THE Analysis contains the Acts relating to the Company to the close of the Session in May 1826. The Acts which have been passed since that time, more particularly those during the last Session of Parliament, are so important as regards India generally, that the present mode is adopted, for the purpose of placing them in a collected form before the Public, with a brief statement to each enactment, as in the Analysis, of its origin and purport. It was suggested that a second edition of the work might have been prepared, so as to combine the whole in one volume; but neither the labour which it would have required, nor the time which it must have occupied, could be devoted to it at the present moment. The indulgence which has been extended to the work is sensibly acknowledged; and in the event of circumstances permitting another edition, the various suggestions which have been thrown out, and which are fully appreciated, will be most readily adopted.

PRELIMINARY OBSERVATIONS

THE object originally contemplated in the present work was to record facts rather than to offer opinions regarding the system under which the government of India is conducted.

In submitting a few preliminary observations to a Supplement, which brings down the Analysis, comprising a continuation of the Brief Historical Sketch, and the Laws, to the present time, no departure from the original plan has been intended.

Great and permanent benefits have been conferred on the Indian community, by the important legislative provisions carried into effect during the last session, which provisions are contained in this volume.

Other subjects connected with India were likewise brought under the consideration of Parliament, which, although not leading to any practical results, presented opportunities for the expression of sentiments and opinions, which condemn, in no very measured terms, the present mode of governing that extensive and interesting empire.

Two questions were brought forward by a distinguished member, whose statements on matters relating to India, from the high judicial station which he formerly so honourably filled in that country, and his subsequent connexion with the Company at home, cannot fail to carry with them, and often deservedly, great weight.

The one is a personal case, that of Mr. O'Reilly.

The other a general one, the petition against the stamp act lately imposed by the Bengal Government.

The claim of Mr. O'Reilly for redress from the Court of Directors, for losses which he represents to have sustained by the negligence of the East-India Company, was brought before the House of Commons on the 18th of April last. It was urged on the attention of the House as a case "in which a family had sustained a heavy pecuniary loss, by the negligence, the gross negligence (I will not say moral misconduct) and want of care of the public money, which is a most serious offence in a public body."

It will be perceived, on a perusal of the documents laid before the House of Commons on the 25th June and 7th July, that neither the Court of Directors, nor their Government of Madras nor its servants, have been in any way parties to, or are responsible for the loss sustained by Mr. O'Reilly. In support of this assertion, it may be sufficient to quote the following opinion of His Majesty's Attorney and Solicitor-General, which confirmed the opinion given by Mr. Serjeant Bosanquet, the standing counsel to the Company, viz. "that neither the East-India Company nor any other persons were liable to make good the losses occasioned by the insolvency of Mr. Ricketts."

If the case is one which has no ground of claim beyond that of an appeal to the liberality of the East-India Company, it should be brought forward under such an avowal, and not as founded on grounds imputing to the Company "gross negligence, not to say moral misconduct."

It is impossible not to observe the earnestness with which the Company are called upon to exercise liberality rality when the occasion suits, whilst at the same moment they are held up as conducting their affairs on principles regardless of economy : clearly shewing that no occasion is lost, where an opportunity offers, for impugning the principles which govern their proceedings, whether relating to a personal or a general question.

The other subject is that of the Tax on Stamps, which was brought before the House of Commons on the 17th June last, when a petition was presented from the inhabitants of Calcutta against that measure. The coarse invectives contained in a publication attributed to a highly favoured servant of the Company, who has taken a prominent part in the question, and whose hostility to the Company appears to have increased in exact proportion with the increase of the advantages which he has derived in their service, are merely alluded to as shewing the justice of the following observations by Sir John Malcolm, who cannot be supposed to cherish any indisposition towards the service, civil or military, in both branches of which he has so highly distinguished himself.

“ It is a remarkable fact, that those whose interests, as a body, the Company are so prompt to defend, are not so sensible as might be expected of the safety they derive from this intermediate authority. The causes of this are obvious: the highest and most distinguished of these public officers, whose opinions and actions have a great influence over the rest, are too often discontented at their condition, and hostile to this branch of the Indian administration. The supposed disposition of the Court to look chiefly to expenditure, occasions every reduction “ tion

“ tion either to be ascribed to them, or to a desire of “ conciliating their favour ; while all acts of grace or “ liberality are referred either to the representations
 “ of local superiors in India, or to the interference of “ his Majesty’s Government. These conclusions are “ often unjust, but they are always made ; and they “ operate to prevent those feelings of respect and at“ tachment, which it is so desirable men should enter“ tain for that authority under which they are placed.
 “ Those feelings, however, never can be maintained
 “ in large classes, by a system that employs no means
 “ but those of circumscribed rules and cold inanimate
 “ justice. There must be parts of the community
 “ kindled into warmer sentiments than such means
 “ can ever inspire, or a government will never acquire
 “ the popularity which it is essential for it to possess.
 “ This ingredient of rule is singularly wanting in the “ Company’s government. It has few if any zealous
 “ and active advocates, to meet those attacks with “ which it is continually assailed ; and the conse“ quence is, that though serious reflection should “ teach the great body of those who are in its service
 “ that no change is likely to be for their advantage,
 “ all that they are in the daily habit of hearing and “ reading is calculated to make a different impression “ upon their minds.”*

In moving that the petition as to the Stamp Tax be brought up, it was stated, with reference to the renewal of the Company’s charter :

“ The question will be taken up in haste, decided
 “ in haste, and we shall crowd the discussions into a “ few weeks, and postpone all discussion until the “ eve

“ eve of decision. If this be a wise course, and if “ it be not advisable to enter into preliminary discus“ sions on this great question, I am yet to learn the “ first rudiments of prudence and policy; but the “ course which I have alluded to is too accordant with “ past practice, not to find favour in the eyes of some “ persons.

“ What has been the history of India and of this “ question? For a long time the subject is utterly “ neglected; at length, forcing itself upon the atten“ tion of Parliament, it is suddenly taken up, tu-“ multuously debated for a few hours, in a few days “ spread over a few weeks in a session; and, in the “ end, a hurried bargain struck for the lease of this “ great empire for twenty years longer. In the in“ terval, the perpetual impatience of Parliament inter“ dicts the most intrepid member in the House from “ bringing the subject under its consideration, until “ perhaps the very day before the settling day be“ tween the steward and the tenant, when perhaps “ some increase in the rent, or some variation in the “ covenant, is agreed to. Such is the history of the con“ duct of Parliament towards India, in the successive “ periods of 1773, 1783, 1794, and 1813. Our In“ dian legislation has advanced by springs and jerks.
“ What could have been expected from such a system
“ and from such management, forming, as it does, a “ perfect exemplification of a system—which combines “ evils that seem to be irreconcilable: slow without “ deliberation, sudden without vigour? When the “ subject came upon us on former occasions, there “ was not much time for deliberation—all was hurry
“ and precipitation; scarce a moment’s time was de“ voted

“ voted to it, and consideration and inquiry were out
“ of the question.”*

It is impossible that any other inference should be drawn by the public from the foregoing remarks, coming from such an authority, than that the renewal of the charter at each of the periods alluded to was a measure that could not bear either scrutiny or discussion, and was therefore smuggled through Parliament. But what are the facts? It may be asserted without fear of contradiction, that the records possessed by the public on the affairs of India are more voluminous than on any other subject on which Parliament has legislated.

To revert to the period immediately following the grant of the Dewanny in 1765, when Parliament took into consideration various questions regarding the affairs of India, they legislated amongst other matters on a point which cannot but be familiar to the right hon. member who is so powerful an advocate for the rights and liberties of the subject, viz. the act as to the declaration of dividends, on which the division in the House of Commons was 59 to 41, and against which nineteen Peers entered their dissent in the House of Lords as a measure “ highly dangerous to the property of the subject.”

In the earliest stages the Legislature thus appears to have been alive to the affairs of India. But to notice the first period alluded to, viz. 1773. So far from the matter being then passed over, it was pointedly adverted to in the King’s speech on the opening of Parliament in January 1772.

The consequence was the appointment of two Committees by the House of Commons: one a Secret Committee, for the express purpose of inquiring into the

the affairs of the East-India Company. No less than fourteen voluminous reports were laid before the House, in which every branch of the Company's concerns was discussed and fully investigated: their debts and credits;—their revenue derived from commerce and territory;—and the system under which their affairs were conducted, both abroad and at home. The result was the act of 1773, commonly called "the Regulating Act," which may be considered in a great measure as the foundation of the existing system.

Immediately prior to the period when a further arrangement between the public and the Company was to take place, a Parliamentary Committee appointed in 1782 laid eleven reports before the House, in which a complete review was taken of the concerns of the East-India Company, and of the management of the whole of their affairs, foreign and domestic, political as well as commercial.

In 1783-4, at the opening of Parliament, the King's speech adverted to the affairs of India. The result of the measures adopted in that session, which led to the retirement of Mr. Fox from his Majesty's councils, are too well known to need recapitulation in this place.

The third period pointed out is that of 1793. The subject had been matter of discussion between the Government and the Company from 1791. Every opportunity was afforded to the merchants and manufacturers in different parts of the country to submit their opinions and views. A reference to the parliamentary proceedings will shew that the most ample accounts were laid before both Houses. A full statement of the Company's affairs, together with a series of resolutions, were submitted to Parliament in the month of February, bruary, containing an outline of the bill then intended to be brought in. In April those resolutions underwent discussion in a Committee of the whole House, when they were agreed to. Amendments were moved on the bill, in its several stages through the House of Commons, by Mr. Fox. In corroboration of the foregoing statement, and likewise to shew the attention which was then paid to the subject, the following extract is given from a report of a Committee of the House of Commons in 1810, which report will be again alluded to.

The Committee in fixing upon 1793 as the period from whence to commence their inquiry, state that “ on the occasion of renewing the charter in 1793, “ every exertion was employed for the discovery of the “ extent of the Company’s resources, both political “ and commercial, and calculations were made with “ every practicable attention to accuracy, grounded “ upon the actual experience of preceding years, as “ it regarded both receipt and expenditure.

“ The propriety of taking this as the period for the “ commencement of an investigation, is still further “ established by the consideration, that the arrange“ ment then made was upon the most extensive scale,
 “ embracing the entire state of the concern, both “ abroad and at home; and a line was drawn for the “ distribution of the expenditure in India, whether
 “ for the expences of government or the interest upon
 “ the debts. A principle was also established for the “ application of the surplus produce of the revenues,
 “ which, on the calculations above adverted to, was “ fairly expected to arise.”

From 1793 to 1813, not less than six reports of Committees of the House of Commons were laid before Parliament on the affairs of India.

The two first were presented and printed in June 1805 and May 1808.* They contained a review of the accounts between the public and the Company, and a statement of the disbursements on behalf of the public for the expeditions undertaken to the French Islands, the Cape of Good Hope, Manilla, to Egypt, and to the Dutch settlements in 1801.

The outlay on account of those operations, together with the state of hostilities on the continent of India, pressed most severely on the financial means of the Company, who consequently sought a settlement of their demands on the public. The Committees, after a minute investigation, reported that £2,500,000 was due to the Company. This is one of the occasions to which the epithet of “sturdy paupers” is applied to the Company for seeking payment of what was admitted to be due, for the purpose of enabling them to carry on the government intrusted to them!

The second report already alluded to was laid before the House in May 1810,* by a Committee appointed to inquire into the state of the Company’s affairs, with their observations thereon :

“ Your Committee propose in this report to submit “ to the consideration of the House a detailed state“ ment of the ordinary revenues and charges of the “ East-India Company’s territorial possessions, and a “ comparison of the amount of those revenues and “ charges at the last renewal of the Company’s charter
 “ in 1793, with their present amount, according to “ the latest advices which have been received from “ India.”

The

* That of 1805 presented by John Pattison, Esq. ; those of 1808 and 1810 by the Right Honourable Sir John Anstruther, Bart.

The Committee then bear testimony to the correct observance by the Company of the enactments prescribing that they “ should annually lay before Parliament distinct accounts of the revenues and of the disbursements in India, with the amount of the sales of goods and stores received from Europe, the state of their debts and assets, together with an account of the proceeds of the home treasury and of the debts and assets in England.”

And the Committee remark, that “ the directions of the act before referred to have been obeyed on the part of the Court of Directors as far as practicable.”

The revenues of Bengal, Madras, and Bombay, are then detailed seriatim : each branch of mint duties,—post-office collections,—Benares revenue,—land revenues,—judicial fees and fines,—customs,—salt sales,—opium sales,—stamp duties,—farms and licenses,—subsidies,—and revenues of ceded and conquered provinces. The charges are then described, the military branch being first touched upon : the cause of the increase is clearly set forth, as well as a variety of points which had come under review in the consideration of the whole of the extensive subject.

The third report was laid before the House and printed in June 1811,* in which “ a general combined view is taken of the whole of the concerns of the East-India Company, both abroad and at home, as respects their existing property and the amount of their debts, in order to lay before the House, as accurately as circumstances will admit, the final result of the various financial transactions, both political “ tical and commercial, from the year 1793 to the year

“ 1810.”

After entering very fully into the receipts and disbursements comprised under the head “ Extraordinary,” derived from the two-fold source, viz. credit in India and by supplies from the treasury in England, in consignments of goods, stores, and bullion, or payment of bills of exchange, and which amounted to not less than £52,293,289, the Committee remark :

“ Combining then the whole application of the funds
“ according to the view now given, it will appear that
“ the total expenditure of the extraordinary funds,
“ both in the advance for which property might be said
“ to remain in England or India, and in direct charge,
“ is found to amount to the sum of £52,293,289 ;
“ which, though less than the amount of these funds
“ by £16,135, your Committee do not doubt will be “ considered by the House as a display of order, re“ gularity, and precision, as satisfactory as could be “ expected, in the management of the extensive and “ complicated finances of this great empire, from em“ bracing at the same time both the political and “ commercial branches of its government and ma“ nagement.”

In adverting to the general result of the affairs in India in a financial point of view, by the various operations of a political and commercial nature between April 1792 and April 1809, the Committee point out the increase in debt beyond the assets to amount to £12,590,393, and then remark, that “ as “ the details of the several items contained in this ac“ count have already been explained, your Committee
“ need only advert, at present, to the total of them,
“ and which will be found as near to accuracy as,
“ upon

“ upon full consideration of the general principles
 “ by which the inquiry has been directed, could “ possibly be expected, when it is considered that
 “ that inquiry embraces the receipt and application
 “ of a sum approaching two hundred and forty-five “ millions sterling.”

The Committee then, alluding to the Indian debt, “ considered it as due to those intrusted with the “ government of India, to state that the growing “ amount of the debt has, from a very early period, “ been the subject of their anxious observation, and that “ it has always been an object of their earnest solici“ tude to devise practicable plans for its reduction.”

The fourth report was laid before the House and printed in April 1812,* one year immediately preceding the discussion in the House of Commons in 1813, when the Company's privileges were last renewed; it enters into the Home concerns of the Company. In the early part of this report the Committee make the following remarks with reference to the China trade :

“ The trade with China has for a very long period
 “ formed a part of the exclusive privilege of the Com“ pany, and has been carried on upon principles con“ ducive, in a very eminent degree, not only to the “ advantage of those embarked in it, but likewise to
 “ the interests of the British empire, in its revenue, in “ the employment of its shipping, and in a steady and

Alluding to the aggregate of the several heads of receipt in the Home Treasury, between the years 1793-4 and 1809-10, including the balance of cash on the 1st March 1793, and the balance of tea duties in March

* Also presented by Mr. Wallace.

March 1805, the Committee stated, “ that it appeared “ to have amounted to the sum of £143,593,248.
 “ Deducting from this sum the amount borrowed or “ raised on the credit of the Company, the tea duties,
 “ and the sum advanced by government for the pur“ chase of hemp, it will be found that the affairs of “ the Company, partly political but mostly commer“ cial, produced the receipt of monies into the Home
 “ Treasury to the amount of £115,643,987; and that
 “ the revenue drawn by the state during the seven“ teen years amounted to £39,348,358.

A reference to the detailed proceedings which took place at the several periods alluded to, viz. 1773, 1784, 1793, and 1813, of which the foregoing is an outline, will satisfy any impartial inquirer, that so far from the agreement between the East-India Company and the public at those periods having been entered into without due deliberation, no subject ever engrossed more of the attention of the Government and of Parliament; and certainly there are no affairs on which the public possess more full and more ample information. It is rather a redundancy, than paucity of information, which is generally complained of.

The next point which was insisted upon in the debate on the 17th June last on the Stamp question, is the inefficient mode in which the East-India Company have administered the government of the country entrusted to them. It was remarked :

“ Our grand error has been, that we apply the “ maxims of factories to the government of a mighty “ empire. As we have never calmly examined the “ whole of our system at once, we have never purified “ ourselves from these paltry and peddling principles.

“ We have borrowed the little policy of the chiefs of “ a few obscure factories, who trembled at the frown
 “ of the Hindoo or Mahomedan tyrants by whom “ they were surrounded ; and we continue, in some “ measure, to be influenced by them in the most “ powerful empire between Austria and China. It is “ on this ground that the East-India Company have “ acted.”

It will not be denied, that the judicial administration of every civilized state forms one of its most important features, the course pursued by the East-India Company with reference to that branch of their government consequently falls under the foregoing condemnation. It may therefore be expedient to quote the opinion of Parliament in 1773, as it is one of the periods pointed out to shew the little attention paid by Parliament to the subject of India administration. The Committee of Secresy appointed by the House of Commons to examine into the affairs of India, adverting to the ancient native system of judicature in Bengal, state :
 “ They cannot conclude this part of the subject “ without observing, that so far as they are able “ to judge from all the information laid before “ them, the subjects of the Mogul empire in that “ province derived little protection or security from “ any of these courts ; and that, in general, though “ forms of judicature were established and preserved,
 “ the despotic principles of the government rendered them the instruments of power rather than
 “ of justice, not only unavailing to protect the people,
 “ but often the means of the most grievous oppressions under the cloak of the judicial character.”

Such was the state of things before the East-India Company took any part in the administration of justice in

in India. The condition of the natives at the period of the Company's assuming the administration is described in the following extract from the fifth report, submitted to the House of Commons in the year 1812,* a report shewing that the most laborious and extensive research was devoted to the subject. The Committee enter into a full review of the systems introduced from the time of Lord Cornwallis; and they remark:

“ The internal government was in a state of disorder, and the people suffering great oppression. These evils were imputed to the nature of the former administration. It is observed, that the Nazims exacted what they could from the zemindars and great farmers of the revenue, whom they left at liberty to plunder all below, reserving to themselves the prerogative of plundering them in their turn, when they were supposed to have enriched themselves with the spoils of the country. The whole system thus resolved itself, on the part of the public officers, into habitual extortion and injustice, which produced on that of the cultivator the natural consequences, concealment and evasion, by which Government was defrauded of a considerable part of its just demands.”

The same Committee, after referring to their former reports, which have been already noticed, containing some detail of the extensive establishments for the internal administration of justice, remarked, that “ they have felt it their duty to offer some account of the nature and history of those establishments, and of the circumstances under which they have been augmented to their present scale, trusting “ that

* Presented by Mr. Wallace.

“ that such an account will be acceptable to the “ House, not only as shewing the importance and “ utility of the establishments themselves to the wel“ fare and order of the country, but as evincing the “ unremitting anxiety that has influenced the efforts
 “ of those to whom the government of our Indian “ possessions has been consigned, to establish a sys“ tem of administration best calculated to promote the “ confidence and conciliate the feelings of the native
 “ inhabitants, not less by a respect for their own “ institutions, than by the endeavour gradually to en-
 “ graft upon them such improvements as might shield, “ under the safeguard of equal law, every class of the “ people from the oppressions of power, and commu“ nicate to them that sense of protection and assu“ rance of justice, which is the efficient spring of all “ public prosperity and happiness.”

