PREFACE

In 1896 appeared the Guide to the Study of American History, which is the foundation of the present work. The two original authors have taken part in the preparation of the volume now laid before the public, and with them has joined Professor Turner. The book is therefore the outcome of thirty years' experience in the study and teaching of American history by the three authors, and is based upon their own class work and investigation. Their point of view is that every scholar owes it to the cause to communicate his collection of materials, so that through such mutual exchange American history may be made clearer and more authentic.

In several ways the present work differs from the preceding form: it has been extended from 1865 down to 1910; it includes a great number of references to the immense literature which has accumulated since 1896; it replaces earlier and less accessible books with references to more available works; it enlarges and increases the sections on social, economic, and industrial history; and it includes a new set of references from the growing wealth of writings upon the West.

As in the previous issue, the volume is divided into parts. Part I attempts to make clear the general place of American history as a study, a recreation, and a discipline. Part II is a reclassified and enlarged set of references to groups of related books, such as general works, biographies, sources, and so on. This is intended to contain the titles of the most significant books dealing with America, the United States, the states, and notable individuals and phases of history. It must be understood that all these lists are selected from a larger mass of material, and are not intended to be complete or comprehensive bibliographies. Part III includes the pedagogical apparatus of the work, much reduced in length from the first edition because of the large amount of good material on the teaching of American history which has come forward in the last sixteen years. In § 10, Part I, is a bibliography of books and articles on this subject.

Parts IV, V, and VI contain references made and classified on an entirely different basis from that of the earlier part of the work. Under one hundred and seventy-nine successive topics appear specific references to works and designated parts of works, arranged under the four captions, General, Special, Sources, and Bibliography. These references are intended to be useful to readers, students, and teachers who wish to be directed to the most convenient and most available treatment of particular subjects. In some cases, particularly in the topics on economic and social history, there is a subdivision easily understood by the user.

As to the general scope of the work a paragraph may be quoted from the preface to the first edition: "No one can be better aware than the authors of the inadequacy of this work; the immense mass of rich material on American history cannot be condensed into a single volume; and doubtless much has been omitted that ought to go in, or inserted that might well be left out. It is to be remembered, however, that the plan of the work does not admit of complete bibliographical information on any topic. It has been our endeavor to select out of the available material that likely to be most immediately useful to the searcher into political, social, constitutional, and economic history. For the antiquarian and the genealogist we have not been able to provide. We have, however, noted as many as possible of the more elaborate bibliographies, to serve as guides to more complete information; and we have ventured to save space in some cases by referring to bibliographies or other material previously prepared by the same hands."

In the preparation of the book every effort has been made to select accurate references and to verify them. The Index covers, together with other matter, an alphabetic list by authors of most of the works to which reference is made; but, inasmuch as little additional information is given by a mere second reference to a title, the Index enters only that page upon which the name of a book is printed in full, with place and date of publication, or on which the book is first mentioned if the title is nowhere given fully. In spite of all efforts to the contrary, errors have doubtless crept in; and the authors will be grateful for any indication of mistakes, and for any suggestions as to the improvement of the Guide in case later editions should be called for. Without the expert aid of David M. Matteson and Miss Addie F. Rowe, the work could not have been carried to completion.

All three authors take joint responsibility for the whole book; but Professor Channing has been especially interested in Part II (Classified Bibliography) and Part IV (Colonial History and the Revolution); Professor Hart has worked upon Parts I and III (Methods), and Part V (United States History to 1865); Professor Turner has taken responsibility for most of the references on the West, and for Part VI (Recent United States History).

GUIDE TO AMERICAN HISTORY

PART I. STATUS AND METHODS

CHAPTER I

STATUS OF AMERICAN HISTORY¹

§ 1. What is American History?

USED in its broadest sense, the term "American History" would mean an account of everything that has ever happened within the western hemisphere. But such an inclusion would be beyond the bounds of human acquirement; for previous to the discovery by Europeans written records are few and are with the greatest difficulty deciphered. The records of Mexico and Peru have little that is suggestive to the modern world; native traditions are scanty and ill-preserved; among the Indians there were no great national organizations, and hence little history in the modern sense. There is little significance to present-day readers in American history earlier than the discovery by Columbus. Before that we get but an imperfect notion of native communities confusedly struggling with each other, and a few far-away suggestions of earlier discoverers. It is impossible to ascertain even the race origin of the aborigines.

In the development of America during the historic period the Latin-American races have had a large part. Spain was the first to discover, first to conquer, first to colonize. France preceded England, both on the Atlantic coast (except for Cabot) and in the interior. Portugal was in the field a century earlier than England as a colonizing American power. During the three hundred years of colonization two of these three powers shared in the development of regions which later became English, or a part of the United States. Since about 1820, however, the parts of Latin America not incorporated in the United States have pursued a separate road and developed a civilization and history of their own.

It is common and allowable, therefore, for the people of the United States to use the term "American History" to cover the history of the regions now a part of the continental United States and subject to the dominance of Anglo-Saxon ideas and institutions. This includes the history of the Spanish, French, Dutch, and Swedish colonies; the extension of the English flag previous to the Revolution; and the growth, development, and external and internal affairs of the United States of America down to the present day. It is for the field thus defined and circumscribed that this volume undertakes to analyze the events and tendencies.

§ 2. Relation to the History of Other Countries

Throughout the story it should be recognized that the history of America cannot be entirely separated from that of the Old World; we must take into account the nations out of which our civilization has sprung, and particularly England. The early colonies brought with them an inheritance of ideas: the feudal system; the medieval church; traditions of Roman law and institutions; aristocracy and royalty; civil and criminal law and justice. The English colonists who came to the most vigorous and permanent colonial life had also an obstinate belief in the English principles of personal freedom, local self-control, representative government, and the traditional common law, which are the common inheritance of all the members of the Anglo-Saxon race.

Hence a reasonable point of departure for the study of American history is a brief account of the conditions of the colonizing countries, and particularly of England, at the beginning of the colonization period; for these social and political ideas were as much a part of the outfit of the colonists as their clothing, arms, and cattle.

From discovery to the independence of the Spanish-American states, the history of the colonies and the United States is closely enwrapped with the history of the European powers. Then for about eighty years the United States had few political relations with European countries except with the possessors of neighboring colonies. Since 1898 the United States has become an Asiatic power, and through its relations with other European powers in the Orient seems likely to take part in the general affairs of the world.

§ 3. Materials for American History

Although there were throughout colonial times historians of this or that colony, it was not till fifty years after the Revolution that a literature of American history sprang up; and most of the renowned writers of the nineteenth century such as Bancroft, Irving, Prescott, and Parkman, were attracted by the romantic and eventful side of the colonial period. Since the Civil War there has grown up a second cycle of historical writers, — Fiske, Schouler, McMaster, Henry Adams, Holst, Rhodes, Avery, and others, — who have undertaken to write on considerable areas of American history in detail, and from a broad standpoint of interest in the various developments of American life. A swarm of monographs has also poured from the press, founded upon archives, manuscript collections, and the enormous mass of publications from historical and other learned societies.

The textbooks of American history were at first of the Mercy Warren or Peter Parley type, — dull summaries of the colonial and revolutionary periods, or easy-going, gossipy little books. Until about 1880 there was no school history of the United States written by anybody who had made himself an expert in American history. Now there are many such books, which not only are truthful and reasonably impartial, but deal with social, economic, and industrial history as well as with political events, and refer the pupil to the best detailed accounts.

This development of sources, secondary books, and textbooks is a proof that the American people look upon their history as worth reading about, worth studying, and worth teaching to their children. In schools, academies, and universities American history is recognized as an important and often an essential subject. The material is, however, still much unorganized, and methods of dealing with it are in many places crude and unformed. To open up highways and footpaths into this literature, and thus to contribute to sound learning and accurate judgment of cause and effect, is another purpose of this work.

§ 4. Proper Position in a Curriculum

The most recent discussions of the teaching of history in elementary schools advise Indian and frontier stories on American history in the first grade; and formal study with textbooks as early as the sixth grade (which is about the eleventh year of age for most children) is recommended in the Report of the Committee of Eight on the Study of History in Elementary Schools and in Bliss, History in the Elementary Schools (see §§ 9, 12 below). American history is an almost universal subject in the high school, sometimes taken up in three different years.

There should be no study of American history without somewhere in the course also a study of the history and conditions of the countries and eras from which much of American civilization is derived. Greek and Roman history are important to the American youth, not because originally written in Greek and Latin, but because our ideas of the government of republics, of the concentration and diffusion of power, and of the nature of law are largely an inheritance from those wonderful peoples. American children need cross-lights, contacts with other races and experiences. On the other hand, American children need formal teaching on the conditions that they see around them in their own towns, cities, states, and Union. In many schools the method of historical treatment is from within outward, beginning with the town meeting or city government, and widening to state, nation, all America, and the rest of the world. For high school and college pupils the obverse of this method is advisable, — beginning with a study of ancient, medieval, or English history, as preceding and conditioning American history.

Laterally, American history is closely related to several other subjects that have by force of circumstances come into the curriculum. Such are civil government, political science, constitutional law, economics, and international law, which last is in these days of close approach between nations becoming an essential part of the outfit of well-educated persons.

§ 5. Educational Value of American History

The time has long gone by when history had a slender hold upon the schools as an adjunct to the study of Greek and Latin. History is an intellectual discipline which has many peculiar advantages. Like literature, it deals with humanity, with character, with intellectual progress. Like the sciences, it is based on a body of facts, some of which must be kept in mind through the training of the memory. Like economics, it abounds in generalizations drawn from a multitude of data, and it develops the judgment. Like philosophy, history attempts to study the workings of the human mind, and from the experiences of the past to derive some light for the future. Few subjects studied in school or college bring so clearly to the mind the process of arriving at the truth out of a mass of apparently chaotic material.

The history of the United States is inferior to that of no other country in the romance of discovery, border warfare, and frontier life, or in the record of the material results of a nation's efforts. The Indians are certainly as interesting in customs, warfare, and tribal government as the ancient Germans. The three centuries of strife between these native races and the white invaders — what Parkman calls "the history of the forest" — is one of the world's treasure houses of romantic episodes, comparable with the history of chivalry. To the men and the principles of the Revolution the world has agreed to give its admiration. The later settlement of the West is a movement not less important than the migrations of the nations at the close of the period of greatness of the Roman Empire. The slavery struggle, culminating in the Civil War, is one of the two most important and interesting episodes since the French Revolution. In no other country have the modern rivalries of capital and labor, and of associations of capital and individuals, been so clearly brought out; and no other country has more resolutely attempted to find a remedy for the resulting evils.

As a training in the use of materials, American history has the great advantage of possessing a large body of sources in English, the only language known to most school children; and these are scattered abroad in many available volumes. The stimulating study of local history by American young people is of course confined to American history. Logical reasoning is as well applied to the growth of the United States as to the growth of Rome; and accurate knowledge, the foundation of good judgment, is much easier to attain.

As a means of training the judgment, American history has also great advantages. The mind is chiefly developed in three ways: by cultivating the power of discriminating observation; by strengthening the logical faculty of following an argument from point to point; and by improving the process of comparison, that is, the judgment. It seems reasonable to claim that judgment about a country into the spirit of which a child is born ought to have as sound a basis, and to be as quickly applicable to new problems, as judgment about a foreign nation with which its associations are purely artificial. The principal purpose of the study of history is to put the student into such a frame of mind that he may apply known principles to things with which he is for the first time confronted. It is the best training for administrative duties, for citizenship, for public life, and especially for the decision of any question which needs a knowledge of the past for its settlement. As for the study of character and the value of example, American history furnishes a host of strong, individual, idea-producing men.

§ 6. Complexity and Unity

Few countries have a history more complex and more difficult to reduce to a system than the United States. Many native races of various degrees of barbarism, and most races of Europe, besides some of Africa, have helped to people the United States. Settlements began at a number of widely separated points along the coast, and expanded into many little commonwealths, each with its own institutions, interests, and public men. Many of the early commonwealths became merged into others, as New Plymouth and New Haven; most of these commonwealths continued, and the nation has thrown off additional states till there are now forty-eight, each having a history of its own. The central government is complicated, and each part of it has had its peculiar growth. It is difficult to find a clew through the maze; but it is not impossible, if regard be had for certain well-defined principles.

In the first place, the first settlers whose children were to control North America were of one stock, and had one general set of institutions which they brought with them from Britain. As the English race grew and developed, Britain and the colonies diverged both from one another and from the original type, the colonies perhaps less than the mother country; but to this day the two nations have substantially the same system of law and the same political traditions.

In the second place, the significant part of America has never ceased growing since the beginning. Colonization has always been going on through the immigration of foreigners and through the steady westward movement; in our day, also, through the acquisition of tropical colonies, both in America and in Asia. Because of this unceasing change the basis of the nation has continually been widening; hence unexpected changes have succeeded each other in the make-up of the general government.

The sectional divergences which at one time threatened to wreck the Union have ceased to alarm. The building of roads, canals, and railroads on the Atlantic coast, inland, and thence to the Pacific, has forever bound together the East and the West. Slavery, which for eighty years was a cause of difference between North and South, has long since come to an end. The people of the whole United States are constantly coming closer together.

Since the Revolution the history of the states and cities has to a large degree been merged in that of the Union. Public attention is, indeed, centered too much on national affairs and national statesmen. The present great problem of the United States is to make the government correspond to the economic and social problems which are increasing in greatness and in number. National, state, and local governments all have a similar task, and are moved by one general public opinion. It is therefore possible to make the history of federal America interesting, instructive, and uplifting; American history is one of the most valuable disciplines of the schools and colleges.

§ 7. The Truth in American History

Like all study of the annals of mankind, American history abounds in uncertain, disputed, and hotly controverted questions. The voyages of Vespuccius, the purposes of Nathaniel Bacon, the loyalty, or otherwise, of Charles Lee, Jackson's orders in Florida, the Battle of the Maps, McClellan's strategy, the blowing up of the Maine, are examples of questions which apparently no research can settle, because the materials are too scanty or the prejudices of writers too great. What is the guarantee of the teacher or the reader that any particular thing happened, or that any particular man was bad, or good, or like Franklin Pierce?

The main occurrences of American history are better verified than those of most countries, because they are comparatively recent and are founded on undisputed records. The date of the discovery of America is stated by Columbus; the landing at Plymouth stands on Bradford's history; the X Y Z correspondence is found in the diplomatic archives of the government; the battle of Manila is described in the report of Admiral Dewey. America is rich in contemporary records of every kind, — private letters, official reports, records of town meetings, assemblies, and congresses, newspapers, the works of travelers and observers. The exact dates of notable events have been worked out by a succession of careful scholars, and with few exceptions are not assailed.

Doubtless many important and significant events have not been recorded: we are at the mercy of the sense, judgment, and discrimination of voyagers, town clerks, and newspaper editors. On the other hand, the events and personages of greatest significance have been brought into prominence by the constant discussion of later times. Probably no important Atlantic coasting voyage previous to 1560 escaped the lawyers who later made up arguments for the possession of the coast, based upon such voyages. In like manner, the character and motives of men like Daniel Webster, Thaddeus Stevens, and Grover Cleveland have been studied from so many points of view that notable happenings in their lives can hardly have escaped notice. The facts of American history are reasonably well established.

The choice out of the enormous number of facts presumably true is a different matter; it depends on the wisdom and impartiality of secondary writers in dealing with the first-hand materials for themselves, and choosing one event out of a hundred because to their minds it is typical of broad conditions. Hence, any one who reads two histories by competent minds in the same field will be struck with the things which seem to one writer vital and by another are omitted.

The great difficulty of all historical writing is to arrive at the motives of the individuals whose relations with each other form the tangled web of history; for the occurrences of nature — storm, flood, earthquake, and dark day — form but a trifling part of what mankind has agreed to consider history. Motives are things which a man's intimate friends frequently cannot discover; and later generations are often still more deceived by a reputation, bad or good, which a man has acquired in his lifetime, and which goes on down indefinitely. Hence the endless discussions over such characters as Charles I., William Penn, Thomas Hutchinson, Andrew Jackson, Stephen A. Douglas, and James G. Blaine. Were they single-minded patriots? Were they hypocrites and self-seekers? Were they mixtures of good and bad qualities? No final results can be reached on such questions. The only historical truth that can be impregably established about them is that it is not possible to penetrate into the intricacies of human character. Nevertheless, the place of most American public characters is pretty definitely fixed by the consensus of historical writers. Franklin, Washington, Jefferson, Lincoln, Hamilton, have an undisputed place among the world's great men; and, if there is dispute as to the motives of Webster, Calhoun, Jefferson Davis, or Samuel J. Tilden, their relation to the history of their times is indisputable.

More difficult still is the study of sectional or national motives; and from century to century what seemed to be absolutely established judgments come to be modified. We now admit that Andros was not simply a tyrant, that he had in view a consolidation of the colonies which might have been to their advantage. The colonies in 1775 were not ground down by oppression, but, as a matter of fact, were freer than any civilized people of their times. In 1861 the North thought most of the Southern people pirates and traitors, and the South thought most of the Northern people cowards and ogres: both opinions have been dispelled by fifty years' experience. The searcher for historical truth becomes convinced that even bad individuals have some good in them, and that national enemies may, when peace is declared, appear very decent fellows.

§ 8. Point of View

The search for historical truth depends in great part on what writers and readers of history look upon as the really significant part of the nation's life. On this subject there has been a great change since the beginning of systematic study of national history, about one hundred years ago. For a long time historians, and particularly writers of textbooks, were chiefly interested in warfare, — wars with the Indians, wars with the French and Spanish, the Revolutionary War, and so to the end. There is a romantic and exhilarating side to frontier fighting, — Miles Standish is a kind of American Cid; but the details of all warfare are a technical matter, about as instructive to the ordinary reader as the calculation of stresses for bridge building. Alongside this militant matter came naturally some account of the externals of colonial, and later of state and national, governments: the governors, and their quarrels with the assemblies; early legislation; and especially the quaint social and criminal laws. As a part of the Revolutionary War, came into the histories the Declaration of Independence, which has had a deserved attraction for the young American.

Not till after the Civil War did the development of forms of government in the colonies and in the United States come to be recognized as an essential part of the study of American history. Then general histories and textbooks began to trace modern democracy from England through the colonial governments into the Revolution, and out of it to the national government. A still later development has been to see that the state governments and the city governments, as they came along, were a part of the experience of the nation, interwoven with national progress.

The next step was to discover that the political side of American history did not account completely for the extraordinary growth of the nation. Then arose a school of historians who busied themselves with the study of the social customs of the people; who followed the immigrant to the factory and the frontiersman to his farm; who treated the dress, food, and houses of the Americans as indications of their standards of life; who studied their educational systems, reviewed their literature, examined their labor systems, went into their religious life, and tried to present them as they actually lived, moved, quarreled, plowed, and prayed.

From the social life it was a short step to the economic and the industrial, particularly as it came to be seen that laws and governments were extremely affected by the occupations and the markets of the people. Hence there strode into the formal history and the textbook an investigation into the physical setting of the colonies: the mountains, rivers, forests, prairies, and seaports; the products most easily gathered; exports and imports, course of commerce, shipping and internal transportation; fisheries; manufactures; governmental restrictions, whether English or colonial; the economic reasons for colonial prosperity and for the Revolution.

Gradually all these different points of view have been fused into the conviction that the true American history must take into account all the great factors of the life of a community: the character of the population; its spread upon the land; its pursuits; its social, and particularly its religious, life; its efforts to create governments that would answer the needs of its complicated existence; the great principles of human rights and of human government which underlie all American laws and constitutions. From this comprehensive point of view the national controversies must all be described and judged. For instance, slavery no longer appears as simply a moral question, or as a political issue, a balancing of sections; it is also a race question and an economic question, a contest between rival forms of labor.

In such an attempt to generalize, to assemble events, tendencies, and states of public opinion, it is necessary to keep in mind the unequal development of various parts of the Union, and the coming of one section after another into the common life. Thus, in colonial history every writer notices and treats separately the New England, Southern, and Middle groups. Every writer brings into prominence the later differences in habits and point of view between the Northern and Southern states. Only in the last few decades has it been clearly seen that the West has always had and still has an individuality of its own, and that the Pacific slope has a yet different origin and course of growth, while the new dependencies add another element to make up the national composite.

The Guide undertakes to analyze the whole chronological course of American history, keeping in mind all these various points of view. In the numbered sections below will be found summaries and references upon political, international, national, state, and municipal questions in their historic aspects. The aim is to give aid to the searcher into party history, social history, economic history, industrial history, the history of North, South, West, the islands of the sea, and all the other parts of one general and comprehensive history of the United States of America.

§ 9. Convenient Subdivisions

Students and teachers of American history are much aided by a subdivision of the field into appropriate periods. While the history of America, like that of every country, is a continuous series of events and episodes springing out of previous ones, there are many recognizable transition points between which material may be grouped.

