KEY NOTES.

The New York Sun, usually so rational and broad in its politics, unwisely sneers at that portion of the Republican platform adopted at Saratoga regulating national support of the state canals. The Sun says the federal government has no more business with the canals than with a gutter between one and another part of the city of New York. The sewer illustration is not a good one. We all know that for simple state uses the canals have outgrown their purpose. The fleece of our meadows and the shearing of our forests are marketed over lines that no water-ways can reach. The canals have been changed into channels of inter-state traffic. Duluth empties its Red river wheat and the harvests gathered at the foot of the Rocky mountains are poured seaward over their untaxed waters. Why should not the states and territories it benefits by direct cheap—or indirectly by its competitive restriction—pay their fair and just proportion in the light stipend for their maintenance? If New York state gives a work as costly as a Pacific railroad, should it also be so unjust to its people as to be charitable forever? The west is too big and independent to take alms. It is time that the government which builds levees on western rivers, dredges bayous, and drains for sanitary purposes the Potomac flats, should do its honest duty. Before the Erie canal was built one hundred miles of the Mohawk was a semi-navigable stream. Bateaus of freight were pulled or poled up its current. And that this river parallel length of the canal now is a stream with the "carries" taken out and the spready waters hemmed in by banks to make a second-story river. Justice is always good policy, and state pride is ridiculous when it exacts an enforced tax to maintain canals for the use and helping of other and distant states.

ROBERT GARRETT is censured for paying $300 a day for a palace car; but if a man has money and doesn't spend it he is a mean miser who has no regard for the public and affection only for himself.

WE ARE REMINDED by the Inter-Ocean that the parties have begun to point with pride, as well as to view with alarm. It is sweet to be thus reminded of the sacred past; but how about the sentinel on the watch-tower of liberty?

THE DEMOCRATIC CIRCUS.

The great combination circus is again on the road. The band will play free trade and protective tariff tunes, according to locality and under the direction of the leader. For months the bill-boards have been posted with picturesque promises of the wonderful performance. The great Democratic tiger is shown in the "blood-curdling" feat of swallowing the Republican party, chewing up the records of the rebellion, and, with both comfortably inside him, climbing a liberty pole and snatching from its top the chaplet of victory, amid the glow of red and green fires to symbolize the new political millenium. Bayard is pictured in the adroit, difficult, and astonishing diplomatic feat of jumping into the English lion's mouth (pried open by Minister Phelps) with a codfish in one hand and the American flag in the other; then turning a Delaware somersault in the interior of the animal, emerging and presenting himself to the American audience, with the fish hand empty, and the stars and stripes metamorphized into the English flag. Lord Salisbury, announced as tendering his services for the occasion, is to show in the great double act of jumping through the Irish home-rule hoop and in continuous flight breaking through the congressional retaliatory resolution hoop, amid rounds of applause from the cabinet and the Canadian and English spectators present. The civil-service farce is shown as a superb dissolving view. "Driving the rascals out" is pictured by showing the veterans departing before the administration confederate police, who are using Higgins and other heelers as clubs. GOVERNOR HILL led the cheering for Colonel Grant at the fair at Newburg, "lustily swinging his tall hat." That is good and manly politics, and an indorsement of the original indorsement of the colonel by his excellency.

THEIR RIGHTEOUS INDIGNATION.

The mugwumps of Massachusetts kick against the local Democratic ticket. It seems that the Democrats wanted their own man and their own platform, and to some extent their own ideas in general, if they happen to have any, and of course no self-respecting mugwump would tolerate such impudence as that. Then, too, there are two or three local federal offices that are held by Democrats, and of course they thought these Democrats should be shoved out and they should be shoved in. The stubbornness of the president and the Democrats of Massachusetts in these respects is matter for the largest astonishment.

The author of little Louis's being, a precocious youngster of tender years, went on a journey.

PROMPTLY ANSWERED.

DIDN'T COUNT.

"What are your intentions in regard to my daughter, sir?" demanded old Rascible.

"My intentions?" echoed De Smythe. "Why, what do you mean?"

"Didn't you ask her to marry you?"

"Yes, but that was at a summer resort."

JUST THE PLACE.

Read in the advertising columns of a Swiss newspaper:

"Wierbach, in the Bernese Oberland. The favorite resort of all who love solitude. Visitors come there in crowds from the four quarters of the globe."

TALKING SHOP.

"You must be a good judge of human nature," said a young lady of a scientific turn to a photographer. "Would you mind telling me what you find to be the most common type of men?"

"Tintypes, ma'am," replied the photographer; "four for twenty-five."

Mrs. Smithers—"Mrs. Rathbun dresses elegantly, doesn't she? I wonder if she uses Godey's Magazine?"