After entering into a minute detail of the various points embraced in their extensive inquiry, the Committee state, that “ an attentive consideration of the “ information which the documents afford has led your “ Committee to believe, that the administration of “ the British Government proved, at an early period
 “ of its introduction, beneficial to the natives of India “ residing under its protection. By the superiority of “ the British arms they became at once secured from “ the calamities frequently experienced in successive “ invasions of the Mahrattas ; internal commotion was
 “ by the same cause entirely prevented ; and if their “ condition was not sooner brought to that state of “ improvement which the character of the nation un“ der whose dominion they had fallen afforded reason
 “ to expect, the delay may be satisfactorily accounted
 “ for, on grounds that will free those who were imme“ diately

“ diately responsible from any charge of negligence or “ misconduct.”

And, in conclusion, adverting to the system of government generally : “ Although the view given in the “ foregoing part of this Report may shew that certain “ imperfections are still found in the system of “ internal government in the Bengal provinces, yet it
“ can, in the opinion of your Committee, admit of “ no question, whether the dominion exercised by the “ East-India Company has, on the whole, been bene“ ficial to the natives. If such a question were pro“ posed, your Committee must decidedly answer it in “ the affirmative. The strength of the government of “ British India, directed as it has been, has had the “ effect of securing its subjects as well from foreign “ depredation as from internal commotion. This is “ an advantage rarely experienced by the subjects of “ Asiatic states ; and, combined with a domestic ad“ ministration more just in its principles, and exer“ cised with far greater integrity and ability than the “ native one that preceded it, may sufficiently account “ for the improvements that have taken place ; and “ which in the Bengal provinces, where peace has been “ enjoyed for a period of time perhaps hardly paral-
“ leled in Oriental history, have manifested them“ selves in the ameliorated condition of the great mass
“ of the population ; although certain classes may “ have been depressed by the indispensable policy of “ a foreign government. The nature and circum“ stances of our situation prescribes narrow limits to “ the prospects of the natives in the political and “ military branches of the public service. Strictly “ speaking, however, they were foreigners who gene“ rally enjoyed the great offices in those departments, “ even

“ even under the Mogul government; but to agricul“ ture and commerce every encouragement is afforded “ under a system of laws, the prominent object of “ which is to protect the weak from oppression, and to “ secure to every individual the fruits of his industry.
 “ The country, as may be expected, has under these “ circumstances exhibited in every part of it, improve“ ment on a general view, advancing with accelerated “ progress in later times.”

Such are the deliberate and recorded opinions of a Committee of the House of Commons, who spared no labour in entering fully into the subject which they undertook to examine. It is to be observed, that the opinion of the Committee is not simply confined to any one branch of the system, for it is broadly and unequivocally declared, that “ it admits of no question, whether the dominion exercised by the East-India Company has been beneficial to the natives.”

Hence it will be perceived from what has already been stated, that so far from “ scarce a moment’s time having been devoted to it,” inquiry by Parliament the most minute and extended accompanied each renewal of the exclusive privileges enjoyed by the Company; and it is a curious fact, that out of fifteen folio volumes of reports of committees of the House of Commons, during a period of nearly one hundred years, commencing from the year 1700, and printed by order of the House in 1803, five of by far the largest volumes relate entirely to the affairs of India. These are exclusive of the five subsequent reports laid before the House between 1805 and 1813; and the result of the inquiries has proved that the government confided to the East-India Company has been of unquestionable benefit to India and to its inhabitants.

IN condemning the line of policy which has been observed by the Company for the purpose of preventing an unlimited influx of Europeans into India, the imaginary benefits which an opposite principle would confer upon the natives are then pointed out and strongly insisted upon. It was observed :

“ There are in India no such guardians as a middle class ; no such guardians as those persons, who having embarked in trade and manufactures, depending for success in business on peace and tranquillity, looking to the security of the personal property for the realization of future fortune, are consequently deeply interested in the maintenance of order, and would oppose any act that was likely to disturb it. On one side, the interest of those individuals would lead them to protect the natives from oppression ; while, on the other, their feelings would operate with equal strength, supporting order and authority. If the natives want any set of men to protect them, let a body of Europeans be invited to that country to strengthen its connexion with this.”*

The opinions of the much and deservedly lamented prelate, the late Bishop Heber, were then referred to in support of the above propositions ; whilst, at the same time, opinions coming from the self-same source, and which militate against such propositions, were passed by as ideas “ formed upon information which he had received from others rather than to have been guided by his own experience on the subject.” How stand the facts ?

Bishop Heber reached Calcutta in October 1823.

At

* Debate in the House of Commons on the Stamp question, 17th June 1828.

At the close of January 1824, evidently referring to the Europeans connected with Calcutta or its immediate environs, he expressed himself as follows :

“ With regard to the questions which have lately “ occupied a good deal of the public attention, the “ free press, and the power of sending back Europeans
 “ to England at pleasure, so far as these bear on the “ condition of the natives, and the probable tranquillity
 “ of the country, I have more to say than I have “ now time for. On the whole, I think it still desirable
 “ that, in this country, the newspapers should be licensed
 “ by government ; though, from the increased “ interest which the Hindoos and Mussulmans take
 “ in politics, and the evident fermentation which, either
 “ for good or evil, is going on in the public mind, I “ do not think the measure can be long continued.
 “ But the power of deportation is, I am convinced,
 “ essential to the public peace. Many of the adventurers
 “ who come hither from Europe are the greatest “ profligates the sun ever saw ; men whom nothing
 “ but despotism can manage, and who, unless they “ were really under a despotic rule, would insult,
 “ beat, and plunder the natives without shame or pity.
 “ Even now, many instances occur of insult and misconduct,
 “ for which the prospect of immediate embarkation
 “ for Europe is the most effectual precaution
 “ or remedy. It is, in fact, the only control which
 “ the Company possesses over the tradesmen and “ ship-builders in Calcutta, and the indigo planters
 “ the country.”

Admitting that so much as related to the indigo planters up the country was derived at that time from information, the Bishop, in March 1825, fifteen months subsequently, after having passed through the eastern, northern,

northern, and western extremities of British India, having been to Dacca and Almora, and passing through the Deccan towards Ahmedabad, writes as follows :

“ The English in the Upper Provinces are of course
 “ thinly scattered, in proportion either to the mul“ titude of the heathen, or the extent of territory.
 “ They are, however, more numerous than I expected, “ though there are very few indeed who are not in “ the civil or military employ of government. The “ indigo planters are chiefly confined to Bengal, and “ I have no wish that their number should increase in “ India. They are always quarrelling with, and op“ pressing the natives, and have done much in those “ districts where they abound, to sink the English cha“ racter in native eyes. Indeed, the general conduct “ of the lower order of Europeans in India is such as
 “ to shew the absurdity of the system of free coloniza“ tion which W—— is mad about.”

Thus fully confirming by personal experience the correctness of the information upon which he had formed his original opinion.

It would, however, still be matter for gratulation, if the classes of Europeans pointed out by Bishop Heber were the only parties from whom the natives have experienced any thing tending towards oppression, or who have acted so as to lower the English character in their eyes.

Circumstances attending the failure of a mercantile house at Calcutta in the past year, tended to irritate the native community against the European character and mode of transacting business more than any other event that has taken place. The house, though long insolvent, was supported whilst

whilst gathering up, mostly upon credit, large quantities of produce of all kinds in the interior; and at the moment when all had been collected or was in transit to the presidency, judgment was entered (on a bond given by the house in question) in the supreme court, and the community of the interior saw the goods they had provided, and looked upon as their security, torn from under their eyes, without hope of a fraction of their value being set apart to satisfy their claims! The failure alluded to, though the largest, was not the only one of the same kind.

The opinions of gentlemen possessing local experience appear to have been at all times decidedly opposed to a great increase of Europeans in India. The late Sir Philip Francis recorded his deliberate opinion in 1782, after his return from India, in the following terms :

“ Even of adventurers pursuing every mode of acquisition that offers, very few, if any, have succeeded. But these are people to whom no encouragement should be given. Their residence in the country, especially in the remoter parts, harasses the people, and alienates them from the natural habits of submission to any power that protects them.

“ The increase of Europeans in Bengal may be hazardous to Great Britain in another sense: it necessarily tends to fix them there for ever; they become colonists in effect, because in a very great number a great majority cannot hope or expect to return with fortune or independence to the mother country. Their connexions with it are gradually dissolved, and their attachment to it declines in the same proportion. When once they shall have multiplied to a certain point, it is in the course

“ and

“ and nature of things that Bengal will neither pay “ tribute nor obedience to England.”*

The coincidence of opinion between two such eminent characters as Sir Philip Francis and Bishop Heber, though expressed at such different periods, is too apparent not to strike the most common observer.

THE line of conduct pursued by the East-India Company with reference to their foreign affairs, and the nature of the various and important duties which devolve upon the Executive Body in their home transactions, are really little known or understood.

An instance of the error into which the most enlightened minds may be drawn by an imperfect acquaintance with the subject of the Company's foreign policy, presents itself in the motion brought under the consideration of the House of Lords in December 1802, by the late Marquess of Hastings, then Earl of Moira, on the affairs of the Carnatic, on which occasion his Lordship dwelt “ upon the necessity of controlling the Company in their system of excessive “ aggrandizement and increase of their territories,
 “ and on the unjustifiable measures of making war for “ conquest.” And observed, that “ we had found fault
 “ with France for invading and oppressing all the feeble “ states about her, and by the conduct of the East-“ India Company we allowed that opprobrium to be “ retorted on ourselves, and it was held up to all “ Europe that we pursued in India the same conduct
 “ of which we so loudly accused France.”

It may be only necessary to contrast the opinions entertained by his Lordship in 1802 with the measures pursued pursued by him in the course of his administration in that same country from 1814 to 1819, which course has deservedly been the theme of applause and admiration. The measures adopted by the two eminent and distinguished noblemen at the head of affairs in India at each of the above-mentioned periods* ended in acquisition of territory; they were stated by their respective governments to be the result of necessity, and on each occasion the East-India Company pressed on their serious attention the principles which the Legislature had laid down for the government of India.

* Introduction to Original Minutes, 1782.

The statements made by the late Mr. Canning, on the occasion of his moving a vote of thanks to the Marquess of Hastings and the British army in India, in March 1819, are so much in point, as regards the conduct of the East-India Company, on the subject of the Company's foreign policy, that it is impossible to avoid quoting them. The right honourable gentleman, whose eloquence could impart even an interest to matters connected with India, expressed himself in the following terms :

“ I approach the subject, sir, with the greater caution and delicacy, because I know with how much jealousy the House and the country are in the habit of appreciating the triumphs of our arms in India. I know well that, almost uniformly successful as our military operations in that part of the world have been, they have almost as uniformly been considered as questionable in point of justice. Hence the termination of a war in India, however ^{so} glorious, is seldom contemplated with unmixed satisfaction. That sentiment generally receives some qualification
“ from

* Marquess Wellesley and the Marquess of Hastings.

“ from a notion, in most cases perhaps rather assumed
“ than defined, that the war is likely to have been pro“ voked on our part, with motives very different from “ those of self-defence. Notions of this sort have “ undoubtedly taken deep root in the public mind :
“ but I am confident that in the present instance
“ (and I verily believe on former occasions which are “ gone by, and with which it is no business of mine
“ to meddle at present) a case is to be made out as “ clear for the justice of the British cause, as for the “ prowess of the British arms. Neither, however, do
“ I accuse of want of candour those who entertain “ such notions ; nor do I pretend to deny that the “ course of Indian history, since our first acquaint“ ance with that country, furnishes some apparent “ foundation for them. It is not unnatural that, in “ surveying that vast continent, presenting as it does,
“ from the Boorampooter to the Indus, and from the “ northern mountains to the sea, an area of some“ where about one million of square miles, and con“ taining not less than one hundred millions of inha“ bitants ; in looking back to the period when our “ possessions there consisted only of a simple factory
“ on the coast for the purposes of a permitted trade ;
“ and in comparing that period with the present, when
“ that factory has swelled into an empire ; when about
“ one-third in point of extent, and about three-fifths
“ in point of population, of those immense territories
“ are subject immediately to British Government ;
“ when not less than another fourth of the land, and “ another fifth of the inhabitants, are under rulers
“ either tributary to the British power or connected “ with it by close alliance ; it is not unnatural that,
“ upon such survey and comparison, prejudices should “ have

“ have arisen against the rapid growth of our Indian “ establishment ; that its increase should have been “ ascribed, not only by enemies or rivals, but by “ sober reflexion and by impartial philosophy, to a “ spirit of systematic encroachment and ambition.

“ On the other hand, in a power so situated as ours,
 “ a power planted in a foreign soil, and without natu“ ral root in the habits or affections of the people ;
 “ compelled to struggle, first for its existence, and “ then for its security, and, in process of time, for the “ defence of allies, from whom it might have derived “ encouragement and aid, against nations in the habit
 “ of changing their masters on every turn of fortune,
 “ and the greater part already reduced under govern“ ments founded by successful invasion ; in a power
 “ so situated, it can hardly be matter of surprise that “ there should have been found an irrepressible ten“ dency to expansion. It may be a mitigation, if not “ a justification, of such a tendency, that the inroads
 “ which it has occasioned have grown out of circum“ stances hard to be controlled ; that the alternative “ has been, in each successive instance, conquest or “ extinction ; and that, in consequence, we have pre“ vailed for the most part over preceding conquerors,
 “ and have usurped, if usurped, upon older usurpa-“ tions.

“ I refer to the wise and sober enactments of the “ British Parliament, not to dispute their authority or
 “ to set aside their operation, but because I can with “ confidence assert, that at no period of our Indian “ history have the recorded acts and votes of Parlia“ ment been made more faithfully the basis of instruc“ tions to the Government in India than at the period
 “ when the Marquess of Hastings assumed the supreme “ authority.

“ authority. It is but justice to the executive body of “ the East-India Company to say, that the whole course
“ and tenour of their instructions has been uniformly
“ and steadily adverse to schemes of aggrandizement,
“ and to any war which could safely and honourably
“ be avoided. It is but justice to the memory of the “ noble person whom I succeeded in the office which “ I have the honour to hold, to say, that he uniformly
“ inculcated the same forbearing policy, and laboured
“ to turn the attention of the Indian governments
“ from the extension of external acquisitions or con“ nexions to the promotion of internal improvement.
“ And having said this, it may not be an unpardonable “ degree of presumption in me to add, that I have “ continued to walk in the path of my predecessor ;
“ that I have omitted no occasion of adding my exhor“ tations to those which I found recorded in my office
“ against enterprizes of ambition and wars of con“ quest. So strongly and so recently had the pacific “ system been recommended, that upon the eve of the “ breaking out of the late hostilities, the hands of the “ Supreme Government were absolutely tied up from “ any foreign undertakings, except in a case of the “ most pressing exigency. Such an exigency alone
“ produced, or could justify the war, the glorious re“ sult of which the House is now called upon to mark
“ by its vote.”

IN the second report from the Committee of the Honourable House of Commons on the public income and expenditure of the United Kingdom laid before the House in June last :

The Committee, after stating that they have inquired into the salaries given to clerks in the India House, the Bank of England, two insurance offices, and one of the principal banking-houses of London, observe, “ there is a material difference in the scales of the “ salaries of these establishments.”

After adverting to the terms on which clerks are admitted, the Committee remark : “ The chief clerks “ receive salaries from £800 to £2,000 a-year, and “ are taken from the body of the clerks ; but the “ India House is not of the character of a purely “ commercial establishment, and is by no means an “ example of economical arrangement.” Had reference been made to the plan laid before Parliament in the year 1814, in pursuance of the act of 53d Geo. III, cap. 155, sec. 54, it would have at once been perceived, that half of the establishment of the India House is a political charge, the duties performed by such part being territorial and political, and separate and distinct from the commercial branch. It may likewise be confidently asserted, that very many of the duties performed, even in the commercial branch, differ most materially from any transacted by other establishments which are referred to.

Had the Committee of Finance been aware of the duties discharged at the India House under the direction and instruction of the Chairs and the Court of Directors, it would have been apparent that the comparison which has been drawn will by no means hold good. Let any body look at the various despatches to the several governments in India in the political, revenue, judicial, military, financial, and ecclesiastical departments, to which Mr. Canning (and perhaps a more competent judge could scarcely have been selected) alluded in the following terms in the debate on a motion by Mr. Creevy as to the Board of Control, on the 14th March 1822.

“ He had seen a military despatch accompanied with

“ 199 papers, containing altogether 13,511 pages ;
 “ another, a judicial despatch with an appendage of
 “ 1,937 pages ; and a despatch on the revenue with no “ fewer than 2,588 pages by its side.

“ Much credit was due to the servants of the East-“ India Company. The papers received from them
 “ were drawn up with a degree of accuracy and talent
 “ that would do credit to any office in the state.
 “ The Board could not, with all the talents and “ industry of the president, the commissioners, or “ even of his honourable friend, their tried secretary,*
 “ have transacted the business devolved upon it,
 “ without the talents and industry with which that “ business was prepared for them at the India House.”

Was it known to the honourable Committee, that all matters connected with the provision of the military investments for India ; the superintendence of the recruiting for the Indian army, and embarkation of the military and recruits for India ; the adjustment and regulation of matters connected with and arising out of the courts of judicature in India ; the correspondence with the various public offices on the multifarious subjects which are of daily occurrence ; the consideration and decision of the innumerable personal cases of servants in the civil, military, and other establishments when in this country ; the discussion on and adoption of various measures which are ultimately submitted to Parliament, with the view of promoting the welfare and happiness of the native community ; the direction and control of the vast commercial concerns of the Company, affording employment to nearly 4,000 men in their Warehouses only. In short, it is impossible to enumerate, and no person is capable of forming a correct judgment, who does not know the interior management of the whole vast machine, and of what the various, important, and incessant calls upon the executive body, and more especially upon the Chairman and Deputy Chairman, consist. These observations are not advanced for the mere purpose of magnifying in the eyes of the public the present system; they are capable of proof or of refutation, and upon the one or the other they must stand or fall.

IN a work of this nature, and proceeding from the quarter which it does, any observations with reference to the Hon. Executive Body, however just in themselves, would be misplaced. It is fortunate for the East-India Company, no less than for the interests of India generally, that gentlemen, independent in fortune and character, and possessing deserved weight and influence in public, can be found to devote their time and attention to the maintenance of a system which, though not perhaps without its defects, has worked well, and promoted the benefit of all connected with it both in India and in Europe. The truth is, that the principles upon which it has been conducted are little known, whilst at the same time they are greatly misrepresented. It is much to be desired for the country that the illustrious nobleman, who is now at the head of his Majesty's government, and who is not unacquainted with the affairs of India, may fill that arduous and responsible post when the subject of the Company's charter may come under discussion. It will be no less advantageous to a due consideration of the question, that the office of President of the Board should at that time be occupied by a noble lord, who it may be said possesses almost an hereditary knowledge of Indian affairs.

