

嘉慶十年新年鑄

輯註通纂 比引條例督 捕則例附後	大清律例重訂	遵照嘉慶六年奉 部頒行續纂并增修近年條例 工本浩繁每部發 價番銀三兩六錢
------------------------------------	---------------	--

Multon sculp.

(Fac-simile of the Title-page of the latest edition of the
TA TSING LEU LEE
Published in the Year 1805, the 10th of the reigning Emperor Hia King.

see page lxxiii. note.

TA TSING LEU LEE;
BEING THE FUNDAMENTAL LAWS, AND A SELECTION FROM THE SUPPLEMENTARY STATUTES, OF THE PENAL CODE OF CHINA;

ORIGINALLY PRINTED AND PUBLISHED IN PEKIN, IN VARIOUS SUCCESSIVE EDITIONS,
UNDER THE SANCTION, AND BY THE AUTHORITY, OF THE SEVERAL EMPERORS OF THE TA TSING, OR PRESENT DYNASTY.

TRANSLATED FROM THE CHINESE; AND ACCOMPANIED WITH AN APPENDIX,
CONSISTING OF AUTHENTIC DOCUMENTS, AND A FEW OCCASIONAL NOTES, ILLUSTRATIVE OF THE SUBJECT OF THE WORK;
BY SIR GEORGE THOMAS STAUNTON, BART. F.R.S.

Mens, et animus, et consilium, et sententia civitatis, posita est in LEGIBUS.

CICERO PRO CLUENTIO.

LONDON:

PRINTED FOR T. CADELL AND W. DAVIES, IN THE STRAND.

1810.

TO

JOHN BARROW, ESQ. F.R.S.

Sc. Sc. Sc.

IN TESTIMONY OF SINCERE REGARD AND ESTEEM,

THIS VOLUME IS INSCRIBED,

BY

HIS OBLIGED AND ATTACHED FRIEND,

THE TRANSLATOR.

TRANSLATOR'S PREFACE.

IN undertaking the work which is now submitted to the eye of the Public, the Translator was not unconscious of the difficulties and disadvantages he would have to contend with in so novel an attempt. He was however encouraged to proceed by the persuasion that the work was in itself amply deserving of the labour which it might be necessary to bestow upon it; that the intrinsic value, the unquestionable authenticity of the materials, and the general importance and curiosity of the subject, would fully compensate those particular defects and imperfections which, in an undertaking of this nature, were foreseen to be unavoidable, and, upon the whole, make amends for the too concise and almost obscure brevity of the text, in some places, its tedious and uninstruative prolixity in others, and its general unsuitableness for translation into an English idiom. Under all circumstances he flattered himself, that a faithful version of the Fundamental Laws of the Penal Code of China might, with the addition of some supplementary matter, not only prove interesting as far as regards its immediate subject, but likewise afford a more compendious and satisfactory illustration, than any other Chinese work that could have been selected, of the peculiar system and constitution of the Government, the principles of its internal policy, its connection with the national habits and character, and its influence upon the general state and condition of the people in that country.

To account for the limited and defective nature of our information upon these interesting subjects, notwithstanding the number and variety of the literary communications concerning the Chinese empire, which we already possess in Europe, through the medium of the European languages, it will be requisite to advert particularly to the circumstances under which these communications have been made, and to the sources from which they have, for the most part, been derived.

It will not be necessary, in the course of this enquiry, to trace back the subject to any very remote period. It is well known that the Empire of China, bounded on one side by the ocean, and on the other by ranges of inaccessible mountains, or vast and seemingly impervious deserts, continued, until about the commencement of the 13th century of our era, to be effectually secluded by these natural barriers from any direct and regular intercourse with the rest of the inhabited globe. The various inquisitive and enlightened nations, which successively flourished in ancient times, both in Western Asia and in Europe, scarcely appear to have even suspected its existence.

In the mean while, however, the people who, at a remote period of antiquity, first colonized this fertile and extensive region, were gradually emerging from primeval barbarism. Without either receiving assistance, or encountering opposition, from their less fortunate neighbours, they slowly but regularly advanced upon the strength of their own internal resources and local advantages, nearly, if not entirely, to their present state of civilization and improvement.

The commencement of the 13th century is the period at which the Chinese first submitted in a body to the sway of a foreign conqueror; and although the dynasty, established by the successful invaders, was not of any long duration, it must have had a material, and even in some degree a permanent effect, upon the relations between China and contemporary Powers; more especially, as this revolution in the East was, it will be perceived, at no considerable interval of time, seconded

seconded in the West, by the fortunate era of the restoration of letters, and of the introduction of the most important of the improvements in navigation in modern Europe.

As a new spirit of curiosity and enterprize had been thus excited, and means apparently adequate to its complete gratification discovered, it might naturally be supposed that one of the first objects would have been that of taking advantage of the additional facilities which seemed to have been afforded for a communication with the Chinese empire; that the early accounts, however vague and imperfect, which had been given by casual travellers, of its extent, magnificence, and political importance, would have soon led, in the ordinary course of events, to an intimate acquaintance and a regularly established intercourse with that remote and recently discovered, but, at the same time, highly interesting portion of the civilized world.

At the end, however, of several centuries, these expectations are still but very imperfectly realized. This Great Empire, too well assured of the competency of its own natural and artificial resources, to be induced to seek, and, if not too powerful, at least too distant and compactly united, to be liable to be compelled to enter into alliances and close connections with the Powers of Europe, has never as yet, except in a precarious and limited degree, admitted of any species of intercourse with them. It continues to this day wholly regardless and independent of those nations of the West, whose general superiority in policy and in arms has triumphantly extended their power and influence over almost every other existing society of mankind.

A considerable portion of the intercourse which actually subsists between China and the Nations of Europe owes its origin, as is well known, to the influence of religious motives; and was established under rather favourable auspices, by the indefatigable zeal and appropriate talents of the early missionaries of the Catholic church. These ecclesiastics, having been for the most part of the Society of Jesus, were not wanting in the sagacity, or neglectful of the policy, which had, on so many other occasions, crowned the projects of their society with success. It is difficult indeed to say how far, under such circumstances, even the most ancient of the institutions, upon which the fabric of the Chinese government is founded, or the most deeply rooted of the prejudices and attachments, by which it continues to be sustained, could have withstood their powerful and undermining influence, had they not happened to have lost the support and countenance both of the head of the Catholic church, and of their respective temporal sovereigns.

The consequent extinction of their order having subverted the system of politics, which until then the Missionaries in China had successfully observed, having caused the adoption of a plan of conversion more strict, and probably more orthodox, but, in the same proportion, more unaccommodating to the prejudices of the people, and more alarming to the jealousy of the government, and having also, generally speaking, thrown the profession into less able hands, the cause of Christianity and of Europe necessarily lost much of its temporary lustre and influence. In addition to this unfavourable change of circumstances, the French revolution has subsequently had the effect of considerably reducing both the amount of the funds which support, and the number of the labourers who cultivate the Christian vineyard in China; under which accumulated disadvantages the intercourse with Europeans, as far as the Missionaries are concerned, it will easily be conceived, must of late years, in spite of every exertion, have been gradually on the decline.

Although, among the few Missionaries whom the Emperor of China still retains in his service at Peking, and among the larger number who are clandestinely employed in maintaining and propagating the Christian faith in the provinces, there are, no doubt, many amiable and respectable, and perhaps even some learned men, they can scarcely be expected

expected to make any material addition, under their present difficulties, to the stock of useful and valuable information which Europe has already derived from the same quarter.

The literary labours of the Missionaries, consisting of original descriptions and of translations, are, however, already numerous and extensive. Their works seem, at first sight, to have been penned with such diligence, and formed upon plans so comprehensive, as to promise satisfaction on every subject connected with the Chinese empire, in which European curiosity can be interested. But, on a closer examination, we find reason to lament that their attention had not been more directed to the objects that were principally desirable, and we begin to suspect that their situation, or some other circumstances, must have had a tendency to disqualify them from representing those objects with all the accuracy and fidelity of disinterested and impartial observers. At the same time, it is impossible to conceive any set of persons more advantageously placed for the purpose of collecting and communicating the information that was most required. Having devoted themselves to a residence for life among the people of that empire, it was naturally one of their first objects to acquire a knowledge of their manners, habits, and language. The active duties of their profession necessarily led them to cultivate the favour of the rich, to conciliate the affections of the poor, and to associate generally with every class of the inhabitants. As they appeared exclusively in the character either of artists or of men of science, they were in no danger of becoming objects of jealousy to any rank, or to any party; they had generally a free communication with every department of the court and of the government, and at times were admitted to a familiar intercourse even with the sovereign himself.

It is, however, to be recollected, on the other hand, that, with the Missionaries, science and literature were objects only of a secondary consideration, infinitely inferior in their estimation to that sacred cause cause in which they were united, which they were bound to support, and to which all others were to be made subservient; that they were persons who had all of them professedly renounced the world, and who, having abstracted themselves accordingly from its various pursuits, had been in great measure incapacitated from acquiring that particular experience which is necessary towards appreciating the merits and characteristic features of other countries, by the most obvious and indispensable of tests, a comparison with their own. It was also inevitable, that persons thus situated should be, generally speaking, under the influence of a strong pre-disposition in favour of a people, for the sake of whose conversion they had renounced their country, and devoted their lives; and of a government, from whom, at one period, they had received extraordinary kindness and indulgence, and upon the continuance of whose protection the success of their future undertakings was foreseen almost entirely to depend.

Although having, personally, access to all the principal objects of curiosity, and chief sources of information, and possessing sufficiently the requisite talents of description, we too often find that a want of substantial impartiality and discriminating judgment in their writings, has tended to throw a false colouring on many of the objects which they delineate, and has sometimes produced those inconsistencies by which errors and misrepresentations of this description are often found to contribute to their own detection.

In like manner, although an intimate knowledge of the language of China enabled the Missionaries to explore and illustrate the antiquities of the empire, by the perusal and translation of the obscure and disputed texts of its most ancient poets, historians, and philosophers, an extreme anxiety to place these productions in the most favourable and pleasing light, has led them, in some instances, to engraft so much of the European character and style upon the Chinese originals, that the authenticity of their versions has, however unjustly, been in those cases more than suspected.

Other

Other works again, such as the Chinese press abundantly affords, concerning the present state of the empire, its civil, political, and legal institutions, they have, it must be acknowledged, in great measure neglected, either as comparatively unimportant in their estimation, or as insufficient and ill-suited for conveying those highly favourable ideas, with which they seem themselves to have been impressed, of the character of the Chinese people, and the principles of the Chinese government.

By the foregoing observations, it is by no means intended to detract from the real merits of the learned and pious writers of this class, either by denying, that they have afforded to the European world a vast collection of useful and interesting information, or by asserting, that they have, in any particular instances, been guilty of wilful deception or misrepresentation. It is merely wished to point out some of the causes which render it unsafe to rely implicitly on their authority, to state the particular bias under which they wrote, and to notice some of the effects of which that bias was necessarily productive.

The communications between European states and the dominions of China, which a spirit of commercial enterprise gave rise to, although they have been, at times, of considerable importance to several of the Continental nations, and are at present, with respect to Great Britain, of such a nature and extent, as to be very essentially contributive to her national prosperity, yet they did not, until a very late period, produce any fruits deserving of particular notice, either to science or literature.

With the exceptions of the Travels of Mr. Bell of Antermony, and the Translation of a Chinese Novel, by an obscure hand, but illustrated by the name of its Editor, scarcely anything of importance respecting China, derived from a commercial origin, appeared in England until the period of the Embassy of the late Earl of Macartney. His Lordship's mission was certainly an important step towards obtaining a more accurate and intimate intimate knowledge of the Chinese empire. That empire was, on that occasion, in some degree laid open to the view of persons, whose talents and judgment were worthy of their country, and of an enlightened age; and who, it was natural to expect, would be disposed to describe the country and its inhabitants, as they really found them, and to state the opinions they might be led to form on the different objects which occurred, with candour and sincerity. — If, in estimating the credit due to their impartiality, some allowance for the national prejudices of Englishmen should be deemed requisite, the tendency of those prejudices would, at all events, be very dissimilar to that of the bias which had influenced their predecessors in the same field of enquiry. When also it is considered that, in passing rapidly over the narrow path to which they were confined, the opportunities of observation must have been comparatively few and limited, it will justly be deemed a subject of pride and satisfaction, and a very material addition to the immediate advantages which that expedition produced to this country, that it has, in so short a time, and under such unfavourable circumstances, been the means of throwing an entire new light upon, and of correcting and extending our ideas of that extraordinary and interesting empire; that, in short, if it has not led to the discovery of a new world, it has, as it were, enabled us to recover a portion of the old, by removing, in a considerable degree, those obstacles by which our contemplation of it had been intercepted.

The short residence in China of Lord Macartney's Embassy, although it scarcely afforded any opportunity of either confirming or disproving the various geographical, historical, and statistical details, with which we had been furnished by the Missionaries, was amply sufficient to discover that the superiority over other nations, in point of knowledge and of virtue, which the Chinese have long been accustomed to assume to themselves, and which some of their European historians historians have too readily granted them, was in great measure fallacious; their knowledge was perceived to be defective in those points in which we have, in Europe, recently made the greatest progress, and to which we are therefore proportionately partial. Their virtues were found to consist more in ceremonial observances, than in moral duties; more in profession, than in practice; and their vices, when traced and discovered upon occasions where they were the least expected, seemed to deserve a more than ordinary degree of reprobation.

The first impressions occasioned by a discovery, that the Chinese people and government were in many respects the converse of that which, agreeably to the most authentic accounts, they might have been expected to be found, were naturally unfavourable.

But if the English visitors at the court of Peking had been permitted to remain any considerable time, and with a sufficient degree of freedom in the interior of the empire, they might gradually have acquired a more direct and extensive knowledge of the governors and of the governed in China; they might, by constant and familiar intercourse with the several classes of the inhabitants, have learned more of their manners, habits, and ordinary conduct, and have been enabled to judge of, and to characterize, their influencing motives on different occasions, upon surer grounds.

If they had possessed equal opportunities with the missionaries, who preceded them, of exerting their judgment upon the Chinese character, though they certainly would not have coincided in all their sentiments and opinions, they might, perhaps, have found something to compensate the evils they had justly reprobated and lamented, and they might even have at last determined, that a considerable proportion of the opinions most generally entertained by Chinese and Europeans of each other was to be imputed either to prejudice, or to misinformation; and that, upon the whole, it was not allowable to arrogate, on either side, any violent degree of moral or physical superiority.

In regard to the diffusion of knowledge among the natives, they might not indeed meet with such illustrious instances as those of a Newton, a Locke, or a Bacon; nor even, perhaps, generally, find any tolerable proficiency in the sciences, which in Europe the writings of those great men have contributed so much to advance and to establish; but, nevertheless, such a sufficiency, in all ranks and conditions, of the information essential or most useful to each; such a competency and suitability of the means to the end, as might, upon a general view of the whole population, fairly entitle the Chinese to be put in competition with some, at least, of the nations of Europe, in respect to all the essential characteristics of civilization.

The virtues of the Chinese, although very inferior, no doubt, to their professions, and of a lower order than those which Christianity has happily implanted, or invigorated, in the European world, they might also have found as little alloyed, either with the sanguinary or the selfish vices, as among any people for whose guidance the salutary light of revelation has not yet penetrated.

Even the crime of infanticide, for instance, which has been considered such an indelible stain upon the Chinese character, might be found to admit of some extenuation, if it was discovered to be rarely if ever practiced, except in the anguish of hopeless poverty, or in cases of such unhappy and defective formation, as might be conceived to render life a painful burden. The criminality of the Chinese, in this respect, might also be safely contrasted with the legalized cruelty and unnatural indifference of Roman fathers under similar circumstances. Passing from the people to the government, the obvious and undeniable defects of the latter might justly be compared with the acknowledged corruptions and imperfections of those of Europe; and it might perhaps

perhaps be found, upon a general view, that the happiness of the people was not more frequently neglected or interrupted, upon the one system than upon the other.

There would still, no doubt, remain, both in the habits of the people, and the principles of the government, some exceptionable traits, which are happily not to be exactly paralleled in Europe; but, on the other hand, some very considerable and positive moral and political advantages might be found peculiar to the Chinese; attributable to the system of early and universal marriage, except indeed, as far as that system may be considered to conduce to the misfortune of a redundant population; to the sacred regard that is habitually paid to the ties of kindred; to the sobriety, industry, and even intelligence of the lower classes; to the almost total absence of feudal rights and privileges; to the equable distribution of landed property; to the natural incapacity and indisposition of the government and people to an indulgence in ambitious projects and foreign conquests; and lastly, to a system of penal laws, if not the most just and equitable, at least the most comprehensive, uniform, and suited to the genius of the people for whom it is designed, perhaps of any that ever existed.

The foregoing conjectures respecting the degree of estimation in which the Chinese government and people will be held by the other civilized nations of the world, when the veil is more completely withdrawn, which has hitherto intercepted their view, and balked their curiosity, although they neither have been nor can be verified, under present circumstances, by adequate personal enquiry, yet their reasonableness and probability may even now be investigated with advantage, and tried upon almost every point, by the interesting evidence which the Chinese, in their own numerous and respectable literary productions, have themselves afforded.

After making every allowance for national partialities, prejudices, and defects, whatever they may be, it will generally be found, that the best and most authentic information of the state of any country, having pretensions to civilization, is contained in the works of the natives, and in the vernacular language.

Although the character of the Chinese government, in common with that of those of all other Asiatic nations, necessarily prevents the press from becoming, in any considerable degree, a vehicle for the investigation of political questions, or for the introduction of innovations of any kind, yet there are no previous licenses demanded, or restrictive regulations enforced; nor in the case of publications upon ordinary subjects, any checks whatever imposed upon their number or variety. On the contrary, the encouragement given to pursuits which are purely literary, has always been considered as one of the remarkable features of Chinese policy. These pursuits are professedly the sole channel of introduction to political advancement in the state, to offices, rank, and honours of almost every description. With the prospect of such rewards, the number of competitors in the paths of literature must necessarily be infinite; and, in point of fact, the first rudiments, at least, of literary knowledge, are almost universally diffused among the natives of every class and denomination. — Through the concurrence of these causes the productions of the press in China not only open a wide field of investigation to the literary and philosophical enquirer, but are, in a much greater degree than could otherwise have been expected, calculated to supply that species of information which the present system of our intercourse with the Chinese, affords so little prospect of obtaining by personal communication.

It is not, indeed, to be expected, that an acquaintance with Chinese literature, however intimate, can materially add to our present stock of theore-

theoretical knowledge upon natural and philosophical subjects; and in respect to the Ethics and Antiquities of the Chinese, it may perhaps be considered that the translations already effected by the Missionaries afford a sufficient specimen: but there are many other objects of research, which surely are neither uninteresting nor unimportant. As men of science, we have yet much to learn respecting the arts, which, with the advantage of long and uninterrupted experience, and a proportionate degree of practical skill, are successfully cultivated by an eminently industrious and ingenious people. As men of letters, we have yet to comprize, within the circle of our philology, the various branches of a new species of Belles Lettres, contained in a highly refined and most singular language; we have, lastly, as statesmen and philosophers, to examine more closely, and to dive more deeply into the principles, operation, and consequences, of the civil policy, characteristic laws, and general system of a government and constitution, not indeed the best or the purest, but certainly the most anciently, and, if we may judge from its duration, the most firmly established, and the most conformable to the genius and character of the people, of any of which mankind has had experience.

The great, and indeed almost the only obstacle, which exists to inquiries of this nature, is the circumstance of the literature of China being buried in a language by far the least accessible to a foreign student of any that was ever invented by man. Among the languages of Europe, several agree to a considerable extent, even in their phraseology, and all are connected by various analogies. The languages of the Asiatic nations are indeed radically different from those Europe, and their study is, to Europeans, proportionately difficult; but in one point at least, all the written languages of the world coincide, that of the Chinese only excepted. — In all, ideas are expressed by a combination of letters, representing, not the ideas themselves, but certain particular particular sounds with which these ideas, either by accident or convention, have become identified. It is exclusively in the Chinese language, that the seemingly visionary scheme of a philosophical character, immediately expressive, according to an established and received classification, of the ideas as they arise in the mind, under an entire disregard of the sounds employed to give them utterance, has ever been generally adopted as the universal medium of communication; a plan of which it may justly be said, that the practice is no less inconvenient and perplexing, than the theory is beautiful and ingenious.

Experience has nevertheless in various instances proved, that these difficulties, however great, are by no means insurmountable, even by ordinary zeal and application. It is also to be considered, that they would be more seriously felt by those, by whom the first steps should be taken towards introducing and recommending the knowledge of the Chinese language in this country, than by those who might afterwards follow in the same path of literature. The modes of acting and thinking peculiar to a people who have scarcely ever been placed in circumstances tending in any respect towards an assimilation with the rest of mankind, especially when conveyed in a language whose style and idioms are frequently as little conformable to our received notions of propriety, as they are reconcileable to our ordinary rules and distinctions of grammar, cannot indeed be expected to prove in any form of translation, altogether agreeable to the taste of European readers. It seems requisite that the students in this branch of oriental literature should become numerous, that its peculiarities should be traced and explained by a more correct knowledge of the people themselves, and that the minds of the readers should be somewhat habituated to them, as they already are in a considerable degree, to the peculiarities in the style and idioms of other Eastern languages. Yet, even in the present state of our knowledge of the Chinese people, and of our political relations with the Chinese empire, it is not unreasonable to hope, that communications derived from authentic

subjects are sometimes extended to the extraordinary length of upwards of an hundred volumes, and the aggregate is, of course, enormous in proportion.

From such a vast and heterogeneous mass of materials, to attempt any thing like a compendious illustration of the true spirit and character of their legal institutions, would be a very presumptuous, if not absolutely a hopeless undertaking. The TA-TSING-LEU-LEE, however, happily renders, in this respect, any such laborious and indefinite research unnecessary, as, in fact, no selection could be made, however judiciously, that would not be superseded by the authority, as far as it extends, of the authenticated compendium.

The Chinese government, according to one of the fundamental principles of its constitution, is, it is to be observed, divided into several distinct, though not altogether independent, branches or departments. The civil and military establishments, the public revenue and expenditure, the national rites and ceremonies, the public works, and the administration of public justice, are each of them regulated by a particular code of laws and institutions; but the laws of the empire, in the strictest and most appropriate sense of the term, and which may be denominated Penal Laws, by way of contradistinction, are the peculiar and exclusive province of the last of these departments. All regulations which are either directly penal, by the denunciation of punishment in the event of disobedience, or indirectly, by their coercive operation, have evidently a distinct character, though necessarily connected, more or less, with every branch of that constitution which is upheld and protected by their sanction.

Accordingly, the TA-TSING-LEU-LEE, although originating with one, treats indirectly and incidentally of all the branches of the Chinese constitution; and the information it thus imparts, upon a comparatively reduced scale, of the administration of the civil and military affairs of the empire, of the public revenue and public works, and of the the ceremonial institutions and observances, though not altogether so clear or so comprehensive, as it might have been in a work having these for its professed objects, will not, probably, to a European reader, be the least acceptable of its contents.

In China, the succession of a new line, or dynasty of princes, has been, as it must be in most regular and professedly absolute monarchies, invariably attended, not only with an entire dissolution of the government, but nominally, at least, with an abrogation of the constitution established by the preceding family; though in most cases the necessity must already have been apparent of afterwards rebuilding the fabric of similar materials, and upon similar principles. None, therefore, of the laws and institutions now in force in the Chinese empire, bear a more remote date than that of the last Tartar conquest: notwithstanding which, this code, as well as indeed almost every thing in which the Chinese people is concerned, carries with it, it is important to remark, an internal evidence of the antiquity of its origin and prototype, not less convincing and unquestionable, perhaps, than the most solid monuments, or the best authenticated records by which the past periods of the existence of any nation are at present attested.

A considerable portion of the interest, to which enquiries into the present state of the Chinese empire are entitled, necessarily depends upon the credibility of its extraordinary pretensions to antiquity; and these pretensions have, it must be acknowledged, been sometimes disputed as not sufficiently supported, either by remains or vestiges, actually existing in China, of very remote ages, or by the corroborative testimony of any other than their own native historians. It may be proper, therefore, to state in this place, some of the grounds upon which the substantial accuracy and authenticity of the accounts given us in these respects by the Chinese themselves, are nevertheless assumed as points, which may now be considered as almost beyond the reach of controversy.

authentic sources in the original language, may have some effect in drawing attention to, and exciting an interest in, the hitherto neglected literature of that country; — it is necessary indeed, that the work selected should, in one essential point at least, be unexceptionable, however defective in others; that its translation should combine as many advantages, and as few objections as possible, and in particular, that the excellence of the matter, should render the manner in which it was expressed a consideration of comparatively little importance.

Among the multifarious publications of the Chinese, ancient as well as modern, which are still extant, and hitherto untranslated into any European language, the TA-TSING-LEU-LEE, or Imperial Code of Penal Laws, certainly ranks with those of the first class, in respect to the importance of the subject of which it treats, and the pre-eminence of the authority by which it was originally established, as well as, at different periods down to the present time, successively sanctioned and confirmed. As in this work also, the two very desirable qualities of a comparatively simple style, and a compendious form, happen fortunately to be united, its contents are certainly, in many respects, less difficult of access, than those of most other publications of a similar extent in the Chinese language and character.

It has justly been observed by Mr. Gibbon, that “the laws of a nation form the most instructive portion of its history.” But the laws of the Chinese, if taken in the most comprehensive sense of the term, framed, as they have been, by the wisdom and experience of a long series of ages, and suitably provided, as they are, for the government of an empire, unparalleled in the history of the world, in extent and population, must, it will readily be imagined, be proportionally numerous and complicated. They are also, which is still more embarrassing, generally intermingled in such a degree with details concerning the ancient history and actual condition, of the civil, political, and ceremonial institutions of the empire, that individual works on these subjects

It is, in the first place, a material consideration, that although the annals of the Chinese, like those of almost all other nations, are prefaced with incredible, and confessedly fabulous accounts of their primitive state, and of the circumstances which attended their first establishment, yet the period at which that part of their history which is professed to be authentic commences, early as it is, is completely reconcilable with the data concerning the re-peopling of the world, which we derive from the inspired writings.

As, therefore, no direct objection can be maintained on this ground to the antiquity claimed by the Chinese, it seems impossible by any indirect objection, drawn from the want of specific external or internal evidence, to resist the inference, that a people, whose written language, consisting of symbolical characters, is founded on the most ancient of principles, and the frame of whose government is essentially conformable to the patriarchal system of the first ages; must have segregated themselves (if the expression may be allowed) from the rest of mankind before the period at which the symbolical was superseded by the alphabetical character, and the patriarchal, by other systems and forms of government.

We do not indeed recognize in the Chinese constitution, which the lapse of so many ages has refined and consolidated, and which has been necessarily moulded to the various purposes of a great and powerful monarchy, that original form of the patriarchal government which subsisted in detached families, and among wandering tribes, in the rude and simple ages of antiquity.

But there is every reason to consider the foundation to be the same in both cases. The vital and universally operating principle of the Chinese government is the duty of submission to parental authority, whether vested in the parents themselves, or in their representatives, and which, although usually described under the pleasing appellation of filial piety, is much more properly to be considered as a general rule of action, than as the expression of any particular sentiment of affection. It may easily be traced even in the earliest of their records; it is inculcated with the greatest force in the writings of the first of their philosophers and legislators; it has survived each successive dynasty, and all the various changes and revolutions which the state has undergone; and it continues to this day powerfully enforced, both by positive laws, and by public opinion.

of

A government, constituted upon the basis of parental authority, thus highly estimated and extensively applied, has certainly the advantage of being directly sanctioned by the immutable and ever-operating laws of Nature, and must thereby acquire a degree of firmness and durability to which governments, founded on the fortuitous superiority of particular individuals, either in strength or abilities, and continued only through the hereditary influence of particular families, can never be expected to attain. Parental authority and prerogative seem to be, obviously, the most respectable of titles, and parental regard and affection the most amiable of characters, with which sovereign or magisterial power can be invested, and are those under which, it is natural to suppose, it may most easily be perpetuated.

By such principles the Chinese have been distinguished ever since their first existence as a nation; by such ties, the vast and increasing population of China is still united as one people, subject to one supreme government, and uniform in its habits, manners, and language. In this state, in spite of every internal and external convulsion, it may possibly very long continue.

In conclusion of the subject of the antiquity of the Chinese it may be sufficient to answer the objections arising from the want of external evidence and internal monuments, by one or two general remarks.

The peculiar site of the region inhabited by the Chinese has been already noticed. The variety of soil and climate which it comprehends, its fertility and productiveness, are equally well known. Under such circumstances the Chinese were neither necessitated by want, nor tempted by curiosity, to cross those barriers of sea and land to which they owed so much of their internal security and prosperity. Having no natural enemies to contend with, they soon lost that warlike character which their primitive ancestors might have possessed in the wilds of Tartary. The art of navigating ships at a distance from land, and the adventurous pursuits of trade with foreign nations, being wholly unnecessary to them, they generally despised as well as neglected.

With little opportunity of becoming generally acquainted with the state of the rest of the inhabited world, and with the unfavourable and uninviting specimen of it, which the wretchedness and barbarism of their immediate neighbours presented, it was almost impossible that they should not look back with peculiar complacency upon their own undisputed superiority, and gradually acquire much of that high degree of national vanity and arrogance for which they are remarkable.

Thus the Chinese, although they certainly became at a very early period a rich, populous, and, comparatively, an enlightened nation, have not been at any time enterprising, warlike, or commercial, and therefore have been in fact deficient in those qualities which, of all others, are the most conducive to the extension of the fame of any people among distant countries.

The want of ancient monuments, were it even without exception to be admitted, might, in great measure, be accounted for by the proneness to decay of all their buildings, owing to the unsubstantial system and principles of their architecture; but they have at least one monument of antiquity, which, in point of magnitude and extent, certainly eclipses those of all other nations and ages.

There are, perhaps, few facts in history more incontestably proved than the construction, in the third century before the Christian era, of the great wall which still continues to separate and form a barrier between China and that tract of country, now denominated Chinese Tartary.

This

This stupendous effort of human labour is not indeed, viewing its object, any proof of the bravery, nor viewing its inefficacy, any proof of the sagacity, of the nation which produced it, but it will not be denied to be a decisive evidence that the Chinese formed even at that remote period a considerable empire, were united under a strong and regular government, and certainly in no very low state of civilization.

This digression relative to the antiquity of the Chinese empire, as far as it may be inferred from general considerations, has been conceived necessary to the introduction of the few following remarks, applicable more particularly to the origin and history of their laws, such as they now appear to us in the code of the present dynasty.

On this subject it is to be presumed the Missionaries might have given us ample and authentic details, as they expressly inform us (Memoires sur les Chinois, vol. viii. p. 220.) that there exists in China an "Histoire des Loix de Chine, en 74 volumes, en remontant de "dynastie en dynastie, jusqu'a Yao et Chun;" which emperors are universally admitted by the Chinese to be the founders of their laws, if not also of their monarchy. In the numerous quartos however, which are occupied by the translations of Moyriac de Mailla, the compilations of Du Halde and Grosier, and the miscellaneous work entitled "Memoires concernant les Chinois," very little is to be found concerning the laws which can be considered in the light of historical deduction, and that little, it is to be regretted, is in a great measure contradictory, or loose and inconclusive.

In the Memoires sur les Chinois, vol. i. p. 180, it is stated that "Les interpretes du Chou-King s'accordent assez à dire qu'il n'y avoit "point de supplices sous le regne de Yao, et qu'ils n'étoient pas nécessaires. La vertu et la douceur de ce bon prince suffisoient, disent-ils, pour empêcher les fautes, ou du moins en prévenir les suites. "Son exemple persuadoit l'amour de la vertu, et conservoit l'innocence des mœurs publiques." Yet it is admitted in the same page, that that the associate and successor of the abovementioned monarch, and the emulator of his virtues, was supposed by some of the commentators to have established the following terrible punishments, which equal in severity any thing which is even now recognized, and in ordinary practice in China:—" 1. Une marque ineffaçable sur le front : 2. l'amputation du bout du nez : 3. l'amputation du bout des pieds : 4. la castration : 5. la mort."

These commentators are indeed imagined to have been mistaken; but in page 20, of the 3d volume, and 56, of the 4th volume of the same work, the fact is re-asserted without any other reservation than that, although such laws had really been established at the period stated, the innocence and virtues of the people were such, that many centuries elapsed before it became necessary to enforce them.

The truth, it is most probable, lies between the two extremes; and while we may agree with the Missionaries, that the practice of such cruelties in the ordinary administration of justice is improbable, and inconsistent with the high character which is given of the wisdom of the sovereign and the mildness of the people at that era, we shall scarcely be so extravagant as to suppose that punishments, and even severe ones, could have been at any time, altogether unnecessary.

The notices which are interspersed throughout the above works, of the alterations and improvements which afterwards took place in the system of the Chinese penal law, under the princes of the several successive dynasties, contain unfortunately, as has been observed, nothing precise or circumstantial; and all the information, which, in addition to the communications of the Missionaries, the Translator of the present work feels himself justified in offering as authentic, is comprised in a short note, attached to the Chinese original.

The first regular code of penal laws is, in that note, attributed to a person named LEE-QUEE, and is denominated after him, LEE-QUEE-FA-KING. It seems to have been simple in its arrangement and construction, struction, having been confined to six books only, two of which appear to have been introductory, the third relative to prisons, the fourth to the administration of the police, the fifth to the lesser or miscellaneous offences, and the sixth to all the great and capital crimes against public justice.

The character of LEE-QUEE, as well as the age in which he lived, are left in great measure to conjecture; but there is reason to infer that the code which bears his name, was first put in force under the dynasty of Tsin, which succeeded to the throne of China B. C. 249; but it is evident, from the slight mention that is made of this personage, that so far from having been a legislator, he was not even a compiler of any considerable celebrity.

There can in fact be little doubt, that the principal characteristics, not only of the code published by LEE-QUEE, but also of that in force at this day, originated at periods far more remote than that under consideration; but a new compilation, at least, of the Chinese laws must necessarily have formed a part of the plan of that celebrated Emperor of the race of Tsin, who is said to have been so ambitious of the reputation of having been the actual founder of the monarchy, as to have sought it by a vain and absurd attempt at the destruction of all the books, records, and other existing memorials, of preceding ages.

The Chinese note already quoted likewise describes, generally, the alterations and enlargements which took place in the plan and divisions of the code upon the successive elevation to power of each of the several dynasties of Han, Wee, Tsin, Tse, Swee, Tang, Sung, Yuen, and Ming, until it assumed, shortly after the accession, A. D. 1644, of the dynasty of Tsing, now reigning, that form in which it still continues to be promulgated and observed throughout the empire.

Having thus been able to trace back the present code with certainty, to considerably remote sources, it will not be deemed extraordinary that, as even in our European codes, although the structure is comparatively paratively of a recent date, it is often rendered intricate and inconvenient from an adherence to a plan, which, owing to its antiquity, is in some places altogether inapplicable to the state of things as they at present exist; and yet, out of respect to its origin, is only cautiously, and perhaps awkwardly, modified, instead of being wholly set aside or fundamentally altered, as often as new circumstances and events had rendered it expedient. Another, and a no less considerable source of obscurity, is, it must be acknowledged, the very artificial and complex construction of the code itself; however much the ingenuity of the contrivance, and the labour bestowed in the adaptation of the means to the end, may at the same time be deserving of being admired.

It may indeed be almost invariably remarked, in respect to the institutions of civilized, and particularly anciently civilized, nations, that although the ends of substantial justice may in general be really consulted, it is almost in vain to expect to find a suitable provision for the attainment of those ends by the shortest and simplest means. This desideratum, however its attainment may be held out in the speculations of theorists, seems to be reserved to be accomplished by the wisdom of future ages. How far, in the formation of the laws of the Chinese, the ends of substantial justice are even consulted, there must, also, no doubt, be some variety of sentiment. There are certainly many points upon which these laws are altogether indefensible. We shall look in vain, for instance, for those excellent principles of the English law, by which every man is presumed innocent until he is proved guilty; and no man required to criminate himself. Such maxims the Chinese system neither does nor indeed could recognize. But it will scarcely escape observation, that there are other parts of the code which, in a considerable degree, compensate these and similar defects, are altogether of a different complexion, and are perhaps not unworthy of imitation, even among the fortunate and enlightened nations of the West. It is sufficiently obvious, indeed, that the intrinsic merits of any code of laws, which is not professed to be, either the result of the meditations of a philosopher, or the untried theory of a legislator, but which, on the contrary, actually is in force, forms the basis of the government of a nation, and as such, has been fairly submitted to the important test of experience, are not to be estimated by any imaginary standard of perfection. Such a Code can be justly compared only with those other codes of law, whose practicability and expediency have already been tried by a similar ordeal; and in making the estimate, the consideration of those local circumstances and peculiarities, upon a conformity to which, the excellence of the national laws in every country so greatly depend, is certainly least of all to be omitted.

of

This is, upon the whole, very justly described, as well as happily illustrated, by the President de Montesquieu, in his "Esprit des Loix;" and is so important to the right understanding of the laws of the extraordinary people under consideration, that the following short quotation from that work, it is hoped, will not be unacceptable.

"Les loix politiques et civiles de chaque nation," he observes, "doivent être tellement propres au peuple pour lequel elles sont faites, que c'est un très grand hasard si celles d'une nation peuvent convenir à une autre. Il faut qu'elles se rapportent à la nature et au principe du gouvernement qui est établi, ou qu'on veut établir; soit qu'elles le forment, comme font les loix politiques; soit qu'elles le maintiennent, comme font les loix civiles. Elles doivent être relatives au physique du pays, au climat glacé, brûlant ou tempéré; à la qualité du terrain, à sa situation, à sa grandeur; au genre de vie des peuples, laboureurs, chasseurs, ou pasteurs: elles doivent se rapporter au degré de liberté que la constitution peut souffrir; à la religion des habitans, à leurs inclinations, à leur richesses, à leur nombre, à leur commerce, à leurs mœurs, à leurs manières. Enfin, elles ont des rapports entr'elles; elles en ont avec leur origine, avec l'objet du

d

" législateur,

“ législateur, avec l'ordre des choses sur lesquelles elles sont établies.
 “ C'est dans toutes ces vues qu'il faut les considérer.”

To this may be added, from the high authority of Sir William Jones, the more concise and equally appropriate remark which he makes on the same subject, in his Preface to the Laws of MENU; “ That the best “ intended legislative provisions would have no beneficial effect, even “ at first, and none at all in a short course of time, unless they were “ congenial to the disposition and habits, to the religious prejudices, “ and approved immemorial usages, of the people, for whom they “ were enacted.”

After expressing a wish, that the reader should form his judgment of the Chinese Laws by these criteria, it seems preferable to refer directly to the translation of the Code itself, and to the illustrations subjoined to it, than to attempt in this place any detailed anticipation of its peculiarities and characteristics. A few general observations respecting their application and practice, may, nevertheless, until clearer lights can be thrown on the subject by closer and more capable observers, be of some utility, in as much as they may contribute to that just conception of the facts themselves, without which the most accurately drawn conclusions would, of course, be nugatory.

It may be noticed, in the first place, that although the ingenious M. Pauw, in his Philosophical Researches, has not exceeded the truth in observing, that “ les principaux ressorts du gouvernement Chinois “ sont le fouet et le bâton ;” neither these, nor any other corporal punishments, are in such universal use, or administered with such undistinguishing severity, as has sometimes been imagined.

Thus, in a book of drawings, copied apparently from Chinese originals, and published in England under the title of “ Punishments of China ;” the fancy of the painter has given, in some instances, a representation of cruelties, and of barbarous executions, which it would be very erroneous to suppose have a place in the ordinary course of justice, although something of such a nature may, no doubt, have been practised heretofore under some tyrannical and sanguinary Emperors; and even perhaps in the present age, upon some particular and extraordinary occasions.
 be

Thus, also, although every page of the following translation may seem at first sight to bear testimony to the universality of corporal punishments in China, a more careful inspection will lead to a discovery of so many grounds of mitigation, so many exceptions in favour of particular classes, and in consideration of particular circumstances, that the penal system is found, in fact, almost entirely to abandon that part of its outward and apparent character.

The acts which the laws of China enforce, and those which they prohibit, are indeed, in some cases, such as are more usually left in Europe to the decision of custom and individual feeling; but, in a country in which the laws have not in any considerable degree, the active concurrence, either of a sense of honour, or of a sense of religion, it may perhaps be absolutely requisite that they should take so wide a range. Experience may have dictated the necessity of their interfering in this direct manner in the enforcement of all those national habits and usages, whose preservation, as far as they are of a moral or prudential tendency, must undoubtedly be of essential importance both to the security of the government and to the happiness of the people.

Another object which seems to have been very generally consulted, is that of as much as possible combining, in the construction and adaptation of the scale of crimes and punishments throughout the Code, the opposite advantages of severity in denunciation and lenity in execution.

The excessive severity of the punishments actually inflicted in cases of treason, rebellion, breach of duty to parents and husbands, and in some others, is scarcely any exception to this rule; as, even in such instances, the execution of the law is lenient in comparison to its literal and prima facie interpretation. One considerable inconvenience, indeed, results from this system: in consequence of its adoption, although the place intended to be assigned to each transgression against the laws, in the general scale of criminality, is certainly very readily discoverable by the number of blows of the bamboo, or by the extent of the punishment, in other respects, nominally denounced against the transgressor, the punishment which he is in any particular case actually liable to suffer, is rarely if ever to be ascertained without various references and considerable research. The sections of the Chinese Code may thus, perhaps, not unaptly be compared to a collection of consecutive mathematical problems, with this additional circumstance of perplexity, that a just and entire comprehension of each section individually, requires a general knowledge of those that follow, no less than of those which precede it.

With all its defects, however, and with all its intricacy, this Code of Laws is generally spoken of by the natives with pride and admiration; all they seem in general to desire is, its just and impartial execution, independent of caprice, and uninfluenced by corruption.

That the laws of China are, on the contrary, very frequently violated by those who are their administrators and constitutional guardians, there can, unfortunately, be no question; but to what extent, comparatively with the laws of other countries, must at present be very much a matter of conjecture; at the same time, it may be observed as something in favour of the Chinese system, that there are very substantial grounds for believing, that neither flagrant, nor repeated acts of injustice, do, in point of fact, often, in any rank or station, ultimately escape with impunity.

The foregoing observations have either had relation to the peculiar subject of the original of the present work, or to the circumstances which which have been conceived to render it not altogether unworthy of the attention of the learned and curious in Europe.

It still remains for the Translator to explain in what manner, and to what extent, it has been his endeavour to transfuse the original Chinese text into the idiom of the English language. And this he feels it his duty to do more fully and circumstantially than if he had been pursuing a well known and beaten track, which might not only have justified a greater degree of confidence, but have likewise rendered explanations for the satisfaction of his readers less necessary.

In respect to the plan, the most obvious consideration which occurred, at the very commencement of the undertaking, was, that a translation at length, of every thing contained under the title of TATSING-LEU-LEE, a work occupying, in so concise a language as the Chinese, no less than 2906 octavo pages, was, if not absolutely impracticable, certainly altogether inexpedient.

If, in order to reduce the work into a compendious form, the Translator had permitted himself the liberty of making an abstract or abridgment of the text, he might, at the same time have endeavoured to have adopted a more systematic arrangement, a more pleasing style, and a more harmonious phraseology; but he was sensible that he should in the same proportion have impaired the two recommendations most essential to the value of the work, its authenticity, and its originality. He, therefore, determined upon a selection, not, indeed, according to any conjectural estimate of the superior importance of any particular part of the Code over another, but according to the rule, which, by the division of the laws into fundamental and supplementary, the Code itself afforded.

The Leu, or Fundamental Laws, are those of which the Penal Code, upon its formation soon after the accession of the present dynasty, appears originally to have consisted, and which, being, at least nominally, permanent, ment, are reprinted in each successive edition, without either alteration or amendment.

The Lee, or Supplementary Laws, are the modifications, extensions, and restrictions of the Fundamental Laws, which, after undergoing a deliberate examination in the Supreme Councils, and receiving the sanction of the Sovereign, are inserted in the form of clauses, at the end of each article or section of the Code, in order that they might, together with the Fundamental Laws, be equally known and observed. They are generally, however, revised every fifth year, and subjected to such alterations as the wisdom of government determines to be expedient.

Under these two denominations, the whole body of Chinese Penal Law is comprehended; but the number of documents which possess the force of laws without the name, must, under a government in which every authenticated expression of the will of the Prince bears that character, necessarily be unlimited.

Each article of the Fundamental Laws is also accompanied by a familiar Exposition, or rather Paraphrase, which bears the name of the Emperor YONG-TCHING; and the whole of the text is further illustrated by extracts from the works of various commentators: These appear to have been expressly written for the use and instruction of the magistrates, and accordingly form a body of legal reference, directly sanctioned for that particular purpose by government.

These extracts have not indeed been found to convey, on all occasions, that ample and satisfactory information which was at first expected from them; but this will not appear very extraordinary, when it is considered, that the persons whom they were designed to instruct, are exclusively natives, and, therefore, probably the least in want of an explanation upon those very points, which to a foreigner are necessarily the most perplexing.

Still, however, the Translator has derived from a perusal of this part of the original work considerable advantage; and when other sources of information failed to dispel the obscurity of which the conciseness of the text was sometimes productive, a reference to the expanded and explanatory form of expression, adopted in the paraphrase of the Emperor YONG-TCHING, was often found to supply every thing that was wanting to its complete elucidation.

Throughout the work, the Translator's first object, and that which he has endeavoured to keep constantly in view, has been to convey the full meaning of each article or paragraph successively, in appropriate, and, at the same time, intelligible language; in other words, to draw as justly as possible, the middle line between the unfaithfulness and inaccuracy of a free, and the ungracefulness and almost ungrammatical obscurity of a close version.

He is very sensible that his best efforts cannot have wholly protected him from occasional deviations from the course which he has prescribed to himself; but he trusts he shall meet with the excuse, if not also with the approbation, of the reader, in entertaining in every doubtful case, a disposition to prefer the latter of the opposite alternatives. — He is, at the same time, not unconscious, that the preservation of the style and form of expression observed in the original, is in itself, in this case, of little importance: that it is the nature and principles of the laws, not those of the language of the Chinese people, which it is properly the object of his work to illustrate. Under this impression, he has readily submitted to the necessity, whenever it occurred, of altering the order of words, and the construction of sentences; he has seldom scrupled to supply the want of a synonymous expression, by a definition; he has even ventured to embody in words those ideas which, though forming an integral part part of the sense of the text, were yet left, by a sort of ellipsis, to be understood by implication and inference.

It is, lastly, proper to notice, that in some few instances, the text has been found so obscure, and its construction so recondite, that no effort of attention was adequate completely to reconcile the apparent sense of the words, when considered individually, with their collective meaning, such as it was unanimously declared to be, by the most intelligent of the natives whom the Translator had an opportunity of consulting.

There is, certainly, something in the figurative or poetic style, with which the Chinese, on some occasions, embellish their writings, that a foreigner can scarcely ever hope to fathom, by any ordinary means of analysis or investigation; but, fortunately, instances of this kind are so rare in the Penal Code, that they form only a very trifling exception to the general style of the work, which, on the contrary, is remarkable for its conciseness and simplicity, and as familiar, as the subject and the use of technical phraseology would permit. So peculiarly difficult, indeed, is the figurative and poetic style of certain compositions of the Chinese, that one of the most distinguished among the Missionaries, for his talents and knowledge of the language, declares in his preface to a translation of an Imperial poem, which he entitles "Eloge de Mougden," that without a reference occasionally to the Mantchoo Tartar translation of that work, he never could have accomplished his undertaking.

In regard to terms, more or less peculiar to the Chinese, such as in a work of this nature would necessarily be of constant occurrence, the Translator might easily have relieved himself from every responsibility, by retaining in each case the original Chinese expression; but, considering that the very sounds of the language are strange and unpleasing to European ears, and, in fact, but very imperfectly capable of being represented by any European alphabet, he has conceived it would on every account be most desirable to reduce the untranslated words into as small a compass as possible, explaining the remaining few in notes in the margin; and remarking generally, with regard to the rest, that, as in the case of the words Emperor, Tribunal, and the like, they are approximations to the truth, whose ambiguity, if any, the context is generally fully sufficient to remove.
being

The Translator may be allowed to remark, that the choice of his subject was originally influenced by circumstances, in some degree accidental. It first occupied his attention in consequence of his having been personally a witness to many of the unnecessary provocations, groundless apprehensions, and embarrassing discussions, of which, since the first commencement of our present important commercial and national intercourse with the people of China, false or imperfect notions of the spirit of their laws have been, but too often, the occasion: and although the translation of every part of the work did not promise, in this point of view, to be of equal utility, he always found it, at the least, a gratification to curiosity, and a not uninteresting employment of leisure hours: it is only, however, very recently, and in compliance with the perhaps too partial suggestions of those to whose perusal the Translator has had the pleasure of submitting the manuscript, that he has allowed himself to believe it might prove not altogether unworthy of the attention of the Public at large.

He was sensible that on this occasion it was his first duty to assure himself of the substantial accuracy of his translation. But it was, at the same time, his anxious wish to render it, preparatory to its publication, as little exceptionable in other respects, as a due regard to that primary object would admit. It therefore affords him a peculiar pleasure to be able in this place to acknowledge the valuable suggestions which, to this end, two of his friends in particular have kindly contributed;

both of them distinguished as men of letters, the one with the addition of being pre-eminent in his profession of the law, and the other in respect to his superior knowledge of the Chinese empire, and his ardent zeal to promote and extend its relations with Great Britain, for the mutual benefit of both countries.

In making this declaration, however, it is far from the Translator's wish to avail himself of these respectable functions for the protection from censure of a work, for which he must of necessity be solely responsible; nor can he pretend to have had, in this country, the advantage of that particular assistance, which an acquaintance with the language of the original could alone have placed his friends in a situation to afford him.

In order to give as much of that species of illustration, which an undertaking of this nature more particularly requires, an Appendix is subjoined, consisting, first, of translations of some of the most interesting of the Chinese official documents in the Translator's possession, which happened to be either connected with or in any way applicable to the subject; secondly, of translations of some of the most remarkable among the supplementary laws or clauses; and lastly, of occasional remarks and notices upon particular passages, which occurred in the course of the work, but which could not have been conveniently inserted in the margin.

Still, however, the Translator is sensible, that, after every endeavour to render the following work as complete as possible, it must yet, in many points, be unavoidably defective; but he at the same time feels encouraged by the assurance, that his readers are too well acquainted with the nature of the undertaking, and the peculiar circumstances connected with it, to entertain expectations founded upon a reference, either to the excellent treatises upon our own laws by Blackstone and others, or even to the accounts which we possess of the laws of many foreign, but at the same time more easily accessible, countries. Being also

also almost the first essay at translation from a Chinese original into the English language, he trusts that even in that point of view it will not be deemed undeserving of indulgence.

His own wishes will be gratified in their full extent, if he can be considered to have succeeded in giving, through the medium of an authentic work, containing incidental notices upon the manners, customs, civil and religious habits, national characteristics, and moral principles of the Chinese, a just idea of the spirit, and a sufficiently extended specimen of the substance, of the coercive and penal laws by which the government of that vast empire has so long been maintained and regulated.

T A B L E
OF
C O N T E N T S.

PRELIMINARY MATTER.

No.		PAGE
I.	A BSTRACT of the Title-page of the Edition of the Penal Code printed and published in China in 1799, the 4th year of the Reign of the present Emperor KIA-KING - -	lxiii.
II.	Original Preface to the Penal Code, by the Emperor SHUN-CHEE, the first of the present Dynasty - -	lxv.
III.	Prefatory Ediçt of the Emperor KAUNG-HEE, (otherwise, but improperly, CAMHI,) the second of the present Dynasty -	lxvii.
IV.	Prefatory Ediçt of the Emperor YONG-TCHING, the third of the present Dynasty. - - -	lxix.
V.	Table I.—Scale of Punishment of Offences against public and private Property - - -	lxxi.
VI.	Table II.—Scale of pecuniary Redemption of necessarily redeemable Punishments - - -	lxxii.
VII.	Table III.—Scale of pecuniary Redemption in such Cafes as are not legally excluded from the Benefit of general Acts of Grace and Pardon - - -	lxxiii.
VIII.	Table IV.—Degrees of ordinary Punishment - - -	lxxiv.
IX.	Table V.—Specification of the ordinary Instruments of Punishment and Confinement - - -	ibid.
X.	Table VI.—Degrees of Relationship and of Mourning -	lxxv.

FIRST

FIRST DIVISION, — General Laws.

BOOK I.

PRELIMINARY REGULATIONS.

SECTION	PAGE
I. DESCRIPTION of the ordinary Punishments	1
II. Offences of a treasonable Nature	3
III. The Privileged Classes	5
IV. Offences of Persons entitled to Privilege	7
V. Relations of Persons entitled to Privilege	ibid.
VI. Offences committed by Officers of Government, how investigated	9
VII. Offences committed by Officers of Government in their public Capacity	10
VIII. Offences committed by Officers of Government of a private and personal Nature	11
IX. Offenders who are not liable to Banishment	12
X. Offenders of the Military Class	13
XI. Mitigation of Punishment	ibid.
XII. Officers of Government, when removed without being disgraced	14
XIII. Offences committed by Officers of Government previous to their Elevation	15
XIV. Degraded Officers of Government liable to the same Obligations as private Individuals	16
XV. Relations of Exiles	17
XVI. Extent of an Act of Grace or General Pardon	18
XVII. Effect of an Act of Grace on the Condition of Offenders in Exile	19
XVIII. Indulgence to Offenders for the Sake of their Parents	20
XIX. Offences of Astronomers	21
XX. Offences of Artificers, Musicians, and Women	22
XXI. Offences of Persons already under Sentence of Punishment	23
	XXII. In-

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

xxxix

SECTION	PAGE
XXII. Indulgence to Offenders in consideration of their Age, Youth, or Infirmities	- 23
XXIII. Plea of Age and Infirmities how to be construed	- 25
XXIV. Restitution and Forfeiture of Goods	- ibid.
XXV. Offenders surrendering voluntarily	- 27
XXVI. Offenders charged with several Offences	- 29
XXVII. Proceedings in Cases where all the Parties to an Offence have escaped	- ibid.
XXVIII. Offences of Members of public Departments and Tribunals, committed in their official Capacity	- 30
XXIX. Errors and Failures in public Proceedings	- 31
XXX. Distinction between Principals and Accessaries	- 32
XXXI. Proceedings relative to Offenders who have absconded	- 34
XXXII. Relations mutually assisting and concealing each other	- ibid.
XXXIII. Punishment of Deserters	- 35
XXXIV. Offences committed by Foreigners	- 36
XXXV. Proceedings in Cases where the Laws appear contradictory	37
XXXVI. Rules relative to the Increase and Diminution of Punishments	38
XXXVII. Extent of the Privilege and Distinction of Imperial Rank	- 39
XXXVIII. Relations in the first Degree	- ibid.
XXXIX. Participators in Offences	- 40
XL. Responsible Superintendants	- 41
XLI. Division of Time	- ibid.
XLII. Laws relative to the Priesthood	- 42
XLIII. Execution of new Laws	- 43
XLIV. Determination of Cases not provided for by any existing Law	ibid.
XLV. Place of temporary and perpetual Banishment	- 44
XLVI. Place of extraordinary or military Banishment	- 45

SECOND

SECOND DIVISION, — Civil Laws.

B O O K I.

SYSTEM OF GOVERNMENT.

SECTION	PAGE
XLVII. Hereditary Succession	49
XLVIII. Great Officers of State not authorized to confer Appointments	51
XLIX. Officers of Government not allowed to solicit hereditary Honours	52
L. Supernumerary Officers of Government	ibid.
LI. Transmision of official Dispatches	54
LII. Partiality in the Examination of Candidates for Degrees	55
LIII. Relative to Officers of Government dismissed for Misconduct	56
LIV. Officers of Government quitting their Stations without leave	57
LV. Officers of Government to proceed to their Destinations without Delay	58
LVI. Attendance of Officers of Government at Court	59
LVII. Irregular Interference of Superiors with subordinate Magistrates	ibid.
LVIII. Cabals and State Intrigues	60
LIX. Combination and Collusion between provincial Officers and Officers of the Court	62
LX. Addresses in favour of Great Officers of State	ibid.

B O O K II.

CONDUCT OF THE MAGISTRATES.

LXI. Due Knowledge of the Laws	64
LXII. Non-Execution of an Imperial Edict	65
LXIII. Destroying or discarding Edicts and Seals of Office	ibid.
LXIV. Errors and Informalities in public Documents	67
LXV. Neglecting to make such Reports to superior Officers as are by Law required	68

LXVI.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

xli

SECTION	PAGE
LXVI. Officers on detached Service not reporting their Proceedings	70
LXVII. Delay in expediting the Edicts of Government	71
LXVIII. Examination of official Records	72
LXIX. Re-examination of outstanding Articles of official Records	73
LXX. Transfer or Exchange of official Duties prohibited	74
LXXI. Alteration of the Contents of an official Dispatch	ibid.
LXXII. Use of the official or public Seal	76
LXXIII. Omitting to use, or imperfectly using, an official Seal	ibid.
LXXIV. Employing the Sanction of Seals of military Offices upon civil Affairs	77

THIRD DIVISION, — Fiscal Laws.

B O O K I.

ENROLMENT OF THE PEOPLE.

-LXXV. Families and Individuals to be duly enrolled	79
-LXXVI. Families and Individuals to be registered according to their Professions	82
LXXVII. Privately founding religious Houses, and privately enter- ing into the Order of Priesthood	83
LXXVIII. Rule of Succession and Inheritance	84
LXXIX. Regulations concerning stray Children	85
LXXX. Impartiality in the Levy of Taxes and personal Services	86
LXXXI. Impartiality in the Allotment of personal Services	87
LXXXII. Evasion of personal Service	88
LXXXIII. Supernumerary Persons exercising district Authority, pro- hibited	ibid.
LXXXIV. Evasion of personal Service by Concealment or Desertion	89
LXXXV. Selection of the Guards and Attendants of Prisons	90
LXXXVI. Personal Services of Labourers and Artificers, required be- yond the legal Extent, or for private Purposes	91
LXXXVII. Individuals deserting, or prematurely separating from their Families	92
f	LXXXVIII.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

SECTION		PAGE
LXXXVIII.	Younger and inferior Branches of a Family disposing of the Property without Leave	92
LXXXIX.	Care of the Aged and Infirm	93

B O O K II.

LANDS AND TENEMENTS.

XC.	Fraudulent Evasion of the Land-Tax	94
XCI.	Personal Visitation of Lands suffering from any Calamity	96
XCII.	Lands of the Nobility and Officers of Government	98
XCIII.	Fraudulent Sale of Lands and Tenements	99
XCIV.	Officers of Government restricted from purchasing Lands within the Limits of their Jurisdiction	100
XCV.	Law of Mortgages	101
XCVI.	Sowing and tilling Lands belonging to others	102
XCVII.	Uncultivated and neglected Lands	103
XCVIII.	Destroying or damaging the Harvests, and Articles connected therewith	104
XCIX.	Taking away, without Leave, the Fruit growing in Gardens or Orchards	105
C.	Misapplication of the Boats or Carriages of Government	106

B O O K III.

MARRIAGE.

CI.	Marriages how regulated	107
CII.	Lending Wives or Daughters on Hire	110
CIII.	Regard to Rank and Priority among Wives	ibid.
CIV.	Ejecting from Home a Son-in-Law	111
CV.	Marriage during the legal Period of Mourning	112
CVI.	Marriage during the Imprisonment of Parents	114
CVII.	Marriages between Persons having the same Family Name	ibid.
CVIII.	Marriages between Persons related by Marriage	115
CIX.	Marriages with Relations by Blood, or with the Widows of such Relations	ibid.
		CX.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

xliii

SECTION		PAGE
CX.	Marriages of Officers of Government, into Families subject to their Jurisdiction	116
CXI.	Marriage with absconded Females	117
CXII.	Forcible Marriage of a free Man's Wife or Daughter	ibid.
CXIII.	Marriage with Female Musicians and Comedians	118
CXIV.	Marriage of Priests of Foe or Tao-ffe	ibid.
CXV.	Marriage between free Persons and Slaves	119
CXVI.	Law of Divorce	120
CXVII.	Giving in Marriage unlawfully	122

BOOK IV.

PUBLIC PROPERTY.

CXVIII.	Regulations concerning Coinage	124
CXIX.	Periods established for collecting the Revenues in Kind	125
CXX.	Fairness and impartiality in collecting the Revenues in Kind	126
CXXI.	Concealing or wasting the Proportion of exciseable Articles set apart for the Use of Government	127
CXXII.	Vicarious Contributors to the Revenue	128
CXXIII.	Premature Discharges or Quittances for Taxes due to Government	129
CXXIV.	Suppression and Misapplication of contingent Excess of Revenue	131
CXXV.	Privately lending or employing the public Revenue	132
CXXVI.	Privately lending or employing public Property	133
CXXVII.	Receipt, Transfer, and Expenditure of the Revenue	ibid.
CXXVIII.	Misconduct of supernumerary Revenue Officers	135
CXXIX.	Fraudulent Appropriation of public Property	ibid.
CXXX.	Revenue Officers reciprocally answerable for each other	136
CXXXI.	Responsibility of Revenue Officers in Cases of Theft.	137
CXXXII.	Responsibility of Receivers and Distributors of public Property	138
CXXXIII.	Established Regulations observed in the Receipt and Issue of public Stores	139
CXXXIV.	Vexatious Proceedings on the Occasion of the Receipt and Issue of public Stores	140
CXXXV.	Purity of the precious Metals payable to Government	ibid.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

SECTION	PAGE
CXXXVI. Responsibility for the Damage or Loss of public Stores	- 141
CXXXVII. Regular Transmission of public Stores from the inferior to to superior Jurisdictions	- 142
CXXXVIII. Rule of Forfeiture and Restitution	- 144
CXXXIX. Intermediate Charge of public Property	- 145
CXL. Concealment or Denial either of Property under Sentence of Forfeiture, or of Families under Sentence of Servitude	ibid.

B O O K V.

DUTIES AND CUSTOMS.

CXLI. Duty on Salt	- 148
CXLII. Superintendants of Salt-Duties to receive no intermediate Profits	- 153
CXLIII. Preservation of Salt-Laws from Neglect	ibid.
CXLIV. Smuggling of Tea	- 154
CXLV. Smuggling of Allum	- 155
CXLVI. Evasion of Duties, or Smuggling in general	ibid.
CXLVII. Merchant Vessels having false Manifests of their Cargoes	- 156
CXLVIII. Arrears of Duties and Customs to be paid within the Year in which they are due	ibid.

B O O K VI.

PRIVATE PROPERTY.

CXLIX. Usury	- 158
CL. Dilapidation of Property in Trust	- 161
CLI. Lost and forgotten Property	ibid.

B O O K VII.

SALES AND MARKETS.

CLII. Licence of commercial Agents	- 163
CLIII. Valuation of Merchandize	- 164
	CLIV.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

xlv

SECTION	PAGE
CLIV. Monopolizers and unfair Traders	164
CLV. False Weights, Measures, and Scales	165
CLVI. Manufactures not equal or conformable to Standard	167

FOURTH DIVISION, — Ritual Laws.

BOOK I.

SACRED RITES.

CLVII. Administration of sacred Rites	169
CLVIII. Destroying Altars and sacred Terraces	172
CLIX. Provincial sacred Rites to be conformable to the Ritual Code	ibid.
CLX. Care of the Tombs of distinguished Personages	173
CLXI. Dishonouring celestial Spirits by unlicensed Forms of Worship	174
CLXII. Magicians, Leaders of Sects, and Teachers of false Doctrines	175

BOOK II.

MISCELLANEOUS OBSERVANCES.

CLXIII. Preparation of Medicines and Provisions for the Emperor	177
CLXIV. Charge of the Imperial Equipage and Furniture	178
CLXV. Possession and Concealment of prohibited Books and Instruments	179
CLXVI. Transmission of Imperial Presents	180
CLXVII. Observance of Festivals and Days of Ceremony	ibid.
CLXVIII. Due Performance of appointed Ceremonies	181
CLXIX. Officers of Government to address the Emperor in Succession, according to their Rank	ibid.
CLXX. Vexatiously detaining Officers of Government from the Imperial Presence	ibid.
CLXXI. Addresses on public Affairs	182
CLXXII. Monuments raised by Officers of Government to commemorate their own Actions	183
CLXXIII. Honorary Attendance on Superiors in Rank	184
CLXXIV. Official Messengers contemptuously treating Officers of Districts	185
	CLXXV.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

SECTION		PAGE
CLXXV.	Sumptuary Laws relative to Drefs and Habitations	- 185
CLXXVI.	Drefs and Conduct of the Priests	- 186
CLXXVII.	Neglect to observe and note the celestial Appearances	187
CLXXVIII.	Conjurors and Fortune-tellers prohibited from Prophefying public Events	- ibid.
CLXXIX.	Evading the Duty, and concealing the Occasion of Mourning	188
CLXXX.	Officers of Government neglecting their Parents	- 189
CLXXXI.	Regulations concerning Funerals	- 190
CLXXXII.	Regulation of Country Festivals.	- 191

FIFTH DIVISION, — Military Laws.

B O O K I.

PROTECTION OF THE PALACE.

CLXXXIII.	Unauthorizedly entering the Imperial Temple	- - 193
CLXXXIV.	Unauthorizedly entering the Imperial Palace	- - 194
CLXXXV.	Imperial Guards failing to do their Duty	- - 195
CLXXXVI.	Imperial Retinue failing in their Attendance	- - 196
CLXXXVII.	Trespafs upon the Imperial Roads	- - 197
CLXXXVIII.	Rules concerning Labourers within the Palace	- 198
CLXXXIX.	Labourers in the Palace remaining after the Conclusion of their Work	- ibid.
CXC.	Irregularity in passing through the Gates of the Imperial Palaces	- 199
CXCI.	Examination of the Certificates or Passports of Persons having Employments in the Palace	- 200
CXCII.	Shooting or throwing missile Weapons towards an Imperial Palace	- 202
CXCIII.	Soldiers and Officers on Guard to be always armed	- ibid.
CXCIV.	Convicted Persons and their Relations not to be employed near the Imperial Prefence	- 203
CXCV.	Intrufion into the Space allotted for the Imperial Retinue	204
CXCVI.	Passing through Gates leading to an Imperial Palace	- 205
CXCVII.	Scaling the Walls of fortified Places	- 206
CXCVIII.	Regulations concerning the Gates of Cities	- ibid.

B O O K

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

xlvii

B O O K II.

GOVERNMENT OF THE ARMY.

SECTION	PAGE
CXCIX. Unauthorizedly employing military Force	208
CC. Military Operations to be regularly reported	210
CCI. Expresses upon military Affairs	212
CCII. Betraying the Secrets of the State	213
CCIII. Application, for and Transmiffion of military Supplies	214
CCIV. Errors and Failures in military Operations	215
CCV. Military Officers and Troops not taking the Field according to their Instructions	ibid.
CCVI. Soldiers serving by Substitutes	216
CCVII. Officers on the Field of Battle unfaithful to their Trust	217
CCVIII. Connivance at the Depredations of the Soldiers	218
CCIX. Exercife and Discipline of the Troops	220
CCX. Exciting and caufing Rebellion by oppreffive Conduct	221
CCXI. Clandeftine Sale of Horfes taken in Battle	ibid.
CCXII. Clandeftine Sale of military Arms and Accoutrements	222
CCXIII. Destroying and cafting away military Arms and Accoutrements	223
CCXIV. Poffeffion of prohibited Arms and Accoutrements	224
CCXV. Relaxation of, and Abfence from military Duties	ibid.
CCXVI. Princes and Hereditary Nobility employing the Troops of Government	227
CCXVII. Defertion from military Service	228
CCXVIII. Favour to be fhewn to the Relations of Officers and Soldiers deceafed	230
CCXIX. Regulations of the nocturnal Police	ibid.

B O O K III.

PROTECTION OF THE FRONTIER.

CCXX. Crossing a Barrier without a Licenfe	232
CCXXI. Granting or obtaining Paffports or Licenfes under falfe Pretences	233
CCXXII. Vexatious Treatment of Travellers at the Barriers	235
CCXXIII. Affifting and favouring the Escape of the Wives and Daugh- ters of Deferters	236
CCXXIV.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

SECTION		PAGE
CCXXIV.	Examination and Detection of suspected Persons	- 237
CCXXV.	Illicit Exportation of Merchandize	- 238
CCXXVI.	Employment of Bow-men upon private Services	- 239

B O O K IV.

MILITARY HORSES AND CATTLE.

CCXXVII.	Responsibility of the Charge of Government Cattle	- 241
CCXXVIII.	Breeding of Horses	- 242
CCXXIX.	Examination of Animals to be purchased by Contract	- 243
CCXXX.	Exercise of the Veterinary Art	- ibid.
CCXXXI.	Improper Usage and Neglect of Cattle	- 244
CCXXXII.	Neglecting to break in and exercise the Horses of Government	- 245
CCXXXIII.	Killing Horses, horned Cattle, and other Animals	- ibid.
CCXXXIV.	Vicious and dangerous Animals	- 248
CCXXXV.	Concealment of the Increase of Animals belonging to Government	- 249
CCXXXVI.	Privately lending the Animals belonging to Government	250
CCXXXVII.	Public Messengers using the Horses of Government without Authority	- ibid.

B O O K V.

EXPRESSES AND PUBLIC POSTS.

CCXXXVIII.	Conveyance of Government Orders and Dispatches	- 252
CCXXXIX.	Intercepting Addresses to Government	- 254
CCXL.	Post-houses to be kept in Repair	- 255
CCXLI.	Post-soldiers to be employed on no other Service	- 256
CCXLII.	Express-messengers delaying upon the Road	- ibid.
CCXLIII.	Express-messengers exceeding the Allowances of Horses and Equipage fixed by Government	- 257
CCXLIV.	Express-messengers exceeding the fixed Allowance of Money and Provisions	- 259
CCXLV.	Express-post to be reserved for important Dispatches	- 260
CCXLVI.	Dilatoriness in Transmissions and Removals connected with the public Service	- 261
		CCXLVII.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

xlix

SECTION		PAGE
CCXLVII.	Occupation of the principal Apartments in Post-houfes - - -	262
CCXLVIII.	Transmission of private Property by Government Post-horfes - - -	ibid.
CCXLIX.	Officers and others compelling the Inhabitants of their District to carry their Palanquins -	263
CCL.	Families of deceased Officers to be removed at the public Expence - - -	264
CCLI.	Hiring Substitutes, and entrusting to them an allotted personal Service - - -	ibid.
CCLII.	Conveyance of private Property at the Charge of Government - - -	266
CCLIII.	Privately lending the Post-horfes of Government -	267

SIXTH DIVISION, — Criminal Laws.

BOOK I.

ROBBERY AND THEFT.

CCLIV.	High Treason - - -	269
CCLV.	Rebellion and Renunciation of Allegiance -	272
CCLVI.	Sorcery and Magic - - -	273
CCLVII.	Sacrilege - - -	274
CCLVIII.	Stealing Edicts and Ordinances of Government -	ibid.
CCLIX.	Stealing Seals and Stamps of Office -	275
CCLX.	Stealing from an Imperial Palace -	ibid.
CCLXI.	Stealing the Keys of the Gate of a Fort or City -	ibid.
CCLXII.	Stealing Military Weapons and Accoutrements -	276
CCLXIII.	Stealing Timber from a Burying-Ground -	277
CCLXIV.	Embezzlement of public Property -	ibid.
CCLXV.	Theft of public Property - - -	279
CCLXVI.	Robbery,—Highway Robbery - - -	280
CCLXVII.	Rescue from Prifon - - -	281
CCLXVIII.	Robbing in open Day - - -	283
CCLXIX.	Stealing in general - - -	284
CCLXX.	Stealing Hofes and other domesticated Animals -	285
CCLXXI.	Stealing Corn or other Produce in the open Field -	286

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

SECTION	PAGE
✓ CCLXXII. Stealing from Relations or Connexions	- 287
CCLXXIII. Extorting Property by Threats	- 288
CCLXXIV. Obtaining Property under false Pretences	- 289
CCLXXV. Kidnapping, or the unlawful Seizure and Sale of free Persons	- 290
CCLXXVI. Disturbing Graves	- 293
CCLXXVII. Unauthorizedly entering a Dwelling-house by Night	297
CCLXXVIII. Harboursing Thieves and Robbers	- ibid.
CCLXXIX. Rules by which the Accessaries to a Theft and the Accessaries to a Robbery are distinguished	- 299
CCLXXX. What constitutes a Theft or a Robbery, and what an Attempt only	- 300
CCLXXXI. Defacing or destroying the Marks with which Thieves had been branded	- 301

B O O K II.

HOMICIDE.

CCLXXXII. Preconcerted Homicide ; Murder	- 303
CCLXXXIII. Murder of an Officer of Government	- 304
CCLXXXIV. Parricide	- 305
CCLXXXV. Killing an Adulterer	- 307
CCLXXXVI. Widows killing their deceased Husband's Relations	ibid.
CCLXXXVII. Murder of three or more Persons in one Family	- 308
CCLXXXVIII. Murder, with the Intent to mangle and divide the Body of the Deceased for magical Purposes	- 309
CCLXXXIX. Rearing venomous Animals, and preparing Poisons	310
CCXC. Killing with an Intent to kill, and killing in an Affray	311
CCXCI. Depriving of Food or Raiment	- 312
CCXCII. Killing or wounding in Play, by Error, or purely by Accident	- 313
CCXCIII. A Husband killing his culpable Wife	- 315
CCXCIV. Killing a Son, Grandson, or Slave, and attributing the Crime to an innocent Person	- 316
CCXCV. Wounding mortally or otherwise, by shooting Arrows and similar Weapons	- 317
CCXCVI. Wounding mortally or otherwise by Means of Horses and Carriages	- 318
	CCXCVII.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

li

SECTION	PAGE
CCXCVII. Practitioners of Medicine killing or injuring their Patients	319
CCXCVIII. Killing or wounding by Means of Traps or Springes	320
CCXCIX. Occasioning the Death of an Individual by violent and fearful Threats	321
CCC. Compromising and concealing the Crime of killing an elder Relation	322
CCCI. Neglecting to give Information of, or to interfere and prevent a violent injury which is known to be intended	323

B O O K . III.

QUARRELLING AND FIGHTING.

CCCII. Quarrelling and Fighting between Equals in ordinary Cafes	324
CCCIII. Periods of Responsibility for the Consequences of a Wound	327
CCCIV. Quarrelling and Fighting within the Imperial Palace	329
CCCV. Striking or wounding an Individual of the Imperial Blood	330
CCCVI. Striking ordinary and extraordinary Officers of Government	ibid.
CCCVII. Subordinate Officers of Government striking Persons who are their Superiors both in Rank and Jurisdiction	332
CCCVIII. Co-ordinate or independent Officers of Government striking each other	333
CCCIX. Officers of Government striking their Superiors in Rank, but not in Jurisdiction	ibid.
CCCX. Resisting and striking any Person employed officially by Government on public Service	334
CCCXI. Disciples and Apprentices striking their Masters	335
CCCXII. Unlawful Detention and Imprisonment	ibid.
CCCXIII. Slaves and free Persons assaulting and striking each other	336
CCCXIV. Slaves striking their Masters	338
CCCXV. Wives striking their Husbands	341
CCCXVI. Striking a Relation not within any of the four Degrees	343

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

SECTION	PAGE
CCCXVII. Striking a Relation in the 2d, 3d, or 4th Degree	- 344
CCCXVIII. Striking a Relation in the 1st Degree	- 345
CCCXIX. Striking a Father or Mother, paternal Grandfather or Grandmother	- 346
CCCXX. Wives striking their Husband's Relations	- 349
CCCXXI. Striking a Wife's Children by her former Husband	351
CCCXXII. Widows striking the Parents of their deceased Husbands	- ibid.
CCCXXIII. Striking in Defence of a Parent	- 351

BOOK IV.

ABUSIVE LANGUAGE.

CCCXXIV. Abusive Language between Equals	- 354
CCCXXV. Abusive Language to an Officer of Government	- ibid.
CCCXXVI. Abusive Language between Officers of the same Tribunal	- 355
CCCXXVII. Abusive Language from a Slave to his Master	- 356
CCCXXVIII. Abusive Language to an elder Relation	- ibid.
CCCXXIX. Abusive Language to a Parent, paternal Grandfather or Grandmother	- 357
CCCXXX. Abusive Language from a Wife to her Husband's Relations	- ibid.
CCCXXXI. Abusive Language addressed by a Widow to her deceased Husband's Parents	- 358

BOOK V.

INDICTMENTS AND INFORMATIONS.

CCCXXXII. Irregularity in presenting Informations	- 359
CCCXXXIII. Anonymous Informations	- 360
CCCXXXIV. Neglecting or declining to receive Informations	- 361
CCCXXXV. Informations which must be transferred to the cognizance of others	- 364
CCCXXXVI. False and malicious Informations	- ibid.
CCCXXXVII. Informations against Relations	- 371
CCCXXXVIII. Disobedience to Parents	- 374
CCCXXXIX.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

lii

SECTION		PAGE
CCCXXXIX.	Informations presented by Criminals under Confinement	374
CCCXL.	Exciting and promoting Litigation	375
CCCXLI.	Informations on Subjects affecting Civil as well as Military Affairs	376
CCCXLII.	Informations and Prosecutions on the Part of Officers of Government	377
CCCXLIII.	False Accufations of Offences punishable with extraordinary Banishment	378

B O O K VI.

BRIBERY AND CORRUPTION.

CCCXLIV.	Accepting a Bribe	379
CCCXLV.	Pecuniary Malversation	382
CCCXLVI.	Receiving Money corruptly by way of Reward	384
CCCXLVII.	Contracting for and agreeing to accept a Bribe	ibid.
CCCXLVIII.	Offering a Bribe	385
CCCXLIX.	Extortion of Loans, and unfair Sales	386
CCCL.	Extortion and other corrupt Practices of Persons in the Families of Officers of Government	388
CCCLI.	Extortion and other corrupt Practices of Great Officers of State	ibid.
CCCLII.	Levying extraordinary Contributions on the Plea of public Service	389
CCCLIII.	Suppressing the Discovery of stolen Goods	390
CCCLIV.	Receiving Presents from the higher hereditary Nobility	391

B O O K VII.

FORGERIES AND FRAUDS.

CCCLV.	Falsification of an Imperial Edict	392
CCCLVI.	Falsification of verbal Orders	394
CCCLVII.	Falsely and deceitfully addressing the Sovereign	395
CCCLVIII.	Counterfeiting any official Seal, or the Imperial Almanac	396

CCCLIX.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

SECTION	PAGE
CCCLIX. Counterfeiting the current Coin of the Realm	- 397
CCCLX. Impostors pretending to be Officers of Government	- 398
CCCLXI. Impostors pretending to be Great Officers of State	- 399
CCCLXII. Officers of State, and others belonging to the Court, interfering without Authority	- 401
CCCLXIII. Pretending to discover Prognostics	- ibid.
CCCLXIV. Pretending Sickness or Death	- ibid.
CCCLXV. Seducing Persons to transgress the Laws	- 403

B O O K VIII.

INCEST AND ADULTERY.

CCCLXVI. Criminal Intercourse in general	- 404
CCCLXVII. Conniving at or consenting to a criminal Intercourse	- 405
CCCLXVIII. Incest or criminal Intercourse between Relations	- 406
CCCLXIX. Accusing an elder Relation of Adultery	- 407
CCCLXX. Criminal Intercourse between Slaves or Servants and their Master's Wives	- ibid.
CCCLXXI. Criminal Intercourse between Officers of Government and Females under their Jurisdiction	- 408
CCCLXXII. Criminal Intercourse during the Period of Mourning	- 409
CCCLXXIII. Criminal Intercourse between free Persons and Slaves	- ibid.
CCCLXXIV. Officers of Government frequenting the Company of Prostitutes and Actresses	- 410
CCCLXXV. Strolling Players	- ibid.

B O O K IX.

MISCELLANEOUS OFFENCES.

CCCLXXVI. Defacing or destroying public Monuments	- 411
CCCLXXVII. Care of Soldiers, and of Labourers for the Public, when sick	- ibid.
CCCLXXVIII. Gaming	- 412
CCCLXXIX. Eunuchs	- ibid.
CCCLXXX. Making illegal Proposals	- 413
CCCLXXXI. Compromising Offences, and withdrawing them from the Cognizance of the Magistrates	- 415
	CCCLXXXII.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

lv

SECTION	PAGE
CCCLXXXII. Accidental House-burning	415
CCCLXXXIII. Wilful and malicious House-burning	417
CCCLXXXIV. Theatrical Representations	418
CCCLXXXV. Transgression of Standing Rules and Orders	419
CCCLXXXVI. Improper Conduct not specifically punishable	ibid.

B O O K X.

ARRESTS AND ESCAPES.

CCCLXXXVII. Duty of Police Officers	420
CCCLXXXVIII. Criminals resisting the Police Officers	421
CCCLXXXIX. Prisoners escaping or rising against their Keepers	422
CCCXC. Returning or escaping from a Place of Banishment	423
CCCXCI. Delaying the Execution of a Sentence of Banishment	425
CCCXCII. Jailors and others suffering their Prisoners to escape	426
CCCXCIII. Privately assisting and concealing Criminals	428
CCCXCIV. Periods allowed for the Pursuit of Thieves and Robbers.	429

B O O K XI.

IMPRISONMENT, JUDGMENT, AND EXECUTION.

CCCXCV. Securing the Persons of Prisoners	431
CCCXCVI. Imprisonment and Procedure against unaccused and unimplicated Persons.	433
CCCXCVII. Delay in executing the Sentence of the Law	435
CCCXCVIII. Ill Treatment of Prisoners	436
CCCXCIX. Allowing Prisoners sharp Instruments	ibid.
CCCC. Encouraging and exciting Prisoners to make groundless Appeals	438
CCCCL. Supply of Food and Clothes to Prisoners	439
CCCCLII. Indulgence in consideration of the Rank and former Services of Prisoners	440
CCCCLIII. Prisoners committing Suicide	441
CCCCLIV. Torture not to be used in the judicial Examination of Children or of the Aged	ibid.
CCCCV.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

SECTION	PAGE
CCCCV. Confronting Offenders and their Associates	- 442
CCCCVI. Examination of Offenders to correspond with the Charges against them	- 444
CCCCVII. Prosecutors not to be detained after a Trial is concluded	- 445
CCCCVIII. Offenders recriminating upon innocent Persons	- ibid.
CCCCIX. Pronouncing and executing an unjust Sentence	- 447
CCCCX. Reversal of a false Judgment	- 450
CCCCXI. Execution of Judgment	- 451
CCCCXII. Examination of the Body in Cases of Homicide	- 452
CCCCXIII. Infliction of Punishments in an illegal Manner	- 453
CCCCXIV. Proceedings against Offences committed by superior Magistrates	- 455
CCCCXV. Laws, Statutes, and Precedents which are to be observed in passing Sentence	- ibid.
CCCCXVI. Prisoners upon Trial, at Liberty either to plead guilty or to protest against their Sentence	- 456
CCCCXVII. Misapplication or Disregard of an Act of Grace and Pardon	- 457
CCCCXVIII. Offending designedly, in the Expectation of Impunity through an Act of Grace and Pardon	- ibid.
CCCCXIX. Services to be performed by temporarily banished Offenders	- 458
CCCCXX. Punishment of Female Offenders	- 459
CCCCXXI. Execution of Criminals without waiting for the Emperor's Ratification	- 460
CCCCXXII. Execution of a Sentence by a false Construction of the Laws	- 461
CCCCXXIII. Clerks of Tribunals altering the Statements of Informers	- 462

SEVENTH DIVISION, — Laws relative to Public Works.

B O O K I.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

SECTION		PAGE
CCCCXXIV.	Ordering public Works without sufficient Authority	463
CCCCXXV.	Unnecessary and unserviceable Works	- 464
CCCCXXVI.	Public Works and Manufactures to be conformable to Rule and Custom	- 465
CCCCXXVII.	Misapplication of public Stores	- 466
CCCCXXVIII.	Misapplication of the public Looms	- 467
CCCCXXIX.	Working Silks or Stuffs according to prohibited Patterns	- ibid.
CCCCXXX.	Irregularity in the Supplies of raw Materials, and in the Issue of manufactured Goods	- 468
CCCCXXXI.	Due Preservation and Repair of public Buildings	- ibid.
CCCCXXXII.	Officers of Government not residing in the Habitations allotted to them	- 469

B O O K II.

PUBLIC WAYS.

CCCCXXXIII.	Damaging Embankments of Rivers	- 471
CCCCXXXIV.	Neglecting duly to repair and maintain Embankments	- 472
CCCCXXXV.	Encroaching on public Highways	- 473
CCCCXXXVI.	Repair of Roads and Bridges	- ibid.

APPENDIX.

No.		PAGE
I.	TRANSLATION of the Testamentary Edict of KIEN-LUNG, the late Emperor of China	477
II.	Translation of the Edict of the reigning Emperor KIA-KING, by which the Death of his Father, the Emperor KIEN-LUNG, was first officially made public	483
III.	Note of the Translator; containing the Titles of omitted Articles of Preliminary Matter	486
IV.	Note of the Translator; relative to the introductory Table of Degrees of Relationship and Mourning	487
V.	Translation of the Supplementary Clauses to Section I. entitled " Description of ordinary Punishments "	488
VI.	Note of the Translator upon Section II. entitled " Offences of a treasonable Nature "	490
VII.	Note of the Translator upon Section III. entitled " Privileged Classes "	ibid.
VIII.	Note of the Translator; containing some Remarks upon the History of Ho-chung-tong , the favourite Minister of the Emperor KIEN-LUNG	491
	Translation of an Imperial Edict in which various Articles of Impeachment against the Minister Ho-chung-tong are exhibited	493
	Translation of an Imperial Edict, announcing the Sentence of Condemnation passed upon the Minister Ho-chung-tong , and upon some of his Relations and principal Adherents	498
	Translation of an Imperial Edict, declaratory of a general Amnesty in favour of all other Persons who might have been connected with or influenced by the said Minister	502
IX.	Translation of an Imperial Edict, extracted from the Peking Gazette, containing a Statement of the Grounds upon which a Sentence of Death had been passed upon Quay-lung , Viceroy of the Province of Sechuen	504
	X. Transf.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

-lix

	PAGE
I. Translation of an official Statement of Charges exhibited by the Sub-Viceroy of Quang-tung , against sundry Officers of that provincial Government	509
Translation of an Imperial Edict containing the Emperor's Decision upon the said Charges	513
XI. Note of the Translator; containing some Remarks upon the Application of the Laws of China to the Case of British Subjects trading to and residing at Canton	515
Translation of an Edict of the Governor of Hiang-shan , addressed to the Chinese and Portuguese Inhabitants of Macao, in consequence of the Refusal of the Portuguese to deliver into the Hands of the Chinese Magistrates a European charged with the Murder of a Chinese	517
Translation of an Imperial Edict issued on the occasion of two Russian Ships visiting the Port of Canton, in order to open a Trade by Sea with the Chinese Empire	518
Translation of an Extract of an Edict of the Viceroy of Quang-tung and Quang-see , issued on the occasion of an English Vessel having been stranded on the Coast of China	520
Translation of an official Statement of the Trial and Sentence of an English Seaman, charged with having struck a native Chinese, so as to occasion his Death	521
XII. Translation of an Imperial Edict issued on the Receipt of an Address recommending the Establishment of Colleges in the several Districts of Tartary	525
Translation of an Extract from the Clauses annexed to Section LXXVIII. entitled " Rule of Succession and Inheritance "	ibid.
XIII. Note of the Translator on the Nature of the ordinary Tenure of Land in China, in relation to the Subject of Section LXXXVIII. entitled " Younger and inferior Branches of a Family disposing of the Property without Leave "	526
XIV. Extract of a Letter from a Missionary at Peking, containing some Account of the Effects of an Inundation in the Province of Pe-che-lee	528
Extract of a Letter from a Chinese Christian, containing some Observations on the general State of the Population in the Province of Shan-see	ibid.

No.		PAGE
XV.	Abstract of some of the principal Clauses annexed to Section XCV. entitled " Law of Mortgages "	529
XVI.	Translation of an Imperial Edict, containing the Sentence of certain military Officers convicted of the Crime of embezzling public Stores	530
XVII.	Note of the Translator on the high Rate of the legal Interest of Money in China; in reference to the Subject of Section CXLIX. entitled " Usury "	ibid.
XVIII.	Translation of an Imperial Edict, containing the Emperor's Sentence upon divers Persons convicted of embracing, or of endeavouring to propagate the Christian Religion in China	532
	Translation of an Imperial Edict, containing Animadversions upon the Contents of certain Chinese Books, descriptive of the Tenets of the Catholic Church	535
XIX.	Translation of an Imperial Edict, issued on the occasion of an Attempt to assassinate the present Emperor	537
XX.	Translation of an Extract from the Pekin Gazette, containing an official Report of certain Operations of the Chinese Imperial Forces on the occasion of a Rebellion in the Province of Sechuen	540
XXI.	Translation of two of the Clauses annexed to Section CCXXV. entitled " Illicit Exportation of Merchandize "	543
XXII.	Translation of the Clauses annexed to Section CCLIV. entitled " High Treason "	544
XXIII.	Translation of the Clauses annexed to Section CCLV. entitled " Rebellion and Renunciation of Allegiance "	545
XXIV.	Translation of the Clauses annexed to Section CCLVI. entitled " Sorcery and Magic "	548
XXV.	Translation of the most material among the Clauses annexed to Section CCLXIII. entitled " Stealing Timber from a Burying-ground "	550
XXVI.	Translation of the first seven Clauses annexed to Section CCLXIV. entitled " Embezzlement of public Property "	552
XXVII.	Translation of the Clauses annexed to Section CCLXV. entitled " Theft of public Property "	553
XXVIII.	Translation of the Clauses annexed to Section CCLXVI. entitled " Robbery—Highway Robbery "	554
	XXIX. Transf-

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

lxi

No.		PAGE
XXIX.	Translation of the Clauses and Commentary annexed to Section CCLXXXII. entitled " Preconcerted Homicide—Murder "	560
XXX.	Translation of an Extract from a Volume of Chinese Law Reports, containing the Trial, Revival of Proceedings, and final Sentence, in the Case of an Offender charged with Homicide by Gun-firing	563
XXXI.	Translation of another Extract from the same Collection of Law Reports, containing the Trial, Revival of Proceedings, and final Sentence, in the Case of a Master charged with the Murder of his Servant	566
XXXII.	Translation of the Clauses annexed to Section CCCLXVI. entitled " Criminal Intercourse in general "	569

I.

TA TSING LEU LEE; OR THE LAWS AND STATUTES
OF THE DYNASTY OF TSING,

A NEW EDITION,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED IN THE FOURTH YEAR OF THE REIGN OF KIA-KING,
OF
THE ENTIRE CODE OF FUNDAMENTAL LAWS AND SUPPLEMENTARY STATUTES;
WHICH, AFTER HAVING BEEN REVISED AND COMPLETED, WAS, IN THE SIXTIETH YEAR OF THE REIGN OF KIEN-LUNG, PROMULGATED IN ITS PRESENT FORM, BY THE SUPREME COUNCIL OF STATE IN THE DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC JUSTICE.

TO WHICH IS ADDED,

THE EXPLANATORY COMMENTARY ANNEXED TO THE FUNDAMENTAL LAWS,
BY THE EMPEROR YONG-TCHING; AN EXTENSIVE COLLECTION OF ADJUDGED CASES AND A VARIETY OF USEFUL NOTES AND OBSERVATIONS DERIVED FROM THE MOST APPROVED SOURCES.

NOTE.—The above is an Abstract of the Title-Page to the Edition of the original Chinese Work, printed in the Year 1799, from which the Fundamental Laws, translated in the following Pages, have been extracted. — A still later Edition, exactly similar in respect to the Fundamental Laws, but containing a greater Number of Supplementary Statutes, and a different Selection of illustrative Notes, has likewise been occasionally consulted.

The Title-page of the later Edition may be translated as follows: “Recently engraved in the 10th Year of KIA-KING, a new Edition of the Laws and Statutes of the great Dynasty of TSING; comprising, agreeably to the universal Compendium promulgated by the Supreme Court of Judicature on the 6th Year of KIA-KING, all the Additions and Alterations which have been made of late Years in the supplementary Statutes; also compendious Abstracts from the various Commentaries, and an Appendix, consisting of two Books of additional supplementary Statutes. The whole carefully revised and examined; and each Copy sold for three leang six tshen of silver.”

II.

ORIGINAL PREFACE

TO

THE CHINESE PENAL CODE

BY

THE EMPEROR SHUN CHEE,

THE FIRST OF THE PRESENT DYNASTY.

WHEN we contemplate the progressive establishment of our dominions in the East *, by our Royal Ancestors and immediate Predecessors, we observe that the simplicity of the people originally required but few laws; and that, with the exception of crimes of extraordinary enormity, no punishments were inflicted besides those of the whip and the bamboo.

Since, however, the Divine Will has been graciously pleased to entrust us with the administration of the Empire of China, a multitude of judicial proceedings in civil and criminal cases, arising out of the various dispositions and irregular passions of mankind in a great and populous nation, have successively occupied our Royal attention. Hence we have suffered much inconvenience, from the necessity we have been almost constantly under of either aggravating or mitigating

* The princes of the family now on the throne of China, do not date their origin from any remote period. Their ancestors were not established at Mougden in Mantchoo or Eastern Tartary, before the year 1616; but they made a rapid progress from that period. In 1644, during the troubles and internal commotions which prevailed in China, under a declining dynasty, they obtained possession of the Chinese capital, and in the course of a few years completed the conquest of the whole empire.

the erroneous sentences of the magistrates; who, previous to the re-establishment of a fixed Code of Penal Laws, were not in possession of any secure foundation, upon which they could build a just and equitable decision.

A numerous body of magistrates was, therefore, assembled at the capital, by our command, for the purpose of revising the Penal Code; formerly in force under the late dynasty of *MING, and of digesting the same into a new Code, by the exclusion of such parts as were exceptionable, and the introduction of others, which were likely to contribute to the attainment of justice, and to the general perfection of the work.

The result of their labours having been submitted to our examination, we maturely weighed and considered the various matter it contained, and then instructed a select number of our Great Officers of State, carefully to revise the whole, for the purpose of making such alterations and emendations as might still be found requisite.

As soon as this object was accomplished, we issued our Royal authority for the impression and publication of the work, under the Title of "Ta tsing leu chee kiay foo lee," or the General Laws of the Imperial Dynasty of Tsing, collected and explained, and accompanied by supplementary clauses.

Wherefore, officers and magistrates of the interior and exterior departments of our empire, be it your care diligently to observe the same, and to forbear in future to give any decision, or to pass any sentence, according to your private sentiments, or upon your unsupported authority.

Thus shall the magistrates and people look up with awe and submission to the justice of these institutions, as they find themselves respectively concerned in them: the transgressor will not fail to suffer a strict expiation for his offences, and will be the instrument of deterring others from similar misconduct; and, finally, the government and the people will be equally secured for endless generations in the enjoyment of the happy effects of the great and noble virtues of our illustrious progenitors.

* The Dynasty of Ming succeeded that of Yuen, or the Mongol Tartars, in the year 1568.

Dated the 5th Moon, of the third year, of Sbun-Cbee, A.D. 1647.

III.

PREFATORY EDICT

OF

THE EMPEROR KAUNG-HEE,

(OTHERWISE, BUT IMPROPERLY, CAMHI.)

THE SECOND OF THE PRESENT DYNASTY.

THE chief ends proposed by the institution of punishments in the empire, have been to guard against violence and injury, to repress inordinate desires, and to secure the peace and tranquillity of an honest and unoffending community.

Laws have accordingly been enacted, numerous, as well as particular in their application, and subsequently varied and augmented at different times, as circumstances were found to require, but without ever losing sight of those principles of affection and benevolence, of which our Illustrious Predecessors, who laid the foundation of these institutions, were invariably observant.

The people being, however, gradually seduced, by their irregular desires, to disregard the penalties to which an infringement of the laws exposed them, to become the disciples of violence and iniquity, and to oppress those whom they found weak and defenceless, it became necessary to devise new regulations, and to strengthen those which already existed, by the denunciation of severer punishments.

Nevertheless, offences against the laws are again frequent, and evil propensities toward irregularities and crimes, do not appear to have been in any considerable degree repressed.

Those crimes which are either committed against, or lead to a forfeiture of the lives of our subjects, have been the objects of our most serious consideration, and their frequency is, to us, a source of much disquietude.

It is, therefore, our pleasure, that all the additional statutes of a recent promulgation, whereby those crimes which formerly were not punished with death, have been rendered capital; or where the penalties of transgression have been in any other manner altered or augmented, shall be taken into consideration and revised by the ministers of state, the inspectors general, and the presidents of the six supreme tribunals, in order that these magistrates may be enabled to make a due report to us upon their fitness and efficacy.

Dated the 14th of the 9th moon of the 18th year of Kaung-bee,
A.D. 1679.

IV.

PREFATORY EDICT

OF THE EMPEROR YONG-TCHING,

THE THIRD OF THE PRESENT DYNASTY.

SINCE the period of our Accession to the Imperial Throne of our Ancestors, the criminals who, at different times, have been awaiting their sentence in confinement, have not failed to share our Royal compassion and consideration. — The reports of all the cases adjudged by the provincial magistrates, and requiring our sanction to their decision, have been examined by us with the most scrupulous attention, lest they should contain any flaw or incongruity which might invalidate the results. — We have also considered that among our various institutions, the Code of Penal Laws is the most varied and complicated in its construction; and that, therefore, unless clear and invariable rules are pointed out, the magistrates must, in some instances, unavoidably take upon themselves to aggravate or mitigate the punishment due to criminals, according to their own discretion; in which cases, they must constantly be liable to commit great errors, and even flagrant injustice.

With the view of preventing as much as possible, all such abuses, we submitted the Penal Code to the revision of the members of our Imperial college, and have since attentively considered their written observations thereon, annexing, at the same time, to each article, the mark of our approbation or dissent. In consideration, however, of the vast importance of a work which is to guide and instruct the magistrates in all judicial proceedings, proceedings, it is our pleasure, that the nine principal officers of state, revise, examine, and correct the results of all these operations, so as most effectually to fulfil our design of adapting the penalties of the laws in a just proportion to the crimes against which they are denounced.

Dated the 27th of the 5th moon, of the third year of Yong-tching,
A.D. 1725.*

* In addition to these three Prefatory Edicts, two state papers issued in the names of the late Emperor Kien-lung, and the reigning Emperor Kia-King, have been inserted in the Appendix, No. I. and No. II. and although not directly connected with the subject of the Code, will, it is hoped, be found illustrative of many parts of it, and otherwise not uninteresting. The remaining articles of Preliminary Matter, which, in the original, precede the Table of Contents, have been omitted here, as not essential to the work, but their several titles will be found in the Appendix, No. III.

It has not been conceived necessary, or even desirable, to introduce, in the course of these occasional notes, any detailed references to the remarks of preceding writers. This has not, however, prevented the Translator from speaking generally, on one occasion, (page 318.) of the valuable work of Mr. Barrow; or on another, (page 107,) of the interesting translation published by the Bishop of Dromore; or, lastly, from taking the present opportunity of noticing the short, but excellent remarks on Chinese Literature, which we owe to the learned and judicious author of the Hora Biblica. And with respect to the works of the Missionaries, although the Translator of the present work was aware that he should not be justified in recommending an implicit reliance upon them, he has been happy to refer generally to the vast fund of curious and important information upon China, which, notwithstanding this reservation, the above class of writers must be admitted to have afforded. With regard to the work, which, as far as it extends, perhaps stands the highest in point of authority of any that has been written on the subject of China, the Translator feels naturally a delicacy in saying any thing. — He has, however, the satisfaction to reflect, that the Authentic Account of the British Embassy does not, at this day, require any new arguments or testimony, to confirm it in its place in the public esteem.

V.

T A B L E I.*

SCALE of Punishment Offences against Public and Private Property.
	Pecuniary Malverfa- tion.	Theft.	Bribery for a lawful Object.	Bribery for an unlawful Object.	Theft of Public Property.	Embezzle- ment of Pub- lic Property.
	Amount in oz. of Silver†	Ditto.	Ditto.	Ditto.	Ditto.	Ditto.
20 Blows with the bamboo	1 or less
30 ———	1 to 10
40 ———	20 —
50 ———	30 —
60 ———	40 —	1 or less	1 or less
70 ———	50 —	10 —	10 —	1 or less	1 or less
80 ———	60 —	20 —	20 —	1 to 5 oz.	1 to 5 oz.	1 or less
90 ———	70 —	30 —	30 —	10 —	10 —	1 to 2,5
100 ———	80 —	40 —	40 —	15 —	15 —	5.
60 — and 1 year's banishment	100 —	50 —	50 —	20 —	20 —	7.5
70 — and 1½ ———	200 —	60 —	60 —	25 —	25 —	10.
80 — and 2 ———	300 —	70 —	70 —	30 —	30 —	12.5
90 — and 2½ ———	400 —	80 —	80 —	35 —	35 —	15.
100 — and 3 ———	500 —	90 —	90 —	40 —	40 —	17.5
	Dift. lee and upwards
100 — and perpet. banish.	2000 —	100 —	100 —	45 —	45 —	20.
100 — and ———	2500 —	110 —	110 —	50 —	50 —	25.
100 — and ———	3000 —	120 —	120 —	55 —	55 —	30.
Death,—to be strangled		Upwards of 120 oz.	Upwards of 120 oz.	80 or 120 If an inferior Officer.	80 in extreme Cases.
Death,—to be beheaded						80 in ex- treme Cases

* This Table is an abstract of the principal articles of the laws specially provided for the protection of public and private property. The subject is fully explained in the body of the code, (1st and 6th Book of the VIth Division,) but the advantage of this Table consists in its exhibiting the whole in a summary way, and upon a single inspection. Thus, it appears without reference, that whoever is guilty of any species of pecuniary malversation, to the extent of 20 ounces of silver, shall, generally speaking, be liable, at the least; to a punishment of 40 blows: that whoever is guilty of a theft of private property, or of receiving a bribe for an object in itself lawful, to the same extent, is punishable with 80 blows: that whoever is guilty to the same extent of a theft of public property, or of receiving a bribe for an object in itself unlawful, is punishable with 60 blows, and banishment for the space of one year: and, lastly, that whoever is guilty of embezzling so much of the public property, will be punishable with 100 blows, and perpetual banishment to the distance of 2000 lee.

† The value of the Leang, or Chinese ounce of silver, according to the established rule of exchange at Canton, is 6s. 8d. or the third part of a pound sterling.

VI.

T A B L E II.*

SCALE of the Pecuniary Redemption of necessarily redeemable Punishments.
	If well able to pay.		If not alto-gether delitute.		If aged, or under Age.		Females in certain Cafes.		Killing or wounding accidentally.		Females in general.
	oz.	dec.	oz.	dec.	oz.	dec.	oz.	dec.	oz.	dec.	Days confine ^d .	Dec. of oz.
10 blows with the bamboo	—	2.5	—	3	—	7.5	—	1	—	—	—	—
20 —	—	5	—	4.5	—	1.5	—	2	—	3.5.4	25 and 135
30 —	—	7.5	—	6	—	2.2.5	—	3	—	3.3.2	30 and 165
40 —	1	—	—	6.5	—	3	—	4	—	7.9	35 and 195
50 —	1	2.4	—	9	—	3.7.5	—	5	—	8.8.7	40 and 225
60 —	3	—	—	2	—	4.5	—	6	—	—	50 and 3
70 —	3	5	—	1 3.5	—	5.2.5	—	7	—	—	55 and 3375
80 —	4	—	—	1 5	—	6	—	8	—	1 4.1.9	60 and 375
90 —	4	5	—	1 6.5	—	6.7.5	—	9	—	—	—
100 —	5	—	—	1 8	—	7.5	—	110	1	774	—
1 year's Banishment	7.	5	3	6	1	5	1	7.5	3	548	—
1½ —	10	—	5	4	1	8.7.5	1	1125	—	—	—
2 —	12	5	7	2	2	2.5	1	15	5	322	—
2½ —	15	—	9	—	2	6.2.5	1	1875	—	—	—
3 —	17	5	10	8	3	—	1	2250	7	097	—
4 —	20	—	14	4	4	—	—	—	—	—	—
5 —	25	—	18	—	4	—	—	—	—	—	—
Perpetual, ———— dift.	2000	—	—	—	—	—	—	1 30000	—	—	—
—, ————	2500	—	—	—	—	—	—	1 3375	—	—	—
—, ————	3000	—	—	—	—	—	—	1 375	10	645	—
Death, —to be strangled	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	1 45	12	42	—
Death, —to be beheaded	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—

* Upon the subject of this Table, see Note, page 24.

VII.

T A B L E III.*

SCALE of pecuniary Redemption in such Cases as are not legally excluded from the Benefit of general Acts of Grace and Pardon, and which, though not necessarily redeemable, have, by an Edict of the 8th Year of the Emperor KIEN-LUNG, been made redeemable upon Petition.

Rank of the Offender.	Sentence.	Pecuniary Commutation in ounces of silver.
An Officer above the fourth Rank -	Death by Strangulation or Decollation.	12000
----- of the fourth Rank - -		5000
----- of the fifth or sixth Rank		4000
----- of the seventh, or any inferior Rank, or a Doctor of Literature -		2500
A Graduate or Licenciante - -		2000
A private Individual - - -		1200
An Officer above the fourth Rank -	Perpetual Banishment.	7200
----- of the fourth Rank - -		3000
----- of the fifth or sixth Rank		2400
----- of the seventh, or any inferior Rank, or a Doctor of Literature -		1500
A Graduate or Licenciante - -		1200
A private Individual - - -		720
An Officer above the fourth Rank -	Temporary Banishment, or Blows with the Bamboo.	4800
----- of the fourth Rank - -		2000
----- of the fifth or sixth Rank		1600
----- of the seventh or any inferior Rank, or a Doctor of Literature -		1000
A graduate or Licenciante - -		800
A private Individual - - -		480

* This Table has, by mistake, been referred to in pages 19 and 24, as a part of the 5th article of the Appendix.

VIII.

TABLE IV.*
DEGREES OF PUNISHMENT.

Degrees.	Nominally.	Reduced.	Inflicted with the Bamboo	In Breadth at its Extremities	Weight not to exceed.
1	10	4 Blows	} Che Tfun † 5 5 in length	} $1\frac{1}{2}$ Tfun by 1 Tfun .	$1\frac{1}{2}$ Kin ‡.
2	30	5 —
3	20	10 —
4	40	15 —
5	50	20 —
6	60	20 —
7	70	25 —
8	80	30 —
9	90	35 —
10	100	40 —
			} Together with Banishment		and to the Distance of
11	60	20 —	For one year	- - -	500 lee , or about 50 leagues
12	70	25 —	For one year and a half	- - -	500 — — —
13	80	30 —	For two years	- - -	500 — — —
14	90	35 —	For two years and a half	- - -	500 — — —
15	100	40 —	For three years	- - -	500 — — —
16	100	40 —	For life	- - -	2000 — 200 —
17	100	40 —	For life	- - -	2500 — 250 —
18	100	40 —	For life	- - -	3000 — 300 —
19	Death, by Strangulation.
20	Death, by Decollation.

IX.

TABLE V.

SPECIFICATION of the ordinary Instruments of Punishment and Confinement.

THE BAMBOO.

A straight polished piece of bamboo, the branches cut away, and reduced to the length, breadth, and weight above described; and when used, to be held by the smaller end.

* This Table is explained in the first section of the Code, and in the Appendix, No. V.

† Che and Tfun are Chinese measures of length, usually denominated at Canton Covids and puntos. The Che (of which the Tfun is the tenth part), which is in ordinary use throughout the empire, exceeds the English foot by rather more than half an inch; but the Che, used at Canton for the measurement of goods in trade, is somewhat longer, being 14 inches and 625 decimals.

‡ The Kin exceeds the English pound weight by one-third.

THE KIA, OTHERWISE, BUT IMPROPERLY, CANGUE.

A square frame of dry wood, three Che long, and 2 Che 9 Tsun broad; and weighing in ordinary cases 25 Kin.

THE IRON CHAIN.

The greater and less criminals shall all be confined by an iron chain, 7 Che long, and weighing 5 Kin.

THE HAND-CUFFS.

The hand-cuffs shall be made of dry wood, and 1 Che 6 Tsun long, by 1 Tsun in thickness, and shall be used to confine capital offenders of the male sex only.

THE FETTERS.

Iron fetters, weighing one Kin, shall be used to confine all such offenders as are destined to banishment or capital punishment.

 X.

TABLE VI.

DEGREES OF RELATIONSHIP, AND OF MOURNING.

THE mourning for the nearest among relations in the first degree, shall be worn for three years, and shall be made of the coarsest hempen cloth, without being sewn at the borders.

The mourning for other relations in the first degree shall be worn for three or five months, and be made of middling hempen cloth, sewn at the borders.

The mourning for relations in the second degree, shall be worn for nine months, and be made of coarse linen-cloth.

The mourning for relations in the third degree, shall be worn for five months, and be made of middling coarse linen-cloth.

The mourning for relations in the fourth degree, shall be worn for three months, and be made of middling fine linen-cloth.

The

The full mourning for three years, shall be worn

- By a son, for his father or mother.
- By a daughter, for her father or mother, when living under the parents' roof, although affianced to her intended husband, or although once married, if afterwards divorced and sent home.
- By a son's wife, for her husband's father or mother.
- By a son and his wife, for his father's substituted first wife *; for the wife of his father substituted in the place of his mother, and for the wife of his father, who nursed him.
- By an inferior wife's son and his wife, for his natural mother, and for his father's first wife.
- By an adopted son and his wife, for his adopted parents.
- By a grandson and his wife, for his paternal grand-parents.
- By a wife, whether the first or inferior one, for her husband †.

* That is to say, for the one among his father's wives, who upon the death of the first or principal wife, takes her place.

† See the Appendix, No. IV. It may be proper, in order to prevent any misconception, to remark generally, in this place, that in whatever part of the translation degrees of relationship or mourning are mentioned, it is always to be understood to be in reference to Chinese, and not to European tables of alliance and consanguinity.

THE
P E N A L L A W S
OF C H I N A.

FIRST DIVISION,
General Laws.

BOOK I.

PRELIMINARY REGULATIONS.

SECTION I. — Description of the Ordinary Punishments.

THE lowest degree of punishment is a moderate correction inflicted with the lesser bamboo, in order that the transgressor of the law may entertain a sense of shame for his past, and receive a salutary admonition with respect to his future conduct. Of this species of punishment there are five degrees :

The first	}	nominally a punishment of	}	10 blows,	}	of which only	}	4 blows	}	are to be inflicted.
The second				20 blows,				5 blows
The third				30 blows,				10 blows
The fourth				40 blows,				15 blows
The fifth				50 blows,				20 blows

The second degree, or division of punishment, is inflicted with the larger bamboo, and is subdivided in the following manner :

B

The

The first	} nominally a punishment of	} 60 blows, 70 blows, 80 blows, 90 blows, 100 blows,	} of which only	} 20 blows 25 blows 30 blows 35 blows 40 blows	} are to be inflicted.
The second
The third
The fourth
The fifth

The third division in the scale of punishments is, that of temporary banishment, to any distance not exceeding 500 *lee, with the view of affording an opportunity of repentance and amendment. Of this species of punishment there are also five gradations: namely,

Banishment for	}	1 year, and 60 blows	} with the bamboo, reduced as above.
		1½ years, and 70 blows
		2 years, and 80 blows
		2½ years, and 90 blows
		3 years, and 100 blows

Perpetual banishment, the fourth degree of punishment in the order of severity, is subdivided as follows; and is reserved for such of the more considerable offences whereupon the life of the criminal is spared by the mercifulness of the laws:

100 blows with the bamboo, and perpetual banishment to the distance of

}	2000 lee .
	2500 lee .
	3000 lee .

The fifth and ultimate punishment which the laws ordain, is death, either by strangulation, or by decollation.

All criminals capitally convicted, except such atrocious offenders as are expressly directed to be executed without delay, are retained in prison for execution at a particular period in the autumn; the sentence passed upon each individual being first duly reported to, and ratified by, the Emperor.

To this section of the fundamental laws a supplement is annexed, consisting of eighteen clauses †.

* Ten lee are usually estimated to be equal to three geographical miles, but the proportion varies a little in the different provinces of the empire.

† See Appendix, No. V.

SECTION II. — Offences of a treasonable Nature.

I. Rebellion, is an attempt to violate the divine order of things on earth; for as the fruits of the earth are produced in regular succession under the influence of the presiding Spirit, so is their distribution among the people regulated by the Sovereign, who is the sacred successor to the seat of his ancestors: resisting and conspiring against him is, therefore, an unspeakable outrage, and a disturbance of the peace of the universe.

II. Disloyalty, is evinced by an attempt to destroy the imperial temples, tombs, or palaces; for as the imperial temples and tombs are intended to perpetuate the memory, and to receive the remains, of former Sovereigns, so the imperial palaces, being designed for the use of the reigning monarch, are equally sacred and inviolable.

III. Desertion, is a term which may be applied to the offence of undertaking to quit, or betray the interests of, the empire, in order to submit or adhere to a foreign power, and may be considered as exemplified in the case of betraying a military post, or exciting the people to emigration.

IV. Parricide, is the denomination under which the murder of a father or mother, of an uncle, aunt, grandfather or grandmother, is comprehended, and is a crime of the deepest dye; for such a violation of the ties of nature, which are constituted by the Divine Will, is in every case an evidence of the most unprincipled depravity.

V. Massacre, is held to be the murder of three or more persons in one family, and comprehends other crimes sanguinary and enormous in a similar degree.

VI. Sacrilege, is committed by stealing from the temples any of the sacred articles consecrated to divine purposes, or by purloining any article in the immediate use of the Sovereign : similar guilt is incurred by counterfeiting the imperial seal, by administering to the Sovereign improper medicines, or, in general, by the commission of any error or negligence, whereby the safety of his sacred person may be endangered.

VII. Impiety, is discoverable in every instance of disrespect or negligence towards those to whom we owe our being, and by whom we have been educated and protected.—It is likewise committed by those who inform against, or insult, such near relations while living, or who refuse to mourn for their loss, and to shew respect for their memory, when dead.

VIII. Discord, in families, is the breach of the legal or natural ties which are founded on our connexions by blood or marriage ; under this head may be classed the crimes of killing, wounding, or maltreating any of those relations or connexions to whom, when deceased, the ceremony of mourning is legally due*.

IX. Insubordination, is the rising against, or murdering, a superior magistrate by an inferior ; or any insurrection against the magistrates in general, by the people.

X. Incest, is the co-habitation, or promiscuous intercourse, of persons related in any of the degrees within which marriage is prohibited †.

* The nature and extent of these connexions is in some degree shewn in the preliminary part of the code, and also occasionally in some of the subsequent sections, and in the Appendix.

† See the division of the code, intitled, Marriage, and also the division, intitled, Incest and Adultery.

The crimes here arranged and distributed under ten heads, being distinguished from others by their enormity, are always punished with the utmost rigour of the law; and, when the offence is capital, it is excepted from the benefit of any act of general pardon; being likewise, in each case, a direct violation of the ties by which society is maintained, they are expressly enumerated in the introductory part of this code, that the people may learn to dread, and to avoid the same*.

No clause to this section.

SECTION III. — The Privileged Classes.