Mrs. Cimoon—"Oh, no, I guess not. I've heard her say often that she wanted her dresses rich but not Godey."

THE REASON WHY.

"Why do people use the word 'cheek' instead of 'brass' when referring to the self-assurance of a drummer?" asked Merritt.

"Because," replied Miss Snyder, "they wish to specify something that is more enduring than brass."

FAMILY AFFECTION.

"Going to ask all your kinsfolk up to your birthday dinner, Brown?"

"No, Jones, they won't any of them be there. My wife says she intends to have only friends with us on that day."

A NEW METHOD WITH THE SICK.

"Doctor, do you think I shall recover?"

"I don't think anything about it, I know it."

And pulling a paper out of his pocket he hands it to the patient.

"Here are the statistics relative to your case. You see that one out of every hundred is cured."

Tommy (aged five)—"What do you do to the theatre, Mister Simpkins?"

Simpkins (a dude)—"D-do to the theatre, my little man? I don't do anything at the theatre. I am not an actor. W-what put that in your head?"

Tommy—"Well, sister Annie said she wouldn't have you around only she thought you were good for the theatre once a week."

WHAT A PITY!

The autumn leaves are here,
Oh, dear!
My wife will gather them,
I fear.
She says they'll look "real sweet"
when pressed;
I suppose she must know best,
But I myself am so distressed,
I drop a tear.

If in any of my books
I look,
Or my papers they are "took,"
And shook,
A shower of leaves from them will spring
Like robin redbreasts on the wing,
Covering up most everything,
Except the cook.

I have begged upon my knees
The breeze
Would not another leaf blow off
The trees;
For it makes me really wilt,
To see the house that I have built
Transformed into a crazy quilt,
By these
Blankity blank!! blanked!!!
Autumn leaves. carp.

THE WAY OF THE WORLD.

New York boy—"Oh, ma, what a funny little narrow belt!"
New York mother—"That isn't a belt, Willie. That's the waist to your sister's new ball dress."

HOW SHE MANAGED IT.
DeHaven—"I tell you what, DeYoung, I have the sharpest wife you ever saw in your life. Why, the other day I gave her just barely enough money to go out and buy one dress, and if you'll believe it she came home with two."
DeYoung—"That is sharp. How did she manage it?"
DeHaven—"Why, she bought one and the other she had on when she went out."

NO WONDER.
"My dear fellow, you'll scarcely credit it, but my wife will insist on keeping the servant we have now, in spite of the fact that she's a poor cook, untidy and a thief."
"Yes, but you must remember that she's also ugly."

It is only when in love that the gambler is satisfied to hold a small hand.

NOT TOO MUCH.
Customer (to barber)—"Why do you charge me fifteen cents for a shave?"
Barber—"That's right, sir; a plain shave is ten cents, but you had a bay rum cocktail with lavender bitters. Next!"

IT WORKS WELL.
Brown—"What are you doing these days, Jenkins?"
Jenkins—"Well, I am lecturing for the anti-poverty society."
Brown—"But you don't believe in it?"
Jenkins—"Don't I believe in it? I am making more money with less work than I have since I was an alderman."

NOT FIXED FOR COMPANY.
Maid (to absent-minded invalid)—"The doctor is here, sir."
Absent-minded invalid—"Well, you just tell him that I am not able to see anyone to-day."

A BIT OF WISDOM.
Found in an album.
"The most effective raillery is that which cannot be answered without rendering the victim ridiculous."
"Conundrums are invaluable in society. They constitute the single amusement which succeeds in making the stupid seem witty and the wise foolish."

HARD TO CATCH.
"When do they hold the post-mortem on the dead letters in Washington, pa?" asked little Johnny, who felt sure he had at last stumped the old man.
"When they open them, my boy," chuckled old Brown, looking very funny.

A POINT IN GRAMMAR.
Pupil—"Is it proper to say 'the weather is delightful'?"
Teacher—"No, you should say 'the weather is disagreeable.'"

CIRCUS STARTS!

JACK L. A. WILSON

THE BLUE PENICIL CLUB

SOMEHOW the news of the strange transactions of the club had got so generally circulated that the room was full at the next meeting and chairs had to be borrowed from the undertaker down stairs, and Bostwick looked actually sacreligious as he sat on one of the pedestals covered with serge which had upheld so many caskets in its honorable career. Before the president could allude to the strange revelations of the Bohemian who attended our last meeting, a long-haired, cadaverous youth with a remarkably well-fitted coat and a pliable, cavernous mouth addressed the chair.

"Mr. President, perhaps an introduction will not be necessary, as many present know me in my professional capacity. You may have met me at watering places where I give readings in the parlors for a sleeping-place up stairs. Or you may have seen me at private parties, where I fill in the intervals with selections from Shakespeare or the modern poets. If so the name of Slidell Banks is not unknown to you."