THE extent of the subject and result of the present system

system cannot be better described than in the eloquent terms used by Mr. Canning, on the last occasion on which that highly gifted statesman spoke in public, on the 13th June 1827 :

“ I believe there is no example in the history of the world, on the one hand, of the existence of an imperial corporation, or on the other of the concurrence of two co-ordinate authorities, for so long a series of years, in conducting without shock or conflict the administration of the wonderful, I had almost said the tremendous empire, over which the East-India Company and the Crown jointly preside. The construction and maintenance of that vast empire are, indeed, as fearful as extraordinary. It is a disproof of the common adage, that little wisdom is required for governing mankind, to consider how such a machine has been gradually formed; how a varied population of nearly 100,000,000 of souls is kept together under a government so anomalous, and distant thousands of miles, with so much comparative happiness, and so little of internal confusion. But the greatness of the concern to be administered has had its natural effect; it has produced a race of men adequate to its administration. I venture to say, that there cannot be found in Europe any monarchy which within a given time has produced so many men of the first talents in civil and military life, as India has, within the same period, first reared for her own use, and then given to their native country.”

It has been the endeavour to shew, by the foregoing observations,—that where a want of investigation is alleged,—the most minute and extended inquiry has taken place;—that where the government of the Company

Company is stated to have been carried on, on “paltry, peddling principles,” it is proved to have been conducted on a system unquestionably beneficial, “shielding under the safeguard of equal law every class of the people from the oppressions of power, and communicating to them that sense of protection, and assurance of justice, which is the spring of all public prosperity and happiness;”—that where the Company have been charged with a desire of conquest and aggrandizement, their orders have been little short of a peremptory prohibition against their government engaging in hostilities;—that where the greatest benefits are anticipated from an unlimited resort to India of Europeans, serious evils from a limited resort have already been experienced;—and that where judgment has been passed on the economy of the Company’s Home management, the nature of the establishment, the duties discharged by it, and the system under which it is conducted, are almost wholly unknown. These observations, apply principally to the subjects connected with the four periods alluded to, viz. 1773, 1784, 1793, and 1813. Whenever the question shall again be brought forward, there is no doubt that the East-India Company will be enabled to shew, that they have discharged the great trust reposed in them with advantage to the interests of the state, and have promoted the welfare and happiness of the immense population placed under their rule.

It is deemed expedient to state, that the contents of the Analysis and this Supplement, until they had passed through the press, were unknown to any person but the individual who has thus laid them before the public, and to whom the statements which they contain are to be solely attributed.

CONTINUATION
BRIEF HISTORICAL SKETCH
OF THE
RISE AND PROGRESS OF THE BRITISH POWER IN INDIA.

IN consequence of the non-ratification by the Burmese of the treaty entered into on the 3d January 1826, at Patanogah, hostilities were recommenced, and on the 19th measures were taken by Sir Archibald Campbell for the attack of Melloon, which important post, after a gallant defence by the enemy, was carried by assault. Its position, although not so well chosen as some others which had been met with, had been rendered more formidable by labour and art, affording the enemy a presumptive security in their possession of it.

1826.
Ava.

The intelligence of the fall of Melloon created the greatest consternation at the capital of Ava. Mr. Price, a member of the American mission, and Mr. Sandford, surgeon of the Royals, a prisoner at Ummerapoor, were sent down for the purpose of treating with the British authorities. They reached head-quarters on the 31st January, and were informed that the terms proposed at Melloon were still open to the court of Ava. The army continued its progress from Patanogah towards the capital, and on the 4th February reached Pagan Yay, an advance of eighty-five miles, and from thence to Pagahm Mew, where the enemy had been concentrating himself, and by a reconnoissance effected on the evening of the 8th, was discovered in force of not less than 16,000 men, strongly posted about five miles in advance of the village of Yesseah : part of the fugitives from Melloon having been rallied at that point, and there reinforced by fresh leyies from Ava. On the 9th February Sir Archibald Campbell determined to attack the enemy, who after a severe struggle was entirely defeated, and the British obtained possession of Pagahm Mew.

Operations were at the same time carried on in Pegu under Col. Pepper. The force of that officer was intended to act simply on the defensive, but the frequent acts of devastation and pillage induced him to move from Pegu towards Shoegeen on the 23d December, which post he occupied without resistance. A severe reverse was however experienced on the 7th January 1826, by a detachment sent under Lieut.-Colonel Conry, for the reduction of Setaung, a stockade on the eastern bank of the river ; in the attack that officer was killed, and the party repulsed. The reduction was subsequently effected by a force under Colonel Pepper in person, after surmounting obstacles of no common kind, every man having been up to his neck in water whilst crossing the creek to the attack.

The provinces of Arracan and Assam continued in undisturbed possession of the British authorities. Cachar was freed from a foreign force, and Munnypoor was finally cleared of the enemy.

Sir Archibald Campbell, after halting a day or two at Pagahm Mew, continued his advance towards the capital. On his route, and when within four days of

Uminera-

Ummerapoor Mr. Price again made his appearance, bringing with him the treaty ratified by the king.

1826
Ava.

By the treaty, which was dated at Yandaboo, the 24th February 1826, the King of Ava renounced all claim to, and is to abstain from all interference with Assam and its dependencies, and also with the petty states of Cachar and Jynteea. Ghumber Singh was to be recognized as Rajah of Munnypoor, should he desire to return thither. The four provinces of Arracan, Ramree, Cheduba, and Sandoway, as divided from Ava by the Arracan mountains, together with the conquered provinces of Yeh, Tavoy, Mergui, and Tenasserim, were ceded to the British government, who were also to receive from the state of Ava one crore of rupees, as part indemnification to the British government for the expenses of the war. It was also agreed that a commercial treaty, upon principles of reciprocal advantage, should be entered into between the contracting parties.

Sir Archibald Campbell, with Mr. Robertson of the Bengal service, civil commissioner in Ava, and Mr. Mangles, arrived at Calcutta in the Enterprize steam vessel on the 5th April.

Throughout the whole of the protracted war, the troops, both European and native, evinced a patient endurance of fatigue and privations and sickness, to which they were unavoidably exposed in a hostile country, and in an inclement season. The Madras Sepoys manifested an alacrity in volunteering for foreign service, which afforded an unequivocal proof of their fidelity and attachment to government. It would be superfluous to mention the important and effectual aid afforded by his Majesty's squadron under the late Sir James Brisbane, throughout the operations.

Thanks

Ava.

Thanks were voted by Parliament and by the East-India Company, to the joint forces, naval and military, both King's and Company's, which had been engaged.* The Court of Directors confirmed the grant of batta to the army by the Bengal government, and authorized an addition thereto, making the total sum granted nearly half a million sterling.

Bhurt-pore.

It has already been noticed that the fortress of Bhurt-pore surrendered unconditionally on the 18th January 1826. Its reduction became an object of great importance, with reference to the generally received impression by the natives that it was invulnerable, owing to the celebrated and successful defence which it made when besieged by Lord Lake in 1805. The late Bishop Heber, in a letter to Mr. Williams Wynn, dated in the Carnatic in March 1826, wrote as follows: "It is really strange how much importance has been attached to the fortress of Bhurt-pore. Even in the Carnatic, Sir Thomas Munro tells me, the native princes would not believe that it ever could be taken, or that the Játs were not destined to be the rallying point of India."† It was a town of great extent, and everywhere strongly fortified, being surrounded by a mud wall of great height and thickness, with a very wide and deep ditch. The circumference of both town and fort was above eight miles, and the walls in all that extent were flanked with bastions at short distances, on which was mounted numerous artillery.

The preparations for the attack were made on a large and complete scale, calculated to insure ultimate success. On the 10th December Lord Combermere appeared before it with an army of upwards of 20,000 men, and a field of more than a hundred pieces of artillery.

artillery. During the night the enemy had cut the bund or embankment of a lake to the northward, for the purpose of filling the board and deep ditch; a most essential means of defence, which had contributed largely to the successful resistance of the place in 1805. But they had been too tardy with this operation: the British troops arrived in time to make themselves masters of the embankment, and repair the breach before a sufficient quantity of water had flowed into the fosse to render it impracticable. The following days were occupied in reconnoitring the works and determining the points of attack, until the battering train and its appurtenances should have come up, the fortress occasionally firing upon the reconnoitring parties, and skirmishes taking place between small detachments and the enemy's cavalry encamped under the walls.

Lord Combermere, desirous to save the women and children from the horrors of a siege and of a bombardment, like that which must follow from such a battering train as he was about to employ, addressed a letter to Doorjurn Sal on the 21st, calling upon him to send them out of the fort, promising them a safe conduct through the British camp, and allowing four and twenty hours for that purpose before he should open his fire upon the town.

Having received an evasive answer, his Lordship again sent to him allowing a further extension of the time for twelve hours; but the humane offer was not accepted. On the 23d therefore, every thing being in readiness to commence operations, and the north-east angle of the works having been fixed upon as the point of attack, the besiegers under a heavy fire took possession of a ruined village called Kuddum Kundec and of Buldeo Singh's garden, and completed their first parallel 1826.

Bhurtpore.

parallel at the distance of about eight hundred yards from the fort. On the morning of the 24th two batteries erected at these two points opened upon the town, and on the 25th another more advanced battery between them having likewise begun its fire within two hundred and fifty yards of the north-east angle, the defences of the east side of that part of the works were in a great measure destroyed. A battery was then constructed bearing on the north face of the same angle, at a distance of about two hundred and fifty yards. The rest of December was employed in a similar manner in strengthening the old batteries, erecting new ones, and pushing forward the works, a constant fire which left scarcely a roof uninjured being kept up against the town, while the enemy seemed to be reserving his resources to the last, and the operations of the besiegers were exposed to no material interruption. On the 3d January 1826 the artillery began to breach the curtains; the ditches in front were found to be dry, and from the ruggedness of the counterscarp, offered fewer obstacles than had been expected. Such, however, was the tenacity of the tough mud walls, that they resisted the effects of shot better than masonry would have done; it was found that the batteries were insufficient to breach them, and recourse was had to mining. On the evening of the 6th, a mine was commenced in the scarp of the ditch on the northern face of the work, with the purpose of improving the breach: but the engineers fearing that they would be discovered if they continued their operations during the day, sprung it at day-light on the following morning, when it was not sufficiently advanced to have any material effect upon the wall. In making a second attempt the miners were

were driven away, having been countermined from the interior before they had entered many feet; and the gallery was subsequently blown up, it being discovered that the enemy were keeping watch in it. On the 14th another mine under one of the bastions was exploded too precipitately, and failed of its effect. Two more mines were immediately driven into the same work, which were sprung on the 16th so successfully, that with the aid of a day's battering they effected an excellent breach, which was reported to be practicable. On the 17th the mine under the north-east angle was completed, and the following day was fixed for the storm.

Early in the morning of the 18th, the troops destined for the assault established themselves in the advanced trenches, unperceived by the enemy. The left breach was to be mounted by the brigade of General Nicolls, headed by the 59th regiment; that on the right by General Reynell's brigade, headed by the 14th regiment: the explosion of the mine under the north-east angle was to be the signal for the attack. At eight o'clock the mine was exploded with terrific effect; the whole of the salient angle, and part of the stone cavalier in the rear, were lifted into the air, which for some time was in total darkness; but from the mine having exploded in an unexpected direction, or from the troops having been stationed in consequence of miscalculation too near it, the ejected stones and masses of earth killed in their fall several men of the regiment at the head of the column of attack, and severely wounded three officers. They fell so thick about Lord Combermere himself, that Brigadier-General M'Combe, who was standing next to him, was knocked down, and two Sepoys, who were within a few few feet of him, were killed on the spot. The troops immediately mounted to the assault with the greatest order and steadiness, and notwithstanding a determined opposition, carried the breaches. The left breach was the more difficult of the two; the ascent was very steep, but the troops pressed on, and quickly surmounted it, the grenadiers moving up it slowly and resolutely, without yet drawing a trigger in return for the volleys of round shot, grape, and musketry, which were fired upon them. Some of the foremost of the enemy defended the breach for a few minutes with great resolution, but as the explosion of the mine had blown up three hundred of their companions they were soon compelled to give way, and were pursued along the ramparts. Whenever they came to a gun which they could move, they turned it upon their pursuers, but they were immediately killed by the grenadiers and the gun upset. In two hours the whole rampart surrounding the town, although bravely defended at every gateway and bastion, along with the command of the gates of the citadel, were in possession of the besiegers, and early in the afternoon the citadel itself surrendered. Brigadier-General Sleigh, commanding the cavalry, having been intrusted with preventing the escape of the enemy's troops after the assault, made such a disposition of his forces, that he succeeded in securing Doorjun Sal, who with his wife, two sons, and a hundred and sixty chosen horse, attempted to force a passage through the 8th Light Cavalry.

The loss of the enemy could not be computed less than four thousand killed; and owing to the disposition of the cavalry, hardly a man bearing arms escaped. Thus, as by the surrender of the town, all the stores, arms, and ammunition fell into the possession of the victor, the whole military power of the Bhurtpore state might be considered as annihilated. The fortifications were demolished; the principal bastions and parts of several curtains were blown up on the 6th of February; and it was left to the rains to complete the ruin. The fuddy bourg, or "bastion of victory," built, as the Bhurtporeans vaunted, with the bones and blood of British soldiers who fell in the assault under Lord Lake, was now laid low, and among its destroyers were some of those very men who twenty years before "had been permitted," in the boasting language of the natives, "to fly from its eternal walls." In fact, the fort, in a military point of view, is in a state of complete ruin, open in every direction, and would demand as much expense, or nearly so, to render it again formidable, as would raise another in a new position. All the other fortresses within the Rajah's dominions immediately surrendered; the inhabitants returned to their abodes, and the Rajah was reinstated in his authority. Lord Combermere broke up his camp to return to Calcutta on the 20th February, and arrived there early in April.

the

Thanks were voted by Parliament and by the East-India Company;* and the prize-money arising from the capture, granted to the Company by the King, was ordered by the Court of Directors to be distributed among the army.

In the early part of 1827 the Bombay government was involved in a discussion with the Rajah of Colapore, a small independent Mahratta state in the province of Bejapoor. The British government, anxious to avoid a rupture, endeavoured, through the resident, to adjust adjust the difference which had arisen without having recourse to extreme measures. The Rajah, deaf to all remonstrance, and blind to the real interests of his state, continued to disregard the advice offered to him; he raised additional levies of troops, and at once placed himself in a hostile attitude, which rendered it incumbent on the government to prepare against aggression. The remonstrance of the government remained unanswered, and the Rajah, at the head of large bodies, commenced plundering, not only the properties and territories of his own dependent chiefs, but also those under the special protection or guarantee of the British government, and at the same time extorting money from the inhabitants by means of excessive cruelties. Thus forced into active operations, Colonel Welsh marched from Belgaum with the whole of the disposable troops of that station and crossed the Gutpurba river on the 12th September, and subsequently took up a position in the vicinity of Katabughee, in the Colapore territories, the inhabitants of which flocked in numbers to Colonel Welsh's camp, soliciting protection. These measures had the desired effect; the questions pending with the state of Colapore were brought to a satisfactory conclusion without recourse to actual hostilities; and such arrangements were entered into as will secure the peace and tranquillity of the country, and prevent, on the part of the Rajah, the recurrence of any violation of his engagements.

Sir Thomas
Munro.

Accounts were received in this country in the month of November of the death of Sir Thomas Munro, governor of Fort St. George. The lamented event took place at Pattercoondah, near Gooty, in the July preceding, and at the moment when that distinguished servant servant of the Company was on the point of returning to his native land after a period of nearly forty years devoted to the interests of the Company and his country.

The Court of Directors, as a tribute of respect to their late valuable servant, passed a unanimous resolution expressive of the regard which they entertained for his memory.*

Sir Thomas Munro's desire to be relieved from the charge of the government reached this country in September 1826, and in January 1827 Mr. Lushington, formerly of the Madras Civil Service, was appointed his successor. On the same day Major-General Sir John Malcolm was appointed to succeed the Honourable Mountstuart Elphinstone in the government of Bombay. Mr. Lushington sailed from Plymouth in his

BOMBAY MARINE.

THE East-India Company have maintained, since their earliest establishment, a marine force under the government of Bombay, which has been denominated the BOMBAY MARINE, the ships or vessels in such service being commanded by officers bearing commissions issued by the Company, or by the government in India under their orders, rising by seniority to the respective ranks of lieutenant, commander, captain, and commodore. It is employed on various important services intimately connected with the defence of the British possessions in India, and in the protection of the local commerce: and although its efficiency has been materially lessened from the want of sufficient authority to enforce due subordination, it has nevertheless distinguished itself on several occasions; and instances of the most devoted gallantry have been displayed by the commanders and crews detached on separate service.

The expediency of placing the Bombay Marine under martial law was repeatedly represented to be indispensable by the Government abroad. It was a force constituted by valid authority under powers specifically granted by royal charters in the successive reigns from James II. to George II. Yet it had been held in the Court of the Recorder at Bombay, in causes tried there in 1807, that the charters under which the Bombay Marine had been formed did not import a renunciation of the King's general prerogative, to exact the service of all the subjects being seafaring men on board his own ships; and it had been further held, that the charters did not confer the power of governing and enforcing discipline in the Company's marine by the same laws, and by the infliction of the same penalties for the same offences, as are provided by statute for the Royal Navy.

The Court of Directors were most anxious to promote the attainment of so desirable and important an object. From the year 1824 to April 1827 the subject was under discussion in this country, and his Royal Highness the Lord High Admiral, on assuming office, evinced every disposition to support the measures which had been proposed in discussion with Lord Melville. Through his Royal Highness's intervention, his Majesty was most graciously pleased to issue an order in council,* conferring on the officers of the Bombay Marine, within the limits of the Company's charter, the privilege of taking rank agreeably to their several degrees with the officers of the Royal Navy; but under the condition that all officers of any rank in the Royal Navy shall have precedence of all the officers of the Bombay Marine of the same rank; and that the officers of neither service shall have any command whatever over the ship's officers and men of the other service, unless by special orders to that effect from the respective governments.

His Royal Highness the Lord High Admiral was pleased to issue his warrant, authorizing the Bombay Marine to wear, in addition to the red ensign, which all ships belonging to his Majesty's subjects should legally wear, the Union Jack, and a long pendant having a St. George's Cross on a white field in the upper part next the mast, with a red fly;* and at the same time to intimate his gracious intention to issue positive directions to his Majesty's Naval Officers in India, neither to impress men from the Bombay Marine nor to accept their voluntary services. Such were the important and satisfactory arrangements carried into effect regarding the force in question, to the close of September 1827. The Court of Directors on intimating them to the Bombay government, issued orders for a revision of the establishments of ships and officers. Difficulties still presenting themselves to the extension of the exact provisions of the Naval Mutiny Act: measures were contemplated for subjecting the corps to a defined code of martial law, so as to effectually provide for the maintenance of discipline and the punishment of desertion. The necessity of such measures was superseded by the Chairman of the East-India Company, William Astell, Esq., M.P., obtaining leave on the 1st July to bring in a bill to extend the provisions of

CARNATIC AND TANJORE COMMISSIONERS.

CARNATIC.

IN Part I. of the Analysis, pages 129 and 708, the origin of the Carnatic and Tanjore Commissions is given in detail. The former was appointed under an agreement between the East-India Company and the private creditors, on the 10th July 1805: the latter under an agreement dated the 11th February 1824.

The aggregate amount of Carnatic claims which had been preferred in 1825, was £30,216,707, of which £27,163,979 had been rejected, and £2,485,630 admitted; since that period the further sum of £483,516 has been investigated, of which £362,403 has been rejected, and £121,113 admitted.

The following is an abstract of the amount of adjudications to the date of the last report from the Carnatic commission, dated 15th February 1828, and also the close of the Commissioners' Report.

CRIMINAL JUSTICE.

IN the month of March 1826 Mr. Secretary Peel drew the attention of the House of Commons to the state of the criminal law generally in this country. The subject had engaged the time and talents of the late Sir Samuel Romilly, and subsequently of Sir James Mackintosh, both of whom, at various periods, brought different propositions connected with it under the consideration of Parliament.

