longest more than three months at a time. And when she came to lodge she steered pretty clear of the law—coming for a few nights, you see, and then off again on her own ways.

She grew to be a pretty tough case, Doherty did. And yet there was always something I liked about Doherty. You see she used to sing. Sometimes they do. And once or twice, I've had a chap here who could draw portraits of the rest. Scrawl the walls all over if he wasn't watched.

And then Doherty from the women's cell would hear them, through the wall, and she'd begin. And the fighting and the swearing and all the horrid noise would quiet down; and, true enough, I think they slept. I had a Newfoundland dog that went to sleep when my wife played the cabinet organ.

GRANT AND LEE.

Col. E. W. Avery of Georgia, who was a prisoner of war during the rebellion for a brief period, presents to the Southern soldiers' idea of the two leading generals in the following sketch. He says: General Grant was a square-set, medium-sized person without insignia of rank, dressed in a blue suit and hat, and having on his head a white Panama hat. His face was an entirely unimpressive one, healthy with good living seemingly, but singularly stolid and unemotional. It would be difficult to imagine a more prosaic person. There was no lighting up of the face in conversation, no flashing of the eye under thought or feeling, no quaver of the voice under excitement. The manner was cold, the address impassive. There was, however, to a close observer, one peculiarly observable that in the light of subsequent developments has an illustrative significance. The repose of the man was not inertness and did not so appear. The mouth had a set that was full of meaning. A thin line of lip, fixed, compressed, unquiverable, gave indication of the will within, of the iron steadfastness of the man's character, of the heroic quality of nerve that he so measurelessly possessed.

Of course, then the man created no such speculation in my thought as I now express. That plain, uncommunicative, steady passivity of manner and utter unpretentiousness of appearance inspired no special interest. There was literally not a thing upon which to hang a prophecy of subsequent greatness of achievement. The whole outward individuality of this afterwards remarkable general, this successful handler of grand armies and conductor of gigantic movements was absolutely barren of indicia of his great military capabilities. Essentially a man of action, with less than ordinary capacity of words, and lacking every flashing physical symbol of his power, Grant's exalted career afterwards was a surprise, the more romantic because unforeshadowed and unpredictable.

Lee's magnificent generalship will ever be a glory in the annals of war. The succession of able warriors that he defeated, one after another, will testify in clarion tones to his genius. That Grant conquered Lee after the most terrific fighting known to modern warfare, is his claim to the recognition of the world as a great captain, that as a Southern man I yield with an unquestioning conviction.

It has been the habit of some to depreciate Grant's generalship and to ascribe his success to the blind use of both sides. It is a sorry compliment to Southern generals and armies to say they yielded to a foe that fought without generalship. Lee showed conclusively that numbers without requisite skill of management were of little avail against his strategy. But when superior leadership handled larger forces the combination against an exhausted enemy was invincible. Other Federal generals had the same chance that Grant had.

In my humble judgment General Grant's record as a leader bristles with striking displays of soldierly genius. The heaviest blows the South received Grant administered. Repeated attempts to capture Vicksburg failed. It was Grant that accomplished this decisive achievement that sundered the Confederacy. After the Southern victory at Chickamauga it was Grant at Missionary Ridge that by a brilliant initial success began the movement that ended with Sherman's triumphal march into the beautiful city of Savannah, quartering the Confederacy that had been halved by the fall of Vicksburg. Called to Virginia, where Lee stood, the bulwark of the Southern cause, he had the breadth of grasp to evoke into play force grandly ample enough to serve the purpose and the indomitable tenacity to pound at Lee with never-ceasing blows until his heroic army crumbled and the great strife was ended, and Grant immortalized as the conquering chieftain in the mightiest revolution of the world's history.

Any organization that has for its object the advancement of human happiness or human intellect, anything that tends to the amelioration of the condition of mankind or to lessen the ills and miseries incident to human life, anything that draws closer the ties of mutual sympathy and strengthens the bonds of brotherhood between man and man, is not only worthy of admiration, but of our hearty support and approbation.

The meeting was opened at 8.20 by W. C. T. Deo. Joseph Cushing, and the opening solo was sung by Mrs. Mary French.

It was followed by a fervent prayer by Rev. Bro. E. D. Hall. Bro. Joseph Cushing then made the address of welcome, which is here presented in full.

Another year has rolled away in its rapid course, and again we have gathered to our annual assembly. It seems but yesterday since we met here on our last annual gathering; indeed, we are constantly reminded of the past by the many who are engaged in this work of humanity, it bids us look well to it that none of its precious moments be lost.

We feel that we have abundant reasons to render our grateful acknowledgments to God for the manifold blessings he has conferred upon us and under whose benign and merciful protection we have been so abundantly blessed in its efforts to ameliorate the condition of mankind, and to hasten forward the time when the whole human family shall be saved from the curse of intemperance.

By the blessing of God, we are enabled to report, in rejoicing hearts, that the death has been given to the intemperance which during the past year we have not labored in vain.

On some days like this, it is expected to have some remarks in relation to the order. As the Temple of Honor is a religious organization, it is not worth while for me to speak of its history, or of the work, which during the past eleven years, has been done in this city.

ple was next introduced and received with much applause. After complimenting the speaking and music of the evening, and the efforts of the Temple, he said that Mechanics Temple have reason to be proud of their record, of not only being the Banner Temple of Massachusetts, but the Banner Temple of the United States.

There cannot be found a more ardent band of brothers in all the country. You are situated as a light upon a hill, and stand as an example for the rest of the temples in Massachusetts.

Bro. Frank Porter followed with a splendid solo, which was enthusiastically received.

Bro. Charles Q. Tirrell was next introduced, and gave a very witty piece of information regarding the Brother last up, who was much enjoyed. He then proceeded to emphasize one point, and that was that although many persons have different modes of combating with the evil of intemperance, and he is in our midst, we will never be consumed until we learn that great secret that in life we should not be divided.

Miss Mary F. Mead, of Hingham, then favored the audience with a fine vocal selection, "Roses Tipped with Dew," which was well rendered.

Alvah Raymond, Jr., was the next speaker, and talked about the license question. He said that he was not in favor of it, and that he would not vote for it, and that he would not support it.

