretricious relations. Matter of Mondorf, 110 N. Y. 450. Judge Earl remarked: "This will was prompted by gratitude, and a will thus induced cannot in the case of a perfectly competent testator be said to have been obtained by what in the law is styled, 'undue influence,'" and he adds, "Even if his relations with Mrs. Schaumburg were meretricious the law does not on that account condemn a will made in her favor. Where such relations exist, all the circumstances attending the execution of a will which may be shown to have been induced thereby will be carefully scrutinized; but the right of a competent testator to make any disposition of his property which pleases him although it may be unjust and unnatural will not be curtailed." Id., at page 456, citing Seguine v. Seguine, supra; Horn v. Pullman, supra; Marx v. McGlynn, 88 N. Y. 357; In re Will of Martin, 98 N. Y. 193; Scott v. Barker, 129 App. Div. 241; Heyzer v. Morris, 110 App. Div. 313. See also Matter of Rand, 28 Misc. 465; Matter of Westerman, 29 Misc. 409, 411; Matter of Evans, 37 Misc. 337; Demmert v. Schnell, 4 Redf. 409. This was a case where the testator who was dying of a very painful disease was a tenant of the respondent, occupying part of her house and absolutely dependent upon her in his last illness for care, attention and even the necessaries of life. He was married, but his wife had not lived with him for nine years. While in health he had repeatedly expressed the intention of leaving his property to his brothers in Germany. The respondent had often asked him in jest to make his will in her favor, but there was evidence that he had stated the idea to be preposterous inasmuch as he had brothers living. One will had already been executed by him at the beginning of his illness, leaving a legacy of one-third of his property to the respondent. A few days later his attorney was called in to make a second will in which, aside from a conditional bequest to his wife, the respondent was made residuary legatee. The Surrogate observed at page 412: "The will was made at a time when the testator was seriously ill, suffering from a painful disease; so weak physically that he had to be assisted out of bed, and when his complete dependency upon Mrs. Schnell readily subjected him to her control. Here we have all the facts and circumstances by which the courts say that undue influence may be proved." Rollwagen v. Rollwagen, 63 N. Y. 504, 519; Horn v. Pullman, 72 id, 269, 276; Forman v. Smith, 7 Lans. 443; Marvin v. Marvin, 3 Abb. Ct. App. 192; Children's Aid Society v. Loveridge, 70 N. Y. 387, 403; Reynolds v. Root, 62 Barb. 250; Mowry v. Silber, 2 Bradf. 133.

"It does not appear that the testator gave any reason for this sudden change in the disposition of his property, and the circumstances under which it was made required that Mrs. Schnell should show that the complete dependence of this dying man upon her had not been taken advantage of in any way . . . . should in fact, repel the presumption arising from the facts proved that the change was brought about by undue influence.

"In Matter of Brough, 41 Misc. 263, the testatrix's gratitude was evoked by help given her in resisting proceedings to have her adjudged insane. Marcus, Surr., writes a convincing opinion on this typical case.

"In Matter of Eddy, 41 Misc. 283, a will to a paramour was upheld, disinheriting children, on proof that the woman had in fact exercised no influence whatever in the premises. The Surrogate notes the only statutory limitation on disinheritance which is as to 'Exempt property.' The rule to be deduced from the decisions on the subject is this: that where a person enfeebled by old age or illness makes a will in favor of another person upon whom he is dependent, and that will is at variance with a former will made, or intentions formed when his faculties were in their full vigor, and is opposed to the dictates of nature and justice, the presumption is that such a will is the result of undue influence, unless that presumption is satisfactorily rebutted by other evidence in the case." See also Crispell v. Du Bois, 4 Barb. 393; Limburger v. Rauch, 2 Abb. N. S. 279. Where testatrix took care of her nurse by will (Matter of King, 29 Misc. 268), cutting off a husband from whom she had been for seventeen years separated, it was held valid. Similarily where a legacy to a nurse was increased, it appearing the relatives had not been denied free access to the decedent. Matter of Lacy, 35 Misc. 581.

§ 374. Same subject.—Under the definition above given it is manifest that unless a relative of the decedent or one to whom he is under some debt of gratitude, deprives others by means of fraud or imposition of an interest in the testator's estate which by reason of proven declarations or of their actual claims upon him it appears they would have been entitled to, the courts will allow what has been called reasonable or decent importunity; but when a relative sustains such relations to a testator who is ill or aged or weak-minded as to procure the execution of a will where none was intended to be made in his favor or in favor of one in whom he is peculiarly interested or procures the making of a will under which he is the chief beneficiary, a presumption of undue influence is raised; this presumption, however, is one of fact, and where the evidence introduced by the proponent tends to show that the will was nevertheless the voluntary deliberate act of a person having testamentary capacity, prompted by affection and without improper persuasion, probate must be granted. In re Soule's Will, 3 N. Y. Supp. 259, 267. In Marx v. McGlynn, 88 N. Y. 357, the testator had made "a will in favor of his religious advisor," and the question as to presumption of undue influence was raised. The court held that it is not sufficient to show that the will is the result of affection or gratitude or the persuasion of a friend or relative, which he may legitimately use, but the influence must be such as to overpower the will, producing a disposition of the property which the testator would not have made if left free to act.

The case of the Will of Martin, 98 N. Y. 193, was one where the testator left three sons, one of whom was named executor of the will, but it was shown that he had communicated to the scrivener the provisions to be inserted in the will and was himself a beneficiary. It appeared that the testatrix not only had testamentary capacity but also a present knowledge of the contents of the will; it was held that it could not be avoided except by proof of influence amounting to force or coercion.

Generally speaking the rule has been properly stated in the following words: "Qui se scripsit hæredem, or whoever draws a will in his own favor, does a thing which ought to excite the suspicion of a court, and call upon it to jealously examine the evidence, and be judicially satisfied that the paper propounded expresses the true will of the deceased, before admitting it to probate. (See Matter of Thompson, 50 Misc. 222.) The fact that the testator had full testamentary capacity and knew the contents of the will, is sufficient to remove such suspicions, and to place the burden upon the contestants of proving undue influence." In re Soule, supra, page 268. See opinion in Matter of Elster, 39 Misc. 63, citing Lee v. Dill, 11 Abb. Pr. 214. Also Matter of Egan, 46 Misc. 375, Thomas, Surr. See also opinion by Beckett, Surr., Matter of Lamport, N. Y. L. Journal, June 2, 1908.

§ 375. Same subject.—Where the draughtsman of the will has been an agent or attorney of the testator or testatrix, and is made a beneficiary by the will which he draws, the courts will scrutinize the circumstances, but no presumption of undue influence necessarily arises. (See case of an attorney, Matter of Gallup, 43 App. Div. 437. Also Lake v. Ranney, 33 Barb. 49; Matter of Murphy, 28 Misc. 650, and cases on page 651.) Also Matter of Marlor, 121 App. Div. 398, and Matter of Thompson, 121 App. Div. 470. Thus where the will of a testator was drawn by one who had been for many years her agent in another State for the management of certain of her property, he being also her nephew, and he was made an executor of and legatee under the will, which was, however, in all of its provisions just and fair and recognized the claims of the various relatives of the testatrix, it was held there was no presumption of undue influence. In re Sheldon's Will, 16 N. Y. Supp. 454. In this case the contestants claimed that, under such circumstances, the proponent must give other than the usual evidence of the witnesses to the will, before it can be admitted to probate; that it must be shown the testatrix gave directions for its drafting which were obeyed, or that it was read to or by her before its execution; and based this proposition of law upon the ground that, where the writer of a will has confidential relations with the testator, and the will makes him an executor or legatee thereof, such a presumption of fraud and undue influence arises that the ordinary proof of the execution of the will thus made does not rebut or outweigh such legal presumptions; that the proponent must show, in addition thereto, that the will was made freely, without fraud and undue influence; and that the proponent should establish by affirmative evidence that none of the provisions of the will were dictated, suggested, or brought about by his instigation. The court held, however, that "The rule of law which the contestant invokes applies only to the class of cases where, by reason of sickness, old age, mental and physical condition, or other circumstances, the testator had not that health, intellectual vigor, independence of character, freedom of action and judgment to guard his rights, and protect himself and his estate from the stealthy tread of those who would illegally take what he has designed for others. We shall hold that, where a testator has that mental and physical vigor which is essential to make a valid will, it is not the law that the drawer of a will, even if he holds confidential relations to the testator, cannot be his executor or take a legacy thereunder; nor is the law that, if the attorney, physician, or priest of the testator draws a will in which there is a legacy to himself, such will or such legacy is presumed to be fraudulent, nor in such a case is fraud presumed in aid of those who seek to overthrow the will; nor does this fact, in the absence of evidence, warrant the presumption that the testatrix was unduly influenced, or was improperly or fraudulently controlled, in making her will. All that can be legally claimed for such a state of facts is that it may or may not be a suspicious circumstance; but whether it is or not depends upon the facts of each case.

"The fact that a beneficiary is the attorney, guardian, or trustee of a decedent does not of itself alone create a presumption against a testamentary gift; neither is it presumed to have been procured by fraud and undue influence in every case and under all circumstances; nor does that single act call upon courts to pronounce against a will thus executed unless additional evidence is produced to prove knowledge of its contents by the deceased. It is only in that class of cases where the testator excludes the natural objects of his bounty that a will in favor of his attorney, physician, priest," (see Matter of Johnson, 28 Misc. 363) "is looked upon by courts with suspicion. To invalidate a will on the ground of undue influence, there must be affirmative evidence of the facts from which such influence can be inferred. It is not sufficient that the party benefited by a will had the motive to exert such influence. There must be evidence that he did exert it, and so control the actions of the testator, either by importunities which he could not resist, or by deception, fraud or other improper means, that the instrument is not really the will of the testator. If a contestant alleges fraud and undue influence, or any other defense, it is his duty to prove it, because fraud is never presumed from the existence of an opportunity to commit it. It must be established by such evidence that the inference of wrongdoing follows as a natural and unavoidable result, and it is only so established when such facts are proven that no other legitimate, conclusion can be drawn. Justice to testators, heirs, and legatees does not command such a rule of law as the contestant seeks to maintain, nor is there any necessity for its existence. If such were the law, testators would, many times, be debarred the aid of an attorney, relative, or other person in whom they had the must implicit confidence, and whose legal ability, knowledge of the testator's affairs, or other circumstances made it especially necessary to have such person draw the will, provided he desired to remunerate him for services rendered or to be rendered, or for faithfulness to his interest, or from any other proper motive, wished to give him a legacy. To say that every lawyer, doctor, minister, or other person holding confidential relations with a testator, who draws a will with a legacy to himself, is, from that simple fact alone, presumptively dishonest, his motives and his acts presumptively fraudulent and wicked, and the will presumptively the product of undue influence, is to assert a proposition of law which is not now, never has been, and probably never will be the law of the State." But, in Matter of Bedell, 107 App. Div. 284, the circumstances were such (q. v.) as to show that the decedent had no intelligent knowledge of the will in favor of his legal adviser. And in Matter of Marlor, 52 Misc. 263, the survey of the testamentary transaction providing for the lawyer to the exclusion of husband and sons named in prior wills, led the surrogate to deny probate.

§ 376. Same Subject.—Where one who has acted as attorney or legal adviser for a testator drafts a will in which he is indicated as executor or made a legatee and is accused of exerting undue influence, it will be sufficient to meet the case if it can be shown that the will drawn was in substantial compliance with the testator's testamentary scheme known to have been entertained by him for some time. In re Carver's Will, 23 N. Y. Supp. 753. In this case Surrogate Davis says in respect to the influence which must be proved in order to avoid a will upon the ground of undue influence: "It must not be the promptings of affection, the desire to gratify the wishes of another, the ties of attachment arising from consanguinity, or the memory of kind acts or friendly offices, but a coercion produced by importunity, or by a silent, resistless power which the strong will often exercises over the weak and infirm, and which could not be resisted, so that the motive was tantamount to force or fear. . . . It is undoubtedly true that the law looks with a jealous eye upon the acts of one who, standing in a relation of trust or confidence, is instrumental to any extent in procuring a testamentary provision in his own favor; and, while such circumstance does not in and of itself invalidate the bequest, it does call for satisfactory explanation, and imposes upon him claiming under such provision the burden of showing that it was in all respects fair and honest." See Post v. Mason, 91 N. Y. 539. That the will is holographic may be a material point in this connection. Matter of Smith, 36 Misc. 128, 131. While it is important in such cases to show knowledge of the contents by a testator, which will be discussed later, it has been held that where a will was drawn by the principal beneficiaries under it, and the testator was able to read writing, and of sufficient capacity to transact business, and yet did not read the will it may nevertheless be inferred from the circumstances that the testator was acquainted with its contents. Nexsen v. Nexsen, 3 Abb. Dec. 360; In re Smith, 95 N. Y. 516, 523. In the case last cited it was held that the fact that the attorney of the deceased was the principal beneficiary under the will does not alone create a presumption that the testamentary gift was procured by fraud or undue influence, but that in a case where the testator was of advanced years, infirm mentally and physically, and made his attorney his principal beneficiary, contrary to previously expressed testamentary intentions, and where such attorney was the draughtsman of the will, and took an active part in procuring its execution, and that the testator acted without independent advice, the burden is imposed upon the attorney of showing that the will was the free and untrammeled expression of the testator's intentions. See Matter of Rintelen, 37 Misc. 462, aff'd 77 App. Div. 142.

Where undue influence is charged against a relative, resulting in an unfair disposition of the estate as to other relatives, it is held to be proper to inquire into the condition and value of the estate. Matter of Woodward, 167 N. Y. 28.

The General Term in the First Department (In re Liddy's Will, 5 N. Y. Supp. 639) held: "The mere fact that a wife has exercised influence upon her husband in relation to the disposition of his property by will or otherwise, in no way supports the proposition that undue influence has been exercised. Influence may always be exercised, and it is proper that it should be exercised; but it only becomes improper when it becomes undue, and it becomes undue when it substitutes the will of the person exercising the influence for the will of the person who is to do the act. Arguments, persuasions, and suggestions may be made so long as the person who is to do the act, can weigh the suggestion and has the ability of mind to resist the influence, then there is nothing undue in regard to it although he may yield to it." See also Mason v. Williams, 53 Hun, 398.

In the De Baum case, 2 Connoly, 304, a testator and his second wife executed mutual wills, and it was shown that the testator while possessed of testamentary capacity was a man of very weak will and completely under the domination of his second wife. Surrogate Rollins says in his opinion, "She was coarse, selfish, mercenary, exacting, indifferent to her own kindred, and possessed of an unyielding will." She seems to have controlled every action of her husband. "If her wishes mildly expressed were not complied with, she commanded; if commands failed she used threats, and he submitted for the sake of peace. In all important matters his free agency seems to have been overcome." At the time the mutual wills were made she had a property very much larger than his. The Surrogate held that although the testamentary scheme of both wills was concocted by the wife, the testator acquiesced in it intelligently, understandingly, and voluntarily under the selfish belief at the time that it would be greatly to his advantage if he survived his wife. And although the will was unjust and inequitable in its provision towards the sons of the testator, the actual objects of his bounty, one of whom was the helpless imbecile, the will must be allowed probate. See also Matter of Bedell, 2 Connoly, 328, where a mother and daughter made mutual wills excluding a second daughter with whom they had quarreled.

378. Opportunity.—Where a testator has been for years dependent in respect of his comfort and home upon persons whom he makes chief or exclusive beneficiaries under his will, and it is shown that their influence over him was great, and even where it is shown that they requested or urged the making of the testamentary provisions which appear in his will, the courts will not refuse it probate on the ground of undue influence unless it clearly appear that some fraud, imposition or coercion, was exercised; or, as Van Brunt, P. J., observes (Matter of Bedlow, 67 Hun, 408, 413): "The mere fact that the opportunity of exercising undue influence has been afforded and that benefits have resulted to those who had the opportunity of exercising such influence by no means raises a presumption that such influence was exercised." See Matter of Munger, 38 Misc. 268—all estate to grandniece, in token of gratitude for nursing him while long separated from wife and married daughter. There was proof of declarations of affection and of intent to reward. In other words, the exercising of undue influence must be proved as a fact and will not be inferred, nor will it arise as a presumption merely from opportunity and interest. Matter of Murphy, 41 App. Div. 153; Matter of Keefe, 47 App. Div. 214; Matter of Lowman's Estate, 1 Misc. 43, 46, citing Gardiner v. Gardiner, 34 N. Y. 155; Seguine v. Seguine, 4 Abb. Ct. App. Dec. 191; Kinne v. Johnson, 60 Barb. 69; Cudney v. Cudney, 68 N. Y. 148. So in the Seagrist case, 11 Misc. 188, where it was claimed that undue influence had been exerted by a niece who was the principal legatee, and it was shown that she had ample opportunity under her relations to the decedent to exert such influence, Surrogate Fitzgerald observes at page 191, "Though his favored niece had the opportunity and even the motive to secure the largest benefaction, the fact does not import the exercise by her and her husband of undue influence. Those who raise the issue must prove it affirmatively." Opportunity coupled with motive does not prove it was exercised. It must also appear that such influence was in fact exercised and was sufficient to overcome the will of testator. Matter of Hawley, 44 Misc. 186.

§ 379. Opportunity continued.—Where an attorney who draws a will benefits by its provisions, and there is evidence of such circumstances as to the testator's health, and as to the attorney's relation to him as to indicate improper motive on the part of the attorney, the court will require some affirmative proof that the testator knew the contents of the will and that there was no undue influence.

The case of Post v. Mason, 26 Hun, 187, seems to be authority to the effect that where a legacy is left to the draughtsman of a will, who is at the time and for many years prior thereto has been legal advisor of the testator, it rests upon him to establish affirmatively that the testator acted with full knowledge of all the surrounding circumstances, to show that the transaction was free from all fraud or undue influence on his part. See headnote and opinion at page 181, citing Crispell v. Du Bois, 4 Barb. 393; Evans v. Ellis, 5 Denio, 640; Nexson v. Nexson, 2 Keyes, 229; Davoue v. Fanning, 2 Johns. Ch. 252; Robertson v. Caw, 3 Barb. 415, opinion of Willard, J., and cases there cited; Newhouse v. Godwin, 17 Barb. 236; Whitehead v. Kennedy, 69 N. Y. 466; Wilson v. Moran, 3 Bradf. 172.

It has been more recently held by the Court of Appeals (Matter of the Will of Smith, 95 N. Y. 516), that the mere fact that a proponent of a will, a chief beneficiary thereunder, was the attorney or agent, does not create any presumption against the validity of the legacy. See also Matter of Dixon, 42 App. Div. 481, 487. The burden imposed upon the attorney of satisfying the court that the will is the free, untrammeled, intelligent expression of the intention of the testator is imposed only where the circumstances are such as to show either that the testator was infirm or weak, or peculiarly susceptible to, or where there is direct proof of declarations by such testator as to the testamentary intention wholly different from those expressed in the will. See also Clarke v. Schell, 84 Hun, 28; Matter of Suydam, 84 Hun, 514. If, however, the attorney who draws a will appears to be the sole beneficiary thereunder the court will require proof of knowledge of its contents by the testator and affirmative evidence that there was no fraud or undue influence. Matter of Westurn, 60 Hun, 298.

§ 380. Weakness of testator.—The rules above stated as to the creating of presumption in certain cases may be materially modified in any given case by proof that the testator while possessed of testamentary capacity in the eyes of the law was nevertheless so aged or infirm as to be peculiarly susceptible to importunities or influence alleged to have been asserted by some beneficiary under the will. Matter of Hurlbut, 26 Misc. 461.

For example, the rule as to there being no presumption that the attorney who drew a will under which he is a beneficiary exerted any undue influence merely from the fact that he was legal adviser of the testator, may be completely nullified, if it appear that the testator was in such condition of health as either not to have been fully capable or not to understand what was being done, or if capable of understanding would yield readily to any influence which the attorney by reason of his fiduciary relation might be able to exert.

Thus in the Soule case, 3 N. Y. Supp. 259, the testator died at the age of ninety-two years, having made a will and four codicils, and in his last codicil gave a legacy of $30,000 to his legal adviser, the draughtsman of the will, the Surrogate held that the presumption of undue influence by the draughts-man was completely rebutted and the burden upon the draughtsman to show the absence of undue influence removed by proof of the affection entertained for him by the testator, the fact that the legacy was only about six per cent of the whole estate, in regard to which the testator had for years consulted him professionally, that the codicil was read aloud by the draughtsman in the testator's hearing at the time of execution, and it was clear that the testator had full testamentary capacity and knowledge of the contents of the will and codicils. See discussion of cases in Surrogate Teller's opinion, pages 260 to 274. Where a testator is on his deathbed and induced to make a will in favor of a relative who threatens and reproaches him, the will will be invalidated for undue influence. Holcomb v. Holcomb, 95 N. Y. 317. The rule in this connection has already been quoted above, to wit: That where a person, enfeebled by old age, or illness, makes a will in favor of one upon whom he is dependent, which is at variance with some former will made, or intentions declared, when in full vigor of health, and such later will is unjust, the presumption is created that the will is the result of undue influence. See Demmert v. Schnell, 4 Redf. 409, and cases cited. So where relatives discharged the regular physician in charge of the aged testator, suffering from paresis, and later got him to execute a will in their favor, held to justify a finding of undue influence. Matter of Miller, 36 Misc. 310.

§ 381. Same subject.—Where the person who is alleged to have procured by undue influence the will, under which he is chief or sole beneficiary, has been the medical attendant of the decedent, who is shown to have been aged or infirm, the court will scrutinize the circumstances with great care, and require him to sustain the full burden of showing that the will was indeed the free, independent, testamentary act of the decedent. But where it appears the will was drawn pursuant to testator's instructions, and the medical attendant was not present at time of execution, held, no presumption of undue influence. Matter of Cornell, 43 App. Div. 241, 245, aff'd 163 N. Y. 608, citing Matter of Will of Smith, 95 N. Y. 516; Matter of Spratt, 4 App. Div. 1, 5. See also Matter of Small, 105 App. Div. 140. The rule in this class of cases has been stated by Surrogate Rollins as follows: "Where a will has been prepared or procured by one interested in its provisions, an additional burden is imposed upon those who seek to establish it; the circumstance is regarded by the court with suspicion and jealousy, and there must be stronger proof than would else be required that the paper propounded expresses the free, unbiased testamentary purpose of the alleged testator, and not merely the wishes of the interested beneficiary. Moreover, the existence of a confidential relation, such for example as subsists between physician and patient, implies of itself peculiar opportunities for the exercise by the former over the latter of influence and authority, so that if he had been instrumental in procuring from his patient a will containing provisions greatly to his advantage, 'fraud and undue influence will readily be inferred unless all jealous suspicion is put to rest,' by satisfactory testimony," citing Schouler on Wills, 256; Newhouse v. Godwin, 17 Barb. 236; Wilson v. Moran, 3 Bradf. 172; Crispell v. Du Bois, 4 Barb. 393; Kinne v. Johnson, 60 Barb. 69; Post v. Mason, 91 N. Y. 539. See Matter of Keefe, 27 Misc. 618.

In the Lowman case, 1 Misc. 43, one of the residuary legatees was a nephew of the testator and attended him as a physician. Others of the persons interested in the estate alleged undue influence on the part of this nephew, predicated first upon his opportunity as such attending physician, and second upon the fact that he had professionally prescribed morphine to the testator for the purpose of allaying pain; it was held that there being no proof that at any time or at the time of the execution of the will, the testator was under the influence of the drug to the extent of impairing his mind or his will, and there was not the slighest evidence of any bad faith on the part of the nephew, no presumption would be entertained adverse to the will or in favor of the undue influence. In a case where a will was made by a patient in favor of his physician who had only attended him for comparatively a brief period, and it appeared that the testator was broken in mind and body by indulgence in vicious habits, and it also appeared that the will was made under an insane delusion respecting relatives of the decedent, it was held that there was a strong presumption against its validity, which was not met by the circumstance and proofs, but that fraud and undue influence were inferable from, and established by, all the facts in the case, and the will was denied probate. Calhoun v. Jones, 2 Redf. 34. See Matter of Rintelen, 37 Misc. 462, where confirmed inebriate made will in favor of an attorney, citing Matter of Westurn, 60 Hun, 298; Peck v. Belden, 6 Dem. 299; Turhune v. Brookfield, 1 Redf. 220.

§ 382. Effect of character of the will combined with age or weakness of the testator.—Where the evidence shows that the will propounded ignores or disinherits those remembered by the testator in prior wills or who were dependent upon the testator or whom the testator has previously regarded with affection, or where the will is at variance with the repeated testamentary declarations of the testator, and the will contested was made by the testator in a last illness or under circumstances of great bodily weakness, or infirmity, in favor of the person accused of exerting undue influence, the Surrogate will require explicit affirmative proof of the absence of fraud or imposition. Thus where it appeared that the testatrix had often said that she would make no will but did make a will before her death, when she was so weak that she could neither speak nor sign her name, that the directions in regard to the will were given by one who had never been particularly intimate with the testatrix or liked by her, and it appeared that this person went to the house three days before her death for the purpose of getting her to make a will and superintended its execution, it was held a sufficient proof of undue influence. In this case, however, it was also held, that the will was signed by the testatrix's mark, and that when asked if she acknowledged her signature she said, she did not know whether she did or not. Matter of Hopkins, 6 N. Y. St. Rep. 390. See also Matter of Stewart, 10 N. Y. Supp. 744. So where a testator having made previously wills in favor of his family executed a subsequent will at the house of a friend, substantially in favor of that friend and his wife, and it was shown that the testator was illiterate, intemperate and infirm, probate was denied on the ground of undue influence. Matter of Liney, 34 N. Y. St. Rep. 700. See also Matter of Dwyer, 29 Misc. 382. So in a case where a testator was seventy-nine years old, who had been strong and vigorous all his life until he was attacked by a serious illness during which in expectation of death he made his will, and it appeared that one of his daughters was disinherited by this will as the result of letters written by one of the sons containing accusations against the daughter which alienated her father's affection, it was held that a verdict that the will was procured to be executed by undue influence, was proper if the jury were satisfied that the son wrote the letter knowing its statement to be untrue, with the design that it should reach his father and influence him in the disposition of his property, and with the result that it did in fact influence him to disinherit the sister. Matter of Will of Budlong, 126 N. Y. 423, 431.

§ 383. Summary.—From the cases discussed it is clear that the presumption of undue influence arises first in cases of confidential or fiduciary relationship as where a patient makes a will in favor of his physician, a client in favor of his lawyer, a ward in favor of his guardian, or any person in favor of his priest or religious adviser.

Second, this presumption is strengthened where the contents of the will are unjust, or at variance with the declared testamentary intentions of the testator.

And third, the presumption may arise where in addition it appears that the will was executed by a testator so infirm by reason of age or weakness as to be peculiarly susceptible to importunities or other influences, particularly when the person benefiting by the will then made has motive and opportunity to exert influence and appears to have profited thereby.

If in any particular case such a presumption is created by the facts, it may be met as to the first class of cases by proof of such consanguinity or nearness of relation as to warrant the person sustaining the confidential or fiduciary relation in exerting that degree of persuasion, urging or decent importunity, which the courts permit, or by any affirmative proof showing that undue influence was not in fact exerted. The presumption in the second class may be met by proof that the testator having testamentary capacity had full knowledge of the contents of the will, unless of course it appear that the making of the particular will was induced by false representations actually affecting the testamentary disposition. The presumption in the third class of cases may be met by affirmative proof of testamentary capacity and by showing that undue influence was not in fact exerted.

§ 384. Change of testamentary intention.—The fact that testator has made other wills prior to the one objected to, making entirely different disposition of his property, particularly where the prior will is equitable and provident, is a material inquiry upon the issue of undue influence. Calhoun v. Jones, 2 Redf. 34; Matter of Dwyer, 29 Misc. 382. So also may it be material to show that the testator had repeatedly declared his intention of making no will, yet this fact if proved is not at all conclusive but should be viewed in connection with other circumstances in the case. Matter of White, 5 N. Y. Supp. 295. And particularly material will be proof that the will is completely at variance with the testator's repeated declaration as to his testamentary intentions. See Matter of Phelps, 19 Weekly Dig. 293.

§ 385. Knowledge of contents.—The ordinary presumption as to the knowledge by a person who has executed a document, of the contents of such document, does not arise in case of wills where there is proof that the testator was suffering from some physical infirmity or defect, or where the will was executed under any of the conditions above noted, and presents either in connection with the circumstances surrounding its execution or in its very provisions any suspicious feature such as to require the court to inquire narrowly into the facts. Conceding testamentary capacity to exist, and the only objection to be that of undue influence, it is a most important inquiry for the court to make, whether the testator really knew the contents of the will he was signing. It is true that among the four statutory requirements above discussed there is no provision that the will must be read by or to the testator before its execution. However, the courts have frequently intimated the wisdom of such a precaution in cases where it appeared that the testator was illiterate, infirm, or extremely aged. Thus it has been observed judicially: "We think it is the duty of witnesses of wills to know, by inquiry of the testator or otherwise, whether or not he has personal knowledge of the contents of the paper he is about to sign as his last will and testament. Unless this is done, there might not be any evidence that the will had been read to or by him; no evidence that he ever had knowledge of its contents, and thus opportunity would be afforded to take advantage of his confidence or carelessness, to impose a will upon him not in accordance with his directions or intentions; especially would this be so in the case of the aged, sick, or infirm, who might be powerless to protect themselves from being surrounded by those who would not hesitate to benefit themselves by fraud, coercion or undue influence, and possibly crime." Matter of White, 15 N. Y. St. Rep. 753. See also Will of Crumb, 6 Dem. 478. The Court of Appeals held, in a case where a decedent was shown to have mental capacity but to have been undoubtedly impaired in mental power, and his will enfeebled by paralysis and disease, that a party who offered an instrument for probate as a will, must show satisfactorily that it is the will of the alleged testator, and upon this question he has the burden of proof. Rollwagen v. Rollwagen, 63 N. Y. 540, 517. And Judge Earl observes: "Ordinarily, when a testator subscribes and executes a will in the mode required by law, the fact of such subscription and execution are sufficient proof that the instrument speaks his language and expresses his will; but when a testator is deaf and dumb, or unable to read or write and speak, something more is demanded. There must then not only be proof of the factum of the will, but also that the mind of the testator accompanied the act, and that the instrument executed speaks his language and really expresses his will."

§ 386. Proof of knowledge of contents.—If it appear in evidence that the will was read to the testator before execution prior to his publication of the same as his will, this will generally be considered sufficient proof that he understood the contents thereof. And even where the testator is an illiterate person, if it is proven that the will was read aloud in her presence, the court will assume in the absence of allegations of evidence of fraud on part of the person so reading it, that the whole will was read and read correctly. Matter of Murphy, 15 Misc. 208, 211, Lansing, Surr. See opinion at page 212 et seq., and question of undue influence between servant and master.

Where, however, the decedent is shown to have been at the time of execution a person of business capacity, prudence, and full testamentary capacity, the court cannot require proof that the will was read but will infer knowledge of contents from the circumstances of the execution. See Matter of Smith, 24 N. Y. Supp. 928; Matter of Metcalf, 16 Misc. 180; Hagan v. Yates, 1 Dem. 584; Matter of Sheldon, 40 N. Y. St. Rep. 369.

So knowledge of contents may be proved by evidence that the testator subsequently made declarations indicating recognition of the will or that the testator prior to its execution expressed testamentary intentions which appeared to be carried out in the will. See Wightman v. Stoddard, 3 Bradf. 393; Ewen v. Perrine, 5 Redf. 640, Alton B. Parker, Surr.

This is not to be taken as indicating that undue influence may be proved merely by declarations of the testator, for it has been held in that respect, that there must be independent proof of efforts so to influence him. See Cudney v. Cudney, 68 N. Y. 148.

Knowledge of contents of the will, however, may be proved circumstantially, the court may infer it from all the circumstances attending the execution and it may be established by the testimony of the subscribing witnesses, or by the testimony of one witness in opposition to that of the other or others, or it may be established by independent testimony, even against that of the subscribing witnesses. See Theological Seminary v. Calhoun, 25 N. Y. 422.

§ 387. Undue influence in destroying a will.—Undue influence may be exerted not only to procure a will, but also to procure the destruction or revocation of a will. In this latter case a court may admit to probate a will destroyed in the lifetime of the testator as the result of undue influence. In such a case, however, not only must the undue influence be proven resulting in the destruction of the will but it must first be shown that the will existed and that it had been duly executed. See Voorhees v. Voorhees, 39 N. Y. 463.

§ 388. Mistake.—It is not sufficient ground for refusing probate of a will that error as to any matter of fact has been made by the testator, unless it appear, that the mistake embodied in the will has been of such a character as to nullify or materially to affect his testamentary intentions. Boell v. Schwartz, 4 Bradf. 12. It has, however, in another connection been already pointed out that proof of mistake on the part of the testator, will not invalidate the will where it does not amount to an insane delusion. See cases cited supra. Thus a mistake as to the person named as executor, is no ground for refusing probate. Matter of Finn, 1 Misc. 280. And it has been held proof that the omission of a beneficiary in part or all of the will was the result of mistake is inadmissible. Matter of Forbes, 60 Hun, 171, where the General Term observes:

"There are many reported cases where proof has been introduced in controversies over wills of the expression of testamentary intentions which were not carried out in the instrument. Such testimony has usually been introduced upon the question of undue influence, but we find no case where such proof has been received to destroy a will on the ground of mistake alone . . . . such a doctrine would be fraught with danger." This of course does not affect the rights of courts in construing wills to receive evidence that statements or provisions therein contained are void for uncertainty or mistake. See, for example, Kalbfleisch v. Kalbfleisch, 67 N. Y. 356, 360. However, where the will in question appears to be in direct controversion of the testator's known testamentary intentions, and the question of his knowledge of the contents of the will is in issue, the court may very properly take into consideration the variance of the written will upon the question whether the will was the will of the testator or the will of someone else imposed upon him by force or fraud. See Matter of Westurn, 60 Hun, 298.

So in Matter of Tousey, 34 Misc. 363, Thomas, Surr., held: "The doctrine of dependent relative revocation includes as one of its branches, and applies to, an attempted revocation of a testamentary provision which upon some ground of mistake is held inoperative. If applicable to a will it must appear clearly from the will itself, not only that there has been a mistake made by the testator, but also just what he would have done in case there had been no mistake. Gifford v. Dyer, 2 R. I. 99. Where a legacy was made by a will and in a codicil revoking it was recited that the legatee was dead, such revocation was held inoperative on proof that the legatee survived the testator (Campbell v. French, 3 Ves. 321), but even in case of revocation by codicil the rule has been applied with caution, and the mistake must appear on the face of the codicil as the sole moving cause to induce the revocation. Skipwith v. Cabell, 19 Gratt. 758. An apparent mistake as to a matter of fact as to which the testator must have had full knowledge is not sufficient. Mendinhall's Appeal, 124 Penn. St. 387. In no case which has been brought to my notice has a will been refused probate, or has any attempt been made to correct or change its provisions on proof extraneous to the document of a mistake by the testator as to a fact which might possibly have led him to do something different from what he has done. On the contrary, the cases in the courts of this State which require the testator's directions to be followed, even though it may be made quite clearly to appear that he was actuated by erroneous opinions on questions of fact, are quite numerous. Matter of Bedlow, 67 Hun, 408; Clapp v. Fullerton, 34 N. Y. 190; Matter of Harris, 19 Misc. Rep. 388; Creeley v. Ostrander, 3 Bradf. 107.

CHAPTER V

ADMITTING THE WILL TO PROBATE

§ 389. Will, when sufficiently proved.

If it appears to the surrogate that the will was duly executed; and that the testator, at the time of executing it, was in all respects competent to make a will, and not under restraint; it must be admitted to probate, as a will valid to pass real property, or personal property, or both, as the surrogate determines, and the petition and citation require, and must be recorded accordingly. The decree admitting it to probate must state whether the probate was or was not contested. § 2623, Code Civil Proc.

The wording of this section indicates that the admission of the will to probate is a judicial act and involves a determination by the Surrogate whether the will, execution of which he declares by his decree to have been in compliance with the statute, is a will valid to pass real, or personal, or real and personal property; but this does not involve necessarily any determination by the Surrogate as to the validity of the bequests or devises in the will contained. Where there has been a failure to comply with the statutory provisions relative to the execution of wills, a will must be denied probate. Public policy requires it. Matter of Kivlin, 37 Misc. 187, and cases cited. The intent of the testator may be clear; it may, e. g., be a holographic will; but that cannot be paramount to the intent of the legislature. Matter of Andrews, 162 N. Y. 1. In Matter of Babcock, 42 Misc. 235, Silkman, Surr., held that in view of the difficulties inherent in appeals from a decree refusing probate in a close case (referring to Matter of Beck, 6 App. Div. 211) he would decree probate where the factum was established satisfactorily unless lack of capacity, or fraud, or undue influence be established beyond a reasonable doubt. But this means there must be some evidence that the person who made the will was competent, and not under restraint. This is usually done by the subscribing witnesses. Matter of Schreiber, 112 App. Div. 495, citing Miller v. White, 5 Redf. 321. If there be no such proof, probate must be denied. Ibid., citing Matter of Goodwin, 95 App. Div. 183; Matter of Ramsdell, 117 N. Y. 636. The presumption of sanity is not alone sufficient to underlie a finding to sustain the judicial act called for by § 2623 in the words "if it appears to the Surrogate." The judicial action of the Surrogate in a probate proceeding must be confined to a determination of the question of the due execution of the will, and whether the testator had sufficient testamentary capacity, and was not under any restraint. He has also power, under the provisions of the Code, § 2624 (see ch. VIII) to pass on the validity of a bequest of personalty as incidental to the probate of the will unless probate is denied; but the words "a will valid to pass real property" mean solely a will duly executed which undertakes in terms to convey that species of property.

But, probate logically precedes any power to construe. Upon due proof of statutory execution he must admit to probate. On its validity in the other sense the Surrogate can then pass. Matter of Davis, 182 N. Y. 468, 475, aff'g 105 App. Div. 221, and 45 Misc. 554. This Davis case was peculiar in that sole legatee, devisee and executrix did not survive testatrix. See also Matter of Pilsbury, 50 Misc. 367. The Surrogate does not decide in admitting a will to probate, that the instrument in fact passes title to any real estate, he passes on the factum of the will alone; and the description of the wills as wills of real or personal property, relate to the manner in which they have been executed. For example under § 2611, now Dec. Est. Law, §§ 23–25, there are wills which while they may purport to devise real estate can only be admitted to probate as wills of personal property, such, for example, are wills executed without the State in the manner prescribed by the laws of the State or county where executed, or the will of a nonresident executed according to the laws of his residence, but not as prescribed by the laws of this State; and a decree admitting a will to probate as a will valid to pass real property gives in the first place, to the decision of the Surrogate, no effect as an adjudication as to the validity of the devises in the will (see Matter of the Will of Merriam, 136 N. Y. 58, 61), and, in the second place, prejudices no one interested in the property sought to be bequeathed or devised, because the statute expressly limits the conclusive effect of a probate decree in the case of wills of real and of personal property, by §§ 2626 and 2627 of the Code already quoted (in the chapter on decrees and orders) but here repeated for purposes of clearness.

Probate, how far conclusive as to personalty.

A decree admitting to probate a will of personal property, made as prescribed in this article, is conclusive, as an adjudication, upon all the questions determined by the surrogate pursuant to this article, until it is reversed upon appeal, or revoked by the surrogate, in an action brought under section 2653*a* to determine the validity or invalidity of such will; and except that a determination, made under section 2624 (that is where a party puts in issue the validity, construction, or effect of provisions in the will) of this act, is conclusive only upon the petitioner and each party who was duly cited, or appeared, and every person claiming from, through, or under either of them. § 2626, Code Civil Proc.

This conclusiveness extends into collateral proceedings. Vanderpoel v. Van Valkenburgh, 6 N. Y. 190; Wetmore v. Parker, 52 N. Y. 450.

Probate, how far conclusive as to realty.

A decree, admitting to probate a will of real property, made as prescribed in this article, establishes, presumptively only, all the matters determined by the surrogate, pursuant to this article, as against a party who was duly cited, or a person claiming from, through, or under him; or upon the trial of an action, or hearing of a special proceeding, in which a controversy arises concerning the will. Where the decree is produced in evidence, in favor of or against a person, or in a case, specified in this section, the testimony taken in the special proceeding, wherein it was made, may be read in evidence, with the same force and effect, as if it were taken upon the trial of the action, or the hearing of the special proceeding, wherein the decree is so produced. § 2627, Code Civil Proc.

Now it is manifest under these two sections that as far as personal property goes, the probate decree becomes conclusive after a year has elapsed from the time of its entry, that being the period within which an appeal should be taken or a petition filed to revoke probate (see Post v. Mason, 91 N. Y. 539; Smith v. Hilton, 19 N. Y. St. Rep. 340); and consequently, if the time to appeal or to apply for revocation of probate has expired, there is no remedy unless it is possible to make out a case of fraud in procuring probate under which the decree could be attacked. It appears also that so far as realty is concerned, the decree has no conclusive effect but establishes presumptively only the matters determined by the Surrogate, that is to say, the sufficiency of the facts proved to establish due execution. See Matter of Gilman, 38 Barb. 364. In Matter of Maccafil, 127 App. Div. 21, a will disposing of realty only but appointing an executor was admitted on the latter ground as a will of personalty, although the husband claimed jure mariti, as in intestacy. See opinion of Jenks, J., and cases discussed.

So far as rights in the property thereby devised go, the probate decree concludes no one. So it has been held (Baxter v. Baxter, 76 Hun, 98), that a Surrogate's decree admitting a will to probate as a will of real property was presumptive evidence,

(a) Of the facts as to proper execution (see also Van Rensselaer v. Morris, 1 Paige, 13);

(b) As to the competency of the testator (see also Howard v. Moot, 64 N. Y. 262);

(c) That he was not under restraint;

(these being the facts covered by § 2623); and accordingly one claiming under a deed, made by the testator of a will refused probate by the Surrogate on the ground of incompetency of the testator, was held not to be in any way concluded as to his rights under the deed from proving the grantor's competency to convey, although it appeared that the deed and the will were made upon the same day, and, moreover, it was held that the claimant under the deed having been a party to the probate proceedings in which the will had been rejected made no difference in this regard. Baxter v. Baxter, supra. And as it may be that a will purporting to pass real estate may not be admissible to probate as a will of real property but may be admitted as a will of personal property, so it may be that a will invalidated as to personalty, as for example, the will of a testator domiciled in another State at the time of his death, and held in that State by a competent court to have been revoked by the subsequent birth of a child, may while invalidated in this State as to personalty, still be valid in this State as to realty. See Bloomer v. Bloomer, 2 Bradf. 336. And where the decree has no conclusive effect, the Surrogate may refuse to open the probate on petition of one not concluded thereby. Bailey v. Stewart, 2 Redf. 212.

The Code provides, § 2625, that,

> Where the surrogate decides against the sufficiency of the proof, or against the validity of a will, or upon the construction, validity, or legal effect of any provision thereof, he must make a decree accordingly; and, if required by either party, he must enter in the minutes, the grounds of his decision.

But, where a Surrogate has refused to probate a will upon the ground that the proof of its execution is insufficient and the testator incompetent to make it, his powers over it are ended and he cannot go further and admit it to probate, with a statement of the executor and chief beneficiary to the effect that the direct bequest to him of realty and personalty was in fact made for the children of the testator, that the testator considered them incompetent to manage the property and that the executor holds it in trust for them. Matter of Eckert, 36 Misc. 610 (headnote).

The form of a decree refusing probate, on the ground of insufficiency of proof, or invalidity of any of the grounds upon which the Surrogate has jurisdiction to deny probate, can readily be adapted from the form of the decree below suggested. It will be noted in the precedent under § 390 below, that provision is made for a clause in which may be incorporated the determination of the Surrogate with respect to the construction, validity, or legal effect of any provision in the will expressly put in issue by a party to the proceeding. The object of § 2625, particularly in respect to its last provision, is to add to the probative effect of the decree in subsequent proceedings. For example, if a will is sought to be established by an action, subsequent to its rejection by the Surrogate, the decree duly recorded or certified is admissible in evidence; and while having no conclusive effect upon the rights of the devisees, it is conclusive upon the matters, and in the respects touching which the Surrogate had jurisdiction. See Corley v. McElmeel, 87 Hun, 13. In affirming the case last cited, the Court of Appeals (149 N. Y. 228) said, in this connection (see opinion of Gray, J., at page 245):

"The jurisdiction of the Surrogate is only such as is conferred by the statute, and though a scheme for the determination of the factum of wills of real property, as well as those of personal property, is provided by the Code of Civil Procedure, it is not to be regarded as exclusive of the right, which existed at common law, in favor of heir and of devisee, to a trial by jury of the question of the title to the testator's real property. The Surrogate's decree, as to a will of personalty, is made conclusive by force of the statutory provision (Code, § 2626), giving it such effect, if favorable to the will; and if unfavorable, it is, in fact, conclusive; because the transmission and distribution of the property bequeathed are checked. It was always considered, when the provisions of the Revised Statutes were the source of the Surrogate's authority, that his decree did not, and could not, conclude the question of the validity of a testamentary devise of real property, in a subsequent litigation involving the title thereto. Bogardus v. Clark, 4 Paige, 623; Harris v. Harris, 26 N. Y. 433. We think that it is true now under the Code. That the Surrogate's admission to probate of a will of real property has its advantages, is, of course, plain enough. In the first place, it entitles the will to be recorded as a proved will, and, in the second place, in a subsequent litigation over the real property devised, the devisee defending his title has the benefit of the presumption arising from the production of the Surrogate's decree and the testimony upon which it was rendered. Also, the devisee is protected against the claim of a purchaser in good faith from the heir-at-law. (Code, § 2628.) These are manifest advantages and render the admission of the will to probate a desirable thing; but they are only advantages and nothing more. The title of the devisee is still open to litigation at the instance of the heir-at-law, who is not concluded by anything which has taken place in the Surrogate's Court."

Where the parties required to be cited are of full age and desire to expedite the probate of the will, they may do so by means of the subjoined waiver and consent, duly acknowledged and filed.

Hon.

Surrogate.

Decree granting probate after contest.

In the Matter of Proving the Last Will and Testament of Deceased, as a Will of Real and Personal Property.

Satisfactory proof having been made of the due service of the citations heretofore issued in this matter, requiring all persons entitled to notice of this proceeding to be and appear before one of the Surrogates of the county of New York to attend the probate of the last will and testament of late of deceased, bearing date the day of 19 and [here recite all the appearances, as for example, and one of the executors named in said will, the petitioner herein, having appeared, in person or by attorney as the case may be, in support of said probate; and (add other parties appearing and contesting) and infants over (or under) the age of 14 years having appeared by a guardian ad litem duly appointed by the surrogate and filed an answer in opposition to said probate; and a person named as executor in another paper purporting to be the last will and testament of the above named decedent having appeared herein by his attorney in pursuance of an order of this court duly made upon his petition permitting him to intervene as a party upon this proceeding, and no other person having appeared];

And witnesses having been examined and proofs taken (by and on behalf) of the proponent and the contestants touching the facts and circumstances attending the execution of said will, and the competency of the testator to make the same, and his freedom from restraint, and the Surrogate having heard such proofs and the allegations of the respective parties, and due deliberation having been thereupon had, it is

Ordered, Adjudged and Decreed—

I. That the instrument in writing bearing date the day of 19 propounded as and for the last will and testament of the said deceased, in this proceeding, is the last will and testament of the said deceased, and was duly executed as required by law. That the said the testator at the time of executing it was, in all respects, competent to make such will and not under restraint.

II. (If the validity, construction or effect of any disposition of personal property contained in the will was put in issue before the Surrogate add here the determination of the Surrogate as to the true construction and legal effect of the clause, reciting it.) Note.

Note. No such disposition can be put in issue under section 2624, excepting

(a) It be of personal property.

(b) The will be of a resident of the State.

(c) The will was executed within the State.

III. And it is further Ordered, Adjudged and Decreed, that the said instrument offered for probate herein be, and the same hereby is admitted to probate as the last will and testament of the said deceased, valid to pass (real, or personal, or real and personal) property; and that the said will with the proofs thereof, together with this decree, be recorded; and that letters testamentary issue to the executor (s) named in said will, who may qualify thereunder.

IV. (It is proper to add a further direction dismissing as unproved and unsustained the objections, if any, that may have been filed and not substantially disposed of by the determinations as to testamentary capacity and undue influence.)

V. (Here incorporate directions as to the payment of costs to the proponent and to special guardians, and whatever provisions for taxable disbursements that may be necessary, specifying whether the costs are to be paid out of the estate or to be imposed upon the contestants personally.)

(Signature.)

Surrogate.

Where the Surrogate, however, refuses probate it is proper to follow the foregoing form substantially as far as paragraph I. only, at which point the determination of the Surrogate as to the particular ground for the revocation of the will, should be incorporated. For example, if due execution has been proven but the exercise of undue influence established, the decree may read:

> It is Ordered, Adjudged and Decreed, that the paper writing purporting to be, and offered for probate as, the last will and testament of deceased, is not the last will and testament of the said deceased, the execution thereof by said having been procured while he was under restraint and undue influence upon him exercised by and it is
> Further Ordered, Adjudged and Decreed, that the said instrument offered for probate herein be and the same hereby is, denied probate as the last will and testament of the said deceased, and (here add a further clause granting costs to the successful contestants and providing for taxable disbursements out of the estate).

The grounds of his decision must be entered in the minutes by the Surrogate, if required by either party. Code Civ. Proc. § 2625, ante, p. 394.