Mr. Peel's object was more extended: it embraced the consolidation of the various acts which related to offences against property, and which, in their then state, were considered to encumber the statute book, and to confuse each other. The multiplicity of provisions and the minute nature of the details, rendered it utterly impossible to carry the bill through that session; another bill was, however, introduced and passed, which had reference to the general subject of the criminal justice of England, but more particularly to amending the regulations relative to the admittance to bail in cases of felony. The clause making accessories before the fact liable to the same punishment as the principal felon, was opposed, but ultimately carried. A proposal for allowing the counsel of prisoners, upon their trial for felony, to address the jury on the evidence, though strongly supported, was rejected, and the bill was finally passed into a law.

In the following session Mr. Peel introduced four other bills, which, with the bill brought in the preceding session were passed into acts, viz., 7th and 8th Geo. IV., cap. 27, for repealing various statutes in England relative to the benefit of clergy, and to larceny and other offences connected therewith, and to malicious injuries to property, and to remedies against the hundred. By this act one hundred and thirty-seven different statutes, commencing with the Charta de Foresta, 9th Henry III. cap. 10, were repealed.

Cap. 28, for the further improving the administration of justice in criminal cases in England.

Cap. 29, for consolidating and amending the laws relative to larceny, and other offences connected therewith.

Cap. 30, for consolidating and amending the laws relative to malicious injuries to property, including machinery, manufactories, and mines; and

Cap. 31, for consolidating the laws relative to remedies against the hundred.

When Mr. Peel introduced those bills, it was found that, however useful and important many or most of their provisions would be if extended to the East-Indies, still there was so much which was inapplicable to Asiatic habits, and the inconvenience of declaring what part should, and what part should not extend to those countries, would have been so great, that it was deemed expedient not to notice the East-Indies at all upon that occasion. With the caution and foresight which has so eminently marked that distinguished statesman, he accordingly protected India from any of the doubts or difficulties which might have resulted from an unqualified repeal of all those old laws which, so far as England was concerned, he swept at once from the statute book, by expressly confining their repeal to England and the high seas, leaving India therefore subject the same code of criminal law by which it was then governed, in order that, upon mature consideration, a separate and distinct code for the administration of criminal justice there might be introduced in the following session.

Nor was such a measure expedient solely with reference to the consolidation and amendment of the criminal law as applied to the British territories in India. It appears that his Majesty's courts of justice there have been in the habit of deciding (as of necessity they must have done) what British statutes did and what did not extend to the persons and places within their respective jurisdictions; to remove all doubt and difference of opinion upon such a subject was a matter of no small moment, and while the act in question accomplishes all those objects, it provides for or corrects such oversights and inaccuracies in former statutes as experience has shewn to be so.

To prevent all doubt and misapprehension as to the places or the persons falling within its provisions, its first section precisely defines both, by enacting that it “ shall extend to all “ persons and all places, as well on land as on the high seas, “ over whom or which the jurisdiction of any of his Majesty’s “ courts of justice, erected or to be erected within the British “ territories, under the government of the United Company “ of Merchants of England trading to the East-Indies, does “ or shall hereafter extend.” His Majesty’s colonies, therefore, such as Ceylon and the Mauritius, are not included in its operation.

In addition to the introduction of all such of the provisions of Mr. Peel’s acts of last session as were deemed fit to be applied to India, and of those also of the act introduced during the present session by that right hon. gentleman respecting offences against the person, the act in question includes likewise the provisions of that which was introduced during the present session by the Right Honourable Lord Tenterden, Lord Chief Justice of his Majesty’s Court of King’s Bench, for amending the law of evidence in certain cases, permitting Quakers and Moravians to give evidence on affirmation, instead of oath, in all cases, criminal as well as civil. Following his Lordship’s principle, and wisely extending it to meet the scruples of the natives of Asia, some of whose castes are extremely reluctant to take an oath, this act declares, that every native of any country within the limits of the Company’s charter, who may be required to give evidence in any case whatsoever, criminal or civil, may, instead of taking an oath in the usual form, be permitted to make a solemn affirmation or declaration, in such manner and form as the court shall deem sufficiently binding on the conscience. Under this head, too, it may be noticed that the act corrects an oversight which had crept into the East-India Mutiny Act, requiring that the oaths to be taken by members of general or other courts-martial, or courts of request composed of military officers, should be taken upon the Holy Evangelists, and enacts that such persons may, instead thereof, be sworn according to the forms of their respective religions.

With a view to make the act as nearly as possible a complete code code in itself, for the administration of criminal justice within the East-India Company's territories, it repeals the provisions in the act of 39th and 40th Geo. III. cap. 79, relative to transportation; and those of the act of 53d Geo. III. cap. 155, relative to the stealing securities for money, to forgery, and to counterfeiting coin; and incorporates them with the provisions of this act.

In giving this brief outline of the effect of this most important act, its minute and laborious details have not been noticed; but it may be observed, that few acts have probably ever passed which have been subjected to more patient or anxious consideration. When the subject was first brought to the attention of the Court of Directors, the Company's law officers were immediately instructed to afford every assistance that their knowledge or experience could devise, in furtherance of the important object in view: an assistance to which they not only assiduously devoted themselves during every part of the progress of this great measure, but in which they were honoured with the benefit of the practical and high legal knowledge of the Right Hon. Sir James Mackintosh, Sir Edw. Hyde East, Robert Fergusson, Esq., M.P., and Mr. Serjeant Spankie; the two former of whom have held the highest judicial stations, and the two latter the highest official stations in the law in the East-Indies. Mr. Williams Wynn, who had also devoted the utmost care and attention to the subject, obtained leave, on the 4th June, to bring in the bill upon which the present act is founded; and on that occasion adverted to the aid which he had received from the eminent persons alluded to, and was pleased to express his sense of the obligation which he felt under to the Company's law officers, for the assistance which they had rendered to him.

At the same time, and under the same auspices, was introduced another measure of no less importance than that to which we have just referred.

On the 6th of June Mr. Wynn introduced the bill, which on the 9th of July 1828 received the royal assent, and became an Act for the Relief of Insolvent Debtors.

(1) Be it enacted, that this act shall commence and take effect on and from the first day of March one thousand eight hundred and twenty-nine, and shall extend to all persons and all places, as well on land as on the high seas, over whom or which the criminal jurisdiction of any of his Majesty's courts of justice erected or to be erected within the British territories under the government of the United Company of Merchants of England trading to the East-Indies does or shall hereafter extend.

Who may be admitted to Bail on a Charge of Felony.

(2) And be it enacted, that where any person shall be taken on a charge of felony or suspicion of felony before one or more justice or justices of the peace, and the charge shall be supported by positive and credible evidence of the fact, or by such evidence as if not explained or contradicted shall in the opinion of the justice or justices raise a strong presumption of the guilt of the person charged, such person shall be committed to prison by such justice or justices in the manner hereinafter mentioned; but if there shall be only one justice present, and the whole evidence given before him shall be such as neither to raise a strong presumption of guilt nor to warrant the dismissal of the charge, such justice shall order the person charged to be detained in custody until he or she shall be taken before two justices at the least: and where any person so taken, or any person in the first instance taken before two justices of the peace, shall be charged with felony or on suspicion of felony, and the evidence given in support of the charge shall in their opinion not be such as to raise a strong presumption of the guilt of the person charged, and to require his or her committal, or such evidence shall be adduced on behalf of the person charged as shall in their opinion weaken the presumption of his or her guilt, but there shall notwithstanding appear to them, in either of such cases, to be sufficient ground for judicial inquiry into his or her guilt, the person charged shall be admitted to bail by such two justices in the manner hereinafter mentioned: provided always, that nothing herein contained shall be construed to require any such justice or justices to hear evidence on behalf of any person so charged as aforesaid, unless it shall appear to him or them to be meet and conducive to the ends of justice to hear the same: provided also, that in all cases where any person or persons charged as aforesaid shall be brought before one justice, at any place beyond the local limits of the jurisdiction of any of his Majesty's courts of justice erected or to be erected within the British territories under the government of the said United Company, it shall be lawful for such justice alone either to commit such person to prison or to admit him to bail as hereinbefore directed.

(27) And be it enacted, that whenever any person shall be convicted of any felony, except murder, for which he shall by law be liable to suffer death, and the court before which such offender shall be convicted shall be of opinion that the particular circumstances of the case do not require that judgment of death should be pronounced, but that such offender is a fit and proper subject either to be recommended to the royal mercy or to be ordered to be transported under the authority of this act, it shall and may be lawful for such court, if it shall think fit so to do, to direct the proper officer then being present in court to require and ask, whereupon such officer shall require and ask, if such offender hath or knoweth any thing to say why judgment of death should not be recorded against such offender; and in case such offender shall not allege any matter or thing sufficient in law to arrest or bar such judgment, the court shall and may, and is hereby authorized to abstain from pronouncing judgment of death upon such offender, and instead of pronouncing such judgment, to order the same to be entered of record, and thereupon such proper officer as aforesaid shall and may and is hereby authorized to enter judgment of death on record against such offender in the usual and accustomed form, and in such and the same manner as is now used, and as if judgment of death had actually been pronounced in open court against such offender by the court before which such offender shall have been convicted.

(29) And be it enacted, that when any person shall be convicted of any felony for which judgment of death shall be pronounced or recorded against him, it shall and may be lawful for the court, instead of leaving such judgment of death to be executed on such offender, to order such offender to be transported to such place as the court shall direct, either for life or for such term of years as the court shall order.

(33) And be it declared and enacted, that where the King's Majesty shall be pleased to extend his royal mercy to any offender convicted of any felony punishable with death or otherwise, and by warrant under his sign manual, countersigned by one of his principal secretaries of state, shall grant to such offender either a free or a conditional pardon, the discharge of such offender out of custody in the case of a free pardon, and the performance of the condition in the case of a conditional pardon, shall have the effect of a pardon under the great seal for such offender as to the felony for which such pardon shall be so granted : provided always, that no free pardon, nor any such discharge in consequence thereof, nor any conditional pardon, nor the performance of the condition thereof, in any of the cases aforesaid, shall prevent or mitigate the punishment to which the

the offender might otherwise be lawfully sentenced on a subsequent conviction for any felony committed after the granting of any such pardon.

(34) And be it enacted, that where any offender hath been or shall be convicted of any felony, and hath endured or shall endure the punishment which hath been or shall be adjudged or ordered in respect thereof, the punishment so endured hath and shall have the like effects and consequences as a pardon under the great seal, as to the felony whereof the offender was so convicted: provided always, that nothing herein contained, nor the enduring of such punishment, shall prevent or mitigate any punishment to which the offender might otherwise be lawfully sentenced on a subsequent conviction for any other felony.

What shall render a Party an incompetent Witness after Punishment.

(35) And be it enacted, that where any offender hath been or shall be convicted of any misdemeanor which renders the parties convicted thereof incompetent witnesses (except perjury or subornation of perjury), and hath endured or shall endure the punishment to which such offender hath been or shall be adjudged for the same, such offender shall not, after the punishment so endured, be deemed to be by reason of such misdemeanor an incompetent witness in any court or proceeding, civil or criminal.

(36) And be it enacted, that every Quaker or Moravian, who shall be required to give evidence in any case whatsoever, criminal or civil, shall, instead of taking an oath in the usual form, be permitted to make his or her solemn affirmation or declaration in the words following; that is to say, "I, A. B., do solemnly, sincerely, and truly declare and affirm;" and that every native of any country within the limits of the charter of the said United Company, who may be required to give evidence in any case whatsoever, criminal or civil, and who shall object on the ground of any religious scruple to take an oath in the usual form, may, at the discretion of the court, be permitted to make his or her solemn affirmation or declaration in such manner and form as the court shall deem sufficiently binding upon his or her conscience, which said affirmation or declaration shall be of the same force and effect in all courts of justice and other places, where by law an oath is required, as if such Quaker, Moravian, or Native had taken an oath in the usual form; and if any person making such affirmation or declaration shall be convicted of having wilfully, falsely, and corruptly affirmed or declared any matter or thing which if the same had been sworn in the usual form would have amounted to wilful and corrupt perjury, every such offender shall be subject to the Aiders and Abettors how punishable.

(38) And be it enacted, that in case of any felony punishable under this act, every principal in the second degree, and every accessory before the fact, shall be punishable with death, or otherwise, in the same manner as the principal in the first degree is by this act punishable; and every accessory after the fact to any felony punishable under this act (except only a receiver of stolen property), and an accessory after the fact to murder, shall, on conviction, be liable to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding two years; and every person who shall aid, abet, counsel, or procure the commission of any misdemeanor punishable under this act, shall be liable to be indicted and punished as a principal offender.

(39) And be it enacted, that if any person shall aid, abet, counsel, or procure the commission of any offence which is by this act punishable on summary conviction, either for every time of its commission, or for the first and second time only, or for the first time only, every such person shall, on conviction before a justice of the peace, be liable for every first, second, or subsequent offence of aiding, abetting, counselling, or procuring, to the same forfeiture and punishment to which a person guilty of a first, second, or subsequent offence as a principal offender is by this act made liable.

(40) And be it enacted, that any person found committing any offence punishable either upon indictment or upon summary conviction by virtue of this act, may be immediately apprehended without a warrant by any peace officer, or by the party aggrieved, or by his servant, or any person authorized by him, and forthwith taken before some neighbouring justice of the peace, to be dealt with according to law; and if any credible witness shall prove upon oath before a justice of the peace a reasonable cause to suspect that any person has in his possession or on his premises any property whatsoever, on or with respect to which any such offence shall have been committed, the justice may grant a warrant to search for such property, as in the case of stolen goods; and any person to whom any property shall be offered to be sold, pawned, or delivered, if he shall have reasonable cause cause to suspect that any such offence has been committed on or with respect to such property, is hereby authorized, and if in his power is required, to apprehend and forthwith to carry before a justice of the peace the party offering the same, together with such property, to be dealt with according to law.

(42) And be it enacted, that where any person shall be charged on the oath of a credible witness, before any justice of the peace, with any such offence, the justice may summon the person charged to appear at a time and place to be named in such summons, and if he shall not appear accordingly, then (upon proof of the due service of the summons upon such person, by delivering the same to him personally, or by leaving the same at his usual place of abode) the justice may either proceed to hear and determine the case ex parte, or issue his warrant for apprehending such person, and bringing him before himself or some other justice of the peace; or the justice before whom the charge shall be made may (if he shall so think fit) without any previous summons (unless where otherwise specially directed) issue such warrant, and the justice before whom the person charged shall appear or be brought shall proceed to hear and determine the case.

Penalties on summary Convictions.

(43) And be it enacted, that every sum of money which shall be forfeited for the value of any property stolen or taken, or for the amount of any injury done (such value or amount to be assessed in such case by the convicting justice), shall be paid to the party aggrieved, if known, except where such party shall have been examined in proof of the offence; or when the party aggrieved is unknown, such sum shall be applied in the same manner as the penalty: provided always, that where several persons shall join in the commission of the same offence, and shall, upon conviction thereof, each be adjudged to forfeit a sum equivalent to the value of the property, or to the amount of the injury, in every such case no further sum shall be paid to the party aggrieved than that which shall be forfeited by one of such offenders only, and the corresponding sum or sums forfeited by the other offender or offenders shall be applied in the same manner as any penalty imposed by a justice of the peace is herein directed to be applied.

ECCLESIASTICAL ESTABLISHMENT.

THE ecclesiastical establishment in India is described in the Analysis, page 331.

Bishop Middleton, who went to India in 1814, died at Calcutta on the 8th July 1822, and was succeeded by Bishop Heber, who reached Bengal in the month of October 1823. From the month of June 1824 to the end of that year, Bishop Heber was engaged in visiting the several European stations in Bengal and the upper provinces of Hindostan. In January 1825 he proceeded to the stations under the Bombay government, including Poonah, Kairah, Baroda, Baroach, Surat, and Guzerat. He subsequently visited Ceylon, and returned to Calcutta, from whence in 1826 he proceeded to Madras and Trichinopoly. At the latter place, on the morning of the 3d April, his Lordship was seized with an apoplectic fit, on entering a bath which had been prepared for him, and falling forwards into the water in a state of insensibility, was speedily suffocated.

The Rev. Dr. James was appointed to the bishopric in April 1827. His Lordship sailed for India in the ship Mary Anne, in June following.

The Rev. William Hawtayne succeeded the Rev. John Barnes as archdeacon at Bombay, in May 1826. The Rev. E. Vaughan resigned the archdeaconry of Madras in 1828. His successor is not yet known.

INSOLVENT DEBTORS.^g

VARIOUS acts have been passed from time to time for the relief of insolvent debtors in England and Ireland. Many of the extensive provisions in favour of the debtors were found to be extremely prejudicial to the interests of the creditors, and led to the presentation of numerous petitions to Parliament, praying some revision of those laws. A committee of the House of Commons was accordingly appointed in March 1819, to take into consideration the state of the law, and the several acts passed in the 53d, 54th, and 56th years of his late Majesty's reign.

The committee made their report in the month of May, and stated that, in submitting the result of their inquiry, they felt called upon, in the first place, to express their most decided approbation of the principle on which they conceived the laws for the relief of insolvent debtors were founded: the principle being, that a debtor ought to be released from custody on making a bonâ fide division of all his property amongst his creditors, except in cases where the conduct of the debtor appears to have been fraudulent. In the month of January last a draft of a bill which had been sent home by the judges in India, was transmitted to the Court of Directors by Mr. Williams Wynn, and referred by the Court to the Company's law officers, for the purpose of their reporting on the measure generally, as applicable to India. The most anxious attention was given to the subject, and as it was proposed to incorporate some of the provisions of the bankrupt act, the opinions of professional gentlemen immediately connected with the practice of the insolvent court and that of bankrupts, were taken on the various points contemplated in the proposed bill, which was sufficiently matured to enable Mr. Williams Wynn on the 22d May, to give notice to the House of his intention to move for leave to bring in the same, which leave was obtained on the 4th June, when when Mr. Wynn pointed out the urgent necessity that existed for such a measure, and the great difficulty frequently occasioned by the existence of settlements, or sometimes merely factories, belonging to other powers, in the centre of the British territories. Thither no writs of course run, and a debtor has only to escape there and he may set his creditors at defiance. It was therefore proposed, among other numerous provisions, that this absconding should of itself be considered as an act of bankruptcy, and that it should be in the power of the court to treat the party escaping as an insolvent debtor, and to direct an assignment of his property for the benefit of his creditors. The bill was passed into an act on the 19th July 1828.

After reciting that divers good laws have of late years been established within the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland for the relief of insolvent debtors, and that it is right that relief should be given also to insolvent debtors in some parts of the East-Indies, it proceeds to enact, that there shall be holden within the respective limits of the towns of Calcutta, Madras, and Bombay, separate courts for the relief of insolvent debtors, at Calcutta once a month at least, and at Madras and Bombay as often as necessary; such court to be held before one of the judges of his Majesty's Supreme Courts at those presidencies, the practice of which courts is then provided for with a great deal of minute detail, founded chiefly on the provisions of the acts passed for the same purpose, with reference to this country. The act contains one class of provisions quite peculiar to itself: it declares the adjudication of an act of insolvency in India to be evidence of an act of bankruptcy, on which a commission may be sued out here, and proceeds to lay down with much care and precision the course of proceeding to be adopted, with a view to the affording equal justice to the English and the Indian creditor.

The principal officers of the respective courts for the relief of insolvent debtors are to cause notices to be inserted in the gazettes of the several presidencies, of every petition for relief under this act, and of every adjudication of an act of insolvency, and the chief secretary of the government is to transmit to the Court of Directors, without delay, two or more copies of such gazette which shall contain any such notice, who without delay, after after the receipt, are to cause notice to be inserted in the London Gazette.