Miss Lizzie Pratt gave a piano solo, which was very pleasing, and was highly enjoyed.

Bro. Haylett was next called upon as a representative of Westchester Lodge, I. O. G. T., and after a few pleasant introductory remarks, said that Westchester Lodge, although they are few in numbers, have inherited the inalienable right of light, liberty and happiness.

The Temple of Honor, he said, is a star in our midst, and we have a great work to do for the cause. He said that in the west, where his home is, the people are looking for a better life, and that we have a great work to do for the cause.

Miss Ruth W. Holbrook then gave a vocal selection, "The Starlight," which won the applause its rendering merited.

Rev. Mr. Ryan, of Corner Stone Temple, said that he was very glad to see the Temple of Honor, and that he was very glad to see the Temple of Honor, and that he was very glad to see the Temple of Honor.

split yourself. Rev. Mr. Eldredge, the worthy pastor of the East Weymouth Congregational church, furnished a good story Wednesday evening, at the supper given by the ladies of the society, which was quite a success.

His father, who was a favorite and so prominent a member, was invited to partake of a meal at the residence of a member of his society, and after he had seated himself at the table, the good lady, with most hospitable intent, pressed the food upon his attention, with the remark, "Now, brother Eldredge, eat heartily; eat till you split your sides."

The expression of the good lady matches well with that of a brother journalist, who was asked if he would publish a death which was handed to him. "Oh yes," was the reply, "we are always happy to publish the deaths of our friends."

A timely sermon. Rev. Mr. Frary preached a very able sermon, last Sunday morning, which was well worthy the attention of Congressional ears.

He seemed to think that there existed a very marked analogy between that that lost its savor, and our new pine-two-cent dollars, (?) stamped with the motto, "In God we trust."

FAMILY LIFE.

It is a pity that Col. Robert G. Ingham has not confined himself to saying things like the following, taken from one of his lectures.

I despise a stingy man. I don't see how it is possible for a man to die worth fifty millions of dollars, or ten millions of dollars, in a city full of want, when he meets almost every day the wretched hand of beggary and the withered lips of famine. How a man can withstand all that, and hold in the clutch of his hand twenty or thirty millions of dollars, is past my comprehension. I do not see how he can do it. I should not think he could do it any more than he could keep a pile of lumber when hundreds and thousands were drowning in the sea. I should not think he could do it. Do you know I have known men who would trust their wives with their hearts and their honor, but not with their pocket-book, not with a dollar. When I see a man of that kind, I always think he knows which of the articles is the most valuable. Think of making your wife a beggar! Think of her having to ask you every day for a dollar, or for two dollars, or for fifty cents. "What did you do with that dollar I gave you last week?" Think of having a wife that is afraid of you! What kind of children do you expect to have with a beggar and a coward for their mother? Oh! I tell you, if you have got but a dollar in the world, and you have got to spend it, spend it like a king; spend it as though it were a dry leaf, and you the owner of unbounded forests! That's the way to spend it. I had rather be a beggar and spend my last dollar like a king, than be a king and spend my money like a beggar. If it's got to go, let it go! Get the best you can for your family—try to look as well as you can yourself. When you used to go courting how nice you looked! Ah, your eye was bright, your step was light, and you just put on the very best look you could. Do you know that it is insufferable egotism in you to suppose that a woman is going to love you always, looking as bad as you can! Think of it! Any woman on earth will be true to you forever when you do your level best. Some people tell me, "Your doctrine about loving, and wives, and all that, is splendid for the rich, but it won't do for the poor." I tell you there is, on the average, more love in the houses of the poor than in the palaces of the rich; and the meanness but with love in it is fit for the gods, and a palace without love is a den only fit for wild beasts. That's my doctrine! You can be so poor but that you can help somebody. Good nature is the cheapest commodity in the world; and love is the only thing that will pay ten cents to borrow and lender both. Don't tell me that you have got to be rich! We have all a false standard of greatness in the United States. We think here that for a man to be great he must be notorious; he must be extremely wealthy, or his name must be between the lips of rumor. It is all nonsense! It is not necessary to be rich to be great, or to be powerful to be happy; and the happy man is the successful man. Happiness is the legal tender of the soul. Joy is wealth.

THE CLOCK IN TRINITY'S TOWER.

The clock in Trinity Church (New York city) tower is the heaviest in America. It might seem that in its construction an effort had been made to ascertain how much metal could possibly be planted in a clock. The frame stands nine feet long, five feet high, and three feet wide. The main wheels are thirty inches in diameter. There are three wheels in the time train, and three each in the strike and the chime. The winding wheels are formed of solid casting, thirty inches in diameter and two inches thick, and are driven by a "piston and arbor." On this arbor is placed a jack, or another wheel, pinion and crank, and it takes 850 turns of this crank to wind each weight up. It requires 700 feet of three-inch rope for the three cords, and over an hour for two men to wind the clock. The pendulum is eighteen feet long, and oscillates twenty-five times per minute. The dials are eight feet in diameter, although they look little more than half that size from Broadway. The three weights are about eight hundred, twelve hundred, and fifteen hundred pounds respectively. A large box is placed at the bottom of the clock, that holds about a bale of cotton waste, so that if a cord should break the cotton would check the concussion.

Religious Meetings.

Meetings of deep religious interest have been held at the Methodist Episcopal Church, South Braintree, (E. M. Taylor, Pastor), during the past four weeks, to the spiritual awakening of church members, and people not yet belonging to the fold. The clear, pointed, faithful appeals of divine truths, given by Pastor and Elder, the earnest efforts of pastors from other towns, especially the work of Rev. Mr. Jordan, of Brockton, the fervent, united prayers of brethren and sisters in Christ, have, by the enlightening and converting power of God's Spirit, been attended with most glorious results. Quite a number have been hopefully converted, and we hope and trust many more have so received the Word into their hearts, that it shall be as seed sown in good ground, yet to spring up and bear precious fruit to the honor and glory of God.

Dramatic.