I. The Privilege of Imperial Blood and Connections.—Because the members of the august family of the Sovereign, who rules by the appointment of Heaven, are entitled to peculiar reverence in the administration of the laws with regard to them; therefore, this privilege shall extend to all the relations of His Imperial Majesty, who are descended from the same ancestors; to all the relations in the first, second, third, and fourth degrees of His Imperial Majesty's mother and grandmother; to all the relations of His Imperial Majesty's consort, the Empress, within the first, second, and third degrees; and, lastly, to all the relations of the consort of the hereditary Prince, within the first and second degrees only.

II. The Privilege of long Service.—This class comprehends all those ancient servants of the crown, who are zealously attached and have been honourably distinguished.—Such persons are entitled to privilege, because the Emperor has exalted them, and because the length of their services is a testimony of their unalterable fidelity.

III. The Privilege of illustrious Actions.—Those are entitled to privilege under this class, who pursue the enemy to the distance of 10,000 lee, cut off the head of the general of the hostile army, tear down his standard, and break his sword; or who, having brought multitudes to surrender themselves to the Imperial authority, restore peace and tranquillity to the age; and, lastly, those who by their talents and exertions shall extend the boundaries of the empire. Such deeds of valour shall be commemorated on tablets of stone.

* See Appendix, No. VI.

IV. The Privilege of extraordinary Wisdom.—Those who are eminent for their wisdom and virtue are entitled to privilege, because by the advice of such men the administration of government is brought to perfection. Kia Yee has said, that the wise and good man may be afflicted with misfortunes, even unto death, without being subject to humiliation or disgrace.

V. The Privilege of great Abilities.—Great abilities are rare; the actions of the able are superior in value even to the words of the wise.—From those who have the talent of commanding armies, and of conducting the different departments of the state, the sovereign selects the best and most efficacious ministers of his power.

VI. The Privilege of Zeal and Assiduity.—This privilege is due to those who, by night and by day, are zealously and assiduously engaged in the performance of their civil or military duties; and to those who discharge any distant and arduous employment with distinguished honour.

VII. The Privilege of Nobility.—This privilege is to be enjoyed by all those who possess the first rank in the empire; all those of the second, who are at the same time employed in any official capacity whatever; and all those of the third, whose office confers any civil or military command.

VIII. The Privilege of Birth.—The Emperor esteems and protects those who are distinguished for their wisdom and eminent services, even to the second and third generation*.

No clause.

* See Appendix, No. VII.

SECTION IV.—Offences of Persons entitled to Privilege.

When any person entitled to privilege has committed an offence against the laws, a distinct specification thereof shall be laid before the Emperor, and it shall not be lawful to try or examine such person, until the receipt of His Majesty's express commands for that purpose—
The Emperor's commands having been received, the trial and examination of the offender shall be instituted, and a report made of the whole of the proceedings, for the information and final decision of His Imperial Majesty.

Nevertheless, if any privileged person commits an offence of a treasonable nature, he shall not have the benefit of his privilege as provided by this law.

Five clauses.

SECTION V.—Relations of Persons entitled to Privilege.

When the father, mother, paternal grandfather or grandmother, wife, son, or grandson of any person entitled to privilege, as belonging to one of the eight classes before mentioned, commits an offence against the laws, a distinct specification thereof shall be laid before the Emperor, and it shall not be lawful to try or examine such offender, until the Emperor's express commands are received for that purpose.

The trial and examination having taken place, conformably to the Emperor's orders, a report of the whole of the proceedings shall be transmitted to the court, for the information and final decision of His Imperial Majesty.

In the case of persons privileged by their royal blood or illustrious services, their paternal grandfathers and grandmothers, uncles, aunts, and cousins, as also their sons-in-law and nephews; and moreover the father, mother, or wife of an officer of government of the 4th or 5th rank, and the sons or grandsons, if inheriting their rank, shall, in each case, although their offences shall be investigated by the magistrate of the district, not be finally condemned to any species of punishment, except by a decree of His Imperial Majesty. — Nevertheless, no distinction shall be made in favour of those persons in cases of treason, rebellion, rapes, robberies, murders, or bribing for unlawful purposes.
and

When any of the relations of privileged persons, not being themselves privileged, or their slaves, servants, stewards, tenants, and such like, avail themselves of the authority and credit of their lords, masters, or relations, to oppress and injure the people, or to insult and resist the magistrates, they shall be punished one degree more severely than in ordinary cases of similar offences, but the privileged person shall not be implicated in any judicial proceedings without a special reference being had on the subject to His Imperial Majesty.

When the tribunals of government undertake the investigation and trial of offenders so connected with privileged persons, if such persons interpose their influence and authority to interrupt the course of justice, and prevent the offenders from answering the summons of the magistrate, the proper officer in the department in which such interposition takes place, shall lay a true and faithful report thereof before the Emperor, by whom alone the punishment to be inflicted for such offence can be determined.

One clause.

SECTION VI. — Offences committed by Officers of Government, how investigated.

When any officer of government at court or in the provinces commits an offence against the laws in his public or private capacity, his superior officer shall, in all cases of importance, draw up a distinct specification thereof for the information of the Emperor, and it shall not be lawful to proceed to try the offender without the express sanction of His Majesty.

The trial and examination having taken place conformably to the Emperor's orders, His Majesty shall be again advised by a due report of the result, after which a rescript of one of the supreme * tribunals shall be sufficient authority for passing and executing the sentence which the laws require.

When any officer of government is injuriously treated by his superior, he shall be at liberty to submit a faithful statement thereof in accusation of such superior, to His Imperial Majesty; but if he should have been previously accused of any offence by his superior, he shall not be permitted to recriminate in any manner, but must confine himself to the subject of the allegations preferred against him †.

Five Clauses.

* The supreme tribunals or departments in which the general administration of the empire is conducted are six in number, and correspond to the six principal divisions of the code, to which the present is an introduction.

† A translation of the official report of the trial of the prime minister and favourite of the late Emperor, of a viceroy of the province of Se-chuen, and of a governor of the city of Canton, are inserted in the Appendix as examples of the mode of proceeding adopted in such cases; see Nos. VIII. IX. and X.

SECTION VII.—Offences committed by Officers of Government in their public Capacity *.

All civil and military officers of government, when convicted of any offence connected with the discharge of their public duty, and not of a personal nature, which offence in ordinary cases is punishable by the infliction of corporal chastisement, shall instead thereof be subjected to a fine or to degradation, according to the number of blows of the bamboo to which they are nominally liable.

Instead of nominally	}	10 blows, to forfeit one month's salary.
		20 blows, to forfeit two months' salary.
		30 blows, to forfeit three months' salary.
		40 blows, to forfeit six months' salary.
		50 blows, to forfeit nine months' salary.
		60 blows, to forfeit one year's salary.
		70 blows, to be degraded one degree of rank.
		80 blows, to be degraded two degrees of rank.
		90 blows, to be degraded three degrees of rank, but, as in the preceding case, to retain his situation.
		100 blows, to be degraded four degrees, and to be re- moved from his situation.

Those persons who have official situations without being actually officers of rank in the government, shall not be exempt from corporal punishment, but may retain their employments †.

One clause.

SEC-

* The titles of this and the succeeding section would bear no other translation than that which has been given to them, and it is therefore requisite to add in explanation, that it appears from the notes in the original that the offences denominated private, in fact comprehend almost all cases of direct criminality, whereas those denominated public, are cases of liability to punishment, solely from the official responsibility of the party implicated.

† Every officer of government from the first to the ninth rank, must be previously qualified by a literary or military degree, according to the nature of his profession; but the clerks

SECTION VIII. — Offences committed by Officers of Government, of a private and personal Nature *.

All civil and military officers of government, when convicted of any offence unconnected with their public functions, or although connected therewith, yet of a private and personal nature, which offence in ordinary cases exposes the offender to corporal punishment, instead of the punishment awarded by the laws in general, shall be subjected to a fine, or to degradation, in proportion thereto in the following manner :

Instead of nominally	}	10 blows, to forfeit two months' salary.
		20 blows, to forfeit three months' salary.
		30 blows, to forfeit six months' salary.
		40 blows, to forfeit nine months' salary.
		50 blows, to forfeit one year's salary.
		60 blows, to be degraded one degree.
		70 blows, to be degraded two degrees.
		80 blows, to be degraded three degrees.
		90 blows, to be degraded four degrees, and in this, as well as in the three last cases, to be removed from their situations.
		100 blows, to be degraded entirely, and dismissed from the service of Government.

Those persons who have official situations below the rank of officers of government, shall not be exempt from corporal punishment, and if such punishment amounts to 60 blows or upwards, they shall be dismissed.

Two clauses.

clerks and other inferior attendants in the employ of government are not considered to have any rank, or to be permanently distinguished from the rest of the community.

* The distinction between the offences treated of in this and in the preceding section has been already stated, and is also further illustrated in some of the subsequent sections of the code, in which examples occur of each kind.

SECTION IX.—Offenders who are not liable to Banishment.

All the subjects of the empire, who are enrolled under the Tartarian banners*, when found guilty of committing any offences which render them liable by the laws in general to a corporal punishment, shall receive the whole number of blows specified; but the chastisement shall be inflicted with the whip instead of the bamboo: when guilty of offences punishable, in ordinary cases, with banishment, they shall, instead thereof, be confined with the cangue or moveable pillory † for a number of days, proportioned to the length of the banishment in ordinary cases, in the following manner:

Instead of banishment	{	for 1 year	-	}	to wear the	20 days.
		for 1½ years	-			25 days.
		for 2 years	-			30 days.
		for 2½ years	-			35 days.
		for 3 years	-			40 days.
Instead of perpetual banishment	{	distance 2000 lee	-	}	cangue for	45 days.
		distance 2500 lee	-			50 days.
		distance 3000 lee	-			55 days.
Instead of the perpetual military banishment	{	to a remote station	-	}		60 days.
		to a more remote station	-			70 days.
		to a still more remote station	-			75 days.
		to the most remote station	-			80 days.
						90 days.

* All the Tartars who have obtained settlements within the limits of China, since the accession of the present dynasty, are enrolled for military service, and liable to be called upon to serve the Emperor under the banners to which they are severally attached. The enrolment or mode of registering the native Chinese in their several districts and provinces as prescribed by their laws, is the subject of the first book of the third division of this code.

† The instrument here mentioned (termed by the Chinese Kia) is described in the preliminary part of the code.—Among the plates in the folio volume of the account of the embassy of the Earl of Macartney, there is one representing an offender undergoing this species of punishment.

SECTION X.—*Offenders of the Military Class.

All persons of the military class committing offences against the laws, shall undergo a corporal punishment in the ordinary manner, and when condemned to the punishment of temporary banishment, shall suffer the same during the term specified by the laws, but after the expiration thereof, shall be sent back to their proper station and service. When condemned to perpetual banishment, they shall be detached and appointed to serve at the military station which is nearest to the place of their destined banishment; but if condemned to the extraordinary military banishment, the law shall be executed in the usual manner.

No clause.

SECTION XI.—Mitigation of Punishment.

There are various considerations which shall be admitted in mitigation of punishment. When more persons than one are engaged in the commission of an offence, the original contriver shall be punished as the principal offender, and the rest one degree less severely, being considered only in the light of accessaries. In the case of an offender surrendering himself to the officers of justice upon hearing that an accusation is intended, such offender shall be entitled to a mitigation of punishment to the extent of two degrees. When an unjust sentence of acquittal is pronounced designedly, the law-officer or clerk of the court † in which such faulty sentence originates, provided he is able to recover the offender who had been unlawfully liberated, shall, in consideration, of such recovery be punished less severely by one degree; the deputy or executive officer of the court, if not intentionally concurring in the unjust sentence, shall be punished six degrees less than the expounder of the law or clerk of the court; one degree of mitigation being by virtue of his office, and the other five degrees because he did not offend against the laws designedly*.

* This class comprehends those who are liable to serve as well as those actually serving in the army.

† The constituent members of a court of justice, or criminal tribunal, are more distinctly stated in a subsequent part of the code, and are only noticed in this place in illustration of the subject of the section.

If the unjust sentence was not wilful, the punishment thereof shall, in the case of the clerk of the court, be reduced three degrees; and if the unjust sentence had not been executed, four degrees. In the case of the deputy of the court, there shall be another reduction, making, in the whole, five degrees. In the case of each of the assessors of the court, another reduction, making six degrees; and, lastly, in the case of the presiding officer, another, making, in the whole, seven degrees:—thus one case is exemplified in illustration of all others of complicated mitigation to be attended to in the infliction of punishment.

No clause.

SECTION XII.—Officers of Government, when removed without being disgraced.

Such officers of government as, after the expiration of the appointed period of their respective functions †, are either removed to another office, or cease to be employed, shall not lose or forfeit any portion of the rank they held by virtue of any of their former offices.

* The law in these respects is explained at large in Section CCCCIX.

† The civil appointments in China are generally conferred for three years, at the end of which the appointments may be renewed, but the changes (in the higher departments especially) are generally more rapid; so much so, that a new edition is found requisite every three months of the Imperial Court Kalendar, which is a list of the civil and military appointments of the empire, filling six closely printed duodecimo volumes.

The same rule shall be observed upon their obtaining leave to retire on account of age, infirmity, or the death of relations; and also generally in the case of the removal or dismissal of inferior officers of the minor departments or tribunals, unless the honorary rank of their families is, in consequence of the circumstances of the case, expressly taken away at the same time.

Likewise all persons who have received honorary distinctions on account of the elevation and employment of their children or descendants, shall be held equal to them in rank.—Wives shall forfeit the rank derived from their husbands, in the event of a divorce; but this circumstance shall not deprive them of any rank derived from their children, with whom, notwithstanding such divorce between the parents, the original connection shall be held to subsist.

When any of the persons aforesaid commit offences against the laws, they shall be tried, examined, and punished according to the same regulations as those officers of government who are actually in employ.

One clause.

SECTION XIII.—Offences committed by Officers of Government previous to their Elevation.

All officers of government who are convicted of offences committed previously, but charged against them subsequently, to their elevation or coming into office, shall be permitted to redeem themselves from punishment, provided the offence is of a public and not of a personal nature.

All officers of government who, after their promotion or removal, are convicted of any public offence, committed previous to such promotion or removal, shall be fined or degraded according to the law concerning such offences, when committed by officers of government, provided provided that the offences would not in ordinary cases have been punishable more severely than with 100 blows with the bamboo, but, otherwise, the offenders shall be punished in such cases according to the laws respecting persons in general: if the party, discovered to have committed any offence of a public nature while in office, had, previously to such discovery, been totally degraded and dismissed from any post under government, he shall, in general, be excused from any further punishment for such implied malversation; but if the offence concerns a false return of receipts of revenue, or a deficiency or concealment of any government property, the magistrate, in whose department it lies, shall thoroughly and promptly investigate the affair, so far as may be necessary to ascertain the amount of property, whether in kind or value, which the offender is bound to replace or refund into the hands of government. If it is an offence of a private and personal nature, the laws shall take their ordinary course.—With respect to the clerks of all magistrates, and of the several tribunals or departments of public affairs, committing offences of a public or a private nature, under any of the preceding circumstances, the laws shall be executed in the usual manner.

One Clause.

SECTION XIV.—Degraded Officers of Government liable to the same Obligations as private Individuals.

All civil and military officers of government who have been degraded and dismissed for any offence of a private and personal nature, shall likewise be deprived of the patent of rank granted to their families. In like manner, all the priests of Foe or *Tao-se, who shall have been convicted and punished for any offence, shall be deprived of their licence, and divested of their sacred character.

* See Section XLII.

All such degraded persons shall be replaced in the class of soldiers or citizens, from whence they were originally taken, and be liable to the customary demands of personal service in either capacity*.

Two clauses.

SECTION XV. — Relations of Exiles.

x All the wives of banished criminals shall follow them into exile: the parents, grand-parents, children, and grand-children of exiles, shall be at liberty to follow them or not, according to their own choice; and when they desire it, a new settlement shall be given to them, at the place of banishment.—If the offenders die previous to the expiration of the term of banishment, their relations who had accompanied them, if desirous of returning to their original place of settlement, shall be allowed to do so.

This is quite scriptural. They are flesh—let none put them away. Left by law in divorce. Christian countries (Russia for instance) calls her Church the Church of the true Faith. The transmission of one of the parties is, if a wife, a divorce between the wife.

Nevertheless, the relations of persons banished in consequence of being implicated in charges of treason, rebellion, poisoning, magic, or murdering three or more persons in one family, shall not be suffered to return to their original places of settlement, agreeably to the provisions of this law.

Eighteen clauses.

* It is not to be understood from this law, that there is in China any peculiar and indelible distinction of cast, as in Hindostan, but merely that every individual shall be liable to demands of personal service for public purposes, agreeably to the nature of his calling or profession.—This is more fully stated in a subsequent division of the code, intitled, “Enrolment of the People.”

SECTION XVI. — Extent of an Act of Grace or General Pardon *.

From the benefit of any general act of grace or pardon those offenders shall be excluded, who have been convicted of any of the ten treasonable offences before mentioned; of murder; embezzlement of government stores; robbery or theft; wilful house-burning; unlawful grave-opening; bribery, whether the object be lawful or unlawful; forgery and fraud; incest, adultery, and the like; kidnapping; swindling; exciting to commit murder; designedly deviating from justice in the denunciation of punishment against offenders; conniving at, assisting in, negotiating, or conveying a bribe for the purpose of procuring a breach of the laws; and in general in all cases where the laws have been transgressed by premeditation and design.

On the other hand, an act of grace shall relieve all those from punishment, who have offended accidentally and inadvertently; such as accidentally killing or wounding any individual; accidentally setting fire to houses or other property; unintentionally or inadvertently wasting and occasioning the loss of government property, on the part of persons having charge of it.

Secondly; An act of grace shall extend to all those who are liable to punishment merely by implication, and in consequence of the guilt of others.

Thirdly; An act of grace shall, further, relieve from punishment all those, who are chargeable with public offences, not because they have personally and designedly committed them, but because such offences either of commission or omission, had taken place within the limits of their jurisdiction or responsibility.

* An act of grace to the effect here stated, is usually passed at the accession of a new Emperor, and also in honour of some particular anniversaries.

In all these cases, an act of grace shall have the effect of an immediate and unconditional pardon*.

Particular acts of grace or pardon, in which the offenders are described by name, or in which the punishment of certain offences is mitigated only, are not subject to any of the limitations hereby provided.

Nine clauses.

SECTION XVII. — Effect of an Act of Grace on the Condition of Offenders in Exile.

When any offender condemned to perpetual exile is overtaken on the journey by the official notice of a general act of grace or pardon, it cannot take effect with regard to him, if the period legally allowed for reaching the place of his destination had expired; as for instance, in the case of an individual sentenced to be banished to the distance of 3000 lee, he is supposed to travel at the rate of 50 lee per day, and therefore he must have received the act of grace before he had been sixty days upon the journey, in order to be entitled to the benefit of it. — Nevertheless, if the prolongation of the time appears not to have been wilful, and the cause is duly certified by the proper magistrate, whether from the roads being impassable, from sickness, robbers, or other casualties, this objection in point of time shall be over-ruled.

If the offender, moreover, should have made his escape previously to the receipt of the act of grace, he shall not afterwards be allowed the benefit of it, but if he dies before he is retaken, his family and relations

* The offences enumerated as pardonable by an act of grace, are also redeemable at other times by a fine, upon a petition being made to that effect. — This regulation is not included among the fundamental articles of the laws, but is inserted in a note to the first section, under the authority of an act issued the eighth year of the late Emperor Kien-lung. — The particulars of this act, and of some of the more material clauses to the first section, have been inserted in the Appendix, No. V.

shall be allowed either to return to their original settlement, or to obtain a new establishment at the destined place of banishment, according to their choice.

After the offender condemned to perpetual banishment reaches his destination, he shall no longer be capable of taking the benefit of any act of grace or general pardon, even although his offence may not have been such as already stated to be generally unpardonable.

Those who had only received sentence of temporary banishment, may, on the contrary, always have the benefit of any general act of pardon; and by such act, whenever it occurs, the execution of the remaining part of the sentence of such persons shall be remitted.

Two clauses.

SECTION XVIII. — Indulgence to Offenders for the Sake of their Parents.

When any offender under sentence of death for an offence not excluded from the contingent benefit of an act of grace, shall have parents or grand-parents who are sick, infirm, or aged above seventy years, and who have no other male child or grand-child above the age of sixteen to support them, beside such capitally convicted offender, this circumstance, after having been investigated and ascertained by the magistrate of the district, shall be submitted to the consideration and decision of His Imperial Majesty.

Any offender who, under similar circumstances, had been condemned to undergo temporary or perpetual banishment, shall, instead thereof, receive 100 blows, and redeem himself from further punishment, by the payment of the customary fine.

Sixteen clauses.

SECTION XIX. — Offences of Astronomers *.

All the members of the astronomical board † at Peking, and other persons recognised as astronomers, or observers of the heavenly bodies, when convicted of offences punishable with temporary or perpetual banishment, shall only suffer 100 blows, and redeem themselves from further punishment by the payment of the customary fine; by which indulgence they are enabled to return to their profession.

Nevertheless, this regulation shall not extend to any persons who are under sentence of banishment for treason or rebellion; for poisoning, murdering, wounding, robbing, stealing, killing by magic, or for any such offences as may subject the party to the punishment of being branded.

Two clauses.

* This designation must of course be understood in a qualified sense, adapted to the low state of the science at present in China, owing to the ignorance and superstition of its professors, and the neglect or indifference of the government towards it. Still, however, this section of the laws, containing an exception expressly in favour of astronomers, and for securing to the state the benefit of their labours, is an honourable tribute to the excellence and utility of the science, and a proof that its cultivation is still considered in China an object of national importance.—It is also to be observed, that under the patronage of the enlightened Emperor Kang-hee the European missionaries at Peking printed and published in the Chinese character several useful works connected with this science, some of which, particularly a beautiful edition of a table of logarithms, are at present in the library of the Royal Society.

† According to the Chinese imperial kalendar, this board, usually termed by the missionaries the Tribunal of Mathematics, consists of seven members, among whom three are Europeans, and the rest Tartars or Chinese, including the president, who is always a prince of the blood. There are also other boards or departments subordinate to the principal one, consisting, according to the kalendar, of seventy-five persons in the whole, all of whom are either Tartars or Chinese; but although the names of only three of the missionaries appear on the official list, all those who are retained in the service of the Emperor at Peking, are employed according to their capacities, and are decorated with the buttons denoting official rank.

SECTION XX. — Offences of Artificers, Musicians, and Women.

All artificers and musicians* who are convicted of offences punishable with temporary banishment, shall, in the first instance, suffer the customary number of blows with the bamboo; but instead of being subsequently sent into banishment, they shall be detained during the legal period of such banishment at the tribunal † of the magistrate of the district, and employed for that time in the service of government.

This law shall not be considered to extend to such persons as are sentenced to be branded, or to be banished, either for stealing, or for any other more serious offence.

Women convicted of offences punishable with the bamboo, shall be suffered to retain a single upper garment, while the punishment is inflicted, except in cases of adultery, and the like, when they shall be allowed the lower garment only.

Moreover, when the offences committed by women are such as are usually punished also with temporary or perpetual banishment, that part of the sentence shall be always remitted upon payment of the

* Notwithstanding the simplicity and unimproved state of the Chinese music, it appears from the annals of the empire, that the art was anciently held in high estimation, and even at present the musical board is under the government of a prince of the blood, and is ranked with the other public offices at the capital.

With regard to artificers, it is probably considered necessary to secure their services, by an exception in their favour, in order to carry on with less interruption the various public works, the laws relative to which form the concluding division of this Code.

† The word tribunal has been employed in various instances, in which some other term more generally received in our language, such as board, office, council, committee, department, &c. would at first sight appear preferable, but the Chinese term for a court of justice being likewise applied to public offices in general, and the forms being similar in all cases, notwithstanding the difference of the business transacted, the above expression has been chosen in this and most instances, not only as sanctioned by former writers on China, but as more generally applicable than any other.

customary customary fine ; but the corporal punishment, to the extent of 100 blows, shall be inflicted.

Two clauses.

SECTION XXI. — Offences of Persons already under Sentence of Punishment.

When any person, after having been charged with an offence, commits another offence before the infliction of the punishment due to the former, the punishment of the greater offence shall always supersede that of the lesser.

But if the offender had been already sent into banishment for the former offence, the punishment of the latter offence shall be inflicted according to the law in the usual manner, except in the case of a second sentence of perpetual banishment, when the latter shall be commuted for a sentence of extra-service for four years.

In like manner, a second sentence of temporary banishment shall prolong the period of service, but it shall never exceed four years on the whole.

When, after sentence of banishment or of corporal punishment, a further offence punishable with blows of the bamboo is committed, a proportionate punishment shall be inflicted to the full extent directed by law, in the usual manner.

Ten clauses.

SECTION XXII. — Indulgence to Offenders in Consideration of their Age, Youth, or Infirmities.

Any offender whose age is not more than fifteen nor less than seventy years, or who is disabled by the loss of an eye or a limb, shall be allowed to redeem himself from any punishment less than capital, capital, by the payment of the established fine*, except in the case of persons condemned to banishment as accessories to the crimes of treason, rebellion, murder of three or more persons in one family, or + homicide by magic or poisoning, upon all of which offenders the laws shall be strictly executed.

Any offender whose age is not more than ten nor less than eighty years, or who is totally disabled by the loss of both eyes or two limbs, shall, when the crime is capital, but not amounting to treason, be recommended to the particular consideration and decision of His Imperial Majesty.

In all cases of robbery and wounding, which are not punishable capitally, when any persons under the aforesaid disabilities are implicated therein, they shall always be liberated on paying the established fine: in other cases of a less serious nature, they shall not be held responsible in any manner whatever.

Offenders whose age is not more than seven nor less than ninety years, shall not suffer punishment in any case, except in that of treason or rebellion; but any person who shall be convicted of having instructed such child or aged person in the commission of any offence, shall suffer the same punishment as he would have been liable to, if he had actually committed the offence himself.

Eight clauses.

* The amount of the fine is stated in the preliminary part of the code, but is so small in each case as to be merely nominal, though the form is retained, probably in order to distinguish these cases from others, in which the offender is entirely pardoned.—Several instances of distinctions of a similar kind might easily be quoted from our own laws, and probably from those of most other nations.

There are other cases in which the fines are considerable in the amount, and levied under altogether different circumstances.—They are described in the note to Section I. and XVI. and in the Appendix, No. V.

SECTION XXIII. — Plea of Age and Infirmities, how to be construed.

Whoever is ascertained to be aged or infirm at the period of trial for any offence, shall be allowed the benefit of such plea, although he may not have attained the full age, or laboured under the alleged infirmity at the time the offence was committed.

In any case of temporary banishment, the offender, on attaining the age, or becoming infirm as aforesaid, shall, in like manner, become thereupon entitled to the privilege of redeeming himself from further punishment.—On the other hand, the privilege of youth may be pleaded when the age of the offender, at the time of committing the offence, did not exceed seven, ten, or fifteen years, whatever may be his age at the subsequent period of trial.

No clause.

SECTION XXIV. — Restitution and Forfeiture of Goods.

In any case of an illegal transfer of property, in which both parties are guilty, or when any person is convicted of possessing prohibited goods, such goods or property shall be forfeited to the state:—But when any article of property has been obtained from an individual by violence, injustice, extortion, or false pretences, it shall be restored to the owner.

In all cases wherein the offender is liable to be punished in his property as well as in his person, if a pardon arrives after the execution of corporal punishment, but before the confiscation has taken place, or before the fine has been levied, the latter part of the sentence shall be remitted.—If however the amount to be levied by fine or confiscation, is actually received and appropriated before the notice of the general act of pardon arrives; or if the offence is connected with circumstances of a treasonable nature, the general act of pardon shall, in that particular case, have no effect.

Moreover, in any case of an available pardon arriving before the execution of corporal punishment, the property sequestrated on account of government, if not specifically appropriated, shall be restored, and the family of the offender, who may have been likewise held bound to government, shall be released from their responsibility.

If the offence arises from the unlawful possession of any property, and the property, the restitution of which is consequently claimed by government or by an individual, is still in existence, it shall be duly transferred, and, when of a productive nature, with all its produce. If, however, the unlawful possessor had wasted it, and afterwards died, his heirs shall not be compelled to make up the deficiency.

When the offence arises from circumstances of a different description, the fine shall be strictly levied, unless it be the wages of labour, in which case it shall be remitted.

In estimating the amount of the property and of the charges which are to be made good by the offender, the several articles shall be rated at the price they bore at the time and place in which they were unlawfully acquired.

The wages of labour shall be estimated at 8 fen 5 lee and 5 *bao, for each man per day: the charges for the hire of horses, cattle, carriages, boats, and similar articles, shall be fixed at the current rate at the time and place in which such charges were incurred; provided always, that the total charge for the hire of any article, shall not, in any case, exceed its full value.

* That is to say, 0.855 decimal parts of a lean or Chinese ounce of silver, whose estimated value is 6s. 8d. sterling. According to this computation, the wages of labour will be reckoned at rather less than seven-pence per day; it is probable however, that this is not an invariable rule, but subject to alteration at different periods according to circumstances.

The exact amount of the gold and silver * due to government, or to the individual owner, shall be made good agreeably to the original sums, as stated in the information, whatever part of such original sum may have been disposed of or wasted.

Eighteen clauses.

SECTION XXV. — Offenders surrendering voluntarily.

Whoever, having committed an offence, surrenders himself voluntarily, and acknowledges his guilt to a magistrate, before it is otherwise discovered, shall be freely pardoned; but all claims upon his property, on the part of government or of individuals, shall nevertheless be duly liquidated.

Moreover, if an offender, after having been charged with any particular offence, shall confess himself guilty of another and a greater offence before the magistrate; or in general, if, in the course of the investigation of the circumstances of any one alleged offence, it shall be discovered, without the application of torture, that the accused is guilty of other offences, he shall still only suffer punishment in proportion to the offence originally charged against him. X

If the offender makes a timely confession of his guilt as aforesaid, through the intervention of another person, or if he is accused by, and through the ill-will of, his junior relations or dependants, he shall, in all cases not expressly excepted, receive full pardon.

If the voluntary confession of the offender is inaccurate and imperfect, he shall be liable to punishment for as much of the offence committed by him, as he had endeavoured to conceal; but in cases of a capital nature, the punishment shall always, upon making any timely confession whatever, be reduced one degree.

* The general currency in China is restricted to copper, but all accounts are kept in ounces, and the decimal parts of ounces, of silver.

If an offender does not confess his guilt until he is informed that a charge is prepared to be laid against him, or if he previously absconds, or takes refuge out of the empire, his punishment shall not be entirely remitted, but mitigated two degrees.

In all cases also of fugitives and deserters returning to their original places of abode, the punishment to which they are liable by law shall be mitigated no more than two degrees.

The remission of punishment, upon a timely and voluntary confession of guilt, shall not be allowed in those cases of injury to the person or property which cannot be repaired by restitution or compensation, or when the offence was known to the officers of justice while the offender was concealed, or in cases of clandestinely passing public barriers.

If the robber, thief, or swindler, repenting of his conduct, restores the plunder to the persons from whom he took it, or if the corrupt officer restores the amount of the bribe to the person from whom it was received, this restitution shall be deemed equal to a confession at a legal tribunal, and in the same degree entitle the offender to pardon.

If, having notice of an information intended to be laid against him, the offender then goes to the owner of the property, and makes restitution, he shall only be entitled to a mitigation of the punishment to the extent of two degrees; but if a repentant thief or robber is fortunate enough to be the means of bringing to justice his accomplices, he shall receive full pardon, and moreover be entitled to the reward that may have been offered for the discovery of such offenders. If, however, he should ever commit a second offence, the above privileges cannot be allowed in that or in any subsequent instance.

Eleven clauses.

SECTION XXVI. — Offenders charged with several Offences.

When any person is convicted of two or more offences, all the offences shall be estimated together, and punishment inflicted conformably to the extent of the criminality of the principal charge: the punishment of all the rest shall be considered as included in that of the first.—If the several offences are charged at different times, and the punishment of the first of the charges has been already inflicted, the latter charges shall not subject the offender to further punishment, unless of a more serious nature than the former, in which case the amount only of the difference between the legal punishments shall be inflicted.

In each separate case, however, the law shall be fully executed so far as respects the restitution of property to individuals, or the forfeiture of it to government; and also with respect to the branding of the offender, and his degradation from office.

No clause.

SECTION XXVII. — Proceedings in Cases where all the Parties to an Offence have escaped.

When all the parties to any offence have effected their escape from justice, if any individual amongst them surrenders voluntarily, and also delivers into custody one other more guilty than himself; or if, when the guilt is equal, the larger porportion of the party are delivered up by the smaller, those who thus voluntarily surrender themselves shall be pardoned, except in cases of killing, of wounding, and of criminal intercourse between the sexes.—When several persons are implicated in the guilt of one, who afterwards dies in prison, the punishment of those who are guilty by implication only, shall be thereupon reduced two degrees.

More-

Moreover, when any offender obtains a remission or mitigation of his punishment, or permission to redeem himself from the same by a fine, either in consequence of a voluntary surrender and confession, by a general act of grace, or by a special edict of the Emperor in his favour, in all such cases the several persons who may have become liable to punishment by implication in his offence, shall be pardoned or favoured to the same extent.

No clause.

SECTION XXVIII.—Offences of Members of Public Departments and Tribunals committed in their official Capacity.

In all cases of officers of government associated in one department or tribunal, and committing offences against the laws as a public body, by false or erroneous decisions, and investigations, the clerk of the department or tribunal shall be punished as the principal offender; the punishment of the several deputies, or executive officers, shall be less by one degree, that of the assessors less by another degree, and that of the presiding magistrate less by a third degree*.

* In translating the titles of the constituent officers of a Chinese tribunal or public board, it was impossible to find terms that were not in some point of view exceptionable, but those that have been chosen will shew, that the arrangement is analogous to that adopted in such of our own colonial governments, as are administered by a president, members of council, secretaries, and clerks. What is the most remarkable in this respect in China, is that the lowest officer incurs the greatest share of the responsibility; but this being confined to offences by implication only, it will not appear so extraordinary that, when the measures or the decisions of a board or tribunal are found to be reprehensible without any offence being directly imputable to a particular individual, that member of the tribunal should be subjected to the largest share of the punishment, by whose suggestion and instrumentality, the business had been conducted, and whose inferior station might be supposed to have enabled him to gain a more accurate knowledge of the circumstances upon which the justice or injustice of the decision depended, than was likely to have been in the power of his superiors.

Although

Although there should be a vacancy in, or a want of any of the intermediate stations, the reduction of the punishment shall always take effect to the same extent*.

If in the case of any decision of a tribunal contrary to the laws, only one member of the court was guilty of the deviation from justice, knowingly and intentionally, his particular offence being of a personal nature shall be punished as such; while the others, being only guilty of an erroneous judgment, shall be punished more leniently, and according to the gradations prescribed above.

If an inferior tribunal reports its erroneous judgment to a superior, which superior, neglecting to examine and discover the error, confirms the same, the members of the superior tribunal shall be respectively liable to punishment less by two degrees than those of the inferior tribunal.

On the other hand, when a superior tribunal communicates its erroneous judgment to an inferior tribunal, if the members of the latter neglect to examine the same, and, having failed to discover the error, confirm it by their proceedings, they also shall be liable to punishment, though under a proportionate mitigation, in the case of each individual, to the extent of three degrees.

In all these cases, the scale of the punishments incurred shall commence with the clerks of the respective courts.

No clause.

SECTION XXIX. — Errors and Failures in public Proceedings.

Upon any error or failure in the public proceedings of an officer of government, if he discovers and corrects, or remedies the same, he shall be pardoned. — Also, in the case of error or failure in the proceedings of a public office or tribunal, if any one member discovers so as to correct or remedy the same, all the members shall obtain pardon. If however such error consists in an aggravation of the sentence of the law, and is not discovered until after the execution thereof, they cannot be entirely pardoned, but the punishment shall be mitigated three degrees.—If, on the other hand, the error consists in pronouncing too lenient a sentence, the parties shall be pardoned, although the error is not discovered until after the execution of the sentence, provided they do themselves discover and rectify their error.

* As for instance; the presiding magistrates of these public boards or tribunals, in which from custom or accident, there may not be any assessors or deputies, shall, in every case of imputed delinquency, be punished three degrees less than the clerks, in the same manner as in those boards or tribunals which are constituted in the regular way.

An extraordinary delay in issuing public orders from any tribunal of justice or other public department, renders all the members liable to punishment; but if any one of them voluntarily interposes, and prevents any further delay from taking place, all the magistrates or officers of that tribunal or department shall be pardoned; but the clerk shall incur the full punishment, except he had himself acknowledged the impropriety of the delay which had taken place, and interposed to prevent its continuance; in which case, his punishment shall be reduced two degrees.

Five days shall be allowed to dispatch business of small importance; ten days for business of ordinary importance; and twenty days for business of high importance.

No clause.

SECTION XXX. — Distinction between Principals and Accessaries.

When several persons are parties to one offence, the original contriver of it shall be held to be the principal, and as such suffer the punishment required by the laws, in its full extent: the rest who followed, and also contributed to the perpetration thereof, shall suffer the punishment next in degree, under the denomination of accessaries.—When the parties to an offence are members of one family, the senior and chief member of that family shall alone be punishable; but if he be upwards of eighty years of age, or totally disabled by his infirmities, the punishment shall fall upon the next in succession.

When

When, however, the offence is a direct injury to the person or property of any individual, the several individuals shall, as in all ordinary cases, be punished as principals or accessaries in the manner previously stated.

When the relative situation of the parties engaged in the commission of one offence, creates a difference in their liability to punishment, the principals shall suffer as principals in the offence committed by themselves, but the accessaries shall be punished as accessaries in the offence of which they would themselves have been guilty, had they been in the place of the principal. As for instance: if a man engages a stranger to strike his elder brother—the younger brother shall be punished with ninety blows, and two years and a half banishment, for the offence of striking his elder; but the stranger shall be only punished with twenty blows, as in common cases of an assault.—Also, if a younger relation introduces a stranger to steal to the amount of ten leang or ounces of silver of the family property, he shall only be punished as wasting, or disposing of without leave, the family property to that extent, whereas the stranger shall be punished as in common cases of theft.

When the law does not expressly declare, that the punishment shall be inflicted alike on all parties concerned, it is to be understood, that one only is to suffer as a principal, and the rest as accessaries.—Nevertheless, in all cases of attempting to enter any of the imperial palaces, or to pass the public barriers clandestinely; avoiding the stated and lawful services to government; committing adultery, and other offences of the same nature; the parties shall suffer punishment individually without any distinction between principals and accessaries, although the terms expressly including all parties equally, should be omitted.

One clause.

SECTION XXXI. — Proceedings relative to Offenders who have absconded.

When, of two persons who have been parties to the perpetration of an offence, one has absconded, and the other, who is in custody, declares the former to have been the principal offender, and himself only an accessory, if there is no evidence to disprove the assertion, he shall be punished forthwith as an accessory. — If the offender who had absconded is afterwards taken, and thereupon contends that, on the contrary, the other was the principal offender, the matter shall be diligently investigated; and if the latter assertion is substantiated, the offender first seized shall suffer the remainder of the punishment due to him as a principal, and the rest shall each suffer according to the law, as accessories.

If, after an offence is known to have been perpetrated, it can be proved by sufficient testimony, whether those who, being known to be implicated therein and, having absconded, are still at large, were principals or accessories, it shall not be deemed requisite to confront all the offenders together, and they may therefore be tried and punished, as they are successively apprehended.

*Four clauses.*SECTION XXXII. — Relations mutually assisting and concealing each other.*

All relations connected in the first and second degree and living under the same roof, maternal grand-parents and their grandchildren, fathers and mothers-in-law, sons and daughters-in-law, grandchildren's wives, husbands' brothers and brothers' wives, when mutually assisting each other, and concealing the offences, one of another; and moreover; slaves and hired servants assisting their masters and concealing their offences, shall not, in any such cases, be punishable for so doing.

* Concerning the degrees of consanguinity as distinguished by the Chinese, see the Table of Degrees of Mourning in the Preliminary Part of the Code, and also the Appendix thereto, No. IV.

In like manner, though they should inform their relations of the measures adopted for their apprehension, and enable them to conceal themselves, and finally to effect their escape, they shall still be held innocent.

When relations in the third and fourth degrees assist and protect each other from punishment in the manner here described, they shall for such conduct be liable to punishment, but only in a proportion of three degrees less than would have been inflicted on strangers under the same circumstances.

The same offences committed by relations in still more remote degrees of kindred, shall be punished within one degree of the extent of the punishment inflicted in ordinary cases. — Nevertheless, none of the provisions of this law in mitigation or remission of the punishment of harbouring, concealing, and assisting relations, shall be pleaded, or have any effect, in cases of high treason or rebellion.

One clause.

SECTION XXXIII. — Punishment of Deserters.

When, in the frontier towns and other places of strength, any of the soldiers are discovered to have formed a design to desert and join the enemy, their commanding officer shall take them into custody, and bring them for trial before his own immediate superior, who, having strictly investigated the charges, and gone through the evidence, shall report the same to the viceroy and sub-viceroy of the province: when the latter magistrates have finally ascertained that there has been no partiality nor injustice in the case, they shall proceed, without further delay, to carry the sentence of the law into effect, and afterwards submit the whole of the proceedings to His Imperial Majesty.

When the army is in the field, and any of the soldiers openly attempt to desert, if they can be seized immediately and put to death, it shall be lawful to do so, in consideration of the urgency of the case; the provisions of this law may therefore, under such circumstances, be so far dispensed with, but it is still requisite to report faithfully all such transactions to the Emperor.

No clause.

SECTION XXXIV. — Offences committed by Foreigners.*

In general, all foreigners who come to submit themselves to the government of the empire, shall, when guilty of offences, be tried and sentenced according to the established laws.

The particular decisions however of the tribunal Lee-fan-Yuen † shall

* This section of the code has been expressly quoted by the provincial government of Canton, and applied to the case of foreigners residing there and at Macao for the purposes of trade. The laws of China have never, however, been attempted to be enforced against those foreigners, except with considerable allowances in their favour, although, on the other hand, they are restricted and circumscribed in such a manner that a transgression on their part of any specific article of the laws, can scarcely occur; at least not without, at the same time, implicating and involving in their guilt some of the natives, who thus, in most cases, become the principal victims of offended justice.—The situation of Europeans in China is certainly by no means so satisfactory on the whole as might be desired, or even as it may be reasonably expected to become in the progress of time; unless some untoward circumstance should occur to check the gradual course of improvement; it must be admitted, however, that the extreme contrariety of manners, habits, and language, renders some such arrangement, as that now subsisting for the regulation of the intercourse between the Europeans and the natives, absolutely indispensable, as well as conducive to the interests of both parties.—A translation of some Chinese official documents of a recent date, illustrative of the above remarks, is inserted in the Appendix, No. XI.

† This tribunal might be styled the office or department for foreign affairs, but its chief concern is with the tributary and the subject states of Tartary.

be guided according to regulations framed for the government of the Mongol tribes.

Three clauses.

SECTION XXXV. — Proceedings in Cases where the Laws appear contradictory.

When the law upon any particular case appears to differ from the general laws contained in this division of the code, the magistrate shall always decide according to the former, in preference to the latter. — When the offence, of which an individual is convicted according to one law, is at the same time in itself an evidence of designs, which are, by another law, more severely punishable than the act itself, sentence upon such an individual shall be pronounced and executed according to the latter instead of the former law. — If an offence is committed under aggravating circumstances, of which the offender himself is ignorant at the time, he shall be sentenced to suffer no more than the punishment due by law in ordinary cases.

As for instance: if a nephew, being educated at a distance from his uncle, and not knowing his person, strikes him in an affray, it shall be judged to be only an ordinary case of assault: — or if a thief steals any articles which are sacred or imperial, without knowing them to be so, it shall be adjudged to be an ordinary instance of theft, and not sacrilege. On the other hand, if the offence is committed under palliating circumstances, which legally reduce the amount of the punishment, the offender shall, at all events, have the full advantage thereof; as for instance, when a father strikes a person whom he supposes to be a stranger, but who was in fact his son.

No clause.

SECTION XXXVI.—Rules relative to the Increase and Diminution of Punishments.

When the sentence of the law is said to be increased, it is implied, that the punishment shall be inflicted more severely:—As for instance: a sentence of forty blows increased one degree, becomes a sentence of fifty blows: a sentence of one hundred blows increased one degree, becomes a sentence of sixty blows and one year's banishment; the next degree is seventy blows, and one year and a half's banishment:—a sentence of one hundred blows and three years banishment, when raised one degree, implies a sentence of one hundred blows, and perpetual banishment to the distance of 2000 lee; and when raised another degree, a sentence of one hundred blows, and perpetual banishment to the distance of 2500 lee.

When the sentence of the law is said to be diminished, it is implied that the punishment is mitigated: As for instance—a sentence of fifty blows diminished one degree is a sentence of forty blows:—one of sixty blows and one year's banishment diminished one degree, is one of one hundred blows: one of one hundred blows and three years banishment, diminished one degree, is one of ninety blows and two years and a half's banishment.

In the reduction of punishments, the two modes of inflicting death, and three kinds of perpetual banishment, shall be estimated in each case as only a single degree:—As for instance; if a sentence of capital punishment by strangling, or decollation, is mitigated one degree, the offender shall be banished perpetually to the distance of 3000 lee; if two degrees, he shall be banished for three years only.—In like manner, any sentence of perpetual banishment, when reduced one degree, shall only subject the offender to banishment for three years.

When the punishment is increased a degree in a specific case, the full extent required by law must be proved to warrant the same: as for instance; the increased punishment for bribery amounting to forty

leang

leang or ounces of silver, cannot be inflicted if the amount did not exceed thirty-nine ounces and ninety-nine decimal parts.

Moreover, whatever number of degrees the punishment is directed to be increased in certain cases, it cannot be rendered capital by construction, unless so especially provided; and if it is provided that, in certain cases, the offender shall be punished capitally, either by strangling or decollation, he must be executed in the manner stated, and not otherwise, under any circumstances of aggravation of the offence.

Three clauses.

SECTION XXXVII. — Extent of the Privilege and Distinction of Imperial Rank.

Whatever is stated in the laws concerning Imperial equipage, the Imperial presence, and the like, shall be considered to extend not only to the Emperor, but also to the Empress Consort, Empress Mother, and Empress Grandmother.—Also, all orders, instructions, and acts of any kind, termed Imperial, shall be understood to comprehend, beside those of the Emperor himself, those of the Empress Mother and Empress Grandmother, and of the Imperial Prince appointed to the succession*.

No clause.

SECTION XXXVIII. — Relations in the first Degree.

Whatever is declared in the laws to concern relations in the first degree, grand-parents or grand-children, shall likewise be understood to extend equally to great-grand-parents, and great-great-grand-parents,

* The last distinction of rank can only have been stated hypothetically, as such a nomination has never taken place under the present dynasty, except upon the resignation, or by the testamentary direction of the Emperor, published after his decease. One of the charges against the late and favourite minister Ho-chung-tong, was that of his having divulged to the present Emperor, previous to his elevation, the secret of the preference intended to be shewn him by his imperial father.

great great-grand-children, and great-great grand-children, except in cases of constructive crimes, when the law shall be taken literally.

Also, the father's principal wife *, the father's wife substituted in the place of the principal wife after her death, the father's wife substituted in the place of the natural mother upon her death, and the adopted mother, shall all hold equal rank with the natural mother, and be understood to be referred to, in all laws in which the mother of the party concerned is only stated generally, except in the case of such mother having been divorced, or in the case of her killing, or attempting to kill, such son-in-law.

Also, except in cases of constructive offences, whatever the law states relative to the sons, shall be applicable to the daughters also.

No clause.

SECTION XXXIX. — Participants in Offences †.

Those, whom the law declares to be considered as participators in an offence, shall suffer the punishment incurred by it, without however including any circumstances of aggravation, which are personally applicable to the principal offender only; and in the case of capital offences, the participators in the offence shall only receive one hundred blows, and suffer perpetual banishment to the distance of 3000 lee: — they shall moreover not be liable to be branded for their participation in any offence so punishable.

In cases however of bribery and wilful connivance, all participators in the crime shall participate in the punishment, in its full extent,

* For an illustration of the legal distinction between the principal and inferior wives, see the division of the code entitled Marriage.

† This, as well as some other sections of the preliminary division of the code, are not so much declaratory of the law, as explanatory of technical phraseology, but being included among the fundamental articles, they could not, consistently with the general plan be omitted.

especially

PLACEHOLDER PAGE

This page is a placeholder, inserted to ensure proofread pages will be aligned even if this page is replaced.

Replace with the original page if available.

A legal year shall consist of 360 days complete*, but a man's age shall be computed according to the number of years of the † cycle elapsed since his name and birth were recorded in the public ‡ register.

When the law speaks of several persons, three at least are to be understood; but when simply stating the circumstance of an agreement or combination, any number not less than two may be implied.

No clause.

SECTION XLII.—Laws relative to the Priesthood.

The Tao-ssé and Niu-quan §, shall be subject in all cases to the established laws concerning the priesthood of both orders, and both sexes; the right and authority of the masters and superiors, and the duty of submission and subordination on the part of those who are legally ad-

* The civil year in China ordinarily consists of no more than 354 days, or twelve lunations, but an intercalary month is introduced as often as may be necessary to bring the commencement of every year to the second new moon after each preceding winter solstice.

† The most usual date employed by the Chinese, is the year of the reigning Emperor; but they have likewise, from a remote period of antiquity, computed time by cycles of 60 years, each year of such period being distinguished with a particular name, formed by a binary combination of ten initial, and twelve final, characters.

‡ As this mode of computation, which is generally in use among the Chinese, is not fully explained in the text, it may be proper just to point out its peculiar inaccuracy, which consists in its having always the effect of representing the age of the individual greater than it is in reality.—Thus a child born the last day of the year, will, on the following day, be described as two years old, being considered to have lived in two of the years in the cycle.

§ The priests and priestesses thus designated, and also those of Foe, have usually been described under the names of Bonzes and Bonzesses, which terms have probably been taken from the Japanese language, but the religion of the state in China cannot properly be said to have any priests whatever attached to its service, the Emperor and his ordinary magistrates always officiating in the sacred rites by law established, as in the ritual division of the code is particularly explained. The religious orders adverted to in this section are tolerated and regulated by government, but derive their support entirely from their own funds, or from occasional voluntary contributions.

mitted

mitted as apprentices or disciples, shall be the same as that established between uncles and nephews in all ordinary cases.

No clause.

SECTION XLIII. — Execution of New Laws.

All laws, characterized as, and intended to become, fundamental, shall, in general, take effect and be in full force from the day on which they are published, and every transaction shall be adjudged according to the most recent laws, although such transaction should have occurred previous to their promulgation. — Occasional statutes, which are modifications of the law, shall not however operate in those cases which were antecedent to their enactment; and when any period of days or years is assigned for the commencement of their operation, such period shall be strictly observed, except only in regard to statutes providing a mitigation of the ordinary punishments, which shall be construed to be immediately in force, in all cases.

One clause.

SECTION XLIV. — Determination of Cases not provided for by any existing Law.

From the impracticability of providing for every possible contingency, there may be cases to which no laws or statutes are precisely applicable; such cases may then be determined, by an accurate comparison with others which are already provided for, and which approach most nearly to those under investigation, in order to ascertain afterwards to what extent an aggravation or mitigation of the punishment would be equitable.

A provisional sentence conformable thereto shall be laid before the superior magistrates, and after receiving their approbation, be submitted to the Emperor's final decision.—Any erroneous judgment which may be pronounced in consequence of adopting a more summary mode of proceeding, in cases of a doubtful nature, shall be punished as a wilful deviation from justice.

One clause.

SECTION XLV. — Place of temporary and perpetual Banishment.

All persons sentenced to undergo temporary banishment, shall be removed to the distance of at least 500 lee from the place of their nativity, for the period specified in their sentence; which period shall be computed to commence from their arrival at the place of banishment, and from thence, at the moment the period expires, they shall be at liberty to depart.

The place of perpetual banishment shall likewise be regulated according to the distance prescribed in the sentence pronounced on the offender, and a permanent settlement shall be allowed him on such coasts, islands, or deserted and uncultivated districts, as circumstances may render most eligible for the purpose.—Those who are sentenced to the mitigated perpetual banishment, shall be settled at the distance of 1000 lee from the place of their nativity.—Temporary banishment is of five kinds, but in no case subjects the offender to be sent out of his native province.

Perpetual banishment is of three kinds, and, conformably to the sentence, the offender shall be banished to the nearer or more remote parts of the following provinces :

From Pe-che-lee	to	Shen-fee
Kiang-nan		Shen-fee
Gan-wey		Shan-tung
Shan-tung		Che-kiang
Shan-fee		Shen-fee

From

From	Ho-nan	to	Che-kiang
	Shen-fee		Shan-tung
	Kan-foo		Se-chuen
	Che-kiang		Shan-tung
	Kiang-fee		Quang-fee
	Hou-pe		Shan-tung
	Hou-nan		Se-chuen
	Fo-kien		Quang-tung
	Quang-tung		Fo-kien
	Quang-fee		Quang-tung
	Se-chuen		Quang-fee
	Quei-cheu		Se-chuen
	Yun-nan		Se-chuen.

Forty-seven clauses.

SECTION XLVI. — Place of extraordinary or military Banishment *.

The several degrees of extraordinary or military banishment, are, the ordinary or 2000 lee; the distant or 2500 lee; the more distant or 3000 lee, and the most distant or 4000 lee; and conformably to the sentence, the offenders shall be perpetually banished in the manner hereafter provided; the settlement of those banished from Peking being determined by the tribunal for military affairs, and of those banished

* Beside the several degrees of banishment described in this and the preceding section, a more severe punishment, of a similar description, has been introduced since the original formation of the code by the present dynasty, and amounts to transportation to, and slavery for life at, Elee, a government station in a remote province of Tartary, annexed by the late Emperor Kien-long, to the dominions of China. This species of punishment is either inflicted as a mitigation of the sentence in certain capital cases, or in aggravation of the punishment of crimes, whose frequency had increased, as stated in the Emperor Kaung-hee's introductory preface.—The numerous supplementary clauses annexed to the preceding section describe these regulations in detail.

from

from the provinces, by the different viceroys and sub-viceroys ; due information and notice shall also be given in the latter case to the said tribunal, or supreme board for military affairs, upon each occasion. The banishment shall, according to the sentence, be adjudged to one or other of the following provinces * :

From Pe-che-lee to Shan-tung, or Shan-fee, or Kiang-nan, or Hou-quang, or Shen-fee, or Che-kiang, or Kiang-fee, or Quang-tung.

From Kiang-nan to Hou-quang, or Shan-tung, or Che-kiang, or Shen-fee, or Che-lee, or Shan-fee, or Quang-tung.

From Shan-tung, to Teng-cheou-foo, or Che-lee, or Kiang-nan, or Shan-fee, or Che-kiang, or Shen-fee, or Quang-tung.

From Shan-fee to Shan-tung, or Kiang-nan, or Shen-fee, or Hou-quang, or Che-kiang, or Kiang-fee, or Quang-tung.

From Ho-nan to Shan-tung, or Shen-fee, or Hou-quang, or Che-lee, or Kiang-nan, or Shen-fee, or Che-kiang, or Quang-tung.

From Shen-fee to Ning-hia-wey, or Ho-cheu-wey ; or Che-lee, or Shan-fee, or Sing-tu-fee, or Shan-tung, or Hou-quang, or Kiang-nan, or Quang-tung.

From Che-kiang to Kiang-nan, or Shan-tung, or Hou-quang, or Che-lee, or Shan-fee, or Shen-fee, or Quang-tung.

From Kiang-fee to Shan-tung, or Che-kiang, or Hou-quang, or Quang-tung, or Che-lee, or Shan-fee, or Shen-fee, or Se-chuen.

From Hou-quang to Nang-yang-foo, or Kiang-fee, or Che-kiang, or Se-chuen, or Kiang-nan, or Shan-fee, or Shen-fee, or Che-lee, or Quang-tung.

* The enumeration which is here given of provinces and districts in China, may seem very unimportant, but being printed in the original Chinese work, as a part of the fundamental law, it has been retained in its place, in conformity to the general rule of selection which the translator has prescribed to himself, conceiving it to be (as already stated in another place) the least liable to objection.

From

From Fo-kien to Che-kiang, or Kiang-fee, or Kiang-nan, or Quang-tung, or Hou-quang, or Shan-tung, or Che-lee, or Se-chuen.

From Quang-tung to Chao-cheu-foo, or Hou-quang, or Shan-fee, or Se-chuen, or Shan-tung.

From Quang-fee to Kiang-fee, or Hou-quang, or Se-chuen, or Shan-fee, or Shen-fee, or Che-kiang, or Quang-tung.

From Se-chuen to Yue-hee-wey, or Shen-fee, or Hou-quang, or Kiang-fee, or Shan-fee, or Che-kiang, or Quang-tung.

From Que-cheu to Se-chuen, or Kiang-fee, or Hou-quang, or Shen-fee, or Kiang-nan, or Che-kiang, or Shan-fee, or Quang-tung.

From Yun-nan to Quang-tung, or Hou-quang, or Shen-fee, or Kiang-fee.

Two clauses.

END OF THE FIRST DIVISION.

PLACEHOLDER PAGE

This page is a placeholder, inserted to ensure proofread pages will be aligned even if this page is replaced.

Replace with the original page if available.

SECOND DIVISION,

*Civil Laws.

B O O K I.

SYSTEM OF GOVERNMENT.

SECTION XLVII. — Hereditary Succession †.

EVERY civil and military officer of government, whose rank and titles are hereditary, shall be succeeded in them by his eldest son born of his principal wife, or by such eldest son's surviving legal representative, chosen according to the general rule here provided.

If such eldest son, and all those who might legally have represented him are deceased, or incapacitated to succeed to the inheritance by incurable illness or misconduct, the son next in age, or his surviving legal representative chosen as aforesaid, shall be called to the succession.

When there are neither any sons, nor any legal representatives of such sons, by the principal wife, capable of succeeding, the several sons of the other wives, and their legal representatives, shall be entitled thereto according to seniority; upon failure of whom, the succession shall lastly devolve upon the sons of the younger brothers, taken in the order already mentioned. — Whoever enters upon the succession to an hereditary dignity, in violation of the order prescribed by this law, shall be punished for such offence with 100 blows and three years banishment.

* Laws relating to the administration of the civil government.

† Although titles descendible to the heirs male are occasionally conferred in China by the Emperor, as a reward for eminent services, they are resumable by the Crown at pleasure, and the possessors of them enjoy few, if any, exclusive privileges.—None of the hereditary dignities which existed previous to the Tartar conquest in 1644, appear to have been recognized by the present government, except that attached to the family of Confucius, whose real or supposed descendants are at this day distinguished with peculiar titles of honour, and maintained at the public expence.

When the claim of a son or grandson to the succession has been duly authenticated by the proper magistrate, it must be reported to the council of state, through which channel it will be submitted to the Emperor for ratification, and also for the authority to continue to the heir the emolument which may have been annexed to the dignity. — If the heir is a minor, he shall not be enrolled for public service at Court, until he attains the age of eighteen years.

When the family title is extinct for want of lineal male heirs to succeed to the hereditary dignities, the widow of the last possessor shall receive the emoluments annexed thereto, during her life.

If a stranger's child is educated and brought up in a family of rank, in order, by deceiving the magistrates, to obtain the inheritance, such supposititious heir shall receive 100 blows, and be sent into remote banishment; the emoluments annexed to the rank shall also cease from the time that such fraudulent intention was discovered. — Whoever instructs and instigates others to commit this offence, shall suffer the same punishment.

Those magistrates also, who connive at the fraud, and ratify the succession, shall be equally punished, as participating in the offence; but if really ignorant of the illegality of the transaction, they shall be excused.

If convicted at the same time of bribery, to such an extent as, according to law, is more severely punishable, the punishment of the greater offence shall, as in other cases, supersede that of the lesser.

Fifteen clauses.

SECTION XLVIII. — Great Officers of State not authorized to confer Appointments.*

All the appointments and removals of officers, whether civil or military, shall depend solely upon the authority of the Emperor.—If any great officer of state presumes to confer any appointment upon his own authority, he shall suffer death by being beheaded, after remaining in prison the usual time.

It is likewise hereby prohibited to appoint or remove any relations of the great officers of state, without an express order from the Emperor for that purpose, and a breach of this regulation shall expose the offender to the same punishment as that of the preceding.

Any officer of government employed at court, and receiving the Emperor's personal commands to undertake the performance of any service, or to resign or change his employment, whether the object be near or remote, if he make any excuse for not complying therewith, he shall receive 100 blows, and be rendered incapable of holding any office under government thenceforward †.

One clause.

* The viceroys and commanders-in-chief of provinces are constantly in the habit of filling up the various civil and military appointments under their respective jurisdictions, when they become vacant, but it is always done expressly by virtue of the authority conferred by the Emperor, and generally stated to be only ad interim, until His Majesty's pleasure is known.—The object of the law in this place appears to be to prevent any of the great officers of state, or principal nobility, from encroaching upon the royal prerogative, by forming a petty court or principality, dependent on themselves; an offence of this description was the subject of one of the leading charges against Ho-chung-tong, the minister and favourite of the late Emperor, an account of whose trial and condemnation is given in the Appendix, No. VIII.

† The punishments to which officers of government are stated in any particular instance to be liable, must always be understood to be subject to the modifications provided by the VIth, VIIth, and VIIIth Sections, and also by the clauses to the First Section, inserted in No. V. of the Appendix.

SECTION XLIX. — Officers of Government not allowed to solicit hereditary Honours.

When any officers of the civil department of government, who have not distinguished themselves by extraordinary and great services to the state, are recommended to the consideration of the Emperor, as deserving of the highest hereditary honours; such officers, and those who recommend them, shall suffer death, by being beheaded, after remaining the usual period in prison.

Nevertheless, those who are recommended to such honours in consequence of their being the lineal descendants of distinguished officers and magistrates, who by their valour and exertions had averted national calamities, protected the empire, and contributed to the establishment of the Imperial Family, shall be free from any liability to the penalties of this law.

No clause.

SECTION L. — Supernumerary Officers of Government.

In every public office and tribunal, whether at court or in the provinces, the number of officers to be regularly employed in each, is permanently established by law *, and whoever shall appoint, or cause to

* A detailed description of the manner in which the several public offices and tribunals are constituted, and of their respective powers and functions, in carrying on the business of government, does not form a constituent part of the present work, although enough is stated on the subject, indirectly and incidentally, to afford, when considered together, a sufficiently correct idea of the general system.—To furnish details of this kind, is one of the leading objects of another Chinese work, entitled Ta Tsing Hoey Tien, or the Great general Code of the present Dynasty, and which may be considered as the official account of the political constitution of China in its several branches, though it has been described in some of the works of the missionaries, rather improperly, as the legal code of the empire; and in terms, which excite more curiosity, than a translation of the work, if it could be executed, would be likely to be appointed any one supernumerary officer, shall be punished with 100 blows, and one degree more severely for every three supernumeraries so appointed, as far as 100 blows and three years banishment, beyond which degree the punishment shall not be increased, unless the party shall have been likewise convicted of bribery to such an amount as may, by law, aggravate the punishment due to him.

Any person also, who employs, or causes to be employed, more than the established number of the clerks, or of the civil and military attendants of a tribunal or public office, shall be punished with 100 blows and two years banishment.

Any officer knowingly permitting one such supernumerary to continue in the employ of government, shall be liable to the punishment of 20 blows, if the said officer be a presiding magistrate; to 30 blows, if a deputy; and to 40 blows, if a chief clerk of such office or tribunal. — For every three supernumeraries thus suffered to remain in employ, the punishment shall be increased one degree, to any proportionate extent, not exceeding the limit of 100 blows.

The supernumerary shall not in these cases be liable to any punishment. — If any persons, who had formerly been officers or clerks in the service of government, interfere in any manner in the administration of the public service, by writing orders, and pretending to possess authority, or by any other means extort money from and oppress the people, they shall, at the least, be punished with 80 blows, and fined 20 leang or ounces of silver, which sum shall be paid to the person informing against them; the corporal punishment shall, under any aggravating circumstances, likely to gratify. See the Memoires sur les Chinois, vol. iv. page 220. and vol. viii. page 127. — Of this work, (The Ta Tsing Hoey Tieng) in which a comparatively small portion of curious matter is buried in a prodigious mass of details of very inferior interest, the translator is enabled to speak from some degree of personal knowledge, having a copy in his possession, consisting of 144 thin volumes, printed in the year 1764, the 29th of the reign of the late Emperor Kien Lung.

be.

be as much more severe, as the laws in such cases provide. — Nevertheless, if the regular officers of government only hire the aforesaid persons occasionally to assist when necessary in collecting the duties, or in completing the registers of the people, their employment shall not be considered as a breach of this law.

Four clauses.

SECTION LI. — Transmission of Official Dispatches.

The official messengers who are employed in the several districts of the empire under the jurisdiction of the cities of the first, second, and third order*, for the transmission of dispatches relative to ordinary public business, or to the punishment of public transgressors, shall perform the services upon which they are respectively employed, within the periods which, with a due regard to the distance, and other circumstances, are in each case by law established. For one day's delay beyond the legal period, they shall be liable to a punishment of 10 blows, which shall be increased one degree, until it amounts to 40 blows, for every additional day's delay. — If the governing magistrates in any of the

* The Chinese empire is divided, in the first instance, into 18 provinces, which are governed either by a viceroy (Tsong-too), or a sub-viceroy (Foo-yuen), or by two such officers having a concurrent jurisdiction. Each province is subdivided into districts under the government of the magistrates of the several cities of the first order, and these governments are again divided into smaller jurisdictions, whose magistrates are governors of cities of the second or third in the empire.

According to one of the latest editions of the Chinese Imperial Court Kalendar, there are 11 officers bearing the title of viceroy, 15 that of sub-viceroy, 19 provincial treasurers, 18 provincial judges, and 17 provincial examiners for degrees; also 184 governors of cities of the first order, 212 governors of cities of the second, and 1305 of the third. These numbers are nearly the same with those stated in the authentic account of the British Embassy to China; but as the enumeration in the works of Du Halde and Grosier, differ from the above, and from each other, it was considered desirable to give these particulars from an authority that might be considered as decisive.

afore-

afore-mentioned districts and divisions of command, do not, when the administration of public affairs requires, send immediately the necessary orders and instructions to the officers subject to their authority, such neglect shall be punished with 100 blows.

The attention due to the repairing and inspecting of roads and bridges; to accidents and affrays; to the seizing of criminals; confiscation of property, and to any other such specific objects, being noticed and enforced elsewhere in this code, the neglect thereof is not to be punished as a breach of this general article.

Two clauses.

SECTION LII. — Partiality in the Examination of Candidates for Degrees *.

Whoever confers degrees of honour on persons who are not worthy, or who are under any disqualifications; and whoever, on the contrary, refuses at the proper time to confer such degrees upon those who are entitled to them by their merit, as well as duly qualified, shall be punished with 80 blows for a single instance of such offence, and one degree more severely, as far as 100 blows, for every

* These degrees have generally been considered as similar to those conferred upon students in European universities; but it is to be observed, that in China the examinations are not connected with any particular establishments or system of education, but conducted periodically by officers appointed by government, at each of the chief cities of the empire, and that they are, with few exceptions, open to all classes and descriptions whatsoever; the degrees also, instead of being merely literary, are, in fact, the sole regular channel of introduction to official employment, and consequently to rank and honours, in the empire.

With respect to the Tartars, these examinations are either wholly dispensed with, or very much relaxed in point of rigour, as well as conducted according to a different system.

X The Chinese are sometimes enabled, by the means of their wealth, to obviate a part of the difficulties attending their progress by an authorized commutation, but there is no reason to believe, that the legal enquiry into the qualifications of the candidates can in any instance be altogether evaded.—Those degrees which are partly obtained by purchase, although legal, are accounted less honourable. On this subject, see the Appendix, No. XII. containing a translation of an Imperial Edict, extracted from the Peking Gazette of the 23d of April. 1800.

two additional instances which may be proved upon investigation. If the individual so improperly graduated is aware of his being ineligible, he shall be punished as a participator in the offence, but otherwise shall be held innocent.

If the presiding examiner of the merits of the candidates designedly makes a false report in any instance, by elevating or depressing their respective claims, the punishment of such examiner shall be two degrees less than that of the officer who confers the degrees improperly*. If the report is erroneous, but not designedly false, the punishment shall be less by three degrees, but liable in all cases to be increased whenever there is a conviction of bribery and corruption.

Seven clauses.

SECTION LIII. — Relative to Officers of Government dismissed for Misconduct.

When any officer of government has been tried for an offence, condemned to lose his employment, and rendered incapable of service to the state, none of the members of any public office or tribunal shall (regardless of such conviction) become responsible for him, or take him again into employ.—Whoever employs such convicted person, in violation of this law, shall be punished with 100 blows; the same punishment shall likewise be inflicted on the party himself, and he shall continue, as before, incapacitated to enter the public service.

When, however, an individual is dismissed for inability, and not for corruption, or any other criminal practices, he may be employed whenever the officers into whose department he is to be received, having examined him, pledge themselves that he is duly qualified.

Nine clauses.

* It is evident from the gradations observed in punishing the misconduct of these officers, that the department of the latter is of greater importance than the words seem to imply, but the text does not otherwise indicate the nature of their respective functions.

SECTION LIV. — Officers of Government quitting their Stations without Leave.

All civil and military officers, and their official attendants, whether at court or in the provinces, are prohibited from leaving their respective stations, except it be on account of sickness, or upon the public service, and shall be punished with 40 blows for every breach of this law.—If they should absent themselves for the sake of avoiding the execution of any unpleasant or difficult part of their duty, such as the collection of taxes, or the seizure of criminals, they shall be punished with 100 blows, as fugitives, and at the same time dismissed from their employments, as well as rendered for ever incapable of the public service. They shall, moreover, be liable to any aggravation of the punishment which may arise from the nature of the duty, the performance of which they had avoided.

As, for instance: if a civil officer, appointed to superintend the supplying of provisions to an army, should desert while the troops are in the field, the offence would be aggravated by the injury which might result therefrom to the state, upon such a critical juncture.

If, in ordinary cases, any officer or attendant of government is not on guard by day, or on watch by night, when it is his duty to be so, he shall be punished with 20 blows for such offence; but the punishment shall be increased to 40 blows in every instance of similar neglect, on the part of those who have the custody of granaries, treasuries, or prisons, or of any other places of similar importance.

It is only necessary to carry this law into effect, when no injury nor loss has ensued from the neglect above-mentioned, as in regard to the offence under such aggravated circumstances, particular punishments are elsewhere provided.

Two clauses.

SECTION LV. — Officers of Government to proceed to their Destinations without Delay.

When a change has been determined to be made in the administration of any department of the public service, the duty of the officer newly appointed, if at the court, shall commence from the delivery over of the charge; if in the provinces, from the receipt of the official order from the supreme council.—If, after such period, the newly appointed officer should, without assigning a sufficient cause, unnecessarily delay one day in proceeding to his station, he shall incur a punishment of 10 blows; for every further delay of ten days, the punishment shall be increased one degree, until it amount to 80 blows; but in all such cases, the offender shall still retain his new appointment.

Upon the arrival of a successor, the officer in possession shall, within the time, and in the manner prescribed by law, make up and close his several accounts relative to the collection of the revenue, and the execution of the laws against transgressors, that the said accounts may be delivered over to the officer appointed to receive them: when the same is concluded, if the officer who had delivered up his charge remains on the spot, without assigning a sufficient reason for so doing, more than ten days, he shall be punished for such delay two degrees less than is provided in cases of officers not proceeding in due time to their new appointments.

If an officer of government is detained by winds or other obstacles, is plundered by thieves, falls sick, or loses a parent, so as in any way to be prevented from proceeding to his destination, he shall make a due and circumstantial report thereof to the proper magistrates, that it may be ascertained by them whether the delay did not take place without sufficient cause, or with some sinister view; in either of which cases such misconduct shall be punished as the laws prescribe. — If the magistrates receiving the report are guilty of any improper partiality or collusion, they shall be equally punishable.
of

Five clauses.

SECTION LVI. — Attendance of Officers of Government at Court.

When an officer of government belonging to any of the interior departments, whatever may be his rank, does not present himself at court within due time; or, if belonging to a provincial government, he does not present himself at head-quarters; or lastly, when an officer of government, in either case, after having obtained a leave of absence, does not return to his station as soon as his leave of absence is expired, he must give sufficient reason for such omission, without which he will be punishable with 10 blows for one day's delay; and one degree more severely for every further delay of three days, until the same amounts to 80 blows; but the transgression shall not occasion the dismissal or degradation of the party offending.

No clause.

SECTION LVII. — Irregular interference of Superiors with subordinate Magistrates.

When any public measure originates in a superior court or tribunal, it shall be put upon record, and a period fixed for its execution:—A mandate shall then be issued, or a special messenger dispatched, to the inferior tribunals for their information and guidance.

If the officers of such inferior tribunals should afterwards be convicted of any error or delay in the execution of their duty, they shall be punished according to the laws; but if the superior magistrate unnecessarily interferes with, or supercedes, the determinations of an inferior tribunal, by sending for any of the clerks or members thereof, or by sending to them any of his own officers, by which interference or supercession the due course of justice is impeded, the superior magistrate shall be punished with 40 blows, and the inferior magistrate who consents to, and concurs therein, or permits the clerks to receive such irregular instructions, shall be liable to the same punishment.

Nevertheless, in all serious criminal or intricate revenue cases, in which interference or consultation is requisite, it shall be lawful to summon the attendance of the members of the inferior tribunals; but they shall be dismissed immediately upon the termination of the inquiry.—If unnecessarily detained three days, the superior shall be punished with 20 blows, and one degree more severely, as far as 50 blows, for every additional three days detention*.

No clause.

SECTION LVIII. — Cabals and State Intrigues.

Whoever, with malicious design, provokes and excites by artful language any person, as yet innocent of a capital offence, to commit murder, shall for such offence suffer death, by being beheaded after the usual period of confinement.

If any great officer of state is convicted of a crime, which according to the laws is deserving of death, and any of the inferior officers of govern-

* How far the inferior tribunals of justice, and other departments of government, are connected with, and subject to, the authority of their respective superiors, will be best understood by a reference to particular instances; and partly with this view, a translation of the official reports of some remarkable legal proceedings have been introduced into the Appendix, each of which will be specifically referred to in its proper place.

As the investigation of all capital cases must pass through every step, from the tribunal of the lowest magistrate, to the throne of the Emperor; and as there is, generally speaking, a right of appeal through the same channel in all cases, whether civil or criminal, partiality and injustice could, according to such a system, scarcely ever escape detection and punishment, if the interference and collusion above adverted to, did not, whenever it takes place, render the appeal hopeless, and the repetition of the investigation nugatory.

ment,

ment, by artful representations, endeavour to conceal his guilt and screen him from punishment, in order to gain his good-will, they shall likewise suffer death, by being beheaded after the usual period of confinement.

If any of the officers about the court cabal and combine together, in order to impede and obstruct the measures of His Imperial Majesty's government, all the parties to such cabal, without distinguishing between principals and accessaries, shall be beheaded after the usual period of confinement; their wives and children shall become slaves, and their fortunes shall be confiscated*. — If the supreme court of judicature, or any other subordinate court of justice, should refrain from carrying the laws into effect, in compliance with the wishes of any superior magistrate, and should unjustly aggravate or mitigate the punishment of offenders agreeably to the dictates of such superior, the offence shall be considered to come within the penalties of this law.

On the other hand, if the officers of any inferior court should disregard such unlawful interposition, and, drawing up a faithful report thereof, as well as of any attempt that may have been made at subornation, lay the same personally before the Emperor, the punishment shall fall upon the superior magistrate only, and the complainant shall not only be pardoned for any previous compliance with unjust commands, of which he might have been guilty, but rewarded with the whole of the confiscated property of the offender.

If the complainant is an officer of government, he shall be raised in rank two degrees; if not an officer of government, he shall receive a suitable office or, if not desirous of office, a further reward, instead thereof, shall be given to him of 2000 leang or ounces of silver.

No clause.

* See the Laws relative to Treasonable Offences in general, in their proper place.

SECTION LIX. — Combination and Collusion between Provincial Officers and Officers of the Court.

Any combination and collusion between the officers of the several tribunals of justice throughout the empire, and the officers of the court in the immediate attendance on His Majesty, the object of which may be either, the betraying the secrets of the State, unwarrantable pretensions to offices of power and emolument, or joint addresses to the Sovereign for private and unlawful purposes, shall subject all the parties guilty of such an offence, to suffer death, by being beheaded after the usual period of confinement. — Their wives and children shall be perpetually banished to the distance of 2000 lee, and at the place of banishment, be allowed to form new establishments.

Nevertheless, when the connexion and intercourse between such parties shall have arisen merely from their relationship to each other, and without any view to the unwarrantable objects above stated, this law shall not be put in force.

No clause.

SECTION LX. — Addresses in favour of Great Officers of State.

If an officer belonging to any of the departments of government, or any private individual, should address the Emperor in praise of the virtues, abilities, or successful administration, of any of His Majesty's confidential Ministers of State, it is to be considered as an evidence of the existence of a treasonable combination subversive of government, and shall therefore be investigated with the utmost strictness and accuracy: the cause and origin of these interested praises of persons high in rank and office being traced, the offending party shall suffer death, by being beheaded, beheaded, after remaining in prison the usual period. — His wives and children shall become slaves, and his property shall be confiscated. X

If the confidential minister or great officer of the crown, to whom the address related, was privy to the design, he shall participate in the punishment of the offence; but otherwise, shall be excused*.

One clause.

* The severity of the law in this, and in the sections immediately preceding, is probably grounded upon some considerations which are not explained in the text; but it is obvious that the punishments are not directed so much at the acts themselves, as at the treasonable motives they are supposed to indicate.

END OF THE FIRST BOOK OF THE SECOND DIVISION.

B O O K II.

CONDUCT OF THE MAGISTRATES.

SECTION LXI. — Due Knowledge of the Laws.

THE laws and statutes of the empire have been framed with deliberation, are sanctioned with appropriate penalties against transgressors, and are published to the world* for perpetual observance.

All the officers and others in the employ of government ought to study diligently, and make themselves perfect in the knowledge of these laws, so as to be able to explain clearly their meaning and intent, and to superintend and ensure their execution.

At the close of every year, the officers and other persons employed by government, in every one of the exterior and interior departments, shall undergo examination on this subject before their respective superiors, and if they are found in any respect incompetent to explain the nature, or to comprehend the several objects, of the laws, they shall forfeit one month's salary when holding official, and receive 40 blows when holding any of the inferior, situations.

All those private individuals, whether husbandmen, or artificers, or whatever else may be their calling or profession, who are found capable of explaining the nature, and comprehending the objects, of the laws, shall receive pardon in all cases of offences resulting purely from accident, or imputable to them only from the guilt of others, provided it be the first offence, and not implicated with any act of treason or rebellion.

* Literally, "to the Heaven-under," an expression something analogous to our epithet of sublunary, and here applied with Asiatic amplification to the Chinese empire.

Whosoever

Whosoever, in the employ of government, fraudulently perverts or misconstrues, or presumptuously changes, abrogates or confounds the law upon any case, so as to produce disturbance and insurrection in the country, shall suffer death by being beheaded, after the usual period of imprisonment.

No clause.

SECTION LXII. — Non-execution of an Imperial Edict.

Whenever an Imperial Edict is issued on any subject, whoever wilfully omits the execution of any thing that is commanded therein, shall be punished with 100 blows. — In the case of the edict of the Imperial prince elect, the punishment shall be the same. — A failure in any such respect, from neglect or inadvertence, shall be punished three degrees less severely.

Moreover, any one who delays or postpones the execution of an Imperial edict for one day, shall be punished with 50 blows, and one degree more severely as far as 100 blows for each additional day of delay.

No clause.

SECTION LXIII. — Destroying or discarding Edicts and Seals of Office.

Whoever designedly discards or destroys an Imperial edict, or the official seal of any tribunal or department of state, shall suffer death, by being beheaded, after the usual period of confinement. — Whoever wilfully discards or destroys an edict issued by any individual officer, or by a tribunal of government, shall be punished with 100 blows, or as much more severely as the criminality of the motive may lawfully require; and if the edict destroyed or discarded concerned the affairs of war, or the supply of the army in the field with provisions, visions, the offence shall be punished with death, and the offender strangled, after the usual period of confinement.—If the superior officer of the offender is privy to the offence, and does not take cognizance of it, he shall be considered as equally guilty, and participate in the full extent of the punishment, excepting only a reduction of one degree in capital cases.—When he is not aware of the offence having been committed, he shall be altogether excused.—Destroying, in any of the foregoing instances unintentionally, but through inadvertence, is punishable three degrees less severely than the wilful offence; and if it can be clearly shewn, that the discarding or destroying was the unavoidable consequence of fire, water, or thieves, the punishment shall be remitted altogether.

Whoever loses an imperial edict, or a seal of office, shall be punished with 90 blows and two years and a half's banishment: if an edict of an officer of government, with 70 blows only; but in case such edict concerns the affairs of war, or supplies for the army, the punishment shall be increased to 90 blows and two years and a half's banishment.

Immediately upon ascertaining such a loss to have occurred, the payment of the salary of the offending party shall be suspended; but if he is able to recover the official document that was lost, within the space of thirty days, he shall be pardoned; if not able to do so within such period, the execution of his punishment shall not on any account be further delayed.

If an officer, having charge of government property, loses his books and registers, whereby error or confusion is introduced into the accounts of the revenue in store, he shall be liable to suffer 80 blows, but allowed a sufficient period to retrieve himself from such punishment by the recovery of the documents that were missing.

The clerks of all public offices, upon the expiration of their respective terms of service, shall deliver over to their successors, all the books of official accounts, with a distinct record in each case of the actual balance, and and of the state of the accounts in each department at the time when the transfer of the charge takes place, and any failure or neglect in these respects shall be punished with 80 blows.—The deputy or executive officers of the several tribunals or public boards, shall be liable to similar punishment, if they do not likewise ascertain and verify the state of each of the several accounts, whenever any such transfers are effected.

Five clauses.

SECTION LXIV. — Errors and Informalities in public Documents.

Whoever, in addressing the Emperor, irreverently, or inadvertently, makes use of His Imperial Majesty's appellative, or that of any of his Imperial predecessors, shall, for such offence, be punished with 80 blows:—if the same is introduced improperly into any public document, not addressed as aforesaid, the punishment shall be limited to 40 blows.—Whoever assumes for himself or others, any one of such sacred appellatives, thus employing it as the name of a private individual, shall be punished with 100 blows:—Nevertheless, it shall not be considered as a violation of such sacred names, if in any case the sound only is imitated*, or if only one of the characters of the name is employed †.— If any mistake or error is committed in the statements or suggestions contained in an address to His Majesty, the consequence whereof may be injurious to the public service; as, for instance, writing “inexcusable” instead of “excusable,” writing “10 stone weight” instead of “1000 stone weight ‡,” the offender shall be punished with 60 blows.

* The choice of sounds in the Chinese language is confined within such narrow limits in comparison to that of written words or characters, that any accidental agreement in the former respect, is not sufficient to produce an equivocal, and therefore not deemed in these instances an act of disrespect to the Sovereign or His Imperial Family.

† Personal appellatives generally consist of two words or characters, and family names of one only.

‡ The difference between the character expressing 10 and that expressing 1000 is not more than a single stroke of the pencil.

If a similar error occurs in a report to any of the supreme courts, the punishment shall amount to 40 blows; and if in any official documents of an inferior description, to 20 blows.—Nevertheless, such errors as are of a trifling nature, and do not so materially alter the sense of the record, as to impede the public service, shall be excused, and therefore excepted from the operation of this law.

No clause.

SECTION LXV. — Neglecting to make such Reports to superior Officers as are by Law required.

When offences are committed by persons entitled to privilege by law, if the officer of government, to whose department it belongs to take cognizance thereof, does not report such offences to the Emperor, or if he does not specify the privilege to which the offending party is entitled, it shall be held to be a capital offence, but punished only with five years banishment, as ordered in other capital offences of a miscellaneous nature*.—When offences are committed by civil or military officers, the sentence upon whom requires the Emperor's ratification before it can be legally executed, any omission to lay the same before the Emperor shall be punished with 100 blows, or as much more severely as the circumstances of the case may authorize by other laws specifically applicable thereto.—The neglect to report to the Emperor any circumstance of military affairs, concerning the revenue, legislation, selection of magistrates, punishments, public calamities, or any extraordinary circumstances which by law it is requisite to report to His Majesty, shall be punished with 80 blows.—Similar neglect to report to a superior magistrate, what by law ought to be reported, shall be punished with 40 blows.

* The cause of certain offences, which are punished in each case with five years banishment, being denominated capital offences of a miscellaneous nature, is not explained in the text, but it is probable that this form of expression is retained for no other purpose, than that of preserving a nominal uniformity, with a pre-established system in the adjustment of punishments, which in these instances is practically abandoned.

Whoever, after having made a due report according to the laws, either to his immediate superior in office, or to the Emperor, proceeds notwithstanding to execute the laws upon the case, without waiting for the arrival of further instructions, shall be liable to the same punishment, (capital cases excepted) that the law would have awarded had no report whatever been made.

When any tribunal or department of government addresses the Emperor upon affairs of state, the members thereof shall report collectively their judgment on the case, agreeably to the laws applicable thereto, and, the statement of the same being clearly drawn up, all those who were parties to the deliberation thereon, shall affix their names.

If, in such a report, the circumstances of any important affair of state are aggravated, palliated, or otherwise misrepresented, so as to mislead His Majesty, and fraudulently to obtain his royal orders conformably to such false statement, (although the deception should not be discovered until an indefinite time after the orders were carried into effect), the authors thereof, whenever the truth is brought to light, shall be beheaded. — Upon any visitation from the superior magistrate, the officers of the inferior tribunal shall, previous to any joint decision upon official business, state the circumstances fully and in due order, together with the arguments for or against any proposed arrangement, which, being duly registered and authenticated by the signature of the parties, shall remain as an evidence of their proceedings, for reference upon any future investigation.

If the inferior magistrate brings forward any improper proposal, and by a false or inadequate explanation thereof, obtains, or pretends to have obtained, the consent of his superior, such conduct shall be punished according to the law against a false interpretation of the orders orders of government, and as much more severely as the circumstances of the case may authorize.

Two clauses.

SECTION LXVI. — Officers on detached Service not reporting their Proceedings.

Whoever, when detached upon any particular service by an Imperial mandate, does not render an account of such of his proceedings, upon the result of which other business may be depending, shall be punished with 100 blows.

When detached on service by a mandate of any tribunal or department of government, and failing to render an account of the proceedings undertaken in consequence, the punishment shall likewise be 100 blows, provided military or other affairs of much importance are depending; if only ordinary affairs are depending, the punishment shall be limited to 70 blows.

If any person, acting under such especial authority, exceeds the limits of his commission, and encroaches upon the province of others, he shall be punished with 50 blows. — If the individual employed under an Imperial mandate, does not deliver up his powers or credentials within three days after his return, he shall be punished with 60 blows, and one degree more severely, as far as 100 blows, for every additional delay of two days, until such token of his resignation.

In like manner, when acting under any government commission specially issued by a public office, and not restoring or resigning the same within the above period after his return, such individual shall be punished with 40 blows, and one degree more severely as far as 80 blows, for each additional three days delay. — In all cases, if the offence punishable by this law, is connected with any aggravating circumstances, cumstances, the punishment shall be increased to any extent that the laws applicable thereto may warrant.

No clause.

SECTION LXVII. — Delay in expediting the Edicts of Government.

When an edict or authentic act of any public office or tribunal is neglected to be expedited, the clerk of such office or tribunal shall be punished, for one day's delay, with 10 blows; and one degree more severely, as far as 40 blows, for each three days further delay. — The deputies of the tribunal, being the immediate superintendants of the clerks, shall be liable to punishment only less by one degree; but the superior members thereof shall not be held responsible.

When any public board or tribunal receives a report upon official business from a subordinate department, the officers of the former shall proceed forthwith to examine into, and deliberate upon the proposals therein submitted to their decision, and having determined on the expediency of confirming, or rejecting the same, they shall issue their orders accordingly. — If, on the contrary, they reply equivocally and indistinctly, instead of giving any decision, so that the questions are repeatedly proposed and remanded, and the public service thereby materially injured and delayed, the officers of the superior tribunal shall be punished with 80 blows, for every such attempt to avoid the responsibility which is attached to the performance of their public duty.

In like manner, if the officers of an inferior tribunal receive orders relative to a measure which is fit and practicable, and yet, instead of carrying it into effect, they, under pretence of doubts on the subject, refer it again to the consideration of their superiors, their punishment shall be the same as that provided in the case last stated.

Eight clauses.

SEC-

SECTION LXVIII. — Examination of official Records.

The records of all such public offices as have a specific command, and a public seal, shall be regularly examined; and if the adjustment of one or two articles is found in any case to have been unnecessarily retarded, the clerk of the office shall be punishable with 10 blows, if from three to five articles; with 20 blows, and one degree more severely, as far as 40 blows, for each five additional articles unadjusted.

The deputies of the tribunals of cities of the three several orders, and the superintending officers over granaries, treasuries, river police, and others, shall be punishable in such cases respectively less by one degree.

When any part of the records is found to be erroneous, or is kept back from examination; if in respect to one article only, the clerk of the office shall be punished with 20 blows; if in respect to two or three articles, with 30 blows; and one degree more severely, as far as 50 blows, for every three erroneous or suppressed articles, in addition to the number last mentioned.

The deputies of the tribunals of cities of the three several orders, and the superintending officers of granaries, treasuries, river-police, and others; shall be punishable, in each case, less by one degree. — Moreover, the presiding officers or governors of such cities, whenever it is found that from one to five articles are erroneous, or kept back from examination, shall forfeit one month's salary, and another month's salary, as far as three months, for each additional five articles so kept back or erroneous. — If such incorrectness or suppression of the articles of the records is practised from criminal motives, such as, suppression of the receipts of revenue, aggravation or palliation of offences, and the like, the punishment of such misconduct shall be proportionably increased according as the laws, applicable to such cases, direct.

Four clauses.

SECTION LXIX.—Re-examination of outstanding Articles of official Records.

Those officers in whose province it lies to re-examine the recorded transactions of the several tribunals and departments of government, shall inspect all such of the proceedings in the judicial and revenue departments as had been reported to have been found at the original examination unnecessarily in arrear or erroneous. — Whatever, in the revenue department, is found, at the expiration of an interval of a quarter of a year, still erroneous or defective, shall be charged against the magistrates of the several offices, and subject them to punishment according to the proportion which the erroneous and defective matter bears to the remainder of the proceedings—if one-tenth only, to 50 blows, and one degree more severely, as far as 100 blows, for every further tenth part erroneous or defective.

If, in the judicial department, they find at the end of the quarter, any case unadjusted or not corrected, which might and ought to have been adjusted or corrected, the responsible magistrate shall be punished with 40 blows, and the punishment shall be increased one degree for each additional month's delay, as far as 80 blows at the utmost, unless it happens to be a case of bribery, liable to severer punishment, in which event the latter shall supersede the former.

When any article is suppressed or kept back, for the purpose of avoiding the result of the re-examination, such suppression, if of one article only, shall be punished with 40 blows, and one degree more severely for each additional article so suppressed, as far as 80 blows at the utmost, except it be a case affecting the revenue, when the suppression, in the case of one article only, shall be punished with 80 blows, and one degree more severely for each additional article suppressed, as far as 100 blows, or as much further as may be lawfully inflicted in consequence of a corrupt or criminal design being substantiated against the offender. — If any officer of government, after the errors or omissions of which he had been guilty are discovered, should fraudulently attempt to alter or interpolate the official records, the offence shall be punished as any ordinary falsification of an official dispatch.

All those colleagues who assist in the commission of this offence, and their superiors who, having information of it, take no cognisance thereof, shall participate in the punishment. If unacquainted with the circumstances, or unconnected by office with the offending parties, they shall not be liable to punishment.

No clause.

SECTION LXX. — Transfer or Exchange of official Duties prohibited.

When it is the duty of an officer of government to investigate or report upon any affair, whether in its progress from inferiors to superiors, or from superiors to inferiors*, if he employs any of his colleagues either to investigate the matter, or to address the Report of it, instead of doing both himself, he shall be punished with 80 blows; and if it be a case of previous neglect or omission, which it is thus attempted to repair by deputy, the punishment shall be increased one degree.—If, moreover, in any such case, a deviation from justice either by aggravation or extenuation should have been committed, the punishment shall be increased to any extent that the law, adapted to such circumstances, may authorize.

Three clauses.

SECTION LXXI. — Alteration of the Contents of an official Dispatch.

Whoever presumes to alter an official dispatch, by adding to, or taking from the sense and words thereof, shall be punished

* The regular course of proceedings in the several tribunals or courts of justice, is described in its proper place.

with

with 60 blows.— If such alteration is effected with the view to accomplish some unlawful purpose, not capitally punishable, the punishment incurred thereby shall, in consequence of such previous offence, be increased two degrees, but so as in no case to exceed 100 blows, and perpetual banishment to the distance of 3000 lee.— In any of the preceding cases, if the unlawful object had not been attained, the punishment shall be less by one degree.

If the unlawful object be in itself a capital offence, the previous minor offence shall not cause any aggravation of the sentence.— If the author of any official dispatch alters it himself, with a view to any unlawful purpose, he shall only be subject to the punishment to which such unlawful purpose renders him liable; except when such alteration is made to screen himself from the punishment of error or delay, for which offence he shall in such case be liable to receive 40 blows at the least.

If, in the course of transmitting, and re-issuing government orders upon judicial, revenue, military, or other important affairs, they are erroneously transcribed, or the emendations made in the originals omitted, the clerk of the office or tribunal guilty thereof shall be punished with 30 blows, and the deputy of the tribunal shall be punished one degree less for his neglect of revision.

If the alteration affects any orders for the employment of troops, or concerns the amount of supplies to be forwarded to the army, or to the frontier stations, the clerk and deputy who are responsible for the same, shall respectively receive 80 blows for such neglect; but if it is a case of wilful misconduct, and the alteration is made for any unlawful purpose, the punishment shall be rated according to the scale already exhibited in the case of altering an official dispatch.— In general also, the non-execution of the unlawful purpose shall be considered so far to extenuate the offence, as to reduce the punishment one degree.— If, however, such deviation, whether wilful or not, should be the cause of the failure of any military operations tions, the person principally responsible shall be beheaded, after the usual period of confinement. — The deputy, being considered as an accessory, shall, in such case, receive 100 blows, and be banished perpetually to the distance of 3000 lee. — When, however, any official dispatch, or other document, is erroneously copied by mere accident, and does not concern the administration of military affairs, or of the judicial or revenue departments, but regards only the ordinary routine of business, the responsible parties shall not be held liable to punishment.

No clause.

SECTION LXXII. — Use of the official or public Seal.

In every department and tribunal of government, whether at court or in the provinces, the seal of office shall remain in the custody of the presiding magistrate or officer, and one of the magistrates or officers who are assessors, having stamped or affixed the impression of the seal upon the records of their joint official proceedings, the members shall then individually subjoin their signatures. — When all the assessors are absent from necessity, or engaged on other public service, the deputy may be employed to authenticate the documents, by affixing the seal of office. — Otherwise a punishment of 100 blows shall follow any deviation from this law.

No clause.

SECTION LXXIII. — Omitting to use, or imperfectly using, the official Seal.

When a public document is issued under the official authority of any of the departments of government, with only a confused and imperfect impression of the public seal, those who are responsible for the sealing

sealing thereof, shall be punished with 60 blows; and if they should, in any similar case, altogether omit to employ the public seal, the punishment shall amount to 80 blows. — If such unauthenticated or imperfectly authenticated document should in any manner concern the operations, or the supply with stores and provisions, of the troops in the field, the responsible parties shall be punished with 100 blows; lastly, if in consequence of such neglect, those to whom the public document is addressed, doubt its authenticity, and hesitate to comply therewith, so as to occasion the failure of any military operation then depending, the principal offender (being the clerk of the office where the neglect originated), shall suffer death by being beheaded at the usual period; and the other officers implicated therein shall suffer 100 blows, and be banished perpetually to the distance of 3000 lee.

Employing the seal of office in an inverted position shall be considered equivalent to the offence of impressing it imperfectly, and shall be punished accordingly.

Three clauses.

SECTION LXXIV. — Employing the Sanction of the Seals of military Offices upon civil Affairs.

All generals, commanders of troops, colonels of regiments, and other military officers, have their respective seals; but, if instead of reserving the power and authority confided in them by those seals, to the authenticating of military orders, and the direction of the movements and distribution of the cavalry and infantry under their authority, they presume to give official answers to petitions, to grant passes for goods, by which the revenue may be injured, or in any manner pretend to give instructions on affairs exclusively under the civil jurisdiction, the clerks and deputies in the departments of such officers shall shall receive 100 blows in each case, and be for ever excluded from the public service.

The misconduct of the presiding officers shall be reported to the Emperor, and punished agreeably to His Majesty's decision.

One clause.

END OF THE SECOND DIVISION.

THIRD DIVISION.

Fiscal Laws.

B O O K I.

ENROLMENT OF THE PEOPLE.

SECTION LXXV. — Families and Individuals to be duly enrolled.

WHEN a family has omitted to make any entry whatever in the public register, the head or master thereof, if possessing any lands chargeable with contributions to the revenue, shall be punished with 100 blows; but if he possess no such property, with 80 blows only; and the family shall in the former case be registered as accountable for future public service, according to the amount of its taxable property, and in the latter, according to the number of male individuals of full age of which it consists.

When any head or master of a family, has among his household strangers who constitute, in fact, a distinct family, but omits to make a corresponding entry in the public register, or registers them as members of his own family, he shall be punished with 100 blows, if any such stranger possesses taxable property, and with 80 blows if he should not possess any; and in all cases, the register shall be duly corrected, by the insertion of a description of such strangers as a distinct family.

If the person harboured without making any corresponding entry, or represented falsely as a member of the family, is not a stranger as in the last case, but a relation, possessing a separate establishment, the punishment of the head or master of the family so offending, offending, shall be less than as aforesaid by two degrees; the person harboured and concealed shall be liable to the same punishment, and be registered separately in the legal manner, as well as held accountable to the public service conformably thereto.

Nevertheless, such uncles, younger brothers, nephews, and sons-in-law, who had never formed separate establishments, shall be exempted from the obligation of a separate entry, prescribed by this law.

If any person guilty of omitting to register his family, is in the service of government, and registered as such, the omission shall be punished only according to the number of individuals of full age omitted, as the record of any one person is equivalent to the record of the family.

If any head or master of a family omits to enter in the public register any of the males belonging thereto, who have attained the full age of sixteen, or if he falsely represents any individuals thereof to be under age, aged, infirm, or decrepid, so as to evade their liability to the public service, he shall suffer the punishment of 60 blows, when the number of persons does not exceed three, and be punished one degree more severely for every addition of three persons to the number so omitted or falsely represented, as far as 100 blows at the utmost*.

Moreover, any head of a family omitting to make entry of from three to five males under the aforesaid age, shall be punished with 40 blows, and the punishment shall be increased one degree as far as 70 blows, for every additional five persons under age, who may have been so omitted.

In all cases the individuals found to have been omitted in the register, shall be duly entered, and if of full age, made accountable to the public service.

* In the Chinese commentary annexed to the text in the original, it is stated that the first entry shall be made of children when they attain the age of four years, but the period of liability to public service appears to be only between the ages of sixteen and sixty. Besides the ordinary registers of the people, one of a more comprehensive nature is occasionally effected, comprising persons of both sexes, and of all ages.

Neglecting to enter, or making a false entry of, a stranger, shall be punished in the same manner and proportions; and the stranger availing himself thereof shall be liable to equal punishment, as well as compelled to make entry and perform service, as a member of the family to which he really belongs*.

The head or responsible inhabitant of the division, through whose neglect and inadvertency, one or more families, as far as five, have evaded the insertion of their names in the public register, shall be punished with 50 blows; and one degree more severely, as far as 100 blows, for every additional five families so omitted to be inserted.

In like manner, when the names of any individuals are omitted to be inserted in the registers, the aforesaid responsible inhabitant shall be punished with 30 blows, when the number omitted does not exceed 10; and one degree more severely for every additional 10 omitted, as far as 50 blows at the utmost.

When the omission amounts to 10 families, the governor, deputy and clerk of the district, shall be liable to the punishment of 40 blows, for their negligence in allowing the same; and their punishment shall be greater by one degree as far as 80 blows for every additional 10 families so allowed to be omitted.

When the omission amounts to 10 individuals, the said magistrates and clerks shall be liable to 20 blows for their negligence in allowing the same; and their punishment shall be greater by one degree for every additional 30 individuals omitted, as far as 40 blows at the utmost.

When any of the preceding parties wilfully connive at such omission, they shall be punished as severely as the principal offenders; and if they are found guilty of receiving money, as the price of their connivance, they shall suffer any contingent aggravation of punishment, to which they may become liable from the amount thereof, according to the law against receiving a bribe for an unlawful purpose.

* In this case, the family of the stranger is supposed to have been duly registered elsewhere, though the individual stranger, being absent from his family, had been omitted.

If, however, the officiating magistrates and clerks shall have three times ordered a revival of the census of the people, and issued competent instructions and authority for such investigation to the head inhabitants of districts, the said head inhabitants shall alone be responsible for any subsequent omission which may afterwards be discovered.

All cases of wilful connivance are, at the same time, manifestly to be excepted.

Two clauses.

SECTION LXXVI. — Families and Individuals to be registered according to their Professions.

All persons whatsoever shall be registered according to their accustomed professions or vocations, whether civil or military, whether post-men*, artisans, physicians, astrologers, labourers, musicians, or of any other denomination whatever; wherever a military employment is represented as a civil one, or an artisan endeavours to pass himself as a mere labourer, or when any other device is employed to lessen the individual's liability to the public service, such individual shall be punished with 80 blows, and the magistrate who negligently consents to such omission, irregularity, or confusion in the entries on the public register, shall be equally punishable.

Whoever falsely represents himself to belong to any military establishment in garrison, or in the field, and thereby evades all public service whatever, shall receive 100 blows, and be sent into the ulterior and perpetual military banishment.

Twenty-two clauses.

* See the last Book of the Division of Military Laws, entitled, "Expresses and Public Posts."

SECTION LXXVII.—Privately founding religious Houses, and privately entering into the Order of Priesthood.*

No religious houses of the sects of Foe and Tao-se, except those which have been heretofore lawfully constituted and established, shall be privately maintained, appropriated, or endowed, whether upon a new, or in addition to an old foundation, or in any other manner whatsoever.

Whoever offends against this law shall receive 100 blows; if a priest, he shall be divested of his sacred character, and perpetually banished beyond the frontier:—if a priestess, she shall become a slave to government; and in general all the real and personal property belonging to any such illegal foundation shall be confiscated.

Whoever submits to the tonsure †; and joins a religious community as a priest or priestess, without having previously obtained a government licence, shall be punished with 80 blows, and be replaced in the class of ordinary citizens. When the offence is committed through the instigation of the head of the family, such head of the family shall bear the punishment thereof. The members and governors of religious communities, who illegally admit such persons, shall also suffer the punishment decreed by this law ‡.

Six clauses.

* See Section XLII. relative to the religious orders among the Chinese.

† The priests of the sect of Foe closely shave every part of the head; those of the sect of Tao-se wear their hair, but in a different manner from the natives in general.

‡ It is provided by the third clause to this section, that persons desirous of contributing to the foundation of a new temple, or other religious building, shall be allowed to apply for permission to the viceroy of the province, in order that their desires may be submitted to the consideration of His Imperial Majesty.

SECTION LXXVIII. — Rule of Succession and Inheritance.

Whoever appoints his heir and representative unlawfully, shall be punished with 80 blows *. — When the first wife has completed her fiftieth year, and has no children living, it is allowed to appoint the eldest son by the other wives to the inheritance; but if any other than the eldest of such sons is so appointed, it shall be deemed a breach of this law.

If a person, not having sons himself, educates and adopts the son of a kinsman, having other sons, but afterwards dismisses such adopted son, such person shall be punished with 100 blows, and the son shall be sent back to, and supported, as before, by the adopting parents.

Nevertheless, if the adopting parents shall have subsequently had other sons, and the natural parents, having no other, are desirous of receiving their son back again, they shall be at liberty so to do.

Whoever asks for, and receives into his house as his adopted son, a person of a different family name, is guilty of confounding family distinctions, and shall therefore be punished with 60 blows; the son so adopted shall, in such cases, always be returned to his family. — In like manner, whoever gives away his son to be adopted into a family of a different name, shall suffer the punishment decreed by this law, and receive such son back again. Nevertheless, it shall be lawful to adopt a foundling under three years of age, and to give the child the name of the family into which it is adopted; but such adopted child shall not be entitled to the inheritance upon failure of the children by blood.

If the relative appointed to the inheritance, on failure of children, is not the eldest in succession, it shall be deemed a breach of this law;

* See the rule of succession to Hereditary Dignities in the second division to the code, and also the abstract of the clauses annexed to this law, in the Appendix, No. XII.

the relative so appointed shall be sent back to his place in his own family, and the lawful heir appointed in his stead.

Whoever brings up in his family, as a slave, the male or female child of a freeman, shall be punished with 100 blows, and the child shall regain its freedom.

Eight clauses.

SECTION LXXIX. — Regulations concerning stray Children.

Whoever receives and detains the strayed or lost child of a free person, and, instead of presenting to the magistrate, sells such child as a slave, shall be punished with 100 blows, and three years banishment. Whoever sells such child for marriage or adoption into any family, shall be punished with 90 blows and banishment for two years and a half. — Whoever so disposes of a strayed or lost slave, shall suffer the punishment provided by this law, reduced one degree.

The person unlawfully sold shall not in any of the above cases be subjected to any punishment in consequence, but returned to his family or right owner.

If any one receives and detains a fugitive child, and, instead of presenting it to the magistrates, sells such child for a slave, he shall be punished with 90 blows, and banishment for two years and a half. — Whoever sells any such fugitive child for marriage or adoption, shall suffer the punishment of 80 blows and two years banishment; in each of these cases, the punishment shall be less by one degree, when the fugitive is found to be a slave.

All fugitives so disposed of shall suffer punishment one degree less than that inflicted on the seller, except when the previous offence of the fugitive shall have been the greatest, in which case the severer of the two punishments to which he is liable, shall be inflicted.

Whoever,

Whoever, instead of selling, retains for his own use as a slave, wife, or child, any such lost, strayed, or fugitive child, or slave, shall be equally liable to be punished as above mentioned; but if only guilty of retaining the same for a short time, the punishment shall not exceed 80 blows.

When the purchaser, or the negotiator of the purchase, is aware of the unlawfulness of the transaction, he shall suffer punishment one degree less than that inflicted on the seller, and the amount of the pecuniary consideration shall be forfeited to government; but when he or they are found to have been unacquainted therewith, they shall not be liable to punishment, and the money shall be restored to the party from whom it had been received.

Whoever falsely claims a free person as his slave shall be punished with 100 blows and three years banishment; if falsely claiming such person as his wife or child, with 90 blows and banishment for two years and a half; if falsely claiming the slave of another person, with 100 blows only.

One clause.

SECTION LXXX. — Impartiality in the Levy of Taxes and personal Services.

In all districts, where the taxes in money and in kind, and the extraordinary and miscellaneous personal services to be required from the people, are estimated and apportioned, due regard shall be had in each case to the extent of the family in point of numbers and to its ability to contribute, according to which the members thereof shall be rated in the superior, middle, or inferior class, of inhabitants.

If the poorer inhabitants are compelled to perform the services from which those who are rich are excused, or any other such unjust partiality tiality is discoverable in the conduct of the officers of government, it shall be lawful for the injured poor to appeal and complain thereof to the tribunal of the immediate superiors of such officers, whence they may repeat the appeal to the several superior tribunals in succession. — The officer and his official agents; who shall be convicted of any such breach of this law, shall, each of them, be punished with 100 blows, and the unjust or partial arrangement shall be annulled. The officers of any tribunal where such an appeal shall have been refused a hearing, shall be punished with 80 blows; and if they shall appear to have been bribed to make such refusal, they shall be punished as many degrees beyond 80 blows, as the law against bribery to commit an unlawful act, may warrant or require.

Five clauses.

SECTION LXXXI. — Impartiality in the Allotment of personal Services.

All persons who, being engaged in providing personal services of labourers and artificers for government agreeably to the laws, do not duly provide, and impartially allot the same, shall be punished with 20 blows when there is a deviation in respect to one individual; and one degree more severely for every additional five individuals whom it may concern, as far as 60 blows at the utmost.

If such persons as are engaged to perform the required services delay, or fail in the execution of their engagements; or if the required services having been performed, they are still detained by the magistrate beyond the lawful period, the offending party shall be punished with 10 blows for one day, and one degree more severely for every additional three days delay, as far as 50 blows at the utmost.

No clause.

SECTION LXXXII. — Evasion of personal Service.

All citizens who, not being obliged to labour for their own support, place their unemployed sons, grandsons, brothers, or nephews, in the suite of an officer of government, in order to evade the performances of the personal services due by them to the state, shall (being masters of families) be punished with 100 blows; the officer of government conniving at such evasion, shall be liable to the same punishment, or, in the event of his having received a bribe, to such greater punishment as he might be liable to, for taking a bribe to such an amount, for an unlawful purpose. — The person so placed in the suite of an officer of government, shall not suffer corporal punishment, but be sent into the less remote military banishment.

When any of the superior and distinguished magistrates are guilty of such connivance, they shall be tried according to this law, but the sentence shall not be considered final until it has been submitted to, and approved by, the Emperor.

No clause.

SECTION LXXXIII. — Supernumerary Persons exercising district Authority prohibited.

In all districts of the empire, 100 families shall form a division, and shall consult together, in order to provide a head and ten assessors, who are to attend successively, in order to assist in the collection of the taxes, and duly to ascertain the performance of all other public duties and services.

If there are any other persons who, falsely assuming authority under the characters of deputies, assistants, and the like, create disturbances and harass the people, they shall be punished with 100 blows and banished.

The

The elders, who are to be appointed to these offices, shall be chosen among the most respectable persons of maturer age who belong to the district, and no person shall be eligible to, or accept, the said offices, who has ever held any civil or military employments, or who has ever been convicted of any crime. — Whoever accepts the same, in defiance of this law, shall be punished with 60 blows, and dismissed; the officer of government, who sanctions such undue appointment, shall be punished with 40 blows, at the least, and eventually suffer such further punishment as he may be liable to, in consequence of being guilty of receiving a bribe for an unlawful purpose.

One clause.

SECTION LXXXIV. — Evasion of personal Service by Concealment or Desertion.

All persons and families, who shall remove to a neighbouring district or city, in order to conceal themselves, and avoid rendering any personal service, shall be punished with 100 blows, sent back to, and compelled to serve at, the place of their original settlement.

The head of the district, and the superintending magistrates and clerks, if guilty of conniving at the departure of such persons; and all those in the neighbouring district who may have harboured and concealed them, shall be held to be participators in the offence, and punished accordingly.

Moreover, if the head man of the neighbouring district, knowing of the removal thereto of such persons, does not inform against and detain them; if the magistrate of the district to which they belong, does not issue letters of advice to the other magistrates, for the purpose of procuring their return; and lastly, if, after the issue of such letters, the magistrate of the district to which such persons have removed, declines to send them back, and protects them in defiance of the law, each of those officers shall be punished with 60 blows.

Any labourer, artificer, or other individual, who, during the period of his engagement to render personal service to the state, shall absent himself for one day, shall be punished with 10 blows, and one degree more severely for every additional five days absence, as far as 50 blows at the utmost."

The superintending magistrate and his clerks, when they connive thereat, shall be considered as participators in the offence, and be also liable to any contingent aggravation of punishment which may arise from the law against bribery for an unlawful purpose.

If the offence shall not appear to have been committed through the connivance of the magistrate and clerks, they shall still be liable to suffer the punishment of 20 blows, if five men escape; and to be punished one degree more severely, as far as 40 blows at the utmost, for every additional five men so offending: in the case of any number less than five, they shall be excused.

Three clauses.

SECTION LXXXV. — Selection of the Guards and Attendants of Prisons.

The guards and attendants of prisons shall be selected from among the most trust-worthy and experienced persons in the employ of government; and any person who, after having been so selected, shall not attend, but name a substitute to perform his duty, shall be punished with 40 blows for such offence.

No clause.

SECTION LXXXVI. — Personal Services of Labourers and Artificers required beyond the legal Extent, or for private Purposes.

All officers of government holding magisterial situations, or superintending public works, who shall compel persons under their jurisdiction to serve as labourers or artificers for any private purpose, beyond the distance of 100 lee from their houses, or who shall employ such persons in their private concerns for a considerable time at their own houses, shall be punishable in the following manner: In the case of ordinary magistrates so offending, they shall be punished with 40 blows, when one individual is unlawfully employed; and one degree more severely, as far as 80 blows, for every additional five individuals concerned; in the case of superintendants of public works, the punishment shall in every instance be more severe by two degrees. Each individual employed as above, shall receive a compensation of 8 fen 5 lee 5 hao per day*. Temporary services, however, required on the occasion of mourning, or of a festival, or under any other such accidental circumstances, shall not be deemed an infringement of this law.

In general, not more than 50 persons shall be employed on any kind of service at one time, or any individual detained thereon beyond a period of three days; and whenever these limits are transgressed, it shall be always considered and punished as a case of private service.

No clause.

* ,0855 decimal parts of a leang, or ounce of silver, and equivalent to nearly seven pence sterling.

SECTION LXXXVII. — Individuals deserting, or prematurely separating from, their Families.

Sons or grandsons who form to themselves a separate establishment from their parents and grand-parents, and also make a division of the family property, shall, provided such parents and grand-parents personally prosecute, be punished, on conviction, with 100 blows.

Also, the sons of the same parents, who shall form to themselves separate establishments, and divide their respective proportions of the inheritance, previous to the expiration of the lawful period of mourning, shall be punished with 80 blows, provided they are convicted upon an information laid by an elder relation in the first degree, and provided that they had not been expressly directed to do so in the last will of their parent deceased.

One clause.

SECTION LXXXVIII. — Younger and inferior Branches of a Family, disposing of the Property without Leave.

Any younger and inferior member of a family, living with the others under the same roof, who applies to his own use, or otherwise disposes of, the joint family-property without permission, shall be punished with 20 blows, if the value amounts to 10 ounces of silver, and one degree more severely as far as 100 blows, for every additional 10 ounces value.

An unjust or partial division of the patrimony between the elder and younger branches of a family, upon their separation, shall likewise be punished agreeably to the tenor of this law *.

Two clauses.

* On the subject of this and the preceding section, see the Appendix, No. XIII.

SECTION LXXXIX. — Care of the aged and infirm.

All poor destitute widowers and widows, the fatherless and childless, the helpless and the infirm, shall receive sufficient maintenance and protection from the magistrates of their native city or district, whenever they have neither relations nor connexions upon whom they can depend for support. — Any magistrate refusing such maintenance and protection, shall be punished with 60 blows.

Also, when any such persons are maintained and protected by government, the superintending magistrate and his subordinates, if failing to afford them the legal allowance of food and raiment, shall be punished in proportion to the amount of the deficiency, according to the law against an embezzlement of government stores*.

Six clauses.

* Agreeably to the tenor of this law, there are at Peking, and in other parts of China, certain establishments for the support and education of foundlings, and for the maintenance of the aged and destitute; but the sacred regard which is habitually paid by the Chinese to the claims of kindred, operates more effectually and extensively in the relief of the poor, (except in the seasons of scarcity and distress from accidental causes), than almost any legal provision could be expected to do in so vast and populous an empire.

