CHAS. SEDELMAYER, Publisher and Art dealer, Paris, has the richest stock of original pictures in Europe.

His gallery includes over 800 works by Old Masters, of which this Catalogue describes only a portion, and a similar number of pictures by living artists, and painters of the Barbizon School.

CHAS. SEDELMAYER, who imported and sold to the United States the two celebrated pictures by Munkacsy « Christ before Pilate » and « Christ on Calvary », controls the works of this artist and those of V. Brozik, Tito Lessi, Eugene Jettel, etc.

He publishes every year a selection of fine and important plates, of which only a small number of proofs are printed.

He has just issued the first volume of a most extensive book in 8 volumes on Rembrandt, containing reproductions of all the pictures of this master; the text by Doctor W. Bode, Director of the Berlin Gallery. Subscriptions now received.

The prospectus of this book, and illustrated catalogues of other publications, to be had at CHAS. SEDELMAYER'S, 6, rue La Rochefoucauld, Paris.

16. — Landscape with a Water-mill

On the right, an overshot water-mill, with a red-tiled roof, and a large wheel under cover near it. A wide stream of water flows in front of the mill, and extends along the foreground of the picture. Two peasants, one with a pole in his hand, are on the bank, near a fallen tree. On the left in front, a large cottage, and a cluster of trees, through an opening in which passes a road leading in an oblique direction to the distant country. Two men are on the road, and a third is close to the paling of the house. Several cottages, nearly concealed by trees, are visible in the middle distance.

Signed and dated 1667 on the left.

Panel, 30 1/2 in. by 43 in.

There is a replica of this picture, darker in tone, with variations in the figures, in the Brussels Museum. It bears neither signature nor date.

34. — The Death of Dido

Dido
The Queen of Carthage, stripped of her clothing, a crown of pearls and jewels on her golden hair, sits on the edge of a couch, covered with a purple mantle edged with ermine, on which a statue of Æneas lies in state. Her eyes overflowing with tears, her countenance full of despair, she gazes heavenward, and plunges the sword into her bosom. Beneath the couch are various combustibles, to which a lighted torch has just been applied.

Canvas, 71 3/4 in. by 45 1/4 in.

From the Collection of G. E. Lanfranconi, Presburg, Hungary.

No. 175 in the Catalogue of Rubens's effects made after his decease, in 1640, for the sale of his works of art.

38. — A Fresh Gale

Described in Smith's Catalogue (part VI, p. 88, n° 277) as follows :

« A sea view, represented under the aspect of a fresh breeze, and the appearance of rain. This clever picture is distinguished from others by a small boat lying amidst breakers, near a sand-bank on the right, with two men in it pulling in their nets. In the centre of the second distance are two fishing boats, beyond which are three vessels of a similar description, and a fourth is on the left, with a small boat near her. The view is bounded by a line of low coast, on which are seen a ruin, a number of cottages, and a town. »

In the centre of the picture a young man is employed in tilting a barrel with great care, anxiously watched by a maiden, who stoops to receive its last remaining contents. On the left sits an old man, deeply interested in the success of the operation, and behind him several boys, whose ill-disguised sorrow at the prospect of the slender potations which the position of the cask seems to promise them, is most faithfully portrayed. Behind the barrel, on the right, is a virago, whose uplifted arm and brandished shoe indicate her readiness to chastise the unsuccessful experimentalist on the almost drained cask.

70. — Portrait of Giovanna Tornabuoni

(This lady was a member of the Albizzi family at Florence, and married Lorenzo Tornabuoni in 1486; the features are identical with those of a full-length female figure in Ghirlandaio's fresco of the « Visitation » in the choir of the church of Santa Maria Novella, at Florence; the same features appear on the cast of a medal, inscribed Joanna Albiza Uxor Laurentii de Tornabonis.)

Half-length of a lady, in profile, turned to the spectator's left; her light golden hair falls in waves over her cheek and ear, which it partly conceals, and is gathered up in a thick plait to the back of her head. Round her neck is a cord, from which is suspended a jewel, set with a large ruby, and with three pendant pearls. Her hands are clasped in front of her, and hold a folded handkerchief. On one of the fingers of each hand is a ring set with a jewel. Her dress is exceedingly rich, cut square, and showing a chemisette of gathered lawn. The sleeves of the inner dress are of crimson silk, divided into lozenges, in each of which is embroidered a sprig, a white flower with two leaves; they are slashed in places, and show two large puffs in front of the shoulder and five down the arm; part of a large opening is indicated at the elbow. The outer dress is a very rich pale amber brocade of a varied pattern. The background of the picture represents a niche or recess; in one corner of the sill is a jewel set with a ruby, two pearls, and three other stones, surmounted by a dragon. In the opposite corner, and behind the figure, is a book bound in black: above this is a tablet inscribed:

RAPHAEL SANZIO

75. — The Madonna of the Convent of Sant'Antonio at Perugia

This celebrated altar-piece, known also as the « Colonna Madonna », which Raphael painted in 1505 for the nuns of Saint Anthony of Padua at Perugia, consists of two pictures.