The Ladies' Circle of the First Universalist Society gave a dramatic entertainment last evening, in Lincoln Hall, presenting the drama of "Uncle Robert" and the farce of "Aunt Charlotte's Maid." The characters were rendered with good effect by lady and gentlemen amateurs, and the large audience present were well pleased with the entertainment. Want of space prevents a more extended notice of the performance.

DAVID C. DEFOREST, ESQ. RECOLLECTIONS OF AN OUTCAST.

Mr. DeForest was one of the most interesting men I met, during a four years' residence in South America. He was an American merchant, residing in Buenos Ayres. I had a letter of introduction to him, and found him to be a judicious adviser in business matters. An entry in my journal runs thus:—"Buenos Ayres, March 25, 1817. Called this morning at the counting-room of Mr. DeForest; and finding that as it was a holiday, he would not be in town, I procured a horse, and rode out to his chacara, or country-seat, which is six or eight miles from the city, and not far from the river. A younger brother of Mr. Lynch accompanied me! As it was nearly low water, we took the lower road, along the margin of the river, or, as it appeared, the sea-shore; for, as far as the eye could reach, there was only "one wide water round us spread." Horses here are so plenty and cheap, that their owners soon wear them out, and get others to supply their places. They are almost always on the gallop; and when we were riding through the streets, it seemed more as if we were running a race, than taking a common ride; except when we checked our steeds, to view more leisurely the scenery around us. The day was fine, the sun was bright and pleasant, and a refreshing breeze rolled the little waves along the shore. The white surf, which sometimes almost reached our horses' feet, contrasted well with the hard, black sand on which we were riding; while the far famed La Plata on one side of us, and on the other a landscape prettily drawn by Nature's pencil, presented a view on which the eye might dwell with pleasure. We found Mr. and Mrs. DeForest writing at separate tables; and she said, with a smile, that she was assisting her husband as clerk, and was copying one of his letters. After I had concluded my business with him, it was in vain that I proposed to return to town before dinner. The writing apparatus was laid aside, and we took a walk among his fruit trees. The figs were delicious, and was the first time I had ever plucked them from the trees. His house is on a rising ground; the river is in full view, and on the right is the city of Buenos Ayres, with an extensive, verdant plain between. He has a large hacienda, or plantation; and the Madelira nuts, peaches and other fruit on the table were of its produce. On our way home, Don Manuel and I found it pretty warm and dusty, but we had a pleasant ride.

Mr. DeForest introduced me to General San Martin, who was soon to return to Chili, and whose favorable opinion he thought might be advantageous to me. And he gave me letters which led to the establishment of a mercantile house in Valparaiso and Santiago, in which I was interested. His family was about to embark for this country, and he was to remain a year to settle his affairs. In one of his letters, he asked me whether he, returning home with a fortune, had better engage in business, or build a fine house and enjoy life. I replied, that if I were to return home rich, I should not trouble myself with business. After coming back to this country, he visited several cities, to look at houses; and Mr. Hopkins, at Providence, suiting him best, he had one built like it, in New Haven, Conn., one of the finest sites in that city, and at great cost. He was Consul General of the Argentine Republic; and the annual celebration of the independence of that country, in his elegant mansion, was one of great parade and show and expense. I was not in a situation to know of his benefactions; but heard incidentally of a fund he gave to Yale College, which I learn was to yield $100,000, or more annually, for educational purposes.

Mr. DeForest was a man of commanding form and fine personal appearance, and, naturally, was high-spirited, impetuous, yet dignified, gentlemanly, affable, yet very interesting in conversation. He was in some way connected with a very valuable Spanish prize captured by a Buenos Ayrean privateer, in 1817, and a suit was instituted against him, causing him great annoyance. We exchanged letters occasionally, and his last to me was written only six days before his sudden death in 1825. He was born in Huntington, Conn., in 1771. His wife, Julia Wooster, was born at the same place in 1785 or 1796. They were married Oct. 6, 1811, and sailed for Buenos Ayres in February, 1812. He had visited Buenos Ayres previous to 1809. Mrs. DeForest, with four children and two servants, left Buenos Ayres for New Haven in April, 1817. Mr. DeForest sailed for home in March, 1818, and died in New Haven, Conn., Feb. 22, 1825. Mrs. DeForest died Jan. 1, 1873.

RELIABLE EVIDENCE.
Dr. H. R. STEVENS.
Dear Sir— I will most cheerfully and joyfully testify to the great benefits you have already received in the use of your great and precious Vegetine, for I do not think enough can be said in praise of this medicinal preparation, the benefits of which I have experienced in the most distressing cases of dyspepsia, indigestion, and constipation, and had such beneficial results, that I feel compelled to testify to its merits, and to recommend it to all who are afflicted with any of the above named affections, as a most reliable and safe remedy.

CHAPTER I.

In a large, pleasant room, one evening early in the month of January, were seated three young men. On two sides of the room, from the ceiling to the floor, were shelves covered with books—large, heavy volumes intended to be deeply studied, not read merely for amusement. The apartment was the office, or more properly the study of Dr. Jules Ottignon, and it was he who sat at the table with an open book before him, in which he was apparently absorbed and entirely unconscious of the presence of others.

Through scarcely more than twenty-five years of age, the lines which deep thought and earnest study had drawn upon his forehead showed plainly as he bent over his book, and gave him the appearance of being several years older than he was, which inspired confidence in his knowledge and judgment. But the beaming, laughing eyes, the smiling lips, the whole face, so bright, so cheerful when fully seen, won not only confidence but esteem and love; and Dr. Jules Ottignon, young as he was, already commanded as large a practice as he then desired; for he felt that he needed constant, earnest study, yet and he accepted rather than solicited calls upon him for professional services.

The other two occupants of the room were several years younger than Dr. Ottignon, and had neither of them attained the age of manhood. One was fair, with light brown hair and dark blue eyes. His face was as smooth as a girl's, but it was a frank, honest, handsome face, and there was nothing effeminate in the boy's appearance. His companion was dark, with hair as black as a raven's wing and eyes of so deep a brown that they were almost black. Unlike his friend, though he was but a few weeks his senior in age, he had a heavy moustache, which, with his darker complexion, made him appear much older.