§ 392. The Surrogate's certificate of probate.—After the decree admitting the will to probate has been made, the Surrogate must make a certificate under § 2629 of the Code, which is as follows:

> The surrogate must cause to be indorsed upon, or annexed to, the original will admitted to probate, or the exemplified copy, or statement of the tenor of a will, which was admitted without production of an original written will, a certificate, under his hand, or the hand of the clerk of his court, and his seal of office, stating that it has, upon due proof, been admitted to probate, as a will valid to pass real or personal property, or both, as the case may be. The will, or the copy or statement, so authenticated, the record thereof, or an exemplified copy of the record, may be read in evidence, as proof of the original will, or of the contents or tenor thereof, without further evidence, and with the effect specified in the last three sections. § 2629, Code Civil Proc.

The certificate should read substantially as follows:

§ 393. Decree where will is not produced having been lost or destroyed. —Where probate is sought of a lost or destroyed will under §§ 2621 and 1865, it will be recalled that due execution and the existence of the will at the time of the testator's death, or its fraudulent destruction in his lifetime must be clearly proven; and the provisions of the will must be established in the way prescribed by the Code.

The decree admitting such a will or establishing such a will, should contain similar formal recitals as to the citation and its due service as the foregoing decree and, after reciting further the appearances in the proceeding, may proceed as follows:

and the Surrogate having inquired particularly into all the facts and circumstances; and witnesses having been examined and proofs taken on behalf of the several parties hereto; and due deliberation having been thereupon had, whereby it appears, to the satisfaction of the Surrogate, that the said deceased, did, on or about the day of duly execute a last will and testament in the manner required by law; and that the said will was in existence at the time of the said testator's death (or was fraudulently destroyed in his lifetime) and that it has been lost; and it further appearing to the satisfaction of the Surrogate that the provisions of said will so lost as aforesaid have been clearly and distinctly proved by at least two credible witnesses; (Note)

Note. That under section 1865 a correct copy or draft is made equivalent to one witness; if such a draft has been made use of, it may be specified in the decree although it is not absolutely essential that this be done.

Now, on motion of the counsel for the petitioner herein, it is Ordered, Adjudged and Decreed, that late of deceased, did on the day of 19 make and execute in the manner prescribed by law, his last will and testament containing substantially the following provisions: (here embody the provisions in the words in which they have been proven by the witnesses; or where there is a draft proven to have been embodied in the will, incorporate the same verbatim); and it is further Ordered, Adjudged and Decreed, that the said last will, containing the aforesaid provisions be and the same hereby is admitted to probate as the last will and testament of the said deceased, valid to pass real and personal property; and that the said will containing the said provisions with the proofs thereof, together with this decree, be recorded, and that letters testamentary issue to the executors (who are proved to have been named therein; or where the witnesses have been unable to prove any executor named in the will provide for letters of administration with the will annexed) who may qualify thereunder.

(Add the necessary provisions as to costs.)

§ 394. Prompt entry of decree.—The danger of not promptly entering a decree admitting a will to probate, is, that the time is thereby set running within which an adverse title might be started by an heir conveying to a purchaser in good faith, and for a valuable consideration, property otherwise disposed of by the will. The danger is a remote one, but the statute provides for a validation of such a bona fide purchaser's title in case the will is not admitted to probate within the time thereby limited, which is four years; the section is as follows:

When purchaser from heir protected notwithstanding a devise.

The title of a purchaser in good faith and for a valuable consideration, from the heir of a person who died seized of real property, shall not be affected by a devise of the property made by the latter, unless within four years after the testator's death, the will devising the same is either admitted to probate and recorded, as a will of real property, in the office of the surrogate having jurisdiction, or established by the final judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction of the state, in an action brought for that purpose. But if, at the time of the testator's death, the devisee is either within the age of twenty-one years, or insane, or imprisoned on a criminal charge, or in execution upon conviction of a criminal offense, for a term less than for life; or without the state, or, if the will was concealed by one or more of the heirs of the testator, the limitation created by this section does not begin until after the expiration of one year from the removal of such a disability, or the delivery of the will to the devisee or his representative, or to the proper surrogate. § 2628, Code Civil Proc. Now Dec. Est. Law, § 46.

The words "if at the time of the testator's death, the devisee is . . . . within the age of twenty-one years," have been held not to refer to unborn children. Fox v. Fee, 167 N. Y. 44, 46. And the concealment of the will by heirs of the testator is such concealment as leaves the devisees ignorant of their rights under the will, and deprives them of knowledge of its existence. Ibid., and Cole v. Gourlay, 79 N. Y. 527, 533.

The Surrogate has of course in a proper case power to enter the decree nunc pro tunc. But this power must be carefully exercised. So, where, by a peculiar error, an administrator took out letters under a will where no probate decree was entered, and acted thereunder, Surrogate Rollins, upon an application to revoke the letters of administration with the will annexed, which he denied as being made by one having no standing in the proceedings, passed also upon the administrator's application that a decree be entered nunc pro tunc admitting the will to probate. This he denied on the ground that the failure to obtain it earlier was attributable to the negligence of the applicant and not to an act or omission of the court. Staples v. Hoffman, 1 Dem. 63, 66.

§ 395. Additional provisions as to record of wills.—The following sections of the Code contain miscellaneous provisions with regard to the record of wills:

Recording wills proved elsewhere within the state.

A transcript of a will of real property, proved and recorded in any court of the state, of competent jurisdiction, and of all the notices, process, and proofs relating to the same, must, when duly exemplified, be recorded, upon the request of any person interested therein, in the surrogate's court of any county, in which real property of the testator is situated. § 2630, Code Civil Proc.

Records of certain wills heretofore proved; how far evidence.

The exemplification of the record of a will, proved before the judge of the former court of probates, and recorded in his office before the first day of January, in the year 1785, certified under the seal of the officer having custody of the record, must be admitted in evidence in any case, after it has been made to appear that diligent and fruitless search has been made for the original will. § 2631, Code Civil Proc.

The "record" must include the "proofs," or its exemplification will not make it evidence. Hill v. Crockford, 24 N. Y. 128, citing Morris v. Keyes, 1 Hill, 540.

§ 396. Records of certain wills heretofore proved; how far evidence.

An exemplified copy of the last will and testament of any deceased person, which has been admitted to probate, whether as a will of real or personal property, or both, and recorded in the office of the surrogate in any county of this state, shall be admitted in evidence in any of the courts of this state, without the proofs and examination taken on the probate thereof, and whether such proofs shall have been recorded or not, with like effect as if the original of such will had been produced and proven in such court, when thirty years have elapsed since the will was admitted to probate and recorded. And the recording of such will shall be evidence that the same was duly admitted to probate. The exemplification of the record of a will which has been proved before the surrogate or judge of probate, or other officer exercising the like jurisdiction of another state must, when certified by the officer having by law, when the certificate was made, custody of the record, be admitted in evidence as if the original will was produced and proved, when thirty years have elapsed since the will was proved. § 2632, Code Civil Proc.

§ 397. Records of certain wills, how far evidence; as to wills of real property.

A will of real property, which has been, at any time, either before or after this chapter takes effect, duly proved in the supreme court, or the court of chancery, or before a surrogate of the state, with the certificate of proof thereof annexed thereto or endorsed thereon, or an exemplified copy thereof, may be recorded in the office of the clerk or the register, as the case requires, of any county in the state, in the same manner as a deed of real property. Where the will relates to real property, the executor, or administrator with the will annexed, must cause the same, or an exemplified copy thereof, to be recorded, in each county where real property of the testator is situated, within twenty days after letters are issued to him. An exemplification of the record of such a will, from any surrogate's or other office where the same has been recorded, either before or after this chapter takes effect, may be in like manner recorded in the office of the clerk or register of any county. Such a record or exemplification, or an exemplification of the record thereof, must be received in evidence, as if the original will was produced and proved. § 2633, Code Civil Proc. Now Dec. Est. Law, § 42.

Index and fees.

Upon recording a will or exemplification, as prescribed in the last section, the clerk or register must index it in the same books, and substantially in the same manner, as if it was a deed recorded in his office. Dec. Est. Law, § 43.

An executor, or administrator with the will annexed, who causes a record of a will or exemplification to be made as prescribed in section forty-two of the decedent estate law, must be allowed, in his account, the fees paid by him therefor. § 2634, Code Civil Proc.

§ 398. Wills to be returned after probate.

Except where special provision is otherwise made by law, or where the surrogate sends a will into another state or territory, or into a foreign country, or delivers it to a party in interest, as provided in section 2620 of this act, a written will, after it has been proved and recorded, must be retained by the surrogate, until the expiration of one year after it has been recorded, and, if a petition for the revocation of probate thereof is then filed, until a decree is made thereupon. It must then be returned, upon demand, to the person who delivered it, unless he is dead, or a lunatic, or has removed from the state; in which case, it may, in the discretion of the surrogate, be delivered to any person named therein as devisee, or to an heir or assignee of a devisee; or, it relates only to personal property, to the executor, or administrator with the will annexed, or to a legatee. § 2635, Code Civil Proc.

§ 399. Recording will proved in other states, or abroad.

Where real property situated within this state, or an interest therein, is devised, or made subject to a power of disposition, by a will, duly executed in conformity with the laws of this state, of a person who was, at the time of his, or her death, a resident elsewhere within the United States, or in a foreign country, and such will has been admitted to probate within the state or territory, or foreign country, where the decedent so resided, and is filed or recorded in the proper office as prescribed by the laws of that state or territory, or foreign country, a copy of such will or of the record thereof and of the proofs or of the records thereof or, if the proofs are not on file or recorded in such office, of any statement, on file or recorded in such office, of the substance of the proofs, authenticated as prescribed in section forty-five of this chapter, or if no proofs and no statement of the substance of the proofs be on file or recorded in such office, a copy of such will, or of the record thereof, authenticated as prescribed in said section forty-five, accompanied by a certificate that no proofs or statement of the substance of proof of such will, are or is on file, or recorded in such office, made and likewise authenticated as prescribed in said section forty-five, may be recorded in the office of the surrogate of any county in this state where such real property is situated; and such record in the office of such surrogate, or an exemplified copy thereof, shall be presumptive evidence of such will, and of the execution thereof, in any action or special proceeding relating to such real property. § 2703, Code Civil Proc. Now Dec. Est. Law, § 44.

See also Laws 1894, ch. 731.

See ancillary administration, post, as to how foreign wills and records are to be authenticated for use in this state under § 2704, Code Civ. Proc. Now Dec. Est. Law, § 45.

A will, to be entitled to record here, for the evidential purposes indicated in this section, must have been executed "in conformity with the laws of this State." Any defect in the proof of that fact, or of the other essential facts prescribed, destroys the utility of the record here. Estate of Shearen, 1 Civ. Proc. Rep. 455; Estate of Langbein, 1 Dem. 448. Such defect, if discovered when the papers are offered for record, is warrant for refusing record. Ibid. See also Lockwood v. Lockwood, 21 N. Y. St. Rep. 93. So, in the proofs of due execution, if but one witness prove to have been examined, and no reason why the other was not examined is shown by the record, the papers will be rejected. Matter of Hagar, 48 Misc. 43, citing above cases and Meiggs v. Hoagland, 68 App. Div. 182; Matter of Nash, 37 Misc. 706.

Millard, Surr., in Matter of Coope, 53 Misc. 509, limited the Hagar case and ordered record under §§ 2703–04 (now §§ 44–45, Dec. Est. Law) of a will shown to have been executed as required by New York law, but actually probated in Michigan on testimony of but one witness of the two.

The object of this section is limited. It does not purport to authorize the issuance of letters testamentary on a will so recorded. Pollock v. Hooley, 67 Hun, 370; Matter of Langbein, supra. See provisions of L. 1894, ch. 731, ante, as to issuing letters on probate of a will on record of probate elsewhere of will of United States citizen, dying domiciled anywhere in the British Empire, leaving property in this State.

The record of the foreign probate is made equivalent to proving the will here. Bromley v. Miller, 2 T. & C. 575; Matter of Langbein, 1 Dem. 448. A deed, therefore, executed by the executor conveys title by force of the will, though no letters have issued here. Pollock v. Hooley, supra.

The application to the Surrogate should be made by duly verified petition, which should set forth the preliminary facts which authorize the action of the Surrogate in spreading the exemplified copy of will and proofs upon the records of the Surrogate's Court. Such petition should show that there is real property situated within the county of the Surrogate which is devised or made subject to a power of sale in a will duly executed in conformity to the laws of this State, by a person who was at the time of death a nonresident, stating place and date of death, alleging original probate with date and place, together with other facts necessary and proper to be brought to the attention of the Surrogate. Matter of Nash, 37 Misc. 706, 709, citing Matter of Shearer, 1 Civ. Proc. 455.

In Meiggs v. Hoagland, 68 App. Div. 182, it appeared (see headnote) that the will of a testator, who died seized of a burial plot situated in the State of New York, was executed in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, and was admitted to probate in that city by a deputy register of wills. The witnesses did not testify that they had become such at the request of the testator, but they subsequently appeared before another deputy register of wills in Philadelphia and so testified.

An exemplified copy of the probate proceedings, including those had before the second deputy register, was filed in the office of the Surrogate of Kings County in November, 1872. Chapter 680 of the Laws of 1872, which was then in force, provided that where any real estate located in the State of New York should be hereafter devised by any person residing out of the State of New York and the will had been admitted to probate in such other State, an exemplified copy of such will and of the proofs might be recorded in the office of the Surrogate of the county where the real estate was situated and should be presumptive evidence of the will and its due execution.

Held, that assuming that all the proceedings in the Register's Court of Philadelphia, including the second deposition made by the subscribing witnesses, were properly incorporated in the exemplified record, such record was only presumptive evidence of the will and its due execution and that this presumption was overcome by the fact that at the time the will was admitted to probate it had not been shown that the subscribing witnesses became such at the request of the testator. See also Matter of Nash, 37 Misc. 706, where proof of execution was defective.

CHAPTER VI

REVOCATION OF PROBATE AND DETERMINING VALIDITY OF A WILL

§ 400. Persons interested may apply to revoke probate.

A person interested in the estate of the decedent may, within the time specified in the next section, present to the surrogate's court, in which a will of personal property was proved, a written petition, duly verified, containing allegations against the validity of the will, or the competency of the proof thereof; and praying that the probate thereof may be revoked, and that the persons, enumerated in the next section but one, may be cited to show cause why it should not be revoked. Upon the presentation of such a petition, the surrogate must issue a citation accordingly. § 2647, Code Civil Proc.

A petition must be presented, as prescribed in the last section, within one year after the recording of the decree admitting the will to probate; except that, when the person entitled to present it is then under a disability, specified in section 396 of this act, the time of such a disability is not a part of the year limited in this section, unless such person shall have appeared by general or special guardian, or otherwise, on said probate. But this section does not affect an application made pursuant to subdivision sixth of section 2481 of this act. § 2648, Code Civil Proc.

Section 2514, subd. 11 (see introductory definitions, ante), defines who are "persons interested." For the purposes of § 2647 the definition must be limited in contemplation of the general intent of the provision. Thus the administrator of a sister having life estate under her brother's will is not within the intent of the statute a person interested in the decedent's estate. Matter of Milliken, 32 Misc. 317. So, although the life tenant had commenced a proceeding to revoke probate, his application to be substituted in her stead upon her death was denied. See, relating to action under § 2653*a* of the Code, decision in Wells v. Betts, 45 App. Div. 115, as to husband's right as tenant by curtesy, and as beneficiary under a previous will. So such a "person interested" does not forfeit his rights by having signed a waiver and consent in the original probate proceedings. Matter of Albert, 38 Misc. 61.

§ 401. Grounds for application to revoke probate.—Section 2647 indicates that the application to revoke probate must be made upon allegations

(a) Against the validity of the will, or

(b) The competency of the proof thereof.

The words, "validity of the will," relate to the will considered as a duly executed instrument valid to pass real and personal property as stated in ch. V; they do not relate to the validity of the bequests or devises contained in the will. Therefore, if after a will has been admitted to probate, a later will is discovered it is evident that this fact affects the validity of the will already probated as the last will and testament of the decedent, and presents a proper case for an application under § 2647. Cunningham v. Souza, 1 Redf. 462; Canfield v. Crandall, 4 Dem. 111. Where it appears, however, subsequent to the probate of a will, that it was in fact a will executed in duplicate, the omission of the probate decree to recite this fact is a mere irregularity and affords no ground for an application to revoke probate. Matter of Crossman, 2 Dem. 69; Crossman v. Crossman, 95 N. Y. 145, 150; Roche v. Nason, 185 N. Y. 128, 135.

The proceeding provided for by these sections cannot be resorted to as a cover for an attempt to open, vacate, modify or set aside a probate decree, or for an attempt to obtain a new trial, or a new hearing for fraud, newly discovered evidence, clerical error, or other like sufficient cause. Such a proceeding is provided for (Pryer v. Clapp, 1 Dem. 387) by § 2481, subd. 6, which contains this qualifying clause, "The powers conferred by this subdivision must be exercised only in a like case and in the same manner as a court of record, and of general jurisdiction exercises the same power."

The application under § 2647, is an application made as a matter of right. An application under subd. 6 of § 2481 is addressed to the favor and sound discretion of the court.

If a decree has been made admitting a will to probate, it would be proper to apply to open the decree, the application being addressed to the discretion of the Surrogate (see Boughton v. Flint, 74 N. Y. 476), for causes coming clearly under the language of subd. 6. For example, to allow a witness to correct his testimony (Martinhoff v. Martinhoff, 81 N. Y. 641), or to permit an heir to come in, discovered after the decree has been made and not cited in the probate proceedings (Bailey v. Hilton, 14 Hun, 3; also Matter of Harlow, 73 Hun, 433); to take newly discovered evidence, or to correct palpable error. And, in such cases, it is proper for the Surrogate to reopen the decree pro tanto, that is, only in so far as is necessary for the re-examination of new evidence, or to correct the error. See Matter of Dey Ermand, 24 Hun, 1. So the Court of Appeals held, that it was proper to open the proceedings and allow an heir to come in and contest probate, where it was proved that he had been forcibly prevented from appearing on the proceedings. Hoyt v. Hoyt, 112 N. Y. 493. Where the Surrogate has power to open the decree for fraud or other like cause, it has been held, that the power is not limited as respects the time within which it must be exercised by §§ 1282 and 1290 of the Code of Civil Procedure. See Matter of Flynn, 136 N. Y. 287. This further emphasizes the distinction between the remedies under §§ 2481 and 2647, for § 2648 expressly limits the time within which an application to revoke probate must be made to one year after the recording of the decree admitting the will to probate. It has been held (see Matter of Hamilton, 20 N. Y. Supp. 73), in view of the fact that § 2647 limits proceedings to revoke probate to wills of personal property (In re Kellum, 50 N. Y. 298. See also Matter of Donlon, 66 Hun, 199), that an application to set aside a decree probating a will of real and personal property, must be made under § 2481, subd. 6. Surrogate Coffin who emphasized this rule, declared the proper practice under such subdivision to be upon affidavit, praying for an order, that the decree be vacated or opened, and that all persons interested might be cited to show cause why such order should not be made; and in the case before him he directed that the citation should issue not only to the heirs-at-law and next of kin who were cited to attend the probate, but also the legatees, if any, who did not belong to either class and were thus not required to be cited. This was a case where a later will had been discovered, and Surrogate Coffin remarked (Matter of Hamilton, ibid., page 74):

"On the return day of the citation, if there were no opposition, or if there were, and the proper facts stated in the petition and affidavits were established and deemed sufficient to justify it, an order would be made setting aside the decree provided the later will should be sufficiently established to warrant its admission to probate. Then, in case it would not be, the original decree would stand. If the order prayed for were granted as suggested, then the usual proceedings would be had to revoke the later will. If successful, it would, as above stated, operate to make the decree of revocation final. If, on the contrary, it failed, the original decree would remain of full force." In Matter of Gaffney, 116 App. Div. 583, it was held that an application under § 2481, subd. 6, could not be used to review any erroneous decision on a mixed question of law and fact in the original probate, which had been acquiesced in without appeal or other attack for two years. Kruse, J., dissented.

§ 402. Same subject.—On the other hand, it is manifest that the application for the revocation of probate must be made for reasons coming within the meaning of § 2647. Thus where an application was made to revoke probate on the ground that the Surrogate making the decree had no jurisdiction to take proof of the will, Surrogate Coffin denied the application, pointing out, that the allegations of the petition were neither against the validity of the will, nor the competency of proof, so that the only remedy could be under subd. 6 of § 2481. Heilman v. Jones, 5 Redf. 398.

The person interested, contemplated by § 2647, must be a person coming within the limitation of the definition in subd. 11 of § 2514; this, it will be recalled, expressly excludes creditors. The petition should expressly describe the applicant as a person interested, specifying his exact relationship to the decedent, whether as heir-at-law or next of kin, devisee, legatee, etc. See Matter of the Will of Bradley, 70 Hun, 104, 108. See also Matter of James, 87 Hun, 57. The Surrogate has power upon this proceeding, as in other proceedings, to determine primarily whether the petitioner is a person interested in the estate of the decedent as required by this section. See Matter of Peaslee, 51 N. Y. St. Rep. 134. Accordingly, if the applicant is shown to have accepted benefits under the will he is estopped from attacking the probate of the will and cannot maintain the proceedings Matter of Peaslee, supra; Matter of Richardson, 81 Hun, 425. But mere consent to probate, as already noted, will not estop him. Matter of Albert, 38 Misc. 61.

§ 403. Object of the application.—The Court of Appeals (Matter of Gouraud, 95 N. Y. 256, 260, 262) has held, that the Code substantially re-enacts the former provisions of the Revised Statutes (2 R. S. 61, §§ 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35), and in a previous case the court had held (Matter of Will of Kellum, 50 N. Y. 298), that it was in consequence of the conclusive effect of the probate of a will of personal property that the provisions were adopted which admitted the next of kin, within one year thereafter, to contest the will by filing allegations against the validity of the will or the competency of the proof thereof. It will be noted that the language was identical with that of § 2647, and in the case cited Judge Rapallo said:

"These provisions are an important safeguard against imposition or mistake, and afford the next of kin a whole year after the probate, to investigate the circumstances attending the execution of the will." And he adds, that "no such provisions are necessary as to wills of real estate, as the probate may be repelled at any time by contrary proof."

And so, in the Gouraud case, supra, Judge Earl held, that those seeking the revocation of the probate of a will were not confined in their allegations to such matters merely as were not investigated and tried when the will was admitted to probate. He says:

"The adjudication admitting the will to probate is not res adjudicata upon the hearing of the allegations filed for a revocation of the probate. For that purpose the whole case is left open, and a party desiring to contest the probate in that way has the right to try over again, upon the same, or other additional evidence, the very questions which were litigated when the will was first proposed for probate."

And he points out that while this double litigation of the same questions upon merely the same evidence and before the same tribunal may in some cases operate very inconveniently, yet the design of the statute is clear; and he alludes to the nonconclusiveness of a decree admitting a will of real estate to probate, observing, "Whenever title to real estate is attempted to be made under it, its validity may be resisted on precisely the same grounds that were litigated when it was admitted to probate, or upon any other grounds."

Consequently it was held in that case, that the Surrogate could not refuse to entertain the application for the revocation of probate merely because the allegations filed therein were substantially filed against the original probate. Ibid. See opinion of Earl, J., at p. 261. See also Matter of Liddington, 20 N. Y. St. Rep. 610.

§ 404. Time within which application must be made.—Section 2648 above quoted requires the petition to be presented within one year after the recording of the decree admitting the will to probate.

In the Gouraud case, 95 N. Y. 256, 262, it was held that the presentation of the petition to the Surrogate under § 2648 corresponded to the filing of allegations under § 31, 2 R. S. 61, under the former practice. This, therefore, means the time when the petition is filed in the office of the Surrogate (Matter of Layton, 15 Misc. 660), and not, as has been in other connections held, the time when it comes up before the Surrogate for his judicial action. If, therefore, the petition is presented within the year the proceeding is deemed to have commenced within the meaning of § 2517. But in that case it is essential that § 2517 be fully complied with in its further provisions in order to entitle the petitioner to the benefit of that section. Accordingly, the citation issued upon the presentation of such petition, must within sixty days thereafter be served as prescribed in § 2520 upon the adverse party, or upon two or more adverse parties who are jointly liable or otherwise united in interest, or within the same time the first publication of the citation must be made pursuant to an order made as prescribed in § 2522 of the Code. See § 2517 and Matter of Bennett, 9 N. Y. Supp. 459. If the citation is not so served within these sixty days, the Surrogate loses his jurisdiction. Pryer v. Clapp, 1 Dem. 387. It has been held that sixty days, within which the citation must be served, run from the issuance of the citation and not the presentation of the petition. See Matter of Bradley, 70 Hun, 104, 109, referring to § 2519 of the Code. If the petition, however, is duly presented and the citation issued within the statutory time and properly served, irregularity or mistake in the citation is amendable so long as the court has acquired jurisdiction of the parties. See Matter of Soule, 6 Dem. 137. But the citation must be served upon all the parties to the proceeding, except in the case covered by § 2517, where several of them are united in interest. Consequently where in a proceeding to revoke probate, the petition having been presented in time, and the citation duly issued and served upon the executor, but no service made upon other necessary parties, it was held that the proceeding must be dismissed. Fountain v. Carter, 2 Dem. 313. See also Bonnett's Will, 1 Connoly, 296. See also Matter of Phalen, 6 Dem. 446, and reporter's note, pages 448 to 453.

It is further apparent from § 2648, that the year within which the petition must be presented runs, in the case of a person under any disability specified in § 396 of the Code, only from the time the disability ceases or is removed. So where an infant not appearing by general or special guardian or otherwise upon the probate of the will, desires to apply for the revocation of its probate, he is not debarred by §§ 2647 and 2648 until a year has expired from the time he attains his majority. See Matter of Becker, 28 Hun, 207. But if it appear that the infant has accepted benefits under the will after he became of age, this will be deemed to be a ratification of the probate on his part sufficient to estop him from maintaining the proceeding. See Matter of Richardson, 81 Hun, 425.

The time from which the year begins to run, within which application to revoke probate of the will must be made, is stated in § 2648 to be "the recording of the decree admitting the will to probate." Confusion, however, is likely to arise where the will is admitted to probate after a trial by jury in the Supreme Court, or as formerly in the Court of Common Pleas. In such a case it has been held, that the date which sets the year running, is the day of the recording of the decree in the court where the proceedings for the proof of the will were had. Matter of Ruppaner, 9 App. Div. 422. In the case cited the petition for the revocation of probate was presented to the Surrogate of New York County on the 3d of March, 1894. The proceedings for the probate of the will had been taken in the Court of Common Pleas under § 2486 of the Code as it stood prior to the amendment of 1895, and judgment was entered in that court admitting the will to probate November 2, 1892. The judgment and will were not filed in the office of the Surrogate until January 19, 1893, and they were not recorded until after the 3d of March, 1893. The Surrogate dismissed the petition as not having been presented in time and the Appellate Division, Rumsey, J., writing the opinion, affirmed his decree.

§ 405. The petition and citation.

Citation, to whom to be directed.

A petition, presented as prescribed in the last two sections, must pray that the citation may be directed to the executor, or administrator with the will annexed; to all the devisees and legatees named in the will; and to all other persons, who were parties to the special proceeding in which probate was granted. If a legatee is dead, his executor or administrator must be cited, if one has been appointed; if not, such persons must be cited as representing him, as the surrogate designates for the purpose. § 2649, Code Civil Proc.

The following is suggested as a precedent for a petition in this proceeding:

Petition for revocation of probate under § 2647, C. C. P.

Surrogate's Court,
County of

In the Matter of the Application of a person interested in the estate of Deceased, to revoke the probate of his alleged Last Will and Testament.

To the Surrogate's Court of the County of

The petition of respectfully shows to the court and alleges:

I. That your petitioner is a person interested in the estate of late of deceased, being (here state relationship to decedent).

II. That on the day of 19 a decree was recorded in the office of the Surrogate of the county of (note) admitting to probate as a will of personal property an instrument in writing bearing date the day of 19 as and for the last will and testament of the decedent above named.

Note. If will was established after trial in Supreme Court note the fact and the date the judgment of that court was entered.

III. And your petitioner further shows on information and belief that the said instrument so admitted to probate as and for the last will and testament of deceased, was not in fact his last will and testament, and was not entitled to probate as such, for the following reasons: (here insert, "allegations against the validity of the will or the competency of the proof thereof" as required by section 2647). Note.

Note. The allegations against the validity of the will may be worded substantially as if the applicant were filing objections with a view to contesting probate (Henry v. Henry, 3 Dem. 322), addressing the allegations to any matter touching which he would have a right to oppose the original probate of the will. It seems, however, that section 2647 does not authorize the applicant to put in issue the validity, construction, or effect of any disposition of personal property contained in the will, under section 2624, as he could upon the original contest. Matter of Ellis, 22 St. Rep. 77, Ransom, Surr. See, however, Matter of the Will of Gouraud, 95 N. Y. 256, 260. If the allegations are addressed to the competency of the proofs either exclusively or in addition to the question of the validity of the will, the petition should specify concisely the respects in which the proofs taken in the probate proceedings are alleged to have been incompetent to prove due execution, testamentary capacity and freedom from restraint and undue influence.

IV. And your petitioner further alleges that under the said decree admitting said will to probate and recorded as aforesaid on the day of 19 letters testamentary were issued to one of the executors therein named, who qualified according to law; and said executor is now administering the estate of the said decedent by virtue of such letters.

V. That all the devisees and legatees named in the said last will, and all other persons who were parties to the special proceeding in which probate was granted as aforesaid are set forth in the following schedule showing their names, ages and addresses together with the capacity in which they are severally entitled to be made parties to this proceeding. Note.

NAME	AGE	ADDRESS	RELATIONSHIP

Note. Section 2649 provides that if a legatee is dead his executor or administrator must be cited if one has been appointed, if not, such person must be cited as representing him, as the Surrogate may designate for the purpose. Consequently if any legatee be dead the fact of his death and of the appointment of an executor or administrator must be alleged in addition.

Wherefore, your petitioner prays for a decree revoking the probate of said alleged last will and testament of deceased, and that a citation issue directed to the said (here specify the executor or administrator with the will annexed, devisees, legatees and other persons specified in the foregoing schedule, describing each) requiring them to show cause why said decree should not be revoked, and why your petitioner should not have such other and further relief in the premises as may be just.

(Dated.) (Signature.)

(Verification.)

Upon the presentation of such a petition the surrogate must issue a citation accordingly. § 2647, Code Civil Proc.

The citation will follow the usual form, citing the persons to whom it is addressed, "to show cause why the probate of the alleged last will and testament of late of deceased, admitted to probate by a decree recorded in the office of the Surrogate in the county of on the day of 19 should not be revoked."

It is manifest that it would not be proper to commence proceedings to revoke probate of a will, while the decree admitting it to probate is suspended as to its operation by an appeal duly perfected. This, however, would not be true, if the appeal is not from that part of the decree which admits the will to probate, but merely from some incidental provision thereof, such as the determination of the Surrogate, where some party has put in issue the validity, construction, or effect of a testamentary disposition of personal property contained in the will. For whether the Appellate Court should affirm or reverse that decision it will in nowise affect the question, whether the will was executed in pursuance of the statutory requirements by a person having testamentary capacity and whether or not he was unduly influenced, which are the only questions involved de novo in the proceedings for revocation of probate. On the other hand, if on the proceedings to revoke probate, the will should be declared invalid, the final determination of the question of construction will become of mere academic interest; while if the probate should be sustained, the decision on the appeal would furnish a guide to the Surrogate upon the accounting of the executor and in framing the decree directing the distribution of the estate. In re Bonnett, 9 N. Y. Supp. 459, 460.

§ 406. Effect of pendency of proceeding.—The effect of the pendency of proceedings to revoke probate is to relegate the executor, from the time the citation is served upon him, practically to the position of a temporary administrator; this is by virtue of § 2650, which is as follows:

Executor, etc., to suspend proceedings.

After service upon him of a citation, issued as prescribed in the last three sections, the executor, or administrator with the will annexed, must suspend, until a decree is made upon the petition, all proceedings relating to the estate; except for the recovery or preservation of property, the collection and payment of debts, and such other acts as he is expressly allowed to perform, by an order of the surrogate, made upon notice to the petitioner. § 2650, Code Civil Proc.

This section is intended to prevent any acts by the executor, which might, in the event of probate being revoked, result in placing any of the property of the estate beyond the reach of the heirs and next of kin. The section has been declared to be intended to restrict the powers of the executor, not to enlarge the powers of the Surrogate. See Matter of McGowan, 28 Hun, 246; Matter of Hoyt, 31 Hun, 176.

This section should be considered with § 2582, by which the powers of executors are defined during the suspension of the probate decree by virtue of an appeal duly perfected. See Bible Society v. Oakley, 4 Dem. 450; Matter of Van Voorhis, 1 N. Y. St. Rep. 306.

The words, "such other acts as he is allowed to perform by an order of the Surrogate," must be construed with the whole context so that the acts, which the Surrogate will be justified in permitting him to perform under this section, must be such as look to the recovery or preservation of property, or the collection and payment of debts. Therefore in the cases above cited, it was held, that the Surrogate was without power to direct any distribution of the estate or even the advance of parts of legacies. See Matter of McGowan, and Matter of Hoyt, supra; La Bau v. Vanderbilt, 3 Redf. 384, 418, 419.

In the Meyer case, 131 N. Y. 409, where proceedings had been begun for the revocation of the probate of the testator's will, by his brother, who with two sisters, were the only heirs-at-law of the decedent, it was held, by the Court of Appeals, that the pendency of the proceedings in nowise affected the liability of the executors to pay interest upon the funds of the estate, intermediate the death of the testator and the ultimate probate of his will, which funds it appeared were being held by them and used in their business as a firm.

The question arose in the Stewart case, 131 N. Y. 274, whether the suspension of the powers of the executor under § 2650 operated so as to prevent the imposition of interest in favor of the State upon the unpaid succession tax imposed by the collateral inheritance act of 1885. The legacy in this case amounted to $74,914.42, which tax was by the decree of the Surrogate made to bear interest at six per cent from April 25, 1888, a date eighteen months after the death of the testatrix. Prior to that date proceedings were duly instituted for the revocation of the will of Cornelia N. Stewart, which proceedings did not terminate until January 16, 1890, and it was claimed that interest should not be charged upon the unpaid taxes during this period. The Court of Appeals, however, held that it should, basing their decision upon the provision of the statute which enacted, that a modified rate of interest must be charged where, "by reason of claims made upon the estate, necessary litigation, or other unavoidable cause of delay, the estate of the decedent cannot be settled. Matter of Stewart, supra, page 285.

§ 407. The hearing.—The hearing in a proceeding to revoke probate is substantially the same as if the will were offered for probate de novo,

> Upon the return of the citation, the surrogate must proceed to hear the allegations and proofs of the parties. The testimony, taken upon the application of probate, of a witness who is dead, or without the state, or who, since his testimony was taken, has become a lunatic or otherwise incompetent, must be received in evidence. § 2651, Code Civil Proc.

except as to such statutory rights as are expressly limited to probate proceedings, such as the right under § 2618 to an order requiring the examination of the subscribing witnesses. See Hoyt v. Hoyt, 112 N. Y. 493, affi'g 9 N. Y. St. Rep. 731.

The situation of the proponents of the will practically does not differ from that which they would occupy if the issues involved in the proceeding had been made by objections duly filed at the time the paper in dispute was originally offered for probate. Hoyt v. Jackson, 2 Dem. 443, Surrogate Rollins, citing Code Civil Procedure, § 2652; Collier v. Idley's Executor, 1 Bradf. 94. In the case cited by Surrogate Rollins, Surrogate Bradford held, that the proponent would be obliged to prove the will by original proof independently of the proofs first offered; that the probate decree could not be offered in evidence nor even the deposition of any of the witnesses taken on the first proof be read in evidence except in the precise contingencies pointed out by the statute. Collier v. Idley's Executor, supra, page 99. The precise contingency pointed out by § 2651 in this regard is, that the testimony, taken upon the first probate, of a witness who upon the proceedings to revoke probate proves to be dead, without the State, or to have become a lunatic, or otherwise incompetent, must be received in evidence; otherwise the testimony must all be taken de novo, the proponent sustaining the same burden, and the contestant being as free in regard to the scope of his investigation as if no adjudication had been made in the premises. See Matter of Gouraud, 95 N. Y. 256; Matter of Soule, 19 N. Y. St. Rep. 532; Hoyt v. Hoyt, 112 N. Y. 493, 511, 512. In the case last cited Judge Gray observed: "The proceeding taken below was, within the terms and purview of § 2647, for the revocation of a will of personal property, and was so recognized by all parties. The effect of presenting the petition was to procure a re-examination of the case and to have proofs taken de novo. The executors, as proponents, proceeded to prove the will by original proof, independently of the first proof, and the practice was right and such as is contemplated by § 2651. That section was a re-enactment of a provision of the Revised Statutes (2 R. S. 61, § 28) and necessarily implies that the only evidence, which need not be taken anew, is in the case of witnesses dead, without the State, or insane."

§ 408. The decree.

Decree.

If the surrogate decides that the will is not sufficiently proved to be the last will of the testator, or is, for any reason, invalid, he must make a decree revoking the probate thereof; otherwise, he must make a decree confirming the probate. § 2652, Code Civil Proc.

Section 2652 must be read in connection with § 2622, which provides that "before admitting a will to probate, the Surrogate must inquire particularly into all the facts and circumstances, and must be satisfied of the genuineness of the will and the validity of its execution." Surrogate Rollins (Cooper v. Benedict, 3 Dem. 136) held that the same doctrine is applicable to proceedings to revoke probate as to a proceeding for probate, and that the principle enunciated in Delafield v. Parish, 25 N. Y. 9, held good in both; the principle being, "In all cases the party propounding the will is bound to prove to the satisfaction of the court, that the paper propounded in question declares the will of the deceased, and that the supposed testator at the time of making and publishing the document was of sound and disposing mind and memory. . . . If upon a careful and accurate consideration of all the evidence on both sides, the conscience of the court is not judicially satisfied that the paper in question contains the last will of the deceased, the court is bound to pronounce its opinion that the instrument is not entitled to probate."

It is the duty of the Surrogate to revoke probate wherever upon the same testimony it would be his duty originally to deny probate. For example, if it is not clear from the testimony that the testator was physically and mentally competent at the time of execution, probate should be revoked. See Knapp v. Reilly, 3 Dem. 427.

But where, on the contrary, there is nothing in the records or proofs on the proceedings to revoke probate to lead the Surrogate to doubt the genuineness of the will or its validity, the proceedings to revoke must be dismissed. Matter of Walther's Will, 7 N. Y. Supp. 417; Matter of Johnston, 1 Connoly, 518.

Where a will of which probate was revoked as to personalty alone, upon the ground that it was not the will of testator in respect thereto, contained a clause revoking all former wills, it was held that this revocation clause fell with the will, and could not, at least as to personalty involved, be invoked to defeat a prior valid will. Matter of Miller, 28 Misc. 373.

§ 409. No power to construe.—There is no power to construe a will in a proceeding to revoke probate. Matter of Wilcox, 55 Misc. 170, citing Bevan v. Cooper, 72 N. Y. 317, 329; Matter of Ellis, 22 N. Y. St. Rep. 77. The reason is that the power to construe given by § 2624 in probate proceedings is limited by the words "unless the decree refuses to admit the will to probate." Revocation of probate proceedings contemplate just such a refusal. They are governed by a separate article of the Code giving no express power to construe.

§ 410. Notice of decree of revocation.

> Where the decree revokes the probate of a will, as prescribed in this article, the surrogate must cause notice of the revocation to be immediately published, for three successive weeks, in a newspaper published in his county. § 2653, Code Civil Proc.

The form of the decree may be substantially as follows:

a person interested in the estate of late of deceased, having on the day of 19 presented to this Surrogate's Court, in which the will of said decedent was proved as a will of personal property, a written petition duly verified containing allegations against the validity of said will and the competency of the proofs thereof; and praying that probate thereof be revoked; and that the executor of said will, the devisees and legatees named therein, and also the persons who were parties to the special proceeding in which probate was granted, might be cited to show cause why it should not be revoked; and a citation having accordingly issued directed to the executor (s) under said will, to all the devisees and legatees therein named, and to all other persons who were parties to the special proceeding in which probate was granted requiring them to appear before the Surrogate of the county of and show cause why the probate of said will should not be revoked.

Now, the said citation having been returned, on reading and filing proofs of due service thereof on all the persons to whom it was directed, and on the return day of said citation, there having appeared (recite appearances in detail including appearances by special guardian, reciting due appointment thereof); and witnesses having been examined and proofs taken touching the facts and circumstances attending the execution of said will and the competency of said testator to execute the same, and his freedom from restraint or undue influence; and due deliberation having been had upon the allegations and proofs of the parties, whereby it appears to the satisfaction of the Surrogate that the said will is not sufficiently proved to be the last will of the testator (note) (or if the Surrogate decides that it is for any reason invalid state the fact and the reason concisely);

Note. See language of § 2652, C. C. P.

It is accordingly on motion of attorney for

Ordered, Adjudged and Decreed, that the instrument heretofore admitted to probate by a decree of this Surrogate, recorded on the day of 19 is not sufficiently proved to be the last will of said testator (or if he has decided that it is for any reason invalid state the reason concisely);

And it is further Adjudged and Decreed, that the probate of said alleged last will and testament of deceased, together with the letters testamentary issued thereon, on the day of to and as executors of said alleged last will and testament be and the same hereby are revoked. Note.

Note. The wording of article 2d of title 3 of chapter 18, does not apparently contemplate the revocation of the decree as would be necessary in case the proceeding were to vacate or set aside the decree. The decree was valid when made and stands in the records of the court, but the probative effect of the decree is revoked and the letters testamentary issued thereunder are revoked. It is accordingly unnecessary and would perhaps be irregular to incorporate in the decree revoking probate, a revocation of the decree granting probate; that is merely rendered nugatory by the decree revoking probate.

If the Surrogate affirms instead of revoking probate, the form of the decree can be readily adapted from the foregoing, and in either case it is proper to insert the necessary directions as to the payments of costs and taxable disbursements, as well as the publication required by § 2653.

§ 411. Determining validity of a will.—It is proper in this chapter to discuss § 2653*a*, of the Code of Civil Procedure, by which a new remedy is provided capable of being exercised within a longer period than that for revocation of probate; but which remedy must be exercised by means of an action in the Supreme Court for the county in which probate of the will was had. The section as now amended is as follows:

Determining validity of a will.

Any person interested as devisee, legatee or otherwise, in a will or codicil admitted to probate in this state, as provided by the code of civil procedure, or any person interested as heir-at-law, next of kin or otherwise, in any estate, any portion of which is disposed of, or affected, or any portion of which is attempted to be disposed of, or affected, by a will or codicil admitted to probate in this state, as provided by the code of civil procedure (chap. 701, Laws, 1897, inserted here "within two years prior to the passage of this act, or any heir-at-law or next of kin of the testator making such will,") may cause the validity (same act inserted here, "or invalidity") of the probate thereof to be determined in an action in the supreme court for the county in which such probate was had. All the devisees, legatees and heirs of the testator and other interested persons, including the executor or administrator must be parties to the action. Upon the completion of service of all parties, the plaintiff shall forthwith file the summons and complaint in the office of the clerk of the court in which said action is begun and the clerk thereof shall forthwith certify to the clerk of the surrogate's court in which the will has been admitted to probate, the fact that an action to determine the validity of the probate of such will has been commenced, and on receipt of such certificate by the surrogate's court, the surrogate shall forthwith transmit to the court in which such action has been begun a copy of the will, testimony and all papers relating thereto, and a copy of the decree of probate attaching the same together, and certifying the same under the seal of the court. The issue of the pleadings in such action shall be confined to the question of whether the writing produced is or is not the last will and codicil of the testator, or either. It shall be tried by a jury and the verdict thereon shall be conclusive, as to real or personal property, unless a new trial be granted or the judgment thereon be reversed or vacated. On the trial of such issue, the decree of the surrogate admitting the will or codicil to probate shall be prima facie evidence of the due attestation, execution and validity of such will or codicil. A certified copy of the testimony of such of the witnesses examined upon the probate, as are out of the jurisdiction of the court, dead, or have become incompetent since the probate, shall be admitted in evidence on the trial. The party sustaining the will shall be entitled to open and close the evidence and argument. He shall offer the will in probate and rest. The other party shall then offer his evidence. The party sustaining the will shall then offer his other evidence and rebutting testimony may be offered as in other cases. If all the defendants make default in pleading, or if the answers served in said action raise no issues, then the plaintiff may enter judgment as provided in article two of chapter eleven of the code of civil procedure in the case of similar defaults in other actions. If the judgment to be entered in an action brought under this section is that the writing produced is the last will and codicil, or either, of the testator, said judgment shall also provide that all parties to said action, and all persons claiming under them subsequently to the commencement of the said action, be enjoined from bringing or maintaining any action or proceeding, or from interposing or maintaining a defense in any action or proceeding based upon a claim that such writing is not the last will or codicil, or either, of the testator. Any judgment heretofore entered under this section, determining that the writing produced is the last will and codicil, or either, of the testator, shall, upon application of any party to said action, or any person claiming through or under them, and upon notice to such persons as the court at special term shall direct, be amended by such court so as to enjoin all parties to said action, and all persons claiming under the parties to said action subsequently to the commencement thereof, from bringing or maintaining any action or proceeding impeaching the validity of the probate of the said will and codicil, or either of them, or based upon a claim that such writing is not the last will and codicil, or either, of the testator, and from setting up or maintaining such impeachment or claim by way of answer in any action or proceeding. When final judgment shall have been entered in such action, a copy thereof shall be certified and transmitted to the clerk of the surrogate's court in which such will was admitted to probate. The action brought as herein provided shall be commenced within two years after the will or codicil has been admitted to probate, but persons within the age of minority, of unsound mind, imprisoned, or absent from the state, may bring such action two years after such disability has been removed. § 2653a, Code Civil Proc.

Note. The words "absent from the state" held not to mean one permanently a non-resident, e. g., a foreigner. Bell v. Villard, 48 Misc. 587.

§ 412. What remedy the section affords.—Section 2653*a* furnishes a new remedy being incorporated into the Code of Civil Procedure by ch. 591 of the Laws of 1892 which purported in terms to amend art. 2, of title 3, of ch. 18 (which relates to revocation of probate), by adding thereto a new section to be known as § 2653*a*.

"At the time of the adoption of this amendment the probate of a will was conclusive as to personal property unless revoked by the proceeding in Surrogate's Court as above stated, but the probate was only prima facie conclusive as to the real estate devised by the will so that the heir could bring ejectment after probate not barred by the Statute of Limitations. A great necessity, therefore, existed of further limiting the right of the heir to contest the devises of a will in order to quiet titles to real estate, and in the light of this necessity we will consider the effect of § 2653*a*. The purpose of this amendment is manifest. It is to provide a procedure by an action in the Supreme Court to determine the validity of the probate of any will, whether of real or personal property or of both, and requiring such an action to be commenced within two years after the will has been admitted to probate, and the question to be tried is whether the writing produced is or is not the last will of the decedent, and that question is to be tried by a jury and the procedure upon the trial is pointed out, and it provides that the verdict of the jury shall be 'conclusive as to real or personal property unless a new trial be granted or the judgment thereon be reversed or vacated.' The amendment does not affect the remedy provided in the Surrogate's Court by special proceedings under the title amended, but only provides an additional remedy by action." Snow v. Hamilton, 90 Hun, 157, 161.

The section originally read, "any person interested in a will or codicil," and it was at first contended that this language precluded persons not named in a will from bringing the action contemplated by the section. It was held, however (Snow v. Hamilton, 90 Hun, 157, 161), that devisees, legatees, heirs and next of kin, were persons interested within the meaning of the section, citing Wager v. Wager, 89 N. Y. 161. And the section has since been amended so as to read in its present form, "any person interested as devisee, legatee or otherwise in a will or codicil," with the additional provision, "or any person interested as heir-at-law, next of kin or otherwise in any estate, any portion of which is disposed of or affected, or any portion of which is attempted to be disposed of or affected, by a will or codicil." . . . (The words "or any heir-at-law, or next of kin of the testator making such will," were put in by ch. 701 of 1897, in effect May 22, 1897, the effect on which of ch. 104 of the same year is commented upon, post), thus embodying in the statute the rule already laid down by the courts. It will be noticed further that the section furnishes a remedy applicable to all wills, whether of real, or of personal property, and enables the plaintiff in the action to secure a trial before a jury of the issue, whether the writing produced is, or is not, the last will of the testator, which is made to include any codicil probated therewith; but the provision while intended to insure a trial by jury as to the validity of the will or codicil goes no further than to provide that the plaintiff should be entitled to pursue this inquiry in the Supreme Court, in which court he is entitled to a trial by jury as distinguished from a trial at special term, but his right to go to the jury is conditioned as it would be in the trial of any other action in that court. The court has the same power, therefore, to direct a verdict that it has in any other case. Hawke v. Hawke, 82 Hun, 439; Katz v. Schnaier, 87 Hun, 343, 346.

In Brinkerhoff v. Tiernan, 61 Misc. 586, it was held that § 448 as to one suing for benefit of others similarly situated is not applicable to this section. (This is a special term decision sustaining a demurrer on additional grounds.)

