NOTE TO THE SECOND EDITION

I HAVE taken advantage of this second edition to correct some misprints, and to make a few slight changes. In all its essential features, however, the book remains the same as in the first edition.

PREFACE

In this edition of the six extant comedies of Terence I have adopted, substantially without change, the text of Professor Robert Yelverton Tyrrell, published by the Clarendon Press in the Scriptorum Classicorum Bibliotheca Oxoniensis. With Professor Tyrrell's permission I have corrected a few very obvious slips and misprints, and here and there have altered the punctuation where a change in this respect seemed important. Only occasionally have I accepted a reading different from that of Professor Tyrrell. I have followed Fleckeisen and most of the good manuscripts in reading the more usual quot and aliquot wherever Tyrrell (and Dziatzko), in deference to the Bembine Codex, accept in their place the forms quod and aliquid.

To those scholars who imagine that no good (critical) text of an ancient classic can come out of England, the fact that I have preferred Professor Tyrrell's edition to that of Karl Dziatzko will not commend itself. My preference is due in part to the desire of the publishers to have their own text annotated, but is owing chiefly to the conviction that Dziatzko's text is, on the whole, inferior to the later one of Professor Tyrrell, who had not only his own well-known critical acumen to guide him, but also that of his predecessors, among whom was Dziatzko himself.

A critical apparatus, of very brief and unpretentious character, is given in Professor Tyrrell's Latin notes, which appear at the foot of each page of the text. These footnotes have enabled me considerably to abbreviate my own critical appendices, which are to be taken as supplementary to the Latin footnotes.

In the preparation of the Notes I have tried to make Terence, so far as possible, his own commentator. Consequently I have indulged in cross-references to an extent that may seem excessive. Yet this method has been justified, I think, by the fact that in no other way could so many plays be annotated in a single volume, without much burdensome repetition.

The references to Latin grammars are intended merely to confirm or emphasize the explanations offered in the Notes, and have been given, in each instance, to the grammar or grammars which seemed to throw the clearest light on the difficulty in question. American Latin grammars are now so numerous that parallel references to all of them would have greatly encumbered the book. Moreover the college student should be encouraged to use his grammar, and to find what he needs there, without the aid of references.

Although experience points directly to the fact that American students are seldom called upon to read either the Eunuchus or the Hecyra, yet I have not, on that account, greatly shortened the commentaries on these plays. It has been my wish to do such justice to each comedy as the space at my command would allow, and to be guided rather by the nature of the difficulties in the text than by any prevailing prejudice either for or against the subject-matter of the play itself.

Though it would not be pertinent here to discuss at length the merits of the plays, yet it may be said that if judged from the standpoint of the Greeks and Romans, whose life and habits they portray, the comedies of Terence will be found to lean always to the side of true morality. As to the reputed difference in moral tone between the Eunuchus and the Hecyra on the one hand, and the rest of the Terentian comedies on the other, I cannot but think that the marked distinction usually made to the discredit of the former is hardly based on sound judgment, and that, if followed to its logical conclusion, it should lead to the suppression of all the plays. To exclude the Eunuchus from our reading because of the subject-matter of a single scene—a scene that has nevertheless been handled by the poet with true delicacy—is to discriminate unwisely against the most lively and dramatic of the six comedies—against 'the play which was a greater "success" in its time, so far as we know, than any of the others. The ban resting on the Hecyra may be due in part to its relative lack of vivacity and dramatic interest; but it is owing also to the prominence given in the play itself to an objectionable feature of the plot. Yet the Hecyra contains much of the best sentiment to be discovered in Terence's writings, and is at many points remarkable for a delicacy and refinement of touch hardly equalled even in the Andria. Nor are its so-called defects without parallel in the other dramas.

The Introduction in this edition is intended to furnish the student with an outline of the history of Roman comedy, and of that phase of the Greek comedy from which the Roman is mainly derived. It includes also some treatment of Terentian prosody and metres, and adds a word or two about the manuscripts and editions. But no attempt has been made to summarize the peculiarities of early Latin usage. Space enough for anything resembling an adequate treatment of this topic has been wanting; so far as might be, it has been touched upon in the Notes. But the student of this subject will do well to consult the admirable 'Einleitung' prefixed to the Dziatzko-Hauler edition of the Phormio, pp. 57–67.

My indebtedness to the various editions of the Plautine and Terentian comedies has been very generally acknowledged in the Notes. I have made use of most of the current literature on Terence and of much of that dealing with Plautus. The authorities mentioned in §§ 118 and 119 of the Introduction are among those that have been consulted. So also is Elmer's edition of the Captivi. But the plates of the Introduction had been cast before Dr. Robert Kauer's revision of Dziatzko's annotated edition of the Adelphoe had come to my notice. The same is true of the Adelphoe as edited by E. Stampini (Turin, 1891), and of the editions of Jacquinet (1891), of Pessonneaux (1894), of Psichari (1895), and of Boué (1898). Consequently these editions are not mentioned in the Introduction. But I have been able to take into account especially the work of Dr. Kauer, while I have been revising the Notes on the Adelphoe.

I wish to express my gratitude to friends who have aided me. To Professor Harold W. Johnston of the Indiana University I owe the suggestion in which the book originated, as well as other suggestions which were helpful while the manuscript was in course of preparation. To Professors Gonzalez Lodge and Charles Knapp of Columbia University I am under deep obligation for encouragement and assistance ungrudgingly bestowed while the book was passing through the press. Professor Lodge has read the larger part of the proofs and has made many important corrections and suggestions. Professor Knapp has read the proofs throughout, and in doing so has given both the Introduction and the Notes a careful revision. His extensive familiarity with Plautine and Terentian usage, his constructive scholarship, and his discriminating criticism have been continually at my service from the time when the first proof sheets were received from the press, more than two and a half years ago. To his corrections and additions the book owes much of any value it may be found to possess.

Lastly I must express my appreciation of the efforts of the proprietors of the Riverside Press to have the book both becomingly and accurately printed.

INTRODUCTION

HISTORY OF ANCIENT COMEDY

GREEK COMEDY

1. Greek comedy (κωμῳδία, derived from κωμῳδός, which is itself derived from κῶμος and ῳδεν) had its origin in the songs and dances of the village festival held each year at the time of the vintage. This festival was associated with the worship of the nature-god, Dionysus, whose experiences and adventures were celebrated by the country-folk in a species of rude performance of a more or less dramatic character. Out of this there were gradually developed, through the influence exerted by the higher civilization of the cities, two principal species of comic drama, the Doric or Sicilian comedy, and the comedy known as Attic or Ionic. The tragic drama also is traceable to the same source, that is, to the songs and dances which were characteristic of the country festivals held in honour of the god Dionysus. The story of this deity had its dark and tragic as well as its bright and gay aspects, and in giving to the sad side of the story a dramatic form, albeit in crude and rustic fashion, the country folk of ancient Greece served the ends of a drama destined to blossom forth a little later into the perfected tragedy of Athens.

2. That tragedy was earlier than comedy in reaching maturity should not be forgotten; for it was partly on the lines laid down by tragedy that comedy itself was developed, especially in the matter of its outward form and technique, as these appeared in the Attic comedy of the time of Pericles. Comedy, however, did not grow out of tragedy, although, since both eventually became state functions, the one was somewhat assimilated in form to the other. Comedy, in a technical sense, was the result of the union of the Attic cōmus (κῶμος, i. e., the Dionysiac choral lyric, sung to the music of the flute and to the rhythm of the dance, by a merry procession of mummers or mimics) with the Doric farce (the latter a non-choral performance in which the actor or actors mimicked the gambols of nature-spirits); and it was this union of the Doric element with the Attic that gave rise to the tradition that Susarion, an inhabitant of the Doric city of Megara, was the inventor of Attic comedy. According to this tradition, Susarion, about 580 b. c., transplanted the Doric farce to the Attic deme of Icaria, which was known as the chief seat of the worship of Dionysus in Attica. There the union referred to took place. The Doric farce made its way also from Megara into the other Dorian communities, appearing both in the Peloponnesus and in Sicily and the Italian colonies. In Sicily it received literary form and character at the hands of Epicharmus of Cos (540–450 b. c.), who flourished at Syracuse in the reign of Hiero, but its development there fell short of the artistic perfection attained by the comedy of Athens. The comedy of Epicharmus was largely given to caricature, especially the caricature of mythological subjects, and it seldom lost sight of the primitive Dionysiaca entertainments, wherein the performers imitated the grotesque, and assumed the part of fauns, satyrs, and other sylvan divinities whom mythology represented as attendant on the god of the vine. It gave rise to a number of different types of farce. Among these were the Mimus and the Rhinthonica. The former attained its perfection at Syracuse, under the influence of Sophron, about a century later than Epicharmus; the latter was developed by Rhinthon, who flourished about 300 b. c. at Tarentum. To both of them Roman comedy was to some extent indebted; it has even been suggested that Plautus took two of his characters, the parasite and the drunkard, directly from the comedy of Sicily, and that his Amphitruo (§ 34) exhibits traces of the influence of Rhinthon.

3. However this may be, it was not at Syracuse, but at Athens, that comedy, in the time of Pericles, acquired that perfection of literary form which we see in the extant plays of Aristophanes. This was the so-called Old Attic Comedy, whose first important exponents were Eupolis, Cratinus and Phrynicus. Of the works of these writers only fragments remain. But Aristophanes, who was but a little younger than they, has left us eleven plays, and has surpassed all his rivals in genius and comic power. Aristophanes became the chief representative of the Attic Comedy of his day and generation, the comedy of political caricature, with its absolute freedom of speech and its unsparing criticism of public men.¹

4. Greek comedy passed through three recognized stages of development at Athens, and had reached the last of these nearly a century before it was transferred to Rome. The first was the Old Comedy already mentioned. The second and third were the Middle and the New Comedy respectively. The divisions are of course arbitrary, and it is difficult to determine accurately when the first or the second species gave place to its successor. After Athens had lost her political independence, comedy was shorn of its state authority and was compelled to abandon its tone of censorship and its personal and political satire. Its caricature was more and more confined to mythology and to literary, philosophic and social life; its outward form also underwent a change. Both the size and the functions of the chorus were reduced, the parabasis, or address to the spectators, disappeared, and the scenic accessories became less numerous and important. Of such a nature was the Middle Comedy, which was in itself merely a transition from the Old to the New. The period of this transition may be roughly marked as beginning with the close of the Peloponnesian war in 404 b. c. and ending about the time of the accession of Alexander the Great in 336 b. c., when the liberties of Greece had been already crushed by Philip of Macedon. During this time the Athenians gradually abandoned their interest in public questions, and comedy, following the popular bent, passed by degrees from personalities to generalities, and lost its former character and vigour. The most distinguished poets of this period were Alexis and Antiphanes, if we except Aristophanes himself, two of whose plays, the Plutus and the Ecclesiazusae, are more properly classed under the Middle Comedy.

5. The New Comedy was the natural outcome of all that had gone before it. It may be said to have endured for nearly a century, covering the years from 336 to 250 b. c., during which period more than sixty poets of this school are said to have flourished. Among them the most distinguished is Menander (§ 10), who has been called the Star of the New Comedy. Next in importance are Diphilus and Philemon. Of less note are Philippides (or Phidippides), Apollodorus and Posidippus. These six names are also the most important in connection with the comedy of the Romans. Unfortunately only fragments of their works have survived; but these are sufficient in number and character to throw a fair light on the general characteristics of this particular phase of the Greek drama.

6. The New Comedy drew its materials almost entirely from private life. It was essentially a comedy of manners, into which personal and political satire, so characteristic of the comedy of Aristophanes (§ 3), entered but slightly. Even the literary satire of the Middle Comedy could scarcely be traced in it. Such satire as it expressed amounted merely to a mild caricature of folly in the abstract,—sufficient to add humour and piquancy to the portrayal of character, but in no sense calculated to offend. It was to the Old Comedy what the satire of Horace was to that of Lucilius. Its nearest modern analogue is the comedy of Molière. The characters of the New Comedy were in general fictitious, and could seldom be identified with any well-known person of importance. They represented familiar types or classes rather than individuals, and in this particular resembled the caricatures of Epicharmus (§ 2).

7. Among these types were the stern father and the indulgent uncle, the steady and the wayward son, the rapacious and also the disinterested courtesan, the good slave and the slave who was tricky and deceitful, the upstart, the aristocrat, and the boastful captain of mercenaries,—types already extensively foreshadowed in the drama of Sicily, and common to the every-day life of the Greek people. Each character had its appropriate mask and make-up, and was recognized at once by the audience at the moment of its appearance on the stage. The old man might be known by his white or gray hair. Black hair denoted the young gentleman, long and shaggy hair the soldier, red hair the slave. The complexion of the soldier was dark, as if sunburned, that of the lover pale. The rogue was endowed with cheeks of a brilliant red. Hook noses were given to old men and parasites, flat noses to country youths; if the ears showed signs of bruises the person must have frequented the boxing-school.¹

¹ See Pollux, 4. 143–154; cf. Quint. Inst. 11. 3. 74. See also Haigh, The Attic Theatre, pp. 295–297 (2d ed.).

8. The plots, as well as the characters, of the New Comedy differed greatly from those of the Old. In the Old Comedy there was a series of scenes not closely connected through the sequence of cause and effect, but only loosely held together by a central idea, such as "the attractions of peace" in the Acharnians of Aristophanes. The New Comedy, on the contrary, exhibited a number of scenes following one another in logical order, as in a modern drama. These scenes portrayed a sustained story, or at least an intrigue, and resulted in a dénouement, or climax. The central theme was usually the course of true love, and the action depicted the efforts of a youth to obtain possession of his mistress, often in the face of the determined opposition of a parent or guardian, and with the assistance of a tricky slave. The heroine, who at the start was supposed to belong to the class of courtesans or hetaerae (regarded as aliens), was eventually discovered to be a well-born maiden and an Athenian citizen, and her marriage to the hero of the play was the necessary and suitable conclusion.

10. Of Menander (§ 5) it may be remarked at this point that he is of special interest to students of Terence, since the latter took him for a model, largely to the exclusion of other writers; at least five of the Greek comedian's plays having furnished material for four of the six extant dramas of the Latin poet. Plautus also imitated Menander, although Philemon was more often preferred by the earlier and less refined of the two great Roman comic writers. Menander was a pupil of the philosopher Theophrastus, and a friend of the philosopher Epicurus, as well as a nephew of Alexis, the poet of the Middle Comedy. His environment and associations were accordingly favourable to the development of his literary tastes, and like Terence he began to produce plays at an early age. Like Terence also, he is said to have written a goodly number of comedies, no less than one hundred and eight being attributed to him. Unfortunately but few extensive fragments of these have come down to modern times ; and yet these fragments are important, for they testify abundantly to the truth of what others have said about him. That his style was graceful and polished is attested by Propertius and Quintilian,¹ while both these and modern writers have passed favourable judgment on his wit and refinement of temper and diction.² Menander was born in 342 and died in 291.

11. It is not to be inferred from all this that the moral life depicted in the New Comedy was on a high plane. Most refined circles have often proved to be the most corrupt, and culture is not seldom a cloak for that which is void of true morality. Such writers as Menander and his Roman imitators are to be judged, not by modern standards, but by those of the times in which they lived. In the light of those standards it should be said that the playwrights of the New Comedy were very far from giving offence to good taste, and from contravening the rules of the best ethics of their day. On the contrary, they were conspicuous in their writings for the care with which they kept within the bounds of what was then considered to be correct in principle and conduct, and it is this fact that renders them "possible" to modern readers. To be sure, there are plays of Plautus extant which remind us that the limits of true decency were occasionally transgressed ; but even these plays, though often coarse in tone, fall short of any radical departure from the moral tenets of the age which gave them birth. On the other hand, the types of character selected for representation on the stage were those best fitted to afford amusement to the large and mixed audiences for whose delectation the drama of the day was especially created, though there can be little doubt that these types were greatly exaggerated. At the same time, in matters appertaining to literary form and taste the plays of the New Comedy fell little short of perfection. The Greek in which they were written was capable of expressing the finest shades of thought and of polished wit, and the general mastery of detail and of technique, to which their extant fragments bear witness — the result of two centuries of dramatic activity — rendered them particularly useful and attractive as models to the inexperienced playwrights of Rome.

12. It remains to be observed that the New Comedy, in its external dress, exhibited certain departures from earlier usage. Both the parabasis and the prologue ceased to form an organic part of the play. The former, indeed, disappeared altogether, while the latter was relegated to a place outside of the dramatic action. The chorus, too, which at one time had filled an important place in Attic comedy, now became little more than a name. Its disappearance is easily accounted for, and was in fact owing to the very nature of comedy itself. The chorus belonged originally to the religious side of the drama, — a side that tragedy had been compelled to stand by. But comedy had little respect for religion, and was not tied down by considerations such as those which limited the functions of its more serious sister. The chorus, in fact, was a distinct hindrance to the development of comedy in the direction of a literal imitation of human passions and of private and domestic experiences. Even Euripides found himself clogged by it in his efforts to humanize tragedy and reduce it to the level of ordinary life. Consequently, when the comedy of Aristophanes began to change its character and to draw on the affairs of private life for its materials and plots, the chorus ceased to be essential ; and although there is evidence of its occasional use in Menander's time, yet it is quite certain that Menander sought opportunity to discard it altogether. Thus the chorus, in which both tragedy and comedy had originated, proved eventually to be a stumbling block to the broadest development of the drama, and was ultimately either reduced to a mere troupe of supernumerary dancers, or dispensed with as altogether useless.¹

ROMAN COMEDY

13. As the Greek drama originated in the songs and dances of country festivals held in honour of Dionysus, so the first beginnings of the drama in Italy are found in the ceremonies which attended the worship of various rustic deities, — more particularly (in Latium) that of Victory, whose festival developed finally into the celebrated Ludi Romani. The Greek drama, as we have seen, developed on Greek soil, until it reached perfection at Athens in the form and manner already indicated. The Roman drama, so far as its native Italian element was concerned, attained only a limited development; and although it might have arrived in time at a stage corresponding to that of the Attic tragedy and comedy, it was arrested in its progress in consequence of the importation into Italy of the perfected and refined drama of the Greeks. This was more especially true of comedy, which owed its existence at Rome (in the form in which it has been handed down to us) to a union of two elements, viz., the early Italian drama (if it may be so called) and the comedy of the Athenians. The latter, however, was the more important element, — so much so, indeed, that it practically supplanted the former altogether, or at least determined forever the form and character which Roman comedy was to assume, and thus prevented the growth of a purely Italian comic literature.

14. Comedy at Rome therefore took the form of an adaptation of the New Comedy of Athens to Roman requirements and tastes, and the result was a reproduction in the Latin language of the refinements of Philemon and Menander, united with much of the coarseness of the more or less impromptu dialogues of the Satura and the Versus Fescennini. These last were of purely Latin origin. The Mimus and the Fabula Atellana were not. All four, however, were independent of the regular Athenian drama, and were exceedingly popular as forms of public entertainment.

15. The Fescennine verses were generally extemporaneous and abounded in jokes, gross personalities and abuse. They reached, indeed, such an extreme of license that at last they were restrained by a law of the twelve tables.¹ They were generally amœbaean or responsive in character, and in later times were often sung at marriage festivities and in triumphal processions; but they never attained more than a limited literary development. There were clearly to be seen in them, however, the germs of a genuine drama, just as in the rude songs of the Dionysiaca festivals were apparent the seeds from which sprang the artistic comedy of Athens. The name has been derived from Fescennium, a village in Etruria. Such a local origin of the term acquires support from the unquestioned connection of the Atellan plays with Atella in Campania; but it is more probable that the name is connected with fascinum, a word denoting primarily the evil eye, and subsequently the symbol which was supposed to avert it, and which was often carried in procession in Italy, just as the phallic emblem was carried by the Greeks.¹

16. A demand, however, came to be felt for something less rude than the Versus Fescennini, which were in consequence somewhat altered and improved, and united with music and mimic dancing. This, according to Livy (7. 2), was accomplished by certain of the Roman youth, who undertook to imitate the performances of Etruscan actors called ludiones. The ludiones performed in pantomime to the sound of the flute, but, as Livy says, sine carmine ullo. While going through the mimic steps and gestures, after the manner of the Etruscans, the young men would repeat aloud a series of verses of a responsive and jocular nature. These, though no longer wholly improvised, were yet of the general character of the Fescennine verses, and out of the combination grew the saturae, which, according to Livy, were inpletae modis, descripto iam ad tibicinem cantu, that is, regularly set to music. The Etruscan dancers were brought to Rome in the year 364 B. C., and a stage—the first ever set up in Rome—was erected for their accommodation in the Circus Maximus. The occasion of their introduction was a desire on the part of the people to add to the regular programme of the Ludi Romani something in the nature of scenic performances, with a general view to the enrichment of the greatest of the Roman festivals, and the pacification thereby of the gods who had visited the city with a pestilence. The result was the Satura (sc. fabula) already mentioned, which, though devoid of any connected plot, yet, as representing scenes from daily life, was more nearly of the nature of drama than the Fescennine verses had been. The saturae were in fact merry medleys performed by the country lads of Latium on a stage set up for the purpose. The name undoubtedly alluded to the miscellaneous character of the performance, and has been connected in its derivation with the phrase, lanx saturā, which denoted a dish filled with fruits of all varieties, and offered to the gods. This is the common view of the meaning and origin of satura; another view being that which regards the word as designating an early Roman parallel to the Old Comedy of Athens.¹

Whichever view be correct, a certain amount of care in the matter of preparation, and of skill in the performance of their parts was demanded of the actors, and we may note in this the evidence of that growth and development which, but for the interruption due to the sudden appearance on the scene of the fully developed Greek play, would undoubtedly have resulted in the evolution of a native Italian comedy. But the introduction of a genuine play adapted from the Greek, by Livius Andronicus, in 240 b. c., caused the dramatic saturae to be at first neglected, and finally driven from the stage; though they continued for some time to serve as farces or after-plays, exodia, which were added to the regular and more serious performances,—a function subsequently usurped by the fabulae Atellanae and the mimi.

17. When, in the time of Ennius (239–169 b. c.), the satura came to be cultivated exclusively as a branch of literature, it still retained its miscellaneous character. “The satura of Ennius was, in form, a mixture or medley of metrical pieces.” So was that of Terentius Varro, imitated from Menippus; and the satires of Horace, Persius and Juvenal “bear features of strong resemblance” to the early dramatic saturae described by Livy.² But the censorious or satirical spirit in the later Roman satura is to be referred, in its origin, not to the dramatic saturae, but to the genius of Lucilius (about 180–103 b. c.), who accordingly has been styled the father of Roman satire. Lucilius has been credited with the first attempt to add to the personal and serious elements in the medleys of Ennius that character of invective which, in a more or less modified form, is repeated in the satires of his Roman successors, and appears to have been ever since regarded as the distinguishing feature of this particular branch of literary composition.

18. It remains to say a word about the mime and the Atellan farce, which, as has been observed (§ 14), though not Latin in origin, were nevertheless, like the saturae and the Fescennine verses, wholly independent, in their beginnings, of the drama of the Athenians. The Mimus, a name given to the actor as well as to the piece, was at first a pantomimic farce, representing low life; but at the end of the Republican period it had secured a place in literature. It was introduced into Rome from the Greek colonies in southern Italy, where in its purely Greek form it consisted of a single humorous scene or personality. Among the Romans it gradually enlarged its subject-matter until, under the Empire, it had absorbed materials drawn from nearly all the earlier kinds of comedy. During the flourishing period of Roman comedy the mime was frequently employed as an exodium, or after-play, and was remarkable for its obscene character and general scurrility (Mart. iii. 86, non sunt haec mimis improbiora; Ov. Trist. 2. 497, mimos obscena iocantes). Among the various writers of mimes the most distinguished were Decius Laberius (105–43 b. c.), who is mentioned by Horace (Sat. 1. 10. 6), and Publius Syrus, whose poëmata were listened to by Cicero on the occasion of a dramatic contest at the games of Cæsar (Cic. ad Fam. 12. 18. 2).

19. The Atellanae (sc. fabulae) were an improved kind of saturae. They took their name from Atella, a town of the Oscans in Campania, where they are said to have originated,¹ and whence they found their way to Rome about 200 b. c., Campania having been previously brought under Roman sway and influence. At Rome they were rendered by amateurs, usually young men of patrician families, who spoke in Latin, and who, unlike the performers of mimes, were required to wear masks.

At Rome also the Atellanae were raised, through literary treatment, to a comparatively high level. This took place as early as the time of Sulla, when Novius and Pomponius of Bononia gave to these farces a definite literary form. Before this the dialogue had been largely improvised, or if written was at least not published. The characters became conventional at an early date. Such were Pappus the pantaloon, vain but deluded, the buffoon Maccus, Bucco the braggart, and the cunning rogue Dossennus, — personages in many respects analogous to the clown and harlequin of a modern pantomime, and calculated to portray, in burlesque and caricature, the life of the country towns and villages. The plots were simple though generally prearranged, the incidents numerous and always grotesque, the jokes vulgar but telling. The Atellanae also were used as exodia, especially after tragedies, like the satyr-dramas of the Greeks ; but they never resorted to Greek life for their subjects, except when tragedy was travestied. and were always far more national in their character than the regular Roman comedy.

20. The metre employed in the Atellan farces and other early dramatic forms was naturally of Italian origin. It is known as the Saturnian, but its exact character is doubtful. Probably it was not quantitative like the Greek metres, but purely accentual, like the metres of English verse. Yet the remains are not sufficient to admit of any dogmatism on this point. According to the accentual theory, the Saturnian line falls into two halves, the first of which has three theses, the second usually three (sometimes two), as in the following :—

This metre was preferred by Naevius in his poem on the first Punic war (§ 28) ; but it was gradually displaced by the metres of the Greeks, which were adopted by Ennius and by succeeding poets, and were used even in the Atellan farces after these had reached a certain stage of literary development.

21. It would seem natural, as has been said already (§ 13), that a native drama, comparable with that of Athens, should have grown out of the elements which have been described as existing in Rome before the introduction there, on an extensive scale, of the literature of Greece. But during this early period there was little leisure or inclination at Rome for the cultivation of poetry and letters. Roman activity was occupied with affairs of state,—with the passage of laws, the maintenance of armies, the extension of Roman power and influence over Latium and the rest of Italy, the building up of the state on its practical and material side. Moreover a moral stigma rested at Rome on the profession of the actor, which discouraged the composition and performance of plays by native citizens. It was to be expected, therefore, that the Latin drama, whether tragic or comic, should have been, on its more refined and cultivated side at least, an importation; and such it actually was. Greek literature and civilization began to make their way toward Rome after the defeat of Pyrrhus and the fall of Tarentum in 272 b. c. Before the war with Pyrrhus there had been little intercourse between Rome and the Greek colonies of southern Italy. Now all was changed, and the study of Greek and the imitation of Greek masterpieces became the vogue. Finally in 240 b. c. LIVIUS ANDRONICUS, a Greek of Tarentum, brought out two plays, a tragedy and a comedy, which he had translated or adapted from the Greek, and thus opened the way for a union between the grotesque and largely extemporized performances of the native Roman stage and the highly finished drama of Athens. Nor should it be forgotten by those who see in Roman comedy only a reflection or a transplanting of Greek models, that the native Italian element constituted a distinct factor in the actual elaboration of the new drama. This is apparent in the plays of Plautus, which exhibit a singular mixture of Roman coarseness with Greek refinement, of homespun mother wit with foreign thought and philosophy, not to mention the most absurd anachronisms, and direct allusions to Roman habits and customs, for which the Greek originals could in no degree be held responsible.

rounded plot and a dialogue carefully arranged, were enacted in the Latin tongue, and in the presence and for the special benefit of a Roman audience. The particular occasion was the celebration of the Ludi Romani in the year after the close of the first Punic war, whose final struggle took place at sea near the Aegatian Islands in the year 241 b. c. The production of the two plays referred to added greatly to the interest of the games, and from that time onward the performance of Latin plays, modelled on Greek originals, became a distinct and regular feature of the Roman festivals.

23. Both tragedy and comedy, then, at Rome were confessedly derived from Greek sources. Roman tragedy has wholly perished,—except a few fragments and the plays of Seneca, who wrote in the time of the Empire. But even Seneca's plays are occupied with Greek subjects, while the extant fragments and titles of other and earlier tragedies indicate that the pieces they represent were either founded on Greek originals or elaborated from legends of Greek poetry and mythology. It is true that certain dramas of the nature of tragedy dealt with Roman subjects and bore the general impress of a national character; but even these fabulae praetextae, as they were called, borrowed their form and outline from Greek models, and the fact that they have not been preserved would suggest that their popularity was limited. Though tragedy suited well the Roman predilection for oratory and rhetoric, and was listened to at Rome for nearly two centuries, yet it never took root in Italy as comedy did, and was in general of less consequence than the latter in popular esteem.

24. The comedies which Livius Andronicus and other Roman writers adapted from the Greek were known as fabulae palliatae, from the pallium (ἱπάτιον), a Greek cloak worn by the actor. They were called also comoediae, as though no other form of comedy were conceivable. Nevertheless there grew up at Rome, in the century after Livius Andronicus, a species of comedy termed the fabula togata, a designation intended to contrast with the name palliata, since the subjects treated were Roman instead of Greek, and the actors were attired in the Roman toga. The more vulgar tone of these native comedies, however, caused them to be known as tabernariae, "shop-plays." Not one of them has survived to modern times.

25. Of the plays of Livius only a few lines have reached us, but these suffice to make clear their Greek origin, and to show that, in his dramas at least, if not in his translation of the Odyssey, Greek metres alone were employed. His dramas are slightly criticized by Cicero, who says they are non satis dignae quae iterum legantur.¹ But Cicero was not always fair in his judgments, and probably was not wholly capable of appreciating how much had really been accomplished by Livius as a pioneer. Had it not been for Livius Andronicus, even the great Ennius would have been less famous, for the latter was compelled to base his literary endeavours upon the acquired taste of the Romans for Greek standards,—standards that might never have existed had not the way for them been paved by the older dramatist. That Livius was held in high esteem by both his contemporaries and successors is sufficiently established by the fact that he was chosen to produce the plays enacted at the Ludi Romani in 240 b. c., by the use of his Odyssey as a school-book, not only in his own time but for a period of two centuries after his death,² and by the appropriation of the temple of Minerva on the Aventine hill to the use of poets, in his especial honour. Livius died in 204 b. c. His time marks the union of the Italian element of the drama, as portrayed in the Fescennine verses, the Saturae, the mimes and the Atellan farces, with the plots, the characters, the witty and philosophical dialogues of the New Comedy of Athens; and the date of the production of his first play may be set down as the birth-year of the Comoedia Palliata, and indeed of Latin literature in general.

26. The principal writers of palliatae, of whom we have any knowledge, succeeded Livius Andronicus within the period of a century. They are ordinarily referred to as Naevius, Plautus, Ennius, Caecilius, and Terence. These and five other poets about whom very little is known are mentioned by Volcatius Sedigitus, a critic who flourished about the beginning of the first century b. c. and is quoted by Aulus Gellius (15. 24). The five others are named in the thirteen verses of Sedigitus, which Gellius has preserved, and are the following: Licinius, Atilius, Turpilius, Trabea, Luscious. The last is Luscious Lanuvinus, who has been made notorious through Terence's prologues, while Turpilius is known as the author of thirteen plays, of which the titles only have descended to modern times. But the purpose of Sedigitus was to rank according to their merits the ten comic poets above mentioned, and if modern critics are inclined to disagree with him, they are none the less forced to admit that their judgments, compared with his, must rest on slender material, since the works of only two out of the ten have survived. These two are Plautus and Terence. It is noteworthy that Sedigitus gives the palm to Caecilius and ranks Plautus second, while to Terence he accords only the sixth place of honour, putting Naelius, Licinius and Atilius before him. But whatever may have been the standard of comparison by which Sedigitus gauged the relative merits of the poets mentioned in his list, it is difficult at least, if not impossible, to appreciate from a modern standpoint how Terence could have ranked so low in the critic's estimation. Either the judgment of Sedigitus was essentially at fault, or he was in possession of information transcending all the possibilities of modern conjecture.¹ A few words about the first five names to which reference was made above will now be in order. Let us consider them as nearly as possible in chronological sequence.

27. Livius Andronicus was followed by a younger contemporary, GNAEUS NAEVIUS by name, who wrote both tragedies and comedies, and according to Gellius (17. 21. 44) was exhibiting plays before the people in 235 b. c. He seems to have been especially active in the field of comedy, and like Aristophanes to have held up to ridicule persons having political prominence and power. Among these were the Metelli, through whose influence he was thrown into prison. His imprisonment took place about the year 207 b. c., and is alluded to by Plautus in the line: —

A retraction — partial or complete — of his attack upon the Roman nobles enabled the tribunes of the people to interfere in his behalf, and he was liberated. He repeated his offence, however, and was sent into exile. He died at Utica in 204 b. c., or possibly a little later. His fate served as a warning to his successors that the stage could not be used at Rome as an arena of political warfare, however much it may have been thus employed at Athens by the writers of the Old Comedy.

28. The spirit by which Naevius was largely animated is discernible in the extant fragments, which suggest the personal and political tone and independence of Aristophanes. Nevertheless his comedies were all palliatae. His excessive patriotism, however, led him to become the inventor of a new kind of drama, known as the fabula praetexta (§ 23), in which themes of national interest were treated, such as the events of the reign of Romulus, or the victory of Marcellus over the Gauls at Clastidium in 222 b. c.; in fact, Roman history in general was drawn upon to furnish material for the praetextae. But even this essentially Roman species of drama was Greek in outward form and arrangement. Only fragments of the praetextae have survived. But the fame of Naevius seems to rest far less upon his success in dramatic composition than upon the national epic which his experience as a soldier in the first Punic war, combined with his naturally fiery and vigorous temperament, rendered him peculiarly well fitted to undertake. The *Bellum Poenicum*¹ of Naevius was composed in Saturnian verse.

29. But perhaps no fragment of his writings is more characteristically illustrative of his manner and his general qualities than his epitaph, which Gellius (1. 24. 2) has transmitted to us with the information that it was written by Naevius himself. Here we see his independent spirit, and genuine appreciation of his own merits. If his words are to be taken literally he must fully deserve the high place accorded him in the canon of Sedigitus: —

Ínmortáles mortáles || si foré fas flére,
Flérent dñuae Caménæ || Naéuim poétam :
Ítaque póstquam est Órcho || tráditus thesaúro
Lóquier língua Latína || oblítí sunt Rómæ.²

This epitaph is characterized by Aulus Gellius as plenum superbiae Campanae, “full of Campanian arrogance,” from which the inference has been drawn that Naevius was a native of Campania; but the active interference of the tribunes on his behalf, and the fact of the existence in Rome of a plebeian Gens Naevia render it more probable that he was by birth a Roman citizen.¹ Weight is added to this assumption also by the strong political partisanship and bias, leaning always to the side of the Plebs, which his plays exhibited. However this may be, the fragments of Naevius which have reached us indicate that he was a true Roman in spirit at least, and that he possessed uncommon originality and power in his use of the Latin tongue.

30. The popularity of Naevius was thrown somewhat into the shade by his younger contemporary, TITUS MACCIUS PLAUTUS,² concerning whose life very little is known. The year of Plautus' birth is uncertain, but it was about 254 b. c., and Sarsina, a town in Umbria, was his birthplace. His parents were poor but free, and must have brought him to Rome when a boy. There, according to Gellius, from whom the principal facts of his life are derived, he found employment quite early in life in operis artificum scaenicorum (Gell. 3. 3. 14), that is, in work connected with the stage. The money he saved while thus engaged he lost subsequently in foreign trade. Returning to Rome he was reduced to the necessity of working for hire in a treadmill. But his former associations with the theatre led him to attempt to turn his experience to account, and he set to work to write plays. In this occupation he discovered his true calling in life, when he may have been about thirty years of age, and until his death in 184 b. c. he devoted himself to the business of making Latin versions of Greek comedies. Of these he is reported to have written one hundred and thirty (see Gell. 3. 3. 12).

31. The plays that have come down to us are twenty-one in number, if we may include the Vidularia, of which only a few fragments have been preserved. The names of the remaining twenty are:—

Amphitruo	Casina	Menaechmi	Persa
Asinaria	Cistellaria	Mercator	Rudens
Aulularia	Curculio	Miles Gloriosus	Stichus
Bacchides	Epidicus	Poenulus	Trinummus
Captiui	Mostellaria	Pseudolonus	Truculentus

These, with the Vidularia, are perhaps¹ the same as the twenty-one selected by Varro out of the one hundred and thirty already alluded to, and set down by that learned man — if Gellius (3. 3. 1) has reported him correctly — as universally acknowledged to be from the pen of Plautus himself (consensu omnium Plauti esse censebantur). The term fabulae Varronianae applied to this list of dramas is somewhat inexact, since it seems to make Varro himself responsible for the genuineness of the plays in question, whereas Varro merely reports the judgment passed upon them by others.² The great popularity of Plautus was often the occasion of the unfair use of his name in connection with the authorship of new plays, the names of whose real authors were not disclosed. To so great an extent was this true that out of the large number of plays ascribed to Plautus not more than nineteen, over and above the so-called Varronianae, were regarded in the time of Gellius as having any claim whatever to authenticity ; the rest, amounting to ninety, were deemed to be spurious.

32. That Plautus was not a slavish imitator of his Greek originals is made apparent by reference to his plays, in which other influences are traceable beside the inspiration afforded by the Greek model itself (§ 21). Much of the coarse wit and rougery with which his plays abound may have been suggested by the Atellan farce, which was introduced into Rome about the time when Plautus began to write for the stage ; and the effect upon his mind of the Roman festivals, whose merriment and spirit of revelry he was fain to imitate in his dramas, would account for that absence of moral tone, and extreme looseness of conduct, for which some of his plays are noted. But Plautus did not lack an example to justify him in introducing this element into his writings, since Aristophanes had done the same before him, only using instead the language of the Dionysiac revels, than which nothing could be more glaringly opposed to the proprieties of modern life. Another influence too may have been at work to lead Plautus away from strict adherence to his Attic models of the New Comedy, — an influence suggested by Horace (Epist. 2. 1. 58), who accuses him of imitating the Sicilian Epicharmus (§ 2). Now Epicharmus was essentially refined ; yet his comedy was of the nature of burlesque, like the Doric farce (§2) from which it was developed, and that this should have affected the Plautine comedy, which was so open to neighbouring influences, would not have been strange. In general, there is good reason to believe that Plautus, like Shakespeare, availed himself of all the resources within his reach, and that this fact gave to his writings a character which they could not have possessed had he, like Terence, confined himself chiefly to the materials afforded him by the New Comedy of Athens. Accordingly the plays of Plautus, while manifestly Greek in their outward conditions, their form, and much of their manner and spirit, are yet in no slight degree Roman or Italian in substance and sentiment. The dialogues abound in Roman formulæ, proverbs, and plays on words; in alliteration, assonance, and instances of asyndeton, — all of which are peculiarly characteristic of early Roman poetry. There are references to places in Rome and Italy, to Roman magistrates and officials, to public business at home and in the colonies, to public games, Roman religion, Roman laws, customs and institutions, and to recent events in Roman history.¹ These, and many other allusions to modes of life and human occupations, which, if not always exclusively Roman, were at least not wholly Greek, bear witness to his versatility, resourcefulness and originality, as well as to a free, not to say inartistic, treatment of his acknowledged models. His strength lay not so much in his constructive skill, for which he depended on the Greeks, as in the wit and humour and freshness of his details, — characteristics more nearly calculated to appeal to a boorish and uncultivated audience such as Plautus endeavoured to please, than a careful handling of the incidents of the plot or a close adherence to the refinements of the Greek stage.

33. Yet Plautus makes no secret of the fact that his plays are fundamentally Greek, and that in exhibiting them he is introducing his audience to a representation of Greek habits, morals and customs. He does not hesitate to use the word barbarus as the Greeks used it, that is, in reference to Italian or Roman manners. He fills his plays with Latinized Greek words, and compounds put together in the Greek fashion, and uses extraordinary and ridiculous patronymics as only a Greek could do, — in all of which he is not merely Greek, but even Aristophanic, since such extravagance of expression belonged rather to the Old Comedy of Athens than to that of Diphilus and Menander. Plautus makes frequent reference also to Greek scenes, cities and money, to the sea, the harbour, and the arrival and departure of ships; and while the names of his plays are mostly Latin, those of his personages, their dress, manners and general behaviour, are evidently intended to convey the impression that Greek, not Roman life is being portrayed.

34. Half of his plays at least may fairly be called good comedies. These are: Amphitruo, Aulularia, Bacchides, Captiui, Menaechmi, Miles, Mostellaria, Pseudolonus, Rudens, Trinummus. It is a question whether we should not omit the Amphitruo from this list on account of its apparent blasphemy, and substitute in its place the Epidicus. But putting aside the part played by Jupiter in the Amphitruo, and the comments of Mercury upon that part, the play is a comedy pure and simple, and has been fairly described as one of the best of the plays of Plautus.¹ The ten (or eleven) plays above mentioned, without reference to the rest, are sufficient to show how wide was the range of experience and observation for which Plautus is justly famous, and how vastly in this respect is he superior to Terence; but there are five of these for which a preference may be distinctly felt, on the ground of their superiority to the remainder of the Plautine comedies, in variety of interest, style, character-painting and the development of the plot. These five are: Aulularia, Captiui, Menaechmi, Pseudolonus, Rudens, — unless for the Rudens we substitute the Bacchides.

35. All of the plays are based on Greek originals; the Casina and Rudens are known to have been taken from plays of Diphilus, the Mercator and Trinummus from plays of Philemon, the Asinaria from a play of Demophilus, the Bacchides most probably from one by Menander. Many of them have been imitated² in modern times, e. g., the Amphitruo by Molière and Dryden in plays of the same name, the Aulularia by Molière in L'Avare, and the Menaechmi by Shakespeare in the Comedy of Errors.

36. Though Plautus did little to elevate the morals of his hearers, his influence, on the whole, was good. The Romans in his day were a nation of soldiers, without polish, and almost wholly lacking in literary sense ; hence Plautus was compelled to bring down, as it were, the fine productions of Menander and Philemon to the level of their clownish and more or less brutal tastes. But he was capable of higher things, and his efforts were in general directed toward the improvement of the public taste and character. Had he lived in a more refined generation he certainly would not have provoked the unfavourable criticism of Horace (Epist. 2. 1. 170 ff.). Cicero and Varro and Aelius Stilo¹ speak in his praise, and in modern times his influence upon literature has been extensive. Especially did he do much to improve the Latin language, which underwent, at his hands, a process of cultivation and enrichment that carried it far on its way towards its subsequent classical perfection. His epitaph, mentioned by Varro,² testifies to the hold he had on his contemporaries, and if written, as Gellius supposed, by Plautus himself, exhibits the poet as fully conscious of his own powers, and of the appreciation accorded him by the people :—

Postquam est mortem aptus Plautus, Comoedia luget,
Scaena est deserta ac dein Risus, Ludus Jocusque
Et Numeri innumeri simul omnes conlacerumarunt :—

“ When death took Plautus in his grasp, a suit of sables Comedy puts on ; abandoned is the stage, and then it was that Laughter, Sport and Merriment, and Rhythms numberless all wept in concert.”³

37. At this point it is proper to mention the poet QUINTUS ENNIUS, who, as a writer of comedies, comes next after Plautus in time, though not in order of merit. There is no evidence to show that his comedies met with much success or appreciation. Not one of them has descended to modern times, and even the fragments⁴ are hardly of sufficient importance to deserve notice. In the canon of Sedigitus he is placed last. He is mentioned, however, in complimentary phrase by Terence in the prologue to the Andria, though the reference there is not to the quality of his comedies. But as a writer of tragedies and of saturae Eunius won distinction, and the fragments which survive under the title of *Ambracia*¹ have been thought to belong to a Praetexta.² Especially is Ennius noted for his epic poem entitled Annales, the extant fragments of which are very considerable. This poem deals with the history of Rome, beginning with the wanderings of Æneas and continuing until the poet's own times are reached. The extent of the subject rendered necessary a division of the poem into eighteen books, in which respect it contrasted with the epic of Naevius, whose story of the Punic war could be told in a single narrative. Ennius was born at Rudiae (now Rugge) in 239 b. c., and was in speech and education a Greek; but as the Oscan dialect was much spoken in southern Italy he was familiar with that also. He afterwards learned Latin, and thus became expert in three different languages, — a fact that caused him to speak of himself as having tria corda, or three souls.³ Ennius went to Rome in 204 b. c., where he gave instruction utrāque lingua (Suet. De Gram. 1), and rose through his writings to intimacy with the great. His arrival in Rome was an event of the utmost importance to the future character and development of Roman literature, for there he did more than any other writer to establish Greek standards as opposed to Italian, and thus to determine the course which the stream of literary production at Rome should eventually follow. He lived in humble circumstances on the Aventine hill, and had for his friend and fellow-lodger the poet Statius Caecilius. He died in 169 b. c.

38. STATIUS CAECILIUS survived Ennius by only one year. In the history of Roman comedy, he, and not Ennius, is conspicuous as the successor of Plautus, for his reputation as a writer of palliate was far greater among the ancients than that of the author of the Annales. Caecilius was an Insubrian Gaul, who came to Rome, probably as a prisoner of war, about 194 b. c. There he was liberated by his master, a member of the Caecilian gens, and took his name.⁴ When he began to write, Plautus was at the height of his reputation and influence, — an elevation to which Caecilius was not destined to attain.

His success, great as it became, was neither so rapid nor so pronounced as that of Plautus, and the popularity which he acquired after Plautus' death was at least in some measure due to the skill of the actor, Ambivius Turpio. Caecilius wrote comedies only,—most of them modelled on plays of Menander. The Greek original was a thing of far greater importance to him than it had been to Plantus, though at the start he was much inclined to freedom in his treatment of his Attic models. At a later period this independence was modified in the interest of the increasing predilection of the Romans for things Greek, and Caecilius began to adhere with greater fidelity to his literary sources. Thus the way was paved for the still more refined methods of Terence. Of the many plays of Caecilius a few fragments have been preserved and forty titles, most of which are Greek. The fragments under a given title are seldom sufficient to afford a clear idea of the action of the drama they represent, those belonging to the comedy named Plocium, or "The Necklace," being perhaps the least obscure in this respect.¹ By comparing several passages taken from this comedy with their Greek originals, Gellius (2. 23) undertakes to show how far Caecilius was a literal translator, and to what extent he altered or departed from his model. From this comparison it appears that Caecilius introduced a certain coarseness into his plays, for which Menander at least is hardly to be held responsible.

39. But whatever may have been his success in the beginning (we may infer from the reference to him in Terence, Hec. 2. 14, that it was not very great), it is evident from the large number of the titles of his plays that he ultimately gained the sympathy and appreciation which he sought. Volcatius Sedigitus, as has been noticed, gives him first place in his list, and the verdict of Horace (Epist. 2. 1. 59) regarding him,

Vincere Caecilius grauitate, Terentius arte (dicitur), is certainly not unfavourable, while Varro commends him for skill in the management of his plots. Varro's words, however, in argumentis Caecilius poscit palmarum,¹ may mean nothing more than that he selected the best plays for translation. Cicero appears to have criticized his style, while admitting his ability as a comic poet. Caecilius died in 168 B.C. Among his immediate successors was the poet Luscius Lanuvinus, an older contemporary of Terence, whose writings have wholly perished.

40. Latin literature takes an important step in its development with the arrival on the scene of PUBLIUS TERENTIUS AFER. Much as Plautus had done to improve the language and refine the stage, yet, as we have seen, he was hindered in his efforts by the lack of culture in his audiences. It was otherwise with Terence. In the interval of time which separated the two poets, a society of literary men had grown up at Rome, whose tastes were dominated by admiration of Greek literature and culture. It was in this circle that Terence moved and formed his literary aspirations and ideals. It was natural therefore that his main purpose should have differed from that of Plautus, and that, instead of aiming to secure the applause of the people, he should have directed his efforts especially toward the attainment of elegance and correctness of expression, and toward symmetry in the elaboration of his plots. The best way to bring about these results, and the surest method by which to build up a national literature, lay, as he believed, in a faithful reproduction of the works of Greek genius. Accordingly he set himself to the task of Hellenizing Roman comedy more completely, and by a close imitation of his Greek models he succeeded in combining with the better and purer Latin of the cultivated class much of the flexibility, delicacy and smoothness of Attic idiom.

41. Our knowledge of the life of P. Terentius Afer, commonly known as Terence, is derived chiefly from Donatus (a commentator and grammarian of the fourth century A. D.), who in the introduction to his commentary on Terence's plays has preserved an extract taken from Suetonius' work, De Poetis. This work is a part of Suetonius' comprehensive treatise, now lost, entitled, De Viris Illustribus.² Some of the statements contained in the Life are confirmed by later writers, and light is thrown on the literary and personal relations of the poet by the prologues to the several plays. The date of his birth is uncertain, though the year generally accepted is 185 b. c., and this accords with the statement of Suetonius, that Terence was in his twenty-fifth year when he set out for Greece in 160 b. c. But this assertion is based on the assumption that Terence was of the same age as Scipio Africanus the younger, whereas the evidence that the two men were born in the same year is very slight. On the other hand, if the Suetonian biography be correct, Terence must have been only nineteen years old when he brought out the Andria, his first play, in 166 b. c. But the Andria is too finished a production to have been the work of so young a man. It bears evidence of having been the result of much study, and of considerable experience in the calling of a playwright. It is possible therefore that Terence was older at this time than many of his critics have supposed. It is indeed likely that he was born about 190 b. c.¹ At any rate, the fact that he is mentioned as the aequalis of Scipio and Laelius by Nepos, whom Suetonius quotes, need not be taken to mean more than that he was their companion, and somewhat near their age, especially as Fenestella (an antiquarian of the Augustan period also quoted by Suetonius) distinctly represents the poet as older than either of them.

42. Terence is said to have been a native of Carthage, and to have been brought to Rome as a slave, in his childhood, where he was educated like a freeman, by M. Terentius Lucanus, the senator, by whom he was afterwards set free. Although originally a slave, he cannot have been a prisoner of war, as there was no war between Rome and Carthage during his lifetime. He may, however, have fallen into the hands of a slave-dealer at Carthage, since many of the native African tribes were subject to the Carthaginians, and there must have been in Carthage enslaved Afri whose children were in like bondage with their 1860), p. 26 ff., or Ritschl, Opusc. 3 (Leipzig, 1877), p. 204 ff.; Suetonius ed. by Roth (in the Teubner Series), p. 291, or the Vita at beginning of this volume.

parents. The children of such parents were often sold into foreign lands, and it is easy to conceive how Terence, if born at Carthage under these or similar circumstances, may have been sold by a slave-dealer to Lucanus at Rome. Some such explanation of his origin and deportation to Rome is justified in part by his cognomen Afer, which points to his having been of other than Phoenician blood. Had he been of Phoenician origin, the last of his three names would more naturally have been Poenulus, since the Carthaginians were commonly distinguished from the Africans, and it was customary in giving names to slaves to indicate the nation to which they belonged.¹ On receiving his freedom Terence would naturally have added to his praenomen Publius (the origin of which is unknown), the gentile name of his master, which would then become his nomen, while as a surname he might retain the title of "the African" as a mark of peculiar distinction.

43. Terence is said to have been "of medium stature, graceful in person, and of dark complexion,"—physical characteristics not uncommon among the Libyphoenicians. Undoubtedly his personal attractions and intellectual gifts, which had been the occasion of his obtaining his freedom, were the cause also of his permanent reception within the aristocratic circle of younger literary men at Rome, to whom he had become partly known while he was still a member of his master's household. This circle included many of the nobility, to whom chiefly at that time was owing the introduction into Roman life of Greek culture and refinement; for it was the patrician, rather than the plebeian, who assumed the task of Hellenizing society, and making Greek literature a joy forever to the Roman consciousness.

44. Among the youths of noble birth who were friends of Terence and members of the literary coterie of which we have been speaking was Scipio Africanus the younger. He it was who gave his name to what has since been known as the Scipionic circle of litterati,—a relatively small community of persons who made Greek literature their special study, and Greek refinement and education their standard. To this little group belonged also Gaius Laelius and L. Furius Philus, as well as other youths of the noblest families; while older men, of literary attainments and official rank, such as Sulpicius Gallus, Q. Fabius Labeo, and M. Popilius, were not excluded.¹ It was men of this class and character that Terence especially endeavoured to please with his comedies. To the general public he seems to have been indifferent. He even held himself aloof from the guild of poets.² Otherwise it is hardly possible that he should have been entirely unknown to Caecilius at the time when, at the bidding of the Aediles, to whom he had taken his play entitled the Andria for acceptance, he visited the aged poet for the purpose of submitting to him the first result of his literary and artistic endeavours. He found Caecilius at dinner, and being a stranger and somewhat meanly clad he was invited to read from a stool placed at the foot of the couch on which the literary veteran was reclining. After reciting a few verses, however, he was summoned by Caecilius to a place on the festal couch, and invited to share the delicacies of the table. The recitation was then concluded amid much applause. The story, though a pretty one, is thought by Sellar to be apocryphal.³ Chronological considerations also throw doubt on it; for if, as Jerome tells us, Caecilius died in 168 b. c., we must assume that the meeting with Terence took place two years before the Andria appeared on the stage. Yet the Eusebian Chronicle gives the substance of the tale, and Jerome's statement regarding the death of Caecilius may be incorrect.⁴ Moreover it is not impossible that the event described in the narrative may have taken place two years before Terence's play was actually "brought out."

45. Having gained the support of Caecilius and Scipio and other members of the literary and aristocratic party at Rome, he was able to repel the attacks of his enemies, who were moved by jealousy to bring against him a charge of plagiarism, or, to speak more exactly, of hypocrisy, in representing as of his own composition the dramas which were written, in part at least, by his noble friends. The report thus spread abroad was widely credited in antiquity, and suspicion was strengthened by the fact that Terence declined either to confirm or to refute it. Probably the charge, though exaggerated and vicious, was not without foundation ; but to make an explanation would have been to incur the risk of giving offence to men whose friendship he could not afford to lose. The truth appears to be that Terence read his compositions aloud in the circle of his literary friends, and availed himself, independently and according to his choice, of their criticisms and suggestions. Such assistance would partly account for the elegance and purity of his style and language, — qualities which, even considering his great advantages and constant intercourse with the highest and most refined society of his time, appear to be most miraculous in view of his immature years and foreign extraction.

46. Terence's literary activity displayed itself wholly in the production of palliatae (§ 24), to which the tendency of the times, as well as his own leanings, prompted him. After bringing out six comedies, between 166 and 160 b. c., he went to Greece, probably for the purpose of studying Greek life and institutions, which it was his habit to portray in his comedies. In 159 b. c. he died, just as he was about to return to Rome with translations, which he had made in Greece, of a number of Menander's plays. Accounts vary as to the place and manner of his death. One story relates that he was lost at sea off the island of Leucas while on his way to Italy, and that his translations perished with him. Another account declares that he died at Stymphalus in Arcadia, after having lost his baggage and manuscripts through shipwreck.

47. The six comedies written and exhibited at Rome by Terence have been transmitted to us. The following enumeration gives them in the supposed order of their public presentation (§ 74) during the lifetime of the poet, according to the evidence afforded by the didascaliae and by Donatus :—

In 166 b. c. : The Andria ; at the ludi Megalenses.

In 165 b. c. : The Hecyra ; at the ludi Megalenses (an attempted presentation which proved a failure).

In 163 b. c. : The Heauton timorumenos ; at the ludi Megalenses.

- In 161 B. C.: The Eunuchus; at the ludi Megalenses.
 In 161 B. C.: The Phormio; at the ludi Romani.
 In 160 B. C.: The Hecyra; at the ludi funerales of Aemilius Paulus (second, but unsuccessful, presentation).
 In 160 B. C.: The Adelphoe; at the ludi funerales of Aemilius Paulus.
 In 160 B. C.: The Hecyra; at the ludi Romani (third and successful presentation).

It appears from this that the Hecyra was attempted three times during the lifetime of the poet. The question arises whether the Hecyra was the only play brought out more than once during that period,—a question depending for its answer upon an examination of the prologues. These certainly point to a second performance at least of the Andria, and probably of the Heauton timorumenos, Eunuchus, and Phormio. That the extant prologue to the Andria was not written by Terence for the first performance is highly probable. The Hecyra also was first attempted without a prologue.¹

48. In reference to the Greek originals from which these comedies were taken it may be noted that in the case of the Andria, Eunuchus and Adelphoe, and possibly the Hecyra, Terence employed what has been called contaminatio, a noun connected with the verb contaminare as the latter is used by Terence in his prologues to the Heauton timorumenos and the Andria. Thus applied by Terence, the verb has reference to the process of combining parts of two or more Greek comedies so as to form a single Latin play.² Thus the Andria is based on two plays of Menander, the 'Ανδρία and Περινθία; the Eunuchus also on two plays of Menander, the Εὐνοῦχος and Κόλαξ; the Adelphoe on Menander's 'Αδελφοί and a play of Diphilus entitled Συναποθνήσκοντες, from which one scene was taken ; the Hecyra on the 'Εκυρά of Apollodorus of Carystus, to which was added (possibly) a portion of Menander's Επιτρέποντες.¹ Of the Phormio and the Heauton timorumenos the Greek source is in each case² a single play, the second of these being derived from the Εαυτὸν τιμωρούμενος of Menander, the first from a play of Apollodorus, whose title was Επιδικαζόμενος. As the title, however, of Apollodorus' play was not likely to be readily comprehended by an audience ignorant of Athenian law, Terence, contrary to all precedent, adopted in its place, as the title of his Latin reproduction, the name of one of the characters in the Greek original ; making at the same time a slight concession to custom by selecting for this purpose the name of the personage whose part in the play was most suggestive of the discarded Greek title. But commonly, when two Greek plays have contributed to make one Latin play, the title adopted by Terence is that of the Greek comedy from which the Latin adaptation is chiefly drawn.

49. Although the noun contaminatio is post-classical in its application to the process described above, yet the process itself was without doubt maliciously condemned by the enemies of Terence, who were ready to seize upon anything that might be criticized in the young poet as contrary to the artistic usage of the time. This usage enjoined the closest possible adherence to a single original. Since the time of Plautus, who, as has been said, paid slight reverence to his Greek models, a growing sentiment in favour of a close imitation of these models had dominated the school of poets from which Terence had conspicuously held aloof, and when he suddenly appeared on the scene and independently followed a method to which others were opposed, he was denounced as an upstart and an innovator. Nor did it signify that others had done the same before him. The criticism on this point was severe, and Terence was fain to justify himself in his prologues.³ That such criticism was forced, however, and inspired by jealousy and envy, is suggested not only by other considerations, but also by the fact that Terence, except in respect to contaminatio, was in reality as strict an imitator of his Greek models as the best of his contemporaries. A certain freedom in verbal rendering and plot-construction was necessary to the success of his art. Lucidity of thought and such variety in the action as a Roman audience would be sure to demand were indispensable. Accordingly, Terence refrained from anything that would resemble mere translation. He did not wish, by following the example of Lanuvius, whose poetical canon was a literal dependence on his models in respect of the language and the plots alike, to make poor Latin plays out of good Greek ones (cf. Eun. Prol. vss. 7-8). He desired to present to the Roman public, in the purest Latin at his command, a true picture of Greek life and manners as given in the writings of the later Greek comedians; avoiding the licence and the Romanizing tendencies of Plautus, on the one hand; and the feebleness and obscurity resulting from extreme literalness, on the other. Such literalness he conceived to be exemplified in the compositions of playwrights like Luscinius Lanuvius, as a counter-stroke to whose attacks upon himself he employs the phrase obscura diligentia in his prologue to the Andria. In the same prologue he praises the negligentia of his predecessors, and it is a fair inference that in doing so he had in view not only their greater freedom in the use of the Latin language, but also their practice of contaminatio.¹

50. Terence was accused also of furtum, — a word that may be roughly rendered “plagiarism.” The Latin word however was not so broad a term as the English, which has already been applied to the poet’s possible use of the opinions and abilities of his friends in the Scipionic circle (§§ 43, 44), not to speak of the fact that all of his plays were taken with more or less exactness from Greek comedies. Judged from a modern standpoint all writers of palliateae were plagiarists. But in the time of Plautus and Terence a Roman playwright was not accounted guilty of literary theft if he appropriated the work of a Greek poet, provided the Greek play thus purloined had not previously been translated into Latin, or in any way adapted to the Roman stage, — provided, in short, the play was wholly "new" to Roman audiences. It was a matter of professional etiquette that a Greek play once Latinized, in whole or in part, became through that process the property of the person who Latinized it, — or if not entirely so, at least to the extent to which it had been made to furnish material for a Latin play. In defending himself in the prologue to the Adelphoe against this charge Terence explains that he incorporated in this play only that part of the Synapothnescontes of Diphilus which Plautus, who had Latinized that comedy, had left untouched. In the prologue to the Eunuchus also Terence defends himself against accusations of a similar character.

51. Of the six extant Terentian comedies the Andria is the most pathetic, the Adelphoe in general more true to human nature than the rest, the Eunuchus the most varied and lively, with the largest number of interesting characters, and the Hecyra the one of least merit. All six are remarkable for the art with which the plot is unfolded, through the natural sequence of incidents and play of motives. Striking effects, sharp contrasts and incongruities, which meet us in many of the plays of Plautus, are almost wholly absent. All is smooth, consistent and moderate, without any of the extravagance or exuberant humour, or even creative fancy, which characterize the writings of the older poet. But Terence was essentially an imitative artist, and his distinguishing feature was his artistic finish, — a fact fully recognized by Horace (Epist. 2. 1. 59), whose appreciation of Terence contrasts curiously with his estimate of Plautus.

52. All the plays of Terence may be said to have met with success before the death of their author, the Eunuchus perhaps having aroused the keenest enthusiasm in the spectators, who called for its immediate repetition, if we may trust the statement of Suetonius: Eunuchus quidem bis die acta est. The Hecyra, on the other hand, was attempted for the third time before it was permitted to proceed to a close (cf. Phorm. Prol. 31 ff., Hec. Proll. I. and II.). But in general the plays were less popular during Terence's lifetime than they afterwards proved to be, when the cultivation of letters, and in particular the study of Terence, became fashionable in the time of Cicero. Then it was that Terence's purity of style was best appreciated; indeed so greatly was it admired that the poet was placed by critics of the Augustan age on a level with the polished writers of the day. Terence had done much to promote the growth and refinement of the colloquial Latin speech. The language which he received from Plautus he improved and rendered more artistic by shaping it carefully to the graceful rhythm and diction of the Greek dramatists, notably Menander. This is his great gift to Roman literature, and it is the more noteworthy as coming from a man who flourished half a century before Cicero was born, and who accomplished his purpose, not through the medium of a great epic like that of Vergil or Dante, nor by means of some other serious form of literature such as might be suggested by the name of Cicero or of Thucydides, but in connection with a species of popular amusement which was associated in the public mind with everything light and frivolous, and was in fact a mere accessory to an established form of entertainment in itself of far greater magnitude and importance.

53. Cicero's admiration for Terence is evinced through the many references to the poet and quotations from his plays which appear in the great orator's speeches, essays and letters.¹ But Cicero's most famous, as well as most complimentary, comment appears in the following epigram handed down by Suetonius: —

“ Tu quoque, qui solus lecto sermone, Terenti,
 Comuersum expressumque Latina uoce Menandrum
 In medium nobis sedatis motibus effers, Quiddam come loquens atque omnia dulcia dicens,” — and Cæsar is quoted by Suetonius as expressing his appreciation of Terence's purity of diction: —

“ Tu quoque, tu in summis, o dimidiate Menander, Ponoris, et merito, puri sermonis amator.”

Even Quintilian (10. 1. 99) makes use of the word elegantissima in speaking of Terence's plays, though that critic's general estimate of Roman comedy was anything but favourable. But the elegantia, or refinement and grace of idiom, which characterized Terence's writings was undoubtedly secured at the expense of vigour, spontaneity, and the power to express passion and depth of feeling. The absence of these qualities was noticed by Cæsar, who, in spite of his admiration for Terence's style, regrets the lack in him of a certain uis comica, the presence of which would have rendered his productions "equal to those of the Greeks"; and Terence's enemies, ever keen to seize such an opportunity, cast the same in his teeth (cf. Phorm. Prol. 5). Moreover Volcatius Sedigitus would hardly have placed Terence so low as sixth in his list of the ten most noted writers of palliatae but for this recognized defect, — unless indeed the fact were due to the tradition of the Collegium Poetarum, "which remained permanently hostile to the favourite of Scipio Aemilianus."¹

54. After the death of Terence the only noteworthy writer of palliatae was SEXTUS TURPILIUS, who lived till 103 b. c., but probably ceased to write before that time. Thirteen titles in Greek and a few fragments of the plays are all we have of his writings. The close of the sixth century u. c., says Teuffel, coincides with the end of the palliatae. The plays of Plautus and Terence continued to be represented on the stage, but new dramas of this kind were seldom forthcoming. It was at this period that the COMOEDIA TOGATA first acquired popular favour. L. Afranius and T. Quintius Atta were its chief representatives, and to Afranius especially was accorded in ancient times no small measure of appreciation and applause. But this form of comedy never attained the success which fell to the lot of the comoedia palliata, and its place was soon shared by other forms of the comic art, through a resuscitation in literary dress of the fabulae Atellanae and the mimi. The rise of the mimus in particular did much to degrade the Roman stage in the later days of the Republic and under the Empire. In Imperial times the plays of Plautus and Terence, though often admired and expounded by commentators and critics, were seldom presented in the theatres, where the "gross buffooneries of the Atellan farce" and the indecent gestures and hilarity of the mimes² held almost undisputed sway. Thus with the decline in popular favour of the comoedia palliata we trace a gradual degeneracy of the drama at Rome, — a change, however, that seems natural enough when we contemplate the very general disappearance of high standards of conduct in the days of the Cæsars, and compare the public morals of this period in Rome's history with the genuine and characteristic virtues of the early Republic.

55. The INFLUENCE OF TERENCE upon literature and life was not confined to his day and generation. Terence was read and studied not only in the days of Cicero and Horace and Quintilian, but also in the Middle Ages; and indeed in more modern times as well his writings have been pointed to and admired as poetic models. His influence upon Horace is very marked, especially in the more familiar style of the Satires and Epistles. The lines in Sat. 2. 3. 260 f., touching the weakness of human passion, are manifestly founded on the first scene of the Eunuchus, and the precepts of Horace's father regarding the correction of the son's failings have a distinct parallel, though a comic one, in the famous colloquy between Syrus and Demea in the Adelphoe.¹ Petrarch speaks of the two Roman comedians in terms of unlimited eulogy. Erasmus and Melanchthon and other Latin writers of the Renaissance committed his works to memory. The French especially have been his ardent admirers and frequent imitators. Sainte-Beuve praises him without stint, and Fénelon is said to have preferred him to Molière.² Another French writer, M. Joubert,³ says of him: "Le miel Attique est sur ses lèvres ; on croirait aisément qu'il naquit sur le mont Hymette." We find his Andria reflected in the Andrienne of Michel Baron ; the Eunuchus in Bruey's Le Muet and Fontaine's L'Eunuque ; the Phormio in Molière's Les Fourberies de Scapin and parts of the same writer's Le Mariage Forcé. Baron's L'École des Pères and Fagan's La Pupille are direct adaptations of the Adelphoe, and to the same play Molière is largely indebted for his École des Maris. Terence's plays have been imitated and adapted in England also, e. g. the Adelphoe in Garrick's Guardian, the Andria in Steele's Conscious Lovers and the Foundling of Edward Moore, the Eunu- chus in Sir Charles Sedley's Bellamira; the two old men of the Adelphoe, Micio and Demea, have suggested the leading characters in Cumberland's Choleric Man and Shadwell's Squire of Alsatia. In fact, the influence of Terence upon dramatic literature and literary style has been profound.

56. The CHARACTERS in the plays of both Plautus and Terence are in general representative or typical, like those of the later Athenian comedy. At least they lack something of that definite personality which we look for in a play of Shakespeare. The repetition of the same name in different plays tends to emphasize this lack of definiteness. But the characters of Terence are more faintly drawn than those of Plautus; the latter have greater individuality, and are more often suggestive of the personages of Shakespeare and other modern dramatists. The principal figures in Terence's dramas are the following: two old men, one severe, the other mild and indulgent; two young men, one openly dissipated, the other exemplary,—at least until his true character is disclosed; an hetaera; a leno; a parasite; a simple-minded and faithful slave, and one that is intriguing and crafty. There are also the ancilla or maid-servant, the matrona or anxious mother, and the long-lost daughter who appears first in the person of an hetaera, but is ultimately discovered to be an Athenian citizen. The motive of each piece is love, which at first takes the form of irregular passion, but ends always in a marriage satisfactory to all concerned. The scene is invariably at Athens, or (as may possibly be the case in the Heauton timorumenos) in its near neighbourhood. The time of the action is seldom more than a single day.

57. Each play is DIVIDED INTO FIVE ACTS. This division was made by scholars of the sixteenth century, who perhaps were influenced by Donatus. The latter (Praef. in Adelph.) speaks of a division into five acts, but adds: quos (actus) etsi retinendi causa iam inconditi spectatoris minime distinguunt Latini comici, metuentes scilicet ne quis fastidiosus finito actu, uelut admonitus abeundi, reliquae comoediae fiat contemptor, et surgat. With this compare what the same commentator says elsewhere (Praef. in Eun.): tenendi spectatoris causa uult poeta noster omnes quinque actus uelut unum fieri. Hence, although the division into acts may have been known to the writers of the fabulae palliatae, it was not recognized by them as a practical expedient. Terence, for example, even if he divided his plays into acts in writing them, would not have ventured to keep his audience waiting after the play had begun. The attention of the people at the public games, where the plays were exhibited, was too easily diverted by other attractions, such as gladiators, pugilists, or tight-rope dancers. But it is probable that neither Plautus nor Terence thought of any system of division into acts, such as we have mentioned. In their time the action of the play was continuous ; or if pauses were needed here and there for technical reasons, their place and number were determined, not by the poet, but by the stage manager, the audience being entertained in the interval by a flute-player, as in the Pseudolus of Plautus (cf. 571–573 b). The intermission in the Pseudolus was evidently regarded by Plautus himself as exceptional, and as a special concession to the exigencies of the performance. Moreover the manuscripts of Plautus and Terence contain only slight traces of a division into acts, and the Greek originals undoubtedly were performed without any regular break or pause in the action of the play. Even the words of Horace (A. P. 189–90), —

Nene minor ueu sit quinto productior actu

were intended to refer to tragedy rather than comedy, and are based upon what was regarded as conventional by Alexandrian critics. And again the expression, primo actu placebo, in the prologue to the Hecyra (39), although it contains an apparent allusion to a division into acts, is certainly nothing more than an equivalent for in prima fabula.

58. But if a division into acts was foreign to the plays of the New Attic Comedy, this cannot be said with the same truth of the plays of Aristophanes, whose choral divisions correspond so closely to the five acts already mentioned, that the law laid down for tragedy by the critics of Alexandria would seem to hold good also for the Old Attic Comedy. That the parallel does not maintain itself where the comedy of Menander is concerned is owing to the absence in general of the chorus, whose place, if filled at all in the later comedy of Athens, must have been taken by the performances of the αὐλητῆς. Cf. Plaut. Pseud. 571.

59. When therefore we speak of a division into acts, wherever either Greek tragedy or the Old Comedy is referred to, we allude to nothing more than the separation from one another of parts of the dialogue, by means of choric songs. The several parts of a tragedy are discussed by Aristotle (see Poet. xii), though nothing is said by him about acts ; and yet it is possible to see, in what he affirms, exactly where the principle of the five-fold division is to be found. The acted parts of a tragedy, says Aristotle, were three : the πρόλογος (or introduction), the ἐπεισόδιον (or plot), and the ἔξοδος (or dénouement). These were separated from one another by choric songs. But the ἐπεισόδιον was subsequently broken into parts, also separated by choric songs, and this division of the ἐπεισόδιον, which was generally (though not always) a triple one, combined with the πρόλογος and ἔξοδος, constituted the normal structure of a Greek tragedy. This arrangement of parts seems to have given rise to a tradition which the Alexandrians made the basis of their canon that five was the proper number of acts for a drama. Thus, not only divisions of a Greek tragedy, but also the parts of a Latin comedy, which might be distinguished by pauses in the action, came to be loosely regarded as acts, the rule of five being the norm for all. The principle is more or less exemplified in the five so-called acts of a Terentian comedy. The first contains the statement of the opening situation. This is analogous to the πρόλογος of the Greek drama, the real prologue of the Latin play being without bearing upon the action or the plot. The second, third and fourth acts present the intrigue or plot proper as it is elaborated through three different states or phases ; these are parallel to the triple division of the ἐπεισόδιον (three episodes). The fifth act is devoted to the dénouement, corresponding to the ἔξοδος of Aristotle.¹

60. It is very evident, however, that these five acts of a Terentian comedy were not marked off by the commentators of a later time with special reference to predetermined pauses in the action, as they would be in a modern drama, but rather out of deference to tradition, and in accordance with the literary qualities of the play. In modern times the division into acts affords opportunity for the presentation of widely separated scenes and activities, — separated, that is, both in time and space, however closely they may be related as cause and effect. But in an ancient play, of whatever sort, there was little opportunity to represent actions not closely confined within a limited area and a comparatively brief period of time. There was no dropping or raising of a curtain except at the beginning and end of the performance. Variations or changes in the scenery were not extensive; in the plays of Plautus and Terence they were not even contemplated. If the separation of the dialogue portions of a Greek tragedy by choric songs affords a parallel to what ultimately became known to the Romans as a division into acts, it was in reality quite a different thing from that which is now meant by the phrase, for the representation of the action in the Greek tragedy was invariably continuous throughout. No pauses were required by the structure of the drama, and none was made. The same was true of the Old Attic Comedy, and to all intents and purposes of the New. Nor did Roman tragedy or comedy differ in this respect from the Greek. When, then, Cicero and Horace use the word actus, they employ it in a restricted sense, and in conformity, probably, with some rule of Alexandrian origin, growing out of the Greek divisions of tragedy just mentioned. That Cicero recognized the five-act division of a drama is probable, for he makes use of the figurative expression, in quarto actu improbitatis (Verr. 2. 2. 6. 18), and the division into three acts, which Donatus at a later date represents as the rule for tragedy (see Don. on Ad. iii. 1), was certainly familiar to him (cf. ad Q. Fr. 1. 1. 16. 46). It is doubtful, however, whether, in his reference to a triple division, it is tragedy or comedy of which Cicero is thinking; but if it be the latter, then we may suppose that in Cicero's time it was customary to mark three pauses in a Latin comedy by means of musical interludes, and these pauses might easily have been made to indicate the opening statement, the plot or intrigue, and the dénouement already mentioned.

61. The division into acts of a Plautine or Terentian drama, whenever it first took place, was somewhat assisted by the division of each play into DIVERBIA (DEVERBIA) and CANTICA, the latter being a reflection of the choric songs of the earlier comedy of Athens. (See § 84.)

62. Although Plautus and Terence did not recognize a division into acts, they did regard the DIVISION INTO SCENES as a necessary characteristic of comedy, and this division is regularly found in all the manuscripts of the two Roman comic poets, the headings prefixed to each scene giving the names of the interlocutors for that scene. There was no necessary interruption of the action at these points, however, the distinguishing mark¹ of a new scene being merely the exit or entrance of one or more characters. But even the exit of one or more personages of the drama was not sufficient to create a new scene, technically speaking, if the subsequent dialogue or soliloquy consisted of but a very few verses. In that event the entrance of another character was required before the new scene was regarded as having begun.

63. In the Old Attic Comedy the NUMBER OF ACTORS employed in a single drama was limited to three, the regular number for tragedy.² But in the New Comedy, after the chorus was abolished, this number was often exceeded. At Rome the palliatae were still less restricted in the number of their personages. Supernumeraries, or mute characters, were freely employed at all times, whether on the Greek or Roman stage. The number of speaking characters in Roman comedy could seldom have been less than four, for of the extant plays of Plautus two only, the Cistellaria and Stichus, are capable of being represented by three actors. The Captiui, Epidicus, Mercator and Pseudolus require four performers. Ten other plays of Plautus used at least five, the Poenulus and Rudens not less than six; Ritschl conjectures that seven were needed in the Trinummus. In Terence, five actors are required in the Heauton timorumenos and the Hecyra, six in the Adelphoe and Phormio, and for the Andria and the Eunuchus even this number is not sufficient.³

64. The fact that ACTORS AT ROME WERE USUALLY SLAVES seems strange to modern ideas, but the actor (histrio) and his art were looked down on by the Romans, and the histrionic profession was seldom taken up by a person of free birth,—though freedmen were often engaged in theatrical enterprises and appeared before the public

both as actors and as managers of theatrical troupes. In the latter capacity the freedman was called dominus gregis; if he was an actor also, it was usually in the leading rôle. The poet or playwright was generally distinct from the manager and from the actor. For example, the plays of Terence were “managed” for him by Lucius Ambivius Turpio, who also acted in them; but Livius Andronicus appears to have been his own manager, and, like Shakespeare, to have even acted in his own plays (see Livy, vii. 2 ad fin.).

65. As the plays were usually performed at the public games, the givers of the games, ludorum datores, were greatly concerned about the success of the pieces presented on these occasions, and rewarded the manager accordingly. The latter, too, was especially interested in the same question, not only on account of the reward just mentioned, but because he was obliged to assume the financial risk attending the representation. The choice of a play rested with the dominus. He made his bargain with the poet, purchasing from the latter such plays as seemed likely to prove popular, and rejecting the rest. Thus the dominus became the intermediary between the poet and the givers of the games, who, on deciding to include dramatic entertainments among the performances at the ludi, made their application to the theatrical manager, rather than to the poet himself. That the ludorum datores, however, had an occasional word to say in the selection of the plays to be presented is probable. It is evident, therefore, that great pains were taken to insure the favourable reception of a play by the people. The poet was encouraged by the manager; the latter received his compensation at the hands of the person who gave the public exhibition, and the actors themselves, or so many of them as had pleased the audience, were accustomed to be entertained by the dominus at a banquet especially provided for their benefit. Cf. Plaut. Rud. 1418 ff. It is evident, moreover, from the closing words of the Cistellaria, that the poorer actors (being slaves) were often severely punished. The question, too, whether the dominus was also a contractor or purveyor (conductor, chorēgus) whose business was to provide the theatrical company with its costumes and general stage outfit, has been decided in the affirmative by Mommsen.¹

66. The COSTUMES worn by the actors in the palliatae were Greek, and were copied from the dress of ordinary life. They consisted of a tunic and a mantle, the former being an under-garment called by the Greeks chiton (χιτών), the latter an outer-garment, called by the Romans pallium, a term corresponding to the Greek ἱμάτιον. As the pallium was a long garment and enveloped the entire figure, the short chlamys (χλαμύς) was often substituted for it, especially by soldiers and young men. An account of the dresses used in the New Comedy is given by Pollux (iv. 119–120). From this it appears that the typical or conventional character of the personages appearing on the stage was emphasized through the dress. For example, the tunic of the slave was short, but for the free-born it was long and had sleeves. White raiment usually distinguished old men. Young men wore crimson. Parasites were in black or grey. The leno had a bright-coloured tunic, while his mantle was variegated. The cloak of the courtesan was generally of a saffron hue. Young women commonly were dressed in white, old women in light blue or green. A distinguishing mark of the old man was his staff with a crooked handle. The rustic had a wallet and staff, as well as a tunic of leather. The heiress wore a fringe to her dress. In general the dress of the New Comedy resembled in many respects that of tragedy, but differed from the latter in being comparatively plain and unadorned. The dress of the Old Comedy was probably quite different from either.¹ The New Comedy employed also a light sort of shoe or slipper, which was not tied to the foot, and was the same for all characters. It was called έμβασ, in Latin soccus, and was a distinguishing feature of comic attire, just as the cothurnus, or buskin, was characteristic of the ‘make-up’ of the tragedian.

67. As to the use of MASKS, it is quite certain that they were not regularly adopted for the palliatae until after the time of Terence. Yet in the Greek New Comedy all the actors wore masks, and wore them invariably, as in the Old Comedy and in tragedy. The custom was one from which the natural conservatism of the Greeks was unable to depart, however much the mask may have seemed unnecessary or even hurtful to the cause of high art. In the New Comedy the mask was really out of place, for it concealed the visage, and shut off all possibility of conveying ideas or shades of thought and sentiment through the play of the features. In the comedy of manners this was all-important, and there can be little doubt that in this instance the Greeks allowed custom and a conservative spirit to interfere with the best results. It has been said that the reason lay in the size of the Greek theatres, which rendered desirable if not necessary that exaggeration of the features which was easily afforded by a mask.¹ However this may be, there could have been no need of masks at Rome certainly before the erection of Pompey's theatre, and this will account perhaps for their absence in the earlier period. Yet masks are reported to have been worn on the Roman stage by Roscius in Cicero's day, or perhaps to have been brought into use even before that time by two theatrical managers named Cincius Faliscus and Minucius Prothymus, whose dates, however, have not been clearly ascertained. During the life-time of Plautus and Terence an abundant supply of wigs, false hair and paint was quite sufficient to produce that exaggerated effect which was regarded as important, since the temporary wooden theatres erected in the Circus Maximus at that period were probably of only limited proportions.

THE THEATRE

68. The Romans, in the earliest times, witnessed their plays under difficulties. The state looked upon theatrical exhibitions with an unfriendly eye, and placed restrictions upon them. Only the scantiest kind of a wooden platform was at first allowed, and this was taken down after each performance. The platform was backed by a wall or partition of wood, and the slope of a hill served as a place for the spectators. The partition wall behind the platform was called the scaena; the platform itself the proscenium, pulpitum, or "stage," and the place where the spectators sat or stood was known as the cavea, or "pit," and was without seats.

This state of things existed when Plautus flourished, in whose time the level space (orchestra) between the stage and the main body of spectators was first reserved for senators and other persons of distinction (Liv. 34. 44). A small theatre on the Greek plan (theatrum et proscenium, Liv. 40. 51), with stage of stone, was erected in 179 b. c. near the temple of Apollo, but was soon afterward pulled down. Again, in 174 b. c., an effort was made to secure the erection of a permanent stage. This was authorized by the censors (Liv. 41. 27); but the spectators were compelled as before to stand, and there is reason to believe that the structure was demolished soon after the conclusion of the performance for which it was built. In 155 b. c., not long after the death of Terence, a stone theatre, with seats for the spectators, was begun by C. Cassius Longinus, but the next year P. Scipio Nasica induced the senate to prohibit the building of a permanent stage, and the structure commenced by Longinus was demolished. In fact, repeated hindrances and restrictions were placed in the way of theatrical exhibitions, on the ground that they encouraged a taste for Greek luxury and hastened the corruption of the Roman youth. The prejudice, however, was eventually, though slowly, overcome. In 145 b. c., a theatre was built on a larger scale than usual, consisting not only of a stage-platform and scaena, but of side-walls and cavea with seats, as in the theatre of the Greeks. But this too was made of wood and was destroyed after it had served its immediate purpose.

69. It was not until the year 55 b. c. that a permanent theatre was erected in Rome, when Pompey the Great constructed one of stone in the Campus Martius, and rendered it complete in all particulars. This building, according to Pliny (N. H. 36. 115), was capable of seating 40,000 spectators,—probably an exaggeration.¹ No vestige of Pompey's theatre remains to be seen, except a line of curvature in the street that now covers a part of the ground where the cavea once stood. Two similar theatres were constructed and opened in 13 b. c., one by Augustus, the other by Cornelius Balbus. The latter has perished utterly. The former, which was named by its builder after his nephew Marcellus, has survived in part and constitutes to-day one of the most interesting of the ruins of ancient Rome.

70. The Roman theatre, in its main features, was like the Greek.

¹ Lanciani (The Ruins and Excavations of Ancient Rome, p. 459) reckons the number of seats (loca) at 17,580.

There were, however, two important differences. The orchestra (ορχήστρα) of the Greek theatre of ordinary type — that is, of the earlier theatre which was wholly free from the effect of Roman influence — was practically a complete circle. Such for example was the orchestra in the original Dionysiac theatre at Athens, and in the theatre as it appears even now at Epidaurus. The Roman orchestra, on the other hand, was but little larger than a semicircle. The Greek orchestra was occupied by the chorus, if not also by the actors ; the Roman was filled with seats for senators, distinguished guests and other dignitaries. There was no chorus, as a rule, in a Roman play ; or in the event of an exception to the usual practice, the chorus, such as it was, appeared on the stage, as in a modern drama. The other important difference was the greater size of the Roman stage, which was both deeper and longer (wider) than the Greek. On the other hand the Greek stage was higher than the Roman, perhaps doubly so, — assuming that such a thing as a Greek stage ever existed independently of Roman influence. That the Greek theatre, however, of the time of Aeschylus had no stage whatever, but an orchestra merely, and that the latter was the place of action for both actors and chorus alike, have been very certainly shown by Dr. Dörpfeld.¹ The Romans also introduced the custom of constructing theatres on a level site, — a useful innovation in theatrical architecture, since it did away with the necessity under which the Hellenes had been held by tradition, of scooping out the cauea from a lofty rock or hill-side.

71. The Romans continued to build theatres in the provincial towns of Italy. These were always designed with the semicircular orchestra, except that occasionally two theatres were constructed close together, one of them having the larger orchestra intended for the exhibition of Greek plays only. On the other hand, the theatres built under Roman rule in Hellenic cities, such as Tauromenium, Aspendus and Myra, were more or less on the old Greek model. An exception to this rule was the beautiful theatre of Herodes Atticus, a wealthy Greek of the time of Hadrian, which was erected on the western side of the southern slope of the Acropolis at Athens, and had a semicircular orchestra. Extensive remains of this theatre still exist and exhibit a mixture of Greek with Roman architecture.¹ The almost total disappearance of the chorus in the New Comedy accounts not only for its absence in general from the comedy of the Romans, but also for the diminished size of the Roman orchestra, and in part for the greater magnitude of the Roman stage, for which the larger number of actors in the Roman drama is also in a measure responsible. Moreover an occasional chorus² appeared in the comedy of the Romans, like that of the fishermen in the Rudens of Plautus. For this, although it was undoubtedly a reflection of the chorus in some Greek original, a place was made upon the stage, while the orchestra continued to serve merely as a portion of the auditorium. There is no suggestion of a chorus in Terence.

72. The stage represented a street (via), the background (scaena) the fronts of ordinary houses. There were usually three doors in the scaena, two of which might belong to one house, as in the Adelphoe; or each door might represent a separate house, as in the Andria. The doors opened outwards upon the stage (proscenium, pulpitum), but not so as to disclose an interior; for this no provision was made in Roman comedy. Hence all conversations must take place in the street, or at the threshold of the house-door. Nothing corresponding to a change of scene, such as is common enough in a modern theatre, was brought into operation before the first century B. C. But among the appurtenances of the stage scenery was the lane or narrow alley (angiportum, angiportus), which opened into the street, not at the side, but at the rear of the stage. This occasionally served the actor as a place of partial concealment, as in Phormio, 891 f. At either end of the stage was an exit (or entrance). That on the right (of the spectators) was supposed to lead to the forum (ἀγορά) and the centre of the city ; that on the left, to the harbour and the country.¹ In the middle of the stage was an altar, usually dedicated to Apollo.² The scene, in a Terentian or Plautine comedy, remained the same throughout the play.

73. The theatres were open for dramatic performances in the day-time only, and the plays came to an end before the hour of the cena, or principal meal of the day. This was about three o'clock in the afternoon, though the hour varied. Before the play began, its title was announced to the people by the dominus gregis, who informed them at the same time of its authorship, and of the Greek original from which it had been adapted. A Roman audience was not unlike an English audience of the time of Elizabeth. If the play did not please, the spectators signified as much without scruple. Nor did they hesitate to leave the theatre in a body if something more attractive happened to be taking place elsewhere. The fate which befell the Hecyra is an example of what the Roman playwright was obliged sometimes to endure. Hearing, on the occasion of the first performance, that some boxing and rope-dancing were in progress at no very distant point, the spectators deserted the theatre and the play came to a stop. At another time, the report that a gladiatorial exhibition was going on produced the same result. It may be noted, however, that, apart from the peculiar temperament and habits of the people, the consideration that the privilege of viewing the performance had been bought and paid for was not operative, as with a modern audience ; for admission to the theatre in ancient Rome was free, or if a price was demanded it was so small as to be merely nominal. The latter was the case at Athens in the days of the Greek tragedians.

DRAMATIC REPRESENTATIONS AT THE PUBLIC GAMES

74. While Greek plays were exhibited in honour of Dionysus, in a theatre dedicated to the god, and the representation, or series of representations, was the principal feature in the public worship of that particular divinity, Roman plays, on the contrary, bore no such important religious significance. They formed only a part, and usually a very small part, of the performances at the public games. The play was in fact a mere side-show at these great festivals, and there was nothing in it suggestive of religion except (possibly) the altar. There were four great festivals at Rome,—the ludi Romani, given by the Curule Ædiles in September in honour of Jupiter; the ludi Apollinares, celebrated by the Praetor Urbanus in July; the ludi Plebeii, given by the Plebeian Ædiles in November, and the Megalensia (μεγάλη), or ludi Megalenses, held by the Curule Ædiles in the month of April. The last were instituted in commemoration of the introduction into Rome, from Phrygia, in 204 b. c., of the worship of Cybele, who was honoured by the Romans as the Great Mother, or Magna Mater Idaea.¹ Other games also were given on certain extraordinary occasions, such as the celebration of a triumph, or of the ludi Saeculares, the dedication of a public building, or the funeral of a distinguished man (ludi funebres or funerales). Of them all, the ludi Romani, also called Magni or Maximi, were the oldest and the most important, and it was at their celebration that the first regular theatrical exhibitions took place. Indeed it was not until some time had elapsed after the death of Livius Andronicus that any of the other public games were embellished with the added attraction of dramatic performances. Among the latter were plays of Terence. See § 47.

METRES

75. The earliest form of Italian measure of which we have any remains is the Saturnian (§ 20). This rests on an accentual rather than on a quantitative basis, and, though showing an advance upon earlier accentual forms, was felt to be too rude and too lacking in variety of movement to serve the purposes of the dramatic poets. It was not ill suited to narrative poetry, and was used by Naevius in his poem on the first Punic war, as well as by Livius Andronicus in his translation of the Odyssey. But Plautus, Caecilius, Terence and the rest turned to the quantitative measures of the Greeks to supply their needs, and found what they required in the New Comedy which had furnished them with their originals. Notwithstanding this, Latin prosody in the time of Plautus and Terence was not yet fixed, and what would have been violation of metrical law in the Augustan age was often plainly permissible in the earlier period. Metrical variety is far more conspicuous in Plautus than in Terence. In the latter it is reduced, as one might say, to a minimum, so far at least as may be consistent with the avoidance of monotony, the metres being practically resolvable into two classes, the Iambic and Trochaic. The more elaborate metres, such as the Dactylic, Cretic, Bacchiac and (perhaps) Choriambic, appear very seldom in Terence. Indeed those instances that do occur are confined to a single play, the Andria, unless verses 611–613 of the Adelphoe are correctly regarded as choriambic.¹

76. The commonest measure in Latin comedy is the IAMBIC SENARIUS (patterned after the Greek Iambic Trimeter Acatalectic). It is the ordinary metre of the dialogue, and at least one half of the verses in each of Terence's plays belongs to this measure. It is the opening metre in all the plays. The scheme is :

It consists of six iambic feet ; but the tribrach ˘ ˘ ˘, spondee ˘ ˘, anapaest ˘ ˘ ˘, dactyl ˘ ˘ ˘, and proceleusmatic ˘ ˘ ˘ ˘ are admitted as substitutes for the iambus in any place except the last. The final foot must be a pure iambus, but as the last syllable of the verse is indifferent (syllaba anceps) the foot may be actually a pyrrhic (˘ ˘). The proceleusmatic (˘ ˘ ˘ ˘) is found most commonly in the first place, and seldom, perhaps never, in the fifth.² A common substitute in all

¹ Fleckeisen thinks these lines were originally iambio and trochaic, not choriambic, as generally supposed. He is probably right.

² Elmer affirms that the proceleusmatic never appears in the fifth foot (see his ed. of the Phormio, crit. note on 598). Dziatzko-Hauler (Phormio, p. 38), and Hayley metres is the spondee. But to introduce into the verse a foot containing a number of morae, or units of time (◡), greater than the number properly belonging to the fundamental foot of the measure, would seem to violate the theory of equivalents. The violation, however, is more apparent than real, for the spondee, or other substituted foot, was approximately reduced to the time of the iambus or trochee by rapid utterance or slurring of the syllables, and so became the practical equivalent of the principal foot of the measure. It was not, therefore, the full spondee or dactyl of Vergil. The spondee when substituted for an iambus may be indicated by >◡, the dactyl by >◡◡, the anapaest by ◡◡, the proceleusmatic by ◡◡◡. The regular cæsura of the iambic senarius is after the arsis or first syllable of the third foot (penthemimeral). But the verse admits cæsura in the fourth foot (hephthemimeral). When this happens a secondary cæsura occurs sometimes in the second foot, or else a diæresis after that foot. Cæsura well defined, however, is by no means invariable in Terence and Plautus.

77. The IAMBIC SEPTENARIUS (corresponding to the Greek Iambic Tetrameter Catalectic) is more rarely used than the senarius. The scheme is as follows : —

◡◡◡-|◡◡◡-|◡◡◡-|◡◡◡-

It consists of seven complete feet (hence its name), and a half foot. The regular division of the verse is after the fourth foot (diæresis); hence hiatus and syllaba anceps are permitted here; a cæsura in the fifth foot is usual in case of the failure of the diæresis. The fourth foot is preferably a pure iambus. Otherwise the substitutions are the same as in the senarius.

78. The IAMBIC OCTONARIUS (Greek Iambic Tetrameter Acatalectic) occurs very frequently in the cantica. The scheme is : —

It consists of eight full iambic feet. The break takes the form of diæresis at the end of the fourth foot, which in that case is treated as the final foot of the verse is treated, that is, it must be a pure iambus. (p. 10) make no such claim. See An Introduction to the Verse of Terence, by H. W. Hayley (Boston, Ginn & Co.).

Sometimes, however, cæsura takes the place of diæresis, and falls in the fifth foot, i. e. after the fifth arsis. The verse admits, in general, the substitutions of the senarius.

79. The IAMBIC QUATERNARIUS (Greek Iambic Dimeter Acatalectic) is rare in Terence. The scheme is : —

It may also be catalectic. Such short verses generally follow longer verses having the same rhythm, and are called clausulae. They may belong either to iambic or trochaic metre, but (in Terence) they do not admit the proceleusmatic.

80. There are two principal trochaic metres. The TROCHAIC SEPTENARIUS (Greek Trochaic Tetrameter Catalectic) runs as follows : —

˘ ˘ - - | ˘ ˘ - - | ˘ ˘ - - | ˘ ˘ - -

It is made up of seven and a half trochaic feet ; but in Terence any of the substitutes allowed for the iambus in iambic verse, excepting the proceleusmatic, may take the place of the trochee ; in Plautus not even the proceleusmatic is excepted. The seven complete feet give the name to the verse. The customary division is after the fourth foot (diæresis), which cannot then be a dactyl, and hiatus and syllaba anceps are also admitted there. Sometimes diæresis occurs after the fifth foot. In this case another diæresis is found at the end of the third foot, or else a cæsura within that foot. A pure trochee is usual in the seventh place, though a tribrach occasionally appears there. This metre seems to have been used in dialogue almost as frequently as the iambic senarius. It was the chosen metre for the recitative passages, and occurs regularly at the close of Terence's comedies.

81. The TROCHAIC OCTONARIUS (Greek Trochaic Tetrameter Acatalectic) : — is rare in Terence, and is used by him only in alternation with other verses. Substitutions are freely admitted. Diæresis occurs, as in the septenarius, after the fourth foot ; but occasionally a cæsura in the fourth or the fifth foot takes the place of the diæresis.

82. The TROCHAIC QUATERNARIUS CATALECTIC (Greek Trochaic Dimeter Catalectic) :—

occurs here and there in Terence, generally as a clausula. It consists of three complete feet followed by an incomplete foot, and may properly be called ternarius, on the analogy of the trochaic septenarius. The other metres, as already remarked, are unusual in Terence. They are :—

1. CHORIAMBIC TETRAMETER :—

2. RETIC TETRAMETER :—

3. BACCHIAC TETRAMETER :—

4. DACTYLYC TETRAMETER :—

Number 1 occurs twice (611, 612) or, including 613, three times in the Adelphoe.¹ In the Andria, vss. 626–634, number 2 appears nine times. In 481–484 of the same play number 3 is found four times. Of number 4 there is but a single example in Terence, viz., Andria, 625.

83. These various metres were adapted to different moods. That which may be called the plain, prosaic mood — the mood of persons engaged in calm and familiar conversation, or in the simple narration of facts, — was usually expressed by means of iambic senarii. Hence this metre, beside its use elsewhere, is generally found at the beginning of a play, invariably so in Terence. If the mood of the speaker be impassioned or excited he may give utterance to iambic octonarii, or to trochaic septenarii. The latter however are not quite so well suited as the former to greatly animated speech. Serio-comic strains are frequently given in iambic septenarii, and if part of a scene is intended to be sung the trochaic octonarius may be introduced.

84. The scenes of a comedy of Plautus or Terence may be ranged roughly in two classes, — those which were said, and those which were sung. The former were simply recited in a conversational tone and were not accompanied by music. They were known as diuerbia (deuerbia), dialogues, and were invariably written in iambic senarii. The latter were known as cantica (§ 61). Strictly speaking, the canticum was a lyrical monologue (μονωθία) which was sung to the tune of the tibia, and accompanied by appropriate gestures or dancing. The metres were mixed or irregular, to correspond to the varying emotions expressed. Among them were such measures as the cretic, bacchiac, trochaic octonarius and others of a distinctly lyric character. An instance of this species of canticum occurs at verse 610 of the Adelphoe, where Aeschinus is the victim of considerable mental excitement. A notable example occurs also at the opening of the fourth act of the Andria. But the term canticum was used also in a wider sense, and was made to include the scenes which were merely declaimed or chanted (with musical accompaniment), like the recitative of a modern opera. The metres employed in the composition of these scenes were the trochaic septenarius, the iambic septenarius, and the iambic octonarius. The strictly lyrical cantica were not always sung by the actor himself, if we may believe Livy (7. 2. 8. ff.), but by a young slave who stood near the tibicen, while the actor confined himself to such action or gesticulation as suited the sentiment of the verses thus delivered. The person who sang these lyrical portions of the play was probably the same as the Cantor who came forward at the close of the drama and challenged the applause of the audience in the word plaudite.¹

MUSIC AND MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS

85. We see in what has been said a decided difference between the ancient and the modern practice. But we see also a resemblance to a modern comic opera, the music being of course far less elaborate.²

² A brief bibliography of Greek music is given by Fairclough in his ed. of the Andria, p. lxix, note. There he cites Naumann's History of Music, ed. by Sir F. Gore Ouseley (Cassell & Co.), and his own article on Tyrtaeus, etc., in A Library of the World's Best Literature, ed. by Charles Dudley Warner.

The music of all of Terence's plays was composed by a slave named Flaccus, who, with his master, Claudius, is mentioned in the didascaliae. It appears that musicians of that time were generally slaves, and that the plays of Plautus also were probably furnished with music, not by the poet, but by these artists of low degree. The extreme simplicity of the music is apparent when we consider that it was rendered by one, or at most two musicians (tibicines) who played upon the tibia or "flute." This word would perhaps be translated more accurately by "clarinet" or "oboe," since this instrument resembles the tibia more nearly than the modern flute does. There were generally two tibiae, that is, two pipes which were played upon at the same time by means of a sort of double mouth-piece. This the musician held between his lips with the aid of a bandage (capistrum) having holes in it. By means of these holes the two mouth-pieces were kept in place, the bandage having been passed over the performer's mouth. The didascaliae prefixed to the several plays mention *tibiae pares*¹ (which included the serranae as well as the duae dextrae, the former being merely shorter than the latter), and tibiae inparies. The pares were two straight pipes of equal length. The inparies were two pipes unequal in length, the left (sinistra) being the longer, and curved at the end. The right (dextra) was perhaps the same as in the duae dextrae. Two left-hand pipes (duae sinistrale) are nowhere mentioned in the didascaliae. See Howard, l. c. p. 43 ff.

86. According to Servius (ad Aen. ix. 615), the tibiae inparies were called Phrygian, while Donatus (Praef. to the Ad.) indicates that the duae dextrae tibiae (which were pares) were the same as the Lydian. That a change of instruments was possible in the course of a play is evident from the words, primum tibiis inparibus deinde duabus dextris, which appear in the didascalia to the Heauton timorumenos. As in the case of a modern play or opera, a musical prelude preceded the performance, and musical interludes were sometimes inserted between the scenes (or acts).² See § 57.

² Cf. Plautus, Pseudolus, vs. 573^b, Tibicen uos interea hic delectauerit.

PROSODY

87. In reference to the prosody of Terence, it should be remarked that the rules for classical Latin apply far more strictly in his case than in that of Plautus. This is owing, not so much to a difference in point of time between the two writers, as to the education and associations of the younger poet. But in both Plautus and Terence the influence of the old Saturnian metre is clearly perceptible; see § 20. This metre, probably, was accentual (as has been said) rather than quantitative, and its effect upon the verse of the Roman playwrights is seen in the frequency with which the ictus (beat) of the measure and the word-accent coincide in their writings. To appreciate this point it is only necessary to compare their lines with those of Vergil, in whom the ictus is wont to clash frequently with the ordinary accent of the words as pronounced in every-day speech. A line taken from Shakespeare, Ham. 1. 2, will illustrate this: —

In équal scale, weighing delght and dôle.

Here the natural word-accent of “weighing” clashes with the accent of the verse, and is overpowered by it, if the verse be read with full regard to the metrical beat.¹

88. The accents printed in the Latin text of these plays indicate the principal ictus in each dipody. Another and lighter verse-accent, not so marked, falls upon the corresponding long syllable in the other foot of the dipody.

89. The coincidence of the ictus with the accent received by any given word in ordinary speech will be found to occur oftener in Plautus and Terence than at first sight seems probable. The language of these writers is so largely taken from that of every-day conversation that it becomes necessary to consider the question of stress as it occurred in certain word-groups peculiar to the sermo cottidianus. In these word-groups the accent of the individual word was exchanged for another accent belonging to the group taken as a whole. For example, if we apply the rules of accentuation to two or more words regarded as one we shall have such phenomena as the following: potius quam, apud me, noscunt sua, intér se, uae miseró mihi, wherein the verse-accent and the accent of the group, as the latter was heard in prose or common speech, are identical. Such word-groups arose from a natural tendency to attach the subordinate words in a sentence to those which were important or prominent.¹

90. The tendency in the earliest Latin was to throw the accent back upon the first syllable, whatever the length of the word. Consequently, when we find in Plautus the verse-accent falling upon the first syllable of a word of four syllables, having the first three short (e. g. fáculius), we are entitled to assume that in this word the two accents were still coincident. In the time of Terence, however, this is less certain. In his day this tendency was giving way to the custom, which afterwards became regular, of placing the accent on the antepenult, not only in words like fáculius, but also in those quadrisyllabic forms in which the first syllable was long: e. g. dissimili, quandóquidem. However, Terence has fáculius, máloliuoli, rélicuom, málierem, cóndicio, quándoquidem, etc., as well as dissimili, quandóquidem, and other instances of the later rule regarding the stressed syllable.

91. It is natural that accent should cause the syllable on which it falls to receive strength or weight at the expense of the syllable that precedes or follows it. Accordingly, long syllables adjacent to the accented syllable often become short, in dramatic poetry. In the most remote period of the language nearly all suffixes had long vowels. But the law restricting the word-accent to the penult and antepenult did much to increase the natural tendency toward a neglect of final syllables in pronunciation. Thus, many final syllables once long became short, short syllables were correspondingly obscured, and final consonants were often dropped altogether. Especially was this true in the case of iambic words, or dissyllables with short penult, as in the imperatives rógă, riúbě, cáuě, rédi, etc., and in declension, as nóuč, lénč, hérč, útrös, and likewise in such words as ápub, quídem, érat, párum, sénex, etc., whose final consonant thus fails to make position with an initial consonant in the following word. This tendency was partly checked by Ennius for the literary Latin, so that in authors subsequent to Plautus and Terence we find many final syllables of iambic words restored to their original long quantity. If the verse-accent fell on the final syllable, the effect was to cause the natural long quantity of that syllable to be retained. This principle held good also for words of three or more syllables, as ómniá (Heaut. 575), Aéschinús (Ad. 260), uirginé (Ad. 346), áccipít (Eun. 1082), aígeát (Ad. 25). In fact the effect of the verse-accent extended to all iambic combinations, and may be expressed in general as follows: When the first syllable of an iambic sequence (˘ -), or the syllable following an iambic sequence, receives the ictus, the second syllable of the sequence may be shortened. Thus ˘ - is measured as ˘ ˘, and ˘ - ˘ may become ˘ ˘ ˘. “The short that precedes the long which is to be shortened must be a monosyllable or begin a word.”¹ A few examples are: séd ěstne (Ad. 569), ábī domum (And. 255), ením sé (Phorm. 113), erät missa (Ad. 618). The principle stated is the so-called Iambic Law; and though it has been given here as referring chiefly to the effect of the verse-accent, there is no doubt that the word-accent would have similar force were it not that the two most frequently unite to produce the results described.

92. The tendency to shorten long unaccented syllables was assisted by a general inclination to slur over or obscure final consonants, especially d, l, m, n, r, s, t, as illustrated in some of the examples given above. Hence the seeming violation of the law of position, which is so strictly observed in Augustan poetry, for since one of two consonants might be obscured or wholly dropped the syllable itself was not made long,—a peculiarity not confined to the last syllables of words.

93. In Terence, final s invariably fails to make position with a following consonant, and even as late as the time of Cicero it was only faintly pronounced. Cicero however (Orator, 48. 161) speaks of this habit of slurring the letter s as countrified (subrusticum), though he admits that the custom was once regarded as refined, and indeed that he practised it himself in his early poetry.

94. A mute followed by l or r invariably fails to make the syllable long, in Terence.

95. Indifference to doubled consonants tended to a like result in early Latin. In fact doubled consonants were not regularly written in Latin before the time of Ennius, and the pronunciation of words like ille, quippe, immo, eccum, etc., seems to have fluctuated. Thus, in Plautus the pronoun ille often shows the apparent scansion illē, and in Terence also this is not infrequently the case. Compare, e. g., illē quém (Ad. 72), illē qui illam (Phorm. 109), and immo, ēccum, ōpportune ūppressionem in Ad. 483, 720, 81, and 238 respectively.¹

96. SYNIZESIS,² or the fusion of two or more adjacent vowel sounds into one, is found often in Plautus and Terence. Thus, of course, in dēus the two short vowel sounds are pronounced with a slur, and similarly in other forms of this word, and in the possessive pronouns. It is the same with the various forms of is and idem, e. g. eos = yōs. So fuisse is pronounced fwisse, and in like manner the other perfect forms of esse. Other examples of this treatment are, dīes, dīei, scīo, aiebam = aibam, aisne = ain, aīt = ait, hūius (pronounced hweese), quōius (quoise), mulīer; two vowels sounded as one when brought together by composition, as in proīn, dehīnc, deīnde, deīn, antehāc, dēōrsum, sēōrsum, caue = cau, and many more.

97. HIATUS is properly the absence of synaloepha, and is of rare occurrence in Terence.³ It is admitted (1) after an interjection, (2) at a change of speakers, (3) in the cæsura or diaeresis of the verse, (4) where there is a decided pause in the sense. Most frequently, however, both in Plautus and Terence, hiatus is found in cases where a monosyllable, ending in a long vowel, or in m preceded by a vowel, forms the first syllable of a resolved thesis, the long vowel then becoming short, e. g. mē ād, quī hōdie, dūm ērit (see Ad. 111, 215, 118). Cf. Munro's note on Lucretius, ii. 404.

² When this happens between two words, it is more correctly termed synaloepha (συναλοιφά, Quint. 9. 4. 36).

³ See Spengel's Introd. to the Andria, p. xxxii.

CODICES AND TEXT OF TERENCE

98. The sources from which the text of Terence is derived are the manuscripts, the quotations of ancient writers, the commentaries of grammarians, and the conjectures of modern scholars.

The principal manuscripts of Terence, together with their letters of reference, by which they are commonly designated, are given below :

(A) CODEX BEMBINUS, so called from its former owner, Bernardo Bembo, who lived from 1433 to 1519 of the Christian era. This MS. came into the possession of Fulvius Ursini, who bequeathed it to the Vatican library, where it now lies, its number being 3226. It is of the fourth or fifth century and is written in rustic capitals. No other MS. of Terence is its equal in point of age or importance. Yet it is not in a good state of preservation. The Andria is wholly wanting as far as verse 786, and of lines 787–887 only a few letters survive. Of Adelphoe 914–997 only a very small portion can be accurately deciphered, and of the Phormio verses 172, 240–2, and 635 are lost. But notwithstanding its mutilated condition, the Bembine is our most trustworthy authority in determining the Terentian text, for it is the only MS. certainly free from the arbitrary alterations of Calliopius. All other codices are now believed to be descended from a common ancestor whose text underwent revision at the hands of this unknown grammarian or critic. When Calliopius lived is uncertain. He is assigned by some authorities to the fifth century ; by others he is thought to have lived as early as the third. It is probable, at least, that he flourished before the time of Aelius Donatus, whose commentary on Terence has come down to us, and who lived in the middle of the fourth century A. D. In the Codex Bembinus the plays appear in the following order : Andria, Eunuchus, Heauton timorumenos, Phormio, Hecyra, Adelphoe.

99. The manuscripts of Terence (except A) are written in minuscule characters, and may be separated into three groups according to their kinship and supposed merit. These groups are herein designated as I, II, III. Under I and II fall those MSS. which are capable of classification in accordance with their kinship to one another. Under

III are placed others whose exact relation to the rest is not easily discernible.

GROUP I; known also as the γ family.

100. (P) CODEX PARISINUS: of the ninth or tenth century; now in the Bibliothèque Nationale in Paris, and, on account of its well preserved condition and fine illustrations, often on exhibition in the Salle d'Exposition des Imprimés et des Manuscrits. It presents the plays in the following order: Andr., Eun., Heaut., Ad., Hec., Phorm. The catalogue number is 7899. See § 112.

101. (C) CODEX VATICANUS: of the ninth or tenth century; copied from the same original as P, and now in the Vatican library. It is remarkable for the beauty of its illustrations, which are highly coloured, and are reputed to be, above all others, in accord with old tradition. The figures appear for the most part in the body of the page, rather than in the margin, and are grouped in each instance with a view to the illustration of the following scene. Above each figure, and in red ink, are written the name and character of the personage represented. The prevailing colour in the dress is a bluish gray, which appears most frequently in the tunic; while the upper garment, or pallium, is often of some shade of yellow, brown or purple. The most varied hues adorn the dress of the young men. The variety and richness of colouring which distinguish its miniatures render this codex in a sense unique. No other MS. can be compared with it in this respect, and its superior size seems to be peculiarly suited to such additions. Its number is 3868.¹

102. (B) CODEX BASILICANUS: of the end of the tenth century, and now in the Vatican. It is nothing else than a copy of C, excepting a small portion of it, which seems to have been taken from D. Spaces intended for miniatures appear in it, but have been left blank. It is catalogued as S. Petri H, 79.