The president nodded assent and the club looked curiously to see if he had any manuscript sticking out of his pocket. "Elocution has had its effect not only on the rostrum, pulpit, and stump, but it has made itself felt in literature," said Banks pleasantly. "Poems are now written with a view to being picked up and recited by eminent readers. The novel is written so that if the author becomes famous his book will sound well read in public. History is even written in dramatic episodes, so that the elocutionist may hack off an age or period and give it in public. Elocution is becoming the most popular entertainment of our day. Perhaps you have noticed how susceptible people are becoming. Sometimes now, when 'Ostler Joe,' or 'Mulberry Bill,' or the 'Angels of Buena Vista' is going to be given, the whole roomful are so afraid of the pathetic parts making them weep that they leave the room."

Bostwick said he had noticed it, but had attributed it, to a different feeling.

"Sentiment, pure sentiment," said Banks, "or possibly some have been careless and provided no handkerchief to weep in. I have seen them come back wiping off their chin and eyes. But as a literary club I wish to give you a specimen of a new venture in elocution. In this poem, when printed, there will be beside each verse a figure of a man in the attitude and making the gesture appropriate to the text, for you will notice that every verse demands a gesture. I flatter myself I have struck a new thing in declamation, and I only ask that no man give me away. I call my little effusion

A MOMENT OF PERIL

Through the northern Rocky mountains pierces the Canadian line
Where the snowy peaks in splendor near Mount Head in whiteness shine,
Where the shriek of locomotives wake the echoes long asleep,
Where the centuries of silence wrap the pines in quiet sleep;

Where the grizzly in the grandeur of his undisputed sway
Walked amid the hills and valleys, striking down his cowering prey,
While the eagle screamed and whistled as he soared in circles wide,
Where the cataract is tumbled down the craggy mountain side.

There along these mountain ledges man has carved an iron path
Hanging o'er the dizzy edges, careless of the whirlwind's wrath;
Leaping o'er the gruesome chasms where no bottom may be seen,
Then adown some winding pathway where the pines are dark and green;

Where the red man of the forest trembles as he hears the shriek
Of the fire-devouring monster clothed in thunder smoke and reek,
And he, shuddering, folds his blanket round his cowering form and flies
To the distant forest canons where no shrieks of fury rise.

Here the tourist from the city, pale and careworn, seeketh health
Leaving far behind ambition and the lust of sudden wealth,
And the youthful and the aged clad in fashion's latest guise,
Feast their souls on balmy odors and on scenery grand their eyes.

But 'tis here 'mid these surroundings that the tale I have to tell
With its horror and its anguish just a year ago befell;
And the pathos and the sorrow shall oppress the coming years,
And weigh down my troubled spirit, so you must not mind my tears.

Stopped the train upon the summit of that far Canadian hill,
While the passengers in rapture of the scenery drank their fill;
Or picked flowers along the roadside, or drank water from the spring,
Or in parties walked o'er trestles, lifting up the voice to sing.

"All aboard," cried the conductor, "for I hear approaching now
The express from the Pacific coming round the mountain's brow;
I must reach you switch and siding in ten minutes, or a crash
Will hurl us down the mountain side in one eternal smash."

But they hear a cry before them; on the trestle, prone at rest,
Lies a brawny fellow voyager, with a tree across his breast
Which had fallen from the mountain and had cast him on his back
In the middle of the trestle and the centre of the track.

Then a hundred cheeks grew pallid as they heard the coming train,
And a hundred eyes were moistened by a sympathetic rain,
And a hundred willing fingers pulled the wretched man in vain,
While around the curve before them thundered on the coming train.

"Let my wife bend down and kiss me, let my children say farewell;
Do not wait for axe to clear me, for a minute now will tell
Of the end of life's brief story and the future's gruesome gloom;
Lay some garment o'er my features that I may not see my doom."

Then already came the tremble of the bridge beneath the train,
And the wife and children staggered as they backward ran in pain,
When up spake a collar drummer from the goodly town of Troy,
"I can save that pinioned victim with the help of one small boy."

"Take him by the collar, cully; when I say, pull with your might,
For I see the locomotive comes around the curve in sight.
This man's a New York boodler, don't you know what you're about?
When I say 'Judge Barrett wants you,' you will see him quick slide out."

Then with the roar of thunder the express went on its way,
Sweeping off the heavy tree-top as a giant would at play,
While the wife lay on the bosom of the rescued man in tears
And the passengers in rapture gave three very hearty cheers.

But the modest little drummer from the goodly town of Troy
Was the centre of attraction in that tearful scene of joy,
And he said in doing business he adhered to one old plan,
Which is, "Don't unpack your samples till you've measured up your man."