B O O K II.

LANDS AND TENEMENTS.

SECTION XC. — Fraudulent Evasion of the Land-Tax.

WHOEVER fraudulently evades the payment of the land-tax, by suppressing or omitting the register of his land in the public books, shall be punishable in proportion to the amount of the chargeable land omitted, in the following manner:—When the unregistered land amounts to one *meu, and does not exceed five meu, with 40 blows; and for every additional number of five meu so suppressed, the punishment shall be increased one degree, until it arrives at the limit of 100 blows. The unregistered lands shall be forfeited to the state, and the arrears of the land-tax (computed according to the period during which it had been unpaid, the extent of the land, and the rate at which it would have been lawfully chargeable), shall be at the same time discharged in full.

When the land is entered in the register, but falsely represented, as unproductive when productive, lightly chargeable when heavily chargeable; or if the land is nominally made over in trust to another person, in order to exempt the real proprietor from personal service,

* A considerable difficulty has been experienced in estimating the exact extent of the division of land, called by the Chinese meu, owing to the various modes of admeasurement practiced in China at different periods, and by different classes of people; but from a comparison of several accounts given in original Chinese works, it appears certain that the legal measure at present consists of 240 square Poo or paces; that each poo is equal to six che, and that a che exceeds the English foot by rather more than half an inch.—According to this computation the meu, or Chinese acre, may be roughly estimated at a 1000 square yards of our measure.

the punishment, whether corporal or arising out of the payment of the arrears of the tax, shall be inflicted in the manner and according to the scale above stated; but instead of a forfeiture of the lands, the register of them shall simply be corrected, and the assessment and personal service of the real proprietor be established agreeably thereto.

When the land is thus illegally made over in trust, the person who undertakes the trust shall suffer equal punishment with the person who grants it.

If the head inhabitant of the district is privy to any breach of the law, but does not take cognizance of it, he shall be equally punishable with the original transgressors.

When any families or individuals return to the district and calling to which they originally belonged, and there happens to be a deficiency of resident population, in proportion to the extent and productiveness of the ancient allotments of lands therein, they shall be allowed to contribute to the cultivation thereof, in proportion to their capacity; and upon a due representation being laid before the magistrates, an allotment of unoccupied lands shall be made to them; and according to the entry thereof in the public registers, they shall thenceforwards be liable to the land-tax, and to personal service.

If any such individuals claim in their representations an excessive share of the unoccupied lands, so that they are afterwards unable to cultivate what is granted to them, they shall, when such excess amounts to three meu, and does not exceed ten meu, be liable to a punishment of 30 blows, and be punished one degree more severely for every further excess of ten meu, until the punishment reaches the limit of 80 blows; the excess shall moreover be forfeited back to the state.

When applications of this nature are made to the magistrate in any district where the cultivating population is already sufficient or excessive, five, a part of the unoccupied lands in the nearest vicinity shall be allotted to the applicants, in proportion to their means of keeping up the cultivation.

Five clauses.

SECTION XCI. — *Personal Visitation of Lands suffering from any Calamity.

In all districts wherein the Lands have suffered from a temporary calamity, as from excessive rain, the overflowing of waters, excessive drought, unseasonable frosts, flights of locusts, and the like, the customary assessments shall be proportionally reduced, or remitted altogether; all representations on this subject the magistrates shall be obliged to receive; and if they fail to take cognizance thereof, both by reporting the same to the tribunals of their superiors, and by personally inspecting the injured lands; or if the magistrate of the superior tribunal does not dispatch an officer of government, under his immediate orders, to examine into and verify the facts reported to him by his inferiors; in all such cases, the omission shall be punished with 80 blows.

If the officer of government employed in the first visitation, or the officer employed in the re-examination, does not himself personally attend on the spot; or if although, he does personally attend, he afterwards, instead of making a faithful report, grounded on a diligent investigation, negligently trusts to the representations of the head

* A remission of a part or of the whole of the regulated amount of the assessment of the land-tax; and, at the same time, a prompt distribution of a supply of grain from the public stores, are the means most usually employed by the government to alleviate the distress, which a deficient harvest, whenever it occurs, must, in an empire depending solely on its own productions for the subsistence of a population already for the most part redundant, necessarily occasion. In the Appendix, No. XIV., some account of one or two recent instances of this kind is inserted.

head inhabitant of the district, or his deputies, and thereupon describes as productive what is sterile, and as sterile what is productive, or in any other manner extenuates or exaggerates the circumstances of the case, such a statement must necessarily be founded upon fraud or collusion; and, while it deceives the government, it must in an equal degree injure the people; the offender shall, therefore, be punished with 100 blows, deprived of his office, and rendered incapable of afterwards holding any rank or office under government. The amount likewise of the taxes, which in consequence of such misconduct had been either improperly levied, or causelessly remitted, shall be estimated, and conformably thereto a reference shall be made to the law concerning pecuniary malversation in general, in order that, if the punishment authorized by the latter prove the greatest, it may be inflicted in preference to that hereby provided. — The head inhabitant of the district, and his deputies, shall be liable to punishment in an equal degree, when participating in the foregoing offence, in the manner above stated; and if they are further convicted of bribery, they shall be liable to any aggravation of the punishment which may arise from a reference to the law against bribery for an unlawful purpose.

Nevertheless, if the incorrectness of the report of the inspecting magistrate be merely imputable to an error, or to inadvertence in ascertaining the limits, neither the officer of government, nor his clerks, nor the head inhabitant of the district, nor his deputies, shall be liable to punishment, when the error does not exceed ten meu; from ten to twenty meu, the punishment shall amount to 20 blows, and be increased one degree for each additional extent of incorrectness of twenty meu, until it arrives at the limit of 80 blows; and this offence not being deemed of a private or personal nature, shall not subject the magistrates to a loss of their rank or offices.

If, on any such occasion, an individual, or head of a family, represents his productive lands to be unproductive, and falsely pleads loss by any temporary calamity, he shall be punished with 40 blows when the misrepresentation exceeds one and is less than five meu; the punishment shall be increased one degree for every additional five meu so falsely represented, until it arrives at the limit of 100 blows, and the full amount of the customary assessment upon such lands shall be thenceforward strictly levied.

Seventeen clauses.

SECTION XCII. — Lands of the Nobility and Officers of Government.

All the lands and houses comprised in the estates of the nobility and officers of government, (except such as by the express direction and command of the Emperor, are exempted from taxation and personal service,) shall be duly reported by the respective tenants or stewards to the magistrates of the districts, and correctly entered on the public registers, that according to such entries they may be assessed and held accountable for personal services, as in all ordinary cases.

The tenant or steward of the land shall be responsible for the execution of this law, and if he neglects to comply with it, he shall be punished in proportion to the extent of the land omitted to be inserted in the register; that is to say, from one to three meu with sixty blows, and one degree more severely for every further omission of three meu in the register, provided the punishment does not in any case exceed 100 blows, and three years banishment. The lands shall moreover be forfeited to the state, and the arrears of the tax discharged in full, agreeably to the extent, the time, and rate of legal assessment.

If the head inhabitants of the several districts, or the magistrates thereof, upon a visitation of such lands, make false returns, in order to obtain favour with the proprietors; or if they connive at the omissions

in

in the registers, of which the latter are guilty, they shall equally participate in the punishment. They shall not, however, be punished under this law in any manner, for the offences of others, except when it is proved that they have thus actually connived at the same.

No clause.

SECTION XCIII. — Fraudulent Sale of Lands and Tenements.

Whoever fraudulently sells, exchanges, or professes himself proprietor of, the lands of other persons; and whoever, by a fictitious agreement, without due pecuniary consideration, purchases, or wrongfully takes possession of, the lands or tenements of others, shall be punished according to the extent of the land, or the number of the tenements in question; if not exceeding one mu, or one tenement, with 50 blows, and one degree more severely for each addition of five to the number of mu, or three to the number of tenements, provided the punishment do not in any case exceed 80 blows, and two years banishment. — If, however, the lands or tenements in question are the property of government, the punishment in each case shall be proportionably greater by two degrees.

Whoever seizes by open violence the lands and tenements of government, or of individuals, (that is to say, not only cultivated lands and inhabited houses, but also burying-grounds, fish-ponds, cane plantations, metal founderies, and the like,) shall, without reference to the number or extent, receive 100 blows, and suffer perpetual banishment to the distance of 3000 lee.

When any individual takes land, or the produce of land, under litigation or belonging to others, and upon the pretext of being the lawful proprietor thereof, presents the same to officers of government, or to other persons having influence and authority, as a free gift or donation, the giver and receiver shall each be punished with 100 blows, and three years banishment.

In general; all lands which, by fraud or force, have been unlawfully obtained, together with the produce thereof reaped during the unlawful possession; secondly, the sums for which any such lands and produce may have been clandestinely sold; thirdly, all the unreaped produce remaining on such lands; and lastly, the amount of all the other advantages whatsoever derived from such lands, during the period of unlawful possession, shall severally become forfeitures, and be restored or repaid to whom they are due, whether to the state, or to private individuals.

When this law is transgressed by any of the privileged officers of government, the circumstances of the case shall be investigated, and the nature of the punishment to be inflicted shall be determined as in ordinary cases, but the latter shall not be carried into effect until the sentence is submitted to, and ratified by, His Imperial Majesty.

Nine clauses.

SECTION XCIV. — Officers of Government restricted from purchasing Lands within the Limits of their Jurisdiction.

The officers and clerks officiating in any of the departments of government, which possess a territorial jurisdiction, shall not, during the exercise of their authority therein, purchase, or hold by purchase, any lands or tenements within the limits of such jurisdiction; whoever is convicted of a breach of this law shall suffer 50 blows, and be removed from his office, but shall not be thereby rendered incapable of holding offices under government elsewhere; the lands and tenements so unlawfully held shall be forfeited to government.

Two clauses.

SECTION XCV. — Law of Mortgages *.

Whoever takes lands or tenements by way of mortgage, without entering into a regular contract, duly authenticated and assessed with the legal duty by the proper magistrate, shall receive 50 blows, and forfeit to government half the consideration money of the mortgage. — If the mortgager does not transfer to the mortgagee unreservedly the whole produce of the land upon which the taxes are charged and made payable to government, he shall be punished in proportion to the extent of the property, in the following manner: if from one to five meu, with 40 blows, and one degree more severely for each five additional meu, until the punishment amounts to 100 blows; the land so illegally mortgaged shall be forfeited to government.

If the proprietor of lands and tenements already mortgaged, attempts to raise money thereon by a second mortgage, the amount obtained upon such false pretences shall be ascertained, and the offender punished accordingly, as in the case of an ordinary theft to the same extent, except that he shall not be liable to be branded.

The pecuniary consideration received by the fraudulent mortgager shall be restored always to the mortgagee, unless such mortgagee is himself privy to the unlawfulness of the transaction, in which case it shall be forfeited to government.

The said mortgagee and the negotiator of the bargain, when either of them is acquainted with the unlawfulness of the transaction, shall

* The mode here described of lending money upon landed security, is a very ancient and frequent practice among the Chinese, and though certainly a species of mortgage, will be seen to be modified by some peculiar regulations. This subject has been already noticed by the missionaries in the Memoires sur les Chinois, vol. iv. p. 386. but as it is connected with the interesting and disputed question of the nature of the tenure of lands in China, an abstract of some of the more material clauses annexed to the law, have been inserted in further illustration of it, in the Appendix, No. XV.

moreover

moreover receive the same punishment as the mortgager. In all such cases, the first and lawful mortgagee shall remain in possession.

If, after the period, specified in the deed by which any lands or tenements are professed to be mortgaged or pledged by the proprietor, is expired, the said proprietor offers to redeem his property by the payment back of the original consideration upon which he had parted with it, it shall not be allowed the mortgagee to refuse to comply; any instance of such refusal shall subject him to the punishment of 40 blows, and to the forfeiture of all the produce of the land which he may have reaped after the expiration of such period. Nevertheless, this law shall only have effect when the proprietor is really able at the expiration of the prescribed period to redeem his lands, and not otherwise.

Ten clauses.

SECTION XCVI. — Sowing and tilling Lands belonging to others.

Whoever ploughs and sows the lands of another clandestinely, that is to say, without giving notice to the proprietor, shall suffer punishment in proportion to the extent of the land illicitly cultivated; when not exceeding one meu, with 30 blows, and one degree more severely in proportion to each additional five meu, as far as 80 blows. — If the land had not been previously under cultivation, the punishment shall be less in each case by one degree.

If the land of a stranger is cultivated by force, that is to say, in defiance of the proprietor, the punishment shall be one degree more severe in each case.

If the land is the property of government, the punishment of intrusive and unlawful culture shall be further aggravated two degrees; and in general, the profit derived from the cultivation of the land shall shall be forfeited either to the individual proprietor, or to the state, according to the circumstances of the case.

One clause.

SECTION XCVII.—Uncultivated and neglected Lands.

In every district of the empire, when the lands which have been entered on the public registers as liable to the land-tax, and as subjecting the proprietors to the demands of personal service, are, without any cause, such as inundation, drought, or other calamity, neglected and omitted to be duly cultivated; as, for instance, if the established mulberry, hemp, and other similar plantations are not duly kept up, the head inhabitant of the district shall be held responsible, and punished according to the relative extent of the uncultivated to that of the cultivated portion of the registered lands in his district.—If the uncultivated portion is one-tenth of the whole, he shall be punished with 20 blows, and one degree more severely, as far as 80 blows, for each additional tenth uncultivated. The presiding magistrate of the city of the third order, to which the district is subjected, shall likewise be punishable, but less severely by two degrees in each case than the head inhabitant. The assessors of the chief magistrate shall suffer punishment as accessaries to his offence.

The individual proprietor also, who suffers his land to remain uncultivated, or who neglects his mulberry, hemp, or other plantations, shall be punished according to the proportion which the neglected part bears to the whole of his registered property,—if it amounts to one-fifth, with 20 blows, and one degree more severely for every additional fifth left uncultivated.

His

His lands shall moreover be assessed with the land-tax in proportion to the amount of the produce they are judged capable of yielding, and the contribution shall be levied on the proprietor accordingly.

No clause.

SECTION XCVIII. — Destroying or damaging the Harvests and Articles connected therewith.

Whoever purposely destroys, or abandons to destruction, any implements or utensils of husbandry, cuts down timber trees, or in general, damages the produce of the land, shall be punished in proportion to the estimated amount of the damage, according to the law against theft to the same extent, except that he shall not be branded; — if the article or produce destroyed or damaged was the property of government, the punishment in such case shall be increased two degrees.

When the articles or produce of the earth belonging to government are lost or destroyed by an inadvertence only, the punishment shall be three degrees less than in the case of a wilful offence to the same extent; but in all cases, the extent of the damage shall be estimated, and the offender compelled to replace the amount to government, or to the individual proprietor, according to the circumstances of the case. — When any private property is lost or destroyed through inadvertence, corporal punishment shall not be inflicted on the offender, but he shall, as already stated, replace the amount of the damage or loss sustained by the injured party.

Whoever destroys the tomb-stones, or the emblematical figures cut in stone belonging to tombs, shall be punished with 80 blows; whoever destroys the figures of domestic or drural cities shall be punished with 90 blows; and generally, whoever destroys or damages the houses,

houses, walls, or buildings of any kind belonging to others, shall be punished in proportion to the estimated expence of labour and materials necessary to replace the same, according to the law for the punishment of pecuniary injuries in general. — In all these cases, the damage shall be fully repaired by the offending party, whose punishment shall, moreover, be raised in each case two degrees, when the buildings damaged or destroyed had belonged to government. When, however, the buildings of government or individuals are damaged or destroyed inadvertently, the person who did the injury shall be liable to no other punishment beside the obligation to repair the damage, or re-place the value of the property he had destroyed.

One clause.

SECTION XCIX. — Taking away, without Leave, the Fruit growing in Gardens, or Orchards.

Whoever, without leave, takes away or eats the fruit growing in the grounds or gardens of another, shall be liable to punishment in proportion to the value thereof, according to the law concerning pecuniary injuries. — Destroying or damaging the fruit shall be punished according to the same scale; and if the fruit so eaten or destroyed is taken from grounds or gardens belonging to government which had been appropriated to the preparation of fermented or spirituous liquors, or of any articles of subsistence for the public service, the punishment shall be in each of such cases, two degrees more severe than it would have been otherwise.

If the person who has the charge of any such property of government, gives it away, or connives at its being taken away, he shall equally participate in the punishment of the receiver or consumer. If he appropriates the same to his own use, he shall suffer punishment in proportion to the amount, according to the law concerning the embezzlement of the property of government.

No clause.

SECTION C. — Misapplication of the Boats or Carriages of Government.

If any person having the custody of the property, or the superintendance over any of the departments, of government, applies to his own private use and advantage, or lends out to others, the carriages, boats, warehouses, mills, or other buildings or implements belonging to government; he, as well as the borrower of such articles, shall suffer 50 blows; and if an officer of government, the offender shall moreover forfeit to the state the estimated amount of the charge of the hire of the articles, to any extent not exceeding their value. The offenders shall likewise be liable to punishment in proportion to the amount of the aforesaid charge, one degree more severely than the law prescribes in ordinary cases of pecuniary injury, whenever such punishment, being greater, supercedes that hereby provided.

No clause.

END OF THE SECOND BOOK OF THE THIRD DIVISION.

B O O K III.

MARRIAGE*.

SECTION CI.—Marriages how regulated.

WHEN a marriage is intended to be contracted, it shall be, in the first instance, reciprocally explained to, and clearly understood by, the families interested, whether the parties who design to marry are or are not diseased, infirm, aged, or under age; and whether they are the children of their parents by blood, or only by adoption; if either of the contracting families then object, the proceedings shall be carried no further; if they still approve, they shall then in conjunction with the negociators of the marriage, if such there be, draw up the marriage-articles, and determine the amount of the marriage-presents.

If, after the woman is thus regularly affianced by the recognition of the marriage-articles, or by a personal interview and agreement between the families, the family of the intended bride should repent having entered into the contract, and refuse to execute it, the person amongst them who had authority to give her away shall be punished with 50 blows, and the marriage shall be completed agreeably to the original contract. — Although the marriage-articles should not have been drawn up in writing, the acceptance of the marriage-presents shall be sufficient evidence of the agreement between the parties.

* The peculiar customs and usages which are adverted to in this book of the laws, will be found illustrated and exemplified in a pleasing manner, together with an interesting picture of domestic life in China, in an English translation of a Chinese novel, which was edited many years ago by the learned and ingenious Dr. Percy, Bishop of Dromore, under the title of "Hau-Kiou-Choan, or the Pleasing History."—The translation of this little work, not having been edited by the translator, and having, in part, been taken from a Portuguese version, cannot be expected to be minutely accurate, though perhaps sufficiently so for the purpose in view, and the translator of the present work has had the satisfaction of ascertaining its authenticity, by a comparison with the Chinese original, of which he has a copy now in his possession.

If, after the female is affianced, but previous to the completion of the marriage, her family promises her in marriage to another, the person having authority to give her away shall be punished with 70 blows; if such promise is made after the first marriage is actually completed, (that is to say, the bride is personally presented to and received by the bridegroom) the punishment shall be increased to 80 blows.

If the person who accepts such promise is, at the same time, aware of the existence of a previous contract or marriage, he shall participate equally in the punishment, and whatever marriage-presents he may have transmitted on the strength of such promise, shall be forfeited to government. — On the other hand, if ignorant thereof, he shall not be punishable, and the marriage-presents made by him shall be restored. — The bride shall remain with the bridegroom to whom she was first married or affianced, unless he declines, in which case he shall receive back the amount of his marriage-present, and the bride shall be transferred to the family of the bridegroom to whom she was secondly affianced.

If the family of the intended bridegroom, after having agreed as aforesaid, repents of the contract, and makes marriage-presents to another woman, the same punishment shall be inflicted, as in the cases already mentioned. The bridegroom shall be obliged to receive his originally intended bride; and the female, to whom he is secondly affianced, shall retain the marriage-presents made to her, and be at the same time at liberty to marry another person.

If either of the contracted parties, previous to the completion of the marriage, are guilty of theft or adultery; that is to say, have been convicted of offences of such a description, the law for punishing a breach of the contract as aforesaid shall not be enforced. If the family of the bride deceives the family of the bridegroom, so as to induce them to contract a marriage, by indicating and leading them to expect a different person from the one actually named and described in the contract, the giver away of the woman shall be punished with 80 blows, and her family shall restore the marriage-presents. If the family of the bridegroom is guilty of this offence, the punishment of the contractor shall be one degree more severe, and the marriage-presents shall remain with the family of the bride. If such marriage, thus contracted through misrepresentation, is not completed, the bride or bridegroom, whom the other party had been led to expect, shall complete the marriage, instead of the bride or bridegroom who had been deceitfully substituted; if the marriage under the aforefaid false pretences, had nevertheless been completed, it shall be sufficient that the parties be separated.
the

Although the parties had been lawfully affianced to each other, and the marriage presents delivered and accepted; yet if the bridegroom forcibly takes away his bride, previous to the period agreed upon, or if the bride is designedly retained and refused to the bridegroom, after such period is arrived, the contractor of the marriage in the latter case, and the bridegroom in the former case, shall be punished with 50 blows.

If, while a junior relation is at a distance from his family, and engaged either in trade, or in official employment under government, his grandfather, father, uncle, or senior cousin, binds him by a marriage-contract, and he, being ignorant thereof, happens to contract and complete a marriage with some other female during his absence, such marriage shall be held valid, and the contract made by his relations being therefore set aside, the affianced female will be at liberty to contract another marriage. If however, such absent junior member of a family had only contracted a marriage, he shall relinquish it, and in preference fulfil that contract of marriage which had been made for him by his relations, the female to whom he had personally contracted himself, being also freed from her engagement to him. — A breach of x That is to say, if he is chosen for this office, he shall resign his own this law shall be punished with 80 blows, and compliance with these regulations shall be duly enforced by the magistrate of the district.

Four clauses.

SECTION CII. — Lending Wives or Daughters on Hire.

Whoever lends any one of his wives, to be hired as a temporary wife, shall be punished with 80 blows,—whoever lends his daughter in like manner, shall be punished with 60 blows; the wife or daughter in such cases, shall not be held responsible.

Whoever, falsely representing any of his wives as his sister, gives her away in marriage, shall receive 100 blows, and the wife consenting thereto, shall be punished with 80 blows.

Those who knowingly receive in marriage the wives, or hire for a limited time the wives or daughters of others, shall participate equally in the aforesaid punishment, and the parties thus unlawfully connected, shall be separated; the daughter shall be returned to her parents, and the wife to the family to which she originally belonged; the pecuniary consideration in each case shall be forfeited to government. Those who ignorantly receive such persons in marriage, contrary to the laws, shall be excused, and recover the amount of the marriage-presents.

One clause.

SECTION CIII. — Regard to Rank and Priority among Wives.*

Whoever degrades his first or principal wife to the condition of an inferior wife or concubine, shall be punished with 100 blows. Whoever

* The peculiar limitations under which polygamy is allowed in China require here some explanation, as it was impossible in translating the text, to distinguish by any terms strictly appropriate, the two modes of espousal which are established by the Chinese laws, and which are equally distinct in point of form as in their legal consequences.

ever, during the life-time of his first wife, raises an inferior wife to the rank and condition of a first wife, shall be punished with 90 blows; and in both the cases, each of the several wives shall be replaced in the rank to which she was originally intitled upon her marriage.

Whoever, having a first wife living, enters into marriage with another female as a first wife, shall likewise be punished with 90 blows; and the marriage being considered null and void, the parties shall be separated, and the woman returned to her parents.

No clause.

SECTION CIV. — Ejecting from Home a Son-in-law *.

Whoever either ejects the husband of his daughter whom he had received into his house as his son-in-law, or receives into his house another person, as the husband of such daughter, shall be punished with 100 blows. The wife shall not be punished unless she had assisted

The first or principal wife is usually chosen for the husband by his parents or senior relations, out of a family equal in point of rank and to other circumstances to his own, and is espoused with as much splendour and ceremony as the parties can afford; and the bride, when she is received into the house of the bridegroom, acquires all the rights and privileges, which, under the degraded state of the female sex in Asiatic nations, can be supposed to belong to a lawful wife.

A Chinese may afterwards lawfully espouse other wives, agreeably to his own choice, and with fewer ceremonies, as well as without any regard to equality in point of family and connexions: these wives are all subordinate to the first wife, but equal in rank among themselves. In describing this connexion, the term inferior wife has been preferred to that of hand-maid, or concubine, as there are always certain forms of espousal, and as the children of such wives have a contingent right to the inheritance.

* It is remarked in a note in the original Chinese, that the bridegroom, who, instead of taking home his bride to his own house, lives with her at the house of her parents, by so doing, deviates from the established forms of espousal; but that having been once so received as a son-in-law, the law protects him in the right which he had acquired, of either remaining there with his wife, or taking her away with him to a separate establishment.

and

and concurred in the ejection of her husband, in which case she shall likewise suffer 100 blows. The person, moreover, who is secondly received as a son-in-law, if privy to the illegality of the transaction, shall participate equally in the punishment, and forfeit to government the marriage-present, but otherwise, shall be excused from the punishment and the forfeiture. When the first marriage had been contracted, but not completed, the ejection of the intended son-in-law shall be punished less severely by five degrees. — The woman shall belong to her first contracted husband, and live with him separately from her father and mother.

No clause.

SECTION CV. — Marriage during the legal Period of Mourning.

If any man or woman enters into an equal marriage during the legal period of mourning for a deceased parent, or any widow enters into a second and equal marriage within the legal period of mourning for her deceased husband, the offending party shall be punished with 100 blows.

If it is not an equal match, that is to say, if a man takes an inferior wife from a subordinate rank, or a woman connects herself in marriage as one of the inferior wives of her husband, the punishment attending a breach of this law shall be less by two degrees.

If a widow who, during the life of her husband, had received honorary rank from the Emperor, ever marries again, she shall suffer punishment as above described, and moreover lose her rank, as well as be separated from her second husband.

Whoever knowingly contracts marriage with a widow of rank, or with any widow during the legal period of mourning, shall suffer punishment in each case proportionably less by five degrees, and the marriage-present shall be forfeited to government; if ignorant of the illegality

SECTION CVI. — Marriage during the Imprisonment of Parents.

Whoever marries a wife or a husband upon equal terms of espousal, having a father, mother, grand-father or grand-mother at the same time under confinement in prison for a capital offence, shall be punished with 80 blows; — whoever at such time receives in marriage, or becomes by marriage, a subordinate wife, shall suffer punishment less by two degrees.

Nevertheless, if any such person enters into the marriage state at such period, by the express command of his or her parent or grand-parent in prison, no punishment shall ensue, provided the usual feast and entertainment is omitted; otherwise a punishment of 80 blows shall still be inflicted.

No clause.

SECTION CVII. — Marriage between Persons having the same Family-Name.

Whenever any persons having the same family-name intermarry, the parties and the contractor of the marriage shall each receive 60 blows, and the marriage being null and void, the man and woman shall be separated, and the marriage-presents forfeited to government*.

No clause.

* The most usual term in the Chinese language for describing "the people or nation," is Pe-fing, or "the hundred names." Although the names of families in China are at present somewhat more numerous, they are very few in proportion to the immense population, and the restrictions imposed by this law upon marriage must therefore be often embarrassing and inconvenient, however little the choice and inclination of the parties themselves, may under any circumstances, be consulted.

SECTION CVIII. — Marriage between Persons related by Marriage.

In general all marriages between persons who through another marriage are already related to each other in any of the four degrees, and all marriages with sisters by the same mother, though by a different father, or with the daughters of a wife's former husband, shall be considered as incestuous, and punished according to the law against a criminal intercourse with such relations*.

A man shall not marry his father's or mother's sister-in-law, his father's or mother's aunt's daughters, his son-in-law's or daughter-in-law's sister, or his grandson's wife's sister, on pain of receiving 100 blows for such offence.

Whoever marries his mother's brothers or mother's sister's daughter, shall receive 80 blows, and in these as well as the foregoing cases, the marriage shall be annulled, and the marriage-present forfeited.

Two clauses.

SECTION CIX. — Marriage with Relations by Blood, or with the Widows of such Relations.

Whoever marries a female relation beyond the fourth degree, or the widow of a male relation equally remote, shall be punished with 100 blows. Whoever marries the widow of a relation in the fourth degree, or of a sister's son, shall be punished with 60 blows, and one year's banishment. — Whoever marries the widow of any nearer relation, shall be punished according to the law against incestuous connexions with such persons. Nevertheless, when the connexion had been broken by a divorce, or an intervening marriage with a stranger, the offence shall in general be only punished with 80 blows.

* The book of the laws referred to in this and the following section is contained in the criminal division of the code, and entitled, Incest and Adultery.

Whoever receives in marriage any of his father's or grandfather's former wives, or his father's sisters, shall, whether they had been divorced or re-married, in all cases suffer death, by being beheaded. Whoever marries his brother's widow, shall be strangled.

The foregoing cases, in general apply to first wives only, and the punishment of marrying the inferior wives of such relatives as aforesaid, shall be less in each case by two degrees.

Whoever marries any female relation in the fourth, or any nearer degree, shall be punished according to the law concerning incest, and all such incestuous marriages shall be null and void.

Two clauses.

SECTION CX. — Marriage of Officers of Government into Families subject to their Jurisdiction.

If any officer belonging to the government of a city of the first, second, or third order, marries, while in office, the wife or daughter of any inhabitant of the country under his jurisdiction, he shall be punished with 80 blows.

If any officer of government marries the wife or daughter of any person having an interest in the legal proceedings at the same time under his investigation, he shall be punished with 100 blows, and the member of the family of the bride, who gave her away, shall be equally punishable. The woman, whether previously married or not, shall be restored to her parents, and the marriage-present forfeited in every case to government.

If the officer of government accomplishes the marriage by the force or influence of his authority, his punishment shall be increased two degrees, and the family of the female, being in such a case exempt from responsibility, she shall, if previously single, be restored to her parents; rents; and if previously married, to her former husband; the marriage-present shall not in either case be forfeited.

If any officer of government, instead of marrying the female himself in any of the above cases, gives her in marriage to his son, grandson, younger brother, nephew, or other person belonging to his household, he shall be liable to the same punishment as aforesaid, but neither the bride nor the bridegroom shall suffer for such offence.

When the marriage is a compensation for some unjust decision on a subject under the magistrate's investigation, the punishment shall be encreased as far as the law, applicable to such a deviation from justice, may authorize.

No clause.

SECTION CXI. — Marriage with absconded Females.

Whoever receives and marries a female criminal, who had absconded from the fear of punishment; shall, whether she had been previously married or not, be punishable to the full extent of the crime such female had committed, setting aside only the aggravation of two degrees to which she is liable from her being a fugitive, and with a reduction of one degree, when the offence of the female is of a nature to be punishable with death. The marriage shall moreover be annulled, and the parties separated, unless the female was previously single, and obtains the benefit of a special or general pardon. When the person marrying a criminal fugitive had been ignorant of the circumstance of her being such, he shall be excused.

No clause.

SECTION CXII. — Forcible Marriage of a free Man's Wife or Daughter.

Whoever, confiding in his power and influence, seizes by violence the wife or daughter of a free-man, and carries her away to make her one

one of his wives, shall suffer death, by being strangled after the usual period of confinement.

If the female was single, she shall be returned to her parents or relations; and, if previously married, to her lawful husband.

Whoever, instead of marrying such female himself, gives her in marriage to his son, grand-son, brother, nephew, or other person of his household, shall be liable to the same punishment, and the parties shall be separated, as in the former case; but the husband, not being the contriver of the offence, shall not be punishable.

Four clauses.

SECTION CXIII. — Marriage with Female Musicians and Comedians.

If any officer or clerk of government, either in the civil or military department, marries, as his first or other wife, a female musician or comedian, he shall be punished with 60 blows, and the marriage being null and void, the female shall be sent back to her parents and rendered incapable of returning to her profession. The marriage-present shall be forfeited to government.

If the son or grand-son, being the heir of any officer of government having hereditary rank, commits this offence, he shall suffer the same punishment, and whenever he succeeds to the inheritance, his parental honours shall descend to him under a reduction of one degree.

No clause.

SECTION CXIV. — Marriage of Priests of Foe or Tao-ssé.*

If any priest of Foe or Tao-ssé takes a first or inferior wife, he shall be punished with 80 blows, and expelled from the order to which he belonged. The member of the family of the female who gave her

* See Section XLII. and LXXVII. relative to these orders of priesthood in China.

away

away in marriage shall be equally punishable; the marriage shall be null and void, the female sent back to her family, and the marriage-present forfeited to government; all the other priests of the same establishment who were privy to the offence, shall be subject to the same corporal punishment, but not to expulsion from their order; if ignorant of the offence having been committed, they shall not suffer punishment in any respect.

If a priest solicits a woman in marriage, under pretence of obtaining a wife for his relations or servants, and afterwards appropriates the female to himself, the offence shall be punished according to the law prohibiting incestuous intercourse and adultery.

No clause.

SECTION CXV. — Marriage between Free persons and Slaves.

If any master of a family solicits and obtains in marriage for his slave, the daughter of a free-man, he shall be punished with 80 blows; X — the member of the family who gives away the female in marriage shall suffer the same punishment, if aware that the intended husband is a slave, but not otherwise.

A slave soliciting and obtaining a daughter of a free-man in marriage, shall also be punished in the same manner; and if the master of the slave consents thereto, he shall suffer punishment less by two degrees; but, if he moreover receives such free-woman into his family as a slave, he shall be punished with 100 blows.

Likewise, whoever falsely represents a slave to be free, and thereby procures such slave a free husband or wife, shall suffer 90 blows. In all these cases the marriage shall be null and void, and the parties replaced in the ranks they had respectively held in the community.

No clause.

SECTION CXVI. — Law of Divorce.

If a husband repudiates his first wife, without her having broken the matrimonial connexion by the crime of adultery, or otherwise; and without her having furnished him with any of the seven justifying causes of divorce, he shall in every such case be punished with 80 blows. Moreover, although one of the seven justifying causes of divorce should be chargeable upon the wife, namely, (1) barrenness; (2) lasciviousness; (3) disregard of her husband's parents; (4) talkativeness; (5) thievish propensities; (6) envious and suspicious temper; and, lastly, (7) inveterate infirmity; yet, if any of the three reasons against a divorce should exist, namely, (1) the wife's having mourned three years for her husband's parents; (2) the family's having become rich after having been poor previous to, and at the time of, marriage; and, (3) the wife's having no parents living to receive her back again; in these cases, none of the seven aforementioned causes will justify a divorce, and the husband who puts away his wife upon such grounds, shall suffer punishment two degrees less than that last stated, and be obliged to receive her again.

If the wife shall have broken the matrimonial connexion by an act of adultery, or by any other act, which by law not only authorizes but requires that the parties should be separated, the husband shall receive a punishment of 80 blows, if he retains her.

When the husband and wife do not agree, and both parties are desirous of separation, the law limiting the right of divorce shall not be enforced to prevent it.

If, upon the husband's refusing to consent to a divorce, the wife quits her home and absconds, she shall be punished with 100 blows, and her husband shall be allowed to sell her in marriage; if, during such absence from her home, she contracts marriage with another person, she shall suffer death, by being strangled, after the usual period of confinement.

If,

If, previous to the expiration of a period of three years after a husband had deserted and been no more heard of by his wife, such wife, without giving notice at a tribunal of government, should likewise quit her home and abscond, she shall be punished with 80 blows; and the punishment shall be increased to 100 blows, if she should moreover presume to contract another marriage within such period.

In all the foregoing cases, the first wife only is intended to be adverted to, but the laws in every instance shall be applied in cases of the inferior wives, upon a reduction being made in the punishment to the extent of two degrees for each offence.

To render the act of the wife a second marriage, there must have been a person to give her away to the new husband, and a delivery of marriage-presents; otherwise, it is to be considered simply as a case of adultery.

If a female slave deserts from her master's house, she shall be punished with 80 blows, or with 100 blows if she contracts a marriage during such absence, and in both cases she shall be restored to her master.

Whoever harbours a fugitive wife or slave, or marries them knowing them to be fugitives, shall participate equally in their punishment, except in capital cases, when the punishment shall be reduced one degree. The marriage-present in all such cases is forfeited to government. When, however, the person harbouring or marrying the fugitive is really ignorant of her criminality, he shall not be subject to any punishment, and shall be even entitled to demand the return of the marriage-present.

In the foregoing cases, if the giver-away in marriage of a fugitive wife, in the absence of her lawful husband, is an elder relation in the first degree of such female, the punishment attending such unlawful marriage shall be solely inflicted on the relation, and the female shall suffer, without aggravation, the punishment to which she was liable as a fugitive.

If the giver-away in marriage of such female was any more remote elder relation, the relation shall still be punished as in the last instance, but the female and the person marrying her, shall likewise be punishable, as accessaries to the aggravated offence. If, in such cases, the proposal of the marriage is shewn to arise from the parties themselves, they shall be punished as principals, and the giver-away of the female as an accessary only; but the punishment of the latter, although in extreme cases nominally capital, shall never exceed 100 blows and perpetual banishment to the distance of 3000 lee.

Two clauses.

SECTION CXVII. — Giving in Marriage unlawfully.

In all marriages contracted contrary to law, if the giver-away of the bride, or the contractor of the marriage on the part of the husband, is the paternal or maternal grand-father, grand-mother, father, mother, paternal uncle or aunt, or paternal elder male or female cousin, the punishment denounced by law shall be solely inflicted on such relations, and the parties themselves shall not be held responsible.

When the giver-away of the wife, or contractor of the marriage as aforesaid, is a more remote relation of the party marrying, but is still the chief agent in procuring the unlawful marriage, he or she shall be punished as a principal, but the husband and wife shall likewise participate in the punishment of the offence, as accessaries.

If, on the contrary, the unlawful marriage contracted as above originated with the parties themselves, they shall be punished as principals in the offence, and those who contracted the match for them, as accessaries only.

When, according to the application of these rules, the parties to a marriage are punishable as principals with death, the law shall be carried strictly into effect; but, when the persons who contracted an unlawful lawful marriage in behalf of others, are nominally liable to capital punishment, it shall be mitigated one degree; those, however, who are punished as their accessaries, shall still suffer as accessaries to a capital offence.

Moreover, if the husband and wife, in consequence of having been previously terrified and threatened by their elder relations, had entered into an unlawful marriage, which they had not themselves devised or originated; or if the husband was not twenty years of age complete, and the wife had never previously quitted her parent's roof, the contractors on each side of the unlawful marriage shall, under such circumstances, be alone punishable and responsible.

When any unlawful marriage has been only contracted, but not completed, the punishment of the responsible parties shall always be less by five degrees.

The negotiator of any unlawful marriage, knowing it be unlawful, shall suffer punishment within one degree of that inflicted on the responsible party, but otherwise shall be excused.

In general, in every case in which it is directed that an unlawful marriage shall be annulled, the parties shall be placed in the same condition as that in which they were previous to the marriage; and although any general act of pardon should intervene, and occasion a remission of the punishment denounced by law against them as public offenders, such pardon shall be no bar to the divorce.

In general also, when the party giving the marriage-present is, at the same time, aware of the unlawfulness of the transaction, such present shall be forfeited to government; but otherwise it shall be restored to the giver.

Three clauses.

B O O K IV.

PUBLIC PROPERTY.

SECTION CXVIII.—Regulations concerning Coinage.*.

ACCORDING to the regulations concerning coinage, there are founderies and mints where the metal is prepared and cast, and also proper store-houses in which the coin is deposited until required for the public service. The quantity of metal coined in the former, and the periods of its issue from the latter, shall be strictly conformable to the deliberate resolutions thereon of the supreme court for affairs of revenue, in order that the successive supplies of coin for the use of the people may correspond with their wants, and be regulated according to the market-prices of gold, silver, grain, and other articles in general use and consumption.

Whoever, having authority in any of these departments, retains and accumulates the coin, instead of distributing it at due seasons, shall be punished with 60 blows:

* It is well known to be the policy of the Chinese government to have no other currency than a small coin of base metal, chiefly copper, of which the legal value is one thousandth part of a leang, or Chinese ounce of silver; the actual exchange sometimes rises above, and sometimes falls short of this rate, in consequence of the intrinsic value of the coinage of different dates varying according to the relative proportions as well as total quantities of the metals employed, while the value of silver is also necessarily subject to fluctuation, as that of any other marketable commodity.

On account of the inconvenience which would attend the payment of large sums in a coin of so low a denomination, and as paper currency is at present altogether unknown in the empire, ingots of pure silver, of one and of ten Chinese ounces weight, (usually cast in moulds, and distinguished with a peculiar stamp,) are most generally employed on such occasions, especially in all payments to government; but it is to be observed, that of late, the European trade has introduced the Spanish dollar into such extensive circulation in many of the provinces of China, that, excepting the officers of the government, it is very generally known and received among the natives, and even at a rate beyond its intrinsic value, in consideration of the apparent security against fraud, which is afforded by the impression.

In

In no private dwelling of any foldier or citizen shall any utensils of copper, or chiefly of copper, be used, except mirrors, military arms, bells, and articles specially consecrated to religious purposes; but whatever quantity of copper any individual may have in excess, he shall be permitted to sell to government at the rate of seven fen, (or hundredth parts of a leang or ounce of silver) for every kin weight of copper, or as much more or less as the state of the market and circumstances may authorize*.

Whoever buys or sells copper clandestinely, or conceals the same in his house, instead of offering it for sale to government, shall be punished with 40 blows.

Three clauses.

SECTION CXIX. — Periods established for collecting the Revenues in Kind.

For the purpose of receiving the impost on the summer harvest, consisting of wheat only, the granaries of government shall be opened on the 15th of the 5th moon, and the whole of the impost laid in by the close of the 7th moon †.

For the purpose of receiving the impost on the autumnal harvest, which is of grain in general, the granaries of government shall be re-opened on the first of the 10th moon, and the whole laid in by the end of the 12th moon.

This law shall not prevent the receipt of those imposts at an earlier period, provided an unusually early harvest should admit of it, but if the summer impost is, at the end of the 8th moon, or the autumnal

* A Chinese ounce of silver being estimated at 6s. 8d. sterling, the average value of copper will appear to be no more than $5\frac{6}{10}$ pence a kin weight, (exceeding the English pound by one-third,) but this (if it is not indeed merely stated at random) can only be considered as applicable to the period of the original promulgation of the code.

† Respecting the Chinese mode of computing time, see the note to the XLI. Section.

impost

impost at the end of the 1st moon of the succeeding year, still deficient, the magistrate of the district, the magistrate superintending the collection of the revenue in grain, their respective clerks, the officiating head inhabitants of the districts in which the collection has been deficient, and the landholders not duly contributing, shall all of them be severally responsible, each in his proper degree, according to the proportion the deficiency bears in each particular case to the whole amount which was due, or which ought to have been collected or furnished. If one-tenth, the punishment shall amount to 60 blows, and the punishment shall be increased one degree for every tenth deficient, as far as the limit of 100 blows.

If the magistrates, their clerks, or the head inhabitants, have been convicted of bribery, they shall be punished as much more severely as the law concerning bribery for unlawful purposes may authorize.

If the deficiency in the contribution is not made up within a twelve-month after it was due, the land-holder and the head inhabitant shall respectively be punished with 100 blows, and the magistrates and their respective clerks shall suffer punishment in the manner ordered and provided in the supplemental regulations.

Six clauses.

SECTION CXX. — Fairness and Impartiality in collecting the Revenues in Kind.

The officers and attendants belonging to the granaries of government, when collecting the imposts in grain, shall permit each of the contributors personally to attend and measure the proportions of grain for the delivery of which he is answerable; and all such allowances shall be made such contributors as are warranted by the particular regulations of the several provinces.

If

If the officer superintending the grain department, or the collector under his controul, refuses to receive fair measure from the contributing land-holder, and insists on shaking the grain into as small compass as possible, or piles the grain into a heap, instead of striking it at the upper edge of the containing vessel, he shall receive at the least a punishment of 60 blows, and be liable to any increase in the punishment not exceeding 100 blows, which, according to the estimated value of the overplus, may result from the application to this case of the law for punishing pecuniary injuries in general.

These laws, however, are only intended to be applied to the cases in which the excess exacted from the contributors is duly appropriated to the use and service of government. If the offender applies the excess so exacted to his own use and advantage, he will be liable to severer punishment, as an embezzler of the property of government.

If the superintending magistrate of the district is privy to the commission of this offence, and does not take cognizance of it, he shall be equally punishable, but shall not otherwise be held responsible. The excess of grain which may have been exacted, shall be restored to the respective contributors.

Three clauses.

SECTION CXXI. — Concealing or wasting the Proportion of exciseable Articles set apart for the Use of Government.

In all cases in which the land-holder or house-holder is allowed to deliver in himself the proportion of his goods settled at the examination of the excise-officer or collector, as in the instances of the silk-worm-feeder and the metal-worker; and, in general, when any individual is responsible for the delivery of any article whatever to government, if, after having received the official notice demanding the same, the contributor conceals, wastes, or appropriates to his own use, any part of the amount of the articles due by him to government, and attempts to deceive the magistrate by alleging that such part had been lost or destroyed by fire, water, or thieves, he shall be punished in proportion to the estimated value of the amount remaining due by him, according to the law against theft in ordinary cases; nevertheless, the punishment shall not in any case exceed 100 blows and perpetual banishment to the distance of 3000 lee, and the offender shall not be branded.
of

If the officers and clerks of the department are privy to the offence, they shall suffer equal punishment with the offending party, but otherwise shall not be held responsible. The offence, not being considered of a private and personal nature, shall not subject the magistrates to lose their offices, unless they are at the same time convicted of bribery, which will render them liable to such aggravation of the sentence as may result from the law against bribery for an unlawful purpose.

Among others, the poorer land-holders and house-holders, who, when employed according to custom in conveying or superintending the conveyance of government property, avail themselves of such opportunities of committing any waste or depredation, shall be punishable conformably to this law.

One clause.

SECTION CXXII. — Vicarious Contributors to the Revenue.

Whoever undertakes to deliver to government the amount of the impost due from another, shall suffer 60 blows, and shall still, in behalf of the responsible proprietor, deliver into the granary of government the whole amount originally due, and half as much more, by way of forfeiture*.

* The object of the enactment of this law, appears to be to prevent any person from deriving an intermediate profit from the collection of the revenue, as such profit must necessarily either reduce the receipts on account of government, or become an addition to the burthen sustained by the contributor.

If

If the superintending officer of government himself undertakes this vicarious mode of paying the legal contribution, his punishment shall (exclusive of the payment and forfeiture) be two degrees more severe than that of any other individual in a similar case.

The penalties of this law shall not, however, extend to those poorer land-holders or house-holders who, in consequence of their respective shares of rice or wheat being individually less than the estimated share of one family, unite together, and appoint one to contribute for the whole.

If the vicarious contributor is guilty of any deception, or does not contribute sufficiently, he shall, moreover, be liable to punishment in the same manner as the ordinary contributors.

Two clauses.

SECTION CXXIII. — Premature Discharges, or Quittances for Taxes due to Government.

The contribution to the revenue payable into the treasuries in specie, or to be deposited in kind in the public granaries, must not fall short of the amount determined by law; and if, previous to the full satisfaction of the claims of government, the superintendant of the department, in concurrence with the superior officer commanding the district, grants a general acquittance to any inhabitant, all the officers of the several public boards thus concurring therein shall be punished, each in proportion to the total amount deficient, according to the law regarding an embezzlement of government stores to the same extent.

When an officer of government is dispatched to any quarter with special powers and instructions for the collection of duties and taxes, if, in conjunction with the magistrates of the revenue department, and of the district in general, he reports falsely or prematurely to his superriors that all the claims of government are satisfied, he, and those concurring with him, shall, in like manner, be liable to the penalties of this law.

If any of the offending parties shall have been bribed for this purpose, they shall be liable to any contingent aggravation of the punishment resulting from the law against bribery for unlawful purposes.

If the officer intrusted with the collection of the revenue grants the partial receipts or quittances which are issuable from his department, without having obtained the articles in quality and quantity conformable to his instructions, he shall be liable to punishment as an embezzler of them, in proportion to the deficiency in quantity or value; and if the contributing inhabitant accepts any such quittance when he is aware that he is not entitled to it, he also shall be liable to punishment, less by two degrees, but shall not be branded. Whatever sum he may be found to have given to procure such quittance, shall also be generally forfeited to government; this sum shall, however, be returned to the giver, if he was not aware of the quittance having, in consideration of it, been improperly granted to him, and in such case he shall not in any respect be liable to punishment.

All those officers who belonged to the same public boards with the offending parties, if privy to the offence, and neglecting to take cognizance of it, shall be considered as participators therein, and suffer equal punishment with the principals. Those who neither knew of the offence indirectly, nor officiated when it was committed, shall only be punishable and responsible as guilty of neglect of examination.

Ten clauses.

SECTION CXXIV. — Suppression and Misapplication of contingent Excess of Revenue.

In all the tribunals, public boards, treasuries, and magazines of government, the amount of the revenue received in silver, and in kind, beyond the sum or value at which such branch of the revenue was computed, shall be distinctly and faithfully reported, and the several sums or quantities shall be placed accordingly to the credit of government on the records. If the superintendent of the department privately transfers the exceedings of any one branch of the revenue, to some other branch, the receipt of which had been deficient, and thereby deceives the government by the false statements which are thus introduced into his accounts, he shall be liable to punishment according to the law concerning the embezzlement of the property of government, in proportion to the amount so transferred; and he shall, moreover, be required to make good that deficiency in the other branch of the revenue, which he had, by such transfer, endeavoured to conceal.

In all deliveries of precious metals or piece-goods* into the interior or private imperial treasury, the accounts should be closed on the day of delivery, but if they are not then completed, the unexamined parcels must not be removed, and the parties delivering in the same shall attend at the examination of the goods and close of the accounts, on the day following.

Whatever excess may appear upon a computation of the articles, shall be distinctly reported to the supreme court of revenue for their decision respecting it, and if the superintendent of the department, upon his own authority, presumes to suffer any part of such excess, after having been once received, to be removed again from the treasury, he shall nominally be punishable capitally, but actually suffer only the alleviated sentence of five years banishment.

* Silk, cotton or woollen stuffs, which are received and registered by the roll or piece.

The officer on duty at the gate of the interior treasury, by whose neglect or want of examination such articles had been permitted to be carried away, shall suffer 100 blows. The articles carried away, whether consisting of precious metals, or piece-goods, shall moreover always be returned.

No clause.

SECTION CXXV. — Privately lending or employing the Public Revenue.

If any superintending officer of government, having charge of a part of the produce of the revenue, whether in grain or the precious metals, borrows for his own use, or lends the same to others, although the acknowledgment and engagement in writing of the borrower should have been duly obtained, such superintendant shall be punished for every offence in proportion to the amount and value, according to the law concerning the embezzlement of the property of government.

If any other person borrows for his own use, or lends the produce of the revenues as aforesaid, he shall be punished in proportion to the amount and value, according to the law for punishing thefts committed upon the property of the state.

The original article taken away shall in every case in which it may be practicable, be recovered in behalf of government.

If any person, moreover, exchanges any of his own goods with those belonging to government, he shall, upon conviction, forfeit those goods, and be further punishable in proportion to the amount of the goods of government withdrawn by such exchange, according as by this law is already provided.

Six clauses.

SECTION CXXVI. — Privately lending or employing Public Property.

Any officer of government, who, having under his charge clothes, carpets, furniture, utensils, porcelane, or other articles of a similar description, which are public or government property, employs, or lends the same to be employed for private purposes, shall, as well as also the borrower, be punished with 50 blows; and if the articles are not replaced within ten days, their value shall be estimated, and the offending parties punished in proportion thereto, according to the law concerning pecuniary injuries and malversation in general, reducing the punishment in each case two degrees. The article borrowed must be moreover exactly replaced; and if lost or damaged, the offending parties shall not only be responsible for the value thereof, but shall be likewise punishable according to the law applicable to the case of damaging or destroying the property of government; that is to say, if the damage was done by design, the punishment shall, proportionably to the amount, be two degrees more severe than in common cases of theft; and in an encreasing ratio, as far as 100 blows, and perpetual banishment to the distance of 3000 lee. — If the damage was the result of accident or inadvertence, the punishment shall in each case be three degrees less than when committed by design, and in no case shall it exceed 80 blows, and two years banishment.

No clause.

SECTION CXXVII. — Receipt, Transfer, and Expenditure of the Revenue.

In every public department and tribunal of the empire, the receipts and expenditures shall be particularly specified, as well in the document preserved to commemorate the transaction, as in the document issued to authorize the execution of it, upon which two documents laid laid together, the impresson shall be affixed of the official seal, one half upon each document.

When the receipt and expenditure is not conformable to the tenor of these documents or vouchers, each alleged appropriation of the public property or funds, that is found to be unauthenticated, shall be disallowed in the adjustment of the public accounts, and the superintendant of the department shall be punished in proportion to the deficiency, according to the law relative to embezzlement, the ascending ratio of punishment being, however, limited to 100 blows and banishment to the distance of 3000 lee, and the offending party not liable in any case to be branded.

If the authority issued by any tribunal or department of state for the expenditure of the public money, or public property, is not sanctioned by half the impresson of the official seal, but is merely a written order to the same effect; or if, although the proper document is issued, no document of the same tenor, sanctioned with the other half of the official seal, is retained; or again, if the superintending officer of the treasury or store-house complies with a mere written order, without having any other authority legally authenticated in the manner above stated; or lastly, if such superintending officer, after having received the necessary authority, makes the issue of money or goods required, without duly recording the same on the registers of his department; all such cases shall subject the offenders to the penalties of a transgression of this law.

Nevertheless, when His Majesty's troops are on their march, if the commanding officer makes the demand of provision and other necessaries in due form, such demand shall be sufficient to warrant the issue of the articles required at the different stations through which he passes; but the superintending officer of the several departments shall not omit afterwards to make due report to their respective superiors, of the amount and of the nature of the supplies they had afforded:

Any

Any superintending officer, who refuses to comply in such a case with the demand made upon the stores under his control, shall be punished with 60 blows for the offence.

Fourteen clauses.

SECTION CXXVIII. — Misconduct of supernumerary Revenue Officers.

If any one of the supernumerary attendants, who are hired occasionally for the public service, and employed in the treasuries, store-houses, public offices, or manufactories, should be guilty of appropriating to their private use, borrowing, or exchanging any part of the produce of the revenue, he shall incur the ordinary punishment of embezzlement; and, if the superior who hired him was privy to the offence, and also a participator in the advantages arising from the unlawful transaction, he shall be equally punishable; but if he did not actually receive a share of the profits arising from it, the punishment of the latter shall be proportionally less by one degree.

The officer who hired the supernumerary shall be liable to the same reduced punishment if, being privy to the offence, he takes no cognizance of it, or suppresses it, in his report to his superiors. If ignorant of the offence having been committed, as well as without advantage from it, he shall not be punished or held responsible.

One clause.

SECTION CXXIX. — Fraudulent Appropriation of Public Property.

If, in the distribution of the supplies for the army*, any of the officers, or official attendants belonging thereto, appropriate to themselves any portion of what had been destined to the public service, by

* Under this general term, the pay of the troops, as well as every other species of allotment to them, appears to be comprehended.

falsely

falsely assuming the names and authority of individual soldiers who have claims thereon, they shall be punished in proportion to the amount, according to the law in cases of theft in ordinary cases.

If they appropriate to themselves a portion of what had been destined to the public service, by making a claim for the same in the assumed names, or in behalf of soldiers who, having deserted, had ceased in fact to have any claims whatever, they shall be punished in proportion to the amount, according to the severer law, provided in cases of stealing public property; lastly, if any officer, personally entrusted with the distribution of stores to the troops, appropriates any part of the same to himself, he shall suffer punishment in proportion to the amount, according to the still severer law which is provided against the embezzlement of public property.

In none of these cases, however, shall the offender be liable to be branded*.

No clause.

SECTION CXXX. — Revenue Officers reciprocally answerable for each other.

All the officers, clerks, collectors, inspectors, receivers, and others attached to the revenue department, and having authority in the treasuries and store-houses of government, shall possess a reciprocal controul and right of inspection over each other's proceedings; and when any one individual is guilty of clandestinely applying to his own use, lending to others, or in any manner misusing the property of government, if those who are privy to the removal of the public property from the treasury or store-house, conceal the offence, instead of informing against the offender, or otherwise wilfully connive at the trans-

* See the Appendix, No. XVI. for a notice of an offence of this description, extracted from the Pekin Gazette of the 23d of April 1800.

action,

action, they shall participate equally in the punishment, except in capital cases, when they shall be entitled to a mitigation in the punishment of one degree.

Those who did not connive at the offence, but might have prevented it had they been vigilant and diligent in examination, shall suffer punishment proportionate to the offence, under a reduction of three degrees below that of the actual offender, and the reduced punishment shall not exceed in any instance 100 blows.

In cases however of the superior officers making false and unauthenticated records, and granting unauthenticated and premature releases, particular regulations have been provided, and the inferior collectors, inspectors, and others in the department of the revenue, shall not be responsible for any such offence, unless convicted of having been privy thereto.

No clause.

SECTION CXXXI. — Responsibility of Revenue Officers in Cases of Theft.

When any individual goes out of a public treasury or storehouse, to which he is not actually belonging, if the guards on duty neglect to search his person and examine him, they shall be punished with 20 blows each; and if, in consequence of such neglect, a thief succeeds in carrying away with him any of the property of government, the said guards shall suffer punishment within two degrees of the severity of that to which the thief himself is liable. If a theft is committed at night, in consequence of the want of vigilance of those on guard, they shall each suffer punishment within three degrees of that to which the thief is liable.

The superintending officers, inspectors, and others, not immediately on guard, shall, in cases of theft, suffer punishment within five degrees of that of the thief, for the want of vigilance which is imputable to them, but the punishment shall not, in any such case of misconduct by implication only, exceed 100 blows.

T

able

In any instance however of wilful connivance, the punishment of those who connive shall be as severe as that of the thief, excepting only a reduction of one degree in capital cases.

For acts of robbery and open violence, which the officers and others on duty really had not power to resist, they shall incur no responsibility.

In cases of implied neglect, the officers of government shall retain their places, the offence not being of a private and personal nature; but in all instances of connivance and wilful concurrence they shall be degraded and dismissed.

Two clauses.

SECTION CXXXII. — Responsibility of Receivers and Distributors of Public Property.

When any of the officers or inferior attendants in charge of, or employed in, the several public treasuries and store-houses, have completed their respective periods of service, they shall still remain at their proper stations until their several accounts of receipt and expenditure have been audited by the superior officer in the revenue department, whose duty it is personally to ascertain that there is no incorrectness or deficiency; but after the audit has taken place, they shall be subject to no further detention.

The distribution of such articles as are by law allotted in certain shares and proportions, shall be effected under the immediate direction and authority of the superintending officers of the district and revenue department, and this duty shall not at any time be left to be performed by the officer of the treasury or store-house from whence the articles are to be issued, under the penalty of 100 blows for every such offence.

When

When any public treasure, or other property, has been sealed with the seal of an officer of the revenue, it shall not be lawful for any of the inferior officers or attendants of the department, to break open the same, without previously requesting the officer who originally affixed the seal to be present; and whoever offends against this regulation shall suffer 60 blows, and shall be responsible for the deficiency that may be imputable to his interference.

No clause.

SECTION CXXXIII. — Established Regulations observed in the Receipt and Issue of Public Stores.

If the officers having charge of the treasuries and store-houses of government, and superintending the receipts and deliveries of public stores, issue fresh goods when they ought to have issued such as had been laying on hand, or receive goods of an inferior quality, when they ought to have been of superior quality; or if the superintending officer purchasing or hiring goods for the public service, does not pay the stipulated sum immediately, or stipulates for more or less than the market price or rate of hire of the goods in each case, the amount of the excess above, or of the deficiency below, what was fairly due, shall be estimated, and the offending party shall be proportionably liable to punishment according to the law applicable to the cases of pecuniary malversation in general; and he shall moreover replace to government, or to the individual sufferer, whatever may have been improperly withheld.

The penalties of this law shall extend to all those who, being entrusted with the payment and distribution of salaries and wages, discharge the same in advance, instead of waiting until they regularly become due.

If the superior officer is privy to the commission of any such offence on the part of his inferiors, and takes no cognizance of it, he shall participate

T 2

participate equally in the punishment, but shall not be in any manner responsible, unless acquainted with the fact.

Two clauses.

SECTION CXXXIV.—Vexatious Proceedings on the Occasion of the Receipt or Issue of Public Stores.

If the officers and clerks of government, entrusted with the superintendance of the receipt and collection, or the issue and distribution, of the public property, instead of promptly collecting and promptly distributing it, in any manner vexatiously detain and maliciously obstruct the claimants and contributors, they shall be liable to 50 blows for the delay of one day, and every addition of three days delay shall aggravate the punishment one degree, as far as 60 blows and one year's banishment.

The door-keepers who detain and impede persons attending for the purposes aforesaid, shall be punished according to this rule, and in the same proportion.

If the officer on duty does not collect from the contributors, and distribute to those entitled to receive, in the same order and succession as that in which they attend his office or tribunal for the purpose, he shall suffer the punishment of 40 blows.

Three clauses.

SECTION CXXXV.—Purity of the Precious Metals payable to Government.

Whoever has the charge of receiving and collecting the taxes due to government, or the proceeds of goods sold on account of government, and payable in precious metals, shall be answerable for the delivery of the same in no other than perfectly pure bullion, whether gold or silver.

If

If the gold or silver delivered on these accounts into any of the public treasuries contains an admixture of alloy, the superintending officer, his clerks, and the assay-master, shall be respectively punishable with 40 blows, and shall be made jointly responsible for the deficiency in value of the bullion received.

If guilty of wilfully receiving alloyed silver or gold, with a corrupt view to private advantage, they shall further be liable to the punishment of an embezzlement of public property to the extent of the deficiency; when merely conniving at such fraud, they shall be punishable as in a common case of pecuniary malversation to the same amount.

No clause.

SECTION CXXXVI.— Responsibility for the Damage or Loss of Public Stores.

If those who have the charge of the public treasuries and store-houses, or of any collection and depôt of public property, do not place and arrange the stores according to the established rules, or omit to expose them to the sun and the air at proper times and seasons, by which omission and neglect the property entrusted to them is damaged or destroyed, the loss shall be estimated and the responsible parties punished in proportion to the amount according to the law concerning pecuniary malversation in general, and they shall be required moreover to make good to government the amount of the loss sustained.

Nevertheless, should sudden and unexpected rain penetrate the building, or fire be communicated to it from without, or thieves and robbers break in, so that from any of these causes damage or loss arises to the property under charge, if the superintending officer deposes a proper person to ascertain the nature and extent of the damage, and makes a clear and correct report thereof to his superiors, he shall be pardoned, and excused from his responsibility to make good the deficiency.
be

On the other hand, if the superintending officer, having been guilty of any fraudulent disposal, loan, or transfer of the public property, takes advantage of the subsequent circumstance of an accidental loss by fire, water, or thieves, to falsify the registers of his office by attributing the whole loss and deficiency to such accident, and then makes a report of the case conformably to such false record, in order to deceive his superiors and screen himself, he shall be liable to punishment in proportion to the amount of the total damage and deficiency, according to the law concerning embezzlement.

If those who are associated with him in office are privy to, but take no notice of, such criminal proceeding, they shall be equally punishable, but otherwise shall not be held responsible.

One clause.

SECTION CXXXVII. — Regular Transmission of Public Stores from Inferior to Superior Jurisdictions.

The taxes levied and collected in the several districts of the empire, the supplies purchased, and the several kinds of warlike stores prepared and manufactured for the army, having been delivered into the charge of the several governments of cities of the second and third orders and having by them been transmitted in regular routine, and under the conduct of proper officers, to the governors of cities of the first order to whose jurisdiction they belong respectively, if those governors do not immediately take the further transmission of the articles under their charge, and issue the necessary orders, as well as depute the proper persons under their authority to superintend their conveyance and delivery to the treasurers of the respective spective provinces, the president, deputy, and clerks of every government thus neglectful, shall suffer a punishment of 80 blows, but the offence shall not be deemed of a private or personal nature.

In like manner, if the provincial treasurers do not immediately take charge of all the public property thus received, and adopt proper measures for effecting its conveyance to the supreme court for all affairs of revenue, the president, deputy, and clerks of the treasurers' offices, shall be equally punishable as the other officers in the preceding instances*.

From the penalties of this law, exception is necessarily made in all such cases wherein a slower mode of transmission than ordinary is especially directed.

If those officers with whom the transmission of such produce of the revenue towards its destination begins, or those who afterwards superintend and accompany the same, with the attendants who are employed in effecting the package, re-package, and transfer of the goods, do not place and dispose them according to the established regulations, in consequence of which deviation or omission a loss or damage ensues, the extent of such loss or damage shall be estimated, and the offence punished in proportion to the amount, according to the law concerning pecuniary malversation or injury to property in general; the offending parties shall likewise make good the deficiency.

If, however, in a conveyance by water, accidents should ensue from the winds and waves, upon sudden and unexpected bad weather, or at any time fire should be communicated from without, or thieves break in and steal, then, provided the superintending officer, immediately after ascertaining the circumstance, makes a faithful report

* These regulations obviously regard only the surplus revenue, or that which is not required for the service of the provinces in which it is collected. The total amount of the revenue collected in the Chinese empire has been stated at about 66,000,000*l.* and that of the surplus, remitted to Peking, at about 12,000,000*l.* and these sums are probably not far from the truth, though on such a subject, the accuracy of the information which, in the present state of our relations with China, is likely to be accessible to Europeans, must be in some degree questionable.

thereof,

thereof, and of the extent of the loss or damage that has been sustained, to his superior, and provided that the officer who shall have been thereupon deputed by such superior to examine into the truth of the statement, confirms its accuracy and fidelity, the responsible parties shall become free, both from liability to punishment, and from the charge of making good the deficiency; but should there prove to have been any deception or malversation committed, then, whatever the cause of loss or damage may have been, the offending party shall be liable to punishment in proportion to the full amount, according to the law respecting embezzlement.

If the officers with whom the transmission of the produce of the revenue begins, do not transmit the identical goods or articles received from the contributors, but purchase other goods or articles to substitute in their room, the difference between the value of the articles transmitted and those withdrawn, shall be estimated, and the offence punished in proportion to such difference, according to the law concerning the embezzlement of public property.

Nineteen clauses.

SECTION CXXXVIII. — Rule of Forfeiture and Restitution.

If any officer in pronouncing judgment in a case of property illegally holden, orders it to be restored to the original proprietor, when it ought, conformably to the laws, to have been forfeited to the state, or directs a forfeiture of it to the state, when it ought by law to have been restored to the proprietor, he shall for such false judgment be punished in proportion to the amount of the property illegally awarded according to the provisions of the law against pecuniary malversation in general, but the punishment shall not in any of these cases exceed the limit of 100 blows.

Two clauses.

SECTION CXXXIX. — Intermediate Charge of Public Property.

In all cases of public property which had been issued from the treasuries and store-houses of government to be delivered over, or paid away, to certain persons, but not yet received by such persons; and in all cases of private property, which, being destined to the service of government, has been received for that purpose, but not actually deposited in the public treasuries or store-houses, the goods shall be considered in the former case still to preserve, and in the latter case, already to have acquired, the character of public property.

Any fraudulent loan or misapplication thereof shall therefore subject the holder of the goods, in proportion to the amount misapplied, to the full punishment provided by law in the case of directly embezzling any other kind of public property. — Upon the same principle, the fraudulent application of such property, if imputable to persons who have not the charge thereof, shall be punished as an ordinary theft of public property.

One clause.

SECTION CXL. — Concealment or Denial, either of Property under Sentence of Forfeiture, or of Families under Sentence of Servitude.

The enslaving of the families of offenders, and the forfeiture of their real and personal property, shall not take place except in cases of treason, rebellion, or some other of the ten treasonable offences, or where it is by law expressly ordered and provided; and if any officer of government passes such sentence of forfeiture unauthorizedly and unjustly, he shall be punished as in the case of passing a wilfully unjust sentence of perpetual banishment. — If the sentence was only pronounced, nounced,

U

nounced, but not executed, the punishment shall be less by one degree.

If those who are to give an account of the number of persons in a family under lawful sentence of perpetual service, and also of the real and personal property of such family which is by law forfeited to the state, are guilty of any deception or concealment, they shall be punished in the following manner :

In the first place, if they do not give a true and faithful account of the number of persons in such family, they shall be punished in the same manner as is provided in an ordinary case of suppressing the number of persons in the record of a family in the public register.

In the second place, if they do not give a true and faithful statement of the forfeited lands of the said family, they shall be punished according to the law for punishing those who falsely report the extent and value of their lands, to avoid duly contributing to the revenue. If they falsely report the amount of the houses, cattle, and miscellaneous articles under sentence of forfeiture, they shall be further punishable in proportion to the value of the property suppressed and falsely reported, according to the law concerning pecuniary malversation and injury to property in general ; but the punishment shall not, in any of these cases, exceed 100 blows.

All such of the family, and such portions of their possessions, as were attempted to be concealed in evasion of the sentence of the laws, shall be in the former case held accountable to the service, and, in the latter case, forfeited to the use, of government, as previously provided and directed ; but the punishment of misrepresentation shall be inflicted solely on the individual who made the false return.

If the head inhabitant of the district, from a partiality in favour of those under condemnation, confirms the false report, and if the magistrate knowing it to be false connives at it, they shall be equally punished punished with the individual with whom the falsehood originated, and the punishment, instead of being limited to 100 blows, shall be regularly increased in proportion to the amount in question, according to the law above referred to.

If such officer or head inhabitant shall have been bribed to connive on the occasion, he shall be subject to any contingent augmentation of punishment, which may be found proportionate to the amount of the bribe, agreeably to the law against receiving bribes for unlawful purposes.

When, on the other hand, a false report is accepted as correct, not through wilful connivance, but through inadvertence and defect of examination, the punishment shall be three degrees less than that to which the false reporter is liable, and shall not in any case exceed 50 blows.

Eight clauses.

END OF THE FOURTH BOOK OF THE THIRD DIVISION.

B O O K V.

DUTIES AND CUSTOMS.

SECTION CXLI.— Duty on Salt *.

I. WHOEVER, not having a licence, engages in a clandestine traffic in salt, that is to say, possesses any quantity however small of this article for sale, shall be punished with 100 blows, and banished for three years.

If such smuggler of salt is moreover provided with offensive weapons, the punishment shall be aggravated one degree, so as to amount to perpetual banishment to the distance of 2000 lee. — If he falsely accuses, and recriminates upon, innocent persons, his punishment shall be increased three degrees, whereby the place of his perpetual banishment will be removed to a distance of 3000 lee; if lastly, he resists the officers of justice employed to take him into custody, he shall suffer death by being beheaded, after the usual period of imprisonment.

Not only the article itself, but likewise the carriage or the vessel by which it is conveyed, and the horses or cattle by means of which it is drawn or transported, shall be forfeited to government.

* The salt trade in China, the duties upon which form a considerable branch of the revenue, is a regulated monopoly, carried on by a limited number of merchants, to whom licences are granted by the Crown, and whose proceedings are at the same time subjected to the inspection and control of public officers especially appointed to that service, in each province. — The merchants who enjoy this monopoly, as well as those who have the exclusive privilege of trading with foreigners, rank very high in point of opulence and respectability:—the chief salt merchant of Canton is at present considered to be the richest subject in the province, and the next to him in wealth is, probably, a merchant, now retired from business, but who till lately held the principal station among those engaged in the foreign trade, and who acquired nearly the whole of his extensive fortune in the course of his transactions, and those of his family, with the English East India Company.

The

The guide or conductor, the agent for the sale, the harbourer of the smuggler, and the consignee of the salt, shall be respectively punished with 90 blows and two years and a half banishment, as accessories.

Whoever carries, lets out beasts of burthen to carry, or furnishes any other means of conveying, this article without a licence, shall suffer the punishment of 80 blows and two years banishment.

If any person, although not bound by his office so to do, gives information of, and seizes any smuggled salt, he shall obtain the whole amount of the forfeiture as his reward. — In like manner, if one of a party of smugglers of salt surrenders himself, and gives information to government, he shall not only be pardoned, but rewarded with the whole amount of the forfeited article. — Even if a single smuggler voluntarily surrenders himself, he shall be pardoned.

The magistrates, in taking cognizance of any case of smuggled salt which may be brought under their consideration, shall confine their investigation to the examination of the goods seized, and of the offences committed by the smugglers in custody. — They shall not listen to any charges the smugglers may allege against others, whether in recrimination upon their accusers or otherwise. — Any magistrate who disregards this restriction, shall be punished as in an ordinary case of wilful deviation from justice, in determining the punishment of offences.

II. Whoever, being engaged and employed in a licensed and established salt-work, delivers out of the establishment annually a greater quantity of salt than is permitted and specified in the licence, or boils down salt brine clandestinely for private sale, shall be prosecuted, and punished in the same manner as the unlicensed dealer; and all those who, being privy to, connive at this unlawful transaction, or assist in the unlawful disposal of the goods, shall be subject to an equal participation in the punishment by law provided.

III. When-

III. Whenever a married woman is guilty of any breach of the regulations of the salt-trade, if her husband or sons are at home, and privy to the offence, they shall suffer the punishment attending the breach of the law, instead of the woman; but if the husband is absent from home, and the sons are of a tender age, the woman alone shall be punished, and (according to the laws concerning females,) that part of the sentence, which consists of some degree of banishment, shall be commuted for the proportionate fine.

IV. Whoever purchases for use any salt that he knows to have been prepared without a licence and sold clandestinely, shall be punished with 100 blows; but if he so purchases the salt in order to sell it again, he shall be punished with 100 blows and three years banishment.

V. The superintendants of the salt-duties, and the several officers of the civil and military departments, who may at any time be charged with the pursuit and seizure of clandestine and illicit traders, shall immediately deliver such of the offenders as they may have seized, into the custody of the superior courts of the treasurers of the provinces, not being themselves empowered by the laws to examine into their offences; but if any of the superior courts, in collusion with the subordinate magistrates, suffer such offenders to escape from trial and deserved punishment, such conduct shall render them (the members of such courts) punishable in an equal degree with the original offenders; and if such a collusion is the consequence of bribery, they shall experience any aggravation of the punishment which may result from the application to the case of the laws against bribery for unlawful purposes.

VI. The superintendants of the salt-duties, and the several officers of the civil and military boards or tribunals, who may at any time be charged with the pursuit and seizure of clandestine and illicit traders, shall station in convenient places within the limits of their jurisdictions, and and especially near salt-works established according to law, a sufficient number of revenue and police officers, to prevent and put a stop to all such smuggling and clandestine proceedings, as are hereby prohibited. If any instances of smuggling take place notwithstanding these regulations, the officer of the department, and those deputed by him to suppress such practices, shall upon the first occurrence of this nature be liable to be punished with 40 blows; upon the second, with 50 blows; and upon the third, with 60 blows; but this not being deemed an offence of a private and personal nature, the persons guilty of it shall not be deprived of their offices and employments. On the other hand, if those officers wilfully connive at any act of smuggling, or if any commanders of troops suffer their soldiers to carry on any such illicit traffic, they shall suffer the same punishment as the smugglers, and be deemed, moreover, guilty of, and liable to, the consequences of a private and personal offence, the punishment of which will again be subject to any further aggravation that may result according to law, upon a conviction of bribery. If the revenue officer employed upon this duty, suppresses the discovery of smuggled salt, and appropriates the amount to his own use, instead of delivering it up to his superior officer's tribunal, he shall be punished with 100 blows and three years banishment. If such revenue officer falsely charges an innocent person with smuggling, his punishment shall be aggravated three degrees, and accordingly amount to a punishment of 100 blows and perpetual banishment to the distance of 3000 lee.

VII. Upon the removal of salt licenced by government, a regular permit shall be made out, expressing the quantities of salt in each bag; the allowance for tare, and the total amount of the salt intended to be removed; at each custom-house on the route, the quantity of the article shall be ascertained to be conformable to the permit, by weighing and examining some of the bags taken promiscuously; if it is discovered that the quantity transported exceeds the amount stated in the permit, permit, the offenders shall be punished as in any ordinary case of unlicensed trade in the same article. If the salt-merchant conveys the salt through an unusual route, by which means the examination of the officers of government in the intervening stations is evaded, and their certificates consequently found to be wanting upon the permit, such merchant shall be punished with 90 blows, and the goods sent back to the stations where they had not but ought to have been examined, that the regular inspection may take place; the merchant will be further contingently liable to an aggravation of his punishment if upon such inspection taking place, the salt in his possession is found to exceed the amount specified in the permit.

VIII. The salt merchants and traders shall always transport the licensed salt for sale, in the exact quantities and proportions specified in their respective permits or licences; if the salt is sold in one place, while the permit is deposited in another, and therefore cannot be produced on demand, they shall be liable to all the penalties of a clandestine sale. If within ten days after having sold off the whole of any quantity of salt for which a permit has been granted, the salt merchant does not deliver up such permit to the proper officer of government in the district, he shall be liable to a punishment of 40 blows; and if he makes use of such expired permit, to colour and legalize the sale of any additional quantity of salt, he shall be held liable to the several pains and penalties denounced against the clandestine sale of this article in ordinary cases.

IX. In all cases of the transportation of salt licensed by government, whether from the manufactory to the store-house, or from one store-house to another, if military weapons are carried for defence, or if any other vessels than those belonging to government are employed, it shall be deemed a clandestine trade, and punished accordingly.

X. If any salt merchant, having submitted the salt for which he held a licence to the inspection of the officers of government, that it might be ascertained to be agreeable thereto, afterwards adulterates it with sand or earthy matter, and in such state exposes his goods for sale, he shall be punished with 80 blows.

be

XI. If any person takes the salt which the government licence expressly declared to be saleable only in a particular district or quarter of the country, and conveys it for sale to any place not described in the licence, he shall be punished with 100 blows; the person who knowingly purchases the article shall be punished with 60 blows, but shall not be liable to such penalty, if ignorant of the illegality of the transaction. The goods thus conveyed for sale contrary to the terms of the licence, shall be forfeited to government.

Twenty-two clauses.

SECTION CXLII. — Superintendants of Salt Duties to receive no intermediate Profits.

If any of the officers or clerks of the tribunals and departments, having the administration of the laws respecting salt, and the collection of the salt duties, take upon themselves under assumed and fictitious names the payment of the duties intermediately, by purchasing or otherwise procuring salt licences through the authority and influence of their several offices, and thus appropriate to themselves those profits which ought to have been enjoyed by private individuals of the community, they shall be punished with 100 blows and three years banishment. Their property in salt, and the licences for vending it, shall both be forfeited upon conviction.

No clause.

SECTION CXLIII. — Preservation of the Salt Laws from Neglect.

All the wholesale merchants who purchase salt licences from government, shall personally receive their respective portions of the article

X

at

at the public works where it is prepared: if instead of so doing, they dispose of their licences to others at advanced prices, so that in the end, the salt regulations are evaded and counteracted, the feller and purchaser of the licence shall in each case be punished with 80 blows, and the negotiator of the sale or of the transfer of the licence, shall suffer the punishment next in degree: The purchase-money received for the sale of the licence by the feller, and the salt obtained by the purchaser of the licence, conformably to the tenor thereof, shall equally be forfeited. The retail venders of salt, who receive and dispose of the article at the different markets on behalf of the wholesale dealer, are not however by any means to be considered as coming within the scope of this law, unless they should likewise engage in the trade as principals.

No clause.

SECTION CXLIV. — Smuggling of Tea *.

Whoever is guilty of a clandestine sale of tea, shall be liable to the same penalties as already provided in the case of a clandestine sale of salt. Whoever, having possession of a tea licence that had been acted upon, and noted accordingly by the officers of government to whom it had been presented for examination, avails himself of such expired and cancelled licence, to collect upon the authority thereof a fresh supply from the tea plantations, shall be liable to all the penalties of smuggling tea in the ordinary manner.

Six clauses.

* The regulations comprised under this head relate solely to the home consumption. The laws framed for the government of the foreign trade, being for the most part of recent date, are not contained among the original institutions, and their application being also confined within narrow limits, they are not described at any length even in the supplementary part of the penal code.—Some official documents connected with the subject of foreign intercourse will be found in the Appendix, No. XI.

SECTION CXLV. — Smuggling of Allum.

Whoever clandestinely manufactures allum and exposes it to sale, shall be subject to penalties similar to those already provided in the case of salt. In all places and situations which are found to yield a supply of this article, the amount, and the extent of the duty to be levied thereon, shall be ascertained and determined upon fixed principles, and private individuals shall not be allowed to bring it to sale without previously purchasing licences for that purpose from government. X

No clause.

SECTION CXLVI. — Evasion of Duties, or Smuggling in general.*

All merchants and dealers who defraud the revenue, by not duly contributing the amount of the rated and established duties on their merchandize, shall be punished with 50 blows, and forfeit half the value of the goods smuggled to government; three-tenths of such forfeiture shall in general be given to the informer, but no such reward shall be allowed when the smuggled goods are discovered and ascertained, by the regular officer on duty. X

Whoever conveys goods through a barrier or custom-house station, without taking out the regular permit, shall be liable to all the or-

* The rigour of the laws against smuggling has been latterly encreased by several statutes and government edicts; and an instance occurred at Canton in the year 1801, in which a Chinese merchant was condemned to pay a fine of one hundred times the legal duty, upon some goods that had been attempted to be smuggled from the ship for which (according to the custom of the port) he had undertaken to become security.—It is to be observed, however, that this enormous fine was afterwards remitted, and that the sentence to that effect was only passed by the officiating magistrate provisionally, though recommended, at the same time, to the consideration of the Emperor as an exception to the established laws, which the peculiar circumstances of the case, and the frequency of the offence had rendered expedient. X dinary penalties of smuggling. The permit shall be drawn out conformably to the statement made of the quantity and quality of the goods; agreeably to which likewise, the duties shall be levied.

Whoever, lastly, purchases cattle without a stamped contract, shall be liable to punishment according to this law, and forfeit half the value to government.

Two clauses.

SECTION CXLVII. — Merchant Vessels having false Manifests of their Cargoes.

All large trading vessels which navigate the seas, shall on their reaching their destined port, deliver in to the officers of the custom-house, a full and true manifest of all the merchandize on board, that the duties payable thereon may be duly assessed. If the country merchant, or agent for the goods at the creek or reach where the vessel remains, makes no report, or makes a false and defective report, he shall be punished with 100 blows, and the whole amount of the goods not reported, or omitted in the report, shall be forfeited. The individual who receives on shore such goods as had not been duly reported, shall be equally punishable.

The person who gives information of a breach of this law, shall receive a reward of 20 leang or ounces of silver.

No clause.

SECTION CXLVIII. — Arrears of Duties and Customs to be paid within the Year in which they are due.

The whole of the arrears of duties and customs for which any individual has rendered himself liable to government in the course of the year, either for salt or tea licences granted to him, or upon any other grounds whatsoever, shall be finally discharged before the end of such year;

year; and if the demands of government are not liquidated by the time specified, the defaulter of one-tenth of his dues shall be punished with 40 blows, and the punishment shall be inflicted one degree more severely for every additional tenth in respect to which any individual is deficient in his quota of contribution; the punishment shall not however exceed 80 blows at the utmost, but such defaulter, besides being punished, shall continue to be held responsible for his arrears.

If the superintendants of the salt and tea duties, the superintending officers at the barrier custom-houses, and the collectors of every other description of duties and customs, are not active and diligent in the performance of the business of their several departments, so that the produce of the revenue in consequence of evasion or the non-payment of arrears, is in any one year less by one-tenth than in the years immediately preceding, they shall be liable in every such case to a punishment of 50 blows, and for every further defalcation of a tenth in the produce, there shall be an augmentation of one degree in the punishment, as far as the limit of 100 blows; the superintending officers shall likewise be held answerable for the ultimate discharge of all such arrears.

If the contributions due to the revenue are correctly made by the parties liable thereto, but fraudulently omitted to be entered in the registers of the revenue by the officers and clerks in that department, with the view of lending out to others, or applying to their private use and advantage, such omitted portions of the revenue, the said officers and clerks shall be liable to punishment in proportion to the amount so omitted, according the law in any ordinary case of the embezzlement of public stores.

Three clauses.

B O O K VI.

PRIVATE PROPERTY.

SECTION CXLIX. — *Ufury.

WHOEVER lends his money or other property of value, in order to derive a profit from such transaction, shall be limited to the receipt of an interest on the amount or value of the loan, at the rate of three per cent. per month; and, whatever the period of years or months may be, upon which interest is due at the day of repayment, no more shall be received or demanded, than the original sum lent, and the lawful interest thereon, to any amount not exceeding the principal.

Whoever transgresses this law, shall be punishable at the least with 40 blows, and as much more severely as may be proportionate to the amount of the excess of interest according to the law concerning pecuniary malversation in general; the punishment shall not however in any case exceed 100 blows.

Any superintending officer or clerk of a tribunal or department of government, lending money or other property of value to the people under the jurisdiction of such tribunal or department, in order to derive a profit and advantage from such loan, shall be punished with 80 blows, although he should have taken no more than the lawful interest; but if the interest derived from the transaction is excessive, he shall be liable to such aggravation of his punishment, as may render it proportionate to the amount of the excess, conformably to the law against receiving a bribe for a purpose not in itself unlawful; that is to say, if, the half sum of the several excesses of interest received from different persons, by an officer having a regular salary, amounts to 30 leang or ounces of silver, the punishment in each case shall be increased to 90 blows. But in the case of an inferior officer, not having such regular salary, the increase of punishment shall only take place, when the said half sum amounts to 40 ounces of silver.

* See Appendix, No. XVII.

In both cases, the punishment shall be subject to a further increase of one degree for every addition of ten ounces value to the amount of the corrupt transaction, until it attains the extreme limit of 100 blows and perpetual banishment to the distance of 3000 lee. In both cases likewise, the excess of interest extorted from the borrower shall be refunded.

On the other hand, if the debtor does not fulfil his agreement with the creditor, both in respect to the repayment of the principal, and the payment of the lawful interest, he shall be liable to punishment according to the following scale.

If three months after the stipulated period, he falls short of the amount due to his creditor by five leang or upwards, he shall be liable to a punishment of 10 blows, and to an increase of punishment at the rate of one degree for every additional month of delay, as far as 40 blows.

If three months after the stipulated period he falls short of the amount due to his creditor by fifty leang or upwards, he shall be liable to a punishment of 20 blows, and to an increase of punishment at the rate of one degree for every additional month of delay, as far as 50 blows.

If, lastly, three months after the stipulated period, he falls short of the amount due to his creditor, by 100 leang or upwards, he shall be liable to a punishment of 30 blows, and to an increase of punishment at the rate of one degree for every additional month of delay, as far as the limit of 60 blows ; and in this as well as in the preceding cases; the debtor shall continue responsible for the amount of the principal and interest lawfully due.

as

If a creditor whose debtor has failed to fulfil his agreement, instead of applying for redress at the tribunal of the magistrate of the district; relies on his own power and authority, and attempts to reimburse himself by seizing violently the cattle, furniture, or other property of such debtor, he shall be punished with 80 blows ; the aforesaid punishment may however be redeemed by the payment of the established fine, provided the creditor is not found to have seized more in value than was actually due to him. On the other hand, if the estimated value of the property so unlawfully seized, exceeds the principal and interest due, the excess shall subject the offender to a punishment as much greater than 80 blows as may be found to be proportionate to the amount thereof, according to the law concerning pecuniary malversation in general ; such excess in the amount or value of the seizure, shall moreover be returned to the debtor.

If a creditor accepts the wives or children of his debtor in pledge for payment, he shall be punished with 100 blows ; and one degree more severely, if he is afterwards guilty of criminal intercourse with the same.

If the creditor seizes and carries off by force his debtors wives or children, he shall be punished two degrees more severely than in the case of receiving them in pledge by mutual agreement ; and, lastly, if he is guilty of a criminal intercourse with the females so seized, he shall suffer death by being strangled, after the usual period of imprisonment.

All persons so unlawfully transferred, seized, or detained, shall be restored to their respective families, and the debt originally due in any such case, shall not afterwards be recoverable by the creditor.

Eight clauses.

SEC-

SECTION CL. — Dilapidation of Property in Trust.

If an individual who is entrusted with the goods or live-stock of another wastes or consumes the same, without authority from the proprietor, he shall be punished in proportion to the value, one degree less than is provided by the law concerning pecuniary malversation in general, and the extreme extent of the punishment shall be limited to 90 blows, and banishment for two years and a half.

If such trustee should moreover deceitfully allege the death of the cattle, or the loss of the money or other property so intrusted to him, he shall be punished in proportion to the amount or value, one degree less than is provided by law in cases of theft, but shall not be branded, nor suffer more than 100 blows and three years banishment, however considerable the amount or value deficient.

In all such cases the trustee shall be obliged to restore the property committed to his care, or its full amount and value, to the right owner.

Nevertheless, if he can bring satisfactory evidence of the destruction or loss of the goods by fire, water, or thieves, or of the sickness and death of the live stock, he shall be thereby totally freed from punishment, as well as from pecuniary responsibility.

All incidental circumstances of fraud, or fraudulent sale of entrusted property, of which an offender against this law may be proved guilty, shall be moreover taken into consideration in aggravation of his punishment, conformably to the laws specially applicable in such cases.

One clause.

SECTION CLI. — Lost and forgotten Property.

Whoever finds any lost and forgotten goods shall, within five days time, deliver up the same to the magistrate of the district. If it is then

Y

then ascertained to have been public property, the entire amount shall be retained by government, but otherwise remain to be claimed and identified by the owner, to whom half shall be restored, and the remaining half allowed as a reward to the finder. If no person proves a claim to the property within thirty days, the finder shall then receive back and retain the whole.

If the finder of any lost and forgotten goods, does not deliver up the same to a magistrate within the five days already stated, he shall be punished in proportion to the amount or value, according to a scale grounded upon that established by the law concerning pecuniary malversation in general; that is to say, if it proves to be public property, he shall suffer the full extent of the punishment provided by that law, otherwise, a proportionate punishment less in each case by two degrees; half of the private property, the discovery of which had been unlawfully suppressed, shall be forfeited to government, and the other half restored to the owner, when an owner can be found; but if none, then the whole shall be retained by government.

If any person, by digging in private or public ground, discovers articles which had been buried and concealed in the earth, and to which no owner can be found, he shall be at liberty to retain the same for his own use, saving and excepting all ancient utensils, bells, sacred vases, seals of officers of government, and other such extraordinary and uncommon articles as it is not befitting the people in general to possess; all which, within thirty days after the discovery, must be delivered up to government, on pain of receiving a punishment of 80 blows for omitting to do so, and still continuing to be responsible for the surrender of the goods to government.

No clause.

END OF THE SIXTH BOOK OF THE THIRD DIVISION.

B O O K VII.

SALES AND MARKETS.

SECTION CLII. — Licence of Commercial Agents.

I N every city, public market, and village district, where there is a commercial agent stationed and authorized by government, and in every sea-port and reach of a river, at which there are ship-agents, customarily stationed and authorized in the same manner, these agents shall be selected from such of the inhabitants as are from their wealth enabled to sustain the pecuniary responsibility attached to the situation; a regularly authenticated licence shall be granted to them by the officer of the district, and they shall be required to keep an official register of the ships and merchants that successively arrive, describing their real names and references, and also the marks, numbers, quality and quantity of the goods imported or introduced into the market; which register shall be submitted to a monthly examination at the board or tribunal of the officer of the district, that he may act accordingly.

Whoever privately takes upon himself the business of such agency without the licence of government, shall suffer a punishment of 60 blows, and forfeit to government the amount of his profits arising therefrom.

If the officers of government, or any of the established agents, connive at such illegal assumption of power, they shall be respectively punished with 50 blows, and dismissed from their employments.

Six clauses.

SECTION CLIII. — Valuation of Merchandize.

The valuation and appraisement of goods and merchandize, shall be effected by the commercial agents, after due consideration, and upon fair and equitable terms; any deviation on their part from such terms, either by enhancement or depreciation of value, shall subject the agent to a proportionate punishment according to the law concerning pecuniary malversation in general.

If the difference between his appreciation of the goods and their real value is converted by such agent to his own benefit and advantage, he shall then be liable to the severer punishment provided by the law in cases of theft, except that the part of the sentence which requires the offender to be branded, shall, in these cases, be remitted.

If the commercial agent estimates the amount of a fine or forfeiture to which any offender is liable, more or less than is conformable to the just execution of the laws, he shall be liable to suffer according to the scale of punishment, which officers of government are subject to, by the law concerning a wilful deviation from justice in pronouncing a judicial sentence.

If, lastly, the agent has been induced by a bribe to estimate falsely the price of goods, or the amount of forfeitures, he shall be liable to a punishment as much more severe than that already provided, as may be found to correspond to the amount of the bribe, according to the law against bribery for an unlawful purpose, committed by officers who have not regular salaries.

One clause.

SECTION CLIV. — Monopolizers and unfair Traders.

When the parties to the purchase and sale of goods do not amicably agree respecting the terms, if one of them monopolizing, or otherwise using using undue influence in the market, obliges the other to allow him an exorbitant profit; or if artful speculators in trade, by entering into a private understanding with the commercial agent, and by employing other unwarrantable contrivances, raise the price of their own goods, although of low value, and depress the prices of those of others, although of high value, in all such cases the offending parties shall be severally punished with 80 blows each for their misconduct.

When a trader, observing the nature of the commercial business carrying on by his neighbour, contrives to suit or manage the disposal or appreciation of his own goods in such a manner, as to derange, and excite distrust against, the proceedings of the other, and thereby draws unfairly a greater proportion of profit to himself than usual, he shall be punished with 40 blows.

The exorbitant profit derived from any one of the foregoing unlawful practices, shall, as far as it exceeds a fair proportion, be esteemed a theft, and the offender punished accordingly, whenever the amount renders the punishment provided by the law against theft more severe than that hereby established and provided. The offender shall not however be branded as in the ordinary cases of theft.

Eight clauses.

SECTION CLV. — False Weights, Measures, and Scales.

Whoever procures false measures, or false weights and scales, and makes use of them in the public market; and whoever adds to, or takes any thing away from, those measures, weights and scales which have been issued and sanctioned by government, shall be punished with 60 blows. The same punishment shall likewise be inflicted on the artificer of such articles.

If

If any measures, weights, or scales, not made according to the established rules, are issued under the sanction of government, the officer who issued, and the artificer who made them, shall alike be punished with 70 blows. The inspecting officers, if privy to, and conniving thereat, shall be equally punishable; but if only guilty of neglecting to examine and compare such articles with the standards established and provided, their punishment shall be less by one degree.

If any measures, weights, or scales are made use of in the public market, which, however exactly conformable to standard, have not been examined, compared and duly stamped by the officers or government, they shall be held to be unlawful, and the person employing them shall be accordingly punishable with 40 blows.

If the officers and others in the employ of government in the public treasuries and store-houses, make any alteration in the measures, weights, and scales issued or sanctioned by government, whereby more or less than the just amount of any article is received in contribution to the revenue, or issued upon the public service, they shall be punished with 100 blows at the least, and as much more severely, as the law respecting pecuniary malversation may, proportionably to the amount of such afore said deviation, be found to authorize. — If however the consequent excess of receipts, or amount of short deliveries, has been converted by the offender to his own private use and advantage, his punishment shall be inflicted in proportion to the amount, according to the severer scale established by the law concerning the embezzlement of public property.

The artificer employed in effecting such fraudulent alteration in the measures, weights or scales issued or sanctioned by government, shall be punished with 80 blows.

The superintending officer having immediate jurisdiction over the department of the offender, shall be equally punishable, whenever ever, being privy to, he takes no cognizance of such transgression; when it is imputable to his inattention and neglect only, his punishment shall be less than that of the original offender by three degrees, and in no case exceed 100 blows.

No clause.

SECTION CLVI. — Manufactures not equal or conformable to Standard.

If a private individual manufactures any article for sale, which is not as strong, durable, and genuine, as it is professed to be, or if he prepares and sells any silks or other stuffs of a thinner or lighter texture and quality, narrower, or shorter, than the established or customary standard, he shall be punished with 50 blows.

One clause.

END OF THE THIRD DIVISION.

PLACEHOLDER PAGE

This page is a placeholder, inserted to ensure proofread pages will be aligned even if this page is replaced.

Replace with the original page if available.

FOURTH DIVISION,

Ritual Laws.

B O O K I.

SACRED RITES.

SECTION CLVII.— Administration of Sacred Rites.

ALL the officers of government whose province it is to superintend the grand Imperial sacrifices and oblations to Heaven and Earth, and to the spirit presiding over the productions of the earth and the generations of mankind*; and those likewise who have the direction of the sacred rites which are performed in the temple of the Imperial

* Whether these, and some other similar terms employed by the Chinese, are intended to imply the existence of as many distinct objects of worship, or are in fact only descriptive of the different characters and attributes of one supreme Being, recognized and adored as such, is a question upon which even the missionaries, to whom the investigation of the principles of the national or state religion in China must have been an object of peculiar interest, were for a long time divided. The latter opinion was always strenuously supported in the writings, and countenanced by the practice of the Jesuits; but the former, though in a great measure incompatible with the pleasing notions which have been entertained of the purity of this most ancient part of the Chinese religious system, appears at present to prevail, or at least to be tacitly acknowledged in all the forms of instruction adopted in China by the teachers of Christianity. The phrases considered to be of questionable meaning are carefully excluded, and the Deity is addressed by the native converts under no other title than Tien Chu or “Master of Heaven,” a term or combination of words, previously unknown in the Chinese language, but thus introduced by Europeans, in the idea that any other would be liable to abuse or misconception.

x the true & proper Spirit of every Established Religion

Family, shall prepare themselves for every such occasion by abstinence; they shall bind themselves to the performance of such abstinence*, by solemn vows; and previous to making these vows, they shall announce the intended sacrifices and oblations in the manner by law established.

If they do not by such preparatory declaration of the day appointed for the sacred rite, give sufficient notice to the tribunals and public boards the members of which are officially required to assist at the ceremony, they shall be punished with 50 blows; and if, in consequence of such omission, the solemn proceedings are in any respect irregularly or imperfectly conducted, the punishment shall be increased to 100 blows.

When, after the regular notice has been duly given, any imperfection or irregularity occurs in the administration of the sacred rites, all the individuals to whom such imperfection or irregularity is attributable, shall be subject to the last mentioned punishment.

If any individual of the intended assemblage † of officers of government for the performance of sacred rites, having had the Imperial command to prepare himself by abstinence duly communicated to him, takes the oath of abstinence, but afterwards violates it, either by mourning for the dead, visiting the sick, taking cognizance of capital offences, or partaking of public feasts, he shall in all such cases forfeit one month's salary.

If the superintendants of the rites are aware that any individual of the intended assemblage, has it incumbent on him to mourn for a relation within the four degrees, or was ever convicted of an offence

* The sense in which the term abstinence is employed is explained in a subsequent paragraph of this section.

† Literally "The one hundred officers of government," but meaning no more than a considerable assemblage of persons, varying in number according to circumstances.—In the same manner, when the expression "ten thousand" occurs in the Chinese language, it does not generally imply any precise number, but merely a great or an indefinite multitude.

punishable punishable with 50 or more blows of the bamboo, or with banishment, they shall not permit such person to assist at the ceremony, on penalty of forfeiting themselves the aforesaid one month's salary.

The superintendent of the rites, if ignorant of the cause of mourning, or former misconduct, of a member of the assemblage, shall not be liable to the penalty; but it shall be levied on those who, being subject to such disabilities, do not make known the same.

Moreover, all those officers of government shall be liable to the same forfeiture, who, after having taken the oaths of abstinence, do not pass the night apart from their families, if on duty in the provinces, or at their official apartments, if on duty at court.

If the animals, precious stones, silks, grain, and other articles introduced in the grand sacrifices and oblations, are not of the quality, and in the state prescribed by the ritual regulations*, the superintendants shall be punished with 50 blows; if an article of any kind is wanting, the punishment shall be increased to 80 blows, and if any one of the altars is wholly unprovided, the punishment shall be further increased to 100 blows.

If the officer of government having the charge of the animals reserved for sacrifice at grand solemnities, does not rear and feed them in the manner, and according to the practice by law established, so that any one of them becomes lean, or is otherwise injured, he shall suffer 40 blows, and be liable to a punishment proportionally greater by one degree, as far as 80 blows, for every addition of one to the number of animals so circumstanced. — When any one or more of these animals die in consequence of such neglect, the punishment shall be further increased one degree.

* The code of ritual regulations which, in this division of the Penal Laws, is frequently referred to, is, as might be expected from the national character and peculiar habits of the Chinese, extremely voluminous; and the subject likewise occupies a very considerable portion of the great Chinese work already noticed under the title of Ta-tsing-hoey-tien.

The same punishments and penalties shall likewise be inflicted in any cases of a breach of the regulations established respecting the intermediate and inferior sacred and imperial rites, as far as the circumstances correspond.

Two clauses.

SECTION CLVIII. — Destroying Altars and Sacred Terraces.

Whoever destroys or damages, whether intentionally or inadvertently, the altars, mounds, or terraces consecrated to the sacred and imperial rites, shall suffer 100 blows, and be perpetually banished to distance of 2000 lee. — Whoever destroys, or occasions any damage to, the gate or entrance to such consecrated ground, shall suffer punishment less by two degrees; that is to say, 90 blows and two years banishment.

Whoever discards, or destroys any articles, however trifling their value, which are consecrated to the service of sacred and imperial rites, shall suffer 100 blows, and be banished for three years; the punishment shall be less by three degrees in cases of losing or destroying such articles inadvertently; that is to say, 70 blows and banishment for one year and a half.

When the value of such articles is so considerable as to subject the offenders, conformably to the law against losing or destroying the property of government, to severer punishment than that hereby provided, such severer punishment shall be inflicted accordingly.

Two clauses.

SECTION CLIX. — Provincial Sacred Rites to be conformable to the Ritual Code.

Within the limits of the jurisdiction of each city of the first, second, and third order, the local genii, the genii of the hills, the rivers,

7 rivers, the winds, the clouds, and the lightnings, also the ancient holy Emperors, enlightened Kings, faithful ministers, and illustrious sages, shall all be severally honoured and commemorated by the oblations and other holy rites which the ritual code prescribes. X

The superintendants of the several districts shall not fail to erect suitable monuments in honour and commemoration of these divine and holy personages, with tablets describing their names and titles, and the days on which sacrifices and oblations are appointed to be made to them*.

These tablets shall be affixed in clean places near to running streams; and if the sacred rites which are thus publicly announced, are afterwards neglected when the day appointed arrives, the officers and others belonging to the board or tribunal responsible for the performance thereof, shall incur the punishment of 100 blows.

On the other hand, any officer of government who commemorates, or performs sacred rites to the honour of, any spirit or holy personage, to whom neither honours nor oblations are decreed by the laws of the ritual code, shall be punished with 80 blows. X

No clause.

SECTION CLX. — Care of the Tombs of distinguished Personages.

X The sepulchral monuments of ancient Emperors and princes, and also the tombs of saints, sages, faithful ministers, and other illustrious individuals, shall be carefully preserved by the officers of the district in which they are situated; and no person shall presume, on pain of receiving a punishment of 80 blows, to feed cattle, cut wood, X or guide the plough in the places, where the remains of such distinguished personages are deposited.

* These monuments, commonly, but improperly, termed triumphal arches, are described in Mr. Barrow's Travels in China, p. 35., and a representation of one of the most considerable of the kind, is given in one of the plates in the folio volume annexed to the account of the British Embassy.

No clause.

SECTION CLXI. — Dishonouring Celestial Spirits, by unlicensed Forms of Worship.

If any private family performs the ceremony of the adoration of Heaven and of the North Star, burning incense for that purpose during the night, lighting the lamps of Heaven, and also seven lamps to the North Star, it shall be deemed a profanation of these sacred rites, and derogatory to the Celestial Spirits; the parties concerned therein shall accordingly be punished with 80 blows.

When the wives or daughters are guilty of these offences, the husbands and fathers shall be held responsible.

If the priests of Foe and Tao-sse, after burning incense and preparing an oblation, imitate the sacred Imperial rites, they also shall be punished as aforesaid, and moreover be expelled from the order of priesthood.

If any officers of government, soldiers, or citizens, permit the females belonging to their families to go abroad to the temples of priests, in order to burn incense in token of worship, they shall be punished with 40 blows; but when widows, or other women not under the guardianship of men, commit the same offence, the punishment shall fall on themselves.

The superior of the temple, and the porter at the gate, shall likewise be equally punishable for admitting them.

One clause.

SECTION CLXII. — Magicians, Leaders of Sects, and Teachers of false Doctrines.

Magicians, who raise evil spirits by means of magical books and dire imprecations, leaders of corrupt and impious sects, and members of all superstitious associations in general, whether denominating themselves Mi-le-fo, or Pe-lien-kiao, or in any other manner distinguished, all of them offend against the laws, by their wicked and diabolical doctrines and practices.

When such persons, having in their possession concealed images of their worship, burn incense in honour of them, and when they assemble their followers by night in order to instruct them in their doctrines, and by pretended powers and notices, endeavour to inveigle and mislead the multitude, the principal in the commission of such offences shall be strangled, after remaining in prison the usual period, and the accessories shall severally receive 100 blows, and be perpetually banished to the distance of 3000 lee.

If at any time the people, whether soldiers or citizens, dress and ornament their idols, and after accompanying them tumultuously with drums and gongs, perform oblations and other sacred rites to their honour, the leader or instigator of such meetings shall be punished with 100 blows*.

If the head inhabitant of the district, when privy to such unlawful meetings, does not give information to government, he shall be punished with 40 blows.

The penalties of this law shall not however be so construed as to interrupt the regular and customary meetings of the people, to in-

* As this prohibitory clause describes nothing more than what is frequently and openly practised in every part of the empire, the law in this respect must be either considered as obsolete, or as an article retained for the purpose of enabling the magistrates to control and keep within bounds these popular superstitions, though it may have been found dangerous or unavailing to attempt to suppress them altogether.

X voke the terrestrial spirits in spring, and to return thanks to them in autumn*.

Eight clauses.

* As the Catholic Christians in China have been estimated at upwards of 200,000, and have been very frequently objects of the attention of the government, sometimes encouraged, but much oftener severely persecuted, some specific notice in this place of the Christian sect, might naturally have been expected: but, whether on account of its comparatively small importance in the eyes of the Chinese, or from some hesitation which may still exist about pronouncing on its character a decisive and irreversible judgment, the subject is in this code entirely passed over in silence. — To make up in some degree for this defect of information on the interesting question of the present disposition of the Chinese government towards the Christian religion (at least in the form and under the appearance given to it by the Roman Catholic missionaries), a translation has been inserted in Appendix, No. XVIII. of two Imperial Edicts, which are expressly declaratory of the law on this subject, and were issued to the public as late as the year 1805.

END OF THE FIRST BOOK OF THE FOURTH DIVISION.

B O O K II.

MISCELLANEOUS OBSERVANCES.

SECTION CLXIII. — Preparation of Medicines and Provisions for the Emperor.

IF any physician inadvertently prepares and mixes the medicines destined for the use of His Imperial Majesty, in any manner that is not sanctioned by established practice, or does not accompany them with a proper description and directions, he shall be punished with 100 blows. If the ingredients are not genuine and well chosen, as well as carefully compounded, the physician shall be punished with 60 blows.

If the cook employed in preparing the Imperial repasts, introduces any prohibited ingredients into the dishes by inadvertence, he shall be punished with 100 blows.

If any of the articles of liquid or solid food are not clean, he shall be punished with 80 blows. If they are not genuine and properly selected, with 60 blows; and lastly, if the cook does not ascertain the quality of the dishes by tasting, he shall be punished with 50 blows.

The superintending and dispensing officers shall in each case respectively, be punished two degrees less severely than the cook and the physician.

If either the superintending or dispensing officer, or the cook, introduces into His Majesty's kitchen any unusual drug, or article of food,
A a
X

X food, he shall be punished with 100 blows, and compelled to swallow the same.

If the superintending or dispensing officers are aware of the cooks or others in the Imperial kitchen committing offences of this nature, and do not report the same to the Emperor, they shall participate equally in the punishment. When such offences have been overlooked through the neglect of the officer on guard at the gates, or the officers about the Emperor's person, they also shall participate equally in the punishment; and in every case, the circumstances immediately after they are discovered, shall be submitted to His Majesty's notice and decision.

One clause.

SECTION CLXIV. — Charge of the Imperial Equipage and Furniture.

Whoever, having charge of the Imperial equipage, or of any other articles destined for Imperial use, does not attend to their repair and preservation in the manner prescribed by the established rules, shall be punished with 60 blows: — Whoever having such charge, presents to the Emperor any articles for his Imperial use, in an improper manner, whether by omitting to present what is necessary, or by presenting what ought not to be presented, shall be punished with 40 blows: — Jack Cadet X Whoever, having charge as afore said, does not duly exercise and examine His Majesty's horses and carriages, so as to ascertain that they are found, and fit for the service of His Majesty, shall be punished with 80 blows.

Moreover, if any such person should appropriate to his own use, lend for the use of others, or wilfully discard or destroy, any part of His Imperial Majesty's equipage, or any article whatsoever destined in like like manner for the immediate use of His Majesty, shall be punished with 100 blows and three years banishment. X

When any of the aforesaid articles are lost or destroyed, not wilfully, but inadvertently, either through idleness or neglect, the punishment shall be less by three degrees.

If His Imperial Majesty's pleasure boats and vessels are not found and in good order, the artificer shall be punished with 100 blows. X

If the said vessels are not likewise in every other respect kept in good repair, or if they are not properly supplied with poles and planks, the punishment shall amount to 60 blows, and be inflicted on the person in charge, or on the artificer, according as the fault shall be found to be imputable to the one, or to the other. X

The superintending officer and dispensing officer of the department, shall each be liable to punishment proportionably less than that inflicted on the artificer or person in charge, by two degrees.

All offences punishable according to this law, shall however be made known immediately on discovery to His Majesty, and the sentence only executed so far as is conformable to His Imperial pleasure.

No clause.

SECTION CLXV. — Possession and Concealment of prohibited Books and Instruments.

Any private householder or master of a family, who secretly keeps in his possession celestial images, instruments for explaining and portraying the celestial bodies, astrological books, books for calculating good and bad fortune, or other books which are prohibited; or portraits and representations of former Emperors and Kings, official seals cut in gold or in gems, or any other similar articles which private individuals cannot lawfully use or possess, shall, if he does not voluntarily surrender up the same to government, be punished with 100 blows, and be held answerable for the payment of a fine of 10 leang or ounces of silver, which sum shall be bestowed as a reward on the informer.

The aforefaid articles shall in every case be forfeited to government.

No clause.

SECTION CLXVI. — Transmission of Imperial Presents.

When His Imperial Majesty is pleased to make presents of dresses or other articles to the officers of His Majesty's government, if the officer deputed to execute His Majesty's commands, does not perform in person the duty assigned to him, but on the contrary transmits the Imperial presents to be delivered by other hands, he shall be punished with 100 blows, and be rendered incapable of holding any employment in the public service.

No clause.

SECTION CLXVII. — Observance of Festivals and Days of Ceremony.

Upon all solemn court festivals, and other occasional public solemnities, appointed for the receipt with due honour of Imperial orders and communications, the officer having the superintendance of this department shall give sufficient previous notice, on pain of receiving a punishment of 40 blows, whenever he omits the same. — All those, on the other hand, who after having received sufficient notice, nevertheless perform their functions imperfectly or improperly upon such occasions, shall be liable to similar punishment.

No clause.

SECTION CLXVIII. — Due Performance of appointed Ceremonies.

If any of the officers of government who assist at the sacred and Imperial rites, who attend the visitation of the Imperial tombs, or who are present at the solemnity of a public audience given by the Emperor, mistake, or in any manner deviate from, the established ceremonial of the day, they shall forfeit one month's salary; and if those who are appointed to preside over the ceremonies overlook any such mistake or deviation, they shall be liable to the same penalty.

One clause.

SECTION CLXIX. — Officers of Government to address the Emperor in Succession according to their Rank.

When any of the officers of government in waiting, or in the train of His Imperial Majesty, are spoken to, or questioned collectively, by His Majesty; the first in rank shall come forward and speak in reply first, and the others successively according to their order of rank; if any one violates this order, by coming forward and speaking, before or after his turn, he shall forfeit one month's salary.

No clause.

SECTION CLXX. — Vexatiously detaining Officers of Government from the Imperial Presence.

If any officer of government, or other person who is entitled to the honour of being presented to His Imperial Majesty, is vexatiously detained and impeded upon unwarrantable pretexts by the superintendent of the ceremonies, instead of being forthwith introduced by him to the Imperial presence, such superintendant shall, upon conviction of having so done by malicious design, be condemned to suffer death by being beheaded after confinement in prison for the usual period.
to

All the great officers of state who are privy to this offence without making any enquiry into it, shall be punished as equal participators in the guilt, but if ignorant thereof, shall be subject to no punishment or responsibility whatever.

No clause.

SECTION CLXXI. — Addresses on Public Affairs.

Whatever is erroneous in the general administration of public affairs, whatever is beneficial or injurious to the soldiers and people, and, in general, whatever tends to the acquisition of a public benefit or the prevention of a public injury, shall be enquired into, and the result personally communicated to the Emperor, by the officers of the six supreme tribunals or departments of state.

The censors*, the viceroys, and the deputy viceroys, shall likewise represent faithfully and unreservedly whatever appears to them advisable to communicate on these subjects.

If any officer of government at court, or in the provinces, of high or low rank, is aware of any impropriety in the proceedings of the board or tribunal of which he is a member, he shall fully and distinctly state to his superior officer whatever may be requisite and pro-

* The board or tribunal of the censorate has the power of inspecting and animadverting upon the proceedings of all the other public boards and tribunals in the empire, and even on the acts of the sovereign himself, whenever they are to be conceived to be censurable, but it may easily be imagined that in a government professedly absolute, the power ascribed to the censors in the latter case, must be little more than a fiction of state, instead of operating as a real and effective influence and control.

It must however be admitted that, from other circumstances peculiar to the constitution and administration of the Chinese government, some of which it is hoped this work may be found to elucidate, there are probably few regular and nominally absolute monarchies, in which both the personal conduct and public measures of the sovereign are necessarily so much under the united influence of laws, customs, and public opinion.

per

per to be submitted on the subject to His Imperial Majesty, to whom the same shall be faithfully reported in order to be decided upon according to his royal pleasure. Those who, although privy to, take no notice of, and connive at such proceedings, during months and years, shall, if at court, be liable to an investigation of their conduct in such instances, by the censors; but by the viceroys and deputy viceroys, if their connivance should have taken place in any of the provincial departments. When found guilty, they shall be punished according to the law in ordinary instances of omitting to make due report upon public affairs to superiors, or to His Imperial Majesty.

In all representations to the Emperor, the facts, and the reasoning that is grounded upon them, must be stated simply and candidly; each article must be brought forward and explained separately; and all empty phraseology and unnecessary repetition must be avoided.

If any officer of the state, prompted by unprincipled ambition, addresses the Emperor in artful terms, and, upon colourable pretexts, solicits places and employments, he shall be punished with 100 blows. If in such address he falsely criminales any officer or public board immediately entrusted or connected with the administration of civil or military affairs, and if he moreover borrows the sanction of an official seal and envelope, in order to procure the address to be received, both the lender and borrower of such official seal and envelope, shall be beheaded.—The offence is however ranked among those denominated miscellaneous, and the punishment is reducible accordingly to banishment.

One clause.

SECTION CLXXII. — Monuments raised by Officers of Government to commemorate their own Actions.