103. (O) CODEX DUNELMENSIS: probably of the twelfth century, and at present in the Bodleian library at Oxford. It is by far the most important in a set of nine or perhaps of ten codices used by Bentley in preparing his famous edition of Terence,¹ and is referred to by Umpfenbach (Praef. p. iii) as "lying hid" in England, and as likely when found to add valuable evidence to that already existing, in regard to the character of the original Calliopean recension. This MS. had been lost to view for about 150 years after Bentley's time, but was "rediscovered," subsequently to 1872, by an Oxford scholar, among the treasures of the Bodleian library, where it is frequently placed on exhibition, on account of the beauty of its minuscule writing and the very quaint and interesting miniatures that adorn its pages. These miniatures may once have received a golden tint from the artist's brush. An exhaustive account of the Dunelmensis is given by Charles Hoeing in the Amer. Jour. of Archaeology, vol. iv (1900), pp. 310 ff. It is catalogued as Auct. F 213.

GROUP II; known also as the δ family.

104. (D) CODEX VICTORIANUS : of the ninth or the tenth century, and kept in the Laurentian library in Florence ; wherefore it is known also as Codex Laurentianus. Certain of its folia belong to a century later than the tenth, and are inferior to the rest.² A peculiarity of the Victorianus is a drawing on one of its fly-leaves, now hardly distinguishable. This drawing is not unlike the celebrated graffito, which has been supposed to be a caricature of the Crucifixion and may now be seen in the Kircherian Museum at Rome. According to Dr. Emil Gutjahr, who has made the drawing the basis of an argument on the history of the Codex, the Victorianus is certainly as old as the ninth century.³ It presents the plays in the following order : Andr., Ad., Eun., Phorm., Heaut., Hec. The catalogue number is xxxviii. 24.

105. (G) CODEX DECURTATUS : of the eleventh century, and now in the Vatican library. It lacks very considerable portions of four plays.

² This subject is discussed by Fairclough in a paper on The Text of the Andria of Terence, in Transactions of the Amer. Phil. Assoc. vol. xxx (1899).

³ See the Reports of the Königlich-sächsische Gesellschaft der Wissenschaften zu Leipzig, for 1891.

The order in which the plays are arranged is the same as in D. The catalogue number is 1640.

106. (V) FRAGMENTUM VINDOBONENSE: possibly of the tenth century; now in Vienna. It contains portions of two plays, the Andria and Adelphoe, and bears the library designation, Vind. Phil. 263.

GROUP III; known also as the μ family.

107. (F) CODEX AMBROSIANUS: of the tenth century, and now in the Ambrosian library at Milan. Its illustrations, though not coloured in any real sense, yet appear to have been once touched with light blue or gray. The plays are given in the same order as in the Parisinus. The Andria, however, is lost. The catalogue number is H, 75 inf.

108. (E) CODEX RICCIARDIANUS: of the eleventh century, and in Florence (Bib. Riccard.). It is a poorer MS. than F, which it resembles in the order in which it presents the plays. Its number is $\frac{MIV}{XXX}$ (=528).

109. (L) CODEX LIPSIENSIS: of the tenth century. The designation, Stadtbl. Rep. I, 37, indicates its place in the library at Leipzig.

110. (R) CODEX REGIUS: the chief of the Regii codices of Bentley, and known as Regius 15 A xii.

111. (Ch.) CHARTACEUS: another of Bentley's MSS., and bearing the designation, Regius 15 A xi. For R and Ch. see Warren, On Bentley's English MSS. of Terence, in Amer. Jour. of Phil. vol. iii, p. 59 ff.

112. It has been supposed that group I was inferior to group II. This traditional view, however, is not accepted by Spengel, and has been shown to be of very doubtful character by Professor Pease, who, in an article on the Relative Value of the MSS. of Terence (Transactions of the American Philological Association for 1887, vol. xviii), makes it very evident that, after A, the most trustworthy sources for the text of Terence are the MSS. of group I, of which P is the chief; that A more often agrees with P and its allied MSS. than with D G, and that group I has suffered less than group II from errors creeping into the archetype.

113. Additional evidence of the superiority of group I is given by Fairclough in his paper on The Text of the Andria of Terence, already cited, wherein both Dziatzko and Fleckeisen are shown to have accepted the readings of P more frequently than those of D; again in his

Appendix to his edition of the Andria (Boston, 1901) the same editor notes "that in the eighty-five lines of that play, wherein we can compare A's readings with conflicting ones in D and P, A agrees with P nearly twice as often as with D."

114. For some account of the CODEX MONACENSIS (M), the oldest of the MSS. containing lemmata, and assigned by Halm to the eleventh century, the reader is referred to Schlee's Scholia Terentiana (Leipzig, 1893), and to a review (by the writer) of the same, in Class. Rev. vol. viii. 8. Many MSS. of Terence, other than those herein described, exist in European libraries; one of them is mentioned by Wessner in the preface to his edition of Donatus, vol. i; but those alluded to above constitute nearly, if not quite, all of the codices which have thus far impressed themselves upon scholars, as worthy of serious study. Cf. however the Dziatzko-Hauler "Phormio," p. 189, note 3.

115. The SCHOLIA of Terence have been edited by Umpfenbach (Hermes ii) for A, while the work of Frid. Schlee above mentioned is an attempt to bring within convenient reach all that is valuable of the scholia contained in the other MSS., and to establish the value of these scholia as equal, or nearly so, to that of the scholia of the Bembine codex. See Class. Rev. vol. viii, pp. 353-4.

116. Of the grammarians (beside Calliopius: see § 98) whose commentaries supplement the evidence of the MSS., the most important is Aelius Donatus, who taught at Rome about the middle of the fourth century A. D., and was the reputed master of St. Jerome. That part of his Terentian commentary which related to the Heauton timorumenos is lost, but its place is indifferently supplied by J. Calphurnius, who wrote in the fifteenth century. The commentary of Euphrasius, who is believed to have lived in the sixth century, survives, and has some value for us. The grammarian Servius (who wrote at Rome in the fourth century, and is best known to us through his commentary on Vergil) and the more famous grammarian Priscianus (who wrote in Latin at Constantinople in the latter part of the fifth or the beginning of the sixth century) furnish occasional information; and Marcus Valerius Probus of Berytus is known to have revised and annotated Terence as well as other Latin authors, in the first century of the Christian era. Other early commentators were Aemilius Asper, Arruntius Celsus, Helenius Acro, and Euanthius. The metrical summaries or periochae written for the several plays by Sulpicius Apollinaris of Carthage, who flourished in the first half of the second century after Christ, together with the didascaliae or prefatory notices, which had been prefixed to the plays of Terence within a century after the poet's death, are not without their value in the determination of the text.

117. Among scholars and editors of Terence who are worthy of mention as having contributed to our knowledge of the text since the publication of the editio princeps (Strassb. 1470), Gabriel Faërnus (Florence, 1565) is well known for his careful examination of the Codex Bembinus, and for the discovery of its superior importance in determining the text; Guyet (1657) is noted for his scholarship, and his readiness to condemn as spurious those passages which he found difficult of interpretation. More famous, however, than either of these is Richard Bentley, whose edition of Terence (Cambridge, 1726; Amsterdam, 1727) is noted for the excellence of its critical commentary, which marked a distinct advance in Terentian scholarship. This commentary is still valuable, and is perhaps the best extant witness to Bentley's critical acumen.

118. For more than a century after Bentley no edition of Terence appeared which could be mentioned as presenting a decided improvement of the text. But an advance was made by A. Fleckeisen, whose Terence was first published at Leipzig, in the Teubuer series, in 1857, and again in the same series, with many alterations, in 1898. The edition by E. St. John Parry (Lond. 1857), though valuable for its explanatory notes, is otherwise of slight importance. The critical value of Wagner's edition (Lond. 1869) is impaired by carelessness. Umpfenbach's edition (Berlin, 1870) was greatly in advance of all that had gone before it, and still furnishes the apparatus criticus needed as a basis for work on the text.¹ Defects in this apparatus have been pointed out by later scholars, among whom are Minton Warren, Hauler and Schlee. Yet its value as a starting point can hardly be overestimated. But Dziatzko's text of the six plays (Leipzig, 1884), with its adnotatio critica, is more trustworthy than any previous collective edition. In it full recognition is made of the labours of Umpfenbach, and due importance is attached to the readings of the Codex Bembinus. Other collective editions are those by Muretus (Venet. 1555), Lindenbrog (Paris, 1602; Francof. 1623), Pareus (Neap. 1619), Boecler (Strassb. 1657), Westerhovius (Haag, 1732; reprint by Stallbaum, Leipzig, 1830), Lemaire (Paris, 1827), Giles (Lond. 1837), and Klotz (Leipzig, 1838–1839). The edition of Westerhovius contains the commentary of Donatus; but both this and the commentary of Euphratius are given in the editions of Lindenbrog and Klotz. The commentary of Donatus on the Andria and Eunuchus was edited by Paul Wessner in the Teubner series, in 1902, and in 1905 it was followed by that on the other three (§ 116) plays. The excellent collective edition by R. Y. Tyrrell (Lond. 1902) is based extensively on that of Dziatzko above mentioned.

119. Various annotated editions of separate plays have been published from time to time both in Europe and America. Among these are :

Andria, Meissner, Bernburg, 1876;

- “ Spengel, Berlin, 1888;
- “ Freeman and Sloman, Oxford, 1897;
- “ Klotz, Leipzig, 1865;
- “ Fairclough, Boston, 1901;

Andria and Heauton timorumenos, A. F. West, New York, 1888;

Heauton timorumenos, Shuckburgh, London, 1894;

- “ “ Wagner, Berlin, 1872;
- “ “ Gray, Cambridge, Eng., 1895;

Eunuchus, Papillon, London, 1877;

- “ Fabia, Paris, 1895;

Phormio, Dziatzko, Leipzig, 1874, revised 1884;

- “ Dziatzko and Hauler, Leipzig, 1898;
- “ Bond and Walpole, London, 1879, revised 1889;
- “ Sloman, Oxford, 1887, revised 1894;
- “ Elmer, Boston, 1896;
- “ Laming, London, 1902;

- Hecyra*, Thomas, Paris, 1887 ;
Adelphoe, Dziatzko, Leipzig, 1881 ;
“ Spengel, Berlin, 1879 ;
“ Plessis, Paris, 1884 ;
“ Sloman, Oxford, 1886, revised 1892 ;
“ Fabia, Paris, 1892 ;
“ Ashmore, London, 1893, revised 1896.

Some of them contain valuable criticisms of the text; notably so, the editions of Meissner, Spengel, Klotz, and Fairclough of the text of the Andria; the editions of Dziatzko, Dziatzko-Hauler, and Elmer of the text of the Phormio; the editions of Dziatzko, Spengel, and Plessis of the text of the Adelphoe. Of the translations of single plays, the most noteworthy is that by Professor M. H. Morgan, whose English rendering of the Phormio was used as a libretto when that play was “brought out” by the Faculty and students of Harvard University, in 1894. The Andria and Adelphoe have been well translated into German by C. Bardt (Berlin, 1903). Worthy of mention also is Stock’s translation into English of the Andria, Heauton, Phormio, and Adelphoe (Oxford, 1891).

120. While the LANGUAGE of Terence reveals the presence of an abundance of the speech of every-day life, the colloquial element in his plays is less than that of the common people than that of refined society. What has been termed the sermo plebeius or rusticus, the vulgar speech, is at least not characteristic of his diction. For this we must turn to Plautus, in whose plays it may truly be said to abound. The term sermo cottidianus has been used to designate the more cultivated colloquial Latin in contradistinction to the sermo plebeius already mentioned, but the two are not always distinguishable, especially for the earlier period. In fact, it is not until the time of Cicero and Horace that it becomes especially useful to restrict the adjective cottidianus within the limits named. In the Letters of Cicero and the Satires and Epistles of Horace the daily speech of the best social circles is extensively represented, and these writings are of service in distinguishing the two elements referred to. Indeed, the later the date, the more marked is the difference, and the more possible, too, it becomes to separate these two colloquial elements not only from each other, but also from the formal language of literature,— the highly developed and cultivated sermo urbanus, which is preserved in the prose and poetry of the later Republic, and of the first century of the Empire.¹

P. TERENTIVS AFER, Karthagine natus, seruit Romae Terentio Lucano senatori, a quo ob ingenium et formam non institutus modo liberaliter, sed et mature manu missus est. quidam captum esse existimant: quod fieri nullo modo potuisse Fenestella docet, cum inter finem secundi Puniei belli et initium tertii et natus sit et mortuus; nec si a Numidis aut Gaetulis captus sit ad dominum Romanum peruenire potuisse, nullo commercio inter Italicos et Afros nisi post deletam Karthaginem coepit. hic cum multis nobilibus familiariter uixit, sed maxime cum Scipione Africano et C. Laelio, quibus etiam corporis gratia conciliatus existimatur: quod et ipsum Fenestella arguit, contendens utroque maiorem natu fuisse; quamuis et Nepos aequales omnes fuisse tradat et Porcius suspicionem de consuetudine per haec faciat:

Dum lasciuiam nobilium et laudes fucosas petit, dum Africani uocem diuinam inhiat auidis auribus, dum ad Philum se cenitare et Laelium pulchrum putat,

Postquam poëta sénsit scripturám suam

in Graéca adulescens ést, qui lenoni éripit meretrícem in prima fábula : eum Plautús locum in Adélphos, uerbum dé uerbo expressum éxtulit.

eam nós acturi súmus nouam : pernoscite

furtúmne factum exístumetis án locum

reprénum, qui praetéritus neclegéntiast.

15 nam quód isti dicunt máliuoli, homines nóbilis hunc ádiutare adsídueque una scribere :

quod illí maledictum uéhemens esse exístumant, eam laúdem hic ducit máxumam, quom illís placet, qui uóbis uniuórsis et populó placent,

20 quorum ópera in bello, in ótio, in negótio

ACTVS I

M I C I O

Storáx ! — non rediit hác nocte a cena Aéschinus aut úspiam cecíderit aut praefrégerit aliquíd. uah, quemquamne hóminem in animo instítuere aut paráre quod sit cárius quam ipse ést sibi !

- 15 atque éx me hic natus nón est, sed ex fratre. ís meo 40
 dissímili studiost iam índe ab adulescéntia:
 ego hanc clementem uítam urbanam atque ótium secútus sum et, quod fórtunatum istí putant, uxórem numquam habui. íle contra haec ómnia :
- 20 ruri ágere uitam ; sémpre parce ac dúriter 45
 se habére ; uxorem dúxit ; nati fílii duo : índe ego hunc maiórem adoptauí mihi ;
 edúxi a paruolo, hábui, amauí pró meo ;
 in eó me oblecto : sólum id est carúm mihi.

do, praefermitto, non necesse habeo omnia pro meo iure agere; postremo, alii clanculum patres quae faciunt, quaer fert adulescentia, ea necelet consuefeci filium.

- 55 nam qui mentiri aut fallere insuerit patrem aut 30 auderibit, tanto magis audebit ceteros.
pudore et liberalityate liberos retinerre satius esse credo quam metu.
haec fratri mecum non conueniunt neque placent.

malum coactus qui suum officium facit, si sperat fore clam, rursum ad ingenium redit.

ille quem beneficio adiungas ex animo facit, studet par referre, praesens absensque idem erit.
hoc patrumst, potius consuefacere filium
- 75 sua sponte recte facere quam alieno metu: 50 hoc pater ac dominus interest. hoc qui nequit, fateatur nescire imperare liberis.

EXPLANATORY NOTES

DIDASCALIA

Didascalia (Διδασκαλία) was a term applied by the Greeks to the training of the chorus and the actors for a dramatic performance. It was used also of the pieces thus brought forward at a dramatic entertainment, and again of certain public notices (hung up in the theatre) in which were given the names of the competing poets, and the titles of their plays, as well as important dates, names of actors and chorègi, and other matters connected with the dramatic contests. Documents such as these were systematically prepared, by Alexandrian scholars, upon particular tragedies and comedies, and from 150 b. c. downward the Roman grammarians imitated this custom in the interest of their own dramatic writers. Prominent among these Roman grammarians was Marcus Terentius Varro, who lived from 116 to 27 b. c. The didascaliae inserted in the MSS. of Plautine and Terentian comedies rest largely on his authority. They are given in the form of prefatory notices, whose purpose is to make known, as a sort of advertisement, the source or origin of each play, and the time and circumstances of its first representation. The didascaliae of Terence are in the main complete; those of Plautus are merely fragmentary, except that attached to the Stichus.

In consequence of the destruction of the first leaves of the Codex Bembinus, the didascalia to the Andria is lost, but it has been restored without difficulty on the analogy of the didascaliae to the other plays, and through the information supplied by Donatus (Introd. § 41).

Andria: the play takes its name from one of its characters, who is a native of "Ανδρός, an island in the Cyclades group. Hence ἡ Ἀνδρία, "the Andrian (woman)." The story is adapted from the Andria (Ανδρία) of Menander, with additions from the Perinthia (Περινθία) of the same poet.

acta, etc., "acted at the ludi Megalenses, under the auspices of M. Fulvius and M'. Glabrio, Curule Aediles." The Megalesian games began on the fourth of April, and continued for six days. The third day was devoted to the performance of plays. Cf. Introd. § 74.

Aedil Curul: i. e. Aedilibus Curulibus; one of the prerogatives of these magistrates was the licensing of plays for public performances.

egit, "undertook the representation," "put upon the hoards;" sc. fabulam.

L. Ambiuius Turpio was the manager of a troupe of actors, and himself the most famous actor at Rome, previous to Roscius, with whom he is coupled by Tacitus in his Dialogus de Oratoribus. That his acting delighted even those who sat in the most distant seats of the theatre is affirmed by Cicero (Cat. Mai. 14). His grex or company brought out all of the six comedies of Terence, for in the time of that poet it was customary for the aediles to contract with some 'manager' for the production of the play which they had accepted from the playwright. In earlier times the poet himself had been both composer and exhibitor. Cf. Introd. § 65.

L. Hatilius Praenestinus belonged probably to a later period than Ambiuius Turpio, and the association of the two names may have been due to accident or carelessness. The name is coupled with that of Ambiuius in all of the didascaliae except that to the Hecyra (and Heaut. in Codex A). In Dziatzko's opinion, the mention of two actors suggests two different performances. See Dz., on the didasc. to the And., in Rhein. Mus. 20. 572 f., and 21. 64 f.

modos fecit, "composed the measures," "set the play to music."

Flaccus Claudi: sc. seruos; see Introd. § 64. The attitude of the Roman citizen towards accomplishments of this sort was one of disdain. Singing, dancing, and the like were inconsistent with that gravitas which was the Roman's typical virtue. Cicero (Murena, 6. 13) says, nemo . . . fere saltat sobrius, nisi forte insanit. But slaves were often very accomplished, and were employed in occupations in which their less intellectual masters might well have been proud to be expert.

tibis paribus tota, "on equal pipes throughout" (tibIs = tibiis; understand acta est); i. e. whenever in this play there was musical accompaniment the instrument used was the flute, consisting of two pipes of equal length, divergent and uniting so as to bring each mouthpiece within the clasp of a bandage that passed over the mouth of the performer. Cf. Introd. § 85. Contrasted with the tibiae pares were the tibiae inparies, whereof the pipes were unequal in length. The right hand pipe was that on which the melody was played, while the left was used for the accompaniment. The former was usually known as dextra, the latter as sinistra. Yet both pipes were occasionally dextrae (see didasc. to Eun.), and in that case they were also commonly pares. Cf. Introd. l. c.

Graeca Menandru, "the Greek original is by Menander." With Graeca understand fabula. See n. on didasc. to Ad. 6. Menandru = Μενάνδρος, gen. of Μένανδρος; understand est. The Greek form was preferred by the learned composers of the didascaliae; cf. Apollodoru = Ἀπολλοδώρου (in the didasc. to the Phorm. and Hec.); cf. also timorumenos = τιμωρούμενος. On the other hand, Diphili (not Diphilu) occurs in Ad. Prol. 6.

facta I = facta prima; i. e. it was the first of the poet's plays to be brought out or exhibited, and this happened when M. Marcellus and C. Sulpicius were consuls, in 166 b. c. Less probably, facta I refers to the order of composition; see the Teuffel-Schwabe Hist. of Rom. Lit. vol. 1, § 109. 5 (Warr's translation). If so, it is not to be immediately connected with the names of the consuls, since the latter are intended to indicate the year in which the play was performed. See Spengel's Andria, 2d edition, Introd. p. viii. It is probable that the play was composed and presented to the aediles two years, at least, prior to its performance.

PERIOCHA

Short metrical summaries of the plots of the plays are found in the MSS.; in the Bembine these are called periochae (περιοχαι), in the other codices argumenta. They are composed in the metre known as the iambic senarius, and have, each, twelve verses; but their prosody is loose, and their diction, though in evident imitation of the style of Terence, is often quite mechanical, and far removed from any resemblance to classical Latinity. Since the prologues to Terence's plays, however, have little or nothing to do with the plot, these summaries are not altogether without their appropriate character. They were not written by Terence, but by Gaius Sulpicius Apollinaris of Carthage, who is frequently mentioned in the Noctes Atticae of Aulus Gellius. The latter had been his pupil, and refers to him as uir in nostra memoria praeter alios doctus. Apollinaris was the teacher also of the Emperor Pertinax, and the author of the summaries of the books of the Aeneid, and perhaps of the non-acrostic Arguments to Plautus. He was one of the learned pedants who, in the second century after Christ, devoted themselves to the study of the older Latin literature; it was evidently his aim to revive as far as possible the language and style of the comic poets.

1. sororem, etc.: cf. Eun. Per. 1. meretriculae: i. e. Chrysis, the daughter of the Andrian citizen to whom Phania, the brother of Chremes, had attached himself as client, and who on Phania's death adopted Pasibūla, the daughter of Chremes, changing her name to Glycerium. The diminutive occurs again in Heaut. Per. 10, and Hec. Per. 4, and also in Plautus, but nowhere in Terence himself.

3. dat fidem, etc.: cf. Ad. Per. 9.

4. namque aliam: thus Umpf., Meis., Dz., Fleck. The MSS. have nam aliam, presenting an uncertain hiatus.

5. gnatam: i. e. Philumena, another daughter of Chremes, born since the loss of Pasibūla. The form is in imitation of Terence's use of gnatus (older form of natus) as substantive; the pure participle appears in the MSS., without exception, as natus, nata. Hence natum in vs. 9.

8. persuasu: suasu, if read, would be pronounced as a trisyllable, contrary to the usage of Plautus and Terence. "Pamphilus scorns not the advice of Dauos," and gets into trouble in consequence.

10. generum abdicat, "disclaims (rejects) him as son-in-law."

11. filiam, "as his daughter." adgnitam: archaic for agnitam; cf. Phorm. Per. 12, and Hec. Per. 11.

12. aliam: for alteram, i. e. Philumena. Apollinaris follows that edition of the play which terminated with the so-called Second Ending of the Andria; see below on vs. 981.

PERSONAE

Persona was the word for a character in a play, and was first applied to the actor's mask, through whose mouth-aperture the voice reached the ears of the audience (per, sonare), greatly increased in volume; see Haigh, The Attic Theatre, 2d ed. p. 296 f. In the text of most MSS. of Terence, the personae are distinguished by the initial letters of their names, but in the codices Bembinus and Victorianus (in part) they are indicated by letters of the Greek alphabet. Cf. n. on Cantor, 981. The lists of personae prefixed to the plays are not found in the MSS., but are compiled from the headings to the different scenes. The order of the names corresponds to the order in which they come upon the stage, rather than, as in Shakespeare's dramas, to the relative importance of the characters themselves. The names in both Plautus and Terence are, in most cases, of Greek origin, and are frequently intended to suggest the disposition or some striking peculiarity of the character represented. For example, in the Andria, the possible derivation of Pamphilus (from $\pi\acute{a}s + \phi\acute{ι}\lambda\acute{e}\omega$), the name of the ardent lover, is obvious, while Glycerium, his betrothed, is suggestive of $\gamma\lambda\acute{u}k\acute{\eta}\acute{s}$, "sweet." On this subject see Spengel's Andria, Introd. p. xiv, and Lorenz's Most. pp. 2-3; compare the custom of the playwrights of the Elizabethan period in England; see also Sheridan (School for Scandal), and Thackeray.

PROLOGUS

The purpose of the prologue in the New Comedy of Menander and his brother poets was to explain whatever the audience needed to know about the play — its source, name, plot — and to bespeak for it the goodwill of the spectators. In general it may be said that Plautus followed his models in this respect. But Terence departed from this custom. His prologues are simply short addresses which, though they give the name and the origin of the play, and plead for a friendly and impartial hearing, are yet in no respect concerned with the plot or contents of the play itself. They are devoted chiefly to the criticism of rival poets and detractors, by whom Terence seems to have been much beset. In using the prologue as a weapon of defence against unfriendly critics he differed radically from his predecessors. Among his detractors, the poet Luscius Lanuuinus (or Lauinius)¹ seems to have been particularly prominent. He is referred to as poëta uetus in Phorm. 1, and as maliuolus uetus poëta in Heaut. 22 and And. 7, but never by name, for ὄνομαστί κωμῳδεῖν had by this time ceased. Cf. n. on 7 below.

It is probable that prologues were at one time prefixed to all the plays of Plautus. If so, at least nine of them are lost, in whole or in part; those that have survived belong, probably, to the second half of the second century B. C., when a revival of Plautine study took place in Rome, and when the lack of new pieces induced a reversion to the former favourite of the people. See Ritschl's Parerga, I, pp. 180–238. It is true that argument has been made in favour of the genuineness of the prologues to the Aulularia, Rudens, and Trinummus, but as all the prologues are inferior productions, and for that reason hardly to be attributed to Plautus, the best that can be said for the authenticity of those in question is that they may be the originals considerably interpolated and changed.

The prologues of Terence, on the other hand, are all genuine. Their delivery was usually assigned to one of the younger actors (see Heaut. Prol. 1–2), who was dressed especially for the purpose—ornatu prologi—and did not, for the time being, represent one of the regular characters of the play. The prologues of the Heauton and the Hecyra, however, seem to have been assigned to an old man, who was undoubtedly Ambiuius Turpio. The metre of all the prologues is the iambic senarius.

The origin of the prologue may almost be said to be due to Euripides. At least, he more than any one else is responsible for the use of a preliminary address or speech, which details the events leading up to the main action, and informs the audience of what it needs to know in order to a proper understanding of the piece. An example of the Euripidean prologue is the speech of Apollo at the opening of the Alcestis, — the drama that, with others of Euripides' plays, did much to pave the way for the New Comedy of Menander and his colleagues, and thus for the comedy of the Romans.

1. Poëta: Terence's usual way in the prologues of alluding to himself. hic (18) and hic noster (19) have the same reference. Terence never mentions himself by name, whereas in seven of the prologues of Plautus, where reference is made to the author, the latter is spoken of as Plautus or Maccius, not as poëta. quom: always thus spelled in Plautus and Terence, and preferred to cum until the time of Augustus. quum (if a Latin form at all) belongs to the very late Empire. adpulit ad is both early and classical. The dat. instead of ad with acc., as in Vergil's me uestris deus adpulit oris, does not belong to the ante-Ciceronian period. Cf. 446 and 56.

2. id negoti, "this simple task"; more restricted than id negotium. The partitive gen. dependent on a neut. pron. (more commonly the interrog. quid) is very frequent in Terence; cf. 250, 953; Heaut. 848; Eun. 546, 662, 833; Phorm. 343; Hec. 643.

3. quas fecisset fabulas, "whatever plays he should compose"; for fabulae quas fecisset. Another kind of attraction takes place when the antecedent keeps its position before the rel., as in Plaut. Amph. 1009 Narucratem quem conuenire uolui, in nauis non erat. Usually the attracted word is the subject of the sentence, though not always; cf. Plaut. Capt. 110 istos captiuos duos Heri quos emi . . . Is indito catenas singularias.

4. euenire, "happens," "turns out." multo, "very much so," strengthens aliter and is a kind of afterthought.

5. prōlogis: from πρόλογος. So we have occasionally prōpino from πρόπινω, prōpola from προπάλης, etc. operam abutitur, "uses up (exhausts) his efforts." abuti (ἀποχρῆσθαι) before Cicero's time meant "to use completely"; afterwards it came to signify "to misuse," in consequence of its association with the idea of misdirected effort, or owing to its connection with an adv., like male, peruorse. From this it is but a step to the idea of abuse or outrage, without any modifying word or phrase, as in quousque abutere patientia nostra (even here, however, we may render "use up"). abutor takes the acc. in Terence, but utor is constructed with the abl., except in Ad. 815. So fruor is joined with the abl., except possibly in Heaut. 401, where ingenium frui is the reading of A, ingenio of the other MSS. potior is written with the acc. in Ad. 871, 876, Phorm. 469, but with the abl. in Phorm. 830. fungor governs the acc. everywhere, except, perhaps, in Ad. 603, where however some editors substitute tuom officium for two officio of the MSS. In Plautus the acc. is the rule with fungor, and in general it may be said that the acc. was the prevailing construction with these verbs in early Latin. See Roby, 1223, and Preface to vol. ii, p. lxxvii. For abutor see Lodge, Lex. Pl. s. v.

6. "Not in explaining the plot, but in replying," etc.; cf. Ad. Prol. 22 f. qui is an old form of the abl., or perhaps a locative. It may be either relative, interrogative, or indefinite, and of any gender or number. Here it is rel. and adverbial (cf. English "whereby") = quibus of classical prose, and the following subj. is one of purpose; cf. 307, 334, 335, 408, etc.

7. uetoris poëtae: i. e. the poet Luscius Lanuinus, whose name has been handed down by Donatus; see n. above on Prologus. Donatus has preserved also two lines of his poetry.

8. quam rem uitio dent, "what they impute as a fault"; cf. n. on 3. The subject is the uetus poëta and his party.

9. Menander: see Introd. § 10 and passim. Andriam et Perinthiam: thirteen short fragments of the first, and eight of the second, are all that have been preserved of these two plays. See Meineke, Frag. Com. Graec. IV, p. 81 f. and p. 187 f. The Perinthia is named from one of the characters, a girl of Perinthos in Thrace.

10. norit . . . nouerit: cf. the plpf. forms noras and noueras (Phorm. 384 and 390). nouerit is fut. pf.; norit the same contracted. The longer form is usually placed at end of the vs., metri gratia. For the thought cf. Phorm. 265 and Vergil's ab uno discet omnis.

12. oratione . . . ac stilo, "thought and expression." stilus is similar in meaning here to scriptura in Phorm. Prol. 5. Cf. Donatus, oratio ad res refertur, stilus ad uerba.

13. quae conuenere, "all that he found suitable." in Andriam: to be taken with transtulisse. The Andria of Terence is meant.

14. fatetur transtulisse: sc. se; the omission of the pronominal subject of the infin. is common in Terence. Cf. n. on 870. The expression means simply that Terence translated the Greek into Latin. Donatus is authority for the statement that the whole of the first scene of Terence's Andria was taken from the Περιθώλια.

15. isti: the poet's detractors; cf. 21 and Ad. Prol. 15. But under cover of the pl. Terence refers more particularly to Lanuuinus. id isti: a monosyllable, or an initial syllable, long by nature or by position, if preceded by a short monosyllable or by a word rendered monosyllabic through elision of its final vowel, may be shortened, and the two may constitute either the thesis or the arsis of the foot; if the thesis, then the accented syllable precedes the shortened syllable, but otherwise follows it. Cf. Introd. § 91.¹ in eo, "in doing so," "in this"; with a refer. to uituperant. Cf. 46 and 50 in hac re, 94 in ea re. disputant, "maintain."

16. contaminari, "be mingled," "be mixed," refers to the practice of blending parts of two Greek plays so as to form one Latin play. The idea of spoiling the plays in the process is connoted; the Gk. originals are spoiled for translation into Latin by Lanuuinus, if scenes are taken from them by Terence. Cf. F. D. Allen in P. A. P. A. for July, 1888, vol. xix, p. xxv. Contaminare is connected with tag-, the root of tango, and suggests contact merely. Through contact comes often defilement; hence the meaning, "pollute," "spoil," — the usual signification of the word: cf. Cic. Cat. 1. 12; Caes. B. G. 7. 43; Hor. Od. 1. 37. 9. The usual meaning is dominant in Heaut. Prol. 17, and is the only possible one in Eun. 552. The word occurs nowhere else in Terence, and seems to have been unknown to Plautus. The noun, contaminatio, is post-classical. See Introd. §§ 48, 49. The practice itself is defended also in the prologues to the Eun. and the Ad., but without the use of the word contaminare. A Latin play taken wholly from a single Greek play was termed integra fabula; cf. Heaut. Prol. 4.

17. "Do they not make it out with their knowing that they know nothing?" That -ne often has the force of nonne in Plautus and Terence is correct enough for practical purposes; but, of course, -ne is non-committal. For the oxymoron cf. Hec. 274.

18. For the poets mentioned here see Introd. §§ 27, 28, 29, 30-36, 37.

19. hic noster, "this poet of ours," i. e. Terence; cf. n. on vs. 1 (poeta). auctores, "examples," "models." The liberties which Plautus took with his originals are hinted at by Horace (Epist. 2. 1. 175), who believed that that dramatist was indifferent to the artistic merit of his plays if only their sale put money into his pocket.

20. exoptat, "ardently desires"; a strong word. Cf. Heaut. 408. nec-lendentiam, "freedom."

21. istorum obscuram diligentiam, "the pedantic accuracy of his critics"; i. e. that excessive accuracy which resulted in obscurity, by destroying the freedom of spirit which gave life to the original. 'The letter killeth, but the spirit giveth life.' Lanuuinus gave his attention to the first, at the cost of the second. Terence avoided this snare. Cf. Eun. Prol. 7.

22. dehinc: see on 187. dehinc porro = "from this time forth"; like deinde porro in Plaut. Trin. 945.

23. diceré: see Introd. § 91. noscant, "come to know," i. e. through me.

24. fauete (sc. linguis) = silete, "keep silence." Cf. εὐφημεῖτε (Ar. Ran. 353). Before the commencement of a sacrifice, "the priest or herald exhorted the people "to favour (the occasion) with their lips (or tongues)," that is, to avoid all ill-omened words which might vitiate the sacred rite. As the best way of doing this was to maintain silence, the expression came to bear that meaning in colloquial language, as elsewhere. Cf. Hor. Od. 3. 1. 2, and 3. 14. 10; Verg. Aen. 5. 71 ore fauete omnes. See on Eun. Prol. 44. adeste aequo animo, "lend your attention and be fair-minded"; cf. Phorm. Prol. 30; Ad. Prol. 24; Heaut. Prol. 27, 28; Plaut. Amph. Prol. 16. Cf. also Verg. Aen. vi. 129 aequus Iuppiter, i. e. "friendly," which may be the meaning here. rem cognoscite, "seek to understand the matter," i. e. as though you were conducting a judicial investigation. Cf. Eun. Prol. 42; Plaut. Capt. Prol. 67.

25. "That you may reach a conclusion whether you have aught to expect (from such a poet)"; cf. Phorm. 474 ecquid spei porrost. Cf. n. on And. Prol. 2. quid is indef. relicuom: four syllables. Understand ubis.

26-7. quas comoedias = comoediae quas; see on 3. Transl. "(and) whether the comedies which hereafter he shall make anew are to be witnessed throughout by you or are to be hissed from the stage before (they are seen).” The indirect question in 27 depends on pernoscatis, and serves merely to explain further the words ecquid spei sit reliuom. prius may be explained as = potius “rather,” or preferably as = prius quam spectatae sint.

ACT I. SCENE I.

Instead of using his prologue as a means of expounding to his audience the circumstances that condition the action of the play, and so much of the plot as might be necessary to an appreciation of the events of the drama, Terence has chosen to use for this purpose a number of verses at the opening of each play (in the Andria, vss. 28–171). There can be no doubt that he was assisted in this by his models of the New Comedy, which must have dealt with the plot in the first scene. In the Andria, whose first scene is based on the Perinthia ($\Pi\epsilon\rho\iota\theta\iota\alpha$) of Menander, Terence has chosen as his model the play which presents its opening scene in the form of a dialogue, in preference to the one which begins with a soliloquy — the plot being substantially the same in both. In doing this he takes into account the peculiarities of a Roman audience, to whom the monologue of the 'Ανδρία would have seemed dull. According to Donatus, who is our chief informant on these points, this monologue is said by an old man, whereas in the Περινθία an aged gentleman converses with his wife. In Terence the same personage speaks with his freedman, who is an invention of the Latin poet himself. Such a character however was merely a mechanical device to which Terence resorted according to his needs, and for which he had the authority of Plautus. It was persona extra argumentum arcessita, as explained by Donatus, and had no part in the action of the play. The Gk. $\pi\rho\sigma\omega\pi\sigma\nu$ $\pi\rho\tau\alpha\tau\iota\kappa\sigma\nu$ was a similar creation. Of such a nature are Philotis and Dauios in the Hecyra and Phormio respectively.

28. Simo and his freedman Sosia enter the stage from the right (see Introd. § 72). Behind them are two slaves carrying victuals purchased in the forum. Simo sends the slaves within doors, but detains Sosia.

uos: i. e. slaves. Istaec: i. e. the victuals. Sosia, after his manumission, remains in the household of his former master, and acts as overseer to the culinary department. In the scene-headings of some MSS. he is designated as cocus.

29. ades dum, “here, a moment”; often used in recalling a person who is about to take his departure. Cf. 344; Hec. 510. The enclitic particle dum serves to modify the force of the imperative, and so affects the accent that adésdum may be regarded as one word. Cf. n. on 184; Introd. § 89. For dum see Lindsay, Lat. Lang. p. 609. paucis te uolo: i. e. paucis uerbis te uolo conloqui (or adpellare); cf. Plaut. Mil. 376 sed paucis uerbis te uolo, Aul. 199 paucis te uolo adpellare. paucis is abl. So also with audire and auscultare; cf. 536; Eun. 1067; Hec. 510; Ad. 806. In these cases the full construction may have been audi (ausculta) me paucis uerbis dicere.

30. curentur, “be attended to,” i. e. “cooked”; understand uis. immo aliud, “nay, another thing”; see on 523.

31. mea ars, “my skill.” Sosia is thinking of his skill in cookery, but there is a reference to “skill” taken in a more general sense. On the high esteem in which the art of cookery was held in the days of the New Attic Comedy, see Mahaffy, Social Life in Greece, p. 299. hoc: i. e. the preparation of the meal.

33. eis : sc. rebus or artibus; explained by fide et taciturnitate.

34. expecto quid uelis, “I await your pleasure.”

35. a paruolo: ἐκ παιδός; cf. Ad. 48 and 494; And. 539; 2d Tim. iii. 15 “from a child.” The English is commonly abstract, “from boyhood.” ut: dependent interrogative, “how”; a common use in Plaut. and Ter.

36. apúd me: a word group, the pers. pron. being without accent if unemphatic. Hence the ictus falls on the second syllable of apud instead of the first. Cf. n. on ades dum, 29. clemens, “mild,” “easy”; cf. Ad. 42.

38. seruibus = seruiebas; thus frequently in verbs of 4th conj. Cf. 930 aiebat with 932 aibat; 116 scies with Hec. 246 scibo. liberaliter, “in the spirit of a freeman”; cf. n. on Ad. 886. Cf. also the fine words of Menander (Frag. Com. Graec. Mein. iv, p. 293), ἐλευθέρως δούλευε· δούλος οὐκ ἔστει.

39. preium, “reward,” i. e. freedom; cf. 610, where the reward is punishment.

40. haud muto factum, “not that I would alter what I have done.” A freedman, if he proved to be unworthy of his freedom, might be reduced again to slavery by due process of law. See Harper’s Dict. Class. Lit. s. v. libertus.

41. Simo: the quantity of the i is against the suggested derivation from Σίμων.

42. et id grátum: see on Prol. 15. aduorsum te: lit. “before you,” and so “in your estimation,” “in your eyes.” habeo gratiam, “I am thankful”; see on Phorm. 894. There is a play on gratum and gratiam.

43. sed hoc mihi: see on 42. hoc: anticipatory. molestumst: i. e. molestum’st, i. e. molestum est, the enclitic form (’st) of the verb having become joined in writing with the previous adj. Thus generally in Terence. See B. App. § 202. 3. nam, “(I say so) because.” Cf. n. on enim, 91. istaec commemoratio, “your (act of) reminding (me),” i. e. “your act in reminding me.”

44. inmemori: governed by exprobratio which is regularly followed by a dative of the person. Verbal nouns sometimes retain the construction of the verb from which they are derived. In Plaut. the acc. still appears occasionally after the nouns derived from trans. verbs. By the time of Ter. the gen. had regularly taken the place of the acc.; cf. examples cited on 400. benefici: not dependent on inmemori so much as on exprobratio, which, in good Latin, is followed by a dat. of the pers. and a gen. of the thing — the latter corresponding to the acc. of the thing after exprobrare; see previous n., and cf. Livy, 23. 35. 7 praeceperat ne qua exprobratio cuiquam ueteris fortunae discordiam inter ordines sereret, where fortunae and cuiquam are separately dependent on exprobratio. Transl., "is like the reproaching an ingrate on account of a benefit (conferred upon him)." benefici is placed where it can be felt slightly also with commemoratio. The genitive ending in a single i is the regular inflection for all nouns in -ius, -ium, in the older Latin.

45. quin ("why not?") with the imv. is a development of its use with the indic. in questions; e. g. Heaut. 832 quin accipis ("why not take it?") is in effect a command. So 399. In And. 849 responde of the MSS. is changed to respondes by some good editors, who follow Don. quid est: questions apparently dependent frequently have the indic. in Plaut. and Ter. Strictly speaking, such questions are independent; as in English, when we say 'tell me, where are you going?' instead of 'tell me where you are going.' This is called parataxis. Cf. 449, 849, 878, etc. The indic. occurs most frequently after such expletives as dic mihi, loquere, cedo, responde, expedi, narra, uide, rogo, uolo scire, fac sciam, uiden, audin, scin, and the like. The tendency to paratactic arrangement of the members of a sentence predominated in early Latin speech, as also in the early Greek, and is natural to colloquial language at all times. Cf. E. Becker, de syntaxis interrog. oblig. in Studemund's Studien, p 115; Ussing's note on Plaut. Amph. Prol. 17; Roby, 1761. quod me uelis: clause of characteristic.

46. praedico, "I tell you beforehand," i. e. before entering into further details.

47. Ter. might have written hae nuptiae, quas ueras esse credis, non sunt uerae. Cf. n. on Prol. 3.

48. quōr: later cūr.

49–50. Simo's narrative corresponds, in the order of its events, to the three divisions here given: gnati uita, 51–156; consilium meum, 157–167; quid facere te uelim, 168–170. Cf. Cicero's diuisio tripartita (De Inuent. 1. 23. 33).

51. nam, "well then," introduces the narrative. postquam excessit ex ephebis, "after he had ceased to be counted among the ephebi," i. e. after he had passed his twentieth year. At Athens young men were styled ἔφηβοι ("mature youths") from 18 to 20 years of age, and served as περιπολοι in the militia. Here however the word ephebi may bear a meaning hardly more definite than adulescentes. Cf. Eun. 824, and Hor. Epist. 2. 1.

170 f. For the form of expression cf. Xen. Cyr. 1. 2. 12 ἐξῆλθεν ἐξ ἀφήβων; Plaut. Merc. 61. Sosia, etc.: see App.

52. nam, “(and I begin with this period of his life) for.” antea: only here in Ter., and nowhere in Plaut.

53. qui: see on Prol. 6; cf. 150, 302, etc.; Hor. Sat. 1. 1. 1 qui fit, Maecenas. Transl., “how could one have understood or even begun to know his natural bent?”

54. magister: i. e. παιδαγωγός, the slave who had charge of a boy's education, and accompanied him to school. prohibebant, “kept him out of mischief.” For this tense after dum cf. Eun. 728, and see G. 569. Note 1.

55. plerique omnes, “almost all”; cf. Heaut. 830, Phorm. 172. The expression is somewhat inaccurate. The order ought to be omnes plerique, the second word serving as a corrective to the first. The traditional order is due to metrical convenience, the que being then disposed of by elision.

56. ut . . . adiungant: explanatory of quod. animum adiungere occurs only here and in Hec. 683. Elsewhere Ter. uses animum adplicare (193), animum adpellere (Prol. 1; 446), animum adducere (Hec. 689, 836), animum aduortere (Heaut. 570).

56–7. equos and canes are both objects of alere which is in apposition with studium (56). ad philosophos is (logically) another appositive, but (grammatically) animum adiungant is understood. The infin. alere is a loose constr. for the gen. of the gerund; cf. Phorm. 886, where adimere should be adimendi. See Hor. A. P. 161 and Ar. Plut. 157, for testimony to the fondness of the Roman and Athenian youths for dogs and horses.

58. horum = harum rerum.

60. non iniuria, “not without reason.”

61. ut ne quid nimis: sc. agas; “that one should do naught to excess”; a proverb, translated from μηδὲν ξύνειν, which has been ascribed to Solon, to Pythagoras, and to other philosophers. For the omission of the subjunctive, cf. 120. See Wölfflin, Publili Syri Sententiae, p. 152.

62. sic refers to what follows. For sic = talis, cf. Phorm. 70. The use is colloquial. omnis: acc. pl. preferre ac pati: two verbs not infrequently united; cf. Cic. De Orat. 2. 19. 77 facile omnis perpetior et perfero, and Caes. B. G. viii. 30 ut omnia sibi patienda et preferenda existimaret. The hist. infin. is not uncommon in Ter.; cf. 97, 147, 662, and Ad. 45 where its use is co-ordinate with that of a finite verb.

63. quibus . . . quomque: tmesis; so in 263. dēdere: much stronger than dare. Transl., “to them he would devote himself,” or “give himself up.” Cf. 897, Eun. 1026. The difference between the two verbs in meaning and application is well illustrated in Heaut. 681 and 688, where dedere is seen to express absolute and permanent surrender, while dare denotes surrender that is merely relative and temporary.

64–5. See App.

65. ita ut = eo modo, quo.

66. inuenias: subjunctive of contingent futurity, “one would find”; see B. App. 360. b. Not infrequently this subj. of the 2d sing. has a strictly potential force, “one can find,” and such may be its meaning here. See B. App. 366. a.

67. hoc tempore, “in our time,” i. e., in these degenerate days.

68. This proverb, whether it originated with Ter., or, as is more probable, was only passed on by him to his successors, must have been a common saying in the time of Cicero, who says of it, Terentiano uerbo libenter utimur (De Am. 24. 89). obsequium almost = “fawning”; but Cicero (l. c.) uses it in the sense of “compliance.”

69. abhinc triennium, “three years ago.” abhinc regularly refers to the past, rarely to the future; cf. dehinc (22). It is associated usually with an acc., which serves as an appositive defining it more closely. It is seldom found with the abl.

70. huc uiciniam = huc in uiciniam, “into this neighbourhood.” See App.

71. inopia: the Andrians were proverbially poor. cognatorum neglegentia, “through the neglect of her kindred.” As her parents were dead it was incumbent on her nearest kinsman either to marry her himself, or to provide her with a dowry, that she might marry someone else. This at least was Athenian law, as laid down by Solon, and there seems to be a reference to it here, although there is no proof that the law held good at Andros. The law is stated, probably somewhat loosely, in the Phormio (125, 126). See n. on Ad. 652. Her nearest of kin is evidently Crito, since after her death he inherits the little property she had to leave (799).

72. aetate integra, “in the bloom of youth”; abl. of quality. Cf. Eun. 473.

73. ei (= hei) is an interjection.

74. parce ac duriter: inserted to explain pudice. Cf. Ad. 45. Cf. also durus in Hor. Epist. 1. 7. 91, and asper used of the country mouse in Hor. Sat. 2. 6. 82.

75. lana, etc., “with wool and web her living eking out”; cf. Heaut. 285. quaeritans: cf. n. on Ad. 81.

78. Iubidinem, “pleasure.”

79. condicionem, “their terms.” Cf. Heaut. 326; Hor. Od. 1. 1. 12 Attalicis condicionibus, “terms such as Attalus could offer.” quaestum may signify any business or occupation whereby money is made. In Plaut. Capt. 98, it is used of the trade of a slave-dealer, and is coupled with in- honestum. In Ad. 206 it refers to the occupation of a leno, and commonly the word points to some calling of a disreputable character. But this is largely because it = 'a seeking (of money),' then 'the process by which the money was sought,' trade, etc. Cicero (De Off. 1. 150, 151) supplies the necessary atmosphere for the word.

81. ēsset: from edo.

82. The omission of a verb of saying, thinking, or doing, is frequent in colloquial speech.

83. habet: sc. ictum or uolnus. When a gladiator received a mortal blow, the spectators cried habet. Here the expression is transferred to a love affair: "he has it," "he is hard hit." For the thought cf. Hor. Od. 1. 27. 11 f. obseruabam, "I used to watch." seruolos: young slaves (hence the dim.) who accompanied their masters when they went out to dinner, and returned at a specified hour to bring them home. Cf. Ad. 28 f.; Lorenz on Plaut. Most. 313. Donatus says they were called aduorsitores, and among the dramatis personae of the Mostellaria of Plautus the name Phaniscus aduorsitor occurs; but the word is nowhere used in the play itself, and is not found in general use. The expression aduorsum uenire is found in Most. 313; cf. Fay's note, l. c.

84. uenientis aut abeuntis: i. e. on errands to and from the houses of their respective masters, not the house of Chrys. puer: cf. the similar use of knäis, the German Knabe, the French garçon, the English boy.

85. sodes, "if you please"; contracted from si audes (audere = auidere, "to desire," "to wish," whence auidus). It is commonly accompanied by an imv., as here and in Ad. 517, 643; Heaut. 580; Hec. 844; Hor. Sat. 1. 9. 41 me sodes (sc. relinque); but not invariably, for cf. Hec. 753; Heaut. 738.

86. teneo, "I understand"; cf. 300, 349, 498; Heaut. 700, 778, etc.

87. Nicēratum: Nikēparov. Editors who retain nam may read Nicēratum on the analogy of Simo = Σίμων.

88. Pamphilus: sc. habuit. symbolam dedit, "he paid his scot." symbola (συμβολή), for which the pure Latin was conlecta (Cic. De Orat. 2. 57. 238), was the amount paid by each one of a number of contributors to a feast. Such a feast was called δεῖπνον ἀπὸ συμβολῶν, and the participants might be said de symbolis ēsse, as in Eun. 540. asymbolus was a person who attended the feast, but contributed nothing — as in Phorm. 339.

90-1. nil . . . quicquam, "nothing whatever." The emphatic pleonasms nil quicquam and nemo quisquam are frequent in the sermo cottidianus. For the former cf. Hec. 400; Eun. 884; Phorm. 80, 250; Ad. 366: for the latter Hec. 67; Eun. 226, 1032, and the equivalent constructions in Ad. 38, 529, 716-7.

91. enim uero, "why, of course." enim, which is often combined with other particles, was originally a corroborative particle, coniunctio affirmativa.

tiua (Priscian xvi, p. 103 f. H.; vol. iii, Keil), and in early Latin capable of standing first in the sentence (as here and in 206; Ad. 168; Hec. 238; Phorm. 983; Plaut. Trin. 1134, and Capt. 592); in later Latin it stood first only when immediately followed by uero. In Plaut. it is normally corroborative; in Ter. it is sometimes causal (e. g. in Ad. 649; Hec. 834); see Clement in A. J. P. xviii. 4, where the subject is treated at length. spectatum, “tested,” “approved.”

93. nam: cf. n. on 43. qui, “he who;” with animus in the next line understand cuius; that is, cuius animus = qui animo. This is better than to make animus the antecedent of qui, or to regard qui as equal to si quis. In actual fact, however, Greek and Latin are loath to repeat a relative in a changed case-form. ingeniis, “characters.” conflictatur, “is in company”; usually dep., but found in the act. voice in Phorm. 505. eius modi: i. e. such as were Chrysis and her lovers. eiuis is a monosyllable.

94. in ea re, “in doing so”; with a reference to conflictatur. tamen, “after all,” “in spite of everything”; often added to bring out the idea of concession. It gives strength to the sentence as θυως does. Cf. 881; Heaut. 1012; Ad. 110, 174, 226.

95. scias, “one may be confident”; cf. B. App. 366. a; and n. on 66 (inuenias). scias and suae are monosyllabic, by synizesis. So scio in 653, 658, etc. posse: sc. eum, antec. of qui (93). habere modum has the sense and constr. of adhibere modum, “to set bounds to.” On the use of the simple for the compound verb cf. Wilson in Gildersleeve Studies p. 49, and T. A. P. A. xxxi, pp. 202–222. ipsum, “of himself,” “unassisted.”

96–7. “Not only was I pleased at this, but also with one accord all men began to say all manner of complimentary things to me and to commend my good fortune.”

96. ore omnes omnia: the alliteration strengthens. It occurs most frequently in the last two or three words in a vs., but not seldom extends to many words, as in Ad. 322; Phorm. 334; Plaut. Men. 252 non potuit paucis plura plane proloqui. Cf. Ad. 990. The early Latin writers, notably Ennius, Plautus, and Lucretius, were extremely fond of alliteration and assonance. See Munro’s Lucretius, Introd. to Notes, II, p. 311. omnes omnia is a common collocation.

97. dicere: sc. michi. The infinitives are hist.; see on 62. meas has the value of the gen. of ego, and thus furnishes an antecedent to qui.

100. ultro . . uenit, “went out of his way to come to me.” It was more usual for the father of the young man to make the first advances.

101. dote summa: this proves to be decem talenta (951), or about $12,160. In Heaut. 838, a modest dowry is two talents, or about $2,432. No wonder Simo speaks of Chremes’ offer as summa!

102. placuit, "I agreed"; often without a dat. despondi (sc. eum), "I promised him in marriage." This verb is commonly used of promising a daughter in marriage, as in Heaut. 779. That the legality of a marriage contract should depend on a formal betrothal, in which the consent of the parents or guardians of the young people was a necessary factor, was owing mainly to the seclusion in which the women of a family were kept in both Greece and Rome, as well as to the power of the patria potestas, which a Roman father exercised over his sons. In the present instance it is evident from the sequel that Pamphilus had not even seen the daughter of Chremes, to whom he is thus betrothed by his own father. In Rome the consent of the bride's father had first to be obtained. Here it is given gratuitously. The simplest form of betrothal appears in Plaut. Poen. 1157: Ag. spondesne igitur? Ha. spondeo.

103. quor non = quominus; cf. Cic. N. D. 1. 34. 95 quid obstat quominus sit beatus? Terence's words = quid igitur causae est cur non fiant? Transl. "what then is in the way of the marriage (sc. nuptiae) taking place?"

104. fere in diebus paucis quibus, "very shortly after." Cf. the Spanish "en pocos días que." fere goes with paucis, "a couple of days or so." quibus is illogical; we should expect postquam. Cf. Caes. B. G. 3. 23 paucis diebus quibus eo uentum erat.

105. uicina haec, "our neighbour here." factum bene: an expression of joy over the happy ending of some matter that causes anxiety; cf. 969, 975. The opposite is male factum, as in Phorm. 751. In these expressions est is regularly omitted.

106. beasti (sc. me), "you delight me"; cf. Eun. 279. a Chryside expresses the source of his fear; cf. Liv. 23. 36. 1 ab Hannibale metuens. ibi tum, "thereupon," "then"; a pleonasm of the sermo cottidianus. Cf. 131, 223, 633; ibi alone has this sense in 149, 356, 379.

107. amarant: plpf.; see App. frequens, "often"; cf. Cic. Cat. Mai. 11. 38 uenio in Senatum frequens.

109. conlacrumabat, "wept bitterly." The preposition strengthens the verb, as in conlaudo, conclamo, etc. Compounds of con- are more numerous than those with any other prefix; most of these compounds belong to the early period. See Cooper, Word Formation in the Roman Sermo Plebeius, pp. 262-271. The word may mean also that he wept in sympathy with the rest.

110. paruae consuetudinis, "slight intimacy." Cf. 135.

111. causa = ob or propter, "on account of." tam familiariter, "with so much friendly feeling."

114. mansueti, "gentle." multis: cf. 29 paucis and n.

115. eius: i. e. Pamphilus.

116. etiam, "still." The negative here does not modify etiam; the sense is "still unsuspecting of evil." Cf. Heaut. 175 haud quaque etiam cessant, and see Kirk in A. J. P. vol. xviii. 1, p. 27. Spengel's n. on this etiam is misleading.

117. ecfertur, "she is carried forth (from the house)" ; cf. Plaut. Most. 1001 unum uidi mortuom efferri foras. imus : i. e. the funeral procession starts on its way. On this description of the funeral of Chrysis, see Cicero, De Oratore 2. 80. 327. The great orator not only commends the style as a whole, but praises in particular the elegant brevity of the words, ecfertur; imus.

118. unam, "one in particular."

120. ut nil supra: sc. esse possit; "that nothing could exceed it" ; cf. n. on 61; Ad. 264; Eun. 427. For a slightly different view (involving the Emphatic Neuter) see Greene in Class. Review for December, 1904, p. 450.

121. lamentari praeter ceteras : because she was the sister and nearest relative.

123. honesta ac liberali, "fair and noble" ; cf. Eun. 682, 473; Ad. 684. Note that Simo is much impressed with the beauty of Glycerium. His description awakens our interest in her, and our sympathy for the young man. Glycerium, as we shall learn presently, was freeborn, ingenua. She was, too, an Athenian citizen. Hence the poet is careful to save her character as far as possible. Passages similar to this in thought and purpose abound in the plays. pedisequas : attendant slave-women of Chrysis. These would naturally follow in the funeral procession of their mistress, who may be supposed, from what Crito says in 779, to have been no longer poor at the time of her death.

125. percussit ilico animum, "suddenly it struck me" ; almost impersonal. The subject (= the truth of the matter) is suggested by the previous words, and explained further by what follows. For ilico see on 514. attāt, "ah!" Note the long ultima. hoc illud est : i. e. τοῦτ' ἔστιν ἐκεῖνο, "this explains that matter," "there we have it."

126. hinc illae lacrumae became a proverb, used often when there was no question of actual tears—as in Hor. Epist. 1. 19. 41 ; cf. Cic. Pro Cael. 25. 61. There is a reference to conlacrumabat (109). Cf. n. on Ad. 96 (nullum factum).

127. quorsum euadas : cf. 176; Ad. 509.

128. sepulchrum : the place where the body was burned ; so also sepelio often of the place merely, although the body was burned, not buried.

129. fletur : impers. Notice the tenses in this and the previous vs. The presents denote repeated action and are picturesque ; the historical perfects (aorists) give the final issue or result and point to acts done once.

131. satis cum periclo, "with no little danger (to herself)." ibi tum :

see on 106. exanimatus, "almost breathless," implies loss of self-possession.

132. "Betrays the passion he had thus far so well concealed." The synonyms, dissimulatum and celatum, merely strengthen each other.

133. mediam, "around the waist"; cf. Ad. 316.

134. te is perditum: Glycerium is actuated solely by love for her sister, and for the moment forgets everything in the intensity of her despair and grief. To suppose that in going dangerously near to the burning pyre her purpose was to force Pamphilus to betray in public his affection for herself, in order that his betrothal to the daughter of Chremes might be annulled, is to make her both calculating and heartless — which is far from the poet's intention. See on 123. For the constr. cf. Heaut. 315.

135. consuetum amorem, "the enduring quality of their affection." Cf. Hec. 404, 555. ut cerneret: both potential and consecutive; "so that one could observe." Cf. Heaut. 307 ut facile scires. See B. App. 366. b.

136. quam familiariter: lit. "how trustingly," or, as Mme. Dacier puts it, "d'une manière si pleine de tendresse." For the constr. and order cf. Eun. 178.

137. quid aīs: a common expression in Plaut. and Ter., with varying shades of meaning (cf. n. on 184). Here, as often, it is an exclamation of surprise, "what!" "what's that you say!" Cf. 301, Ad. 570, etc.

138. ad obiurgandum: the more classical constr. would be obiurgandi, as in 158; cf. 154. See on 482. nec satis causae: cf. n. on Ad. 96 (nullum factum). nec = et non tamen. diceret: sc. si obiurgarem; ideal ('less vivid') condition transferred to the past; see G. 596. 2.

139. quid commerui, "of what error have I been guilty?" commereo is used regularly in a bad sense, promereo regularly in a good sense, mereo in either; cf. Hec. 486, 631; Phorm. 206, 516; Ad. 201, 681.

141. honesta, "proper."

143. quid facias illi, "what would you do to that fellow?" Cf. Hor. Sat. 1. 1. 63. The dat. of the person in this constr. is the dat. of the indirect object, and is rare; still more rare is the use of the prep. de. Regularly facere, fieri and esse are (in future forms, which serve as the passive of facio) united with the simple instrumental abl. See 709; Heaut. 188, 317, 333, 462, 715; Ad. 611, 996; Phorm. 139; Hec. 668. damnum is damage done to property, while malum is outrage done to the person; hence malum dare is often used of the punishment of slaves, as in 431.

144. postridie: a locative; thus also meridie, die crastini, etc. See B. App. 256, 178, 126.

145. indignum facinus: an exclamation, which may be treated here as a statement in oratio obliqua (sc. esse); "that it is a shocking deed," "that it is monstrous." The exclamatory nature of the expression is seen in Phorm.

613, Eun. 70, Ad. 173, 669. On the other hand it is object of audies in 854. comperisse: sc. se; see on Prol. 14. A better punctuation and interpretation = clamitans (se) indignum facinus comperisse, Pamphilum, etc.

146. peregrinam: euphemistically for meretricem; nam hoc nomine etiam meretrices nominabantur (Donatus). The mere fact of a love affair with such a person, though censurable, would not have signified in comparison with the truly indignum facinus of desiring her pro uxore, in preference to an Attic citizen.

147. instat factum, “insists that it is true.”

148. ut qui . . . neget: qui here is not nom., but the adverbial abl. (see on Prol. 6), which shows itself later in atqui, quippe, etc. It is properly indefinite (= “in any way,” “somehow,”) but has ceased here, as in atqui, etc., to have any translatable force; ita . . . ut = “on the understanding that.” For ut with ‘stipulative’ force, see C. E. Bennett, T. A. P. A. vol. xxxi.

149. gnatum: sc. inuasisti or obiurgasti or adortus es (Donatus). Note the aposiopesis. ibi, “then”; cf. n. on 106.

150. qui, “how so?” See on 53. cēdō (“tell me!” “pray!”) is an archaic imperative corrupted by contraction from ce-dato = hocce dato, “give it here.” It is not always used absolutely, as here, but may be followed by an acc. or by a clause. Sometimes a dependent question follows it, as in 383 (perhaps), and Heaut. 662; but cf. 389; Heaut. 597; Ad. 688. The pl. cette is found only in early Latin, but the sing. is used by Cicero.

151–3. The excuses which Simo imagines his son would advance.

151. his rebus: i. e. the intrigue with Glycerium. finem: the limit set by his marriage. praescripsi = praescriptsisti; the omission of -is(s)- is to avoid excessive sibilation. Such omission occurs in verb-forms when s or x precedes. It is found in all the Latin poets, and occasionally in colloquial prose; cf. Cic. ad Att. 12. 42. 1 dixti. It happens most frequently in the pf. indic. act. 2d sing. and pl., as promisti, scriptis; in the pf. infin. act., as scripte, dixe, and in the plpf. subj. act., as recesset, duxem. Cf. Rohy, § 663; Lindsay, Lat. Lang. p. 508, and the note of Klotz on this passage. Cf. also Lease, ‘Contracted Forms of the Perfect in Livy,’ Class. Rev. xviii (Feb. 1904).

152. prope adest quom, “the time is near when”; cf. Hec. 543; Ad. 299; Plaut. Capt. 516, and Rud. 664 nunc id est quom. alieno more: i. e. as a wife would have him live.

155. The apodosis is implied in 154, according to the punctuation. But see App. amorem: i. e. for Glycerium.

156. ea: i. e. nolle uxorem ducere. aduortenda: see App. ab illo, “coming from him,” “on his part.” animum aduortenda iniuriast (= animaduortenda, etc.), “is a punishable offence”; the meaning, “to punish” (cf. 767), is derived from the primary sense, “to notice,” which,

e. g., the expression bears in Phorm. 909. Observe that, in the passive, one of the two accusatives (animum), which belonged to the active construction, is retained, as is usual when other active verbs that govern two accusatives become passive.

157-67. Simo now explains his plan of procedure (consilium meum); see on 50.

157. operam do is used with a neut. pron., as if it were a single word, curo, ago; cf. 307; Hec. 546 note; Ad. 617; and the use of animum aduorto. This use of id, quod, quid, etc., is essentially the same with that in 376, 448; Eun. 998, 829, 1034; Ad. 939. It gives the ground of the emotion.

159. sceleratus, "rascal"; cf. Ad. 553.

160. ut consumat, "that he may exhaust it," depends on operam do (157).

161. manibus pedibusque, "with might and main," modifies omnia facturum. Cf. Hom. Il. xx. 360 χερσίν τε ποσίν τε. obnixe: adv. and redundant, "to the utmost of his powers."

162. magis id adeo, "the more so for this reason in fact"; id (adv. acc.) anticipates the ut-cl.; see G. 333. 1, Rem. 2. adeo is intensive; cf. 415, 579, 585, 759, 775. incommodet, "thwart"; for the opposite see Hec. 760.

163. Tyrrell's text makes Sosia utter the words rogas, etc.; but this is a manifest oversight, probably due to the same error in Dziatzko. I have made the needed correction.

164. mala mens, malus animus, "evil thoughts, evil intentions." Cf. Ar. Pax 1068 δύν δόλιαι ψυχαῖ, δόλιαι φρένες.

166. in Pamphilo . . . morae: for the form of expression, cf. 420; Ad. 719; Verg. Ec. 3. 52 in me mora non erit ulla. For a second form cf. 593, and for a third, 424, 467; Plaut. Trin. 277 neque tibi ero in mora.

167. exorandus est, "must be prevailed upon"; exorare = "to succeed in one's entreaty," "to persuade." confore: impers.; "that this will be brought about." The other parts of the verb consum are supplied by confieri. Cf. n. on Ad. 946. confuturum however occurs in Plaut. Mil. 941 and elsewhere.

168. Here begins the third division of Simo's narrative. See on 50. ut adsimules: we might expect the infinitive, but ut is right, for tuomst officium has the force of tibi agendumst.

169. That Simo himself undertakes the two duties here enjoined upon Sosia is evident from 196 ff. and 404. But Sosia, though he does not appear after this scene, may be imagined as acting elsewhere in accordance with these instructions.

171. nunciam: an emphatic "now"; the word is not = nunc iam, but nunci-am, and is of three syllables. The same -am is found in quispiam, palam, coram; see Tyrrell, Mil. n. on 357. i prae: on Ad. 167. sequor: see App. See also n. on 186 (agis), and on 322.

ACT II. SCENE 1. [I. 2.]

Notwithstanding the fact that a new act is here indicated, Simo must be supposed to remain on the stage, where he lingers until vs. 205, in apparent disregard of his promise at 171 to follow Sosia into the house. But sequor need not be interpreted too literally, and Simo naturally takes advantage of the sudden appearance of Dauos, to warn the slave against any attempt to thwart him in his plans regarding Pamphilus.

173. ita: parataxis; later Latin would have preferred a causal particle. modo, "lately," "recently"; cf. Ad. 87. After the event mentioned in 99-102 and before the opening of the play, Simo must have given out that his son was to marry the daughter of Chremes, and that the day for the wedding had been fixed. modo is used also of the immediate fut., as in 594, and of the pres. (= "just now"), as in Ad. 289. This last use is anticlassical.

175. Dauos comes out of the house. He is muttering to himself; Simo withdraws to one side and overhears his remarks. mirabar si: cf. Phorm. 490. See A. & G. 572. b, note; Lane, 2068; G. 542, note 1. hoc: i. e. the conduct of Pamphilus. sic, "thus easily"; cf. n. on Ad. 454 haud sic auferent. abiret, "would come off (turn out)," i. e. pass unnoticed. semper: with lenitas, "the unbroken forbearance." The use of the adv. as an adj. is possible because lenitas has an attributive, eri. Cf. the Gk. οἱ νῦν ἀνθρώποι, etc.; Juvenal, iii. 34 quondam hi cornicines; Plaut. Per. 385 non tu nunc hominum mores uides? and Shaks. Hamlet, 'our sometime sister, now our Queen.' Spengel takes semper with uerebar. See App.

176. quorsum euaderet, "the outcome," "issue." For the clausula see Introd. § 79.

177. Since the event mentioned in 148, Simo has maintained strict silence (178), a fact somewhat inconsistent with the interpretation of those commentators who will have it that Simo stepped into the house at 171 and gave orders in the presence of Dauos for the pretended marriage. Those who interpret thus understand 173 to refer to these orders. But vs. 173 actually refers to the event described in 99-102, of which Dauos naturally would have been informed almost as soon as it had taken place. It was then too that Simo noticed the slave's anxiety (see on 172). Accordingly the nuptiae of 173 are not the "pretended marriage" of 157 and 168, and the stage does not become empty at 171. See n. introductory to this scene.

178. numquam: used instead of non for emphasis, like the English 'never.' Cf. Heaut. 559 numquam umquam, "never did I ever" (West). The sudden change of metre marks a sudden change of feeling (Introd. § 83), from grave to gay, in Dauos—a change emphasized by the five trochees, each of which consists of a separate word.

179. faciet: with particular reference to uerbum fecit (178). malo: on 143 (damnum).

180. id and hoc are frequently anticipatory to a clause of some kind, or even to a direct quotation, as in 255. Cf. 376, 497, 675, 268, 269, 391. nos: i. e. Pamphilus and Dauos. necopinantis: explanatory of sic. nec- has the same force (= non) as in neglego, negotium, etc. duci, "be led on"; cf. Phorm. 500.

181. interoscitantis opprimi, "be caught unawares"; more lit. "open-mouthed," "yawning," and so "half asleep," "napping."

182. spatium cogitandi: cf. 154 and n. on 138.

183. astute, "shrewdly (done)." hoc et gestu et uultu seruili et cum agitacione capitis dixit (Donatus). carnufex, "scoundrel," "villain"; in reality "an executioner." The occupation was called carnuficina, and as the office was neither honourable nor popular the word carnufex became a common term of vituperation and abuse, and was often applied to slaves. Cf. 651, 852; Ad. 363, 777; cf. also Ramsay's Mostell. pp. 259–260. neque prouideram, "yet I had not seen him before"; for neque cf. n. on 138. The common meaning of the verb is "to foresee," "to provide," as in Heaut. 116. praeuidere belongs to a later period.

184. eho dum ad me, "ho! for an instant, I want you"; eho is an exclamation that implies an imperative; hence dum. Cf. Heaut. 249, 550; Plaut. Bacch. 794 manendum, etc. See on 29 and cf. 324, 616; Eun. 360. quid aīs: often used in Plaut. and Ter. to introduce a new point in conversation; here it is introductory to what Simo is about to say in 185, but the cunning Dauos takes the words literally and injects qua de re (= "about what?"). Simo does not hear the words quid hic uolt. With quid aīs as used here cf. the French 'dis donc,' German 'sage mal,' English 'I say' and 'look here,' American 'say.' Cf. 517, 575; Ad. 556; n. on And. 137.

185. rumor est: in reality Simo has himself seen the evidence of it (129–136).

186. hocine agis an non, "will you attend to me or not?" more lit. "to this business of mine." Cf. n. on Heaut. 694. hocine = hoc-ne. agis: the pres. for the fut. is common in the sermo cottidianus. istuc: neut. acc. of istic, "that business of yours," "what you say"; understand ago. It is a neut. substantive likewise in the expression istuc aetatis (= id aetatis, Cic.), "at your age"; see Heaut. 110. It is an adv. = "to that point of yours," in Heaut. 274 and Ad. 821. ea: i. e. the course of conduct pursued hitherto by Pamphilus, to which reference is made in quod antehac fecit (187).

187. antehac: dissyllabic. See Introd. § 96.

188. tempus: the same as aetatis tempus in Hec. 594. Cf. 443 aetas = "youth." tulit: intrans. through the ellipsis of se (cf. Knapp's Vergil, Introd. § 139); "was suited to," more lit. "bore upon." siui: sc. eam rem. As the subj. after this verb is never introduced by ut in Plaut., it is well to take siui absolutely here and ut exploreret as an adv. cl. of purpose = "in order that, etc." But the ut-cl. in Hec. 590 clearly stands in objective relation to sinam, and may be warrant for a similar construction here.

189. hic dies: cf. 102.

190. dehinc: temp., "from this time on," "henceforth." siue = uel si. in uiām, "to the right way"; cf. n. on 442 (uia); Cic. Philipp. xii. 2. 7 quod si est erratum, patres conscripti, spe falsa atque fallaci, redeamus in uiām. ut . . uiām = ut tu cures ut ille redeat iam in uiām.

191. hoc quid sit may depend on rogas understood (cf. Ad. 288), as if Dauos had looked inquisitive or surprised, or had actually said hoc quid est? and Simo were repeating his question in the answer. A question echoed or repeated is mentally dependent and may have the subj. See on 282. Cf. Ad. 84, 374. qui amant: hiatus, with a shortening of the vowel, is allowed when a monosyllable bearing the ictus and ending in a long vowel or m stands before a word beginning with a vowel. See Introd. § 97. Cf. Ritschl, Prolegomena in Trin. 200 f.

192. magistrum: in this instance Dauos himself. Cf. n. on 54. eam rem: the fact stated in 191. inprobum, "bad," "ill-disposed."

193. ipsum aegrotum, "itself love-sick"; cf. 559. ipsum has the force of "without the promptings of a teacher." ad deteriorem partem, "upon (toward) the inferior course of action." adPLICAT, "sets," "guides."

194. non Oedipus: I am no guesser of riddles, says Dauos, and by this he suggests a resemblance between Simo and the Sphinx — an insinuation that would have amused the audience. Plautus (Poen. 443) says: —

Nam isti quidem hercle orationist Oédipo
Opus cōiectore, qui Sphingi interprēs fuit.

196–8. The change of metre is significant. The former lines being in recitative, the change to spoken lines (iambic senarii) gives particular prominence to the conditions therein set forth as those under which Simo will fulfil his threat; but the details of the threat itself are unfolded in the more weighty octonarii which follow (199, 200).

196. hodie: on Phorm. 1009.
197. quo . . . minus here indicates purpose, like ne after an expression denoting an effort to hinder.
199. pistrinum, "the grist mill," "mill-house." See Harper's Class. Dict. s. v. mola.
200. ea lege atque omine, "on these terms and with this assurance." ut . . . molam, "that I shall grind"; stipulative. Cf. 148 and n.
201. intellextin: on 151 (praescripsi). non dum etiam: dum is reinforced by the temp. etiam; see Kirk in A. J. P. vol. 18, pp. 33 and 34. 2). Cf. n. on 116. immo callide, "nay, thoroughly." Cf. n. on 523. callide is an ironical echo of quam sis callidus (198).
202. ita aperte: with sarcastic reference to aperte uis, etc. (195). For the force of ita see on 173. ipsam rem, "the plain truth." locutu's = locutus es; see on 43. circum itione: here as two words, since the second syllable of circum suffers elision. This reading is confirmed by the chief of the Regii codices used by Bentley; see Introd. § 110, and Warren in A. J. P. vol. III, p. 67. For the abl. see on Prol. 5.
203. passu(s) sim: for the obscuration of final s see Introd. § 93. For the mood see on 66, and cf. Hor. Sat. 1. 5. 4 nil ego contulerim iucundo sanus amico. See also Elmer in Cornell Studies in Class. Phil. no. vi, p. 211. For the tense cf. Elmer, l. c. p. 158. Transl. "in anything more readily than in this should I suffer myself to be deceived." deludier: an archaic form of the pass. infin., frequent in Plaut. and Ter. It is found generally at the end of the line—in Ter. always so, except in Hec. 827, where suspicarier ends the first half of an asyndetic vs. In Ad. 535 the true reading is laudari. Simo's statement illustrates a fundamental characteristic of the old man in comedy—the constant fear of being duped.
204. bona uerba, quaeso, "gently, gently, please"; more lit. "(speak) words of good omen, I pray you." Like εὐφῆμει, bona uerba is borrowed from the language of sacrifice, and is spoken here in irony. Hence Simo's indignant question, inrides? nil me fallis, "I'm not deceived by you."
205. ne temere facias, "don't do anything rash." See App. neque haud dicas, "and be sure you do not say." The two negatives strengthen each other. This was not only a Greek idiom (cf. οὐδὲ μή, and see Goodwin in Harvard Studies, vol. I, p. 72 fin.), but was in a measure characteristic of the sermo plebeius, from which it passed into the Romance languages. But see App. tibi non praedictum, "that you were not warned of this." With the threat on his lips Simo enters the house not to reappear until 404.

Now that Simo has retired Dauos assumes an easier manner and reflects on the difficulties of the situation. He is uncertain whether to heed the old man's warning or to side with Pamphilus, whose loves he would fain promote. He decides upon the latter course.

206. enim uero, "in very truth"; see on 91. segnitiae neque socordiae: probably datives, like preci in 601 and Phorm. 547; possibly genitives similar to obiurgandi (154). Transl. "there is no time for sloth or negligence." For the form segnitiae see on Ad. 267. Syrus, the slave, addresses himself in Ad. 763. For the sentiment cf. Ad. 631, Plaut. Asin. 249 and Merc. 112.

207. quantum, "so far as"; cf. 756, 423; n. on 861; Heaut. 592.

208. astu: from astus, "craft," "cunning," but found only in the abl. and as an adv., until the post-Aug. period. prouidentur, "are prevented." erum: i. e. Pamphilus. pessum dabunt, "will send to the bottom"; a metaphor taken from the sea. Cf. Plaut. Rud. 395 nunc eum cum nauis scilicet abiisse pessum in altum.

210. illum and eius refer to Pamphilus, huius to Simo. ei(u)s and hui(u)s are monosyllabic. See Introd. § 96. uitae timeo: Pamphilus is not incapable of taking his own life. uitae is dat. of the object for which one fears; cf. Heaut. 531; Hor. Sat. 2. 1. 23 sibi quisque timet. The dat. is to be distinguished from the acc., as in minas, which denotes the object feared.

211. uerba dare, "to impose upon," "hoodwink." Cf. 504; Ad. 621 n.; Eun. Prol. 24. primum, "in the first place," is balanced by ad haec mala (215); cf. Gk. πρῶτον μέν. de amore hoc comperit: for the more usual amorem hunc comperit; cf. Nep. Paus. 5. 3 postquam de scelere filii comperit.

212. seruat, "keeps watch on." ne . . . fallaciam, "lest I devise some trick in the matter of the marriage."

213-4. "If he finds it out, I am lost: [or] if it suits his whim, if he hits on an excuse, (whether) rightly or wrongly he will send me post-haste to the mill." See App.

214. praecipitem: sc. me. Cf. 606.

218. amentium, haud amantium, "lubbers not lovers." (So Knapp.) Puns are common in the Roman comedians, as in Shakespeare; but Plaut. is much freer in his use of them than Ter. The above is an instance of paronomasia or agnominatio, i. e. the bringing together of two or more words similar in sound, but wholly different in sense and etymology. This may be distinguished from 'assonance' in the narrower sense, the latter being caused by the juxtaposition of two words etymologically related. The distinction, however, must not be pressed too far. Cf. Heaut. 209, and n. on And. 96.

219. tollere, “to acknowledge.” According to a custom prevalent among both Greeks and Romans, the father of a new-born infant was called upon to decide whether it should be reared or exposed to death. If he decided upon the former course he formally raised (tollere) the child from the ground or other place where it had been laid for the purpose. Hence the expressions tékna ἀναρέισθαι and liberos tollere, which mean “to bring up,” “to rear.” Otherwise the child was “exposed.” Cf. Ad. 809.

221–4. Notice the change from indirect to direct quotation and back again. Such a mixture is common in Greek, and may have existed in the original.

221. ciuem Atticam esse hanc: this proves to be true in the end, so that, as Dauos remarks in 780, Pamphilus would be under legal obligation to marry her even if he did not in reality wish to do so. Ter. is here preparing for the dénouement. hinc improves the sense by making it clear at once that the mercator came from Athens. fuit olim: cf. 923.

222. mercator was the girl’s uncle, not her father; cf. 932.

223. obiiit mortem: not through shipwreck, but afterwards on the island of Andros, as appears from 928–928. ibi tum: see on 106.

224. fabulae! “Mere stories!” “Nonsense!” Cf. Heaut. 336. Dauos deceives himself.

225. The flatness of this remark suggests that the vs. crept into the text from the margin where it stood as a comment on fabulae. atque, “and yet”; so also 607; Ad. 40; Phorm. 389, etc. commentum, “the fiction.”

226. ab ea: i. e. ab (ex) aedibus Glycerii; cf. 461; Heaut. 510; Eun. 545; Phorm. 732; Ad. 788. Similarly apud me (te) = “at my (your) house”; cf. Phorm. 837, 926, 934, etc., and the French chez moi, chez vous, etc. me ad forum: sc. conferam; cf. n. on 361 (ego me). The Roman forum, like the Gk. ἀγορά, was a common loitering place for idle young men, as well as a place of business for those who were actively employed. ut: see App.

Mysis, maid-servant to Glycerium, comes out of the house, and while doing so pauses at the threshold to continue her conversation with Archylis, her fellow-servant, who had been urging her to go in haste and fetch Lesbia, the midwife. Archylis does not appear upon the stage, but may be seen by the spectators just within the doorway.

228. Archylis (from Ἄρχειν, in reference to her position of authority within the household) is an older woman than Mysis. Lesbiām: lit. “the Lesbian woman”; from Lesbos, an island where the grape was grown in abundance. She was addicted to drink (temulenta), and therefore, in the opinion of Mysis, was hardly the right person to be summoned on the present occasion.

229. sane pol: like sane hercle (Eun. 607; Hec. 459). pol (and edepol), an adjuration to Pollux, one of the 'Great Twin Brethren,' was freely used by women and often by men; hercle or hercule only by men; ecastor chiefly by women. See Aulus Gellius, xi. 6. Cf. n. on 305. illa: i. e. Lesbia.

231. Archylis retires from the doorway to the interior of the house, and Mysis comes forward talking to herself. aniculae (a dim. of anus, and expressive of contempt) refers to Archylis.

232. quia . . est: dependent on Lesbiam adduci iubet understood. compotrix, "drinking companion," occurs again only in Sidonius, who wrote in the fifth century A. D.

233. huc: i. e. Glycerium. illi: i. e. Lesbia. in aliis: sc. mulieribus, i. e. in the case of other women rather than in that of Glycerium. For the spirit of this remark cf. Hor. Od. 1. 21. 13–16 (send woes from us to the Britons, etc.). peccandi, "of doing her work amiss."

234. quid nam, "why, pray?" Cf. n. on 321, and G. 498, notes 2 and 5. exanimatum: see on 181. siet: this archaic form of the subj. (optative; see B. App. 218) is placed by Plaut. and Ter. commonly at the end of the line in iambic and trochaic metre, and often at the close of the first half of the vs., in the tetrameter. Cf. Ad. 282, 298; Hec. 567. So also possiet (874).

235. quid: indef., and limited by tristitiae. turba, "emotion," "confusion."

ACT II. SCENE 4. [I. 5.]

Pamphilus enters from the direction of the forum. He is in a state of great excitement, due to his having fallen in with his father and having received from him a command to prepare to be married this very day. He protests that he will never desert Glycerium, and finally tells Mysis how Chrysis, on her deathbed, committed Glycerium to his charge. Mysis remains in the background, and talks only to herself, until 267.

237. pro deum fidem: sc. inploro; but cf. n. on 716. pro is without influence on the case. This appears from Caecil. Stat. Syneph. Fr. 3 (Ribbeck) pro deum . . . inploro fidem. Occasionally fidem is omitted after pro, as in Phorm. 351. Sometimes pro is followed by the voc., as in Ad. 111, 196, 447; Plaut. Poen. 1122 pro supreme Iuppiter. Scan quid ēst si haēc.

239. praescisse: pf. infin., through a species of attraction exerted by oportuit. So also communicatum (sc. esse). Thus Heaut. 536, 635, and often in both Plaut. and Ter. communicatum oportuit: impers.; sc. esse. So also Heaut. 200 mansum oportuit. In Heaut. 247 and 635, relictas and interemptam are constructed personally. For the tense, cf. n. on praescisse, just above.

242. inmutatum: adj.; "unchanged," i. e. still faithful to Glycerium.
244. fit, pereo: on 186 (agis).
245. For the infin., with or without subject acc., in exclamations, see B. 334. Cf. n. on 870. -nē is frequently added, as here (adeon). Cf. 253, 425, 609, 689, 870, 879; Ad. 38, 237. Warren (A. J. P. vol. II. 5, p. 75) argues that this -ne is an asseverative particle = "in sooth," "indeed." inuenustum, "unlucky in love"; "inuenusti' dicebantur quibus Venus in amoribus non faueret (Muretus on this passage). Cf. Gk. ἀναφρόδιτος.
246. See on 237.
247. Chremetis: gen.; see n. on 368. adfinitatem, "alliance."
248. quot: Tyrrell invariably reads quod and aliquid instead of quot and aliquot, in deference to the Bembine codex. I have substituted the common form here and elsewhere, to save the reader from needless confusion, and have accordingly expunged that portion of the footnote, which follows 'quot Σ,' viz., quam discrepantium dehinc referre supersedens Bem-bini orthographiam exhibebo. See App.
249. repudiatus: see 148. repetor. quam ob rem: Pamphilus does not know that the marriage which his father has told him to prepare for is unreal (nuptiae falsae), and therefore he is mystified by this apparent change (for the second time) on the part of Chremes. His natural conclusion is that Chremes' daughter, whom he has never seen, is some terrible fright, and that her father is ready to bestow her upon any one willing to accept her; while his own father is willing to make any compact for his son that may induce the latter to abandon his present mode of life. nisi si id est, "surely it is the thing"; see on Ad. 594. In nisi si, quasi si, and similar pleonasms the hypothetical force of the first word has been lost. Cf. Eun. 524, 662, and numerous instances in Plautus.
250. aliquid monstri: on Prol. 2. obtrudi, "be shoved off"; obtrudere alicui is to give to a person against his inclination.
252. nam, etc., "(I have attempted to account for the conduct of Chremes, but there I must stop) for what shall I say (i. e. I know not what to say) about my father's?"; see on 43. Cf. 395, 612. nam, however, may be rendered by the single word, "pray."
253. See on 245. agere: sc. eum. tam neglegenter, "with so much indifference."
255. id: on 180.
256. censen = censeone.
257. Transl. "or (utter) any excuse, foolish though it might be, (and) groundless (and) unreasonable?" Pamphilus had in mind: 'I ought to have made some excuse at least (saltem), even if it were foolish, etc. But do you think (i. e. you don't suppose) I could?'
258. quod: on 289; cf. 604. The order of the three clauses in this vs. is exactly the reverse of the order natural to English. The apodosis to si quis roget is understood before aliquid facerem (259), as e. g. "I should answer (say)," i. e. respondeam or dicam.

259. ut ne, used to introduce neg. purpose, is common in Ter. Cf. 327, etc., and Cicero, passim.

260. diuorsae trahunt: cf. Plaut. Merc. 470 diuorsus distrahor.

261. huius: i. e. Glycerium; the gen. is objective. nuptiarum (obj. gen.); i. e. with the daughter of Chremes of course, not with Glycerium. Notice the chiasmus.

262. With the light thrown on the character of Pamphilus in this and the next vs. cf. 882, 883, 889, 897.

263. quae . . . quomque: on 63. ein ego ut aduorser, "is it possible that I should turn against him?" ein = ei (dat. of is) + ne. The pron. is emphatic. There is, possibly, an ellipsis of fieri potest. Cf. n. on Heaut. 784. But ut may be explained as similar to ut in Eun. 302, that is, as an indef. adv., and the subjunctive as delib.; "shall I just set myself against him?" See B. App. 368. 1; 358. e), and B. 277. In 618, tibi ego ut credam, the -ne is omitted. Cf. n. on 282.

265. peropus: ἀπαξ λεγόμενον. Ter. is even more fond than Plaut. of prefixing per (intensive) to adjectives, adverbs, and verbs, as in the following examples, percarus, pergrauis, perbenigne, perfotiter, pernimium, percupio, perdoleo, and many more. Moreover per may be separated from the word thus strengthened, by another intensive particle, or by a pronoun, as in 486; Cic. De Or. 2. 67. 271 per mihi scitum uidetur. ipsa: i. e. Glycerium. aduorsum hunc, "to his face"; cf. n. on 42.

266. paulo momento, "by a slight impulse." paulo: commonly an adv., or a substantive (paulum), but here and in Ad. 876 an adj. uel illuc: on 15 and 174.

267. o Pamphile: o is simply emotional, and is omitted in the absence of any excitement. Cf. 282, 318. quid agit, "how is she?"

268. dolore: the pangs of child-birth; usually in the pl., as in Ad. 289, 486. hoc: on 180.

269. nuptiae: the same as in 102, i. e. with the daughter of Chremes. That no marriage is really to take place is a fact not known to Glycerium. hoc: on 180.

270. queam: subj. of contingent futurity (B. App. 360. b); "should I be able to attempt the thing you speak of?" i. e. even if I were to have the inclination.

271. propter me: on Hec. 833.

273. quam . . . habuerim: subj., because the cl. states the reason why Pamphilus is unwilling to desert her; "seeing that she has been singularly dear to me and that I have loved her with a husband's love." credidit (272) also might have been subj. The indic. indicates merely a difference in the point of view of the speaker at that moment. See on 536; Eun. 302–303. See also B. App. 400. 3.

274. bene et pudice: cf. 120 ff. and n. on 123. doctum atque eductum, “taught and trained.” The more logical order is preserved by Cicero (ad Fam. 6. 5) ita enim natus, ita educatus, ita doctus es. Glycerium had been reared in virtue and modesty, and being true to Pamphilus is not a meretrix in the usual acceptation of the word. Cf. n. on Ad. 48. sinam: on 271.

275. Pamphilus is unwilling that Glycerium should be compelled by poverty to fall to the lower level of a meretrix. For a parallel to the character of Glycerium cf. that of Antiphila, as described in Heaut. 226. ingenium, “character.” inmutarier: on 203 (deludier).

276. uerear: see App.

277. ut queas: sc. uerear. Cf. 705. In its origin ut queas here is merely an expression of a wish (optative subj.), “may you be able to withstand compulsion.” See B. App. 389.

278. ingratum, “unfeeling.” ferum, “unnatural.”

279. consuetudo, “association,” “intimacy,” “intercourse.” amor, “genuine affection.” pudor, “honour.” Each of the three substantives in this vs. answers to one of the three adjectives in 278, but in the reverse order.

280. commoueat . . . commoneat: on 218.

282. essem: cf. 649 habeam, 900 adducas, 915 sit; Phorm. 382 nossem; Hec. 524 sim; Plaut. Amph. 813 (with Palmer's note). These and other instances, common in early Latin, of the subj. in Repudiating Questions (see H. 559. 5) illustrate how that mood is used to repeat or echo a previous statement, question, command, or wish, in interrogative form and generally with a view to its repudiation or denial. Sometimes the subj. is preceded by an interrog. -ne or ut or both combined, as in Plaut. Cure. 615–616. Cf. n. on 263. o Mysis Mysis: cf. Eun. 91, Hec. 856, Ad. 256, for other examples of a name or appellation repeated for the sake of emphasis; primum uocandi, alterum increpandi est, says Don. etiam, “still”; see Kirk in A. J. P. vol. 18, pp. 27 and 33.

283. scripta: to be taken with sunt.

284. moriens: for a parallel see Ad. 457.

286. aetatem, “inexperience,” as the natural characteristic of “youth”; cf. the description of Chrysis by Simo in 72.

287. clam te: te is acc. clam is found only with the acc. in early Latin. See Lodge, Lex. Pl. s. v. quam, “to what extent,” i. e. “how little”: slightly ironical. utraeque: the sing. would be more regular, since two objects, not two classes or sets of objects, are referred to.

288. ét ad rem: Tyrrell scans et ad rem, for which he gives his reason in the footnote. I have altered the scansion so as to bring it into conformity with the iambic law: $\text{u} \text{ } \text{ } \text{u}$, $\text{u} \text{ } \text{ } \text{u}$, $\text{u} \text{ } \text{ } \text{u}$, etc. In this I follow the 'editores' with whom Prof. Tyrrell differs. I have ventured also to supply in the footnote an accidental omission, viz., the two words which immediately follow pudicitiam, and are necessary to the sense. rem: i. e. rem familiarem, pecuniam, or lucrum; cf. Ad. 95, 220; Phorm. 393. ad rem tutandam answers to aetatem (286), ad pudicitiam to forma.

289. quod, "but" or "wherefore"; really a rel. pron. with its antecedent implied in the context, and = "as to all of which." Cf. Hor. Epist. 1. 7. 94; Verg. Aen. 2. 141 with Knapp's note. Cf. also Roby 2208, and Paul Thomas on Hec. 338. genium tuum, "your better self." According to Preller, Röm. Myth. p. 567, the genius as such is always good, and the source of health and other rich gifts to the individual man. Cf. Hor. l. c., and Epist. 2. 2. 187.

290. solitudinem, "helplessness"; cf. 381; Eun. 147 f.; Ad. 303.

294. morigera, "compliant," "pleasing." This adj., like the verb morigero or morigeror, is formed from the union of morem and gerere; cf. 641; Ad. 431, 218. morigera fuit = morem gessit.

295. uirum, "husband"; so in 718; Hec. 523, 524. Cf. the German 'Mann,' Eng. 'man' ('woman') as used often in country districts. With this vs. cf. Hom. Il. 6. 429 f. do: enclitic.

296. tuae: monosyllabic. fide (= fidei); possibly correct spelling for dat. and gen. of the fifth declension; but MSS. and Fleckeisen have fidei.

297. hanc mi in manum: i. e. gave her into my possession. This amounted to a solemn betrothal, the marriage being sure to follow. in manum was a legal phrase applied to marriage of a certain kind recognized in law. It referred in fact to the power which such marriage gave to the husband over the wife. The consent of Simo was necessary to make the marriage complete, but Chrysis went as far in this direction as she was able to go under the circumstances. Regarded from a modern standpoint Pamphilus and Glycerium were man and wife. Spengel and others take in manum literally: i. e. Chrysis laid Glycerium's hand in that of Pamphilus, as a token of marriage. But Chrysis and Pamphilus were now alone (see 285), there having been no opportunity for Glycerium to approach them, inasmuch as vss. 286–296 form a single speech.

299. ab illa: on 226. accerso, "I am going to fetch." See App. audin (= audisne), "will you listen," has the force of an imperative.

300. caue: sc. dicas, or faxis (as in 753). Transl. "not a word about the marriage!" nuptiis: i. e. with the daughter of Chremes. morbum: i. e. the dolor of 268. hoc etiam: sc. accedat; i. e. lest this should make her worse. etiam (additory) is often employed in elliptical phrases where the verbal notion is itself suggested by the adverb; see Kirk in A. J. P. vol. xviii. p. 29. teneo: on 86.

ACT III. SCENE 1. [II. 1.]

The scene opens with the appearance of two new characters, Charinus and his slave Byrria. Charinus, a friend of Pamphilus, is in love with Philumena, the daughter of Chremes, and is in great distress of mind because he has been told by Byrria that she is betrothed to Pamphilus. The latter, on hearing from Charinus of his attachment to Philumena, is ready enough to unite with him in an endeavour to secure a postponement of the marriage, and, if possible, the full accomplishment of his friend's desires.

The characters are secondary, and are created by Terence himself, to enliven the play through the addition of an under-plot. Has personas Terentius addidit fabulae, — nam non sunt apud Menandrum, — ne παθητικὸν fieret Philumenam spretam relinquere sine sposo, Pamphilo aliam ducente, says Donatus.

301. quid aīs: on 137. The surprise of Charinus is provoked by words of Byrria, spoken, presumably, before the opening of the scene and relating to the proposed marriage of Pamphilus with Philumena. Byrria? daturne illa: Introd. § 91. For the final ā in Byrrīā, cf. Chārēā in Eun. 558. So always in Ter. in proper names of more than two syllables. illa: i. e. Philumena, the daughter of Chremes. hodie: the same day as that intended by hodie in 254, and by hic dies in 102. The events of the play take place within the limits of a single day. nuptum: supine.

302. qui, "how"; see on 53, and on Prol. 6. apud forum: a colloquialism=in foro; thither Dauos had gone to seek Pamphilus (226). Dauos, however, met Byrria instead, — a fact mentioned by the former in 357.

303. in spe . . . timore= dum in spe . . . timore eram, "so long as I was in hope and in fear"; a dum cl. of 'complete coextension' (see G. 569). Thus the prepositional phrase presents a parallel to the postquam clause in 304. antehac: on 187.

304. cura: with confectus, not with lassus. This is indicated by the alliteration. confectus, "utterly used up," "worn out." There is something unusually comic in the use of so strong a word here — a word applied by Cicero (Cat. 2. 11) to an exhausted gladiator, and defined by Don. to mean sicut vulneratus uel percussus, ut sanari non possit.

305. edepol, "by Pollux"; made up of the intensive e [ɛ], found also in ecastor, and forms of deus and Pollux. See on 229. quoniam . . . uis . . . possit: cf. the French saying, 'si on n'a pas ce que l'on aime, il faut aimer ce que l'on a.' Cf. n. on 805. The subj. is due in part to the influence of uelis; it is also hypothetical in character, whereas the indic. in the quoniam cl. deals with fact.

306. nil . . . aliud: the neut. is more sweeping and therefore more emphatic than nullam aliam would be. Cf. Hor. Sat. 1. 6. 1 non quia, Maeccenas, Lydorum quicquid Etruscos incoluit finis, where quisquis would be less expressive. Cf. also Ad. 49. Philumenam: i. e. the loved one, τὴν φιλουμένην.

307. id dare operam: on 157. id anticipates the following qui cl. istam: object of amoueas. qui: on Prol. 6.

308. quo: instr. abl., "whereby."

309. The sentiment is a favourite one with the poets. Shakespeare of course has something similar. Cf. the whole speech of Leonato at the opening of Act V of Much Ado about Nothing, from which we may extract the following :

. . . 't is all men's office to speak patience
To those that wring under the load of sorrow,
But no man's virtue nor sufficiency
To be so moral when he shall endure
The like himself.

Cf. Eur. Alcestis 1078, and Æschylus Prometheus 265 ἐλαφρὸν ζστις πημάτων ἔξω πόδα | ἔχει παραινεῖν νουθετεῖν τε τὸν κακῶν πράσσοντα.

310. si . . . sis: a condition contrary to fact, though expressed with the pres. subj.; cf. n. on 914; see A. & G. 517. e; H. 576. 2; G. 596. rem. 1. hic: probably the dem., in place of ego, as often ὅς in Gk. Cf. Heaut. 356 huius homini, Ad. 906 huius seni, Hor. Sat. 1. 9. 47 hunc hominem (=me); cf. also And. 890. But it is not impossible that hic is the adv. = "in my place."

311. certum est (sc. mihi), "I am resolved." quid hic agit, "what does he mean?" Said aside. Byrria has turned away from Charinus, as though in despair at the latter's refusal to receive advice.

313. credo: parenthetic; so in Eun. 862; Ad. 79; spero in the next line and censes in 578, etc. aliquot saltem nuptiis prodat dies, "postpone the marriage for a few days at least." aliquot dies is briefly put for aliquot dierum moram; cf. 615. Cf. also 328-9, where dies is (perhaps) direct object of profer; but, as nuptiis (dat.) is not written there, it is possible to supply has nuptias out of 328, and so get an example of the regular syntax. Cf. Eun. 181-2, where sc. hanc rem or the like with concedas:

315. adeon ad eum, "am I to go to him?" The indic. in deliberative questions is common in early Latin comedy; see G. 254, note 2; A. & G. 444. a, note. quid ni, "why not?" "most assuredly"; sc. adeas. ni had originally the sense of non or ne. Cf. Lindsay, Lat. Lang. p. 611, fin. nil, "nothing else."

316. Understand hoc impetrabis before ut. si illam duxerit, "in case he should marry her"; pf. subj. The verb ducere is frequent in comedy, in the sense of "to marry" (of the man), albeit without either uxorem, or in matrimonium, or domum. For the full expression see Phorm. 693, Ad. 473.

317. abin in malam rem, "will you go and be hanged!" This imprecation occurs often in comedy—in Plaut. especially—and with a variety of modifications. Cf. n. on 299; Phorm. 368 and 930. abin = abisne. scelus, "scoundrel"; stronger and more contemptuous than scelestus or scleratus; so also in 607 and often in Plautus.

318. o is emotional and shows that Charinus is excited; cf. 267 and 282.

320. ad auxilium: cf. n. on 138 (ad obiurgandum).

321. istuc, "that which you desire." quid namst, "what is it, pray?" Cf. n. on 284. ducis: on 322. aiunt: similar to ita aiunt (192), ita praedicant (875).

322. facis: the pres. is more vivid than the fut. Cf. 321; Plaut. Asin. 480 non eo, 'I won't go.' postremum, "for the last time."

324. ne = ναλ, νή: an asseverative particle = "really," "verily." Generally it precedes the word or words it qualifies, and in the best writers is joined always with pronouns or their adverbs. Cf. 772, 939; Ad. 441, 540, 565. echo dum: on 184.

325. quid: indef., as in 235. nam emphasizes the interrogation, as in 234 and 321. For the thought cf. Eun. 143.

327. principio, "chiefly," "in particular," μάλιστα μέν; cf. 570. The second point (sed si id non = εἰ δὲ τοῦτο μή) is emphasized by saltem in 328. Cf. 571, where, however, there is asyndeton. ut ne: on 259. ducas: on 316.

328. haec (= haece); alternative form in Ter. for the nom. pl. fem., and perhaps the regular one before vowels or h. Donatus on 656 says, legitur et 'haec nuptiae,' sic enim ueteres dixerunt. Cf. 438, 656, etc. cordi, "dear," "desired"; see G. 356; A. & G. 382; B. 191. 2. a. Cf. Phorm. 800. aliquot dies: on 313.

329. dum, "until"; see on Phorm. 982. Cf. G. 571 and 228 (last example).

330. ne utquam ("in no wise"); always two words in Ennius, Plaut. and Ter. The e does not form a diphthong with the u, but is elided, and the u remains short; cf. Heaut. 357, Hec. 125. liberi hominis, "true man," or perhaps "gentleman"; the opposite of seruos homo (Phorm. 292), but the contrast holds true for the spirit of the man, as well as for the letter of the law. Cf. 38; Phorm. 168.

331. id: i. e. his act, whatever that may be. gratiae adponi, "be counted as a favour." sibi, "on his part."

332. malo = magis uolo. quam tu: sc. uis. Cf. Hec. 110. apiscier: on 203 (deludier). See App.

334. qui, “(that) whereby,” “how” (with final force).
335. qui: with final force, as in 334; hence ne follows rather than non. sat habeo, “I am content”; cf. n. on 705. optume: i. e. opportune or opportunissime.
336. at tu: addressed to Byrria; sc. dicis.
337. sciri: complementary infin. fugin = fugisne, “will you be off?” Cf. n. on abin (317), and 299. Such interrogations have the force of imperatives. Charinus is tired of Byrria, whose inferiority to Dauos is very evident. ego uero: sc. fugio. ac, “and indeed.” Cf. Heaut. 763; Eun. 591; Ad. 403 atque.
- ACT III. SCENE 2. [II. 2.]
- Byrria has disappeared, and Dauos returns from the forum after an unsuccessful effort to find Pamphilus. Dauos, however, brings news which will please his young master, and his consequent cheerfulness and haste are depicted in his gait. He informs Charinus and Pamphilus of the observations he has made in regard to the proposed marriage, and emphasizes his conviction that Simo's announcement of the wedding is not to be taken seriously. Dauos does not notice the presence of Charinus and Pamphilus until 344.
338. boni, boni: cf. 947 credo credere.
340. laetus: i. e. on account of his recent discovery that the proposed marriage is a mere pretense—the falsae nuptiae of 157. nescio quid, “over something or other”; a species of cognate acc. with laetus est = laetatur (or gaudet). That this is the construction is made clear by nil; “his joy is nothing at all.” nescio quis is, to all intents and purposes, an indef. pron. and a single word, even to the extent of being constructed with the indic. rather than the subj. of indirect question. In this combination nescio always becomes a dissyllable. haec mala: the proposed marriage; see 254.
342. audin tu illum: Pamphilus is mistaken in what he says in 340, for in 341 Dauos shows that he has heard of the marriage. Here Charinus calls upon Pamphilus to listen to what Dauos is saying. exanimatum: on 131.
343. intendam. sc. gradus or iter. The cl. depends on habeo (344). cessas adloqui, “why don't you speak to him?” Cf. 845.
344. ades: on 29. resiste, “stop.” qui me: sc. reuvocat or communitur. Cf. Plaut. Epid. 201, Merc. 874. o: cf. n. on 318.
345. euge: interjection expressive of joyful surprise. See App. ambo opportune: sc. adestis. Cf. n. on 361; Ad. 81, 266. The verb is added in Heaut. 179.
346. quin audi: on 45.
347. certo: see App.
348. hodie: Pamphilus would have added sunt paratae, had Dauos not interrupted him. obtundis: sc. auris meas (cf. Plaut. Cist. 116 auris grauiter optundo tuas), or me (cf. Ad. 113; Eun. 554; Heaut. 879 deos obtundere). It is used absol. in Phorm. 515, as here. The metaphor is from the forge. Cf. Hec. 123.

349. rem tenes: cf. n. on 86.

350. istuc ipsum: nom. absol. (Spengel); it is better to supply est; cf. magnum signum (est), 366. atque: advers., "and yet." me uide, "look to me"; that is, trust me for that. Cf. Phorm. 711.

352. non dat iam, "is now withholding." iam suggests a new deal—a new stage in the history of the marriage.

353. modo: i. e. shortly before Dauos met Byrria in the forum and imparted the news to him (302). me prehendit, "stopped me," "button-holed me." dare: sc. se; cf. n. on Prol. 14. The tense is a true present.

354. alia multa: threats of punishment to which Danos was quite accustomed.

356. ibi: temporal; cf. n. on 106. In 357 it is local.

357. huius: gen. of possession; "this man's (slave) Byrria." Cf. Flaccus Claudi in the didascaliae.

358. mihi molestum: cf. Hamlet, Act I, scene 2, "indeed, indeed, sirs, but this troubles me."

359. redeunti: i. e. to Simo's house. ex ipsa re, "from the very state of the case," indicates the source of the suspicio.

360. paululum obsoni, "a slim bit of marketing"; this was carried into the house at the beginning of Act I. Had a wedding been in contemplation, something more would surely have been purchased in the market place. For obsonium cf. n. on Ad. 286; for paul., on Phorm. 702. ipsus: sometimes used by Ter. in place of ipse to avoid hiatus, as in Phorm. 178, Eun. 974, or for euphony. The reference is to Simo, "the master." Cf. the use of abrōs, and the force of the pron. in ipse dixit. tristis, "in bad humour." This would have been otherwise had Pamphilus really been about to marry Philumena. Cf. Ad. 79.

362. illo: adv., "to that place." id gaudeo: on 157.

364. matronam: a married woman in attendance on the bride; a pronuba.
 365. ornati . . . tumulti: some nouns of the fourth declension make their gen. in -i and -uis, in Plaut. and Ter. Thus Phorm. 154 aduenti; Hec. 836 quaesti; Ad. 870 fructi; Eun. 815 domi; Heaut. 287 anuis; Phorm. 482 metuis. The later form in -ūs is a contraction of that in -uis. The form in -i is a contraction from -ui(s), the s being slightly pronounced or dropped, and is common in nouns ending in -tus. The bustle and preparation suggested by tumultus would include the wedding procession, which accompanied the bride from the house of her father to that of the bridegroom. Some of the elements of this procession are given in Ad. 907. ornatus suggests the decorations with which the house of the bride was usually made beautiful on such occasions.

367. non opinor, "perhaps not." non recte accipis, "you don't understand."

368. etiam: purely additory, "also." See A. J. P. vol. XVIII, p. 30. V. 1). Cf. Heaut. 999, Ad. 209. Chremi: genitive. Gk. proper names often follow more than one form of inflection; hence 247 Chremetis; Phorm. 1026 Chremeti (dat.), etc.

369. ferre: hist. infin.; see on 62. See App. obolo: the abl. of price with ferre is elliptical (sc. emptos), and colloquial. The meal cost the least sum possible. Cf. the slang phrase "for a cent." The Attic obol was worth about three cents.

370. ac nullus quidem (sc. es); lit., "and yet you are just nobody at all" = a very strong negation, "nay, not at all." Cf. 599; Hec. 79; Shakespeare's 'you are naught.' For atque (ac) = "and yet" cf. 225, 350.

371. caput, "fellow"; by synecdoche for the whole person, esp. in familiar address. Cf. Ad. 261, 966; Eun. 531.

372. necessus: that the Bembine Codex favours necessus before a consonant is shown by Eun. 998, Heaut. 360. This Ms. is mutilated as far as 786 of And. Cf. Lachmann on Lucr. p. 397.

373. uides, "look alive." ambis, "solicit."

ACT III. SCENE 3. [II. 3.]

Pamphilus wonders why his father has resorted to deception in reference to the marriage. Dauos explains that Simo's object is to find cause for accusing his son of open disobedience, and advises Pamphilus to fall in with his father's plans and consent to marry Philumena. This, Dauos tells him, he can do with perfect safety, since it is certain that Chremes will not give his consent to the marriage. Pamphilus yields to this advice with considerable reluctance. See App.

375. quid sibi uolt pater, "what does father mean?"

376. id: on 157 and 180.

377. tuom animum ut sese habet = ut tuos animus sese habet. Grammatical prolepsis is frequent in the sermo cottidianus. For the indic. in indirect questions, in early Latin, cf. A. & G. 575. c.; H. 649. II. 6.

378. "In his own eyes he would seem to be unfair, and quite rightly so." The adj. iniurius is rare, except in early Latin. ipsus: on 360.

379. negaris ducere = negaris te ducturum esse. Cf. 411, 613, for similar violations of the rule which requires the fut. after verbs of promising and the like. Cf. n. on Phorm. 532. ibi: temporal; cf. n. on 106.

381. sola: i. e. without a defender recognized by the law, such as Pamphilus would have been, had he married her. Cf. 290 and 295. dictum [ac] factum, "no sooner said than done," i. e. "straightway"; the same as the Gk. ἀμ' ἔπος ἀμ' ἔργον. The words are used adv. here and in Hearut. 904, or else est (coördinate with inuenerit) is understood. ac, if written here, signifies "and instantly," as in Verg. Aen. 1. 82, 227; iv. 663. See Knapp's Vergil, Introd. § 200. inuenerit, "he will quickly find"; for the fut. pf. cf. n. on 456.

382. causam quam ob rem = causam propter quam; cf. 837; Eun. 145; Hec. 452; Ad. 435.

383. cedo: on 150.

384. ne nega: this form of prohibition belongs almost exclusively to early (colloquial) Latin and to poetry. See G. 270; A. & G. 450. a.

386. ab illa: i. e. a Glycerio. hoc = huc, "hither," "here" (i. e. within the house of Chremes, i. e. with Philumena). So Eun. 394, 501; Phorm. 152; Hec. 348; Ad. 878 ("thereto"), etc. See App. concludar: cf. Phorm. 744, where also the word suggests a resemblance between the actual circumstances and the barring in or caging of a wild beast. If Pamphilus marries Philumena he will be so fast in prison that he cannot get out.