A DELICATE MATTER.

"What I claim on," said the elocutionist, as he rolled up his manuscript and diagrams and replaced them in his pocket, "is the figure accompaniment for teaching elocution. The poetry is nothing but a garment in which to dress an idea."

"Excuse me if I remark," said the president, "that your literary garment is rather low-necked. In fact there is a good deal of naked truth under the guise of fiction."

"Do you consider it right to deceive an audience with such a burlesque ending as that? You work on people's feelings for nothing," said Skaggs.

"Not at all," said Banks. "Working on people's feelings is all the hard work I do, and I never do it for nothing either."

"We have wasted the whole evening and we will sit down and stand adjourned one week;" and the president hit the desk with the gavel in a striking manner.

A well-known light-opera singer and "filler in" of comedy roles said the other night that he thought Philadelphia was more addicted to foolish maidens and slim-waisted dissipation than any other city on the continent. While there recently he received a letter from two young women, well connected and who moved in the best circles of quaker city society, enclosing two tickets for a certain art exhibition that was to take place the next day, and asking him to do them the favor of accepting and using them; their object being, as they said, "to see how he looked off the stage." They said that they would not meet him or make themselves known, nevertheless they would be present and regard him from a distance. "Cheeky?" said the actor. "Well, rawther. I gave the tickets to our property man and the gentleman who manipulates the gas, and made them promise to take in the exhibition. If they did, the young ladies no doubt no longer consider me an Adonis, for the property chap was a terror on looks and the gas man only one degree removed."

JUDGE'S FABLES.

A SQUELCHED REFORMER.

A reformer, whose heart had been made glad by the adoption in his country of the socialistic principles he had long advocated, mounted the platform and held forth to an admiring throng:

"Under a wise paternal government," he said, "comfort and prosperity are assured to us all. The government controls the railroads, the telegraph, and all other works. Everyone will get the worth of his labor."

At this moment a court officer stepped up to the speaker, and inquired, "Are you Mr. Muley Ass?"

"I am," was the response.

"I bring you an appointment from the general council. Your long career as an orator has demonstrated your fitness to be employed in the gas-works, and as you have always so eloquently spoken of the sanctity of labor, you can see how it is yourself behind a wheelbarrow."

"But I had expected to be a lecturer or secretary," cried the dismayed orator.

"Their time is past: we have carried our point. We don't need any more mouth-workers," replied the officer.

And the saddened chin-wagger took up his wheelbarrow whilst the crowd shouted, "The obedience of each one shall be enforced by the will of all."

Moral—Make your reforms for posterity. You might find them personally disagreeable.

EARL & WILSON'S
LINEN
COLLARS & CUFFS
BEST IN THE WORLD

THE TIME OF THE GOLDEN ROD.

Whispering winds kiss the hills of September,
Thistledown phantoms drift over the lawn:
Red glows the ivy, like ghostlighted ember,
Shrouded in mist breaks the slow coming dawn:
Sunlighted vistas the woodland discloses,
Sleeping in shadow the still lake reposes,
Gone is the summer, its sweets and its roses—
Harvest is past and the summer is gone.

Plaintively sighing, the brown leaves are falling,
Sadly the wood dove mourns all the day long;
In the dim starlight the katydids, calling,
Hush into slumber the brook and its song.
Gone are the sowers and ended their weeping,
Gone are the gleaners and finished the reaping,
Blossom and bee with the song bird are sleeping—
Harvest is ended and summer is gone.
—Robert J. Burdette.

As one star excels another in its brightness, so the excellence, goodness and purity of the products of the Empire Brewery surpass all. For family use their Ales and Porter are unequalled.
Give them a trial and then write to Beadleston & Woerz, 291 West 10th st., New York, to supply your home.

Exceptional durability, combined with perfection of tone and touch, makes the Sohmer piano peculiarly adapted to the use of pupils and teachers in establishments where piano-playing is taught.

of New Jersey, Session 1887;
Member of various Scientific Societies, &c., &c., &c.

Dr. Baird some years ago discovered a new vital principle by combining a number of vegetable alkaloids and then extracting the vital principle from the combination. Its effects have been marvelous, and are most marked upon the glandular system, throwing off waste matter through the glands of excre-tion and stimulating the glands to healthy action.

This has been made in granule form, no larger than a mustard grain, and are known as DR.
BAIRD'S GRANULES. They act especially on the Liver,
Pancreas, Spleen, Kidneys and Glands of Stomach and Intestines. Patients that use them are enthusiastic over the result. They positively cure Malaria, Piles,
Headaches, Dyspepsia, Impure
Blood, Nervous Exhaustion, Disease of Women, and all diseases arising from impaired glandular action. Send for pamphlet