In view of the fact, however, already pointed out, that § 2653*a* was expressly enacted as an amendment to art. 2, relating to the revocation of probate, it must be construed with reference to the practice and procedure in the Surrogates' Courts; Shea v. Bergen, 59 Misc. 294; and especially in connection with the other sections of art. 2; accordingly it has been held that the section provides merely an additional remedy being supplementary to, and not intended to repeal the other sections of art. 2; and that consequently since "a person interested in the estate must apply for revocation within one year after the recording of a decree admitting to probate a will of personal property," under § 2648 in default of which, as to such property, the probate concludes all mankind (see Hoyt v. Hoyt, 112 N. Y. 493, 505), the intent of the legislature was to afford equal relief where relief was needed, namely, with regard to real estate, and the object was to expedite, and not to protract the settlement of estates. See Long v. Rodgers, 79 Hun, 441. Judge Barrett in his opinion at page 443 remarked:

"It is clear, therefore, that the intention was in adding this section to embrace it within the existing system, not to substitute it therefor. And there is no inconsistency or irreconcilable repugnancy between the two systems, when the mischief aimed at is advisedly considered. As to the personalty, the functions of the existing statutes continue and the effect of probate after lapse of a year remains unaltered. This function does not conflict with the function of the new section, which operates upon real estate, and which affords a practical method of making that conclusive which otherwise would remain indefinitely presumptive.

"There is nothing in the phraseology of the new section which militates against this construction. It is true that we find these words therein: 'It shall be tried by a jury, and the verdict thereon shall be conclusive as to real or personal property,' etc. But this does not say that 'a person interested in the estate of the decedent' shall not be otherwise concluded. Nor does it limit the effect of his failure to apply for revocation under §§ 2647 and 2648 within the year. It may entitle 'a person interested in the will'—which is the phrase used in the new section to indicate the persons who may proceed thereunder—as distinguished from 'a person interested in the estate, (which is the phrase used in § 2647), to bring the action to validate the will, even during the running of the year. But it certainly does not authorize a person who has omitted to apply for revocation within the year, and as against whom the probate has become conclusive, to inaugurate a fresh contest thereafter." Long v. Rodgers, 79 Hun, 441, 443.

The effect of this decision was merely to prevent a person, who could have brought proceedings to revoke probate, from bringing an action to determine the validity of a will, unless he brought such action before he was concluded by the lapse of time, by the decree admitting the will to probate. But in view of the drastic amendment of 1897 designating the persons entitled to bring the action under § 2653*a*, it is clear that the rule laid down in Long v. Rodgers has been obviated. The language contrasted in Judge Barrett's opinion to the words, "a person interested in the estate of the decedent" found in § 2647 being now not "person interested in a will," but "any person interested as devisee, legatee or otherwise in a will . . . . or any person interested as heir-at-law, next of kin, or otherwise in any estate. . . ."

§ 413. Effect of amendments of 1897.—The peculiar tinkering by the legislature with § 2653*a* in 1897 was confusing. The Court of Appeals in Lewis v. Cook, 150 N. Y. 163, had held that the language of the section as it then existed contemplated an action, to be brought by some person interested in sustaining the will to which all persons interested in the disposition of the testator's estate should be made parties; and that the action should be one wherein the validity of the probate of the will might be determined conclusively as against them; and Judge Gray called attention in that case (see page 165) to the fact that, under §§ 2647 and 2648 authority already existed for the maintenance of a proceeding by a person interested in the estate of the decedent, to revoke the probate of a will at any time within one year after the decree admitting the will to probate; and he says (at page 166) that such person had the opportunity of contesting before the Surrogate, the validity of the testator's will, and that he had the right to continue the contest through the appellate courts, and moreover that by reason of § 2647 he had also a year from the recording of the final decree within which he might revive the contest and secure a trial of the matter de novo (citing Hoyt v. Hoyt, 112 N. Y. 493, 506). "There is no way, however," says Judge Gray, "by which the validity of a will and its probate could be once and for all established and placed beyond attack by the heirs-at-law until the enactment of § 2653*a*. They could put the validity of the will of the decedent in question in an action involving title to real property, but a person taking an interest under the will was without remedy to establish his title and to prevent such actions." See Anderson v. Anderson, 112 N. Y. 104.

§ 414. Same.—Shortly after this decision appeared in the reports, the legislature passed two acts amendatory to the section. The first, L. 1897, c. 104, was passed March 23, 1897, and was to take effect on September 1, 1897. Two months later, May 22, 1897, L. 1897, c. 701, another act was passed to take effect immediately.

Chapter 701 amended the act so that it read, "Any person interested . . . . may cause the validity or invalidity of the probate . . . . to be determined in an action," limiting the action to one under a will or codicil "admitted to probate in this State as provided by the Code of Civil Procedure, within two years prior to the passage of this act," and added to the description of persons who could bring such an action involving the validity or invalidity of the probate, "Any heir-at-law or next of kin of the testator making such will."

Chapter 701 did not expressly repeal ch. 104.

But, there have been three decisions since the amendment, which indicate that the Supreme Court takes the view that ch. 701, legislating as it does upon the whole subject and being a later explanation of the legislative will, supersedes ch. 104. See Reid v. Curtin (1st Dept.), 51 App. Div. 545, 548; Ocobock v. Eeles (4th Dept.), 37 App. Div. 114, 118; Wells v. Betts (3d Dept.), 45 App. Div. 115, 117.

The case first cited did not necessarily involve the determination of this question, although it is carefully reasoned out in the opinion. The other two cases assume without discussion that the effect of ch. 701 was to supersede ch. 104. These cases control the practice.

The reasoning of Mr. Justice Patterson in Reid v. Curtin is wholly satisfactory. He points out, at page 548, "It is to be noticed that all that can be done under the amendment of March may still be done under that passed in May. There is inserted in the May amendment only a provision with reference to an heir-at-law or next of kin of a testator making a will admitted to probate within two years prior to the passage of the act, causing the validity or invalidity of the probate to be determined. As the May amendment is general legislation covering the whole subject-matter of antecedent legislation as to the same subject-matter, the only inference would seem to be that the legislature intended the May enactment to be a complete substitute for that of March."

It is clear, therefore, that Lewis v. Cook, 150 N. Y. 163, forbidding the maintaining of this action by one claiming in hostility to the will no longer controls, because both of the acts of 1897 added to the class of persons who could maintain the action, "any persons interested as heir-at-law or next of kin or otherwise in any estate." So that it is plain that the legislature must have intended to make a change which would give to the heir-at-law as such, and independently of his interest or lack of interest under the will, the right to sue which, prior to the amendment, he did not possess. Reid v. Curtin, supra, at page 548. See also Wells v. Betts, supra, at page 118.

This latter case passed also upon the provision of the amendment limiting it to wills admitted to probate "within two years prior to the passage of this act." The act was passed May 22, 1897, and the will in suit probated February 14, 1898. Landon, J., observes: "A literal reading might restrict the remedial provision in behalf of persons interested in the estate disposed of by the will or attempted to be disposed of, to such wills and codicils as were admitted to probate during the two years prior to May 22, 1897, but such a narrow construction would, no doubt, impute to the legislature an intention contrary to the fact. That intent, doubtless, was to give the act a retroactive effect for the two years prior to its passage. The final paragraph of the section provides that 'the action brought as herein provided shall be commenced within two years after the will or codicil has been admitted to probate.'

"The limitation of two years certainly extends to wills admitted to probate after the passage of the act, and there seems to be no doubt that the limitation was intended to apply in like manner to wills admitted to probate before its passage." In Miller v. Maujer, 82 App. Div. 419, it is held that the interest must be an enforceable one. Thus, where, assuming the will were set aside, there survives a husband or wife who would take the estate anyhow, it would be idle to suppose the next of kin are to be allowed to bring an action which if successful would result in no distributive benefit to them.

It seems unnecessary to discuss, in view of this amendment, such cases as Wallace v. Payne, 9 App. Div. 34; 14 App. Div. 579; Seagrist v. Sigrist, 20 App. Div. 336, inasmuch as they dealt with the situation developed by the decision in Lewis v. Cook, 150 N. Y. 163.

§ 415. Proceedings under § 2653a.—The directions of § 2653*a* as now amended as to who should be parties to the action and as to the manner in which the action must be tried, are so explicit as to require little discussion. The words "including the executor or administrator," as being necessary parties, contemplate, of course, only such as may have qualified. Timpson v. Lorsch, 50 Misc. 398. Attention may be called to one or two points: For example, it has been held that a temporary injunction may be granted without undertaking restraining the executors under the will, the validity of the probate of which is sought to be determined under this section, from conveying, disposing of, delivering or incumbering any of the property mentioned in the will during the pendency of the action. Matter of Hughes, 41 Misc. 75; Shea v. Bergen, 59 Misc. 294; Hawke v. Hawke, 74 Hun, 370. And in this last case it was held that as the real property amounted to more than sufficient to afford abundant security for the share which the plaintiff would be entitled to if he succeeded in having the will adjudged to be invalid, the injunction should be modified so as to restrict its restraining effect to the real property only.

If an injunction be granted, the jurisdiction of the Surrogate's Court is pro tanto suspended. Shea v. Bergen, 59 Misc. 294, 296.

It has also been held that the provisions of this section, as to filing the summons and complaint in the office of the clerk of the court in which the action is begun, and as to the prompt certifying by the clerk to the clerk of the Surrogate's Court, where the will was probated, the fact that an action to determine the validity of the probate of a will has been commenced, and as to the subsequent transmission by the Surrogate to the court in which the action has been begun of a copy of the will, testimony, and all papers relating thereto with a copy of the decree of probate duly attached together and certified under the seal of the court, were directory merely; that the acts required were not jurisdictional and that it was error to dismiss the complaint upon the ground that these provisions had not been complied with. Johnson v. Cockrane, No. 2, 91 Hun, 165. And Brown, P. J., said (at page 168) that none of these acts required by the section were jurisdictional and none of them were required to be set forth in the complaint, and that the motion was not properly made at the trial, and had no relation to any of the issues raised by the pleadings. "If the statute had not been complied with, the motion should have been addressed to the special term to have the omission corrected." See, also, Smith v. Holden, 116 App. Div. 867.

It has also been held (Johnson v. Cockrane, No. 1, 91 Hun, 163), that the effect of the provision in § 2653*a*, to wit: "The issue in such action shall be confined to the question, whether the writing produced is or is not the last will of the testator," etc., limited the court in the exercise of its ordinary powers so that it was without power to appoint a receiver after final judgment to preserve the real property pending an appeal. The court says at page 165, "Such power can be exercised only in cases where the property is the direct subject of the action, and where the judgment to be granted will act upon the specific property. . . . The subject of this action was the validity of a will . . . . and while the judgment is conclusive as to the title to the real and personal property of the testator, it does not deal with or relate to the possession of any specific property of which the decedent died seized, and the plaintiff could not, under any process that could be issued to enforce the judgment, obtain possession of the real estate in question." And Brown, P. J., adds: "The effect of the judgment upon the rights of the parties is to leave them in the same situation they would have occupied if the decedent had died intestate. The title of the property passed to the heirs-at-law, and possession must be recovered in the proper form of action for the recovery of the possession of real estate. Neither can the land be sold under the judgment in this action and the proceeds distributed." See Le Brantz v. Conklin, discussed below.

It has also been held that one who has elected to take under the provisions of a will, is estopped from maintaining an action under this section. Katz v. Schnaier, 87 Hun, 343.

In Le Brantz v. Conklin, 39 Misc. 715, three wills were involved. A trust company had been appointed temporary administrator. The special term enjoined proceedings in the Surrogate's Court under the two wills not sought to be established in the Supreme Court, to abide the event of the trial there. But, secondly, as the relief prayed in that action did relate to property, the court held that a receiver could be appointed and accordingly the same trust company was made receiver under an order limiting its accountability to the Supreme Court to its acts and conduct as such receiver.

§ 416. Futility of appeal from decree probating will.—In Matter of Beck, 6 App. Div. 211, 216, Judge Cullen called attention to the practical operation of § 2653*a* of the Code. The appeal was from a decree of the Surrogate's Court of Kings County admitting a will to probate. Judge Cullen says: "We think it proper to call the attention of the parties to the consideration, whether it is now worth while to prosecute such appeals as the present one. By § 2653*a* of the Code of Civil Procedure (added in 1892), any person interested in a will may cause the validity of the probate thereof to be determined by a jury, in an action brought in the Supreme Court for that purpose. Should we reverse the decree of the Surrogate on the questions of fact in this case, the only relief we could grant the appellants would be to direct the trial of the issues by a jury (§ 2588, Code). This relief or review the parties can obtain as a matter of right, under the section of the Code first cited, without an appeal. In fact, it can still be had in this case, as two years have not elapsed since the decree admitting the will to probate. It would seem that now an appeal from a decree of the Surrogate, probating a will, is only profitable where the appeal is based solely on questions of law."

§ 417. Burden of proof.—Ordinarily, the burden of proof is upon the party propounding a will, but § 2653*a* places the burden upon the party who contests the validity of the will of establishing the testamentary incapacity of the testator or other reason of invalidity. Dobie v. Armstrong, 160 N. Y. 584, 590; Scott v. Barker, 129 App. Div. 241. The probate of the will by the Surrogate is made prima facie evidence of its due execution and validity. See Ivison v. Ivison, 80 App. Div. 599, citing Cook v. White, 43 App. Div. 388; Heath v. Koch, 173 N. Y. 629; McGown v. Underhill, 115 App. Div. 638.

Thus it is clear that, if one claiming in hostility to the will brings an action under the section, as now amended, to determine such invalidity, it is for the defendants, claiming that the will is valid, to open and close. They accordingly offer in evidence the will in probate and rest (Hagan v. Sone, 68 App. Div. 60, rev'd 174 N. Y. 317, but not on this point), whereupon the plaintiff sustains the burden of proof formerly laid upon the defendants contesting the validity of the will. See also Mock v. Garson, 84 App. Div. 65.

It is for the court to say whether a contestant, be he plaintiff or defendant, has adduced sufficient evidence to warrant the submission of the case to the jury. Dobie v. Armstrong, at page 594. The court may direct a verdict, Ibid., and see Cook v. White, 43 App. Div. 388; Haughian v. Conlan, 86 App. Div. 290; Hawke v. Hawke, 146 N. Y. 366. In Hagan v. Sone, supra, the Court of Appeals reversed a judgment entered on such direction on the ground that, as defendant had merely offered the will and probate proceedings and rested, and plaintiff had adduced some testimony of incompetency and undue influence, it was for the jury, and not the court, to pass on the questions of fact.

So the direction of a verdict will not stand if there be any question of fact, e. g., proof of mental weakness coupled with unnatural disinherison of an infant child. Byrne v. Byrne, 109 App. Div. 476. See Shayne v. Shayne, 54 Misc. 474, 480.

The general rule that the party upon whom rests the burden of proof has the right to open is thus changed by virtue of the express provision of the statute by which the decree of the probate is made prima facie evidence of the due attestation, execution and delivery of the will, and imposes, therefore, upon the party attacking it, the burden of proving that the instrument is not the last will and testament of the decedent. Ibid.

§ 418. Form of verdict.—It is clear from the entire section that this is an action in rem. That is, the purpose of the statute is to determine finally whether the writing in question is or is not the last will of the testator, and thus to enable those interested, either under the will or in the estate, to have the question set at rest. Delmar v. Delmar, 65 App. Div. 582, 584. The plaintiff seeking to avoid a will cannot by defaulting upon the trial, deprive the defendant of his right to affirmative relief, because the answer does not contain a counterclaim. The defendant's rights in such case are given by the statute; and if the answer prays for the relief provided by the section, the court may, upon such default, direct a verdict in favor of the defendant and against the plaintiff, sustaining the will and with the injunctive relief permitted by the section. Ibid. In this case it was held proper also that an extra allowance be granted to the defendant within the sound discretion of the trial justice.

It should be noticed that for purposes of a possible appeal, the case should be submitted to the jury on specific questions framed according to the character of the objections to the validity of the will. Even if a general verdict be entered in favor of the parties seeking to invalidate the instrument, the Appellate Court may hold that as a verdict may have been rendered on any one of the grounds upon which the will was assailed, it should not be permitted to stand if any of these grounds was insufficient to nullify the instrument. Buchanan v. Belsey, 65 App. Div. 58, 60.

§ 419. Costs and allowances.—The court has power, in awarding costs, to grant an extra allowance. Haughian v. Conlan, 86 App. Div. 290; Seagrist v. Sigrist, 20 App. Div. 336; Delmar v. Delmar, 65 App. Div. 582.

But the action is one at law; hence the unsuccessful party may not be given costs or allowance. Carolan v. O'Donnell, 105 App. Div. 577, 1st Dept. But, in the opinion, this case intimates that, assuming the action as equitable, then the discretionary award to an unsuccessful party is reviewable in the Appellate Court. In Larkin v. McNamee, 2d Dept., 109 App. Div. 884, it was held that the action is one in which costs are discretionary, under § 3230, and does not come under §§ 3228 or 3229.

CHAPTER VII

PROBATE OF HEIRSHIP

§ 420. Probate of heirship.—The somewhat valueless and rarely resorted to practice of establishing the heirship of the heirs of an intestate is the subject of art. 3, of title 3, of ch. 18 of the Code, being §§ 2654 to 2659, both inclusive. The remedy is seldom resorted to, chiefly because of its inconclusiveness, since a petition to vacate or modify a decree establishing the right of inheritance of the petitioner, may be presented to the Surrogate's Court, at any time within ten years after the decree has been made; and it is in addition a proceeding which the Surrogate is required to dismiss in case the heirship which the petitioner desires to establish and his interest or share in the decedent's real property is put in issue and contested.

§ 421. The application.—The application to establish the right of inheritance of a person claiming to be an heir of a person dying, seized in fee of real property within the State, either wholly intestate or without having devised his real property to specific persons, must be made to the Surrogate's Court, (a) which has acquired jurisdiction of the estate, or, (b) if there is no such court, to the court of the county where the real property or any part thereof is situated.

Section 2654 provides as follows:

> Where a person, seized in fee of real property within the state, dies intestate, or without having devised his real property to specific persons, his heirs, or any of them, or any person deriving title from or through such heirs, or any of them, may present to the surrogate's court which has acquired jurisdiction of the estate, or, if no surrogate's court has acquired such jurisdiction, then to the surrogate's court of the county where the real property, or any part thereof, is situated, a written petition, duly verified, describing the real property, setting forth the facts upon which the jurisdiction of the court depends, and the interest or share of the petitioner, and of each other heir of the decedent, in the real property, and praying for a decree establishing the right of inheritance thereto, and that all the heirs of the decedent may be cited to attend the probate of that right. Upon the presentation of such a petition, the surrogate must issue a citation accordingly. § 2654, Code Civil Proc.

The provisions of this section clearly imply, that this application may be made, regardless of whether application for letters testamentary or letters of administration are pending, so long as the will, under which letters are being sought, does not specifically devise the property in question as contemplated by the section. It is manifest that proceedings under this article are likely to be taken only as incidental to other proceedings and for the purpose of securing a judicial determination amounting to presumptive evidence of the facts adjudged in the decree. The proceedings would be of value, in enabling one seeking to bring an action involving title to real property, to specify all the persons having an interest or right therein by means of this proceeding. The amendment to § 2654, made in 1892, permits "any-person deriving title from or through the heirs of the intestate," to make this application. This article provides a speedy and inexpensive method of ascertaining these facts, and while doubtless affording no protection to any one relying upon the adjudication as against persons whose rights as heirs might not be discussed or discovered in the proceeding, nevertheless has, in the few occasions in which it has been resorted to, sufficed to meet the particular exigencies involved.

The reports appear to contain no adjudications upon these sections of the Code, in which respect they may therefore be said to enjoy an enviable notoriety. The provision by which the proceeding dies the moment contest is made, explains the entire absence of appeals from the few decrees made under this article which are recorded in the offices of the Surrogates of this State.

§ 422. The petition.—The petition to initiate these proceedings should be substantially in the following form:

Petition under § 2654, C. C. P.

Surrogate's Court,
County of

In the Matter of the Probate of Heirship of claiming to be an Heir of late of Deceased.

To the Surrogate's Court of the County of

The petition of of respectfully shows to this court as follows:

I. That your petitioner resides in and is years of age and is one of the heirs-at-law (or if petitioner is a person deriving title from or through an heir, state the fact) of late of deceased.

II. That said departed this life on the day of 19 seized in fee of real property within this state situated in and described as follows (here insert description as in a deed).

III. And your petitioner further shows on information and belief that said deceased, left no will devising his real property to specific persons, and no Surrogate's Court has acquired jurisdiction of his estate; and that the above described real property (or some part thereof) is situated within this county (if jurisdiction of the estate has already been acquired by any Surrogate's Court to which court in that event the application must be made, say instead, e. g.: that on the day of proceedings were commenced in this court on petition of for letters of administration of the goods, chattels and credits of said deceased, and citation duly issued thereon whereby this court has acquired jurisdiction of the estate of said decedent).

IV. And your petitioner further shows that he is interested in the said real property of the decedent being entitled, as your petitioner is informed and verily believes, to a $\frac{1}{10}$ share thereof under the statute of descent and distribution being the (state relationship to decedent) of the said deceased.

V. And your petitioner further shows, upon information and belief, that all the other heirs of the decedent entitled to share in his said real property so far as they are known or can be ascertained by your petitioner are as follows:

NAME	AGE	RESIDENCE	RELATIONSHIP

Wherefore, your petitioner prays for a decree of this court establishing your petitioner's right of inheritance in the property above described, and that a citation issue directed to all the heirs of the decedent to attend the probate of that right.

(Date.) (Signature.)

§ 423. The citation.

Citation; appearance of persons interested.

The citation must set forth the name of the decedent and of the petitioner, the interest or share which the petitioner claims, and a brief description of the real property. Any heir of the decedent, who has not been cited, may nevertheless appear at the hearing, and thereby make himself a party to the special proceeding. But this section does not affect a right or interest of such a person, unless he becomes a party. § 2655, Code Civil Proc.

The form of the citation should be substantially as follows:

THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK

To A. B., C. D., and E. F., heirs of late of deceased, send GREETING:

Whereas of has lately applied to our Surrogate's Court of the county of to have his right of inheritance in the real property of late of deceased, situated in are bounded and described as follows (here insert brief description of the real property).

Now, therefore, you and each of you are hereby cited personally to appear before our said Surrogate at his office in on the day of 19 at o'clock in the noon of that day, then and there to attend the probate of heirship of the heirs of said deceased, in the real property aforesaid.

§ 424. Extent of the inquiry.—Section 2656 regulates the nature and extent of the inquiry to be made by the Surrogate and the facts to be covered by the decree.

> Upon the return of the citation, the surrogate must hear the allegations and proofs of the parties. If it appears that there is a contest, respecting the heirship of a party, or respecting the share to which a party is entitled, as an heir of the decedent, the surrogate must dismiss the proceedings. If there is no such contest, he must inquire into the facts and circumstances of the case. The petitioner must establish, by satisfactory evidence, the fact of the decedent's death; the place of his residence at the time of his death; his intestacy, either generally or as to the real property in question; the number of heirs entitled to inherit the property in question; the name, age, residence and relationship to the decedent of each, and the interest or share of each in the property. The surrogate, where these facts are established, must make a decree, describing the property and declaring that the right of inheritance thereto has been established to his satisfaction, in accordance with the facts, which must be recited in the decree. § 2656, Code Civil Proc.

The decree should be substantially as follows:

Surrogate's Court
Caption.

Present:

Hon.

Surrogate.

Decree under § 2656, C. C. P.

Title.

On reading and filing the petition of of one of the heirs-at-law of late of deceased, praying for a decree establishing the right of inheritance of the heirs of said decedent in the real property within the state of which he died seized in fee, together with due proof of the service of the citation issued thereon upon all the heirs of the decedent to whom it was directed and (here note the appearances upon the hearing), and there being no contest respecting the heirship of any party or the share to which any party is entitled as an heir of the decedent; and the Surrogate having inquired into the facts and circumstances of the case and the petitioner having established by satisfactory evidence

(a) The fact of the decedent's death on the day of 19

(b) The place of his residence at the time of his death in in the state of

(c) His intestacy (or his intestacy as to the real property described in the petition).

(d) The number of heirs entitled to inherit the property in question as (four).

(e) The name, age, residence and relationship to the decedent of each as follows:

NAME	AGE	RESIDENCE	RELATIONSHIP

(f) The interest or share of each in the property, as follows:

it is now, on motion of attorney for the said petitioner,

Ordered, Adjudged and Decreed, that the said late of deceased, died on the day of seized in fee of the following real property situated in the State of New York and bounded and described as follows: (here give description) that the said left no will (or will devising his said real property to specific persons); and it is further Ordered, Adjudged and Decreed, that the right of inheritance of and the heirs of said deceased, has been established to the satisfaction of the Surrogate in accordance with the facts above recited and that said heirs above named are severally entitled to the following interests or shares in such property, to wit:

That C. D., E. F., G. H., and I. K., the children of said decedent, are entitled severally to one undivided fourth part or share of such real property.

(Signature.)
Surrogate.

It is manifest that the decree, which can only be made where there is no contest, being to all intents and purposes a decree upon consent, will not award costs to any of the parties as against any of the others.

§ 425. Effect of decree.—Practically the only object of this proceeding, namely, to get presumptive evidence of the facts established thereby, is provided for by § 2657, which is as follows:

Decree to be recorded; effect thereof.

An exemplified copy of a decree, made as prescribed in the last section, and of the proofs taken thereupon, may be recorded in the office of the clerk, or of the register, as the case requires, of each county in which the real property is situated, as prescribed by law for recording a deed, and, from the time when the exemplifications are so recorded, the decree, or the record thereof, is presumptive evidence of the facts so declared to be established thereby. § 2657, Code Civil Proc.

§ 426. Petition to vacate or modify the decree.

Any person, other than a party to a special proceeding, instituted as prescribed in this article, or the heir, devisee, or assignee of such a party, may, at any time within ten years after a decree establishing the right of inheritance is made therein, present to the court a written petition, duly verified, showing that he has a right, title, or interest in the real property, or a part thereof, which is injuriously affected by the decree; stating that the decree is erroneous in some material particular, specified therein; and praying that the decree may be set aside or modified in that particular, and that all the persons, whose heirship was established by the decree, may be cited to show cause, why the prayer of the petition should not be granted. If an heir has since died, or has conveyed the share or interest so established, by a deed duly recorded in the county, the petition must state that fact; and must pray that the persons, who have succeeded to his interest, may be also cited. Upon the presentation of such a petition, the surrogate must issue a citation accordingly. § 2658, Code Civil Proc.

This section, the provisions of which may be available any time within ten years after the decree has been made, has undoubtedly operated to dissuade practitioners from resorting to the provisions of this article except incidentally. However, it must appear upon an application to vacate or modify the decree, that the applicant's interest is:

(a) Injuriously affected by the decree;

(b) That the decree is erroneous, in some material specified part.

Upon an application, therefore, to vacate or modify such a decree, the Surrogate has the usual preliminary jurisdiction to determine whether the applicant has "a right, title, or interest in the real property, or a part thereof" or that such right, title, or interest is injuriously affected by the decree; and then if upon the hearing the decree is proved erroneous, it may be vacated or set aside. That the error must be shown to be material is apparent from the provisions of § 2659, which is as follows:

Petition to vacate or modify decree; when granted.

Where a petition is presented as prescribed in the last section, and it appears, upon the hearing, that, if the petitioner, or his ancestor, testator, or grantor, had been a party to the special proceeding, the decree or a part thereof could not have been legally made, as prescribed in this article, the surrogate must vacate or modify the decree accordingly. An exemplified copy of the decree or order, so vacating or modifying the original decree, may be recorded in the office of any clerk or register, where a copy of the original decree was recorded. § 2659, Code Civil Proc.

It is clear from this section that the error must be such that had the attention of the court been called to it in the original proceedings, the decree could have been legally made in the form in which it was made.

CHAPTER VIII

THE CONSTRUCTION OF WILLS

§ 427. The Surrogate's right to construe wills.—The power of a Surrogate to construe wills is derived from two sections of the Code. The only express power given is by virtue of § 2624, which is as follows:

> Validity and construction of testamentary provisions.
> But if a party expressly puts in issue, before the surrogate, the validity, construction, or effect of any disposition of personal property, contained in the will of a resident of the state, executed within the state, the surrogate must determine the question upon rendering a decree; unless the decree refuses to admit the will to probate, by reason of a failure to prove any of the matters specified in the last section. § 2624, Code Civil Proc.

It will be noted, from this section, that the right which it confers is limited to making a determination upon:

(a) The validity, construction or effect,
(b) Of a disposition of personal property,
(c) In a will executed within the State,
(d) By a resident of the State,
(e) Provided the will is probated.

The advantages of securing a construction on probate of a will, not explicit and clear, are obvious, but the words "must determine" are not mandatory, in the sense that all questions possible or even likely to arise may be required to be determined in advance. The Surrogate may reserve or postpone the consideration of questions so presented to him until they are of practical import or until their disposition is necessary. Matter of Mount, 185 N. Y. 162, 166.

§ 428. The incidental power.—The incidental power of the Surrogate is derived from the provisions of § 2472 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which provides, that the Surrogate has jurisdiction "to direct and control the conduct, and settle the accounts of executors, administrators and testamentary trustees. . . . To enforce the payment of debts and legacies, the distribution of the estate of decedents, and the payment or delivery by executors, administrators and testamentary trustees, of money or other property in their possession, belonging to the estate. . . . To administer justice in all matters relating to the affairs of decedents according to the provisions of the statutes relating thereto." And in § 2481 it is provided, among other things, that "the Surrogate may exercise such incidental powers as are necessary to carry into effect the powers expressly conferred." The Surrogate has jurisdiction over the settlement of accounts of executors and administrators; and in § 2743 it is provided, that, "when an account is judicially settled, as prescribed in this article, and any part of the estate remains, and is ready to be distributed to the creditors, legatees, next of kin, husband or wife of the decedent, or their assigns, the decree must direct the payment and distribution thereof to the person so entitled, according to their respective rights." As incident to the duty thus cast upon the Surrogate, he must have jurisdiction to construe wills, as far as needful, at least to determine to whom legacies shall be paid; and this, it is believed, is a power which the Surrogates of this State have always exercised. . . . They possessed such a power under the provisions of the Revised Statutes before the Code of Civil Procedure, and it was clearly not the intention of the Code to narrow or diminish the jurisdiction of Surrogates, but rather to enlarge it. See Matter of Verplanck, 91 N. Y. 439, 449.

§ 429. The right of construction a limited one.—It is very clear then that the Surrogate has now no general jurisdiction in the construction of wills. So, where the record shows that the construction was neither necessary nor incidental to the exercise of a conceded power, it is void, and will be disregarded. Matter of Burdick, 98 App. Div. 560.

So also where it affects rights of persons not parties to the proceeding. Matter of Mount, 185 N. Y. 162, aff'g 107 App. Div. 1. It is equally clear that on accountings and in decreeing distribution Surrogates have exercised the power to construe testamentary dispositions of property under the broad grant of powers incidental to those conferred by § 2472, Code Civ. Proc., and formerly involved in § 71, 2 R. S. 95.

There have been many cases in the Court of Appeals on appeal from decisions of Surrogates on final accountings which involve the interpretation and construction of wills and the determination of which involved and recognized the power of the Surrogate to construe a will when necessary to such accounting and distribution. See Riggs v. Cragg, 89 N. Y. 480, 492, citing Stagg v. Jackson, 1 N. Y. 206; N. Y. Institution, etc., v. How's Exrs., 10 id. 84; Parsons v. Lyman, 20 id. 103; McNaughton v. McNaughton, 34 id. 201; Bascom v. Albertson, 34 id. 584; Whitson v. Whitson, 53 id. 479; Cushman v. Horton, 59 id. 149; Hoppock v. Tucker, id. 202; Teed v. Morton, 90 id. 502; Lawrence v. Lindsay, 68 id. 108; Luce v. Dunham, 69 id. 36; Wheeler v. Ruthven, 74 id. 428; 30 Am. Rep. 315; Ferrer v. Pyne, 81 N. Y. 281. And the Court of Appeals held (Garlock v. Vandervort, 128 N. Y. 374, 378), "Though a judicial officer with limited and prescribed jurisdiction and powers, yet it is not open to question that in a proceeding before him, having for its object the settlement of an executor's accounts and to obtain a decree directing the distribution of the fund in his hands, and with all the parties in interest present, the Surrogate may construe the provisions of the will and determine the meaning and validity of them, whenever such a determination is necessary in order to make his decree as to distribution. Such a jurisdiction is, of course, not general; but it is one which is incidental to his office, and which flows clearly from the authority conferred upon him by the statute. See § 2472 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

"Subdivisions 3, 4 and 5 of the section of the Code cited would have little meaning and force, if such a judicial exercise of the Surrogate's authority were not impliedly granted." See also Purdy v. Hayt, 92 N. Y. 446, and Cahil v. Russel, 140 N. Y. 402; Matter of Bolton, 149 N. Y. 257; Baldwin v. Smith, 3 App. Div. 341; Matter of Young, 17 Misc. 680, 684.

§ 430. Exercise of the express power to construe—It is limited to personalty.—The language of § 2624 above quoted is unambiguous. There is no existing provision of law giving the Surrogate authority upon probate to inquire into the validity of a devise of real estate. Matter of Will of Merriam, 136 N. Y. 58, 59; Prive v. Foucher, 3 Dem. 339; Matter of Schweigert, 17 Misc. 186, 193; Matter of Wilcox, 55 Misc. 170. If both real and personal estate is involved the Surrogate's power extends only so far as relates to personalty. Matter of Davis, 59 Misc. 310.

In 1870 (ch. 359, Laws of 1870), power was given to the Surrogate of the county of New York, which the Surrogates in the State at large did not possess, to pass upon and determine the true construction, validity and legal effect of any disposition contained in a will of real or personal estate. The provision was as follows: "In any proceeding before the said Surrogate (that is, before the Surrogate of the county of New York) to prove the last will and testament of any deceased person, as a will of real or personal estate, in case the validity of any of the dispositions contained in such will is contested, or their construction or legal effect are called in question by any of the heirs or next of kin of the deceased, or any legatee or devisee named in the will, the Surrogate shall have the same power and jurisdiction as is now vested in and exercised by the Supreme Court, to pass upon and determine the true construction, validity and legal effect thereof."

Section 2624 is now substituted for this section of ch. 359 of the Laws of 1870 as appears from the annotations in Throop's Code, where he says under § 2624:

"This section has been taken from L. 1870, ch. 359, § 11, which confers such a power upon the Surrogate of the city and county of New York. It has been so framed as to confine its application to a strictly domestic will, ... and to a will of personal property. . . . As thus amended, the provision has been extended to all Surrogates' Courts."

Since the adoption, therefore, of § 2624, Surrogates throughout the State have power to construe wills in probate cases provided they are strictly domestic wills of personal property.

We have in another connection noted the limitation which Judge Rollins (Jones v. Hamersley, 4 Dem. 427) laid down as to what persons were entitled to insist that the court should exercise the power possessed by it under § 2624. The Surrogate held that no one had a right to raise academic issues under this section, and that the Surrogate would not exercise the power except at the instance of a party whose actual rights under the will would be affected one way or another by the determination. And so where Surrogates have been called upon to exercise this express power they have limited themselves or been limited by the Appellate Court to the clear intent of the section. And in a recent case (Matter of Robertson, 23 Misc. 450, 452) it has been held that an executor was not such a party as is contemplated by the section. Surrogate Ingalsbe interpreting § 2624, says, "under the reading of this clause it is claimed that Mr. Reid (the executor) can present this issue, for he is a party to the proceeding. But he is one of the proponents. He is not a legatee or next of kin. His primary duty is to see that the will is probated, and not that it is declared invalid either in whole or in part. He has no interest in the estate except as an executor of the will." And the Surrogate adds (page 453): "It would seem on general principles of interpretation that no person should be entitled to an adjudication under this section as to the validity of a will, unless he claims some interest under it, in the personalty bequeathed, or, that by reason of some invalid disposition of such personalty, he is entitled to a share of the same under the statute of distributions. . . . Mr. Reid occupies neither of those positions. . . . He has no such interest as to enable him to invoke the jurisdiction of this court under § 2624."

Surrogate Sherman in In re Marcial's Estate, 15 N. Y. Supp. 89, derived in an elaborate opinion a jurisdiction in Surrogates' Courts to give construction to wills on probate relating to both real and personal property. He derived his conclusion from § 1866, providing for an action to determine the validity, construction or effect under the laws of the State of a testamentary disposition of real property situated within the State, the provision being as follows:

"This section does not apply to a case where the question in controversy is determined by the decree of the Surrogate's Court duly rendered upon allegations for the purpose as prescribed in art. 1, of title 3, of ch. 18, of this act, where the plaintiff was duly cited in the special proceeding in the Surrogate's Court before the commencement of the action."

Section 2624 is certainly contained in art. 1, of title 3, of ch. 18. But the language of § 2624 is as certainly explicit. The decision in the Marcial case does not appear to have been followed or approved except by the same Surrogate in a case decided in the same year (In re Smith's Estate, 18 N. Y. Supp. 174), where he remarks, "It has been held that §§ 2622, 2623, 2627, 2629, 2481, subd. 11, and 2482, give Surrogates' Courts authority to construe wills on probate relating to real estate." To this proposition he cites the Marcial case and Matter of Look, 5 N. Y. Supp. 50, affirmed without opinion in 125 N. Y. 762. But upon examination the latter case decided by the same Surrogate seems to be a construction of a bequest and not of a devise and its affirmance in the Appellate Courts does not appear to have involved the extreme principle to support which it is cited. It doubtless, however, does seem anomalous that the Surrogates should be denied the right to exercise a jurisdiction for which their judicial experience ought especially to fit them; and if those seeking the office of Surrogate were required by law to have the same preliminary professional experience as is expected in the case of a justice of the Supreme Court, it might not prove unwise to extend the jurisdiction of Surrogates' Courts in this respect so as to make their determination on questions of testamentary construction conclusive; although it might be necessary still to continue the provisions of the Code in regard to the partial conclusive effect otherwise of decrees admitting to probate wills of real property in respect of questions as to which it is proper to preserve for parties their right to a trial by jury in an action. See Cooley v. McElmeel, 149 N. Y. 228, 237.

§ 431. Same subject.—If the intent of the Marcial case above referred to, was merely to hold that the fact that a will purported to dispose of real property as well as of personal, does not divest the Surrogate of jurisdiction, it would undoubtedly embody the correct rule; but whatever the provisions of the will the construction by a Surrogate is brutum fulmen as to any devise of real property. It is undoubtedly true that devises disposing of real property, and bequests disposing of personal property, may be precisely similar in their wording, and the determination by the Surrogate, that the bequest of personal property is invalid for whatever reason, would naturally, if his reasoning were sound and his conclusions correct, be pertinent in passing on the devises; but practically it can have no such effect under the limitations imposed upon the Surrogate's jurisdiction; and this principle is carried to this extent, that where the bequests and devises are not clearly distinct, or distinguishable, one from the other, the Surrogate will not have power to construe. Thus, where there is no disposition of personal property except as it is connected with the disposition of real estate so that it would be impossible to separate the disposition of the personal property from that of the real estate and they are essentially connected and not separable, it was at first held that the Surrogate is without power to construe. See Matter of Shrader, 63 Hun, 63, where Macomber, J., says, "We are of opinion, under § 2624 of the Code, and under the common-law limitation of the power of the Surrogate's Court, that the Surrogate has no jurisdiction to make a construction of this will, or pass upon the validity of any of its parts, because there was no disposition of personal property independent of and separate from the disposition of the real estate." But in the recent case of Matter of Trotter, 182 N. Y. 465, a trust was created in which realty and personalty were inseparably blended. Held, Surrogate could declare it void as to personalty. As the Shrader case was cited by appellant it is thus overruled. Similarly the Matter of Morgenstern, 9 Misc. 198; Matter of Bogart, 43 App. Div. 583, 586; Matter of Austin, 35 App. Div. 278. See also Matter of Davis, 59 Misc. 310, and cases cited at p. 314.

The rule thus is not to exclude jurisdiction where the exercise of such power by the Surrogate as to the validity of a bequest does not necessarily (even though there be such a blending as Surrogate Coffin described in the Morgenstern case) involve real estate. See Matter of Vowers, 113 N. Y. 569, 573, rev'g 45 Hun, 418. And whatever the effect of his decree may be, into which is incorporated his decision, whether as to the personal property or as to the parties to the proceeding interested therein, those interested in the real property are not concluded thereby but may pursue their remedies in the Supreme Court in regard to the same in the manner provided by law, the effect of the probate decree being limited by § 2627 above discussed. See Corse v. Chapman, 153 N. Y. 466, 475; Cooley v. McElmeel, 149 N. Y. 228. Attention is called to the important rule No. 5, adopted in the Surrogate's Court of the County of New York, which embodies a wise principle, and provides a reasonable and necessary safeguard. The rule is as follows:

> "Wherever a party shall put in issue on probate the validity, construction, or effect of any disposition of personal property under § 2624 of the Code, if it shall appear that all persons interested in such construction are not before the court, the determination of such question shall be suspended until such persons shall be made parties; and the executor named in the will shall not be held to represent the legatees therein for the purpose of such construction."

This rule was laid down by Surrogate Calvin (Currin v. Fanning, 13 Hun, 458, at page 465) in an opinion adopted by the General Term of the First Department, where he says: "I entertain no doubt of my authority, as an incident to the performance of that duty, to bring in all the parties interested for that purpose; but I am equally clear in the opinion, that, when a case has been submitted to me without such parties being called in, I should refuse to exercise the jurisdiction, except so far as it may become necessary for the purpose of passing upon the probate of the instrument in question, as a will of real and personal property, until such parties shall be brought in." If the will deals with real and personal property, and upon probate it is construed as wholly invalid as to personalty, it must be, nevertheless. upon proof of due execution, admitted to probate as a will of real property, Matter of DeWitt, 113 App. Div. 790.

§ 432. Same—Further limitation.—The power to construe a will is also conditioned on its being probated (see § 426, ante). Probate logically precedes construction. Matter of Davis, 182 N. Y. 468, aff'g 105 App. Div. 222. Houghton, J., in the opinion below well states the rule. This case was peculiar in that the sole legatee, devisee and executrix predeceased testatrix. Hence it was claimed the paper was a nullity. Held (a) it must be probated on due proof of the factum. (b) The question who would take the property was not incidental to probate. (c) Therefore the Surrogate had at that time no power to construe it.

§ 433. Same—Extent of power.—When the power exists its extent is adequate. Thus, it is proper to ask on probate a determination as to the validity of a bequest alleged to be in violation of § 6, ch. 319, Laws 1848 (see Laws 1903, ch. 623, § 1) now § 19 of Decedent Estate Law. Matter of Cooney, 112 App. Div. 657; Pearson v. Collins, 113 App. Div. 657. This statute prohibits devises or bequests to (as it now reads) "any institution or corporation formed under Laws of 1848, ch. 319," of more than half the estate of a person leaving "a wife, or child, or parent." Such devise or bequest is valid to the extent of such one-half, but only if made "at least two months before the death of the testator." But if the conditions contemplated by the statute do not exist, the power to construe may not be invoked. Matter of Talmage, 59 Misc. 130.

§ 434. Summary statement.—The decisions in respect to the exercise of the express power granted by § 2624, may be thus briefly summarized:

1. It is limited to dispositions of personal property. See Matter of Schrader, 63 Hun, 36; Seaman v. Whitehead, 78 N. Y. 308; Matter of Trotter, 182 N. Y. 465.

2. The provisions to be construed must be contained in the will of a resident of the State, executed within the State, for a Surrogate has no jurisdiction in probate proceedings, to pass upon the validity of dispositions of personal property, contained in a will executed without the limits of this State. Tiers v. Tiers, 2 Dem. 209. See also Smith v. Central Trust Co., 12 App. Div. 278.

3. The usual rules as to what constitutes residence will govern so far as they are not limited by express statutory provisions. For example, the provisions of § 2611, which provide that the validity of the execution of a will, or the validity or construction of any provision contained therein, is not affected by a change of the testator's residence made since the execution of the will.

4. This express power can be exercised in probate proceedings only, and proceedings to revoke probate are not to be included thereunder. Bevan v. Cooper, 72 N. Y. 317; Matter of Ellis, 1 Connoly, 206; Matter of Wilcox, 55 Misc. 170.

5. The issue must be raised by a party to the proceedings, that is to say, a person duly cited whether by original or supplemental citation. See § 2624, Code Civ Proc.; Jones v. Hamersley, 4 Dem. 427.

6. And the power will be exercised only at the instance of a person whose rights will be affected by the adjudication of the Surrogate (Matter of Robertson, 23 Misc. 450, 452; Matter of Campbell, 88 Hun, 374), such as, a widow (Matter of Vowers, 113 N. Y. 569), or a residuary legatee, or any heir entitled to a share in the estate, in the case of the entire or partial invalidity of the will. See McKeown v. Officer, etc., 25 N. Y. St. Rep. 319. See also Harris v. Am. Bible Society, 4 Abb. N. S. 421.

7. The question of construction must be raised by "expressly putting in issue" the validity of the provision; that is to say, the party must file an answer with distinct and specific allegations, that certain provisions of the will are illegal and void; this raises an express issue, and calls for the determination of the Surrogate. See Matter of Fuller, 20 N. Y. St. Rep. 352. See Matter of Will of Keleman, 126 N. Y. 73, 78; Matter of Talmage, 59 Misc. 130. It was expressly held by Surrogate Rollins, that no such issue was raised as required by § 2624, where, upon probate, the testatrix's husband filed a petition, asserting his claim and title to the property of which she died possessed, and asking that no disposition of such property be made as expressed in the will offered for probate. The learned Surrogate ignored this paper in admitting the will to probate. McClure v. Wooley, 1 Dem. 574.

8. And the Surrogate is confined to the distinct issue raised by such answer and cannot pass upon any questions other than those involving the validity, construction or legal effect of the dispositions above described. Thus for example in Matter of Walker, 136 N. Y. 20, 24, the Court of Appeals held that the investigation which the Surrogate was empowered to make under § 2624 was limited to questions arising out of the terms of the will, and expressly denied him the right to pass upon the questions submitted to him for adjudication, as to the ownership by the testator of certain funds, as to his indebtedness to one of the heirs in a given amount, and other like questions. And it has been held that the mere fact, that the parties had consented to this improper exercise of jurisdiction could not confer jurisdiction. Matter of Walker, supra, at page 29, citing Chemung Canal Bank v. Judson, 8 N. Y. 254.

§ 435. Exercise of implied power to construe.—Much of the confusion which has appeared in the cases involving the right of the Surrogate to construe wills, has arisen from the failure to emphasize the clear distinctions made in the Code. The express power is limited to probate proceedings, and is subject to the limitations already noted. The incidental power (see § 2 above) is a power which must be exercised as any other incidental power, that is to say, only in so far as it is necessary in order to carry out the express power to which it is incidental. See Baldwin v. Smith, 3 App. Div. 350, 353; Garlock v. Vandevort, 128 N. Y. 374; Purdy v. Hayt, 92 N. Y. 446; Matter of Merriam, 136 N. Y. 58.

It is clear from what has been already stated, that the power to construe a will upon accounting and decreeing distribution, is necessarily incident to the exercise of those powers. The Court of Appeals has extended this incidental power of the Surrogate to construe wills, to cases arising under the provisions of the Collateral Inheritance Tax Law. Matter of Ullmann, 137 N. Y. 403, 407. This power, Judge O'Brien says in his opinion, is incidental to that provision of the statute, under which the tax was assessed which provides that, "The Surrogate's Court in the county of which the decedent at the time of his death was a resident shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine all questions in relation to the tax arising under the provisions of this act . . . . " and he accordingly observes: "The Surrogate must decide whether any property of a deceased person has passed to another under a will or under the laws of intestacy, before he can perform the duty imposed upon him. It may sometimes happen that the property of the deceased passes in both ways. The fact that there is a will, and that it has been admitted to probate, does not necessarily determine the ownership or the transmission of the property. When the Surrogate looks into the will some of its dispositions may be so clearly void as to warrant him in holding that nothing has passed by virtue of them, but that the property embraced therein has passed to heirs or next of kin under the statutes of descent or distribution. In the numerous cases that have been passed upon by this court recently, arising under the statute, we have held that the Surrogate was clothed with power, and that it was his duty to decide questions arising under wills or under the statutes quite as intricate and important as those arising out of the residuary clause of the will in this case, citing In re McPherson, 104 N. Y. 306; In re Enston, 113 id. 174; In re Sherwell, 125 id. 379; In re Romaine, 127 id. 80; In re Stewart, 131 id. 274; In re Wolfe, 137 id. 205; In re Prime, 136 id. 347; In re Swift, 137 id. 77.

"In the settlement of the accounts of executors and the distribution of the personal estate under a will, the Surrogate is empowered to determine the validity of testamentary provisions under statutes that are not more explicit or comprehensive than the one now under consideration. Code, §§ 2472, 2481, 2743; In re Verplanck, 91 N. Y. 439; Purdy v. Hayt, 92 id. 446; Riggs v. Cragg, 89 id. 479; Garlock v. Vandevort, 128 id. 378; In re Wagner, 119 id. 32; In re Cager, 111 id. 343.

"The jurisdiction conferred by the statutes upon the Surrogate to hear and decide all questions in relation to the tax imposed by its provisions upon persons to whom property has passed from a decedent is, we think, broad enough to warrant the Surrogate in holding, in a case like this, that the property which is the subject of the tax has not passed to the legatees or devisees under the will, but the heirs-at-law or next of kin." However, it was held by the Court of Appeals in the Fayerweather case (Amherst College v. Ritch, 151 N. Y. 322, 343), that the adjudication by a Surrogate in transfer tax proceedings, in this connection, must be limited with reference to the object for which it is made, and merely amounts to an adjudication, that, for the purpose of taxation under the act in question, a certain amount of property actually passed to specific persons by virtue of the will; and Judge Vann writing the opinion of the court says, that the Surrogate's legitimate inquiry necessarily stopped at that point; that, "the adjudication was necessarily limited to the subject of taxation, and if conclusive at all, was not conclusive upon the rights of the parties arising from matters outside of the will," citing Matter of Wolfe, 137 N. Y. 205, 211; Matter of Ullmann, 137 N. Y. 403, 407.