So many elaborate and careful systems have been drawn up for this purpose that the users of this book may be referred to the abundant works on method, containing analyses of the subject; and to those secondary histories, particularly school textbooks, which are carefully and logically arranged. Some of the most helpful of these subdivisions are to be found in the following books on method.

In History Teachers' Magazine, I, No. 4, and II, No. 5, is a bibliography of syllabi, many of which contain outlines of American history. Helpful syllabi of this kind are the following:

John G. Allen, Topical Studies in American History. Rev. ed. N.Y., 1899.

American Historical Association, Committee of Eight, Study of History in the Elementary Schools; also in the Association's Annual Report, 1906, I, 72-86. (See § 11 below.) — Contains topics on American history intermixed with those of European history.

A. W. Bacher, Reference Handbook of American History by the Library Method for Secondary Schools. Boston, 1895. — Gives 223 topics on the period 1781-1889.

W. F. Bliss, History in the Elementary Schools Methods, Courses of Study, Bibliographies. N.Y., etc., 1911. — A topical analysis of the whole subject.

Edward Channing and A. B. Hart, Guide to the Study of American History. 1st ed. Boston, 1896. — Subdivisions into ten, twenty, fifty, and one hundred topics, covering American history to 1895, appear in §§ 7 a-7 d.

George R. Crissman, Library Method in American History; a Reference Outline and Guide. Davisville, N.Y., 1905. — Covers the history to 1905 in 109 main topics with many subdivisions.

G. S. Hall, Method in Teaching History. Rev. ed. Boston, 1885. (See § 12 below.) — Contains a list of subdivisions to 1877.

A. B. Hart, Manual of American History, Diplomacy, and Government: for Class Use. Cambridge, Mass., 1908. — Contains 90 detailed topics on the period 1789-1903; and 30 for the period 1775-1903; besides lists of 90 and 30 topics on diplomatic history from 1492 to 1907.

Andrew C. McLaughlin, Teaching of American History. N.Y., 1899. — A pamphlet to accompany his school history; contains a list of topics.

New England History Teachers' Association, History Syllabus for Secondary Schools. Boston, 1904. — 39 headings, to 1904, each with subdivisions.

Many of the textbooks in American history are subdivided into periods and epochs, and most of the more recent ones are arranged in consecutively numbered paragraphs — ranging from 400 to 700 topics. Examples are:

E. Channing, Students' History of the United States. N.Y., 1897, and later eds. — With a "perspective" showing subdivisions in four degrees.

W. F. Gordy, History of the United States for Schools. New ed. N.Y., 1911. — 450 topics.

A. B. Hart, Essentials in American History. N.Y., 1905, and later eds. — 507 topics.

A. C. McLaughlin and C. H. Van Tyne, History of the United States for Schools. N.Y., 1911. — 737 topics.

D. H. Montgomery, Leading Facts of American History. New ed. Boston, 1910. — 432 topics.

In the advanced and comprehensive histories of the United States (see §§ 28, 29) the division into periods is little accented. The American Nation, § 29, in its twenty-six volumes of text, has about five hundred chapters, which are substantially topics. In the two brief series, American History Series and Epochs of American History (see § 28 below) there are convenient subdivisions with topics.

CHAPTER II

HISTORICAL METHODS¹

§ 10. Bibliography of Methods

To the subject of methods in history great attention has been paid of late years, and a considerable literature both of books and periodical articles has grown up. Those mentioned in this book are almost all in English. The principal works dealing with the subject are as follows:

Mary Sheldon Barnes, Studies in Historical Methods. Boston, 1896. — Part v is a bibliography.

G. Stanley Hall and John Mansfield, Hints toward a Select and Descriptive Bibliography of Education. Boston, 1886. — Includes the titles of many books, pamphlets, and articles on history, especially at pp. 140-149.

Burke Aaron Hinsdale, How to Study and Teach History with Particular Reference to the History of the United States. N.Y., 1894. (International Education series, Vol. XXV.) — Bibliographical note at the beginning of each chapter. An admirable book in arrangement and execution.

National Educational Association, Fiftieth Anniversary Volume, Winaona, Minn., 1907. — Pages 692-693 contain a bibliography of articles on history teaching which had been published in the Proceedings of the Association from 1889 to 1905.

James W. Thompson, Bibliography upon the Teaching of History in Secondary Schools Abroad. (School Review, XV, 217-218.) Chicago, 1907.

United States Bureau of Education, Bulletin: Bibliography of Education. Washington, 1908-. — A periodic work of which two numbers, covering 1907-1909, have been issued. Contains a section on history teaching.

¹ This subject is treated at much greater length in the Guide, 1st ed., Boston, 1896, §§ 8-14.

James I. Wyer, Bibliography of the Study and Teaching of History. (American Historical Association, Annual Report, 1899, I, 559-612.) Washington, 1900. — The most comprehensive list, containing foreign as well as English works. The bibliography was intended to form a section of the report of the Committee of Seven (see § 11 below), but only a part of the titles are given as Appendix vii in that report.

§ 11. Reports of Conferences and Societies

During recent years various associations of teachers of history have published the proceedings of their meetings, and have also put forth reports by special committees on methods of teaching history. The American Historical Association also, through three special committees, as well as by several conferences on particular phases of the question, has made important contributions to the study of method.

American Historical Association, Annual Reports: 1905, I, 133 and 1906, I, 61 ("Conferences on History in Elementary Schools"); 1905, I, 147 and 1906, I, 105 ("Conferences on History in College"); 1907, I, 43 ("Conference on Relation of Geography and History"); 1908, I, 65 ("Conference on History in Secondary Schools").

American Historical Association: Committee of Eight, Study of History in Elementary Schools. N.Y., 1909. — Ranks with Bliss, History in the Elementary Schools (see § 9), as the standard on its subject.

American Historical Association: Committee of Five, Study of History in Secondary Schools. N.Y., 1911. — A reconsideration of the report of the Committee of Seven (see next title).

American Historical Association: Committee of Seven, Study of History in Schools. N.Y., 1899. Also in the Association's Annual Report, 1898, p. 427. — An epoch-making work in the teaching of history.

Association of History Teachers of the Middle States and Maryland, Annual Conventions, 1903-. — Much discussion of methods.

National Education Association: Committee on Secondary School Studies (Committee of Ten), Report, with the Reports of the Conferences. (United States Bureau of Education, Whole No. 205.) Washington, 1893; another edition, N.Y., 1894. The "Report of the Conference on History, Civil Government, and Political Economy" is at pp. 162-203 in both editions. — This is the first and most influential of the reports on history teaching.

National Society for the Scientific Study of Education, Second Year

Book. Chicago, 1903. — Part ii contains a "Course of Study in History in the Common School."

New England History Teachers' Association, Publications [Annual Register and Report, and occasional issues, 1897-]. — Many discussions based on actual experience.

New England History Teachers' Association, Historical Sources in School. (See § 22.)

New England History Teachers' Association, History Syllabus. (See § 9.)

North Central History Teachers' Association, Proceedings, 1899-1900. Chicago, [1899-]. — Discussions and reports.

§ 12. Books and Essays on Methods ¹

J. E. E. D. Acton (baron), Lecture on the Study of History. N.Y., 1895.

Herbert B. Adams, The Study of History in American Colleges and Universities. (United States Bureau of Education, Circular of Information, No. 2, 1887.) Washington, 1887.

Rafael Altamira, La Enseñanza de la Historia. 2d ed. Madrid, 1895.

Hubert H. Bancroft, Literary Industries. (Works, Vol. XXXIX.) San Francisco, 1890. — An account of the method of his historical work.

Mary Sheldon Barnes, Studies in Historical Methods. Boston, 1896. — Originally prepared with especial reference to use of sources.

Ernst Bernheim, Lehrbuch der historischen Methode und der Geschichtsphilosophie. 4th ed. Leipsic, 1903. — The standard modern German work.

Henry E. Bourne, Teaching of History and Civics in the Elementary and the Secondary School. (American Teachers series.) N.Y., 1902. — A full, sane, and comprehensive book; one of the best.

John B. Bury, Inaugural Lecture [on the Science of History]. Cambridge, Eng., 1903.

F. M. Fling and H. W. Caldwell, Studies in European and American History: an Introduction to the Source Study Method in History. Lincoln, Neb., 1898. — The best aid to the source method.

Frank H. Foster, The Seminary Method of Original Study in the Historical Sciences Illustrated from Church History. N.Y., 1888.

¹ Several titles of books on historical method no longer in print may be found in the Guide, 1st ed., Boston, 1896, § 15 a.

Edward A. Freeman, Methods of Historical Study. London, 1886. — Eight lectures read in the University of Oxford. Not pedagogical.

W. F. Gordy and W. I. Twitchell, A Pathfinder in American History. Boston, 1893. — For the use of teachers, normal schools, and more mature pupils.

G. Stanley Hall, editor, Methods of Teaching History. Boston, 1883; 2d ed., 1885, entirely recast and rewritten. (Pedagogical Library, Vol. I.) — Essays by various hands. Bibliography of French and German works, pp. v–viii. Now overshadowed by more recent works.

Frederic Harrison, The Meaning of History. London, 1894.

A. B. Hart, Studies in American Education. N.Y., 1895. — Essays iv and v are on the study and teaching of history.

B. A. Hinsdale, How to Study History. (See § 10.) — Very helpful to the teacher.

Oskar Jäger, Teaching of History. Translated from the German by H. J. Clayton. Oxford, 1908. — On teaching history in Prussian schools.

Maurice W. Keatinge, Studies in the Teaching of History. London, 1910.

Karl Lamprecht, Alte und neue Richtungen in der Geschichtswissenschaft. Berlin, 1897. — Develops the author's theories of vital history.

Karl Lamprecht, What is History? Translated from the German by E. A. Andrews. N.Y., 1905.

C. V. Langlois and Charles Seignobos, Introduction aux Études Historiques. Paris, 1898. English translation, by G. G. Berry. N.Y., 1898. — Standard French book on the subject.

William H. Mace, Method in History for Teachers and Students. Boston, 1897. — General in treatment, but illustrates from American history.

Charles A. McMurry, Special Method in History: a Complete Outline of a Course of Study in History for the Grades below the High School. N.Y., 1903.

Frederick W. Maitland and others, Essays on the Teaching of History. Cambridge, Eng., 1901.

James F. Rhodes, Historical Essays. N.Y., 1909. — Essays i–iv treat of method in historical writing; by an expert in graphic writing.

H. J. Rogers, editor, Congress of Arts and Science, Universal Exposition, St. Louis. Vol. II, History; Vol. VI, Social Sciences. Boston, 1906. — Various papers on historical methods and problems.

James Schouler, Historical Briefs. N.Y., 1896. — Several of the essays are on method in writing history; with some reference to his own experience.

A. W. Small, The Meaning of Social Science. Chicago, [1910]. — An exposition of the need of coöperation by history and other social sciences.

§ 14. Collateral Authorities on Methods

Parts of some of the general books contain special material on American history, especially Hall, Bourne, Fling and Caldwell, Hinsdale, and Mace (see § 12). Special suggestions to teachers may be found in the introduction to many of the brief school histories, especially E. Channing, Students' History of the United States; W. F. Gordy, History of the United States for Schools; A. B. Hart, Essentials of American History; A. C. McLaughlin, Teaching of American History, published to accompany his History of the American Nation (see § 9).

§ 15. Place of Method ¹

It is easy to plunge into the study of American history; to reach a satisfactory result is more difficult. No other historical subject has more need of intelligent selection of topics and references, or of systematic and thorough investigation.

“Method” is simply the use of devices which experience has suggested for gaining and holding the student's or reader's interest, and for applying his time and thought in such a way as to make mental effort go farthest toward securing a permanent impression. Method is simply a means to an end; the objects to be attained are simple, and a few principles may be laid down as to the best way of attaining them.

The primary necessity in history is to know the truth, and that implies that every student should see for himself how history is written. This is best done by some study of the sources; hence all good methods include at least information about the original records on which a statement is based. In schools this part of the work can usually be done by the use of extracts from the sources; in colleges a considerable body of sources on limited subjects may be used; in graduate work the student must learn to exhaust all the sources of information on his subject.

The next essential is to train the student to handle secondary works with discrimination. In schools this may be done by using several parallel textbooks, and comparing them with standard authors ; in colleges by wide collateral reading ; in advanced work by studying authors and tracking them back to their sources. One of the first things to break up in a child's mind is the confidence that "it must be so because the book says so" ; he must learn to discriminate between accurate and inaccurate books, between accounts written at second or third hand and records of contemporaries.

The task of finding material which bears on a particular subject grows harder as books multiply ; hence every pupil, reader, teacher, and investigator must know how to use bibliographical aids, with the least possible expenditure of energy. In schools such work must be very simple, and may be confined to the lists of books in textbooks and standard authors ; in colleges every student should learn how to use library and periodical indexes ; in investigation a knowledge of bibliography opens the gate to many important fields of material.

The study of history also includes experience in recording what one hears or reads ; hence a good method includes training in note taking and in the statement of results in a clear and comprehensible fashion. The youngest child can note historical facts in their simplest and broadest form. In the college, where lectures are common, notebooks are indispensable. To the investigator, training in workmanlike note taking is especially desirable, for on it the value of his conclusions often depends.

§ 16. Preparation of Teachers

In 1893 the Conference on History, Civil Government, and Political Economy, in its Report to the Committee of Ten, thought it necessary to give this warning : "Finally, we urge that only teachers who have had adequate special training shall be employed to teach these important subjects." Such preparation is no longer difficult to get by those who are fitting themselves for the profession of teaching ; and, through self-preparation and the summer extension and collegiate courses open in various universities and cities, it is not out of the reach of those already in service.

Assuming good general training, how is the teacher to prepare for the day's exercises ? He should in his own reading have accumulated extracts and illustrations with which to enrich the lesson; he should know the textbook so well that he need not open it. The teacher's function is not only to enforce study, but also to arrange and organize the material outside the textbook, to apply it where it will enlarge the textbook, and to stimulate the pupils.

§ 17. School Work

What part of the work in American history may be undertaken in primary and secondary schools? The most advanced suggestion is that the study of history should extend over eight years, of which about a third to a half would be given to American history and allied subjects, such as civil government. Children should usually first hear and then read the legends and stories, then take up the lives of notable people. When sufficiently advanced, they should cover the whole field in a simple textbook; later they should go over the same ground again with a more advanced textbook, wider reading, topical work, and compositions on subjects chosen from American history, taking up as parallel studies civil government and the principles of economics. Throughout the course, historical geography ought to be taught, reiterated, and enforced, till it comes home to the child's mind as an inseparable part of historical study. Illustrative methods should also be used, such as the display of maps, charts, and lantern-slides; and interest may be stimulated by visits to historic places, by debates, and by mock legislatures. Children may also be aroused by the study of their own local history and institutions.

History is almost the only subject in the grammar school curriculum dealing with human character and motives as a basis for study. To pupils going on to colleges and professional schools it should be a foundation for later work. Toward the end of the grammar school course there should be a year devoted to American history taught as a practical and not simply as a textbook subject. In the high schools the instruction should include more use of materials and more written work, more instruction in kindred subjects, such as European history, economics, and government.

§ 18. College Work

With older minds, already accustomed to read, to study, and to digest history, the only textbook should be some brief and comprehensive book, intended merely to show the relation of the parts of the subject and the development of one period out of another. Details should be gained by extensive reading, so arranged as to take in a variety of authors. Historical reading is like the making of Japanese lacquer work: one imperceptible coating is added to another; by and by it is found that where the layers are most numerous a pattern stands out in relief. The literature in American history is extraordinarily rich in biographies and books of reminiscence, as well as in the works of public men; so that there is opportunity to weigh opinions and set them over against each other. (See § 78 for a description of a method of collateral reading known as the "conference system.")

The college is also a place where written work of all kinds is most easily carried out. In later pages (§§ 87-95) several systems are described in detail. In American history such work is especially advisable; in few subjects is there such a variety of topics of every degree of difficulty, many of them as yet unwrought. The college has also an atmosphere of interest in political and historical matters, which makes possible many side devices for lighting up the subject, such as lectures, public debates, discussions, and the like. Furthermore, it is possible in college to specialize in American history — to take courses in the theory of government, in constitutional law, in American diplomacy, in financial or economic history, in American government or American literature, — and to make a special study of some one period or topic.

§ 19. Investigation

Investigation is the most difficult kind of historical study; but it is perhaps the most valuable sort of training, because it requires patience and thoroughness in searching for material, judgment in selecting out of it the cogent facts, a peculiar use of the analytical powers in arranging and classifying it, a high degree of mental force in making generalizations, and quick imagination in so stating the results as to appeal to other minds.

These advantages may be gained throughout all the parts of the educational field. The youngest pupil who begins to study history for himself may be taught to bring in a contribution of facts got somewhere outside of the textbook. As he progresses, more emphasis may be laid on the difference between contemporary accounts and records and later works based on such material.

In college the benefits of investigation can best be gained by practice in going to the bottom of very limited subjects, so as to be prepared in later life to look up historical points or intelligently to review the work of others. In the graduate school, and often in the upper classes of the college, where there is an opportunity for specialization, historical investigation becomes the most important element in the student's training. He must learn to exhaust the literature of the subject, to use all the available material, and to make himself master of that which he undertakes to investigate.

§ 20. Study without a Teacher

Since the material of history is to be found in considerable part in print, the subject is one which can be carried on without a teacher and even without access to a large library. A distinction must be made between reading history and studying it: the study of history implies a concentration upon a field small enough to permit the use of various parallel authorities.

American history is well adapted for home study. The first necessity is to choose some brief books which cover the ground in a summary fashion, so that the student may have in his mind the dimensions of the subject; then comes the process of widening, the working out of the ground plan of the historical edifice. For this purpose the student should choose some of the standard histories, such as are suggested in § 29 below or through the topical analyses (§ 23). Many students have derived benefit from the practice of writing out in brief form the ideas which have been gathered from reading on some previous day.

Having thus gone over several books on a period, the student begins to find that one effaces another; the knowledge of men and events laboriously acquired begins to dissolve in the very multiplicity of facts. Hence it is desirable for the student at home to make up some written outline of his subject, arranged in what seems to him a logical order. This outline will be in a sense his own history.

The student at home should not neglect the use of sources. Presumably he will not have material so abundant that he may base his study upon it; but he ought to read enough to give him that flavor of original accounts which is indispensable for the right understanding of history.

It is difficult to get a sharp and permanent impression from general books, or even from sources, without some system of note taking. Students may do too much of this. They need not copy out long, exact quotations from books which are perfectly accessible; they should reduce the author's statements to a brief form. Notes should be a summary rather than a digest; they should state the main points with sufficient illustration to make the argument clear. The principal danger for the lonely student is always that he will read too much and absorb too little.

PART II. CLASSIFIED BIBLIOGRAPHY

CHAPTER III

BIBLIOGRAPHICAL AIDS

§ 21. Special Aids

No systematic bibliography concerning the whole field of American history has as yet been completed, though several works cover portions of the field in detail; and there are numerous special bibliographies of persons, periods, or special subjects.

A list of bibliographies and check lists of American history is P. L. Ford, Check List of Bibliographies . . . of American Books and Subjects, Brooklyn, 1889; and the Annual Literary Index and Annual Library Index (1892-) list current bibliographies on general and specific topics (see § 24 below, under Poole).

The most significant bibliographies on a considerable scale are as follows:

Joseph Sabin, Dictionary of Books relating to America (see § 24). This is intended to include the title of every book published in America or about America; but it contains only titles up to the dates of the several volumes (1868-1892), and it does not refer to periodicals. It now (1911) reaches the name of Henry H. Smith; publication has been suspended and the work is out of print. A set, including all numbers so far published, would probably cost five hundred dollars.

Charles Evans, American Bibliography (§ 24) has only reached 1785 and will not extend beyond 1820.

Bradford and Henkel, Bibliographer's Manual (§ 24) is confined to state and local history.

F. Leyboldt, American Catalogue and its continuations (§ 24) contain the titles of all books in print in America in 1876, and since issued. Marion E. Potter, United States Catalog (§ 24) serves the same purpose for book in print in 1902 or since issued.

Justin Winsor, Narrative and Critical History (§ 29) is a work of vast learning, and includes admirable bibliographies of all subjects treated up to about 1820, giving the titles of the best books issued up to the date of publication.

J. N. Larned, Literature of American History (§ 22) is a very helpful coöperative work with characterization of over four thousand titles, topically arranged.

Writings on American History (§ 24) is an annual bibliography, including articles in periodicals and proceedings of societies. It was first issued for the year 1902.

The publications of American and Canadian historical societies down to 1905 have been made available by A. P. C. Griffin's Bibliography of American Historical Societies (§ 24).

