This page contains changes which are not marked for translation.

We funded nine projects submitted through this campaign through the Rapid Grants program! Read all about them on the Wikimedia Blog!

You are welcome to continue providing feedback, improving ideas, and moving any ideas that need funding into grant applications.

Note: Inspire Campaigns and IdeaLab are collaborative idea-building spaces to prepare proposals for Wikimedia Foundation grants and proposals for local Wikimedia projects. Ideas that require community consensus (such as policy changes) can be discussed and revised here, but must be proposed at the appropriate place in your local Wikimedia project to be implemented.

About Inspire Campaigns

Inspire Campaigns are month-long events to focus collaborative efforts on some of the most pressing challenges of the Wikimedia movement. This is a time to share and create new ideas. Readers can get introduced and inspired to start their interest towards Wikipedia.

After the campaign, Grants are available to turn these ideas into collective action. For projects that do not need funding, planning and logistical support is available.

What is the current theme?

The current theme is new readers, and it's about raising awareness of Wikipedia where you live.

Did you know that only 33% of internet users in India have heard of Wikipedia? Think about all of those other internet users who do not know about Wikipedia and our communities. There are many other regions where people are unaware of Wikipedia. If you lived in one of these places, what would you do to attract new readers for Wikipedia? We want to hear your ideas.

Why is awareness important?

Awareness is the first step in building new use, support, and participation in Wikimedia projects. We know that low awareness of Wikipedia is associated with low usage, and without usage people will never become contributors or advocates for free knowledge.
