of the nervous, vascular, respiratory, alimentary, and sexual systems were 7, 1, 16, 66 and 6, deaths respectively. There were 16 cases of cholera, 11 of which were fatal. In order of ease the deaths may be classed thus: Hindus, 333; Mahomedans, 78; Parses, 17; Native-Christians, 15; Europeans, 4; Negro Africans, 7; and unknown race 1.

It is very strange, but nevertheless true, that often pieces of Asiatic news make the circuit of the globe until they at last find their way into our local papers; this actually does happen frequently, and the latest instance of it is the war which has broken out between the ruler of Kabul and the Sultan of Bokhara, in which the King of Persia has declared that he would remain neutral. This information is taken from a paper published at Paris in the Arabic language which arrives by each mail at Bombay. The name of the paper is Borjes Desirous and Diplomes, or The Supper of Paris and a Social Companion. It gives occasionally curious news not to be had through other channels; one of the latest numbers gives an account of the Persian army and its discipline; the army is well equipped, and the ranks are abolished, recruiting is drawn up annually in each village is going on in the same way as in France; the army is accoutred and clothed in the European style excepting the head dress only, &c.

MATHERAN, 31st December.—I see that the Gazette is well up in Matheran matters, from the arrival of the Governor to the killing of a man. The matters which came close together, and are not yet reported, are the following:—The night's work. Indeed if only one of them could have been brought about, it is difficult to predict which would have commanded the majority of votes, for as your last correspondent says, a split up here are kept. I believe that the Government will be forced to go into force to-morrow—not before he is wanted; for the roads or rather paths—bride and foot—about the hills was looking to very badly. There is a path round the hill to the South West of the hill, and above it, which is in a condition to receive a road, it is generally a very good state, but at short distances apart there are three little water-courses which have had little bridges thrown across them. These bridges have been made by means of short rough beam-thrown across, and then stones and earth put on top. One of these has entirely given way, and no great inconvenience to riders, who get past it well enough; but another has only partly given way, and is a greater nuisance than the first, for a horse funks it. Any mountain that would jump it without difficulty if there was a bridge across it, and a man could not make-believe of a bridge across a gap to look at it with suspicion, and the half-concealed, half-developed danger causes a beast to decline it altogether. That, however, would only result in a rider's coming about and giving up his view from that quarter; but it happens that a gallant horseman the other evening that he wanted particularly to get the view from that quarter and he got his horse over, but in going over it appears the beast felt the stones give way, and he fell. The rider refused it entirely. Unlike most of these paths, there was no other way round or out of it, so it was a case of over you go or stick where you are. The gap put in his veto against the first, and nothing would move him from it; not even the variety of the views, which were all consisted of all available. Two alternatives were left—to repair the bridge or pull it down. To do the first, good sized flat stones were necessary, and then the covering of them with earth; but the stones were not at hand, and the wood was not to be had. The second alternative was to give way before anything stopped on the structure. To do the second, involved great wear and tear of the human frame and its covering. Besides that, by the time the work was done, the weather would have been pleasant, and over one's self, much less to have jumped a gap over, for the path was narrow, with a dead rise on the right, and a decidedly dead and deep fall to the left, if one did fall. So, therefore, what? Why, the horse was left on one side and the late rider crossed over and pursued his way home in safety. I have not heard how the gap was got over. Perhaps a company of Sappers and Miners from Poona may have been telegraphed for. I have since been to the spot, and it is surprising to find the insignificance of the impediment, but yet it is easy to see how the thing might happen again—with another horse, that had not nearly slipped (over it once).