It would be foreign to the purpose of this work to enter minutely into the details of the provisions of the bill in question, but there is no doubt that their practical utility will justify the great pains and labour which have been bestowed upon them, and that they will be found to give to India most, if not all of the benefits of the bankrupt laws, without the accompaniment of their cumbrous and expensive machinery.

(50) And whereas the insolvents may be entitled to annuities for their own lives, or other uncertain interests, or to reversionary or contingent interests, or may have made advances of money for the cultivation of lands, or may be interested in property in other ways, in which the immediate sale thereof for payment of their debts may be very prejudicial to them and to their creditors, and it may be proper in some cases to defer the sale of such property, and to put it under temporary management, or to authorize the raising of money by way of mortgage for payment of the debts or part of the debts of an insolvent, and for defraying the expenses attending the execution of this act, instead of selling for such purpose; be it enacted, that in all such cases it shall be lawful for the said courts for relief of insolvent debtors at any time to take into consideration all circumstances affecting any property of the prisoner which shall have been assigned under the provisions of this act; and if it shall appear to any such court that it would be reasonable to make any special order touching the same, it shall be lawful for such court so to do, and to direct that so much of the said property as it may be expedient not to sell immediately, according to the provisions of this act, shall not be so sold, and from time to time to order and direct in what manner such property shall be managed, for the benefit of the creditors of such insolvent, until the same can be properly sold, or until payment of such creditors be effected, according to the provisions of this act, and to make such order touching the sale or disposition of such property as to such court for relief of insolvent debtors may seem reasonable and beneficial, and upon such terms and conditions, with respect to the allowance of interest on debts not bearing interest, or other circumstances, as to such court shall seem just; and if it shall appear that the debts of any such insolvent or insolvents can be discharged by means of money raised by way of mortgage on any of the said property of the said insolvent or insolvents, instead of raising the same by sale, it shall be lawful for the said court so to order, and to give all necessary directions for such purpose, and generally to direct all things which

(51) And be it further enacted, that the assignee or assignees of all such insolvents as are hereinbefore mentioned shall keep accounts of the property, debts, and credits of such insolvents, whether belonging or due to or from such insolvents solely, or jointly with any other person or persons, wherein they shall enter all property of the insolvents received by them, and all payments made by them; which accounts any creditors may inspect at all seasonable times; and it shall be lawful for the courts for the relief of insolvent debtors at all times to summon the assignees before them, and require them to produce all books, papers, deeds, writings, and other documents in their possession, which in any way relate to the petition of the insolvent or insolvents; and if such assignee or assignees so summoned shall not come before such courts respectively at the time appointed, or shall not bring with him or them such documents as are afore-mentioned, it shall be lawful for such courts respectively to issue attachments, and to cause such assignee and assignees to be brought before them, and to commit such assignee or assignees to prison until he or they shall submit to the court by which he or they shall have been summoned.

Dividends to joint and separate Creditors.

(53) Provided always, and be it enacted, that it shall not be lawful for such court to order any dividend to be made amongst the joint creditors out of the separate estate, until the separate creditors shall have been paid in full, nor to order any dividend to be made to the separate creditors out of the joint estate, until all the joint creditors shall have been paid in full; in which latter case it shall be lawful for such court to order such dividend to be made among the separate creditors, out of such interest in the joint estate, as such insolvent shall appear to be separately entitled to.

(58) And be it further enacted, that in case it shall appear to any such court that such insolvent shall have contracted any of the debts fraudulently, or by means of breach of trust, or by means of false pretences, or without having any reasonable or probable expectation, at the time when contracted, of paying the same ; or shall have put any of his or her creditors to any unnecessary expense, by any vexatious or frivolous defence or delay to any suit for recovering any debt or any sum of money due from such insolvent ; or shall be indebted for damages recovered in any action for criminal conversation with the wife or for seducing the daughter or servant of the plaintiff in such action, or for breach of promise of marriage made to the plaintiff in such action, or for damages recovered in any action for a malicious prosecution, or for a libel, or for slander, or in any other action for a malicious injury done to the plaintiff therein, or in any action of tort or trespass to the person or property of the plaintiff therein, wherein it shall appear, to the satisfaction of such court, that the injury complained of was malicious ; then it shall and may be lawful for such court to adjudge that such insolvent shall be so discharged and so entitled as aforesaid forthwith, excepting as to such debts, sum or sums of money, or damages as above mentioned ; and as to such debt or debts, sum or sums of money, or damages, to adjudge that such insolvent shall be so discharged and so entitled as aforesaid, as soon as he or she shall have been in custody, at the suit of the person or persons who shall be creditor or creditors for the same respectively, for a period or periods not exceeding two years in the whole, as such court shall direct, to be computed as aforesaid.

Court may order Costs.

(59) And be it further enacted, that whenever any creditor or creditors opposing such insolvent's discharge shall prove, to the satisfaction of any such court, that such insolvent has done or committed any act for which upon such adjudication as aforesaid he or she may be liable to remain in such custody as aforesaid for a period not exceeding three years, to be computed as aforesaid, such court shall adjudge the taxed costs of such opposition to be paid to such opposing creditor or creditors, out of the estate and effects of such prisoner, by his or her assignee or assignees, before any dividend made thereof ; and in all other cases of opposition to an insolvent's discharge being substantiated or effectual, it shall be lawful for such court to adjudge in like

Court to make Order pursuant to Adjudication, and issue Warrant.

(60) And be it enacted, that where, in the matter of any such petition heard before any such court, any adjudication shall have been made by such court for discharge of any insolvent, order shall be made accordingly by the said court in pursuance of such adjudication, and such court shall also issue a warrant or warrants to the gaoler accordingly, ordering the discharge of such insolvent from custody as to the detainers under which he or she shall then be confined, or which shall be lodged against him or her before he or she shall be out of custody, the same being for debts in respect of which such adjudication shall have been made; and that every such order of adjudication shall take effect, as from the day on which the adjudication shall have been made in that behalf; and that every such adjudication, and certificate thereof, and order thereupon, may be made without specifying therein any such debt or debts, or sum or sums of money, or claims as aforesaid, or naming therein any such creditor or creditors as aforesaid, excepting so far as shall be necessary in any case in order to distinguish between the creditors as to whom any such insolvent may be adjudged to be so discharged and entitled as aforesaid forthwith, and the creditors as to whom he or she may be adjudged to be so discharged and entitled at some future period: provided, nevertheless, that in all cases the detainer or detainers with respect to which any such insolvent shall have been adjudged to be discharged out of custody, he or she being then in custody thereupon, shall be specified in the warrant of such court to be delivered to the gaoler in that behalf.

Adjudication and Order to be final, unless obtained on false Evidence, &c.

(61) And be it further enacted, that every such adjudication for discharge of any insolvent as aforesaid by any such court as aforesaid, and the order thereupon, so made as aforesaid, except in cases of appeals, shall be final and conclusive, and shall not be reviewed by such court, unless such court shall thereafter see good and sufficient cause to believe that such adjudication has been made on false evidence, or otherwise improperly made, or fraudulently obtained, in which case it shall and may be lawful for such court, upon the application of such insolvent, or of any creditor of such insolvent, to order such insolvent, upon due notice, to be given to such persons and in such manner as the said court shall direct, to attend or to be brought up, and the said matter to be reheard before the said court, who shall thereupon rehear the same, and shall and may, if just cause shall appear, annul the original adjudication and order thereupon made in such case, and shall have the same powers and authorities upon such rehearing as upon any original hearing in pursuance of this act, and may adjudicate in such matter accordingly: and thereupon, in case the former adjudication in the said matter shall not be confirmed, such order, certificate, and warrant shall be made as required by this act, to be made upon such original adjudication; and the said court shall and may, if necessary, remand the said insolvent to the same custody in which he or she was at the time of the former hearing, there to be subject to imprisonment as if the former adjudication therein had not been made; and thereupon all detainers which were in force against such insolvent at the time of his or her former discharge from custody shall be deemed to be still in force against him or her, as if such former adjudication had not been made; and the gaoler and keeper of the prison to which such insolvent shall be so remanded shall, and is hereby required to receive such insolvent into his custody, in pursuance of such remand, for doing which the order of remand in such case shall be his sufficient warrant; and where in any case such insolvent shall refuse or neglect to appear before such court, according to such order for rehearing as aforesaid, a copy whereof shall have been duly served on such insolvent, it shall and may be lawful for such court to order such insolvent to be apprehended, and committed to custody to such prison, and to issue its warrant accordingly, and to cause such insolvent to be brought up for examination as often as to such court shall seem fit; provided always, that where upon such rehearing it shall appear to such court that such insolvent is not entitled to the benefit of this act until some future period, according to the provisions herein contained, the said court shall and may, if it shall appear reasonable, adjudge the discharge of such insolvent at such future period, to be calculated without including the time during which such insolvent shall have been out of custody since the time appointed for his or her discharge by such former adjudication as aforesaid.

Insolvent may, after Discharge, be examined as to the Estate and Effects.

(62) And whereas the estate, both real and personal, of any person whose discharge has been adjudicated under this act, may not be sufficiently described or discovered in his or her schedule so sworn to as aforesaid, or the assistance of such person may be necessary to adjudge, make out, recover, or manage his or her estate and effects, for the benefit of his or her creditors; be it therefore enacted, that it shall and may be lawful to and for the assignee or assignees of the estate and effects of any such person whose discharge charge shall have been adjudicated under this act, in case such person shall, upon application to him or her for that purpose, have refused or neglected to give the necessary information, from time to time, to apply to the court by which any such adjudication shall have been pronounced, that such person may be further examined as to any matters or things relating to his or her estate and effects by such court; and thereupon, and also in case such person shall neglect or refuse to appear before such court at such time and place as shall be directed by such order, or appearing shall refuse to be sworn, or to answer such questions as shall be put to him or her relating to the discovery of his or her said estate and effects, then and in any of such cases it shall be lawful for such court, by warrant, to commit such person to gaol, there to remain without bail or mainprize until such time as he or she shall submit himself or herself to the order of such court in that behalf, and shall answer upon oath or otherwise, as shall be required, to all such lawful questions as shall be put to him or her, in pursuance of the same, for the purposes aforesaid.

Court may in certain Cases discharge Insolvent from Liability as to Debts specified.

(63) And be it further enacted, that whenever it shall be made to appear to the satisfaction of any court for relief of insolvent debtors, upon the application of any insolvent, his assignee or assignees, or any of his or her creditors, that the estate of such insolvent debtor which shall have come to the hands of the assignee or assignees shall have produced sufficient to pay and discharge three-fourths of the amount of the debts which shall have been established in such court, or that creditors to the amount of more than one-half in number and value of the debts which shall have been so established shall signify their consent in writing thereto, it shall be lawful for such court to inquire into the conduct of the said insolvent; and if it shall appear to such court that the said insolvent has acted fairly and honestly towards his or her creditors, such court shall be fully authorized and empowered thereupon to order that the said insolvent shall be for ever discharged from all liability whatsoever for or in respect of such debts so established as aforesaid; and such court shall, in the order to be drawn up, specify and set forth the names of such creditors; and after any such order shall have been so made, no further proceedings shall be had in the matter of the petition before the court, unless upon appeal made to the supreme court of judicature of the presidency where such court for the relief of insolvent debtors shall be holden, as hereby authorized: provided always, that no such order as last aforesaid shall prevent any creditor who shall not have been resident within the limits of the charter of the said United Company at any time between the filing of such petition and the making of such order as last mentioned, and who shall not have taken part in any of the proceedings

(64) And be it further enacted, that if after the making of any such order as last aforesaid any insolvent shall, contrary to the tenour of the same, and to the true intent and meaning of this act, be sued in any court whatsoever, it shall be lawful for such person to plead such order, and to give an office copy thereof in evidence; and if such person shall thereupon obtain a verdict or decree in his or her favour, or if the bill shall be dismissed for want of prosecution, or there shall be judgment of nonsuit, the defendant or defendants shall also be adjudged to have treble costs.

Petitioner may be arrested, &c. till period of Adjudication of Discharge.

(65) Provided always, and be it enacted, that in all cases where it shall have been adjudged that any such insolvent shall be so discharged and be entitled as aforesaid at some future period, such insolvent shall be subject and liable to be detained in prison, and to be arrested and charged in custody, at the suit of any one or more of his creditors with respect to whom it shall have been so adjudged, at any time before such period shall have arrived, in the same manner as he or she would have been subject and liable thereto if this act had not passed: provided nevertheless, that when such period shall have arrived such insolvent shall be entitled to the benefit and protection of this act, notwithstanding that he or she may have been out of actual custody during all or any part of the time subsequent to such adjudication, by reason of such prisoner not having been arrested or detained during such time or any part thereof.

Insolvent Lunatics.

(68) And be it further enacted, that if any such prisoner for debt as aforesaid shall be or become of unsound mind, and be therefore incapable of taking the benefit of this act, in such manner as he or she might have done if of sound mind, the gaoler or keeper of the prison wherein the prisoner shall be shall give information thereof to the court

JURIES.

In 1826 Mr. Williams Wynn introduced the Bill which was passed into the Act 7th Geo. IV. cap. 37,* to regulate the appointment of Juries in the East-Indies; the rules and regulations as to the qualification, appointment, form of summoning, challenging, and service of jurors, were passed in pursuance of the provisions of the Act by the Supreme Court of Judicature at Calcutta, on the 29th December 1826.

On the 22d May 1828 Mr. Hume presented to the House of Commons, a petition from certain Hindoos, Parsees, Cingalese, and Mahomedans, native inhabitants of the island of Bombay, objecting to the clause which enacts, that grand juries, and all juries for the trial of persons of the Christian religion, shall consist solely of individuals professing the Christian faith. After a remark from Lord Ashley, that much caution would be requisite in effecting such an essential change as the petitioners prayed for, the petition was brought up, read, and ordered to lie on the table.

On the same day Mr. Hume moved for a copy of the regulations adopted by the Supreme Courts in India, as to natives serving on juries under the 7th Geo. IV. cap. 37. Mr. Hume pressed upon the house the expediency of admitting natives to serve on grand juries, and suggested the propriety of removing the disabilities attaching to them as soon as possible.

Lord Ashley observed, that no official report has yet been received from India respecting the admission of the natives to serve on juries. The only regulations which had reached this country were from the Supreme Court at Calcutta, those should be laid before the house, they had been submitted for the approbation of the King in Council, and it was probable that the other courts were waiting the result before they adopt them.

Mr. Williams Wynn remarked that, with the exception of the

* Noticed in page 115, Analysis.

the petition submitted by Mr. Hume, there was no complaint on the part of the natives. At one time it did appear to him desirable that the natives should be allowed to serve on grand juries, but he had altered his opinion when he reflected what very different ideas prevail amongst them. He would rather allow the experiment already made to take its course, and if it succeed, afterwards extend it. It will be safe and easier to do so hereafter, than at once to carry it to the full extent, and have subsequently to retrace our steps. After some observations from Mr. Fergusson and Mr. Forbes, who both bore strong testimony to the respectability of the natives, the motion was agreed to. The Regulations follow the Act.

RULES relating to Juries in the Supreme Court of Judicature at Fort-William, in Bengal.

Whereas an act has been passed in this seventh year of the reign of his present Majesty, intituled, "An Act to regulate the appointment of Juries in the East Indies;" wherein, amongst other things, it is enacted, that "the respective courts of judicature at Calcutta, Madras, and Bombay, shall have power from time to time to make and establish such rules with respect to the qualification, appointment, form of summoning, challenging, and service of jurors, and such other regulations relating thereto, as they may respectively deem expedient and proper:" the following Rules and Regulations, in pursuance and in explanation of the said act, are laid down and established by the Supreme Court of Judicature at Calcutta, this twenty-ninth day of December, in the year of our Lrd one thousand eight hundred and twenty-six.

(1) All men who on any former occasion have served on Juries in the Supreme Court, and all who are resident householders within the town of Calcutta, and occupy any house or tenement of the monthly value of fifty rupees, or of the annual value of five hundred rupees, or whose property or interests in lands, tenements, or goods would be worth the sum of five thousand rupees, after the payment of their just debts, are qualified and liable to serve on juries in the Supreme Court, except such persons as are hereinafter excepted.

(2) Those persons are incapable of serving on Juries in the Supreme Court who hold any office in or under the said court, or receive or seek to receive any pay or emolument for any employment in or under the said court, or under any officer thereof, or for executing any duties of police within the town of Calcutta, or who are the subjects of any foreign state, or who are under the age of twenty-one years, or who are attainted of treason or felony, or who have been convicted of any fraudulent or infamous offence without having obtained a free pardon, or who are under outlawry or excommunication, or who are lunatics or idiots, or who are unable to read, write, and understand the English language: and inasmuch as there are parts of the proceedings upon trials in the Supreme Court which have not usually been translated by the interpreters, and which could not be translated without great difficulty and inconvenience, the sheriffs and clerks of the crown are forbidden to insert in their lists the names of any natives of whose competence to understand the English language they have not experience or sure knowledge.

(3) No person who does not profess the Christian religion is qualified fied to serve on any grand jury, or on any jury for the trial of a person who does profess that religion.

(4) These persons are exempted from the liability to serve on juries; namely, the Governor-general and all peers; the members of council, and the secretaries and deputy secretaries of the government; the judges and officers of the court of Sudder Adawlut and the Calcutta Provincial Court of Appeal and Circuit; the senior members and the principal secretaries to the Boards of Trade, Revenue, and Customs, and of the Sudder Special Commission; the accountant-general and the sub-treasurer for the time being, and the secretary to the Bank of Bengal; all officers of the army, navy, or marine of his Majesty or the Honourable Company; all persons employed in the pilot service of the Honourable Company; all clergymen, and all such dissenting ministers as are actually attached to or employed in any public place of religious worship, and who follow no other secular employment but that of teaching; all brahmins, moollahs, and other Hindoos and Mahometans actually officiating as priests in their respective religions; all physicians, surgeons, and apothecaries, actually practising as such; all domestic servants, and all persons above sixty years of age, or who are afflicted with any great infirmity of body or mind.

(5) All covenanted servants of the Honourable Company's civil service; all persons who according to the usage of England are entitled to the style and addition of esquire, or of any higher degree, or who shall be described in the lists hereinafter mentioned as merchants or bankers; all persons whose claims to the title of rajah, or to have about them any insignia of equivalent rank, have been formally acknowledged by the government, or whose rank or superiority of caste, according to the usage of their tribe or religion, would prevent them from sitting on common juries, or whose property or interest in lands, tenements, or goods would be worth two hundred thousand rupees after the payment of their just debts, shall be exempted from serving on any other than special or grand juries; provided always, that if any person who is entitled to this exemption shall be willing to waive the same, and to serve on common juries, an entry to that effect shall be made in a separate column upon the lists and book hereinafter mentioned, and the party shall be deemed to be qualified and liable to serve both on special and on common juries.

(6) In the months of January and February in every year, the sheriff and clerk of the crown shall, by all lawful means, make inquiry throughout the town of Calcutta, and shall severally prepare, to the best of their ability, knowledge, information, and belief, full and accurate lists, in alphabetical order, of all persons who are qualified and liable as aforesaid to serve on juries; and such lists, according to the form of the schedule annexed to these rules, shall contain in separate columns opposite to each person's name, his proper style, addition, or calling, his place of residence, the country of his birth, his religious profession, and his qualification to serve on juries, and the ground of his his privilege, if any, to serve on grand or special juries only; provided always, that in stating the religious profession of any person, it shall be sufficient to say Christian, Mahometan, Hindu, or the like, without specifying the particular church or sect of the party.