The principal panel represents the holy Virgin, dressed in a red robe and a blue mantle worked with gold, seated on a high, richly adorned throne. On her right knee the infant Saviour sits clothed in a white tunic, edged with blue, the parti-coloured scapular of Saint Anthony of Padua embroidered on the shoulder; he also wears a brown belt and blue cloak. The Virgin looks with an expression of tender feeling, at the little Saint John, who, standing on her left side and pressing forward under the guidance of her hand, is dressed in a shirt of camel's hair and robes of green, gold and purple. He folds his hands and looks up lovingly at the divine Infant, who answers him with a blessing. At the sides stand Saint Catherine, seen in profile, her right hand on the wheel, and Saint Cecilia, with a book in her hand, both saints holding palms. Before them stand Saint Peter and Saint Paul, each holding an open book. In the background a landscape with hills under a clear sky.

Panel, 67 in. by 67 in.

In the lunette, the Eternal Father is depicted as an aged man with a bald head and dark forked beard, a golden globe in his left hand, his right raised in the act of benediction. Two seraphs float in the blue ether behind him, and two winged angels, one on the left with hands clasped in prayer, one on the right with his arms across his breast, hover in the heavens at his side.

Panel, semi-circular, 28 1/2 in. by 67 in.

The first writer who described this work was Giorgio Vasari (1512-1574) in his « Lives of the most excellent Painters, etc. », published at Florence in 1550. He writes of it as follows: « In the city of Perugia, Raphael was commissioned to paint a picture of Our Lady, by the nuns of Saint Anthony of Padua. The Infant Christ is in the lap of the Virgin and is fully clothed, as it pleased those simple and pious ladies that he should be. On each side of Our Lady are figures of Saints, San Pietro, namely, with San Paolo, Santa Cecilia and Santa Catarina. To those two holy virgins the master has given the most graceful attitudes. He has also adorned them with the most fanciful and varied head-dresses that could be imagined — a very unusual thing at the time. In the lunette above this picture he painted a figure of the Almighty Father, which is extremely fine, and on the predella three scenes with small figures.... The whole work is without doubt very admirable; it is full of devout feeling and is held in the utmost veneration by the nuns for whom it was painted. It is likewise very greatly commended by all painters.

RAPHAEL SANZIO

In 1677 the nuns who owned the picture asked permission to sell it « to pay their debts ». The central part and the lunette were sold to Antonio Bigazzini, a nobleman of Perugia. Shortly afterwards the picture passed into the possession of the Colonna family at Rome, hence its name, the « Colonna Raphael ».

At the beginning of our century (in 1802) it passed from the Colonna family to Francis II., King of Naples. It was a very favorite work of his, and was hung in his bedroom in the Royal Palace. When the revolution of 1860 broke out and the King was driven from his throne, the Raphael accompanied him in his wanderings, and the King succeeded in conveying it safely with his treasures to the fortress of Gaëta. The defence of this fortress during a siege of several months was signalized by the gallantry shown by the King, and more particularly by the Queen, sister of the Empress of Austria. When Gaëta fell in 1861, and the King went into exile, he again took the picture with him, and had it safely transported to Spain. He was accompanied in his flight by his financier and factotum, formerly Spanish Minister at Naples, upon whom he had conferred the title of Duke of Ripalda. The King, when he left Madrid, confided the Raphael to the custody of the Duke, and later authorized him to sell it.

In 1867 Mr. (now Sir) Charles Robinson reported that he had been shown the famous picture at Madrid, and had received a hint that it might possibly be for sale. Sir William Boxall, the Director of the National Gallery, went to Madrid, saw the picture, stated that it was in fine condition, and was anxious to obtain it. Sir William Gregory went to Mr. Disraeli who was then in office and told him all about the picture. Disraeli listened and said : « Get it ».

Sir William remarked that he was afraid it would cost a very large sum. « Get the picture », insisted Disraeli. Ultimately the conduct of negotiations was confided to Baron Rothschild, who commissioned Mr. Bauer, his agent at Madrid, to purchase the famous altar-piece. But in the meantime the King's financier had entered into negotiations with the French, who learned that England was disposed to buy. The Duke was acquainted with the Empress Eugénie, who was always ready to serve a friend and countryman. She was also desirous to secure the picture for the Louvre. It was sent to Paris, and the sum of one million francs was asked for it; the French press insisted that it was cheap at the money, and that the honour of France was involved in the purchase.