Although the two were firm friends, they differed as much in character as in looks; for Maurice Eustace, a native of a northern state, was cool, quiet and good-natured, while his friend Jose Navarro—Don Jose, Maurice named him—was hot-tempered and imperious, as might be expected of one born to wealth and in the island of Cuba.

The two were engaged in what appeared to be a very interesting conversation, which, however, that they should not disturb the doctor, had been carried on in a low tone, till Navarro, who spoke English fluently, though with a slightly foreign accent which was rather pleasing, said excitedly, and in a louder tone: "Poh! Maurice. You don't believe what you say. There is no true aristocracy except of blood. Nobility comes by birth, and aristocrats are born. They cannot be made from common stock by money."

"You are determined to misunderstand me, Jose," said Maurice. "I assent to the last part of your remark; but I insist that men, and women too, are more influenced by circumstances which surround them and over which they have no control, than they are by the blood of their ancestors. Take yourself, for example. Do you believe that if you had been stolen when you were an infant and had been brought up in ignorance, the blood of the Navarros would have saved you?"

"I do. You remember what Moore says: 'You may crush, you may trample the vase, if you will; The scent of the roses will cling to it still.' I don't know that I quote quite correctly, but that expression may be taken in regard to your question. But let me regard it in the other side of the matter. I wish to argue; and I do believe that if I had been the child of low-born, ignorant parents, traits received from them would have displayed themselves, no matter what advantages might have been afforded me."

LITERATURE.
NEVER MIND.
What's the use of always fretting
At the state we are in?
Ever straggle along the pathway?
Travel on, and "never mind."
Travel on, working, hoping;
Care no lingering shade behind,
At the trials, once encountered—
Look ahead, and "never mind."
What is past is past forever;
Let all fretting be resigned:
It will never help a man to
Look ahead, and "never mind."
And if those who might offend you,
Whom the ties of nature bind,
Should refuse to do their duty—
Look to Heaven, and "never mind."
Friendly words are often spoken
When the feelings are unkind;
Take them for their real value—
Fate them on, and "never mind."
Fate may threaten, clouds may lower,
Enemies may be combined;
If your trust in God is steadfast,
He will help you; "never mind."

CHAPTER I.

In a large, pleasant room, one evening early in the month of January, were seated three young men. On two sides of the room, from the ceiling to the floor, were shelves covered with books—large, heavy volumes intended to be deeply studied, not read merely for amusement. The apartment was the office, or more properly the study of Dr. Jules Ottignon, and it was he who sat at the table with an open book before him, in which he was apparently absorbed and entirely unconscious of the presence of others.

Through scarcely more than twenty-five years of age, the lines which deep thought and earnest study had drawn upon his forehead showed plainly as he bent over his book, and gave him the appearance of being several years older than he was, which inspired confidence in his knowledge and judgment. But the beaming, laughing eyes, the smiling lips, the whole face, so bright, so cheerful when fully seen, won not only confidence but esteem and love; and Dr. Jules Ottignon, young as he was, already commanded as large a practice as he then desired; for he felt that he needed constant, earnest study, yet and he accepted rather than solicited calls upon him for professional services.

The other two occupants of the room were several years younger than Dr. Ottignon, and had neither of them attained the age of manhood. One was fair, with light brown hair and dark blue eyes. His face was as smooth as a girl's, but it was a frank, honest, handsome face, and there was nothing effeminate in the boy's appearance. Although the two were firm friends, they differed as much in character as in looks; for Maurice Eustace, a native of a northern state, was cool, quiet and good-natured, while his friend Jose Navarro—Don Jose, Maurice named him—was hot-tempered and imperious, as might be expected of one born to wealth and in the island of Cuba.

The two were engaged in what appeared to be a very interesting conversation, which, however, that they should not disturb the doctor, had been carried on in a low tone, till Navarro, who spoke English fluently, though with a slightly foreign accent which was rather pleasing, said excitedly, and in a louder tone: "Poh! Maurice. You don't believe what you say. There is no true aristocracy except of blood. Nobility comes by birth, and aristocrats are born. They cannot be made from common stock by money."

"You are determined to misunderstand me, Jose," said Maurice. "I assent to the last part of your remark; but I insist that men, and women too, are more influenced by circumstances which surround them and over which they have no control, than they are by the blood of their ancestors. Take yourself, for example. Do you believe that if you had been stolen when you were an infant and had been brought up in ignorance, the blood of the Navarros would have saved you?"

"I do. You remember what Moore says: 'You may crush, you may trample the vase, if you will; The scent of the roses will cling to it still.' I don't know that I quote quite correctly, but that expression may be taken in regard to your question. But let me regard it in the other side of the matter. I wish to argue; and I do believe that if I had been the child of low-born, ignorant parents, traits received from them would have displayed themselves, no matter what advantages might have been afforded me."

"What is your opinion, doctor?"
Dr. Ottignon, though he had appeared to be absorbed in his book, had heard most of the conversation, and he had been quietly amused to note how the very differences in their births and positions had influenced the opinions of his young friends. Drawing his chair towards the fire, and seating himself between them, he replied:
"Well, I have little doubt Jose, that if you had been born in this country, and had your ancestors for generations lived here, you would, even with the Navarros blood in your veins, have had blood that you now have in nobility by descent. And if Maurice had been brought up to believe that there are different classes in society which cannot and which should not mingle, he probably, almost inevitably would have been influenced to think as you do."

"I am willing to admit that, because it proves just what I have been saying," said Maurice. "Under different circumstances I should have thought that had my parents been poor, uneducated people and if I had enjoyed the advantages I have enjoyed, I should to-day be as intelligent as I am now. And I know that if I had been brought up among vicious people, with only bad influences around me, I might have been bad."

"True," said the doctor; "and yet there is some truth in what Jose says; and, to use a common expression, 'blood will tell.' Still, education and good influences will and frequently do overcome the misfortune of what we term low birth. I firmly believe that if you should take a very young child of refined and intellectual parents, place it with vicious, ignorant people and allow it to grow up with them, the result would be that all traces of its refined ancestry would become obscured. On the other hand, I believe I could go out to-night and take a child from the lowest haunts of vice in this city and by careful, judicious treatment eradicate all of the bad elements which taint the blood of its parents."