389. hic: pron. = pater; possibly adv. = "in this case." See App.

391. sine omni: an illogical phrase = sine ulla, and evidently a colloquialism. Cf. Plaut. Aul. 215, 606; Trin. 338, 621. hoc: on 180.

392-3. nec . . . minueris, etc., "but you ought not for that reason to let up on your present doings, lest he should (i. e. for there is just a chance that he may) change his mind"; subjunctive of obligation or propriety; cf. my article in P. A. P. A., vol. xxxii (1901), p. lxxxv, and see Elmer, in A. J. P., vol. xv. 3, p. 319. According to another and more widely prevailing view nec . . . minueris is a prohibition (nec = neue); see A. & G. 450, notes 4 and 5.

394. uelle: sc. te; see on Prol. 14.

395. "For, as to your entertaining hopes, (such as) 'I shall easily keep off a wife by practices like mine; nobody will offer me one' — (I tell you) he will find a beggar for you rather than suffer you to be ruined (by your association with this stranger-woman)." For the mood of the quod-cl., which has the constr. of an acc. of specification, see G. 525. 2, note 3; Roby 1748; cf. A. & G. 572. a. Cf. Ad. 162; Eun. 785, 1064. So, often in Plautus.

396. inopem: i. e. without the dos or dowry, which was regarded as essential to a marriage with equality of position on both sides; cf. Plaut. Trin. 690, where Lesbonicus, to whom it has been proposed that he give his sister in marriage to Lysiteles sine date, says that to do so would be to give her in concubinatum (a kind of morganatic marriage) . . . magis quam in matrimonium.

397. feceris: on 381, 456.

398. acciderit: on 456; cf. 381.

399. quin taces, "be silent, can't you?" See on 45.

400. dicam: sc. me ducturum esse. See 388, 394. puerum, "child"; without reference to sex. cautio est (= cauendum est), "we must be on our guard." The use of the verbal substantive in -io, instead of the gerundive, belongs esp. to the sermo plebeius (Introd. § 120). The form in Plaut. retains the government of the original verb, as e. g. in Truc. 622 quid tibi huc uentiost? quid tibi hanc adiost? quid tibi hanc notiost, inquam, amicam meam? In Ter. it is usually followed by a gen., as in Phorm. 293, Eun. 671, or by a separate cl., as here and in Ad. 421. See on 44. Cf. Cooper, Word Formation in the Roman "Sermo Plebeius," pp. 3-17.

401. suscepturum: sc. me; see on 394. suscipere = tollere; see on 219. fidem, "promise"; object of darem (402).

402. qui = quā. Cf. n. on Prol. 6.

403. curabitur: the subject is understood from 400. caue: scanned căuē; cf. 760; Heaut. 302, 737 iubē, etc. See Introd. § 91.

ACT III. SCENE 4. [II. 4.]

Simo left the stage at 205, and went to seek his son. As he was passing through the forum he met Pamphilus, and ordered him to go home and prepare at once for his marriage with Philumena (253-255). As Pamphilus made no reply (256, 257), Simo now returns in order to ascertain what the young man intends to do. Meantime Pamphilus has prepared his answer, and is now urged by Dauos to meet his father with becoming self-possession.

404. reuiso, "I am returning to see"; so prouiso (957; Ad. 889), "I am going forth (or "out") to see." Cf. 535 uiso. Simo undertakes to do that which he had enjoined upon Sosia (169, 170).

405. hic: contemptuous, as "he" in English often is.

406. meditatus, "having studied his part"; cf. n. on Ad. 195. Cf. also And. 909 paratus; Phorm. 427.

408. qui, "whereby." differat, "confound"; lit. "tear apart," "rend asunder." apud te ut sies, "that you keep your presence of mind," "keep your wits about you"; cf. 937 and n. on Phorm. 204. For sies see on 234 (siet).

409. modo ut introduces a wish. So also modo and ut modo. Cf. Phorm. 59, 711, 773; (negative) Ad. 835. The wish is not far from a proviso. Transl. "I only hope I can." Strictly, modo modifies, not ut, but the wish, which is expressed by ut and the subj. Cf. both modo and dum with the imperative or imv. subj. hoc anticipates 410–411.

410. commutaturum: on Phorm. 638.

411. unum uerbum, "a word of any sort." ducere: on 379.

ACT III. SCENE 5. [II. 5.]

Byrria has been directed by his master, Charinus, to watch Pamphilus, and to see if he is true to his assertion that he does not care for Philumena (332). So the slave follows Simo and overhears the conversation between the latter and Pamphilus, in which the young man promises to do his father's bidding. As Byrria is ignorant of what has passed between Pamphilus and Dauos he naturally believes the former to be sincere, and gives expression to his disgust in vs. 427.

412. relictis rebus: on Heaut. 840; cf. Eun. 166.

414. id denotes the purpose = ut scirem; propterea refers to the reason, viz., that Charinus has so ordered (iussit). Transl. "for this purpose, accordingly." Cf. Eun. 1005 id prodeo. hunc uenientem: i. e. Simo.

415. ipsum adeo, "the very man himself," i. e. Pamphilus. With ipsum understand eum or illum. adeo is intensive as in 162 and 440. Cf. Heaut. 804. hoc agam, "I'll attend to business," i. e. to their conversation; cf. 186.

416. utrumque: i. e. Dauos and Pamphilus. em, serua, "there, be on your guard"; said in an undertone, as Simo is seen to be making ready to speak. em is a common interjection in Plaut. and Ter., and quite different from hem, though the two are often confused in the MSS. See Sonnenschein's Rudens (larger ed.), pp. 189, 190. em, not hem, should be read with imperatives like uide, specta, tene, accipe, serua. See Tyrrell's note on Plaut. Mil. 365. hem is an emotional ejaculation, often expressive of surprise, as "What?" See Sonn. l. c. Cf. Dr.-Hauler on Phorm. 52. Cf. also n. on Ad. 260.

417. ehem, "ah!" expresses surprise.

418. ut dixi: i. e. in 254. uolo: the announcement of a Roman father's will was as good as law. Hence Byrria's alarm was natural enough (419).

420. See on 166. hem expresses Byrria's surprise at Pamphilus' immediate acquiescence. See on 416.

421. obmutuit: Simo is dumb with astonishment. He expected to meet with opposition from Pamphilus, not with compliance. Thus he fails to find the uera obiurgandi causa (158) that he is looking for and feels himself to have been outwitted; his falsae nuptiae are rendered of no account.

te decet: on Ad. 491, 948.

422. quom. "in that"; quom causal followed by the indic. is common (though not invariable) in Ter., and was regular in early Latin. See A. & G. 549, note 3; H. 599. cum gratia: sc. bona; cf. Phorm. 621–622.

423. quantum: on 207. excidit, "has lost"; ἀπέτυχεν, says Donatus (Wessner). Cf. Æsch. Prom. 756 πρὶν ἀν Ζεὺς ἐκπέση τυραννίδας, and id. ib. 757.

424. nunciam: on 171. ne in mora, etc.: on 166.

425. nullane . . . esse . . . fidem: on 245.

426. uerbum: i. e. λόγος, "proverb," "saying." Cf. Eur. 732; Ad. 803.

427. Cf. Eurip. Med. 86 πᾶς τις αὐτὸν τοῦ πέλας μᾶλλον φιλεῖ, and Menander (Meineke, iv. p. 355) φιλεῖ δὲ ἑαυτοῦ πλεῖστον οὐδέποτε οὐδένα. Cf. also 635 and Ad. 38–39. malle melius, etc., "prefers (things) to be (go) better for himself than, etc."

428. quo, "wherefore." aequior, "of like opinion with," "inclined to be sympathetic with." Cf. aequus = "friendly," in Verg. Aen. vi. 129.

431. renuntiabo: sc. Charino. ut, etc., "that for my ill news he may do me some ill turn," i. e. punish me. Notice the play on malum; cf. n. on 143 (damnum).

ACT III. SCENE 6. [II. 6.]

Simo questions Dauos about the feelings of Pamphilus in regard to the marriage. Dauos assures him of his son's sincerity, and quiets Simo's suspicions by means of a very plausible explanation touching the young man's somewhat downcast demeanour.

432. hic: on 405. This and the next vs. are said aside.

433. ea gratia = eius rei gratia.

434. quid Dauos narrat? i. e. to the fact that Pamphilus consents to marry the daughter of Chremes. The words do not refer to Dauos' previous remark. aeque quicquam nunc quidem? = aeque atque antea (uolgo) quicquam nunc quidem narrat? Simo, in ironical tones, asks Dauos if he has anything to say now, as commonly he has had on former occasions, — presumably in the way of lying and trickery (see 432–433). Cf. Dziatzko's Annotatio Critica. Simo, though he is looking for some explanation from Dauos, yet expects the answer, No (435), to his question; thus quicquam becomes possible. Those editors who give these words to Dauos remove the interrogation point. Fleckeisen does so, and writes nequeo for aeque, after von Winterfeld (Hermes, vol. xxxiii, p. 168).

436. Said aside. praeter spem, "contrary to his expectation." male habet, "troubles," "worries." Cf. 940; Hec. 606. uirum: ironical, "the gentleman," "the good man."

437. potin es = potisne es = potesne; frequently es (or est) is omitted. Cf. Ad. 539 n. potis in early Latin may refer to a subject of any gender, or may be used impersonally. Cf. Heaut. 659; Eun. 263, 101; Ad. 344, 521, 626. It may stand for either number. Commonly pote (weakened from potis) is employed before consonants, while potis is usual before vowels; cf. Phorm. 535 pote fuisse = potuisse. The form potis (pote) is archaic and frequent in Plaut. and Ter. dicerē: the quantity of the final ē is due to the ictus and to the change of speakers.

438. quidpiam, "in any respect," "at all." haec: on 328.

439. eius: i. e. Pamphilus. See App. hospitae: fem. of hospes = a peregrinus visiting somewhere away from his native country.

440. si adeo: sc. hae nuptiae ei molestae sunt. For adeo see on 415.

441. nosti: interjected parenthetically, "you know, don't you?"

442. ipsus: on 360.

443. iaudo, "good!" "bravo!" without an object, as in 455; Eun. 154; Ad. 564. ætas: on 188.

445. fortem, "honourable," "excellent." Cf. the occasional use of 'brave' in English, and fortius in Eun. 50.

446. adpulit ad: on Prol. 1.

447. aliquantillum reinforces sub- in subtristis.

448. quod, "on account of which"; see on 157 and 376. Cf. G. 333, note 1. suscensem: for the indic. cf. Hec. 273, 732; Heaut. Prol. 3, etc. The subj. might have been used with but slight variation in the meaning.

449. quin dic: on 45.

451. drachumis: drachuma = δραχμή, as Alcumena = Ἀλκυόνη. Cf. mina = μνᾶ, and techna = τέχνη. The Romans could not pronounce certain consonantal combinations; thus we too sometimes carelessly insert a vowel to ease a group of consonants: cf. 'athletics.' This epenthetic vowel (G. 8. 3) is not invariable in the MSS., where such forms as drachma and techna are found, and even mina. Ritschl defends the full form: Op. II. 469 ff. The value of the drachma was about eighteen cents. It was equivalent to six obols (see on 369), and like the Roman denarius was made of silver. est obsonatum: impers. See App.

454. potissimum emphasizes quem; the two words about = quem nam quod, "so far as." hic, "here," i. e. "by one in my position," "between ourselves." siet: the subj. as in quod sciām, quod meminerim, and other restrictive rel. clauses.

455. quoque: i. e. you seem to me also to be acting stingily. perparce nimium, "stingily, too much so." non laudo: with sarcastic reference to Simo's laudo in 443, where see note.

456. commouī: said aside. uidero: the fut. pf. denotes that the action will be surely and quickly carried out. Cf. n. on 381.

457. This vs. and the following are said aside. quid . . . uoit . . . sibi: on 375. ueterator: Dauos is an "old hand" at rascality of all kinds. "ueterator' est 'uetus in astutia et qui in omni re callidus est,' says Donatus. em: on 416. illic = ille, i.e. Dauos.

458. caput, "author," "origin." Cf. Ad. 568.

ACT III. SCENE 7. [III. 1.]

Mysis, who had gone (299) to fetch the midwife, Lesbia, now returns with her. The conversation of the two women is overheard by Simo, who is astounded to learn that Pamphilus has determined to acknowledge the child. Simo, however, is unwilling to believe what he hears, and over-reaches himself in his conviction that the whole performance is merely a trick devised by Dauos to mislead him and frighten Chremes.

459. See App. poi: on 229. rest = res est.

461. ab Andria: on 226.

462. firmauit fidem, "has made good his word." hem: on 416 fin.

464. On the difference between the simple rel. quod here and the more inclusive quidquid in 219, see Greene on the Emphatic Neuter, Class. Rev. for Dec. 1904, vol. xviii, p. 449. See 219 and n.

465. actum est, "all is over," "the thing is at an end"; an expression originally belonging to the language of the courts, and used of a case upon which judgment has been fully rendered. Cf. Phorm. 419.

466. bonum: predicative.

467. illi: i. e. Glycerium. ne in mora sis: on 166. Cf. 424.

470. uix tandem sensi, "not till now did I see through it (perceive the trick.)"

471. hoc: i. e. Dauos.

472. Chremetem: so again in 533; but Chremem (361, 527; Phorm. 63, 865). Cf. n. on 368.

473. The cries of Glycerium from behind the scenes would dispel all doubt from Simo's mind, were he not blinded to the truth by his determination to see in all this nothing but a clever trick. Iuno Lucina is the goddess who brings the child to light. She is invoked under similar circumstances by Pamphila in Ad. 487. The Greeks called on Artemis. The situation was common in the later Gk. comedy.

474. hui expresses ironical assent, as in Eun. 223; Ad. 216, 411.

475. audiuit: i. e. from Mysis and Lesbia.

475-6. non sat . . . haec, "not with enough skill in respect to time have you distributed these incidents, Dauos."

477. inmemores, "forgetful of their parts." discipuli, "pupils," refers to Mysis, Lesbia, Glycerium. Pamphilus may be included, but the use of the masculine is due to the general nature of the remark. For Simo's irony cf. the application of the term magister to Dauos, in 192.

478. in ueris nuptiis, "in the case of a real marriage." As the nuptiae are not uerae, Simo is paratus (as he imagines), and the tricks of Dauos fail. hicine: the particle -ne is strengthening or intensive here, not interrogative. See Minton Warren in A. J. P. II. p. 51. Cf. Plaut. Mil. 439 Egone? Tune, "Is it I? Yes, you"; ib. 309, 565, 936; Tyrrell on 439.

480. in portu nauigo: a translation of the Gk. proverb ἐν λιμένι πλέω, "I am out of the deep water." Cf. 845 in uado. Vss. 478-480 are said aside.

ACT III. SCENE 8. [III. 2.]

As Lesbia steps out of the house she calls back to Archylis, who is within, in order to give her some final directions regarding the patient, of whom she is to take charge until Lesbia's return. Simo regards all of this as part of the plot arranged for his deception, and Dauos takes care to encourage him in this view of the case. Finally, in a state of great perplexity, Simo falls back on his son's promise to marry Philumena, and decides to seek Chremes and once more to ask his consent to the marriage.

481-2. Archylis: on 228. quae . . . salutem, "the symptoms which usually and properly point in the direction of recovery." In early Latin paenitet, taedet, piget, pudet, licet, oportet were used also personally; but the subject was usually a pronoun. Cf. Ad. 754 haec prudent; Plaut. Cas. 877 ita nunc pudes. For ad cf. Heaut. 207, Hec. 693 and n. on And. 138.

483. ista: i. e. Glycerium. lauet, "bathe." Cf. λούσαται αὐτήν αὐτίκα (frag. of Men. preserved by Don.; see Wessner). post deinde: see App.

484. bibere: complementary to dari. Cf. G. 421. note 1. b.

485. reuortor: for the tense cf. n. on 404.

486. per ecastor scitus = perscitus ecastor; tmesis. Cf. Hec. 58. For per- intensive cf. n. on 265. perscitus = "very fine." Cf. Phorm. 110. For ecastor see on 229.

487. quaeso: an old form of quaero; see Festus, s. v. p. 259 (Müll.); Lindsey, L. L., p. 487. ipse: i. e. Pamphilus.

489. uel, "or (for example)," takes up the conversation where it dropped at the end of 477, and calls attention to a new example of the slave's cunning. hoc: acc. subject of ortum esse.

490. coram: adv. = "in Glycerium's presence." quid opus facto esset: quid is adverbial (acc. of extent), or perhaps nom. subject of the verb (see on Phorm. 584). facto is abl. of the pf. pass. prtcpl. used as a noun, which is common with opus est in Plaut. and Ter. See Roby 1094 and 1255. The supine in -u is also found, but more rarely, with opus est; cf. Ad. 740, and Roby 1255. Transl. "she did not give orders as to what was necessary to be done." puerperae: dat., "for the woman in labour."

491. de uia, "from the street."

492-3. idoneus . . . quem . . . incipias: rel. cl. of purpose; cf. 757. See B. App. 368. 5.

493. incipias. "attempt," "endeavour."

494. accurate, "with some degree of skill," "artfully"; sc. me fallere debebas. Note the contrast with aperte = "bluntly."

496. interminatus sum: strengthened form of minatus sum; mostly poetic. Cf. Eun. 830. rē tulit: pf. of rēfert (rē fert). Cf. Plaut. Epid. 133 quid rētulit te . . . mittere ad me epistulas? Transl. "what did it avail?"

497. credon tibi hoc, "am I to believe you in this?" hoc is explained by peperisse hanc; cf. n. on 180. For the indic. cf. 921; in later Latin the verb would be in the delib. subj.

498. teneo: on 86. Dauos is talking to himself.

499. quid credas: with allusion to credon (497). For the mood cf. n. on 191. haec: i. e. the supposed trick.

500. mihin quisquam: sc. renuntiauit. eho, an tute, etc., "oh! now, did you then of your own accord perceive that this thing was a mere pretence?" Dauos ironically compliments Simo on his sagacity; much as in 589. Cf. 766; Phorm. 259. intellexiti = intellexisti; see on 151.

501. qui, "how?"

503. enim is corroborative and strengthens certe. See on 91. etiam: on 116.

504. egon te: sc. pernoui; "don't I know you?"

504-5. dari uerba: on 211. falso: ironical, "wrongly I suppose"; i. e. dari mihi uerba falso censeo. muttire: lit. "to say 'mu.'"

506. intellexiti: ironical. itast: see App.

508. ut sis sciens = ut scias, nearly. For this illustration of a tendency to analytical forms of expression in colloquial Latin, cf. 775; Plaut. Poen. 1038. Cf. also Phorm. 394-895.

509. ne . . . dicas: final cl., dependent on renuntio.

510. prorsus amotam, "utterly removed."

512. qui (= quibus), "whereby"; cf. n. on 402, and Prol. 6. coniecuturam . . . faciam: cf. Heaut. 574. prius, "formerly."

513. inuentumst falsum, "that has proved to be false." Notice that Danos is putting Simo's conclusions into words. inuentum may be a substantive, as in Heaut. 811.

514. ilico (in-loco) ; frequent in the comic poets, and usually, as here, in a temporal sense, "on the spot" = "immediately." So in 125, Ad. 536, etc. In Ad. 156 ilico denotes place, as in Plaut. Bacch. 1140^a ilico ambae manete.

516. hoc anticipates the ut-cl. The vs. is an expression of Glycerium's (supposed) reason for her conduct described in 515. Transl. "unless it is arranged that you see the child." mouentur = perturbantur; "there's no impediment to the marriage." See App. For moueo = 'disturb' cf. n. on 921; Cic. Phil. 1. 7. 17 ea non muto, non moueo.

517. quid aīs, "what say you?" i. e. "tell me." Cf. 184, 872 and notes.

518. capere: sc. eam (i. e. Glycerium) or eas referring to all the women. dixti : on 151.

519. Observe Dauos' clever evasion of Simo's very searching question.

520. misere, "desperately."

521. id negoti: the business of withdrawing Pamphilus from the influence of Glycerium, and persuading him to comply with his father's wishes; the business also of dealing successfully with the (supposed) scheme of Glycerium and her friends, which Simo and Dauos have been discussing. idem : masc.

523. immo, "nay"; often used to correct or improve some preceding word or expression, but seldom as a wholly independent negative like minume. Cf. n. on 30, 201, 655; Ad. 604, 928. quod parato opus est, "what has to be got ready"; see on 490.

525. atqui: see App. haud scio an, "perhaps"; cf. Roby 2256.

527. quod, "the fact that." ipsus gnatus : see App.

528. id, "that point"; see App.

529. alias, "at another (later) time"; in this sense twice in Ter. (see Hec. 80).

531. cogere: sc. facere; cf. Hec. 243.

532. atque adeo, "and indeed"; for adeo intensive see on 162, 415. Cf. 977; Phorm. 389. in ipso tempore, "just in time," "in the very nick of time." eccum, "there he is." ecce is combined with the acc. of is, ille, iste, making such forms as eccam, ecccōs, eccas, eccillum, eccistūm, etc. These have usually one of three constructions: (1) with an acc. influenced by the verbal force of ecce, as here, and in Eun. 738; Ad. 890; (2) associated with a nom. and verb, as in 580; Ad. 361, 923, where the constr. is not affected by eccum, which is merely interjectional; (3) with an acc. as in (1), but followed also by a finite verb the subject of which is suggested by the acc., as in Plaut. Amph. 1005 sed eccum Amphitruonem: aduenit. In (3) the difficulty is lightened by punctuation, for the verb is merely explanatory. eccum sometimes stands alone, as in 957. Cf. Brix on Plaut. Capt. 1005; Sonnenschein's Rudens (larger ed.), p. 188. See n. on 855.

Chremes is on his way to Simo's house, to make angry protest regarding the rumour that his daughter is to be married to Pamphilus, and on this very day. Simo however succeeds in talking him over, by assuring him, on the authority of Dauos, that Pamphilus has positively severed his relations with Glycerium. Chremes' consent makes matters doubly difficult for Dauos.

533. iubeo Chremetem: sc. saluere. For the form of the acc. see on 472 and 368. For the constr. cf. Ad. 460. Chremes is too much excited to be polite. optato: adv. abl. = "in accordance with my desire"; cf. 807 auspicato, "under a good omen." Thus consulto, composito, etc. In origin these ablatives are pf. pass. participles, and their constr. the abl. absol. used without a noun (impersonally).

535-6. uiso: on 404. ausculta paucis: on 29. See App. quid . . uelim . . quod quaerls: the subj. and indic. are sometimes found in successive clauses in which either mood would be permissible; cf. 272-273 and n., 649-650, 967-968 (where MSS. = sim nanctus).

538 per te, etc.: cf. verse 289. Chremes: voc. The form Chreme is recognized by Donatus and is not uncommon in the MSS.

539. a paruis: on 35.

541. quoius (gen. of rel. pron.) answers to old dat. quoi.

542. ita uti: on 65.

543. fuerant futurae, "had been intended"; see 99-102.

545. olim quom = olo or ollo (= illo) tempore quom. olim is dem. here; cf. 883; Phorm. 912. dabam, "I offered her."

546. in rem, "to the advantage." The opposite, ab re = "to one's disadvantage," occurs in Plaut. Trin. 238. Cf. Phorm. 449; Hec. 102, 549. Cf. also Phorm. 526 ob rem = "with advantage," "to the purpose." utrique: i. e. Pamphilus and Philumena. fiant: sc. nuptiae. accersi (sc. eam); i. e. from her father's house to that of the bridegroom, according to ancient custom. Cf. 581, 741, 848.

548. id anticipates in commune ut consulas. in commune, "for our common good," i. e. with reference to the interests of both families, as explained in the next verse.

550. immo ita uolo, "nay, such is my desire"; see on 523. itaque, "and . . so."

552. audio, "of course"; ironical.

553. fabulae, "nonsense"; see on 224.

555. A proverb adapted from Menander's Monost. 410: δρυὴ φιλοῦντος μικρὸν λοχβεὶ χρόνον. Cf. Eun. 59-61.

556. em, "well then"; see on 416. Id, "this (very) thing," viz., amoris integrationem, id being the object of the expression ante eamus, "prevent." But id may be acc. of the thing with oro and explained by the ut-cl. (as in 548), "I pray you this, that we be beforehand," i. e. in preventing a renewal of their affection. With ante eamus in this sense cf. Plaut. Trin. 911 ante uenire.

558. harum: i. e. Glycerium, Mysis, Archylis. confictae dolis, "hypocritical."

559. aegrotum: on 193. redducunt: the d is correctly doubled in Ter. So the Bembine MS. in 948 and in Hec. 605, 615, 617.

560. consuetudine: cf. n. on 110 and 135.

561. coniugio liberali: marriage with a free-born citizen, and therefore "an honourable marriage," as opposed to a union with a peregrina, like Glycerium; cf. 146, 439, 469.

562. sese emersurum, "will extricate himself"; the pron. is object of the verb, which more commonly is intrans., as in Eun. 555, Ad. 302.

563-4. posse: sc. eum sese emergere. hanc: contemptuous, "this woman," i. e. Glycerium, not Philumena. With habere and perpeti understand posse. The sense is: so it may seem to you, but I do not think he can cut loose from his present entanglement, and he certainly cannot continue in it (if he marries my daughter); nor could I permit him to do so.

565. istuc: on 186. periculum, "experiment." Cf. n. on Hec. 766-767.

566. in filia, "in the case of one's daughter."

567. "Why, surely, all annoyance at the worst comes to this"; explained by the following si-clause.

568. si euenerat . . . discessio, "the possibility of separation." Simo puts it as gently as he can, through the subj., and softens the suggestion further by the parenthetical "which may the gods forfend."

569. si corrigitur: sc. filius. The indic. shows that Simo is well assured of the result.

570. principio: on 327. restitueris: on 456 (uidero).

572. quid istic: sc. dicendum (agendum) est. istic is an adv. = "there," "in that case," and the formula indicates concession after an argument, as "well then," "enough." Cf. Ad. 133, 350; Eun. 171, 388; Heaut. 1053. istuc: on 186. induxti: on 151. animum (or in animum) inducere, "to resolve," "to be convinced," is practically one word, and may be followed by an object or an object cl.; cf. 834, 883; Hec. 264; n. on Phorm. Prol. 24.

573. in me claudier, "to be impeded as far as regards me." The vs. is rendered by Stock, "I would not have you debarred from any advantage through me." On the form of the infin. see on 203 (deludier).

575. quid aīs: on 184 and 517.

576. consiliis: dative.

578. censes: on 313 (credo); "would he have done it, do you suppose?" Simo is insincere, for he distrusts Dauos (524). But he is cornered, and can do no better than make the most of hints received from that wily slave. Cf. 442–446, and 519.

579. tute adeo: on 415 and 162.

580. eccum: on 532. foras: adv. expressing motion, “out of doors”; foris is an adv. expressing rest. These two forms are the acc. and abl. (or locative) of a supposed forae (nom. pl.) cognate to θύραι, “doors.” A nom. sing. of the third declension, foris, is found in Plaut. and Ter., as are also the plurals fores and foribus. See Ad. 264, 638; Heaut. 278.

ACT III. SCENE 10. [III. 4]

Simo unfolds his plans to Dauos. The latter discovers that his confidence in Chremes’ firmness has been misplaced, and with difficulty conceals his chagrin from Simo. After the old men have departed, Dauos reproaches himself for his rashness and folly. Terence often begins a new scene within the limits of a verse; Plautus never. Cf. Ad. 81, 635, 958.

581. accersitur: on 546. aduesperascit, “the day is drawing to a close,” i. e. the time is approaching for the bridal procession, which according to custom took place about sunset. The verb is derived from Vesper, the evening star, called by Cicero stella Veneris (N. D. II. 20. 53), and by Pliny sidus appellatum Veneris (N. H. II. 36). Cf. Catullus, 62. 1.

582. dudum, “some time ago,” “lately”; cf. 824, 948. In 591 and 840 dudum = “a moment ago,” “just now.” In 850, and also in Eun. 697 quam dudum = “how long ago?”

583. uolgus seruorum, “the common run of slaves”; cf. Hec. 600 uolgus mulierum.

584. facerem repeats faceres (582); cf. n. on 282.

586. fidem, “trust,” “confidence.” tibi, “in you.” tandem, “at last”; cf. 503.

587. ea gratia: on 433. fuerant futurae: on 543.

588. quid ais: on 137. uide, “just see,” “only fancy.”

589. numquam: on 178. uah: a favourite interjection with Ter., often expressing surprise, as in Ad. 439; sometimes irony and contempt, as in Ad. 187. It frequently denotes anger or vexation, as in Ad. 38, 315, 532, 578; disdain, as in Heaut. 765, 901; despair (688, Ad. 614); admiration, as here and in Ad. 439. consilium: acc. of excl.; see Roby 1128. Cf. 604 astutias.

590. hic: i. e. Chremes, whose presence has not been observed by Dauos until this moment. hem: on 416. fit obuiam: on Phorm. 52 and 617.

591. num nam perimus: cf. Ad. 488. Dauos suspects that Simo is telling him the truth and says aside, “are we going to ruin after all?” nam is intensive; see on 234 and 321. The tense is present. dudum: on 582.

592. id exoro, “I obtain my request.” This is too much for Dauos, who finds that he has actually been playing into Simo's hands, while doing his best to defeat him. Accordingly his next 'aside,' occidi, "I am done for," is uttered in so loud a tone that his master overhears him, and asks him what he has said.

593. dixisti: see App. hunc: i. e. Chremes. mora: on 166.

594. modo: on 173. ut adparetur, "that preparations be made"; imper., as in Eun. 583. dicam = edicam. renuntio = redeo ut nuntiam; cf. reviso (404). The pres. tense indicates the rapidity with which he expects to accomplish his purpose, a meaning assisted here by atque = "and forthwith"; see Knapp's Vergil, Introd. § 200, and Aen. i. 82, 227; iv. 662. Cf. Eun. 493, Heaut. 502.

598. quiescas, "rest assured," "trust me for that"; cf. Phorm. 670, 713. mirum ni domist, "I shan't be surprised if he is (I believe that he is) at home"; a colloquial form of expression and only slightly (if at all) ironical. Cf. Eun. 230, 344; Heaut. 663; Plaut. Capt. 824.

599. nullus sum, "I am naught," "I am done for," denotes utter despair. Cf. Phorm. 179, 943 sepultus sum = "I am dead and buried."

600. pistrinum: on 199, 213-4. Cf. Simo's threat in 196-200. recta uia, "right away"; lit. "by a straight road." uia is often omitted; cf. Phorm. 859, Ad. 433, Eun. 87, Hec. 372; n. on Ad. 573, 574.

602. in nuptias conieci: suggestive of in uincula conicere, and to the mind of Pamphilus (cf. 603, 620) its practical equivalent.

603. insperante hoc: on Ad. 507. hoc = Simo. Note the asyndeton in vss. 601-603.

604. em: on 416. astutias: on 589 (consilium). quod si: quod as in 289, where see n.

605. eccum: on 532.

606. aliquid, "something," i. e. some place into which or upon which (quo = "whither") he might throw himself. Dauos is confused, and while he rushes up and down upon the stage he fails to indicate the exact means by which he would accomplish his self-destruction. praecipitem, etc.: on Ad. 318.

ACT III. SCENE 11. [III. 5.]

Pamphilus, having been informed by Simo that Chremes consents to his daughter's marriage (cf. 599), comes out of the house in a great rage. He looks about for Dauos, upon whom he would gladly inflict severe punishment. From this, however, he refrains, for prudential reasons. Dauos stands aside and remains unobserved until 616.

607. scelus: on 817. scelus qui: for the constructio ad sensum cf. scelus hic (844-845) and Ad. 261 festiuom caput qui. atque: on 225, 614.

608. nulli: gen. Pronouns having their gen. and dat. in -ius and -i are occasionally declined in early Latin like adjectives in -us, -a, -um. Cf. alterae (dat.) in Heaut. 271, Phorm. 928; cf. also Eun. 1004 mihi solae. nulli consili = "of no good," "of no account."

609. See on 245. futilli, "worthless"; emphatic.

610. pregium : on 39. fero : for the meaning cf. Phorm. 272, Ad. 178, Eun. 1057, Heaut. 918. inultum id auferet, "carry it off with impunity." Cf. Heaut. 918, Ad. 454 n. numquam : on 178.

611. The sense is: I shall be safe in the future, and no mistake, if only I escape the present desperate situation. That is, everything will seem so trifling compared with this, that I can never be in real danger again.

613. dúceré: on Prol. 23. For the tense see n. on 379; cf. 411. audacia: see App.

614. quid me faciam, "what to do with myself"; see on 143. atque = atqui = "and yet," "though." id ago, "I am considering this point."

615. productem moram. for the constr. cf. n. on 313 (prodat dies) and Ad. 591 (producam).

616. echo dum : on 184. bone : ironical; thus also 846. Cf. Ad. 556, 722.

617. inpeditum, "entangled." expidiām : opposed to inpeditum. Note that both verbs are used in their literal meaning.

618. ut modo : sc. me expediti; ironical. ut credam : on 263 (ein . . . ut). furcifer, "scoundrel," lit. "fork-bearer"; in allusion to a common punishment inflicted upon slaves, whereby the culprit wore over his neck a fork-shaped, wooden yoke, whose prongs were bound to the offender's hands. Even slight offences were atoned for in this way. Cf. Donatus (Wessner's ed., vol. I. p. 192) on this vs.

619. em quo fretus sim, "behold (the man) on whom I have relied"; clause of characteristic.

620. coniecisti in nuptias : on 602. For the indic. cf. n. on 273 and 536. The change to the second person makes the charge more direct and cutting.

621. meritu's : cf. n. on 202 (locutu's). crucem : Dauos admits that his offence is worthy of death, but pleads for a moment's respite that he may search for a way out of the difficulty. There is a humorous side to the situation which may be illustrated through comparison with Plaut. Mil. 372 ff.

622. sine . . . redeam : contrast ulcisci sinit in 624. ad me redeam, "return to my senses," "become myself again." Cf. n. on 408; Ad. 794, Heaut. 921, Hec. 707; Hor. Sat. 2. 3. 273 penes te es? and Shak. Tit. Andron. 1. 1. 368 'he is not with himself; let us withdraw.' Cf. also Xen. Anab. 1. 5. 17 δέ Κλέαρχος ἐν ἔαυτῷ ἐγένετο.

622-3. ei mihi, quom non habeo, "alas, that I have not." Cf. Plaut. Men. 303 ei mihi, quom nihil est, etc. For quom = quod see on Ad. Prol. 18.

624. praecauere; sc. cogit, implied in the following sinit. Zeugma, ulcisci, "take vengeance on," "chastise." So Eun. 762, Phorm. 963, Hec. 72.

ACT IV. SCENE 1.

The various complications of the plot have now reached their highest development. The plans of Dauos have been frustrated. Charinus believes himself to have been betrayed by Pamphilus, and Glycerium is suffering from the conviction that she is deserted. Even Simo is nursing the hope that Pamphilus, however unwillingly, can be induced at last to marry the daughter of Chremes, and Chremes himself has reluctantly given his consent to an arrangement from which he will be forced by circumstances to withdraw. Dauos, however, is already meditating new schemes which eventually lead to a solution of all difficulties.

The scene opens with a canticum, in which Charinus expresses his indignation at the treatment he has received at the hands of Pamphilus. This occupies the first fourteen lines, in which there is a mixture of dactylic, cretic, iambic and bacchiac metres, denoting the excitement of the speaker. Nowhere else in Terence is the metrical disturbance so violent, although in Plautus such passages are common.

625. hocine: cf. n. on 186. hoc is explained by vs. 626 (consecutive cl.). est: see App. memorabile, "fit to be mentioned."

626. uercordia, "heartlessness."

627. gaudeant: the pl. in this word and in comparent (629) is natural enough after the indef. quoiquam; cf. our loose and colloquial they.

628. alterius: the long i is retained, to suit the requirements of the metre (cretic). In dactylic verse we find only alterius. For the form of expression cf. Heaut. 397.

629. uerum, "right," "just"; uerus in this sense is common, esp. in Livy, as e. g. 2. 48. 2; 3. 40. 11; 32. 33. 4; 39. 27. 3. Cf. Ad. 987 ex uera uita = "from a well regulated life," Heaut. 154 ibi non uere uiuitur = "there men do not live aright." immo: on 201.

630. "Who just at the time are in some slight degree ashamed to say no." denegandi: see App. quis = quibus.

632. necessario, "unavoidably," goes with aperiunt. se aperiunt, "betray their true nature." Cf. Plaut. Epid. 166-7.

633. See App.

634. quor meam tibi: elliptical; "why should I surrender my betrothed to you?" Understand tradam; see on 82.

635. Cf. n. on 427. heus, "look you!" An exclamation used for the sake of emphasis. Cf. Eun. 276. It is also an interjection, often employed in calling to people, in which case it is usually doubled, as in Heaut. 348, Eun. 337, Ad. 281.

637. pudent: on 481, Ad. 754. hic, "here." illi, "there"; locative of ille, used adverbially. In classical Latin it was in use only with the demonstrative suffix -ce, -c (in the form illice, illic). Cf. Phorm. 91; Hec. 94, 217; Ad. 116, 525, 577, etc.

638. uerentur, "they have scruple."

639. expostulem, "complain of." So Ad. 595.

640. mala, "reproaches," "taunts." dicat: jussive subj., serving as a cond. clause (protasis); see B. 305. 2. promoueris: on 711. For the fut. pf. cf. n. on 381 (inuenerit).

641. morem gessero, "I shall have pleased (gratified)." The two words are practically one, and are frequently compounded, as morigerare (or -ri); lit. "to adapt one's ways to." The expression governs usually the dat. of the pers., as in Heaut. 947, Ad. 218, Hec. 599; but also the dat. of the thing personified, as here and in Cic. Orat. 48 uoluptati aurium morigerari debet oratio. Cf. Plaut. Amph. Prol. 131 pater nunc intus suo animo morem gerit. animo = mihi, nearly. uolup. aur. in Cic. l. c. = the hearer.

642. nisi quid di respiciunt (sc. nos), "unless the gods do us some friendly turn"; cf. Phorm. 817.

643. causa: on 257. soliusti fidem, "you have broken your word." To keep one's promise = fidem seruare.

644. etiam . on 282. ducere: on 180 (duci). postulas, "do you expect ?" Cf. 657 postulabat.

645. conplacitast tibi: sc. illa (i. e. Philumena); "she (suddenly) became beautiful in your eyes." Cf. Heaut. 773; Hec. Prol. 21, 241. The dep. form is more common, but the act. occurs in Plaut. Rud. 727 haec autem Veneri complacuere. Cf. the use of this verb by Lucan (1.128). Victrix causa deis placuit, sed uicta Catoni, 'the conquering cause pleased Heaven, the conquered Cato.' See, however, Plaut. Amph. 106, 635; Rud. 186. The prefix is intensive. See on 109.

646. animum, "disposition." spectaui, "judged." Charinus regrets that he should have thought Pamphilus as honourable as himself.

647. falsus es, "you are wrong." hoc: i. e. the betrothal of Pamphilus to Philumena. solidum, "real," "substantial," "complete," "genuine." Cf. 964, Eun. 871.

648. nl: see App. lactasses: freq. of lacio, and unusual. It means "to cajole," "to delude," and is explained by falsa spe produceres. For the (virtual) indirect discourse see A. & G. 592. 2, and 589. a. 3; G. 663. 2. (b), and 656. 3. produceres: cf. ducere (644) and duci (180).

649. habeas, "keep her." Cf. 889. habeam: the command repeated, "(you bid me) keep her ?" See on 282.

649–650. uorser . . . conflauit: on 536.

650. See App.

651. carnufex: on 183. exemplum: cf. Ad. 416.

653. altercasti: the active form of altercor occurs only here and in a fragment of Pacuvius (Rihbeck, 210). dudum: an ironical reference to 418 f. Cf. n. on 582.

655. We may render freely, with Kirk (A. J. P. vol. 18. p. 41): "Nay, I will tell you another thing by (ignorance of) which you fail to understand my troubles; no one was asking me to marry." The rel. pron., quo, is necessary to etiam (as may be seen by comparing Phorm. 877, Hec. 869) which is half additory, half temporal. See App.

656. haec nuptiae: on 328.

657. postulabat: on 644.

659. non dum: cf. 340.

660. enicas: a strong colloquialism; "worry me to death."

662. suadere, orare: hist. infin.; cf. n. on 62 and 97. These infinitives might be regarded as dependent on destitit (660).

663. istuc: sc. fecit. Cf. n. on 186. interturbat, "he throws everything into confusion." See App.

664. nisi (or nisi quod), "except that," "but," "only," modifies the general assertion made in nescio; cf. Heaut. 542, 658, 959; Eun. 827; Phorm. 475, 953. The usage is common in Plautus.

666. at: frequent in curses and imprecations; cf. Eun. 431, Hec. 134. In And. 762 it expresses indignation; in 828 indignation and remonstrance. duint: an early form of the subj. pres. (properly optative). Thus Phorm. 519, 713. Cf. Heaut. 811.

667. coniectum in nuptias: on 602; cf. 620.

670. hac: in agreement with uia. successit: impersonal.

671. id anticipates the statement in 672. Note alliteration. processit: impers. Cf. Ad. 897 procedit = "it succeeds."

673. immo etiam, "on the contrary, (I think it can) still (be cured)"; ironical. The temp. sense of etiam is given by non iam (672). See Kirk in A. J. P. vol. 18. p. 41. si aduigilaueris, "if you keep a good lookout"; fut. pf. indic., the constr. being paratactic.

675. hoc: on 180. pro seruitio, "in view of my state of servitude."

676. manibus pedibus: on 161. Note the asyndeton within this phrase and the polysyndeton within the next one. The result is to render the second couplet emphatic. The combination, -que et, is not uncommon in Ter.; cf. Eun. 876, Phorm. 1051, Ad. 64 n.

677. dum, "if only."

678. tuomst: a monosyllable.

679. sedulo, "earnestly"; (with facio) "I am doing my best."

680. uel: intensive, "if you choose." Cf. Phorm. 143. me missum face, "dismiss me"; cf. 833, Eun. 90, Ad. 906; n. on And. 683. The older forms face, dice, duce (not fere) occur in Plaut. and Ter., though less frequently than the shortened fac, dic, duc.

681. locum, "situation," "condition of things," i. e. as existing before I followed your advice and consented to marry the daughter of Chremes.

682. See App. iam contrasts with the fut. in faciam and is emphatic. concrepuit, "creaked." Ancient doors were hung on wooden pivots (cardines) which made considerable noise as the door swung back and forth. See Marquardt, Privatleben der Römer, 2nd ed., 1. p. 230. To prevent this noise water was sometimes used. See Plaut. Circ. 158 ff. The door was said crepare, concrepare, φορεῖν, when an inmate made his exit. When a person sought admission from the street, he knocked (or kicked), the usual word for which was pultare, κύπτειν, as in Ad. 633, 637, Plaut. Most. 674 pulta dum foris. Other verbs were sometimes thus used, as pellere in Ad. 638, percutere in Plaut. Most. 516. The door to which words like crepare apply did not open directly on the street, but into a passage, at the other end of which was the street door. It was at this outer door that the knocking was done, even by day, at which time the door was usually open. hinc: (not hic) to correspond with the idiom a Glycerio.

683. nil ad te: sc. attinet. quaero: sc. consilium. Cf. 702. nuncin = nunce-ne; cf. 689 sicine and n. Transl. "well, now at last (beginning to think)?" inuentum dabo = inueniam, or nearly so. Cf. 684 inuentum curabo, "I'll have him found." This use of the pf. pass. prtcpl. as a secondary predicate is found after verbs of causation and desire, and denotes impatience of anything except entire fulfilment (G. 537; 280. c.). Cf. 864, Heaut. 950, Eun. 212, Phorm. 974 and 625 (where an adj. takes the place of the prtcpl.), Ad. 849.

ACT IV. SCENE 2.

Mysis steps out of the house of her mistress Glycerium, and as she does so calls back to her in reassuring tones. In an interview with Pamphilus, Mysis is convinced of the young man's good intentions, and takes courage. Charinus gives expression to his despair at the situation, and Dauos devises new plans for the benefit of his young master.

684. ubi ubi, "wherever." Thus also Eun. 1042. inuentum curabo: on 683.

688. uah: on 589. integrascit, "begins again." Cf. Ad. 153 de integro (amat or peccat).

689. sicine = sice-ne. See Roby 524. Cf. n. on 683. me . . . sollicitari: on 245. tua: i. e. of Dauos.

691. quibus: sc. nuptiis; the abl. with the impers. potuerat quiesci — a rare constr., resting perhaps on the analogy of such verbs as uacare and the like. Transl. “how easily in fact could we have kept out of this marriage if this fellow had been still.” hic: i. e. Dauos.

692. hic : i. e. Pamphilus. instiga, “prick him on.”

693. ea res est, “such is the fact”; with a refer. to 690. The remarks of Charinus and Dauos are ignored by Mysis.

695. omnis homines: Pamphilus is thinking more particularly of his father — a fact noted by Donatus.

696. contigit (sc. haec), “fortune made her mine,” refers to the death of Chrysis and the latter’s formal commitment of Glycerium to his care. See 284–298. Don. seems to have understood contigit to be impers. So also Fairclough, who renders “success befell me.” ualeant qui, “away with all who”; cf. Ad. 622 ualeas and n., and the use of χαλπειν in Gk. Pamphilus still has his father in mind, and therefore expresses himself with caution.

697. nemo: not nihil, for mors is personified; the allusion is to Simo.

698. resipisco, “I recover myself.” Cf. Heaut. 844. magis uerum atque hoc, “more certain than this.” atque, with the force of quam, after comparatives, is mainly poetic, and is found more often in negative than in positive constructions. The Delphic oracle served the Romans, as well as the Greeks, as a standard of certainty, and allusions to its “replies” are to be found in the literature from Plautus to Cicero.

699. ut ne : purpose, not result; thus also in Ad. 626. Transl. “if a plan be set on foot to keep my father from believing, etc.” stetisse: impers.; freely, “that owing to my endeavours an obstacle has arisen in the way of the fulfilment of this marriage.”

700. uoſo, “very well,” “well and good.”

701. Pamphilus means that he is prepared to take the consequences, if circumstances render it necessary that his father attribute to him, and to him alone, the responsibility for placing an obstacle in the way of his marriage with the daughter of Chremes. in procliui, “easy,” “likely to befall,” lit. “on the incline”; cf. Plaut. Capt. 336 tam hoc quidem tibi in procliui quam imber est quando pluit.

702. quis uideor, “what do you think of me now?” Understand tibi fortis, “(you are) fine”; ironical. For the omission of es cf. Ad. 528 tanto nequior and Heaut. 549 tanto melior. In expressions of an exclamatory nature es, like est, is often dropped.

703. quod: see App. effectum reddam, “I will achieve;” see on 683 (inuentum dabo).

704. iam, “without delay.” See on 682. huic : i. e. Pamphilus. ne erres: a final cl.; there is an ellipsis of the idea on which it immediately depends, as e. g. “(I say so) that you may make no mistake.”

705. sat habeo : see on 335; cf. 710. Charinus puts up with the impertinence of Dauos, since he cannot afford to anger the slave on whose efforts his own happiness so largely depends. So in 373. cedo : on 150. ut . . . uereor : the optative origin of the ut-cl. is strikingly apparent here; see B., App. 389. Cf. n. on 277.

706. ne . . . credas : on 704 (ne erres). uociuom, "at leisure"; see App. ad narrandum, "for telling (fairy) tales (yarns)."

707. uos amolimini, "take yourselves off"; said in a tone of affected superiority. Cf. Phorm. 566.

708. uerum uis dicam, "do you wish me to tell you the truth?" immo etiam, "yes, of course"; ironical. For a different view see Kirk in A. J. P. xviii. p. 41. Dauos would be glad to get rid of Charinus. But see App.

709. narrationis, "a speech." Cf. A. J. P. xviii. p. 41. footnote. quid me fiet, "what's to become of me?" See on 143 and 614, Ad. 611.

710. eho : on 184. dieculam, "delay," "brief respite"; dim. of dies, and colloquial. Cf. 328.

711. quantum, "in so far as." promoueo: like differo, profero; "put off," elsewhere "accomplish," as in 640, Eun. 913, Hec. 703. See 329.

712. ut ducam : sc. fæc. huc: i. e. to the house of Charinus, which however is not visible to the spectators, as has been imagined. si quid poteris : sc. pro me efficere.

713. age ueniam, "very well, I'll come."

714. dum : on 329.

715. adero : Dauos goes into Glycerium's house.

ACT IV. SCENE 3.

Mysis, left alone on the stage, soliloquizes. Dauos quickly reappears bearing in his arms Glycerium's child, and bids Mysis lay the infant at Simo's door. Suddenly Chremes appears, and Dauos is compelled to make a slight change in his plans.

716. nilne esse : on 245. proprium, "constant," "certain." Cf. Menander's fragment, Monost. 655 (Mein. vol. iv. p. 359) βέβαιον οὐδὲν ἐν βίᾳ δοκεῖ πέλειν. Cf. also Hor. Epist. 2. 2. 172 tamquam sit proprium quicquam. di uostram fidem : sc. inploro or obsecro; fidem = "aid," "protection." The expression, however, is always an exclamation of surprise, "great heavens!" "good God!" Accordingly fidem perhaps may better be explained as an acc. of exclamation than as object of a verb understood. So also in 237, and elsewhere.

718. uirum : on 295. loco, "vicissitude," "emergency."

719. eo: i. e. Pamphilus.

720. laborem, "trouble," "misery," "distress"; cf. 831, 870. hic . . . illic, "here . . . there." hic refers to the situation as indicated by uerum . . . laborem (719–720), illic to the circumstances suggested by amicum . . . paratum (718–719).

721. mi homo, "my good fellow," "my dear man," expresses astonishment; cf. Ad. 336.

723. malitia, "shrewdness," "cunning," as in Plaut. Epid. 546 muliebris mi adhibenda malitiast.

724. hunc: sc. puerum. ocius, "quickly," "at once"; so 731, Phorm. 562, Heaut. 832; Eun. 470, 912. The comparative thus used occurs only in commands.

725. nostram: i. e. Simo's. adpone, "put down"; cf. Heaut. 89.

726. humline: Mysis naturally hesitates to lay the infant on the hard ground. ara: the altar of Apollo, which was decked with leafy boughs (uerbenas), and stood before the house. uerbenas: the laurel, olive, myrtle; regarded as sacred, and used in sacrificial rites. Servius (on Verg. Aen. 12. 120) cites this passage, and adds that in the original of Menander, from which this line is taken, it is the myrtle that is here intended. The old English word is 'vervain.'

727. tute: cf. n. on 500.

728. ad erum, "before my master." iurato: see App.

729. adposisse (sc. me) = adposuisse from posui. This pf. of pono is found in Plaut. and in Cic. Tusc. 5. 29. 83 (where it is an intentional archaism). Ter. MSS. have adposu-. Cf. Engelbrecht, Studia Terent. p. 47. 6. See App. ut liquido possim, "that I may be able (to swear) with a clear conscience;" not Dauos' true reason, of course, but one that he considers a sufficient answer for the time being. Notice the anacoluthon in quia . . . ut. liquido is an adv. abl.; cf. n. on 533.

730. religio, "scruple," ἐνθύμιον. in te incessit, "has come to you," "has seized you." This constr. is supported by Livy, 29. 10. 3 cum tanta incesserit in ea castra uis morbi. cedo, "give him to me." Mysis does as she is bidden.

731. moue ocius te, "bestir yourself," "make haste"; cf. 724. porro: with agam.

732. pro Iuppiter: on 237. sponsae pater: i. e. Chremes. interruenit, "interrupts us." Chremes is returning to Simo's house, having made his preparations for the wedding. See 594.

734. As Chremes comes from the right, Dauos disappears. He returns by the street on the right, in order that he may seem to have come from the same direction as Chremes, whom he follows at a considerable distance. His original plan, interrupted by Chremes' sudden arrival, had been, probably, to inform Chremes and Simo that the boy was lying before Simo's door, and to express his surprise at the discovery.

735-6. "See that you support my story with words (of your own) whenever necessary." ut quomque = classical utcumque.

738. quod, "on account of which"; see on 448. ut tu plus uides, "as you have more discernment." plus uidere in this sense is frequent in Cic., e. g. Phil. 2. 15. 39, de Am. 99, etc. But see App.

739. quod uostrum commodum, "any advantage to you," i. e. to Dauos and Pamphilus.

ACT IV. SCENE 4.

Chremes sees the child lying at Simo's door, and overhears the conversation between Dauos and Mysis, which formed part of Dauos' plan to put a stop to the marriage and rescue Pamphilus from his difficulties. The plan succeeds. Chremes changes his mind, and goes off thinking himself fortunate at having made the discovery in time to save his daughter from a union so undesirable.

740. reuortor: i. e. in accordance with his promise made in 594. quae opus fuere: the personal use; cf. n. on 490, Ad. 335.

741. paraui: cf. 594. accersi: on 546.

742. adposisti = adposuisti; cf. n. on 729. illic (= ille+ce); i. e. Dauos. Mysis is greatly perplexed and distressed at being left alone, and in her confusion she neglects to answer the old man's question.

744. di uostram fidem: on 716. Dauos enters as if from the forum, and talks to himself. He pretends not to see Chremes, but means that the latter shall hear all he says.

745. quid hominum = quot homines. On this instance of the so-called Emphatic Neuter, see Greene in Class. Rev., vol. xviii. p. 449. litigant: the subject is collective.

746. tum, "then again," "moreover"; cf. 816. annonca carast, "the market is up."

747. quor . . . solam: sc. reliquisti. quae haec est fabula, "what stuff and nonsense is this (that you are talking)?" For fabula cf. n. on 224. Mysis would have given the situation away had not Dauos rudely cut her short. We may, however, with Fairclough, regard fabula as explained by the next line, in which case fabula = "comedy," "farce."

749. satin sanu's: cf. Heaut. 707, Ad. 329. satin = satisne with force of num, nearly.

751. au: Dauos hurts Mysis as he pushes her farther away from Chremes. Cf. n. on Ad. 336.

752. non tute ipse . . .: Mysis is very dull and is about to add eum attulisti, when Dauos cuts her short again; cf. 747.

753. si . . . faxis, "if you say a single word to me, except in reply to my questions." The real conclusion is suppressed, as in 860. The form faxim (fac-sim) is used by the comic poets for the pf. subj. Cf. excessis (760). It is originally optative of the sigmatic aorist. Faxo (fac-so) is similarly used for the fut. pf. indic. It is originally subj. of the sigmatic aorist. Cf. Victor Henry, Comp. Gram. of Gr. and Lat., p. 115 (Eng. Transl.), and B. App. 205. 3, and 219. For the thought cf. Plaut. Amph. 608 caue quicquam, nisi quod rogabo te, mihi responderis. The vs. is a stage whisper.

754. male dicas? "What do you abuse me?" Said in reply to deliras (752). This vs. is said aloud. undest: Mysis has not yet answered the first question in 748, which was intended to bring out the fact, for Chremes' benefit, that the child belongs to Pamphilus and Glycerium. This is at last made clear to Chremes' wondering curiosity by a nobis.

755. mirum uero . . . si: ironical; "astonishing, indeed, that."

756. meretrix: the use of this word confirms what has already been suggested to Chremes in 754. The redundancy in mulier meretrix is natural to colloquial language; cf. 828, 910; Phorm. 292. ancilla: see App. quantum: on 207.

757. idonei inludatis: on 492-3.

758. in quibus: the abl. is rare with inludere. The acc. is regular (cf. 822, Eun. 942, Phorm. 915, Heaut. 741), with or without the preposition. Later the dat. became the rule, as in Hor. Sat. 1. 4. 139 inludo chartis, and 2. 8. 62 ut semper gaudes inludere rebus humanis! So illudere pecuniae, Tac. Hist. 2. 90.

759. adeo: on 162 and 415.

760. caue: on 403. excessis = excesseris: see n. on 753. This vs. is an aside, and was so understood by Donatus.

761. eradicent, "utterly confound," lit. "tear up by the roots"; cf. Heaut. 589.

762. at: on 666. etiam: temporal; i. e. are you still asking, notwithstanding I have already given you explicit directions? See 759.

763. quoium, "whose"; from quoius, -a, -um (cuius, -a, -um), an interrog. adj., quite common in Plaut. and Ter., and appearing occasionally in later writers, and finally descending, through the sermo cottidianus, to the Romance languages; cf. the Spanish cuyo, cuya. adpositi: on 729.

765. uostri: sc. eri. quoius: genitive of the pronoun.

766. eho, an: cf. n. on 500. semper: something of an exaggeration in view of the statement in 100.

767. animum aduortendum = animaduortendum: cf. n. on 156.

768. quemne: i. e. eumne (puerum) quem? "You mean the child that . . . ?" quem is rel., not interrog. Cf. quodne in Phorm. 923. Cf. also Plaut. Mil. 13 quemne ego seruaui in campis Curculionis? For a different view see Elmer in P. A. P. A. xxiii. 18 ff.

769. o hominem: hiatus is admitted in Ter. after an interjection. See Introd. § 97. See also 817, Ad. 183, etc. uerum, "it's true," i. e. that I saw, etc.; said in confirmation of 768.

770. suffarcinatam, "all puffed out," i. e. with a bundle under her dress. habeo gratiam: on Phorm. 894.

771. quom, "that"; cf. 422, 623; n. on Ad. Prol. 18. adfuerunt liberae: Mysis is a slave and is aware that her testimony would be worthless accordingly. See Phorm. 292.

772. ne: on 324. illa: i. e. Glycerium. illum: i. e. Chremes. quoia: on 763. haec, "these schemes."

773-4. Dauos quotes Glycerium's words, as it were.

775. non hercle faciet: hercle is an echo of hercle in 774; faciet represents dabit. Dauos succeeds in producing in Chremes' mind a change of purpose regarding the marriage. nunc adeo, "this very instant"; cf. n. on 162. ut sis sciens: on 508.

778. tu homo suggests contempt, while mi homo (721) implies intimacy, friendship. Cf. Heaut. 1003, Ad. 111.

780. See on 221. coactus . . . ducet: i. e. so they say. Dauos is now putting the rumour in the form of direct narration. hem: Chremes is startled at this additional revelation, for he knows the law, and realizes that his daughter would have been placed in a most embarrassing situation had she been formally married to Pamphilus.

781. eho . . . an: on 766. Mysis says enough to convince Chremes that Glycerium is in reality believed to be an Attic citizen by her own people. This is what Dauos desires.

782. iocularium in malum, "into a droll scrape"; cf. Phorm. 134 iocularem audaciam, "amusing impudence." The form of this adj. in -us, -a, -um does not occur elsewhere.

783. Dauos now pretends to hear Chremes for the first time. per tempus, "just in time"; nearly the same as in tempore. Cf. Heaut. 364, Hec. 622.

785-6. em scelera: cf. em astutias, 604 and n.

786. hanc: i. e. Mysis; the pron. is contemptuous.

787. hic est ille, "this is the gentleman," i. e. Chremes. hic is a pron., not an adv., and is said with a gesture. The entire vs. is addressed to Mysis. te Dauom ludere, "that you are tricking Dauos merely." You have Chremes to deal with now. credes: see App.

789. Chremes is convinced. So he goes in search of Simo. attigas: earlier form of attinges. Pacuvius (Ribbeck, Trag. Lat. Rel. 343 and 165) uses the simple tagere. Dauos detains Mysis to explain to her the true significance of his actions.

791. inepta, "you simpleton." Cf. Ad. 271.

792. socer: only by anticipation. fieri: only at the end of a vs., elsewhere fieri.

793. praediceres, "you should have told me before"; so Heaut. 202 pateretur (where see n.); Phorm. 297 dotem daretis, "you should have given her a (marriage) portion." Elmer rightly calls this the subj. of obligation or propriety; see Class. Rev. vol. XII. p. 201 ff. That the mood is purely volitive, however, is held by Bennett (App. 362; Cornell Studies in Class. Phil. No. IX. p. 27). Cf. G. 272.3 (imperative of the past); H. 559.6; A. & G. 439. b.

794-5. Dauos means that, had he informed Mysis of his intentions, she would not have answered his questions "spontaneously" and "naturally," but rather "with premeditation," in which case the effect upon Chremes would have been less certain and complete.

ACT IV. SCENE 5.

At this point there appears upon the scene a certain relative of Chrysis, whose name is Crito. He has arrived in Athens from Andros, and has come to claim the property of his cousin, whose heir-at-law he is, being her nearest of kin. He is much disturbed on hearing that Glycerium has not yet discovered her parents, more particularly since Glycerium had always passed as the sister of Chrysis and would in this capacity inherit her property, rather than himself. This would make necessary a suit at law to establish his actual title. His testimony however brings about the recognition of Glycerium as the daughter of Chremes, and is the occasion of the winding up of the plot. We must suppose that the entrance of Crito is not observed by Dauos and Mysis, who are busily engaged in conversation.

796. platēa, "street"; ἡ πλατεῖα δδός. The penult has been shortened, as in Hor. Epist. 2. 2. 71. Thus also Eun. 344, 1064; Phorm. 215; Ad. 574, 582; Plaut. Trin. 840. Cf. balinēum (βαλανεῖον), chorēa, gynacēum, etc., wherein the shortening is due to change of accent.

797. parere ditias: see 70-71.

798. patria: i. e. Andros. uiueret: for a cl. of result following quam cf. Eun. 174, Phorm. 408; Ad. 109-110, 240, and see Roby, 1672-8.

799. lege: i. e. of Solon, providing that the property should revert to the nearest of kin. Cf. Ar. Av. 1660 ff. redierunt: property was said lege redire, "to revert," when the owner died and left no will. Cf. Hec. 172.

800. obsecro, "gracious goodness!" "Good Heavens!" "I say!"

801. sobrinus, "cousin"; strictly an appellation for the children of sisters. For the form of sobrinus see B. App. 108. 3.

803. itan Chrysis, "and so is Chrysis, really . . . ?" Crito would have added mortua est, but discreetly avoids the word of ill omen. perdidit: ἀπάλεσε; the strongest word that Mysis could have used to suggest both the grief caused by the death of Chrysis, and the disaster resulting from Glycerium's union with Pamphilus—a union that Chrysis herself had urged and sanctioned. Transl. "she has left us poor souls in the utmost distress."

804. "And you? How fare you here? Pretty well?" The three ellipses may be supplied by agit is, uiuit is and ualet is respectively. Cf. Plaut. Aul. 183 quid tu? recten atque ut uis uales? sic, "so, so"; as in Phorm. 145, where see n.

805. A proverb, as aiunt (= "as the saying runs") shows. Cf. the fuller id quod aiunt and quod aiunt in Phorm. 506 and 768. Among the fragments of Menander (Mein. vol. iv. p. 84) the line appears with slight variation: ζῶμεν γὰρ οὐχ ὡς θέλομεν, ἀλλ' ὡς δυνάμεθα; and among those of Caecilius are the words (Ribbeck, Com. Lat. Rel. p. 56), uiuas ut possis, quando non quis ut uelis. Cf. also 305-6 and n.

807. non dum etiam: on 201. attuli: see App. auspicato: on 533 (optato).

808. tetulisse: the reduplicated pf. (plpf.) of ferre, which occurs only once again in Ter. (832), although in Plaut. it is quite frequent. The form belongs to archaic Latin, and the poets. Cf. Plaut. Men. 381 pedem . . . tetulit, 630 tetuli pedem.

809. Cf. 124. ei: i. e. Chrysis.

810. possidet: i. e. as the (supposed) sister of Chrysis. Cf. 296. The discovery of Glycerium's parents would have rectified the difficulty without reference to the courts of law. hospitem, "stranger"; on 439.

811. litis sequi: cf. Ad. 248, Phorm. 408, and the Gk. δικην διάκειν. quam, "how little." Note the irony in facile atque utile.

813-4. fere grandicula iam, "already quite a well-grown maid." grandicula of the MSS. presents here an awkward case of synizesis. Cf. Minton Warren, 'On the Distinctio Versuum in Terence,' in A. J. A., second series, vol. iv. (1900), p. 103. See App. illinc: i. e. from Andros. clamitent, "people would cry aloud." Cf. n. on Hec. Prol. (II) 41.

815. sycophantem, "a trickster," "impostor," "fraud." The character is common in Aristophanes, and is prominent in Plaut. Trin., Act IV. sc. 2. Cf. 919. persequi: i. e. through the law-courts; cf. Ad. 163.

816. tum: on 746. non lubet, "it is not my wish." To go to law is not in keeping with Crito's generous nature. See App.

817. o optume: on 769. antiquom obtines (sc. morem), "you hold fast your character of earlier days," i. e. "you are the same (good) Crito as of old." The fuller expression appears in Hec. 860. antiquom is a term of praise here, as in Ad. 442, Plaut. Capt. 105 ille demum antiquis est adulescens moribus.

818. quando = quandoquidem; cf. Ad. 348. maxume, "by all means."

819. As Chremes had gone into the house of Simo (789) to inform the latter of his change of purpose regarding Philumena, Dauos prefers to avoid his master, if possible, and decides in consequence to follow Mysis and Crito into the house of Glycerium. The disappearance of Dauos marks only the second occasion in the play when the stage is left entirely empty, the other being at vs. 300 — showing that the division into acts was not dependent upon the stage being void of actors. Cf. Introd. §§ 57, 60. senex : i. e. Simo.

ACT V. SCENE 1.

Chremes and Simo may be imagined as having been in conversation within the latter's house since vs. 789. They step forth while their discussion is still animated. Simo continues to urge the marriage, and endeavours to persuade Chremes that he has been deceived by Glycerium's people. Chremes persists in his determination to have nothing more to do with Pamphilus, who, he is convinced, has his affections fixed on Glycerium, an Attic citizen, and is therefore in every way unfitted to be entrusted with the safe-keeping and the happiness of Chremes' daughter.

820. spectata : on 91.

821. face : on 680.

822. inlusi uitam : on 758. For dum in this vs. cf. Ad. 899. n.

823. immo enim, “nay indeed,” “on the very contrary”; said in answer to orandi iam finem face (821). See on 91 and 523. nunc quom maxume: elliptical, and in its origin equivalent to nunc postulo ita ut eo tempore quom maxume postulo. Transl. “now most particularly,” “now at this very moment.” Cf. Phorm. 204, Hec. 115, Ad. 518, and Reid on Cic. C. M. § 38. Perhaps the original form was merely nunc est quom maxume postulo. See Knapp in Class. Rev. vol. xiv. p. 216.

824. uerbis initum : i. e. in 572–3. dudum : as in 582. re, “in actual fact”; opposed to uerbis, as in Ad. 164. Cf. Eun. 742. So $\epsilon\pi\gamma\psi$ is often contrasted with $\lambda\delta\gamma\varphi$.

825. prae studio, “because of your eagerness.” For this causal use of prae, cf. Heaut. 123, 308, 920; Eun. 98.

826. “You take into account neither the limits of my favour nor the character of your request.”

827. remittas, “you would cease.” A dependent infin. with this verb is rare. Cf. 873. iniuriis, “unjust demands.”

828. at : on 666. perpulisti : Chremes had given his consent in 572–3. homini adolescentulo : for the redundancy cf. n. on 756.

829. re uxoria, “matrimony”; cf. res rustica, res divina, etc.

830. ut : a repetition (due to excitement) of ut in 828; cf. Phorm. 154. seditionem, “domestic discord.” incertas, “insecure”; because Glycerium was an Athenian citizen, and Pamphilus might be forced to marry her and divorce Philumena.

831. labore: on 720. medicarer: with a reference, perhaps, to animum aegrotum (193).
832. tetulit, "suffered it," "brooked it." Cf. 188. See on 808. feras, "bear with it," "be content"; note the play on the verb fero.
833. hinc: i. e. of Athens. missos face: on 680.
834. per ego te deos oro: for the order cf. 289 and 538. ut ne: on 259. illis: i. e. Glycerium, Mysis and the rest. animum inducas: on 572.
836. nuptiarum gratia: i. e. to prevent the marriage. facta atque incepta, "accomplished and set on foot"; hysteron proteron. ficta would mean "invented." Cf. 220, Eun. 200, Heaut. 545, and see App.
838. scio: cf. n. on 552.
840. facturas: sc. eas, i. e. Glycerium and her attendants. dudum: on 582. praedixit: i. e. in 507-9.
841. nescio qui, "some how or other."

ACT V. SCENE 2.

Dauos comes out of Glycerium's house, which he had entered at 819. As he does so he calls back reassuringly to Glycerium and her people. He does not see Chremes and Simo, who withdraw to one side. Chremes, however, sees him and nudges Simo, who suspects mischief at once. The behaviour of Dauos tends to confirm Chremes in his opinion, and to discredit Simo's recent efforts to answer Chremes by quoting his slave (840-1). Finally, when Dauos refers to Crito's assertion that Glycerium is an Athenian citizen, Simo is so enraged that he summons Dromo and commits Dauos to his charge for summary punishment.

842. nunciam: on 171. esse: for the infin. with impero cf. Eun. 252. The constr. is found also in both classical and silver Latin; in the former the infin. is always pass. or dep. See G. 532. Note 1. em: on 416. Cf. Eun. 472.

843. unde egreditur: Simo is surprised to see Dauos coming from the house of Glycerium. meo, etc.: a continuation of Dauos' sentence in 842. hospitis: i. e. Crito. The gen. corresponds to that implied in the poss. meo.

844. scelus: on 317.

844-5. scelus . . . hic: on 607 (scelus qui).

845. in uado: on 480. cesso adloqui: on 343.

846. bone: on 616. ehem: on 417. Dauos has to make a very sudden change of front, but he maintains his self-possession and assures the old men that everything has been got ready for the wedding in accordance with previous orders; see 523. noster (with a voc.) = "dear," "my dear"; cf. Ad. 831, 883, 961, etc.

847. curasti probe: very ironical.

848. accerse: cf. n. on 546. bene sane, "finely said, indeed"; cf.

Ad. 586. id: emphatic. enim uero: on 206. hinc, "from (to) the present situation." abest, "is wanting"; so Hearut. 1039.

849. etiam . . . responde, "again (I say), do you answer me as to this." etiam harks back to 843 quid illud malist. For this use of etiam see Kirk in A. J. P. vol. xviii. 1. p. 28, II. See App. istic: i. e. in the house of Glycerium. quid negotist: for the indic. see on 45 (quid est). ita, "yes."

850. modo, "just now." See App. quam dudum: on 582.

853. quid illum censes: sc. esse hic. quid = "why." Cf. Ad. 656. cum illa litigat: this facetious remark of Chremes increases Simo's anger and confusion, for it renders plain the fact that Chremes has little confidence in Simo's presentation of the case. See 552.

854. Dauos pretends to think that Crito is an impostor, and that Pamphilus is in Glycerium's house for the purpose of having Crito furnish testimony to the effect that Glycerium is an Attic citizen. faxo: on 753. faxo . . . audies: MSS. B D P have audias. But the fut. indic. after faxo is the regular constr. in early Latin. There are more than forty-one instances in Plaut. (ed. Goetz and Schoell) against twelve cases of the pres. subj. The subj. came in by degrees, as hypotaxis became more frequent and the paratactic arrangement less so, until in the Augustan age it is the rule. Hence we find the archaic faxo itself appearing less often than we might expect in the plays of Ter. (only 7 times), and there only four times certainly (viz. Eun. 285, 663; Phorm. 308, 1055) with the fut. indic. Three of these (all but the first) are examples of pure colloquialism inherited from Plaut., while the subj. appears in Ad. 209 and 847, and in this passage if MSS. B D P are correct. But faciam (with subj.) is found in Ter. no less than twenty-seven times. See my "Note on Faxo," in the P. A. P. A., vol. 28, p. vii.

855. ellum, "there he is." Dauos points towards the house of Glycerium. Cf. Ad. 260, 389. ellum (= em + illum) and ellam (= em + illam) are used to designate the place where an absentee may be found, if desired, or to point out the person in question while at a distance from, though visible to, the speaker. eccum, eccam, and em usually point to some person in the speaker's immediate vicinity; occasionally to an absent person, as in Plaut. Capt. 169, Amph. 120. See Spengel's n. here, and cf. n. on 582. confidens catus, "bold, shrewd"; not in a bad sense, but so as to suggest to Simo that Crito is a strong man and likely to prove convincing in what he says, whether he be right or wrong. confidens is used in a bad sense in Phorm. 123. Cf. n. on 876.

856. quantiuis preti, "of the utmost worth."

857. tristis ueritas, "austere sincerity." See App. fides, "sober truthfulness."

860. Dromo (Δρόμων) ; strictly a messenger boy; here a lorarius, whose business it is to see that punishment is meted out to refractory slaves. Cf. Ad. 376. Simo is both alarmed and enraged, for Dauos has outwitted him and brought him into contempt in the eyes of Chremes, to whom he can no longer represent the rumour of Glycerium's citizenship as a mere fiction of a slave.

861. sublimen, "upwards"; probably an adverb. Transl. "up with him and carry him within doors." The adv. appears in Plaut., in six places of the Cod. Vat. (B), and elsewhere. But that sublimen appears also as an indeclinable adj. is shown by Schmitz, Rhein. Mus. (1872) p. 616. The form in -n has been generally received as the true one. But see App. quantum potest (sc. fieri): impers., "as quickly as possible." The MSS. vary between potest and potes, but the third pers. is generally to be preferred. Cf. Eun. 377, 836; Phorm. 674, 896; Ad. 743, 909. See Ussing on Plaut. Amph. 964. Wagner (on Plaut. Aul. 119) argues in favour of potes.

864. te commotum reddam, "I'll give you a touching-up"; see on 703 and 683.

865. quadrupedem constringito, "bind him hands to feet." The hands and feet of Dauos are to be tied into one bundle. The explanation given in Harper's Lat. Dict., "so that he can only move on all fours," is incorrect. Cf. Hom. Od. 22. 173.

866. et illi patrem: i. e. et Pamphilo ostendam, patrem quid sit pericli fallere.

869. pietatem, "dutiful conduct," "gratitude." For the excl. acc. cf. Roby, 1128. -ne is frequently added, whether the infin. follows or not. Cf. n. on 245 and Ad. 304.

870. laborem : on 720. capere : sc. mene; cf. n. on 245. Transl. "that I should have so much trouble for such a son!" Omission of the pronominal subject is very rare in the first pers., infrequent in the second, very common in the third. See Lachmann on Lucr. II. 16. Cf. n. on Prol. 14.

ACT V. SCENE 3.

In response to his father's summons Pamphilus comes out. Simo is unable to restrain his wrath. Pamphilus is humble, but begs to be allowed to bring Crito forward, and to prove through him that the situation is not so bad as Simo appears to imagine.

872. quid aīs : on 517. omnium: Simo would have added nequissime, or something similar, but the aposiopesis is more effective; cf. Eun. 797.

873. mitte male loqui, "cease your abuse"; cf. 827.

874. iam, "under such circumstances." grauius, "too harsh," "too severe." posslet : on 234 (siet).

875. ain tandem, "do you, too, say?" tandem suits Simo's persistent unwillingness to believe his son prepared to back up Dauos and the rest in their efforts to deceive him.

876. confidentiam: in a bad sense; "presumption," "impudence." See on 855, 869.

877. Simo apostrophizes Pamphilus in the third person, instead of addressing him directly in the second — a manner suggestive of passion and grief.

878–881. These lines are more in the manner of a soliloquy than of direct address; cf. 886.

878. uide num . . indicat: on 45 (quid est). Fleckeisen punctuates at uide, so as to make the question certainly direct. color, "complexion." pudoris signum: i. e. a blush. Of course this could not be seen on the stage, whether the actor wore a mask or not. It could be indicated only by statement. Cf. Ad. 643.

879. inpotenti: i. e. wanting in self-control, and so "mad," "rash," "headstrong;" cf. Heaut. 371; Hor. Od. I. 37. 10 quidlibet inpotens sperare. esse: sc. eum. See on 245 and 870. animo, "disposition."

880. uoluntatem patris marks the climax. This is emphasized in 891, and is distinctly a Roman way of looking at the matter.

881. tamen: on 94. cum summo probro, "to his deep disgrace."

882. me miserum: an expression of genuine contrition. For this tendency in the character of Pamphilus cf. 262, 889, 893, 897 ff. sensti: on 151.

883. olim, quom: on 545. ita points to (id) efficiendum (esse) in 884. induxti: on 572.

884. aliquo pacto, "somehow-or-other," "by hook or by crook." efficiendum: sc. id = antecedent to quod.

885. eodem die: i. e. at the time indicated in olim (883). istuc uerbum constitutes a second and more explicit reference to me miserum (882), istuc (883) being the first. in te accidit, "befitted you."

886. ego: sc. facio or dico, or perhaps doleo.

888. an ūt pro huius: an anapæst; through the Iambic Law (Introd. § 91) for ūt, through elision of o in pro, and through synizesis (Introd. 96) whereby huius becomes a monosyllable. The line denotes strong feeling. Hence the alliteration and assonance.

889. habeat: on 649. ualeat: on 696 (ualeant qui).

890. huius patris: i. e. mei; cf. n. on 310.

891. liberi: said without refer. to the number of children. Cf. adulescentulos (910); Hec. 212. inuito patre: cf. n. on 880.

892. adducti: sc. sunt a te. uiceris, "you (will) have won the day"; fut. pf. Cf. Roby, Pref. to vol. II. p. cvi.; Ad. 843 pugnaueris.

893. pater etc.: Pamphilus cannot bear to be accused of suborning false witnesses to prove Glycerium's citizenship, and begs to be permitted to explain. pauca: sc. dicere.

896. hanc: this pron. is seldom used of an absent pers.; but Glycerium is ever present to the mind of her lover, and her house stands in the immediate neighbourhood. Moreover the word is said with a gesture, no doubt.

897. dedo: on 63. Pamphilus, who is affectionate, filial, and weak, is willing to place himself in his father's hands. His very weakness, however, disarms Simo's hostility and paves the way for the introduction of Crito.

899. adlegatum, "suborned"; cf. Plaut. Pers. 135.

900. adducas: for the mood see on 282.

901. da ueniam, "give consent"; cf. Ad. 937, 942. hoc: acc. sino: a sign to Pamphilus that he may bring Crito out at once. P. leaves the stage.

902. comperiar: dep. only here, in Ter.

903. paulum supplici: in this case, Simo's displeasure, which P. evidently feels acutely. Fairclough's note is, I think, misleading. patri: emphatic.

ACT V. SCENE 4.

Pamphilus now returns in company with Crito. The latter is recognized by Chremes as an old acquaintance; but he is attacked by Simo, as a sycophant and a corrupter of youth. Pamphilus fears that Crito will not be able to endure such treatment, and that he will retire without telling his story. Crito shows much forbearance, however, and the tale he tells brings about a happy dénouement. Glycerium proves to be the daughter of Chremes, who bestows her upon Pamphilus. Simo becomes reconciled to the situation, and Dauos is released from his captivity.

904. mitte orare: on 873. harum: sc. causarum ("reasons"). It is evident that Pamphilus has entreated Crito to intercede for him, and to tell what he knows about Glycerium. monet, "prompts."

905. quod cupio, "the fact that I wish well to"; cf. Cæs. B. G. 1. 18 cupere Helvetiis.

906. ist = is est.

907. Athenas: sc. uenisti; see on 361 (quorsum, etc.). insolens, "contrary to your custom," "unexpectedly." euenit, "it has happened so." Donatus says, pudet fateri propter hereditatem uenisse; cf. 815.

908. men quaeris: Pamphilus has told Crito that Simo wished to speak with him. echo: on 184. hinc ciuem: cf. 833 and n.

909. paratus, "primed," i. e. with mind already made up, and for the purpose of advocating an unworthy cause. Cf. Phorm. 427, And. 406 mediatus.

910. adulescentulos: on 891. Note the repetition of tune — for emphasis.
911. eductos: cf. n. on 274. The asyndeton suggests mental excitement. fraudem, "harm," "mischief."
912. lactas: cf. n. on 648. Note the assonance in the first half of the line. Simo is eloquent in his abuse. Hence Crito's rejoinder, sanun (i. e. sanusne es?)
913. nuptiis, "by means of a (make-believe) marriage," i. e. by falsely proving Glycerium a civis. conglutinas, "cement."
914. substet, "stand his ground." si noris: in form contingent (ideal); in reality contrary to fact = "if you knew him" · you do not know him. See on 310.
915. bonus, "honourable." sit: on 900 (adducas).
916. itane adtemperate euenit . . . ut, "(and yet) has it happened at so convenient a moment that?" Said sarcastically in allusion to Crito's euenit above.
917. antehac: on 187. est uero, etc.: very ironical, "he must be believed of course."
918. ni metuam: on 914 and 310. habeo: Pamphilus is aching to offer certain apt and fitting advice, but refrains through fear of his father. The object of habeo is the antecedent of quod. moneam is followed by two accusatives.
919. sycophanta, "adventurer"; cf. n. on 815. sic est hic, "that's his way." sic is a colloquialism for talis here, in Phorm. 527 sic sum, and in Eun. 408 sic homost. mitte, "let him alone," "ignore him." uildeat qui siet, "let him have an eye to his way (of acting)." qui is nom., and has the force of qualis.
920. Thus Alcaeus (Bergk, Anth. Lyr., ed. 2. p. 385), αἰκ' εἴπης τὰ θέλεις, η κεν ἀκούσαις τὰ κεν οὐ θέλοις. See Eur. Alc. 704–5.
921. Freely: "is it to my interest to stir up your affairs, or to feel concern about them?" For the indic. cf. n. on 497. For moueo see on 516. feras: potential.
922. audierim: i. e. from Phania. Iam, "soon," "in a moment or two."
924. una: adv.
- 924–5. adplacat . . . se: i. e. he "attaches himself" to the father of Chrysis, as a client to his patron. In this way he would secure protection for Glycerium after his death, and until she could find her parents.
925. fabulam, "a yarn," which Simo is disinclined to believe. See on 224 and 747. sine: said to Simo.
926. obturbat, "interrupt." Cf. Plaut. Poen. 261 ne obturba ac tace. is and illo (927) refer to the father of Chrysis.
927. eum: i. e. the shipwrecked merchant. se also refers to the shipwrecked merchant (923), whose story was reported to Crito by the father of Chrysis, and is used as though Crito had said, eum audiui dicentem, in place of audiui ex illo.

928-9. See App.

929. fuisse: two syllables.

930. Rhamnusium, "from Rhamnus." Pαυνοῦς was a deme, or district, of Attica, about five miles northeast of Marathon and near the coast. It possesses remains of an ancient theatre.

931. audire : hist. infin.

932. quid eam tum : sc. esse aiebat (Phania). eam : i. e. Glycerium.

aibat : on 38 (seruibas). The subject is Phania. quoiam : on 763.

933. quid aīs : on 137. tu : addressed to Chremes as opposed to Crito.

934. qui credis, "on what grounds do you suppose so?" Cf. n. on 53, and Prol. 6. noram et scio, "I knew him, and am aware of the fact (that he was your brother)."

937. illo : for this abl. see on 143; cf. n. on 709. apud me : on 408.

938. mirando, "with wondering"; abl. of attendant circumstances. hoc bono : abl. of cause.

939. ne : on 324. Crito congratulates Chremes on having found his daughter. multimqdīs, "in many ways," "on many accounts." Cf. Heaut. 320, Phorm. 465. Simo is thinking of himself and Pamphilus. credo, "that's my way of thinking," "those are my sentiments," often follows gaudeo or other expression of congratulation or felicitation. Cf. 947, Eun. 1051, Ad. 972.

940. scrupulus: lit., "a sharp bit of stone"; figuratively, "a slight obstacle," "difficulty," "doubt." Cf. Phorm. 954, 1019; Ad. 228. etiam unus, "still one more"; etiam is temp. and additory, the latter sense being reinforced by unus; see Kirk in A. J. P. xviii, p. 29. male habet : on 436. dignus es : sc. qui male habearis (thus Don.); "you deserve (to be worried)."

941. cum tua religione, "with your scruples": abl. of accompaniment, with idea of cause connoted. Cf. Eun. 153, Phorm. 465, Hec. 134, Ad. 713. odium : voc.; "hateful fellow," "wretch." Cf. scelus in 317 and 607. nodum in scirpo quaeris, "you are hunting for a knot on a bulrush"; i. e. you are looking for a difficulty where none exists. The proverb occurs in Plaut. Men. 247.

944. uoluptati, "happiness," "good fortune." Pamphilus is well acquainted with the name by which Glycerium was known in her early life, and is much concerned lest Crito's imperfect memory should be the occasion of a hitch in the present very important proceedings. His impatience finally gets the better of him, and he speaks the name, which is recognized immediately by Chremes and Crito.

945. Pasibūla : see App.

946. ipsa : i. e. Glycerium. hoc : abl. of cause.

947. quod restat, pater . . . : i. e. as to what remains to be said after all this, I hope, father, you will not refuse your consent to my marriage with Glycerium. A similar instance of aposiopesis occurs in 972.

948. res . . . ipsa : i. e. the discovery that Glycerium is a daughter of Chremes. redduxit me in gratiam : Simo is now quite reconciled to the marriage of Pamphilus and Glycerium, and in these words makes the fact known. For redduxit see on 559.

949. ita ut possedi, "so far as possession makes good my case." Possession was nine-tenths of the law then as now. The case of Pamphilus was one de uxore, and needed only confirmation by the father of the young woman to make it perfect. Chremes does as he is asked, and replies, causa optumast, "your case is of the best," "all is well."

950. Chremes intimates that the question is settled so far as he is concerned, but that Simo may have something to say. nempe id, "oh! is that it?" This is said in a somewhat disconcerted tone, for Pamphilus has understood that his father agreed to the arrangement. scilicet, "of course," i. e. I agree. Chremes hereupon names the amount of the dowry.

951. decem talenta : about $12,000, in silver. accipio : as the dowry was a large one (cf. 101), this would seem rather a perfunctory way of acknowledging Chremes' generosity; but, as Donatus remarks, Pamphilus is using technical language, prescribed by law.

952. transferri, "to be carried across," i. e. from her own house to that of Simo (huc).

953. istuc negoti : on Prol. 2.

954. aliud magis, etc., "something else that suits him better and is of more importance to him"; ironical.

955. non recte, "not rightly." haud ita iussi: Simo plays upon the word, and says that he did not order Pamphilus to be bound non recte = "not well," "not thoroughly." Cf. 865.

ACT V. SCENE 5

Vs. 956 might have brought the play to a close, were it not for the evident propriety of doing justice to the characters of the under plot, Charinus and Philumena. As Donatus says, it would be unfair to leave Philumena without a husband. Accordingly Pamphilus is no sooner left alone on the stage than Charinus appears and listens to his soliloquy and to his subsequent conversation with Dauos. Having learned the truth, Charinus elicits from Pamphilus a promise to plead his cause with Chremes. Hence Pamphilus leads the way into the house in search of Chremes, and Dauos informs the audience that whatever else is to be done will take place within.

957. prouiso : on 404. Pamphilus : the diæresis at the end of the half-verse takes the place of the caesura, as the point where a pause is to be made. Hence the quantity of the final syllable. eccum: on 582. fors, "perhaps"; cf. Heaut. 715, Verg. AEn. 5. 232. See App. putet, "may (would) think"; see B. App. 360. a. On the 'Potential Use of the Subj. Mood' see H. C. Elmer in Cornell Studies in Class. Phil. no. vi. See also P. A. P. A., vol. xxxii, pp. cxvii ff. Cf. W. G. Hale, T. A. P. A., vol. xxxi, p. 138.

958. at . . . lubet, "and yet that this is really true at this very moment I rejoice to believe."

959. eapropter = propterea; see Lucr. 4. 313.

960. propriae: on 716. nam, "for instance"; often in Plaut. and Ter.

961. Pamphilus reasons that he has now attained immortality like that of the gods, if only no new sorrow shall intervene to interrupt his happiness. Cf. Heaut. 693, Hec. 843. aegritudo: cf. n. on Ad. 312.

963. quid . . . gaudist: on Prol. 2.

964. solide: on 647 (solidum). mea gaudia: cognate acc. Note the double alliteration in this vs.

969. factum bene: on 105.

970. amicus summus nobis, "our most intimate friend"; thus also Phorm. 35 and 1049, and (without amicus) Eun. 271, Ad. 352, Plaut. Truc. 79 nam me fuisse huic fateor summum atque intimum.

971-2. num ille . . . uoluit, "is he dreaming that which he wanted when awake?"

973. solus es quem diligent di: i. e. because his utmost desires have been fulfilled. See 964. Cf. Phorm. 854.

974. Charinus, who is surprised and delighted at all that he has overheard, determines now to make his presence known. Consequently he says conloquar in a tone that is audible to Pamphilus. mi: dat. of advantage; "to my great delight."

975. bene factum: on 105; cf. 969. tuis secundis, "your good fortune." It is not necessary to understand rebus, since tua secunda is said in the same way as omnia mea occulta (Heaut. 575) and tua iusta (Phorm. 280).

977. memini, "I don't forget that." atque adeo: on 532. exeat: the subject would be ille which illum anticipates. Prolepsis; see G. 468. Note.

978. intus . . . est: sc. Chremes. The poet leads us to believe that the marriage of Charinus and Philumena will be arranged within to the satisfaction of all who are interested. This is all that is necessary so far as the underplot is concerned.

980-1. As Pamphilus and Charinus enter the house, Dauos lingers a moment and speaks these two lines to the audience. intus despondebitur, "the betrothal will take place within"; impers. With the final settlement of the affairs of Pamphilus and Glycerium the real interest in the plot ceases. Accordingly Terence brings the play to a close with as little attention as possible to further matters of detail. It is probable however that vs. 981 refers to the settlement of Crito's business regarding the property, which could now be transferred to him without undue litigation. Cf. Meissner's n.

Cantor: a person who sang the lyrical monologues, or cantica proper, and who is thought to have come forward at the close of the play for the purpose of saying plaudite (thus And., Hec., Ad.), or uos ualete et plaudite (as in Phorm., Eun., Heaut.). He is perhaps to be distinguished not only from the actor, but from the musical accompanist or flute-player, tibicen. His employment in the theatre is said by Livy (vii. 2) to have been due to Liuius Andronicus, who, to save his voice, introduced upon the stage a young slave, and stationed him near the flute-player. The business of this slave was to sing while Liuius Andronicus gave expression to the thought by means of suitable mimicry and gesticulation.

In all of Terence's plays the best MSS. use the symbol ω to mark the cantor, — i. e. the person who speaks last, — even as other letters of the Greek alphabet occasionally denote the other actors, e. g. in the Codex Bembinus throughout. Cf. Ritschl, Praef. to Trin. of Plautus, p. lv., cited by Wilkins on Hor. A. P. 155. Cf. also Dziatzko, Introd. to Phorm. p. 31 and n. on 1055; Spengel on And. 981, and Dz. on Ad. 997. But while this is the prevailing view of the significance of the omega symbol, it is nevertheless possible that the ω referred to does not represent cantor at all, but rather the whole troupe or company of actors (or those of them who were on the stage at the time), who (and not the cantor) came forward at the finish and challenged the applause of the spectators. Such at least is the opinion of Prof. Lindsay. See Class. Rev. vol. xix. p. 111.

Alter Exitus: the "Second Ending" of the Andria begins after line 976, though, as it stands, it is without sufficient connection with the preceding vss. It occurs in several MSS. of comparatively late date, but is not found in the best codices. Ritschl (Par. 583 ff.) attributes it to a poet a little later than Terence. But Dz. (N. J. 1876, p. 235 ff.) would make it as late as the second century A. D., and K. Braun (Quaest. Ter., 1877, p. 21) as late as the fourth. That it is of ancient date is shown by the fact that both Sulpicius Apollinaris (earlier than 150 A. D.), Donatus and Euphrasius were aware of its existence. It is considered spurious by Don. and rejected by Eupr., and is very corrupt in some of its lines. Moreover the fact that its concluding verses are in iambic senarii, while the last lines of every other play of Terence are in trochaic septenarii, is against the assumption of a Terentian authorship. For the latest word on the subject see Fairclough, who cites Greifeld, De Andriæ Terentianæ Gemino Ext'ri (Diss. Halle, 1886).

APPENDIX TO NOTES ON THE ANDRIA

8. Spengel follows the MSS. See his crit. note.

51-2. Sosia . . . potestas: rejected by C. F. Hermann (Rh. Mus. vol. vi. p. 444). The facts are summed up by Fairclough, who regards the words as a gloss on the preceding line.

64-5. aduersus . . . illis: rejected by Bentley 'numerorum potissimum causa.' But if we read obsequi studiis the metre will take care of itself, thus: ēorum obsequi studiis, aduersus némini. See however Spengel's crit. note.

70. huc uiciniam: so Dz. and Speng., for MSS. hui^c (evidently a corruption of huc) uiciniae (part. gen.) — the latter a familiar construction adopted and supported here by some editors, but rejected by those above named on the ground that by all analogy in early Latin uiciniae must be a locative and therefore without sense in this passage. Cf. Phorm. 95 hic uiciniae, Plaut. Mil. 274 hic proxumae uiciniae, where uiciniae (loc.) is independent of hic = "here." So huc uiciniae must be altered to huc uiciniam (acc., limit of motion) in order that the noun may serve as appositive to the adverb. See Dz. on Phorm. 95, Brix on Plaut. Mil. 274, and esp. Spengel on And. 70 (Anhang) where the matter is argued at length.

103. Spengel and Fairclough retain uerae (the latter on the ground that it is required by 47), and reject igitur which is not in P C B. But Fleck. keeps igitur, not uerae, and it may be that uerae was brought into the text from 47 by some copyist who had not observed that fiant is sufficient here; cf. 529, 543.

107. amarant: thus also Bentley, Meis., Fleck.; yet amabant is sufficiently exact for colloquial language, though logically inferior to the plpf.

155. If a comma (rather than colon or period) he placed at ducere, vs. 156 may be the apodosis. This view, which is that of Bentley and Klotz, followed by Fairclough, is preferable, since thus are presented two parallel conditional periods, the second being contained within lines 157 and 158, where si deneget answers to si . . . nolet, and uera obiurgandi causa sit to animum aduortenda iniuriast. Cf. Fairclough's crit. note.

156. aduortenda: on the spelling uortere (older than uertere) see Lindsay, Lat. Lang., p. 467. § 8.

171. sequor: D E P, Donatus (as quoted by Priscian) and Bentley read sequar, which is certainly as well suited to the actual situation as sequor, although the latter does not necessarily imply that Simo follows Sosia into the house at once. The fact is that nothing in the text indicates that the stage is emptied of performers at this point. Simo goes on talking after Sosia has left him, and does not leave the stage until 205. To say (with Spengel) that Simo enters the house at 171 and returns at 172 is to force the situation for the sake of making the first act end with this scene, it being assumed that the dividing line for a new act occurs only when the stage is empty. This rule however will not hold, as an examination of the text of the plays will show. Nor should we expect it to do so, since the comic writers had no thought of a regular division into five acts. See Introd. § 57. As a scene is properly a subdivision of an act, it is inconsistent with this theory to make an act consist of but a single scene. The only good reason for doing so in this instance is that the expositio ends at 171, and the plot really begins to work in the next vs. But even this reason will not stand as a hard and fast rule for other plays, in which the expositio comes to an end in the first scene, and considerably before the commencement of the second act. Accordingly Umpf., Fleck, and others, following Bentley, mark the end of the first act of the Andria at 300 — rightly.

175. semper, according to Fairclough, should go with uerebar, for the reason that there is no exact parallel in Ter. to justify its use with a noun having so slight a verbal force as lenitas. But it is construed as in the commentary, by Klotz, Wag., Meis. and other editors — rightly, for its position in the sentence is really the decisive factor; cf. ei vūv (ἄνθεμοι), etc.

204–5. I prefer (omitting sed) edico tibi, ne temere facias, the reading of Fleck. and Fairclough. ne . . . facias, in that case, is dependent. edico was read by Don. The best MSS. also have dices in 205, which Fleck. keeps, and which perhaps is to be preferred, if the previous ne-cl. be dependent, on the ground that a prohibition with the pres. subj. is rarely introduced by neque (nec) (but rather by neue), unless a cl. with ne (prohibitive) certainly precedes it — which in this case is at least doubtful; cf. Elmer on The Latin Prohibitive in A. J. P. vol. xx. 3. But it is to be preferred also because (as a fut. indic. = an imperative) it suits the sense and the context, whatever may be the constr. of the ne-cl. It is less polite than the subj., and is not infrequent in Terence.

205. neque tu haud: Don. I prefer neque tu hoc of the MSS. The double neg., though easily accounted for, is not needed, and praedictum (esse) expects a subject acc.

213. It is well to reject aut, and thus avoid the awkwardness of such a disjunction as perit aut . . . dabit. Bentley's explanation that perit is interjectional is hardly satisfactory: "if he finds it out (ruin!) or even should it suit his whim, etc."

226. ut: rightly rejected also by Fleck. for the reason that monosyllabic conjunctions and prepositions are rare at the end of a vs., if in sense they belong to what follows rather than to what precedes. Cf. however Spengel's crit. note.

248. quot modis: Hauer argues for quot and aliquot in preference to quod and aliquid. See his crit. n. on Phorm. 159.

276. uerear: generally accepted on the authority of D¹ and O, but uereor is supported by P D²B and M (Schlee, Scholia Terent. p. 18), and is better suited to the strong feeling of the speaker.

289. MSS. quod ego te per hanc dexteram oro et ingenium tuum, which is against the metre. Emendations are numerous — all involving transposition. Umpf., Spen., Dz., Fleck. (in both editions) unite in the substitution of genium for ingenium. The former seems to have been known as a variant to Don. and was adopted by Bentley; cf. Hor. Epist. 1. 7. 94. The arrangement involving the least departure from the MSS. reading is given by Fleck. (1st ed.): quod égo per hanc te déxtram oro et geniúm tuom, altered to quod pér ego te, etc., in 2d ed. The latter arrangement has good support; cf. 834, 538; Plaut. Rud. 627; Liv. 23. 9. 2. It is adopted by Dz., who however is obliged to borrow nunc from Eogr. for the sake of the metre — a difficulty skillfully avoided by Fleck. through transposition: quod pér ego te dextram hanc oro et geniúm tuom.

299. accerso: the form favoured by the MSS., which vary between it and arcessso.

332. apiscier: thus also Dz. here and in Phorm. 406, where Hauler now reads adipiscier with the MSS. Spen. adipiscier, rightly. See his note.

345. euge, Charine: Spen. (after Bentley) scans eugé, notwithstanding εύε, and cites eugae of the MSS. and Plaut. Bach. 1105, Most. 260. Thus he gets rid of o, which was introduced by Fleck. on the authority of old editions, and accepted by Dz. See Jahn's N. Jahrb. 1873, p. 503. But see note.

347. certo: MSS. certe, which is perhaps best when hercle follows, as in And. 495, Phorm. 523; but when hercle precedes there is good MSS. evidence in support of certo, which Dz. and Fairclough accept on the authority of A in Phorm. 164. Cf. Plaut. Men. 314, and see Schlee, Scholia Terent., p. 36.

369. ferre: Tyrrell prefers fere (sc. tulit), for which see Dz., Adn. Crit.

375. The new scene here is recognized also by Meis., Dz., and Fleck., who follow Dou. MSS. make no division.

386. hoc: that this was the only form of the adv. huc in use up to the time of the Roman emperors has been pointed out by Buecheler (Lat. Decl. p. 102). So Engelbrecht, Studia Terent., p. 70. 5.

389. hic: it is better to punctuate the question at tecum, and take hic as an adv. (= "hereupon," or "thereupon") with reddes, as Meis. does. Dz., though he follows Spen. in the matter of punctuation, yet remarks (Adn. Crit.), aduerbiūm, non pron. pers., esse puto.

439. eius: Dz. (Adn. Crit.) refers to Plaut. Poen. 1188, for the double gen. But, as Fairclough says, no pron. is needed here in view of the preceding illi. The common text (the conjecture of Erasmus) will answer, which is merely a rearrangement of the MSS. reading. See however Fairclough's note.

451. Klotz, Ritter, Wag., Fleck., Fairclough read obsonatus (dep.), for which see Engelbrecht, Studia Terent. p. 49. 9. Dz. and Spen. keep obsonatum, with Bentley.

459. According to the traditional division Act iii would begin here instead of at 301.

483. post deinde: Fleck. has poste, which Fairclough says is necessary, as deinde is always a dissyllable in Ter. But while this is true of deinde in iambic and trochaic metre, the rule does not apply to bacchiac verse, wherein, as Spen. points out, Plaut. makes even coëpi trisyllabic. poste is an old form of post, found in Plaut. and Ennius.

506. itast completes the octonarius.

516. Fleck. accepts this vs. in full, but changes mouentur to remouentur. So also Spen., who however retains mouentur unaltered. The flatness of the line is apparent, and suggests interpolation. Dz., in rejecting the latter half and uniting the first half metrically with 517, has struck a probable mean, whose naturalness is enhanced by the aposiopesis.

525. atqui, for atque of the MSS., is unnecessary, since atque in Ter. and Plaut. is at times adversative. Cf. 225 and note.

527. ipsum gnatus: thus B D¹ G against C E P (ipse gnatus). Engelbrecht (Studia Terent. p. 35) cites nine passages from Ter., in which ipsum is read 'ad hiatum euitandum,' and two 'propter ictum (ipsū).' But these considerations do not apply here. Moreover in Heaut. 894, A, as well as other MSS., has ipse gnatus. Yet many editors, including Fleck., have failed to restore ipse here. Not so Fairclough.

528. id rests on the authority of Priscian (II. 243) alone, and is not necessary to the sense; cf. Plaut. Pers. 245 facile impetas; Cas. 214, 235 non potes impetrare.

532. obuiam: rejected by Bentley, but possessing the support of the best MSS., as well as an obvious force in the passage. Schubert, Spen., Fleck. and Fairclough rightly reject Chremem.

536. The first et is rejected by Spen. and Dz. to save paucis, which most MSS. give rather than pauca. Meis., Spen., and Fleck. have paucis, and Meis. notes that elsewhere in Ter. (and in Plaut.) paucis is usual. Yet pauca easily solves the metrical difficulty, was read by Priscian, is found in B, and is suggested by paucas of P.C.

593. quid dixisti: Tyrrell reads: quid dixi? DA. dixi? The second dixi, introduced by Tyrrell metri gratia, is difficult. If Dauos is to be made to repeat Simo's question, he should rather say, 'dixerim?' (against the metre). Moreover, as Dauos has said occidi before, he needs to accent the first syllable of optune, in order that it may sound somewhat like that of occidi. This is impossible in Tyrrell's reading. On the other hand, quid dixisti, of the text and most editions, for quid dixi, is not quite satisfactory, for Ter. probably wrote the latter, which appears in all MSS. Fairclough follows the MSS. and accepts hiatus at the change of speakers, which is a fair solution of the difficulty. I prefer Engelbrecht's suggestion (Studia Terent. p. 59) by which hem (592) is brought into this vs. — for which cf. Eun. 1017, and the MSS. reading there.

613. audacia is supported by Eun. 958. Fairclough accepts as superior the conjecture of Professor Palmer (Hermathena, vol. viii. p. 160), qua facie facere id audēam.

625. est: rejected by Bentley, that the line may be a pure dactylic tetrameter. But see Klotz, Altrömische Metrik, pp. 61, 78.

630. Fairclough and Fleck. have in negando, due to Spengel.

633. The vs. is a mere gloss. It is accepted however by Fleck., and by Fairclough who says that it naturally sums up the previous reflections.

648. ni : cf. Eun. 1014, Phorm. 544. Thus also Fleck.

650. The MSS. reading is rightly retained by Spen., who takes suls as a monosyllable. If suis be dissyllabic the metre affords ground for the rejection of mihi and the transposition, consiliis suis, of the text. conflauit is a variant preserved by Don. But confecit is supported by Heaut. 1003.

655. quo is retained by Meis., Spen., Fleck., Wag., Fairclough. But Fleck. (1st ed.) and Dz. alter to quom.

663-4. Both interturbat and satis scio impair the evenness of the metre, through the creation of two octonarian verses where iambic senarii are to be expected.

682. Emendations and corrections are numerous. To be preferred is Fleckeisen's, Faciam. Át iam hoc opus est. Hém, mane: crepuit a Glycerio óstium.

703. sclo, quod conere: MSS. quid, which Meis., Spen., Fairclough retain; but the correction is a probable one. Pa. is about to say, "whatever you may attempt, it will turn out a success" (ironical), when Dauos breaks in with hoc as grammatical antecedent of the relative. scio is parenthetical.

706. uociuom: in G the letters following uac- are partly erased, so as to leave the impression that the reading is uociuom (uaciuom), the earlier form of the word. Moreover A has uociuom in Heaut. 90, and would undoubtedly be found to have the same form in the present passage but for the destruction of this portion of the codex. Plautus has only uociuos and uaciuos, never uacuus. See Ritschl, Neue plaut. Excuse I. p. 59. esse: Spen. transposes, uociuom nunc me esse. Fleck. has nunc me uociuom esse.

708. immo etiam: cf. n. on 673 and 655. According to Kirk in A. J. P. vol. xviii. p. 41, the stop placed here after etiam by Dz. and Spen. (and Tyrrell) interferes with the true force of etiam, which is temp., as "nay, he is still (etiam prius quam abit) beginning a speech to me."

728. iurato accords with comic usage, but is after all a mere evasion of the difficulty. As Don. read iurandum, Fairclough would read iurandumst, place a comma after opus sit, and suppose an ellipsis (et ita ego agam, or the like) before ut. This obviates the difficulty involved in the awkward combination quia . . . ut. See T. A. P. A. vol. xxx, pp. 12-13, and Fairclough's Andria.

729. adposisse: the MSS. here, in 742 and in 763 have adposu-. But Dz. (Adn. Crit.) compares Ritschl, Opusc. iv. 119 f.

738. Though ut is generally accepted, aut gives good meaning, as "or (if) you see any further reason (why I should remain)."

756. ancilla: retained by Fleck., Spen., and Klotz, who reject meretrix. But meretrix has more force here than ancilla; see note.

787. Fleck. seems to go too far in accepting ne here for non, even on the authority of Priscian. Fairclough follows Fleck.; see his crit. note.

807. huc me attuli: like Plaut. Amph. 989 eius iussu nunc huc me adfero. attuli is attested by Priscian (II. p. 68). appuli would mean, "I came by sea," — as in fact he did. But appellere with a reflexive pron., for appellere nauem, is rare, if not ἄπαξ εἰπ.

814. grandicula: possibly in A and probably in some early MS. now lost. Hauer defends grandiuscula in Archiv., V. 294.

816. non licet: I prefer non licet (with Fairclough), the reading of P C B O, Don., and Eogr. The text follows the testimony of DG.

836. facta: thus Bentley and Meis.; but ficta is the reading of Klotz, Wag., Spen., Fleck.. Fairclough. See T. A. P. A., vol. xxx. p. 12.

849. responde: Umpf., Fleck. (1st ed.), Spen., following Don., change to respondes — rightly, since this construction is regular in impatient questions, and s may easily have fallen out in the arsis of the foot. Cf. Heaut. 285, Phorm. 542, Ad. 550. Hec. 841 is different. The construction is frequent in Plaut. The imp., however, sometimes appears as a development from the indic., as in quin dic (45), where see note.

850. modo, etc.: for confirmation of Fleckeisen's reading (which is also that of the text) see Fairclough's crit. note.

857. tristis ueritas: discussed and defended by Fairclough. O has ueritas, which is accepted by Spen., Wag., Klotz. Other editors give seueritas, with most MSS.

861. sublimen: MSS. here and in Ad. 316 have sublimem = "raised aloft," "lifted from the ground"; but sublimen is better authenticated in Plaut., and is thought by Ritschl to be the only correct form. See Rhein. Mus. 1850, p. 556. See also Ritschl, Opusc. ii. 462 ff.; O. Ribbeck in N. Jahrb. 1858, p. 184 ff. Cf. Fowler on Plaut. Men. 994, Spengel's note on the present passage, and Dz. on Ad. 316. But Klotz, in his excursus on this passage, argues against the recognition of sublimen, and Fairclough holds that sublimem has been proved to be correct by W. Heraeus in Phi- lologus, vol. iv. (1896), pp. 197–212 — which would render possible a return to the traditional order. See foot-note on this verse.

928–9. hem, perii comes very well from the lips of Chremes, to whom it is assigned by Bentley, Meis., and Fleck., while Umpf., Klotz, Spen., Dz. give it to Pamphilus (omitting Phania) to whom it is less appropriate. Pamphilus jogs Crito's memory, and Chremes is quite electrified at the sound of his brother's name, for he sees instantly that Glycerium is his own daughter. Fairclough, falling back on Don., is less convincing when he assigns “hem” to Simo, and “perii” to Pamphilus.

945. Pasibūla? The repetition renders possible the preservation of the ū (cf. Πασιθούλη), without doing violence to the metre. MSS. (except A) have non patiar at the beginning of the line, which is retained by Spen., who however sacrifices the quantity of the ū in Pasibūla.

957. Spen. reads fors, and is followed by Dz.; cf. Heaut. 715 (where however it is also a concession to the metre), and Verg. Aen. 5. 232. Fleck. accepts fors, but reads me aliquis (after Podiaski), on the ground that aliquis cannot carry the ictus on its final syll. if it constitutes an independent foot. He is followed by Fairclough, who reads me aliquis fors putet. Umpf., Wag., and Meis. retain forsitan by placing it after me and transferring putet to the beginning of the next line; cf. G. Hermann (Elem. p. 176). This would make 958 an iambic octonarius, but is perhaps the best solution of the difficulty.

HEAUTON TIMORUMENOS

DIDASCALIA

See introductory and other notes on didascalia to the Andria.

Heauton timorumenos, "the 'Self-Tormentor,'" is based on Menander's Θεατὴν τιμωρούμενος, the fragments of which are given by Meineke (Com. Graec. Frag., vol. iv. p. 111). Some critics prefer the contracted form Hauton, on the ground that it is better suited to Terence's own prosody in Prol. 5. The Greeks too, as Bentley pointed out, wrote αὐτὸν as well as ἴαυτὸν. But Heauton is the reading of the MSS. and of quotations of the grammarians. Probably the play was first exhibited in 163 and revived in 146 B. C.

tibiis inparibus, "to the accompaniment of unequal pipes." Cf. Introd. §§ 85, 86. Manius Iuuentius Thalna and Tiberius Sempronius Gracchus were consuls in 163 B. C.

PERIOCHA

See introductory note on the periocha to the Andria.

2. durus pater, "a hard-hearted father," i. e. Menedemus.
 3. animi: locative. paenitens: with obj. gen.; "repentant (of)." 4. ut reuersus est, "when (Clinia) returned." deuortitur ad, "he puts up at."
 5. ad Clitiphonem: i. e. to (at) the house of Clitipho, or, more accurately, of Chremes, the father of Clitipho. is: i. e. Clitipho.
 6. See App.
 7. ut, "in the character of." eius: i. e. Clinia.
 8. factum: sc. est. id: with reference to vs. 7. quo, "in order that."
 9. suam refers to Bacchis. hic: i. e. Clitipho.
 10. meretriculae: i. e. Bacchis. sene: i. e. Chremes.
 11. reperitus: sc. esse.
 12. hanc: i. e. Antiphila. aliam, "a different (woman); " not Bacchis.
- Sec 1065. uxorem: predicative, "as his wife."

PERSONAE

See n. on the personae of the Andria.