This was in May 1870, on the eve of one of the greatest political events of the century, for, some weeks later, the honour of France was involved in a much graver question. The war broke out between France and Germany with what disastrous results to the former all the world knows. The Empress could no longer protect the picture, unprotected as she was herself when she fled to England. Of course all negotiations were at an end. The King, when Rome was taken, and proclaimed the capital of United Italy, gave up all hope of recovering his lost throne; he retired into private life, took the title of Duke of Castro, reduced his household, and so arranged his financial affairs, that he was no longer under the necessity of selling his beloved picture, of which, in fact, he retained possession until his death. He lent it to the South Kensington Museum, where it was exhibited in the Raphael Room and where it remained till lately. After the King's death, his heirs decided to dispose of it.

The National Gallery had in the meantime had an opportunity of securing another Raphael. When the Duke of Marlborough was permitted by the Court to sell his works of art, the German Government hastened to buy some important pictures from him, and as there was a general fear that it might acquire his famous Raphael, and that such a rare work, which had been so long in England, might leave the country for ever, the Government, urged by the art-loving world in England, unhesitatingly asked Parliament to vote the required sum, 70000 pounds sterling, for the purchase of this picture. —

« Now the « Ansidei Madonna » is secured for ever for the National Gallery, where it is universally admired as its most precious treasure. Sir Frederick Burton, the late Director, valued it a much higher figure than the cost price — at no less than 110000 guineas. »

(Extract from the Daily News.)

It is a curious coincidence that these two great altar-pieces by Raphael, both executed about 1505-1506, should have come into the market in our time within such a short period.

Compared with the Ansdei Madonna, the altar-piece of Saint Anthony of Padua is more important, as regards size and richness of composition. (See reproduction in proportionate dimensions of the two pictures on the following page.) The former measures 85 inches by 58; the latter (including lunette above), 96 inches by 67. In the Ansdei Madonna, there are only four figures, the Virgin and Infant Christ with a male saint on either side. In the Colonna Madonna, the charming figure of the little Saint John makes an animated group with those of the Mother and Child; and the composition is further enriched by the addition of the two lovely female saints attending them.

It therefore consists of seven figures, that is to say of three more than the Ansdei Madonna. There is no such number in any Madonna picture painted by Raphael, except the Madonna di Foligno, which also has seven figures. But the Colonna altar-piece, unlike any other picture by Raphael, has a second picture above, the lunette; consequently the Colonna altar-piece is the richest and the most important composition of all the various Madonna-pictures of Raphael.

Passavant, the greatest authority on Raphael, gives a detailed description and history of the picture in his book on Raphael, vol. I, page 87 et seq., and mentions it also vol. II, page 39, and vol. III, page 90.

This author says that Raphael, when a child of 8 years only, learnt the art of painting from his father Giovanni Santi, and at the age of 12 years from the celebrated painter Perugino. He states that, before he painted the altar-piece of Sant'Antonio, he had already painted 25 other pictures, among which were important works like the Sposalizio, the Coronation of Nicholas the Hermit, Christ on the Cross, the Adoration of the Magi, the Coronation of the Virgin and several famous Madonna pictures.

J. A. Crowe and G. B. Cavalcaselle in « Raphael, his Life and Works », vol. I, page 217 to 221, also give the genesis of the Madonna of Sant'Antonio, and speak of it as follows :

THE MADONNA DI SANT' ANTONIO.

THE MADONNA DEGLI ANSIDEL.

« The union in one picture of the best of his Peruginesque time with the earliest of the Florentine period.... »

« The monumental attitudes, the breadth of the forms, the grace and beauty of the females, and the grand style of the draperies prove absolutely Raphael's study of the works of Da Vinci and Della Porta. »

Seroux d'Agincourt, « Histoire de l'Art par les monuments », 1823, page 172, plate CLXXXII, describes and gives an engraving of the Colonna altar-piece and shows, by comparison with an altar-piece by Perugino, the influence which the latter exercised on Raphael.

D^r Nagler, in his « Allgemeines Künstler Lexicon », 1845, vol. XIV, pages 301-302, also fully describes the picture and gives its history.

It is mentioned in M. Bryan's « Dictionary of Painters », vol. II, page 451.

Also in H. Knackfus's « Raphael », page 16, and in many other works on Raphael.