"I believe you could," said Maurice. "And I do not," said Jose. "I think perhaps the child of refined parents might possibly be spoiled by constant, life-long association with the low and vicious; though I believe that child would more readily grasp any opportunity to improve its condition than would one born among them. But no amount of careful training ever did upon a sofa; then, turning to the doctor, who with Jose had followed him into the room, he said:
"She was on the sidewalk begging for money. Jose did not mean to strike her—I know he did not. She was nearer to him than he thought."

"Indeed I did not," said Jose, much alarmed for the possible consequences of his hasty temper. Then he asked anxiously: "Is she much hurt, doctor? Will she die?"
Dr. Ottignon comprehended very nearly what had occurred. He asked no questions, and he did not immediately reply to Jose's anxious enquiry, but devoted his entire attention to the little sufferer.

"Poor little thing," he muttered to himself as he put aside the tangled, matted locks from the wounded temple. "Poor child," he added, as he gazed upon the starvation-pinched features and noted the scanty clothing which covered the skeleton form.

His practised eyes saw at once that the wound she received in falling would be as he had pro- vey serious to one who was in good health, he was not so sure how serious it might prove to her. But in pity to Jose, when he again asked anxiously, "Doctor, will she die?" he replied: "No. She is pretty badly hurt, but I think she will come out all right."

He then proceeded to take the necessary steps to restore the child to consciousness; and in a few minutes, when she opened her eyes, and Maurice, who was gazing at her, noted signs that she was awake, she shrieked loudly, as if in dreadful agony: "Don't 'er lick me! 'Er've got it all! Don't 'er lick me!"
As was his duty, Dr. Ottignon had done his best to restore the child; but as he gazed upon her pinched face, her miserably clad, attenuated form, which told a story of want and suffering as plainly as her unconsciously spoken words and the marks of blows upon her neck and shoulders and arms told one of dreadful cruelty, he could not repress the thought: "Poor child, it would be a mercy to let her die now."

But it was not for him to judge. He was a physician for the body; the future of that child was, he knew, to be determined by a power above him; and therefore he persisted in his efforts to save what appeared to almost any one, her wretched life.

At last she opened her eyes and gazed wildly around like a frightened child. Then she darted from the sofa, approached the fire and held out her hands towards it exclaiming: "Warm, warm!"
The doctor, satisfied that she was not very seriously hurt, allowed her to enjoy the fire a few minutes; then approaching her, he said very gently: "Now, little one, come to me."
His words, so gently spoken, were at once responded to; she placed her hands in his and he placed her again on the sofa. Then he said to Jose:
"The little girls all right now; leave her with me and I will take care of her. You and Maurice can go now; but I wish you to send me a carriage from the nearest stand."

And here, for the present we let the subject pass.

BRITISH INFLATION.
To any intelligent mind it is manifest that a rise in prices is the greatest stimulus to trade. One of the effects of a depreciating currency, if that depreciation is gradual and unperceived, is the production of a rise in prices; and, though only apparent, it has, for a time, all the effects of a real rise. Under this delusion the people of England labored for years after the commencement of the great European war. By the year 1863, Bank of England notes depreciated about 30 per cent. An act of Parliament made the notes a legal tender; they were issued with increased profusion; and by the year 1870 the depreciation amounted to 25 per cent. Prices constantly rose; business advanced; people fancied they were rapidly growing rich; and then came a change.

A Parliamentary committee, appointed to ascertain the cause of the high price of bullion, reported that the notes had depreciated, were liable to a continued depreciation, and that the only effectual cure was a resumption of specie payments. But the government was not in a condition to make sacrifices or lessen its demands upon the national purse. Merchants, many of whom, as latterly in our own country, were on the verge of bankruptcy, could not bear to think of a curtailment of bank accommodations; and it was generally agreed that, while war lasted, resumption of specie payments was not to be thought of; but the bank was prohibited from increasing the issue of its notes, and further depreciation was thus prevented.

At last peace came, in 1875; but it was attended by a severe mercantile crisis and very numerous failures; and the merchants had not the courage to resolve on an instant resumption of specie payments. The bank's doctrine was, that time is the safest innovator; and it was resolved that the issue of bank notes should be gradually curtailed, till they rose to par; and then the bank was to resume, which it was said, would occur without the slightest shock. But this process went on so slowly that it was not till 1873, eight years after the war, that the bank paid specie for its notes.

The inevitable result followed, there and then, as it has under similar circumstances in this country. As the effect of a depreciating currency is a constant rise in prices, and a temporary stimulus to trade; so the effect of a gradually appreciating currency is exactly the reverse; it produces a fall in prices; and this continual fall has, for a time, as our countrymen can bear witness, a most depressing effect upon all kinds of industry. It was the natural effect of that system of gradual resumption which the English Parliament saw fit to adopt. It continued constantly to operate till the bank notes rose to par. As in England, so in this country, we have seen how slowly men appreciate and adapt themselves to the new state of things consequent upon the change from war to peace. By not submitting to an immediate resumption of specie payments, many mercantile houses perished, under the lingering agonies of gradual resumption.

Before he could make any further effort to quiet her and convince her that he was a friend who would aid and protect her, a carriage stopped in front of the house, and before the bell rung he had put on his overcoat, gloves and hat, thrown a heavy shawl around the child and taken her in his arms. The poor little frightened thing struggled feebly, but he bore her to the carriage, which he entered with her, and gave some directions to the driver. She submitted to the unaccounted warmth and the motion of the vehicle, she went to sleep.

The doctor of course did not attempt to awake her, and when, after a drive of about half an hour, the carriage stopped in front of a very modest-looking house in a quiet street, she was still peacefully slumbering, and entirely unconscious of the great change which the events of an hour had made in her future prospects.

Fortunate little unfortunate, though she did not know it, Jose Navarro, when he threw her upon the sidewalk, struck the last blow she ever was to suffer.

PASSES.
Mr. Ream Campbell, who fills the office of ticket agent on the Eufrata Line prints the following placard:
IN THOSE DAYS THERE WERE NO PASSES GIVEN.
Search the Scriptures.
Thou shalt not pass—Numbers, 20:18.
Suffer not a man to pass—Judges, 3:28.
The wicked shall not more pass—Nahum, 1:15.
None shall ever pass—Isaiah, 34:10.
This generation shall not pass—Mark, 13:30.
Though they roar yet shall they not pass—Jeremiah, 51:42.
So he paid the fair and went—Jonah, 1:3.