To the third alternative, it is a very nice idea, and should be taken early in the evening that a morning. Panorama Point affords a better morning than evening ride. The path on Ghaurbut hill is something in the shape of a figure 8, as it might be written the first time by a child writing on slate. You finish at the same point as the cart at the end of the path. From this point there is a very grand view of the country below, of the distant ghats and of the valley between. From this path one can trace the railway for a great distance, and considerable portions of the path from Nani till it brings to a narrow length almost perpendicularly under your feet. Advancing a little further towards the completion of the 8, you come upon a compact block of rock which has toppled over across the path. There is only one other of the outside edge of the rock left for a man to walk along by. A horse certainly could not pass without jostling the rock, and getting the worst of that,—being jostled down a frightful, perpendicular fall. However, the rock, sometime occupied by the cart, is a very good one. It is filled up by the debris which accompanied the slip, and you are able to scramble through a passage on the safe side; and then along a rough ugly path you soon complete your child's figure 8, and get to a good road for a run home. I should, however, mention that the upper part of the cart is a very good one, and that there has been a considerable slip of earth which has taken a great portion of the path with it. That which remains is very narrow, and is of earth which promises to make a further slip as you pass, and as you have to shoulder a bluff rock on one side, the passage is ugly and calls for the superintendent's attention. I think I shall write a Matheran Guide, giving all the different Points and delightful rides, but before undertaking that office I must request the superintendent to have some additional finger-post put up, not only to enable me to be in the Guide but to enable the readers of the Guide to follow it. At present there are innumerable paths in all directions which people are afraid to take in case they should lose their way. Or, rather, they would pay handsomely for the copyright of a good Guide to take a place, so popular, and necessarily so much resorted to by Bombay people on every occasion on which they can get away. A few evenings ago I distinctly saw Elephants, Neat's tongue, Bombay, Colaba, Malabar Hill, and which were further away from the shore. The next morning the thermometer stood at 50° at 7 A.M. Since then the air of the atmosphere, there, not the air of the eddy, has been thick, and the thermometer, there is always that in the elevated air of Matheran which must benefit the poor muggy Bombay loquax who avail themselves of its convenient distance for an occasional change.

I will doubtless also suggest myself to the superintendent, that the removal of the ridge across the various paths to shunt the water during the rains will be a comfort to visitors. Leaving that and other matters to Dr. Ward's consideration, I shall say no more till I send you my Matheran Guide.

REDIAPISM, the habit of indulging in voluminous correspondence, and consequent dilatoriness, manifest themselves in all Indian enterprises. Witness the proposed "Victoria Museum and Gardens," the "Franchise Cowajee Institute," and indeed any other of the schemes, projects or enterprises undertaken in Bombay. At the close of 1857 a large meeting was held in the Town Hall, object addresses were delivered, and subscriptions raised with the object of erecting a Museum and forming a Public Garden as monuments of loyalty to Her Majesty, and now after the lapse of four years, neither the Museum nor the Garden has yet been commenced. Probably four more years will be spent in correspondence; then a beginning only will be made, which, however, is dimidium facti; and after a further lapse of four years (we trust we are not too hopeful) the establishment of the Museum may be the pleasure of a visit to the Victoria Museum and Gardens, and indeed any other of the schemes, projects or enterprises undertaken in Bombay.

MATHERAN, 31st December.—I see that the Gazette is well up in Matheran matters, from the arrival of the Governor to the killing of a man. The matters which came close together, and are not yet reported, are the following:—The night's work. Indeed if only one of them could have been brought about, it is difficult to predict which would have commanded the majority of votes, for as your last correspondent says, a split up here are kept. I believe that the Government will be forced to go into force to-morrow—not before he is wanted; for the roads or rather paths—bride and foot—about the hills was looking to very badly. There is a path round the hill to the South West of the hill, and above it, which is in a condition to receive a road, it is generally a very good state, but at short distances apart there are three little water-courses which have had little bridges thrown across them. These bridges have been made by means of short rough beam-thrown across, and then stones and earth put on top. One of these has entirely given way, and no great inconvenience to riders, who get past it well enough; but another has only partly given way, and is a greater nuisance than the first, for a horse funks it. Any mountain that would jump it without difficulty if there was a bridge across it, and a man could not make-believe of a bridge across a gap to look at it with suspicion, and the half-concealed, half-developed danger causes a beast to decline it altogether. That, however, would only result in a rider's coming about and giving up his view from that quarter; but it happens that a gallant horseman the other evening that he wanted particularly to get the view from that quarter and he got his horse over, but in going over it appears the beast felt the stones give way, and he fell. The rider refused it entirely. Unlike most of these paths, there was no other way round or out of it, so it was a case of over you go or stick where you are. The gap put in his veto against the first, and nothing would move him from it; not even the variety of the views, which were all consisted of all available. Two alternatives were left—to repair the bridge or pull it down. To do the first, good sized flat stones were necessary, and then the covering of them with earth; but the stones were not at hand, and the wood was not to be had. The second alternative was to give way before anything stopped on the structure. To do the second, involved great wear and tear of the human frame and its covering. Besides that, by the time the work was done, the weather would have been pleasant, and over one's self, much less to have jumped a gap over, for the path was narrow, with a dead rise on the right, and a decidedly dead and deep fall to the left, if one did fall. So, therefore, what? Why, the horse was left on one side and the late rider crossed over and pursued his way home in safety. I have not heard how the gap was got over. Perhaps a company of Sappers and Miners from Poona may have been telegraphed for. I have since been to the spot, and it is surprising to find the insignificance of the impediment, but yet it is easy to see how the thing might happen again—with another horse, that had not nearly slipped (over it once).