Historical articles in general literature and essays may be found through W. I. Fletcher's A. L. A. Index (§ 24), supplemented by the lists in Guthrie's Readers' Guide (§ 24) and the Annual Library Index (see § 24, under Poole).

For periodical literature, Poole's Index, Guthrie's Readers' Guide, and L. A. Jones's Index to Legal Periodical Literature are indispensable guides. Jones's work stops with 1899, but since 1908 its place has been taken by the Index to Legal Periodicals (see § 24).

None of the great American libraries has recently issued a printed catalogue (see § 25), though the card catalogues of the Boston Athenæum, Boston Public Library, Harvard College Library, Library of Congress, and New York Public Library are especially serviceable; and printed catalogue cards on almost any subject in American history can be bought from the Library of Congress (see § 24). Full titles of most books published before 1900 can be found in the printed catalogue of the British Museum.

Several topical outlines have been prepared by college and other teachers, some of which are listed in §§ 9, 23; but they usually deal little with sources.

During recent years there has been much activity in making guides to the government documents, so that Poore's Catalogue, formerly the only general help, has been both supplemented and partly superseded (see § 26).

For many subjects the easiest path of entrance is by the footnotes and bibliographical chapters or appendices of the standard histories (see § 29) and biographies (§ 39). The most serviceable are those of George Bancroft in the earlier volumes of his first edition and his History of the Constitution; Henry Adams, United States; E. M. Avery, United States; Edward Channing, United States; A. B. Hart, American Nation;

H. C. Lodge, English Colonies; H. von Holst, Constitutional History; J. B. McMaster, History of the People of the United States; J. F. Rhodes, United States since 1850; J. Schouler, United States; and, more than all others for this purpose, Justin Winsor, Narrative and Critical History.

§ 22. Formal Bibliographies

C. K. Adams, Manual of Historical Literature, comprising Brief Descriptions of the Most Important Histories in English, French, and German. N.Y., 1882. — Discusses a limited number of authors and works.

C. M. Andrews, J. M. Gambrill, and L. L. Tall, A Bibliography of History for Schools and Libraries. N.Y., 1910. — The most recent comprehensive work.

E. L. Bogart, Economic History of the United States. N.Y., 1908. — Bibliography at pp. 471-502. Summarizes economic work.

R. R. Bowker and George Iles, editors, Reader's Guide in Economic, Social, and Political Science. (Economic Tracts, No. 27.) N.Y., 1891. — A classified bibliography, American, English, French, and German, with descriptive notes, author, title, and subject index, courses of reading, college courses, etc.; now almost out of date.

Paul Leicester Ford, Pamphlets on the Constitution of the United States. Brooklyn, 1888. — "Bibliography and Reference List of the History and Literature of the United States Constitution," at pp. 381-441. Standard list on its subject.

A. B. Hart, editor, The American Nation: a History. 26 vols. and index vol. N.Y., 1904-1908. — A bibliographical chapter at the end of each volume, subdivided into topics.

Harvard University: Department of Social Ethics, Guide to Reading in Social Ethics and Allied Subjects. Cambridge, Mass., 1910. — An evaluated list of books and articles, intended primarily for the use of general readers; has many titles of special reference to American conditions.

The History Teacher's Magazine (Monthly). Edited by A. E. McKinley. Phila., 1909-. — Each number contains a brief annotated bibliography of "History and Civics."

Alexander Johnston, in Lalor's Cyclopædia of Political Science. Chicago, 1881-1884. — Valuable bibliographies are appended to his signed articles. The articles are reprinted by J. A. Woodburn as American Political History, 1763-1876. 2 vols. N.Y., 1905.

J. N. Larned, editor, Literature of American History: a Bibliographical Guide. Boston, American Library Association, 1902. — Supplements, 1900-1904, by P. P. Wells: that for 1900-1901, published, Boston, 1902; those for 1902 and 1903 in Annotated Titles of Books on English and Amer- ican History, issued by the Association in 1904; that for 1904 in the A. L. A. Booklist for February, 1906. — A very serviceable book, excellent in analysis, choice of titles, execution, and index. Brief signed appreciations of about 4000 books.

Library of Congress: Division of Bibliography, Lists [on various subjects]. Compiled by A. P. C. Griffin and others. Washington, 1898. — Not analyzed or characterized.

Henry Matson, References for Literary Workers; with Introductions to Topics and Questions for Debate. Chicago, 1892. — Includes many subjects related to American history. Now out of date.

New England History Teachers' Association, Historical Sources in Schools. By a Select Committee. N.Y., 1902. — Contains bibliographies of sources.

Justin Winsor, Reader's Handbook of the American Revolution, 1761-1783. Boston, 1880. Substantially incorporated in his Narrative and Critical History (see § 21).

§ 23. Topical Outlines

Many teachers in colleges and schools have prepared outlines of their courses, with references and other helps. Some of these aids have been printed and thus made available for other people. A brief list of such books is printed above (§ 9); to which may be added the following titles:

H. V. Ames, Outline of Lectures on American Political and Institutional History during the Colonial and Revolutionary Periods; with References for Collateral Reading. Revised edition. University of Pennsylvania [Phila.], 1902.

Hannah H. Davidson, Reference History of the United States for High Schools and Academies. Boston, 1892. — Refers chiefly to brief books.

C. F. Dunbar, Topics and References, History of Financial Legislation in the United States. Cambridge, 1892.

C. F. Dunbar, Topics and References in Political Economy IV: Economic History of Europe and America since the Seven Years' War. Cambridge, 1885.

§ 26. Indexes to Public Documents

To the valuable set of government documents there is no adequate complete guide. Poore's Catalogue (1774-1881), Ames's Comprehensive Index (1881-1893), and the Document Catalogue of the Superintendent of Documents (1893-) together cover the whole period since 1774; the last two works are adequate, but Poore furnishes less aid by reason of an imperfect and misleading index. The Superintendent of Documents' Table and Index is of first importance for the Congressional series of documents from 1817 to 1893. General books on the system and excellent guides in all matters concerning the Public Documents, but not themselves indexes, are the following:

Elfrida Everhart, Handbook of United States Public Documents. Minneapolis, 1910.

J. I. Wyer, Jr., United States Government Documents. (N. Y. State Library, Bulletin, No. 102.) Albany, 1906.

The following is a nearly complete list of aids that are now of value, arranged chronologically:

[1774-1881.] B. P. Poore, Descriptive Catalogue of Government Publications. Washington, 1885.

[1774-1789.] Library of Congress, Journals of the Continental Congress. Washington, 1904-. — In progress. Bibliographical notes at end of Journals of each year.

[1789-1901.] J. M. Baker, Finding List to Important Serial Documents published by the Government. (Senate Docs., 56 Cong. 2 sess. No. 238.) Washington, 1901.

- [1789-1895.] F. A. Crandall, Checklist of Public Documents containing Debates and Proceedings of Congress . . . , with Miscellaneous Lists of Documents and Historical and Bibliographical Notes. 2d ed. Washington, 1895. — The checklist has been superseded by the Tables and Index (1817-1893), but the other material remains useful. "Advance sheets" of a third edition (to 1907), which will include a classification of departmental publications, are now being issued.
- [1789-1891.] Digested Summary and Alphabetical List of Private Claims presented to the House. Washington, 1853-1896. — Issued from time to time (4 pts. in 6 vols.) in the Congressional series as follows: House Misc. Docs., 32 Cong. 1 sess. [unnumbered; serial numbers, 653-655]; 42 Cong. 3 sess. No. 109; 47 Cong. 1 sess. No. 53; 53 Cong. 2 sess. No. 213.
- [1789-1873.] Edward McPherson, Index of Bills presented in the House . . . relating to Banks, Currency, Public Debt, Tariff, and Direct Taxes, showing . . . Disposition of the Bill. (House Misc. Docs., 43 Cong. 2 sess. No. 92.) Washington, 1875.
- [1789-1869.] Index to the Executive Communications made to the House, and Index to the Reports of Committees. Washington, 1824-1870. — Issued from time to time (together for 1789-1839 and separately for 1839-1869, 6 pts.) in the Congressional series, as follows: House Docs., 18 Cong. 1 sess. No. 163; 17 Cong. 2 sess. [unnumbered]; 21 Cong. 2 sess. [unnumbered]; 25 Cong. 3 sess. [unnumbered]; 40 Cong. 3 sess. [2 vols., unnumbered]. The volumes have the following serial numbers: 104, 85², 209², 350, 1386, 1387.
- [1789-1863.] Boston Public Library, Index (ed. 1861), pp. 794-842 (especially the index, 815-842); and First Supplement (ed. 1866), pp. 644-654 (especially 647-654).
- [1789-1821.] Albert Ordway, General Index of the Journals of Congress. (House Reports, 46 Cong. 2 sess. No. 1776; 47 Cong. 1 sess. No. 1559.) Washington, 1880-1883.
- [1789-1821.] General Personal Index of the Journals of Congress. (House Reports, 48 Cong. 2 sess. No. 2692; 49 Cong. 1 sess. No. 3475.) Washington, 1885-1887.
- [1789-1817.] A. W. Greely, Public Documents of the First Fourteen Congresses. (Senate Docs., 56 Cong. 1 sess. No. 428.) Washington, 1900.
- [1815-1899.] List of Private Claims brought before the Senate. Washington, 1881-1900. — Issued from time to time (3 pts., in 7 vols.) in the Congressional series, as follows: Senate Misc. Docs., 46 Cong. 3 sess. No. 14; 53 Cong. 2 sess. No. 266; Senate Docs., 56 Cong. 1 sess. No. 449.

- [1815-1887.] T. H. McKee [Indexes to] Reports of the Select and Special Committees, United States Senate. Washington, 1887. — Also same of the House, Washington, 1887.
- [1817-1893.] Superintendent of Documents, Table of and Annotated Index to the Congressional Series of United States Public Documents. Washington, 1902. — Gives the serial numbers of the Congressional series. The set of three volumes, of which this (Vol. II) is the only one published, will form an index of all government publications from 1789 to 1893, connecting with the Document Catalogue (1893-).
- [1871-1880.] J. B. Holloway and W. H. French, Consolidated Index of Claims reported by the Commissioners of Claims to the House. Washington, 1892.
- [1881-1893.] J. G. Ames, Comprehensive Index of the Publications of the United States Government. 2 vols. Washington, 1905.
- [1885-1894.] J. H. Hickcox, United States Government Publications, Monthly Catalogue. 10 vols. Washington, 1885-1894. — Succeeded by the Superintendent of Documents' Monthly Catalogue.
- [1893-] Superintendent of Documents, Catalogue of the Public Documents of . . . Congress and of other Departments of the Government [commonly cited as Document Catalogue]. Vols. I-VIII (to 1907). — Published under act of January 12, 1895, one volume for the period of each Congress except the 54th, which has two. The Index to Reports and Documents of . . . Congress [cited as Document Index], one volume for each session and listing only the Congressional series, is a temporary form of the Document Catalogue.
- [1895-] Superintendent of Documents, Monthly Catalogue, United States Documents. Washington, 1895-. — Provided for by act of January 12, 1895; until July, 1907, called Catalogue of United States Public Documents. After various changes the index is now (1911) issued separately each quarter, and is cumulated annually.

CHAPTER IV

GENERAL WORKS

§ 27. General Reference Books

THE following works contain a variety of historical data, usually arranged alphabetically by persons or subjects; such books facilitate easy topical work, and the better ones are a guide to more detailed information:

S. A. Allibone, Critical Dictionary of English Literature and British and American Authors. 3 vols. Phila., 1858-1871. — Supplement, edited by J. F. Kirk, 2 vols., 1891. — About 83,000 articles.

CHAPTER V

GEOGRAPHY

§ 30. Historical Geography

No other important subject connected with American history has been so neglected as the historical geography of the United States. Territorial history is nevertheless essential to an understanding of the general subject. In the American Historical Association's Annual Report for 1907, I, 45-48, is a "Report of Conference on the Relation of Geography and History," and in the Twenty-second Meeting of the New England History Teachers' Association a paper on the same subject by Professor G. L. Burr (see § 11). The sources are: (1) the reports of the first explorers, the contemporaneous accounts of the early explorations, and the maps of the old cartographers; (2) the grants made by various European powers to their colonies, especially the English charters; (3) treaties defining international boundaries; (4) decisions of the English Privy Council on contested boundaries, and of international courts of arbitration; and (5) the statutes of the United States establishing territories and admitting states.

Several books contain descriptions of the physical characteristics of the country and their influence on men of European origin. Among them may be mentioned the works of Professors Whitney and Shaler, both entitled The United States, and the books by A. P. Brigham and Ellen C. Semple (see § 31). The more important works dealing with the territorial development are Winsor's contributions in his Columbus, Cartier to Frontenac, Mississippi Basin, and Westward Movement, and in the Narrative and Critical History. Professor Hinsdale has done good work in this field, especially in his Old Northwest; and the government publications connected with the names of Gannett and Donaldson contain many valuable suggestions and documents. In the general histories, such as those of Bancroft, Hildreth, McMaster, and Henry Adams, may be found elaborate discussions of boundary and other territorial questions. The larger state histories and historical society reports contain many important discussions of these and kindred subjects.

Besides the treatment of the subject in the general histories (especially Hildreth's), the following special authorities may be mentioned :

Bioren and Duane, Laws of the United States . . . including many other Valuable . . . Documents. 5 vols. Phila., 1815. — Usually cited as "Duane's Laws."

Thomas Donaldson, The Public Domain. 3d ed. (House Misc. Docs., 47 Cong. 2 sess. No. 45, Pt. 4.) Washington, 1884.

Existing Laws of the United States of a General and Permanent Character and relating to the . . . Public Domain. (Ibid., Pt. 1.) Washington, 1884.

Laws of the United States of a Local or Temporary Character, and exhibiting the Entire Legislation of Congress upon which the Public Land Titles in each State and Territory have depended. (Ibid., Pts. 2, 3.) 2 vols. Washington, 1884.

§ 31. Physical Geography of America

Physical geography and geology are intimately connected, and much geographical matter is to be found in the publications of national and state geological surveys and in those of the coast survey. The reports of state surveys are easily found in libraries under the names of the states, the more recent publications generally giving the best material. National geological surveys were for a number of years conducted under various governmental bureaus, and their work was confined to the western part of the continent. The most important of them were the Hayden, King, Powell, and Wheeler surveys, each of which published a report. A bibliography of these reports is in Bulletin, No. 222, of the United States Geological Survey. Vol. I of the Wheeler Survey contains an analytical account of all explorations west of the Mississippi River from 1500 to 1880. In 1879 these separate surveys were discontinued and the United States Geological Survey was organized (for its history and operations see Bulletin, No. 227.) It publishes Annual Reports, Bulletins, Monographs, Water-Supply Papers, Mineral Resources, Professional Papers, topographic and geologic maps, besides special publications, of which an analytical bibliography (1880-1901) is contained in Bulletin, No. 177, and continued to 1903 in Bulletin, No. 215. Complete lists of all publications (except topographic maps) are also issued periodically. The following bibliographical bulletins of the Survey deserve mention: Dictionary of Altitudes of the United States (Bulletin, No. 274 ; 5th ed. in preparation) ; Catalogue and Index of Contributions to North American Geology (1732-1891, Bulletin, No. 127 ; 1892-1900, Bulletins, Nos. 188, 189, and periodic continuations) ; Catalogue of Geological Maps of America (Bulletin, No. 7). Much geographical material is also to be found in the American Geologist (discontinued in 1905), and in the Journal of Geology, the National Geographic Society's National Geographic Magazine, the Bulletin of the American Geographical Society, and the Journal of Geography. In McLaughlin and Hart, Cyclopedia of American Government, are several discussions of American geography.

Upon the basis of the geography of the country, — its physiog-raphy, — references will be found in §§ 32-34 below. The following books will also be found serviceable:

§ 32. Physical Maps of North America

The data for a complete physical map of the United States do not yet exist. Henry Gannett, in his essay on the Maps of the United States (Washington, National Geographic Society, 1892), points out the sources. The United States Geological Survey has in progress a topographic map to serve as a basis for a geologic map on the scales of one, two, and four miles to the inch. Nearly two thousand sheets have been issued, and many more will be needed to complete the map. Various states have coöperated with the Survey in its topographic work, with the result that all the sheets for Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, and New Jersey are completed. The volume by Davis, King, and Collie noted in § 31, and that by Salisbury and Atwood, show how to use these sheets in teaching geography.

The United States Geological Survey has issued four very useful maps. (1) The most beautiful is the United States Relief Map, printed in several shades of brown; (2) the United States Contour Map, giving the contour lines in brown, is more useful; (3) a map of the same size as these ($28 \times 17\frac{1}{2}$ inches), but without title and showing only land and water (base map), is most serviceable for the filling in of historical data. These maps are the originals of the physical maps printed in the ordinary textbooks. An excellent map showing the forms of land in colors may be found in J. W. Powell's Physiographic Regions of the United States (National Geographic Monographs, I, No. 3), N.Y., 1895.

The Survey has also issued a map of the United States in three sheets on the scale of forty miles to the inch. The names and political boundaries are in black, the contours in brown, the water in blue. This is an admirable map for wall reference in the classroom. In the census publications there are some similar maps, especially in the Statistical Atlas prepared at the twelfth census and published at Washington, 1903; or in the similar work of the thirteenth census, now in preparation.

Outline maps for school use are now abundant and may be obtained from any school supply company.

In the recent school histories are usually to be found colored maps in relief, based on the government maps. A similar one is in Epoch Maps, No. 1. Some of the most valuable physical wall maps are the following:

Richard Kiepert, Nord-Amerika. Published by Dietrich Reimer. Berlin, 1894. Scale of 1 cm. to 80 km.

Emil von Sydow and Hermann Habenicht, Nord-Amerika; oro-hydrographische Schul-Wandkarte. Published by Justus Perthes. Gotha, 1894. Scale of 1 cm. to 60 km. — These two maps are published in America by Rand and McNally, Chicago.

Physical Map of the United States. Rand and McNally, Chicago, 1910. 66 × 46 inches.

[Steinwehr], Case's Map of the United States, the British Provinces, Mexico, and Part of the West Indies. Hartford, 1893. 60½ × 60⅝ inches.

United States Land Office, Map of the United States and Territories with Adjacent Parts of Canada and Mexico. Washington, Land Office, 1909. — This excellent wall map may be had from the Land Office for $1, unmounted. Size, 5 × 7 feet.

§ 33. Historical Maps

There is great need of an elaborate historical atlas of North America, worked out from the documentary sources as illustrated by contemporary maps; and it is understood that the Division of Historical Research of the Carnegie Institution of Washington has in mind the making of such an atlas. The New England History Teachers' Association has just issued a brief Catalogue of . . . [its] Collection of Historical Material. In Avery's United States, Channing's United States, and the American Nation (see § 29) are sets of maps which taken together constitute, or will constitute, in each series an informal atlas.

There are a few series of historical maps of the United States outside of the ordinary histories, including the following:

A. B. Hart, Epoch Maps Illustrating American History. N.Y., 1910. — Fifteen colored maps; the same maps appear in the three volumes of Epochs of American History.

F. W. Hewes and Henry Gannett, Scribner's Statistical Atlas of the United States. N.Y., 1885. — Pages 31-40; plates 12-17.

Townsend MacCoun, Historical Geography of the United States. Boston, 1901. Substantially a reprint of the maps in Labberton's Atlas.

William R. Shepherd, Historical Atlas. (American Historical series.) N.Y., 1911. — A general atlas containing twenty-four maps connected with United States history.

Several series of reprints of early maps are serviceable, especially :

Samuel Abbott, Fac-similes of Old Historical American Maps. Boston, [no date]. — Seven maps, from 1520 to 1775; issued separately with booklets.

A. B. Hulbert, Crown Collection of Photographs of American Maps. 5 vols. Cleveland, 1904-1908. — Second Series. 3 vols. 1910.

E. L. Stevenson, Atlas of Portolan Charts. N.Y., 1911. — Facsimile of manuscript probably of 1508; contains 20 maps, 4 of which relate to the New World.

E. L. Stevenson, Maps illustrating Early Discovery and Exploration in America, 1502-1530. New Brunswick, N.J., 1906. — Twelve maps, from Cantino to Verrazano.

In Justin Winsor, Narrative and Critical History (§ 29) there are many reprints; also in his other works (§ 36).

§ 34. Sources of Historical Geography

The advanced student of the subject must search for his material first of all in the various patents and charters, English, Spanish, Portuguese, French, Dutch, Swedish, and Russian. The principal English patents have been collected in Poore's Charters and Constitutions, and are reëdited in Thorpe's edition (see § 42). Many of the Dutch and Swedish documents are to be found in O'Callaghan's Documentary History of the State of New York; the French grants of Louisiana are in Gayarré's Histoire de la Louisiane. The Canadian documents may be found through the index to the Canadian Archives, published at Ottawa in 1909. Care should be taken in all these cases to keep as near as possible to the originals, as imperfect texts and translations are not uncommon.