If any officer of government during the period of his administration, presumes to raise within the limits of his district, public monuments displaying displaying inscriptions in honour of himself, when he had in fact performed no service to the state worthy of such commemoration, he shall be punished with 100 blows.

If an officer sends any person to his superior to solicit his sanction to the elevation of honorary monuments as aforesaid, upon the pretext of services falsely alleged to have been performed by him, he shall be punished with 80 blows, and the person who undertakes to convey the request under such circumstances shall suffer punishment less by one degree. The monuments undeservedly raised, shall be destroyed, and the inscriptions effaced.

No clause.

SECTION CLXXIII. — Honorary Attendance on Superiors in Rank.

When the superior officers of government, or other officers charged with a special mission by the Emperor, are proceeding through any part of the empire, if any of the officers or members of the several tribunals and departments of government in the districts through which they pass, proceed beyond the walls of their respective cities, either to meet them when approaching, or to accompany them when departing, they shall be punished with 90 blows.

Whoever authorizes and allows such honorary attendance to be paid him, instead of taking cognizance of it as an unlawful procedure, shall be equally punishable.

*Six clauses.

SEC-

* By the fourth clause it is enacted that any soldier or citizen shall be punishable with 50 blows, who does not make way when he meets a civil or military officer of government on the public road, or who, if on horseback, does not dismount on such an occasion.

In respect to this law and others of the same description it may be remarked, that however degrading and oppressive they may appear in the eyes of a European, they are in China intimately connected with, and indeed no more than the natural consequence of the peculiar SECTION CLXXIV. — Official Messengers contemptuously treating the Officers of Districts.

When any officer or attendant of government is dispatched upon a message or mission relative to the public service, if instead of conducting himself with civility and decorum, he contemptuously treats, either the military officers, who protect, or the civil officers, who govern the district, he shall be punished with 60 blows. If inferior officers are guilty of such misconduct, they shall be punished with either 70 or 80 blows, according to the nature of their ordinary employment in the public service.

One clause.

SECTION CLXXV. — Sumptuary Laws relative to Dress and Habitations.

The houses, apartments, carriages, dress, furniture, and other articles used by the officers of government, and by the people in general, shall be conformable to the established rules and gradations. Accordingly any individual who possesses such articles for use, contrary to these rules and gradations, shall, if an officer of government, be punished with 100 blows, deposed from his office, and rendered incapable of future service; if a private individual is guilty of this offence, the master of the family in which the article is used, shall be punished with 50 blows. In both cases the offending party shall be required to alter and rectify the article in the manner the regulations prescribe. The artificer shall also in both cases be liable to 50 blows, unless he should have surrendered himself voluntarily, in which case he shall be pardoned, but not in any case rewarded.

liar character and genius of the people.—In a country where forms and ceremonies are so closely interwoven with all the real business and pursuits of life, it is not felt to be either harsh or tyrannical, that they are thus enforced and regulated by the highest public authority.

If any person possesses for use, articles absolutely prohibited, such as silk stuffs representing the Imperial Dragon (Lung), or the Imperial Phoenix (Fung-wbang), he shall, whether an officer of government, or a private individual, be punished with 100 blows and three years banishment; the officer of government thus offending shall moreover be deposed and rendered incapable of future service. The artificer shall be punished with 100 blows, and the prohibited goods shall be forfeited to government. — Whoever gives information of the commission of this offence, shall receive a reward of 50 leang or ounces of silver; even the manufacturer of the goods, if he gives information, shall not only be pardoned for his share in the offence, but also receive the above reward*.

Sixteen clauses.

SECTION CLXXVI. — Dress and Conduct of the Priests.

All persons licenced to enter into religious orders as priests of Foe or Tao-fse, shall nevertheless continue to visit their parents, to sacrifice and make oblations to their ancestors, and to mourn for their recently deceased relations, in the same manner as is by law required from the people in general, on pain of receiving a punishment of 100 blows, and being obliged to renounce their religious orders.

All persons in priest's orders shall wear stuffs and silks of a single colour, and of a simple pattern; they shall abstain from the use of

* The law, which in this place enforces, what in other countries is usually governed only by custom or caprice, is, no doubt, frequently evaded by the private and domestic luxury of individuals; it is however certain that, generally speaking, the pleasure which the possessor of superior wealth may be supposed to derive from the display of it, a Chinese, whatever his situation, is in great measure, if not wholly, precluded from enjoying.

At the same time there is nothing which leads to a belief that the law of extraordinary severity mentioned in the description of China compiled by the Abbé Grosier from the writings of the missionaries, for punishing with death those who wear pearls, has any existence either in theory or in practice.

damasks, damasks, and flowered or variegated stuffs, on penalty of receiving a punishment of 50 blows, of being excluded from their order, and forfeiting all such dresses to government.

Nevertheless the Kia-sha, and other ceremonial vestments exclusively worn by the priests shall not be considered to come within the scope of this regulation.

No clause.

SECTION CLXXVII. — Neglect to observe and note the Celestial Appearances.

Whatever concerns the science of the celestial bodies, such as the sun, the moon, the five planets, the twenty-eight principal and other constellations; and also the observation of the celestial appearances, such as eclipses, meteors, comets, and the like, being the province of the officers of the astronomical board at Peking, if they neglect duly to observe, and mark the times of the celestial appearances, in order to report them to His Imperial Majesty, they shall be punished with 60 blows for such omission.

One clause.

SECTION CLXXVIII. — Conjurors and Fortune-tellers prohibited from prophesying Public Events.

It shall not be allowed to conjurors and fortune-tellers to frequent the houses of any civil or military officers of government whatever, under the pretence of prophesying to them impending national calamities or successes, and they shall upon every such offence suffer a punishment of 100 blows. This law shall not however be understood to prevent them from telling the fortunes and casting the nativities of individuals by the stars in the usual manner. X

No clause.

SECTION CLXXIX. — Evading the Duty, and concealing the occasion, of Mourning.

If a son on receiving information of the death of his father or mother, or a wife, receiving information of the death of her husband, suppresses such intelligence, and omits to go into lawful mourning for the deceased, such neglect shall be punished with 60 blows, and and one year's banishment. If a son or wife enters into mourning in a lawful manner, but previous to the expiration of the term, discards the mourning habit, and forgetful of the loss sustained, plays upon musical instruments and partakes of festivities, the punishment shall amount for such offence to 80 blows.

Whoever on receiving information of the death of any other relation in the first degree than the above-mentioned, suppresses the notice of it, and omits to mourn, shall be punished with 80 blows; if previous to the expiration of the legal period of mourning for such relation, any person casts away the mourning habit; and resumes his wonted amusements, he shall be punished with 60 blows.

When any officer or other person in the employ of government, has received intelligence of the death of his father or mother, in consequence of which intelligence he is bound to retire from office during the period of mourning; if, in order to avoid such retirement, he falsely represents the deceased to have been his grand-father, grand-mother, uncle, aunt, or cousin, he shall suffer the punishment of 100 blows, be deposed from office, and rendered incapable of again entering into the public service.

On the other hand, if any officer of government falsely alleges the pretext of mourning, while his parents are still living, or after they are so long dead that the period of mourning had expired, he shall be liable to the same punishment as in the opposite case last mentioned.

If

If either of the foregoing misrepresentations should be designed to effect any criminal purpose, the offender shall be liable to any aggravation of the punishment which may be conformable to the law, applicable to the case under such circumstances.

If, previous to the expiration of the lawful term of absence in consequence of the loss of a parent, any officer or other person in the employ of government, returns to, and resumes his office or command, he shall be deprived thereof, and punished with 80 blows. If the superior officers of the same department are aware that the return of the mourner is premature, and nevertheless permit him to resume his functions, they shall be equally punishable; but if not aware of the fact, they shall not be responsible.

Those officers of government, who hold remote and important stations and commands, shall not be bound by the above regulations on the arrival of the intelligence of the death of their parents, as the line of conduct they are to pursue on such occasions will always be determined by express orders from the Emperor.

Four clauses.

SECTION CLXXX. — Officers of Government neglecting their Parents.

If any person, in order to hold an office under government, absents himself from a father, mother, paternal grandfather, or grandmother, who is either upwards of 80 years of age, or totally disabled by any infirmity, while such near relation has no other male offspring above sixteen years of age, to perform the duties of filial piety; or if, on the contrary, any person being in office, solicits permission to retire to his family, upon a falsely alleged pretext of the age or infirmity of any such near relation as aforesaid, the offender, in either of these opposite cases, shall suffer a punishment of 80 blows.

Whoever

Whoever plays on musical instruments, or partakes of feasts at home or abroad, while her husband, or his or her father, mother, paternal grandfather or grandmother, are in confinement upon a charge of a capital offence, shall also be liable to the aforefaid punishment.

One clause.

SECTION CLXXXI. — Regulations concerning Funerals.

When a family has lost any of its members by death, the survivors must not fail to be observant of the established rites and ceremonies, and to fix a proper time for the interment of the deceased; if, vainly seeking an auspicious time and place, or upon any other pretext, any person detains the coffin of his relation unfeelingly exposed in his house, and suffers it thus to remain for more than a twelvemonth unburied, he shall be punished with 80 blows*.

Whoever, in compliance with the last wishes expressed by a senior relation, consumes his corpse with fire, or commits it to the waters, shall be punished with 100 blows. In the case of a corpse of a junior relation, the punishment shall be less by two degrees.

When however a relation happens to die in a distant country, and the children or grand-children are unable to bring the corpse to be interred in the native district of the deceased, it shall in such case be permitted to consume it by fire.

The family of the deceased, by whom the funeral obsequies are performed, shall lay out, and afterwards partake of, the funeral meats; but the male and female branches of the family shall by no means mix

* This law seems to have been required to check the absurd consequences of a superstitious notion universally prevalent among the Chinese, of an intimate connexion always subsisting between the advantageous or disadvantageous mode and place of interment of persons deceased, and the future good or bad fortune of their surviving relations.

indif-indiscriminately together, to eat meat and drink wine on such occasions; and if any master of a family permits this practice, he shall be punished with 80 blows for such misconduct. Any priests who thus misconduct themselves, shall be punished in the same manner, and moreover compelled to renounce their order.

Three clauses.

SECTION CLXXXII. — Regulations of Country Festivals.

Among the inhabitants of villages and country districts who associate together, there is an established rule of precedence and seniority at their solemn feasts, and there are certain forms prescribed; whoever disregards either the one or the other, shall be punished with 50 blows for his misconduct.

Two clauses.

END OF THE FOURTH DIVISION.

PLACEHOLDER PAGE

This page is a placeholder, inserted to ensure proofread pages will be aligned even if this page is replaced.

Replace with the original page if available.

FIFTH DIVISION.

Military Laws.

B O O K I.

PROTECTION OF THE PALACE.

SECTION CLXXXIII. — Unauthorizedly entering the Imperial Temple.

ALL persons passing unauthorizedly and without sufficient cause, through the gate of the Imperial Temple, or of the inner enclosure of the Imperial burying-ground, shall be punished with 100 X blows. — Those who pass through the gate of the hall of Imperial sacrifices, unauthorizedly and without sufficient cause, shall in like manner be punished with 90 blows. The offence of those who come to, but do not pass through, the gates aforesaid, is punishable in each case less severely by one degree. The officer on guard, who designedly permits such offences to be committed, is generally punishable in an equal degree.

If, however, the offence shall have been committed by the neglect, but without the concurrence, of the officer on guard, his punishment shall be less in each case by three degrees.

No clause.

SECTION CLXXXIV. — Unauthorizedly entering the Imperial Palace.

All persons unauthorizedly passing through any of the gates of the Imperial Citadel at Peking, and entering therein, or into any of the Imperial gardens, shall receive 100 blows.

All persons unauthorizedly entering any of the Imperial palaces, shall be punished with 60 blows, and one year's banishment.

All persons unauthorizedly entering any of the apartments in the actual occupation of the Emperor, or into his Imperial refectory, shall suffer death by being strangled, after remaining in prison the usual period.

Those who approach with an intent to pass, but do not actually pass, through the gates or entrances aforesaid, shall be subject to a proportionate punishment, less in each case by one degree.

The apartments of the Empress, Empress-mother, and Empress-grand-mother, are protected by the laws in the same manner as those of the Emperor.

All persons who, not having been inscribed in the proper register, pass or attempt to pass through any of the gates or entrances aforesaid, by means of assumed names, shall be punished according to this law.

All persons who, having stations and employments within the palace, either enter the same previous to the insertion of their names in the proper registers, or remain after their duty ceased to require them, or do duty there out of their turn or order, shall in each case be punished with 40 blows.

If any persons, not having especial duty to keep guard within the palace, bring in with them any of the soldiers, or come armed with sharp weapons, they shall suffer death by being strangled after the usual period of confinement.

All

All persons who under similar circumstances enter the Imperial citadel, shall be punished with 100 blows, and banished perpetually to the most remote frontier of the empire.

Those officers and soldiers on guard at the several gates, who consent or connive at the commission of any of the aforesaid offences, shall be held equally guilty with the party transgressing the law, except in capital cases, when the punishment shall be reduced one degree. Officers and soldiers by whose neglect, but without whose concurrence, such offences are committed, shall suffer the punishment provided by law, reduced three degrees; but they shall not in any case suffer more than 100 blows.

In respect to the last mentioned regulation, it is further provided that only those soldiers whose day it was to be on duty shall be liable to punishment, and that their punishment shall be one degree less than that of their superior officer, who in such cases is, in the contemplation of the law, the principal offender.

No clause.

SECTION CLXXXV.—Imperial Guards failing to do their Duty.

Every person who, after having been appointed to keep guard and to do duty at the gates of the Imperial citadel, or at the gates of any of the Imperial palaces, does not attend at his post when his turn arrives, shall be punished with 40 blows.

All persons who, in such cases, privately depute substitutes from among the other guards of the palace to supply their places, shall, as well as such substitutes, be liable to the punishment of 60 blows.

If any such substitute be a stranger, the punishment of both parties shall be increased to 100 blows: in all cases of officers on duty so offending, the punishment shall be one degree more severe.

Persons quitting their posts after having taken charge of them, shall be punished under this law.

Persons appointed to keep guard at any of the gates of the Imperial city, and offending in the manner already stated, shall suffer a punishment less in each case by one degree. Persons appointed to keep guard at the gate of any other city, shall be liable to the punishments awarded by this law, reduced in each case two degrees.

The corporal or serjeant commanding the guard, if guilty of consenting or conniving at the offence, shall be liable to the same punishments as the original offender.

If the offence is to be attributed to his neglect, but not to his connivance or concurrence, his punishment shall be reduced three degrees; when, however, the individual absent had duly reported, and had alleged sufficient cause for his intended absence to his superior officer, it shall be considered as a sufficient justification and exempt all the parties from punishment.

No clause.

SECTION CLXXXVI. — Imperial Retinue failing in their Attendance.

If any of the persons immediately attached to the suite or retinue of the Emperor do not attend at the time appointed, or if they quit their stations before the period of their service had expired, they shall for the first day's absence be liable to a punishment of 40 blows, and for every additional three days absence, the punishment shall be increased one degree, until it amounts to 100 blows.

If the offender is a civil or military officer, the punishment shall be increased one degree, but not in any case exceed 60 blows and one year's banishment.

Any individual of the Emperor's retinue who deserts his post, during any of the Imperial journies or provincial visitations, shall be punished punished with 100 blows and perpetual banishment to the most remote frontier of the empire.

If the offender is a civil or military officer of government, he shall suffer death by being strangled, after the usual period of confinement.

The corporal or serjeant of the guard conniving at or consenting to such desertion, shall be liable to the same punishment, except in capital cases, when his punishment shall be reduced one degree.

If the desertion happened without his consent, and is only attributable to his neglect, his punishment shall be three degrees less than in the preceding case, and not in any instance exceed 100 blows.

One clause.

SECTION CLXXXVII. — Trespass upon the Imperial Roads.

No person shall presume to travel on the roads or to cross the bridges which are expressly provided and reserved for the use of the Emperor, except only such civil and military officers and other attendants, as immediately belong to His Majesty's retinue, and who are in consequence necessarily permitted to proceed upon the side-paths thereof.

All other persons, whether civil or military officers, soldiers or people, who presume to travel on the roads or to cross the bridges aforesaid, shall be punished with 80 blows.

In like manner, those who shall presume to proceed upon any of the particular passages and pathways within the palace, which are expressly reserved for the Emperor, shall suffer the punishment of 100 blows; and the attendants on duty in the palace, who connive thereat, shall be equally punishable. But if the offence is merely attributable to their neglect, and not their consent or connivance, their punishment shall be reduced three degrees. When, in any of the foregoing cases.

cases, the offence is only momentary, and not repeated, it shall not be considered requisite to carry this law into effect.

Two clauses.

SECTION CLXXXVIII. — Rules concerning Labourers within the Palace.

All labourers, messengers, and other persons, hired for any work or service within the palaces, treasuries, or other buildings, exclusively appropriated to His Imperial Majesty, shall be provided with personal licences or passports.

Any person attempting to introduce himself by means of a passport or licence intended for another, and attempting to act as a substitute for such person, shall, as well as the person transferring such licence or passport, be liable to the punishment of 100 blows.

The wages due to such person shall also be forfeited to government.

No clause.

SECTION CLXXXIX. — Labourers in the Imperial Palace remaining there after the Conclusion of their Work.

When labourers of any description are employed in the Imperial palaces, whether in the domestic or state apartments, the officer of government who has the superintendance of their work, shall give in an exact statement of the proper name and family name of each person to the officers on guard at the several gates, and also to the superior officers in waiting; when any such individual enters the palace for the first time, his name and his person shall be identified at the gate, and an exact notice taken of his figure and appearance.

In the course of the hour Shin (between three and five in the afternoon), the number of persons, as well as the figure and appearance of each, each, having been found to correspond with the register, they shall all depart through the identical gates by which they had been admitted.

If any of them wilfully remain within the palace, contrary to this regulation, they shall be liable to the punishment of death by being strangled, after the usual period of imprisonment.

Whenever it is found that the list of labourers departing from the palace is deficient in names or number, it shall be the duty of the superintendants of the works, the officers and soldiers on guard, and those attached to the several gates, immediately to make a diligent search and enquiry, and also to give respectful intimation of the circumstance to His Imperial Majesty. All such officers and others who are privy to and guilty of concealing the fact, shall be liable to the same punishment as the offender himself, except in the case of his being convicted capitally, when the punishment shall be reduced one degree.

When such offence is committed without the knowledge and concurrence of the officers on duty, and is therefore to be attributed to their neglect only, the punishment with regard to them shall be reduced three degrees, and not in any case exceed 100 blows.

No clause.

SECTION CXC. — Irregularity in passing through the Gates of the Imperial Palaces.

If any persons who, (having obtained leave of absence, or having been appointed to quit the palace on duty,) cease to have their names registered at the several gates, nevertheless remain after their supposed departure; or if those who have been tried on any charges, and in consequence dismissed altogether from the service of the palace, unauthorizedly return thereto, they shall, whether their names had been struck struck out or not from the registers, in each case be punished with 100 blows.

When any of the guards of the palace are, in consequence of charges exhibited against them, committed for examination and trial, if the commanding officer does not in the first instance take away the arms which had been allotted to such persons, he shall on his part be liable to the punishment last stated.

All those who are regularly entered in the registers as having fixed stations within the palace, are, equally with other persons, prohibited from passing to and fro after dark. If going in, they shall be punished with 100 blows; if going out, with 80 blows. But if going in without having been registered, the punishment shall be greater by two degrees: if moreover they are discovered with arms in their hands, they shall suffer death by being strangled, after the usual period of confinement.

No clause.

SECTION CXCI. — Examination of the Certificates or Passports of Persons having Employments in the Palace.

When any person in the immediate service of His Majesty, or having any duty or superintendance within the palace, quits the precincts thereof, his certificate or passport shall be required of him by the officer at the outer gate, whose duty it shall also be to retain the same, after having carefully identified the names, marks, and official stamps thereof; the officer shall likewise duly record whither the person quitting the palace is going, and upon what business. Every such person shall moreover, previous to his departure, be personally examined by the officer on guard and his attendants, in order to ascertain that he does not illicitly carry away any public or private property. Upon the return of the person to his employment within the palace, he shall again undergo at the outer gate, previous to his certificate being returned to him, a similar examination. There shall also be a monthly examination of the registers, to ascertain how often each person has passed and re-passed during each successive interval.

If, in the course of examination, any person should be found to carry about him drugs of a suspicious nature, he shall be compelled to swallow the same.

If any person passing the gates presumes to refuse to submit to the required examination, he shall be punished with 100 blows and perpetual and remote banishment.

Any person who, without having His Majesty's express licence and authority so to do, carries arms and military weapons into the Imperial citadel, within which is the Imperial residence, shall be punished with 100 blows, and sent into perpetual and most remote banishment. If any person is detected carrying arms without authority as aforesaid, into any of the Imperial palaces, he shall suffer death by being strangled at the usual period; and the officer of the gate, as well as the officer on guard, who neglected to examine and prevent the passage of such person, shall be liable to the same punishment as the principal offender, excepting a reduction of one degree in capital cases*.

No clause.

* Notwithstanding the multiplicity and apparent rigour of the laws provided in this and other sections of the code, for ensuring the safety of the person of the Sovereign, the present Emperor, in the year 1803, very narrowly escaped assassination within the precincts of his palace, from the hand of a single, but desperate intruder. — The official report of the circumstances, which was published at the time, being illustrative of the law in this respect; and otherwise also, rather a curious and interesting document, a translation of it is inserted in the Appendix, No. XIX.

SECTION CXCI. — Shooting or throwing missile Weapons towards an Imperial Palace.

All persons who shall shoot arrows or bullets, or fling any bricks or stones, towards the Imperial temple, or towards any Imperial palace, whether a place of residence or appropriated to purposes of state only, with any apparent possibility of hitting such place or building, shall in each case suffer death by being strangled at the usual period : if towards the temple of Imperial sacrifices, the offender shall be punished with 100 blows and perpetual banishment to the distance of 3000 lee.

If any person within any of the buildings above-mentioned is wounded by such means, the offender shall, in every such case, be beheaded at the usual period.

No clause.

SECTION CXCI. — Soldiers and Officers on Guard to be always armed.

All persons doing duty upon guard, by day or by night, shall constantly carry their arms about them, and are punishable with 40 blows upon any failure in this respect. If convicted of having been at any time absent from their station and duty, they shall be liable to 50 blows, and if passing the night elsewhere than at their appointed station, the punishment shall amount to 60 blows ; if the offender is an officer of government, the punishment shall in each case be more severe by one degree.

If the corporal or serjeant of the guard connives at, and concurs in, the commission of the above offences on the part of the soldiers under his authority, he shall be liable to the same punishment ; but if the offence takes place without his knowledge or concurrence, and is therefore attributable only to his neglect, his punishment shall be less by three degrees.

No clause.

SEC-

SECTION CXCIV. — Convicted Persons and their Relations not to be employed near the Imperial Presence.

In all cases of persons living within the jurisdiction of the Imperial city, being condemned to die by the sentence of the law, their families, and all persons whatsoever who resided under the same roof with them, shall remove forthwith, and reside in future under another jurisdiction.

All such persons as aforesaid, all the other relations of persons who have suffered under the laws, and also all persons who have themselves undergone any species of punishment by the sentence of the law, shall be judged for ever incapable of holding any office near the person of His Imperial Majesty, or of being entrusted with the duty of guarding any of the Imperial palaces, the Imperial citadel, or the gates of the city of Peking.

Any person who shall absurdly undertake any such office, concealing the previous circumstance by which he is disabled from so doing, shall be beheaded at the usual period.

Any officer of government who does not take proper care to ascertain that the person whom he trusts or employs as above-mentioned is free from such disability, or who knowing him to be under such disability, accepts his services in consideration of a bribe, shall be liable to the same punishment, and accordingly be beheaded.

Nevertheless, if any relation of a criminal who has suffered capital punishment, or any person who has himself undergone any less punishment by the sentence of the law, is, by an Imperial edict, expressly chosen to fill some one of the responsible situations above-mentioned, and the superior officer of the department lays before His Majesty a due report of the former trial and punishment of such person, or of his relations, as the case may be; this law in such case shall not be put in force.

No clause.

SECTION CXCV. — Intrusion into the Space allotted to the Imperial Retinue.

During the Imperial journies and visitations, all the soldiers and people shall carefully make way for the approach of His Majesty, excepting only those forming his retinue, namely, the officers and soldiers on guard in special attendance, and those immediately attached to his royal person. Any person who, notwithstanding, forcibly intrudes within the lines, shall be condemned to suffer death by being strangled; but the offence being ranked among the miscellaneous, the punishment may be mitigated to five years banishment*.

When His Majesty travels in distant places, and his retinue arrives at any place unexpectedly, it shall be sufficient for those who are unable to retire in time, to prostrate themselves humbly on the road side, until the retinue has passed them.

Any of the civil and military officers of government, who not belonging to the retinue, presume to enter within the lines without being summoned by His Majesty, or having other sufficient cause, shall be punished with 100 blows.

Any officer or soldier on guard belonging to the retinue, who designedly permits any person to pass the lines who is not entitled to do so, shall suffer the same punishment as the original offender; but if the offence is committed merely through the neglect of such officer or soldier, the punishment shall in such case be less by three degrees.

Any person who is desirous of presenting a complaint of injustice, shall be suffered to prostrate himself for such purpose on the road, but always outside of the lines.

If any person should, nevertheless, suddenly force his way through the lines, in order to present a complaint, which afterwards proves groundless, he shall be condemned to suffer death by being strangled, but the offence being ranked among those termed miscellaneous, the punishment may be mitigated to five years banishment. When, however, the complaint proves just, the intrusion within the lines shall be pardoned.

* See the note to Section LXV.

If any of the soldiers, or people living in the neighbourhood through which the Emperor is passing, do not confine their cattle, and such cattle through the neglect of the guards are suffered to come within the lines, the guards so in fault shall receive 80 blows; and, if by a similar accident any cattle rush into the Imperial citadel, the punishment of the guards, for not preventing the same, shall amount to 100 blows. The punishment of the persons to whom the cattle belonged shall be estimated according to the severer clause of the law relative to offences against propriety*.

Two clauses.

SECTION CXCVI. — Passing through Gates leading to an Imperial Palace.

The same laws shall be enforced in respect to persons passing the gates of the first and second barriers leading to any palace, as in respect to persons passing the gates of the Imperial citadel at Peking, and the offence of entering through them unauthorizedly shall be punished with 100 blows. The passage through the inner gates styled Ya-chang-men, shall be subject to the same restrictions as the passage through the gates of the palace, and any person entering through the same unauthorizedly, shall be punished with 60 blows, and one year's banishment.

No clause.

* See Section CCCLXXXVI.

SECTION CXCVII. — Scaling the Walls of fortified Places.

All persons guilty of scaling the walls of the Imperial citadel in Peking, shall suffer death, by being strangled at the usual period. In like manner, the offence of scaling the walls of the Imperial city of Peking, shall be punished with 100 blows and perpetual banishment to the distance of 3000 lee.

The offence of scaling the walls of any city of the first, second, or third order, or of any fort, shall be punished with 100 blows; and, lastly, that of scaling the walls of any officer of government's official residence, with 80 blows; in each case, the attempt to scale, if unsuccessful, shall subject the offender to the punishment above provided, reduced one degree.

If the person guilty of scaling any of the walls aforesaid, is concerned at the same time in the commission of any other offence, he shall be made to suffer for that one among his offences, which by law is the most severely punishable.

One clause.

SECTION CXCVIII. — Regulations concerning the Gates of Cities.

Any person shutting at the proper period, but inadvertently neglecting to bolt, the gate of any city or fortified place, shall be punished with 80 blows; and the punishment shall be increased to 100 blows, if guilty of opening or shutting such gates at an improper time. In respect to the gates of the Imperial city of Peking, the punishment shall be one degree more severe than in other cases; but in general, if the opening or shutting any of the gates above-mentioned at an irregular time, takes place in execution of the public service, and upon a pressing emergency, the punishment provided by this law shall not be inflicted.

flicted. Those persons who, at the regular period of shutting the gates of the Imperial citadel at Peking, neglect to bolt them, shall suffer 100 blows, and be sent into perpetual and very remote banishment: the person who opens or shuts such gates at an irregular time, shall be punished with death, by being strangled at the usual period.

Nevertheless, persons bearing an Imperial order on any occasion, may open or shut such gates at all times, without being liable to the penalties by this law provided.

No clause.

END OF THE FIRST BOOK OF THE FIFTH DIVISION.

B O O K II.

GOVERNMENT OF THE ARMY*.

SECTION CXCIX. — Unauthorizedly employing Military Force.

WHEN any of the general officers or commanders in chief of the cavalry or infantry, stationed for the protection and defence of the cities, fortified towns, military posts, and frontier encampments in the different parts of the empire, receive reports of symptoms of insurrection and revolt having appeared within the limits of their respective commands, they shall immediately dispatch proper persons to ascertain how far the reports are well founded, and how far the circumstances are of such a nature as to require the interference of military force.

If the result of the enquiry in any case, confirms the previous report, the commanding officer shall transmit a statement of the particulars to his immediate superior at the head quarters, that the same may be submitted to the consideration of His Imperial Majesty, whose sacred and royal orders on the subject shall, in ordinary cases, be requisite to sanction the adoption of the measure of assembling and detaching an efficient body of troops for the suppression of the insurrection, and punishment of the insurgents.

* As some account of the military operations of the Chinese, as given in the reports of their own general officers, may contribute in a considerable degree to illustrate the abstract which this book of the code contains of their martial laws, and be at the same time perhaps, a novelty not altogether uninteresting in itself, a translation has been inserted in the Appendix, No. XX. of a few extracts from the Peking Gazette of the year 1800, relating to the proceedings of the Imperial army, on the occasion of a formidable rebellion, which raged at that period, in two or three considerable provinces of the Chinese empire.

If,

If, in a case of no actual emergency, any commander of the forces, without transmitting a previous statement of the case to his superior, or, having transmitted such a statement, without waiting for orders in reply, upon the strength of his own authority, presumes to issue instructions for the assembling of the infantry or cavalry within the limits of his command, such commander, and the officers of the subordinate stations and garrisons, who furnished him with troops conformably to his requisition, shall each be subject to receive 100 blows, and sent into perpetual and remote military banishment.

On the other hand, if an enemy's force has already marched into any of the districts of the empire in order to make an attack; if open revolt or mutiny breaks out in any of the cities, or other military stations; or if the condition and progress of the insurgents is in any manner such as to render it inexpedient to wait a return of the messenger with orders from the superior officer, it shall in all such cases be lawful for the officer in command of the district, to take instant measures for the assembling the troops belonging to the several stations under his controul, and to employ them in any way that the existing circumstances may render most conducive to the defeat and apprehension of the insurgents. If the insurrection should have become so considerable in point of numbers and extent, as to render it expedient that the troops stationed in neighbouring districts should co-operate in the measures to be adopted against the insurgents, it shall be lawful for the commander of the forces to demand the aid of such troops, although beyond the limits of his ordinary command; but the several commanders of districts, assisting or requiring assistance, shall not fail in such cases, immediately to acquaint their superiors with their respective proceedings, for the information of His Imperial Majesty.

If, under such circumstances, the commanding officer of the district in a state of insurrection, and the commanding officer of the neighbouring district, whose aid is required, do not assemble and dispose of their forces as the case requires; or if they do not transmit information of their proceedings to their respective superiors; or lastly, if the officers in the immediate command of the troops do not dispatch them according to the orders of their superior officers, the punishment shall be the same as already stated in the case of employing military force, without authority or necessity.

The orders which any commanding officer of a district may receive, to dispose of and detach the forces under his controul, either from his superior military officer, or from the ministers of state, shall not in ordinary cases warrant their removal beyond the limits of the district they are stationed to protect, unless such orders are expressly stated to be in obedience to the sacred commands of the Emperor. In like manner the orders for the removal, promotion, degradation, or trial of any military officer on duty, shall not be carried into effect, unless derived expressly from His Majesty's sacred command; and whoever obeys any such orders, without the above sanction, shall be punished in the same manner as in the other cases previously described.

No clause.

SECTION CC. — Military Operations to be regularly reported.

When any officer who commands a detachment or division of the forces on their march upon actual service, subject to the orders of the general and commander in chief of the expedition, is directed to proceed against any of the forts or other strong holds of the rebels, he shall, immediately after having reduced the place, and accomplished the object of his destination, dispatch a swift messenger with the intelligence to the commander in chief at head-quarters, and by him a corresponding communication shall with equal expedition be made to the supreme board for military affairs. The commander-in-chief shall also draw up

up another special report of the event, for the purpose of its being laid before His Imperial Majesty.

If, on the other hand, the strength and numbers of the rebels are found to be so considerable, that the force destined to proceed against them by the commander in chief is inadequate to the service, the commanding officer of the detachment shall instantly transmit information of this state of affairs to the said commander in chief, that such a reinforcement of infantry and cavalry may be sent from head quarters, as may be necessary to ensure the defeat and apprehension of the rebels and insurgents. If the commanding officer of the detachment omits to give such information, the commander in chief shall determine and inflict such punishment as may be warranted by the circumstances of the case; but if a failure of the military operations of government in that quarter is the consequence of such omission, the extent of the punishment shall be determined according to the law which is expressly applicable to such a case, and elsewhere provided.

When any of the revolters and insurgents voluntarily surrender themselves to a detachment or division of the forces, the commanding officer shall immediately deliver them over to the custody of the commander in chief, that the latter may respectfully acquaint the Emperor with the circumstance, and solicit a declaration of His Majesty's pleasure respecting their future disposal.

If any such commanding officer rapaciously plunders the property of those who have voluntarily surrendered, and subsequently kills or wounds them; or if he oppresses them in such a manner that they are driven to desert, and either attempt or effect their escape, he shall be beheaded after remaining in prison the customary period. If he does not kill or wound them, or drive them to the said extremities by violence, the punishment shall be conformable to the law provided for cases of defraudation only.

No clause.

SECTION CCI. — Expreses upon Military Affairs.

Whenever any expreses, containing information and intelligence respecting military affairs, are received by the governors of the cities of the first and second orders, from the districts, stations, and governments, within the limits of their respective jurisdictions, the contents shall be reported in dispatches entrusted to the care of special messengers, to the viceroy, sub-viceroy, treasurer, judge, and other heads of departments in the province, and subsequently also to the commander of the forces in the district, and to the commander in chief in the province.

The commanders of military stations shall address their dispatches upon military affairs only to the commander of the forces of the district, the commander in chief, the viceroy, and the sub-viceroy.

When the intelligence arrives at the offices of the viceroy, sub-viceroy, commander in chief, and other military officers of the first rank, they shall, on the one hand, transmit a particular statement of the circumstances to the supreme board for military affairs, and on the other, address a respectful report of the case for the express purpose of its being submitted to the immediate consideration of His Imperial Majesty. If the aforesaid superior officers, after a joint deliberation on the subject, agree to suppress and conceal the intelligence, and, conformably to such agreement, make no timely report to the Emperor, they shall be severally punished with 100 blows, deprived of their offices, and rendered incapable of the public service. If the military operations then in progress are, in consequence of such concealment, erroneously or improperly conducted, the offenders shall suffer death, by being beheaded after the customary period of imprisonment.

No clause.

SECTION CCII. — Betraying the Secrets of the State.

When any person is in possession of important secrets of state, such as the intended distribution of the troops, and other measures taken, and arrangements made by the Emperor, or by the commander in chief, for the attack and reduction by surprise of any foreign tribes, or for the defeat and seizure of revoltors and insurgents; if such person betrays or in any manner divulges such state secrets, so that they come to the knowledge of the enemy, he shall be beheaded after undergoing the customary imprisonment.

In like manner, if any person betrays or divulges the contents of the reports of generals of the forces, addressed to His Majesty from the frontiers, so that the enemy comes to the knowledge thereof, he shall be punished with 100 blows and banishment for three years; but, if in this or the preceding case, the offending party shall have been convicted of treasonable motives, he will be more severely punishable, as is elsewhere by law provided.

The first divulger of the secret shall always suffer the full punishment of the law, as the principal offender, and each of those who afterwards successively transmitted it, shall suffer the mitigated punishment of accessaries.

Whoever privately opens and reads any sealed government or official dispatch whatever, shall be punished at the least with 60 blows; but if it relates to any important military affairs, he shall be punished with 100 blows and three years banishment, as a divulger of state secrets.

If any of the officers of government holding employments and places immediately about His Majesty's person, divulge an important secret of the court, they also shall suffer death for the offence, by being beheaded after the usual period of imprisonment; and even if they divulge any secrets upon ordinary affairs, they shall be punished with 100 blows, deprived of their places, and rendered incapable of the public service*.
with

Three clauses.

SECTION CCIII.—Application for, and Transmission of Military Supplies.

Whenever there is any deficiency of grain, specie, or military stores at any of the frontier stations, the commanding officer of the post shall send a messenger to give notice thereof to the treasurer of the province, and shall at the same time address official letters to the viceroy, sub-viceroy, and chief military officers of the province, requesting their sanction to the issue of a further supply. The chief authorities in the province shall make known the application for supplies, describing their nature and amount, to the supreme board in that department at Peking, and through that channel information shall, lastly, be conveyed to the Emperor, conformable to whose orders, the supplies shall be issued and distributed.

If any unnecessary delay retards the progress of the application for, and issue of, the supplies in the different stages; if the Emperor is not informed of the application as soon as it is received; or if the officer stationed at the frontier does not duly and regularly make the application as often as is necessary, the individual failing to perform his duty, shall be punished with 100 blows, deprived of his situation, and rendered incapable of the public service.

If through the misconduct thus punishable, so great a deficiency in point of supplies is experienced at the period of a subsequent conflict with an enemy, that the military operations of government are in that instance rendered unsuccessful, the delinquents shall suffer death, by being beheaded after the usual period of confinement.

No clause.

* The first clause to this section denounces the punishment of perpetual banishment against those who betray the secrets of state, by clandestinely visiting and plotting with the members of foreign embassies.

SECTION CCIV. — Errors and Failures in Military Operations.

When the troops of government are on the point of taking the field upon any public service, if the supplies of arms, ammunition, stores, and requisite provisions of all kinds are not found to have been completed within the period previously determined, the officer of government who occasioned the delay, whether by a tardy transmission of the proper orders or a tardy execution of them, shall be punished with 100 blows.

If any such delay or neglect shall occasion a deficiency in the aforesaid articles when the troops are near to, and on the point of engaging the enemy; if the commanding officers of the troops who have received orders to co-operate on such occasions, lose time and wait the issue of events, instead of assembling their forces on the day, and at the place appointed; or lastly, if those who are entrusted with the orders or dispatches for assembling the troops, as aforesaid, do not execute their commissions in due time; any error or failure in the military operations that may arise from such causes shall subject the offending parties to the punishment of death, by being beheaded after the customary period of confinement.

No clause.

SECTION CCV. — Military Officers and Troops not taking the Field according to their Instructions.

When a certain number of military officers, together with the troops under their command, have been selected for the performance of any particular military service; as soon as the season approaches for the commencement of their operations, a day shall be fixed for their marching from their quarters, and after that period arrives any delay of a single day shall subject the offending party to a punishment of 70 blows ; and the punishment shall increase at the rate of one degree for every further delay of three days, of which any individual is guilty.
of

If any one shall designedly wound or maim himself, or pretend sickness or infirmity, in order to evade his duty on such an occasion, the punishment shall be one degree more severe, and be increased according to the number of the days of the delay, until it attain the limit of 100 blows. The offender shall still be compelled to join the army in the field, unless he has maimed himself in such a manner as to be unfit for service, in which case, his district shall be obliged to find a substitute.

After the troops have entered the destined field of their operations, whoever under any pretext absents himself a day beyond the period fixed for repairing to his station, shall be punished with 100 blows ; and whoever absents himself for three days, under the like circumstances, shall, although no ill consequence to the military operations should arise therefrom, suffer death, by being beheaded after the usual confinement, and be executed under the immediate direction of the commander in chief ; but if the offender is capable of redeeming his credit, by zealous exertions in the line of his duty, the commander in chief shall possess the discretionary power of remitting his punishment, and of deciding relative to his future disposal.

One clause.

SECTION CCVI. — Soldiers serving by Substitutes.

When any individual of the military profession, instead of personally joining the army when summoned, sends a substitute whom he has hired to assume his name, and serve for him, the substitute shall be punished with 80 blows, and the individual who hired him, with 100 blows ; and the latter shall be compelled to take a station in the ranks instead of the former.

Any

Any foldier of a garrison who hires a temporary substitute to personate and serve for him in his absence, shall, as well as such substitute, be liable to punishment within two degrees of the severity of that provided in the former case.

Nevertheless, if the son, grandson, nephew, younger brother, or other relation, living on the farm, or establishment of the person liable to serve, voluntarily offers himself without any pecuniary consideration, he shall be allowed to supply the place of the other, provided the individual declining service is really necessitated to do so, by age or infirmities.

The individual offering to serve shall address a statement of the case to the commanding officer, who, having verified and duly investigated the same, shall grant the other his discharge. If the persons of the medical profession who are held in requisition to attend and prepare medicines for the army, evade their duty by hiring itinerant quacks and ignorant persons, to personate them and serve in their stead, the substitute and the individual hiring him, shall each suffer the punishment of 80 blows; and whatever pecuniary consideration the former may have received from the latter, he shall forfeit to government.

One clause.

SECTION CCVII.— Officers on the Field of Battle unfaithful to their Trust.

If any general or other commanding officer entrusted with the charge of a city, fortress, or other military station, when it is attacked or invested by rebels or insurgents, suddenly deserts and flies from his post, instead of effectually maintaining and defending it; or if such general or commanding officer, having neglected the previous adoption of proper measures of defence and security, suffers the enemy to come upon him unawares, and take possession of such city, fortress, or military station, he shall in either case suffer death, by being beheaded, after the customary period of confinement. If, when the army is in the neighbourhood of the lines of the rebels or insurgents, the scouts and advanced guards stationed on the heights, do not take care to give timely notice of the enemy's motions; and if, in consequence of their neglect, the fortresses are taken, or the forces of government worsted by an unexpected attack, the scouts or guards shall, for such misconduct, be also liable to the punishment of death, by being beheaded after the usual period of confinement.

If the neglect of proper precautions on the part of the general, or of due communication of intelligence, on the part of the scouts or advanced guards, is not attended with the loss of any fortress, or with any other consequences directly injurious to the forces of government, but still enables the insurgents to advance beyond their former limits, and to ravage the country and plunder the inhabitants, the individual whose offence occasioned such misfortunes, shall be punished with 100 blows, and sent into perpetual and remote military banishment.

If, when the forces of government are drawn out to engage the enemy in a pitched battle, or to invest or assault the enemy's fortresses, any of the officers or soldiers set the example of giving way and retreating, they shall suffer death by being beheaded, after the usual period of confinement.

Three clauses.

SECTION CCVIII.—Connivance at the Depredations of the Soldiers.

Any commanding officer of troops in the field, or at a frontier station, who privately authorizes or instructs his soldiers to proceed beyond the limits of the territories under subjection, in order to seize and plunder the inhabitants, shall be punished with 100 blows, deprived of his office, and sent into the less remote military banishment.

If

If the superior authorities in the provinces authorize such conduct on the part of the military officers, they shall suffer punishment less by one degree; and if the civil officers in the station concur therein, they shall suffer punishment less by two degrees.

Those only who authorize the pillage shall be punishable, and therefore the soldiers, when warranted by the permission of their superiors, shall not be held responsible.

If, on the other hand, any of the soldiers go beyond the boundaries, and pillage the country, without any authority or license to that effect from their superior officers, the ringleaders shall be punished with 100 blows, and the rest severally with 90 blows; if in the course of such unwarrantable proceedings, they should wound any of the inhabitants, their ringleader shall be beheaded, after the usual confinement, and the rest punished severally with 100 blows, and sent (as also the offenders in the former case) into remote military banishment. If, on these occasions, the immediate superior of the soldiers guilty of this offence, is chargeable with a neglect of proper discipline, he shall be punished with 60 blows, but retain his office.

Nevertheless, when any of the insurgents escape beyond the frontiers, this law shall not be construed so as to prevent the officers of garrisons in frontier stations from detaching parties of troops across the boundaries, to pursue and reduce such fugitive insurgents into subjection.

If at any time the troops are guilty of pillage within the boundaries of the empire, or of countries reduced to subjection, they shall, without any distinction between principals and accessories, suffer death by being beheaded, after the customary confinement.

If the immediate superiors of the soldiers guilty of this offence are chargeable on such occasions with a neglect of proper discipline, they shall be punished with 80 blows, but retain their offices.

If the commanding and other officers of the troops are privy to their designs of pillaging the country and inhabitants, within or without the boundaries of the empire, and yet connive at, and permit such unwarrantable proceedings, they shall be liable to the same punishment as the soldiers, excepting only the customary reduction of one degree in capital cases.

Two clauses.

SECTION CCIX. — Exercise and Discipline of the Troops.

If the commanding officer of any military post or station, either upon the frontiers or elsewhere within the empire, does not preserve military law and discipline; if he does not constantly employ his troops in military exercises; if he does not keep the walls and fortifications in a state of repair; or lastly, if he does not provide an adequate supply, in proper condition, of clothes, armour, arms, and ammunition; he shall in every such case be punished with 80 blows, when it is the first offence, and with 100 blows, when it is the second offence.

If through a relaxation from the due severity of precautionary discipline, or an ill-judged exercise of military authority in dispensing rewards and punishments, the troops at length mutiny and desert to the enemy, all the officers who held commands over such troops, shall be punished respectively with 100 blows, their families degraded, and themselves dismissed into remote and perpetual military banishment.

If in consequence of the desertion or mutiny of the troops, any officer shall fly from his post, he shall suffer death by being beheaded, after the usual period of confinement.

One clause.

SECTION CCX. — Exciting and causing Rebellion by oppressive Conduct.

If any officer of government, whose situation gives him power and controul over the people, not only does not conciliate them by proper indulgence, but exercises his authority in a manner so inconsistent with the established laws and approved usages of the empire, that the sentiments of the once loyal subjects being changed by his oppressive conduct, they assemble tumultuously and openly rebel, and drive him at length from the capital city and seat of his government; such officer shall suffer death, after the usual period of confinement. If the rebellion does not extend so far as to occasion the loss of the government station, subject to the authority of such officer, the case shall be considered similar to that of a criminal neglect of discipline leading to mutiny, which is treated of in the preceding section; but the final decision upon the extent of the punishment due to the offender, shall remain with His Imperial Majesty.

Two clauses.

SECTION CCXI. — Clandestine Sale of Horses taken in Battle.

Whenever the troops of government take and secure any of the horses belonging to the enemy, the full number of the animals captured shall be reported to the superior officer on the spot; if any soldier sells such horses to private individuals, receiving goods or money in return, he shall be punished with 100 blows; if any officer of government is guilty of a similar offence, he shall receive the same punishment, and moreover be deprived of his office and command.

The purchaser shall also be punished with 40 blows; the horses, and the amount of the purchase-money, shall be forfeited to government.

When

When the purchaser is an officer or soldier of government, he shall not himself be punishable, but the amount of the money paid by him to the seller shall be forfeited; the horses shall likewise be forfeited when the purchaser is an officer having rank over, or a soldier of the same division with, the seller, as he is in such case supposed to have had an opportunity of knowing the illegality of the transaction.

One clause.

SECTION CCXII. — Clandestine Sale of Military Arms and Accoutrements.

If any soldier sells to a private individual the clothes, armour, swords, spears, flags, standards, or any of the other necessary military accoutrements delivered to his charge on the account of government, and actually receives a valuable consideration in exchange for the same, he shall be punished with 100 blows, and sent into remote and perpetual military banishment. If any military officer of government is guilty of a similar offence, he shall suffer the same number of blows, be degraded, and sent into the less remote military banishment.

The purchaser of the military accoutrements shall in these cases be punished with 40 blows, although it should be an article, not in itself prohibited; but if prohibited, he shall, in such case, be liable to greater punishment, according to the law against private individuals retaining possession of such articles; that is to say, according to circumstances, from 80 blows as far as 100 blows, and perpetual banishment to the distance 3000 lee.

The military accoutrements, as well as the purchase-money, shall in general be forfeited; but when the purchaser is an officer or soldier of government, such purchaser shall be liable to no punishment, and the the forfeiture shall then be limited to the amount of the purchase-money received by the feller.

No clause.

SECTION CCXIII. — Destroying and casting away Military Arms and Accoutrements.

If, after the accomplishment and termination of any military service or expedition, the commanding officer does not, within the period of ten days, restore to the proper officer of government all the additional arms and accoutrements that had been entrusted to his charge for the public service, such defaulter shall be punished with 60 blows; the punishment shall be increased as far as 100 blows, at the rate of one degree for each additional period of ten days, during which he retains possession of such articles.

If, after the conclusion of any such military service or expedition, the commanding officer wilfully casts away or destroys any one article belonging and necessary to the military equipment, he shall be punished with 80 blows, and one degree more severely for every additional article cast away or destroyed, until the number exceeds 20, when he shall be liable to suffer death after the usual period of confinement.

If, any such officer shall unintentionally lose, or inadvertently destroy, one or more of the articles aforesaid, the punishment shall be proportionately less by three degrees, than that inflicted for the wilful offence; and if in any of the preceding cases the offender is a private soldier, instead of being an officer, the punishment shall be further reduced proportionably, one degree.

The amount and value of the articles lost or destroyed shall be carefully ascertained in each case, that the offender may be required to make good the loss sustained by government.

When,

When, however, any such military stores or accoutrements had been lost or destroyed in actual service or in battle, no punishment shall be inflicted, nor any compensation for the loss required.

Two clauses.

SECTION CCXIV. — Possession of prohibited Arms and Accoutrements.

If any private individual secretly retains in his possession, armour for man or horse, shields, tubes for firing large cannon, Imperial flags and standards, or any other similar articles exclusively of military use, he shall be punished with 80 blows, though he should possess only one article, and one degree more severely for every additional article of the kind, in his possession. If he is likewise the maker or manufacturer of the articles, his punishment shall be proportionately more severe in each case, by one degree, as far as 100 blows, and perpetual banishment to the distance of 3000 lee.

If the articles are not completed so as to be fit for immediate use, neither the possessor nor manufacturer shall be liable to punishment, but they shall deliver up all such unfinished articles to government.

This prohibition does not comprise bows and arrows, slings, spears, or knives, or any of the instruments used in fishing or agriculture.

Seven clauses.

SECTION CCXV. — Relaxation of, and Absence from, Military Duties.

If any colonel or inferior officer of a regiment, or any serjeant of a particular troop, suffers or licenses the soldiers under his command to proceed under the pretext of buying or selling, to a distance of more than 100 lee from their station, or clandestinely to cultivate lands; or

if

if any officer or serjeant as aforesaid, shall require such soldiers to perform private services, which interfere with, and occasion a neglect of, his military duties and exercises, such officer or serjeant shall be punished in proportion to the number of soldiers so misemployed; that is to say, with 80 blows, if one man; and one degree more severely for each addition of three to the number misemployed, until the punishment amounts to 100 blows; in which case the offender shall be deprived of his office and command. If a bribe is given and received, in consideration of such a breach of discipline, the punishment shall be subject to such augmentation as may be warranted by the law applicable to all cases of bribery for unlawful purposes. The soldier who avails himself of any criminal relaxation of discipline, or consents to employ himself inconsistently with his military duty, shall be punished with 80 blows.

If any officer or serjeant dispatches a soldier beyond the frontiers, and in consequence thereof such soldier loses his life, or is taken and detained by rebels or enemies, the officer or serjeant shall be punished with 100 blows, degraded, and sent into perpetual and remote military banishment.

If the number of soldiers so lost to the service amounts to three or more, the officer or serjeant shall suffer death by being strangled, after the customary confinement.

If the commanding officer of the station or encampment, or the serjeants in his attendance, knowingly suppress and assist in the concealment of such circumstances, by concurring with the officer or serjeant in fault, in a fictitious statement to government of the natural death or desertion of the individuals who had in fact been lost to the service in the manner aforesaid, they shall, except as to forfeiture of life, be equally punishable with the original offenders.

In general, when the colonel, inferior officer, or serjeant of a regiment, authorizes or occasions a dereliction and neglect of military and exercises among the troops; if the commanding officer of the station or encampment avowedly consents to, or privately connives thereat, instead of taking cognizance of every such offence against military discipline; or if, when the commanding officer is guilty of authorizing or occasioning a dereliction of duty, the colonel, inferior officer, or serjeant of the troops, being acquainted therewith, does not complain of, and inform against him, the party directing, and the party conniving, shall be equally punished, in the manner already provided.

If, from the neglect to maintain authority by proper severity and strictness of discipline, the soldiers become licentious and transgress the law, in any of the aforesaid respects, although without express instruction or permission so to do; or if any such misconduct is permitted through inattention and want of investigation, although not designedly concealed or connived at, the extent of the punishment shall be apportioned in the following manner: The serjeant shall be punishable with 40 blows, when a single individual under his command transgresses; the centurion with the same, when five transgress; the colonel or commander of 1000 men with the same, when 10 transgress; and lastly, the commanding officer of the encampment or station shall be liable to be punished as above, when 50 transgress. 50 blows shall be the punishment of the serjeant when two transgress, of the centurion when 10 transgress, of the colonel when 20 transgress, and of the commander in chief, when 100 transgress.

The officers in such cases shall not forfeit their commands, nor suffer the punishment here stated, unless the full number of the soldiers under their respective commands are proved to have been transgressors.

If any military officer should employ a soldier in private domestic service, although without exempting or removing him from the discharge of his public duty, or from the performance of his military exercises, exercises, he shall still be punished with 40 blows, and the amount of his punishment shall be progressively increased as far as 80 blows, at the rate of one degree for every five men so illegally employed. He shall, moreover, forfeit the amount of the wages of such men, estimated at the rate of 8 fen 5 lee 5 hao (about seven-pence sterling) per man per day.

Nevertheless, the officer borrowing the services of his men only upon occasional mournings and rejoicings, shall be excepted from the penalties of this law.

One clause.

SECTION CCXVI. — Princes and hereditary Nobility employing the Troops of Government.

The princes and hereditary nobility shall not be permitted to call for the assistance of the officers or troops of government, or to dispatch them on any particular service, unless expressly authorized so to do, by an edict issued by the Emperor.

The first and the second offence of this kind shall, however, be pardoned; but the third shall be taken into cognisance by the magistrates, and reported for the decision of His Majesty.

If any military officers of government comply with such unlawful demands, or, when unengaged in actual service, serve and do honorary duty at the gate or palace of any prince or hereditary nobleman, they shall be all equally punished with 100 blows, degraded, and sent into remote and perpetual military banishment. Private soldiers committing this offence shall be punished in the same manner.

No clause.

SECTION CCXVII. — Desertion from Military Service.

If any officer or soldier selected for, and actually employed in, any military expedition or detached public service, deserts his post and station, whether in order to return to his home or to go elsewhere, he shall for the first offence be punished with 100 blows, and compelled to proceed to his original destination; for the second offence, he shall be punished with death, by being strangled, after the usual period of confinement.

Any person who is privy to the crime of desertion, and who harbours the deserter, shall, whether it is the first or second offence, be punished with 100 blows, and subjected to military banishment.

If either the head-inhabitant of the district of which the deserter is a native, or the head-inhabitant of the district in which he has concealed himself, is acquainted with the fact, but omits to give any information thereof to government, he shall be punished with 100 blows.

If, after the conclusion of any service in which the troops were engaged, any individual amongst them presumes to quit the ranks, and to return home before the rest of the army, he shall be punished five degrees less severely than in the last instance; that is to say, with 50 blows; but if, to avoid such punishment, he at such time deserts altogether, he shall be liable to suffer the punishment of 80 blows.

If any of the troops stationed at the Imperial city of Peking are guilty of desertion, they shall be punished with 90 blows for the first offence; the troops employed to garrison any of the other cities or fortified stations in the empire, shall be punished with 80 blows for the first offence; for the second offence the troops of any garrison, whether of the Imperial city or of any other fortification, shall be punished with 100 blows, and sent into perpetual and remote military banishment. For the third offence they shall, in each of the above cases, suffer death, by being strangled, after the usual period of confinement.

In

In general, all persons harbouring or concealing deserters, knowing them to be such, shall be punishable in an equal degree, as partners in their guilt, excepting only the cases of remote banishment and capital punishment, upon all of which the harbourer of the criminal shall suffer only the punishment of the less remote military banishment.

If the head-inhabitant of the district in which the deserter is harboured is privy to the fact, but does not give information of it to government, he shall suffer punishment in proportion to that to which the harbourer of the deserter is liable, but less in each case by two degrees.

If the serjeant of any troop knowingly suffers his men to desert, his punishment shall be the same as theirs, except that it shall in no case exceed 100 blows, degradation, and the less remote military banishment.

During an interval, beginning on the day upon which any individual deserts from the army, and ending when an hundred days are expired, such deserter shall be freely pardoned, if he voluntarily surrenders himself to government; but after that period a voluntary surrender will only entitle him to a reduction in his punishment of two degrees. A voluntary surrender may be made at any military station, and the officer of the station shall have full power to accept the same, as well as altogether to remit, or partially to reduce the punishment of the deserter in consideration thereof, according to the circumstances of the case. Any soldier who deserts his own troop or battalion in order to enter into another shall equally be liable, according to the nature of the case, to all the several penalties of desertion.

Six clauses.

SECTION CCXVIII. — Favour to be shewn to the Relations of Officers and Soldiers deceased.

When any officers or soldiers are killed in battle, or die of sickness, their surviving relations shall be provided by government with present subsistence, and with the means of returning to their respective homes and families.

If the officers of any district, through which they have occasion to pass, detain them unnecessarily a single day, such officers shall be punished with 20 blows; and one degree more severely, until the punishment amounts to 50 blows, for every additional three days delay.

One clause.

SECTION CCXIX. — Regulations of the Nocturnal Police.

All persons in the Imperial city of Peking are strictly prohibited from stirring abroad during the night, and whoever transgresses this law after the third bell of the first watch has sounded, (twelve minutes past nine in the afternoon), or before the third bell of the fifth watch has been struck (twelve minutes past five in the morning), shall be punished with 30 blows; whoever transgresses this law during the second, third, and fourth watches (from ten P. M. to four A. M.), shall suffer the severer punishment of 50 blows. In all other cities and fortifications of the empire, the same prohibitions shall be enforced, but the punishment attending a transgression of this article of the laws shall be less in each case by one degree.

From these restrictions, however, exception shall be always made in favour of persons stirring abroad at night upon public business, or upon private affairs of an urgent nature, such as sudden illness, women taken in labour, deaths, burials, and other similar emergencies.

On

On the other hand, if the patrols maliciously arrest and detain any persons before the striking of the evening bell, or after the striking of the morning bell *, falsely charging them with having violated the rules of the watch, they shall themselves undergo the punishment of the offence imputed to the person unjustly detained.

If any person who had really violated the rules, nevertheless refuses to surrender, and succeeds in making his escape from the patrol, he shall be punished with 100 blows. If in the scuffle, he strikes the patrol, so as to wound him in any degree, he shall suffer death, by being strangled, after the customary imprisonment; if he kills the patrol, he shall suffer death by being beheaded.

If at any time a scuffle of the same kind takes place between the patrol and any person whom he had seized and attempted to detain, contrary to the laws; in such case, the person seized and attempted to be detained, shall not be liable to suffer for any of the consequences of his resistance, otherwise than he would have done in an ordinary case of a scuffle or affray between equals.

One clause.

* It may be proper to explain, that it is not intended to be understood that a bell, according to the strict interpretation of the term, is employed in China to announce the successive periods of time; but merely that some article is used for the purpose, which, when struck, is capable of returning a sufficiently audible sound.

B O O K III.

PROTECTION OF THE FRONTIER.

SECTION CCXX. — Crossing a Barrier without a License. X

WHOEVER, without being provided with a regular license or passport, proceeds either by land or water-carriage, clandestinely through any barrier station, shall be punished with 80 blows; whoever, in order to avoid examination at the barrier, passes it by any other than the customary road, channel, or ford, shall be punished with 90 blows.

Whoever in a similar manner passes, without submitting himself to examination, any of the barriers or posts of government at the frontiers, shall be punished with 100 blows, and banished for three years.

If such individual proceeds afterwards so far as to have communication with the foreign nations beyond the boundaries, he shall suffer death by being strangled, after the customary period of confinement.

The examining officer of the station, when aware of the intentions of such offender and guilty of consenting thereto, shall be equally punishable, except that in capital cases the sentence of death shall be commuted for that of banishment.

The responsible officers of government, to whose want of vigilance and examination a breach of this law is at any time attributable, shall, in each case, suffer a punishment proportionably less by three degrees than the original offender, and in no case exceeding 100 blows.

The

The military attendants who were on guard on the day upon which the laws were thus transgressed, shall, proportionably to the nature of the offence, be punished one degree less in each case, than their superior officers.

Whoever fraudulently obtains leave to proceed through a barrier station, by presenting a license intended for another person, shall be punished with 80 blows.

When the servants or inmate relations of any family commit this offence, the master of such family shall be held responsible, and punished accordingly. The examining officer of the station, if privy to the fraud, shall be equally punished as an abettor of the offence, but if not privy thereto, he shall not be held in any manner responsible.

Whoever clandestinely, or under cover of a license granted for other purposes, leads or drives his horses or asses through any barrier station, shall be punished with 60 blows. If any person leading or driving such animals, avoids the barrier altogether, by bringing them to the opposite side by an unusual route, the punishment shall be increased to 70 blows.

Nine clauses.

SECTION CCXXI. — Granting or obtaining Passports and Licenses, under false Pretences.

Whoever grants a passport to those to whom it ought not to be granted, such as exiles, and residents expressly settled by the laws; whoever applies for a passport under a feigned name, or pretending to be of the military, when belonging to the civil profession and vice versa; and lastly, whoever, having legally obtained a passport, delivers it over to a person for whom it was not intended, shall in every case be punished with 80 blows. If the officers of a government station through which any person, having a passport, takes his route, presume to renew the passport after it had legally expired; or if any civil or military board or tribunal, in compliance with the desires of an officer of government or other person of authority and influence, grant general letters of protection from examination inwards or outwards in favour of the goods of any person, the individual officer or the members of the tribunal, as the case may be, shall be punished with 100 blows.

Nevertheless, this law shall not be construed as a prohibition to renew the customary annual passports of any officer, clerk, or artificer of government, if applied for in proper time, at the office where it was granted originally. Any officers of government who attend to unwarranted and illegal applications for passports, and who, knowing them to be so, yet grant the passports requested, shall be liable to punishment in an equal degree with the persons applying for the same; but if the officer is not aware of the fraud intended, or if, as soon as aware thereof, he refuses to comply with the application, he shall not be liable to punishment.

Also, if any of the inferior officers and examiners exceed the limits of their authority, by granting such passports, they shall be punished in the same manner as in the last case of granting passports, when unlawfully applied for.

If any member of a public board or tribunal, authorized to grant passports or licenses, issues the same to any person, without correctly filling up in each document, the date, description, and other necessary remarks, and also making a record thereof in his office, he shall be punished at the least with 100 blows and three years banishment; and as much more severely as the law may assign, in the event of his having been influenced by bribery or any other corrupt motive.

No clause.

SECTION CCXXII. — Vexatious Treatment of Travellers at the Barriers.

On the arrival of any vessels in the inland navigation at a barrier station, the proper officers shall immediately examine them, and prepare the passports or clearances conformably to their cargoes and other circumstances, in order that they may with the least possible delay be free to proceed on their route: if, on the contrary, the said officers unnecessarily detain the vessels and passengers one day, they shall be punished with 20 blows, and one degree more severely as far as 50 blows, for every additional day of detention. When any money is extorted, the punishment shall be increased according to the law applicable to such case.

If any officer of government or other person, confiding in the strength of his influence and authority, when passing a barrier station, refuses to submit to the customary examination and verification of his passport, he shall be punished with 100 blows.

When there is any risk from winds or waves, the boatmen belonging to passage-boats shall not attempt to cross the ferries on pain of receiving punishment to the extent of 40 blows; but if they should have attempted to cross the water in despite of winds and waves, the officers of the customs shall not stop them in the middle of the current for the purpose of urging the demand for toll-money, on pain of receiving 80 blows. If in so doing they shall occasion the death or bodily injury of any person, they shall be liable to the same punishment as in cases of killing and wounding by design. If no demand of toll-money shall have been made as aforesaid, the death or injury any person may sustain by the destruction of the boat, shall be deemed accidental.

No clause.

SECTION CCXXIII. — Assisting and favouring the Escape of the Wives and Daughters of Deserters.

If any military officer or soldier upon guard in the Imperial city of Pekin, shall in any manner assist the wives and daughters of deserters in effecting their escape beyond the walls of the said Imperial city, they shall be sentenced to suffer death by being strangled, but the punishment shall be reduced to banishment as in the case of other offences termed miscellaneous. If any private individual is guilty of such an offence, he shall be punished with 100 blows.

If the military officers or soldiers of any ordinary city, garrisoned station, or plantation *, shall assist and favour the escape of the wives and daughters of deserters from such stations, they shall be severally punished with 100 blows and three years banishment; private individuals committing the like offence, shall suffer 80 blows.

When the offending party has been convicted of receiving a bribe to transgress the law, he shall be liable to such aggravation of his punishment, as may be conformable to the law against bribery for unlawful purposes. If the deserter himself had either implored or purchased the assistance of any person to effect the release of his wives or daughters; he shall be liable to that aggravation of the punishment due to him as a deserter, which may be the consequence of his being held an equal participator in the offence punishable by the present regulation.

If the officer on guard at the gate of the city or fortification, knowing the circumstances of the case, connives at, and permits the passage of such persons, he shall suffer punishment as an equal participator in the offence of forwarding their escape. When nothing more than a neglect of due examination is imputable to such officer, the punishment shall be proportionably less by three degrees, and in no case exceed 100 blows.

* This refers to the new colonies established in different parts of Chinese Tartary.

The punishment of the private soldiers of the guard shall, in each case, be one degree less than that of their commanding officer. Whoever assists the escape beyond the city walls, of the wives and daughters of persons not coming under the description of deserters, but otherwise held to be criminals, either by their own act or by implication, shall be punished with 80 blows, or as much more severely as the corrupt and culpable motive of affording such assistance may, conformable to any other existing law or statute, be found to deserve.

No clause.

SECTION CCXXIV.— Examination and Detection of suspected Persons.

If, in any of the chief barrier stations along the frontiers, or in any of the passes or other places of importance in the interior, there are plotters, seeking to carry out to strangers beyond the boundaries, the internal productions and inventions; or any spies, secretly introducing themselves from without, in order to give intelligence concerning the affairs of the empire; when persons of this description are discovered and brought before the tribunals of government, they shall be strictly examined, and as soon as they shall have been convicted, either of introducing themselves or others into the empire, or of having plotted the means of removing themselves or others out of the empire, they shall all, without any distinction between principals and accessaries, be condemned to suffer death by being beheaded, after the usual period of confinement.

If any of the examining officers of government at the different barrier stations through which such criminals shall have travelled, knowing their guilt, purposely conceal their arrival, and connive at their departure, they shall be held equally guilty, and suffer in the same same manner, except that capital punishments shall be commuted for banishment. If no greater crime than want of vigilance and due examination is imputable to such officers, their punishment shall be limited to 100 blows, and that of the soldiers who were on guard on the day on which the criminals passed, to 90 blows*.

Eleven clauses.

SECTION CCXXV.—Illicit Exportation of Merchandise.

Whoever clandestinely exports to sea, or conveys for sale beyond the boundaries of the empire on the land-side, horses, cattle, iron-work capable of being wrought into military weapons, copper coin, silks, gauzes, or fattins, shall be punished with 100 blows: whoever with such unlawful design carries for hire, or places upon any beast of burthen, or upon any vehicle, any of the aforefaid articles, shall suffer the punishment next below that inflicted by law upon the exporter.

The goods clandestinely exported shall be forfeited, together with the carriages or vessels employed for their conveyance.—Three-tenths of the amount of the goods shall be given as a reward to the person informing against the offending party. Whoever exports by sea or land any military arms or accoutrements shall suffer death by being strangled after the usual period of confinement. If such exportation leads to the disclosure of any state affairs, the offender shall be beheaded.

* By the 11th clause to this section, it is provided with the view of more effectually preventing improper communications with foreigners by sea, that none of the small islands along the coast which are at any distance from the main land, shall be built upon or in any manner inhabited.—The absolute want of a competent naval force has however disabled the Chinese government from giving any effect to such a regulation, and these islands are at present the constant or chief resort, not only of fishermen, but also of the numerous pirates, by whom the unprotected coasts of China are infested.

If

If the governing or examining officers at the port or station are themselves parties in the clandestine exportation of such goods, or if they knowingly and purposely suffer such illicit exportation to take place, they shall suffer the same punishment as the exporter, excepting only, that in capital cases, the punishment shall be reduced to perpetual banishment.

If only a defect of vigilance and want of due examination is imputable to the governing and examining officers, their punishment shall be proportionably less than that of the exporter by three degrees, and never exceed 100 blows. The soldiers whose turn it was to be on guard at the time the clandestine exportation of the goods took place, shall likewise suffer punishment, but proportionably less than their superiors by one degree, being at the same time, however, subject, in cases of bribery, to be punished as much more severely as the laws applicable thereto require*.

Thirty-seven clauses.

SECTION CCXXVI. — Employment of Bowmen upon private Services †.

Whoever employs upon a private service any soldier of the corps of bow-men, shall be punished with 40 blows, and one degree more severely as far as 80 blows, for every three soldiers in addition to the number so illegally employed. The offender against this law shall likewise forfeit to government the estimated amount of the wages of the bow-men, at the rate of 8 fen, 5 lee, 5 hao, (about seven pence sterling) per man per day. The officer who grants the service of such men to any person, shall be subject to the same punishment as those who employ them.

* In the several clauses annexed to this section of the laws, (a translation of one or two of the most remarkable of which is inserted in the Appendix, No: XXI.) various prohibitory and restrictive regulations are introduced against foreign intercourse generally, but those which particularly concern Europeans, are chiefly comprized in the occasional edicts of the emperors and of the provincial magistrates, a translation of some of which will be found in the Appendix, No. XI.

† It is explained in the commentary annexed to the original Chinese, that this law particularly relates to those soldiers, who are detached from the military department, to that of the revenue or of the police.—The term bow-men certainly does not convey the precise idea, and the bow and arrow are, in fact, the military weapons most generally in use among the Chinese.

No clause.

END OF THE THIRD BOOK OF THE FIFTH DIVISION.

B O O K IV.

MILITARY HORSES AND CATTLE.

SECTION CCXXVII. — Responsibility of the Charge of Government Cattle.

EVERY officer in charge of the rearing and feeding of the horses, horned cattle, camels, mules, asses, and sheep belonging to government, shall be responsible for an hundred head of animals, (that is to say, the following punishments are provided on a supposition of the number in charge being precisely one hundred, and therefore the following numbers shall vary and be more or less, in proportion as the total is more or less than one hundred ;) and a strict and faithful report shall be made to government of the death, loss, or partial injury which occurs to any of them, that the neglect and mismanagement which, unless the contrary is proved, is in consequence imputable to the rearers and feeders, may be punished as hereafter provided.

Moreover, under whatever circumstances the animals die, the skin, the hair of the tail, and the bullock's tendons and horns, shall be duly delivered to the charge of the proper officer of government; the rearer and feeder, and all his assistants, shall severally be punished with 30 blows, when one horse, bullock, or camel dies; and one degree more severely for every three that die in addition to the number, until the punishment amounts to 100 blows; beyond which it shall increase at the rate of one degree for each addition of 10 to the number of deaths, until the punishment amounts to 100 blows and three years banishment. The death of sheep shall subject the rearers and feeders to punishment proportionably less severe than in the case of horses by three degrees; and the death of mules and asses to a punishment less than in the case of horses, by two degrees.

When any of the aforesaid animals are brought forth dead, or die of old age, if they are thereupon duly submitted to the official inspection of the proper officers, the rearers and feeders shall be excused from punishment.

When any of the animals are lost, the rearers and feeders shall make up the full number or value; when any are maimed or injured so as to be unfit for use, the punishment of the responsible persons shall be proportionably less than in the case of the death of the animals by one degree, but they shall continue to be responsible for the full original number; the dead or maimed cattle shall be sold towards replacing the same with living and perfect animals.

One clause.

SECTION CCXXVIII. — Breeding of Horses.

The responsibility attending the charge and superintendance of breeding mares shall be estimated according to the produce of the several droves, consisting of 100 in a drove. Every year the breeder in charge of the animals shall be answerable for the production of one hundred foals from every three droves. If three droves yield no more in the year than 84 foals, the breeder shall be punished with 50 blows; if less than 74 foals, with 60 blows.

The superintending officer, being in such case held guilty of neglecting to attend and inspect this department, shall suffer punishment proportionably less than the breeder by three degrees. The officers of the tribunal at court, superintending this department, shall be also liable to punishment in these cases further reduced proportionably two degrees.

One clause.

SECTION CCXXIX. — Examination of Animals to be purchased by Contract.

In the examination and selection of horses, cattle, camels, mules, and asses to be purchased by contract for the use of government, if the officers do not report and estimate every animal truly and justly, they shall, in the case of one animal falsely described, be punished with 40 blows, and one degree more severely as far as 100 blows, for every addition of three to the number of animals described falsely.

In the case of the examination and selection of sheep, the punishment shall be proportionably less by three degrees.

Every excessive appreciation being injurious to government, and every inadequate appreciation being equally a hardship on individuals, the offenders shall be punishable in proportion to the amount of the deviation in either way, as much more severely as the law concerning pecuniary injuries and malversation is found to authorize.

In like manner also, if the difference between the true and the fictitious value of the animal, had been appropriated to the private advantage of the offender, the punishment shall be increased as far as the law concerning the embezzlement of stores, to the same amount and value, would have warranted.

One clause.

SECTION CCXXX. — Exercise of the Veterinary Art.

If the horses, horned cattle, camels, mules, or asses belonging to government are lean or diseased, in consequence of not having been managed and treated according to the approved and established practice, the farrier or veterinary surgeon shall be punished with 30 blows; and if any one animal dies in consequence of such improper treatment, the punishment shall be increased to 40 blows, and progressively one degree more, for every three additional deaths, until the punishment reaches the limit of 100 blows: With regard to sheep, the punishment of mismanagement shall be proportionately less in each case by three degrees.

No clause.

SECTION CCXXXI. — Improper Usage and Neglect of Cattle.

When the horses, horned cattle, camels, mules, or asses belonging to government are harnessed to draw vehicles, or otherwise employed on service, if the attendant places the harness improperly, so as to injure the back and neck of any of the animals by the yoke, and to produce a wound three *Tsun in circumference, he shall be punished with 20 blows; and if the wound is five or more Tsun in circumference, the punishment shall be increased to 50 blows.

If any of the aforesaid animals become lean from being ill-fed, the feeder, the superintendant, and his deputies, shall, whenever the proportion of lean cattle under the charge of each of them respectively, amounts to ten in an hundred, be severally punishable with 20 blows.

The punishment shall be progressively increased as far as 100 blows, in the proportion of one degree for every additional tenth of lean animals. In respect to the care of sheep, the punishment in each similar case shall be proportionately less by three degrees.

The superior officers of the department shall be liable to similar punishment, according as one or more tenths of the superintendants of cattle under their authority are convicted of the above delinquency. The members of the supreme board for this department at court, shall be punishable, in the proportion of three degrees less than the last mentioned superior officers.

* The Che, of which the Tsun is a tenth, is equivalent to about twelve inches and a half of British measure.

One clause.

SECTION CCXXXII. — Neglecting to break in, and Exercise the Horses of Government.

If any officer who has the charge and superintendency of the horses of government, suffers them to be rode by strangers, or does not attend to their being duly broke in and exercised, he shall, when the law is infringed in respect to one horse only, be punished with 20 blows, and one degree more severely for every addition of four horses, to the number of those insufficiently attended, until the punishment attains the limit of 80 blows.

No clause.

SECTION CCXXXIII. — Killing Horses, Horned Cattle, and other Animals.

Whoever clandestinely, that is to say, without the permission of government, kills his own horses or horned cattle, shall be punished with 100 blows: if his camels, mules, or asses, with 50 blows; and the horns and skins of the animals killed shall in each case be forfeited to government.

If the animals are killed by inadvertence, or die of disease, the owners shall not be held responsible.

Whoever designedly kills another man's horses or cattle, shall be punished with 70 blows, and banished for one year and a half; if he kills another man's camels, mules or asses, he shall be punished with 100 blows. In either case, the punishment shall be subject to increase increase in proportion to the value of the animals killed, according to the scale provided by the law against theft in ordinary cases.

The same punishment shall be inflicted for killing animals belonging to government, except that the contingent increase shall be rated, not according to the law concerning ordinary theft, but according to the law concerning the theft of government property.

In the one case, the value of the animal killed shall be made good to the owner, in the other case, to government: the offenders shall not in either case be branded.

Any person who wounds any of the aforesaid animals, or kills any swine or sheep, shall, without making any distinction between public and private property, be punished, in the former case in proportion to the consequent diminution of the value of the wounded animals; and in the latter, in proportion to the full value of the animals killed, according to the scale provided by law against theft in ordinary cases. — The loss in every case shall be made good to the injured party, whether a private individual or government.

If there is no assignable diminution in the value of the animals wounded, the offender shall still be punished with 30 blows. If any one should, by inadvertence, kill or wound any such animals, he shall not be liable to punishment, but shall be obliged to make good the amount of the loss sustained by the proprietor of the animals.

The punishment of the accessories to the offence of designedly killing or wounding any of the animals belonging to private individuals, shall be one degree less than that of the principal offenders; but in the case of killing or wounding the animals of government, the punishment shall be the same.

If any person designedly kills the horses, horned cattle, camels, mules or asses belonging to any of his relations within the four degrees, he shall suffer the reduced punishment provided in the case of an individual clanclandestinely killing those belonging to himself; he shall however be further required in these cases, to make good the loss to the owner.

Whoever kills the sheep or swine belonging to his relations within the aforesaid degrees, shall be punished in proportion to estimated value of the animals slaughtered, according to the scale provided by the law concerning pecuniary injuries in general, but the punishment shall in no case exceed 80 blows. Designedly wounding, or inadvertently killing, animals belonging to relations, shall not be punished, but shall be subject to the obligation of making good the loss to the proprietors.

If any animals, whether they are government or private property, are suffered to feed upon such of the stores of private individuals or of government, as are likely from their nature, to occasion death or bodily injury to such animals, those who permit or are the cause thereof, shall be punished proportionately less by three degrees than in the case of designedly killing or injuring such animals; they shall moreover make good the loss to the owners; on the other hand, the owners of the cattle shall make good to the owners of the stores, the value of the amount consumed.

If the proprietor of private cattle, or the feeder of government cattle, designedly suffers the animals to feed upon private or government stores, he shall be punished with 30 blows; and as much more severely as may be adequate to the value of the amount of the stores consumed, according to the law concerning pecuniary injuries in general.

The punishment shall be less by two degrees in each case, when the proprietor or feeder of the cattle has suffered such trespass to be committed, through inadvertence only, but he shall be equally liable to make good the loss to the injured party.

The loss shall not however in such case be made good, when the trespassing animal is public property.

In

In all cases of animals or their offspring, attempting or endeavouring to strike with their horns, or to kick or bite, the person who, being so attacked, immediately kills or wounds the attacking animal, shall, whether it be public or private property, neither be liable to corporal punishment, nor even to any pecuniary responsibility.

Four clauses.

SECTION CCXXXIV. — Vicious and dangerous Animals.

When horses, horned cattle, or dogs are viciously inclined, either to kick or bite, or horned cattle to strike with their horns; if the owner does not set a mark on them, and tie them up in the customary manner, or if he does not kill his dogs when they become mad, he shall be punished with 40 blows. If, in consequence of such neglect, any person is killed or wounded, the owner of the animal shall be obliged to redeem himself from the punishment of man-slaughter, or man-wounding, by the payment of the legal fine.

If any owner of such animals designedly loosens them, or encourages them to attack, so as to kill or wound any person, he shall be punishable proportionately less severely by one degree than in the case of killing or wounding such person in an affray.

Nevertheless, if a farrier or veterinary surgeon, hired to cure the disease of any animal, approaches without properly securing it, or if an indifferent person carelessly strikes any animal, and is killed or wounded by it in return, the owner shall not be responsible.

Whoever, lastly, designedly suffers his dogs to kill or wound the animals of other persons, shall be punished with 40 blows, and compelled to make good the amount of the loss, to the injured party.

No clause.

SECTION CCXXXV. — Concealment of the Increase of Animals belonging to Government.

The rearers and feeders of the horses, mules, and asses of government shall report to the proper officer, every time that each animal produces a foal, within ten days after the birth. If, on the contrary, they suffer the period to elapse, and afterwards endeavour to conceal the produce, they shall be punished in proportion to the value of it, according to the scale provided by law in cases of theft, but the punishment shall in no instance exceed 100 blows, and perpetual banishment to the distance of 3000 lee; if they are further guilty of fraudulently selling or exchanging such produce, they shall be punished in proportion to the amount of the loss sustained by government, according to the scale established in the different cases of embezzlement, and which, when the goods embezzled equal or exceed 40 leang or ounces of silver in value, subjects the offender, nominally to the punishment of death by being beheaded, though in effect only to five years banishment, in consideration of the offence coming within the class of those termed miscellaneous.

If the superior officers, and the members of the chief board for this department at court, are privy to such fraudulent proceedings, and take no cognizance of them, they shall participate equally in the punishment; but otherwise, they shall not be held responsible. The purchasers or receivers in exchange of the produce, if privy to the fraud, shall be punished in the same manner as purchasers of stolen goods in ordinary cases, and forfeit their purchases to government.

Two clauses.

SECTION CCXXXVI. — Privately lending the Animals belonging to Government.

If any governor, superintending officer, or clerk in any department, privately takes to his own use, or lends out to others, the horses, horned cattle, camels, mules, or asses belonging to government, whether many or few, for a shorter or longer period; the lender and the person to whom the animals are lent, shall, at the least, be severally punishable with 50 blows. The period during which such animals are thus fraudulently employed shall at the same time be ascertained, that the amount of hire due to government may be calculated, and required from the offenders. Moreover, if the punishment proportionate thereto, according to a scale, raised one degree above that prescribed in ordinary cases of pecuniary injuries, exceeds 50 blows, the punishment shall be increased accordingly.

The hire, however, of any animal, shall never be calculated so as to exceed its full value. If the animals die while thus employed contrary to law, the offenders shall be punished as in the case of a theft of goods of the same intrinsic value.

No clause.

SECTION CCXXXVII. — Public Messengers using the Horses of Government without Authority.

If any public messenger or other person so employed, makes a demand for the use of the horses of government at the different stations through which he passes, without being warranted to do so, or when he ought to have employed the ordinary post-horses, he shall be punished punished with 60 blows; if demanding the use of the asses or mules of government, with 50 blows.

The officers or clerks of government who delivered the horses, asses, or mules, thus unwarrantably demanded, shall, in general, be liable to punishment less than as aforesaid by one degree; but the punishment in these cases shall never extend beyond those who were immediately parties to the illegal transaction.

No clause.

END OF THE FOURTH BOOK OF THE FIFTH DIVISION.

B O O K V.

EXPRESSES AND PUBLIC POSTS*.

SECTION CCXXXVIII. — Conveyance of Government Orders and Dispatches.

THE military post-foldiers charged with the transmission of government orders and dispatches, must proceed on their route at the rate of 300 lee in a day and a night: If through dilatoriness they exceed the time to the extent of three quarters of an hour, (an hour and a half European computation) they shall be punished with 20 blows; and the punishment shall increase by a progressive ratio of one degree for each additional delay of three-quarters of an hour, until it amounts to 50 blows.

Immediately that the dispatches of government arrive at any military post or station, the post-master shall not fail to forward them, whether many or few, under the charge of the soldiers who are placed under his jurisdiction for that purpose.

* The government-post in China, which is the subject of the several sections of this book of the Penal Code, though not professedly open to the people in general, is an establishment of considerable utility and importance, and carried to a degree of perfection, which in an empire so extensive, as well as so ill adapted, from the inequalities and interfections of the surface of the country, to an expeditious mode of internal communication, could scarcely have been expected.

Although the distance from Peking to Canton by land exceeds 1200 English miles, government dispatches have been known to arrive in twelve days, and within a period of thirty days, answers and instructions have frequently been received by the magistrates from the court, even upon affairs of no extraordinary importance.

If

If, instead thereof, the post-master waits for subsequent dispatches, in order to forward them all at one time, he shall be punished with 20 blows.

If the military post-soldiers rub or tear the cover of a government dispatch entrusted to them, but not so as to break the seal thereof, they shall be punished with 20 blows, and the punishment shall increase progressively, in the ratio of one degree for every three additional covers so injured, until it amounts to 60 blows.

If the wrapper or cover is entirely destroyed, but the inner seal of the dispatch not broken, the punishment shall be fixed at 40 blows at the least, and increased progressively as far as 80 blows, at the rate of two degrees for every additional wrapper or cover so destroyed.

If any one dispatch is suppressed or destroyed altogether, or the inner seal of it removed or broken, the punishment shall amount to 60 blows, and be increased progressively as far as 100 blows for every additional dispatch so suppressed, destroyed, or broken open.

In the latter case, if the dispatches were secret, or concerned military operations, the punishment shall not be less than 100 blows, however small may have been the number of the dispatches destroyed or broken open; and the punishment shall be as much more severe than 100 blows, as may be warranted by any other article of the laws, which the offender had transgressed in the course of the same transaction.

If the post-masters do not report the misconduct of the military post-soldiers, they shall be liable to equal punishment; and if, having duly reported the same to the superior officers of government, those officers decline to take cognizance thereof, their punishment shall be proportionably less than the aforesaid, only by two degrees.

The post-master-general of each district shall diligently inspect and superintend the proceedings of all the post-masters and post-soldiers in his department; and the visiting officer and clerks shall personally visit and inspect all the stations once a month.
his

If the number of lesser offences, such as rubbing and tearing the wrappers of dispatches, or dilatoriness in forwarding them, which are overlooked or connived at by these officers, exceeds ten, the post-master-general of the district shall be punished with 40 blows, the clerks of the tribunal of the visiting officer with 30 blows, and the visiting officer himself with 20 blows.

When any greater offence, such as the suppressing, destroying, or breaking open of a dispatch, is overlooked and connived at, the post-master-general of the district shall be equally punishable with the post-foldier; the visiting officer's clerks one degree less; the visiting officer two degrees less; and the governors of cities of the first and second orders, when officiating as superior visiting officers, three degrees less.

Six clauses.

SECTION CCXXXIX. — Intercepting Addresses to Government.

When an officer of any greater or lesser provincial board or tribunal has dispatched, in the lawful manner, an address of information or complaint to His Imperial Majesty, if his superior officer intercepts the progress of such dispatch, by sending a messenger to any of the military stations through which it was to have been forwarded to court, with orders to detain and suppress it, the post-master and post-foldiers at the stations to which such orders were addressed, shall immediately wait on the governor of the district to report the circumstance, by whom information thereof shall be transmitted to the superior officer of the province, and by him again, to the supreme board at Peking, the officers whereof shall, lastly, enter into a strict investigation of the circumstances of the transaction, and lay before the Emperor the final result; result; if the charge is substantiated, the offender shall receive sentence of death, to be inflicted by beheading, after the usual period of confinement.

If the post-master and post-soldiers comply with such unlawful requisition, and conceal the fact when aware of its unlawfulness, they shall each of them be punished with 100 blows; the governor of the district shall be liable to similar punishment, if, after the post-master or post-soldiers duly report the circumstance, he declines to take cognizance of it.

In like manner, if any superior officer intercepts the progress of any true and lawful dispatch addressed by his inferior to any of the supreme departments of state at Peking, punishment shall be inflicted on the several parties proportionably less by two degrees.

Although this law is expressly designed to prevent superior officers from intercepting the complaints which may be brought forward against them by their inferiors, it shall equally apply to the case of inferiors attempting to intercept the transmission of the charges exhibited against them by their superiors.

No clause.

SECTION CCXL. — Post-Houses to be kept in Repair.

When any military station through which express posts are forwarded, falls into a decayed and ruinous state, if it is not put into good repair, and all the requisite appurtenances provided and completed; or when the establishment of post-soldiers falls short of the full complement, if the vacancies are not filled up; or if weak and aged persons are employed on such a service, the post-master-general of the district shall be punished in each of the several cases with 50 blows, and the president and other members of the visiting and inspecting board or tribunal, shall each be punished with 40 blows.

One clause.

SEC-

SECTION CCXLI. — Post-Soldiers to be employed on no other Service.

The officers and attendants of the several boards or tribunals of government, when travelling upon the public service, are not permitted, even on such occasions, to employ the post-foldiers of the stations through which they pass, either in transporting from place to place the property of government, or their own private baggage and travelling furniture.

For every offence against this law, they shall be liable to a punishment of 40 blows, and forfeit to government the amount of the wages of such foldiers at the rate of 8 fen, 5 lee, 5 hao, (about seven-pence sterling) per man per day.

No clause.

SECTION CCXLII. — Express-Messengers delaying upon the Road.

Any light-horseman dispatched upon ordinary business shall perform his duty within the time appointed by law conformably to the distance and other circumstances; if he exceeds the same by one day, he shall be punished with 20 blows, and his punishment shall be increased one degree, as far as 60 blows, for every addition of three days dilatoriness. If the dispatch concerns military affairs of importance, the punishment shall be proportionably greater in such case by three degrees.

If such delay occasions the failure and miscarriage of the military operations then in progress, the messengers shall suffer death, by being beheaded after due imprisonment. If the several post-horse-officers upon the road, or any of them, reserve the best horses, or upon any pretence refuse to grant them to the use of the express-messenger, and thereby occasion the delay which has been stated to be punishable by this law; the circumstances of the case shall be accurately investigated, and and if their guilt is substantiated, the messenger shall be released from his responsibility, and the punishment to which he would have been liable, shall be inflicted upon them only.

When an inundation or other unavoidable obstruction upon the road, shall have impeded the progress of the express-messenger, and occasion the legal period to be exceeded, all the responsible parties shall be excused.

If a light-horse express-messenger, charged with a government dispatch, mistakes the direction of it, and, having in consequence conveyed it differently from its destination, does not afterwards rectify his error within the legal period of the proper delivery of the dispatch, the punishment, in ordinary cases, shall be proportionably less by two degrees than that in the case of an intentional delay; but in extraordinary cases affecting military operations of importance, the punishment of delay shall be the same, whether imputable to error or to design, but be inflicted solely on the party that occasioned it, whether the messenger himself or the post-horse officer on the road. On the other hand, if the delay arises from the express-messenger having been misguided by an improper and erroneous direction upon the cover of the dispatch, the punishment shall fall upon the person who wrote the direction instead of either of the former.

Three clauses.

SECTION CCXLIII. — Express-Messengers exceeding the Allowance of Horses and Equipage fixed by Government.

If any messenger or officer of government, dispatched upon express service with authority to make use of the post-horses and express-boats of government, employs one horse or one boat more than the proper number, he shall be punished with 80 blows; and for every additional horse or boat so employed, there shall be a proportionate increase of one degree in the punishment. If such officer or messenger employs horses, when it was lawful only to employ asses; or if he insists upon having the use of the best horses, when it was only lawful for him to have employed the middling or inferior sort, he shall be punished with 70 blows.

If, in disputing the matter with the post-horse officer upon the station, the messenger strikes or wounds him, the punishment shall be increased proportionately in such case one degree; but if the blow or wound is attended with serious bodily injury, the punishment shall be rated according to the rule applicable to affrays in ordinary cases.

If the post-horse officer submits to, and complies with, the unlawful demand, he shall participate in the punishment attending the transgression of this law; at the rate of one degree less in each case, than that on the express-messenger.

The above punishment shall be inflicted on, and confined to, the post-horse officer, when such officer gives middling or inferior horses to those messengers who are warranted in claiming the best; except he should happen not to have any of the best horses at his command, which circumstance shall excuse him, as well also as the other party, from punishment.

If the express-messengers quit the direct road, and thereby avoid the post-houses, or when passing the post-houses, if they do not exchange their horses for fresh ones, or their boats for a new set of boats, they shall be punished with 60 blows; and if by such deviation or omission they ride any of the government post-horses so as to occasion their death by over-fatigue, the punishment shall be more severe by one degree, and they shall forfeit to government a sum equal to the value of the horses.

If the messengers of government dispatched upon business of no extraordinary urgency, though without having been guilty of the deviation or omission here described, ride their horses to death, they shall forfeit to government a sum equal to the value of the horses, but not be liable in consequence to further punishment.

When

When, however, the messengers are dispatched upon urgent military affairs, or the next stations happen to be unprovided with the boats or horses required for their accommodation, neither the deviation, omission, or excessive riding, shall expose them to any pecuniary forfeiture, or corporal punishment, provided the justifying circumstances are properly substantiated.

Four clauses.

SECTION CCXLIV. — Express-Messengers exceeding the fixed Allowance of Money and Provisions.

If any officers or messengers travelling express upon public service, demand a larger supply of money or provisions on the road, than the laws authorize, they shall be punished in proportion to the amount or value of the excess, according to the scale provided by the law against receiving bribes for purposes not in themselves unlawful.

The officer of government who grants such excessive supplies, shall participate in the punishment due to this offence, at the rate of one degree less in each case, than the receiver.

If the officer or messenger travelling express, extorts by violence such excessive supplies, he shall be punished in proportion to the amount of the excess, according the severer scale provided by the law against bribery for unlawful purposes: but the officer from whom they are obtained, shall, in such cases, be excused.

One clause.*

* In this clause it is declared, that whereas all foreign embassies travelling through the empire, are duly supplied by government with every thing they require upon the road, the shop-keepers who clandestinely sell to, or buy from, such foreigners any article whatever, shall forfeit to government whatever they may have received for the same in exchange, and shall moreover be condemned to wear for the space of one month the Cangue or moveable pillory.

SECTION CCXLV. — Express-Post to be reserved for important Dispatches.

All the Emperor's orders relative to the disposition and employment of the military forces; all urgent communications of important military intelligence from the court to the frontier stations; and all addressees upon urgent military affairs from the several public boards and tribunals in the empire, to the Emperor, shall be forwarded by messengers riding express; whoever designedly omits to send dispatches of this nature to the post-houses, with instructions that they may be forwarded express, shall be punished with 100 blows; but if the omission occasions the failure and miscarriage of the military operations to which those dispatches relate, the individual so offending shall suffer death, by being beheaded, after undergoing the customary confinement.

All addressees announcing to the Emperor desirable public events, soliciting aid to provinces suffering from dearth or scarcity, or reporting extraordinary occurrences and calamities, shall likewise be forwarded express, as well as in general, all communications respecting the supplies required by the army, and other affairs of similar importance. — Whoever designedly omits to forward such dispatches in that manner, shall be punished with 80 blows, and be further responsible, as in the preceding case, for the contingent consequences of such omission.

On the other hand, those who designedly transmit to the express-post-houses, those government dispatches which, having relation to ordinary affairs only, were not intended to be forwarded by that mode, shall be punished with 40 blows.

No clause.

SECTION CCXLVI. — Dilatoriness in Transmissions and Removals connected with the Public Service.

In all cases of the public service requiring that the property of government in goods or cattle, or that prisoners or exiles, should be removed from one station to another, they are to be committed to the care of a particular person in the employ of government, who shall be responsible for the performance of this service within the period appointed by law; if through any dilatoriness he exceeds such period by a single day, he shall be punished with 20 blows, and be liable to a punishment progressively increased as far as 50 blows, at the rate of one degree for every three days further delay: any similar delay in forwarding the provisions and supplies of the army, when in the field, shall be punished two degrees more severely in each case, and the scale of punishment shall be carried on as far as 100 blows.

If, in consequence of such delay, the deficiency of the requisite supplies at the moment of engaging the enemy is so great, as to frustrate, and occasion the miscarriage, of the military operations depending thereon, the offender shall suffer death by being beheaded, after the usual confinement.

If the individual entrusted in ordinary cases with such charge, exceeds the period allowed for performing the service allotted to him, not intentionally, but from having misunderstood the written orders on the subject, and in consequence loses time by proceeding in a direction contrary to his real destination, his punishment shall be proportionally less, in each case, by two degrees; but if the charge concerns any military operations, the delay shall be attended with the same punishment, whether it be the result of inadvertence or of design.

If the mistake arose from the orders on the subject having been erroneously written, the punishment shall fall upon the writer thereof, thereof, instead of being inflicted upon the person superintending the removal of persons or goods, on account of government.

Two clauses.

SECTION CCXLVII. — Occupation of the principal Apartments in Post-Houses.

If any messengers or ordinary officers dispatched upon public service, presume to occupy, or in any respect to avail themselves of the accommodation of the principal and most honourable apartments in the post-houses, they shall be punished with 50 blows; such principal apartments, including the chief hall of reception, being reserved for the particular use and benefit of regular officers of government and other superior guests.

No clause.

SECTION CCXLVIII. — Transmission of private Property by Government Post-Horses.

If any of the officers or messengers, dispatched upon the public service, and therefore entitled to employ on the occasion the post-horses of government, carry with them, besides clothes and necessary accoutrements, any other articles of baggage weighing ten *kin or more, they shall be punished with 60 blows; the punishment shall also be progressively increased as far as 100 blows, for every additional 10 kin of weight.

When the mules or asses, instead of the horses of government are thus over-loaded, the punishment shall, in each case, be proportionably less by one degree.

* The kin is generally estimated at one-third more than the British pound.

The amount or value of the excess in weight of the property conveyed, shall be forfeited to government: If the animals thus overloaded are killed, the punishment of the offender shall be increased as far as the law provided against such contingency authorizes.

One clause.

SECTION CCXLIX. — Officers and others compelling the Inhabitants of their district to carry their Palanquins.*

If any officers or clerks of a tribunal or other department of government, or any other officers or messengers, employ the inhabitants of the district to carry their palanquins, except as hereafter provided, they shall be punished with 60 blows, and the superintending officer of the district who connives at, or authorizes the same, shall suffer punishment less by one degree, as a participator in the offence.

If any private individuals, relying on their influence and riches, employ the labourers or cultivators of the soil to carry their palanquins, without paying the wages due for the labour, they shall be punished in the same manner. In every case they shall be obliged to make good the amount of the wages, at the rate of 8 fen, 5 lee, 3 hao, (about seven-pence sterling) per man per day.

* The Chinese sedan or palanquin is figured and described in the authentic account of the British Embassy. The sedan with two bearers, is the ordinary mode of conveyance by land, for almost every description of unprivileged persons. The sedan with four bearers is exclusively employed by officers of the government, and not allowed even to certain classes of persons who enjoy all the other honorary marks of distinction belonging to that rank. — Some of the great officers of state have the further privilege of being carried, upon particular occasions of ceremony, by eight bearers; but to His Imperial Majesty alone, is reserved the honour of being carried by sixteen.

Whenever

Whenever the inhabitants have been regularly hired, and the wages of their labour duly paid, this law shall not take effect.

Two clauses.

SECTION CCL. — Families of deceased Officers to be removed at the Public Expence.

When any of the civil or military officers of the empire fall sick and die while in employ at their respective stations, their families, if not in possession of the means of returning to their native homes, shall be removed thither at the public expence; the officers of the several districts through which they have occasion to pass, shall appoint the escorting officers, provide a sufficient number of carriages, boats, porters, and horses for their conveyance, and issue rations of provisions from the public stores, in proportion to the number of individuals in each family; the quantities required being previously ascertained by personal investigation.

Any officer of a district, who neglects to provide for such families, and to superintend their progress homeward in the manner here directed, shall be punished with 60 blows.

One clause.

SECTION CCLI. — Hiring Substitutes, and entrusting to them an allotted personal Service.

If any person, being charged with the conveyance of government property, whether goods or cattle, or with the removal of prisoners and exiles, instead of personally performing such service, hires a substitute to perform his duty in his stead, he shall be punished with 60 blows; and if, in consequence of such substitution, any of the property perty of government is injured or lost, or any of the prisoners escape, he shall suffer punishment as much more severe as the law, particularly provided for punishing the neglect of persons in charge under such circumstances, may be found to prescribe.

Whoever undertakes for hire or otherwise, to officiate as the substitute of another in any of these respects, shall participate in the punishment of the offence, at the rate of one degree less in each case, than the person whose office he undertakes to perform.

Whenever two or more persons are jointly entrusted with the performance of any such service as above described, if they mutually replace, and agree alternately to connive at the absence of each other, they shall be punished with 40 blows; and in case any bribes should have been given and received, as much more severely as the law provided against bribery for purposes not in themselves unlawful, may be found to prescribe.

When any ill consequences ensue, such as the injury or loss of the property, or the escape of the prisoners entrusted to their charge, they shall be condemned to suffer a punishment as much more severe as may be conformable to the law particularly applicable under such circumstances; and in general, in all cases of persons jointly entrusted with any affair or duty, the party absenting himself, and the party undertaking the vacant charge, shall be equally punishable, instead of the punishment of the accessory being mitigated, as usual in other instances. The parties however shall not be liable to the aggravation of punishment, arising from fraud or connivance, except as far as they are individually and personally privy to, or concerned therein.

One clause.

SECTION CCLII. — Conveyance of private Property at the Charge of Government.

All those who, being engaged in the public service, have authority to employ, when travelling, the horses, cattle, camels, mules, or asses belonging to government, but who do not come under the description of travellers licensed to proceed by the express post, shall, in such cases, be restricted from loading the animals with more than 10 kin weight of baggage, beside the clothes and customary accoutrements about their persons; if they exceed this allowance by five kin weight, they shall be punished with 10 blows, and the punishment shall be progressively increased one degree for every addition of ten kin weight, until it amounts to 60 blows.

All persons authorized in the same manner to employ in travelling, the carriages or boats which belong to government, shall, in such cases, confine themselves to thirty kin weight of baggage; and if they exceed that limit by ten kin weight, they shall be punished with 10 blows, and the punishment shall be progressively increased one degree for every addition of 20 kin weight, until it amounts to 70 blows.— For this offence, the masters, and not the servants, shall be responsible.

When the excess of weight arises from the amount of goods undertaken to be conveyed for another person, the proprietor consigning his property to be so conveyed, shall participate equally in the punishment denounced against this offence; and in every case the goods thus illicitly conveyed shall be forfeited to government.

The superintending officer of the district shall also participate in the same degree in the punishment, when he is privy to the commission of the offence, but not otherwise.

When, however, whole families are to be conveyed from place to place at the expence of government, as in the case of the return of the relations of deceased soldiers, and of civil and military officers, the amount and weight of their baggage shall not be subject to any of the ordinary limitations hereby imposed.
the

Three clauses.

SECTION CCLIII. — Privately lending the Post-Horses of Government.

Any post-horse officer who employs for his private use, or lends out to others, the post-horses of government, and also, whoever borrows the same, shall, for each offence, be punished with 80 blows, and one degree less in the case of asses so employed.

The estimated sum due for the daily hire of such animals shall likewise become a forfeiture to government, and the punishment shall be subject to any contingent increase, which the scale provided by the law against pecuniary injuries, proportionably aggravated two degrees, may be found to prescribe.

No clause.

END OF THE FIFTH DIVISION.

PLACEHOLDER PAGE

This page is a placeholder, inserted to ensure proofread pages will be aligned even if this page is replaced.

Replace with the original page if available.

SIXTH DIVISION,
Criminal Laws.

B O O K I.
ROBBERY AND THEFT.

SECTION CCLIV. — High Treason.

HIGH treason, is either treason against the state, by an attempt to subvert the established government; or treason against the Sovereign, by an attempt to destroy the palace in which he resides, the temple in which his family is worshipped*, or the tombs in which the remains of his ancestors are deposited.

All persons convicted of having been principals or accessaries to the actual or designed commission of this heinous crime, shall suffer death by a slow and painful execution †.

All

* That is to say, the temple in which certain ceremonies and oblations are performed periodically in honour of the Imperial family.

† This mode of execution is not noticed among the ordinary punishments, but is particularly described in one of the notes subjoined to the original text. It has been termed in the works of the missionaries, "cutting into ten thousand pieces," and appears to amount, at the least, to a licence to the executioner to aggravate and prolong the sufferings of the criminal undergoing the sentence of the law, by any species of cruelty he may think proper to inflict. It is however understood to be the ordinary exertion of the Emperor's prerogative

X | All the male relations in the first degree, at or above the age of sixteen, of persons convicted as aforesaid; namely, the father, grandfather, sons, grandsons, paternal uncles, and their sons respectively, shall, without any regard to the place of residence, or to the natural or acquired infirmities of particular individuals, be indiscriminately beheaded.

X | All the other male relations at or above the age of sixteen, however distant their relationship, and whether by blood or by marriage, shall likewise suffer death, by being beheaded, if they were living under the same roof with the treasonable offender, at the time the offence was committed.

X | The male relations in the first degree, under the age of sixteen, and the female relations in the first degree, of all ages, shall be distributed as slaves to the great officers of state.

The property of every description belonging to treasonable offenders, shall be confiscated for the use and service of government.

The female relations of such criminals, who shall have been previously married into other families, and also those females who, although affianced to such criminals, or to the sons or grandsons of such criminals, shall not have been taken home and married, shall always be excepted from the penalties of this law.

All persons who, when privy to the commission of, or to the intent to commit the crime of high treason, wilfully conceal and connive at the same, shall be beheaded.

Any person who shall apprehend, and deliver into the custody of a magistrate, an offender against this law, shall be employed forthwith rogative of mercy, to commute this terrible sentence for the milder one of death, by simply severing the head from the body; but there are certainly some instances in which, with a view to public example, or from other causes, this law has been rigorously executed.

under under government, according to his qualifications; or if already an officer in the employ of government, he shall be suitably promoted; and in every case he shall be rewarded with the possession of the whole of the confiscated property of the offender*.

Any person who shall give the information which may be requisite towards enabling the magistrates to bring such offenders to justice, shall be rewarded with the whole of the property, which may consequently be confiscated; but not entitled as in the preceding instance, either to employment or promotion in the service of government.

If any person who is privy to the intention to commit, or to the actual commission of the aforesaid crime of high treason, is guilty of neglecting to communicate to the magistrate of the district the information he possesses, he shall, although not expressly chargeable with any acts of connivance and concealment, be punished with 100 blows, and banished perpetually to the distance of 3000 lee.

If the relations of persons intending to commit the aforesaid crime shall, previous to the commission of any overt act, deliver them up to the officers of justice, those who are so delivered up, and their several relations, shall all of them, be entirely pardoned.

If the relations of persons actually guilty of any acts of high treason, voluntarily surrender them into the custody of the magistrates, such relations, and all other persons guilty by implication only, shall be pardoned; but with regard to the principal offenders, the laws must be strictly executed.

* As this appropriation of the confiscated property of the offender, is an exception to the general rule noticed in a preceding paragraph, it is probably by no means the ordinary reward of the police officer on such occasions, but only of the person who volunteers his services, and who being the prosecutor and public accuser, thereby exposes himself to all the penalties of a false accusation, whenever the charges are not substantiated. — When the crime is public and notorious, or committed by persons high in rank or office, of whom the sovereign himself is generally the only avowed accuser, those who are instrumental in bringing the criminal to justice, merely in the course of their official duty, are not, it is conceived, intended to be benefited in the event of his conviction, any more than they would be liable to suffer, on the event of his acquittal. — For the punishment to which in different cases false accusers are liable, see Section CCCXXXVI.

Four clauses.*

SECTION CCLV. — Rebellion and Renunciation of Allegiance.

All persons renouncing their country and allegiance, or devising the means thereof, shall be beheaded; and in the punishment of this offence, no distinction shall be made between principals and accessaries.

The property of all such criminals shall be confiscated, and their wives and children distributed as slaves to the great officers of state. — Those females however, with whom a marriage had not been completed, though adjusted by contract, shall not suffer under this law; from the penalties of this law, exception shall also be made in favour of all such of the daughters of criminals as shall have been married into other families. — The parents, grand-parents, brothers, and grand-children of such criminals, whether habitually living with them under the same roof or not, shall be perpetually banished to the distance of 2000 lee.

All those who purposely conceal and connive at the perpetration of this crime, shall be strangled.

Those who inform against, and bring to justice, criminals of this description, shall be rewarded with the whole of their property.

Those who are privy to the perpetration of this crime, and yet omit to give any notice or information thereof to the magistrates, shall be punished with 100 blows, and banished perpetually to the distance of 3000 lee.

If the crime is contrived, but not executed, the principal shall be strangled, and all the accessaries shall, each of them, be punished

* A translation of the supplemental clauses annexed to this law, is inserted in the Appendix, No. XXII.

with with 100 blows, and perpetual banishment to the distance of 3000 lee.

If those who are privy to such ineffective contrivance, do not give due information and notice thereof to the magistrates, they shall be punished with 100 blows, and banished for three years.

All persons who refuse to surrender themselves to the magistrates when required, and seek concealment in mountains and desert places in order to evade, either the performance of their duty, or the punishment due to their crimes, shall be held guilty of an intent to rebel, and shall therefore suffer punishment in the manner by this law provided. If such persons have recourse to violence, and defend themselves when pursued, by force of arms, they shall be held guilty of an overt act of rebellion, and punished accordingly.

Eight clauses *.

SECTION CCLVI. — Sorcery and Magic.

All persons convicted of writing and editing books of forcery and magic, or of employing spells and incantations, in order to agitate and influence the minds of the people, shall be beheaded, after remaining in prison the usual period. If the influence of such acts shall not have extended beyond a few persons, the criminal shall be banished perpetually to the distance of 3000 lee; and generally, the punishment shall be proportionate to the nature of the case, and therefore more or less severe according to circumstances.

All persons who are guilty of retaining in their possession, and concealing from the magistrates, any books of the above description, shall be punished with 100 blows, and banished for three years.

Four clauses †.

* A translation of the clauses annexed to this law is inserted in the Appendix, No. XXIII.

† A translation of these clauses is inserted in the Appendix, No. XXIV.

SECTION CCLVII. — Sacrilege.

All persons guilty of stealing the consecrated oblations offered up by the Emperor to the spirits of Heaven and Earth, or any of the sacred utensils, cloths, meat-offerings, and precious stones used on such occasions, shall, whether principals or accessaries to the offence, whether previously entrusted or not with the charge of the said articles, in all cases, be beheaded.

The offence of stealing articles prepared and designed for consecration, but not actually consecrated or offered up as aforesaid, and also that of stealing such consecrated articles and oblations, after they had ceased to be applied to sacred uses, shall be punished with 100 blows and banishment for three years.

When the amount of the articles sacrilegiously stolen is considerable, they shall be valued, and the punishment inflicted on the offender shall, at the least, exceed that awarded in ordinary cases of theft by one degree.

The offenders in these cases shall be likewise branded in the arm, in the manner described in Section CCLXIV.

No clause.

SECTION CCLVIII. — Stealing Edicts and Ordinances of Government.

All persons guilty of having been principals or accessaries to the crime of stealing an Imperial edict, after it has received the impression of the great Imperial seal, shall be beheaded.

The crime of stealing the authenticated edict of any governing magistrate or tribunal, or an edict of the Emperor, not yet authenticated by the impression of the Imperial seal, shall be punished with 100 blows; the criminal shall be moreover branded in the arm.—

When

When any corrupt motive is assignable, the theft shall be punished according to the most severe among the different laws applicable to the case. If the edicts stolen, concerned the collection of supplies for the army, or were connected with any military operations, the principals and accessaries shall be strangled.

No clause.

SECTION CCLIX. — Stealing Seals and Stamps of Office.

All persons guilty of having been principals or accessaries to the crime of stealing the official seal of any magistrate or tribunal, or any seal or stamp whatever issued by the Emperor, shall be beheaded.

The crime of stealing the official seals or stamps, of persons employed by the magistrates, or employed in public offices by the authority of the magistrates, shall be punished with 100 blows; the criminal shall be moreover branded in the arm.

No clause.

SECTION CCLX. — Stealing from an Imperial Palace.

All persons found guilty of having been principals or accessaries to the crime of stealing any articles from the Imperial palace, or from the private Imperial treasury, shall receive sentence of death by decollation, but this is one of the offences in which capital punishment is commutable for five years banishment.

One clause.

SECTION CCLXI. — Stealing the Keys of the Gate of a Fort or City.

All persons found guilty of having been principals or accessaries to the crime of stealing the key of the gate of the Imperial city, shall be sentenced to suffer 100 blows, and perpetual banishment to the distance of 3000 lee, but this offence shall be ranked among those in which the punishment of perpetual, is commutable for that of temporary, banishment:

The crime of stealing the key of the gate of any other city, or of any town, fortress or barrier station, shall be punished with 100 blows, and banishment for three years; that of stealing the key of a granary, treasury, or other government building or public office, shall be punished with 100 blows, and the thief shall be branded in the arm.

All persons who, having the charge of the key of a gate of a city or fortress, are convicted of having lost such key, or of having, on any pretext, suffered the same to be out of their possession, shall be punished with 90 blows, and banished for two years and a half.

One clause.

SECTION CCLXII. — Stealing military Weapons and Accoutrements.

All persons found guilty of stealing any of the ordinary military weapons and accoutrements, such as the common military dress, swords, and bows and arrows, shall be punished in proportion to the amount and value of the articles stolen, according to the law applicable to theft in ordinary cases; but those who steal any of the weapons and accoutrements which are exclusively military, and which it is therefore unlawful for the people in general to possess, such as coats of mail, breast-plates, and fire-arms, shall, at the least, be punished as severely as is provided by the law prohibiting the possession of such articles.

When soldiers in actual service are guilty of stealing arms and accoutrements of any kind from each other, they shall be punished according to the law against theft in ordinary cases, except that when the articles stolen are voluntarily surrendered to government, the punishment shall be less in each case, than it would have been otherwise, by two degrees.

the

One clause.

SECTION CCLXIII. — Stealing Timber from a Burying-Ground.

All the principals and accessaries to the offence of stealing, (that is to say, privately cutting down and removing,) any of the trees growing within the boundaries of the Imperial cemetery or burying-ground, shall be punished, at the least, with 100 blows and three years banishment.

The principal in the offence of stealing any of the trees growing in a private burying-ground, shall be punished, at the least, with 80 blows, and each of the accessaries thereto, with 70 blows.

If the value of the timber cut down and carried away is considerable, it shall be estimated, and the punishment increased in proportion to the result, to such an extent, as in every case to exceed by one degree that which would have been legally inflicted for an ordinary theft to the same amount and value.

Five clauses *.

SECTION CCLXIV. — Embezzlement of Public Property.

When any of the persons who are lawfully entrusted with the public property deposited in the treasuries and store-houses of government, are found guilty of having been concerned as principals or accessaries in the offence of embezzling any part thereof, they shall be punished according to the following scale, in proportion to the total amount embezzled at one time, without paying any regard to the number and extent of the shares, into which the embezzled property may have been divided.

* A translation of these clauses is inserted in the Appendix, No. XXV.

The offenders shall moreover be branded or marked in the arm between the wrist and the elbow, with the three following, words tao quan $\left\{ \begin{array}{l} \textit{leang,} \\ \textit{vo,} \\ \textit{yn,} \end{array} \right\}$ stealer of government $\left\{ \begin{array}{l} \text{Grain,} \\ \text{Stores,} \\ \text{Silver,} \end{array} \right\}$ according as the case may be, each character being distinctly marked, and of the dimension of one Tsun and a half in the square.