PROLOGUS

Although the recitation of the prologue was ordinarily assigned to one of the younger actors, in this case the task is given to an old actor, probably Ambiuius Turpio, in order that the attacks of the poet's critics may be answered by a man of recognized importance and influence.

1. uostrum: partitive gen. partis: the pl. is preferred to the sing. when a theatrical rôle is intended.

2. poëta: on And. Prol. 1.

3. quod ueni, "what I have come for." Cf. n. on And. 448.

4. integra and integrā, "untouched," "unadapted"; cf. integrum (Ad. 10). Hence "fresh," "new," "original." Cf. nouam, 7; Eun. Prol. 33–34.

5. Heauton: see n. on Didasc.

6. "Which has been wrought out double from a single plot." The line seems to imply nothing more than that Ter. elaborated a double plot from a single Greek play, adding material of his own devising by way of a side-study or underplot. He was not on that account guilty of contaminatio. See App.

10. paucis: sc. uerbis.

12. uostrum iudicium fecit, "he has made the decision yours." Cf. Ad. Prol. 4. actorem, "pleader," "advocate;" cf. oratorem, 11. agere causam or simply agere=to conduct a case in a court of law.

13. si, "if only." a facundia, "in the matter of eloquent delivery." Cf. Hor. Od. 2. 16. 27 nihil est ab omni parte beatum, i. e. "in every respect"; Plaut. Mil. 631 ne utiquam ab ingeniorum senex, "by no means is he an old man in mind."

14. ille: i. e. Terence. cogitare commode, "happily to devise."

15. dictūru(s) sūm: see Introd. § 93.

16. quod, "as to the fact that," "whereas." maliuoli: unfriendly critics, among whom was Luscius Lanuuinus. See on And. 7. Cf. Ad. Prol. 15.

17. contaminasse: sc. Terentium. See Introd. §§ 45, 48, 49, 50, and on And. Prol. 16. This is one charge, and is made by his critics at large. The other is given in vss. 22–24, and is ascribed particularly to Lanuuinus. It is practically a charge of insincerity, and is rebutted in the prologue to the Adelphoe (15 ff.).

20. bonorum: i. e. Naeuius, Plautus, Ennius. See on And. Prol. 18.

22. quod: on 16. uetus poëta: i. e. Luscius Lanuuinus. Cf. n. on 16 and 17.

23. repente: i. e. without any training or preparation. hunc: i. e. Terence. studium musicum, "the pursuit of (dramatic) poetry." Cf. Phorm. Prol. 17 artem musicam, i. e. "the dramatic art." Cf. also Hec. Prol. 23.

24. amicum = amicorum: i. e. Scipio, Laelius, Furius and other young patricians belonging to the Scipionic circle of litterati, with whom Terence was on terms of intimacy. But see on Ad. Prol. 15. Cf. Introd. § 44. ingenio, "talents." natura, "abilities."

25. arbitrium . . . existumatio, "decision . . . judgment." Cf. 12; Ad. Prol. 4. The charge is neither admitted nor denied. Cf. Ad. Prol. 17 ff.; Introd. § 45. Note the chiasmus.

26. oratos, "entreathed," i. e. by me, the orator.

27. iniquom . . . aequom: gen. pl.; cf. 24 amicum. Transl. "the prejudiced . . . the unprejudiced." oratio, "the words," "the suggestions."

29. nouarum: sc. fabularum; trans. "(to those) who give you an opportunity of seeing new plays." The usual constr. would be copiam nouarum spectandarum, or else copiam spectandi nouas. We may regard nouarum as the obj. gen. after the verbal noun spectandi (gerund). Thus Phorm. 186, Hec. 372 where eius fem. is gen. after uidendi. Cf. Plaut. Capt. 852.

30. sine uitiis, "without faults;" with nouarum. ille: i. e. Luscius Lanuuinus. dictum: i. e. that the expression sine uitiis has been used with reference to his plays. The plays of Luscius are certainly not without faults, and the speaker proceeds (in 31 and 32) to show that they are not. Cf. Phorm. Prol. 6-8.

32. decessere (= decessisse), "make way for." For the form see on And. 151. Such a scene as this, in which the people are represented as being hustled to one side by a hasty slave, would be in poor taste, and probably a stale joke — though in fact this seems to have been no uncommon occurrence, to judge from the allusions in passages like Plaut. Mil. 116, Amph. 986-987. Luscius Lanuuinus appears to have introduced scenes of this character into his dramas. quor insano seruiat: sc. populus; "why should they (the people) be at the mercy of a lunatic?"

33. eius: i. e. Luscius Lanuuinus. dicit: sc. poëta, i. e. Terence. dabit, "shall exhibit." The subject is Terence again.

34. alias: sc. fabulas. facit: sc. Luscius Lanuuinus. Cf. And. Prol. 22-23.

35. Cf. And. Prol. 24, Phorm. Prol. 30, Ad. Prol. 24.

36. statariam: sc. fabulam; "a quiet play," i. e. a play in which there was little action, as opposed to a fabula motoria, in which the action was "lively." Of the latter sort are the Phormio and the Eunuchus. To the former class belong the Heauton timorumenos and the Hecyra, while the Andria and Adelphoe hold a position midway between the two extremes, and may be styled mixtae, in accordance with the classification of Donatus (on Ad. 24): 'duo agendi (gen. sing.) sunt principales modi, motorius et statarius, ex quibus ille tertius nascitur qui dicitur mixtus.'

37-40. Ambiuius does not wish to be obliged always to act in a fabula motoria, to which the characters enumerated would chiefly belong. Such parts required stentorian lungs and great exertion on the part of the actor, if he was to make himself heard above the din of laughter and applause and general disturbance, which the livelier dramas usually called forth. It is therefore in part to bespeak a quiet hearing that Ambiuius comes forward himself as Prologue.

38. sycophanta: on And. 918.

41. causam iustum: pred. to esse; "that this is a righteous cause." Ambiuius continues to use the language of an advocate in a court of law. animum inducite, "persuade yourselves."

43. seni: i. e. the aged actor, like Ambiuius himself.

44. si quae: sc. fabula.

45. lenis: the opposite of laboriosa; i. e. if it is a stataria, or quiet play (cf. 36). gregem, "troupe," "company." Cf. Phorm. Prol. 32. Ambiuius was the head or leader of a caterua or grex of actors.

46. hac: sc. fabula. pura oratio, "simplicity of diction," "purity of style." Cf. Cæsar, as quoted in the Vita Terenti.

47. in utramque partem, "in both directions," i. e. in the stataria, as well as in the motoria. ingenium, "ability," as an actor.

48. auare, "covetously." arti, "skill."

49. eum anticipates seruire (50), but has been attracted from the neut. to the masc. by quaestum, in animum induxi, "have always considered."

51. exemplum, "a precedent." in me, "in my case." Cf. 108 in te adulescentuli: young actors. The idea is: show by your conduct toward an old man that young men may reasonably hope for a quiet hearing.

ACT I. SCENE 1.

The scene opens on the farm of Menedemus, which is in the neighbourhood of Athens. Menedemus, dressed in a hide (Varro, De Re Rust. II. 11. 41), is hard at work with a hoe. Chremes, whose house adjoins that of Menedemus, comes out and remonstrates with him on the uselessness of such hard labour at his time of life, and seeks to know why he torments himself in such cruel fashion. It is this peculiar conduct that earns for Menedemus the title of The Self-Tormentor (έαυτὸν τιμωρούμενος). The latter then tells his story — that he had dealt so harshly with his son, Clinia, as to drive him away from home, and that it was no longer possible for him (Menedemus) to enjoy the luxuries of which his son was now deprived; that he had determined accordingly to punish himself, and had therefore sold his house in town and had purchased a farm at a little distance from Athens, in order that his self-imposed punishment might be carried out.

The house-fronts of Chremes and Menedemus face the stage.

53. nuper: practically an adj. here, "recent." This use of an adv. in the pred. with sum is common, and is a survival of the time when that verb had life (= "exist"), and needed an adv. Thus also bene, male, etc. with sum. nuper here is strengthened by admodum. Cf. n. on Phorm. 477.

54. adeo: intensive, with inde; “(dating) in fact just from the time when, etc.”

55. rei: gen., modifying quicquam; “anything in the way of intercourse”; cf. Hec. 718.

57. quod, “a circumstance that.”

59. quod mihi uidere, “because you seem to me.”

61. See on And. 237.

63. plus eo: cf. Hec. 421 for a similar instance of this use of eo after a plural.

65. seruos: sc. habes. proinde quasi, “just as if.” Scan proinde; synizesis.

66. officia fungere: cf. n. on And. Prol. 5.

67. tam mane . . . tam uesperi, “so early in the morning . . . so late in the evening.”

70. te respicis: cf. n. on Phorm. 484.

72. quantum: i. e. “how little.” paenitet: cf. n. on Eun. 1013.

74. illis, “those fellows,” i. e. the slaves.

76. ea quae, etc.: in apposition with aliena. We might expect eaque. The vs. really exhibits a fusion of two constructions, (1) aliena cures (alone), and (2) ea cures quae, etc. (without aliena). Menedemus regards Chremes as a Paul Pry.

77. homo: in the broadest sense possible. The vs. is a rebuke to Menedemus for his use of the word aliena. The common brotherhood of all men was a tenet of the Stoic sect of philosophers, and this line, which succinctly and clearly voices this sentiment, became famous at once, and was often alluded to by Cicero, Seneca, and others. Cf. Cic. de Leg. I. 12, de Fin. III. 19. 63; Sen. Ep. 95. 52. It was received by the audience with great applause, according to the tradition handed down to us by St. Augustine (Ep. 51).

78. hoc: acc.; not abl. percontari, “(that I) am asking for information.”

79. rectumst, etc.: i. e., if what you are doing is right, that I may do likewise; if it is not, that I may dissuade you from your purpose. ut faciam is said with a reference to percontari; ut deterream with thought of monere.

80. usus est in Ter. has the meaning and constr. of opus est. Cf. Hec. 327, 878; n. on And. 490.

82. labori, “trouble”; pred. dat. nolle, “I would it were not so.” Cf. Phorm. 796, Ad. 165.

83. “Pray, what punishment have you merited at your own hands, so great (as all this)?” For de te cf. 138 de me.

84. me: on And. 377.

86. iūuero: on And. 456.
87. qua: abl. by attraction of the rel. into the case of the antec.; a constr. common in Gk., but exceptional in Latin. Cf. Hor. Sat. 1. 6. 15 notante iudice quo nosti populo.
88. adpone: on And. 725.
89. uociuom . . . laboris, "free from toil." For the gen. cf. Plaut. Bacch. 154 uaciuom uirium. See on And. 706. quod is indefinite.
90. hos: sc. rastros; acc. of excl. meritum: substantive; cf. Phorm. 337, 338, 1031, 1033.
91. paupercula: on Ad. 647.
92. humanitus, "kindly," φιλανθρώπως.
93. aegrotum: on And. 193, 559.
94. amicam ut habeas: explanatory of haec in 102. In uxoris loco: a variation on pro uxore in 98.
- 95-7. tantisper . . . dum, "only so long as"; cf. 147-8; Ad. 70.
98. me: abl. with dignum. in te, "in your case." inuenero: on 86.
99. istuc: i. e. your conduct.
100. istuc aetatis, "at your time of life."
101. belli: locative; i. e. in foreign wars. The successors of Alexander the Great waged frequent wars upon one another in Asia Minor, a fact that afforded opportunity to young men to leave Athens and find change, and possibly the betterment of their condition, amid the conflicts and political disturbances of a foreign land.
102. adeo rediit, "came to this." Cf. 359, 931, 980, Ad. 273. The force of re- is lost.
103. prouidere: on And. 183. se ipsum: attracted from the nom. into the acc. by me (115). This attraction would not have taken place had the verb been repeated, as e. g. quam ipse sibi prouideret. Cf. Phorm. 592 quam Phormionem, and Ad. 534 quasi ouem. sibi: with scire and prouidere; "for his interests."
104. ad regem militatum: i. e. to enlist in the army of some Oriental potentate. Cf. n. on 112; Ad. 385.
105. quid aīs: on And. 137.
106. illud incepturn refers to the enterprise of the son in leaving home.
107. fere limits perturbato; "almost distracted."
108. prae: on And. 825.
109. soccos detrahunt: it was customary to remove the shoes or slippers before reclining at table. Cf. Hor. Sat. 2. 8. 77 soleas poscit, where Nasidienus calls for his slippers with a view to leaving the triclinium. The soccus was a kind of slipper (without straps) that covered the entire foot, and was worn by actors on the comic stage. It contrasted with the cothurnus or high buskin of tragedy.

125. sternere, "to spread (with coverlets)." This was preparatory to the cena. Cf. Ad. 285.

127. quo, "whereby." For the syntax see on And. Prol. 6.

129. solius: in agreement with mei implied in mea. sint: deliberative. Sec App. causa: with mea solius.

130. ancillae: female slaves whose business it was to make clothes for their master.

132. uti his, "to enjoy these (blessings)." pariter . . . aut etiam amplius, "in like manner (with myself) or even more so." The intensive force of etiam is derived from the temporal ("still"). If joined with amplius, the particle is temp. when amplius is an adv. and the verb is pres. or fut. (cf. Ad. 468); but the temp. force is lost when the tense is pf. (as here and in Eun. 143) or when amplius is a substantive as in Plaut. Capt. 777. See Kirk in A. J. P. vol. xviii. p. 30.

133. utenda: in agreement with haec.

134. eum recalls the real object of eieci, which is gnatum unicum in 131.

136. id refers to continuing the life of luxury which Menedemus had been wont to lead before his son left him, and which is described in 129-131. usque dum, "just as long as"; cf. n. on 106.

138. interea usque, "for that same period of time." illi: i. e. Clinia.

139. Cf. Ad. 813 and note.

141. nec uas nec uestimentum is meant to include all superfluous furniture and finery—uas referring not only to household utensils in general but also to ornamental vessels of plate; while uestimentum includes embroidered couch-coverings, tapestries, curtains and the like.

142. opere: on Phorm. 363.

143. exsercirent (ex-sarcire), "patch," "repair," and so "make good," "repay."

144. inscripsi aedis, "I advertised the house."

145. mercede, "at a rent"; sc. conducendas esse, of which the subject acc. is aedis (144), the constr. being that of oratio obliqua after inscripsi, with which verb the words in titulo = "on a placard" may be understood. quasi talenta ad quindecim, "talents to the number of fifteen or thereabouts"; about $18,000, in silver.

147-8. See on 106-107.

150. meus particeps, "as one who shall share it with me," "as my partner (in it all)."

151. liberos: on And. 891. 154. uere: on And. 629.

155. quanti: locative, "at how much."

156. quae, etc.: i. e. (ea) quae est aequom filium patri credere.

159. recte spero: a colloquialism = spero recte futurum esse (or omnia euentura esse). Cf. Ad. 289.

161. faxint: on And. 753. si commodumst: the real apodosis is in uolo (162). The whole = nunc si e., quom D. hic sunt hodie, apud me sis uolo.

162. Dionysia: τὰ Διονύσια; celebrated in Athens in the spring; in the country (all over Attica) in the autumn. It was known in the first case as τὰ μέγαλα Διονύσια; in the second as τὰ καὶ ἄυρος Διονύσια, and it is probably to the latter or rural celebration that the present reference is made. apud . . . uolo: an invitation to dinner. Cf. Juvenal, 5. 18 una simus.

166. fugere: sc. laborem = 'hardship.' sicine: on And. 689.

169. tempust monere me, "it is time for me to remind." See App.

170. domi: i. e. at Phania's house, not the house of Chremes. Chremes leaves the stage for a moment or two. It is not probable that one of the houses fronting on the stage was that of Phania, in view of the facts that Phania nowhere appears in the play and that he is not alluded to except in this scene. The stage is therefore empty (if only for a moment): a rare occurrence in the plays of Plaut. and Ter., but there are a few other instances.

171. domi: i. e. at Chremes' house.

172. aiunt, "they tell me"; i. e. the slaves at Phania's house do so.

173. crepuerunt: on And. 682. fores: on And. 580.

174. huc, "to one side," i. e., perhaps, into the angiportus (alley). Cf. Ad. 635. See App.

ACT I. SCENE 2.

As Clitipho enters the stage from his father's house he pauses a moment to speak to Clinia, who is within. Chremes overhears his remarks, and on questioning him learns that the son of Menedemus has returned from Asia and has taken refuge at the house of his old friend Clitipho, who now requests his father not to inform Menedemus of Clinia's return. Chremes makes good the opportunity to impart to his son a few words of warning, touching the unfilial conduct of young men in general.

175. haud quaquam etiam cessant, "by no means (as you imagine) are they making a long stay of it." It is pointed out by Kirk (A. J. P. vol. xviii. pp. 27-28) that the negative here modifies only the modal adverb, and that this combination modifies the complex etiam cessant. Hence this is not an instance of etiam with negative = nondum, "not yet," as in And. 116, but of temporal etiam without the neg., i. e. etiam = "still." Put affirmatively, the whole = "they are still making the best of their way hither." The pl. in cessant refers to Antiphila, Dromo and Syrus, the slaves having recently been despatched to Athens to find Clinia's sweetheart and bring her to Clitipho's house. See 191.

176. illam: i. e. Antiphila.

185. amplius: with inuitatum; "urged the more."

187. atque, "and yet." etiam: temporal rather than intensive;

"there is still time (to urge him to come)." See on And. 282. caue faxis, "see that you don't." Cf. n. on And. 758.

188. enim merely lends emphasis; so in at enim, nunc enim, immo enim, and the like. Cf. n. on And. 91. etiam: on 187. quid se faciat: on And. 143.

189. animum . . . ut sit: on And. 377.

192. minus: sc. miserum esse. crederes: potential, with indefinite force; see B. 280. 3 and 356. 3. See App.

193. quae, "(of those things) which."

194. incolumem is felt with all the nouns, though it agrees with only one of them.

195. atque: on 187. qui: i is merely shortened here before ea. Cf. Phorm. Prol. 27. With this vs. cf. Hor. Epist. 1. 2. 49 ff.

198. plus satis: i. e. plus quam satis, "too much." The full phrase occurs in Phorm. 797.

199. illicine = illice + ne (illice = ille + ce). Transl. "what? he!" Chremes is surprised, for he knows how unjust is Clitipho's estimate of the character of Menedemus. The rest of the vs. is said aside. hunc and illi refer to Clinia and Menedemus respectively.

200. ut ut erat, "however things were"; cf. n. on Ad. 630. mansum: sc. esse. See on And. 239. Transl. "he ought to have stayed at home."

201. iniquior erat: sc. Menedemus. eius: i. e. Clinia.

202. pateretur, "he (Clinia) should have endured it." See on And.

793. quem ferret: a rhetorical question; it serves here to convey a negative opinion. See G. 259 and 466.

203. huncine = hunc + ce + ne. Clinia is meant. illius: i. e. Menedemus.

204-5. quod, etc., "as to the fact that he (Clinia) accuses him of harshness." parentum: subjective gen.

205. paulo . . . tolerabilis, "(of a father) who is at all a tolerant person"; qui (= quicumque) is generalizing; hence it is essentially plural, and the whole = paulo qui sunt tolerabiles, "of those (fathers) who are at all tolerant." For the act. meaning of verbal adjectives in -ibilis cf. Phorm. 226, 961; Ad. 608; Plaut. Mil. 1144; Hor. Od. 1. 3. 22.

206. Note the chiastic arrangement.

207. ad: on And. 481-482. Transl. "with a view to their virtue."

210. For the sentiment cf. Ad. 416, where the maxim is amusingly parodied.

211. ita credo: Clitipho is weary of his father's lecture, to which he yields a merely verbal assent.

212. sis: on 369. quo, "in any direction." longlus, "very far." So Ad. 882.

ACT II. SCENE 1.

In the following monologue, which really belongs to Act I, Clitipho gives expression to his distress at his father's teaching, and dwells upon his own unhappy lot, whereof, as he declares, his father is in total ignorance.

215. "And that we should have no participation in those things, etc." On the gen. denoting participation after adfinis, see G. 374. Note 2.

217. ne: on And. 324.

218. cognoscendi: gerundive; "for learning (the character of)."

219. meus est: sc. pater.

226. Cf. And. 274.

227. inpotens, "without self-control," "headstrong," as in Hor. Od.

1. 37. 10 quidlibet inpotens sperare. nobilis, "conspicuous."

228. "Then as to what I am to give her, there is (merely the answer) 'oh! yes certainly.'" recte is the evasive reply given to Bacchis by Clitipho, because he is unwilling to say, nil est. religio: cf. And. 730 and 941.

229. hoc mali, "this misfortune," i. e. his relations with Bacchis. non pridem, "only recently." neque etiam dum, "and not yet in fact." The temp. etiam is reinforced by dum (= δῆ). See on And. 201.

ACT II. SCENE 2.

Clinia tells Clitipho of his doubts regarding the faithfulness of Antiphila, and is reassured by his friend. Presently Antiphila appears, accompanied by Dromo and Syrus.

231. uenissent: the subject is Antiphila and the two slaves, whose arrival is momentarily expected. mulier, "she," i. e. Antiphila.

232. See App.

235. etiam caues: etiam is additory, but the additory force is weakened to the point of being, for us, untranslatable except by a vocal stress upon the modified word. See Kirk in A. J. P. xviii. p. 32, d. Transl. "will you take care, etc." See Phorm. 542, Ad. 550, And. 849, and notes. aliquis: for emphasis; otherwise quis would be regular after ne. See G. 315. Note 1.

237. pergin = pergisne?

239. hinc longule esse, "that it is a bit of a way from here," i. e. to Antiphila's residence in Athens. For longule (dim. of longe) cf. Plaut. Men. 64, Rud. 266.

240. conantur: lit., "are making the attempt," i. e. to start (sc. ire),

"are getting under way." With the thought cf. Eun. 341; Hor. Sat. 1. 5. 13.

241. eccum: on And. 532.

ACT II. SCENE 3.

Syrus and Dromo arrive from Athens, the women being not far behind. The slaves are in conversation, as they enter the stage by the door on the spectator's right. Their talk is overheard by Clinia and Clitipho, who are not aware that Syrus has brought with him Bacchis also and all her train. Bacchis is Clitipho's mistress. Clinia mistakes the remarks of Syrus about Bacchis as though they referred to Antiphila, and is much distressed in consequence. Syrus reassures him, however, and outlines a plan to pass off Bacchis as Clinia's mistress, and to entrust Antiphila to the keeping of Clitipho's mother — an arrangement finally accepted by the young men.

242. dum sermones caedimus, "while we are carving sentences"; from the Gk. κόπτειν λόγους or βήματα, according to Priscian.

246. illi: i. e. Antiphila.

247. relictas: on And. 289. Cf. n. on 200.

249. dum strengthens the imv.; "be off at once." See G. 269.

251. autem is common in lively questions; "what in the world is troubling you ?" See G. 484. Note 1. Cf. 1000; Ad. 185.

252. uiden tu, "you see surely, don't you ?" The accusatives are subjects of esse (253), but are put first for emphasis.

253. ei is necessary, and has been adopted by editors in general since Faernus, though it is not in the MSS. It is the antecedent of quam and refers to Antiphila.

256. sed eccos: Syrus sees the two young men for the first time. Cf. n. on And. 532.

257. interea loci, "meantime," as in Eun. 126 and 255.

259. propter quam, "for whose sake." minus obsequens, "disobedient." Cf. parum in 334 and 924.

260. quoius: the gen. with pudet sometimes denotes the person before whom, or in whose presence, the shame is felt. Cf. Hec. 793, Ad. 683. See Rohy 1328. et miseret, qui, etc., "and I am sorry that he who used to keep harping to me on the ways of these women warned me in vain, and that he was not able ever to get me away from her." cantabat: suggestive of constant and wearisome repetition; like Shakespeare's "still harping on my daughter." Cf. Gk. δυνέν, and Plaut. Trin. 287.

262. faciam: i. e. I will withdraw myself from her. gratum: here of the act that wins gratitude; "when it might have been gracious in me."

264. amorem: i. e. Antiphila. atque, "than"; see A. & G. 324. c.

266. Cf. n. on 574. eāpsē: old form = (eā)ipsā; see on Hec. 778.

268. suspicarier: on And. 203 (ludier).
269. huius: i. e. Antiphila. Scan huius. rerum, "circumstances."
270. antehac: on And. 187.
271. alterae: colloquial for alteri, which might be taken to refer to Dromo, whereas the reference is to Bacchis. See on And. 608. Cf. Phorm. 928.
272. quae namst altera: Clitipho is taken by surprise. He is not aware that Bacchis is in the company.
273. enarrem, "I'd better finish telling"; subj. of obligation or propriety (see Elmer in A. J. P. xv. 317 ff.; Class. Rev. xii. p. 202). Bennett calls it subj. of determined resolution, "I'm hound to tell" (see B. App. 358. b.).
278. foribus obdit pessulum, "holts the door." pessulus was a bolt which was fastened without the aid of a key. Cf. Eun. 603.
281. est interuentum, "we interrupted." mulieri, "her." Cf. n. on 231.
284. ingenium: acc. See on And. 377.

288. ornatam: sc. offendimus. ornantur sibi, "dress to please themselves," i. e. not to please admirers.
289. mala re, "cunning device," such as rouge, paint, powder, etc. Cf. Phorm. 105-107. interpolatam, "beautified"; see App.
- 290-1. "Her hair was let fall in its abundance, and was tossed back carelessly around the head." passus (from pando) indicates that no attempt was made to bind up the hair — an idea assisted by prolixe, which suggests also that the hair was long and plentiful.
291. pax: an interjection, "enough"; cf. 717.
292. ne . . . conicias: in reality a final cl., implying an ellipsis, as in And. 704, 706, where see notes.
294. pannis obsita, "covered with rags"; cf. Eun. 236.
295. inmundia: nominative.
297. hanc: i. e. the ancillula in 293. quam: rel. sordidatam, "in mean attire." horridam, "unkempt," "untidy," with a refer. to inmundia inluuie in 295.
298. hoc takes up hanc . . . horridam, with a change in the constr. dominam esse extra noxiam, "that the mistress is beyond reproach," depends on signum.
299. negleguntur: i. e. by those ad dominas qui adfectant uiam (301). internuntii, "her go-betweens," i. e. those who do her errands; masc. instead of fem., because a class is referred to. The pl. is general, as in the words eis, ancillas, dominas in 300-301.

300. disciplina, "system," "regular way." eis: antec. of qui (301). demunerarier: on the subject of tips see Juv. iii. 183–189; Hor. Sat. 1. 9. 57; Plaut. Asin. 162 ff., Men. 541 ff.
302. caue: on And. 403.
- 302–3. gratiā inire, "curry favour"; cf. Ad. 914; n. on Hec. 795.
306. opplet, "fills," "suffuses."
308. prae: on And. 825.
309. scibam: on And. 38.
310. uicissim: said in allusion to Syrus' promised explanation; see 273–274. altera: cf. 272.
314. For the thought cf. Hor. Sat. 1. 9. 59–60 nil sine magno uita labore dedit mortalibus. Note the slave's grandiose manner.
315. in mea uita, "at the expense of my happiness"; lit. "on my life." Clitipho's life depends on his love, and it is on the latter that the experiment is to be tried by Syrus. is quaesitum, "are you going to seek?" Cf. n. on And. 134.
316. ubl, "(in a matter) where." te fugerit, "shall have eluded your caution," "shall have slipped your memory."
317. quid illo facias: addressed to Clinia. Cf. 333. See on And. 143.
318. malum: acc. of excl.; often used interjectionally in angry questions. Transl. "the plague on it!" "the mischief!" Cf. Eun. 780; Phorm. 723, 948; Ad. 544, 557. ambages, "long story," "rigmarole."
320. multimodis: on And. 939. iniurius, "unfair."
321. potis es: on And. 437.
322. illi: i. e. Bacchis. effici, "to be made up"; said of a sum of money.

324. contingere, "happen"; often with dat. of pers.; here absol.
325. haec: sc. pericula (from 323). illis: i. e. the blessings as enumerated in 322.
326. condicionum: cf. n. on And. 79. Transl. "alternatives."
328. copia, "opportunity."
329. eadem hac uia refers to the consilium of 327.
332. cedo: on And. 150.
334. haec: sc. amica. dedecori est parum, "is not disgrace enough." For parum cf. 924, and minus in 259.
335. eo, "thither," i. e. ad matrem.
336. uerā causast, "there is a good reason." fabulae: on And. 224.
340. huic: i. e. Bacchis. dīcam ut, etc., "I'll tell her that she must, etc."

344. uerum age modo, "but do you just do (as I bid you)." uoles, "you will wish it," i. e. that my first suggestion had been carried out.

345. datur: the subject is quod boni (343). nescias, "you can't know," "you can't tell." The object is the disjunctive question in 347. For the potential cf. B. App. 366. a.

346. istuc: the thing Syrus has threatened to do (in 340). Syrus turns to go.

347. eius (obj. gen.) refers to quod boni (343).

348. uerum . . est: addressed to Clinia. heus: on And. 635.

349. concaluit: said aside. Clitipho's love for Bacchis has caused him to warm up to the point of consenting to Syrus' plan, although he fears the possible consequences of her being passed off as Clinia's mistress. The warmth of his affection has overcome the chill of fear.

350. "Presently you 'll tell me that this also fails to please you." Syrus pretends to feel irritation at being recalled. hoc = Syrus' return. immo, "on the contrary."

353. te: see App.

354. istic, "there," "in that matter." mea res, "my interests." minor agatur, "were less at stake."

355. hic, "here," "in this matter."

356. huic homini: on And. 310 (hic). For the thought cf. 949 f., Phorm. 219-220.

357. ne utiquam: on And. 330. neclectu: pred. dative. This form of the dat. is found also in Plautus, Lucretius, Cicero, Sallust, and Vergil. Another instance in this play occurs in 639 (anu), according to the reading of the Codex Beobinus; see Engelbrecht, Studia Terent., p. 21, § 3. Cf. Ad. 63.

358. istunc: i. e. Clinia. scilicet = scire licet; cf. n. on 856.

359. rediit: on 113.

360. necessus: on And. 372. merito te amo, "I have good reason now to love you." This and amo te (Phorm. 54) are colloquial, and in reality mean nothing more than "I thank you." So si me amas = "if you please." The verb love is similarly employed by Shakespeare and Sheridan. Cf. King Lear, Act 4, Sc. 5: "I'll love thee much, let me unseal the letter," and The Rivals: "Let me bring him down at a long shot, a long shot, Sir Lucius, if you love me." Cf. 404, 825; Eun. 186, Ad. 946.

361. uerum illa ne quid titubet, "but (see) that she makes no mistake." Understand either uide or caue before ne. Cf. Plaut. Pseud. 942 at uide, ne titubes; Hor. Ep. 1. 13. 19 uale : caue ne titubes mandataque frangas. Cf. also Heaut. 369. illa: i. e. Bacchis.

362. qui, "how"; on And. 53.

363. persuadere illi, "induce her (to come with you)." quos, "what lovers!" That is, considering what wealthy and serious lovers she is wont to scorn.

365. misere, "piteously"; with orantem (366). offendi: on 285.

366. arte, "skilfully"; cf. astu (Eun. 924).

367. inopia, "through want of her," i. e. "through her refusal," "denial."

368. eademque: sc. opera; "and at the same time"; abl. of manner (Roby, 1287). hoc, "this" (i. e. her conduct toward the soldier), is subject of esset.

369. sis (= si uis), "if you please," is generally subjoined to an imv., though sometimes placed before it, as in Ad. 766. quid ruas, "make any rash move"; lit., "rush headlong at all." Clitipho is impetuous, and Syrus fears that he may upset everything by some imprudent act. Cf. n. on Ad. 319.

371. inpotens: on And. 879.

372. Syrus cautions Clitipho against the use of ambiguous phrases, side glances, sighs, hemmings, coughs, and smiles. These things will not escape the observation of his keen-sighted father (370).

373. abstine, "hold back," "keep to yourself," "suppress."

374. tutimet (= tu-te-met), "you yourself."

379. saltem salutare, "at least to say 'how do you do.' " See App.

380. istic (= iste + ce as illic = ille + ce often); the reference is to Clinia. Clitipho retires, leaving Clinia and Syrus to receive Bacchis and Antiphila.

ACT II. SCENE 4.

Bacchis discourses to Antiphila on the superior happiness of those women, who, like Antiphila, have made it a principle to be faithful to one lover. Subsequently Clinia is recognized by Antiphila, and an affectionate greeting takes place.

The contrast in character between the self-seeking and commonplace Bacchis, and the tender, self-denying Antiphila, is one of Terence's best strokes, and points to an important distinction in the social relations of the Greeks — the distinction between the class of meretrices, represented by Bacchis, and the amica pro uxore, or wife in all but the name, presented to us in the person of Antiphila. The future conduct and destiny of these two characters is already suggested in the manner of their first presentation to the audience.

381. edepol: on And. 229.

382. isti: not an old form of the gen., as claimed by Ritschl, but a nom.

in agreement with mores. See Engelbrecht, Studia Terent., pp. 37-38. formae, "beauty." mores, "character."

384. indicio: pred. dat. Menander's original line is quoted by the scholiast of the Codex Beibinus: ἀνδρὸς χαρακτῆρος ἐκ λόγου γνωρίζεται.

386. uostrarum: occasionally for uostrum, as nostrarum for nostrum in Eun. 678. uolgus, "the common crowd (of lovers)." quae ab se segregant, "(those women, that is) who keep from them."

390. alio, "elsewhere," "to another."

391. nisi si, "unless indeed."

393. uostrum: by brachylogy for uostrum moris. The stock example is κόμαι χαρίτεσσιν δμοῖαι, "hair like (the hair of) the Graces." ei . . . adpliant: the pl. is natural in view of the indefinite or generalizing character of the rel. clause. ei = "lovers such as these."

394. utrique ab utrisque: the pl. because of ei adpliant. Hence the reference is to the two sets of lovers. The singular would signify two individual lovers, such as Clinia and Antiphila. Transl. "each by the other."

396. nescio alias, "I don't know about other women." Cf. 1038 deos nescio.

397. Cf. And. 627-628.

400. tui: the gen. with cereo is not found elsewhere in Ter. The acc. occurs in Eun. 223. Cf. 869, where the gen. is found with a verb of fulness.

401. See on And. 245. hocin . . . ingenium: sc. Antiphilae.

402. esse habitum, "to have been esteemed"; hence, "so far as I have observed your father's reputation." diu etiam, "for a long time to come." The temp. etiam is reinforced by diu; see Kirk in A. J. P. xviii. p. 34. duras dabit: sc. partis; "he'll give you a hard rôle (to play)."

404. amabo, "pray!" "please!" Cf. n. on 360 and Ellis on Catullus, xxxii. 1.

408. exoptatam: on And. Prol. 20. See App.

409. intro refers to the house of Chremes, where dinner is waiting. The time is evening, and the feast of the Dionysia (162) has yet to be celebrated. In addition to Phania, a special guest (169), there are now in Chremes' house the following persons: Chremes, his wife Sostrata, his son Clitipho, Syrus, Bacchis, Antiphila, and Clinia, whose return has not yet been made known to his father, Menedemus.

ACT III. SCENE 1.

The scene begins with dawn of the morning that follows the first day of the play. Chremes comes to tell Menedemus of Clinia's return, and advises Menedemus not to allow Clinia to discover how eager he is to grant his son the fullest possible indulgence. Menedemus is partly influenced by this advice, and Chremes departs, after having promised to hasten arrangements for an interview between father and son.

Although a night has elapsed since the action of the last scene, the play is continued without break, or if an interval occurs between the two acts it is brief and is filled up by simple music. Chremes enters the stage from the doorway of his house.

410. luciscit hoc iam, "it is beginning to grow light here now." hoc is nom.; cf. Palmer on Plaut. Amph. 543 lucescit hoc iam. Yet the verb is practically impers., like aduesperascit, pluit, and the like. Gray considers hoc acc. It is said with a sweep of the hand. Cf. Plaut. Curec. 182.

415. quom, "notwithstanding," "although"; see B. 309. illi: i. e. Clinia.

416. quod: restrictive, "so far as." It is an acc. of extent of space.

419. senibus = amicis et aequalibus.

420. The door of the house of Menedemus now opens and Menedemus himself steps upon the stage. The sentiment expressed in this vs. is much the same as that which the old man, Demea, utters in Ad. 545.

422. diem : χρόνος, i. e. "time," in general. homitibus : dative.

423. augescit magis : for the pleonasm cf. Hec. 337.

425. magis : final s is slurred twice in this vs. Cf. Introd. § 92.

429. num, which expects the answer, 'no,' indicates that Menedemus does not dare to hope for an answer in the affirmative; "you have not heard anything, have you?" nam : corroborative, "assuredly."

433. etiam : on And. 116.

435. etiam adacta, "still further increased." etiam is intensive. See Kirk in A. J. P. xviii. p. 30.

436. ut essem, "how I was," i. e. how I longed for his return.

437. istuc . . . consulis : acc. of inner object, "you are adopting this plan." Transl. "this is the worst possible counsel (policy) that you are adopting with reference to yourself and him."

439. non possum, "I cannot," i. e. adopt harsh measures.

441. nimia : with both nouns. Menedemus is ever ready to go to extremes. Chremes is more even tempered and complacent.

442. fraudem : on And. 911. ex illa : sc. re.

446. ingratiis, "against her will." Chremes imagines that Bacchis is the object of Clinia's affection.

450. "How finely fitted out for destruction she is at this moment."

452. satrapa, "nabob"; used here, like the word rex, to signify a rich person. The governors of the provinces of the Persian Empire were persons of wealth. The Gk. is σατράπης. For the Latin ending cf. poeta from ποιητής, trapessita from τραπεζίτης.

454. nendum tu possis, "much less could you"; see G. 482. 5. R. 2. sit : on And. 282.

455. sensi, "I have felt it (to my sorrow)" ; thus often in Plaut. and Ter. It is a stronger word than uidi, which Chremes might have used here.

456. actum siet : on And. 465.

457. pytissando : a Gk. word, πυτίζειν, "to spit." Bacchis tastes the wine but does not swallow it. For this habit cf. Juv. xi. 175. As Gk. ς is generally represented in Latin by double s, the form pytisando of the MSS. is probably incorrect.

458. quid = quantum ; see Fay in Class. Rev., vol. xii. p. 297. sic hoc, "so so, this." Cf. 523, Phorm. 145, And. 804.

459. pater is suggestive of Bacchis' familiar manner; "old man," "old fellow." aliud : sc. uinum. sodes : on And. 85. uide, "provide."

460. releui, "I broached," i. e. removed the pitch with which the mouths of the wine-casks were closed as with a seal. Cf. Hor. Od. 3. 8. 9. ff. serias : smaller than the dolia; "jars."

461. omnis sollicitos habuit, "she (Bacchis) had everybody in a state of excitement."

462. te : abl. ; see on And. 143.

467. permagni re ferre, "to be of very great importance."

468. ut ne, etc. : unusual after referre + genitive, but the force of sic facere is felt in what follows, making the sense = 'it's important to see to it that, etc.'

470. ut des denotes purpose, and follows falli te sinas ; "let yourself be deceived by tricks through (the agency of) your little slave, that you may give it through any other person (rather than yourself)."

471. techina is the Latinized form of the Gk. τέχνη. For the i cf. n. on And. 451.

472. illos : i. e. the slaves. ibi, "there" = "at it." Cf. 983 and 1063.

473. illo uostro : i. e. Dromo. The verbs are plural because Syrus cum illo uostro = Syrus et ille uoster.

475. talentum = 60 minae ; the mina = 100 drachmae.

476. illud : sc. agitur.

478. tuom animum, "your feelings"; explained by the two vss. following.

481. fenestram : we say "door," or "gateway." nequitiem : archaic for nequitiam ; see on Ad. 267.

482. "And for you moreover how unpleasant would it be to live."

484-5. See App.

484. quod . . . quomque, "whatever"; tmesis.

486. ipsum : i. e. Clinia.

487. dare denegaris, "you will refuse to give to him"; a prediction substituted for a formal protasis. Cf. Eun. 252; Juv. iii. 100.

488. qul, "whereby." See on And. Prol. 6.

492. qui, "how"; on And. Prol. 6.
 496. facere: sc. uelo te.
 502. continuo, etc., "I'll be here directly." Cf. n. on And. 594. See App. di uostram fidem: on And. 716.
 503. See on And. 245.
 506. nimio: with gaudio, rather than (as an adv.) with praepediti. aegritudine: sc. nimia.
 510. domum: i. e. of Menedemus. 511 congruisse: see App.

ACT III. SCENE 2.

Syrus comes out of Chremes' house, revolving in his mind a plan for getting money out of his master. Chremes, who overhears him as he talks to himself, imagines that he is plotting against Menedemus. Accordingly Chremes encourages the slave in his designs, in pursuance of the agreement already existing between himself and Menedemus. Syrus is ready enough to be thus encouraged, and chuckles to think how little Chremes appreciates the true situation.

512. circumcursa: Syrus addresses himself, or, possibly, the money which he imagines to be running away from him; cf. fugitiuom argentum (678). tamen: on And. 94.

513. argentum: i. e. which Syrus has promised Clitipho to secure for Bacchis. Cf. 329–330. senem: i. e. Chremes, from whom Syrus plans to obtain the money by a trick. Chremes thinks the word refers to Menedemus.

514. hosce: particularly the slaves Syrus and Dromo, whom Chremes had suspected of forming a plot to deceive Menedemus — a suspicion already communicated to Menedemus by Chremes (471–474).

515. adulescentis: i. e. Clinia. See App. seruos: i. e. Dromo. Chremes is endeavouring to account for the fact that Syrus is alone in the present plot, for according to 473 he and Dromo ought to be working together.

516. prouincia, "task"; more lit. "department." Cf. Phorm. 72.

517. num nam: cf. n. on And. 591.

518. quid tu istic: sc. agis; "what are you up to there?" recte equidem, "oh, I'm doing very well," "I'm all right"; said as though Chremes had asked after his health.

519. tam mane: on 67. nil nimis: sc. bibi.

520. quod dici solet, "as the saying is."

521. aqilae senectus: ἀετοῦ γῆπας; proverbial for a lusty, hearty old age. This, of course, is a compliment, though tinged with impertinence. heia: said deprecatingly, if not forbiddingly. commoda: said of one who observes the proprieties; "proper," "nice," "agreeable." Contrast 456–461 and note the slave's irony ('nerve'), which, however, is lost on Chremes.

522. faceta, "well-bred," "polite." sane, "no doubt," "certainly"; said in a half-hearted tone, if not with real irony.

523. et quidem, "and moreover." forma luculenta, "of superior beauty." sic satis, "quite so," "well enough."

524. "Oh! of course, not as women were in the olden time (olim), but as they are now-a-days, (she is) certainly handsome." The undercurrent of impertinence in the slave's talk would have amused the audience.

525. hanc . . . deperit, "is dying (of love) for her."

526. aridum, "stingy," lit. "dry"; cf. Plaut. Aul. 297 pumex non aequest aridus quam hic est senex.

527. uicinum hunc, "our neighbour here."

529. quid ego ni sciam, "of course, I am aware of it." For the separation of quid . . . ni cf. Ad. 662; Plaut. Amph. 434 quid ego ni negem? See n. on And. 315.

530. hominem: on And. 589 (consilium). pistrino: on And. 600.

531. male: intensive; cf. Hec. 337. Syrus is speaking aside.

532. qui: the antecedent is seruolum (530), i. e. Dromo.

533. For the subjunctives see on And. 793, Phorm. 297.

535. inuitum, "in spite of himself," "against his will."

536. facta: sc. esse. See on And. 239.

537. in loco, "at the right time." Cf. Ad. 216, 827, 994.

538. quippe qui, "in as much as." qui is the locative of the indef. pron., and is attached to quippe as an enclitic for the sake of emphasis. Cf. at-qui, hercle qui, ecastor qui, edepol qui in Plautus. The subject of est (539) is id. If qui were relative and subject of the verb, we should expect sit instead of est.

539. id: i. e. eros fallere.

540. uel: on And. 489.

542. nisi, etc., "only (I do know) he certainly gives me encouragement to feel better pleased (with my plan)"; for his plan cf. 512–513. For nisi cf. n. on And. 664.

543. quid exspectat, "what is he waiting for?" The refer. is to Dromo. an dum, etc., "is he waiting until, etc.?" hic: i. e. Clinia.

544. quom: causal. ille: i. e. Menedemus. huius: i. e. Bacchis, Clinia's supposed mistress.

545. ad, "in reference to," or ironically "for the benefit of." fingit: sc. Dromo.

549. tanto mellor: sc. es; see on And. 702 (fortis). Chremes is ironical. non est mentiri meum, "it is not my fashion to lie," and therefore when I say that I am skilled in trickery, you should believe me. Cf. 782.

550. dum: intensive, as in 229 (see n.).

551. quid: not the object of faciat (552), as some editors make it, but the subject of euenerit. The object of faciat is easily supplied.

553. non usus ueniet, "there will be no need." See on 80. Cf. 556, 557.

554. quo . . . senserim, "because I have noticed him doing anything of the sort"; sc. huius simile facere. For quo see G. 541. Note 2.

555. sed: sc. dico; "but I say so." si quid: sc. huius simile fecerit; "in case he shall do anything of the kind." ne quid. sc. suscenseas or grauius decernas.

556. ne: on And. 324.

558. istuc age, "attend to your business," i. e. the task I have assigned to you. Chremes goes into his house.

559. numquam . . . umquam: on And. 178.

560. "And never (did I hear him) when I thought it was allowed me to play the rogue with greater freedom."

ACT III. SCENE 3.

Chremes comes out of his house, accompanied by Clitipho, who has been discovered by his father to be on intimate terms with Bacchis (Clinia's reputed sweetheart). This apparent treachery on Clitipho's part is the occasion of Chremes' indignation expressed in 562, and bids fair to reveal the truth which Syrus is anxious to keep secret. Accordingly Syrus comes to the rescue, unites with Chremes in rebuking Clitipho, and succeeds in having the latter removed from the scene of action (590). Syrus then explains to Chremes his plan to cheat Menedemus — a plan really intended to obtain money for Clitipho.

562. quid: sc. est.

564. acta . . . est: said aside; see on 456.

565. illi: i. e. Clinia.

566. contumelia: ὅθπις; stronger than iniuria.

568. uel: on 540.

570. amantis: see App. animum, etc., "they take serious notice of things which you would not think (they observe)."

571. nil istius, "nothing of the kind"; part. gen. Cf. 961.

572. ut: sc. moneo; or else the subj. is optative in character, and ut = utinam. See G. 261; A. & G. 442. a. eorum: i. e. Clinia and Bacchis.

573. fert, "suggests."

574. de . . . coniecturam, "I infer it from my own experience." Cf. 266; And. 512; Ad. 822.

575. omniā: See Introd. § 91.

576. dignitas, "his rank." pudet: sc. me.

577. quod . . . credito, "and be sure this is the case with him," i. e. with Clinia. Chremes means that Clinia is ashamed to show his affection for Bacchis when Clitipho is present.

578. ut quomque, etc., "howsoever and wheresoever there is need to humour him." Chremes' fondness for giving advice is well exemplified in 572-578.

579. Chremes now thinks that Syrus is upbraiding Clitipho for his intimacy with Bacchis, but Clitipho quite understands that Syrus fears a disclosure of the plot. Syrus' words accordingly have a double meaning. haec, etc., "is this the teaching I give you?" Syrus uses the language of a paedagogus.

580. functu's officium: on 66. Cf. Phorm. 282 and 413 n. tace sodes, "keep quiet, will you." Clitipho is irritated by Syrus' irony.

581. recte sane are the concluding words of Syrus' ironical remark in 580. pudet me, "I am ashamed," i. e. of my son's behaviour.

582. perdis: sc. me. uerum, "true."

584. Said aside. Syrus is in despair lest Chremes discover the plot.

585. auscultare (with dat.) = "to take the advice of," "be persuaded by."

588. istac: sc. via. istorsum, "in that direction"; cf. Eun. 305 quorsum. quouis, "whither you will."

589. eradicent: on And. 761.

591. censen uero takes up Chremes' previous remark; "you think so, don't you?"

592. quantum: on And. 207.

595. quid tu serves to change the subject. Chremes now asks Syrus whether he has done anything about the matter discussed in the previous scene. See esp. 545-547.

597. est: sc. mihi. quandam: sc. fallaciam.

598. ut, "as." Transl. "but in the natural sequence of events."

599. peſſuma, "very shrewd." immo si ſcias, "nay, if you did but know."

601. huiſ, "to her," i. e. to the anus Corinthia. drachumarum may be loosely rendered "francs." See App. The gen. is partitive with mille which is here a substantive. haec: i. e. Bacchis. mutuom, "as a loan."

602. ea: i. e. the anus Corinthia. filiam: i. e. Antiphila.

603. ea: sc. flia. huiſ: i. e. Bacchis. arraboni, "as security"; pred. dat. Cf. Plaut. Most. 918 quod iſti dedimus arraboni.

604. hanc: i. e. Antiphila. adduxit: sc. Bacchis. ea quae est, etc., "the one who is," etc., explains hanc. We should expect eam. As it is, the sentence is parenthetical, "she it is who," etc.

605. id, "that sum of money." illam (i. e. Antiphila); object of daturam. illi: i. e. Clinia.

606. post: i. e. after she has received the money. daturam: sc. se (i. e. Bacchis). mille: substantive, as in 601. nummum (= nummorum); equivalent to drachumarum. Cf. 601. The sum, which equals ten minae, is not large in consideration of the security offered; for the price of an ordinary slave might be anywhere between twenty and sixty minae. See Ad. 191. et possit quidem: sc. effici; "and this could be done, could it?" The change from MSS. poscit seems unnecessary; "and she demands (so big a sum), does she?"

609. in ea, "in her," i. e. in her purchase from Bacchis. Her wealthy relatives would pay a large ransom for her.

611. optata loquere (= loqueris); "well said," more lit. "you say just what I wanted." Syrus is not pleased. He makes a counter-stroke by telling Chremes that he looks for a refusal from Menedemus. Chremes is puzzled accordingly, and our inference is that Syrus means to get the money from Chremes himself.

612. non opus est: the subj. might be expected; see on And. 282.

613. mānē mānē: the first iambic word is shortened in its final syllable, owing to the position of its accent. Cf. 977.

ACT III. SCENE 4. [IV. 1.]

Sostrata, wife of Chremes, comes out of Chremes' house. In her company is the old nurse. Sostrata is greatly excited because she thinks she has recognized a certain ring worn by Antiphila. This is the beginning of the ἀναγνώσις, dénouement. If the ring is the same as that which she once ordered to be placed with her infant daughter when the latter was 'exposed,' then Antiphila is that daughter. For the use of a ring to effect a recognition (a common dramatic device) cf. the Orculio and the Epidicus of Plautus.

616. illico modifies dixi. The nurse declares that she recognized the ring the instant it was brought to her notice.

617. ut: ac. uide, and cf. n. on 572 (ut). Transl. "but be sure that you have sufficiently examined it now."

620. non temere est, "it's not by accident," "it's not for nothing." Cf. Eun. 291.

621. ne: on And. 324.

623. edictum: Chremes had ordered his infant daughter to be 'exposed.'

625. haec purgatio, "this attempt at justification," "this apology." Syrus says in effect, 'qui s'excuse s'accuse.'

627. noile: sc. te. tolli: on And. 219, 401.

628. domna: abl. Chremes' newly found daughter would be a new mistress for Syrus; to her father she would be a dead loss, as he would be obliged to support her and provide her with a dowry at her marriage.

damno: notice the alliteration, paronomasia, chiaastic arrangement, and the oxymoron in the use of damno auctus here. Syrus is speaking aside.

632. equidem emphasizes id not ego; "of that in fact I am quite sure."

635. interemptam: sc. esse; transl. "she (the child) ought to have been put to death." See on And. 239. Cf. Heaut. 200, 247, 536.

636. simulare and dare are governed by oportuit. reapse, "in reality," is contrasted with uerbis.

638. quod uoluisti furnishes the subject of prospectumst.

639. This vs. and the next explain more or less ironically what is in Chremes' mind as he gives utterance to vs. 638. Trausl. "why, it's quite obvious that your daughter was handed over to the mercy of that old woman, that for anything you cared she might make her living (as a courtesan) or be openly sold (as a slave)."

642. sciunt: pregnant; "know," and so "have a care for." Cf. Ad. 503 noscere.

643. "Whether a thing is better or worse, whether it be advantageous or the reverse, they see naught but their own desires." The asyndeton is characteristic of everyday speech.

644. uincor, "I am convinced." Cf. Phorm. 501.

645. "In proportion as your mind is more serious [because of your age] (than mine), to that extent he the more considerate." See App.

646. "That there may be some protection for my foolishness in your (sense of) justice."

647. scilicet: cf. n. on And. 950.

650. religiosae, "full of scruples." See on 228. Illi: sc. anui.

652. expers partis . . . de, "without a share in." Sostrata's weakness consisted in too scrupulous a regard for the sentiment prevalent among the Greeks that no child should be wholly deprived of its right to an inheritance.

658. nisi: see on And. 664.

659. si potis est reperiri: on And. 437; "if it can be ascertained." interii: the discovery that Antiphila is Chremes' daughter is an insuperable obstacle to the success of Syrus' plans, since she can no longer be held as security for a debt, now that she is known to be an Attic citizen. Cf. Ad. 193. spei: a monosyllable. See Engelbrecht, Studia Terent., p. 15.

660. nostra est, "she belongs to our family." illa: i. e. the anus Corinthia; see 629.

661. olim, "at the time"; see on 448.

662. Philterae: dat., through attraction to mulieri.

663. mirum ni: on And. 598.

665. ut olim: sc. fuisti. in, "in the matter of." tollendo: on And. 219.

667. ita . . . fert . . . ut, "the circumstances incline me to." minus: sc. cupui.

ACT III. SCENE 5. [IV. 2.]

668. Syrus, who has been watching Sostrata intently ever since her appearance on the stage, now opens his soliloquy with a repetition of the very words with which she had opened the previous scene.

669. in angustum, "into a narrow pass." Cf. Plaut. Mil. 218-30 for an elaborate instance of military metaphor. oppido: on Ad. 322.

670. "Unless I hit upon something to prevent the old man from finding out that this (Bacchis) is his son's mistress."

671. "As for being hopeful about the money or thinking that I might trick him, there is nothing in it." Cf. n. on And. 395.

672. latere tecto, "with my ribs covered," i. e. "with my skin intact." The reference is to a possible flogging. The phrase is also a military one and may be taken as continuing the metaphor in 669. Hence we might render, "with my flank well covered (protected)," or "without exposing my flank."

673. bolum: a throw with a casting-net, βόλος; then the thing caught, as βόλος ιχθύων = "a draught of fishes" (Æsch. Persae, 424). Hence a "haul" in a metaphorical sense, "piece of luck," "choice morsel." tantum: with bolum. desubito: cf. Hec. 518, 554 derepente.

675. possiet: on And. 234 (siet).

677. non potest: impers.; "it won't do." immo optume, "nay, capital!" euge: on And. 345. optumam: sc. rationem.

678. ad me: with retraham. tamen: on And. 94.

ACT III. SCENE 6. [IV. 3.]

Clinia has heard that Antiphila is the long-lost daughter of Chremes, and he enters the stage in a state of wild excitement and delight at the prospect of a speedy union with her, and of a reconciliation with his father, Menedemus. But Syrus curbs his ecstasy, and makes certain unwelcome suggestions which promise to retard his marriage.

681. frugalior: comparative of frugi; "more exemplary."

683. ex sententia tua, "according to your desire," "to your liking." For ex = "in accordance with", cf. 765; Ad. 871, 420; Hec. 872; Phorm. 256; Plaut. Capt. 997 ex suis uirtutibus; and the expressions ex more, ex lege, ex tuis uerbis, ex usu suo, etc.

685. aeque commode, "quite so conveniently."

690. ne quid: sc. resciscat. amica: i. e. Bacchis. senex: i. e. Chremes.

692. fer me, "bear with me." Cf. Hec. 610.

693. Cf. n. on And. 961. apti = adepti. sumo = consumo, "spend," "waste."

694. hoc . . . agis: on And. 186.
702. quid ais: on And. 137. Clinia's astonishment is profound.
703. illam: i. e. Antiphila. hanc: i. e. Bacchis.
704. Said in bitter irony.
706. recta uia: on And. 600.
707. ēs: thus often in Plaut. and Ter., but in the class. period regularly
ēs. illum: i. e. Clitipho. satin: on And. 749.
708. See App.
709. hic, "here," i. e. on this plan. me ecfero, "I plume myself."
711. ambos: this is not exact, for Menedemus will not be deceived, except through Chremes later on (849 ff.). quom, "although."
712. istam: i. e. Bacchis. gnati: i. e. Clitipho.
713. It is necessary to the realization of Clinia's hopes that Chremes should learn the truth regarding Bacchis.
714. hanc: i. e. Bacchis. filiam: i. e. Antiphila.
715. fors: on And. 957. See App. quid me fiat: on And. 143. illi: i. e. Clitipho.
716. malum: on 318. aetatem, "for a life-time"; acc. of duration. Cf. Hec. 747, Eun. 734. id adsimularier, "that this pretence be kept up," viz., that Bacchis belongs to Clinia. For the form see on And. 203.
717. pax: on 291.
718. tantum sat habes, "do you think that enough?" pater, "his father."
719. quid . . . ruat, "what if the sky should fall?" The Gk. was τι εἰ οὐπαύδες ἐκπέσοι. Such a contingency would be ruinous indeed, but is so unlikely that to take it into one's calculations is to be guilty of an absurdity.
722. traducatur: i. e. from the house of Chremes to that of Menedemus.

ACT III. SCENE 7. [IV. 4.]

As Bacchis comes out of the house of Chremes, in conversation with her maid Phrygia, she gives expression to her impatience at the fact that Syrus has not yet obtained for her the ten minae which had been promised to her the day before. She threatens to leave him in the lurch by deserting Clitipho and transferring herself to the house of a certain soldier dwelling hard by. Syrus is alarmed, but by renewed assurances regarding the ten minae succeeds in inducing Bacchis to abandon her threat. He persuades her also to remove with her attendants to the house of Menedemus, and thus to further his designs on Chremes.

723. Syri promissa induxerunt = Syrus promissis induxit.
724. decem minas is explanatory of promissa, and has been attracted out of the nom. case into that of the rel. pron. (inverse attraction). Cf. Eun. 658. For the opposite idiom cf. n. on 87.

727. animi: locative (with pendebit). Cf. Ad. 610.
728. tergo poenas pendet: Syrus would get a flogging, and thus Bacchis would be avenged. pendet is said with a punning reference to pendebit.
729. scite: ironical; "neatly," "nicely." Clinia and Syrus have overheard the words of Bacchis, but she is not aware of it.
730. commouebo: on And. 864.
731. Said in a loud voice, that Clinia and Syrus may hear her.
732. Charini, "(as that) of Charinus." fundo: i. e. the farm of Chremes.
733. curriculo: abl. of manner, without an attribute; "at full speed." percurre, "cut across." miles: mentioned in 365. Dionysia: on 162.
734. quid incepitat, "what is she up to?" adseruari, "that I am kept under close watch."
735. uerba . . daturam esse, "that I will give these fellows the slip." Cf. n. on And. 211.
736. mánē, mánē: on 613. Syrus is alarmed. istam, "that girl," i. e. Phrygia.
737. iubē: on And. 403. i: addressed to Phrygia.
738. atqui, "and in fact," is used in adding a thought confirmatory of a preceding one — here of est paratum. num ego insto, "am I pressing (for payment)?" at scin quid: sc. quid sit tibi faciendum.
741. quam inludas: on And. 758. temere: on 620.
742. Bacchis says, "have I business with you still in this matter?" For etiam, see Kirk in A. J. P. vol. xviii. p. 27. tuom: Syrus very sub serviently replies that he is only giving back to her what is really her own. Upon this Bacchis consents to enter the house of Menedemus, and Clinia points out the way.
743. eatur, "let a start be made (then)," "let us go."
745. quae, etc.: i. e. the aurum and uestem of 248.
746. senex is Chremes, not Menedemus. The departure of the women will appear at first to be a gain, but in the end will cost Chremes more money, if Syrus succeeds in his little trick. harunc = harum + ce.
748. Note the oxymoron, and cf. Eun. 722. mutum: sc. me esse. The stage is now left empty, for Syrus goes with Dromo into the house of Chremes to bring over the retinue of Bacchis to the house of Menedemus. Clinia has entered his father's house for the first time since the play began.

ACT IV. SCENE 1. [IV. 5.]

Chremes, who still thinks that Bacchis is Clinia's mistress, is full of compassion for Menedemus, upon whom now so heavy a burden has been laid as the support of Bacchis and her numerous attendants. It is now that Syrus makes his master-stroke. In telling Chremes the truth about Bacchis and Clitipho he leads the old man to believe that Clinia has thus represented the case to Menedemus, in order to make it possible for him (Clinia) to ask the hand of Antiphila in marriage, and in order that, through the betrothal to himself of Chremes' daughter, he may obtain from his father a sum of money ostensibly to defray the expenses of the wedding. This money, however, would (presumably) be given by Clinia to Bacchis. But Chremes, as Syrus suspects, refuses to be a party to any such scheme. Syrus must play his tricks upon Menedemus without making Chremes in any way responsible for the consequences. Syrus thereupon suggests that Chremes should at least requite Bacchis for the loss of her attendant, Antiphila, and pay to her the ten minae for which Antiphila had been given to her as security by the anus Corinthia. See Syrus' story as related in 600 ff. To this arrangement Chremes at last agrees. He even sends the money by Clitipho in order to assist Clinia in keeping up his supposed pretence. Thus Chremes, in aiding, as he imagines, the deception of Menedemus, is himself the real dupe, and Syrus' success is complete.

749-750. Menedemi uicem miseret me, "I am sorry now (lit. "in my turn") for Menedemus." Chremes has had his turn at entertaining Bacchis, and can now well appreciate the situation in which Menedemus has just been placed. uicem is less common in this sense than in-uicem or inuicem. Cf. Liv. 1, 9, 15. Some editors regard uicem here as the acc. obj. of miseret me (= miseror), i. e. "I pity the lot (fate) of M." uicem may be an adv. acc., i. e. a preposition postpositive (= "on account of") with the gen. case.

751. See on And. 245. alere: on And. 870. Cf. Eun. 209, 644. familia: cf. Ad. 89, 910. The slaves are always included.

757. eccum: on And. 532.

759. "You appear already to have had some dealings or other with the old man," i. e. with Menedemus. This remark is evoked by the apparent eagerness of Syrus to see Chremes (757), as well as by the fact that Clinia and Bacchis have suddenly departed from Chremes' house and taken up their abode with Menedemus. Chremes fails as usual to hit the nail on the head.

760. de illo quod dudum, "(you mean) about that matter which a while ago (we were talking of)?" These words refer directly to 545, to which allusion was made also in 595-6. dictum factum reddidi, "I accomplished it at once", more lit., "I rendered it no sooner said than done." Cf. n. on And. 381. Syrus hints that he has worked some trick on Menedemus, but refrains from saying what the trick is.

763. ac lubens, "and that with pleasure." Cf. n. on And. 337 (ac); Ad. 887, 896.

764. scite: on 729. The full significance of Syrus' remark is not perceived by Chremes.

765. uah: on And. 589. ex sententia: on 683.

766. non hercle uero: sc. glorior; “there’s no boasting about it, I assure you.” uerum dico, “it’s the truth I’m telling.”

770. probe, “capital!” dic sodes: “say it (again), if you please.” Syrus pretends not quite to have heard the word of approval. nimilum, inquam, “it’s too good, I say.”

773. conplacitam: on And. 645.

774. cupere: sc. se. modone quae inuentast, “(do you mean) the girl who was recently discovered?”

775. posci, “that she be demanded in marriage.” Cf. 846, f.

776. prorsum, “wholly,” “absolutely”; hence (with nihil), “nothing at all.”

778. qui: abl. of the means. The antec. is argentum (777). Cf. 855. See introductory note to this scene.

779. despondeo: on And. 102.

780. homini: the aposiopesis is noteworthy.

783. istaec tua, “those schemes of yours.”

784. “Can I, possibly, betroth her to a man to whom I do not intend to give her (in marriage)?” The question indicates surprise and indignation. Cf. Phorm. 304, 955; Eun. 771. See on And. 263. -ne is not always found in such questions (cf. Phorm. 669, Heaut. 1050)—which would seem to show that the particle in itself is non-interrog. (cf. Warren in A. J. P. II. 5).

786. hoc: object of coepi. dudum: i. e. in 530–50.

787. eo, “on this account.” istuc, “what you say.”

788. aequi bonique facio, “I acquiesce in.” The phrase aequi bonique is colloquial. It appears also in Ovid, Cicero’s letters, and Livy. The case is locative, as in tanti, quanti and the like, and expresses price or valuation.

790–791. illud quod tibi dixi: i. e. in 600–6.

791. ista: i. e. Antiphila.

792. illi: i. e. Bacchis.

793. quid mea: on Eun. 849. datumst: sc. argentum.

794. illa: i. e. the anus Corinthia. Transl. “could she pledge my daughter without my consent?”

796. The proverb is given by Cicero (De Off. I. § 33) as follows: summum ius summa iniuria, with the comment, factum est iam tritum sermone proverbiū.

797. haud faciam, “I’ll not do that”; with a reference to illuc configies, etc. (793). Hence the words are equivalent to “I’ll pay the money.” si licet: i. e. to make such excuses.

798. “Every body considers you to be in possession of a splendid and well improved property.” See App.

799. deferam: sc. argentum.

802. magis ueri simile, “more natural.”

803. The double meaning in this verse would be apparent to the audience, though not to Chremes. 804. ipse adeo: on And. 415.

ACT IV. SCENE 2. [IV. 6.]

While Chremes is in the house, getting the money, Clitipho returns from his walk, on which he had been sent at 589. He is still angry with Syrus, whose schemes have excluded him from the society of his mistress. But he is quickly appeased on hearing that the money for Bacchis is at hand.

806. quam = sic eam. uel, "for example." deambulatio: on Ad. 766.

807. quam: with dedit; "how it has reduced me to utter weariness, though (iu itself) far from fatiguing."

808. denuo, "again," "a second time."

810. ut = utinam; see A. & G. 442. a. quantumst emphasizes omnes; "all, as many as exist," "all the gods and goddesses together."

811. perduint: on And. 666. The form was archaic even in Terence's time, and confined mostly to this curse.

812. commisniscere: pres. indic. 2nd sing.

813. ubi: for quibus (= ut eis) referring back to res. excarnufices, "torture"; a word made up here for effect. ibin: i. e. ibisne, "away!"

815. uellem . . . factum, "I would it had been so." Cf. n. on 82; Phorm. 787. meritu's = meritus es.

817. quod . . . fui, "which I was just now intending to give you," but no longer intend so to do.

818. adisti mihi manum, "you imposed upon me," "you made sport of me." adire manum is not unfrequently found in Plautus in the sense of "to deceive." Cf. Plaut. Aul. 376 (378) ita illis impuris omnibus adii manum, and Wagner's note.

825. deamo te: on 360.

826. caue, etc., "don't be at all surprised as to why this happens." admiratūs sis: for the scansion see Introd. §§ 92, 93.

827. obsecundato, "humour him." Cf. Ad. 994. in loco: on 537.

ACT IV. SCENE 3. [IV. 7.]

Chremes returns with the money, and hands it to the astonished Clitipho.

829. hic : adv., with ubi. eccum me: on And. 532.

830. pleraque omnia: on And. 55 (plerique omnes).

831. lapis: cf. Shaks. Jul. Cæs. 1. 1. 40: 'you blocks, you stones, you worse than senseless things.'

832. quin accipis: on And. 45. cedo sane, "let me have it, by all means." See on And. 150. ocius: on And. 724.

833. dum: on And. 329. opperibere: fut. indic. = an abrupt inv.

836. pro alimentis, "for her maintenance," "keep."

837. ornamentis: dative; "for her outfit," i. e. for clothes and ornaments. alterae: sc. decem minae; "a second sum (of ten minae)."

838. haec: nom. pl. fem. (sc. uiginti minae); subject of adposunt. See on And. 328. dotis, "by way of dowry." Cf. with this appositional gen. the pred. dat. in 942. talenta duo: cf. 940; see on And. 101.

839. moribus, "in conformity with custom."

840. relictis rebus, "to the neglect of my business"; cf. And. 412.

841. aliquis: i. e. some one to whom he may give his daughter in marriage — a son-in-law.

ACT IV. SCENE 4. [IV. 8.]

Clinia has informed Menedemus that Bacchis is Clitipho's mistress, and that he himself desires to marry Antiphila. Menedemus comes out of his house, full of joy at his son's return and reformation. He asks Chremes to bestow his daughter upon Clinia. Chremes, however, tells Menedemus that he has been imposed upon. The latter is finally persuaded, but prefers to be duped rather than run the risk for the second time of losing his son. Accordingly Chremes complies with his request, and promises Antiphila in marriage.

842-843. Menedemus, as he comes out, turns and speaks to Clinia, who is within.

844. resipisse, "have recovered your senses." See on And. 698.

845. quod: on 416.

849. dictum: i. e. in 470-5 and 495-7.

850. ut, "how"; the cl. is a dependent question explanatory of quid; or else a final cl. depending on fallacia, that is, a trick put in operation that money may be obtained.

855. qui, "wherewith." Cf. 778. See on And. Prol. 6.

857. datum iri (sc. id) depends on scilicet; see on 358. Cf. 892-3.

861. illi: Terentian usage prefers the acc. of the person indulged; cf. 988, Eun. 222.

862. inceptumst, "I have begun to do it." perpetuo, "to the end."

863. dic conuenisse: sc. me, "say that you met me." egisse te, "that you settled (with me)."

865. placere: sc. mihi. etiam is purely additory = "also," and goes with dicito in 866. See Kirk in A. J. P. xviii. p. 31. c. and pp. 36, 37.

866. quoque: with desponsam; "that she has even been betrothed."

868. ne tu propediem, "in good truth you, at an early date."

869. istius obsaturabere, "you'll have your fill of him." For the gen. cf. n. on 400.

872. quid . . . uoles: quid is adverbial; "if you shall want me at all." sane uolo, "indeed I do want you," i. e. I shall want you; pres. for fut., as often. As the two old men enter their respective houses, the stage is left empty as at 748. Since the same two old men reappear as the sole interlocutors in the next scene, it follows that an interval of time must elapse before Act V. This interval probably was filled up by the tibicen; cf. Plaut. Pseud. 573 b, tibicen uos interea hic delectauerit.

ACT V. SCENE 1.

Menedemus has discovered, beyond possibility of doubt, that Bacchis is Clitipho's mistress, and he is now jubilant over the fact that Chremes is in reality a greater dupe than himself. Chremes appears and is reluctantly convinced of the truth. In consequence he becomes very angry, for which Menedemus rebukes him in terms similar to those which Chremes had once addressed to Menedemus. However, Chremes promises Antiphila to Clinia, and vows vengeance on Syrus — which he does not execute.

874. non tam, "not so very."

875. praemonstrator, "director."

877. dicta: substantive; "proverbial sayings," "epithets." caudex, "log." stipes, "stock." asinus: cf. Ad. 935. plumbeus, "dunder-head."

878. potest: sc. conuenire. Chremes' folly passes description.

879. As Chremes steps out of his house he turns and exhorts his wife to cease her endless thanksgiving to the gods. ohe, "enough!" Cf. Hor. Sat. 1. 5. 12 ohe iam satis est! obtundere: on And. 348.

882. illic: i. e. in the house of Menedemus, where Syrus and Clitipho had gone, at vs. 833, to carry the money to Bacchis. cessat: Chremes thinks they should have returned ere this, considering the promise made in 834.

884. quae dixi, "my message," i. e. Chremes' consent to the marriage, which was not given in good faith because of Clinia's supposed intimacy with Bacchis. See 865.

885. adeo . . . quasi, "exactly as," "just as"; cf. Ad. 739 ita . . . quasi, and note.

887. fingit: i. e. Syrus not only invents tricks, but fashions also the very looks of people: makes them appear glad, when they are not. scelus: on And. 317.

888-889. idem . . . mentem: ironical.

889. uetorator: on And. 457. Syrus is "an old hand" at cunning of all sorts, and the fact is a source of great satisfaction to Chremes, so long as the slave's clever tricks are not played upon his master.

889-890. magis . . . esse, "you'd think that to be the fact still more, if you were more fully informed."

892. inieciisse . . . Dromonem depends on scilicet; cf. n. on 358, 856. uerba, "hints."

894. nil prorsum, "nothing of the sort," "not a hit of it."

895. magis unum etiam instare: sc. flium; "rather (I say) that the one point on which he did not cease to lay stress was." etiam is surely temporal here, not additory, though Kirk, in A. J. P. xviii. p. 29, seems to make it the latter.

897. qui, "inasmuch as you." Cf. n. on Ad. 197.

898-899. "But that same Syrus also has (so) skilfully moulded your son (i. e. shaped his conduct) that there cannot exist even a very slight suspicion that this woman is Clinia's mistress." Menedemus rubs it in. finxit ia used with sly reference to uoltus fingit (887). The whole is very ironical.

899. paululum: used adv. with subolat, which is of the 3rd conjugation and a collateral form of suboleo; cf. Phorm. 474.

900. quid agit: spoken aside.

901. uah, "bah!" Cf. n. on And. 589.

904. dictum factum: adverbial; "instantly"; see on And. 381.

907. quid ni: on And. 315.

909. familia, "property," "supplies," ovaria = res familiaris. Chremes ironically exaggerates in order to show his thorough appreciation of Bacchis' character.

910. amico: i. e. Clinia. Menedemus continues to rub it in.

911. amicae: sc. operam dat; a grim jest on the part of Chremes, who is now convinced that Bacchis belongs to Clitipho, not to Clinia. si dat: sc. operam amicae. Menedemus pretends that he is not sure of the actual situation.

913. The aposiopesis has more force than any words. Cf. Eun. 479.

914. quo, "in order that." Menedemus is ironical, and greatly enjoys the situation.

916. "How many circumstances gave me an opportunity of detecting the truth."

918. Inultum . . . ferent: on And. 610.

920. prae: on And. 825.

921. apud me: on And. 408 and 622. tene istuc loqui, "(to think) that you should say that!" i. e. you who have preached self-control to others.

923. foris: lit. "out of doors," i. e. "where your neighbours are concerned," "in all matters but your own."

924. fecisse parum, "had neglected to do"; cf. n. on 259 (minus obsequens).

925. Menedemus now gives back to Chremes the latter's own advice. See 153-156.

928. potius malo: on And. 427. Probably malo is parenthetical; its position (after abeat) supports this view. quouis gentium, "anywhere in the world"; see on Ad. 540, Phorm. 1033.

930. illii: i. e. Clitipho. sumptibus: probably dat.; see Eun. 1076.

931. "For me matters will come that way to the mattock in actual fact"; i. e. I shall be obliged to go to digging for a livelihood. Cf. n. on 113; Phorm. 686.

933. ignoscēs: sc. ei, i. e. Clitipho.

934. et id ingratum, "and that without thanks (from him)." Cf. n. on 262.

938. Chremes' silence is due to a thought on which he is pondering and to which he gives expression in 940-943.

939. Menedemus mistakenly supposes that the amount of the dowry is troubling Chremes. si minus: sc. dixeris. minus = "less than is customary."

940. duo talenta: on 838. Cf. n. on And. 101.

941. ita, "as follows"; explained in 942. dictu: supine; rare as an abl. with opus est.

942. omnia: on 575. doti: on 838 (dotis). illi: i. e. to Antiphila.

943. illum: i. e. Clitipho.

944. uero, "in reality"; with a reference to simulato.

946. difflit: the metaphor is from a river that overflows its banks. retundam, "repress." redigam: sc. eo; "reduce to such a pass." Cf. Eun. 690.

947. gerere mihi morem, "to please myself," "to have my own way." See on And. 641.

948. accersat: on And. 546. paret: sc. Clinia. Menedemus goes into his house to give Chremes' message to Clinia.

949. hic: i. e. Clitipho. liberos: antithetical to Syrum (950) who is not "free." est aequom: sc. confutari. dictis confutabitur, "shall be repressed with a scolding." Cf. Phorm. 477. confutare is lit., "to keep (boiling water) from running over," and here is suited to the metaphor already employed by Chremes in the word difflit (946).

950. egone, "I for my part," "I in sooth"; see on And. 478, 245. exornatum dabo: on And. 683. For the meaning of exornatum here, cf. Ad. 176.

951. depexum, "combed down," "curried," hence "flogged." Cf. Plaut. Capt. 896 fusti pectito.

952. "Who thinks of me as a subject for his derision and as a source for his amusement."

953. uiduae mulieri, "an unprotected woman," i. e. a woman without a legal protector, whether husband or other male guardian; the reference is usually to the former, but uidua does not necessarily imply widowhood.

ACT V. SCENE 2.

Menedemus returns from his house in company with Clitipho and Syrus, who have just learned from him of Chremes' determination to disinherit his son. Chremes justifies himself, on the ground that he is acting for Clitipho's good. Syrus puts in a word of protest, but is snubbed for his pains.

955. de me: with animum patris; "the feelings of a father with regard to me."

957. hoc: i. e. Chremes' determination to disinherit his son.

958. quoi fit, "to whom it happens." haud minus: sc. quam tu id: on 957 (hoc). id qui nescio, "though I do not understand it."

959. nec rationem capio, "nor grasp the reason for it." nisi quod, "only"; on And. 664.

960. eccum: at this point Menedemus retires.

961. huius: on 571. Cf. Eun. 202, 980. The full constr. would be quid-quid est huius quod feci.

962. omisso, "careless"; cf. Ad. 831. The opposite is attentus; cf. Ad. 834.

962-3. et suauia . . . habere, "and that you considered as of first importance the things that were agreeable at the moment." in praesentia: cf. Phorm. 779, Hec. Prol. 24, Ad. 222.

963. neque, etc., "and that you took no thought for the morrow." Cf. And. 548.

964. haec: said with a gesture in the direction of his house; "my property here."

965. quoi decuit: sc. me dare. primo: in agreement with quoi. tibi . . . dare: sc. mea bona; "owing to your conduct I was deprived of the right to bestow my property upon you."

966. ad proximum, etc., "to the nearest relative you possessed." The masc. refers to Clinia, who was about to marry Clitipho's sister. See 942.

967. ibi = apud eum, i. e. at Clinia's house. tuae stultitiae: less blunt than tibi stulto.

968. quo: i. e. (locus) quo, "whither."

970. Said aside.

971. emori, "to die at once"; (with cupio) "would I were dead."

972. istoc: sc. consilio moriendi.

973. tuto: sc. loqui cupio.

974. huic: i. e. Clitipho. illicet = ire licet, "you may go," "be off"; a formula of dismissal. In Phorm. 208 and Eun. 54, it connotes despair.

975. aram: the altar of a god was a place of refuge, where a slave might escape punishment temporarily. Cf. Plaut. Most. 1094 ego interim hanc aram occupabo. Cf. n. on And. 726.

976. precatorem, "an intercessor," upon whose representations to the master of a refractory slave punishment was remitted. Cf. Phorm. 140.

pararis: contracted from paraueris; subj. of obligation or propriety, "you need find," "you are under obligation to find." See my article in P. A. P. A. vol. 32, p. lxxxvii. Perhaps the mood is prohibitive, nec = neue. Thus Gray, and other editors. But this is regular only when nec (neque) carries onward a previous ne-clause — a principle at least implied by G. 260 (p. 172 at the top), and by A. & G. 450. Notes 3, 4, 5.

977. néc tibi nec tibi: the second iambic word is shortened in its final syl.; the first not so. This is determined by the verse-ictus. Cf. n. on 613. By the first tibi Syrus is meant, by the second Clitipho. uos: sc. suscensere. quod facio, “on account of what I am doing.”

Chremes takes his departure, and then, in what is practically another (the 3rd) scene (though only two MSS. of importance, viz. D G, seem to indicate it, and these at 980) Syrus makes a suggestion to Clitipho, on which the latter acts without delay.

978. rogasse uellem, “would I had asked him.”

979. esse: sc. cibum. ad = apud.

980. adeo: on 113. rediisse: on 931, 359. For the infin. see on And. 245. etiam: intensive; “even.” See A. J. P. xviii. pp. 32–33.

983. ibi: on 472.

984. aberit: sc. consilium; transl. “the scheme we want will prove to be not far distant.” For the fut. cf. 668.

985. horum, “those people,” i. e. Chremes and Sostrata.

986. in mentemst: probably an archaic use = in mente est, and not derived by analogy from in mentem uenit. Cf. n. on Ad. 528.

987. istis: i. e. those parents of yours. sola: sc. delectatio; see App. delectatio: sc. fuit. The reference is to Autiphila.

988. te: on 861.

994. “Make inquiry of them with respect to your suspicion.” For the acc. after quaero in this sense cf. Ad. 482.

996. quoius, “whose”; nom. of the adj. Clitipho enters the house. Of course Syrus does not believe Clitipho to be a foundling. But the suggestion may tend to soften Chremes’ anger.

997–8. quam maxume . . . tam facillume: we should expect quo magis . . . eo facilius, for which quam . . . tam with the superlatives is a rare substitute, and occurs elsewhere in Ter. only in Ad. 501–503. Transl. “the more he shall find this fancy to be groundless, the more easily will he patch up peace with his father on his own terms.”

999. etiam: additory. haud scio an: on And. 525.

1000. adhuc quod factumst, “as to what has been done (by me) thus far.”

1001. "I wonder that he has not ordered me to be hurried off (to punishment)." See App. iusse = iussisse; see on Prol. 32.

ACT V. SCENE 3. [4.]

Clitipho has lost no time in letting his mother know that he is disinherited, and that he believes himself to be a foundling. Accordingly Sostrata remonstrates with her husband on his severity. Chremes replies sarcastically, and treats the matter more or less as a joke.

1003. tu homo : on And. 778.

1006. mulier expresses reproach.

1007. quin tu . . . fueris, "without your having been." Cf. 805, 1021; Ad. 294 and n.

1009. in qua re, etc. : these words do not depend on nescias, but refer rather loosely to what precedes nescias; "although in this matter you now so confidently withstand me." restas has the force of resistis; cf. Lucr. 1.

110 nunc ratio nulla est restandi, nulla facultas.

1010. redeat integra, "should be reiterated." Chremes admits his wife's claim to knowledge rather than discuss the question further with her. See App.

1014. subditum, "supposititious," "a changeling." sic erit, "so you will find it to be," with a refer. to suspiciatur, not subditum.

1015. confitere: imv.; "admit it," i. e. that he is a changeling. If confitere be taken as indic., au is without sense here. au: cf. n. on And. 751. istuc inimicis siet, "let that be for your enemies (to say)."

1017. metuis ne, etc. = noli metuere, etc.; i. e. no fear of your failing to prove him to be your own son — he is too like you.

1018. quod filiast inuenta, "(do you mean that I can easily prove that he is my son) because I have been so skilful in finding my daughter?" i. e. because I have accepted such slight evidence — only a ring — as proof of my daughter's identity?

1019. moribus: abl. of specification.

1020. tui similist probe, "he is exactly like yourself."

1021. quin, etc.: on 1007.

1023. quam seuerus, "how grave (proper) he looks." rem . . . censreas, "if one should look at the truth of the matter (i. e. the truth about his conduct with Bacchis), one would (indeed) think him proper"; very sarcastic. quam = si, nearly.

ACT V. SCENE 4. [5.]

Clitipho appeals to his mother to know who are his real parents. His doubts are set at rest, but his past conduct is severely reproved by his father, who succeeds in arousing in him a sincere desire to repent.

1025. uostra uoluntate, "by your joint consent." uostra includes Chremes, while tuos refers only to Sostrata.

1026. eius : sc. temporis.

1027. quod, etc., "with regard to what I demand or (at least) with regard to what I wish"; explained by the following ut-cl. uelo is weaker than peto; the latter might imply that he had some claim.

1029. alienum, "a stranger (to our blood)," "a child of other parents," ἀλλότριον.

1030. ita . . . ut, "so surely . . . as." Sostrata gives to Clitipho the most emphatic assurance of which she is capable. sis: optative subj.

1032. mores istos, "such behaviour."

1033. quos: sc. mores. Clitipho's unwillingness to acknowledge himself in the wrong reasserts itself. Cf. 563.

1033-4. gerro, etc., "a trifler, idler, cheat, glutton, rake, prodigal, art thou: realize all that, and then believe (if thou canst) that thou art our son"; i. e. no roué, such as thou art, can be our son. See App. ganeo's = ganeo es.

1035. Clitipho hints that Chremes could not speak in such terms to his own son. To this Chremes replies that he would not permit Clitipho to disgrace him, even though he himself had given birth to his son (in the only manner conceivable, viz., as Jupiter gave birth to Minerva).

1038. deos nescio: on 396. quod potero: on 416. sedulo: sc. prohibeo. Transl. "I shall do my best."

1039. abest: on And. 848.

1040. ut, "how." labore inuenerit: cf. 841.

1041. Chremes omits probably scortum puduit, the first of these two words being that to which he alludes in uerbum turpe (1042). fallacias: i. e. the "trick" whereby Bacchis was introduced into Chremes' house (ante mihi oculos), in the character of Clinia's mistress.

1042. hac praesente, "in the presence of this lady."

1043. totus, "wholly"; cf. Ad. 589 and n.

1044. ad placandum: sc. eum, i. e. patrem.

ACT V. SCENE 5. [6.]

Menedemus comes out of his house to intercede for Clitipho. Chremes agrees to pardon his son if he will abandon Bacchis and take a wife—a condition to which Clitipho at first demurs, but finally consents. Syrus also is forgiven.

In this last scene the positions of the two old men are completely reversed. As in the first scene Chremes gave advice to Menedemus regarding Clinia, so in this Menedemus becomes the mentor, and interposes on behalf of Clitipho.

1045. Cf. 99–112. Menedemus fears that Chremes is making the same mistake with regard to Clitipho, as that which he (Menedemus) had made in reference to Clinia.

1046. ut pacem concillem, “to bring about a reconciliation.”

1048. quod dotis: cf. 937; n. on 838. dixi: i. e. in 942. firmas, “ratify.”

1050. exorent: on And. 167. mea bona ut dem, etc., depends in thought on exorent. Another view is indicated in n. on 784. The latter is preferable if egon be retained (with Fleckeisen), and possible even if it is not; as “what, I hand over my property to Bacchis as a gift, and that knowingly?” For sciens, cf. n. on Ad. 711.

1052. ne . . . te, “be not so obstinate.” For tam, cf. Ad. 278.

1053. quid istic: on And. 572. Chremes consents.

1054. facis, ut te decet expresses gratitude rather than praise, like bene facis (Ad. 601, 945, 970), and benigne dicis (Phorm. 1051). Cf. n. on 360, and Eun. 186. ea lege, “on this condition.” Cf. n. on And. 200.

1055. hunc: sc. facere.

1056. ducas: sc. impero. ad me recipio, “I take it upon myself,” i. e. I engage that he shall do as you say. recipio is used in this sense in Phorm. 903, but without ad (in) me.

1057. etiam, “yet.” See on And. 116. ipsum: i. e. Clitipho. Chremes wants assurance from the young man.

1058. immo utrum uolt, “nay whichever of the two he prefers,” that let him choose; i. e. let him either abandon Bacchis and take a wife, or submit to the penalty of disinheritance.

1058–9. dum, “while.” The subj. is iterative. See G. 572. R. 1, and esp. 567. Note.

1061. Phanocratae: gen., from nom. Phanocrates.

1062. caesiam: used only of the eyes; lit. “cutting,” “sharp,” like the eyes of a cat, with which the word was associated. Hence, “cat-eyed.” If the derivation from caelum (caeruleus) be accepted, the word may refer to the colour (bluish gray) of a cat’s eyes; hence, “gray-eyed.” This is in keeping with Aulus Gellius (ii. 26. 19). The word occurs only once again in Ter., viz., Hec. 440. sparsō, “freckled.” adunco, “turned up”; cf. Hor. Sat. 1. 6. 5.

1063. elegans, “nice,” “fastidious”; cf. Eun. 566. ibi esse: cf. n. on 472. Transl. “one would suppose he had actually given thought to the matter.”

1065. Archonidi: cf. App. on And. 368, and n. huius, “of our neighbour.”

1067. Cantor: on And. 981. The best MSS. here read ω.

Note that virtue, represented by Clinia and Antiphila, is rewarded, and that vice, depicted in the conduct of Clitipho and Bacchis, is not allowed to prevail. Bacchis, it is presumed, is abandoned to her own devices, as an incorrigible. Clitipho turns over a new leaf, and is permitted to choose his wife. The characters of the two old men are well contrasted, and in them the main interest of the play may be said to rest.

APPENDIX TO NOTES ON THE HEAUTON TIMORUMENOS

6. Of this vs., which he brackets, Dz. (Adn. Crit.) says, grammaticorum sapientiam redolet.

129. sint: the subj. is needed, although sunt is the reading of all good MSS.

169. tempust: supported by the Scholiast in A: tempus supra horam significat. Cf. Hec. 597, tempust me concedere.

174. Wanting in A and regarded as spurious by Umpf., Wag., Dz.

192. crederes: the MSS. reading crederest = “it is possible to believe,” (est = ἔστι; see Goodwin, 144. 5. and G. 422. Note 4. fin.), should be allowed to stand here, I think.

232. The MSS. reading, concurrunt multae opiniones quae mihi animum exaugeant, is defended by West, and rendered “so many suspicions conspire to torment my mind:—there’s her opportunities, the place, her youth, etc.” But opiniones is not readily forced into the sense thus imparted to it, except in places outside of Terence, and animum exaugeant applies only to expressions of joy. Hence Bentley rewrote the line and is followed closely by Tyrrell. See footnote. Fleck. has concurrunt multa eam opinionem quae mihi animo exaugeant.

289. Fleck. (1857) reads, nulla mala re esse expolitam muliebri, for which there is good MSS. support, and assumes, with Dietsch, that a lacuna exists between this and the next verse.

353. te is not without MSS. support, and is retained by Fleckeisen.

379. salutare: as hiatus is permitted at a change of speakers, there can be no objection to salutem, the reading of A; see footnote.

408. exoptatam: Fleck. reads exoptata animo meo.

484–5. Suspected by Bentley as foreign to the general sense of the context, though resting on good MSS. authority, including that of A. The vss. read like an explanatory note.

502. adsum avoids a union of dactyl and anapaest.

511. Engelbrecht (Studia Terent., p. 44. 3 ff.) proposes congruisse in place of congruere illi, the pronoun being a former conjecture of his own. Fleck. introduces ut before ne, and adheres to the MSS.

515. adulescentis: see Brix. on Plaut. Trin. 359, and Engelbrecht, Studia Terent., p. 14. Fleck. happily follows Bentley in reading Cliniae.

570. amantis: so most editors. MSS. amantium animum, which makes it necessary to understand aduortunt in the sense of animum aduortunt; for this there is no warrant in either Plautus or Terence.

601. drachumarum: MSS. drachmarum and dragmarum; but see Lindsay, Lat. Lang. p. 145.

645. The text is very uncertain. Dz. (with Umpf.) adheres closely to the MSS., but is obliged to insert eo sis for the sake of quanto, and to reject natu. But Fleck., though bold in his departure from the received reading, has made the vs. easy : quando tuos est animus, mi uir, natura ignoscentior, "in as much as, my dear husband, your mind is naturally inclined to leniency." Thus the omission of natu grauior is at least a relief, on account of the difficulty of applying to animus an expression belonging properly to persons.

708. Regarded as genuine by Fleck., who correctly places an interrogation point after tuto.

715. fors: Guyet followed by Bentley, Umpf., Dz., Fleck., for MSS. fortasse. Cf. App. on And. 957. See Dz., Adn. Crit. Tyrrell seems to be in error in writing forsitan in his foot-note, instead of fortasse.

798. The reading of the MSS. is both obscure and unmetrical. That of the text is supported by Hor. Epist. 1. 16. 68, 1. 20. 20; Sat. 1. 4. 32.

987. sola: see footnote. Umpf., Dz., Fleck. read solus—rightly. For the elision of final s see A. & G. 629. a; Introd. § 92.

1001. abripi is a judicious emendation from adripi, that is, arripi which the MSS. (not A) exhibit.

1010. The common reading is de integro, and thus Umpf.; cf. 674, And. Prol. 26.

1034. Dz. reads ganeo, Fleck. ganeo's. Cf. footnote.

DIDASCALIA

See Dz. in Rh. Mus. 20, 573 f. and 21, 65 ff. Cf. notes on didascaliae to the And. and Heaut.

6. facta tertia: i. e. third in order of production. See Dz. in Rh. Mus. 39, 345. See also John C. Watson, T. A. P. A. vol. xxxvi, p. 152.

PERIOCHA

6. ut concederet: i. e. to give up two days of Thais' society to Thraso.

8. deperiret, "was dying of love for."

12. uitiatam: cf. Ad., Per. 12. n.

PROLOGUS

3. poeta: on And. Prol. 1. nomen profitetur suom, "professes himself (to be)," "declares himself."

7. bene, "literally." male: i. e. in bad Latin, because too closely translated from the Greek.

8. The reference is to Luscius Lanuuinus. See on And. Prol. 7. bonis: scan bonis.

9. Phasma: Φάσμα, "Apparition." An outline of this play of Menander is given by Donatus (Wessner, vol. i. p. 272).

10. Thensauro: the plot of this play is given by Don. (Wessner, vol. i. p. 273). It differed considerably from that of the Phasma, yet Ter. seems plainly to indicate here that the Thensaurus was an adaptation of the Phasma, though a poor one (perdidit). Ter. is criticizing Luscius for representing the defendant in a law-suit as opening the case, instead of the plaintiff. There was a play of this name, written by Philemon, and imitated in the Trinummus of Plautus. causam dicere: sc. eum. Transl. "has represented him from whom the gold is demanded as pleading his cause."

11. prius: with quam (12). unde = ex quo; i. e. the defendant. petitur: sc. aurum. aurum qua re sit suom: indirect question, in apposition with causam.

12. illic qui petit: i. e. the plaintiff. With illic understand dicat or dixerit, of which unde is sit, etc., is the object. Transl. "before he who demands (the gold) declares from what source this treasure is his, or whence it has come to be in his father's tomb."

14. ipse: i. e. Luscius Lanuuinus.

15. defunctus iam sum, "I have now made an end of the matter," i. e.

I have brought his abuse (sc. maledicta Terenti) to an end now; the danger is past. Cf. Phorm. 1021, Ad. 508. dicat: sc. Terence, who replies that he has other matters that he can bring up against Lanuuinus if the latter does not cease his attacks. See 17-19.

17. quae . . . condonabitur: the pron. is acc. pl. neut. Transl. "which for the present he shall be forgiven." For this verb in the act. voice with two accusatives cf. Phorm. 947.

20. emērunt: for the ē see Munro on Lucr. i. 406. The license occurs also in Vergil and other authors.

21. inspiciundi means, probably, that Lanuuinus sought and secured an opportunity to witness one of the rehearsals of the play before the ædiles. There and then he accused Terence of plagiarism.

22. magistratus: though the noun is in the sing., yet it refers to the ædiles as a body.

23. furem: i. e. a plagiarist.

24. nil dedisse uerborum, "had not imposed upon us", lit. "had given us no words." There is a play on the two expressions dare fabulam (from fari, "to speak"), and dare uerba which, according to Donatus (Wessner, vol. i. p. 275), 'decipere est eum qui cum rem expectet nihil inueniet praeter uerba.'

25. Naeui et Plauti: i. e. the Colax of Naeuius was revised and brought out by Plautus. Thus Ritschl in Parerg. i. 99 ff. See Ribbeck, Com. Lat. Rel. p. 9.

28. non quo, "not that." Fleck. has non qui (after some MSS.), which is the same thing. Eugraphius had non quod.

34. Latinas: sc. fabulas.

35. huic: i. e. Terence.

38. See App.

39. puerum supponi depends on facere (37). For facere = "represent," with acc. + infin., see G. 527. R. 2. The expression denotes the substitution of one child for another, or the ascription of a child to a false parentage.

40. The infinitives depend on facere (37), and are equivalent to substantives.

41. The poet sums up with the remark that there is nothing new under the sun.

42. cognoscere: on And. Prol. 24.

43. factitarunt: frequentative; "have done again and again." faciunt, "do (once)." noui, "the poets of the new school," among whom Terence includes himself. ueteres were those of the old school, among whom would be reckoned Naeuius and Plautus and even Luscius Lanuuinus.

44. cum silentio suggests fauete (And. Prol. 24), where see n. The importance of this exhortation may be more fully appreciated after a perusal of the prologue to the Hecyra, and of that prefixed to the Poenulus of Plautus. Cf. Plaut. Trin. 22. adeste cum silentio.

45. "That you may reach a thorough comprehension of the meaning of the Eunuchus."

ACT I. SCENE 1.

Phaedria is at a loss to determine how he shall deal with Thais, whose fickle conduct causes him much perplexity. Parmeno gives him sage advice. A brief outline of this scene is to be found in Horace, Sat. 2. 3. 259-271. Persius also has imitated the scene (Sat. 5. 161-175), but appears to have gone to the Gk. original, rather than to Terence's adaptation of it, for his example of 'love or liaison'.

46. Persius has Quidnam igitur faciam? nec nunc, cum arcessor [arcessat, Jahn followed by Gildersleeve] et ultro Supplicet, accedam? which Conington renders "What am I to do? not to go to her even when I am sent for, and she goes out of her way to beg me!"

47. quom accessor ultro = quom illa me ultro accersit.

48. perpeti: a loose constr. for ut with subj. Cf. 240, Hec. 68.

50. prius, "better." fortius: on And. 445.

54. ferre : sc. amorem. illicit: on Heaut. 974.

55. eludet, "she'll make game of you." eludere was said of gladiators, and meant "to parry a blow," then "to deceive," "jeer at," "mock," etc.

59-61. Cf. n. on And. 555; Plaut. Merc. 18-36; Hor. Sat. 2. 3. 265-271.

64. quod: on And. 395. tecum cogitas : on. Ad. 500.

65-6. "What! I (visit) her, who (preferred) him, who (expelled) me, who would not (admit me yesterday)! just let me alone (for that), I'll die first." The ellipses express profound indignation. For modo cf. Phorm. 420, 496.

66. qui uir, "what sort of man."

67. una falsa lacrimula, "with a single, false little-tear."

68. misere : with terendo.

69. ultro : i. e. without waiting for you to chide her first.

69-70. dabis . . . supplicium : i. e. you will suffer at her hands, as though you and not she were to blame (ultro).

74. nisi ut, "except that," "unless"; see G. 591. b. R. 3. redimas, "ransom." captum, "(as one) captured (in war)"; cf. And. 82.

77-8. neque . . . addas, et . . . feras: subj. of obligation or property; "you should refrain from adding burdens to those which love in itself possesses for you, and those which are inseparable from the situation you should bear with fortitude." See my article in P. A. P. A. vol. 32, Special Session, p. vii. The subj. in this passage is more commonly regarded as prohibitive; see Bennett, Cornell Studies, no. ix. p. 4. But cf. Elmer on The Latin Prohibitive, A. J. P. vol. xv, pp. 302-303.

79. eccam: on And. 532. nostri fundi calamitas: a figure taken from agriculture; "the blight of our estate." Thais is so called by Parmeno because she absorbs his master's fortune.

80. "For what we ought to receive she intercepts." capere: used often of receiving rents or produce from an estate; cf. Phorm. 790.

ACT I. SCENE 2.

Thais laments that she is misunderstood by Phaedria. She explains to him that her apparent indifference is due to her anxiety to get possession of the girl whom Thraso has promised her, and whom she believes to be an Attic citizen. By keeping Thraso's friendship she may succeed in restoring the girl to her family. She entreats Phaedria to aid her in her plan by withdrawing himself to the country for a couple of days. At first Phaedria is suspicious, but at last he consents, and takes himself off in company with his slave, Parmeno.

82. aliorsum . . . feci, "otherwise than (as) I intended."

88. de exclusione, etc.: said aside to Phaedria.

89. Phaedria speaks ironically; "oh of course, because," etc. haec: on And. 828. semper: emphatic.

90. missa istaec face: on And. 680.

91-2. utinam . . . tecum, "would I had as much of your love as you have of mine." For aequa tecum cf. Phorm. 1032-1033.

98. prae: on And. 825.

99. sicine agis, "is it thus you act?" Intended as a rebuke to Parmeno. Cf. Ad. 128. age expresses reproach, as Donatus says.

100. te: i. e. Phaedria.

101. potin: on And. 487.

112. signa, "tokens," such as might lead to her identification.

113. neque . . . etiam, "nor yet." potis: neut. See App.

115. unde = a quibus; cf. n. on Prol. 11.

117. See App.

118. Cf. the case of Glycerium in the Andria: she also was believed to be soror meretricis; see And. 124.

120. omnia: i. e. property.

121. ecfluet: the metaphor of rimarum and perfluo (105) is continued.

123. hic: i. e. Phaedria.

126. interea loci = interea, as in Heaut. 257.

128. ut, "how."

130. hoc agite, "listen (attend) to this." Cf. Phorm. 350, 435. amabo: on Heaut. 404.

132. esse: see App.
133. fidibus scire: sc. canere; cf. Cic., De Sen. 8. 26 discebant enim fidibus antiqui.
134. producit, uendit: cf. Heaut. 144. forte fortuna, "by great good luck." Fors Fortuna was a goddess whose name was used in connection with an extraordinary piece of good luck. She is to be distinguished, says Donatus, from the goddess Fortuna. Cf. Phorm. 841, Hec. 386.
135. hic meus amicus: i. e. the miles of 125.
143. ad uirginem animum adiecit, "has taken a fancy to the girl." etiamue amplius: on Heaut. 132. On the meaning of amplius, cf. And. 325.
148. neque . . . cognatum distributes neminem (147).
- 151-2. priores partis habere, "to play the principal part"; a metaphor from the stage. Cf. Phorm. 835, Ad. 880.
153. cum istis factis, "with this conduct of yours." This use of cum in expressions of indignation is colloquial; cf. And. 941 and n.
154. perdoluit: sc. tibi. Transl. "she has galled you at last."
158. huc: explained in the next line.
161. illum talem, "so fine a fellow as that"; talem is ironical.
163. numcubi = numquid alicubi; Don.
164. in te claudier: on And. 573. Transl. "have you ever perceived that my liberality was checked at all in your case?"
166. relictis rebus: cf. Heaut. 840 and n.
169. pro ambobus: i. e. for each of the two, since it appears from vs. 984 that Phaedria gave twenty minae for the eunuch alone.
171. quid istic: on And. 572.
172. hac re: i. e. by your complying with my request (151-152).
174. habeam: for the mood see on And. 798.
178. quam cito: on And. 136.
182. concedas: see on And. 313 fin.
184. 'aut' nil moror, "I have naught to do with 'or.'" For nil moror ("I do not delay," and so "I do not care about") with a direct object, cf. Plaut. Trin. 297 nil ego istos moror faeceos mores, and Hor. Epist. 1. 15. 16 uina nihil moror illius orae.
186. merito te amo: cf. Heaut. 360. n. bene facis, "you're very kind." Don. here says, 'non iudicantis esse sed gratias agentis.' Hence "quite right" would be an incorrect rendering. Cf. Hor. Sat. 1. 4. 17 di bene fecerunt; n. on Heaut. 1054.
188. See App. mos gerundust Thaïdi, "Thais must be humoured"; cf. Ad. 218, 481 and notes.
189. illi: the eunuch and the Ethiopian slave purchased by Phaedria for Thais; see 165 ff. maxume: ou And. 818.
190. mea: see App.

191 num quid uis aliud, "you don't want anything else, do you?" A conventional form of leave-taking, of which the fuller and more exact phraseology is given in Ad. 247, "you don't want anything, do you, before I go away." For variations upon this cf. 218 and 363 below; Phorm. 151, 458, 563; Hee. 272; Ad. 432; Plaut. Trin. 192 numquid uis? The last is the most common form. It is called by Donatus formula abeundi, and was used to avoid the appearance of abruptness or discourtesy. Hence it is said, half in irony, by Horace, Sat. 1. 9. 6. In spite of its conventionality, however, the expression is sometimes felt also in its true and literal signification, as e. g. here, where the long ut-clause follows by way of reply.

192. praesens: i. e. in body; absens: i. e. in mind.

196. meus . . . animus, "lastly, be my very life (soul)."

202. quidquid huius: cf. 980, 1070; Heaut. 961. huius is partitive genitive (= huius rei).

205. constituit, "has made an appointment." Cf. Hec. 195; Juvenal, 3. 12 hic, ubi nocturnae Numa constituebat amicae.

206. dum uenit: the present used in anticipation of the future; lit. "all the time that he is coming," i. e. "until he comes." The constr. is archaic and colloquial. See G. 228 and Note 1.

ACT II. SCENE 1.

Phaedria urges Parmeno to make haste in delivering his presents to Thais, and to do his utmost to injure Thraso in her opinion. He then discusses with Parmeno the chances of his being able to remain away from Thais for the time stipulated. After Phaedria's departure Parmeno sees the parasite Gnatho approaching in company with the girl whom Thraso had promised to give to Thais. The scene is to some extent a repetition of that which has been said once—a fact noted contemptuously by Donatus.

207. isti: i. e. the ancillula and the eunuchus (166 and 167).

209. rogitare: on And. 870 (capere) and 245. Cf. Heaut. 751, Eun. 644.

211. hoc: i. e. the fact of your making this present to Thais. peribit: i. e. is thrown away. Cf. Ad. 743, Heaut. 486. pereo: a play on the word. quod . . . carius, "a thing that is of more consequence to me," i. e. than the loss of the present itself.

212. iniquo animo refers to Parmeno's remark (210-211). qui, "in some way." effectum dabo: on And. 683 (inuentum dabo). See App.

213. See on 191.

214. quod poteris: on Heaut. 416 and And. 454.

216. nullus: more emphatic than non. Cf. n. on And. 599.

217-8. posse me affirmare et perpeti: the pronoun is governed by affirmare, while the two infinitives present an instance of hendiadys; "do you think that I can be strong (in my resolution) and endure to the end (of the allotted period)?” That is, “do you think that I can continue throughout to be immovable (in my resolution)?” For me affirmare cf. n. on Heaut. 1052, Hec. 454.

218. ne redeam depends rather on me affirmare than on perpeti.
 220. ingratiis, “in spite of myself”; cf. n. on Heaut. 446.
 221. hoc plus facies, “by just this much the more you’ll do (what I said),” i. e. come posting back; see 219.
 222. me indulgeo: on Heaut. 861.
 223. illam: the acc. with cereo is archaic. hui: on And. 474.
 224. uniuorsum: synonymous with totum, but stronger (cf. ‘whole’ and ‘entire’). The two are colloquially united for emphasis in Plaut. Trin. 171 gregem uniuorsum uoluit totum auortere. Parmeno is ironical, but Phaedria seems to take him seriously. stat sententia, “I am resolved”; said with a tragic air. Livy adds the complementary infin. (xxi. 30.): Hannibal, postquam ipsi sententia stetit pergere ire atque Italiam petere, etc.
 226. fuit: i. e. before he fell in love.
 227. quisquam: sc. non from previous nemo.

 231. haec: i. e. the uirgo.

ACT II. SCENE 2.

The parasite, Gnatho, approaches, leading the girl who is to be a present to Thais from Thraso. He gives the spectators a glowing description of his success at his profession, and then rallies Parmeno on Phaedria’s (supposed) ill-luck with his mistress. Parmeno hints that the tables may be turned in a day or two.

232. quid, “how much.” intellegens, “a wise man,” “a clever fellow.”
 233. interest: constructed pers., as in Ad. 76. stulto (232) is dative. hac re: explained by what follows.
 234. hinc, “of this place,” i. e. of Athens. mei loci atque ordinis, “of my own rank and condition in life.” locus and ordo are synonymous here.
 235. itidem: i. e. “like myself.” abligurrierat, “had squandered (in eating and drinking).”
 236. sentum, “ragged”, lit. “bristly.” pannis annisque obsitum, “covered with patches and years”; lit. “sown (planted) with.” Cf. Heaut.
 294. n.
 237. ornati, “garb,” “get up.” See on And. 365. quoniam, etc.: the reply of the homo sentus, etc.
 239. hic, “hereupon.”

242. nitor: cf. Hor. Epist. 1. 4. 15 me pinguem et nitidum bene curatae uises.

243. Oxymoron; cf. 'as having nothing, and yet possessing all things' (2 Cor. vi. 10). Gnatho has rich friends. Hence nil deficit, "nothing is wanting"; cf. Hec. 768. For the indic. after quom (adversative) cf. n. on Phorm. Prol. 23.

244. ridiculus, "buffoon," "jester," as in Plaut. Capt. 477 neque ridiculos iam terrunci faciunt. plagas pati: cf. Plaut. Capt. 88 nisi qui colaphos perpeti potest parasitus frangique aulas in caput. This was the old-fashioned view of the parasite's profession, to which Gnatho now takes exception. Cf. also l. c. 472 plagipatidas, etc.; said of parasites.

246. quondam emphasizes olim.

249. hisce: nom. pl. me: with rideant (= "laugh at my jokes") rather than with paro. Cf. Plaut. Capt. 481 neque me rident.

252. negat quis: that si has been omitted is suggested by the use of quis for aliquis. See Fay in Class. Rev. vol. xii, p. 297. This vs. is quoted by Cicero (Lael. 25. 93).

253. adsentari: on And. 842 (esse).

257. Quoted by Cicero (Off. I. 42. 150).

258. profueram goes with re salua; prosum with perdita (sc. re).

259. aduentum: substantive; cf. Plaut. Capt. 502 gratulanturque eam rem.

261. uictum quaerere: sc. me; "that I gain a living."

262. sectari iussi, "I bid him follow me," "I bid him be my pupil."

263. potis est: impers. Cf. n. on And. 437. disciplinae, "schools," "sects." ipsis: sc. philosophis.

264. uocabula, "names." Gnathonici: i. e. Gnathonics, or followers of Gnatho (Γνάθων = "Puff-Cheek," "Full-Mouth"); a new school of parasites. Though Gnatho may be compared with Ergasilus in the Captiui of Plautus, yet his methods are supposed to be somewhat different. Ergasilus belonged to the old school.

265. facit: the verse-accent causes the natural long quantity of the final syl. to be retained. See Introd. § 91.

267. See App.

268. rest = res est. ni mirum: on 508. hisce: on 249. The refer. is to Phaedria and Parmeno. frigent, "are coldly received," "are not in favour." Cf. Hor. Sat. 2. 1. 62 ne quis amicus frigore te feriat.

269. nebulonem: much like "knave" in Shakespeare. hisce: i. e. Thraso and his party, including Gnatho himself.

270-1. plurima salute importit: a very strong expression = "greets," "wishes health to."

271. summum suom: on And. 970. statur: the impers. pass. lays stress on the act of "standing," and is in keeping with the unfriendly tone of the rejoinder. Cf. Plaut. Pseud. 457 Simo: salue. quid agitur? Pseud.: statur hic ad hunc modum. Parmeno takes Gnatho's question in the sense of "what are you about?"

273. qui dum, "how so?" "what makes you ask?" So πῶς; colloquial English "how?" "beg pardon?"

274. mancupium, "slave"; only here and in 364. υρο, "sting." ut falsus animist: said aside; "how mistaken is he in his ideas." Cf. n. on And. 647, Heaut. 727.

275-6. hoc, etc., "it is this you mean now, that we have been thrust out from here." heus: on And. 635.

277. quietum, "at your ease," "at rest."