For the treaties of partition and delimitation among the various European nations from 1492 to 1910, the best collections are the following :

Recueil des Traitez de Paix, de Trêve, . . . et d'autres Actes Publics. 4 vols., folio. Amsterdam, 1700.

George Chalmers, Collection of Treaties between Great Britain and other Powers. 2 vols. London, 1790.

Jean Dumont, Corps Universel Diplomatique du Droit des Gens. 8 vols. Amsterdam, 1726-1731.

Barbeyrac and Rousset, Supplément au Corps Universel Diplomatique. 5 vols. Amsterdam, 1739.

Guillaume de Garden, Histoire Générale des Traités de Paix. 15 vols. Paris, 1848-1887.

A General Collection of Treatys. 4 vols. London, 1732.

James Watson Gerard, The Peace of Utrecht. N.Y., 1885.

Christophe Guillaume de Koch, Abrégé de l'Histoire des Traités de Paix. 4 vols. Basle, 1796-1797.

Friedrich Schoell, Histoire Abrégée des Traités de Paix. 15 vols. Paris, 1817-1818. — This is Koch's work recast and continued.

Charles de Martens et Ferdinand de Cussy, Traités et Conventions Diplomatiques. 7 vols. Leipsic, 1846-1857.

Georges Frédéric de Martens and others, Recueil de Traités des Puissances et États de l'Europe (1761-1910). 85 vols. (including 4 supplementary ones) in 90 parts, and an extra index vol. Göttingen and Leipsic, 1817-1910. — After Vol. VIII the title became Nouveau Recueil, etc., and other changes appear in titles of the later volumes.

All the treaties to which the United States was a party are in the official volumes, Treaties and Conventions and Malloy's Treaties, Conventions, and International Acts (§ 44). The Carnegie Institution has in preparation a publication giving all treaties between European powers that bear in any way on America. Internal colonial boundaries must be ascertained from the original grants, the colonial records (§ 43), and the decisions of the Privy Council. Internal boundaries within the United States are usually defined by act of Congress (Statutes at Large); but frequently they are described in presidential proclamations, which may be found in the Statutes since 1855, and in J. D. Richardson's Messages and Papers of the Presidents (§ 48). Controversies between states have almost always been subjects for investigation by Congress, and in such cases they are described in the Congressional Documents; or they have given rise to suits before the Supreme Court of the United States, and the decisions are recorded in the Reports of the court. Many monographs and separate reports on these topics will be found under the topical readings in Parts IV, V, and VI of this Guide.

§ 35. Gazetteers, Geographies, and Registers

Books of this type are often of value in fixing local names and giving details of routes of travel, prices of commodities, rates of fare, etc., that are otherwise difficult to discover. The following volumes, among others, have been found useful by one or another of the compilers. A few state gazetteers are noted in § 37. Others (for Colorado, Connecticut, Cuba, Delaware, Indian Territory, Kansas, Maryland, Massachusetts, New Jersey, Porto Rico, Rhode Island, Texas, Utah, Virginia, and West Virginia), compiled by Henry Gannett, are published in the Bulletins of the United States Geological Survey.

William Amphlett, The Emigrant's Directory to the Western States of North America. London, 1819.

Appletons' Companion Hand-Book of Travel to the United States and British Provinces. N.Y., 1861.

Daniel Blowe, Geographical, Commercial, and Agricultural View of the United States. Liverpool, about 1820.

Bowles's New Map of North America and the West Indies. London, 1781. — Shows the limits of the British Empire as fixed by the treaty of 1763, and also the dominions of other European states.

Samuel R. Brown, The Western Gazetteer, or Emigrant's Directory. Auburn, N.Y., 1817.

CHAPTER VI

SPECIAL WORKS

IN addition to the works that attempt to give a general summary of a longer or a shorter period, there is a body of literature devoted to special topics which runs all the way through American history. Many such works are elaborate studies of very limited fields; others sweep over several centuries and have the dignity of standard histories.

The monographs have commonly been produced under the auspices of some historical society (§ 45) or some university. The Johns Hopkins Studies in Historical and Political Science, the Columbia Studies in History, Economics, and Public Law, the Harvard Historical Studies, and the publications of the universities of Michigan, Wisconsin, Nebraska, and Pennsylvania have been the means of bringing out carefully prepared books on American history. In the Papers and Reports of the American Historical Association are also to be found some valuable monographs. This kind of literature is on the increase, and as yet there is no complete guide to it; but it is partly indexed in Griffin's Bibliography (see § 24).

Akin to this form of historical writing is the coöperative history, of which the great examples are the Memorial History of Boston and the Narrative and Critical History of America, both edited by Justin Winsor; the Memorial History of New York, edited by James Grant Wilson; The United States, edited by N. S. Shaler; and the American Nation: a History, edited by Albert Bushnell Hart. The recent editions of the encyclopædias (§ 27) with their signed articles have adopted the same system. Below is a list of some of the more useful works of this class; others will be found in Parts IV, V, and VI of this Guide.

- James R. Albach, Annals of the West. Pittsburg, 1858.
American Church History Series. 13 vols. N.Y., 1893-1897.
- E. B. Andrews, United States in Our Own Time (1870-1903). N.Y., 1903.
- [Anon.], History of the British Dominions in North America, 1497-1763. London, 1773.
- Susan B. Anthony and others, History of Woman Suffrage. 4 vols. N.Y. and Rochester, 1881-[1902].
- J. L. Bishop, History of American Manufactures from 1608 to 1860. 2 vols. Phila., 1861-1864.
- E. L. Bogart, Economic History of the United States. N.Y., 1908.
- E. E. Brown, Making of Our Middle Schools. N.Y., 1903.
- W. G. Brown, The Lower South in American History. N.Y., 1902.
- [Edmund Burke], Account of the European Settlements in America. 2d ed. 2 vols. London, 1758.
- James Bryce, The American Commonwealth. 3d ed. 2 vols. N.Y., 1893-1895. — 4th ed., revised, 2 vols., 1910.

§ 37. State and Local Histories

Of late years successful attempts have been made to arouse interest among school children and college students in the history of their own states and towns. It is hence desirable that every good school library should have a set of all available books on the local history; the state histories are also often sources for the study of national history or of special topics. Two series of brief state histories have been partly completed, — the American Commonwealth series, edited by H. E. Scudder, and the Story of the States series, edited by E. S. Brooks; and there are older and more exhaustive works on nearly all the states. County and town histories abound; but there is little good literature on the history of cities.

The following list is arranged alphabetically by states, bibliographies (when there are any) standing first in each case, then state histories and important books on prominent cities and other places of local interest in alphabetical order. Additional material on most of the states will be found among the state papers (§ 29) and in the publications of the historical societies (§ 31).

§ 38. Books of Travel

Our knowledge of the inner life of the past is based to a considerable extent on accounts by travelers of what they saw while on their journeyings. Perhaps it would be better to regard these books not so much as descriptions of what actually passed before the tourist's eyes, as descriptions of what the narrator thought he saw. We are all aware of the deficiency of vision of later visitors; there is no reason to suppose that earlier writers were better fitted to observe what was going on about them or to understand the genius of the people whose manners they depicted. A traveler also naturally notes the peculiar things he sees, and thus gives a distorted picture at best. These books must be used with the greatest caution and checked in every possible way by reference to recorded fact. They are sometimes indispensable, however, to light up an otherwise dreary story, and some of them are good reading.

Lists and Discussions

The following works describe some of the travels in America, or discuss the criticisms on the United States contained in them.

John Graham Brooks, As Others see us; a Study of Progress in the United States. N.Y., 1908.

C. W. Plympton, Select Bibliography on Travel in North America. (New York State Library, Bulletin, "Bibliography 3.") Albany, 1897.

§ 39. Biographies

Among the most useful brief biographies are the following volumes of the American Statesmen series (Edited by J. T. Morse, Jr., 31 vols., Boston, 1882-1900; Standard Library edition, with general index volume, 32 vols., [1900]). — Second series, Boston, 1905-): Lodge's Washington and Webster, Morse's Jefferson, John Quincy Adams, and Lincoln, Sumner's Jackson, Schurz's Henry Clay, Hart's Salmon P. Chase, and C. F. Adams's C. F. Adams. In the Makers of America series may be mentioned Sumner's Robert Morris and Barrett Wendell's Cotton Mather. Some of the volumes in the Riverside Biographical series and in the Beacon Biographies are stimulating and useful as introductions to more serious works.

Two new series of more comprehensive reach are now being published, — the American Crisis Biographies and the Great Commanders series. Older series are Sparks's American Biography, Van Santvoord's Lives of the Chief Justices, and J. S. Jenkins's Lives of the Governors of New York.

Good dictionaries of biography are Brown's, and Wilson and Fiske's works (see § 27); and to this list should be added

Alexander Johnston's admirable biographical articles in Lalor's Cyclopædia (§ 27).

A few of the more useful biographies are enumerated below. The arrangement is alphabetical by the subjects of the works (not by authors).

CHAPTER VII

SOURCES

§ 40. Periodicals

MUCH valuable material, both secondary and original, is buried in the sets of American periodicals. Few of them are wholly devoted to historical matters, but many contain occasional articles. Out of the following list of periodicals the most serviceable in a historical library would be the American Historical Review, Atlantic Monthly, Century (especially for the Civil War), Forum, North American Review (old series to 1878), Magazine of American History, Political Science Quarterly, and Scribner's Magazine.

Until the publication of Poole's Index to Periodicals, such matter was almost inaccessible. At present, however, by aid of this work and its successors and of Guthrie's Readers' Guide, Jones's Index to Legal Periodical Literature, and the Index to Legal Periodicals (see § 24), it is easy to assemble material either as a basis of historical knowledge or for topical work. The value of a library is much increased by these publications. There are also special indexes to Harper's Magazine, the North American Review, and the New York Nation.

Of the earlier periodicals the most valuable for its historical material is Niles' Register (1811-1849), and of those since 1865 the New York Nation; the North American Review fills the gap between. The Magazine of American History, which was discontinued in 1893, is now replaced by the American Historical Review (1895-), which serves as a national clearing house for historical writers and readers. The Magazine of History (1905-) is confined more strictly to the American field. A number of magazines covering either state or sectional history are published by historical societies. The Political Science Quarterly, the American Political Science Review, the American Journal of International Law, and the Yale Review have also much historical matter. For a record of current events and criticisms, Public Opinion (now combined with the Literary Digest) is useful. The illustrated magazines have some historical articles that are frequently gathered into later volumes. The Forum and the North American Review deal with current political and social questions rather than with historical matters.

§ 41. Newspapers

Early newspapers, especially in colonial times, contained very little important news; they are useful to-day principally for the unintentional information furnished by advertisements and items. Newspapers of the present day are hard to handle, because of their bulk and their lack of systematic arrangement. In general such material ought to be used rather for illustration and corroboration; it is not safe to make newspapers the sole, or even the principal, dependence for historical narratives. The system of newspaper clippings employed in some schools has the serious drawback of failing to instil discrimination in the selection of material. In J. F. Rhodes, Historical Essays, No. iv (N.Y., 1909), is an exposition of the value of newspapers as historical sources.

The following books about American newspapers may be found suggestive: —

Joseph T. Buckingham, Specimens of Newspaper Literature. 2 vols Boston, 1850.

Frederic Hudson, History of Journalism in the United States, from 1690 to 1872. N.Y., 1873.

Library of Congress, Check List of American Newspapers in the Library of Congress. Compiled by A. B. Slauson. Washington, 1901.

William Nelson, Some Account of American Newspapers. (In New Jersey Archives, 1st series, Vols. XI, XII, XIX.) Paterson, N.J., 1894-1897. — Alphabetical lists, mainly of the eighteenth century, running as yet only through New Hampshire.

S. N. D. North, History and Present Condition of the Newspaper and Periodical Press in the United States. (Publications of the Tenth Census.) Washington, 1884.

Isaiah Thomas, History of Printing in America. 2 vols. Worcester, 1810. — 2d ed., 2 vols., Albany, 1874.

L. H. Weeks and E. M. Bacon, Historical Digest of the Provincial Press (1689-1783). "Massachusetts series," Vol. I (to 1707). Boston, 1911.

Wisconsin State Historical Society, Annotated Catalogue of Newspaper Files in the [Society's] Library. Prepared by E. H. Blair. Madison, 1898. — A new edition is in progress.

A very useful newspaper for historical purposes is Niles' Register (see § 40), in which appear significant extracts from a variety of the papers of the day. The National Intelligencer is useful to 1861. The New York Tribune and New York Times represent the two sides from about 1840 to 1865, and from 1876 to 1906 the Tribune published an annual index of its contents. The Nation in 1865 began its valuable weekly review of politics; and in 1886 Public Opinion revived Niles' system of extracts from other papers. Out of the thousands of newspapers in the United States the following brief list includes some of the most serviceable. They are arranged in order of their first appearance, with no indication as to their length of life.

§ 42. Collections of Public Records and Statutes

The ultimate source of our knowledge of American history is the record made at the time of the events described. In part we have official records, — conscious history; and the founders of the English colonies, especially in New England, were well aware of the value which posterity would place on their accounts of the planting of the New World. Winsor in Narrative and Critical History (VIII, 426) enumerates the principal publications, including the colonial records, which are among the most precious of our documents. Those of New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, and Georgia are published by the respective states; and the two series edited by O'Callaghan, called Documents relative to the Colonial History of New York and Documentary History of New York, are substantially records of that colony. Side by side with these must be mentioned the historical narratives of Bradford and Winthrop on Massachusetts history, which stand in a class by themselves.

The records of the New England Confederation are reprinted in Plymouth Colony Records, and there are extracts in the records of Connecticut. Since 1774 we have continuous Journals for the Congresses of the United States. For the Convention of 1787 there is the Journal, as well as Madison's notes on the debates, and considerable fragmentary material; all of which has been collected in Max Farrand, Records of the Federal Convention. From 1789 to 1837 we have reprints of contemporary newspaper reports of debates in Congress, and since 1837 an official stenographic report, the Congressional Globe and the Congressional Record. There are several elaborate series of public documents published by authority of Congress, the earlier of which were gathered up and republished in the folio State Papers. To all these documents there are now official indexes (§ 21). The Supreme Court Reports contain the decisions of that court. The ordinances of Congress before 1789 are not printed except in the Journals; but since 1789 there is a series of Statutes at Large containing the laws and treaties of the United States (§ 44: Federal Statutes).

All the states possess printed sets of documents, but none have published official reports of legislative proceedings other than the Journals. Nor are the town and city transactions in print, except in a few cases. On the other hand, the United States abounds in works of statesmen: those of Franklin, Washington, Hamilton, Jefferson, Madison, and Lincoln have each been published several times. Such works contain state papers and correspondence, and are well adapted for use in schools and colleges. Many public men have also put together their experiences and reminiscences into autobiographies and recollections, — such as John Quincy Adams's Memoirs, Franklin's Autobiography, Benton's Thirty Years' View, Sherman's Recollections, etc. (list in § 47).

These various types of sources are all represented, and many titles are printed in the sections next succeeding — which are not intended to be a complete bibliography; but are designed to include the most valuable works which may be found in our large libraries.

The laws of England, the colonies, states, and federal Union are printed in many forms. The principal collections for the period previous to the Revolution are as follows: —

British Statutes

Statutes of the Realm. Printed by command of His Majesty King George III. 11 vols. [London], 1810-1828. — Extends from 1235 to the end of the reign of Queen Anne. Vols. X, XI are indexes.

Danby Pickering, Statutes at Large, from Magna Charter to . . . 1761. Continued by Pickering and others to 1807 (46 vols.); continued to 1869 as Statutes of the United Kingdom (Vols. 47-109). Cambridge and, later, London, 1762-1869. — A good index up to 1809 in 3 vols., London, 1814.

Statutes at Large, from Magna Charta to . . . 1763. Compiled by Owen Ruffhead. 9 vols. London, 1763-1765. — New edition, revised and continued to 1800, by Charles Runnington, 14 vols. London, 1786-1800. (Vol. X is an index, 1225-1785.) — Continued to 1869 as Statutes of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland (with running title Statutes at Large). 29 vols. London, 1804-1869; and continued from then as The Public General Statutes (since 1888 as The Public General Acts). London, 1870-.

The Statutes; Revised Edition (1235-1878). 18 vols. London, 1870-1885]. — Second Revised Edition (1235-1886). 16 vols. London, 1888-1900.

British Colonial Papers

Acts of the Privy Council of England, Colonial Series. Rolls Series. Edited by W. L. Grant and James Munro. Vols. I-IV (1613-1766). Hereford, 1908-1911.

Calendar of [British] State Papers, Colonial Series, America and West Indies. Rolls Series. Vols. I-XIX (1574-1701). London, 1860-1910.

Calendar of Home Office Paper of the Reign of George III (1760-1775). Rolls Series. 4 vols. London, 1878-99. — Among the other volumes in this series which the student of American history will find helpful are the Domestic Papers, the Carew Manuscripts, etc.

J. K. Laughton, editor, State Papers relating to the Defeat of the Spanish Armada, 1588. (Navy Records Society.) 2 vols. [London], 1894.

Commission on Historical Manuscripts

Royal Commission on Historical Manuscripts, Reports, and other publications. London, 1874-. — The following volumes, among others, contain matter of use to students of American history: MSS. of the Marquess of Abergavenny, Lord Braye, etc. (1192-1809), 1887; MSS. of the House of Lords (1678-1704), 8 vols., 1887-1910; MSS. of the Earl of Dartmouth (1559-1824), 3 vols., 1887-1896; MSS. of the Duke of Portland at Welbeck Abbey (1582-1740), 8 vols., 1891-1907; MSS. in Various Collections, Vol. VI (1649-1818), 1909; MSS. of Mrs. Stopford-Sackville (1685-1782). 2 vols. 1904-10; American MSS. in the Royal Institution of Great Britain (1747-1883). 4 vols., 1904-1909; MSS. of the Earl of Carlisle (1200-1820), 1897. — These reports are also published in the Parliamentary Papers. A partial "Guide to the Items relating to American History" in the reports of the Commission may be found in American Historical Association, Annual Report, 1898, pp. 611-708 (also published separately).

Colonial Statutes and Charters

Extracts from the Votes and Proceedings of the American Continental Congress, held at Philadelphia, Sept. 5th, 1774. Phila., 1774.

Charters of the British Colonies in America. London, 1775. — Printed for John Almon.

Pennsylvania Historical Society, Charlemagne Tower Collection of American Colonial Laws. Phila., 1890. — An index.

Ben. Perley Poore, compiler, The Federal and State Constitutions, Colonial Charters, and other Organic Laws of the United States. (Senate Misc. Docs., 44 Cong. 2 sess. [no number, serial numbers 1730, 1731], also separately.) 2 parts. Washington, Government Printing Office, 1877. — New edition, with practically the same title. Compiled and edited by Francis Newton Thorpe. (House Docs., 59 Cong. 2 sess. No. 357.) 7 vols. Washington, 1909.

§ 43. Colonial, State, and Local Records, Statutes, and Constitutions

The story of the march of civilization in the United States is best gathered from the records of the several states and of the local administrative units within them. The following lists contain the proceedings of important constitutional conventions, and other publications that have been found to be of value by one or another of the compilers of this work. Extended lists of records of constitutional conventions can be found in F. N. Thorpe, Constitutions and Charters, I, pp. xv-xxxv, and also with lists of state statutes and other records in R. R. Bowker, State Publications (§ 24). For economic material in state documents consult A. R. Hasse, Index (§ 24).

§ 44. United States Records

Under the Constitution each House of Congress is obliged to keep a journal, and also to make a statement of receipts and expenditures. In the course of years many other documents have come to be regularly published. Most of these publications for the current year may be had by applying to the member of Congress from one's district; sometimes back sets may also be secured by gift or purchase. These are among the most valuable sources accessible to students of American history.

The manuscripts of the Journals from 1774 to 1788 are in the State Department at Washington; the new edition now in progress is the first full and accurate publication.

Indexes to the Journals and Debates are enumerated in § 26.

The laws are printed in annual volumes, and they are also to be found in the Appendices to the records of debates. The standard editions, authoritative in the courts, are enumerated below.

Indexes

Early indexes of the Statutes are :

Statutes at Large, VIII. — Contains an index to the laws up to 1845.

Synoptical Index to the Laws and Treaties (1789-1851). Boston, 1852.

F. C. Brightly, Analytical Digest of the Laws of the United States (1789-1857), Phila., 1858. — An index in another form.