§ 436. Same subject.—The exercise of this implied power to construe wills, has been held to be proper in any proceeding where it may become necessary in order to enable the Surrogate to carry out powers expressly conferred on him. See Kelsey v. Van Camp, 3 Dem. 530, 534. See also Matter of Owens, 33 N. Y. Supp. 422. Subject to the limitations indicated, this is unquestionably true. Matter of Bruchaeser, 49 Misc. 194.

These limitations, apart from express statutory provisions, such for example as those in § 2624, have been stated by the Court of Appeals in the form of a general rule (Washbon v. Cope, 144 N. Y. 287, 295), where Peckham, J., observes:

"As a general rule, the Surrogate has no jurisdiction to construe the provisions of a will excepting so far as it may be necessary for him to do so in order that he may properly perform some other duty which has been imposed upon him by law. There is no general and inherent power vested in him or in his court to construe devises or bequests as a distinct and independent branch of his or its jurisdiction. Even a court of equity vested with general jurisdiction over equitable subjects has no such inherent power as that, and its only power to construe the provisions of a will is based upon, and is incident to, its jurisdiction over trusts. Mellen v. Mellen, 139 N. Y. 210, and cases cited in the opinion of Andrews, Ch. J. The statute itself provides for the effect of a judicial settlement of the accounts of the executors. See §§ 2742 and 2743, Code Civ. Proc." See, as to effect of decree improperly made, Pfiester v. Writer, 33 Misc. 701.

Sometimes it may be necessary for the Surrogate to construe the provisions of the will in order that upon the final accounting of the executors thereof he may decree distribution to those who, by the provisions of the will, are entitled to any portion of the proceeds remaining undistributed, or where distribution by the executors has already been made, may, upon their accounting, determine whether they have or have not, erroneously and improperly made distribution of some of the estate, and if they have, the Surrogate may hold them liable in their accounts. But generally it is for the purpose of determining the correctness of the accounts of the executors or of decreeing the proper distribution of the estate, that this jurisdiction to construe the terms of a will becomes necessary, and may be exercised for the purpose of carrying out the jurisdiction actually conferred upon the Surrogate.

There is no question as to the Surrogate's power within the limitations noted, to construe a will upon an accounting for the purpose of properly determining questions necessarily arising thereon. Garlock v. Vandevort, 128 N. Y. 374, 378, citing Matter of Verplanck, 91 N. Y. 439, 449; Riggs v. Cragg, 89 N. Y. 179. See Matter of Young, 17 Misc. 680, 684; Will of Hövens, 8 Misc. 574; Matter of Metcalf, 6 Misc. 524; Matter of French, 52 Hun, 303. And it must be noted that, if the Surrogate has rightly assumed jurisdiction, and undertaken to construe a provision in a will, in a proper case, the jurisdiction of the Surrogate being equal to and concurrent with that of the Supreme Court, the rule is applicable that the Surrogate's Court, as the tribunal which first obtains jurisdiction of the subject-matter and of the persons, retains and exercises the jurisdiction to the exclusion of the Supreme Court, that is to say, that while it is not an exclusive jurisdiction on the part of the Surrogate to start with, the Supreme Court will not, when he has rightly assumed jurisdiction in a given case, entertain an action involving the same questions brought in the Supreme Court. Schuehle v. Reiman, 86 N. Y. 270; Garlock v. Vandevort, supra, page 379.

If the construction of a will is necessary to determine questions arising on the accounting, jurisdiction to construe attaches as incident to the proceedings, and it is not only proper for the Surrogate to entertain jurisdiction to construe the will but it will be held error if he refuses to do so. See Purdy v. Hayt, 92 N. Y. 445, 446, 450. The same rules of law must be applied by him as would govern the Supreme Court. In ruling on the passing of property he must distinguish between lex fori and lex rei situs as applicable to personalty or realty. Thus in Mount v. Tuttle, 40 Misc. 456, the testatrix (New York) made a will creating a trust of personalty to be executed in a foreign State. Held, the law of that State must govern, and that the trust being defective thereunder a curative New York statute would not save it. This was a special term case.

§ 437. Same subject.—The power of the Surrogate to construe the provisions of a will and determine their meaning and validity, in order to make a decree of distribution, after judicially settling the accounts of an executor, or administrator with the will annexed, is thus very clear under the decisions. See Matter of Vandevort, 8 App. Div. 341, 353, citing Purdy v. Hayt, 92 N. Y. 446; Garlock v. Vandevort, 128 N. Y. 374; Cahill v. Russell, 140 N. Y. 402; Matter of Bolton, 146 N. Y. 257; Baldwin v. Smith, 3 App. Div. 350. Whether this accounting by the executor is voluntary or compulsory, makes no difference as to the power of the Surrogate (see Estate of Metcalf, 6 Misc. 524); while the Surrogate has power to make such construction on settling the accounts of an administrator with the will annexed, he has not that power upon the original application for such letters of administration. See Matter of Smith, 18 N. Y. Supp. 174, 175; Du Bois v. Brown, 1 Dem. 317, and Matter of Thompson, 5 Dem. 117. This power to construe a will for the purpose of making the distribution, requires a passing reference to § 2743, which permits a Surrogate upon the judicial settlement of an account, where the validity of the debt, claim, or distributive share, is admitted, or has been established upon the accounting, or other proceeding in the Surrogate's Court, or other court of competent jurisdiction, to determine by the decree, to whom it is payable, the sum to be paid by reason thereof and other questions concerning the same. This section, as will be noted later on, contains the sole statutory authority whereunder the Surrogate has jurisdiction to determine disputes as to third parties' demands; but incidental to this power it may be absolutely essential for the Surrogate to construe the will for the purpose of determining to whom legacies shall be paid. See Verplanck's Estate, 91 N. Y. 439; Tappen v. M. E. Church, 3 Dem. 187, 191. Where the right to a legacy depends upon a question of construction, it must be determined before a decree for distribution can be made, and the Surrogate has jurisdiction to determine such construction as incident to the authority to make the distribution. See Riggs v. Cragg, 89 N. Y. 479.

§ 438. When exercise of incidental power denied.—The exercise of this incidental power has also been denied in the following cases:

Upon an application to compel payment of a legacy under § 2722 (former § 2717). Rank v. Camp, 3 Dem. 278, Rollins, Surr. And the Court of Appeals (Riggs v. Cragg, supra, 480, 492) has intimated that the reason for a denial of the power in such a case was that the application for payment of a legacy was in the nature of a special accounting to which all parties interested in the estate are not necessarily cited, and that it would not be proper for the Surrogate to proceed to a determination which might affect the rights of other legatees, or persons interested in the estate, without the presence of all such parties to be affected by such adjudication, and that therefore the final accounting, when the right of the Surrogate in this regard was fully recognized, was the proper occasion for the exercise of the power to construe.

The power has also been denied upon an application requiring an executor to show cause why he should not make, file and return an inventory and an account of his proceedings under the statute, and in default thereof to show cause why he should be attached and removed from office. Wilde v. Smith, 2 Dem. 93, 96.

Where the Surrogate, however, does exercise the power to construe the will, this construction should be embodied in some directory clause of the decree, otherwise, as was held by the Court of Appeals (Washbon v. Cope, 144 N. Y. 287, 296), his decision will be nothing more than an opinion as to the proper construction of the will upon which he bases no action and makes no decree.

§ 439. Construction by the Surrogate.—It is impracticable in a work of this character to discuss at length the rules of law governing the Surrogate as a judicial officer in exercising his power to construe wills. This subject has been elaborately discussed in text-books devoted specially to the subject. The Surrogate is of course bound by the same rules of construction and interpretation, which would govern the Supreme Court in the exercise of similar power, with the limitation, however, that in the exercise of the power as incidental and necessary to effectively exercise an express power conferred upon him by law, the incidental power should be exercised only to the extent of enabling him to perform the express power; this is illustrated by the limitation placed by the Court of Appeals upon the right of the Surrogate to construe a will in proceedings under the transfer tax law. See § 435, supra, where the adjudication of the Surrogate was held to be necessarily limited to the subject of taxation, and to have a conclusive effect only, in so far as that matter was involved.

However, an effort has been made to condense and set in compact form with adequate references the principal rules of construction as they have been formulated and developed by the courts. This is shown here as elsewhere throughout this work largely in the very words of the cases.

§ 440. Multiplicity and confusion of precedents.—Confusion exists among the vast multitude of cases relating to the construction and interpretation of wills. To a very large extent this confusion may be considered as the natural result of the policy of the law in refusing to subject this class of instruments to as rigid rules of construction as are applied to deeds and other instruments affecting the property of living persons, wherein we find a more precise terminology and forms of expression, whose well-established meaning is clearly adhered to by the courts. "To lay down any positive and definite rules of universal application in the interpretation of wills, must continue to be as it has been, a task, if not utterly hopeless, at least of extraordinary difficulty. The unavoidable imperfections of human language, the obscure and often inconsistent expressions of intention, and the utter inability of the human mind to foresee the possible combination of events, must forever afford an ample field for doubt and discussion, as long as testators are at liberty to frame their wills in their own way, without being tied down to any technical and formal language." Mr. Justice Story in Sisson v. Seabury, 1 Sumn. 235.

§ 441. Testator's intention the primary guide.—Where a will is the subject of construction, it is the manifest intention of the testator and not any rule of construction which is to govern, when they come in conflict. Matter of James, 146 N. Y. 78; Miller v. Gilbert, 144 N. Y. 68, 70; Delaney v. Van Aulen, 84 N. Y. 16. Any other rule "is subordinate to this primary canon of construction, that the intent, to be collected from the whole will, must prevail." Matter of Brown, 154 N. Y. 313; Goebel v. Wolf, 113 N. Y. 405.

Where the language is plain and the intention of the testator is clearly expressed, the court will not look into extraneous circumstances in giving its construction. Champlin v. Champlin, 58 N. Y. 620. (Full report in 1 Sheld. 355.) Thus, in such a case it will not inquire into testator's motives (Howland v. Union Theological Seminary, 5 N. Y. 193), nor into the reasonableness of the provisions if they violate no principle of law or morality. Bolton v. De Peyster, 25 Barb. 539; Watson v. Donnelly, 28 Barb. 653.

So also, when the language is unskillful or inaccurate, but the intent can be clearly collected from the writing, it is the duty of the court to give effect to that intent. Masterson v. Townsend, 123 N. Y. 458; Roe v. Vingut, 117 N. Y. 204; Bliven v. Seymour, 88 N. Y. 469.

§ 442. Of the canons of construction.—It follows from what has been said that the courts will strive as far as possible to carry out the real objects of the testator, limiting themselves, however, to the intention deducible from the words of the will, but in no cases exceeding or amplifying such intention. Whatever rules may be formulated as guides in testamentary construction are of limited scope and validity, and are applicable only to particular words, phrases and testamentary provisions, in the absence of a contrary intention appearing in the will. Canons of construction may, therefore, be viewed as means of collecting a testator's intention, where there is a doubt or uncertainty as to the meaning of any expression or provision contained in his will. Without them the courts would be free to resort to conjectural interpretations, unfettered by any fixed principles or established precedents, and a latitude would thus be given to the judicial imagination, inconsistent with the stability of the law.

GENERAL RULES OF CONSTRUCTION

I. Intention is to be collected from the whole will taken together and not from any detached portions alone, and such a construction given, if possible, as to form one consistent whole. Norris v. Beyea, 13 N. Y. 273; Roe v. Vingut, 117 N. Y. 204, 212; Taggart v. Murray, 53 N. Y. 236; Trask v. Sturges, 170 N. Y. 482, 496; Kelley v. Hogan, 71 App. Div. 343.

This rule is extended to cover, (1) introductory terms (Clark v. Jacobs, 56 How. Pr. 519; Youngs v. Youngs, 45 N. Y. 254); (2) a codicil taken with the will as part of the same instrument (Wescott v. Cady, 5 Johns. Ch. 334; Crozier v. Bray, 120 N. Y. 366, 374); (3) those portions admittedly void or inefficient to dispose of property. Tilden v. Green, 130 N. Y. 29, 55; Morton v. Woodbury, 153 N. Y. 243; Kiah v. Grenier, 56 N. Y. 220.

II. Where the intention is left uncertain or doubtful, that construction should be adopted which is nearest in accord with public policy and with the law. Chwatal v. Schreiner, 148 N. Y. 683; Crooke v. County of Kings, 97 N. Y. 421; Manice v. Manice, 43 N. Y. 305; Hopkins v. Kent, 145 N. Y. 363.

III. Where a particular intent is inconsistent with a general intent, the latter is subordinated to the former. Spofford v. Pearsall, 138 N. Y. 57, 68; Hoey v. Gilroy, 129 N. Y. 132, 138.

IV. An intent, inferable from the language of a particular clause of a will, may be qualified or changed by other clauses thereof, evincing a different intent. Hoppock v. Tucker, 59 N. Y. 202; Moffet v. Elmendorf, 152 N. Y. 475, 484. So where the primary devise is to A, and B is to take in case A die, the presumption is that testator meant "if A die before me." Matter of Cramer, 170 N. Y. 275. But if a life estate intervene ahead of A's fee there is room to consider whether the contingency of A's death may not relate to the end of the life estate and not to testator's death. Matter of Denton, 137 N. Y. 433; Matter of Baer, 147 N. Y. 354; Coon v. Coon, 38 Misc. 693, and cases cited.

V. Where two clauses are so inconsistent and irreconcilable that they cannot possibly stand together, the one that is posterior in position will prevail, as indicating a subsequent intention. Van Nostrand v. Moore, 52 N. Y. 12; Vechten v. Keator, 63 N. Y. 52; Sweet v. Chase, 2 N. Y. 79.

This rule, of course, will not apply when the later provision is void. Austin v. Oakes, 117 N. Y. 577. It has frequently been criticised as not founded on a very satisfactory reason and is not to be blindly followed unless the court can find nothing else to aid it in ascertaining the testator's intention. Ogsbury v. Ogsbury, 45 Hun, 388; Covenhoven v. Shuler, 2 Paige, Ch. 123.

VI. Where of several provisions in a will, some are lawful and others unlawful, each being complete in itself, and independent of and separable from the others, the legal provisions will be preserved, if not inconsistent with the manifest intent of the testator, and if they would not lead to a result contrary to the purpose of the will or work injustice among the beneficiaries. Tilden v. Green, 130 N. Y. 29; Van Schuyver v. Mulford, 59 N. Y. 426; Kalish v. Kalish, 166 N. Y. 368.

But where material provisions of a will are illegal and cannot be separated from the other parts, without defeating the testator's general intention, the legal provisions must fail with the illegal. Hafner v. Hafner, 62 App. Div. 316; Benedict v. Webb, 98 N. Y. 460; Harris v. Clark, 7 N. Y. 242.

VII. Such a construction as will prevent partial intestacy will be favored, the law presuming that a testator did not intend to die intestate as to any of his property. Schult v. Moll, 132 N. Y. 122; Kelley v. Hogan, 71 App. Div. 343; Byrnes v. Baer, 86 N. Y. 218.

VIII. The law favors that construction which permits descent to remain in the line of ancestral blood. Knowlton v. Atkins, 134 N. Y. 313, 321; Quinn v. Hardenbrook, 54 N. Y. 83; Matter of Boyce, 37 Misc. 146.

IX. Express words, or necessary implication, are requisite in order to disinherit an heir-at-law. Haxtun v. Corse, 2 Barb. Ch. 521; Chamberlain v. Taylor, 105 N. Y. 185; Scott v. Guernsey, 48 N. Y. 106; Brown v. Quintard, 177 N. Y. 75.

Mere words of disinheritance, without devise to others, are insufficient to effect that purpose. Gallagher v. Crooks, 132 N. Y. 338, 342, and cases cited; Lynes v. Townsend, 33 N. Y. 558, 561.

X. The law favors equality among children of the testator and their issue, in the distribution of estates, and in cases of doubtful construction it selects that which would lead to such a result. Stokes v. Weston, 142 N. Y. 433; Matter of Miller, 18 App. Div. 211, aff'd on opinion below, 155 N. Y. 646; Brown's Estate, 93 N. Y. 295; Button v. Button, 57 App. Div. 297.

XI. Provisions for the benefit of a wife are construed liberally in her favor. Moffat v. Elmendorf, 152 N. Y. 475; Thurber v. Chambers, 66 N. Y. 42, 48; Stimson v. Vrooman, 99 N. Y. 74, 80.

XII. The law favors the vesting of estates at the earliest time. Stokes v. Weston, supra; Byrnes v. Stilwell, 103 N. Y. 453; Trask v. Sturges, 170 N. Y. 482; Campbell v. Beaumont, 91 N. Y. 464.

XIII. Where an interest is given or an estate conveyed in one clause, it cannot be cut down or taken away by raising a doubt from other clauses, but only by express words or clear implication. Freeman v. Coit, 96 N. Y. 63; Banzer v. Banzer, 156 N. Y. 429; Trask v. Sturges, 170 N. Y. 482, 492.

XIV. A will speaks as of the date of the testator's death. Brundage v. Brundage, 60 N. Y. 544; Lynes v. Townsend, 33 N. Y. 558, 564.

But when a testator refers to an actually existing state of things, his language should be understood as referring to the date of the will and not that of his death. Rogers v. Rogers, 153 N. Y. 343, and cases cited. See Matter of Hopkins, 102 App. Div. 458.

XV. An expressed intention in a codicil to make a change in a will in one particular negatives, by implication, an intention to alter it in any other respect. Redfield v. Redfield, 126 N. Y. 466; Wetmore v. Parker, 52 N. Y. 450.

§ 443. Interpretation of words and phrases.—In addition to the foregoing general rules the courts have enunciated a number of rules of lesser scope, applicable to individual words and phrases. Of these, the more important are the following:

I. Words in general are to be taken in their plain, usual and primary sense, unless a clear intention to use them in another sense can be collected, and that sense ascertained from the instrument. Carpenter v. Carpenter, 2 Dem. 534; Harvey v. Olmstead, 1 N. Y. 483, 489; Matter of Woodward, 117 N. Y. 522; Wylie v. Lockwood, 86 N. Y. 291.

II. Technical words are presumed to have been used in their technical sense, but when it appears from the context or from extraneous facts, that the testator used them in their common and popular sense, this overcomes the presumption. Lawton v. Corlies, 127 N. Y. 100; Luce v. Dunham, 69 N. Y. 36; Cushman v. Horton, 59 N. Y. 151.

III. The natural sense in which words are used, always prevails over both punctuation and capitals. Kinkele v. Wilson, 151 N. Y. 269; Arcularius v. Sweet, 25 Barb. 406.

IV. Rules of grammar are considered and will be followed, excepting when they contravene the clear intendment. Staats v. Staats, 11 Johns. 337; Abbey v. Aymar, 3 Dem. 400; De Notteback v. Astor, 13 N. Y. 98.

V. Words may be transposed, rejected or supplied so that the will may express the intention of the testator (Starr v. Starr, 132 N. Y. 154, 158; Phillips v. Davies, 92 N. Y. 199), but not so as to devise a new scheme or to make a new will. Tilden v. Green, 130 N. Y. 29.

See, as to words transposed, Wager v. Wager, 96 N. Y. 164, 172; Covenhoven v. Shuler, 2 Paige's Ch. 122. Words rejected, Walter v. Ham, 68 App. Div. 381; Benjamin v. Welsh, 73 Hun, 371. Words supplied, Roseboom v. Roseboom, 81 N. Y. 356; Mumford v. Rochester, 4 Redf. 451; Matter of Schweigert, 17 Misc. 186. Words changed, Roome v. Phillips, 24 N. Y. 463; Miller v. Gilbert, 144 N. Y. 68, 74.

VI. Where certain things named are followed by a phrase which need not but might be construed to include other things, it will be confined to articles of the same general character as those enumerated. Matter of Reynolds, 124 N. Y. 388, 397.

VII. Precatory words and expressions, accompanying a devise or a bequest are prima facie obligatory, and create a trust, unless the intention is clearly apparent that they are to be regarded as advisory or recommendatory only. Bliven v. Seymour, 88 N. Y. 469; Manice v. Manice, 43 N. Y. 305; Matter of Gardner, 140 N. Y. 123.

VIII. Particular words or clauses may, in the light of other words or clauses, be so construed as to mean more or less than they import considered singly or by themselves. Freeman v. Coit, 96 N. Y. 63.

IX. The construction given to a word or phrase in one will is no positive criterion for construing the same expression occurring in another (Smith v. Bell, 6 Pet. 68, per Marshall, C. J.); and the same word may be construed in different senses in the same will. Morrow v. McMahon, 35 Misc. 348, construing "issue" variously as to their interest in income and principal of estate.

§ 444. Interpretation of particular words and phrases.—As may be readily inferred from the last rule above mentioned, there are a very large number of decisions defining the meaning of certain words and expressions as they are used in the particular instruments under consideration. In them, various shades of meaning, often widely divergent, will be found. But the same word or expression in different wills may require essentially different constructions; so unless two wills can be found approximately identical, disposing of similar property under similar circumstances, such precedents lose much of their force. Convenient lists of adjudged cases, containing such verbal interpretations, will be found in the digests.

§ 445. Admissibility of extrinsic evidence.—When there is no ambiguity in a will, extrinsic evidence is inadmissible to show the testator's intention, for plain and unambiguous language leaves no room for construction. Bradhurst v. Field, 135 N. Y. 564; Sanford v. Sanford, 58 N. Y. 69. It is only when the testator's meaning is doubtful, after a critical scrutiny and comparison of the several provisions of his will, that external assistance may be accepted and collateral facts and surrounding circumstances may be inquired into, to elucidate what is uncertain, and assist in the construction of the instrument. Lefevre v. Lefevre, 59 N. Y. 434. In Mann v. Mann, 1 Johns. Ch. 231, which is often referred to as the leading New York case on this subject, the rule is stated by Chancellor Kent, as follows: "Parol evidence cannot be admitted to supply or contradict, enlarge or vary, the words of a will, nor to explain the intention of the testator, except in two specified cases: (1) where there is a latent ambiguity, arising dehors the will, as to the person or subject meant to be described; and (2) to rebut a resulting trust." While this rule has generally been followed, it may be remarked, in this connection, that the distinction between patent and latent ambiguities is no longer considered by the courts. In either case, where the instrument itself appears ambiguous or where collateral facts and circumstances give rise to the ambiguity, the court will seek, by an inquiry into all the material facts, to place itself as nearly as possible in the position of the testator, when the will was made. Lefevre v. Lefevre, supra; Fisk v. Hubbard, 21 Wend. 651, 659, opinion by Cowen, J., commenting on the rule of Lord Bacon, that "ambiguitas patens is never holden by averment" and qualifying it. Extraneous circumstances may be considered in aid of the terms of the will. Hoyt v. Hoyt, 85 N. Y. 142, 146. The language of the will is the basis of the inquiry, but extrinsic circumstances which aid in the interpretation of that language, and help to disclose the actual intention, may also be considered. McCorn v. McCorn, 100 N. Y. 511, 513, citing LeFevre v. Tool, 84 N. Y. 95; Hoyt v. Hoyt, supra; Scott v. Stebbins, 91 N. Y. 605. But, it cannot be received to interpret anything not written in the will, e. g., where a will makes no disposition of real estate, extrinsic parol evidence cannot be used to bolster a construction that testator intended to charge his realty with the payment of legacies. Fries v. Osborn, 190 N. Y. 35.

§ 446. Evidence of intention.—The intent of the testator must be found in the will, either expressed or implied in its terms, or drawn by fair inference from other manifest intentions expressed in the will. Lippen v. Eldred, 2 Barb. 130. Extrinsic evidence of whatever kind, whether it bear directly or indirectly on the testator's intention, must be considered as merely subsidiary to the language of the instrument and received only as an aid in disclosing its real purpose. It cannot be used to put new language in the will, to the extent of interpolating a provision or materially qualifying its terms. Matter of Wells, 113 N. Y. 396; Stimson v. Vrooman, 99 N. Y. 74, 79; Armstrong v. Galusha, 43 App. Div. 248, 262. Thus it may be stated as a general rule that declarations of a testator, before, contemporaneously with, or after the making of a will, are inadmissible to affect its construction. Williams v. Freeman, 88 N. Y. 561. And it has been held that parol evidence of the intention of a testator is not admissible to fortify a legal presumption raised against the apparent intention, or to create a presumption contrary to the apparent intention where no such presumption is raised by law. Reynolds v. Robinson, 82 N. Y. 103. An apparent exception to this rule with respect to direct evidence of the testator's declarations of his intention is found in a class of cases where there are several persons or things to which the terms of the will might apply with equal certainty. In these cases, such evidence is received; but its purpose then is not primarily to affect the intention, but to disclose, if possible, what the intention really is. Matter of Wheeler, 32 App. Div. 183, 187, aff'd 161 N. Y. 652; St. Luke's Home v. Ass'n for Indigent Females, 52 N. Y. 191, 198; Gallup v. Wright, 61 How. Pr. 286. It seems also that when an attack upon the will is made by the introduction of extrinsic evidence to affect its construction or application, the scope of the defense is enlarged, and evidence of the testator's declarations may be given in rebuttal, in order to show that the intention is correctly expressed on the face of the will. Tillotson v. Race, 22 N. Y. 122; Matter of Wheeler, supra.

§ 447. Unattested writings and memoranda.—The statute which requires wills to be expressed in writing, attested in a prescribed form, precludes any other proof of them except the writing, and such facts and circumstances as are necessary to its intelligent reading. An unattested paper of a testamentary nature cannot be taken as part of the will, even though referred to by that instrument. Booth v. Baptist Church, 126 N. Y. 215, 246, and cases cited; Vogel v. Lehritter, 139 N. Y. 223. It was held in Tonnele v. Hall, 4 N. Y. 140, that a map appearing after the signature upon a will and which was referred to in the body of the will, did not require the signature to follow it in order to make it a part of the will. But it is to be observed that the will in that case was complete without such addition, the map being referred to merely to identify the subject devised, and not as containing a testamentary provision. An interesting discussion of the law as to the incorporation of extrinsic writings in wills will be found in Dyer v. Erving, 2 Dem. 160, wherein the Surrogate summarizes his conclusions as follows: "First. That words of reference in a will will never suffice to incorporate the contents of an extraneous paper, unless it can be clearly shown, that at the time such will was executed, such paper was actually in existence. Second. That an extraneous paper produced as and for a paper so referred to in a will and shown to have been in existence when such will was executed, may be adjudged to form part of such will and be admitted to probate as such, under these circumstances and no others, to wit: When, by satisfactory and conclusive evidence, it has been proved to be the selfsame paper which the testator by his words of reference designed to indicate." See also Matter of Reins, 59 Misc. 126.

§ 448. What may be shown by extrinsic evidence.—It may be stated as a broad and general rule that evidence which is admissible in explanation of a will may relate to every material fact, which will enable the court to ascertain the nature and qualities of the subject-matter of the instrument, and to identify the persons and things to which it refers. These may be considered under the general heads of explication, referring to the reading of the verbal text of the will, and application, showing its applicability to the subject or the object of the devise or bequest.

§ 449. Explication.—If the instrument is written in a foreign language or in shorthand, a competent witness may translate it, and whatever is necessary to possess the court of an understanding of the language or character in which the will is written may be supplied by extrinsic evidence. Abb. Trial Ev., 2d ed., p. 169. A nickname or a name by reputation given by the testator and current in his family or neighborhood may be thus explained; or terms with which, as a member of a particular trade or calling, the testator is familiar. In all such cases persons acquainted with the meaning of the words may be called as witnesses to translate or define them. Ryerss v. Wheeler, 22 Wend. 148, and cases cited. So also obvious clerical errors appearing on the face of the will may be corrected (Dubois v. Ray, 35 N. Y. 162; Paige v. Bergh, 10 Paige's Ch. 140); and evidence aliunde is allowable to aid in determining the real name of a beneficiary in cases of misnomer. Leonard v. Davenport, 58 How. Pr. 384; Gallup v. Wright, 61 How. Pr. 286; Lefevre v. Lefevre, 59 N. Y. 434. All such evidence is received, however, not for the purpose of showing the intent in the particular case, but in order to enable the court by inference from the facts thus established, to correctly read the will. It would appear that technical terms of known legal import present an exception to this general rule. They must have their legal effect, unless it is perfectly clear from the context that the testator did not mean to use them in their technical sense. Then they can only be construed in the light of the other parts of the instrument. Rule II, ante, and cases cited; Moore v. Lyons, 25 Wend. 119, 154; Campbell v. Rawdon, 18 N. Y. 412, 417.

§ 450. Application.—In applying the will the court may consider all the circumstances surrounding the testator when he made the will. Stimson v. Vroman, 99 N. Y. 74, 79; Williams v. Jones, 166 N. Y. 522, 533. The intent thus existing, when ascertained, must have effect, and may not be varied by after-occurring events. While a will is in some sense ambulatory as to the objects and subjects with which it deals, yet it is not ambulatory as to the meaning of the language used by the testator when he executed the will. Morris v. Sickley, 133 N. Y. 546. But in order to ascertain the intention and purpose existing at the time of the execution of the will, the court may inquire into the situation of the testator's family and the nature and value of his estate (Bumpus v. Bumpus, 79 Hun, 526; Matter of Woodward's Will, 167 N. Y. 28); his education and intelligence (Lytle v. Beveridge, 58 N. Y. 592); his business transactions (Tillotson v. Race, 22 N. Y. 122); his religious affiliations, his charitable benefactions and zeal for certain charitable agencies. Hornbeck v. Am. Bible Society, 2 Sand. Ch. 133; Lefevre v. Lefevre, 59 N. Y. 434. In short, it may resort to extraneous evidence of such facts or circumstances as will enable it to identify the person sought to be designated or the property to which the language of the will is to be applied. Thus a beneficiary need not be described by name, if any other designation or description be given, by which he can be clearly identified with the aid of parol evidence. Holmes v. Mead, 52 N. Y. 332; Lefevre v. Lefevre, supra. Parol proof may in like manner be resorted to in order to identify property which is described in the will in such meager, ambiguous or uncertain terms, that it cannot be exactly located. Ryerss v. Wheeler, 22 Wend. 148. But on the other hand, the courts are firm in excluding extrinsic evidence when it seeks to change or enlarge a specific and explicit designation of the property. Waugh v. Waugh, 28 N. Y. 94; Mann v. Mann, 1 Johns. Ch. 231.

CHAPTER IX

ESTABLISHING WILL BY ACTION

§ 451. How a will may be proved outside the Surrogate's Court.—Wills may be divided into three classes as regards the Surrogate's jurisdiction to grant letters testamentary under them.

In the first class are the wills which may be proved in a Surrogate's Court.

Such wills, it is prescribed by former § 2611 (now §§ 23–25 of Dec. Est. Law), include:

(a) A will of real or personal property executed as prescribed by the laws of the State.

(b) A will of personal property executed without the State but within the United States, the Dominion of Canada, or the Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, as prescribed by the laws of the State or the country where it is or was executed.

(c) Or a will of personal property executed by a person not a resident of this State according to the laws of his residence.

There is a fourth kind, namely, wills of United States citizens dying while domiciled or resident, in the Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland or any of its dependencies. Chapter 731, Laws, 1894, provides that if such will has been probated at the place of domicile and affects property in this State, it may be admitted to probate in a Surrogate's Court here on notice merely to the beneficiaries named in the will. (Quoted ante, § 27.)

In the second class are wills specified in § 2621 as lost or fraudulently destroyed upon their having been established as provided by § 1865.

And in the third class are wills of personal property made by a person a nonresident at the time of executing it, or a nonresident at his death, the will being duly executed according to the laws of the State or country where it was executed, or of the State or country where the testator resided at the time of his death but not coming within the permissive provisions of § 2611 and consequently not provable before a Surrogate.

The foregoing proposition must be clearly understood to be limited to a statement of the Surrogate's right to issue letters testamentary. The jurisdiction in this regard is exclusively confined to the Surrogate's Court; but, it will be noted that as to the three classes of wills above described a further differentiation can be made. As to the first the Surrogate has exclusive jurisdiction to admit the same to probate. As to the second (lost or fraudulently destroyed wills) the Surrogate has power to admit the same to probate under § 2621, in a case where a judgment establishing the will could be rendered by the Supreme Court as prescribed in § 1865. Thus the Supreme Court and the Surrogate's Court both have jurisdiction, the one of the proceeding for probate, the other of the action to establish, but in this case the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court is limited to entering the judgment establishing the will, while the issuing of letters thereupon remains with the Surrogate. See § 1864.

As to the third case, the jurisdiction is exclusively committed to the Supreme Court with the same limitation, to wit: that its power ceases with the entry of judgment, the letters testamentary issuing under § 1864 by the Surrogate only.

§ 452. Establishing a will by action.—The jurisdiction of the Supreme Court over a civil action to establish a will is defined by § 1861 of the Code. This section is as follows:

> An action to procure a judgment, establishing a will, may be maintained by any person interested in the establishment thereof, in either of the following cases:
>
> 1. Where a will of real or personal property, or both, has been executed, in such a manner and under such circumstances, that it might, under the laws of the state, be admitted to probate in a surrogate's court; but the original will is in another state or country, under such circumstances that it cannot be obtained for that purpose; or has been lost or destroyed, by accident or design, before it was duly proved and recorded within the state.
> 2. Where a will of personal property, made by a person, who resided without the state, at the time of the execution thereof, or at the time of his death, has been duly executed, according to the laws of the state or country in which it was executed, or in which the testator resided at the time of his death, and the case is not one, where the will can be admitted to probate in a surrogate's court, under the laws of the state.

§ 453. Subdivision 1.—Subdivision 1, it will be noted, requires for its full understanding, reference to former § 2611, the provisions of which have been recited above. If it appears that the will is one coming within the purview of § 2611, and it appears in addition that the original will is in another state or country, and in addition that it cannot be obtained for the purpose of probate here by reason of its having been lost or destroyed by accident or design, a clear case would then be made for an action under subd. 1. The wills, therefore, which could be established under this subdivision come under two classes: first, wills remaining in another jurisdiction so that they cannot be brought here for probate. Second, lost or destroyed wills. The case covered by Laws, 1894, ch. 731 (quoted, ante, in § 27 under "Jurisdiction") would be an exception to the first class. In that case, though the will cannot be brought here, a copy, with consular certificate, together with the proofs similarly certified can be probated, and letters issued thereunder without resort to an action in the Supreme Court.

In Matter of Law, 80 App. Div. 73, Hatch, Surr., points out the difference between the probating of a resident's will and its establishment by action. Comparing §§ 1861 and 2620 it is clear that when the will cannot be produced before the Surrogate, but was executed in this State, by a resident, before New York witnesses, and is shown to be in existence the Surrogate is powerless to probate it. Ibid, citing Matter of Cameron, 47 App. Div. 120, aff'd 166 N. Y. 610.

§ 454. Wills retained in another jurisdiction.—The case of Younger v. Duffie, 28 Hun, 242, aff'd 94 N. Y. 535, illustrates a case under subd. 1. The action was brought under this section, and the complaint averred that the testator, a United States consul in Spain, temporarily residing at Cadiz, but being an inhabitant of and domiciled in the county of Richmond and State of New York, died on the 8th day of November, 1880, in Cadiz, being possessed at the time of his death of personal property in the State of New York. The plaintiff was a legatee under the will, which it was alleged had been executed in the city of Cadiz, signed, published, declared and executed before a notary and three witnesses, and containing similar allegations respecting the subsequent execution of a codicil to the will, a copy of which will and codicil were annexed to the complaint. The complaint further alleged that the original will and codicil were in the Spanish language, were duly executed in conformity with the Spanish law, and were actually on file among the archives of the notarial office of the city of Cadiz, from which they could not be removed for the purpose of being admitted to probate under the laws of the State of New York, or for any other purpose whatsoever, by reason of the laws of Spain. This complaint was demurred to upon the ground that it did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, which demurrer was overruled at a special term, and the action of the special term affirmed at the General Term and in the Court of Appeals.

The General Term held that the allegations of the complaint were broad enough to admit proof at the trial of all the surrounding circumstances required by our statutes, and that the will was one which could be admitted to probate in the Surrogate's Court if the circumstances that it could not be obtained for that purpose did not exist. And Davis, P. J., adds in his opinion (28 Hun, 245): "That where such circumstance does exist, the Code expressly provides that the action may be maintained for the purpose of establishing the will," citing Russell v. Hartt, 13 N. Y. Weekly Digest, 309, January 6, 1882; Caulfield v. Sullivan, 85 N. Y. 153. In the Court of Appeals Judge Earl (95 N. Y. at page 540) also held that the will alleged was one provable in the Surrogate's Court of Richmond County, but for the fact that it could not be procured for that purpose and hence was a case under § 1861. It will be noted that the unquestionable jurisdiction of a Surrogate to grant probate of a will not actually produced before him except in the form of an exemplified copy thereof, provided that it is executed as prescribed in § 2611, is not interfered with by this section. Matter of De Laplaine, 45 Hun, 225; Russell v. Hartt, 87 N. Y. 19 (see opinion of Judge Finch); Caulfield v. Sullivan, 85 N. Y. 153. But this section does not authorize the bringing of an action to prove and establish the will of a resident of another State which has been duly probated therein. This section is a re-enactment of §§ 63, 64, 67 and 68 of title 1, ch. 6, part 2, of the Revised Statutes by which it appears that the term "establishing a will" means the same as proving a will, and such is the obvious meaning of the term as used in the section of the Code referred to, which has no relation to wills which have been duly proved. Article 7, of title 3, of ch. 18 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides a complete scheme for establishing and giving effect within this State to wills duly probated in other States. Clark v. Poor, 73 Hun, 143, 144.

§ 455. Lost or destroyed will.—Subdivision 1 provides that the action may be brought to establish a will, which could have been admitted to probate in a Surrogate's Court, where it "has been lost or destroyed by accident or design before it was duly proved and recorded within the State." In connection with this, § 1865 provides as follows:

> But the plaintiff is not entitled to a judgment, establishing a lost or destroyed will, as prescribed in this article, unless the will was in existence, at the time of the testator's death, or was fraudulently destroyed in his lifetime; and its provisions are clearly and distinctly proved by at least two credible witnesses, a correct copy or draft being equivalent to one witness.

It must be at the outset noted, that the provisions of this section which embody the former provisions of the Revised Statutes (2 R. S. 67, § 67*b*) do not affect the rule of evidence formerly obtaining and still obtaining in actions in which it might become necessary to prove a lost will or lost deed. The rule in such actions remains the same, namely, that such a lost will can be proved by a single credible witness. See Jackson v. La Grange, 19 Johns. 386; Dan v. Brown, 4 Cowen, 483; Jackson v. Betts, 6 Cowen, 377.

The additional requirement as to proof has been held to be limited to the direct proceeding or action contemplated by §§ 1865 and 2621, and the intent of the legislature has been said to be only to provide a rule of evidence applicable to the proceedings thereby authorized to prove and establish a lost or destroyed will; and the rules of evidence in relation to proving the execution and contents of lost instruments, upon trials at law or in equity, remain unaffected; and parties acquiring rights under a lost or destroyed will, may establish those rights by the same kind of evidence as was allowed prior to the enactment providing for the probate of such wills. See Harris v. Harris, 26 N. Y. 433, 439, approved in Matter of Kennedy, 167 N. Y. 163, 172. (See § 457, below.)

The importance of this distinction will be seen from the fact that it has been held that if parties bring a suit in which they seek to establish a will lost or destroyed, and are dismissed, they are not concluded by the dismissal of this suit from setting up and establishing their title, in another action involving their rights, by sufficient common-law evidence of the existence or fraudulent destruction of the will. See Harris v. Harris, supra. An action had been brought for the purpose of having a will proved as a lost and destroyed will; this action was duly tried and judgment entered therein dismissing the complaint. An action was subsequently brought for the partition of the real property which the plaintiff in the former action had claimed an interest in, by virtue of the alleged lost will; this interest was alleged in the answer in the partition suit. And the provisions or contents of the will and the factum of the will were proved distinctly and clearly by one credible witness. The Court of Appeals held that the defendants were not concluded by the former decree from setting up this right and that the evidence was sufficient to prove as well the existence as the destruction and contents of the alleged will. See opinion of Wright, J., in Harris v. Harris, at page 437 et seq.

§ 456. Procedure in the action.—The complaint in an action under § 1865 should contain distinct averments of all the necessary facts warranting the plaintiff in invoking the jurisdiction of the court. (See below.) It has been distinctly held that if the plaintiff is without knowledge sufficient to enable him to frame his complaint he is entitled to an order for the examination of the defendant to take his deposition for the purpose of enabling him to frame his complaint. Blatchford v. Paine, 24 App. Div. 140, 143.

§ 457. Nature of proof required.—Section 1865, it has been held, should be liberally construed. See Early v. Early, 5 Redf. 376, 380, following Hook v. Pratt, 8 Hun, 102, 109; Will of De Groot, 9 N. Y. Supp. 471, 473. Judge Beekman stated this rule (Kahn v. Hoes, 14 Misc. 63) with its proper limitations, as follows:

"While the statutory provisions under which such an action is maintainable are remedial in their nature and benignant in their purpose, and should, therefore, be liberally construed and applied, still it is not to be forgotten that the law has in this State always exacted great particularity of proof in respect to testamentary acts and the observance of formalities intended to make the proof as nearly as may be a demonstration that the testator was capable and fully concious of the nature of his act. This extreme caution obviously arises from the essential privacy of the act itself, which does not become the subject of proof until the mouth of the chief actor is closed by death, and the consequent ease and safety with which fraudulent wills might be concocted and maintained. As little as possible is left to the uncertainty of recollection or the operation of fraudulent design in the requirements that the will should be in writing, subscribed and published by the testator and authenticated by two witnesses, selected by him and subscribing their names in his presence in attestation of due execution. It will be seen that the chief value of these precautionary requirements rests upon the production of the document itself when rights are asserted under it, and that its absence opens the door to the uncertainties and fraudulent designs against which the statute was intended to provide. Experience, however, has demonstrated the necessity of providing for the cases where wills which had been duly executed were lost or fraudulently destroyed, and could not, therefore, be produced for probate, and in order that the rigor of the statute should not defeat a duly executed testamentary act, or in its operation to prevent one kind of fraud work another, provision has been made for the establishment of wills where, through loss or destruction by accident or design, the paper cannot be produced. But in so doing the legislature has also sought in some measure to provide against the dangerous consequences imminent upon this relaxation of the rule by prescribing a special quality of proof in such cases." After quoting § 1865 of the Code of Civil Procedure he continues as follows:

"The burden of proof rests upon the plaintiff, and reason as well as the policy of the law demands that the proof should be clear and convincing, not only in respect to the provisions of the will, but as well that it was in existence at the time of the testator's death. The plaintiff is confronted at the outset by the presumption of revocation in which the law indulges where a will shown to have been made cannot be found after decease, a presumption which he must overcome by evidence satisfactorily accounting for the absence of the paper upon some other theory."

§ 458. Two witnesses necessary only as to contents, not factum.—The provision of § 1865 as to proof by two credible witnesses is distinctly limited thereby to the provisions of the will. The other necessary facts can be proved by any competent evidence.

By "provisions of the will" is meant those which affect the disposition of property. Early v. Early, supra.

But as to these the statute has been strictly construed to mean, that each of the witnesses must be able to testify to all of the disposing parts of the will; it will not suffice to prove one provision by two or more witnesses and another provision in the same way by others, nor can the proven declaration of its contents by the testator be regarded as of any weight. Matter of Ruser, 6 Dem. 31, 33, citing Collyer v. Collyer, 4 Dem. 53. And consequently the evidence of a witness who is shown not to have read the entire will or otherwise to have known all its provisions is of no appreciable value. Ibid. See headnote and opinion at page 34.

The Ruser case was peculiar in that counsel on both sides sought to cure the uncertainty in the testimony as to the contents of the will by stipulating its provisions; this stipulation was very properly disregarded by the court.

The words, "two credible witnesses," have apparently been construed, further, to mean two independent witnesses, each testifying to the main facts and to all of such facts. Surrogate Lapham held that a witness who was merely a supporting witness corroborating another witness who alone could be properly called an independent witness in regard to details of his testimony, was not one of such two credible witnesses as is contemplated by the section. Matter of Waldron, 19 Misc. 333, 337. The Surrogate observes, " the two credible witnesses which the statute requires respecting the contents of a lost will need not necessarily have been witnesses also to the execution of the will. But it is reasonable to read the statute as meaning that they must both be able to speak of an actual will from personal knowledge and not of a possible will. . . . If two reliable persons had become possessed of the contents without any part in the execution of the instrument, they might equally well constitute such witnesses. But could they be such witnesses if their knowledge of the contents of the instrument was limited to what they supposed or believed it contained only because somebody had told them that a draft they had seen of a will, had been executed thereafter and had become a will?" The Surrogate properly held that this was not sufficient, citing McNally v. Brown, 5 Redf. 372; Collyer v. Collyer, 4 Dem. 53; Sheridan v. Houghton, 6 Abb. N. C. 234. And the usual rule as to credibility, of course, will obtain; and if the will depends upon the plaintiff's testimony in whose favor the will is claimed to have been made, the court will subject his testimony to a most critical examination. Kahn v. Hoes, 14 Misc. 63, 67.

This same rule, of course, applies where the existence of the will at the testator's death depends upon the same kind of testimony. Ibid. The facts as to the execution, the existence at the testator's death, or the fraudulent destruction, must all be clearly established to the satisfaction of the court although the only expressed limitation as to character of proof is in regard to the disposing provisions of the will. See Kerry v. Dimon, 37 N. Y. Supp. 92; Kahn v. Hoes, supra.

In Matter of Hughes, 61 Misc. 205, it was held a will was not "destroyed" when although testator had directed its being torn up, the tearing of his signature had not been done in his presence, and the will was actually in testator's custody at his death and was produced for probate.

This fact of existence at the testator's death is most important, for the presumption is a proper one and will usually be entertained that a will was destroyed by the testator animo revocandi, if the only facts shown are that the decedent made a will which was last seen in his possession or under his control, and which after his death cannot be found upon proper search. See Hard v. Ashley, 88 Hun, 103, 107, citing In re Florence, 2 Bradf. 281; Idley v. Bowen, 11 Wend. 227.

The Court of Appeals in the Collyer case, 110 N. Y. 486, stated the rule as follows: "There is no direct proof that Mrs. Collyer destroyed her will; but the proof that the will was not found after her death is sufficient proof that she destroyed it animo revocandi. When a will previously executed cannot be found after the death of the testator there is a strong presumption that it was revoked by destruction by the testator, and this presumption stands in place of positive proof. Betts v. Jackson, 6 Wend. 173; Knapp v. Knapp, 10 N. Y. 276; Schultz v. Schultz, 35 id. 653; Hatch v. Sigman, 1 Dem. 519. He who seeks to establish a lost or destroyed will assumes the burden of overcoming this presumption by adequate proof. It is not sufficient for him to show that persons interested to establish intestacy had an opportunity to destroy the will. He must go further, and show by facts and circumstances that the will was actually, fraudulently destroyed. In Loxley v. Jackson, 3 Phill. Rep. 126, the will was last seen in a small box in the bedroom of the deceased, but was not found after her death, and it was held that the presumption of law was that the testatrix destroyed it animo revocandi; that the law did not presume fraud, and that the burden of proof was on the party claiming under the will.

In Knapp v. Knapp, supra, it was held that proof that a will executed by a deceased person was said by him a month previous to his death to be in his possession in a certain desk in his house, and that he was then very aged and feeble, that his housekeeper was a daughter having an interest adverse to the will and that the same could not be found on proper search three days after his death, is not sufficient evidence of its existence at the testator's death or of a fraudulent destruction in his lifetime, to authorize parol proof of its contents. The authorities are uniform, and no further citations are needed."

In Hard v. Ashley, supra, being, however, an action for partition, Judge Ward observes (at page 105), "It is true that proof of a lost will is necessarily secondary, and the law accepts the best evidence that the nature of the case admits of as to its valid execution and contents, and in such a case as this the defense may establish the will by a single credible witness," citing Harris v. Harris et al., 26 N. Y. 433, yet it must be shown that the will was executed with all the formalities required by the statute, and that the testator was of sound mind and under no restraint.

§ 459. Who may bring the proceeding.—It is very clear from § 1861 that only a person interested in the establishment of a will may bring this action. See Matter of Hamersley, 7 N. Y. St. Rep. 292.

The Court of Appeals in Anderson v. Anderson, 112 N. Y. 104, held that a devisee of the legal estate in possession of the property devised could not maintain an action to establish the will against the heirs-at-law. See headnote at page 104.

§ 460. Fraudulent destruction.—Where the plaintiff relies upon fraudulent destruction of a will in the testator's lifetime, the evidence by which it is sought to establish such a destruction must be substantially clear and convincing; such a destruction would be a crime, and a person should not be convicted of such an act upon suspicion or surmise. Hard v. Ashley, 88 Hun, 103, 107. See also Matter of De Groot, 2 Connoly, 210; Perry v. Perry, 21 N. Y. Supp. 133.

§ 461. The complaint.—In view of the wide diversity of opinion among practitioners as to matter of form and allegations in pleading, it hardly seems necessary to suggest the form of a complaint in an action brought under § 1861. It is merely necessary to lay stress upon the fact that the practitioner having determined whether the facts of the case bring him within subd. 1 or sudb. 2 of the section, and that the plaintiff is a person interested in the establishment of the will sought to be established, should concisely allege every jurisdictional fact required by the particular subdivision.