"But, doctor, where will you take her? Certainly not back to those who have abused her. Let me have her; I can do better by her than that," said Jose.

Quick and impetuous to do good as he was to do wrong, there is no knowing what plan he might have formed to benefit the child; but the doctor said, very quietly:
"I think, Jose, you can trust her with me. I will take better care of her than you can."
"But you must let me do something; here, take this, and spend it as you think best for her." And he emptied the contents of his wallet into the doctor's hand.

Dr. Ottignon accepted the money, for he knew that Jose would feel better to be allowed to do something for the child.

Maurice left the office, and Jose was allowed to follow. He suddenly he turned to the sofa, bent down and kissed the dirty face of the little beggar, saying as he did so:
"I am sorry, very sorry that I hurt you."
The child did not appear to appreciate the action nor to comprehend the words; but Dr. Ottignon noted both; and he had a higher opinion of Jose Navarro from that time.

When the door closed upon his young friends, he said to himself: "It is strange that this thing should have occurred just after this discussion. I know nothing about this child, but it seems as if Providence has thrown her in my way, that I may test the correctness of my belief."

Then approaching the sofa, he said:
"Little girl, what is your name?"
"Dun't no. Them calls me 'brat.'"
"Who are they? Your parents?"
"Dun't no."
"Where do you live?"
"Dun't no. 'G' me a penny?"
"I will do better than that. You shall have warm clothes and plenty to eat. But can't you tell me your name and where you live?"
"Dun't no! Dun't no! Oh! 'g' me a penny an' 'le' me go. She'll lick 'un. He'll lick 'un. Le' me go!"

She bounded from the sofa and started for the door; but the doctor caught her and said:
"Don't be afraid. No one shall hurt you. You shall go with me to a nice place where no one will strike you."
The child, however, evidently did not understand him, for she sobbed out the words: "Them'll cum. Them'll lick 'un."
Dr. Jules Ottignon, for a map of his years, had had a great deal of experience with the low and vicious. He had practised among them gratuitously, and as a matter of charity and also that he might study their mental and moral conditions. But in all of his experience he had met with no case like the one before him then—a child apparently about ten years old, which did not appear to be an idiot, but which seemed to have been taught nothing except to beg and to fear a beating.

The subject upon which he was to experiment was certainly a sufficiently unpromising one; but not for a moment did he hesitate about protecting the child from further abuse, nor think of abandoning his rather hastily conceived plan for her improvement. The more difficult the case, the greater would be his triumph should he succeed.

Before he could make any further effort to quiet her and convince her that he was a friend who would aid and protect her, a carriage stopped in front of the house, and before the bell rung he had put on his overcoat, gloves and hat, thrown a heavy shawl around the child and taken her in his arms. The poor little frightened thing struggled feebly, but he bore her to the carriage, which he entered with her, and gave some directions to the driver. She submitted to the unaccounted warmth and the motion of the vehicle, she went to sleep.

The doctor of course did not attempt to awake her, and when, after a drive of about half an hour, the carriage stopped in front of a very modest-looking house in a quiet street, she was still peacefully slumbering, and entirely unconscious of the great change which the events of an hour had made in her future prospects.

And the simple pass—Proverbs, 23:33.

The fashion of this world passeth—1 Cor., 7:30.
Ye shall pass your brethren and help them—Joshua, 1:14.
Let us pass, I pray thee—Numbers, 20:17.

And here, for the present we let the subject pass.

BRITISH INFLATION.
To any intelligent mind it is manifest that a rise in prices is the greatest stimulus to trade. One of the effects of a depreciating currency, if that depreciation is gradual and unperceived, is the production of a rise in prices; and, though only apparent, it has, for a time, all the effects of a real rise. Under this delusion the people of England labored for years after the commencement of the great European war. By the year 1863, Bank of England notes depreciated about 30 per cent. An act of Parliament made the notes a legal tender; they were issued with increased profusion; and by the year 1870 the depreciation amounted to 25 per cent. Prices constantly rose; business advanced; people fancied they were rapidly growing rich; and then came a change.

A Parliamentary committee, appointed to ascertain the cause of the high price of bullion, reported that the notes had depreciated, were liable to a continued depreciation, and that the only effectual cure was a resumption of specie payments. But the government was not in a condition to make sacrifices or lessen its demands upon the national purse. Merchants, many of whom, as latterly in our own country, were on the verge of bankruptcy, could not bear to think of a curtailment of bank accommodations; and it was generally agreed that, while war lasted, resumption of specie payments was not to be thought of; but the bank was prohibited from increasing the issue of its notes, and further depreciation was thus prevented.

At last peace came, in 1875; but it was attended by a severe mercantile crisis and very numerous failures; and the merchants had not the courage to resolve on an instant resumption of specie payments. The bank's doctrine was, that time is the safest innovator; and it was resolved that the issue of bank notes should be gradually curtailed, till they rose to par; and then the bank was to resume, which it was said, would occur without the slightest shock. But this process went on so slowly that it was not till 1873, eight years after the war, that the bank paid specie for its notes.

The inevitable result followed, there and then, as it has under similar circumstances in this country. As the effect of a depreciating currency is a constant rise in prices, and a temporary stimulus to trade; so the effect of a gradually appreciating currency is exactly the reverse; it produces a fall in prices; and this continual fall has, for a time, as our countrymen can bear witness, a most depressing effect upon all kinds of industry. It was the natural effect of that system of gradual resumption which the English Parliament saw fit to adopt. It continued constantly to operate till the bank notes rose to par. As in England, so in this country, we have seen how slowly men appreciate and adapt themselves to the new state of things consequent upon the change from war to peace. By not submitting to an immediate resumption of specie payments, many mercantile houses perished, under the lingering agonies of gradual resumption.