The indexes to the Revised Statutes cover all laws still in force. All these indexes are now nearly superseded by :

M. G. Beaman and others, Index Analysis of the Federal Statutes (General and Permanent Law), 1789-1873, together with a Table of Repeals and Amendments. Washington, 1911. — Prepared as a "preliminary volume" to Scott and Beaman, Index Analysis, etc. (Washington, 1908), which covers the general and permanent law in the Revised Statutes of 1873 and the Statutes at Large, 1873-1907.

Journals of Congress

[1774-1788.] Journals of Congress, containing their Proceedings. Contemporaneous edition, 13 vols., Phila., 1777-[1789?]; reprint, 13 vols., Phila., 1800-1801. — Another reprint, with additions, as Journals of the American Congress, 4 vols., Washington, 1823.

Digests of Decisions

Legal cases are most approachable through the Digests, which are analytical indexes including not only references to the cases but a condensed statement of the principle set forth in the particular case. There are digests of some state decisions, several separate digests to the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, and the so-called Century Digest, which is an immense repository of classified references to the published decisions of national and state courts taken together.

Robert Desty, Constitution of the United States. San Francisco, 1887. — Arranged in order of the clauses of the Federal Constitution.

H. D. Clarke, Hand-Book of all the Decisions of the Supreme Court. Rochester, 1892, with supplements to 1897.

H. G. Danforth, Digest. 2 vols. Albany, 1885-1891.

J. K. Kinney, Digest. 2 vols. Boston, 1886.

T. J. Michie, Encyclopedia of United States Supreme Court Reports. 11 vols. Charlottesville, 1908-1911.

Digest of the United States Supreme Court Reports . . . to the Beginning of the October term, 1907. Vols. I-V. Rochester, 1908- . — In progress.

American Digest, "Century Edition." 50 vols. St. Paul, 1897-1904. — Covers, besides the federal reports, all other reported American cases from the earliest times to 1896; continued to 1906 by the "Decennial Edition," and to the present time by the American Digest Annotated.

Federal Reporter Digest. 7 vols. St. Paul, 1900-1908. Digests lower federal court decisions but also includes Vols. 106-210 of the United States Reports.

§ 46. Collected Works of American Statesmen

In this and the following section (§ 47) it has not been thought necessary to repeat the titles of the books on statesmen and worthies of the colonial period which have already been given under § 39. The letters and reports of the men of the earlier time are often to be found in monographs dealing with particular topics, in the proceedings and collections of learned societies, or built into biographies which tell their stories, as the phrase is, in the subject's "own words."

§ 47. Autobiographies and Reminiscences

The collected writings of statesmen include not only correspondence, but in many cases personal memoranda and occasionally an autobiography. There is also a literature including in part diaries made from day to day, and in part reminiscences put together late in life, and to a considerable degree based upon memory. The value of this material depends upon the accuracy of the recollections of fallible individuals. In the following works the difficulties and pitfalls of this type of sources are set forth :

E. L. Pierce, Recollections as a Source of History (Mass. Hist. Soc., Proceedings, 2d series, X, 475).

J. P. Quincy, Limits of Reliable Memory (Ibid., XIV, 457).

Charles Francis Adams, in Ibid., XIII, 177-187, XVII, 447-448, XVIII, 125-134; revised and restated on pp. 344-413 of his Studies, Military and Diplomatic, Boston, 1911.

§ 48. Unofficial Collections of Narratives, Documents, and Speeches

Besides the official collections of documents and published records (§ 44) individual editors and compilers and learned societies have made numerous collections of a documentary kind. § 49. Manuscript Sources

Mr. Winsor has devoted an important part of the general bibliographical appendix of the Narrative and Critical History (Vol. VIII, 413) to a list of the available collections of manuscripts. The State Department in Washington has the original documents of the Continental Congress, the Confederation, and the Federal Convention of 1787, with the manuscripts of the Declaration of Independence, the Articles of Confederation, and the Constitution. It has also the manuscript rolls of statutes and treaties made since 1789, and the valuable parts of the papers of Washington, Madison, Jefferson, Franklin, Monroe, Hamilton, and of the manuscripts collected, but not printed, by Peter Force.

Of the state archives those of Massachusetts may be mentioned as especially rich. The various state historical societies have in many cases valuable collections of family papers. Frequently, however, important sets of manuscripts have been scattered or destroyed for want of an appreciation of their value. The letters, and especially the diaries, of any person who has been in public life have a permanent value, and should be carefully preserved.

In the use of manuscript material great care must be taken to identify each piece, to ascertain its date, and to be sure that it was really written by the person to whom it is ascribed. In some cases there are two manuscript copies of a letter by the same hand, as in the famous letters of Washington, supposed, till the two originals were compared, to have been rewritten by his editor, Sparks. There will often be material discrepancies between the copy of a letter as preserved in a "letter-book" and the letter actually sent.

The following works are serviceable avenues of approach to the enormous mass of archive material which is now being made available:

Public Archives Commission, Reports, in American Historical Association, Annual Reports, 1900-

Historical Manuscript Commission, Reports, in Ibid., 1896-

Carnegie Institution: Bureau of Historical Research, Reports, as follows, in addition to reports in press or in preparation on American material in Canadian, French, British (1783-1860), and other Spanish Archives, and on territorial papers in the federal archives :

W. H. Allison, Inventory of Unpublished Materials for American Religious History. Washington, 1911.

W. R. Shepherd, Guide to the Materials for the History of the United States in Spanish Archives. Washington, 1907.

The Library of Congress has issued calendars of its Washington, John Paul Jones, Van Buren, and Revolutionary Naval papers; and the Department of State has published calendars of Jefferson's and Madison's correspondence.

The reports of the British Historical Manuscript Commission (§ 42) contain much material on American History, a partial index to which may be found in American Historical Association, Report for 1898, pp. 611-708.

CHAPTER VIII

ILLUSTRATIVE WORKS

§ 50. Illustrative Material

HISTORICAL events and movements are frequently fixed in the memory by the perusal of books which may be inaccurate in themselves, especially as to details, but which nevertheless leave a permanent and reasonably correct impression on the mind of the reader. Thus Keats's famous sonnet, in which he made the conqueror of Mexico discover the Pacific Ocean, could not well be less in accordance with the historical fact; but it enforces the charm of discovery more intensely than the reading of many original letters and reports could do. There are critics, however, who think that when, as in this case, the facts are well known and easily to be discovered, it is the business of the story-teller or versemaker to know what actually happened sufficiently well to make the historical basis of his story reasonably accurate. A famous American writer once said that the poet was indebted to history for the general facts only, around which he could build up his own imaginative work. Perhaps it is true that the novel-writer or the poet produces the best and truest work when, unhampered by the details of the real story, he aims to create only a general impression which shall be true to the general trend of history. Contrary to what Bradford says, Mrs. Austin carries the Mayflower's shallop into a cove in Clark's Island; the plan of the story, the author has said, made it necessary for the boat to be at that particular place at the precise moment, and the spirit of the explorers is not affected by the deviation. Longfellow's Miles Standish would be painfully inaccurate and anachronistic as history; but the poet adds a man to our affectionate acquaintance. Just how far it is safe to accept a picture of which the details are not true to the time — whether the "general reader" of Mrs.

Austin's tale or of Longfellow's poem gains a truer and more lasting impression of the spirit of Pilgrim colonization than he would obtain from Doyle, or Bancroft, or still better from Bradford's epic itself — is a question which the authors of the Guide do not answer. Certain it is that for all pupils and students of American history such books are useful in connection with accurate textbooks, with other secondary accounts, and especially as adjuncts to a moderate use of the sources which tell the same tales more simply.

In the following lists of novels and poems no attempt is made to separate the works based on sound study from those which may justly be classed with fiction; they are all named as additional and subordinate illustrative material. Nor can the lists claim to be complete; the principle of choice is to give at least examples of those standard authors who have woven out of American history, and to add some books from obscure writers which are known to have given pleasure or to have aroused interest. Other titles may be found in the seven works noted in § 51, especially in the Chronological Index issued by the Boston Public Library; the third edition, printed under the editorship of Mr. Whitney, is the more complete; the earlier editions, prepared by Mr. Winsor, are likely to be the more useful. In these publications, novels, poems, and ballads are grouped together under the head of "fiction."

PART III. TEACHING AND READING HISTORY

CHAPTER IX

WORKING LIBRARIES

§ 53. Necessity of Working Libraries

No proper work can be done in history by the use of a single book. The study resembles those scientific subjects, such as botany and physics, in which laboratory practice is an essential part of the instruction from the very beginning. The principle to be observed is that the teacher's part is not to deal out knowledge, but to aid the pupils in getting their knowledge for themselves. Hence, if history is really to be taught at all, in every school there must be some collection of books.

In order to secure the use of a working library, it must be accessible all the school time, and if possible be made available at other hours. A shelf in the schoolroom, where the books stand in view all day, is the most convenient arrangement. Larger collections may need to be kept in a particular room; if a machinery for drawing books out and registering them seems necessary, it should be made as simple as possible. Pupils should be encouraged to carry books home over night. At the same time should be inculcated that reverence for the clean and unsoiled page which is a part of every proper education.

If the books are more than a hundred, some kind of catalogue is almost indispensable, and should be conspicuously placed. Large libraries should of course have a card catalogue, including both authors and subjects; and the making of a school catalogue may be an excellent experience for children.

§ 54. Small Collections

The multiplication of brief but well-written books on American history makes it possible to select a few books which, taken together, cover the whole field of American history in some systematic fashion. In making up the lists below, care has been taken to include, so far as possible, books which balance each other, either by treating different phases of American history or by taking different sides on the same general question.

Four-Dollar Collection

1	E. Channing, Students' History (§ 9)	$1.40
2	A. B. Hart, Epoch Maps (§ 33)40
3	A. B. Hart, Source Book of American History (§ 48)60
4	A. C. McLaughlin, History of the American Nation , N.Y., 1899	1.40

Ten-Dollar Collection

1-2	J. T. Morse, Jr., Abraham Lincoln , 2 vols. (§ 34)	$2.50
3	E. Channing, United States, 1765-1865 (§ 28)	1.50
4-6	Epochs of American History , 3 vols. (§ 28)	3.75
7	A. B. Hart, Epoch Maps (§ 33)40
8-9	E. E. Sparks, United States , 2 vols. (§ 28)	3.00

Twenty-five-Dollar Collection

(No books in the $10.00 list are here repeated)

10-16	American History Series , 7 vols. (§ 28)	$7.00
17-18	E. Channing, History of the United States , 2 vols. (§ 29)	5.00
19-22	A. B. Hart, American History told by Contemporaries , 4 vols. (§ 48)	8.00
23	Higginson and MacDonald, United States (§ 28)	2.00
24	Alexander Johnston, American Politics (§ 28)90
25	Wm. MacDonald, Documentary Source Book of American History, 1606-1898 (§ 48)	1.00
26	Edward Stanwood, Presidency (§ 36)	2.50

Fifty-Dollar Collection

The following volumes which cost about fifteen dollars, may be added to the books enumerated in the ten-dollar and twenty-five-dollar collections:

27	D. R. Dewey, Financial History of the United States (§ 36)	$2.00
28-29	H. C. Lodge, George Washington , 2 vols. (§ 39)	2.50
30	A. B. Hart and E. Channing, American History Leaflets , 36 nos. (§ 48)	3.00

31	J. K. Landon, Constitutional History (§ 28)	3.00
32	Wm. MacDonald, Select Charters (§ 48)	1.25
33	Wm. MacDonald, Select Documents (§ 48)	1.25
34	Wm. MacDonald, Select Statutes (§ 48)	1.25
35-36	Carl Schurz, Henry Clay , 2 vols. (§ 39)	2.50

One-Hundred-Dollar Collection

In addition to the fifty-dollar list the following works should be added :

37	A good history of your own state (§ 37).
38	E. L. Bogart, Economic History of the United States (§ 36).
39	Katharine Coman, Industrial History of the United States (§ 36).
40-46	J. B. McMaster, History of the People of the United States , 7 vols. (§ 29).
47-52	J. F. Rhodes, History of the United States , 7 vols. (§ 29).
53-58	James Schouler, History of the United States , 6 vols. (§ 29).

§ 55. Small Standard Library

The small collections above described include few sources, and ought to be supplemented by printed records, by biographies containing letters and other original material, and by the works of statesmen, and local and special histories. From the lists of classified books given above (§§ 28-48) many additional titles may be drawn. Among them should be included :

(1) Atlases of American historical geography, and some of the descriptive books and sources (§§ 30-35).

(2) A good supply of textbooks, both school and college (§§ 9, 28).

(3) Additional general histories (§ 29).

(4) Some of the special histories (§ 36).

(5) Local histories of the state and place in which the teacher or reader lives (§ 37).

(6) Biographies of all the Presidents, and also of John Winthrop, Hutchinson, Sam Adams, Patrick Henry, Franklin, Hamilton, John Randolph, Gallatin, Clay, Webster, Calhoun, Benton, Douglas, Seward, Davis, Chase, Sumner, Stevens, Blaine, John Sherman (§ 39).

(7) A few of the reviews containing historical matter, especially the Nation, and the American Historical Review (§ 40).

(8) If possible some sets of colonial records, which may be obtained at reasonable prices at the second-hand bookstores (§ 43).

(9) A set of the Annals of Congress, Congressional Debates, Congressional Globe, and Congressional Record (§ 44).

(10) The Statutes at Large (§ 44); sets are expensive. The earlier statutes are also printed in Annals of Congress. The statutes should be supplemented by the treaties, either the volume of Treaties and Conventions of the United States, which comes down to 1887 only, or Malloy's compilation, which comes down to 1909 (§ 44).

(11) A selection of the printed sources, including the principal collections of documents and narratives, as described in § 42 and § 48, and in the "Small Collections" (§ 54).

A library carefully selected on the basis above indicated should include from 300 to 1000 volumes, and should cost from $450 to $1500. A select list of about 350 works in 450 volumes is printed in A. B. Hart, Essentials of American History, Appendices A, B. A similar list is a part of the A. L. A. 8000 Volumes for a Popular Library (§ 24).

§ 56. Collateral Use of Public Libraries

The large number of public libraries in the United States makes possible careful work in history even in schools which have small or ill-selected libraries. One method is to recommend pupils to draw books which will be useful in connection with their study. For this purpose it is very desirable to cooperate with the librarian in preparing reading lists, including only material in the library, and illustrating the regular lessons. Good descriptive books, travels, and historical novels may thus be indicated, as well as histories and biographies.

Perhaps a better method is for the school to secure the privilege of drawing out a certain number of books, and keeping them for a definite time in the school building as a special reference library. This system has the advantage of keeping together for general use the set of most useful books. Without any such formal privilege being granted, it is easy to arrange that children, holders of cards, shall unite their drawings, so as to make up a reference set, to be used by the whole class so long as the library regulations permit the books to remain out. In many cases public libraries will purchase sets of books on American history, with special reference to their usefulness for school work. Another advantage of a good public library should be that it can give the pupils an opportunity to learn the use of catalogues, special bibliographies, and other keys to literature (§ 21).

§ 57. Use of Great Libraries

A few favored cities and some universities have the advantage of great public or endowed libraries, containing rich historical literature and preserving extensive sets of printed records, works of public men, and files of periodicals. The most noted of such libraries are the Harvard College; Boston Public; Boston Athenæum; John Carter Brown, at Providence; Yale University; New York Public; Columbia University; Peabody, at Baltimore; Library of Congress; Newberry, at Chicago; University of Chicago; Burton, at Detroit; Wisconsin Historical Society; and Bancroft, at University of California.

The first duty of a student or reader in such a library is to make himself familiar with the catalogue, so that he may, without loss of time, go straight to the authorities on any subject he may be studying. A few hours spent in mastering the intricacies of a printed or card subject catalogue will make the whole of the historical way smooth. Next the student should learn the arrangement and use of special aids such as Poole's Index and Fletcher's A. L. A. Index to General Literature (§ 21). This familiarity may most easily be gained by following out some specific subject through the various bibliographical aids.

The next duty of the student is to make himself familiar with the general literature of American history. If he have a select set of works on the subject at his disposal, he should go through a considerable number of the books, examining them sufficiently to acquaint himself with their aim and arrangement. Then he should look into the sources, particularly the colonial records and the records of the United States government, so as to understand the principle upon which they are arranged, and the indexes and other means of getting at their contents.

All the work above described is of course only a reconnaissance, intended to prepare the way for a careful study of some part of the material thus examined, in connection with class work or private reading. A great library means not so much that the student is to read an enormous amount, as that he is to learn how to select from the mass the books or parts of books most useful to him; and especially that he may learn how to draw from the sources material for knowledge or the confirmation of knowledge gained elsewhere. Thought, selection, discrimination, are most essential to the right use of great collections.

§ 58. Special Use of Libraries by Students

For large classes, in schools, colleges, and universities, it is difficult to provide enough material to serve for the wants of all at once. Important books may be drawn out when most needed by the class; one copy is often insufficient, and few libraries will buy duplicates to be used freely, and perhaps worn out, by students. Much may be done by private gift to increase the copies of the most valuable books. Sometimes members of classes will give reference books at the end of their course, or classes raise a subscription or assess themselves to provide additional copies.

To provide as well as possible for the largest possible number of students, Justin Winsor, then Librarian of Harvard University, worked out a system of which the success has been proved by the experience of thirty years. Out of the numerous stores of the library each instructor has the right to select such books as seem to him essential for his courses, and to have them assembled on a set of shelves in the reading room, where they are entirely open and accessible, without any formality of drawing out, during the library hours. With this existence of a good working collection behind him, the instructor may safely call for a large amount of parallel reading and special written work.

A further provision of the scheme adds greatly to the effectiveness of the library in cases where the reading room cannot be used after sundown: no book thus reserved can be drawn out by any student during the day; but he has the privilege, before the library closes, to draw a certain number of reserved books for "over-night use"; such books are returnable at nine o'clock the next morning.

Some instructors have established small working libraries in rooms set apart for the purpose by the college authorities. To each student in the course for which such a library is provided, a key is given in return for the deposit of a small sum of money. The interests of the students and of the library are thus made identical.

CHAPTER X

§ 59. Recitations

THE classroom is the place where the pupils' general work is to be tested; but, at the outset, teachers ought never to lose sight of the fact that repetition of the words or ideas of a textbook is a test of the memory and not of the mind. The only proper test is that which ascertains how far a pupil is able to use and apply what he knows; and in that process one is certain to find out whether he really knows anything. The recitation is the teacher's opportunity to enforce, explain, illustrate, and amplify the lesson.

The first duty of the teacher is therefore throughout the exercise to point out what is most important in the lesson and what is a minor matter, and thus to break up the notion that every word in the textbook deserves equal attention with every other word. The interest and opinion of the pupil may sometimes be drawn out as to the comparative importance of two events.

The recitation is also the place to bring out cross relations of events, as set forth elsewhere in the textbook or in other books. This work the teacher must guide, but need not carry on alone; pupils may make pertinent suggestions, or the teacher may draw them out by skillful questioning. With such intelligent teaching there will be no need of calling for a repetition of the words of the textbook.

In colleges the ordinary set recitation is an anachronism; students old enough to come to college ought not to need the stimulus of their own discussion. For them the only suitable oral exercise in history is the "quiz" (§ 63) or "conference," or some form of written exercise (§§ 87-95). If textbook recitations are necessary, it is a proof that the work done is not college work.

§ 60. Use of Textbooks

What is the advantage of a textbook if it is not to be absorbed by the pupil? In the first place, it is to be the backbone of his knowledge: it should fix in the mind the principal events as a body of facts to be acquired and drilled into the mind.

Most textbooks on American history are well illustrated, and thus serve to bring home to the mind historical places and public men. Suggestive and helpful maps also ought to be used constantly both in and out of the classroom. The best textbooks are further provided with a set of select bibliographies, which will lead pupils to use other books; or they contain lists of questions requiring for answer the use of additional books.

One other use of textbooks is that of the "open textbook recitation," in which, with their books before them and the privilege of turning the leaves back and forth, pupils reply to off-hand questions, including past and even future lessons. This is an exercise likely to train pupils to swift and discriminating use of books.

For college work the textbook has a different purpose. It should be employed not as a basis of class exercises, but as a substitute for what must otherwise be acquired from lectures. The instructor may omit from his lecture the groundwork included in the textbook, assuming that so much knowledge may be taken for granted. The textbook may also, if furnished with suitable bibliographies, serve as a guide to the parallel reading.

§ 61. Chronology and Memorizing

No improved method of teaching can do away with the necessity of memorizing certain data; but here, as elsewhere, there must be caution to select essential things. As permanent and useful possessions in class and in later life, every pupil needs a list of important events, which by their dates are placed in their logical connection; the names of a few of the great characters, with determining dates; and parts of the phraseology of some of the constitutional documents. A ready use of this material, out of its connection, should be required and enforced at every opportunity, so that it may be firmly fixed in the memory as a permanent acquirement. It should be the multiplication table of history, always at the tongue's end. Drill should be given to fixing a few dates in the mind rather than to suggesting so many that they will have no life or meaning.