There is study in pen and ink by Raphael for the figure of the Eternal Father in the Wicar Museum at Lille.

The picture was lithographed (in-fol.) by Deluise and Ludwig Ritter.

A fine and important line engraving after the principal panel was executed by T. A. Juvara while the picture was at the Royal Palace at Naples. The plate was published by the Royal Calcografia at Rome, in July 1873.

TURNER (JOSEPH M. W.), R. A.

98. — The Deluge

The scene is a hilly landscape, flooded by the rising water on the eve of the cataclysm. To the right the beasts are wading in a long file, towards the arch which is indistinctly seen in the distance, and in the sky above a long flight of birds passes in the same direction. To the left, on an eminence, is a sumptuous tent of scarlet cloth, in which two recumbent figures are faintly seen, asleep near a blazing fire.

Canvas, 29 1/2 in. by 29 in.

From the Collection of the Rev. Judkins.

TURNER (JOSEPH M. W.), R. A.
(1775-1851)

99. — Queen Mab's Grotto

A landscape with a large river, a two-arched ruined bridge in the middle-distance and the ruins of an old castle on a rocky height beyond. On the right in the foreground are several nymphs, one of whom is carried through the air by a swan; on the left is a boat with a female standing in it, strewing flowers into the river. In the centre, a funeral barge glides along towards the front. Twilight effect.

Canvas, 28 3/4 in. by 35 1/4 in.

From the Collection of the Earl of Arran.

100. — Rockets and Blue Lights (Close at Hand) to warn Steamboats off Shoal Water

The rough sea is breaking on the shore and over a pier in the middle-distance, on which, to warn vessels off the shoal, rockets are fired and blue lights are burning, the blaze of the former reflected in the shallow water of the foreground. A group of eight figures on the beach to the left, apparently watching some vessels, indistinctly seen in the distance to the right. Stormy sky.

EDITOR'S PREFACE

ERE we called upon to decide which of the great masters enjoys the largest share of present popularity, we should certainly give the palm, not to the divine Raphael, darling of Popes and princes, not to the colossal Michelangelo, not to the Flemish painter-prince, Rubens, whose contemporaries showered riches and honours upon him, but to the modest Dutchman, who painted less for the delight of others than for his own satisfaction, who was forgotten and neglected by the world around him, and who ended his days in poverty and humiliation. That it has been reserved for our own age to estimate Rembrandt's genius aright, and to assign him his true rank in the hierarchy of art, may be explained by the fact that we of this generation have a deeper comprehension of pictorial quality, of characterization, of objective truth, than the critics of the last two centuries. Rembrandt's art, based as it is on the earnest study of Nature, is not only enthralling to the expert; it fascinates the amateur by its simplicity and directness of conception, by its depth and intensity of emotion, by the magic of that mysterious light in which it bathes its figures. Thus it satisfies both artistic tendencies, charming alike the realist and the idealist. Significant proof of the estimation in which Rembrandt is held may be found in the rapid succession of studies and publications dealing with him during the last twenty years, and the high prices commanded by his pictures. One of these was recently bought for a national Museum for 20,000 guineas, and certain rare plates among his etchings fetch from 1000 to 1500 guineas at auction.

The publisher whose name appears below has been for years a fervent worshipper of the master. In his capacity as an art-dealer he has made it, as far as possible, his principal aim to find out and acquire the works of Rembrandt, and over sixty pictures by the great painter have passed through his hands. It will be readily understood how eagerly he undertook the publication of the monumental work for which Dr Wilhelm Bode has been collecting material throughout some fifteen years. He knew Dr Bode to be not only the foremost living critic of the old masters in general, but the greatest authority of our times on Rembrandt in particular.

That such an enterprise involved a large outlay, and presented difficulties of an unusual kind, is obvious, if it be taken into account that the master's pictures are scattered throughout the length and breadth of the civilized world — from St. Petersburg to Chicago — that the author was obliged to visit every public and private gallery in order to examine and describe Rembrandt's acknowledged works, and search for others hitherto unrecognized, and that it was further necessary to send an experienced photographer to many remote places and private houses, to photograph every authenticated work by the most recent orthochromatic process, as a preliminary to its faithful reproduction in heliogravure.

Author and publisher have done their utmost to produce a work unique of its kind, for it deals with the master on a scale and with a completeness never before attempted, and of such a quality as to render it a fitting literary monument to the great Dutchman. The object of the undertaking was to place the whole of the master's pictures before the student, not only in detailed descriptions, but by means of the most finished reproductions.

In conclusion, the publisher ventures to hope that the efforts which have been made to carry out this great work worthily will find their reward in the sympathetic recognition of the art-loving public.