The following skeleton is suggested for a complaint under subd. 1:

I

First. Allege the execution of a will of real or personal property, stating date, place and circumstances of such execution, bearing in mind that they must be such as would sustain its probate in a Surrogate's Court in this

State; give also name of testator and allege his residence at the time of executing the will, as well as the time and place of his death; state what property, whether real or personal, belonged to the testator at his death, within the county in which the action is brought.

Second. Allege that the will cannot be obtained for the purpose of probate in a Surrogate's Court, stating the circumstances why it cannot be so obtained.

Third. Allege that the plaintiff is a person interested in the establishment of such will, showing his rights or claims, under the will, and if necessary state why it is necessary for him to bring the action.

Fourth. Allege facts showing that the will is a live will, by allegations showing that it has never been revoked or canceled, either by act of the testator, or by operation of law.

Fifth. Allege that the will has not yet been proved or admitted to probate.

II

Where the will sought to be established is lost or fraudulently destroyed, the allegations should be substantially as follows:

First. Allege the execution of the will, describing it, stating facts sufficient as to the manner and circumstances of its execution as would be necessary in a petition for its probate in a Surrogate's Court.

Second. Give the name of the testator, allege his residence at the time of execution, and the fact of his death, giving date and place.

Third. Allege the interest of the plaintiff in the establishment of the will and his rights or claims thereunder.

Fourth. Allege concisely the facts as to the loss or fraudulent destruction of the will. The words in subd. 1 of § 1861, "has been lost or destroyed by accident or design," are covered by the phrase "fraudulently destroyed," for the destruction of the will without the testator's consent or direction is, as to the testator, fraudulent, within the meaning of the statute whether such destruction were by accident or design.

It is proper to add to this paragraph of the complaint a positive allegation, that the will was not in fact revoked, canceled or annulled, by any act of the testator or by operation of law.

Fifth. Allege the failure to prove or to offer to prove the said will on the part of the executor claimed to have been named therein.

The prayer for relief in either of these complaints will demand judgment that the will alleged in the complaint be established and proved as the last will of the testator named, and that the will be admitted to probate as a will of real or personal property or both.

It is not essential that the prayer for relief should pray for the issuance of letters testamentary, for § 1863 provides that the final judgment establishing the will must, in a proper case, direct that an exemplified copy thereof be transmitted to the Surrogate having jurisdiction and be recorded in his office, and further that letters testamentary or letters of administration with the will annexed be issued thereupon from the Surrogate's Court in the same manner and with like effect as upon a will duly proved in that court, but it is usual to insert in the prayer such a request, naming the executors to whom letters are prayed to be issued, and particularly if there is uncertainty as to the executor's name in the alleged lost or destroyed will, in which case the plaintiff may ask for letters of administration with the will annexed and should pray for their issuance "to the plaintiff or to the person entitled thereto." See post, part IV, ch. II, § 473.

§ 462. Judgment.—The provision, as to the form and contents of the judgment establishing the will, is contained in § 1862, which is as follows:

> If, in such an action, the facts necessary to establish the validity of the will, as prescribed in the last section, are satisfactorily proved, final judgment must be rendered, establishing the will accordingly. But where the will of a person, who was a resident of the state at the time of his death, is established as prescribed in the last section, the judgment establishing it does not affect the construction or validity of any provision contained therein; and such a question arising with respect to any provision, must be determined in the same action, or in another action or a special proceeding, as the case requires, as if the will was executed within the state. § 1862, Code Civil Proc.
>
> Where the parties to the action, who have appeared or have been duly summoned, include all the persons, who would be necessary parties to a special proceeding, in a Surrogate's Court for the probate of the same will and the grant of letters thereupon, if the circumstances were such that it could have been proved in a surrogate's court; the final judgment, rendered as prescribed in the last section, must direct, that an exemplified copy thereof be transmitted to the Surrogate having jurisdiction, and be recorded in his office; and that letters testamentary, or letters of administration with the will annexed, be issued thereupon from this court, in the same manner, and with like effect, as upon a will duly proved in that court. § 1863, Code Civil Proc.
> A copy of the will so established, or, if it is lost or destroyed, the substance thereof, must be incorporated into a final judgment, rendered as prescribed in the last section; and the Surrogate must record the same, and issue letters thereupon, as directed in the judgment. § 1864, Code Civil Proc.

§ 463. Action for construction of a will relating to real property.—It will have been noted under § 1862, that the judgment establishing a will in an action brought under § 1861, does not affect the construction or validity of any provision contained in the will, and that such questions with respect to the disposing provisions of the will must be determined,

(a) In the same action, or,

(b) In another action or special proceeding as the case requires "as if the will was executed within the State."

Section 1866 contains the provisions of the Code whereunder to secure the interpreting of wills relating to real estate to determine whether provisions therein are valid or invalid, and to determine also the nature and extent of the interest in the property thereby devised which various parties interested would take if the devise is sucessfully impeached. The section is as follows:

The validity, construction or effect, under the laws of the state, of a testamentary disposition of real property situated within the state, or of an interest in such property, which would descend to the heir of an intestate, may be determined, in an action brought for that purpose, in like manner as the validity of a deed, purporting to convey land, may be determined. The judgment in such an action may perpetually enjoin any party, from setting up or from impeaching the devise, or otherwise making any claim in contravention to the determination of the court, as justice requires. But this section does not apply to a case, where the question in controversy is determined by the decree of the Surrogate's Court, duly rendered upon allegations for that purpose, as prescribed in article first of title third of chapter eighteenth of this act, where the plaintiff was duly cited, in the special proceeding in the Surrogate's Court, before the commencement of the action. § 1866, Code Civil Proc.

This section, it has been held, extends the remedy previously provided for the construction of wills so as to include suits for the construction of devises in behalf of heirs claiming adversely to a will. Read v. Williams, 125 N. Y. 566. And the Court of Appeals in the case last cited held that it would not be consistent with the spirit of the legislation embodied in this section, to narrow the jurisdiction in cases of bequests of personalty. Judge Andrews remarks at page 566:

"The jurisdiction of a court of equity to entertain an action in behalf of the next of kin of a testator for the construction of a will disposing of personal estate where the disposition made by the testator is claimed to be invalid or inoperative for any cause was asserted by the chancellor in Bowers v. Smith, 10 Paige, 200, and was maintained in Wager v. Wager, 89 N. Y. 161, and in Holland v. Alcock, 108 N. Y. 312. And he adds:

"In such cases the next of kin claim in hostility to the will, but the executors, in case the disposition made by the testator is invalid or cannot take effect, hold the personalty upon a resulting trust for those entitled under the Statute of Distribution, and thereby the jurisdiction to bring an equitable action for construction and to have the resulting trust declared by the court attaches as incident to the jurisdiction of equity over trusts."

§ 464. Who may bring action.—The power to construe devises is not inherently vested in courts of equity as a distinct and independent branch of jurisdiction, only as incident to their jurisdiction over trusts. Mellen v. Mellen, 139 N. Y. 210, citing Bowers v. Smith, 10 Paige, 193; Monarque v. Monarque, 80 N. Y. 320; Wager v. Wager, 89 N. Y. 128; Kalish v. Kalish, 166 N. Y. 368, 371, citing Brady v. McCosker, 1 N. Y. 214; Read v. Williams, 125 N. Y. 560; Voshall v. Clark, 123 App. Div. 136.

A, a testamentary trustee, died. His executor, becoming possessed of the trust fund, was held entitled to bring an action to construe the will creating the trust, in which action direction of court could be secured as to his proper disposition of the fund. Leggett v. Stevens, 185 N. Y. 70.

The cases of Chipman v. Montgomery, 63 N. Y. 221, and Horton v. Cantwell, 108 N. Y. 255, in which the right to bring the action was denied, were cases where the plaintiffs had no interest in the property disposed of by the will, whether the clauses challenged were valid or invalid. Section 1866 of the Code has been repeatedly declared to enlarge the previous powers of the courts. Sections 1866 and 1867 now furnish the whole statutory law upon the subject of which they treat. Anderson v. Anderson, 112 N. Y. 104, 111. In the case last cited, Judge Peckham draws a helpful distinction. He points out that where the Code provides for an inquiry into the question of the proper execution of the testamentary instrument by a competent testator, i. e., for an inquiry into the factum of the will, the court describes the instrument as a "will," but, when the validity of the will, etc., separate from the instrument which creates it, is alone to be inquired into, "the testamentary disposition of real property" is the expression used.

PART IV

LETTERS AND BONDS

CHAPTER I

LETTERS TESTAMENTARY

§ 465. Executors.—An executor is he to whom another man commits by will the execution of his last will and testament. 2 Bl. Comm. 494. Usually every will designates some one or more persons to whom the testator entrusts the carrying into effect of his testamentary desire; and papers have been upheld as wills and deemed entitled to probate which have merely named an executor without making any disposition of property whatever. See 19 Am. & Eng. Encyclopedia of Law 178; Matter of Davis, 45 Misc. 306, aff'd 182 N. Y. 465. But the mere failure to designate any executor in a will does not affect the validity of the will; for, as will be seen below, the court has power to grant letters of administration with the will annexed. Blackstone's definition may be modified to read: "An executor is he who, nominated by a testator to carry out his will, receives from a court of probate jurisdiction letters of authority so to act."

For the testamentary act is statutory. It differs from a vested property right. Hence the testator is limited by law as to substance, form, beneficiaries even. So, while the courts respect testamentary wishes as to choice of an executor, the statutory rules will override them if they conflict.

And, if testator names one whom the statute says is not competent, letters will be denied; or, if inadvisedly granted, they will be revoked. Matter of Davis, supra.

So, in Matter of Avery, 45 Misc. 529, a foreign trust company, named in a will, was held incompetent to receive letters. See opinion.

§ 466. Powers of executor prior to letters.—The authority of the executor is derived from the will, and not from the letters testamentary, issued by the Surrogate. Hartnett v. Wandell, 60 N. Y. 346, 350. The letters give him his status and ratify the testator's selection. And the Code provides: "No executor named in a will shall, before letters testamentary are granted, have any power to dispose of any part of the estate of the testator except to pay funeral charges, nor to interfere with such estate in any manner further than is necessary for its preservation." 3 R. S. 71, § 16, and Code Civ. Proc. § 2613, in part; Matter of Marcellus, 165 N. Y. 68, 77.

§ 112 of the Decedent Estate Law reads: "EXECUTORS DE SON TORT ABOLISHED: No person shall be liable to an action as executor of his own wrong, for having received, taken or interfered with, the property or effects of a deceased person; but shall be responsible as a wrongdoer in the proper action to the executors or special administrators of such deceased persons, for the value of any property or effects so taken or received, and for all damages caused by his acts, to the estate of the deceased."

The letters are merely the authenticated evidence of the power conferred by the will and are founded upon the probate of that instrument. The Code section just quoted does not affect the character of the office or detract from the efficacy of the will as the source of his power; the executor derives his office from the testamentary appointment as an administrator derives his from the appointment of the Surrogate. Hartnett v. Wandell, 60 N. Y. at p. 350, citing 1 Williams on Executors, 239. Since the interest of the executor in the estate is derived from the will itself, the subsequent issuance of letters relates back to the time of the testator's death. Pearsall v. Elmer, 5 Redf. 181, 186, Calvin, Surr., citing Willard on Executors, 147. See also Humbert v. Wurster, 22 Hun, 405; People v. Commissioners, 31 Hun, 235, 237, citing Matter of Greeley's Will, 15 Abb. N. S. 395; Valentine v. Jackson, 9 Wendell, 302; Williams on Executors, 239; Dayton on Executors, 232; Priest v. Watkins, 2 Hill, 225; Ex parte Faulkner, 7 Hill, 181; Vroom v. Van Horne, 10 Paige, 549, 559. The section above cited does not prohibit such possession of the property under the will as may be necessary for its safety until the probate of the will, but merely inhibits the exercise of any power of disposition over the estate or any interference with the estate. But, if it were necessary, for example, to take actual possession of the personal estate for its protection in any respect, the executors would be justified in doing it as the legal effect of their appointment, in the absence of any proof showing their intention not to act or qualify as executors. People v. Commissioners, supra, opinion of Brady, J., at page 237. See also Van Schaack v. Saunders, 32 Hun, 515, 520. It has, however, been held (Matter of Flandrow, 28 Hun, 279, Daniels, J.), that the statute deprives a person named as executor in a will from so acting as to become the representative of the deceased person. In this case a special administrator had been appointed, pending the issuance of letters testamentary or of administration. In such a case, of course, for the time being, the person named in the will as executor would have no right to interfere in any manner with the estate, for the purpose of the statute is obviated by the appointment of the temporary administrator. It has been held, where the testator was a partner at the time of his decease and the partnership agreement provided for an election by the surviving partner within a given time after the decease of the other partner within which to acquire title by purchase of the interest left by his deceased partner in the firm property, that, in case the will should not have been probated and letters issued within the period limited by the partnership agreement, the executors named in the will of the deceased partner had the power to accept the offer, or to take security for its performance, by virtue of their appointment under the will, and that such an act would be for the preservation of the estate of the decedent, within the meaning of § 2613 of the Code. Hull v. Cartledge, 18 App. Div. 54, 61, 62, Bradley, J., citing People v. Commissioners, 31 Hun, 235; Hartnett v. Wandell, 60 N. Y. 350; Matter of Murray, 40 Misc. 433; People ex rel. Gould v. Barker, 150 N. Y. 52. So the Court of Appeals, in the case last cited, held that, for the purpose of an assessment for taxation on the personal estate of a decedent, such an estate was to be deemed in the possession and control of the person designated in the will as executor from the death of the decedent, and the court remarked, per O'Brien, J.:

"The executor derives his appointment and his title to the estate from the will, though he is without any substantial power of disposition or administration until the probate court grants him authenticated evidence of his title and of his right in the form of letters testamentary upon proof of the will.

"The will is the source of the executor's title and general powers. The letters testamentary, founded upon the probate of the will, do not create the executor nor confer title upon him, but are the authentic evidence of the power conferred by the will and which existed before they were granted. Hartnett v. Wandell, 60 N. Y. 346. The property of the testator is in the legal custody of the executor appointed by the will, before the probate, and he may exercise many of the powers of an owner over it. He cannot dispose of it, but he may take it into his manual possession for safekeeping. Van Schaack v. Saunders, 32 Hun, 515; Smith v. Northampton Bank, 4 Cush. 1.

"In this case, after the death of the testator, no one had in fact or in law any possession or control of the personal estate except the relators. It consisted of certain securities which were deposited in a vault in the city to which they had access. They could exercise every power over the property that is conferred upon executors by the will or by law before probate and no one else could. The probate of the will and letters testamentary removed the prohibition of the statute against disposing of the property or interfering with it except for its preservation, but in all other respects the rights and powers of the relators were the same before as after the probate, though in some respects they may have been held in abeyance by force of the statute. The title, possession and control, which the deceased owner had, passed from him at the moment of his death, under and by virtue of the will, to the executors and beneficiaries. The temporary restrictions upon the power of disposition, imposed by the statute for the protection of the estate had no effect upon the actual possession and custody of the property. They had all the possession and control that was usual under such circumstances and reasonably possible, considering the great magnitude of the estate and the nature and character of the property. The possession and custody which the testator had was continued in the relators by force of his will for every purpose of taxation as well as protection. Any other conclusion would involve the anomaly that seventy millions of property could exist in full view of the commissioners without any power on their part to include it in the assessment rolls." See Matter of Brintnall, 40 Misc. 68; Heaton, Surr., and Matter of Murray, 40 Misc. 433, both cases of attack on executors for acts done pending letters.

§ 467. Executor acting before letters cannot later set aside his act unless inequitable.—Where the act done before the issuing of letters by an executor or administrator is an equitable one, and done in good faith, such executor or administrator cannot, after qualifying, set aside the settlement or transaction on the mere ground of his own lack of power; it must clearly appear that the act was prejudicial to the estate. Consequently, where it was manifest that the settlement or adjustment was not attended by any fraud or deceit, and that it was equitable, and that the creditor obtained no more than was her due from the intestate under the contract had by such creditor with the intestate, the Appellate Division refused to allow the administratrix "to overhaul the settlement which she deliberately made without any fraud." Bennett v. Lyndon, 8 App. Div. 387, 389, Hardin, P. J., citing Vroom v. Van Horne, 10 Paige, 549, 557; Priest v. Watkins, 2 Hill, 225. In Packard v. Dunfee, 119 App. Div. 599, before probate the one nominated as executor ill-advisedly indorsed a note "as executor." Held, he could not bind the estate, citing Schmittler v. Simon, 101 N. Y. 554.

§ 468. Letters testamentary.

> Where a will, which is admitted to probate, names one or more persons to be executor or executors thereof, upon a contingency, the surrogate must inquire into the facts, and, if the contingency has happened, that fact must be recited in the decree. Immediately after a will has been admitted to probate, the person or persons named therein as executors, who are competent by law to serve, and who appear and qualify, are entitled to letters testamentary thereupon; unless, before the letters are granted, a creditor of the decedent, or a person interested in the estate, files an affidavit, specifying his demand, or how he is interested, and either setting forth specifically one or more legal objections to granting the letters to one or more of the executors, or stating that he is advised and believes that there are such objections, and that he intends to file a specific statement of the same. Where such an affidavit is filed, the surrogate must stay the granting of letters, at least thirty days, or until the matter is sooner disposed of. A specification or statement of an objection, made as prescribed in this section, must be verified by the oath of the objector, or his attorney, to the effect that he believes it to be true. § 2636, Code Civil Proc.

The Surrogate, under the qualifications of this section, must issue letters testamentary to the persons named as executors; and, as appears from the wording of the section, if one or more persons are designated in the will or codicil to act upon a certain contingency, the Surrogate must before he issues letters be satisfied that the contingency has or has not happened. Inquiry on this point may be had before the Surrogate or before a referee appointed for the purpose. The fact of the happening of the contingency will appear in the decree which fixes by express designation the persons who are entitled to letters. If it appear that the contingency named has happened, the Surrogate must issue letters to such person. The contingency that is quite frequently provided for in wills is to designate an executor to act in case of the death of the person first named as executor. Where a testator appoints an executor and so provides that, in case of his death, another should be substituted, if it appear to have been the testator's intention that the substitution should take place on the death of the original executor whether happening in the testator's lifetime or afterwards, the executor so substituted may be admitted to the office even though the original executor has proved the will and qualified. Dayton on Surrogates (3d ed.), p. 209; Matter of Cornell, 17 Misc. 468; Matter of Alexander, 16 Abb. Pr. N. S. 9; Hartnett v. Wandell, 60 N. Y. 346.

§ 469. Effect of appeal from probate decree.—Where appeal is taken from a decree admitting a will to probate or granting letters testamentary, the appeal does not stay the issuance of letters if, in the opinion of the Surrogate, manifested by an order, the preservation of the estate requires that the letters should issue. See § 2582, quoted and discussed, ante, ch. 5, "Appeals"; Matter of Gihon, 48 App. Div. 598, and post, under temporary administration. We merely requote the language (discussed under "Appeals"):

> Letters, so issued, confer upon the person named therein all the powers and authority, and subject him to all the duties and liabilities of an executor . . . . in an ordinary case, except that they do not confer power to sell real property by virtue of a provision in the will, or to pay or to satisfy a legacy, or distribute the unbequeathed property of the decedent, until after the final determination of the appeal. § 2582, Code Civil Proc., in part.

If letters actually issued before the appeal was taken the Surrogate may, by order, give the executor similar limited control, pending the appeal.

§ 470. Who entitled to letters.—Section 2636 provides that the person or persons named in a will, which has been admitted to probate, as executors are entitled to letters testamentary, provided, first, that they be competent by law to serve; and second, that they appear and qualify. Any person is qualified to serve as executor who is not disqualified by the provisions of § 2612, which provides:

> No person is competent to serve as an executor who, at the time the will is proved, is:
> 1. Incapable in law of making a contract.
> 2. Under the age of twenty-one years.
> 3. An alien not an inhabitant of this state; or > 4. Who shall have been convicted of an infamous crime; or > 5. Who, on proof, is found by the surrogate to be incompetent to execute the duties of such trust by reason of drunkenness, dishonesty, improvidence or want of understanding. If any such person be named as the sole executor in a will, or if all the persons named therein as executors be incompetent, letters of administration with the will annexed must be issued as in the case of all of the executors renouncing. A surrogate, in his discretion, may refuse to grant letters testamentary or of administration to a person unable to read and write the English language. § 2612, Code Civil Proc.

Under this section there have been few cases where a Surrogate has exercised his discretion in excluding a person named as executor or applying for letters for illiteracy; and it is a difficult question to determine just how far an inability to read or write would necessarily disqualify from performing the duties of executor or administrator, and consequently the discretion of the Surrogate is largely invoked by such an application, particularly where the person applying for letters of administration is entitled under the statute; for the statute makes it the duty of the Surrogate to issue letters to persons in the order named therein if they are by law competent to serve. The general rule seems to be that every person is competent unless declared to be incompetent by statute, and that no new cause of disqualification may be added to those prescribed by statute. Where the widow of an intestate decedent applied for letters of administration, and the Surrogate found that she was unable to read or write the English language, that "her illiteracy was further burdened by a density hard to comprehend," and that she was unable even to count money, it was held that such a person was deficient in capacity to manage, or ability to perform the duties that would be incumbent upon her, and that it was a proper case for her exclusion by the Surrogate. Matter of Haley, 21 Misc. 777, 779, Marcus, Surr.

§ 471. Same subject.—It seems hardly necessary to add that the one applying must identify himself with the one designated in the will. Yet such a case arose in Westchester County. Matter of Stikeman, 48 Misc. 156. Testator named as his executor a banking corporation. Later this corporation was merged in a "title guarantee and trust" company and went out of business. Held, this new company was not the one in testator's mind and could not receive letters. See § 473, below.

§ 472. Same subject.—So the appointment of a minor, or a person incapable in law of making a contract, is void. Knox v. Nobel, 77 Hun, 230. So where objection is made to the appointment of an executor or administrator on the ground of the existence of a disqualification specified in §§ 2612 or 2661, as the case may be, the courts in construing the statute have determined that not every degree and grade of vice or defects mentioned will disqualify. See below.

In Matter of Avery, 45 Misc. 529, letters were inadvisedly issued to a foreign trust company, and revoked on discovery of the fact.

In Emerson v. Bowers, 14 N. Y. 449, the Court of Appeals says: "All departures in conduct from the principles of rectitude, including all abuses of trust, are unwise and inexpedient, and, therefore, in a certain sense improvident, but they do not constitute the kind of improvidence which the legislature had in view in these enactments; a very careful, shrewd and moneymaking person may be guilty of negligence or abuse in a fiduciary capacity, but such a person is not improvident in the sense of the statute; the words with which the term is associated, 'drunkenness,' 'want of understanding,' are of some importance in arriving at its true construction; the term evidently refers to habits of mind and conduct which become a part of the man and render him generally and under all ordinary circumstances unfit for the trust or employment in question."

In case of Coope v. Lowerre, 1 Barb. Ch. 45, it appeared that the applicant had shortly before applied for a discharge under the Insolvent Act; that he was grossly negligent in the management of his property and affairs, and in contracting debts, and in indorsing for parties without responsibility; that he had had a verdict against him in an action for seduction, and other serious imputations were made against his moral character; but the chancellor, upon appeal from the decision of the Surrogate appointing the applicant, held that no degree of moral guilt or delinquency would be sufficient to exclude him, unless he had been actually convicted of crime. This case is cited and approved in Emerson v. Bowers. In Matter of Raynor, 48 Misc. 325, Belford, Surr., held that the pardon of one, convicted of an infamous crime, removed the disability. He cites Matter of Deming, 10 Johns. 232: "The effect of the pardon was to acquit the offender of all the penalties annexed to the conviction, and to give him a new credit and capacity." See other cases in opinion. It has been held that vicious conduct, improper and dishonest acquisitions of property, and even loose habits of business, did not constitute "improvidence" within the meaning of the statute; nor the fact that the petitioner was indebted to the estate. Coggeshall v. Green, 9 Hun, 471. Improvidence and lack of understanding, in order to disqualify, must amount to a lack of intelligence. Shilton's Estate, 1 Tucker, 73. Habits of intemperance do not disqualify unless they amount to habitual drunkenness in the legal sense of the term. Elmer v. Kechele, 1 Redf. 472; Matter of Manley, 12 Misc. 472, 474, Davie, Surr.

§ 473. The word "executor" not essential.—To entitle a person to qualify as executor he need not be so described in the will. It is not necessary that the appointment should name a person in so many words as executor of the will, but any provision in the will showing that the testator intended that the duties of executor should be discharged by the person named is sufficient to constitute such person an executor according to the tenor thereof, and to entitle him to letters testamentary thereon. Matter of Blancan, 4 Redf. 151, Calvin, Surr. In this case the will was substantially as follows: "Wishing to give to my husband a proof of my sincere affection I constitute him my general and universal legatee, and I dispense with his giving security for the possession of my property in which he shall have only a life interest." It appeared that the will was executed in France and that by the use of the words, "general and universal legatee," the law of France devolved upon such a legatee both the rights and duties of an executor, and the Surrogate held that it was manifest from the wording of the will that the testatrix intended her husband to perform the duties of executor because she dispensed with his giving security for the estate, showing conclusively that she contemplated and intended that he should have the possession, control and management thereof. So in another case (Ex parte McDonnell, 2 Bradf. 32) Judge Bradford held where the brother of a testator was directed by the will to convert the property into cash, to invest the proceeds and transmit the interest to the testator's father, that this was a sufficient designation of the brother as executor and that the use of the word "executor" was not essential to the appointment and that letters testamentary should issue. See also Ex parte McCormick, 2 Bradf. 170. It is not necessary that the testator should designate his executor or executors by particular names so long as his designation is sufficiently definite to be capable of being made certain. Thus, in Matter of Hardy, 2 Dem. 91, the Surrogate of Kings County upheld a designation appointing "The trustees for the time being of Magnolia Lodge No. 166, Independent Order of Odd Fellows to be executors of this my last will and testament." All that is necessary in such case is that the Surrogate be able to ascertain who are the persons corresponding to the designation. In the case cited, the practice indicated was that the persons constituting the trustees for the time being of the society named, should make written application for letters upon which the Surrogate could take proof in the premises, and having ascertained that they were the persons claimed, letters were issued accordingly. Surrogate Rollins expressed a doubt (Stolzel v. Cruikshank, 4 Dem. 352) as to the effect of the designation of a sole executor in a codicil to a will which in turn named an independent sole executor. The will having been proved, the Surrogate declined to withhold the issuance of letters testamentary to the executor named in the will on the ground that the codicil might never be proved, but intimated a doubt as to whether in case of its probate and the issuance of letters to the person named in such codicil the functions of the executor already qualified would cease or whether both executors would act jointly. See cases cited in opinion.

§ 474. Oath of executor.—By the word "qualify" used in § 2636 ("executors who appear and qualify") is meant the taking of the official oath required by law. This oath must be filed with the Surrogate before letters are issued. The character of the oath is prescribed by the Code.

> The official oath or affirmation of an executor, administrator, or guardian, to the effect that he will well, faithfully and honestly discharge the duties of his office, describing it, must be filed with the surrogate before letters are issued to him. The oath may be taken before any officer, within or without the state, who is authorized to take an affidavit, to be used in the supreme court. Where it is taken without the state, it must be certified as required by law, with respect to an affidavit to be used in the supreme court. § 2594, Code Civil Proc.

There is a time specified, see § 488 below, within which executors must qualify just as there is, for example, in the case of testamentary guardians, who are directed to qualify within thirty days, unless for good cause their time be extended to 3 months by the Surrogate. In the case of such an officer, he must qualify within the time limited or extended or he will be deemed to have renounced the appointment under § 2852. And accordingly it was held by Ransom, Surr., that where the appointment of a testamentary guardian was conditioned to take effect upon the happening of a certain contingency, such as the attaining by a person named of his majority, the 30 days or 3 months would begin to run from the date of the happening of the contingency. Matter of Constantine, 5 N. Y. Supp. 554. It is important that executors should qualify as promptly as possible. And it may be said to be their duty, in cases of contests which appear to promise a long deferring of the issuing of letters testamentary, to secure the appointment of a temporary administrator. This rule is suggested for the reason that contracts may be extant made by the deceased under which his representative may be required to do some particular act within a time therein specified. This is particularly true in regard to policies of insurance under which a loss may occur at any time. For the courts have most strictly upheld the rights of the insurer to hold the assured to the terms of the contract of insurance in respect of the time within which proofs of loss must be submitted. And the court will not write into the contract of insurance where the time is limited from the occurrence of the fire such words as, "within sixty days," or whatever the time may be, "after letters testamentary are issued." There is no question, however, that an executor would have the power (and his exercise thereof would be upheld by the courts) if he presumed to act although letters have not been issued, in furnishing necessary proofs of loss under a policy of fire insurance. The rule in such a case would seem to be as follows:

First. To make an application for letters of temporary administration.

Second. If they are granted, promptly to file proofs of loss in his capacity as temporary administrator.

Third. If his application is denied, he should assume the responsibility of furnishing proofs under his qualified power under § 2613 to preserve and protect the estate and the interest of creditors, legatees and all others whom by the will he is designated to represent. See Matthews v. American Central Insurance Co., 9 App. Div. 339, opinion of Green, J., at page 344.

§ 475. Renunciation.—A person named in a will as executor may be perfectly competent to serve but cannot be compelled to serve. Provision is made by the Code in this connection as follows:

> A person, named as executor in a will, may renounce the appointment by an instrument in writing, signed by him, and acknowledged or proved, and certified, in like manner as a deed to be recorded in the county, or attested by one or more witnesses, and proved to the satisfaction of the surrogate. Such a renunciation may be retracted by a like instrument, at any time before letters testamentary, or letters of administration with the will annexed, have been issued to any other person in his place: or, after they have been so issued, if they have been revoked, or the person to whom they were issued has died, or become a lunatic, and there is no other acting executor or administrator. Where a retraction is so made, letters testamentary may, in the discretion of the surrogate, be issued to the person making it. An instrument specified in this section must be filed and recorded in the surrogate's office. § 2639, Code Civil Proc.

This section is clear. But it has been held that an oral renunciation made in open court, and in person, by the executor is valid, and cannot be orally recalled. Matter of Baldwin, 27 App. Div. 506, 509. If he changes his mind he must petition the Surrogate for leave to retract. Ibid. The Surrogate is permitted to exercise his discretion in issuing letters to an executor who has renounced but revoked his renunciation. The rule is a sound and just one and enables the Surrogate to consider in determining whether a person so renouncing and retracting his renunciation is a fit person to administer the estate regardless of the disqualifications imposed by § 2612. So where a widow of testator was 70 years of age, had twice been stricken with paralysis, was bedridden, and obliged to expend large sums of money for medical care and physicians' attendance, the Surrogate held that it would be an improper exercise of his discretion to place her as executrix in charge of a large estate involving railroad, banking, and real estate interests, after she had once renounced. Matter of Cornell, 17 Misc. 468, 471, Betts, Surr.

§ 476. Renunciation not a resignation.—The renunciation contemplated by § 2639 is a renunciation of the appointment and not of the office. That is to say, one named in a will as executor may file a formal document of renunciation waiving the right to administer the estate and decline to receive letters testamentary.

§ 477. Resignation contrasted with renunciation.—But once letters have been issued and an executor has qualified, the only way in which he can be relieved of the duties of the office is by a resignation which must be acted upon by the Surrogate. The word resignation is here used in the sense of an application by an executor for a revocation of his letters under § 2689 hereinbelow discussed, for it has been held that an executor or administrator has no power to resign. Matter of Curtiss, 9 App. Div. 285, 295, aff'g 15 Misc. 545, upon opinions of Silkman, Surr. So in the case of Tilden v. Fiske, 4 Dem. 357, Judge Rollins held that, where a will provided for the filling of vacancies that might be caused by death, neglect to qualify, disqualification, resignation or removal, that the resignation contemplated was practically the qualified right which any executor has to the revocation of his letters upon compliance with the statute under §§ 2689 and 2690, Code Civ. Proc. There is no other way in which an executor can be relieved of the duties of his office. It is manifest that this is the meaning of the Code because of the provision that the renunciation allowed by § 2639 might be retracted any time before letters testamentary or letters of administration with the will annexed shall have been issued to any other person in his place, or where after they have been so issued they have been revoked, or the incumbent has died and there is no other acting executor or administrator. Surrogate Rollins declared, in the Matter of Suarez, 3 Dem. 164, 167, that in no reported case had the right to retract a renunciation been recognized by the courts save where the retractor had renounced absolutely, that is, had rejected his title of executor and refused to take and receive letters, citing Judson v. Gibbons, 5 Wend. 224; Robertson v. McGeoch, 11 Paige, 640. Therefore one who has become invested with the office of executor cannot renounce the appointment. Matter of Suarez, supra. Moreover, one who has resigned and been discharged cannot retract his resignation. Matter of Beakes, 5 Dem. 128. It appears, therefore, that the renunciation must be made before the issuance of letters; resignation may only be made after qualifying. Resignation may not be retracted, renunciation may be retracted in one of the cases provided for in § 2639, Code Civ. Proc. (Note that a retraction of renunciation must be executed with the same formality as the renunciation itself.) So where there were two executors named in a will and before letters were issued one renounced and the other qualified, and the latter was subsequently removed for cause, it was properly held that the former executor could retract his renunciation and ask for letters. Codding v. Newman, 63 N. Y. 639. But leave of the court must be obtained to retract a renunciation. Matter of Treadwell, 37 Misc. 584; Matter of Haug, 29 Misc. 36; Matter of Clute, 37 Misc. 710. The Surrogate has discretion to grant or withhold his permission. Matter of Cornell, 75 N. Y. St. Rep. 664; Matter of Baldwin, 27 App. Div. 506; Matter of Sanford, 100 App. Div. 479. The renunciation is thus a mere waiver, subject to a legal right of retraction at any time prior to rights having vested on the faith of it. Casey v. Gardiner, 4 Bradf. 13; Matter of Wilson, 92 Hun, 318, 322. When one renounces and then asks leave to retract, the Surrogate in his discretion may take all the circumstances into consideration, and is not limited, in refusing his consent, to the existence of statutory reasons for refusing letters. Thus, where A renounced, and coincidently assigned all his interest in the estate to B, it was held the Surrogate might decline to grant him leave to retract and take letters. Matter of Clute, 37 Misc. 710. On the other hand, revocation of letters completely terminates the functions of the executor. In such case he cannot be rehabilitated. The decree of revocation must be regarded as conclusive and final, unless obtained fraudulently or on some other ground which would warrant the court in setting aside or vacating it. Thus, where there were two executors named in a will and one alone qualified and was subsequently adjudged to be a lunatic, whereupon the Surrogate made a decree revoking his letters, after which the second executor applied for letters which were accordingly issued to him, held, that although it subsequently appeared that the former executor had regained his sanity and had been judicially declared sane, there was no power in the Surrogate to reappoint this executor, and that even in case the executor then acting should for any reason cease to act, the only proper practice would be to have an administration with the will annexed. Matter of Dearing, 4 Dem. 81. The rule being that where letters have once been revoked the appointment of the executor ceases to exist just as completely as if he had never been named by the testator. So, if one of several refuses to act, the will should be read as if only those qualifying were named in it. In Draper v. Montgomery, 108 App. Div. 63, the will named three executors and trustees and the power of sale was to them "and to any two of them." Two renounced and refused to act. A deed by the only one who qualified was rejected as insufficient to give title. On an agreed statement the court held the deed good under § 2642 of the Code, which provides, in case of neglect of executors or trustees to qualify, that "all sales, mortgages and leases, under said powers, made by the executors who shall qualify, shall be equally valid, as if the other executor or trustees had joined in such sale." Smith, Surr., says of the will, "there is no clearly indicated intention to make inapplicable the provisions of § 2642.

§ 478. Executor need not be named in the will.—A will need not necessarily designate an executor by name; it may authorize someone designated in the will to select an executor, in which case the procedure to be followed is distinctly regulated by the Code.

> Where the will contains a valid power, authorizing the selection, as executor thereof, of a person not named therein, the selection must be made, by the person appointed for that purpose, within thirty days after making the decree admitting the will to probate; in default whereof, the power of selection is deemed to have been renounced. Such selection must be made by an instrument in writing, designating the person selected, signed by the proper person, and acknowledged or proved, and certified, in like manner as a deed to be recorded in the county, or proved to the satisfaction of the surrogate, and filed in the surrogate's office. Where the will authorizes the person, so to be selected, to act with the executor or executors named therein, the issuing of letters must be delayed until the expiration of the period, fixed in this section for the exercise of the power of selection, and, if the selection is so made, for five days thereafter. § 2640, Code Civil Proc.

The dictum of the Court of Appeals in Hartnett v. Wandell, 60 N. Y. 346, at page 356, that, where a testator constituted his wife executrix and requested, "that such male friend as she may desire shall be appointed with her as executor," she could take no measures for the designation and commissioning of a coexecutor until she had qualified as executrix, must be deemed to be superseded by the language of § 2640, which regardless of the persons by whom the designation must be made prohibits the issuing of letters until the expiration of thirty days within which the selection is required to be made. The opinion of Judge Grover at page 357 (in which Judge Folger joined), pointed out the danger in such cases before the Code, that the selecting of an executor under a power after the will had been probated and other executors had qualified, took away from those who otherwise might have a right to object to the qualifications of the persons so selected; this is completely met by the following provision:

> Within five days after a selection is made, as prescribed in the last section, any person may file an affidavit, verified as prescribed in section 2636 of this act, showing that he is a creditor of the decedent, or a person interested in the estate, and setting forth specifically one or more legal objections to granting letters to the person selected. The proceedings to be taken thereupon are the same as prescribed in sections 2637 and 2638 of this act. If letters are not issued to the person so selected, the power of selection is deemed to be exhausted. § 2641, Code Civil Proc.

§ 479. Objections.—It has already been noted in § 2636 that a creditor of the decedent or a person interested in the estate may before letters testamentary are granted file an affidavit specifying his demands or how he is interested in the estate, and either setting forth specifically one or more legal objections to granting letters to one or more of the executors, or stating that he is advised and believes that there are such objections and that he intends to file a specific statement of the same. It will have been noted that the provisions of § 2641 as to objections which may be filed to a person designated under a power are identical with these and they may be considered together.

In the first place, any party interested may file such objections. Ferris's Estate, 1 Tucker, 15. But whether he be a creditor or a party interested, he must satisfy the Surrogate as to the particulars of his claim or the nature of his interest as the Surrogate is entitled to determine the question of interest in advance of passing on the objections. Burwell v. Shaw, 2 Bradf. 322. The objections must be specific, must state some legal reason why letters should not issue, such as that the person named in the will or designated under the power is a minor, or non compos mentis, or an alien, or a nonresident, or has been convicted of an infamous crime, or is an habitual drunkard, or so dishonest, ignorant or improvident as to be incapable of executing the trust, or that his circumstances are such that they do not afford adequate security for the creditors or persons interested in the estate for the due administration of the estate. The affidavit whether containing the objections or a statement that the objector is advised and believes that there are such objections, must be verified by the oath of the objector or his attorney to the effect that he believes it to be true. § 2636, Code Civ. Proc. The effect of the filing of this affidavit is to stay the granting of letters for at least 30 days or until the proceedings initiated by the affidavit are disposed of.

§ 480. Same subject—Surrogate's action.

The surrogate must inquire into an objection, filed as prescribed in the last section; and, for that purpose, he may receive proof, by affidavit or otherwise, in his discretion. If it appears that there is a legal and sufficient objection to any person, named as executor in the will, letters shall not be issued to him, except as prescribed in the next section. § 2637, Code Civil Proc.

The proceedings are addressed to the Surrogate's discretion. The proof must clearly point to some incompetency fixed by statute or to some personal qualities of the executor named such as to satisfy the Surrogate that it would be unsafe to put the estate in his hands. See Matter of Bennett, 60 Misc. 28, where Surrogate Ketchum overruled the objection that if letters issued to A and B they might have parental bias that would affect their executorial conduct. Executors are not "to be set aside merely in order that they may not be led into temptation." The theory upon which the Surrogate proceeds was outlined by Chancellor Walworth long before the Code (see Mandeville v. Mandeville, 8 Paige, 476), where, in construing a similar provision of the Revised Statutes (2 R. S. 72, § 18), he said: "It certainly could not have been the intention of the legislature, to prohibit the granting of letters testamentary to any executor except such as are possessed of property of their own, to the full value of the estate which the testator has authorized and appointed them to administer; or that an executor should be superseded in his trust, or required to find security, whenever his property was reduced below that of the decedent. Such a construction of the statute would render it almost impossible for a man of a large property to select an executor who would be both able and willing to assume the execution of the trust. The obvious meaning of the statute is, that an executor may be required to give security, whenever the Surrogate is satisfied that his circumstances are such as to render it doubtful whether the property will be safe in his hands, to be disposed of, or administered, as directed by the will."

The statute in question construed by the chancellor was one authorizing the Surrogate to require an executor to give security, "where his circumstances have become so precarious as not to afford adequate security for the due administration of the estate." For this statute the present provision of the Code has been substituted and it has been held (Martin v. Duke, 5 Redf. 597, 600, approved in 36 Hun, 122, 127, Rollins, Surr.), to have been designed to give the Surrogate power to refuse letters whenever under all the circumstances of the case he should be of the opinion that such a course was proper for the protection of the rights and interest of the beneficiaries under the will. Thrift, integrity, good repute, business capacity and stability of character, for example, are circumstances which may be very properly considered in determining the question of adequate security.

§ 481. Same.—Where the objections alleged are those specified in § 2612, the Surrogate has no discretion but must refuse to issue letters. And where, having all the facts before him, he finds a person to be incompetent under subd. 5 of § 2612, as, for example, by reason of drunkenness, his finding will usually not be disturbed. Matter of Cady, 36 Hun, 122, 125, where Hardin, P. J., observes that it was the intention of the legislature to provide in § 2637 a somewhat speedy and summary determination of the questions raised by objections made to the competency of a person to serve as executor, and the learned justice cited with approval certain language of Judge Denio (McGregor v. Buel, 24 N. Y. 169), "The propriety of issuing or withholding such letters," i. e., in this case special letters of administration, "is plainly dependent upon the exigencies of the estate, the amount and situation of the estate, and other circumstances which require to be judged of summarily and are not suitable to be litigated through the courts upon appeal. The determination of the Surrogate upon such questions is as it should be summary and exclusive." The improvidence contemplated by subd. 5 of § 2612, is that want of care or foresight in the management of property which would be likely to render the estate and effects of the decedent unsafe and liable to be lost or diminished in value by improvidence in case administration thereof should be committed to such improvident person. Matter of Cady, supra. A man who is careless and improvident or who is wanting in ordinary care and forecast in the acquisition and preservation of property for himself cannot with safety be entrusted with the management and preservation of the property of others. Coope v. Lowerre, 1 Barb. Ch. 45. So it has been held that the fact that the man was a professional gambler is presumptive evidence of such improvidence as to render him incompetent to discharge the duties of executor or administrator (McMahon v. Harrison, 6 N. Y. 443), and the Court of Appeals (Emerson v. Bowers, 14 N. Y. 449), in defining improvidence says: "The term evidently refers to habits of mind and conduct which become a part of the man and render him generally and under all circumstances unfit for the trust or employment in question." See also Freeman v. Kellogg, 4 Redf. 224; Matter of Cady, 36 Hun, 122. See also Matter of the Administration of the Goods of Daniel C. Shilton, 1 Tucker, 73.

§ 482. Same; where executor is also trustee.—It is often the fact that the person to whom objections are filed as executor is constituted by the will testamentary trustee as well; in such case the Surrogate has jurisdiction to remove the person so objected to in both capacities at the same time by virtue of § 2817 of the Code which authorizes the Surrogate to remove a testamentary trustee where, "If he were named in a will as executor letters testamentary would not be issued to him by reason of his personal disqualification or incompetency." See Matter of Cady, 36 Hun, 122, 128, citing Savage v. Gould, 60 How. 254, and cases cited, and opinion of Boardman, J.

§ 483. Obviating objection by security.—There are two objections which although substantiated to the satisfaction of the Surrogate may nevertheless be obviated by the filing of security; they are covered by § 2638.

> In either of the following cases, a person named as executor in a will, may entitle himself to letters testamentary thereupon, by giving a bond as prescribed by law, although an objection against him has been established to the satisfaction of the surrogate:
>
> 1. Where the objection is, that his circumstances are such, that they do not afford adequate security to the creditors, or persons interested in the estate, for the due administration of the estate.
>
> 2. Where the objection is that he is not a resident of the state; and he is a citizen of the United States.
> But a person against whom there is no objection, except that of non-residence, is entitled to letters testamentary, without giving a bond, if he has an office within the state, for the regular transaction of business in person; and the will contains an express provision, to the effect that he may act without giving security. § 2638, Code Civil Proc.

This section is not to be confused with § 2685, subd. 5, which has been referred to above, which provides for the revocation of letters where it is made to appear to the Surrogate that the executor's "circumstances are such that they do not afford adequate security to the creditors or persons interested for the due administration of the estate." Where it appears in such a case that the executor has already given a bond under § 2638, the Surrogate may, if he chooses, decline to entertain the application

(Code Civ. Proc. § 2686, q. v.); but, if no such bond has been given, he may allow the letters to remain unrevoked upon the filing by the executor of a proper bond within a reasonable time not exceeding five days. Section 2687, Code Civ. Proc. See Matter of O'Brien, 19 N. Y. Supp. 541.

§ 484. Effect of testator's dispensing with security.—Of course, where a testator has chosen his executor and has expressly provided that he shall serve without bond, the court will not be likely to disregard his wishes, but will rather indulge in the presumption that the testator had just grounds for his confidence in the integrity of the executor; but if there is palpable proof showing that the testator has made an injudicious and unsafe selection, the court has full power to interfere. Ballard v. Charlesworth, 1 Dem. 501. Still, if nonresidence is the only objection, then § 2638 controls and "if he has an office within the state, for the regular transaction of business in person" and "the will contains an express provision" dispensing with security the executor named "is entitled to letters."

§ 485. What is adequate security?—The words "adequate security" used in § 2638 are in a context more favorable to the executor than the language of the former statute, which reads, "that his circumstances are so precarious" instead of as at present, "his circumstances are such." Hovey v. McLean, 1 Dem. 396, 398, citing Shields v. Shields, 60 Barb. 56. And the words "adequate security" do not refer primarily to pecuniary responsibility but to the executor's "habits of husbandry whether provident or improvident, whether reckless or careful." Mandeville v. Mandeville, 8 Paige, 475; Shields v. Shields, supra; Ballard v. Charlesworth, 1 Dem. 501. So security will not be required merely because the executor does not own property to the full value of the estate. Mandeville v. Mandeville, supra. Nor on the other hand "because he has an ill-regulated temper or lacks self-control" or has eccentricities of character. McGregor v. McGregor, 1 Keyes, 133. But if a person is not only insolvent but pressed by his creditors, is known to be dishonest, or to have resorted to the trust funds to relieve his personal obligations although under the guise of loans, or even where he is shown to be too intemperate and too infirm to attend to the duties of the estate, or is a nonresident, a Surrogate may properly reject him. Matter of Cady, 36 Hun, 122; Goodenough v. DeGroot, 3 Law Bulletin, 35; Estate of Petrie, 5 Dem. 352; Matter of Smith, 16 Weekly Dig. 472. Mere poverty, it is manifest, is no reason for requiring a bond. Ballard v. Charlesworth, supra.

§ 486. Details of the bond.—The form of the bond, should one be required, is similar to that which would be required of an administrator. See ch. X. It must run in the name of the people (Haight v. Brisbin, 7 Civ. Pro. Report, 152; People v. Struller, 16 Hun, 234), must be a joint and several bond of the executor and two or more sureties, or a surety company, approved by the Surrogate, in a penalty fixed by the Surrogate not less than twice the value of the personal property of which the decedent died possessed and of the probable amount to be recovered by reason of any right of action granted to the executor by special provision of law. Where there is no personal estate and the executor is ordered to give security, the amount of the penalty of the bond is discretionary with the Surrogate, and may be merely nominal. Matter of Hart, 2 Redf. 156, 158, Coffin, Surr. In fixing the penalty of the bond of the executor, however, a Surrogate must take into consideration the value of the real property or of the proceeds thereof which may come into the hands of the executor by virtue of any provision contained in the will. Section 2645, Code Civ. Proc. But, in such case, the Surrogate may, considering the fact that he can, as frequently as the exigency of the case may require, compel the executor to account, fix his penalty in view of the amount to be received within a reasonable time and not necessarily during the whole period of his administration. Thus, in a case (Matter of Hart, 2 Redf. 156) where the yearly income from the realty was about $30,000, Surrogate Coffin required a bond of $50,000. The bond must be conditioned that the executor will faithfully discharge the trust reposed in him as such and obey all lawful decrees and orders of the Surrogate's Court touching the administration of the estate committed to him. See ch. X. See § 2664, Code Civ. Proc.; Holmes v. Cock, 2 Barb. Ch. 426.

§ 487. Excepting to the sureties.—When the bond has been filed, the usual practice obtains, in the absence of special rules, with regard to excepting to the sufficiency of the sureties. In New York County there is a special rule—Rule 17—which is as follows:

"Wherever a bond with sureties shall be executed by an executor, administrator, guardian or other trustee, any person interested in the estate or in behalf of such guardian, may apply to the Surrogate for an order requiring the sureties in said bond to appear before him, or his chief clerk, and submit to an examination under oath as to their sufficiency as such sureties. If it shall appear to the satisfaction of the Surrogate that such examination is necessary, he will make an order, prescribing the time and place where such examination shall take place, a copy of which order shall be served upon such executor, administrator, guardian or trustee at least five days before the time fixed for such examination. If on such examination the Surrogate shall be satisfied of the sufficiency of such surety he will endorse his approval upon the bond or a copy thereof; and in case such surety on such examination shall not, in the opinion of the Surrogate, be sufficient, the Surrogate will make an order requiring the substitution of new sureties, within five days after the service of a copy of said order upon the executor, administrator, guardian or other trustee, or his attorney if he shall have appeared by attorney on such examination."