The following list is a suggestion of the things best worth remembering as a basis for the study of the history of America

Discovery and Exploration, 1000-1681

§ 62. Reviews

Many schools waste the most valuable part of the year, the last month or more, in an elaborate review of study already pursued within too narrow limits. A proper system of teaching will secure all the good that there is in this system, without its loss of time and energy. Such a device is thus described by a very efficient secondary teacher: "The pupil is given the entire subject, — for instance, the Homeric Age, the Conquest of Italy by Rome, the Early Norman Kings, the New England Colonies. To recite these 'fluents' is the special glory of the class; the brilliant recitation that holds the interest of all the pupils, although the subject is familiar, is one that is especially prized. After the 'fluent' is finished, it is criticized as to matter and manner; the English, the attitude, and intonation of the reciter all coming under fire, as well as the historical matter."

A second device is thus described: "But a very important part of the work yet remains, — the fixing of the whole indelibly on the mind. This is attempted by what . . . are called 'cards,' i.e., a raking fire of short, sharp questions every morning, to which a prompt, direct answer is required, or the dread 'next,' 'next,' 'next' is heard. To fail in cards is thought a great disgrace, for they are taken up only when the subject has been most carefully explained, and failure in them is an evidence of unfaithfulness on the part of the pupil."

The essential element in both these systems is that every recitation, properly conducted, may be a review of lessons that have gone before. Besides oral reviews, there are several systems of written questions, which will be described below (§§ 87, 88).

§ 63. The "Quiz"

For sufficiently advanced pupils the recitation may be replaced by a different sort of oral exercise, the "quiz," the object of which is to draw out by discussion the meaning and relations of the day's topic. Here the textbook has place only as one of several authorities that may be quoted. For instance, the whole body of pupils may become a sort of committee of the whole on some moot question, as witchcraft, the Boston Massacre, or nullification. Such a discussion may be made the medium of ethical teaching, of the greater effect because introduced incidentally.

One method of carrying on such a "quiz" is to assign to each member of the class some phase of the general subject, on which he is to make special preparation, so as to contribute to the discussion as often as his special topic bears upon it. Another method is to make each member responsible for a particular book, so that he may state the view of the author on each controversy that comes up, or add details not elsewhere mentioned.

In college the "quiz" may approach the well-known and successful "law-school method" of deducing principles from a study of cases and not of textbooks, the historical student using as his "cases" documents, contemporary narratives, and court decisions in the various convenient small volumes of selected decisions. In small and highly advanced courses it is possible to conduct a "quiz" based partly on texts and partly on personal knowledge. Political and constitutional questions may be discussed in such classes by assigning to each man a state — presumably his own — or an institution, upon which he shall make himself an authority.

§ 64. Physical Geography and Maps

In previous sections (§§ 30-34) have been described the sources and authorities in American historical geography. Without an adequate knowledge of the physical and historical geography of the United States, — the natural "lay of the land," and the process of subdivision by artificial lines, — the historical student is all at sea. All the good histories of the United States, including the textbooks, have some discussion as to the influence of physical conditions on history. For historical purposes the river systems and drainage basins are the proper basis of geographical study. By the phenomena of erosion, which are not too difficult for grammar and even primary schools, are to be explained most of the natural highways which lead from the sea up into the Appalachian range, and thence down the westward slope; and especially the position and interrelation of the St. Lawrence and Mississippi basins. By submergence and tides and wave action are to be explained the harbors which determined the site of colonies and the growth of great cities.

Most of the colonial wars had their theater in or about the passes from the seaboard to Canada, or on the coast. The Revolutionary War and the Civil War are also to be understood only by reference to the topography of the country in which they were fought. The falls in the principal rivers have become the sites of manufacturing towns or the limits of navigation. Chicago and New York, St. Paul and New Orleans, Richmond and Norfolk, mark the head and foot of great water communications. From the earliest study of geography the features of the continent should be treated as having a connection with the settlement of the country, with the development of its industrial life, and with political events.

To understand a map requires training; to the child's mind it is at first a confused set of lines. Map drawing and map making help to teach the pupil to look on a map as representing a surface; but it takes a long time to learn to read the vertical element, even on the best maps. Children should early be accustomed to think of the maps as representing an uneven surface, like that of the surrounding country, or like the little plateaus and channels made by rain. Clay modeling is an efficient aid to this part of a child's education.

§ 65. Political Geography

Upon the knowledge of physical geography may be based a study of the development of political geography; and every child who studies American history at all ought to have some notion of the successive forms of the political geography of the country. There are some, not very satisfactory, series of historical wall maps. Much may be done, however, in the way of making a set of outline maps on large paper, or a relief map painted on a blackboard. By using colored crayons it is easy in a few minutes to present upon the board any desired general map, on a scale large enough to be seen at a distance of forty feet. Where a larger scale is desired, or the field is out of the limits of the blackboard, sketches may be made on the board, or permanent maps on thick paper.

The first use of the maps is to illustrate the territorial development of the country, by bringing before the eye the successive cessions and purchases. At the same time the perplexing boundary controversies may be made clear: the close connection between annexations and the inner political history of the country is often brought out in startling relief when presented to the eye. Next comes the internal development of the country. Successive maps, dated, say, ten years apart, may show the extent of settlement and the formation of territories and states. Even political affairs may sometimes be strikingly mapped out: thus, a series of maps showing the distribution of the presidential vote by states, or, better, by counties, in each succeeding election will forever fix in the mind the slow growth of sectional parties; and maps of votes on bills by congressional districts are very illuminating. Special maps may be used for a variety of purposes, such as the theater of wars and campaigns, detailed boundary controversies, proposed sites for the national capital, or schemes for internal improvement.

Besides the wall maps, every child should have at constant command a set of small maps or an historical atlas, and should be encouraged to follow every lesson, map in hand. Sites should be learned, not with reference to a particular river or body of water only, but with some reason for the choice of those spots. Much use may also be made of local geography, especially in the older states. Every child should know the territorial changes that have befallen his own state, and especially his own town. In learning these data the student cannot help noticing that America was first divided among Christian nations, and that then the northern portion was subdivided into colonies, with overlapping and conflicting claims.

One of the easiest ways of teaching geography is to use desk outline maps, filling them in as the subject progresses. A series of such maps will be a little historical atlas, and the making of them is an exercise in geometry as well as in geography. For college courses historical geography should never be relaxed; the more detailed and special a course, the more reason for treating the geography carefully and making it underlie the whole body of instruction.

§ 66. Illustrative Methods

Drawing is a usual subject of school study, and may be connected with history, which is the natural medium for instruction in art as part of a nation's life. The first step is to make the schoolroom attractive with busts and portraits of great men, and other suggestive objects. To such a cheerful collection, children, students, parents, and public-spirited people interested in the school will often contribute; and something may perhaps be had from school funds. Where means are scanty, there are still excellent portraits to be cut from illustrated weeklies or old magazines and arranged in scrapbooks or on the walls. Any real picture of a person or place or scene, well executed, has a value; imaginary scenes are much less satisfactory. Lantern slides of historical scenes and maps are now a frequent and effective means of enforcing historical teaching.

§ 67. Historical Recreations

Many teachers, especially in the lower grades, enliven their class by exercises in what may be called dramatic methods. Among these is the putting of rather vague questions, which the pupils are to search out, as, "When did a stone wall affect the result of a battle?" or, "Name some defeats which have had the effect of victories." Sometimes lists of such topics are made up, and prizes are given to those who correctly answer the largest number. A favorite method at present, with young children, is to have them impersonate historical characters in various ways, — as individuals in dialogues or in historical plays or pageants.

Historical excursions, common in Germany, are infrequent in this country, though in all the older states there are places of great national interest. If there be no famous hall or tree or house within reach, there are at least the local political deliberative bodies — town meetings or councils, aldermen or legislatures or courts — which are to history what chemical works are to chemistry, or steel works to manual training, — a practical illustration of the study. Wherever there is a museum it should be visited, if it contains something more than mere curiosities.

§ 68. Debates

One of the most suggestive class exercises is to organize the class into a debating society, or to induce the regular debating societies to take up questions that arise in historical study. This method very closely connects itself with the practice and needs of everyday life: all children discuss with each other, state arguments, and try to convince, and must do it all their lives.

The usual method is to appoint one, two, or more persons as principal disputants on each side, and then to let others come in with less formal speeches. It is well to have a member of the class preside, and he should be instructed to enforce rigorously the limits of time, and to make the debate move briskly. But debate as a class exercise should be as free as possible from the machinery of parliamentary law, — points of order, discussion of technicalities, and the like.

It adds much to the directness of a debate if the principal disputants in advance reduce their arguments to the form of briefs, in which the main points are stated in their logical order, with subsidiary points arranged under each head, and with references to authorities wherever possible. Such briefs may be placed on the blackboard, or reproduced by carbons or multiplying processes.

The debate may be criticized by the teacher at the end of the exercise in the presence of the class, each of the speakers receiving brief notice, including praise as well as blame. Errors and misstatements should be scored, and children should be taught to consider how to make their arguments pointed and convincing.

In some of the universities debate has been organized into regular courses counting toward the degree, with briefs printed in the college papers before each debate. Instructors in elocution, in English, and in history and economics criticize the participants.¹

§ 69. Oral Reports of Pupils

Some excellent schools find it possible to enliven their exercises by giving the pupils a part. This may be simply the assignment to each of a general subject from which he shall be prepared to make a contribution to the discussion whenever that subject has application (§ 63); or the best of the written reports may be called for, and perhaps a sufficient number combined to fill the hour. In either case caution is necessary: all the pupils must understand that the criticisms of a fellow pupil are those of an immature person who has only a small amount of information; that his abstracts are subject to the faults of one little accustomed to precise use of language; and that quotations, carefully made, carry only the authority of the source from which they are drawn. There is no danger, if pains be taken to teach pupils to discriminate between different classes of writers. One of the main purposes of good teaching is to give to every pupil such a part in the work that neglect is at once apparent. Such a method as has been suggested leads to a feeling of responsibility, both for accurate work and for prompt and skillful performance.

§ 70. Student Lectures

In colleges and universities it is possible to make a broader use of the same principle. In coöperative classes students do most of the work; and they are often able to bring to the study of an assigned topic an amount of time and thought which no instructor could devote to each subject if he worked it out by himself. Of course much of this time is wasted, and oftentimes the results are disappointing. The difficulty in carrying on a systematic course of successive lectures by students, even the ablest, is that no one of them has in mind the dimensions and relations of the whole subject: the lectures are apt to take the form of a lyceum course, — each interesting in itself, but none necessary to the understanding of any other.

§ 71. Seminaries

The term “seminary method,” and perhaps the thing itself, has been much abused in the United States. In Germany it has a perfectly distinct meaning, — a system of instruction for the most advanced students, in which the work is entirely original research, the necessary technical preparation for such work, and the examination and comparison of results. In that sense the word is employed also in the score of advanced institutions in the United States which have the three essential elements of the system, — large libraries, trained instructors, and a body of advanced students. “Original work” is not necessarily seminary work, nor is a coöperative class necessarily a seminary. The system is inapplicable in many colleges.

What is sometimes called the “seminary method” in secondary schools is really nothing but the use of sources under competent direction, with combination of the results on some system likely to arouse interest and aid other members of the class. The aim of the seminary student is to exhaust his subject, to examine all the literature bearing on it, to say the last word; but the aim in secondary or grammar schools must be to get as much as possible out of a very limited range of material. So far as methods of research are applicable in schools, they will be considered below (§§ 90-93).

In the true seminary there are two systems in use. The first is to assign to students topics generally unrelated, and, as each student brings his work to a point, to let him occupy the hour of class exercises. The other way is to assign a series of related topics which, with an occasional lecture from the instructor, will make up a systematic and consecutive course. Each of these methods has its advantages: the former consults individual preference, and allows greater variety of treatment; the latter accustoms students to fit their historical timber into a given space.

§ 72. Classroom Tests

The proper teaching of history requires that pupils should be frequently called upon to show not only that they "know the lesson," but that they know and can apply earlier lessons. Hence informal tests must be devised. Devoting a part of each exercise to a review of the previous lesson has its advantages; but such a review is apt to be a wearisome and perfunctory exercise. It is better to keep pupils alive on all the field already traversed, by compelling them to put their minds upon the whole subject.

One excellent device has been described above (§ 62) under the name of "fluents": pupils are called upon repeatedly to give the whole narrative of some episode or period, as nearly and as fully as they remember it. By going over and over this method they become saturated with the history, and carry it in their minds a long time.

An equally effective plan is that of the so-called "cards" (§ 62): a few minutes of each exercise are given up to the asking of very brief questions, put sharply and quickly, and to be answered immediately and categorically. By writing the questions on a set of cards, and then mixing them, they will come out haphazard, and the answer to one will not suggest the answer to the next.

Geography, is of course, tested by the constant use of wall maps and atlases in class, and by the construction of maps or outlines from memory (§§ 64, 65).

§ 73. Oral Examinations

The old-fashioned oral examination, with the school committee solemnly ranged on the platform and anxious children awaiting their turns, has fallen into disuse. It always gave an undue advantage to the ready, off-hand pupil, and often caught pupils on some unimportant or small part of the subject. The advantage of keeping the wits sharpened, and being ready to use one's knowledge, can be gained by skillful recitations, and especially by the device known as "cards" (§ 62).

For small classes, and especially for advanced students, where there is time to go into detail, the oral examination has important uses; and it is accepted as a proper test (in part, at least) for the degree of Ph.D. The power to marshal a large body of knowledge, and to select the portion which is pertinent to an inquiry, is best tested in this way.

§ 74. Formal Written Tests

Written tests, if properly applied, are undoubtedly more searching and instructive than oral ones. The danger in the lower schools — especially in large systems handling many children — is that examinations come to be an end instead of a means, and in order to get ready for them pupils are diverted from their studies. So far as examinations in history are mere memory tests, they have little value; but the written tests suggested in §§ 87–89 are helpful, especially the “paper,” or written application of principles to a question up to that time not considered by the pupil.

School examinations may be so contrived as to be of real assistance to historical training. The questions ought to be such as require comparison and the use of facts acquired at different times and in different connections. The old query, “Who went where with how many men?” is not an unfair satire on ordinary questions.

In colleges the written examination has greater importance, because recitations in history are there antiquated; but the examination is commonly less searching than the “quiz,” the “report,” or the “paper.” Some instructors give frequent hour examinations; others depend upon the mid-year and final tests. In all cases examinations must come in somewhere, in order to compel the student to “take account of stock” and to show what he can do with his whole set of acquirements. Here, also, questions must test the judgment rather than the memory; for the judgment cannot act without material, and, if it be found well trained, it will be because the memory has gathered something valuable upon which the judgment stands.

CHAPTER XI

HISTORICAL READING¹

§ 75. Necessity of Reading

CLASSROOM work of every kind depends upon the preparation and energy of the teacher; but reaction by the pupils is only to be had if they know something and think about it, and for history the source of knowledge is chiefly reading. Study of a textbook is necessary (§ 60); but from the youngest classes to the most advanced graduate courses reading is essential.

We are bidden to "beware of the man of one book": reading must be not only abundant, but also varied. Of course much that thus goes into the mind will not be retained; the endless detail of history easily slips away. Yet every book leaves a certain impression, though the source of that impression be forgotten; and from much reading results a residuum of fact and conclusion which lasts a long time, and perhaps a lifetime.

For young pupils there must be some selection indicated, with alternatives. For such pupils there is now a considerable literature of legends and stories suited to very young minds. Early acquaintance with the personal and dramatic side of history tends to make it interesting throughout.

Where large classes use one reference library and there is pressure on the books, lists of selected readings are useful. For detailed courses of lectures, students will find advantageous sets of more elaborate references, arranged by topics in the order of the lectures. Three systems — consecutive reading according to the student's judgment, general readings of selected passages on general subjects, and topical readings on special subjects — will be described in the following sections.

¹ A somewhat fuller discussion of this subject, with specific illustrations on the general principles, and an elaborate set of general readings broken up into about twenty-five subjects, will be found in the Guide, 1st ed. (1896), §§ 54-64.

§ 76. Consecutive Reading

Some young people early acquire the habit of browsing in books and of miscellaneous reading. Such interest, if directed toward history, may lead to a permanent taste for historical material. For advanced students, who wish to get a view of the literature of the subject and to compare diverging views, the best method is to take the books that seem from inspection most promising, and to read one after the other, making such comparisons as suggest themselves, and widening the field of the lectures. Care should be taken to include some contemporary material; for sometimes a chapter of original material freshens the mind as much as a volume of a secondary work, and leaves a more distinct impression.

Even among children it is well to encourage a habit of looking into books and selecting something that attracts for itself; but a few books well read are to them more important than a large amount of material skimmed.

§ 77. Topical Reading ¹

In Parts IV to VI of this work will be found a series of topics covering, in general, the whole field of American history. These may be used in connection with courses of lectures or lessons (§ 9), or in the preparation of written work. The effort is to digest and classify the more valuable part of the immense literature of the subject. The student's notebook should be so arranged as to bring notes on lectures and material from the topical readings together.

This system of topical reading, more than that just described (§ 76), makes the student acquainted with a variety of books, and is especially convenient in leading direct to the sources.

§ 78. Conference System

The principal obstacle to the establishment of a system of collateral reading, in connection with the proper use of a textbook, lies in the difficulty of properly testing such work. Written examinations are hard to apply, unless all the members of a class read the same books, as in the method described in § 88. When a college teacher feels the need of a better acquaintance with his class, the "conference system" may be employed. This method consists in giving out references to books, or parts of books, at the beginning of each month or other convenient unit of time. Sometimes all students are required to read in the designated books on one topic, with an option as to other topics; more often, reading on several topics is required; but there is almost always a considerable choice given as to both topics and books. The amount of reading required is stated at so many hundred pages, — an amount which the teacher may regard as a reasonable requirement in addition to the study of the textbooks, map-making exercises, and work in the classroom.

After the students have had a chance to make a substantial beginning in this reading, appointments for conferences are made at only a few hours' notice. At these conferences each student is alone with the instructor or assistant for fifteen minutes, a period sufficiently long to enable a practiced questioner to assess with some degree of accuracy a student's intelligence, power of application, and diligence. There is also time to help the well-meaning though plodding student, or to give an unpleasant five minutes to the lazy or negligent. The instructor may set a student to a specified task to be performed within certain hours, and in this way, by special drill, train a well-meaning student to overcome lack of application or slovenly habits of thinking or reading. The teacher should keep a careful record of these conferences, the number of which may be apportioned according to the student's needs. The bright, hard-working pupil requires slight assistance, and may be left to work out his own salvation; on the other hand, the young person of dormant mind and no habits of work can be held rigidly to account. The method requires a good deal of the instructor's time, but not more than a properly conducted system of written work demands.

§ 79. How to use Books

Many persons who have read widely have little notion how to go to work to find a book on a given subject, or how to reach a specific point within a book when found. As has been already suggested in the paragraph on the use of libraries (§ 57), the first thing is to learn how to use printed or card catalogues. Some libraries separate the author entries from the subjects; others have but one alphabet, in which appear both authors and topics. The most approved method is the "dictionary catalogue," which breaks the general subject up into small topics, and distributes these in their alphabetical places, with numerous cross references.

In noting the title of a book for which search is to be made, the author's full name, if obtainable, should be set down, then a sufficient extract from the title to identify the book; it is usual to add the place of publication (sometimes the publisher), the edition (if more than one), and the date. These particulars all add to the probability that the right book will be found. Sometimes the necessary particulars are not stated in the catalogue examined, but are obtainable from some other printed catalogue. The title on the outside of the book — "binder's title" — is not taken into account in bibliographical work.

Having secured the book, the next step is to get at its contents. The title page is often so descriptive as to tell at a reading whether anything on the specified topic is to be found within. The preface is, or should be, a guide to the author's purpose and point of view. A good table of contents opens up the work at once; and a single index of persons and subjects, with brief intimations of the particular thing to be found at a particular page, is, like punctuality, "the politeness of kings." If contents and index are both defective, there may be no resource but to turn the leaves in rapid skimming.

In making notes upon books and writing down references, it should be remembered that there is no other proper form of reference than the name of the author, followed by a significant part of the title page title of the book, with the volume, and the page or section, sometimes the chapter. E.g. Jefferson Davis [or J. Davis], Rise and Fall of the Confederate Government [or simply Confederate Government], I, 107-212; A. C. McLaughlin, Lewis Cass, ch. vii. Any briefer labor-saving form will return to plague the user; and general references to back up specific points are more than useless, — they are offensive. A little care taken with the form of reference while the book is in the hands may save time, trouble, and vexation.