Value less than	1	leang (ounce)	of silver	80	} blows with the bamboo.
	1	-	-	90
	5	-	-	100	} blows and banishment for $\left\{ \begin{array}{l} 1 \text{ year.} \\ 1\frac{1}{2} \text{ years.} \\ 2 \text{ years.} \\ 2\frac{1}{2} \text{ years.} \\ 3 \text{ years.} \\ 2000 \text{ } \textit{lee.} \\ 2500 \text{ } \textit{lee.} \\ 3000 \text{ } \textit{lee.} \end{array} \right.$
	7½	-	-	60
	10	-	-	70
	12½	-	-	80
Value exceeding	15	-	-	90
	17½	-	-	100
	20	-	-	100
	25	-	-	100
	30	-	-	100
	40	-	-	100
					Death, by being beheaded*.

Ten clauses †.

* In a note in the original Chinese it is stated, that in cases nominally punishable with perpetual banishment by this law, the offenders shall be banished for four years only; and that, in those nominally punishable capitally, the offenders shall, instead thereof, be banished for five years, unless the value of the property embezzled exceeds 100 ounces, and falls short of 1000 ounces, when the banishment of the offender shall be perpetual.— If the value exceeds the latter sum, it is again declared, that the offender shall be beheaded.

† For a translation of the clauses to this law, see the Appendix, No. XXVI.

SECTION CCLXV. — Theft of Public Property.

All persons found guilty of stealing, or attempting to steal, the property of government, deposited in the public treasuries and store-houses, shall be punished for their offences in the following manner:—

The principals in an attempt to steal, shall be punished with 60 blows, and each of the accessaries to such an attempt, with 50 blows.

If the theft is accomplished, the offenders, as in the preceding article, relative to the embezzlement of the same species of property, shall be punished in proportion to the total amount stolen at one time, and likewise branded in the arm, in the manner there described, but the scale of punishment shall be less severe, and as follows:—

Value less than	1 leang (ounce) of silver	70	} blows with the bamboo.
	1	80
	10	90
	15	100	} blows and banishment for
	20	60
	25	70
Value exceeding	30	80	} 1 year. 1½ years. 2 years. 2½ years. 3 years.
	35	90
	40	100
	45	100
	50	100
	55	100	} blows and perpetual banishment to distance of
	80	100
			Death, by being strangled*.

Two clauses †.

* When the amount stolen does not exceed 100 ounces, it is provided, as in the preceding section, that the punishments of death and perpetual banishment shall be commuted for banishment, in the former case for five years, and in the latter for four years.

† For a translation of the clauses annexed to this law, see the Appendix, No. XXVII.

SECTION CCLXVI. — Robbery — Highway Robbery *.

All persons found guilty of having been jointly concerned as principals or as accessaries, in an attempt to seize the property of another by force, that is to say, to commit a robbery, shall be punished with 100 blows and perpetual banishment to the distance of 3000 lee; when a robbery is actually effected, all the individuals concerned in the commission thereof, shall be beheaded, whether participators or not in the booty, and however small may be the total amount of the plunder.

If the contriver of the robbery does not actually contribute to the perpetration thereof, nor afterwards participate in the booty obtained, he shall not suffer death, but receive 100 blows, and be sent into perpetual banishment at the distance of 3000 lee. All other persons who, although belonging to the gang or association, neither actively contribute to the perpetration of the robbery, nor afterwards partake of the booty, shall be severally dismissed, after undergoing the punishment of 100 blows.

Whenever stupifying drugs, or other means, are previously employed in order to deprive the person intended to be plundered, of the use of his senses, and such person is thereby incapacitated from making any resistance, this proceeding shall be considered as equivalent to an act of open violence, and although, in other respects, merely a theft, shall always be punished as a robbery.

If thieves, when caught in the act of stealing, refuse to surrender, and continue their resistance so long as to kill or wound any person, they shall be beheaded.

If, upon the occasion of a theft being committed, females are also violated, the theft shall be punished as a robbery, but those of the party, who were guilty as accessaries to the theft only, shall not participate in the consequent aggravation of the punishment of their companions.

* See Section CCLXVIII.

A thief who, when pursued, casts away the stolen goods, but afterwards defends himself by force, and refuses to surrender, shall be punished, according to the law in ordinary cases of criminals not surrendering, with 70 blows at the least; but a thief who upon such an occasion wounds any person, shall be strangled; and a thief who upon such an occasion, kills any person, shall be beheaded.

Thirty-four clauses.*

SECTION CCLXVII. — Rescue from Prison.

All persons concerned as principals or accessaries in the offence of forcibly rescuing, or attempting to rescue any lawful prisoner, shall suffer death by being beheaded, after confinement during the usual period.

All persons, relations as well as others, who are guilty of clandestinely releasing any prisoner, shall be punished with the same degree of severity as that to which the prisoner himself is liable, excepting the customary reduction of one degree in capital cases.

All those who are guilty of having made the attempt, though unsuccessfully, privately to release a prisoner, shall suffer punishment proportionately less than that to which the prisoner is liable, by two degrees. If those who make the attempt, are guilty of wounding any person, the principal offender amongst them shall suffer death by being strangled, after confinement during the usual period; when guilty of killing any person, the principal among them shall suffer death by being beheaded. In general, in all the cases of attempting to release a prisoner clandestinely, the punishment of the accessory shall be less than that of the principal by one degree.

* For a translation of some of the most material clauses annexed to this law, see the Appendix, No. XXVIII.

In all cases of persons assembling in the public highways*, to oppose by force a servant of government, appointed by the magistrates to perform any official duty, such as the collection of the revenue, or the pursuit and seizure of offenders, the principal shall suffer the punishment of 100 blows and perpetual banishment to the distance of 3000 lee. If upon such an occasion the individual thus employed in the service of government is wounded, the principal offender shall suffer death by being strangled, after being confined during the usual period.

If, in this latter case, the number of persons riotously assembled amounts to ten or more, or if, whatever the number of persons assembled, the individual employed in the service of government is killed in the course of the affray, the principal among the offenders shall be beheaded, and as many of the others as are found guilty of having struck a mortal blow, shall be strangled. All the other accessories, in this and in the preceding cases, shall suffer a punishment one degree less severe than that inflicted upon their respective principals.

When the master of a family assembles his household, in order to oppose the officers of government, he alone shall be punishable and responsible, unless his followers are guilty of striking so as more or less to wound, in which case they shall be punished as independent persons in ordinary cases.

Three clauses.

* It is stated in a note in the original, that the act of assembling in the public highways, is the particular circumstance of aggravation which distinguishes this offence from that of resisting, and refusing to admit the visits of the officers of justice and the revenue, in ordinary cases, which, under the head of Fiscal Laws, has been already noticed.

SECTION CCLXVIII. — Robbing in open Day *.

All persons found guilty of taking unlawful possession of the property of others, in open day and by forcible means, shall, however small the amount of the property so taken, be punished with 100 blows and banishment for three years.

If the value of the property in question is considerable, it shall be estimated, and the punishment of the offending parties so far increased, as to render it two degrees more severe than it would have legally been, in a case of privately stealing to a similar amount; but it shall not in any case become capital, unless there are other aggravating circumstances.

When the individual plundered is likewise wounded, the principal offender shall suffer death, by being beheaded, after remaining during the usual period in confinement.

The accessories to that species of robbery which is in the contemplation of the law in this section, shall in all cases be punished one degree less severely than the principal offenders; and all the individuals concerned therein, principals as well as accessories, shall be

* There is a perceptible difference in the meaning of the Chinese expression at the head of this section, and that at the head of section CCLXVI., and which requires perhaps some further explanation. It is stated in a note in the original Chinese, that although open violence is implied in the one instance, as well as in the other, yet the former section of the law is to be understood to apply more particularly to those cases, in which a number of persons had, for the express purpose of committing a robbery, assembled together, and provided themselves with offensive weapons, all which circumstances of aggravation are in this latter section supposed to be wanting; it is however added, that the magistrates are not intended to be bound by this precise interpretation, but allowed to exercise a discretionary power, in adopting the more or less severe law, according as the circumstances of each particular case are, upon a general view, more or less atrocious.

The expression open day is also explained to imply nothing more than that the offence in question, is perpetrated openly, and without fear of observation.

branded in the lower part of the left arm, with the words Tjiang to signifying robber.

All persons who take an opportunity to plunder in a case of fire or shipwreck; or who, in the latter case, contribute in any manner to the destruction of the vessel; shall be punished according to this law.

Those who, in the case of an affray, or upon the occasion of their being authorized and employed by government in the pursuit and apprehension of offenders; take an opportunity of stealing, shall be punished as in ordinary cases of theft, unless they are guilty of using force, in which case the punishment shall be proportionately increased two degrees, but the parties shall not be branded for the offence, nor liable, under any circumstances, except those of killing or wounding the individual plundered, to suffer capital punishment.

Twenty-four clauses.

SECTION CCLXIX. — Stealing in general.

All persons found guilty of an attempt to steal, shall be punished with 50 blows.

When a theft is actually committed, that is to say, possession obtained of the property intended to be stolen, all the parties concerned, whether sharers or not in the plunder, shall be punished in proportion to the amount of the largest sum stolen from any one individual, according to the subjoined scale: The principal offender in each case shall suffer the full punishment therein stated, and the rest shall be punished one degree less severely as accessaries. It is likewise always to be understood, that the punishment shall be estimated, not according to the share of the plunder which any one of the offenders may receive or obtain individually, but, as above stated, according to the total amount of the sum which they had been jointly concerned in stealing from any one individual: for example, if ten persons jointly stole to the amount of 40 ounces of silver in value, they would, although their respective shares would not exceed four ounces in value, be liable to suffer the full punishment of stealing forty ounces of silver, such being the value of the total amount stolen.
of

For the first offence, the individuals convicted of being concerned in a theft, shall be branded in the lower part of the left arm with the words Tsie tao, signifying thief; for the second offence they shall be branded again with the same words, in the lower part of the right arm; for the third offence, or for having defaced the said marks, they shall suffer death by being strangled, after remaining the usual period in confinement.

	Value not exceeding	}	1 ounce of silver	60	} blows with the bamboo.
			10 ounces	- 70
			20	- - 80
			30	- - 90
			40	- - 100
			50	- - 60		} blows and banishment for	{	1 year.
			60	- - 70				1½ year.
			70	- - 80				2 years.
			80	- - 90				2½ years.
				90		- - 100		3 years.
		100	- - 100	} blows and perpetual banishment to distance of	{	2000 lee .
		110	- - 100			2500 lee .
		120	- - 100			3000 lee .
Value exceeding	120	- - -	Death, by being strangled, after the usual confinement*.

Thirty clauses.

SECTION CCLXX. — Stealing Horses and other domesticated Animals.

All persons found guilty of stealing the horses, horned cattle, asses, mules, sheep, fowls, dogs, geese, and ducks of private individuals,

* Although that part of the law in this place which states, that a theft shall in certain cases be punished with death, does not appear to have been expressly repealed, there is every reason to believe that it is never enforced.

shall shall suffer, conformably to a valuation of the animals stolen, the ordinary punishment of theft.

When the animals stolen are the property of government, the punishment of the offending party shall be the same as in other cases of a theft of government-property to the same extent in value.

If any person steals a horse or a cow, and afterwards kills the animal, he shall be punished, at the least, with 100 blows and three years banishment; if the animal stolen and killed is an ass or a mule, the punishment shall not be less than 70 blows and banishment for a year and a half. In both cases, when the value of the animals stolen and killed is considerable, they shall be estimated, and the punishment of the thief so far increased beyond that already provided, as to render it one degree more severe than that of an ordinary theft to the same extent in value.

Fourteen clauses.

SECTION CCLXXI. — Stealing Corn and other Produce in the open Field.

All persons found guilty of stealing any kind of grain, fruit, or vegetables growing in the open fields, and not customarily guarded by any person, or by any contrivance, shall be punished according to the amount in value of the produce stolen, as in ordinary cases of theft, except that the offenders shall not be branded*.

All persons unauthorizedly taking away stones, timber, or brushwood, which although found in uncultivated places, had been cut or otherwise prepared for use, shall be punished in the same manner as is above provided.

Twenty clauses.

* When the fields in which a theft is committed are known to be usually watched and guarded by the proprietor, the offence is more severely punishable, according to a law in a preceding section, against "robbing in open day."

SECTION CCLXXII. — Stealing from Relations and Connections.

All persons found guilty of stealing from a relation by blood, or by marriage, in the first degree, shall suffer a punishment five degrees less severe than that which is legally inflicted in ordinary cases of theft to the same extent*.

In like manner, all persons guilty of stealing from relations, in the second degree, shall suffer a punishment four degrees less severe than that legally inflicted in ordinary cases: — In the case of stealing from relations in the third degree, the punishment of the offenders shall be three degrees less than in ordinary cases: — In the case of stealing from relations in the fourth degree, the punishment shall be two degrees less than in ordinary cases: — and, lastly, the punishment of stealing from any relation, in a more remote degree than the aforesaid, shall be but one degree less than in ordinary cases.

In general the punishment of the accessaries shall be one degree less severe than that of the principals in each case; but regard is always to be had, at the same time, to the relationship which such accessary bears, and not merely to that which the principal offender bears, to the person upon whom the theft is committed.

Persons stealing from their relations shall not, as other thieves, be subject to be branded for their offences.

In cases also of robbery among relations, that is to say, a violent as well as unlawful seizure of the property of a relation; when an elder relation is the offending party, a reduction in the punishment shall be allowed, similar to that already provided in cases of theft; but if the

* The mitigation of punishment provided by this law, in consideration of circumstances, which at first view appear to aggravate the guilt of the offender, is in fact easily reconciled with the general spirit of the code; as according to the Chinese patriarchal system, a theft is not in this case a violation of an exclusive right, but only of the qualified interest, which each individual has in his share of the family property.

offending

offending party is a junior relation, the punishment shall be the same as is inflicted in the ordinary cases of the commission of the same offence.

If the robbery is accompanied by the additional crime of killing or wounding the relation who is plundered, the offender shall suffer for the assault, or for the robbery, according as the one or other offence proves, under all the circumstances of the case, the most severely punishable.

If the junior of two relations residing together under the same roof, introduces a stranger to steal the property of his elder relation, he shall suffer a punishment two degrees more severe than that provided by law, for using and consuming, without permission, an equal amount of the joint family property, in ordinary cases *; but the punishment of a relation in this case, shall never be so far increased, as to exceed 100 blows. — The stranger thus introduced to steal, shall be punished one degree less severely than in ordinary cases of stealing, and not be branded.

If hired servants or slaves steal from their masters, or from each other, the punishment shall be one degree less severe than in ordinary cases of theft, and the thief shall not be branded †.

Five clauses.

SECTION CCLXXIII. — Extorting Property by Threats.

All persons who are guilty of extorting from any individual his property, by the use of threatening language, shall be punished one

* See Section LXXXVIII., under the head of Fiscal Laws.

† Notwithstanding the tenor of the last paragraph of this article, it is provided in one of the supplementary clauses, that the punishment of slaves guilty of theft, shall be, at the least, equal to that of thieves in general; and one degree more severe, when the offence is committed by them, in combination with strangers.

degree

degree more severely than in ordinary cases of theft to the same amount, but shall not be branded.

A junior relation extorting the property of his senior by threats, shall be punished in the same degree, as if there had been no relationship whatever between the parties; but a senior relation guilty of extorting by threats, the property of his junior, shall have the full advantage of the mitigation of punishment which the law allows in ordinary cases of pecuniary differences between relations.

Eight clauses.

SECTION CCLXXIV. — Obtaining Property under false Pretences.

All persons obtaining public or private property, by any fraudulent means, or upon false pretences, shall be punished with the same degree of severity, as if guilty of stealing, to an equal amount, and under similar circumstances in other respects, but shall not be branded.

In all cases of a senior relation defrauding his junior, or a junior his senior, the punishment shall be as much less than in ordinary cases of fraud, as under circumstances of relationship, in instances of theft and other offences of a similar nature, has been already stated and provided.

When two or more persons are jointly intrusted with the custody of government or public property; if one of them fraudulently and upon false pretences, obtains from the rest, any part thereof for his own use, he shall be punished in the same manner as if he had been an embezzler to a similar amount of the public property under his own individual custody.

When the offence amounts to an attempt only, the punishment shall in each of the several cases, be less than is above provided, by two degrees.

In general, whenever any species of property is fraudulently obtained, whether by asserting falsely a claim to it, by deceiving the owner by a fabricated story, or by prevailing on the owner to trust the property on any pretence out of his possession, it shall be deemed an offence against this law, and punished accordingly.

Six clauses.

SECTION CCLXXV. — Kidnapping, or the unlawful Seizure and Sale of free Persons.

All persons who are guilty of entrapping by means of stratagems, or of enticing away under false pretences, a free person, and of afterwards offering for sale as a slave such free person, shall, whether considered as principals or as accessaries, and whether successful or not, in effecting such intended sale, be severally punished with 100 blows, and banished perpetually to the distance of 3000 lee.

All those who are guilty of entrapping, or enticing away any persons in the manner aforesaid, in order to sell them as principal or inferior wives, or for adoption, as children or grand-children, shall, if considered as principals, be punished with 100 blows, and three years banishment.

When the person who is attempted to be entrapped or enticed away, resists, and is wounded, the offender against this law shall suffer death, by being strangled, after the usual period of confinement.

When such person, in consequence of having resisted, is killed, the offender shall suffer death, by being beheaded, after the usual confinement.

In all of the preceding cases, except the first, the punishment of the accessaries shall be less severe than that of their respective principals, by one degree.

The

The persons kidnapped, or attempted to be kidnapped, shall not in any of the aforefaid cafes be liable to any punishment, but shall be restored without delay to their respective families.

All such persons also, as receive the children of free parents, upon the faith of a promise to educate and adopt them as their own, and nevertheless sell them afterwards to others, shall be punishable according to this law, except in those cases in which it can be proved that a pecuniary consideration was given and received in the first instance.

When the persons enticed away, had not been deceived by any false pretences, but had yielded themselves up voluntarily, those who, under such circumstances, sell them as slaves, shall be punished with 100 blows, and three years banishment. Those who, under the same circumstances, sell such persons, as principal or inferior wives, or for adoption, as children or grand-children, shall be punished with 90 blows, and banished for two years and a half.

The persons who thus voluntarily submit themselves to be sold, shall be punished likewise; and their punishment shall be but one degree less severe than that of those who sell them.

When the sale of a person willing to be sold, is proposed, but not completed, the punishment of the several parties to the offence, shall be respectively less severe than in the case of an actual sale, by one degree.

When the persons kidnapped or enticed away are under ten years of age, they shall not be deemed capable of consenting thereto, and therefore held innocent of any participation in the offence of the kidnappers, who, under such circumstances, shall always suffer punishment according to the severer law.

The offence of entrapping and carrying off for sale, or persuading to come away voluntarily for the same purpose, the lawful slave of any person, shall be punished one degree less severely than that of kidnapping a free person under similar circumstances.

Any person who sells his children or grand-children against their consent, shall be punished with 80 blows*.

Any person who in like manner sells his younger brother or sister, his nephew or niece, his own inferior wife, or the principal wife of his son, or his grandson, shall be punished with 80 blows, and two years banishment: — the punishment inflicted for the sale of the inferior wife of a son or grandson, shall be less severe than that last mentioned by two degrees. Whoever, lastly, sells his junior first cousin, junior second cousin, or his grand-nephew, in the manner aforesaid, shall be punished with 90 blows, and banished for two years and a half.

When, in any of the preceding cases, the sale had been effected with the free consent of the party sold, the punishment of the seller shall be less severe by one degree. In general also, when an unlawful sale is only proved to have been proposed, the punishment shall always be one degree less severe, than it would have been in the case of such sale having actually taken place.

The children, or junior relations, although consenting to be thus unlawfully sold, shall not in any case be liable to punishment for such consent, in consideration of the obedience which is always due from them to their senior relations, and they shall therefore simply be restored, upon conviction, to their families.

Any person who is guilty of selling his first wife, or any relation of his in a more remote degree than those already specified, shall suffer

* Although it would appear from this restriction, that the power of a parent over his child, according to this code, is much less extensive than that allowed by the laws of the ancient Romans, yet as the adoption of children, and the purchase of inferior wives or concubines, is a transaction of constant occurrence, and one in which the real parents lawfully may, and usually do, receive a pecuniary consideration, it can scarcely be denied that the sale of children in China, is practically allowed. — The crime of infanticide, the existence of which has been so often alleged as a stain upon the national character of the Chinese, as well as upon their laws and government, will be noticed in another place. See Section CCCXIX.

the unabated punishment of seizing and selling free persons in ordinary cases.

If the harbourers, and purchasers of the persons kidnapped, are aware of the unlawfulness of the transaction, they shall suffer equal punishment with the kidnappers, excepting only the usual reduction of one degree in the punishment of participators in offences, in capital cases.

The person who becomes a party to the transaction, by making himself answerable that the sale shall be completed, shall, (if aware of its unlawfulness, and not otherwise) be punished one degree less severely than the principal offender. — When the purchaser is thus a participator in the offence committed, the pecuniary consideration given to the seller shall be forfeited to government, but otherwise shall be restored to the purchaser, in consequence of the sale being null and void*.

Fourteen clauses.

SECTION CCLXXVI. — Disturbing Graves.

All persons guilty of digging in, and breaking up another man's burying-ground, until at length one of the coffins which had been deposited therein, is laid bare and becomes visible, shall be punished with 100 blows, and perpetual banishment to the distance of 3000 lee.

Any person who, after having been guilty as aforesaid, proceeds to open the coffin, and uncover the corpse laid therein, shall be pu-

* From the length of this section, and also from some of the observations contained in the official report of the charges against the governor of Canton (see Appendix, No. X.) it is certainly to be inferred, that the abuses here adverted to, are not unfrequent. It is to be observed, indeed, that the slavery which is recognized and tolerated by the laws of China, is a mild species of servitude, and perhaps not very degrading in a country, in which no condition of life appears to admit of any considerable degree of personal liberty and independence.

nished

nished with death, by being strangled, after undergoing the usual confinement*.

Those who are guilty of digging in, and breaking up a burying-ground, but do not proceed so far as to expose any of the coffins, shall be punished with 100 blows, and three years banishment.

Those who on such occasions practice incantations, in order to call up the spirit from the grave, shall be considered as accessaries, and accordingly punished one degree less severely than the principals:

The offence of stealing a coffin from an old grave or burying-place, which had fallen in, or was broken down, as well as that of stealing a coffin from above ground, shall be punished only with 90 blows, and banishment for two years and a half.

Breaking open an unburied coffin, and exposing the body to sight, is nominally a capital offence, but the punishment shall be limited to five years banishment.

The offence of stealing bricks, stones, or other articles, from a burying-ground, shall be punished according to the value of the articles stolen, as in ordinary cases of theft, but the offenders shall not be branded.

A junior relation within the degrees of mourning, breaking up the grave of his elder relation, shall be punished as in the ordinary cases of the offence above stated: but if he opens the coffin to see the body, he shall be beheaded, after remaining in prison the usual period. If he casts away the corpse, and sells the ground, he shall be punished in the same manner. — The purchaser of the ground and the negociator of the sale, if privy to the breach of the laws, shall be punished each with 80 blows. The land shall be restored to the family, and the pur-

* This very long article, in some of the provisions of which there is an apparent inconsistency, is evidently connected with certain superstitious notions and practices of the Chinese, and probably may also have been requisite to protect even the dead, from the vengeance and from the rapacity of the living.

chafe-money shall be forfeited, but all such of the relations as were not privy to the transaction shall be held to be exempt from responsibility.

An elder relation in the fourth degree, breaking up the grave and opening the coffin of his junior, shall be punished with 100 blows, and three years banishment. In the case of any nearer elder relation, the punishment shall be less severe by one degree. — A father breaking up the grave, and opening the coffin, of his son, or a grand-father that of his grand-son, shall be punished with 80 blows. — Nevertheless, if, in any of the preceding cases, the grave be broken open upon a sufficient cause, and the coffin removed with all due rites and ceremonies, the parties shall not be punishable. — Destroying, mutilating, or throwing into the water the unenclosed and unburied corpse of a stranger, is an offence punishable with 100 blows, and perpetual banishment to the distance of 3000 lee.

The offence of destroying, mutilating, or casting away, the unburied corpse of an elder relation, shall be punished with death, by being beheaded, after the usual period of confinement.

The punishment in the two last mentioned cases shall be reduced one degree, if the injury done to the corpse amounts only to the loss of the hair, or if the corpse, after being cast away, is found again.

If the offence is committed by an elder, instead of a junior relation, the punishment shall be one degree less severe, than in ordinary cases.

If a father destroys or casts away the corpse of his son, or a grand-father that of his grandson, he shall be punished with 80 blows.

But if a son destroys or casts away the corpse of his father or mother, a grandson that of his grandfather or grandmother; a slave or hired servant that of his master, they shall in each case, whether the corpse so cast away is afterwards recovered or not, be beheaded after the usual period of confinement.

If

If any person in digging the earth should discover an unclaimed body, and not immediately bury it, he shall be punished with 80 blows.

If any person having lighted a fire on the grave of a stranger to drive away foxes by the smoke, suffers the fire to communicate, so as in any manner to burn the coffin deposited underneath, he shall be punished with 80 blows, and two years banishment; but if the body is likewise consumed, the punishment shall be increased to 100 blows, and three years banishment;—if the party offending is a junior relation, the punishment shall be increased one degree; if a senior, abated one degree.

If a son, lighting a fire on the grave of his father or of his mother, for the aforesaid purpose; a grandson, on the grave of his grandfather or grandmother, a slave or hired servant, on that of his master, thereby burns the coffin, they shall, in each case, be punished with 100 blows, and three years banishment. If the body is burned likewise, they shall be strangled, after remaining in confinement during the usual period.

Any person who levels the burying-place of a stranger, in order to convert the ground to the purposes of agriculture, shall, although none of the coffins shall have been disturbed, be punished with 100 blows, and obliged to replace every thing in its former condition.

Any person who privately buries a corpse in another man's ground, shall be punished with 80 blows, and also be obliged to remove such corpse within a limited period.

Whenever an unclaimed corpse is found in any district or village, if the head or presiding inhabitant thereof, instead of reporting the same, in order that the corpse may be examined by the proper magistrate, of his own accord removes or buries it, he shall be punished with 80 blows; if the body is in consequence lost, he shall be punished with 100 blows.

If

If the body is destroyed or cast into the water, the principal in the commission of such an offence shall be punished with 60 blows, and one year's banishment. If the person who contrives, likewise carries the design into effect, he shall be banished perpetually. If the body is cast away, but not lost; or is injured, but entire, the punishment shall be reduced one degree.

Stealing the clothes belonging to a dead body, shall be punished according to their value, as an ordinary case of theft, but the offender shall not be branded.

Thirteen clauses.

SECTION CCLXXVII. — Unauthorizedly entering a Dwelling-house by Night.

All persons who unauthorizedly, and without lawful cause, enter the dwelling-house of a stranger by night, shall be punishable, at the least, with 80 blows. — If the master of the house at the moment of any such person entering, kills him, he shall not be punished for doing so; but if after having seized such person, he then kills or wounds him without necessity, he shall be punished but two degrees less severely than is provided by law in cases of killing or wounding in an affray; the punishment shall not however in any case exceed 100 blows, and three years banishment.

One clause.

SECTION CCLXXVIII. — Harbouring Thieves and Robbers.

Whenever any persons who are harbourers of robbers; that is to say, masters and proprietors of the customary habitations and retreating places of robbers, are discovered and found guilty of having likewise in any instance contrived a robbery, and of having afterwards participated in the booty thereof, they shall, although they had not personally assisted in the perpetration of the crime, be beheaded as principals.

It has already been provided by a preceding article of the laws, that all those who personally assist in the perpetration of a robbery, shall, without making any distinction between principals and accessaries, be indiscriminately beheaded. When, however, the contriver of a robbery, and harbourer of robbers, neither gives any assistance in effecting the robbery nor participates in the plunder after it is obtained, he shall be punished only with 100 blows, and perpetual banishment to the distance of 3000 lee.

If the harbourer of the robbers, though not a contriver of the robbery, is privy to the design, and either accompanies the robbers without participating in the booty, or participates in the booty without accompanying the robbers, he shall be beheaded, without any distinction being made between the cases of principals and those of accessaries.

If, in the last case, the harbourer of robbers neither accompanies them, nor participates in their plunder, he shall be punished with 100 blows only.

All harbourers of thieves, who contrive a theft, and afterwards receive a share of the booty, shall be punished as principals in such theft, although they had not been personally engaged therein. If the plan is contrived at the moment previous to execution, the leader only shall be esteemed a principal, and the harbourer of the thief an accessary; he shall likewise be deemed no more than an accessary, if he assists in obtaining without partaking of, or partakes of without assisting in obtaining, the plunder. If the harbourer of the thief neither assists in obtaining, nor partakes of the plunder when obtained, his punishment shall be limited 40 blows.

If a number of individuals, meeting without any previous deliberation or contrivance, commit a theft or a robbery, the proposer and leader leader shall, in the case of a theft be esteemed the principal, and the rest only accessaries; but in the case of a robbery, no distinction shall be made, and accordingly, all the offenders punished alike.

All persons participating in property known to have been obtained by robbery or theft, or in any sum received as the purchase-money of a free person unlawfully sold, shall, at the least, be punished as accessaries to a theft to the same amount, but shall not be branded.

The offence of purchasing goods knowing them to have been stolen, shall be punished as an ordinary case of pecuniary malversation or unlawful acquisition of property.

Any person who, knowing any article of property to have been stolen, nevertheless consents to take charge of it, shall be punished one degree less severely than an unlawful purchaser. When, however, such purchaser and such consignee of stolen property, in any case are ignorant of its having been unlawfully acquired, they shall not be esteemed guilty, or anywise punishable, merely in consequence of their being implicated in a charge against others.

Seventeen clauses.

SECTION CCLXXIX. — Rules by which the Accessaries to a Theft, and the Accessaries to a Robbery are distinguished.

In all cases of persons concurring in a design to commit a robbery, if any of them do not afterwards actively engage therein, or only so far, as to commit a theft; and if the original contriver of the plan, although a partaker of the booty, is one of these, he shall be punished only as a principal in a theft. Those who, though they assisted therein, neither contrived the criminal enterprise, nor participated in the plunder, shall (except the leader, who shall still be deemed a principal) be esteemed ac-

Q q 2.

cessaries;

cessaries; as also those who merely contrived the criminal enterprize, without either partaking of, or assisting in obtaining, the plunder.

All the others, who merely concurred in the first design, without having been the contrivers of it, assisting to carry it into execution, or profiting by it afterwards upon a division of the plunder, shall be punished with 50 blows each.

In cases of persons concurring in a design to commit a theft, if any of them in pursuance thereof, commit a robbery instead of a theft, the contriver of the original plan, although a partaker of the plunder, shall, if not an agent in obtaining it, be punished only as a principal in a theft, similar in amount to the robbery; and the other partakers, not being agents or contrivers, shall be punished as accessories thereto. But all those who were actively engaged in the robbery, shall be punished as principals in such robbery, whether or not contrivers thereof, and whether participators or not in the booty.

No clause.

SECTION CCLXXX. — What constitutes a Theft or Robbery, and what an Attempt only.

In general an open and violent taking, constitutes a robbery, and a private and concealed taking, a theft; but the attempt is to be distinguished from the accomplishment of the criminal purpose, differently in different cases, in the following manner: — In cases of strings of copper-money, utensils, and other easily moveable articles of that description, possession must not only be obtained, but they must have been removed out of the place or apartment in which they were found, otherwise a theft or robbery of such articles is only to be considered as having been attempted. In the case of pearls or precious stones, and other small and valuable articles, articles, it is sufficient that they are found on the person of the offender. On the contrary, in the case of large heavy articles of wood or stone, which the unassisted strength of man is not adequate to remove to any distance, they must not only have been displaced, but actually lifted upon the cart, or on the animal, provided for their removal.

In respect to horses, asses, mules, and cows, they must have been taken out of the stable; and also in respect to dogs, hawks, and animals of the like kind, there must have been some evidence of exertion on the part of the offender to make himself master of them, and of their having been, in consequence of such exertion, actually in his possession; thus, if one horse is stolen, and the rest follow, the thief is not responsible for more than the theft of one horse; but if he steals a mare, and the foal follows, his offence is to be deemed a theft of both the mare and the foal.

These observations are applicable to all the preceding cases in this book. In general, when there are circumstances to trace, and witnesses to give evidence of the overt act, but not of any actual possession of the goods, the offence shall always be punished as an attempt only. When actual possession is proved, the theft or robbery shall then be considered to have been completely carried into effect, and punished accordingly.

No clause.

SECTION CCLXXXI. — Defacing or destroying the Marks with which Thieves had been branded.

All convicted thieves are in ordinary cases branded with appropriate characters, as a warning to others, and a reproach to themselves, the impression

impression of which it is equally necessary to preserve undefaced, whether the offenders are permitted to return to their districts immediately after receiving a corporal punishment, condemned to undergo temporary banishment, or exiled perpetually. Therefore, when guilty of defacing the characters, so as to render them illegible, they shall be punished with 60 blows, and the characters shall be branded anew.

Fifteen clauses.

END OF THE FIRST BOOK OF THE SIXTH DIVISION.

B O O K II.

HOMICIDE.

SECTION CCLXXXII. — Preconcerted Homicide; Murder *.

IN every case of persons preconcerting the crime of homicide, whether with or without a design, against the life of a particular individual, the original contriver shall suffer death, by being beheaded, after the usual period of confinement. All the accessaries to the contrivance, who likewise contribute to the perpetration of the preconcerted homicide or murder, shall suffer death, by being strangled, after being confined until the usual period.

The other accessaries not actually contributing to the perpetration of the murder, shall be punished with 100 blows, and perpetual banishment to the distance of 3000 lee. In these cases, sentence is not to be pronounced finally, until the decease of the person mortally wounded.

When the wounds inflicted in consequence of a previous design to commit murder, do not prove mortal, the original contriver of the deed shall be strangled, after remaining in confinement the usual period. The accessaries contributing to the perpetration, shall be punished with 100 blows, and perpetual banishment to the distance of 3000 lee. The other accessaries shall be punished with 100 blows, and three years banishment.

* The distinguishing character of the crime which is the subject of this section, appears to be previous contrivance. In respect to the crime of killing, with an intent to kill, noticed in Section CCXC, every idea of combination is there excluded, and the design is supposed to have originated at the moment, or nearly so, of its execution.

When

When a homicide has been preconcerted as aforesaid, but no blow struck, the original contriver shall be punished with 100 blows and three years banishment:—the accessaries to such contrivance shall be each punished with 100 blows.

The original contriver shall suffer punishment as a principal, though not otherwise contributing in any manner to carry the design into effect; but the accessaries to the contrivance who are not guilty of any subsequent overt act, shall suffer punishment less by one degree than those of the accessaries, who acted in some respects upon the contrivance, although they did not personally contribute to the perpetration of the deed.

Those who commit murder for the sake of plunder shall, as in the case of a robbery, all of them be beheaded, without any distinction whatever between principals and accessaries.

Eight clauses.*

SECTION CCLXXXIII. — Murder of an Officer of Government.

When an ordinary officer of government is guilty of designing to kill an officer invested with peculiar or extraordinary powers by the Emperor; when a private inhabitant of a district is guilty of designing to kill the governor or supreme officer of the same; when a private soldier is guilty of designing to kill his commanding officer; and, lastly, when an official attendant of a public office or tribunal, is guilty of designing to kill an officer of the fifth, or any superior rank:—in all these cases, if the individual entertaining such criminal design and contrivance, is the original contriver, he shall, though a blow had not been struck in execution thereof, be punished with 100 blows, and banishment to the distance of 2000 lee. If a blow is struck, so as more or less to wound, the principal offender shall be strangled; if the murder is actually perpetrated, all the parties thereto shall be beheaded. In the other cases the punishment of accessaries shall be one degree less severe than that of their respective principals. All persons not holding offices or rank under government, when capitally convicted under this law, shall be executed immediately; but the execution of officers of government shall not take place till after the usual period of confinement.

* A translation of these clauses is contained in the Appendix, No. XXIX.

Accessaries to the contrivance, who are not guilty of any subsequent overt act; attendants of tribunals and public offices, guilty of designing to kill an officer of government of the sixth or any inferior rank; and, lastly, private inhabitants or soldiers, guilty of designing to kill any officers to whose jurisdiction they are not subject, shall only be punished as in ordinary cases*.

No clause.

SECTION CCLXXXIV. — Parricide.

Any person convicted of a design to kill his or her father or mother, grand-father or grand-mother, whether by the father's or mother's side; and any woman convicted of a design to kill her husband, husband's father or mother, grand-father or grand-mother, shall, whether a blow is, or is not struck in consequence, suffer death by being beheaded. In punishing this criminal design, no distinction shall be made between principals and accessaries, except as far as regards their respective relationships to the person against whose life the design is entertained. If the murder is committed, all the parties concerned therein, and related to the deceased as above-mentioned, shall suffer death by a slow and painful execution. If the criminal should die in prison, an execution similar in mode shall take place on his body. The accessories more distantly related, shall be punished according to the law particularly applicable to the cases of persons so related; and those accessories who are not related at all, shall be punished as similar offenders would be in ordinary cases.

* That is to say, in cases of a design to kill a stranger and an equal, under circumstances which are not legally considered either to palliate or to aggravate the guilt of such design.—The meaning however of an expression which occurs so frequently, must already have been apparent to the reader from the context.

The principal in a design to kill any other senior relation within the four degrees of connexion and consanguinity, shall, if no blow is struck, be punished with 100 blows, and perpetual banishment to the distance of 2000 lee. The accessories to a design to kill a person so related to them, shall be punished with 100 blows, and three years banishment. If a blow is struck so as to wound, the principal shall be strangled, and the rest punished in the degree and proportion provided in ordinary cases. If the intended murder is actually committed, all such of the principals and accessories, as are related as above described, to the deceased, shall be beheaded.

The punishment of entertaining a design to kill a junior relation within any of the aforesaid degrees of connexion or consanguinity, shall be two degrees less severe than that elsewhere provided in the case of killing with an intent to kill, such junior relation. The punishment of wounding with an intent to kill, such junior relation, shall be less severe than that of killing, by one degree; when the murder is actually perpetrated, the punishment shall be the same as that already stated to have been elsewhere provided*.

Any slave or hired servant designing to murder, or murdering his or her master, or any relation of his or her master, living under the same roof, shall be liable to the same punishment as has been provided in the case of a son or grandson being guilty of such a criminal act or design.

Five clauses.

* See Section CCCXVII. in the following book, entitled, "Quarrelling and Fighting."

SECTION CCLXXXV. — Killing an Adulterer.

When a principal or inferior wife is discovered by her husband in the act of adultery, if such husband at the very time that he discovers, kills the adulterer, or adulterers, or both, he shall not be punishable. If in such a case, he does not kill the adulterers, she shall be punished according to the law applicable thereto, and afterwards sold in marriage. The money paid for her, shall be a forfeiture to government.

If there had not been an actual commission of adultery, but only such an intercourse as implied a design to commit that crime; or if the adulterer and adulterers had surrendered themselves to the husband; or if, lastly, they had removed from the apartment where the adultery had been committed, the husband who kills either of the guilty parties under any such circumstances, shall not be justified or protected by this law.

If the guilty wife shall contrive with the adulterer to procure the death of her husband, she shall suffer death by a slow and painful execution, and the adulterer shall be beheaded. — If the adulterer kills the husband, without the knowledge or connivance of the wife, she shall suffer death by being strangled.

Twenty-five clauses.

SECTION CCLXXXVI. — Widows killing their deceased Husband's Relations.

If any widow, whether married or not to a second husband, is guilty of killing her deceased husband's father, mother, grand-father or grand-mother, she shall suffer the same punishment as if guilty of killing the said relations, while such husband was still living;

the case of widows who had been divorced from their former husbands, is the only one in which this law shall not take effect.

A servant or slave killing the person who had been, but was no longer his master, shall only be punished as in ordinary cases of murder, except in the instance of a slave who had been manumitted by his master; where, the party being bound by such an obligation, shall be liable to the aggravated punishment, which is applicable to the case of slaves killing their masters, and is elsewhere provided.

No clause.

SECTION CCLXXXVII. — Murder of three or more Persons in one Family.

Any person who is guilty of killing, by previous contrivance, intentionally but without premeditation, or in the course of a robbery or house burning three or more persons, whereof none were guilty of capital offences, and all of whom were relations in the first degree, or inmates of one family; and also any person who is guilty of mangling and dividing the limbs, and thus in a cruel and revengeful manner killing any individual, shall, when convicted of being a principal offender, suffer death by a slow and painful execution. The property of such principal offender shall be forfeited to the use of the suffering family, and his wives and children shall be banished perpetually to the distance of 2000 lee. Accessaries, contributing to the perpetration of the crime, shall be beheaded. The other accessaries shall be punished as accessaries in ordinary cases of murder. Where the original design had been to kill one person only, but from any subsequent cause three or more are killed, the original contriver, if not contributing to the execution, shall be beheaded; and the individual who first proposed upon the spot, the killing of three or more persons, shall be executed as the principal, agreeably to this law.

Twelve clauses.

SEC-

SECTION CCLXXXVIII. — Murder, with an Intent to mangle and divide the Body of the deceased, for Magical Purposes. X

The principal in the crime of murdering, or of attempting to murder any person, with a design afterwards to mangle the body and divide the limbs of the deceased, for magical purposes, shall suffer death by a slow and painful execution. His wives, sons, and all the other inmates of his house, although innocent of the crime, shall be perpetually banished to the distance of 2000 lee. — The accessaries contributing to the perpetration of this crime shall be beheaded, and the other accessaries who neither contributed thereto, nor were inmates of the house in which the principal offender resided, shall be punished as accessaries in ordinary cases of murder*.

If the crime had been contrived, but no persons killed or wounded in order to carry it into effect, the principal offender shall be beheaded; and his wives and sons banished perpetually to the distance of 2000 lee. The accessaries contributing to any overt act, shall be punished with 100 blows, and perpetual banishment to the distance of 3000 lee. The other accessaries shall suffer the last mentioned punishment reduced one degree.

The head inhabitant of the village or district, when privy to the commission of, or the design to commit this crime, and not giving information thereof, shall be punished with 100 blows; but if really ignorant thereof, he shall not be liable to any punishment. All persons giving information by which such offenders are brought to justice, shall receive from government a reward of twenty ounces of silver.

One clause.

* As this law is only followed by one supplementary clause or statute, it is probable, that the attention of the government has not been frequently drawn to superstitious and fanguinary practices of the above description; but the case does not appear to be altogether an imaginary one, as two persons are recorded in a note in the original, to have been capitally convicted under this law, in the 14th year of Kien-lung.

SECTION CCLXXXIX. — Rearing venomous Animals, and preparing Poisons.

All persons rearing venomous animals, or preparing drugs of a poisonous nature, for the purpose of applying the same to the destruction of man, or instructing others so to do, shall be beheaded, although no person is actually killed by means of such drugs or animals. The property of the person guilty of this crime, shall be forfeited to government, and his wives and children, as well as the other inmates of his house, although innocent of the crime, shall be perpetually banished to the distance of 2000 lee *.

The relations and inmates of any family in which an individual has been poisoned by such drugs or animals, shall not be liable to be sent into banishment, unless privy to the circumstances which led to his death.

The head inhabitant of the village or district, when privy to, and failing to give information of this crime, shall suffer a punishment of 100 blows; but if really ignorant thereof, he shall be excused. Persons giving the requisite information shall receive from government a reward of 20 ounces of silver.

All persons guilty of using magical writings and imprecations with a view to endeavour to occasion the death of any person therewith, shall suffer the punishment of contriving a murder in ordinary cases. If any person is killed by means of such proceedings, the offending parties shall be punished as in the case of a contrived murder, actually carried into effect. All persons using such magical writings and imprecations, in order to produce disease and infirmity in any individual, shall suffer a punishment less by two degrees than that above provided; except in the case of a child against his parent, a grand-child against his grand-father or grand-mother, or a slave or hired servant against his master, each of whom for such an offence shall be beheaded.

* It is probably supposed that the relations of the criminal, although innocent of the particular crimes imputed to him, must have been familiarized to, and acquainted with his art, and that therefore they ought to be banished, as dangerous members of society.

In general, all persons guilty of poisoning with drugs, shall be beheaded. If in any case the poison shall have been administered without proving mortal, the offender shall be strangled.

All persons guilty of purchasing a poisonous drug for the purpose of killing, shall be punished with 100 blows, and three years banishment. Persons selling such drugs, knowing the object, shall suffer the same punishment as the purchasers; except in capital cases, where the punishment shall be reduced one degree. When the seller is really ignorant of the criminal object of the purchaser, he shall not be punishable.

One clause.

SECTION CCXC. — Killing with an Intent to kill, and killing in an Affray.

All persons guilty of killing in an affray; that is to say, striking in a quarrel or affray so as to kill, though without any express or implied design to kill, shall, whether the blow was struck with the hand or the foot, with a metal weapon, or with any instrument of any kind, suffer death, by being strangled, after the usual period of confinement.

All persons guilty of killing with an intent to kill, shall suffer death by being beheaded, after being confined until the usual period.

When several persons contrive an affray, in the course of which an individual is killed, the person who inflicts the severest blow or wound, shall be strangled, after the usual period of confinement. The original contriver of the affray, whether he engages in it or not, shall be punished at the least, with 100 blows, and perpetual banishment to the distance distance of 3000 lee. The rest of the party concerned shall be punished with 100 blows each.

Twelve clauses.

SECTION CCXCI. — Depriving of Food or Raiment.

In every case of the offence of applying any substance capable of occasioning an injury to the nose, ears, or other natural outlets of the body of any person; and also in every case of depriving any person of his necessary food and raiment, so as in any instance to produce an assignable injury, the offending party shall be punished with 80 blows.

Not only those who strip others of their clothing in winter, and those who deprive of their food or drink the hungry and the thirsty, but also those who privately take away the ladder from a man who has ascended a height, or the bridle from a man on horse-back, shall be liable under this law to punishment for the consequences of such conduct. Whenever any of the natural faculties are permanently injured, the offender shall be punished with 100 blows, and three years banishment. If the injury amounts to absolute imbecillity and irremediable infirmity*, the offender shall be punished with 100 blows, and perpetual banishment to the distance of 3000 lee: moreover, half his property shall be forfeited for the support and indemnification of the sufferer. If the wound or injury sustained proves mortal, the offender shall suffer death, by being strangled, after remaining in confinement during the usual period.

Whoever is guilty of wilfully occasioning a snake, or other venomous animal to bite any person, shall be punished according to the

* The degree of injury which is in this place intended to be implied, could not be expressed in terms having as precise a meaning as those contained in the original, but in the first article of the next book, entitled, "Quarrelling and Fighting," an explanation is given in the text.

texten of the injury sustained, as in the case of wounding in an affray.

If the bite proves mortal, the offender shall be beheaded, after remaining in confinement during the usual period.

No clause.

SECTION CCXCII. — Killing or wounding in Play, by Error, or purely by Accident.

All persons playing with the fist, with a stick, or with any weapon, or other means whatsoever, in such a manner as obviously to be liable by so doing to kill, and thus killing or wounding some individual, shall suffer the punishment provided by the law in any ordinary case of killing or wounding in an affray; likewise any person who, being engaged in an affray, by mistake kills or wounds a by-stander, shall be punished in the same manner; that is to say, the person killing another in the manner above stated, shall suffer death by being strangled. If guilty of wounding only, he shall be punished more or less severely, according to the nature of the wounds inflicted.

Deliberately contriving, or simply entertaining an intention, to kill one particular person, but by mistake killing another, shall be punishable in the same degree as any ordinary case of intended homicide, and such offender shall accordingly be beheaded, after remaining in confinement the usual period.

If any person, knowing that a place resorted to in order to ford a river, is deep and full of mud, deceitfully represents it to be shallow and good ground; or, knowing that the planks of a bridge or ferry-boat are rotten, and therefore not trust-worthy, deceitfully represents the same to be good and secure, such person shall in either case be chargeable with the consequences, according to this law; — when, therefore, any individual is induced on the strength of such wilfully false information to cross the water, and is drowned, or in any manner injured by making such attempt, the offending party shall be deemed guilty of playing with the means by which he was aware an individual might be killed, and in consequence shall suffer the punishment provided by the law in the cases of killing or wounding in an affray.

All persons who kill or wound others purely by accident, shall be permitted to redeem themselves from the punishment of killing or wounding in an affray, by the payment in each case of a fine to the family of the person deceased or wounded.

By a case of pure accident, is understood a case of which no sufficient previous warning could have been given, either directly, by the perceptions of sight and hearing, or indirectly, by the inferences drawn by judgment and reflection; as for instance, when lawfully pursuing and shooting wild animals, when for some purpose throwing a brick or a tile, and in either case unexpectedly killing any person; when after ascending high places, slipping and falling down, so as to chance to hurt a comrade or by-stander; when sailing in a ship or other vessel, and driven involuntarily by the winds; when riding on a horse or in a carriage, being unable, upon the animal or animals taking fright, to stop or to govern them; or lastly, when several persons jointly attempt to raise a great weight, the strength of one of them failing, so that the weight falls on, and kills or injures his fellow-labourers:—in all these cases there could have been no previous thought or intention of doing an injury, and therefore the law permits such persons to redeem themselves from the punishment provided for killing or wounding in an affray, by a fine* to be paid to the family of the deceased or wounded person, which fine will in the former instance be applicable to the purpose of defraying the expence

* The fine is determined by the second clause annexed to this law, at twelve ounces of silver and forty-two decimals, or about 4*l.* 2*s.* 10*d.* sterling.

attending attending the burial, and in the latter, to that of procuring medicines and medical assistance*.

Thirteen clauses.

SECTION CCXCIII. — A Husband killing his culpable Wife.

If a wife strikes and abuses her husband's father or mother, grand-father or grand-mother, and the husband, instead of accusing her before a magistrate, kills her in consequence of such offence, he shall be punished with 100 blows.

If a wife, having been struck and abused by her husband, in consequence thereof kills herself, the husband shall not be responsible. When a wife, after her husband's father and mother, grand-father and grand-mother are dead, is guilty of disrespect to their memory only, or is charged with some other fault not worthy of death according to the laws, if thereupon the husband kills her, he shall suffer the punishment of death, by being strangled, after the usual period of confinement.

Two clauses.

* From this section of the laws it clearly appears, that although a peculiar degree of strictness may exist in China in enforcing the punishment of homicide in general, the commonly received notion of the rigour of the law being such, that no allowance is made even in cases purely accidental, is totally without foundation.

Upon a late occasion, when one of our seamen at Canton was held responsible for the murder of a native Chinese, under circumstances indeed, of a peculiar nature, and by which for a time the British interests in China were very seriously involved, and all commercial intercourse between the two nations suspended, he was ultimately acquitted agreeably to the provisions of the law contained in this section:— had it not been known at the time that such a law existed, and had not the Chinese government been almost necessitated as it were, by the firm, but temperate and judicious measures adopted on the occasion by the East India Company's representatives, to apply it to that particular instance, the forms of Chinese justice could not have been submitted to, without risking unwarrantably the sacrifice of the life of a British subject. See a translation of the Chinese official report of the affair in the Appendix, No. XI.

SECTION CCXCIV. — Killing a Son, Grandson, or Slave, and attributing the Crime to an innocent Person.

Whoever is guilty of killing his son, his grandson, or his slave, and attributing the crime to another person, shall be punished with 70 blows, and one and a half year's banishment.

Any person attributing, previous to burial, the death of his father, mother, grand-father or grand-mother; and any slave in like manner, attributing the death of his master to a person innocent thereof, shall, if aware of the falsehood of the imputation, be punished with 100 blows, and three years banishment.

Any person in like manner falsely attributing to an innocent person the death of any other of his relations in the first degree, shall be punished with 80 blows, and three years banishment.

If the case concerns a more distant relation, the punishment shall be reduced at the rate of one degree for each degree of remoteness in the relationship.

Any person in like manner falsely attributing the death of his junior relation, or of any indifferent person, shall be punished with 80 blows.

If, in any of the preceding cases, an accusation should actually have been laid before a magistrate, the offence shall be punished according to the law against false and malicious accusations.

If by falsely attributing the crime of murder as aforesaid, any money or property is fraudulently extorted from the party accused, the offence shall be punishable as a theft, proportionably to the amount. If, in like manner, any money or property is extorted by actual violence, the offence shall be punished as a robbery in open day, but in neither case shall the offender be branded. The punishment inflicted shall moreover be always the severest applicable to the case, whether that of falsely attributing murder, or that of a theft or robbery.

shall

Five clauses.

SECTION CCXCV. — Wounding mortally or otherwise, by shooting Arrows and similar Weapons.

All persons who causelessly shoot with a bow, either arrows or any other weapons, or throw bricks or stones, towards walled towns, places of trade, or any other places or buildings whatsoever which are the residence and habitation of man, shall be punished with 40 blows for every such offence, although no person shall have been struck or wounded thereby. — If any person is struck or wounded, the punishment shall be reduced one degree below that provided by the law in the case of striking or wounding in a similar degree in an affray; but no part of the property of the offender shall, as there provided, be forfeited to the use of the sufferer.

If any person is killed by such aforesaid act, the offender shall be punished with 100 blows, and perpetual banishment to the distance of 3000 lee.

Although, according to the general principle on which the laws are framed, the punishment ought be aggravated when the person killed is a relation of the offender, yet as the offender in the present case is not supposed to foresee the particular consequences of his offence, the relationship between the parties shall be disregarded. In all these cases however, ten ounces of silver shall be paid to the relations of the deceased to defray the expences of burial*.

No clause.

SEC-

* See a translation of the report of a trial of an offender convicted agreeably to this law, in the Appendix, No. XXX., and also another in Mr. Barrow's Travels in China, p. 370.

SECTION CCXCVI.—Wounding mortally, or otherwise, by means of Horses and Carriages.

Whoever causelessly drives carriages, or rides horses with extraordinary speed, through streets, markets, military stations, or any other places of resort, and by so doing happens to wound any person, shall suffer the punishment provided by the law in the case of wounding in a similar degree in an affray, reduced one degree. — If any person is killed, the offender shall be punished with 100 blows, and banished to the distance of 3000 lee.

Those who causelessly ride or drive as aforesaid in the open country, where people do not commonly resort, although they should happen, by so doing, to wound any person, shall not be punishable, unless the wound proves mortal, in which case they shall suffer 100 blows, and under all circumstances pay ten ounces of silver to the family of the deceased.

When any person proceeding with great speed upon urgent public business, either on horseback or in a carriage, happens by so doing to kill or wound any one, the case shall be deemed purely accidental, and the punishment redeemable accordingly, by the payment of a fine to the relations of the deceased.

One clause.

p. 370.—Although since the publication of that work, some points may have been placed, by the discovery of new facts, in a light somewhat different, so as perhaps to warrant in those respects an opinion rather less disadvantageous of the Chinese character, the general view which has been taken by Mr. Barrow, of the present state of the people and government of China, is so unquestionably just and excellent, his descriptions so happy, and the information interspersed throughout so various and interesting, that instead of quoting particular passages occasionally in illustration of the present work, the translator conceives that he shall contribute ultimately more to the satisfaction of the reader, by taking this opportunity of making one general reference to that valuable publication.

SEC-

SECTION CCXCVII. — Practitioners of Medicine killing or injuring their Patients.

When unskilful practitioners of medicine or surgery* administer drugs, or perform operations with the puncturing needle, contrary to the established rules and practice, and thereby kill the patient, the magistrates shall call in other practitioners to examine the nature of the medicine, or of the wound, as the case may be, which proved mortal; and if it shall appear upon the whole to have been simply an error, without any design to injure the patient, the practitioner of medicine shall be allowed to redeem himself from the punishment of homicide, as in cases purely accidental, but shall be obliged to quit his profession for ever.

If it shall appear that a medical practitioner intentionally deviates from the established rules and practice, and while pretending to remove the disease of his patient, aggravates the complaint, in order to extort more money for its cure, the money so extorted shall be considered to have been stolen, and punishment inflicted accordingly, in proportion to the amount.

If the patient dies, the medical practitioner who is convicted of designedly employing improper medicines, or otherwise contriving to in-

* Strictly speaking, the art of Surgery is unknown in China, and the term is here employed merely to point out the distinction which the Chinese make in the medical profession, between external and internal operations.

It is a fact worthy of notice in this place, though not immediately connected with the objects of the present work, that notwithstanding the peculiar prejudices of the Chinese on the subject of medicine, and their general aversion to every species of innovation, more especially to that which is derived from the suggestions of foreigners, the benefits of Dr. Jenner's invaluable discovery of the vaccine inoculation, are at present enjoyed in a considerable degree by the natives of the southern coast of the Chinese empire, through the skilful and indefatigable exertions of Mr. Pearson, the principal surgeon of the East India Company's factory at Canton.—See that gentleman's interesting communication on the subject, in the Medical Journal for November 1808.

jure his patient, shall suffer death by being beheaded, after the usual period of confinement.

No clause.

SECTION CCXCVIII.—Killing or wounding by means of Traps or Springes.

All persons, huntsmen by profession, digging pit-falls, and laying traps or springes in mountainous or desert places, where wild animals are supposed to haunt, but omitting at the same time to give warning thereof, by distinguishing each of such places by a flag-staff, and a small cord stretched across, at the height of a man's eye from the ground, shall be punished with 40 blows, although no mischief to any one should ensue.

If any person is hurt or wounded for want of such warning, the punishment of the responsible person shall be only two degrees less than that provided by law in the case of wounding in a similar degree in an affray.

If any person is killed, the offender shall be punished with 100 blows, and three years banishment, and shall moreover pay ten ounces of silver to the family of the deceased, to defray the expences of burial.

If such pit-falls are dug, and traps or springes placed, without the above prescribed warnings, in places cultivated and inhabited by man; the offending parties shall be punished according to the law against shooting with bows and arrows or other weapons, against places so cultivated and inhabited.

No clause.

SECTION CCXCIX. — Occasioning the Death of an Individual by violent and fearful Threats.

Any person who, with a view to accomplish some object, such as a marriage-contract, the transfer of property, payment of debts, and the like, alarms another to such a degree by violent threats, that he kills himself in despair, shall, whenever reasonable grounds can be shewn to have existed for such extreme apprehensions on the part of the deceased, be punished with 100 blows.

Any officer of government who shall be guilty of such conduct, when not acting in execution of his public duty, shall be liable to the same punishment; and in every case the offender shall pay ten ounces of silver to the family of the deceased to defray the expences of burial.

If any person shall thus alarm with violent threats an elder relation in the first degree, so that such relation kills himself in consequence thereof, the junior so offending, shall suffer death, by being strangled, after the usual period of confinement.

Every similar offence against an elder relation in any of the more remote degrees, shall be subject to the punishment last mentioned, under a reduction of one degree for each degree of additional remoteness, in the relationship.

All persons guilty of alarming to death with violent threats, as above mentioned, in order to accomplish any object criminal and unlawful in itself, such as theft or adultery, shall, whether such criminal and unlawful object is, or is not attained, be punished with death, by being beheaded, after the usual period of confinement.

Eighteen clauses.

SECTION CCC.—Compromising and concealing the Crime of killing an elder Relation.

If, in the event of the murder of a grandfather, grandmother, father, mother, husband, or master of a family; the grandson, son, wife, slave, or hired servant, as the case may be, agrees to a compromise with the murderer, and conceals the crime, the party so offending shall be punished with 100 blows, and banished for three years.

In the event of the murder of any other elder relation in the first degree, being compromised and concealed by the junior relation, such junior relation shall be punished with 80 blows, and two years banishment; and in case of any relationship between the parties in a more remote degree, the punishment of the junior shall be reduced at the rate of one degree for each degree of additional remoteness.

An elder relation compromising and concealing the murder of a junior, shall, in general, be punished one degree less severely than such junior relation would have been, had the case been reversed.

Any person, lastly, who is guilty of compromising and concealing the murder of his son, grandson, wife, slave, or hired servant, shall be liable to the punishment of 80 blows. When any bribe is received in consideration of such compromise and concealment, the receiver shall be held guilty of a theft to the same amount, and the punishment shall be either that provided by law in the case of such a theft, or that already stated conformably to the circumstances of the compromise, whichever proves to be the most severe. The amount of the bribe shall be forfeited to government.

Compromising and concealing the murder of a stranger shall subject the offending party to the punishment of 60 blows; and when the offence is committed in consideration of a bribe, the punishment shall be subject to such aggravation, as may be conformable to the law against receiving bribes for unlawful purposes.

be

One clause.

SECTION CCCI. — Neglecting to give Information of, or to interfere and prevent a violent Injury which is known to be intended.

When any person is aware that his comrade has contrived the means of inflicting a violent injury, and is desirous of executing such unlawful purpose, if he does not endeavour to prevent the design from being carried into effect, so as to preserve harmless the object of it; or, when unable so to do, if he does not, at least, after the crime is committed, give information thereof to a magistrate, he shall be punished for the omission with 100 blows.

No clause.

END OF THE SECOND BOOK OF THE SIXTH DIVISION.

B O O K III.

QUARRELLING AND FIGHTING.

SECTION CCCII. — Quarrelling and Fighting between Equals in ordinary Cases.

IN all ordinary cases of quarrelling and fighting, every person who strikes another with his hand or foot, but not so as to produce any assignable hurt or wound, shall be punished with 20 blows.

If a blow is struck with the hand or foot, and produces a hurt or wound; or is struck with a cudgel, or any other similar weapon, but produces no assignable hurt or wound, the punishment, in either case, shall amount to 30 blows. — If, in the latter case, any hurt or wound is occasioned by the blow, the punishment shall be increased to 40 blows. — Whenever the part of the body struck, swells or inflames, the injury received shall be deemed a hurt or wound; in general also, when any blow is struck, otherwise than simply by the hand or foot as aforesaid, that circumstance shall always occasion an aggravation of one degree in punishment. — A soldier striking with the back of his sword, shall also be liable to the aggravated punishment. ×

The offence of tearing away more than an inch (Tsun) of hair, shall be punished with 50 blows. — If a blow has been struck in such a manner as to occasion blood to flow from the eyes or ears, or to be discharged from the stomach in consequence of some internal injury, the offender shall be punished with 80 blows. — In the case however of blood flowing only from the nostrils, or immediately from the part of the body where the blow was received, merely in consequence of the

× "The Appearance of Accuracy given by Minuteness of Detail has sometimes been quoted as a Proof of refined Knowledge; but it is a Proof of the very Reverse. — In Fact, the Want of Skill to reduce to a general Expression or Rule, which would accurately include the different Ramifications of the Subject, is that which gives Occasion to this Minuteness of Detail." Mill's Polit. India, 11. p. 11. ^{skin} skin upon such part having been broken, the punishment shall not be more severe than in the case of an ordinary hurt or wound above mentioned.

The offence of throwing filth and ordure on the head or face, shall also be punishable with 80 blows. — Breaking a tooth, a toe, a finger, or any bone in the body; wounding an eye, without totally destroying the sight; materially injuring and disfiguring the ears or nose; scalding with hot water; burning with fire; wounding with copper or iron needles; or filling up the mouth and nose with filth or ordure, shall in each case subject the offender to a punishment of 100 blows.

Breaking two teeth, two fingers, two toes, or tearing away all the hair of the head, shall in each case subject the offender to a punishment of 60 blows and one year's banishment.

Breaking a rib; wounding both eyes; striking a woman ninety days gone with child, so as to occasion miscarriage or abortion; or wounding in any case with the edge of a sharp instrument, shall subject the offender to a punishment of 80 blows, and two years banishment.

Breaking a leg or an arm, or the back-bone, or destroying one eye, is considered by the law to be an infliction of a permanent and irremediable injury, and shall subject the offender to the punishment of 100 blows and three years banishment.

Breaking both legs, both arms, or a leg and an arm; destroying both eyes; or doing any other injury which produces entire disability and incurable infirmity; cutting out the tongue so as to deprive the sufferer of the faculty of speech; or violently injuring a person of either sex, so as to incapacitate such person from becoming a parent, shall subject the offender, in each case, to the punishment of 100 blows, and perpetual banishment to the distance of 3000 lee; half the property of the offender shall also, in such cases, be forfeited to the support of the person injured.

In the case of a woman being violently injured, but not to the extent of rendering her incapable of becoming a mother, this law shall still be put in force, except in as much as respects the forfeiture of half the property of the offender. When there are more offenders than one, and they agree together to attack jointly, they shall be punished according to the severity of the blows respectively inflicted by them, except in the case of the original contriver, who, whether he joined in the attack or affray or not, shall always suffer, at the least, a punishment but one degree less severe than that which is inflicted on him who struck the severest blow. — In the case of an ordinary affray, no other persons shall be liable to suffer punishment in consequence of their being implicated therein, beside the original contriver, and such of the parties as may be convicted of actually striking a blow: but if any person is killed in the course of an affray, all the persons who were privy to and in any manner concerned in the same, shall, at the least, be liable to a punishment of 100 blows each.

If several persons jointly attack another, and in course of the affray, mortally wound him, the person who struck the last and severest blow, shall be esteemed the principal in the homicide: in those cases of promiscuous fighting, in which it is impossible to ascertain who struck the first blow, and who the last, who struck the lightest, and who the heaviest, the original contriver shall in general be esteemed the principal; and when there is no evidence of previous contrivance, the responsibility, as principal offender, shall attach to the person who first engaged in the affray, or commenced the quarrel.

In the case of a combat between two persons; and in the case of several persons engaging in an affray, and promiscuously striking and fighting each other, they shall be punished respectively, according to the blows duly ascertained, and proved by the examination of the effects, to have been received by their antagonists, except that the punishment of the person or persons who only return the blows received, and have the right and justice of the dispute on his or their side, shall be reduced reduced two degrees in consideration of such favourable circumstances : but this reduction shall not take place in the instance of striking an elder brother or sister, or an uncle; or when inflicting, in any case, a mortal blow.

As for instance; let *Kia and Yee, be supposed to quarrel and fight, and that Kia deprives Yee of an eye, and Yee deprives Kia of a tooth; now the injury sustained by Yee is the heaviest, and subjects Kia to the punishment of 100 blows and three years banishment, whilst the lesser injury sustained by Kia subjects Yee to a punishment of 100 blows only:—nevertheless, if it appears that Kia only returned the attack, and had the right on his side, his punishment shall be reduced two degrees, and accordingly amount to 80 blows and two years banishment:—on the contrary, if Yee only returned the attack, and had the right in the dispute, his punishment shall be reduced two degrees, and amount to 80 blows only; the punishment to which the antagonist is subjected remaining in either case the same as before: when the punishment originally included a forfeiture of half the property of the offender, that penalty shall not in any case, be reduced.

Eight clauses.

SECTION CCCIII. — Periods of Responsibility for the Consequences of a Wound.

When any person is wounded, the magistrates shall distinctly examine, and take evidence respecting the wound, in order to ascertain the nature thereof, and the manner in which it was inflicted; which having done, they shall according to the circumstances determine the period during which the offender is to be held responsible for the consequences, sequences, that is to say, strictly bound both to provide medicinal assistance for the wounded person for such time, and also to answer for the contingency of his death, either on account of such wound, or from any external cause operating thereon, previous to the expiration of the period.

* Kia and Yee are names used merely by way of exemplification, in the same manner as with us sometimes, the letters of the alphabet, or the fictitious names introduced into the proceedings of our civil courts of justice.

If the wounded person should die after the expiration of the period; or even within the period, provided he had recovered from the wound, and is clearly proved to have died from some other cause, the offender shall not be held guilty of a capital offence, but be punished according to the apparent nature of the wound inflicted, as stated in the preceding section.

If, on the contrary, the wounded person not only survives the period assigned, but by the aid of medicine entirely recovers within the same, the punishment of the offender for inflicting such wound shall be reduced two degrees.

Nevertheless, if any permanent injury, disability, or bodily infirmity remains, after a recovery from the immediate effect of the wound, the law shall be executed on the offender in its full extent.

When a wound has been inflicted with the hand or foot, or with any article which is not an ordinary weapon of offence, and the injury sustained is apparently not considerable, a period of twenty days responsibility shall only be required.

When a wound has been inflicted with a sharp instrument, with fire, or with scalding water, the period of responsibility shall be extended to thirty days.

When any bones are broken or dislocated, or the body or limbs violently injured; and when, in any case, the sufferer happens to be a woman with child, the period shall be extended to fifty days, in whatever manner the blow may have been inflicted*.

Seven clauses.

* According to one of the supplemental clauses annexed to this law, an intermediate period of forty days is established for cases of gun-shot wounds; the judicious application of
of

SECTION CCCIV. — Quarrelling and Fighting within the Imperial Palace.

All persons who are guilty of disputing and quarrelling within the precincts of the Imperial Palace, shall be punished with 50 blows.

If they proceed so far as to strike one another, or if the sound of the voices of the disputants reaches to the apartments of His Majesty, the punishment shall be increased to 100 blows. X

If, as aforesaid, within the precincts of the palace, a cutting wound is inflicted, the punishment of the offenders shall be two degrees more severe than in ordinary cases. If the offence is committed in the presence chamber, or in any of the Imperial halls of audience, the punishment shall be further aggravated one degree, but limited in all cases short of homicide, to 100 blows and perpetual banishment to the distance of 3000 lee. As in every quarrel and dispute under these circumstances, both parties are considered culpable, if the injury occasioned by the wound received by one of the offending parties is incurable, or amounts to complete disability, the sufferer must still redeem himself from his share in the punishment ordained by this law, by the payment of the ordinary fine, and shall not receive that portion of the property of the other offender, which is always granted in ordinary cases of persons sustaining a similar injury.

One clause.

of this particular law, it is worthy of notice, once very materially contributed to extricate the East India Company's representatives in China, from very serious difficulties, and from the distressing alternative, of either ignominiously sacrificing the life of a British subject, or totally abandoning the important commercial interests under their management.

which, supposing them reduced to the alternative, would they have selected, the ignominy or the loss of life? — judging from analogy, the answer is not doubtful!

U 11

SEC-

SECTION CCCV. — Striking or wounding an Individual of the Imperial Blood.

Any person who strikes an individual of the Imperial Blood, although not one within any of the four degrees of relationship to the Emperor, shall be punished with 60 blows, and one year's banishment; slightly wounding such person, shall be punishable with 80 blows and two years banishment; inflicting a cutting wound, shall be punished two degrees more severely than in ordinary cases between equals, provided the punishment do not in any such case exceed 100 blows, and three years banishment.

If the individual of Imperial blood is related to the sovereign in the fourth degree, the punishment shall be aggravated one degree; and if more nearly related, the punishment shall be aggravated an additional degree for each degree of approximation in relationship, but in no case exceed 100 blows and perpetual banishment to the distance of 3000 lee, except the consequent injury amounts to total disability and incurable infirmity; when, in all such instances of injuries sustained by persons of Imperial blood, the offenders shall suffer death, by being strangled, after the usual period of imprisonment.

When in any of the preceding cases death ensues, the offenders shall be beheaded, after the usual confinement.

Two clauses.

SECTION CCCVI. — Striking ordinary and extraordinary Officers of Government.

Any ordinary officer of government striking an officer of government invested with extraordinary powers by the Emperor; any private inhabitant of a district, striking the governor or chief officer of the same; any private soldier striking his commanding officer; and, lastly, any any official attendant of a tribunal striking a presiding officer who is at the same time, of the fifth, or of any rank superior thereto, shall in every such case be punished with 100 blows, and three years banishment. If the blow produces a slight wound or bruise, the punishment shall be increased to 100 blows, and perpetual banishment to the distance of 2000 lee.

If the blow produces a severe cutting wound, the offender shall suffer death, by being strangled, after the usual period of confinement.

Any official attendant of a tribunal, (that is to say, a person having a civil or military office or command below the regular officers of government,) striking a presiding officer or magistrate below the fifth rank, shall be punished according to the nature of the blow, in the proportion above stated, but with a reduction of three degrees in each case. — If the officer or magistrate who is struck, is only an assessor of the tribunal, the punishment shall be further reduced one degree, and it shall be again reduced another degree, if he is the lowest officer of such tribunal. — Nevertheless, no reduction shall take effect so as to render the punishment less, than one degree more severe than in ordinary cases.

In all the preceding cases, when the injury sustained produces entire disability and incurable infirmity, the offender shall suffer death, by being strangled; and when it occasions the death of the sufferer, the offender shall be beheaded, after having in either case remained in prison until the usual period of execution.

Officers of government not yet raised to any of the regular ranks, persons having official employments immediately under the civil or military officers of government, soldiers, and private individuals, when striking any civil or military officer of the third, or any rank superior thereto, but to whose jurisdiction or command they were not subject, shall, in each case, be liable to a punishment of 80 blows, and two years banishment.

If guilty of wounding so as to bruise, the punishment shall be increased to 100 blows, and three years banishment. — If guilty of cutting and wounding, the punishment shall be further increased to 100 blows, and perpetual banishment to the distance of 2000 lee.

If the officer struck or wounded as above, is of the fourth or fifth, instead of the third, or any superior rank, the punishment shall, according to the case, be proportionably reduced two degrees; but neither in this, nor in the preceding cases, nor in the case of the persons above mentioned striking or wounding an officer of government below the fifth rank, shall any reduction in the punishment operate so as to render it less, than two degrees more severe than in ordinary cases.

Official messengers on duty, striking or wounding the officer of government to whom they are dispatched, shall be punished as above stated, conformably to this law.

When the offender and the sufferer belong to different districts subject to distinct jurisdictions, the cognizance and trial of the offence shall always take place in the district of the latter.

Four clauses.

SECTION CCCVII. — Subordinate Officers of Government striking Persons who are their Superiors both in Rank and Jurisdiction.

If in any court, tribunal, or public office of government, the deputies thereof, or the magistrates holding subordinate courts, tribunals, or public offices, strike or wound the president of such superior court or tribunal, the punishment shall be less by two degrees, than that already provided in the case of the official attendant thereof committing a similar offence. — If the assessors of such tribunals and public offices strike or wound the presidents thereof, their punishment shall be fixed according

according to a further reduction of two degrees below that of the deputies or subordinates aforesaid, under similar circumstances.

Nevertheless no reduction shall take place so as to render the punishment less than one degree above that which is provided by the law in ordinary cases between equals.

In each of the preceding cases, if total disability and incurable infirmity are occasioned by the blows inflicted, the offender shall suffer death, by being strangled, after the usual period of confinement. — If death ensues, the offender shall be beheaded at the usual period.

No clause.

SECTION CCCVIII. — Co-ordinate or independent Officers of Government striking each other.

Any assessor or deputy of a court, tribunal or government station, who strikes an officer of government, holding the presidency of a subordinate court, tribunal, or government station, shall, without regard to the respective rank of the parties, be punished as in ordinary cases, between equals. — Likewise officers of government belonging to distinct and independent tribunals, if of the same rank, shall, when striking each other, be punished as in ordinary cases.

No clause.

SECTION CCCIX. — Officers of Government striking their Superiors in Rank, but not in Jurisdiction.

Any officer of government below the regular ranks, or of the ninth, eighth, seventh, or sixth rank, striking an officer of government of the third, second, or first rank, who is not at the same time his commanding officer, shall be punished with 60 blows, and one year's banishment.

If

If a blow inflicted as aforesaid produces a cutting wound ; if any one of the aforesaid officers of government strikes an officer of the fifth or fourth rank, who is not his commander ; or if under similar circumstances an officer of the fifth or fourth rank, strikes an officer of the second or first rank, the punishment shall, in each case, be two degrees more severe than in ordinary cases : — but this aggravation of the punishment shall not extend to cases of wounds occasioning the entire disability or death of the injured party.

No clause.

SECTION CCCX. — Resisting and striking any Person employed officially by Government on Public Service.

All persons resisting and striking those who, under the authority of any public office or officer of government, are employed in collecting duties, or enforcing any legal and public services, shall be punished at the least with 80 blows : — all persons so resisting, and striking severe blows, causing a discharge of blood from the stomach, and the like, shall suffer a punishment two degrees more severe than that which would have been inflicted according to law in ordinary cases between equals : — but the punishment shall not, in any case, exceed 100 blows, and perpetual banishment to the distance of 3000 lee ; unless the blows which are inflicted occasion, what the law considers a total disability and incurable infirmity, in which event, the offenders shall suffer death by being strangled, after the usual period of confinement : — if death ensues, they shall be beheaded.

These are the punishments to be inflicted in the different cases of resistance to lawful authority, employed in the collection of duties, or in the enforcement of any other services of a public nature : but if any such offender had been antecedently guilty of neglect or wilful delay, in discharging the former, or performing the latter, he shall be punished according according to the law provided against those who, after having been subjected to a criminal prosecution for their offences, resist, and defend themselves against the officers of justice.

No clause.

SECTION CCCXI. — Disciples and Apprentices striking their Masters.

A knowledge of letters, of husbandry, of arts and manufactures, and of commerce, cannot be acquired without regular discipline, and sufficient apprenticeship, and gratitude is therefore due to those from whom the necessary instruction has been received.

A disciple of the literary class, is held to be bound in gratitude from the very commencement of his apprenticeship; but the disciples of husbandry or agriculture, of arts and manufactures, and of commerce, are only held to be thus bound, after having concluded their apprenticeships, and severally entered into the professions, the knowledge of which they had thereby acquired. They shall, accordingly, be liable to a punishment two degrees more severe than in ordinary cases between equals, whenever they are guilty of striking, in the latter three cases, the persons who have been, or in the first case, the persons who either are, or have been, their masters and instructors.

Nevertheless, the punishment shall not be, in any case, capital, unless death ensues from the blows inflicted, and then the offender shall suffer the punishment of death, by being beheaded, after the usual period of confinement.

Two clauses.

SECTION CCCXII. — Unlawful and forcible Imprisonment.

All persons who have quarrels and disputes, ought to forbear from seeking redress otherwise than by complaining to the proper officer officer of government, and submitting the justice of their cause to his decision: — all those on the contrary, who, relying on their strength and power, seize, and carry away their opponents, and attempt in private houses to confine and torture them, shall, even if no assignable injury be actually inflicted, be punished with 80 blows. — If any severe or internal injury is done to the individual so seized, the offender shall be punished according to the nature of the wounds inflicted, two degrees more severely than in ordinary cases. — If death ensues, the offender shall be strangled at the usual period.

If any person hires another thus to maltreat his opponent, the person so hired shall be deemed an accessory, and suffer punishment less than that of his principal by only one degree.

If more than one person is hired, the chief agent among them shall be the only one to be punished as an accessory under this law.

Four clauses.

SECTION CCCXIII. — Slaves and free Persons assaulting and striking each other.

A slave striking a free man shall, proportionably to the consequences, be punished one degree more severely than is by law provided in similar cases between equals. — If the blow produces entire disability and incurable infirmity, the offender shall be strangled. — If death ensues, the offender shall be beheaded.

A freeman striking a slave, shall, in like manner, be punished less severely by one degree than in the ordinary cases of the same offence; but in the case of the death of a slave, in consequence of the injury received, and in the case of a slave having been killed designedly, the offender shall be strangled. — Slaves striking, wounding, or killing one another, shall be punished as already provided in ordinary cases between equals.

one

In cases of stealing, and other similar offences, between free persons and slaves, the law of diminution and aggravation of punishment shall not take effect.

Striking the slave of a relation in the third or fourth degree, but without producing a cutting wound, shall not be punishable. — If the blow produces any greater injury, short of occasioning death, the punishment shall be two degrees less severe than in ordinary cases. — Striking the slave of a relation in the second degree, shall be punished three degrees less severely than in ordinary cases. — If, in either case, the blow occasions death, the offender shall be punished with 100 blows, and three years banishment: — if the blow proves mortal, and has likewise been struck with an intention to kill, the offender shall suffer death, by being strangled. In the case of killing accidentally, no punishment shall be required.

Striking the hired servant of a relation in the third or fourth degree, but without producing a cutting wound, shall not be punishable.

If the blow produces any greater injury short of occasioning death, the punishment shall be one degree less severe than in ordinary cases: the punishment of striking the hired servant of a relation in the second degree, shall be two degrees less than in ordinary cases. — Killing by such blows, or intentionally killing, shall, in either of the cases last stated, subject the offender to the punishment of death, by being strangled, at the usual period.

Accidentally killing such hired servant, shall not render the person convicted thereof, liable to any fine or punishment.

The offence of assaulting and striking the hired servant of a stranger, shall subject the party guilty thereof, to the same punishment as is provided and inflicted in ordinary cases.

One clause.

SECTION CCCXIV. — Slaves striking their Masters.

All slaves who are guilty of designedly striking their masters, shall, without making any distinction between principals and accessaries, be beheaded.

All slaves designedly killing, or designedly striking so as to kill their masters, shall suffer death by a slow and painful execution.

If accidentally killing their masters, they shall suffer death, by being strangled at the usual period.

If accidentally wounding, they shall suffer 100 blows, and perpetual banishment to the distance of 3000 lee; not being allowed, as under similar circumstances in ordinary cases, to redeem themselves from such punishment by a fine*.

Slaves who are guilty of striking their master's relations in the first degree, or their master's maternal grandfather or grandmother, shall be strangled at the usual period. If more than one are concerned, the principal shall be strangled, and the rest suffer the punishment next in degree. — All slaves who strike so as to wound such persons, shall, without distinction between principals and accessaries, be beheaded at the usual period.

If accidentally killing, the punishment shall be two degrees less severe than in the case of intentionally striking such persons. — If accidentally wounding, the punishment shall be another degree less severe than in the case of intentionally striking. — All slaves who are concerned in the crime of designedly killing such persons, shall suffer death by a slow and painful execution.

* This part of the law, denouncing punishment even in cases which are admitted to have been purely accidental, is in some degree modified in the supplemental clauses.

A slave who is guilty of striking, or striking and slightly wounding his master's relation in the fourth degree, shall be punished with 60 blows, and one year's banishment: if guilty of striking his master's relation in the third degree, he shall be punished with 70 blows, and banishment for a year and a half: if guilty of striking his master's relation in the second degree, the punishment shall be 80 blows, and two years banishment.

If a slave is guilty of striking any of his master's relations in the fourth degree, so as to produce a severe cutting wound, the punishment shall be one degree more severe than it would have been if he had so wounded a free person in ordinary cases: in the case of a master's relation in the third degree, two degrees more severe; and in the case of a master's relation in the second degree, three degrees more severe.— If by these augmentations, the punishment, in any case, becomes capital, the offender shall be strangled at the usual period; but if the wound occasions death, then, whether there was originally a design to kill or not, all the slaves concerned shall be beheaded. X

If a hired servant strikes his master, his master's relations in the first degree, or his master's maternal grandfather or grandmother, he shall be punished with 100 blows, and three years banishment.— If he strikes in such a manner as to wound, he shall be punished with 100 blows, and perpetual banishment to the distance of 3000 lee.— If he strikes so as to produce a cutting wound, he shall be strangled at the usual period: if he strikes so as to occasion death, he shall, in the case of his master being the person struck, be beheaded immediately on conviction; in the other cases, at the usual period. If he designedly kills any of the aforesaid persons, he shall suffer death by a slow and painful execution. X — If the killing or wounding is purely accidental, the punishment shall be two degrees less than that established by the laws, in proportion to the consequences of blows, in ordinary cases.

A hired servant who is guilty of striking, or striking and slightly wounding his master's relations in the fourth degree, shall be punished with 80 blows; if guilty of striking his master's relations in the third degree, with 90 blows; if guilty of striking those in the second degree, with 100 blows.— If striking and wounding so as to produce an internal injury, spitting of blood, and the like, the punishment of so striking his master's relations in the third or fourth degree, shall be one degree more severe than that provided by law in ordinary cases; and if guilty of so striking his master's relations in the second degree, the punishment shall be two degrees more severe than in ordinary cases; but shall not exceed 100 blows and perpetual banishment, unless death ensues; in which event, all the parties to the offence shall be beheaded at the usual period.

If, in the case of a slave having been guilty of theft, adultery, or any other similar crime, his master, or some one of his nearest relations in the first degree, or his master's maternal grandfather or grandmother, instead of complaining to a magistrate, privately beats to death such slave, the person who so offends shall be punished with 100 blows.

the Slave, who is killed by his master, or his relations, is to be beheaded!

If any such person as aforesaid, beats to death, or intentionally kills a slave belonging to his family, who had not been guilty of any crime, the person so offending shall be punished with 60 blows, and one year's banishment; and the wife or husband, as well as the children of such deceased slave, shall be thereupon entitled to their freedom. The master, or relations of the master of a guilty slave, may however chastise such slave in any degree short of occasioning his death, without being liable to any punishment.

When a master, or some one of his relations as aforesaid, strikes a hired servant, the person so striking the servant shall not, whether such such servant merited or not his chastisement, be punishable, unless the blow produces a cutting wound; in which event also, the punishment shall be three degrees less than in ordinary cases. If death ensues, the offender shall be punished with 100 blows, and three years banishment.

If designedly killing such hired servant, the offender shall suffer death, by being strangled at the usual period. — Nevertheless, if a master, or his aforesaid relations, in order to correct a disobedient slave or hired servant, should chastise him in a lawful manner on the back of the thighs, or on the posteriors, and such slave or hired servant happens to die; or if he is killed in any other manner accidentally, neither the master nor his aforesaid relations, shall be liable to any punishment in consequence thereof *.

Seventeen clauses.

through the blow, is deemed to Death!

SECTION CCCXV. — Wives striking their Husbands.

If a principal or first wife is guilty of striking her husband, she shall be liable to the punishment of 100 blows; and the husband, if desirous thereof, may obtain a divorce by making application for the same to the magistrate of the district. If any such wife strikes so as to wound her husband, she shall be punishable three degrees more severely than in the case of striking in the same manner an equal in ordinary cases. — If the blow occasions, what is in the contemplation of the law, entire disability and permanent infirmity, the wife shall be

* A translation of the official statement of a case of a master convicted of the crime of killing his servant, extracted from a printed collection of Chinese law reports, is inserted in the Appendix, No. XXXI., and may contribute something to the illustration both of this particular section, and of the manner in which the laws in general are carried into effect in criminal cases.

strangled

strangled immediately after conviction. — If death ensues, the wife shall be beheaded immediately after conviction.

If any such wife designedly kills her husband by blows, poison, or other means, she shall suffer death by a slow and painful execution.

If any inferior wife strikes her husband, or her husband's first wife, the punishment shall, in each case, be one degree more severe than that of the first wife striking her husband.

If the augmentation renders the punishment capital, the offender shall be strangled; in the latter case, at the usual period; but in the former, immediately after conviction. — In the more atrocious cases, the punishment of the inferior wife shall correspond, and be equal in all respects to that of the first.

A husband shall not be punished for striking his first wife, unless the blow produces a cutting wound; in which case, complaint having been made by the wife to a magistrate, punishment shall be awarded two degrees less than in ordinary cases between equals; but it shall be duly ascertained, before punishment is actually inflicted, whether the parties are desirous or not of a divorce; because, in the latter case, the husband shall be allowed to redeem himself from punishment by a fine.

If the blows, whether struck with a previous intention to kill or not, should prove mortal, the husband shall suffer death, by being strangled at the usual period.

A husband who strikes and wounds any of his inferior wives, shall be punished one degree less severely, than in the case of a husband striking his first wife; if the blows struck by the husband as aforesaid prove mortal, he shall be punished with 100 blows, and three years banishment.

A first wife who is guilty of striking any of the inferior wives of her husband, shall be punished in the same manner as is already provided vided in the case of a husband striking his first wife. — Accidentally killing in these cases shall not entail any fine or punishment.

The offence of striking a first wife's father or mother shall be punished with 60 blows, and one year's banishment; the offence of striking so as to wound such persons in any manner, shall be punished two degrees more severely than an equal offence in ordinary cases; when the injury amounts to total disability and permanent infirmity, the offender shall be strangled: if death ensues from the blows struck, either with or without a previous intention to kill, the offender shall be beheaded at the usual period.

Four clauses.

SECTION CCCXVI. — Striking a Relation not within any of the four Degrees.

In all cases of assaulting and striking, which occur between relations of the same name, but not within the degrees for which mourning is enjoined, a distinction shall be made between the junior and the senior; and the blow struck by a junior shall accordingly be punished one degree more, and that struck by a senior one degree less severely, than an equal offence would have been in ordinary cases between equals: — Provided, nevertheless, that such aggravation do not render any offence capital that previously was not so. When the act of the offender is already by law a capital offence, it shall be punished as provided in ordinary cases.

No clause.

SECTION CCCXVII. — Striking a Relation in the second, third, or fourth Degree.

A junior relation striking his senior in the fourth degree, who is also equi-distant from the parent stock, shall be punished with 100 blows:—if in the third degree, with 60 blows, and one year's banishment; and if in the second degree, with 70 blows, and banishment for a year and a half. — If the relation struck is not only elder but nearer to the parent-stock, the punishment shall be still severer by one degree. — In cases of striking so as to wound, the punishment shall be generally one degree more severe than in ordinary cases, but limited to 100 blows, and perpetual banishment, except when the wound produces permanent disability and infirmity, in which event the offender shall be strangled.

When death ensues, the offender shall be beheaded. If the deceased is an elder relation in the second degree, this sentence shall be executed immediately after conviction; but otherwise, not until the usual period.

A senior relation in the second, third, or fourth degree, shall not be liable to punishment for striking his junior, unless the blow should produce a cutting wound; and in severe cases, the punishment of a senior relation in the fourth degree, shall be reduced one degree; if in the third degree, two degrees; and if in the second degree, three degrees below that provided in ordinary cases of a similar offence between equals. — If the wound occasions death, the offender, in all the above cases, shall, whether killing with or without a previous design to kill, suffer death by being strangled. — Nevertheless, a person who strikes either his junior first cousin, his junior first cousin's children, or his grand-nephew or grand-niece by the brother's side, so as to occasion death death, but without any direct intention to kill, shall only be punished with 100 blows, and perpetual banishment to the distance of 3000 lee; if at the same time guilty of designing to kill, the offender shall, in every such case, be strangled*.

Seven clauses.

SECTION CCCXVIII. — Striking a Relation in the first Degree.

Any person who is guilty of striking his elder brother or sister, shall be punished, at the least, with 90 blows and banishment for two years and a half; but if guilty of striking so as to wound, with 100 blows and three years banishment; if guilty of striking so as to cause a cutting wound, with 100 blows and perpetual banishment to the distance of 3000 lee. The offence of striking and in any manner wounding with a sharp-bladed instrument such aforesaid relations, breaking a bone, or blinding an eye, shall be punished (the offender being the principal, in this as well as in the preceding cases,) with death, by being strangled. If the blow inflicted proves mortal, the principal, and all the accessaries related as aforesaid to the deceased, shall be beheaded. — If a nephew strikes his paternal uncle or aunt, or a grandson his maternal grandfather or grandmother, the punishment shall, according to the consequences, be one degree more severe than in the case of striking an elder brother or sister. — If any person accidentally kills or wounds such of his relations, the punishment shall be two degrees less than that of killing or wounding an elder brother or sister, as already provided, and shall not be redeemable, as in other cases of accident, by a fine. — All the principals and accessaries to the crime of intentionally killing any person related as last mentioned, provided each of them is individually so related to the deceased, shall suffer death by a slow and painful execution. — Nevertheless, if the principal and contriver of the murder is a stranger, the accessaries thereto, related as above stated, shall only be punished as accessaries in ordinary cases. — The offence of wounding so as to kill a younger brother or sister, a brother's son or daughter, a grandson or grand-daughter by a daughter, shall, in each case, be punished with 100 blows and three years banishment.

* As almost every imaginable degree and species of affinity by blood, or connexion by marriage, is distinguished in the Chinese language by a specific and appropriate term, it would have been impossible, in many cases, to convey in the translation the precise idea, without burthening the text with very tedious and unimportant definitions. It is hoped, however, that the general terms employed, will be deemed by the European reader sufficiently explanatory. — The nice and apparently trifling refinements which extend this book of the laws to an immoderate length, it might also, in many instances, be more satisfactory to have been justified in omitting, but these details, however uninteresting in themselves, are characteristic of the general system of the code, and could not have been retrenched without partially abridging the text, and thus destroying the unity as well as impairing the authenticity of the translation.

The offence of intentionally killing such junior relations shall subject the offender to a punishment of 100 blows and perpetual banishment to the distance of 2000 lee: killing by accident, or wounding in any manner without killing such junior relations, shall not be attended with any punishment*.

Fourteen clauses.

SECTION CCCXIX. — Striking a Father or Mother, paternal Grandfather or Grandmother.

Any person who is guilty of striking his father, mother, paternal grandfather or grandmother; and any wife who is guilty of striking

* Notwithstanding this general exemption from punishment, it is provided by the sixth clause, that a senior relation striking his junior maliciously, and so as to occasion entirely disability and incurable infirmity, shall be punished but one degree less severely than already provided in the case of mortally wounding.

her husband's father, mother, paternal grandfather or grandmother, shall suffer death by being beheaded. — Any person who is guilty of killing such a near relation, shall suffer death by a slow and painful execution.

Any person who kills so near a relation, purely by accident, shall still be punished with 100 blows and perpetual banishment to the distance of 3000 lee. In the case of wounding purely by accident, the person convicted thereof, shall be punished with 100 blows and three years banishment: in these cases, moreover, the parties shall not be permitted to redeem themselves from punishment by the payment of a fine, as usual in the ordinary cases of accident.

If a father, mother, paternal grandfather or grandmother, chastises a disobedient child or grandchild in a severe and uncustomary manner, so that he or she dies, the party so offending shall be punished with 100 blows. — When any of the aforesaid relations are guilty of killing such disobedient child or grandchild designedly, the punishment shall be extended to 60 blows and one year's banishment*.

In the case of a mother-in-law or adopted mother so offending, the punishment shall be increased one degree beyond that provided in the pre-

* It is manifest from this article, that parents are not in any case absolutely entrusted with a power over the lives of their children, and that accordingly the crime of infanticide, however prevalent it may be supposed to be in China, is not in fact either directly sanctioned by the government, or agreeable to the general spirit of the laws and institutions of the empire. This practice, so revolting to the feelings of humanity, must certainly be acknowledged to exist in China, and even to be in some degree tolerated, but there are considerable reasons for supposing that the extent has been often over-rated; and at all events it does not seem allowable to lay any very great stress upon the existence of such a practice, as a proof of the cruelty or insensibility of the Chinese character. — Even the dreadful crime of a parent destroying its offspring, is extenuated by the wretched and desperate situation to which the labouring poor in China, to whom the practice of infanticide is admitted to be in general confined, must, by the universal and almost compulsory custom of early marriages, often be reduced, of having large and increasing families, while, owing to the already excessive population of the country, they have not the most distant prospect of being able to maintain them.

ceding case; but if the connexion had been previously dissolved by a divorce between the parents, or otherwise, the crime of killing, either with or without a previous design to kill, shall be punished with death, by being strangled. — If a father, mother, paternal grandfather or grandmother chastises a son's or grandson's wife, or an adopted child or grandchild, in a severe and uncustomary manner, so as to produce a permanent injury, they shall suffer the punishment of 80 blows.

If the chastisement produces total disability and irremediable infirmity, the punishment shall be increased to 90 blows, and in every such case, the adopted child and own child's wife shall be sent back to the family whence they were taken:

In the case of the wife, the marriage present shall be refunded, and ten leang or ounces of silver added to it by the offending party, towards the support of the sufferer; in that of the child, the two families shall raise jointly the sum requisite for that purpose. — If the blows given as aforesaid prove mortal, the offenders shall be punished with 100 blows and three years banishment: if the blows which proved mortal were struck with an intention to kill, the punishment shall be further increased to 100 blows and perpetual banishment to the distance of 2000 lee.

If, in any of these cases, the son's or grandson's wife was not the first or principal wife, the punishment shall be proportionably less in each case by two degrees, and the family shall not be compelled in any such instance, to concur in providing for the support of the wife, after she is restored to her family.

If a son or grandson abuses and strikes his father, mother, paternal grandfather or grandmother, or a wife her husband's father, mother, paternal grandfather or grandmother; and such father, mother, grandfather or grandmother, in consequence, strikes or beats to death such child or grandchild; or if such child or grandchild being disobedient, his or her relations as aforesaid chastise him or her in a lawful and customary manner, manner, and under such chastisement he or she accidentally and unexpectedly dies; or lastly, if by mere chance or accident any person is killed by any of his or her aforesaid near relations, the party convicted of homicide under such circumstances, shall not be liable to any punishment.

Nine clauses.

SECTION CCCXX. — Wives striking their Husband's Relations.

A principal or other wife striking any of her husband's relations in the first, second, third, or fourth degree, shall be punished in the same manner as the husband would have been, had he been guilty of striking such persons, except that, unless the blows occasion death, the punishment of the wife shall not exceed 100 blows and perpetual banishment. — If the blows occasion death, the wife shall, in the case of a senior relation, be beheaded at the usual period, and in the case of a junior relation, strangled at the usual period. — In the case of a principal wife, striking so as to kill her husband's brother's children, the punishment shall amount to 100 blows and perpetual banishment to the distance of 3000 lee; but in the case of killing such persons designedly, the punishment shall be that of death, by being strangled. — Any other wife than the principal, striking her husband's junior relations, shall (in exception to the foregoing rule) be punished as severely as is provided by the laws in ordinary cases between equals.

A senior relation in any of the four degrees, striking his junior relation's principal wife, shall be punished one degree less severely than in ordinary cases between equals. — If striking any of the inferior wives, the punishment shall be further reduced one degree.

Nevertheless, if death ensues, whether or not in consequence of a previous intention to kill, and whether the deceased had been or not a principal wife, the offender shall be strangled.

If

If a younger brother or sister strikes an elder brother's principal wife, the punishment shall be one degree more severe than in ordinary cases between equals.

If an elder brother or sister strikes a younger brother's wife; if an elder brother's principal wife strikes her husband's younger brother or sister, or younger brother's wife, the punishment shall, in each case, be one degree less severe than in ordinary cases; and when the wife who is struck is not the principal one, the punishment shall be further reduced one degree.

A man guilty of striking the husband of any of his sisters, or any of his principal wife's brothers, and a principal wife guilty of striking the husband of any of her husband's sisters, shall only be punished as in ordinary cases. — Nevertheless, within the limits of offences not capital, the punishment in the case of an inferior wife offending shall be one degree more severe than in that of the principal one, that is to say, one degree more severe than in ordinary cases between equals — If an inferior wife strikes any of her husband's other inferior wives' children, the punishment shall be two degrees less severe than in ordinary cases between equals; but if any such inferior wife strikes any of her husband's principal wife's children, the punishment shall be the same as in ordinary cases between equals.

If a principal wife's child strikes his or her father's inferior wife, the punishment shall be one degree more severe than in ordinary cases. — If a child of one of the inferior wife's should strike any other of the inferior wives, except its own mother, the punishment shall be further increased two degrees; these several augmentations shall not however have effect so as to render any punishment capital, that would not have been so in ordinary cases. — When death ensues, the punishment of such offenders shall be inflicted in the degree and manner provided in the case of similar offences committed between equals in ordinary cases.

Two clauses.

SECTION CCCXXI. — Striking a Wife's Children by her former Husband.

When any person strikes his wife's children by a former husband, he shall, if living with such children under the same roof, be punished two degrees, but if living separately, one degree only, less severely than in ordinary cases between equals.

Whenever in such cases, the blows struck prove mortal, the offenders shall suffer death, by being strangled at the usual period.

Any person striking his or her step-father, shall be punished with 60 blows, and one year's banishment.

In all aggravated cases, the punishment shall be one degree more severe if the parties live separately, and two degrees more severe than in ordinary cases, if they live under the same roof: but these augmentations shall not, in any case, render the punishment capital: — when death ensues, the offenders shall be beheaded, whether the deceased was struck with or without a previous intention of killing.

When the parties neither lived under the same roof at the time, nor had ever lived so previously, this law shall not take effect; and all reciprocal offences between them shall be punished as in ordinary cases between equals.

No clause.

SECTION CCCXXII. — Widows striking the Parents of their deceased Husbands.

Any principal or inferior wife striking her husband's father or mother, paternal grandfather or grandmother, after the death of such husband, and even after having entered into a second marriage, shall (except in the case of her having been divorced from such former husband).

husband) be liable to the same punishment for each offence, as if such former husband had been still living. — In like manner, any person striking his or her deceased son's widows, except as aforesaid, in the case of a divorce having taken place, shall, even after such wife had entered into a second marriage, only be liable to the punishment provided in the case of striking such a relation during the son's lifetime.

When however a divorce has taken place, the connexion between the parties and their relations is thereby totally dissolved, and all reciprocal injuries between them are accordingly punishable in the same manner as between equals in ordinary cases.

When a master strikes his former slave, or a slave his former master, the parties shall be punished as in ordinary cases between slaves and freemen, the connexion which had previously existed having been broken by the sale and purchase. — But if a master manumits or releases his slave, the original right and obligation not having been transferred to another, and the original connexion being still in some sense unbroken, the provisions contained in this law shall not take effect, and punishment shall therefore be awarded in all such cases in the same manner as if no manumission had taken place.

No clause.

SECTION CCCXXIII. — Striking in Defence of a Parent.

Whoever, upon perceiving a father, mother, paternal grandfather or grandmother, to be struck by any person, immediately interposes in defence of such near relation, and strikes the aggressor, shall, unless striking such a blow as to produce a cutting wound, be entirely justified and free from responsibility; and even if the wound inflicted by the individual who interposes under such circumstances is severe, he shall be punished

Here is an Allowance to just Resentment without, coupled with an Expectation or rather a Requirement of cool Calculation in its Indulgence!

punished less severely by three degrees than in ordinary cases; excepting only those instances in which the blows struck prove mortal, when the punishment shall be the same as in ordinary cases. To entitle, however, any person to the benefit of this law, it must always be strictly proved that the blows were inflicted on the impulse of the moment, and actually in defence of such aforesaid relation.

If a son or grandson, upon the event of a father or mother, a paternal grandfather or grandmother having been murdered, instead of complaining to the magistrate, takes revenge by killing the murderer, he shall be punished with 60 blows; such son or grandson shall be however entirely justified, if he kills the murderer upon the impulse of the moment, and at the instant that the murder is committed. — At the same time, this law is not by any means to be pleaded in justification of a son or grandson, who enters jointly into a quarrel or affray with his parents or grandparents; and accordingly the offenders in all such instances shall be punished either as principals, or as accessaries, as the case may be, in the same manner as they would have been in ordinary cases: — And altho' it shall be lawful to defend any of the aforesaid near relations, not only against strangers, but also against other relations less nearly connected, it shall not be allowed to strike any of the latter relations in return, and all sons or grandsons who are guilty thereof shall be punished in the ordinary manner according to the law in such cases provided.

When any person kills the murderer of any of his other relations, instead of lawfully complaining to a magistrate, he shall, if it appears upon the trial, that he was really actuated by no other motive beside that of revenging the death of such relation, only be punished with 100 blows.

Three clauses.

END OF THE THIRD BOOK OF THE SIXTH DIVISION.

B O O K IV.

ABUSIVE LANGUAGE*.

SECTION CCCXXIV. — Abusive Language between Equals.

IN ordinary cases, all persons guilty of employing abusive language shall be liable to a punishment of 10 blows; and persons abusing each other, shall be punishable with 10 blows respectively.

No clause.

SECTION CCCXXV. — Abusive language to an Officer of Government.

When any civil or military officer of a district addresses abusive language to a magistrate invested with especial powers by the Emperor; when any private individual addresses abusive language to the governor, or other superior officer having authority in his district; when any private soldier addresses abusive language to an officer having a command directly or indirectly over him; and lastly, when any person having a civil or military employment in any public office, or under any civil or military officer of government, addresses abusive language to an officer of government having authority over him, and being of the fifth or any superior rank; the offender in each of these cases shall be punished with 100 blows.

* It is observed in the Chinese commentary that "opprobrious and insulting language having naturally a tendency to produce quarrels and affrays, this book of the laws is expressly provided for its prevention and punishment." It is not however to be supposed that laws of this nature are often, or very strictly enforced.

Any

Any person who, having a civil or military employment as in the case last mentioned, abuses an officer having immediate authority over him, but yet only of the sixth or of any still lower rank, shall be liable to a punishment of 70 blows only. — If the inferior officer of government who had been abused, was only the assessor or deputy of the tribunal or public office to which the person abusing him belonged, the punishment shall be further reduced to 60 blows: and in this, as well as in all the preceding cases, in order to convict the offender, it is necessary that the abusive language shall have been actually heard by the person to whom it was addressed.

Two clauses.

SECTION CCCXXVI. — Abusive Language between Officers of the same Tribunal.

If, in any government tribunal or public office, abusive language is addressed to the presiding member, by the deputy thereof, or by the presiding member of any government tribunal or public office which is subordinate, the punishment shall, in each case, amount to 80 blows, provided the presiding member who is abused is of the fifth or any still higher rank; otherwise the punishment shall be 50 blows only. — If the abusive language is addressed by the assessor of any tribunal or public office to the presiding member thereof, the punishment shall, agreeably to the distinction made in the preceding cases, amount to 60 or to 30 blows, according as such president is or is not of the fifth or any superior order of rank in the state.

In no case shall the offender be convicted, unless the abusive language had been actually heard by the person to whom it was addressed.

No clause.

SECTION CCCXXVII. — Abusive Language from a Slave to his Master.

X A slave guilty of addressing abusive language to his master shall suffer death, by being strangled at the usual period.

If guilty of addressing abusive language to his master's relations in the first degree, or to his master's maternal grandfather or grandmother, he shall be punished with 80 blows, and two years banishment: — If addressing abusive language to his master's relations in the second degree, the punishment shall be 80 blows; if in the third degree, 70 blows; if in the fourth degree, 60 blows.

A hired servant addressing abusive language to his master, shall be punished with 80 blows, and two years banishment; if to his master's relations in the first degree, or maternal grandfather or grandmother, his punishment shall amount to 100 blows; if to his master's relations in the second degree, to 60 blows: if to the relations in the third degree, to 50 blows; and if to the relations in the fourth degree, to 40 blows. — In these cases, as well as others, the abusive language must have been heard by the person to whom it was addressed, and such person must always be the complainant.

No clause.

SECTION CCCXXVIII. — Abusive Language to an elder Relation.

Any person who is guilty of addressing abusive language to an elder relation in the fourth degree, equi-distant from the parent stock, shall be punished with 50 blows: if to a relation in the third degree, under similar circumstances, with 60 blows: and if to a relation as aforefaid, in the second degree, with 70 blows; but when such relation is also one or more generations nearer to the parent stock, the punishment shall be more severe, in each case, than above provided, by one degree.

Whoever

Whoever addresses abusive language to his elder brother or sister, shall be punished with 100 blows: whoever abuses his paternal uncle or aunt, or his maternal grandfather or grandmother, shall be punished one degree more severely than in the case last mentioned: — but, as it has been stated in the preceding articles, the law can only be enforced when the person to whom the abusive language was addressed, actually heard it, and is himself the complainant.

No clause.

SECTION CCCXXIX. — Abusive Language to a Parent, Paternal Grandfather or Grandmother.

A child or grandchild who is guilty of addressing abusive language to his or her father or mother, paternal grandfather or grandmother; a wife who is guilty of addressing abusive language to her husband's father or mother, paternal grandfather or grandmother, shall in every case suffer death, by being strangled; provided always however, that the persons abused, themselves complain thereof to the magistrates, and had themselves heard the abusive language which had been addressed to them. X

One clause.

SECTION CCCXXX. — Abusive Language from a Wife to her Husband's Relations.

A principal or inferior wife who is guilty of addressing abusive language to any of her husband's relations within the four degrees, shall be liable to the same punishment as her husband would have been for using towards such persons the same language. — An inferior wife abusing her husband or husband's principal wife, shall be punished with 80 blows. — A husband abusing his wife's father or mother, shall be be liable to a punishment of 60 blows ; but in all cases such abusive language must, as already observed, have been heard and complained of by the parties to whom it was addressed.

— There is no clause respecting abusive language addressed by a principal wife to her husband, as the interposition of the laws can scarcely be supposed to be necessary ; yet if such a case should occur, the magistrates may lawfully award a punishment of 50 blows, according to the law respecting offences against propriety.

No clause.

SECTION CCCXXXI. — Abusive Language addressed by a Widow to her deceased Husband's Parents.

If any principal or inferior wife is guilty of addressing abusive language to her husband's father or mother, paternal grandfather or grandmother, after the death of such husband, and even after having entered into a second marriage, she shall (except in the case of her having been divorced from such former husband,) be liable to the same punishment for each offence, as if such husband were still living.

A slave addressing abusive language to his former master, shall only be punished as in ordinary cases, the connexion between the parties having been broken by the transfer to another master ; but a slave addressing abusive language to the master who had manumitted or released him, shall be liable to the same punishment as he would have been if he had continued in such master's service.

No clause.

B O O K V.

INDICTMENTS AND INFORMATIONS.

SECTION CCCXXXII. — Irregularity in presenting Informations.

ALL the subjects of the empire, whether soldiers or citizens, who have complaints and informations to lay before the officers of government, shall address themselves in the first instance, to the lowest tribunal of justice within the district to which they belong, from which the cognizance of the affair may be transferred to the superior tribunals in regular gradation*. — Any individual who, instead of addressing himself to the proper magistrate within his district, proceeds at once to lay his complaint and information before a superior tribunal, shall be punished with 50 blows, although his complaint should be just, and his information correct.

It is however lawful to appeal to a superior magistrate, when the inferior officer of justice refuses to receive the information and complaint, or decides thereon unjustly; but not otherwise.

Whoever, in order to present an information, detains an officer of justice in his public progress; and whoever, for the same purpose, summons any officer of justice to his tribunal by beat of drum, shall be punished with 100 blows, if his information be false and complaint groundless; and if he should be likewise guilty of the crime of a false and malicious accusation against any person, he shall be punished as much much more severely as the law applicable to such cases of criminality may authorize.

* For an exemplification of the ordinary routine of judicial proceedings in the more serious criminal cases, see the official report of the investigation of charges against an English seaman, in the Appendix, No. XI.

Nevertheless, if his cause is found to be a just one, the irregularity of his proceedings shall be pardoned*.

Twenty clauses.

SECTION CCCXXXIII. — Anonymous Informations.

Any person who addresses and presents an information and complaint to an officer of government, containing direct criminal charges against a particular individual, without having inserted therein his (the informant's) proper name and family name, shall, although the charges should prove true, be punished with death, by being strangled at the usual period.

Whenever any such anonymous information or complaint is discovered, it shall be immediately burned or otherwise destroyed; and if the person who accidentally finds such a document, instead of so doing, presents it to a magistrate or some other officer of government, he shall be punished with 80 blows.

Any officer of government who, nevertheless, takes upon himself to act upon any such anonymous information and complaint, shall be punishable with 100 blows; and no person, whether accused justly or not, shall be liable to be in any case convicted or punished on the ground of anonymous charges.

* It appears from this and other articles of the code, that an appeal from the lower to the higher tribunals is allowed both in civil as well as criminal causes, not, as has been supposed, in criminal causes only; indeed there are no traces of any such distinction, as that of civil and criminal, in the jurisprudence of the Chinese; but it is probable, that as those causes which might be denominated civil, are, from the ordinary tenure of property and other circumstances, of comparatively small importance in China, they are not necessarily referred to the decision of the higher courts, and therefore, generally speaking, decided by the officers of the districts in which such disputes originate.

Every

Every officer of government who has unlawfully acted as aforesaid, shall likewise be obliged to make a compensation of ten ounces of silver to each of the persons whom, on account of anonymous charges, he may have summoned to his tribunal.

According to this law, all those also shall be punished who, under assumed or forged names, pretend to give information to the officers of government of any undiscovered crimes or other secret and hidden transactions; or who, availing themselves of blank stamped papers belonging to others, fill them up with accusations, and prevail upon or bribe the soldiers or other attendants of tribunals, to deliver them to the fitting magistrates.

This law shall not however extend to those who may have prepared, or be in possession of, such anonymous informations, unless they shall likewise have been instrumental in their presentation to the officers of government; nor shall this law extend to those anonymous informations, which, although actually presented, merely contain general censure and abuse, without precise charges of crimes against particular individuals.

Three clauses.

SECTION CCCXXXIV. — Neglecting or declining to receive Informations.

When an information concerning a charge of high treason or rebellion is regularly presented to an officer of government, if he does not immediately receive and act thereon, that is to say, take measures for seizing the culprits, and preventing the progress of such disorders, he shall be liable to a punishment of 100 blows and three years banishment, although no evil consequences should ensue from his neglect: but if through his inattention, considerable numbers are suffered to assemble tumultuously, attacking fortified stations, ravaging the country, and distressing the inhabitants, such officer of government shall suffer death, by being beheaded at the usual period.

In like manner, any officer of government who declines to receive, and to act upon an information containing a charge of parricide, or of some other enormous crime of a private nature, shall be punished with 100 blows.

If the rejected information contained a charge of robbery, murder, or of any like offences, the officer of government shall be punished with 80 blows.

If the offence charged in the rejected information, was a breach of the laws against quarrelling and fighting, or of those concerning marriage and landed property, or concerning any other laws of the same class, the punishment of the officer of government for not receiving the same, shall be two degrees only less than that to which the accused person would have been liable, except that it shall not, in any of these cases, exceed 80 blows. — If such officer of government had been bribed by the accused party, he shall be punished proportionably to the amount of the bribe, according to the law against receiving a bribe for an unlawful purpose, whenever the punishment is greater than that provided by the law above stated.

When the accuser and the accused party belong to different districts and jurisdictions, the magistrates having authority over the latter, shall take cognizance of, and pronounce judgment upon the charges made in the district of the former, and if he should endeavour to excuse himself from such duty, he shall be punished according to this law.

When any cause comes before the tribunal of the viceroy, sub-vice-roy, or ordinary or extraordinary judge in any province, which cause had either not been reported at all, or if reported, not finally judged and determined by the magistrate to whose jurisdiction it belonged, it shall be duly registered, and an entry made of the particulars thereof,
by

by the viceroy or other superior officer having cognizance thereof, in order that a certain limited period may be fixed for its final determination by the proper magistrate; and if, when such magistrate commits any mistake, or is guilty of any culpable delay, the viceroy and other superior officers connive thereat, instead of rectifying or accelerating the decision, as the case may require, they shall be liable to the same punishment as the inferior magistrates.

If, in any case of an official report, or of a criminal information having been laid before the proper officer or magistrate, such magistrate refuses to receive the same and act thereon, or if, after having received, he acts upon it unjustly and illegally, the officers and magistrates of superior tribunals are bound to take cognizance thereof in regular gradation and succession, and if the said superior officers excuse themselves from receiving and acting upon such appeals from inferior jurisdictions, or transfer the cognizance of them to a deputy, or send them back unexamined to the magistrates from whose tribunals the appeals had been made, they shall, in each case, be punishable under this law.

In general, every magistrate and tribunal shall, conformably to the extent of their powers and jurisdiction, not only receive and undertake to investigate, but also bring to a final issue and adjudication, each of the several criminal causes and questions on official business that lawfully come before them; and whenever they, on the contrary, depute or instruct other magistrates to continue any such investigations in their place and stead, the magistrates and members of tribunals so offending shall be liable to punishment, in the same manner as above provided.

Nine clauses.

SECTION CCCXXXV. — Informations which must be transferred to the Cognizance of others.

Whenever any information is laid before a magistrate, who is related by blood or by marriage to the accuser or to the accused, who was educated by, or had ever served under either party, or who, lastly, had been habitually the enemy or public adversary of either; in all such cases the magistrate must decline to act thereon, and shall therefore transfer it forthwith to another jurisdiction.

Any magistrate who takes cognizance of a cause under such circumstances, shall be liable to a punishment of 40 blows, although he should have pronounced a just and impartial sentence: — otherwise, he will be liable to the severer punishment attending an intentional deviation from justice.

No clause.

SECTION CCCXXXVI. — False and malicious Informations *.