279. papae (παταλ): an interjection = "wonderful!" Here it is ironical. sic soleo: sc. beare. See on Ad. 923.

281. operae, "assistance"; partitive gen. with paululum.

282. nunc: emphatic. It is implied that at a later day the situation will have changed. quia istam ducis: said aside.

283. Gnatho insinuates that Parmeno would not be permitted to enter the house himself, but might like to have Gnatho sent out to him any one whom he may wish to see. sine biduom, etc.: Parmeno is alone on the stage.

285. faxo . . . insultabis: cf. n. on And. 854, and my 'Note on Faxo, etc.' in P. A. P. A. vol. xi, p. vii. Cf. n. on Ad. 209. frustra: emphatic.

286. Gnatho returns from the house of Thais, having left the maiden behind him, and finds Parmeno still standing before the door.

287. internuntius: on Heaut. 299.

288. mira uero, etc., "they are fine sayings, in fact, that (are of a nature to) please a captain." Parmeno facetiously congratulates Gnatho on his wit, which must be of a high order to please his patron, Thraso. Gnatho leaves the stage.

290. custos publice: a species of patrolman, whose business it was to assist in guarding the frontier. The post was assigned to young men, ἔφηβοι, about 18 years of age. Chaerea was such an ἔφηβος (see 824, and Knapp in Class. Phil. vol. ii, p. 14), and on duty at the Piraeus.

291. non temerest: on Heaut. 620.

ACT II. SCENE 3.

Chaerea, the brother of Phaedria, rushes upon the stage, in a state of great excitement. He has seen a girl in the street, with whom he has fallen violently in love. While he was following her, a friend of his father's stopped him, and detained him some time in conversation. Meanwhile the girl disappeared. Chaerea asks Parmeno to find her for him. The slave recognizes Chaerea's description of the girl, and tells him that she has just been taken by Gnatho into the house of Thais. As the courtesan is not among Chaerea's acquaintances, the young man sees no way of approach to the object of his admiration. Parmeno jokingly (378) suggests that Chaerea enter the house in the guise of the eunuch whom Phaedria intends to present as a gift to Thais. Chaerea jumps at the idea, and although Parmeno, now much alarmed, sees difficulty and danger in the undertaking, he is persuaded by the youth to carry it out.

297. alterum: i. e. the other brother (Chaerea) in a like predicament—in love.

298. senem: the father of Phaedria and Chaerea.

299. hic : i. e. Chaerea. qui si occeperit: lit. "if who once begins," i. e. "after whose beginning." qui (i. e. Chaerea) is subject of occeperit, not of dicit (300).

300. dicet: sc. senex. See App. illum alterum : i. e. Phaedria.

301. praeut, "when compared with." huius: i. e. Chaerea. quae: neut. pl. acc. dabit, "will do," "will accomplish."

302. ut : on Heaut. 810. senium . . . qui: on And. 607.

311. sis = si uis; cf. n. on Heaut. 369.

312. See App. neruos, "energies."

314. uincto, "cramped," "corseted," by means of the ξύνιον or στρόφιον, Roman mamillare = "breast-cloth." gracilae, "slender."

315. habitior, "too plump," qui ait trop d'embonpoint (Madame Dacier). Cf. 242. pugilem, "prize-fighter."

316. "Though she have a good constitution, they render her (slight as) a rush by their treatment."

317. itaque ergo amantur, "and for that very reason they are admired"; not ironical, as Donatus says, but descriptive of what, in Chaerea's estimation, is a degenerate taste. noua figura oris, "a cast of countenance (wholly) novel."

318. uerus, "genuine," "natural," indicates an entire absence of rouge (cerussa), or other cosmetic, often used to heighten the complexion; see Plaut. Most. 258. solidum, "compact," "sound." suci plenum, "youthful," "strong."

319. flos ipsus, "the very budding time of life."

321. quoia, "whose."

323. id mecum stomachabar, "I was fretting about this"; mecum as with cogitas (64).

325. felicitates, "luck." auorsae: see App.

326. sceleris, "ill-luck," "misfortune."

329. incommode, "inconveniently," "inopportunely."

331. liquet mihi deierare, "I can take my oath with a clear conscience." Cf. n. on And. 729 (ut liquido possim).

332. sex septem, "six or seven"; an instance of asyndeton not uncommon in Class. Latin.

334. monstri: cf. Phorm. 954 and n.

335. quam longe, "from the very farthest distance possible," "from never so far away." Cf. n. on And. 136.

337. heus: on And. 635.

340. aduocatus: a person who attended at a trial to give advice; not necessarily the pleader. The advice was not always of the best, and the custom of seeking it has been satirized in the Phormio, Act 2. scene 4. Cf. Ad. 646.

341. hora: an exaggeration, like annus in Heaut. 240. Cf. Hor. Sat. 1.

5. 14. rogo num quid uelit: i. e. preparatory to taking leave of him; see on 191.

343. commodum: adv.; "just," "just then." Cf. Phorm. 614; Plaut. Trin. 400.

344. plateam: on And. 796. mirum ni, etc.: said aside. Cf. n. on And. 598.

345. huic, i. e. Thais. nulla: on 216.

347. uerum: sc. est; "yes." Cf. n. on And. 769. ipsast: said aside. ilicet: as in Heaut. 974.

348. iam conclamatumst, "all is lost"; a proverbial expression derived from the custom of setting up a loud cry (conclamare) at a death bed. If there was no answer it was inferred that all was over, and the friendly call ceased.

353. potens, "opulent," "influential," "rich."

354. duras: cf. n. on Heaut. 402. Transl. "a difficult business for my brother, to judge from what you tell me."

355. huic dono: i. e. the girl, Thraso's gift. comparer: often thus used of matching gladiators or of pitting one thing against another.

357. inhonestum, "ugly." Cf. n. on And. 123 (honestata).

360. numquam etiam = non dum. echo dum: on And. 184.

361. ad, "in comparison with," more lit. "side by side with"; cf. Gk. παρά. Similarly English "to," as "she is nothing to mine here."

363. num, etc.: on 191.

374. quisquam: on 678.

375. probes: sc. te; "represent yourself as," "pass for."

377. quantum potest: on And. 861.

379. perculeris iam, "you will quite upset me presently." Parmeno has repented of his jocose suggestion and begs Chaerea not to press him further.

380. calidum: i. e. periculorum (Donatus). Transl. "rash."

381. istaec in me cudetur faba: proverbial, but the origin of the proverb remains unexplained. The general meaning is giveu by Donatus: ‘in me hoc malum recidet; in me haec vindicabitur culpa.’ me is acc.

383. illis crucibus, “those pests”; dative.

385. referam gratiam: ironical; “pay back.” Cf. 719 and 911.

386. haec: i. e. the tricks commonly played on a father by his son, in order to wheedle him out of his money for the benefit of the young man’s mistress. Better play the tricks upon the designing courtesans themselves, says Chaerea. It will be more to our credit. The pronoun is explained by the following ut-clause.

387. illud: i. e. the other plan, described in 382–385.

388. quid istic: on And. 572.

390. defugiam auctoritatem, “disavow the responsibility,” which rests upon me now for instigating you to this deed.

ACT III. SCENE 1.

In this scene is depicted the foreign soldier, who boasts of his great influence with his king, and of his success in putting down his rivals. He and Gnatho discuss the effect upon Thais of the present which Thraso has sent to her, and Gnatho, after flattering the soldier’s vanity, gives him some sage advice regarding Thais’ jealousy. Parmeno is an unobserved observer.

391. agere: historical infinitive.

393. id: cf. And. 376.

394. hoc = huc; see on And. 386.

395. deducam: i. e. take Phaedria’s presents to Thais. istuc: explained by the following ut-clause.

396. grata mihi sint, “bring me into favour (with others).” Cf. n. on Heaut. 262.

397. uel rex, “for instance, the king”; perhaps Seleucus, king of Asia (Minor). Cf. Plaut. Mil. 75 and Tyrrell’s note. maxumas: sc. gratias.

399–400. The idea is that a king (qui habet salem) may appropriate to himself, by a few words aptly chosen, the renown acquired by another’s (Thraso’s) labour.

401. quod in te est, “and this is true in your case,” “and this applies to you”; i. e. your renown was appropriated by the king. Yet there is a covert hit at Thraso’s boastfulness, which the soldier fails to appreciate. habes: i. e. intellegis; Donatus.

401–2. in oculis gestare, “kept you in his eye,” i. e. was very fond of you. The infin. is historical.

403. mirum, “astonishing!” The spectators take this as ironical; Thraso takes it as evidence of sincere admiration on Gnatho’s part.

405. ubi: temporal.

406. quasi ubi, “just as though at any time.” exspueret: lit. “spit out." Thraso's company would act as an emetic; but the irony of the word is lost on the soldier. illam misseriam, "such trouble."

408. elegantem, "of good taste." Cf. 566, 1093, Heaut. 1063. sic: on And. 919.

409. perpaucorum hominum: gen. of quality; "(a person) of very few intimates." Cf. Hor. Sat. 1. 9. 44. immo, etc.: said aside. Gnatho's double meaning would be enjoyed by the audience.

411. mordere, "carped at me." Cf. Juv. 9. 9 conuiua ioco mordente facetus.

413. inpense: on Ad. 993.

418. iugularas: cf. Ad. 958. The plpf. denotes the completeness of the act; "you had the man quite throttled."

419. illum: i. e. Gnatho. quid: see App.

420. tetigerim, "touched up," i. e. "nettled." Rhodium: the Rhodians, the Sicilians, the Byzantines, and the people of Attica were regarded as no mean antagonists, where a contest of wit was concerned. Cf. Cicero, De Orat., ii. 54. 217.

422. plus, etc.: said aside.

426. "A hare art thou thyself, (yet) goest thou in quest of game?" i. e., as Donatus puts it, 'quod in te habes, hoc quaeris in altero'; which was as much as to say that the Rhodian was more than half a woman himself.

According to Vopiscus, De Numeriano 14, this was 'a proverb originating with Liuius Andronicus, as were also many others found in Plautus and Caecilius.' If Ter. took it from Andronicus, then the latter translated it from the Gk. δασύποντος ἀν κρέως ἐπιθυμεῖς, which is quoted by Erasmus and others.

430. dolet: sc. mihi. dictum: sc. illud fuisse. libero, "free," "unrestrained," "unbridled," with a reference to the youth's conduct as described in coepit . . . inridere (424-425). Transl. "it pains me (to think) that it was said to the heedless and imprudent youth." Gnatho is sorry for the young man, who has encountered so clever an antagonist as the captain. This is the height of flattery.

431. at: on And. 666. perditus: sc. erat; "(he was) desperate," "wholly at a loss," i. e. for something to say in reply.

434. istac: i. e. the girl, called Pamphila (440).

442. comissatum: supine.

445. par, etc.: on Ad. 73.

448. illi: i. e. Thais.

448-9. iam dudum illi facile fit quod doleat, "it has long been easy (for you) to do that to her over which she shall smart."

450. alio: for in aliam.

453. melius quanto, "far more readily," than I.

ACT III. SCENE 2.

Thais now comes from her house, attended by Pythias her handmaid. Thraso proceeds at once to make capital with her by alluding to his presents, and Gnatho, like the parasite that he is, suggests that they go to dinner. Parmeno endeavours to counteract the possible effect of Thraso's presents by bringing forward the gifts of his master. The situation calls forth unfavourable comments from the lips of both Thraso and the parasite, and Parmeno lets the latter know in plain terms what he thinks of him. Finally Thais goes off with the captain, having first left word that Chremes, should he turn up, be entreated to await her return.

456. sauium = suarium; "my love." For this and other such terms see Plaut. Poen. 365 ff.

457. de, "on account of," "in return for." quam uenuste: ironical. Parmeno speaks aside, and is thinking of the tactlessness of the soldier in making immediate reference to his presents. dedit, "has made."

460. ex homine, etc., "should you say that this fellow was of human extraction?" The reference is to Gnatho's beast-like craving for food.

463. bene fecisti hodie; itura . . . , "thank you for coming at this time (for) I am off . . ." Cf. n. on Heaut. 1054.

466. pace tua, "by your leave"; ironical. quod refers to what follows. fiat: optative subj. The words are addressed to Thraso.

468. aut nostri similia, "or at least equal to mine," lit. "to us." nostri = gen. from nos.

469. heus: Parmeno calls aloud at the door of Laches' house.

470. ocius: on And. 724.

471. tres minae: a low price. Cf. Phorm. 557, Ad. 191.

472. Dore: so named (Dorus) from Doris, a part of Caria, in Asia Minor. Chaerea has been dressed to look like a eunuch. em: on And. 416.

473. liberali: on And. 123. aestate integra: on And. 72.

474. honestus: on And. 123. quid tu ais, "what do you say to this?" A request for another's opinion. For the other use of this expression see on And. 187.

476. litteris, etc.: literature, gymnastics, and music were the three chief subjects in which a free-born Athenian citizen was supposed to be well versed, if liberally educated.

479. For the aposiopesis here cf. that in Heaut. 913.

483. quidam refers to Thraso.

485. recipitur: the present is often used of an action really future—esp. in conditions and in animated discourse; cf. H. 533. 2.

488. qui pararet, "wherewith to procure."

490. huic refers to Thraso.

491. "To snatch food from out of the midst of the fire" was a proverb applicable to any act of unwarranted audacity.

493. exo : for the tense cf. Heaut. 502, And. 594 (dicam).

498. Cf. 420-426.

499. abi prae : on Ad. 167.

501. hoc : on And. 386.

506. uos : i. e. her attendants.

ACT III. SCENE 3.

Chremes is unable to understand why Thais should have summoned him to her house. He suspects that she means mischief. In this of course he does her injustice. His suspicion that she wishes to pass herself off as his sister is dismissed with the recollection that she is too old. After declining to await her return he is persuaded by Pythias to join Thais at Thraso's house.

508. ni mirum = ne mirum; lit. "not wonderful," hence "without doubt," "assuredly." See Donatus (Wessner, vol. i, p. 382). dabit, "will make."

511. roget quis : on 252. noram : the tense is adapted to that of iussit (510). We should expect noui.

513. rem diuinam, "a sacrifice." Thais wanted to detain Chremes for some time and made this her excuse for being absent at a moment when it was difficult for her to arrange for a prolonged interview.

515-6. The infinitives are historical.

517. friget : sc. sermo.

520. auellere : sc. rus. See on And. 379, Phorm. 532.

522. ecquis : sc. esset. quid habuisset : i. e. on her person, in the way of dress or ornament.

523. quaeritet : subj. of obligation; "why should she ask these questions?"

525. intendit, "insists," "maintains." Note the change of construction. utl est audacia : on Ad. 389.

526. ea : i. e. soror (525).

528. porro, "now again." orare : infin. of the end (G. 423. Note 2.). We might expect qui oret.

531. capitulum : on And. 371.

532. dico, etc. : said aside.

534. fac amabo : lit. "do this (and) I will love you," i. e. "please do this." Cf. Heaut. 404. n.

537. amabo, etc., "I'll beg of you just to step across to the place where she is." amabo=amanter rogabo; cf. the Eng. 'I'll thank you to step, etc.' Plaut. Truc. 872 immo amabo ut . . . sinas eum esse apud me. This use is but a slight remove from the parenthetical use of amabo with imv., as in 534.

ACT III. SCENE 4.

Chaerea and his friends at the Piraeus had agreed to dine together. To Chaerea had been entrusted the duty of making the necessary arrangements. The feast was to have come off before this, but at the place appointed nothing was ready, and Chaerea was nowhere to be found. So Antipho goes to look for him. As Chaerea comes out of Thais' house, Antipho steps aside to take note of his appearance and actions.

539. This vs. is quoted by Cicero, ad Att. 7. 3. 10.

540. in hunc diem: i. e. met and agreed upon this day. ut de symbolis essemus, "with a view to dining on the picnic (club) plan." See on And. 88. Cf. the Gk. δειπνεῖν ἀπὸ συμβολῶν.

541. dati anuli : i. e. as pledges for the payment of our several shares.

542. parati: partitive gen., from paratus (4th decl.). For the form cf. And. 365. n.

543. homo : i. e. Chaerea.

546. quid hic ornati est, "what sort of a 'get up' have we here?" See on 237.

547. mall, "mischief."

548. nisi: on And. 664, Heaut. 542.

ACT III. SCENE 5.

As Chaerea comes out of Thais' house he congratulates himself on the success of the plan according to which he had represented himself to be the eunuch whom Phaedria had promised to Thais as a gift. He meets Antipho and gives him an account of his reception by Thais and of his subsequent adventures. Finally he goes off to Antipho's house, where he may change his costume without risk of being seen by his father or brother. Thence the two are to proceed to the house of the freedman Discus, where the entertainment already alluded to has been provided.

549. nemo homo: an emphatic pleonasm. Cf. Phorm. 591, Ad. 259.

550. erumpere, "to give full vent to." For this transitive use (which is rare) cf. Cic. Att. 16. 3. 1 ne in me stomachum erumpant.

551. quom, "when"; see on And. 152. For the sentiment cf. Shak., Othello, Act ii, Scene 1, 'If it were now to die, 'T were now to be most happy.'

552. contaminet, "mar," "sully." Cf. n. on And. Prol. 16. aegritudine: on Ad. 312.

553. For the construction see on And. 245.

555. quid, etc.: dependent on rogitando. emergam: on And. 562.

556. anne: pleonastic for an, but rendered necessary by the metre.

557. ab eo gratiam hanc inibo, "I'll get into his good graces on this score," by putting to him the questions which evidently he is wishing for.

quam video uelle: sc. eum; "as I see he desires." quam is relative.

558. quod: on 449.

560-1. See App.

566. elegans: on 408.

567. in hac: sc. uirgine; "in the case of this girl," "over her."

568. forte fortuna: on 134.

570. etiam dum: on And. 201.

570-1. submonuit me quod, "gave me a hint which."

572. illoc = illuc; cf. And. 387. n.

579. Interior parte: sc. aedium; i. e. the women's apartments, gynaecēum (Phorm. 862), Gk. γυναικεῖον, γυναικωνῖτις.

580. inquit: sc. Thais.

581. quaes . . . essent, "such as were in attendance on her."

582. haec: sc. puellae; see on And. 328.

583. adparatur: cf. And. 594. n.

583-5. uirgo . . . aureum: see Knapp in Class. Rev. vol. xx, p. 397, on this passage, and others (from Plaut.) on the subject of painting.

586-7. consimilem ludum: i. e. a game like to the one I wanted to play. impendio: abl. of measure; "by a great deal," and so (adv.) "greatly," "very much." Cf. Plaut. Aul. Prol. 18; Cic. Att. 10. 4. 9 at ille impendio nunc magis odit senatum.

588. in hominem: see App.

589. per . . . mulieri, "that by means of a shower a woman was beguiled." fucum facere (with dat.) meant "to deceive," "to impose upon."

590. templa . . . concutit: cf. Hom. Il. I. 530 μέγαν δ' ἐλέπιξεν Ολυμπον.

591. ac: on And. 337.

598. asinum: on Ad. 935.

599. proruont se: cf. Ad. 319. n.

601. limis: sc. oculis. Cf. Plaut. Mil. 1217 aspicito limis, ne ille nos se sentiat uidere.

603. explorata, "sure," "safe." pessulum, etc.: on Heaut. 278. obdo, "fasten," "close"; on this word see Postgate in Class. Rev. vol. xv. p. 304.

606. qui simulabar: sc. esse; cf. Plaut. Mil. 152 atque eadem erit, uerum alia esse adsimulabitur. Transl. "whose counterfeit I was," i. e. the eunuch. The absence of all coarseness of speech in this scene is noticeable. Fontaine however omits the scene from his L'Eunuque, and substitutes another of a more refined character.

607. sane hercle: on And. 229.

608. frugi es, "you're a clever fellow." Cf. Heaut. 597, Ad. 959. n.

ACT IV. SCENE 1.

Dorias, who was sent to conduct Chremes to the house of Thraso (538), returns, bearing the jewels of her mistress, Thais. Thraso, thinking that he saw a rival in Chremes, threatened to send for Pamphila, in accordance with the advice given him by Gnatho (439-445). This led to a quarrel between himself and Thais.

615. illum: i. e. Thraso.

621. eius: i. e. Chremes. Dorias explains the true reason for Thais' interest in Chremes.

622. inuitat tristis: i. e. Thraso sullenly invites Chremes to enter. mansit: Chremes had come to stay.

624-5. Cf. 440 ff. See App.

626. conuiuium: Thais is horrified at the suggestion that Pamphilis, whom she believes to be an Attic citizen, should appear among strangers at a banquet, contrary to custom and prevailing notions of propriety. Thais is eager to restore her to her rights as a citizen even though, through misfortune, she is at present in the position of a slave. tendere, "persisted." inde: sc. uentum est.

627. aurum, "her jewels." Cf. Heaut. 288. Thais may have feared that Thraso in his anger would forcibly possess himself of some of her ornaments as a guarantee of her submission to his wishes.

628. signi: partitive gen. Transl. "this is significant."

ACT IV. SCENE 2.

Phaedria has reached the conclusion that an absence of two days from his mistress is more than he can stand. At least he will place himself where he can feast on her with his eyes, though her society be denied to him. He returns therefore without having entered his villa, and meets Pythias as she comes out of the house of Thais.

629. inter vias, "on the way (road)."

634. male uero me habens, "feeling truly dejected."

635. deuorticulum: i. e. the point where a by-path led from the main road to his country house; or else, a kind of pet name for the house itself, as e. g. "my little inn."

640. extrema linea: abl.; "at a distance." The expression is ἀπαξ εἰρηνέον; but cf. Hor. Epist. 1. 16. 79 mors ultima linea rerum est.

641. haud nil est, "is something," though not all that I could wish. Cf. n. on Ad. 141. sciens: contrast inprudens (633).

ACT IV. SCENE 3.

Pythias rushes out upon the stage, much excited over her discovery touching Chaerea (whom she believes to be Dorus, the eunuch) and Pamphila. She tells the news to Phaedria, who goes into his house to see if he can find Dorus.

644. esse ausum: on And. 245, 870.

645. quin etiam insuper, "nay, in addition to this also." 'The additory etiam lends itself to conjunction with particles (insuper) kindred in meaning.' See Kirk in A. J. P. vol. xviii, pp. 29 and 36.

646. ipsam capillo conscidit = ipsum capillum conscidit. ipsam is the girl herself as opposed to her garments. capillo limits the action of the verb to her hair (abl. of specification). conscidit is a manifest exaggeration, as is also discidit; but Pythias is both angry and excited.

649. absente nobis: loosely said for absente me. But, as Don. suggests, absente may be taken absolutely (sc. me); nobis would then be dat., "we have had some disturbance or other at home, during my absence."

651. in' hinc = isne hinc.

653. eunuchum: for the case see on Heaut. 724.

655. utinam . . volunt: i. e. may my enemies be drunk in the way I am, i. e. non uino sed malo (Don.). Cf. Plaut. Asin. 841.

656. au here denotes surprise and distress. nam: with quod.

662. See App.

663. faxo scies: cf. 285. See on And. 854. Phaedria departs.

664. mea tu: an apostrophe to the injured girl. See Ad. 289. n.

665. eos: sc. eunuchos.

666. potesse: frequent in Plaut.; afterwards contracted into posse. miseriae: sc. miki.

ACT IV. SCENE 4.

Phaedria returns with Dorus and is amazed to find that Pythias does not recognize the eunuch. He soon discovers that the eunuch exchanged dresses with Chaerea, and that the latter entered Thais' house in disguise. Phaedria at the last succeeds in throwing a partial veil over his brother's crime by compelling the eunuch openly to deny the truth.

668. etiam: temporal.

669. male concillate, "you bad bargain." conciliare = "to purchase."

671. huc redditio: on And. 400. uestis: gen. Cf. n. on And. 400.

673. offendissem: sc. eum. Cf. 1064, Heaut. 285. n. ita refers to his dress, which was that of the ordinary citizen. He had exchanged with Chaerea. Of this exchange Phaedria, of course, is ignorant; hence he misinterprets the change in the eunuch's appearance as a preparation for flight.

675. istuc, "that which you say," refers to Phaedria's last remark (674). bene: sc. factum est.

678. nostrarum, "of our people," i. e. the women of Thais' household.

quisquam: fem. The form quaequam is less frequent in early Latin. The same is true of other compounds of quis, as well as of the simple quis itself. For examples see Brix on Plaut. Mil. 362. Cf. G. 107. 3. Note 2.

681. illum refers to Chaerea.

682. honesta, etc.: on And. 123.

683. uaria refers to the motley colouring of the garments in which the eunuch had been decked out before he met Chaerea and Parmeno.

684. illam: sc. uariam uestem.

685. paulum: adverbial; really an acc. of extent of space.

689. colore mustelino, "with a weasel-like complexion," i. e. livid, leaden-hued. Cf. Don. (Wessner, vol. ii, p. 417).

691. eho: on And. 184.

697. hoc die, "this very day." quam dudum: on And. 582.

699-700. See App.

706. etiam: on Heaut. 187.

710. etiam non: on And. 116. credis: Tyrrell and others alter to credes (or credas) on account of the metre, but the ictus of the verse justifies us in keeping the MSS. reading. See App.

711. mirum ni, etc., "I'm surprised that you don't believe what he says."

Cf. n. on And. 598. quid agam nescio: said aside.

712. heus negato rursum: said apart to Dorus.

714. malo, "punishment."

715. ora me: said aside to Dorus. Phaedria secretly compels Dorus to unsay all that he has said, in the hope that the two maid-servants may be deceived; but the latter are not convinced. He also pretends to punish Dorus for failing to speak the truth.

716. alio pacto, "in any other manner," i. e. than through the pretence referred to. hinc, "out of this." The vs. is said aside.

717. etiam ludificabere, "continue to make sport of me." See A. J. P. vol. xviii, p. 29. Phaedria follows Dorus into the house.

718. techinam: see Heaut. 471. n.

719. referam gratlam: on 385.

721. utrum, etc.: on Ad. 382.

722. Cf. n. on Heaut. 748.

723. illi: i. e. Pamphila; not Thais, nor Phaedria. So Don., rightly.

726. eos: i. e. Thais and Thraso. ex hoc: i. e. from Chremes.

ACT IV. SCENE 5.

Chremes comes upon the stage half drunk. He tells Pythias that Thais has left the Captain's house, and he is astonished to hear that she has not yet come home. While he is speaking Thais appears.

727. attat: on And. 125. uiclit: sc. me.

728. pulchre, "splendidly," "quite." Cf. n. on Ad. 979. Wagner renders, "jolly sober."

732. uerbum: on And. 426. erit: on Heaut. 1014. Cf. Phorm. 801.

733. See App.

734. aetatem: cf. n. on Heaut. 716.

735. nisi: on And. 664 and Heaut. 542.

736. id dicere illam, "that she meant that"; id refers to tu ut sequerere sese (735).

736-7. nisi . . . minus, "save that the soldier made clear to me what I failed to understand."

738. eccam ipsam: on And. 532.

ACT IV. SCENE 6.

Thais returns from Thraso's house. She is much disturbed in mind lest Thraso may come and carry off Pamphila. Chremes meets her, and she tells him that the girl is his sister. Chremes is inclined to run off on the pretext of bringing legal assistance from the forum. Thais dissuades him, and the two await the coming of Thraso, who brings with him a company of attendants.

742. rem, "reality," "fact"; cf. n. on And. 824. Transl. "if his words are turned into deeds."

745. See App.

752. creptum: supine.

753. cistellam: the trinket-box in which the signa (112, 767, 808) or "birth-tokens" were placed by those persons who happened to come into temporary possession of an 'exposed' or kidnapped infant. The tokens were attached to the child at the time of exposure, and were intended to assist in the identification, in case the infant were found and brought up. Witness the ring in the Heaut. Such trinkets were sometimes called monumenta, γνωστομάτα. Cf. Plaut. Cist. 656, Rud. 1154-1174. Pamphila had been kidnapped. See 114-115. Consequently the signa included anything she may have worn when she was carried off.

754. illum: with militem (755). Chremes becomes agitated as he sees Thraso and his household in the distance. Both he and Thraso are timid characters. Cf. 789.

755. quantas: we might expect multas or the like, in view of the infin.; or else miles . . . adducat in place of militem . . . adducere.

760. Thais encourages Chremes by pointing out to him the disadvantages under which Thraso labours, in being a foreigner. A lawsuit would surely go against him. See And. 810 ff. potens, "influential," as in Ad. 502. Cf. n. on 353.

762. uicisci: on And. 624. It is better to prevent the evil than to obtain redress after it has been accomplished. Chremes' timidity is very manifest in this verse.

764. aduocatos: to serve as witnesses of Thraso's assault, and in general to assist in the suit to be brought against the soldier if he proved violent; see on 340. Cf. Phorm. 313 amicos aduocabo, etc.

767. signa, "the tokens." See on 753.

769. aulmo praesenti, "with ready courage," "fearlessly." Cf. Phorm. 957. attolle pallium, "tuck up your cloak," i. e. "make ready for action"; a final exhortation to Chremes to take courage and do his best. Cf. Plaut. Capt. 789 conlecto quidemst pallio: quidnam acturust? Cf. Phorm. 844. n.

770. "Alas! the man I have got as a champion is himself in need of a protector."

ACT IV. SCENE 7.

Thraso comes up with his attendants, whom he marshals in battle array before the house of Thais, with the ostensible purpose of taking the place by storm, but reserving for himself a position at a safe distance. When Thais appears, he determines to hold parley with her, before resorting to forceful measures. This gives Chremes an opportunity to inform Thraso that Pamphila is an Attic citizen, that she is his (Chremes') sister, and that the captain will molest her at his peril. Thraso then deems it better to retire. The whole scene is suggestive of the manner of a modern comic opera.

771. hancine . . . ut: on Heaut. 784.

774. ipsam: i. e. Thais.

776. manipulus furum, "his bundle of rogues," i. e. his assistants in the kitchen. Cooks had little reputation for honesty.

777. peniculo, "sponge"; really an animal's tail (which could be squeezed out like a sponge, after absorbing moisture), used for wiping tables on which food and wine had been spilled. Cf. Plaut. Men. 77-78.

779. qui, etc.: rel. clause of purpose; "(I brought it) to wipe our wounds with." Understand *portau*i from portas (777).

780. malum: on Heaut. 318. seruat, "keeps watch," i. e. "keeps close," "stays," "dwells."

781. post principia, "in the rear."

782. Said aside. ipse sibi cault loco: i. e. the captain himself got out of the way. caueo with the simple abl. (i. e. without ab) is not uncommon in Plaut.; cf. Bacch. 147 caue malo, and Rud. 828 caue sis infortunio.

783. Pyrrus: i. e. the king of Epirus, who invaded Italy (B. C. 281-275).

785. "Doubtless in so far as (= though) you now think this fellow to be a great man, he is (in reality) a huge good-for-nothing." For the constr. cf. n. on And. 395. For nebulo cf. n. on 269.

786. quid uidetur, "what seems best?"

787. ex occulto, "from ambush."

788. inruimus: a very strong word; "how soon do we make our onslaught?"

789. omniā: see Introd. § 91.

795. quid . . . agas, "what is one to do with such a fellow as that?" i. e. with Thraso. Thais is addressing Chremes. For the constr. cf. Heaut.

642. te . . . mihi, "you withdrew yourself from me clandestinely."

797. omnium: on And. 872.

799. sis: on Heaut. 369.

800. hodie: on Phorm. 1009.

801. Chremes is showing himself to be braver than we should expect. This vs. is all but identical with Plaut. Capt. 800.

806. os durum, "brazen face!"

809. furti se adligat, "implicates himself in a charge of theft." For the gen. cf. Plaut. Poen. 737 homo furti sese adstringet. Cicero (pro L. Flacco, 17. 41) has the abl., ne . . . se scelere adliget. With the gen. understand crimine. Cf. the gen. with verbs of accusing, etc. (A. & G. 352). Thraso has purchased Pamphila with his own money. If Chremes takes her away from him, he is guilty of theft (provided she is not an Attic citizen).

810. quaere, etc., "go search for some one to answer you." Thais here-upon disappears. It is not improbable that in this scene Thais and Chremes are represented as speaking from an upper window, rather than from the stage. This is suggested by lines 784 and 786-787.

811. haec : i. e. Thais.

815. domi: felt as a gen., with memineris, as in Plaut. Trin. 1027 com-meminit domi. "Remember your hearths and homes" was a stock expression in addressing soldiers.

816. est in, "is engrossed with."

ACT V. SCENE 1.

Thais appears from her house, greatly excited and followed by Pythias, who has been trying to evade her questions regarding Pamphila. Suddenly Chaerea comes into view, and Pythias persuades Thais to accost him. Chaerea still wears the clothes of Dorus, the eunuch.

817. perplexe, "ambiguously."

820. obtinet : cf. Heaut. 938. n.

824. qui Chaerea, "what Chaerea?" Thais hears of this young man now for the first time. ephebus: see on 290 (custos publice) and cf. And. 51. n. Prof. Knapp thinks (see Class. Phil. vol. ii, p. 14) that ephebus here, as seen in the light of 290, is proof that the word should be taken in its technical sense in And. 51.

827. nisi : on 735. amasse : we might expect amaruit.
 829. id lacrumat : cf. And. 157. n.
 830. interminata sum : on And. 496.
 832. dispudet : on Phorm. 1011.
 836. quantum potest : on And. 861.
 839. confidentia : on And. 876.

ACT V. SCENE 2.

Chaerea, on arriving at Antipho's house, was disappointed to find that the latter's parents were at home—a fact that rendered it dangerous for him to enter. Accordingly he has been unable to exchange his eunuch's dress for that of an ordinary citizen. He now returns in the direction of Thais' house, after having narrowly escaped observation by an acquaintance. Thais reproaches him for his rash conduct, and receives a cool rejoinder. But after she has explained her purpose regarding Pamphila, Chaerea takes heart, and conceives the idea of making Thais his friend and ally. Thais is only too ready to fall in with Chaerea's plan to make Pamphila his wife, and bids him await the coming of Chremes, who has gone to fetch the old nurse through whose testimony the true parentage of Pamphila is to be established. Chaerea and Thais go into the house to await Chremes' arrival, despite the protestations of Pythias, who distrusts the young man's intentions.

841. quasi dedita opera, "as if on purpose."
 844. in pedes : sc. conicio (cf. Phorm. 190), or do (cf. Plaut. Capt. 121 mene uis dem ipse in pedes?).
 845. angiportum : a term applied to a narrow passage or alley-way separating two adjacent houses or blocks of buildings (insulae), and not always a thoroughfare (cf. Ad. 578). For the neut. form cf. Ad. 576, 578, Phorm.
 891. The masc. angiportus (4th decl.) occurs in Hor. Od. 1. 25. 10.
 849. quid mea autem : sc. refert; "what difference does it make to me, however?" Cf. n. on Ad. 881 and 913. Cf. also Hec. 510, Phorm. 389, Heaut. 793.
 850. Dore : Thais pretends to take Chaerea for the eunuch.
 851. era, factum : Chaerea pretends that he is the eunuch, and the property of Thais. satine . . . placet, "you approve of such conduct, do you?" In Ad. 737 (cf. 641) the interrog. particle is omitted, the tone of the voice being sufficient to indicate the interrogation.
 852. inpune, "without punishment." Cf. 1019. noxiam, "offence," "fault."
 855. hanc : i. e. Pythias.
 860. etiam : additory. ultra goes with etiam; see Kirk in A. J. P. vol. xviii, p 36.

861-2. debeam . . . quicquam: i. e. I should be somewhat in that rascal's debt, I suppose, if I did this thing (i. e. tear his hair); but precious little would it be. Pythias is ironical, and her irony makes the expression = "I should not be at all in his debt." Hence quicquam. Her words are explained in part by the following verse. If he confesses himself to be her fellow-slave and equal, she is free to vent her rage upon him.

866. indignus qui = dignus qui non.

871. solidum: on And. 647.

874. malo principio: in apposition with re; or else an abl. absol. = "though the beginning is bad."

876. -que et: on And. 676.

882. te . . . amo: on 186. Chaerea does not mean that he is in love with Thais, but merely that he is grateful to her for taking this charitable view of his offence. But Pythias understands him to mean more than this. Hence her caution expressed in the next verse.

883. tum: illative; "in that case." ab istoc: a common construction with caueo.

884. non ausim: sc. quicquam facere.

886. fide: dat.; see on And. 296.

890. haec: i. e. Pamphila. Transl. "if only she is a citizen."

892. accersitum: collateral form of arcessitum.

899. pugnam, "trouble."

900. uidere = uideris.

901-2. non faciam: i. e. I'll not commit any wrong. non credo . . . erit: i. e. I trust you not, until the opportunity for you to do wrong shall have passed by. committere = "to do," "to perpetrate."

903. seruato, "you shall keep guard over me."

908. id ipsum: on And. 350. uirgo uero: lit. "in truth a maid!" i. e. "truly (an example of) maiden modesty"; a sarcastic reference to Chaerea and his fears about his dress. i prae: on Ad. 167.

ACT V. SCENE 3.

While Pythias is cogitating how she may take vengeance on Parmeno, Chremes appears, bringing with him Sophrona, the nurse, who has recognized the tokens and is prepared to speak with authority on the question of the identity of the girl, Pamphila. The recognition gives Pythias the opportunity she is seeking, to play a trick upon Parmeno.

911. quid nam: on And. 321. qui, "whereby"; see on And. Prol. 6.

912. hunc: i. e. Chaerea. supposuit: see App. ocius: on And. 724.

913. promoues: on And. 711.

915. ac memoriter, "(yes) and accurately," "in detail."

916. nam: on And. 43.

918. bonum: sarcastic. incedere: ironical ; "advancing majestically"; cf. Verg. Aen. 1. 46.

919. si dis placet, "please God"; cf. Ad. 476. n.

920. qui: on 911.

ACT V. SCENE 4.

Parmeno congratulates himself on his success in securing for his young master (Chaerea) the object of his desires. Amid these reflections he is accosted by Pythias, who feigns grief at what she pretends is Chaerea's wretched fate. He must suffer the penalty of the law, she says, for his misconduct, inasmuch as his victim has been proved to be an Athenian citizen. Parmeno is amazed and terrified, for he can see no escape from the necessity of making the facts known to Laches, the young man's father, at whose hands he may look for nothing but condign punishment.

924. astu: cf. Plaut. Capt. 221 nam doli non doli sunt, nisi astu colas, and n. on Heaut. 366.

926. quod, "the fact that." amorem, "passion."

927. a meretrice auara: denotes the source whence the virgo was obtained; hence "belonging to, etc." virginem: object of amabat (928).

928. quo: the antecedent is amorem. The abl. is causal. eum is resumptive and refers to amorem. confeci, "I accomplished," "I brought to its consummation."

930. palmarium, "a master-stroke."

933. mature, "in good season."

936. See App.

938. quam, "how." inhonestae, "repulsive."

939. ex iure hesterno, "steeped in (lit. 'taken from') yesterday's broth." 'Aut deest "madidum" aut "maceratum" aut "emollitum." nam apparet et sordidum esse, quia sit ater, et durum utique, qui ex iure hesterno sit comedendus'; Donatus.

940. saluti, "salvation." See App.

941-2. Said aside. in nos: on And. 758.

943-6. Spoken aloud, that Parmeno may hear, but as though Pythias were not aware of his presence. adulescentulum refers to Chaerea.

944. huc: i. e. to our house. quid est: Parmeno wonders what it all means.

946. quae exempla: i. e. ea exempla quae; "those cruel penalties which they say will be inflicted upon him." For indigna = "cruel," "dreadful," cf. Don. (Wessner, vol. i, p. 468).

947. nam: cf. And. 321. n.

952. hinc: i. e. of Athens.

953. istic miser, "that wretched fellow," i. e. Chaerea.

954. frater: i. e. Chremes.
 955. conligauit, etc.: cf. n. on And. 865.
 956. See App.
 957. sese: sc. facturum esse. solet: sc. fieri.
 962. erilem: Parmeno's master was the father of Phaedria and Chaerea.
 965. illi: i. e. Chaerea. ne neque . . et, "lest you both fail to be of service to him and."
 967. senem: see list of Personae.
 968. See App.
 969. huic: i. e. Chaerea.
 970. isti: sc. seni. omne, "all," "the whole story." ut, "how"; interrogative. See App.

ACT V. SCENE 5.

Laches (Demea) comes in from his place in the country, and is felicitating himself on thus being able to escape the ennui incidental to too long a stay in one place, when he meets Parmeno. Suspecting mischief he questions the slave as to his reason for being where he is. The latter is greatly confused, but makes a confession of his fears regarding Chaerea. Laches becomes very angry and rushes into Thais' house. Parmeno is left to meditate on his chances of punishment.

971. SE. = Senex. See App. The name does not appear in the text.
 973. satias: commonly used only in the nom. sing., the other cases being taken from satietas.
 976. saluom te aduenire gaudeo: the usual formula of greeting addressed to a person coming from abroad, or from the country to the city; cf. Ad. 80.
 978. satine salue, "is all well?" salue is explained by Don. as = integre, recte, commode, i. e. as an adv. Thus Plaut. Men. 776 saluen aduenis? Cf. And. 804 and Livy, I. 58. 7 with Lease's note. In Plaut. Trin. 1177 the answer recte lends support to the adv.; but some good editions have satine saluae here (sc. res sunt), and the evidence of the MSS. to the contrary can hardly be cited against the adjective, since the MSS. do not distinguish carefully between diphthongs and single vowels. See App.

980. huius: part. gen.; cf. Hearut. 551 and 961. n.; or huius here may be governed by causa (taken twice in the verse).
 985. hinc: with refer. to the household of Thais. See App.
 986. iam, "already"; explained by 693.
 987. in astu: Athens was called $\tau\delta \kappa\sigma\tau\upsilon$ in distinction from the Piraeus, and Laches is surprised to hear that his son (Chaerea) has left his post at the latter place and come "to town." Cf. the use of urbs = Roma.
 996. tantum est, "this is all."

998. necessus : cf. And. 372. n. id gaudeo : on And. 157 (operam do).

1001. insigne, "extraordinary," "remarkable." Transl. "make an example of them."

ACT V. SCENE 6.

Pythias returns from Thais' house to find Parmeno and enjoy his discomfiture. The trick she has played upon him has proved a success: Laches having entered Thais' house has seen his son in the dress of a eunuch and will punish Parmeno for suggesting the device to Chaerea, while the son also will be angry because Parmeno has betrayed him to his father.

1003. errans, "under a false impression," "full of his mistake"; very emphatic.

1004. solae : on And. 608. fuit : impers.; "I had the fun all to myself." scibam : Pythias knew there was nothing to fear, but she knew also what was passing in the mind of the old man — which the others did not.

1005. id : adverbial acc.; "for this purpose." Cf. n. on And. 414.

1011. etiam : the additory force is weakened to the point of being untranslatable, except by a vocal stress upon the modified word (primo); "and yet I formerly took you, etc." See Kirk in A. J. P. vol. xviii, p. 32. credidi : sc. te esse.

1013. paenitebat : sc. te. Transl. "were you then not satisfied with the crime?" For paenitet = parum uidetur, cf. Heaut. 72, Hec. 775, Plaut. Rud. 578 an te paenitet, In mari quod elaudi, hic in terra ni iterum elaudi? flagiti : on Ad. 101.

1014. miserum : i. e. Chaerea. insuper etiam : insuper reinforces the additory sense of etiam; "in addition to all this." The temporal force, however, is not expelled. See Kirk in A. J. P. vol. xviii, p. 29.

1015. illi : i. e. Chaerea. animi : on Ad. 666.

1015–6. uestem Illam indutum, "clothed in that dress." For this use of the acc. with the pass. of induo, see G. 338. Note 2.

1017. etiam : additory (or intensive), often in questions which imply that the utterance, or act, is an aggravation of some wrong done, an adding insult to injury. See Kirk in A. J. P. vol. xviii, p. 39.

1018. nimum : adv.; "very much so."

1019. inpune : on 852. habueris : the apodosis may be supplied from what precedes, viz., nimum lepidum est (ironical); or else reddam (= "I'll requite you," "I'll pay you back") is the apodosis. uerum, "yes?" Said with a mocking smile on her lips. credo : ironical.

1020. in diem, "for a (distant) day," "for a day (yet to come)."

1021. iam pendebis, "you'll be strung up presently." Slaves were tied to a high post and whipped. Cf. Phorm. 220. nobilitas flagitiis, "render notorious for rascalities."

1022. uterque: i. e. both Chaerea and his father.

1023. illo munere, "that present (which you made us)," i. e. Chaerea in the dress of a eunuch. For munerē see Introd. § 91. honus, "reward."

1024. meo indicio, "through betrayal of myself." sorex: a rat might be tracked by its squeak, but would escape if it kept quiet. Had Parmeno held his tongue he would not have found himself in the present predicament.

ACT V. SCENE 7.

Thraso appears, accompanied as usual by his "hanger-on," Gnatho, for the purpose of surrendering himself, heart and soul, to Thais; for this he finds a parallel in the conduct of Hercules. Chaerea bursts out upon him from Thais' house, which rouses in him further suspicion and dismay.

1027. qui, etc., "how (i. e. why) (should I serve her) less than Hercules served Omphale?"

1028. Said aside. commitigari: cf. Plaut. Mil. 1424 mitis sum equidem fustibus, where mitis is rendered by Tyrrell, "beaten to a jelly." Cf. also Aul. 422 ita fustibus sum mollior magis quam ullus cinaedus. sandalio: according to Lucian, Hercules was beaten by Omphale with a slipper: παιδεύος ὑπὸ τῆς Ὀμφάλης τῷ σανδάλῳ; see Dial. de Historia Scribenda.

1030. numquam etiam: on 360.

ACT V. SCENE 8.

Chaerea comes out of Thais' house in a state of great elation at the turn affairs have taken. Much to the surprise of Parmeno he thanks the latter for his assistance, and addresses him as the sole author of his happiness. He informs Parmeno that Pamphila has been discovered to be an Athenian citizen; that she has been betrothed to him (Chaerea), and that Thais has placed herself under his father's protection and is accordingly wholly devoted to Phaedria. Parmeno expresses his satisfaction at the situation, particularly as it will be a source of discomfort to Thraso. The latter declares himself to be utterly undone.

1034. quid: on And. 157.

1038. in tranquillo, "secure", lit. "in a calm (in calm water)." Cf. And. 845 in uado, and 480 in portu; Phorm. 689; Lucretius 5. 12.

1039. clientelam: a relation such as is implied in And. 924–925 ille . . . se. See Harper's Dict. Class. Lit., s. v. clientes.

1040. scilicet: cf. And. 950. n.

1041. quod, "on account of which"; cf. n. on 449.

1042. ubi ubi: on And. 684. uisam domum, "I'll go home and look for him."

1043. perpetuo perierim, "I'm done for forever." The idea is strengthened by the alliteration. Cf. Ad. 283.

1044–9. Chaerea, believing himself to be alone, gives full vent to his joyous feelings. It may be inferred from 1041 that he is expecting his brother Phaedria.

ACT V. SCENE 9.

Phaedria appears from Laches' house, having heard a full account of the situation from Parmeno. He and Chaerea congratulate each other, while Thraso is in utter despair. The captain begs Gnatho so to arrange matters for him that he may at least have a share in Thais' good graces. This Gnatho accomplishes by appealing to the characteristic greed of the young men, who are persuaded that it would not be a bad thing to make a friend of Thraso and thus take advantage of his good dinners and of his readiness to bestow favours upon Thais, whose natural extravagance it may be beyond their means to gratify. They decide accordingly to receive both Gnatho and the captain into their company. While this decision is undoubtedly due to the poet's desire to represent all parties as satisfied and happy at the conclusion of the play, it cannot but place both Phaedria and Chaerea in an unfavourable light before the spectators, who can hardly find pleasure in anything so unworthy as the pretence of friendship for purely sordid purposes.

1049. serua . . . nobis : for the sentiment cf. Hor. Sat. ii. 6. 5 nil amplius oro, Maia nate, nisi ut propria haec mihi munera faxis.

1051. credo : on And. 939.

1057. auferes : cf. n. on And. 610.

1058. efficio : pres. = fut., as often in colloquial Latin.

1059. inuocato : sc. mihi; "for me though uninvited." For the application of this word to parasites cf. Plaut. Capt. 69–76.

1060. adcingar, "I'll make ready (then)," more lit. "I'll gird myself (for the fray)."

1063. uobis fretus : a conciliatory reply; "relying on your goodness."

1064. platea : on And. 796. offendero : cf. 673, and the omission of the pronoun there. quod, etc., "as to the fact that, etc." Understand some such idea as "this will avail you naught." See And. 395 and n.

1065. hac : sc. via.

1066. uostrum : neut.; transl. "I do not recognize as yours so haughty (a manner of acting)." Cf. Plaut. Trin. 445 hau nosco tuom, and 123 non istuc meumst = "that is not my way."

1067. audite paucis: on And. 29.

1070. huius: cf. 980. n. Gnatho, with that keenness which is peculiar to his class, admits at once that what he is about to propose is intimately connected with his own interests, but suggests that his interests and theirs may be identical.

1073—4. cum illa ut lubenter uiuis, “as you are fond of (good) living in that lady’s company.” Cf. And. 889, Hec. 694, Ad. 477. illa = Thais.

1074. uictitas: with a play on uiuīs; transl. “and indeed you are exceedingly fond of good living.” bene lubenter = lubentissime.

1076. suppeditare possint, “may be at hand,” “may be available.”

1077. See App.

1080. neque . . . metuas, etc., “nor need you fear that the lady will fall in love with him”; i. e. there is no reason to fear: subj. of obligation or propriety. See my article in P. A. P. A. for July, 1901, vol. 32, p. lxxxvii. Cf. Elmer in Class. Rev. vol. xv, p. 159.

1081. hoc etiam: on And. 300. quod: i. e. id quod.

1082. “There is certainly not a man who entertains in better fashion nor more liberally.” For this use of accipio cf. Plaut. Pseud. 1253 ff., and the English ‘receive.’

1084. unum etiam: on And. 940. gregem, “company,” “society.”

1085. hoc saxum uorso, “have I been rolling this stone”, that is, “have I been engaged in this unprofitable labour.” Cf. the Gk. λίθον κυλινδεῖν. Gnatho refers to the occupation of a parasite by which he has hitherto been making his livelihood. The expression is proverbial, and is borrowed from the story of Sisyphus.

1087. hunc uobis prōpino, “I pass him on to you”; a metaphor derived from the custom of tasting the cup and handing it on to another. But the original meaning is largely forgotten, or its use with comedendum (“to be eaten out of house and home”) and deridendum (“to be made your laughing-stock”) would be false metaphor. It is for this reason that Bentley wrote ebibendum instead of deridendum.

1092. numquam etiam: on 360.

1093. in hoc: i. e. in Thrasone. elegantiam: cf. n. on 408.

1094. nil praeter promissum est, “everything is exactly as you promised,” lit. “nothing is contrary to your promise”; addressed to Gnatho.

Cantor: on And. 981.

APPENDIX TO NOTES ON THE EUNUCHUS

38. Probably spurious. The characters are evidently repeated from vss. 30—31, and are those whose existence in the play the argument is intended to justify. The line is bracketed by Dz.

113. potis erat: thus Umpf., Dz., Fleck., after Bentley. MSS. potuerat, which will not stand with scibat. On potis see And. 437. n.

117. For educere preferred to educare cf. 156, And. 274; n. on Ad. 48.

132. esse: thus Bentley, followed by Fleck., Umpf., Dz. The word is necessary both to the metre and to the syntax.

188. Not in A; bracketed by Dz.; but approved by Don. and accepted by Fleck. — rightly.

190. mea: accepted by Fleck. and Dz.

212. qui is the reading of A.

267. Thaidis of the MSS. is undoubtedly a gloss, probably for huius (eius). Dr. Minton Warren (A. J. P. vol. iii, p. 482) shows that Bentley proposed to read stare eius (not huius stare, as in Prof. Tyrrell's footnote), and thus anticipated Hauler's huius (eius) stare. Dziatzko's objection (see Adn. Crit.) to huius (eius), viz., that Parmeno would hardly have been standing at that time before the house of Thais, is strained, and his conjecture is inferior to that of Hauler, since it ignores altogether the existence of MSS. Thaidis.

300. dicit yields a poorer meaning than dices, which was the reading of Euphranius.

312. Dz. has est adeo, but rejects est after res. Fleckeisen's sic adeo keeps closest to the MSS., and makes excellent sense. rés est: Tyrrell rést. ubi = in qua.

325. auorsae: I prefer the oxymoron presented by aduorsae (aduersae).

419. Perhaps a better pointing than that of the text would be quid? illud, etc. quid? arrests attention; illud anticipates quo pacto, etc.

560-1. The text is very uncertain. 'quid est festus dies hominis?' says Eogr. Many efforts at emendation have been made by editors, for which see Umpf., Fleck., Dz. (with Adn. Crit.), and Fabia. Dz.'s judgment here shows perhaps the least inclination to depart from the MSS. tradition.

588. in hominem: to object to this reading on the ground of its inaccuracy is to be too literal. Whatever the form of the disguise assumed by the god, it is the fact of his taking on human nature for the time being, that is of interest to Chaerea. Donatus saw this when he made his comment, 'in hominem, id est in hominis audaciam atque flagitia.' Consequently Bentley's emendation (aurum uel pretium) is needless.

624-5. Bentley's puer, i is a probable conjecture, 'commended by Dz. who follows Guyet in rejecting exclamat. puere is an archaic vocative; cf. Plaut. Asin. 891, Most. 949, 990. Thus also Hec. 719.'

662. It is natural to seek to avoid a change to trochaic metre in this verse, although Tyrrell makes it. Yet illuc is shown by Engelbrecht (Stud. Terent., p. 69) to be all but impossible. A fair compromise would be quo illinc, approved by Engelbrecht. See footnote.

699–700. If Bentley is followed, the two verses will scan as a single iambic senarius; thus Dz. and Fleck. See footnote.

710. MSS. etiam nunc non credis indignis nos esse inrisas modis, which will not scan. Fleck. reads étiam nunc non crédis nos indignis inrisás modis, and thus retains nunc which is more important here than esse, and credis which is preferable to credes (the conjecture of Bothe). Dz. omits nunc and reads credes. In this he is followed by Tyrrell. But credis is quite possible, in view of the ictus of the foot, and is the true reading.

733. sed . . . uenit: the interrog. nature of the sentence is noticed by Don., and -ne, suggested by Hare, assists the metre and is accepted by Umpf., Dz., Fleck., and others.

745. quasi is retained by Umpf. who punctuates qui? quasi istuc. . . .

912. supposuit: see Engelbrecht (Stud. Terent., p. 47), and n. on And.
729.

936. Condemned by Guyet, Bentley, Dz.; retained by Umpf. and Fleck.

940. MSS. salus est is retained by Umpf., Fleck. (1st ed.), Wag., Fabia, — rightly.

956. atque equidem: MSS. But Bentley reads et quidem and Umpf. atque quidem, on the mistaken assumption that equidem belongs only to the first person. Cf. Fabia's n. on this verse.

968. dicam: repeated metri causa, by most good commentators.

970. omne ordine: thus also Bentley, Umpf., Wag., Dz., Fleck.

971. In the MSS. scene-heading A has Demea, & Luches. See Fabia's n.

978. salue: thus most good MSS. But Umpf., Wag., Fleck. read saluas, with slight MSS. support. See note.

985. hinc: thus also Fleck., Wag., Dz.; but MSS. hic makes good sense = “at Thais’ house.” See Fabia’s note.

1077. Don. read possit . . . ad omnia haec with the MSS. His note is, ‘aut pro “suppeditari” aut deest “se,” ut (Verg. Aen. II. 235) “accingunt” [sc. se].’ The subject of possit is Thraso.

PHORMIO

DIDASCALIA

Cf. n. on the didascaliae to the previous plays.

1. Phormio: see Introd. § 48. Ludis Romanis: see Introd. § 74.
6. facta quarta, "produced fourth in order." The second and third performances of the Hecyra took place in 160 b. c., the year after that in which the Phormio was brought out. See Introd. § 47. As the first performance of the Hecyra was a failure it may have been disregarded by the person who composed this notice. In that case the place of the Phormio in the order of production will correspond with the numeral here given, as well as with that assigned to it in the Codex Bembinus, and by Donatus. See the Dziatzko-Hauler edition of the Phormio (Introduction, p. 17), and Watson's article in T. A. P. A. p. 150 f.

PERIOCHA

Cf. introductory n. on the Per. to the Andria.

7. cum: inserted here rather than at the beginning of vs. 8, by Dziatzko and Fleckeisen, to avoid hiatus in uisam Ántipho. But Elmer (p. 156 of his edition of the Phormio) has shown that this departure from the universal testimony of the MSS. is unnecessary, to say the least, because the hiatus 'may be easily paralleled' from Plautus.

12. adgnitam: on And., Per. 11.

PERSONAE

See remarks on the personae of the Andria. In Codices Vaticanus, Ambrosianus, Parisinus, and Dunelmensis (see Introd. pp. 61, 63) there are pictures of masks, on the page following the didascalia of each play. The expression of each mask is in keeping with the character in the drama which it is intended to fit. All the characters in each play are thus represented. The masks belonging to the Phormio have been reproduced from the Vaticanus, and published in a libretto translation of the play by M. H. Morgan (Cambridge, Mass., 1894), together with the miniatures of the same codex, representing the dramatis personae of the Phormio, as these might appear in the several scenes, and as they may have been posed or grouped for some important moment of each scene. These miniatures have been published also in Harvard Studies, vol. xiv. (at the back), together with a paper relating to them by John Calvin Watson. Cf. the article by John W. Basore on the 'Scenic Value of the Miniatures,' in Studies in Honor of

B. L. Gildersleeve (Johns Hopkins Press, 1902). A selection of these miniatures is given in Laming's ed. of the Phormio (London, 1902).

PROLOGUS

See introductory remarks on the Prologue to the Andria.

1. postquam: with accessory notion of cause, "since," as in Ad. 765 and Prol. 1. poëta uetus: on And. 7. poëtam: i. e. Terence.

2. transdere: the spelling is based on C. I. L. 1. 198, 54 and 58 transdito, and on Donatus' note, 'transdere' ueteres sonantius, quod nos lenius tradere,' etc. (Wessner, vol. ii, p. 350).

4. qui refers to poëta uetus. hic: i. e. Terence.

5. scriptura leui: on And. Prol. 12. Observe the emphasis produced by the chiasmus.

6. scripsit, "has described." The subject is Terence.

6-8. insanum adulescentulum, etc., "a frenzied youth gazing at a hind in flight and the hounds in full pursuit, while she (the hind) implores him with tears to come to her assistance." These words probably refer to some scene in a play of Lanuuinus, in which the youthful lover imagines that he sees the object of his affections, in the form of a hind pursued by dogs, and imploring his protection. Such a scene would be objectionable in a comedy, on account of its startling character. Ter. is careful to avoid situations suited to tragedy—a fact noted by Euanthius (4th cent. A. D.) in his preface to the Terentian dramas.

8. eam plorare: cf. Shak., As You Like It, Act ii, Scene 1, 'poor sequester'd stag, That from the hunter's aim had ta'en a hurt, . . . and the big round tears Cours'd one another down his innocent nose In piteous chase.'

9. quod si, "but if." intellegeret: sc. poëta uetus. stetit, "maintained its ground," "succeeded." As a rule, the indic. is found after quom in early Latin, whether its use be temporal or otherwise. Cf. 23 and Eun. 243. The subj. of indirect discourse might be looked for here, but the indic. presents the idea as a fact and thus lends force to the argument. See on And. 152. For the length of the final syl. see Introd. § 91. noua: sc. fabula. The adj. refers to the first performance.

10. actoris: i. e. the leading actor of the troupe or company, who was also the dominus gregis or manager.

12. hoc and sic refer to what follows.

14. prōlogum: ὁ, although short in πρόλογος. The Latin prō is responsible. Cf. prōpino (προπίνω), Eun. 1089. The sense is that Ter. would have had no reason for writing a prologue had not Lanuuinus attacked him. nouos: sc. poëta, i. e. Terence, who was younger than Lanuuinus. On the nom. sing. in -os see A. & G. 46. Note; H. 83. 10.

15. quem diceret, "to deliver"; we should expect scriberet; see Dz., Adn. Crit. See App. nisi haberet, etc., "without having some one to abuse"; a second protasis, repeating the first, as frequently in Latin.

16. is . . . habeat, "let him take home to himself this answer."

16-7. in . . . positam, "that the prize (for literary composition) is offered to all."

17. artem musicam, "the pursuit of poetry," with special reference, however, to the dramatic art; see on Heaut. Prol. 23. tractant, "take up," "practise." In classical Latin we should expect the subj. in a rel. cl. in indirect discourse. In Ter., dependence on an infin. with subject acc. is seldom sufficient in itself to occasion a change of mood, if the indic. would be the mood of direct discourse.

18. reicere: trisyllabic.

19. As Lanuinus has endeavoured to drive Terence off the stage ("from his studies to starvation") by his criticisms, the latter is obliged in self-defence to reply to his accusations. It is an answer however, not an attack, that is intended: the other man began the fight; reprisals therefore are justified.

20. benedictis si certasset, "had he carried on the rivalry by means of compliments." audisset bene, "he would have received compliments in return," more lit., "he would have heard himself well mentioned." audire bene is similar to the Gk. καλῶς ἀκούειν or ἀκούειν εὖ. Thus also male audire = κακῶς ἀκούειν; cf. Hec. 600.

21. "Let him understand that what he has administered (to our poet) has been repayed to him in kind." For id see App. sibi esse: see Introd. § 91.

23. quom, "albeit," "although"; see on 9 (stetit), but the subj. occurs in 733, Ad. 166. Cf. Dz.-Hauler's n. on 22 f. de se, "on his own part."

24. animum attendite, like animum aduertere, governs an object. Cf. animum induxi (And. 572 and n.).

25. Epidicazomenon: see Introd. § 48. The word signifies "the claimant," and has reference to the fact that Phormio makes claim in an Athenian law-court that under the law of Athens Antipho must marry Phanium. uocant: i. e. "people call" — unless we read Graeci, with Fleckeisen.

26. hic: i. e. Terence.

27. partis: on Heaut. Prol. 1. qui: cf. Heaut. 195. n.

29. uoluntas, "favour."

32. grex: cf. n. on 10 and Heaut. 45. motus loco est, "was driven from the stage." The reference is to the 'failure' of the Hecyra at its first production. See Introd. §§ 47 and 73.

33. quem locum, "which place (upon the stage)."

34. Owing to the "skill" of the actor and stage-manager, L. Ambiuius Turpio, as well as to the general "affability" and "good-will" of the audiences, the Heauton timorumenos and the Eunuchus were successful.

ACT I. SCENE 1.

The scene represents a street in Athens, leading, on the spectator's right, to the market-place (forum), on the left to the harbour.¹ At the back of the stage stand the houses of Chremes, Demipho, and Dorio, in the order named, beginning on the left.

Dauos enters from the right, bearing a small bag of money which represents the balance of an account held by Dauos to the credit of Geta, his fellow slave. The latter has asked Dauos to collect it and close the account, since he is in need of the money for a special purpose. The nature of this purpose is the subject of Dauos' speculations. Dauos is a πρόσωπον προτατικόν, i. e. a character employed merely to introduce the play, and assist in the explanation of the plot. He appears only in the πρότασις or that part of the play which precedes the action proper, ἐπίτρασις. Hence he disappears forever at vs. 152. Of like nature are Sosia in the Andria and Philotis in the Hecyra, and Grumio in the Mostellaria of Plautus. Cf. introductory note to And., Act I, Scene 1, fin. See Fay's Most., p. 67.

35. amicus summus: on And. 970. popularis, "fellow-citizen," "fellow-townsman." This is the meaning in Eun. 1081 and Ad. 155, the only other places in Ter. where the word is found. The rendering "fellow-countryman," which rests on the kindred nationality of the Daci and Getae (Dauos, i. e. Dauus = Dacus), is less likely to be correct. Though the slave was not technically a citizen, yet he might speak of himself as such, euphemistically; especially as it was the custom of slaves often to identify themselves with their masters. Some commentators take the word in the sense of "fellow," "comrade," "chum."

36-8. erat . . . nummorum, "there had long been in my hands a trifling balance on his little account." The diminutives lend a pathetic colouring to the statement. rēlīcūōm: tetrasyllabic; thus always in Plaut. and Ter. See Lachmann on Lucr. V. 679.

38. conficerem: sc. oravit.

39. eius: i. e. Geta. filium: i. e. Antiphon.

40. ei, etc., "it is as a present for her, I suppose, that this is being scraped together."

43. quod ille: see Introd. § 95.

48-4. "What the poor fellow has scarce saved, ounce by ounce, from his month's dole, at the cost of his very life." demensum was the measure of food or rations which the slave received each month for his own sustenance. According to Plaut. Stich. 60, the apportionment was made on the Kalends, and Donatus says that it amounted to four modii (about a bushel) of corn.

¹ See the Dzitzko-Hauler ed. of this play, Introd. p. 36, and for another view of this question cf. introductory note to Act I, Scene 1 of the Adelphoe.

That an equivalent in money was sometimes given to the slave appears to be not unlikely. Cf. Seneca, Ep. 80. 7; Cato, R. R. §§ 56–59; Plaut. Trin. 944 and the editions.

44. suom defrudans genium: i. e. denying himself reasonable comforts. A man's genius was conceived to be a sort of attendant spirit associated with his life from the cradle to the grave. It was divine, but not immortal, and its character and moods were identified with those of the man himself. Perhaps the nearest English parallel is the word 'soul' as used in the parable of the rich man (St. Luke xii. 16), 'I will say to my soul, Soul, thou hast much goods laid up for many years; take thine ease, eat, drink, and be merry.' Cf. Hor. Od. 3. 17. 14 cras genium mero curabis. Cf. also Plaut. Aul. 724 egomet me defraudavi, animumque meum geniumque meum. The word is from the root GEN- in gigno.

46. partum: sc. sit. The omission of the copula when it would be in the subj. mood is rare. Here the exclamatory nature of the subordinate sentence renders the ellipsis more natural. Besides, if written in this (early) Latin, the copula could well be est.

47. ferietur alio munere, "will be struck (by) for another gift," "will be hit again"; a metaphor natural to a slave who had had experience of the lash.

49. ubi initiabunt: sc. puerum; a fourth occasion for getting money out of Geta. The reference is to the initiation of the child into certain religious mysteries, in accordance with Athenian custom; cf. Donatus (Wessner, vol. ii, p. 363). See App.

50. causa, "an excuse," "pretext." uideon: on And. Prol. 17.

ACT I. SCENE 2.

Geta appears from the house of Demipho. In the conversation that ensues between the slaves the situation is unfolded. Chremes and Demipho, two old men and brothers, have left their respective sons, Phaedria and Antipho, in charge of Geta, during their absence in far countries. Chremes has gone to Lemnos, Demipho to Cilicia. Geta, who belongs to the family of Demipho, has tried to do his duty by his old master, and to keep the young men within reasonable bounds. For this he has received harsh treatment at their hands, has given up the task in consequence, and is now bent on aiding them as much as possible even in their follies. Phaedria has fallen in love with a music-girl belonging to a certain slave-merchant of the town, whose name is Dorio. Antipho has become enamoured of a young woman named Phanium, who, he has reason to believe, is an Athenian citizen. Through the assistance of the parasite, Phormio, he has been enabled to marry her, and is now in dread of his father's displeasure. In this dread Geta shares, for reasons of his own; but he resolves to bear the consequences like a man.

51. rufus, "red-head." Geta is looking for Dauos, who wore a red wig. Slaves were commonly represented on the stage as having hair of a flaming red colour. Note the aposiopesis caused by the interruption of Dauos, who sees Geta as the latter turns back toward the house to call to some one within.

52. obuiam conabar: the verb is used absolutely (cf. And. 676, Heaut. 240) and is to be joined closely with obuiam; "I was making every effort to find (more lit. 'to come and meet') you." We may however understand fieri, esse, ire or the like; cf. 617. em: on And. 416.

53. lectum est: lit. "it has been picked out"; with allusion to the quality and weight of the coins, not their number—"it's good money." Cf. Plaut. Pseud. 1149 accipe: hic sunt quinque argenti lectae numeratae minae. conueniet . . . debui, "the number (of coins) will be found to agree with the amount that I owed you"; i. e. conueniet tanto (dat.) quantum. Cf. And. 366 conuenire nuptiis.

54. amo te: on Heaut. 360. neclexisse: sc. te; see on And. Prol. 14. habeo gratiam: cf. n. on 894.

55. adeo: on Heaut. 113.

59. modo ut: on And. 409. abi: contemptuous; "off with you," "go to"; see on 994. sis: on Heaut. 369.

60-1. quoius: i. e. cuius, which became the correct form as early as the first quarter-century B. C. perspexeris: pf. subj. in a cl. of characteristic, which also conveys a notion of opposition (adversative); "do you fear to trust a (mere) secret to one whose fidelity you have had proof of in a matter of money?" Cf. B. App. 372 (371).

61. ubi: relative, quid being interrogative; "and what profit have I in this matter?"

62. hanc . . . dico: operam dicare is more emphatic than operam dare. Transl. "I am wholly at your service."

63. Chremem: more common in Ter. than Chremetem. Cf. n. on And. 368.

65. tam quam te = tam bene eum noui quam te.

66. illi: i. e. Chremes. nostro: i. e. Demipho.

67. antiquom, "of long standing." Cf. Plaut. Mil. 751 ueterem atque antiquam, and Tyrrell's note there.

68. modo . . . pollicens: lit. "promising him only not (all but) mountains of gold," i. e. "promising him everything short of mountains of gold." The reference is to the business opportunities which such a visit would afford. See Knapp, in Class. Phil. vol. ii, on Travel in Ancient Times, etc. Yet Donatus may be right in explaining the words as a reference to the presents which hospites were wont to give to those who availed themselves of the hereditary right of hospitium, when on a journey to a foreign country. 'hospites hospitibus multa donabant' says Don., and the custom did not begin nor end with the Greeks and Romans.

70. regem . . . oportuit: Dauos means that, if he had been a "rich man," he would have made a better use of his wealth than to be ever trying to add to it. For rex in the sense of "patron," "man of wealth and standing," cf. 338, and see instances in Horace and Juvenal. The English 'king' is similarly employed.

72. magistrum: i. e. as paedagogus, a word that would not suit the metre. It was the business of the παιδαγωγοί to exercise a general supervision over the conduct of their young masters. prouinciam: on Heaut. 516.

73. mi usus uenit, "such was my experience." Cf. n. on Heaut. 553.

74. memini relinqu me, "I am sure that I was left in charge." The pres. infin., not the pf., is regular with memini when the latter expresses recollection of personal experience. deo = genio; see on 44.

76. scapulas perdidī, "I got my shoulder-blades ruined," i. e. I got well beaten for my pains. Cf. Plaut. Epid. 91 corium perdidī.

77. istaec: sc. scapulae; "those shoulders of yours." Like haec (see on And. 328), istaec may be fem. pl. Cf. Plaut. Men. 520 istaec contumeliae. If it is neut. pl. here, it refers to what Geta has just said.

78. aduorsum stimulum calces: sc. iactare; i. e. "to kick against the pricks." The proverb is Greek and is found in Aeschylus, Euripides, Pindar, and the Acts of the Apostles, xxvi. 14. Cf. Aesch. Ag. 1624 πρὸς κέντρα μὴ λάκτις.

79. obsequi quae uellent: i. c. obsequi eis omnia quae eis obsequi me uellent, "to humour them in all things in which they wished me to humour them." obsequi here and elsewhere in early Latin takes an acc. of the thing; cf. Ad. 990, Plaut. Asin. 76 id ego percupio obsequi gnato meo. The subj. seems to be due to the influence of the infin. uti foro, "to work the market"; a proverb signifying to act in accordance with circumstances and one's own best interests.

80. noster refers to Antipho. quicquam strengthens nil. So quisquam lends emphasis to nemo in Hec. 67. The pleonasm is colloquial. The omission of the verb (fecit) is common enough in hasty narrative.

82. perdite, "desperately."

83. inpurissimo: on Ad. 183.

86. Iudum, "the music-school." By sending her to such a place the slave-merchant would increase the marketable value of the citharistria.

87. otiosi, "having little else to do."

88. exaduorsum ei loco, "exactly opposite that spot." Elsewhere in Ter. (97, Ad. 584) exaduorsum is used absolutely; cf. Plaut. Bacch. 835. But in Ad. 584 the Codex Bembinus has ei aduorsum for which Fleckeisen reads ei exaduorsum.

89. tonstrina: barber-shops, then as now, were favourite places of meeting for idlers, gossips, and scandal-mongers. Cf. the London coffee-houses of Dr. Johnson's day, and Hor. Sat. 1. 7. 3 opinor omnibus et lippis notum et tonsoribus esse. Cf. also Plautus, passim, and Harvard Studies, vol. ii, p. 42.

91. illi: the locative of ille. See on And. 637.

92. mirarier: hist. infin. For the form see on And. 203 (deludier).

95. vicinia: loc. ; a sort of appositive to hic. Parallel is the use of the acc. (as if in apposition) with huc in And. 70. But the partitive gen. with adverbs (as in Heaut. 110, Plaut. Capt. 182) is a use to which hic vicinia may also be legitimately referred.

96. lamentari: for the acc. and infin. with a verb of perception cf. Prol. 7. In Classical Latin such verbs often take an acc. and prtcpl. — a constr. very rare in early Latin.

97. ea: i. e. mater mortua. sita erat, "had been laid out." exaduorsum: i. e. opposite the outer door of the house, so that the body was visible from the street. illi: i. e. the virgo just mentioned.

98. extra, "except." Thus also Plaut. Amph. 833 extra unum te — a use belonging to the sermo familiaris.

99. adiutaret funus: cf. Hec. 359 onera adiuta. miseritumst: sc. me.

102. uisere: infin. of purpose after the verb ire. This infin. occurs, in Ter., also after dare, introire, and mittere. alius: i. e. Phaedria.

103. sodes: on And. 85. uenimus: notice the change from the pres. to the pf. (aorist) tense and back again, and for the reverse cf. 135, 943, And. 128.

104. dices: indef. subject as in And. 135. The mood is potential; see B. 280. 3, and B. App. 366. b. (365. b.). A similar description of a maiden all forlorn appears in Heaut. 285–291.

105. Cf. Heaut. 289. n.

110. satis, "quite"; cf. Heaut. 523. n. scita: on And. 486. noster uero: note the aposiopesis, which, as Donatus says, 'succurrit, quotiens uerba rebus minora sunt' (Wessner, vol. ii, p. 379).

112. recta: sc. uia.

113. sibi ut eius faciat copiam, "that she give him an opportunity to meet her." eius: i. e. Phanium. illa: i. e. the old woman. enim, "indeed"; on And. 91. se negat: sc. copiam facturam esse.

114. aequom: neut. substantive.

116. id: i. e. uxorem ducere.

117. ageret: delib. subj.; "what he was to do," "what to do." nescire: historical infinitive.

120. indotatam: on Ad. 345, Phorm. 938.

122. quid fiat repeats the previous quid fit as though it were made the object of rogasne understood (indirect quotation); but no definite ellipsis of rogasne was really felt. Cf. Elmer's note, and see on 382 (nossem).

123. confidens: on And. 855. qui: abl. or locative of the (indef.)

pron., used here like ut or utinam to introduce a wish (curse). Cf. Plaut. Men. 451 qui illum di omnes perduint, and n. on And. Prol. 6. perduint: on 976 (duint).

125. Iex: on Ad. 652 and And. 71.

127. tibi scribam dicam, "I will bring suit against you." Cf. 329, 439, 668, and the Gk. γράφω δίκην.

129. qui fuerit pater: later Latin would ordinarily have quis here.

130. qui cognata, "how related"; see on And. 150 and Prol. 6.

131–2. quod. commodum refers to the following clause, quom . . . refelles; "since you will not refute any of these charges, which circumstance will be to my profit and convenience, I shall gain my suit of course." Some editors place a comma at configam and a period at commodum, thus making quod restrictive, as "all these things I'll make up, so far as shall suit my convenience."

133. paratae lites: on Ad. 96 (nullum factum) and 792. lites = "quarrel," "row." quid mea: sc. rēfert or interest; "what care I?"

134. iocularē audaciam: on And. 782; transl. "jolly cheek!" (Laming).

135. homini: i. e. Antipho. uentumst: sc. ad iudices (129). uinci-mur, "we are worsted (in the suit)"; cf. n. on 103 (uenimus).

137. quid te futurumst, "what will become of you?" See on And. 143.

138. "What fortune shall have in store for me I'll bear with equanimity." Note the play on the verb ferre, the stately effect of the alliteration, and the comic touch lent to the scene by the incongruity between the slave and his high-flown sentiments. For the idea cf. Phorm. 429–430; Hor. Od. 1. 24. 19–20; Verg. Aen. V. 710 (with Knapp's note). placet, "quite right!"

140. laudo, "fine!" "splendid!" precatorem: cf. Heaut. 976. n. adeam, "I'd better go"; subj. of obligation or propriety. See Elmer in Class. Rev. vol. xii, p. 202. For other views of this subj. see W. G. Hale, The Anticipatory Subjunctive in Greek and Latin, p. 4. note; and Elmer's note on this passage in his ed. of the Phormio. Cf. Morris on Plaut. Trin. 1136; Fay on Most. 848. In any case the thought is ironical. For the idea expressed in 140–142 cf. Petronius, Cena Trin., § 49. 10–14.

141. amitte, "let him off." Cf. 175, 414. n.

143. uel occidito: freely, "do what you like to him." See on And. 680 (uel).

144. paedagogus: i. e. Phaedria, who is thus ironically designated because he was wont to escort the girl daily to the music-school, and back again to her home. See 86. qui citharistram: sc. sectatur (86).

145. sic: on And. 804, Heaut. 523. 'sic' dicendum est cum aliquo gestu, says Donatus.

146. fortasse: hiatus is permitted because the dialogue is taken up by the other speaker. See Introd. § 97.

147. non dum, "not yet."

148. quoad = ad quod tempus; cf. 462, 524 (dies) ad quam. Thus we often say loosely, "when are you looking for (expecting), etc.?" certum: inner or adv. acc.; "I have no positive knowledge." Cf. Eun. 111, 921. In And. 929, Hec. 324, scio already has an object in the acc. Hence in these passages certo is used instead of certum.

150. portidores, "custom-house officers"; they collected the portoria or harbour-dues, by contrast with the publicani or farmers of the revenue. They were charged with the inspection of letters also, in case these were of the sort to create suspicion. Cf. Plaut. Trin. 793 f. and 809 f.

151. See on Eun. 191. ut bene sit tibi (sc. uolo) has the force of a polite "no."

152. heus: on 903. hoc prodit: on And. 386. da hoc: i. e. the purse. Dorcio: Dorcium is the name of Geta's wife (contubernialis).

ACT I. SCENE 3.

Antipho and Phaedria appear upon the stage, probably from the house of Chremes. Each is eager to explain to the other the reason for his own unhappiness. The former is ill at ease because the gratification of his wishes has placed him in an attitude of defiance toward his father whom he now dreads to meet. The latter is wretched in having to contend with a grasping slave-merchant to secure the object of his affections.

Verses 153–163 constitute a canticum, and are sung to the music of the flute. The metre varies, but consists chiefly of trochaic octonarii. Verse 163 is a clausula. The iambic octonarii which follow are more subdued in tone, but the notes of the tibia accompany the words of the actor throughout the scene. See Introd. §§ 61 and 84.

153. adeon: on And. 245.

154. ut: on And. 830. aduenti: on And. 365. The gen. follows in mentem ueniat exactly as it would follow meminerim, "I am mindful of"; cf. Plaut. Rud. 685 miserae quom uenit in mentem mihi mortis, metus membra occupat.

155. quod ni, "but if . . . not"; cf. n. on Prol. 9. quod seems to refer loosely to the previous sentences, in the sense of "as to which" (acc. of reference or specification). Cf. 157 quod utinam.

156. See App. consciū's = conscius es.

157. quod: on 155.

159. non potitus essem, "I should n't have got possession (of the girl)"; sc. si non fecisset. illos aliquot dies, "for those few days." The forms aliquot and quot were not of regular occurrence until the beginning of the Empire. But see on And. 248.

160. audio is ironical and suggests impatience. Cf. 947.

161. dum connects what follows with angeret animum. consuetudinem, "marriage."

162. dolet may have a cl. for its subject, as here; sometimes a neut. pron. anticipating the cl., as in Plaut. Capt. 152 huic illud dolet, quia nunc remissus est edundi exercitus. More common in Ter. is a simple pron. in the neut. gender, used as subject; cf. Eun. 93; Ad. 272, 451, 682, 733. Such an impers. use of dolet and other verbs of feeling is more frequent in Plaut. than in later writers.

165. ita . . . ament, "so help me heaven." Cf. 883 and 954, where bene is omitted, as often in this formula, which is to be read parenthetically. The following ut-cl. is one of purpose and depends on depecisci.

166. morte: abl. of price with depecisci. conicito, "compare." Thus Gk. συμβάλλειν. In apposition with cetera are the two dependent questions which follow.

168. ut ne addam, "not to mention"; see on And. 259. quod, "the fact that." Cf. Ad. 305. sumptu: sumptus is a sore point with Phaedria; cf. 145–146. liberalem: on And. 330.

169. quod: on 168. palam: emphatic. Phaedria means that Antipho has a wife whom he need not be ashamed to present openly to the world.

170. ni unum desit, "were you to have one thing," expresses a possible exception to the negative implied in beatus = "not unhappy."

171. mihi est: sc. res.

172. plerique omnes: on And. 55. Transl. "that's the nature, mostly, of us all." nostri: from noster, not nos; "we are dissatisfied with our very own"; rather than "we think ourselves failures" (R. C. Jebb). The sentiment suggests Hor. Sat. I. 1. 1 f.

173. fortunatus, "in a situation to be envied."

174. etiam: temporal; "still."

175. retinere, etc., "hold to your love or let it (her) go"; see App.

178. ipsus: on And. 360.

ACT I. SCENE 4.

Geta has seen Demipho at the harbour, and comes to inform Antipho of his father's arrival. Antipho abandons himself to despair, but is urged by Geta to assume a little courage even though he have it not. The young man makes a show of putting on a bold front, but when he sees his father actually at hand he loses his self-command and goes off, leaving Phaedria and Geta to cope with the situation. This scene begins, as does the previous one, with a canticum, which continues as far as verse 196.

179. nullu's = nullus es; cf. n. on And. 599. Geta is talking to himself and fails to notice Antipho and Phaedria. celere: adv., as in Plaut. Cure.

283 ita nunc subito propere et celere obiectumst mihi negotium. Donatus makes it an adjective.

180. Freely, "so unprepared are you now for the stupendous evils which suddenly threaten you." Instead of te we should expect tibi, or in te, for inpendeo is intrans. in classical Latin. But the direct acc. seems to have been common with this verb in early Latin; e. g. Lucilius (Marx, 1227) has quae res me inpendet, and Lucretius (l. 326) mare quae inpendent. Other verbs too are found in Plaut. to be followed by an acc., which are intransitive in the classical period. A list of them is given by Brix, Mil. 1047.

183. Said aside to Phaedria.

184. "Moreover, I've (just) a moment's time for this business: my master is at hand."

185. quod quom audierit, "and when he hears of it," i. e. of Antipho's marriage, to which reference is made by Geta, indirectly, in 182 and 184. eius: i. e. Demipho.

186. laterem lauem, "I should lose my labour," lit. "I should be washing a brick." Cf. πλύνθων πλύνεις, and Seneca, Controv. X. Praef. 11 non intellegis te laterem lauare.

187. animi: on Heaut. 727.

188. absque eo esset, "if it had not been for him," "but for him." Cf. Plaut. Trin. 832 absque foret te, and colloquial English, without you had helped me. 'Properly absque is a prep., and the impf. subj. is an independent concessive subj.; then by association absque comes to have concessive or conditional force, retaining also its function as prep.' Thus Morris on Plaut. Capt. 754. In general this prep. is used by Plaut. and Ter. only before a personal or demonstrative pron., and with the impf. subj. Cf. Dz.-Hauler's n. Cf. also Knapp in T. A. P. A. vol. xxv, p. 16. Here the expression constitutes the protasis to the apodosis in the next verse.

189. uidissem = prouidissem; "I should have looked out for."

190. conuasassem, "I should have scraped together," i. e. out of my master's property. Hence the act would have been a theft. This comports with the definition of the word given by Nonius: furto omnia colligere. protinam: an early Latin form = protinus.

191. See App. Antipho is speaking aside to Phaedria.

193. nescio quod: cf. n. on And. 340. Here quod (instead of quid) makes the expression adjectival.

194. ibi plurimumst, "he's mostly there."

195. hem: on And. 416. Vss. 194-195 (without sanusne es) constitute a single iambic octonarius. Cf. Conradt, Metr. Comp., p. 128 f.

196. satis pro imperio (sc. loqueris): "you speak with authority enough, whoever you are." Antipho's peremptory tone suggests to Geta that there may be something more in the command than the mere attempt of some joker to delay a slave in haste. Cf. 848. For pro cf. n. on And. 675. uolul obuiam: sc. ire; see on 52.

197. cedo: on And. 150.

199. See App.

200. nam quod = quod nam. See on And. 321.

201. Phanium (voc.); the name of Antipho's bride, whom the young man now apostrophizes, as Clinia apostrophizes Antiphila in Heaut. 398.

203. fortis fortuna adiuuat: a proverb of frequent occurrence and wide application. Cf. Verg. Aen. X. 285 audentis fortuna iuuat; Cic. Tusc. II. 11 fortis . . . fortuna adiuuat, ut est in uetere prouerbio; Soph. Fr. 12 (Brunck) οὐ τοῖς ἀθέμοις η τυχὴ συλλαμβάνει. Cf. also Seneca's Medea, 158; Pliny, Epp. vi. 16. 11.

204. apud me, "in my senses." Cf. n. on And. 408, and the Gk. ἐμαντῷ εἰμι. nunc quom maxume: on And. 823. ut sis: sc. apud te.

206. commeruisse: on And. 139. inmutarier: middle voice; "change myself," "change my nature." I cannot assume a virtue (confidence) if I have it not, says Antipho.

208. quom possum, etc., "since I cannot (do) this, I should be the less able (to do) that." See on Prol. 9 (stetit). hoc nil est, "all this amounts to nothing," or "it's no use." But hoc, says Don., may refer contemptuously to Antipho. Parallels exist in Latin, Greek, and English. Illicet: cf. n. on Heaut. 974; Eun. 54. Here transl. "let us go," or "come along."

210. This verse and the next are often supposed to afford some slight evidence at least that in the time of Plaut. and Ter. masks were not in common use at Rome. Cf. 57, 890; And. 839, 878; Plaut. Men. 828. See Introd. § 67. quid si adsimulo, "what if I make believe?" That is, what if I make a preteuce of being bold, and assume an air of confidence? Cf. Molière, Les Fourberies de Scapin, Act I. Scene 4. em: on And. 416.

212. ut respondeas: understand some imv. such as fac, uide; "see that you answer him word for word, tit for tat." uerbo and pari are datives.

213. ne . . . protelet, "lest in his wrath he should smite (overwhelm) you with his furious sayings." The verb is connected, perhaps, with telum, and one of the synonyms suggested by Don. is percutiat. The metaphor seems to be that of a combat followed by a rout. scio: said absently, as Don. points out (Wessner, vol. ii, p. 405).

214. tenes: on And. 86.

215. See App. platea: on And. 798.

219-20. tu . . . pendens, "you'll get a scolding presently; I shall be strung up and flogged." pendens: on Eun. 1021.

220. nisi . . . fefellerit: fut. pf.; "unless I shall prove to have been mistaken."

223. aufer mi 'oportet,' "away with 'what I ought.'" Cf. 857. quin . . impera: on And. 45.

225. in re incipiunda, "at the time when we undertook this project"; "at the beginning of our plan" (Jebb). ad defendendam noxiam, "with reference to warding off blame (from yourselves)"; the original sense of defendere.

226. "That that suit was equitable, plain, sure to win, fair as could be"; infin. with subject acc. after the idea of speaking implied in oratio (224) = "language." The suit was brought by Phormio against Antipho with the collusion of the latter. uincibilem = quae facile uincat; Donatus. Cf. Heaut. 205 tolerabilis = "tolerant."

227-8. "Well, we have need now of that very plea or, if possible, of one finer and more artful." Understand oratione.

229-30. Geta is fond of metaphors taken from the sphere of military tactics. Cf. 346-347. subcenturiatus: i. e. a man held in reserve, in order that he may fill a vacancy in a centuria; hence, "as a reserve."

ACT II. SCENE 1.

Demipho appears on the stage in a state of extreme indignation at what he has heard regarding his son's marriage. Phaedria and Geta stand on one side, out of the old man's sight, and the slave keeps up a running commentary on Demipho's remarks, for the benefit of the audience. Phaedria then addresses Demipho, and defends his cousin in accordance with the plan of operations already arranged between himself and Geta. The old man refuses to be reconciled. His wrath, however, is somewhat diverted in the direction of Phormio's part in the business, and he sends Geta to find the parasite that he may have an interview with that bold schemer in the presence of witnesses.

232. imperium, "authority," refers to the patria potestas, or absolute power which the law allowed to the father in dealing with his child. ac, "and yet." mitto = omitto. simultatem, "animosity," "resentment."

233. reuereri: on And. 245 and 870. Understand eum. non pudere: freely, "no compunction!" (Jebb).

234. uix tandem, "at last!" sc. mei meminit. Geta expected Demipho to attack him first. Cf. And. 470. Of course Geta's 'asides' are ironical.

235. reperiam: sc. causam. aliud cura, "try again," more lit. "think of something else."

236. audio, fateor, "well, well, I grant it." places, "good!"

238. illud durum, "that's a hard one," "that's a poser." Cf. 901 ridiculum. expediām: lit. "I'll set it free," i. e. "I'll make it clear."

241. omnis: acc. with oportet (242).
242. quo . . . ferant, "how they are to bear tribulation when it meets them."
243. See App. peregre, "from abroad," as in Plaut. Stich. 584 saluom gaudeo peregre te in patriam redisse.
245. "(He should reflect) that these things belong to our common humanity, that they may happen (at any time), to the end that nothing shall find his mind unprepared." fieri posse repeats communia esse haec. For ut ne cf. n. on And. 259; the cl. gives the purpose of the whole injunction, quam ob rem . . . posse (241 ff.). See App.
246. spem, "forebodings"; so spero often of things not good. deputare depends on oportet (242). But see App. For the sentiment cf. 757 f., Hec. 287; Hor. Epist. 1. 4. 14, Od. 1. 9. 14.
247. eo: indicative, because incredibile quantum is felt as one word = "wonderfully." Cf. nescio quis, and n. on 193 and 643.
248. omnia: see Introd. § 91; cf. Heaut. 575. redierit (fut. pf.) refers to the fut. idea implied in incommoda; "I have conned over all the misfortunes that will fall to my lot if my master comes back." Notice Geta's parody of Demipho's words, from this point to end of vs. 251.
249. See App. usque, "perpetually." in pistrino: cf. And. 199.
250. ruri: town slaves disliked work "in the country." The picture however is more Roman than Greek.
252. hominem = eum (almost); thus frequently in Terence.
255. uenire: sc. te. See on And. Prol. 14. credo: ironical; "no doubt," "I dare say." hoc refers to Demipho's question concerning Antipho.
256. "He's well; he's in town; but is everything quite to your liking?" Cf. n. on Heaut. 683.
257. uellem quidem, "would it were, indeed."
258. "A fine marriage have you consummated here in my absence." Note the particular emphasis imparted to the adj. by its position.
259. id: an adv. acc. = "on this account." The use is probably due to the analogy of quod employed as in 263 — originally an abl. (in -d), afterwards mistaken for an acc. Cf. 361.
260. ipsum: i. e. Antipho. illum or eum would do, but ipsum contrasts the person spoken of with the person spoken to.
261. sua cuipa: emphatic; "that it is through his own fault that, etc."
262. acerrumum, "a martinet" (Jebb); contrasted with lenem = "good-natured."
263. quod: on 259.
264. congruont: until the end of the republican period it was customary to avoid u after u or v.
265. noris . . . noris: fut. pf. indic., says Hauler. See the Dz.-Hauler

ed. of this play. The proverb is familiar, "know one, know all"; εξ ενδεικτης τὰ πάντα διδάσκειν.

266. hic: usually short in Plaut. and Ter. when it is nom. sing. of the pronoun. Cf. 1028. hōc (nom. and acc. sing.) is long.

267. quom illest: sc. in noxia. tradunt operas mutuas, "it's a joint-stock company," or "it's a put-up job." See 835-836.

269. ilio: i. e. Antipho. cum illo = pro illo (Don.). Cf. Nep. Ages. 5. 4 qui nobiscum aduersus barbaros steterunt. The more usual construction was ab aliquo or ab alicuius parte stare. stares: this verb, like adesse (cf. 266), was said of a person who gave advice or assistance in a suit at law; cf. Hor. Sat. 1. 9. 38 and 39.

270. si est . . . ut: on 925. culpam in se admiserit: on Ad. 682. Transl. "has been guilty of anything."

271. minus . . . temperans, "too little considerate of fortune or fame." rei and famae are genitives (objective), as in Tac. Ann. xiii. 46 potestatis temperantior; cf. Plaut. Asin. 857 amantem uxoris maxime. There is an allusion (in rei) to indotatam, and (in famae) to ignobilem of vs. 120. foret: subj. in a characterizing cl. in which the idea of result is very marked.

272. ferat: for the meaning cf. And. 610.

273. si quis: i. e. Phormio. Cf. Molière, Les Fourberies de Scapin, Act I. Scene 6.

280. tua iusta, "your rights"; cf. n. on And. 975. ubi . . . respondeas: indef. second pers. Hence the mood. The cl. is conditional, and differs but slightly from a si-cl. with an indef. temp. adv. following the conjunction. Cf. Gk. διατί, and the Engl. whenever (for if at any time).

281. ita ut ille fecit: the verb fecit here picks up the preceding negative verbal complex. Some critics have said that this never happens in an ut-cl. of comparison. But see Knapp on Hor. Sat. 1. 1. 108 (A. J. P. xviii, 332-334).

281-2. functus officium: on Heaut. 580. Cf. n. on 413.

284. See App.

287. columnen: as in Hor. Od. 2. 17. 4. Cf. our figurative use of the word "pillar." The verse is ironical.

289. iam dudum . . . audio: for the tense cf. the French dépends longtemps je vous entends.

293. dictio: on And. 400, Eun. 671. Slaves were not permitted at Athens to give evidence in support of their masters.

294. inprudens, "from inexperience."

295. seruo's = seruos es.

297. "You ought to have dowered her; he should have sought another husband (for the girl)," i. e. in place of himself. For the subjunctives see on And. 793. Cf. Hec. 230 curares.

298. qua ratione, "for what reason?" "in accordance with what theory (of right and wrong)?"

299. ratio: observe the play on this word which Geta takes in the sense of "an account" in money. sumeret: on 297; "he should have got it from some quarter or other."

301. faenore: sc. sumeret; i. e. "he should have borrowed it."

302. siquidem quisquam crederet, "yes, if any one would have trusted him (us) during your life-time." Demipho was Antipho's guardian and must give his consent to the contract, or it would not be binding; more especially as Antipho was under twenty-five years of age, and came therefore under the provisions of the lex quina uicenaria.

304. egon . . . ut patiar: on Heaut. 784. The negative of this constr. is given in 260.

305. nil suave meritumst: sc. eorum; lit. "no gentle treatment is his desert," i. e. "he deserves no clemency." meritum is a substantive, not pf. pass. prtcpl. Cf. 1051, Heaut. 92.

307. nempe, "you mean."

308. faxo: on And. 753. faxo . . . aderit: on And. 854, Eun. 285.

311. For the custom of paying a greeting to the household gods, on returning from a journey, cf. Plaut. Stich. 534 deos salutatum atque uxorem modo intro deuortor domum. Cf. Knapp in Class. Phil. ii. 300.

313. adsient: on 269 (stares). For the form see on And. 234 (siet).

ACT II. SCENE 2.

Phormio and Geta enter the stage from the market-place, discussing the subject of Demipho's return. The former is confident that he can carry the matter through, and expresses his eagerness to meet Demipho.

315. admodum, "quite so," "certainly."

317. oppido, "very much so"; a colloquial word, obsolete in the time of Quintilian, though found in Livy. ad . . . redit, "on you alone devolves the whole responsibility."

318. "You are the man who has mixed this mess; you must eat it up." Cf. "you have made your bed and you must lie on it." intristi = intristi. accingere: middle; "get yourself ready."

319. rogabit: sc. Demipho. Phormio is meditating on his possible course of action in the event of Demipho's asking him certain questions. eccrē, "but, see here now," occurs nowhere else in Ter.; in Plaut. it appears six times. The true composition may be ecce and re (= rem). But according to Paul. Fest. p. 78 (M., 55 Th.) it is an oath derived from Ceres, as ecastor from Castor, edepol from Pollux.

320. quid si reddet, "what if he shall retort?" Understand responsum. But the meaning may be, "what if he shall (try to) give the girl back?"

sic opinor: Phormio has now reached a conclusion as to his course of action; "I have it, I think." His words do not answer Geta's.

321. cedo senem, "bring the old man out." See on And. 150.

323. deriuem, "turn the current of"; from de and riuos. The metaphor is similar in Lucr. 2. 365 deriuare animum.

325. in neruom erumpat denique, "may land (you) in the pillory (prison) at last." Cf. 696; Plaut. Ourec. 720 in neruo iacebis, and 723 ego te in neruom . . . rapiam.

326. factumst periculum, etc., "I have tried it, I have learned the road by this time." periculum here bears its original signification. The expression pedum uia may have been chosen with special reference to in neruom (325). Cf. Morgan's rendering, "I know where to set my feet."

327. deuerberasse, etc., "have cudgelled to death"; a humorous exaggeration.

328. "Aliens as well as citizens? The better I know the way, the oftener I tread it." For the force of tum here cf. And. 262. See App.

329. cedo: on And. 150. dum: used with imperatives to emphasize the command. Cf. 784, and the familiar abi dum, dic dum, mane dum, etc., in which dum is always enclitic. enumquam: i. e. en umquam. The prefix is the same as em, for which cf. 52 and see on And. 416. It is used in conjunction with umquam in questions expecting the answer 'no,' and assists in fixing the attention on the negative character of the reply. Transl. "did you ever hear that a suit for damages was brought against me?" See on 127, 439.

330. qui: on 130. tennitur: i. e. tenditur. See App.

332. quia enim, "because indeed"; on And. 91. in illis . . . in illis, "in the latter . . . in the former"; for in his . . . in illis. The actor's gestures would have prevented any mistake that might otherwise arise from the use of the same pronoun to contrast two sets of people. Cf. Ad. 130 f. opera luditur, "our labour is wasted." Cf. Plaut. Capt. 344, Pseud. 369 operam ludimus.

333. "Some people are in danger from one source, others from another, from whom there is anything that can be pilfered." unde=ex quibus, the antecedent being aliis. On the sentiment cf. Juvenal, 10. 22 cantabit uacuus coram latrone uiator.

334. ducent, etc., refers to the law under whose provisions a debtor, unable or unwilling to pay damages legally awarded, might be arrested and compelled to live with his creditor as a slave. Notice the telling alliteration, and cf. 347.

337. pote: see App. Cf. n. on And. 437.

338. immo enim: on And. 823. regi, "to one's patron." Phormio was a parasite and might speak from experience.

339. tene: on And. 245. asymbolum (= ἀσύμβολον); "free of expense." See on And. 88. Cf. n. on Eun. 540. The Greeks were fond of banquets at which each participant contributed his share, συμβολή. balineis: from βαλανεῖον. For the shortening of the penult cf. platea (= πλατεῖα) in 215, and n. on And. 796. The form balneum became more common after Plautus.

340. ab animo indicates the origin from which the action or state is derived. Cf. a fronde, a tergo, etc., and Plaut. Epid. 129 a morbo ulari, ab animo aeger fui. The English says "in mind." quom: adversative. ille: i. e. the patron. absumitur would be subj. in classical Latin.

341. "While that is being done which shall satisfy you, he submits to annoyances." quod placeat expresses volition, purpose, and at the same time characterizes an indefinite antecedent. Such clauses are termed by Elmer, 'volitive characterizing clauses'; see his note. tu rideas, etc., "you are free to laugh, to taste first of the wine-cup, to occupy a better place at table;" a kind of Oratio Obliqua, a sort of quotation of the courtesies rendered by the rex (338).

342. dubia, "puzzling," i. e. where there is a profusion of dishes—un embarras de richesses, as explained in the next verse.

344. rationem in eas, "consider"; practically a single word. The subj. is due to the indefinite second person, while quom has the force of a general rel. = "whenever," i. e. "if ever," "if." Cf. n. on 280.

345. qui: the antecedent is hunc.

346. coitio: a military metaphor = "clash," "shock." Cf. n. on 229.

347. postillā: with iam; "immediately after that." For the form, cf. post-eā, praeter-eā, ante-hāc, post-hāc, in which the second part is probably an old abl. Cf. And. 936. Iudas licet, "you may play with him"; the only place in Ter. where licet is joined with the subj. rather than the infin. Cf. Hor. Od. 1. 28. 35 licebit iniesto ter puluere curras.

ACT II. SCENE 3.

Demipho appears with three friends who are to help him with their advice. Geta and Phormio converse apart, but in such a way as to be overheard by Demipho, whose wrath is stirred up accordingly. Demipho then assails the parasite, and challenges him to prove Antipho's kinship to the girl. But he finds his match in Phormio, who retorts that the relationship has already been established in a court of law. The parasite further refuses Demipho's offer to compromise on the basis of a dowry to be paid by Demipho, and the transfer of the girl, under the form of marriage, from Antipho's possession to that of her self-constituted champion. Phormio finally leaves the old man to nurse his anger and get what comfort he can from the aduocati, who have been silent witnesses of the proceedings.

348. enumquam: on 329.
350. quin . . . age: on And. 45. Cf. 223. hoc age, "just give your attention to me now"; a formula used to invoke attention at a sacrifice, which became colloquial. Cf. 435 and n. on Eun. 130. The words quin . . . agitabo are said aside.
351. pro, etc.: on And. 237.
354. neque: the negative is repeated here merely for emphasis; one would expect negatque. qui: on 129.
356. A gloss, as is evident from 386. It serves the purpose of explaining 354. Stilphonem: thus all MSS. and Donatus. The Greek is Στίλφων, and the correct spelling Stilpo is given in a lemma of the Codex Monacensis. See Schlee (Schol. Ter., p. 28). Cf. Dz.-Hauler's crit. note.
357. ignoratur, "is disowned," "is ignored."
358. quid facit: on And. 45 (quid est).
359. malitiae: gen. of the charge. male audles: on Prol. 20.
360. etiam: additory, and reinforced, as often, by ultra. See Kirk in A. J. P. xviii, p. 36. ultra, "gratuitously."
361. quod: on 263 and 259.
362. Illum: i. e. Phanium's father. grandlor, "elderly." Cf. n. on Ad. 673.
363. pauper, "whose means were limited." egens would be the word for 'living in poverty,' which is not the idea. He was able to live by his labour, as the next few words indicate. opere, "field-work"; thus also Eun. 220; Heaut. 72, 73, 142; Ad. 518. ulta, "livelihood"; "bread" (Jebb). Cf. 734.
365. colendum: i. e. by contract or stipulation.
366. hunc: i. e. Demipho.
367. quem . . . uiderim restricts optumum; "the best that I have seen." See Hale, The Cum-Constructions, p. 92.
368. uideas te, etc., "may you discover yourself to be as you say he is," i. e. optimus. Geta is ironical. See App. in' malam crucem: on And. 317. in' = isne. The original instrument was a pole, and the process that of impaling. This was succeeded by the cross, to which the slave or malefactor was nailed or bound.
370. hanc: i. e. Phanium. In, "with regard to."
371. quam refers to hanc (370).
372. pergiu = pergisse. male loqui governs the dat. as though it were a single word.
373. "This however is just what a man like that deserves." Ilio is contemptuous. ain tamen: see App. ain = aisne. carcer, "you prison-house," i. e. possessing the qualities that make for one.
374. "You goods-extractor, law-twister"; new phrases invented by Geta, on the spur of the moment, in which to express his assumed indignation.

377. hodie: on 1009.

378. adulescens: contemptuous; "young man." bona uenia, "with your good leave."

379. potis: on And. 437.

381. qui cognatum: on 130.

382. proinde quasi: on Heaut. 65. expiscare, "you're fishing (for it)." nossem: an echo of Phormio's nosses; see on 431 (expetam) and cf. n. on Hec. 524.

383. nego: sc. nouisse. qui aīs, "who say (I do know)." redige in memoriam, "assist me to recollect," "jog my memory."

384. "What, man, not know your own cousin?" The question expresses surprise, and does not expect an answer, as it would do if non had the force of nonne. enicas: cf. 856. n.

387. subice, "prompt me"; said aside.

388. non dico, "I'll not tell you"; strictly, "I'm not telling you." See on 669, Ad. 781 (non manum abstines). Cf. n. on And. 404. temptatum: supine.

389. ego autem templo, "what, I pump you?" The subj. is more usual in indignant repetitions of this character, than the indic. Cf. 431. n. atque adeo, "and yet indeed"; on And. 532. quid mea: sc. refert. See on Eun. 849.

392. horum, "in the presence of these gentlemen," i. e. of the aduocati; the gen. as in Ad. 683, Heaut. 260, Hec. 793, Plaut. Trin. 312 deum hercle me atque hominum pudet. If horum were neut. it would be in the nom. case, since pudet takes the pers. constr. with neuter pronouns, e. g. Ad. 754, Plaut. Mil. 626. pudet: cf. n. on 384; "what, you're not ashamed?"

393. talentum: gen. pl. of the 2nd decl. Cf. Ad. 411 maiorum suom, and n. rem: on And. 288.

394-5. esses . . . proferens = preferres (nearly); "you would have been the first to be putting forward, etc." Cf. n. on And. 508.

396. quom aduenissem, "if ever I had come," i. e. before the court, to claim an inheritance. Cf. n. on 280 and 344.

397. face: on And. 680.

398. cedo: on 197. eu: the same as the Gk. εὖ, "well done." So in Ad. 911 euge = εὔγε, "bravo!" Cf. 478, 869.

399. quibus me oportuit: sc. expedire. Cf. 383, 447, 683, 113, etc., for similar omissions of the infinitive.

400. fuerat: the force of the indic. is to assume the truth of the supposition, for the sake of argument simply; "suppose this had been false." Phormio does not commit himself.

404. ut reddant depends on the idea of petitioning implied in magistratus adi.

405. solus regnas: i. e. you alone can do as you please; others must obey the law. Cf. Ad. 175, where Sannio is likewise ironical. soli: sc. tibi.

406. bis: Athenian law did not allow a case once closed to be reopened. Cf. Demosth. in Lept. 147, p. 502.

408. secter: on And. 798 (vivueret).

410. abduc hanc, minas quinque accipe, "off with her, take five minae." Demipho is much excited—a fact that accounts for his use of imperatives, as well as for the transposition of the two verbs. The Attic mina was equivalent to 100 drachmae, or about \$18.75. mina = $\mu\nu\hat{\alpha}$, the i being inserted merely to facilitate pronunciation. Cf. colloquial Engl., 'athletes,' 'puleverize.'

413. meretricem . . . abusus: in early Latin abutor and fugor regularly take the acc., utor, fruor (perhaps) and potior the abl. sometimes. See on 830. For abutor and utor in Ter. see on And. Prol. 5, Ad. 815.

414. amittere, "to let her go."

415-7. The purpose is stated twice, viz., by ut ne (415) and by ut (417). Cf. an analogous repetition (of a condition) in Prol. 18-15.

416. propter egestatem: for an illustration cf. the case of Chrysis in the Andria.

418. unde: sc. proximi sumus; "whence (i. e. 'how') are we the nearest (of kin)?" ohe: on Ad. 723.

419. actum ne agas. "don't try a suit already decided"; a proverb taken from the law courts. Cf. Ad. 232 agam and Donatus' n., 'quod enim in iure semel iudicatum fuerit, rescindi et iterum agi non potest.' This was true in general of the Athenian courts. See Meier u. Schöman, Att. Proc. 733 ff. It was otherwise at Rome, as with us. Cf. n. on 406 and on And. 465. The right of appeal however was limited at Rome. See Greenidge, Roman Public Law, 293; Smith, Dict. of Antiq. 1. 601. non agam: cf. n. on 382 (nossem) and on 431.

420. ineptis, "you are talking nonsense"; cf. Ad. 934. sine modo: cf. n. on Eun. 65-66.

426. te: abl.; "better do the same with yourself." feceris: fut. pf. indic.

427. paratus: on And. 909. aduorsum is frequently post-positive in early Latin.

428. infelix, "wretch." Cf. Shak., Comedy of Errors, Act V, Scene 1, line 27. metult, etc.: Phormio's reply to Geta's iratus est (426).

429. bene habent: sc. se, which is usually expressed, as in 820, Hearut. 702, but cf. Ad. 365, Plaut. Cas. 338. quin, etc.: for the sense cf. 138. n.

430. feceris: on 426. For ferendum fers cf. n. on 138.
431. expetam echoes Phormio's thought, though not his word; subj. in a repudiating question. Cf. n. on 382; B. App. 363. d. (rev. ed.), and Harkness' Lat. Gram. 559.5. ('complete' ed.).
432. uisum aut auditum: sc. a me. uelim: on 431.
- 433-4. quae . . . oblectet: on 770.
434. respice, "think of"; cf. Heaut. 70.
435. hoc age: on 350.
438. dignum, "proper."
439. dicam . . . inpingam, "I'll bring a suit against you for weighty damages." Cf. n. on 127.

440. domo me, "you may fetch me from home." domo is abl. of separation. The speaker's manner suggests the verb, e. g. arcesse. Cf. n. on 38. The illustrated MSS. mark a scene division at this vs. by means of miniatures; but the usual superscription in the Bembine Codex is lacking. Umpfenbach accordingly refrains from making 441 the beginning of a new scene.

ACT II. SCENE 4.

Demipho consults his friends, the three aduocati, two of whom give opposite opinions, while the third is undecided. This leaves Demipho in still greater perplexity than that in which he was involved before he sought their advice. The humour of the situation is manifest.

445. nondum: on And. 340.
447. quid ago: on And. 315; cf. Heaut. 343, Eun. 811, Phorm. 1007. Cratinum censeo: sc. dicere. Cf. n. on 399.
449. in rem tuam, "to your advantage." See on And. 546.
451. restitui in integrum, "be cancelled," more lit. "be restored to its original state," before the marriage.
454. quot homines, etc., "many men, many minds." Cf. Hor. Sat. 2. 1. 27 f. quot capitum uiuunt, totidem studiorum milia.
- 455-6. mihil . . . posse: this was in accordance with Athenian law. Cf. n. on 419.
456. Inceptust = inceptu est; supine, as in Ad. 275.
457. ampius, "further"; possibly a reference to the Roman judicial system which allowed the postponement of a case for the sake of obtaining further evidence. Such postponement was termed ampliatio.
458. num . . . uis: on Eun. 191.
459. quam dudum: sc. eram; "than I was a moment ago"; cf. n. on And. 582, where however the reference given to Phorm. 459 should be omitted. dudum = diu dum.
460. redissee: sc. eum, i. e. Antiphonem. Cf. n. on And. Prol. 14. Geta returns from the house of Demipho, whither he was sent (445) to look for Antipho. The slaves there tell him that the young man has not come home.