§ 488. Failure of executor to qualify or renounce.—The bond required must be filed within 5 days after the objection has been established to the satisfaction of the Surrogate. This necessarily must be manifested by an order whereupon the executor may entitle himself to letters testamentary by giving a proper bond as prescribed by law; his failure to do so operates just as his failure to qualify after the probate of the will or after his selection under a testamentary power. It operates as an implied renunciation. The Code covers three cases when an executor fails to renounce or qualify, and fixes the time within which he must qualify.

> If a person, named as executor in a will, does not qualify or renounce within thirty days after probate thereof; or if a person, chosen by virtue of a power in the will, does not qualify or renounce within thirty days after the filing of the instrument designating him; or, in either case, if objections are filed, and the executor does not qualify or renounce, within five days after they are determined, in his favor, or, in a case specified in section 2638 of this act, within five days after an objection has been established; the surrogate must, upon the application of any other executor, or any creditor, or person interested in the estate, make an order requiring him to qualify within a time therein specified; and directing that, in default of so doing, he be deemed to have renounced his appointment. Where it appears, by affidavit or other written proof to the satisfaction of the surrogate, that such an order cannot, with due diligence, be served personally within the state upon the person therein named, the surrogate may prescribe the manner in which it must be served, which may be by publication. If the person, so appointed executor, does not qualify within the time fixed, or within such further time as the surrogate allows for that purpose, an order must be made and recorded, reciting the facts, and declaring that he has renounced his appointment as executor. Such an order may be revoked by the surrogate in his discretion, and letters testamentary may be issued to the person so failing to renounce or qualify, upon his application, in a case where he might have retracted an express renunciation, as prescribed in section 2639 of this act. And where any powers to sell, mortgage or lease real estate, or any interest therein, are given to executors as such, or as trustees, or as executors and trustees and any of such persons named as executors shall neglect to qualify, then all sales, mortgages and leases under said powers made by the executors who shall qualify, shall be equally valid as if the other executors or trustees had joined in such sale. § 2642, Code Civil Proc.
> See Draper v. Montgomery, 108 App. Div. 63, discussed in § 477, ante, as to final clause of § 2642.

§ 489. Qualifying.—Section 2645 provides for the next step prior to the issuing of letters in case a bond has been required of the executor and is as follows:

> An executor from whom a bond is required, as prescribed in this article, or an administrator with the will annexed, must, before letters are issued to him, qualify as prescribed by law, with respect to an administrator upon the estate of an intestate; and the provisions of article fourth of this title, with respect to the bond to be given by the administrator of an intestate, apply to a bond given pursuant to this section; except that, in fixing the penalty thereof, the surrogate must take into consideration the value of the real property, or of the proceeds thereof, which may come to the hands of the executor or administrator, by virtue of any provision contained in the will. § 2645, Code Civil Proc.

For fuller discussion of bonds, see ch. X, post.

§ 490. Requisites of letters.

> Letters testamentary, letters of administration, and letters of guardianship must be in the name of the people of the state. Where they are granted by a surrogate, or by an officer or person appointed by the board of supervisors, temporarily acting as surrogate, they must be tested in the name of the officer granting them, signed by him, or by the clerk of the surrogate's court, and sealed with the seal of the surrogate's court. Where they are issued out of another court, they must be tested in the name of the judge holding the court, signed by the clerk thereof, and sealed with its seal. § 2590, Code Civil Proc.

As has already been observed letters are the authenticated evidence of the executor's title; a failure therefore to comply with the formalities required by statute may vitiate them. Hence where a Surrogate's clerk, without the knowledge of the Surrogate, using a blank to which the Surrogate's name had been signed, issued letters upon the estate of a person who it afterward appeared was not even dead, and the Surrogate not only had no jurisdiction but no knowledge of the proceedings, it was held by the Court of Appeals (Roderigas v. East Riv. Sav. Inst., 76 N. Y. 316, 324, Church, Ch. J.), that the letters were void, and that the person to whom they were issued was not even a de facto administratrix. On the other hand, it has been held that, while it is essential that letters must be sealed with the seal of the Surrogate's Court, yet there is no time fixed at which the seal is necessarily to be affixed. Prima facie, of course, the intent of the statute is that the instrument, in order to serve the person to whom it is issued as authority for his subsequent acts, should be in due legal form when issued. But in view of the fact that letters are rarely produced except for the purpose of their evidential value to prove the authority of the person to whom they were issued, the courts have held, if, at the time they are offered in evidence, the seal is affixed, the statute is sufficiently complied with. It was so held in a case where, a trial being in progress in which an administrator was plaintiff, his letters were offered in evidence and were objected to on the ground that they were not sealed; they were thereupon presented to the Surrogate who affixed his seal and then offered anew in evidence. The letters were received by the trial judge, and, on appeal, his act was affirmed by the General Term. Maloney v. Woodin, 11 Hun, 202.

The form of letters testamentary is substantially the same in all Surrogates' offices. They are never prepared by counsel unless where "limited" and the nature and extent of the limitation requires his attention.

§ 491. Letters testamentary, how far conclusive evidence.—This is regulated by the Code as follows:

> Subject to the provisions of the next section, regulating the priority among different letters, letters testamentary, letters of administration, and letters of guardianship, granted by a court or office, having jurisdiction to grant them, as prescribed in this chapter, are conclusive evidence of the authority of the persons to whom they are granted, until the decree granting them is reversed upon appeal, or the letters are revoked, as prescribed in this chapter. § 2591, Code Civil Proc.

This section is a re-enactment of the former provisions of the Revised Statutes (2 R. S. 80, § 56), that letters testamentary or of administration or guardianship when granted by a court or officer having jurisdiction, cannot be collaterally attacked in another court. Power v. Burmester, 34 N. Y. St. Rep. 716; Lowman v. Elmira, C. & N. R. R. Co., 85 Hun, 188; More v. Finch, 65 Hun, 404; Roderigas v. East Riv. Sav. Inst., 63 N. Y. 460. Nor can they be attacked collaterally before another Surrogate. Matter of Harvey, 3 Redf. 214, 216, citing Bolton v. Brewster, 32 Barb. 390. The presentation by the person to whom letters are issued of such letters establishes prima facie their validity and his authority. Belden v. Meeker, 47 N. Y. 307. But the wording of § 2591 makes it evident that if the court or officer had no jurisdiction to grant the letters they are not to have the conclusive effect prescribed by the Code. Therefore the jurisdiction of the Surrogate to issue them may be attacked collaterally. Crosier v. Cornell Steamboat Co., 27 Hun, 215, aff'd 92 N. Y. 626. E. g., if they were granted on a false statement of a jurisdictional fact they can be attacked collaterally. That is, if the holder of the letters sues, a denial that letters were "duly" issued will support such attack. Ziemer v. Crucible Steel Co., 99 App. Div. 169, citing Hoes v. N. Y., N. H. & H. R. R. Co., 173 N. Y. 435. See also McCarthy v. Supreme Court of Foresters, 107 App. Div. 185. But this does not mean that an improper exercise of jurisdiction can be attacked where the action of the Surrogate, although irregular or deficient, is upon a subject-matter clearly within his jurisdiction. His determination and decree cannot be disregarded collaterally because of these defects. So, where a Surrogate had clear jurisdiction to grant ancillary letters testamentary, or of administration, upon the estate of a deceased person, and he had evidence before him tending to establish the facts upon which his authority was by law required to be exercised, while his determination upon that proof might be reversed in an Appellate Court, yet the issuing of the letters cannot be disregarded nor collaterally attacked. Brown v. Landon, 30 Hun, 57, opinion of Daniels, J., at page 59, citing Parhan v. Moran, 4 Hun, 717. This conclusive character, as is stated in § 2591, continues until the decree granting letters is reversed on appeal or the letters are revoked. Abbott v. Curran, 98 N. Y. 665, affirming 20 Week. Dig. 334. See also Leonard v. Columbia Steam Navigation Co., 84 N. Y. 48; Bolton v. Schriever, 135 N. Y. 65, 70, 74, 75, Peckham, J.; Kelly v. Jay, 79 Hun, 535, 540. See also Taylor v. Syme, 17 App. Div. 517, 520, Van Brunt, P. J.; Matter of Patterson, 146 N. Y. 327, 330, 331, citing Porter v. Purdy, 29 N. Y. 106.

§ 492. Priority among several letters.—It sometimes occurs that Surrogates in different counties, acting independently, grant letters of administration upon the same estate, or that a Surrogate may ignorantly grant letters testamentary upon an estate where another Surrogate has previously issued letters. Where this conflict of jurisdiction occurs the Code provides for a priority of the letters issued first in point of time; safeguarding, however, those who may have acted in good faith with the person to whom the conflicting letters were issued. This is by § 2592, which is as follows:

> The person or persons, to whom letters testamentary, or letters of administration are first issued, from a surrogate's court having jurisdiction to issue them, as prescribed in article first of title first of this chapter, have sole and exclusive authority, as executors or administrators, pursuant to the letters, until the letters are revoked, as prescribed by law; and they are entitled to demand and recover from any person, to whom letters upon the same estate are afterwards issued, by any other surrogate's court, the decedent's property in his hands. But the acts of a person, to whom letters were afterwards issued, done in good faith, before notice of the letters first issued, are valid; and an action or special proceeding, commenced by him, may be continued by and in the name of the person or persons to whom the letters were first issued. § 2592, Code Civil Proc.

§ 493. Disability to receive letters in some cases may be removed—Supplementary letters.—There are two disabilities which, while they operate to prevent a Surrogate from issuing letters, may nevertheless be removed before the estate is fully administered, in which case on proof of such facts the person then may become entitled to supplementary letters testamentary. The provisions of the Code are as follows:

> If the disability of a person under age, or an alien named as executor in a will, be removed before the execution of the provision of such will is completed, he shall be entitled, on application, to supplementary letters testamentary, to be issued in the same manner as the original letters, and authorized to join in the execution of the will with the persons previously appointed. A person named in a will as executor, and not named as such in the letters testamentary or in letters of administration with the will annexed, shall be deemed to be superseded thereby, and shall have no power or authority whatever as such executor until he appears and qualifies. § 2613, Code Civil Proc., first part.

The issuance of such letters relates back to the issuance of the first letters except in the cases specified in § 2593, which is as follows:

> Where it is prescribed by law, that an act, with respect to the estate of a decedent, must or may be done within a specified time after letters testamentary or letters of administration are issued, and successive or supplementary letters are issued upon the same estate, the time so specified must be reckoned from the issuing of the first letters, except in a case where it is otherwise specially prescribed by law; or where the first or any subsequent letters are revoked, as prescribed in section 2684 of this act, or by reason of the want of power in the surrogate's court to issue the same, for any cause. § 2593, Code Civil Proc.

See § 2682, Code Civ. Proc.

§ 494. Revocation of letters.—This subject is discussed fully in ch. IX below.

§ 495. Surrogate's control of the executor.—It has been noted, ante, that among the powers of Surrogates' Courts, they have under § 2472 the power "to direct and control the conduct . . . . of executors, administrators and testamentary trustees." In the same connection they are given power "to administer justice in all matters relating to the affairs of decedents, according to the provisions of the statutes relating thereto." And again, in § 2481, subd. 5 (ante, page 35), the Surrogate may "require, by order, an executor, administrator, testamentary trustee, or guardian, subject to the jurisdiction of his court to perform any duty imposed upon him by statute or by the Surrogate's Court, under authority of a statute."

It is clear, therefore, that the Surrogate must exercise this power of control as incident to his control of the estates of decedents. He has this power, therefore:

(a) Over an executor, subject to the jurisdiction of his court.

(b) In respect to the affairs of a decedent's estate under the jurisdiction of his court.

(c) In respect of duties imposed by statute, or by the will.

(d) Or of duties imposed by the court under authority of the statute.

Thus, under § 2153 of the Code, the Surrogate, who granted the letters, may order an executor to become a "consenting creditor" to the discharge of an insolvent from his debts. In Matter of Parker, 1 Barb. Ch. 154, the chancellor reviewed this power of control vested by statute in the Surrogate and limited it to matters in which the executor was acting as such under the jurisdiction of the court. And he points out that if in another court or in matters outside the Surrogate's jurisdiction, his acts or neglects resulted in loss to the estate, the Surrogate had plenary power upon the accounting to call him to account.

In Matter of McCabe, 18 N. Y. Supp. 715, Surrogate Coffin held that he had no power to compel an executor to bring an action for any purpose in another court and that there was no statute conferring such power nor was there any principal power to which it might be regarded to be an incident.

But, it is clear that, if the action to be brought is one necessary to the preservation of the estate, the Surrogate's power to require the executor to protect those interests may be derived from § 2481, and enforced by reason of the additional power of the Surrogate to remove an executor for cause, including the wasting of the estate. In the case just cited, the learned Surrogate pointed out that he knew of no case in which any Surrogate had ever made such an order. But the Court of Appeals (Lichtenberg v. Herdtfelder, 103 N. Y. 302, 307), held expressly that the Surrogate had ample power to compel an executor to commence an action to obtain specific relief for the estate under § 2481 of the Code.

Unless such act outside of the Surrogate's Court is necessary to the preservation of the estate and the refusal to perform it would be such wasting of the estate as would warrant the removal of the executor, the Surrogate's power to direct it is questionable. In Matter of Parker, supra, the chancellor observed that the Surrogate had no power to prohibit the executor from bringing an action in another court. From the limitations above noted it is clear further that if an executor deals with property to which as such he has no right or title, the Surrogate cannot control him in his dealing with the same, as, e. g., he cannot compel him to deliver it to the owner. Marston v. Paulding, 10 Paige, 40, followed in Calyer v. Calyer, 4 Redf. 304. See also Case v. Spencer, 86 App. Div. 454, and cases examined. See also Shumway v. Cooper, 16 Barb. 556, where it was expressly held that the statutory right to direct and control the conduct of executors did not give the Surrogate any power in respect to their dealings with property to which they had no right or title as executors or administrators.

So again if the executor's acts or neglect complained of to the Surrogate would necessitate, for its determination, his exercise of a power not vested in him by statute, he must decline jurisdiction until the question has been determined in a proper court. For example, it has been pointed out, ante, in ch. I, part I, and cases cited, that a Surrogate cannot set aside for fraud a release given by the party interested in an estate to an executor; neither can he pass upon the validity of a transfer of interest by one person interested to another (Matter of Arkenburg, 38 App. Div. 473; Matter of Redfield, 71 Hun, 344), and compel an executor to pay that interest to either of the rival claimants. Matter of Randall, 152 N. Y. 508. See also Sanders v. Soutter, 126 N. Y. 193; Matter of Pruyn, 141 N. Y. 544; Matter of Monroe, 142 N. Y. 484. And as the Surrogate cannot pass on a question such as is cognizable only in a court of equity, so he cannot treat as invalid a written agreement, having no power to adjudicate whether or not it was made in fraud. Ibid. So he cannot enforce a creditor's lien upon the proceeds of a life insurance policy in favor of decedent's wife, the annual premiums on which were over $500. Matter of Thompson, 184 N. Y. 36, where the development and limitations of the Surrogate's incidental powers are carefully reviewed.

§ 496. Same subject—Control of executors disagreeing.—The Surrogate's power of control of executors extends not only to compel them to perform duties imposed by statute or by himself under authority of statute, but further extends to protecting the executors in their rights, not only as representing the estate against third parties, but as against one another, if there be more than one. For example, § 2602 of the Code provides as follows:

> Where two or more co-executors or co-administrators disagree, respecting the custody of money or other property of the estate; or two or more testamentary trustees or guardians of the property disagree, respecting the custody of money or other property, belonging to a fund or an estate which is committed to their joint charge; the surrogate may, upon the application of either of them, or of a creditor or person interested in the estate, and proof, by affidavit, of the facts, make an order, requiring them to show cause, why the surrogate should not give directions in the premises. Upon the return of the order, the surrogate may, in his discretion, make an order, directing that any property of the estate or fund be deposited in a safe place, in the joint custody of the executors, administrators, guardians or testamentary trustees, as the case requires, or subject to their joint order; or that the money of the estate be deposited in a specified safe bank or trust company, to their joint credit, and to be drawn out upon their joint order. Disobedience to such a direction may be punished as a contempt of the court. § 2602, Code Civil Proc.

Thus the books of an estate belonging to the testator and containing entries in regard to his property are the common property of all the executors, and any one of them has an equal right to inspect and copy such books. Accordingly it has been held that where certain of the executors refused this right to another co-executor, he might apply for an order under this section of the Code to the Surrogate, directing the other executor to show cause why the Surrogate should not give appropriate direction in the premises. Matter of Stern, 33 Misc. 542 (see also post, as to testamentary trustees).

In the case just cited it was held proper to proceed on affidavit and order to show cause, and that there was no requirement in the section calling for the presentation of a petition and the issuance of a citation. The remedy is summary and enables the Surrogate to enforce the safeguarding of the estate or fund in that the section provides that disobedience to such direction as the Surrogate may make in the premises, which direction is discretionary, may be punished as a contempt of court.

§ 497. Same subject.—This power of control may be concisely said to comprehend the power to compel an executor to do whatever the law requires him to do. Seaman v. Duryea, 10 Barb. 523. Thus, as the law requires them to execute the testator's will, it is properly held that the Surrogate has power to compel executors to perform what is their manifest duty under said will. Dubois v. Sands, 43 Barb. 412. So, in Wood v. Brown, 34 N. Y. 337, the principle above noted is laid down that the Surrogate may interfere to control the conduct of an executor in case he refuses to perform the duties which the law casts upon him and which are necessary to preserve the estate. And in that case it is stated that this power can only be invoked in aid of some regular proceeding which the statute authorizes to be begun against executors and administrators, and the court proceeds, "The Surrogate cannot, for instance, prevent an executor from bringing or prosecuting a suit nor can he interfere with an executor to control him while in the orderly discharge of his duties." So in Estate of Sarah Hastings, N. Y. Law Jour., June 27, 1902, it was held that a Surrogate would not overrule the decision of an executor in good faith except upon proof that his conduct is inconsistent with the honest and faithful discharge of his duties. This case involved a refusal to satisfy a mortgage. The court referred to its power of removal if a proper case were made out, citing Banning v. Gunn, 4 Dem. 337, 339.

The question has usually arisen where the executor in the exercise of his right to control the assets and to dispose of them without the co-operation of his associate (Douglass v. Satterlee, 11 Johns. 16; Arkenburg v. Arken- burg, 27 Misc. 760, 762; Wheeler v. Wheeler, 9 Cow. 34; Hertell v. Bogert, 9 Paige, 52; Brennan v. Lane, 4 Dem. 322, 328), is sought to be restrained at the instance of a co-executor. Section 2602 now provides what may be done in the cases specified therein in this regard, but even this section does not give the court a right to interfere with the "orderly exercise of his rights" by an executor. So in Brennan v. Lane, supra, Rollins, Surr., says at page 328: "The general right of an executor or administrator to sell at his pleasure the personal property of his decedent's estate in order to provide means for the payment of debts and of legacies or of distributive shares, is, of course, well settled," citing Rogers v. Squires, 26 Hun, 388; Bradner v. Faulkner, 34 N. Y. 347; Sherman v. Willett, 42 N. Y. 146; and so in that case he held that the decision of the question whether an immediate sale of a livery stable property was advisable or whether it should be delayed for three months, involved "the exercise of ordinary administrative functions with whose orderly discharge the Surrogate is powerless to interfere."

In Matter of Gilman, 41 Hun, 561, the power of the Surrogate was upheld on the authority of Wood v. Brown, supra, and Jenkins v. Jenkins, 1 Paige, 243, to compel an executor to deposit securities in a trust company, on the ground that they were not entirely free of risk while remaining in his possession.

In Chambers v. Cruikshank, 5 Dem. 414, Rollins, Surr., construing § 2602 of the Code, which he intimated had been enacted as the result of the decisions in Wood v. Brown, 34 N. Y. 337, and Burt v. Burt, 41 N. Y. 46, passed upon this question of joint control of the securities of an estate and observes at page 419 et seq.

"It is a well known doctrine of the law that where there are two or more executors of an estate, they are regarded but as one person representing the testator, and therefore the acts done by any one of them, which relate either to the delivery, gift, sale, payment, possession or release of the testator's goods, are deemed the acts of all; for they have a joint and entire authority." One of them is as much entitled as any of the others, in the absence of specific directions to the contrary, either in the will of their testator, or in the lawful order, judgment or decree of a competent court, to collect the personal estate and to hold it in his own possession, apart from the control of his associates. Murray v. Blatchford, 1 Wend. 583, 616; Hertell v. Bogert, 9 Paige, 52; Douglass v. Satterlee, 11 Johns. 16; Sutherland v. Brush, 7 Johns. Ch. 17; Brennan v. Lane, 4 Dem. 322; Hall v. Carter, 8 Ga. 388; Wheeler v. Wheeler, 9 Cow. 34.

He continues: "But it seems to me that, in the enactment of the provision upon which the present application is based, it was the express purpose of the legislature to modify the rule of law, which, but for that provision, might make such an application, either to the Supreme Court or to the Surrogate, ineffectual.

"In Burt v. Burt, the court said that, as the relations of the plaintiff executor and the defendant executor had ceased to be amicable, 'it would have been altogether wise and suitable,' if they had of their own motion made joint deposit of the funds which the testator had confided to their charge.

"This suggests what seems to me the most satisfactory test by which to determine, in any given case, whether the discretionary authority, now expressly conferred upon the Surrogate by § 2602 of the Code, should or should not be exercised. The occasion for enforcing a joint custody is found to have arisen, whenever the circumstances are such that joint custody, pursuant to an agreement of the executors themselves, would commend itself to the Surrogate as suitable and wise.

"Now, there is nothing in the will of this testator indicating that he reposed greater trust and confidence in one of the parties to this proceedings than in the other; there is nothing in the papers before me tending to show that it would impair the security of the property of the estate to take it from the sole custody of the respondent and place it in the joint custody of himself and his associate. For aught that appears, they can meet together without inconvenience whenever conference or combined action shall be necessary or desirable. It is not shown that the interests of the estate would be prejudiced by requiring a joint custody of its assets. And there are certain considerations which seem to make such joint custody desirable."

Applying this test, it is clear that it is not a matter of course to require the joint deposit of estate securities; the applicant must still make out a case calling for the Surrogate's interference and showing that the preservation of his rights and interests or of those of others require the favorable exercise of the discretion vested in the Surrogate. Matter of Adler, 60 Hun, 481. With the exercise of that discretion the Appellate Court will not interfere unless it is apparent that it has been abused. Ibid.

LETTERS OF ADMINISTRATION WITH THE WILL ANNEXED

§ 498. What is an administrator with the will annexed.—Wherever there is a will duly admitted to probate its directions as to the administration of the estate thereby devised or bequeathed are controlling in so far as they are consistent with testamentary law. We have already discussed the cases in which an executor may renounce his appointment. We are later to discuss the instances in which an executor may be removed. Cases may thus exist where the will names no executor, or where, having named an executor, he has either died, renounced, or been removed. The Code provides for the carrying into effect of the directions of the will, notwithstanding the happening of any of these contingencies, by the appointment of an administrator, who unlike other administrators (who must act according to the statute in the distribution of the estate), takes the estate as administrator "with the will annexed" and administers or distributes it just as if he had been named as executor in the will. This distinction has been well defined by the Court of Appeals (Casoni v. Jerome, 58 N. Y. 315, at page 320), by Andrews, J., as follows: "The position of a general administrator and an administrator cum testamentum [sic] annexo, differ in this: that in the latter case, the will, so far as it is consistent with law, is the rule for the management and distribution of the estate, and in the former the ultimate right to the personal assets is regulated by the statute of distribution."

The provisions of the Code are as follows:

> If no person is named as executor in the will, or selected by virtue of a power contained therein; or if, at any time, by reason of death, incompetency adjudged by the surrogate, renunciation in either of the methods prescribed in section two thousand six hundred and thirty-nine and two thousand six hundred and forty-two of this act, or revocation of letters, there is no executor, or administrator with the will annexed, qualified to act; the surrogate must, upon the application of a creditor of the decedent, or a person interested in the estate of the decedent, or having a lien upon any real property upon which the decedent's estate has a lien and upon such notice to the other creditors and persons interested in the estate, as the surrogate deems proper, issue letters of administration with the will annexed, as follows:
>
> 1. To one or more of the residuary legatees, who are qualified to act as administrators. If any one of such legatees who would otherwise be so entitled is a minor, administration shall be granted to his guardian, if competent.
> 2. If there is no such residuary legatee or guardian, or none who will accept, then to one or more of the principal or specified legatees, so qualified. If any one of such legatees who would be otherwise so entitled is a minor, administration shall be granted to his guardian, if competent.

3. If there is no such legatee or guardian, or none who will accept, then to the husband, or wife, or to one or more of the next of kin, or to one or more of the heirs or devisees, so qualified.

4. If there is no qualified person, entitled under the foregoing subdivisions, who will accept, then to one or more of the creditors who are so qualified, except that in the counties of New York and Kings the public administrator shall have preference, after the next of kin, over creditors, and all other persons.

5. If there is no qualified creditor who will accept, then to any proper person designated by the surrogate. § 2643, Code Civil Proc.

This section was amended, L. 1901, ch. 141, in respect of guardians of minors, otherwise entitled, taking the letters which the infants but for minority would have taken. This supersedes the rule laid down in such cases as Matter of Milhau, decided in 1899, 28 Misc. 366, where a general legatee was preferred to the corporate guardian of an infant residuary legatee.

In Matter of Haug, 29 Misc. 36, the executor of a sole legatee was preferred to a nephew of the testator, whose father died after the testator, his brother. This was on the ground that the son was not, under these circumstances, entitled in his own right, under the definition of next of kin in § 2514, subd. 12, "to share in the unbequeathed residue," etc.

This section should be read with § 2660, post. Subdivision 1 prefers the residuary legatee, as one obviously interested in an economical administration. Matter of Lasak, 121 N. Y. 706; Matter of Goggin, 43 Misc. 233. Hence, if such residuary legatee die, his executor should be preferred to next of kin who are not entitled to share in the distribution. Ibid.

Under subds. 3 and 4, reference should be had to the provisions of § 2660 giving certain priority in New York over public administrator to the executor or administrator of a deceased sole legatee. See post. See chapter on Parties as to who is "person interested." And see opinion of Ketcham, Surr., in Matter of Brown, 60 Misc. 628.

§ 499. When the appointment of such an administrator c. t. a. is proper. —This section discloses six cases in which an appointment of an administrator with the will annexed is proper:

(a) When no person is named executor in the will.

(b) When the will contains provision for the selection of the executor by virtue of a power and the power is not exercised within the time specified by § 2640, or in the manner required by that section.

(c) Where the executor named dies, either before or after receiving letters.

(d) Where objections to an executor, named in a will, or selected under a power, are made and sustained under §§ 2636, 2637 and 2641, Code Civ. Proc.

(e) Where the executor named renounces under §§ 2639 or 2642, Code Civ. Proc.

(f) Or where the executor having qualified has been guilty of such conduct as to require the Surrogate to revoke his letters. It might be added, as a seventh instance, where there has already been an administrator with the will annexed who has died or whose letters have been revoked, as of course he must be succeeded by a similar officer if his duties in regard to the estate have not been completed.

In Matter of Maccaffil, 57 Misc. 264, the application was for revocation of letters testamentary on the ground that the will failed to dispose of any personalty and the realty was given directly. Held, if such letters were to be revoked, letters c. t. a. would nevertheless issue, and not general letters of administration as the intestacy necessitating the latter was of the person and not as to specific property. See also Matter of Haughian, 37 Misc. 457.

§ 500. Administrator with the will annexed not proper in certain cases of trust.—Power to sell.—But it must be noted, at the outset, that an administration c. t. a. is not contemplated in cases other than those of mere administration of an estate. Such an administrator c. t. a. succeeds only to the powers which the executor had or would have had under the will. Consequently where the will creates certain trusts and appoints trustees, an administrator with the will annexed is not a proper officer to succeed to these trusts in the event of the removal or death or failure from any other cause to act, of the persons named as trustees. The mere fact that the executor is also designated trustee is immaterial in this connection, for, if his former duties as executor have terminated, and at the time of his death, removal, or cessation to act for any other cause he has entered already upon the execution of the testamentary trusts, he must be succeeded by a substituted or successor trustee, and not by an administrator c. t. a. So, where an executor had qualified and performed all the duties of his office up to the point of ascertaining the amount of the residuary estate which was left to him in trust, although such residuary estate had not already been sold, converted and reinvested, yet there only remained trust duties to be performed, it was held, by Surrogate Silkman (Matter of Curtis, 15 Misc. 545, 553, 554, aff'd 9 App. Div. 285, 294), that it was not a proper case for the appointment of an administrator with the will annexed. Therefore it is important to differentiate between those functions of a trust character or otherwise which vest in an executor and those which belong to a testamentary trustee. A person named in a will both as executor and trustee may be removed in one capacity and continue to exercise his functions in the other capacity. The acceptance of his resignation as trustee or even his removal as trustee will not have the effect to relieve him from the execution, so far as it remains unexecuted, of any duty devolved upon him by virtue of the office of executor. Greenland v. Waddell, 116 N. Y. 234, 243, citing 1 Perry on Trusts, § 281; In re Van Wyck, 1 Barb. Ch. 565; Quakenboss v. Southwick, 41 N. Y. 117. Take, for example, a power to sell contained in a will. The Code provides by the latter paragraph of § 2613, that,

> Where letters of administration with the will annexed are granted, the will of the deceased shall be observed and performed; and the administrators, with such will, have the rights and powers and are subject to the same duties as if they had been named executors in the will.

This section is similar in wording to that of the Revised Statutes (2 R. S. 72, § 72), which has been frequently construed by the courts. De Peyster v. Clendinning, 8 Paige, 296; Conklin v. Egerton, 21 Wend. 430; 25 id. 224; Roome v. Philips, 27 N. Y. 357; Bain v. Matteson, 54 N. Y. 663; Bingham v. Jones, 25 Hun, 6. "The debate has turned mainly upon the inquiry what were the distinctive duties of an executor as such, and when they were to be regarded as not appertaining to his office, but as personal to the trustee. Where the will gives the power to the donee in a capacity distinctively different from his duties as executor, so that as to such duties he is to be regarded wholly as trustee and not at all as executor; and where the power granted or the duty involved imply a personal confidence reposed in the individual over and above and beyond that which is ordinarily implied by the selection of an executor, there is no room for doubt or dispute. In such case the power and duty are not those of executors, virtute officii and do not pass to the administrator with the will annexed. But outside of such cases the instances are numerous in which by the operation of a power in trust, authority over the real estate is given to the executor as such and the better to enable him to perform the requirements of the will." An executor is always a trustee for the personal estate for those interested under the will. Wager v. Wager, 89 N. Y. 161. But when a power of sale is given to an executor for the purpose of paying debts and legacies, or either, and, especially, where there is an equitable conversion of land into money for the purpose of such payment and for distribution, and the power of sale is imperative, and does not grow out of a personal discretion confided to the executor, such power belongs to the office of executor and must pass to and be exercised by an administrator with the will annexed, whose deed will be as effectual as would have been that of the executor had he survived. Clifford v. Morrell, 22 App. Div. 470; Mott v. Ackerman, 92 N. Y. 539, 554; Carpenter v. Bonner, 26 App. Div. 462. See also McGarry v. McMahon, 124 App. Div. 607. So that, where an executor has not executed his power, although he may have been removed as trustee, should his office as executor determine for any of the reasons specified in § 2643, the court cannot appoint a trustee to succeed him in the exercise of his functions as executor but must appoint an administrator with the will annexed. Greenland v. Waddell, supra, opinion of Bradley, J. But it is to be noted, in what has been stated above, that a discretionary power of sale cannot be executed by an administrator c. t. a. Simmons v. Taylor, 19 App. Div. 499, 503. Such a discretionary power can on the death or removal of the executor be executed only under the direction of the court by a trustee appointed for the purpose. Cooke v. Platt 98 N. Y. 35, 39, citing Leggett v. Hunter, 19 N. Y. 445, and cases cited; Roome v. Philips, 27 N. Y. 357. But it seems that where a testator conferred a power in trust or any other trust upon his executor adding words indicating his intention that such trust should be performed in case of his executor's death by such person as should succeed him as executor, in such case the administrator with the will annexed must execute such powers or trusts. So, while it is the rule that an administrator with the will annexed cannot in that character execute powers and trusts which were personal to his predecessor, the executor (Beekman v. Bonsor, 23 N. Y. 303, Comstock, Ch. J.), yet where a testator directed the execution of a certain trust by "my said executor or those administering my said estate," it was held (Matter of Baker, 26 Hun, 626, Hardin, J.) that this was a sufficiently definite designation of a person intended to administer the estate after the death of the designated executor with the rights and powers of an executor (citing Holmes v. Mead, 52 N. Y. 343), and, accordingly, an administrator with the will annexed succeeded to the trust and an application to appoint a trustee to administer the trust was denied. See Matter of Post, 9 N. Y. Supp. 449. It is important to reiterate in distinguishing between the powers of an executor and of an administrator with the will annexed that if such powers in regard to real estate which an executor is given by the will are in the nature of trust duties given to him not as executor but as an individual, they will not pass to an administrator with the will annexed. Coann v. Culver, 188 N. Y. 9. Such an administrator has no power to sell and dispose of real property under a will, nor to execute trusts relative to such real estate, but can only act under a naked power imperative in its terms to sell and convert into cash. Mott v. Ackerman, 92 N. Y. 539; Dunning v. Ocean National Bank, 61 N. Y. 497, 502; 6 Lansing, 296. See also opinion of Cowen J., in Conklin v. Egerton's Administrator, 21 Wend. 429, at pages 432, 439, 470, and cases examined. And see Ayers v. Courvoisier, 101 App. Div. 97, for illustration of imperative words. Smith v. Bush, 59 Misc. 648. The general rule, then, may be stated to be that, where the provision defining the trust, when considered separately, or in connection with the rest of the will is imperative (Clifford v. Morrell, 22 App. Div. 470), or evidences no intention on the part of the testator of reposing any such special or personal confidence or discretion in the executors as would dissociate the trust confided to them from their office as executors, or prevent them from fully administering it, an administrator c. t. a. will be entitled to complete the execution of the trust. Matter of Post, 9 N. § 501. Who may apply for appointment.—Section 2643 names three classes of persons who may make the application to have an administrator with the will annexed appointed.

(a) Creditors of the decedent.

(b) Persons interested.

(c) A person having a lien upon any real property upon which the decedent's estate has a lien.

This must not be confused with "priority of claim to letters." That is discussed below.

Under the first head of creditors of the decedent, one who subsequently becomes a creditor to the estate in the hands of the executors is not included. Fowler v. Walter, 1 Dem. 240, 243, Rollins, Surr.

§ 502. What confers jurisdiction on the Surrogate.—The application for administration with the will annexed is usually made to the court of the Surrogate who issued the original letters testamentary or who had jurisdiction of the probate of the will. But there are cases where a will has been proved in a foreign judicatory, assets of the estate being in this State which have not been administered under the principal administration. In such a case a New York Surrogate would have power to entertain an application not only for ancillary administration such as is covered by art. 7, of title 3, of ch. 18, which is discussed hereafter, but for principal letters of administration with the will annexed. The practice existed before the enactment of the Code, and Surrogate Rollins held that it is not abolished by the Code. Hendrickson v. Ladd, 2 Dem. 402. In this case a will had been proved in California and letters granted thereon; exemplification of the will and of the proceedings for probate thereof in the Probate Court of the county of San Francisco were produced and filed, together with an instrument whereby the executors in California renounced their right to administer in the State of New York; the will was then recorded as a will of real and personal property; the petitioner, the widow of decedent and residuary legatee under his will, filed a petition alleging the facts as to the probate of the will and the qualifying of executors in the State of California and the existence of assets in the county of New York of the value of $400, which had not been administered upon. Letters of administration with the will annexed in the ordinary form of local or domiciliary letters (except that they purported to be issued upon an exemplified copy of the decedent's will and upon the renunciation of the executors) were issued to the petitioner; and subsequently, in proceedings to dispose of the decedent's real estate, and refusal by certain purchasers to take title on the ground that the administratrix must be held an ancillary administratrix and, therefore, prohibited by § 2702 of the Code from instituting proceedings to dispose of the real property of the decedent, Surrogate Rollins upheld the regularity of the practice in procuring the letters c. t. a., and held that the administratrix was a domiciliary administratrix with the will annexed, and was not within the prohibition contained in § 2702.

§ 503. Same subject.—It was held by Chancellor Kent in Goodrich v. Pendleton, 4 Johns. Ch. 549, that where a person died without the State the Surrogate had no power to grant letters of administration with the will annexed. This rule, however, no longer holds under the changes in the law that have since taken place, for a Surrogate can now acquire jurisdiction by reason of other facts than the residence or place of death of the testator; and so, if there are assets within the State, such as a debt due the decedent or a chose in action, the Surrogate may assume jurisdiction. Hayward v. Place, 4 Dem. 487, aff'd 105 N. Y. 628, Rollins, Surr. So where the decedent resided in Hayti and his will, having been duly admitted to probate in that Republic, and authenticated copies thereof were produced, the Surrogate of New York assumed jurisdiction to admit the will on the authenticated copy and issued letters of administration with the will annexed on the ground that the decedent had left assets within that county. The assets in that case consisted of a claim against a third person with whom it was alleged the decedent had deposited moneys. The General Term upheld his action and said that "the claim itself, if made in good faith, is assets without reference to the final result of a suit upon it." Sullivan v. Fosdick, 10 Hun, 173, 180, Davis, P. J.

§ 504. Practice upon application.—Before discussing the question of right of priority to have letters of administration with the will annexed, it is proper to indicate more fully the practice in securing such letters.

> Where all the executors or all the administrators, to whom letters have been issued, die, or become incapable, as prescribed in section 2692 or the letters are revoked as to all of them; the surrogate must grant letters of administration to one or more persons as their successors, in like manner as if the former letters had not been issued; and the proceedings to procure the grant of such letters, are the same, and the same security shall be required, as in a case of intestacy, except that the surrogate may, in his discretion, in case where the estate has been partially administered upon by the former representative or representatives, fix as the penalty of the bond to be given by such successor or successors, a sum not less than twice the value of the assets of the estate remaining unadministered. § 2693, Code Civil Proc.

Reference must, in this connection, be also had to § 2645, which provides that an administrator with the will annexed must qualify as prescribed in § 2664, but that, in case of an administrator with the will annexed, the Surrogate, in fixing the penalty of the bond, "must take into consideration the value of the real property, or of the proceeds thereof," which may come into such administrator's hands by virtue of any provision contained in the will. But the reference to § 2664 does not extend the power given to the Surrogate to accept reduced security in certain cases from administrators in chief, to administration with the will annexed. See Estate of LeRoy, 16 Civ. Proc. Rep. 343. On the other hand, while the sections above recited literally require an administrator c. t. a. to give a bond in a penalty of not less than twice the value of the personal property of which the decedent died possessed, yet if such administrator is also administrator de bonis non, these sections have been construed as fixing the minimum penalty of the bond as double the value of the property left unadministered. Sutton v. Weeks, 5 Redf. 353. See Matter of Nesmith, 6 Dem. 333.

The statement made above may be amplified by stating that any one of the persons stated in § 2643, as entitled to letters of administration, may make the application. The proceedings to secure such letters must be initiated by petition in the case covered by § 2644, which is as follows:

> But where a person applies for letters of administration with the will annexed, as prescribed in the last section, and another person has a right to the administration prior to that of the petitioner, the application must be made by petition, unless a written renunciation of every person having such a prior right, is filed with the surrogate, and the execution thereof is proved to his satisfaction. The petition must pray that all the persons having a prior right, who have not renounced, be cited to show cause, why administration should not be granted to the petitioner. The proceedings thereupon are the same, as upon an application for administration upon the estate of an intestate. § 2644, Code Civil Proc.

But the wording of § 2644 warrants the inference that in any other case, i. e., where the petitioner is the one having the prior right, his application may be informal, and the manner and form thereof and of the notice the Surrogate may direct him to give to other parties interested may be such as the Surrogate may direct. Estate of Brooks, 4 Law Bull. 8. The best practice is, however, in any event to file a petition containing allegations first establishing that occasion exists for the grant of such letters, defining the relationship of the petitioner, and stating whether there are, or are not, persons with a right to administer prior to that of the petitioner, and if there are, praying that the Surrogate make such direction in the premises as he deems necessary as to the manner and time of notice to be given the other parties interested if any be cited or alleging that they have renounced. Where there is an allegation of renunciation the written renunciation duly executed must be filed with the petition. The form of such petition is here indicated:

Petition for letters of administration with the will annexed.

Surrogate's Court,
County of Westchester.

In the Matter of Administration, with the Will annexed, of the Goods, Chattels and Credits left unadministered, which were of Deceased.

To the Surrogate's Court of the County of Westchester:

That your petitioner ha to the best of ability, estimated and ascertained the value of the real and personal estate of the said testator still unadministered, and that the same will not exceed in value the sum of personal property, and real property, that the value of the real property coming into the hands of the Administrat with the Will annexed of the said last Will and Testament will not exceed the sum of dollars, according to the best of your petitioner's information and belief.

(Add verification.)

The oath required is substantially identical with that of an administrator.

§ 505. Same subject.—The real intent of § 2644 is to provide for the citation of certain parties who are thereby declared to be entitled to notice of the proceeding before the Surrogate. It has been held that where, for example, a residuary legatee qualified to act as administrator, that is to say, a person belonging to the class first in order of priority under § 2643, applied for letters of administration c. t. a., he was under no obligation to cite any other person as there could be no other person having a right prior to his own not even a person who was also a residuary legatee. Matter of Wood, 17 N. Y. Supp. 354, Ransom, Surr.; Matter of Richardson, 8 Misc. 140. The Surrogate, however, has full power upon such an application to direct notice to be given to creditors or persons interested if he believes it necessary. § 2643, Code Civ. Proc. The proper form of petition as was indicated by Surrogate Rollins in Batchelor v. Batchelor, 1 Dem. 209, is one that prays for the issuance of letters of administration to the petitioner. The learned Surrogate held that a petition asking that letters should issue to some third person such as the public administrator was improper; but it is clear, in the first place, that the petitioner must either bring himself within § 2643 (Matter of Allen, 2 Dem. 203); or, in the second place, if there are those having prior right, their written renunciation should be filed; or, in the third place, if they are not so filed, the petitioner must pray that they be cited to show cause why administration should not be granted to the petitioner. Such citation having then been duly issued and served, upon the return day, if such person having a prior right appear, and insist upon that right, the Surrogate will have jurisdiction to appoint such person in lieu of the petitioner. Were it not for the high authority of the Surrogate who decided the Batchelor case it would be suggested as perfectly regular that a creditor, for example, desiring to facilitate the collection of his claim from the estate which was so circumstanced as to require the appointment of an administrator with the will annexed and not desiring such appointment himself should file a petition stating his interest and giving the names of persons having a prior right to administer if any, and praying for the appointment of such a person. But under the practice indicated by Surrogate Rollins the creditor must take the risk of being appointed the administrator, and of subjecting himself to the responsibility of distributing the estate in case none of the persons having a prior right appear and assert such right upon the return day.

§ 506. Priority of claim to letters.—Section 2643 defines the order of precedence in right in which various classes of persons interested in the estate of the decedent and creditors stand in relation to the right of administration c. t. a. This section is not to be confused with § 2660 which provides the order in which relatives of the decedent are entitled to letters of administration in cases of intestacy, which will be discussed later. The statute must be strictly followed, and if application be made by a person showing himself to have priority, letters must be issued by the Surrogate. Matter of Manley, 12 Misc. 472; Matter of Place, 105 N. Y. 629; Matter of Davis, 48 Misc. 489. The preferences among those belonging to the same class are not controlling in the same absolute sense, as one class has priority over those subordinated in the order of right. As to those in the same class, the preferences control where other things are equal. Ibid. See opinion by Thomas, Surr., in Matter of Treadwell, 37 Misc. 584. In a later case, Matter of Ferguson, 41 Misc. 465, Church, Surr., refused to follow Thomas; but his selection was after all colored by an objection to the one rejected on the score of "improvidence," and the Treadwell case is authoritative by force of its reasoning. Letters of administration with the will annexed can only be denied to one otherwise entitled for some cause constituting a statutory disqualification. Matter of Place, 105 N. Y. 629, aff'g 4 Dem. 487. The nature of such disqualification has been held to be defined by § 2661, which defines the incompetency which will prevent letters of administration generally.

> Letters of administration shall not be granted to a person convicted of an infamous crime, nor to any one incapable by law of making a contract, nor to a person not a citizen of the United States, unless he is a resident of the state, nor to a person under twenty-one years of age, or who is adjudged incompetent by the surrogate to execute the duties of such trust by reason of drunkenness, improvidence or want of understanding. § 2661, Code Civil Proc.

It will be noted that the disqualifications differ slightly from those contained in § 2612, relating to executors; the difference is merely formal, however; the grounds of objection are substantially identical and will be administered on the same principles. Thus, one pardoned after conviction of an infamous crime is recapacitated as noted above, in discussing Matter of Raynor, 48 Misc. 325. The clause contained in § 2612 and omitted in § 2661 is by its terms applicable to cases of administration, since it reads as follows: "A Surrogate in his discretion may refuse to grant letters testamentary or of administration to a person unable to read or write the English language." Care must be taken not to confuse the right of administration and priority fixed by the statute in case of administration c. t. a., with the rule which the statute provides (see § 2693, Code Civ. Proc.), regarding the preference of persons as ancillary administrators with or without the will annexed, where persons may be preferred who come into the courts of our State showing a right under judicial proceedings in a foreign country to the possession of the personal property of the decedent, or where they represent such a person by legal power.

§ 507. Representative of one entitled to letters is entitled where decedent so entitled was sole legatee.—It seems that the English rule has been and still is that where the residuary legatee survives the testator and has a beneficial interest, his representative has the same right of administration cum testamento annexo as the residuary legatee himself and is therefore entitled to administration in preference to the next of kin or to legatees. Williams on Executors, 465. At first, under the Code, the courts denied the right of the representative of such legatee to letters in preference to those named in the statute as entitled in case there be no residuary legatee or none who will accept. Kircheis v. Scheig, 3 Redf. 277; Matter of Allen, 2 Dem. 203; Lathrop v. Smith, 24 N. Y. 417; Matter of Brown, 2 Connoly, 386. But § 2660 of the Code, as now amended, has been held applicable in several respects to administration under a will. See Matter of Moehring, 24 Misc. 418; Matter of Lasak, 121 N. Y. 706; Matter of Goggin, 43 Misc. 233.

And so, in Matter of Haug, 29 Misc. 36, 38, Fitzgerald, Surr., held that it was similarly applicable in respect to the provision incorporated in it that "letters of administration shall also be granted to an executor or administrator of a deceased person named as sole legatee in a will." He pointed out that § 2660 gives "the public administrator in the city of New York preference, after the next of kin, and after an executor or administrator of a sole legatee named in a will, whereby the whole estate is devised to such deceased sole legatee, over creditors and all other persons." Accordingly he preferred the executor of such deceased sole legatee to the son of decedent's brother who died after testator, and revoked letters originally granted to such nephew. But he also held that as there was living a sister of testator, next of kin, she had a right under subd. 3 of § 2643 prior to that of the executor of the deceased sole legatee, and he granted her the right to retract a renunciation made by her when the nephew originally applied for letters. With this in mind, it is clear that § 2643 (q. v., ante, in § 498), prescribes the order of priority, so if there are none of the first class available then the right passes to the next class and not to the representatives of the first class, and so on, until the case contemplated by subd. 4 is reached, which is applicable as it reads, unless the exceptional case covered by § 2660, above discussed, exists. Section 2693, which declares that the proceedings in procuring letters of administration c. t. a., for the successor of the original holder or holders of letters, shall be the same as in cases of intestacy does not change the order of priority established by § 2643, but simply indicates the practice which must be followed by the person entitled to letters in order to obtain their issuance. Hayward v. Place, 4 Dem. 487, 490, Rollins, Surr.