Whoever lays before a magistrate a false and malicious information, in which some person is expressly charged with a crime punishable with any number of blows, not exceeding 50, shall suffer a punishment two degrees more severe than that which the accused would have merited had the accusation been true. — If the crime falsely alleged was punishable

* The following long article, by which the responsibility of each individual for the truth of the charges he may bring forward publicly before a magistrate, is, in every imaginable case, precisely determined, seems in great measure to correspond in its object with the laws in force in European countries, against (what is denominated by us) wilful and corrupt perjury.

The Chinese do not indeed specifically punish the breach of an oath, because although frequently introduced into the private investigation and adjustment of disputes, oaths are never required, or even admitted, in judicial proceedings.

with with more than 50 blows, or with temporary or perpetual banishment, the punishment of the accuser shall be three degrees more severe than that to which the accused is rendered liable; but shall not, in these, or in any of the preceding cases, be so increased as to become capital.

When the accused person, having been condemned upon such false accusation as aforesaid, shall have proceeded to the place to which he had been sentenced to be either temporarily or perpetually banished; although he should have been afterwards speedily recalled on a discovery of his innocence, an estimate shall be made and verified before the magistrate, of the expences he may have incurred by his journey, that the false accuser may be compelled to reimburse him to the full amount; and the false accuser shall likewise be obliged to redeem, or re-purchase for him, any lands or tenements which he may have sold or mortgaged to defray such expences: — Moreover, if such unmerited banishment should occasion the death of any of the relations of the innocent person, who may have followed him to his destination, the false accuser shall suffer death, by being strangled; and besides the reimbursement aforesaid, half his remaining property shall be forfeited to the use of the innocent person. — When any person is falsely accused of a capital offence, and upon such accusation has been condemned and executed, the false accuser shall be either strangled or beheaded, according to the manner in which the innocent person had been executed, and half his property shall be forfeited as in the preceding instance.

If the execution of the sentence of death against the innocent person had been prevented by a timely discovery of the falsehood of the accusation, the false accuser shall be punished with 100 blows and perpetual banishment to the distance of 3000 lee, and moreover subjected to extra-service during three years.

If the false accuser is proved to be really so poor as to be unable to reimburse the innocent person to the amount of his expences, his punishment punishment shall not be aggravated on account of such incapacity. — If the innocent person should in his complaint or appeal to the magistrates, attempt to aggravate the guilt of the false accuser, by falsely alleging the death of a relation, or upon some other pretext, he shall, in his turn, be liable to the punishment of a false accuser, and the offence of the former shall be punished only according to its real extent.

When any person accuses another of more offences than one, if the lesser charge proves false, and the greater true; or among charges of equal criminality, if one only proves true, and the rest false, the accuser shall, in both cases, be excused from the penalties and punishment of a false and malicious information.

When, on the other hand, any person accuses another of two or more offences, whereof the lesser only proves true; and when in the case of a single offence having been charged by one person against another, the statement thereof is found to exceed the truth; upon either supposition, if, the punishment of the falsely alleged, or falsely aggravated offence, had been actually inflicted in consequence of such false accusation, the difference (estimated according to the established mode of computation hereafter exemplified,) between the falsely alleged and the actually committed offence, or between the falsely alleged greater, and the truly alleged lesser offence, shall be inflicted on the false accuser:— but if punishment, conformably to the nature of the falsely alleged, or falsely aggravated offence, shall not have actually been inflicted, having been prevented by a timely discovery of the falsehood of the accusation, the false accuser shall be permitted to redeem, according to an established scale*, the whole of the punishment which would have been due to him in the former case, provided it does not exceed

* See the introductory table. — The fines, it will be perceived, are little more than nominal.

100 blows ; but if it should exceed 100 blows, the 100 blows shall be inflicted, and he shall be only permitted to redeem the excess.

TABLE of Reference in Cases of false and malicious Informations.

Degree.	Actual Punishment.		Estimated Equivalent.
	Blows.	Banishment.	Blows.
1.	10	none	10
2.	20	none	20
3.	30	none	30
4.	40	none	40
5.	50	none	50
6.	60	none	60
7.	70	none	70
8.	80	none	80
9.	90	none	90
10.	100	none	100
11.	60	for one year	120
12.	70	for one year and a half	140
13.	80	for two years	160
14.	90	for two years and a half	180
15.	100	for three years.	200
16.	100	for life, distance 2000 lee	220	} or 240
17.	100	for life, distance 2500 lee	240
18.	100	for life, distance 3000 lee	260

Banishment for life shall be estimated at 240 blows, when compared with any of the inferior degrees of punishment.

The use of the foregoing table may be illustrated by the following examples :

1. When the alleged and real offence are both punishable with the bamboo ; as for instance, alleging a blow producing a bruise, and punishable with 40 blows, when abusive language, which is punishable with 10 blows, had been the only offence committed.— The difference in this case is 30 blows, and shall be inflicted on the accuser, if the accused had actually undergone the aggravated punishment, but otherwise may be redeemed.

2. When

2. When the alleged offence is punishable with temporary banishment, and the real offence, with the bamboo only; as for instance, alleging a blow occasioning a fracture of a limb, or violent injury to the body, which offence is punishable with 100 blows and three years banishment, when in fact, only a bruise had been inflicted, which latter offence is punishable with 40 blows; the former punishment is in this case equivalent, according to the preceding table, to 200 blows, and the difference will therefore be 160 blows, equivalent (according to the same table) to 80 blows and two years banishment.

If in any such instance, the accused has been condemned to suffer, and had actually proceeded to undergo the aggravated punishment, the accuser shall be punished with 80 blows and two years banishment; otherwise he shall suffer 100 blows, and redeem the remaining 60 by the payment of a fine.

3. When the alleged offence is punishable with perpetual banishment, and the real offence with the bamboo only; as for instance, alleging a blow struck so as to break both thigh bones, which is punishable with 100 blows and perpetual banishment to the distance of 3000 lee, when only a bruise had been inflicted, which is punishable with 40 blows: now the latter punishment being generally estimated at 240 blows, the difference will be 200 blows, which, again is estimated to be equivalent to 100 blows and three years banishment; accordingly, if the accused had been condemned to suffer, and had actually proceeded to undergo the aggravated punishment, the accuser shall be punished with 100 blows and three years banishment; but otherwise he shall only suffer the 100 blows, and be permitted to redeem himself from the remaining punishment of banishment.

4. When the alleged and real offence are both punishable with temporary banishment; as for instance, alleging a theft to the amount to ninety ounces of silver, which offence is punishable with 100 blows and three years banishment, when it is afterwards proved that no more than fifty

fifty ounces had been stolen, which latter offence is punishable only with 60 blows and one year's banishment : since by the preceding table the former offence is equivalent to 200 and the latter to 120 blows, the difference will be 80 blows, and shall be accordingly inflicted on the accuser if the accused had undergone the heavier punishment, but otherwise, be redeemable by the established fine.

5. When the alleged offence is punishable with perpetual and the real offence with temporary banishment ; as for instance, alleging the offence of sacrilegiously digging up another man's burying ground, so as to lay a coffin bare, which offence is punishable with 100 blows and perpetual banishment to the distance of 3000 lee, when it afterwards appears on examination, that the sacrilegious digging, not having been carried to the extent of laying bare any coffin, was punishable only with 100 blows and three years banishment ; the former punishment being estimated at 240 and the latter at 200 blows, the difference will be 40 blows, and as such shall be inflicted on the accuser if the heavier punishment had been actually executed upon the accused, but otherwise, be redeemable by the ordinary fine.

6. Lastly, when the alleged and real offence are both punishable with perpetual banishment, but to a greater distance in the former case than in the latter ; as for instance, alleging a theft of one hundred and twenty ounces of silver, which is punishable with 100 blows and perpetual banishment to the distance of 3000 lee, when in fact, no more than one hundred ounces had been stolen, and the theft therefore punishable only with 100 blows and perpetual banishment to the distance of 2000 lee. In this case, by referring to the estimated equivalents of the several degrees of perpetual banishment in the table, as compared with each other, it will be found that the difference amounts to 40 blows ; and therefore punishment to that extent shall be inflicted upon the accuser, if the accused had actually undergone the aggravated punishment ; but otherwise shall be redeemable as in the preceding cases.

In every case, when an offence has been committed which is not capital, the person falsely alleging another offence which is capital, or falsely aggravating the offence committed, so as to make it appear capital, shall, in the event of the accused person having been condemned and executed, suffer death in the same manner ; in the event of execution not having been the consequence of such false information, the false accusers shall be punished with 100 blows and perpetual banishment to the distance of 3000 lee ; but not be liable to the extra service stated in a similar case previously described.

Moreover, no aggravated or exaggerated statement of an offence, on the part of the informant, shall be considered or punished as such, however much the offence may have been falsely alleged to be greater than it afterwards proves to be on examination, provided such exaggeration does not, according to the existing laws, expose the offender to a severer punishment : as for instance ; alleging the acceptance of a bribe to the extent of two hundred ounces, when one hundred and thirty ounces was the real amount of the bribe ; now, because the receipt of a bribe to any extent beyond one hundred and twenty ounces is equally punishable with death by being strangled at the usual period, the additional charge against the offender of seventy ounces, does not in this case tend to aggravate his punishment. — If the different charges are not made against one and the same, but against different persons, the truth of the charges against one or more persons shall not be deemed any palliation of the offence of falsely accusing other persons, and all such false accusations shall be therefore regarded and punished as distinct cases.

When any of the magistrates superintending the public tribunals are guilty of preferring false accusations, or any public officers having high judicial and ministerial powers, address false accusations of each other other to the Emperor, they shall be punished according to this law; and, in the latter case, the least punishment incurred, will be that provided by law in ordinary cases of a false statement being wilfully made in an address to his Imperial Majesty.

If the relations of a prisoner, who had brought himself into that situation by his own misconduct, and who had therefore in fact suffered no injustice, groundlessly appeal and complain to the tribunals of government against his confinement and condemnation, they shall suffer a punishment three degrees less than that incurred by the prisoner, such reduced punishment being at the same time limited to the extent of 100 blows.

If any such justly condemned person, after having undergone the sentence of the law, whether of corporal punishment with the bamboo, or the same, together with the addition of subsequent banishment, should himself groundlessly complain of his having suffered injustice, and attempt to frame and exhibit before the public tribunals, charges of culpability against the magistrates and clerks who had tried and condemned him, his punishment shall be three degrees more severe than that of the crime which he falsely alleges against such magistrates and clerks; but nevertheless shall not exceed 100 blows, and perpetual banishment to the distance of 3000 lee.

If a person, justly condemned as aforesaid, brings forward a false accusation previous to the complete execution of his sentence of banishment, his punishment shall be further regulated according to the law provided for the cases of offences committed by exiles during the period of their banishment.

Twenty-three clauses.

SECTION CCCXXXVII. — Informations against Relations.

A son accusing his father or mother; a grandson his paternal grandfather or grandmother; a principal or inferior wife, her husband, or her husband's father or mother, paternal grandfather or grandmother, shall, in each case, be punished with 100 blows and three years banishment, even if the accusation prove true: the individuals so accused by their relations, if they voluntarily surrender and plead guilty, shall in each case also, be entitled to pardon.

In any of the above instances, if the charge should prove either in part or wholly false, the accuser shall suffer death by being strangled.

A junior relation accusing an elder relation in the first degree; a grandson accusing his maternal grandfather or grandmother, or an inferior wife accusing her husband's first wife, shall in each case suffer 100 blows, although the accusation should prove true. — In like manner, justly accusing an elder relation in the second degree, shall subject the accuser to be punished with 90 blows; an elder relation in the third degree, with 80 blows; and in the fourth degree, with 70 blows.

In the first of these cases, if the accused surrenders voluntarily, he or she shall be pardoned; in the other cases, the punishment shall be three degrees less than if the parties had been accused under the same circumstances by strangers. — In all these cases, if the accusation should prove to be false, the punishment of the junior relation accusing, shall be three degrees greater than when falsely accusing strangers in ordinary cases, except that such augmentation shall not in any case have the effect of rendering the punishment capital:—in cases of falsely accusing an elder relation beyond the fourth degree, the punishment shall exceed that provided in ordinary cases, by two degrees.

From the provisions of this law, an exception shall be made in favour of all those who justly accuse their relations of treason, rebellion, concealment of criminals, and the suppression or compromise of any of the greater offences against the state; and also in the case of the step-mother, mother in law, or natural mother killing the accuser's father; or the accuser's adopted mother killing his natural mother; or lastly in cases of the accuser having been himself robbed or maltreated by a relation. — In all the cases herein excepted, it shall be lawful to complain to the magistrates.
the

When justly accusing a junior relation in the first or second degree, or a son in law, if the accused voluntarily surrenders and confesses his offence, he shall be pardoned.

In the case of a relation in the third or fourth degree, the punishment of the accused under the same circumstances, shall be reduced three degrees.

Falsely accusing a junior relation in the first degree, shall be punished three degrees less severely than in ordinary cases: in the second degree, two degrees less; and in the third or fourth degree, one degree less:— a husband falsely accusing his principal wife, or a principal wife falsely accusing any of the inferior wives of her husband, shall be only liable to the ordinary punishment reduced three degrees. — The slaves of any family accusing, whether truly or falsely, the master thereof, or any of his relations within the four degrees, shall be liable to the same punishment as the sons or grandsons in such family would have been, for accusing truly or falsely their elder relations within the same degrees of affinity.

When accusing such persons truly and justly, the punishment of hired servants shall be one degree less than that of slaves; but if falsely and unjustly, the same.

When slaves or hired servants are accused by their masters, or their masters relations, they shall not be entitled to pardon, as junior relations are stated to be in the preceding cases, although voluntarily surrendering themselves and acknowledging their offences.

A parent falsely accusing his child; a paternal or maternal grandfather or grandmother their grandchild, or grandson's principal or inferior wife, a husband his inferior wife, or a master his slave or hired servant, shall not, in any case, be punishable. — Although the mutual accusations of fathers and and mothers in law on the one hand, and of sons in law on the other, are generally to be judged according to the provisions of this law; yet, when the connexion between the parties shall have been dissolved by long separation, by a divorce between the husband and wife, or by the death of one of them; or lastly, by any offence in direct violation of the connexion originally subsisting between the parties, the laws shall be administered as in ordinary cases between strangers.

Three clauses.

SECTION CCCXXXVIII. — Disobedience to Parents.

All children and grand-children who are disobedient to the instructions and commands of their fathers, mothers, paternal grandfathers and grandmothers, or who do not adequately provide for their support and sustenance, shall be punishable with 100 blows.

This law shall nevertheless only be understood to apply to cases of wilful disobedience of lawful instructions and commands, and to cases of wilful neglect of maintenance, on the part of such children or grand-children as have the means thereof; and it shall be moreover necessary in each case, that the near relation so disobeyed or neglected, should personally complain of, and inform against the offender.

Three clauses.

SECTION CCCXXXIX. — Informations presented by Criminals under Confinement.

Criminals, while in confinement, shall not be allowed to present or prosecute informations against any person or upon any affair whatsoever, except only when the object is to make complaint of ill treatment against the officers or inferior persons belonging to the prisons; or to confess and give information upon other offences committed by themselves;

besides

besides those for which they are confined; or lastly, to give evidence against and accuse the partners of their guilt, in which cases their informations shall be received and acted upon in due course of law, as under ordinary circumstances.

Persons upwards of eighty or under ten years of age, persons totally and incurably infirm, and females, in all cases, are incapacitated from presenting and prosecuting any informations, excepting only such as concern the crimes of high treason and rebellion, or the impiety of their children or grand children, or such as concern designed murders, robberies, thefts, wounds, frauds, and the like, against themselves or persons living with them under the same roof. — On any other subjects the informations of such persons must be rejected, because in all ordinary cases they are entitled to redeem themselves from punishment by a fine, and therefore not deterred from making false accusations by the apprehension of the consequences to which, under the same circumstances, other persons would become liable.

All magistrates, therefore, who receive and act upon such unlawful informations, shall be punished with 50 blows for their misconduct.

One clause.

SECTION CCCXL. — Exciting and promoting Litigation.

In all cases of exciting and disposing others to inform and prosecute, the person who draws up the information for the prosecutor, and by any aggravation or extenuation deviates from the truth, shall be liable to the same punishment as the false accuser; except in a capital case, when his punishment shall be reduced one degree. — In the case of hiring any person to present and prosecute a false accusation, the person hired shall be liable to the same punishment as the false accuser, under the same mitigation in capital cases, as in the preceding instance.
the

If the person who is hired had received a reward in money, such reward shall be considered as a bribe for an unlawful purpose, and the punishment which is legally proportionate to such offence shall be inflicted, whenever it proves on comparison more severe than that by this law provided.

Nevertheless, if any one meets with a simple and uninformed person, who is unable to state the injuries and injustice which he has suffered; and consequently advises and instructs such person rightly and truly how to act upon the occasion, and moreover, without extenuating or aggravating the particulars, draws up an information for him in the legal and customary manner, the giver of such assistance shall not, under these circumstances, be in any manner punishable.

An adulterer who is guilty of advising and instructing the adulteress to accuse her legitimate son of a neglect of his filial duty, shall be punished as a contriver of murder.

Ten clauses.

SECTION CCCXLI. — Informations on Subjects affecting Civil as well as Military Affairs.

In cases of homicide charged against persons enrolled in the military class, the commanding officer of the persons charged therewith shall assist and be present, when the civil magistrate of the district investigates and decides upon the case, of which he only has competent authority to take cognisance. — In all cases of adultery, robbery, frauds, assaults, breach of laws concerning marriage, landed property, or pecuniary contracts, and of any other the like offences, committed by or against individuals in the military class; if any of the people are implicated or concerned, the military commanding officer and the civil magistrate shall have a concurrent jurisdiction; if not, the military officer in command shall examine and decide the case between the parties, at his own tribunal. — Whenever, in any of the preceding cases, the officers of a military tribunal interpose an undue influence and authority in order to impede the regular progress of judicial proceedings, and to protect the criminals belonging to their particular jurisdiction from merited punishment, the deputies administering in, and the inferior officers belonging to such tribunal, shall each be liable, at the least, to a punishment of 50 blows.

the

This law shall also extend to all military officers who exceed their powers by receiving and acting upon informations belonging of right to the civil jurisdiction.

Seven clauses.

SECTION CCCXLII. — Informations and Prosecutions on the Part of Officers of Government.

All officers of government of every description, including those having official situations without rank, when interested in any private causes respecting marriage, pecuniary contracts, debts, or the division of landed property, shall, instead of prosecuting or defending their suits personally, appoint a servant or other person belonging to their family to perform that service; and at the same time refrain from interposing their influence and authority by any official communication on the subject with the magistrates who have the cognizance of the affair.

40 Blows shall be the punishment of any breach of this law.

No clause.

SECTION CCCXLIII. — False Accusation of Offences punishable with extraordinary Banishment.

All persons falsely accusing others of offences punishable with any kind of extraordinary perpetual banishment, shall suffer banishment of the same kind and in the same degree: all officers of government pronouncing an unjust sentence of extraordinary perpetual banishment, shall be liable to the same punishment as provided in cases of an unjust sentence of ordinary perpetual banishment.

In the case of a false accusation of an offence punishable with the remote or extraordinary temporary banishment, it shall be estimated as two years banishment, and the punishment of the false accuser increased thereon, either three degrees or otherwise, according to the circumstances.

No clause.

END OF THE FIFTH BOOK OF THE SIXTH DIVISION.

B O O K VI.

BRIBERY AND CORRUPTION*.

SECTION CCCXLIV. — Accepting a Bribe.

ALL civil and military officers, and also all persons who have employments without rank under government, shall, when convicted of accepting a bribe for a lawful or for an unlawful purpose, be punished in proportion to the amount thereof, as stated in the subjoined table; and moreover be deprived of their rank and offices, if having any; and if not, of their actual employments whatever they may be. — Those who are not in the receipt of any salary, or of a salary not amounting to one stone of rice † per month in value, shall be punished less severely, in every case, by one degree.

* How far the various and seemingly appropriate provisions contained in this book of the code, against bribery in almost every shape which it can be supposed to assume, are reconcilable with the systematic corruption which, under the less odious name of presents, must be acknowledged to be but too prevalent in the various departments of the administration of public affairs and public justice in China, it is not easy to determine. — That flagrant acts, at least, of bribery do not always escape unpunished, appears from a note in the original Chinese, inserted in this place, and containing an abridgement of the official report of the trial of a governor of a city in the province of Peking; who, in the 33d year of the Emperor Kien-lung, appears to have accepted a bribe of 7000 ounces of silver, which had been offered him as an inducement to stop certain proceedings in a case of disorderly conduct and contempt of court; but afterwards to have returned the money, on finding himself unable to accomplish the object for which it was given: — yet, at the close of a detailed investigation of the case, it is stated that he was finally sentenced to suffer death for his original acceptance of the bribe, by being strangled at the usual season.

† Supposed to be 120 kin or 160 pounds British weight.

Those who negotiate, and through whose hands the bribe passes, if they are persons of the former class, shall be punished one degree less, and if of the latter class, two degrees less than the receiver; but, to which ever class they belong, they shall not be liable in any case to a greater punishment than 100 blows and two years banishment; if participating themselves in the bribe, they shall either suffer the punishment incurred by receiving a bribe themselves, or the punishment of negotiating one for another, according as the one or the other is found, by a computation of the amount in each case, and a regard to the circumstances, to be the most severe.

When the object for which the bribe is received is unlawful, all the sums received by the offender from different persons, but charged against him at the same time, and in the same information, shall be added together and estimated as one bribe; and if, after punishment is inflicted, another instance of bribery is discovered, that offence, whether greater or less than the former, shall likewise entail a punishment proportionate to its amount.

When, on the contrary, the object for which the bribe is received is in itself lawful, though unlawfully sought after, all the sums received, and charged in the same information, shall be added together as in the former case, but only half the aggregate shall be referred to the scale of punishments in the annexed table, for bribes for purposes which in themselves are lawful.

TABLE

TABLE of Reference in cases of regular Officers of Government being guilty of receiving Bribes.

When the Object is in itself lawful.

Amount received.	Punishment.
Value in Ounces of Silver.	Blows.	Banishment.
1 or less -	60	none.
1 to 12 -	70	none.
20 -	80	none.
30 -	90	none.
40 -	100	none.
50 -	60	for one year.
60 -	70	for one year and half.
70 -	80	for two years.
80 -	90	for two years and a half.
90 -	100	for three years.
100 -	100	for life, distance 2000 lee .
110 -	100	for life, distance 2500 lee .
120 -	100	for life, distance 3000 lee .
Upwards of 120		Death, by being strangled at the usual period.

When the Object is unlawful.

Amount received.	Punishment.
Value in Ounces of Silver.	Blows.	Banishment.
1 or less -	70	none.
1 to 10 -	80	none.
10 -	90	none.
15 -	100	none.
20 -	60	for one year.
25 -	70	for one year and a half.
30 -	80	for two years.
35 -	90	for two years and a half.
40 -	100	for three years.
45 -	100	for life, distance 2000 lee .
50 -	100	for life, distance 2500 lee .
55 -	100	for life, distance 3000 lee .
80 and upwards.		Death, by being strangled at the usual period.

Persons

Persons who are not in the receipt of what is considered a regular salary from government, shall, when guilty of accepting a bribe for an unlawful object, be subject only to the punishment proportionally reduced one degree, below that already stated; but shall be punished with death, by being strangled at the usual period, when the amount of the bribe which they are found guilty of having accepted, exceeds in any degree 120 ounces.

In the case of a bribe being accepted to a similar extent, for a lawful object, the punishment of persons guilty thereof under those circumstances, shall never exceed 100 blows, and perpetual banishment to the distance of 3000 lee.

Fourteen clauses.

SECTION CCCXLV. — Pecuniary Malversation.

When any officers of government, or other persons, whatever may be their denomination, are guilty of receiving, appropriating, or expending any sum or sums unwarrantably, if the offence does not come under the description of a bribe to do any specific act, lawful or unlawful, the different sums received, appropriated, or expended unwarrantably, and charged against an offender at any one time, shall be added together, and half of the aggregate shall be the estimated amount of the unwarrantable transaction; according to which the offender shall receive punishment, as stated in the following table; but if the amount was not in any manner applied by the offender to his own benefit and advantage, he shall not lose his rank or employments. — The person who presented any sum which was thus unwarrantably received and disposed of, shall be punished five degrees less than the receiver.

TABLE

TABLE of Reference.

Amount in Ounces of Silver.	Punishment.
	Blows.	Banishment.
less than 1	20	none.
1 to 10	30	none.
20	40	none.
30	50	none.
40	60	none.
50	70	none.
60	80	none.
70	90	none.
80	100	none.
100	60	for one year.
200	70	for a year and a half.
300	80	for two years.
400	90	for two years and a half.
500 and upwards	100	for three years.

The provisions of this law are designed to comprehend every species of pecuniary over-charge, in cases of blows, theft, and the like injuries; presents of all kinds, made to civil and military officers upon taking charge of their governments, eatables only excepted; exaction of more than the just and due proportion of revenue, or (in an unfavourable season) of more than the people are fairly able to contribute; unnecessary and extravagant expenditure of public money, and of the labour of the people, although not conducive to the advantage or emolument of the offender. — If, in any case, the giver or receiver is implicated in any other manner by the transaction, his punishment shall always be measured and inflicted in conformity to the law, applicable to the greater and more severely punishable offence of which he may be found guilty.

No clause.

SECTION CCCXLVI. — Receiving Money corruptly by way of Reward.

All officers of government, and others having official employments, who, although not bribed in the first instance, afterwards receive sums by way of reward for any transaction in their official capacity, shall, if there had been any thing unlawful in such transaction, be punished in the same manner as in a case of bribery to do an unlawful act; but if the transaction had been in itself lawful, then the receipt of a reward for it shall be punished, as the receipt of a bribe to the same amount for the subsequent performance of any act in itself lawful.

The same distinction shall be made as heretofore, between persons with and without regular salaries, and they shall, in both cases, lose their rank and employments; but the honorary distinctions which had been allowed by the Emperor shall not be taken away from their families.

The punishment of officers of government having high judicial and ministerial situations, shall be two degrees more severe than that of ordinary officers, in this, as well as in the other cases.

No clause.

SECTION CCCXLVII. — Contracting for, and agreeing to accept a Bribe.

All officers of government, and other persons having official employments, contracting for, or agreeing to accept a bribe to do any lawful or unlawful act, but not having actually received the same, shall, upon competent evidence being had of the agreement, and the amount stipulated for, be punished according to the law provided against receiving a bribe for a lawful or an unlawful act, rejecting the capital cases, and further reducing the punishment in each case one degree: the consequence thereof will be, that the punishment of this offence offence will not, in any case, exceed 100 blows and three years banishment.

Nevertheless, if the unlawful act be in itself an offence subject by any other law to a more severe punishment than that incurred by the mere stipulation for the bribe, the former punishment shall be inflicted instead of the latter.

One clause.

SECTION CCCXLVIII.—Offering a Bribe.

If an individual of any description whatever, having an affair to submit to the decision of an officer of government, endeavours, by the offer of a bribe, to prevail on him to deviate from the law, he shall be punished in proportion to the amount, according to the law concerning pecuniary malversation in general; but if the attempt to procure the commission of such unlawful act, whether with a view to obtain an advantage, or to avoid an evil, is by law more severely punishable than the offer of a bribe, the punishment shall be estimated according to the former offence, instead of the latter.—Nevertheless, if the officers of government, and others, having official situations, vexatiously and violently extort money as a bribe, which, in the first instance, had not been offered to them, the persons complying and giving what was required shall not be punished.

In all cases, the amount of the bribe offered or received shall be forfeited to government.

One clause.

SECTION CCCXLIX. — Extortion of Loans, and unfair Sales.

When any superintending officers of government, or any other persons in official situations, avail themselves of the influence of their authority, or any private individuals, of their personal strength and resources, and by means thereof extort loans of the goods or money of the inhabitants of their districts, they shall be punished proportionately to the estimated value of the goods or money borrowed, according to the law against bribery to do an act which is in itself lawful; but when actual force and violence is used, the offenders shall be punished proportionately to the amount, according to the law against bribery for unlawful purposes. — In each case, the punishment of persons without salaries shall be less by one degree. — The articles borrowed shall be restored without reserve or delay, to the owners.

When persons in authority as aforesaid, lend their own money or goods to the inhabitants of their districts upon exorbitant interest, or buy or sell goods upon an unfair valuation, the unlawful advantage accruing from such transactions, whether by excess of interest, or buying at a lower rate, and selling at an higher rate, than the market allows, shall be estimated, and the offender punished as in the cases of bribery for a lawful object; but if the influence exerted amounted to compulsion, the punishment shall be rated as in cases of bribery for unlawful objects.

The articles lent or sold by the offenders shall be forfeited to government, and the articles borrowed or bought by them shall be restored to the owners.

If persons in authority do not, when purchasing articles from the inhabitants of their district, immediately pay the price thereof; or if they borrow from them, clothes, table or house furniture, and the like, without returning the same within one month, they shall suffer punish-punishment proportionately to the amount, according to the law concerning pecuniary malversation; that is to say, corrupt transactions without direct bribery; and in all cases the goods delivered shall be immediately restored to the owners. — The same persons, when convicted of privately borrowing from the people, their horses, horned cattle, camels, mules, asses, carriages, boats, mills, houses or barns, and the like, shall be liable to the punishment of the law against pecuniary malversation, according to the estimated amount of the hire of such articles during the time that they were retained; which estimate shall, however, in no case, exceed the actual value of the articles.

The aforesaid persons, when guilty of accepting at any time, from the inhabitants of their district, presents consisting of the produce or manufacture thereof, shall be punished, at the least, with 40 blows, and the giver shall suffer punishment less than the receiver only by one degree. — If such presents are made and accepted with a view to any future and specific official transaction on the part of the receiver, whether a lawful or an unlawful one, punishment shall be inflicted as in the ordinary cases of bribery for similar purposes, already stated.

Nevertheless, all presents of eatables to such persons, when upon any official progress, and presents of all kinds, when made to them by their relations, on particular occasions, shall be excepted from the prohibitions and penalties of this law. — All persons, lastly, who when detached or sent upon government service, as messengers, or otherwise, on such occasions extort loans, buy or sell unfairly, or receive presents, shall be liable to the same punishments as are above provided in the cases of superintending officers, or others having official situations under government.

When abdicated or superfeded officers of government are guilty of extorting loans, receiving bribes, and the like, from the inhabitants of the districts formerly under their jurisdiction, they shall suffer a punishment less severe by three degrees than that which they would, under similar circumstances, have incurred, had they been still in office.

Eight clauses.

SECTION CCCL. — Extortion and other Corrupt Practices of Persons in the Families of Officers of Government.

All persons belonging to the family of an officer of government, or of any individual having official employment under government, whether brothers, sons, nephews, slaves, or servants, shall, when guilty of extorting loans, receiving presents, unfairly trading, or otherwise unlawfully acting towards the inhabitants of the district or station in which their relation or master has a jurisdiction, suffer punishment less by two degrees than the master of the family would have incurred under similar circumstances; but in the case of receiving a bribe for any specific object, they shall be punished as the case may be, without any reduction, according to the different rules established in ordinary cases of bribery for lawful, and bribery for unlawful purposes.

The master of the family, if privy to the offence committed by the person belonging thereto, shall be punished in an equal degree; but if ignorant thereof, shall be excused.

One clause.

SECTION CCCLI. — Extortion and other Corrupt practices of Great Officers of State.

All such officers of government as are invested with judicial or ministerial situations, rendering them superior in rank and jurisdiction tion to the governors of the cities of the first order, shall, when guilty of any corrupt transactions with the inhabitants of the country subject to their authority or influence, whether by receiving bribes or presents, extorting loans, buying or selling unfairly, or committing any other similar offences, be punished two degrees more severely than any inferior officers of government would have been under similar circumstances; except that such augmentation of punishment shall not take place in capital cases, or render any punishment capital that would not have been so otherwise.

No clause.

SECTION CCCLII. — Levying extraordinary Contributions on the Plea of public Service.

If any civil magistrate of a district, levies personally, or through the intervention of persons in his employ, extraordinary contributions from the people, on the plea of public service, without any express orders or authority from a superior officer for that purpose; or if any military officer attempts in any case to levy similar contributions on the people, upon the plea of paying the troops, he shall, in each case, suffer at the least, the punishment of 60 blows, although the contributions exacted should not have been applied to any corrupt or private purpose; and if the sum levied is considerable, it shall be estimated, and punishment inflicted in proportion to the amount according to the law against pecuniary malversation in general:— But if the sums contributed are converted by the receiver or collector to his own use, punishment shall be inflicted conformably to the law against bribery for unlawful purposes.

If, on the other hand, any such contributions are raised without expressly alleging the false plea of public service; then, although the amount amount should be appropriated by the offender to his own use, the punishment shall only be rated according to the law against bribery for purposes in themselves lawful.

In these cases it shall not be considered as making any difference in the nature of the offence, whether the offender applies the sum contributed to his own use, or distributes the same in presents to others.

Two clauses.

SECTION CCCLIII. — Suppressing the Discovery of Stolen Goods.

When the police officers who are, by the authority of the superior magistrates, engaged in the pursuit and apprehension of criminals, recover any stolen or plundered effects, if they do not deliver up the same forthwith to government, they shall be punished with 80 blows; and if they appropriate the articles or sums of money so obtained, to their own use, they shall be further liable to the punishment of bribery for lawful objects, in proportion to the amount.

Upon estimating the guilt of the thief or robber, the plunder previously surrendered to government, shall be added to whatever had been subsequently recovered, but unlawfully retained by the officers of government; and if in consequence of such retention, an insufficient punishment had been inflicted on the offender, the remainder shall be executed afterwards.

In the case of ordinary soldiers and thief-takers offending against this law, the punishment, shall not, in any instance, exceed 80 blows.

One clause.

SECTION CCCLIV. — Receiving Presents from the Higher Hereditary Nobility *.

All military officers of government, whether stationed at court or in the provinces, are prohibited from receiving presents of gold, silver, silk-stuffs, clothes, wages, or board-wages, from individuals in any of the three principal ranks of hereditary nobility; upon any breach of this law they shall be deprived of their rank and employments, suffer the punishment of 100 blows, and be sent into the more remote perpetual banishment; for the second offence they shall suffer death.

The nobleman making the present shall be excused for the first and second offence; but upon the third offence, he shall be accused in due form, and the nature and degree of his punishment referred to the decision of the Emperor. — Nevertheless, when a nobleman of the rank above mentioned is invested by His Majesty with special powers to administer any department of the public service, and with a view to promote the execution thereof, makes presents, or allows wages to the civil or military authorities belonging to such department, neither the giver nor the receiver shall be liable to any punishment in consequence thereof.

No clause.

* The hereditary nobles alluded to, are, for the most part, Tartar chieftains, who altho' reduced to vassalage, may be supposed to be desirous of acquiring, by the means here described, a certain degree of power and influence in the state, independent of the crown, and therefore dangerous to the Imperial prerogative.

B O O K VII.

FORGERIES AND FRAUDS.

SECTION CCCLV. — Falsification of an Imperial Edict.

ALL the principals and accessaries to the crime of falsifying an Imperial edict ; that is to say, pretending any document to be an Imperial edict which is not one, or adding to, or subtracting from a real one, shall, in the event of such falsified document having been actually published and sent forth, be beheaded at the usual period ; but if the same is only found prepared and ready for publication, the principal offender shall be strangled at the usual period, and the accessaries punished less severely by one degree. In either case the crime shall always be imputed to the framer or contriver, and not to the mere transcriber.

All persons who are guilty of an error or omission in engrossing an Imperial edict, shall be punished with 100 blows, and the accessaries thereto with 90 blows.

All persons guilty of the falsification of an edict of any one of the six supreme boards or councils of state, of the board of censors, of any of the commanders in chief of the Imperial armies, of the viceroys, sub-viceroys, or generals of provinces, or of the governors of any important frontier towns, whether by the forgery of the requisite marks and signatures, by the privately affixing of the official seal to a false document or to a blank paper, or by any other contrivance adequate to the said criminal purpose, shall, if such false document should should have been actually sent forth and published as a real one, be strangled at the usual period, without any distinction being made between the principals and the accessaries; but if the falsified document was only prepared for publication, the punishment of the principal offender shall be one degree less, and that of the accessaries, two degrees less, than it would have been, had the said document been actually published.

The principal in the offence of falsifying an edict of any of the other important but subordinate public boards, such as the subordinate board of censors, that of the judges, and of the treasurers of provinces, and those of the governors of cities of the first, second, and third rank, shall be punished with 100 blows, and perpetual banishment to the distance of 3000 lee.

The principal offender in the falsification of the edict of any still lower public officer or public board, shall be punished with 100 blows and three years banishment; the accessaries thereto, one degree less, and there shall be a further reduction of one degree in both cases, if the false document was only prepared for publication, instead of being actually published.

In every case, if the falsification of an official document is contrived and executed with any unlawful and corrupt motive, such as is punishable by law more severely than the mere crime of falsification, the punishment so incurred shall be inflicted in preference to that by this law provided.

If the officer of government to whom any of the aforesaid pretended edicts are addressed, receives and acts upon the same, knowing them to be forged, he shall suffer the same punishment as the falsifier, with the exception only of one degree in capital cases: but if ignorant of the forgery, such officer shall be excused.

Three clauses.

SECTION CCCLVI. — Falsification of Verbal Orders.

All persons who are guilty of delivering falsely any verbal orders of his Imperial Majesty, shall, if principals in the offence, be beheaded at the usual period; and if accessaries thereto, shall be punished with 100 blows and perpetual banishment to the distance of 3000 lee.

In like manner, those who are guilty of falsely delivering any verbal orders of the Empress or of the hereditary prince, shall, if principals in the offence, be strangled at the usual period, and if accessaries, punished with 100 blows and perpetual banishment to the distance of 3000 lee.

All persons who, under the influence of a corrupt motive, falsely deliver the verbal orders of an officer of a public board or tribunal of government of the first or second rank, shall, if such orders had been issued upon the public service, in behalf of the public board, and for the information and guidance of the officers of subordinate jurisdictions, be punished with 100 blows and three years banishment. — In the case of falsely delivering, likewise under the influence of a corrupt motive, the verbal orders of any officer of a tribunal of the third or fourth rank under the same circumstances, the punishment shall amount to 100 blows; and if of any officer of an inferior tribunal, to 80 blows; in each of these cases, the punishment of the accessaries shall be proportionably less by one degree.

If the offender had been bribed in any case to falsify the verbal orders entrusted to him to communicate, the amount of the bribe received shall be ascertained, and the offender made liable to the punishment of bribery with a lawful, or bribery with an unlawful object, according as the falsification of the orders had been designed to effect a lawful or an unlawful purpose.

In

In all cases, the most severe of the two or more punishments to which, from the application of different laws, the offender may be liable, shall be inflicted, and by including, supersede the others.

The punishments provided by this law, shall only be understood to affect the original false-deliverer or falsifier of the orders, and not be applied to any of the cases of subsequent false deliveries of the orders, through intermediate and innocent persons.

If the officer of government to whom any falsified verbal orders are officially addressed, receives and acts upon the same, knowing them to be false, he shall be liable to the same punishment as the person uttering the falsehood, with the usual exception only of a reduction of one degree in capital cases:— But if really ignorant of the falsehood thereof, he shall be excused.— If any of the officers of tribunals engaged in the trial of offenders, or in the collection of the revenue, after having received the Imperial commands to desist from the same in any particular instance, nevertheless continue such proceedings on pretence of acting as before under the Imperial authority, they shall conformably to the principle of this law, be beheaded at the usual period.

No clause.

SECTION CCCLVII. — Falsely and Deceitfully addressing the Sovereign.

If any individual makes a false and deceitful communication to the sovereign, either verbally or in writing, either in an ordinary address concerning the affairs of a particular department, or in an extraordinary one concerning public affairs in general, such individual shall be punished with 100 blows and three years banishment:— if in such address secrets of state, such as treason or rebellion, are alleged in cases where they do not exist, the punishment shall be more severe by one degree.

If any one, when engaged in a criminal investigation, or other judicial proceedings in obedience to the Imperial commands, makes a false and deceitful report thereof, he shall be punished with 80 blows and two years banishment, or as much more severely as he may appear to deserve, according to the law against an intentional deviation from justice, in pronouncing a judicial sentence.

No clause.

SECTION CCCLVIII. — Counterfeiting any Official Seal or the Imperial Almanac.

Whoever counterfeits the official seal of any officer or tribunal of government, the Imperial almanac, or the stamps which are used to authenticate the land or water permits which it is usual to issue for the conveyance of tea or salt through the empire, shall, if a principal in the crime of engraving such counterfeits, be beheaded at the usual period; and if an accessory, punished with 100 blows and perpetual banishment to the distance of 3000 lee.

Whoever seizes and delivers up such an offender to the officers of justice, shall be rewarded by government with fifty ounces of silver.

Whoever counterfeits custom-house stamps, or the official seals of persons not having the rank of regular officers of government, shall be punished with 100 blows and three years banishment; and any person who seizes and delivers up such an offender, shall be rewarded with thirty ounces of silver.

All the accessories to their offences, as well as also all those who make use of such seals or stamps knowing them to be counterfeit, shall suffer the punishment next in degree.

If

If the counterfeiting of any seal is attempted, but not completed or perfected, the punishment for such an attempt shall in each case, be further reduced one degree. — All officers of government likewise, who knowingly acquiesce in and connive at such counterfeiting, or employment of counterfeits, shall suffer the same punishment as the original offenders, but the acquiescence of those who were ignorant of the fraud shall always be excused.

As the ancient characters, and all other marks whatever, which are used in, and which distinguish official seals and stamps, may be imitated upon divers materials besides the metals of which the genuine seals or stamps are composed, it shall be sufficient that the counterfeit resemble the original with apparent exactness, and that the legend thereon be the same; but if it be only a gross imitation, and the characters are not identically the same, it shall be considered as an attempt only, and the offender punished accordingly: — if no stamp at all is employed, but the characters and marks are merely drawn upon the paper, so as to resemble the impression of a seal, the offence shall not be considered to come within the meaning and intent of this law.

Four clauses.

SECTION CCCLIX. — Counterfeiting the current Coin of the Realm.

All persons who privately cast copper coin, that is to say, all the masters of private manufactories of copper coin, and the workmen employed therein, shall suffer death by being strangled, at the usual period: — Whoever is an accessory to this offence, and whoever purchases for use such copper coin, knowing it to be counterfeited, shall suffer the punishment of the principal offenders, reduced one degree. — Whoever seizes and delivers up any such aforesaid coiner, shall be rewarded with fifty ounces of silver by government. — If the responsible inhabitant of the village or district, in which such unlawful manufacture facture and coinage is carried on, is acquainted therewith, and does not give information to government, he shall be punished with 100 blows ; but if ignorant thereof, he shall be excused.

All those also who take an opportunity of clipping or filing down the current coin of the realm when it passes through their hands, in order to make a profit thereby, shall in like manner be punished with 100 blows.— Those moreover who contrive mixtures of copper, iron, quicksilver, and the like, in order to imitate and counterfeit gold or silver, shall be punished with 100 blows, and three years banishment : all accessaries to the offence, and those who purchase such imitations of gold or silver, in order to pass the same in trade, knowing them not to be genuine, shall suffer the punishment of the contrivers thereof, reduced one degree.

Those however who merely sell gold or silver below the standard weight or color, shall not, in consequence, be held liable to any of the penalties of this law.

Five clauses.

SECTION CCCLX. — Impostors pretending to be Officers of Government.

Whoever contrives a false deed or instrument of investiture, and therewith represents himself to be an officer of government ; and whoever, having contrived such false deed, or obtained the genuine one of any officer deceased, pretends to invest any person therewith, shall suffer death, by being beheaded at the usual period.

The individual who accepts of such a deed of investiture, knowing it not to be genuine, shall be punished with 100 blows, and perpetual banishment to the distance of 3000 lee ; but if ignorant of the forgery, he shall be excused.

If any private individual, although not pretending to any such investiture as aforesaid, yet assumes the character of an officer of government, ment in order to accomplish a particular purpose, or if he falsely pretends to have the authority of any officer or tribunal of government to arrest some person; or, lastly, if he assumes the family name, and proper name, of any person actually in office, in order to accomplish a particular purpose under such assumed character, he shall in each case be liable to 100 blows, and three years banishment.

Whoever imposes himself on others as the son, grandson, brother, nephew, servant, or authorized agent of any person in office, in order to carry any particular point with the inhabitants under the jurisdiction of such officer, by the influence of an assumed character, shall receive 100 blows, and the accessories to the deception, 90 blows.

If the person guilty as aforesaid, should obtain or extort any money or goods from different individuals by means of his assumed character, the largest of the sums so received from any one person shall be estimated, and referred to the table of punishments proportionate to any amount of a theft in ordinary cases; the punishment which results conformably to the table (the branding excepted) shall be inflicted, instead of that already stated, whenever it proves, by comparison, the most severe. — All officers of government, who connive at, and concur in such impostures, shall be punished as impostors themselves (capital cases only excepted), but if ignorant thereof, shall be excused.

Eight clauses.

SECTION CCCLXI. — Impostors pretending to be Great Officers of State.

If any person falsely imposes himself on the officers of government and the other inhabitants of any of the provinces, as a great officer of state dispatched from court with extraordinary powers, or as a member of one of the six supreme tribunals or councils of state, of the tribunal of censors, or of any of the other principal boards

or

or tribunals at Peking; and upon the strength of such falsely assumed authority, investigates the provincial affairs, deceives the provincial government, and influences in a dangerous manner the minds of the people, he shall be beheaded at the usual period, even although he should not have actually provided himself with any forged instrument of investiture.

Those who concur in, and connive at such deception, and form a part of the suite of the impostor, and also those officers of government who receive and countenance the impostor, knowing him to be such, shall in each case be punished with 100 blows, and perpetual banishment to the distance of 3000 lee: — But if the latter persons have really been deceived themselves, they shall be excused.

If any person, even without producing any forged or pretended powers, falsely asserts himself to be an officer of government dispatched from court on public service, and upon that plea, employs the post-horses and other travelling equipage provided at different stations by the authority and for the use of government, he shall in such case be punished with 100 blows, and perpetual banishment to the distance of 3000 lee: — All accessories to the offence shall suffer the punishment next in degree. — Those officers of the public posts, who, although aware of the imposition, nevertheless provide what is demanded, shall suffer the same punishment; and although ignorant thereof, shall still suffer 50 blows as a punishment for their neglecting to make a proper investigation and inquiry. — When, however, the impostor produces apparently authentic powers, they shall be excused.

Two clauses.

SECTION CCCLXII. — Officers of State, and others belonging to the Court, interfering without Authority.

If any one of the officers of government attached to the court, and employed near the person of the sovereign, proceeds privately to investigate state affairs in any part of the empire, pretending to have especial authority for that purpose; and thereby in a dangerous manner influences and agitates the minds of the people, he shall be beheaded at the usual period.

No clause.

SECTION CCCLXIII. — Pretending to discover Prognostics.

Whoever falsely asserts that he has discovered prognostics in the Heavens, shall be punished with 60 blows and one year's banishment; but whenever there are really any omens of a calamity, if the officers of the astronomical board fail to give a true and faithful notice thereof, they shall suffer a punishment two degrees more severe than that last mentioned.

No clause.

SECTION CCCLXIV. — Pretending Sickness or Death.

If any regular officer of government, any person employed by government in an inferior station, or any private individual, falsely alleges sickness or infirmity, as an excuse for not performing the more difficult parts of his duty, such as the collection of the revenue, and the pursuit and seizure of criminals, he shall be punished with 40 blows; and if the case is important, with 80 blows. — If any officer of government, or other person, who has been guilty of any offences against the laws, in the interim previous to the examination, wounds, or otherwise disables himself, in order to become entitled to an exemption from the question by torture, he shall be punished with 100 blows for such conduct; and if he further feigns death, in order to avoid dismissal and disgrace, he shall be punishable with 100 blows and three years banishment.

In either case, if the offence, the investigation of which the offender endeavours to avoid, is more severely punishable; such punishment shall take place instead of that hereby ordained and provided.

If any officer of government, or other person, without having in view to evade any duty, or any impending investigation into his conduct, but merely in order to alarm and implicate others, wounds and disables himself, or procures himself to be wounded and disabled in the manner aforesaid, he shall be punished with 80 blows; and in every case of a person being hired or employed to inflict such wound, and thereby occasioning disability, such person shall suffer the same punishment. — If death ensues from such wounding, the person so hired or employed, shall suffer punishment one degree less severely than in cases of killing in an affray.

If any officer of government having authority to interfere in such cases, instead of so doing, advisedly connives at the deceptions practiced by the officer or other person who is subordinate to him; either by suffering such person to retire upon a false plea of indisposition, to evade the question by torture on the plea of his purposely acquired disability and infirmity, or to withdraw himself altogether from further examination and punishment, by feigning death; the officer so conniving, shall be equally punished with the person whose offence is connived at; but if really ignorant in any particular instance of the falsehood of the pretence, his acquiescence shall be excused.

Two clauses.

SECTION CCCLXV. — Seducing Persons to transgress the Laws.

All descriptions of persons who, having with fallacious words or arts seduced and instructed any individual to transgress the laws, or who, having prevailed on any individual to combine with them for any unlawful and criminal purpose, afterwards become informers, and seize, or direct others to seize and inform against, such offending individual, whether doing so with a view to injure the party so seduced and misled, or merely with a view to the profit or reward expected to accrue from his apprehension, shall be held equally guilty, and liable to the same punishment as the offender, in all cases except those of capital offences; in which the usual reduction shall be allowed of one degree.

Four clauses.

END OF THE SEVENTH BOOK OF THE SIXTH DIVISION.

B O O K VIII.

INCEST AND ADULTERY.

SECTION CCCLXVI. — Criminal Intercourse in general.

CRIMINAL intercourse by mutual consent with an unmarried woman, shall be punished with 70 blows; if with a married woman, the punishment shall be 80 blows.

Deliberate intrigue with a married or unmarried woman shall be punished with 100 blows.

Violation of a married or unmarried woman; that is to say, a rape, shall be punished with death by strangulation.

An assault with an intent to commit a rape, shall be punished with 100 blows, and perpetual banishment to the distance of 3000 lee. — In these cases however, the conviction of the offenders must be founded on decisive evidence of force having really been employed.

Criminal intercourse with a female under twelve years of age, shall be punished as a rape in all cases.

In cases of criminal intercourse by previous agreement, or by any intrigue, the man and woman shall be esteemed equally guilty; and if any male or female child be the fruit of such connexion, it shall be supported at the expence of the father; the mother shall either be sold in marriage or remain with her husband, according to his choice; but if the husband is guilty of selling his wife in marriage to the adulterer, the parties to such an illicit agreement shall be respectively punished with 80 blows; the woman shall be sent back to her family, and the price paid for her, forfeited to government. — The woman upon whom a rape is committed shall not be liable to any punishment.

Persons

Persons aiding and assisting, or conniving at the meeting of the parties guilty of a criminal intercourse as aforesaid, shall suffer the punishment next in degree, as usual in the case of accessaries.

Persons discovering a criminal intercourse, and afterwards submitting to a compromise, by which the same is concealed, shall suffer the punishment due to the offenders, reduced two degrees.

A person charged with a criminal connexion, shall not be convicted unless positively proved to have been on the spot, where the fact was stated to have taken place.

When, however, a woman is found with child, she shall be liable to the penalties of this law, though the father should not be discoverable.

Twelve clauses.*

SECTION CCCLXVII. — Conniving at, or consenting to a Criminal Intercourse.

In all cases of a husband consenting to, or conniving at, the adultery of the principal or any other of his wives, the husband, the adulterer, and the adulteress, shall each be punished with 90 blows. X

Any individual compelling his principal or inferior wife, or any female educated under his roof as an adopted daughter, to engage in a criminal intercourse, shall be punished with 100 blows, and the adulterer or fornicator shall be punished with 80 blows; but the woman shall be considered innocent, and sent back to her parents or family. X

Any person who consents to, or connives at the compulsion of his wives or adopted daughters in the manner aforesaid, or who compels X

* The clauses annexed to this law contain an application of it, which, though necessary to be stated, is very properly perhaps, reserved for the supplement. — For a translation of three of these clauses see the Appendix, No. XXXII.

his

his own daughters, or the wives of his sons or grandsons, to engage in a criminal intercourse, shall be punished as above stated.

Any person who parts with his wife and transfers her to another for a pecuniary consideration, shall, as well as also the purchaser, and the wife, if consenting to the transfer, undergo the punishment of 100 blows, and the wife shall be sent back to her family. — The money paid for the transaction shall be forfeited to government.

If the wife and the person proposing the purchase, shall have combined together to oblige the husband to consent to a separation from her, and no corrupt motive be imputable to him in the transaction, he shall not be punished; but the wife, and the person whom she proposes to herself as a husband, shall be respectively condemned to suffer 60 blows, and one year's banishment: the banishment, in the case of the woman, shall be commuted for a fine, and she shall either remain in her first condition, or be sold in marriage, at the choice of the first husband.

If the case relates to any other wife except the first, the punishment of the parties shall be reduced in every instance one degree.

Persons aiding, assisting, or negotiating in the business, shall be punished one degree less severely than the principals.

When the husband discovers the wife to have committed adultery, and sells her in marriage to the adulterer, he shall be punished with 100 blows; the other parties, as already stated.

No clause.

SECTION CCCLXVIII. — Incest; or Criminal Intercourse between Relations.

A criminal intercourse between relations more remote than the fourth degree, or with the wives of such remote relations, shall be punished with 100 blows: — if a rape is committed, the offender shall be beheaded.

A crimi-

A criminal intercourse with relations in the fourth degree; with a wife's former husband's daughters, or with sisters by the same mother, but by different fathers, shall be punished with 100 blows and three years banishment.

When in such cases a rape is committed, the offenders shall be beheaded.

A criminal intercourse with a grandmother's sisters, cousins by the father's side, the wives of brothers or the wives of nephews, shall be punished with death by being strangled immediately upon conviction.— If a rape is committed, the party offending shall be beheaded.

A criminal intercourse with a father's or grandfather's inferior wife, with a father's sisters, or father's brother's wives, or the wife of a son or grandson, shall be punished with death, by being beheaded immediately upon conviction.

In general in the cases of inferior wives, the punishment shall be reduced one degree, unless otherwise provided.

Nine clauses.

SECTION CCCLXIX.— Accusing an Elder Relation of Adultery.

When a wife falsely accuses her father-in-law or her elder brother-in-law, of having obliged her to consent to an incestuous intercourse, she shall suffer death by being beheaded.

No clause.

SECTION CCCLXX.— Criminal Intercourse between Slaves or Servants, and their Master's Wives.

All slaves or hired servants who have been guilty of a criminal intercourse with their master's wives or daughters, shall be beheaded imme-

immediately after conviction: when guilty of a criminal intercourse with their master's female relations in the first degree, or with the wives of the male relations of their masters in the same degree, they shall be strangled after remaining in prison the usual period. In the above cases, the punishment of the woman, if consenting, shall be less, only by one degree. When guilty of a criminal intercourse with their master's more distant female relations, or with the wives of his more distant male relations, they shall be punished with 100 blows, and perpetual banishment to the distance of 2000 lee.

If guilty of committing a rape upon the latter persons, they shall be beheaded after remaining in prison the usual period: except in the cases of rape, the punishment of a criminal intercourse with any of the inferior wives, shall, generally speaking, be less than in the case of principal wives by one degree.

Three clauses.

SECTION CCCLXXI. — Criminal Intercourse between Officers of Government and Females under their Jurisdiction.

In all cases of civil or military officers of government and of their official clerks and attendants, being guilty of a criminal intercourse with any the wives or daughters of the inhabitants of the country under their jurisdiction, the punishment shall be two degrees more severe than in ordinary cases between equals; — they shall also be deprived of their offices and employments, and moreover rendered incapable of returning afterwards to the public service.

The woman, if consenting, shall be punished for such consent, only as in ordinary cases.

If such officers, or any of the persons serving under them, are guilty of having a criminal intercourse with a female convict who is under confinement in prison, they shall be punished with 100 blows and three three years banishment: the female convict shall not suffer any aggravation of the punishment to which she had previously been liable: when in such cases violence is offered, the offending party shall be strangled.

Two clauses.

SECTION CCCLXXII. — Criminal Intercourse during the Period of Mourning.

All persons who, during the period allotted to mourning for a parent or husband; or who, being attached to either of the acknowledged sacred orders, in the characters of priests or priestesses, are guilty of any species of criminal intercourse, shall suffer punishment two degrees more severely than in ordinary cases between equals; the other party to any such criminal intercourse shall be punished only in the usual degree.

Two clauses.

SECTION CCCLXXIII. — Criminal Intercourse between Free Persons and Slaves.

A slave who is in any case guilty of a criminal intercourse with the wife or daughter of a freeman, shall be punished, at the least, one degree more severely than a freeman would have been under the same circumstances.

On the contrary, the punishment of a freeman for having criminal intercourse with a female slave, shall be one degree less than in ordinary cases.

When both parties are slaves, the criminal intercourse shall be punished in the same manner as in the case of free persons.

No clause.

SECTION CCCLXXIV. — Officers of Government frequenting the company of Prostitutes and Actresses.

Civil or military officers of government, and the sons of those who possess hereditary rank, when found guilty of frequenting the company of prostitutes and actresses, shall be punished with 60 blows.

All persons who are guilty of negotiating such criminal meetings and intercourse, shall suffer the punishment next in degree.

One clause.

SECTION CCCLXXV. — Strolling Players.

All strolling players who are guilty of purchasing the sons or daughters of free persons, in order to educate them as actors or actresses; or who are guilty of marrying or adopting as children such free persons, shall, in each case, be punished with 100 blows.

All persons who knowingly sell free persons to such strolling players, and all females born of free parents, who voluntarily intermarry with them, shall be punishable in the manner aforesaid.

The person who negotiates the transaction, shall in each case suffer the punishment next in degree; the money paid, shall always be forfeited to government, and the females shall be sent back to their parents or families.

Three clauses.

END OF THE EIGHTH BOOK OF THE SIXTH DIVISION.

B O O K IX.

MISCELLANEOUS OFFENCES.

SECTION CCCLXXVI. — Defacing or Destroying Public Monuments.

ANY person who is guilty of defacing or destroying any of the public monuments and buildings, which have been erected in honour and commemoration of particular individuals and events; and any person who defaces or destroys the inscribed tablets upon, or within the same, shall be punished with 100 blows and perpetual banishment to the distance of 3000 lee; the offender in these cases shall be moreover compelled to repair the damage.

One clause.

SECTION CCCLXXVII. — Care of Soldiers, and of Labourers for the Public, when Sick.

In all civil and military jurisdictions, where there are private soldiers attached to the government stations, or labourers employed in the public works; whenever such persons are suffering under any disease or infirmity, the officer in command shall duly communicate the circumstance to the officer whose province it is to furnish medicines and medical aid to the sick; if he fails to make such communication, or in the event of such communication having been made, if the proper officer does not provide sufficient medical assistance, the individual neglecting his duty shall be liable to the punishment of 40 blows; and this punishment shall be increased to 80 blows, whenever the sick person dies in consequence of such neglect.

No clause.

SECTION CCCLXXVIII. — Gaming.*.

All persons convicted of gaming, that is to say, of playing at any game of chance for money or for goods, shall be punished with 80 blows; and the money or goods staked, shall be forfeited to government.

All those likewise, who keep gaming-houses, shall suffer the same punishment, although not actually joining in the game; and the house appropriated to gaming, whether it is at the same time, the ordinary habitation of the proprietor, or one expressly purchased by him for the said unlawful purpose, shall be forfeited to government. — A conviction however shall not take place under this law, by implication, but only upon direct evidence against the accused parties.

All officers of government offending against this law, shall be punished one degree more severely than other persons; nevertheless, a few friends playing together, for articles of food or drink, shall not, in any case, be punished under this law.

Eighteen clauses.

SECTION CCCLXXIX. — Eunuchs.

No private individual, nor any officer of government, excepting only the princes of the Imperial family, shall presume to educate castrated children, in order to their being employed as eunuchs in their domestic establishments; every breach of this law shall be pu-

* There is probably no vice to which the Chinese are more generally addicted than that of gaming, but it is, generally speaking, the vice of the lower classes: a certain degree of discredit is attached to every game which depends either partly or wholly on chance, and between the sharper and the honourable player the line does not seem to be very distinctly drawn; persons therefore in official situations, or who value themselves upon their reputation, are seldom known to engage in play, even within limits and under circumstances, which might be considered to render it perfectly innocent and allowable.

nished

nished with 100 blows, and perpetual banishment to the distance of 3000 lee: and the castrated children shall be sent back to the families whence they were taken, or to which they belonged*.

Four clauses.

SECTION CCCLXXX.— Making illegal Proposals.

Any regular officer of government, any person having an official employment under government, and any private individual, whatever his description may be, who is guilty of suggesting and recommending to persons in authority an illegal act, whether with a view to his own advantage, or to that of any other person, shall be punished, at the least, with 50 blows. — The officer or person in the employ of government, who assents to such suggestion and recommendation, shall be liable also, at the least, to the same punishment; if the illegal act shall have been carried into effect conformably thereto, his punishment shall be increased to 100 blows; and if the act of injustice thereby suffered or committed, is punishable by the law against an unjust decision more severely than by 100 blows, he shall be punished accordingly.

When the illegal act is suggested and recommended, not upon directly personal considerations, but in favour of a relation, or some other third person, the proposer shall, if the nature of the transaction renders the officer of government, or other person, who complies there-

* The number of eunuchs employed within the precincts of the Imperial palace has ever been considerable; and, from the access they must necessarily have at all times to the sovereign, in the capacity of his domestic servants, it is not improbable, that they may still continue to exert some degree of undue influence: it does not however appear that they are ever likely to enjoy under a Tartar dynasty, that exclusive and dangerous confidence, which, while the government was in the hands of native princes, was sometimes reposed in them.

with,

with, liable to a severer punishment than that of 50 blows already provided, be punished in every such case, according to the rate of three degrees less severely than such officer or person in authority: the former is not supposed, in this case, to exercise any positive influence or controul, and therefore the latter, through the responsibility of his situation, is held to be guilty to a greater extent. In general, however, the punishment of the proposer shall be one degree more severe than that provided according to the reduced rate last mentioned, whenever the illegal act proposed regards his immediate interest.

If any officer of government makes, and strongly urges such illegal proposition to a person who is by his office or situation subordinate to him, the punishment of the former shall be increased beyond that in other cases provided, as far as 100 blows; and shall be subject to further aggravation agreeably to the law concerning an intentional deviation from justice; but in capital cases there shall, nevertheless, be a reduction in favour of the proposer of one degree. — If there should have been any act of bribery involved in the transaction, the punishment arising therefrom, in proportion to the amount, according to the law concerning bribery for unlawful purposes, shall, if the most severe, be inflicted in preference to any other which by this article of the laws has been provided.

In every case of recommendatory propositions, their illegality must entirely depend upon an implied desire and design of deviating from the laws.

If an act of bribery is proved, though committed without any such desire and design, the offenders will be punishable according to the law relative to the offer and acceptance of bribes, for purposes not in themselves unlawful. — If neither any pecuniary or valuable consideration had been given and received, nor the object of the proposition in itself illegal, the transaction must then necessarily be considered as innocent.

If

If any officer, or other person employed by government, disregarding the urgency and influence of his superior, refuses to assent to his illegal proposition, and instead of carrying his wishes into effect, informs against him at a still higher tribunal; such person, if an officer of government, shall be raised a degree of rank, or if not yet a regular officer, shall be raised one degree, as soon as he becomes one.

One clause.

SECTION CCCLXXXI. — Compromising Offences, and withdrawing them from the Cognisance of the Magistrates.

If any person agrees privately to overlook, and thus compromises, any offence against public justice, so that in the end it is illegally withdrawn from the cognisance of the magistrates, he shall be punished only two degrees less severely than the person whose offence was compromised; the punishment of such a compromise shall not however, in any ordinary case, exceed 50 blows.

The act of compromising an offence in cases of life and death, such as that of homicide; and in cases injurious to public morals, such as that of adultery, is punishable by other laws, and therefore the last mentioned limits are not in such cases to be regarded.

No clause.

SECTION CCCLXXXII. — Accidental House-burning.

Any person who accidentally sets fire to his own house, shall, at the least, be punishable with 40 blows; and if such fire should chance to communicate to any other buildings, public or private, the punishment shall be increased to 50 blows. — If such fire should occasion the death death of any person, the punishment of 100 blows shall be inflicted: — In each case, the individual who was the cause of the accident, whether the master of the house, or not, shall be the only person responsible. — If the fire should extend to any of the Imperial temples, or to the gates of the Imperial palace, the individual who was the occasion of such accident, shall suffer death, by being strangled at the usual period. — If it should extend to any of the monuments consecrated to the spirit of the earth, the punishment shall be less by one degree.

Any person who accidentally sets fire to the monumental or other buildings within the precincts of the Imperial cemetery, shall be punished with 80 blows and two years banishment; and if the conflagration extends to the burning of any of the trees within the same, the punishment shall be increased to 100 blows, and perpetual banishment to the distance of 2000 lee.

If any person should accidentally set fire to a government residence, treasury, or store-house, such person shall be punished with 80 blows, and two years banishment; if the superintendant thereof takes the opportunity of fraudulently appropriating to himself any of the property of government, his offence shall be punished, as an act of embezzlement in ordinary cases.

If any of the public buildings aforefaid take fire from without, the person having the custody thereof, shall be liable to a punishment three degrees less severe than that provided in the case of a similar accident originating from within.

All persons lighting fires within government treasuries or store-houses, shall be punished with 80 blows, although no mischief should ensue.

Those also, who are entrusted with the care and superintendance of palaces, treasuries, or store-houses, or who have the custody of criminals, nals, shall, from the moment that a fire is found to have accidentally commenced from within or without, attend diligently at their respective posts, and shall be punished with 100 blows whenever guilty of deserting the same upon such occasions.

Two clauses.

SECTION CCCLXXXIII. — Wilful and malicious House-burning.

Any person who wilfully sets fire to his own house, shall be punished with 100 blows; and if the fire so kindled should communicate, in consequence, to any other building, or to any property stored up for use, public or private, the punishment shall be increased to 100 blows and three years banishment. — If the person guilty of such wilful and malicious burning, should take the opportunity of purloining any goods or property, he shall be beheaded at the usual period; and if such burning should be the cause of the death or severe wounding of any person, the offender shall be punished, at the least, according to the utmost severity of the law concerning intentionally killing or wounding.

All the accessaries, as well as principals, to the crime of wilfully and maliciously setting on fire any residence, either of an officer of government, or of any private individual, their own only excepted, or to the crime of, in the same manner setting fire to any government or private building, treasury, or store-house, in which public or private property of any kind is stored and deposited, shall be punished with death, by being beheaded at the usual period.

To convict such offenders, it is necessary that they should have been taken or discovered on the spot where the fire took place, and that the fact of their having been wilful incendiaries, be proved by the direct testimony of competent witnesses.

The crime of wilfully and maliciously setting fire to empty and uninhabited buildings, or to grain and other property of the like kind,

*to that the greater difference that is put between the accidental, & the wilful Act, amount to 60 Blows! or a wilful Act is,
in criminality, according to Chinese Notions, to an accidental Act.
The Relation of 10 to 1!*

which is stacked and stored up in fields and open places, shall be punished one degree less severely than the crime last mentioned.

All the property of the offenders shall, in such cases, be sequestrated, and charged with the reparation of the loss or damage sustained, whether by private individuals or by government; and when such property does not prove sufficient, it shall be divided into shares proportionate to the respective losses of the individual proprietors and of government.

Slaves and hired servants offending against this law, shall be punished in the same manner as other individuals.

Two clauses.

SECTION CCCLXXXIV. — Theatrical Representations.

All musicians and stage-players shall be precluded from representing in any of their performances, Emperors, Empresses, famous princes, ministers, and generals of former ages; and shall be punished with 100 blows for every breach of this law. — All officers of government and private individuals likewise, who receive such comedians into their houses, and employ them to perform such prohibited entertainments, shall suffer the same punishment.

Nevertheless, by this law it is not intended to prohibit the exhibition upon the stage of fictitious characters of just and upright men, of chaste wives, and pious and obedient children, all which may tend to dispose the minds of the spectators to the practice of virtue*.

Two clauses.

As the representations here described as prohibited, are in fact in China the favourite and most usual theatric exhibitions, this article of the laws must either be considered to have become obsolete, or to be enforced only so far as may be necessary to confine such exhibitions within the limits approved by government, and which may not be always the same, at different times, and under different circumstances.

SEC-

SECTION CCCLXXXV. — Transgression of Standing Rules and Orders.

Whoever is guilty of a transgression of any standing rules and orders, shall, although such transgression is not specifically punishable by any existing law, be punished with 50 blows.

No clause.

SECTION CCCLXXXVI. — Improper Conduct not specifically punishable.*

Whoever is guilty of improper conduct, and such as is contrary to the spirit of the laws, though not a breach of any specific article, shall be punished, at the least, with 40 blows; and when the impropriety is of a serious nature, with 80 blows.

No clause.

* This article has been sometimes referred to under the title of offences against propriety.

END OF THE NINTH BOOK OF THE SIXTH DIVISION.

B O O K X.

ARRESTS AND ESCAPES.

SECTION CCCLXXXVII. — Duty of Police Officers.

ALL persons who, after having entered into the service of government as constables, bailiffs, thief-takers, or in any capacity of that description, at any time allege pretexts for excusing themselves from the duty of pursuing and seizing offenders; or do not actually pursue and seize those offenders, with the place of whose retreat they are acquainted, shall, in each case, be liable to the punishment next in degree to that which is due to the offender, or to the most guilty of the offenders, if there should be more than one, whom their neglect had occasioned to remain at large.

Nevertheless, a period of thirty days shall be allowed from the issue of the orders of the magistrate; during which, if more than one half of the offenders directed to be seized and brought to justice, should be overtaken, or even any less proportion of them, provided such proportion includes the most guilty, the original neglect and misconduct of the responsible police officers shall be pardoned. — And this indulgence shall extend to all the officers employed, although only one of them should have the merit of bringing the offender to justice.

If, moreover, within the aforesaid interval, the offender or offenders should die, or surrender themselves voluntarily, the failure of the police officers shall likewise, in either case, be excused. — And, in general, when any proportion whatever of the total number of the offenders shall have died, or surrendered within the prescribed period, the responsibility of the officers of the police, shall be measured only according ing to the number and criminality of those of the surviving offenders who are still at large.

In the case of similar neglect on the part of other persons in the service of government, who may on particular occasions have been detached and employed in the pursuit of criminals, out of the regular line of their duty, the punishment shall be proportionably less by one degree, than that which the established police officers would have incurred under the same circumstances. Whenever it further appears, that the remissness of those employed in the pursuit of criminals has been the effect of bribery, the person guilty of receiving bribes, shall not have the benefit of the pardon held out to the rest on the condition of the seizure of the principal criminals within a limited period, and they shall therefore suffer punishment to the full extent, to which the criminals at large are liable, capital cases only excepted; or instead thereof, the punishment of accepting bribes for unlawful purposes, according as the former or the latter is found in any particular case to be the most severe.

Ten clauses.

SECTION CCCLXXXVIII. — Criminals resisting the Police Officers.

Whenever a criminal, at any time after a discovery has been made of his guilt, that is to say, at any time after charges against him have been legally presented to, and received by an officer of government, takes flight, or without having taken flight, resists and defends himself against the police officers employed in the pursuit of him, his punishment shall be two degrees more severe than that to which his original offence had rendered him liable, previous to this circumstance of aggravation; this aggravation of punishment shall not, however, take place in capital cases, or render those cases capital, which

which would not have been so otherwise. If, in any of the preceding cases, an offender should strike the police officers so as to inflict a cutting wound, he shall be strangled at the usual period; and if he should kill any of them, beheaded.

All the accessaries in these cases shall suffer the punishment of the principal, reduced one degree.

If the criminal who resists, is armed with any weapons of defence, and the police officers kill him, in endeavouring to secure his person; or if the criminal escapes from their custody, or from prison, and is killed upon a renewal of the pursuit; or if, lastly, the criminal when driven to the last extremity, destroys himself; in such cases, the police officers shall in no wise be answerable for his death.

On the other hand, if a police officer at any time kills or severely wounds a criminal, who is not capitally punishable, and who had surrendered without resistance, either immediately, or as soon as overtaken; such police officer shall be punished according to the law against killing or wounding in an affray. — In the case of killing a criminal whose offence was capital, the punishment of the police officer shall not exceed 100 blows, unless it should appear that the homicide was the result of a previous contrivance and design.

Nine clauses.

SECTION CCCLXXXIX. — Prisoners escaping, or rising against their Keepers.

Whenever an offender in confinement quits his cell, and having contrived to release himself from his fetters and hand-cuffs*, escapes from prison, he shall suffer a punishment two degrees more severe than that to which he had exposed himself by his original offence; and if he takes the opportunity of releasing at the same time, any of the other

* A particular description of these is given in the introductory part of the code.

other offenders, who were with him in confinement, he shall be liable to the punishment of the most guilty of those whose escape he had so assisted; provided, nevertheless, that in no case the punishment be increased beyond 100 blows, and perpetual banishment to the distance of 3000 lee, unless the offender contriving the means of escape as aforesaid, had been previously liable to capital punishment, in which case the sentence shall be executed without alteration.

If one or more offenders in confinement rise against their keepers, and thus forcibly effect their escape, they shall all suffer death, by being beheaded, whatever might have been originally the nature or degree of their offences.

It is hereby provided, at the same time, that those of the prisoners who had really no knowledge of, nor concern in the insurrection, shall not, in any respect, be made to participate in the punishment of the guilty.

Ten clauses.

SECTION CCCXC.—Returning or escaping from a Place of Banishment.

All offenders, who, after having been condemned to, and arriving at the place of their banishment, whether ordinary or extraordinary, temporary or perpetual, desert the same, and endeavour to effect their escape, shall, for the first day's absence, be punished with 50 blows, and for every additional three days absence, one degree more severely, as far as 100 blows; and as soon as retaken, shall be remanded to the place of their banishment; and if they had been sentenced thereto only for a limited period, such period shall recommence from their return after their last attempt to escape, instead of being computed from the original date of their condemnation.

An offender, also, who deserts and attempts to effect his escape at any time after the declaration of his sentence, but previous to his arrival at the place of his destination, shall be equally liable to the penalties of this law.
his

In the former case, the superintendent at the place of banishment, and in the latter, the conductor of the offenders thither, shall be held responsible; and in any case of neglect by which one offender escapes, they shall be punished with 60 blows; and one degree more severely as far as 100 blows, for every additional individual who so escapes from their custody.

One hundred days shall however be allowed for their retrieving themselves from the consequences of such neglect, by retaking the offenders and producing them at the stations appointed for their banishment.

In these cases, the punishment of the inspecting or conducting officer, shall be less by three degrees than that of the superintending or conducting soldier or constable.

The misconduct of all the responsible parties shall however be pardoned, whenever, within the one hundred days above mentioned, the offenders die, surrender voluntarily, or are in any way whatever retaken.

On the other hand; if, in any instance, the offenders are designedly suffered to escape, the persons guilty thereof, whether officers of government, or subordinate attendants of the police, shall undergo the identical punishment to which the released offenders had been condemned. — If such wilful breach of duty is the effect of bribery, the punishment shall be computed in proportion to the amount of the bribe, according to the law against receiving a bribe for an unlawful purpose, and inflicted instead of the former, whenever it proves the most severe.

Twenty-three clauses.

SECTION CCCXCI. — Delaying the Execution of a Sentence of Banishment.

Whenever a sentence of banishment, ordinary or extraordinary, temporary or perpetual, has been regularly pronounced against any offender, the officer of government at whose tribunal the offender had been tried, shall, within the space of ten days, deliver over such offender, fettered and handcuffed in the lawful manner, to a competent guard, with full instructions, and properly authenticated powers, to conduct him to the place of his destination.

The causeless detention of an offender under sentence of banishment three days beyond the period stated, shall be punished with 20 blows; and punishment shall be increased as far as 60 blows, at the rate of one degree for every additional three days of causeless detention: — In all such cases of imputed neglect, the chief clerk of the court shall be deemed the principal offender*.

If an offender avails himself of the opportunity afforded by such causeless detention, to make his escape, the salary of the presiding magistrate shall be suspended until he is retaken, and the clerk of the court shall be banished during the same period.

The penalties of this law shall likewise take effect in the case of every causeless detention of offenders proceeding into banishment, attributable to those officers of government and others, in whose custody and under whose superintendance they happen to be, at any subsequent period, previous to their arrival at their destination.

When offenders under sentence of banishment are proceeding, in the usual way, to their destination, if the inspecting officers do not effectually provide for their safe custody, by fetters and handcuffs, and in the lawful manner; so that they are able to release themselves from such fetters or handcuffs, or in any other manner to effect their escape, they shall be liable to the same punishments as those already provided in the case of such escapes being attributable to the carelessness of the conductors.

* Relative to the clerks of tribunals, see note, page 30.

In every instance of a bribe having been received for any such unlawful purpose, the law upon the case shall be consulted, and always preferred, whenever it is found to aggravate the punishment.

Three clauses.

SECTION CCCXCII. — Jailors and others suffering their Prisoners to escape.

Whenever any offenders escape from prison through the neglect of the jailors, the jailor who was principally responsible in the case, shall be punished only two degrees less severely, than the most guilty of the escaped offenders.

If any such offenders forcibly effect their escape by rising against their keepers or jailors, the punishment of the jailors shall admit of a further reduction of two degrees; and in either case, a period of one hundred days shall be allowed, within which, if they, or any other persons, retake the offenders, or if the offenders either die or surrender voluntarily, the previous neglect of the jailors shall be pardoned.

In the preceding cases, the punishment of the principally responsible individual of the directing board or tribunal of the prison, being the clerk thereof, shall, under a reduction of three degrees, be proportionate to that of the jailors.

If the inspecting officer of the prison had gone through the due and accustomed examination of the prisoners, each individually, and had personally ascertained them to have been fettered and handcuffed in the legal manner, and if he had finally given the necessary instructions tions to the superintending magistrate and jailors respecting their safe custody, he shall not be responsible for their subsequent escape; but if he had omitted such visitation of the prisoners at the proper period, he shall, in the event of their escaping, suffer punishment, equally with the superintending magistrate of the prison.

When, in any case similar to the preceding, the prisoners had been wilfully and advisedly permitted to escape, the individual convicted thereof, whether a magistrate or a jailor, shall be punishable in an equal degree with the most guilty of the offenders so released and suffered to escape, capital cases only excepted, and not be allowed the benefit of a period of one hundred days, to redeem himself from punishment; nevertheless, when an offender has so escaped previous to condemnation, and, within the aforementioned period, is by any means retaken, dies, or surrenders himself, such circumstance shall have the effect of mitigating the punishment of the magistrate or jailor who had designedly permitted him to escape, one degree.

In any case of a bribe having been received as a consideration for such connivance, the law against bribery for an unlawful purpose, shall be referred to, and acted upon whenever it is found to aggravate the punishment.

Whenever thieves and robbers break into a prison from without, and, overpowering the keepers, carry off any of the prisoners by open violence, the penalties to which jailors and others are subjected by this law in all ordinary cases of prisoners effecting their escape, shall not take effect, and the responsible parties shall be accordingly excused.

The laws determining the responsibility of jailors and others in cases of offenders escaping from prison, shall moreover have the same force and application, in all similar cases of offenders escaping from their conductors, between the prisons and the tribunals of justice.

Fourteen clauses.

SECTION CCCXCIII. — Privately assisting and concealing Criminals.

If any person who knows that an information has been laid against an offender before a magistrate, and that orders are issued in consequence to pursue and apprehend him, receives notwithstanding such offender into his house, and there conceals him, instead of delivering him up to justice, or, knowing the premises, assists such offender to make his escape, by supplying him with clothes and provisions, or by indicating to him a place of retreat; such person shall, in all cases, except those of a relationship existing between the parties, suffer a punishment only less by one degree, than that incurred by the offender thus assisted, harboured, or concealed.

It is however provided, that the person harbouring an offender, shall be punishable only in proportion to such of the offender's criminal acts, as he must have been aware of at the time, and not in proportion to others, of which he may have been also guilty, and which may be alleged against him in the course of the trial.— In cases of persons harbouring known offenders previous to the issue of the warrant for their commitment, this law cannot take effect; but the person guilty of such an act may be punished according to the law applicable to cases of improper conduct not specifically punishable*.

All those likewise, who successively entertain and accommodate offenders in their flight, shall be liable to the penalties of this law, whenever they shall appear to have been acquainted with the premises aforesaid, but otherwise shall be excused.

All persons moreover, who, upon being informed of the measures taken by government for pursuing and overtaking a criminal, divulge and publish the same, so as defeat the object thereof, and enable the criminal to escape, shall be punishable in proportion to the guilt of such criminal, under a reduction of one degree in each case, except that it shall still be in their power, by overtaking and personally delivering the criminal up to justice, previous to the final determination of his case, to obtain entire pardon; but if the criminal dies, surrenders, or is taken by any other means, within the same period, they shall only obtain a mitigation in their punishment of one degree.

* See Section CCCLXXXVI. among the miscellaneous offences.

One clause.

SECTION CCCXCIV. — Periods allowed for the Pursuit of Thieves and Robbers.

In ordinary cases of robbery, if the soldiers and attendants of the police, employed on the public service in the district in which the offence is committed, do not seize and bring to justice the robbers within one month, computed from the day on which the information was laid before the magistrates, such attendants and soldiers shall be punished with 20 blows; if unsuccessful at the end of two months, with 30 blows; at the end of three months, with 40 blows; and in the last case, the superintending magistrate shall likewise forfeit two months' salary.

If, in a case of theft, the police officers fail to seize and bring to justice the thieves, within the period of one month, they shall receive a punishment of 10 blows, if unsuccessful at the end of two months, a punishment of 20 blows; and at the end of three months, a punishment of 30 blows; and in the latter case, the superintending magistrate shall likewise be punished for the failure, by a forfeiture of one month's salary. When more than one robber or thief are charged in the information, it shall be sufficient that half the number are seized and brought to justice within the prescribed period, to exempt the responsible parties from the punishments and penalties aforesaid:— They shall, moreover, be exempt therefrom, when the plaintiff or party aggrieved, had neglected to lay his information before the magistrate within twenty days from the date of the commission of the offence.

the

In respect to the provisions of this law, thieves who have likewise committed murder, shall be considered in the same light as robbers.

Thirty clauses.

END OF THE TENTH BOOK OF THE SIXTH DIVISION.

B O O K XI.

IMPRISONMENT, JUDGMENT, AND EXECUTION *.

SECTION CCCXCV. — Securing the Persons of Prisoners.

IF in any case of imprisoned offenders, the superintending magistrate does not strictly confine those, who, according to the laws, ought to be strictly confined, such as all ordinary prisoners charged with offences punishable with banishment or death, and not privileged in consideration of their rank, tender youth, extreme age, or bodily infirmities; or if the superintending magistrate does not confine with fetters and handcuffs, those who, by law, ought to be so confined; or having so confined, afterwards

* Although close imprisonment is not awarded by the Chinese laws, as the ordinary punishment of any specific offence, and is considered in this book of the code, only as far as it is applicable and necessary to the safe custody of accused persons, between the period of their arrest and that of their conviction or acquittal; or that of condemned persons between the period of their conviction and that of their execution: yet, in some instances, chiefly those of European missionaries, capitally convicted during occasional persecutions, a sentence of death has been, through the Imperial clemency, commuted for that of imprisonment during a limited period. The most recent instance of this kind is that of an Italian priest of the name of Joakim, who has been released from the prisons of Canton, within the present year (1809), after undergoing three years close confinement, to which he had been sentenced, in consequence of having been unfortunately discovered and apprehended, when on his way to join his brethren in the interior. — It does not appear that he has suffered any very serious hardships; but the report and edict, of which translations are given in the Appendix, No. X., clearly prove, that in the administration of the prisons in China, very enormous abuses have at times been committed. — At the same time, it is but just to observe, that it is not improbable there may be some exaggeration in the sub-vice-roy's report of those abuses, which he would naturally picture in strong colours, as an accuser, and also as one to whom the merit was due of the discovery.

releases

releases them, his punishment shall be proportionate to the guilt of the offenders in question, in the following manner :

In the case of an offender punishable with the bamboo only, the magistrate shall be liable to suffer 30 blows ; with temporary banishment, 40 blows ; with perpetual banishment, 50 blows ; and if with death, 60 blows. — In the case of confining a criminal with fetters, who ought according to the laws to have been handcuffed, or vice versa, the punishment of the superintending magistrate shall, having regard to the circumstances already stated, be proportionably less by one degree.

If the governing magistrate of the prison, his official attendants, or the jailors, release any of the prisoners from their fetters and handcuffs, or permit them so to release themselves, they shall be equally liable to the penalties of this law, as the superintending magistrate would have been under similar circumstances.

Again, if the inspecting magistrate of the prison is privy to such a neglect of the laws, and does not notice the same to the superior jurisdiction, he shall be liable to the same punishment as those actually guilty of the neglect ; but if unacquainted therewith, he shall not be responsible.

On the other hand, if any unnecessary severity is practised by the magistrates or officers aforesaid, by confining with particular strictness, or confining with fetters and handcuffs, any of the prisoners, without being legally required or authorized so to do, such misconduct shall be punished in every instance with 60 blows.

Whenever any of the aforesaid offences are found to have been the result of bribery, the legal punishment, proportionate to the amount thereof, according to the law against bribery for an unlawful object, shall be ascertained, and if it proves to be more severe than that provided by this law, it shall be inflicted in preference.

Seven clauses.

SEC-

SECTION CCCXCVI.— Imprisonment of, and Procedure against, unaccused and unimplicated Persons.

All officers of government, and their official attendants, who, instigated by private malice or revenge, designedly commit to prison an unaccused and unimplicated individual, shall be punished with 80 blows; and if such false imprisonment should directly or indirectly occasion the death of such individual, they shall suffer death, by being strangled at the usual period.

The inspectors and governors of prisons, their official attendants, and the jailors, when privy to, and not giving information against, such illegal proceedings, shall be liable to the same punishments, except in capital cases, when a mitigation of one degree shall take place; but when unapprized of the illegality of the procedure, they shall not be liable to any punishment whatever.

When, in the examination of offences connected with the public service, any individuals are brought before the magistrates merely to give evidence; if such individuals, without being chargeable with any participation in the unlawful transactions under investigation, are inadvertently committed to prison, instead of being simply held responsible for their re-appearance, the superintending magistrate shall be subjected to the punishment of 80 blows, in every case of such persons dying, either directly or indirectly, in consequence of such irregular imprisonment.

But in all cases of imprisoning in the lawful manner persons who are actually charged with, or implicated in, any criminal transactions, the magistrates shall be entirely free from any responsibility for the consequences.

Moreover, all officers of government, and their official attendants, who, instigated by private malice or revenge, designedly examine with judicial severities, any unaccused and unimplicated person, shall, although they should not by so doing actually wound such person, be punished with 80 blows; if guilty of inflicting, by such procedure, any cutting or severe wound, they shall be punished according to the law against cutting and wounding in an affray in ordinary cases; lastly, if death ensues, the superintending magistrate shall be beheaded.

The assessors, and other officers of justice concerned in the transaction, shall, if aware of the illegality of their act, suffer punishment according to the same rule, except in capital cases, upon which they shall be allowed a reduction of one degree in the punishment. — When, however, they are really unconscious of the illegality of the transaction, and the blows with the bamboo, or the question by torture, although illegal, under the circumstances of the case, are administered by the official attendants in the customary manner, the said officers shall be respectively exempted from any participation in the punishment of the presiding magistrate.

Lastly, if in the course of proceedings connected with the public service, any of those persons, whom, although not personally implicated in an illegal transaction, it may have been requisite to examine, obstinately persist, after the charges have been clearly proved by evidence and corroborating circumstances, in denying or endeavouring to suppress the truth, in order to protect the guilty, it shall be lawful for the magistrates to administer the question according to the severities allowed by the laws applicable to extreme cases, and they shall not be punishable, even if the person so examined, and subjected to torture, should accidentally and unexpectedly die under the same.

Six clauses.

SECTION CCCXCVII. — Delay in executing the Sentence of the Law.

When any person in custody has been brought to trial, and the judicial proceedings instituted upon all charges legally exhibited against him, either in the peculiar jurisdiction of the courts of judicature at Peking, or in any of those of the provincial tribunals of the several viceroys and sub-viceroys, are finally closed, upon its having satisfactorily appeared upon the trial, that nothing had been falsely alleged, or insufficiently investigated; then, provided it be a case in which the sentence, conformable to the laws, may be pronounced and executed without reference to the supreme authority, such sentence shall, within the space of three days, be pronounced and executed, as far as regards any corporal punishment to which the culprit may be liable. — And when the remainder of the sentence consists of temporary or perpetual banishment, the culprit shall, within the space of ten days, be dispatched towards the place of his destination. For a delay of three days beyond the period allowed by this law, the officers of the tribunal in which the affair had been investigated, shall be punished with 30 blows, and the punishment shall be increased as far as 60 blows, at the rate of one degree for every additional three days delay. — If in consequence of any unlawful delay of justice, an offender happens to die, either previous to the infliction of corporal punishment, previous to his departure conformably to his sentence of banishment, or previous to the execution of his sentence in any other respect, the officers of the tribunal shall, in the case of capital offenders, be punished with 60 blows; in a case of a sentence of perpetual banishment, with 80 blows; in a case of a sentence of temporary banishment, with 100 blows; and in a case of merely corporal punishment with the bamboo, with 60 blows, and one year's banishment.

Four clauses.

SECTION CCCXCVIII. — Ill treatment of Prisoners.

All jailors, and others having the care and custody of prisoners, when guilty of striking, wounding, or otherwise ill treating them, shall be punished in proportion to the injury done, according to the law against striking or wounding in ordinary cases of an affray. In all cases also, of the jailors or others suppressing any part of the government allowance of clothes and provisions, the deficiency shall be estimated, and the offence punished as an embezzlement of government stores to the same amount and value: and if any prisoner dies in consequence of such default in his allowance, the jailor or other attendant guilty thereof, shall suffer death by being strangled at the usual period.

If the inspecting and superintending magistrates of the prison, upon being made acquainted with the misconduct of the jailors, take no cognizance thereof, they shall, excepting the usual reduction of one degree in capital cases, equally participate in their punishment; and even when ignorant thereof, they shall still be liable to punishment according to the law respecting offences by implication*.

Twelve clauses.

SECTION CCCXCIX. — Allowing Prisoners Sharp Instruments.

All jailors and other attendants of prisons, who shall be found to have provided any of the prisoners with sharp weapons of metal, or with any other articles by means of which they might possibly kill or release themselves, shall be punished with 100 blows.

If any prisoners should, by such means so provided, effect their escape, or wound themselves or others, the punishment of the persons

* See Section CCCLXXXVI.

providing

providing the said instruments or articles, shall be increased to 60 blows and one year's banishment. — If any of the prisoners should kill themselves therewith, the punishment of the persons guilty as aforesaid, shall be further increased to 80 blows and two years banishment; and lastly, if in consequence of having obtained such instruments, they rise against their keepers and effect their escape by force, or commit murder, the jailor or attendant who had provided the instruments, shall suffer death by being strangled at the usual period.

If, however, in any of the preceding cases of a criminal making his escape in consequence of being thus provided with the means thereof, the criminal should, before the judicial proceedings upon the case are finally closed, die, surrender himself, or by any means be retaken, the person punishable under this law, shall be allowed a reduction in his punishment of one degree.

In the case of such prohibited articles being supplied to a prisoner by a stranger, by a son to his parent, or by a slave or hired servant to his master, when in such a situation, the punishment shall be one degree less than that of the jailor would have been under the same circumstances.

Whenever the inspecting and superintending officers, and their clerks or assistants, are privy to, and yet take no cognizance of this offence, they shall be liable to the same punishment as the jailors and other immediate attendants of the prison, according to the circumstances, excepting only the usual reduction of one degree in capital cases.

If bribes had been received by the offending parties to such an extent as would, conformably to the law against bribery for an unlawful purpose, aggravate the punishment, the punishment shall be aggravated accordingly.

If the jailors and other responsible persons, although not actually chargeable with having supplied the means by which mischief might be effected, are not duly vigilant and attentive in guarding against accidents, accidents, and it happens in consequence that any of the prisoners succeed in an attempt to destroy themselves, the jailors shall be punishable with 60 blows, the superintending officers and attendants with 50 blows, and the inspecting officers and their attendants with 40 blows.

No clause.

SECTION CCCC. — Encouraging and exciting Prisoners to make groundless Appeals.

All officers, official attendants and jailors, belonging to prisons, who instruct or encourage prisoners to appeal against their sentence under frivolous pretexts, after their just and lawful condemnation; or who assist them in communicating with others out of prison for the same purpose, shall, according to the nature of the designed diminution of the prisoner's offence, or of the extent of the offence which wholly or in part is by implication imputed to the informer, be punished conformably to the law against a similar intentional deviation from justice in awarding judgment.

The punishment of a stranger, or of a relation of the prisoner, when offending in the same manner, shall be less than that inflicted upon the officers of the prison when guilty, by one degree. — Moreover, the officers and attendants of prisons who suffer, or connive at improper communications of this description between the prisoners and strangers, shall, although such communications should not have the effect of increasing or diminishing the punishment of any person, be punished, at the least, with 50 blows; and, as in all the preceding cases, when any of the parties have been bribed, the legal punishment of such bribery shall be inflicted in preference to any other, if it proves, on comparison, to be more severe than the punishment otherwise provided.

Three clauses.

SEC-

SECTION CCCC. — Supply of Food and Clothes to Prisoners.

Whenever the individuals committed to prison, have no families or relations by whom they may be supplied with necessaries, the superior authorities shall be addressed for leave to supply them with clothes and provisions, and, whenever they are sick, with medicines and medical assistance; leave shall also be asked in favor of those who are not charged with capital crimes, that they may, when sick, be released from their fetters and handcuffs; and in favor of those who are only liable to a punishment of 50 blows or less, that they may, when sick, be let out of prison, upon sufficient security being given for their return; and lastly, in favor of those who are dangerously sick or incurably infirm, that their families may have free access to them.

Although it is not left at the option of the officers and attendants of the prisons to grant any of these indulgences, yet, if they do not solicit them in behalf of the prisoners when lawfully allowable, they shall suffer a punishment of 50 blows for such neglect; and if in the meanwhile any capitally punishable offender dies for want of such indulgence, the above neglect shall be punished with 60 blows; if any offender punishable with perpetual banishment dies, with 80 blows; if an offender punishable with temporary banishment dies, with 100 blows; and lastly, if any offender punishable with the bamboo only, dies for want of any of the said indulgences, the neglect of the officers of the prison shall be punished with 60 blows and one year's banishment.

If the inspecting officer of the prison is privy to the neglect of the others, and yet takes no cognizance thereof, he shall be liable to the same punishment.

When the officers of the prisons have duly solicited any such indulgences conformably to the laws, if the superior officer delays one day in complying with their lawful requests, he shall be punished with 10 blows
and

and for every additional day of delay, one degree more severely, until the punishment amounts to 40 blows.

If, in consequence of such remissness or delay on the part of the superior officer, the prisoner dies; then, in the event of his having been a capital offender, such superior officer shall be punished with 60 blows; if he had been punishable with perpetual banishment, with 80 blows; if he had been punishable with temporary banishment, with 100 blows; and if with the bamboo only, with 60 blows, and banishment for the space of one year.

Nine clauses.

SECTION CCCCII. — Indulgence in consideration of the Rank and former Services of Prisoners.

All offenders in confinement, who had held the fifth or any superior rank among the officers of government, or who had at any time distinguished themselves by their public services, shall be allowed a free communication with their relations and connections while in prison, and such relations and connections shall likewise be freely permitted to accompany them, when undergoing a sentence of temporary or perpetual banishment. — If any such favourably considered offender falls sick and dies, either in prison, on his journey to, or after his arrival at the place of his banishment, the officer of government in whose jurisdiction such event takes place, shall immediately dispatch a messenger with information of the circumstances to the relations of the deceased, that they may in due form apply to the sovereign for leave to recover his body. — Every officer of government shall be liable to a punishment of 60 blows, who under such circumstances fails to comply with the provisions of this law.

No clause.

SECTION CCCCIII. — Prisoners committing Suicide.

In all cases of capitally convicted offenders, who, after having confessed their guilt, shall have been induced, under apprehensions of the consequent execution of their sentence, to instruct and employ their relations or near friends to kill them, or to hire some third person to kill them; the relation or friend hiring a third person, and the individual who strikes the blow, whether a relation, a friend, or hired stranger, shall suffer the ordinary punishment of killing in an affray, reduced two degrees: — but if the capitally convicted offender had confessed his guilt without having made such a request to his relations and friends, or had made the request without having confessed his guilt; in either case, the relation or friend hiring a person to kill, and the person killing, shall be punished according to the law in ordinary cases of killing and wounding in an affray, without any reduction.

In regard to either of the preceding cases however, it is provided, that if the party killing the prisoner or hiring another to do so, be the son or grandson, slave or hired servant, of such prisoner, he shall invariably be beheaded at the usual period, for so great an offence against piety or subordination.

No clause.

SECTION CCCCIV. — Torture not to be used in the judicial Examination of Children or of the Aged.

It shall not, in any tribunal of government, be permitted to put the question by torture to those who belong to any of the eight privileged classes, in consideration of the respect due to their character; to those who have attained their seventieth year, in consideration of their advanced age; to those who have not exceeded their fifteenth year, out of indulgence to their tender youth ; and lastly, to those who labour under any permanent disease or infirmity, out of commiseration for their situation and sufferings. — In all such cases, the offences of the parties accused shall be determined on the evidence of facts and witnesses alone ; and all officers of government who disregard the restrictions of this law, shall be punished either according to the law against a design, or the law against a careless aggravation of the punishment of an offender, according as the said misconduct on the part of the magistrate is attributable to design, or to inattention.

Moreover, in all cases in which the circumstances or connexion between the parties, produce a legal incapacity, or in the case of individuals arrived at eighty, or under ten years of age, or entirely and permanently infirm, it shall not be permitted even to require or to receive their testimony ; every breach of this law in any tribunal of government, shall be punished accordingly with 50 blows, and the clerk of the court esteemed, as in all other cases of misconduct in a joint and official capacity, the principal offender.

No clause.

SECTION CCCC.V. — Confronting Offenders with their Associates.

All officers of government in whose tribunals the trial and investigation of the charges against any offenders has commenced, shall stop their proceedings whenever any of the associates or accomplices of such offenders are ascertained to be in the custody of any other officers of government, in order that they may be confronted one with another ; for which purpose the officer of government engaged in the inquiry, shall claim from the officers having any of the said accomplices in custody, their delivery and transmission to his tribunal, by official letters to that effect, although their respective jurisdictions should be altogether independent of, and unconnected with each other; such official requests shall in general be complied with before the expiration of three days; beyond that period a delay of one day shall be punished with 20 blows, and there shall, for every additional day of delay, be an augmentation of one degree in the punishment, as far as 60 blows in the whole. — On all such occasions, the officer of government making the application ineffectually, shall accuse the other of delay, before the superior authorities to which he is subjected, in order that the offence of which he is guilty may be investigated, as well as his compliance with the said application enforced, according as the laws direct.
be

If the trial and investigation of the charges against such accomplices or implicated persons had actually commenced in the jurisdiction to which they belonged, previous to their being officially demanded on the ground of the necessity of confronting them with the other offenders at the same time under examination elsewhere, it shall be observed as a constant rule, that the prisoner charged with the lesser offence, be removed to the tribunal in which the prisoners charged with greater offences are under examination; but if the offences are similar in degree, then the few shall be transferred to the tribunal having within its jurisdiction the greater number; and if the numbers are likewise equal, then the prisoners last accused shall be removed to the jurisdiction in which the first accusation was made.

It is however provided, that if the distance between the aforesaid independent jurisdictions exceed 300 lee, (in which case it may be inexpedient to remove the prisoners on account of the risk of escape) each charge shall be examined and determined separately.

Every neglect of the provisions of this law, shall be punished with 50 blows; nevertheless, when the greater offenders have been actually transferred to the jurisdiction in which the lesser had been apprehended, or the many to the few, the first accused to the last accused, the officer of government receiving them shall not decline to undertake the trial at his tribunal, under the pretext of being under an obligation to refer them back again, according to this law, to their proper jurisdiction; he shall, however, give due information of the irregularity, to the superior authorities over the officer who had been the occasion thereof, that by such superior authorities the said irregularity may be investigated and punished.

If, in any of these cases, the magistrate, after the arrival of the prisoners at his tribunal, delays for one day to take cognizance of their offences, he shall suffer a punishment of 20 blows; and the punishment shall be augmented as far as 60 blows, at the rate of one degree for every additional day of delay.

Eleven clauses.

SECTION CCCCVI. — Examination of Offenders to correspond with the Charges against them.

Every trial and examination of a prisoner brought before a tribunal of government, shall, generally speaking, be strictly confined to the subject of the information laid against him; if, on the contrary, any presiding magistrate urges an inquiry upon matters irrelevant thereto, in order in one way or other to fix guilt upon a prisoner, he shall be liable to punishment conformably to the law concerning magistrates designedly over-rating the guilt, and aggravating the punishment of offenders under examination: — The assessors of the tribunal, when they do not personally investigate in this unlawful manner, shall not be answerable.

At the same time, it shall not be understood that this law forbids the examination of any criminal acts and circumstances of which a discovery may have necessarily taken place, either in the course of securing the

the

the person of an offender, or in the regular process of the inquiry into the charges for which he had been brought to trial.

One clause.

SECTION CCCCVII. — Prosecutors not to be detained after a Trial is concluded.

In all cases of trials and investigations of charges which have been duly laid before the tribunals of government, as soon as the facts alleged are fully substantiated, and confessed by the criminals themselves, the accusers and informants shall cease to be subject to detention or to examination; the presiding magistrate shall therefore dismiss them forthwith, and absolve them from all further responsibility. — If he should, on the contrary, designedly prolong the detention of such persons, for three days, he shall be liable to a punishment of 20 blows; and punishment, in these cases, shall be further increased, at the rate of one degree, as far as 40 blows, for every additional three days of detention.

Two clauses.

SECTION CCCCVIII. — Offenders recriminating upon innocent Persons.

All offenders who, while in durance, or under examination, maliciously charge with crimes any innocent persons, shall be liable to punishment to the same extent as false accusers in ordinary cases, and such punishment shall be inflicted instead of that to which the offenders thus recriminating were liable on account of their original offences, in the event of the former being more severe than the latter.

Nevertheless, if an offender, without entertaining a previous intention of recrimination upon any innocent person, should be required
and.

and compelled so to do, by the unlawful application of torture, the presiding magistrate shall be responsible for the same, according to the law concerning an intentional and unjust aggravation of the guilt of persons accused, as in ordinary cases.

In like manner, if a revenue officer engaged in the recovery of the amount of duties payable by a defaulter, at the same time urges and compels him to accuse an innocent person of a similar default, the amount of the excessive contribution to the revenue, which may be in consequence extorted, shall be ascertained, and restored to the injured party, while the magistrate shall be punishable according to the law relative to pecuniary malversation in ordinary cases.

If, moreover, in any of these cases, the magistrate detains the person, whom he had occasioned to be, or known to have been, falsely criminated by an offender, he shall be liable to the punishment of 20 blows, when such detention is continued for three days; and the punishment shall be increased as far as 60 blows, at the rate of one degree, for every additional three days of detention.

If, in the course of the trial and investigation of any offence, the witnesses and by-standers, in consequence of being under the influence of private partiality, or of other improper motives, do not, when examined, give true evidence of the facts, or designedly and falsely criminate any person, such false and prevaricating witnesses shall be punished two degrees less severely than is legally proportionate to the amount of the deviation from justice in the subsequent sentence of the offender; but if, in the case of the trial and investigation of the offences of foreigners, the official interpreters are found to be actuated by private motives, and therefore to interpret falsely, such interpreters shall suffer punishment to the full extent of the consequent deviation from justice.

No clause.

SECTION CCCCIX. — *Pronouncing and executing an unjust Sentence.

Whenever, by the authority of a tribunal of justice, consisting of regular officers of government, and of official clerks, an unjust sentence is wilfully and designedly pronounced and executed, whether by the acquittal and dismissal of a prisoner, who ought to have been condemned to the full extent of the charges against him; or by the condemnation and punishment (whether capitally, or otherwise,) of a prisoner, conformably to the full extent of the charges against him, who ought, on the contrary, to have been acquitted and dismissed; in every such case, the member of the court who stands first in point of responsibility, shall suffer punishment equal in degree with that which was, when it ought not to have been, or was not, when it ought to have been, inflicted.

If the sentence pronounced and executed by the authority of any tribunal, is not wholly unjust and groundless; but yet, in point of severity, either falls short of, or exceeds to a certain extent, that sentence which the laws applicable to the circumstances of the case would have justified, the amount of the deviation from a just and lawful sentence shall be computed by estimating each six months of temporary banishment at 20 blows, and every augmentation of 1000 lee in the distance of perpetual banishment, as equivalent to one half year's temporary banishment; the amount thus computed, if it does not exceed 100 blows of the bamboo, shall be inflicted therewith on the officer of the court principally responsible; but if exceeding the same, shall be divided into two equal portions, one of which shall be

* This section of the laws is of very extensive application, as is apparent from the frequent references made to it; these references will easily be distinguished when they occur, though the context has not always admitted of the precise terms of the title being adhered to.

inflicted inflicted corporally, and the other exchanged for banishment, according to the preceding computation.

Nevertheless, when any sentence of capital punishment, which is in any respect unjust, is wilfully and knowingly pronounced and executed, there shall be no deduction whatever in consideration of the prisoner being in some degree guilty, and the officer of the court principally responsible shall be punished with death, in the same manner as the unjustly condemned and executed prisoner. — Whenever the unjust sentence had not been pronounced wilfully, but through error, there shall be a reduction in each case, of three degrees in the punishment, if the injustice consisted in an aggravation; and of five degrees, if it consisted in a mitigation of the sentence.

In general, the clerk of the court shall be punished as the individual principally responsible; the executive or deputy officer shall suffer the punishment reduced one degree; the assessor or assessors of the court, reduced two degrees; and the presiding officer, judge, or magistrate, the same reduced three degrees.

If the unjust condemnation had only been pronounced, but not executed, or if the unjust acquittal had been pronounced, but the prisoner either not dismissed, or recovered after having been dismissed; or, lastly, if the natural death of the prisoner had prevented the execution of the unjust sentence of condemnation, or had prevented the subsequent pronouncing and executing of one that was lawful; in all such cases, the punishment incurred by a false judgment shall be reduced one degree.

The system of punishment in all imaginable cases of false judgment, will more distinctly appear, by a reference to the several examples in the following table.

An unjust sentence of capital punishment, if not executed, shall be deemed equivalent to an unjust sentence of perpetual banishment already ready ready executed; but every unjust sentence of capital punishment which has been executed, shall be punished with death.

Six clauses.

TABLE OF EXEMPLIFICATION.
Grounds of Estimate of Injustice.				Sentence having been executed.				Sentence pronounced but not executed.
The Sentence having been unjust, wilfully, or by Design.
The Sentence which ought to have been pronounced and executed.		The Sentence which actually was pronounced.		Punishment of the Clerk of the Court.		Punishment of the Deputy or Executive officers of the Court.		Punishment of the Affessors.		Punishment of the presiding Magistrate.		Punishment of the Clerk of the Court.		Punishment of the Deputy or Executive Magistrate.		Punishment of the Affessors.		Punishment of the presiding Magistrate.
Blows of the Bamboo.	Banishments, temporary or perpetual.	Blows of the Bamboo.	Banishment, temporary or perpetual.	Blows.	Banishment.	Blows.	Banishment.	Blows.	Banishment.	Blows.	Banishment.	Blows.	Banishment.	Blows.	Banishment.	Blows.	Banishment.	Blows.	Banishment.
				yrs.	years	yrs.	years	yrs.	yr.	yrs.	yr.	yrs.	yr.	yrs.	yr.	yrs.	yr.	yrs.	yr.
The Sentence having been unjust through Error.
Mitigated.	Aggravated.	Mitigated.	Aggravated.	Mitigated.	Aggravated.	Mitigated.	Aggravated.	Mitigated.	Aggravated.	Mitigated.	Aggravated.	Mitigated.	Aggravated.	Mitigated.	Aggravated.	Mitigated.	Aggravated.	Mitigated.	Aggravated.
10	—	80	2 years	90	—	80	—	70	—	60	—	80	—	70	—	60	—	50	—
80	—	60	1 year	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
80	—	100	2500 lee	80	—	60	—	40	—	20	—	60	—	40	—	20	—	10	—
60	1 year	90	2½ years	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
70	1½ years	100	2000 lee	20	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
100	2000 lee	100	3000 lee	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
60	1 year	50	—	10	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
90	2½ years	100	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
100	3 years	70	1½ years	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
100	2000 lee	40	—	80	—	60	—	50	—	40	—	60	—	50	—	40	—	30	—
100	3000 lee	80	2 years.	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—

SECTION CCCCX. — Reversal of a false judgment.

Whenever the tribunals of justice in the provinces, or in the capital, have occasion to take cognizance of a case of false judgment, an accurate and faithful report of the circumstances thereof, and of the extent of the injustice alleged, shall be laid before the Emperor, in order that a special commission may be granted for trying the same. — When the falsehood of the accusation is false, and the injustice of the sentence if unjust, are satisfactorily proved, the investigating magistrate shall, in the first instance, rectify the sentence with regard to the accused and sentenced person, and then proceed to decide upon the guilt incurred, and the punishment consequently merited, either by the accuser, or by the magistrate, according as the unjust sentence had, or had not been conformable to the accusation.

On the contrary, when any tribunal of justice groundlessly reverses a former judgment, and charges it, in a report to the Emperor, with injustice; the principal offender, among the members of such tribunal, shall be liable, at the least, to a punishment of 100 blows, and three years banishment; but if the consequent false condemnation of the accuser, or of the judging magistrate, be more severely punishable, the punishment shall be estimated and inflicted according to the laws against such a deviation from justice.

If the justly accused and condemned offender shall have been a party to such undue reversal of judgment, he shall be liable to the same punishment, as far as it may tend to aggravate that to which he was liable in the first instance; but if ignorant and unconcerned therein, he shall only suffer punishment conformably to the nature of his original offence.

Nine clauses.

SECTION CCCCXI. — Execution of Judgment.

The trial and investigation of the offences of all prisoners in custody, shall be effected with clearness and precision, by the authorities to which they are respectively subject; those who are in a lawful manner convicted of offences punishable with banishment, temporary or perpetual, ordinary or extraordinary, shall be severally ordered to their destination, each conformably to his sentence, by the governor of the city or jurisdiction in which they were condemned. But in all cases of a capital nature, the trial and investigation of the alleged offence, shall be renewed, if at Pekin, by the courts of judicature; and if in the provinces, by the respective viceroys and sub-viceroys thereof; in order that it may be ascertained with more than ordinary care and deliberation, that no error nor injustice had been committed; when the sentence is thus confirmed, a final report of the circumstances and of the judgment pronounced, shall be transmitted for the information of His Imperial Majesty.

If the Imperial orders on the subject contain a warrant for the execution of the offender conformably to his sentence, an officer shall be specially appointed to carry the same into effect, and shall be liable to a punishment of 60 blows for any wilful delay on his part therein.

If, during the process of the final investigation, the offender retracts his confession, and appeals against his sentence, or his relations complain of the injustice thereof, in his name, the superior authorities are bound to take cognizance of such appeal; and if the complaint and appeal be found well grounded, they shall not fail to reverse such unjust sentence, and they shall likewise proceed criminally against the judges of the tribunal, in which it had been pronounced.

If the superior authorities refuse or neglect to inquire into, and to take cognizance of such lawful appeal and complaint of injustice, when duly brought forward to their notice, they shall be liable to punishment conformably to the law against an erroneously or wilfully unjust sentence, according as their guilt is found to be, upon an investigation of the circumstances, imputable to error or to design.

Fifty clauses.

SECTION CCCCXII. — Examination of the Body in Cases of Homicide.

Whenever an inquest is to be held on the body of any person deceased, in order to ascertain the nature of the wounds and of the injuries sustained by the same; if the magistrate in whose department it lies to perform such duty, does not proceed to examine the body immediately on the receipt of his instructions, in consequence of which omission, a change takes place in the corpse before it is visited; if, instead of attending the examination personally, he deposes any of the civil or military attendants of his tribunal, and thereby exposes himself to be deceived by a false report; if he allows the previous and subsequent examiners privately to compare, in order to agree in their reports; or lastly, if he does not examine carefully and minutely, or represents one thing instead of another, the slight for the severe, and the severe for the slight, so that his statement of the wounds and injuries being incorrect, the cause of death, and the other circumstances of the case cannot be distinctly traced and ascertained; in all such cases the magistrate presiding shall suffer a punishment of 60 blows, his deputy, a punishment of 70 blows, and the officiating clerk, a punishment of 80 blows: — The attendants likewise, who perform the manual part of the operation, shall be punished with 80 blows, if implicated in the offence.

When, in consequence of the insufficient or inaccurate examination of the body of any person deceased, the crime of the person accused of homicide micide shall have been aggravated or palliated unjustly, the parties to the examination shall be punishable according to the law against either a wilful or an erroneous deviation from justice, as the case may be. — If any of the parties have been bribed to make such defective examination and consequently false report, they shall be liable to the punishment of bribery for an unlawful purpose, as far as such punishment exceeds that to which they were previously liable by this law, or by the law against an intentional or erroneous deviation from justice.

Eighteen clauses.

SECTION CCCCXIII. — Infliction of Punishment in an illegal Manner.

If, in any tribunal of justice, punishment is inflicted illegally, by the employment of the larger bamboo instead of the lesser, or otherwise, such a deviation from the law shall be punished with 40 blows; and if the punishment so illegally inflicted occasions death, the deviation shall be punished with 100 blows, and ten ounces of silver shall be forfeited to the family of the deceased, to defray the expences of burial.

In each case, the punishment of the attendant who inflicts the blows, shall be less by one degree. X

If the attendant of the tribunal appointed to inflict the blows, contrives to strike in such a manner as not to touch the skin*, the number of such ineffectual blows shall be ascertained, and inflicted effectually, either on the attendant himself, or on the person under whose orders he acted, according as, by an investigation of the circumstances of the case, the contrivance is found to be imputable to the one or to the other.

* A deception of this kind is said to be frequently practised in favour of such offenders as are able to purchase it; the attendant in such cases contrives that the effect of each blow should be intercepted by the extreme end of the bamboo hitting the ground.

In

In all cases in which a bribe has been accepted as an inducement to aggravate or mitigate the punishment in the manner above described, the parties to the deviation from the laws shall suffer the punishment of bribery for an unlawful purpose, whenever it exceeds that to which they were otherwise liable.

If a superintending officer of government on the occasion of any breach of civil or military duty, directs his official attendants to inflict chastisement on a more vulnerable part, than is warranted by the law; or if he inflicts himself, or directs others to inflict, punishment in a violent and unlawful manner, either with the large bamboo, with the hand, with the foot, or with any metal weapon, so as to produce a cutting wound, the individual who inflicts, or causes to be inflicted, such unlawful and unwarrantable chastisement, shall be punished for the consequences, only two degrees less severely than is provided by law in ordinary cases of similar injuries being inflicted in affrays between equals.

If, in such cases, death ensues, the punishment shall be increased to 100 blows, and three years banishment, and ten ounces of silver shall be, moreover, forfeited to the relations of the deceased, to defray the expences of burial.

The punishment of the person who inflicts, in obedience to orders, such irregular and unlawful chastisement, shall, in each case, be less severe than that of his superior, by one degree.