462. quoad: "how soon"; see on 148. se recipiat, "he is likely to return." The direct question would be quoad se recipiet?

464. eccum: on And. 532.

ACT III. SCENE 1.

Antipho returns much vexed with himself for his cowardice in running away and leaving his own dearest interests in charge of others. Geta assures him that his affairs have not suffered during his absence, and that his father will not act until Chremes arrives on the scene. This however arouses new fears in Antipho's breast.

465. enim uero: on And. 91. multimodis: on And. 939; cf. Heaut. 320. cum istoc animo: cf. n. on And. 941 (cum tua religione) and on Eun. 153; cf. also Phorm. 980, Hec. 134, Ad. 713.

466. itane . dedisse: on 153. uitam refers to Phanium.

467. tete: acc. by attraction; strictly we should have tute (aduorsurus sis). animum aduorsuros: regarded as one word having rem for its object.

468. ut ut: cf. 531. illi . consuleres, "you ought at least to have taken thought for that girl, etc." See on 297.

469. tuam fidem, "her trust in you." For this use of the pronoun cf. 1016. quid . poteretur: on 830, and And. Prol. 5.

471. qui: causal; "for having run away." See A. & G. 320. e; B. 283. 3. a; H. 517.

472. Antipho sees Geta for the first time. ea causa: i. e. because you deserted us.

474. subolet quid: on Heaut. 899; "has my father any inkling of it?" etiam: on And. 116.

475. nisi, "only"; about the same as nisi quod, and frequent after nescio, to whose sweeping negation it attaches a modifying statement. Cf. n. on And. 664, Phorm. 953. See A. & G. 525. e.

476. See App. hominem praebuit: sc. se. The omission of the reflexive is rhetorical and rare with praebere. See Dz.-Hauler's crit. n.

477. confutauit senem, "kept the old gentleman from boiling over." Cf. n. on Heaut. 949. admodum, "very"; with iratum. Cf. Heaut. 53.

478. quod potui: the omission of feci suggests modesty on Geta's part. amo: on 54; "I'm beholden to you all."

479. rest = res est.

480-1. ut aibat: the rest of the sentence is given as though Geta had omitted ut. After ut aibat we should expect de eius consilio uolebat facere. Cf. Ad. 648 for a similar irregularity, and see Dz.-Hauler's note.

481. de, "in accordance with," "by."
 482. metuist = metuis est (i. e. metūs est, gen. of 4th decl.). Cf. n. on Heaut. 287. uidere : infin., as though preceded by quantum metuo. huc: sc. redire.

484. palaestra: the young Greeks went regularly to the palaestra for exercise and recreation. Hence the regularity of Phaedria's visits at the house of Pamphila suggests the application of the word to the place where she lives. Transl. "from his play-ground."

ACT III. SCENE 2.

Phaedria begs Dorio, the slave-dealer and owner of Pamphila, to give him more time in which to procure the money needed for the purchase of the girl. But Dorio is obdurate and refuses to listen any longer to Phaedria's oft-repeated request. He has had an offer from a soldier who is to bring the money to him on the morrow. He will make the sale however to Phaedria if the latter succeeds in bringing him the cash before the soldier can do so.

486. non audio, "I won't"; cf. n. on 388. quin omitte me, "you let me alone"; cf. n. on And. 45.

488. quod lubenter audias, "something which you would be glad to hear," if you should listen; a characterizing clause of contingent futurity (B., App. 404. 8. a.). Thus also 1052–1053 quod gaudeam and quod doleant. The subj. has the same force as in an independent clause. In the fully developed type of characterizing clause this would not be true.

489. triduom hoc : on 513.

490. mirabar si : on And. 175.

491. ne quid, etc.. Antipho fears that some real trouble may come to Phaedria from the situation. But Geta breaks in and gives Antipho's sentence a turn suggesting that Dorio may try the young man's patience a little too far. Such violent measures as are taken with Sannio in the Adelphoe were not uncommon. Transl. "lest he may be patching up something for his own head," i. e. "lest he may have to wear the night-cap himself." This metaphorical use of suo, "to sew," occurs here only.

492. non dum : on And. 340. hariolare, "you are talking truth," "you're quite correct," "you've got it to a T"; an ironical compliment. Nowhere in Plaut. or Ter., says Knapp, does hariolari = "talk nonsense," although it has been so explained. See Knapp (on Ad. 202) in Class. Rev. vol. xxi., pp. 46–47. Cf. Ad. 202. fabulae, "mere talk." Cf. And. 224.

493. faeneratum : sc. esse; from faenero, "to lend on interest." Transl. "you shall say that this kindness was richly repaid." Cf. Ad. 219. logi = λόγοι. Cf. Shak., Hamlet, Act ii, Scene 2, "words, words, words."

494. somnia : cf. n. on 874.

495. cantilenam eandem canis, "it's the same old chant you're singing." Cf. n. on Heaut. 260 (cantabat).

496. cognatus, etc. i. e. I will so regard you, if you will only grant me the favour I ask. modo: cf. n. on Eun. 65-66.

497. adeon: on 153.

500. "As (to waut) to take me in with tinselled words, and to take off my girl without paying for her." Notice the play on ducas and ductes. The former verb often suggests deception; the latter is used of taking to one's self a mistress.

501. miseritum est, "I'm sorry for him," i. e. for Phaedria; said aside to Geta. ei, ueris uincor, "ah, the truth is too much for me." Phaedria turns away from the slave-dealer, feeling that he cannot argue with him any longer. See App. uterque: i. e. Dorio and Phaedria. similis sui: the gen. is regular with similia in early Latin.

502-3. "And then (to think) that this blow should n't have befallen me when Antipho had some trouble on hand too!" This is Jebb's rather free translation, given by Bond and Walpole. It is in keeping with o fortunatissime of vs. 504, and seems to express the true spirit of a doubtful passage. Phaedria would have been happy to see Antipho involved in a trouble similar to his own. Misery loves company. He fails to see Antipho's difficulties. For neque with infin. of exclamation cf. 232-233. See App. For the idea that misery loves company cf. Plaut. Capt. 581-583; Pl. Epp. vi. 20. 17; Seneca, Med. 426 ff., Troad. 1016 f.

505. cum: with malo, which is modified by huius modi. conflictares: on And. 93.

506. id quod alunt: on And. 805. auribus teneo lupum: a proverbial expression similar in spirit to the English 'to catch a Tartar.' Donatus derives it from the Gk., τῶν ὄτων ἔχω τὸν λύκον οὐτε γὰρ ἔχειν οὔτ' ἀφεῖναι δύναματ. The latter part is probably explanatory of the first.

507. See App.

508. Dorio means that he stands to Phaedria in the same relation as that in which Antipho stands to the wolf. hoc: i. e. Phaedria. ne . sies: very ironical. The ne is final (cf. And. 704, 706); "look out there lest you be too little of a leno," i. e. (tauntingly) "act well up to your reputation."

509. num . . . confecit, "has he done anything?" i. e. any mischief? hic = Dorio.

510: meam would move the spectators to laughter, for Pamphila was in reality the property of Dorio; note the slave-dealer's fine reply in 511.

512. illo: i. e. the man to whom Dorio had sold the girl. mutet fidem, "cancel his bargain," "break his faith."

513. triduom hoc, "for the next three days." Cf. 489. dum: purely temporal; "while."

514. ne oppertus sies: pf. subj. in a prohibition conceived of without reference to the continuance of the action. See B., App. 358. d. (rev. ed.).

515. obtundes, "will you keep pounding it into me?" Cf. n. on And. 348. See App.

516. idem hic, "he also," "he too." conduplicauerit, "will promptly double." Notice the force of the fut. pf.

518. horunc = horum-ce. poterin = poterisne. Note that -ne is attached to the sixth word in the sentence — for emphasis; "can you possibly, etc?"

519. neque ego neque tu, "neither you nor I (can bear it)," but it will surely happen for all that, as she is already promised to another person. Dorio is ironical. quod: sc. accipere. Cf. n. on 399. duint: on And. 666.

521. contra: a prep. (probably). In early Latin contra is more often an adv., as in Ad. 50. In Ad. 44 it may be a prep., but Dz. makes it an adv. there, while Spengel and Wagner deny the prepositional use altogether for Terence.

522. qui . . . lacrumet; see B., App. 371 (370 rev. ed.) fin.

523-4. tibi . . . praestituta, "assuredly a day was once fixed by which (time) you were to pay him." quam ad: a rare order. Cf. however 427 me aduorsum; Heaut. 189, 265 te erga; Hec. 535 te est penes. In Plaut. this order is common in connection with the rel. pronoun. dares: subj. in rel. cl. of purpose.

524. factum, "yes." The omission of est is regular; cf. Eun. 708, 851, Heaut. 568, Hec. 846, Ad. 543, 561, 676.

525. haec: sc. dies, i. e. the date on which the other purchaser made his appearance.

526. ob rem: on And. 546.

527. sic sum: on And. 919.

528. immo, etc., "nay, in very truth, Antipho, it is he who is deceiving me."

532. dare: for daturum esse; frequent in Ter. after verba of promising. The pres. infin. marks the prompt fulfilment of the promise, as in Caes. B. G. 4. 21 qui polliceantur obsides dare atque imperio populi Romani obtemperare. Cf. Ad. 203 and 224, Eun. 520, Phorm. 837 ire; n. on And. 379.

533. "I'll follow my rule of first come, first served." ut . . . dan-dumst explains mea lege.

ACT III. SCENE 3.

Phaedria is in great perplexity to find means of obtaining the money. He and Antipho unite in entreaties to Geta to help them out of the difficulty. Geta protests, but yields at last and promises to do his best on condition that he can have Phormio to help him.

534. huic : i. e. Dorio.

535-6. quoi : the antecedent is ego. quod refers to argentum. Transl. "which had been promised me, if this fellow could have been induced to grant me three days more (of grace)." exorare, being a verb of asking, would govern two accusatives, one of the person and the other of the thing. The verb being in the passive, the acc. of the person becomes nom., the acc. of the thing remains unchanged. It is possible however to regard triduom hoc, not as object of exorarier, but as acc. of duration of time. In that case the expression must be looked upon as an instance of colloquial brevity = exorarier ut triduom hoc expectaret. Cf. 513. pote: on And. 437.

537. qui . . . adiurit: a cl. of characteristic, conveying an accessory notion of opposition ("although," "in spite of the fact that"). Such clauses are called also 'concessive' and 'adversative.' Cf. B., Lat. Gram. 283. 3. adiurit = adiuverit = adiuucrit.

542. etiam tu hinc abis, "away with you!" "just you be off!" This interpretation is supported to some extent by Ad. 550 etiam taces? "do be quiet!" and by Heaut. 235 etiam caues . . . ? These examples, it is true, lack the emphatic tu, but this fact makes little difference. tu is peremptory (emotional), as in Hor. Od. 1. 11. 1-2 tu ne quaesieris. . . Leuconoë, and merely notes Geta's excitement. etiam perhaps has no appreciable force (see Kirk in A. J. P. vol. xviii, p. 39), yet in Plaut. it is often used when a question or command is repeated, and then it = "again I ask," "again I say." Now Geta's quid faciam (540) virtually = abi hinc, "go to," "out with you"; so too his edoce, etc. In 541 and 542 he says words to the like effect, until the repetition of his refusal reaches a climax in the present passage = "again I say, will you be off (with your request)."

543-4. "Is it not a triumph for me that I get into no trouble through your marriage, without your now bidding me still to seek disaster in a scrape on account of Phaedria here?" Cf. And. 647-648. ni: on And. 648. etiam: on 547. crucem: on 368.

547. ni instigemus etiam, "without our goading him still further." etiam is temp., with an additory connotation; see Kirk in A. J. P. vol. xviii, pp. 28, 29. ut . . . preci, "so that no room may be left for entreaty." See on 140. Cf. And. 601 and n. on 206.

551. certumst persequi, "I am resolved to follow her."

552. quod agas: see on Hee. 197. pedetemptim: sc. agas; "act with caution," "go slowly."

553. quaere, "think."

554. "Lest he should do something or other, that would cause us regret hereafter." quod . . . pigeat: see on 488.

555. uerum . . . malum, "but after all I fear trouble."

557. triginta minae: nearly $600.

559. iam : on And. 704. inuentas reddam, "I'll have them found," "I'll manage to find them." For the constr. cf. And. 864 and 684, Phorm. 856, Ad. 849.

562. solus . . . amicus: a reminiscence of a line of Apollodorus, quoted by Donatus (Wessner, vol. ii. p. 463.), μόνος ἐπίσταται φιλεῖν τοὺς φίλους. solus is of course an exaggeration. He befriends his friends as no one else can do. ocius : on And. 724.

563. num quid est, etc.: on Eun. 191. opera : abl.

564. illam : i. e. Phanium.

565. quod faciam : on 488; cf. n. on 554.

566. qua uia, "how." itere: see footnote. modo te hinc amoue: a repetition of aufer te hinc (559). Cf. And. 707. n.

ACT IV. SCENE 1.

Chremes and Demipho are on their way from the harbour, where the former has recently disembarked on arriving from Lemnos. Chremes is much disturbed at the news concerning Antiphon, as he had hoped (with Demipho) that the young man would marry the daughter who was the fruit of his Lemnian marriage.

569. uidet : hist. present.

570-1. "While at the same time the girl's (increasing) years brooked not my negligent delay."

571. ipsam, etc.: we should expect ipsa . . . profecta est, ut aibant.

572. illi, "there"; see on And. 638.

574. unde asks the source of the disease, qui its character and name.

575. senectus ipsast morbus: cf. Juvenal, X. 218 f. (senem) circumsilit agmine facto morborum omne genus.

578. quod refers to the fact alluded to in 577. consili : locative; cf. n. on Heaut. 727.

579. condicionem, "match"; in allusion to the daughter of his Lemnian wife. Chremes' Athenian wife was ignorant of the existence of the establishment in Lemnos, and the old gentleman was desirous that she should remain so. extrario, "an outsider," i. e. some person other than Demipho's son.

580. sit : sc. condicio, a word that readily suggests the girl herself.

582. alienus : on Ad. 672. The reference is to the extrarius (579).

584. opus est : often united with the abl. case of the pf. pass. prtcpl. neut. Thus also usus est. A neut. pronoun in the nom. case frequently accompanies the constr. as subject (usually in the sing. number); cf. n. on And. 490.

585. aliqua : sc. uia; cf. n. on 566. See 746.

586. quod refers to the possibility expressed in 585. me excutiam, "clear myself out," i. e. "take myself off"; still further explained by egrediar domo. This interpretation is supported by Eun. 358 homo quatinus . . . foras, and Hor. Od. 3. 9. 19 excuditur Chloe.

587. nam . . . meus, "for of all I have I only am my own." Note the oxymoron. Chremes' property was derived entirely from his wife. Therefore to quarrel with her meant destitution.

ACT IV. SCENE 2.

Geta has seen Phormio and the two have arranged a plan for getting money out of the old men. The scene represents Geta as expressing his admiration of Phormio, who is so ready to do all in his power to assist Phaedria to obtain the money that he needs.

591. hominem . . . neminem : on Eun. 549, Ad. 259.

592. quam Phormionem : on Heaut. 116.

593. fieret: deliberative subj. in an indirect question.

594. Intellekerat, "he took it all in at a glance." The plpf. expresses the rapidity with which Phormio grasped the situation. Note the parataxis.

595. quaerebat, "he asked for."

596. tempus, "opportunity," "chance." dari depends on the idea of thinking implied in gratias agebat. Cf. the infin. with gaudeo, doleo and similar verbs expressive of emotion. Cf. also 610. We might expect a causal clause.

597. ubi . . . ostenderet, "where he could show," "of showing"; Elmer's 'potential characterizing clause.' See App.

598. ad forum = apud forum (nearly).

601. belua : cf. Eun. 704. Cf. Fr. bête, bêtise. Transl. "lubber that I was."

603. commodius, "more advantageous." duplici spe utier, "to have two strings to one's bow."

604. petam, "I will try and get it," i. e. the money. hinc, "out of him," i. e. out of Demipho. a primo, "in the first instance," "originally," "at first." Cf. 642 and n. on 340. institi, "I began," i. e. "I planned (to seek it)." See App.

605. hunc hospitem, "this new-comer," i. e. Chremes. Geta's pronouns and pronominal words are made more intelligible to the spectators by his gestures.

ACT IV. SCENE 3.

Geta now proceeds to put into execution his plan for obtaining from Demipho the thirty minae needed by Phaedria for the purchase of the music girl. He pretends that in his interview with Phormio the latter promised to forego all legal proceedings against Demipho and to marry Phanium on the receipt of thirty minae. The amount seems excessive to Demipho and he becomes much enraged. Chremes however steps in and offers to defray the expense out of his wife's property.

610. uolup est, "I'm delighted." uolup, like facul, is an indeclinable noun; see Don., and cf. n. in Dz.-Hauler. It occurs in Ter. only here and in Hec. 857, but in Plaut. it appears in fifteen passages. It is an early form, whence the classical uoluptas. See Ritschl, Opusc. II. 450–452. The form uolupe is probably incorrect. There are those who regard uolup as an adverb. Cf. Brix, Mil. 277. For the infin. with uolup est cf. n. on 596 (dari).

611. complurla: frequent in early Latin instead of complura; see Donatus. Cf. however the discussion in Aul. Gell. 5. 21.

612. audistin: notice that -ne is affixed to the third word in the sentence, and cf. n. on 518.

613. facinus indlgnum: on And. 145.

614. circumirl, "to be got around," "to be circumvented," "to be cheated." commodum, "just now," apries; colloquial. Cf. Eun. 343.

615. nam . . . quoque, "(you did well to do so) for of a truth I too." See on And. 43. Cf. Ad. 190.

617. fit obuiam: on 52. Cf. And. 590.

618. qui istanc, "the man by whom that girl . . ." Understand some such idea as "was thrust upon us." Phormio was supposed to be Phanius' guardian. His name was not yet known to Chremes.

619. uisumst mi ut, etc. = decreui ut, etc., or decreui + infin. Cf. 625.

620–2. "Why do you not see to it that we arrange these matters between us?" sic, "in this way," refers to the plan he is about to suggest.

623. liberalis: on 168. fugitans litium, "shy of law-suits"; the obj. gen. instead of the acc. because fugitans is felt as an adj., like amans, sapiens, etc. Cf. Hor. Od. 1. 8. 4 patiens pulueris atque solis.

624. nam: cf. n. on 615. The idea is: "(otherwise he would have bundled her out of doors) for the rest of his friends advised him to do so."

625. auctores fuere ut: lit. "were advisers to the effect that." Cf. Plaut. Mil. 1094 quid nunc mi's auctor ut faciam; n. on And. 157 (operam do). praeципitem, etc.: cf. n. on And. 683 (inuentum dabo); Ad. 318.

626. hodie: on 377.

626–7. an . . . dices, "you'll say then that he will pay the penalty of the law?"

628. lam id exploratumst, "that point has been already investigated."

629. si . . . homine, "if you try conclusions with that fellow," i. e. if you go to law with him. ea eloquentiast, "he's that eloquent"; probably nom., but possibly abl. of quality.

630. uerum pono, "but I assume (for argument's sake)." uictum: i. e. in the law-suit. at tandem tamen, "yet after all." The emphatic word is tandem.

631. "It is not a case in which his civic rights are at stake, but (only) money." Demipho, if he lost the suit, could pay any fine imposed upon him by the court, and that would end it. Phormio in like circumstances would have no money wherewith to pay, and accordingly would lose his personal freedom and civic standing. He would become Demipho's slave. This, in legal phrase, was to lose one's cuput.

634. in manum, "in cash."

635. hinc facessat, "take herself off"; understand se. For this intrans. and colloquial use of facessere, cf. Plaut. Rud. 1061 si quidem sis pudicus, hinc facessas.

636. illi: i. e. Geta. propitil: Antipho means that Geta must be out of his mind — a condition supposed to be due to the ill-will of the gods.

637. "If what you say (i. e., if the sum you mention) shall have the least particle of justice in it."

638-9. commutabitis uerba, "have words," as in a dispute. Cf. Don. (Wessner, vol. ii. p. 466) 'uerba commutare est, quod nos altercari dicimus.' Cf. And. 410.

643. nimium quantum, "a great deal too much." nimirum, incredibile, mirum and similar words are sometimes connected so closely with a following quantus (a, um), that the two have the effect of a single word. Cf. the Gk. θαυμαστὸν δόσον, πλεῖστον δόσον, and Hor. Od. 1. 27. 6 immane quantum. In reality such cases involve ellipsis, as e. g. quantum rogat nimium est, "his asking price is too high." Cf. n. on 247. si . . . daret, "(he said that he would be satisfied) if any one should give him."

644. talentum magnum: the Attic silver talent, worth 60 minae, perhaps $1200. Cf. Plaut. Most. 919, Rud. 778, 1344 (with Sonnenschein's n.). See Goodwin in T. A. P. A. 1885. malum, "a licking," "a thrashing."

645-6. adeo, "exactly"; to be taken with quod. quid . . . locaret: sc. in matrimonium; "what (could he do more) if he were portioning out his only daughter?" Cf. 752 where nuptum is added, and 759 where locare stands alone in the same sense.

646-7. "It has been of small benefit to him that he did not rear a daughter, (for) one has been found to claim a dowry." Demipho, it is to be presumed, had not been without a daughter. He had merely taken advantage of the law which allowed the father to 'expose' his infant child, and thus avoid the expense of rearing it. This was done most frequently in the case of female infants. Cf. the plot of the Heaut. Demipho however has not escaped. quae dotem petat is a rel. clause of purpose. See B., App. 371 (370 rev. ed.). On dowries see e. g. Heaut. 838, 940; Plaut. Amph. 950 ff. On the general expense of a daughter cf. e. g. Heaut. 835 ff

648. ut ad pauca redeam, "to put it in a few words"; cf. Hec. 135. n. illius mittam ineptias, "to pass over his impertinences."

651. fuerat precedes uolui in point of time.
652. eius incommodum, "the disadvantage to her." We might expect incommodi; cf. note on aduenti, 154.
653. in seruitutem: substituted for in matrimonium in order to draw attention to the subordinate position in the family of a wife without a dowry. This and ad ditem (for diti) lend pathos to the description. The acc. with ad lacks the suggestion of personal interest which the dat. would convey. Cf. Plaut. Trin. 689–691.
655. quae adferret, "who should (would) bring"; see on 488. qui, "whereby."
657. hac: i. e. the amici filiam of vs. 650.
658. istanc: i. e. Phanium.
661. quid si animam debet, "what if he owes his very soul?" i. e. is over head and ears in debt. oppositus pignori, "mortgaged"; properly, "a field is set for (as) a pledge, over against ten minae." The ob ("over against") in 662 repeats the prep. of the verb. Cf. Plaut. Capt. 433 meam uitam esse positam pignori.
662. age age denotes unwilling assent.
663. item sunt: sc. oppositae pignori. alias: sc. minas. oieī suggests that a blow of some kind has been struck. Cf. Eun. 716.
667. porro: in support of this reading Dziazko (Adn. Crit.) cites Heaut.
838. See App.
668. sescentas suggests an indefinitely large number, as in Plaut. Trin. 791 sescentae ad eam rem causae possunt conligi. dicas: on 127, 329, 439.
669. nil do, "not a penny am I giving." Cf. n. on 388. ut . . . inri-deat: on Heaut. 784. Cf. 304. etiam: additory, in an interrog. clause expressing anger at the mockery implied in Phormio's (reported) demands; "can it be that that dirty fellow shall mock me besides?" See Kirk in A. J. P. vol. xviii, p. 39. c. For inpuratus cf. 962.
670. quiesce: on And. 598.
- 670-1. filium fac ut ducat = fac ut filius ducat. Prolepsis. Cf. 354.
672. occidisti, "you have ruined"; slightly different in Ad. 899.
673. hoc, "this sum of money."
674. quantum potest: on And. 861.
675. illam: i. e. Phanium. hanc: i. e. the amici filiam of 650, to whom he claims to be betrothed (657).
676. illi: i. e. the friends and kinsfolk of the girl referred to in 650 and 657.
677. iam accipiat, "let him have her at once." illis: on 676. re-pudium renuntiet, "let him give notice to them that the engagement is broken off." repudium signified properly the dissolution of the pre-marital contract. Cf. 928 f.; Plaut. Aul. 784 Lyc. Is me nunc renuntiare repudium iussit tibi.

678. hanc: i. e. Phanium. illi: i. e. Phormio.

679. adeo, "very."

680. Lemni: locative. Cf. 66. uxoris: i. e. Nausistrata, who had estates in Lemnos. Cf. below, 788 ff.

681. dixerō: for the tense cf. n. on 516 (conduplicauerit). After this vs. the old men disappear into Chremes' house, without observing Antipho who had stepped out of his father's house at 606.

ACT IV. SCENE 4.

Antipho is very angry with Geta, for he thinks that the latter has injured his cause by giving Demipho the hope that Phanium may be got rid of. Geta assures him that the trick will work well, that Phanium is not in danger, and that Phormio will easily get out of the difficulty by pretending that the omens are opposed to his marriage with Phanium. Meantime the money will have been secured for Phaedria.

682. emunxi argento senes, "I have cleaned the old fellows out of their money."

683. satin est id, "that's enough, is n't it?" Antipho means that Geta has done more—that he has betrayed him besides. Geta pretends that Antipho is referring to the money, and answers, "I don't know, I 'm sure (if it's enough)." iussus sum: sc. facere. Cf. n. on 399.

684. uerbero, "you whip-scoundrel." Cf. 850, Ad. 781 mastigia = μαστίγιας (μάστιξ, 'a scourge'), i. e. "one who is all whips," because he is so often flogged.

685. narras = dicis, as in 368; "what then are you saying?" i. e. "what mean you (by satin est id?)?" narrem: for the mood see on 122.

686. Antipho means that nothing now remains for him but to go and hang himself. res redit: cf. Heaut. 931. n.

687. ut = utinam.

688. exemplis, "punishment." Cf. n. on Eun. 946.

689. qui . . . auferat: subj. of contingent futurity. Cf. B., App. 360. b. Transl. "for he (qui = is enim) would bear you, etc." tranquillo: on Eun. 1038. For the sentiment cf. Ad. 372. Of course Antipho is bitterly ironical.

690. hoc ulcus: i. e. this painful subject of my marriage.

694. quid fiet: like the English, "what then?" enim: intensive; see on 113. noui: ironical; "oh! I dare say."

695-6. "When they demand back the money, I suppose he'll prefer to go to prison for our sake." This Phormio would have to do for breach of contract (the money having already been spent by Phaedria), unless he should decide to adopt the only other possible course, viz., to marry Phanium, which is what Antipho fears he would do. in neruom: on 325.

699-700. iam si, etc., "the moment he receives the money he is under obligation to marry the girl, as you say—I admit it."

701. tandem, "after all." adparandi: cf. n. on Hec. 374.

702. uocandi: sc. amicos; "for issuing invitations." Cf. And. 453. sacrufcandi: cf. Ad. 699. paululum: adj. It is a substantive with following genitive in And. 360, Eun. 281. Notice its emphatic position.

703. amici: viz., of Phaedria.

704. inde, "out of that." iste: i. e. Phormio.

705. "How many things happened afterward to warn me against it!" postilia: on 347. monstra: in the original meaning, as derived from moneo; cf. Festus (p. 138 M., 114 Th.).

707. inpluuium: cf. Dz.-Hauler's n. on this passage.

709. ante brumam, "before the winter (solstice)," i. e. before Dec. 21st.

709-10. noui negoti: partitive gen.; "to think of beginning any new business!" Cf. Plaut. Most. 1017. We might understand initium; cf. And. 709. See App.

711. ut modo: on And. 409. me uide: on And. 350.

712. Phaedriæ: dat. with dic.

ACT IV. SCENE 5.

Demipho and Chremes appear from the home of the latter, and are busily engaged in discussing the recent arrangement with Phormio. They bring with them the money for Phormio, and Demipho promises Chremes, who is apprehensive of trickery, to clinch the bargain through the production of witnesses to the transaction. Chremes is of opinion that Phanium should be previously informed of the change in store for her, and that it would be well if Nausistrata should be sent to the girl to break the news. Demipho thinks this unnecessary, but gives his reluctant consent to the plan.

713. ne quid uerborum duit, "that he shall not impose upon us." uerba dare = "to cheat," lit. "to give words (and nothing but words)." For duit cf. n. on And. 666.

714. hoc: i. e. the bag containing the money for Phormio. amittam, "let go." quin . . . adhibeam, "without calling in witnesses."

715. commemorabo, "I'll recite," i. e. in the presence of witnesses.

716. opus facto est: on 584 and And. 490. lubido, "caprice," "whim."

717. altera illaec, "that other girl," to whom Phormio is supposed to be engaged. Cf. 657.

718. rem ipsam putasti, "you've hit the nail on the head." Cf. Ad. 796, 208. The idea in putare is that of exact calculation. eum: i. e. Phormio. ubi, etc.: addressed to Demipho.

719. hanc : i. e. Phanium.
720. dicat : sc. Nausistrata. Phormioni: felt with both dare and nuptum; "that we are giving her to Phormio in marriage."
721. qui ipsi sit familiarior, "since he is more closely related to her." Thus also 851, "pretty closely related to me," "one of the family."
722. is : i. e. Phormio.
723. quid malum id tua re fert, "what the mischief has that to do with you?" For malum see on Heaut. 318. magni (gen. of value) expresses the degree of concern, with re fert.
724. te: like the English indef. "you" = "one"; cf. Ad. 30. Chremes has an eye to the appearance of things.
725. ipsius : i. e. Phanium.
726. magis conuenit, "gets on better with."
727. rogabo, "I'll go and ask her." illas : i. e. his Lemnian wife and daughter. Cf. 571 f. Demipho goes to the market-place to settle with Phormio, after which he is to seek Nausistrata and bid her visit Phanium for the purpose already explained. Chremes remains behind on the stage.
- ACT V. SCENE 1.
- Sophrona, Phanium's nurse, appears from Demipho's house, but does not see Chremes, who is much startled when he recognizes her. His astonishment is increased when he hears from her that her mistress is dead and that his daughter is married to Antipho. At first he imagines that his nephew has two wives; but Sophrona soon convinces him that Phormio's ward and Phanium are the same person, and that his dearest wish is realized.
728. quo = ad quem. consilia haec, "these considerations," e. g. that the marriage with Antipho is in danger of being annulled, and Phanium of being turned out of house and home. See 731 and n. on 733 (infirmas).
732. nam quae = quae nam, "why, who?"; see Roby, 2296. a fratre : on And. 226. exanimata, "breathless," "distracted."
733. quod (acc.) refers to the fact indicated in 730, that she had advised the marriage. quom : adversative; see on Prol. 23. infirmas, "insecure," "shaky"; cf. Hec. 101. The insecurity of Antipho's marriage hinges evidently on the fact that his father's consent to it had not been previously obtained. It is true that divorce was easy, but as there had been no informality in the marriage it is difficult to see how it could be annulled except on the ground that parental authority was supreme.
734. interea : i. e. until Phanium's father should be found.
736. quid ago, "what's my course?" See on Heaut. 343.
737. adeo, maneo, dum, "shall I approach her, (or) remain quiet, while?" For the indic. see on And. 315.
740. respice : Chremes is in the rear, near his own house, while Sophrona has advanced directly to the front of the stage after issuing from the house of Demipho. Hence Chremes tells her to look back at him. Stilpo: for the spelling see on 356. Thus also Dziatzko and Fleckeisen.

741. hinc, "away from here." Sophrona, on hearing Chremes' voice, turned and approached the place where he was standing. This would bring her near to his house, though not so near to it as was Chremes himself. istorum, "that way," "in your direction," i. e. further toward Demipho's house, and away from that of Chremes. sodes: on And. 85.

742. appellassis: the archaic form of the sigmatic aorist subjunctive (or rather optative) in -sim (-sis, -sit, etc.). In the first and second conjugations -ssim (-ssis, -ssit, etc.) is found. See on 308 (faxo), and Hauler's n. Cf. King and Cookson, pp. 462-463. According to some authorities the form is syncopated from appellaueris. It may be observed that the pf. subj. would be the regular tense and mood in the present construction.

743. st has the prosodical value of a long syllable, in the middle of the vs. and the thesis of the foot. Cf. Plaut. Merc. 749 st abei.

744. He likens his wife to a wild beast. This is the meaning of conclusam, "caged"; saeuam suggests the rest. Menaechmus makes a similar comparison in Plaut. Men. 158 f. concede huc a foribus . . . etiam nunc concede audacter ab leonino cauo, the leo being his wife. Cf. n. on And. 386.

745. perperam, "falsely." Cf. Gk. πέρπερος.

746. effuttiretis, "should let it leak out." Contrast 477 confutauit. porro, "later on." aliqua : on 585.

749. Illae: the wife and daughter from Lemnos.

750. ex : cf. And. 268. aegritudine hac, "this trouble," "sorrow," refers to the necessity for her and her daughter to leave Lemnos and go in search of Chremes, who seems to have been indifferent enough to their lot. The noun was not used of bodily ailments before the Augustan period.

751. male factum, "bad job!" "too bad!" Cf. n. on And. 105 (factum bene). quae essem, "since I was."

752. locaui: on 645-6; "I gave the girl in marriage to this youth."

754. duasne uxores: an amusing utterance as coming from bigamous Chremes! See 1040 ff. au: an exclamation peculiar to women; usually of depreciation. Cf. 803. See on And. 751.

755. quid illam alteram, "what about that other girl?" Cf. 480 quid eum?

756. composito, "by arrangement." quo modo (i. e. ut eo modo) introduces a rel. cl. of purpose. Cf. B., App. 371 (370 rev. ed.).

757. sne dote: significant words, for it was to effect the marriage without a dowry that Phormio's scheme became necessary.

759. ut uolebam : i. e. secretly, without scandal ; see 578 ff. locatam, "settled," i. e. in marriage. See on 645-6.

760. ambo : i. e. Chremes and Demipho.
 761. fecit : sc. Antipho.
 762. quid, etc.: on 584.
 763. oppido : on 316.
 764. hanc : i. e. Phanium.
 765. See App. Chremes and Sophrona enter the house of Demipho.

ACT V. SCENE 2.

Demipho returns with Geta from the market-place, where the former has just concluded his bargain with Phormio by paying him the stipulated sum. Geta hints at the possibility that Phormio may refuse to marry the girl after all. Accordingly Demipho decides to hurry matters up and to seek Nausistrata's assistance in accordance with his promise to Chremes. Geta, left alone, sums up the situation, and decides to go home and warn Phanium against attaching too great importance to the remarks of either Phormio or Nausistrata.

766. nostrapte, "our own." Cf. Heaut. 686 meapte. The -pte is used by Plaut. also, and by Cicero, to strengthen the abl. sing. of possessive pronouns. facimus . . . esse, "we make it people's interest to be wicked." malis has slightly better MSS. support than malos and is more idiomatic; cf. Hor. Sat. 1. 1. 19 atqui licet esse beatis. On the contrary, cf. Heaut. 388 expedit bonas esse uobis.

768. ita fugias ne praeter casam : sc. fugias; "(in seeking to avoid danger) so run that you do not (in your haste) run beyond your place of refuge"; i. e. in trying to get out of one trouble take care not to get into a worse one. The expression is proverbial and is suggestive of Demipho's chagrin at having to part with good money to Phormio; see 769-770. quod aiunt : on And. 805.

769. etiam : see on 360. objectum: the word used by Vergil (Aen. vi. 421) of throwing the sop to Cerberus.

770. qui, "wherewith." qui uiuat : rel. cl. of purpose. It is often difficult to distinguish such a clause from a clause of characteristic. See on 756.

772. ut . . . gesserimus expresses the general result of circumstances previously alluded to by Demipho; "so that we have acted most foolishly in that matter." But it hangs directly on uerum quidem est (to be got out of uerissume). uerum est ut is common. For i cf. n. on Ad. 271. illi : locative = in illa re.

773. modo ut introduces a wish. Cf. 711. n. hoc consilio, "by means of this arrangement"; explained by the following ut-cl. (of result). posslet discedi : impersonal; "escape from the difficulty may be possible." Cf. 1047. For the form posslet cf. n. on 313.

774. haud scio . . an: originally non-committal, as here; "I know not whether or not he will change his mind."

777. ista: i. e. Phanium. loquatur: the subject is uxor eius, i. e. Nausistrata. hanc: i. e. Nausistrata. After this verse Demipho enters Chremes' house to find Nausistrata. The brief soliloquy which follows is hardly to be regarded as a new scene.

778. de iurgio siletur, "there is not a word about the row." The reference is to the scolding which Antipho and Geta very naturally had expected to receive on account of the lawsuit which Phormio had brought against Antipho to compel him to marry Phanium. Demipho has not yet reproached Antipho in person, though he has said many bitter things to others, and Geta has got off thus far with such mild reproof as was expressed in vss. 287-301. siletur: impers. passive; cf. caletur in Plaut. Capt. 80 and Truc. 65.

779. in praesentia: on Hec. Prol. 24. Cf. Ad. 222, Heaut. 962.

780. uorsuram solues, "you'll be paying compound interest," more lit. "you'll be making an exchange in your payment"; uorsura signifies an exchange with regard to a debt, and uorsuram facere = 'to borrow from one man to pay another,' for which uorsurā soluere is a practical equivalent, the text presenting a mixture of the two constructions. But to the second creditor one must of course pay higher interest; there's the point. Geta, in securing the money for the purchase of the music-girl, has incurred far heavier obligations with respect to Phanium; his last state is worse than his first.

781. praesens, "at hand," "imminent." in diem, "just for the day," "for the time being." Cf. Eun. 1020. abiit, "has disappeared."

783. huius: i. e. Nausistrata. See 776. The assumption that eius of the MSS. would refer to Phormio is hardly warranted. The meaning of the pronouns was largely determined for the spectators by the actor's gestures.

ACT V. SCENE 3.

Demipho reappears from Chremes' house in company with Nausistrata, who has consented to inform Phanium of the plan by which the latter is to become the wife of Phormio, with full dower rights. Nausistrata improves the occasion to criticize her husband, whose management of her estates in Lemnos has not been to her liking.

784. dum: on 329. ut soles, "with your customary tact." fac . . nobis, "make her feel kindly toward us."

786. pariter . . ac, "just as." re, "your substance," "your money." dudum opitulata es has reference to 681.

787. factum uolo, "you are welcome," more lit. "I wish it (done =) so." factum uelim would mean, "I should like it to be so," "I hope it may be so." factum uellem would mean, "I wish it were so (but it is not)." Cf. 432 and Ad. 165. Cf. 792. ac . . . dignumst, "and, believe me, it is my husband's fault that I am not able to do all that I ought."

788. bene parta, "honest earnings."

789. eis praediis refers to the patris bene parta. bina: i. e. two each year.

790. statim, "regularly." capiebat: i. e. Nausistrata's father received two silver talents yearly from the estates in question, while Chremes (owing of course to the expenses of his Lemnian family) managed apparently to make them yield less than that sum. Yet he brought back enough to render possible the payment of thirty minae ($\frac{1}{2}$ talent) to Phormio. Cf. n. on Eun. 80. uiro is dat. See Eun. 232.

791. "And that too when low prices were much more prevalent (than they are now)." The adversative or concessive idea, as well as the temporal, is present here in the abl. absol. See 1013. hui: of course Demipho's surprise is simulated.

792. quid haec uidentur, "what do you think of that?" scilicet, "most undoubtedly"; spoken as if Nausistrata had said, 'is not the difference extraordinary (between my father's management and my husband's) ?' natum uellem: on 787.

793. parce: cf. Plaut. Pers. 682 tace, parce uoci.

794. ut possis cum illa: sc. loqui or conloqui, or some infin. signifying to talk earnestly. Demipho naturally supposed that Phanium would object, and that violently.

795. abs te: on And. 226. exire: the classical use here would be exeuntem.

ACT V. SCENE 3 (continued).

As Chremes comes out of Demipho's house, where he has had an interview with his daughter, he does not at first see Nausistrata, who is standing somewhat in the background. He is in a state of considerable excitement, and the discovery of his wife's presence quite unnerves him. His desire to put a stop to any further proceedings, combined with his anxiety to keep the secret of Phanium's parentage from his wife, causes him to talk incoherently. Nausistrata becomes suspicious and Demipho impatient. Subsequently Nausistrata retires into her house, and Chremes is free to impart the news to his brother.

796. illi: i. e. Phormio. noilem datum = uellem non datum; cf. n. on 787, Heaut. 82.

797. paene . . . erat, "I had almost said too much." Cf. n. on Heaut.

198. For sat cf. Ad. 834. Understand dixi.

798. iam recte, "that's all right." Chremes is at a loss, but feels obliged to say something. quid tu, "what are you up to?" More emphatic than quid, or quid ais. The tu shows that Demipho takes note of Chremes' peculiar manner. istac . . . hanc: it is often desirable to render pronouns by the names of the persons to whom they refer, as, e. g. "have you spoken at all with Phanium about the reason why we are bringing Nausistrata to her?"

799. qui, "how?" i. e. what am I to understand by your saying that she cannot.

800. est cordi, "is dear to"; predicative dat. Cf. 588. nostra: sc. refert; cf. n. on 723. magni: on 723. praeterhac bears the same relation to praeterea as hic to is. Cf. n. on 347. In Ad. 847 praeter haec (so all MSS.) is changed by Fleckeisen to praeterhac — with Engelbrecht (Stud. Terent., p. 72).

801. sic erit: on Heaut. 1014. Cf. Ad. 182, Eun. 732.

802. redii mecum in memoriam, "I have recalled the circumstances." Cf. Cic. Cat. Mai. 21 in memoriam redeo mortuorum, "I recall the dead to mind." Cf. also Hec. 113, Ad. 71; Plaut. Capt. 1022 f.

803. au: on 754. non est: sc. cognata. ne nega, "don't be too sure."

804. aliud dictum est, "was intentionally changed." hoc tu errasti, "this was it that led to your mistake." hoc is causal abl., like istoc in 747.

805. hodie: on 1009. For numquam see on And. 198. Chremes, who has been nodding and gesticulating in the hope of giving Demipho the cue to the situation, now loses all patience. Cf. the scene in Plaut. Capt. 533-658 in which Aristophontes fails to understand the signs made to him by Tyndarus.

806. nil: i. e. that which amounts to nothing; "nonsense." perdis, "you're killing me." Cf. 856 enicas; Heaut. 582. miror quid siet, "I wonder what it all means."

807-8. ita . . . ut, "according as." illi: i. e. Phanium. homo nemo: paralleled in 591, Eun. 549, Hec. 281, Ad. 259. See App.

809. ad ipsam, "to the girl herself."

810. apud te, "in your esteem." credere, "to take it for granted."

811. uin satis quaesitum mi istuc esse, "do you wish me to cease my questions about that matter?" This and Chremes' previous remark are not audible to Nausistrata. illa filia: abl.; on 137. The reference is to the daughter of Chremes' Lemnian wife, whom Demipho does not yet know to be identical with Phanium.

812. amici nostri refers to Chremes, but in the presence of Nausistrata Demipho is careful to speak enigmatically. recte: cf. 798. n. hanc refers to Nausistrata. mittimus: deliberative; see on 447.

813. illa: Phanium as Demipho thinks of her, viz. as of a person distinct from illa filia (811). In reality the two are the same.

814. sic anticipates manere hanc (815) which is the subject to esse commodius. cooperas: with allusion to the plan of marrying her to Phormio.

815. perliberalis, "a thorough gentlewoman," "very lady-like." Cf. And. 120, Hec. 864. Nausistrata departs.

817. respicunt: on And. 642.

818. id: see App.

819. intro: i. e. into the house of Demipho. heus, "hark you," "see here."

ACT V. SCENE 4.

Antipho comes from the market-place, where he had gone to inform Phaedria of Geta's success in obtaining the money from the old men. He moralizes on the situation.

820. ut . . . habent, "however I am situated." ut in this sense is usually doubled. fratri: ἀδελφῷ; used in the sense of "cousin," for which the full expression was frater patruelis. Cf. Plaut. Poen. 1069.

821. scitum: pf. prtcpl. of scisco, with the force of a mere adj.; "judicious," "sensible."

822. quas: the acc. with medeōr is colloquial, but rare. quom, "if ever." paulo, "easily"; strictly a substantive (= "with little"), as in And. 903, Heaut. 498, Ad. 949. possis: subj. as in audias (488). Transl. "how wise it is to encourage in the soul only such longings as one would be able to satisfy, etc."

823. simul = simul ac.

824. euoluere, "disentangle."

825. sin patefit: the indic. in this condition suggests its reality. Antipho believes that his marriage is no longer a secret.

827. ubi . . . possim, "where should I be able?" i. e. if I were to try. See App.

828. See App.

ACT V. SCENE 5.

Phormio makes his appearance from the direction of the market-place. He congratulates himself on the result of his efforts in Phaedria's behalf, and thinks he will rid himself of the old men and take a few days off for pure enjoyment.

829. mulierem: i. e. Phaedria's lady-love.

830. propria, "for his very own"; abl. Phaedriā: nom. For the quantity of the final letter see on 865. poteretur: with the abl. only here in Ter.; with the acc. in 469, Ad. 871, 876. Cf. n. on 413 and Heaut. 580. Plautus writes potior with acc., abl., or gen. The form of the 3rd conj.

is frequent not only in early Latin but also in classical writers. Cf. potitur in Ad. 871, 876 and Per. 12 (with Dz.'s n.). emissa est manu, "she has been emancipated." Phaedria receives her as a freed-woman. Her status thus becomes that of an ēralpa.

831. una . . . etiam: the additory sense, which here penetrates etiam without expelling the temporal, is reinforced by una, as in And. 940, Heaut. 895, Eun. 1084. See Kirk in A. J. P. xviii, p. 69.

832. aliquot hos dies, "the next few days"; cf. n. on 159.

835. partis tuas: see 215–218. See on Eun. 151–152.

836. sus: sc. partis. See 266–268.

837. ire: on And. 379. Sunium: a prosperous town at the southern extremity of Attica. On the heights overlooking the sea was a celebrated temple of Poseidon, several columns of which are still standing.

838. emptum: supine. dudum, "just now"; with dixit. See 665.

840. concrepuit: on And. 682. Cf. n. in Dz.-Hauler.

ACT V. SCENE 6.

Geta, who has been eaves-dropping, suddenly issues in great excitement from the house of Demipho. He has learned the secret of the identity of Phanium with Chremes' Lemnian daughter, and is about to institute a rapid search for Antipho to whom he is anxious to relate the good news.

841. O Fortuna, o Fors Fortuna, "O Fortune ! O Lucky Fortune!" There is a reference to two different deities. The Templum Fortunae, which is still conspicuous on the left bank of the Tiber, not far from the Aemilian bridge, was built in honour of the first. It was converted into a church in 872. If antiquarians are correct, this temple was built by Servius Tullius in 557 B.C., and reconstructed after a fire in B.C. 214. See Lanciani (Ruins and Excavations of Ancient Rome, p. 514). Cf. n. on Eun. 134. The second deity had a separate temple, on the right bank of the Tiber.

843. quid nam: on And. 321. Cf. n. on 732. exonerastis: the opposite of onerastis (842). The verbal play is intentional.

844. mihī: ethical dat. pallio: the pallium, a large outer cloak, copied from the Greek ἰπάριον, was worn even by slaves. To draw it up and toss it over the shoulder was to prepare for active exercise, and was done when there was need of haste. Cf. Eun. 769. Cf. also Plaut. Capt. 778 f. nunc certa res est, eodem pacto ut comici serui solent, coniciam in collum pallium, primo ex med hanc rem ut audiat. It was from this garment that the comoedia palliata derived its name.

845. hominem: i. e. Antipho.

847. em tibi, "there you are again!" For em see on And. 416; for tibi, on 844. Cf. Ad. 790. n.

848. Cf. Ad. 320–321, where Sostrata's slave, Geta, is called back by his mistress just as he is about to hasten in search of her. The Geta there, like his namesake in the present play, is afraid of trickery and delay, for it was a common practical joke at Athens to detain slaves in the streets on false pretenses, that they might subsequently be punished for loitering. institeris: indefinite 2d person; "when one has started ou a run." Hence the subj. For the acc. (cursum) cf. Plaut. Capt. 794 omnes itinera insistant sua.

849. pergit hercle, "gad! he keeps it up." tu: contemptuous. odio tuo, "with your insolence." Cf. Horace's use of odio in Sat. 1. 7. 6.

850. uapula, "go get yourself flogged." resistis: on And. 344. uerbero: on 684.

851. familiariorem: on 721.

852. ipsus: on And. 360. congredere actutum, "up to him at once." Geta addresses himself.

853. quantum est: sc. hominum (part. gen.). Cf. Plaut. Capt. 836 quantumst hominum optumorum optume, and Hor. Sat. 1. 6. 1 f. Lydorum quicquid Etruscos incoluit finis. An expression of quantity takes the place of an expression of number. On the Emphatic Neuter, cf. John Greene in Class. Rev. xviii. p. 448.

854. solus: on And. 973.

855. Cf. n. on Hec. 103.

856. si te delibutum gaudio reddo, "if I cause you to be saturated with joy." Cf. n. on 559. enicas: cf. n. on 806 (perdis), and see 384.

857. quin . . aufer: on And. 45. Cf. 223, 486. cedo: cf. 321, 197; see on And. 150.

859. recta: on And. 600. domum: Demipho did not go home on the occasion referred to here. He went to Chremes' house to see Nausistrata (776). Geta alone went home, to inform Phanium that Nausistrata was coming to see her (777). Hence domum is not quite exact, and Bentley suggests ad Chremem as a substitute. But Bentley is too literal here. The two houses stood side by side on the stage, so that domum correctly gives the general direction which the two men took from the market-place.

862. gynaecēum (gynaeceum, γυναικεῖον or γυναικωνῖτις) was the name given to that part of the Gk. house which was devoted to the use and convenience of the women. It was at the back and was wholly distinct from the apartments of the men. See on Eun. 579. For the ē see on And. 796.

863. pone prendit pallio, "plucks me behind by the cloak." See App. resupinat, "jerks me back."

865. Sophronā: Plaut. and Ter. usually preserve the long quantity of the nom. sing. of Gk. proper names in -a, provided such names consist of more than two syllables. Hence Phaedriā (830), Sostratā (Ad. 343); but Getā (usually).

866. Notice the sudden change to indirect discourse.
867. suspensō gradu, "on tiptoe." Thus Phaedrus, of a cat, suspensō pede (2. 4. 18.). astiti: from adsisto.
868. animum . . . attendere, "to listen."
869. hoc modō, "after this fashion," "like this"; accompanied by a gesture. Geta puts his hand to his ear and leans forward.
871. quod nam: on And. 321.
872. Phanio: dat. of reference, dependent on pater (inuentus est). The gen. would be less vivacious. Cf. Plaut. Mil. 1431 Philocomasio amator, and the use of the prep. "to" in the lists of dramatis personae prefixed to the plays of Shakespeare.
874. somnium, "mere fancy," "moonshine." Cf. 494, Ad. 204, Plaut. Amph. 738 somnium narrat tibi. utine . . . ignoraret: cf. 304, 669; see on Heaut. 784.
877. inaudiūl, "I have chanced to hear"; found only in the perfect tenses. See Brix on Plaut. Mil. 213. immo etiam dabo: freely, "nay, I will tell you something more." Cf. n. on Hec. 869. For etiam see A. J. P. xviii. pp. 29 and 40.
882. fecero, "I'll do so at once." Cf. n. on 516 (conduplicauerit).
883. ita . . . ament: on 165. Cf. 954. bene factum, "good job!" "good work!" Phormio is referring to the discovery regarding Phanium's parentage. After this vs. Antipho and Geta enter Demipho's house, leaving Phormio alone on the stage. The soliloquy which follows was first treated as a separate scene by Faernus.
- ACT V. SCENE 7.
- Phormio prepares the audience for what is to come. With the information he possesses he sees his way toward relieving Phaedria of all anxiety about the thirty minae. He knows also how he may take vengeance on the old men.
884. datam: sc. esse. See on And. 245.
885. eludendi, "of outwitting."
886. adimere: notice the shift from gerund to infinitive—for variety's sake. We might look for adimendi.
888. "For this same money, even as it has been given (to Phaedria by me), so it shall remain in his possession, whether they will or no (ingratiis)."
Note the force of datum erit, the finite verb being separated in thought from the participle.
889. hoc . . . repperi: freely, "the course of events has taught me how I can force the situation." hōc is acc.; see on 266. Phormio means that he will use the knowledge he now possesses of Chremes' intrigue to force the old men to do as he shall direct. reāpse: on Hec. 778.

891. angiportum, "passage," "alley"; see on Eun. 845, Ad. 576.
proxumum, "hard by."

893. non eo, "I do not intend to go." Cf. n. on 388.

ACT V. SCENE 8.

Chremes and Demipho appear from the latter's house, intending to look for Phormio in the market-place and inform him that they have altered their minds on the subject of the contract, and desire their money to be returned to them. On encountering them Phormio proceeds at once with his new plan. He pretends readiness to marry Phanium without delay. Demipho interposes some very lame excuses, whereupon Phormio assumes an air of righteous indignation: he has already spent the money in paying his debts, for it was his inasmuch as he had kept the contract by breaking with the other girl. Their indecision has placed him in a false position, and the dowry is his only compensation. Demipho retorts in anger, calling Phormio a rogue and cheat, while he in turn discloses his knowledge of the Lemnian intrigue. Chremes then foregoes his claim, while Phormio continues his taunts. Finally Demipho endeavours to drag the parasite off to the law-court by main force. But Phormio makes his way to a point close to Chremes' house, and calls aloud for Nausistrata. The old men do their best to stop his cries and to get him away from the neighbourhood. During the struggle Nausistrata appears.

894. gratias habeo: the regular construction is gratiam habeo, as in And. 42 and 770; but as ago takes the pl. the latter may be explained here as due to the influence of that verb. The only other instance of the pl. with habeo is Plaut. Trin. 659, and the text there has been thought to be incorrect. gratiam habere = "to feel gratitude"; gratias agere = "to express gratitude (thanks)," while "to return (requite) a favour" is expressed by gratiam referre. The last occurs in Hec. 583-584.

896. quantum potest: on And. 861.

897. dilapidat, "demolishes"; a rather flippant expression for consumit. nostras . . . minas is felt with ut auferamus as well as with dilapidat.

901. ridiculum: sc. est; cf. 238 durum, 492 fabulae. Demipho means that it's absurd to ask such a question, as if their purpose in coming to him were not self-evident. Phormio must return the money, which (in their view) he is no longer entitled to keep. See App.

902. recepissem: on Heaut. 1056.

903. heus, "look you!" See on And. 635. quanta quanta = quanta cumque. Cf. Ad. 394.

905. estne . . . liberalis, "is she not lady-like, as I told you?" For the force of -ne see on And. Prol. 17. See App.

906. adeo: on 645; to be taken with id.

908. posthabui : cf. Hec. 483. n.
909. animum aduorteram, "I had noticed," "perceived." Cf. n. on And. 156.
910. hic : i. e. Chremes.
912. potuit: sc. dari.
913. See App. Demipho here retorts upon Phormio words similar to those which the latter used in 413–414.
914. coram : adv. = "to my face," as in Ad. 484 coram ipsum cedo, and generally in early Latin. quae . . . me: double acc. after incusaueras; cf. Roby, 1122, 1123.
915. inluditis me : on And. 758; "you're making game of me in a pretty high and mighty way" (Morgan).
917. quo redibo ore : the question is rhetorical, the idea being that he will hardly have the "face" to return to her under the circumstances. quam contempserim, "seeing that I have jilted her."
921. ad forum : the bankers and men of business were generally to be found in the market-place or forum (ἀγορά).
922. Demipho presumably had paid the money to Phormio through a banker. He now seeks to have the money returned to him in a similar manner. Phormio has only to order it to be "transferred again" from his own account to Demipho's (mihi rursum rescribi). A banker was termed tarpezita (Plaut. Capt. 192), Gk. τραπεζίτης (trapezita). Cf. Circ. 377, Pers. 435, Pseud. 296. The business of a banker or money-changer in ancient times was carried on much as in our own day. Cf. n. on Ad. 277.
923. quodne : on And. 768. Transl. "do you mean the money which, etc.?" quod is relative, not interrogative. discripsi conveys the idea of paying money to different persons.
925. sin est ut uelis, "but if it happens that you wish." est ut conveys the idea of chance, not of possibility. Cf. 270; Hec. 501, 558, 637, 724; Ad. 514.
926. illam : i. e. Phanium. hic, "here," i. e. apud me, "in my possession."
928. repudium : on 677. alterae: for this form of the dat. (archaic) cf. Eun. 1004 mihi solae, and see on And. 608.
- 928–9. quom . . . remiserim, "seeing that it is out of regard for you that I have broken my engagement with the other lady."
929. dabat, "was to bring." The dowry had not yet been paid to Phormio by the other lady's parent or guardian.
930. in' = isne (from eo). For the pres. tense, where one might expect the fut., cf. n. on 388. See App. istac magnificentia, "your bluster," "your high-toned absurdities."
931. etiam : on And. 282, Heaut. 187.
932. adeo : with ignorarier; "that you or your doings are so little understood." inritor, "I am becoming enraged"; different from inritatus sum. Cf. And. 597, Ad. 282.

935. quin . . . cedo: on And. 45 and 150. Cf. Phorm. 223 and 197. tu: emphatic; "nay it is your business to (cease your questions and) let me have the money."

936. in ius ambula, "march straight into court." Cf. 981; Plaut. Cure. 621, 624 ambula in ius. This was the regular formula wherewith a private citizen could summon another into court for the redress of a grievance. He possessed the right even to use force. Cf. Hor. Sat. 1. 9. 77 rapit in ius. It was necessary however that a third person should act as a witness; cf. licet antestari, l. c. 76.

937. enim uero: on And. 91.

938. indotatis, "undowried women." Cf. 120. See on Ad. 345. The context, not the ending, determines the gender. So it is also with dotatis (940) and often with other adj. forms in Ter. Cf. 298 inopem and Ad. 155 f. The reference here is to Phanium.

940. etiam: See A. J. P. vol. xviii. p. 31. 2. and n. on And. 368. dotatis: with allusion to Nausistrata. Cf. n. on 938. quid id nostra ("what is that to us?") shows that Chremes is wholly without suspicion of Phormio's knowledge regarding the Lemnian intrigue. Consequently he is astounded at the disclosure made in 942. See on 800 (nostra).

941. quandam: sc. dotatam, i. e. Nausistrata.

942. aliam hints at the possibility of there being more than two wives; alteram would be more correct. nullus sum: on And. 599. Cf. 179.

943. clam: on 1004. sepultus sum: cf. 1026. See on And. 599.

944. adeo: on 645; to be taken with haec. illi: i. e. to Nausistrata. denarrabo: de- is intensive, as in decertantem (Hor. Od. 1. 3. 13). Cf. Hor. Sat. 2. 3. 315, and Aul. Gell. 1. 23. 12 rem, sicut fuerat, denarrat.

945. ut ludos facit, "what sport (game) he is making of us!"

946. missum te facimus, "we discharge you," "we let you off." Cf. n. on And. 680.

947. condonamus: cf. n. on Eun. Prol. 17. audio: on 160, And. 552.

948. malum: on Heaut. 318.

949. inepti: cf. n. on Ad. 271. See App.

951. indictum . . . inritum: on Ad. 507.

953. nisi: on 475, And. 664, Heaut. 542.

954. ita . . . ament: on 165; cf. 883. monstri . . . simile, "it's like a miracle," "it's prodigious." Cf. Eun. 384. inieci scrupulum, "I have made him uneasy," "I've put a spoke in his wheel." Cf. 1019. See on And. 940; cf. Ad. 228.

955. For the construction see on And. 263 and Heaut. 784. Cf. 304.

956. emori: e- is intensive.

957. animo . . . praesenti: on Eun. 769.

961. placabilius: on Heaut. 204–205. Cf. 226; Ad. 608. Transl. “is the better way to appease her.”

962. inpuratum: cf. 669. n. (on etiam).

963. ulclisci: on And. 624. On the hiatus see on 146. haereo: sc. in luto; cf. 780. Transl. “I’m stuck,” or “I’m in a box.” Notice the vivid colouring imparted to the picture through the use of the pres. tense. The fut. would be wholly lifeless. For this metaphorical use of haereo cf. Plaut. Capt. 532.

964. “Freely, these fellows are preparing to set upon me, with the purpose of fighting to the death.” The gladiator’s motto was ‘no quarter’ Phormio may be supposed to have overheard the preceding remarks of Demipho. The allusion in gladiatorio animo is purely Roman; such references are unusual in Terence, though common in Plautus.

965. possit: the subject is Nausistrata.

966. For the good understanding between Demipho and Nausistrata see 786 ff.

967. quom: not temporal nor causal, but explicative = “the fact that,” “that.” See on Ad. Prol. 18. Cf. Dz.-Hauler. The cl. explains hoc (966). e medio excessit, “is out of the way,” “has departed this life.” Cf. 1019 and n. on Hec. 620. Cf. also Ad. 479. unde = a (ex) qua, i. e. “from whom (as her mother).” haec: i. e. Phanium. suscepta est, “was acknowledged,” and therefore reared.

969. “It is not to the advantage of that gentleman then that you have goaded me on.” The reference in the pronoun is to Chremes.

970. ain tu, “and what say you?” The logical object of ain is in 973. tu = Chremes. ubi . . . feceris, “after you have carried on abroad according to your fancy.” Iubitum fuerit: the subj. is due to the influence of feceris (attraction). feceris: the subj. is used because the adversative idea is expressed with ‘special reference to its logical relation to the principal clause’ in 973. See B., App. 400. 3; 406. 3; 407.

971. “And have not had respect (enough) for this excellent lady.” feminae: genitive, analogous to the gen. with pudet (see on 392), and found occasionally with uereor in early Latin.

972. quin, etc.: this cl. really depends on the idea of prevention implied in 971; “you did not let respect, etc., hinder you from insulting, etc.” nouo, “strange,” “unheard of.” This is hyperbolical, of course.

973. iautum, “to wash away”; supine.

974. hisce . . . dictis, “with this my story.” Ita . . . incensam dabo, “I’ll render so incensed”; see on And. 683 (inuentum dabo).

975. ut ne: on And. 259. Transl. “that you shall not quench her, though you dissolve in tears.”

976. See App. malum (see n. on 723), though interjectional, yet serves as an antecedent to quod. Cf. Plaut. Amph. 563 malum quod tibi di dabunt atque ego hodie dabo. See however n. in Dz.-Hauler. dūint: archaic optative; see Dz.-Hauler on 123. Such forms as duim, perduim, etc., are very common, in Plaut. and Ter., in prayers and imprecations — in later writers only in ritualistic formulæ and the like. Cf. Lorenz on Plaut. Most. 655.

977. On And. 245. Cf. 153.

978. publicitus, "at the public cost." scelus, "rascal," "villain"; common in Plaut., who has also scelus uiri, scelus pueri, flagitium, flagitium pueri, and the like. The abstract is very strong and implies that the whole man is the very impersonation of wickedness. Cf. Ad. 768. asportarier: used in 551. The punishment of exile was inflicted by the Greeks upon great criminals. In the time of the Roman Empire the term used of transportation for life, with loss of citizenship, was deportare. This verse suggests Hanno's proposition about Hannibal (Livy, xxi. 10. 12).

980. nesciam prorsum, "I don't know at all."

981. in ius: on 986. huc, "into this place," i. e. into the house of Chremes, where Nausistrata will be found to be the best judge — in Phormio's opinion. quid: acc.

982. dum, "until"; frequently followed in this sense by the pres. indic. in Plautus and Terence, and even in Cicero (though in classical Latin the subj. is usual), esp. after such verbs as exspecto, operior and the like. The future actio*u* is thus represented as certain. Cf. Ad. 196, 785; And. 329, 714. See Gil.-Lodge 571, note 2. Strictly however dum with pres. indic. expresses contemporaneous action and means "while"; in nearly all cases the use of "until" is a concession to colloquial English. Chremes runs to the house of Demipho for the purpose of summoning the slaves to his assistance. Through their aid he hopes to prevent Phormio from entering his (Chremes') house, and to force him to go to the court of law. Cf. n. on 936.

983. enim nequeo, "really I cannot." Cf. n. on And. 91. adcurre: Demipho calls Chremes back. una iniuria est tecum, "that's one (case of) assault against you." The explanation of Donatus (Wessner, vol. ii. p. 480) is 'actio iniuriarum ex lege.' Phormio threatens first Demipho and then Chremes with an action for assault — δικη αἰκλας, here represented by iniuria.

984. altera : sc. iniuria.

985. rape: used technically of forcing a person into court by violent means. Cf. Hor. Sat. 1. 9. 77 cited on 986. enim uero: cf. 465. See on And. 91.

986. impurum : see App.

988. taceam : on 431. Cf. n. on 382 (nossem), and on 1001.

989. oculum : Hauler has well refuted the strange assumption of Dziatzko that Phormio had but one eye, and that such is here the meaning of the singular. See n. in the Dz.-Hauler ed. est ubi : lit. "there's a time (coming) when," i. e. freely, "sometime"; cf. εστιν ότε. probe: emphatic.

ACT V. SCENE 9.

Nausistrata hears Phormio's voice and comes out of her house in answer to the summons. Phormio relates to her, though not without interruption, the story of her husband's Lemnian intrigue. Nausistrata is much incensed, and Phormio takes advantage of the situation to put in a word for Phaedria. The young man's interests are thus rendered secure for him through Phormio's friendship and his mother's leniency. Chremes is thoroughly discomfited. His brother's intercession however obtains for him a partial forgiveness, and he comes off better than he expected. Phormio's insolent triumph reaches a climax when Nausistrata, at the parasite's own suggestion, invites him to dinner.

990. qui : on 129.

991. obstipuisti : addressed to Chremes. Cf. And. 256, Ad. 613.

992. hicine ut, etc., "is it possible that, etc.?" See on And. 263.

993. creduas : Plautus has also the forms creduis, creduit; cf. n. on 976 (duint). These archaic forms are wont to be brought into use at the close of verses or half verses, when they are convenient as aids to the metre.

994. abl. : here, as elsewhere in Ter., a simple ejaculation. The meaning varies with the context. It may be contemptuous (as here), or complimentary, or threatening, or expressive of contentment and satisfaction. Cf. n. on 59 and on Ad. 220. friget : i. e. with fright.

998. non, etc., "it is not for nothing, indeed, that you are so frightened." For tam cf. n. on Heaut. 1052, Ad. 278.

1000. scelus : on 978.

1001. tibi narret, "tell it to help you?" Demipho asks Phormio if Chremes is to tell the story in order to assist the parasite in his rascally purpose. narret echoes the previous narra, by way of repudiating the idea. See on 431. Cf. B., App. 363. d. (rev. ed.).

1003. dicto : on 584; so also scito. huic : i. e. Nausistrata.

1004. clam : often a prep. with acc. in early Latin. In 943 it is an adv., as always in the classical period.

1005. mi homo, "my good fellow!" addressed to Phormio, and somewhat contemptuous. duint : on 976. More common is di meliora without the verb.

1006. inde = ab (ex) ea ; cf. n. on 967 (unde).

1007. dormis: cf. Heaut. 730, Ad. 693. Transl. "while you are all unconscious of the truth." quid agimus: indic. in delib. question; see on And. 315. Cf. n. on 447 and 737.

1009. hoc actum est: sarcastic reply to Chremes' quid agimus. There is evidently a play on the word agere, i. e. "the thing is done," "it's all over (with you)." Ordinarily this would require de hoc, etc. hodie adds emphasis but is without temporal sense. Cf. the colloquial use of the English 'now' in such a sentence as 'he never did anything of the kind, now.' This use of hodie is noted by Donatus (Wessner, vol. ii. p. 48) on Ad. 215 as follows, 'hodie non tempus significat, sed iracundam eloquentiam ac stomachum, ut Vergilius' (Aen. II. 670), etc. It is esp. frequent with negatives, and in questions implying a negative, as in the present instance. Cf. 377, 805, etc.; Hor. Sat. 2. 7. 21.

1010. qui refers to an implied em uiros. mi: ethical dat.

1011. hoc ipso: i. e. Chremes. distaedet: dis- is intensive. Cf. Eun. 832 dispudet; Heaut. 404, 970, Ad. 355 disperii, 610 discrucior, 369 disrumpor; Plaut. Trin. 922 discupio, etc.

1012. "This was the meaning of those frequent visits to and prolonged stays at Lemnos?" haec is fem. nom. pl.

1013. Lemni: locative, with mansiones which is nearest to it. With itiones the acc. would be the proper case. haecine: note the repetition (anaphora). fructus, "rents," "income." uilitas, "fall in values (prices)," lit. "cheapness of things." See 791 and n.

1014. meritum esse: sc. eum, i. e. Chremes. See on And. Prol. 14. Cf. 255.

1015. quin sit ignoscenda: sc. (from the preceding vs.) nego eum culpam meritum esse; "but I do deny that he has committed a crime that is unpardonable." Better than this would be to make quin interrog., "why should it not be deserving of pardon?" Cf. n. in Dz.-Hauler. uerba fiunt mortuo, "a speech for the dead is being made." Demiphō's words are ironically compared by Phormio to a funeral oration, and in fact Chremes' attitude is quite in keeping with this idea, since he appears as if he were more dead than alive. Cf. 994, 997-998 and 1026. Cf. also the suggestion contained in 943 sepultus sum.

1016. The possessive pronouns in this vs. = pers. pron. in the obj. gen.

1018. haec: i. e. Phanium.

1019. qui: attracted from the fem. into the masc. by scrupulus. scrupulus: on And. 940.

1021. quid, etc.: sc. feram. defungier: used absolutely, as in Eun. Prol. 15. Transl. "I wish . . . to make an end of it now," i. e. to bring my husband's intrigues to a finish. In Ad. 508 the verb is used impersonally, and some editors take it so here. The translation of Bond and Walpole, "I should like to die at once in my misery," seems to be aside of the mark—more so even than Madame Dacier's 'Je veux rompre avec lui pour toujours' which those editors condemn.

1022. qui id sperem, "how can I hope for this?" i. e. for his reform. aetate, "because of his age," "at his time of life."

1023. tum: i. e. when he was engaged in the Lemnian intrigue. uere-cundos, "well behaved."

1024. magis expetenda, "more attractive."

1025. quid . . . adfers, "what guarantee do you offer me here?" fore: sc. id; see on And. Prol. 15.

1026. exsequias: acc. of limit of motion. In the time of Terence the classical usage regarding this construction had not become fixed. Cf. n. on Ad. 339. The vs. contains part of the regular formula employed in a summons to a public funeral. Now that the funeral oration (cf. 1015. n.) is at an end Chremes is ready to be buried. Chremeti: on And. 368. For the meaning of the dat. here see on Hec., Didasc. 6 (L. Aemelio Paulo).

1027. sic dabo, "that's how I'll deal with him," or "that's my way." dare = facere is common in the sermo familiaris; also in Lucretius, Vergil, and other poets. See Munro on Lucretius, 4, 41.

1028. faxo: on 308. mactatus, "smitten." hic: on 266. infor-tunio: cf. Heaut. 668, Ad. 178.

1029. See App. Transl. "well, let him come back into her good graces now: I am satisfied with his punishment." Said aside.

1030. "She has something now which she can din into his ears continually, as long as he lives," i. e. "something about which to nag him." For the subj. in obganniat see on 770; but the volitive idea is hardly paramount here to the potential. Cf. Elmer's n. dum uiuat: subj. by attraction.

1031. at, etc., "but (it happened) I suppose through my own fault." Understand factum (est). This is ironical.

1033. minume gentium, "not the least in the world"; a colloquialism in which the gen. is commonly called partitive. Cf. nusquam gentium, ubinam gentium, ποῦ γῆς; Ad. 342, 540, Heaut. 928.

1034. infectum, "unmade," "undone"; not the pf. prtcpl. of inficio.

1036. haec: i. e. Nausistrata.

1040. hem, quid aīs: Chremes' virtuous horror (cf. 754) crops out again.

1042. nil pudere: sc. te; for nil see on And. 481–482, Ad. 754. quo ore: cf. 917. n., Heaut. 700.

1047. discedo, "I get off." Cf. n. on 773 (possiet discedi). Chremes' words are said aside.

1048. quid sit: on 354.

1049. amicus summus: on And. 970.

1050. ecastor: on And. 229. quod potero: on Heaut. 416.

1051. -que et: on And. 676. meritum: as in 305 (where see n.).
1052. quod, "on account of which"; an acc. that is more common with gaudeo in early than in classical Latin. It is variously designated as an adv. acc., acc. of respect, cognate acc., etc. We should expect the abl. of cause. The use approximates that in Eun. 449 (where see n.). quod ego gaudeam: on 488.
1053. quod . . . doleant: on 1052 and 488. For the proverbial nature of the expression cf. Plaut. Most. 891 oculi dolent.
1054. See App.
1055. faxo aderit: on 308. Cantor: on And. 981.

APPENDIX TO NOTES ON THE PHORMIO.

15. Suspected by Guyet, Ritschl, Fleck.; bracketed by Dz. (see his Adn. Crit.).
21. id: the reading of A; retained by Fleck. who omits esse.
49. ubi initia bunt: see crit. n. in the Dz.-Hauler ed. of this play, and Smith's Dict. of Antiq., 3rd ed. (1891), vol. i, p. 722.
156. Dz. follows Schlee in reading consciū's and rejecting sis (see footnote); he retains est, which is needed in view of Antipho's reply, for quid istuc is a mere expression of surprise, whereas quid istuc est is a real question. This has been shown by Schlee (De uersuum in canticis Terentianis consecutione, 1879).
175. Elmer rightly alters the MSS. reading to retinere an amorem amittere, with Goldbacher [Wiener Studien, vii. (1885), p. 162], not only for the sake of the sense, but in order to preserve the parallelism between these infinitives and amittendi nec retinendi in the next vs. Dz. and Tyrrell disregard this point, for the sake of the form mittere which is better suited to the circumstances of the case than amittere.
191. nam here is supposed to preserve a continuation into the clausula, of the metre of the preceding vs.; thus Bentley (followed by Conradt, p. 18). It is omitted by Dz.-Hauler as unnecessary, on the assumption that in the arsis (unaccented syllable) of the first foot a monosyllabic word ending in m might retain that letter before a vowel at the beginning of the following word. Cf. Hauler's n. But Leo (Plaut. Forsch., 306 f., the very place to which Hauler refers) regards the few places in Ter. like this as corrupt. He doubts also the cases in Plautus.
199. et: rightly retained by Hauler, as strengthening the expression. Cf. And. 571, Plaut. Trin. 111 simul eius matrem suamque uxorem mortuam, where matrem and uxorem are the same person. Cf. also Bacch. 495, Capt. 879, Stich. 372 and 373; Hauler in Wiener Studien, IV. 322 ff. The connexion by et or -que has many parallels in English, as is noted by Morris on Trin. l. c.

215. hic quis est: this order, which is that of A, is well defended by Elmer, and is adopted by Hauler; see the latter's crit. n. But quis hic est is the usual sequence in Plautus and is accepted by Dz. and Fleck.

243. Bracketed also by Dz. on insufficient authority. It is better to retain the vs. and to read (with Hauler following A), ferant, Pericla, damna, exsilia: peregre rédiens semper cogitet. That Cicero regarded it as genuine would appear from Tusc. Disp. 3. 14. 30.

245. Many editors have preferred to write this vs. as it is cited by Cicero (Tusc. 3. 14. 30). But apart from the fact that the MSS. of Cicero have suffered alteration, as well as those of Terence, the great orator is well known as an inaccurate transcriber of quoted passages, and is probably less to be relied on than the copyist.

246. deputare: to explain this as depending on oportet (242) is awkward, since cogitet, which is generally regarded as a jussive subj. = "let him think," intervenes as a construction of a different character. This difficulty would be obviated of course by omitting 243. But it is better to retain 243 and take cogitet as a subj. of obligation or propriety, equivalent in force to cogitare oportet. 'Then . . . the idea of oportet will remain sufficiently prominent throughout the passage to render it natural enough to make deputare depend upon it.' Thus Elmer in Class. Rev. vol. xii. p. 204. This explanation of Elmer's gives definiteness to the syntax, yet it is somewhat forced, for the difference between it and the ordinary view (cogitet = jussive subj.) is slight at the best; no one can naturally take cogitet in any way save as jussive. A simpler view is to suppose that in vs. 246 Ter. is a bit confused, owing to the two or three preceding infinitives.

249. Dz. reads molendumst, with Bentley, on slight MSS. authority. est is preferable to esse, though the latter is found in A and other good MSS. usque also has good MSS. support. The reading of the text is accepted by Hauler and Fleck.

284. ibi obstupefecit of the MSS. is well defended by Hauler. Dz. has illuc obstupefecit, after Fleck. (1st ed.).

328. Regarded by Dz. as well as by Fleck. as an interpolation, but retained by Hauler, Skutsch and others—rightly.

330. tennitur is due to Donatus. MSS. tenditur. Don. however recognizes the MSS. reading, for he says, legitur et 'tennitur': habet enim N littera cum D communionem. Cf. Plaut. Mil. 1407 dispennite hominem diuorsum et distennite. No doubt -nn- is the phonetic spelling, and for that reason more correctly represents the word as it was used in the sermo vulgaris, but it would seem a matter of questionable propriety to set aside the testimony of the MSS. for the opinion of a single grammarian. Yet this is what most editors have done — a fact to which attention has been called by Bond and Walpole in their note on this verse.

387. pote: preferred also by Dz. and Fleck., and supported by Ad. 264 nil pote supra. Hauler and Elmer retain potest, which, though defensible on metrical grounds, might easily be the result of a scribe's correcting hand. The omission of est would be natural in colloquial language, as in Ad. l. c., and often in Plaut. Cf. Engelbrecht, Stud. Ter., p. 29.

368. The assumption that ut of the MSS. is a gloss on atque is purely arbitrary, although atque (= "as") is common enough. Hence it would be well to retain ut and to place the comma at illum. Transl. "just look at yourself and him, as you describe him" (= "just look at yourself and then at your picture of him"): i. e. what a contrast between your description of that excellent man and what you actually are yourself. Geta is here carrying out the threat he made in 359. Phormio has defied him by saying vss. 361–367, which imply that Demipho knew the man and was unkind.

373. tamen, for tandem, is an unnecessary alteration of the MSS. Bentley says, 'tandem' et uersui officit et sententiae. But a spondaic word is not necessarily out of place in the fourth foot of the iambic senarius, and the regular word in this expression (which is a stereotyped use) is tandem, not tamen. Cf. And. 875. n., and 859, Ad. 276. See also Phorm. 231, 413, 527. Hauler reads tandem.

476. in aliis: the occurrence of in before hac is sufficient to make it felt also before aliis, the verb of the dependent clause being the same as that of the principal. It is otherwise in Eun. 119. Cf. Hauler's n. on 171.

501. ueris, the reading of all MSS., is well supported by Hauler and Elmer against uerbis, which is the reading of G by a second hand and accepted by Dz. and Fleck. For ueris = ueris dictis (uerbis) cf. And. 114 multis, 29 paucis, etc.

502. neque: Dz., following Wagner, reads atque. The sense will then be, "(to think) that this blow should have fallen upon me at a time when Antipho is engrossed with another trouble (of his own)," and is therefore unable to help me. Against this however are the tense of occupatus esset, and o fortunatissime of 504.

507. This vs. reads like a gloss on the preceding, and is rejected by Bentley and Dz. But Hauler regards it as genuine and it is retained by Fleck.

515. obtundes: not so good as obtundis. See Hauler's crit. n.

597. The MSS. point to sese here for esse, and to esse in 598 for sese. The transposition is due to Lachmann. See his Lucretius, p. 161.

604. institi: Dz. thinks that A points to this form rather than to institui.

667. MSS. his rebus sane pone (or pone sane) inquit decem minas, which Dz. alters nearly as in the text (see footnote), partly on metrical grounds, partly because the vs. takes no account of the previous repetition of the number ten, but is constructed as if the sum of ten minae were mentioned now for the first time. Hauler however does well to adhere to the MSS., esp. as it would be very natural for the speaker to endeavour to make his number appear smaller, by omitting reference to what had gone before. Moreover there is nothing to show that a vs. of Terence may not conclude with two iambi. Cf. Hauler's crit. n.

710. Dz. supposes a lacuna to exist before quae; not so Hauler and Fleck.

765. audiemus, the conjecture of Bentley, is a less fortunate emendation for audies of the MSS. than audietis, the reading of Dz. (following Weise and Wagner) and of Fleck. The 2nd pers. pl. will include Phanium, who is entitled to be informed of what has taken place, and who can be found only within the house. Cf. n. in the Dz.-Hauler ed.

808. homo : retained by Fleck., rightly. See explanatory note.

818. id is retained by Fleck., but may well be rejected, since potuit is quite impersonal; cf. 303, Heaut. 677, Ad. 568, and the common expression quantum potest.

827. Fleck. possum, not rightly. See Hauler's note.

828. Bracketed by both Dz. and Hauler, but see the latter's crit. n.

863. A has reprehendit, which Dz. rejects on metrical grounds, and for the reason that with pone the prefix is unnecessary. Instances of pone repr. and the like are given by Hauler who reads póne reprendit pállio in his text — rightly. See his notes on this vs. The reading adprendit (adprehendit), adopted by some editors, is supported by the Calliopian recension and by A⁸, and is 'doubtless due to the fact that, when this recension was made, adprehendere was the verb commonly used in this connection.' See M. Warren in A. J. P. vol. iii. p. 483.

901. an uerebamini: Dz. has an rebamini in deference to C. F. W. Mueller (Plaut. Pros. p. 279) who would read rebaminin (without the an), rejecting uerēbamini of A, on the ground that the second e cannot be shortened in Ter. This leads to the arbitrary substitution of me . . . faceres for ne . . . facerem of the MSS. The weakness of this position, which Dz. has defended in his crit. n. (see Dz.-Hauler ed.), is exposed by Klotz (Metrik., pp. 88-89) whom Hauler and Elmer follow. Hauler has an uerebamini; but an is not in A, and Elmer does well, perhaps, in rejecting it. Fleck. has followed Dz.

905. All the MSS. have this vs. here, but the vs. is clearly out of place. It should come after 895, and to that point Fleck. and Dz. have transferred it. See Dz. (Adn. Crit.).

913. nunc uiduam extrudi : thus Umpf. and Dz., supported by B C D P. But Hauler and Elmer follow A — rightly perhaps, since uiduam may be a gloss upon eam nunc. See footnote.

930. Fleck. (N. Jahrb. CXLVII, 200) follows Bentley. Cf. Eun. 536.
949. Hauler rightly defends sententia, which, since it has puerili and inepti as modifiers, differs but slightly from inconstantia.

976. Omitted by Fleck., but accepted by Hauler as an intentional reminiscence of Plautus, from whom it is taken verbatim: see Plaut. Most. 655.

986. inpurum: used by Ter. generally with refer. to a person (cf. 83, Ad. 183, 360, etc.); moreover its use as a substantive is not without example (cf. 372). Hence it would be better to place the colon after opprime and make inpurum object of uide — with Hauler; “see the rascal, how strong he is.” For the prolepsis see And. 377. n. and cf. Hauler on Phorm. 854. The punctuation of the text is that of Tyrrell, Dz., Fleck., and Elmer.

1029. Dz. is followed by Fleck., but not by Hauler, in thinking that a vs. has dropped out before this line; the word sane is hardly sufficient to render the lacuna certain.

1054. The words eamus intro hinc are assigned to Demipho in B C P, probably because Phormio does not enter the house with the others, but goes in search of Phaedria (1055). But this departure from the higher authority of A, which should always be respected if possible where the distribution of portions of the dialogue is in question, is quite unnecessary, since Phormio simply changes his mind at the suggestion of Nausistrata whom he is anxious to please.

HECYRA

DIDASCALIA

Cf. notes to the didascaliae of the preceding plays (esp. that of the And.), and Dz. in Rh. M. 20, 577 f. and 21, 72 ff.

1. Hecyra, less correct than Hecura ('Εκυρά), since y was not introduced into the Latin alphabet until the time of Cicero, signifies the mother-in-law of the wife — the husband's mother.

2. Sextus Julius Caesar and Gneius Cornelius Dolabella were Curule Aediles in 165 B. C.

4. Graeca Menandru: on And., Didasc. 5. Dz. and Fleck. read Apollo-doru in place of Menandru — rightly; see Donatus (Praef.) and Dz. (Adn. Crit.). Cf. Introd. § 48. Facta Quinta: on Phorm., Didasc. 6.

4-5. Acta . . . Secundo: thought by Dz. to be spurious; see his Adn. Crit., but Fleck. rejects only Data Secundo.

5-6. Cn. Octavius and T. Manlius were consuls in 165 B. C., the date of the first presentation of the Hecyra.

6. Lucio Aemello Paulo: dat.; “held in honour of, etc.” His death took place in 160 B. C. Cf. Ad., Didasc. 2. n. For this use of the dat. cf. Phorm. 1026 Chremeti. Aemelio is archaic spelling = Aemilio. So Codex C for the Hec., and Codices A and D for the Ad.

7. funeralibus: cf. Ad., Didasc. 1. n.

8. Quintus Fulvius and Lucius Marcius were Curule Aediles in 160 B. C. This third representation took place probably in September, at the Ludi Romani.

PERIOCHA

6. mater : i. e. of Philumena. ut, “when.”

7. ut aegram: here ut = quasi.

9. pater : i. e. of Pamphilus. incusat Bacchidis amorem: i. e. imputes the young man's conduct to his love for Bacchis.

11. uitiatae: cf. Ad.; Per. 12. n. adgnoscit: for the form see on And., Per. 11.

PROLOGUS (1)

This prologue seems to have been written for the second representation. On the question whether this and the following prologue were written by Terence see Dziatzko (Adn. Crit.).

2. nouae: sc. fabulae. nouom, "unusual." uitium: used in augury to denote any unfavourable circumstance or omen, and thence transferred to other spheres in the sense of "hindrance," "misfortune," "disaster."

4. studio stupidus, "carried away by their fondness (for such performances)." funambulo: the quique solet rectum descendere funem of Juv. Sat. xiv. 266; cf. schoenobates used contemptuously in id. iii. 77.

5. planet pro noua: i. e. the play is virtually a new one, because it has not yet been successfully presented; but there certainly is a hint that the play has been worked up afresh, and might therefore be sold a second time. This gives point to vss. 6-7.

6. et . . . noluit = neque (tamen) . . . uoluit.

6-7. ob eam rem . . . ut = "merely in order to."

7. In bringing out the play a second time Terence is guided by a sense of what is fitting, rather than by a desire for pecuniary reward. He may have sold the play to the Aediles at the time of its first performance, and since it did not prove a success on that occasion he may be supposed to be staging it a second time at his own cost. However that may be, he disclaims any wish to offer the play a second time for money. It is probable that Ter. explained himself more fully in the verses that filled the lacuna marked in the text; in 7^a he calls the play nouam unreservedly.

8. alias: sc. fabulas; this would include all but the Adelphoe.

PROLOGUS (II)

This prologue appears to have been written for the third representation of the play.

Lucius Ambiulus, being a popular manager-actor, comes before the public to speak the prologue, with the purpose of persuading the people to give the play a fair chance. The duty would more ordinarily have been assigned to one of the inferior players. Cf. Heaut. Prol. 1 ff., with introductory n. Ambiulus, in making his plea, reminds his audience that this is not the first time he has appeared before them in the character of a special pleader (orator), in behalf of the poet whose plays they were inclined to treat with disdain.

9. orator: i. e. legatus = "ambassador" (almost). Cf. Heaut. Prol. 11. According to the ius gentium, the person of a legatus was inviolate. Hence the audience would be under constraint to refrain from offering violence of any kind to Ambiulus, and the latter's words would thus receive at least a respectful hearing. ornatu prologi, "in the guise of a prologus" (or speaker of a prologue). ornatu undoubtedly refers to both character and costume. Note the opposition between orator uenio and ornatu prologi, which is strengthened by the alliteration. Note also the quantity of the first ō in prōlogi, despite the derivation from πρόλογος. This is due perhaps to the primitive form (prod) of the preposition. Cf. n. on And. Prol. 5.

10. exorator is one who pleads with success. Note the further play on sound (paronomasia). iure, "privilege."

12. exactas, "which had been driven from the stage." For the prolepsis cf. n. on And. 377. ut inueterascerent, "to grow old," i. e. to become established in public favour.

13. scriptura: abstract for concrete; "writings," "poems," "plays."

14. eis: sc. fabulis. nouas: attracted into the case of the rel. pron.; it properly modifies eis (fabulis). We learn from this vs. that Caecilius did not at first win his way with his Roman audiences, but was assisted thereto by Ambiuius. See Introd. § 39. didici, "I played," lit. "I learned," "I committed to memory." The correlative term is docere fabulam.

15. partim preserves here its primitive character as an acc. of pars, constructed as an acc. of limitation. uix steti, "I scarcely stood my ground." Cf. Phorm. Prol. 9. The opposite of stare thus used is cadere; see Hor. Epist. 2. 1. 176 securus cadat an recto stet fabula tali.

17. spe incerta, "with doubtful expectations (of success)." The previous quia-clause tells why his hopes were of a doubtful nature. certum laborem: the toil, however, was of no uncertain character. That he took upon himself, hoping for the best. With incerta certum cf. 274 inique aequem mihi sustuli = in me suscepī.

18. easdem: sc. fabulas, i. e. the rejected plays referred to in 15. ab eodem, "by the same author." discrem: on 14.

19. studiose, "to the best of my ability," goes with agere (18). illum: i. e. Caecilius. studio, "occupation," "profession," i. e. of a playwright. For the expression cf. Phorm. Prol. 18.

21. placitae sunt: cf. 241; n. on And. 645. locum: cf. n. on Phorm. Prol. 32.

22. remotum agrees with poetam, and is to be joined with ab in 23. aduorsarium: gen. case; cf. n. on Heaut. Prol. 24 (amicum).

23. arte musica: on Heaut. Prol. 23, Phorm. Prol. 17.

24. scripturam: on 13. in praesentia, "at the time." For this meaning cf. Heaut. 962, Ad. 222.

25. deterrendo: sc. scriptorem (= poētam) from 24.

26. otio . . negotio: cf. incerta certum (17), and n. on 10.

28. aequo animo: on And. Prol. 24.

30. calamitas: cf. Prol. (I) 2.

33. pugilum gloria = pugiles gloriosi, "some well-known boxers," or "the fame of some boxers;" cf. rumor, etc. (39).

34. See App.

35. comitum conuentus, "a gathering of (some one's) retainers."

36. exirem foras: i. e. leave the stage.

37. "I have had recourse to my old custom in the matter of this new play." His old custom (with the plays of Caecilius) was to bring forward again those plays which had proved failures on the first trial.

38. in experiundo ut essem (= ut experirer) is a consecutive cl., explanatory of uetere consuetudine; transl. "to make a fresh trial," "to try again." For esse with in and the abl. cf. n. on 114.

41. The subject of the verbs in this line is indef. and may be represented by the colourless terms, "men," "people" or "they." Cf. n. on And. 813-814 (clamitent).

42. locum: i. e. my place on the stage.

43. nunc: i. e. at the third representation.

45. potestas, "opportunity." condecorandi, "of adorning," i. e. with your presence and attention. ludos scaenicos: games or festivals at which the drama formed one of the attractions. If the latter were discouraged, the ludi would degenerate.

46-7. Cf. Phorm. Prol. 16-17.

47. recidere ad paucos, "to fall into the hands of a (mere) few." auctoritas, "influence."

49-51. Cf. Heaut. 48-50 and notes.

50. in animum induxi: on And. 572 (induxiti).

52. qui: the antecedent is eum in 54, which points to Terence.

54. circumuentum, "on all sides beset." iniqui: among them was Luscius Lanuinus (or Lauinius), so often referred to in the other prologues. See on And. Prol. 7.

55. causam, "this plea," "the cause (of the poet)." Cf. n. on Heaut. Prol. 41.

57. pretio emptas meo, "purchased at my own cost," i. e. probably by the actor himself, Ambiuius, who was also a stage-manager and might purchase a play from the aediles as a private venture. Colour is given to this explanation by Juvenal, vii. 87 intactam Paridi nisi uendarat Agauen. This view does not conflict with vs. 7 of Prol. (I), as this was the third presentation, whereas vs. 7 alludes to the second.

ACT I. SCENE 1.

The scene represents a street in Athens. Three doors open on the stage, representing the houses of Bacchis, Laches and Phidippus. Philotis and Syra appear from the house of Bacchis, with whom they have been in conversation. They are protatic characters (προτατικὰ πρόσωπα), that is, they serve the purpose of unfolding the situation at the beginning of the play (πρότασις), and then disappear and are no more seen. Cf. introductory n. to Act I. of the Andria. The first scene is hardly necessary to the integrity of the piece. The real introduction is contained in Scene 2. In Scene 1 the marriage of Pamphilus and his consequent desertion of his mistress are discussed, and the old woman seizes the opportunity to advise Philotis to treat all men as though they were her enemies.

58. per pol quam: by tmesis for pol perquam. Cf. n. on And. 486. reperias, "you can find"; cf. B., App. 366. a. (365. a. rev. ed.).

60. uel: see n. on Heaut. 806 and cf. Heaut. 540. hic: with a gesture toward the house of Laches, the father of Pamphilus.

61. quam sancte, "how solemnly"; cf. 268, 771. ut = ita ut.

63. em, duxit, "well, he has got married."

64. ne te quoiusquam misereat, "that you have pity on none."

65. "But strip, rob, tear to pieces whomsoever you may chance to lay hold of." quemque = quemcumque.

66. utine, etc., "do you mean that, etc.?" See on Heaut. 784; cf. Phorm. 874.

67. nemo quisquam: on Phorm. 80.

68. quin ita paret sese, "without making up his mind." See on And. 909; cf. Phorm. 427, Eun. 240, 249. abs te: with expletat (69).

70. amabo: on Heaut. 404.

72. ulclsci: on And. 624.

73. eadem: sc. via; abl.

74-5. istaec: i. e. "your." haec: i. e. "my." The dem. pron. of the second pers. and that of the first are here well contrasted. Paul Thomas cites the proverb 'Si jeunesse savait! si vieillesse pouvait!' sententia, "sentiments," "mind."

ACT I. SCENE 2.

As Philotis and Syra are talking Parmeno appears from the house of Laches, his master. He is on his way to the Piraeus to meet Pamphilus, who is expected to return from Imbros, whither he had been sent by his father to look after the property of a dead relative. Philotis induces Parmeno to tell her the truth about the story of Pamphilus' marriage. Pamphilus was obliged by his father to marry Philumena, the daughter of Phidippus, against his inclination, for he was still attached to Bacchis. He began his married life by neglecting his wife, and continued to visit Bacchis. The latter's ill temper however and his wife's sweet and patient disposition wrought a change in the young man's affections, and he became estranged from the one and devotedly fond of the other. On the eve of his departure for Imbros Pamphilus commits Philumena to the care of his mother, Sostrata. The two women live together in harmony at first, but after a time, without apparent reason, Philumena leaves her mother-in-law and takes refuge with her own mother, Myrrina. Sostrata endeavours to persuade her to return, but in vain. She pretends to be ill, and refuses to see visitors. The story goes abroad that Philumena and her mother-in-law have quarrelled, but the whole affair is a mystery. Laches, who believes that Sostrata is to blame, has been to see Phidippus in order to talk over the matter with the girl's father. Parmeno pauses at the door as he comes out, and calls back to Scirtus who is within.

76. senex : i. e. Laches. Cf. 189-190. isse : sc. me.
78. Scirtus : a slave — perhaps the house-porter.
79. tum : emphatic ; “mind you say it only in that case.” nullus : on Eun. 216. nullus dixeris : see P. A. P. A. vol. 32, p. lxxxvii.
80. alias : on And. 529. causa, “excuse.” integra : i. e. “as though it were (something) new.”
81. Philotium : diminutive of Philotis, expressing friendliness. The slave was on very good terms with the meretrice; cf. 91 ff. His friendliness is balanced by her emotional o salve in 82.
87. biennium perpetuum, “for a continuous period of two years,” “for two whole years.”
88. te : the object, not the subject, of cepisse. Cf. 580 ; Eun. 403-404, 972.
90. consilium, “plan,” i. e. of leaving Athens. contempsisse, “rued,” “regretted.”
91. quam . . . eram : on And. 45 (quid est).
93. libere, “unrestrictedly.” agitarem conuiuim, “spend a merry time.”
94. illi : on And. 637. praefinito, “in set phrase,” lit. “in accordance with that which had been prescribed”; an adv. use of the abl. of the pf. prtcpl. pass. Cf. merito, consulto, optato, etc.
95. quae illi placerent, “(and) as he liked.” Donatus points out that this phrase and praefinito are to be taken separately, as though connected by et. haud commode, “rudely,” “unkindly.”
96. finem statuisse, “set a limit.” orationi, “speech,” i. e. of Philotis.
99. ut, etc. : explanatory of quod (98), i. e. of hoc negoti (97) to which quod refers.

102. taxint : on And. 753. rem, “interest,” “advantage.”
103. qui . . . credam, “how I am to believe,” etc.; a dependent (not an independent) question. Cf. 869, Phorm. 855. Fleckeisen however makes it independent. See his text.
104. non est opus prolato, “it must not be divulged.” See on Phorm. 584, And. 490.

105. fiat palam, "get abroad."
108. tam commode, "so fairly," "so persuasively."
109. tuam in fidem, "to your safe-keeping." If Philotis should break her word and divulge the secret, Parmeno's back would pay the penalty. ah noil, "ah, don't say so," i. e. don't say that you are unwilling to tell me, don't make so many difficulties regarding the matter. Not so Madame Dacier, who translates, "Ha! ne me le dis donc pas," with which cf. Donatus (Wessner, vol. ii. p. 212).
110. malis: we might expect magis uelis (as in 259), since the subject changes after quam in 111. So also And. 332 (where cf. note).
113. ad ingenium, "to yourself," "to your peculiar bent." Cf. Ad. 71. redis: cf. n. on Phorm. 802.
114. istic sum: lit. "I am there (where you are)," i. e. "I am all attention." esse with in and the abl., or with an adverb of place, often signifies "to be occupied in doing a thing," as in Prol. 38.
115. ut quom maxime: on And. 823. tum: correlative of quom in the next verse.
117. haec: anticipatory of the following three instances of acc. + infin.
118. unicum: sc. filium.

128. Ibi: temporal. Bacchidem: governed by the impersonal commiseresceret.
129. elius: i. e. Pamphilus. ibi, "on the spot"; something like our "there and then."

135. Cf. Phorm. 648.
137. quae consecuta est nox = ea nocte quae consecuta est. eam: i. e. his wife.
138. cubuerit: fut. pf. indic. of the type represented by noris nos in Hor. Sat. 1. 9. 7. The latter has been clearly proved by Prof. Knapp to be an indicative (not a subjunctive); see P. A. P. A. vol. 28, pp. xxvi-xxvii. The meaning then is, "will a young man have lain?" i. e. "will it prove true, on investigation, that a young man has lain (did really and truly lie)?"

If it is a subj. it must belong to the category indicated in n. on Phorm. 431, with which cf. B., App. 363. d. (rev. ed.).

139. plus potus: i. e. plus solito potus. Cf. Heaut. 220 ubi adbibit plus paulo. ut potuerit: consecutive.

145. ut, "how." ab se = quod ad se attineat.

148. quam decretim, "although I have decided, etc." ; quam = cum eam.

150. See App. quin may be rendered here by "but."

152-3. pium, etc.: on 841 (certa . . . attuleris). hoc: see 148.

154. reddi: sc. eam. quol . . . uiti, "to whom you can impute no fault." dicas: potential; see B., App. 366. a. (rev. ed. 365. a.).

155. superbum, "insulting."

159. maligna, "difficult," "averse to his suit." procax, "exacting." magis goes with both adjectives, and multo with magis. The order is capricious.

160. atque: adversative; "and yet."

163. "Forming his judgment of their (respective) characters in accordance with the conduct displayed by each of them." See App.

164. liberali ingenio : dat. governed by debet to which esse is complementary.

166. ferre et tegere : historical infinitives.

167. animi : locative. See App.

168. deuinctus: cf. And. 561, and note the play on words here. huius: i. e. Bacchis.

169. Bacchidi, "from Bacchis"; dat. with a verb suggesting deprivation. huc = ad hanc, i. e. "to his wife here."

170. par, "sympathetic (with his own)."

172. horunc: i. e. of Laches and Pamphilus. ea hereditas = eius hereditas. redibat iuge: cf. And. 799. n.

173. eo: i. e. to Imbros. extrudit: a strong word, "drove," "despatched."

177. complusculos: cf. Plaut. Rud. 131 iam hos dies complusculos, and see Knapp in 'Drisler Studies,' p. 156. Transl. "at first, for a good many days together." Note the intensifying prefix followed by a diminutive ending: a rare form.

178. conuenibat: impersonal. See App.

180. neque = et tamen non. postulatio, "complaint."

181. accesserat: sc. Sostrata.

182-5. fugere : sc. Philumena, which is the subject also of nolle, quit, simulat, abit and est, but the subject of iubet in 185 (and 186) is Sostrata.

184. matrem: i. e. Myrrina. ad rem diuinam, "to take part in a sacrifice."

187. nemo remisit: sc. uerbum, or causam. Transl. "no answer." accerunt: the indef. subject refers to the messengers sent by Sostrata to her daughter-in-law to summon her home to her husband's house, as well as to Sostrata herself.

188. simulant: indef. third pl. again, but the reference this time is to Philumena's own people. nostra, "my mistress," i. e. Sostrata.

189. uisere, "to pay her a visit." The infin. instead of the supine here is colloquial. senex: i. e. Laches.

189-90. hoc . . . resciuit, "got wind of this."

192. non dum etiam: on And. 201.

193. nisi, "but." Cf. 280 and And. 664. n. curae est: sc. mihi.

194. pergam hoc iter, "I shall proceed with (continue) my journey." iter is inner acc. The acc. with pergere is rare, though an object clause (usually an infin.) is common in Cicero and Livy. quo coepi: i. e. eo quo coepi ire, "whither I set out."

195. constitutus: on Eun. 205. Cf. Hec. 437.

197. quod agas, "whatever you may do," i. e. "if you should do anything," may the gods prosper it; subj. of contingent futurity. See B., App. 360 (rev. ed.); A. & G. 519 and 516. Cf. Phorm. 552. Philotium: on 81.

ACT II. SCENE 1.

Laches comes out from his house, in a rage. He is followed by his wife, Sostrata, whom he accuses of having driven Philumena from the house by unkindness and ill temper. Sostrata protests her innocence, and her ignorance of the cause of her daughter-in-law's departure. But Laches will not listen.

198-204. Women are all alike, says Laches; they all hate their daughters-in-law and oppose their husbands, and Sostrata is the worst of them all.

198. quod hoc genus est, "what a set (race) it is," refers to the women themselves. quae haec conluratiost, "what a conspiracy there is among them," refers to their acts, as though it were by mutual consent that they exhibit the tendencies of which they are accused by men.

199. utin: see on Heaut. 784 and And. 263.

200. neque carries on the exclamatory clause introduced by utine (199).

201. See App.

202. studiumst: sc. eis, i. e. mulieribus. aeque modifies the verbal idea. For the acc. (aduersas) instead of the dat. cf. Heaut. 388. similis and aeque logically discharge here the same function.

203. ludo, "school." ad malitiam, "for purposes of mischief."

204. si ulla est, "if it exists," "if there is any (such)." hanc, "my wife here."

207. prohibeant: cf. And. 568, Ad. 275. For the brutality of this speech cf. Plaut. Trin. 51 ff. Jokes of this sort were common on the comic stage.

209. "You undeservedly (accused)? Can anything (in the way of punishment) be called worthy of you, in the light of your evil deeds?"

211. adfinis: connections by marriage, as opposed to relations by blood (cognati).

212. liberos: a vague use of the pl., where in reality only one child is referred to; thus also in English and other languages. See on And. 891; cf. Heaut. 151. Note the delicacy of the language in this verse. Cf. 169-170, 348 ff.

213. exorere: indic. 2nd sing. not (imv.) of exorior. See on 317. quae, etc.: a rel. cl. of purpose; cf. n. on 298.

214. lapidem: on Heaut. 831. Cf. Ar. 'Clouds,' 1202 λιθοι, etc.

216. quisque: on Eun. 678 (quisquam).

217. quam illi: i. e. quam quae illi sunt. illi: on And. 637.

218. ut, etc., "even as you deport yourselves at home, so shall I be esteemed abroad." See App. mihi: ethic. dat. fama: abl. of specification.

219. audiui: the pf. tense with iam pridem is not uncommon in comedy. It occurs also elsewhere, e. g. in Tacitus.

221. credi adeo: sc. eam cepisse odium. Cf. 248.

223. aegritudo, "anxiety."

224. concedens, "making way for." rei seruitens, "devoting myself to my property." Cf. n. on And. 288 (rem).

225. pati, "sustain," "support."

226. praeter, etc.: Cf. Heaut. 59-60.

227. te . . . curasse: on And. 245. pro, "in view of," "in return for."

230. curares: on And. 793. ceteris: opposed to hic, and emphatic.

231. pueilla (said of a young married woman) occurs elsewhere, e. g. several times in Martial. Here it is intended to contrast with anum. Note the juxtaposition. anum: sc. te. Cf. n. on Ad. 617.

233. de te, "where you are concerned," goes with fieri detrimenti nil potest (234).

233-4. Laches says he is glad on his son's account that the fault does not lie with Philumena (for she would have something to lose in thus being convicted of error), but that Sostrata, on the contrary, can suffer no loss if she does wrong (since she cannot be worse than she is).

237. uisentem ad eam, "when you attempted to visit her."

238. enim: on And. 91 and 206; cf. Phorm. 983. eo, "for this reason."

241. placita est: on And. 645. condicio, "match."

242. duxere: sc. gnati. easdem refers to uxores implied in duxere; "when our sons have married their wives at your instigation, under pressure from you they drive them away."

ACT II. SCENE 2.

Phidippus comes out of his house. As he does so he calls back to Philumena, who is within and with whom he has evidently been conversing on the subject of her possible return to the house of her husband. Phidippus is unwilling to insist upon his daughter's returning to her mother-in-law if she is not so inclined, although he is at a loss to know the reason for her apparently unalterable determination to remain where she is. Laches gives him a hint to the effect that he is not sufficiently stern with the women of his family, and asks him for some explanation of Philumena's conduct. Phidippus renders to this an unsatisfactory reply, but makes it clear that his daughter refuses to live with her mother-in-law while Pamphilus is away from home.

243-4. Notice that Phidippus claims patria potestas over a married daughter (but then she is actually in his house at the time).

244-5. faciam ut tibi concedam: for this circumlocution cf. Heart. Prol. 28 facite aequi sitis. Cf. also Cicero, passim.

246. eccum: on And. 532. scibo: on And. 38 (seruibus).

249. in rem: on And. 546.

250. in illarum potestate: i. e. under petticoat rule. heia uero, "ah, indeed"; ironical. Cf. n. on Ad. 868. Phidippus is not flattered.

251. Cf. 190 f. itidem: correlative of ut, i. e. amisti me itidem incertum, ut incertus ueni (i. e. ut incertus eram quoniam ueni). Cf. 150.

252. perpetem: cf. footnote. See 636. ad infinitatem: on 211 (ad fines).

254. ea: a pl. after a sing. that is more or less indef., as in 240-242. refellendo . . . purgando: cf. Don., 'refellit qui negat, purgat qui quidem fatetur et sic defendit.' uobis: dat., with purgando. Cf. 871, Ad. 608 (ipso).

255. retinendi: sc. Philumenanam.

259. id adeo, "and this moreover."

261. quam . . . credam, "how bitterly I believe he will take it"; pleonastic for quam grauiter latus sit. Cf. Ad. Prol. 12-13 pernoscite futurum factum existumetis. Such pleonastic forms of expression are frequent in Plautus.

262. eo: on 238.

264. animum induco: on And. 572 (induxti).

267. nam postquam: for nam here see on And. 43.

268. ui, "authority." sancte: on 61.

270. allud fortasse allis uitlest, "some people perhaps have one failing, others another," or "each has his own failing." The harshness of the general statement is tempered by fortasse.
271. mels, "those who are of my own household." em, Sostrata, "there you are, Sostrata," i. e. you see how it is; you alone are at fault.
272. certumne est istuc, "are you determined upon this?" i. e. that Philumena shall remain where she is, if she prefer so to do. num quid uls: on Eun. 191.
273. est quod: on And. 448. oportet: on And. 448 (suscenset).

ACT II. SCENE 3.

Sostrata, left alone on the stage, gives expression to her feelings. Her husband's accusations are unjust, and yet she cannot easily rebut them. She can only hope that her son will come home soon and that he will be the means of clearing her character.

274. "Unjustly, in very truth, are we all equally hated by our husbands on account of a few." Join aequae with inuisae, not with inique.
276. quod, etc.: on And. 395.
277. animum Induxerunt: on 264. The subject is indefinite.
278. me: sc. esse iniquam merito dicas.
279. habul: see Ad. 48 habui, amavi pro meo. hoc: i. e. the feeling of aversion which her daughter-in-law entertains for her.

ACT III. SCENE 1.

Pamphilus has returned from Imbros and learns with grief that his wife has left his mother's house. He bewails his unhappy lot. He was torn from his former love and forced by his father to marry Philumena, and now that he has learned to love his wife he is compelled to part with her also; or else he must take her part against his mother, an act that would bring with it an equal degree of unhappiness. Nor can he form an idea as to the possible cause of the breach between the women. Parmeno seeks to comfort him, but with ill success. Suddenly a disturbance in the house of Phidippus distracts their attention. Parmeno listens at the door, but to little purpose. Finally Pamphilus enters the house to make inquiries. Parmeno is left alone on the stage.

281. nemini . . . homini: on Eun. 549. acerba: used substantively. Cf. 388 aduorsa.
286. nos omnes: see on 287. labos: on Heaut. 82.

287. lucro est: constructed as if nobis omnibus (dat.) had preceded instead of nos omnes, in 286. Anacoluthon: see Hale and Buck, Lat. Gram. 631. 8.

289. hae: See App.

290. ambas: i. e. Sostrata and Philumena.

291. iram expedites: i. e. you will adjust their dispute. restitues: sc. eas.

299. ex ea re: i. e. "as the result of all this business."

302. obnoxius, "beholden to." olim refers to the period when Pamphilus had not yet fallen in love with his wife. See 165 ff. ingenio suo, "with the (sweet) disposition that was natural to her."

303. quae refers to the subject of pertulit. in ullo loco, "under any circumstances."

304. magnum nescio quid, "something of importance." Pamphilus is convinced that something unusual and unexpected has happened, of which he is not yet informed.

305. unde (= ex quo) refers to nescio quid.

307. See App. The sense is: it is not always the greatest wrongs that produce the biggest quarrels.

308-9. saepe est . . . quom, "it often happens that." For this quom see on Ad. Prol. 18. iratus, "annoyed." de eadem causa: as this refers to quibus in rebus above, the pl. would be more accurate. iracundus, "an irritable man," "one prone to anger." est factus inimicissimus, "becomes deeply offended."

310. iras gerunt, "cherish ill-feeling."

311. eum: sc. animum. infirmum: predicative. The whole expression is equivalent to animus qui eos gubernat est infirmus.

313. fortasse is followed here by an infin. with subject acc., as if it were a verb; cf. Plaut. Merc. 782 fortasse illum mirari coquom. See App.