Before he could make any further effort to quiet her and convince her that he was a friend who would aid and protect her, a carriage stopped in front of the house, and before the bell rung he had put on his overcoat, gloves and hat, thrown a heavy shawl around the child and taken her in his arms. The poor little frightened thing struggled feebly, but he bore her to the carriage, which he entered with her, and gave some directions to the driver. She submitted to the unaccounted warmth and the motion of the vehicle, she went to sleep.

The doctor of course did not attempt to awake her, and when, after a drive of about half an hour, the carriage stopped in front of a very modest-looking house in a quiet street, she was still peacefully slumbering, and entirely unconscious of the great change which the events of an hour had made in her future prospects.

Fortunate little unfortunate, though she did not know it, Jose Navarro, when he threw her upon the sidewalk, struck the last blow she ever was to suffer.

PASSES.
Mr. Ream Campbell, who fills the office of ticket agent on the Eufrata Line prints the following placard:

William Charles Maccready was born March 3, 1793, and left the stage in 1851, when he retired to Sherburne, removing in 1860 to Cheltenham, where he died April 27, 1873. He had a good education, read many books in different languages, and made every possible effort to excel in his profession. He succeeded, and ranked, perhaps, with Garrick, Mrs. Siddons, Kemble, and Talma. He had friends among the most distinguished men in England and on the continent and in this country. Yet he may not have met many of the ministers and laymen and women who are esteemed as the excellent of the earth. He visited this country three times, and performed in many of our principal cities. In May, 1849, there was a riot at the theatre in Astor Place, New York, and it is said that seventeen men were killed, and Maccready barely escaped with his life. The disturbance was attributed to Forrest, who thought Maccready was his enemy, and envious, had done much to injure him.

Maccready did a great deal to improve the stage; but efforts in this direction are often unsuccessful. It would seem that he was naturally impulsive, high-spirited and imperious. In his diaries he severely condemns himself, mourns over his failings, and records many prayers for himself and his family. He must have been a very kind and affectionate husband and father, and gave much time and effort for the benefit of his children, of whom he had eight or more. He acquired a handsome fortune, and made numerous gifts. After retiring from the stage, he did much in the way of lectures, evening schools and personal exertions, for the instruction and elevation of the people in his neighborhood. Though a worldly man, he was quite religious in his way of attending church, and in his diaries there is much that is serious and instructive; and the last legible entries, written with a trembling hand, are "God be merciful to me a sinner;" and "Lord, I believe, help thou my unbelief!"

Sir Frederick Pollock was one of his particular friends and his executor, and edited this volume, which contains a number of very interesting letters from Maccready to him and to Lady Pollock. The following is from the London Quarterly: "Maccready survived his retirement from the stage more than twenty-two years, which he spent first at Sherburne, and afterwards at Cheltenham, where he died on the 27th of April, 1873. It was his fate to see many of his 'dear ones laid in earth.' His wife and most of his children preceded him to the grave. He married most happily a second time in 1860. Removed from the stage and its jealousies, all his fine qualities had freer scope; and we think now with pleasure of his venerable and noble head, as we saw it in 1872, and of the sweet smile of his beautiful mouth, which spoke of the calm wisdom of a gentle and thoughtful old age. We have reason to know that he looked back with yearning fondness to the studies and pursuits which had made him famous. The fretful jealousies, the passionate wilfulness of the old times seem to have faded into the dim past, and no longer marred the memory of kindness done and loyal service rendered to him. He had done much good in the sphere which Providence had assigned him, and we believe had assigned him, and that it was not for him to repine, if 'the divinity that shapes our ends' had so shaped his that his work was to be accomplished upon the stage. It is of the man as we then saw him, the man whom we had known as a highly cultivated and essentially kind-hearted gentleman, that we would rather think, than of the actor with all his weaknesses cruelly laid bare."

George Henry Lewes, in his "Actors and the Art of Acting," London, 1875, speaks of Maccready as a man of talent, but of talent so marked and individual that it approached very near to genius, who achieved greatness by incessant study. The remark that "people generally overrate an actor's genius and underrate his trained skill," applies with peculiar force to Maccready, who, according to Mr. Lewes, "would have made an excellent clergyman or member of Parliament; but there is absolutely no evidence that he could have made such a figure either in the Church or Senate as would compare with that which he made upon the stage."

Either man must be content with poverty all his life, or else deny himself some luxuries and save to lay the base of independence in the future. But if a man defies the future, and spends all he earns (whether his earnings be one or ten dollars a day) let him look for lean and want at some future time—for it will surely come, no matter what he thinks. To save is absolutely the only way to get a solid fortune; there is no other certain mode. Those who shut their eyes and ears to these certain facts will be forever poor, and in their obstinate rejection of truth mayhap will die in rags and filth. Let them so die and thank themselves. But no! They take a sort of recompense in cursing fortune. Great waste of breath. They might as well curse the mountains or the eternal hills.

TOWN AND VICINITY.

The Case of John Collins, who was arrested last week in connection with the death of Patrick Cahill, (an account of whose mysterious death was given in our last week's issue), came up in the District Court, at Quincy, before Judge Bumpus, by continuance. The court-room was filled to repletion with a crowd of spectators. District Attorney French appeared for the Government, and John L. Eldridge Esq. of Quincy, for the defense. The District Attorney, in opening the case, informed the court that after a careful perusal of the evidence, and being satisfied of the case had undergone a most searching investigation by the officers, he was of the opinion that the evidence was not of a sufficient character to warrant the court in sending the case to the Grand Jury; that there was no probability of the Government obtaining any new evidence, and he recommended that the defendant should be discharged.

Judge Bumpus said that he coincided with the remarks of the District Attorney. He had examined the several witnesses separately and under oath, and in his opinion their testimony did not warrant the further retention of the accused, and he accordingly ordered his discharge.

The decision of the court was generally expected, and, judging from the vociferous applause with which it was received, met with universal approval.

The following is a copy of the record of the autopsy made by Medical Examiner C. C. Tower, as reported to Judge Bumpus of the East Norfolk District Court, which we publish according to announcement last week:

Having been notified by Constable Robert F. Shaw that the dead body of a person "supposed to have come to his death by violence," was found at a place called Goo Hollow, on Broad St. Weymouth, I repaired to the place and took charge of the body. Having viewed the same, and made personal inquiry into the cause and manner of the death, I deemed a further examination necessary, and received authority in writing from the Selectmen to make an autopsy. The post mortem examination took place between the hours of 9 and 10 P. M. on the ninth day of March, 1878, at the residence of the deceased, whether the body had been removed when taken from a ditch of water, in which it was found about 8 1/2 o'clock A. M.

