ÉMULATI-F, VE [é-mu-la-ti-f, i-v] adj. emulative.

ÉMULATION [é-mu-lä-si-ôn] n. f. emulation.

Syn.—ÉMULATION, RIVALITÉ. Emulation (emulation) is a noble sentiment which requires of us assiduous efforts to equal or surpass those in the same career as ourselves; rivalité (rivalry) is a jealous feeling, from the dictates of which we strive to carry off some object that is sought by another. The first excites to exertion and implies esteem; the second irritates; it implies a conflict of interests, and consequent hostility. The one wishes to deserve success, the other to obtain it; the one is a praiseworthy emotion, the other is often accompanied by the most ungenerous and evil impulses.

Avec —, with =; emulously; par —, emulously.

S. m. — ENNEMI, ADVERSAIRE, ANTAGONISTE. Ennemis (enemies) seek to injure each other from a feeling of hatred. Adversaires (adversaries) set up opposing claims, and, prompted by self-interest, often pursue each other with animosity. Antagonistes (opponents) from a difference of opinion take opposite sides, and in defending their own position, not infrequently manifest acrimony towards one another. The first name war, has personal violence, and aim at each other's destruction. The second contain themselves with appropriating the desired object, or depriving their rivals of it; cupidity is generally the cause of their difference. The third mutually oppose each other, from a desire on the part of each to prove that he is in the right; matters of taste and opinion are almost always the subjects of their debates. There are active nations whose subjects are born enemies (enemies) of those of a neighboring nation. A rival leader is a more formidable adversaire (adversary) than the most eloquent advocate. Scéliger et d. Pétiv us were bitter antagonistes (opponents).

Ne pas - à en, not to understand; to have no skill in. - bien, to know what one means; - bien avec q. u., to have a good understanding with a. o.; - comme larrons en foire §, to be as great (intimate) as inkle-reavers. Cela s'entend, be it understood; it being understood; of course; † to be sure.

Syn.—ENTENDRE, COMPRENDRE, CONÇOÛRE. Entendre has reference to what is said—to the tone in which one speaks, the turn of a phrase, the precise meaning of an expression, comprehension is applied to principles, lessons, and speculative knowledge in general; concevoir is applied in connection with forms, arrangements, projects, and plans. We entendons (understand) languages; we concevons (comprehend) sciences; we concevons (conceive) ideas connected with the arts. It is diffeult to entendre (understand) what is obscure, or to comprehend (comprendre) what is abstract, to concevoir (conceive) what is confused.

Syn.—ENTENDRE, ÉCOUTER, OÛIR. Entendre (to hear) is to receive the impression of sound; écouter (to listen) is to give ear, to attend carefully in order to entertain (hear). Ouir differs from entendre in that it denotes a more indefinite sensation. We have sometimes ouï (heard) persons speak, without having entendu (understood) what they said. It is often expedient to pretend that one has not entendu (heard) an offender remak. It is dishonorable to écouter (listen) to a private conversation. To answer appropriately, it is necessary to have ouï (heard) distinctly.

ENTENDRE, v. n. 1. l. § to hear; 2. (à, to) to attend; to pay attention; 3. (à) to acquiesce (in); to approve (of); to consent (to); 4. (que, [subj.]) to require (to); to expect (to); to mean (for a. o. to); to intend (for a. o. to).

J'entends qu'on fasse bien tout ce qu'on fait, I require, mean, expect, intend every thing that is done to be done well.

- clair, to hear well, distinctly; - dur, not to hear well; to be hard of hearing. Ne savoir auquel -, not to know whom to listen to.

Syn. — ÊTRE, EXISTER, SUBSISTER. Être is applicable to all kinds of actions, qualities, substances, and relations, and to all varieties of being, whether real or ideal; it generally denotes the existence of some modification or property in a subject. Être is used with substances only; it indicates actual être (being), and nothing more. Subsister is applied with equal propriety to both substances and relations, but conveys an allusion to the duration of their existence which is foreign to the meaning of the other two words. Man est (it) inconstant; the phoenix existe (exists) no longer; all human institutions subsistent (subsist) but for a time.