§ 508. Priority among persons of the same class.—Where several persons apply for appointment or are available, all belonging to the same class, there being none of a class priorily entitled, no one of such persons has an absolute legal right as against the others to receive such letters. Quintard v. Morgan, 4 Dem. 168. In such a case the Surrogate has a discretion in making his selection. Matter of Beakes, 5 Dem. 128; Quintard v. Morgan, supra; Matter of Powell, 5 Dem. 281; Matter of Treadwell, 37 Misc. 584, 586; Matter of Davis, 48 Misc. 489. But see Matter of Ferguson, 41 Misc. 465. The discretion is influenced by the nearness of relationship and by the quantum of interest. Nor need those having only equal claims be cited. Ibid., citing Code, § 2644; Matter of Wood, 17 N. Y. Supp. 354; Matter of Richardson, 8 Misc. 140; Matter of Lasak, 8 N. Y. Supp. 740, aff'd 121 N. Y. 706. So under subd. 2, of § 2643, which provides, that "if there is no residuary legatee qualified to act or none who will accept, letters must be issued to one or more of the principal or specific legatees," it has been held that the words are not intended to indicate a preference of principal over specific legatees, nor is the word principal used as a synonym for chief or most important, but that it has the force and effect of the word "general" and is meant to be descriptive of all legatees who are neither specific nor residuary. Quintard v. Morgan, supra, Rollins, Surr. So that any person belonging to the second class may be selected by the Surrogate, who will usually prefer that claimant who has the greater interest under the will. Ibid., citing Schouler on Exrs. and Adms. § 123. So Surrogate Coleman held, similarly (Matter of Beakes, supra), in a case where there were six persons, belonging to what may be called, under § 2643, the second class. One lived in a remote State; another was a minor; three of the others had contingent legacies dependent upon the death of two of the other legatees without issue; the sixth had a vested life interest in one-half of the funds, and was accordingly selected; the Surrogate held that the interest of the minor did not pass to his guardian as against adult legatees, citing Cottle v. Vanderheyden, 11 Abb. N. S. 17, and Quintard v. Morgan, supra. In another case Surrogate Rollins held, that the selection of an administrator c. t. a., from among several persons having equal rights under the statute was not necessarily to be made to depend upon the declared preference of the testator such as, for example, the amount of the legacy indicated in the will, but that, other things being equal, such preference might properly be allowed to have some weight. Matter of Powell, 5 Dem. 281. And the Surrogate in that case selected of two legatees a resident of the State related to the testator as against a nonresident of the State not of decedent's blood. So in another case the same Surrogate held, that where a testator's residuary estate is held in trust and occasion arises for the appointment of an administrator c. t. a., the beneficiary of the trust is entitled to letters in preference to his trustee. Matter of Roux, 5 Dem. 523, citing Matter of Thompson, 33 Barb. 334, aff'd 28 How. Pr. 581. It has been held, moreover, as between parties having a similar interest, indebtedness to the estate, or personal interest in its administration, is not of itself ground for rejecting the applicant (Churchill v. Prescott, 2 Bradf. 304; Quintard v. Morgan, supra); nor that the applicant was engaged in a proceeding involving the construction or validity of the will. Ibid. What has been already intimated in regard to the guardian of an infant applies only to cases where there are others equally entitled with the infant. Where the infant is absolutely entitled as against all other parties but for his infancy, it is held that letters must issue to the guardian of such person; the provision was formerly incorporated in the Revised Statutes (2 R. S. ch. 6, title 2, § 33, vol. 4, Banks' 8th ed., p. 2553), and reads as follows:

"If any person who would otherwise be entitled to letters of administration as next of kin or to letters of administration with the will annexed as residuary or specific legatee, shall be a minor, such letters shall be granted to his guardian, being in all respects competent, in preference to creditors or other persons." This statute is now superseded by the provision of § 2660, which provides briefly that if a person entitled is a minor, administration must be granted to his guardian if competent, in preference to creditors or other persons. Blanck v. Morrison, 4 Dem. 297, Rollins, Surr.; so also Matter of Lasak, 8 N. Y. Supp. 740, aff'd 121 N. Y. 706; so also Matter of Tyler, 6 Dem. 48, 51, Coffin, Surr.

§ 509. Miscellaneous cases.—It is of course true in this case, as in all others where a person claims as belonging to a class specified in the statute, that the Surrogate has power to inquire into and determine whether the claimant does or does not belong to such class; as for example in Matter of House, 2 Connoly, 524, where the decedent had been twice married, and his first wife Mary was a resident of the State of New York, but her husband, having left her, proceeded to Ohio where he commenced an action for divorce and obtained a judgment of the Ohio court, no process in said action having been personally served upon his said wife nor did she appear or authorize anyone to appear for her in said action; he subsequently remarried in the State of Michigan after which he returned with his second wife to the State of New York where he lived until his death. The decedent left certain household effects and a chose in action, a supposedly valid claim against a railroad company by reason of his having been accidentally killed upon its tracks. Both women forthwith applied to be appointed administratrix. The Surrogate asserted his power to inquire into the facts, declared the Ohio divorce illegal and void in the State of New York against the first wife, declared her to be the lawful widow of the decedent, and issued letters to her. So again where a party claimed to be a creditor, the Surrogate upon inquiry into the facts found him to be merely a claimant under a contract made with the executor and not with the decedent, and declared him consequently not to be a creditor of the decedent as required by the terms of § 2643. Fowler v. Walter, 1 Dem. 240, Rollins, Surr. So, also, where the facts are uncontroverted at the time, but subsequently application is made to have the letters revoked on the ground that the person did not sustain the relation alleged upon the application for letters, the Surrogate must examine the facts. Thus, where letters of administration had been granted to a petitioner as surviving husband of the decedent and proceedings went so far as that he administered the estate and rendered his account therefor, and payment was decreed of the whole surplus to him as such husband by the Surrogate, after which the next of kin appeared and filed a petition alleging that he had never been the husband of the decedent, and asked to have the decree on the accounting and for distribution vacated and set aside, and the assets paid over to the next of kin, the Surrogate inquired into the facts and determined that the administrator was not and never had been the husband of the intestate, but had lived with her only in a meretricious relation, and accordingly revoked the letters and vacated the decree on the ground of their having been obtained by fraud and falsehood. The General Term and Court of Appeals affirmed his determination. Matter of Patterson, 29 N. Y. Supp. 451; 79 Hun, 371, aff'd 146 N. Y. 327. In this particular case the petition asked for a vacating of the decree of distribution and the Surrogate not only vacated the decree but revoked the letters. The General Term denied the Surrogate's right to revoke the letters for the reason that the proceeding was not framed for such relief, but affirmed the vacating of the decree for distribution. On the appeal to the Court of Appeals, it was claimed that as long as the letters stood unrevoked there remained conclusive proof of the administrator's title as husband until they were vacated in a proper and direct proceeding; the Court of Appeals held, however, that it could have no such effect, but that conceding that the letters should stand as of full force and effect, the vacating of a decree of distribution and the making of a new decree of distribution to the next of kin was perfectly proper, it being immaterial by whom distribution should be made. See opinion of Finch, J., pages 330 and 331.

§ 510. Joining third party in administration.—In Matter of Moehring, 24 Misc. 418, the petitioner, who was entitled to letters of administration, with the will annexed of the decedent, in making her application therefor asked and consented to have the letters issued jointly to her and to another person who, in his own right, would not be entitled to the same. Granting this application, Fitzgerald, Surr., observed: "Section 2643 of the Code of Civil Procedure which designates the persons to whom letters of administration c. t. a. may be issued and the order in which they are entitled to the same, makes no provision for issuing the letters to a person not otherwise entitled to them, in conjunction with one who is. Authority, however, for the granting of such letters was found in § 34, part 2, ch. 6, title 2, art. 2, of the Revised Statutes (vol. 4, 8th ed. p. 2553; Matter of Morgan, 4 Dem. 168). Section 34 declared that 'administration may be granted to one or more competent persons although not entitled to the same, with the consent of the person entitled to be joined with such person; which consent shall be in writing, and be filed in the office of the Surrogate.' This section continued in force until it was repealed by the abrogation by ch. 686 of the Laws of 1893 of the article of which it was a part. This act incorporated § 34 almost literally and nearly all the other provisions of art. 2 substantially under §§ 2660 and 2661 of the Code. These sections are part of art. 4, title 3, ch. 18, of the Code of Civil Procedure. This article previously to such incorporation related wholly and exclusively to the procedure in applications for letters of administration in cases of intestacy, and the insertion among its provisions of the sections of the Revised Statutes has created grave doubt as to whether the legislature intended that such of these sections as were applicable to administration in cases of testacy should continue so applicable after their inclusion in the Code. While the change thus effected coupled with the confusing manner in which the provisions of the Revised Statutes have been collated and consolidated in §§ 2660 and 2661 has involved the question in considerable obscurity and perplexity, still I think that upon a careful scrutiny of these sections, it will be discovered that they supply strong internal evidence that the provision in question was not intended to be limited in its application to administration in cases of intestacy. Section 2661 prescribes that 'letters of administration shall not be granted to a person convicted of an infamous crime, nor to anyone incapable by law of making a contract, nor to a person not a citizen of the United States, unless he is a resident of the State, nor to a person under twenty-one years of age, or who is adjudged incompetent by the Surrogate to execute the duties of such trust by reason of drunkenness, improvidence or want of understanding.' This section is a substantial re-enactment of § 32 of the article of the Revised Statutes above mentioned, and it was the only provision of law prior to the enactment of § 2661 of the Code that prescribed the grounds of disqualification of a person to receive letters of administration, as § 2661 has since its adoption been the only existing provision of law on the same subject. Neither of these sections afford in themselves any indication that they relate to one sort of letters rather than another. The unrestricted nature of the language of the sections would seem to imply that they relate to both. The section of the Revised Statutes undoubtedly so applied (Matter of Morgan, 4 Dem. 168), and the section of the Code has been held to have a like application (Estate of Nathaniel Manley, 12 Misc., p. 472). The fact that the latter section, which is an embodiment of § 32 of the Revised Statutes, is applicable to letters of administration in cases of testacy is a strong reason for concluding that the provision in question which was transferred from the Revised Statutes at the same time and in the same manner was intended to be similarly applicable. This view appears to be countenanced by the notes of the commissioners of statutory revision and their remarks in reporting to the legislature for adoption the amendments to the Code effected by the act of 1893. They seem to indicate that the amendments were intended to re-enact, and so continue in operation the provisions which they had superseded (Report of Statutory Revision, 1891, pp. 1115, 1167)."

§ 511. Removal of administrator with the will annexed.—The rules in regard to the removal of an administrator with the will annexed are discussed below in the chapter on the revocation of letters.

§ 512. Power and duties of administrators c. t. a.—We have already noted in § 500 that an administrator with the will annexed may execute a power under a will which is imperative and not discretionary. Carpenter v. Bonner, 26 App. Div. 462; Mott v. Ackerman, 92 N. Y. 539; Bennett v. Garlock, 79 N. Y. 316; Bain v. Matteson, 54 N. Y. 663; Simmons v. Taylor, 19 App. Div. 499; Clifford v. Morrell, 22 App. Div. 470; Fish v. Coster, 28 Hun, 64. More generally speaking, however, § 2613 defines the powers granted to such administrators; it provides that where letters of administration with the will annexed are granted, the will of the deceased shall be observed and performed and the administrator with such will shall have the rights and be subject to the same duties as if he had been named executor in the will. It is therefore unnecessary to discuss these duties and powers at length here separately, save perhaps to observe that the conduct of an administrator with the will annexed is regulated as is that of executor by the terms of the will not as that of the administrator by the terms of the statute. Matter of Allen, 7 Civ. Proc. Rep. 159. It will be material, of course, where an administrator with the will annexed asserts his right to do a particular act, to inquire, if such right is controverted, whether the executor whom he succeeds had this right. So, for example, where an administrator with the will annexed had been appointed and had collected certain rents of real estate, which under the will should properly have been collected by the guardian of testator's minor children, Surrogate Lansing held (Matter of Blow, 2 Connoly, 360, 365), that the executor not having such authority the administratrix could not acquire it. The General Term in the First Department, in another case, Judge Daniels writing the opinion, intimated a doubt as to whether an administrator with the will annexed had power to renew a lease, the estate of which he was administrator including a leasehold interest, or whether such renewal should be made by the tenants in common. Walther v. Regnault, 56 Hun, 560. But of course administrators with the will annexed must perform all the duties of the executor in regard to paying debts or legacies. Bowers v. Emerson, 14 Barb. 652. They will be held to strict accountability. Thus, where an administrator, who was appointed with the will annexed of a testator whose wife was declared insane on lunacy proceedings subsequent to his death, undertook to pay the expenses of such proceedings, Surrogate Calvin refused to approve the disbursements on the ground that the wife's interest in her husband's estate becomes hers at his death, that that interest was the measure of his obligation to support her and that such expenses were chargeable not to his estate but to hers, and that accordingly the administrator with the will of the husband annexed had no more right to charge these expenses to his estate than he would for a disbursement for the support of an entire stranger. Underhill v. Newburger, 4 Redf. 499. He is not chargeable with the misconduct of the executor he replaces, but that misconduct or negligence does not create a precedent he can rely upon to justify similar dealings. Matter of Krisfeldt, 49 Misc. 26, and cases cited at p. 30. He is not under the same liability as the representative of the executor he replaced. Such representative bears the statutory liability imposed by § 114, Dec. Est. Law, formerly 2 R. S., ch. 6, tit. 5, § 6. The general rule, then, may be said to be whatever the executor must do under the will, the administrator with the will annexed may do. Whatever the executor may or may not do under the will according to his discretion, or as his personal interest may be affected, the administrator cannot do. Simmons v. Taylor, 19 App. Div. 499, Landon, J., at page 503, citing Mott v. Ackerman, 92 N. Y. 539, 552; Cooke v. Platt, 98 N. Y. 35. So also Fish v. Coster, 92 N. Y. 627. An administrator of an intestate who was the executor of a will does not succeed by virtue of the administration to the duties of an administrator with the will annexed under the will of his intestate's testator. The mere fact that the assets of such testator properly pass into the administrator's hands is immaterial; he is merely the custodian of such assets until the appointment of an administrator with the will annexed. Kilburn v. See, 1 Dem. 353, Coffin, Surr.

§ 513. Right to compel accounting.—Where an administrator with the will annexed is appointed upon the removal of the executors to whom he succeeds, he has full power to compel them to account for the assets of the estate and may enforce all the necessary proceedings to that end. Clapp v. Meserole, 1 Abb. Ct. App. Dec. 362. So if the representative to whom he succeeds died, thus necessitating his appointment, it is his duty to require the personal representative of his predecessor to render an account of the latter's proceedings. Section 2606 is his authority for so doing. Matter of Richmond, 63 App. Div. 488, 492, citing Matter of Clark, 119 N. Y. 427; Matter of Wiley, 119 N. Y. 642. See opinion as to what questions the Surrogate may determine upon such accounting. See Part VIII on Accountings, post.

CHAPTER III

TEMPORARY ADMINISTRATION

§ 514. Definition.—A temporary administrator is an officer appointed by the Surrogate (where the appointment of an executor, administrator with the will annexed or permanent administrator is for any reason delayed, or where the owner of property has disappeared), to take charge of a decedent's or absentee's estate until a final appointment can be made or until the owner return. In one sense, he is a receiver, appointed by the Surrogate.

But, the temporary administrator is not the Surrogate's officer in the sense that a receiver is the officer of the court appointing him. That is, his possession is not that of the Surrogate's Court so as to give it jurisdiction over controversies in which he is involved by third parties interfering with his possession. Matter of Weisell, 51 Misc. 325.

Prior to the Code such officers were called special administrators or collectors (Berdell v. Schnell, 2 Dem. 292. See § 2683, Code Civ. Proc.) and held "letters ad colligendum." Lawrence v. Parsons, 27 How. Pr. 26. The collector derived his authority from the Revised Statutes (2 R. S. 76, § 2), which defined his authority to be, "To collect the goods, chattels, personal estate and debts of the deceased and secure the same and under the direction of the Surrogate to sell such goods as may be deemed necessary for the preservation and benefit of the estate after their appraisal," and by subsequent enactment (Laws of 1870, ch. 359, § 10), the Surrogate in New York County was given power to authorize such a collector to publish notice for claims and to direct the payment of debts in certain instances. Since the adoption of the Code the cases in which such an administrator will be appointed and the powers and duties of such an administrator are very clearly defined. It provides the cases when and the manner in which a temporary administrator may be appointed, as follows:

> On the application of a creditor, or a person interested in the estate, the surrogate may, in his discretion, issue to one or more persons competent and qualified to serve as executors, letters of temporary administration, in either of the following cases:
> 1. When, for any cause, delay necessarily occurs in the granting of letters testamentary or letters of administration, or in probating a will.
> 2. Where a person, of whose estate the surrogate would have jurisdiction, if he was shown to be dead, disappears or is missing, so that after diligent search, his abode cannot be ascertained, and under circumstances which afford reasonable ground to believe either that he is dead, or that he has become a lunatic or that he has been secreted, confined, or otherwise unlawfully made away with; and the appointment of a temporary administrator is necessary for the protection of his property and the rights of creditors, or of those who will be interested in the estate if it is found that he is dead. § 2670, Code Civil Proc., first part.

§ 515. Power to appoint, discretionary.—It must be made to appear to the satisfaction of the Surrogate that the appointment of a temporary administrator is necessary for the protection of the property and the rights of creditors. The statute in terms makes the granting of such letters discretionary. The propriety of issuing or withholding them is plainly dependent upon the exigencies of the estate, the amount and situation thereof and other circumstances which require to be judged of summarily, and the determination of the Surrogate in such regard ought not to be reviewed upon appeal. McGregor v. Buel, 24 N. Y. 166, 169; Matter of Chase, 32 Hun, 318, 320. This discretion of the Surrogate extends by the terms of this section to the person whom he may appoint. If the person named in the will as executor is competent to qualify if the will should be probated, it is competent for the Surrogate to designate him as temporary administrator. Matter of Ashmore, 48 Misc. 312; Jones v. Hamersly, 2 Dem. 286; Haas v. Childs, 4 Dem. 138; Matter of Bankard, 19 Week. Dig. 452; Matter of Hilton, 29 Misc. 532; Matter of Grant's Est., 49 N. Y. Supp. 574. It is in fact, as stated in Jones v. Hamersley, a reason for so doing. He may appoint "one or more persons competent and qualified to serve as executors." Nothing is said as to any priority of right among such persons, and while the Surrogate must choose from those who possess capacity and qualifications to act as executor, on the other hand anyone thus qualified may be appointed in the exercise of a judicial discretion, and he is not limited in making his selection to persons entitled to ordinary administration under the statute. Matter of Plath, 56 Hun, 223, 225. In this case Judge Bartlett observed: "It is important that the person entrusted with temporary administration should be not only competent and honest, but disinterested; and if he had to be either a relative or a creditor of the deceased it might often be very difficult to select a temporary administrator who should be indifferent as between the parties to a contest among applicants for permanent administration or a contest over the probate of a will." But the limitations provided by the Code are explicit and must be observed. It is customary to refuse to appoint a person who is interested in the litigation which is causing the delay in the administration in chief. In the case of Crandell v. Shaw, 2 Redf. 100, Surrogate Smith declined to appoint a party to the litigation as the collector, citing Mootrie v. Hunt, 4 Bradf. 173. So where the person named as executor in the will was the chief beneficiary thereunder or where he has any hostile interest to the heirs or next of kin he should not be appointed. Howard v. Doughty, 3 Redf. 535; Matter of Eddy, 10 Misc. 211, 214, Lansing, Surr., citing Matter of Sterns, 2 Connoly, 272; West v. Mapes, 14 Week. Dig. 92; Matter of Plath, 56 Hun, 223, 225. So where the person named as executor in the will is charged by the contestants with having exercised undue influence upon the testator he will be rejected as temporary administrator. Cornwell v. Cornwell, 1 Dem. 1; Matter of Sterns, 2 Connoly, 272; In re Wanninger's Estate, 3 N. Y. Supp. 137, Ransom, Surr. The mere fact, however, that a person is named as executor is no ground for refusing temporary letters to him. See Jones v. Hamersley, 2 Dem. 286, 287, where Surrogate Rollins held that while the statute gave to one named as executor in the disputed will no priority of claim to the appointment, neither did it on the other hand subordinate his claim to that of any other person, and whether the Surrogate should appoint as the temporary administrator of a decedent's estate one who is named as executor in a disputed will or some other person, must be decided in each case that presents itself upon its own particular facts and circumstances.

"Where an application for the appointment of one named as an executor has been opposed on the ground of his unfriendly relations with contestants, or of his alleged undue influence in shaping the testamentary dispositions of the decedent, or for some like cause, such application has often been denied. . . . The bare fact that Mr. Williams will be entitled to testamentary letters if the paper in dispute shall be upheld as a will . . . . tends rather to support than to defeat the petitioner's contentions." Ibid., at page 288. So in cases of small estates the court may be influenced by consideration of economy and appoint the person named as the executor, particularly if the charges of undue influence are vague and uncertain. Haas v. Childs, 4 Dem. 137. See Matter of Bankard, 19 Week. Dig. 452.

In Matter of Hilton, 29 Misc. 532, where the Surrogate appointed the executors named in the will temporary administrators, although they were charged with unduly influencing the testator in the execution of his will, because of economy, and because the allegations were "general, remotely inferential or conjectural" in character. He observes that the rule which would ordinarily require the court to refuse to appoint an executor the temporary administrator because charged with undue influence is not absolute and without proper exception. Ibid., citing the cases just discussed.

§ 516. Cases where appointment is proper.—The language of § 2670 is so explicit as to need little comment in fixing the cases in which the Surrogate has power to appoint a temporary administrator. It is necessary, however, to note that, pending an application for limited letters under § 2664, where the fixing the amount of an administrator's bond is complicated by the existence of some right of action granted to the executor or administrator by special provision of law as covered by § 2664, q. v., no temporary administrator shall be appointed except on petition of the next of kin as prescribed in that section. In re Le Roy's Estate, 5 N. Y. Supp. 555. The jurisdiction of the Surrogate to appoint a temporary administrator is not divested by his having transferred the proceedings for probate of a will to another court for a jury trial. Matter of Blair, 60 Hun, 523, where Judge Barrett points out that by such a transfer the Surrogate was divested of no powers except such powers as by force of the transfer were expressly conferred upon the court to which the proceedings had been transferred. Moreover, the foundation of the power to appoint is that there is a proceeding pending to probate the will or to have letters of administration and that delay has occurred. Tooker v. Bell, 1 Dem. 52; Saw Mill Co. v. Dock, 3 Dem. 55, followed in Matter of Hill, 43 Misc. 583.

§ 517. Not every delay a warrant for appointment of temporary administrator.—The language of § 2670, "Where delay necessarily occurs in the granting of letters testamentary or letters of administration," is not to be taken as warranting the exercise of the power to appoint in every case of delay, or in every case of contest. For the condition of an estate may be such that no possible harm or inconvenience could result from the delay to the parties interested. Or the condition of the estate may be such as that the Surrogate would have no power to appoint such an administrator. For example, a decedent died intestate as to all her estate except the real property devised by her will which named no executor. It was manifest that no letters testamentary could issue, and that, as the will contained a simple and absolute devise of real estate, there would never be any occasion for an administrator. Surrogate Rollins accordingly vacated an order made by his predecessor which empowered a trust company to collect and receive the rents of the premises devised by the will pending a controversy over its probate, on the ground that such an order was unauthorized and void, and he accordingly refused to make an order directing the trust company to pay over the rents already collected under said unauthorized order. Tooker v. Bell, 1 Dem. 52. But where there are such conditions, or the estate is of such a character, that necessary delay in having some person authorized to take charge of the estate will necessarily or probably cause loss to the estate or be likely to impair rights or remedies of persons interested therein, a case is made out for the appointment of a temporary administrator. Matter of Eddy, 10 Misc. 211, Lansing, Surr. Customarily, where a contest occasions a delay in the issuance of letters a temporary administrator will be appointed for the purpose of getting in the assets and conserving the estate. Matter of McGowen, 36 N. Y. St. Rep. 689. It was held to be a clear case for the granting of such letters when there were outstanding numerous promissory notes, unsecured, to realize on which diligence in prosecuting the same would be required. Matter of Eddy, 10 Misc. 211. See also Matthews v. Am. Cent. Ins. Co., 154 N. Y. 449, 461. The application cannot be made as an original application except under subd. 2, for, where the fact of death is uncontroverted, § 2670 assumes that an application is pending for letters testamentary or of administration in chief. And so, where petitioner alleged that the decedent was a resident of the city of Philadelphia leaving assets in this State unadministered upon, and that petitioner was a creditor of the estate, and letters of temporary administration were asked for to enable petitioner to collect its claim, Surrogate Bergen denied the application on the ground of total lack of power to grant it. Saw Mill Co. v. Dock, 3 Dem. 55.

§ 518. Appointment in case of supposed death.—What will authorize a Surrogate to appoint a temporary administrator under subd. 2 of § 2670 depends entirely upon the circumstances of the particular case. But, as a temporary administrator's function is merely to collect and preserve the estate, he may be appointed upon much weaker proof, raising a presumption of intestate's death, than could a permanent administrator. Czech v. Bean, 35 Misc. 729. See Barson v. Mulligan, 191 N. Y. 306, an ejectment suit, where A disappeared, unmarried, at age of 21 and was unheard of during the 37 years since elapsed. He was presumed to have died as of the end of the seventh year after disappearing and the Court say: "The death, being established, carried with it the presumption of intestacy," citing Mitchell v. Thorne, 134 N. Y. 541; Terry v. Sampson, 112 N. Y. 415. Where letters of administration in chief are issued upon the estate of one supposed to be dead and it subsequently appears that he was not dead at the time, this fact will in most jurisdictions avoid the grant of letters. 19 Am. & English Encyclopedia of Law, page 184 and cases cited. The Court of Appeals in this State (Roderigas v. East Riv. Sav. Bank, 63 N. Y. 460) laid down a rule to the effect that the letters so issued were not for that reason absolutely void, and that a person acting in good faith with the administrator so appointed would be protected. The subsequent decision in the same case (76 N. Y. 316), as has been elsewhere indicated, held merely that the letters were void ab initio because not issued by the Surrogate nor with his knowledge but only by the clerk. The case in 63 N. Y. was overruled in Scott v. McNeal, 154 U. S. 34, and Matter of Killan, 172 N. Y. 547, 557; Marks v. Emigrant Industrial Sav. Bank, 122 App. Div. 661, 664. If there was slight proof of death before the Surrogate when he made the appointment it cannot be questioned collaterally. Czech v. Bean, supra. These rules, however, are not controlling upon an application for temporary administration. The Surrogate is not required to find the fact of death, but is merely required to be satisfied that there are circumstances which afford reasonable ground to believe either that the absentee has become a lunatic, or that he has been secreted, confined or otherwise unlawfully made away with. So, where a young girl disappeared from home and her parents could find no trace of her, although they resorted to correspondence with all her known friends, as well as to advertising and to the employment of detectives, and there was no known reason why she should have been dissatisfied in her home, and no known attachment which could have lured her away from it, the Surrogate of New York County held that such a disappearance for a period of eight years presented a proper case for appointing a temporary administrator. Matter of Cohen, Law Bulletin, March 26, 1891. See § 841 of the Code, as to presumption of death in certain cases.

§ 519. Effect of "for any cause."—Section 2670, subd. 1, was amended, L. 1901, ch. 20. Prior to September 1, 1901, the subdivision read: "Where delay necessarily occurs in the granting of letters testamentary or letters of administration, in consequence of a contest arising on an application therefor, or for probate of a will; or in consequence of the absence from the State of an executor named in the will; or for any other cause." The words "for any other cause" originally coming at the end of the subdivision, had been held to qualify the first sentence "where delay necessarily occurs," and were held not to enlarge the field of the Surrogate's discretion. As amended, however, the subdivision is more explicit and may be held to give the Surrogate power to issue letters of temporary administration when for any cause delay necessarily occurs either in the granting of permanent letters or of probating a will, subject, however, to the limitations already pointed out. Where delay in the issuing of letters was caused by the necessity of serving the citation by publication and the estate was in such condition as to require the protection of temporary administration an application for such administration was granted. Estate of Moesvyll, 3 Law Bulletin, 80. A temporary administrator may be appointed in cases of appeal from the probate decree; such appointments were made before the Code where the appeal was from a decree admitting to probate, Mootrie v. Hunt, 4 Bradf. 173, as well as from a decree refusing probate. Newhouse v. Gale, 1 Redf. 217. In this case where the Surrogate had refused to admit a will to probate and issued letters of administration, and an appeal was taken from the decree refusing probate, Surrogate Smith held, that as the appeal stayed all proceedings in the administration, and as no letters of collection could issue while the letters of administration continued in force, it was proper for him to revoke the letters of administration and to issue letters of collection to protect the personal property pending the appeal. See, as to when appeal does stay proceedings, Matter of Gihon, 29 Misc. 273. So where letters testamentary have issued to an executor and he has removed from the State, it seems that a temporary administration cannot be had whilst the original letters testamentary stand unrevoked. Matter of Sohn, 1 Civ. Pro. Rep. 373.

§ 520. Practice on appointment.—The practice upon an application for the appointment of a temporary administrator is indicated by the second part of § 2670, which is as follows:

> An appointment of a temporary administrator in a case specified in subdivision first must be made by an order. At least ten days' notice of the application for such an order must be given to each party to the proceeding, who has appeared, unless the surrogate is satisfied by proof that the safety of the estate requires the notice to be shortened, in which case he may shorten the time of service to not less than two days.
>
> Application for such an appointment, in a case specified in subdivision second must be made by petition, in like manner as where an application is made for administration, in case of intestacy; and the proceedings are the same as prescribed in article fourth of this title, relating to such last-mentioned application. Such an application for the appointment of a temporary administrator may also be made, with like effect, and in like manner, as if made by a creditor, by the county treasurer of the county where the person whose estate is in question, last resided; or if he is not a resident of the state, of the county where any of his property, real or personal, is situated.

A temporary administrator must qualify as prescribed in article fourth of this title, with respect to an administrator-in-chief. § 2670, Code Civil Proc., second part.

These provisions distinguish between applications under subd. 1 and under subd. 2 of that section. Where the reason for the appointment is delay, necessarily or probably occurring or to occur in the granting of letters, the application for temporary administration should properly be made in the pending proceeding for probate of the will or for the granting of letters of administration. This is manifest from the wording of the statute which provides that the appointment must be by an order, ten days' notice of the application for which must be given "to each party to the proceeding who has appeared." Matter of Ashmore, 48 Misc. 312; Crandall v. Shaw, 2 Redf. 100. This notice may be shortened in urgent cases to not less than two days. In Crandall v. Shaw, no notice was served on the executor petitioning for probate. Held his petition was an "appearance."

Where the application is made in the case of disappearance or supposed abduction or death, § 2670 contemplates a separate proceeding similar to an ordinary proceeding for administration to be begun by petition, which special proceeding is the same as that prescribed in art. 4, of title 3, ch. 18, to wit: the article entitled, "The grant of letters of administration," including §§ 2660 to 2669. Application under the first subdivision must be made by a creditor or a person interested in the estate, but application under subd. 2 may be made not only by a creditor or a person interested but also by the county treasurer of the county where the person, who has disappeared and whose estate is in question, last resided, or, if he was a nonresident, by the county treasurer of the county where any of his property, real or personal, was situated. It is not essential that the order should recite the facts upon which the Surrogate has acted other than the jurisdictional facts, but it is suggested that in case temporary administration is granted under subd. 2 of § 2670, the order should recite the facts leading the Surrogate to exercise jurisdiction as nearly as possible in the language of the statute. Precedents in the proceedings for letters of temporary administration are suggested below.

§ 521. Bond of temporary administrator.—A temporary administrator must qualify as prescribed in the Code with respect to an administrator in chief, § 2670, last clause, formerly § 2671. These provisions are briefly that a person appointed administrator, before letters are issued to him, must file his official oath, execute to the people of the State, and file with the Surrogate, the joint and several bond of himself and two or more sureties, in a penalty fixed by the Surrogate, not less than twice the value of the personal property of which the decedent died possessed and of the probable amount to be recovered by reason of any right of action, granted to an executor or administrator, by special provision of law. The sum to be fixed as the amount of the penalty must be ascertained by the Surrogate, by the examination on oath of the applicant or any other person, or otherwise, as the Surrogate thinks proper. The bond must be conditioned that the administrator will faithfully discharge the trust reposed in him as such, and obey all lawful decrees and orders of the Surrogate's Court touching the administration of the estate committed to him. Under ch. 720 of the Laws of 1893 all officers of the Surrogate's Court, such as executors, administrators, guardian or trustees, may use surety companies upon their official bonds. At first the various Surrogates disallowed disbursements made by an executor for premiums in securing the execution of such official bonds. Thus Surrogate Coffin (Jenkins v. Shaffer, 6 Dem. 59) held that a temporary administrator who had given a bond of the New York Bond and Indemnity Co., as his surety, to whom he had paid $45.00 as premium, was not entitled to be allowed this expenditure upon his accounting, it being neither in the line of his duty nor being necessary or reasonable under § 2652, Code Civ. Proc. The Surrogate remarked, "if he cannot furnish the necessary bond he cannot receive the appointment. The estate or persons in interest are under no obligation to refund to him the money he may have expended in procuring his sureties." The same Surrogate made a similar ruling in Matter of Patterson, 15 N. Y. Supp. 963, where a general guardian had given the bond of the Fidelity and Casualty Co., for which he had to pay a premium. But in 1892 an amendment was enacted to § 3320, Code Civ. Proc., relating in chief to receiver's commissions, but in which amendment the following provision was made relative to what is described in the title of the act, ch. 465, Laws of 1892, as the lawful expenses of persons required by law to give bonds.

This amendment reads as follows: "Any receiver, assignee, guardian, trustee, committee, executor, or administrator, required by law to give a bond as such, may include as a part of his lawful expenses such reasonable sum not exceeding one per cent per annum upon the amount of such bond paid his sureties thereon as such court or judge allows."

§ 522. Powers and duties of a temporary administrator.—A temporary administrator being a special officer appointed for a special and temporary purpose, his rights in regard to the estate which he is to conserve are expressly defined by the Code as follows:

> A temporary administrator, appointed as prescribed in this article, has authority to take into his possession personal property; to secure and preserve it; and to collect choses in action; and, for either of those purposes, he may maintain any action or special proceeding. An action may be maintained against him, by leave of the surrogate, upon a debt of the decedent, or of the absentee whom he represents, in like manner, and with like effect, as if he was an administrator in chief. The surrogate may, by an order, made upon at least ten days' notice to all the parties who have appeared in the special proceeding, authorize the temporary administrator to sell, after appraisal, such personal property, specifying it, of the decedent, or of the absentee whom he represents, as it appears to be necessary to sell, for the benefit of the estate, or, if it appears that the safety of the estate requires the notice to be shortened, the surrogate may shorten the notice to not less than two days. The surrogate may, also, by order, authorize him to pay funeral expenses, or any expenses of the administration of his trust, or stenographer's or referee's fees on contest of a will or administration; and he may also direct the payment of a legacy or other pecuniary provision under a will, or a distributive share or just proportionate part thereof, according to section two thousand seven hundred and nineteen of this act, as though he were an executor or administrator. § 2672, Code Civil Proc.

Note: § 2719, above referred to, is now § 2723.

The Surrogate cannot enlarge the powers given by the statute. The purpose of § 2672 is the preservation and not the administration of the estate. See Riegelman v. Riegelman, 4 Redf. 492, construing the prior statute. The duties and liabilities of temporary administrators appointed prior to the adoption of the Code and still acting thereafter are regulated as follows:

Each provision of this chapter, imposing a duty of liability upon a temporary administrator, appointed upon the estate of a decedent, or his sureties; or conferring upon the surrogate power or authority with respect to such a temporary administrator, or his sureties; applies to a collector or special administrator, appointed before this chapter takes effect, and his sureties; except so far as it is repugnant to the provisions of law in force, when the collector or special administrator was appointed, or to the letters issued to him. § 2683, Code Civil Proc.

§ 523. Same subject.—Section 2672 was evidently intended to enlarge rather than restrict the powers of temporary administrators (Berdell v. Schell, 2 Dem, 292, 295), and in fact embodies most of the permissive enactments prior to the Code. Collectors or special administrators were much restricted in respect to the disbursements they could be allowed, or the disposition they could make of the moneys in their hands. Thus a collector was held to have no power to pay funeral expenses. Cogswell's Estate, 4 Redf. 241. Section 2672 now permits such a disbursement. A special collector had not power to pay out any moneys of the estate except for his own necessary expenses. Parish's Estate, 29 Barb. 627. He may now pay legacies, expenses of administration, stenographer's and referee's fees. § 2672, Code Civ. Proc. A collector could not be directed to pay debts of the estate up to 1870, when by ch. 359, § 10, provision was made for the payment of debts in certain cases. Ex parte Haskett, 3 Redf. 165. Under the Code by §§ 2673 and 2674 (see post, § 532), full power is given to the Surrogate in this regard. Prior to the Code no Surrogate could direct him to make payment of a legacy or a distributive share of the estate. Riegelman v. Riegelman, 4 Redf. 492; Riegelman v. McCoy, 1 Dem. 86, 88. The power to sell personal property and convert into money has frequently been exercised. Thus a temporary administrator will be authorized to sell the horses and carriages of an estate in order to reduce expense (Matter of Cogswell, 4 Redf. 241), provided they shall first have been appraised. So a temporary administrator, since he may sue and be sued, has the right to employ counsel, and to be allowed proper payments made to such counsel. Matter of King, 122 App. Div. 354. (See § 530 below.) His powers to sue are given by § 2672, and only by it. That section authorizes him to sue only for either of two purposes: a. to secure and preserve personal property; b. to collect choses in action. Hastings v. Tousey, 123 App. Div. 480. Thus, in this case, the temporary administrator had actual custody of a stock certificate. But, held, he could not sue in equity for a decree that decedent was its lawful owner, or directing it be transferred to him as such administrator on the books of the company.

§ 524. Must deposit all moneys.—With regard to the use of the funds in his hands, the rule as to the deposit of such funds by such an administrator are covered by special provision of the Code. These provisions are as follows:

> A temporary administrator, appointed as prescribed in this article, must, within ten days after any money belonging to the estate comes into his hands, deposit it as prescribed in this section. Where he was appointed by the surrogate's court of any county except New York, it must be deposited with a person, or with a bank, or in a domestic incorporated trust company, designated by the surrogate; but a natural person, so designated as depositary, must file first in the surrogate's office a bond to the surrogate, in a penalty, fixed by him, executed by the depositary and two sureties, and conditioned to render a faithful account, and pay over all money received by him, upon the direction of any court of competent jurisdiction. Where the temporary administrator was appointed by the surrogate of the county of New York, the money must be deposited in a domestic incorporated trust company, having its principal office or place of business in the city of New York, and either specially approved by the surrogate, or designated, in the general rules of practice, as a depositary of funds paid into court. § 2678, Code Civil Proc.

Such depositaries of "funds paid into court" have been held to be, pro hac vice, officers of the court, and subject to the court's jurisdiction, if they pay out moneys, deposited with them by one of limited authority to deal with them, without order of court. Matter of Rothschild, 109 App. Div. 546.

§ 525. Proceedings where he neglects to deposit.—The Code further provides:

> If a temporary administrator neglects to make a deposit, as prescribed in the last section, within the time therein limited, the surrogate must, upon the application of a creditor or person interested in the estate, accompanied with satisfactory proof of the neglect, make an order, directing him to do so forthwith, or to show cause why a warrant of attachment should not issue against him. In the county of New York, the order must be made returnable three days after issuing it; and it must be served upon the temporary administrator, at least two days before the return day thereof, either personally or by leaving a copy thereof within the state at his dwelling place, or his office for the regular transaction of business in person; or if it cannot be served in either of those methods, by serving it in such other manner, as the surrogate directs. In any other county, it must be made returnable within a reasonable time, not exceeding fifteen days after issuing it; and it must be served, in like manner, at least ten days before the return day thereof. § 2679, Code Civil Proc.

§ 526. Money deposited; how withdrawn.

Money deposited by a temporary administrator, as prescribed in this article, cannot be withdrawn, except upon the order of the surrogate, a certified copy of which must be presented to the depositary. Such an order may be made upon two days' notice of the application therefor, given to all the parties to the special proceeding, in which the temporary administrator was appointed, who appeared therein; but not otherwise. § 2680, Code Civil Proc.

See § 524, above, as to depositary's acting at its peril if it pay out, without an order of the Surrogate. Matter of Rothschild, 109 App. Div. 546.

§ 527. Accountability of temporary administrator.—The temporary administrator must account not only for principal sums received by him, but for any money belonging to the estate coming into his hands; this includes the interest or other income credited him by the trust company or received by him from any source. See Laws of 1864, ch. 71, § 12; Livermore v. Wortman, 25 Hun, 341. See under "Accountings," post, as to rents and profits of realty. The deposit in a trust company, required by § 2678, is required not only as a matter of safety, but also in contemplation of the interest it will thereby earn. Hence, if the temporary administrator fail to so deposit it, he is chargeable with the interest which the trust company would have paid (Matter of Philp, 29 Misc. 263); unless he be guilty of misconduct when a greater rate may be charged. Ibid., and Livermore v. Wortman, supra. (See below.) The temporary administrator has no power to invest the assets which come into his hands (Baskin v. Baskin, 4 Lansing, 90), but he ought if possible to obtain interest on the funds (Harrington v. Libby, 6 Daly, 259), and will be required to deposit moneys with a trust company, or person or bank designated by the Surrogate. Livermore v. Wortman, supra. The court in its discretion may permit a temporary administrator to temporarily continue the business of the decedent. Matter of Moriarity, 27 Misc. 161. This was a case where the necessity of the appointment was due to a will contest. Much greater might the propriety be where the appointment is made because of a presumption of death. Where a collector deposits moneys to the credit of a firm in which he was a partner, thereby subjecting it to the business risks of that firm, or when he deposits it to his individual account in a bank, thereby subjecting it to the risks of his personal business, he will be chargeable with interest upon the funds during the time they were so deposited. The rate of interest charged has been variously fixed. Thus, Surrogate Calvin (Matter of Mairs, 4 Redf. 160) held that such wrongful deposit amounted to a misappropriation of the funds and charged the collector 7 per cent interest, then the legal rate, during the time the trust moneys were thus endangered, citing King v. Talbot, 40 N. Y. 76; Hassler v. Hassler, 1 Bradf. 248. See cases cited in Hassler v. Hassler, at page 252. In the case of Livermore v. Wortman, the General Term in the First Department on appeal from the decision of Surrogate Calvin (sub nom. Matter of Mairs, supra) modified his decree by reducing the interest to that interest or income which might have been derived from the deposit if it had been made with a trust company as directed by statute. Davis, P. J., dissented, on the ground that there was a presumption in the absence of proof to the contrary that the collector had the benefit and use of the funds and was chargeable with the full rate of lawful interest. The theory of this decision was explained later in the case of Butler v. Jarvis, 51 Hun, 248, at page 265, where Judge Daniels intimated that there had been no misappropriation of the funds but a mere neglect of duty on the part of the collector. In 1887 Surrogate Rollins in the case of an administrator retaining moneys on deposit in bank charged him upon his accounting with interest at 1½ per cent per annum, the interest which a trust company would have paid under the circumstances. Matter of Mapes, 5 Dem. 446. See also Matter of Scudder, 21 Misc. 179, citing Matter of Meyers, 131 N. Y. 409, 415, 417. Where a temporary administrator made a special deposit of funds in his hands on an agreement for their repayment to him in six months with interest, it was held that in the event of nonpayment he should be held personally liable for the money. Baskin v. Baskin, 4 Lansing, 90.

§ 528. Same subject.—A temporary administrator may retain in his hands a reasonable sum to defray current expenses. Harrington v. Libby, 6 Daly, 259. But the Surrogate's authority to direct the application of such moneys is limited by the provisions of § 2672. Kruse v. Fricke, 2 Dem. 264. An application for an order directing a temporary administrator to pay such sums as might be deemed proper to enable proponents of the will to procure the attendance of expert witnesses was denied. The expense which the Surrogate is empowered to authorize arising on a contest are limited to stenographer's or referee's fees. They do not extend to the payment of any costs. Matter of Aaron, 5 Dem. 362, Surrogate Rollins, citing Matter of Parish, 29 Barb. 637; Matter of Badger, 3 Law Bulletin, 71.

§ 529. Same subject.—With regard to the instituting of suits, the prosecuting of claims and choses in action has always been recognized. In 1856 Surrogate Bradford declared that he had no hesitation in saying that permission should be granted to a collector to institute a suit to collect and obtain the securities and property belonging to the estate. Delafield v. Parish, 4 Bradf. 24. And the learned Surrogate says (at page 26) in respect to suits the special administrator stands on the same footing as other administrators. And the present statute distinctly provides that for either of the purposes of securing and preserving personal property or to collect choses in action, he may maintain any action or special proceeding. Matter of McGowan, 36 N. Y. St. Rep. 689. A chose in action in this connection has as broad a meaning as in any other. Thus a fire insurance policy after a loss has occurred is a chose in action, and a temporary administrator may collect the same, and, if necessary, commence an action for that purpose. It is quite immaterial in this connection whether the proceeds are to be treated as real or personal property or both. The power to collect is indisputable; that power necessarily implies the further power to do whatever is requisite in order to perfect the chose in action so that collection can be enforced. Matthews v. American Central Ins. Co., 154 N. Y. 449, 460. The power to do any act includes the power to do all that is reasonably necessary to do it effectively. Id., by Vann, J., at page 460, citing Hall v. Lauderdale, 46 N. Y. 70, 73; Parker v. Supervisors, 106 N. Y. 392. The Court of Appeals held in this case that it was the duty of the persons interested in the estate to apply for a temporary administrator and to endeavor through him to give the notice required by the policy, and essential to perfect the cause of action, and then to have suit brought within the period stipulated in the policy, and that a failure so to do and to comply with the terms of the policy was fatal to any recovery against the insurance company. As to maintaining or defending actions or special proceedings in relation to decedent's real property, see the explicit provisions of § 2675, quoted post.

§ 530. Same subject—Counsel fees.—As incidental to these powers to sue, the temporary administrator has of course power to employ counsel and to pay them a reasonable sum for necessary legal services. Surrogate Rollins (Stokes v. Dale, 1 Dem. 260) held that he had power to authorize a temporary administrator to withdraw from deposit a specific sum and to pay thereout a reasonable sum for the services and disbursements of his counsel under the clause in § 2672 authorizing the Surrogate to direct the payment of "any expenses of the administration of the trust." He stated that the situation of a temporary administrator does not essentially differ in this respect from that of any other administrator, or from that of an executor; when either of those officers has expended sums of money as counsel fees, he may properly assert a claim to be credited therefor in his account with the estate, and upon the settlement of such accounts the Surrogate will allow such credit if it appear that the expenditures have been necessarily incurred and are reasonable in amount, citing Estate of St. John, Daily Reg., May 21, 1883. See Parish's Estate, 29 Barb. 627. And see Matter of King, 122 App. Div. 354. But it has been held that the Surrogate could not order a temporary administrator to pay costs awarded by the decree granting letters of administration. Estate of Badger, 3 Law Bulletin, 71. Nor it seems can the Surrogate allow the temporary administrator for the expenses incurred in the application to have such temporary administrator appointed. Matter of Bankard, 19 N. Y. Week. Dig. 452. It has been held that a Surrogate may authorize the administrator, while the will is being contested, to continue the business of the decedent. Estate of Dinsmore, 2 Law Bulletin, 28.

§ 531. Actions against temporary administrators.—The power given by § 2672 to the Surrogate, to authorize the institution of an action against a temporary administrator upon a debt of the decedent or of the absentee whom he represents in like manner and with like effect as if he were an administrator in chief, will be exercised only in cases of urgency or necessity. The discretionary authority given by the section should never be exercised where its exercise might result in inflicting upon the estate an injury far greater than could possibly be suffered by the one applying for leave to sue if his application were denied. Matter of Fleming, 5 Dem.

336. But in a necessary case and where the claimant's rights would suffer by reason of any delay, a Surrogate has full power to allow the suit; and may even, in case of litigation pending at the time of the death or disappearance of the person whose estate is being administered, direct the substitution of the temporary administrator as defendant, provided, of course, the cause of action survives. Getty v. Amelung, 7 Albany Law Journal, 415.

§ 532. Power of temporary administrator in regard to debts.—The power of a temporary administrator to ascertain the claims against the estate and in certain cases to pay them, is now fully regulated by the Code, as follows:

> General powers, etc., as to requiring creditors to present claims.
>
> After six months have elapsed, since letters were issued to a temporary administrator, appointed upon the estate, of either a decedent or an absentee, he has the same power, as an administrator in chief, to publish a notice requiring creditors of the decedent or absentee, to exhibit their demands to him. The publication thereof has the same effect, with respect to the temporary administrator, and also an executor or administrator, subsequently appointed upon the same estate, as if the temporary administrator was the executor or an administrator in chief, and the person to whom the subsequent letters are issued was his successor. § 2673, Code Civil Proc.
>
> General powers as to paying debts.
> After a year has elapsed, since letters were issued to a temporary administrator, appointed upon the estate, of either a decedent or an absentee, the surrogate may, upon the application of the temporary administrator, and upon proof, to his satisfaction, that the assets exceed the debts, make an order, permitting the applicant to pay the whole or any part of a debt, due to a creditor of the decedent or absentee; or, upon the petition of such a creditor he may issue a citation to the temporary administrator, requiring him to show cause why he should not pay the petitioner's debt. When such a petition is presented, the proceedings are, in all respects, the same as where a creditor presents a petition, praying for a decree directing an executor or administrator to pay his debt, as prescribed in article first of title fourth of the chapter. § 2674, Code Civil Proc.

A temporary administrator is not, therefore, bound to pay debts. He can only do so when authorized. Matter of Philp, 29 Misc. 263.

It will be noticed that the power of the Surrogate to authorize such an administrator, after a year has elapsed, to pay the whole or part of a debt presented pursuant to the notice required by § 2673, either upon the application of the temporary administrator or upon the petition of a creditor, while stated by § 2674 to be, in respect to the proceedings thereon, similar to cases where such application is made for a decree directing an executor or administrator to pay a debt, is limited to cases where it is proved to the satisfaction of the Surrogate that the value of the total assets left by the decedent or the absentee is greater than the amount of all the debts. When this is demonstrated to the satisfaction of the Surrogate, the temporary administrator will be permitted, just as if he were administrator in chief, to use his own discretion respecting payment of persons claiming to be creditors. Mason v. Williams, 3 Dem. 285, Rollins, Surr. And in such a case the Surrogate should grant permission to discharge debts which bear no indication of mistake, exorbitance or fraud. The objection of persons interested to the payment of a specific item should be reserved until the accounting, as the Code makes no provision for the trial of issues raised by such persons interested at the time of granting leave to pay the claims. Mason v. Williams, supra, reported sub. nom.; Estate of Hamersley, 15 Abb. N. C. 187. See also In re Haskett, 3 Redf. 165.