(7) The sheriff and the clerk of the crown on the first day of March, unless it happen on a Sunday, and then on the following day, shall deliver to the Supreme Court, or to the chief justice, or, in his absence, to the senior judge, their several lists so made as afore-mentioned, signed by themselves; and the same lists, after inspection by the court or judge, shall be redelivered as soon as conveniently may be to the clerk of the crown, who shall compare the two lists, and if need be, shall make further inquiry, and before the end of the month of March shall make out one fresh list in alphabetical order, and in similar form to the two first, which fresh list he shall sign and attest with his hand and seal, as a true and perfect list, according to the best of his knowledge, information, and belief, of all persons qualified to serve as jurors in the Supreme Court, and shall cause the same to be published twice in the month of April, in the government gazette, or some other newspaper published in Calcutta.

(8) The clerk of the crown on every day in the month of May in which any judge shall sit in chambers, shall attend at the court-house with the last-mentioned list, and every person whose name is improperly inserted or omitted, or who is wrongly or defectively described, may apply, or in case of any such person neglecting or refusing to comply, the clerk of the crown may apply to the sitting judge, who either on the oath of the party himself, or of the clerk of the crown, or on examination of witnesses, may order the list to be corrected by the clerk of the crown; and in case of any such correction having been made, the list shall be recopied and finally perfected and attested by the clerk of the crown, and once more published in the Government Gazette, or some other paper, in the first fortnight of the month of June.

(9) The clerk of the crown shall place the said last-mentioned list amongst the records of the Supreme Court, and shall cause the same to be fairly and truly copied in the same form in a book, and before the end of the month of June shall deliver the said book to the sheriff, who on quitting his office shall deliver it to the succeeding sheriff; and excepting such alterations as at any time, upon motion in open court, may be directed by the court to be made in it, the said book, so prepared in each year as aforesaid, shall, from the 1st of July in the same year, for twelve months next ensuing, be deemed and taken to be a true list of all persons qualified and liable to serve on juries in the Supreme Court, and the same persons shall be summoned to serve as jurors, and no other; and the Supreme Court, by virtue of its authority under the IV. XIX. and XXXIX. clauses of the letters-patent of the 26th March 1774, and according to the exigence of the aforementioned act of the seventh year of the reign of his present Majesty, Majesty, intituled, "an Act to regulate the Appointment of Juries in the East-Indies," and with a reference to the provisions of another act passed in the sixth year of the reign of his present Majesty, intituled, "an Act for consolidating and amending the Laws relative to Jurors and Juries," requires of all justices of the peace, and constables and other officers employed in the conservation of the peace, and of all persons having in their keeping or possession any public books of assessment or registry, that for the purpose of enabling the sheriff and clerk of the crown to form and perfect the aforementioned lists, they be aiding and assisting unto them.

(10) The sheriff, out of the names contained in the book aforementioned, shall summon for each sessions thirty-six of those who are qualified and liable to serve on grand juries, and sixty of those who are qualified and liable to serve on petit juries, and every summons shall be served one week at least before the first day of the sessions at which the party summoned is to attend: and of each of the panels returned by the sheriff, one-half at least must be of that class of persons who have heretofore been designated in the statutes relating to India by the term "British subject," and in like manner one-half of the jury shall in every case consist of such British subjects.

(11) Upon motion made on behalf of the king or of any prosecutor or defendant after issue has been joined upon any indictment or information for any misdemeanor, the court, if the case shall appear to require it, will order a special jury to be struck before the clerk of the crown, and for this purpose the sheriff or under sheriff shall, within ten days after the delivery of the juries book for the current year, to either of them, take from such book the names of all men who shall be described therein as liable to serve on grand or special jurors only, and shall cause the names of all such persons to be fairly and truly copied out in alphabetical order, together with their respective places of abode and additions, in a separate list to be subjoined to the jurors book, which list shall be called "the Special Jurors List," and shall prefix to every name in such list its proper number, beginning the numbers from the first name, and continuing them in a regular arithmetical series down to the last name; and shall cause the said several numbers to be written upon distinct pieces of parchment or card, being all, as nearly as may be, of equal size; and after all the said numbers shall have been so written, shall put the same together in a separate drawer or box, and shall there safely keep the same; and whenever the court shall order a special jury to be struck, the clerk of the crown shall appoint a time and place for the nomination of such special jury, and a copy of the rule of the court shall be served on the under sheriff, and also on all the parties on whom it has been usual to serve the same in England; and the clerk of the crown, at the time and place appointed, being attended by the under sheriff or his agent, who are hereby respectively required to bring with them the jurors book and such special jurors list, and all the numbers so written written on distinct pieces of parchment or card as aforesaid, in the presence of all the parties, and of their attornies (if they respectively choose to attend, or if the said parties or their attornies, all or any of them, do not attend, then in their absence), put all the said numbers into a box, to be by him provided for that purpose, and after having shaken them together shall draw out of the said box forty-eight of the said numbers, one after another, and shall, as each number is drawn, refer to the corresponding number in the special jurors list, and read aloud the name designated by such number; and if at the time of so reading any name, either party or his attorney shall object that the man whose name shall have been so referred to is in any manner incapacitated from serving on the said jury, and shall also then and there prove the same to the satisfaction of the clerk of the crown, such name shall be set aside, and the said officer shall instead thereof draw out of the said box another number, and shall in like manner refer to the corresponding number in the said list, and read aloud the name designated thereby, which name may be in like manner set aside, and other numbers and names shall in every such case be resorted to, according to the mode of proceeding described for the purpose of supplying names in the places of those set aside, until the whole number of forty-eight names not liable to be set aside shall be completed; and if in any case it shall so happen that the whole number of forty-eight names cannot be obtained from the special jurors list in such case the clerk of the crown shall fairly and indifferently take, according to the mode of nomination heretofore pursued in England in nominating special juries, such a number of names from the general jurors book, in addition to those already taken from the special jurors list, as shall be required to make up the full number of forty-eight names, all and every of which forty-eight names shall in such case be equally deemed and taken to be those of special jurors, and the clerk of the crown shall afterwards make out for each party a list of the forty-eight names, together with their respective place of abode and additions, and after having made out such list, shall return all the numbers so drawn out, together with all the numbers remaining undrawn, to the under sheriff or his agent, to be by such under sheriff safely and securely kept for future use; and all the subsequent proceedings for reducing the said list, and all other matters whatsoever relating to special juries, shall be conducted in the same manner as in England; and the person or party who shall apply for a special jury, shall pay such fees for striking such jury as shall be prescribed by the court.

(12) When it shall appear to the court, or to any judge thereof in vacation, that it will be proper and necessary that some of the jurors who are to try the issue in any case should have a view of the place in question, in order to their better understanding the evidence that may be given upon the trial of such issues, in every such case the court, or any judge thereof in vacation, may order a rule to be drawn up, containing the terms usual in England, and also requiring, if such court or judge shall so think fit, the party applying for the view to deposit in the hands of the under sheriff a sum of money, to be named in the rule, for payment of the expenses of the view, and commanding special writs of venire facias, distringas, or habeas corpora, to issue, by which the sheriff to whom the said writs shall be directed shall be commanded to have six or more of the jurors named in such writs, or in the panels thereto annexed (who shall be mutually consented to by the parties, or if they cannot agree shall be nominated by the sheriff), at the place in question, some convenient time before the trial, who then and there shall have the place in question shown to them by two persons in the said writs named, to be appointed by the court or judge; and the sheriff shall, by a special return upon the same, certify that the view hath been had according to the command of the same, and shall specify the names of the viewers; and those men who shall have had the view, or such of them as shall appear upon the jury to try the issue, shall be first sworn, and so many only shall be added to the viewers who shall appear, as shall, after all defaulters and challenges allowed, make up a full jury of twelve.

(13) In all cases wherein the king is a party, notwithstanding it be alleged by them that sue for the king, that the jurors or some of them be not indifferent for the king, yet the inquest shall not remain untaken for that cause; but if they that sue for the king will challenge any of those jurors, they shall assign of their challenge a cause certain, and the truth of the same challenge shall be inquired of according to the usage in England, and it shall be proceeded to the taking of the same inquisitions, as it shall be found, if the challenges be true or not, after the discretion of the court; and no person arraigned for murder or felony shall be admitted to any peremptory challenge above the number of twenty.

(14) There shall be no award that any of the by-standers be sworn upon the jury in any case, except it be by consent of all the parties in the case.

(15) No verdict shall be set aside, or in any way affected, for any cause which might have been cause of challenge at the trial; nor shall any writ of attaintr be prosecuted against any jury or jurors for their verdict, nor against any party who shall have judgment on such verdict; but any person who shall be guilty of the offence of embracery, and every juror who shall corruptly or wilfully consent thereto, shall be punishable as heretofore.

(16) At each sessions the clerk of the crown shall make a minute of the names of those who shall serve at such sessions, and immediately after shall give a copy of the same to the under sheriff; and no juror who has served shall be summoned again within twelve months, unless for want of other jurors.

(17) All those who shall be lawfully summoned to serve on juries, and shall wilfully neglect to attend, shall be punished as for a contempt, unless upon motion made it shall be shown to the satisfaction of

of the court that the name of the person ought to be erased from the sheriff's book, or that such a material alteration should be made in the entry thereof in the said book, as would have excused the party from attending in obedience to the summons.

(18) The sheriff and clerk of the crown shall not be answerable for any casual errors; but for wilful omission, false insertion or description, or vexatious summoning, they shall be punishable as for a contempt.

PARLIAMENT.

ON the 16th March Mr. Williams Wynn obtained leave to bring in a bill for the appointment of parties as writers to India, although they may not have passed four terms at the College, as required by the 53d Geo. III. cap. 155. The same was passed into an act on the 26th May, the provisions of which were to continue for the term of three years from that date. Vide WRITERS.

Permission was likewise given for the introduction of another bill, in order to remove doubts as to the payment of allowances of officers dying whilst absent from India. The same was passed into an act on the 26th May. Vide page 613 of the Analysis.

In the same month Mr. Wynn also brought in the JURIES IN INDIA bill, which passed into a law on the 5th May. Vide Juries.

Juries in India.

In the month of April another bill relating to the Company, viz. the East-India Naval Force bill, was brought in, to provide for the payment by the Company of any additional expense incurred on account of any naval force sent out to India on the requisition of the Court of Directors: it was passed into an act the 7th Geo. IV. cap. 52.

On the 9th May Lord John Russell presented a petition from Mr. J. S. Buckingham, in which that gentleman detailed the circumstances of his case, and represented the hardships and sufferings which he had experienced. He stated that his appeals for redress had hitherto been ineffectual; and he therefore implored the House to take his case into consideration, and grant him such relief as they might see fit. Lord John Russell stated that his original intention was to have moved that the petition be laid on the table, but in consequence of what had fallen in the course of the discussion, he moved to refer it to a Select Committee, which motion was carried by a majority of forty-three to forty. On the 11th, when Lord John Russell moved that the Committee be empowered to send for persons, papers, and records, Mr. Williams Wynn said that with great propriety he might move that the order made on the 9th instant be rescinded, upon the ground that there had been no notice of the motion which the noble Lord had carried: he however abandoned the intention, because the case was one in which an individual complained of having suffered great hardship. After observations from several members as to the regularity and fairness of the course which had been adopted, the names of Mr. Abercromby and Sir Charles Forbes were added to the Committee on the motion of Lord John Russell; when Mr. Wynn moved that Mr. Stuart, Colonel Baillie, Mr. W. Peel, Sir E. H. East, Mr. Ross, Lord G. Somerset, Mr. Wellesley, and Col. Lushington, be added to the Committee. This proceeding called forth some observations from Lord John Russell, who contended that it was not fair to introduce the names of a number of persons who had either places under the crown, or who were connected with the East-India Company; and remarked, "that the right hon. gentleman's ancestor, Mr. Speaker Williams, did he preside in the chair, would be ashamed of a Committee thus partially selected."

Mr. PEEL observed, that Mr. Speaker Williams would rather be ashamed of the manner in which the Committee had been selected on Tuesday, than of the addition proposed to be made to it.

The names proposed by Mr. Williams Wynn were then added to the Committee. In pursuance of an order of the Committee a large collection of papers, comprising the whole of the proceedings which had taken place on Mr. Buckingham's case, were prepared, and forwarded from the India-House on the 18th May. Parliament was dissolved on the 31st of that month.

On the 21st March a petition from the merchants of Bristol was presented, representing the distressed state of the several branches of the commercial and manufacturing interests, and praying that the house would consider the propriety of rendering the commercial intercourse between this country and its eastern dependencies as unrestricted as that which subsists with the most favoured of its colonies.

On the 15th May Mr. Wolryche Whitmore, in pursuance of the notice given by him, moved for the appointment of a Select Committee to inquire into the trade between Great Britain and India. Mr. Whitmore had incidentally entered upon the subject on a former occasion, when he introduced a proposition for an equalization of the rate of duty on East and West-India sugars. On the present occasion he entered into a comprehensive view of the general commercial advantages which he conceived was to be derived from an extension of the trade of this country with India. The motion was seconded by Mr. Slaney.

Trade with India.

In the course of the discussion considerable stress was laid, by other members, upon the expediency of repealing the high duty on East-India sugar. Mr. Huskisson, in expressing his conviction that the objects contemplated by Mr. Whitmore would be best attained by abstaining at present from an inquiry, which would be more beneficial at a future period, admitted that it was the interest and duty of a commercial country like this, to endeavour to open new channels and to afford new increased facilities to those that were already open :

but it was its duty likewise, in giving encouragement to individual enterprize and to new commercial speculations, to be cautious not to sanction any measure which might endanger or destroy established interests and rising institutions, especially institutions of our own creation, connected with our interests and specially entitled to our protection. It would readily be allowed that all extensive changes were attended with great difficulty, and should be proceeded in with circumspection and a due regard to other general interests already widely established, and that therefore whatever new measures or new systems were introduced, they should be regulated in such a manner as that, in endeavouring to effect improvements for some, no sacrifice of essential import should be required from others. Mr. Williams Wynn hoped, that as measures had latterly been taken with relation to the subjects adverted to, the motion would be withdrawn. Under an assurance that the subject was one which would receive due consideration at the hands of the right hon. gentleman, Mr. Whitmore withdrew his motion.

Accounts of Exports and Imports.

On the 11th March a return was ordered of the number of ships cleared out from the different ports in the United Kingdom for British India in each year, from 1801 to 1826 both inclusive, specifying their tonnage, the number of seamen employed in navigating them, whether British or Indian, and distinguishing the ships belonging to or chartered by the East-India Company from those of private merchants.

On the 17th April an account of raw-silk sold at the East-
India Company's sales for five years ending January last,

Mr.
O'Reilly.

On the 18th April Sir James Mackintosh brought before the House the case of Mr. Miles O'Reilly, who claims reparation for mischief he states to have sustained from the Directors of the East-India Company. This case arises out of the insolvency of Mr. Ricketts, the late registrar of the supreme court at Madras, upon which subject a collection of documents were laid before the House on the 25th June and 7th July 1827.

Criminal
Law.

On the 22d May Mr. Williams Wynn gave notice of his intention to move, on the 3d June, for leave to bring in two bills, one for the extension of the late improvements in the criminal laws to India, and the other to extend the benefit of the insolvent act. The bills were brought in and read the first time on the 6th June, and were passed into a law on the 25th July.

Debtors in India.

Mr. Hume submitted a motion for a return of the number of persons confined for debt in the gaols at Calcutta, Madras, and Bombay, in each of the years 1826 and 1827, or either of them, stating the number of years each person has been in confinement, and whether at the suit of government or individuals; and at the same time stated that his object was, to induce both the House and the government to carry into effect those measures of redress which were necessary.

Mr. Williams Wynn observed, that he had already given notice of his intention to move for leave to bring in a bill for the relief of insolvent debtors in India. After some remarks by Sir Charles Forbes and Sir James Mackintosh as to the evils consequent upon imprisonment for debt in India, the motion was agreed to. The bills were introduced on the 6th June, and passed into a law the 13th and 25th July; vide INSOLVENT

On another motion made by Mr. Hume, a copy of the table of fees sanctioned by the courts, and charged by the officers of his Majesty's Supreme Courts of Judicature at Calcutta, Madras, Bombay, and Prince of Wales' Island, were ordered.

On the same day Mr. Hume presented a petition from certain native inhabitants of the Island of Bombay against the clause which enacts that all juries for the trial of persons of the Christian religion shall consist solely of individuals professing the Christian faith.

On the 4th June a motion was submitted by Mr. Hume, for a copy of the memorial presented by the merchants of London trading to India, in February last, to the Court of Directors of the East-India Company, respecting the stamp tax lately imposed in Calcutta on commercial transactions; and a copy of any answer from the court to that memorial, and for a return of the amount revenue received from stamps in India in the years 1823-4 and 1825-6, under certain heads, was agreed to. The said memorial and accounts were presented to the house on the 16th June.

Stamp Tax.

On the 10th June Mr. Astell obtained leave to bring in a bill for regulating the proportions of unclaimed prize-money acquired by soldiers or seamen in the East-India Company's service. The bill was brought in and read a first time the same day, and received the royal assent the 15th July.

Unclaimed
Prize Money.

On the 16th June the Marquess of Lansdowne presented to the House of Lords a petition from the merchants, traders, and inhabitants of Calcutta, relative to the stamp duties imposed there by order of the government. His Lordship did not offer any opinion on the important legal question arising out of the complaints, or on that course of policy which the government of India, as he was bound to suppose on some sufficient authority, had thought proper to pursue. The petition having been read, Viscount Melville remarked that any observation which he might make, was not offered with any view to defend the authorities in Calcutta against any charge so far as regards the petition. What had been done was done under an act in the propriety of which he fully concurred. The legality, his Lordship contended, was founded upon the 53d of the late king, by which both duties and taxes are allowed to be imposed; and the Supreme Court had unanimously decided that the imposition was lawful. An appeal lies to the King in Council, who will of course either reverse or confirm it as the case may require. The power was known to be possessed by the government in India. The measure had been sanctioned by the Board when Mr. Canning was at its head; and as to the government having interfered to prevent the inhabitants from meeting to express their opinion, they had only obeyed the orders which they had received from home; and that Lord Petty himself, in 1806, when a member of the board, approved of instructions to the Bengal government to prevent any such tumultuous proceedings.

The Earl of Darnley considered the subject of the petition deserving attention. *

The Marquess of Lansdowne admitted the legality of the act, but remarked that, with reference to the order to prevent such meetings being signed by a certain individual, such an argumentum ad hominem ought not to have been applied, as the party alluded to could only have signed it as an individual member of the Board. The petition was ordered to lie on the table.

On the 17th June Sir James Mackintosh presented a petition to the House of Commons on the same subject from the inhabitants of Calcutta, against the tax in question. On this occasion the right hon. and learned member entered into a general review of the comparatively disadvantageous circumstances under which the British inhabitants of Calcutta are placed; pointing out the impolicy of the measure, and deprecating the haste and little consideration with which subjects connected with India, and more especially at the several periods of 1773, 1783, 1794, and 1813, have been passed through Parliament.* The petition having been read, Sir James Mackintosh moved that it be referred to a select committee. Upon which Mr. Williams Wynn doubted whether, if a select committee was appointed, the objects enumerated in the speech of his right hon.

hon. friend could, in the slightest degree, be obtained. After adverting to several of the topics touched upon by Sir James Mackintosh, Mr. Wynn submitted whether it was possible, on so limited a question as that of the stamp regulation, to engraft the general extensive question of what restrictions are advisable on the commercial and other intercourse between this country and India. He did not think any inquiry was necessary into the subject of the petition, and saw no grounds which would warrant an examination of the question.