— recevable, fair excuse; sottise —, foolish, silly —. Sans —, 1. without an —; 2. inexcusable; unjustifiable; unwarrantable. Accepter, recevoir une —, to accept an —; exiger des —s, to demand, insist upon an apology; faire une —, to make an —; faire — à q. u., to beg, to ask a. o.'s pardon; faire, présenter des —s (to), to apologize (for); to make an apology (for); prendre q. ch. pour —, to excuse a. o.'s self on account of a. th.; présenter une —, to offer an —.

Syn.—EXCUSE, PARDON. We make an excuse (apology) for an apparent fault; we ask pardon (pardon) for a real offence. In the former case we act from the requirements of civility, with the view of disclaiming any intention of injuring or offending; in the latter, we are influenced by a repentant spirit, or a desire to avert punishment, or stop the hand of vengeance. A truly noble mind, when it has done a wrong, is not unwilling to excuse (apologize) for it. A kind-hearted prince would rather pardon (pardon) than punish offenders.

Syn.—FAIM, APPÉTIT. Faim (hunger) has reference merely to the want of food, whether it proceeds from long abstinence or natural voracity. Appétit (appetite) has more connection with taste, and has its origin not only in the requirements of the stomach, but also in the pleasure that is received from eating what is palatable. The first is more pressing, but is sometimes satisfied with little; the last waits more patiently, but demands a greater variety and abundance. Any dish will appease faim (hunger), while there is none that can excite it. The appétit (appetite) is more delicate, and is not satisfied with every dish, and may be provoked by ragoirs.

FAUTEUR, PÉCHÉ, MÉLIT, CRIME, FORFAIT. The fault (faute) is a violation of the rules of duty, and has its origin in the weakness of human nature. The péché (sin) is a transgression of the divine law, and proceeds from a disregard of the precepts of religion. The délit (misdemeanor) involves a breach of the civil law, and is the result of disobedience to the powers that be, or the statutes they have made. The crime and the forfait (both of which may be translated by the word crime) are transgressions at once of the human and the divine code, and spring from the wickedness of the heart; with this sole difference between them, that forfait indicates the greater offence, and the more unmitigated depravity. Indolence and indulgence in passion are fautes (faults); lying and swearing are péchés (sins); duelling and smuggling are délits (misdemeanors); house-breaking and forging are crimes (crimes); arson and murder are forfaits (heinous crimes).

 Syn. — GLORIEUX, FIER, AVANTAGEUX, ORGUEILLEUX. The fier (haughty) man is arrogant and disdainful, implying by his conduct that he considers others as insignificant as he deems himself important. The avantageux (presumptuous) man takes advantage of the least courtesy or respect that may be shown him, to elevate himself above his neighbors. The orgueilleux (proud) man displays in all he does the firm belief that he has the superiority of himself. The glorieux (boaster) desires to be well thought of by his fellow-men; and for that purpose, seeks to supply by empty ostentation what in reality he lacks.

- devant q. u., auprès de q. u., + to find favor, = in a. o.'s sight. Ce n'est pas... no thanks to...; dont on n'a pas fait - unremitted; unforgiven; unpardoned; jo vous rends -, I thank you; ¶ thank you.

GRA - GRACIE, FAVOR. Both these words signify favor; but the first indicates a favor bestowed in consideration of worth, while the last implies merit in the recipient than that of pleasing one who confers it. Graces are the reward of a deserving citizen; favors are showered on the useless courtier. Heaven bestows graces; it not, favors.

A - d'opinaris, (of epaulets) with large bullion. Monter en -, venir à -, to run to seed; to seed.