315. Cf. 336.
316. em, sensistin, "ah! did you hear that?"
317. loquere: indic. 2nd sing.; see App.
- 320-1. "They said that your wife, Philumena, was somewhat ill." pauitare is not meant to be definite, though it might refer to the effects of fever andague.
324. certo: on Phorm. 148 (certum).
325. "In what state of health, pray, my dear Philumena, am I going to find you now?"
326. nam: on And. 43. perclum . . . inest: we should say "if you are in any danger." perisse me: the acc. with infin. in place of quin with subj. is colloquial and familiar. Pamphilus rushes into the house; cf. 365-366.
327. usus . . . est: on Heaut. 80. The poet is careful to keep Parmeno out of reach of the actual facts. See on 359; cf. 409 ff.
332. Sostratae: genitive.
334. capiti . . . illorum, "to the lives of them all," more lit. "to their persons and lives." illorum is masculine because the reference is to the entire family. qui, "whereby."
335. For the thought cf. Heaut. 356, Phorm. 219-220.

ACT III. SCENE 2.

Sostrata has heard the disturbance which took place recently in the house of Phidippus, and is on her way to visit Philumena and inquire whether the young woman's illness has become worse. She is stopped by Parmeno, who advises her not to enter, and informs her that Pamphilus has returned from Imbros and has gone in to see his wife. Sostrata is persuaded to wait until Pamphilus comes out, and to hear the whole truth from his lips. Pamphilus, however, on his return from the house of Phidippus is most uncommunicative. He parries his mother's questions, looks sad and dejected, and finally succeeds in getting rid of both Sostrata and Parmeno, that he may think over his unhappy condition and determine upon his course of conduct.

336. "For some time past have I heard considerable disturbance going on here." audio tumultuari: cf. 315 trepidari sentio.
337. male: intensive; cf. Heaut. 581, 664; Eun. 438, Ad. 523; Plaut. Men. 189 odi male. Philumeneae: dative.
338. quod: on And. 289. Salus: Tycheia, "Health," the daughter of Aesculapius and often invoked with him. See on Ad. 761. ne quid sit huius, "that nothing of this (that I have mentioned) may take place."
340. ehem: on And. 417.
341. non uisam, "ought I not to go to see?" See Elmer in Class. Rev. vol. xii. pp. 199 ff. Cf. n. on And. 392 and 793.

343. Ipsus: on And. 360. ipsust = ipsus est.

345. tum, "moreover." quid agat: not "what she is doing," but "how she fares," or "is."

348. hoc: on And. 386.

349. remittere: intransitive; "shall abate." Philumena: dative. Cf. 337.

351. Each of the two relative clauses has rem (350) for its antecedent, but the second cl. refers to rem as already modified by quae interuenierit. Cf. quod ego, etc., in vs. 98.

354. melluscula: cf. n. on 177. On the form see Lorenz on Plaut. Pseud. 207-209.

356. tumulti: cf. 336; n. on And. 365.

358. fiat: Sostrata enters her own house.

359. eis onera adluta, "assist them in carrying the luggage." Cf. Phorm. 99 adiutaret funus. Care is taken here by the poet (so also in 327 ff.; cf. 409 ff.) to have Parmeno out of the way, so that he shall not know the facts. This is one of the delicate touches of the play (for another cf. 169-170). The audience, however, must know the facts; hence the soliloquy at 361 ff.

360. cessas: said with impatience at Parmeno's unwillingness to do as he is told.

ACT III. SCENE 3.

Pamphilus now relates the story of his troubles. He had no sooner entered his wife's apartment than he discovered the real cause of her illness, and the true situation became clear to him. Retreating from her room he was followed by his mother-in-law, who explained the circumstances by assuring him that her daughter had been the victim of an assault, and that she had left the home of Laches in order that her condition might be concealed from her husband's family. Myrrina further entreats him to keep the matter a secret, and extorts a promise from him to that end. Nevertheless Pamphilus is unwilling to take his wife home again, although he is strongly attached to her. He bewails his hard lot, but determines to place restraints upon himself, and to disengage himself from his wife, notwithstanding his affection for her. Parmeno too must be kept in ignorance of the situation.

362. unde refers to initium. quae both here and in 363 refers to rerum. Cf. n. on 351.

363. percepi: see App.

364. qua . . . propter: tmesis.

365. See on 326, fin.

366. adfectam: cf. n. on 325. ac, "than." ei mihi: parenthetical. Pamphilus pauses a moment in his excitement, and begins again at postquam. Consequently ut corripui finds no apodosis.

368. id quod, "for the reason that." id (acc.) gives the ground of the emotion. See G. 333. note 1. For quod cf. And. 448. n.

372. eius: i. e. uxoris; for the case see on Heaut. 29. recta: sc. via.

374. ut celari posset: sc. eius morbus. In 684 spatium dare is constructed with the genitive of the gerund. So also in Phorm. 701–702. But cf. And. 623 spatium ut, etc. tempus, "the circumstances." Cf. And. 624.

375. uoce, "words," "accents," "language." res, "the occasion." ipsa: not in agreement with res, but designating Philumena, and contrasted with tempus in 374.

378. ut . . . exieram: Dz. (Adn. Crit.) compares Ad. 618 in justification of this emendation. Cf. footnote.

380. magni, "proud."

385. orata: to be taken substantively as in 575; "prayers," "entreaties." nequeo quin (or non possum quin) is colloquial and archaic.

386. quaequē = quaecumque. Cf. n. on 65. fors fortuna: on Eun. 134 and Phorm. 841. The return of Pamphilus is an event to rejoice over, in so far as the matter of his safety is concerned, but his sudden appearance at this inopportune moment is a source of embarrassment and particular concern to Myrrina and her daughter. Hence the qualification suggested by quaequē.

387–8. uti . . . sient depends on obsecramus.

388. aduorsa = dolores, "troubles"; see on 281 (acerba).

390. sine labore: closely allied with gratiā, "this favour which will cost you but slight trouble"; or the phrase may be taken with des and mean "without ado," "without reluctance." pro illa (sc. gratiā) refers in a general way to the suggestions contained in 389.

393–4. post must mean "after her marriage," and postquam (= ex quo ad te uenit) would signify "from the time when she first came to your embraces." See App.

395. quod refers to the whole statement in 394. potis est: impers.; see on And. 437.

396. clam: with patrem, i. e. Phidippus.

397. omnis: governed by clam (396). id: object of sentiant.

398. abortum: not the acc. of the substantive, abortus, but (with esse) the pf. infin. of aboriri used impersonally. Such is the inference from the use of the word by Varro (apud Nonium, 71. 27). Harper's Lexicon prefers to make it the acc. of abortus. aliter: i. e. otherwise than as we could wish. suscipit fore: impersonal.

399. recte: i. e. in accordance with the law determining legitimacy. eum: sc. puerum; "the child."

400. exponetur: sc. puer. hic, "herein." nil quicquam: on Phorm. 80. Cf. Hec. 67.

402. certum est, "I am determined." in eo quod dixi: i. e. in guarding the secret; but he has not promised to take back his wife.

403. nam, etc., "(but here the matter ends) for as to taking her back, I think that this would be in no wise creditable." Cf. n. on And. 43 and 91.

404. amor consuetudoque, "affection and (unbroken) intercourse." See 555.

407. prior amor: i. e. for Bacchis. ad hanc rem, "with regard to this matter," i. e. in driving affection from his heart, as he is compelled to do in the present instance.

408. quem refers to amor (400). missum feci: on And. 680. Idem: nom. masc.; "too," "also." hunc operam dabo is not the same as id operam do in And. 157, but is elliptical for operam dabo ut hunc missum faciam. With hunc understand amorem. Pamphilus says that he must now give his attention to getting rid of his affection for his wife.

410. soli: sc. ei, i. e. Parmenoni.

412. eius: i. e. Philumena.

414. Pamphilus retires to a spot near the door of his house and waits. Cf. 428.

ACT III. SCENE 4.

Parmeno returns with the slaves (409) who were carrying the luggage from the ship in which Pamphilus had arrived from Imbros. As he comes upon the stage he converses with Sosia in reference to the hardships of a sea voyage. Pamphilus, in conformity with his resolution (413–414), meets Parmeno and sends him on an errand to the Acropolis. Pamphilus pretends to have an appointment with one, Callidemides of Myconos, and charges Parmeno with the duty of informing him that the appointment must be postponed. The stranger's appearance is described, and Parmeno is instructed to wait for him till evening.

415. hoc . . . iter: the voyage to Imbros and return. See 171. Cf. Knapp in Class. Phil. II. p. 292 and n. 2.

416–7. "Mere words cannot express, Parmeno, how unpleasant a sea-voyage is in actual fact." reāspē: on 778; cf. n. on Heaut. 266.

418. quid mali praeterieris, "what suffering you have escaped."

421. plus eo: on Heaut. 63. The length of time is probably exaggerated; cf. Knapp in Class. Phil. II. p. 22. n. 1.

424. odiosum, "horrid!" "what a bore!" For the omission of est cf. n. on And. 105, Eun. 403, Phorm. 751. haud clam me est: an instance of understatement, where English would have, "Oh, you can't teach me anything about it," "I know it all from experience," or the like.

425. redeam . . . redeundum: a play upon words. The first is opposed to aufugerim and alludes to the slave's return to his master's house; the second refers to a possible repetition of the voyage to Imbros. eo, "thither," i. e. to Imbros.

429. si quid me uelit, "(to see) whether he wants anything of me."

431. in arcem: i. e. to the Acropolis. transcurso: abl.; cf. n. on 104.

433. Myconium, "of Myconos," one of the Cyclades. uectus est, "sailed."

436. modo, "only."

437. constitui: on Eun. 205.

438. non posse (i. e. me non posse conuenire eum) answers the question, quid uis dicam (436).

440. caesius: on Heaut. 1062.

441. cadauerosa facie, "with a ghastly countenance." Cf. the description in Heaut. 1061–1062, and Plaut. Capt. 647–648. Pamphilus is not careful in his choice of descriptive epithets, but Parmeno is so much astonished at his volubility and irritated manner that he fails to notice the inconsistencies in his master's word-portrait.

445. quod me orauit: sc. ut celarem.

446. nam, "(and yet I feel constrained to do so) for."

447. tamen ut, "yet in such a manner as to." Understand ita. pletatem, "filial duty."

448. Pamphilus says that he will keep the birth of the child a secret, but will refrain from taking his wife home again, lest in so doing he should be wanting in his duty to his mother. Terence would appear to be wool-gathering just at this point. Pamphilus is no longer ignorant of the reason why his wife left her mother-in-law's house. Hence there is no such question in his mind as that which agitated him when he supposed, along with all the rest of the world, that his mother and his wife had quarreled. He is under no obligation now to decide with which of the two women he will take sides; there is, as has been said, no longer any such question. The question whether he will receive his wife again into his home is now a personal matter only.

449. eccum: on And. 532 (2).

450. pergunt: cf. n. on 194. Pamphilus retires to a corner of the stage.

ACT III. SCENE 5.

Pamphilus meets Laches and Phidippus, and is much perplexed about what he shall say to them. Laches makes a few preliminary inquiries regarding his son's visit to Imbros, and then turns the conversation to the subject of Philumena and her possible return to her husband's house. Laches pretends that Philumena had gone to her home at her father's bidding. But this pretence fails, since Pamphilus knows the exact situation. Both Laches and Phidippus thereupon urge the young man to take his wife back. Pamphilus, however, having decided in his own mind that this is impossible, and being unwilling to divulge the truth, pretends that his love for his wife must give way before his duty to his mother, and that, as the two women cannot agree, they must remain apart. As the old men are ignorant of the true state of the case, this device proves to be a success. They attempt further argument with Pamphilus, but he makes his escape. Phidippus goes into a rage, and leaves Lachea to himself. The latter vows vengeance on his wife.

451. dixtin, "did you not say?" See on And. Prol. 17; cf. Eun. 793. dudum: cf. 269. illam: i. e. Philumena. filium: sc. meum.

452. factum: on Phorm. 524. uenisse aiunt: Laches must have learned this off the stage (say from Sostrata, who got it from Parmeno in 346). The plays do not often allude to events that take place (presumably) off the stage unless these happen at a time not included within the period of the action itself. redeat, "let her come back to our house."

452-3. causam . . . quam ob rem: see on And. 382. nescio: see App.

454. certum est: on 402. offirmare governs me, as in Heaut. 1052 it governs te (cf. n. on Eun. 217), and uiam is governed by persequi. For a different explanation, see the ed. of this play by Paul Thomas. Transl. "I am determined to persist in following the course which I have decided (to pursue)." The verse is an 'aside.'

456-7. On the subject of 'greetings to returned travellers,' see Knapp in Class. Phil. II. p. 301.

457. creditur: generally in the active voice and first person, when used to express acknowledgment of congratulations received, as in And. 939, 947; Eun. 1051; Phorm. 255, 610; Ad. 972.

459. sane hercle: on And. 229.

463. profuit: sc. nobis. The idea is that Phania has left what little he had to his kinsfolk in Athens. immo obfuit, "nay, it has proved a loss." This is said for the sake of appearances.

464. nam . . . uellem: Laches means that the property is no compensation for the loss he has sustained through the death of his friend and kinsman. But the old man is not wholly sincere; note the implication in utrum malis scio (465).

465. et . . . scio: said aside.

466. hic: i. e. Phidippus. dic iussisse te: said aside to Phidippus.

467. noli fodere, "don't nudge me"; said aside.

469. inuidos, "hateful people," who are always ready to gossip about the affairs of their neighbours. haec: i. e. the domestic troubles affecting the family of Laches; more particularly (as Laches imagines) the supposed disagreement of Sostrata and Philumena.

470. contumelia, "reproach." The story told here is quite different from that given by Parmeno in 164 ff., and by Pamphilus himself in 302–303.

471. fieri: sc. mihi (or nobis). Pamphilus means that he has been on his guard against the possibility of Phidippus having ground for complaint regarding the treatment his daughter may have received in the family of Laches.

472. quam . . . fui: on And. 45 (quid est).

473. possum: sc. memorare.

474. ingenio, "disposition," "character." Cf. n. on 302.

475. quom: primarily temporal here; secondarily explicative. in me iniqua: me is acc.; see Heaut. 213. aqua: acc. pl.

476. discidium: cf. And. 697.

477–8. indignam . . . quae concedat, "undeserving of having to yield."

478. eiusque . . . modestia, "and of having to bear with her (my mother's) conduct by (bringing into play) her own (powers of) self-control," i. e. "by herself showing self-control." eius and sua are opposed. See App.

481. matris limits commodum, although it is felt also as an objective gen. after pietas. Cf. 495.

482. inuito: dat. in agreement with mihi.

483. "since I perceive that you have regarded all things as secondary in comparison with your mother." Cf. Ad. 262, Phorm. 908. For the indic. after quom causal, see on Ad. Prol. 18.

484. prae insistas, "take a wrong stand," "pursue a mistaken course."

485. sim: subj. of quotation (repudiating subj.), because vs. 484 = ne sis iniquos. Cf. n. on Phorm. 431.

486–7. "Who never has been guilty of any act toward me of which I should disapprove, and who I know has often conducted herself with reference to me (exactly) as I should have wished." Understand quam (or better, eam) after et, as subject of meritam (esse). The pronouns quicquam, and id (understood before quod uellem), are adverbial (cognate) accusatives. Cf. n. on And. 139. With nollem and uellem understand factum. nollem factum = uellem non factum; cf. n. on Phorm. 796 (nollem datum).

493. Id is subject of fiat, and refers to the idea expressed in the previous line. tibi in manu est, "rests with you," "is in your hands." Cf. 667.

494. non est consilium, "I don't intend to."

495. matris commodis: cf. 481; Prol. 51. Pamphilus departs.

497. dixit: on 451 (dixit). hanc rem: i. e. the refusal of Philumena to live with her mother-in-law, and her consequent departure to the house of her parents. aegre laturum esse eum: Laches said this in 261-262.

501. si est ut, "if it happens that." See on Phorm. 925. Cf. Hec. 259.

502. huc: i. e. into my hands. The law at Athens allowed a man to divorce his wife with little ceremony, but at the same time compelled him to return the dowry, or pay her interest on it and provide alimony (στρεσ). See Harper's Dict. of Class. Lit. and Antiq., s. v. diuortium.

504. Phidippus, in his wrath, addresses Pamphilus, as though the latter were present.

505. decedet iam, "will abate presently." Cf. 781.

506. paululum pecuniae: i. e. the inheritance from Phania. See 458 ff.

507. etiam: additory.

509. alii: dat. siet: sc. filia. Transl. "in order that she may belong to another."

510. audi paucis: on And. 29. quid mea: on Eun. 849.

511. postremo, "after all (said and done)." inter . . . lubet, "let them settle it among themselves, according to their fancy."

512. hic: i.e. Phidippus. obtemperant: the pl. is allowed after neque . . . neque when the two (or more) Persons (who are conceived as acting independently) are different, though classical usage requires the singular; see G. 285. 8. Note 1. Cf. Ad. 103.

513. quae . . . pendunt, "attach slight weight (value) to my words." Note the asyndeton.

515. euomam, "I will vent," lit. "spew out"; cf. Ad. 312, 510. Laches retires into his own home, and the stage is left empty.

One may note that up to this point there has been much in the play that is good, but practically little real comedy — few chances for a laugh. The play is a fabula stataria, tragic and intense rather than comic. The chivalry is good, but perhaps too subtle for a Roman audience. As one thinks of all this one can see why the play was not at first a success.

ACT IV. SCENE 1.

Phidippus, after leaving Laches, had gone to his own house, and there discovered that his daughter had just given birth to a child. Myrrina now appears on the stage and laments the unhappy situation. Phidippus comes out to look for her and blames her for seeking to conceal from him what has happened; he also puts his veto on Myrrina's plan to get rid of the child by 'exposing' it. Myrrina is left in great perplexity, for she fears that Pamphilus will let out the secret when he hears what Phidippus has done.

517. uisus est: sc. sibi; "he fancied," "he thought."

518. derepente: cf. Heaut. 673 desubito.

519. clam me habuisse: me is subject of habuisse. clam habere = "to keep secret." Cf. 657, where however clam governs me. See on Phorm. 1004.

523. See App.

524. sim: on And. 282, Phorm. 382. Transl. "Is your husband?"

525. nam, "(no,) for"; elliptical and corroborative. utrumuis horum, "one or the other of these things"; the neut. in place of the masc., because the reference is rather to the qualities implied in uirum and hominem than to these terms themselves. Cf. Heaut. 521-522 mulier commoda, faceta . . . idem uisast mihi, where idem (of the MSS.) is neuter.

531. recte: cf. 399. n.

533. ex quo . . . scires: a rel. cl. of concession; quo refers to puerum. Inter nos: i. e. between our two families.

534. esset cum illo nupta: i. e. continue with him in the marriage relation. Cf. 538-539, 656.

535. etiam: on And. 849. Transl. "again (I say) I for my part supposed that it was to them (the family of Laches) that blame (in this matter) attached, whereas it is with you that it rests." etiam harks back to 229. te . . . penes: for the order cf. n. on Phorm. 523-524 (quam ad).

540. Said aside.

543. aderit . . . quom: on And. 152. quoque etiam, "also"; a pleonasm. See A. J. P. vol. xviii. pp. 36-37.

544. eadem: the more regular correlative of the foregoing ut would be sic or ita. usque adhuc, "up to the present time."

545. ut, etc.: epexegetic of eadem; "having in view the withdrawal of your daughter from him, and the annulment of what I myself had done (in the matter)."

546. id follows indicium facit (as though the latter were one word = indicit; see on And. 157), and anticipates the coming indirect question. res haec: i. e. the fact that you have concealed from me the birth of the child. factum: sc. esse.

547. quoi: the antecedent is understood with the following ut-clause (sc. erga eam).

548. ex usu nostro, "to our advantage." Cf. Heaut. 210.

550. uidisse: sc. se.

551. exeuntem: sc. ab amica.

553. qui nos oderit, "in consequence of which he will hate us."

555. quacum consuisset: cf. n. on And. 135. The mood is due to attraction, in a condition contrary to fact, the strongest attractive force Latin has.

556. gnatae: dat.; cf. 746, And. 571.

558. si est ut: on 501.

560. "Assume then (for argument's sake) that he does not want her, and that you have discovered that the fault lies in him."

561. par fuerat: the plpf. tensae suggests that the right in the case had existed before the fact, the right being eternal.

563. ne extulisse uellis = ne ecferas; the force of the pf. tense in these archaic periphrases of the infin. after uelo, which occur frequently in the colloquial speech of the comedians, is sometimes scarcely perceptible. Transl. "I forbid you to remove the child anywhere beyond (the walls of) the house," that is, "I forbid you to expose it."

564. stultior: i. e. more of a fool than I have any business to be.

565. ecferri: sc. puerum. Phidippus goes into his own house, leaving Myrrina alone on the stage.

567. ut, "how." Thus also ut near the end of the vs. hic: i.e. Phidippus. hoc (i. e. that Pamphilus is not the father of the child) anticipates rem ipsam. slet: on And. 234.

568. hoc: opposed to hoc in 567, and referring to the state of the case as it exists merely in the mind of Phidippus, who has not yet arrived at the full knowledge possessed by his wife.

570. mi reliuom fuerat, "had been kept in reserve for me." She means that it had been wanting until now and has therefore come upon her unexpectedly, as 'the last straw.' Her cup of misery is now full.

571. si . . . cogit: exegesis of malum. Cf. Ad. 357. si may be rendered by "that." tollam: on 704. Cf. 576. qui sit: on Phorm. 129.

572. forma: i. e. forma eius qui eam compressit. quita est: this passive (deponent) form is archaic, and is constructed usually with an infin. pass. See Lane's Lat. Gram. (rev. ed.), §§ 1483, 1484. See also A. & G. 206. d. Note.

573. ei, "from him." For this dat. cf. Ad. 318. qui, "whereby."

574. uirgini: cf. n. on 573 (ei). anulum: cf. Ad. 347 for a similar instance of reliance on a ring.

575-6. orata nostra celare: i. e. celare quod eum orauimus ut celaret. Cf. 445. orata is taken substantively here as in 385, though the meaning is slightly different. Cf. n. on 385.

576. Myrrina enters her house.

ACT IV. SCENE 2.

Sastrata, on hearing from her husband that her presence in the house is the obstacle to the return of Philumena, determines to remove thence to the country, and informs Pamphilus of her resolve. The latter however declines to accept this sacrifice from his mother, not only because of his affection for her, but because he would then have no ostensible excuse for insisting on the separation between his wife and himself.

577-8. Sostrata comes out of her house in company with Pamphilus.
me esse suspectam . . . abisse, "that I have been an object of suspicion in your eyes, as having caused through my conduct the departure of your wife from our house." The dependence of the second acc. and infin. upon the first is awkward, but the meaning is obvious. Some commentators adopt Bentley's emendation, substituting suspectum for suspectam and omitting me.

578. ea : pl. for sing., as in 688 (quae), and Ad. 751 where eadem haec refers to a single fact.

580. caperet . . . mei : cf. 219. Cf. also 88-89.

581. "And as to the fact that (or 'whereas') formerly I fancied that you loved me, of this thing I now have sure evidence." Cf. n. on And. 395. See A. & G. 572. a; H. 588. II. 3. Note; B. 299. 2.

583. contra : adverb, as in 70.

583-4. gratiam referre : on Phorm. 894.

585. hoc is explained by 586-588.

586. certo, "positively."

589. migres : deliberative subj., having purely rhetorical force, and expressing surprise or indignation. See H. & B. 503. a; A. & G. 444. a; "you leave the city to dwell in the country, etc?"

590-1. sinam ut . . . dicat: on And. 188 (siui).

590. qui, "he who," does not refer here to any one in particular. male dictum (sc. esse) ; impersonal.

591. modestia, "self-control," and so "complaisance," "kindness." Cf.
n. on 478.

592. amicas: in a good sense; cf. 790 and 791. festos dies : a reference to religious festivals in general, which were both numerous and brilliant in ancient Athens.

594. aetatis tempus : on And. 188, 443. perfuncta satis sum, "I enjoyed them to the full." satiás, "satiety," "loathing," "distaste"; this form is found only in nom. sing., the other cases being taken from satietas.
tenet : sc. me.

596. mortemue exspectet : i. e. neue quis mortem exspectet. Cf. n. on Ad.
 109, 874. For quis understood from quot cf. 486-487 and n.

597. tempus : on Heaut. 169 and App.

598. omnis, etc., "I shall cut off all reasons (for dissatisfaction) from
 (for) all." Cf. Hor. Epist. 1. 2. 9 Antenor censem bellum praecidere causam.

599. illis refers grammatically to omnibus, the latter being a vague term by which Philumena and her parents are really intended. morem gessero : on And. 641. Cf. Ad. 214.

600. hoc, "this charge," i. e. that I excite aversion in my daughter-in-law. uolgas mulierum : on And. 583. male audit : the object is quod, of which the antecedent is hoc. The words will not bear a literal rendering. Transl. "with which the mass of womankind is reproached." More often male audire is used absolutely, in the sense of "to hear ill of one's self," "to be ill spoken of," as in Phorm. 359. Cf. n. on Phorm. Prol. 20. Of course quod here is cognate (inner) acc., and hence the difference between this usage and that of Phorm. 359 is but slight. Cf. n. on 676.

601. ceteris is proleptic. Logically one should look for omnibus. absque una hac foret, "were it not for this one thing." See on Phorm. 188. The "one thing" is Philumena's dishonour, but Sostrata supposes Pamphilus to refer to the dislike which the young woman has conceived for her mother-in-law.

601-2. The first clause of 602 is parallel to the first clause of 601, the second of 602 to the second of 601.

603. incommodam rem: the indefiniteness of this expression makes it as good as a plural; hence ut quaeque est, which should logically follow incommoda res. The reference of course is to the antipathy which Philumena is supposed to have conceived for her mother-in-law. Cf. n. on 601. in animum induces: on And. 572 (induxi).

604. cetera: with a reference to 601.

605. da ueniam, "indulge me in this." reduc: on And. 559.

606. male habet: on And. 436.

ACT IV. SCENE 3.

Laches, who has overheard the dialogue which has just taken place, comes forward and expresses his approval of Sostrata's determination to withdraw to the country. While Pamphilus is giving voice to his doubts as to the propriety of this course the sudden appearance of Phidippus cuts short the conversation.

607. procui hinc, "at a (short) distance from this point."

608. qui . . . possit = si quis possit; cf. Plaut. Asin. 323 em istaec virtus est, quando usust, qui malum fert fortiter. Ter. might have written istuc est sapere, ubi quomque opus sit, animum posse flectere, or iste sapiens est qui, etc. (as in the text). He has fused (confused) the two. Cf. Ad. 386-387.

609. idem hoc: antecedent of quod. fecerit: subj.; the subject is qui (608): asyndeton. See App.

610. fors fuat, "may good luck attend us!" fors = fortuna. fuat is from the old form fuo, and occurs only once in Ter. feres: on Heaut. 692.

612. dixi has the same force as in Phorm. 437 and 439.

613. abire: sc. iubesne.

614. etiam: temporal.

615. equidem, etc.: note the delicate touch; in spite of all he loves his wife.

616. non minuam, "I'll not change." ex usu: on 548.

617. ea gratia: is explained by si reducam.
 618. utrum illaec fecerint, "which of the two things they do," i. e. whether they agree or disagree. fecerint more lit. = "have done," i. e. "shall find they have done," and so "shall do." Otherwise the words may be explained as = utrum illaec fecerint (= utrum magis concordes fuerint) necne. illaec: cf. n. on And. 328 (haec), and see H. & B. 138. 2. c.
 619. haec aetas: said δεικτικῶς; "our time of life," i. e. old age. Cf. n. on 74–75.
 620. e medio, "out of the way." In Phorm. 967 the phrase has reference to death. fabula, "a mere by-word," "a mere tale that is told." See App.
 621. anus: on Ad. 617.
 622. per tempus: on And. 783.

ACT IV. SCENE 4.

Phidippus has discovered his daughter's secret, and blames his wife for the separation of Philumena from Pamphilus, completely absolving Sostrata from all part in the matter. He recommends Pamphilus to acknowledge the child, and Laches concurs in this request. But Pamphilus is only the more set against it. Laches thereupon suspects that Pamphilus has reverted to his former interest in Bacchis. Phidippus unites with Laches in this view. Seeing no way out of the difficulty short of a disclosure of the secret, Pamphilus suddenly makes off, leaving the old men to their own devices, but in the hope that they will not venture to bring up the child without its father's consent. Laches and Phidippus finally have recourse to Bacchis, who is warned by the former to refrain from receiving Pamphilus at her house.

623. Phidippus turns back as he issues from his house and addresses his daughter who is within. quoque: i. e. as well as your mother.

624. factumst turpiter: i. e. in concealing the birth of her son from Phidippus. Cf. 657.

625. causa, "excuse." Cf. 660–661.

626. huic: i. e. Myrrina. nulla: sc. causa.

628. hoc: i. e. the true reason why he declines to receive his wife. This vs. is said aside.

630. minus . . . quo: an inversion, for quo minus, which follows reverteretur as though the latter were a verb expressing hindrance or impediment.

631. commeruit: on And. 139. tua: sc. uxor.

633. mutatio fit, "a change is taking place," "things are changing." Pamphilus means that there is a shifting of the charge from Sostrata to Myrrina. The words are said aside and bear an ironical colouring. ea, "it is she (who)."

634. Said aside. quam = quantum.

636. ad infinitatem: on 252.

637. sin est ut: on Phorm. 925, Hec. 501. The words of the vs. are a euphemism to avoid direct reference to divorce. Cf. Ad. 492. ista sit: See App.

638. accipias puerum: Donatus says, 'liberi patrem sequuntur,' i. e. in cases of divorce. The mood is jussive. sensit, etc.: said aside.

642-3. A fine and delicate touch. Cf. 651-652.

643. quid mulieris, "what sort of a woman?" Cf. n. on And. Prol. 2. The form of the expression suggests contempt.

644. moratam: from mōrātus, adj. Cf. Cic. Cat. Mai. xviii. 63 ut quaeque (ciuitas) morata est.

645. nosne hoc celatos: sc. esse; "that we should have been kept in ignorance of this!" In the active voice celo takes two accusatives, one of the person, one of the thing ('conceal something from some one'). In the passive the acc. of the thing may be retained with celo, if it be a neut. pron.; otherwise the construction is de with the ablative.

648. hoc: i. e. the question of taking back his wife.

648-9. Said aside.

649. alienus, "of another man." Pamphilus realizes that it is the determination of Phidippus, in which Laches joins him, that the child shall not be 'exposed,' but shall be brought up by its mother, in case Pamphilus should be unwilling to receive and educate it. This consideration strengthens him in his resolution not to take her back.

650. consultatio, "room for deliberation." Cf. n. on And. 400 (cautio).

651-2. See on 642-643.

654. The peremptoriness of this command suggests the patria potestas.

657. clam: on 519.

659. conuenturum: on 178.

660. mater . . . sua: i. e. Myrrina.

663. an quia non delincunt uiri, "or is it because men have no failings (that you are thus unfair to your wife)?" An instance of the form of argument known as the reductio ad absurdum. See App.

665. With remissa and reducta understand Philumena. Note the double interrogative -ne . . . -ne where -ne . . . an might be expected. Cf. A. & G. 335. d. opus sit uobis = uobis expediat, or utile sit uobis, or e re uestra sit. Cf. 698.

667. in manu, etc.: on 493.

668. quid . . . puerō, "what shall we do with the child?" puero is abl. See on And. 143, Ad. 611.

669. suōm: sc. puerum.

670. nostrum: sc. puerum. quem: sc. puerum.

671. The words of Pamphilus are said aside, or to the audience, but Laches catches the last two; hence his question.

674. ut . . . loquar depends on cogis.

675. lacrumarum, “(of the cause) of your tears.”

676. quod sollicitere, “on account of which you are disturbed.” quod is an adv. acc. Cf. Phorm. 1052, 1053, and notes. Instances are numerous. Perhaps quod is an abl. sing. with original ending -d.

677. causam = πρόφασιν, i. e. “pretext.”

681. alteram (sc. causam) ; explained by the quia-clause.

683. huc : i. e. ad nuptias, “to the estate of matrimony.” animum adlungas: on And. 56. This final cl. expresses, not the purpose of 684, but the speaker's purpose in giving utterance to 684; “(just remember please) how long ago, etc.”

684. spatium . . . dedi : on 374.

686. tecum : with egi as well as orauit. ‘cum like the Engl. with often describes in a quite general way the relation of two parties, even if it be an antagonistic one. Cf. stomachari cum, “to be angry with,” Eun. 323.’ Thus Sonnenschein on Plaut. Rud. 709. orare cum is common in Plautus. quaeso cum + abl. occurs in Aulus Gellius and Fronto in imitation of this orare cum; see Schmalz, Latein. Gram. d. § 140, in Mueller's Handbuch, II. p. 450. Cf. nubere cum (Hec. 534 and 538–539), and Shak., Hamlet, Act ii, Scene 4, line 22, ‘marry with.’

688. See App.

690. huic : i. e. your wife, Philumena. See App. on 688.

693. ad, “in the direction of,” “for the purpose of”; cf. And. 482.

694. uiuas, “enjoy life”; cf. n. on Eun. 1073–1074. testem hanc, “this witness here,” i. e. Philumena.

695. sensit, “has discovered it.”

696. plane hic diuinat, “clearly the man is right,” more lit. “is a prophet.” Phidippus, remembering what Myrrina had told him (536–539), and inclined by nature toward a charitable judgment where his own people are concerned, is only too glad to seize any pretext whereby he may fasten the blame upon Pamphilus.

698. reduce : on And. 680 (face). opus sit : sc. reducta; cf. n. on 665.

700. post . . . uidero, “trust me to attend to your mother afterward.” See on And. 456.

702. rebus, “arguments.” conciudit, “hems in.”

703. promoueo : on And. 711.

704. tollet : on And. 219. Here, as in 571 and 576, this verb, through an extension of its meaning, is used to refer to the bringing up of the child by a member of the family other than the father himself.

706. After 705 Pamphilus makes off as fast as he can go.
707. apud sese : on And. 408, Phorm. 204. sine : addressed to Phidippus; "don't trouble yourself," "never mind," as in Phorm. 238. It might be a sort of apostrophe addressed to the absent Pamphilus, as e. g. "let him alone," "leave him to his own devices."
709. hoc : i. e. the intimacy of Pamphilus with Bacchis.
710. amarae, "ill-natured," "resentful."
711. narrauit : cf. 536-540.
712. hoc : i. e. Pamphilus. Cf. 674.
713. illi : i. e. Myrrina. uerum palamst, "it's plainly true."
714. abhorrire : cf. And. 829.
718. rem : for the meaning see on Heart. 55; Shak., Hamlet, Act iii, Scene 1, "could beauty, my lord, have better commerce than with honesty?"
719. eho : on And. 184. puere : on App. to Eun. 624-625.
720. uerbis meis, "in my name." Cf. Plaut. Amph. 967; Cic. Att. 16. 11. 8 Atticae meis uerbis suauium des uolo, 'kiss Attica for me.' See Palmer on Amph., l. c.
722. iam dudum dixi : see 635-636.
724. quod refers to the idea expressed in 723.
725. This question shows that Phidippus does not care to be present at the interview between Laches and Bacchis.

ACT V. SCENE 1.

Bacchis appears in reply to Laches' summons, and Laches opens the interview with assurances of his friendly intentions. Bacchis declares her innocence of any intention to entice Pamphilus away from his wife, and explains the situation to the old man's satisfaction. As proof of her sincerity she agrees to enter the house of Phidippus and state the fact in the presence of Myrrina and her daughter, in order that the women of the family may be convinced. Bacchis makes evident her desire not only to clear herself of the charge of continuing her former liaison with Pamphilus, but also to do all in her power to be of service to the young man, who, she declares, has always deserved well of her.

727. de nihilo, "for nothing." conuentam esse (with expeto) is like the pf. pass. infin. with uelo in 546 and 590.

728. nec me multum fallit : impers., multum being adv.; "nor am I much deceived." The words are about equivalent to nec dubito. quin . . . uelit, "but that his real desire is as I suspect."

729. hinc = ab hac.

730. plus : note the antithesis with minus (729). Transl. "or lest I do anything to excess, which hereafter it would be better that I had not done."

732. nil : adverbial.

733. iussi: for the indic. cf. n. on And. 448 (suscenset).
 734. quoque etiam: on 543. Cf. 762.
 735. quaesti, "trade," "business," "occupation." For the form of the gen. see on And. 365. mores, "conduct."
 737. peccato: an impers. abl. abs. Cf. Livy, 1. 36. 6 auspicato; see Lease's 'Livy,' Introd. § 38. i. It may however be a causal abl. = ob peccatum. Laches says that he has reached an age when he has no right to expect a blunder of his to be overlooked.
 738. magis cautius: for this doubling of the comparative for the sake of emphasis, cf. And. 427, Heaut. 928, Ad. 222.
 740. inscitum: sc. me. Transl. "that I should ignorantly inflict upon you, etc."
 741. "I ought to feel very grateful to you, etc." Cf. Plaut. Rud. 516 bonamst quod habeas gratiam merito mihi. For quod cf. n. on 676. See App.
 742. qui . . . expurget: a rel. cl. expressing a condition; "he would help me little who should seek to excuse himself (= si quis se expurget) after the wrong had been done." For the sentiment cf. Ad. 162-163.
 743. receptas: lit. "receive habitually." Cf. Ad. 799 quor recipis meum, "why do you harbour my boy?"
 745. mane shows that Bacchis has interrupted Laches a second time.
 747. aetatem: on Heaut. 716, Eun. 734. See App.
 748. id refers to 743 meum receptas filium. socrus: i. e. Myrrina.
 749. extinguere: the exact word used by Myrrina was exponetur (400).
 750. alid=aliud. firmare fidem: cf. 581 firmasti fidem, and n.
 751. id pollicerer: cf. 754-755 istuc ius iurandum policeare.
 752. The acc. with infin. depends on the affirmation implied in what precedes. ut, "from the very time when." That this statement is not quite consistent with that in 157 is obvious. It may however be regarded as throwing light on 158-159, where it is suggested that Bacchis declined to receive Pamphilus' attentions with that intimacy which had previously characterized her friendship for him. Pamphilum may be the subject of habuisse (sc. se), if me is removed.
 754. eas: monosyllabic. Cf. Ad. 598, Phorm. 562 eāmus (dissyllabic). For the situation cf. Ad. 598 ff.
 755. exple animum eis, "satisfy their minds." Cf. 785, 787, and And. 188.
 756. alia ex hoc quaestu, "another of my calling." Cf. n. on 735.
 757. ut, etc.: explanatory of quod. Cf. n. on 99.
 759. leuiorem, "less exemplary (than he ought)." Understand uelo.
 760. quod queam (= quantum queam); "so far as I can." Cf. n. on Heaut. 416. Cf. also Ad. 423, 511, etc. commodem: cf. n. on And. 162.

762. haec (= Myrrina et Philumena) is the subject.

763. quam: the antecedent is eadem (764).

764. utere: fut. indic. For the thought cf. Ad. 250–251.

765. For the aposiopesis cf. And. 164. reprimam me: cf. Heaut. 199. ne aegre, etc. = ne quicquam audias, quod aegre tibi sit. Cf. Eun. 624. For the effect of this vs. cf. 729–730.

766–7. amicus, etc., “what sort of a friend I am, or of what I am capable (as such), rather than (what sort of) a foe (I am) endeavour to discover,” lit. “make trial.” With inimicus understand qualis sim, or else quid possim; the latter would mean “of what I am capable as a foe.” Note the good word-order: amicus first, inimicus last. For periculum cf. And. 565. n.

ACT V. SCENE 2.

Phidippus returns with a nurse whom he has engaged to take care of the baby, and is informed by Laches that Bacchis has declared herself to be innocent of any attempt to entice Pamphilus away from his wife. At first Phidippus is inclined to be sceptical, but Bacchis offers to establish her innocence in any way satisfactory to Phidippus. The latter is reminded by Laches that all efforts to reconcile Pamphilus to his bride have failed, and that it may be well to see what Bacchis can do toward that end. Phidippus is persuaded, and joins Laches in urging Bacchis to make the suggested visit to Philumena and her mother.

767–9. nihil . . . facito: these words are said to the nurse, whom Phidippus is bringing with him; see 726.

767–8. nihil . . . defieri: cf. n. on Eun. 243.

769. ebria: not necessarily in a bad sense, but rather as in Plaut. Capt. 109 unde saturitate saepe ego exii ebrius. However, for nutrices as tipplers cf. And. 228–232, esp. 232. They were probably elderly (cf. the nurse in Shak., Romeo and Juliet), and in Plaut. elderly women are often multibibae. Cf. n. on Ad., Personae.

770. noster sacer, “our good father-in-law.”

771. persancte, “very solemnly”; cf. n. on 61.

772. istae: contemptuous; “such creatures,” referring to the class to which Bacchis belongs.

773. “I surrender to you my hand-maids; you have my permission to examine them, through whatever torture you please.” The Attic law, like the Roman, admitted slaves as witnesses only under torture. Cf. Ad. 482–483.

774. hic: adv. Transl. “the matter at stake here is this.”

775. paenitet: cf. n. on Eun. 1013.

776. solam fecisse depends on famae.

778. reāpse = re+ēapse (old form = ipsā); see Lex. hanc: i. e. Bacchia porro, "further." experiamur: explained by 786 that goes back to 754-755.

779. See App.

780. See App.

783. adest: sc. Bacchis. quod satis sit: subj. of characteristic; "she herself will do all that is requisite (for her justification)." Cf. B., App. § 371 (370, rev. ed.).

784. an quila, etc.: lit. "(is it for another reason) or is it because, etc.?" i. e. "is it then because, etc.?"

785. illis (i. e. Philumena and her mother) is sharply opposed to meus.

786. "I pray you, Bacchis, to keep the promise which you yourself made to me."

787. explie, etc.: cf. 755.

788. meum conspectum, "the sight of me." hodie: on Phorm. 1009.

790. haec: i. e. Philumena and Myrrina. amicae: in a good sense; cf. 791.

793. pudet Philumeneae: on Heaut. 260 (quoius), Phorm. 392, Ad. 683. ambae: i. e. the two ancillae. Cf. 773.

794. huic: i. e. Bacchis. euenire, "happen."

795. ut gratiam ineat, etc., "to become popular, etc.," explains quod. Laches' idea is that he would be happy if, like Bacchis, he had an opportunity to gain favour with and be of service to others without cost to himself; thus his thought really is, quid est quod mihi malim quam ut gratiam ineam sine meo dispendio et alteri prosim. But the introduction of huic, in 794, led to the form of 795, in which meo might have been used in place of suo, and ineam and prosim instead of ineat and prosit. Cf. Heaut. 302-303, Ad. 914.

797. "She knows that there accrue to her from this both honour and a good name." See App.

798. elus: i. e. Philumena. una opera, "at the same time." Laches goes into his house.

ACT V. SCENE 3.

Parmeno returns from the Acropolis whither Pamphilus had sent him (see 431) on a bootless errand. He meets Bacchis as she comes out of the house of Phidippus. Bacchis requests Parmeno to bring Pamphilus to Philumena and to say to him that Myrrina has recognized as her daughter's the ring which Pamphilus once gave to her (Bacchis). Parmeno makes a grim allusion to the labour of walking, of which he has done enough for one day.

799. meam operam, "my trouble," "my labour." Parmeno seeks to give the impression that much time has elapsed since he left the stage at 443; cf. 800.

800. desedi, "I have sat idle."
801. in arce: see 431. n. On the value of topographical references see Knapp in Class. Phil. vol. ii. p. 13 ff.
802. ineptus, "like a simpleton." illi, "there"; on And. 637.
807. adfine = "connection by marriage," rather than "neighbour." The reference is to Phidippus. huic: i. e. Bacchis. hic: adv.
811. etiam: i. e. uelo etiam dicas, "I wish you to say still further." etiam is half-temporal, half-additory. See Kirk in A. J. P. vol. xviii. p. 40. It may be briefly rendered "yet more," or even by a simple "yes."
812. gnatae: genitive.
813. tantumne est, "is that all?"
814. potestas (sc. cessare): i. e. "opportunity" to rest. Parmeno plays on the meaning of cessare.
816. Bacchis, now left alone on the stage, soliloquizes on the train of events, the circumstance which led to her possession of the ring, and the fortunate discovery by Myrrina which must eventually reconcile Pamphilus to his wife, Philumena. The narrative which follows is one of the poet's best efforts. In fact, narrative is Terence's forte. Cf., e.g., And. 48 ff., 282 ff.; Heaut. 96 ff., 275 ff.; Eun. 232 ff., 507 ff., 578 ff., 615 ff.; Phorm. 35 ff., 80 ff., 859 ff.; Hec. 114 ff., 361 ff., 816 ff.; Ad. 26 ff., 617 ff., 859 ff.
818. gnatum: i. e. the infant son of Philumena and Pamphilus, whom Myrrina had intended to 'expose.' ei: i. e. Pamphilus. qui refers to gnatum. harum: i. e. Philumena and her mother. ipsius: Pamphilus had connived at the proposed 'exposure' of Philumena's child, not knowing that the latter was his own son.
819. numquam: with posthac.
820. qua re, etc.: i. e. ea re de qua suspectus . . . fuit, (eum) exsolui. She has freed Pamphilus from the suspicion of unfaithfulness. For the construction cf. 792.
821. hic adeo . . . anulus, "it was this very ring that." fuit initium: with dative. Cf. And. 458 est huic rei caput, and Ad. 568.
822. nocte prima, "in the early part of the night," "in the evening."
823. sine comite: persons of a certain rank and position seldom went out at night unless attended by one or more slaves carrying torches or candles. The fact that Pamphilus was alone on the occasion referred to is therefore worthy of remark.
824. amabo: cf. 70. See on Heaut. 404.
825. obsecro: added to amabo to make the entreaty more pressing.
826. ille . . . simuiare, "he pretended to have his mind on other matters," i. e. he pretended not to hear me.
827. nescio quid suspicarier, "I began to suspect something." coepi instare, etc., "I began to press him to tell me." Note the coördination of the historical infin. (suscipier) with the pf. (hist.) indic. (coepi). On And. 203.

829. illi: dat. luctat: archaic (= luctatur).

830. eum: sc. anulum. in . . . habente, "while I had it just now on my finger."

831. cognitio, "discovery," ἀναγνώσις.

832. Philumenam: emphatic; "that it was Philumena who was, etc." The infinitive construction depends on cognitio.

833. propter me, "through my instrumentality." Cf. And. 271.

836. quaesti, "gain"; see on 735. ad malas partis: cf. n. on And. 193 (ad deteriorem partem).

838. "His marriage was a stroke of ill-luck for me." nuptlis: abl. of cause. euenit: impers. factum fateor: sc. id esse; "I admit it."

839. merito: emphatic.

840. quo refers to Pamphilus. eius, "at his hands"; subjective gen.

ACT V. SCENE 4.

Pamphilus returns, accompanied by Parmeno, whose message he can hardly credit. The news is too good to be true. It is confirmed however by Bacchis, who exchanges compliments with Pamphilus and agrees with him to keep the real truth from Laches and Phidippus. This concealment of the main fact of the play from those who did not need to know it is regarded by Madame Dacier as evidence of the poet's genius. It is a touch of true delicacy.

841. etiam, "again." See Kirk in A. J. P. vol. xviii. p. 28. II. ut (after uide) here introduces a final cl.; "make sure that, etc." certa . . . attuleris: the emphasis lies in the adjectives, as if Ter. had written, uide ut haec certa et clara sint, quae attulisti. Cf. 152 pium ac pudicum, etc. Cf. also And. 466; Eun. 354, 828.

842. conlicias: See App. Transl. "lest you entice me into the enjoyment for a short time (only) of this (possibly) false delight."

843. uisum est: in answer to uide (841). deus sum: cf. n. on And. 961; Heaut. 693 deorum uitam apti sumus.

844. ne aliud credam, etc.: this construction illustrates the manner in which atque (ac) came to express comparison after alius. Ter. might have omitted the second aliud and written nuntias. Cf. the note of Paul Thomas on this passage.

845. dixe: See App.

846. suom: Philumena had worn her mother's ring. el: i. e. Bacchis.

848. uenustatis, "of good luck"; this in games of chance (of which love was one) was regarded as the special gift of Venus. Cf. n. on And. 245 (inuenustum).

849. te . . . qui donem, "how shall I reward you?" See App.
850. nibilo enim, "with nothing of course." See App. For enim corroborative see on And. 91.
851. Cf. 873.
852. See 875. reducem: see Phorm. 625 (praecipitem), and n. on And. 683.
856. o . . . Bacchis: cf. n. on And. 282 (o Mysis Mysis).
857. bene factum: on And. 105. uolup: on Phorm. 610. factis, "by your deeds." credam: sc. uerbis tuis (i. e. bene . . . est just spoken).
858. uenustatem: in the more usual sense of "charm," "fascination." obtines: on And. 817.
859. uoluptati: predicative dat. (of service). obitus, "a chance meeting." aduentus, "a visit." The difference between obitus and aduentus, according to Donatus, is the difference between accident and intention.
861. There is confusion (fusion) of syntax here; the vs. = ut unus omnium homo tu uiuas blandissimus fused with ut omnium te uiuat numquam quisquam blandior. blandior: for the meaning cf. Hor. Od. 1. 12. 11, where Orpheus is described as blandus auritas fidibus canoris ducers quercus. For blandior as predicate cf. 566 miseriorem uiuere.
862. hahahae denotes satisfaction at what has been said. tun mi istuc: sc. fasis or dicis; "can it be you who pay me this compliment?"
- 863-4. nam, etc.: i. e. for, though I never had seen her, etc., she seemed, etc. quod nossem, "so far as I knew," i. e. "so as to know her." Cf. Ad. 641 quod sciām.
864. perliberalis: on And. 123. Cf. also 164; Eun. 473, 682; Phorm. 815. Cf. in English such expressions as "she is very nice," "she is a thorough lady." The fundamental idea with the ancients was that of grace — grace of manner, as well as of mind — which was supposed to distinguish the free-born from the slave. dic uerum= "dou't jest." ita, etc.= "I'm telling the truth," "I'm not joking."
865. harum rerum: i. e. of the violation of Philumena.
- 865-6. neque . . . muttito, "and it need not be even whispered"; another delicate touch in the handling of the plot.
866. placet: sc. mihi.
- 866-8. See the note introductory to this scene.
867. hic: adv. fuerat par: on 561.
869. "Nay, I will impart to you further something whereby you shall believe that this matter is easily kept secret." etiam is closely connected with dabo, as in Phorm. 877 (see note), and is additory, though the temporal idea is not wholly lost. See A. J. P. vol. xviii. pp. 29 and 40. credas: subj. in rel. cl. of purpose. See B., App. 371 (rev. ed. 370).

870. iure iurando: dative. See App. See also Engelbrecht, Stud. Terent., p. 23.

871. sibi, "in her eyes." purgatum, "acquitted." Cf. 254.

872. ex sententia: on Heaut. 683.

873. hodie: on 788. For the thought cf. 851.

874. est: observe the change of mood. The second dependent question is less closely connected in feeling with scire than the first.

875. quo pacto: aposiopesis. Parmeno was going on to say reducem in lucem feci, but as he is quoting his master's words (see 852), he is easily anticipated by Pamphilus and interrupted before he finishes his sentence. Parmeno repeats his master's words with the object also of eliciting some explanation of their meaning.

877. Parmeno now has recourse to another dodge. He pretends to know the secret, thinking that Pamphilus may be induced in consequence to make some definite reference to it. But Pamphilus plays with him without enlightening him, and he never learns the whole truth. Thus the principle expressed in 866-868 is realized in his case also. inprudens, "without being aware of it."

878. "Would Parmeno carelessly let slip an opportunity to do that which is needful to be done?" See App. For the slave's reference to himself by his own name cf. Ad. 763. usus sit: on Heaut. 80.

879-80. equidem: Parmeno now turns and faces the spectators. Cantor: on And. 981.

APPENDIX TO NOTES ON THE HECYRA

34. This vs., if admitted into the text, must be taken parenthetically. It is rejected by Grautoff (Turpil. com. reliq., Bonn, 1853, thes. 1).

134. faxint: Dz. and Thomas read perdant.

150-1. The inverted order is due to Fleck. (N. Jahr., 1876, p. 535 f.). But the order as given in all the good MSS. seems not to require inversion. The quin-cl. depends grammatically on eam ludibrio haberi, which is treated as a phrase of hindrance; "that she should be held up as a laughing-stock, involving (as this would) my failure to return her in like manner as I had received her, is neither right for me nor good for the girl." Hence the quin-cl. comes in more readily in the MSS. order, after eam . . . haberi, which is virtually a cl. of hindrance.

163. Probably spurious, but accepted by Fleck.

167. It is better to take hic as adv. of time (= "hereupon," "then," as in Eun. 239, Phorm. 869), and animus of the MSS. as subject of elapsus est (169).

178. conuenibat: after Usener (Rh. Mus. 24, 112) and Engelbrecht (Studia Terent., p. 57) for conueniebat of the MSS.

201. The repetition of oderunt, which Fleck. approves (see his text), does not substantially affect the sense ; it does assist the metre. The vs. is rejected by Bentley, Dz., Conradt (Met. Comp. d. Ter., p. 49). If the vs. is an interpolation, it is an early one, for Donatus refers to it, or at least to a part of it.

218. Condemned by Dz. as irrelevant, and because of the use of the fut. tense where the pres. would seem more natural. But Umpf. and Fleck. rightly accept the vs. The fut. is sound. Their conduct is always prospective in the old man's fears. His standing thought is, 'as they shall be at home, so shall I be abroad.'

247. etsi : condemned also by Madvig (Adv. II. 19), and Fleck. Thus anacoluthon at sed (248) is avoided.

289. hae : thus MSS., and Fleck. who changes the MSS. order to that given in the text. Dz., after Umpf., Guyet and Bentley, reads haec and thus is able to keep the MSS. order. haec, as fem. pl. in Plaut. and Ter., is rather the rule than the exception. Tyrrell's haec in this vs. is an oversight, due to his use of Dz. See his text and footnote.

297. illim : thus also Dz. and Fleck. See Ritschl, Opusc. II. 459. A has illi with c added by a later hand.

307. The reading of the MSS. is retained by Paul Thomas: non maxumas, quae maxumae sunt interdum irae, iniurias faciunt = "the biggest quarrels do not presuppose the greatest wrongs." Facere = "faire croire à l'existence de . . ." says Thomas, and this accords with Donatus' note = faciunt pro ostendunt. This should render the various emendations of this vs. unnecessary.

313. Dz. suggests ita (see his Adn. Crit.), but reads ere, which was introduced by Bentley to complete the octonarius.

317. loquere : thus also Dz. and Fleck. Cf. Engelbrecht, Studia Terent., p. 84.

363. See Warren in A. J. P. vol. iii. p. 483 (Review of Hauler's 'Quaest., etc.,' 1882).

398-4. These vss. may be a mere gloss explaining 392 or 399. See Dz., Adn. Crit.

453. nescio : I have followed the MSS. and Fleck. (not Tyrrell) in giving this word to Pamphilus.

478. The text is that of Bothe's ed. of 1822, which is followed here also by Fleck., Dz., Tyrrell.

523. uideo : I have followed Dz. and Thomas in bracketing this word, for the metre's sake. It is not necessary to the sense ; cf. And. 957, Eun. 455. Conradt (p. 179) deletes atque and scans as a trochaic octonarius; thus also Fleck.

608-9. Dz. and Paul Thomas reject 609 as generally unsatisfactory. See Dz.'s Adn. Crit. The vs. may well be a gloss on 608. Fleckeisen's comma at flectere, which is the reading of the text, permits awkward asyndeton of the two clauses. A heavier stop would leave flexerit without a definite subject, although the meaning is clear. On the whole it has seemed better to follow Fleck. It is evident that Tyrrell also intended to place a comma at flectere. His full stop there (see his text) is an accidental copy of Dziatzko's pointing. The difficulty would be removed if we were to read flectere et.

620. fabula: see Dz., Adn. Crit. The nom. pl. of the MSS. is not impossible.

637. For ista added by Dz. see the Adn. Crit.

663. an quia: Fleck., Dz., and Tyrrell read an qui against the MSS. and without improvement to either sense or metre.

688. Rejected by Bentley, Fleck., Dz. So also 690.

741. Thus also Bentley, Dz., Fleck. But the reading of the MSS., which is also that of Umpf., is quite intelligible.

747. Dz. (followed by Fleck.) has made of this vs. a trochaic septenarius. The reading of the MSS. is against the metre. See footnote.

779. falso, though not in A, has good authority and helps the meaning of crimini. It is accepted by Fleck., who, with Dz., rejects se uxor on account of the metre. That crimen however does not require falsum to give it the meaning of "false accusation," "calumny," can be proved by examples. It would be better therefore to omit it and retain se uxor, which, though readily understood, appears in all MSS.

780. For Krauss' reading see Rhein. Mus. VIII. 544.

797. First suspected by Ad. Koch (Exercit. crit. in priscos Poet. rom., p. 35. Bonn, 1851). Rejected by Dz., Fleck., and Thomas.

842. conicias: thus also Umpf., Dz., and Fleck. for the difficult conicias of the MSS. But the latter finds support in Heaut. 292 ne me in laetitiam frustra conicias.

845. MSS. dixisse will not scan unless, with Fleck., we make the vs. an iambic octonarius.

849. Dz. following the MSS. has quid donem? quid? quid? But two accusatives (te . . . quid) with donare are unusual. Hence the alteration by Fleck., who is followed by Tyrrell in this vs., though not in 850. Thomas adheres to the MSS., and explains the construction as archaic.

850. qui: altered from quid by Fleck. to correspond with reading of 849. Thus also nihilo, for nil of most MSS.

870. iure iurando: MSS., but Fleck., after Umpf., alters to iuri iurando. Paul Thomas accepts iure iurando, calling it a dat. and citing Buecheler (Declin. lat. §§ 276-278, pp. 172-173). See Engelbrecht (Studia Terent., p. 23).

878. Bentley assigned this vs. to Bacchis. I should prefer to give the vs. to Pamphilus (with A), as though it were a part of the young man's bantering reply to his slave.

ADELPHOE

DIDASCALIA

See notes on the didascalia to the Andria.

1. Adelphoe: the title, which refers to one or both of the two pairs of brothers, Micio and Demea, Aeacinus and Ctesipho, is taken from the Ἀδελφοί of Menander. The termination -oe is archaic, and represents the Gk. nom. pl. in -οι; cf. Cic. in Verr. 4. 3. 5 canephoree (= κανηφόροι). So Menandru = Μενάνδρου, below. See App.

1-2. acta . . . Paulo, "acted at the funeral games given in honour of Lucius Aemilius Paulus." Aemelio: an older form than Aemilio. It is the reading of the Bembine Codex (actually Amelio), and of the Vaticanus for Hec., Didasc. 6. This Aemilius was the conqueror of Perseus at Pydna, in 168 b. c., and was for that reason surnamed Macedonicus. His death took place in 160 b. c., and this play was performed, probably for the first time, at the funeral. Cf. n. on Hec., Didasc. 6.

2-3. Quintus Fabius Maxumus and Publius Cornelius Africanus were curule aediles when the play was brought out. Both were sons of Lucius Aemilius Paulus. The former had entered by adoption into the family of Q. Fabius Maximus Cunctator; the latter into that of Publius Cornelius Scipio Africanus Maior — the great Scipio, who defeated Hannibal at Zama in 202 b. c. He was adopted by the great Scipio's son, and became known in history as Publius Cornelius Scipio Africanus Minor.

5. Sarranis: Sarranus, later also Serranus (a, um), is from Sarra (Hebrew Zor), the old Latin for Tyre, and seems to have been applied to a special kind of tibiae pares. facta sexta, "produced sixth in order." The Codex Bembinus alone regularly marks the succession of the plays. See Teuffel's History of Roman Literature (Warr's translation), § 109. 5. On the fact that Donatus assigns the second place to the Adelphoe, see John C. Wataon in T. A. P. A. vol. xxxvi. p. 146, fin.

5-6. Marcus Cornelius Cethegus and Lucius Anicius Gallus were consuls for the year in which the first performance of the Adelphoe took place — 160 b. c.

PERIOCHA

See introductory n. on the Per. to the Andria.

2. Aeschinum: the elder son, as appears from vss. 47 and 462 of the play.

3. Ctesiphonem: Gk. names in -φῶν, -φῶνος, were declined by the Latin comic poets like nouns in -o, -onis.

4. duro: Demea is called durus by Micio in vs. 64 of the play. Cf. what Demea says of himself in 866, and what Cicero says of the brothers (De Sen. § 65), quanta in altero diritas in altero comitas!

5-6. famam . . . transferebat: both the asyndeton and the form of expression are copied from vs. 263.

6. amorem: i. e. the discredit of being engaged in an intrigue with the citharistria. Aeschinus was not enamoured of the music-girl, but carried her off on Ctesipho's account, and in this way diverted suspicion from his brother to himself. It is on the misunderstanding arising from this incident that the main interest of the plot hinges.

7. fidicinam: i. e. the same person as the citharistria in 3 and 12, and the psaltria in 388 and 405 of the play.

8. pauperculam: taken from 647.

9. fidem dederat: cf. 306 and 333-334. Cf. also And., Per. 3.

10. iurgare, "expostulated."

11. ueritas: this would be uerum in good Latin. ducit: sc. uxorem; "marries."

12. uitiatam: used as a substantive, like nuptam in Hec., Per. 5. Cf. Eun., Per. 12; Hec., Per. 11. potitur: for i see on 871; for the constr. with the acc. see on Phorm. 830; for the fact see 996 f.

PERSONAE

See n. on the Personae of the Andria.

Canthara: the name (from cantharus) suggests the bibulous habits of the anus as she appears in Plaut. and Ter. Cf. Circ. 76-77 anus . . . multibiba atque merobibast.

PROLOGUS

In vss. 1-14 a word is said in justification of the practice of contaminatio. See on And. Prol. 16; cf. Heaut. Prol. 17.

1. postquam: on Phorm. Prol. 1. poëta: on And. Prol. 1. scriputuram: on Hec. Prol. 13, Phorm. Prol. 5.

2. iniquis . . . et aduorsarios: i. e. Terence's enemies, among whom were Luscius Lanuuinus and his party. See n. introductory to the Prol. of the Andria. obseruari, "was being (perpetually) criticized."

3. rapere . . . partem, "depreciate"; cf. Eun. 632. quam: i. e. eam fabulam quam. See App.

4. indicio . . . erit, "he will give evidence regarding himself," as in a court of law. For this pred. dat. cf. Heaut. 384; cf. also Lucr. 4. 1019 in- dicioque sui facti persaepe fuere, where it is followed by the gen., a rare construction; see n. in Merrill's Lucret. l. c. uos eritis iudices: for the idea cf. Heaut. Prol. 12 and 25–26; Eun. Prol. 29.

5. id factum: the practice about to be described, of amalgamating parts of two plays to form one play; see on And. Prol. 16.

6. Synapothnescontes = Συναποθνήσκοντες, "Comrades in death." (The iota in the antepenult of the Greek word is well attested. See Meisterhans, Grammatik der attischen Inschriften, 2nd ed. p. 141; and G. Meyer, Griech. Gram. p. 451). Diphili: a poet of the New Attic Comedy, contemporary with Philemon and Menander.

7. eam: a monosyllable by synizesis; or else two short syllables, according to the law governing an iambic sequence; see Introd. § 91. Commo-rientis: in predicative apposition. Both the Latin play and its original are lost.

8. Graeca: sc. fabula, i. e. the Συναποθνήσκοντες of Diphilos.

9. in prima fabula, "in the beginning of the play," though not necessarily in the first scene. eum: on 7. locum, "scene."

10. integrum, "untouched." Cf. Heaut. Prol. 4. Plautus did not transfer that scene to his play. Scan integrum ē(um) hic. hic: i. e. Terence. Cf. 18.

11. uerbum . . . expressum, "translated word for word." The prologue mentions this as creditable to the poet. The expression, however, is not to be too closely pressed. It applies rather to the thought than to the words. Cf. Cic. De Fin. 1. 2. 4 cum idem fabellas Latinas ad uerbum e Graecis expressas non inuiti legant. extulit, "wrought out"; not quite the same as transtulit, which refers to simple translation, as in And. Prol. 14.

12. eam: sc. fabulam (i. e. Adelphos). Cf. Eun. Prol. 32 in Eunuchum suam. nouam: i. e. not before seen on the stage. See n. in Dz.-Kauer. Cf. Heaut. Prol. 7, Phorm. Prol. 24, Hec. Prol. (1) 5.

12-3. pernoscite . . . existumetis: for the pleonasm cf. Hec. 261. See on And. Prol. 25.

13. furtum: cf. the censure in Eun. 23.

14. reprensum, "restored to notice," "retrieved." neclegentia, "by accident"; the scene referred to was simply passed over, unheeded, by Plautus in his translation.

15-8. nam: on And. 43. The connection of ideas is: Herewith all objections to the play are disposed of, "for as to what those ill-natured persons say, etc.," this, so far from being a reproach to the poet, is even a credit to him. isti: Luscius Lanuinus and the rest of the poet's enemies and detractors. See on 2; cf. n. on 43. homines nobilis: according to Donatus, these were Scipio Africanus, C. Laelius Sapiens, Furius Philus; but these persons were mere youths at this time, to whom vs. 20 would hardly be applicable. There is some probability therefore in the suggestion of Santra, the grammarian, that not they but others are meant, viz., Q. Fabius Labeo, M. Popilius, both poets and men of consular rank, and C. Sulpicius Gallus, consul in 166 b. c. and celebrated for his learning — uiri quorum operam et in bello et in otio et in negotio populus est expertus (see Vit. Ter. p. 3). Cf. n. on Heaut. Prol. 24.

16. See App. una: sc. cum eo.

18. eam: for id; it is attracted into the fem. by laudem. hic: on 10. quom illis placet, “that he pleases those persons”; see on And. 622–623, 771; Phorm. 967; Hec. 308–309, 483. This explicative use of quom corresponds with the substantive quod-cl. of the grammars. In general the indic. after quom (whether = “that,” or “since,” “because”) is common in early Latin, esp. after laudo, gratulor, or any equivalent expression of feeling. It is not usual after the time of Cicero, and is found in Cic. only with laudo, gratulor, etc. Cf. Cic. Fam. 9. 14. 3 gratulor tibi quom tantum uales apud, etc. With the thought cf. Hor. Epist. 1. 20. 23 me primis urbis belli placuisse domique. On quom cf. Hale, “Cum-Constr.” Part II. p. 80.

19. These men had been raised to posts of honour and responsibility through the votes of the people. uobis uniuorsis, “you all,” i. e. the spectators. populo: i. e. the public in general. Cf. Donatus, ‘uniuersos qui in cauea sunt dicit, populum qui etiam praeter theatrum, id est uniuersam urbem’ (Wessner, vol. ii. p. 11).

20–1. “Of whose services in war, in peace, in public business, each one (of you), according to his convenience has availed himself unreservedly,” more lit. “without objection (from them)”; sc. eorum. For the meaning here given to sine superbia see Knapp in Class. Rev. vol. xxi. p. 45. The three nouns are undoubtedly intended to be a general compendium of the relations of life.

22. dehinc: monosyllable; see Introd. § 96. argumentum, “plot.” With this vs. and the next cf. Plaut. Prol. Trin. 16–17 sed de argomento ne expectetis fabulae: senes, qui huc uenient, i rem uobis aperient. Usually, however, the explanations necessary to enable the spectators to follow intelligently a play of Plautus were given in the prologue. Cf. remarks introductory to Prol. of the Andria, and see And. Prol. 6.

23. senes: Micio and Demea, who in great measure unfold the plot in the first act. ei: see App. aperient: sc. narrando, i. e. by what they say, as opposed to what they do (in agendo, 24) on the stage.

24. ostendent: see App. aequanimitas: sc. uostra; “your goodwill.” Cf. And. Prol. 24, Heaut. Prol. 35, Phorm. Prol. 30. See App.

25. augeāt: the final syllables, -āt, -ēt, -it, of words of three or more syllables, preserve their original long quantity in the comic poets (and sometimes also in the Augustan writers), when they receive the accent. See Introd. § 91. Cf. Ritschl, Proleg. in Trin. 180 f., and C. F. W. Müller, Plaut. Pros. p. 60 f.

ACT I. SCENE 1.

The scene represents a public street (via) in Athens. Two houses, but probably three doors (the traditional number handed on from the Greek tragedy; see the Dz.-Hauer ed. of the Phorm., p. 36) face upon this street. The large door near the middle of the stage and the smaller one to the right (of the spectators) belong to the house of Micio. The door to the left belongs to the house of Stostrata, and corresponds in size to the door on the right. The street leads, on the left to the Piraeus, the harbour of Athens (but see Introd. p. 48. note 1.), on the right to the forum (market-place, ἀγορά). A narrow lane, angiportum, also on the right, leads back from the via toward the country. There is a lane also on the left. In the middle of the stage is an altar (but cf. Introd. p. 48. note 2.). The scene remains the same throughout the play.

Micio enters the stage from his house, and calls as he comes out for Storax. Storax is a slave who had been sent the evening before to escort Aeschinus home from the house of a friend, where he had been supping. Aeschinus has been adopted by his uncle, Micio, and the latter is much concerned at the young man's prolonged absence from home—for the failure of Storax to appear when summoned is proof that Aeschinus has been out all night. Micio proceeds therefore to moralize on the situation. As he delivers his soliloquy he may be supposed to pace to and fro before the door of his house.

26. Storax, if Donatus (on 27) is correct, belonged to a class of slaves, known as aduorsitores (aduersitores, Weaner). One of the duties of these slaves was to accompany their young masters home after a banquet, if necessary with torches in their hands to light the way. See App.

27. seruolorum: on And. 83. qui aduorsum iuerant, "who had gone to escort him home." Though Don. is our authority for the term aduorsitores, yet the word is nowhere found in use. In the list of dramatis personae prefixed to the Mostellaria of Plautus, the words Phaniscus aduorsitor occur, but aduorsitor is nowhere found in the text of the play itself. For aduorsum ire (uenire) cf. Plaut. Most. 876, 880, 938, 947, and Lorenz on Most. 313.

28. hoc uere dicunt, "this is a true saying." With the sentiment of 28–39, regarding the care of children, cf. Plaut. Mil. 719–722, and Eur. Med. 1090–1111.

29. cesses, "loiter." satius = melius. Cf. 58.

30. te: on Phorm. 724. dicit . . . cogitat: the order suggests that she thinks more than she expresses. in animo cogitat: pleonasm; cf. n. on 500.

31. propitii, "loving"; opposed to irata, and used more often of deities than of human beings. Cf. Phorm. 636. n.

33. animo obsequi, "are indulging yourself." animus denotes the disposition in men to self-indulgence. Cf. Plaut. Mil. 677 es, bibe, animo obsequere mecum atque onera te hilaritudine. See App.

34. sibi . . . male, "while matters go ill with herself," i. e. because she is obliged to remain at home and alone. With the thought cf. Eur. Med. 244-247. See App.

35. ěgō quīā: a proceleusmatic is not infrequently the first foot of an iambic senarius. Cf. 118, etc.; Introd. § 76.

36. alserit: from algesco; "may have caught cold," in the night air.

37. cedicerit: i. e. through intoxication, or in consequence of the darkness. In Plaut. Mil. 719-722 similar language is employed. Such fears were a stock subject of alarm.

38. aliquid: i. e. "some limb." uah: on And. 589. quemquamne, etc.: on And. 245. in animo: the abl., not the acc., is the reading of the best MSS., and is constructed here as with locare, or the like. Livy (34. 2. 4) has statuere apud animum.

40. atque: adversative; see on And. 225. séd ěx: see Introd. § 91.

41. dissimili studio: predicative abl. of quality.

42. clementem: on And. 36.

43. quod: i. e. id quod, with reference to uxorem numquam habui, 44. istl: i. e. those whose views are opposed to mine.

44. contra: on Phorm. 521.

45-6. Note the change from the hist. infin. to the hist. pf. The infinitives are descriptive, while duxit expresses merely a single act or incident. parce ac duriter: on And. 74.

47. inde = ex eis. hunc: i. e. Aeschinus.

48. eduxi: this verb, in the sense of "to bring up," "educate," is more common in Plaut. and Ter. than educare which Ter. employs only in Phorm.

943. Cf. n. on And. 274, Eun. 117. pro meo: with habui as well as amarui. Cf. Hec. 279.

49. in eo, "therein." eo is neut., like id which follows. See on And. 306. Cf. Donatus, 'in eo quasi in ea re, etc.' (vol. ii. p. 18, Wessner). If eo is masc., then id is neut. because attracted by the predicate, solum carum; cf. n. on Prol. 18 (eam).

50. contra, "in return." See on Phorm. 521. The construction = ille ut me item (carum) contra habeat. facio sedulo, "I do all I can," "I make every effort."

51. do: sc. argentum. Cf. 118. praetermitto: sc. delicta (Don.).

52. pro meo iure, "by my orders"; an allusion to the patria potestas. Cf. Hec. 243. n. agere: sc. eum. clanculum: a diminutive from clam, which in early Latin is constructed with the acc. on the analogy of celare. Cf. Hec. 396. n.; Plaut. Merc. 545 emptast amica clam uxorem et clam filium. Hence in the comic poets clam me, clam te, etc., are properly regarded as presenting the acc., not the abl., of the pron. In classical Latin clam (as prep.) takes the abl. Cf. Lucretius, I. 476; Caes. B. C. ii. 32. 8 clam uobis.

53. fert, "prompts," "suggests." Cf. n. on And. 832.

54. Micio is sadly in error. His son has overreached and deceived him. Cf. 629–630.

55. nam: elliptical and causal; "(and I am right in doing so) for." See on And. 43. insuerit, "has made it his practice."

55–6. aut audebit: sc. fallere. See App. on 56.

57. liberalitate, "through their sense of honour," "by an appeal to their gentlemanly instincts"; not "through liberal treatment" (= bonitate), on the part of the parent, as Donatus understands it. Cf. And. 38, and Ad. 684, 828, 449. liberos: free-born children as opposed to serui. Note the assonance in this vs. and cf. n. on And. 96, 218.

59. conueniunt: cf. Hec. 659, 178. The impers. construction might have been employed here also, but for placent. In prose we might have looked for de his mihi cum fratre non conuenit.

61. nobis: ethical dative.

63. uestitu: dat.; see on Heaut. 357. nimio: in agreement with uestitu.

63–4. nimilum . . . nimilum, etc.: note the play on this word; "'you are awfully foolish.' (Well) he is awfully hard."

64. durus: see n. on Per. 4. -que et: on And. 676. Ter. is fond of polysyndeton; cf. 301.

66. qui . . . credat, "since he believes," "in assuming."

68. sic: with reference to the following verse.

69. malo, "by punishment." See on And. 143 and 431.

70. id: as Don. says, understand quod facit. tantisper: with dum; see on Heaut. 106.

71. fore clam, "that it will escape notice." clam here is virtually an adj. = "secret." Cf. 624 ac fieret palam, and n. ad ingenium reddit: cf. Hec. 113. n.; Phorm. 802.

72. ex animo, "from the heart," "sincerely."

73. par referre, "to return like for like"; more fully given in Eun. 445.

74. patrium, "becoming to a father." paternum would signify "worthy of (one's) descent from) a (certain) father." Cf. n. on 450.

75. alieno metu, "from fear of another." The adj. serves the purpose of an obj. genitive, alterius, aliorum. The thought is similar to that in 58.

76. hoc: abl. of degree of difference. interest, "differ"; see on Eun. 233. nequit: sc. facere.

77. nescire: sc. se. Cf. 125. Each brother is sure he is right. Cf. 124.

The play proves each to be wrong. The theme of the play is, 'how to bring up a son.' The answer is ne quid nimis, μηδὲν ἀγάδεν. See on And. 61.

78. ipsus : on And. 360. Here, however, it is before an initial consonant. agebam, "I was speaking."

79. nescio quid : on And. 340. tristem : sc. eum. Transl. "out of sorts." credo : on And. 313.

80-1. saluom . . . gaudemus : on Eun. 976. Micio gives the greeting in the name of his whole house. Demea's abode is in the country. See 45.

ACT I. SCENE 2.

Demea, who has learned that Aeschinus has forcibly carried off the music-girl from the house of her master, comes in passionate haste to Micio to inform him of the fact, and to reproach him for his excessive leniency and indifferent example. Micio gets the better of the dispute, but gives expression to his real anxiety after his brother has left him.

81. ehem : on And. 417. opportune : sc. ades. See on And. 345. In his displeasure, and contrary to the usual custom on such occasions, Demea allows the greeting of his brother to pass unnoticed. Cf. 720, And. 538, Plaut. Bacch. 245. te ipsum quaerito, "you are the very person I am trying to find." The frequentative has an intensive force. Cf. 321, 363, And. 75, Eun. 523.

82-3. rogas, etc., "do you ask me, seeing that we have an Aeschinus (for a son), why I am sad?" See App.

83. dixin hoc fore : on And. 17, Hec. 497. Micio says this aside, or to the audience. Cf. 79-80 credo . . . iurgabit.

84. fecerit: for the subj. cf. 261, 374; n. on 396 and on And. 191, 282. pudet: the subject is quicquam. Cf. n. on And. 481.

85. metuit: it is better to supply is as the subject than qui understood from quem, for Latin (and even more so Greek) is loath to use a second relative pronoun in such cases, where the second relative would have a form different from that of the first.

86. nam : elliptical and corroborative; "(and there is renewed evidence of this) for." See on And. 43. antehac : on And. 187.

87. modo quid designauit, "what has he just now been guilty of?" Cf. Donatus, 'apud ueteres hoc uerbum (designauit) duas res significabat: etenim prae et recte facta designata dicebantur.' Demea purposely employs ambiguous language in order that when he subsequently states the exact truth he may make a deeper impression. But see App.

88. familiam : on Heaut. 751.

90. mulcavit : i. e. either through his slaves, or with his own hand, probably the former. Cf. n. on 172 (em, serua). usque ad mortem : cf. And. 199, Plaut. Mil. 163 ni usque ad mortem male mulcassitis.

91. omnes: i. e. the citizens.
92. hoc: neut. acc. of the pronoun ; or else archaic for huc (with aduenti). For the latter see Engelbrecht, Stud. Terent., p. 70. 5. quot: see on Phorm. 159, And. 248.
93. In ore est: the subject is either Aeschinus, or hoc understood from what precedes. The former is supported by Heaut. 572, and Cic. Lael. 1. 2 qui tum fere omnibus erat in ore.
94. conferendum: sc. cum eo. This father too is deceived; cf. n. on 54. fratrem: i. e. Ctesiphon, whom Demea believes to be without a flaw in his character, since he is the result, as it were, of a 'system' of training elaborated by Demea himself. Cf. George Meredith's 'Richard Feverel,' who also was the victim of a 'system,' and disappointed his father's expectations.
95. rei: on And. 288, Hec. 224.
96. nullum . . . factum: Ter. is fond of such brief sentences with omission of the verb sum. Cf. And. 126, 138; Phorm. 104, 133; Ad. 121, 264, 792. huius: i. e. Ctesiphon; "no like deed attaches to him," "he was never guilty of such a deed." Understand est. But huius may be neut. and governed by simile; "no deed similar to this (act of Aeschinus was ever committed by Ctesiphon)." For the gen. with similis, as more regular than the dat. in Plaut. and Ter., see Ritschl (Opusc. II. 570, 579). illi, "to his discredit." tu . . . sinis explains tibi dico, and has the force of "for you are to blame."
97. tū illum: on And. 191 (qui amant).
98. numquam: on And. 178.
100. quorsum istuc, "what do you mean by that remark?" See on And. 361.
101. flagitium: a very strong word; "burning shame," "dreadful crime." Cf. Eun. 1013.
103. fecimus: for the pl. see G. 285. 3. Note 1.; cf. n. on Hec. 512. For the sentiment cf. Juvenal, viii. 163 f.
104. slit: the pf. sii (from sino) is sustained by the Latin grammarian Diomedes (I. p. 374, Keil), who refers to this passage and to one in Varro.
106. esset . . . faceremus, "if there had been a source, etc., we should have done it." The action may be imagined as continued or repeated in the past. Cf. n. on 178. unde id fieret, "whence this might have become possible"; a pure potential subj., as in 122, where see note.
107. homo, "a true man," "a man of sense"; on 579; cf. 734, 736, 934.
109. ubi . . . foras, "when, after long waiting, he had tumbled you out of doors (for burial)." Cf. 874, Hec. 596, Plaut. Most. 440-443. The obscurity of the passage is intentional on account of its unpleasant suggestion, viz., the desire of a son for the death of his father. expectatum = "waited for," merely. eieciisset denotes haste and indifference; cf. Hor. Sat. 1. 8.

8-9. extulisset would have been the correct word for a decent funeral.
foras : on And. 580.

110. alieniore, "more unsuitable." Cf. 53. faceret : on And. 798 (uiueret). Cf. A. & G. 535. c.; G. 644. 3. a.; H. 570. 1. tamen : on And. 94.

111. pro : on And. 287. tu homo : with sarcastic reference to 107. See on And. 778; cf. Heaut. 1003. mē ād : note the hiatus and mē shortened, not elided, before a short initial vowel.

112. Demea does not accept the philosophy of 53 and 101 ff.

113. ne me optundas : probably a cl. of purpose, not a prohibition. See on And. 348; cf. Heaut. 879, Phorm. 515.

116. illi, "therein" ; on And. 637. It might be a dat. of the pronoun.

117. de meo, "out of my substance," "at my expense." Understand facit. Cf. n. on 940 de te largitor.

118. dūm ērit commodum, "so long as it suits me." Note the hiatus ; dum does not suffer elision. Cf. n. on 111.

119. erit: Donatus (Wessner, vol. ii. p. 30) says, non 'argentum' scilicet sed 'commodum dare' subaudiendum est. excludetur : i. e. a muliere. Cf. Eun. 49, 159.

120. discidit uestem : an inference ; the fact is not mentioned in 88-91. Cf. n. on 559.

122. est unde haec fiant : this passage is quoted by Prof. W. G. Hale (Cum-Constructions, Part II. p. 107) as an instance of the pure potential, which, he says, has an occasional use in hypotaxis, in qualitative clauses expressing capacity, though in parataxis it has nearly died out. Cf. n. on 106.

123. cedo : on And. 150.

124. ostendam : i. e. in the presence of the arbiter. See on 77.

125. sciunt : i. e. who know how to be fathers. Cf. 77.

126. consiliis, "in thought." The pl. pictures the unremitting nature of Micio's thought for Aeschinus.

127. quicquam : sc. agis. si pergis, abiero, "if you are going on like this, I shall be off." See on And. 456 (uidero).

128. sicne agis : on Eun. 99.

129. curae est mihi : the subject is ea res suggested by eadem re (128).

130-1. alterum . . . alterum : cf. n. on Phorm. 332 (in illis).

131-2. curare . . . reposcere : the omission of te (subject acc.) softens the reproach by giving it a general application.

132. ah, Micio=you don't mean that, Micio.

133. mihi, etc. = yes, I do. quid istic, "very well then" ; see on And. 572.

134. Said in a petulant tone ; "let him squander, waste, be wasted (i. e.

he ruined); it's no concern of mine." pereat is passive to perdat. Note the alliteration, and cf. n. on And. 96. Cf. also Heaut. 465.

135. For the aposiopesis cf. And. 164. rursum, etc. offsets ah, Micio (132); "are you angry again, Demea?" = you don't mean that, Demea: you are only angry.

136. an non credis matches miki sic uidetur (133); "do you not then believe me?" = yes, I do mean that.

137. alienus, "a stranger." obsto: sc. Aeschini factis. em: on And. 416.

139. quom . . . est, "that (because) he (Ctesipho) is." See on 18 (quom, etc.). iste tuos : in allusion to is meus est factus (115). sentiet, "will appreciate."

140. posteriorius : Demea is about to add words to the effect, 'in how much better caae his soher-minded brother is,' when he breaks off.

141. Demea departs, to attend to other matters for which he came to town. Micio may now speak his mind freely. nec nil, etc., "neither wholly without foundation, nor yet altogether true are the things he says." Cf. n. on Eun. 641 (haud nil est).

142. nil: adverbial acc.; "in no wise," "in no respect"; sometimes put with verbs, rarely with adjectives, in place of non, for the sake of emphasis. Cf. 273 nil auxiliarier, and n. on 79. haec: the scrapes and tricks of Aeschinus, of which Demea has just been complaining.

143. homo: i. e. Demea. Cf. n. on 407.

144. quom goes with each of the three verbs; "even when (though) I try to appease him, though I withstand him vigorously (as I did just now) and try to frighten him (from his position)." Note the conative force of the present tense. quom is concessive as well as temporal. See Roby 1731. For the indic. see A. & G. 549. Note 3. ; G. 580. Note 1. ; H. 599. 1.

145. tamen . . . patitur, "yet he hardly bears things (trouble) as a man should"; hence were I to help him along in his rage, there would be trouble indeed. augeam : sc. eius iracundiam.

146. etiam : intensive. See Kirk in A. J. P. vol. xviii. p. 32. vi.

147. cum illo, "as much as he." etsi, "and yet," here introduces a sentence that is coördinate with the preceding. Thus also tametsi, quam-quam, quasi, si, nisi, often in the colloquial speech of the comic poets. Cf. n. on 153 (nisi).

150. omnium : sc. meretricum.

151. See 288 ff.

152. deferuisse, "had cooled down." de in composition often conveys the idea of completion, cessation. Cf. the similar use of awō. See on 184 (debacchatus), 519 (defetigarit).

153. de integrō: on And. 688 (integrascit). nisi, “yet,” “but.” See on 147 (etsi). Cf. And. 664. Cf. also Ad. 545, 785, Eun. 548.

154. hominem = eum; often thus in Plaut. and Ter. apud forum: on And. 302. Micio now leaves the stage to go to the forum, the customary meeting-place of the citizens, where he hopes to find Aeschinus and to extract the truth from him in person.

ACT II. SCENE 1.

Aeschinus has forcibly carried off the music-girl from Sannio's house, and brings her now to his own home, where he places her in his brother's hands. He is followed by Sannio, between whom and Aeschinus a dispute ensues, resulting in the entire discomfiture of the slave-dealer.

This is the scene taken from the Συναποθηθόσκούτες of Diphilos. Cf. Prol. 6-11. On this question see the Dz.-Kauer ed. of the Adelphoe, pp. 10 ff.

155. Aeschinus is accompanied not only by Bacchis, but by Parmeno and perhaps Storax. Parmeno is evidently one of the seruoli mentioned in vs. 27, who are now returning home with their master. Sannio calls aloud as he enters the stage immediately behind the rest. obsecro, populares, etc.: similar to the appeal of Trachalio in Plaut. Rud. 615 ff. Such appeals to the citizens were made by persons seeking protection from acts of open violence. For populares see on Phorm. 35.

156. nunciam: on And. 171. illico: on And. 514. hic: i. e. before the door of Micio's house. This vs. and the next are said, by way of encouragement, to the music-girl, who casts fearful glances at the leno, and is generally disturbed by the whole proceeding.

158. istam : sc. tangam.

159. non . . . uapulet, “he will not under any circumstances take the chance of a second thrashing.” hodie umquam : on Phorm. 1009 (hodie); cf. n. on 551. iterum : the first beating took place at Sannio's own house, when Aeschinus abducted the music-girl; see 89 f.

160. ne . . . dicas : to be taken with leno ego sum, rather than audi; but the proposition on which the clause logically depends is understood — e. g. ‘I wish to inform you,’ or the like. Sannio is anticipating the trial of his case in court, where he expects to establish the strict integrity of his “character.”

161. leno, “slave-merchant”—a word that for Aeschinus at least includes all that is bad; hence he interrupts with scio, “no doubt.” But Sannio's only point is that, though a slave-dealer, he is an honest one, a fact that would secure him a fair hearing in the courts. at ita, etc., “but yet I am one of as strict integrity as any man has anywhere been (found to be).” fide optuma : abl. of quality. fidē : see Introd. § 91. quisquam : used because the sentence is virtually negative; “no man has anywhere been (found to be) of stricter integrity (than I).”

162. tu quod, etc. : on And. 395.
163. huius : monosyllable, and said δεκτικῶς (with a gesture). The genitive denotes indef. value = "that much." faciam : fut. indic. ius persequar : i. e. in a court of law. Cf. n. on And. 815.
164. re : on And. 824.
165. nolle factum : sc. esse ; "I would it had not happened." The impf. tense implies that the speaker would mend matters if he could, but that he cannot. So Phorm. 796 nolle datum (see note).
166. quom . . . slm : on Phorm. 23. Transl. "(and this you will do) although I have been treated (meantime) in shameful fashion." For a different explanation of this passage see Knapp in Class. Rev. vol. xxi. p. 45.
167. abi prae : Aeschinus makes no answer to Sannio, but gives orders to one of his seruoli to open the door of the house. prae is adv. and postpositive, with verbs of going, in Plaut. and Ter. Cf. And. 171, Eun. 499, 908. hoc : i. e. Sannio's recent protestations. nili : for the case cf. n. on huius (163).
168. Aeschinus ignores Sannio's question and directs the girl to enter the house. Sannio plants himself before the door for the purpose of blocking the way. This renders it necessary for Aeschinus to resort to extreme measures. enim : on Phorm. 983 and And. 91. illuc : i. e. in the direction of the spot where Sannio is standing.
169. nimum, "too far." Istuc, "that way," i. e. in the direction of the place where you now stand. propter hunc, "close by this fellow," i. e. by Sannio. em : on And. 416.
170. quoquam, "in any direction." demoureas: for the subj. see A. & G. 450 and 565. Note 1.; H. 565. 4.; G. 271. 2 (first example).
171. Cf. the situation in Plaut. Rud. 731 f.
172. istuc ergo ipsum, "that very thing," which you suggest. ergo lends emphasis. experiri : sc. eum (i. e. Parmeno). em, serua, "there, take that" ; addressed to Sannio at the instant when Parmeno, in obedience to a sign from his master, has given the slave-dealer a stout blow on the cheek.
173. geminabit, "he shall repeat it," i. e. the blow. Parmeno mistakes this for an order and strikes again.
174. in istam partem, "in that direction," in which you have already erred (istam), i. e. in the direction of excess.
175. i nunciam : said to the girl, who, released from the leno's grasp and accompanied, perhaps, by Parmeno, hurries into the house. regnum, "absolute power," "the rights of a monarch." Cf. n. on Phorm. 405; Sall. Iug. 31 impune quaelibet facere, id est regem esse. hic : i. e. in Athens, where, as Donatus says, it was a crime to wish to be a king (τύραννος).
176. ornatus esses, "you would have been decked out"; ironical. Cf.

n. on 166. Cf. also Heaut. 950 ; Plaut. Capt. 997 incedit huc ornatus haud ex suis uirtutibus.

177. rel., "business."

178. ferres infortunium, "you would (now) come badly off," "you would be smarting (this very moment)." Cf. And. 610 ; n. on Phorm. 1028.

179. qui, "how"; on And. 53. magis: i. e. quam mihi licet tui quicquam tangere. meam: sc. ancillam; "my property."

180. conuicium, "abuse," "a row." The reference is to the charge of misconduct implied in 178-179. Aeschinus cannot answer Sannio's questions; hence he resorts to threats of violence.

181-2. intro abripiere . . . operiere loris, "you shall be carried off into the house and there you shall be covered with thongs till you are half dead." loris liber: only slaves could legally be whipped. sic erit: on Heaut. 1014. Cf. Phorm. 801.

183. o hominem: on And. 769. inpurum: a very strong word; "infamous." Cf. 281, 360, Phorm. 83. libertatem: Athenian citizens made boast of their equality before the law.

184. debacchatus: on 152. Transl. "if you have quite raved your fill now," i. e. "have ceased raving." si uis: usually contracted into sis. See on Heaut. 369.

185. autem: an emphatic particle, esp. with pronouns, and often in lively questions. Cf. n. on Heaut. 251. See Ad. 934, 940, 950.

187. aequi modo aliquid: sc. dicas; "provided you say something fair." uah: on And. 589.

189. periurus: contrast fide optima (161).

190. nam: elliptical and corroborative; "(not yet) for." See on And. 43. etiam: temporal. illuc . . . coepisti refers to 186. quo is not for unde, but = "whither," "to the place where," as in Hec. 194 (see note).

191. minis uiginti: about $375. Cf. n. on Phorm. 410. quae . . . male: the opposite of quae res bene uortat. See App.

193. namque: elliptical and causal; "(I asked you the question) for." See on And. 43.

194. ego . . . manu, "I formally maintain that she is freeborn," more lit. "through an action for freedom I claim her (as free) by (the laying on of) my hand." adserere manu is a legal phrase signifying to assert the freedom of any one by the symbolical imposition of hands. causa liberalis was an action at law to recover liberty, ἀφαρεστις εἰς ἐλευθερίαν. If it should be proved in court that the girl was a free-born citizen, the leno would be compelled not only to release her, but to pay a considerable fine besides. It is probable that in the play of Diphilos she turned out to be an Athenian citizen. Otherwise Aeschinus would hardly have dared to treat Sannio so roughly; see 198-199. But Terence leaves us in the dark on this point.

for he never again alludes to the matter. The discrepancy may be accounted for as due to contaminatio, which would lead to the neglect of many questions of detail. Cf. n. on 198. With manu cf. mancipium and Fay on Plaut. Most. 1091.

195. uide utrum uis, "consider which you prefer." Note the indicative and see on And. 45 (quid est). meditari, "con over," i.e. by way of preparation for pleading in court. Cf. n. on And. 406.

196. dum : on Phorm. 982 (Strictly, etc.). pro : on And. 237.

197. miror qui : i.e. miror eos qui.

198. domo me eripuit : a fact not mentioned before, and (if the words are to be taken literally) quite foreign to Aeschinus' best interests. But the words need not be taken literally. Aeschinus certainly carried off the girl by force, and this was tantamount to carrying off Sannio, who was bound to protect his property. Cf. n. on 194. We see here, however, a minor inconsistency due perhaps to contaminatio. See n. introductory to Act ii. Scene 3.

199. plus . . . infregit, "he has inflicted five hundred blows and more," or "more than five hundred blows."

200. tantidem emptam = tantidem quanti empta est; "at cost price," i.e. for twenty minae; see 191. tradier : sc. mulierem. See on And. 203 (deludier).

201. promeruit : on And. 139. This entire vs. is ironical.

202. cupio, "I am willing," "I am ready." modo ārgentum : on 40. sed . . . harilior, "but I prophesy you this," "but this is truth that I am telling you"; see on Phorm. 492, and Knapp in Class. Rev. vol. xxi. pp. 46-47. hoc is explained by what follows.

203. dare : for the tense see on Phorm. 532 and And. 379.

204. Donatus calls attention to the perplexities of the situation. If Sannio agrees to a fixed price for the slave-girl he will thereby invalidate his suit for damages, for the suit must be based on the fact of her having been wrested from him by violence. In the event of such an agreement, therefore, Aeschinus would produce witnesses to testify to the compact of sale, but would take his time about the payment of the purchase money. somnium : on Phorm. 874. mox; cras redi : the words of Aeschinus, as Sannio anticipates them. Cf. 233 f. Cf. also Plaut. Most. 579 redito huc circiter meridiem, 654 petito cras.

206. res, "the truth," "the fact." quaestum : i.e. of a slave-merchant; cf. n. on And. 79. occeperis : see App.

207. acciipiunda et mussitanda est, "must be borne in silence." For the derivation of the second verb cf. n. in the Dz.-Kauer ed. of the Adelphoe.

208. frustra . . . puto, "it is vain for the like of me to make these calculations." For puto cf. 796, Eun. 682; n. on Phorm. 718.

ACT II. SCENE 2.

Aeschinus has informed his slave Syrus of the state of the case, and the latter promises to coax Sannio into giving up the music-girl at cost price. Syrus takes advantage of certain complications in Sannio's affairs, which will not brook delay.

209. As Syrus enters the stage from Micio's house he turns and speaks to Aeschinus within. tace: in a tone of assurance; "no need to say more." ipsum: i. e. Sannio. accipiat . . . faxo: the form faxo is constructed with the subj. in Ter., only when the verb precedes it. Cf. 847. See on And. 854 (and 753), Eun. 285, Phorm. 308. bene: with esse actum (210).

210. quod . . . audio, "the fact that I hear"; in apposition with istuc. Cf. 305. See on Phorm. 168.

210-1. te audio nescio quid concertasse cum ero, "I hear that you have had something of a set-to with my master." nescio quid generalizes and therefore weakens. See on And. 340.

212. certationem comparatam: an expression borrowed from the language of the arena. Transl. "I never saw a contest more unfairly matched."

213. usque, "quite."

214. tua culpa: abl., as appears from Eun. 980, Hec. 228. quid facerem: deliberative; "what was I to do?" adulescenti morem gestum oportuit, "you ought to have humoured the young man." See on And. 641, Hec. 599, Eun. 188. Cf. Ad. 218, 431, 708. For the tense of gestum (esse) see on And. 239 (praescisse). For gestum (impers.) see on And. 239 (communicatum oportuit). Cf. Heaut. 200.

215. "How could I have humoured him more, (I) who already have gone to the extent of presenting my face (to his blows)?" qui . . . praebul: virtually causal; for the mood cf. 262-263 qui transtulit, and Eun. 293 qui amisi. hodie: on Phorm. 1009. Syrus now comes to the matter he has in hand.

216. in loco: on Heaut. 537. Cf. 994. n. neclegere, "to deem of slight importance." hui, "pshaw!" Cf. n. on And. 474.

218. adulescenti esses morigeratus, "(if) you had given in to the young man." See on And. 641, Eun. 188.

219. ne . . . faeneraret: sc. se; "that it (istuc) would not bring you substantial profit." faenero more often means 'to lend on interest.' See on Phorm. 493.

220. rem, "your fortune." See on 95. abi: contemptuous; "go to," "be gone." See on Phorm. 994.

221. istuc: i. e. "your opinion," "your way of looking at it." numquam . . . fui, "I never attained to such a pitch of cunning."

222. mallem potius: the doubling of the comparative is for emphasis, as in And. 427, Hec. 738. in praesentia: on Hec. Prol. 24. Cf. Heaut. 962, Phorm. 779.

223-4. "Come, I know your mind : as if twenty minae were of any account to you, provided you gratify him (i. e. Aeschinus)! Besides, the rumour is current that you are on the eve of your departure for Cyprus." Vs. 223 = I know you better than you know yourself ; your bark is worse than your bite. But see App. iam usquam (ironical) = in ulla aestimatione. Cf. τοῦτον οὐδαμοῦ λέγω, 'I account him nowhere,' i. e. 'as naught' (Soph. Antig. 183) ; cf. also Eun. 293.

224. proficiisci: on 203 (dare). hem here expresses surprise; "what?" Cf. n. on And. 416 (em., serua).

225. nauem conductam, "that a ship has been engaged." In Plaut. and Ter. the nauis conducta or "chartered boat" is not an uncommon means of travel, although more often the traveller goes abroad in his own boat. See Knapp in Class. Phil. vol. ii. pp. 303-304. hoc scio, "so much I know." But hoc may be abl. (= "on this account") and dependent on pendet. scio will then be parenthetical.

226. animus tibi pendet, "your mind hangs in the balance," "is all in a whirl," i. e. you don't see things aright; you have a wrong view of your dealings with Aeschinus. hoc ages, "you'll attend to this business"; the fut. indic. has the force of a command.

227. nusquam pedem : sc. feram; "in no direction will I stir a foot." Cf. And. 808. Having repulsed Syrus with this remark, Sannio steps to one side and talks to himself until vs. 235.

227-8. timet . . . homini is said aside. scrupulum: on And. 940 and Phorm. 954. Cf. Plaut. Most. 570 pilum iniecisti mihi, and Fay's note. homini = ei; cf. n. on 154. scelera : acc. Cf. 304 : n. on And. 869.

229. ut, "how." articulo : sc. temporis. Cf. Cic. Pro P. Quinct. 5. 19 ut eum . . . in ipso articulo temporis astringeret. oppressit : sc. me. For the indic. see on 195 and note further that ut . . . oppressit here is an independent exclamation. The exclamation and the question alike can most easily be counted independent in connection with an imperative, and it is just there that most examples of the indicative in so-called dependent questions (exclamations) occur in Plautus and Terence. emptae : sc. sunt.

231. ad mercatum, "for a market," "fair." For other references to fairs see Phorm. 837-838 and Knapp in Class. Rev. vol. ii. p. 23. note 2.

232. hoc : the transaction with Aeschinus. agam : said with thought of hoc ages (226). See on Phorm. 419.

233. refrigererit res, "the matter will have grown cold," i. e. it will be useless to pursue it.

233-4. nunc . . . eras : the words of Aeschinus and his friends, perhaps also of the judges in the law-court, as Sannio anticipates them. Cf. n. on 204 (mox, etc.).

234. quor passus es, "why did you allow it?" i. e. allow the girl to be taken from you, and to remain so long in the young man's possession. ubi eras, "where have you been meanwhile?" perdere, "to bear the loss."

235. persequi : sc. iustus; cf. n. on 163.

236. "Have you now counted up that which you reckon will accrue to you?" i. e. from your voyage to Cyprus. putes : the subjunctive is not that of indirect question; so id quod proves. It must then be a rather subtle use of oratio obliqua; e. g. "which will accrue to you, as you imagine?"

237. hocine incipere : on And. 245. Cf. Ad. 38.

238. per oppressionem, "by force," "violence." ut . . . postulet : a cl. of result, explanatory of hoc in the second hocine (237).

239. labascit : said aside. Syrus knows this because of the leno's bluster. unum, "one proposal."

240. uenias : on 110 (faceret) and And. 798 (uiueret).

241. seruesne . . . totum depends on periculum. diuiduom face, "cut the sum in two." Cf. Plaut. Rud. 1408 diuiduom talentum faciam. For face see on And. 680.

242. Syrus takes advantage of the signs of weakness shown by Sannio in 237-238, and goes so far as to hint that one half of the cost price will be enough for him. He does this that Sannio may be not only willing but glad to part with the girl for twenty minae; cf. 209-210. minas decem : nearly $187.50. See on 191.

243. etiam : intensive, with a prepositional phrase. See Kirk in A. J. P. vol. xviii. p. 32. vi, and p. 33. vii. 1. sorte, "the principal," i. e. the twenty minae which Sannio himself had paid for the girl. Cf. Shak. Mer. of Ven. Act iv. Scene 1, 'Shall I not barely have my principal?'

244. labefecit, "has loosened."

245. colaphis : on 199. tuber, "one big swelling."

246. etiam insuper, "besides." See A. J. P. vol. xviii. p. 29. Cf. n. on And. 940. defraudat : because Aeschinus has already offered (192) the cost price of twenty minae.

247. num . . . abeam : lit. "do you want anything, on account of which I shall not take my departure (or 'to hinder me from taking, etc.')?" See on Eun. 191. Syrus makes a show of taking his leave, in order to obtain Sannio's consent to his proposal by an appearance of indifference. immo . . . quaeso, "yes indeed (I do want something), I have to beg this of you." See on And. 201. hoc anticipates the request made in vs. 249.

248. ut ut, "in whatever manner." potius quam litis sequar, "rather than engage in a law-suit." See on 240. For other instances of appreciation of the uncertainty of the law, cf. And. 811, Phorm. 408.

249. meum mihi reddatur, "that my bare due be paid to me," is explanatory of hoc (247). saltem, "at all events." Sannio now begs for the cost price (tantum reddatur quanti emptast), seeing that Aeschinus is unwilling that he should make a small profit on the transaction. Syrus has now accomplished what he promised Aeschinus to do for him, in 209 f.

250. antehac : on And. 187.

251. dices : i. e. if you intercede for me with your master, "you shall say," etc. sedulo : on 50. We may suppose that Syrus here accepts Sannio's bribe.

252-3. sed . . . amica: Syrus says this aside, and at the same time turns from Sannio toward Ctesipho, whom he sees coming from the forum.

253. quid quod te oro, "what about my request?"

ACT II. SCENE 3.

Ctesipho, having heard that his brother has rescued the music-girl for him, comes to express his joy and gratitude. It is distinctly implied in this scene that Ctesipho had no hand in the abduction of the girl, whereas in 355-356 the contrary is affirmed. The discrepancy may be owing to the contaminatio. Cf. n. on 198.

254. Ctesipho enters from the right, soliloquizing. quiuis (= quouis) is an indefinite pronoun. qui is an old abl. form as in 179, And. Prol. 6 (where see n.).

255. id demum iuuat, "that especially is delightful." quem : rel., and subject of facere. The reference is to persons who, through kinship or the like, stand under special obligation to serve one, as Aeschinus stands to his brother Ctesipho.

256. o : on 260. frater frater : on And. 282 (Mysis Mysis). The repetition indicates that Ctesipho is speaking under the influence of deep feeling (of gratitude).

257. This sentence depends logically, though not syntactically, on scio in 256 (parataxis).

258. rem praecipuam, "special distinction," "special advantage."

259. homini nemini : on Eun. 549 ; cf. Phorm. 591. artium, "qualities." principem is in effect a noun ; "a master of, etc." ; or else principem = potentem. For the gen. of the thing with principem cf. Cic. Verr. 5. 1. 4 flagitiorum omnium uitiorumque princeps. The infin. (with subject acc.) in this vs. is due to arbitror. Vss. 258-259 are about equivalent to hoc itaque modo dicam fratrem homini nemini esse, etc.

260. o with the vocative always expresses good feeling, or affection.

See on And. 267, 318; cf. esp. Ad. 268, 269, 256. Scan Aeschinūs | ubiſt ēllum. See Introd. § 91 (top of p. 58.). ellum, “there he is”; Syrus points toward the house of Aeschinus. Cf. ellam intus (389). See on And. 855. hem here denotes joy. Cf. n. on 224 and And. 416 fin.

261. sit: on 84, And. 191, 282. caput, “fellow”; on And. 371.

262. qui: for the gender see A. & G. 280. a.; n. on And. 607. post, “of secondary importance”; with esse, not putarit; but cf. Hec. 483.

263. laborem: on And. 720. peccatum: always of a single act—here the forcible abduction of the music-girl. transtulit: for the indic. cf. n. on 215.

264. nil . . . supra: on 96 (nullum . . . factum). For pote see on And. 437, and App. to Phorm. 387. quid nam: on And. 321. foris: the sing. of the third decl., used esp. in this expression. See on And. 580. crepuit: on And. 682. mane: it was Ctesiphō's intention to enter the house, but Syrus detains him with the information that it is his brother who is coming out. foras: on And. 580.

ACT II. SCENE 4.

Aeschinus now returns, as he promised in 196, to settle matters with Sannio, and to see his brother as well (see 266). Aeschinus chides Ctesiphō for his lack of courage. Sannio receives assurance that he will be paid for the slave-girl, whom he is now willing to part with at cost price. Ctesiphō is desirous of keeping the whole matter a secret from his father, and is encouraged by Syrus to make the best of the situation.

265. me quaerit: Sannio recognizes himself at once as the sacrilegus—a comic touch like that of the leno in Plaut. Pseud. 974. quid, “anything,” i. e. any money.

266. opportune: on 81. quid fit, “how goes it?” “how are you?” like quid agitur? in 883, 373, 901, etc.

267. omitte uero, “pray lay aside.” tristitiem = tristitiam; the archaic form is preserved only in the Codex Bembinus. Thus also nequitiem in 358 and Heaut. 481. Cf. And. 206 segnitiae.

268. qui . . . habeam: on 66. Cf. 368. o: on 260.

269. amplius: on Phorm. 457.

270. id: object of facere. adsentandi, “to flatter you.” The genitive of the gerund, expressing purpose, not uncommon in the writers of the Silver Age, is rare in the early Latin, and may be explained in this case as due to direct imitation of the Gk. infin. with τοῦ, which Ter. found, presumably, in his original. Cf. Tac. Ann. 2. 59 Germanicus Aegyptum proficiuntur cognoscendae antiquitatis. Cf. A. & G. 504. a. Note 1. quam quo: see G. 541. Note 2 (and top of p. 341), and Note 1. The vs. = ne id me facere existumes, non quia habeam gratiam sed quod adsentari uolo; cf. 825 non quo . . . sed quo. gratum, "acceptable"; cf. Cic. Tusc. 5. 15. 45 id gratum acceptumque habendum (est), and Eun. 275. facere: sc. me. See on And. Prol. 14.

271. inepte: vocative as in And. 791; Eun. 311, 1007; Phorm. 949. norimus = nouerimus; pf. subj. The i in the ending of the pf. subj. was originally long. See Dz.-Hauler on Phorm. 772 gesserimus; cf. Plaut. Bacch. 1132 uenerimus. nos inter nos: cf. Heaut. 511.

272. hoc dolet: on Phorm. 162. rescisse, "learned of the matter." rem: see App.

272-3. rem . . . redisse ut: cf. Heaut. 359-360.

273. nil: on 142. tibi . . . auxiliarier: this would have proved to be the situation had Ctesipho left the country (see 275), or had Sannio taken the girl to the slave-market at Cyprus and sold her there.

274. pudebat: sc. me; "I was ashamed," i. e. to acknowledge it.

275. e patria: sc. te fugere. Ctesipho had contemplated leaving the country. Cf. Heaut. 117. n. See on 385, and cf. Knapp in Class. Phil. vol. ii. p. 283. Note 1. Donatus says that in Menander's play Ctesipho meditated suicide. turpe dictu: sc. est. See on Phorm. 456.

276. peccauit: i. e. in keeping the matter a secret. quid . . . Sannio: addressed to Syrus. tandem: on 685. iam mitis est, "oh, he is pacified."

277. absoluam: i. e. by the payment of the twenty minae, through a banker, argentarius, whose place of business would be in the forum. Cf. n. on Phorm. 921, 922. tu i intro: see App.

278. insta, "urge the matter on," i. e. press payment of the money. Cf. 247-251. eamus, "let us be off." This, with the reason that follows, is an additional bit of sly knavery, having for its purpose to trick poor Sannio out of his promised compensation. But Sannio heads Syrus off (as in 227), and brings him round to a repetition of the assurance that the money shall be forthcoming. in Cyprum: only the general direction is intended; hence the preposition, which is omitted in 224 and 230. non tam quidem: sc. properat. For tam (= tantum) here cf. Heaut. 1052, Phorm. 998.

279. etiam: temporal with maneo. See Kirk, A. J. P. vol. xviii. p. 27.

280. ut . . . reddat: sc. vide. omne, "the sum in full," i. e. twenty minae. hac: sc. via; cf. Heaut. 684, 832. sequor: Aeschinus departs (to the right of the spectators), and is closely followed by Sannio; but Syrus is detained by Ctesipho, who makes it evident by his anxiety how little accustomed he is to doings of this sort.

281. heus: on And. 635. inpurissimum: on 183.

282. absolutote: the pl. includes Aeschinus. slet: on And. 234.

283. aliqua: sc. via. Cf. Phorm. 585. ad patrem permanet, "should reach (the ears of) my father." perpetuo, "forever," "utterly." The alliteration strengthens. See on Eun. 1043.

285. lectulos (dim. of lectos) ; eating-couches for the intended banquet. See 370, 376 ff. sterni: cf. Heaut. 125. n. cetera, "every thing else," requisite for a feast.

286. transacta re, "when our business in the forum has been put through," i. e. the business of paying off the slave-dealer through a banker. conuortam: Donatus calls particular attention to the 'swagger' in this word. obsonio: those provisions for a banquet which could not, like meal or bread, be kept in the house; particularly fish, and the finer vegetables.