The body was dressed in coat, shirt, under-shirt, pants, drawers, stockings and boots. There was considerable redness of the face, especially under the collar and lapels of coat, between shirt and coat, and on rear portion of seat of pantaloons. Clothes wet with water; face dry and soiled with mud; eyelids livid and partially open; pupils considerably dilated; eyes fringed with mud; back of neck, left ear, nostrils and mouth were filled with mud, hair on top of head dry, or nearly so—that on back and lower part of head wet, and more or less matted with black mud. Lips parted, the lower abraded on inner side; teeth slightly separated, the tip of tongue pressing against them and bearing imprints of the same. Several scratches on forehead, neck, chest, nose and forehead, extending from the latter an inch and a half on hairy scalp; patches of abrasions of cuticle over right cheek-bone and on forehead; bruise marks over outer extremities of each eyebrow, attended with some infiltration of blood in the tissue about the orbit. In the upper portion of forehead there was a shallow incision wound, half an inch long, which corresponded exactly to the sharp edge of a small flat stone found on the ground near the ditch, which stone was stained with blood and had adhering to it a few short pieces of human hair resembling that of the deceased. Scratches on back of right hand.

All the above described abrasions, cuts, bruises and scratches, were superficial, and did not penetrate through the true skin. Palm and fingers of left hand black with mud. Right hand less dirty, but presented a peculiar appearance, as if having been soaked in water. Cuts, abrasions, or gross discoloration of skin, well developed; pinkish discoloration of dependent parts of body and limbs. Stomach contained about six ounces of thin fluid of a reddish color, giving out a decidedly alcoholic odor. Floating upon this fluid were a few masses of dirty-black stratified mucus, resembling bronchial sputa. The stomach also contained several lumps of mud and sand. Veins of stomach distended with dark blood; mucous membrane deeply congested. Lungs distended. Moderately firm pleuritic adhesions over upper portion of right lung, extending everywhere downwards by strong pleuritic adhesions to chest wall and to diaphragm. Trachea, bronchial tubes, smaller bronchia and air cells filled with pinkish frothy mucus, which also issued from mouth and nostrils. Weight of lungs, trachea and their contents of blood and fluid, three pounds. Heart rather large; left ventricle fringed contracted and hypertrophied; right ventricle fringed; both cavities containing fluid blood, the right cavity the larger quantity. Weight of heart eight ounces. Liver deeply congested, otherwise normal, weight 2 1/2 lbs. Kidneys rather large, congested. Weight of both, 9 to 10 ounces. Brain texture healthy; membranes sound; venous sinuses gorged with blood. Other organs normal in appearance. No fracture of skull or any other bones.

The cause of death, in my opinion, resulted upon the view and autopsy, was asphyxiation, resulting from drowning.

C. C. Tower, Medical Examiner of Norfolk District.

Jurors.
Jurors drawn for the Criminal Term of the Superior Court, which comes in on Monday, April 8th, next, Samuel Cook and Gilman B. Loud.

Party.
The Martha Washington Costume Party at Lincoln Hall, Friday evening, April 5th, promises to be one of the most interesting costume parties of the season. The committee state that over fifty costumes are already engaged, and there seems to be an unusual interest manifested, excited, no doubt, by the suggestions to the mind of the beautiful and unique costumes worn by both ladies and gentlemen at that period.

EAST WEYMOUTH.

Our New Postoffice.
Capt. ANDREW J. GARNEY, will enter upon the duties of his office Monday next, April 1st. Captain Garney called in the services of the United States April 28th, 1861, as a private in Company H, 12th Regiment Infantry, Massachusetts Volunteers. The Regiment was mustered into the Government service July 23d, 1861, and left Massachusetts under the command of Colonel Fletcher Webster, for the seat of war. In a little more than a year from that date, Aug. 11th, 1862, Private Garney was promoted to First Lieutenant, for gallant conduct. He afterwards received his Second Lieutenant's commission, and on the 21st of the following December, he was commissioned as a Captain, for gallant behavior, and was assigned to the command of Company I, January, 1863, which position he held until he received the wound which came so very near depriving him of his left arm, May 28th, 1864, his arm being received in the dreadful battles of the Wilderness.

On the following month of June, he returned to his home in Weymouth, to recover from the effects of his wound, and recuperate his shattered health. Two months from the date of his receiving this wound, July 5th, 1864, the Regiment was honorably discharged.

After remaining at home a short time, he again went into the service as Captain of Company Unattached Heavy Artillery, on the 25th of September, 1864, carrying his left arm in a sling, and served in this honorable position until the close of the Rebellion.

On the 20th of September, 1865, the famous "State Constabulary" was established, with Col. William S. King as Chief, and our brave soldier was among the first to receive a commission as a State Constable, confining it to necessary purposes of medicinal and mechanical wants, would suffice. Statutes of prohibition are directed against the indiscriminate sale of gunpowder and other fulminants—against arsenic, strychnine and other deadly drugs; and assuredly this great creator of the fountains of morality and virtue should not be less leniently treated in this connection.

The speaker, in conclusion, said his heart was a grateful one in beholding the vigorous prosecution of the temperance work by the church, whose membership, should above all other men and women, abound in labor for the restoration of the fallen and the deliverance of mankind from the bondage of sin in all its hideous forms. He closed with an earnest and pathetic appeal to all his hearers to "renew the spirit," and the choir and audience responded to this appeal with the hymn bearing the title.

Mr. G. E. Pratt, of Braintree, was invited to address the audience, and added a few well timed and effective words, appealing to those before him to unite heart and hand in the good cause, until this course should be entirely overthrown. We can give but a very brief sketch of the remarks of each of the speakers, as other matters engaged largely upon our space. The meeting was one of the most interesting of the course, and a continuance of this Sabbath evening temperance work is being urged by members of the Reform Club.