Mr. Hume entered at considerable length into the subject, and animadverted upon the general system under which the affairs of India are administered. He believed the Directors to mean well, but said the system they follow is a bad one. Instead of following what he might call the golden rule of Buonaparte, the court reject every information except what comes to them through their own special sources. He also thought colonization might be permitted without fear.

Mr. Astell remarked, that the legality of the question was set at rest. As to the charge of the Directors not attending to private information, he felt that they would ill discharge their duty if they would proceed on such grounds. It is well known that nothing is either done or declined on private information. The Government of India as at present constituted he conceived to be the best that circumstances would admit, and the proof of its excellence is to be discovered in the gradual and progressive improvement of that country. As to a more extended resort to India of Europeans, the misfortune was that too many went out who had neither capital nor reputation to insure them a chance of doing anything else than ending their days in poverty.

As to the resort of persons to India, the principle on which many applications were refused was this, that the situations of clerks and others in mercantile houses were occupied by half-castes, and it would be hard that Europeans should infringe on their employment. Permission has been given on the application of any respectable responsible houses, and he might fairly say that in every instance in which it could be shewn there was a power of furnishing employment, licenses have been given. The local government has also granted many. The motion for a Select Committee was then withdrawn.

On the same day an account of the number of ships belonging to the British empire, distinguishing those belonging to the Mauritius, Bombay, and Calcutta, was laid before the House.

Mutiny Act
Bombay
Marine.

On the 30th June, on the motion of Mr. Astell, the act of the 4th Geo. IV. cap. 81, was read, and a bill was ordered to be brought in by Mr. Astell, Lord Ashley, and Mr. Williams Wynn, to extend the provisions of the East-India Mutiny Act to the Bombay Marine. The bill was brought in, read a second time on the 3d instant, and received the royal assent on the 19th July. Vide BOMBAY MARINE.

Silk Trade.

On the 14th July a petition was presented by Mr. P. Thompson from merchants trading to the East-Indies, praying that the duties on the importation of foreign silks might be kept at thirty per cent. after the 30th October next. On the same day a discussion took place on the proposition for continuing for another year the duties imposed by the act of 1826. It was contended by the opponents of the measure that a pledge was given that the duty should not exceed thirty per cent. A division took place, when the clause containing the present duties for another year passed by 37 to 34.

On the 18th July papers relating to infanticide were presented to the House of Commons.

PATRONAGE, SALE AND BROKERAGE OF PROHIBITED.

PRIOR to the year 1809 the only laws relating to the sale and brokerage of offices were the act of the 12th of Richard II., which went to prevent the officers of justice appointing improper persons; and the act of the 5th of Edward VI., which prohibited the sale of those offices. In the course of the investigation which was instituted into the offices of the Commander-in-chief, in the month of February in that year, it was stated by a Mr. Donovan that he had offered a writership to India for £3,000. Mr. George Smith, one of the directors of the East-India Company, in consequence of such statement, moved on the following day (10th February) in his place in the House of Commons, for the appointment of a committee to inquire into the abuses of East-India patronage. The motion was seconded by the late Mr. Grant, then Deputy Chairman of the Court of Directors, who stated that nothing could be more satisfactory to the Court as a body than such an inquiry, and hoped it would be conducted in the purest and most impartial mode, and that none of those concerned in the interests of the Company would be appointed members of the committee. Mr. Smith said, that though it was usual for the mover to be one of the members of a committee, he begged on that occasion to be excused.

A committee of fifteen was immediately appointed by the house. The Court of Directors passed a resolution, that the Chairman of the Court should communicate to the Chairman of the said committee the earnest wish of the Directors to contribute all in their power to the prosecution of the investigation for which the committee of the House of Commons had been appointed, and to give the committee every information which the records of the Company enabled them to furnish, as well as to meet individually any inquiries which the honourable committee might judge fit to propose to them.

On the 23d March Mr. Bankes, chairman of the committee of the House of Commons, brought up the Report, which was ordered to be printed.

The committee stated: "It is a satisfaction, throughout the whole evidence, to remark nothing which traces any one of these corrupt or improper bargains to any Director, or induces a reasonable suspicion that it was done with the privity or connivance of any member of that court.

"If this House should in its wisdom adopt any legislative measures for the purpose of preventing all traffic in the disposal of offices under Government, it will, in the opinion of your committee, be proper to extend the same protection to patronage held under the East-India Company: but they see no reason to recommend any special or separate provisions as applicable to their case, judging that the East-India Company has within its own power the most effectual means for accomplishing that end."

In consequence of the practices disclosed in the course of the examinations by the House of Commons and by the Committee, Mr. Perceval, on the 27th March 1809, moved for leave to bring in a bill to prevent the sale and brokerage of offices. He stated that the practice consisted, not in the sale of offices by those who had the power to give them away, but in the arts of those who pretended to have influence over such persons, and issued public advertisements, giving occasion to the notion that these abuses prevailed to a much greater extent than they actually did. This was the description of abuse which the law had in contemplation. He had already mentioned that persons in a certain office who had carried on this trade were under prosecution. As there were several persons in that concern, they were prosecuted for a conspiracy; but if there had been only one individual, he did not see how the law, as it then stood, could have reached him. The material point would be to make it highly penal to solicit money for procuring offices, or to circulate any advertisement with that view. Such a circumstance would go farther than any other to check the

the abuse. His object was not to trench on the exceptions to the sale of offices that were expressly admitted of. Leave was given to bring in the bill. On the 18th April Lord Folkstone submitted a motion to the House, for the appointment of a committee to inquire generally into the existence of corrupt disposal of offices in the State, &c. His Lordship thought it impossible, in reading the evidence of the East-India Committee, not to see that there were other abuses in the various departments of the State, and that those abuses were proceeding to a very great extent.

Mr. Perceval was of opinion that such an inquiry could not go to an investigation into the conduct of every individual who might have by chance been concerned in the disposal of any offices. There might be a variety of instances in which persons might have erected themselves into a sort of agency concern, misrepresenting themselves to be authorized by this person and the other who had power to dispose of offices, while with such persons they had no concern, and in this manner might procure money under the pretence of using their interest with the person who had the actual power of disposing of the office in question, while of this proceeding the person having the gift of the office was utterly ignorant. On the subject there was a bill before the House. He hoped it would be found adequate to every object which might seem to be required; at all events, it would be in the power of the House and of the noble Lord himself to consider how far it should be extended. He was therefore of opinion that, on the whole, the inquiry proposed would neither be beneficial nor politic. No particular statement of delinquency had been brought forward, and to a general statement the House could not listen, especially after the Parliamentary inquiry which had lately taken place.

Lord Henry Petty did not think that a prospective measure was all that was requisite; and though he agreed with the noble Lord who brought forward the motion in thinking that some further inquiry was necessary, he differed from him on the motion as worded.

He came down to the house expecting that the motion would be for a reference to a Committee to inquire into certain facts contained contained in the minutes of evidence, and pointed out by the House to the Committee to be by them inquired into. As the motion stood, however, it would be for every member of that Committee to suggest to the Committee what facts they should go into. This was a power which the noble Lord contended could not be given to any Committee, as the House was not entitled to part with any of the powers which it could exercise itself; and he submitted, if there was any power which it could delegate to a Committee, which would not be better exercised by the House itself. If he looked to the motion, it extended to every thing and to every department. He did not say that it would not be right that such investigation should take place if the particular facts to be inquired into, and on which the reference to a Committee was founded, were pointed out and referred to; but he could not agree to confide so general and extensive a power to any Committee. His Lordship was willing to support any specific motion founded on any specific fact developed in the minutes of evidence, whether the motion were made by the noble Lord or by any person else. He was disposed for inquiry of every kind; but when he looked to such instances as his memory furnished him with of the House instituting general inquiries, he could not forbear from thinking that they almost all proved abortive.

Mr. Tierney observed, that the object of the motion was no less than to arraign the whole system of the Government of the country through all its departments. He did not think that a motion of this vague and general complexion ought to be entertained. He admitted that where a specific case was stated, it would be disgraceful to the House to blink at it; but while the House attended, as it was bound to do, to the interest of the people, it would always recollect that it owed something to the government of the country. Was this a mode of proceeding which any one would venture to propose with regard to an individual? If not, why should a different principle be entertained with respect to the government? The noble Lord, he supposed, had some cases in contemplation, for he could not imagine that he would propose the appointment of a Committee without having something to lay before them. But why did he not tell the House what these cases were? He conceived it to be impossible to accede to a motion put in these general terms, embodying suspicion, as it were, against the whole of the government of the country. He differed from the gentlemen opposite on many important political subjects, but neither with respect to them, nor with respect to any man, could he agree to this vague sort of motion. He himself had been in office; he knew the responsibility attached to the situation, and was ready to meet any accusation if fairly stated. But this motion extended back—how far nobody knew—and was calculated to put all those who for a great number of years back had been employed in public situations upon their trial, many of whom were precluded, in the course of nature, from giving those explanations that might be necessary to defend themselves against charges, or to prevent suspicion. He did not wish to throw a veil over delinquency; all he wished was that the delinquency and the nature of the evidence should be stated; that the charges should be specifically mentioned, and the individuals named against whom they were to be preferred, and then the House would consider whether the motion was such as ought to be entertained. Even on the ground of precedent, he did not think that this was a proper mode of proceeding. His hon. friend (Mr. Whitbread) had said that the House might watch over the proceedings of the Committee. But the House could not know what the committee was about till they reported. He gave the noble Lord credit for the most honest and upright intentions; and after what had come to light, he could blame none for being desirous of inquiry; but the House ought not to depart from the ordinary grounds of its proceedings. The motion assumed that the government was corrupt through all its departments, and this without pretending to state any evidence. Even in the abuses that had been found to have been carried on in the patronage of the East-India Company, there was nothing that related to the public government of that department—nothing that was brought home to the House of Commons. The abuses at most reached only to the Court of Directors, who were governed by a separate law; and he was even surprised that a Committee on the abuses in the patronage of the Directors had been granted. These abuses were of a description amenable to law, and to this they ought ought to have been turned over. If any abuses had been discovered to have existed in the public government of the East-India Company, that, no doubt, would have been a proper subject of Parliamentary inquiry. In the minutes of evidence, the existence of abuses at the Horse-Guards had been made out; but this was the only point of which the noble Lord proposed to keep clear. His motion went to impute corrupt practices to the Admiralty, and every other department of the government, without shadow of evidence; and all were to be put upon their trial without any specific charge! He hoped the noble Lord would withdraw his motion, and put it in a different shape. He did not wish to protect delinquency, but he could not consent to put the whole government on its trial without a specific charge alleged.

Mr. Canning said, he fairly avowed that, on grounds which had been already stated, no apprehension of consequences, be what they might, could possibly induce him to vote for this motion. It was impossible, in his opinion, to do so in consistency with the duty which he owed to the house and to the country, and therefore it had his decided opposition. But in giving that opposition he did not wish to oppose specific inquiry into specific abuses. The course was to specify the abuse; to prove the charge, and then to proceed to punishment. But was there no mischief in allowing the opinion to go abroad, that there was a consciousness on all hands of such a rottenness in the practices of government for several years past, as justified the entertaining of such a motion as this, as justified the appointment of a committee which, as it would be unlimited in its retrospective powers, must afford but a very distant prospect indeed of future advantage? Was the motion founded on the idea that all public men ought to be objects of suspicion? Was it conceived that the indulgence and emoluments could be the objects of liberal men in aspiring to office? Were the anxieties, the severe duties of such situations considered? Were these things to be compensated by money? If there were any persons who could entertain such ideas of liberal men who aspired to office, it would be his pride to be an object of their suspicions. This he would say, that if the noble lord and his abettors succeeded in driving all liberal men from the pursuit of office, the cast of public public men must be a degraded cast, into which no honest man could, in consistency with his own reputation, enroll himself. These were the sentiments which he took the liberty to submit to the House. He could not, therefore, let out this wide wasting power which was claimed by the noble lord, a power which could not be allowed to exist, without creating suspicions of the most disgraceful nature, which it would be impossible to do away.

The motion was negatived by 178 to 38.

The bill brought in by Mr. Perceval was read a second time on the 21st April, on which occasion Lord Folkstone observed, that various exceptions were made in the bill to which he objected; but amongst others there was one more important than those to which he had alluded, more important because the attention of the house and of the country had been more particularly called to it, in consequence of the report of the East-India Committee that seats in Parliament were trafficked for.

Mr. Bankes said, the committee on East-India offices had not expressed any opinion that sales of offices in the service of the Company should be exempted from the operation of the bill, but only that there was no necessity for any separate and specific legislative measure applicable to the Company. They had done so the more particularly on this account, because the East-India Company were already armed with greater powers than those which the country possessed, the former being permanent while the latter was subject to change, and dismissal from office always following the one, whilst it was by no means a necessary consequence on the other. He believed it would be a long time before any abuses were again heard of in the patronage of the East-India Company. The bill passed into a law on the 20th June 1809.

The jealousy of the House of Commons was subsequently manifested at the possible appropriation of any East-India patronage to the attainment of seats in Parliament, in the debate on a motion submitted by Lord A. Hamilton on the 25th April, as to a writership having been placed at the disposal of Lord Clancarty for that purpose.

In the whole course of the proceedings above adverted to, there was

was not the shadow of an imputation cast on the Court of Directors, and although it was universally admitted that Mr. Thellusson's confidence had been abused, that gentleman, then one of the ex-Directors, lost his re-election to a seat in the court.

As Mr. Bankes had justly predicted in 1809, during a period of nearly twenty years, only two instances of abuse in the patronage of the Company have been heard of. The one, the receipt by Bascombe, the steward of Mr. Taggart, of the sum of £100, with the privity of his master, for a cadetship which Mr. Taggart obtained for a person of the name of Bennett, and for which Bascombe was tried and found guilty, and sentenced to pay a fine in May 1824. The other in the month of February 1827, when circumstances came to the knowledge of the Chairman, which induced a belief that a traffic either was pursued or pretended in East-India patronage: in consequence of which measures were taken which led to the discovery of facts placing the matter beyond a doubt. The Court of Directors, ignorant of those facts and regardless who might be concerned, empowered a Select Committee to follow up the investigation and to take the necessary measures for bringing the parties to justice. The result led to a prosecution in the Court of King's Bench against eight parties, one of them being a member of the Court of Directors. On the trial which took place on Thursday the 6th March, that member was acquitted: six of the other seven defendants pleaded guilty; and against the eighth, who went to trial, a verdict of guilty was returned by the jury.

It may be proper to add, that the whole of the proceedings were laid before the General Court of Proprietors, and the motion for their being printed was seconded by the member of the court who had been acquitted at the trial, and who entreated the proprietors to pass their judgment upon the papers.

On the 18th June the following motion was made in the General Court: " that the Court of Proprietors fully ap-
 " prove of the measures adopted by the Court of Directors,
 " in bringing the case of an abuse of patronage before a legal
 " tribunal; and although Captain Prescott appears to have
 " acted

“ acted incautiously and imprudently, yet having been ac“ quitted by the verdict of a jury of the charge preferred “ against him, and the proprietors being also satisfied that he “ was not actuated by any corrupt motive, they are not dis“ posed to withdraw their confidence from him as a member
 “ of the executive body.”

After some discussion the consideration of the motion was deferred till the 2d July, on which day after a debate of some length, a ballot was demanded by sixteen members of the Court of Directors then present for the determination of the question; the said members abstaining from any expression of their sentiments on the question. The ballot took place on the 9th July, when there appeared to be :

For the question	408 votes.
Against the question	40

Majority for the question 368

The subject regarding East-India patronage, as connected with the introduction of the amended law of the 49th Geo. III. c. 126, has been thus fully detailed, in order to shew the sentiments entertained by Parliament as to the expediency of confining public inquiry to specific acts of abuse; and likewise the declared opinion of the Committee of the House of Commons in 1809, that throughout the evidence there was nothing to induce a reasonable suspicion that it was done with the privity or connivance of any member of the Court of Directors. In the conclusion of that Report the Committee observed, “ it will depend upon the steps which may be taken “ in consequence of these inquiries, whether such abuses shall “ receive a permanent check or a virtual encouragement.”

So far as the Court of Directors are concerned, they have manifested a decided determination to put the most effectual check to such disgraceful practices. The sentiments of Mr. Justice Bayley, on passing sentence upon the defendants who were brought up for judgment on the 23d June 1828, are as follows. His Lordship observed, “ it was a prosecution insti“ tuted by the East-India Company, and it being contrary to “ an act of Parliament now in force to negotiate upon the “ subject of an appointment of this description, it appeared to “ him

“ him, at least, that the East-India Company did right in endeavouring to sift the transaction to the bottom, and if possible to trace it to the fountain head; and they seem to have acted with an equal hand in that respect, having no regard either to high or low, for if criminality had attached to any one of their own body, they were desirous that it should meet the public eye and be subjected to reprobation.”

All sums of money so paid over belonging to soldiers are to be applied to Lord Clive's Fund; those belonging to seamen to Poplar Hospital; subject, nevertheless, to be refunded without interest to any person or persons entitled to the same, and establishing his, her, or their claim or claims to the satisfaction of the Court of Directors of the East-India Company, or of the Governor and Council of the settlement wherein the same shall have been paid over to the Company. REAL ESTATE LIABLE AS ASSETS.

ON the 23d June 1827, Mr. Fergusson brought under the consideration of the House of Commons, the state of the law in India respecting landed property in possession of British subjects there, and other matters within the jurisdiction of his Majesty's courts established within the territories of the East-India Company. As the law then stood, it appeared doubtful whether and to what extent the real estates of British subjects and others (not being Mahometans or Gentoos) situate within the limits before-mentioned, werè liable as assets in the hands of executors and administrators to the payment of the debts of their deceased owners.

A motion was made for the appointment of a Select Committee to inquire into and report to the House upon the question. After some observations from Mr. Williams Wynn, the motion was withdrawn.

On the 25th March last Mr. Fergusson presented a petition from the British, native, and other inhabitants of Calcutta, in which the petitioners begged the attention of the House to the imperfect and unsettled state of the law on the subject. The petitioners likewise pointed out the want of a law regarding insolvent debtors in India. After some observations by several members, Mr. Williams Wynn stated, that he had paid attention to the subject of the law as to insolvent debtors shortly after his accession to the office of President of the Board of Commissioners, and expressed his readiness to afford every assistance in promoting the object regarding the law of real property in India.

The petition was then brought up and ordered to be printed, and leave was given to bring in a bill to explain and amend the law as to real property in India. The Bill was brought in and read the first time on the 16th May, and passed on Friday, the 13th June, after a clause had been inserted and agreed to, at the instance instance of Mr. Fergusson, declaring that nothing contained in the act was to have the effect of altering in any manner the character of property in India. The bill passed the House of Lords on the 14th, and received the royal assent on the 27th June.

L A W.

(1) Whereas some doubts have arisen whether, and to what extent, the real estates of British subjects and others (not being Mahomedans or Gentoos), situate within or being under the jurisdiction of his Majesty's supreme courts of judicature in India, are liable, as assets in the hands of executors and administrators, to the payment of the debts of their deceased owners, and whereas it is expedient that such doubts should be removed; be it therefore, and it is hereby declared and enacted, that whenever any British subject shall die seised of or entitled to any real estate in houses, lands, or hereditaments, situate within or being under the general civil jurisdiction of his Majesty's supreme courts of judicature at Fort William in Bengal, Fort St. George, and Bombay respectively, or whenever any person (not being a Mahomedan or Gentoo) shall die seised of or entitled to any such real estate, situate within the local limits of the civil jurisdiction of the same courts respectively, such real estate of such British subject or other person as aforesaid (not being a Mahomedan or Gentoo), is and shall be deemed assets, in the hands of his or her executor or administrator, for the payment of his or her debts, whether by specialty or simple contract, in the ordinary course of administration.