287. Ita quaeso, "yes, I beg of you." hilare: adv. from hilarus. Transl. "let us spend this day in merry-making." Ctesipho enters the house, and Syrus hastens after Aeschinus toward the forum.

ACT III. SCENE 1.

The first and second acts were occupied with the affairs of Ctesipho; the third act now develops the intrigue in which Aeschinus himself is personally involved.

In the present scene, Sostrata expresses to Canthara her anxiety concerning her daughter and her doubts regarding the fidelity of Aeschinus.

Sostrata is a widow and mother of Pamphila. Canthara is an elderly female slave, who had formerly been nurse to Sostrata and is in consequence on terms of great familiarity with her mistress. At the opening of the scene the two women appear from the house of Sostrata.

288. Sostrata is speaking of her daughter's impending accouchement.

289. recte spero: on Heaut. 159. edepol: on And. 229. modo: on And. 173. mea tu, "my dear one"; an apostrophe to Pamphila, whose cries are audible as they come from behind the scene. Cf. Eun. 664. primum, "for the very first time." Cf. 898. See App.

290. adfueris: sc. parienti.

291. neminem: i. e. no relative in a position to render genuine assistance. Geta: the only male slave in the family. Cf. 479-481. See App.

292. nec: sc. adest; but see App. on 291.

293-4. numquam . . . semper: pleonasm. Transl. "he never lets a single day go by without his coming—always." For quin here cf. n. on Heaut. 1007.

295. e re nata: ἐκ τοῦ νεωστὶ συμβεβηκότος, i. e. "after what has lately happened," "under the circumstances"; to be distinguished from pro re nata, "according to circumstances." melius . . . factumst, "it could not have happened more advantageously than it has." The subject of potuit is quod . . . attinet (296).

296. oblatumst : sc. uirgini; see 300. The cl. is subordinate to the following quod-cl. quod : a conjunction. Transl. "the fact that he rather than any one else is concerned."

297. talem : emphatic and general, and explained by the particular characteristics which follow. ingenio : see App. tanta : the family of Aeschinus was one of wealth and standing ; see 502.

ACT III. SCENE 2.

The long-expected Geta now rushes upon the stage from the side of the forum. He has been a witness to the abduction of the slave-girl, and is talking to himself in excited tones about what he presumes to be the faithlessness of Aeschinus. He fails to observe the two women, who with difficulty attract his attention, and elicit from him an account of what has happened.

299. nunc illud est, quom, "now is the time when." See on And. 152. Cf. Plaut. Capt. 516, and Elmer's note there. If quom is taken as explicative here, we may transl. "such is the situation, that." See on Prol. 18. The vs. may be scanned also as a trochaic septenarius. Cf. n. on 309.

301. quod refers to malo. mihique : Geta, as a faithful and confidential slave, includes himself among the unfortunates. For the polysyndeton cf. 64. n. fillae erill : i. e. Pamphila.

302. circumualiant se : lit. "fling themselves as walls around (us)," i. e. "form a circle (about us)." But some editors omit se and supply nos (= me et eram et erilem filiam) ; cf. Caes. B. G. 7.11 id (oppidum) circumuallauit. See App. emergi : intrans. (see Eun. 555) and hence impers. in the pass. But cf. n. on And. 562. potest : the impers. use is frequent in Ter. Cf. n. on And. 861 (quantum potest).

303. solitudo : on And. 290.

304. hocine saeclum, "what an age is this!" See on And. 869. hocine = hoc + ce (strengthening affix) + ne. See on And. 245. o hominem : on And. 769.

305. quid . . . quod, "why, pray, is it that?" See on 210. nam : on And. 321.

306. illum : pleonastic, but due to an unconscious shift from a relative to a demonstrative form of expression.

308. miserae : emphatic, because of its position in the relative clause instead of after instabat.

309. Very commonly scanned as an iambic octonarius, and thus Dz. (1881). Cf. n. on 299.

310. compos animi, "master of myself." The vs. is a good example of parataxis.

311. dari mi obuiam, "be thrown in my way."

312. euomam: cf. 510. See on Hec. 515. aegritudo, "vexation," as in Eun. 552. animi may be understood.

313. "I should regard it, for my own part, as sufficient punishment, if only I might wreak vengeance upon them after my own fashion." mihi: ethical dat., as in Phorm. 1029. For the force of dum with subj. here see esp. B. 310. II. Cf. G. 573; H. 587; A. & G. 528. Note. See App.

314. seni: probably Micio, for Geta would not be literal or exact in his way of speaking. illud scelus: i. e. Aeschinus. produxit, "begat."

315. inpulsorem: a mere guess, and an incorrect one, on Geta's part, yet not out of keeping with what Geta knows of the character of Syrus and the latter's influence with Aeschinus. Cf. Plaut. Most. 899, where Tranio, the slave, says me suasore atque impulsore id factum audacter dico. uah: on And. 589.

316. sublimen: see on And. 861. medium: on And. 133. arriperem, "I'd grab (and lift) him." capite . . . statuerem, "I'd set him head foremost on the ground." in terra: MSS. (except A) have terram. See on 38 (in animo).

318. adulescenti: on Hec. 573. praecipitem darem: sc. eum; "I'd cast him headlong (into the street)." Cf. And. 606, Phorm. 625. n.

319. ruerem, "I'd hurl to the ground"; originally transitive as here, but the trans. use was subsequently confined, for the most part, to the poets. Cf. Heaut. 369; Verg. Georg. 1. 105 cumulosque ruit. Cf. also 550, Eun. 599.

320. reuoemus: Geta: see on Phorm. 848.

321. te ipsam quaerito: see on 81.

322. te exspecto, "it's you I am waiting for." oppido opportune, "most fortuanately." oppido is intensive and colloquial, and frequent in Plautus and in Cicero's Letters. te . . . obuiam, "have you met me."

324. prorsus, "utterly."

325. quid sit: see App.

326. quid is ergo: sc. fecit. But the ellipsis was hardly felt; cf. 325 quid 'iam' Geta? Cf. also n. on 100.

327. qua re: sc. alienus est.

328. neque . . . fert, "nor does he make a secret of it." fert = our idiom "he carries it off." Ipsus: on 78.

329. satine: on And. 749.

330. credas: potential subj.; see B., 'The Latin Language,' 365. a. nostrumne Aeschinum: sc. hoc fecisse; cf. n. on 304.

332. hac: i. e. Pamphila.

333. puerum, "the child"; used of an infant not yet born, whose sex therefore was still undetermined. Cf. n. on And. 400. patris: i. e. Micio.

335. quod . . . opus est: the personal use. Cf. n. on And. 740.

336. au expresses disapproval, protest, as well as surprise and irritation Cf. n. on And. 751, Heaut. 1015. For the hiatus see on And. 769. mi homo: on And. 721. samun = sanusne.

337. hoc: chiefly the fact that Aeschinus is the father of Pamphila's child. proferendum, "ought to be made known"; cf. 339. Cf. also Hec. 107. mi . . . non placet: explained by vss. 338-342.

339. proferimus: for the tense see on And. 404. Cf. n. on 435. infinitias ibit: acc. of limit (goal) of motion; "he will resort to denial." See on Phorm. 1026 (exequias); Roby 1114 (b); B. 182. 5. But cf. G. 333. 2. R. (top of p. 211), where this usage is explained as following the analogy of the cognate accusative.

340. tua fama: i. e. Sostrata's good name, which would suffer because Pamphila had not been more carefully watched and guarded. gnatae uita. Pamphila's shame and grief at being disowned would be so great as to threaten her life.

340-1. si maxume fateatur, "if he should make the very fullest confession," i. e. of his intimacy with Pamphila. hanc: on 332.

342. tacito est opus, "it must be kept quiet." See on Phorm. 584, And. 490. Cf. 601. minume gentium: sc. tacito est opus; see on Phorm. 1033. Cf. 540. n.

343. Sostratā: on Phorm. 865.

344. potis est: on And. 437.

345. indotatast, "she has no dowry." Cf. Phorm. 120, 938. The dowry was essential to the proper settlement of a marriage, and could be waived only through explicit renunciation on the part of the bridegroom or his father. Cf. Plaut. Aul. 257 f. secunda dos, "as good as a dowry." Cf. Hor. Od. 3. 24, 21 f.; Plaut. Amph. 839 ff.

346. uirginē: on 161 (fide). hoc: explained by vs. 347.

347. mecum, "in my possession." anulus: cf. Hec. 574. n. amiserat: sc. Aeschinus (luctando cum puella). Cf. Hec. 574, 829.

348. quando: on And. 818.

349. This verse is explanatory of culpam hanc (348). pretium, "money transaction"; Sostrata and her daughter have nothing in common with the class of meretrices. intercessisse, "has taken place."

350. experiar, "I will go to law." Thus Donatus (Wessner, ii. p. 80), 'apud iudices agam.' quid istic: on 133. cedo, ut melius dicls, "I give in, since your suggestion is better." See App. quantum potes, "as fast as you can," "this very moment."

351. abi ātque Hégioni: on 40. Hegio takes the place of the injured maiden's dead father, Simulus. eiūs: i. e. Pamphila.

352. Simulus = Σιμύλος; perhaps a dim. form of σιμός = "snub-nosed" (cf. Σιμός, Simus, masc. prop. noun, 'Flat-nose,' Anth. P. 6, 310). See Lidd.

and Scott, 7th ed. summus: sc. amicus. Cf. n. on And. 970. Donatus notes that in Menander it is the brother of Sostrata who plays the part of friend and protector at this crisis.

354. ne in mora, etc.: on And. 166. Sostrata enters the house. Canthara and Geta depart in opposite directions, to carry out their respective orders. Geta's path lay in the direction of the forum.

ACT III. SCENE 3.

Demea, during his stay in the city, has heard that Ctesipho had a hand in the abduction of the music-girl. He comes therefore to Micio's house to find the young man—or at least to learn where he keeps himself—and falls in with the slave, Syrus. The latter gives the old man slight comfort, makes sport of his foibles, and parodies his wise saws and maxims.

355. Demea enters from the direction of the forum, in great agitation. disperii: on Phorm. 1011 (distaedet).

356. This is contrary to what is implied in Act ii, Scene 3. See note introductory to that scene. If the discrepancy is not an accidental result of contaminatio, we must suppose that Demea is intentionally represented here as misinformed.

357-8. si . . . potest . . . adducere: sc. Aeschinus. These words are exexegetic of id. Cf. n. on Hec. 571. illum: i. e. Ctesipho.

358. qui aliquoi rei est etiam, “who is good for something, still”; the antecedent is illum. Cf. 854, Eun. 608 frugi es; Plaut. Stich. 718 nulli rei erimus postea. eum takes up illum; thus id in 741 takes up illud. nequitiem: on 267.

359. gāneum: collateral form of gānea.

360. ille inpurus: i. e. Aeschinus. Cf. n. on 183.

361. eccum: on And. 532 (2), 855. ire, “coming”; in later Latin euntem. Cf. And. 580. Syrus is returning from the forum, with the obsonium (286. n.), accompanied by Dromo and Stephanio, two fellow-slaves employed in the kitchen. hinc = ex hoc. scibo, “I shall learn.” For the form see on And. 38.

362. atque: on And. 225. grege, “gang.”

363. quaeritare: on 81. carnufex: on And. 183.

364. omnem rem: i. e. the particulars concerning the abduction of the music-girl. Syrus addresses his remarks, as far as sententia in 371, to his fellow-slaves or to the audience. He appears not to observe that he is overheard by Demea. seni: i. e. Micio, whom Syrus and Aeschinus had met in the forum (154).

365. haberet: sc. res; commonly se is added, as in Heaut. 702, Phorm. 820. See on Phorm. 429. enarramus: the pl. includes Aeschinus. The form is not a contracted pf., as Dziatzko (1881), following Don., argues, but an hist. pres. See Brix on Plaut. Trin. Prol. 14.

366. nil . . . laetius, "never have I seen any one better pleased." For the emphatic pleonasm, nil quicquam, cf. n. on And. 90. For the neut. (as preferred to the masc.) cf. n. on And. 306.

367. hominis: i. e. Micio.

368. qui . . . dedissem: on 66.

369. disrumpor, "I burst with anger"; frequent in Cic. Cf. n. on Phorm. 1011 (distaedet). adnumerauit: i. e. to Sannio.

372. Cf. Phorm. 689, and footnote there.

373. Syrus now turns toward the house, and in so doing sees Demea, as he pretends, for the first time. ehem: on And. 417. quid agitur: see on 266.

374. agatur: on And. 191 (sit). Cf. n. on 84 (fecerit).

375. rationem, "conduct," "doings." ne dicam dolo, "to speak honestly."

Syrus, who sees that he is to be detained by Demea, sends Dromo and Stephanio (380) into the house with directions to guard against any omission in the cooking. purga, "clean." Dromo: on And. 860. A similar situation is depicted in Plaut. Aul. 398 f., Dromo, desquama piscis, etc.

378. tantisper, "for just a little while"; said δεικτικῶς. rediero: i. e. to the house, which, strictly speaking, he has not yet reached. Syrus does not mean that he is going away. exossabitur, "it shall be boned."

379. haecin flagitia: cf. n. on 304. haecin = haecine. See on 304.

380. clamo, "I protest against them." salsamentum was salted fish or meat, of any kind. Stephanio: see App.

381. fac macerentur, "have them soaked." fidem: on And. 237. Cf. Ad. 746. Cf. also 489.

382. "Which is it? Does he (Micio) do it from inclination (i. e. because he likes to do it), or does he think (i. e. does he do it because he thinks) it will be to his credit?" The original meaning of utrum ('which of the two is the case') is here exemplified, since -ne is used to introduce the first, as an the second, of the two interrogative clauses. Cf. Eun. 721. Cf. also Plaut. Capt. 268, Pseud. 688 (with Lorenz's note). Somewhat similar is Hec. 122.

Cf. 465; n. on And. 186, Heaut. 110. non . . . uidere, “not (only) to see what is just before one’s feet.” Note the position of modo. The slave makes a sly hit at Demea’s common failing, and is therefore intentionally obscure. Cf. Soph. O. T. 130 τὸν πρὸς ποσὶ σκοπεῖν. Cf. also Hec. 608.

388. penes uos, “in your possession”; cf. Plaut. Trin. 733 quom eius rem penes me habeam domi.

393. pernimum: on And. 265, 486.

400. quid eum, “what about him?” The acc. is determined by the following uidisti; cf. 656 quid ipsae? quid aiunt? But we might understand narras; cf. 777. Contrast this vs. with 364 non . . . uelle. The professions of Syrus lead Demea to change his mind.

Cf. n. on And. 313. maiorum: for the case see on 96 (huius). suom: a reminiscence of the earlier form (-om, -um) of the gen. pl. of the 2nd decl. So liberum (793). Cf. n. on Phorm. 393. hui and phy in the next vs. are said aside. Cf. n. on And. 474.

429. quid facto usus sit: on Phorm. 584, And. 490.

431. "But what are you to do? As a man is, so must you humour him." Cf. n. on 218. See on Eun. 188, And. 641. geras: for the subj. (jussive) see B. 275. 2.; G. 263. 2. (a). Syrus, though speaking in generalities, is thinking in particular of his master, Micio. His irony is not perceived by Demea.

432. num quid uis, "is there anything you wish of me?" A hint to

Demea that Syrus is about to enter the house. Demea churlishly takes the question, not as a mere form of saying 'farewell,' but literally, in order that he may administer a rebuke. Cf. n. on 247, Eun. 191. mentem . . . darl depends on uelo understood from uis. Demea should have answered, ualeas. uobis : not tibi, for Demea means to include Micio and Aeschinus ; "I wish you all better sense."

433. Syrus is most desirous that Demea should return to his farm, and asks the question in order to make sure of the fact before he goes in doors. recta : sc. via. See on And. 600. nam, "(you do right) for." agas : see B. 277. a.

435. abeo, "I will be off." For the tense cf. n. on Phorm. 388. Cf. 339. n. is quam ob rem = is propter quem. Cf. n. on And. 382 ; see Eun. 145.

436-7. Cf. 130 and 138. de istoc ipse uiderit, "let him look after that fellow himself." istoc : i. e. Aeschinus. uiderit : probably not the fut. pf. indic., as Dz.-Kauer and Fairclough (on Plaut. Capt. 892) take it, but a pf. subj. with jussive force, the pf. tense denoting the peremptoriness of the command.

439. tribulus noster, "my fellow-tribesman" ; Gk. φυλέτης. The Athenians were divided into ten tribes by Clisthenes (Aristotle, Pol. Ath. ch. 21). si satis cerno, "if my sight is true," "if I can believe my eyes." uah here denotes admiration and surprise ; cf. n. on And. 589.

441. ne : on And. 324.

442. antiqua . . . fide : abl. of quality, defining illius modi. Demea had all the characteristics of the laudator temporis acti (Hor. A. P. 173). See on And. 817.

443. See Edwin W. Fay in Class. Rev. vol. xii. p. 297. Transl. "'T would be long ere any evil would come to the state from such a man as he (from him)." haud cito : litotes ; lit. "not quickly." See H. 752. 8 ; A. & G. 641; B. 375. 1. quid : occasionally quis is clearly used at random for aliquis, in exception to the well-known rule of substitution. But see Class. Rev., I. c.

444. etiam here and in 445 is temporal. See on And. 282.

ACT III. SCENE 4.

Hegio, to whom Geta has told his story (cf. 351), is on his way to the house of Sostrata (see 506) where he hopes to find Demea. Demea overhears a part of the conversation in which Hegio and Geta are earnestly engaged, and imagines that it refers to the music-girl. On meeting Hegio he is informed of the truth and urged to do justice to Pamphila.

447. pro : on And. 237.

448-9. ex illan . . . esse ortum : on And. 245.

449. inliberale, "ungentlemanly."
450. "Surely this was not acting in a way worthy of your father," i. e. of Demea. See on 74. For dedisti = fecisti (nearly) cf. Eun. 457, 899.
451. id . . . dolet: on Phorm. 162. illl: i. e. Hegio.
452. pater: Micio, his adoptive father. elus: a monosyllable; see Introd. § 96.
453. hlc: adv.; "hereabouts."
454. illos: i. e. Aeschinus and his family. Hegio means that Aeschinus must marry Pamphila. haud sic auferent, "they shall not carry it off thus." Cf. And. 610. n.; Heaut. 918; Plaut. Pers. 276. sic: i. e. without paying a penalty.
456. tū ēs: the long vowel of tū is shortened before the following vowel. Cf. n. on 97.
457. aenex: Simulus; cf. 352. For a similar situation see And. 284.
458. caue dixeris, "don't speak of it," i. e. of the possibility of my deserting you. For the pf. subj. see G. 272. 2. Remark.
459. satis pie, "with due regard to the ties of kinship"; see 494 cognatus mihi erat.
- 460-1. aaluere . . . lubeo: cf. And. 538. n.
461. oh . . . Demea: the correct order of the two sentences is reversed. Hegio forgets his courtesy for a moment.
462. quid autem: a reply to te quaerebam ipsum. Cf. n. on 404.
464. liberalis, "honourable." Cf. 684; n. on 57, 449. officium: for the case see on Heaut. 580. Cf. Phorm. 282.
465. nostrum, "our," i. e. of Hegio and his particular family and acquaintances. noras = noueras.
466. aequalem, "contemporary," connotes the idea of companionship; cf. Heaut. 417. quid ni: on And. 315. Transl. "of course." Cf. n. on 543 (uerum).
468. etiam amplius: on Heaut. 132.
470. This is also Micio's view, which is in contrast with that of Demea; cf. 58, 687.
471. scit: sc. Aeschinus. Cf. the case of Pamphilus in the Hecyra.
472. ultra, "of his own accord."
473. Cf. 334.
476. bonus: ironical; cf. 556, 722. nobis: on 61. si dis placet: a formula used only of past or present, never of future, events, and employed chiefly when mention is made of matters of an astonishing or unexpected nature. Cf. n. in Dz.-Kauer and in Spengel. See on Eun. 919.
477. quicum = quacum; fem. rel. Cf. n. on 254 and And. 402. uluat: on Hec. 694.

479. in medio, "at hand." Cf. Phorm. Prol. 16, and (for the opposite) 967. res ipsa: i. e. the impending birth of a child.

480. ut seruorum, "as slaves go"; captus = "capacity," "character."

482. abduce: on And. 680. quaere rem, "examine into the truth." See on Heaut. 994, Hec. 773.

483. immo, "nay more," i. e. take stronger measures still than those denoted by vinci. Cf. 928. See on And. 523. extorque, "wrack it out of me." nisi is illogical — much as in Hor Od. 1. 14. 15 tu nisi uentis debes ludibrium, caue.

484. negabit : sc. Aeschinus. coram ipsum cedo, "let me have him face to face." See on Phorm. 914.

486. doloribus : on And. 268. The cries of Pamphila, coming from behind the scene (in Sostrata's house), render any further inquiry on Demea's part unnecessary.

487. The same words are uttered by Glycerium in And. 473. Cf. Plaut. Aul. 692, Truc. 476.

488. num nam : on And. 591. Hegio addresses Geta.

490. The marriage of Aeschinus and Pamphila is meant. uis : sc. legum. See Donatus. Cf. Phorm. 214. uoluntate : i. e. "without sacrifice of her good will (toward you)."

491. uobis: the dat. with decet is archaic. Cf. 928, Hec. 164; Plaut. Amph. 820 nostro generi non decet. The acc. in early Latin is generally accompanied by an infin. expressed (as in 506, 955), or implied (as in And. 421). This vs. = si haec fient ut uobis decet satis habebo; hence sin in 492 is natural and right.

492. Cf. Hec. 637. n.

493. summa ui : i. e. by legal proceedings. illum mortuom : see 457. n.

495. educti : on 48.

497. experiar : on 350.

500. hoc . . . cogites, "see that you reflect on this matter"; the same as 808. Cf. 30, 818; Eun. 64, 636. hoc is anticipatory.

501-4. "In proportion as you live in the greatest ease, in proportion as you are very powerful, etc., so especially ought you, etc." See on Heaut. 997-998. Cf. Plaut. Aul. 236, Sall. Iug. 31. 14. agit = uitam agitis, nearly ; but we are not to suppose an ellipsis of the word uitam. potentes : on Eun. 760. noscere : pregnant, like γνωσκεῖν. See on Heaut. 642.

504. uos : accusative.

505. redito : as Hegio turns to enter Sostrata's house, Demea, who has not yet given him a decided answer (cf. 499), calls him back, and promises to do all that is right.

507. non me indicente, "not without warning from me." Negative in- is compounded with adjectives and the participles of verbs (occasionally with the verbs themselves); in classical Latin seldom with the pres. prtcpl. act. Cf. Phorm. 951; And. 603, 782; Liv. 22. 39. 2 etiam me indicente; but Cic. Fin. 2. 3. 10 etiam non dicente.

507-8. utinam . . . defunctum: impers. pass.; "would only an end might be made of it here!" Cf. n. on Phorm. 1021, Eun. Prol. 15. licentia: i. e. on the part of Aeschinus.

509. euadet: cf. And. 127, 176. n.

510. requiram, "seek," "find." That Demea goes toward the forum for this purpose, not into Micio's house, is shown by 540, to which 512 may be added as corroborative evidence. Cf. 499. euomam: cf. 312. n.

ACT III. SCENE 5.

Hegio has promised Sostrata to take her case in hand, and is leaving her house to go in search of Micio. He speaks a few reassuring words to her as he comes out.

511. bono . . . sis, "be sure you keep up your courage." For this subj. (in a substantive cl. of result) see A. & G. 568; G. 553. 1.; H. 566; B. 297. 1. quod potes: cf. n. on 423, Heaut. 416.

511-2. istam . . . fac consolere, "be sure you comfort your daughter."

514. "If it happens that he intends to do his duty"; see on Phorm. 925, Hec. 501.

516. quid agam: i. e. whether or not I shall bring the case into court. Hegio now departs in the direction of the forum.

ACT IV. SCENE 1.

Ctesiphon, who at the close of the second act had gone into the house of Micio, has been informed by Syrus of the trick played upon Demea to induce him to return to the country. He now steps out from the house in conversation with Syrus. While they are talking Demea appears unexpectedly.

517. abisse rus: on 433. For references to land travel in Ter. cf. Knapp in Class. Phil. vol. ii. pp. 17-18. iam dudum, "some time ago." dic, "tell me about it." sodes: on And. 85.

518. "I believe he is busy at some work or other at this very instant." nunc quom maxume: on And. 823. operis: on Phorm. 363. utinam: sc. faciat, or ita sit.

519. quod . . . fiat: fiat is optative subj. and, as Spengel says, the rel. cl. precedes the idea to which it relates; cf. the formula quod bonum faustum felixque sit (Liv. 1. 17. 10). cum salute eius, "consistently with his safety." Ctesiphon is not wishing for his father's death, as is the young man in the fragment of Cn. Naeuius, Deos quaeo ut adimant et patrem et matrem meos (see Otto Ribbeck, Com. Lat. Rel. p. 20. vs. 95). defetigarit : for the force of de- see on 152 and cf. n. on 184.

520. triduo hoc perpetuo, "for these three days straight away"; abl. of time within which, differing but little from the acc. of duration of time, for which cf. n. on Hec. 87. Cf. n. on 972. prorsum, "at all"; to be taken with what follows.

521. istoc : abl. siqui, "if in any way"; qui is old abl. and indef. potis est : impers. ; on And. 437. rectius, "better." Syrus does not hesitate to wish for the old man's death. ita, "just so"; but Ctesiphon does not grasp the full significance of the slave's remark.

522. misere nimis, "desperately." perpetuom : cf. n. on 972.

523. rus : Demea's farm or country place. Cf. n. on 517. male : intensive ; see on Hec. 337.

524. See App.

525. oppressisset, "would have caught him." illī, "there." Cf. n. on And. 637.

527. mē ubi : on And. 191 (qui amant). uidi : sc. te.

528. nilne in mentem est, "does nothing occur to you?" "Don't you think of anything?" Cf. n. on Heaut. 986. See App. numquam quicquam, "never a thing"; on And. 178. tanto nequor : sc. es; "so much the worse (are you)." Cf. n. on And. 702 (fortis).

530. opera, "your services," i. e. in a court of law or elsewhere. ut, "so that," i. e. "so that (you can say that)." The cl. depends on nemo est uobis (529), which has been modified by sunt and in itself = nonne . . . uobis?

531. interdius : archaic for interdiu; "by day (at the most)."

532. uah : on And. 589. quam uellem mos esset, "how I wish it were the custom," or "how I would it were, etc." etiam adds a second idea ('by night') to the first idea ('by day'); it is purely additory. See Kirk in A. J. P. vol. xviii. p. 31. 2.

533. quin : on Phorm. 486, And. 45. illius sensum, "his disposition," or possibly "his sentiments."

534. feruit, "rages," is a verb of the third conjugation in early Latin; of the second, for the most part, in the classic period. ouem · for the case see on Heaut. 116 (se ipsum); cf. Phorm. 592. Transl. "as gentle as a lamb."

535. per and iubenter are separated by tmesis. See App. facio te deum, "I praise you to the skies."

536. homini : cf. n. on 148. illico : temporal, as in And. 514 and 125; lit. "on the spot," i. e. "at once," "immediately." lacrumae : cf. 409.

537. em tibi autem, "see there now, will you!" For em see on And. 416. Cf. And. 842, Eun. 472. tibi is an ethical dat. For autem see on 185. lupus in fabula: an allusion, as the context shows, to some story or proverb in which the wolf appears unexpectedly, while somebody is talking about him. Cicero (ad Att. 13. 33. 4) says, de Varrone loquebamur: lupus in fabula; uenit enim ad me. Cf. Plaut. Stich. 577.

538. quid agimus, "what shall we do?" For the pres. indic. in deliberative questions see on And. 315. uidero, "I'll look after things"; see on And. 456. Cf. n. on 127, 845.

539. tu me: sc. uidisti. potine = potisne, i. e. potisne est. See on And. 437. Ctesiphon rushes into Micio's house and conceals himself (until 553) just within the doorway. From this point of vantage he observes what is going on and carries on a conversation with Syrus in suppressed tones, until Demea arrives in the immediate neighbourhood.

ACT IV. SCENE 2.

Demea, having failed to find Micio (cf. 510) at the forum, returns to see if he is at his own house (549). He meets Syrus, who dupes him into a second effort to find his brother, and sends him off to a shop at the other end of the town.

540. Demea soliloquizes, not seeing Syrus. ne: on And. 824. nusquam gentium, "nowhere in the world." See on Phorm. 1033, Heaut. 928; cf. Gk. οὐδαμοῦ γῆς.

541. a villa mercennarium: the prep. is used as in English, "a man from the farm." The doubled n of mercennarium (from mercedinarius, mercednarius, "a hireling") is supported, says Spengel, by most MSS. and by Codex B for Plaut. Poen. 503 tuos sum mercennarius.

543. uerum, "yes"; on Phorm. 524. Cf. n. on 466, And. 315 (quid nō). quin . . . es, "come, cheer up." es is imperative; see 533. n.

544. malum: on Heaut. 318. nequeo satis decernere, "I can't really make it out."

545. nisī credo, "save that I suppose." See on 158. hūic rel anticipates ferundis miseriis.

546. Donatus (Wessner, vol. ii. p. 113) calls attention to the ἐπαναφορά, or repetition of the word primus in this and the next vs. primus sentio mala: 'ridiculus error Demeae,' says Don., l. c., and the same is true of the rest of this vs. and the next.

547. obnuntio, "announce bad news."

549. uiso, "I am going to see"; on And. 404. But the fut. is found in Hec. 339, Eun. 545.

550. "I implore you, mind he does not burst right in here." inruāt: cf. n. on 319. For the quantity of the final syllable see on Prol. 25. etiam taces, "will you be quiet?" οὐ μὴ σιωπήσει; See on Phorm. 542. Cf. Kirk in A. J. P. vol. xviii. p. 39. This command, however, repeats that expressed in 543 (quin . . . es). It does this in other words, to be sure, but in words having the same sense.

551. numquam hodile, "under no circumstances"; on And. 178 and Phorm. 1009. Cf. Ad. 159, Hec. 788.

552. Ctesipho now closes the door and withdraws into the inner recesses of the house.

553. age, "well," "all right." eccum: on And. 532, 855. sceleratum: on And. 159.

554. Syrus pretends not to see Demea, but talks in a voice loud enough to be overheard by him—a common device; cf. Phorm. 351–373. hic, "here," i. e. in this family. durare: on Hec. 269. si sic fit, "if things go on at this rate."

556. quid ille gannit, "what is it he is growling (out)?" quid ais: on And. 184. bone uir, "my good fellow"; on 476, And. 616. Cf. Plaut. Capt. 954.

557. For the thought cf. Plaut. Capt. 955–956. Don't 'dear fellow' me, says Syrus.

558–9. pugnis . . . usque occidit, "has pounded almost to death"; cf. 90 mulcavit usque ad mortem.

559. hem: on 260. discidit (from scindo); not discidit (from caedo). Thus Donatus. But Dziatzko (1881), Dz.-Kauer, and Spengel insist on discidit for metrical reasons, which seem to me, however, to be insufficient, although in my former edition of the Adelphoe (1896) I followed Spengel. discidit occurs in 120.

561. produxe = produxisse; see on And. 151 (praescripsi). There is an allusion to 402 qui egomet produxi. albas = aiebas; cf. n. on Phorm. 480. factum: on Phorm. 524. Cf. n. on 543 (uerum).

562. nil pepercit, "he showed (me) no mercy." non puduisse: on And. 245. senem: Syrus, seeking to arouse sympathy, calls himself "a poor old man"; cf. seruolum (566). Syrus is not to be thought of as the typical senex with white hair.

563. modo, "quite lately." tantillum, "only so big"; said δεικτικῶς.

564. laudo: on And. 448. patrissas, "you take after your father," i. e. after Demea himself. For the form see my Adelphoe (1896); cf. n. in Dz.-Kauer. abi: here commendatory, as "go 'way," "that will answer." See on Phorm. 994. Cf. n. on 220. te: i. e. Ctesipho.

565. ne: on And. 324.

566. perquam, "oh, very." See on 393; cf. 567 perfortiter. seruolum, "a poor slave"; the diminutive expresses helplessness, which is emphasized by what follows.

568. potuit: impersonal, in the sense of fieri potuit. Cf. App. on Phorm. 818 and Dz.-Hauler on Phorm. 303. ego: sc. sentio. rei: for the dat. see on Hec. 821. caput: i. e. auctorem; cf. n. on And. 458.

570. hodie numquam: on 551. Syrus pretends to be desirous of preventing a meeting between Demea and Micio, and Demea imagines that Syrus is acting in the interest of Aeschinus. Demea is all the more determined therefore to find his brother, and thus becomes an easy victim to the machinations of the slave. hem: on 224. quid ais: an exclamation of anger at the slave's bold remark; not as in 556. Cf. n. on And. 137. Transl. "what's that you say?" ita: on 543 (uerum).

572. illius homlnis: i. e. the man at whose house or shop Demea may expect to find Micio. Cf. 261 illius opera.

573. hac deorsum, "down this street"; hac = hac uia; cf. n. on And. 600. deorsum is a dissyllable.

574. hac (sc. uia); to be taken with the verb, as in 575, not with recta platea. Transl. "pass this way, straight up the street." platea: on And. 796. sursum: the hiatus is rendered permissible by the pause in the sense. Yet it is not impossible that Ter. wrote sursus. Lucretius used both forms (II. 188 and 189). eo, "thither," i. e. to the end of the street, as indicated by sursum.

575. cliuos deorsum uorsum est, "there is a slope right down before you." hac te praecipitato, "fling yourself down that." Note the play on words: (1) 'hasten, etc.', (2) 'kill yourself'; cf. n. on 318 and And. 606. hac: sc. uia.

576. ad hanc manum: accompanied by an appropriate wave of the hand to the right or the left. angiportum: on Eun. 845, Phorm. 891. proper: adv.; "hard by." With these directions of Syrus cf. those given by Launcelot to old Gobbo in Shak., Mer. of Ven., Act ii. Scene 2, quoted on vs. 574 in my separate edition of the Adelphoe.

577. illi, "there"; on And. 637. etiam, "also," i. e. the fig-tree in addition to the sacellum.

578. uerum: on Eun. 347. uah here denotes vexation; see on And. 589.

579. hominem: i. e. a person with the intelligence of a man; "in my senses." Cf. the same word in 107, 734, 736, 934. Cf. also Hec. 214.

580. erratio, "chance of losing the way."

581. Cratini: Donatus derives Cratinus 'ἀπὸ τοῦ κράτους, id est a potentia,' and adds 'congrue nomen inuenit diviti.' See Wessner, vol. ii. p. 120. huius: said with a gesture in the direction of the supposed residence; "there." Scan as a monosyllable. eas: sc. aedis.

582. hac (sc. uia, as in 574) picks up huius (581). recta platea: sc. ito. See on 574. Dianae: sc. templum. For this common omission cf. Hor. Sat. 1. 9. 35 uentrum erat ad Vestae; the Gk. eis διδασκάλου (sc. οίκον); the

Eng. 'to St. John's.' The word omitted gives regularly the characteristic locality or haunt of the person represented by the word in the genitive.

583. lacum, "pool." Reservoirs of water were constructed near the gates of a city for the use of beasts of burden, and as a safeguard against fire. See Donatus (Wessner, vol. ii. p. 120).

584. pistrilla, "a little mill," for crushing corn, and usually attached to a bakery. exaduorsum: on Phorm. 88. fabrica, "workshop." ibist, "it's there he is."

585. lectulos in sole: couches to be used in the open air; "open-air seats." These were set out on a terrace or balcony or flat house-top, called solarium, and were made of more durable material than those which were kept wholly under cover. ilignis, "of holm-oak"; selected for its durability. dedit = locauit (conlocauit); "he gave a contract for." The loose connection of the words in this verse suggests the embarrassment of the speaker. Strictly speaking we need utendos or the like with in sole, but two gerundives would be awkward; moreover, as Donatus explains, Syrus adds in sole at hap-hazard, in order to lend the appearance of particularity and therefore of probability to his falsehood about the lectuli; then fearing still that Demea may give him the lie (for Micio must have had plenty of such lectuli) he adds further the words ilignis pedibus, which give an air of still greater verisimilitude to his statement.

586. ubl = in quibus. potetis, "may carouse." bene sane: ironical; see on And. 848. Demea hurries away by the lane on the left.

587. hodie: on Phorm. 1009. silicernium, "dry-hones"; or "funeral feast," i. e. fit only to die and furnish occasion for one.

588. Aeschinus odiose cessat, "A. is intolerably late." For -is cf. n. on 260. prandium corrumpitur, "dinner's spoiling." See on 376. cena and prandium were frequently confused.

589. totus, "from top to toe," "head over ears," "steeped."

590. unum quicquid: for unum quidque, as in Plaut. Trin. 881 si unum quidquid singillatim et placide percontabere; thus frequently in early Latin and occasionally in Cicero. See Brix, l. c. bellissimum, "sweetest," "most choice," suggests bellaria = "dainties," "dessert."

591. cyathos sorbillans, "sipping my cups." paulatim, "comfortably," "cosily." producam, "I will spin out," as in Hor. Sat. 1. 5. 70 prorsus iucunde cenam producimus illam, and Martial, 2. 89 quod nimio gaudes noctem producere uino, ignosco. Syrus withdraws into Micio's house.

ACT IV. SCENE 3.

Hegio, who had gone to the forum at the close of the third act to look for Micio (512), now returns with him. He has told Micio the whole story about Aeschinus and Pamphila, and secured from him promises of redress.

592. lauder makes clear the general character of the previous conversation.

594. nisi si credidisti, "you must have imagined." For nisi see on And. 249, Ad. 153. si is redundant. nisi si is sometimes strengthened by forte, as in Eun. 524, 662–663. ita anticipates the following infin. with subject acc.

595. ultro, "wantonly." quam: rel. = iniuriam quam. expostules, "complain of." Cf. n. on And. 639.

596. ultro, "besides."

597. esse: see App. Transl. "I have never imagined you to be different from what you are."

598. uirginis: final syllable long because of the ictus of the verse. See Introd. § 91. eas: on Hec. 754.

599. dixti = dixisti; on 561. mulieri: the same as matrem (598). For the situation cf. Hec. 754 f.

600. This vs. is explanatory of istaec eadem, and is a very brief recapitulation by Hegio of what, it is to be presumed, he has learned in conversation with Micio while walking with the latter from the forum. fratrem: i. e. Ctesiphon. elus points to fratrem. psaltriam: the music-girl carried off by Aeschinus to oblige Ctesiphon. See App.

601. opus est facto: on 342. bene facis, "thank you"; on Heaut. 1054. Cf. 604, 970. See App.

602. Illi: i. e. Pamphila.

603. officium: on 464.

604. immo ego ibo, "no, I will go in person." See on And. 523.

605–6. quibus, etc. = quanto eis res sunt minus secundae, tanto magis sunt ei . . . suspiciosi.

606. ad contumeliam, "in the light of an affront." accipiunt magis, "they are inclined to regard."

607. inpotentiam, "helplessness."

608. "Wherefore that you should make the explanation to her yourself, in a personal interview, is the better way to appease them." te ipsum is the subject of purgare, the object being understood, e. g. quaefacta sint (i. e. the apparent desertion of Pamphila by Aeschinus). ipsi: i. e. Sostrata; see on Hec. 254 (uobis). coram: on 484. placabilius est: on Heaut. 204–205 (tolerabilitas). Cf. n. on Phorm. 961.

609. et recte et uerum: note the combination of adv. and adj. (noun), and cf. Plato, Phaedo 79 D, καλῶς καὶ ἀληθῆ λέγεις. intro: i. e. into the house of Sostrata.

ACT IV. SCENE 4.

Aeschinus now returns from the forum (see 277), and turns over in his mind the critical character of the situation. It is evident that Sostrata and Pamphila have heard about the abduction of the music-girl, and believe him to be false. Yet he cannot explain without disclosing his brother's secret. Finally he decides to go to Sostrata's house and make a clean breast of the matter. He is interrupted in this laudable undertaking by the unexpected appearance of his adoptive father.

610. discrucior : on Phorm. 1011 (distaedet). anlmi : on Hec. 121. hocine, etc. : on And. 245. obici = obiici; hence the first syllable is long. tantum : emphatic; "this evil, so great as it is."

611. quid me faciam, "what I am to do with myself"; more freely, "what will become of me." See on And. 143 and 709. Cf. n. on Hec. 668. quid agam : more general in meaning than quid faciam.

612. membra . . . sunt: cf. Verg. Aen. i. 92 Aeneae soluuntur frigore membra.

613. obstipuit: cf. And. 256, Phorm. 991. nil consili, "no plan of action."

614. uah here denotes despair; see on And. 589. turba, "confusion," "embarrassment."

615. de me indicates the source of the suspicion; cf. n. on And. 859. incidit : sc. eis (dat.), i. e. Sostrata and the rest, who entertain the suspicion; cf. And. 501 tibi istaec incidunt suspicio.

617. hance : see App. anus : Canthara, the nurse. anus is usually an elderly woman of inferior rank or condition, matrona an elderly lady. The latter can be called anus only in a slighting way, as in 939. Cf. Hec. 281, 621. id indicium fecit = id indicauit; see on And. 157, Hec. 546.

619. Scan Pámphitá | quid agót; see on 598. iam partus adsiet, "whether her delivery is already at hand." To make good the omission of the interrogative particle, Dziatzko conjectures partusne or partun. See n. in Dz.-Kauer.

620. eou = eone; "whether for that reason." abi : on 220.

621. dedisti uerba, "you have imposed upon us." Cf. n. on And. 211, Eun. Prol. 24. tua . . . fides, "our trust in you has deceived us."

622. ualeas: repellent; "away with you," or even like our "farewell" as sometimes used. Cf. n. on And. 696; Gk. χαλπειν λέγω.

623. id : i. e. mihi . . . emisse (617).

624. garrulae illi, "to that chatter-box," "tell-tale." ac fieret palam, "and (the secret) should be made public." The sudden change of subject is a colloquialism. palam is virtually an adj. = "evident," "open." Cf. n. on 71.

625-6. quod . . . ecferri, "a matter that must by no means get abroad anywhere"; opus est with subject nom. is probably an earlier use than that with the abl. See B., 'The Latin Language,' 341. 2.

626. ac mitto, "well, I'll let that pass." See on Phorm. 232. fieri . . . exeat, "arrangements can be made to keep the matter from leaking out anywhere." potis est : impersonal; cf. n. on And. 437. ut ne (or ne) always expresses negative purpose, but the universality of this law is not admitted by all grammarians. Cf. Dräger, Hist. Synt. II. 291-292. See however B., 'The Latin Language,' § 385 fin. Thus also Hec. 839, and And. 699 (where Fairclough must be mistaken in explaining ut ne as = ut non).

627. id ipsum : object of credant. Aeschinus fears that he will not be believed by Sostrata and Pamphila if he explains the truth to them regarding the music-girl, so greatly are appearances against him. tot . . . similia : i. e. so many circumstances combine to give colour to the assumption that I carried her off for my own sake, and not for Ctesiphon's.

629-30. non me . . . indicasse : on And. 245. hanc rem : i. e. his relations with Pamphila, not the abduction of the music-girl.

630. ut ut erat gesta, "bad as it was," lit. "however it had been done." Cf. n. on Heaut. 200. exorassem, etc., "I'd have got his permission to marry her," if I had asked for it. That is, I was a fool not to tell him, for I could so easily have obtained his consent to my marriage.

631. cessatum . . . est, "procrastinating have I been up to this moment." nunc . . . expurgiscere, "from this instant, Aeschinus, rouse yourself!"

633. pultare : on And. 682 (concrepuit). hasce : sc. fores.

634. heus : on And. 635. Aeschinūs : on 588 and 598. aperite aliquis, "open some one." Instances of this combination of aliquis with a plural verb are numerous in Plautus; cf. Pseud. 1272 and Lorenz's note.

635. huc : on Heaut. 174.

ACT IV. SCENE 5.

Micio, who, in company with Hegio, had gone into Sostrata's house (609), says a few words to Sostrata as he comes out. He then falls in with Aeschinus and endeavours to test his loyalty to Pamphila by means of a little bit of strategy. He is pleased to find Aeschinus faithful, and assures him that he shall be married. Aeschinus is overcome with gratitude. This scene begins within the limits of vs. 635; see on 958.

636. facite : Micio may be supposed, in view of subsequent events, to have bidden Sostrata be of good cheer, and make ready for the marriage of her daughter. haec : matters which have been the subject of conversation between Sostrata and Micio.

637. quis . . . pultauit : said aside. Why Micio should be in doubt regarding the identity of the person who knocked, it is difficult to say. We may suppose that Micio, being in conversation with Sostrata, failed to catch the words of Aeschinus when the latter called aloud his name (see 634); or else that Micio is mischievous here, as he is later on, and pretends that he does not know who knocked. In the latter case the words are meant to be overheard by Aeschinus. For pultauit see on And. 682 (concrepuit).

637-8. Aeschinus speaks aside.

638. pepulisti: much the same as pultare. Cf. 788. fores: on And. 580.

639-40. Said aside. melius est, "it is just as well," or "he deserves it."

640. It is the concealment of the fact from his father, rather than the deed itself, that causes Micio annoyance, for it upsets the latter's pet theory of education as set forth in vss. 52-56. Cf. 629-630.

641. respondes: on Eun. 851. istas: sc. pepuli. quod sciam, "so far as I know"; see A. & G. 535. d.

642. ita, "so?" "really?" "yes?"

643. erubuit, "he blushes," lit. "he has become red." Cf. n. on And. 878 (pudoris signum). salua res est, "the situation is saved," "it is all right." Micio's doubts as to his son's honourable intentions are now dispelled. He is moreover assured of the young man's shame at having concealed from him the story of his love affair. Cf. 827-828 in loco uereri. dic sodes, "tell me, I entreat you"; said with considerable earnestness.

646. aduocatum: on Eun. 340.

647. pauperculae, "in poor circumstances"; as in Heaut. 96.

648. ut opinor, etc.: a mixture (fusion) of two constructions (ut opinor, eas non nosti, and opinor eas non nosse te). Cf. n. on Phorm. 480-481 (ut aibat, etc.). et, "or rather."

649. enim: on And. 91.

651. illi: i. e. uirgini.

652. leges: the Attic law, in the case of a maiden who was an orphan and portionless, seems to have favoured her marriage with her nearest male relative (ἀγχιστεύς: see Diod. Sic. xii. 18. 2, 3), or else to have compelled the latter to endow her according to his means. But the Attic law was not entirely clear — a fact remarked by Aristotle (Αθην. πολιτ. 9. 2). A partial recital of it, as it stood in the time of the New Comedy, is given in Phorm. 125-126. Cf. n. on And. 71. The law undoubtedly had particular reference to the έπικληροι, i.e. only daughters and heiresses. Cf. The Book of Numbers, xxxvi. 8. See Dz.-Hauler on Phorm. 125. perii: said in a tone of despair.

653. recte, "all right!" Cf. n. on Heaut. 518, 228.

654. Mileti, "at Miletus"; an Ionian colony in Asia Minor. An Athenian citizen might reside in a colony and still be subject to Athenian law.

655. ita: on 287. animo male est, "I am losing my senses"; said aside. animo is dative.

656. ipsae: i. e. mulieres (647). illæs: sc. dicere. Cf. And. 853. n. nihil enim, "nothing, of course"; on Hec. 850. The women agreed to it eventually, though an objection was made at first (657 ff.).

658. neque: adversative; "but . . . not." Cf. similar use of oīdē.

659. priorem esse illum, "that he has the prior right," to the girl. illum points to the alius uir (of 657), who of course is Aeschinus. hūic: i. e. the Milesian.

660. "Do not these demands seem to you to be just?"

662. quid . . . ni: separated; cf. n. on Heaut. 529, Ad. 466. For the subj. cf. H. 557; A. & G. 443 and 445.

663. etiam: purely additory according to Kirk, who cites this passage in A. J. P. xviii. p. 31, 2), but etiam here seems to be rather intensive than additory, atque etiam = "and even," "and indeed." Cf. Kirk, l. c. p. 32. vi. If, however, Kirk is quite right, etiam here assists atque in adding inliberaliter (664) to duriter inmisericorditerque, and is pleonastic. Cf. n. on 532.

664. inliberaliter, "ungenerously"; cf. n. on 449.

665-6. quid, etc., "what, pray, do you suppose will be the feelings of that wretched man who was the first to consort with her?" tandem: on

685. animi: partitive gen. with quid, as in Eun. 1015. illa consueuit: the omission of cum is unparalleled. See App.

667. haud scio an, "perhaps"; on And. 525.

668. quom, etc., modifies quid . . . creditis fore animi. sibi praesens praesenti eripi, "snatched from him in his very presence." See App.

670. qua ratione istuc, "how so?" despondit: sc. eam adulescenti. A formal betrothal was usual then, as is the case now in some countries, e. g. in Germany.

671. quoi quando nupsit: two distinct questions; "to whom was she wedded, and when?" auctor, "consenting witness"; such as a parent or guardian, who must give his consent to the marriage to render it legal.

672. alienam, "a stranger," i. e. a person whom his father had not selected for him, and whose family was in no way associated with his own. Cf. Phorm. 582. But aliena may mean 'one who is affianced to another by law,' "another man's bride," and have reference to Pamphila as an orphan and compelled under the law to marry her next of kin. Cf. 652. Note the extravagant language here and in the previous vs. There has been no marriage yet, of any sort. sedere, "sit inactive."

673. tam grandem, "so far advanced (in years)"; cf. our colloquial (slang) "so grown up." Cf. 930, Phorm. 362, And. 814. dum: with exspectantem (674). cognatus: i. e. the Milesian.

675. Id is inner acc.; "that's the position you should have maintained." Cf. G. 338; A. & G. 390. c.; H. 409. 1.

676. ridiculum, "absurd!" see on Phorm. 524. dicerem: see A. & G. 444. a. Cf. n. on 691.

677-8. quid . . . nostra: sc. sunt (with Spengel); "what have we to do with these matters?" Those commentators who, like Dziatzko, make nostra abl. with rēfert (understood), fail to account for ista as a plural. Yet if ista is sing. and refers to the girl, the construction becomes irregular, since a pronominal subject of interest or rēfert should be neuter, as in Phorm. 723, or as in 800 and 940 of the same play, where rēfert is undoubtedly understood. Moreover illis includes both women — a fact that renders it unnecessary that ista should refer to either of them.

679. The change of metre is in keeping with the change in Micio's tone, which now becomes serious and confidential.

680. quo magis, "wherefore the more."

681. ita . . . ames, "so truly would I have you love me for my deserts." For the form of this sentence cf. 749-750 ita . . . ament, ut, etc. promerentem: on And. 139.

682. "(So truly) as I am deeply grieved to have been guilty of this fault." admisisse in me: cf. Phorm. 270; Plaut. Amph. 885 quae neque sunt facta neque ego in me admisi. id takes up the previous cl. for the sake of emphasis, the cl. itself (rather than id) being the true subject of dolet. Cf. n. on Phorm. 162.

683. me tui pudet, "I am ashamed to look you in the face." See Heaut. 260; n. on Phorm. 392. Cf. Hec. 793.

684. liberale: on And. 123. Cf. n. on 464, 57. indiligenſ, "reckless," "careless"; cf. socordem (695).

685. tandem, "pray"; often in questions to produce emphasis. Cf. 665, 276.

687. magnum: predicative. See App. Cf. n. on 470.

688. cedo, "tell me"; on And. 150.

689-90. "Did you practise any caution, or exercise any foresight of your own as to what should be done, (or) in what way it should be done?" For the syncopated forms of verbs in this sentence see on 561.

690. qua = qua ratione. The two questions depend on prospexti.

691. qua resciscerem: an independent deliberative question; "how was I to find it out?" Cf. A. & G. 444. Note. With qua understand via or ratione. haec: inner acc.; "while you were thus hesitating." Cf. Hec. 213 perturbes haec.

692. quod . . . fuit: on 423, 511.

693. dormienti, "while you slept"; for the metaphor cf. 631 exper-giscere. Cf. also Heaut. 730; n. on Phorm. 1007. For the spirit of the vs. cf. Heaut. 1038.

695. "I would not have you equally indifferent to the rest of your affairs." For the genitive see Roby 1320 and A. & G. 349. a. and d.; cf. Tac. H. 3. 31 gregarius miles futuri socors.

697. ludis nunc: Micio is not mocking Aeschinus now. Micio ceased at vs. 680 to play with the young man's feelings. But Aeschinus was quite taken in by his uncle's little 'ruse' (see 639 ff.) and begins to suspect the latter's sincerity only when there is no real need to do so.

697-8. nescio: quia, etc.: i. e. I can give you no definite reason, but because, etc.

698. Aeschinus, though brought up with the greater laxity, is really a better boy than his brother; cf. 705, etc.

699. abi domum, "be off home." deos conprecare, "supplicate the gods." According to Servius on Aen. iii. 136, a wife could not be married, nor even a field be ploughed, without preliminary sacrifices. Cf. Phorm.

702. accersas: on And. 546; cf. Heaut. 948.

700. quantum potes: on 350.

701. quam oculos meos = "than my life" (nearly). Cf. 903, and Catullus, 3. 5 passer . . . quem plus illa oculis suis amabat.

702. quam illiam: i. e. than the girl you love; said jokingly, but with the purpose of checking the young man's extravagant way of speaking. aeque, "just as much." perbenigne: sc. dicis; ironical, "you are very kind." Cf. Phorm. 1051. The word was also used as a polite form of refusal, like καλῶς or καλλιστα, or the French 'merci.' Cf. Hor. Epist. 1. 7. 16 and 62.

703. periit: abilit, nauem ascendit, "he has vanished: gone, embarked." The second and third statements explain the first, which is somewhat extravagant. The whole is a playful way of saying that the Milesian was a purely hypothetical personage, who may be summarily dismissed now that he is no longer needed. abi, "go to," denotes satisfaction here; cf. n. on 564.

705. quo, "in what degree," shows that eo is to be understood with magis. The omission is unusual, even in colloquial Latin. For the general idea of this vs. see Plaut. Rud. 22-30, and cf. the way in which, in Hom. Illiad. iii. 340 ff., Menelaus, who prays, defeats Paris, who does not pray. Cf. also The Epistle of St. James, v. 16, 'The effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much.'

706. quae opus sunt: i. e. for the wedding. Cf. n. on 335. ut dixi: i. e. in 699. Micio enters his own house.

707. negoti, "situation." Micio's conduct exhibits none of those stern characteristics usually associated with the patria potestas.

708. qui . . . gereret, "how could he have gratified me more?" Cf. n. on 214, 431.

709. gestandus in sinu est denotes very tender affection. Cf. Cic. Fam.

14. 4. 8 iste uero sit in sinu semper et complexu meo. hem expresses admiration here. It = "I should say so indeed!" or even (the slang) "you bet!"

710. commoditate, "complaisance," "kindness"; cf. n. on Heaut. 521 mulier commoda.

711. ne: on 626 (ut ne). sciens: pregnant; "knowing what I do," "with my present experience"; like Heaut. 1050. The word might be rendered, "carefully."

712. cesso ire? = iam ibo. Hence the following ne, which denotes negative purpose. Aeschinus goes into Micio's house for the purpose indicated in 699. On siem here as against sim see the Dz.-Kauer edition.

ACT IV. SCENE 6.

Demea comes back weary and angry after the fruitless search for his brother, on which Syrus had sent him (569–586). He makes his appearance from that side of the stage which led toward the forum.

713–4. ut . . . luppiter, "may mighty Jove confound both you and your instructions"; optative subj. Cf. Eun. 302; n. on Heaut. 810–811. Cf. also G. 261. cum tua monstrazione: cf. Hec. 134; n. on And. 941. magnus (= μέγας) is suggestive of that might through which the god is enabled 'to destroy the works of the wicked.' Note its juxtaposition with perdat.

715. "I have crawled through the town from end to end." The verb expresses slow and weary movement. Cf. Plaut. Amph. 1011 omnis plateas perreptauit. lacum: on 583.

716. illi, "there"; on And. 687.

716–7. nec . . . homo . . . quisquam: an emphatic pleonasm; see on And. 90. Cf. n. on 366. aibat: on 561. domi: i. e. at Micio's house.

718. obsidere usque, "to stay on and on," more lit. "to make a siege of it."

ACT IV. SCENE 7.

Demea is about to enter the house when Micio comes out. The latter is immediately assailed by his brother with reproaches touching the newly discovered iniquities of Aeschinus, whose intrigue with Pamphila is a more serious matter than the abduction of the music-girl. Micio insists that thugs are as they should be, and urges Demea to put aside his anger and join in the wedding festivities. Demea is inexorable, and gives vent to his rage in a concluding soliloquy.

719. Said, perhaps to Aeschinus, and while Micio is still partly within the house. illis: i. e. Sostrata and her daughter. in nobis moram: on And. 166.

720. eccum ipsum: on And. 532 and 855.

721. fero, "I come to report."

722. boni: on 476. illius: a dissyllable, or = illius. adulescentis:

i. e. Aeschinus. ecce autem, "just see now!" The expression is one of feigned amazement—very ironical. noua, "unheard of."

723. capitalia, "atrocious," lit. "worthy of capital punishment." Festus (p. 48 Müll.) has capital, facinus quod capitum poena luitur. ohe iam ("oh now!" "stop now!") expresses amused depreciation. Cf. 769; Phorm. 418; Hor. Sat. 2. 5. 96, and 1. 5. 12 ohe iam satis est. qui, "what sort of."

724. ah: see App. somnias, "you fancy."

725. ciuem: in emphatic position; "who is a citizen."

726. oho: a monosyllable, expressing astonishment and indignation.

727. clamas: on 380. insanis: cf. our colloquial "to be mad" = "to be angry." malim quidem, "I should prefer in fact (to alter the situation if I could, but I cannot)"; aposiopesis. Micio was, perhaps, about to add 'mutare si queam: nunc quom non queo, sino,' but he is interrupted by his brother, who is eager to unload his grievances. Cf. 738.

728. di bene uortant, "heaven bless it!" uirgo nil habet: i. e. she is indotata; cf. 729, Phorm. 120, 938. See on Ad. 759.

729. scilicet: on And. 950.

730. enim, "of course"; on 656; cf. n. on And. 91. fert: on 53.

731. illinc huc: i. e. from her house to mine.

732. istocene: i. e. istoc + ce + ne; cf. 304 hocine, and n. oportet: sc. fieri; cf. Heaut. 562 itane fieri oportet. quid . . . amplius: Micio humorously misunderstands Demea's previous question. Cf. Simo's pretended obtuseness in And. 954–955.

733. quid facias: for the subj. see on And. 191, 282. ipsa re, "in very fact." Istuc dolet: on Phorm. 162.

734. simulare, "to feign (grief)." est hominis, "is the part of a man (of right feeling)." Cf. n. on 107, 579.

736. magis: sc. quam simulare.

737. placet: on Eun. 851.

738. quom: causal; cf. n. on And. 422.

739. ita . . . quasi: on Heaut. 885. quasi (= ut, or quemadmodum) belongs mainly to early Latin. Thus Lorenz on Plaut. Pseud. 194 f. Cf. E. P. Morris, on Pseud. 199. tesseris: dice were of two kinds, tesserae (κύβοι) and tali (ἀστράγαλοι, 'ankle-bones'). The former were, in their shape and marking, like the dice of modern times. The latter were oblong and rounded at the ends, and were marked only on the four sides. See Plaut. Ouro. 355 f.; Tyrrell on Mil. 164; Marquardt, Privatl. d. Röm. pp. 847–854. See also note on this vs. in my ed. of the Adelphoe (Macmillan & Co., 1896).

740. illud . . . iactu = "the throw most needed." Cf. n. on And. 490. Here the meaning is completed by the supine. But quod may be an adverbial acc. = "in respect to which," and iactu the abl. of iactus.

741. id takes up illud; cf. 358. n. ut corrigas: sc. fac; “see that you set right,” “mend.” arte, “skill,” “stratagem,” as in Hor. Sat. 2. 8. 84 arte emendaturus fortunam.

742. corrector: ironical; “fine mender you!”

743. periere: cf. n. on Eun. 211 (peribit). quantum potest, “without delay”; on And. 861.

744. aliquo, “in some direction,” i. e. “to somebody or other.” abiciundast, “ought to be cast off,” i. e. “ought to be sold.” pretio, “at a price”; probably “at cost price.” gratis, “for nothing.” The constr. is the same as that of pretio. In later Latin this abl. became a dissyllable, gratis, and a mere adverb.

745. est: sc. abiciunda.

746. facies: sc. eā; cf. Micio’s reply. pro, etc.: on And. 237.

747. meretrix: the music-girl, whom Demea still believes to have been purchased for Aeschinus. mater famillas: a term applicable to Pamphila after marriage.

749–50. ita . . . ament: on Phorm. 165. ut . . . ineptiam, according to Spengel and Dz.-Kauer, depends on credo (750); “as (when) I contemplate your folly, I believe.” Thus also my former ed. of this play; but ut is the natural correlative of ita and may be so taken here. Vs. 750 will then be merely explanatory of ut . . . ineptiam, and ut may be understood before credo from ut in 749; “as I believe, etc.” Cf. n. on 681.

750. facturum: sc. te. quicum: on 477. cantites, “practise music,” i. e. “sing and (possibly) dance.”

751. noua nupta, “bride”; cf. 938 nouos maritus = “bridegroom.”

752. restim ductans, “trailing the rope.” Micio will be the leader, and will hold one end of the cord which passes through the hands of the performers in a chain-dance. Cf. Livy’s description of a festival in honour of Juno (27. 37. 14). probe: a corroborative particle; “exactly.” Cf. n. on 543, Eun. 768.

754. haec pudent: personal construction. See on And. 481–482; Phorm. 392, 1042.

756. hilarum ac lubentem, “jolly and happy.”

757. hos: not has, because Hegio (see 609) and, perhaps, Aeschinus (see 756 gnati) are included; or the masc. may be purely conventional, as in dominus (894). conuenio . . . redeo: for the present with future force cf. n. on 549. Micio enters Sostrata’s house.

758. hancine ultam: on 732 and 304. hanc dementiam: the anaphora would call for hancin, were not the metre opposed to the longer form.

759. sine dote: this was a serious matter, for it affected the legal status of the wife. See Plaut. Trin. 689–691. Cf. n. on 728.

761–2. Salus: frequently personified in Roman comedy, along with other abstractions, such as Pietas, Voluptas, etc., for which see Lorenz, Introd. to Plaut. Pseud. p. 22. n. 20. Cf. Hec. 338. n. The expression Salus seruare appears to have been proverbial; cf. Plaut. Capt. 529, Most. 351; Cic. Verr. 3. 57. 181 te nulla Salus seruare potest. For the thought cf. 299–300.

ACT V. SCENE 1.

Syrus comes out of the house, where evidently he has had enough to eat, and more than enough to drink (see 590 f.). He falls in with Demea, whose anger and disgust are increased by the slave's condition and insolence.

763. Syrisce, “Syrus, my boy.” The form expresses endearment; cf. Olympisce mi, mi pater, mi patronē (Plaut. Cas. 739). The slave's way of calling himself by name is paralleled by Dauos in And. 206, by Libanus in Plaut. Asin. 249, and by Acanthio in Merc. 112. Cf. Hec. 878, Ad. 631.

764. laute : on 425. munus, “duty,” with reference to eating and drinking.

765. abi expresses satisfaction here ; “get along with you,” i. e. “good,” “all right.” Cf. 564, 703. See on Phorm. 994. postquam : on Phorm. Prol. 1. intus : i. e. within the house; opposed to huc = outside the house (766). rerum: gen. with adj. of fulness; “crammed with everything.”

766. prodeambulare : i. e. pro-de-ambulare, ἀπαξ λεγόμενον. deambulare suggests an easy, comfortable gait; cf. Heaut. 587, 806. Transl. “I've taken a fancy to stroll forth in this direction.” illud : the neut. is contemptuous. sis (= si uis) expresses impatience. Demea is speaking aside.

767–8. ecce . . . noster : a part of Syrus' soliloquy. Syrus is feeling well, and so (in imagination) he adopts Demea.

768. quid fit : on 266. scelus : on Phorm. 978.

769. ohe iam : on 723. uerba fundis hic, “you are wasting words here”; similar in sentiment to 434. sapientia : abstract for concrete; “old wiseacre,” with allusion to 394.

770. tun = tunē, emphatic; if you were my (slave).” See App. dis = diues. Note the play in dis: (1) “rich,” (2) “Pluto,” i. e. “a dead one.”

771. rem : on 220. Cf. Plaut. Capt. 452 edepol rem meam constabilium.

773. peccato : i. e. the intrigue of Aeschinus with Pamphila.

774. sedatum, “settled,” i. e. through the betrothal of the two young people.

775. nollem huc exitum : sc. esse a me; “would I had not come out hither”; said aside. See on 165. exitum being intrans. is impers. Syrus is irritated at being thus disturbed by Demea, and anxious lest he should enter the house and discover Ctesiphon.

ACT V. SCENE 2.

Ctesipho sends a slave to summon Syrus into the house. Demea catches his son's name and becomes suspicious, with the result that he rushes indoors in spite of earnest opposition on the part of Syrus.

776. Dromo calls to Syrus, sotto voce, from the door of Micio's house. abi : said threateningly, but in an undertone. Dromo disappears.

777. carnufex : cf. 363. See on And. 183.

779. est alius quidam, "it is another of the name." parasitaster : a diminutive of contempt; "a sorry hanger-on." paululus : here used of stature. The parasite would therefore be very unlike Ctesipho, who, presumably, was well grown.

780. nostin, "do you know him?" Said with an air of innocence. iam scibo, "I'll soon find out," whether I know him or not. See on 361. mitte me, "hands off!" Cf. Heaut. 947.

781. noli : sc. abire. non manum abstines : a virtual command; "won't you keep your hands off?" See G. 453 and Note 2. mastigia, "scoundrel"; see on Phorm. 684, where uerbero, the genuine Latin equivalent, is used.

782. cerebrum dispergam : cf. 317. Demea threatens Syrus with his stick, which undoubtedly was a part of the regular equipment of the senex in comedy. See in general the illustrated MSS. C P O F (Introd. pp. 61, 63), and the Pompeian frescoes representing play-scenes. In particular see the Miniatures in Codices Ambrosianus (F) and Parisinus (P), as reproduced by Jacob van Wageningen (Groningen, 1907)—more esp. those of the Andria, wherein Simo's staff is conspicuous. In the Miniatures of the Codex Vaticanus (C), as reproduced (for the Phormio) at Cambridge, Mass., in 1894 (see Introd. p. 61. n.), the staff of the old man (Demipho) can be traced, with some difficulty, at verses 231 and 766 (plates vii. and xx.). See also the excellent illustration in Baumeister's 'Denkmäler, etc.', vol. ii. p. 827. abit : pres. tensc; "well, away he goes." Demea disappears indoors.

783. comissatorem, "fellow-reveller"; from Gk. κωμάτευ. Cf. Eun. 442. For acc. of exclamation see on And. 869; cf. Ad. 304.

785. nisi : on 153. haec : on And. 328. interea : pleonastic. in angulum : i. e. "into a corner," within the house of Micio; for the meaning of angulum here see Plaut. Pers. 631, Aul. 437, 551. Demea had entered by the principal door, the middle one of the three. Syrus goes in presently by the 'side-door' to the right of this. See n. introductory to Act i. Scene 1. For dum in this vs. see on Phorm. 982.

786. hoc uilli, "this little drop of wine"; for the gen. cf. 870 hoc fructi, Plaut. Amph. 463 hoc operis, and Palmer's n. there sic agam, "that's what I'll do." Syrus disappears within.

ACT V. SCENE 3.

Micio comes out from Sostrata's dwelling, into which he had gone at vs. 757 (cf. 719). At the same instant Demea appears from the house of Micio, much distracted at the discovery that it is Ctesipho, not Aeschinus, who is in love with the music-girl. He pours out his mind to Micio, who finally calms him, and persuades him to remain and take part in the marriage festivities of Aeschinus and Pamphila.

787. Micio turns and speaks to Sostrata who is within. parata a nobis sunt, "we have everything ready."

788. ubi uis, "whenever you wish." The sentence is interrupted by the noise which Demea makes as he comes out. Micio was about to add words to the effect that there was nothing to prevent the immediate transfer of the bride to the home of the bridegroom. a me: on And. 236. Transl. "at my house." pepulit: rarely used of a person coming out of a house, but Demea is so violent in his wrath that Micio may well imagine the sounds he hears to be made by a person eagerly knocking to be admitted. Cf. 638, 633; n. on And. 682.

790. Cf. Eur. Med. 148. Demea does not see Micio until 792. em tibi: on 537, Phorm. 847. Micio is soliloquizing.

791. illicet = ire licet; "you (we) may go," "all is over," and so like our "all is up," "the fat is in the fire." Cf. Phorm. 208 where it is used more literally as a formula of dismissal.

792. paratae lites, "a row is on," for Ctesipho. Cf. n. on 96 (nullum factum), Phorm. 133. succurrendum est, "I must go to the rescue."

793. liberum: on 411 (suom).

794. ad te redi, "return to your senses"; cf. n. on And. 622.

795. Demea assumes a forced repose of manner. repressi: sc. iracundiam. redii: sc. ad me.

796. rem ipsam putemus, "let us take account of the actual state of the case." Cf. n. on 208, Phorm. 718. dictum . . . fuit, followed by ne, etc. (797), has the sense and construction of cautum . . . fuit.

797. ex . . . ortum, "it was from you in fact that the suggestion came." See 130 f.

799. recipis: see on Hec. 743.

800-1. num qui minus aequom est, "is it in any way unfair?"

801. mihi: sc. tecum.

803. uerbum: on And. 426.

804. This proverb appears in one form or another in Cicero (de Off. 1. 16. 51), Seneca (de Benef. 7. 4. 2), Martial (2. 43. 1 and 16), Aristotle (Eth. Nic. 8. 9. 1) and Plato (Lysis, 207 C). It is referred by Donatus to the Pythagoreans. The Gk. is κοινὰ τὰ τῶν φίλων.

805. facete : ironical. nunc . . . oratiost, "now for the first time have you delivered yourself of this sentiment," more freely "it's pretty late in the day for you to talk like this." See 130 f., where Micio urged a division rather than a combination of duties.

806. ausculta paucis : sc. uerbis. See on And. 29.

807. principio, "in the first place." The second reason follows in 821 ff. id : explained by the cl., sumptum filii quem faciunt, as if Ter. had written id . . . quod tantum sumptum faciunt (quod being causal). sumptum : acc. by attraction of the following quem. See Roby, 1067. We might expect quem sumptum, or else sumptus quem.

808. hoc . . . cogites : on 500.

809. illos duo : Aeschinus and Ctesipho. pro re tua, "according to your means." tollebas, "you were bringing up." See on And. 219.

810. fore virtually = "would have to be."

812. eandem . . . obtine, "keep to that same plan of former days"; i. e. a plan in accordance with which Demea's entire property shall go as an inheritance to his two sons. Micio means that he himself will pay for the lads' extravagances.

813-4. "Hoard, scrape, save, be sure that you leave them as much as possible." For the thought cf. 868-869; cf. also Heaut. 139.

814. gloriam . . . obtine, "maintain your credit for that (plan of action)," "keep up your reputation for that (kind of thing)."

815. mea : acc. pl. Elsewhere in Ter. utor is constructed with the abl. Observe that here the pronoun is neuter and at a distance from its verb. abutor in Ter. always takes the acc.; cf. n. on Phorm. 413. Transl. "my possessions, which unexpectedly (in that I did not get married) have become available (for present purposes), permit them to enjoy." Cf. Phorm. 251. Micio is thinking of vs. 811. Had Micio got married his money would have been held by him in trust for his own children.

816. summa : sc. pecuniae or rei; "capital," "estate"; that of Demea is meant. hinc, "from my funds"; said δεικτικῶς.

817. de lucro esse, "to be as (if derived) from the profits." de serves to indicate the source, as in the expression de genere summo. For variation in the construction, however, cf. Phorm. 251; Hor. Od. 1. 9. 14 lucro adpone.

818. in . . . cogitare: cf. n. on 500.

819. dempseris: for the tense see on And. 456 (uidero). Cf. n. on 127.

820. rem, "the money." consuetudinem amborum . . . "it is the conduct (character) of the two lads, that . . ."; understand curo, or loquor. Cf. n. on 135. See App.

821. istuc ibam, "I was coming to that"; on And. 186 (istuc).

822. signa : i. e. such characteristics as are mentioned in 827-829, and their opposites. ex . . . fit, "from which an inference is easily drawn." Cf. n. on Heaut. 574.

823. duo: sc. homines. ut: consecutive. The meaning is the same as if Ter. had omitted ut possis dicere and written coniectura facile fit hoc licere, etc.

825. sed quo: thus the Codex Beobinus; most of the other MSS. have sed quod. But cf. 270 quam quo. is qui facit: sc. dissimilis est, i. e. ei qui faciunt sunt inter se dissimiles.

826. quae: sc. signa. fore: sc. eos.

827. in loco: on Heaut. 537. Cf. 216. n.

828. scires: an extension of the jussive subj.; "you should have known," "you ought to have noticed" (see B., 'The Latin Language,' 362. a); or subj. of obligation (H. & B. 513. 1. a.). But see App. liberum, "free" = "noble"; see on 57, And. 330.

830. reducas (sc. ad officium); jussive subj.; "bring them back (to duty) whenever you will"; see B. 275. 2. metuas, "you may be afraid"; subj. of 'pure possibility' (B., 'The Latin Language,' 360. a). ab re: lit. 'away from their interests,' i. e. "to their own detriment"; the opposite of in rem, for which see on And. 546, Phorm. 449. tamen, "all the same."

831. omissiones, "too careless"; the opposite of adtentiores (834). Hence ab re and ad rem. Cf. Heaut. 962. n. noster: on And. 846.

832. alia: with omnia. The words are used proleptically.

834. adtentiores: on 831. Cf. 954; n. on Heaut. 962. Cf. Phorm. 797.

835. quod, "as to which," "but in this," refers to the whole of the preceding thought. ne modo: neg. of ut modo (And. 409. n.); "if only . . . not," or "only take care lest." Cf. Phorm. 59. nimilum: with bonae.

836. bonae, "kindly." istae emphasizes tuae and strengthens the irony of the sentence. iste serves a similar purpose in 837.

837. subuortat agrees in number with the second subject only.

839. expurge, "smooth out," "unruffle"; syncopated form of exporrige. The opposite expression is found in Plaut. Amph. 52 quid contraxistis frontem? scilicet: on And. 950. tempus, "the occasion." fert: on 53. Cf. 730.

841. luci: a locative with temporal meaning, like heri, mani, uesperi; and often used as an indeclinable substantive, as here and in Plaut. Merc. 255 cum luci simul. But see Usener in N. Jahrb. 1878, p. 77 f., and Knapp in 'Drisler Studies,' p. 144 fin. and p. 145. de nocte censeo, "to-night, for aught I care." de nocte refers to the latter part of the period of darkness, as in Hor. Epist. 1. 2. 32 surgunt de nocte latrones, i. e. "ere dawn appear." Contrast de die = "ere night appear," and see on 965.

843. pugnaueris, "you will have gained the victory"; on And. 892 (uiceris). Donatus explains, 'magnam rem feceris.'

844. prorsum, "absolutely." illi: i. e. at your country-place.

845. ego istuc uidero, "trust me to look out for that"; cf. n. on 538, And. 456.

846-7. "And there I'll cause her to cook and grind corn until she is covered with cinders, smoke and mill-dust." sit faxo: on 209 (accipiat faxo). For a fuller account of a female slave's occupations cf. Plaut. Merc. 396 f. Severity in the treatment of slaves was not confined to those of the male sex. Witness the terms in which Callicles addresses his ancillae in Plaut. Truc. 775 f., and see Juvenal's sixth satire, vss. 479-485 and 492-494. praeter haec: on Phorm. 800 (praeter hac).

848. meridie ipso, "at high noon"; the time when her complexion would be exposed to the injurious effects of the sun's rays. stipulam, "straw," "stubble."

849. excoctam, "dried up," lit. "boiled out." For the construction see on And. 683 (inuentum dabo) and 680 (me missum face). placet denotes assent; "you are right." So 910.

851. etiam: intensive, with the si-clause.

853. ego sentio, "I feel (to my sorrow)." For the aposiopesis cf. And. 164.

854. intro: i. e. into the house of Micio, where the wedding ceremonies had already commenced. quoi . . . diem, "let us devote this day to that business to which it is dedicated," more lit. "suited"; see on 358. Micio enters his house, accompanied by Demea.

ACT V. SCENE 4.

Demea makes his appearance from Micio's house. After taking counsel with himself concerning the agreeable results of Micio's easy and indulgent mode of life, and comparing his brother's way with his own, he resolves to imitate Micio and thus make friends for himself. By adopting an extreme course, however, he shows that his brother's behaviour is in excess of true liberality and therefore an error. The upshot of the play thus is that each brother is wrong. Neither of them has adhered to the proverb, ne quid nimis (see on And. 61). Cf. n. on Ad. 77.

855. "Never did anyone make such good reckoning with regard to his life." subducta ratione: predicative abl. of quality. subducere rationem = "to balance an account." Cf. Plaut. Capt. 192, Circ. 371 subduxi ratiunculam.

856. res, "circumstances." aetas, "(lapse of) time." usus, "experience."

857. aliquid moneat, "bring him some warning (lesson)." ut: consecutive upon the whole of the preceding thought. te scisse, "that you have (long) known," i. e. "that you know thoroughly."

858. prima, "of the first importance." ut repeats ut of 857. Cf. And. 830. n.

859. duram: cf. 45, 64; Per. 4. n.

860. prope . . . spatio, "when at last my course is almost run," i. e. now that my life is drawing near its close. Id: sc. facio. re ipsa, "in actual fact."

861. facilitate, "affability," "good nature." Cf. Heaut. 648; Hor. Sat. 1. 1. 22 tam facilem . . . ut praebat aurem. neque carries on the previous negation, i. e. it virtually = et (clementia) nil esse homini melius. clementia, "forbearance"; cf. n. on And. 36.

862. ex me atque ex fratre, "through a comparison of my brother with myself."

864. nulli laedere os, "offending nobody." Both infinitives in this vs. depend on an attributive idea such as 'willing,' 'accustomed,' suggested by what precedes. They may, however, be taken as historical infinitives. The opposite of alicui laedere os is in os aliquem laudare; see 269. For the idea expressed in this vs. cf. And. 64–65, and esp. 67–68.

866. "I known to all as rustic, stern, sullen, thrifty, forbidding, stingy." ille gives the effect here which is given by dicunt in 865, viz., "called by all agrestis, etc." The original of this vs. is among the fragments of Menander (Meineke, Frag. Com. Graec. iv. p. 72), ἐγώ δ' ἀγροῦκος, ἐργάτης, σκυθρός, πικρός, φειδωλός. Cf. n. on Per. 4.

867. ibi: i. e. in matrimonio. For the sentiment cf. 28–34; Plaut. Trin. 51–65. Matrimonial infelicity was a stock source of amusement on the Roman as well as the Greek stage.

868. heia autem, "how now, pray." heia expresses irony and surprise, as in Hec. 250.

869. facerem, "earn." For the thought cf. 813–814.

870. exacta aetate, "at the close of my life." fructi: for the genitive cf. n. on 786, And. 365.

871. patrīa commoda, "a father's privileges." Cf. n. on 74. potitur: on Phorm. 830. The i is generally short in early Latin. Cf. n. on Per. 12.

872. illum: note the fine repetition of this pronoun and its metrical treatment, in vss. 872–874, lending emphasis to the contrast which Demea draws between Micio's position and his own. credunt: Demea did not know that Aeschinus had concealed his love affair from Micio.

874. illum ut uiuat = ut ille uiuat. We might look for illum uiuum. But uiuum and ut uiuat are equivalents; hence the acc. of the pron. See Spengel's n. exspectant, "they are looking forward to"; cf. n. on 109, Hec. 596.

875. eductos: on 48.

876. paulo sumptu, "at slight expense"; on And. 266. paulo is opposed to maximo (875). potitur gaudia: on Phorm. 830.

877-8. nunclam: on And. 171. ecquid possiem, "whether I am at all able." quid is acc. of extent (inner acc., adverbial acc.), or it may be the direct object of the infinitives in the next vs.; "whether I am able to say anything, etc." For possiem see on Heaut. 675. hoc = huc; see on And. 386. prouocat: sc. Micio; "challenges."

879. magni fieri, "to be made much of."

880. posteriores: sc. partis (acc.); a metaphor from the stage. Cf. n. on Eun. 151. Transl. "I will not be behindhand," more lit. "I will not play second fiddle." For the omission of partis cf. Hor. Sat. 1. 9. 46 ferre secundas.

881. deerit: sc. res or pecunia, suggested by dando, etc. Transl. "the money will give out." This is, in effect, a supposition to which what follows affords the conclusion. id mea minume re fert, "that is of least possible consequence to me," "that interests me less than it does anybody else (in the family)." Cf. n. on 913. mea . . . qui: on And. 97 (meas.). natu maximus, "the oldest," and so shall be the first to die, and for that reason shall least be in need of money. With the thought cf. Plaut. Trin. 319 mihi quidem aetas actast ferme, tua istuc refert maxime.

ACT V. SCENE 5.

Syrus appears from the house into which he had gone (785-786) to sleep off the effects of the wine he had taken. Demea on meeting him proceeds at once to practise his newly assumed affability. Syrus is grateful, yet we may imagine that his astonishment is clearly manifested in his attitude and gestures.

882. longius, "very far"; cf. n. on Heaut. 212.

883. quis homo: sc. est; "who is that?" noster: on And. 846; cf. Ad. 831, 885, Phorm. 609. quid flit: on 266.

884. recte, "well"; understand ualeo, and cf. n. on And. 804; Plaut. Bacch. 188 nempe recte ualet. optume est, "that's capital." iam, etc.: said aside.

885. The word salve (883) also was added praeter naturam, making four in all. Under other circumstances Demea would have met the slave with a simple 'Syre,' or with some term of reproach, as in 768, or else as in 373-374.

886. haud inliberalem suggests that Syrus is deserving of freedom. Cf. And. 37-38, and n. on liberaliter (38).

886-7. tibi . . . faxim, "I should be delighted to do you a favour"; on And. 753 (faxis), Heaut. 763 (lubens). gratiā habeō: in a tone of incredulity, which is met by the adversative atqui.

888. ipsa re: on 860. propedlem: i. e. prope diem; "at an early day,"

"presently." Whether Syrus retires at this point into Micio's house, or remains on the stage, is doubtful, since the MSS. do not give Syrus' name in the titular heading of the next scene. It is probable, however, that he merely withdraws to one side.

ACT V. SCENE 6.

Geta, leaving Sostrata's house with the intention of entering Micio's, is accosted by Demea in the same clumsy style of compliment.

889. As Geta emerges from the house he turns and addresses Sostrata, who is within. ad hos, "to our neighbours." prouiso: on And. 404, Ad. 549.

890. accersant: on And. 546, Ad. 699. eccum: on And. 532 (1).

891. qui = quo nomine; see on 179. Otherwise quis would be expected; cf. And. 702 quis uideor?

893. spectatus satis, "well tried"; on And. 91.

894. dominus: the masc. is merely conventional, the reference being to Sostrata. ita: so Geta proved himself in the matter of Pamphila; cf. 479-484.

895. si quid usus uenerit, "if occasion shall arise at all." Cf. 429. n.

896. meditor esse adfabilis, "I am practising affability"; said aside.

897. procedit, "it succeeds"; on And. 671. quom . . . existumas: quom is causal. Transl. "it is good in you to entertain these opinions," regarding me.

898. plebem includes all whom Demea regards as inferiors. primulum: on 289. meam = michi fauentem (Donatus). In political slang the vs. = "I'm starting out by getting solid with the Plebs."

ACT V. SCENE 7.

Aeschinus now reappears (see on 712) from Micio's house, and gets his share of his father's new-found complaisancy. Demea assists him to hasten his marriage, and thus secures his affection.

899. This vs. and the next are said aside. occidunt: nearly as in Phorm. 672, where see n. dum, "while," as in And. 822. sanctas, "ceremonious," "formal"; explained in 905, 907. Transl. "they are truly killing me, in their zeal to make my wedding beyond measure splendid."

900. adparando: on And. 594.

901. pater mi: on 902.

902. This vs. takes up the affectionate pater mi ("father mine") of 901, and emphasizes it with a view to Demea's own particular purposes. The separation of tuos and pater is for rhetorical effect. animo, "affection." natura, "blood." See 125-126.

903. oculos: on 701.

904. hoc anticipates tibicina . . . cantent.

905. tibicina, etc., "a female flute-player and persons to sing the marriage hymn"; on And. 365 (The bustle, etc.). Cf. Plaut. Cas. 798; Catull. 61 and 62 passim.

906. uin = uisne; cf. 969. huic seni, "to an old man like me"; on And. 310 (hic). missa haec face, "set aside these things"; on And. 683 (inuentum dabo). For face see on And. 680.

907. turbas. "disturbances," "fuss and feathers," "hubbub." lampades, "torches." Cf. Ov. Her. 12. 187 ff. For the form in -es cf. footnote, and Lex. s. v.

908. maceriam: a fence-wall separating the gardens of Micio and Sosstrata. This shows that the two houses were contiguous in the scene setting.

909. quantum potest: on And. 861. hac: sc. via; i. e. through the breach in the garden wall. Thus publicity would be avoided.

910. traduce: on And. 680. familiam: on Heaut. 751.

911. lepidissume, "most enchanting." Cf. And. 947. euge: εὐγε, "bravo." Cf. n. on Phorm. 398. Demea's words, as far as the end of 915, are said aside.

912. fratrl . . . perulae, "my brother's house will become a thoroughfare"; i. e. through the removal of the garden wall. turbam, etc., "it's a whole multitude he'll bring to his house"; in all, only four persons. But the word may mean "confusion"; cf. 907.

913. sumptu, "through the expense." quid mea: sc. refert; "what care I?" Cf. n. on 881 (id, etc.). Cf. also Hec. 510, Phorm. 389, Heaut. 793; n. on Eun. 849.

914. ineo gratiam: cf. Heaut. 302–303; Hec. 795. n.

914–5. "Bid that Nahob (prodigal) count out twenty minae this very instant." For iube with the subj. cf. Heaut. 737, Eun. 691; Plaut. Rud. 708 iube modo accedat prope. As ut is usually omitted after the imv. in this constr., the subj. may be due to parataxis. ille: i. e. Micio. The Babylonians were proverbially luxurious. uiginti minas: the price of the music-girl, which Micio had already paid (369). Moreover Demea has knowledge of the payment. The reference to it here therefore is merely to express (to the audience) his approval of the purchase, consequent on his change of view; but the irony of the sentence is most significant.

916. quid ego: sc. faciam; "do what?" dirue: sc. maceriam. Syrus hurries into Micio's house.

917. tu: Geta.

918. quom: causal.

918–9. te tam ex animo factum uelle, "that you are so kindly disposed (toward)"; see on 72. factum uelle is idiomatic = "to wish well"; cf. n.

on Phorm. 787. dignos: sc. uos, i. e. yourself and the rest of your family. Geta goes into Sostrata's house.

920. tu: Aeschinus.

921. pueroram, "young mother" (Cowles).

922. enim, "really"; on Phorm. 983.

923. sic soleo, "such is my wont," i. e. to be kind and considerate. The omission of the infin. is common. Cf. n. on Eun. 279; cf. Phorm. 784, Plaut. Cure. 604. eccum: with a nom. and verb; see on And. 532 (2); also on And. 855.

ACT V. SCENE 8.

Micio, having learned from Syrus of Demea's order to pull down the wall, comes out to find his brother, and to ascertain what it all means. He is quite overcome by Demea's enlarged views and airy manner.

924. iubet frater? ubi is est? Said to Syrus within, who may be supposed to follow Micio as far as the door. Syrus has already begun the demolition of the wall. tun = tune; note the astonishment implied in this word; "is it you who order this?"

926. unam facere: sc. cum nostra familia. Cf. 909.

927. adiungere, "attach to ourselves."

928. immo: on 483, And. 523. nobis decet: on 491.

929. huius: i. e. Aeschinus. uxoris: i. e. Pamphila.

930. natu grandior, "somewhat advanced in age." Cf. n. on 673.

931. parere . . . non potest: accordingly there could be no fear of children to share the property with Aeschinus.

932. nec . . . est, "nor is there any one to look after her." For this rel. cl. of purpose see B., 'The Latin Language,' 370. In this burlesque scene Hegio appears for the moment to be forgotten by the poet, and that, too, in spite of 352, 456, 951. sola: i. e. without a male protector. Cf. n. on And. 381, Ad. 291. quam . . . agit, "what is he driving at?" Said aside.

933. ducere, "marry"; on And. 316. The first te refers to Micio, the second to Aeschinus.

934. autem: on 185, Heaut. 251; cf. Ad. 940, 950. ineptis: on Phorm.

420. tu: Aeschinus. homo: on 107, 579. The idea is that Aeschinus should prevail on Micio to marry Sostrata. There is a reference to Aeschinus' affection for Micio and to the former's influence with the latter; cf. 956, 970.

935. hic: Micio. mi pater: Aeschinus proceeds to entreat his adoptive father. asine, "you donkey," "you block-head"; used as a term of reproach also in Heaut. 877 and Eun. 598. nil agis: i. e. there is no use in your attempting opposition to our request.

937. aufer, "away with you," or "hands off," according as te or manum is understood. For aufer te cf. Plaut. Rud. 1081, Asin. 469. aufer manum is paralleled by 781 non manum abstines, and supported by Donatus, who says, nam rogans manum admouet scilicet dicens 'mi pater.' Reference to Phorm. 223 and 857 suggests the rendering, "away with your entreaties," i. e. your 'mi pater, etc.' da ueniam filio, "grant your son this favour"; cf. Hec. 605; n. on And. 901.

938. nouos maritus: a sardonic reference to the familiar noua nupta; see on 751. Cf. Catull. LXI. 91, 96, 106.

939. idne estis auctores = idne suadetis; see on 617 (id indicium fecit). auctores here suggests the technical sense of the word auctor in connection with marriage, i. e. 'progenitor,' 'father,' 'ancestor'; cf. Hor. Od. 1. 2. 36 and 3. 17. 5 auctore ab illo ducis originem.

940. promisi ego illis: the play nowhere makes mention of such a promise. promisti: for the form see on And. 151. de te largitor, "be liberal of yourself"; de te is more literal and therefore more forcible than de tuo, since Aeschinus might give himself, but not another man, in marriage; cf. n. on 117.

941. quid si quid: the second quid is indefinite.

942. ne grauare, "do not oppose (us)," "do not refuse." Cf. Plaut. Stich. 186 promitte uero: ne grauare, and Donatus, 'ne te difficilem praebeas.' non omittitis, "won't you let me alone?" i. e. "cease your demands?"

943. uis . . . quidem, "this is downright violence"; a form of expression used by the Romans under sudden assault, e. g. by Caesar when, under the blows of his assassins, he said ista quidem uis est (Suet. Iul. 82). Cf. Plaut. Capt. 750. The comic effect here is striking. age, prolixo, "come, be obliging." prolixo is an adverb (sc. fac, or promitte). Otherwise prolixo modifies age; "act generously (liberally)," "do the nice thing." Thus Donatus in part.

945. bene facis: on 601, Eun. 186.

946. merito te amo: on Heaut. 360; cf. Eun. 186. hoc quom . . . uolo, "seeing that my wish is accomplished"; see on 918, And. 167. For the distribution of the words among the speakers in this vs. and the next see Dziatzko's crit. n. But Kauer distributes differently; see his crit. n. See also Fabia's edition of this play.

947. quid: sc. est. nunc: with quod restat.

948. adfinis: i. e. through the marriage of Aeschinus and Pamphila. nos . . . decet: on 491.

949. agelli paulum, "a little bit of land"; on Phorm. 822 (paulo). locitas: frequentative; "you are wont to let." foras, "out," i. e. to strangers; cf. Plaut. Stich. 219 foras necessumst, quidquid habeo, uendere, i. e. "to sell off."

950. qui: old abl. = quo. See on And. Prol. 5 (So fruor, etc.). fruatur: for the mood see on 932 (nec, etc.). Hegio was to have merely the usufructus of the land; the ownership would remain with Micio. Cf. Phorm. 364–365, Ad. 956. si = etsi.

951. huic: i. e. Pamphila. noster: i. e. as a friend and connection by marriage.

952. nunc: see App. meum: predicative. uerbum, “saying.”

953. dixti: i. e. in 833–834. See on 561 (produxe).

954. nimum: on 169. ad rem, “to money matters,” or perhaps “to our own advantage (interests)”; cf. n. on 830 (ab re). senecta: the usual (heteroclitic) form of the abl. in early Latin, and generally with the addition of aetate, as in Plaut. Aul. 253, Cas. 240. Thus originally it was, in all probability, an adjective. maculam, “defect,” “disgrace.”

954–5. nos decet ecfugere: see on 491; cf. 948.

955. reapſe fieri oportet, “ought to be acted up to,” i. e. we ought to avoid the stain, by practising generosity in our old age. For reapſe see on Hec. 778.

956. hic: Aeschinus. See App. quandoquidem hic uolt: cf. n. 934.

958. sibi: an ethical dat., frequently used to strengthen suos, as e. g. Plaut. Capt. 81 suo sibi suco uiuont, “they live on their own particular juice.” hunc: i. e. Micio. iugulo, “I am slaying.” We say, “I am foiling him with his own weapons,” “I turn his weapons against himself,” “I hoist him with his own petard.”

ACT V. SCENE 9.

Syrus appears again from the house, and Demea makes certain of his good will by prevailing on Micio to give the slave and his wife, Phrygia, their freedom. Micio's discomfiture is complete, and he appeals to Demea for an explanation of his unusual behaviour. Demea tells him that popularity is won, not by righteous conduct, but by indiscriminate compliance with men's desires and fancies. Having pointed the moral of the play he offers to be henceforth a friendly adviser to his sons. His offer is accepted and the play ends.

958. Ter. often begins a new scene within the limits of a single verse; cf. 81, 635, Hec. 767, Phorm. 795, Eun. 1049, Heaut. 954, And. 580. See App. quod iussisti: i.e. Demea's order to demolish the garden wall; see 916.

959. frugi homo's, “you're a worthy fellow”; on Eun. 608.

961. nam: on 805. noster: on 883.

962. istos ambos: i. e. Aeschinus and Ctesipho. Syrus was their paedagogus (παιδαγωγός). Probably he was originally Demea's slave, and went over to Micio when Aeschinus became his uncle's adopted son.

963. quae potui: restrictive. See on 423. Transl. “I have always given them all the good precepts I could." There is a sly reference perhaps to 412; cf. 434. omnia: inner acc. with praecepi, and emphatic at the end of the verse.

964. haec: regarded by Spengel and others as a nominative, explained by the following infinitives, and repeated in 966, where it is the subject of sunt. It is simpler and better, however, to understand bene praecepisti from 963, and to make haec an accusative. obsonare cum fide, "to cater with fidelity," i. e. without cheating the master of the house. Note the irony of this verse and the two which follow.

965. de die, "in full day," i. e. while part of the working day yet remains. This (the solidus dies of Hor. Od. 1. 1. 20) closed when the hour for dinner (cena) arrived — about 3 p. m. (cf. Mart. 4. 8. 6). To get a banquet ready earlier than this was a mark of dissipation and an offence against good custom; see Hor. Sat. 1. 4. 51–52. See also Ellis on Catullus, 47. 6.

966. lepidum caput: on 911, And. 871. Cf. Ad. 261.

967. adiutor refers to the part played by Syrus in the scene beginning with vs. 209. Moreover Demea has the authority of Syrus himself for the statement here made; see 368.

968. hic curauit, "it was he who managed it." prodesse aequomst: i. e. id Syro prodesse aequomst. meliores: i. e. other slaves will be the better for seeing good service so rewarded. Demea's irony must have been keenly appreciated by the spectators.

969. hic: Aeschinus. Observe the sarcastic reference to 956. uin: on 906.

969–70. si quidem tu uis: addressed to Aeschinus; "seeing that you wish it." liber esto: Syrus here receives manumission according to the less formal method, known as manumissio inter amicos, which was more easily imitated on the stage. The owner struck the slave with his hand, turned him about, and let him go with the words, hunc hominem liberum esse uolo, or more briefly, as here, liber esto. Ordinarily the uindicta or liberating-rod was employed in place of the hand, and the presence of the praetor was required to give proper formality to the performance. Cf. Plaut. Men. 1148. See Pauly's Real-Encykl., under manumissio.

971. "Je vous remercie tous en général, et vous en particulier, Monsieur" (Madame Dacier). seorsum: a dissyllable (see Introd. § 96); lit. "separately," "apart," and then "especially," "in particular."

972. credo: on And. 939. Cf. Hec. 457. n. perpetuom: i. e. 'nusquam interruptum' (Douatus); hence "complete." Cf. 520, 522; n. on Hec. 87.

973. Phrygiam: so named because of her nationality, as is the ancilla in Heaut. 731 f. ut . . . uideam: explanatory of perpetuom. uxorem: slaves lived together only in contubernium (not in conubium). Hence in the highest sense there was no marriage for them either in Roman or Athenian law.

974. mulierem takes its case from uxorem (973) — by a species of attraction. huius: i. e. Aeschinus.

975. hercle uero serio, “nay then, in good earnest.”

976. emitti: sc. manu; see on Phorm. 830.

977. argentum quanti est = tantum argentum quanti empta est. Demea offers to reimburse Micio for the loss he will sustain in making Phrygia free.

978. Note the alliteration and assonance. Cf. 990; And. 96; Plaut. Capt. 355 di tibi omnes omnia optata offerant.

979. processisti hodie pulchre, “you have got on beautifully to-day”; see on 897 and Eun. 728. porro, “furthermore,” goes with facies (980).

980. officium: it was the duty of the patronus not to desert the libertus. Cf. Plaut. Ovrc. 547. huic: i. e. Syrus. aliquid paulum: i. e. some little money. prae manu: i. e. at hand, for immediate use; “in ready money.”

981. unde utatur: i. e. ‘de quo fructum usumque capiat et cuius tibi sor tem reddat’ (Don.). Hence, “as a loan.” Cf. reddam, 982. istoc uilius, “less than that”; sc. quicquam non dabo, and see Don. (Wessner, p. 183). Micio snaps his finger and means that he will give nothing at all.

982. frugi: on 959. post consulam, “I’ll think of it later on.” Notice that Micio shows signs of yielding whenever Aeschinus speaks.

983. festiuissume, “dearest.” Cf. 261. Syrus leaves the stage.

985. prolubrum, “whim,” “fancy”; sc. mores mutauit tuos. See App. largitas, “liberality.”

986. ut id ostenderem depends on an idea such as tam repente mores mutauit, or tam largiter egi, suggested by Micio’s questions. quod . . . putant, “the fact that (because) those boys of yours (your nephews) think you good natured and jovial,” is explanatory of the following id (987), which, with its infin. fieri and the rest of the predicate, is exegetical of the first id (in 986). Cf. n. on And. 395.

987. uera: on And. 629.

988. “But from a tendency to yield (to their demands), to be indulgent, to be unduly bountiful.” On et see n. in the Dz.-Kauer edition.

989. Addressed to Aeschinus, but meant also for Ctesiphon, as uobis shows. uita, “manner of life.” inulsa, “displeasing.”

990. “Because I do not humour you in every particular precisely, whether right or wrong.” iusta iniusta: the asyndeton is natural to the proverbial character of the expression. omnia obsequor: sc. uobis. Cf. Plaut. Aein. 76 id . . . obsequi gnato meo. See Phorm. 79. n. For the alliteration see on And. 96.

991. missa facio, "I have done with it all," i. e., I shall not interfere with your evil ways. Cf. n. on 906.

992. id anticipates the infinitives in 994.

993. magis = nimirum (nearly), to which it is preferred for the sake of contrast with minus. inpense, "eagerly," "passionately." Cf. Eun. 413.

994. haec : antecedent of quae (992). reprehendere, "hold in check." me : see App. obsecundare in loco, "favour (encourage) at the proper time"; for in loco cf. 216. n. See App.

995. ecce . . . nobis, "here am I at your service." Cf. Plaut. Mil. 663. tibi permittimus, "we surrender (ourselves) to you," i. e. we prefer the second alternative and take advantage of your offer.

996. plus, "better." quod . . . est : on Phorm. 584. de fratre : on And. 143.

997. habeat : sc. psaltriam or amicam. in . . . faciat : i. e. let her be the last. Cantor : on And. 981.

DIDASCALIA

Adelphoe: see n. on the Didasc., line 1. Cf. Plaut. Cas. 31 Clerumenoe vocatur haec comoedia graece.

PROLOGUS

3. See footnote, and Dz., Adn. Crit.; but cf. Kauer's crit. n. and text.

16. hunc : that the prologues elsewhere use hic, not is, to designate the poet is apparently Ritschl's reason for discarding eum of the MSS. But Ritschl must have overlooked Hec. Prol. I. 8 alias cognostis eius. Moreover there can be no objection to eum on the score of ambiguity or the like, and it is retained by Spengel.

23. ei : Umpf., Dz., Fleck. A D G P have ii, which however was later than the time of Terence. Spengel prefers i and cites Plaut. Trin. 17 i rem ubi aperient (Schoell).

24. ostendent : Dz. understands actores as the subject, not senes. The refer., he says, is to scenes in some of which (e. g. 2. 3 and 3. 1) the old men do not appear. On this point I have followed Dz. in my separate edition of this play (Macmillan and Co., 1893, rev. 1896). But this interpretation seems to me to be forced. Rather should we say that in agendo partem ostendent is merely corrective or explanatory of ei partem aperient, the two verbs having the same subject, senes, and that these make such disclosures through their speaking and acting (certainly within the limits of scenes 1 and 2) as to render it unnecessary for the poet to outline the plot in the prologue. To fill the lacuna which he suspected after this vs. Bentley suggested bonitasque nostra adiutrix nostrae industriae.

ACT I., ETC., AD FIN.

26. Dz. rightly assumes that Storax is an aduorsitor of Aeschinus, and that he does not come when called. The name does not appear in the titular heading prefixed to the scene in the MSS.

33. The vs. is corrupt according to Dz. (see his Adn. Crit.). Kauer, however, reads as in the text, though he favours the substitution of bacchare for amare in 32, with deletion of the aut in that vs.; see his crit. n.

34. Wanting in A and bracketed by Umpf. and Dz., but accepted by Spengel, Fleck., Kauer, Fabia, Psichari, and Stampini; see Kauer's crit. n. Some editors place the comma at esse instead of soli, taking soli with sibi; against this see Engelbrecht, Stud. Terent., p. 37.

56. Most MSS. have aut audebit, and vs. 55 concluding with patrem.

82-3. The reading (given in the text) of the MSS. seems forced, and is probably corrupt, esp. as siet is out of place in Ter. at the commencement of a vs. Ritschl's excellent emendation (Proleg. in Trin. p. 120 n.) has been accepted by Dz., except that, in place of scin iam, Dz. reads sciet, a conjecture of Conradt (Herm. x. 102 f.). Dz. (1881) scies. Kauer stands by the MSS., but places an interrogation point after siet and drops the comma after me. Thus he avoids the necessity of taking ubi as = quando. But his meaning seems to me to be inferior. For siet see his crit. n.

87. On the form dissignauit accepted by Dz. (1884) see explanatory n. in my separate ed. of the Adelphoe. Dz. (1881) gives designauit, the only form known to Don., but Kauer argues at length in favour of dissignauit—rightly.

191-2. Kauer prints a comma and then id (from A) after emisti, omits the colon at the end of the vs., and makes the words in parenthesis refer to id argentii tantum dabitur — rightly. See his crit. n.

206. occeperis: the text of Don. affords a choice bet. occep. and incep.; incipio is intrans. elsewhere in Ter., or is followed only by an acc. of a neut. pron. (Dz.); but occeperis is supported by the parallel passage in And. 79, quaestum occipit, and by Plaut. Capt. 98 hic occipit quaestum hunc.

223-4. quasi . . . obsequare: for another explanation of these words, see crit. n. in my ed. of the Adelphoe, cited above.

272. rem (Bentley) obviates the necessity of making redisce impers.

277. I have inserted i before intro, as Dz., Fleck., Plessis, and Fabia have done, for the sake of the sense, although against the MSS. and Donatus.

289. Most MSS. (not A) assign modo . . . primulum to Sostrata; thus also Dz. (1881), Spengel, Fleck. The asyndeton favours this distribution.

Umpf., Dz. (1884), Stampini, Fabia, Kauer, and Tyrrell follow A and assign the words to the nurse (cf. Kauer's crit. n.) — with less propriety.

291. Spengel happily encloses the words solae . . . adest in a parenthesis.

297. ingenio : thus Umpf., Wagner, Dz., Fleck., on the assumption that Ter. would not have written genere in such close proximity to familia. But Spengel accepts the MSS. reading — rightly.

302. se is the reading of A and L, of Dz., Kauer, Stampini, and Fleck. It is omitted by Umpf. and Spengel.

313. Probably an interpolation. At best the vs. is unsatisfactory in meaning and can only with difficulty be forced into correspondence with what precedes and follows. meo modo : thus Bothe, Fleck. (1857), and Umpf. meo is not in the MSS.; it is not in Tyrrell, Dz., or Kauer, yet it greatly helps both the metre and the meaning of a doubtful verse.

325. quid sit : Dz. finds the subj. here opposed to the common usage of early Latin, and reads quid fit; Fleck. gives quid actumst. But Kauer rightly justifies quid sit on the ground that it takes up and repeats Geta's actumst, after the manner of quid sit in 261; cf. n. on And. 191, 282, etc. See Kauer's crit. n.

350. cēdo = concedo (according to Bentley), and Spengel accepts dicas of the MSS. The meaning may then be, "I allow that your suggestion is better." Cf. Lucr. 2. 658 concedamus ut . . . dictitet.

380. The name Stephanio is omitted from the scene-heading in the MSS., although it has as much right there as that of Dromo (376), whose name is added to those of Demea and Syrus in A.

395. num : Klette (Exerc. Terent. [Bonn, 1855] p. 20 f.).

524. I have followed Fleck. in placing propest at the beginning of vs. 524.

528. in mentem : cf. Heant. 986 and footnote. In a case thus doubtful it is best to follow what appears to have been the more common archaic usage. Hence the acc. is adopted by most good editors. Cf. Plaut. Amph. 710 (Goetz), Bacch. 161 (Goetz). See Palmer on Amph. 1. 1. 26 and 2. 2. 78 (crit. n.). See also Aul. Gell. 1. 7. 17.

535. MSS. laudarier te audit lubenter. To get rid of this old form of the infin., which properly can stand only at the end of the vs., or before a definite pause within it, Conradt (Hermes, x. p. 104) proposes Audit laudari te lubenter. He suggests also (Met. Comp. d. Ter., p. 112) Laudari te lubenter audit, which Dz. adopts. Spengel's conjecture, which is accepted by Tyrrell, has the merit of keeping close to the MSS., while the tmesis may be supported by many parallels. Cf. n. on 393.

597. esse : Madvig (Advers. Crit. II. 21), Dz., Fleck. Cf. And. 572.

600. Fleck. follows Bentley, as Tyrrell does, but Dz. adopts the reading of the MSS. (except A) and assumes a lacuna after this vs. So also Wagner and Fleck. (1857). Kauer deems this unnecessary (see his crit. n.).

601. Dz., following Umpf. (Anal. Ter. p. 19 f.) regards this vs. as an interpolation, in view of the contents of 603–604 and the repetition of bene facis. Fleck. omits it, and certainly the sense does not seem to require it.

617. hance: see Dz.'s crit. n. on 165 f.

666. illa consueuit: Don. bears witness to the existence of the simple abl. here, but mentions illam as a variant and adds, et dicebant ueteres 'hanc rem consueui.' Fleck. reads quicum ea; but ea is without authority. I should retain the reading of the MSS. (other than A) and scan qui cum illā cōns. To reject cum on metrical grounds is to attach too much importance to the effect of the doubled l in illa, and ā final may become short under the law governing iambic sequences. See Introd. §§ 91, 95.

668. praesenti of the MSS. is difficult, but is well defended by Dz. (see his crit. n.) against Bentley's praesentem.

687. The second magnū, which is not in the MSS., is accepted metri causa by most editors. But Kauer finds evidence in A (see his crit. n.) of sane having once been written over primum and afterwards erased. Therefore he happily reads primum sane magnū, at, etc.

724. ah: most editors here prefer o (the reading of A). Tyrrell's u is a misprint for ah of the text, which is the reading of B D E F G P.

770. tun: see Minton Warren in A. J. P. ii. 55. Dz. suggests that tun has crept in here from 769 where tu is now accepted almost universally. As tun makes good sense in 769, but not in 770 (unless -ne be regarded, with Warren, as affirmative), Dziatzko's view should carry with it some weight.

820. amborum: thus Dz. and Kauer (see the latter's crit. n.), although iprorum is more forcible, since it emphasizes the contrast between the property of the young men and their moral training, and for that reason is preferred by Umpf., Dz. (1881), Klotz, Fleck., and others.

828. scires: defended by Lachmann (in Lucr. 5. 533) against scire est (A scire et) of the MSS., which however Spengel and Kauer rightly accept and explain as = έστι γνῶναι, i. e. scire possibile est (Schlee, 160). Thus also crederes in Heaut. 192, where see App.

952. nunc: thus also Dz. and Fleck. But non makes fair sense = "I do not make that saying my own," i. e. I do not wish to be included among those to whom it applies. non makes sense also if taken interrogatively = "do I not make that saying my own, etc.?" i. e. am I not justified in appropriating your former criticism and applying it to the present situation?

956–7. For a different solution of the metrical difficulty here see Dz., Adn. Crit.

958. D G L (probably A also; see Umpf.) mark no change of scene at this vs. See n. in Dz.-Kauer and Introd. to the Dz.-Hauler ed. of the Phormio, p. 47.

985. prolubrium: supported (against the very early variant proluuium) =

"extravagance") by a passage in Caecilius, from which this vs. is believed to be adapted: Quod prolubium, quae uoluptas, quae te lactat largitas? (See 'Com. Lat. Rel.; rec. Otto Ribbeck,' p. 42. vs. 91.).

994. me: omitted by Bentley and Fleck. (who however read quem for me et) and Klotz and others—unnecessarily, for the Iambic Law (Introd. § 91) permits us to scan: me ét obsecundare. It is true that the omission strengthens the climax in ecce me (995), but on the other hand it leaves the infinitives without a subject where one seems to be needed. obsecundare: thus all MSS. and Don. (in lemma); cf. Heaut. 827, Ad. 990 obsequor. Dz. has secundare, given also by Donatus. Kauer (in company with Stampapini, Plessis, Boué, and Fabia) retains both me and obsecundare.

INDEX

THE index has been made comprehensive enough, it is believed, to give the student easy access to all matters of importance discussed in the Introduction or the Commentary. References to the Introduction are by the paragraph numbers; references to discussions in the Commentary are by the play and verse, in the note on which the matter in question is considered (the following abbreviations are here employed: A = Andria; Ad = Adelphoe; E = Eunuchus; H = Heauton timorumenos; He = Hecyra; P = Phormio). References which consist of a page number, followed by the abbreviation for a play and a verse-number in parenthesis, are to the appendices to the main body of Notes on the various plays. Other references (chiefly to matters discussed in the Didascaliae) are made by the pages of the Commentary.