If the book is not likely to be seen again, it is well to take full notes once for all, including any quotations that may be needed. If the book can be had at any time, it will often serve the investigator's purpose to make skeleton notes, with references to be filled out later if necessary. Whenever a quotation is made, it should be carefully protected by quotation marks; it should be literal, so far as it goes, in punctuation, spelling, capitalization, and italicizing; every addition of the note taker should be included in brackets; and omissions should be denoted by ellipses. Less careful methods may cause a confusion of original and quoted matter, or may result in misrepresentation.

§ 80. Secondary and Primary Materials

A book on history is likely to be looked on as a repository of sacred wisdom hardly second to the omniscient "teacher says so." The high school and even the grammar school pupil may, however, be made clearly to apprehend the difference between first-hand, second-hand, and third-hand historical work. As soon as books are regularly studied, the child should be made to understand that some of them contain statements made by persons who were alive at the time the things happened and so had opportunities to know what was going on; that other books are written by persons who have carefully studied the original records; and that still others are compiled from the secondary writers. The ordinary learners, whether school children, high school pupils, or college students, must depend chiefly for their knowledge on good, condensed secondary books, particularly textbooks; but there is no reason why they should not all have the clear notion that every such discussion is in considerable part simply a series of general statements based upon actual occurrences, incidents, and personal traits which the writer of the book has found either in other secondary writers or preferably in sources.

§ 81. Use of Sources

To this distinction between materials much attention has been paid, particularly in the modern discussions of historical method.

The Report of the Committee of Ten (§ 11) laid stress on original materials in schools. The New England History Teachers' Association has published a detailed Report on the Use of Historical Sources in Schools (§ 22), with specific references to such collections of sources as schools might be expected to possess; and some of the textbooks which print marginal references insert as the narrative proceeds titles of sources cognate to the text.

The use of sources in the lower schools must necessarily be limited, from considerations of time, expense, and difficulty. There are a few series of source readers, among them one compiled by A. B. Hart, and published in four volumes under the titles, I, Colonial Children; II, Camps and Firesides of the Revolution; III, How our Grandfathers Lived; and IV, Romance of the Civil War (N.Y., 1902-1903). For grammar and high schools there are several source books (§ 48). For high school and older pupils the most convenient sources are collected in the books described above (§ 48).

The point is that it is impossible for the learner to found all or most of his knowledge on sources; even the trained historian, if he could trace the origins of his knowledge, would realize that a good part of it came from other secondary writers. The value of sources in schools is to give life and vitality to the study. The hardest thing in historical teaching is to make young people realize that they are talking about human beings whose hopes, experiences, and degrees of success were very much like those of the present generation. To this end sources are the sharpest and most suggestive material. The record of a New England town meeting, a familiar letter of Thomas Jefferson, an account of Lincoln's Gettysburg speech by one who heard it, makes the reader live in the time about which he is trying to learn something.

Hence the proper use of sources is as collateral reading to enliven detailed and more prosaic textbooks; and as material for oral or written reports. From sources, also, may be drawn the data for the illustrative work suggested in § 66.

CHAPTER XII

LECTURES

§ 82. Talks by Teachers

IN school work the lesson must be directed, enlarged, and enforced by the teacher. Here his superior knowledge and ability to group material, and his power of clear statement may come in to supplement the textbooks. If recitations are to be more than repetition, however (§ 59), the teacher's part must not be a mere "pour in" of additional facts. To the old difficulty that teachers talked too little to their pupils in history may succeed an over amount of talk, in which the whole matter is arranged and subdivided so that the pupil has nothing to do but to open his mouth and swallow the lumps of wisdom. Talk must not take the place of quick, sharp question and answer, or of the thought-provoking inquiry as to the causes and effects of the events passing under review.

The teacher may often describe places or scenes to which there is allusion in the text, may bring in parallels from other fields of history, may add illustrations and incidents to give life to the story and cause it to be remembered. He should not often take up the whole time with information or comment. The object of the teacher is always to teach pupils to think about what they read or hear, rather than to force upon them the passive reception of historical matter. In general, lecture methods are out of place in lower grades, and are rarely admissible in secondary schools. The "talk" should be occasional, pointed, and a clear addition to other available material.

§ 83. Formal Lectures

In college work the lecture has an important place, though always in connection with reading and written work. In many historical fields the material is so little organized that a set of carefully prepared lectures may be the only means of clearing up the subject. In such cases the reading is intended to fill out the details, and to complete the view of important phases. A good general book serves to enforce the connection of the parts of the subject.

Where there is already a body of available literature on a subject, the lecturer hesitates to repeat the outline facts; he likes to throw upon his hearers the responsibility of reading the narrative for themselves. The lecture then serves to bring out principles, to show the relation between the parts of the subject, to indicate causes and effects, and to elucidate motives. So far as a lecture is thrown into a connected narrative form, it should illustrate the course of the history and thus correlate the different books.

In lectures, also, it is possible to use more freedom than in printed work,—to bring in the little incidents which are typical of character or manners, to accentuate evidence on a disputed point. Short, vigorous quotations add life and point to a lecture; but long ones should be avoided, as they destroy interest.

Care should be taken not to talk over the heads of students, and also not to talk to them as children, unacquainted with the ordinary course of American history. Too much pains cannot be taken to bring out the essential things in a period, and to suggest the underlying conditions of the life of the people, which are the basis of history.

§ 84. Student's Note Taking in Lectures

Lectures of value are always so far different from the books on the same subject that the student needs to take notes. The practice trains the mind to grasp principles and to condense them into brief statement. A good notebook cements the parts of the course together, and may be useful to the student in later study or in his own teaching. The notebook should further be so conducted as to leave space for the entry of brief abstracts from the reading. The following suggestions may prove helpful to students and to teachers who wish to put their material together in a permanent and convenient form:

1. Have a regular SYSTEM.
2. If you have worked out a system of YOUR OWN which satisfies you, do not change it.
3. SHORTHAND is not a great convenience, unless the notes are afterwards put into a form which may be read by any one.
4. A system of recognizable ABBREVIATIONS is desirable.
5. Take notes ALL THE TIME during the lecture.
6. A word-for-word reproduction of what you hear is much less valuable to you than your OWN CONDENSED FORM, embodying the lecturer's ideas.
7. Distinguish in your own mind the HEADS OF THE LECTURE as it proceeds, and paragraph your notes accordingly.
8. Aim to set down the SUBSTANCE OF GENERAL STATEMENTS in your own words, rather than to note a part of each sentence.
9. Practice getting the EXACT WORDS of significant phrases or quotations.
10. If you miss something important, ASK TO HAVE IT REPEATED.
11. If you lose a lecture, FILL UP THE BLANK immediately from the notebook of a fellow student.
12. After each lecture, go over your notes and clearly INDICATE THE HEADS: (a) by putting catchwords in the margin; or (b) by underlining words.
13. Once a week REVIEW the notes taken since the previous review.
14. Make out a brief TABLE OF CONTENTS, as you go along, referring to pages of your notebook.

A good set of notes should thus be a sort of elaborated syllabus of the course; and, if it include abstracts and quotations from collateral books, it will serve always to recall to the student's mind what he has once heard, read, and pondered. But no self-respecting instructor allows the notes of his lectures alone to be sufficient preparation for examinations, or to become in any way the sole test of diligence and knowledge. No instructor can afford to let his own words go out as the only or final utterance on a question; comparison of views and a filling out of details must be exacted by the required reading and written work (§§ 87-95).

§ 85. Investigator's Note Taking

Every advanced student should devise for himself a system of note taking; and, having once devised a satisfactory method, he should adhere to it at all hazards. The one thing that will seriously impair the usefulness of any system, how good soever it may be in other respects, is the use of a notebook with fixed leaves. Separate sheets, cards, or pieces of paper are indispensable; and only one topic should be noted on one piece of paper. The main desiderata of a good system of note taking are, that it should be (1) self-indexing, (2) portable, (3) always available: doubtless no system fills all these requirements. The following are three methods known to be employed by well-known and successful students of American history:

I. 1. Use a notebook, or, better, loose sheets of note paper of uniform size ruled in three vertical columns: a narrow one next to the outer edge; about one half of the width in a middle column; about one third in an inner column. Let there be a broad horizontal line an inch or more from the top. The sheets to be $10\frac{1}{2} \times 8$ inches.

2. Enter your notes in the middle column; dates and headings (if desired) in the outer column.

3. Enter abstracts, quotations from later readings, queries, and comments in the inner column, each opposite the place in the main notes which it illustrates.

4. Across the top of the page write a running heading in two, three, or four members, summarizing the matter on the page: e.g. "Methods — Lectures — Note Taking"; or "France — Diplomacy — X. Y. Z."

5. Begin to write on the right side of the open book or sheets of paper, and begin each distinct general head on a new leaf or half sheet.

6. Each leaf, being thus complete in itself, may at any time be detached and used in another connection; or other leaves may be inserted without disturbing the logical connection.

7. Keep kindred half sheets together in a whole sheet on the outside of which is docketed the general subject.

8. Such sets of material may be combined in a larger set in a cover of different color, which may be docketed with the combined subject.

9. Arrange and rearrange your material thus classified, in analytic form, but never index it.

II. 1. Use loose sheets of paper $3\frac{1}{2} \times 4\frac{1}{2}$ inches.

2. Write on only one side of each sheet.

3. Do not rewrite notes once taken.

4. Attach abstracts or quotations from your later reading to your first piece of paper on that topic with one of the many convenient fasteners made for the purpose, or with a common pin.

5. Across the top of the first page write a running heading.

6. Begin to write near the upper left-hand corner of the sheet.

7. Each leaf or collection of leaves, being thus complete in itself, may at any time be taken from its original place and used in another connection; or other leaves may be introduced without disturbing the arrangement.

These pieces of paper and collections of sheets can either be stood on their lower edges in boxes, or be held together by rubber bands. The notes on a large number of books and on many topics occupy little space, and are easily arranged and rearranged.

III. 1. Take the first piece of paper that comes to hand.

2. Make such notes on it as one desires.

3. Have some recognized mode of arrangement, — chronologically by countries or divisions of countries; or follow the arrangement of some familiar and well-indexed book, which will thus serve as a key.

4. Arrange your notes once a week, according to this system, in large paper envelopes or portfolios and stand them in boxes.

This method requires no special kind of paper, indexes itself, is not cumbersome, and is cheap. Its efficiency depends, however, on the skill with which the classification is made and the persistency with which it is adhered to. Whenever material can be arranged chronologically by topics, this system has been found to work well. It may be added that two of the largest works on American history have been prepared on this scheme.

§ 86. Giving out References .

To aid the student in reading, it is a common and useful practice during the lecture to give out references, more or less specific, to the best literature on the topic under discussion. Some lecturers mention books in the course of the lecture; others put the references on the blackboard; others prepare them in multiplying process and distribute them; others arrange them in print, and require the students to provide themselves with sets; others use some published topical outline. There is something to be said for and against each of these systems. On the one hand, too rigid an adherence to a printed outline interferes with a lecturer's proper relations and influence with his class; on the other hand, the copying of long lists of books from the lecturer or the blackboard sacrifices valuable time.

A good method is for the students to have at their desks copies of a printed set of references to which the lecturer may refer when he pleases, — lists giving biographical and other details which show how far an author had had exceptional opportunities to know the truth. Information of this kind adds life to a list of books, and often arouses attention which might otherwise remain dormant. The lecturer should especially point out such authors as disagree with his position, and should encourage the reading of books written from a point of view other than his own.

In whatever way the system is carried out, the references should be unmistakable, — that is, author and title should be so clearly indicated that no confusion can arise. If part of the references are specific, to volume and pages, much more reading will be done by students. The indispensable habit of searching among books for a point of view to one's mind, the useful dipping into books, the acquaintance with many authors, — these advantages may be gained from the various forms of written work which will now be described.

CHAPTER XIII

WRITTEN WORK ¹

§ 87. Written Reviews

NEITHER the acquirement of facts nor the discussion of their relations is all that is required in teaching history: there must be some reaction by the pupils' minds, and written work has the advantage of training both the historical and the literary sense. The simplest form of such work is to call for a written review, without previous announcement. Each pupil is thus tested, and has the opportunity to think over what he has studied. A list of very short questions will bring out the knowledge of detail; but a better system is to set two or three general questions, from which the child may choose, and to expect him in his answer to show that he can use intelligently what has gone before.

§ 88. Brief Written Recitations

In addition to examinations (see § 74), it is desirable to devise some regular written exercise which will lay more stress on judgment and connection of events and less on detached facts, and which will not call for any other preparation than that of regular daily work. Such exercises should preclude cram, and fit into the ordinary class hours, whether recitations or lectures. Nothing better has been devised than the system of requiring brief written answers to one or two questions especially chosen to test the judgment.

Suitable questions ought to be on some novel phase of a general subject with which the pupil is familiar. In many cases a child's reasoning will be imperfect and his results crude; but one cannot begin too early to expect some thought and comparison. Children, who form judgments about the people among whom they live, may easily be taught that history is a record of people who lived and thought very much as we do now. In high schools the questions may take a broader range, adapted to the age of the pupils.

§ 89. Classroom Papers ¹

The system of requiring written answers to questions in class is especially applicable to college classes. In some such classes there is a regular weekly "paper" on some subject in constitutional practice which has been brought out in the lectures and reading. With large classes it is desirable to give out a special reading list in advance, such as may be found among the topics in Parts IV-VI. Here is an example of a set of such questions actually used by a class after a study of the arguments of Hamilton and Jefferson upon the First National Bank of 1791:

IMPLIED POWERS

1. May Congress constitutionally charter a life insurance company?
2. May Congress constitutionally vote money for aid to sufferers from forest fires?
3. May Congress constitutionally grant money in support of state schools?
4. May Congress constitutionally vote pensions to former government clerks?

§ 90. Topical System

Perhaps the most fruitful method for pupils of the grammar school age and above is the "topical," — the assignment of very limited subjects on which pupils are to prepare themselves with special care, using a variety of material. The advantages of such a system are obvious: it breaks up servile adherence to the limited text of a single book; it trains in the use of books, and in the selection of pertinent facts out of a mass of material; it gives practice in bibliographical work, by the search for books and articles which bear on the subject in hand; it leads to the comparison of authors, the explanation of discrepancies, the weighing of authorities; it adds life and interest to the class work.

The methods of topical work are described in many places. It requires a library, however small; it needs careful supervision from the teacher; pupils must be warned against the mere copying of extracts or the stringing together of paraphrases, and be taught to analyze their subjects for themselves and to arrange their results in systematic form. It is well to assign separate subjects for each pupil; this prevents collusion, and gives each a sense of the importance of his study. Every piece of work ought to include some reference to sources, if only to a volume of extracts (see § 81). The system is in essence like laboratory methods in botany and physics, and, like such methods, needs to be accompanied by systematic teaching.

§ 91. Subjects for Topics

The success of any scheme of topical study is dependent on a judicious choice of subjects: they must not be too long; they must require substantial work; they must be assigned with due reference to the available material; they must be capable of solution, for it discourages a pupil to find nothing on his subject, however much training he may get from his search.

The first and simplest kind of topical work, where there is a good library, is the bibliographical, — the collection of a body of references on some subject. This gives invaluable training in the use of indexes, tables of contents, library catalogues, of special indexes to periodicals or classes of literature, of cyclopedias, biographical dictionaries, and the like aids. It also fixes the habit of selecting out of a book the small portion which really bears on the subject in hand. The best subjects for such work are biographies of great men; for catalogues usually take more account of names than of matters. Lists of notable men are numerous. In A. B. Hart, Manual (1908) is a select alphabetical list (§ 236), and a list classified by states (§ 237). Some of the textbooks contain similar lists.

Another excellent group of subjects is the geographical, — the territorial history of a place, or a map of a colony or region or state, or group of colonies or states, at any given period. Political data may also be worked out in graphic maps: such would be the distribution of votes on some question in Congress, the distribution of electoral votes, the states that have or have not Australian ballot laws, etc.

Very useful subjects, especially in the lower grades, are little biographies of public men. Such work may be done with a very few books, if no more are available, and may often have a romantic human interest.

The more complete form of topical work in schools will usually be the study of episodes in history. Here the pupil must always be held down to a search for the truth by comparing conflicting accounts; and at the same time he must learn to state his results clearly, methodically, and so as to bring out the important points.

For more advanced students, a variety of topical subjects may be found, — as constitutional discussions, accounts of assemblages, or phases of social institutions, such as the Puritan Church, or the early colleges, or slavery in a colony or a state. The statistics of finance, commerce, and population may be worked out in tables. Biography may be studied by tracing the attitude of some public man on a great question throughout his life. A long list of topics, principally on constitutional, diplomatic, and governmental subjects, will be found in A. B. Hart, Manual (1908), §§ 231-299.

Throughout, the wise teacher will try to connect the topics with what may be presumed to interest a particular pupil, — his local history, his family, or his birthplace.

§ 92. Composition in Historical Subjects

Written work is not only a training in history: it may be so used as to build up a good English style. Teachers are often hard put to it to find suitable subjects for compositions on fresh topics, in fields where there is material available for something more than a rude statement of fleeting ideas. From many of the groups of subjects suggested for topical work (§ 91) may be chosen excellent composition subjects; and a requirement that the returns shall be made in good English, and shall be criticized for the style, will make the same paper serve the double purpose of historical training and training in English.

In setting questions, care should always be taken not to put them too high for children to reach, always to direct them to some point, and to be satisfied with moderate evidence of a power to rearrange the results and to state them in an original form. In many schools the teacher of history is also the teacher of composition, and can make the two subjects run parallel.

§ 93. Special Report System

Some account of topical work, drawn from experience, may be useful to other teachers. So far as possible, each pupil or student should have a separate individual topic, to avoid copying and to give point to the work. A vital lesson which may best be taught in topical work is that specific references must accompany every important statement, — author, brief title (from inspection of the title-page), volume, and page or section.

The material for these "reports" should be arranged in a select library, containing secondary books and treatises, sets of colonial records, and a set of United States documents, statutes, Supreme Court decisions, Congressional records, and the like. Students are expected to work for themselves. The attempt is made to connect each man's subject with his own family or local history and interests.

Having finished a series of such reports, students are expected to be at any time ready to find materials on any subject in United States history, to use the government publications, to state results clearly and methodically, and to apply constitutional principles to new problems.

These specific methods apply to advanced students; but they are of a kind suitable for secondary and lower schools. Exactness in stating the subject; care in supervising; aid where the pupil needs it; exhaustion of the material available; care; accuracy; neat form in arranging the results; punctuality in handing in the work, — these are the essentials of such work anywhere, and are attainable in all grades.

§ 94. Essay or Thesis System

In this system, which is used in several courses in history at Harvard University, the attempt is made to combine training in historical methods of investigation with practice in writing English. Several essays are required from each student. At first sight it might seem to be a matter of considerable difficulty to find suitable subjects for investigation for one hundred and fifty or two hundred students. As a matter of fact, the task is lightened by using the answers of the students to written inquiries as a basis of assignment.

The essays are written under the immediate supervision of an assistant, who has stated hours for conference in the library. For essay purposes the class is divided into sections of about twenty students each. The subjects for one section are given out at one time, and the work of all the students in any one section is due at dates specified in advance, as follows: references, one week from the day the subject is given out; notes, two weeks later; and the essay in its final form, one week after the notes are approved, or about four weeks from the day on which the subjects are assigned. The references are to be found by going to a section in Parts IV-VI, in this Guide, and consulting the bibliographies mentioned in the section referred to. The student is expected to look over the books and to tell the assistant which works he intends to use. The assistant endeavors to impress on him the necessity of consulting the original source in each case. The books mentioned under "General" in the section referred to usually contain enough information to enable one to understand the relations of his topic. Often, however, it is necessary to consult the references under "Special"; and sometimes the assistant or the instructor is obliged to explain what is desired, and not infrequently to change the subject by limiting the inquiry to some specific part of the general topic assigned; or, on the other hand, to enlarge its scope on account of lack of materials.

These preliminaries being arranged to the satisfaction of the assistant and the student, the authorities are next examined, extracts, abstracts, and digests prepared, and submitted to the assistant for his approval. He frequently suggests other sources to be looked into, and sometimes requires the work to be done anew in whole or in part. The students receive credit for this work of seeking and note taking, the assistant bearing in mind how much aid has been given to the student. The essay is now written in the student's own words, and is based entirely on the notes, which form an appendix, and are cited in footnotes to the essay to justify every important statement made. These processes are precisely those on which every historical work must be built. The writing of these essays sharpens the faculties, arouses the student's interest, cultivates his judgment, and shows him how history is written.

§ 95. Monographs

The highest and most difficult kind of written work for students in history is the preparation of monographs, — complete studies of some subject, with the use of all the material in print which bears upon it, and of manuscripts if necessary. This is work to be done only in seminary courses, under the careful guidance of instructors who are specialists in their fields.