Executors may sell such real estates for the payment of debts. (2) And it is further declared and enacted, that it is and shall be lawful for such executor or administrator of such British subject or other person as aforesaid (not being a Mahomedan or Gentoo), to sell and dispose of such real estate for the payment of such debts as aforesaid, and to convey and assure the same estate to a purchaser, in as full and effectual a manner in law as the testator or intestate of such executor or administrator could or might have done in his life-time.

In any action for debt, the executor may be charged with the full amount of such real estate. (3) And it is further declared and enacted, that in any suit or action to be commenced and prosecuted in any of the said courts respectively, against such executor or administrator as aforesaid, for the recovery of any debt or demand due and owing by such testator or intestate in his life-time and at the time of his death, such executor or administrator shall and may be charged with the full amount in value of such real estate as aforesaid, not exceeding the actual net proceeds proceeds of such estate when sold by the sheriff, as assets in the hands of such executor or administrator to be administered.

(4) And it is further declared and enacted, that in any such suit or action against such executor or administrator as aforesaid, it is and shall be lawful for the said courts respectively to award and issue such writs of sequestration and execution against such houses, lands, and real effects of such testator or intestate, in the hands of such executor or administrator as aforesaid, and to cause the same to be seized, sequestered, and sold, or possession thereof delivered under such writs respectively, in the same manner as such courts could and might have done in the life-time of such testator or intestate as aforesaid.

In suits against executors, courts may order writs of sequestration.

(5) And it is further declared and enacted, that all conveyances and assurances of such real estates of such British subjects and other persons so dying seised or entitled as aforesaid (not being Mahomedans or Gentoos), situate within or being under the general or local jurisdiction of such courts respectively as aforesaid, heretofore made and executed by executors and administrators of such deceased British subjects and other persons as aforesaid, are hereby confirmed, and shall be deemed, held, and taken to be of the same force, validity, and effect in law, as if the same had been made and executed by such deceased persons in their life-time.

Conveyances and assurances of such estates shall be deemed good.

(6) Provided nevertheless, and it is hereby declared and enacted, that neither this act, nor any thing herein contained, shall be construed to operate as or have the effect of changing or altering the legal quality, nature, or tenure of any lands, houses, estates, rights, interests, or any other subject of property whatsoever, or of making the same or any of them to be of the nature of real property, if by law, before the passing of this act, the same or any of them were personal property; but that the law in that respect shall be and continue the same as if this act had not passed.

This act not to alter the legal quality or tenure of any estates.

WRITERS.

IN page 168 of the Analysis, it was intimated that the probable demand of the civil service in India would exceed the means of supply, and consequently lead to some relaxation in the then existing law, which required that all persons, previously to their being appointed writers, should have resided four terms at college. In December 1825 the expediency of repealing the 45th section of the Act of the 53d Geo. III., cap. 155, was submitted by the Chairman of the Court of Directors to Mr. Williams Wynn, in consequence of which, Mr. Wynn, on the 26th March 1826, obtained leave to bring in a bill to suspend so much of the act of the 53d Geo. III. cap. 155, as related to the appointment of writers. After adverting to some of the causes which had occasioned a deficiency in the number of qualified persons, he observed, that the measure contemplated was not intended to imply any distrust of the system pursued at the East-India College; he believed that system had fully answered its purpose. Had the question related to the new constitution of the College, he should decidedly prefer its being assimilated to our existing universities, as he conceived it was much less advantageous to persons to be educated in classes than to be mixed together. At the same time, he considered it highly creditable to the College that in the short space of two years the students acquired so much.

Mr. Hume remarked, that the business of the College was better conducted now than formerly, still he felt called upon to express his decided conviction, that it never would answer the purpose for which it was originally intended.

Sir Thomas Baring stated, that a more perfect knowledge could be acquired of Hindoostanee by a six months' residence in India, than by two years' study in this country. He thought, upon the whole, that if individuals were allowed to receive their

their education at such places as their parents or friends thought best, the Company would have the best guarantee that their servants would be educated and effective men. He hoped, therefore, that the alteration proposed would be made permanent.

Mr. Charles Grant trusted it would be made only a temporary measure. Adverting to the opposition which was offered to the College; and alluding to the irregularities stated to have occurred, he observed that they were not greater in number or degree than were to be met with in similar establishments. Since its foundation, a marked improvement had taken place in the conduct and character of the Company's servants in India. In 1810 Lord Minto spoke highly of its usefulness. A few years after Colonel Roebuck gave testimony of a similar character. The Marquess of Hastings had expressed, in the most unqualified terms, his approbation of the College; and his right hon. friend, who introduced the present measure, had stated that every communication he received from India more strongly convinced him of its usefulness. There appeared at first sight something plausible in the opinion, that a common education would be sufficient for every purpose: but this test could apply to nothing but literature; it could have no reference to scholastic discipline, to moral character, or propriety of conduct. When individuals spoke of the proficiency which a young man ought to obtain before he proceeded to India, he took it that they adverted to the lowest degree of proficiency to that which might be fixed as a minimum. Now it was quite evident that that minimum would be both the minimum and maximum. The present system, he conceived, was well calculated for sending out efficient servants to India; but if a better could be devised, be the expense of time or money what it might, he would certainly support it.

Dr. Phillimore believed that the College had fully completed the objects for which it was established, by furnishing India with a supply of well-educated young men. Never did any functionaries acquire more honour and credit than the young men sent from the College.

On the 28th of April, on the order of the day for the committal of the bill, Mr. Denman observed, that it was to remedy the evil of incompetent persons being sent out to India that the College was established, and in his opinion the experiment had fully answered. The requiring a certificate that parties had been properly educated had, in his opinion, a most beneficial effect in preventing incompetent persons from being sent out. He could have wished that the certificate had been incorporated in the bill itself.

Mr. Trant said, that all his experience contradicted the assertion that, previous to the establishment of the College, the persons sent out to India were uneducated. In his opinion, the civil service had been very little improved by the College, which he conceived had totally failed to answer the purpose for which it had been founded.

Mr. Secretary Canning said, that his concurrence in the bill was not founded in any apprehension that the temporary suspension of the qualification from the College would lead to the destruction of that institution. On the contrary, although in former times great men had appeared in India, yet the country had a right to expect that there should be some competent security for the cultivation and education to be possessed by those who were sent out to India. The nation had a deep interest in the question, and had a strict right to be assured that those who were destined for India should have some preparatory education previous to their departure. At the same time, if there could be a guarantee for the general education of those appointed to offices in India, he might hesitate between the present specific and a more general place of instruction; for he believed that, for all the purposes which men could be called upon to execute, the English gentleman's education was decidedly the best. But there were no means of obtaining this desirable object except by the test of examination: of these there were partialities, and a thousand other impediments to operate against the purity of such a test. With respect to the College, it appeared to him that, under circumstances of peculiar difficulty, it had been conducted with eminent credit to those to whom its management was intrusted, and with great utility to the public service. He was sorry that any cause had occurred for the temporary suspension of its powers, but in giving his support to the present measure, he could only give his pledge of honour that he had no such intention as to get rid of it altogether; and if there should be any change in its future management, it would only be the kind of change to which he had alluded, that of introducing a general system of education instead of the specific instruction, which was at present pursued.

Col. Baillie consented to the bill because he considered it expedient to supply the deficiencies of the public service. The regulations of the bill were not intended in the slightest degree to injure the College, but simply to provide a sufficient number of persons possessing the qualifications which were requisite for such institutions.

Mr. Williams Wynn, after stating the reasons why the present plan was the best that could be adopted, conceived that much advantage might be derived from the competition which it would create among the promoters of the different systems of education for young men proceeding to India. He could not see any reason why a young man, who had gone through the usual routine of a public school, and had afterwards applied himself at the universities or elsewhere to the study of the language of India, should not be equally well qualified for service in India with a young man educated at the College. He could not forget that one of the Company's most able servants, Warren Hastings, had been educated at Westminster school, in the same form with Lloyd and Churchill, and Cowper, and that he had retained the love of literature to the last. He proposed to pass the bill only for three years, in order that it might be then reconsidered at the end of that time, when the House had obtained further experience on the subject.

The act of the 7th Geo. IV, cap. 56, was accordingly passed, by which the provision before-mentioned was suspended, and persons are permitted to be sent out as writers on producing testimonials and passing an examination under certain rules and regulations framed by the Court subject to approval by the Board of Commissioners for the Affairs of India. No person can be appointed a writer whose age is less than eighteen, unless in the case of any student who shall have passed four terms at the East-India College prior to his having attained that age. The act continues in force for three years from the 26th May 1826, consequently its provisions cease on the 26th May 1829 unless the act be renewed. As the regulations were not framed when the act was printed, the Act and Regulations are now given at length.

(1) And whereas there is not a sufficient number of persons qualified, according to the provisions of the said Act, to be appointed writers to fill the vacancies which exist, and which are likely to occur in the civil establishments of the said presidencies in the East-Indies: be it therefore enacted by the King's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords spiritual and temporal, and Commons,

Persons may be sent to India as writers, on producing testimonials and passing examination.

in this present parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, that at any time within three years from the passing of this act, it shall and may be lawful for the Court of Directors of the said United Company to nominate and appoint, and to send to the presidencies of Fort William, Fort Saint George, or Bombay, in the capacity of a writer, any person who shall produce such testimonials of his character and conduct, and pass such an examination as, by rules and regulations to be framed and established as hereinafter is mentioned, shall be required.

Directors may, with approbation of Board of Control, establish regulations respecting qualifications.

c. 56.

REGULATIONS for Admission to the Civil Service of the East-India Company of Persons who have not resided at the East-India College; framed by the Court of Directors, and approved by the Board of Commissioners for the Affairs of India, in conformity with the provisions of the Act 7th Geo. IV. cap. 56.

That persons nominated writers, although they may not have been admitted at the East-India College, shall be deemed eligible for examination upon the production of the following certificates :

First. That the age is not less than eighteen nor more than twenty-two.

Second. Testimonials, upon honour, of good moral conduct, under the hand of the principal or superior authority of the college or public institution for instruction in which the nominee may have been educated; or if the nominee has not been educated in a public institution, then under the hand of the person or persons by whom the nominee may have been educated, for a period of not less than two years immediately preceding the time of presentation. The said testimonials to be such as shall be deemed satisfactory by the Court of Directors.

Third. A certificate from the Board of Examiners, to be appointed in manner hereinafter directed, shewing that the nominee has been examined and found qualified, agreeably to the test described in the paper hereunto annexed.

That a Board of four Examiners be appointed, two from the University of Oxford, and two from that of Cambridge, for the departments of Classics, Mathematics, and History.*

That Dr. Wilkins be appointed to examine such of the candidates as may present themselves for examination in the Oriental languages. That the examination in those languages shall for the present be optional, and confined to such of the nominees as shall voluntarily present themselves to undergo it.

That the Examiners meet half-yearly in London, at Lady-day and at Michaelmas, for the purpose of examining nominees.

Rank.—That all Writers who shall be found qualified under the foregoing regulations shall rank immediately after those who shall have proceeded from the East-India College at the preceding half-yearly examination, and that they shall be classed in such order as shall be determined by the Board of Examiners.

That the rank which may be assigned by the London Board of Examiners to persons appointed writers without having resided at the College, shall take effect only in the event of the writers proceeding to India within three months after they are so ranked; and that should any any writer delay so to proceed, he shall only take rank among the writers classed at the last examination previous to his departure for India, whether that examination may have been by the London Board of Examiners or by the College Council, and shall be placed at the end of that class in which rank was originally assigned to him.

Plan for the Examination of Candidates.

The candidates will be examined in the Greek Testament, and in some of the works of the following Greek authors, viz. Homer, Herodotus, Demosthenes, or in the Greek Plays; also in some of the works of the following Latin authors, viz. Livy, Cicero, Tacitus, and Juvenal, which part of the examination will include collateral reading in Ancient History, Geography, and Philosophy.

They will also be examined in Mathematics (including the four first and sixth Books of Euclid), Algebra, Plane Trigonometry, and Mechanics.

In Modern History, principally taken from "Russell's Modern Europe;" and in "Paley's Evidences of Christianity."

Test.—No candidate will be deemed qualified unless he be found to possess a competent knowledge of the Greek Testament, and of some portion of the works of at least two of the above-mentioned Latin authors (the particular works to be selected by the candidates, subject however to the previous approval of the examiner), and also of the principles of Grammar, the common Rules of Arithmetic, Vulgar and Decimal Fractions, the four first Books of Euclid, or the Elements of Algebra, including Simple Equations; it being understood that superior attainments in either of the departments of literature or science comprised in the foregoing plan of examination shall, at the discretion of the examiners, be considered to compensate for some deficiency in other of those departments.

These are the minima of qualification. The candidates so qualified will be classed in the order in which they reach higher degrees of attainment, and such classification will determine the relative rank in the service of the candidates when appointed Writers.

Notice.—Dr. Wilkins will attend at each examination, for the purpose of examining such of the candidates as may have previously signified their intention to present themselves to undergo an examination in the Oriental languages. A knowledge of two of those languages (of which the Hindoostanee or the Persian must be one) is an indispensable qualification in India, to enable a civil servant of the Company to fill official situations there: and although an examination in those languages will not at present be positively required in England for nominees not educated at the East-India College, yet such persons will essentially promote their own interests, by commencing in England the study of those languages, so as to pass an examination in this country, and prosecuting it during the voyage, and thereby qualifying qualifying themselves to pass in India the test required of all Writers previously to their being reported qualified for the public service.

Interpretation of the Test.—Every candidate is expected to be prepared for examination in the four Gospels in Greek, and two at least of the following portions of the Latin authors enumerated in the test. Three Books of Livy, eight Satires of Juvenal. In Cicero, an equivalent in quantity equal to the whole of the Offices. In Tacitus, an equivalent in quantity to the two first books of the Annals.

The examiners expect that each candidate should be prepared to answer questions respecting the Sacred History, and the Geography and Chronology connected with the events of the New Testament.

VOTES OF THANKS

BY THE

EAST-INDIA COMPANY.

WAR AGAINST AVA.

LORD AMHERST, SIR THOMAS MUNRO, SIR ARCHIBALD CAMPBELL, OFFICERS AND MEN, SIR JAMES BRISBANE, and the OFFICERS and CREW of HIS MAJESTY'S SHIPS.

At a GENERAL COURT held on Wednesday the 13th December 1826.

Resolved, That the thanks of this Court be given to the Right Honourable Earl Amherst, Governor-General, for his active, strenuous, and persevering exertions in conducting to a successful issue the late war with the Government of Ava, which was provoked by the unjust aggression of the enemy, prosecuted amid circumstances of very unusual difficulty, and terminated so as to uphold the character of the Company's Government, to maintain the British ascendant in India, and to impress the bordering states with just notions of the national power and resources.

Resolved unanimously, That the thanks of this Court be given to Major-General Sir Thomas Munro, Bart., K.C.B., for the alacrity, zeal, perseverance and forecast, which he so signally manifested throughout the whole course of the late war, in contributing all the available military and territorial resources of the Madras Government towards bringing it to a successful termination.

Resolved unanimously, That the thanks of this Court be given to Major-General Sir Archibald Campbell, K.C.B., for the skill, gallantry, and perseverance so conspicuously displayed by him in conducting the operations of the forces throughout the late arduous war, and which enabled him to surmount difficulties of no ordinary character, as well as for his judgment and forbearance in availing himself of every every opening for negotiations which finally led to the happy termination of hostilities.

Resolved unanimously, That the thanks of this Court be given to the Brigadiers-General, Brigadiers, Field and other Officers of his Majesty's and the Company's Forces, both European and Native, for their gallant and meritorious conduct in the field throughout the late operations against the state of Ava.

Resolved unanimously, That this Court acknowledge and highly applaud the zeal, discipline, and bravery, together with the patient endurance of fatigue, privation, and sickness, displayed by the Non-commissioned Officers and Privates, both European and Native, employed against the Burmese; and that the thanks of the Court be signified to them by the Officers of their respective corps.

Resolved unanimously, That the thanks of this Court be given to Commodore Sir James Brisbane, C.B., and to the Captains and Officers of his Majesty's and the Company's ships who co-operated with the army in the Burmese war, for their cordial, zealous, and most useful exertions, and to the Crews of his Majesty's and the Company's ships and boats employed in the service, for their spirited and intrepid conduct on all occasions; and that the Commander of his Majesty's ships on the Indian station be requested to communicate the thanks of this Court to the Officers and Men under his command.

SIEGE OF BHURTPORE.

GOVERNOR-GENERAL IN COUNCIL, LORD COMBERMERE, GENERALS REYNELL and NICOLLS, and OFFICERS and MEN.

At a GENERAL COURT held on Tuesday the 19th Decem^ber 1826.

Resolved, That the thanks of this Court be given to the Governor-General in Council, for his forbearance in not resorting to measures of coercion against the usurper of Bhurtpore, as long as hopes could reasonably be entertained of accomplishing, by means of negotiation, the restoration to power of the legitimate Rajah, and for his decision, on the failure of negotiations, to effect the reduction of that important fortress by force.

Resolved unanimously, That the thanks of this Court be given to General Lord Viscount Combermere, G.C.B., Commander-in-chief in India,

India, for the judgment and skill with which he planned the siege of Bhurtpore, the operations of which, conducted by his Excellency in person, ended in the capture by storm of that fortress, before deemed impregnable by the natives, an achievement whereby the reputation and influence of the British power in India have been not only confirmed but most materially augmented.

Resolved unanimously, That the thanks of this Court be given to Majors-General Thomas Reynell, C.B., and Jasper Nicolls, who commanded the first and second divisions, for the eminent services which they rendered during the siege, and for the excellent dispositions which they made and personally directed for the assault of Bhurtpore.

Resolved unanimously, That the thanks of this Court be given to the Brigadiers-General, Brigadiers, Field and other Officers of his Majesty's and the Company's Forces, who served under General Lord Combermere at the siege of Bhurtpore, for their gallant and meritorious exertions.

Resolved unanimously, That this Court doth acknowledge and highly approve the discipline, steadiness, and valour displayed by the Non-commissioned Officers and Private Soldiers, both European and Native, employed in the siege of Bhurtpore, and that the thanks of this Court be signified to them by the Commanders of their respective corps.

MARQUESS OF HASTINGS.

At a COURT OF DIRECTORS held on Friday the 3d August 1827.

Resolved, That this Court having been led to take into their consideration the circumstances of the present Marquess of Hastings, and of

of the other members of the family of his late illustrious father, Resolve as follows :

That it will conduce to the high character for liberality which has always been maintained by the East-India Company, not to suffer the immediate successor and the family of a nobleman, to whose distinguished services, zeal, and devotion they are so highly indebted, to continue under the pressure of pecuniary difficulties, and that, therefore, it be recommended to the General Court to grant the further sum of £20,000 to Trustees, for the benefit of the present Marquess of Hastings, and for the express purpose of enabling him, when he shall come of age, to take possession of his paternal mansion.

At a GENERAL COURT held on Wednesday the 26th September 1827.

Resolved, That this Court approve the Resolution of the Court of Directors of the 3d ultimo, granting to the present Marquess of Hastings the sum of (£20,000) twenty thousand pounds, on the grounds therein stated, subject to the confirmation of another General Court.