Nevertheless, when it so happens, that immediately after the infliction of punishment, on the upper part of the back of the thighs, and in a lawful manner, the culprit commits suicide, or dies in any manner in consequence of the punishment he had undergone, no person shall be held responsible for the same.

One clause.

SECTION CCCCXIV. — Proceedings against Offences committed by Superior Magistrates.

Whenever the presiding officer of any provincial tribunal commits an offence against the laws, at the place of his official residence, or any extraordinary officer furnished with the commands of the Emperor, at the place of his official destination, the subordinate officers of government shall not in either case transgress the limits of their authority, by inquiring into the offence, but merely report the same to such of the superior authorities as have a jurisdiction over the offender. — In the case however of a charge of a capital offence, it shall be lawful for the subordinate magistrate to take the offender into safe custody provisionally, until instructions for further proceedings are received in reply from the superior authorities; and in the mean while, the seals of office, and the keys of the prisons, treasuries or store-houses under his jurisdiction, shall all be delivered over to the next in command.

This law shall apply to the case of any superior officer, although he should not happen to be the presiding officer of his tribunal; and in general, the subordinate officer who in any instance neglects the provisions of this law, shall be punished at the least with 40 blows.

No clause.

SECTION CCCCXV. — Laws, Statutes, and Precedents, which are to be observed in passing Sentence.

In all tribunals of justice, sentence shall be pronounced against offenders according to all the existing laws, statutes, and precedents applicable to the case, considered together, the omission of which, in any respect, shall be punished at the least with 30 blows; when, however,

however, any article of the law is found to comprise and relate to other circumstances besides those which have occurred in the case under consideration, so much only of the law shall be acted upon, as is really applicable.

Those determinations of the punishment of offences, which have been announced by the special edicts of his Imperial Majesty, and carried into effect as conformable to the exigency of the case in particular instances, without being declared to be designed as a rule for future guidance, shall never be considered or received as precedents; and whoever wilfully or erroneously so receives and considers them, shall be liable to the punishment provided by law against a wilful or erroneous act of injustice.

Four clauses.

SECTION CCCCXVI. — Prisoners upon Trial at liberty either to plead Guilty, or to protest against their Sentence.

After a prisoner has been tried and convicted of any offence punishable with temporary or perpetual banishment, or with death, he shall, in the last place, be brought before the magistrate together with his nearest relations and family, and informed of the offence whereof he stands convicted, and of the sentence intended to be pronounced upon him in consequence; their acknowledgment of its justice, or protest against its injustice, as the case may be, shall then be taken down in writing: and, in every case of their refusing to admit the justice of the sentence, their protest shall be made the ground of another and more particular investigation.

The magistrate who, in a case of banishment, refuses to receive such a protest, shall be punished with 40 blows, and in a capital case with 60 blows. — In all cases however, in which the relations of the prisoner soner are at any distance beyond 300 lee, it shall be sufficient to summon the prisoner singly, and to proceed as aforesaid, according to his individual protest or individual avowal.

No clause.

SECTION CCCCXVII. — Misapplication or Disregard of an Act of Grace and Pardon.

Whenever any tribunal of government, on the occasion of an act of grace and pardon, pronounces a sentence of punishment in a case in which, conformably to such act, it should have been remitted; or a sentence of punishment in its full extent, instead of the mitigated one; or lastly, mitigates the punishment in a case not entitled to the benefit of the act, the determination and execution in each case shall, as far as is practicable, be rectified: if the deviation arises from error, it shall be pardonable by the existing act of grace, but if intentional, the officers of the tribunal shall not have the benefit of such act of grace, although the general remission of punishment should even extend to all other offences of the same description, namely, a wilful deviation from justice.

Five clauses.

SECTION CCCCXVIII. — Offending designedly in the Expectation of Impunity through an Act of Grace and Pardon.

All those who, having previous knowledge and information of an act of grace and pardon, designedly transgress the laws, in the expectation of being able to escape with impunity, shall not only be excluded from the benefit of such act of grace and pardon, but shall moreover suffer punishment one degree more severely than in ordinary cases.

On the other hand, any magistrate who is advised or informed of the intended issue of an act of grace and pardon, and nevertheless directs the execution of punishment upon those offenders who are, in such cases, pardonable, shall be liable to punishment according to the law against an unjust aggravation in pronouncing sentence.

No clause.

SECTION CCCCXIX. — Services to be performed by temporarily banished Offenders.

All those temporarily banished offenders, who, when destined to perform service in the iron or salt works of government, do not perform the same; and those who, having obtained leave of absence on account of sickness, do not, after their recovery, work an additional number of days, corresponding to the number of those during which they were absent, shall, in each case, be punished (as also the police officer having authority over them, who suffers such neglect) with 20 blows for the first three days, and one degree more severely, as far as 100 blows, for every additional three days, in which they are deficient in the performance of their duty. — If the constable or officer having authority over a banished criminal, permits him to hire a substitute, and upon that pretext to return, previous to the expiration of the period declared in his sentence, from his banishment, such constable or officer shall serve in his stead, during the time that remains to be completed; and if guilty of bribery, shall suffer aggravated punishment, according to the law against bribery for an unlawful purpose.

The criminal returning from banishment, shall be punished and sent back, according to the law upon the case already provided.

No clause.

SECTION CCCCXX. — Punishment of Female Offenders.

Female offenders shall not be committed to prison except in capital cases, or cases of adultery.

In all other cases, they shall, if married, remain in the charge and custody of their husbands, and if single, in that of their relations, or next neighbours, who shall, upon every such occasion, be held responsible for their appearance at the tribunal of justice, when required.

All magistrates committing women to prison contrary to the provisions of this law, shall suffer the punishment of 40 blows.

X If any female who is condemned to corporal punishment, or to the question by torture, is discovered to be with child, she shall be sent back to the custody of the responsible persons aforesaid, and not be subjected to punishment or to the question by torture, until 100 days complete are elapsed from the period of her delivery.

If, by a neglect of this law, the infliction of torture or of punishment should destroy the child in the womb, the officers of the tribunal responsible for such neglect, shall suffer punishment within three degrees of the severity of that which is incurred by law for inflicting such an injury in ordinary cases. — If the woman with child should die in consequence of the infliction of torture, or of punishment of any kind, under such circumstances, the punishment of the officers of justice shall be increased to 100 blows and three years banishment; the punishment of the officers of justice shall however be less severe than the aforesaid by one degree, when death is occasioned by the infliction of punishment or torture, not previous, as in the cases above stated, but within the hundred days after parturition.

When any woman who is condemned to be executed for a capital offence, proves to be with child, she shall be attended in prison by a midwife, and be reprieved from the execution of the sentence of the law, until 100 days are expired from the period of her being delivered.

The officers of justice who execute any criminal so circumstanced, previous to her delivery, shall be punished with 80 blows; if within the said period of one hundred days after her delivery, with 70 blows; and if, after the expiration of such period, they delay any longer to execute the criminal, they shall be punishable with 60 blows.

In all the cases here described, the officers of justice are supposed to offend wilfully:—when merely offending through an error of judgment, the punishment shall, in every instance, be proportionably less severe by three degrees.

Six clauses.

SECTION CCCCXXI. — Execution of Criminals without waiting for the Emperor's Ratification.

All magistrates who authorise the execution of any capitally convicted offender, without waiting for the Imperial rescript, containing the ratification of the sentence grounded upon their final report of the case, shall be punished, at the least, with 80 blows.

After the warrant of execution is received, a further delay shall be allowed, of three days, during which if the criminal is executed, or after which, if he is not immediately executed, the responsible officer of government shall be liable to the punishment of 60 blows.— Nevertheless, in the case of robbers, and those who are sentenced to be executed for any of the ten treasonable offences, a breach of this law shall only be punished with 40 blows.

Three clauses.

SECTION CCCCXXII. — Execution of a Sentence by a false Construction of the Laws.

If, after a sentence is pronounced against an offender in a tribunal of justice, he is permitted to redeem himself from banishment or corporal punishment, in a case that is not by law redeemable; or if he is banished or corporally punished, in a case that is redeemable, the punishment of such false construction of the laws, shall be only one degree less severe than that of an entirely unjust and groundless sentence, under similar circumstances.

If an offender who, conformably to the laws, ought to be strangled, is beheaded; or beheaded, when he ought to have been strangled; such deviation, if wilful, shall be punished with 60 blows; if committed by mistake, with 30 blows.

Moreover, the offence of mangling or disfiguring the body of a capitally executed criminal, in any manner not prescribed by law, shall be punished with 50 blows.

*so that is possible
-but in some manner!*

If a magistrate, charged with the execution of the laws against the relations and dependants of traitors and rebels, in any instance dismisses those, whom he ought to have retained in a state of perpetual servitude to government, or retains, with that design, those whom he ought to have dismissed; he shall be liable to the same punishment as those magistrates who are guilty of improperly condemning, or improperly omitting to condemn, persons accused of offences punishable with perpetual banishment.

The distinction between the offence by design and by mistake shall be attended to in this, as in other similar cases.

No clause.

SECTION CCCCXXIII. — Clerks of Tribunals altering the Statements of Informers.

In all tribunals of government in which crimes are investigated, and punishments inflicted, the proceedings of the magistrates must necessarily depend upon the nature of the depositions made by the parties concerned. — If therefore, in any such tribunal, the clerks thereof transcribe falsely, add any thing to, or take away any thing from, such documents and writings, so as to mislead the magistrates by a concealment or perversion of the truth, such clerks shall, conformably to the extent of the false judgment awarded in consequence, suffer the punishment provided by law in ordinary cases of injustice to such an extent.

When a prisoner upon trial is really ignorant of letters, it shall be allowable to employ some indifferent and uninterested person to write down his deposition; but the clerks of the court shall not presume, even in such a case, to undertake to write a deposition in behalf of any person under examination, on pain of being punished as in a case of disobedience*, although a false judgment should not be the consequence of their interference.

One clause.

* According to the law in Section CCCLXXXV.

SEVENTH DIVISION,
Laws relative to Public Works.

BOOK I.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS

SECTION CCCCXXIV.—Ordering Public Works without sufficient Authority.

ALL civil and military officers of tribunals, within the limits of whose respective jurisdictions public works are occasionally requisite, shall, in every instance, according to the nature of their offices, and the circumstances of each particular case, either give information thereof to their superiors, or await the report of their inferiors; and if, instead of so doing, they proceed immediately to employ labourers and others, on such service, the wages of the persons so employed shall be estimated at 8 fen 5 lee 5 hao per man per day *, and according to the amount of a sum, produced by computing their number, and the number of days they were employed, the responsible officer of government shall be liable to punishment, conformably to the scale provided by law in ordinary cases of pecuniary malversation.

Moreover, when labourers and others are employed otherwise than in the legal manner, and at the legal period, then, although the proper proper information should have been given, or the customary report awaited, the responsible officer of government shall be liable to punishment, according to an estimate made upon the same principles as in the preceding case.

* Not quite seven-pence sterling.

Nevertheless, when any of the walls of cities or other fortifications, or of any inclosures in public buildings, happen to fall down, and when any of the public granaries, treasuries, offices or residences, are injured and damaged, the officer in charge thereof, who thereupon immediately appoints proper superintendants, and employs proper labourers, in order to restore or repair the same, shall be subject to none of the penalties of this law.

If any officer of government, when soliciting aid from his superior to enable him to carry into effect any public works, does not truly state the extent of the labour and quantity of the materials required, he shall be punished with 50 blows; and, if in consequence, any materials are injured or wasted, or any labour unnecessarily expended, the value of the former, and amount of the hire of the latter, shall be estimated, and these sums taken together shall be held to be the amount of the pecuniary malversation attributable to the responsible magistrate, conformably to which he shall be punished, agreeably to the law respecting that offence, the punishment not exceeding however in its utmost extent, the limit of 100 blows, and three years banishment.

Six clauses.

SECTION CCCCXXV. — Unnecessary and unserviceable Works.

If any of the officers of government, or other persons who have the immediate superintendance of any public works, employ stone or timber, or burn bricks or tiles, so as to occasion an unnecessary waste of materials and of labour, or employ the same in such a manner as to be unserviceable, the amount and value of such misemployed labour and materials shall be estimated, and the responsible person punished in proportion proportion thereto, according to the law against pecuniary malversation in general; the punishment in no case exceeding 100 blows, and three years banishment.

If, through such aforefaid mismanagement, or want of due diligence and precaution, houses or walls fall down, or any other accident happens, by which some person is killed, the superintendent of the work, or other person who is responsible by virtue of his office, shall pay a fine to the relations of the deceased, in the same manner as in ordinary cases of accidental homicide.

No clause.

SECTION CCCCXXVI. — Public Works and Manufactures to be conformable to Rule and Custom.

If a person serving in, and belonging to, any department of the public service, performs, or causes to be performed, any public work or manufacture, contrary to the established rule and custom, he shall be punished, at the least, with 40 blows; and in the case of any such deviation being made in the manufacture of military weapons, silks, stuffs, and the like valuable articles, the punishment shall be increased to 50 blows: if the deviation is so considerable, as to render the manufactured articles totally unserviceable, or to render it necessary to employ additional labour and expence in adapting them for use, the said labour and expence attending the repair, or re-placing of the articles, shall be estimated, and the responsible person punished in proportion to the amount, according to the law respecting pecuniary malversation in ordinary cases.

If such improperly prepared or manufactured articles, had been destined for the immediate use of His Majesty, the punishment shall, in each case, be more severe by two degrees, and extend accordingly in

*do that all the
- brought at the
- prepared and are intended to be.*

extreme cases, as far as the limit of perpetual banishment, to the distance of 2500 lee.

The person immediately concerned in the manufacture, shall, in general, be esteemed the principal offender; the punishment of the superintending officer of the establishment shall be less by one degree; and that of the officer superintending the supplies, by two degrees; and the responsible persons shall, moreover, always reimburse government to the extent of the additional expence occasioned by their misconduct.

One clause.

SECTION CCCCXXVII. — Misapplication of Public Stores.

If, in any government manufactory, or upon the occasion of any work being conducted or undertaken at the public charge, the principal or managing workman obtains upon false pretences more than the necessary quantity of raw materials, in order to apply the same, or the produce thereof, to his own private use or emolument, the quantity and value of the public stores thus fraudulently applied, shall be estimated, and the offender punished in proportion thereto, according to the law applicable to the embezzlement of stores belonging to government, in ordinary cases.

The officer superintending the manufacture, or (if there should be no superintendant) the officer in whose immediate department it lies, shall, if convicted of knowing, and agreeing to connive at the perpetration, of such fraud, be liable to the same punishment as the afore-said offender, except only in capital cases, when he shall be allowed the usual mitigation of one degree.

If the fraud is perpetrated without the knowledge or concurrence, and therefore attributable merely to the neglect of such officer, his punishment punishment shall be three degrees less severe than that of the principal offender, and not in any case exceed 100 blows.

Nine clauses.

SECTION CCCCXXVIII. — Misapplication of the Public Looms.

If any officer, or other person in the employ of government, who possesses authority or jurisdiction over any government manufactory, unduly avails himself of such authority, by sending raw materials of his own, to be manufactured into silks and stuffs in the public looms, for his own private use, he shall be punished with 60 blows, and the silks or stuffs so manufactured shall be forfeited to government: the workman who is concerned therein, shall be punished with 50 blows; the superintending officer of the manufactory, if acquainted with the transaction, and failing to give information thereof, shall suffer the same punishment as the officer of government principally offending: but if chargeable with neglect only, not having been actually privy to the transaction, his punishment shall be less severe by three degrees.

No clause.

SECTION CCCCXXIX. — Working Silks or Stuffs according to prohibited Patterns.

Any private individual who shall be convicted of manufacturing for sale, silks, satins, gauzes, or other similar stuffs, according to the prohibited pattern of the lung (dragon), or the fung wbang (phoenix), shall be punished with 100 blows, and the goods so manufactured, shall be forfeited to government.

Any individual who is guilty of purchasing, and actually wearing such prohibited stuffs, shall be punished with 100 blows, and three years banishment; but if guilty of purchasing only, with 30 blows. — The working weaver, and the embroiderer of such stuffs, shall be condemned as equal participators of the offence of the master of the house or manufactory, by whose order they were prepared.

3 0 2

years

No clause.

SECTION CCCCXXX. — Irregularity in the Supplies of Raw Materials, and in the Issue of manufactured Goods.

A determinate quantity of silks and stuffs, and of military weapons, shall be annually manufactured and prepared for the public service, in each subdivision of the department of public works; and if any of the workmen fail to provide in due season their assigned proportion, they shall be liable, at the least, to a punishment of 20 blows; and the punishment shall be increased as far as 50 blows, at the rate of one degree for every additional tenth deficient: the punishment of the superintending officer of the work, shall be one degree less severe, and that of the officer superintending the supplies, two degrees less severe, than that of the workman.

On the other hand, if the raw materials are not delivered to the workmen in sufficient quantities, and at proper times, the superintending officer of the manufactory shall suffer a punishment of 40 blows, and the superintendants of supplies a punishment 30 blows; the workmen shall, in such cases, be excused.

No clause.

SECTION CCCCXXXI. — Due Preservation and Repair of Public Buildings.

When any of the government residences, granaries, treasuries, manufactories, or other buildings, are in a defective or ruinous condition, dition, the officer having charge thereof, shall immediately report the same to his superior, and state the nature of the repairs that are required; and he shall be liable to a punishment of 40 blows, whenever he neglects to do so: if, in consequence of such neglect, any public property should happen to be injured or destroyed, he shall, besides the aforesaid punishment to which he is liable, be obliged to make good the same to government.

On the other hand, if, a regular notice having been given to the superior officer, the latter neglects to authorize the necessary repairs, he alone will be liable, both to the punishment, and to the obligation of making good the amount of the contingent damages.

One clause.

SECTION CCCCXXXII. — Officers of Government not residing in the Habitations allotted to them.

If any of the governors of cities of the first, second, or third order, or of any other provincial sub-divisions, instead of inhabiting the public buildings expressly allotted to their use, hire, and reside in private houses belonging to the inhabitants of the districts under their authority, they shall, for every such offence, be punishable with 80 blows.

Likewise, if an officer, or other person employed in the public service, is convicted of concealing any furniture, utensils, or other articles belonging to government, and of finally withdrawing them altogether from the public service; or in any way losing or destroying, without in due time replacing them, he shall be punished according to the law which is applicable in ordinary cases of losing or destroying public stores, stores, and is already provided ; namely, if wilfully destroying such articles, the officer shall be punished two degrees more severely than in the case of a common theft, except that the branding shall be omitted ; and if losing, three degrees less severely than when wilfully destroying to the same amount.

One clause.

END OF THE FIRST BOOK OF THE SEVENTH DIVISION.

B O O K II.

PUBLIC WAYS:

SECTION CCCCXXXIII. — Damaging Embankments of Rivers.

ANY person who damages or breaks down by stealth, any of the embankments of great rivers, which are maintained at the expence, and by the authority of government, shall be punished with 100 blows; and any person who damages or breaks down the embankments of fish-ponds, or of small rivers, such as are maintained by private individuals at their own expence, shall be punished with 80 blows, although no mischief should ensue in either case; but if the waters overflow in consequence, and such an inundation takes place, as is injurious to, or destructive of the houses, goods, or cultivated lands in the neighbourhood, the amount of the damage shall be estimated, and the offender punished in proportion thereto, according to the law concerning pecuniary malversation.

If the effects of the inundation should extend so far as to do bodily injury to, or occasion the death of any person, the offender shall be punished one degree less severely than in the case of killing or wounding in an affray.

If any person, from vengeful or interested motives, should openly and daringly damage or break down any of the embankments, maintained as aforesaid by government, he shall be punished with 100 blows, and three years banishment; and punished two degrees less severely, in the case of damaging under similar circumstances the embankments maintained by private individuals.

If,

If, in either of these cases, the waters overflow and are destructive as aforesaid; the person who openly and daringly offends, shall be punished in proportion to the estimated amount of the damage sustained, according to the law in the case of a common theft to the same extent; except that he shall not be branded in the manner there provided.

Lastly; if the destruction ensuing from the offence openly and daringly committed, extends to the loss of any lives or the bodily injury of any person, the offender shall be punished according to the law against killing or wounding designedly.

Four clauses.

SECTION CCCCXXXIV. — Neglecting duly to Repair and Maintain Embankments.

When the embankments of great rivers are not duly repaired and maintained, or repaired unseasonably, the superintending officer in that department shall be punished with 50 blows; if any lands, goods, or other articles of property of any kind, are damaged by an inundation in consequence of such neglect and misconduct, the punishment shall be increased to 60 blows; and if any persons are killed or injured, to 80 blows.—In the case of private embankments, the responsible persons neglecting to repair them at the proper seasons, shall be liable to a punishment of 30 blows; and if any damage ensues, in consequence of such neglect, to a punishment of 50 blows.

Nevertheless, in respect to those sudden and impetuous inundations, which are produced by heavy rains, or other similar causes, and which sometimes wash away, and break down irresistibly, all ordinary embankments; as it is not in the power of man always to foresee and guard against such accidents, the parties usually held responsible, shall not be liable in such cases to any punishment.
and

Three clauses.

SECTION CCCCXXXV. — Encroaching upon Public Highways.

Any person who encroaches upon the space allotted to public streets, squares, high-ways, or passages of any kind; that is to say, who appropriates a part of any such space to his own use, by cultivating it, or building on it, shall be punished with 60 blows, and obliged to level and restore the ground to its original state.

Any person who opens a passage through the wall of his house, to carry off filth or ordure into the streets or high-ways, shall be punished with 40 blows; but in the case of a passage being opened to carry off water only, no penalty or punishment shall be inflicted.

No clause.

SECTION CCCCXXXVI. — Repair of Roads and Bridges.

The repair and preservation of all bridges, whether permanent or formed for temporary use, of boats only; and also of all roads and high-ways, shall come under the cognizance and jurisdiction of the governors of the cities of the different orders, their assessors, and deputies; and there shall be a special examination of the same, during the interval between the harvests of each year, in order to ascertain that the bridges are maintained in a firm and complete condition, and that the roads are solid and even: when the regular communication by any of the said established roads and bridges is interrupted, for want of due attention to the necessary repairs, the responsible magistrate shall suffer a punishment of 30 blows for his neglect:

also in places of customary communication, where bridges ought to be built, or ferry-boats stationed for the accommodation of the inhabitants, a failure to do so in either case, shall be punished with 40 blows*.

No clause.

* The original work, it is proper to notice, concludes with two supplemental books, containing fifty-seven articles each, relating, however, almost wholly to the Tartar subjects of the empire; these books therefore, upon the same principle that has been acted upon in respect to the other supplemental parts of the work, has been omitted in the present translation.

END OF THE PENAL CODE.

PLACEHOLDER PAGE

This page is a placeholder, inserted to ensure proofread pages will be aligned even if this page is replaced.

Replace with the original page if available.

APPENDIX.

APPENDIX.

No. I.

[Referred to from the Translation of the Third prefatory Edict.]

Translation of the Testamentary Edict of KIEN-LUNG Emperor of China *.

ON the seventh day of the second moon of the fourth year of KIA KING †, is recorded the testamentary edict of His late Majesty, by the grace and appointment of Heaven, THE MOST HIGH EMPEROR, in these words.

We ‡ have remarked that all those sovereign princes on whom the decrees of Heaven have conferred a long and uninterrupted enjoyment of prosperity, have been distinguished by their exemplary conduct, and by an innate integrity of disposition, which bears a resemblance to the excellence of the Divine perfection. Virtues like these attending them through life, failed not to secure a lasting and abundant felicity. With this persuasion, it has been most constantly our endeavour to guard against every such want of application or want of energy on our part, as might counteract the execution of the gracious designs of Heaven.

We were at the same time fully sensible how arduous it is to poize with an unerring hand an overflowing fulness, how arduous, to preserve entire the harmony and integrity of a vast empire; nor were we unconscious that to persevere from the

* The history of this Emperor is too well known to need any comment. He succeeded his father Yong-tching, in 1736, resigned the throne after a reign of sixty years, to his son Kia King, the present Emperor, and died the seventh of February, 1799, aged eighty-seven years four months and thirteen days; — according, however, to the Chinese mode of computing, he was in the eighty-ninth year of his age.

† Twelfth of March 1799.

‡ The plural is here introduced, not solely in conformity to European usage, but also as the nearest approximation to the pronoun exclusively appropriated in the Chinese language to sovereignty. The phrase “I the Emperor” might perhaps be more strictly correct, but its adoption would have been in many places very inconvenient.

begin-beginning to the end, with unabated attention, is an undertaking still more difficult of performance.

Chiefly we are indebted to the all-powerful protection of Heaven, and to the sublime instructions which have been left by our ancestors for the guidance of their posterity; we have likewise gratefully to acknowledge the rare affection shewn towards us in our early youth by our Imperial grandfather, as well as the wise and provident selection of ministers which was made by our Imperial father, from whom also we received the sacred sceptre of this realm.

From the very commencement of our reign we noted the progress of each day with careful solicitude; we beheld an era of profound tranquillity and glorious prosperity; but we never dared to give way to exultation or to indulge in the full enjoyment of these advantages: we rather engaged our attention in the contemplation of the grand duties of a prince; namely, on the one hand, a reverent observance of the laws of Heaven, together with a due veneration for the memory of his forefathers; and on the other, a diligent and benevolent administration of his people. These maxims are, indeed, easily acquired and retained in remembrance; but their execution is not therefore the less arduous or perplexing. During the long course of years, however, which has elapsed since our accession, we certainly have strictly adhered to the observance of the duties of our station, and have forborne to relax in our attention, from the earliest dawn to the close of day, to any of our various avocations.

In the practice of devotion, we have sedulously observed the appointed sacrifices and occasional oblations to the Divinity, and have always personally assisted at each ceremonial, in order to testify the purity of our heart and the unfeigned piety by which we were actuated, even at a time when our extreme age had a claim to some degree of relaxation and indulgence.

Four times in the course of our reign we personally undertook a journey to our city of Mougden, in order to pay our humble adorations at the tombs of our Imperial ancestors.

When the administration of this empire was committed to our charge, we indeed beheld before us a task of serious difficulty, but we were rendered thereby, only more earnest and solicitous in avoiding all deviation from the strict line of conduct we had prescribed to ourselves. All parts of our various and widely extended domains shared equally our attention, and frequently during the darkness of the night, as well as at the middle hour of the day, we have attended, unconscious of fatigue, in the councils of our ministers, for the purpose of communicating our decisions on their reports, and of issuing new ordinances for the public weal, that thus no day might be permitted to pass away, without having been duly filled and employed.

The

The abundance or scarcity of rain, the favourable or deficient harvests, and the other casualties which influence the prosperity of our various provinces, are objects in which we have been always most deeply interested. Six times, therefore, we have visited our provinces of Kiang-nan and Kiang-see, with the view of directing the embankment of the rivers, and the construction of dykes and causeways to repel the encroachments of the sea.

Regarding the people also as our children, and as looking up to us their father for support and protection, we have taken occasion five times to grant a universal remission of all the taxes that are usually received in specie; and thrice have granted a similar remission of all such duties as are payable in kind. On other occasions, likewise, we granted a remission of taxes to the inhabitants of particular provinces, especially when afflicted by an inundation, drought, or other partial calamity; and, in such cases, we frequently superadded a bountiful distribution of millions to the poor, in order to alleviate their distresses; being persuaded, that in thus providing for the happiness and prosperity of our subjects, we accomplished the most important duty of an upright administration.

Through the protecting influence of Heaven, and the wise counsels left us by our ancestors, we have succeeded in establishing peace and tranquillity throughout our dominions. The bordering countries, we have placed in a state of cultivation and improvement; we have established order and restored tranquillity throughout the states of Eli *, Whee-poo †, and the greater and lesser Kin-tchuen ‡. The tribe of Mien-tien || has submitted to our authority; the King of Cochin china had acknowledged himself our vassal; and we have lastly dictated a peace to the nation of Ko-ur-ke §.

Even those nations who visit this country by navigating their ships across the ocean, have bowed down before our throne, and brought presents for our acceptance.

With respect to the inhabitants of the interior of the empire, who have excited commotions and disorders among themselves, we may shortly expect that this evil will be eradicated, and that the tranquillity of the provinces will be re-established.

The reports, however, of the advantages obtained by our generals over these internal enemies, clearly indicate that the employment of troops against them was unavoidable.

* The Eleuth Tartars.

† Little Boucharia.

‡ Countries inhabited by tribes of Tartars, immediately bordering on the province of Se-chuen.

|| This people inhabit the countries immediately bordering on the province of Yun-nan.

§ Probably Napaul.

Thus,

Thus, during the long and eventful period of our reign, the weighty affairs of government have been the objects of our constant regard; and, deeply impressed with the critical importance of the charge, we never ventured to pronounce the objects of government to have been so completely attained, or the peace of the empire so immutably established, as to admit of our relaxing our efforts or indulging in repose.

Ultimately, however, we recalled to our recollection the mental prayer which we had addressed to the Supreme Being on our accession to the Imperial dignity, and in which we had made a solemn intimation of our intention to resign to our son and successor the sovereignty of the realm, if the Divine Will should grant to our reign a sixty years continuance; forasmuch as we were unwilling to exceed in any case, the duration of our Imperial grandfather's government*.

Our years had indeed already amounted to twenty five, when we thus provided for the event of a sexagenary reign, as if we were gifted with a prescience to enable us to anticipate so protracted a period; it is under the guardian auspices of our Imperial progenitors that this inestimable favor of a reign so glorious, and so happily prolonged, has been extended to us.

While surrounded with numerous relations, and witnessing at once five generations of our family and descendants, we finally observed the progressive revolution of a cycle to be accomplished since the empire had been committed to our hands; and when we then reflected on our original wishes and designs, the contemplation of the corresponding event impressed us with the warmest sensations of joy and gratitude.

Accordingly, on the first day of the year Ping-shin † we transferred to our son, the present Emperor, the seals of the sovereign authority, reserving to ourself the title of MOST HIGH EMPEROR, as a distinctive appellation, thus accomplishing in the end, what in our solemn invocation to Heaven we had originally proposed.

We did not, indeed, conceive this arrangement with a view to obtain a respite from fatigue, or to indulge ourself in repose, by terminating the labours of an active and eventful reign with that ease and tranquillity, which our numerous and declining years seemed to warrant and require; we were rather influenced in our resolution of resigning the more immediate duties of government, by the consideration of our being enabled thenceforward to be more immediately occupied in aiding and instructing our successor in the guidance of public affairs, as long as our strength and ability remained unexhausted.

* The Emperor Kaung-hee reigned sixty one years.

† The eighth of February 1796.

To retire from the cares of government, merely with a view to our personal ease and convenience, would, indeed, be an ungrateful requital for the favor and protection of Heaven and of our ancestors; an act repugnant to our feelings, which we could neither wish nor dare to commit.

Upwards of three years have since passed away, during which we have diligently devoted our attention to the instruction, and direction of the government of our successor.

We have witnessed of late the operations of an active campaign against the rebels of Se-chuen, and have observed, with satisfaction, the numerous advantages and repeated victories which have been obtained by the diligent exertions of our Imperial troops; we are even in the immediate expectation of the surrender of all the rebellious leaders, and anticipate the day on which hostilities will cease, and universal tranquillity be re-established in these dominions.

Being arrived therefore at an era so justly to be deemed auspicious, and so peculiarly distinguished by the happiness and welfare of our people, we might certainly venture at length to relax from our usual sollicitude; but to a mind accustomed to look forward to the season of difficulty, in order to meet its approach with ease and promptitude, it is impossible to unbend altogether from care.

As upon the year *Keng-shin, which is the next following to the present, would occur the ninetieth anniversary of our age, last year, the Emperor, our son, in concert with the princes and great officers of state, was desirous of determining upon the celebration of that event by a congratulatory festival, and earnestly requested our consent to the carrying the same into effect; to which we, shortly after, in consideration of the meritorious motives which actuated them in their proceedings, replied by an edict expressive of our approbation and concurrence.

Viewing, indeed, the advanced age of upwards of fourscore years, which we had then attained in the full enjoyment of every prosperity, the Emperor, our son, and the inhabitants of our vast domains, were naturally filled with joy and exultation: no event could certainly have been more ardently desired by our son and the great officers of the empire, than an opportunity of celebrating such an anniversary.

The grandeur, however, and profusion attendant on a general rejoicing were by no means the objects of our desire; we were satisfied with the contemplation of the maxim of antiquity, which enumerates a life prolonged to an advanced age amongst the five instances of human felicity: for although among our ancient monarchs, some have likewise attained a very advanced period of life,

* The year 1800.

according to the testimony of the annals of the empire, yet it may be observed, that within the full period of an hundred years, the longevity to which they had aspired has in every instance received its termination.

We have already attained the eighty-ninth year of our age; therefore but a few short years are wanting to complete the utmost period of longevity: it then only further behoves us reverently to employ the remaining days of our life, and patiently to await the hour which is to conclude it. For shall we not doom the portion of life allotted to us sufficient, nor ever cease to indulge hopes, however immoderate, of prolonging our existence!

A strong constitution and temperament of body have happily preserved us from indisposition until this winter, when, in the course of the twelfth moon of the last year, we were suddenly attacked by a disorder proceeding from cold, and though we were apparently restored to health by the aid of medicine, we perceived that the disease had left our strength of body materially impaired, and, shortly after we had received the congratulations of our ministers in the hall of audience in the palace of Kan-tsing-kung on the first day of the new year, our appetite wholly failed us; we are now also sensible that our faculties of sight and hearing are declining apace.

The Emperor, our son, has indeed been piously engaged in procuring medical assistance, and assiduously attentive in seeking the means most likely to conduce to our recovery, but we feel that at our advanced period of life, medicine can prove of very little avail, and therefore make this preparation previous to the last mortal paroxysm of disease. After a long succession of years we are about to close a reign sustained with caution and assiduity, and invariably favoured by the distinguished protection of Heaven and of our ancestors. We are now about to resign for ever the administration of this empire; but shall leave it in the hands of the Emperor, our son, whose eminent abilities and pious disposition are in every respect conformable to our wishes, and will, doubtless, ensure to him a felicity like ours in his future undertakings; an idea which furnishes us with the most grateful consolation.

To all the nobility and magistrates, from the highest to the lowest rank, in the exterior as well as interior departments of the empire, we especially recommend, diligently to execute their respective employments, and to preserve their hearts free from all taint and corruption, that they may worthily and effectually serve the Emperor and promote the objects of his government, and finally, that their conduct may ensure to the millions of people subjected to his authority, universal prosperity and peace.

We shall then depart hence, and associate in Heaven with the souls of our glorious ancestors, without leaving a wish that is not satisfied, or a desire that is not fulfilled.

With

With respect to the solemnization of mourning, we direct, that it may be observed for twenty-seven days, in the first instance, and in all other respects conformably with the sacred institutions of the empire; we have lastly, and especially to enjoin our posterity, that the respect and oblations due to the spirits of Heaven and Earth, to our ancestors, and to their sacred monuments, be ever diligently and faithfully observed.

This our last will and pleasure, we hereby publish and declare, that it may be generally known and respected.

No. II.

[Referred to from the Translation of the Third prefatory Edict.]

Translation of the Edict extraordinary of the present Emperor of China, by which the Death of His Father, the Emperor KIEN-LUNG, was first officially made public.*

HIS Majesty the Emperor, by the grace and appointment of Heaven, issues this Edict extraordinary.

With feeble virtues, and inspired with awe by a sense of our own insufficiency, we have held the vast inheritance of these dominions, since it pleased our Imperial Father, THE MOST HIGH EMPEROR, on the first day of the year Ping-shin, (the 8th of February 1796,) to transfer the seals of the empire to our charge.

We applied with unremitting diligence and attention to the discharge of the high duty then imposed on us, that we might not frustrate the gracious designs that were executed in our favour, though our firmest reliance was placed in the protection of Heaven and of our illustrious ancestors.

Our Imperial Father, however, continued to enjoy his wonted health, accompanied by such vigour of mind as well as of body, as enabled him to continue to direct us in the administration of the empire. We daily attended his royal presence, listened to the instructions he was graciously pleased to communicate, and submitted the various affairs of government to his consideration. In the annual visitation which His Majesty was pleased to make through different parts of the empire, the people were exhilarated by his presence, and thronged from all quarters to behold his august person.

* The Edict forms a kind of supplement to the preceding; and though in itself less important, may not be found altogether uninteresting.

After making our accustomed enquiries concerning his health, and assisting at his Imperial repast, we had always the satisfaction to observe, that time had not materially affected the hale constitution of body, and animated spirits of our Imperial Father; a view that penetrated the utmost recesses of our heart with the most delightful consolation.

Last year, having respectfully considered, that on the approaching year Keng-shin (A. D. 1800) the glorious anniversary would occur of the 90th year of the age of THE MOST HIGH EMPEROR, we summoned an extraordinary council of the princes and great officers of state, in order jointly to solicit His Majesty's consent to a due celebration of that event; this he was graciously pleased soon after to grant to our desire, and we were ready to call Heaven and Earth to witness the lively satisfaction and gaiety of heart which we experienced in anticipation of that event.

Viewing with veneration the exalted age of our Imperial Parent, and the unparalleled felicity by which, as it were a birth-right, he has been attended from his infancy, until the latter days in which he is surrounded by relatives of five generations, every one would doubtlessly concur in expressing by words and actions their congratulations on a subject so justly entitled to their praise, as his prosperous reign and inestimable virtues.

We have ourselves addressed the most fervent prayers to Heaven still to prolong his days, and to crown them as heretofore with uninterrupted felicity: indeed, we complied with the sacred precept only, where it saith, "Thou shalt rejoice;" yet were unwilling to observe it, when it proceeds to say, "and thou shalt tremble also."

Freedom from indisposition and peaceful repose, however, continued to bless the declining years of our Imperial Father; the peculiar protection of Heaven preserved his happy constitution from the approaches of infirmity during a long succession of years, like the transition of a single day, until this winter, when, in the last moon of the year just concluded, he met with an indisposition arising from cold, and occasioned by a sudden exposure to wind.

Medical aid seemingly restored his health; but his wonted strength was evidently impaired by the attack, though he still continued to impart to us his gracious advice and instruction, as he had done previous to his indisposition.

The various Mon-gou, and other tributary princes, as well as the ambassadors of foreign states, still continued therefore, as last year, to anticipate their introduction to his Imperial presence, for the purpose of receiving the gracious communications, which he might be pleased to make to them upon the occasion; nor were they unpre-

unprepared, on their part, to celebrate with due honours His Majesty's almost centenary age.

On the first day of the new year we waited on his august person, in company with the princes of the blood and great officers of state of civil and military rank, in order to offer our humble congratulations upon that festive day, after which we flattered ourselves that the entire re-establishment of his health would be accomplished in the progress of the ensuing spring.

But our expectations were deceived; on the 8th hour of the morning of the 3d day of the first moon, (February 7, 1799,) our Imperial Father suddenly departed from among his ministers and people. The Imperial Spirit ascended to the regions above.

We may strike the earth with our feet, lift our voices to Heaven, rend our hearts; and shed tears of blood, but we can never repay the vast debt of gratitude we owe; it is all of no avail.

Respectfully reviewing the period of sixty years during which our Imperial Father swayed the sceptre of these dominions, we see that the people were constantly animated by his virtues and benevolence, as the earth is gladdened by refreshing showers. The very vitals and inmost recesses of their hearts were conscious of the benign influence of his government.

All creatures that breathe the air, and possess blood in their veins, must acknowledge the ties of kindred, and surely will mourn the loss now sustained, like that of a father or of a mother, of whom they had recently been bereft.

As for ourself, to whom by his gracious goodness the Imperial succession had previously been granted, the grief by which we are penetrated upon this awful event, is more cutting than sharp instruments.

But what avail our words and lamentations; we rather ought to meditate on the weighty and important charge which our Imperial Father has assigned us, and endeavour to practise the virtuous maxims and institutions, as well as to seek to fulfil the wishes and designs, of our illustrious predecessor.

These are the duties, which, however weak and inadequate, we are now called on to discharge; and anxiously as we may now wish for the gracious aid and instruction of our Imperial Father, we know that that resource has irrecoverably failed us, and in this hour of affliction and distress, we have yet more especial reason to apprehend ourselves unequal to the burthen.

It is therefore upon the upright and faithful conduct of the various officers and magistrates in the interior and exterior departments of our dominions that we must chiefly rely; we do indeed confide in their utmost exertions for the support of our government, and the dignity of our person, and expect that they will thereby testify the sense with which they are impressed of the gracious benefits conferred on them

by

by our Imperial Father. The commanders in chief, and other officers serving in our armies, should also recollect with gratitude, the important and signal favours conferred by the Sovereign who appointed them to their respective stations and commands; they should likewise recal to their minds the wise instructions and advice by which he aided and directed their proceedings; and thus, renewing in themselves a spirit of energy and activity, finally clear the country from all enemies whatever of the public peace.

They will thereby afford a grateful consolation to the sacred spirit which is ascended, and which, though now become a blessed inhabitant of Heaven, will not be unconscious of their exertions.

With regard to the due observance of the rites and ceremonies of mourning upon this occasion, we appoint their highnesses Chun-ying prince of Jui-ching, Tun-sing prince of Ching-ching, and Tung-sun prince of Tee-kiun; the ministers of state, Ho-quen and Vang-kie; the presidents of tribunals, Foo-kaung-gan, Te-ming, King-quee, Tung-tcho, and Ping-yung-sing, to form a council for administering the same in the public department; we likewise appoint the great officer of state Wun-pu-ching-chu, to superintend the ceremonial thereof in the private department; and we especially direct, that they do carefully examine the ancient regulations, and after diligently consulting and deliberating upon each question, regularly inform us of the result.

This edict and notification extraordinary we now publish for general information and obedience. Khin-tse.

No. III.

[Referred to from the Translation of the Third Prefatory Edict.]

NOTE.

THE following are titles of articles of preliminary matter which are prefixed to the original work, but which it has not been deemed necessary to introduce into the translation.

Second prefatory edict of the Emperor YONG-TCHING, dated the 9th day of the 9th moon of the 3d year of his reign, A. D. 1725.

Prefatory edict of the Emperor KIEN-LUNG, dated the 5th year of his reign, A. D. 1740.

First rescript of the supreme court for the execution of public justice, (Hing-Poo), dated the 21st day of the 12th moon of the 52d year of KIEN-LUNG, A. D. 1788.

Second

Second rescript of the same supreme court, dated the 2d day of the 2d moon of the 55th year of KIEN-LUNG, A. D. 1790.

Third rescript of the same, dated the 18th of the 3d moon of the 60th year of KIEN-LUNG, A. D. 1795.

Preface of the compilers of the present edition of the Penal Code, bearing date the 4th year of KIA-KING, A. D. 1799.

List of the names of the compilers, and others, sixteen in all, who were employed in editing the work.

Preface of the superintendant of the prefs.

General description of the work, of its subdivisions, and of its arrangement.

No. IV.

[Referred to from the Introductory Table of Degrees of Mourning.]

NOTE.

IN addition to the detail which has been translated of the cases in which full mourning is ordered to be worn, it may be sufficient to notice briefly, that the text then proceeds to particularize the twenty-four relationships in the first degree, in which mourning is only required to be worn from three to five months; the fourteen relationships which are comprised in the second degree; the twenty-one relationships which are comprised in the third degree; and the forty-two which are comprised in the fourth or remotest degree.

In the original text, there are likewise tables subjoined of consanguinity under various circumstances, and one table in particular, which describes those who are considered by the laws to be step-fathers and step-mothers, in the following manner:

- | | | |
|--------------|---|---|
| Step-Fathers | { | <ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Mother's second husband, if also an adopted father. 2. Mother's second husband, if not an adopted father. 3. Deceased father's second wife's second husband. |
| Step-Mothers | { | <ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Father's principal wife. 2. Father's wife, substituted in the place of the principal wife, deceased. 3. Father's wife, by whom nursed or suckled. 4. Father's wife, who was substituted in the place of the natural mother. 5. Father's other wives, excepting the one who is the natural mother. 6. Father's repudiated wife, if also the natural mother. 7. Father's re-married widow, if also the natural mother. 8. Adopted mother. |

The

The father's principal wife has distinct rank and privileges and is, in some respects, the legally adopted mother of all the children; but each child is also bound by law in a particular manner, to its natural mother, except under certain circumstances, as in the sixth and seventh cases above described.

No. V.

[Referred to from Section I. Page 2.]

N O T E.

THE number of supplementary clauses annexed to each section in the original, is regularly noticed, and will enable the student of the Chinese language, if desirous of investigating the subject of any particular section more closely, to judge how far a reference to the original text is likely to afford him satisfaction.

The following is a translation of the most material among the clauses subjoined to the first section.

TRANSLATION.

Instruments of torture of the following dimensions, may be used upon an investigation of a charge of robbery or homicide :

The instrument for compressing the ankle-bones, shall consist of a middle-piece, 3 Che 4 *Tsun long, and two side-pieces, 3 Che each in length; the upper end of each piece shall be circular, and 1 Tsun 8 decimals in diameter; the lower ends shall be cut square, and, 2 Tsun in thickness:—At a distance of 6 Tsun from the lower ends, four hollows, or sockets, shall be excavated, 1 Tsun 6 decimals in diameter, and 7 decimals of a Tsun in depth each: one, on each side the middle-piece, and one in each of the other pieces, to correspond.—The lower ends being fixed and immoveable, and the ankles of the criminal under examination being lodged between the sockets, a painful compression is effected by forcibly drawing together the upper ends.

The instrument of torture for compressing the fingers, shall consist of 5 small round sticks, 7 Tsun in length, and $\frac{4}{10}$ of a Tsun in diameter each: the application of this instrument is nearly similar to that of the former.

In those cases wherein the use of torture is allowed, the offender, whenever he contumaciously refuses to confess the truth, shall forthwith be put to the question by torture;

* The Che exceeds the British measure of a foot by about half an inch; the Tsun is its decimal part.

torture ; and it shall be lawful to repeat the operation a second time, if the criminal still refuses to make a confession. — On the other hand, any magistrate who wantonly or arbitrarily applies the question by torture, shall be tried for such offence, in the tribunal of his immediate superior ; and the latter shall make due enquiry into the circumstances, on pain of being himself accused before the supreme court of judicature at Peking, if guilty of wilful concealment or connivance.

Ordinary prisoners are to be confined with the small chain : the Cangue, or moveable pillory is never to be used, except expressly directed by the laws ; nor to exceed 25 *Kin in weight, unless otherwise specially determined and expressed.

When a sentence of banishment is passed against the relations, or others, implicated in the guilt of an offender, the corporal punishment, which is usually inflicted in different degrees, proportionate to the duration of the banishment, shall be understood to be altogether remitted.

From the 25th of the 4th moon, to the last day of the 6th moon of each year, (in consideration of the heat at that season), the punishment of the lesser bamboo shall be remitted altogether ; and that of the greater bamboo shall be reduced one degree, and further mitigated, by inflicting only eight for every ten blows to which the offender is condemned †. — This indulgence shall not, however, be extended to any other offenders beside those who are actually to be discharged within the period above-mentioned. — During the same interval, a particular degree of relaxation shall also be allowed to prisoners in general ; and offenders sentenced to wear the Cangue shall be permitted to lay it aside, provided they can find securities for their subsequently fulfilling the law, by resuming it at the expiration of the said period.

Offenders convicted of thieving, robbing, wounding, or assaulting, shall be excluded from the benefit of the last-mentioned regulation.

No capital execution shall take place during the period of the first or sixth moons of any year ; and in the event of any conviction of a crime in a court of justice during the said intervals, for which the law directs immediate execution, the criminal shall, nevertheless, be respited until the first day of the moon next following.

The mitigation of the law concerning the infliction of corporal punishment during the summer months, shall take effect without any particular reference to the Emperor.

* The Kin exceeds the British pound by one-third.

† This reduction is over and above that already specified in the text of the fundamental law.

The instruments for extorting confession shall be given into the charge of the magistrates of districts; but shall in the first instance, be examined and approved by the governors of the cities to whose jurisdiction they belong; secondly, by the chief judge of the province; and lastly, by the viceroy or sub-viceroy. — Any magistrate using illegal or unexamined instruments of torture, will be liable to be accused thereof before the supreme court.

No. VI.

[Referred to from Section II. Page 5.]

NOTE.

THE title of this section might be, perhaps, more literally translated, “The Ten Wickednesses,” or “The Ten Abominations ;” but the choice of terms is not very material, as the text fully explains the nature of the offences ranked under this class; as well as the reasons for introducing a description of them in this place, though a declaration of the punishments incurred by such transgressions, is reserved for another part of the code. — In order to give, if possible, the full force of the expressions employed, this article has been translated with more freedom than those which are merely declaratory of punishment, or less descriptive of the character of the offence. — These observations will equally apply to the subject of the next section, and the manner in which it has been translated.

No. VII.

[Referred to from Section III. Page 6.]

NOTE.

THE nature and extent of the privileges enjoyed by these classes are described in the two following sections. — Excepting the first and seventh classes, it can be scarcely supposed, that this classification has any existence in practice; and, in fact, the first and seventh classes must, generally speaking, comprehend all those who have any claim to be ranked among the others.

Exclusive of the limited privilege of birth here noticed, there are a few hereditary dignities occasionally conferred by the Emperor, which descend to the children in the manner described in the first section of the next division of the code.
to

No. VIII.

[Referred to from Section VI. Page 9.]

N O T E.

A Short statement of the charges against the minister of China Ho-chung-tong, or more properly Ho-quen, and the final adjudication of his sentence, has already appeared in England; but the celebrity of his fate may render acceptable an entire version, as well as justify the introduction in this place of a few observations regarding the history of that extraordinary man.

Although he had long possessed eminent power in the state, it does not appear that the peculiar character and history of this minister had been known in Europe previous to the period of the British embassy.

The powerful influence which he displayed on that occasion soon discovered, that to his talents and authority the disposal of public affairs in China was principally confided; and the disinclination which he was found to have entertained to the British interests, is conceived to have had a principal share in counteracting the views of that expedition.

It is observed in the authentic account of that embassy, that Ho-chung-tong, “ who enjoyed almost exclusively the confidence of the Emperor, was said to be “ a Tartar of obscure birth, raised from an inferior station about twenty years “ before, when, while he was on guard at one of the palace gates, the Em- “ peror passing through it, was struck merely with the comeliness of his counte- “ nance; but afterwards finding him to be a man of talents and education, he “ quickly elevated him to dignity; and he might be said to possess, in fact, under “ the Emperor, the whole power of the empire.”

It is subjoined, that “ His Imperial Majesty was not, however, blindly guided “ by his advice, and once on conceiving that he had attempted to impose on his “ master by a falsehood, he was disgraced as suddenly as he had formerly been “ raised, and he was reduced to his original low station for about a fortnight; “ when a fortunate accident having proved to the Sovereign, that there was no “ real ground for his dissatisfaction, he restored his late servant to his wonted “ favour, and to a power bounded only by his own.”

It would thus seem, that the vigour and wisdom of the Emperor KIEN-LUNG was, until that time, sufficient to restrain within due bounds of subordination the ambitious spirit and enterprising genius of the favourite; but it is the general opinion in China, that he took advantage of the state of dotage, into which the aged Emperor latterly declined. — This circumstance is, indeed, strongly implied to have been the case, though not directly expressed, out of respect to the memory of KIEN-LUNG, in the articles of accusation which the present Emperor brought forward against Ho-chung-tong, almost immediately after His Imperial Parent's demise.

Some of the charges may appear frivolous, and others the mere suggestion of personal enmity; but the presumptive and corroborating evidence arising from the immense and almost incalculable treasures which he was found, upon an examination of his property, to have amassed, afford a sufficiently convincing proof of his guilt and corruption. According to a statement that was received as authentic at Canton at the time of the confiscation of his effects, it appears, that besides lands, houses, and other immoveable property to an amazing amount, not less than 80 millions of Chinese ounces of silver, or about 23,330,000*l.* sterling value in bullion or gems, was found in his treasury. This sum, though immense, is not incredible, when the vast extent of the empire is considered, over the various departments of which, he had certainly for many years a very unusual, and indeed almost an unbounded influence.

A disclosure of the real character of the favourite was, however, it seems, for a considerable time prevented by the exertion and display of some estimable as well as splendid talents, for which he was remarkable. It is observed in the account of the British Embassy, that “ the manners of Ho-chung-tong were not less pleasing than his understanding was penetrating and acute. He seemed, indeed, to possess the qualities of a consummate statesman. He was called to office and authority, no doubt, by the mere favour of the Sovereign, as must be the case in most monarchies; but he was confirmed and maintained in it by the approving voice of such persons of rank and eminence as have influence in the determinations of the most absolute governments. In those governments in Asia, the prince is not afraid, as is the case in Europe, to debase his dignity by alliances with his subjects; and the number of children of Asiatic monarchs by different wives and concubines, occasion so many matrimonial connections with the crown, that the influence arising from them is counteracted by competition. A tie, however, of this sort, added to power already acquired, increases and secures it. A daughter of the Emperor is married to a son of Ho-chung-tong. This circumstance was thought sufficient to alarm some of the Imperial Family, and other loyal subjects of the empire, as if they were fearful of the heights to which the ambition of that favourite might aspire.”

The

The son, who was thus honoured, is likewise included in the sentence of condemnation; but, on account of the connection he had formed with the Imperial Family, he experienced no more than a trifling diminution of rank, and a removal from public affairs, while the other relations of the minister appear to have been prosecuted and disgraced with an almost undistinguishing severity, according to the long established maxim of the Chinese laws, which esteems a degree of criminality to be inherent in all who are in any respect connected or allied with persons guilty of heinous offences.

It was, however, at the same time prescribed to the son to confine himself to the society of his family, that he might have no opportunity of reviving any of the dangerous pretensions of his father, or of executing any schemes of revenge for the fate to which he had been condemned.

Apprehensions were also previously entertained, that the views of Ho-chung-tong, might lead him to attempt an open revolt, or at least to endeavour to escape from a court, in which, after the death of the late Emperor, he ceased to have any protection, except what his connections and personal resources might afford him. It was probably with the view of defeating such designs, that the new Emperor appointed him to the honourable office of one of the chief superintendants of the mourning on the occasion of his father's decease; as it thus became easy to arrest his person, while engaged in the discharge of a duty which confined him to the palace, and precluded him from taking any measures for his safety, or consulting with and assembling his adherents.

The promptitude and vigour with which the Emperor, almost at the moment of his accession to independent power, struck at the root of a dangerous combination of interests which he had good reason to suppose secretly menaced his crown and dignity; and the immediate condemnation to death of this formidable state culprit, together with the punishment or humiliation of all his connections and adherents, while they were yet disconcerted in their projects by the sudden event of the late Emperor's decease, are certainly some proofs of that political courage and sagacity which are requisite in the character of a monarch of great and powerful empire.

1. Translation of an Imperial Edict, containing the Articles of Impeachment exhibited against Ho-chung-tong (otherwise Ho-queñ) Minister of China, by the Emperor KIA-KING, in the 4th Year of his Reign.

ON the 25th day of the 1st moon of the 4th year of KIA-KING, the supreme council for military affairs transmitted, by an extraordinary courier, His Imperial Majesty's decree of the 11th day of the 1st moon, which is as follows:

Extraordinary

Extraordinary marks of the royal favour of our most august, and now departed Father, were granted to Ho-quen, by elevating him through successive degrees, from an attendant at the palace to the supreme rank of a Minister of the empire, and bestowing on him an important command in the Imperial army, the advantages of which he continued to enjoy for many years by an exertion of royal munificence, far beyond his deserts, as well as unexampled among the nobility of the court.

Since we received the important trust of the government of this empire, and particularly since we have been plunged into affliction by the awful event of the decease of our Imperial Father, we have repeatedly meditated on the passage of the Lun-yu, which recommends the virtue of a three-years forbearance from change when succeeding to an inheritance. But, with regard to our Imperial Father, whose profound observance of the laws of Heaven, and pious veneration for his ancestors were so conspicuous; who reigned over his people with no less vigilance than affection, and whose sincerity of heart and rectitude of government, all countries whether within or without the limits of his dominions, both knew and gratefully acknowledged; the decrees of such a prince should be observed for ten thousand years, and ever regulate the administration of his successors, instead of being extended only to a triennial duration.

Deeply impressed with these sentiments, we are most unwilling to displace any of the chosen servants of the state whom our Imperial Father had employed or honoured with his confidence; and wherein they might be found guilty, every palliation and excuse would be admitted, in order to enable us to dispense with the rigorous execution of justice.

These, we declare before the light of Heaven, are our sincere sentiments and desire. But the crimes for which Ho-quen now stands impeached in several distinct charges by the united voice of the principal magistrates and nobles of the state, are of such magnitude and importance as appear to exclude even the possibility of extenuation.

As soon, accordingly, as we had performed the immediate duties which were imposed on us by the demise of our Imperial Father, we issued orders that Ho-quen should be divested of all his dignities and employments, and committed to trial on the following charges, or articles of impeachment:

1st, When our Royal Father, on the 3d day of the 9th moon of the 60th year of his reign, elected himself to be his heir and successor, Ho-quen waited on us, on the 2d of the moon previous to the disclosure of the Imperial edict, and presented us with the insignia of the rank newly conferred on us, thereby betraying an important secret of the state that had been confided to him, in the expectation that such conduct would be meritorious in our estimation.

2d, On receiving the summons of our Imperial Father, on the 1st moon of the preceding year, to attend at the palace of Tuen-ming-yuen, he ventured to ride in

on on horseback through the left gate, and by the great hall of Ching-ta-quang-ming as far as the bottom of the mount called Sheu-shan, regardless to a degree beyond example, of a Father and a Sovereign.

3d, When formerly suffering from a lameness in his feet, he went into the interior of the palace in a palanquin, and passed and repassed through the gate of Sbin-vu-men in a wheel chair before the gazing eyes of the multitude, and without the smallest fear or hesitation.

4th, The young females that were educated for the service of the palace, he took from thence, and appropriated to himself as concubines, without any sensation of shame or regard to decorum.

5th, During the latter campaigns against the rebels in the provinces of Se-chuen and Hou-quang, when our Imperial Father waited with anxious expectation for intelligence from the army, so as to be bereft of sleep and appetite, Ho-quen received himself, the various reports that arrived from the troops stationed in different quarters of the empire, and detained them according to his pleasure, with a view to deceive his sovereign by misrepresentation and concealment; in consequence whereof the military operations of the campaign were for a considerable time incomplete and ineffectual.

6th, Having been appointed, by a decree of our Imperial Father, to the Presidency of the supreme board for civil affairs, and also to that of the supreme court of judicature; and afterwards, on account of some experience acquired in superintending the disbursements of the army, having been directed by another Imperial decree to officiate as secretary to the supreme board of revenue; he immediately united in his own person the power and authority which were respectively annexed to these several high offices.

7th, Last winter, when the venerable person of our Imperial Father laboured under infirmity, his signature and hand-writing were in some places confused and not easily distinguishable; whereupon Ho-quen had the audacity to declare, that they had "better be thrown aside;" and then issued orders of his own suggestion.

8th, In the last moon of the preceding year, Kieu-ko reported, that in the districts of Sin-Wha and Quei-Te, a party of above a thousand of the rebels had collected, and forcibly carried away a herd of cattle belonging to the Da-lai-la-ma's merchants, as well as mortally wounded two persons, and that they still continued to ravage the district of Ching-hay. Ho-quen however rejected and dismissed the report, and, concealing the whole transaction, took no measures in consequence.

9th, On the late event of our Imperial Father's decease, we issued our orders, declaring that the attendance of such of the princes and chieftains of the Mongou tribes as had not had the small-pox would be dispensed with; but Ho-quen, in opposition to our commands, signified to them to attend indiscriminately, whether having having or not having had that disease; regardless of the intention of our government to shew to foreign tribes our kindness and consideration. The motives of his conduct herein it would indeed be difficult to investigate.

10th, The minister of state Su-lin-go, was entirely deaf, and worn out by age and infirmity; yet, because he was connected by marriage with Ho-lin, the younger brother of Ho-quen, his incapacity to discharge the duties of his situation was artfully concealed from the Emperor's knowledge.

11th, The officers Ou-fung-lan, Ly-ban, and Ly-quang-jun, having received their education at the house of Ho-quen, have been since promoted to the most respectable offices in the state.

12th, Many of the principal officers whose names have been registered in the different civil and military departments have been, in instances too numerous to be particularized in this place, removed and dismissed according to his pleasure, and by his sole authority.

13th, In the late confiscation of the property of Ho-quen, many apartments were found to be built in a most costly manner of the Imperial wood Nan-moo, and several ornamented terraces and separate inclosures were observed to have been constructed in the style and resemblance of the Imperial palace of Ning-sheu-kung: the gardens were likewise laid out in a style little differing from that of Tuen-ming-yuen and Fung-tao-yao-tay; but with what view or design we cannot imagine.

14th, Among his treasures of pearls and precious stones, upwards of two hundred strings or bracelets of the former were discovered, many times exceeding in value those in our Imperial possession. One among the pearls belonging to Ho-quen was of an enormous size, and exceeded even that which adorns the Imperial crown. There were likewise found various buttons distinguishing princely rank, carved out of precious stones, such as his situation by no means entitled him to wear. Many score of these gems were discovered, besides pieces of the same kind in the rough state, to an incalculable amount, and in an endless variety, unknown even among the Imperial treasures.

15th, An estimate of the property in gold and silver which has been confiscated is not yet completed; but the sum is already found to exceed many millions of ounces of silver.

16th, The avarice by which he appears to have been actuated, and the corruption by which his wealth has been amassed, cannot be equalled in the history of preceding ages.

These articles of accusation have been thoroughly investigated and proved by a council of princes and ministers of state, assembled for the purpose; and have also been acknowledged without reserve in his own verbal confession.

Ho-quen,

Ho-quen, thus deeply criminal, blind to every virtuous sentiment, and unmindful of his Sovereign Master, perverted and injured the civil and military government of this empire, usurped the highest authority for unwarrantable purposes, and perfidiously omitted, or set aside, the execution of the laws, while his insatiable and inordinate avarice ceased not to enrich his family, by sapping the vigour of the state.

Yet these crimes are small, in comparison with the base ingratitude with which he requited the gracious bounty of our Imperial Father, who, in his royal wisdom would most certainly have withheld his favour and protection, had any one in the Imperial court possessed ability or inclination to present a timely accusation of this minister's offences.

Not one, however, of the officers of the empire, either of those attached to the court or of those employed in provincial departments, ventured to charge him with his crimes; some forbearing out of respect to the venerable age of our deceased father, and disinclination to give disquiet to his royal breast; others from the apprehension of this minister's extraordinary influence and power, which we ourselves have indeed witnessed, and have known through its effects.

Now, at length, the crimes alleged against Ho-quen are brought to light; more especially those offences which concerned our Imperial Father. They are, indeed, more numerous than the hairs on his head, and a hundred tongues would be unable to find an excuse for them.

Supposing that we were to decline the punishment of these offences, how should we afterwards appear before the Holy Spirit that is in heaven, and reconcile such an omission to the purity of our conscience.

Be it therefore known by these presents to the officers and magistrates of our dominions, that we have resolved to refer the further trial and investigation of the above charges, to a council of the princes, nobles, and ministers of state, to be held at our court of Peking; exclusive of which, we issue our general orders to the viceroys of the several provinces of the empire, to take singly into consideration the charges brought against the minister Ho-quen, and to record their real sentiments concerning the punishment such offences, or any other offences of which he may have been guilty, demand; and then report the same to us, with the utmost expedition.

Khin-Tse *.

* It has been omitted to notice, that a termination with these words, which may be literally translated, "Respect this," is, in China, one of the peculiar distinctions of an Imperial Edict.

2. Translation of an Imperial Edict, containing the Sentence of Ho-quen, Minister of China, and of the other Persons who were connected with him, or implicated in the Charges against him.

X The supreme council extraordinary, consisting of the ministers, great officers of state in the civil and military departments, the presidents of the Imperial college and tribunal of censors, and others, having finally determined upon the articles of accusation exhibited against Ho-quen, and Foo-chang-gan, have now submitted to our consideration, that the said Ho-quen do receive sentence of a slow and painful death, according to the law against the crime of high treason; and that the said Foo-chang-gan, do receive sentence of decollation, according to the law against the crime of abetting, and being accessory thereto; and that therefore the sentence on the one, and on the other, be duly and immediately carried into execution, according to the said laws.

X The unprincipled violence and daring usurpation, which are so manifest throughout the various criminal acts whereof Ho-quen, stands convicted, indeed debar him from the slightest claim to any mitigation of the rigour of lawful punishment.

X On a reviewal of the grounds of the capital condemnation of Gao-pay, by our Imperial ancestor KAUNG-HEE; that on Nien-keng-yao, under the authority of our Imperial grandfather YONG-TCHING; and lastly, that of Na-tching, by the orders of our Imperial Father, lately deceased; we find that the rank of these criminals corresponded with that of Ho-quen, but that his guilt has far surpassed theirs, by its heinous enormity. Proceeding in the investigation, we observe that the royal indulgence was extended to Gao-pay and Nien-keng-yao, by the permission which was granted to each to become his own executioner; but that Na-tching was immediately executed in the presence of the army, as his guilt had, in a peculiar manner, been detrimental to the military operations of the state. In the present instance, however, the wilful delays interposed to the operations of the army; the desire of impeding their success, by criminally intercepting the public reports, and communicating no more than was agreeable to himself; and lastly, the failure to provide the necessary supplies, so as to render the said operations for a long time incomplete and ineffectual, all of which appear in the articles of accusation exhibited against Ho-quen, involve a far greater degree of criminality, than any breach of duty in a military capacity ever could amount to.

If we should, therefore, by any consideration, be induced to remit the sentence of a slow and painful death, according to the law against high treason,
his

his offences would, at least, demand a sentence equal in severity with that passed on Na-tching, in the precedent before us; from which it would indeed be absolutely impossible for us to depart, by allowing of any kind of alleviation, were the execution of the criminal not necessarily to take place within the limits of a three years general mourning.

Even at this moment, when the awful event of our Imperial Father's decease is still recent, the crimes of Ho-quen are still such as to justify and require an immediate and exemplary execution.

There are, nevertheless, some considerations upon which we are inclined to pause. For although the guilt of Ho-quen bears so great a similarity in its consequences with that of Na-tching, yet as the former did not hold a command in the army, a certain distinction undoubtedly exists in the nature of their respective offences; moreover, although in this realm, laws have been framed, and a power established, to which subjects of royal blood and elevated rank are undoubtedly amenable for their offences; and although Ho-quen, whose hardness of heart and blindness to every virtuous sentiment are disgraceful to human nature, is a delinquent whom, as far as respects himself, we cannot redeem, and whom the present decree of council has condemned to undergo the unabated rigour of the law; yet, moved by the consideration that he once held the post of highest honour and dignity in the service of this empire, we resolve, in spite of the unpardonable guilt which he has incurred, to spare him the disgrace of a public execution.

Ho-quen is hereby permitted, through our royal favour, to become his own executioner; but, be it known, that it is our regard for the honour and dignity of the administration of this empire, and not any personal consideration for Ho-quen, that has influenced this our present determination.

Foo-chang-gan was likewise highly favoured by our Imperial Father, and second only to Ho-quen, of whom he was the constant associate, and with every article of whose delinquency he must have been intimately acquainted.

If he had, during the many private audiences to which he was admitted, laid before his Sovereign a true and faithful report of the criminal conduct of the minister, our Imperial Father would immediately have sanctioned the execution of the laws against Ho-quen according to their utmost rigour, and certainly not have protected him, or have transferred the imputation of guilt to Foo-chang-gan, under the plea of his having borne false testimony.

If it is urged, that out of respect to the venerable age of our Imperial Father, it was feared to excite his sacred anger, the excuse, though in some degree admissible, is weak and unworthy of that genuine attachment and fidelity which is becoming in a minister; but from the time that we were appointed to the Imperial inheritance, and put in possession of the seals of the empire, Foo-chang-gan has been a constant resident in the palace ; what obstacle did then exist against his requesting a private audience with us during the hours of his absence from Ho-quen, or addressing to us a secret memorial, and setting forth his crimes ?

Had Foo-chang-gan in any manner anticipated our present decision, by drawing up the slightest statement impeaching the conduct of Ho-quen, we should not now have deemed him implicated in the guilt of that minister, nor even have deprived him of any of the honours or dignities which he has acquired.

From the commencement, however, to the last moment, not a word of this tendency has ever fallen from him ; upon which we cannot but infer an intention of abetting and concealing the same, an act in itself of so criminal a nature, that a hundred tongues would be unable to pronounce an excuse for it.

In the present confiscation and examination of his houses and other property, moveable as well as immoveable, many things have been discovered therein which were extremely unsuitable to his rank and station ; and which he could not have acquired and collected without having evinced himself at various times both avaricious and corrupt.

It is highly just and reasonable, therefore, that the sentence conformable to law, which the ministers of state and other members of the council have awarded, should be executed against him.

In consideration, however, that the board of censors has not exhibited any specific charges of guilt against Foo-chang-gan ; and that in the confiscation and examination of his effects, they did not appear to amount to above a fiftieth or a hundredth part of those found in the possession of the minister Ho-quen, whose sentence we have mitigated to a private and self-execution ; we resolve likewise to extend our royal favour to Foo-chang-gan, by postponing the execution of his sentence to the usual season for capital punishments in the ensuing autumn ; and we therefore direct that he shall remain in confinement until that period.

We likewise direct, that at the hour of the execution of Ho-quen, Foo-chang-gan shall be conveyed to his cell, in order to witness the fate of that minister ; and be re-conducted after the event to confinement at his own prison.

With regard to Ho-lin, brother of Ho-quen *, no merit can justly be ascribed to his proceedings ; for although upon the trial of Foo-kaung-gan (brother of Foo-chang-gan), he was principally instrumental in bringing forward the impeachment, it is evident that Ho-lin did not accuse him from a desire of obtaining impartial justice, but merely as an instrument in the hands of Ho-quen, and with a view to procure the destruction of Foo-kaung-gan. In the present confiscation of the property of Ho-quen, several buildings have been discovered of the wood Nan-moo, and also other illicit articles ; when this is compared with the circumstance of secreting prohibited timber, alleged in charge against Foo-kaung-gan, it is evident which ought to be deemed a heinous, and which a venial offence.

* Ho-lin was not living at the period of this trial, as appears by the sequel.

With regard also to the campaign of Foo-kaung-gan in the province of Hou-nan, against the Miao-fee rebels, he was to that degree thwarted and impeded in his operations by the conduct of Ho-lin, who was in office at court, that the expedition proved ultimately unsuccessful, and he himself fell in the field of battle. From this view it appears, that, upon the charge relating to the campaign against the Miao-fee, Ho-lin, instead of deserving any credit, is himself involved in the delinquency it was intended by him to impute to others.

According, therefore, to the decision of the council, the hereditary title of Kung given to Ho-lin shall be annulled. With regard, also, to the inscription of his name in the sacred temple, an honour to which few can aspire; what can entitle Ho-lin thus to rank with those virtuous ministers to whom we owe the establishment of our empire? Conformably then to the decision of council, the inscription of his name shall be erased from the monuments of the sacred temple; and, in like manner, the altar which his surviving family have erected to his memory shall not be permitted to remain in existence.

Fung-shin-yn-te (son of Ho-quen) has acquired by marriage a princely rank, and the princess his wife ever enjoyed the parental affection of our Imperial Father, and was peculiarly the object of his royal kindness. By utterly degrading Fung-shin-yn-te from his rank and dignity, his family would be reduced to a level with the lowest populace; an extreme disgrace, which is inconsistent with the favour and compassion we are, on the above account, inclined to testify towards him.

According, however, to the decision of the council, we annul the hereditary title of Kung, which Ho-quen had obtained for his services in the overthrow of the rebel Vang-san-quay, so as not to be inheritable by his posterity; but to his rank as Tse of the empire, which we leave unimpaired, Fung-shin-yn-te is hereby permitted to succeed; we direct, at the same time that he shall confine himself to his family, and not go abroad in order to interfere in the administration of public affairs.

Fung-shin-yce-mien (son of Ho-lin, and nephew of the minister) having been degraded from his title by inheritance, shall also be removed from his honorary command in the Imperial guards, and we forbid his attendance at the palace-gate Kan-tsing-men. As a mark, however, of peculiar consideration, we confer on him the rank of hereditary Yun-ky-wee, and order that he do retire and discharge the duties thereof under his native Banner.

Su-lin (son of Foo-chang-gan) received his rank of hereditary Yun-ky-wee by descent from Foo-lin-gan; and, although we have annulled the hereditary rank of Foo-chang-gan in consequence his crimes, yet as Foo-lin-gan was nowise implicated implicated therein, we grant, as a mark of our peculiar favour, our licence to Su-lin to inherit the inferior rank of Yun-ky-wee.

We remove him, however, from his honorary command in the Imperial guards; we forbid his attendance at the palace gate Kan-fing-men, and desire moreover, that he do retire, and discharge the duties of his station under his native Banner.

The minister of state Sou-lin-go is extremely old, and totally deaf, but was nevertheless promoted to that office by Ho-quen, on account of his connection by marriage with Ho-lin, without any regard to the impropriety of the appointment. For, having passed the eightieth year of his age, and scarcely able to perform a genuflexion, how can he be presumed capable of discharging the duties of his arduous station? Sou-lin-go shall therefore, retaining his original rank, retire altogether from office.

With regard to Oo-fung-lan, and Ly-wbang, vice-presidents of supreme courts, and Ly-quang-yung, officer of the household, they evidently owe their elevation solely to the interference of Ho-quen; Ly-quang-yung being incapable from sickness of discharging the duties of his appointment, shall retire from court with his original rank; and although no specific charges have been alleged against Oo-fung-lan and Ly-wbang, yet, as the mode of their elevation cannot be accredited, we degrade them to their former rank, as assistants in the Imperial college; and it is hereby declared, that we dispense with the future attendance of Oo-fung-lan at the Imperial southern library. As for the rest, we direct the execution thereof according to the decision of the council.

Khin-Tse.

1. Translation of an Imperial Edict, declaratory of a general Amnesty to all Persons who had been connected with, or influenced by the Minister Ho-quen.

AFTER we had issued an extraordinary edict, to give public information of the crimes and charges for which our minister Ho-quen had been impeached, we received the report of the deliberate decision thereon of the council of ministers and great officers of state, and ultimately pronounced a definitive sentence on Ho-quen, by which he has been favoured with the permission of becoming his own executioner.

For a very considerable period Ho-quen held the general administration of public affairs; he was guilty of such a daring usurpation of power, and of such a fraudulent and corrupt interposition of his influence, that the concerns of the subject could not gain admittance to the knowledge of their sovereign. Unless such atrocious guilt had been speedily punished, every principle of an equitable and incorrupt administration of the people in general, and of a due dispensation fation of salutary ordinances and instruction for the guidance of the magistrates, must have been utterly abandoned. His guilt has been ascertained with clearness and precision; the sentence awarded against him has been duly executed.

We have still, however, to consider, that the tribunals and public boards under the influence and authority of Ho-quen were many; and that the appointments and promotions distributed by him must have been numerous in proportion. The provincial officers and magistrates must therefore unavoidably have incurred, in many instances, the criminality of seeking their advancement at the palace of Ho-quen, and of obtaining it by means of illicit and corrupt donations.

By a radical and minute investigation, we might find many persons involved in transactions that strict justice must necessarily condemn; but, on the other hand, it is necessary to guard against too great a propensity towards suggesting inquiries, which, from their nature and number, it would be difficult to unravel or determine.

We have, it is true, issued a public declaration of the criminal charges alleged against Ho-quen, in which the most remarkable instances of his guilt are enumerated, in order that every member of the community may possess competent information of the same. But if the officers and magistrates of our dominions should misconceive our views therein, and proceed, in consequence, to a severe scrutiny of past transactions, at the instigation of personal animosity and dislike, exposing secret and concealed actions, and the remote causes from which they arose, whereby such and such persons might be shewn to have shared in such and such transactions; although these reports should prove just and faithful, it would be inexpedient to enter into enquiries which would be almost endless in themselves, and but too probably suggested to us from unworthy motives.

When we destroyed this monstrous contriver of iniquity, we were aware that numerous adherents and connections must unavoidably have partaken in his guilt; but it was far from our intention to encourage or permit any malicious or vindictive proceedings. We condemned Ho-quen to condign punishment for his crimes, more especially on the ground of his having defeated and subverted the civil and military operations of the state; in comparison of which, the guilt he has incurred in various acts of corrupt peculation, and partial infringements of the laws, is indeed but trifling and unimportant. On the former account we determined to enforce the law immediately against him, without allowing any excuse or delay to intervene; but, from the commencement, we resolved to forbear to implicate in the investigation the persons who might have concurred in his other acts of criminality, confining ourself to strict and corrective admonitions for the future, and by no means intending to recommence an enquiry into abuses that are now past and done away.

The

The greater and lesser magistrates of our dominions may, therefore, cease to harbour any suspicions or uneasiness at a retrospect of their own conduct. We are satisfied that our magistracy still abounds with men of intrinsic worth and ability, to whom it is yet very possible to regain the path of integrity, and to amend their past errors, so as to prove themselves hereafter active and valuable servants to the state. Although in a season of critical difficulty, they may not have withstood the pressure of the times, and may have slipped from the right way, it is still in their power to purify the heart, to cleanse the thoughts, to resolve firmly on an amendment, and finally to become men of approved integrity, evincing that they were very far from having been lost irretrievably in the mazes of error and iniquity.

The present clear and explicit declaration of our pleasure, we therefore issue expressly for the purpose of requiring a strict and respectful obedience, and a diligent co-operation with us in our determination to renovate and rectify the administration, by the discontinuance of all evil habits and abuses, however inveterate. If, after the instructive admonition we have now given, a disposition is not shewn to ameliorate and reform, and the utmost exertions are not made to regain the path of integrity, the transgressors will voluntarily have sought their own ruin and destruction, in a manner which is unworthy of them as men, which will undoubtedly expose them to the consequences of our severe displeasure, and against which they will not be able to plead our having failed to instruct and forewarn them: be this general edict therefore promulgated for their information.

Khin-Tse.

No. IX.

[Referred to from Section VI. Page 9.]

Translation of an Imperial Edict, extracted from the Peking Gazette of the 27th of 6th Moon of the 5th Year of KIA-KING, or the 18th of August 1800.*

WHEN Quay-lung was last year appointed to the presidency of the tribunal of civil affairs, he had constant access to our presence, and frequently took occasion to express his desire, that a military command might be given him in

* This is only the last of a series of Edicts relative to the misconduct of the viceroy of the province of Sechuen; but it is, at the same time, complete in itself, as it contains a summary of the charges against him, and a declaration of his definitive sentence.

the

the province of Sechuen. He suggested to our recollection, that he had formerly held an active situation in that province, during the troubles excited by the rebellious Miao-tse, and had assisted in reducing them to submission by his exertions. He added, that the suppression of the rebellion of Pe-lien-kiao, actually existing, was an undertaking of far less difficulty than the reduction of the Miao-tse; the delays by which the present contest has been for several years protracted, were, he declared, solely to be attributed to the negligence and inactivity of the officers to whom the command of the Imperial Armies had been entrusted. He concluded by observing, that if a command against the rebels was granted to him, he would engage to accomplish their total overthrow by an appointed day.

We were, however, fully aware of the egregious vanity that prompted this declaration; and, therefore, did not, at that time, judge it expedient to grant his request.

When Le-pao, viceroy and commander in chief of the forces, proved himself incapable of transacting the united duties of those two stations; and had, moreover, been criminally negligent in remaining at Ta-cheu, when the invasion of the province by the rebels, required that he should immediately have taken arms against them, we deposed and committed him for trial, and appointed the General Ge-le-teng-pao to take his place as commander in chief of the forces. But as the viceroyalty of the province had likewise become vacant by his defection, and as the state was at that time unprovided with an officer duly qualified to succeed to the appointment, we considered that Quay-lung, having served for some years in that province, and having since held the post of viceroy over the united provinces of Fo-kien and Che-kiang, could not be wholly unexperienced in that department, and we therefore issued our orders that he should take upon himself the viceroyalty of Se-chuen; we did not, however, invest him with any express military command.

Towards the close of last winter, the rebels of Se-chuen passed over from that province into Sben-see, and thence to Kan-soo; upon which the General Ge-le-teng-pao, desirous to guard against falling into the errors of his predecessor Le-pao, took the field in pursuit of the enemy, on the first day of the first moon of the present year, and left to the care of Quay-lung the reduction of the remaining parties of the rebels, which were still lurking in different parts of the province.

If Quay-lung had felt himself unequal to a charge of such importance, he ought to have prevented the departure of the General Ge-le-teng-pao, or immediately have reported to us the real situation of affairs, that we might have acted accordingly.

After having, on the contrary, readily accepted the post thus assigned to him, he lost eight days in inaction at Ta-cheu, under pretence of providing clothes and accoutrements for the soldiers. His subsequent operations were also tardy and undecisive; and of this the rebels did not fail to take the advantage, by fording the river Kia-lin-kiang; by so doing, they at once overwhelmed the inhabitants of the opposite district of Chuen-see with ruin and devastation.

Still, however, Quay-lung forebore to take the field in person, deeming it sufficient to direct the officers O-bo-pao and Chu-she-teu to proceed with a small detachment against the rebels. Upon this occasion his measures were so injudiciously taken, that the objects of the expedition were frustrated, and the officer Chu-she-teu actually cut off by the enemy.

The apprehensions of Quay-lung were so much excited by this disaster, that having encamped with his army upon the hill Fung-wboang-shan, he declined making any further efforts, though he repeatedly declared to us in his addresses at that conjuncture, that he was engaged in providing for the defence of the banks of the Tung-bo. He had not, however, once personally encountered the rebels, at the time that the General Te-lin-tay, in obedience to our commands, entered into that country, and engaged the rebels with promptitude and vigour. We confined ourselves, on this occasion, to a simple declaration to Quay-lung, that his life and fortune should depend upon the successful defence of the river Tung-bo; adding that, as a mark of our especial favour, although we degraded him to the third degree of rank, on account of his criminal negligence in permitting the rebels to gain a passage over the Kia-lin-kiang, we, at the same time, assigned him the post of guarding the banks of the Tung-bo, to afford him an opportunity of redeeming his credit.

If Quay-lung had used effectual exertions for the protection of that boundary, Te-lin-tay would have been able to have met and engaged the rebels in the eastern side. The good conduct of the former in a successful defence of the banks of the Tung-bo would in such a degree have contributed to efface the recollection of his previous neglect at the Kia-lin-kiang, that even if we had not restored him to the first degree of rank, we certainly should not have hesitated to have permitted him to continue to exercise his functions in the viceroyalty.

So improvident, however, was Quay-lung in his measures of defence, that when the petition of Lieu-tsing, suggesting the detention of the provincial troops of Honan for a further security, was laid before him, he issued orders rejecting their assistance: shortly after, the rebels passed the Tung-bo, without opposition, and after having landed on the western bank, were suffered to spread rapine and devastation throughout that district, and to ruin or extirpate its unresisting inhabitants; even the districts in the vicinity of Ching-too-fu, the capital of the province, were laid open to the destructive progress of the rebels. The arrival of the General Te-lin-tay at this juncture was eminently fortunate. With force and intrepidity he led his troops to the charge, and having first checked the progress of the assailants, he finally drove them back across the Tung-ho, and has since confined them entirely to its eastern banks. Quay-lung, in the mean time, was content with having assisted the General Le-pao in one or two engagements with another party of the rebels, and then led off his troops by a circuitous route to the district of Lung-gan. The people of the province are no less grateful for the services rendered by Te-lin-tay, than discontented and exasperated at the conduct of Quay-lung, whose dastardly and spiritless retreat from the enemy had proved him so unworthy of command.
of

If exemplary punishment is not inflicted upon this occasion, what respect will hereafter be shewn to martial laws, or submission to military discipline. The calamities which the inhabitants of the western districts of the province of Se-chuen have experienced are beyond the reach of calculation. Were we to persist in extending to Quay-lung our indulgence and compassion, the much injured people would look upon him with averted eyes, and lend to his words an unwilling ear; in short, the purposes of our administration would be defeated by committing it to such guilty hands.

Our royal authority was therefore issued for his degradation and commitment for trial, at the tribunal of his appointed successor Lee-pao, and before special judges whom we named for the purpose.

The result of their investigation of his crimes, was a sentence of death by decollation. The princes of the blood and great officers of state were likewise convened for the purpose of investigating and deliberating upon this subject, and have come to a similar decision.

Quay-lung, therefore, ought to undergo the unabated rigour of the law, by a public execution in the presence of the troops.

Upon consideration, however, of the impending trial and execution of the leaders of the Pc-lien-kiao, who are subjects of this empire, and have incurred the guilt of rebellion; we were apprehensive, that the execution of an officer of exalted rank, who had failed in the discharge of the duties of his station, might induce an association in the minds of the inhabitants, derogatory to that respect and submission which is due to all magistrates, from the people under their jurisdiction.

We issued our commands, therefore, for the prisoner to be conveyed to Peking, and directed the princes of the blood and ministers of state to renew their investigation for two days, and revise the sentence they had given. The unreserved acknowledgment obtained from Quay-lung of his guilt, has precluded the necessity of a more severe scrutiny. The additional charge of having killed the officer Ma-liang-Cheu, by a random shot from his bow, and which action he had concealed by reporting the deceased to have fallen in battle, he now likewise confesses with equal readiness. The council of princes and ministers of state, therefore, persist in supporting their former opinion, that punishment should be inflicted conformably to the utmost rigour of the laws; they have also, in obedience to our commands, laid before us a statement of the decisions that have heretofore been passed against officers of rank, under similar circumstances of delinquency.

In respect to the case of the four officers, Ma-ur-kiun, Na-ching-chang, Quang-se, and Ya-ur-ho-shin, who were executed according to the rigour of the laws, on account of their misconduct at Ye-Kin-chuen, in the exterior provinces; we find, on comparison, that the conduct of Quay-lung is more seriously criminal.

The statement of the trial of Lee-che-yao records, that the sentence of instant execution by decollation was changed to a sentence of execution in the following autumn, by the favour of our Imperial Father. The guilt of Lee-che-yao, in not taking measures against the rebels called Whey-fee, and permitting their leader Tien-fu to raise the standard of rebellion, and collect his adherents, before he proceeded with his army against them, may be compared with the timidity and irresolution of Quay-lung in seeking to avoid the rebels, and suffering them to ravage the country and ruin the inhabitants of Se-chuen; but still the crime of the latter appears of a deeper dye.

With regard to the proceedings against Tang-yng-kiay, viceroy of the provinces of Yun-nan and Quei-cheu, during the rebellion of the Mien-fee, we find that his circuitous marches in order to avoid an encounter with the enemy, and the deceptive reports which he addressed to court, in order to gloss over his misconduct, drew upon him a sentence of immediate death by decollation, according to the law against a general who injures the state by misleading his troops. By our Imperial Father's gracious favour he was nevertheless permitted to become his own executioner.

The rank of Quay-lung corresponds with that of Tang-yng-kiay, each being entrusted with the government of a province. With regard to the circuitous marches which they practised in order to avoid the rebels, and prevent a general engagement, they appear equally guilty. The conduct of Quay-lung, in reporting himself to be engaged in defending the bank of the Tung-ho, while actually seeking for a pretence to avoid the enemy, and his false statement of the circumstances of the death of the officer Ma-liang-cheu, may likewise be placed in comparison with the deceptive reports presented to court by Tang-yng-kiay.

The

The charges substantiated against Quay-lung, on the whole, fully justify the sentence which has been awarded against him; but as some palliation may be conceived to arise from the circumstance of his voluntary offer to serve in the war against the rebels, we are induced to admit the case of Tang-yng kiay as a precedent, and shall, therefore, spare to Quay-lung the ignominy of a public execution.

It is our pleasure that the officers of the supreme criminal court make known this our resolution, and carry it into effect. We grant to Quay-lung to become his own executioner; a sentence to which it would be absolutely impossible for us to admit the most trifling alleviation, without becoming ourselves guilty of dangerous and criminal partiality. It is our firm resolution never to suffer the military discipline and martial laws of this realm to be degraded or impaired by the licensed impunity of any magistrate, who fails to protect the people of the district under his authority from the cruelty and rapine of rebellious invaders.

Tuen-yen and Cha-la-fen, the sons of the magistrate Quay-lung, shall proceed to their place of banishment at Elee in Tartary, as an expiation for the guilt in which they are involved. Having decided upon this case, and explained the causes and motives upon which our judgment is founded, we direct that this edict extraordinary may be issued throughout all the provinces for general information.

Khin-tse.

No. X.

[Referred to from Section VI. page 9.]

1. Translation of the Address of Pe-ling, Sub-Viceroy of the Province of Quang-tung. (1805.)

I HUMBLY address Your Imperial Majesty for the express purpose of charging certain magistrates of districts with a flagrant neglect and delay in the execution of justice; in consequence of which the ordinary places of confinement are no longer adequate to contain the multitude of unexamined prisoners. I charge them also with connivance at the all-devouring rapacity of their followers and attendants. And, lastly, with the illegal and improper employment of female curators:

curators * : by which several offences, the lives of many of Your Majesty's subjects have been sacrificed. I have accordingly to solicit an Order from Your Imperial Majesty, confirming the degradation and removal of the said magistrates; that your sacred authority may be respected and enforced by the due punishment of offences of such serious magnitude.

My first inquiries enabled me to discover, that in the hands of the officers of justice in this province of Quang-tung, the authority of the laws had been, in some cases, abused, and, in others, neglected, and relaxed: the prisons were full, and informations had accumulated; but the dusty records of unfinished causes sufficiently evinced that very remote must be the day of their final adjustment, and no less remote the day, on which the wrongs of the injured parties could be redressed.

The crafty scribes and the lawless attendants of the courts of justice, had not scrupled to combine and concert with thriving profligates in forming plans of deceit and extortion; and the country in general has but too deeply felt the injurious consequences.

On my arrival at the government allotted to me by Your Majesty, it was my first care to seek for, and to remove successively, the most obnoxious of the official attendants, by whose misconduct the town and country had been disturbed. Two of the most notorious among the attendants of the courts, by name Mc-liang and Ly-yue-quang, have already undergone a rigorous examination and punishment.

The removal of the delinquents who had been the most distinguished by their rapacity and extortion, contributed much to ease and tranquillize the minds of the people; I proceeded, nevertheless, in my investigation, and had occasion to notice, that in the divisions of the city, under the government of the Nan-bay-sien and Pun-yu-sien, exclusive of the legal prisons already full of persons in lawful confinement, several subsidiary buildings had been engaged, with the acquiescence of the said magistrates, and under the sanction of various names, but uniformly for the sole purpose of imprisonment.

The officer whom I appointed to investigate this affair, has reported three such places of confinement in the district of Nan-bay, namely Tay-heu-so, Ky-yun-tfang, and Hoei-foo-bang, containing upwards of one hundred prisoners: and in the district of Pun-yu likewise, a place denominated Tay-heu-so, in which also above an hundred persons were found in confinement. Among the prisoners, many had been brought up from the country, under charges of theft, murder, and the like, accompanied by the witnesses and accusers respectively concerned; the cognizance of their offences having been referred to the magistrates of the provincial capital: but, whether the parties were more or less implicated, the charges serious or trifling, it was usual to expose them for many months, or even a year, to the hardship of a tedious and indiscriminate confinement, in these unauthorized places of detention.

* The peculiar sense in which this word is employed will appear from the sequel.

Exclusive of the legal and the subsidiary prisons here described, it has appeared, moreover, that the attendants or officers of police attached to the court of the Nan-bay-sien, had not less than ten places of private detention, in which also, taken together, upwards of an hundred persons were discovered. The attendants of the court of the Pun-yu-sien were provided in a similar manner with twelve places, which were found to contain above ninety persons.

It was found that these places were inclosed with a wooden railing, disposed like a cage, but at the same time, attached, on one side, to the wall of the contiguous building, and subdivided into cells by means of beams and rafters.

Thus constructed, these dark dungeons have been, in fact, employed to enforce, by oppressive and arbitrary confinement, nothing less than a system of fraud and extortion.

I hastened, after investigating, to remedy this grievance, but already many persons had perished under confinement; and the inhuman, nefarious practice has been so long established, that it is difficult to ascertain the year in which it originated, or to conjecture how many lives have been sacrificed by its continuance. The people were either chilled with despair, or murmuring with indignation at the existence of such an abuse. } X

I have, in the next place, to animadvert on the appointment of female curators, under the authority of the said magistrates, the Pun-yu-sien and Nan-bay-sien.

These women had become the confidential agents of traders, whom they enabled to carry on a disgraceful and illicit commerce of female slaves, and they often assisted in obtaining a certificate from the magistrates, when the original right to the slave was not free from suspicion. To the custody of these women, all the female prisoners who had not yet received sentence, or been discharged, were committed; and the younger part of them were not unfrequently let out for prostitution, and the wages thereof received by the curators as a part of their regular profits.

An accurate investigation is now taking place, under the direction of an officer especially appointed for that service, of the several prisoners of each denomination, with the view of discharging at once, all such as are able to find security, or against whom the charges cannot be substantiated.

The several places of detention, which the officers of the above-mentioned courts, had illegally employed, I have caused to be appropriated to other uses, the wooden enclosures to be removed, and the cells rased from the foundations. The number of the persons found therein, and the circumstances that occasioned their detention, remains to be ascertained by a specific investigation, and and will be accurately recorded for the information of the supreme court of judicature at Peking. The female curators, who had so shamefully abused their trust, have been dismissed for ever; and the female culprits, formerly under their charge, remanded to the families to which they respectively belonged; competent security having been given for their re-appearance at the period of trial.

Lastly, after giving the subject mature consideration, I cannot hesitate to declare the use and appointment of subsidiary places of confinement, altogether illegal; more especially, as the law requires an annual and accurate report to be made of the goal-deliveries in each province, to the supreme court.

It having thus appeared that Vang-Shee, chief magistrate of Nan-hay-sien, and Tiao-bing-vu, chief magistrate of Pun-yu-sien, to whom these, which are in fact, the most important districts in the province, have been confided, have proved themselves unfaithful, and unworthy of their trust, by audaciously erecting subsidiary prisons in defiance of the law, and unjustly confining divers persons therein: that they have, in general, shewn an utter contempt of the laws of the empire, and the happiness of the people, by the full licence they have given to the destructive rapacity of their followers; by the criminal misemployment of female curators; and by the false imprisonment, and various other grievances, to which they have exposed the people either directly by their orders, or indirectly by their consent, or connivance: is it possible that their conduct should be tolerated one day longer?

I am in duty bound, therefore, to request that Your Majesty will sanction their degradation and removal; and in the mean time, I have made temporary nominations to the vacant offices, and have directed an account of the treasure and grain for which each of these magistrates stood responsible, to be accurately drawn out and compared with the actual state of the treasuries and granaries, under their respective jurisdictions, at the period of their suspension; and an exact report in due time will be made of the result.

I must further submit to Your Majesty's consideration, that the Quang-cheou-foo, the Leang-tao, and the An-cha-ssê, being the immediate superiors of these guilty magistrates, are liable to censure, for their supineness and neglect of due examination; which, therefore, ought to become a distinct subject of investigation, on the part of the supreme court: also, that as soon as the various persons are ascertained by reference, who officiated as magistrates of the above districts, and as Quang-tcheou-foo, Leang-tao and An-cha-ssê, when these corrupt practices originated, their delinquencies will likewise be deserving of investigation and punishment; as indeed, that of any magistrate of the province under whose jurisdiction such abuses may be found at any time to have existed. — With a view to a comprehensive enquiry of this nature, I have directed an inves-

investigation of all the facts, which it is necessary previously to ascertain; that no measure may be omitted for effectually preventing the repetition of these grievances, and that the feelings of the injured multitude, may be appeased and tranquillized.

These several measures, I have thought it necessary to adopt for the good government of the province; and having respectfully set them forth in this address, they are now humbly submitted to your Majesty's Imperial consideration.

Your Majesty will finally decide upon my conduct; and will be pleased to issue your gracious orders and instructions in regulation of my further proceedings.

2. Translation of an Imperial Edict, issued in reply to the preceding Address, on the 22d day of the Intercalary 6th Moon of the 10th Year of KIA KING, (August the 16th 1805.)

We have received the addresses of Na-yen-tching and Pe-ling, charging certain magistrates of districts with neglect and delay in the execution of justice, in consequence of which, the prisons had become inadequate to contain all the culprits successively committed for trial; secondly, with connivance at the rapacity and extortion of their attendants; and lastly, with the illegal employment of female curators: by which several offences, the lives of many of our subjects had been endangered or sacrificed. — We are accordingly solicited to degrade and remove the said magistrates.

The magistrates of districts are undoubtedly forbidden by existing regulations, to employ any subsidiary places of confinement; and in the event of an increase in the number of informations against delinquents in those large districts which include the capital of the province, absolutely requiring such an expedient, it would have been the duty of the magistrates thereof to have represented the exigency to the supreme officers of government, in order that the adoption of the measure, as far as it was necessary, should receive the sanction of the laws.

It has now appeared, upon investigation, that three subsidiary prisons had, nevertheless, been employed in the district of Nan-bay; and that the attendants of the tribunal, in the said district, made use of fifty other occasional places of confinement. In the district of Pun-yu, one subsidiary prison was found, called Tay-beu-so, and also twelve places of occasional confinement. It was moreover discovered, that the attendants had been very culpably suffered to divide those places of confinement into cells, and to enclose them with a railing, whereby dark dungeons were formed, with the view of practising fraud and extortion upon the unfortunate persons who were confined therein, among whom many became sick, and died from the severity of the imprisonment.

Lastly, it has appeared that the female prisoners, previous to their being discharged or receiving sentence, were usually entrusted to the custody of female curators, by whom it frequently happened that the younger women were exposed to prostitution, and the wages thereof received by the curators as a part of their regular profits.

The conduct of the magistrates who permitted these abuses is no less odious than extraordinary; they seem utterly to have neglected the laws of the empire, and the happiness of the people, with whom, by occasion of their inferior jurisdiction, they were more intimately connected than other officers of government.

On these grounds, the viceroy and sub-viceroy have solicited their degradation and removal; and accordingly we decree that Vang-shy, magistrate of Nan-hay; and Leao-bing-vu, magistrate of Pun-yu; be divested of their respective employments, and expiate their guilt by an immediate banishment to Elee in Tartary.

And, as it is evident from the existence of these abuses, that the superintending officers of the province have been guilty of supineness, and neglect of due examination in their respective departments, we direct that the supreme court do deliberate on the censurable conduct of We-she-poo, the late viceroy; and on that of Sun-yu-ting and Hoo-tu-lee, successively sub-viceeroys of the province of Quang-tong; and likewise on the conduct of the Gan-cha-ffe (judge), Leang-tao, and Quang-cheou-foo (governor of the city), who by virtue of their respective offices, possessed a jurisdiction over, and a power to control the said guilty magistrates.

We order that Na-yen-tching also proceed to ascertain by investigation, at what period, and under the government of what magistrates, these abuses commenced; and that he do speedily report the same for our consideration, shewing the degree of misconduct with which such magistrates and their respective superiors, are chargeable.

With regard to Na-yen-tching and Pe-ling, who have so lately succeeded to the government of the province; we highly applaud the vigour and ability they have shewn in the administration of public affairs, and it is our pleasure that the supreme court for civil affairs, do take their merits into consideration.

Khin-Tse.

No. XI.

[Referred to from Section XXXIV. page 36.]

NOTE.

THE application of the laws of China to the case of British subjects trading to, and residing at Canton, concerning which a reference has been made to this article of the appendix, is a subject which might deserve, as well as afford scope for, a distinct treatise. A trade which employs annually, upon an average, upwards of 20,000 tons of English, and 10,000 tons of Indian shipping; which carries off, every year, more than a million sterling in value, of our manufactures and productions; and which alone can supply us with an article so universally in use as to be almost a necessary of life in this country, must, even without estimating how much it contributes to the revenue of the state, as well as to that of the East India Company, be obviously of great national importance.

It is one of the necessary, but embarrassing consequences of the footing upon which foreigners are at present received in China, that they can neither consider themselves as wholly subject to, or as wholly independent of the laws of the country they live in. When unfortunately involved in contentions with the government, there is generally a line, on one side of which submission is disgraceful, and on the other, resistance unjustifiable; but this line being uncertain and undefined, it is not surprising that a want of confidence should sometimes have led to a surrender of just and reasonable privileges; or that at other times, an excess of it should have brought the whole of this valuable trade, and of the property embarked in it, to the brink of destruction.

The plan and limits of this work will not admit of any regular enquiry into a subject of this nature; but it is hoped that the four following translations of public and official documents, will contribute in some degree to illustrate the professed sentiments of the Chinese government in this respect, and be found in other points of view, not uninteresting.

1. The first relates to the Portuguese at Macao. — A Chinese had been killed by a Portuguese subject; and the crime having been fully brought home to the murderer, the authority to which he was amenable under the circumstances of the case, was the only question in dispute. In this instance the Portuguese ultimately prevailed, and the culprit was executed by their authority, and within the limits of their jurisdiction.

2. The second is a translation of an edict issued on the occasion of an attempt made by the Russians, to open a trade at Canton, in the year 1806. The Emperor's interdiction did not arrive in time to prevent the departure of the ships with full cargoes, but will probable prove effectual in discouraging similar adventures in future.

3. The third relates to a small English vessel, which was stranded in the course of the year preceding, upon the coast of China. The crew were saved, and conveyed to Canton by land; but no part of the cargo was ever recovered.

4. The fourth and last, is a translation of an Imperial Edict issued in the year 1808, and containing the Emperor of China's conclusive and very favourable determination of a question which had previously involved the East India Company's representatives at Canton, in very embarrassing, and for a long time, ineffectual negotiations with the provincial government.

The tenor of this edict, and the circumstances under which it is known to have been published, are calculated, it must be acknowledged, to convey more unfavourable ideas of the administration of the laws in the Chinese empire, than almost any other public act of that government upon record. In this case, all the proceedings were founded on a story fabricated for the purpose; a story, in which the Europeans did not concur, though asserted to have done so; which, in fact, the Chinese magistrates themselves, or the merchants under their influence, invented; which the Chinese witnesses, knowing to be false, adopted; and which, lastly, the sovereign himself appears to have acquiesced in, without examination.

The fact was simply as follows: a number of English seamen had been engaged in a scuffle with the Chinese populace at Canton; in the course of which, one of the natives unluckily received a blow that terminated in his death. The actual perpetrator of the deed not being known, one of the seamen, who had taken an active share in the scuffle, was singled out by the officers of the Chinese government as a proper person to answer for the homicide, and at the same time, this fictitious account of the affair was concerted, in order to justify his acquittal.

In defence of the Chinese government, as far as its general character may be supposed to be affected by these proceedings, it may be said:

First, that the case in question being considered to have been almost unparalleled, cannot justly be made the ground-work of any general inference.

Secondly, that as the Chinese merchant, who, according to the custom of the port, had undertaken a general responsibility for the ship to which the sailors who had been riotous belonged, is said to have purchased the acquiescence of the parties interested, by a division amongst them of a sum little short of 50,000l.; it must be admitted, that the witnesses, and other agents on the occasion, were exposed to more than ordinary temptations, and such as could be but seldom held out to persons in their situations in any country, or under any circumstances.

Thirdly, that the facilities which encouraged an attempt at the subornation of the witnesses, and corruption of the judges, were greater, and the danger of detection less, in a case in which a foreigner, than in one in which a native, was the object of the prosecution.
of

Lastly, that although the falsehood in which so many persons concurred, was, no doubt, base and criminal in itself, it neither produced, nor was intended to produce, the slightest deviation from substantial justice in respect to the person accused; he was well known to be innocent, or at least unconvicted, of the murder; but the strictness of the laws unfortunately rendered it impossible for the magistrates to ground a verdict of acquittal upon a true statement of the case, without, at the same time, in some degree implicating and condemning themselves; they, therefore, under these difficult circumstances, contrived to do that which was just in itself, though they certainly resorted to means which were far from defensible.

As to the Emperor's acquiescence in an acquittal, founded upon so plausible and well concerted a story, it certainly cannot be fairly considered as any impeachment of the judgment and impartiality of his government.

1. Translation of an Edict of the Governor of the Town and District of Hiang-shan, addressed to the Chinese and Portuguese Inhabitants of Macao.

WHEREAS the European Andreas struck and mortally wounded Chin-a-lien, a Chinese; although the relations of the deceased, instead of duly reporting, have endeavoured to conceal the fact, I have taken into custody one of the relations Chin-ky-yen, together with Ly-a-woo, the man who had apprehended the European.

These persons having undergone examination at my office, and the wounds on the body of the deceased having been inspected and legally verified, I proceeded to issue an order to the procurador of Macao to deliver up to me the said Andreas, that his trial might take place according to law; but this procurador deceitfully, and under colour of false pretences, seeks to suppress the enquiry, and is unwilling to give up the culprit.

Considering that these foreigners, who live and reside at Macao, enjoy, through the generous goodness of the Imperial government, the food which they consume, and the ground which they occupy, exactly on the same footing as its natural subjects, it is but just, that they should respectfully obey and submit to the laws and institutions of the country, and comply readily, in this instance, with what our judicial proceedings require.

Now, these foreigners, by persisting to conceal the culprit, do indeed betray such malice and obstinacy, that I ought at once to represent their conduct to the viceroy, viceroy, preparatory to the measure of cutting off all communication with them, by closing the gates of the district. Reflecting, however, that there is at Macao a great mixture of Europeans and Chinese, and that the inhabitants of the latter description are very numerous, so as to render the execution of such a measure inconvenient, I shall only for the present address this edict, especially to the the said Chinese inhabitants, whether traders, labourers, or persons employed in any other capacity, to inform them, that I hereby prohibit every description of traders from supplying the foreigners with their respective commodities; and also all labourers, carpenters, bricklayers, and other artificers, from working for them in any manner, until the said foreigners consent to deliver up the culprit, after which permission will be given to resume and carry on trade and business with them as heretofore.

Whoever disregards this prohibition shall be taken into custody, and severely punished, without admitting of any mitigation or abatement. All persons, therefore, will do well to obey and respectfully conform thereto.

26th of the 7th Moon of the 10th year of KIA-KING. 18th of September, 1805.

2. Translation of an Imperial Edict, dated the 9th of the 12th Moon of the 10th Year of KIA-KING, addressed to the Viceroy of the Provinces of Quang-tung and Quang-see.

WE are just apprized by the Hoppo Yen, that in the course of the 10th moon, two Russian ships had successively anchored in the roads of Macao, and that on board of these ships two foreign merchants, named Krusentern and Lysianskoy, had arrived, and had brought with them a sum of money, and a cargo of furs, with the intent of opening a trade at the port of Canton: That the Hong merchants had, upon an investigation, found these Russians to belong to the nation termed by the Chinese Go-lo-se, and had translated and laid before him their petition for leave to trade at the port; upon which he, the said Hoppo, having consulted with the viceroy Na, and the sub-viceroy Sun, had issued the usual orders, directing the merchants to trade honestly and fairly with them.

This is a very negligent and summary mode of proceeding; for it ought to have been recollected, that the trade with foreign nations is restricted within certain limits, which it is never permitted to violate or transgress. It is true, that all such foreign nations as are accustomed to frequent the ports of Canton and Macao and the neighbouring islands, are likewise allowed the liberty of trading in those parts, but amongst these, the name of the Russian nation has never yet been observed by us: wherefore, their sudden appearance at this time, and design of open-opening a trade at the port of Canton, cannot be considered otherwise, than as a very novel and extraordinary circumstance.

Now, all affairs connected with the intercourse with foreigners, should be investigated and acted upon with peculiar circumspection; it was, therefore, the duty of the Hoppo either to have refused their request, not finding it sanctioned by any precedent, and thus at once to have dismissed them; or at least, to have granted a short stay to the first ship only. And as there had been a petition received from the foreigners, it ought to have been faithfully reported to us, and no further proceedings allowed until our pleasure was known, instead of permitting them to trade unconditionally, upon the mere report and statement of the Hong merchants. Besides, as the name of Russia appears to be nothing more than the foreign pronunciation of Go-lo-se, of which nation there never have been any interpreters employed at Canton, the Hoppo has not shewn how their petition could have been translated, and explained to him; nor do we find in his report, of what sort of furs the cargoes of their ships consisted; nor the amount of the money they brought with them to trade with; nor lastly, what returning cargoes they were desirous of purchasing. The omission of all these things, which should have been severally described and explained, is highly reprehensible; we have therefore directed an enquiry to be held on the conduct of the Hoppo Yen, who was principally culpable in this affair; and we have further directed, that the proper board should deliberate and report to us, whether the viceroy Na and sub-viceroy Sun, are not likewise censurable for their concurrence.

The viceroy Vu and the Hoppo Oe, shall, immediately on the receipt of these commands, in the first instance, suspend for a time, all transactions at the custom-house, on behalf of the said ships, provided they are not already laden; if they shall have completed their lading, but not have quitted the port, the viceroy and the Hoppo shall proceed, without delay, accurately to enquire and investigate, whether these Russians really came from the nation of Go-lo-se; and if so, how the natives of the Go-lo-se nation, who have hitherto always traded by way of Ha-ke-btu (Kiachta) in Tartary, and never before visited the coast of Quang-tung, have now been able to navigate their ships thither, and have become acquainted with the shoals and islands with which that coast abounds. Also, whether they have not passed by some other kingdoms in their way from Russia, and what kingdoms; whether they were not from some, and from what kingdoms, directed and informed how to proceed to this country.

Lastly, they are to enquire whether the Russian merchants embarked in these ships, brought their cargoes with them for their own private emolument and advantage, or were dispatched to China to trade, by the orders of their King. The viceroy and Hoppo having taken measures for collecting full and distinct information on all these subjects, shall transmit the same to us by express. In reply we shall issue to them our final instructions for their guidance.
all

But should these ships, having taken in and completed their cargoes, have been permitted to depart, and no channel remain, through which this subject may be investigated, we, in that case, do direct that, in the event of any ships visiting for the future the ports of Canton and Macao, or their vicinity, belonging to any other nation besides those which have customarily frequented those ports, they shall on no account whatever be permitted to trade, but merely suffered to remain in port, until the viceroy and Hoppo, having reported to us every circumstance respecting them, shall have been apprised in return of our determination.

We now dispatch this edict by an express, that the viceroy and the Hoppo may know our pleasure, and duly conform to it. Khin-Tse.

3. Translation of an Extract of an Edict of the Viceroy of Quang-tung and Quang-see, communicated to the Senior Captain of His Britannic Majesty's Ships on the Coast of China.

The Celestial Empire (China) is provided with strict and numerous laws, according to which, whenever an act of robbery or theft is committed in the country, orders are immediately issued for rigorously enquiring after and pursuing the criminals; when they have been taken into custody, it becomes necessary, by a legal process, to investigate and verify their guilt, and also to identify the property recovered, in order that in the end, a just and equitable sentence may be awarded.

When a ship of your nation was stranded last year, near Ping-bay, and you represented to this government that it had been afterwards plundered, his excellency, my predecessor, immediately issued strict orders for the discovery and seizure of the offending parties.

In like manner, since I came into office, I have repeatedly and urgently given instructions to the same effect; but, on account of the remote and maritime situation of the place where the offence is alleged to have been committed, it is impracticable to declare positively any precise period, within which the guilty individuals may be expected to be traced and brought to justice: however, I shall again give orders for persevering in the investigation, and whenever the criminals, and the property plundered by them can be found, a trial and sentence strictly conformable to law, will undoubtedly follow.

9th of the 8th moon of the 11th year of KIA KING. 20th September 1806.

4. Transf-

4. Translation of an Edict of the Hoppo or Superintendent of the Port of Canton, addressed to the Chinese Merchants licensed to engage in Foreign Trade.

I have received information from His Excellency the vice-roy to the following effect :

“ On the 26th of the first moon of the 13th year of KIA KING, I received the following dispatch from the supreme criminal tribunal at Peking, relating to a case that had been tried in this province :

“ A decision having taken place upon a case which we had laid before his Imperial Majesty for ratification, it is now fit and necessary that we should communicate the same to your excellency, as viceroy of Quang-tung and Quang-see, to the end that the same may be duly carried into effect under your excellency's direction.

“ His Majesty's inner council having, in the first instance, issued a transcript of the report of the vice-roy of Quang-tung and Quang-see, stating his investigation of the case of a foreigner, Edward Sheen, opening a window-shutter in an upper story, and dropping a stick so as to hit and occasion the death of Leao-a-teng, a native of this empire ; His Majesty was pleased, on the 8th of the 11th moon of the 12th year, to direct that our tribunal should revise the same and pronounce judgment thereon. — In obedience to orders, we accordingly on the 10th day of the moon, took the said transcript into consideration ; and we found that the viceroy's report was grounded, in the first instance, on a statement of the magistrate of Nan-bay-sien, a district of Canton, which was to the following effect :

“ On the 18th day of the first moon of the present year, Leao-a-teng, a native of the district Pun-yu-sien, went with his wife's brother Chao-a-ffe, to buy goods in a street within the said district, called She-san-hang, and happened to pass along the stone pavement under a warehouse called Fung-tay-hong : at the same time an Englishman named Edward Sheen, who was in the upper story of the said warehouse, in attempting to open the window, slipped his hand and dropped a stick, which, Leao-a-teng not expecting, could not avoid, and was therefore struck therewith on the left temple, so that he fell to the ground.

“ Chao-a-ffe acquainted Leao-a-lun, the brother of Leao-a-teng, with the accident, who being thus informed of the particulars thereof, came and assisted the said Leao-a-teng to return to his home, and procured him medical assistance, which however had no effect, and the wounded man expired on the evening of the following day, the 19th of the moon ; — the brother of the deceased then re“ ported the case to the head-man of the district; and by him, information was laid at the tribunal of the Nan-bay-sien, where the witnesses of the fact having been, in consequence, assembled and examined, the chief of the said nation was called upon to deliver up the said criminal Edward Sheen, for examination and trial.”

The viceroy proceeded to state, that repeated orders were, in consequence, issued to the Hong merchants on the subject, and through them to the chief of the said nation; in reply to which it was alleged, that the said criminal was sick of an ague and fever, and undergoing medical treatment for his recovery: at length, after repeated applications, it was reported that he had recovered from his sickness, whereupon the magistrates of the district confronted the criminal with the relations of the deceased, and having finished the investigation in due form, referred the consideration of the proceedings to the chief judge, by whom the same process was renewed, and the result finally transmitted to the viceroyal office.

His excellency having concluded the enquiry, by personally and strictly examining into the affair himself, ascertained that “ that Edward Sheen is a native of England, engaged for hire to perform the duty of a seaman, on board the ship of Captain Buchanan, a merchant of the same nation: the said ship having been laden with a cargo of goods for trade, in the said kingdom of England, had arrived at the port of Canton and anchored in the reach of Whampoa, in the course of the 12th moon of the 11th year of KIA KING, after which the cargo was landed, and deposited in a warehouse or factory called Fung-tay-bong in the suburbs of the city of Canton: Edward Sheen had immediately thereupon, accompanied captain Buchanan and others to the upper story of the said warehouse or factory, in order to dwell therein, until, the returning cargo having been received, the period of departure should arrive:— This upper story was also contiguous to, and overlooked the street and path-way, towards which a window was opened with moveable shutters.

On the morning of the 18th day of the 1st moon of the 12th year of KIA-KING, Edward Sheen employed a wooden stick in an oblique direction to keep open the shutter of the abovementioned window; but in doing this, the wooden stick slipped and fell downwards:

It happened also, that Leao-a-teng, a native of China, accompanied by his wife's brother Chao-a-sse, went to the street called Sbe-san-bong, to buy goods; and passing at the same moment under the said upper story, was struck and wounded by the end of the stick falling, as aforesaid, upon his left temple; and he thereupon fell to the ground. Chao-a-sse acquainted Leao-a-lun, the brother of Leao-a-teng, with the accident, who, upon being informed thereof, immediately came and assisted Leao-a-teng to return to his home; and afterwards procured cured him medical assistance ; all which, however, proved of no avail ; and the wounded man died on the evening of the following day, the 19th of the moon.