Sum. - GRAINE, GRAIN. Graine signifies seed; grain denotes not only the seed itself, but the grain which is its fruit or product. We sow grains (seeds) in order to have melons, flowers, plants, &c.; we plant grains (grains) of corn, that we may have a harvest of that grain (grain). The same shades of meaning distinguish the figurative significations of these words. We must not expect that good fruit can be produced from a bad grain (seed). Some men's minds are filled with learning, and yet have not a grain (grain) of common sense.

[GRAND precedes the n. except in the expression UN HOMME GRAND, a tall man, in contradiction to UN GRAND HOMME, a great man. With certain nouns such as CHOSE, MÊME, PETITE, PEIN, PEUR, PRÊTRE, MÊME, etc., GRAND becomes in the f. GRAND. V. these words. GRAND preceding a vowel or an h mute is pronounced grân.]

Sum. - GRAND, ENORME, ATROCE. These epithets are used to mark different degrees of crime. The first implies greatness; the second, excess beyond others of the same class; the last, detestable enormity, and aggravating circumstances to every kind. Nero, putting in death a tutor to whom he owed much, committed a grand (great) crime. Tullia, conspiring for the murder of her father, and driving her chariot over his lifeless remains, perpetrated an enorme (enormous) crime; the atroc (atrocious) crime of Caracalla, who beheld with satisfaction his own brother put to death by his order in the arms of their common mother.

Syn.—HASARD, FORTUNE, SORT, DESTIN. Hazard (chance) implies neither order nor design; its events are altogether uncertain. Fortune (fortune) forms plans and designs; it prescribes what is to happen, but exercises no discrimination in bringing it to circumstances or individuals; — fortune is blind. Sort (fate) draws distinctions, and follows a method in its distribution of events; it is characterized by the concealment of its purposes until the moment when they are to be carried into effect. Destin (destiny) contemplates the whole series of causes and effects that make up the lives of individuals. Brülant succès is the (for) the result of hasard (chance) or fortune (fortune) as of ability or industry. We know not what evils our (fate) may have in store for us. No one can escape what is written in the book of destin (destiny).

Syn.—HYPOCRITE, CAFARD, CAGOT, BIGOT. The hypocrite affects to be religious in order to conceal his vices; the cafard, for the purpose of advancing his interests; the cagot plays the part of pious that his wicked deeds may escape unpunished; the bigot is strict in going through the less important forms and ceremonies of religion, with the view of escaping his real duties. With the first, devotion is a mask; with the second, a lure; with the third, a profession; with the last, a livery.
 The hypocrite is like an angel of darkness which transforms itself into an angel of light. The cafard finds a fitting type in Simon the magician, who wished to purchase the gifts of the Holy Ghost, to carry on with them a lucrative trade. The cagot resembles the Pharisee who lengthened his face that he might do an injury to his neighbor and escape unsuspected. We recognize the bigot in the carnal Jew, who would have satisfied the law with external ceremonial observance.

[Le is contracted to P before, but not after a verb, when it precedes a vowel or silent h. Lx, Lx, LES generally precede the verb; in the imperative mood they follow it in affirmative phrases, and precede it in negative ones. (V. Ex. 1.) When these pronouns precede the verb, the dative case is placed before the accusative; but when they follow the verb, the accusative goes before the dative. (V. Ex. 1 and 2.) When accompanied by lui or leur, they invariably precede these two natives. (V. Ex. 4.) When the le relates to an adjective, a noun in an indeterminate sense, a verb, or a member of a phrase, it is invariable. (V. Ex. 5.)]

1. Un lit —, a soft bed; de la cire molle, soft wax.

[Mou becomes mol before a vowel or a lent â; but it precedes the noun only in elevated or poetical style.]

Syn.—MOU, INDOLENT. The indolent (in dole) man never undertakes new enterprises; he who is mou (easy, destitute of vigor or energy) never prosecutes to a successful issue that he has undertaken. The first lacks ambition, and shrinks at from the physical and mental exertion that would be required. The second is deficient in courage and firmness of purpose; slight obstacles intimidate him and turn him from his course.