To the third alternative, it is a very nice idea, and should be taken early in the evening that a morning. Panorama Point affords a better morning than evening ride. The path on Ghaurbut hill is something in the shape of a figure 8, as it might be written the first time by a child writing on slate. You finish at the same point as the cart at the end of the path. From this point there is a very grand view of the country below, of the distant ghats and of the valley between. From this path one can trace the railway for a great distance, and considerable portions of the path from Nani till it brings to a narrow length almost perpendicularly under your feet. Advancing a little further towards the completion of the 8, you come upon a compact block of rock which has toppled over across the path. There is only one other of the outside edge of the rock left for a man to walk along by. A horse certainly could not pass without jostling the rock, and getting the worst of that,—being jostled down a frightful, perpendicular fall. However, the rock, sometime occupied by the cart, is a very good one. It is filled up by the debris which accompanied the slip, and you are able to scramble through a passage on the safe side; and then along a rough ugly path you soon complete your child's figure 8, and get to a good road for a run home. I should, however, mention that the upper part of the cart is a very good one, and that there has been a considerable slip of earth which has taken a great portion of the path with it. That which remains is very narrow, and is of earth which promises to make a further slip as you pass, and as you have to shoulder a bluff rock on one side, the passage is ugly and calls for the superintendent's attention. I think I shall write a Matheran Guide, giving all the different Points and delightful rides, but before undertaking that office I must request the superintendent to have some additional finger-post put up, not only to enable me to be in the Guide but to enable the readers of the Guide to follow it. At present there are innumerable paths in all directions which people are afraid to take in case they should lose their way. Or, rather, they would pay handsomely for the copyright of a good Guide to take a place, so popular, and necessarily so much resorted to by Bombay people on every occasion on which they can get away. COMMERCIAL SUMMARY.
The London mail of 26th October arrived in the steamer Perla on Thursday night the 12th inst., and was delivered at 11 o'clock. It contained the following news:—Our "Christmas Boxes." We are glad to hear that our Hongkong boxes were brought to the arrival and despatch of so many steamer, home and their friends, we throw him back to the friends who have sent out Christmas presents must have got a good deal of our hands, we now proceed with our Summary.

The banks in India, both here and at the north, are in a state of comparative quietude. We have very little to report in Exports, but, however, trade is being brisk—in Green Tea (for the Straits and the East Indies), and in Tea (for Pabular). At a later part, some of the Half Million Pounds was waiting shipment for lack of tonnage. The market is for America, the balance for Great Britain.

SHANGHAI, December 7.—Market for Imports extremely dull. Of Strappings, Vile and Grey the deliveries fell about 10,000 pieces, and of White and American Goods 25,000 pieces. Tea, however, had found buyers 3,500 chests Black and 10,000 half-chests. The market for Opium, however, was dull. The London Mail of 26th October arrived here on the 12th.