“ Now, the aforefaid criminal, Edward Sheen, having been repeatedly examined, has acknowledged the truth of all the facts here stated, without any refervation. — Confequently, in this cafe, there is no appeal againft the conviction of this offender, Edward Sheen ; who, having been proved guilty of accidental homicide, may be sentenced to pay the ufual fine, to redeem himfelf from the punifhment of death by ftangulation ”.

The foregoing being the fubftance of the report of the viceroy to his Imperial Majefty, we have deliberated thereon, and have afcertained that, according to the preliminary book of the penal code, all perfons from foreign parts, committing offences, fhall undergo trial and receive fentence according to the laws of the empire : — Moreover, we find it declared in the fame code, that any perfon accidentally killing another, fhall be allowed to redeem himfelf from punifhment, by the payment of a fine ; laftly, we find, that in the 8th year of KIEN-LUNG (1743) it was ordered, in reply to the addrefs of the viceroy of Canton then in office, that thenceforward, in all cafes of offences by contrivance, defign, or in affrays happening between foreigners and natives, whereby fuch foreigners are liable, according to law, to fuffer death by being ftangled or beheaded, the magistrate of the diftrict fhall receive the proofs and evidence thereof, at the period of the preliminary investigation, and after having fully and diftinctly inquired into the reality of the circumftances, report the refult to the viceroy and fub-viceroy, who are thereupon ftrictly to repeat and revife the investigation. — If the determination of the inferior courts, upon the alleged facts, and upon the application of the laws, is found to have been juft and accurate, the magistrate of the diftrict fhall laftly receive orders to proceed, in conjunction with the chief of the nation, to take the offender to execution, according to his fentence. In all other inftances of offences committed under, what the laws declare to be palliating circumftances, and which are therefore not capitally punifhable, the offender fhall be fent away to be punifhed by his countrymen in his own country *.

The cafe of the Englifhman, Edward Sheen, opening a window-fhutter in an upper ftory, and the wooden flick which fupported it, flipping and falling down fo as accidentally to hit Leao-a-teng, a native, who was paffing by, and by ftriking him to occafion his death, appears to be, in truth, one of thofe acts, of the confequences of which, neither fight, hearing, or reflection could have given a previous warning; there was therefore, no pre-disposition to injure, and the case is evidently agreeable to the construction stated in the commentary upon the law of accidental homicide. The said Edward Sheen ought therefore, conformably to the provisional sentence submitted by the viceroy to his Majesty, to be allowed to redeem himself from the punishment of death by strangulation, (to which he would otherwise have been liable, by the law against homicide by blows,) by the payment of a fine of 12 leang 4 fen and 2 lee, (about 4l. 3s. sterling), to the relations of the deceased, to defray the expences of burial; and then be dismissed to be governed in an orderly manner in his own country:

* This paragraph is particularly important, as it announces an exemption in favour of foreigners, which, however effential to their well-being and fecurity in China, was never before fo diftinctly declared and underftood.

We thus respectfully laid before his Imperial Majesty, our deliberate judgment upon this case, with the considerations whereupon it is founded, and humbly solicited a declaration of his Majesty's pleasure regarding the same.

On the 17th day of the 10th moon of the 12th year (January 1808) the address was laid before his Majesty, and received his Majesty's answer in these words "we ratify your judgment."

The above communication of the supreme criminal court, having reached the vice-regal office, I, in the first instance, directed the provincial judge to attend to the strict execution of the Imperial decree, by forthwith taking the said Edward Sheen and delivering him to the chief of his nation, in order to his being sent back to be governed in an orderly manner in his own country; — the usual fine being at the same time duly recovered, for the re-imbursment of the relatives of the deceased for the expences of his interment: — the exact time of dismissal of the said foreigner, and of the reimbursment of the said relatives, are to be duly ascertained and reported to me; but I think fit, moreover, to communicate these things to your excellency, that you likewise may co-operate in attending to the due execution thereof."

His Excellency the viceroy's communication having been transmitted to me, as Hoppo, at my office, I determine to make it known to you also Hong merchants, that you may, agreeably to these my orders, attend to the due execution of all things therein required. — May you respectfully conform to these orders.

The 7th of the 2d moon of the 13th year of the Emperor KIA-KING (February 1808).

No. XII.

[Referred to from Section LII. Page 55.]

Translation of an Imperial Edict, extracted from the Peking Gazette of the 30th of the 3d Moon of the 5th Year of KIA-KING, (the 23d of April 1800.)

WHEREAS we have respectfully considered the decisions of our Imperial Father, deceased, on the subject of a petition now presented to us, for permitting the establishment of colleges in various districts of Tartary, where the youth of those provinces might be examined, and receive their literary degrees without the inconvenience of undertaking a journey to Peking for that purpose. Though we are aware of the advantages that might result from such a measure, yet as the profession of arms is most congenial to the disposition of the inhabitants, as well as of the greatest local necessity in those countries, it would be a matter of just regret, that too great an encouragement given to literary pursuits should ever divert the Tartar youth from the more active employments of the military and equestrian exercises. It might also be reasonably apprehended, that partiality and corruption would gradually insinuate themselves in to examinations, which should be carried on in such remote and unfrequented stations.

It is therefore our pleasure, that the examinations and distribution of literary degrees among the Tartars, should be continued solely at Peking as heretofore; and at the same time we strongly recommend to the Tartar officers, civil and military, to instruct and exhort their sons, and the younger branches of their families, to consider the art of riding, and the use of the bow, as the most desirable and appropriate objects of their emulation, and which they cannot practice or cultivate with too much assiduity.

Khin-Tse.

No. XII. A.

[Referred to from Section LXXVIII. Page 84.]

Translation of an Extract from the Clauses annexed to Section 78.

A Man having no male issue, shall chuse an heir and representative from among those who are of the same name, and known to be descended from the same ancestors, beginning with his father's issue, next with his relations in the first degree, next with those in the second degree, next with those in the third degree; and, lastly, with those in the fourth degree; upon the failure of these, he is at liberty to chuse whomsoever he may prefer among those of the same name. — If afterwards a son should be unexpectedly born to him, such son and the appointed heir, shall participate equally in the family property.

A widow having no children, and not marrying, shall be allowed to remain in possession of the family property, but shall duly summon the next heir to the succession.

When there is an open enmity subsisting between a man who has no male issue, and the family of his lawful heir, the former shall be at liberty to chuse the one whom he esteems most among his relations, descending from the same known ancestors, If, in such a case, the excluded heir endeavours to compel the proprietor to admit his claim to the inheritance, the magistrates shall interfere and protect the right of the heir whom he had elected.

 No. XIII.

[Referred to from Section LXXXVIII. Page 92.]

NOTE.

IT has long been a disputed, and is still perhaps to be considered as a doubtful question, whether the tenure by which the land is in general held in China, is of the nature of a freehold, and vested in the landholder without limitation or controul, or whether the Sovereign is, in fact, the universal and exclusive proprietor of the soil, while the nominal landholder is like the Zemindar in India, no more than the steward or collector of his master. The truth probably lies, in this instance, between the two extremes. It is well known, that several of the merchants

merchants who trade with Europeans at Canton have considerable landed possessions, and that they esteem those possessions to be the most secure, if not the most important portion of their property. The missionaries resident at Peking, under the protection of the court, have likewise their estates in land, granted them by different Emperors, for the support of their establishments. Besides; the ordinary contribution of the landholder to the revenue is supposed not to exceed one-tenth of the produce; a proportion very different from that which is required from the Ryots, or actual cultivators of the soil in India, and which leaves enough in the hands of the landholder, to enable him to reserve a considerable income to himself, after discharging the wages of the labourer, and the interest of the capital employed in the cultivation of his property. It is chiefly upon this income that all the superannuated, superfed, and unemployed officers of government; all merchants retired from, and no longer engaged in business; all those Tartar families who hold their property in China under a species of feudal vassalage; and, lastly, all farmers and other not actually labouring agriculturists, must be supposed to subsist. — As there are no public funds in China, the purchase of land is the chief, if not the only mode of rendering capital productive with certainty and regularity, and free from the anxiety and risk of commercial adventure.

On the other hand, it must be admitted, that the Penal code clearly evinces that there are considerable deductions to be made from the advantages just mentioned; that the proprietorship of the landholder is of a very qualified nature, and subject to a degree of interference and controul on the part of government, not known or endured under the most despotic of the monarchies of Europe. By the LXXVIIIth Section, the proprietor of land seems to be almost entirely restricted from disposing of it by will. By the LXXXVIIIth Section, it appears that the inheritors must share it amongst them in certain established proportions. By the XCth Section, those lands are forfeited, which the proprietors do not register in the public records of government, acknowledging themselves responsible for the payment of taxes upon them. Allotments of lands even appear to be in some cases liable to forfeiture, merely because they are not cultivated when capable of being so. — By the XCVth Section, no mortgage is lawful unless the mortgagee actually enters into the possession of the lands, has the produce thereof conveyed to him, and makes himself personally responsible for the payment of all taxes, until the lands are redeemed by the proprietor. It will also be perceived that, except in the case of a lawful mortgage, no person other than the actual proprietor of the land, is allowed to engage for the payment of taxes upon it, and that therefore such engagement is, in some degree, a test of property.

No. XIV.

[Referred to from Section XCI. Page 96.]

1. Extract of a Letter from a Missionary at Pekin, dated the 9th of September 1801.

“DEPUIS deux mois que j’ai finie mes lettres, il m’a été impossible de les faire partir : une inondation dont on n’a pas d’exemple, ayant rendu les chemins impraticables. A la première cruë d’eau, le gouverneur du district de Pekin a annoncé vingt mille morts, dont il avoit pris connaissance dans l’étendue de son gouvernement, qui n’est qu’une petite partie de la province ; il ajoutoit, ce que tout le monde scait, qu’il devoit nécessairement y en avoir beaucoup d’autres qu’il ignoroit. Ces premières eaux s’étant écoulées en partie, les pluies vinrent derechef, et les eaux allèrent toujours en augmentant pendant un mois. — Tous les rapports qui nous viennent de dehors, s’accordent à confirmer qu’il ne reste plus de moisson en terre plate. Depuis un mois, que les pluies ont cessées, les chemins sont à peine praticables à cheval ; on ne peut pas encore voyager en voiture : heureusement la récolte de bled étoit à peu près finie, mais les autres grains qu’on appelle ici grandes moissons, et qui sont la principale ressource de la province, sont presque tous perdues ; on n’en excepte que les endroits élevés.”

2. Extract of a Letter from a Chinese Christian, dated at Lu-gan-fu, in the Province of Shan-fy, 30th July, 1803.

“HIC vitam traho liberam quidem, sed a congressibus hominum alienam ; quid hic aut alibi geratur, me latet omnino : unum scio, penuriam omnium rerum, ob infinitam populi multitudinem, in his regionibus reperiri ; cibaria duplo carius vendi quam venderentur in Europa ; pauperes sustentari, immo rusticos omnes, furfuribus, corticibus arborum et leguminum, vefci panibus rarissime, eosque inter cibos lautissimos habere, carnibus vero nunquam, nisi ad convivium, adhibitos, earum mirandi potius, quam gustandi copiam apponi : quod famas his annis ingentem mortalium stragem non fecerit, fertilis annona auxilio fuit ; ceterum paupertate industriam gignente, hominesque laboribus addictissimos, victum non aliunde magis quam ab agricultura parari ; furta, et homicidia nunquam rarius, quam in hac provincia audiri *.”

* This extract is given verbatim. — The writer of the letter is the person of whom honourable mention is made in the Authentic Account of the British Embassy, vol. II. p. 594.

No. XV.

[Referred to from Section XCV. Page 101.]

Abstract of some of the principal Clauses annexed to the XCVth Section.

NO mortgage, or redemption of lands mortgaged, shall be reversed or set aside, after it has been signed by all the parties interested, or after it has been acquiesced in by them for five years.

When it is expressly declared in the preamble of a deed of sale, that the land is sold absolutely, and not by way of pledge or mortgage, and there is no subjoined clause providing for the contingency of a further payment to the seller, as a consideration for his making the sale absolute at a subsequent period; such a deed of sale shall be an effectual bar against all claims whatsoever of redemption. But if the sale is not expressly declared to be absolute, or if there is a general clause of redemption, or a specific one of redemption at any time after the expiration of a certain period, the original proprietor shall, according to the terms of the agreement, be entitled to recover his land, upon repayment of the consideration for which it was pledged or mortgaged. If the original proprietor, at the end of the period specified in the contract, is still unable to discharge the mortgage, it shall be at his option, either to retain his right to a recovery of his land, at any future period, or to surrender it, and make the sale absolute, in consideration of a receipt of a further sum to be agreed upon between him and the mortgagee, or between arbitrators duly appointed by the parties. If they cannot agree upon the terms, the mortgagee shall have the option of either continuing in possession, or of re-imbursing himself, by re-mortgaging the land to some other person, the right of redemption remaining as before with the actual proprietor.

It is however provided, that all deeds of sale which are doubtful, or imperfect, owing to the tenor of the preamble, but which contain no clause of redemption, shall, if not questioned or objected to for thirty years from the date thereof, become to all intents and purposes absolute.

Those lands which have been allotted on the tenure of military service, cannot be pledged or mortgaged, but may be let for any term, not exceeding three years.

No. XVI.

[Referred to from Section CXXIX. Page 136.]

Translation of an Imperial Edict, extracted from the Peking Gazette of the 21st of the 4th Moon of the 5th Year of KIA-KING, (25th of April, 1800.)

WHEREAS the Army Commissioner Tsung-tay is found guilty of the crime of fraudulently suppressing part of the supplies which had been destined for the troops at Kia-lin, and of applying the same to his private use and advantage; it is hereby ordered, that 40 blows with the bamboo shall be inflicted upon him, and that he shall be banished for life to Elee in Tartary.

It is further ordered, that the lieutenant Tang-lin, who connived at, and encouraged the corrupt practices of the said commissioner, shall likewise suffer 40 blows, but continue to serve in his regiment, holding, however, one of the most laborious and least honourable situations in it, as a further mark of disgrace.

Khin-Tse.

 No. XVII.

[Referred to from Section CXLIX. Page 158.]

NOTE.

THE exorbitance of the interest of three per cent. per menssem, and thirty per cent. per annum, upon either of which rates, according to this code, a contract for a pecuniary loan may be lawfully made, is a peculiarity in the Chinese laws, which it may be difficult entirely to account for. However, it is by no means to be understood, that the ordinary interest of money, considered strictly as such, in any part of China, ever attains that extent. At Canton, for instance, the rate is generally considered to be from 12 to 18 per cent. ; which, although subject to no controul from the laws, does not, it will be perceived, materially exceed, upon an average, the legal rate of 12 per cent. per annum, established by ourselves in British India.

The

The rate of interest upon a pecuniary loan must, indeed, generally speaking, be influenced by a twofold consideration. Besides what is considered to be strictly equivalent to the advantage arising from the use of the money, the lender must be supposed, in most cases, to receive likewise a certain compensation for the risk to which he exposes his principal. The former consideration will always be limited by, and bear a certain ratio to, the peculiar state and degree of the general prosperity of the country; but the latter can evidently be determined by no rule or proportion, which does not include the consideration of the relative situation and circumstances of the parties interested in the transaction. In England, indeed, where the security of property, and the exclusive rights of individuals are so well understood, and so effectually protected by the laws, it may, in general, be almost as easy to guard against risk, as to compensate for it. But in China, where the rights connected with property are comparatively vague and undefined, and being distinct from the source of power and influence, are less the object of the law's regard; where, owing to the subdivision of property, there are few great capitalists; and where also there is but little individual confidence, except between relations, who, holding their patrimony in some degree in common, can scarcely be considered as borrowers or lenders in the eye of the law; it is not so surprising that it should be deemed expedient to license, in pecuniary transactions, the insertion of stipulations for very ample interest; and, in point of fact, there is no doubt that the law in this respect, indulgent as it is, is frequently infringed upon.

In a state of things so unfavourable to the accumulation and transfer of property, there cannot at any time be much floating capital; and the value of that capital, as far as it is denoted by the interest which it bears, it is natural to expect, will be high in proportion to its scarcity. In other words, where there are many borrowers and few lenders, and where it forms no part of the system of the government to grant to the former any peculiar degree of protection or encouragement, it seems a necessary consequence, that the latter will both demand and obtain a more than ordinary compensation in return for the use of his property. Trade, therefore, as far as it requires succour, cannot be so extensively carried on, as it is in those countries, in which there being more available capital, that capital is procurable at a cheaper rate, and accordingly a smaller return of profit found adequate to the charges of commercial adventure.

Exclusive of loans made simply on personal security, and those which are made upon landed security, as already noticed under the title "Mortgage," it is a no less frequent practice in China, to lend upon pledges; and accordingly, the shops of money-lenders, where deposits may be made of any kind of personal property, are extremely numerous in all parts of the empire, and, in general, upon a scale of greater respectability than establishments of a similar nature in Europe.

The interest required upon loans thus made is usually from $1\frac{1}{2}$ to 2 per cent. per mensem; whereas that upon landed security, estimated on an average of the net returns of the land which is pledged or mortgaged, is said not to exceed from 1 to $1\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. per mensem. It is necessary, in this place to observe, that, in converting monthly into annual interest, the Chinese make it a general rule of computation to exclude the first and sixth month of every year, so that 1 per cent. per mensem is only equivalent to 10 per cent. per annum, and the rest in proportion.

When an article offered in pledge has been valued, and the rate of interest agreed on, a loan is negotiable, on the condition of the pledge being forfeited, unless redeemed while its estimated value continues to be sufficient to cover both the principal and interest of the sum lent. The subject of this note is very fully discussed in the Memoires sur les Chinois, vol. iv. p. 299 to 391.

No. XVIII.

[Referred to from Section CLXII. Page 176.]

Translation of Two Imperial Edicts concerning the Propagation of Christianity in China, dated in the Year 1805.

FIRST EDICT.

THE supreme criminal tribunal has reported to us the trial, investigation, and sentence of that court, upon the case of Chin-yo-vang, a native of the province of Canton, who had been discovered to have received privately a map and sundry letters from the European Te-tien-tse *; and also in regard to several others, who had been found guilty of teaching and propagating the doctrines of the Christian religion.

The Europeans who adhere to the Christian faith, act conformably to the customs established in those countries, and are not prohibited from doing so by our laws. Their establishments at Peking were originally founded with a view to the advantage of adopting the western method in our astronomical calculations; and Europeans of every nation, who have been desirous of studying and practising the same at this court, have readily been permitted to come and reside in the above establishments ; but, from the beginning, they were restricted from maintaining intercourse with, and exciting troubles among our native subjects.

* The real name of this European was Adeodato. He was a missionary of respectable character, and had been many years resident at Peking in the Imperial service.

Nevertheless, Te-tien-tse has had the audacity secretly to propagate and teach his doctrines to the various persons mentioned in the report ; and he has not only worked on the minds of the simple peasantry and women, but even many of our Tartar subjects have been persuaded to believe and conform to his religion ; and it appears, that no less than thirty-one books upon the European religion have been printed in Chinese characters. Unless we act with severity and decision on this occasion, how are these perverse doctrines to be suppressed ! how shall we stop their insinuating progress !

The books of the Christian religion were originally composed in the European languages, and, in that state, were incapable of influencing the minds of our subjects, or of propagating their doctrines in this country ; but the books lately discovered are all of them printed in the Chinese character, with what view, it is needless to enquire ; for it is enough that our simple peasantry, and more especially our Tartar subjects, ought not to be inveigled in this manner ; and that such books are capable of producing the most serious effects on the hearts and minds of the people.

With respect to Chin-yo-vang, who had taken charge of the letters ; Cheu-ping-te, a private in the Chinese infantry, who was discovered teaching the doctrine in one of their churches ; Lieu-chao-tung, Siao-chin-ting, Chu-chang-tay, and the private foldier Vang-meu-te, who severally superintended congregations of Christians ; as they have been convicted of conveying letters, or employing other means for extending their sect and doctrine, it is our pleasure to confirm the sentence of the court, according to which they shall severally be sent into banishment to Elee, and become slaves among the Eleuths ; and previous to their departure, wear each of them the heavy cangue for three months, that their chastisement may be both corrective and exemplary.

The conduct of the female peasant Chin-yang-shee, who undertook to superintend a congregation of her own sex, is still more odious ; she, therefore, shall likewise be banished to Elee, and reduced to the condition of a slave at the military station, instead of being indulged with the female privilege of redeeming the punishment. The peasant Kien-ben, who was employed in distributing letters for the congregation, and in persuading others to assist in his ministry ; and also the foldier Tung-ben-shen, who contumaciously resisted the repeated exhortations made to him to renounce his errors, shall respectively wear the common cangue for for three months ; and, after the expiration of that term, be banished to Elee, and become slaves among the Eleuths. The soldiers Cheu-ping-te, Vang-meu-te, and Tung-ben-shen, who have gone astray, and willingly become profelytes to the European doctrine, are unworthy to be considered as men ; their names shall be erased from the lists of those serving under our banners.

The countrymen Vang-sby-ning, Ko-tun-fo, Ye-se-king, and Vu-se-man ; and the soldiers in the Chinese infantry, Tung-ming, Tung-se, and Chee-yung-tung, have each of them repented, and renounced their errors, and may be discharged from confinement ; but as the fear of punishment may have had more effect than any sincere design to reform, it is necessary, notwithstanding their recantation, that the magistrates and military officers, in whose jurisdiction they may be, should keep a strict watch over them, and inflict a punishment doubly severe, if they should relapse into their former errors.

Te-tien-tse, who is an European retained in our service at court, having so far forgotten his duty, and disobeyed the laws, as to print books and otherwise contrive to disseminate his doctrines, is guilty of a very heinous offence. The alternative proposed by the court, of dismissing him to his native country, or remanding him from the prison to his station at Peking, is very inadequate to his crime. We, therefore, direct, that the supreme military tribunal appoint an officer to take charge of the said Te-tien-tse, and conduct him to Ge-ho in Tartary, where he shall remain a prisoner in the guard-house of the Eleuths, and be subject to the superintendance and visitation of the magistrate King-kie, who must carefully prevent him from having any correspondence or communication with the Tartars in that neighbourhood.

The noble officer Chang-fo, appointed to superintend the European establishments, having been ignorant of what was going forward, and having made no investigation or inquiries during the time that Te-tien-tse was writing letters, printing books, and spreading his religion, has proved himself incapable and unworthy of his station ; wherefore, we direct the interior council of state to take cognizance of his misconduct.

In like manner, it is our desire, that the council of state do take cognizance of the neglect and inattention of the military commanders who suffered the soldiers under their orders to be corrupted with these doctrines, and report to us the result of their deliberations, in order that we may refer the adjudication of their punishment to the proper tribunal.

The council of state shall further, in concurrence with the supreme criminal court, appoint proper officers to examine all the books of the Christian doctrine which have been discovered ; after which the said books shall, without exception, be be committed to the flames, together with the blocks from which the impressions had been taken.

The governor and other magistrates of Peking, and also the commanders of troops stationed thereat, shall strictly attend to the subject of these instructions, and severally address edicts to the soldiers and people in their respective jurisdictions; they are to inform them, that all persons who frequent the Europeans, in order to learn their doctrine, will, without exception or abatement, be punished with the utmost rigour of the law, for thus acting in defiance of the present prohibition; as for the rest, we confirm the sentence of the court.

Khin-Tse.

SECOND EDICT.

IT having been discovered, that the European residents at Peking have maintained a correspondence with our Tartar subjects, for the purpose of instructing them in the doctrines of their religion, and have likewise caused books to be printed in the Chinese and Tartar languages, with a view to facilitate the propagation of their tenets, we issued an edict, strictly prohibiting the same, and also directed that all the books containing their doctrine, which should be found in the different European establishments at Peking, should be immediately seized for the purpose of being destroyed. The contents of several of their books have been already investigated by our council for state affairs, and having by our desire been submitted to our inspection, we think fit to notice some particular passages.

In "the useful introduction to the doctrine" it is said, "Tien-chu (i. e.) the master of heaven, is the great king of all the nations;" but, in "the Calendar of Saints," it is said, that "Jesus the incarnate is the great king of the earth, and of all creatures." Again; "Infidelity is the left road: without meditation it is hardly possible to pursue the strait road, and obey the will of the Lord." Is this truth, or good sense? Then we are informed, that "all creatures are subordinate to the great master of heaven and earth: kings, princes, learned, and the people in general, should all renounce their errors, and seek truth;—when the holy religion prevails, it will soon produce the permanent benefits of order and tranquillity." Again; "The master whom I adore is the true master of heaven and earth, and of all created things;—through him is the way to the kingdom to come; but the ways of this world are the ways of the flesh.—Holy men were desirous of embracing the opportunity of propagating the doctrine in China."

In the "Instructions concerning the Institution of Marriage," it is said, that "those who are not of the religion are no better than slaves of the devil."

The foregoing passages are sufficiently absurd and extravagant; but this is not all; there are other observations still more false and irrational, making light of the the obedience due to parents, and declaring, that “ the highest degree of impiety consists in disobeying the will of the Tien-chu ;” a story is related of a Saint Ursula *, who, refusing to obey a command, was killed by the hands of his cruel father, whereupon the Tien-chu being incensed, struck him dead with lightning ; and this is announced as a warning to all parents, relations, and friends, who attempt to obstruct the designs of their children ; and so forth.

This is surely as contradictory to reason and social order, as the wild fury of a mad dog.

In another place we are told, that there was a Pei-tse, (i. e.) a Tartar prince, who used to commit many bad actions, and never attended to the expostulations of the Fo-tsin, (i. e.) Tartarian princess, his wife, who endeavoured to dissuade him from his wickedness. One day, a legion of devils seized the Pei-tse, and carried him to hell, and the Tien-chu, seeing that the Fo-tsin was a good and virtuous woman, privately informed her, that her husband was suffering everlasting torments in a sea of fire. From which it is inferred, that those who neglect pious exhortations, cannot possibly escape the everlasting punishment inflicted by the Tien-chu.

Now this is absurd and extravagant in the highest degree : where did the Europeans become acquainted with the appellatives Pei-tse, and Fo-tsin, except it was in their interviews and conversation with the natives of Tartary, from whom they have adopted them in order to fabricate this idle tale !

We do not now mean rigorously to investigate what has been done heretofore ; but, it is obvious, that this account of a Pei-tse carried to hell by devils, is given without any kind of evidence, and does not possess the least shadow of truth or credibility. It would appear, in short, to be a tale which their ingenuity has contrived ; and, upon this principle, what is there that we may not readily expect them to say or to write !

If, instead of an early prohibition, we suffer them to go on diffusing their tenets and fabricating their stories, still more egregious falsehoods and absurdities will be obtruded upon us.

Nothing, indeed, but a severe and exact execution of the laws, can prevent the most dangerous consequences ; it is better, therefore, to take salutary and efficient precautions, and we have thought fit to direct Loo-kang, the noble officer superintending the European establishments at Peking, to deliberate with his colleagues on an adequate mode of procedure ; as well as to examine and strictly investigate every case of the kind that may occur. In the mean time, we have selected the preceding passages out of their books for general information.

For the future, we earnestly exhort our Tartar subjects, to attend to the language and admonitions of their own country and government ; to practise riding and

* The name is here evidently incorrectly stated.

archery ;

archery; to study the works of the learned and virtuous, and to observe the social duties. If the sects of Foe and Tao-fse are unworthy of belief, how much more so is that of the Europeans? Let it be their care to wash away this foul stain, and to beware of giving ear to these sinister and fallacious doctrines.

Those who will not awake from their delusions; who neglect the truth in order to follow what is false and perverse, are unworthy to be considered as men, and ill requite the care and instructions anxiously bestowed on them by their sovereign. We here declare our sentiments, that they may be generally known.

Khin-tse.

No. XIX.

[Referred to from Section CXCI. page 201.]

*Translation of an Imperial Edict, issued in the 8th Year of the Emperor
KIA-KING, (1803.)*

THE extraordinary council of great officers of state appointed by our command on the 20th of the intercalary 2d moon, to try the atrocious malefactor Chin-te, have concluded their investigation.

When we returned to the palace by the gate Sbun-ching, on the 20th instant, in order to observe the solemn fast appointed for that day, it is unquestionably true, that some person rushed forth; although we, being in our palanquin, and already considerably advanced towards the inner court, did not distinguish his features, and only learned the circumstances that had occurred, through the eunuchs of the palace, whom we had sent out to obtain information on the subject.

On the same day, we directed the members of the supreme court of judicature, and of the council for state affairs, to institute a strict and judicial enquiry upon the case; but the confession which was made to them by the criminal, on that occasion, was highly inconsistent and unreasonable*. On the following day, we directed the ministers of state, and the presidents of supreme tribunals, to assist in the investigation; but the criminal pertinaciously refused to swerve from his original deposition. We, lastly, added the officers of the nine departments, and the presidents of the subordinate tribunals, forming, with the other officers of the court, a full council of state; before this council he repeated, without any variation, his original confession.

* It appears that the criminal, upon his examination, endeavoured to charge some of the principal officers of state, and members of the Imperial family, with a participation in a treasonable conspiracy to assassinate the Emperor, of whom he declared himself to have been only the agent.

In a case of this treasonable nature, which both excited our attention and provoked our resentment, we were naturally desirous to discover, by every method of investigation, the original contriver, the confederates, and the nature of the conspiracy, if any, which had been formed on the occasion. The scrutinizing enquiries and examination of the council, and their earnest desire to obtain information, did not certainly exceed a faithful and patriotic discharge of their duty; a duty which required of them to spare no exertion, and to proceed without reserve; and which acquitted them of any imputations arising from the implications or disclosures their enquiries tended to produce.

We, indeed, who hold the universal sovereignty of the earth, (i. e. China,) surely have governed with candour and integrity! That our actions are neither equivocal or suspicious, must be obvious to all our subjects, the nearest as well as the most remote from our presence. During these last eight years, though we make no claim to the perfection of political virtue, at least, we have not dared so far to forget ourselves, as to take away a life unjustly. Where, therefore, is there a ground for malice, or an excitement to revenge? The nobles and magistrates who compose our court, are esteemed by us with fraternal regard. Our sons and nephews are united to us by the closest ties of blood: shall we allow a wretched criminal to injure them by his wicked aspersions? In fact, we do not fear or harbour a suspicion against any one. Among the inhabitants of the earth, there may surely be some who rush on wildly like mad dogs, and who commit acts of violence, which no one had previously suggested or contrived. The bird Cheekiao even devours its mother; yet who are its confederates?

If, in consequence of the confession extorted from this criminal, we were to proceed against those, whom, with the blind fury of a mad dog, he has charged with criminality, they would hardly escape with life. We renounce, therefore, altogether, an investigation of such a malignant tendency. Our chief mortification at present arises from observing, that the influence of our government and example is not more effectual; and this leads us to infer that we have been guilty of some failure in our duty, which we must endeavour to rectify, that there may be no blemish in our conduct, to render it inconsistent with our affection for our people.

With regard to the atrocious criminal Chin-te, and his two sons, we direct that the council do pronounce the sentence of the law respecting them, and report the same for our ratification. But we direct, at the same time, that all other persons who may have been detained on the same account, be set at liberty, lest the innocent

innocent should be, in any manner, made to participate in the punishment of the guilty.

On the other hand, the conduct of Mien-gen, Prince of Ting-ching, who first laid hold of the criminal, and whose clothes were torn while exerting himself to repel his onset; the exertions of La-vang-to-ur-chee, Prince of Ku-lun-ge-fu, and of the officers in waiting Tan-pa-to-ur-chee, Cbu-ur-kang-go, Cha-ke-ta-ur, and Sang-kee-fe-ta-ur, by whom the criminal was ultimately secured, especially that of Tan-pa-to-ur-chee, who received three wounds in the struggle, all deserve our warmest admiration and praise. On the last of these we confer the dignity of Pei-le; and to the two Princes, and the above-mentioned officers in waiting, we shall not omit to bestow distinguished marks of our favour and approbation.

But, at the time of this accident, the officers in waiting, together with the other individuals in our train, were certainly not less than an hundred persons; among whom six only, regardless of danger, stepped forward, in order to seize the villain. It is true, that the Princes Mien-gen and La-vang-to-ur-chee, and the four officers in waiting, have long enjoyed our distinguished favour; but among so many who calmly looked on with their hands in their sleeves, were there none whom we had in like manner favourably distinguished? The Prince Mien-gen is indeed our nephew, and the Prince La-vang-to-ur-chee our cousin by marriage; and the exertions of those who are so nearly connected with us by kindred or alliance is highly grateful to our feelings; but were there not many of the unmoved bystanders as nearly related to us? Is it thus they testify their gratitude and affection to the Sovereign and to the state? If, on such occasions as this, we experience these tokens of indifference and insincerity, we can have but little reason to hope, that on more ordinary occasions, they will exert themselves for the good of their country.

It is this, and not that, (i. e. the dagger of the assassin) which fills us with apprehension and uneasiness. Heaven has given worth and understanding to our nobles and magistrates; let them enquire of their own hearts, whether they ought not to feel shame and remorse on this occasion. This edict we issue for general information.

Khin-tse.

SENTENCE.—By His Majesty's command, Chin-te to suffer death by a slow and painful execution; his sons Lou-eur and Fong-eur, being of a tender age, to be strangled; and the decision of the council to be observed in all other respects.

No. XX.

[Referred to from Section CXCIX. Page 208.]

Translation of an Extract from the Peking Gazette of the 23d of April 1800.

T*E-lin-tay*, general of the Imperial forces, humbly presents his Report to inform His Majesty of the operations of the army against the rebels, during several days successively, in which the enemy was attacked, and the divisions led by Tsay-tien-yuen and Kiay-Ky-sun entirely routed, and the remainder pursued with great slaughter and effect. The circumstances will be found detailed in the following report, which is forwarded by express:—

The engagements that took place at Pe-Kia-tsin, with the five columns of the rebels who attempted to ford the river at that place, the slaughter that ensued, the capture of the leaders Chin-te-fung and Tsay-tien-hiun, and the subsequent retreat of the enemy, though continuing to watch our motions, have already been stated to Your Majesty.

I lost no time in leading the troops, according to the traces left by the rebels, from Tse-tung towards San-mu-quan, and reached that station on the 2d of the 3d moon. The scouts whom I had appointed to reconnoitre the position of the enemy then gave us notice, that they were lodged in considerable force in the wood of Kiang-yeu. Having advanced thither, pursuant to the information received, we were suddenly attacked by a body of the rebels, consisting of cavalry and infantry, who rushed upon us from four different quarters, with much clamour and impetuosity. The onset was received with firmness and courage by our troops, and upwards of three hundred of the enemy fell in the first encounter. Four hundred suffered the same fate in the skirmishes and partial engagements which ensued, and which lasted for four hours, until the rebels seemed no longer capable of opposing any resistance. In the course of the action, the colonel Ly-tfung-tsu was wounded by a spear, and fell from his horse. He nevertheless continued to lead the troops on foot, and greatly contributed towards the victory that ensued. The force of the rebels being much broken by this defeat, they hastily dispersed to their fastnesses and concealed stations. During the action, several officers, and one hundred and twenty three privates of the enemy, were taken alive. The officers were put to death in torments, as the law directs; but such of the country people, to the number of several hundred, who appeared to have been forcibly forcibly detained by the rebels, and on that account to have fallen into our hands, we suffered to depart unmolested.

On the following day, I reconducted the troops to their former station at Chung-wba, and immediately after learned from the reconnoitering party, that a large body of the rebels was collected on the hill Ma-ti-kang. I encamped, therefore, the next day, with the army, in a spot 20 or 30 lee (two or three leagues) nearer to the station of the rebels, whose force we now learned to exceed, in cavalry and infantry, taken together, ten thousand men; this army we found to be regularly disposed on the opposite declivity of the hill.

I then determined to divide the Imperial army into four principal divisions; the first consisting of the Chinese and Tartar cavalry, under the command of the officers Tsay-Chung-ho, Ly-chao-tse, and others, to attack the enemy from the bridge at Lo-yang, towards Tao-kai-keu. The second division, consisting exclusively of regular troops, cavalry and infantry, and commanded by O-ho-pao, Ma-ur-quen, and others, to engage the enemy from Hay-chang-pu towards Ho-she-pu. The third division, consisting partly of the regulars and partly of the provincial volunteers, under the command of the officers Wun-chun, O-meu-le-tay, and others, to engage from the village Pay-fang-sby, towards Lung-tse-quan. The fourth and last division, consisting of the remainder of the regular troops, together with the country militia, and commanded by myself, in conjunction with the officers Ta-le-ching-o, O-te-she and others, to attack the enemy by the direct road.

[After relating in detail the various skirmishes and partial encounters that ensued in each division, in consequence of the rebels having avoided a regular engagement, the general proceeds to state, that] at this time, a man who announced himself to be a native of the district, and to have just escaped from the hands of the rebels, professed to give information that the rebel post at Tse-lin-koo, was not defended by more than three hundred and fifty men, and that those few were wholly unprovided with fire-arms.

He offered also to conduct the army to the spot. The channel through which we received this intelligence rendering it extremely doubtful and suspicious, I ordered the informer to be detained, but nevertheless proceeded with the army towards the place that he had indicated to us.

On a nearer approach to Tse-lin-koo, I sent a detachment to explore the surrounding country, in order to guard against a surprise from troops in ambush. The rebels indeed received us with a brisk fire of musketry and cannon, accompanied with volleys of stones; and their attack was altogether uncommonly savage and impetuous. Our troops, however, kept their ground, without being in the smallest degree disordered or intimidated.

At

At the same time, all the other parties of the rebels, whose stratagems had been likewise discovered by the troops I had detached for that purpose, rushed out from their lurking places, and joined in the attack. A severe conflict ensued, in which the officers Ly-chao-tsee, Mey-yn, and others, behaved with great gallantry and intrepidity. In this action upwards of five hundred of the enemy were killed, several taken prisoners, and the rest driven back to the mountains. Upwards of four hundred of those who retreated were afterwards killed in the pursuit. Two or three leaders of rebels, and many others of a meaner rank, were captured, together with two pieces of cannon and a large assortment of standards, scymetars, swords, and the like, and many horses, asses, and other animals. But the most important advantage obtained, was that of taking alive the general of the rebels Tsay-tien-yuen, whom we afterwards discovered to be one of their principal leaders and instigators. The prisoner being interrogated, confessed that about two months ago, finding his army to be ill supplied with the means of subsistence in the province of Se-chuen, he resolved to pass over with his adherents into the provinces of Shen-sy and Kan-foo, and that having collected a sufficient number of boats for that purpose, he had crossed the intervening river in the night time with an army of between thirty and forty thousand men, little expecting the vigorous resistance which was afterwards opposed to his progress. In subsequent engagements all his brothers fell in the field of battle, and he was himself once wounded with an arrow. He added, that not above five generals of the rebels still kept the field, and that those were destitute both of talents and of experience.

By this confession our opinion is confirmed, that this is the same leader who has so notoriously been at the head of the troops of the rebels for these last five years, to the great detriment and depopulation of the provinces of Shen-sy and Se-chuen, and to the sacrifice of the lives of many valuable officers and men belonging to the Imperial armies. But Heaven no longer permits the perpetration of these enormities, and is pleased to deliver him up to our hands; an event that must have been earnestly desired by all ranks of Your Majesty's faithful subjects.

I have not failed repeatedly to publish Your Majesty's Imperial manifesto, addressed to all the well disposed inhabitants, who may have had the misfortune to have been compelled or seduced to associate with the rebels, and declaring a free pardon to all such as awake from their delusion, and renounce their errors; and likewise promising to furnish them with the means of returning to their former habitations and professions.

I have

I have, moreover, thought it expedient to send the rebel chieftain to *Quay-lung viceroy of the province, that by His Excellency's orders, he might be sent round with a strong escort, and exposed to public view at all the principal towns and places of public resort in this part of the empire, in order that on the one hand, Your Majesty's faithful subjects may be henceforward relieved from the terror and alarm which the known cunning and ferocity of this man were calculated to excite; and that on the other hand, the hopes and reliance which the malcontents were wont to place on the talents and sagacity of their former leader, may every where be blasted and overthrown.

I finally recommend to Your Majesty's gracious favor and bounty, all those who have honourably distinguished themselves by their valour and abilities, in the late engagements; and I am happy at the same time to observe, that the loss of lives which these victories have cost to Your Majesty's officers and troops is extremely inconsiderable.

IMPERIAL REPLY.

The gracious favor of Heaven, the protecting influence of our ancestors, the fidelity and unanimity of our officers, and the valour of our troops, have all conspired in obtaining for us these victories, and in effecting the overthrow of a most dangerous and wicked leader of the rebellion: the prospect this affords of a speedy pacification of the provinces of Se-chuen and Sben-sy, is highly consolatory to us, and diminishes our self-condemnation, for the previous sufferings of our faithful subjects in those parts.

Khin-Tse.

 No. XXI.

[Referred to from Section CCXXV. Page 239.]

Translation of Two of the Clauses annexed to this Section.

ILLICIT EXPORTATION OF MERCHANDIZE.

- I. ALL officers of government, soldiers, and private citizens, who clandestinely proceed to sea to trade, or who remove to foreign islands for the purpose of inhabiting and cultivating the same, shall be punished according to the law against communicating with rebels and enemies, and consequently suffer death by

* An account of the charges subsequently brought against this officer, and of his condemnation to suffer capital punishment, is inserted in the Appendix No. IX.

being being beheaded. The governors of cities of the second and third orders, shall likewise be beheaded, when found guilty of combining with, or artfully conniving at the conduct of such persons. When only a neglect of their duty, in not taking measures to prevent the same, is the offence imputable to them, they shall not suffer death, but be degraded and dismissed for ever from the public service. Governors of cities of the first order, and other officers having the same rank, when guilty of a similar neglect, shall be degraded three degrees, and removed from their stations. — Viceroy and other great magistrates of provinces, shall in similar cases of imputed neglect, be degraded two degrees, but retain their offices.

Nevertheless, the neglect of all such officers shall be pardoned, if they afterwards succeed in securing the offenders, and in bringing them to condign punishment.

2. In general, only a limited number of persons shall be admitted into the empire in the suite of foreign embassies, excepting in the instance of the embassy from Corea. — The embassy from Siam shall be limited to twenty-six persons; those of European nations, in general, to twenty-two persons; and those of any other nation, to twenty persons only.

Those viceroys and sub-viceroys, who, in any case, instead of announcing to the Emperor the arrival of a ship bringing to the empire an embassy from a foreign country, and requesting His Majesty's decision thereon, undertake privately, and of their own accord, to dismiss such embassy, shall be deprived of their offices.

No. XXII.

[Referred to from Section CCLIV. Page 272.]

The following is a Translation of the Clauses annexed to this Section.

HIGH TREASON.

ALL Persons who are banished on account of their connexion, either by blood or by marriage, with persons convicted of high treason, shall be accompanied by their wives: the wives of such implicated persons shall not, however, be liable to banishment, when the husbands happen to die childless, previous to the execution of the principal offender.

The relations of all criminals found guilty of high treason shall, in general, be liable to punishment and execution, conformably to the tenor of the fundamental law;

law ; yet, in the instance of ignorant or designing persons attempting to establish a corrupt sect and doctrine, for the sake of obtaining money under false and nefarious pretences, and thereby influencing and seducing the minds of the people ; although this crime is constructively high treason, and punishable accordingly, it does not necessarily involve the relations of the criminal, unless they are convicted of having been actually concerned in the perpetration of the offence. — Any person maliciously inventing a charge of high treason, with a view to injure particular individuals, is punishable according to the law concerning false accusations ; but the relations of such person shall not participate in the punishment, as such relations may be endangered, and cannot be benefited by the perpetration of the offence.

All the male relations of criminals guilty of high treason, at or above the age of sixteen, shall be executed in the manner directed by the fundamental law ; the remaining male children, if proved to be totally innocent of, and unacquainted with the commission of the offence, shall be suffered to live, but rendered eunuchs, that they may be employed for the public service, in the exterior buildings of the palace. — Among these, such as are under ten years of age, shall remain in prison until they attain that age, and then be sent to court to serve as above-stated.

No. XXIII.

[Referred to from Section CCLV. page 273.]

The following is a Translation of the Clauses annexed to this Section.

REBELLION AND RENUNCIATION OF ALLEGIANCE.

THE wives and children of persons liable to be banished, as relations of criminals convicted of crimes punishable by this law, shall be banished likewise, provided the said persons are living at the time of conviction, but not otherwise.

The grand-children of criminals under this law, when of too tender an age to be separated from their parents, shall remain with them, subject to the charge and direction of the superintending magistrates.

In every trial of offences of this nature, the presiding magistrate shall diligently ascertain the number, residence, and employment of the relations of the criminal, or criminals, as well as the extent and amount of his or their property within the province; and if it shall appear that the criminals have any relations, connexions, or property in any other province, notice shall be immediately given to the chief magistrate thereof, that he may duly take cognizance of the same: — All magistrates failing in this duty, shall be liable to prosecution by an accusation laid before the Emperor.

The Tartarian subjects of the empire shall be equally punishable under this law. — When their property is subject to confiscation, their slaves shall be at the disposal of the supreme court for affairs of revenue.

All persons who, without being related or connected by intermarriages, establish a brotherhood or association among themselves, by the ceremonial of tasting blood, and burning incense, shall be held guilty of an intent to commit the crime of rebellion; and the principal or chief leader of such an association shall, accordingly, suffer death by strangulation, after remaining for the usual period in confinement. — The punishment of the accessaries shall be less by one degree. — If the brotherhood exceeds twenty persons in number, the principal offender shall suffer death by strangulation immediately after conviction; and the accessaries shall suffer the aggravated banishment into the remotest provinces. — If the brotherhood be formed without the aforesaid initiatory ceremonies of tasting blood and burning incense, and according to the rules of its constitution, be subject to the authority and direction of the elders only, but exceed forty persons in number, then the principal shall still suffer death by strangulation, as in the first case, and the accessaries a punishment less by one degree.

If the authority and direction of the association is found to be vested in the strong and youthful members, that circumstance alone shall be deemed a sufficient evidence of its criminality; and the principal shall accordingly suffer death by strangulation immediately after conviction: the accessaries, as in the preceding cases, shall undergo aggravated banishment.

If the association is subject to the authority and direction of the elder brethren, and consists of more than twenty, but less than forty members, the principals shall be punished with 100 blows, and sent into perpetual banishment to the distance of 3000 lee. If the association under the last mentioned circumstances, consists of any number less than twenty persons, the principal shall suffer 100 blows, and wear the cangue for three months. — In both cases, the punishment of the accessaries shall be one degree less severe than that of the principals.

Whenever:

Whenever vagrant and disorderly persons form themselves into a brotherhood by the initiation of blood, as aforesaid, and endeavour to excite factious or leading men to join them, or tamper with the soldiers and servants of public tribunals, with the same intent, having for their ultimate object, to injure the people, and disturb the peace of the country; and further, when such criminal practices have been duly reported by the country-people and heads of villages, to the magistrates and governors of the division or district; if the said magistrates and governors refuse or neglect to take measures for suppressing such proceedings; or in any other manner countenance or connive at them, so that in the end an open sedition breaks out, and rapine and devastation ensue, such culpable officers of government shall be forthwith deprived of their dignities and employments, and prosecuted for their misconduct, by accusation laid before the supreme court of judicature. — Nevertheless, if, after such associations had been suffered to take place through the neglect or connivance of the magistrates, those magistrates exert themselves successfully in stopping the progress of the evil, and in preventing the commission of any act of open violence, sedition, and rapine, and are, moreover, active in seizing the criminals, and bringing them to justice, their former neglect and omission shall, in such cases, be pardoned.

All those inhabitants of the neighbourhood, and heads of villages, who, when privy to these unlawful practices, omit to give information thereof to government, shall be punished according to the degree of their responsibility, and the other circumstances of the case; but, on the other hand, those who give timely notice and information, shall be proportionably rewarded: — If, however, the charges are found to have been made under frivolous pretexts, the informers will be subject to punishment as calumniators.

The punishment of the brotherhood associated by the initiation with blood, which exists in the province of Fo-kien, shall be conformable to the afore-mentioned regulations; and further, when the persons thus guilty, take up arms in order to resist the magistrates, and a tumult ensues, all who are concerned in such resistance, shall, if considered as principals, suffer death by being beheaded; and by strangulation, if considered as accessaries to the offence.

All associations connected together by secret signals, whatever be their extent, are obviously instituted with the design of oppressing the weak, and injuring the solitary and unprotected. — Wherefore the leaders or principals of all such societies, shall be held to be vagabonds and outlaws, and accordingly be banished perpetually to the most remote provinces: the other members of such associations shall be considered as accessaries, and punished less severely by one degree.

Those persons who, though not regularly belonging to, had suffered themselves to be seduced to accompany such associated persons, shall not be banished, but shall suffer the punishment of 100 blows, and wear the cangue for three months. — All persons who, after having been employed as soldiers or civil servants of government, enter into any of the said unlawful associations, shall be punished as principals.

Any inhabitants of the neighbourhood, or heads of villages, who may be convicted of being privy to, and not reporting these practices to government, shall be punished more or less severely, according to the nature of the case. — Magistrates neglecting to investigate and take cognizance of the like offences; or from corrupt and sinister motives, liberating and pardoning offenders after examination, shall be punished as the law applicable to similar cases directs.

Notwithstanding the aforesaid, persons assembling for the sole purpose of doing honour, or returning thanks to a particular temple or divinity, and immediately afterwards peaceably dispersing, shall not be punished by any construction of these prohibitions.

All those vagaband and disorderly persons who have been known to assemble together, and to commit robberies, and other acts of violence, under the particular designation of “Tien-tee-woee,” or, “the Association of Heaven and Earth,” shall, immediately after seizure and conviction, suffer death by being beheaded; and all those who have been induced to accompany them, and to aid and abet their said practices, shall suffer death by being strangled.

This law shall be put in force whenever this sect or association may be revived.

No. XXIV.

[Referred to from Section CCLVI. Page 273.]

The following is a Translation of the Clauses annexed to this Section.

SORCERY AND MAGIC.

WHOEVER is guilty of editing wicked and corrupt books, with the view of misleading the people; and whoever attempts to excite sedition by letters or hand-bills, shall suffer death by being beheaded: the principals shall be executed immediately after conviction, but the accessories shall be reserved for execution at the usual season.

All.

All persons who are convicted of printing, distributing, or singing in the streets, such disorderly and seditious compositions, shall be punishable as accessaries.

The constituted authorities at Peking, and the viceroys or sub-viceroys of the provinces, shall not fail to take due cognizance, in their respective jurisdictions, of the offence of introducing and offering for sale, any species whatever of indecent and immoral publications. — All the copies of such books, and the blocks with which they shall have been printed, shall be destroyed. The author, compiler, or editor thereof, if a magistrate, shall be degraded and deprived of his appointment; and if a private citizen, shall receive 100 blows, and be sent into perpetual banishment to the distance of 3000 lee. — The venders of any such book or writing, shall be punished with 100 blows, and banished for three years. — The purchasers and readers thereof shall suffer severally the punishment of 100 blows. — If the magistrates do not take cognizance of, and endeavour to restrain the sale of such unlawful publications, they shall be liable to prosecution, by accusation before the supreme authorities, and punished more or less severely according to the circumstances of the case. Those, however, who charge others with a breach of this law, under frivolous pretexts, shall be punished according to the law against false accusations.

Whoever wilfully publishes a false and malicious report of any public acts and proceedings, which had taken place at Peking, or in the provinces, shall, if a magistrate, or other officer of government, be forthwith degraded, and dismissed from all his employments; and if a private citizen, shall suffer 100 blows, and be sent into perpetual banishment to the distance 3000 lee. — All magistrates of districts, neglecting to take cognizance of such offences, shall be liable to prosecution, by accusation before the supreme authorities.

Whenever the sons, connections, or dependent inmates of the families of any of the great officers of state are convicted of associating with, or in any manner frequenting the company of persons guilty of any of the aforesaid offences, or of persons otherwise criminal and disorderly, they shall be punished according to this law; and the heads of the families shall likewise be brought to trial, for their criminal negligence, in suffering persons under their controul to participate in such unlawful transactions.

No. XXV.

[Referred to from Section CCLXIII. Page 277.]

The following is a Translation of the most material Clauses annexed to this Section.

STEALING TIMBER FROM A BURYING GROUND.

1. ALL civil and military officers, and their attendants, having charge of the Imperial cemetery, shall, whenever approaching the same, dismount from their horses at the distance of one hundred paces. A breach of this regulation, being a great instance of disrespect, shall be punished with 100 blows.

2. Whoever cuts down and removes the cypresses, or other similar trees, growing within the innermost inclosure of the Imperial cemetery, shall, if a principal in the offence, be held guilty of sacrilege, and receive sentence to suffer death by being beheaded; but the case shall be, at the same time, recommended to His Imperial Majesty's consideration; the accessories shall be banished to the frontiers of the empire. Digging the ground, removing stones, and committing other similar trespasses, shall be punished according to the extent of the offence.

3. Any son or grandson who privately cuts down and fells one or more of the trees which grew in the burying-ground of his father or grandfather, shall receive a punishment of 100 blows, and wear the cangue for three months. When the value of the wood so disposed of is considerable, it shall be estimated, and the unabated punishment of an ordinary theft to the same amount shall be inflicted on the offender. When the number of trees cut down exceeds ten, the offender, if a Tartar, shall be employed in servitude in the district of Ningouta; if a Chinese, he shall be perpetually banished beyond the frontier. Any son or grandson, who cuts down the dead or decayed wood belonging to such burying-grounds, without previously giving notice thereof to the magistrate of the district, shall be punished with 80 blows.

Slaves or other persons who, being appointed to watch a burying-ground, steal and sell the timber thereof, shall be punished with 100 blows, and wear the cangue for one month. When the amount stolen is considerable, it shall be estimated, and the offender shall be punished one degree more severely than in the ordinary cases of stealing from a burying-ground. When the purchaser of such such timber known to have been stolen, he shall suffer the punishment of stealing from a burying-ground in ordinary cases. The purchaser, when ignorant of the property having been stolen, will not be punishable.

Stealing grave-stones, bricks, dry wood, or other articles belonging to, and deposited in a burying-ground, is punishable in the following manner: if the offender was the slave, son, or grandson of the individual whose tomb or burying-place had been thus violated, the stolen articles shall be valued, and the punishment rated one degree more severely than in the ordinary cases of theft.—If the offender was an indifferent person, the punishment shall be the same as in ordinary cases of theft. The purchaser, if aware of the goods having been stolen, shall be punished one degree less severely than the seller, and the several articles shall be delivered up to the charge of the magistrate of the district, in order to their being restored to the owner.

4. Idle persons and vagrants privately purchasing timber stolen from burying-grounds, however small the quantity, shall, for the first offence, be punished with 100 blows, and the cangue for one month; for the second offence, with 100 blows, and the cangue for three months; and for the third offence, with perpetual banishment beyond the frontier.

5. All persons cutting down and stealing the trees of a burying-ground shall, for the first and second offence, be punished as already stated; but, for the third offence, shall be punished in the same manner as for a third offence in a case of ordinary theft.

When the offence is repeated six times within ten days, or twenty or thirty trees are cut down within the same period, all the parties concerned shall be perpetually banished, according to the law against theft by combination. — If the theft be committed during three successive days, it shall be considered as one offence; and when it is the first, the punishment shall be one degree less than it would have been conformably to the law against theft by combination. The parties shall be branded with proper marks, as in ordinary cases.

No. XXVI.

[Referred to from Section CCLXIV. Page 278.]

The following is a Translation of the first Seven Clauses annexed to this Section.

EMBEZZLEMENT OF PUBLIC PROPERTY.

1. ANY person having the charge and superintendance of the grain vessels of government, when found guilty of embezzling grain to the amount of sixty stone *, shall be banished perpetually beyond the Chinese frontier: if the grain embezzled amounts to six hundred stone, the offender shall suffer death by being beheaded, after remaining in prison until the usual period.

2. In the different provinces through which the grain vessels of government are navigated, more especially that of Kiang-nan, it shall be the duty of all the governors of districts to be on their guard, and to be particularly vigilant in detecting and punishing all clandestine and fraudulent sales and purchases of grain within their respective limits. All persons offending in these respects shall, when discovered, wear the cangue for one month, and be confined until the return of the grain vessels; upon which the superintending officers of such vessels shall be made acquainted with the circumstances, and the offenders punished in their presence with 40 blows each, previous to their being dismissed. All magistrates neglecting to take cognizance of such offences, will be subject to prosecution by accusation laid before the supreme authorities.

3. All proprietors of the small boats which shall be found to have been let out for the purpose of stealing and clandestinely selling the grain laden in the Imperial barges as aforesaid, shall wear the cangue for one month, in the same manner as the offenders described in the last clause; but the subsequent punishment shall be less severe by two degrees. The pilots of the Imperial barges, when privy to such fraudulent and clandestine transactions, and failing to inform the officers of government thereof, shall be punished with 80 blows; but if they also share in the plunder, their punishment shall be proportionate to the amount, as in other cases.

4. In cases of embezzlement of public stores or bullion, to the amount or value of one thousand ounces of silver or upwards, the offenders are punishable with death,

* A stone weight in China is considered to be equal to one hundred and twenty lin, or one hundred and sixty British pounds.

death, by being beheaded; but when the value does not exceed one thousand ounces, they may be eventually liberated by an act of grace and general pardon.

When the value exceeds the latter sum, the sentence must be executed, unless it is set aside by the Emperor's special command. No civil or military officers of government, when guilty of embezzlement, shall be branded in the manner ordered with respect to other persons.

5. In every case of embezzlement, the names of the wives and unmarried children of the offender shall be registered, that they may be held answerable for the value of the stores embezzled.

If the superintending magistrate is satisfied, after an accurate examination, that the family of the offender possesses no property, applicable to the liquidation of the demands of government, beyond what had been surrendered for that purpose, he shall sign and deliver to them a quittance and full discharge; but such magistrate shall be liable to degradation and other punishment, if it is afterwards discovered that the parties did actually possess other property; all of which, notwithstanding such quittance, shall thereupon be confiscated. No demand or assessment shall, however, be levied, on the more distant relations of any offender; and any magistrate who arbitrarily attempts to enforce the like, shall be degraded. Any magistrate, likewise, who refuses a quittance when due, will be liable to prosecution by accusation laid before the highest authorities.

6. When any offender, after having been convicted under this law, has been pardoned, or indulged with any mitigation of his sentence, the legal punishment shall be aggravated one degree, if he should ever be convicted of a repetition of the offence.

7. Although an officer or magistrate who had been guilty of embezzlement should happen to die before conviction, his sons shall still be answerable for the amount of the loss sustained by government.

No. XXVII.

[Referred to from Section CCLXV. Page 279.]

The following is a Translation of the Clauses annexed to this Section.

THEFT OF PUBLIC PROPERTY.

1. WHOSOEVER steals rice or other grain from the public barges, to the amount of one hundred stone, will be punishable with death by strangulation, after the usual period of confinement: when the amount is under one hundred stone, the punishment shall be according to the scale of stealing any quantity not exceeding in value one hundred ounces of silver from a public granary.

2. Thieves and their accomplices undermining, or otherwise secretly attempting to gain access to a public storehouse, in order to steal, shall be punished in the following manner: the principal offender shall suffer 100 blows and three years banishment; and the punishment of the rest shall be one degree less, as accessaries.

When the theft is actually committed, and to the extent of one hundred ounces of silver in value, the principal offender shall suffer death by strangulation: if less than one hundred ounces value, he shall be banished to one of the most remote provinces.

Accessaries to such a theft, when not exceeding eighty ounces in value, shall be banished for five years.

Accessaries to a theft of eight-five ounces in value shall suffer 100 blows, and perpetual banishment to the distance of two thousand lee: if ninety ounces in value, the accessaries shall suffer one hundred blows, and perpetual banishment to the distance of two thousand five hundred lee: if ninety-five ounces in value, 100 blows, and perpetual banishment to the distance of three thousand lee: the punishment in the case of the theft amounting to, or exceeding one hundred ounces, has been already stated.

No. XXVIII.

[Referred to from Section CCLXVI. Page 281.]

The following is a Translation of some of the most material Clauses annexed to this Section.

ROBBERY.—HIGHWAY ROBBERY.

1. IF, in attempting to commit a robbery, any individual is killed, a house burned, a female violated, a prison, tribunal, or fortification broken into, or damaged; or, lastly, if an hundred persons are assembled, and aiding and abetting the same; in all such cases, each of the criminals shall be beheaded immediately after conviction; even although the party should have obtained no booty; — and the heads of the criminals, as soon as struck off, shall be fixed on pikes, and exhibited as a public spectacle.

2. Persons

2. Persons armed, and on horseback, guilty of robbing on the public highways, shall, in all cases, be beheaded immediately after conviction, and their heads exhibited as a public spectacle.

All those who are guilty of committing piracies on the high seas, or on great rivers, shall likewise suffer according to this law.

3. Whereas there are certain practiced villains who frequent taverns for the purpose of administering stupefying drugs to travellers, and afterwards rise by break of day and way-lay them; — whenever such offenders are apprehended, they shall not be removed to a distance, but a diligent search and enquiry shall be immediately made upon the spot, with a view to the seizure and conviction of the whole gang or association; when they are all collected and convicted, they shall be beheaded at the same time; notice of their execution being given by a public edict duly authenticated by the magistrate of the district.

4. Any robber who has been likewise guilty of rapes, murders, burning of houses, severely wounding the person plundered, or any other similar aggravation of his offence, shall derive no benefit or indulgence by surrendering himself. Such robbers as have slightly wounded the person plundered, whether they surrender themselves before the circumstances of the robbery are made public, or after the order had been issued for their apprehension, shall, if principals, still suffer death, by being beheaded; but not until after remaining in prison during the usual period. In cases wherein no person has been wounded, the principals surrendering themselves before the offence has been reported to the magistrates, shall be banished beyond the Chinese frontiers. If, in the latter cases, the offenders do not surrender themselves until after the warrant for their apprehension had been issued, they shall suffer conformably to the law relative to a mere remission of the capital part of the sentence; and accordingly be condemned to perpetual slavery in the garrisoned forts on the banks of the He-lung-kiang, near the extreme frontier of Tartary.

If the accessaries to a robbery, when it is their first offence, surrender themselves before information had been given thereof to any magistrate, they shall be pardoned. If they voluntarily surrender themselves, but not before the warrant had been issued for their apprehension, they shall suffer each 100 blows, and three years banishment. If they do not surrender until after having committed the same offence more than once, but previously to the report of the last offence having been made to any magistrate, they shall be banished beyond the Chinese frontier; but if the warrant for their apprehension had been previously issued, they must be banished, and undergo perpetual slavery in the manner aforesaid.

House-breakers surrendering themselves, shall be banished or capitally executed in the same manner as robbers, according to the circumstances stated. The punishment of robbers attempting to escape after condemnation to banishment, shall be aggravated one degree; and if the banishment had been previously decreed to be of the severest kind; that is to say, perpetual slavery on the banks of the He-lung-kiang, in Tartary, they shall, in consequence of the aggravation of their guilt, be beheaded, immediately after the sentence pronounced conformably to the law, receives the Emperor's ratification. Persons setting fire to out-houses, and other untenanted buildings, shall suffer banishment according to the law against wilful burning; but if the property destroyed is considerable, the offender shall be banished beyond the Chinese frontier.

5. All persons who, after having been engaged by government as servants of the police, betray their trust, and are concerned in the commission of any robbery, although not actually the principals and instigators thereof, shall, nevertheless, be punished as such, and accordingly be beheaded immediately after conviction. Those magistrates, to whose want of vigilance the opportunity to commit such a crime is imputable, shall be prosecuted by an accusation laid before the Emperor. — If such magistrates attempt to falsify the evidence, and allege that they had previously dismissed from the public service the supposed offenders, their superior officers shall investigate and ascertain the truth of the case, on pain of a similar enquiry being instituted against themselves. — If any of the servants of the police as aforesaid, are convicted of maintaining a correspondence with the robbers, and divulging to them the plan by which they were to have been seized, either by themselves or any other persons in the service of the police, so that the culprits are enabled to defeat such plans, and effect their escape, the persons guilty of such criminal correspondence, whether sharers in the plunder or not, shall suffer the same punishment as had been legally due to those who had fled from justice.

6. Servants of the police, when engaged as aforesaid in the pursuit of the perpetrators of a robbery, shall, in general, suffer equal punishment with the robbers, if convicted of having corresponded with them, and shared their booty. — If only guilty of wilful connivance at the robbery, they shall be punished according to the law against receiving stolen goods, knowing them to have been stolen. If the connivance is not proved, but the police officer is convicted of a designed want of exertion in the pursuit of the criminals, he shall suffer punishment reduced according to the circumstances of the case.

7. The individual who had sustained a robbery, and, in due form, complained of it to a magistrate, shall only be required to attend at the tribunal of government, during the actual trial of the criminals, and the identification of the property recovered; all which property shall, at the conclusion of the trial, be restored to the owner, without subjecting him to delay or molestation: any superintending intending magistrate who fails in these points, will be liable to an accusation laid before the Emperor.

8. The individual plundered, when giving in a statement of his losses; shall describe the same in a clear and distinct manner: If the loss has been considerable, and he has omitted to insert any of the articles, through an oversight, he shall be allowed a period of five days for preparing a supplementary report. The original and supplementary reports shall remain thenceforward in the custody of the magistrate of the district, that they may be referred to in all the successive proceedings, until the criminals are seized, and the property recovered. — When any part thereof has been traced and discovered, an officer of government shall be sent immediately to the spot, for the purpose of having the same examined and identified in his presence. — If the police officers presume of their own accord to condemn property seized by them, or, under the pretext of searching for and recovering plunder, make vexatious domiciliary visits; if they maliciously suggest to the robbers in custody, to make false depositions concerning the places in which, and the persons by whom, they had been harboured; if they seize and condemn as plunder, any articles honestly belonging to the prisoners; if they purchase articles to be substituted in the place of those obtained by unlawful means; or, lastly, if in any case, they report the recovery of plunder, falsely or prematurely, they shall, in all such cases, be punished with the utmost severity of the law: — The superintending magistrate who has neglected to prevent such abuses, and the viceroys and sub-viceroys who had omitted to notice them to the Emperor, will be respectively liable to an enquiry into their conduct, and to a trial by accusation before the supreme court.

9. When any member of an association of robbers has been seized, the individual who led the way, and suggested the plan of the robbery, shall, in general, be considered, and punished, as the principal; and the rest only as accessaries. — Nevertheless, if there be one amongst them, who neither suggested the plan, nor personally assisted in perpetrating the crime, and yet led the way, was possessed of a previous knowledge of the place intended to be visited, and of the person intended to be plundered, and lastly, participated in the booty obtained; he also shall be considered, and punished as a principal offender, and accordingly excluded from the benefit of the laws applicable to cases under palliating circumstances.

10. If any individual complaining of a robbery, makes a false or fraudulent report, by representing that to have been robbery which was merely a theft; or by falsely charging an adulterer with having also committed a robbery, such individual shall be punished with 100 blows. — If, in a case of homicide, or of an assault, assault, a robbery is pretended to have been also committed, the accusing party shall be punished with 100 blows, as before; but if he is implicated himself in the crime, his punishment shall be conformable to the utmost rigour of the law upon the case: — When the crime in which he is implicated, is not considerable, his punishment shall be less than that of the chief perpetrator, by one degree. — If any persons, confiding in their rank and influence, falsely accuse others of robbery, and deceive the superintending magistrates, with the intent to injure and distress particular individuals by such charges, they shall suffer the punishment to which false accusers of a capital offence are liable, when the charges made by them are disproved in time to prevent the execution of the innocent person. — All persons aiding and abetting such false accusers, shall be punished as accessaries.

11. Any civil or military officer of a district, wishing to avoid the difficulties and inconveniences of carrying the laws into effect in the case of a robbery, and with that view, threatening the complainant, and compelling him to suppress the circumstances of the robbery, or obliging him to represent it as a simple theft, shall be deprived of his office, and a punishment of 100 blows shall be inflicted on each of the clerks of the tribunal, who had participated in such misconduct. — If the compulsion and oppression practised, had been carried to such lengths as to occasion the death of the complainant, or the punishment unjustly inflicted upon him, had been such as to deprive him of the use of his limbs, the magistrate guilty thereof, shall be punished according to the law applicable to the case of an intentionally unjust capital condemnation of an innocent person. — The magistrates of superior tribunals, if they neglect to report such conduct, and the viceroys and sub-viceroys, if they neglect to accuse the offenders, as they are bound to do by their office, will respectively be liable to be charged with such omission before the Emperor.

12. In every case of a theft or robbery, it is the duty of the Ty-pao, or head man of the civil division, and of the soldier on duty in the military division, to report the occurrence to the civil and military tribunal to which they respectively belong, in order that prompt and active measures may be jointly pursued by those tribunals for bringing the offenders to justice. — If the Ty-pao and the soldier agree together in concealing the fact, or the Ty-pao reports it to the civil magistrate, while the soldier on duty omits to make a corresponding report to the military officer on the station, or vice versa, the parties offending shall be punished in the same manner as the neighbours of persons guilty of robbery, when knowing, and failing to report the same; namely, with 100 blows. — When only very dilatory in transmitting their reports, the punishment shall be limited to 80 blows.

13. When

13. When any robbers, after having surrendered themselves voluntarily, endeavour to satisfy the laws by substituting borrowed articles in the place of those which they ought to have restored; or accuse innocent persons of being in league with them; or plot against any persons out of revenge; or, are guilty of any kind of extortion for the purposes aforesaid; they shall, on conviction of such practices, whether as principals or as accessaries, in possession or not, of the plunder, be immediately beheaded.

14. If a leader in a robbery, although he may have wounded some person and made his escape, afterwards voluntarily surrenders himself, and has likewise the merit of delivering into the hands of justice some other robber, his punishment shall be one degree less than if he had simply surrendered himself at first, that is to say, he shall receive 100 blows, and be banished for a term of three years.

15. When the leader and contriver of a robbery has made his escape; but one of the association who had been taken into custody, offers to indicate the place of the concealment of such leader, so that within the period of a year it may be possible to trace and apprehend him, the trial of the offenders shall stand over until the year is expired; when, if the ring-leader is still undiscovered, the rest of the gang or association shall be executed, or otherwise punished as the laws direct, without further delay; but if the ringleader should have been apprehended in consequence of the information received, the informer, although by law capitally punishable, shall save his life, but be sent into banishment and perpetual slavery in the garrisoned forts on the banks of the He-lung-kiang.

If the life of the informer had not been previously forfeited by law, he shall receive 100 blows, and undergo the ordinary perpetual banishment to the distance of 3000 lee.

16. When reporting the proceedings in cases of theft and robbery for the Emperor's consideration, if more than one charge of the kind is under investigation, and more than one person has been thereupon capitally convicted, separate reports shall be made upon the case of each individual; but if the capital part of the charges all center in one person, and are similar in their nature, the different charges against that person shall be stated in the same report, clearly, however, and distinctly enumerated.

All the charges against the accomplices, and all such other charges as are not capital, shall be reserved for a separate statement, to be communicated in the ordinary manner to the supreme court of judicature.

No. XXIX.

[Referred to from Section CCLXXXII. Page 304.]

The following is a Translation of Part of the Clauses and Commentary annexed to this Section.

PRECONCERTED HOMICIDE — MURDER.

1. IN the trial and investigation of a case of pre-concerted homicide, the artifice and preconcerted plan must be clearly proved, in order to warrant the condemnation of any person to suffer death by being beheaded, as an original contriver. In like manner, the act of striking and wounding must have been proved against those on whom sentence of death by strangulation is pronounced, as accessaries contributing to the perpetration of the crime. Further, a preconcerted scheme, and the prospect of booty, must be proved with the same certainty, in order to warrant a general sentence of death by being beheaded, against all the parties, whether principals or accessaries, in a case of premeditated homicide for the sake of obtaining booty.

2. If any magistrate presumes to pass sentence of death in any of the aforesaid cases of premeditated homicide, without having proof, in each case respectively, of the previous design, concurrence in the perpetration, or acquisition of booty, as the case may be, he shall be answerable for the lives of the individuals whose condemnation he pronounces.

3. Where a homicide is devised for the sake of obtaining booty, a distinction shall be made between those cases in which a robbery was only attempted, and those in which it was accomplished.

If the homicide had been perpetrated, and the booty likewise secured, the principal and all those accessaries who had contributed to the perpetration of the murder, shall suffer death by being beheaded immediately after conviction. All the other accessaries shall likewise suffer death by being beheaded, but not till the usual period of capital executions. Other individuals subsequently sharing in the booty, shall be banished perpetually to the banks of the river He-lung-kiang in Tartary.

When a wound is inflicted with the intent to commit murder, and for the sake of obtaining plunder, the object being also accomplished; then, although the wound should not prove mortal, the principal offender shall suffer death by being beheaded immediately after conviction: accessaries striking a blow, or other-

wife

wife directly aiding and abetting, shall likewise suffer death by being beheaded at the customary period.

All other accessaries shall, as aforesaid, be banished perpetually to the banks of the He-lung-kiang in Tartary. Those who were not concerned in the crime, but subsequently shared in the division of the booty, shall each suffer 100 blows, and be banished perpetually to the distance of 3000 lee.

When the murder is effected, but no plunder obtained, the principal offender shall suffer death by being beheaded at the customary period. When the blow struck does not produce a mortal wound, and no plunder is obtained, the principal only, shall suffer death by strangulation at the customary period;—the accessaries shall suffer punishment proportionably reduced, according to the rule already exemplified.

4. When any individual, upon becoming acquainted with a concerted plan against his life, endeavours to escape, but is drowned, or killed by a fall or other accident, in the attempt, the principal agent in such concerted scheme shall be banished perpetually to the distance of 3000 lee; and the accessaries shall, each of them, be punished with 100 blows.

If the murder was on the point of being committed when such accident ensued in the manner aforesaid, the principal offender shall suffer death by being strangled at the customary period; and the accessaries, after receiving 100 blows each, shall be banished perpetually to the distance of 3000 lee.

5. In all cases of murder committed by the people called Miao-tse, for the sake of obtaining booty, all the parties to the crime shall suffer death by being beheaded, immediately after conviction; and their heads shall be exhibited as a public warning.

6. Any person in priest's orders seizing and murdering a child under 12 years of age, shall suffer death by being beheaded, immediately after conviction:—Other persons committing the same crime, shall be punished as in ordinary cases of murder.

7. In all cases of piracy committed by trading vessels belonging to the island of Tay-wan (Formosa,) the offenders shall suffer death by being beheaded, immediately after conviction; and their heads shall be exposed to public view at the port of Hia-men (Emouy,) together with a written account of their crimes, as a warning to others.

8. Whoever, from an impulse of anger, kills a child under 10 years of age, shall, if a principal in the offence, suffer death by being beheaded, immediately after conviction. The accessaries who were directly aiding and abetting, shall be strangled as soon as convicted; and all other accessaries shall be banished perpetually to the distance of 3000 lee.

COMMENTARY.

When a homicide has been planned by a person, who was not apparently under the influence, either of resentment or of deep-rooted hatred against the party whose life he had designed to take away, a further object must have been in view, such as the gratification of lust or avarice: — Cases of the former kind are less difficult to investigate than the latter, as the actuating motive may sometimes be so carefully concealed, as to be almost undiscoverable.

Homicide by device, although resembling the crime of intentional homicide, which is the subject of another section of the code, is distinguished by peculiar traits of premeditation and contrivance, whereas the latter is simply understood to imply an intent to kill at the time the attempt was made.

When contrivance and premeditation are proved against any person by competent testimony, such proof will be sufficient to convict such person, as one of the original contrivers, and such contrivance will be considered to amount to a personal concurrence in the perpetration of the crime: those who afterwards concur in the actual commission of the murder, will be severally punishable as accessaries aiding and abetting the previous contrivance, although not personally privy thereto: — Thus, under a charge of this nature, for the destruction of one man, the lives of many may happen to be legally forfeited.

In order to convict any person of the crime of a preconcerted homicide, it must be proved that death has actually ensued; but it shall make no difference whether death ensued instantly, or after any lapse of time, provided there be always sufficient evidence of a previous contrivance.

Although preconcerted homicide necessarily implies the existence of some previous contrivance, the crime itself may be perpetrated in various ways; as by poisoning, burning, drowning, way-laying, stabbing, or any other mode which admits of a previous design.

It has been already stated, that a blow producing a wound must be proved, in order to convict an individual capitally, as an accessary directly aiding and abetting the crime: to this it may be added, that any one who menaces the person whose life is attacked, or who defeats the precautions he had taken for his security, is simply punishable as an accessary; whereas, in a case of a premeditated homicide effected by poison, the person who prepares and administers the same, is not a simple accessary, but capitally punishable as an accessary directly aiding and abetting.

If Kia consults with Yee concerning a plan of murdering a third person, against whom he Kia has an enmity, and Yee, in consequence, invents or devises a scheme for effecting the same, Kia will still be deemed, and punished as the original contriver.

Accessaries

Accessories to a homicide by contrivance, cannot redeem by a fine any part of the corporal punishment, or banishment, to which they may have been condemned by law ; nor will the length of the surivance of the deceased, after he had been wounded, procure them any indulgence ; but as the life of an individual under this charge, may often depend on the discovery of the most secret operations of the mind, more than ordinary care and accuracy ought to be employed in the investigation and elucidation of the facts and circumstances upon which the conviction of offenders in these cases depends.

No. XXX.

[Referred to from Section CCXCV. Page 317.]

Translation of an Extract from a Volume of Law Reports ; containing the Trial, revisal of Proceedings, and final Sentence, in the Case of an Offender charged with Homicide by Gun-firing.

AT a criminal court held in the province of Kiang-see, Whang-chang-whay, a native of King-kaof-sien, was tried upon an information, setting forth, that he had fired a musket at a deer, and by mischance had mortally wounded a man named Yao-wun-kuey.

According to the report of Mey-ching-tu, sub-viceroy of the province of Kiang-see ; it appeared in evidence, that Whang-chang-whay and Yao-wun-kuey were hunters by profession, and had always lived upon good terms with each other.

On the 21st day of the 11th moon of the 38th year of KIEN-LUNG, Yao-wun-kuey desired Whang-chang-whay to accompany him, and two others, named Tang-fung-chiang and Kuo-pee-meu, to hunt on the hills called Pao-Kiu-shan, and to meet for that purpose at the foot of the hills, on the following day.

Whang-chang-whay assented to the proposal, and on the 22d, equipped himself with a musket for the purpose, and likewise invited Whang-tien-fung to accompany him, and to take a musket and dogs in order to join in the chase.

Yao-wun-kuey had previously set out with his dog and a musket ; Tang-fung-chiang and Kuo-pee-meu were also ready with their guns and dogs, and soon joined the party ; so that there were five persons in all, assembled upon the hills.

When they opened the chase, Yao-wun-kuey took a southerly station, Whang-chang-whay took his place to the eastward in a wood called Yeu-shoo-lin, and Tang-fung-chiang with Kuo-py-meu watched towards the summit of the hills; Whang-sien-tfung led the dogs upon the scent; and soon after, a deer was started, and ran to the south-eastward. Tang-fung-chiang fired his musket, but without success, upon which the animal turned directly south, when Yao-wun-kuey fired, but having likewise missed his aim, he took up his gun and ran in pursuit of the animal.

Whang-chang-whay, who still remained in the wood of Yeu-shoo-lin, hearing the firing of muskets in the south and south-east directions, immediately loaded his gun, and made ready for firing. When he advanced from the wood, he saw the deer in the south-east running leisurely along the hills, and instantly fired, but perceiving the deer still running, found that he had missed his object.

At the moment that Whang-chang-whay fired, Yao-wun-kuey accidentally came forward, and in consequence the shot which had missed the deer wounded him in the face: on receiving the shot, he staggered, and, falling down, hit his left temple and eye-brow against the rock. Whang-chang-whay, greatly alarmed on the discovery of the accident, threw down his musket and fled up the hills. Tang-fung-chiang and his companions, being in an elevated situation, observed what had passed below, and immediately came down to give assistance; but Yao-wun-kuey having received a mortal wound, in a short time expired.

Upon this, Tang-fung-chiang and the others present, wished to make known the accident to the relations of the deceased, but Whang-chang-whay fearing the consequences of a discovery of his crime, besought them to conceal the truth, and to report that Yao-wun-kuey must have killed himself accidentally, by a fall from the rocks.

Tang-fung-chiang and the others, feeling at the same time apprehensive that an enquiry into the affair, might involve them likewise in trouble, agreed to comply with his request.

Whang-chang-whay then hid the musket that had belonged to Yao-wun-kuey in the long grass, and departed with the rest from the spot, taking with him the dogs that Yao-wun-kuey had brought to the chase.

Yao-wun-hing, the elder brother of the deceased, knew that his younger brother had taken a gun and dogs with him that morning, in order to hunt with Whang-chang-whay and Tang-fung-chiang. Finding, therefore, in the evening, that he did not return, he went out to make enquiries concerning his brother at different houses in the neighbourhood. Whang-chang-whay and his companions answered him according to the deceit which had been concerted between them, and added that they had not seen any thing of the deceased.

On

On the 25th day of the moon, however, Yao-wun-king found the dead body, and immediately reported the affair to the magistrates of the district. A strict enquiry and examination of the circumstances being made thereupon, Whang-chang-whay finally confessed the fact of his having shot the man by mistake while hunting, as related above; but it did not appear from the most minute investigation, that any dispute or other previous cause had contributed to the event.

It appeared clearly on examination, that Whang-chang-whay, upon seeing the deer, had taken aim at the animal with his gun, and that, at the same instant, the deer had ran past him, followed by Yao-wun-kuey. Whang-chang-whay had however already lighted the match of the gun, which accordingly went off, and mortally wounded Yao-wun-kuey, before he was able to change its direction. The aim had taken effect before sight or hearing could notice, or any thought or consideration ward off the fatal blow. No injury, therefore, to any one, could have been proposed or thought of by him, when he thus unfortunately gave a mortal wound to Yao-wun-kuey.

Whang-chang-whay may be, therefore, esteemed guilty of homicide by mischance, which our laws assimilate in punishment with a homicide committed in an affray, but determine to be redeemable by the payment of 12 leang, 4 tsien, and 2 fen, (4l. 2s. 10d.) to the relations of the deceased, in order to defray the expenses of his burial.

With regard to Tang-fung-chiang, Kuo-py-meu, and Whang-sien-tfung; they being privy to the firing of the musket by Whang-chang-whay, and to the consequences thereof in respect to the wound received, as well as in respect to the subsequent death of Yao-wun-kuey, their conduct in acquiescing in the concealment of the affair, and failing to refer it to the magistrates, is highly culpable; though it does not appear, by the investigation, to have been aggravated by the receipt of a bribe, as an inducement to compliance.

They are, therefore, severally punishable with 80 blows of the bamboo. The muskets of Whang-chang-whay and Yao-wun-kuey, the laws condemn to be destroyed and broken up; but the guns of Tang-fung-chiang, Kuo-py-meu, and Whang-sien-tfung, which were deposited in the hands of the magistrate, may be returned to their respective owners.

The trial of Whang-chang-whay for mortally wounding Yao-wun-kuey by the firing of a musket, having been revised by us, members of the supreme court of judicature, we make the amendment in the sentence, which appears to us requisite, according to the law in cases of homicide committed when shooting with bows and arrows or otherwise; which law directs a punishment of 100 blows of the bamboo, and banishment for three years; as for the rest, we confirm the sub-vice-roy's decision.

The

The supreme court quotes various precedents, and institutes a comparison between this and former cases of similar offences, in justification of the amendment, and the Emperor finally confirms their decision on the 17th day of the 10th moon of the 39th year of KIEN-LUNG, by the following words: —“ Pursuant to sentence be this obeyed.”

No. XXXI.

[Referred to from Section CCCXIV. page 341.]

*Translation of an Extract from a Collection of Law reports, Book XXI.
Page 15, containing the Trial, Revisal of Proceedings, and final Sentence upon a Case of a Master charged with the Murder of his Servant.*

THE case, according to the statement of the sub-vice-roy of Kiang-see, was as follows :

Lieu-hoey-kuey hired the services of Pan-kiun-ting, a slave of government, for a period of ten years. — It happened, that on the 9th of the first moon of the 45th year of KIEN-LUNG, Lieu-she, a married sister of Lieu-hoey-kuey, came home to visit her father Lieu-kuen-fung and her mother Chang-she; and one day, it being cold weather, her father sent her into the chamber of the servant Pan-kiun-ting, to fetch fire-wood. — Pan-kiun-ting being at the time intoxicated, laid hold of her clothes, and endeavoured to prevail on her to lie with him — Lieu-she resisted, but finding herself unable to escape him, cried out, and was heard by her mother Chang-she, who immediately came to her assistance; upon which the slave Pan-kiun-ting relinquished his hold, and was struck twice by the mother, Chang-she: Pan-kiun-ting, fearing punishment; soon after ran away from the house, and took away with him some bread and 120 lee (about nine-pence) in money.

Lieu-she having complained to her brother of the attempt of the slave, and having likewise solicited him to lay an information before a magistrate in order to have the offender punished, returned the next day to her own home, and imparted the circumstance to her husband Puon-kiun-yc. — As it was a disgraceful affair, he merely merely endeavoured to console her, and took no further notice of the circumstance, until the 14th of the second moon, when the absconded slave Pan-kiun-ting, being unable to gain a livelihood elsewhere, returned to his master Lieu-boey-kuey, acknowledging himself guilty. — Lieu-boey-kuey did not, however, take any steps in consequence, until the next day, when his father Lieu-kuen-fung ordered him to bind the offending slave, and carry him to a magistrate, that he might be punished. — Lieu-boey-kuey fearing that one or two persons might not be sufficient to accomplish the object, sent his servant Lieu-tsing-ta the same evening to his sister's husband Puon-kiun-ye, begging him to come immediately, and give his counsel and assistance.

Puon-kiun-ye having arrived, and the slave Pan-kiun-ting being again intoxicated and asleep, Lieu-boey-kuey took a bamboo cord, and, accompanied by his brother-in-law Puon-kiun-ye, and his servant Lieu-tsing-ta, went into the chamber of Pan-kiun-ting, before the lamp was extinguished: having begun to tie the cord in a knot about the neck of Pan-kiun-ting, he awoke; and, discovering their intention, endeavoured to rise from the bed. Upon this, Lieu-boey-kuey desired Lieu-tsing-ta to hold him down by the head, and Puon-kiun-ye by the feet, while he proceeded himself to tie his hands. — At this time Pan-kiun-ting, whose body was uncovered, (having previously taken off his clothes,) turned about, and kicked with his legs, abusing them all, in the following terms: “ If you carry me to the magistrate, I shall only be beaten or pilloried, and then sent home; after which, I will surely take your lives in revenge.” — Lieu-boey-kuey being enraged at this language, took up a small knife used for cutting tobacco, which happened to lay at the head of the bed, and wounded Pan-kiun-ting with it in the lower part of the belly, so that he died very soon afterwards.

The parties present then became fearful of the consequences of the murder, and covered up the body with the bed-clothes. — After the first watch of the night, Lieu-boey-kuey desired Puon-kiun-ye and Lieu-tsing-ta to take away the corpse, and throw it into the water, which they did accordingly; but soon after, Pan-kiung-tching, and others, related to the deceased, found the body, and lodged a complaint with the magistrate of the district. — Lieu-boey-kuey, being in consequence brought to trial, and examined, confessed that the foregoing statement of the circumstances was correct.

The facts being thus substantiated, the sub-vice-roy pronounced the offence to be the wilful murder of an hired slave, and to be equivalent to the wilful murder of a serving-man, which, according to the penal code, is punishable with death by strangulation, at the next general execution and gaol delivery.

The supreme criminal court remarks thereupon, that, according to the penal code, if a master strikes his servant, so that he dies in consequence of the blows blows received, he shall be punished with 100 blows, and three years banishment:—again, if a master designedly kills his serving-man; he shall be strangled:—lastly, if any man unauthorizedly kills an offender after he has seized him, the punishment shall be conformable to the law in the case of killing in an affray. — Now, because unauthorizedly killing, manifestly comprehends both designed and malicious killing, designedly killing an apprehended offender will be punishable in the same manner as the offence of killing an innocent person in an affray, that is to say, killing, without a positive design to kill:—this precisely applies to the case in question; except that the deceased was not the equal, but the servant of the person who killed him: the punishment therefore ought to be conformable to the law against a master killing his servant in an affray, which is 100 blows and three years banishment; or practically, 40 blows inflicted at the place of banishment.

The sub-vice-roy altered the sentence of Lieu-boey-kuey conformably to the suggestion of the supreme court, and added, that as Puon-kiun-ye and Lieu-tsing-ta threw the corpse away, they ought to be punished only one degree less severely, as accessaries; that is to say, with 90 blows, and banishment for two years and a half.

The supreme court again remarked, that there is a specific regulation applicable to those less serious cases of homicide, for which no man is made legally answerable with his life; which regulation declares, that whoever throws away the corpse in such cases, shall only be punished as in any case of secretly interring a corpse of an individual whose decease has been concealed; which punishment amounts to 80 blows. Now, in the present case, the offence of killing the slave not being determined to be capital, that of throwing away the corpse cannot be punished with more than 80 blows as aforesaid:—and as Lieu-boey-kuey directed the corpse to be thrown away, those who executed the same were only accessaries to the offence; and, accordingly, subject to the punishment reduced one degree; — Puon-kiun-ye and Lieu-tsing-ta ought therefore to be sentenced each to receive 70 blows; or practically, 25 blows.

The supreme court lastly notices the edict of the 33th year of KIEN-LUNG, by which it is ordered that all magistrates of cities of the first, second, and third order, who concur in pronouncing a sentence of death, which is afterwards set aside as erroneous, and is exchanged for banishment, are subjected to a diminution of one degree of rank, and removal to an inferior office. It is thereupon suggested, that the several magistrates who concurred in the erroneous sentence adopted and reported by the sub-vice-roy, should be degraded accordingly.

On the 25th day of the 5th moon of the 46th year of KIEN-LUNG, the above proceedings were laid before the Emperor, and on the 29th, they received the ratification of His Imperial Majesty.

No. XXXII.

[Referred to from Section CCCLXVI. Page 405.]

The following is a Translation of some of the principal Clauses annexed to this Section.

INCEST AND ADULTERY.

ALL persons, whether in official situations or not, when guilty of committing adultery with the principal wife of any civil or military officer of government, shall suffer death by strangulation; the adulterers shall likewise suffer death in the same manner.

All civil and military officers committing adultery with the wife of a private individual, shall be degraded, and punished with 100 blows; and shall wear the Cangué for one month.

In all ordinary cases of adultery amongst the people, the guilty parties shall each receive 100 blows, and wear the Cangué for one month.

When the parties to an act of adultery are both slaves, whether in the service of the same master or not, they shall receive 100 blows, but suffer no further punishment.

2. Persons aiding and abetting the parties guilty of the crime of adultery, shall be punished one degree less, as accessaries.

3. Depraved and disorderly persons conspiring together, and seizing on the son or relative of an honest family, in order to commit an unnatural crime, shall, whether their guilt be aggravated by the subsequent crime of murder or not, suffer death, by being beheaded immediately after conviction, as in the case of vagabond outlaws. — Accessaries to such crimes shall suffer death, by being strangled at the usual period of executions, and all other persons concerned in such a criminal association, shall be banished perpetually.

If no conspiracy had been formed, but the additional guilt of murder incurred, or if a boy under ten years of age had been seduced away for such purpose, the criminal shall be punished with death as a vagabond outlaw, by being beheaded immediately after conviction.

Whoever forcibly commits the said crime with a boy under twelve and not above ten years of age, shall suffer death by being beheaded at the usual period for capital executions: and although the party within the age aforesaid, said, should have consented, the crime shall still be punished as a rape, that is to say, with death, by strangulation at the usual period.

An assault, with intent to commit the said crime, shall be punished with 100 blows, and perpetual banishment to the distance of 3000 lee.

Persons committing this crime by mutual consent, shall be punished respectively, as in ordinary cases of criminal connexion between different sexes, that is to say, with 100 blows, and the Cangué for one month.

Endeavouring to injure any person by charging him with the commission of such a crime, is punishable in the same degree, as the accused person would have been had he been convicted; nevertheless, in capital cases, the punishment of the false accuser shall be less by one degree: — In a case punishable with death by being beheaded immediately after conviction, the false accuser shall be banished perpetually beyond the Chinese frontier.

GENERAL INDEX.

A		PAGE	PAGE
ABSTINENCE prescribed previous to certain religious ceremonies . . .	170	Anonymous informations . . .	360
Abusive Language , between equals . . .	354	Appeals , right of making, note upon . . .	ibid.
to an officer of government . . .	ibid.	encouraging such as are groundless . . .	438 between officers of the same tribunal . . .	355	generally to be received and taken . . .
from a slave to his master . . .	356	cognizance of . . .	451
to an elder relation . . .	ibid.	Army , government of . . .	208 to a parent . . .	357	Arrests and escapes . . .	420
from a wife to her husband's relations . . .	ibid.	Associations , whether secret or public, strictly prohibited . . .	546
from a widow to her deceased husband's parents . . .	358	Astronomers , punishment of offences committed by . . .	21
Accessaries , how distinguished from principals . . .	32	neglecting to observe the celestial appearances . . .	187
to a theft, how distinguished from accessaries to a robbery . . .	299	Astronomical Board at Peking, commonly called Tribunal of Mathematics, note . . .	21
Accident , definition of, in cases of homicide . . .	314
Act of Grace or Pardon, how carried into effect . . .	19	B
misapplication or disregard of . . .	457	Banishment , temporary is the third, and perpetual, the fourth degree of punishment . . .	2
Addresses to government, intercepting . . .	254	places of . . .	44
Adeodato , an Italian missionary, sentenced to be imprisoned for attempting to propagate the Christian religion . . .	532	extraordinary or military . . .	45
Adoption of Children, to what extent allowed . . .	84	returning from, prematurely . . .	423
Adultery , see Criminal Intercourse .		delay in executing a sentence of . . .	425
Affrays , punishment of the parties concerned in . . .	311, 326	services to be performed during . . .	458
Aged and infirm, exceptions in favour of care of . . .	93	Barrow , Mr. his account of Travels in China, reference to . . .	318
establishments for the benefit of . . .	ibid.	Bodily injuries, punishment for inflicting, proportionate to the injury sustained . . .	325
		Books , possession and concealment of such as are prohibited . . .	179
		4 D 2	Books,

	PAGE		PAGE
Books , editing such as are dangerous and corrupt	548	Counterfeiting the current coin of the realm	397
Branding in the arm, what offenders liable to, and the mode of application	278	Court Kalendar , Chinese, note on	14
the effects of, not to be defaced	301	Creditors not allowed to reimburse themselves by seizing the property of their debtors	160
Bribes , accepting	379	Criminal intercourse , generally	404
table of reference in cases of	381	conniving at, or consenting to, in others	405 contracting for and agreeing to accept	384	between relations	406 offering	385	between slaves or servants and their masters' wives	407
C
Cabals and state intrigues	60	between officers of government and females under their jurisdiction	408
Cangue , or Kia , a species of punishment	12	during a period of mourning	409
Canton , foreign trade carried on at, note upon	515	between free persons and slaves	ibid.
Capital offences of a miscellaneous nature, meaning of the term; note	68	with prostitutes and actresses	410
Cattle , belonging to government, responsibility of persons in charge	241	supplementary clauses concerning	569
breeding of	242	Criminal laws	269-462 examination of, when purchased by contract	243	Criminals resisting the police-officers	421
improper usage and neglect of	244	assistance and concealment of	428
concealing the increase of	249	D privately lending	250	Death , punishment of, by strangulation or decollation	2 killing without a licence	245	Debtors , regulations concerning	158 vicious and dangerous, how to be treated	248	Desertion , crime of, generally described	3
Censorate , a public board in China, note upon	182	punishment of	35
Chastisement of a slave or hired servant, to what extent allowed	340	from military service	228
of a disobedient child or grandchild	347	assisting the escape of the relations of persons guilty of	236
Christianity in China, state of, note upon	176	of families or relations	92
edict against the propagation of	532	Dilapidation of property in trust	161
Coinage , regulations concerning	124	Disciples and apprentices, the gratitude which they owe to their masters	335
Colleges , literary, edict relative to the establishment of in Tartary	525	Dispatches , public, tearing, suppressing, or breaking open	253
Commercial agents, appointment of	163	intercepting	254
Compromise and concealment of offences	415	Divorce , regulations respecting	120
Confiscation of the property of Ho-chung-tong , minister of China, notice of	496	Duties and Customs , generally	148
Confronting offenders together	442	on fault	ibid.
Convicts and their relations never to be employed near the Imperial presence	203	arrears of, to be paid within the year	156
Counterfeiting any official seal, or the Imperial almanac	396	Duties , official, when entrusted to a particular individual, not to be transferred to another	74
		Dwelling-houses , strangers entering by night	297

GENERAL INDEX.

573

	PAGE		PAGE
E
Edicts , imperial, non-execution of	65	False and malicious accusations	364
falsification of	392	reports of public proceedings	549
destroying or discarding	ibid.	reports of robberies	557
delay in expediting	71	Falsification of an Imperial edict	392
Embankments of rivers, damaging or de-		of verbal orders	394
stroying	471	Family property, disposal of, without neglecting duly to repair and main-		leave	92
tain	472	Female offenders, punishment of	459
superintended by the Emperor in per-		curators, misconduct of	510
son	479	Festivals and days of ceremony, observ-
Embassies , foreign, no trade allowed with		ance of	180
persons belonging to	259	provincial	191
to consist of a limited number of per-		Fetters and handcuffs, description of	lxxv
sons	544	to be used in securing prisoners	431 to be duly announced by the viceroy		Fines , tables of	lxxii of the province in which they ar-		Foreigners , application of the laws in cases
rive	ibid.	of offences committed by	36, 515
Embezzlement of public property	277	communication with, clandestinely
supplementary clauses concerning	552	beyond the boundaries	232, 237
Enrolment of the people, mode of	79	important exemption in favour of	523
to correspond with their professions	82	Forfeited property, concealment or denial
Errors and failures in public proceedings	31	of	145
in military operations	215	appropriation of	note 271
Errors and informalities in public docu-		Forgeries and frauds	392-403
ments	67	Fortified places, scaling the walls of	206
Eunuchs , restriction in the employment of	412	regulations concerning the gates of	ibid.
Examination , judicial, to correspond with		Fraud , an instance of, punished	530
the charges received	444	Frontiers , the protection of	232
Execution , slow and painful, note concern-		Funerals , regulation of	190
ing	269	G
instances of	539, 540	Gaming , punishment of	412
Expreses and public posts	252	Gates of cities and fortified places, to be
Express-messengers guilty of delay	256	closed and bolted at regular periods	206
exceeding their allowances	257	Graves , disturbing	293
Express-post , reserved for important dif-		Great officers of state not authorized to patches	260	confer appointments	51
Extorting property by threats	288	addresses in favour of	62
loans and unfair sales	386	H
F
False weights and measures	165	Harbouring thieves and robbers	297
pretences, obtaining property under	289	Harvests , destroying or damaging	104 and deceitful addresses to the fove-		Hau-kiou-choaan , a Chinese Novel, edited reign	395	by the Bishop of Dromore, note upon	107
		Heat

	PAGE		PAGE
Heat of summer-months, indulgence to prisoners and convicts in consideration of	489	Imperial palaces, passing through gates leading to	205
Hereditary rank , instances of its being annulled	501	presents, delivery of	180
not to be solicited	52	rank, how privileged	39
rule of succession to	49	retinue, failing in its attendance	196
High treason	269, 544	intrusion into space allotted to	204
trial and sentence of persons guilty of	493	roads, trespasss on	197
Ho-chung-tong , minister of China, his history	491	temple, entering unauthorizedly	193
Homicide (see Killing, Murder)	304—323	Impostors , pretending to be officers of government	398 examination of the body in cases of	452	pretending to be great officers of state	399 trials of persons charged with	521, 563, 566	Imprisonment , unlawful and forcible	335
Hoppo , or superintendant of the port of Canton, his edict	521	as a punishment, note upon	431
House-breakers , punished as robbers	555	of innocent and unimplicated persons	433
House-burning , accidental	415	Improper conduct , such as is not specifically provided against by any existing law	419
malicious	417	Incest , or criminal intercourse between relations	406
		Indulgence to offenders , for the sake of their parents	20
		in consideration of their age, youth, or infirmities	23
I		Infanticide , note upon	347
Imperial almanac, counterfeiting	396	Informations , irregularity in presenting	359
barges, stealing from	552	anonymous	360
blood, how privileged	5	neglecting or declining to receive	361
edict, non-execution of	65	such are not to be received, but transferred to others	364 equipage and furniture, charge of	178	false and malicious	ibid. guards, failing in their duty	195	table of reference in cases of	367 manifesto, announcing a pardon to all persons who, after having been seduced to associate with the rebels, return to their duty	542	of offences punishable with extraordinary punishment	378
medicines and provisions, preparation of	177	against relations	371
palaces, entering unauthorizedly	194	presented by prisoners	374
labourers in	198	upon subjects affecting civil as well as military affairs	376
gates of, passing through irregularly	199	on behalf of the private concerns of officers of government	377
passports and certificates of persons employed in	200	fraudulent alterations in	462 carrying weapons into	ibid.	in cases of robbery, how to be presented	557 shooting or throwing missile weapons against	202	magistrates suppressing, or compelling others to suppress	558 soldiers on guard in, to be armed	ibid.	Inheritance , regulations respecting	84, 525
convicted persons not to be employed in	203	Injuries , neglecting to prevent those which are known to be designed, or to give information of such as are known to have actually been committed	323
		Insurrection ,

GENERAL INDEX.

575

	PAGE
Insurrection , proceedings in cases of	209
Interest of Money , legal rate	158
note upon	530
Inundations , precautions to prevent	472
instances of their destructive effects	528
Justice , delay in the execution of, instanced in charges against certain officers of the Canton government	509

K

Kaung-tee , Emperor of China, his prefa- tory edict	lxvii
Kia-king , reigning Emperor, his edicts,	483
493—509. 513. 518. 525. 530. 532—539
Kidnapping , or the unlawful seizure and sale of free persons	290
Kien-lung , Emperor of China, his last will, or testamentary edict,	477
Killing , see Homicide , Murder . a stranger entering a dwelling-house by night	297
in execution of a pre-concerted scheme	303. 560
for the sake of plunder	304
an officer of government	ibid.
a parent	305
a relation or a master	306
an adulterer	307
a deceased husband's relation	ibid.
three or more persons in one family with an intent to mangle the corpse for magical purposes	308 309
by means of venomous animals, or of poisons	310
by magical writings or imprecations with an intent to kill	ibid. 311
in a quarrel or affray, without any express or implied design to kill	ibid.
by depriving of food or raiment, or by any indirect means	312
in play, by error, or purely by acci- dent	313
a culpable wife	315
a son, grandson, or slave, and attri- bute the crime to an innocent person	316

	PAGE
Killing , by shooting arrows, or similar weapons	317
by riding carelessly or otherwise, on horses or in carriages	318
by administering improper medicines	319
by means of traps or springs	320
by the effects of violent and fearful threats	321
a slave or hired servant	340
a son or grandson	347
a criminal who is endeavouring to make his escape	422
by illegal severities in the course of a judicial examination	434
a condemned prisoner, by his own de- sire, in order to prevent a public execution	441
Khin-tse , meaning of the term	497

L

Lands of the nobility and officers of go- vernment	98
unoccupied, to be allotted to per- sons disposed to cultivate the same, sowing and tilling those of strangers without authority	95 102
uncultivated and neglected	103
Lands and tenements	94
fraudulent sale of	99
mortgage of	101, 529
tenure by which held, note upon	526
not to be purchased by officers of government within the limits of their jurisdiction	100
Land-tax , fraudulent evasion of	94 supposed general rate of	note 527
Laws , general	47
how executed when appearing con- tradictory	37
when retrospective, and when not	43
civil	49—78
due knowledge of	64
fiscal	79—167
ritual	169—191
sumptuary, relative to dress and ha- bitations	185

Larvs,

	PAGE		PAGE
Laws, military	193—267	Merchandize, false manifests of	156
criminal	269—462	valuation of	164
seducing persons to transgress	403	illicit exportation of	238 delay in the execution of	435	Mou, a Chinese measure of land, note
how to be observed in framing a judicial sentence	455	upon	94
false construction of	461	Military affairs, expresses concerning	212
relative to public works	463—474	breach of secrecy upon	213
supplementary	489. 525. 529. 543—563	arms and accoutrements, clandestine sale of	222
Licences of priests	83	destroying or casting away	223
of salt-merchants	148	prohibition of to private citizens	224
of commercial agents	163	theft of	276
of labourers in the Imperial palace	200	duties, relaxation of, and absence from exercise and discipline	ibid.
Licences and passports, crossing a barrier without	232	forees, employing without authority	208
granting or obtaining under false pretences	233	how to be employed in cases of insurrection	209
Literary degrees, partiality in conferring	55	not to be employed by princes or hereditary nobles	229
Litigation, exciting and promoting	375	horses and cattle	241
Lost and forgotten property	161	clandestine sale of	221
		officers, not taking the field according to their instructions	215
		unfaithful to their trust	217
		conniving at depredations committed by the soldiers	218 favour shewn to the relatives of	230 interference of in civil affairs	77 operations, to be regularly reported	210
		errors and failures in	215
		extract of an official report of	540
		service, desertion from	228
		supplies, application for, and transmission of	214
		Monopolizers and unfair traders	164
		Monuments, public, not to be constructed except on suitable occasions	183
		defacing and destroying	411
		Mortgages, regulations concerning	101, 529
		Mourning, for deceased relations, how enforced	188
		degrees of	lxxv, 487
		for the Emperor Kien-lung , directions concerning	486
		Murder, (see Homicide and Killing)	303
		compromising and concealing, in the case of a relation deceased	322
		Musicians, exceptions in favour of	22
		Naval

M

Magical arts, practice of, prohibited	175
Manufactures not equal to standard for the public service	465. 468
Marriages, how regulated	107
during the period of mourning	112
during the imprisonment of parents	114
between persons having the same family name	ibid. between persons related by marriage	115
between persons related by blood	ibid.
of officers of governments with females within the limits of their jurisdiction	116
with absconded females	117
forcible, with freemen's wives or daughters	ibid. with female musicians and comedians	118
of priests of Foe or Tao-ffe	ibid. between free persons and slaves	119
dissolution of, see Divorce .
on occasions in which the bride is given away unlawfully	122
Medicine, practitioners of, killing or injuring their patients	319

GENERAL INDEX.

577

N	PAGE	PAGE
Naval force, Chinese dectitute of	note 238
O
Offences, of officers of government	9
public	10
private	11
committed previous to their elevation	15
of persons not liable to banishment	12
of persons of the military class	13
of astronomers	21
of artificers, musicians, and women	22
of persons already under sentence of punishment	23
of persons surrendering voluntarily	27
of persons charged with several offences	29
of members of public departments, in their official capacity	30
committed by foreigners	36. 515
who are participators in	40
committed by persons seduced by others	403
miscellaneous	411
compromise and concealment of	415
against propriety	419
against nature	569
Officers of government, such as are removed without being disgraced	14
such as are disgraced as well as removed	16
limitation to their liability to punishment	note 51
enumeration of the principal, extracted from the Chinese Court Calendar	54
dismissal of, for misconduct	56
quitting their stations without leave	57
to proceed to their stations as soon as appointed	58
attendance of, at court	59
irregular interference of, with their inferiors	ibid.
combination and collusion among	62
to have generally free access to the Emperor	181
		Officers of government, honorary attendance upon, limited 184 neglecting their parents 189 guilty of exciting and causing rebellion by oppressive conduct 221 when deceased, their families to be conveyed home at the public expense 264 not to perform allotted services by substitutes ibid. interference with public affairs without authority 401 to reside in the official buildings allotted to them 469 statement of crimes and misdemeanours committed by 491—514
		Official dispatches, how transmitted 54 alteration of the contents of 74 conveyance of 252
		on public affairs, proper style and tenor of 182
		Ordinary cases, explanation of the term, note 305
P
		Palanquin, or fedan-chair of the Chinese, note upon 263
		Paper-currency, unknown in China note 124
		Parents, their power over their children, note 292 disobedience to, and neglect of 374
		Parricide, crime of, generally described 3 punishment of 305
		Pecuniary malversation 382
		table of reference in cases of 383
		Period within which deserters may obtain pardon by surrendering 229 of responsibility for the consequences of a wound 327
		Perjury, wilful and corrupt note 364
		Personal services to be levied impartially 86 to be allotted impartially 87 evasion of, generally 88
		by concealment or desertion 89 excessive demand of 91
		Piracies on the high seas 555
		Police, nocturnal, regulation of 230

	PAGE		PAGE
Police officers , duty of	420	Proceedings , judicial, in cases in which all the offenders have escaped	29
resistance to, when performing their duty	ibid.	in cases in which only some of the offenders have absconded	34
periods allowed them in pursuing thieves and robbers	ibid.	in cases in which the laws appear contradictory	37
how punished when guilty of conspiring with thieves and robbers	556	in respect to the application of new laws	43
Portuguese at Macao, edict addressed to	515	false and deceitful report of	396
Post-houses , to be kept in repair	255	against superior magistrates	455
principal apartments of, reserved for particular persons	262	Prognostics , pretending to discover	401
Precious metals must be paid to government free from alloy	140	Proposals , making such as are illegal	413
Presents , acceptance of	387	Prophecies , on public affairs, prohibited	187
from the great hereditary nobles	391	Prosecutors not to be detained after the trial is concluded	445
Pretending sickness or death	401	Public buildings	463
Priests of Foc and Tao-ss, laws relative to	42	due preservation and repair of	468 privately assuming the character of marriage of, interdicted	83	looms, misapplication of	467
dresses and behaviour of	186	posts and expresses	252
Principals and accessories, distinction between	32	property	124
Prisoners , escaping and rising against their keepers	422	privately lending and employing	133
escaping through the connivance of the keepers	426	fraudulent appropriation of	135 securing the persons of	431	regulations respecting the receipt and issue of	139 ill treatment of	ibid.	vexatious proceedings, in the receipt and issue of	140
not to be allowed sharp instruments	ibid.	responsibility for the damage or loss of	141
making groundless appeals	438	regular transmission of, from inferior to superior jurisdictions	142
supplies of food and clothes to	439	intermediate charge of	145 occasional indulgences to	ibid.	embezzlement of	277
indulgence to, when distinguished by their rank or former services	440	misapplication of	466
committing suicide	441	ways, regulations concerning	471
at liberty either to plead guilty, or to protest against the charges against them	456	encroachment upon	473
Prisons , remark upon	431	works, regulations concerning	463 guards and attendants of	90	ordering, without authority	ibid.
rescue from	281	unnecessary and unservicable	464
abuses committed in, a statement of	509—514	to be conformable to rule and custom	465
Privileged classes, described	5	Punishments , table of degrees of	lxxiv. 1
exceptions in favour of	7	variation of, in respect to the Tartars	12
note upon	490	how mitigated	13
		rule for increasing and diminishing	38
		infliction of, in an illegal manner	453
		mitigation under particular circumstances	489

GENERAL INDEX.

579

	PAGE		PAGE
Q
Quarrelling and fighting, between equals	324	Revenue officers , responsibility of, in cases within the Imperial palace	. 329	of theft	. 137 between slaves and free persons	. 336	responsibility of, as receivers and dif-
between husbands and wives	. 341	tributors	. 138
see Striking, Killing, &c.		Revenues in kind , periods of collecting	. 125
R
Rape , definition and punishment of	. 404	to be collected with fairness and im-
Rebellion , crime of, described	. 3	partiality	. 126 punishment of	. 272. 545	concealing or wasting	. 127
in the provinces of Se-chuen and		Reward , receiving money corruptly by
Shen-see, notices of	. 496. 540	way of	. 384
Records , official, examination of	. 72	Ritual laws	. 169—192
re-examination of	. 73	Robbery , highway robbery	. 280. 554
Recrimination upon innocent persons	. 445	ordinary, in open day	. 283
Relations , how far allowed to assist each		how distinguished from a theft	. 300 other	. 34	or theft, when considered to be in the first degree	. 39	completed, and when attempted of exiles	. 17	only	. ibid.
Relationship , degrees of	lxxv. 345. 487	Rules and orders, transgression of	. 419
Religion of the Chinese	. note 169	Ruffians , their unsuccessful attempt to
Reports , official, neglecting to make when		establish a trade at Canton	. 515 requisite	. 68	edict relative to the same	. 518
of officers on detached service	. 69	S
Rescue from prison	. 281	Sacred rites , administration of	. 169
Responsible superintendants	. 41	provincial	. 172 of storehouses, to attend at their re-		Sacrilege , crime of, generally described	. 4
spective posts in cases of fire	. 416	punishment of	. 274
Restitution of goods, rule of	. 25. 144	Sale , deed of, either absolute or conditional	. 529
Revenue , public, vicarious contributions to	. 128	Sales and markets	. 163
contributors to, not to be discharged		Scarcity of food in China, instance of	. 528
prematurely	. 129	Seal , official, destroying or discharging	. 65
excess of, its suppression or misappli-		use of	. 76
cation	. 131	omitting to use, or imperfectly using	. ibid. privately lending or employing	. 132	Secretaries prohibited	. 175 receipt, transfer, and expenditure	. 133	Sentence , judicial, execution of, not to be of supposed total amount of,		delayed	. 435
note 143		execution of, generally	. 451
see Public Property, Fiscal Laws, &c.		to be founded on all the laws, statutes,
Revenue officers , misconduct of supernu-		and precedents applicable	. 455
meraries	. 145	not to executed without the Empe-reciprocally answerable for each		ror's ratification	. 460
other	. 136	execution of, by a false construction of the laws	. 461
		Sepulchral monuments, care of	. 173
		Shun-chee , first Tartar Emperor, his prefatory edict	. lxx
			. 4 E 2
			. Slavery.

GENERAL INDEX.

581

	PAGE		PAGE
Trial and sentence of several officers of the province of Canton	509	Unjust sentences, consequences of the declaration and execution of	447
of a British seaman, upon a charge of homicide	521	table exemplifying cases of	449
remarks on the foregoing	515	reversal of	450
of certain Chinese and Tartars convicted of embracing the Christian religion	532	Usury , definition of	158
of Chen-te , a Chinese, who entered the Imperial palace with the supposed intent to assassinate the Emperor	537	Note upon	530
of Whang-chang-whay , a Chinese, upon a charge of homicide by gun-firing	563 of Lieu-boey-kuey , a Chinese, upon a charge of having killed his hired servant	566	W
Tribunals , why so named	note 22	Warrant of execution, proceedings on the receipt of	460
responsibility of the constituent officers of	note 30	Witnesses , prevarication of	446
		Wives (see Marriages)
V & U		lending for hire	110
Vaccination in China, its introduction by the surgeon of the English factory	note 319	regard to rank and priority among	ibid.
Veterinary art, exercise of	243	distinction between inferior and principal	ibid.
Vicious and dangerous animals, to be marked and secured	248	Worship , forms of, among the Chinese, different opinions respecting	note 169
Visitation of lands, suffering from any calamity	96	certain forms of, prohibited	174
		Wounds, Wounding , see Killing, Striking, &c. periods of responsibility for the consequences of	327
		Y
		Yong-tching , Emperor of China, his prefatory edict	lxix

THE END.