Two kinds of subjects are usual in such work, — an extensive study of some brief episode, or a tracing of some line of investigation through a long period of history. The former would resemble a chapter out of a large book, the latter cuts a cross-section through a long succession of events; hence the second type is probably the most helpful to a person who is still a student.

The first step in either case is to clear the ground by making a bibliography of the subject, including all sources and all valuable secondary authorities; the periodical indexes should also be examined for contributions to or discussions on the subject. At the same time some general account, or accounts, should be read, in order to give some idea of the proportions and relations of the parts of the subject.

Next comes the collection of material, a long and laborious process. Notes should be taken on loose sheets, on only one side, and with exact references as one goes along (see § 85). At this stage is the opportunity to compare, weigh, and offset evidence.

Later on, the work must be put into careful written form; well-prepared notes, arranged by topics, will now reward the investigator. The subject must be carefully subdivided and analyzed; material must fall into its proper place, and must be properly subordinated. Exact references to precise footnotes, containing extracts from rare material, must appear at every step. It is an excellent practice to enrich the text as it is written with quotations from sources, or with occasional characteristic passages out of secondary authorities.

It is well to append the text of rare and important documents, exactly transcribed, and to throw into tabular or other form such facts as cannot easily appear in the body of the work. If the work is printed, an index is an indispensable part of it.

PART IV. COLONIAL HISTORY AND THE REVOLUTION, 1492-1783

CHAPTER XIV

DISCOVERY AND LATIN COLONIZATION, 1492-1783

§ 96. Physiography of North America

Summary. — Physical conformation of North America: characteristics of the Atlantic Slope, of the Great Valleys, of the Pacific Slope; soils, mineral deposits, climate, rainfall; comparison with European lands, especially as to climate and rainfall. — Products: tobacco, Indian corn, cotton, potatoes, wheat, indigo, rice, lumber and naval stores, coal, iron, precious metals, cattle, sheep, hides and furs, etc. — Effects of this environment on men of European origin.

General. — F. J. Turner, in American Journal of Sociology, XIII, 661-675, with comment by F. W. Blackmar and others, ibid., 811-819; N. S. Shaler, in Winsor, America, IV, pp. i-xxx, especially xx-xxx; B. A. Hinsdale, Old Northwest, 1-5; L. Farrand, Basis of American History, 1-69; A. P. Brigham, Geographic Influences in American History; Ellen C. Semple, American History and its Geographical Conditions.

Special. — N. S. Shaler, Nature and Man in America, and United States; J. D. Whitney, United States; F. Ratzel, Vereinigten Staaten; Elisée Reclus, The Earth and its Inhabitants, North America, III; Jedidiah Morse, American Universal Geography, I; B. A. Gould, Investigations in the Military and Anthropological Statistics of American Soldiers; J. W. Powell, Physiographic Regions of the United States (National Geographic Monographs, I, No. 3); C. R. Van Hise, Conservation of National Resources, 208-211, 268-277.

Sources and Bibliography. — See § 31.

§ 97. Geography of North America, 1492-1775

Summary. — Physiography (see § 96). — Claims of European powers (§§ 101, 105, 106, 108, 112, 147, 157). — Partitions in 1493
(236)

(§ 101) and 1632 (§ 108). — Exclusion of the Dutch and the Swedes (§§ 122, 123). — Disputes with the Spaniards. — Exclusion of the French (§§ 147, 148). — Unoccupied territory. — Subdivisions of the English possessions, and intercolonial boundary controversies (§§ 115, 118, 120, 121, 125, 131-133, 137, 138, 140, 146, 149). — Partitions in 1763 (§§ 110, 148, 149) and 1783 (§ 157). — 1776-1783, Claims of the states and cessions (§§ 158, 167). — 1730-1775, Westward movement (§ 162).

General. — The standard histories: Hildreth, United States, I, II; Bancroft, United States (last revision); A. B. Hart, The American Nation, I-VIII; etc.

Special. — Winsor, in his America, also his Columbus, Cartier, and Mississippi Basin (all these works are rich in cartography; they are analyzed in the sections noted above); C. R. Beazley, The Dawn of Modern Geography (reproduces earliest maps); Hinsdale, Old Northwest, chs. ii-viii; Joseph Blunt, Historical Sketch of the Confederacy, chs. i, ii; John Fiske, Discovery of America; C. P. Lucas, Historical Geography of the British Colonies, II, Introduction; Hinsdale, The Right of Discovery, in Ohio Historical and Archæological Society, Quarterly, II, 349-379.

Sources. — The collections of treaties, statutes, decisions, etc., are noted in §§ 34, 43, 44. Some of the more important documents may be found as follows:

TREATIES: Extracts of portions of the more important treaties dealing with America are printed in William MacDonald's Select Charters. — St. Germain, 1632: Recueil des Traitez de Paix (Amsterdam, 1700), III, 328. — Neutrality, 1686: Channing, United States, II, 153. — Ryswick, 1697: Memorials of the English and French Commissaries concerning the Limits of Nova Scotia, or Acadia; Dumont, Corps Diplomatique, VII, 399; G. CHARTERS: Charters and Constitutions; H. W. Preston, Documents Illustrative of American History; Samuel Lucas, Charters of the Old English Colonies in America (London, 1850); Old South Leaflets. Most of the important portions of the charters are in MacDonald's Select Charters; the geographical portions are in American History Leaflets, No. 15. The Maryland charter, in the Latin original, is in Charters and Constitutions; English translations are in Bacon's Laws of Maryland, and in Scharf's Maryland.

Maps: Epochs of American History, The Colonies, Nos. 1-4; Formation of the Union, Nos. 2, 3 (the same maps are in Epoch Maps, Nos. 1-6); Hart, The American Nation, I-VIII (the maps are in part by D. M. Matteson); G. P. Fisher, Colonial Era; W. M. Sloane, French War and Revolution; H. C. Lodge, English Colonies; E. Channing, Students' History of the United States.

MAPS; FACSIMILES: Besides the facsimiles given by Winsor in his America, Mississippi Basin, and other works, and those contained in the collections of facsimiles and sketches noted below, there are several photographic reproductions of important maps on the scale of the originals. There are also numerous facsimiles illustrative of particular points scattered through the descriptive works. Some of the more important of the collections are mentioned in the following list; they relate for the most part to the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries. For reproductions of later maps Winsor's Mississippi Basin is the principal storehouse. The titles of single maps and important collections illustrating particular points will be found in the later sections of this Guide, especially §§ 100-103, 106, 108, 109, 111, 147, etc.

MAPS; ORIGINALS: The collection in the Harvard University Library is the best in America so far as the cartography of the country as a whole is concerned. The collection in the library of the Wisconsin Historical Society is rich in maps of the interior and of the earlier history of the West.

Among the separate maps in the former collection may be mentioned: Sanson, 1656; Delisle, 1689; Coronelli, 1689; Delisle, 1700, 1703, and 1718; Jaillot, 1719; Moll, 1715, 1720; Map drawn for the Compagnie François Occident, 1701–1720; D'Anville, 1746, 1755; Bowen, 1747; Evans, 1749; Huske, 1755; Kitchin, 1755 (two copies of this map giving different boundaries); Jeffrey's D'Anville, 1755; de Rouge, 1755; Jeffrey's, 1755; Mitchell, 1755; Covens et Mortier, 1757; Evans, 1758–1771; Palairet, 1759; Jeffrey's, 1762 (?); Kitchin, 1763; Bowen, 1763; Quebec, 1763, after English and French surveys; Bell, 1772; Pownall, 1776; Pownall's D'Anville, 1777; Faden, 1777; Brion de la Tour, 1778, 1779; Maps in Fitzmaurice's Life of Shelburne, 3, 170, 294; Delisle, 1782; Wallis, 1783; Faden, 1783; Andrews, 1783; Bowles, 1783; Lothe, 1784; Janvier, 1784.

Many of the most important of the early maps are contained in the several editions of Ptolemy's Geography, in De Laet's Nieuwe Wereldt, in Montanus's Nieuwe Weereld, and in the accounts of the voyages of the Spanish, French, and English seamen, and of the early explorers, as Captain John Smith (see §§ 102–115).

Bibliography. — See §§ 30–34. Winsor's works are in great measure a bibliography of the subject. See also his Kohl Collection of Early Maps (Harvard University Library, Bibliographical Contributions, No. 19), and his Bibliography of Ptolemy's Geography (ibid., No. 18); and see G. Marcel, Catalogue des Documents Géographiques, exposés à la Section des Cartes et Plans de la Bibliothèque Nationale (Paris, 1892).

§ 98. Archæology

Summary. — Evidences of the antiquity of man in North America: implements and bones found in the Trenton gravel; other such deposits; other remains of prehistoric man, — the "Lansing man" of Kansas, the Potter Creek caves in California, etc. — Credibility of these evidences. — Paleolithic man, as he is pictured by the archæologists. — Attempts made to connect prehistoric man with the Red Men of North America at the time of the Columbian discovery; Neolithic man, the skrellings, etc.

General. — Fiske, Discovery of America, I, 1–19; H. W. Haynes, in Winsor, America, I, ch. vi; G. F. Wright, The Ice Age; J. D. Baldwin, Ancient America; Nadaillac, Prehistoric America.

W. Fewkes; C. B. Moore's papers in Journal of the Academy of Natural Sciences of Philadelphia (these relate especially to the southeast; most of them are reprinted separately); F. W. Putnam, Archæological and Ethnological Collections (Wheeler's Survey, Final Reports, VII). The American Anthropologist also contains a large number of papers on archæological subjects.

Bibliography. — Winsor, in his America, I, 369–444, and the footnotes to Haynes's chapter; P. B. Watson, Pre-Columbian Bibliography; Far- rand, Basis of American History, 276.

§ 99. The Aborigines

Summary. — The opposing theories of Prescott and others who rely on the “early American chroniclers,” and of Lewis H. Morgan and his followers. — The leading points in the latter theory. — Indian ideas as to landholding, inheritance, and communism. — Theories as to the origin of the red race of America. — Social condition of the Indians on the Atlantic seaboard of North America in 1500–1600. — Effects on the Indians of the coming of the Europeans. — Difference in the treatment of the Indian problem by the Spanish, French, and English colonists. — Reaction of these several Indian policies on the colonists of the respective nations.

General. — Farrand, Basis of American History (among the maps is an excellent one showing the distribution of the American Indians by linguistic stocks about 1500; also in Bureau of Ethnology, 7th Report, 1885–1886); Fiske, Discovery of America, I, 21–147.

Special. — F. W. Hodge, editor, Handbook of American Indians North of Mexico (Bureau of Ethnology, Bulletin, No. 30; also House Docs., 59 Cong. 1 sess. These writers frequently refer to the earlier English writers on the theory of government, especially to John Locke, Two Treatises on Civil Government, Book II; Richard Hooker, Laws of Ecclesiastical Polity, Books I, VI; Algernon Sidney, Discourses on Government; James Harrington, The Commonwealth of Oceana; Blackstone, Commentaries; Coke, Institutes. See also Hobbes, Philosophical Rudiments concerning Government and Society, and The Leviathan; Machiavelli, Discourses on the First Decade of Livy; Filmer, Patriarcha; King James, Works; the "Agreement of the People," the "Instrument of Government," and the "Petition and Advice," in S. R. Gardiner, Documents of the Puritan Revolution, and in Old South Leaflets. A more radical form of the "Agreement of the People" is in Borgeaud, Democracy, and Gardiner, Great Civil War, III, Appendix. Chapter ix of the latter volume contains a detailed narrative of the formation of the Agreement, and a comparison of some of its leading features with American constitutions.

The French work which produced most influence on the formation of opinion at this early period (1760-1776) is Montesquieu's Esprit des Loix (numerous translations under the title Spirit of Laws, especially that by Nugent).

The Stamp Act (5 George III, ch. xii) is in many places, among others in American History Leaflets, No. 21, and in MacDonald's Select Charters, 281. The copy in Lossing's Field-Book of the Revolution, II, 672, is imperfect.

§ 151. Active Resistance, 1767-1774

Summary. — 1767, The Chatham-Grafton ministry. — The Townshend Acts: (1) laying duties on certain imported commodities, (2) reorganizing the colonial customs service, (3) providing for the quartering of troops, (4) instituting courts of admiralty. — 1768, Seizure of the sloop Liberty. — 1769, Virginia Resolves. — 1770, "Boston Massacre." — 1771, Partial repeal of the act levying customs duties. — 1772, Burning of the Gaspee. — Commission of Inquiry. — 1773, Virginia Resolves. — 1773, Destruction of the tea at Boston. — 1774, Four acts of Parliament: (1) Boston Port Act, (2) Massachusetts Government Act, (3) Impartial Administration of Justice Act, (4) Quebec Act. — 1774, First Continental Congress. — The American Association, its importance from a constitutional point of view.

General. — Lecky, England, ch. xii; Mellen Chamberlain, in Winsor, America, VI, ch. i; Channing, United States, 1765-1865, ch. ii; Hildreth, United States, II, 537-579; III, 25-56; Kingsford, Canada, V; Howard, Preliminaries of the Revolution, chs. x-xvii.

Special. — Frothingham, Rise of the Republic, chs. vi-viii; Van Tyne, American Revolution, 17-24; Trevelyan, American Revolution, Part I, chs. ii-vii; Mahon, England, chs. xlvi-l (omitting portions dealing with English politics); Massey, England; Adolphus, England; Barry, Massachusetts; Hutchinson, Massachusetts.

The history of this time must be studied in the biographies and writings of the leading men (see §§ 37, 46-48). In the following paragraphs the most important of these works for the student of this period are brought together:

John Adams: Life and Works (10 vols.), edited by C. F. Adams (the Life by the editor forms Vol. I; the Diary and Autobiography are in Vols. II, III). Biography by J. T. Morse, Jr., in American Statesmen series. See also Familiar Letters of John Adams and his Wife during the Revolution and Letters of Mrs. Adams, both edited by C. F. Adams.

Samuel Adams: Writings (4 vols.), edited by H. A. Cushing; Life and Public Services (3 vols.), by W. V. Wells. Biography by J. K. Hosmer, in American Statesmen series.

John Dickinson: Political Writings, edited by P. L. Ford; Life and Times, by J. A. Stillé.

Benjamin Franklin: Works (10 vols.), edited by Jared Sparks; also (10 vols.) by John Bigelow, and (10 vols.) by A. H. Smyth; Life and Writings (6 vols., arranged topically), edited by W. T. Franklin, — a very useful edition for the student; Life of Benjamin Franklin written by himself (3 vols.), edited by John Bigelow. Biography by P. L. Ford (The Many-Sided Franklin); and by J. T. Morse, Jr., in American Statesmen series.

Alexander Hamilton: Works (7 vols.), edited by J. C. Hamilton, and (9 vols.) by H. C. Lodge. Biography by J. T. Morse, Jr. (2 vols.); and by H. C. Lodge in American Statesmen series.

Patrick Henry: Life and Speeches (3 vols.), by W. W. Henry. See also biographies by William Wirt and M. C. Tyler, the latter in American Statesmen series.

Stephen Hopkins: Life (2 parts), by W. E. Foster, forming No. 19 of Rhode Island Historical Tracts.

John Jay: Biographies by William Jay (2 vols.) and George Pellew, the latter in American Statesmen series.

Thomas Jefferson: Writings (9 vols.), edited by H. A. Washington, and (10 vols.) by P. L. Ford (Vols. I–III cover the Revolutionary period). Biographies by Randall (3 vols.), Tucker (2 vols.), Parton, and J. T. Morse, the last in American Statesmen series.

R. H. Lee, Letters (2 vols.), edited by J. C. Ballagh. Biography by R. H. Lee, Jr. (2 vols. in one).

George Mason: Life (2 vols.), by K. M. Rowland.

James Otis: Life, by William Tudor.

Timothy Pickering: Life (4 vols.), by O. Pickering and C. W. Upham.

Josiah Quincy, Jr.: Life, by Josiah Quincy.

George Washington: Writings (12 vols.), edited by Jared Sparks and (14 vols.) by W. C. Ford; Correspondence of the Revolution, being Letters to Washington (4 vols.), edited by Sparks. Biographies by John Marshall (5 vols.), Irving (5 vols.), Sparks (forming the first volume of his edition of the Writings), Lodge, in American Statesmen series (2 vols.), and W. C. Ford (2 vols., exceedingly valuable).

Biographies of less prominent persons are in Sparks, American Biography; John Sanderson, Signers of the Declaration of Independence; Elizabeth F. Ellet, Women of the American Revolution; C. C. Jones, Jr., Biographical Sketches of the Delegates of Georgia to the Continental Congress; Thomas Wyatt, Memoirs of the Generals, Commodores . . . during the Wars of the Revolution and of 1812. The Southern Literary Messenger contains many collections of letters and other material on this period.

For critical estimates of some of the leading men, see Theodore Parker, Historic Americans. Mason L. Weems's biographies of Washington and Franklin are interesting as showing the origin of many of the stories connected with these men.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

AMERICAN HISTORY

By DAVID SAVILLE MUZZEY
Barnard College, Columbia University, New York

12mo, cloth, 662 pages, illustrated, $1.50

THE object of this book is to present a lively and continuous narrative of the political development of our country, by a clear statement of the social and economic problems which have determined that development. These problems are treated topically, and the temptation merely to mention or allude to a vast number of facts not vitally connected with them has been resolutely resisted. Details such as the circumstances attending each colonial plantation, the tactics and casualties of military campaigns, the careers of men of slight influence in high office, have been excluded in order that the topics of first-rate importance in our history might receive a clear and ample treatment.

Special features of the book are its vivid literary style, its development of each topic regardless of such artificial chronological categories as presidential administrations, its full discussion of the federal power in connection with the Constitution, its emphasis on the westward-moving frontier as the most constant and potent force in our history, and its recognition of the influence of economic factors on our sectional rivalries and political theories. Over one third of the text is devoted to the political and economic history of the United States since the Civil War. The book is designed especially for the upper grades of the high school.

SELECTIONS FROM THE ECONOMIC HISTORY OF THE UNITED STATES, 1765-1860

With Introductory Essays

By GUY STEVENS CALLENDER, Professor of Political Economy in the Sheffield Scientific School, Yale University

8vo, cloth, xviii + 819 pages, $2.75

SUCH a compilation as is here presented will be greatly appreciated by teachers, since the material which it includes is at present scattered through a vast number of volumes and is therefore utterly unavailable to most students.

The book is intended to be an account of important economic affairs, by persons best qualified to understand them. It may be used in connection with either a course of lectures, or a text-book which will give the general outline of the subject. These, and the brief essays at the beginning of each chapter, together with the headings under which the extracts are arranged, will make clear to the student their significance and bearing. The book will be of use also in those general courses in American history in which it is common to give considerable attention to the economic and social, as well as to the political, side of our national development. Indeed, the relation of politics and economics has always been so close in America that political historians cannot avoid the consideration of economic affairs.

The selections provide a description and explanation of the economic life of the American people at all stages of their development, discuss such problems as they have had to face, and show the relation of their economic life to their politics on the one hand and to their social evolution on the other.

A SHORT HISTORY OF ENGLAND

By EDWARD P. CHEYNEY
Professor of European History in the University of Pennsylvania
12mo, cloth, xvi + 695 pages, with maps and illustrations, $1.40

THIS short history of England is about midway in length between the shorter school histories and the longer works which are of value chiefly to advanced students or as books of reference. It is admirably adapted for use in colleges and in high schools that offer a rather complete course in English history.

The early period is treated in some detail in the belief that it will be comparatively easy to make clear the later story of the events in the national life, if the foundation is well laid in a knowledge of what kind of country England is, who the English people were, and what were their fundamental customs in language, government, religion, and economic organization.

A BOOK OF READINGS IN ENGLISH HISTORY

By EDWARD P. CHEYNEY
Professor of European History in the University of Pennsylvania
12mo, cloth, 781 pages, $1.80

THESE readings are intended to accompany the compiler's "Short History of England" for further study and illustration of the subject. It corresponds chapter by chapter, and in most cases subject by subject, to that textbook, and is of about the same length.

A new and careful search has been made through a great part of the source material of English history for that which is most truly illustrative, typical, and interesting. Generally speaking, contemporary narratives, extracts from diaries, letters, anecdotes, and similar personal records have been chosen rather than statutes, proclamations, and such official documents.

AN OUTLINE OF ENGLISH HISTORY

By NORMAN MACLAREN TRENHOLME
Professor of History and of the Teaching of History in the University of Missouri
12mo, cloth, xii + 122 pages, 50 cents

A TOPICAL outline arranged, after the plan of the author's well-known "Syllabus for the History of Western Europe," to accompany Cheyney's "Short History of England."