In Matter of Philp, 29 Misc. 263, the headnote suggests that a temporary administrator may, if the personalty is insufficient to pay all the debts in full, make pro rata payments. This seems to be more than the opinion warrants. Section 2674, as above noted, is explicit in making it a condition of granting leave to pay debts at all that the assets are greater than the amount of all the debts. But this case properly held that as the temporary administrator had, without permission of court, paid a number of unpreferred claims, he should be surcharged that excess which represented the difference between what he paid and what would have been the pro rata share of the creditors to whom he made payment. To this surcharge trust company interest was added, as he had acted without bad faith supposing the real estate of testator to be available for sale to pay the other debts.

§ 533. The temporary administrator and the transfer tax.—The transfer tax law (q. v., post), provides for a suspension or remission of penalty for delay in paying the tax when the executor is prevented from acting by reason of legal proceedings on contested probate. Not only is a penalty imposed for delay, but a discount allowed for quick payment. As to the latter, there seems to be no valid reason why the temporary administrator should not pay the tax and move primarily in the matter, in order to save to the estate the amount of the discount which is allowed by the act. But of course he cannot do this if the contest makes it doubtful what persons are to take, and how much they are to take. In case of an appointment under subd. 2, i. e., a case of disappearance, it would seem that to enable the State to assess and collect the tax, the fact of death would have to be affirmatively established, and not merely the "reasonable grounds," etc., upon which the Surrogate may appoint. If the situation warrants his asking for the appraisal of the estate and the fixing of the tax, he must assert the right to have his commissions deducted, for they are an expense chargeable to the estate, and reducing the quantum that passes to the beneficiaries. Carter's Transfer Tax Law (ed. of 1903) citing Matter of Gihon, 169 N. Y. 443.

§ 534. Temporary administrator and the real property of the estate.—The Code confers upon the Surrogate power to give the temporary administrator authority to take possession of the real property of a decedent or absentee, to receive the rents and profits thereof, and upon application to lease or do any other act with respect thereto except to sell it. The sections are as follows:

> When a temporary administrator is appointed and a proceeding is pending for the probate of a will of real property, or there is a delay in the granting of letters testamentary or administration on such a will, or in the qualification of a trustee named therein, the order appointing him may confer upon him authority to take possession of real property, in the same or another county, which is affected by the will, and to receive the rents and profits thereof. The surrogate may, by an order, confer upon him authority to lease any or all of the real property, for a term not exceeding one year; or to do any other act with respect thereto, except to sell it, which is, in the surrogate's opinion, necessary for the execution of the will, or the preservation or benefit of the real property. For either of these purposes, he may maintain or defend any action or special proceeding. § 2675, Code Civil Proc.

The rents and profits collected pursuant to an order made under this section must be paid into court, and if so paid the temporary administrator need not account therefor to the permanent successor. Matter of Goetz, 120 App. Div. 10.

> A temporary administrator, appointed upon the estate of an absentee, has all the powers and authority enumerated in the last section, with respect to the real property of the absentee. His acts, done in pursuance of that authority, bind the absentee, if he is living, or his heirs or devisee, if he is dead, in the same manner as the acts of an executor or administrator bind his successor. § 2676, Code Civil Proc.

The general tenor of the decision in the Hamersley case, 3 Dem. 285, sub. nom. Mason v. Williams, is that while the Surrogate may confer authority upon the temporary administrator in respect to his payment of debts or his dealing with the real estate, he will not usually direct a temporary administrator to do such acts as would be left to the discretion of an administrator in chief; he may be authorized to do them, in which case his failure to avail himself of the authority could be called in question at the time of his accounting, and could be then justified by proof of the existing conditions and facts. It has been held, for example, that a special administrator could not be required to pay or buy in a mortgage which the mortgagee was foreclosing upon part of decedent's real estate. Matter of Dooley, 3 Law Bulletin, 18. On the other hand, the power of a temporary administrator in regard to real estate depends wholly upon the statute, and upon the authority of the Surrogate evidenced in the order appointing him, or in a subsequent order made upon proper application which may authorize disbursements from the rents collected. Matter of Goetz, supra, citing Powell v. Demming, 22 Hun, 235. So a temporary administrator has no authority to mortgage the real estate of the decedent or absentee by virtue of his office. As temporary administrator he takes no title to the real estate of the decedent, or absentee, and can by no act of his, by virtue of his office, sell, charge or encumber it, or in any way affect or prejudice the rights of heirs or devisees. The provisions of the Code as to the power of Surrogates in respect to the sale or mortgage of decedent's real estate for the payment of debts (see §§ 2749 et seq.), expressly provide that an application for leave to sell or mortgage real estate must be made by an executor or administrator other than a temporary administrator. § 2750, Code Civ. Proc.; Duryea v. Mackey, 151 N. Y. 204, 207, Andrews, Ch. J.

§ 535. Providing for family of absentee.—Section 2677 gives the Surrogate power to direct the maintenance of an absentee's family in a case expressly falling within its provisions. The section is as follows:

> Upon proof, satisfactory to the surrogate, that the wife or any infant child of an absentee, upon whose estate a temporary administrator has been appointed, is in such circumstances as to require provision to be made out of the estate for his or her maintenance, clothing, or education, the surrogate may make an order, directing the temporary administrator to make such provision therefor, as the surrogate deems proper, out of any personal property in his hands, not needed for the payment of debts. § 2677, Code Civil Proc.

It would at first seem, under this section that, as the provision is statutory and, therefore, to be strictly construed, the Surrogate would be without power to direct the temporary administrator to make provision for the maintenance, clothing, or education of the wife or infant child of an absentee within the time provided by § 2673, Code Civ. Proc., within which it is possible for the temporary administrator to ascertain the amount of the debts, for § 2677 limits the funds out of which such provision may be made, "to the personal property in the hands of the temporary administrator not needed for the payment of debts." However, the intent of the statute being clear, it would be proper for a Surrogate upon satisfactory proof that the wife or infant child is in the needy circumstances contemplated by the section to exercise his power to direct provision to be made, upon satisfactory proof by the administrator or otherwise as to the extent of the debts of the absentee.

§ 536. How long temporary administrator may act.—The functions of a temporary administrator of a decedent continue until the qualification of the executor or of the administrator in chief; that is to say, until the issuance of permanent letters. But, they then cease and determine. Matter of Goetz, 120 App. Div. 10, citing Matter of Lewis, 17 Week. Dig. 311; Matter of Choate, 105 App. Div. 356; Matter of Storm, 84 App. Div. 552. See also Hastings v. Tousey, 123 App. Div. 480. So, pending an appeal from a decree admitting a will to probate, a temporary administrator will not be ousted at the instance of the executors named in the will, except the "preservation of the estate" within the intent of § 2582 of the Code shall require it (see ante, pp. 209 and 468). And that condition cannot be said to exist where the temporary administrator has given ample security and there is nothing in the estate necessitating the exercise of executorial functions as opposed to what the temporary administrator can lawfully do.

Matter of Gihon, 27 Misc. 626, aff'd 48 App. Div. 598. It is not necessary that an application for the revocation of letters of temporary administrators of decedents should be made. The very term temporary administrator suggests that the authority of such an officer is to be deemed extinguished by the issuance of letters testamentary or letters of administration in chief. Matter of Eisner, 5 Dem. 383, 387; Matter of Lewis, 17 Weekly Dig. 311. In Matter of Choate, supra, the court says: "Upon the issuance of letters testamentary, the temporary administrator theretofore appointed became functus officio." Upon an appeal from the decree awarding letters the Surrogate may award to the executors limited authority under § 2582 or, it seems, might still continue the temporary administration by special order. Ibid. But in the case of a temporary administrator of an absentee, that is, one appointed under subd. 2 of § 2670, Code Civ. Proc., it seems clear that his functions do not determine until proceedings initiated by petition under § 2685 shall have been had. The portion of such section referring to this subject-matter is as follows:

> In either of the following cases a creditor or person interested in the estate of the decedent, may present to the surrogate's court, from which letters were issued to an executor or administrator, a written petition, duly verified, praying for a decree revoking those letters; and that the executor or administrator may be cited to show cause why a decree should not be made accordingly.
> Subd. 8. In the case of a temporary administrator appointed upon the estate of an absentee where it is shown that the absentee has returned; or that he is living, and capable of returning and re-assuming the management of his affairs; or that an executor, or administrator in chief, has been appointed upon his estate; or that a committee of his property has been appointed by a competent court of the state. § 2685, Code Civil Proc.

§ 537. Accounting.—When permanent letters issue or the letters of the temporary administrator are revoked pursuant to proceedings had under § 2685, subd. 8, quoted above, it is then his duty to account. The Surrogate's Court may compel a judicial settlement of the account of a temporary administrator at any time. § 2726, subd. 4, Code Civ. Proc. But the temporary administrator has no absolute right to demand a judicial settlement at any time; and the practice seems to be that his account will not be judicially passed upon and finally settled until final letters testamentary or of administration in chief are issued and the executor or administrator in chief is capable of being joined as a party to the accounting proceedings. American Bible Society v. Oakley, 4 Dem. 450, Rollins, Surr.

Section 2743 of the Code is not applicable. Matter of Philp, 29 Misc. 263. Therefore he is not called upon to make any distribution, but when his account is judicially settled he will be directed to pay the balance in his hands to the holder of permanent letters. Ibid. Or, if his letters were revoked by reason of the reappearance of the supposed decedent, he may be required to surrender the property to him. Where, under § 2675, he has been directed to take possession of the real property, the decree should contain appropriate direction as to that.

But, it seems, under Matter of Goetz, 120 App. Div. 10, that if he paid the rents and profits into court, they are not to be specified in his account. It was held to be discretionary with the Surrogate, under the particular circumstances, to determine whether: (a) they should be paid to the permanent representative, or (b) to the persons entitled to them, or (c) remain in court to abide the event of litigation pending in which conflicting claims thereto were being litigated.

Where the temporary administrator becomes the permanent representative, and, after accounting, merely turns over the balance to himself as executor or administrator, it is clear that the decree discharging him as temporary administrator has no conclusive effect on the cestuis que trustent under the will as to the fund against which, or out of which any particular payment is made. The executors receive the balance, and must adjust the various funds or interests. Thus, where a temporary administrator paid taxes upon real property, subjected by will to a trust, it was held to be the executor's duty to adjust it and charge it against the general estate rather than the trust estate, and if it were not so done the beneficiaries could come in on accounting regardless of the decree discharging the temporary administrator and have the charge readjusted. Matter of Doheny, 70 App. Div. 370, 375.

His right to commissions is the same as that of other representatives. In fact he will get full commissions, which a permanent administrator appointed before the discovery and probate of a will cannot receive. Matter of Hurst, 111 App. Div. 460. Where he has been empowered to continue the business of the supposed or actual decedent, this falls within those extra-official duties for which proper additional compensation can, in the Surrogate's discretion, be allowed upon the accounting. Matter of Moriarity, 27 Misc. 161, citing Lent v. Howard, 89 N. Y. 169; Matter of Braunsdorf, 13 Misc. 666; Matter of McCord, 2 App. Div. 324. See Russell v. Hilton, 37 Misc. 642.

§ 538. The procedure upon appointment.—As is intimated in § 7 above, an application for temporary administration can be made in two different forms. Under subd. 1 of § 2670, the appointment must be made by order, the application for which is of course upon motion, which as intimated in the Code must be noticed at least ten days prior to the return day, "unless the Surrogate is satisfied by proof that the safety of the estate requires the notice to be shortened," in which case it may be shortened to not less than two days. The following precedent is suggested for the notice:

Notice of motion for appointment of temporary administrator.

Surrogate's Court,

(Here give title of the proceeding in which the delay in the granting of letters has occurred necessitating the application.)

Please take notice that on the annexed affidavit of verified the day of copy of which is hereto an-nexed, and on all the proceedings heretofore had herein, I shall move before the Surrogate of this county at a special term of his court to be held at (note) in on the day of at o'clock in the noon of that day for an order appointing as temporary administrator of the goods, chattels and credits of the above named decedent and for such other and further relief in the premises as to the said Surrogate may seem just.

Note. In New York County name a regular motion day.

Office and post-office addresses.

This motion should be addressed under section 2670, to each party to the proceeding who has appeared. (Note.) See Matter of Ashmore, 48 Misc. 312.

The affidavit upon which such motion is to be made, should contain all the jurisdictional facts, and the following precedent is suggested:

Upon the return day the Surrogate, upon inquiry into the facts, and upon being satisfied that it is necessary for the safety of the estate that a temporary administrator be appointed, may make the following order:

Surrogate's Court

Orders for letters of temporary administration under subdivision 1 of section 2670.

A motion having been made in the above entitled proceeding on behalf of a party thereto, for an order appointing a temporary administrator of the goods, chattels and credits of the decedent above named, and ten days' notice of said motion having been duly given to all the parties who have appeared herein, and proof of the service of such notice of motion being duly filed (or if the Surrogate has permitted shorter notice to be given under section 2670 state the fact).

Now on reading and filing the affidavit of verified the day of 19 and on all the papers and proceedings heretofore had herein, and after hearing (here specify parties who have appeared upon the return day in support of or opposition to the motion), and the Surrogate being satisfied that a delay has necessarily occurred in the granting of letters (testamentary or of administration) herein, and that a temporary administrator ought to be appointed of the goods, chattels and credits of the decedent above named, and also that (and) is (or are) a person competent and qualified to serve.

And it is further Ordered, (here incorporate such directions as the Surrogate may require, designating a depositary of the funds coming into the hands of the temporary administrator).

Surrogate.

Where the application is under subd. 2 of § 2670 it must be made by petition, and is a special proceeding of itself, not to be entitled in any other proceeding. See discussion, supra. The following petition is suggested as a precedent:

Petition for the appointment of a temporary administrator under subdivision 2 of section 2670, C. C. P.

Surrogate's Court,
County of

In the Matter of the Application of for Letters of Temporary Administration upon the estate of (describe absentee as a lunatic, or otherwise, in the language of subdivision 2).

To the Surrogate's Court of the County of

The petition of respectfully shows to the court and alleges:

I. That formerly of in the county of possessed of real and personal estate within said county, over the administration of which the Surrogate thereof would have jurisdiction if said were shown to be dead, has disappeared, or is missing, and his abode cannot be ascertained although diligent search has been made (or caused to be made) by your petitioner (here state the circumstances which under the section afford reasonable ground to believe that he is dead, or that he has become a lunatic, or that he has been secreted, confined or otherwise unlawfully made away with. These facts should be stated fully and clearly).

II. That the property of such absentee or lunatic, etc., consists of (here state condition and amount of property substantially as in above affidavit, so as to show necessity for temporary administrator and including estimate of value of same).

III. That the names, residences and ages of all persons interested in the estate of such absentee, as next of kin (widow or otherwise), as nearly as they can be ascertained by your petitioner are as follows:

IV. That your petitioner is (here state either a creditor or a "person interested," stating kinship, residence, etc., of the applicant).

V. Wherefore, your petitioner prays that temporary administration on the goods, chattels and credits of the above named absentee, may be granted, and that a person competent and qualified to serve may be appointed temporary administrator thereof, and letters of temporary administration may be issued to him according to law, and that and and may be cited to show cause why letters of administration should not be issued to him as herein prayed.

(Date.) (Signature.)

Upon the return day fixed by the citation issued upon this petition, the Surrogate must take proof of the facts as to the disappearance or presumptive death of the absentee, and as to the qualification and competency of the persons to whom letters are prayed to be issued. If he is satisfied that letters should issue he may make an order substantially as above indicated, except that it should begin:

On reading and filing the petition of dated the day of to the Surrogate of the county of for the appointment of a temporary administrator of the goods, chattels and credits of the above named absentee, together with proof of due service of the citation issued upon such petition upon all the parties therein cited (here add appearances, or say, if such is the case, none of such parties having appeared upon the return day, and then proceed as in the foregoing order).

§ 539. Serving notices.—The Code contains special provision for giving the notices called for by art. V, title 3, on temporary administration, as follows:

Notices required by this article; how given.

A notice required to be given, as prescribed in this article, to a party other than the temporary administrator, must be served upon the attorney of the party to whom notice is to be given; or, if he has not appeared by an attorney, upon the party, in like manner as a notice may be served upon an attorney in a civil action, brought in the supreme court. But where the attorney or party to be served does not reside in the surrogate's county; or where the attorney for a party has died, and no other appearance for that party has been filed in the surrogate's office; the surrogate may, by order, dispense with notice to that party; or may require notice to be given to him, in any manner which he thinks proper. § 2681, Code Civil Proc.

CHAPTER IV

LETTERS OF ADMINISTRATION

§ 540. What is an intestate.—An intestate is a person who dies without leaving any valid will disposing of his real or personal property. Section 2514, subd. 1 reads: "The word 'intestate' signifies a person who died without leaving a valid will; but where it is used with respect to particular property, it signifies a person who died without effectually disposing of that property by will, whether he left a will or not." See Matter of Cameron, 47 App. Div. 120, 123. So in Matter of Maccaffil, 57 Misc. 264, the distinction is clearly made being intestacy of the person, and intestacy as to particular property. A person may leave a valid will, but die intestate as to specific property. A person may die intestate,

(a) Who has never made any will.

(b) Who has made a will but revoked it validly prior to his death.

(c) Who has made a will defectively executed so as not to be entitled to probate under the statute.

So a man may leave a will valid to pass personal but not real property. He will then be intestate as to the one class of property. But where the Code refers generally to an intestate it means a case of total intestacy. Thus § 2733 provides for reckoning in advancements to the child of "intestate" as part of his estate. Held, inapplicable to case where decedent left a will, admitted to probate, but subsequently adjudged invalid in its disposition of the remainder. Messman v. Egenberger, 46 App. Div. 46, 50, citing Thompson v. Carmichael, 3 Sandf. Ch. 120; Kent v. Hopkins, 86 Hun, 611.

The administration of the estates of intestates is conducted according to the statute of distributions by means of an officer appointed by a Surrogate, selected by him by virtue of § 2660 of the Code to whom letters of administration are issued, which are the source of authority of administrators as distinguished from the will, which is the source of authority of executors. But, where executors find in their hands an unbequeathed residuum, it is not necessary to have an administrator appointed to distribute. The executor may distribute under the statute. See post, under Accounting and Distribution. Where a wife makes an antenuptial agreement that if her husband survive he shall have absolute title to all her personal estate "left by her," he takes the residuum left after due administration. He cannot reduce it to immediate possession directly as against the executor of her will. Foehner v. Huber, 42 App. Div. 439, and cases discussed.

§ 541. Prerequisites to jurisdiction.—The foundation of the Surrogate's authority apart from the questions of residence and of locus of property is first, the death of the intestate, second, the intestacy.

The Surrogate must be satisfied as to the death of the person upon whose estate administration is applied for. A mere allegation that the alleged decedent is dead to the best of petitioner's knowledge, information and belief is insufficient. Roderigas v. E. R. Sav. Inst., 76 N. Y. 316. Actual physical death is contemplated and not civil death. So where a man was indicted, tried and convicted of the crime of murder in the second degree and sentenced to state prison for life, and his only brother applied for letters of administration, it was held that the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure from which Surrogates derive their authority to grant letters of administration, have no application to a case of civil death, but apply only to cases of actual death. Matter of Zeph, 50 Hun, 523. See Avery v. Everett, 110 N. Y. 317, opinion of Andrews, J., discussing the meaning and effect of civil death.

§ 542. Presumption of death.—The common-law rule was that the continuance of life should be presumed until the contrary was shown. But the present rule which has been commonly acted upon by Surrogates, and is now generally accepted, is, that when a party has been absent seven years since any intelligence of him has been received, he is in contemplation of law presumed to be dead. Eagle v. Emmet, 4 Bradf. 117, followed in Seligman v. Sonneborn, 11 St. R. 305; Matter of Sullivan, 51 Hun, 379; Matter of Davenport, 37 Misc. 455; Matter of Losee, 119 App. Div. 107. And the same rule is applied where the one so disappearing was one of those entitled priorily to letters. Matter of Barr, 38 Misc. 355. This length of time may be abridged and the presumption be applied earlier by proof of special circumstances tending to show the death within a shorter period; for example, that at the last accounts, the person was dangerously ill, or in a weak state of health, or suffering from chronic incurable disease, or was exposed to great perils of disease or accident, or that he embarked on board of a vessel which had not since been heard from though the length of the usual voyage has long since elapsed. Eagle v. Emmet, supra. See English cases cited at page 120.

The Surrogate may refer the question as to whether the alleged decedent is dead. The reference is to take the proofs and report. Matter of Sanford, 100 App. Div. 479.

Section 841 of the Code prescribes that a person upon whose life an estate in real property depends, who remains without the United States, or absents himself in the State or elsewhere for seven years together, is presumed to be dead in an action or special proceeding concerning the property in which his death comes in question, unless it is affirmatively proved that he was alive within that time. It has been held that the proof of absence for seven or more years must not necessarily be direct and positive, but that such absence may be fairly inferred from facts which clearly point to that conclusion. Cromwell v. Phillips, 6 Dem. 60, 69. So, where it appeared by affidavit that the alleged decedent had been an educated man, industrious and sober, until he lost his wife, when he became dissipated, and finally underwent an attack of delirium tremens the night before he went away, and that while suffering greatly from his debauch and that attack, he left his home expressing his intention of committing suicide, going towards a certain dock, and was never again seen or heard from by any of his friends, held, that from such silent absence during ten years it was proper that a presumption of death should be raised. Matter of Nolting, 43 Hun, 456; Sheldon v. Ferris, 45 Barb. 124; King v. Paddock, 18 Johns. 141. See, also, Matter of Losee, 46 Misc. 363. Mere absence will not raise a presumption of death where there are no circumstances which would make it probable that the absentee would communicate with his home, or where it appears that he was illiterate. Matter of Miller, 30 N. Y. St. Rep. 212; McCartee v. Camel, 1 Barb. Ch. 455. So where a person immigrated from a foreign country without intending to return, no presumption of death arises until proper inquiry has been made at his last known place of residence in this country. Matter of White, 31 Misc. 484. So, where A emigrated in 1852 to New Zealand and was never heard from after 1855; never communicated with his family, and in 1886 became, if living, entitled to a share in the estate of a rich testator as the child of a deceased cousin, and, on an application to distribute his share on the ground of his death, it appeared no effort had been made to find or trace him in New Zealand, where he was last heard of, it was held proper to refuse to distribute, as there were not sufficient facts on which to base a presumption of his death or of his death without issue. Dunn v. Travis, 56 App. Div. 317; Vought v. Williams, 120 N. Y. 253; Dworsky v. Arndtstein, 29 App. Div. 274. See also Morrow v. McMahon, 35 Misc. 348, and discussion in Czech v. Bean, 35 Misc. 729. It has been held that hearsay evidence is admissible as to the fact of a person's death. Matter of Stewart's Will, 3 N. Y. Supp. 284, Ransom, Surr., citing Fosgate v. Hydraulic Co., 12 Barb. 352; Jackson v. Bonham, 15 Johns. 226. See People v. Etz, 5 Cowen, 314; Clark v. Owens, 18 N. Y. 434. But this rule has been limited by holding that it is to be admitted to rebut the presumption of life only after a considerable lapse of time. Stouvenel v. Stephens, 2 Daly, 319. But hearsay evidence is inadmissible to prove the place of a person's death. McCarty v. Terry, 7 Lansing, 236. In Matter of Stewart, above cited, where the decedent had gone in his yacht upon a voyage to be of about twenty days, to a specified destination, and the vessel was spoken on a certain day at a given point, over which shortly thereafter a storm of great intensity raged, and the vessel never reached its destination, nor was any news ever heard afterwards by the friends of the decedent, although they exhausted apparently every source of information, Surrogate Ransom held there was sufficient evidence of the death to warrant proceedings in the Surrogate's Court with a view to the administration of his estate under his will, using the following language:

"It is well settled that it is not necessary that any specific period should elapse to create the presumption of death, but that it may arise whenever the facts of the case will warrant it. Stouvenel v. Stephens, 2 Daly, 319. And if the party whose death is in question went to sea, and nothing has been heard of the vessel in which he sailed, or of those who accompanied him, the presumption, after a sufficient length of time has elapsed, will be that the vessel was lost, and that all on board perished. Merritt v. Thompson, 1 Hilt. 550, and cases cited. In the following cases such facts existed. Matter of Ketcham's Estate, 5 N. Y. Supp. 566; Matter of Ackerman, 2 Redf. 521; Sheldon v. Ferris, 45 Barb. 124; Oppenheim v. Wolf, 3 Sandf. Ch. 571; Gerry v. Post, 13 How. Pr. 118; Merritt v. Thompson, 1 Hilt. 550; King v. Paddock, 18 Johns. 141; McCartee v. Camel, 1 Barb. Ch. 455. Where, when last heard from, one was in contact with some specific peril, this circumstance may raise a presumption of death, without regard to the duration of the absence. Lancaster v. Insurance Co., 62 Mo. 121; White v. Mann, 26 Me. 361. In Merritt v. Thompson, supra, it was held that the presumption of death does not rest upon the fact that the party had not been heard from for 17 months, but on the weightier circumstance that the vessel had not been heard from. In Gerry v. Post, 13 How. Pr. 118, it was held that, if a vessel had been absent double the longest time of a voyage, she may be presumed to be lost; and it follows, as a consequence, that all perished with her, if none of the passengers or crew are afterwards heard of.

"On March 11, 1841, one Leo Wolf departed from New York in the steamship President. Nothing was heard of the vessel or of her passengers. The usual time to cross the Atlantic was 14 or 15 days, and the longest passages did not exceed 23 or 24 days. It was held that the steamer was lost before May, 1841, and that Leo Wolf's death occurred before that time. Oppenheim v. Wolf, 3 Sandf. Ch. 623. I am convinced by the evidence that Mr. Stewart is dead, and that his death occurred between the 10th day of March, 1888, and the 17th day of September, 1888, the date of the petition herein." See also Karstens v. Karstens, 20 Misc. 247, at page 250, Russell, J. The presumption is strengthened in cases of a person who has attempted or threatened suicide. Matter of Nolting, 43 Hun, 456; Sheldon v. Ferris, 45 Barb. 124; McComb v. Wright, 5 Johns. Ch. 263; Matter of Ketcham, 5 N. Y. Supp. 566; Matter of Allen, 24 N. Y. St. Rep. 251. Cases have arisen where there has been a conflict of two presumptions, for example, a woman who had previously been married and whose husband disappeared in the year 1875, having previously been tried and convicted upon a criminal charge and confined in state's prison until September, 1878, at which time he came to the city of New York and was arrested for the crime of burglary, and, after giving bail, disappeared, and there was no legal or satisfactory evidence that at any time, or in any place, he had since been seen by any human being, and five years later the woman married again: Surrogate Rollins held, upon an application by the woman for letters of administration on the estate of her second husband which was opposed by his sons on the ground of her being still the lawful wife of the man to whom she was first married, that the presumption of continuance in life of her first husband must yield to the presumption of her innocence of the crime of bigamy. Nesbit v. Nesbit, 3 Dem. 329, 332. The learned Surrogate held as follows:

"This presumption in favor of seven years' continuance of life has been repeatedly held, however, to be inferior in force to the presumption of innocence, where the two have come in conflict; and the doctrine is now firmly established, that one who enters into a second marriage, the validity of which is attacked upon the grounds urged by the respondents in the present intention, must be presumed legally competent to contract such marriage until positive proof has been furnished that his or her former wife or husband was living at the time of such second marriage. Dixon v. People, 18 Mich. 84; Klein v. Laudman, 29 Mo. 259; Sharp v. Johnson, 22 Ark. 79; Greenboro v. Underhill, 12 Vt. 604; Hull v. Rawls, 27 Miss. 471; Cochrane v. Libby, 18 Maine, 39; Spears v. Burton, 31 Misc. 547; Gibson v. State, 38 id. 313; Yates v. Houston, 3 Tex. 433; Lockhart v. White, 18 id. 102; Canady v. George, 6 Rich. Eq. S. C., 103; Loring v. Steineman, 1 Metc. 204; Kelly v. Drew, 12 Allen, 107; Blanchard v. Lambert, 43 Iowa, 228; Matter of Edwards, 58 id. 431; Senser v. Bower, 1 Penrose & Watts (Pa.), 450.

"The doctrine of the cases just cited seems to be approved in Clayton v. Wardell, 4 N. Y. 230; and in O'Gara v. Eisenlohr, 38 N. Y. 296, it is recognized by Mason, J., pronouncing the opinion of the Court of Appeals, though he proceeds to show why the presumption of innocence should not, upon the facts of the case, be allowed to prevail.

"Upon the foregoing authorities, I feel bound to hold (in the absence of evidence establishing that, at any time between the winter of 1878 and January, 1883, Oscar Decker was living) that, when John Nesbit died, this petitioner was his lawful wife. Even if I make a far less rigid application than the authorities above cited seem to require of the presumption of innocence, as conflicting with the presumption of life, I can come to no other conclusion than that which has just been declared." Where a court is led to indulge the presumption of death from a seven years' absence, the date of death cannot of course be fixed. But as, in such cases, death would not be presumed until the time fully elapsed, so the end of the period may be taken as the date of death merely to determine who are the survivors and entitled to the estate. Matter of Davenport, 37 Misc. 455. In this case a brother surviving after the seven-year period was held entitled to the exclusion of heirs of a sister dying before it elapsed. It is customary where it is impossible to fix a date to assume the time of death as of the date of the decree. Matter of Losee, 46 Misc. 363. But in order to adjust distributive interests the decree should, if the facts warrant it, fix the date at some preceding time or within some preceding period. Allen v. Ketcham, 5 N. Y. Supp. 566.

§ 543. Proof of intestacy.—Ordinarily, however, the fact of death is proved as any other fact, without resorting to presumption, and the second essential prerequisite to letters of administration, to wit, the fact of intestacy, remains to be proved. This is ordinarily shown by evidence that no will can be found although proper search has been made therefor among the papers of the decedent. This fact must be proved to the satisfaction of the Surrogate, who may summon witnesses before him, such as persons having the custody of the decedent's papers, and cause them to be examined in regard to the nature and extent of the search made. Bulkley v. Redmond, 2 Bradf. 281, 285. If it appear that there has been a will, although it may be claimed that the said will was revoked, or for any reason invalid, the Surrogate will not grant letters of administration in chief pending the necessary proceedings to determine whether or not the instrument in question is in fact the decedent's last will and testament. Matter of Taggart's Estate, 16 N. Y. Supp. 514; Bulkley v. Redmond, supra. When letters have once been granted it will be presumed that the fact of death and intestacy was properly proved before the Surrogate, particularly where there are recitals of the jurisdictional facts in the letters of administration. Johnson v. Smith, 25 Hun, 171, citing Westcott v. Cady, 5 Johns. Ch. 334, 343; Bolton v. Brewster, 32 Barb. 389, 394; Van Deusen v. Sweet, 51 N. Y. 385; Porter v. Purdy, 29 N. Y. 106; Dayton v. Johnson, 69 N. Y. 419, 426. And the letters of administration issued by a Surrogate cannot be questioned collaterally when regular on their face. Farley v. McConnell, 7 Lansing, 428; Monell v. Denison, 17 How. Pr. 422; Kelly v. West, 80 N. Y. 139; Leonard v. Columbia Steam Co., 84 N. Y. 48. But the letters may be attacked directly upon jurisdictional grounds in proceedings to revoke or set them aside. Kelly v. West, supra; Matter of Patterson, 146 N. Y. 327. (See ante, Decrees and Orders.)

§ 544. Existence of property and jurisdiction of Surrogate.—The application is of course to be made to a Surrogate having jurisdiction. As against other Surrogates of the State the jurisdiction may be conditioned by decedent's residence. Matter of Hyland, 24 Misc. 357. There is no occasion for the exercise of jurisdiction of the Surrogate to grant letters of administration if there is no property to be administered. But a right of action arising out of death of intestate is an asset on which an administrator may be appointed, and may sue under §§ 1902–1904 of the Code. (See § 546 below.) This fact of existence of personal property within the county over which the Surrogate has jurisdiction ought to be alleged in the petition. See § 2662 discussed below. If, however, it is not so stated, but the fact is made to appear to the satisfaction of the Surrogate before he passes upon the petition for letters, the statutory requirement as to this jurisdictional fact will be met. The recital in the letters of the existence of such assets is prima facie evidence of their existence. O'Connor v. Huggins, 113 N. Y. 511, 516. The decision in Hart v. Coltrain, 19 Wend. 378, turned upon the peculiarly limited statute in force at that time giving the judge of probates power to grant letters of administration upon the estate of a non-resident, which was distinctly held not to depend upon the question whether the decedent left assets within the State. The jurisdiction of a Surrogate to grant letters of administration is defined by the subdivisions of § 2476 which provide that the Surrogate's Court of any county has jurisdiction exclusive of every other Surrogate's Court to grant letters of administration in any one of the following cases:

1. Where the decedent was, at the time of his death, a resident of that county, whether his death happened there or elsewhere.

2. Where the decedent, not being a resident of the State died within that county, leaving personal property within the State, or leaving personal property which has since his death come into the State, and remains unadministered.

3. Where the decedent, not being a resident of the State died without the State, leaving personal property within that county, and no other; or leaving personal property which has, since his death, come into that county, and no other, and remains unadministered.

4. Where the decedent was not, at the time of his death, a resident of that State, and a petition for probate of his will, or for a grant of letters of administration, under subdivision second or third of this section, has not been filed in any Surrogate's Court; but real property of the decedent, to which the will relates, or which is subject to disposition under title fifth of this chapter, is situated within the county, and no other.

§ 545. The property basis of jurisdiction.—It may be well, however, to reiterate at this point what assets will justify the Surrogate in assuming jurisdiction to grant letters of administration. It will be noted, under the provision of § 2476 above quoted, that personal property is the usual basis of administration, except in the case covered by subd. 4 where the decedent was a nonresident of the State and no petition for administration or probate has been filed in any Surrogate's Court; but the real property of the decedent which is subject to disposition under title 5 of ch. 18 (that is to say, disposition for the payment of debts and funeral expenses), is situated within the Surrogate's county and no other. With this exception any personal property will suffice to give the Surrogate jurisdiction; even property exempt from execution. Matter of Clark, 40 N. Y. St. Rep. 12. So where the asset which is asserted to be the basis of jurisdiction is a claim against an insurance company upon its policy upon the life of the decedent payable in the county of the Surrogate to the decedent's "executors, administrators, or assigns," a Surrogate may assert jurisdiction regardless of whether the policy is itself in the State or not. Matter of Miller, 5 Dem. 382, Rollins, Surr. In this case the Surrogate held that such a policy of insurance was not a debt "evidenced by a bond, promissory note, or other instrument for the payment of money only, in terms negotiable or in terms payable to bearer or holder," which class of debt is by § 2478 regarded for the purpose of conferring jurisdiction as personal property at the place where the bond, note or other instrument is. Of course the situs of the property regulates jurisdiction as to the administration of the estate. Isham v. Gibbons, 1 Bradf. 69, 71. Under subd. 2, quoted above, the property brought into the State must be such as "remains unadministered." A foreign administrator cannot, by bringing property in his control into this State, give our court jurisdiction. Matter of McCabe, 84 App. Div. 145.

§ 546. Chose in action a basis; negligent killing of decedent.—Section § 2664, dealing with the bond to be given by an administrator, takes into account as affecting its amount "the probable amount to be recovered by reason of any right of action, granted to an . . . . administrator, by special provision of law."

Section 1902 is such special provision. It reads:

> "The executor or administrator of a decedent, who has left him surviving a husband, wife, or next of kin, may maintain an action to recover damages for a wrongful act, neglect, or default, by which the decedent's death was caused, against a natural person who, or a corporation which, would have been liable to an action in favor of the decedent, by reason thereof, if death had not ensued. Such an action must be commenced within two years after the decedent's death."

It frequently happens that this right of action is the only asset making it worth while to take out letters. The "probable amount to be recovered" is a warrant for jurisdiction. The letters applied for are called limited letters because of the restrictions on the powers of the administrator if he wins the suit. They are discussed below under Limited Letters. But, it seems, that if the death occurs outside the State the cause of action, being statutory, is dependent upon lex loci mortis. Gurofsky v. Lehigh Valley R. R. Co., 121 App. Div. 126. If the law of that State gives no right of action to an administrator, then it is manifest that, barring other assets, there is nothing on which to base administration here. See opinions in McDonald v. Mallory, 77 N. Y. 556; Wooden v. W. N. Y. & P. R. R., 126 N. Y. 10; Meekin v. B. H. &c. R. R., 164 N. Y. 145.

§ 547. Lost, destroyed or revoked will.—Full discussion has been elsewhere had as to what constitutes proper proof of the loss, destruction, or revocation of a will. Where a party, however, petitions for letters of administration on the ground that the decedent left no last will or testament, and this fact is put in issue, the Surrogate must determine the fact of intestacy judicially. The burden of proof that there was a will rests upon those opposing the grant of letters. Matter of Demmert, 5 Redf. 299. So, where there was an application for letters of administration the petition in which alleged that the decedent died without leaving a last will and testament, and it appeared that he had in fact left a will which had previously, however, been denied probate by the Surrogate on the ground that its execution was obtained through undue influence, Surrogate Livingston held that if parties opposing the application for letters alleged that another will had been executed by the decedent which had been destroyed, they must prove that fact, in the pending proceeding, and while of course it was possible that the will might have been destroyed under circumstances not amounting to revocation, that fact must be affirmatively established and that in the absence of such proof the letters must issue. Surrogate Bradford held in Isham v. Gibbons, 1 Bradf. 69, 71, the only mode of showing that decedent left a will is either by the production or original proof of a will before the Surrogate, or by evidence that a will has been duly proved before some other court of competent jurisdiction. In the latter event proof of probate may be directly opposed against the application for administration. But if an unproved will is produced or shown to exist it is proper to stay the application for letters of administration pending the proceedings to prove the will before issuing letters of administration in chief. No prejudice to the persons interested in the estate can be wrought thereby, because of provisions already discussed under which temporary administration can be had.

§ 548. Settlement without administration.—The object of administration being to distribute the estate among those entitled thereto after payment of debts, it follows that, where there are no creditors, the heirs or next of kin may by private agreement settle the estate without taking out letters of administration. Herrington v. Lowman, 22 App. Div. 266, citing Hyde v. Stone, 7 Wend. 354, 357; Wormuth v. Hale, 17 Weekly Dig. 180; Matter of Losee, 119 App. Div. 107, citing Schouler on Executors, 3d ed., § 120; going further yet by saying that, if no reason for administration is shown, letters should be withheld. These family arrangements by which estates have been settled and divided, and property transferred by the next of kin without obtaining letters of administration, where the rights of creditors were not concerned, have been sustained (Herrington v. Lowman, supra), for the reason that, in the absence of creditors, an administrator would be a mere trustee for the next of kin, whose sole duty would be to collect, convert and distribute the estate among the beneficiaries according to their respective interests. Where the whole trust estate is legally and justly distributed and the purpose of the law thus accomplished there is no need of an administrator. Ledyard v. Bull, 119 N. Y. 62, 72. So, also, adult heirs or next of kin may make a valid and enforceable settlement of the estate pursuant to terms of a paper of decedent's not provable as a will. Williams v. Whittell, 69 App. Div. 340. And the validity of the will cannot affect such voluntary agreement, or its enforcement. Chauvet v. Ives, 173 N. Y. 192, 198, aff'g 62 App. Div. 339. These settlements are subject to attack only by creditors or persons interested whose rights were ignored. Ibid. So a judgment creditor may sue to impress a lien upon a trust fund erected by such voluntary settlement. City of N. Y. v. U. S. Trust Co., 78 App. Div. 366. So held even when he failed to present claim pursuant to published notice. Ibid. If there are infants, a settlement under which they receive what they would be entitled to receive had there been an administrator, will be sustained. Where, however, all the parties beneficially interested in the estate are of full age, any voluntary settlement and distribution among them which they may agree to, whether in accordance with the statute of distributions or not, in the absence of deceit or fraud, will be sustained. Ledyard v. Bull, supra.

§ 549. Who entitled to letters of administration.—The Code provides an explicit order of priority among those entitled to administer the estate of an intestate decedent as follows:

> Administration in case of intestacy must be granted to the relatives of the deceased entitled to succeed to his personal property, who will accept the same, in the following order:

1. To the surviving husband or wife.
2. To the children.
3. To the father.
4. To the mother.
5. To the brothers.
6. To the sisters.
7. To the grandchildren.
8. To any other next of kin entitled to share in the distribution of the estate. [See chap. 410, L. 1901, quoted under Distribution, post.]
9. To an executor or administrator of a sole legatee named in a will, whereby the whole estate is devised to such deceased sole legatee.

If a person entitled is a minor, administration must be granted to his guardian, if competent, in preference to creditors or other persons. If no relative, or guardian of a minor relative, will accept the same, the letters must be granted to the creditors of the deceased; the creditor first applying, if otherwise competent, to be entitled to preference. If no creditor applies, the letters must be granted to any other person or persons legally competent. (See Matter of Haug, 29 Misc. 36, making this applicable to § 2643, C. C. P.) Letters of administration shall also be granted to an executor or administrator of a deceased person named as sole legatee in a will. The public administrator in the city of New York has preference after the next of kin and after an executor or administrator of a sole legatee named in a will whereby the whole estate is devised to such deceased sole legatee over creditors and all other persons. In other counties, the county treasurer shall have preference next after creditors over all other persons. If several persons of the same degree of kindred to the intestate are entitled to administration, they must be preferred in the following order: First, men to women; second, relatives of the whole blood to those of the half blood; third, unmarried women to married. If there are several persons equally entitled to administration, the surrogate may grant letters to one or more such persons, and administration may be granted to one or more competent persons, although not entitled to the same, with the consent of the person entitled to be joined with such person or persons; which consent must be in writing and filed in the office of the surrogate. If, in an action, brought or about to be brought, the intestate, if living, would be a proper party thereto, any party to such action, interested in the subject thereof, may apply to the surrogate's court for the granting of letters of administration to himself, or some other qualified person, and upon the jurisdictional facts being satisfactorily shown, and no relative, or guardian of a minor relative, and no creditor, county treasurer or public administrator consenting to such administration, some legally competent person must be appointed administrator. § 2660, Code Civil Proc.

The following provisions have been taken out and re-enacted as § 103 of Decedent Estate Law, and are quoted here to avoid confusion by their simple excision without comment. "If a surviving husband does not take out letters of administration on the estate of his deceased wife, he is presumed to have assets in his hands sufficient to satisfy her debts, and is liable therefor. A husband is liable as administrator for the debts of his wife only to the extent of the assets received by him. If he dies leaving any assets of his wife, unadministered, except as otherwise provided by law, they pass to his executors or administrators as part of his personal property, but are liable for her debts in preference to the creditors of the husband."

The amendment by ch. 184, Laws of 1909, of § 2662 permitting one, having a claim for the funeral expenses of the decedent, to petition for administration, must here be noted. See § 559, post.

§ 550. Statutory priority must control. Since the statute fixes the order of priority, the Surrogate must grant letters to the applicant establishing his priority to the satisfaction of the Surrogate, unless any of the disabilities pointed out later on are shown to exist.

If several claimants clearly belong to different classes specified in the subdivisions of § 2660, the Surrogate's task is a simple one. He merely adjudicates that the petitioner being in such and such a class has priority over the others. But it is the duty of the Surrogate to actually find that the applicant does belong to the class alleged. For example:

WIFE

Where the petitioner claims to be the widow of decedent, the Surrogate may, if the issue be raised, take proof of her actual marriage to the decedent. Matter of Gerlach, 29 Misc. 90. But, it has been held that the fact that the marriage of the widow of intestate is voidable is no answer to her application for letters unless the marriage has been actually declared void by a court of competent jurisdiction. White v. Lowe, 1 Redf. 376, and cases cited. The rule is stated to be, where the contract of marriage is void absolutely, the surviving husband or wife is not entitled to administer, but where it is merely voidable and sentence of nullity has not been declared, the right to administer remains. 1 Williams on Executors, 358.

Where, however, it appears that the wife has been divorced, she is not entitled to administration, Estate of Ensign, 103 N. Y. 284, except where the divorce is one which is not valid under the laws of this State, in which case the wife so actually divorced is entitled to letters in preference to one who subsequently to such divorce married the decedent. Matter of House, 20 Civ. Proc. Rep. 131. But if the wife secures a divorce she may not subsequently assert its invalidity in order to get letters. Matter of Swales, 60 App. Div. 599.

See Matter of Ward, 50 Misc. 483, where petitioner married decedent, having a former husband living. Also Matter of McGarren, 112 App. Div. 503, where petitioner's marriage to decedent had been annulled by Supreme Court.

Also Matter of Wells, 123 App. Div. 79. In this case A, in good faith, marries B, who had a wife, C, living; C died, unknown to A and B, who continue to cohabit and hold themselves out as husband and wife. Common-law marriages are valid in State of their domicile. At B's death A is given letters as his widow.

And see for complete discussion of law, opinion by Beckett, Surr., in Matter of Garner, 59 Misc. 116.

HUSBAND

The right of a husband in administration stands on a peculiar basis. At common law the husband was entitled to administer upon the estate of his deceased wife and to retain and own all assets left after the payment of her debts. Robins v. McClure, 100 N. Y. 328, 333. See also Ransom v. Nichols, 22 N. Y. 110. The development of the legislation on this subject is summarized in Matter of Thomas, 33 Misc. 729, where Thomas, Surr., construing the effect of § 2660, citing Matter of Bolton, 159 N. Y. 129, 133; Robins v. McClure, supra; Matter of Nones, 27 Misc. 165; Matter of McLeod, 32 Misc. 229, states after discussing the provision of the statute, 1 R. S. m. p. 75, §§ 29–30, 2 R. S. m. p. 98, § 79, and Laws of 1867, ch. 782, § 11, "it will be observed that no change in the common-law rule in case where a wife leaves no descendants her surviving is attempted and the opinion of the court in Robins v. McClure, is largely devoted to showing that the common-law rule in such cases remained, notwithstanding the amendment, in full vigor." And he points out that where married women leave descendants, their estates must be administered by administrators appointed as such. The present statutes covering the subject were §§ 2734 and 2660 of the Code. Section 2734 is now § 100, Decedent Estate Law, and is quoted, post, under "Distribution." Section 2660, so much as relates to this, is now § 103 of Decedent Estate Law and is quoted at the end of § 549 above.

This section provides that, if a surviving husband does not take out letters of administration on the estate of his deceased wife, he is presumed to have assets in his hands sufficient to satisfy her debts and is liable therefor. If he takes out letters he is liable as such administrator for her debts only to the extent of the assets received by him.

The section further provides that if he dies leaving any assets of his wife's unadministered, excepting as otherwise provided by law, they pass to his executors or administrators as part of his personal property, but are liable for her debts in preference to the creditors of the husband. This provision dealing with the unadministered estate of the wife, contemplates both the cases where he does and does not take out letters, for it provides that her estate passes to his representatives as part of his personal property to be administered by them, subject to the payment of her debts. Therefore, it has been held that where a wife leaving no issue, dies intestate, survived by a husband and a brother, and the husband subsequently dies without administering the estate, letters issued to the brother without notice to the husband's personal representatives were void and would be vacated upon their application. Matter of Thomas, supra. It will be noted that the personal representatives of the husband in such a case are not required to take out letters of administration on the wife's estate, but they have the right to reduce her estate to their possession as part of his personal property.

CHILDREN

Where one petitions as the child of the decedent, it is a material inquiry whether the petitioner properly falls within that class. Ferrie v. Public Administrator, 3 Bradf. 151, 169. Thus an illegitimate child of a woman subsequently married to a man not its father is not legitimatized by such marriage, and is not one of that man's "children" nor entitled to administer under § 2660. Matter of Pfarr, 38 Misc. 223. Legitimacy will be presumed in the absence of proof to the contrary, but if illegitimacy be proved it affects the right to administer. See Matter of Losee, 119 App. Div. 107. The statute entitling the illegitimate to share in the estate of the mother has been held not to affect the right of administration, which in default of lawful kin belongs to the successive classes indicated in § 2660. Ferrie v. Public Administrator, supra. Surrogate Bradford held (Public Administrator v. Hughes, 1 Bradf. 125), that where the intestate was an illegitimate child, domiciled in England where she died unmarried, leaving assets in New York City, she could have no legal kindred except lineal descendants, for having no legal ancestors she could have no collateral relatives, and that consequently a son of her mother was not entitled to administration; and he accordingly granted letters to the public administrator.

On appeal in the Pfarr case, 79 App. Div. 634, the Appellate Court ordered a reference to take further proof on the question of legitimacy.

FATHER

It is hardly necessary to discuss all the headings of subdivisions of § 2660, but it must be borne in mind in connection with them all that the relationship to the intestate giving priority must be the relationship at the time of his death. For example, in Matter of Seymour, 33 Misc. 271, the intestate at his death left a widow and infant child and also a father, mother, brother and sister. The widow and child died subsequently, the child first. Now it is clear at the death of the intestate the widow had the priority of right to administration and on the death of the child was entitled to the personal property of the decedent. The father, upon her death, petitioned for letters on the estate of the intestate son, and his application was denied.

MOTHER

One distinctive feature must be noted here, although the provision appears in § 2732, under "Order of Distribution" and now known as § 98 of Decedent Estate Law. It is in subd. 9, and ought to be part of § 2660.

"If the deceased was illegitimate and leaves a mother [and no child, or descendants, or widow], such mother . . . . shall be entitled to letters of administration in exclusion of all other persons."

OF NEXT OF KIN ENTITLED TO SHARE IN THE DISTRIBUTION OF THE ESTATE

This subdivision eight has given rise to considerable controversy. Originally the Revised Statutes provided that administration should be granted
